Candidates trade blows before debate

Associated Press

Striking early blows before their final television debate, President Reagan charged Saturday that Walter Mondale's foreign policy record is one of "exposing us to dangerous, unnecessary risks," while the Democratic challenger accused Reagan's administration of illegal war actions in Nicaragua.

The two men limited their public remarks to paid political radio talks one day before their second and last face-off of the presidential campaign — a debate Mondale is hoping will help him chip away at Reagan's big lead in opionion polls as the campaign heads into its final two weeks.

The debate in Kansas City, Mo., focusing on foreign policy issues, comes two weeks after their domestic-issues confrontation in Louisville.

Most observers, including Reagan aides, said they felt Mondale came across better in the earlier confrontation. Since then, Mondale has gained ground in some polls, with a new CBS News-New York Times survey saying the Reagan lead has been halved from 26 to 13 points and with the Louis Harris poll putting the margin at 9 points.

However, polls for NBC News and USA Today still show a huge, 25 percentage point lead for the Republican president.

Spokesmen for both camps say the final face-to-face confrontation isn't vital for their chances in the election. But in light of Reagan's big lead, whatever the margin, Mondale would seem to face a very tough effort in catching Reagan by Nov. 6 if the president bounces back from his earlier performance and emerges a clear winner Sunday night.

The two men broke little new ground in their Saturday remarks.

Mondale said he didn't doubt Reagan's good intentions in foreign policy.

"But good intentions are not enough — as the record makes tragically clear," he added. "Virtually every day brings new evidence that nobody's in charge."

He said it was "inexcusable" that the U.S. Embassy annex in Lebanon was not better protected against last month's terrorist attack.

And he renewed his call for Reagan to fire CIA Director William Casey in connection with revelations concerning a CIA training manual that encourages terrorism against the leftist Sandinista government in Nicaragua.

"There is an illegal war going on in Nicaragua now, and over the explicit objection of the Congress, the Reagan administration has trained guerrillas to overthrow the Nicaraguan government," Mondale said.

He then mentioned the training manual, adding, "And what has been the White House reaction? The president didn't know about it.

Rescue workers find body of trapped miner

ACTON, Calif. (AP) — Rescue workers squeezed though a narrow gold mine shaft filled with poison gas Saturday and found the body of a trapped miner who fell to the bottom after being overcome by the fumes, authorities said.

"He has been declared dead, and his body will be left where he is for the time being," Los Angeles County Sheriff's Deputy Steve Lee said of Roy Madsen, 42. "State and federal authorities made the decision to declare him dead based on observations by the Kern County team."

Rescuers groping through hundreds of feet of narrow, unlighted passages got to within 10 feet of the trapped miner, but he had not moved or spoken since he fell down the 40-foot shaft early Friday.

Two members of the Kern County Sheriff's Department Mine and Surface Rescue Team almost reached the miner during a third descent by rescuers since he fell about 175 feet. But they were stymied on ways to lift the body back to the surface, authorities said.

The rescuers, equipped with air tanks and descending on chain ladders, had returned to a higher level within the shaft where breathing was easier "to figure out a plan to return him to the surface," Los Angels County Sheriff's Sgt. Steve Finley said.

"At its narrowest point, the shaft is only 21 inches wide, and the rescuers realized that they need a plan to bring him back up," Finley said.

The California Occupational Safety and Health Administration ordered the mine sealed until the body can be removed, Finley said.

Madsen had not been heard from for more than 24 hours after he tried to struggle out of the shaft but fell back to the bottom after shouting "bad air" to two companions, Finley said earlier.

An air compressor pumped oxygen into the shaft of The Governor mine, located in the desert 30 miles north of Los Angeles while rescue efforts were underway.

The composition of the gas in the mine was not known. Poisonous gases such as methane frequently collect in old mines.

The first attempt to reach Madsen failed Friday when rescuers' air tanks ran out of oxygen, and 26 search and rescue team members from three agencies backed out of the muck-filled shaft Saturday morning because of bad air, Los Angeles County Sheriff's Deputy Wes Slider said.

Two rescuers returned to the mine later Saturday, climbing down a 65-foot causeway leading to the shaft where Madsen was believed trapped, after more fresh air was pumped into the shaft, Slider said.

Slider said some parts of the passage about 200 feet underground are less than 21 inches across, and members of the rescue party were forced to remove their respirators, including mouthpieces, to get through.

Slider said the gas composition wasn't known, but it was less than 13 percent oxygen, and the rescue team members need at least 20 percent oxygen for temporary periods of breathing without the air packs.

Madsen and his two partners, who operated the mine, had been exploring a newly excavated artery when the accident occurred. "They've been looking for gold and other trace minerals like silver and copper," said Sgt. Ron Worley.

ECISD receives federal grant for bilingual program

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

Bilingually speaking, Midland and Odessa public schools have programs set up to ease Spanish-speaking youngsters into the English-speaking mainstream.

Inspired by state legislation calling for bilingual education programs, both the Midland and the Ector County Independent School District are striving to fulfill state mandates.

Unable to provide enough certified teachers to serve its students with limited English proficiency (LEP), the ECISD has been granted exceptions by the Texas Education Agency allowing it to fall short of the law calling for bilingual programs at all elementaries.

About 1,300 LEP students are in ECISD bilingual programs at 10 of 25 elementary schools, according to Robert Medrano, the ECISD's supervisor of bilingual education.

While the 1,300 are enrolled in the program, Medrano said 3,500 LEP kids with 15 different native languages have been identified in the ECISD.

A $150,000 Title 7 grant was accepted Oct. 16 by the ECISD, marking the first time the district has taken advantage of federal monies for the bilingual program. This money will hire five more teachers and one aide to work with the district's youngsters needing special instruction to develop their English skills, while continuing to learn in other areas.

The teacher shortage meant many of the ECISD's LEPs were not being served, said Medrano. "That is why this grant is so important."

While the state does not favor the ECISD plans to use these teachers throughout the district rather than stationing them at one school, Medrano said "it is an alternative."

Midland has not had to apply once to the TEA for an exception to the state regulations, said Dr. John Martinez, MISD's bilingual coordinator.

All 22 elementary schools have some type of program in place, said Martinez, depending on the number of LEP students at the school. Like in the ECISD, Midland junior high and high school LEP youngsters have access to programs developing English as a Second Language (ESL).

City Council denies zoning change

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

For some residents on Illinois Avenue, the third time didn't prove to be the charm last week.

On Tuesday, a group appeared before the Midland City Council to request zoning on their few blocks be changed from residential to office. It was approved for a small section but denied on the 1500 and 1600 blocks of West Illinois. It was the third time this request had gone before the City Council — the prior meetings being in 1981 and 1983. And if residents north of that section of Illinois continue to have their say, it will remain residential.

One woman who lives on Illinois contends the opposing neighbors in the Grafaland Addition don't understand the conditions of living on a street that has been turned into "a freeway."

She is supported in her stand by the city planning staff which recommended in its report that zoning on those blocks should be changed to office; otherwise, the two block strip out of the street from A to Andrews Highway could be judged strip zoning.

OPPOSITION FROM neighbors in Grafaland along Ohio and Broadway street is based on covenants and deed restrictions that were written in 1945. These state all plots and premises will be restricted for use as a residence.

Living on those blocks isn't like living on the quieter streets of Ohio and Broadway, said Cecilia Wollschlager, 1504 W. Illinois. When she and her husband, Larry, purchased the house nine years ago they were planning to raise a family.

Illinois Avenue then carried two-way traffic and was narrower. "It wasn't a 35 mph freeway. People drive into the yard now," she said, pointing out mud tracks left from the last wet spell. "Then the city took 18 feet off the front to widen Illinois."

There are other problems associated with living on Illinois. Her house is located in a strip between the Episcopal Church of the Holy Trinity and St. Ann's Catholic Church — a path often traversed by transients, she said. "I don't work out front in the flower beds anymore."

Nor does she allow her children to play in the front yard because of the traffic and transients. The City Engineering Department's last traffic count in May 1983 showed that 8,929 vehicles travel that strip each day.

The Central Fire Station is located a block south on Texas Avenue and that brings noise to the neighborhood, especially noticeable at night, she said. "They sit there at the intersection with the siren going and then peel out onto the street. That fire station wasn't there when we moved here."

Peking consumers say reform OK, but government worried

PEKING (AP) — Chinese consumers interviewed Saturday endorsed the new economic reforms but the Communist government, worried about sensitivity to planned price rises, said it will be "extremely prudent" in implementing them.

At the state-run Guanghua vegetable market in east Peking, where hundreds of people lined up for spinach at 4.5 fen (1.6 cents) a pound, some said they did not believe the government would let prices rise sharply.

Others, waiting for the evening newspapers to go on sale, said they wanted to read about the reforms before commenting.

"All I care is that I have enough to eat and enough to wear," said an 84-year-old retired worker who would identify himself only by his surname, Cheng. "My heart is at ease."

The changes announced by a Communist Party Central Committee document will decentralize state-run industry, force enterprises to compete and dismantle the price-subsidy system that has kept consumer costs pegged at artificially low prices for three decades.

"If the price of spinach goes up here, we'll buy it over there," said shopper Zhen Xu, pointing to another market. "We need competition. We are not afraid of the reforms."

But the government is acting cautiously on the question of prices, which has clearly worried some ordinary Chinese accustomed to the subsidies that keep their costs down.

When rumors of a price rise in eggs hit Peking last week, stores quickly sold out of them. The Peking Evening News, the capital's afternoon tabloid, published a one-sentence front-page story that said egg prices had not budged.

"As the reform of the price system affects every household and the national economy as a whole, we must be extremely prudent," the Central Committee document says.

Pro-Solidarity priest reportedly kidnapped

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — A Roman Catholic priest who was one of the most vocal supporters of the outlawed Solidarity labor union has been kidnapped, the official news agency PAP reported Saturday.

It said the Rev. Jerzy Popieluszko was abducted Friday night from an automobile near Torun, about 125 miles west of Warsaw.

A report on state-run television said, "Unknown perpetrators, one of whom was dressed in a traffic police uniform, stopped the car under the pretext of checking the driver's sobriety. Then Priest Popieluszko was taken away in an unknown direction."

Both PAP and the television report said the driver of the car escaped and informed police.Neither report said how many people were involved in the kidnapping nor gave a possible motive.

An officer on duty at the Torun provincial police station said, "The investigation is under way, the prosecutor is questioning witnesses and I can't tell you anything more." The officer was contacted by telephone and refused to give his name.

A priest at Popieluszko's church in Warsaw said he learned about the kidnapping from the television report.

"No one knows any more than what was on the television," said the priest, interviewed at the St. Stanislaw Kostka church. "Everything is a mystery." The priest spoke on condition he not be identified.

About 50 people gathered outside the church Saturday evening and were led in prayers by a nun. Some of the people were weeping.

U.S. reduced further personnel at embassy

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States is reducing still further the number of Americans assigned to its Beirut embassy, whose staff already has been cut by more than 75 percent over the last 18 months, a State Department spokesman said Saturday.

The statement followed confirmation by the department Friday that all U.S. diplomatic dependents had been removed "on a temporary basis" from the Lebanese capital, where an embassy annex was badly damaged Sept. 20 in a suicide truck-bombing. At least 14 people, including two Americans, were killed.

State Department press officer Brian Carlson said Saturday that as of Friday, the number of American embassy staff members stood at 45 — down substantially from 99 staffers on Sept. 20 and a total of 190 personnel as of April 19, 1983.

"It has now been decided to reduce the number of personnel still further," he said.

Carlson said that "in the wake of the bombing of our embassy annex, personnel levels have been under continuing review. After the Sept. 20 attack we reduced the staffing levels in the interests of the safety of our personnel, and in keeping with overall staffing requirements. It was also decided that dependents at the post should depart until the embassy reorganization was completed."

The spokesman said he was unable to provide information about the pace of the continuing withdrawal of embassy personnel, the number of staffers who are expected to remain in Beirut or other details.

Western security officials in Beirut, speaking on condition they not be identified, have said U.S. diplomats were concerned about continuing kidnap and bomb threats.

The Washington Post reported earlier in the week that intelligence agencies fear some of the explosives moved into Beirut for the bombing of the annex in suburban Aukar may still be in the capital and that another attack, possibly on the same facility, may occur before the U.S. presidential election Nov. 6.

And in its Saturday editions, the newspapers said a senior Lebanese government official had expressed concern about the possibility of the Reagan administration eventually closing the Beirut embassy.

The Post quoted the unidentified official as saying: "We can understand the low profile that the administration wants to take now for reasons of party politics. But if this were to continue after the election, it would be a reversal of all we have heard about the United States not bowing to terrorism. It would seriously undermine the credibility of the American government."

More women working

TOKYO (AP) — For the first time in history, the number of married working women surpassed the number of non-working housewives, according to a Labor Ministry survey released Saturday.

The ministry's 1984 White Paper on Female Labor said 50.3 percent of Japan's 32.4 million married women now were working, the nationwide daily Asahi Shimbun and Kyodo News Service reported.

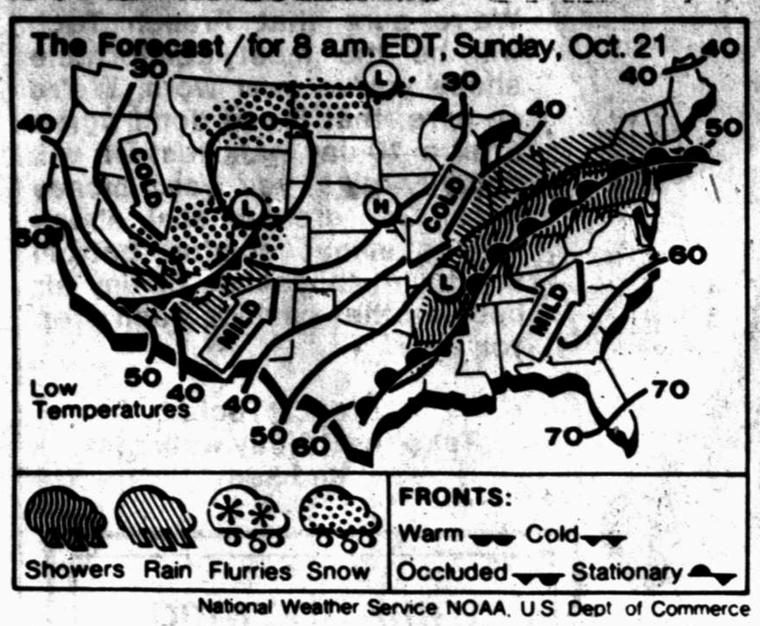
WEATHER SUMMARY



National Weather Service NOAA, U.S. Dept. of Commerce

AP Laserphoto Map

The National Weather Service forecasts rain from the New England states through the Great Lakes and into the Mississippi River Valley. Snow is forecast for the northern Plains and mountains of the Southwest. Rain is forecast for Arizona and New Mexico.

Chance of rain showers forecast for Permian Basin

Rains bypassed Midland Saturday. But today and tonight, the weatherman is giving the rain clouds another chance to open up and weep.

The weatherman at the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport is calling for a 20 percent chance of rain and isolated thunderstorms today and a high in the mid-60s. Winds are to be northeasterly at 5 to 15 mph.

For tonight, he is predicting a 30 percent chance of rain and isolated thunderstorms and a low in the mid-40s. Winds are to be northeasterly at 5 to 15 mph.

The weatherman is proposing rain on Monday. The high temperature is to be in the mid-60s.

Saturday's high temperature was 74 degrees, while the record high for an Oct. 20 is 91 degrees in 1979. The overnight low was 52 degrees, which kept its distance from the record low of 38 degrees in 1975.

STATE

The National Guard helped evacuate Sinton residents after at least 500 homes were heavily damaged by flooding in the wake of a downpour that dumped 15 inches of rain in two hours, the Department of Public Safety said.

In nearby Odem, flooding low-lying areas damaged at least 50 homes and 900 residents fled, authorities said. Three units of the National Guard were activated to assist in the evacuations, said DPS Trooper J.D. Kaelin.

However, the heavy rains mostly bypassed drought-stricken Corpus Christi and did not fall on a nearby watershed, located to the northwest of the city, officials said.

The violent storm, which hit Friday, spawned five tornadoes and was blamed for at least one death, Kaelin said Saturday.

Richard Robling, of Odem, was killed Friday night when a tractor he was using to assist stranded cars hit a hole that had washed out of the pavement, Kaelin said. Robling suffered a broken neck when he was thrown from the tractor, the trooper said.

Across North Texas, the National Weather Service posted flash flood watches as a band of potentially violent thunderstorms moved across the area Saturday.

A tornado watch was posted Saturday afternoon for a wide area of North, South Central and Southeast Texas.

High winds associated with an approaching thunderstorm damaged several mobile homes at a park in Denton County Saturday. Seven people suffered minor injuries, said Janie Maulden, a sheriff's department spokeswoman.

NATION

Thunderstorms deluged the southern Plains and lower Mississippi Valley on Saturday, causing flooding and tornadoes in parts of Texas and warnings elsewhere.

A winter storm watch was in effect in the Southwest, while parts of the East sweated through record high temperatures.

A flood watch was posted during the afternoon over parts of northern, southeastern and south-central Texas, and a flash flood watch continued into the night for Arkansas, southeastern Oklahoma and southeastern Missouri.

A tornado watch was posted over parts of Texas, Louisiana, Arkansas, Missouri, Tennessee and Mississippi.

Program teaches students English skills

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

Contrary to popular misconceptions, bilingual education's purpose is not to provide minority students with a public education in their native tongue.

In theory, it is intended to continue the educational development of the youngster entering a public school in the U.S., while developing his or her English skills.

"The purpose of bilingual education is to give the skills to the youngster so that he can compete in the English curriculum," explained Dr. John Martinez, bilingual coordinator for the Midland Independent School District.

Pointing to a group of students who entered kindergarten in MISD in the bilingual program and transferred to the English curriculum at the third-grade level three years later, Martinez said his office counted its successes by the numbers that make this transition. He estimated 500 LED students have entered the English curriculum courses in the past two years after testing out of the bilingual program.

This philosophy follows research showing that children learning the basic coursework in their native tongues while gaining proficiency in English learn more effectively than those placed immediately in English-speaking classes and expected to keep up progress in the various courses while learning the new language.

The child's self confidence can be damaged by immediate placement into the English curriculum, said Robert Medrano, supervisor of bilingual education for the Ector County Independent School District.

"From the very beginning, these kids are taught indirectly that they're not capable of learning," suggested Medrano. The potential negative effect multiplies for students unable to keep up progress in courses now being taught to them in a strange language.

"He's wasting his time in those classes," said Medrano, explaining that by pairing the continued studies in the native language with those in English, the student can gradually develop knowledge of English.

Following bilingual mandates, all children entering the public school system are checked to determine if there is a need for bilingual education.

The enrollment card asks whether the student knows a second language or has heard a second language at home. If the answer to either of these questions is yes, he or she is tested orally and with an achievement test to measure the limits in English proficiency (LEP).

A score of less than 23 percent of the national norm has been established as limited English proficieny. Students at this level are recommended for the bilingual programs.

A score between 40 percent and 23 percent of the U.S. norm ranks the student as a borderline case, according to guidelines. A Learning Proficiency Assessment Committee, made up of teachers, administrators and parents, then decides whether the student should be placed in the bilingual program.

Parental permission is the last step. "The parent always has the last say so," said Medrano.

LEP students at the primary level (kindergarten through sixth grade) are to receive a bilingual program until they can test out as having developed their English skills.

Students at the secondary level (seventh through 12th grades) needing language instruction are to be involved in English as a Second Language (ESL). Depending on the need and the availability of a teacher, an ESL student can get up to three periods of specialized instruction.

One problem with ESL is that time spent learning the language is time not spent studying the basic courses.

"It's not the best situation, but it's better than nothing," said Medrano. The ESL program systematically teaches the student English, without the added pluses of studying the culture and courses in both languages.

"Our society has changed to the point that being able to communicate is much more important than it was 20 years ago," said Martinez, pointing to the move away from physical labor.

He supports bilingual education as a way to develop Hispanics' English while keeping their pace in basic courses to the point that he enrolled his son in the program although the youngster did not need the English instruction.

BILINGUAL

Five MISD elementaries have self-contained bilingual programs for their large populations of LEP students. Others have a full-time resource teacher handling LEP kids at all grade levels. A traveling resource teacher serves several schools in instances where there are few Spanish-speaking students.

"They are being served. Maybe not as well as we'd like to," said Martinez of the MISD's 1,100 LEP kids.

A problem common to both districts is attracting the bilingual teachers since the state's re-evaluation, which meant more funding for the poorer districts and less for the more prosperous.

Martinez explained that teachers from the valley area of Texas (south of San Antonio) who had come to Midland and Odessa because of higher salaries now stay closer to home because of the re-evaluation.

"I think it will make it a little harder (to find bilingual teachers)," said Martinez. "The solution is to grow our own."

MISD encourages aides and teachers hired on temporary permits to continue their education toward certification as a bilingual teacher by paying for tuition and books. Five of MISD's 58 teachers were once aides, said Martinez.

Medrano and Martinez said the bilingual teachers should receive pay incentives like in Houston, where certification means $1,600 per year (15 hours extra coursework is required for the certification). Martinez said that, even with this incentive, the Houston school district (which has about 45,000 LEPs) failed to find four Indochinese teachers needed for students with this native language.

"It's going to take us a number of years (to develop the ECISD program)," said Medrano, frustrated by the re-evaluation having blunted the district's salary edge.

While continuing to struggle with the problem of working Hispanic youths into the English-speaking educational programs, the districts are beginning to deal with the dilemma of affording similar opportunities to LEP students with one of 14 other native languages (both districts have identified 14 beside English and Spanish, but the make-up varies).

In ECISD, a Korean tutor has been used, said Medrano. The MISD provides bilingual dictionaries and other materials that can be found for students, and a list of translators has been compiled to help these youngsters continue their learning, while developing their knowledge of this country's native language.

ZONING

The Wollschlagers have tried selling the house and have failed. The only interested buyers wanted it for an office. But the zoning — and deed restrictions — prohibited it. And other homeowners who have tried renting the houses are finding few takers, she said. As for the single family restriction, she pointed to one across the street which had three families living in it at one time.

THE DEED restrictions don't apply to 1984, Mrs. Wollschlager contended. They require:

— "An incinerator must be built or installed in connection with each residence,

— "No noxious or offensive trades shall be carried on upon any plot or premises.

— "No building plot or premises ... shall ever be used or conveyed to any negro or person of African descent.

— "No garage or other out-building erected on any building plot or premises...shall ever be used as a residence."

The incinerators, said Mrs. Wollschalger, have been eliminated by the federal government as has the requirement prohibiting blacks from buying property.

One physician had looked at buying the Wollschlager house along with another adjacent house. The property would have been turned into doctors' offices. "If it's a doctor's office or a lawyer's office, that's not noxious," she said.

The rest of Illinois, including a lot across the street, has been turned into office zoning.

THE CITY PLANNING staff report stated: "We continue to feel that this area along Illinois Avenue has become more desireable for office development....It appears that these lots have effectively ceased to a large degree to be part of the Grafaland 'neighborhood' due to the changed condition on Illinois Avenue."

Sam Listi, assistant director of planning, said all the frontage along both sides of Illinois Avenue have a similar condition and should reflect that in the zoning.

"It's a corridor between Andrews Highway and A Street, or downtown," he said. "All is zoned office except for that little piece."

The staff report noted: "Illinois Avenue and Texas Avenue have been developed as a one-way street pair system to facilitate the movement of traffic to and from the Central Area. As the traffic usage of these streets has increased, the adjacent properties have gradually become more desireable locations for small offices and less desireable locations for single-family residences."

One argument from some Grafaland residents at the council meeting was their objection that in an office district a two-story office building could be constructed on that property. But so can a two-story house, said Listi.

Mayor G. Thane Akins said the requirements for office development probably are more stringent than those governing houses. He used the example of a 50-foot setback from the property line for offices while residential has a 10-foot setback.

IF THE ZONING were changed to office, Akins said he wouldn't expect living conditions in Grafaland to change. Those two blocks of Illinois "would still have the residential appearance. I don't think it's like suddenly being across the street from McDonald's."

The situation of offices backing up to residential is seen commonly throughout Midland, said Listi. "We don't feel it's a good relationship to change zoning at a street. We prefer it to be done at an alley."

In this case, the alley between Illinois Avenue and Ohio would separate the zoning.

The office district probably wouldn't spill over onto Ohio Street, said Mrs. Wollschlager, pointing out that it isn't a major arterial like Illinois. Midland High School blocks it off at the east end and Midland Memorial Hospital at the other end.

When the council voted against rezoning those blocks, the mayor said the decision was based on the opposition from neighbors to the north and the fact "there are some good residential areas that have those conditions existing. We did the same thing on Texas. It came up several times for rezoning over the years" before the corridor was rezoned for office.

Illinois Avenue, Akins continued, always has been a major arterial street. "Nothing has really changed about it. It might not be a safe place to raise your children. I don't know. But for a retired couple it has a lot of things going for it — close to shopping, close to doctors and the hospital. And with the fire station it's close to emergency services."

Last week's attempt at rezoning probably won't be the last time the council confronts the issue, according to the mayor. But the Wollschlagers may have given up by then.

Mrs. Wollschlager said her family will be moving to a quieter neighborhood. "The city has grown and changed," she said. "Anyone who wants to stay here, can."

Officials correct location where plane crashed

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — A plane crash that killed four American CIA employees occurred on the San Salvador Volcano, just west of the capital, and not miles farther north as U.S. Embassy sources reported, soldiers said Saturday.

A Salvadoran officer, who identified himself only as Lt. Villeda, and a group of soldiers near the scene of the crash told reporters the plane went down Friday in a deep crevice on El Picacho, one of two 6,000-foot peaks that make up San Salvador Volcano, five miles from the capital.

U.S. Embassy sources had told reporters Friday night that the plane carrying the four Americans on a surveillance mission crashed on the slopes of Guazapa Volcano, in rebel-controlled territory 20 miles north San Salvador. U.S. Embassy spokesman Jim Williams was asked about the soldiers' report and said, "I cannot provide any further information." He then was asked if the crash site was on San Salvador Volcano, and replied, "I cannot say."

There was speculation here that if there had been a deliberate intention to give an incorrect location of the crash site, it might have been to give CIA and government search teams time to remove equipment and documents from the wreckage before others arrived.

In Washington, the State Department said a claim by the rebels that their guerrillas shot the plane down "is not true." The spokesman also denied that the plane was directing "some sort of bombing run."

U.S. intelligence sources in Washington said Friday that the CIA plane, equipped with night photography equipment, was trailing an aircraft suspected of carrying arms to the rebels.

The Washington Post, in today's editions, quoted an unidentified CIA official as saying it was believed the plane had locked its radar onto the other craft. It reported he said it was not known if the radar lock contributed to the crash by depriving the CIA pilot of navigationsal information or if the accident was because of strong air currents during thunderstorms in the area.

A national guardsman, stationed along the steep road leading to the location where the soldiers said the plane crashed, barred reporters from going into the area. He said the Salvadoran air force, which was responsible for the recovery of the bodies, had ordered the zone sealed off.

Reporters were told of the El Picacho crash site by a Salvadoran air force pilot.

About a dozen peasants interviewed in the area said the plane crashed early Friday morning, and helicopters started hovering around the site at 10 a.m. EDT that day. Villeda said ground rescue crews located the wreckage, put the bodies on litters and carried them away.

Government officials refused to give any information on the whereabouts of the wreckage or the names of the dead Americans.

Two civilian officials at Ilopango air base, 12 miles east of San Salvador, said the CIA plane was a twin-engine Merlin with a seating capacity for six people.

The officials, contacted in seperate telephone interviews, said the plane had been based at Ilopango and departed from that base on Friday's flight. They both said the aircraft was registered in El Salvador.

Both officials said the Merlin is considered to be a civilian aircraft, but it can be adapted for military reconnaisance. They spoke on condition that they not be identified.

MINER

Madsen had lowered his oxygen pack on a rope into the shaft because it was too cumbersome to wear, and then lowered himself down on a ladder, Slider said.

"He yelled out, 'Bad air,' and started to surface," Slider said. "He was within three feet of (two) co-workers. They said they could see he was turning blue" before he was overcome by the gas.

He then tumbled down to the bottom of the shaft. His two co-workers, on a ledge 40 feet above, heard him "moan and groan," Slider said.

They threw him an air line from a compressor, but he apparently was unconscious and unable to grab it, said Deputy Mason Kinney.

The compressor malfunctioned at about 4 p.m. Friday, Kinney said, and several hours elapsed before another compressor began pumping air into the shaft, which is part of a labyrinth of passages in the old mine.

"We have had problems where the air was not good, but never unbreathable," said Allen Herron, owner of the mine. "We have spent literally hundreds of thousands of dollars to do this the safest way possible, short of building a new shaft."

He said he bought the mine two years ago, and made Madsen its superintendent one year ago. He said Madsen had 27 years of mining experience.

In the last month the mine had had four inspections by the federal Occupational Safety and Health Administration, Herron said.

DEBATE

"I don't know which possibility is worse — a president who doesn't know what his government is doing or a president knowing of this illegal action and approving it.'

Meanwhile Saturday, Mondale's running mate, Rep. Geraldine Ferraro, told students at the University of Massachusetts that the manual "is written more in the spirit of Stalin than Jefferson. It reads more like Mao than Lincoln. It befits a dictatorship, not a freely elected government. It's an insult to the American people."

Reagan, in his broadcast, steered clear of that issue, choosing instead to attack Mondale's record as a senator and as Jimmy Carter's vice president.

He said Mondale had spent his entire political career "opposing our strength, exposing us to dangerous unnecessary risks."

Reagan contended that Mondale supports "unilateral cuts" in weapons systems. And he said his opponent had "voted time and again against American strength" while serving in the Senate.

Mondale, he said, "as a senator and later as understudy to Jimmy Carter, and still today, has seemed possessed with one simple but very wrong idea: American strength is a threat to world peace."

"What troubles me most is how little he seems to have learned about the dangers of weakness and naive thinking," the president said.

Taking a new tack, Mondale linked the nation's huge federal budget deficits — a main focus of his economic-policy attacks on Reagan — to foreign policy as well.

"The high interest rate caused by that debt is forcing terrible austerity on countries around the world," he said.

Nicaraguan rebel Edgar Chamorro reviews part of the 90-page booklet titled Psychological Operations in Guerrilla Wars" which he published. An uncut version of the manual has created a stir in Washington where some congressmen have called its recommendations "repugnant."

Nicaraguan: Group executes officials who are 'criminals'

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Nicaraguan rebel leader said Saturday that it is the "practice" of his CIA-backed group to execute government officials who are deemed "criminals." A Pentagon intelligence report informed top Reagan administration officials of such assassinations more than two years ago.

"We have taken towns and our men have had to kill officials of the Sandinista government," said Edgar Chamorro, chief of propaganda for the U.S.-backed Nicaraguan Democratic Force. He said most of those executed were security officials who had "a very bad reputation" with the townspeople.

"In guerrilla war, if you have to exact justice immediately, sometimes you have to do it," he said. "We don't have jails. We are in the jungle."

He also charged that the Nicaraguan Sandinista government has killed captured rebels and rebel supporters.

The Democratic Force, known by its Spanish initials FDN, claims about 12,000 troops who have been fighting the leftist Nicaraguan government for the past three years. The largest of several CIA-supported rebel groups, the FDN is based in Honduras.

CHAMORRO, DURING a telephone interview with The Associated Press from Miami, also said a psychological warfare manual — produced by the CIA and recommending "selective use of violence" to "neutralize" officials — was distributed to rebel troops inside Nicaragua.

Chamorro, however, said he knew of no specific case in which material from the manual led directly to a killing. He also said two other parts of the manual — calling for hiring professional criminals to carry out "selective jobs" and creating a "martyr" for the cause — were removed before most of the books were sent out.

The existence of the 90-page manual was reported by The AP one week ago, and President Reagan ordered two administration investigations into its production on Thursday. Some leading Democrats have demanded independent probes and the firing of CIA Director William J. Casey.

IN ANNOUNCING the investigations, the White House declared that the administration "has not advocated or condoned political assassination," and cited a Dec. 4, 1981 executive order signed by Reagan barring U.S. involvement in assassinations.

A secret Defense Intelligence Agency report, dated July 16, 1982, reported that during the preceding several months, Nicaraguan rebels had engaged in "the assassination of minor government officials and a Cuban adviser." The report linked one rebel group, the 15 September Legion, to several airline attacks and described the group as "terrorist."

The information was contained in a DIA Weekly Intelligence Summary that circulates among top adminstration officials. Its existence was first reported by The AP on Aug. 22, 1983, after a copy was obtained and independently verified by two U.S. government officials.

In Saturday's phone interview, Chamorro said that: "We have taken towns and our men have had to kill officials of the Sandinista government." He said such executions are by order of the local rebel commander after consultation with townspeople. In the section of the CIA manual on "selective use of violence," the manual advises calling villagers together to voice complaints against specific officials before steps are taken to "neutralize" them. In the manual, "neutralize" is not defined.

"It has been our practice to kill people who are criminals who fall into our hands," Chamorro said. He said he could not give an estimate of how many officials had been killed.

AS AN EXAMPLE, he said that in mid-December 1983, the rebels captured the town of Pantasma in northern Nicaragua and the commander executed three persons after they had been pointed out by the townspeople as "criminals."

Chamorro also said the rebels have at times executed captured Nicaraguan soldiers although adding that a military code of ethics has been adopted that encourages the release of captives after they are interrogated and if they refuse to join the rebels.

The Sandinista government has often alleged that the CIA-backed rebels have assassinated and kidnapped officials and townspeople sympathetic to the government when they attack villages.

According to a new study by the Council on Hemispheric Affairs — a liberal, Washington-based research group that is critical of U.S. policy in Central America — Nicaraguan rebel groups have murdered 876 civilians since 1980, with the heaviest toll occurring in 1983 when 605 civilians were allegedly slain.

THE STUDY was based on data from the Nicaraguan government, and it was impossible to verify the figures.

In a 1983 House Intelligence Committee report, Rep. Dave McCurdy, D-Okla., cited the killing of a West German doctor, Georg Pflaum, and 12 Nicaraguan medical assistants on April 30, 1983, as proving "all too convincingly that (rebel military) activity is not being restricted to military targets."

Also, in mid-1983, Lisa Fitzgerald, an American nun and former assistant attorney general in Massachusetts, returned from Nicaragua and told the House committee that anti-Sandinista rebels often targeted religious officials, health workers, teachers and doctors for assassination.

Such reports prompted the House committee to urge the CIA to stop the rebels from attacking civilians.

In the interview, Chamorro also said the psychological warfare manual, produced last October and November, was written by an American adviser who called himself John Fitzgerald and that Fitzgerald provided money for its publication. Chamorro said he was not aware that Fitzgerald, known as "Juanito" to the rebels, was employed by the CIA.

THE ADMINISTRATION has said the manual was the work of a low-level CIA contract employee who produced the book without approval from superiors.

Chamorro said the manual was produced at about the same time as a comic book-style manual urging Nicaraguans to sabotage their government through a range of actions, from calling in sick to work and clogging toilets to destroying truck engines and hurling "Molotov cocktails."

Chamorro said the sabotage manual was produced directly by the CIA although its pictures were modified by the rebels to make it appear Nicaraguan.

Over the president's objections, Congress voted earlier this month to cut off CIA aid to the rebels, at least until Feb. 28, and then permit it only if approved by both the House and Senate.

U.S. policy toward Nicaragua plagued by claims of illegality

WASHINGTON (AP) — The disclosures contained in the CIA's controversial manual on Nicaragua are the latest example of what Reagan administration critics claim is a pattern of anti-Sandinista activities that exceed legal bounds.

Administration officials privately acknowledge that some of the activities do raise legitimate legal questions.

On Tuesday, U.S. District Judge June L. Green ordered the CIA to make public 15 classified documents on the origins and planning of support for the rebels fighting the leftist Nicaraguan government. The papers cover operations approved by President Reagan between Aug. 6, 1981 and Aug. 6, 1982.

U.S. officials say those who object most vigorously to U.S. policies seldom offer alternate suggestions for containing the Sandinistas.

Reagan, citing Nicaragua's arms buildup and its close military and political ties with Soviet bloc countries, has predicted a revolutionary upheaval extending throughout Central America and into Mexico if nothing is done to check the Sandinistas.

But there is little political support for direct U.S. military involvement in Nicaragua, leaving officials with the problem of finding other ways to counter the perceived Marxist foothold in Central America.

The administration strategy has taken a number of different forms. How effective it has been in promoting U.S. interests in the region is unclear but officials concede there have been political costs to the administration both domestically and internationally.

The CIA manual, which offers advice to Nicaraguan rebels on political assassination, mob violence and other activities, has generated a greater furor than previous U.S. efforts to tame the Sandinistas because it appears to contradict a hallowed benchmark of President Reagan's foreign policy: opposition to state-sponsored terrorism.

Edgar Chamorro, chief of propaganda for the U.S.-backed Nicaraguan Democratic Force said Saturday in a telephone interview from Miami, Fla., that he knew of no specific case in which material from the manual led directly to a killing.

But he said: "We have taken towns and our men have had to kill officials of the Sandinista government."

In December 1981, Reagan took steps to ensure that his administration's private and public policies on the terrorism issue were in harmony. He signed an executive order asserting that no U.S. government employee "shall engage in or conspire to engage in assassination."

The order adds that no intelligence agency "shall participate in or request any person to undertake activities forbidden by this order." On Thursday, Reagan ordered two investigations into whether the CIA acted improperly in preparing the manual.

A secret Defense Intelligence Agency report, dated July 16, 1982, reported that during the preceding several months, Nicaraguan rebels had engaged in "the assassination of minor government officials and a Cuban adviser."

Veterans observe anniversary

RED BEACH, Philippines (AP) — One remembered the beach and another, with tears in his eyes, recalled his landing craft. They were among scores of American World War II veterans who on Saturday marked the 40th anniversary of one of history's greatest naval invasions.

"I could see myself 40 years ago coming in on the same kind of boat," said Ralph Myers of San Diego, Calif., tears filling his eyes.

"I was 19 years old," said Myers, now a retired insurance agent. "There were thousands of us ... We were all young men coming in."

William (Ed) Hartman's memory was of the beach. Now 66, Hartman, a former cannoneer of the U.S. Army's 24th Division, pointed to a strip of grassy land which once formed part of the beach where he landed with 174,000 other men under Gen. Douglas MacArthur.

The Oct. 20, 1944, Leyte invasion, backed by 700 vessels, began a decisive battle that killed 80,000 Japanese and more than 3,000 Allied troops. It led to the wresting of the Philippines from Japanese rule and signalled the fall of the Japanese military empire in Southeast Asia.

Scores of veterans from the United States, Australia and the Philippines commemorated the landing Saturday by watching a rehearsal of a re-enactment of the invasion to be staged officially on Sunday.

The re-enactment was set for Saturday but was postponed until Sunday after the presidential palace in Manila said a tropical storm prevented President Ferdinand E. Marcos, the main guest, from coming. He will try to attend Sunday. The re-enactment is to take place on a strip of beach in the town of Palo, 350 miles southeast of Manila. Red Beach, the codename given Palo for the 1944 landing, has been kept as the name for the strip of sand where MacArthur fulfilled his famous "I shall return" pledge to Filipinos.

A giant olive-colored statue of MacArthur, erected on a stone platform, overlooks the sea. It depicts him striding to shore with six other people, including Filipino wartime President Sergio Osmena.

About 2,000 local residents huddled on the beach to view the rehearsal by several hundred Filipino and U.S. Marines in full battle gear, who came ashore aboard four World War II LSTs (landing ship, tanks). Several T-28 planes roared overhead to provide mock air cover.

Fountains of water 20 feet high shot up from the sea as explosive charges, planted by frogmen, went off to simulate U.S. naval bombardment.

Playing the role of MacArthur, Col. Barry Howard, deputy commander of the U.S. 13th Air Force at Clark Air Base near Manila, walked ashore to a microphone where he read the speech MacArthur gave upon his return.

"People of the Philippines, I have returned," the 6-foot-5 Howard intoned. "By the grace of almighty God our forces stand again on Philippine soil, soil consecrated in the blood of our two peoples ... The hour of your redemption is here."

Cheers rose from villagers and veterans, many of whom were misty-eyed.

It was sunny but with patches of grey clouds, and the veterans said the day seemed just like it was 40 years ago.

Where Hartman thought he might have dived for cover 40 years ago stood three old women, two of them vending peanuts and steaming corn-on-the-cob. The third guarded a small table holding glasses of ice water which she sold for a penny a glass.

Hartman, born in Washington, Ill., arrived on Wednesday for the festivities, the first time he had seen the beach here since 1944.

"I'm not an emotional person and I didn't think it would bother me, but I walked down the beach and cried," he said.

Myers landed on Blue Beach in the nearby coastal town of Dulag. He visited a school in Dulag on Friday where, as a medical technician, he treated Filipino children wounded in the war.

Dozens of Japanese war veterans and their wives who also arrived for the commemoration stayed away from the beach Saturday. They boarded tourist buses to visit shrines scattered in different parts of Leyte where their comrades were killed in the Allied invasion.

But they and the Americans and the few Australians sat together at a luncheon hosted by Leyte Gov. Benjamin Romualdez, who also is Philippine ambasador to the United States, at his house in Tacloban.

When a band struck up "Moonlight Serenade," four grey-haired veterans took their wives by the hand and swayed away onto the dance floor.

Newsman sentenced

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — An Afghan "revolutionary court" sentenced a French journalist to 18 years in jail today, the state-run Kabul radio announced.

Jacques Abouchar, a reporter who works for Antenne 2, one of France's three television networks, was convicted of "spying," the radio said in a newscast monitored in New Delhi. The newscast gave no further details.

Abouchar was captured Sept. 17 near southern Afghanistan town of Spinboldak when the guerrilla unit he was traveling with was intercepted by Afghan and Soviet forces.

Abouchar's cameraman and soundman, both Frenchmen, escaped.

Opposers of Grenada invasion unconvinced

ST. GEORGE'S, Grenada (AP) — The invasion of Grenada was a political plus for President Reagan and the island leaders who participated, but those in the Caribbean who opposed the invasion remain unconvinced that it was justified.

Although initial Pentagon briefings, conducted with U.S. reporters barred from free access until the invasion's fifth day, called Grenada a heavily fortified Soviet-Cuban "colony," the island actually had little modern weaponry to defend the 730 Cubans and fewer than 2,000 Grenadian soldiers from nearly 6,000 invaders.

Of the seven Caribbean nations that sought the U.S. invasion and sent troops to help quell what they called a threat to regional stability, four called early elections. In three — Jamaica, Antigua, and Barbuda and St. Kitts-Nevis — incumbents won smashing re-elections. In the fourth, the incumbent leader of St. Vincent and the Grenadines lost to an opponent who had favored the invasion.

Although Reagan continues to tout the invasion as a foreign policy success, it was widely criticized internationally. Even U.S. friends in Western Europe and Latin America disapproved. Some Caribbean figures think the positive afterglow will fade for the participants.

"I think it could go the other way, now that we've had a year under the light of reason," said Errol Barrow, the opposition leader on Barbados, where Prime Minister Tom Adams was a key supporter.

Barrow noted that Barbados' sluggish economy has suffered because two major trading partners that opposed the invasion, Trinidad and Tobago and Guyana, have reduced trade with Barbados.

Guyana is a leftist nation at odds with the U.S. government. In Trinidad, Prime Minister George Chambers said he felt betrayed because his country's Caribbean allies had not informed him of the invasion, even though Trinidad had promoted regional embargoes against the radical army junta that took power on Grenada after the Oct. 19 execution of Prime Minister Maurice Bishop.

Barrow said reprisals against the junta could have come on the regional level or the United Nations.

"I don't like the idea of the United States playing Big Brother for the region," said Barrow, whose government was pro-West.

The Reagan administration, defending the invasion, pointed to the widespread acceptance by the Grenadian population. A television network's poll in the month after the invasion indicated 90 percent support from the some 100,000 Grenadians.

But critics say the invasion only relieved the Grenadians of a problem they would have solved themselves — the leftist junta led by Bernard Coard, Bishop's radical deputy, and army Gen. Hudson Austin.

"It would have been only a matter of time before the Leninist aspirations of Coard and Austin were swept away by Grenadians themselves. The U.S. invasion robbed them of that opportunity," wrote Hugh O'Shaughnessy, a London Observer reporter who wrote a book on the invasion.

"The people would have welcomed invaders from outer space after the takeover of the Coard fascists," said Kendrick Radix, a Bishop cabinet minister and loyalist.

Radix said Bishop's successors had virtually no popular support.

"Guns are transitory. People are more powerful in the end," Radix said. "When you (the United States) had your bloody Civil War, slaughtering millions of people, there was no foreign invasion. France had a Civil War. England had a Civil War. It's part of history; a stage through which people reach maturity."

U.S. officials have said the "civil war" scenario is unrealistic because the Soviet Union and Cuba would have supported the radical junta rather than lose a Caribbean stronghold and the international airport under construction, using mostly Cuban workers.

Castro said his government had no relations with Coard or Austin and would have pulled out after completing the airport, which Cubans began building in November 1979. Castro said that those who overthrew Bishop, a close personal friend, were "knowing or unknowing allies of imperialism."

An important reason given for the invasion was the presence of 631 American medical students on the island.

Dr. Geoffrey Bourne, vice-chancellor, said the school was cooperating with Austin's junta in hopes of ensuring student safety.

Bourne said while there was never any evident threat of an Iran-like hostage situation, there was likely to be "an intensification of resistance to (the junta), a very difficult and very bloody event."

"Nobody really knew who was doing what. The situation was chaos; volatile and scary," he said.

Controversial airport could be key to Grenada's economy

ST. GEORGE'S, Grenada (AP) — Government officials and businessmen say the success of Grenada's economic development lies in the controversial airport laid out by Cubans before last year's U.S. invasion.

It will bring tourist dollars and create new jobs, they say, and possibly head off a leftist revival.

But the United States, which voiced concern before the invasion last Oct. 25 that the Cubans were building the airport for military purposes, is cautioning Grenadians against being too optimistic about it.

An international airport has been a dream for decades on Grenada, currently serviced by Pearls Airport. Its unlighted 5,500-foot runway is nearly an hour's ride over rough mountain roads from this capital, and there is no direct air service from North America or Europe.

The result has been one of the Caribbean's least-developed tourist industries. The island in the past four years drew an annual average of 24,000 stayover visitors (as opposed to ship passengers), fewer than a single winter month's total for established Caribbean resort, such as Barbados.

But with the new airport and the sudden notoriety of Grenada, tourism officials expect a major change.

"Everyone knows about Grenada now," said Richard Cherman, director of tourism. "A lot of people will come out of curiosity. Things are looking up. This is the beginning of our future."

The anticipated tourism growth from the new airport, expected to have its ceremonial opening Oct. 28 with regular service starting in November, is viewed as the best way for Grenada to escape its dependence on foreign aid that will almost certainly decline in the future. The United States, which will have sent $45 million here by year's end, would like to cut its aid down to $15 million or less next year.

Although small by Caribbean standards, tourism nevertheless has accounted for an estimated 40 percent of Grenada's annual foreign exchange earnings. And tourism growth is also seen as a way to relieve unemployment that is at about one-third the work force.

Many unemployed are the young people who were the strongest supporters of the late Primé Minister Maurice Bishop, whose leftist government took over in 1979 but fell a year ago after a bloody power struggle within his own party, followed by the U.S. invasion. Bishop's loyalists now are re-organizing politically and have pledged to return to power.

"The lack of jobs for the young people is a problem," Geoffrey Thompson, a prominent businessman, said. "But with tourism brought by the airport, and the spin-offs of tourism, they can begin to see the light at the end of the tunnel. That would put a damper on any efforts to destabilize the situation."

Although the majority of Grenadians appear enthusiastic about the benefits of the new airport, some people, including U.S. officials, caution that the airport won't be a panacea.

During Bishop's time, President Reagan and other U.S. officials voiced suspicion that the Cubans doing most the work on the airport and its 9,500-foot runway had military plans for it. They said its size far outstripped Grenada's needs while its long runway could easily accommodate large military aircraft.

Four months after the invasion, the Reaganadministration reluctantly committed nearly $20 million to help complete the $71 million airport. U.S. officials said it would have been wasteful to scale back the airport from the stage inherited from the Cubans, but they worry that its operating cost — estimated as high as $10 million a year — will outweigh its revenues.

In addition to this, the island has only 460 first-class hotel rooms, and about half of those were still occupied by U.S. military and diplomatic personnel. The interim government has been encouraging foreign investment and would like to see 2,000 new hotel rooms by next year.

The island's hotel association, however, is resisting such rapid growth, calling instead for a phased development which would bring no more than 900 new rooms over three years. The established hoteliers envision a limited, "up-market" clientele, rather than the mass market sought by the interim authorities, who will be replaced in Dec. 3 elections.

To build either market, the island will probably have to improve its infrastructure. Power outages, water shortages and telephone failures have been reduced in recent months, but the level of services remains below established resort islands.

Grenada prompted new rules

WASHINGTON (AP) — The next time American troops go into battle, they may have company — a "pool" of journalists operating under rules that are a legacy of press-military hostility which crested during the Grenada invasion.

Journalists were banned from Grenada for the first 48 hours after the U.S.-led invasion began Oct. 25, 1983. The move brought widespread media protests but public praise for the Defense Department's position.

It was the first time in U.S. history that the press had been barred from covering a large-scale military action. The ban gave the press and the Pentagon occasion to examine why relations had deteriorated.

After Grenada, a special Pentagon commission proposed creation of a national pool of selected journalists who would accompany U.S. troops in the early phases of any action and make their notes, film and pictures available to other journalists.

That panel, headed by retired Army Maj. Gen. Winant Sidle, also called for maximum news coverage "consistent with the military security and safety of U.S. forces."

That qualification means the press could be barred again from covering a U.S. military operation. Pentagon spokesman Michael Burch said decisions on whether to permit the 12-person pool to accompany military operations would be made on a case-by-case basis.

Burch said the "most important thing is the safety of our forces and the security of the mission."

Even the composition of the pool, announced recently, prompted controversy. The original proposal for an 11-member pool did not include a representative from a daily newspaper, but the Pentagon expanded the pool to include one after newspapers and industry groups complained.

The other pool members include four television network correspondents, a two-person sound and camera crew, a magazine reporter, a news photographer, a radio reporter and two wire service reporters.

Proposed Pentagon guidelines for coverage by pool members reportedly give wide-ranging latitude to field commanders to restrict what can be reported, including information about casualty figures, weaknesses, current or future operations, or information about the effectiveness of enemy actions.

The decision to keep the media out of Grenada was made because commanders could not assure the safety of reporters, according to Burch and Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger.

Skeptical journalists noted that reporters and photographers have long shared the dangers of combat with U.S. forces. Some journalists said the main reason for the ban was to help the Pentagon avoid close scrutiny of its actions.

The ban eventually was upheld by a federal judge in Washington who ruled that the press had no legal right to accompany troops.

The hostility between the press and the military traces its roots to the Vietnam War, when some officers claimed that reporters regularly wrote and broadcast stories that differed from the official U.S. version of the conflict.

Living with inflation means never knowing price

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — A new Israeli immigrant fumbled through her wallet at the supermarket checkout counter, trying to figure out how many of the crisp new banknotes were needed to pay her 18,000-shekel grocery bill.

With the clerk and other customers helping, the Swedish-born, middle-aged woman finally came up with the correct amount but it was clear she had no idea how much she had actually spent. Holding up a bright green 1,000-shekel note, she asked: "How much is this worth in dollars?"

"About two dollars and 20 cents," someone answered.

"That's today," another shopper added. "It will be less tomorrow."

Living with runaway inflation means never knowing the price of anything. The value of the shekel changes every day — always for the worse.

Some appliance stores, restaurants and boutiques post prices in dollars, in open defiance of a seldom-enforced law that makes it illegal to display prices in anything but shekels. The posted dollar price is then converted into shekels at the official exchange rate of the day. Many stores post no prices at all, leaving it to the customer to inquire.

Supermarkets label most of their merchandise with small, stick-on tags, but the prices often change three, four and five times while an item is sitting on the shelf. Like an archaeologist digging through the layers of ancient civilizations, a shopper can peel off the labels and chart the inflation.

Trace, for instance, the price of a box of paper tissues, a fairly fast moving item. A box of the locally made "Pleasant to Me" brand cost 488 shekels (about $1.10) a few days ago, but underlying labels said 407 shekels and 345 shekels. In shekel terms, that's a 41 percent increase in the few days the box was on the shelf.

The problem, however, is that shekel values have lost almost all meaning. Any serious discussion of money, whether it's about Israel's national budget or the price of a candy bar, is done in dollars and cents.

Economists predict Israel's rate of inflation for 1984 will reach 900 percent, an all-time record. The inflation rate in 1983 was 190.7 percent, a record at the time.

Assaf Razin, professor of economics at Tel Aviv University, said Israel's inflation is "a symptom of the more fundamental problems of the Israeli economy, (which is) financed to a large extent by printing money."

"The main thing is to concentrate in the next six to eight months on the international finance situation, to cut some expenditures in the budget rather severely," Razin said.

Mondale needs good performance, help from Reagan in second debate

By DAVID ESPO
Associated Press Writer

An Analysis

WASHINGTON (AP) — Walter F. Mondale needs a strong performance in Sunday night's foreign policy debate to have a realistic chance of overtaking President Reagan in the final two weeks of the campaign for the White House. But more than that, he needs help from the president.

Reagan's occasionally halting showing in the first campaign debate on Oct. 7 belied his reputation as "the great communicator," raising some doubts about whether the 73-year-old president was up to another term in the White House.

This time, the chance that Reagan will end up groping for words or uttering an obvious gaffe or being visibly rattled by a persistent Mondale attack — played over and over again on the television networks for 48 hours afterwards — still seems Mondale's best hope for closing the big gap in the polls.

"It's like Casey at the Bat," says pollster Louis Harris. "Ted Williams going out and striking out, something like that.... If you get a repeat of that, I say, watch out."

THE DEMOCRATS moved swiftly after the first debate to try and exploit the doubts about Reagan. And as a result, many voters may be watching this Sunday's confrontation in Kansas City to see whether the president seems to be back on the beam as much as to decide which man has a better grasp of the facts, or who makes the better argument on arms control or defense spending.

If the great communicator re-emerges, Mondale's task in the 16 campaign days that follow will be far more difficult, no matter which candidate knows more about the intricacies of arms control talks with the Soviet Union.

For the record, Reagan's men and Mondale and his aides say none of this is so.

"Walter Mondale has already lost the election," said Reagan campaign spokesman Jim Lake. "The debates aren't what will make up people's minds," he said, contending the voters will decide on the basis of issues and a vision for the future. Mondale "has not defined a vision of America. Ronald Reagan has," he said.

Mondale and his aides also tend to play down the importance of the debate, but for a different reason, for they expect a much more polished, poised president than they saw two weeks ago.

THE DEBATE IS "very important, but it's one of many steps" in the campaign, Mondale told reporters last Sunday. Added chairman James Johnson, "This is a must win situation for Reagan, just like Louisville (the first debate) was a must win for Mondale."

But other Democrats, including some inside the campaign, say otherwise.

"I don't have to tell you what happens if the president performs brilliantly," conceded one Mondale aide, who spoke on condition of anonymity. But if Reagan doesn't shine and Mondale does extremely well, "we've got a dogfight the last two weeks of the campaign."

"If he (Reagan) does very well in the debate, it's going to be very hard to beat him," says Carl Wagner, a Democrat who worked in Sen. Edward Kennedy's 1980 presidential campaign.

"A LOT IS NOT in Mondale's hands. It's up to Reagan," added Victor Kamber, whose consulting firm worked in Sen. Alan Cranston's unsuccessful campaign for the Democratic presidential nomination earlier this year.

For his part, Reagan campaign spokesman Lake says it would take an "unknown, unplanned, unexpected event" that he would not speculate about for Mondale to defeat the president.

"There is not a state in which we do not have a lead," he added, saying that whatever gains Mondale made on the basis of the first debate have been erased in the two weeks since.

But that doesn't mean a Mondale victory is impossible.

His support jumped perceptibly in state after state in the days following the first debate, and he is within striking distance in several large states, including California and New York.

THE POLLS that show him behind also show that voters have a more positive impression of him than they did before the first debate, a development that means he is well-positioned to capitalize if he is perceived as the clear winner in the debate in Kansas City.

He is said by his aides to be confident of his grasp of the issues that will be debated, and Lewis Kaden, who has overall charge of his debate preparation, says, "I think we expect Walter Mondale to win the debate."

But this seems like a campaign that is Reagan's to lose as much as Mondale's to win, and a victory on points for the challenger probably wouldn't be enough.

Ferraro: CIA document an insult

AMHERST, Mass. (AP) — A CIA document instructing Central American guerrillas in violence is "more in the spirit of Stalin than Jefferson" and insults the American public, Rep. Geraldine A. Ferraro said Saturday.

Speaking to about 13,000 cheering students at the University of Massachusetts, the Democratic vice presidential candidate continued her recent emphasis on foreign affairs, the subject of Sunday night's debate between President Reagan and Democratic challenger Walter Mondale.

In words similar to those Mondale has used, she accused Reagan of blaming foreign policy mistakes on others and of fostering conflict rather than peace.

"The politics of blame is not what we expect from our leaders," she said. "The American people want a president that admits his mistakes and learns from them. They want a president that cares more about protecting this nation than protecting his image."

Ms. Ferraro sharply attacked the CIA document which was disclosed this week.

"It is written more in the spirit of Stalin than Jefferson," she said. "It reads more like Mao than Lincoln. It befits a dictatorship, not a freely elected government. It's an insult to the American people."

She added that "anyone that believes for one minute that refining the murder techniques for Central Americans will advance our national interest is gravely mistaken."

Ms. Ferraro delivered the same speech three hours later in Burlington, Vt. before an overflow crowd of about 3,000 in a downtown auditorium.

She also accused Reagan and Vice President George Bush of misstating facts — on the economy, the federal budget, the rate of poverty and other issues — in the previous campaign debates.

She said, "I don't know what they think they're doing when they say things that are plainly not true."

"Lying," several audience members in Amherst shouted.

"I knew you were smart," she said.

Ms. Ferraro said, "In the last two weeks, four candidates for president and vice president have debated. I know two things are sure: I beat George Bush and George Bush beat Ronald Reagan."

Noting suggestions that Reagan was overbriefed before his first meeting with Mondale on Oct. 7, she said, "Since when is it cruel and unusual punishment to expect a president to learn the facts he needs to govern?"

She urged the audience to listen carefully to Sunday's debate.

"Be on your guard tomorrow night," she said. "Your future may ride on that debate. When Mr. Reagan and Mr. Mondale speak, compare their visions, weigh their grasp of foreign affairs, measure them against the most important test: Which one will build a safer world."

At the day's final stop in Bangor, Maine, Ms. Ferraro fielded friendly questions during a nearly hour-long question-and-answer session in the city's high school auditorium. She predicted that Reagan in a second term would seek to reduce the deficit through a regressive tax.

"They're going to raise taxes," she said. "The way they'll raise it is either a value added tax or a national sales tax."

She said either would fall as heavily on the poor as on the rich.

Ms. Ferraro also responded strongly in favor of handgun control, saying that when she was a prosecutor, the daughter of one of her colleagues was "executed" by a gunman.

"I just don't see any legitimate reason for these things to be around," she said. "It's just not the wild West."

Democrats complain about ads

WASHINGTON (AP) — Democratic campaign officials on Saturday accused Republicans of exceeding legal spending limits for congressional candidates by broadcasting national television advertisements that refer to House elections.

Martin D. Franks, executive director of the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee, said the panel plans to file a complaint on the issue Monday at the Federal Election Commission. He said the group has also sent telegrams to 600 television stations asking them to stop broadcasting the ads.

Franks told reporters at a news conference that by running the two ads, mentioning House elections though no specific candidates, the Republican National Committee and the Republican Congressional Campaign Committee "have run afoul of FEC regulations."

"Truly generic advertising would urge viewers to vote Republican or vote Democratic on a ticket-wide basis," Franks said. "These ads appeal to the congressional race of every viewer. They are illegal."

But Mark Braden, chief counsel to the Republican National Committee, said the Democrats are wrong and are merely trying to have the ads pulled from the air because they don't like their message.

"I don't think we've told the Democrats to go fly a kite, but we should have," Braden said in a telephone interview. "We've run commercials of this type for quite a long time and there has never been any question of their legality."

Franks played both ads on videotape for reporters.

In the first one, people are stuck on an elevator with a man referred to as their Democratic congressman, who balks at telling them whether he intends to vote to raise taxes. At the end of the commercial, an announcer urges: "Find out if your congressman is for higher taxes, or just vote Republican."

In the second ad, a man and a woman face the camera and are shown in the garb of farmers, laborers and business professionals while an announcer says that "the other person who will pay the tax increases ... is you." The announcer then urges viewers to return control of the House to Republicans.

Even after debate — Bush, Ferraro continue role reversal

By Peggy Simpson
Washington Bureau

SEATTLE — In the 10 days since the historic debate between Vice President George Bush and Democratic challenger Geraldine Ferraro, they have continued their unexpected and stunning role reversal.

It is Ferraro who has continued her sober, sometimes feisty, focus on substance and Bush who has been locked into the role cheerleader and defender of the faith.

While promoting President Reagan in campaign stop after campaign stop, the Vice President also has sought to justify his debate assertion that Walter Mondale and Ferraro claimed American Marines in Lebanon "died in shame" and his contention that he "kicked ass" when he met Ferraro in Philadelphia.

The battle between a vice president and his Democratic challenger would not normally be of abiding interest to voters, who cast their ballots for the top of the ticket. But two unprecedented issues pervade the Bush-Ferraro conflict and make an almost historic confrontation.

ONE IS THAT Ferraro is the first woman to seek the vice presidency on a major ticket and the other is that Reagan, at 73, is the oldest president in history.

Bush entered the debate with a reputation for broad knowledge about both foreign and domestic issues — a "depth" of experience, to use one of his favorite stump phrases, as congressman, ambassador, intelligence chief and four years as Vice President. Ferraro's national experience consisted of six years in Congress.

Bush had hinted in interviews with local reporters at various stops that he was far better qualified than Ferraro in the crucial "heartbeat away" role — the ability to take over the country "if, God forbid," the President should die.

IN THE IMMEDIATE aftermath of the debate, he apparently enhanced that image with most of the huge television audience that watched the confrontation.

Public opinion acclaimed Bush the victor in the debate with Ferraro, primarily for his discussion of foreign policy. He fared especially well with male voters, while Ferraro did better with female voters.

But even critics of Ferraro contended that she held her own on domestic matters.

In the days since the debate, the most frequently seen segment on television has been Ferraro's charge that Bush was "patronizing" her with a lesson on foreign policy. Also questioned has been Bush's inexplicable decision to turn back his rebuttal time by quipping that he didn't have anything to say "unless we could talk about the World Series."

Although he has spoken out forcefully in defense of Reagan's foreign and domestic policies, Bush has been on the defensive much of the time, giving the Republicans some unwanted negative publicity as polls show slippage in Reagan's lead in the days before the crucial final debate Sunday night between Reagan and Mondale.

FERRARO HAD BEEN rated the loser on debate night, a shock to her and her aides. But her deliberately low-key debate tone may have strengthened her, after all.

Before the debate, Ferraro had been the feisty stump speaker — far more than a cheerleader for her running mate. She was seen primarily a crowd-drawing phenomenum because she was the first woman nominated for Vice President by a major party.

When Ferraro shocked supporters by taking a muted, lawyerly style in the debate to focus on substance, not on rally-rousing celebrity status, she was low marks by analysts. She diluted the impact of her appearance on national television by looking down at notes she took as the debate progressed.

Only a Ferraro knockout of Bush, they said, could have escalated the come-from-behind Democratic challenge to within real striking distance by Nov. 6. She did not achieve that knock out in the eyes Americans who were polled after the debate.

Ferraro is convinced otherwise, however. She points to new polls showing her disturbing negative ratings have dropped while her favorable marks have risen to a level equal with Bush.

She's attracting huge and enthusiastic crowds — nothing new for her since the start of this rocky campaign — but there may be evidence that her sober debate performance has empowered her to use far more lethal issue-oriented arguments against Reagan in the crucial weeks ahead.

At the University of Washington, for instance, she damned the "moral blindness" of the Reagan administration and said the latest outrage is a Central Intelligence Agency manual circulated "among the Contras in Nicaragua . . . which teaches methods of assassination, terror, blackmail and mob violence. This is totally contrary to our basic values."

"Anyone who believes that refining the murder techniques of Central Americans will advance our national interests is gravely mistaken," she said to applause. "We should be resolving differences, not aggravating them. We should be building economies, not mining harbors."

IN HER SEATTLE speech, she declared that Reagan had shown "little mastery for the problems of the world economy" and that "he has been consistently uninformed and disturbingly detached."

A Mondale presidency, she promised, "will bring strength where now there is confusion, principles instead of indifference, understanding instead of ignorance."

Bush, in contrast, has been on the defensive on issues stemming directly from that debate and his "kick ass" comment the following day.

Instead of dropping the issue, he used first one dictionary and then another to justify his definition "shame."

Some Republicans seemed to think Bush helped solidify the male vote with his "kick ass" comment to longshoreman. But Reagan already is strong with men.

The Bush remark brought to three demeaning comments about Ferraro by him, his wife and his press aide which may have made them a critical mass in the minds of some voters.

At Leisure World, a retirement community outside Los Angeles, Caroline Gerdes, 74, stopped by after a game of golf to watch Bush but had already written him off: "The way he talked on the debate, he was out to put women down. And this bit about 'kicking a little ass' and his trying to bring up the matter of baseball in the debate — if he has such great experience, how come he took that road to try and knock her out?"

A conservatively dressed older woman turned around, smiled brightly at Gerdes and said "I totally agree with you." Then she left, missing Bush's speech.

At the Iowa State Fairgrounds, two former Reagan voters, Rohn and Carolyn Hull, were voting Democratic this year partly because they fear continued high deficits will imperil his job at Firestone — but they also brought up Bush's "World Series" comment in the middle of the debate as offensive to Ferraro and to them.

"I was hoping she'd give him a karate chop and she did," said Carolyn Hull, 24.

While Ferraro appeared to make only one noticeable flub — on a Sunday talk show admission that she had not fully briefed herself on Mondale's reasons for supporting the Grenada invasion — Bush made some new ones even while fighting to rid himself of the debate mistakes.

AT LEISURE WORLD, for instance, Bush said that Congress, not the Reagan administration, had caused half a million persons to be severed from Social Security disability roles but that Reagan had salvaged the program.

The opposite was true. The disability program became a vehicle to make major budget cuts — $1 billion a year before Congress and the federal courts forced the Reagan administration to stop purging disabled persons from the pension rolls until after their appeals had been exhausted.

Bush also had said during the debate that he had been misquoted in an 1980 interview in which he said there could be a "winnable" nuclear war.

During his visit in Los Angeles, a local television station obtained the tape of the interview from a reporter — and broadcast Bush's "winnable war" words.

The White House sees no serious damage to the overall campaign.

They'd rather not see the crisis-to-crisis headlines. One aide said sourly that Bush "doesn't deal well with adversity."

But they see him in a clearly supporting role, with little potential to make or break the Reagan stride.

Ferraro's role may be supportive as well — but the Democratic strategists say she is able to get crowds, volunteers and invaluable publicity for the Democratic come-from-behind campaign.

As the week ended, Bush had adopted a more direct and blunt style of criticizing Ferraro, after television interviews earlier complaining that there appeared to be a "double standard" where she could correct his figures but if he did the same he was "condescending."

Man kills lover, then self

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A man who shot his policewoman lover to death and then handcuffed her two daughters to a bed for nearly a day told a reporter, "I just need to get drunk enough to blow my own brains out." Three hours later, he freed the girls and killed himself.

"I killed my girlfriend. She's dead. I shot her yesterday. I let the kids go today. I wasn't going to hurt them. I love them. I wouldn't hurt them. I just couldn't make it, man," Al Comber told the reporter in a telephone conversation Friday.

Police said Comber, 44, shot his live-in girlfriend, Los Angeles police Officer Shirley SerVoss, 35, on Thursday, then handcuffed her two daughters, ages 15 and 9, to a bed.

He released the girls Friday, and they ran to the home of a neighbor, who called police. Officers surrounded the home in suburban Chatsworth for more than two hours before the man pulled the trigger on himself, said police Lt. Dan Cooke.

As police waited outside, Comber called a friend to say he was afraid to go out, that police would shoot him and that he was going to kill himself, according to Saturday's editions of the Los Angeles Herald Examiner.

Comber told the friend he might give himself up if a member of the press were there to make sure he wasn't shot by police. The friend, who would not give his name, called the Herald Examiner and asked that someone call Comber, the newspaper said.

Reporter Gordon Dillow reached Comber by telephone about 2 p.m. Friday. Comber cried, rambled, slurred his words and said he had been drinking all night, the newspaper said. He alternately said he loved his dead girlfriend, then bitterly cursed her.

"She's a cop, LAPD," he said. Friends told the newspaper Comber was proud of Ms. SerVoss and had thrown a party in her honor when she graduated from the Police Academy this year.

"There's gonna be a shoot-out here pretty soon," Comber told the reporter. "They are gonna shoot me when I walk out the door 'cause I killed a cop. I'm not gonna surrender. I'll take myself out," he said.

The reporter told him that wouldn't do anyone any good.

"No, man," Comber said. "I just need to get drunk enough to blow my own brains out."

Then police called, and Comber put the reporter on hold.

Officers talked to him for three hours. About 5:30 p.m., they heard a gun shot and the phone went dead.

When police entered the house, they found the bodies of Comber and Ms. SerVoss.

Woman jumps from hotel window, striking pedestrian

DENVER (AP) — A 31-year-old woman jumped from a third story window of a transients' hotel, striking one passerby, narrowly missing another, and inflicting multiple injuries on herself.

The woman was identified as Loretta Sacage and was in serious condition Saturday, said Ellen Perry, an admissions clerk at Denver General Hospital. The passerby she hit was knocked to the sidewalk but escaped injury.

Photographers for the Denver Post, which is across the street from the Colonial Hotel, saw the woman sitting on the third-story window ledge Friday at 5:30 p.m., and called the 911 emergency number.

The woman climbed off the window, went back into the room and then back to the ledge several times before jumping about two minutes before police arrived, witnesses said.

Lane Jones, 21, of Lakewood, and Peggy Pfeffer, 21, of Littleton, were walking on the sidewalk below when Ms. Savage jumped.

"I heard somebody holler, 'Look out,' and all of a sudden I felt this thud," Jones said. "I was stunned. I didn't do anything. I didn't have time to think."

The Post photographer took pictures of the leap while yelling the warning to Jones.

Ship gets mixed welcome

NEW YORK (AP) — The battleship USS Iowa is a "holocaust machine" that must be banned from New York Harbor because of its potential to carry nuclear weapons, the Rev. Jesse Jackson said Saturday at a rally protesting the ship's visit.

"These cruise missiles are magnets for other missiles" that might be fired by an enemy, Jackson told an enthusiastic audience of about 2,000 at a pier under the Brooklyn Bridge, where the ship was docked. "New York is in danger. This is a holocaust machine ... a holocaust machine."

"Today must be the first in a series of protests around this ship," he said. "Choose the human race over the nuclear race before it's too late!"

Mayor Edward Koch called the protesters misguided when he welcomed the ship on Friday. "Does anybody think we will not be subject of a first attack?" he asked. "After all, this is the capital of the world."

The Iowa, in New York for a two-day visit, has been named flagship of a seven-ship "surface action group" which the Navy plans to station at Staten Island in 1988.

The Iowa and other ships in the group are equipped to carry nuclear-tipped cruise missiles, although the Pentagon refuses to confirm or deny whether any particular vessel carries the weapons.

The battleship's reception on its first full day in the port, where it was launched in 1942, was mixed. Speakers at Saturday's rally denounced it — "a beat-up old battleship," City Councilwoman Miriam Friedlander called it — while thousands of visitors, including some veterans who served on the ship, eagerly marched aboard for a tour.

Jackson was among those who went aboard, where he was greeted by the ship's second-in-command, Capt. John Chernesky.

Chernesky said later that Jackson had asked him whether the ship's missiles were carrying nuclear warheads.

"I told him I wasn't allowed to say, and, like a gentleman, he accepted that," Chernesky said.

Unlike most visitors, Jackson was shown the bathtub installed for President Franklin D. Roosevelt, who rode the ship to a war conference in Iran in 1943.

Jackson seemed impressed when told that the Iowa's 16-inch guns could fire a shell weighing "as much as a Volkswagen" 23 miles, penetrating 30 feet of reinforced concrete.

Police, saying that they wanted to keep ship visitors separated from the protesters, prohibited the latter from boarding the ship if they were wearing shirts or jackets with anti-nuclear slogans.

Jackson, in New York to host the "Saturday Night Live" program on NBC-TV, was preceded on the speaker's platform by U.S. Rep. Theodore Weiss, who warned of "a small but real possibility of a release of radioactive material from a warhead damaged by collision, fire, explosion or sabatoge."

'Probability' of fraud bars voter registration

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — A "strong probability" of voter fraud prompted a blanket rejection of new voter registrations in Wasco County, where followers of an Indian guru are at odds with opponents, the state's chief elections officer testified Saturday.

Disciples of Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh are challenging the action in federal court, where a two-day hearing continued Saturday before U.S. District Judge Edward Leavy.

The Rajneeshees have submitted voter registrations for some 3,000 homeless people invited to live in Rajneeshpuram, the sect's central Oregon commune-city. They claim the blanket rejection, which means every person seeking to register after Oct. 10 must undergo an individual hearing before being accepted, is unconstitutional.

But Secretary of State Norma Paulus testified Saturday that she recommended the procedure to Wasco County Clerk Sue Proffitt because of the "strong probability" of voter fraud.

She said she had no specific evidence of fraud at the time but acted in response to complaints by Rajneeshee opponents and news accounts.

"We had literally hundreds of people saying they thought the integrity of the ballot box was not being kept by the state," she said, "and they were angry and were going to go with the Albany people."

A loosely knit group of Rajneeshee opponents based in Albany had threatened to move temporarily to Wasco County to vote in the Nov. 6 election. They said their votes were needed to counter the influence of the sect.

Mrs. Paulus said Friday that in the past week, county officials did find evidence of fraud in voter registration cards mailed to the clerk's office.

In her testimony Saturday, she said, "I couldn't sit back and wait for it to occur. Now it already has. Unless we continue to do something, I think we will have more of it."

Under questioning by a Rajneeshee attorney, Mrs. Paulus said she thought the street people were guests at Rajneeshpuram, not permanent residents. Under Oregon law, she said, voters are required to have a "fixed habitation."

"They do not determine whether or not they stay there," she said to the Rajneeshee attorney, "you do."

The Rajneeshees' suit asks that normal election procedures be restored, but Leavy earlier in the week denied a request for a temporary restraining order against the clerk's office.

In another lawsuit involving the sect, a Portland attorney filed a class action against the Rajneeshees in federal court Friday on behalf of street people who visited but then left the commune.

Frederick T. Smith asked for $40 million in punitive damages, claiming false statements were made to lure the visitors to Rajneeshpuram and that street people were forced either to register to vote or to leave the commune.

Swami Krishna Deva, the mayor of Rajneeshpuram, called the lawsuit "absolutely baseless."

About 3,700 former street people are now at Rajneeshpuram, and about 850 others have left the city, the Rajneeshees say. The sect began busing new recruits at no charge in early September under a $1 million share-a-home program.

Initially, the Rajneeshees gave free return bus tickets to transients who didn't like life at the commune, but that has been discontinued.

CONDO ASSOCIATION BYLAWS

When you buy a condominium, you will have to abide by the rules of the association. These rules will be spelled out in a document called Association Bylaws.

In effect, it sets out the rules for your condo association internal government. It will specify how many owners are needed to form a quorum and conduct business, the use of proxies, the duties and powers of the officers and directors.

Specific clauses will authorize the board to establish an operating budget, including reserves for general operations, replacement of commonly owned facilities and maintenance of common areas. Professional management may also be authorized. Changes in the declaration may require approval of all owners, but bylaws can generally be amended by a vote of 75% or even less.

Often, the success of owning a condominium lays in the ability and wisdom of the condominium governing officers. Read condominium bylaws carefully as well as checking out the track record of the condo association.

NATION IN BRIEF

Man gets in 'sticky' situation

PHOENIXVILLE, Pa. (AP) — A 21-year-old man who confessed to emptying 400,000 gallons of corn syrup from railroad tankers has been charged with 34 counts each of criminal mischief and conspiracy, police said.

James Francis Polarine said he and two juveniles emptied the 27 cars on Sept. 3 so they would "remember this Labor Day," police said Friday. The quarter-mile sticky mess that resulted has cost seven companies about $840,000, authorities said.

If convicted on all counts, Polarine would face a maximum 476 years in prison and a $1 million fine, Detective Kenneth Solntzeff said. Polarine was being held on $25,000 bail, and the juveniles had not yet been charged, he said.

Project planned along river

JERSEY CITY, N.J. (AP) — A $5 billion series of redevelopment projects hailed as the largest undertaking of its kind in the nation is planned along an 18-mile stretch of the Hudson River shore across from New York City, officials say.

At a news conference Friday sponsored by Public Service Electric & Gas Co., developers described 13 projects, funded by both public and private organizations, slated for construction between the George Washington Bridge to the north and Bayonne to the south.

The entire 2,300-acre series of projects, including millions of square feet of office space, thousands of residential units, shopping centers, hotels and recreational facilities, is expected to be finished within 20 years.

Ex-employee kills co-worker

CHICAGO (AP) — A man who was fired from his job at a tire store returned with a handgun and a butcher knife and killed the assistant manager and wounded two other employees, authorities said. One survivor had to pull the knife from his body before crawling to a phone to call police.

The assailant, whose identity was not released, was arrested for questioning Friday night, police said. No charges had been filed by Saturday morning.

The man entered the Goodyear Tire and Parts Store and demanded that the employees give him money from the cash register, police said. When they refused, he stabbed one of the injured men and then began shooting, police said.

Suspected brothers surrender

ANAHEIM, Calif. (AP) — Two brothers hunted in the robbery-slaying of a jewelry store owner surrendered after a police helicopter equipped with a heat-sensing device detected them in steep, brush-filled terrain, police said.

Hans J. Swaving, 34, and Robert E. Swaving, 22, both of Canoga Park, were booked for investigation of murder, robbery and attempted murder after being captured Friday night, said police Lt. Del Wade.

The two men burst into a small jewelry store in Westminster on Friday and shot the owner to death, then fled with an undetermined amount of jewelry, police said. A chase punctuated by gunfire led to Gypsum Canyon, 35 miles south of Los Angeles, where the helicopter found the suspects, authorities said.

Jewelry store under investigation

NEW YORK (AP) — The records of an exclusive jewelry store have been seized in what authorities say is a wide-ranging investigation into sales tax evasion by retailers and their customers.

Agents from the state attorney general's office, the state Department of Taxation and Finance and the city Finance Department on Friday seized the records of the Bulgari jewelry store on Fifth Avenue, authorities said. There were no arrests, and no charges have been filed against the store, said Tim Gilles, a spokesman for the attorney general's office.

Gang violence epidemic

LOS ANGELES (AP) — An epidemic of 1960s-style gang warfare, a far cry from the romanticized street scenes of "West Side Story," is making the sound of gunfire and anguished screams commonplace in this city's ghettos.

The classic gang "rumble" with tire irons and chains is outmoded, say police, a tame relic of the past now replaced by random shootings and multiple murders.

Money and guns, the byproducts of drug dealing, are the new trademarks of street gangs, and law enforcement officials, reeling from a recent outbreak of gang violence, are working overtime to try to prevent more killings.

"Part of the problem is the proliferation of guns," said Cmdr. Matthew Hunt of the Los Angeles Police Department's CRASH unit, which is seeking to battle gang violence at the street level. CRASH stands for Community Resources Against Street Hoodlums.

"Teen-agers have no business with guns," Hunt said in exasperation.

He cited the seven murders last weekend as symptomatic of the lethal power now in the hands of gangs with such names as the Outlaws, Bounty Hunter, Playboys, Neighborhood Crips, Swans, Brim, Harpys and Watts Barrio Crips.

By week's end, three more were dead in gang shootings. No arrests had been made in any of the incidents.

On Oct. 12 alone, five died when a car full of shotgun-wielding youths opened fire on a house where young people attending a birthday party had spilled out onto the lawn. The eldest victim was 20; the youngest 14.

"I was just standing there talking to some people when someone said, 'Watch out,' and this car came by," said Harold Hall, 54, a neighbor. "They just started shooting."

The party shooting is now believed to have been retaliation for the theft of a gang member's car by a member of a rival gang. Most gang shootings are either in retaliation or to establish territorial control, authorities say.

Drive-by neighborhood shootings, guns fired at random from passing cars, "are a typically gang method of operation," said Los Angeles police Lt. Dick Simmons. "They just go back for the territorial imperative. ... Not so much to take over an area, but to bulge out their chests."

"It seems we get killings every day in which gangs just start shooting indiscriminately," said CRASH Detective Michael Anderson. "It's so common it's unbelievable."

Hunt points to three major trends in street warfare — guns, drugs and the increase of gangs in the black neighborhoods of South Central Los Angeles.

"Years ago, when we'd find out that two gangs were meeting in a park, we'd try to get there first and stop the rumble," he recalled. "Even if we didn't, they'd take tire irons and baseball bats and beat each other up. But they didn't have guns."

In those days, Hunt said, gangs were primarily Hispanic. Such groups still dominate East Los Angeles, but they have been less violent. "There's an occasional knifing, but fewer shootings," he said.

"Gangs in the black community are relatively new," he continued. "They've sprung up in the last 10 to 12 years. They may start out as a social group and then get into the criminal element. They begin selling dope to finance their operations."

The sale of marijuana and cocaine is frequently the financial backbone of the gang, Hunt said, and drug profits go to buy guns and cars. Gang members may be as young as 10 or 11, he said.

"The gangs have more money now," he said. "As a result, their firepower is becoming increasingly more deadly."

The sound of gunfire on the south side has become so frequent that residents know what to do when it comes.

"When you hear shots, you're supposed to cut off the lights and hit the floor," said Shirley Austin, a South Central Los Angeles resident who saw a teen-ager gunned down in front of her home last weekend.

Jeff Turpin hits a backhand shot enroute to the USTA singles final at the Racquet Club.

Steyn has big day

USTA Tennis

By BRUCE CASTLEBERRY
Sports Writer

It was a big day for Christo Steyn at the United States Tennis Association's Segment V Masters tournament at the Midland Racquet Club.

In singles, Steyn first disposed of Charlton Eagle 7-6, 7-6 to move into the finals round today at 1 p.m. against Dallas' Jeff Turpin. Then a few hours later he teamed with fellow South African Charles Honey to earn another finals berth in doubles.

The number four seeds eliminated Jonny Levine and Sean Brawley 6-3, 6-4 to advance to face Richard Akel and Tres Cushing. That team won their semi-final match against Kelly Evernden and Mike Robertson 6-3, 6-4 Friday afternoon.

THE UPSET-MINDED Eagle had gone the full distance in a late Friday match against second seeded Andy Andrews, winning 3-6, 7-6, 7-6. Eagle was the tournament's seventh seed, and displayed remarkable tenacity in ousting Andrews in a three-hour slugfest.

Eagle, who calls Sydney, Australia home, began the match with Steyn in stunning fashion, ripping three aces past his opponent to easily take the opening game.

But neither Steyn or Eagle could come up with a game-breaking point, and each player maintained his serve up to the tiebreaker.

Actually, Steyn had done very little to stop the diminutive Eagle until the sets moved to the tie-breakers.

Eagle had out-worked Steyn and at 6-6 in the first set, held statistical advantages over Steyn at every turn.

Eagle had more aces - 5-1. Eagle had more forehand winners - 6-2. Eagle had more backhand winners - 4-1. But in the tiebreak, Eagle started off badly by double-faulting. He also had more of those, 4-1 in the opening set. Steyn forced Eagle into an error with a great backhand, then he stroked an ace to go up 3-0. After a backhand winner, and an overhead screamer, he aced out the final two points for an impressive 7-0 tiebreak.

"I thought I missed a lot of first serves in the tiebreaker," said Eagle, a student at Baylor when he's not playing professional tennis. "It made it difficult, and he returned me well in the tie-breaker."

Eagle had an arduous match Friday, and only 16 hours later he was on the court again against Steyn, one of the stronger servers in the Masters. Yet Eagle didn't feel he was at a disadvantage. "I was prepared to play. He just served better. I was going for a little too much on the volleys. He's solid all around."

THE SECOND set was a virtual replay of the first, with each player holding serve throughout. And like the first set, Steyn jumped on top early in the tie-braker and deflated Eagle's patient, methodical attack. Eagle scored to cut Steyn's lead to 4-1, but the sturdy Steyn held on for a 7-1 decision.

"I served very well today," said Steyn. "I think I was more determined on the returns. I think he got a little uptight when he lost the first two points in the tie-breaker, and that helped me a lot."

Steyn was aware of Eagle's giant-killing of late. "I had a lot of respect for him, maybe too much respect. I know after that first set he had to be thinking of the lost tiebreaker. I've got a little more experience."

Another area Steyn had experience was beating Brawley and Levine. He and Honey had done just that a week ago at the Tyler segment. They were able to eliminate that duo again with steady play and breaking Levine three times. Those were the only service breaks in either set and they made the difference.

"Any time you play him in doubles," said Honey, "He doesn't have a real big serve so he's the one you're going to be keying on to break more often."

Honey is a rarity, because he still uses a wooden racket. "I've played with it for a long time. I haven't seen any reason to really change, but they don't make them any more so I guess I'll have to eventually."

Steyn's opponent in the singles, Turpin, went through a schizophrenic match with Canadian Stephan Bonneau. In the first set, Bonneau missed two break points, and Turpin only missed one. Turpin did break Bonneau in the seventh game to take a 4-3 lead, then Bonneau slipped and hurt a troublesome right ankle. But the ankle didn't affect his game as much as Turpin's aggresive play.

IN THE 6-4, 7-6 win Turpin smashed 17 forehands for winners and got nine winners on backhands. But the real story of the match was the drive of Turpin's that kept the second set from slipping away.

After the first set victory, Turpin fell behind 4-0 in the second, and Bonneau had the serve. But he lost control for a moment, and Turpin cashed in on the opportunity. He got a more important break at 5-4, but Bonneau returned the favor at 6-5 when Turpin was serving for the match.

Turpin, most likely an unhappy former SMU Mustang today, won in the tiebreak, 7-2.

Houston's upset worth SWC lead

IRVING (AP) - The Houston Cougars finally defeated a Top Twenty team Saturday, and it propelled them to the head of the Southwest Conference football class.

Mike Clendenen's five field goals and a 68-yard pass play from quarterback Gerald Landry to tight end Carl Hilton gave the Cougars a 29-20 upset of No. 6 ranked Southern Methodist.

"It's great to be leading the conference (with a 3-0 record) but that will mean a whole lot for about three hours," said Houston Coach Bill Yeoman. "We lucked out in some placed and made some key plays in others."

Yeoman said "It's a terribly satisfying win. The thing we had to do was just iron out our heads."

He said Landry was the catalyst.

"He played exceptionally well and that's encouraging because he has so far to go," said Yeoman. "When he gets there, he's liable to be half-decent."

SMU Coach Bobby Collins said, "Give Houston all the credit in the world. It seemed like Landry made every play in the book. "We also helped them with fumbles. We just lost to a good football team."

Asked if the Mustangs were caught looking ahead to next week's game against Texas, Collins said. "I don't think so. All you had to do was look at the films of Houston to know they were a team you could not look past. We just got ahold of a mean Cougar."

Clendenen, who now has the school kick scoring mark and has hit eight straight field goals, said, "All of them were a must. I knew I had to hit every one of them because of the way SMU comes back."

Houston, now 4-2 this season and 3-0 in the conference, had lost 11 straight games to Top Twenty teams until Saturday.

'Horns have 3 yards to spare against Hogs

AUSTIN (AP) — Third-ranked Texas escaped Saturday with a 24-18 Southwest Conference football victory over Arkansas a two-touchdown underdog which scored 15 points in the final 10½ minutes and advanced to the Texas three yard line as time expired.

"I've never been prouder to be a Razorback," glowed Arkansas Coach Ken Hatfield, a former Arkansas player in the 1960s.

Texas Coach Fred Akers said, "Arkansas made a courageous effort to win the game and thank goodness we could keep them from it. Arkansas will compare with anybody in the country. They have a lot of pride — always have — even when I was playing there" in the late 1950s.

Texas, held to only 116 yards rushing, fashioned its narrow victory on the passing of quarterback Todd Dodge, who threw two touchdown passes and set up another with two completions to split end Brent Duhon.

Arkansas trailed 24-3 before starting a furious fourth-quarter rally that turned on Carl Miller's 36-yard kickoff return to the Arkansas 46 and a fumble by Texas' Terry Orr at the Arkansas one.

"Had Orr scored, Texas would have led 31-10. But quarterback Brad Taylor of Arkansas used the turnover to take the Razorbacks 99 yards in seven plays, making it a 24-18 game.

A final completion to Jamie Lueders carried 18 yards to about the Texas three as time expired.

"If the clock hadn't run out, there is no doubt in my mind who would have won," Hatfield said.

Miller's return set in motion a 54-yard Arkansas touchdown drive.

Arkansas' final possession started at its 39, and the Razorbacks almost overcame a 19-yard clipping penalty and three five-yard penalties, but came up short when cornerback Tony Tillmon of Texas tackled Leuders.

"They called the clip but they didn't call them for tackling our receiver at the line of scrimmage on the same play. They tackled him and he didn't have the ball," Hatfield said.

Tech kicks Rice, 30-10

HOUSTON (AP) — The Rice Owls got into the Southwest Conference record books Saturday, but it was Texas Tech, behind the two-touchdown performance of Robert Lewis and three field goals by Ricky Gann, that got into the win column with a 30-10 victory.

While the Raiders relished their second SWC victory, the loss extended Rice's conference losing string to 20 in a row, dating back to Nov. 29, 1981 when the Owls defeated Houston.

Rice is tied with Arkansas for the longest losing streak and could set the record Saturday if the Owls lose to the Texas Aggies.

"They won the ball game, no question about it," Rice Coach Watson Brown said. "They controlled the line of scrimmage and that's where the game was won. They just stuffed the ball down our throats with a great game plan."

Lewis, scoring his first touchdowns of the season, ran through gaping holes in the right side of the Rice defensive line on both of his touchdown runs and then found little secondary resistance.

"It was a good game for us today, but I'm not personally satisfied," Lewis said. "I have some improving to do. But I'm happy to be back. It felt good."

Lewis has been hobbled with injuries this season and had gained only 74 yards prior to Saturday.

"We came into the game knowing we needed to move the football," Tech Coach Jerry Moore said. "Our linemen needed to knock somebody off the line of scrimmage."

The Raiders are 3-3 for the year and 2-2 in SWC games while Rice dropped to 1-5 on the season and 0-3 in the SWC.

Lewis, appearing in his fourth game this season, rushed 117 yards on 25 carries to share offensive honors with Gann, who had field goals of 25, 19 and 26 yards.

THE RAIDERS took a 17-3 halftime lead on Lewis' runs of 23 and nine yards and a 25-yard field goal by Ricky Gann on the first drive of the game.

Bruce Perkins returned a Rice punt 30 yards to the Tech 32 early in the second quarter to set up Lewis' first touchdown run. The senior from Greenville made a side-step move at the line and then outran Rice safety Tommy Harris into the end zone.

Lewis plowed through Rice's right side once again with 1:22 left in the half on a nine-yard touchdown run.

Rice quarterback Kerry Overton replaced starter Mark Comalander in the second quarter and passed the Owls to the Tech seven before settling for James Hamrick's 24-yard field goal.

Gann, whose three field goals beat the Owls two seasons ago, added a 19-yarder after Tech's Dwayne Jiles recovered a Rice fumble early in the third quarter. Gann added a 26-yarder in the fourth quarter.

Comalander returned in the fourth quarter and completed a four-yard touchdown pass to Tony Burnett with 6:49 left in the game.

BRUCE CASTLEBERRY

Yes, there is something to do in Midland: USTA

If you've missed out on the five previous days of the United States Tennis Association's Segment V Masters tournament at Midland Racquet Club, do yourself a favor today and go watch the free event that benefits Midland Junior Tennis.

Come on, the Cowboys don't even start until tonight, and who cares about the Oilers?

Actually, it is a shame that the people of Midland aren't out in droves for another quality event that this part of Texas only gets on rare occasions.

It has been a puzzlement to me why Midlanders refuse to take advantage of the efforts to provide sports entertainment that a select few dedicated enthusiasts bust their guts working towards.

Midlanders complain that there isn't enough to do or see here. I, too often feel that way but I'm starting to see some things. You can teach an old dog new tricks.

A year ago, I read a book called "Blue Highways" by William Least Heat Moon. It was a story about a person who travelled all over the U.S. In one chapter he discusses a long trek across the West, especially the part of Texas not far south of here that is even more forbidding than our area.

Moon made the comment that he had always considered environs such as ours empty and barren. But he realized that upon closer inspection, there was more than meets the eye.

He listed a wide variety of things that are part of the desert we live in that are out there, but overlooked - desert flowers, cactus, even the lowly tumbleweed. The point was that beauty was often there if one took time to seek it out.

WELL, AS far as sports goes, Midland has it's share, but few try to seek it out. I am still amazed that a baseball town doesn't support it's only pro team, the Cubs, er, Angels (?)

When the USTA Masters was here a year ago, there also were plenty of empty seats.

And the Midland College basketball program is a proven winner, yet they can't fill the seats in a first-rate facility. Know why rock concerts don't make it to Midland but instead go to Odessa? It isn't just the fact that Midland is looking for a more "dignified and cultural" form of entertainment. It's most likely due to the fact that Midlanders don't support the efforts of those who would improve our overall quality of life, and that's pretty lame.

When John McEnroe and Vitas Gerulaitis hit the Chap in August, tickets were a hot commodity even at what I consider outrageous prices of $25. But still, Midladnd opened its' heart and pocketbooks to see the two pros do their thing.

NOW MIDLAND has a tournament here that is long-running, free, and staffed by some of the most courteous thoughtful people I've had the honor of meeting. And Midland is missing out.

I could understand this if it were in Odessa, but aren't we supposed to be the big deal high and mighty dynamic Tall City?

Quoting Steve Martin, "Not me man, I'm small."

The USTA tournament features players who may soon be up there in Mr. McEnroe's league. Well, that could be exaggerating. Truthfully, there aren't any players in this field that could equal McEnroe's fortunes. But the fact is, these players are professionals. This isn't some rinky-dink club tournament with a Pancho Gonzales racquet for the winner. This isn't Michelob Light for the winner. This is professional sports, and it's about as top-notch as Midland is going to get.

Journalists are supposed to be an unbiased lot. We aren't supposed to give a damn about the things we cover. "Just the facts, Ma'am." But I have no qualms about supporting something that has only positive aspects. When Green Tree Country Club wrangled 28 PGA golfers here, the entire Permian Basin was electrified.

If you want that kind of a charge today at no charge, get off your La-Z-Boy, bundle up Junior and take Ma to the tennis match.

Please do this. Make my day.

Bears head off late A&M charges

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Quarterback Tom Muecke darted 8 yards for a fourth-quarter touchdown and Baylor held off two late Texas A&M thrusts deep in Bear territory for a 20-16 victory Saturday in a rain-drench Southwest Conference football game.

Leading 16-13 midway through the final period, but facing third-and-11 at its own 10, Texas A&M tried to surpise Baylor with a quick kick. But Bears' defensive tackle Paul Mergenhagen got a hand on the kick by Anthony Toney nd the ball fluttered into the hands of linebacker Kevin Hancock just beyond the line of scrimmage.

Muecke needed only three plays to cover 16 yards for the winning touchdown with 6:39 remaining.

The start of the game was delayed 10 minutes because heavy rains dumped as much as 3 inches in less than an hour. Winds gusted as high as 25 mph and most of the first three quarters was played in soaking rains under dark menacing skies during a tornado watch.

Derrick McAdoo scored Baylor's only other touchdown after a snap sailed over the head of Aggie punter Todd Tschantz in the third quarter for a 33-yard loss to the 2.

Marty Jimmerson added field goals of 22 and 34 yards for Baylor. Both came after fumble recoveries during the rain — at the Aggie 30 in the second quarter and at the Aggie 29 at the third quarter.

Toney's 24 yard run and Alan Smith's 47-yard field goal gave Texas A&M a 9-3 halftime lead.

The Aggies took a 16-13 edge in the fourth quarter after Buzzy Sawyer's kick went only 25 yards. The Aggies moved 35 yards in three plays for the touchdown, with quarterback Craig Stump hitting wide receiver Jimmy Teal for a 15-yard touchdown.

BAYLOR IMPROVED to 2-4 for the season and 2-2 in SWC play while Texas A&M fell to 3-3 for the season and 0-3 in conference play.

Baylor needed a goal line stand with 2⅛ minutes left in the game and an interception at the 15 in the final seconds to preserve its victory.

After Muecke's touchdown run, Texas A&M took the ensuing kickoff and quickly marched 61 yards near paydirt, but could not score.

Stump's 37-yard pass to Teal gave Texas A&M a first down at the Baylor 32, and two runs by halfback Thomas Sanders advanced the ball to the Baylor 8 for a first-and-goal.

But on fourth-and-goal on the 1, Hancock and linebacker Ray Berry dropped Jeff Holley for a 3-yard loss and Baylor took over with 2:36 remaining.

Three plays later, Baylor had to punt again, however, and Sawyer got off only a 24-yard effort that went out of bounds at the Baylor 32 with 54 seconds left in the game.

Stump passed to flanker Jeff Nelson for a first down at the 15, but linebacker Robert Watters intercepted Stump's pass intended for Sanders at the 11 and Baylor ran out the remaining 11 seconds.

Neither quarterback had much success passing in the rain. Muecke was 4-13 for 50 yards, and Stump was 4-13 for 104.

Muecke finished as Baylor's leading rusher with 32 yards in 11 carries. Sanders was the Aggie work horse, carrying 27 times for 81 yards. Toney added 44 yards in 8 carries.

TCU's Davis ties record in Frogs' 34-3 win over NTSU

FORT WORTH (AP) - Texas Christian running back Kenneth Davis, rushing for 219 yards and scoring twice, bolted 82 yards for a record-tying touchdown Saturday as the Horned Frogs pounded out a 34-3 non-conference football victory over North Texas State.

Davis, the nation's No. 3 rusher, struck for a pair of second-quarter TDs as the Frogs, 5-1, mounted a 17-3 halftime lead and went on to match their best start in 26 years.

The 1958 Frogs jumped off to a 5-1 start en route to their sixth and last Southwest Conference title and a Cotton Bowl date with the Air Force.

Davis, a junior, set up his first short-distance touchdown with a 51-yard run and then stunned the 1-6 Eagles with the 82-yarder that tied TCU's longest run record set by Cy Leland in 1930.

Davis, who entered the contest with a 128-yard per game rushing average, ripped off 152 yards in the first half alone as the Frogs, losers only to Southern Methodist, made it a clean sweep over non-conference opponents Utah State, Kansas State and North Texas.

The Eagles got a 35-yard field goal from Todd Smith in the second period and moved into scoring range in the third period before a fumble recovery by TCU's Kevin Dean ended the threat and launched the Frogs on a 68-yard scoring drive.

Anthony Gulley, TCU's scrappy senior quarterback, directed that TD march but was shaken up after a pivotal 11-yard gain and gave way to Scott Ankrom.

GULLEY TOOK the Frogs 63 yards in 12 plays, including a 17-yard pass to James Maness, and Ken Ozee put TCU on the scoreboard with his field goal late in the first period.

Davis, who carried only 16 times, set the tone for the day as he burst off tackle and galloped 51 yards to the Eagle 3 and scored his first touchdown from the 1.

An NTSU field goal closed the gap to 10-3 before Davis blew away the Eagles with his record run, an off-tackle slant that took him on a foot race down the sideline with three defenders in futile pursuit.

Davis, a two-year letterman from Temple, almost broke away for another long touchdown run in the final period but was hauled down at the 18 after a gain of 59 yards.

His 219-yard performance along with a 239-yard effort against Kansas State made him only the second player in SWC history to record two 200-yard games in a single season.

Former Texas star and Heisman Trophy winner Earl Campbell was the first, in 1977.

Teammate Tony Jeffery, another of the SWC's rushing leaders, ended up with 75 yards on 15 carries and the high-flying Frogs collected 438 yards in total offense for the day.

Mike Rhone and Scott Toman split time at quarterback for the Eagles but neither was effective as TCU held them 83 yards passing and a total of 218 overall.

"If I had been getting blown out, it would be a different thing to let a couple of balls go," said Turpin. But after five weeks of play and a costly, disappointing doubles loss to Bonneau and Laird Dunlop in the opening round, Turpin had no desire to get involved in a third set. And the way the winds were swirling about the Racquet Club courts, Turpin realized that he wasn't in the driver's seat just yet.

"The wind's going to have a lot of effect. I serve better than I do anything else, and you toss the ball up in the air and it goes all over the place," said Turpin. "I play similarly to Eagle, so it'll be pretty close," he said of his date with Steyn. "I lost to him in my last collegiate match, in the quarterfinals of the NCAA championships."

As for the singles finals, Eagle thinks it could be a tremendous match. "The courts serve Jeff Turpin a little better, but if Christo serves the way he did today he'll have the better chance."

HOUSTON

Previously unbeaten and untied SMU is 2-1 in the league and 5-1 overall.

HOUSTON BUILT a 16-0 halftime lead but SMU's Reggie Dupard sprinted 71 yards for a touchdown to close the gap.

The Cougars made it 26-7 in the third period when Hilton broke free and outsprinted the Mustang secondary on a short pass from Landry.

SMU rallied on Don King's 3-yard scoring run and Gary Hashaway's 2-yard touchdown plunge.

Leading only 26-20, the Cougars put the game away when Gary McManus recovered a fumbled punt by SMU's Franky Thomas at the Mustang 16.

'HORNS

The Arkansas turnaround was so dramatic that the Razorbacks got 234 yards total offense in just the fourth quarter, and had 354 for the entire game.

Dodge finished with 14 completions in 26 attempts for 213 yards. Taylor was 12 of 32 for 201 yards.

Shibest caught seven passes for 128 yards. Duhon, with three receptions for 63 yards, and Harris, with four receptions for 60 yards, led Texas.

Nelson, a freshman who led Texas rushers in the Longhorns' 15-15 tie with Oklahoma last Saturday, led all rushers with 96 yards on 21 carries.

Victory kept Texas undefeated at 4-0-1. The Longhorns are 2-0 in the SWC. Arkansas fell to 3-2-1 and 1-2 in the conference.

Chap tennis team gets preview of WJCC

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — The Midland College tennis teams got a good preview of Western Junior College Conference teams here Friday and Saturday in the Odessa Invitational Collegiate tennis tournament and the Chaparrals should be in good shape for the conference run.

MC won the men's division with victories over South Plains, Shriner and Odessa College to raise their season dual record to a perfect 5-0. The Chaps really lost only one match during the tournament, but were playing with only four men instead of five and had to forfeit several matches.

MC's women are now 3-1-1 on the year after finishing second to Shriner on points. However, the MC women did not lose a dual engagement in this tournament, but a 3-3 tie with Shriner allowed Shriner to win the tournament on points.

Again MC looked strong since Liz Burris, MC's No. 1 player, was away at a tournament in Corpus Christi and No. 4 player Jane Howell was out with an injury.

The men will travel to a Texas Tech tournament the first week in November and both the MC men and women will travel to Denton the following week for more matches.

Cowboys vs. Saints: A game of similarities

IRVING (AP) — The Dallas Cowboys and the New Orleans Saints, two teams with struggling offenses and quarterback controversies and each saddled with successive setbacks, meet Sunday night.

The National Football League game will be nationally televised after the presidential debate.

The 4-3 Cowboys are five-point favorites over the 3-4 Saints, who are 1-10 against Dallas overall and winless in four games at Texas Stadium.

However, New Orleans Coach Bum Phillips has been a winner in the Cowboys' hole-in-the-roof home, directing the Houston Oilers to a victory there on Thanksgiving Day 1979.

New Orleans hasn't defeated Dallas since 1971, which turned out to be the Cowboys' first Super Bowl championship season.

Dallas has had offensive growing pains behind young quarterback Gary Hogeboom, who was inserted into the job as the starter to open the season.

The Saints have had trouble settling on a quarterback. Phillips alternated Richard Todd and Kenny Stabler to no avail in a 28-10 loss to Los Angeles last week.

Phillips admitted it was a mistake and said Todd would start against Dallas and be given a chance to get something going.

"I would not hesitate to make a change if the situation called for it," said Phillips.

The same goes for Landry.

He said Hogeboom could be given the hook for the more experienced Danny White.

"I might go to Danny a lot quicker in this game than I have in the past," Landry said.

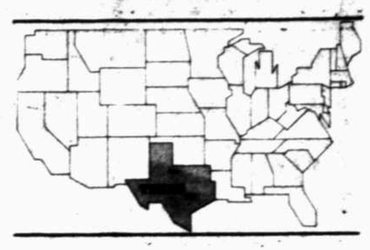
Rain-washed Bearkats win

Associated Press



HUNTSVILLE — Sam Houston tailback Raymond Young rushed for 120 yards and one touchdown Saturday to lead the Bearkats to a 27-11 victory over Lamar in non-conference rain-soaked contest.

Sam Houston, now 6-1 on the season and assured of a winning season for the first time since 1978, took a 13-3 halftime lead.

Attendance was about 8,000, but after rain started late in the second quarter, most of the crowd cleared out.

The thundershowers — which dumped about 4 inches of rain in about an hour — delayed the start of the second half for about 20 minutes.

Abilene Christian 30, HPU 0

ABILENE — Thomas Wilson returned a punt 79 yards for a touchdown and Loyal Proffitt threw for 200 yards in the first half to spark Abilene Christian to a 30-0 victory over Howard Payne.

It was the Lone Star Conference opener for both teams. Abilene is now 2-4 for the season; Howard Payne, shut out for the third straight game, is now 0-5-1.

Proffitt completed 12 of 19 passes for 200 yards in only one half of play, including a six-yard touchdown pass to tight end Dale Fife to start the ACU scoring in the first quarter.

McMurry 16, Sul Ross 13

ABILENE — Place kicker Tony Quitta booted a 35-yard field goal with one second left on the clock to lead the McMurry College Indians to a 16-13 Texas Intercollegiate Athletic Association victory over Sul Ross State.

Quitta's kick broke a 13-13 deadlock, which Sul Ross had created when with 4:27 left in the game, John Lewis scored on a five-yard run. The run was set up following a blocked punt.

McMurry is now 2-4 for the season and 1-2 in the conference. Sul Ross fell to 2-3-1 for the year and 0-2-1 in conference.

Austin College 24, Tarleton St. 0

SHERMAN — Sophomore quarterback Todd Elliott connected on 17 of 30 passes for 278 yards and one interception as the Kangaroos of Austin College blanked the Tarleton State Texans, 24-0, in a conference game.

Eastern New Mexico, which has lost three of its last four games after being ranked No. 1 in the NAIA, did most of its damage with the passing arm of senior quarterback Kevin Kott.

Kott threw for 284 yards and three touchdowns but also was intercepted twice by East Texas State. With the 284 yards, Kott set an ENMU career passing record of 5,493 yards, surpassing the previous mark of 5,456 held by Mike Franks.

WVU fights back to nip BC

Vols add to 'Bama woes

Associated Press

MORGANTOWN, W.Va — Tailback John Gay rammed 5 yards for a touchdown with 4:52 remaining Saturday as 20th-ranked West Virginia roared back in the second half for a stunning 21-20 upset of No. 4 Boston College.

Gay's scoring run culminated a 10-play, 80-yard drive as the 6-1 Mountaineers rallied from a 20-6 halftime deficit.

West Virginia's defense stopped a last-ditch BC drive after quarterback Doug Flutie had moved the Eagles to the Mountaineer 38-yard line in the final minutes. West Virginia linebacker Fred Smalls took the momentum from the drive by sacking Flutie for an 11-yard loss with just 2:55 left.

BC, 4-1, built its halftime cushion with two big second-quarter plays. Steve Strachan rambled 24 yards for a score with 3:11 to go in the period, and Flutie hit Kelvin Martin with a 42-yard scoring pass on the next series as the Eagles broke a 6-6 tie.

Strachan's touchdown run followed a controversial play on a fourth and two at the West Virginia 34 when Flutie's perfect fake prompted an inadvertent official's whistle. It was ruled that BC had made enough yards for the first down before the whistle, and two plays later Strachan broke loose off the right side for the touchdown to give BC a 13-6 lead.

In the fourth quarter — two series before West Virginia's game-winning drive — BC was shortchanged when officials apparently lost count of downs, and the Eagles punted after just three downs.

Tennessee 28, Alabama 27

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — Johnnie Jones scored on a 1-yard plunge with 2:09 remaining and Tony Robinson raced in for the 2-point conversion as Tennessee overcame a 14-point deficit in the final five minutes to edge Alabama 28-27 in a SEC game.

Andre Creamer set up the game-winning score with a 45-yard punt return to the Alabama 11 with just under four minutes remaining.

Robinson had cut the margin to 27-20 with 4:54 to go when he fired a 17-yard touchdown strike to Tim McGee.

Robinson also had an 8-yard touchdown pass to Joey Clinkscales in the second quarter and Fuad Reivez had field goals of 27 and 29 yards as the Vols lifted their record to 3-2-1 overall and 1-2 in the SEC.

Alabama, which fell 2-5 and 0-3, had dominated play until Tennessee's late comeback.

Florida 48, Cincinnati 17

GAINESVILLE, Fla. — Kerwin Bell tossed a pair of touchdown passes to Ricky Nattiel and John L. Williams rushed for 111 yards and two more TDs to pace a 578-yard offensive attack that carried 17th-ranked Florida to a 41-17 college football rout of Cincinnati.

The homecoming victory was the fifth straight for the 5-1-1 Gators and fourth under interim Coach Galen Hall who took over Sept. 16 when Charley Pell was fired as an NCAA probe of the Southeastern Conference school entered its final stages.

Miami 27, Pittsburgh 7

MIAMI — Record-breaking quarterback Bernie Kosar passed for 351 yards and one touchdown and Alonzo Highsmith added two short scoring runs to boost ninth-ranked Miami to a 27-7 homecoming victory over Pittsburgh.

Kosar, nursing a sore ankle, completed a school record 29 passes in 42 attempts before he left the game early in the fourth period.

The spectacular sophomore passer, who last week established school records of 373 passing yards and five touchdowns against Cincinnati, hit Stanley Shakespeare for a 16-yard touchdown on the Hurricanes' first possession.

Kosar completed seven of 11 passes for 59 yards as the Hurricanes moved 83 and 43 yards to touchdowns on their first two possessions of the second half.

Georgia 62, Vanderbilt 35

ATHENS, Ga.— Georgia red-shirt freshman quarterback David Dukes fired a pair of touchdown passes as the 14th-ranked Bulldogs erupted for three TDs in a three-minute span, easing to a 62-35 SEC victory over Vanderbilt.

Georgia, 5-1 and 3-0 in the league, raced to a 42-21 halftime lead in the wild-scoring affair, as the teams combined for 612 yards on offense in the opening 30 minutes of the game, nationally televised on cable. Georgia finished with 562 yards overall.

Georgia's 42 first-half points were a Bulldog record, topping the 35 they scored in a 56-6 victory over VMI in 1967.

The 62-point total also was the most scored under Coach Vince Dooley and the highest since a 76-0 victory over The Citadel in 1958.

Auburn 48, Georgia Tech 34

AUBURN, Ala. — Mike Mann, getting a rare chance to start, completed his first 10 passes and directed an Auburn offense that swamped Georgia Tech 48-34.

Thirteenth-ranked Auburn scored on seven of its first eight possessions and drove to the 1 on the other in raising its record to 5-2.

Tech now is 3-2-1,

The Tigers exploded for 41 points in the first half, with Mann passing for 42 yards for one and Jeff Burger, 18 yards for another. Tommie Agee, Tim Jessie and Collis Campbell ran for a touchdowns ad Robert McGinty kicked two field goals before intermission.

Mann, starting for injured Pat Washington, connected with Freddie Weygand on a 56-yard scoring pass in the final quarter and ended the day with 11 of 17 completions for 271 yards.

LSU 36, Kentucky 10

LEXINGTON, Ky. — Dalton Hilliard rushed for 164 yards and an LSU record-tying four touchdowns as the 10th-ranked Tigers overcame five first-half turnovers and rolled to a turnover-filled 36-10 SEC victory over previously unbeaten No. 16 Kentucky.

The Tigers, 5-0-1 overall and 2-0-1 in SEC play, led only 9-3 at halftime as Juan Betanzos kicked field goals of 43, 20 and 38 yards to set an LSU career record of 36.

The field goals, plus a defense that held Kentucky's 15th-ranked offense to 75 yards in the first half, enabled the Tigers to withstand three lost fumbles and two interceptions in the first two periods.

The setback ended Kentucky's best start in 34 years and left the Wildcats with a 5-1 record, 1-1 in the SEC.

S. Mississippi 13, Mississippi 10

JACKSON, Miss. — Scrambling quarterback Robert Ducksworth sprinted seven yards for a third-quarter touchdown and underdog Southern Mississippi held on for a 13-10 victory over the University of Mississippi in what may have been the last meeting of the storied series.

Winning for the fifth time in the last seven years, Southern, a 10-point underdog, ended a four-game losing streak and pushed its record to 2-5.

Trailing 10-3 at intermission, Southern scored on its first two possessions of the third quarter, with its only touchdown coming after Tim Smith picked off a pass.

Mississippi is now 3-3-1.

E. Carolina 24, E. Tennessee St. 6

GREENVILLE, N.C. (AP) — Reserve running back Bubba Bunn rushed for a carrer-high 161 yards and two touchdowns in leading East Carolina to a 24-6 victory over East Tennessee State.

Down 14-3 at the half, the Bucs, 4-3, drove to the East Carolina 4, 14, 29 and 24 in the second half, but came away with only a 21-yard field goal by Herbie Campbell with 9:48 left in the third period.

Iowa blanks Michigan

Loss Bo's worst in 16 years

Associated Press

IOWA CITY, Iowa — Defensive back Devon Mitchell picked off two passes to set up an Iowa field goal and a touchdown as the No. 18 Hawkeyes handed Michigan a 26-0 Big 10 Conference loss Saturday.

The win was Iowa's first against the Wolverines in Iowa City since 1962. The loss was Bo Schembechler's worst in his 16 years as Michigan's head coach.

Iowa, 5-2 overall and 4-1 in the Big Ten Conference, went up 6-0 with seconds left in the first quarter on Ronnie Harmon's 3-yard touchdown run. The extra point was missed.

Mitchell, a junior redshirt from Brooklyn, N.Y., then set up Tom Nichol's second quarter field goal by picking off a pass by Michigan quarterback Russell Rein and returning it 20 yards.

Iowa's veteran defense, ranked 17th in the nation, allowed Michigan only three first downs and 65 yards total offense before intermission.

Ohio St. 23, Michigan St. 20

EAST LANSING, Mich. — Ohio State tailback Keith Byars rushed for 121 yards and a touchdown and Rich Spangler kicked three field goals, but only a shanked field goal attempt by Michigan State's Ralf Mojsiejenko with three seconds left gave the No. 8 Buckeyes a 23-20 Big Ten victory over the upset-minded Spartans.

Michigan State's defense forced the Buckeyes to punt and the Spartans took over the ball 39 yards from the goal line with 2:56 remaining in the game.

The Spartans moved the ball to the 23 before quarterback Dave Yarema was sacked for a 3-yard loss, setting up a fourth and 13 situation.

Mojsiejenko attempted a 43-yard field goal from the left hash mark, but shanked the ball low and to the right of the goal posts.

S. Carolina 36, Notre Dame 32

SOUTH BEND, Ind. — Backup quarterback Mike Hold scored two fourth quarter touchdowns, including one on a 33-yard dash to rally undefeated and 11th-ranked South Carolina to a 36-32 victory over Notre Dame.

The triumph was the sixth straight for the Gamecocks, who never had won six in a row in one season while Notre Dame, suffering a third straight loss at home for the first time since 1956, slumped to 3-4 after holding a 26-14 lead in the third quarter.

Hold, taking over for Allen Mitchell, directed a 73-yard drive in 15 plays which ended when he sneaked over from the 1-yard line early in the fourth quarter. His 33-yard run on a third down broken pass play capped a 75-yard march to put South Carolina ahead to stay.

John Carney's 48-yard field goal, the longest of his career, came with no time left in the first half and gave Notre Dame a 17-14 lead.

Missouri 61, Kansas St. 21

MANHATTAN, Kan. — Marlon Adler ran for two touchdowns and tossed a 46-yard touchdown pass to George Shorthose in the first quarter as Missouri took advantage of four Kansas State turnovers to rip the Wildcats 61-21 in a Big Eight game.

Missouri's offense bowled over the Wildcats for 315 yards and a 34-7 lead by halftime before reserves came on in the second half.

Todd Elder played the first three series before Randy Williams came on for the Wildcats, 1-2 in the conference and 2-5 overall.

Oklahoma St. 47, Kansas 10

STILLWATER, Okla. — Ken Zachary raced 87 yards for one touchdown as 12th-ranked Oklahoma State used the big play to build a 31-3 halftime lead and went on to defeat Kansas 47-10 in a Big Eight Conference game.

The Cowboys, 5-1 and 1-1 in the league and held to one field goal in a loss two weeks ago to Nebraska, scored on five of their seven possessions in the first half.

Touchdowns included a 38-yard scoring run by Charles Crawford, an 18-yard touchdown pass from Rusty Hilger to Jamie Harris and Zachary's cross-country run, in which he outran two defenders.

Crawford also had a 9-yard touchdown run in the fourth quarter.

Kansas fell to 2-5 and 1-2.

Illinois 34, Purdue 20

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. - Illinois quarterback Jack Trudeau fired two touchdown passes and guided the Illini to a 34-20 Big Ten football victory over Purdue.

The loss stripped the Boilermakers of their share of the Big Ten lead, and kept alive the Illini's hopes of successfully defending their 1983 conference championship.

Trudeau connected with David Boatright in the first quarter on a 52-yard touchdown pass, then hit David Williams with a 35-yard scoring pass in the third quarter.

He also moved Illinois into position for a 1-yard touchdown plunge by Thomas Rooks in the first quarter and a five-yard TD run by Ray Wilson in the fourth quarter.

Chris White kicked a pair of field goals - from 41 yards in the third quarter and from 46 yards in the fourth quarter.

Illinois took a 14-0 first quarter lead, but Purdue cut the margin to 14-13 in the second half. Quarterback Jim Everett began the 13-point spree with a 17-yard touchdown pass to Rick Brunner in the second quarter, and Mike Redina kicked field goals of 44 yards in the second quarter and 31 yards in the third quarter.

Leading by just one, the Illini then rolled up 20 straight points to put the game out of reach before Purdue's Rodney Carter scored on a 1-yard run in the final quarter.

Illinois, playing before a rain-soaked crowd of 76,101, boosted its Big Ten record to 4-2, while the Boilermakers fell to 3-2.

Indiana State 17, Drake 3

TERRE HAUTE, Ind. — Kevin Henderson, out of action the past two weeks with a shoulder injury, returned to action to gain 114 yards rushing for Indiana State as the nation's top ranked NCAA Division I-AA team downed Drake 17-3 in Missouri Valley Conference football.

Rick Dwenger scored touchdowns on runs of 2 and 1 yards for the Sycamores, off to the best start in the school's history at 7-0.

Wisconsin 20, Indiana 16

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. — A 4-yard touchdown run by holder Bob Kobza on a fake field goal attempt snapped a 10-10 tie and sparked Wisconsin to a 20-16 Big Ten Conference victory over winless Indiana.

It was the Hoosiers' 12th straight loss over two seasons, the longest in the school's 100-year football history.

The go-ahead touchdown capped a 10-minute drive in the third quarter and came seven minutes after the Badgers' leading rusher, Larry Emery, went out with a knee injury.

Emery had rushed for 127 yards and the first Wisconsin touchdown in the second quarter. After he left with 9:46 to go in the third period, fullback Joe Armentrout and backup tailback Marck Harrison picked up the Badgers' ground game.

Northwestern 31, Minnesota 28

MINNEAPOLIS — Northwestern's Mike Greenfield completed 11 straight passes, including two touchdowns, and Stanley Davenport ran in his second touchdown with 3:53 left to give the Wildcats a 31-28 Big Ten victory over Minnesota.

The Gophers had a chance to win the game in the last 20 seconds, but quarterback Rickey Foggie was sacked and fumbled on the 3-yard line. The fumble came just seconds after Foggie completed a 46-yard pass to Melvin Anderson, who went out of bounds on the 3-yard line.

Minnesota had taken a 28-24 lead in the fourth quarter when Dwayne McMullen caught a 45-yard touchdown pass from Foggie.

Pistons down Bucks, 109-91

NEW YORK (AP) — Kelly Tripucka and Kent Benson combined for 11 points in a 19-0 second half run that lifted the Detroit Pistons to a 109-91 victory over the Milwaukee Bucks in a National Basketball Association exhibition game Saturday night.

Detroit, which finished a game back of Milwaukee in the Central Division last season, lifted its preseason record to 6-0 and dropped the Bucks to 3-4.

The Bucks, playing without guard Sidney Moncrief and center Alton Lister, trailed from the 10:35 mark of the first quarter, but fought within 76-66 with 1:09 left in the third quarter.

Isiah Thomas and Tripucka, who led Detroit with 16 points, scored field goals to close the third period.

Bossy gains goal-scoring lead; Islanders win 8-3

Associated Press

UNIONDALE, N.Y. — Red-hot Mike Bossy surged to the top of the National Hockey League goal-scoring race Saturday night with four goals, leading the New York Islanders to an 8-3 rout of the winless Los Angeles Kings.

Bossy pumped in two goals in the first period and one in each of the next two sessions, giving him nine for the year. It was the fifth four-goal game of his NHL career and the 30th hat trick, just two behind all-time leader Phil Esposito.

Bossy also assisted on three goals. Brent Sutter tipped in his shot in the first period and John Tonelli — who collected assists on all of Bossy's goals — scored twice on plays involving Bossy.

Sutter had a goal and five assists, giving the line 19 points for the night.

Mats Hallin scored New York's other goal, while Bernie Nicholls, Phil Sykes and Jim Fox beat Islanders goalie Rollie Melanson, who stopped 41 shots.

Red Wings 7, Black Hawks 4

DETROIT — Ron Duguay broke a 3-3 tie with his fourth goal of the season late in the second period and Ivan Boldirev added a pair of third-period markers as the Detroit Red Wings snapped a three-game losing streak with a 7-4 victory over the Chicago Black Hawks.

Steve Yzerman intercepted a pass inside the Chicago blue line and slipped the puck to Duguay, who slid a soft backhander past Black Hawks' netminder Murray Bannerman, capping a burst that saw the Red Wings overcome a 3-1 Chicago lead with three goals in 4:32.

Rangers 6, Capitals 5

LANDOVER, Md. — Mike Allison, playing his first game of the year, scored on a rebound at 16:07 of the third period to lift the New York Rangers to their first victory of the season, a 6-5 triumph over the Washington Capitals.

Washington, 2-2-1, built a 4-1 first period lead and appeared to be in complete control. But the Capitals' Alan Haworth was assessed a major penalty at 10:56 of the second period, when his stick cut the cheek of Ranger defenseman Ron Greschner, and the game turned around while New York was on the power play.

NHL

Whalers 3, Canucks 2

HARTFORD, Conn. — Right wing Ray Neufeld deflected in a shot from 10 feet with 9:08 left in the game to give the Hartford Whalers their third straight victory, a 3-2 triumph over the Vancouver Canucks.

The Whalers, now 4-1-1 and atop the Adams Division, went three games over the .500 mark for the first time since joining the NHL six years ago.

Mark Johnson, who collected two assists, helped set up the winning play by getting the puck to Risto Siltanen at the right point, and Siltanen's 40-foot slapshot was redirected by Neufeld into the goal.

The loss dropped the Canucks to 1-5 for the season and was the team's fifth straight defeat.

Penguins 3, Flyers 1

PITTSBURGH — Doug Shedden scored his second goal of the season with 37 seconds remaining in the third period to give the Pittsburgh Penguins a 3-1 victory over the Philadelphia Flyers.

Michel Dion stopped 37 shots as the Penguins won their second straight game and beat the Flyers for the first time since Oct. 23, 1982.

Shedden redirected Andy Brickley's pass past goalie Pelle Lindbergh for the game-winner. Defenseman Moe Mantha scored into an empty net with 10 seconds left to wrap up the victory.

Canadiens 4, North Stars 2

MONTREAL — Sometime starter Steve Shutt scored his first two goals of the season to pace the Montreal Canadiens to a 4-2 victory over the Minnesota North Stars.

Mark Hunter and Chris Nilan also scored for the first time this season for the Canadiens, 3-1-1.

Brian Lawton and Dennis Maruk scored first-period goals for the North Stars, who showed some good early spark, but sputtered ineffectively for 2⅓ periods after that.

They spent much of the game in their own end of the ice and it showed. Montreal outshot Minnesota 34-13.

Nordiques 12, Maple Leafs 3

TORONTO — The Quebec Nordiques got two shorthanded goals from Tony McKegney and one from Dale Hunter in a 12-3 rout that sent the Toronto Maple Leafs to their fourth straight defeat.

Peter Stastny added a pair of goals, while Michel Goulet, Andre Savard, Bruce Bell, Anton Stastny, Wilf Paiement, Alain Cote and Peter Loob also scored for the Nordiques, who fired 53 shots at beleaguered Leafs goaltender Ken Wregget.

John Anderson, Rick Vaive and Greg Terrion scored for the Leafs, who tested Quebec goaltender Mario Gosselin 23 times.

Quebec evened its record at 3-3 while Toronto dropped to 2-4.

Blues 8, Devils 3

ST. LOUIS — Kevin LaVallee scored three goals and contributed two assists and Dave Barr added three goals and an assist, leading the St. Louis Blues to an 8-3 triumph over the New Jersey Devils in the home opener for the Blues.

Alain Lemieux and Pat Hickey of St. Louis and New Jersey rookie Kirk Muller all had two assists. A crowd of 16,737, the largest for a St. Louis opener since 1974, watched the Blues improve their record 3-2 as the Devils dipped to 2-3.

Sooners end Cyclones' hopes of big upset, 12-10

Associated Press

AMES, Iowa — Spencer Tillman took a pitchout from quarterback Danny Bradley and circled left end on a 7-yard touchdown run with 3½ minutes left in the game to give second-ranked Oklahoma a 12-10 victory over fired-up Iowa State in Big Eight Conference football Saturday night.

Iowa State, which was a 27-point underdog, shocked the unbeaten Sooners by taking a 10-3 lead early in the fourth quarter, but Steve Sewell's 56-yard run on a reverse ignited a comeback that allowed Oklahoma to continue its mastery of the Cyclones.

Oklahoma, coming off a controversial 15-15 tie with Texas, overcame a sluggish offensive performance to send its record to 5-0-1 overall and 2-0 in the Big Eight. Iowa State, which hasn't beaten Oklahoma since 1961, fell to 2-5 and 0-3.

Sewell's run, which was ended by Terrence Anthony's touchdown-saving tackle, put the ball on the Iowa State 13 and after the Cyclone defense held, Tim Lashar kicked a 30-yard field goal to bring Oklamoha to within 10-6 with 9:46 left.

The Oklahom defense then stopped Iowa State deep in its own territory and the Sooners took over on the Cyclone 40 after Jim Thompson punted into the wind. The Sooners promptly marched to their game-winning touchdown in nine plays.

Tillman ripped off a 13 yard run during the drive and Bradley threw passes of 11 and 10 yards to Derrick Shepard. Shepard's second reception gave the Sooners a first down at the ISU 4 and three plays later, after Oklahoma was moved back by an off-side penalty, Bradley slipped the ball to Tillman just as he was being tackled on third down and the 209-pound sophomore darted into the end zone with 3:34 remaining.

A mishandled snap spoiled Oklahoma's extra point kick but the Sooners' Keith Stanberry preserved the victory by intercepting an Alex Espinoza pass with 1:19 left.

Florida State 27, Tulane 6

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — Reserve safety Joe Wessel raced 10 yards with a blocked punt for a touchdown and second-string linebacker Jesse Solomon recovered a punt he blocked in the end zone for another score to lead Florida State to a 27-6 victory over Tulane.

The victory by the 15th-ranked Seminoles avenged a 34-28 loss they suffered to Tulane last year and improved their slate to 5-1-1. Tulane's Green Wave dropped to 2-5.

Wessel scored when FSU's Lenny Chavers blocked Sammy Amarena's punt in Tulane territory with 11:52 remaining in the third quarter. Wessel raced 10 yards untouched.

Derek Schmidt, who had kicked two field goals earlier in the game, added the point-after to put FSU ahead 13-6.

After Florida State stopped Tulane, Solomon broke through Tulane's punt formation and blocked another Amarena punt with 10:44 remaining in the quarter. The ball rolled 19 yards and Solomon smothered it in the end zone. Schmidt's kick made it 20-6.

Tulane threatened to close the gap late in the final quarter when safety Benny Burst intercepted an Eric Thomas pass at the Tulane 42-yard line and returned it seven yards to the 35.

David McLaughlin, inserted into the lineup to relieve starting quarterback Ken Karcher, led the Green Wave down the field to the Seminole 2-yard line.

But tailback Mike Jones fumbled when he slammed into the middle of the line, and Stanley Scott recovered.

Tennessee St. 71, Kentucky St. 0

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Tennessee State quarterback Ken Biggles threw for four touchdown passes in the first quarter as his team went on to crush Kentucky State 71-0.

Biggles left the game early and his replacement, Gilbert Renfro, guided Tennessee State to a 58-0 halftime lead. In the first half alone, the two quarterbacks combined for 15 of 22 passes for 242 yards and six touchdowns.

Tennessee State kept substitutes in the game for most of the second half and managed two scores.

Herman Hunter caught six passes for 84 yards and two touchdowns for the Tigers.

Late in the fourth period, Kentucky State mounted a drive and moved to the Tennessee State 18-yard line. The Tigers put their first-string defense in the game and pushed Kentucky State back 10 yards. A field goal attempt failed after a bad snap.

Kentucky State dropped to 2-6 while Tennessee State improved its record to 7-0.

Late College Games

Memphis St. 23, Mississippi St. 12

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Sophomore place-kicker Don Glosson converted three Mississippi State fumbles into field goals as Memphis State dumped the Bulldogs 23-12 in a driving rainstorm.

Quarterback Danny Sparkman connected with wide receiver Enis Jackson for a 75-yard touchdown pass and senior running back James "Punkin" Williams broke loose for a 66-yard touchdown run for the Tigers in the third period.

Memphis State is now 5-1-1 while the Bulldogs fell to 4-3 in the mud of Liberty Bowl Memorial Stadium.

Tulsa 55, Wichita St. 20

TULSA — Running back Gordon Brown rushed for 123 first-half yards as the University of Tulsa crushed Wichita State, 55-20, in Missouri Valley Conference football.

Tulsa's win upped its record to 4-3 overall and 3-0 in the conference while the hapless Shockers fell to 0-7.

Tulsa's offense showed its muscle by scoring on each of its seven possessions.

The Hurricane opened with a 14-0 advantage on quarterback Richie Stephenson's leap from the 1 yard line and fullback Rodney Young's sprint from the 5.

Wichita State's Brian McDonald combined with split end Broc Fewin for a 55-yard pass play for the Shockers' only score of the half.

Arizona St. 45, Oregon St. 10

TEMPE, Ariz. — Jeff Van Raaphorst, quarterbacking his first game since suffering a knee injury in the season-opener, threw for 257 yards and four touchdowns as Arizona State beat Oregon State 45-10 in Pacific-10 action.

Van Raaphorst, a redshirt sophomore, completed 20 of 33 passes with three of his scoring strikes coming in the second quarter for a 24-0 halftime lead.

He fired a 9-yarder to flanker Aaron Cox with 10:26 left in the period, a 40-yard bomb to split end Doug Allen 2:25 later and a 25-yarder to Allen again 1:10 before halftime.

Allen, who grabbed nine passes for 158 yards, also caught a 6-yard toss from Van Raaphorst with 39 seconds left in the third quarter for a 38-7 lead.

Freshman cornerback Anthony Parker returned an interception 61 yards for another third-quarter score and Glenn Dennard caught a 5-yard, fourth-period touchdown pass from backup quarterback John Walker as Arizona State evened its record at 3-3 overall and 2-2 in the Pac-10.

Oregon State, which hasn't won here since 1969 and has now lost nine straight games to the Sun Devils, fell to 2-5 overall and 1-3 in the conference.

Walsh, Campbell understand Halloween

HOUSTON (AP) — The first meeting between San Francisco 49ers' Coach Bill Walsh and Houston Oilers' Coach Hugh Campbell, Sunday's opponents in the Astrodome, occurred years ago at a high school football game on Halloween night.

Walsh was an aspiring young high school coach and Campbell was the star of the opposing team. Both school colors were black and orange.

And ... they played to a 13-13 tie.

There could be elements of Halloween in Sunday's National Football League game. Walsh's 6-1 49ers have been scary through most of the season and the Oilers, 0-7, have been horrible.

Walsh, who suffered through rebuilding years with the 49ers, is worried.

"They've been improving and improving and seem right on the verge of breaking through," Walsh said of the winless Oilers. "Unfortunately, we could very well be the breakthrough team, so we're going to really have to be at our best.

"But having been through the same thing that Hugh is going through, I just am reminded that when you finally break through those things, your team begins to really get into sync. So we're naturally concerned."

The 49ers had been unbeaten until last Sunday, when they were beaten 20-17 by the Pittsburgh Steelers, as Ray Wersching missed a 37-yard field goal try with seven seconds to play.

Now Walsh wants to get his team back on the winning track.

"I'm hoping we can regroup now because it kind of let the air out of the tire," Walsh said. "I just hope we're not flat. I am determined that we can come in and play our best game against Houston."

Campbell saidys he would like to see a continuation of the improvements made in last week's 28-10 loss to the Miami Dolphins.

"My goal is to have this team come as close as it came to its maximum effort," Campbell said. "At the end of the season, I want us to have as much enthusiasm as possible."

The 49ers are led by Joe Montana, another in a long line of outstanding quarterbacks to face the Oilers.

"Montana may be more difficult to contain than all the others because their offense is so diversified," Campbell said. "(Miami quarterback Dan) Marino is prone to repeating plays. Don Shula is famous for doing a few things and doing them well.

"But the 49ers do a lot of things and do them great."

Mavs Clipped, 98-95

FORT WORTH (AP) — Norm Nixon scored 21 points and the Los Angeles Clippers held off a late charge to score a 98-95 over the Dallas Mavericks at the Fort Worth Convention Center.

Mark Aguirre led the Maverick attack with 15 points.

The score was tied at 47 at halftime and the Mavericks came to within 1 point twice late in the fourth quarter before the Clippers pulled ahead and held off the Mavericks.

Nelson shoots 64 to lead Disney

LAKE BUENA VISTA, Fla. (AP) — Larry Nelson, attempting to put a positive finish on an otherwise disappointing season, compiled a near-flawless 64 and took a two-stroke lead Saturday in the third round of the $400,000 Walt Disney World Golf Classic.

Nelson, whose last American triumph came in the 1983 U.S. Open, completed one round over each of the three courses used for the first 54 holes of this event in a spectacular 196, a distant 20 shots under par and the best three-round total of the season on the PGA Tour.

"I've hit the ball better this week than I have in three or four years," said Nelson, who has been troubled by a variety of injuries and ailments this season and ranks 74th on the money-winning list with $82,689.

"In the last two tournaments I won, the U.S. Open and the (1981) PGA, I played really well a couple of rounds each tournament, not so well in the others. This is the most consistent I've played in three years.

"I've said all along that I wouldn't say this was a bad year until after the Disney World. Even if I win, I wouldn't call it a good year, but it would be ending on a good note," Nelson said.

And Hubert Green, a winner last week and one of Nelson's closest pursurers, said the gritty little man could be tough to handle in Sunday's final round of the chase for a $72,000 first prize.

"He's a guy who doesn't get a chance to win a great deal, but when he does get the chance, he does a good job of it. He's a steady player. I don't foresee him shooting a bad round," Green said after his no-bogey round of 67 at the Magnolia course had put him in third place at 199, one back of Chip Beck. Beck, the second round leader, had a 68 at the Palm course.

Rookie Brad Faxon was fourth at 201 after a 69 at the Palm. Roger Maltbie and defending champion Payne Stewart followed at 202. Maltbie closed up with a 65 at Lake Buena Vista and Stewart had a 68 at Magnolia, the course that will be the site of Sunday's final 18 holes.

Nelson's effort over the Lake Buena Vista course was little short of spectacular. He didn't even come close to making a bogey. He missed only two greens, and holed a 15-foot putt from the fringe for a birdie on one of those.

He used a new 5-wood to hit a 225-yard second shot within four feet of the flag for an eagle-3 and watched his iron shots nestled within four feet of the flag on four other holes.

Gowan, Monaghan earn positions on LPGA tour

HOUSTON (AP) — Caroline Gowan of Greenville, S.C., and Kris Monaghan of Encinitas, Calif., finished with 5-over-par 293 totals Saturday to earn spots on the Ladies Professional Golfers Association tour after the final round of the LPGA Qualifying Tournament at Sweetwater Country Club.

Gowan shot an even par 72 in the final round of the rain-delayed tournament and Monaghan had a 73.

Gowan and Monaghan were among 27 women golfers who earned their LPGA tour cards. One more card will be issued following an 18-hole playoff Sunday among eight golfers who tied for the last spot at 305.

Nancy Scranton of Centralia, Ill., who had a 2-under par 70 in the third round, shot a final round 74 and finished one shot off the lead at 294, 6 over par over the 6,330-yard Sweetwater course.

Shirley Furlong of San Antonio, Texas, was fourth at 295 following a final round 73 and Elaine Crosby of Jackson, Miss., who had the tournament's low round of 67, was next at 296. Crosby had a final round 75.

The eight golfers battling for the final spot Sunday are: Julie Pyne of Dallas; Cathrine Panton of England; Mitzi Edge of Atlanta; Anne Kelly of Tucson, Ariz.; Marci Bozarth of Fort Worth, Texas; Mary Ann Widman of Elmira, N.Y.; Kyle O'Brien of Indianapolis, and Melissa Whitmire of Hendersonville, N.C.

USFL's L.A. Express sold

AMELIA ISLAND, Fla. (AP) — The United States Football League wound up its fall meeting Saturday by announcing the troubled Los Angeles franchise had been sold, but said it would announce its realignment plans at a New York news conference in two weeks.

However, league sources said the league would likely play its 1985 season, the last it will play in the spring, with 15 teams. That would be accomplished by merging the Pittsburgh and Philadelphia franchises, which will play at the University of Maryland; the Oklahoma and Arizona franchises to play in Arizona, and Michigan and Oakland, which would play in Oakland, Calif.

There were also reports that New Orleans, which moved from Boston last year, would move to Portland, Ore., and that the Chicago franchise purchased last spring by Eddie Einhorn might play in Dallas, at least for one season until going back to Chicago in the fall. Chicago had also been reported going to Charlotte, N.C. and Honolulu and as one source put it:

"All this could change in an hour."

It's not hard to remember who is middleweight champ

By DAVE ANDERSON
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — The only world middleweight champion, Marvelous Marvin Hagler, was sitting on a small folding chair in his dressing room Friday night after having demolished Mustafa Hamsho in the third round. Still wearing his navy blue velvet trunks with the light blue stripe, the only middleweight champion was unloosening the blue laces in his high, white boxing shoes.

"It feels good to be the only champion," he was saying. "I walk around and nobody talks about another champ in my division. It's a shame the public can't keep track of all the champions now."

Hagler is recognized by the World Boxing Association and the International Boxing Federation, and was recognized by the World Boxing Council until he was politically stripped of his title Saturday. But he remains a different champion. He doesn't have an entourage. He doesn't have to be waited on, as so many other boxers do. Nobody was bending down to help him out of his boxing shoes. He was unloosening those blue shoelaces himself, as if he were still a four-round prelim kid instead of the only middleweight champion, who hasn't lost since 1976.

"K got him," he said now, laughing and glancing across the room at several friends. "Yes, sir, K got him."

THE DAY before the fight, Hagler had minimized the controversy over the possibility that there might be three female judges (there was one, Eva Shain) by holding up his two fists.

"This is K," he said of his right hand, then turning to his left hand, he added, "and this is O. These are my judges."

After a knockdown halfway through the third round, the left-handed middleweight champion stunned Hamsho, the 31-year-old Syrian challenger from Brooklyn, with a left, then swatted him with a right hook that ended the bout at 2:31 and turned the judges into spectators.

"O," he said now, laughing, "set him up for K."

And with that final punch, K had set up Hagler for what he calls his "glory" fight — a $10 million showdown with Thomas Hearns, currently the W.B.C.'s junior middleweight champion, sometime in March or April at Caesars Palace in Las Vegas, Nev., a big fight that aficionados of the sweet science have been yearning for during boxing's current doldrums.

"I thought I'd get my glory with Sugar Ray Leonard," he said, referring to the former welterweight champion who retired again following detached-retina surgery. "But now my only glory is with Thomas Hearns."

HIS ONLY big money is with Hearns, too. The only middleweight champion collected $1.4 million for Friday night's exercise, not bad for somebody who still unloosens his own shoelaces. But for a bout with Hearns, the Top Rank promoter, Bob Arum, is talking about the two fighters sharing $10 million, just for openers.

"They'd each get a percentage on top of that," Arum said. "Hagler would have to get the bigger share, of course, it's his title."

How much of a bigger share is the question. The only middleweight champion's managers, Pat and Goody Petronelli, are talking about demanding a 60-40 split. Others say it will be closer to 55-45. Whatever it is, Arum hoped to be able to complete the negotiations "in about a week," which probably means a month. If he's lucky.

Boxing negotiations usually tend to drag, especially when they involve Hearns's manager, Emanuel Steward.

"After I beat Roberto Duran," the only middleweight champion said, "Hearns didn't want the winner, he took the loser. He only wants to fight crippies, old people or guys who can't fight."

The negotiations also could be delayed by Hearns's scheduled mandatory W.B.C. title defense against John (the Beast) Mugabi of Uganda sometime in December.

"You know who we want," Hagler told reporters after Friday night's fight, alluding to Hearns. "You know who the public wants. And he better come and get me before I decide I don't want him."

With at least $10 million to be shared, Hagler will always want Hearns, no matter how long it takes. But of the two, the only middleweight champion is the better attraction now.

"Marvin's better than he ever was," Petronelli said. "He's got more confidence, more tools, he's sharper."

NOW 30 years old, the only middleweight champion has 50 knockouts in his 60-2-2 record. He is also the first puncher to have dropped Hamsho on his hambone, twice, for what is now a 38-3-2 record with 23 knockouts. But as early as the first round Friday night, Hamsho seemed more intent on trying for a knockout with his forehead than with his forehand. When the bell ended that round, the champion snarled.

(MORE) nn

"I told him, 'You want to play dirty, I'll teach you how to play dirty,'" Hagler said later. "He caught me under the chin with his head, he charged me with his head. I decided this ref was out of it, I got to take charge myself."

The referee, Arthur Mercante, also took charge, scolding Hamsho, also a left-hander, for an attempted butt early in the third round. But soon the only middleweight champion indeed took charge, quickly using 0 to set up the challenger for K.

Meanwhile, the New York State Athletic Commission chairman, John Branca, should be scolded for having used the possibility of three female judges as a publicity ploy for Friday night's bout. Publicity is for promoters and their publicists, not for commissioners entrusted with what little integrity boxing has.

The fight was the first middleweight title bout in the Garden since Carlos Monzon of Argentina retained the title with a 10th-round knockout of Tony Licata in 1975, and it should have been enough to attract the estimated 16,000 customers, especially when it coincided with Hagler's first appearance there as a boxer.

"New Yawk, the Big Apple," he said later, smiling. "It's great to conquer the Big Apple."

The only middleweight champion, who now lives in Brockton, Mass., grew up in Newark, but in those years he never went to the Garden to see a fight.

"I came to see the Knicks, the circus and the ice show," he said. "But never a fight. Not 'til now."

Eagles trying for first three-game win streak since '81

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The Philadelphia Eagles try for their first three-game winning streak since 1981 and a .500 record Sunday when they meet the New York Giants in a National Football League game.

"This game means a lot to us," said Coach Marion Campbell. "It's a division rival and we can pull our record to 4-4."

The Giants are 4-3, still very much in contention for the National Conference East title.

Giants Coach Bill Parcells said his team is " ... kind of like a roller coaster. Some games we're consistent. Some games we're not. We don't have the maturity of a veteran team. We're a young team with only 19 players back from last year."

The Eagles are troubled with injuries, the most significant of which is the cracked rib of quarterback Ron Jaworski. In addition, offensive tackle Jerry Sisemore and cornerback Roynell Young are on injured reserve — Sisemore with tendinitis of the shoulder and Young with an abdominal strain.

Guard Steve Kenney may play but he is bothered by a knee injury, while Jaworski will play with a protective pad over the rib. Jaworski played one half last week against Indianapolis.

Who can figure Cowboys

An AP Sports Analysis
By DENNE H. FREEMAN

DALLAS — It's time to turn to an inexpensive, amateur psychiatrist on the Dallas Cowboy quarterback quandry.

The real professionals wouldn't touch this case. It could shatter a promising career.

I've been practicing without a license for 17 years trying to decipher what makes the quarterback world turn at 6116 North Central Expressway.

The case files include names like Morton, Rhome, Meredith, Staubach, and currently Gary Hogeboom and Danny White.

There's never been a pattern in the way Coach Tom Landry operates with his quarterbacks.

He's shuttled quarterbacks by plays, series, and quarters. He's started 'em and relieved 'em. He's pumped 'em up and deflated 'em. He's deflated 'em and pumped 'em up. There's no solid track record. No fingerprints.

FOLLOWING THE trail of the Cowboy quarterback maze is like trying to track an Indian on an Indian reservation. There are a lot of false, twisting turns and the tracks you see are the ones left on purpose.

However, here's some rock-bottom cheap theories on why Gary has gone bust instead of boom and is still the starter.

I subscribe to the premise that Landry chose Hogeboom over the veteran White at the start of the season because the team wanted it that way.

Recall the poll of teammates favoring the sacking of White. It was clear after three consecutive losses in the National Conference championship game that the team wasn't behind White.

Of course, the blame fell on the ship commander, White.

Young Hogeboom with his rifle arm and brash confidence seemed to be the perfect replacement. Besides, Hogeboom was more buddy-buddy with the boys than White. Gary would have a beer with 'em. White was always too busy.

Landry's decision to axe White was met with favor by most of the players seeking the magic they hadn't seen since Roger Staubach retired.

"Landry has finally listened to the team," said fullback Ron Springs, echoing the sentiments of many Cowboys who often verbally serve as part-time coaches.

Enter reality.

It's obvious Hogeboom can't read defenses like White, lacks the ability to feather the ball when the occasion demands, and has limited mobility in the pocket.

If the Cowboys thought they were getting another Staubach, they now have this fresh fact to ponder: Hogeboom is not going to be an instant Super Bowl messiah.

"They (some of the Cowboys) are going to have to eat their words," says Drew Pearson, the retired Cowboy wide receiver. "They have been worrying about somebody else instead of worrying about themselves, instead of being concerned over their own positions, their own jobs."

So we have it. It probably doesn't matter who is quarterback of the Cowboys unless the players on the team change their way of thinking.

They believe the quarterback should be able to dial up the victories.

PERHAPS LANDRY is giving the gripers and clubhouse lawyers a powerful dose of humble medicine.

OK, boys, you wanted a change. You got it. Now what?

Tick, Tick, Tick.

ARE YOU IN SHAPE?
FIND OUT!

How fast does your heart beat when you exercise/ How quickly does your pulse return to normal? Does this "recovery time" improve as you get into better shape?

Well, guess no more.

The Pulse Tach is actually a micro-computer that fits over your finger. It weighs one ounce and can be worn easily during most exercise programs. It measures, calculates and displays what your pulse is doing, before, and after you exercise.

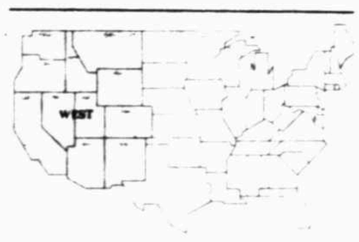
No. 1 Huskies beat Ducks

Associated Press



SEATTLE — Washington's top-ranked Huskies had only three first downs and 109 total yards Saturday but used a third-quarter blocked punt by Tim Peoples for a touchdown in a 17-10 Pacific-10 Conference victory over the stubborn Oregon Ducks.

Oregon's rugged defense held Washington to 73 rushing yards on 28 carries and 36 passing yards.

Oregon lost starting quarterback Chris Miller with a mild concussion in the second quarter. They got to the Washington 20-yard line in the final minute behind backup quarterback Mike Jorgensen, only to run out of downs with 46 seconds left. The Huskies then ran out the clock.

Washington, which moved into the No. 1 spot in The Associated Press college football ratings this week, got what proved to be the winning score when Peoples blocked Mike Preacher's punt and Mike Gaffney fell on the ball in the Oregon end zone with 10:55 gone in the third quarter. That put Washington ahead 17-7.

The Ducks were punting from their own 17 and Preacher was standing near his own 5 when Peoples got his critical block.

Washington, 7-0 overall and 3-0 in the Pac-10, snapped a 7-7 tie when Jeff Jaeger kicked a 32-yard field goal with 8:24 gone in the third period. Tim Meamber intercepted a Jorgensen pass and ran it back 31 yards to the Washington 21 to set up the Jaeger field goal.

BYU 30, Air Force 25

AIR FORCE ACADEMY, Colo. — Junior quarterback Robbie Bosco fired four touchdown passes, three of them covering more than 50 yards, to spark seventh-ranked Brigham Young to a 30-25 victory over Air Force in Western Athletic Conference football.

The victory extended BYU's winning streak to 18 games — longest in the nation. The Cougars are now 7-0 overall and 4-0 in the WAC. Air Force, which saw its three-game winning streak snapped, fell to 5-3 overall and 2-3 in league play.

Bosco's third TD pass, a short pass that halfback Kelly Smith turned into a 56-yard play, staked the Cougars to a 21-9 lead early in the third quarter, but Air Force rallied.

As light snow dusted Falcon Stadium, the Falcons scored a touchdown and field goal to get within 21-19 with 8:12 left in the third quarter. Bart Weiss' 57-yard pass to a leaping Kevin Fleming drew AFA within 21-16, and Carlos Mateos' 46-yard field goal four minutes later cut the deficit to two.

Nebraska 24, Colorado 7

BOULDER, Colo. — Junior walk-on Travis Turner scored on runs of 1 and 3 yards and tossed an 11-yard TD pass as No. 5 Nebraska overcame three quarters of lackluster play to beat determined Colorado 24-7 in Big Eight college football action Saturday.

The victory boosted the Cornhuskers to 6-1 overall and 3-0 in the Big Eight, while Colorado fell to 1-6 and 1-2 before a sellout crowd of 52,124 at Folsom Field.

The Huskers were lethargic for three quarters, with Coach Tom Osborne alternating between Turner and senior Craig Sundberg at quarterback. But with Nebraska trailing 7-3 late in the third period, Osborne decided to go with Turner and the slumbering Huskers finally came to life.

Turner began his resuscitation efforts late in that period by starting a 13-play, 79-yard drive that ended 39 seconds into the fourth quarter when he plunged over from a yard out to give Nebraska its first lead, 10-7.

USC 17, Arizona 14

LOS ANGELES — Tim Green completed 13 of 23 passes for 212 yards and Tommy Haynes made a key theft as the Southern California Trojans stayed perfect in Pacific-10 football with a 17-14 victory over Arizona.

Frank Jordan's 31-yard field goal in the third quarter snapped a 14-14 tie for the Trojans, who are now 5-1 overall and 4-0 in the Pac-10.

Arizona's Wildcats, 4-3 overall and 3-1 in the conference, lost a chance to go ahead six minutes into the final quarter, when tight end Gary Parrish appeared to haul down a tipped pass just across the Southern Cal goal line.

But Haynes reached in and jerked the ball away for an interception that gave the Trojans possession on their 1-yard line.

UCLA 17, California 14

BERKELEY, Calif. — Ken Norton Jr. recovered a California fumble to set up John Lee's 17th field goal of the season, an 18-yarder with 2:58 remaining in the game, and UCLA posted a come-from-behind 17-14 Pacific-10 victory over the Bears.

Cal took a 14-7 lead over the Bruins early in the fourth quarter of the nationally televised game after Mark Funderburk ran three yards for a touchdown. UCLA drove 75 yards for a touchdown that tied the score with 5:14 left.

The Bruins, conference champions the last two seasons, would have been virtually out of the running if they had lost. The victory gave them a 13-year winning streak against Cal.

Ti-Cats beat Rough Riders, 20-14

HAMILTON (CP) — Bernie Ruoff kicked four field goals, including two in the fourth quarter to snap a tie and lift the Hamilton Tiger-Cats to a 20-14 Canadian Football League victory over thee Ottawa Rough Riders.

Ruoff's third field goal of the game, an 11-yarder at 5:45 of the final period, gave Hamilton a 17-14 lead and his 15-yarder accounted for the final margin.

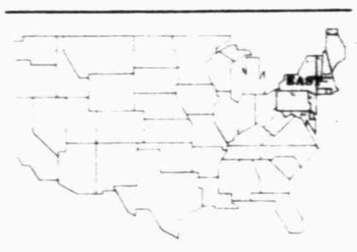
He earlier kicked field goals of 19 and 49 yards for Hamilton, 5-9-1.

Hamilton's only touchdown came on an 83-yard pass play from quarterback Dieter Brock to Stevee Stapler.

Ottawa, 4-11, got its two touchdowns on 13-yard passes from quarterback J.C. Watts to Keith Baker.

Lions roar past Syracuse

Associated Press



STATE COLLEGE, Pa. — Tailback D.J. Dozier ran for 159 yards on 22 carries and scored a touchdown Saturday as 19th-ranked Penn State defeated Syracuse 21-3.

Penn State's Nittany Lions boosted their record to 5-2 as sophomore John Shaffer, substituting for regular quarterback Doug Strang, completed 10 of 23 passes for 141 yards. Strang was sidelined with a shoulder sprain.

Penn State scored on its first two possessions, Tony Mumford racing across from the 7 ending a 12-play, 80-yard drive, and Dozier romping 23 and then 58 yards to personally account for an 81-yard drive.

The Lions made it 21-0 in the second period when fullback Steve Smith bolted into the end zone from the 1. He capped a nine-play, 36-yard drive triggered by a pass interception.

It was the 14th straight victory for Penn State over Syracuse and boosted the Lions' series lead to 36-21-5. Syracuse, which lost its fourth game against three victories, scored its only points with 51 seconds remaining on a 47-yard field goal by Don McAulay.

Army 48, Penn 13

WEST POINT, N.Y. — Fullback Doug Black scored three touchdowns and quarterback Nate Sassaman rushed for a game-high 116 yards as Army rolled up its highest point total since 1977 with a 48-13 victory over Penn.

The point total was the highest for Army since a 48-13 decision over Holy seven seasons ago. Army completely outgunned the smaller Quakers, rushing for a total of 408 yards.

Army scored the first five times it touched the ball.

The loss was Penn's first of the season, giving the Quakers a 4-1 record. Army improved its record to 4-1-1.

Colgate 41, Lafayette 20

HAMILTON, N.Y. — Senior tailback Stacy Hall ran for 236 yards and a touchdown on 32 carries to lead 20th ranked Colgate to a 41-20 Division I-AA victory over Lafayette.

Quarterback Steve Calabria completed 13 of 22 passes for 187 yards and one touchdown and ran for another as the Red Raiders rolled to 507 yards in total offense.

Lafayette, 3-4, jumped out to a 7-0 lead on its first possession as tailback Ryan Priest scored from 22 yards out. Priest ended the day with 193 yards on 32 carries and the touchdown.

Colgate, 4-2, cut the gap to 7-3 on a Mike Powers' 30-yard field goal in the first quarter and then took a 10-7 lead on a 7-yard Calabria run. Colgate led 17-7 at the half after Ken Gamble's 11-yard run with 3:21 left.

Harvard 21, Dartmouth 7

DARTMOUTH, N.H. — Tailback Mark Vignali rushed for 175 yards on 26 carries and scored on a 32-yard run to lead Harvard to a 21-7 Ivy League football win Saturday over Dartmouth.

The win brought Harvard to 3-0 overall and kept it undefeated in the league at 3-0.

Dartmouth, 0-3 in the league, dropped to 0-5 overall, tying the worst start in its history. Dartmouth now has lost seven straight games in two seasons, which also ties a school record. Its eighth straight game without a win — it tied Columbia before the string of losses — also is a school record.

Holy Cross 31, Connecticut 0

WORCESTER, Mass. — Quarterback Pete Muldoon and tailback Gill Fenerty accounted for two touchdowns each as unbeaten Holy Cross rolled to its sixth victory in a 41-0 rout of Connecticut.

The Crusaders, ranked second in the nation in Division 1-AA, handed Connecticut its first shutout since 1978 as Muldoon passed for a pair of touchdowns and Fenerty rushed for over 100 yards for the fifth straight game, scoring on runs on 1 and 37 yards.

Navy 41, Princeton 3

ANNAPOLIS, Md. — Navy quarterback Bill Byrne connected on two touchdown passes to split end Chris Weiler and Todd Solomon kicked two field goals, one of them a school record 52 yards, to propel the Midshipmen to a 41-3 victory over Princeton.

Navy scored twice in the first period on consecutive possessions to open up a 14-0 lead before the Princeton defense stiffened and allowed the Tigers to narrow the gap to 14-3 on a 28-yard field goal by Mike Miskovsky midway through the second period.

Rhode Island 22, Boston U. 7

KINGSTON, R.I. — Junior quarterback Tom Ehrhardt, continuing his record-breaking spree, passed for two touchdowns and ran for another as Rhode Island took sole possession of the Yankee Conference lead with a 22-7 victory over Boston University.

Belts of life

For a number of years statistics have shown Americans that use of seat belts significantly increases odds of survival in automobile accidents. Now, in addition to the personal safety consideration, there's another incentive for people to buckle up when they get behind the wheel of a vehicle. It's called money.

In a visit to Midland in September, Texas Automobile Dealer Association executive vice president Gene Fondren explained that unless two-thirds of the states agree to a mandatory seat belt law by 1987, there will be forced installation of air bags in vehicles.

Besides being controversial from a safety standpoint, the air bags will add $1,000 to the price of new cars, Fondren said. Any American wanting to know what that means in terms of real dollars only needs to visit an automobile dealership and look at the sticker prices. A $1,000 increase would push millions more Americans out of the new car market and possibly cripple automobile dealerships already hard-hit by high interest rates and an otherwise uncertain economy.

The importance of the use of seat belts and other restraint devices is illustrated by the fact that the Legislature recently enacted a law, which becomes effective at the end of this month, requiring all children under the age of 2 to be restrained in safety seats while in a car and requiring that those ages 2-4 be restrained by seat belts.

That law was important because young children who do not realize the possibly life-threatening nature of automobile accidents cannot make rationale decisions on the use of such devices; their parents can.

Yet another indicator of the importance of seat belt use is the fact that the Texas Department of Public Safety strongly encourages it. Why? Because the department's troopers patrol the state's highways every day of the year and investigate automobile accidents in which restraint devices were used — and not used. They see the results, and department officials continually issue calls for motorists to use their seat belts.

The use of safety seats will be possible for more families because of the efforts of such groups as the TADA, which is soliciting funds from private concerns in order to make the seats available to individuals at lower prices. That and similar efforts to encourage use of the child safety seats will greatly reduce injuries and deaths to youngsters — if people heed the call.

With all the evidence that seat belts save lives, no one should need a financial incentive to buckle up. Safety should be enough. If it isn't, though, Americans should think about saving $1,000 on that new car.

By buckling up they'll be saving money — and maybe their life.

Another View: Better mileage yet

Both General Motors Corp. and Ford Motor Co. acknowledge that their 1984 and 1985 model cars will not meet the fuel-economy standards that Congress set nearly a decade ago. GM, for example, says that the fleet average for its 1984 cars will be more than 2 miles per gallon below the 27-m.p.g. level required for this year. That's still a vast improvement over the miserable 14-m.p.g. average that American cars were getting when the oil shock of 1974 led to the demand for increasingly fuel-efficient autos. But, improvement or not, the inability to meet the standards means that more millions of barrels of expensive imported oil will now have to be consumed than might have been the case.

The problem clearly is not that Congress ordered unrealistically high fuel standards. Both Chrysler Corp. and American Motors Corp. say that their cars will exceed the level for this year and the 27.5-m.p.g. requirement for 1985. So will most imported cars. GM and Ford, which together account for more than 60 percent of passenger-car sales, suggest that the difficulty lies in the marketplace. With gasoline supplies plentiful and prices stable, demand for larger and less-fuel-efficient cars continues to run high. Sales of the smaller models that the two companies had been counting on to raise average fuel efficiency in consequence have been disappointing. That's bad news for Ford and GM, which face the possibility of heavy fines for failure to meet the efficiency standards. It's also bad news for the country's energy policy.

For the nation at least, the situation would be quite different were it not for the import restrictions of the last four years on Japanese cars. This quota system in several ways has worked directly against the policy of reducing foreign oil purchases. By restricting competition the quotas have allowed car prices to be fixed far higher than they otherwise would be. That has effectively closed the new-car market to an estimated 2 million buyers; 2 million late-model and more-fuel-efficient cars on the road in place of 2 million older gas guzzlers would mean a considerably reduced reliance on foreign oil.

At the same time the quotas have prompted Japanese car manufacturers to reach for the greatest possible profits by concentrating on sales of more expensive and in many cases larger cars. These models on the whole give good fuel economy. But under the quota restrictions they also replace hundreds of thousands of smaller, cheaper and even-more-fuel-efficient models for which demand is high. An inevitable result of this replacement factor is that the overall fuel efficiency of cars on American roads is less than what it could and ought to be.

There are a lot of good reasons for putting an end to costly and wasteful auto-import quotas. Improved fuel economy, with the bonus of lower costs to consumers, and the chance to cut back on overseas oil purchases are not least among them.

JACK ANDERSON
Army knew of Barbie's crimes

WASHINGTON — Klaus Barbie, the notorious Nazi war criminal whose escape after World War II was arranged by U.S. Army intelligence agents, is awaiting trial in France for crimes against humanity.

Jack Anderson

As the Gestapo chief in France's "second city," he earned the title "Butcher of Lyon."

Barbie's wartime crimes were known to the Army's Counter-intelligence Corps. Yet it secretly engineered his flight, with false identity papers, from occupied West Germany to Italy and finally to refuge in Bolivia.

That was in 1951. Yet two years earlier, French newspapers had churned up a typhoon of national emotion over Barbie. The contents of one newspaper story cabled to CIC headquarters, for example, told how Barbie "burned his victims with an acetylene torch to make them confess."

The disclosure of deep American involvement in Barbie's escape from justice brought a formal apology from the U.S. government to the people of France last year. But opinion is divided over the American intelligence officers who dealt with Barbie.

Should they be required to answer in court for what they did or didn't do more than 30 years ago?

Former Supreme Court Justice Arthur Goldberg believes they could and should be brought to trial. He made that point in a private letter to Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger.

"Our failure to prosecute the ... American CIC officers," he wrote Weinberger, "will be a source of embarrassment to us when Barbie is tried for his war crimes ...."

On the other hand, Allan Ryan, who conducted the Justice Department's exhaustive investigation of the Barbie case, disagrees vehemently. He does not see "any jurisdiction under military law to put these people on trial." The Justice Department view is that the statute of limitations rules out any action by a civilian tribunal.

Some of the men who worked with Barbie or helped him escape are still alive today. Most are retired; all are held in high repute. I had my associate Lucette Lagnado track down some of them:

— CIC Agent Robert Taylor, now professor emeritus at the University of Syracuse, N.Y.

Taylor recruited Barbie as a paid informant in 1948 and later fought to save him from French authorities. He described Barbie to his superiors at the time as "an honest man both intellectually and personally ... absolutely without fear," and added: "He is strongly anti-communist and a Nazi idealist who believes that he and his beliefs were betrayed by the Nazis in power."

In the anti-communist hysteria of the Cold War era, this clear suggestion that Barbie was a Nazi fanatic caused not a ripple at CIC headquarters. Thirty-six years later, Taylor admits he was "taken," saying: "I have regrets today."

He insists he was unaware that Barbie had been a member of the Gestapo.

— Col. David Erskine, retired, of Bethesda, Md.

Erskine approved Barbie's recruitment and made the decision to help him evade the French, though the record shows he knew of Barbie's alleged war crimes.

The Army's European Command sent Erskine a memo on May 3, 1950, saying: "French newspapers are making a large splash stating that Barbie is guilty of war crimes. ... Request any information regarding Barbie."

Instead, Erskine convened a strategy meeting the next day, at which, the record shows, it was decided "that Barbie should not be placed in the hands of the French." Erskine declined to be interviewed.

— Maj. Erhard Dabringhaus, professor emeritus at Wayne State University in Michigan.

In 1948, he drew what seemed like a routine assignment as Barbie's control officer. He learned about Barbie's notorious background from another German informant, but was ordered not to reveal this knowledge.

When French intelligence agents asked Dabringhaus about Barbie, he obediently told them nothing. But he protested to his bosses — in writing. Not long afterward, he was transferred. His incriminating memo disappeared from Army files.

Thirty-five years later, when Barbie was finally extradited to France from Bolivia, Dabringhaus recognized him on television. He wrote an indignant letter to NBC News, telling about the Army's secret role in shielding Barbie. Since then, Dabringhaus has assisted the Justice Department in its investigation of the cover-up.

For blowing the whistle, Dabringhaus has received death threats from the Ku Klux Klan, ominous phone calls in the middle of the night and vilification from some old CIC buddies. "They told me I should have kept my mouth shut," he said.

GEORGE F. WILL
Now — a few tough questions!

WASHINGTON — How can a grown man look goofy just using a dictionary? Ask George Bush. He has turned the 1984 election into the first primary of 1988 and, although unopposed, he has lost it. That is like losing a monologue with yourself.

George F. Will

Having charged, falsely, that "my opponents" have said the Marines in Beirut died "in shame," he argued, fatuously, that Mondale said terrorists had "humiliated" America and humiliation, according to a dictionary, involves shame, therefore....

Ye Gods, Professor Bush the semanticist is drearier than Boy George the cheerleader, or than the macho preppie with the tongue of a teamster. Bush's disintegration is a distraction from serious foreign-policy questions, such as:

For Reagan: You lifted the grain embargo against the evil empire, then increased sales; you did nothing but talk in response to the Korean airline massacre; you subsidized the empire by rescheduling Poland's debts and continue to give credits to the empire, and you sell advanced technology to the empire. What would you do if the empire were really naughty?

For Mondale: You fault Reagan's rhetoric regarding the Soviets. Would you care to argue that they do not run an evil empire?

For Reagan: If SALT II is not worth ratifying, why are you complying with it — even dismantling weapons systems to do so?

For Mondale: Since the signing of SALT II, which you adore, the Soviets have added nearly 4,000 warheads — which SALT II permits. How has 15 years of arms control served U.S. security?

For Reagan: Partly for political reasons (opposition out West) you rejected the race-track deployment of MX. MX is supposedly a response to the vulnerability of our landbased deterrent. But you have no secure basing mode. Why deploy it?

For Mondale: You seem to fault Reagan's arms-control proposals because the Soviets reject them. Doesn't that mean you would tailor proposals to suit Soviet preferences? Would you pay Chernenko's announced price to get the Soviets back to the bargaining table?

For Reagan: Why, Mr. Conservative, do we continue to pay 25 percent of the costs of the anti-American, anti-Semitic United Nations?

For Mondale: The Soviets have violated many arms agreements. How will you verify your "verifiable" freeze on nuclear weapons?

For Reagan: Aside from listing the violations, what are you doing about them?

For Mondale: The Soviet failure to block deployment of new NATO missiles was the worst Soviet defeat since their expulsion from Egypt in 1973. Why say Reagan has no foreign-policy success?

For Reagan: How many Beirut bombings will it take before you discipline your incompetent subordinates?

For Mondale: The Soviets walked out of arms talks because of NATO deployments begun by Carter. Why blame Reagan?

For Reagan: Sorry, but Beirut again. Druze and Shiite killers drove America out of Lebanon. This is "standing tall"?

For Mondale: Given Reagan's weak response to the suppression of Poland, the Korean Airline massacre and the defeat in Beirut, how can you say Reagan is bellicose?

For Reagan: Given your record (see above), how can you call Mondale weak?

For Mondale: You suggest a "quarantine" of Nicaragua? Be specific.

For Reagan: Why, given your charges against the Nicaraguan regime, do you not impose a quarantine?

For Mondale: Reagan says the U.S. attempt to stop the communist conquest of South Vietnam was a "noble cause." Do you disagree?

For Reagan: In justifying the Grenada invasion, you stress that U.S. students were in danger. Suppose no students had been there. Would prevention of a Soviet-sponsored tyranny have been sufficient justification?

For Mondale: Same question.

For Reagan: If Nicaragua receives advanced Soviet aircraft, what would you do?

For Mondale: The insurgents in El Salvador are ready to talk because they are losing the war. Doesn't that vindicate U.S. military aid, which you criticize?

For Reagan: If your running mate can not be trusted with a dictionary, can he be trusted with nuclear weapons?

For Mondale: You say Reagan lacks essential facts. Are you distressed because your running mate does not know that nuclear testing in the atmosphere ended 21 years ago?

For Reagan: What were you thinking when you said submarine- and air-launched missiles can be recalled?

For Mondale: Your party is divided between McGovernites and Scoop Jacksonites. So give a short list of candidates for secretary of state — and don't mix unreconcilables. Specifically, is Max Kampleman, a Jacksonite, on your list?

For Reagan: After four years at the U.N., hasn't Jeane Kirkpatrick suffered enough? What role would she have in a second Reagan administration? Wouldn't she have made a fine running mate?

ART BUCHWALD
Polling a pollster revealing!

No one has ever done it before, but I just polled a pollster. She was standing on the street the other day, holding a clipboard.

Art Buchwald

She stopped me but before she could speak I took out my pad and pencil and asked her, "How old are you?"

Her face reddened. "I don't think that's any of your business."

"I'll be the judge of that. How much money do you make?"

"I'm going to call the police."

"I'm doing a poll on pollsters, and it's your obligation as an American to answer my questions so we know about the people who are polling us. I don't have much time. Are you single, married or divorced?"

"What right do you have to ask me all these questions?"

"The same right you have to ask them of me. I assure you that your responses will be confidential. But I do have to have your name and address in case someone questions the credibility of my poll."

"Will you go away? I have work to do."

"May I inquire as to your religious persuasion? Catholic, Protestant, Jew or other?"

"I'm not going to tell you."

"All right, I'll check 'other.' Would you consider yourself a Republican, Democrat or Independent?"

"I can't reveal that."

"Why not?"

"Because I'm a pollster, and if I told you it might influence your answers to me."

"You're very attractive. Would you mind telling me what your ethnic background is?"

"What difference does that make?"

"I'd like to know how many Italians, how many Irish, and how many Hispanics are polling this election year."

"Why don't you just drop dead?"

"Don't be angry. I'm only doing my job. By the way, I almost forgot to ask you. How many children do you have?"

"I didn't say I was married."

"I'll put down 'living with a guy.' I hate to leave any blanks in my questionnaire. Let's get down to the important question. If the election was held today would you vote for Ronald Reagan, Fritz Mondale or would you like to be listed as undecided?"

"I don't want to be listed as anything. My vote is a private matter and I'm not going to tell some stranger which lever I'm going to pull."

"What don't you like about Reagan?"

"I never said I didn't like Reagan."

"Does that mean you're going to vote for him?"

"You have some nerve to ask me all these questions."

"I'm not asking them for myself. I'm asking them for the American people. I intend to interview 99 more, and then on the basis of my interviews I will be able to project how the millions of pollsters in America will vote on Nov. 6. After all, with so many people polling the electorate this year, the pollster vote could swing the election."

"It's not fair to poll the pollsters," she said. "We have immunity during a campaign."

"Nobody has immunity from being questioned about their political beliefs. That's what decides American elections. One more question. What is a nice girl like you doing on a street like this?"

She swung her clipboard at me, but I ducked in time.

"What are you writing in your notebook?" she demanded.

"'None of the above.'"

TODAY IN HISTORY

In 1945, women in France were permitted to vote for the first time.

Ten years ago: Mexican president Luis Echeverria held meetings with President Gerald R. Ford on both sides of the border. Echeverria confirmed that substantial amounts of oil had been found in southeast Mexico, and that it would be put on the world market.

Five years ago: Moshe Dayan resigned as Israel's foreign minister to protest the government's handling of the Palestinian issue.

One year ago: A U.S. Navy task force originally headed for Lebanon was diverted to Grenada in the wake of the island's military coup.

Today's birthdays: Jazz musician Dizzy Gillespie is 67. Baseball hall-of-famer Whitey Ford is 56. Rock singer Manfred Mann is 44. Actress Carrie Fisher is 28.

Thought for Today: "Love is not enough. It must be the foundation, the cornerstone, but not the complete structure. It is much too pliable, too yielding." — Bette Davis, actress.

Baseball player triumphed using individual style

Modisett

When I was a youngster, I spent many summers playing baseball. There wasn't much else to do where I grew up.

While playing in the "Pony" league, one step above the Little League, I once had a teammate named Ricky who had an unusual style of fielding and batting. Ricky played outfield and when a batter hit a fly ball in his direction, he would rush it, typically over-run it and, at the last instant, leap into the air, slap his glove staight out to his side and catch the ball. He rarely missed a ball, to the amazement of most of his teammates.

He wasn't as good at catching fly balls hit behind him or to one side or the other, but still Ricky was a good enough outfielder to be first string on our team — and we did win our league pennant that year.

When Ricky got up to bat, the spectators were in for another shock because his batting style was just as unorthodox. He would walk up to the plate, take his stance and spread his legs so far apart that he seemed on the verge of falling down.

In all my years of enjoying baseball (before and since), I've never seen anyone use such a batting stance, though some of the professionals I've seen play have come close at times.

What was unbelievable to me at the time, though, is that this guy led our team in home runs and was the kind of player the team could count on to get a good, solid base hit in a pinch.

Ricky just didn't do things "by the book." The rest of us on the team didn't complain, though. We all knew better. Ricky was our bread and butter. He made things happen for the team.

Without him, I don't think we could have won the championship that year. Oh we still would have fielded a good, competitive baseball team; I just don't think we would have had the magic it takes to pull off a championship season.

A lot of the credit for allowing Ricky to play the way he knew he could goes to our coach that year. The coach didn't scold Ricky or try to change the way he did things. He simply took the natural ability Ricky had and gave him tips on how to improve what he was doing, to do it better. It showed in Ricky's progression that season and it was a beautiful lesson for all of us on the team.

The natural tendency in American society is to bend and twist all people until they conform to the mold that society says is "right." That's a destructive process that kills individualism, although the intent often is good.

Each of us likes to think the way we do things is the "right" way. Some of us obstinate sorts even believe our way is the "only" way. The sad truth, though, is that the "one-wayers" in this society gloss over the truth, which is that for any particular function there usually are a number of ways of achieving the desired result.

Beyond that, it becomes a matter of personal preference as to how the desired result is achieved and the potential benefits of those alternate methods. But if the desired result is achieved, what difference does it make? In a word, the difference is "nitpicking."

I'm sure the coach could have taught Ricky to catch fly balls and hit home runs in a more conventional style, but what would the change have meant? That he would have had to discourage Ricky's spirit for innovation? That he would have had to re-teach Ricky the entire game of baseball, a game that's intended to be primarily played for enjoyment anyway? That maybe in bringing about the conversion he would have lost a degree of the spark, the vitality, that was Ricky and gave the team its magic?

The coach would have killed Ricky's creativity and he knew it. So he backed away.

It was a lesson worth remembering.

LETTERS

Mrs. Lancaster was true woman of vision

Mrs. Lancaster was one of the earliest patrons of the arts in our community, and a remarkably far-sighted woman. Just prior to giving the property to the museum, I had a visit with her concerning some other museum business. At the conclusion of our visit, Mrs. Lancaster told me that she was donating the house to the museum without restrictions. She said she thought the museum would probably have to tear the house down, but the land itself would be essential to the growth of the museum.

The primary purpose of the museum is education. I was president of the Board of Trustees when the museum undertook a study of its educational role in the community. It became apparent to the board that the resources of the community could not support an institution that was all things to all men, that the museum would have to confine itself to doing a few things and doing them well. The board chose to confine its educational role to art and cultural anthropology (including archaeology) of the Southwest, with the educational effort in astronomy limited to the Blakemore planetarium. The board concluded that the preservation of historic homes, which requires great resources, and particularly to make them into museums, could not be a primary role, that efforts in that direction should be confined to the preservation of the Turner Home and its grounds. The board concluded that this plan maximized the museum's educational role, and more nearly matched the expectations of the community than any other.

Having lived in this community all of my life, I sympathize with those who do not want to see the Lancaster House torn down, but we have to recognize that our resources will only go so far, and those in the best position to know when our limits are reached are those who have the responsibility for them, in this case the museum's board of trustees.

I believe the current board of trustees, and past boards of trustees, have come to a good faith conclusion about our resources and the Lancaster House. I believe the fact that the Save the Lancaster House committee has not raised the amount necessary to restore the house (a very realistic fund-raising goal in a community this size) indicates the lack of broadly based popular support for the resources of the community being directed toward the committee's goal.

I would like to suggest a course of action which I think makes the best use of our resources, and more closely matches the expectations of the community. I do not believe it is the house that the community wants to preserve, but the memory of Mrs. Lancaster. Mrs. Lancaster earned the right in this community to be remembered in a very tangible way. I think it would be appropriate for the museum to name one of its future buildings in memory of Mrs. Lancaster, and I think it would be appropriate for the Save the Lancaster House Committee to direct the funds it has raised to a scholarship fund in the arts in Mrs. Lancaster's name to be given annually to one of our talented young people. I think this course of action would be the best use of our resources, would accomplish what most people want, and would be a very fitting tribute to the inspiration which Mrs. Lancaster provided us, an inspiration which deserves to be remembered.

Handgun statistics give one food for thought

In case you missed the "Dear Abby" column on Thursday, Oct. 11, let me repeat certain statistics that provide food for thought.

Abby states that in 1980 handguns killed:

— 77 people in Japan.
— 8 in Great Britain.
— 24 in Switzerland.
— 8 in Canada.
— 23 in Israel.
— 18 in Sweden.
— 4 in Australia.
— 11,522 in the United States.

All of the above countries but the U.S. have very strict and rigidly-enforced handgun control laws.

'Nuff said.

SPEAKING OUT

United Way has already succeeded

Robert A. Cornelius, executive director of the United Way of Midland, has been in the Tall City since early 1983. He moved to Midland from South Carolina and previously served United Way organizations there and in New York state.

By ROBERT A. CORNELIUS

Will the United Way succeed this year?

That depends on how one measures success.

With only five days left in this year's campaign, almost everyone in Midland will measure success by whether the United Way achieves the $1.95 million goal.

However, to measure the success of the United Way by achievement of the goal would be to hear only the melody out of the rich blend of themes in a symphony. Or, to judge Midland's two fine high school football teams solely by their won/lost records without considering the efforts and dedication of the players and coaches.

Joseph I. O'Neill III, "Joey," as he prefers, is the man who accepted the challenge to raise this nearly two-million-dollar goal. Joey is under tremendous pressure to succeed. Pressure to succeed because of the long tradition of meeting the goal. Pressure to succeed because every precious dollar raised means something good will happen to somebody in Midland in 1985.

The pressure to win at anything in this country is fierce. No one wants to be anything but a winner. But that pressure can rob us of perspective. In the case of the United Way campaign it can make achieving the goal so important we lose sight of why we are trying to raise it in the first place.

Consider this: Saturday morning, Sept. 29, 11:45 a.m. at the United Way office...in the midst of computer printouts and yards of calculator tapes...trying to figure out if and how this campaign will succeed...the phone rings.

First reaction — let it ring...answer anyway...a trembling voice saying things about being stranded in the bus station — no money — brand new baby — what do I do?...next kneejerk reaction — why the h--- did I answer the phone, I don't have time to mess with this!

Whoa! Slow down...shift gears...ask the right questions...(answers)...this is no rip-off (you can usually tell)...this young woman is really stranded in Midland, Texas, with no money, a 3-week-old baby and right on the edge of panic! The problem was solved because there were United Way agencies in place and ready to respond.

That episode happened to me three weeks ago. I was so completely focused on raising the money I almost forgot why — even when the reason was literally crying in my ear.

The reason is people and their needs. Every dollar of our goal was painstakingly determined by a volunteer named Jim Henry who chaired a group of 50 other volunteers who listened carefully to 22 agencies forecast what they would need to be in place and ready to respond to human need in Midland in 1985. In fact, Jim and his group said we need $2,060,000 to do the job right, but $1,950,000 stretched to the maximum will keep Midland ready to help people help themselves throughout 1985.

Will the United Way succeed this year?

In many respects it already has. Twenty-two agencies are in place and responding to human need. They have forecast what they need to continue in 1985.

Jim Henry and 50 volunteers have translated the measure of people needs into dollars.

Joey O'Neill and 700 volunteers have accepted the challenge to tell you the story and ask for your pledge.

Let me conclude with another personal story. I once spoke to a rough, tough group of foremen in a textile mill. I told of how I started in the business of fund raising by asking people for money in order to buy overshoes for children in my parish who walked through freezing snow in holely sneakers.

A benighted soul in the back of the room interrupted by shouting, "You ain't nothing but a beggar!"

It stung at first. But, then, I saw he was right.

So I said quietly, "Yes, sir, and I am begging you to help someone who needs your help."

Readers' views on: Local sheriff's race

Sheriff Smith has kept Midland clean

I am writing this letter as a concerned mother. My husband and I, with our children moved to Midland over four years ago to make it our home.

Ever since my husband and I graduated from college, we have lived in the Midland area. We have always shopped in Midland and came to Midland for entertainment. All three of our children, the oldest of which is 9, were born in Midland.

I hope you will understand that my interest in the future of Midland is genuine and sincere. I have always marveled at the progressiveness and cleanliness of Midland and this fact had a great influence on our decision to move here.

My husband has told me that it was common knowledge among his fellow high school classmates about the prostitutes who inhabited the Bel-Aire Courts and about the gambling at R.J.'s.

Almost everyone knew about the Bel-Aire and R.J.'s but many citizens of Midland may not realize that about six years ago a topless bar opened in Midland, and was soon closed. There have been a couple of other attempts to open one since then.

Have you ever wondered why groups like "Kiss" don't come to Chaparral Center? Why adult book stores or adult movie theaters do not openly advertise their garbage as they do in other large towns?

Think about it. Do you want your children to grow up in a town where there is open organized prostitution, open illegal gambling, strip joints, adult movies and adult book stores? Do you want a Second Street like they have in Odessa where prostitutes openly operate? Do you want your children to attend concerts where the entertainers openly glorify illicit sex and the use of drugs in their songs?

You may wonder why this town is so different. The answer is that Sheriff Dallas Smith has closed down these illegal operations. He has made it uneconomical for prostitution, gambling and other businesses like topless bars to operate.

How would you like to pass a topless bar on your way to church on Sunday morning and try to explain to your 4-year-old daughter what kind of place it is?

Sheriff Dallas Smith has helped clean up Midland and he will keep it clean. We need a sheriff of strong personality and moral convictions to keep Midland clean. Let's keep Sheriff Smith.

Which candidate is paper really backing?

I realize that, along with several other professions, there are times when you, as a journalist, cannot please all the people all of the time. This writer was not pleased with the somewhat confusing endorsement concerning the sheriff's race in the Oct. 17 issue of the Reporter-Telegram.

At first glance, it was apparent that your paper was endorsing Mr. Smith for sheriff. Only after reading "the fine print" did I realize that Mr. Painter received your wishy-washy endorsement.

It is obvious to me that the Reporter-Telegram either (1) feels obligated to Mr. Smith because of his insatiable and not inexpensive desire for media advertising (i.e. - "How to cast a write-in ballot in five easy lessons") and media coverage (i.e.-"Sheriff's Deputies Seize 'Large' Marijuana Plant"). Yes, that was PLANT, as in one each. Impressive. Or (2) your management staff is also a member of the political clique one hears so much about. Or (3) you are easily impressed by the glossy exterior presented to you, and you have never used your "investigative journalism" abilities to delve into the inner workings of Mr. Smith's department.

Tell us about how the department's employees had to personally shell out $500 or take out a $500 personal loan at the credit union to purchase a new uniform and leather gear. Tell us about these seven patrol cars, of which there are never more than three on the road at a time, some of which are approaching the 100,000-mile mark. Tell us about the on again-off again Narcotics and Intelligence Division and a few-weeks-old Juvenile Division. Tell us about the 200 people that have come and gone in eight years. Tell us about the "mandatory" meetings where employees are belittled and ridiculed.

I feel the Reporter-Telegram has committed a great disservice to the community and the true candidates in the sheriff's race. Save your kudos for Mr. Smith until Jan. 1, 1985. Put them in the same article that you will undoubtedly write concerning the total cooperation and smooth transition of Mr. Smith's administration into the new sheriff's administration. Maybe you will see the Light by then.

We can be proud of sheriff's office

As elections draw near, excitement seems to mount, especially in the sheriff's election.

I do not know any of the three candidates personally, but I do know a good sheriff from a bad one. Dallas Smith has worked hard to build a department we can all be proud of.

If he stepped on some toes along the way, so be it. He wouldn't be a good sheriff if he didn't. We do not need a "yes man" sheriff. Nor do we need a sheriff who sweeps the garbage under the rug because he is afraid of gossip, complaining prisoners who do not get their magazines on time, medical attention, dental work. Is jail supposed to be the Waldorf hotel? From the clean-up Dallas Smith has done, I can understand why the lawbreakers want Dallas Smith out.

It makes no difference who started the gossip we've all heard. What amazes me is how intelligent, law-abiding people could fall for a cheap trick like a ton of bricks. Why didn't we hear all this gossip somewhere along the way during the eight years Dallas Smith was working to build a department? Why all at once did gossip begin to fly around like gnats two weeks before the primary election?

The power of gossip is strong, but the power of honest people is stronger. Wake up, Midland, and vote your conscience in November. Midland is your town and your vote will put Dallas Smith back in the driver's seat.

Reagan in fine fettle at Al Smith Memorial Dinner

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — President Reagan, in New York Thursday for the annual Al Smith Memorial Dinner given each year by the Catholic Church for charities, had no opponent on which to sharpen recent campaign tactics. The Democratic candidate, former Vice President Walter Fritz Mondale, copped out with the excuse that he was busy cramming himself for tonight's TV prime time debate on foreign affairs. Well, President Reagan managed to find time between affairs of state and campaigning to honor the memory of the late Democratic governor of New York who was in 1928 the first Roman Catholic nominated to run for president.

Mondale's no-show drew a great deal of bipartisan flak here, notably from mayor Ed Koch, a Democrat, and U.S. Sen. Al d'Amato, a New York Republican. Governor Mario Cuomo tried to lessen the shock a little by saying it would be a "passing embarrassment." Mondale's running mate, Mrs. Geraldine Ferraro, herself a Catholic, offered to appear in Mondale's place. The dinner committee of the Alfred E. Smith function declined her substitution offer as unanimously as did the Apostolic Council. John J. O'Connor, Archbishop of New York, presided at the banquet and I was among those honored to be seated on the dias.

PRESIDENT REAGAN appeared to be in fine fettle and his normal good humor prevailed. He kept his address non-political and the Mondale message for not appearing was booed by the audience.

Ever since that first debate with Mondale, which he lost, the president has toughened his campaign style and deflected the Democratic candiate's scatter-gun charges by pointing to his own record in office as the guardian of American security.

From George Washington's time to the present, the No. 1 task of the president is to safeguard the security of this nation and, by extension, the security of friends and allies. Obviously an immediate priority is the Caribbean, the Central American region, indeed all of Latin America and this entire hemisphere. We were at sixes and sevens while the Carter-Mondale administration was busy paring our defenses so that the Soviet Union, with its major proxy Cuba, had a field day in the Caribbean and Central America.

Yet in less than four years of President Reagan in office, our military has been rebuilt so that we stand tall again in the world, not to threaten or bully, as do the Soviets and their Communist cohorts, but to defend against their encroachment and incursions. This is why it costs so much — rebuilding always does. At present, the far left is losing ground in Central America as our friends obtain aid from us against a real Communist menace, supplied by the U.S.S.R., Cuba and their allies.

A LENGTHY report in The Wall Street Journal made that fact abundantly clear. The Marxist-run guerrillas in El Salvador, supplied by next-door Nicaragua, headed by a Communist junta, began to talk peace for the frst time in six years the other day. It's a long, most difficult road to achieve a democratic, pluralistic society, but the effort can be worthwhile — provided we stay vigilantly strong.

The Communists running Nicaragua want all foreign forces out of the nation they rule — except for the comrades, nearly 15,000 total, "invited" by them to stay. In other words, all U.S.-backed anti-Marxist forces must go while Soviets, Cubans and their ilk remain. The regime in Nicaragua calls itself "Sandinista" after an old nationalist hero. Anti-Sandinistas are termed "contras" or counter-revolutionaries. The "antis" are all born, home-grown Nicaraguans.

One big bone sticks in the throats of the ruling Marxist Nicaraguan collective — that of Eden Pastora Gomez, better known as "Commander Zero." He led the fight to overthrow the Somoza dictatorship and refused to kowtow to Soviet and Cuban overlords. When the junta warned him to behave or else, Commander Zero rallied followers, declared that the revolution was "betrayed" and wages his own partisan war against the regime today.

A PLEASANT surprise surfaced, which President Reagan and Secretary of State Shultz welcomed, when left-wing guerrillas agreed to begin "peace" talks in a little town in ravaged El Salvador. The move was generated first by democratically-elected Salvadoran President Jose Napoleon Duarte, right here before a disbelieving U.N. Duarte, who went to college at Notre Dame, is a middle-of-the-road Christian Democrat. He went unarmed to the meeting with guerrilla leaders who agreed to another session next month. That's real progress, which Mondale once demanded and fell silent when it actually happened.

On the issue of our liberation of the tiny island of Grenada, being converted into military use for Soviet-Cuban purposes, Mondale has a special problem. His running mate, Mrs. Ferraro, disagrees with him about Communist setups in such regions and would look the other way. How's that for security?

While Mondale agrees basically with the president about Grenada, he remained mum on Rev. Jesse Jackson's visit to Havana, where the black aspirant for the Democratic nomination hailed Fidel Castro last June. President Reagan, on the attack, sharply rebuked Mondale the other day for his silence, declaring:

"MY OPPONENT failed to repudiate the Rev. Jesse Jackson when he stood with Fidel Castro and cried 'Long live Cuba, long live Castro, long live Che Guevara.'"

As we all know, Castro is the Soviet Union's chief surrogate in Latin America and does Soviet bidding in hot spots around the world. Mondale, it seems to me, shies away from any rejection of Jackson lest he lose Jackson's pledge of support in this election.

Why the U.S.S.R. is so involved in the Caribbean area is subject to lots of speculation; from sabotaging our trade routes to promoting subversion in our back yard. Interestingly, Soviet leader Konstantin Chernenko, however, gave an interview to "The Washington Post," listing, as he put it, four ways to reopen a superpower dialogue, including arms control. Chernenko's views were a restatement of what the U.S.S.R. relayed to Washington after the president conferred with Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko and were welcomed as a possible thaw by the White House.

The Soviet interview, so close to our debating time, also puts already shaky ground under Mondale who demands talks with Moscow, it appears, for talks' sake. Stay close, as I hope you will, to the tube tonight.

Debate over Gramm-Doggett advertising tactics continues

AUSTIN (A) — The Phil Gramm-Lloyd Doggett fight over television ads continued Saturday when the Gramm campaign released statements questioning the accuracy of a Doggett ad.

The ad, featuring a hand cranking a jack-in-the-box, says "when it comes to taxes, Phil Gramm has a surprise for you."

The narrator says Gramm favors "an end to deductions for home mortgage interest payments."

Identical statements from the Texas Association of Builders and the Texas Association of Realtors said the allegation is "totally false."

"Gramm was instrumental in convincing President Reagan that home mortgage interest deductibility should be part of any flat tax proposal," the groups said.

Doggett spokesman Paul Begala said, "The ad says the truth."

The ad is based on an April newspaper account of a Gramm talk to the Texas Independent Producers and Royalty Owners Association in Fort Worth.

Gramm was quoted in the Fort Worth Star-Telegram as saying, "Ideally, I'd like to have a totally flat system with only direct business expenses deductible."

Begala said Gramm made the comment to "a bunch of fat-cat, Republican high rollers ... who already own their homes. We caught him. Phil, stop hiding behind realtors. Stop hiding behind home builders."

Meanwhile, Doggett said Gramm should withdraw a television ad that accused the Democratic challenger of "unethical advertising."

In a statement released Friday, Doggett said Gramm should be forced to withdraw the ad after an official with Advertising Age magazine called Gramm's use of the commercial "a gross distortion."

"We got people calling in here asking if Doggett has been indicted for something," said James Carville, a Doggett campaign strategist.

The Gramm ad uses as its source an Aug. 2 Advertising Age article that says Doggett may have violated an advertising code of ethics in a commercial used during the Democratic primary.

"There's nothing in the article to say there was an official citation," said Advertising Age editor Frank Danzig.

An Austin attorney state Republican party leaders won't back down from a planned voter fraud campaign, despite protests from Democrats who say the program is designed to intimidate minority voters.

Will Garwood Jr., head of the Republican voter fraud program, said that GOP promises to pay rewards to persons reporting cases of fraud are not designed to intimidate black and Hispanic voters.

"To use the word intimidation, that's a big lie," Garwood said. "I don't understand how anyone qualified and registered to vote can be intimidated by a reward program."

George Strake, state Republican Party chairman, asked state Democratic chairman Bob Slagle to join him earlier this week in a bipartisan effort aimed at stemming voter fraud, but Slagle said the plan was a "snitch program."

"They're playing white people for fools, too," said S.M. Wright of Dallas, vice president of the Missionary Baptist General Convention of Texas. "We know what those Republicans are doing. They are trying to pit black against white and white against black."

Truck, church bus collision kills three

LAREDO, Texas (AP) — A pickup truck swerved head-on Saturday into a bus carrying a Houston church group to Mexico for a shopping trip, killing the bus driver and two people in the truck and injuring all 46 bus passengers, authorities said.

The accident occurred at about 5 a.m. on U.S. Highway 59 about 40 miles east of Laredo in rural southwestern Texas, state troopers said.

Although thunderstorms, tornadoes and heavy rains plagued portions of south Texas early Saturday, authorities said the weather was clear and the two-lane highway dry at the time of the crash.

"Everybody was asleep when the truck came out of the other lane and hit us head-on," said the Rev. John H. Wilbran, pastor of the Greater New Hope Baptist Church, who was treated for cuts and bruises.

Some of the injured were able to crawl out windows, but others were trapped in the vehicle for 30 minutes until help arrived, Wilbran said.

Department of Public Safety Trooper Robert Guerra said officials were still investigating the cause of the accident.

"We have a trooper here who is going to reconstruct the accident, but as far as we know, the pickup swerved into the westbound lane and both vehicles struck head-on," Guerra said.

Dr. Diane Freeman of Mercy Regional Medical Center in Laredo said 45 people had been treated for mostly minor injuries, such as scrapes and bruises, and one man was sent to surgery for a facial injury.

Seven were admitted for treatment and observation, said spokesman Jorge Ramirez.

The dead were identified as bus driver Roy Lee Nowlin, 42, of Houston; Mario Adrian Garcia, 27, of Freer, a passenger in the truck; and William Timothy Sinclair, 31, of Corpus Christi, the driver of the truck, authorities said.

An official for Houston-based Texas Bus Lines, which owns the bus, said the group was on a routine shopping trip.

Prosecutors weave web against former nurse

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Ex-nurse Genene Jones, serving a 99-year prison sentence for killing a toddler with a dose of a muscle relaxant, spent four days last week listening to prosecutors attempt to weave another web of evidence against her.

Ms. Jones, 33, is on trial on charges that she injured a 1-month-old baby on Jan. 9, 1982 by injecting him with a blood-thinner while she was employed at Bexar County's Medical Center Hospital.

Prosecutors presented a series of witnesses who said Rolando Santos, who was hospitalized in January 1982 for treatment of pneumonia, was doing well before the shifts that Ms. Jones worked.

Kathy McKinney testifying Friday that she attended to child on many day shifts before Ms. Jones cared for him on evening shifts in the pediatrics intensive care unit.

Ms. McKinney testified that just three hours before the infant started bleeding profusely, he was breathing and eating well.

She also testified the baby was stable on her shift both Dec. 29 and Jan. 6, two days the baby suffered life-threatening seizures while Ms. Jones, then a vocational nurse, was caring for him.

The Santos child, now nearly three, has since recovered and his mother testified he is doing fine.

Prosecutors have called several nurses to the witness stand in an effort to show the baby was in stable condition when Ms. Jones was not working.

But during cross examination Friday, former nurse Christine DeLa-Garza told the court the infant bled heavily on days Ms. Jones was not working.

The nurse also testified she administered heparin, a blood-thinner, to the child, but the dosage was safe.

Ms. Jones could draw another 99-year sentence if she is convicted in her current non-jury trial. State District Judge Pat Priest is hearing the evidence and will make a ruling in the case following Ms. Jones' decision to waive a jury trial.

Testimony is scheduled to resume Monday.

Legislators will need to successfully overhaul prison system in 1985

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — One of the successes, perhaps the greatest success, of the 1983 Legislature was its effort to overhaul the Texas prison system.

Unfortunately, legislators will have to repeat that success in 1985.

The 1983 session's efforts on the prison system were unusual, compared to previous efforts at overhauling the Texas Department of Corrections, because efforts by conservative and middle-of-the-road legislators on behalf of alternative approaches to simply building more prisons.

Part of the reason for that change was purely economic: Lawmakers last year faced a budget crunch, as they will again in 1985.

Part of it was the feeling that simply building more prisons obviously wasn't the entire answer, so that some new approaches should be tried. However, building new prisons may have to be part of the answer to solving the TDC's problems, and lawmakers are faced with the problem of where to get the funds to build new units.

One thing has become exceedingly obvious in recent weeks: Legislators don't want to raise taxes to make things better for prisoners.

TDC has submitted a $766 million budget request for the 1986-87 biennium, up by 24.9 percent from the current budget, including $71.7 million for construction and repairs.

But that, says Rep. Ray Keller, R-Duncanville, who chairs the House Law Enforcement Committee, doesn't include any new units, which would raise the total even higher.

House of Representatives Speaker Gib Lewis has said he's not overly sympathetic to the TDC's request for an increase, and doesn't think legislators, or taxpayers are, either.

Gov. Mark White has called on TDC to employ "innovative techniques" to hold down its budget request and has suggested selling some TDC farmland near urban areas as a means of reducing the requested increase.

Still, despite the money problems, and despite continued violence in the prison system, legislators are hopeful problems at TDC can be addressed sucessfully in 1985.

Keller has been one of the most vocal critics of TDC in recent years and has helped lead efforts to overhaul the system. He also has had kind words for TDC's efforts to improve the system, and particularly for work done by Raymond Procunier, the new prison director.

"I'm still positive about them being on the right track," Keller says.

"The agency has been out of control for several years and they'll have some hard decisions to make...But I think that in terms of having the right people in the right place at the right time, I think they've got it."

Keller says he's not convinced that new prison units are needed "at this point," but agrees there will be a need for it in the future.

TDC does need to shift its emphasis on the type of units it builds, Keller argues, and should go to more "minimum and medium security facilities," rather than maximum security units.

Nor should TDC continue to purchase large tracts of farm land, Keller says. What he feels TDC needs at the moment, and one of the reasons for TDC's large budget increase, is additional guards.

Keller agrees that elimination of the "building tender" program — using inmates to control other inmates — has been a factor in the inreased violence reported this year at TDC.

"The violence is a symptom, according to prison experts, of mismanagement," Keller notes. "That mismanagement is partly related to the past administration, but it's more involved than that."

"When you eliminate the building tenders, you create a void in the social structure in the inmate population. That structure is trying to be reinstalled right now...ethnic gangs are trying to fill it."

Also, he says, problems are being reported more openly than in the past. "We had inmate deaths," Keller says, "that were listed as 'autopsy pending'...in some cases over seven years."

Keller says the alternative programs adopted in 1983 have been successful, but that use of restitution centers, intended to divert nonviolent offenders from TDC, has taken longer to implement than expected.

Those centers should help slow the need for new prisons, but eventually, with an increasing population, TDC will need new units, he comments.

The question, Keller notes, is what's needed now and how to provide it.

"There are some tough decisions to make," Keller says, but that if the problems remain difficult, both legislators and the public are better informed on those problems.

Industry changes force major city hospitals to advertise for patients

AUSTIN (AP) — Jack Campbell says three years ago he would not have even "thought about" a big-time advertising campaign for his hospital.

But now St. David's Community Hospital is into advertising in a major way. On the radio, a soothing female voice pushes the hospital's "Special Delivery" maternity package, complete with "one guaranteed price."

"I'm convinced it's necessary and I think there's a return on the dollar," Campbell, St. David's executive director, said of the $200,000 ad budget. "The return will benefit the patients. It's going to reduce pressure on price increases."

Advertising has become a fact of life for many major city hospitals. It's a decision forced on some hospitals by several factors, including major changes in Medicare and increased competition for the health care dollar.

Congress changed the face of the hospital industry in April 1983 by mandating a major overhaul of Medicare. Under the new system, which is being phased in, the key letters are DRG — "diagnosis related groups."

ALL DIAGNOSES fall into one of 467 DRGs and regardless of the actual bill, Medicare pays a set amount for each DRG. Under the old system, hospitals recovered a percentage of actual costs.

Fearing a loss of Medicare revenue, hospital officials say they are aiming their advertising at non-Medicare patients — patients who are also coveted by the growing number of for-profit hospitals as well as health maintenance organizations, minor emergency centers and other facilities.

"DRGs and all the competition make it very, very difficult," said Bob Spurck, administrator of the city-owned Brackenridge Hospital.

Brackenridge, which must fight the "welfare hospital" image that many municipal hospitals face, uses ads to boast about it's new building, maternity care and highly regarded emergency room.

"Combining the comforts of home delivery with the security of Austin's newest medical facility," says a Brackenridge maternity department ad.

"WHEN YOU'RE a public hospital, people might assume you have the oldest, rustiest machinery in town," said Sara Rider, Brackenridge administrator for community relations and marketing.

"A lot of people didn't even realize that this new, nine-story white tower was Brackenridge Hospital. A lot of people thought it was a state office building," she said.

At St. David's, a hospital celebrating its 60th anniversary, officials found similar recognition problems.

"Too few people had heard of us," said Claireen Fellers, assistant director for public relations.

So the hospitals turned to ads to raise their profile. Seton Medical Center, another major hospital here, has counted more on direct mail.

IT'S ALL A BATTLE against what Campbell calls "lower utilization of hospitals." And that sparks the need for more aggressive patient-hunting.

"People say, 'Why advertise?' It's like any other business. If you have a service or a product people have to know about it if they are going to utilize it. It's that simple," said Campbell.

"It's like any other business. If you can increase volume and you can spread your overhead, you are running on a more economical basis. There's no other real force in the marketplace that keeps hospital prices down because we don't yet compete on price," he added.

Officer fired for sexual advances

DALLAS (AP) — A three-year Dallas police veteran was fired Friday for "regularly using his job to try and pick up girls" he stopped for traffic violations, police Chief Billy Prince said.

Dannie Lawson, 27, was formally accused of lying to a supervisor, conduct unbecoming an officer, dereliction of duty and violating standard operating procedures, internal affairs Lt. Richard Hatler said.

"He was regularly and consistently ... trying to get phone numbers, having them (women) sit in the patrol car, flirting and offering them a choice of tickets," Prince said. "He tried to get a ticket dismissed for one of these women."

Lawson, who could not be reached for comment by The Associated Press Saturday night, can appeal his dismissal to the city manager's office.

Lawson's supervisors asked for the investigation after two female motorists told them in late July that Lawson's conduct had been inappropriate during a traffic stop.

None of the woman denied being involved in a minor traffic violation, Hatler said, adding that investigators contacted about 20 female motorists Lawson ticketed from May through July.

"He would go into deep, personal questioning during these traffic stops, questions not related to the stop," Hatler said.

Lawson's remarks were not "blatantly sexual," but suggested a desire for "further personal involvement," Hatler said.

He added, however, that investigators found no evidence of sexual contact between Lawson and any motorist.

"This type of behavior is neither condoned nor encouraged among police officers," he said. "While incidents of this nature seldom come to our attention, when they do they are definitely investigated."

Sixteen former LTV employees arrested

DALLAS (AP) — Union leaders say they are mystified as to why police arrested 16 former LTV Corp. workers allegedly seeking "solidarity money" at two of the aeronautics company's construction plants.

Police say they made the arrests Friday after the men ignored security guards' orders to leave.

The men were soliciting donations from workers to aid about 60 former LTV employees who were fired during stalled negotiations for a new labor contract, a union official told the Dallas Times Herald.

About 3,000 production line workers who are members of the United Auto Workers Local 848 have been working without a contract since March 5.

West Texas drive-ins not dead

ABILENE, Texas (AP) — Picture a peaceful evening with dusk descending on the dry West Texas landscape. Locusts whining in the distance being drowned out by music blaring from hundreds of speakers.

People, with popcorn and drinks nearby, adjusting their car seats or lounge chairs, preparing to enjoy a night at the drive-in.

Only fond memories of the past? Not necessarily so. A handful of drive-ins — yes, drive-ins, as in theaters and in movies — is alive still in the Big Country.

In Stamford and Sweetwater, in Ranger and in Rule, and in between Dublin and De Leon, drive-in theaters are open. Add to those Abilene's Park Drive-In, if you are including theaters that show only X-rated flicks, and Stephenvilles's Starlite, if you are counting those that sometimes show Spanish films, and you come up with a grand total of seven drive-in theaters left in the Big Country.

Only a couple of decades or so ago, practically every town had a drive-in and a walk-in theater, said A.J. Stone, owner of the S&S in Stamford, the dean of the Big Country drive-ins.

Most of those drive-in theaters are long gone, while the walk-ins have been boarded up.

Here and there stand solitary drive-in screens, a reminder of times of larger cars and cheaper gas, of times before color television, and of times before "crackerjack" theaters and video game arcades in shopping malls.

THE SCREENS not in use easily outnumber the ones still in use. In Sweetwater, the Midway now is a salvage yard. In Abilene, the town has encroached upon the decaying Town and County. Near Cross Plains, the Pioneer has seen its last frontier. In Snyder, the Tiger is now extinct, its playground equipment rusting just outside Towle Park. Ouside of Merkel, Breckenridge, Eastland, and numerous other towns, drive-in screens remain, projecting memories to theater-goers driving by them.

No signs remain of other theaters. The Elmwood Skyline, Ailene's first drive-in, fell victim as the city pressed southward. The Bank of Commerce is located on its former site. Another well-known theater, the Oak in Coleman, infamous for the movies which it advertised as XXX-rated, is no longer there.

But at the drive-ins that still are open, things are pretty much the same as always.

Picture a theater where parents can take youngsters without worrying about disturbing other patrons or the hassle of finding a babysitter. A place where people can watch a movie on the giant screen without having to dress up.

"We must be doing something right — we're still here," Stone said of the S&S. Actually, he credits the theater's success to three factors — determination, showmanship and location.

THE THEATER is located on "the strip" on U.S. Highway 277 in Stamford, one of the few "wet" precincts north of Abilene.

Danny Poor, owner of the Rebel in Dublin, said his theater still is in business because of "dumb luck and stubbornness," despite storms and fires that have all but leveled the theater.

Also, being located "halfway between the college (Tarleton State in Stephenville) and the first liquor store (in Procter)" has provided a steady supply of customers.

Allene Whorton, owner of the Tower, said Rule's drive-in has survived because it's "home-owned and operated. We can lose a little here and lose a little there and keep going." The Tower is a family business, she said, providing family entertainment.

Picture teen-agers sneaking in the exit of a theater. Cramming a friend in the trunk of a car while driving through the box office. Driving off with a theater speaker.

THEATER OWNERS disagree on whether this sort of thing still happens.

"High school kids don't go to the movies like they used to," Poor said. "Saturday is the sorriest night of the week."

Teen-agers don't try to sneak in anymore.

"They go to daddy and get the money," he said.

Cars traveling in through the exit at the Rocket will get flats from metal spikes that allow traffic to pass only one way through the exit — out.

People trying to sneak in through the exit at the S&S have a tough chore since the Stones live in an apartment built into the front of the theater.

Occasionally, someone will sneak in via a car trunk or pick-up truck tool chest, but most of them are caught, Stone said.

At Rule, Mrs. Whorton said, there used to be a fence around the theater, but people would climb under or through it so it was let go to shambles.

PICTURE TAKING whatever you want to eat and drink to the theater. Climbing into the backseat and enjoying the show.

Only at the drive-in can people bring a bucket of chicken and drinks and enjoy the show, said James Hallmark, manager of the Rocket.

People may drink beer or other alcoholic beverages they bring as long as they do not disturb other theater-goers, he said.

The same rule applies at Stamford and their theaters. At Rule, Mrs. Whorton said people know that if anyone gets out of hand, her son, Jack, a local lawman, will be called to settle things down.

Unlike the modern mall theaters, without personalities, drive-ins each have their own traits.

The S&S is the only one that still has a playground for children next to the screen. It also is the only one where the owners live in the screen.

Stone and his wife, Mary, moved into the theater shortly after it was built in 1949. Slumber parties for his daughter, Andrea, were held in the concession stand.

The theater still uses its original carbon arc projectors. Metal lawn chairs are set up near the concession stand and near the playground for walk-in customers or those who don't want to sit in their cars.

The Rocket in Sweetwater, on the other hand, has the latest equipment. The projection equipment is the same type used in the Mall of Abilene United Artists Cinema Six.

United Artists, the company that owns the theaters in the mall, owns the Rocket, making it the only drive-in in the areas outside of Abilene owned by the chain.

The Rocket also is the only drive-in to have sound broadcast through cars' radio speakers. In the event a car doesn't have a radio, the first two rows still have speakers to hang on windows.

Sometimes an Elvis Presley tape is played before shows. One night not long ago, the assistant manager's young daughter had the honor of announcing, "The snack bar is closing in five minutes." She punctuated her announcement with a giggle.

Dublin's Rebel is the only drive-in in the area flying the Confederate flag, said Poor, a Civil War buff.

BUILT IN 1953, it was bought by Poor's parents in 1962. Originally, the theater was called the "High View or something like that," he said. His mother wanted to call it the Sky-Tel, and that name was used until about 12 years ago when it became the Rebel.

The theater has survived "two tornadoes — actually the last storm was probably just a high wind," Poor said. Also, the Rebel has risen up to overcome a fire that threatened to cut short its life.

The Ranger Drive-In probably will be converted to radio sound in about a year, owner Jackie Thornton said.

One of the big attractions of the drive-ins is that the concessions are so much cheaper than the mall theaters, he said.

The Ranger draws people from about a 40-mile radius.

The Tower in Rule is a "little, worn-out drive-in," Mrs. Whorton said, but it still attracts customers on weekends. Despite its ragged appearance, the projection and sound equipment are good, she said.

The Whortons built the theater some-odd years ago, Mrs. Whorton said. Until a recent ailment, Mrs. Whorton ran the concession stand, her 78-year-old husband ran the projector, and her mother ran the box office.

Business "is not real good, but it's good enough," she said. "We probably lose money year in and year out."

The screen faces the highway and people driving to Rule from Rochester naturally pull off the road to see what's going on.

For that reason, X-rated movies cannot be shown at the Tower, Mrs. Whorton said, adding they would never be shown there, "period."

The S&S has been showing films longer than any other in the area, Stone said. First, there were the black-and-white burlesque films. Those gave way to nature-nudist camp films, he said, followed by today's films and The Motion Picture Association of America's rating system.

The S&S began showing one adult film a month, then two, Stone said, but the demand was so great that it began showing more. Now the theater shows adult films on Tuesdays through Thursdays, and regular movies on weekends.

"The X-rated movies draw a certain clientele," Stone said, "You can depend on their patronage every week."

People drive as far as 90 miles to see the X-rated shows, Stone said. The theater mails schedules to people in Paducah, Munday and Seymour.

"Dyess is well-represented here," Stone said, and truckers will park the cabs of their 18-wheelers along the back row so they don't block other people's view.

Poor said people say he is crazy for showing movies other than the X-rated ones. The X-rated flicks are the most popular, he said.

The Park, built in 1949, has been showing skin flicks since the 1970s. It offered regular movies for a couple of months in 1980, but returned to the X-rated fare. The theater was raided by the vice squad in 1981, and adopted a "softer" X-rated format in 1982.

While the S&S, the Rebel and the Park show X-rated films, along with the Park Drive-In in Abilene, which shows nothing else, other theaters adamantly refuse to do so.

"I personally, would rather not get into the X-rated market," Hallmark said, adding he would like to show entertainment that anyone may see.

Thorton said the Ranger Drive-In has never shown X-rated movies, and never will as long as he owns it.

Only at drive-in theaters could you meet longtime drive-in operators such as the Stones, the Whortons or Poor.

STONE HAS BEEN in the theater business for 53 years, starting as a "theater punk" who delivered circulars and did odd jobs. He worked for the Leon theater circuit as an advance advertising man. Among the towns he worked in were Haskell, Crowell, Baird, Albany and Graham before settling back in Stamford in 1949.

The Whortons have owned theaters Llano, Spur, San Saba and Haskell in addition to Rule.

Commissioner retiring

AUSTIN (AP) — State Education Commissioner Raymon Bynum, branded by Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby as an obstacle to the public school reform program, announced his retirement Saturday.

Bynum said he had been planning the move "for some time" and that it was not a sole result of the recent criticism.

"This is based on a variety of things. I'll not go into those today, mostly being personal and family," he told the State Board of Education.

William Kirby, deputy commissioner for finance and programs, was named acting commissioner, effective when Bynum leaves office on Oct. 31.

Board Chairman Jon Brumley of Fort Worth said a "search firm" probably would be hired to conduct a nationwide hunt for a new commissioner. He said a new commissioner could be appointed "as early next year as possible."

Bynum became commissioner in September 1981, hired by the elected Board of Education that was replaced this year with an appointed board. In comments at the new board's first meeting last month, Hobby said the board would find opposition to reform within the education community.

Bynum later said Hobby told him he was among those who tried to "sabotage" the reform.

Brumley told Bynum Saturday he has been "simply wonderful" in working with the new board.

Midlanders' therapy now closer to home

The rooms look very plain. No fancy equipment, no chrome and stainless steel, not even a white uniform in sight.

But at the Permian Basin Rehabilitation Center — Midland Branch, lives are changed. Here, trained therapists work with children and adults who have varying disabilities and teach them how to do the everyday things that most people take for granted.

"No one is turned away," said Wilma Nix, social worker for the facility.

"We have a sliding scale for fees and will work out costs with each patient. Our main goal is to get them rehabilitated."

Rehabilitation is something that Midland patients had to drive to Odessa for, until the Permian Basin Rehabilitation Center opened a branch in Midland in June.

"Its all under the same heading," said Ms. Nix. "All we care about is if we can help that patient. Whether it's Midland or Odessa is not important."

While Midland branch alleviates extra driving for many patients, its services are not as extensive as Odessa's.

The center has five departments. The speech and hearing department has a director (Lynn Leever) and five certified speech therapists. Barbara Parker is director of the audiology department which has one audiologist who works at both Odessa and Midland. Physical therapy is at Parkview Hospital and is run by Judy McGookey, who supervises three licensed therapists. Elizabeth Schwander heads occupational therapy and works with patients "from the waist up" in developing muscle coordination. Ms. Nix is the only worker in the Midland Social Services department.

Therapy at the center differs for each patient.

"We see all ages and any number of physical problems," said Ms. Nix. "People just released from the hospital, children referred to us from their school for stuttering problems, elderly patients with aphasia (knowing what to say, but not being able to verbally express it), people who have had laryngectomies (removal of the larnyx) — you name it."

Susan Campbell, a speech pathologist, is enthusiastic about her work at the center.

"It's great experience for me to work with so many different kinds of cases," she said. "It really keeps me on my toes."

Ms. Campbell works with the laryngectomy patients, aphasics and school children with speech problems.

Couple extends family with adopted children

Everyone is familiar with the "Old Woman in the Shoe." But don't tell that tale to Mary Dunn of Midland.

Mrs. Dunn and her husband, Melvin, have opened their home to six adopted children over the last nine years in addition to their six "biological children" and are awaiting news on still another adoption.

"Parenting is very important to us," said Mrs. Dunn.

And unlike the classic tale, Mrs. Dunn is an attractive, radiant woman in her early 40's who happens to be the mother of four handicapped children, all of whom use the services provided at the Permian Basin Rehabilitation Center in Odessa and Midland.

The Dunns decided when their youngest child was still a baby that they wanted to adopt children.

"We made the decision to ask for a 'hard to place' child," she said. "We didn't ask for medical problems, but we were open to it. We wanted an older boy, since we already had six daughters and one son."

In December 1975 the Dunns adopted Jody, a 7-year old Korean boy with a severe hearing loss.

"An audiologist in Midland referred us to Callier Communications Center in Dallas," said Mrs. Dunn, "but they referred us right back to the Permian Basin Rehabilitation Center." Mrs. Dunn is enthusiastic about the center and its new branch in Midland.

"I knew it existed before I went to Callier, but I didn't realize its scope."

Since Jody, the couple has adopted five more children, three of whom have handicaps.

"Jody was such a happy experience that we just kept right on," said Mrs. Dunn.

Jody's younger brother Sam, 7, also has a profound hearing loss. Their sister Shil, 6, has a heart defect that requires therapy. Keith, 2, the youngest, has cerebral palsy and goes for therapy at both the PBRC and the Cerebral Palsy Center in Midland.

Mrs. Dunn is casual when talking about her family.

Dee Stacy has been serving up dishes such as these for customers at Luigi's Italian Restaurant since 1962.

Waitress Stacy fixture at Luigi's since 1962

Midlander in Profile

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

When Dee Stacy got off the train at the Midland depot 22 years ago, she was more than a little nervous.

She was in a strange town, she had a sick husband and three young children to support, and her work experience was limited.

But Luigi's Italian Restaurant had an ad in the paper for a waitress, and though owner Louis Hochman preferred to hire older women, he gave the 25-year-old a job.

"I think he hired me because he felt sorry for me," says Ms. Stacy. "I came to Midland on a Saturday, went to work on Monday, and I've been here ever since."

It was a quick transition for the Ohio native, who'd come to the arid Southwest with her family because her husband had athsma.

"He just picked Midland out, and I didn't have anything to lose."

Ms. Stacy has been a fixture at Luigi's since Hochman put her to work that first day, and she's never regretted leaving the Midwest.

"I love it here — I wouldn't go back to Ohio for a million dollars."

When she first arrived, Ms. Stacy was embarrassed about her Yankee accent, but now she teases more recent arrivals with the aplomb of a native Texan. In 22 years, she's never thought about finding another job.

"I feel very secure — and I don't like looking for new jobs."

What she found appealing about Midland when she first came here was the small-town atmosphere. But the city has grown a lot since then, and she's not sure today's new arrivals are having the same experience she did in 1962.

"To me, it's gotten too big. You used to be able to go everywhere in town and know everyone you saw — now you're lucky to see anyone you know.

"People are too busy now, more concerned about their own little world. I don't think people are as outgoing or as friendly as they were back then."

But behind the doors of Luigi's, time has stood still, at least as far as the small-town atmosphere is concerned. Ms. Stacy says the people, the atmosphere and the menu have remained more or less as they were two decades ago.

"Everything changes with the times, but we stay the same," she says. "We still have a lot of old customers. It's kind of a family restaurant where everyone knows everyone."

She has few regrets about how her life has turned out, though she does wish she'd finished her education before getting married.

"I don't regret having my children, though," she hastens to add. David, 30, is in San Angelo getting a management degree; Cindy, 26, is attending Texas Tech; and 24-year-old Dale is about to start college.

Her children are grown now, but Ms. Stacy still has the Hochmans, whom she's always thought of as family.

"They've raised me, really. They have been just real good to me over the years."

Ms. Stacy was long ago divorced from her first husband, but she's now happily remarried to Perry Stacy, a salesman at Rogers Ford, and they spend their spare time fishing.

"And Perry is teaching me how to use a shotgun — I'm really going to love it!" she says, taking imaginary aim at an imaginary quail and squeezing the trigger with gusto.

When not serving up Italian food at Luigi's, Ms. Stacy cooks up her own — not Italian, but Mexican.

"And I make the best roast in town."

But what about Italian food? Does the woman who's spent 22 years serving up countless plates of Italian food at Luigi's ever whip up something similar at home?

She pauses. And laughs.

"Rarely. Very rarely."

Schools, handicapped students' parents at odds over law

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

School districts have theoretically "declared war against parents of handicapped children" over a 10-year-old federal law which requires appropriate public instruction for all students, according to Austin attorney Reed Martin, a legal representative of Advocacy Inc.

Martin made the accusation while addressing parents of handicapped children attending a training seminar sponsored by the Midland Association for Retarded Citizens (MARC). The seminar's purpose was to inform parents of their legal rights as equal participants in the educational process.

"Unless parents are aware of their legal rights and come prepared, special education students may not receive appropriate instruction," Martin said.

The federal law implemented in 1974 requires individual, appropriate public education for all students; and also provides for an Individual Education Plan (IEP) in which parents and schools act as equal partners in determining the types of education that will be provided.

When a student is referred for special education he undergoes comprehensive testing to determine whether he or she needs and qualifies for it. If so, the student's case is presented to a committee who prepares an IEP for the student. The committee consists of educators, administrators, diagnosticians, parents and often the student.

However, the Texas Education Agency (TEA) and some school districts believe "we have gone too far in special education and should cancel it," according to Martin.

Also, special education teachers have been "misled by the TEA into thinking that the IEP is something unusual. They're telling them to continue doing what they've been doing while on the other hand, they're trying to cancel it," he said.

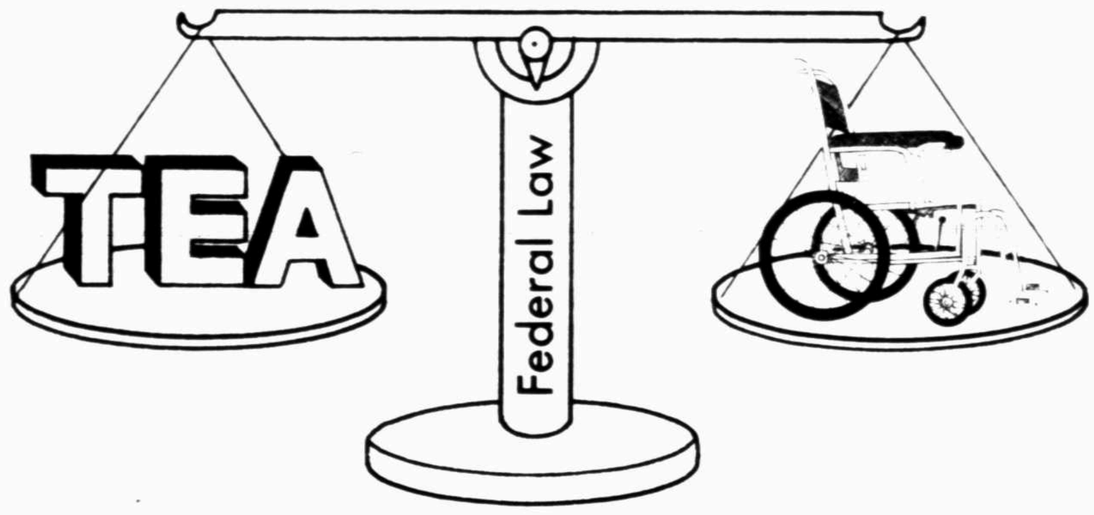
"The Congress intended this to be a give-and-take process where the school and the parent have equal input in determining what is in the best interest of the individual child. It was never intended to be an adversarial meeting," he added.

W.N. Kirby, TEA deputy commissioner for finance and program administration, responded to Martin's charges, saying, "I don't think it's accurate at all to say we are against handicapped children or their parents.

"As a state agency, we are bound to uphold the law of the land. We don't have the option to agree or disagree. We must carry it out."

Kirby noted, however, different interpretations of the law often result in confusion and disagreements. If there is a disagreement, the parties must resolve the conflict by themselves or by filing the grievance with a due process hearing officer.

Ray Unterbrink, executive director of MARC said, "I've not known MISD (Midland Independent School District) to be resistent to sound reasonable suggestions. If you are an equal partner, MISD is very cooperative.



"That's why it's essential that the parent be involved in the IEP process of his child...It's intimidating to face five people with degrees on the wall and disagree with them, but you have something all those people do not. You know your child better than any of these people...You're the only person who can judge without being tainted by budgets and personnel limitations," he added.

The 1974 federal legislation also provides for:

Rambling thoughts from a tangled brain...

Rambling thoughts from a tangled brain in desperate need of a cup of coffee and another cigarette:

— For those who say the governor and H. Ross Perot are out to lunch for suggesting high school athletics are over-emphasized, I point to the recent Odessa Permian-Midland Lee football game in which 22,000 people sat through a rainstorm to cheer for their favorites. I wonder how many of those fans visited their kids' classrooms during Public School Week.

— There is nothing more pathetic than spotting an obviously-confused elderly person traveling the wrong way on a one-way street.

— A recent poll revealed that young people between the ages of 18 and 24 are Reagan's strongest supporters while senior citizens are more inclined to vote for Mondale. Somehow, that seems strange.

— I wonder how long it will take the president to say "There you go again..." in tonight's debate. Frankly, I didn't think it was all that great the first time around.

— It's sad in a way that more Midland night spots don't offer live entertainment, even if nothing more than a solo act of singing and laid back guitar playing.

— The Midland Jazz Festival is a class act.

— Where do all of those rich-looking yuppies I see downtown during the week hang out after hours? Plastic Dallas, most likely.

— Is it just me, or are those guys in the TV commericals who are willing to run half way across town for one lousy beer really nuts? It would take at least a six-pack to get most beer drinkers I know to even consider a leisurely stroll around the block.

— A great line from Dan Jenkins: "The only thing worse than track is field."

— Will the Nehru jacket ever make a comeback?

— How about white shoes for men?

— I wonder how many cigarette lighters I have lost in the past 12 months.

— Where is that green one I bought yesterday?

— Whatever happened to Idi Amin?

— Did he really eat his neighbors?

— Miss America officials have rewritten the contest guidelines to read: "Nor have I done any act or engaged in any activity which is or could be characterized as dishonest, immoral, immodest, indecent or in poor taste." Does that mean if a contestant picked her nose back in the fourth grade, she would be disqualified.

— I have a better idea. Instead of changing the by-laws, why don't they just do away with the pageant altogether?

— What the world needs now is an old-fashioned shower with two knobs...one marked "H" for hot and the other labeled "C" for cold. Stop building those silly gadgets that require an engineering degree to figure out.

— Another thing the world needs: More country-western songs about pick-up trucks, getting drunk and mean women who cheat on their men. Any song about eating crackers in bed, which one artist had the audacity to sing about, should never be given air time.

— An example of good country-western lyrics: "I've got four in the floor and a fifth under the seat."

— I want Willie Nelson to sing "Precious Memories" at my funeral.

— You meet interesting people at laundromats. They provide a view of Midland we sometimes forget.

— I wonder where I would be today if I had gone ahead and joined the Peace Corps five years ago as originally planned. Probably in a shallow grave outside San Salvador.

— Did I want to join because of a desire to help others or to satisfy my ego?

— I think I'll plead the fifth on that one. And not the one currently under my car seat.

Mary Dunn plays with the twins Keith, who has cerebral palsy, and Kathy. The Dunns have adopted several children who require therapy at the Permian Basin Rehabilitation Center.

"This is just how our family grew," she said. "Some grow from birth — we grew through adoption.

"Of course, sometimes it confuses the children," she said. "When Scotty (the Dunn's third adopted child) saw a pregnant woman talking to another woman about her baby being due, he couldn't understand all the fuss."

"My mother just goes to the airplane for her babies," he said.

Raising 12 children is no easy expense for any parent. When there are medical bills involved, it can be overwhelming. The Dunns, however, take it all in stride.

"Raising our family is what we spend our money on," said Mrs. Dunn. "We manage like any other family."

The Dunns also depend on local organizations like the PBRC, Shriner's Hospital, CP Center and funds from different groups for medical costs. "And, of course, we have insurance," said Mrs. Dunn. Melvin Dunn is the owner of Midland Computer Systems.

Three of the Dunns' children — Julie, Pamela and Michael — have helped in their own way by earning scholarships to college. Julie, 21, is majoring in speech pathology.

Other family members include Elicia, 17, Suzie, 15, Danielle, 14, and Kathy — Keith's twin sister.

Mrs. Dunn offers encouragement for parents who have a handicapped child.

"I find a lot of help from support groups. If you can meet with other parents with similar problems, it helps."

And for parents of children with hearing losses, Mrs. Dunn recommends the Midland Council for Deaf and Hard of Hearing Children.

THERAPY

"Laryngectomies are usually people who have had cancer and have had their voice box removed," she said. "Through therapy, they learn different ways to talk. One way is the electrolarynx, a mechanical hand-held device which vibrates the tissue creating airflow or speech. Another is esophageal speech. This is the technique of swallowing air and then pushing it back into the oral cavity for speech use."

Ms. Campbell is particularly excited, however, about a new method of speech production.

"The easiest method for laryngectomies to achieve a 'new voice' is the Blom-Singer prothesis," she said. "This is a plastic device which fits into a hole in the throat, made by a surgeon during the laryngectomy. Air passes through freely for breathing and then vibrates the prothesis for speech production," she said.

Ms. Campbell finds working with aphasic adults rewarding as well.

"When someone has a stroke, it often affects the language part of the brain (the left side). Some patients can lose their ability to express but are able to understand what is said to them. Others understand what is being said to them but respond in meaningless jargon. Some lose any ability to express or understand.

"It's a challenge to find out exactly where the patient needs help," said Ms. Campbell. "Therapy differs for almost every patient."

Economist shows cotton farming can pay

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The question was rhetorical.

"Will it pay to grow cotton?" asked the economist.

"I can tell you the answer to that," said the farmer. "No."

But said the farmer, Gene Jones, if the market price the farmer gets for cotton were doubled to $1 a pound, then "this thing (farming) would fly."

The economist, Rick Patterson with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service (TAEX) at Fort Stockton, however, showed the farmers on paper how farming irrigated cotton could pay.

He didn't address dryland farming — the mainstay of Midland County's cotton production.

Patterson came up with a net return per acre of $133.05 based on 625 pounds of lint per acre at 56 cents a pounds.

Patterson's figures were based on production costs and practices provided by Roy Graham, hailed as one of Midland County's most efficient farmers, and from the Texas Crop and Livestock Reporting Service and TAEX.

PATTERSON PROJECTED gross receipts from the sale of cotton lint (56 cents a pound) and cottonseed ($100 a ton) and deficiency payments (21 cents a pound) at $541.25 per acre. But variable production costs shot expenses up to $302.81 per acre. Those included seeding, cultivating, applying herbicides, insecticides and fertilizers, paying for labor, equipment and fuel and harvesting and ginning. The pre-harvest expenses were $163.43, and the harvest and ginning costs were $139.38. Fixed costs, such as depreciation, interest, taxes and insurance, totaled $105.39 per acre.

Gross income of $541.25 minus costs of $408.20 nets $133.05 per acre.

But without any deficiency payment, projected at $131.25 per acre, and with the add-on costs of land rental at $20 per acre and a $5 management charge per acre, the costs would increase to $433.20 per acre. And according to Patterson, the break-even price for lint would be 60 cents a pound.

But, as farmers point out, there are the variables, and there are no guarantees.

Irrigated cotton may produce a bale (480 pounds) or 1⅕ bales per acre. But dryland cotton normally produces far less: half a bale or three-quarters of a bale per acre.

Or it may produce nothing or virtually nothing. The scourge of drought or the beating of hail could and have drastically reduced cotton production. Insects, such as the pervasive bollworm, have cut into production.

THE COST OF equipment, fuel and other expenses have made farming unprofitable in cases. If the farmer's management is not up to par, costs can go higher and production could drop lower.

And the cotton producer could end up losing the farm.

But Patterson's projections seemed to approach the optimum on Graham's Greenwood farm.

"He's got some good experiments going," fellow farmer Vernon Chandler said of Graham. "He's trying to stay on top of the best methods to see which ones pay and which ones don't."

Midland area farmers last week glimpsed Graham's operation in a mini-tour sponsored by the Midland County Agricultural Extension Service, headed up by County Agent Earnest Kiker. They even got a "free feed" — barbecue luncheon paid for by Community National Bank of Midland — and ate on bales of hay in real country fashion. Many took a "hay ride" on the farm and some climbed aboard Charlie Welch's horse-drawn buggy and surrey.

Kent Porter/Reporter-Telegram

Cotton, king of Midland County's cash crops, above, is almost ready for stripping on Roy Graham's farm. Joe Henggeler, irrigation engineer with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, right, talks about the variables in irrigation of cotton crops in a tour of Greenwood farmer Graham's crop.

Aside from the economics of farming, the session addressed other facets of agriculture: from fertilizing to watering.

"Does fertilizer pay?" asked TAEX agronomist Charles Stichler. "A lot of folks say 'no.' They put it out and see no response to it."

But he noted the necessity of nitrogen in the soil.

"Cotton does need it," he said. "You've got to have nitrogen to produce the yield.

"And if you don't have sufficient water, the cotton can't utilize the nitrogen," Stichler said.

"ONCE YOU PUT the seed in the ground, it's a gamble...It's a two-edged sword — the relationship between nitrogen and water."

Stichler also talked about the options of adding sulphur, phosphates and zinc to improve production.

"Whether or not it pays, I can't tell," he said. "It's one of those iffy things whether or not to put on sulphur. If I were farming, I wouldn't."

On applying zinc, Stichler said, "Sometimes it pays, and sometimes it doesn't."

Crop rotation, he noted, is "good for the ground. I know it's still hard to pay the bills."

Insects, as surely as poor soil and drought, can devastate crops.

TAEX entomologist Charles Allen noted that "a lot" of farmers lost their crops to bollworms in 1980 and again in 1984.

"If you can lose two crops in five years to bollworms and still make a profit, you're doing a good job."

Cost of spraying bollworms is $3.28 an acre, he said one study indicated.

"If you can't afford to spend that kind of money to prevent that (bollworm infestation)," he said, "you probably should not be farming cotton." He said farmers "can't afford to take that kind of chance" by not spraying bollworms. The chemical carbaryl has been used to control the insect.

Weeds can crowd out cotton. So, Stichler recommended spraying Bermuda grass, nutgrass and Johnson grass.

"YOU'RE NOT going to kill Johnson grass when it's got a seedhead on it."

TAEX irrigation engineer Joe Henggeler evaluated irrigation via the center pivot system, which, he said, "is the ideal way to water sandy soil."

Irrigation efficiency is measured by "What's going in versus what's coming out," he said.

In one study, 23 percent of the water was lost to wind drift.

On Graham's farm, Stichler evaluated a study of several cotton varieties to determine configuration of plants to accommodate cottonpickers. Study of cotton varieties are made to determine plants' yield in quality and volume of lint and to ascertain the plants' resistance to the elements and insects.

People of our community who make a difference.

Pat Estes

Midland is a progressive community where improvements are constantly being made in established organizations and new organizations are continuously being formed as the community's resources are cultivated. Such changes bring renewed strength, greater opportunities and a mulititude of questions - questions which can often be answered only after careful research.

Pat Estes, a member of the Board of Directors of the Midland County Hospital District and immediate past director the Midland Chamber of Commerce, often finds herself searching for answers to the community's questions. She says her faith in God and belief in her community motivate her to help other people find answers to their questions.

In September of 1979 Mrs. Estes was appointed to the Board of Directors of the hospital district. The district was still fairly new to Midlanders and greatly misunderstood in some instances. Many turned to Mrs. Estes to gain a clear understanding of what the hospital district had to offer them and what their responsibilities were toward the hospital. Though the district is well established now people still have questions, sometimes. This conservative director enjoys being able to answer those questions and to plan for future growth which may generate a entirely new set of questions.

There is, however, no question about Mrs. Estes' commitment to the youth of our community. She is currently serving as chairman of the Vocational Agricultural Advisory Committee for the Midland Independent School District. Mrs. Estes feels like it is important to provide character building opportunities for Midland's young people. That's why she worked in a number of organizations when her children were growing up in Midland. PTA, Girl Scouts, and FFA each claimed a block on this mom's calendar. As a member of the founding Board of High Sky Girl's Ranch, Mrs. Estes helped organize the ranch. She also took the time to help organize the first 4-H Horse Club ever. That Midland club later became the model for clubs across the state of Texas.

In addition, the Council of Church Women gained from Mrs. Estes' leadership at their clothing room for four years. The clothing room was set up to provide clothing, especially for children.

Faith, commitment, and action are why Mrs. Estes makes a difference in Midland.

Frozen grass can lead to poisoning

Frost will be hitting Midland County before long, and this could lead to prussic acid poisoning in livestock grazing certain pasture grasses and forage.

Although many plants contain the toxic material that causes poisoning, those causing the highest morality in livestock when grazing after they have been frozen and wilted are Johnson and Sudan grasses and sorghum or hybrids of these.

The most dangerous time as far as the grazing of these plants is concerned is following frost when the plant material begins to wilt. Livestock should not be allowed access to the wilted material until it has dried completely. This usually takes three or four days of good sunlight. New plant growth usually becomes nontoxic and can be grazed within 10 days to two weeks following a rain.

As far as prussic acid poisoning is concerned, the poison acts rapidly and can kill animals within minutes. In most acute cases, animals become affected within 10-15 minutes after eating toxic material and can die in two to three minutes. Symptoms may include a brief period of stimulation followed by depression and paralysis. Signs of colic may be present. Stupor (loss of sensibility), difficult breathing and frequent convulsions may result. Death is caused by suffocation since oxygen remains in the blood and is not exchanged to the tissues. This also causes the blood to appear bright red.

To prevent prussic acid poisoning in livestock these steps should be followed:

1. Allow plant material affected by frost to dry thoroughly before grazing. This may require a week or more of good sunlight.

2. Feed animals hay or a supplement before turning them in on plants that may contain prussic acid. Animals that are not hungry will not be affected as seriously by toxic material since their intake will be limited.

3. Remove all animals from the pasture if one in the herd shows any signs of poisoning.

4. Call a veterinarian immediately if an animal appears to be poisoned. An antidote to treat affected animals is highly efficient if given early. This product is available from veterinarians.

5. Have suspect plant material checked by the Texas Veterinary Medical Diagnostic Laboratories at College Station or Amarillo. Local veterinarians will be happy to submit samples for you.

The overall key to prevent prussic acid poisoning in livestock is to be aware of plant materials that may cause poisoning and then to keep cattle from grazing such plants until a safe period has passed.

Public hearing slated on Air Park master plan

The first public hearing on developing a master plan for a new Midland Air Park is scheduled for 3 p.m. Thursday in City Hall Council Chambers and will focus on introducing the consultants to the citizens.

It will be the first of five required public hearings with the last scheduled for May when the final draft of the master plan should be completed, according to Jon E. Mathiasen, assistant director of aviation/administration for the city.

The public hearing marks another phase in the City Council's plan to move Air Park from its location between Wadley and Loop 250 to northeast of the city — an area devoid of development.

The consulting firms of Daniel, Mann, Johnson & Mendenhall (DMJM) of Houston and Cress & Associates of Lexington, Ky., will be introduced. These firms will perform the site selection, environmental impact assessment and master plan for the new airport. The consultants will describe their approach for accomplishment of these tasks and the estimated time period for each project.

DMJM is the prime consultant and is in charge of the master plan, said Mathiasen.

The master plan is required by the Federal Aviation Administration before giving final approval to any construction on that site. This plan will include the approximate time for construction and how it will be accomplished, he said.

Tentative dates for subsequent public hearings are Nov. 8, Nov. 26, April 4 and May 23.

"At the last meeting we hope to have a final draft of the master plan and the approximate costs," Mathiasen said.

Cress & Associates will be handling the site selection.

Once the studies are turned over to the FAA, they are sent through a government approval process which could be as short as three months or as long as a year, depending upon problems.

Mathiasen said he sees the Air Park master plan as "pretty clear cut on where the airport is going. There is no adverse development in the area of the airport."

McGinnis, 48, was first elected to the association's board in the 1983 annual conference in Midland. Sprayberry said he had nominated McGinnis for the directorship.

McGinnis also serves on the legislative committee of the statewide Texas Justice of the Peace and Constable Association.

Irving artist Susan J. Rogers demonstrates her quick-draw technique by painting this beach scene in 20 minutes.

Artist: Quick-draw painting breaks down preconceived ideas about art

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

The traditional image of an oil painter is that of a careful craftsman who agonizes for hours over each brushstroke.

Nonsense, says Susan J. Rogers. In today's fast-paced society, people don't have time to dawdle over their easels.

"We don't have time to paint like the old masters — we don't have that philosophy anymore, and people are trying to carry it over into art."

Ms. Rogers is to other oil painters as Polaroid is to Nikon — she can turn out a complete painting in 20 minutes. The technique she uses was developed about 20 years ago by her husband, Robert Garden, who was frustrated by the traditional approach he'd learned at art school.

"Art is probably the most poorly taught subject," says Ms. Rogers. "You're given a blank paper at an early age and told to draw what you feel. That turns a lot of people off."

According to Ms. Rogers, artistic talent can be developed like any other skill by studying the appropriate technique. She and Garden market one such technique, and she travels the country conducting demonstrations and teaching workshops on "Painting for the Impatient."

But what's the point? It may be possible to paint quickly, but why would anybody want to?

"I like to paint quickly because it breaks down all those preconceived ideas about art," Ms. Rogers says. "What you really should judge a painting on is how it looks when it's finished, not how long it took to paint."

She also thinks the quick-draw technique brings the joys of art to people who otherwise would never pick up a brush.

"There are so many people who would love to paint but are either afraid or don't have the time," she says. But if they become interested in art, "they start noticing things — it gives you a sensitivity to the world around you."

This fall, Ms. Rogers and her husband will be teaching their technique on television, with a PBS series called "YOU Can Paint, I Promise."

Most of what they teach are shortcuts, she says.

"It's the brushstrokes that make it unique, and the way you load the brush," with different paint on each side so you can do in one stroke what once took two.

"What we're really teaching here is color mixing," says Ms. Rogers. "Painting is simply tricking the eye, using hot colors in the foreground, warm colors in the middle and cold colors in the background."

She will be giving free demonstrations of her technique at the Executel in Odessa on Oct. 24, at 11 a.m. and 7 p.m., and in Midland on Oct. 25 at the Holiday Inn T-Dome, also at 11 a.m. and 7 p.m.

On Oct. 26-27, Ms. Rogers will be teaching paint-along workshops at the Holiday Inn in Odessa, which cost $35 for one day or $60 for two days. All supplies will be available for purchase at the workshops. To register, contact Robert Garden Art Enterprises Inc., 351 N. Briery, Irving, Texas, or call 563-0330.

St. Lawrence Fall Festival planned

ST. LAWRENCE — The annual St. Lawrence Fall Festival will be held Sunday, Nov. 4, in and about the Parish Hall of St. Lawrence Catholic Church here.

"The festival is an event looked forward to by many hundreds of people in the West Texas area every year," according to JoAnn Hillger.

Festivities will begin at 10:30 a.m. with the opening of booths and the sale of uncooked German sausage at $2.50 a pound.

The dinner meal will be served from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. and will consist of German sausage, barbecue prepared by the parishioners, and "all the trimmings." The meal will be $5 a plate for adults and $3 for children. Dessert will consist of homemake cakes and pies.

Beginning at 2 p.m., auctioneer Herb Henderson will auction off items for benefit of the church. To be auctioned are bales of cotton donated by parishioners and various hardware items donated by area businesses.

Sausage sandwich snacks, including dessert and beverage, may be purchased for $2 per serving from 5:30 p.m. to 7:30 p.m.

Booths will consist of spin-a-wheel, grab bag, balloons, ring toss, football throw, religious booth and a hobby shop of hand-crafted items. The Catholic Youth Organization will sponsor a candy and soft-drink concession stand.

Throughout the day, raffle chances will be sold on a handmade queen-size quilt and matching pillow, a Remington 270 rifle or a 1100 shotgun, and a trip for two to Las Vegas, Nev. Bingo will be played.

Festival arrangements are directed by the Women's Committee and the Parish Council. On the committee are Barbara Halfmann, Debra Schraeder, Jeanie Wilde, Helen Jost and JoAnn Hillger. Serving on the council are Marilee Jost, Mitchell Jansa, Carolyn Strube, Lawrence Jost, Loretta Schaefer, Ernie Schwartz, Sheryl Wilson, Jimmy Eggemeyer and Andrew Hoelscher.

MCT's 'Cinema '85' premieres Monday

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Set against the Russian revolution, the life and loves of doctor and poet Yuri Zhivago will once again be brought to life Monday when Midland Community Theatre begins its "Cinema '85." First in the 12-movie subscription series is director David Lean's 1965 release "Dr. Zhivago."

"The Cinema series is still the best bargain in town," says George Thomas, chairman of the Cinema Series.

Cost for the series is $20 for MCT members and $25 for non-members. That breaks down to $1.67 for MCT members per feature and $2.08 to non-members per feature. Memberships will be sold Monday prior to showtime.

The showings, on alternate Monday evenings through April 1, are at the Yucca Theatre, 208 N. Colorado Ave., at 7:30 p.m.

Most features, depending on the length, will be shown with an award-winning vintage cartoon. The cartoons will be from the "golden era" of the '40s, when most major studios had large animation departments.

"They turned out very creative and popular cartoons in full animation, which are too expensive to produce today, but which then were shown with every feature," Thomas says.

"I have spent a lot of time selecting some of the best examples, including Academy Award winners and nominees from MGM, Warner Brothers and Disney," he says. "The difference between these classics and the junk children watch on Saturday morning TV is like night and day."

Three features will be shown in their original CinemaScope.

"At the end of Cinema '84, MCT purchased two expensive projectors which should provide excellent projection quality for the films in the series this season," says Thomas. "At the same time, we bought two CinemaScope lens which we will be using with three CinemaScope features, 'Dr. Zhivago,' 'Gigi' and 'Laurence of Arabia.'

"CinemaScope will allow us, for the first time, to utilize the full width of the screen we purchased last season from the Howard Hodge Theatre."

This year's series of films includes a substitution. Alfred Hitchcock's "Frenzy" has been replaced with "The Man Who Knew Too Much."

Starring James Stewart and Doris Day, this thriller, Thomas says, "has the only Academy Award winning song ever to be in a Hitchcock picture, 'Que Sera-Sera.'"

The reason for the switch is that five Hitchcock classics, films that have not been seen for "more than 20 years," have just now been made available for public use.

"The right to these films, personal favorites of Hitchcock, were bought back by him seven years after their original theatrical release.

"They were then tied up in his estate after he died, until Universal Pictures bought the rights to all five films this year and has been theatrically releasing them in major cities around the country. None of the five films has been shown at theaters in Midland."

Omar Sharif and Julie Christie star in "Dr. Zhivago," based on the book by Nobel Prize winning author Boris Pasternak.

Admission to the films is by series membership only. No single admissions are sold. A membership card, which is mailed out upon receipt of payment, must be shown at the door during the series.

Full-time students of The University of Texas of the Permian Basin and Midland College may attend the series under special arrangement with those institutions.

Movies to be shown this season include:

— Nov. 5, "Gigi," 1958 release, winner of nine Oscars including Best Picture, CinemaScope and color, starring Maurice Chevalier, Louis Jourdan and Leslie Caron;

— Nov. 19, "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," 1932 release, Oscar winner for Best Actor, starring Fredric March and Miriam Hopkins;

— Dec. 3, "The Bad and the Beautiful," 1952 release, director Vincente Minnelli's inside-Hollywood look at an ambitious producer (Kirk Douglas) and his relationship with an actress, a writer and a director, also starring Lana Turner and Dick Powell;

— Dec. 17, "City Lights," 1931 release, Charles Chaplin's masterpiece about the "Little Tramp" in love with a blind girl (Virginia Cherrill) is a blend of comedy and tragedy, silent with music track;

— Jan. 7, "The Lady From Shanghai," 1948 release, Orson Wells directed this mystery about a sailor who becomes involved with a seductive woman and her sadistic husband which includes a climax in a hall of mirrors, starring Rita Hayworth, Wells and Everett Sloan;

— Jan. 21, "Cabaret," 1972 release, tells the story of Sally Bowles in pre-World War II Berlin, winner of eight Oscars including Liza Minnelli, Joel Grey and director Bob Fosse, color, also starring Michael York;

— Feb. 4, "The Good Earth," 1937 release, Pearl Buck's novel of greed, famine, plague and fight for survival in China, outstanding special effects, Luise Rainer won Oscar for Best Actress, also starring Paul Muni;

— Feb. 18, "The Man Who Knew Too Much," 1956 release, Alfred Hitchcock spy thriller, color, starring James Stewart and Doris Day;

— March 4, "The Man Who Came to Dinner," 1942 release, adaptation of the hit comedy by Kaufman and Hart about a pompous author who comes to an average family home for dinner, breaks his leg, then stays a month and drives everyone crazy, starring Monty Wooley, Bette Davis and Ann Sheridan;

— March 18, "Autumn Sonata," 1978 release, Ingmar Bergman guided Ingrid Bergman in her last great dramatic performance in this probing film about the relationship between mother and daughter and the chasm that separates the generations, color, also starring Liv Ullmann;

— April 1, "Lawrence of Arabia," 1962 release, a winner of seven Oscars including Best Picture, Cinemascope and color, starring Peter O'Toole, Omar Sharif and Alec Guinness.

Midlanders injured

From Staff Reports

Two Midlanders were injured Saturday night when their pickup trucks collided at County Roads 1180 South and 120 East, according to the Texas Department of Public Safety.

Injured were the drivers, Gwendolyn Medders, 54, and Larry Voller, 22, both of Route 7. Ms. Medders, who suffered contusions, abrasions and a broken shinbone, was listed in stable condition Saturday night in Midland Memorial Hospital. Voller, who also suffered contusions and abrasions, was treated at the hospital and released.

The DPS said Ms. Medders' 1983 Ford pickup was eastbound on CR 120E and that Volers' 1976 Chevrolet pickup was southbound on CR 1180 when the trucks crashed in the intersection. The accident occurred at 7 p.m.

DPS Trooper John Madden investigated the mishap.

Rig accident kills two

Two men were killed on a rig northwest of the city and north of High Sky Girls Ranch late Saturday.

The Sheriff's Office was investigating the accident, which occured at Cactus Rig No. 9 about 10:45 p.m.

Details of the accident and names of the men were not available by press time.

Women indicted for child abuse

DALLAS (AP) — Two women have been indicted on charges of injury to a child in connection with an incident in which the hands of two 10-year-old twin girls were held over a gas flame.

A Dallas County grand jury on Friday indicted Samella Brunfield Gill, 35, the children's mother, on three counts of injury to a child. Vera Mae Brown, 31, the children's aunt, was indicted on two counts.

According to police reports, the girls' hands were held over a gas stove as punishment for a minor offense.

The twins, as well as their three sisters and a brother, also had been beated with extension cords, submerged alternately in scalding and icy water and "psychologically terrorized," police said.

Mrs. Brown's three children — two boys and a girl — also had been abused, police said.

At the time of the alleged abuse, the youngsters' father, Henderson Brown, was charged with injury to a child and the children's grandmother, Jeanette Brumfield, was charged with failure to report child abuse.

One of the twins received third-degree burns on one hand and had to have her thumb amputated because of infection. The other twin received less serious burns, officials said.

McMurry board OKs resolution

From Staff Reports

ABILENE — The McMurry College Board of Trustees unanimously approved a three-part resolution to insure the future growth of the institution at its annual fall meeting.

The resolution, in part, authorizes the issuance of tax-free municipal bonds in the amount of $8.6 million at a fixed interest rate to finance a major campus construction and renovation program.

The second part of the resolution gives the board's executive committee the authority to act on its behalf in finalizing the agreement.

Also, the resolution empowers the chairman and secretary of the board to sign and consummate the final document of the agreement.

McMurry College would enter into an agreement with the Abilene Higher Education Authority in the issuance of the bonds.

Paul Sheldon, a representative of the Chase-Manhattan Bank of New York was present at the meeting and said it would take about 50 days to finalize the transaction.

Projects to be financed include the complete renovation of Gold Star Dormitory, the construction of a new dining hall facility, the construction of an Olympic-size swimming pool, utilities for the computerization of the heating and cooling system on campus, renovation of the Maedgen Administration Building, the updating of college equipment and the refinancing of a main frame computer.

Board to discuss grade distribution data

Higher grading standards within Midland public schools apparently have not lowered achievements among secondary students. The Midland Independent School District's trustees last summer adopted the higher grading standards.

In examining grade distribution statistics for the first six weeks of the 1984-85 school year, MISD officials hope the data will dispel concerns that the higher standards would result in lower achievements.

The statistics will be discussed at the 1:30 p.m. Tuesday school board meeting.

In complying with House Bill 246, which defined any grade below 70 as failing, MISD trustees raised the grading standards in the 1984-85 schoolyear to:

—A: 92 to 100 from 90 to 100.
—B: 83 to 91 from 80 to 89.
—C: 74 to 82 from 70 to 79.
—D: 70 to 73 from 60 to 69.
—F: 69 and below from 59 and below.

For the first six-week period of 1984-85, 38 percent of the students earned As. That was the same percentage as in 1983 but was 2 percentile points more than that of 1982.

Thirty percent earned Bs, while 29 percent earned Bs in 1983 and 1982.

Twenty percent earned Cs in the six-week period. In 1983, 19 percent received Cs, and in 1982, 20 percent.

Eight percent got Ds this year. Eleven percent received Ds in 1983 and 12 percent got Ds in 1982.

Eight percent received failing grades in the six-week period. In 1983, 7 percent were flunked, and in 1982, 8 percent.

One percent of the students received "incomplete" marks for the first six weeks in 1982, 1983 and 1984.

In response to apprehensions the new grading system would put MISD students at a disadvantage in competing for admissions to colleges and universities, MISD officials gathered data from a sampling of institutions of higher learning.

The survey indicated that the primary admissions considerations of most colleges and universities are class rank — not grade-point averages (GPAs) — and test scores.

"We would never penalize a student for attending a school with high standards," commented one admissions official.

Institutions surveyed included The University of Texas, Texas A&M University, Stanford University and Harvard University.

In their Tuesday meeting, MISD trustees will review results of a survey of grading systems of 42 other Texas school districts. Among the districts surveyed were Alamo Heights, Highland Park, Richardson and Spring Branch.

NO SWEAT

Sweat is produced by two sets of glands in the body. The eccrine glands turn on the flow when temperatures are hot or when you physically exert yourself. The apocrine glands act in response to emotions. Keeping cool, comfortable and oder-free calls for the use of either a deodorant or antiperspirant. The one you should use depends upon how much you perspire. If wetness is not a big problem, a deodorant will probably be fine. Most deodorants contain antibacterial ingredients that mask odor. Anti-perspirants, on the other hand, stop the flow of perspiration as well. They usually contain aluminum salts which block the pores from releasing moisture. Aluminum zirconium, often found in roll-ons, is the most effective of these salts.

Whether you're looking for simple, over-the-counter household items such as deodorants or antiperspirants, or you need an important prescription to be filled, you can be sure that you can count on SERVICE DRUG OF MIDLAND, A & Scharbauer (682-2519). And while you're here, treat yourself in our well staffed luncheonette to some luscious ice cream. We're open Mon.-Sat. 8-7. Visa, Mastercard, and charge accounts accepted.

HINT:

Because anti-perspirants are classified as drugs by the FDA, the labels must list the main ingredients.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

Aid comes from 54 sources, records show

By H.A. TUCK

Financial assistance is an important consideration for many students who want to attend college. Midland College is no exception. For the current year, 28 percent of the students attending MC are receiving some type of financial aid, according to Bill Burns, financial aids officer for MC. In actual numbers, that's 948 students.

These grants and scholarships came from 54 different sources: Federal programs, local clubs and organizations, endowments, and MC supporters. Athletic grants provide tuition, fees, books, room and board. But many of the grants are simply tuition, fees, and books...as little as $250 per semester. There are 72 students who work part-time on campus for reasonable hourly pay.

Persons who would like to know more about how they can provide assistance to worthy students can contact Burns for details.

The actual number probably is higher than the total Burns shows, since many local firms reimburse employees directly for their college expenses, either at the time of enrollment or following successful completion of courses.

• • •

Among the scholarship recipients just announced are five students who received Knox Scholarships, given by a Midland family for students studying Respiratory Therapy. They are Willie Daniels, Margaret Gray, Joyce Lynde, Michael Mahoney and Maureen Young.

• • •

If you are looking for something to do this afternoon, here are a couple of suggestions: Come out to the campus and take in the final day of the annual Oshman's Pre-Season Ski Sale in Chaparral Center; visit McCormick Gallery in the Allison Fine Arts Building for the annual Midland Arts Association regional show.

Oshman's sale is from 11 a.m. to 6 p.m. The gallery hours are from 1-5 p.m. Sunday.

This is the final week of the MAA show. Hours are 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. Monday through Thursday and 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Friday, the final day.

• • •

Chaparral golfers get a real indication this week about how strong their team might be. They'll be competing in the Texas Junior College State Championship Tournament in Conroe.

• • •

Basketball fans don't have much longer to wait. The Chaps open their 1984-85 season next week. They'll raise the curtain on this year's edition at home Friday, Nov. 2, at 7:30 p.m. against the Sul Ross JV squad. That's followed Nov. 8-10 by the annual Chaparral Classic. The field includes three Western Conference teams: Midland, Odessa and Howard; three teams from the Eastern Conference: Weatherford, Grayson, and Cisco; plus two Kansas squads: Barton County and Garden City.

You may purchase season tickets for all the Chap home games, including the Chap Classic, at the Chaparral Center box office.

• • •

One of the very active student organizations on campus is Mu Alpha, the management club. Its new officers are: Brad Swinehart, president; Ima Browne, vice president; Bernard Young, secretary-treasurer, and David Collins, reporter. Sponsor is management instructor Jack Scarbrough. Swinehart and Browne represented the group at a Professional Development Conference in Austin Oct. 11-13.

If you're interested in ceramics, especially new trends and techniques in this art form, you should plan to attend a workshop at MC Nov. 10-11. Jim Romberg, one of the nation's leading ceramists and a specialist in the raku technique, will present demonstrations, slides, and video tapes about his work and the work of others.

Cost is $20 for MC students and staff and $25 for others. If you are interested, contact MC art instructor John Harmon or the Department of Community Services.

H.A. Tuck is public relations director for Midland College.

Berg is active in drama, computer math, art and swimming. He plans to attend the University of Finland and major in history.

Miss Bercaw is the daughter of Mrs. G.C. Hughes, 905 Country Club, and John Bercaw. She is a member of the President's Cabinet, Young Republicans and National Honor Society and is the recipient of consecutive academic letters. She plans to attend Miami University in Oxford, Ohio and major in communications.

Cain

Paul Cain, a student in business management at Midland College, recently received a $1,000 scholarship from the Midland Chamber of Commerce Small Business Council.

The scholarship, raised this year from $500 to $1,000, was established to aid students interested in pursuing small business careers.

Laura Renick, a student at Lee High School was named a winner of the 1984 National Council of Teachers of English Achievement Award in Writing. The NCTE writing contest is held annually beginning in February.

More than 7,000 students were nominated by their English teachers for the contest. Each nominee submitted a sample of his or her best writing and an impromptu essay. The compositions were evaluated by state judging teams of both high school and college teachers.

About 850 finalists are selected each year representing the 50 states, the District of Columbia and American schools abroad. The number of possible winners for each state is keyed to state population.

The NCTE is a professional organization of individual and institutional members at all levels of instruction. Its goal is to increase the effectiveness of the teaching of English language and literature in the nation's schools and colleges. NCTE furnishes teaching aids and publishes several professional journals.

Hans Mark

New UT chancellor will speak at UTPB

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — The newly appointed chancellor of the University of Texas system will be giving a public lecture Wednesday at 3 p.m. in the student lounge of the University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

Dr. Hans Mark, former deputy administrator for NASA and secretary of the U.S. Air Force, will speak on "The Space Station: Mankind's Permanent Presence in Space" during his visit to Midland/Odessa. A reception honoring Mark and his wife will follow the lecture at 4 p.m.

Mark assumed the chancellorship Sept. 1. "I am convinced that there is a clear potential that the University of Texas system can become the best public university in the country during the coming decade," he said following his appointment.

There are three characteristics needed to make a university great, according to Mark. "First, it must pass on the wealth of human knowledge in all its complexity, one generation to the next," while taking the "lead in the creation of new knowledge and insights in the arts and sciences."

Third, "a university must seek to find ways of enhancing the welfare and culture of the community that supports it," said Mark.

Mark served as deputy administrator for NASA from 1981 to 1984, after his appointment by President Reagan. Then President Jimmy Carter named Mark secretary of the U.S. Air Force in 1979.

Openings available for aptitude tests

There are still a few openings for the Nov. 2-4 aptitude testing program administered by Aptitude Inventory Measurement Service (AIMS) at Midland College.

John W. Gaston, director of AIMS, is celebrating his 20th year in aptitude testing this year. He is assisted by Irvin C. Shambaugh, chief scientist for the organization and active in aptitude testing since 1965, and Brenda C. Smith, who has administered and interpreted aptitude measures since 1971.

The Dallas-based firm comes to the Midland College campus on a regular basis throughout the year in order to provide its services to local residents.

AIMS has published a number of bulletins that are available at no charge for single copies to groups or individuals. Subjects include: Prepping up for a campus visit; Choosing a college — The importance of size; Choosing a college — The importance of vocabulary; Aptitude testing after college — A good Idea?; and Aptitude testing after age 35.

ATTENTION PARENTS!

A discussion of the new MISD grading system will be on the school board meeting agenda, Tuesday, Oct. 23rd, 1984, 1:30 pm, at Central Office. The newly instituted grading scale may reduce your child's chances of college acceptance, receiving financial aid or entering the labor force. One example of the unfairness of this system is that a grade of 70 in Midland is a D, whereas, it is a C in Plano, Austin, etc.. Parents need to attend and be heard.

Your child's future is on the line!

Where She Stands Today

Trends of the 80s are showing an increase of women in labor and executive positions.

"Pink collar labor."

The term refers to traditional women's jobs — filing, nursing or teaching — and the traditional low salaries.

But today, it seems women are leaving the pink collar ghetto in search of greener incomes.

Women in white- and blue-collar jobs are no longer a rarity. And more of them are becoming executives, doctors, lawyers, scientists, judges, politicians, police officers, construction workers, plumbers, bus drivers, electricians and military officers.

According to a recent U.S. News & World Report finding, more than half the American work force, 53.5 percent, is female.

In 1983, almost four times as many engineers were women than 10 years ago; the number of women lawyers tripled; and almost twice as many women were managers or administrators.

In the Permian Basin where petroleum is the primary industry, women are entering more traditionally male-dominated positions than in the past.

For years women have played a role in the oil industry. But it wasn't until the early 1980s boom when women broke the conventional barriers and began working on rigs, said Ed Fenner, vice president, administration and secretary at MGF Oil Corporation in Midland.

Women are increasingly entering the industry as geologists and accountants, said Cindy Gilliland, employee relations and payroll supervisor for MGF.

Flo Dean, president of Success Personnel in Midland, said not only are many more young women entering such careers as accounting, management and other formerly "men only" positions, but many women are returning to the workforce after spending many years at home raising families.

And because technology has changed traditional office jobs so dramatically, women see a need for education. Re-entering the job market may mean learning new methods of performing old tasks, such as learning how to operate a computer to type a form letter. Subsequently, many women enroll in college courses.

Clerical work, once considered a "dead-end" job, can lead to better things today, she said. "A lot of secretaries are moving up into management — office managers, etc."

In addition to geology and accounting, other fields such as management and sales are opening for women, Ms. Dean added.

The old attitude of women as menial employees is from "the dark ages," she said. Today's employers are eager to accept women in the work force, and give job candidates' qualifications more importance than their gender. "Women are definitely stepping out."

Tommy Newsom, personnel and benefits manager for Clayton W. Williams Jr. companies, said, "Probably 50 percent or more degreed accountants coming in are female. And a few are CPAs."

Please see WOMEN, Page 2E

WOMEN——

(Contined from Page 1E)

Some women are also seeking work in the oilfield, Newsom said. "Of course not as many women as men want field work but I do occasionally see women wanting that type of work."

Other careers women are entering increasingly include management, banking and sales, he said. Although attitudes toward women in formerly male-dominated positions are changing, "there are still a lot of old oil men around town who would rather deal with a man."

Phyllis Marshall, president of Dunhill of Midland Inc., said when she became a personnel consultant nine years ago, most of the women who found employment through her company were hired for clerical positions.

Now women are employed in levels of authority, such as finance, legal fields, banking and data processing. They also are entering the sales profession at a higher rate than in the past.

The difference in women entering the workforce today and those entering 10 years ago is "staggering. The difference is in attitude and pride in themselves. They feel competent to compete in the business world," she said.

"Now it's okay to be aggressive and feminine. Women are moving from their parents into the educational system with the idea that they will support themselves.

"Young women today are career-oriented and professional in attitude."

But for all their strides in a fiercely competitive job market, nationally, women's salaries do not reflect such progress. U.S. News & World Report's findings indicate a median income average among those completing four years of college did not measure up.

In 1972, women's wages averaged $8,736, compared with men's earnings of $14,879; in 1978, a man's average was $20,382, a woman's was $11,972; and the latest figure, 1982, average for women was $17,405 compared with the average $28,030 for men, according to the report.

In 1982, it concluded, more than one-third of all families headed by women had an income below poverty level.

But women continue to take new chances.

David Hunter, personnel director for the City of Midland, said the percentage of women employed by the city has increased in the police, fire, sanitation, aviation, public transportation, parks and recreation, health, animal control, street and administrative departments, Hunter said.

"Primarily we are seeing the same thing seen in other industries — more interest in non-traditional jobs by the female population," he said.

Hunter said most people seeking employment today are not concerned about gender stereotypes and apply for positions for which they are qualified.

He attributed the change in attitude to the employer's and the potential employee's awareness.

"We've come a long way from closed-minded attitudes on what it takes to fill a job."

Older women joining work force in record numbers

By MARION G. DOYLE
King Features Syndicate

It's the feeling of well-being that these women like. Getting back into the work force after the children have grown and household chores have diminished is a way of life for many of them these days, and they love it. They recommend it.

They've had 45 or 50 birthdays, or more. They're healthier today than women of a generation ago at the same age — the life expectancy of women at age 65 currently exceeds that of men by 4.5 years.

They're stepping out with assurance, putting positive thoughts into positive action — a sure way to boost the spirits, they say. Of course, a paycheck of their own helps.

"It's far and away the happiest of times for a woman," says Kay Tranfo of East Brunswick, N.J., now in her 50s, mother of four grown children, who gained her college degree through evening courses and has been an administrative aide at Rutgers University for the past 10 years.

"I'm happy I chose to stay home with the children until they were off on their way. Now I'm able to apply myself totally to becoming my own person with no qualms of conscience that I short-changed them. These years are the best of times," she contends.

"Best thing I ever did," says a 48-year-old Pennsylvania woman, now director of a large travel agency. "I feel like a different person since getting back in the work force. I've developed more poise and self-confidence and have a tremendous feeling of satisfaction with what I do and can do in my career. I feel like an active, worthwhile person in my own right, not just someone's wife or mother or neighbor.

"It helps if you have a risk-taking attitude," says a Woodland Park, Colo., woman, now in her early 60s, who's found a gratifying job in unusual volunteer work.

Barbara Bauernhuber, who helped organize a Search and Rescue Squad for Teller County, Colo.

"I feel very good about myself. I can see changes, yes. Nowadays I'll stand up and talk about my ideas, my beliefs, both publicly and privately, something I never would have done before."

A 60-year-old, Maggi Jacobson of New York City is vice president of an employee assistance firm, Brownlee, Dolan, Stein Associates, and says she feels "very surprised and very blessed."

She'd never worked a day in her life, didn't finish college, had married at 22, raised three sons and at the age of 42, after her children were grown, found herself troubled with alcoholism.

She had a bad time of it until she was 47 when she managed to conquer it, went back to school, entered a new marriage and now finds herself in the $40,000-a-year post and savoring a very pleasant sense of well-being.

"Not bad for a gal who's not very brave," she says, "but who just happened to be at the right place at the right time."

Being good at a job, any job, is an important life goal, as Lillian Troll, Ph.D., chairman of the Psychology Department, University College, Rutgers, points out, and it's well to be prepared.

"The generation of younger women now stepping into jobs hitherto reserved for men may easily become a very different kind of older women, not poor, dumb or ugly...Most older Western women today are finding that the role they've been groomed for isn't a life-long role after all."

They have not borne children as long as their bodies were capable. Their growing sons reject their services and husbands want them more for recreational than for survival purposes. In short, they are in danger of becoming obsolete.

Teachers worried about 'Teachers'

By FRED M. HECHINGER
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — An endearing American tenet is that you don't kick a guy when he's down. Regrettably, a current film violates that rule. "Teachers," subtitled "Monday Morning at JFK High," unmercifully kicks the teaching profession which, by all accounts, is surely down.

Recent reports on the problems of American education complained of the low status of teachers in society. In his book "High School," Ernest L. Boyer, president of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching, commented that "teachers are deeply troubled, not only about salaries, but also about their loss of status" and their "negative public image." And so, this latest portrait of teachers on the movie screen is of concern beyond its entertainment value.

The film shows a faculty composed entirely of bunglers or malingerers, without ability or ethics.

Why is "Teachers" different from "Airplane," the hilarious movie that parodied commercial aviation's foibles and pretensions? The difference is not only that pilots and flight attendants, viewed as members of glamorous professions, have few image problems; the more important difference is that "Airplane" was played unmistakably as a farce, whereas "Teachers" masquerades behind realism. JFK High is no mock-up; it is intended as a real school. While some scenes are played for laughs, others aim at serious emotions.

None of this should suggest that the teaching profession's image should be polished by keeping portraits of incompetent teachers off the screen or out of print. In its recent documentary "Class of '84," CBS showed at least one teacher who would have been at home in JFK High. The point was that such incompetence, even of a single practitioner, is intolerable. In the same CBS program, a well intentioned and obviously well educated young teacher complained that his class, in an inner-city high school, had been bored by what he considered a brilliant lecture on Goethe and Romanticism. The point was that good teaching calls for more than book learning. But the program also showed fine teachers at work and an exemplary principal as the leader of a successful school.

DILLARD'S WELCOMES THE AMERICAN EXPRESS® CARD

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

Six Midlanders recently returned from a fall foliage tour of New England and Canada. They are Edna (Mrs. W.H.) Pryor, Dorothy (Mrs. W.B.) Neely, Mary (Mrs. James H.) Steedman, Beulah (Mrs. Ed) Prichard, Victoria (Mrs. James) Chapple and Norma (Mrs. D.J.) McFarland.

The 11-day tour combined Maine's North Woods and rock-bound coast and Canada's Laurentian Mountains. Other highlights of their itinerary were Old Sturbridge Village, Conn., Boston, Bar Harbor, the Maine lakes, Green Mountains of Vermont, Quebec City and Montreal. The trip was enhanced by the beautiful weather and getting to see the leaves at their peak.

The group went to New York City the day prior to the tour to see "The Real Thing," the 1984 Tony Award winner for best Broadway play.

HOME FROM A delightful Jamaican holiday are two Midland couples, Liz and Bill Adam and Cathy and Dick Stump. They enjoyed a leisurely week of sea and sun while staying in a suite on the water's edge at the Shaw Park Beach Hotel in Ocho Rios.

One of the highlights was a canoe trip up the White River to a Jamaican barbecue, with entertainment by native Calypso bands and dancers. Other activities included snorkeling, swimming, sailing, shopping and a never-to-be-forgotten climb up Dune River Falls. They reported the drive over from Montego Bay was beautiful.

SHIRLEY (MRS. MONTY) GIST had a busy day recently when she entertained at two successive parties in her home.

A wine and cheese party was held from four to six o'clock to introduce Linda (Mrs. Dan) Scury and six-month-old daughter Shannon to friends of Linda's mother-in-law, Colleen (Mrs. Vince) Scury. Co-hosting was Martha (Mrs. Dan) Kallus.

Among those enjoying the festive occasion were Colleen's mother, Ethel Des Jardins; Genevieve (Mrs. Harry) Libby, Esta (Mrs. Cary) Geron, Maxine (Mrs. Bob) Hannifin, Wilma (Mrs. Sherman) Allenson, Nancy (Mrs. Jack) Jordan, Tricia (Mrs. Kip) Boyd, Cecelia (Mrs. Bob) Davis, Joyce (Mrs. Jack) Hauke andd Gretchen (Mrs. Frank) Bell.

Linda and Dan recently moved to Midland from Weslaco, where Linda's parents, Dr. and Mrs. Robert Manning, have been longtime resident.

Shirley and Monty hosted a seven o'clock dinner party in honor of former Midlanders Nadine and Roger Guthrie of Horseshoe Bay. Also attending were Gerri and Carl Gast, Tommie and Forrest Underwood and Sony and Herman Roethemeyer of Odessa.

Roger was formerly head of Shell Pipeline in Midland, and Nadine was active in Midland Community Theatre's support group, ACT IX, while living here.

BEBE FISHER had an exciting 10-day trip to the East Coast earlier this fall with her two sisters and other family members. They made their headquarters in Newark, N.J., while attending the wedding of Bebe's niece, Mary Elizabeth "Jibby" Edgerton, and Edward McNicolls.

Jibby, who is a physicist in Exxon's Research Department in Plainfield, N.J., resided with the Fisher family in Midland one summer as a teen-ager and was active in Midland Community Theatre's Pickwick Players. Her husband is a professor of Old English Literature at Columbia University in New York City.

The couple exchanged wedding vows in a charming pastoral setting adjacent to a 250-year-old farmhouse near Plainfield. A gala reception followed in a white tent on the grounds, and guests danced to Renaissance music on the green.

After the wedding, Bebe and her family enjoyed nonstop theatre going, shopping and museum touring in New York City. The six shows they saw in their week's stay were "La Cage aux Folles" (their favorite), "Sunday in the Park with George," "Brighton Beach Memoirs," "Noises Off," "The Real Thing" and "My One and Only." At Forbidden Broadway, they enjoyed a satirical revue of the latest hit shows. They also enjoyed the ambience of many of the city's well-known restaurants, including Tavern on the Green, Mama Leone's and The Algonquin.

DOTTIE AND JACK FOX and Frank Petty enjoyed a week's trip to San Francisco recently. Staying at the Mark Twain Hotel (which is charmingly decorated in a style reminiscent of the Twain era) they toured, shopped and dined in the city's many fine restaurants, declaring A. Sabella's as their favorite.

The threesome found the city ideal for shopping. They particularly enjoyed browsing at Ghirardelli Square, which is located in what was once the Ghirardelli Brothers chocolate factory; The Cannery, which was formerly a Del Monte canning factory, and Pier 39 at Fisherman's Wharf.

In addition to the city's many tourist attractions, they experience two fascinating tours — one to the Napa and Sonoma Valleys to visit a couple of wineries and a cheese factory, and the other to the Muir Woods to see the gigantic redwoods.

Volunteers stay timeless for research in 'jet lag'

Hearst News Service

Visitors entering Tom Stunkard's windowless, soundproof room never say "good morning" or "good evening," and they scrupulously leave their wristwatches outside. Stunkard (not his real name) has no clock, no radio, no TV — nothing to give him time clues.

Friendly people bring him meals or come by to chat. All of them know exactly what time it is. But they won't tell.

Stunkard is one of about 50 male volunteers, 35 to 60 years old, who will be paid to live in isolation for 15 days at the Institute of Chronobiology, part of New York Hospital-Cornell Medical Center in White Plains. They are taking part in a meticulous study of jet lag, the discombobulations of the human "body clock" caused by swift crossing of time zones, according to an article in Science Digest's October issue.

Our body clock — our customary patterns of eating and sleeping, for example — runs on a circadian rhythm, about a 24-hour cycle. But rapid transfer to a new daily rhythm throws the clock off kilter.

The jet lag study, headed by research psychologist Timothy Monk, is part of a larger investigation by Curtis Graeber, a physiological psychologist at NASA's Ames Research Center in Mountain View, Calif. Graeber, associate Philippa Gander and their coworkers hope to learn exactly how the body clock is affected and how long it takes to recover.

Timothy Monk sends his volunteers to other time zones artificially. For about a week, their temperature is taken every 60 seconds, their mental acuity and motor skills are tested, and their sleep and dream patterns are recorded. At various intervals, their mood is assessed. Then suddenly, their entire routine — meals, lights-out and so on — is advanced by five to eight hours, as though they had flown to Europe, and they are monitored for another week.

"We want to know how long it takes for the circadian rhythm to synchronize with the new routine," Monk explains. "Mood is affected; subjects become uptight and tend to lose motivation. Our early data indicate that the effect can last up to a week."

Saleswoman's line of goods includes romance, garlic

Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Shirley Costello Hocking is ready for the speaking circuit whenever anyone asks. She has her topics all lined up: sex, garlic and rebirth in middle age.

For more than 20 years, Hocking was a successful businesswoman, working in the conservative confines of this city's purchasing community. Then she crashed, but did not exactly burn out. Today, she sells two commodities that would not seem at all similar: sex and garlic.

She stumbled onto sex in the Wall Street Journal.

"I read about pleasure parties, for women only, and I thought they might be income for me until I reestablished myself in the purchasing world," Hocking says. "I went to one and it was about as much fun as going to the dentist. But I did see some hilarious merchandise there, so I decided to give it a try, even though my family thought I was crazy."

When her ledger book showed she had made $100,000 the first year — "I still can't believe it," she says — her family changed its mind.

A pleasure party is a Tupperware party with an "R" or "X" rating, and a twist or two. It works this way. First, you call Shirley Hocking's Alameda, Calif.-based company, Shocking Associates, and make a booking. Hocking or one of her staff then arrives at your home with free wine and five boxes of salable merchandise, everything from racy silk sheets and amorous underwear to teddy bears with "soft, sensitive" fur to finger-paint for lovers.

This isn't quite as sexy as it sounds.

"We're a lot tamer than 'Dallas,' " Hocking says. "What we're offering isn't so much sex as the illusion of romance."

Hocking's services are free, unless you want a "gentleman dancer," more popularly known as a male stripper. He costs $125 a house call. "Same as for a doctor," Hocking says. "And we have discounts for senior citizens."

The stripper operates under a strict code of ethics. "No playing around with the customers," the boss says. And Hocking has other set rules. No men allowed at any of the parties. No minors. And no hard liquor.

Gourmet lifestyle makes 'dream kitchen' obsolete

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

The advent of gourmet cooking as a hobby and the smaller space available for kitchens are a few of today's lifestyle changes which have made yesterday's "dream kitchen" obsolete.

According to Ellen Cheever, a kitchen designer and consultant to kitchen cabinet and appliance manufacturers, today's more flexible lives have created a need for more flexible kitchens.

Since today's kitchen is often smaller than the kitchen of the 1950s or earlier, a priority is to make every inch of space work. In response to this need, noted the designer, who is based in Sacramento, Calif., kitchen planning has progressed so that engineering efficient small-space kitchens is less of a challenge than it used to be.

Among methods she advocates for increasing use of kitchen space are: running cabinets up to the ceiling; using corners more effectively; incorporating moveable work surfaces, such as a food preparation island on casters or pull-out shelves.

Selecting appliances that go up the wall instead of across the floor horizontally is also advisable, she said, pointing out that a one-piece stove that includes a built-in oven, four-burner cooking surface and overhead microwave is now available. This type of stove fits into 30 inches of space while a separate cooktop and wall ovens require 63 inches.

One flaw found in many kitchens built before the days of microwave ovens is that there is rarely a convenient space for it. She has found that microwaves are desirable because they offer time-savings.

"The need to reheat food when different family members eat at different times or the 'I-forgot-to-defrost-something-for-dinner' syndrome make microwaves almost mandatory," she said.

Kitchens in which the ovens can be built in are likely to be more efficient. Some possible locations include wall cabinets, underneath the countertop or on a wall near a built-in oven. If installing the microwave oven in a wall cabinet, locate the unit low enough so the person using it can look into the oven and down on the food being cooked, she said. A spot underneath the countertop is particularly useful if children will be using the microwave.

Not every family lives in a home with a very small kitchen. For some, the kitchen is a large room that serves as the center of the house. Even in large rooms, however, today's different style of living calls for different priorities in kitchen design.

Three important considerations in creating a comfortable open kitchen where many activities take place include: odor removal, noise control and flexible lighting. Yet, despite their importance, these requirements are often overlooked.

Odor control can be handled by installing a good ventilation system. A new type of ventilation method which may offer some improvements over the traditional venting hood is a downdraft system which is located at the cooktop instead of above it. By trapping greasy particles and strong odors at their source, the stove-top system helps keep kitchen wall-coverings and fabrics cleaner.

Noise control is enhanced if well-insulated appliances are selected. She noted that there is a substantial difference in the amount of noise operating appliances produce. Consumers should ask about insulation when they purchase appliances such as dishwashers and food waste disposers and, if possible, should try to observe the model which they are considering in operation.

A versatile lighting system is particularly important when the kitchen is the locale for dining, entertaining and other sociable activities. She said that needs included both general and decorative or accent lighting, as well as task lighting at countertops.

She advocated at least two sets of switches — one for task lighting and another for decorative and overhead lighting. Ideally general lighting should be controlled with a rheostat or dimmer so the level of light can be varied to meet different circumstances.

It's never too early for Christmas

WASHINGTON (AP) — Christmas is still a ways away, but gifts intended to reach certain parts of the world should be mailed now, the Postal Service warns.

Christmas parcels, sent by surface mail, to Australia, South and East Asia and other parts of the Far East should be mailed this week. Surface mail for the Middle East should be sent by Oct. 29.

For air mail, and surface parcels to other parts of the world, there's still time, officials say.

Furniture can be investment

Hearst Feature Service

Today's high quality furniture may become tomorrow's high-priced antique.

Investment decorating is the term used in House Beautiful's current issue that takes a close look at today's influential home design trends.

Whether working on your own or through a decorator, here are some tips from the magazine's editors on recognizing quality as an investment in your home.

— When shopping for sofas and chairs, make sure cushions are properly sized and shaped to fit snugly and evenly. Unzip a cushion cover. If it has a sturdy cotton ticking and feels substantial, it is more likely to be of good quality.

— Better furniture is built with coil springs that add to comfort and durability. You can feel the springs by putting your hand under the cushion seat. The higher the number of coil rows, the better the piece. Three rows are good; four is best.

— When shopping for beds, the House Beautiful editors advice, remember that mattress prices are determined by size, materials and construction of both mattress and foundation. Always buy the two together. If a mattress needs replacement, so does the foundation.

SIMPLE WEAR AND TEAR

All too often, maintenance factors and simple wear and tear are neglected in planning living areas. When selecting materials and furnishings, remember that a comfortable chair, that will be frequently used, should not be covered in delicate, light-colored fabric. As a rule, upholstery, table surfaces, curtains and floor coverings are meant to be lived with and should not need to be treated as museum pieces. In fact, the concept of the use of slipcovers seems to be somewhat overrated. Upholstered furniture will eventually wear out as a result of sagging or broken springs, broken frames or dried-up foam rubber. As a result, the life expectancy of furniture does not really double with a set of slipcovers.

Slipcovers can also be used to change the appearance of sofa or chair that no longer fits into your decorating scheme. Upholstery can match or coordinate with your walls and custom-designed draperies and other window treatment. At WINDOW DECOR, we can help you choose from a large selection of fabrics and ideas. We're located at 30 W. Industrial Loop and would like you to stop by and see all we have to offer. Hours: Mon.-Fri., 8-4:30. Phone: 685-0875.

KD furniture: Comfort for life in the 80s

By BARBARA MAYER
AP Newsfeatures

Are consumers willing to do some of the work in transporting their new furniture home and putting it together themselves to save time and money?

That's the question furniture manufacturers and retailers have been debating for a number of years, as ready-to-assemble furniture has struggled to gain a foothold in the marketplace.

A recent event suggests enough consumers have said yes to self-delivery and self-assembly to make ready-to-assemble furniture an up-and-coming classification in the United States. More than 130 domestic and foreign companies, for example, participated in the first ready-to-assemble furniture trade show at the Coliseum in New York recently.

Exhibitors pointed out that because the furniture is packed flat in a compact package, a consumer can self-deliver even a large piece — such as a complete wall system — hauling it home in the family car, instead of paying for delivery and having to wait at home for the furniture to arrive.

Since self-delivery and self-installation constitute a savings for the retailer, costs should be lower than comparable quality store-delivered furniture — another plus.

In fact, these advantages have made ready-to-assemble or KD furniture popular in Europe where it accounts for at least 20 percent of all furniture sold. So far, however, this type of furniture has accounted for only about 2.5 percent of furniture sales in the United States.

However, the growth of two-career families in which neither adult is available to stay at home to wait for delivery, the greater incidence of single adult households and the increase in the number of upwardly mobile well-educated young persons as furniture consumers have encouraged the industry to see major increases on the horizon for KD furniture.

One reason why KD hasn't caught on here, according to Robert Schumacher, vice president of the National Home Furnishings Association is because "American manufacturers are so competitive and marketing-oriented."

As a result, he says, they have been marketing already-assembled furniture for the same price as KD might cost elsewhere.

"In 1966 you could buy a very nice sofa for $399," Schumacher recalls. "Today you can still buy a nice sofa for $399."

However, American companies have not as a rule made available the more sophisticated designs at moderate prices, he acknowledges. This is the area where European and some American companies are determined to make a showing with KD furniture.

What kind of designs can we expect to see? And how do they differ from what is already available? The designs on view at the Coliseum suggested a greater emphasis will be placed on systems that can be used in many different configurations to provide storage, seating and working surfaces to fit the individual home.

One of the cleverest products exhibited was a series of easy-to-assemble loft environments created by a new French company, Espace Loggia. The four young entrepreneurs of Espace Loggia — all under age 30 — started the company less than a year ago, according to Frederic Palay, who designed the wood components in the system.

Women bosses, secretaries can work well together

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Secretaries can be an executive's best friend, or worst enemy. "Good executives know enough to beware the secretarial underground," says Virginia E. Schein, a consultant to business and management and associate professor of psychology at Baruch College of the City University of New York. "They can make or break their bosses, succor or sabotage them."

When both executive and secretary are female, according to Dr. Schein and others who have studied women in management, the extremes of this relationship seem to be the norm. "There is the potential for a female boss to have unusually productive dealings with her secretary, since she may be less likely to demean the role of another woman and more likely to give that woman respect and responsibility," Dr. Schein said. "But there is also the potential for unusually unproductive dealings, since a female boss may be so insecure, so afraid of being identified with her secretary as 'one of the girls,' that she will go out of her way to demean that role."

"I commonly see disasters or roaring successes," says Dr. Kathleen V. Shea, a psychologist practicing in the northern suburbs of Chicago and author of a seminal study on the psychological health of women who are executives.

As Dr. Shea put it: "What gets people to the top — picking more apples than anyone else — is not what keeps them there, which is building relationships so that people want you picking more apples than anyone else." The problem, she said, is that "no one tells women in management that they need to be high-task-and high-relationship-oriented, and that relationship building must start with their secretaries."

Moreover, learning need not translate into doing. "Women managers are often so busy being better than everyone else that they tend to let slide any effort to be woman-friendly," says Denise McLaughlin, a first vice president at the J.Henry Schroder Bank and Trust Co. in New York. "I know that I have to work on being nice."

Even then, success is not assured. There can be, for example, the age-advancement gap. Mrs. McLaughlin recalled confronting a secretary 30 years older than she who said, "If you were hired when I was hired, you would be a secretary, too."

Then, there can be the value gap. "I've had secretaries who viewed their work as a job, something they did to earn money, while I viewed my work as a career," said Mary C. Farrell, a vice president at the brokerage company Paine Webber. "We did not share the same aggressiveness, the same ambition, the same sense of urgency. The first time you encounter this lack of shared values, it can lead to frustration."

It can also lead to conflict, according to John H. Woodyard, a senior consulting psychologist for Rohrer, Hibler & Replogle Inc., management consultants. Resolving the conflict takes insight on both sides and, sometimes, outside help. "Values must be separated from behaviors," Woodyard said. "A woman executive cannot expect her secretary to share her goals, but she can expect a certain level of performance."

Promoting such performance means getting a secretary to understand and support her boss's needs and goals, although she may not share them. "A woman executive should want the secretary to take an interest in her success and to take on some responsibility for that success," Dr. Shea said.

Psychologists and management consultants agree that women who are executives must gain enough confidence in themselves that they can disclose something of their outside-the-office lives, as did Mrs. McLaughlin, who revealed that her newborn baby was running her ragged. "It was the great equalizer," she said. "I became a woman with whom my secretary could empathize."

Sensitivity to the woman who is the secretary is another requisite for a productive relationship. "Women managers should learn who the secretary is, what her workload is like, what demands are being made on her," Dr. Shea said.

Said Dr. Schein: "Women managers and women secretaries should develop a relationship that works for the two of them, but it should also be a working relationship."

Women's careers dramatically alter domestic roles

By JOAN SWEENEY
Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

In the early years of Susan and Bob Husband's marriage, when both were concentrating on building their careers, "there were a lot of conflicts, the stereotypical ones," over their roles and household chores, she recalled recently.

"I really can't look back to that time and say it was his or my fault," said Susan Husband, 34, of Sherman Oaks, vice president and chief operating officer of Ambulatory Centers Inc. "I have to believe neither one of us recognized how to get ourselves out of the mold. We just knew we wanted to."

And they have. The Husbands, who have been married 15 years, now divide up responsibility for household duties in a way that others might consider unorthodox. Bob, 34, a golf pro and board chairman of California Golf Centers, prefers to handle the grocery shopping and cooking. Sue does the painting and simpler household repairs. They trade back and forth the chores, such as bill-paying, that neither likes.

"I am very satisfied that I can rely on him to do a lot of things that I used to think were my responsibility," she said. "He relies on me for things that he thought were his responsibility."

But it took a lot of soul-searching, quarreling and experimentation to reach this happy solution.

THE HUSBANDS are not alone. For the first time in history, most American wives work outside their homes — 52.8 percent, according to the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, up from 30.5 percent in 1960. The stereotypical American family of working father, stay-at-home mother and minor children is now so atypical that it constitutes only 5 percent of American households.

This exodus from the home, the result both of enhanced job opportunities for women and economic necessity, has dramatically changed traditional marital roles, altered family patterns and bred new conflicts between couples. As men and women alike have discovered, the rules of marriage change — for better and worse — when both husband and wife work.

A working wife's income not only lifts the family's standard of living but provides an economic cushion against disaster should the husband lose his job. Marriage counselors say her self-esteem and sense of accomplishment are likely to rise once she enters the workplace and her husband often feels relieved at no longer having to bear alone the burden of supporting the family.

But there are minuses, too, when a wife goes to work. The traditional power balance within the family is upset. The male ego may be wounded, especially if the man believes that his wife's job reflects negatively on his own ability as a breadwinner. Family life becomes more complicated as time together grows scarcer. A weary wife may resent a husband who assumes that, even though she works full-time, it is still her job to run the house. Both parents often experience guilt over leaving their children with babysitters or day-care centers.

AND SOME COUPLES find that they cannot resolve all the new conflicts, short of counseling or the divorce court. "Marriage has been a changing institution, and when you have social change of this order, you have friction," said Arthur J. Norton, a demographic expert with the U.S. Census Bureau. "Some can adjust and adapt. Some cannot."

The rapid movement of women into the work force has coincided with the dramatic escalation of the divorce rate, which doubled between 1965 and 1980, when there was one divorce recorded for every two marriages.

There may be a connection between the divorce rate and the jump in the number of working wives: With a paycheck, a wife may gain enough financial independence to leave a bad marriage. Conversely, counselors report that some husbands feel less guilty about seeking divorces because they know their wives can support themselves.

But although a wife's going to work is undoubtedly a factor in some divorces, counselors and statisticians agree that working women alone cannot be blamed for the rise in the divorce rate.

When Robert T. Michael, a University of Chicago economics professor, analyzed statistics from 1948 through 1980 to see whether women's increased participation in the labor force affected the divorce rate, he found no mathematical connection, which surprised even him.

"I don't believe it, but that's what the statistics came up with," said Michael, who reached his conclusions through a set of complex equations that will be published this fall in the Journal of Labor Economics.

THE MARCH OF WOMEN into the work place was only one factor in an era of enormous social change in which moral, economic, social and legal imperatives for marriage and against divorce crumbled, according to sociologists and counselors.

It began with the introduction of the birth-control pill and the sexual revolution of the 1960s. Then came the counterculture's emphasis on alternative lifestyles. Living together and even having children without marriage became more acceptable (and in some circles even fashionable), and dumped lovers went to court to seek palimony. Abortion was legalized. In the 1970s, the human potential movement flowered. The quest for personal happiness and satisfaction took precedence over duty and commitment. Most states passed no-fault laws that made divorces far easier to obtain.

Some social scientists believe that even Americans' reasons for marrying have changed, imposing new burdens on the institution.

"We don't get married as an institutional commitment, to raise children, for an economic base and security any more," said sociologist Pepper Schwartz, coauthor with Philip Blumstein of "American Couples," a study of married and other couples. "We get married for self-fulfillment."

Nor are Americans as willing to stick with an unfulfilling marriage. Commitment to marriage and family used to come first, but Schwartz said, "We're no longer going to sacrifice our entire life plan to children as we did before."

Japanese women face obstacles

HIROSHIMA, Japan (AP) — At the newspaper Chugoku, executive editor Yukio Ogata rarely hires women reporters. Not because he doesn't want to. Not because women aren't qualified. It's because Japanese law forbids most women from working past 10 p.m.

Night work is a fact of life on newspapers and as a result of the law, only three women are on Chugoku's staff of more than 300.

The 10 p.m. ban is one of several laws or customs that effectively keep women from some attractive jobs in Japan, where, according to numerous interviews, women do not seem to be improving their job outlook as quickly as their American counterparts.

Exceptions to the 10 p.m. law are airline stewardesses, superintendants of girls' dormitories, telephone operators, actresses, bar hostesses, radio and TV announcers and crab and sardine canners. The last are exempt because a day's catch of seafood must be canned in a hurry.

An International Labor Organization study indicated Japan was the only advanced nation where salaries of men and women became even more disparate in the decade ending in 1983.

Job discrimination also is widespread and institutional. For example, 70 percent of Japanese companies hire only male graduates of four-year colleges, and the average woman earns about half of what a man makes.

Interviews paint a bleak picture of the range of opportunities for 22 million working women — slightly more than a third of the work force. Still, most women appear unwilling to make any case for themselves in this group-oriented society of 120 million.

Many men and women say they have no desire to see the existing structure change, according to a Japanese government survey. The poll showed that 71 percent of Japanese women favored separate roles for men and women in 1983.

The pace of change for women is so slow that politicians consider the 10 p.m. rule, viewed by some women as a handicap in their efforts to advance, a minor issue.

Takako Doi, a lawyer who serves as a vice president of the Japan Socialist Party, said she opposes to the law, but added that many Japanese still believe it is needed for its original purpose — to protect women from overwork.

Although the status quo doesn't seem to be changing quickly, some younger women express frustration at their situation.

Satoko Utsunomiya, a freelance interpreter, demonstrates the dilemma that confronts even the best-educated Japanese women.

At 28, she has a husband working for one of the country's top corporations, a job that allows her to meet people and travel, a new apartment and accommodating in-laws. Now, she's thinking about having a baby.

But it bothers her, she said, that her opportunities to switch careers if she wants to are severely limited, and even if she should she find another line of work, she could never earn as much as her husband.

It's not that Mrs. Utsunomiya didn't try to crack the male-dominated employment market. After graduating from university, which included a year at the College of Wooster in Wooster, Ohio, she was hired by a Tokyo bank.

"They told me that I would never be promoted; so, I quit," she said, adding that her duties for a year consisted primarily of making coffee and filing.

Ms. Utsunomiya was fortunate in that she could get work as an interpreter. Many women aren't so fortunate; if they get married, they usually leave the job market forever.

Working women fundamental part of economic picture

Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

When a woman's work was defined as what she did in the kitchen, a woman's own money often was referred to as "pin money" because it was reserved for buying minor household items, like pins. Today, a woman's work is more likely to be done in an office or a factory than at home, and her labor and her money are anything but incidental.

"If women didn't work, the economy would grind to a halt," said Linda Waite, a sociologist and researcher for the Rand Corp. in Santa Monica, Calif. "Women are such a fundamental part of the labor force that, without them, the economy would not exist as we know it."

Working women now number 50.1 million and make up 44 percent of the work force. Since 1979, working women have outnumbered those who stay at home, and the percentage of adult women holding full-time jobs has continued to rise every year. Women now earn about $500 billion a year — nearly one-third of all the wages and self-employed income earned annually in this country.

Economists say working women have become an enormous factor in the growth of U.S. family income. In the last 10 years, average hourly wages for all workers declined 6 percent after adjusting for inflation. The addition of a wife's income has been one of the few ways a family could get ahead during that time. "They have been an incredible engine for national income growth," said economist Michael Wachter of the Wharton School of Business.

WITH ALL THAT income has come an improvement in the standard of living for countless families, who are able to live in bigger and better homes, drive more luxurious automobiles, travel in style and otherwise enjoy greater material comfort because of the wife's paycheck.

The paychecks of working wives make it possible for families who otherwise could not qualify for a loan to purchase homes. The National Association of Homebuilders says the income of a working wife is essential to most homebuyers; to buy the average new single-family home, which costs $101,000, a family needs an annual income of at least $54,321 to qualify for a 15 percent loan after a 10 percent down payment. In 1983, two-income families in 1983 accounted for 57 percent of all home sales, up from 45 percent in 1976.

Single women, too, are becoming homeowners in record numbers; they bought nearly one out of every four new condominiums sold in the United States in 1983.

Moreover, women are making money in an ever-growing universe of pursuits. In 1972, women owned 486,000 companies with gross receipts of $23.5 billion, according to the U.S. Census Bureau. Just five years later (the last year for which there are official numbers), the number had jumped to 631,000 companies with gross receipts of $40.5 billion — a 30 percent increase at a time when the total number of private enterprises rose barely 10 percent.

Women who work have prompted changes in the hours that department stores keep and in the menus that fast-food restaurants offer. They have spawned whole new industries, such as for-profit child care, and have nourished the growth of others, such as the microwave oven business.

EVEN MORE profoundly, experts say, the influx of women into the work force during the past decade is modifying the U.S. economy in basic ways — making recessions and high unemployment rates more tolerable and transforming American society into a market economy where services of all kinds are bought rather than provided without charge by a family member.

"The economic impact of women is beyond belief," said Peter Francese, publisher of American Demographics, an Ithaca, N.Y.-based research magazine.

Economists and social scientists agree there is a price to be paid for these gains, but they say the toll must be measured in social terms, such as the effect on the divorce rate or the impact on leisure time.

"On the economic side, it's hard to say there's anything that's a disaster," said Lester C. Thurow, an economist and professor at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Woman teaches others economy

WASHINGTON (AP) — Gloria Scott's job at the World Bank is to get across the message that women play a vital role in boosting the economies of poorer nations.

As she says, it's a task akin to trying to "push the world uphill."

That task is exemplified by a project to help upgrade the living standards of a small village:

— If women haul the water in a village, they — not the men — need to be asked where the water supplies should be placed.

— If women are growing the rice, they — not the men — need to attend lectures on improving rice production.

— If women are tending the cattle, they — not the men — need to be taught new veterinary practices.

And, if a country wants to increase the literacy rate of its population, it must educate its young girls as well as boys.

Sometimes — oftentimes — it's not done that way, worsening a problem and diminishing the chances for success of projects vital to development in poorer nations.

As the World Bank's adviser on women in development, it's up to Mrs. Scott to give just such advice for the programs undertaken by the agency, which provides loans to poorer countries for these projects.

"What we're saying is unless you take account of these things about women, then you're wasting some of your development investment," she said in an interview during this week's annual meeting of the 148-member World Bank.

"Unless you see that it is the women growing the rice and make sure that they have access to the new planting technologies and planting stock and fertilizer, you're not really going to get the returns on your investment in improving rice," said the 61-year-old economist.

It's also part of her job to point out the links between the status of women and fertility, since many poorer countries are trying to control their rates of population growth.

In general, she said, the more schooling women have the lower will be their rate of fertility.

"With even minimal education," she said, "women attain greater personal autonomy, they are more open to new ideas," including planning the size of their families.

Education also improves their job prospects, bringing in more money to the family, she said. That reduces the necessity to have children to share in the work load and provide for their parents in old age.

It's a tough job.

Some officials fear she's carrying a feminist message of equal rights they don't want to hear.

But she says that's not what she's doing. "I'm talking economic language, not political."

"I believe we are dealing with poverty and not a question of rights," she said.

"In developing countries, where women are so poor, the real issue is not whether you pay women more or less (than men) but that you give them the opportunity to get payment," she said.

She has traveled widely in her job; she's been involved in projects throughout the Third World, including Bangladesh, Brazil, Cameroon, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Kenya, Panama, Rwanda and Yemen.

Her career path started in her native Jamaica, where, fresh out of the London School of Economics, she accepted a job conducting surveys on which the country's housing policy was to be based. "Sometimes, I shudder when I think about this," she recalled, referring to her youthful confidence in taking on such a big project.

The job meant she had to go into poor sections of Kingston, Jamaica. She saw things she'd never seen before.

"I did surveys among people who lived in overturned motor cars. They built cardboard shelters against the car and they lived there with their three children," she said.

"When I saw what people were doing to survive, I felt it was important to know more about this," she said.

She rose to undersecretary in Jamaica's Ministry of Development before accepting a spot at the United Nations in 1966. She worked there until 1977 when she took the World Bank's newly created job as adviser on women in development.

"When the bank offered me the job, it sounded so absolutely impossible, it was a challenge. And it has been a challenge," she said.

Suggestions for secretaries successful

Hearst News Service

One magazine was so taken with Mary Bridget Carroll's book that it proposed giving her a regular column so she could parlay the general advice in its pages into specific answers to readers' problems.

Another magazine said curtly that the book's subject matter wasn't worth dignifying with a story.

What topic prompts such enthusiasm in one place and sneering disgust in another? Secretaries.

Carroll's just-published "Overworked and Underpaid" is a how-to primer about going from being a low-paid secretary to a higher-paid secretary — and then perhaps even having a secretary of your own. It's 10 percent autobiography and 90 percent advice — concise, humorous and applicable not only to secretaries but to anyone who wants to move up the ladder.

Chapters include "How to Be a Great Secretary (Without Being So Good That They Won't Give You a Promotion)," "10 Questions to Ask Before You Take This Job," "Snappy Things I Wish I Had the Nerve to Say to My Boss" and "30 Things You Can Do to Get Yourself Promoted."

Carroll, 39, knows whereof she speaks. In 1967, with a junior college education, she started as a receptionist and ended up 10 years later as administrative assistant — alias secretary — to Sanford Weill when he was chairman of Shearson Loeb Rhodes Inc. Bored after 2½ years, she realized that brokering stocks herself might be a more satisfying outlet for her interest in serving people.

She said as much to her boss and remembers his response this way: "I think you're crazy. You'll never make as much money as a broker as you will working for me."

But she took her own advice, treating her aspirations seriously and acting career-minded. She went back to school at age 35, got her license and now is a stockbroker with Shearson's Greenwich, Conn., office. The bottom line: Her salary in her last year with Weill was $26,000. In her first year on her own, it was $36,400.

Proud as she is of her years as secretary and the importance of secretarial work, she suspects that her move into a different line of work is in part what's getting attention for her book. "If I had stayed a secretary, I don't think — unfortunately — that my viewpoint would be as respected as it is now." That built-in disrespect for secretaries is something she hopes the book will help change. "There's nothing wrong with being a secretary," she said. "It's not a dirty word. It's not a dead-end job. I would not mind, I would not be ashamed of, being a secretary again. My goal is to get the word 'just' taken out of the sentence, 'I'm just a secretary.'"

Carroll's book includes a survival manual on office politics. Some tips:

— Suggest that you and your boss meet periodically to discuss your progress.

— Make sure you understand what your boss's career objectives are and that your boss understands what your career objectives are.

— Let your boss know from the outset what you are and aren't willing to do.

— It's possible to respect your boss without liking her/him, but it's unlikely that she/he will be as open-minded about you.

— Don't extend a social invitation to your boss unless she/he has extended one to you first.

— If there's a party for staff people who assisted on a project you worked on, tell your boss you'd like to be invited.

— There's a right time to bring things up and a wrong time to bring things up.

— Be loyal to your boss and hope that your boss has the decency to be loyal to you (but don't count on it!).

Plant workers said at risk

OAK RIDGE, Tenn. (AP) — Workers at three plants where uranium processing equipment was manufactured or used have been exposed to a classified substance that causes skin cancer, a government spokeswoman said.

Preliminary tests show the substance, which officials refused to name for national security reasons, also has caused genetic mutations and sterility in rats, Department of Energy spokeswoman Carol Knapp-Ayers said Wednesday.

There was no immediate indication the health of workers at the plants here, in California and in Ohio has been endangered, she said.

Energy department officials here who announced the test results and said the workers involved would be notified declined to say whether the material was a gas, solid or liquid.

Between 100 and 150 workers were exposed in the late 1960s to early 1970s at the Oak Ridge Gaseous Diffusion Plant, where uranium is enriched for use as nuclear fuel, said Ms. Knapp-Ayers.

"All I can say is that it is a non-radioactive substance," she said. "There is no health risk to the public.

"We have briefed workers on the test results and notified employers at other government plants to do the same," she said.

The other plants involved were operated by AiResearch Manufacturing Co. in Torrance, Calif., and Goodyear Aerospace Corp. in Akron, Ohio, she said. The Oak Ridge facility is operated by Martin Marietta.

Experts disagree on effect of mothers working

Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

Although four years have passed since Lynn Heckert quit her $24,000-a-year job to stay home with her son, Mathew, there are some things about being a working mother she says she will never forget.

There were days when she would drop Mathew off at preschool at 7 a.m. "and he would scream and cry, and my heart would just break," said the 36-year-old Camarillo, Calif., housewife.

There were evenings when she would have to work late, and he would be the last child to leave his day-care center. "I can picture him standing there by that circular driveway, looking at every car that pulled in to see if it was me, finally," she said. "I remember thinking, 'This is awful. This little boy should not have to be doing this every day of his life — waiting to make sure his mom's gonna come and get him.'"

And there were nights when she would be so tired that once dinner was cooked and cleared away she would collapse on the sofa, exhausted. "Mathew would wake me up at 8 o'clock, saying, 'Mom, it's time to tuck me in,' " she said.

Mathew's grades were good, Heckert said, but she worried so much about the effect of her absence on him that she quit her job supervising an insurance claims office when he was 9 to stay home with him. Her husband, an officer in the California Highway Patrol, supported her decision, and the family has managed on his income alone.

LAT Photo

Lynn Heckert of Camarillo, Calif., quit a supervisory position at an insurance company to become a stay-at-home mother with her son Mathew, 14.

ALTHOUGH SOME WOMEN, like Heckert, stop working when their children are young or encounter some crisis, stay-at-home mothers now find themselves in a distinct minority. Not only are more mothers working than ever before in American history, but they are returning to their jobs earlier in their children's development.

The U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics reports that 60.5 percent of all women with children under 18 work now, compared with 42.1 percent in 1970 and 21.6 percent in 1950. Even a majority of mothers with pre-school children under 6 work outside their homes — 52.1 percent now, compared with 32.3 percent in 1970 and 13.6 percent in 1950.

For many of these women, choosing to work instead of caring for their children fulltime is the single most difficult, gut-wrenching decision they will ever make. Even the most career-minded mothers are sometimes plagued with guilt and self-doubt, and blame themselves for every problem that befalls their youngsters, from scraped knees to drug abuse.

When they turn to the experts for advice on whether they should work, mothers (and fathers, too) find that the psychologists, the counselors and the sociologists who study children openly disagree over whether children with stay-at-home mothers will end up any happier, healthier or better adjusted than those whose mothers go to work.

Some of the best-known child development experts contend that women who work sabotage their children's chances for a happy and normal life. "When a child spends 11 to 12 hours of his waking day in the care of indifferent custodians, no parent and no educator can say that the child's development is being promoted or enhanced," claimed the late Selma H. Fraiberg, a child psychiatrist whose last book, "Every Child's Birthright: In Defense of Mothering," was a 160-page condemnation of working mothers.

OTHER EQUALLY renowned authorities insist just as fervently that full-time homemakers smother their offspring with too much attention and the children, as a result, are insecure, conforming and lacking in initiative. "Several studies indicate low morale on the part of the non-employed mother and, though it is not deliberate, an encouragement of dependency," declares Lois W. Hoffman, a University of Michigan psychology professor and author of several books on working mothers. "It's called 'smother-love.' "

Still other experts, while avoiding these extremes, say their studies show that boys are likely to suffer more from a mother's absence than are their sisters, or that black children seem to thrive academically and emotionally when their mothers work while white children do not, or that the ultimate impact on the children may depend on their fathers, not their mothers.

In this bewildering mix of advice, opinion and information, one thing is clear: Working mothers will never return to their homes the way they once flocked to the workplace. Most families, pinched by rising interest rates, say they cannot get by without the wife's paycheck. And now that women have greater access to the job market, they are also reaping the intangible benefits of work: more independence, more financial control over their lives, gratifying careers that give them increased self esteem.

But the working mother's dilemma is that she is still held almost solely responsible for her child's well-being.

Population of babies booming

WASHINGTON (AP) — There are more preschool-aged Americans now than there have been in the past 15 years, according to Pediatric News.

The publication reports that the post-World War II baby boom generation is reaching childbearing age and is producing a record number of births. The number of Americans 5 years of age or younger reached 17.8 million last year.

Polls find some traditional ideas still preferred

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

Twenty years after the women's movement unleashed unprecedented numbers of women into the workforce, women still believe that their families are the most important part of their lives and would be more prone than men to quit their jobs if they could afford to, a Los Angeles Times Poll has found.

The majority of American men and women appear to have adopted a number of "liberated" beliefs about women, but they are reluctant to fully abandon traditional notions of "women's work" when it comes to childrearing and housekeeping.

While most men and women believe child care and housework should be shared by working couples, one of every five women still feels she should bear most of those burdens alone in addition to her outside job. Neither men nor women believe that a husband alone should be most responsible for those chores. And more than half of the 2,056 people polled agreed with the statement, "It is much better for everyone involved if the man is the achiever outside the home and the woman takes care of the home and the family."

The results of the Times Poll show that while men are more able to pursue their careers singlemindedly, women to some extent feel they must try to balance their responsibilities on the job with their duties at home. Indeed, when asked about the disadvantages of the women's movement, women frequently said that their homes and children suffered and that their lives became more stressful and complicated.

Women, like men, say they work primarily for money, rather than for a sense of accomplishment. But they are far more likely than men to regard their earnings as extra money, not as the basis of the family's support.

And women also are more likely than men to take time off, presumably for childrearing — bearing out the beliefs of some employers that women are less committed to their careers, a notion that slows women's advancement.

Despite the crosscurrent of family and job concerns, the Times Poll indicated that working women are generally satisfied with their lives and their jobs. However, they also perceive unfair treatment that results in lower wages and difficulty in advancing. But women discriminate themselves, saying by an overwhelming margin that they would prefer to work for a man rather than a woman — a view often cited by managers who are reluctant to promote women.

Generally speaking, women and men embrace broad feminist philosophies: They support the equal rights amendment, oppose a constitutional amendment to ban abortion and believe that the role of women in society will only grow stronger as time passes. But vestiges of the past remain: Men and women believe that most men still consider themselves superior to women. Pollsters questioned 874 men and 1,182 women across the United States in a wide-ranging telephone survey aimed at examining attitudes about working women, their place in society, their problems and the changes wrought by their movement into the workplace. Directed by I.A. Lewis and conducted from Aug. 25 to 30, the poll has a margin of error of 3 points.

Of those polled, 63 percent were working, while 37 percent of the respondents said they were not currently employed. Nearly half of the women surveyed said they worked outside the home, 37 percent of them fulltime. By comparison, three of every four men worked outside the home, 66 percent of them fulltime.

Lobbyist team successful women

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — "We were indeed a little bit of a curiosity when we first got started in this town because there isn't anybody quite like us. And we were a curiosity because we were women."

Anne Wexler paused. Her partner, Nancy Reynolds, took up the thought. Some people "underestimated us. And that was a tremendous advantage."

Wexler: "So don't talk about it."

Reynolds: "Oh, yes. Don't talk about it. We'd like to be underestimated forever."

Too late. The surprise is gone and what is left is the rich success that was unimagined by Washington old hands when Democratic activist Anne Wexler joined up with longtime lobbyist and stalwart Republican Nancy Reynolds.

Alone among the selct circle of Washington super-lobbyists — Thomas Hale Boggs Jr., Robert Strauss, Robert K. Gray, William Timmons — are these women. The client list at Wexler, Reynolds, Harrison and Schule includes General Motors, General Foods, the Motion Picture Association of America and several oil companies. In spare time, it's more politics. Last year Wexler became the first woman to chair the Democratic Congressional Dinner. Reynolds, a Reagan appointee to the U.N. Commission on the Status of Women, this year served as vice chair of the GOP equivalent, "The President's Dinner."

Wexler and Reynolds are that first breaking wave of women who hold power on both the front parlors and the back rooms of politics. Their personal histories are thus somewhat public documents — landmarks perhaps even more than those of elected women, the old saw being that legislators eventually die or get defeated, but lobbyists and power brokers go on forever.

Their 18-person firm operates out of a classy and classical set of offices just a few blocks from Wexler's former desk in the Carter White House and from the current home of Reynold's long-time bosses, President and Mrs. Ronald Reagan.

It was almost sitcom swell when they set up shop together — the dark and Democratic Wexler, the Connecticut peace activist, the whiz who built coalitions with a spin of her fabled Rolodex, partnering with blonde and bouncy Reynolds, the TV reporter who moved from the serenity of Reagan's Sacramento staff to the front lines of Washington corporate lobbying to directing the White House transition for First Lady Nancy Reagan.

There was one strong common denominator: As Wexler put it, "Both of us have spent our lifetimes becoming comfortable with politicians."

This kind of power is new to women. "I think sometimes it's harder to use it. It's not as instinctive," Wexler said. "I was always a little reluctant, at least in the early days of my career, to do what I thought was overstepping my own bounds...I think that's more a generational thing...I've learned to overcome that, however."

Neither of them had a "five year plan" for careers. They came to this rarefied place roundabout, reaching somewhat later in life even the outer circles of power. In 1968, Wexler, then 38, attended a McCarthy for President meeting at Yale and talked politics with someone who had been an alternate delegate to the 1960 Democratic Convention. "I had never met, in a political context, an alternate delegate before. I mean, I thought this guy was the most important guy I ever saw in my entire life. That it was a big, big deal."

A laugh. "That year I was a delegate. I've been a delegate every convention since." The Westport housewife began the process of "demystifying" politics and politicians by getting deeply involved in that heyday of revitalized grassroots politcs.

By 1970, during Wexler's managing of Joe Duffey's unsuccessful Senate campaign against Sen. Lowel P. Weicker Jr., "by really dealing with a lot of people who had political power because I knew that they needed me. As much as I needed hem. And then I learned a lot, I mean, I learned a lot about the technique of dealing with politicians."

She is now married to Duffey, who is chancellor of the University of Massachusetts.

Reynolds came to politics even more by chance, when divorced, with three small sons and "trying to earn a living," she got put on the political beat by a television station in Boise, Idaho.

The enticing cookie recipes that follow make bewitching party fare for Halloween celebrations at home or at school — a popular safe alternative to "trick or treats" on the streets. Each is prepared with flavorful solid pack canned pumpkin, notable for its generous content of Vitamin A, plus iron, Vitamin C and other valuable nutrients.

This year, why not let the young folk share in some cookie-making capers for a fun-filled Halloween? Inexperienced youngsters will need supervision when taking cookie sheets in or out of a hot oven. But even if children are too young to bake, they can still share the fun of decorating a gigantic pumpkin cookie, shaping CANDIED PUMPKIN DANDIES into balls or using cookie cutters for PUMPKIN COOKIE MONSTERS.

The GREAT PUMPKIN PAN COOKIE, freckled with real chocolate morsels, is a delectable 14-inch specialty designed to treat a whole gathering of pals. The cookie dough (or the baked, cooled cookie) can be frozen ahead, a time-saver for busy party planners. Let the youngsters frost the pumpkin in a jack-o'-lantern motif. It's easy to slice, so guests can carve their own serving in any shape they like.

PUMPKIN COOKIE MONSTERS, cut from a roll-out dough are easily transformed into owls, ghosts, goblins and funny faces with cookie cutters or cardboard patterns. With a few pokes and pinches to the basic cut-out shapes, the children's own imaginative creations can emerge. Have a variety of packaged frostings, tubes of icing, small hard candies, raisins and nuts on hand to decorate the "monsters" in Halloween style. Peanut butter is a tasty way to attach cookie decorations.

For a bite of pleasure and look of adventure, bake a batch of SCRUMPTIOUS PUMPKIN BROWNIES. Butterscotch flavored morsels, sprinkled over the brownies while they're still warm, melt to spreadable consistency for a quick 'n easy frosting, decorated with a spidery web of chocolate.

Pumpkin cookie capers will help make the celebration remembered — long after Halloween.

THE GREAT PUMPKIN PAN COOKIE

- 2 cups flour
- 1 cup quick or old fashioned oats, uncooked
- 1 teaspoon baking soda
- 1 teaspoon ground cinnamon
- 1/2 teaspoon salt
- 1 cup butter or margarine, softened
- 1 cup firmly packed brown sugar
- 1 cup granulated sugar
- 1 egg
- 1 teaspoon vanilla extract
- 1 cup solid pack pumpkin
- 1 cup semi-sweet real chocolate morsels
- Assorted icing or peanut butter
- Assorted candies, raisins or nuts

Preheat oven to 350°F. Combine flour, oats, baking soda, cinnamon and salt. Cream butter; gradually add sugars, beating until light and fluffy. Add egg and vanilla; mix well. Alternate additions of dry ingredients and pumpkin, mixing well after each addition. Stir in morsels. Spread dough into greased and floured 14-inch deep dish pizza pan. Bake 35 to 40 minutes, until wooden pick inserted near center comes out clean. Cool on rack 15 minutes. Remove cookie from pan. Cool completely. Decorate using icing or peanut butter to affix assorted candies, raisins or nuts. Cut into squares or wedges to serve. Yields about 24 servings.

Variation: Substitute 1 cup raisins for morsels.

SCRUMPTIOUS PUMPKIN BROWNIES

- 1/2 cup butter or margarine, softened
- 2 cups firmly packed brown sugar
- 1 cup solid pack pumpkin
- 2 eggs, slightly beaten
- 1 teaspoon vanilla extract
- 1-1/2 cups flour
- 1-1/2 cups quick or old fashioned oats, uncooked
- 2 teaspoons pumpkin pie spice
- 1 teaspoon baking powder
- 1/2 teaspoon baking soda
- 1/2 teaspoon salt
- 1/2 cup chopped walnuts (optional)
- 2 cups butterscotch flavored morsels
- 1/2 cup semi-sweet real chocolate morsels

Preheat oven to 350°F. In large bowl, cream butter and sugar; add pumpkin, eggs and vanilla. Stir in flour, oats, spice, baking powder, baking soda, salt, and walnuts. Spread batter into greased and floured 15-1/2 x 10-1/2-inch jelly roll pan (or two 8-inch square baking pans). Bake 25 to 30 minutes; (30 to 35 minutes for 8-inch pans). Immediately sprinkle butterscotch morsels on brownies; let stand 5 minutes. To frost, gently spread butterscotch morsels to cover brownies. In small saucepan, melt chocolate morsels over low heat. Drizzle over frosted brownie in a spiral design. While still warm, lightly drag the edge of a knife or thin metal spatula from the center of the spiral to the edge of the pan. Repeat motion at spaced intervals to make a spider web pattern. Cool completely before slicing. Yields about 3 dozen bars.

PUMPKIN COOKIE MONSTERS

- 1/4 cup shortening
- 2/3 cup firmly packed brown sugar
- 1/2 cup solid pack pumpkin
- 3/4 cup light molasses
- 3 cups sifted flour
- 1 teaspoon baking soda
- 1/2 teaspoon salt
- 1/2 teaspoon ground ginger
- 1/2 teaspoon ground cinnamon
- 1/2 teaspoon ground nutmeg
- 1/2 teaspoon ground allspice
- Icing, raisins, gum drops and other candies

Cream shortening and sugar; stir in pumpkin and molasses. Sift together flour, baking soda, salt and spices. Add to pumpkin mixture, one-third at a time, mixing thoroughly after each addition. Cover; chill 2 to 3 hours. Preheat oven to 375°F. On well-floured surface, roll out dough to 1/8-inch thickness. Cut with assorted floured cookie cutters (or cut around floured cardboard patterns). Gently place on greased baking sheets. Bake 8 to 10 minutes or until firm to the touch. Remove from baking sheets, cool on wire racks. Decorate with icing, raisins and candies. Yields 2 dozen (3-inch) cookies.

CANDIED PUMPKIN DANDIES

(not illustrated)

- 1 cup sugar
- 1-1/4 cups flaked coconut, lightly packed
- 1/2 teaspoon ground cinnamon
- 1/4 teaspoon ground nutmeg
- Finely chopped walnuts or peanuts
- Red and green candied cherries (optional)

In large heavy saucepan, combine pumpkin, sugar, coconut and spices; mix well. Cook over medium-high heat, stirring constantly, about 15 to 20 minutes. Candy is done when it becomes very thick and leaves the side of pan, forming a ball in center when stirred. Turn mixture out onto a buttered baking sheet; cover loosely with foil or plastic wrap; cool completely. Lightly butter hands and shape candy into balls; roll in chopped nuts. Top each with a candied cherry half, if desired. Cover and store in refrigerator. Yields about 2-1/2 dozen candies.

VARIATION: For a crunchier candy, stir 1 cup crushed granola into cooked candy before cooling and shaping.

City's vision: Safety for children

By ANN JAPENGA
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

SEATTLE — If you're a kid and you visit this city in the next few years, expect this:

There'll be signs at the airport to greet you — "Welcome to KidsPlace." On the windows of businesses downtown, you'll see shiny new KidsPlace stickers. They mean you'll be treated as well as any adult customer there.

In a reflection of what 7,000 Seattle residents about your age have said they want for their town, the city will be clean, full of flowers and safe. And if you happen to arrive on the last day of April, you're in luck: It will be Kid's Day, an answer to every child who ever wondered why we celebrate Father's Day and Mother's Day, but not children's day.

You might just take a look around and decide to stay — at least that is what the mayor is hoping.

Announcing that he wants to make Seattle "the best city in the nation in which to raise a family," Seattle Mayor Charles Royer has introduced a long-range project called KidsPlace. Its goals:

—To provide a better environment for families now living in Seattle.

—To attract new families with children to the city.

—To consider children's concerns as part of every political, cultural and economic decision.

Between 1970 and 1980, Seattle's overall population decline was 7 percent, while the numbers of youth and school-aged children fell by 36 percent as families began to move out of the city. The trend has started to reverse itself in the last four years, but city planners feel the situation is alarming enough that measures must be taken to ensure that Seattle does not become a city of singles and childless professionals.

"This is not just a Seattle problem, this is a problem everywhere," said KidsPlace coordinator Donna James.

James has received letters from places such as Oakland, Minneapolis, and Henderson, Nev., where community leaders are also concerned about declining numbers of young residents. At an April conference, representatives of other cities will be invited to observe Seattle's new kid-appeal firsthand.

KidsPlace addresses far more than the need to balance numbers of youth and aged in a city. KidsPlace executive committee co-chairman Dr. Robert Aldrich has said that a city that is not comfortable for children eventually becomes a place where adults do not like to live, either. As he sees it, the goal of KidsPlace is improving the quality of life.

Aldrich, former chairman of the Department of Pediatrics at the University of Washington School of Medicine, said that as he traveled the world as a consultant on children's health matters in the 1960s (he was appointed by President Kennedy to found the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development), he began to wonder: "How the heck do you make a city better for children?"

The question took on more urgency when Aldrich chaired a committee of the National Academy of Science that spent four years studying families and children in the United States. The committee's report was dreary. The urban environment, it seems, was turning children into drug addicts, mentally ill youths, criminals and the wandering homeless.

Four years ago, Aldrich invited over a few friends for coffee. Some of them specialized in children; some of them knew about cities. The informal group organized and began seeking a cure for the ills of city kids. The obvious solution was to make the city — an environment Aldrich describes as "hostile, and becoming more so" — more hospitable to children.

Aldrich was invited to present the group's findings to Mayor Royer. That meeting led to a Child in the City conference, similar to one Aldrich had organized in Tokyo along with a Japanese physician in 1981. And from that conference, KidsPlace was born.

"Seems like everything you read about kids these days (in reference to problems such as child abuse) just makes you feel so hopeless and sad," said Stewart. "But this is positive."

AT WIT'S END

By ERMA BOMBECK

In a little over two weeks, a nation of voters will go to the polls to elect a vice president of the United States.

Their mandate will answer the questions once and for all: who will assume the awesome job of representing this nation as a professional mourner at funerals throughout the world? Who will support the president's hand in a victory salute at conventions? Who will occupy the most coveted address in Washington — Blair house?

This has been one of the most dramatic campaigns in the history of the vice presidency. And frankly, I don't know if I'm ready or not to make the all-important decision on the information I have at hand.

I know that Geraldine Ferraro can make blueberry muffins in her kitchen, but what do I know about George Bush? Can he make a birdhouse in his garage or put on snow chains or change a furnace filter?

I know all about Geraldine Ferraro's hair. I know who cuts it and how often and during a rainstorm in Portland, Ore., the curl held. The style is destined to become a classic in the tradition of Dorothy Hamill and Farrah Fawcett.

But I know nothing about George Bush's barber. Will his short clip make history like Sen. Bob Dole or Congressman Tip O'Neill's hairstyle?

And what do we know about the mates of these two who will accompany them on Air Force II? What is Barbara Bush's ethnic background and do I know if she has an income and if so what is it? And what did Gerry Ferraro's husband, John Zaccaro, wear at an Italian-American dinner held recently? Was it a pinstripe? Or separates?

Every voter wants to make an intelligent decision at the polls, but sometimes I feel we're only getting one side of the story. Sure, Gerry Ferraro said she's a mother and doesn't want to send her son off to war, but what did George Bush have to say about his sons as a father?

Gerry was photographed in a supermarket the day after her nomination shuffling through No. 2 cans of tomatoes, but where does George Bush hang out? Looking at mufflers or seat covers for the car?

I read where Joan Mondale engaged in a conversation with Gerry that made the wire services in which the vice presidential hopeful commented on her red dress. Joan was surprised she could think in feminine terms.

Don't tell me Nancy Reagan hasn't from time to time mentioned George's black tie and tux in "masculine terms." No one ever prints it.

It's been an interesting race. One that has nearly overshadowed Ronald Whatshisname and Walter You-know-who.

It's a part of the process, I guess, toward the day in the future when someone will say, "The Democrats/Republicans picked a candidate for the presidency," and the answer will be, "Oh, who is she?"

NEWPORT BEACH, Calif. (AP) — A language-picture dictionary has been published to assist Americans traveling abroad, reports The Travel Agent magazine.

Program provides pets for nursing homes

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Neither could talk. The elderly woman had a severe speech problem. And he was just a friendly little ferret. Yet, for a few moments in a world of sound, silence said more than words.

Hilda De'Abreu, an 82-year-old nursing home patient, gently stroked and hugged the furry animal named Ollie.

And the raccoon-like creature loved it. Ollie cuddled up to the white-haired woman until they were nestled cheek-to-cheek. Then, Mrs. De'Abreu laughed and rocked in her chair at Tampa Health Care Center, where she lives.

And Ollie, who lives at the local Humane Society, stayed put in her arms.

Their brief visit was part of a humane society program called "pet therapy." It's a concept designed to bring cast-off or homeless animals from the shelter to nursing homes wrestling to shed a similar last-stop image.

"Nursing homes should not be a place to come to die. That's the way people traditionally regard them," said William "Dan" McGuinness, adminstrator for the past two years.

"I am very much pro pet therapy. For the people here, it increases their quality of life. It helps ward off depression, keeps them mentally alert and oriented. And it brings in others from the community," McGuinness added.

Margaret "Meg" Mason, acting director of the Hillsborough County Humane Society, visits at least 10 nursing homes in Tampa regularly, packing along Ollie or Inky, a pet skunk, kittens and puppies that spend a few hours going from lap to lap among the elderly, the infirm, the lonely, and the convalescents.

"I've had animals all my life and I love people," said Ms. Mason, from Garden City, N.Y. She came to Florida a year ago after two years with the humane society in Spartanburg, S.C.

"In one way or another I've always been associated with both — through volunteer work or jobs. Most people had a pet at one time or another and this brings back warm memories, something to relate to. To see them smile, that's what it's all about."

Her only helper in this 10-month-old time-consuming endeavor has been Jason Arbeiter, 13, who came on as a volunteer to earn credit toward a Boy Scout badge. He did that in two days but stayed the summer. "I like older people. And I like to see them happy," said the eighth-grader.

"I'm here to spread a little sunshine. All I want is a smile," said Ms. Mason as she handed Ollie to Mrs. De'Abreu, a resident since June 1983. She suffers from an articulation disorder and for many years has had severely impaired speech. It makes forming words difficult.

"When Meg first talked about pet therapy, I thought the idea was fabulous," said McGuinness. He was so enthused that now the center has a backyard pen of four bunnies, and a resident cat.

Punks, passers-by promenade on King's Road

By WILLIAM TUOHY
Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

LONDON — On a sunny weekend, the King's Road is the most colorful mile in London, a magnet for locals and tourists alike.

The outrageous hair and dress styles dictated by punk fashion — Mohican haircuts with brightly colored, sharply pointed spikes and tattered black clothing — have become commonplace, but visitors still stop and stare.

The road is not only the main street in London's Chelsea district but also the city's main promenade. People stroll back and forth to see and be seen in front of a lively backdrop of boutiques, pubs, specialty stores, restaurants and outdoor cafes.

"The King's Road has stood the test of time," a man at Cecil Gee's clothing shop said "Though it's not what it used to be — people still think of the swinging '60s — it's now on the upswing. People seem to think that fashion originates on the King's Road. Much nicer clothing today. Clothes in shops are getting to be more individual and more fashionable. The competition's brilliant, which is good for everyone. Designers are coming up and down the King's Road to get new ideas."

A young Swedish visitor, Ana Ramsen, said: "We came to go shopping and look at the people. Of course, we have shops at home, but nothing so famous. It's fascinating."

THE KING'S ROAD proper begins at Sloane Square, an attractive area with a fountain in the center, surrounded by theatrical pubs next to the Royal Court Theater and the underground station.

Originally, the road was developed for the private use of King Charles II (1660-85) when he wished to travel to his hunting lodge in suburban Surrey.

Sloane Square is the mecca of the "Sloane Rangers," at the upmarket end of the scale and far removed from most of the punks. This is because of Peter Jones, the fashionable but thrifty department store, and the General Trading Co., a favorite of the Princess of Wales, just around the corner on Sloane Street.

This end of the road is also the locale of intimate, chic restaurants like Sambuca, the outdoor garden of the General Trading Co., and Alexander's, which was established by Mary Quant for the benefit of customers at her boutique.

Moving west along the road, with its double-decker red buses and black taxis, you pass the Duke of York's headquarters, which serves among other things as the London base of the Special Air Service, Britain's special operations military branch. Curiously, the punks have chosen the window sills of this building to perch upon after the pubs close at 3 a.m.

Although the punks can look menacing, with rings in their noses and ears, they will generally pose for a snapshot — if the photograher forks over a pound note or so.

On the other side of the road, the punks are stared at by patrons of Blushes, a popular outdoor cafe that attracts considerable numbers of foreigners, many of them Arabs who tend to show off the keys to their Mercedes-Benzes and Porsches parked nearby.

DOWN THE STREET, a Safeway lends a mundane note to the scene, but you can also shop at a charming, Dickensian bakery there called Beatons, which features twisty loaves and Mrs. Twiggywinkle cakes.

Along the way, you pass a row of fancy boutiques: Fiorucci, Benneton, the Jean Machine.

The intersection with Royal Avenue forms a small square that the punks have taken over. Each one seems to be trying to outdazzle the others. Black clothes and five-tone hairdos are the norm.

In the distance is the Chelsea Royal Hospital. The aging pensioners come forth every day for a constitutional stroll, wearing distinctive long scarlet coats with medals gleaming on their chests.

One of them, Cpl. Frank Baker, complained: "This is our main street. But in the past four years, it's become full of spivs and spikey hairs and those kind of people. You have to watch your step, especially on a Saturday night. But we don't come out then. Still, it's a nice precinct to walk around."

Just to the south is Flood Street, where Margaret Thatcher lived for many years before moving to No. 10 Downing St., the prime minister's residence, which is situated about 100 yards from the King's Road.

Some of the fast food places have outdoor tables these days, though the sidewalks are not very wide anywhere along the King's Road.

There are several squares, some named after such historical figures as the Duke of Wellington and Thomas Carlyle, the 19th-Century writer.

ABOUT HALFWAY down the street you run into the Habitat, a popular furniture store, and the Reject China shop across from the antique markets. Here, too, is the old Chelsea City Hall, the Chelsea Library and the Fire Department, which serves as a kind of focal point for the whole area.

There are discos on the road, one called Stocks, run by Victor Lowndes, the former director of Playboy Club activities in Britain, and another called Raffles. A new popular rendezvous is Henry J. Bean's, an American-style beer parlor with a back garden on the site of an inn that was once frequented by Charles II.

Next door is the Pucci Pizza, which along with the Bersagliera down the street makes the best Neapolitan-style pizza in London. Also in this area is the Chelsea Farmer's market and nurseries.

Toward the end of the street, the shops give way to a cluster of restaurants and the World's End Pub, which used to be a distillery. The World's End is one bus stop past another called the Men on the Moon, which has led local wags to suggest that the short bus ride is the city's longest — from the moon to World's End.

Highest spots located in Maine

SKOKIE, Ill. (AP) — The highest tides in the continental United States are in Maine, according to Rand McNally's "Mobil Travel Guide."

Maine has about 3,500 miles of seacoast and about 2,500 lakes within its borders. Except for its eastern edge, virtually the whole northern half of Maine is a wilderness area of lakes, streams and mountains.

The highest point on the Atlantic coast of the United States is actually on an island slightly off the coast of Maine, according to the guide.

It is Cadillac Mountain, elevation 1,530 feet, which sits in Acadia National Park, Maine.

The park occupies nearly half of Mt. Desert Island, which can be reached by a short bridge from the mainland.

Philadelphia hotel celebrates 80th birthday

By WILLIAM ROBBINS
New York Times News Service

PHILADELPHIA — One day last month, none of the diners at the Bellevue Stratford Hotel attacked their food the way Boies Penrose would in the days when the old hotel was young, but the temptation was obvious.

For the Bellevue turned back the calendar to the days when Penrose, the turn-of-the-century boss of Pennsylvania Republican politics, slaked his legendary thirst with glass after glass of Manhattan cocktails and satisfied his gargantuan appetite with whole turkeys at his customary table in a corner of the hotel's Hunt Room.

In time the hotel's name became entwined with Philadelphia politics and politicians, and on Sept. 19, the Bellevue, known fondly here as the Grand Dame of Broad Street, celebrated its 80th birthday. In honor of the occasion it served foods based on its orginal menu, with oysters, for example, at 25 cents an order, roast young lamb for $1 and turban of bass Florentine at 75 cents.

Mayor W. Wilson Goode was there to cut a giant three-tiered birthday cake in a lobby graced with towering marble columns as the bronze bust of Shakespeare looked down from its perch above an ornate brass mailbox.

On hand also, as he frequently is, was Joseph Smith, chairman of the Democratic City Committee, as was Harold J. Wiegand, retired editor and now a guest columnist of The Philadelphia Inquirer, who at 84 was one of the few habitues present who could recall Penrose's dining habits.

"I was there," said Wiegand. "I saw with my own eyes."

Penrose, already a United States senator when the Bellevue Stratford opened in 1904, became a powerful national figure before his death in 1921.

But Penrose was one of the least of the luminaries remembered by another of the guests, the 92-year-old Joseph Garden, who rose to chief steward in his 55 years at the Bellevue. Best known for the ice sculptures he carved and for a style that gave him a reputation as one of the city's best-dressed men, Garden can recall greeting such dignitaries as Harry S. Truman and Henry Ford.

The birthday celebration was also attended by Michael Smylie, vice president of the Clover Club, founded in 1892 by men who claimed to live "in clover" and dedicated to the art of dining well. The club moved its irregularly scheduled meetings from an older hotel to the Bellevue shortly after its opening.

Smylie is a member of a small committee of old Philadelphians who decide which of today's citizens have achieved prominence enough to have their photographs join the gallery that adorns the Hunt Room's walls. One of the latest additions was Goode.

The Bellevue Stratford, built by the noted hotelier George C. Boldt, who once managed New York's Waldorf Astoria and vowed one day to erect one in Philadelphia to match its elegance, opened its doors to guests at rates scaled from $3.50 to $6 a night. Although that was a fancy price at a time when other good rooms could be found for $2 — and on the American plan — the lowest regular rate for a Bellevue room now is $110.

The French Renaissance structure, now listed on the National Register of Historic Places, opened at a time when immigrants were pouring into the city, when Philadelphia, with more than 1.2 million citizens, was the country's leading manufacturing city and still growing fast. Even William Penn's statue had stood atop City Hall for only 10 years then.

Guest suites offered telephones, its bathrooms provided curling irons, many rooms had fireplaces, and it had 12,000 electric lights, designed by Thomas Edison.

THE VISA

It is necessary to obtain a visa before entering many countries. If your travels will be limited to the Caribbean Islands, Latin America and Western Europe, you will probably never have to concern yourself with visa matters. However, if you plan to travel off the beaten tourist track, chances are you will need one. The fact is more countries require a visa than those that do not, about 60%. The visa itself merely consists of a stamp, usually placed right in your passport. It indicates that an official of the country you wish to enter has examined your passport, that you have met the requirements for entry, and that you have been granted permission to travel there.

Next time you're planning a trip abroad for business or pleasure, put yourself in the hands of the experts and let us handle all the details. At LONES TRAVEL SERVICE, a computerized facility which makes travel arrangements hassle-free, you can depend on us to help you decide where to go, what to see and what you'll need (such as visas, passports, etc.). In the Permian Bldg., on the street level at 319 W. Texas, we're open Mon.-Fri., 8-5 and Sat. by appointment. Call 682-8645.

The Soviet Union and most of the countries in Eastern Europe require visas for American travelers.

Maui resort beautiful model of development

By MICHAEL CARLTON
Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

KAANAPALI BEACH, Maui — Twenty-five years ago Hawaii became our 50th state.

Also twenty-five years ago the first jet aircraft to land in Hawaii, a Qantas 707, touched down at Honolulu Airport and initiated the modern tourist era in the South Pacific. The arrival of jets made it possible to reach Hawaii in a few hours from nearly anywhere in North America and Asia.

That same year — 1959 — another event took place in Hawaii that was little noticed, except by a curious knot of seagulls and a few sugar cane rats. Yet the little-heralded event has had a profound effect on Hawaii.

At 10:04 a.m. on March 12, 1959, the first spade of dirt was turned and Kaanapali, the world's first planned resort, was under way. Kaanapali has since served as the model for the development of the Hawaiian Out Islands, a model that many believe has saved Maui and Kauai and the Big Island from much of the neon madness of Waikiki. It also has proved to be perhaps the most successful resort development in the world.

Still growing and prospering, Kaanapali — with its six hotels, seven condominiums, 40 restaurants and scores of shops — plays to full houses (or at least almost full; the occupancy rate for 1984's first six months was more than 90 percent).

That nearly a half million people would arrive each year to stay in Kaanapali was probably even beyond the wildest dreams of the officers of the Amfac Corporation, Hawaii's largest, when they carved the 1,200 acres of Kaanapali out of sugar-cane fields and brooding kiawe thickets. Before Amfac converted the fields of its Pioneer Sugar Mill into a world-class resort, cows were held in pens here and fed pineapple tops to sweeten their beef for market, and local children played games on the sweeping three-mile beach.

Amfac committed $10 million, a huge sum of money by 1960 standards, to build a resort out of relative wilderness. Today, ocean-front land sells for $1 million an acre and the resort's buildings are valued at more than $730 million. When the Sheraton opened in January, 1963 as Kaanapali's second resort (the Royal Lahaina opened a few months before), it offered rooms for $15 a night; today's minimum is $95.

All of Kaanapali's success is due to the careful planning of facilities, the use of much open space and greenness, the careful selection of hotel partners (the two newest are Hyatt and Marriott), to maintain the Kaanapali standard, which is very high indeed. The resort is on a parcel of land about the size of Waikiki. While Kaanapali has 13 hotels and condominiums along its beach, Waikiki has more than 100.

The developers of Kaanapali built two golf courses, 36 tennis courts and 24 swimming pools to keep visitors happy. They built a shopping center (now undergoing a $4.5 million expansion), a whaling museum, and subsidized a narrow-gauge railway to take people to the nearby whaling town of Lahaina.

All these attractions combined to lure people to, and keep people on, the property, thus assuring a healthy flow of tourist dollars into Kaanapali's large pockets, and creating more than 5,000 jobs for Maui residents.

As it grew and prospered, Kaanapali was copied by other Hawaiian resorts: Wailea and Kapalua on Maui, Princeville on Kauai. Other areas, like Poipu Beach on Kauai and the Kona Coast on the Big Island, have followed Kaanapali's lead in restricting the type of buildings allowed and in demanding massive greenbelts to prevent a duplication of Waikiki's concrete canyons.

More is about to happen at Kaanapali. The resort's small airport will be closed soon, thus opening up another 100 acres for development that will eventually hold four hotels and one condominium, none higher than six stories and all charging carrige-trade prices.

All this success is taking place on what was just a scruffy bit of land only 25 years ago.

Maui luxury hotel offers exotic birds, art works

By MICHAEL CARLTON
Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

KAANAPALI BEACH, Maui — Awakening at the Hyatt Regency Maui is not a matter of choice. You awaken when the macaws do. The parrot-like birds scream as loudly as a locomotive coming to an abrupt halt, and when they are brought from their sleeping quarters to their daytime perches in the lobby, they serve as feathered alarm clocks for tourists staying the the hotel's 815 rooms and suites.

Being awakened by the macaws is not much of an inconvenience, however, for there is no end of things to do at this adult Disneyland, and you need most of every day just to scratch the surface in this edifice dedicated to the true hedonists among us.

Honolulu developer Chris Hemmeter put $80 million into developing the hotel, added a few more million in art works, another large piece of change for an exotic collection of birds, and invited the traveling public to enjoy his somewhat eclectic tastes.

There is nothing understated about the Hyatt Regency Maui. Like most Hyatts it has an atrium, but Hemmeter has improved on the original concept. His atrium has no roof; when it rains, it rains in the lobby, too. His Hyatt has a huge, 100-year-old weeping banyan tree soaring 70 feet in the middle of the lobby. His Hyatt has great cascades of bougainvillaea tumbling from the roof (or where the roof would be) to the lobby floor nine stories below.

His lobby, in addition to a collection of squawking exotic birds, has penguins flapping about just below the surface of a pond and fat, expensive, exotic carp (called koi) coming up to nibble gently a piece of popcorn dropped by a child. Forget Disneyland, Bubba, this is a better Fantasyland than anything Uncle Walt ever dreamed up, at least for adults.

There are birds flying and walking and waddling and swimming throughout the 18-acre property — flamingoes, Australian black swans, English mute swans, Chilean black neck swans (they have white bodies), cockatiels, madarin ducks, green- and blue-wing teals, peacocks, cockatoos and parrots.

Nine waterfalls, ranging in height from six to 18 feet, pour 3,000 gallons a minute over $1 million worth of artificial rocks to create a constant murmuring as a counterpoint to the screams of the birds. Add to the waterfalls and the rocks 16,200 shrubs, 1,250 palm trees and 1,330 other trees, plus a half-acre swimming pool with a 130-foot water slide, and the nearby Pacific Ocean, and you have a really nice home for all this wildlife — and not a bad place for a tourist, either.

Atlantic City casinos booming

By DAVID LAMB
Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. — Being unabashedly fond of Las Vegas, I must admit that my heart hardly beat with great anticipation as I rolled into Atlantic City on a Greyhound bus the other day.

I mean, let's be honest: Does the Boston Pops play Des Moines? Would the New York Public Library make it in Lewiston, Me.? Would Howard Hughes have holed up in, God forbid, Atlantic City?

Perhaps I should quickly add that I would have never come here at all except that Burt Lancaster's marvelous movie, "Atlantic City," stirred my curiosity about the place and Greyhound offered me a deal I couldn't refuse — a round-trip ticket from New York for $22.75, of which the casino refunded $20 in coins and coupons.

Coming into Atlantic City on U.S. 30 is a fairly bleak experience, through dreary suburbs, past auto repair shops and cheap motels. Give me the desert road to Vegas anytime. I like the way Vegas springs up at you out of nowhere, its gaudy beauty and lost innocence full of false promises. I like knowing that the city exists only to serve my quest for pleasure. Take away the gambling, the 24-hour gin mills, the chorus lines, and Vegas would simply disappear.

Success, though, made Las Vegas smug and arrogant. When I lived there in the '60s the third-floor bistro at the Desert Inn was known as the Top of the Strip, and Vegas really was a small town with a big heart. Then the corporations took over, the show lounges gave way to keno parlors, many of the big stars drifted away, the dealers acted more and more as if a smile or a civil word was beneath their dignity. Even the chandeliers and plush carpeting could not disguise the fact that most of the casinos had become not much more than tacky department stores for gamblers.

The nice surprise about Atlantic City is that success — 27 million visitors a year who leave $4.9 million a day behind — hasn't spoiled the place yet. Dealers chat with the customers and I actually saw a pit boss at the Golden Nugget applauding a crap shooter who had just taken the house for a few grand. The cocktail waitresses look like women who go home to their families at night instead of ladies who moonlight at a different vocation, and the players' faces seem less intense, less pained, than those I remember from Vegas.

Perhaps all this just comes with newness, but Nevada had better take heed: Vegas East is booming.

The eight casinos by 1987 will be 15. Hotel rooms run about $110 a night and occupancy is more than 90 percent year-round. More than $2 billion in construction is under way.

DEAR ABBY

Marriage encounter helps couples

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I know you must get tons of mail from people who say, "I just need to tell someone." Well, here's another one.

I'm a happily married woman, but I've come across a man I feel I've got to have. (Not to keep — just to have.) When we met about a year and a half ago, I knew instantly the feeling between us was mutual. Although neither of us has ever come right out and said, "Let's get together," we drop hints and kid about it. I don't see him often, but when I do, I melt like a schoolgirl.

I don't know if one good romp in the sack would satisfy me or not, but I keep wondering what it would be like.

Abby, I'm 28 and have children. He is also a family man. I'd never risk losing my husband. He had a brief office affair a few years ago. I was bitter at first, but I got over it, so I don't think I'm considering having an affair to even the score. I need help in handling my feelings. — MIXED UP DOWN SOUTH

DEAR MIXED UP: You are very wise to ask for help. You need it. Forget the "one good romp in the sack" — it's habit-forming and could be hazardous to your marriage.

Have you ever heard of Marriage Encounter? It's a weekend counseling course for couples who have grown apart, lost the spark and want to reaffirm their commitment to each other. It's a spiritual and romantic shot in the arm.

Over the years I've had glowing reports about Marriage Encounter. There are Catholic, Protestant and Jewish groups, but one need not belong to any church to participate. Ask any clergyman.

Age doesn't matter. Couples married 40 years and longer have benefited from it. In the words of a lovely old song, "You'll find your happiness lies right under your eyes, back in your own back yard."

DEAR ABBY: I have read with great interest the controversy surrounding white weddings in your column and applaud the encouragement you have given women who see their weddings as a celebration of their faith in the future, not an apology for the past (even if they have been living with their fiances).

White has been a color of joy since Roman times. Traditionally, ceremonial robes have often been richly colored, whether they were peasant costumes or gold-embroidered kimonos.

During the Middle Ages red was the favored color, and it still is the color chosen by Hindu, Islamic and Chinese brides.

The white wedding dress is a fairly recent tradition. Victorian brides from privileged backgrounds wore white to indicate that they were rich enough to wear a dress for one day only — but still the majority at that time wore their best finery.

We who now live well into our 80s (as opposed to our 50s in 1900) must also develop a more tolerant view of the needs of people who, like half of all U.S. citizens, will probably divorce and remarry in their lifetime. Their sincere efforts to begin again should be supported by the community they seek to join. In unity there is harmony, and color should not bar the way. — BARBARA TOBER, EDITOR IN CHIEF, BRIDE'S MAGAZINE

(Getting married? Send for Abby's new, updated, expanded booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." Send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 (this includes postage) to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

'Autotransfusion' devices recycle patient's own blood

Hearst News Service

Fear of AIDS and hepatitis has spurred the development of new devices that suck up blood lost during surgery and return it to the patient, thus avoiding potential infection from transfusions of donated blood.

The idea of autotransfusion is at least a century old, but only now are devices for collecting, filtering and reinfusing the shed blood becoming safe enough for routine use, say surgeons.

"Interest in autotransfusion has risen exponentially with the recognition of AIDS," the lethal immune deficiency disease evidently caused by a virus that can be transmitted through blood transfusions, said Dr. William Krupski, chief of vascular surgery at the San Francisco Veterans Administration Hospital. "We've all been trying to cut down on blood transfusions."

One autotransfusion system has just been introduced by Thoratec Laboratories Corp. of Berkeley, Calif. The BloodStat device is relatively cheap ($250), mostly disposable, and can be set up in minutes, said Thoratec spokesman David Downie.

Costing about as much as three units of blood, the device is used in operations involving substantial bleeding. Krupski, for example, often needs to replace large amounts of blood during operations on major blood vessels that are weakened or have ruptured. But if there is a risk of the blood becoming infected, as in abdominal operations where the intestines may be penetrated, autotransfusion is not considered safe.

BloodStat consists of a system of tubes and containers that are suspended from a standard intravenous infusion pole. The surgeon uses a hand-held wand to collect blood from the patient's wound, and an anticoagulant chemical is automatically added to the blood to prevent clotting. Filters remove contamination such as bone chips, and the blood flows into a reservoir and then into a plastic bag, from which it is reinfused into a vein in the patient's arm.

What Ever Happened To Joe?

Did He Die? Move Away? Is He Mad?

You know Joe. He's the guy that used to come in your business quite often and he bought quite a few things. But Joe hasn't been around for a while. Makes you wonder why, doesn't it?

Joe may be the same old Joe he ever was. Happy, healthy and a good customer. But he may now be someone else's customer. No, you say, Joe always got good service here and he was a satisfied customer.

Maybe. But Joe might have been reading our newspaper and read one of your competitor's ads and decided to give someone else a try. He may be getting good service and is a satisfied customer, but it may now be down the street.

What can you do? Just Write Joe off? No, don't give up so easily. Advertise to get Joe back. And while you're at it, you'll probably be helping keep Jane and John, Dick and Sally and all of your other customers coming in the door regularly.

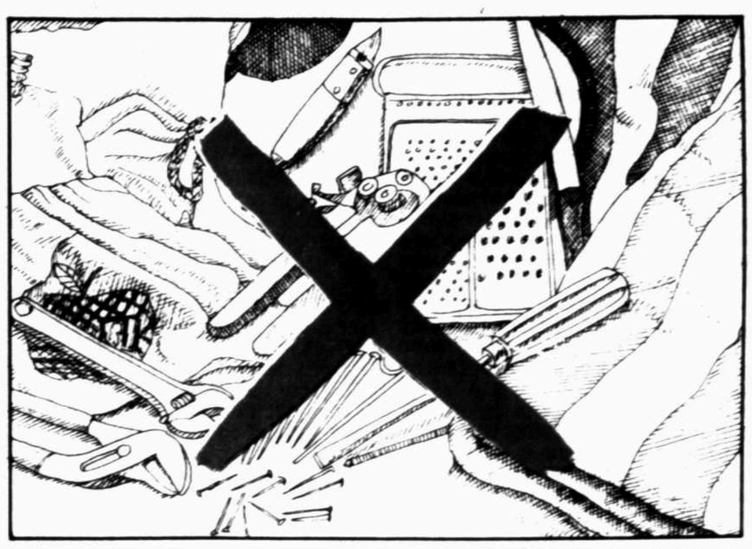
The Texas blue laws

Are we rid of them?

By SUSAN LINDSAY
Business-Oil Writer



Matt Holton / Reporter-Telegram

Texas Blue Laws, described by some as a real "pain in the Sunday," may be the most disliked state laws on the books and the least enforced, and many are hoping this coming session of the legislature will finally see the end of them.

"The Blue Laws will be brought np again this session," said State Represenative, Tom Craddick, "and it could be repealed. More people are now opposed to them."

The law restricts sales of 42 types of merchandise on consecutive neekend days, making only stores open seven days week subject to the ordinance. Prohibited items include kitchen ware and utensils, clothing, footwear, toys, tools, hardware, rugs, lawn furniture and bed coverings.

John Moore, director of state tax information in Austin, said all Texans are "obligated to abide by the Blue Law but punishment is up to local jurisdiction."

Midland City Attorney Joe Nuessle said a complaint against the ordinance has never been filed while he has been in office the past 27 years.

"No one has ever tried to file a Blue Law suit in Midland County," he said. "Anybody who knew of an establishment violating the so-called Blue Law could file a complaint. But, no one has ever pushed it in Midland."

He said he recalled a case a number of years ago in which a county attorney attempted to prosecute a merchant for violating the law and the district judge called it unconstitutional. "Midland has always gone by that rule," he said.

Mark Dettman, Midland County attorney said that a person can be assessed a fine of $100 for first offense violation of the Blue Law. First violations are handled by the city attorney's office, he said.

Second offense violators can receive a possible $500 fine or six months imprisonment handed down by the county office, he said. "But we've never had a subsequent offense presented to us," Dettman added.

Wayne Gideon, Midland Chief of Police, said it is his intention to enforce the laws but no place across the state has put forth an aggressive effort to enforce the Blue Law.

He has not had any complaints of Blue Law violators but he is sure there are stores in Midland who do violate the ordinance, he said.

Of eight Midland discount stores, all of which are open seven days a week, asked about their compliance with the Blue Law, six declined comment.

The manager of Sprouse Reitz Variety store said she was unaware of the law and does sell all merchandise, including clothing and kitchen ware, in the store on Sunday.

Walmart's manager said the Blue Law is not feasible to enforce in a large store. He said that if sections were roped off, this would upset customers and the store would lose business.

However, Moore said that the cause of the Blue Law was to decrease discount stores' business.

Mid-continent rift could prove oil reserve elephant

New York Times
News Service

NEW YORK — The discovery that a rift valley five miles deep, filled with a billion-year accumulation of sediment, lies beneath the rolling farm lands of the Middle West has sent rippies of excitement through the oil-prospecting community. Some specialists are speaking of possible oil reservoirs comparable to those of the North Sea.

Such a reservoir would greatly increase American energy independence and would be free from the high costs and pollution risks of offshore oil exploitation.

Last month, in a step that could provide the first direct evidence of the rift's potential, Texaco Inc. began drilling a 13,000-foot test hole into the formation in Kansas, where a series of deep seismic surveys has revealed the depth of the rift. It is reported that about 150 agents of various oil companies are swarming over the region, buying lease rights from landowners, and that four geophysical companies are conducting surveys.

The rift runs from western Lake Superior southwest along Minnesota's boundary with Wisconsin, across Iowa and the southwest corner of Nebraska into Kansas.

Because of the great age of the deposits, some oil specialists are pessimistic regarding the rift's potential. During one or more stages of the continent's history, they say, intense cooking of oil accumulations there could have left only a worthless residue of carbon. Eight oil fields in the Irkutsk basin of Siberia, however, are producing commercial quantities of oil from such ancient deposits and the same is true of the Amadeus basin in central Australia.

Another concern is whether, when lakes existed in the rift 1.1 billion years ago or earlier, life within them at so early a stage in evolution was abundant enough to result, long afterward, in oil formation.

Nevertheless, oil occurs in the so-called Nonesuch shale, where the rift's deep formations emerge flanking the west end of Lake Superior. Analysis of this oil has led to the conclusions that lake waters in the rift there were teeming with fungi and algae. In the White Pine Mine on Michigan's Keweenaw Peninsula this shale contains enough oil to complicate extraction of the copper sulfide ore.

A relatively optimistic evaluation of the rift potential has been presented in the Oil and Gas Journal by Carol Kindle Lee, an exploration geologist formerly with Kerr Associates in Denver, and S. Duff Kerr, founder of that firm of exploration consultants. Miss Lee is now working for her doctorate at Cornell University.

Both have been following developments in the midcontinent area. She made a similar presentation last month at a meeting of the Petroleum Exploration Society of New York.

Comparing the rift there to highly productive ones in Egypt, Libya, China and the Soviet Union, they have concluded that the extent of available production "may well be of giant proportion."

That something remarkable lay under the farmlands first became evident from gravity surveys. It was found, for example, that a highly precise pendulum clock runs faster in Minneapolis than in Chicago because gravity in Minneapolis is slightly stronger. This feature has been mapped from the Canadian border to Kansas as the Mid-Continent Gravity High.

The map above indicates the general scope and direction of the mid-continent rift.

JOHN PAUL PITTS

The case for deregulation is self-evident

"We hold these truths to be self-evident...," goes the wording in the Declaration of Independence. Some things are self-evident.

Simple observations in anatomy and sociology makes it self-evident that men and women were created for each other and not vice-versa, despite volumes of intellectual, apologetic jibberish about "alternate lifestyles." Man-and-woman is perhaps the most fundamental, self-evident of truths.

Communists nations can intellectualize all they they want about the so-called classless society, but when they have to put armed guards on the borders to keep the people in, it is self-evident this is not paradise found.

In Texas, the state trucking lobby can preach all it wants about small towns being deprived of freight service and the highways becoming infested with dope-crazed truckers should that industry become deregulated, but it's only so much rhetoric.

When shippers in Dallas must ban together and rent trucks to ship their goods out of state to Shreveport, just so they can ship them back into the state as cheaper, unregulated interstate packages, one suspicions there is something profoundly wrong with the system. But, when one learns that as a result of regulated intrastate trucking rates, Proctor & Gamble can service its accounts in Austin and San Antonio cheaper from Louisiana than, Dallas, it becomes self-evident there is something wrong with the trucking rates.

That's not the way things are supposed to function in a free enterprise economy. But who said the trucking laws of Texas had anything to do with free enterprise.

It is strangely ironic that in a state which prides itself on free enterprise, entrepreneurship and a hands-off approach to government such a self-evident violation of those principals could long exist. Just why it exists is still a source of mystery for many.

When it comes to regulating oil and gas no bureaucracy anywhere does a better job than the Texas Railroad Commission. When OPEC nations in the Middle East and South America wanted to know how to prorate, regulate and conserve oil production, they didn't go to the Department of Energy they came to the Texas Railroad Commision. The Commission has earned great respect for itself in the oil industry for its fairness in policing the industry for the greater good of the state, consumers, environment and producer. It's marks in the regulation of transportation, however, leave much to be desired.

Some observers have commented that it's almost as if there were two sets of Texas Railroad Commissioners, because of the different languages they speak before different audiences. Listen to a Commissioner speak before a crowd of oilmen and he is usually death on regulation and excessive government controls. He may even tell you that government controls are at the bottom of most oil industry ills. But, get one before represenatives of the Texas trucking industry and you would think that regulated trucking was the best thing to happen to Texas since Bob Wills and sliced bread.

Never mind that Texas is the only state in the union without intrastate UPS service. Never mind that a mere handful of trucking companies control 75 percent of the regular general commodities shipment in the state. Never mind that Texans pay 16 to 38 percent more for shipping than other states, which is eventually reflected in the cost of things we buy.

Apparently the only ones who think regulated trucking is the greatest thing since sliced bread are the truckers, who are guaranteed a 10 percent return on their money by the Commission, which also guarantees that nobody with cheaper or better service will go into competition with them. In other words it's a closed shop---no competition allowed.

And we all know what happens when competition is removed from the marketplace. Where there is no competition, incentives to provide cheaper and better service perish.

Economic history reveals no incidence of deregulation that has been detrimental to consumer or producer in the long term, to the contrary all have proven beneficial. Something to think about TRC.

RIFT

It generates the strongest gravity of any region in the continental United States. A similar high lies under the Michigan Peninsula between Lake Michigan and Lake Huron, and seismic probing has shown that this, too, is a deep, sediment-filled rift. It trends northwest to southeast and some geologists suspect it is a continuation of the mid-continent formation.

On magnetic maps the Mid-Continent Gravity High shows up as parallel zones of abnormally high and low magnetic intensity. It is now widely thought to mark where the continent began to split apart more than 1.1 billion years ago, creating a lake-filled rift valley like the far more recently formed ones in East Africa. Like the East African rifts of today, it appears that the midcontinent rift was then in tropical latitudes and therefore particularly hospitable to primitive life forms.

Such lakes tend to be so deep that little dissolved oxygen reaches their bottom waters. As a result deceased organisms do not decay after sinking to the bottom, instead becoming embodied in the sediment as a potential source of oil. Furthermore, the rift lakes are constantly fed by material that washes in from their steep shores, enriching the water with nutrients and then rapidly burying the organic residue on the bottom.

Until recently geologists explained the gravity high in terms of lava that had erupted to fill the rift, forming a thick, dense deposit. Now, however, this has been refuted by soundings of the Consortium for Continental Reflection Profiling, or Cocorp.

Cocorp has completed its analysis of a seismic survey along an east-west line, 133 miles long, across the rift in eastern Kansas. Three shorter north-south lines across the east-west survey were also surveyed to obtain a three-dimensional picture of the buried structures.

In the Cocorp surveys a line of heavy trucks, shaking in unison, generates vibrations in the ground that, when reflected and recorded by a long line of geophones, can be used to chart structures down at least 35 miles.

Data recorded along the survey lines at various frequencies were sent to Cornell University in Ithaca, N.Y., for analysis and the results were published last June in Tectonics. They showed the main rift valley to be 25 miles wide with its western part five miles deep and its eastern region two miles deep.

The abornally high gravity is now thought to originate, not in a lava-filled rift but in a massive, deeply-lying "pillow" of dense rock that rose up from the earth's interior as the crust was torn apart along the rift, but never came near the surface except along the rift flanks.

The Cocorp results indicate that the rift accumulation's "layered character and fanlike geometry" shows that the sediment accumulated on the floor of a subsiding rift floor. A "striking similarity" was found between these seismic records and those obtained by Cocorp in the Rio Grande rift that runs north through New Mexico into Colorado — produced by a more recent splitting of the continent.

The Texaco hole is being drilled four miles north of the Cocorp line into what appears to be a hump in the sediment deposits. Oil tends to migrate into such humps. While the hole represents a major investment, a number of other holes have gone deeper. The Soviet Union has recently put on display one drilled over the past 14 years to a depth of 39,577 feet to obtain a geologic cross section of the earth's crust.

The Mid-Continent Gravity High also seems related to what have been the most productive iron deposits in the United States, those of the Mesabi and other ranges flanking the western end of Lake Superior. According to Dr. Brian J. Skinner of Yale University, an authority on ore deposits, they were formed some two billion years ago, long before the eruptions of lava during final stages of the rifting.

Nevertheless, he said last week, evidence suggests that most, if not all, of the world's major iron deposits were laid down when rifts were forming between 1.8 and 2.5 billion years ago. For reasons not understood, none have originated more recently, he added. Some geologists have linked those deposits with a global system of very ancient rifts produced when world geography was very different from today.

The newly identified midcontinent rift fits into that pattern and, Dr. Skinner said, could have originated much earlier than the 1.1-billion-year eruptions.

Stock market reacts to oil price decline

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market closed out a volatile session with some scattered gains Friday as traders continued to respond to this week's declines in oil prices.

Trading volume was the third largest in New York Stock Exchange history.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, up more than 10 points in early trading and down more than 5 late in the session, finished with a .55 gain at 1,225.93.

Thanks mostly to a 29.49 jump on Thursday, the average wound up with a 35.23-point advance for the week.

Big Board volume reached 186.90 million shares, up from 149.54 million in the previous session. The record of 236.57 million was set Aug. 3.

As Norway, Britain and then Nigeria announced oil-price reductions this week, analysts concluded that the U.S. economy stood to gain many benefits from lower fuel and petrochemical-products prices.

Meanwhile, a pair of news developments overnight reinforced hopes that interest rates would keep falling.

After the stock market closed Thursday, the Federal Reserve reported an unexpected $2.9 billion drop in the basic measure of the money supply. On Friday morning, the Commerce Department revised downward its figure for economic growth in the third quarter of the year.

But as the session passed, some traders evidently decided to cash in profits from the market's advance while they awaited Sunday night's second debate between President Reagan and Walter Mondale.

In addition, uncertainty remained over whether the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries would respond to the latest pricing developments with more cuts, or manage to stave off that possibility by reducing production.

Energy stocks, which had a turbulent week, generally showed further losses in Friday's trading. Exxon fell 1 to 41⅛ on volume of more than 2.2 million shares.

Standard Oil of Indiana dropped 1⅛ to 55½; Texaco ⅜ to 34½, and Chevron ⅛ to 32⅛. However, Mobil rose ⅜ to 27⅞.

General Motors, which this week reached its highest levels in more than a decade, slipped back ⅛ to 80⅛.

Financial-services issues, strong gainers in early trading as the markets showed new life, were mixed by the close. First Boston rose 1⅛ to 52⅞, and E.F. Hutton ¼ to 32¼, but Merrill Lynch fell 1¼ to 30¾, and Phibro-Salomon was down ⅝ at 32⅜.

Oil prices stabilize

NEW YORK (AP) — Oil prices stabilized in nervous world markets Friday as traders awaited OPEC's response to this week's wave of price cutting that drew in one of its own members.

The United Arab Emirates, meanwhile, denied reports it had broken ranks with the cartel.

"Things are settling down," said Gary Becker, director of the Houston-based Energy Futures Group of the PaineWebber Inc. investment firm. "People are moving cautiously, waiting for some further direction from OPEC."

Oil markets were jolted this week as Norway, Britain and Nigeria unexpectedly announced cuts in prices for comparable blends. The Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries called an emergency meeting for Oct. 29 in Geneva, Switzerland, to consider a defense of its official prices.

Mana Saeed Oteiba, oil minister of the United Arab Emirates, predicted in telephone interview with a British television station Friday that OPEC would more likely cut its output than prices.

And the authoritative Middle East Economic Survey, a weekly publication that covers the oil industry, reported Friday that a group of oil ministers would gather Monday for "vital consultations for drawing up a plan of production cuts."

Pennzoil spuds wildcat off China coast

HOUSTON—The search for oil off China's Hainan Island began with the spudding of the first Pennzoil wildcat well on a 1,400 square kilometer (550 square mile) contract area for a four-company international consortium.

The Nanhai 4 jackup rig is drilling the well in the Gulf of Beibu on Block 22/36 in 19 meters (60 feet) of water.

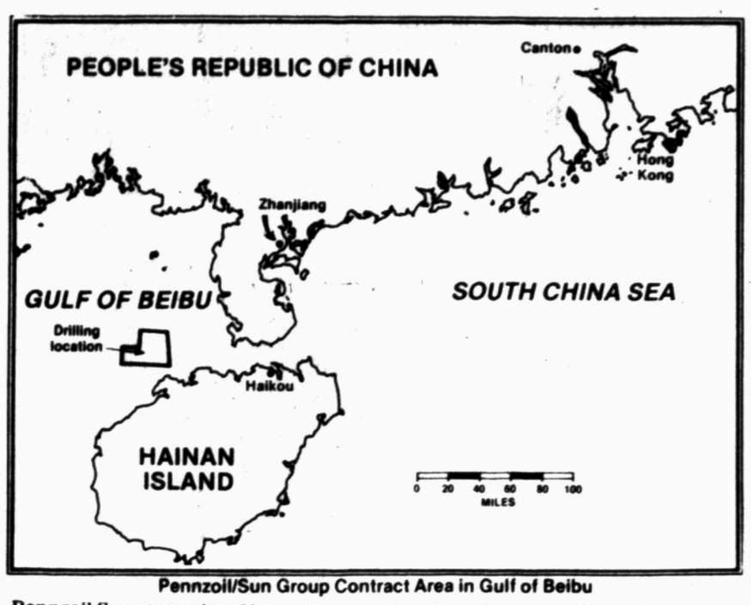
The location is some 20 miles off Hainan, on one of two contiguous blocks - 22/36 and 23/25 - under contract to the companies.

Participants in the exploration and development venture include Pennzoil Far East Co. with a 44 percent interest; Sun Orient Exploration Co., a Sun Co. subsidiary, with 36 percent; Australia's Ampol Exploration Ltd. and Spain's Hispanicade Petroleos S.A. (Hispanoil), with 10 percent each.

The consortium's first well will be drilled to about 7,000 feet total depth, and a second well is planned prior to next spring's typhoon season, if time permits.

The companies, working in cooperation with Nanhai West Oil Corp., a branch of China National Oil Corp., are operating from the port city of Zhanjiang.

The People's Republic of China awarded the contract area to the Pennzoil-Sun group last November.



Pennzoil/Sun Group Contract Area in Gulf of Beibu

The contract acreage begins some seven miles off the northwest shore of Hainan and extends toward the south China coast for almost 50 miles. Water depths range from 60 to 200 feet.

A marine geophysical survey over the two contract areas was completed by the consortium in July.

The operating companies stated that under agreement with the Chinese government, exact details of the contracts are confidential.

However, the foreign companies will pay all costs of exploration.

BUSINESS NOTEBOOK

State to help export businesses

Bill Kidd

AUSTIN—Legislation to establish a State export/import development corporation to assist businesses with "all aspects of exporting" is being prepared by the House Business and Commerce Committee, Chairman Lee Jackson, R-Dallas, reports.

Jackson, who chaired the subcommittee on Export Development, notes in the panel's interim report that the Legislature is interested in broadening the base of the state's economy to make Texas less dependent on one industry in the future.

The oil and gas industry, he says has been hit by recession, and State revenues have been affected by the problems of the industry.

Export trading is "one potential growth area" for Texas, Jackson says, noting Congress has been promoting export efforts in an attempt to reduce the nation's increasing trade deficit.

The subcommittee held a joint hearing in May with the House Committee on State, Federal and International Relations to discuss Texas' role in promoting export trading - with witnesses agreeing the State should play a more active role in coordinating export trading activities.

Jackson says small and medium-sized businesses need to know more about export possibilities, financing, insurance, documentation and transportation.

The committee also has been looking at a number of other areas, including workers's compensation coverage for rehabilitation services.

A subcommittee chaired by Rep. Jimmy Mankins, D-Kilgore, notes in its report that the question of rehabilitation services under the worker's compensation program is being studied by the Senate Jurisprudence Committee and an advisory group to the Industrial Accident Board.

The subcommittee makes no recommendations of its own, but reports it is monitoring the work of the Senate and IAB panels.

The committee also plans to continue monitoring development of high technology industries in Texas, and ways of attracting and assisting them.

Among the matters being considered are financial needs (such as venture capital), the role of universities, State securities laws, and the roles of education, government and private industry.

Another subcommittee will continue to monitor efforts of the special Joint Committee on Industrial Development Bonds, which was appointed last month by Gov. Mark White, Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and Speaker Gib Lewis.

Legislation is also being discussed regarding health spas and resort timeshare vacations.

The health spa legislation has been submitted to the Legislative Council to be put into bill form.

State Board of Insurance reports its study on alternative rating systems, called for by the 1983 Legislature, is on schedule and will be completed by the time the 1985 Legislature convenes in January.

SBI staff members have been reviewing various types of rate regulation used for insurance throughout the nation - with the agency reporting that most states have rating authority under some type of approval system.

The exact number of rating system types is a matter of dispute - but nine are recognized by the National Association of Insurance Commissioners.

Arguments as to whether Texas should move to more "open" ratings have occurred numerous times in recent legislative sessions, but there has been less interest in recent years with the development of the SBI's "deviation" system - which allows companies to write fire, auto and property policies at rates over or under the standard rate, with SBI approval.

The Environmental Protection Agency is to make a decision by Dec. 10 on the application of Texas for permanent delegation of enforcement of Federal hazardous waste regulations under the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act.

Gold bullion dealer offers guarantee

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — To say that most investors in gold bullion the last few years wished they could get their money back would only be gilding the truth. After soaring to a record high of $850 an ounce on Jan. 21, 1980, the price of cash gold has sunk to $341 at last Friday's close.

Now the Mocatta Metals Corp., one of the world's major bullion dealers, is offering gold bugs a three-year investment contract through brokerage houses under which it guarantees to buy back the metal at the original purchase price from now on.

"What our Mocatta Guaranteed Value Bullion Units offer investors is in effect the right to get back their investment plus whatever they pay in brokerage commissions, if at the end of the three-year contract the price of gold is less than what they paid originally," said Terry Mayer, Mocatta's marketing director.

Suppose, at the end of the contract period, the price of gold is greater than the original cost? "Then Mocatta will buy back 40 percent of the 100-ounce contract at the original price, and the other 60 ounces at whatever the quote is that day," Mayer replied.

As an example, Mayer said that if an investor paid, say, $340 an ounce, or $34,000 for a 100-ounce contract, and the price rose to, say, $500, Mocatta would buy back 40 ounces at $340 each and pay $500 for each of the remaining 60 ounces, or a total of $43,600.

"For investors who want out before the contract expires, we plan to operate a two-way market in the contracts, with prices based of course on the going price for bullion," he added.

What's the catch?

Gerald Gold, regional vice president of the International Trading Group Ltd., one of the brokerage houses that is offering the Mocatta contracts, because Mocatta does not deal with the public, answered:

"The main 'catch' is, naturally, the opportunity cost: What the investor could get during the three years from money market or other investments that now yield as much as 13 percent a year. At current bullion prices, Mocatta's 100-ounce contracts require a cash outlay of roughly $34,000 plus brokerage commissions."

Gold, who is better known in the commodity industry as the author of Modern Commodity Futures Trading, a standard work on the subject that was first published in 1959 and is now in its 14th edition, continued:

"What the investor is actually doing, if he is buying Mocatta's contract today, is in effect buying a $340 'put' option on the physical metal. This means he is buying the right, without any obligation, to sell Mocatta 100 ounces of gold at $340 an ounce at the end of three years. Mocatta in effect is selling a call on 40 ounces."

While some bullion dealers offer similar "guaranteed buy-back" plans, Gold noted that none are of the stature of Mocatta, one of the five London dealers that "fix" the price of gold twice each business day. Each fix serves as a global market reference price until the next one is announced.

What does Mocatta, which introduced its new buy-back contracts in London last February, get out of the deal? "We hope to make money by selling the 40-ounce call." But basically, Mayer noted, "we make money on the metal's buy-sell spread. Thus, the more metal we move, the more money we make. We don't make money on the so-called float because the customer's bullion is actually in the vault and segregated from our own metal."

But in offering to return the investor's money at the end of three years, Mayer said, the investor is asked to give up part of any profits, in this case 40 percent. He said this was fair "because the investor is in effect buying a cheap put, while Mocatta is buying an expensive call."

At last Friday's close of the Comex, premiums of its longest gold optons, April 1985, were as follows: For a $340 at-the-money put, $8.10 an ounce; for a like call, $24.50.

Senior citizens find net worth in home equity

They are called "the Golden Years."

That is "golden" as in "sunsets." The word, for millions, has little relevance to the economics of retirement.

According to the latest census, there are roughly 30 million Americans over the age of 62 and, based on studies conducted by Prudential-Bache Mortgage Services, a full 70 percent of the average senior citizen's net worth is represented by the equity in a home — the most illiquid asset an individual can possess with the possible exception of "A Good Name."

But now, for the first time since 1981, when the Federal Home Loan Bank Board authorized savings and loan associations under its supervision to write "reverse annuity mortgages" on an experimental basis, there is a major break in the frustrating, three-year-old stalemate. The problem: devising a way for the house-poor senior citizen to translate home equity into spendable dollars without selling the property.

Such an option should be available "in California and a few other states with similar needs in the first quarter of 1985," according to John F. Settel, senior vice president of Prudential-Bache Securities, parent company of Prudential-Bache Mortgage Services, "and, if it works as well as we expect it to, we should be national with it by the end of 1985."

While, in principle, the reverse annuity concept always has been as attractive as it was badly needed, Prudential-Bache's announcement represents the first time that a major, nationally based company — with the financial clout to make it work — has emerged.

Essentially, again in principle, the reverse annuity presupposes a lender taking title (but not possession) of an older homeowner's property, which is commonly owned outright or with a very big equity, and paying the homeowner a monthly annuity for the duration of the owner's life and then, at death, exercising the option of selling the home to satisfy the debt or otherwise holding it as a lien against the deceased homeowner's estate.

But until Prudential-Bache entered into its joint venture a few weeks ago with New Jersey-based American Homestead Mortgage Corp., the reverse annuity had been exercised only in a few isolated, and purely local, applications.

BLUE

"With the advent of discount shopping malls, many businesses and department stores lost weekend sales. Many shoppers found it easier to drive to shopping malls any day of the week," he said.

Businesses were forced to seek legislation to compete with the malls, he said.

State Rep. Tom Craddick of Midland said the original idea behind the law was to close businesses on Sunday.

The first Blue Law dates back to the 17th Century and is named for the color of paper on which it was originally printed.

The first Texas Blue Law was passed in Houston in 1839 and prohibited the sale of malt liquor. In 1863, a more extensive Blue Law was passed. It was repealed five years later.

Another version was passed in 1871, prohibiting all Sunday sales except for drugs and medicines. The present law was enacted in 1961.

Cashless bank's time has come

By JULIA MARTINEZ
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS (AP) — When Joe Stedman first decided Lone Star National Bank would operate without cash, the idea was meant to be temporary because of a security problem.

As soon as the bank moved into permanent facilities, it would begin cash transactions.

But two months after Lone Star opened its doors, bank executives like the way things are going and think the time for a cashless, completely electronic bank has come.

"We're growing at a nice rate and we're not running into customer resistance," says Stedman, Lone Star's 44-year-old chairman and chief executive officer. "So we plan to continue operating without cash."

Lone Star, with $6 million in assets and 150 depositors, has more than doubled its assets since opening its doors Aug. 3 in an industrial area near downtown, catering to medium-sized businesses.

The small bank's growth has come without handling a single penny in cash. Its two tellers don't accept cash deposits, don't make cash withdrawals and don't even cash employee paychecks. Most transactions are done by mail, and customers can get cash from a network of automatic teller machines.

Joe Stedman

Unlike most bank lobbies at peak hours, Lone Star's lobby is quiet and free of long lines — one of the things Stedman hopes will lure depositors.

"I know from past experience that you lose people who don't want to stand behind the 20-minute transaction," he says. "If you've ever been behind someone from a grocery store who had to deposit hundreds of dollars in cash, get it verified by the teller and then get change, you know what I mean."

Lone Star decided to go cashless for awhile after learning that a 700-square-foot mobile home was to be the bank's temporary quarters. A permanent building won't be ready until January 1985. Bank executives decided the facility was not secure enough to accept cash.

But they soon concluded that the no-cash operation was saving on security guards and armored cars as well as employee salaries and insurance premiums. By banning cash, they reasoned, Lone Star could hold down costs, give customers higher rates on accounts and at the same time save them from long lines.

"We decided there were a number of advantages to not having cash," says Stedman, who thinks a cashless operation is the next step in the evolution of commerce.

"People once traded in chickens and rocks. Eventually came money and now it's electronics," says the 16-year veteran of Dallas banking who launched Lone Star after leaving his post as chief executive officer of Texas Commerce Bank-Casa Linda.

Stedman acknowledges, however, that Lone Star isn't for everyone.

"We wouldn't be convenient for household accounts and we do give up some retail outlets," he says. But the bank chairman believes Lone Star will do well without some "labor intensive" and "cumbersome" clients.

"Some businesses are not willing to give up a certain share of the marketplace. Yet many would be better off without them," he argues. "We're willing to do that. Deregulation enables you to do both less and more. We're going to do less, but better with what we have."

Stedman says the bank currently pays about one-quarter of a percentage point higher interest on accounts than other banks.

But at least one bank analyst isn't so sure Lone Star's cashless operation will survive.

"It's nonsense and doesn't make sense for a banker to consider doing this," says Robert Walters, senior vice president of Sheshunoff & Co., an Austin bank consulting firm.

"Even the banks employees can't cash payroll checks," he says. "They have to deposit the check and then go to an ATM (automatic teller machine) to get cash. So they have to go through two transactions instead of one. I just can't see how this would be in the public's best interests."

Nevertheless, Walters concedes Lone Star will be "an interesting experiment" to watch, and might survive if it can carve out a large enough niche of cashless customers.

The office of the Comptroller of the Currency in Washington says it's up to the public to decide where it wants to do business.

"There is nothing innately incorrect about that type of operation," says Ellen Stockdale, spokeswoman for the comptroller's office. "All banks decide what services they will offer and not offer and customers can decide what bank to deal with."

Don Reynolds, a partner with LWFW Group, a Dallas-based management consulting firm, sees potential for Lone Star in an era of financial deregulation and intensifying competition.

"I couldn't say it's going to be a trend. I couldn't make a prediction that it will even work for this bank. But the concept is one I would agree with," he said.

Reynolds believes that a large enough segment of the market — such as large corporations, lawyers, accountants and consultants — doesn't need cash banking and needs instead highly professional financial consulting and cash management services.

He believes Lone Star has a good chance of survival if it can channel the savings from its cashless operation into top-notch personnel, equipment and services.

Cash for customers who need it shouldn't be a problem, he says, because teller machines have made cash banking more convenient outside of bank lobbies.

"In an era of deregulation, there's going to be a shakeout of banking institutions, so specialists and those who can offer the best services will survive," says Reynolds.

Stedman thinks Lone Star will be one of the survivors. By next year at this time, he hopes to have $50 million in assets.

To that end, bank officials are working feverishly to get new customer accounts from," he says.

"We're spending a lot of time outside the bank in the homes and offices of people we want to solicit

Home buying has new twist

Just when everyone looking to buy a home thought they had learned everything there was to know about creative financing, comes a new twist.

Though it started in Canada, this new type of home mortgage has crossed the border. Some financial institutions in the U.S. already are offering it, while others are planning its introduction.

The only difference between this new type of mortgage and the conventional long-term, fixed-payment kind is that payments are made weekly or twice monthly instead of monthly.

Why would anyone want to make mortgage payments two or four times a month? One reason is that weekly or twice weekly mortgage payments are easier to budget.

Another, says Andersen Corp. of Bayport, Minn., is because such an arrangement shortens the term of the loan to less than 20 years, from the usual 30 years. With weekly or twice monthly payments, the borrower winds up paying off more of the principal in any given year than does the borrower making monthly payments.

A borrower making twice-monthly payments pays 26 times a year. That's the equivalent of 13 monthly payments, rather than 12. On a $60,000 mortgate at 14.5 percent interest, says the leading window manufacturer, the owner who opts for weekly or twice-monthly payments saves nearly $89,000 in interest charges and owns his home in less than 20 years instead of the usual 30.

San Francisco, New York among best property buys says research

WASHINGTON (AP) — If you are investing in real estate in 1985, the Real Estate Research Corp. says your best bets are to buy property in San Francisco, New York City, Boston or Los Angeles.

Although those cities are noted for their distinctive local cultures, the reason for their investment quality is their "diversified economies, sizeable labor forces, and healthy balances between supply and demand," according to the group's publication, "Emerging Trends in Real Estate: 1985."

The 88 real estate investors, lenders, developers and syndicators were least confident about real estate investment opportunities in Denver and Houston.

Ironically, the real estate professionals who "ordinarily speak out against" land use controls said the reasons they recommended three of the four cities for investment are "tough government land use controls."

"It is worth emphasizing that San Francisco, New York and to a lesser extent Boston are notorious as difficult cities in which to build. Yet this very fact has kept supply in check," the report says.

Although these factors work in favor of investors, they work against tenants because supply and demand force higher rents.

Houston and Denver, two if the most pro-development cities in the country, according to the report, have high vacancy rates and thus lower rents.

In fact, Lewis Bolan, vice president of the Real Estate Research Corporation said it is possible to get two years free rent in an office building in Houston if you are willing to sign a five-year lease.

"It's an awfully good time to be a tenant," he said.

At a news conference, he said six months free rent was available in Washington, D.C., as a concession for those willing to sign a similar lease.

Despite some cities with low vacancy rates and high rents, he said the report forecast "very, very moderate rent increases in the next year or two" nationwide for commercial properties.

Competition for the long distance dollar is completely redefining the market. With the breakup of the Bell System on January 1, 1984 the courts ruled that MCI, Sprint, NTS Communications and others could compete equally with AT&T for long distance revenue. Auto workers learn to live with job uncertainity

Larry Weber works on the assembly line at the Belvidere, Ill., Chrysler Omni-Horizon plant. He wipes the newly welded auto bodies with a cloth saturated with a material that reveals small blemishes in the paint finish. These are corrected further down the line.

EDITOR'S NOTE — This year's auto negotiations were widely regarded as crucial to an industry that's currently on a sales crest but is still shadowed by foreign competition. That concern is pointed up in side-by-side profiles of two assembly line workers in Japan and the United States. They show stark contrasts in their attitudes toward their job, their company, and their union. Meet Larry Weber, who works at a Chrysler plant in Belvidere, Ill., and Teruo Suzuki, an employee of a Nissan plant in Utsunomiya, Japan.

By SHARON COHEN
Associated Press Writer

BELVIDERE, Ill. (AP) — Larry Weber's cupboard is stocked with a month's supply of food these days. He and his wife never buy anything on credit if they're not sure they can pay for it in 90 days.

Weber is an auto worker. He polishes cars on the assembly line at the Chrysler Corp. plant, home of the Dodge Omni and Plymouth Horizon.

And like more than 600,000 other workers in America's auto industry, Weber lives with uncertainty.

Interest rates. Inflation. Government deficits. Expiring import quotas.

Already, one in every five cars sold in America today is made in Japan.

Weber, 42, doesn't know any Japanese auto workers but he says he really doesn't like them. They're part of the uncertainty.

"Your kids read the newspaper," says this Army veteran in his husky smoker's voice, and they ask, "'Dad, are you going to have a job?' 'Hopefully.' That's all you can say."

"It's rough," adds Renate Weber, his 40-year-old German-born wife. "For the last 17 years he's working at Chrysler. Today he works overtime, tomorrow he's laid off."

It is one irony of this auto worker's life that for 14 years, Weber couldn't afford to buy a new car. Today, he drives 20 miles to work in a 12-year-old rusting Dodge pickup truck with 83,000 miles on it.

Weber won't even ride in a foreign car, nor will he permit somebody who owns one to park it in his driveway.

Weber is a man devoted to his family, his flag, and his union, the United Auto Workers. And he has a fierce pride in the cars he and his fellow workers build at Chrysler.

Weber concedes his job on the assembly line — polishing 78 cars an hour, eight hours a day — is "monotonous." And he feels no strong loyalty to the company itself, or to those who manage it.

Even so, Weber feels he's fared well. Last year, he earned $22,000 with overtime — before taxes. He earns $11.54 an hour and another $10.98 in benefits doesn't appear on the check.

Today, Weber, his wife and 17-year-old son, Tony, live comfortably in a modest three-bedroom, single-story home in Machesney Park, a northern Illinois community of 19,000 in the heart of softly rolling farm country. The Webers have three other sons.

Their home blends two cultures — delicate porcelain and lace from Europe and rifles, cowboy hats and a John Wayne picture.

These days, the Webers spend about $75 a week on groceries. They're planning a trip to see two of their older sons in Georgia and Arizona. And they can afford $60 running shoes for Tony.

Weber says Chrysler is just a paycheck — not a career.

"It's the most monotonous, boring job you'll ever get," he says. "You do the same thing 78 times an hour. Do I get any satisfaction out of what I do? Not really. I feel like I'm a time-clock number.

"They don't make you feel like, 'Hey, Larry, if you don't come to work tomorrow, we'll miss you.' Would that make a difference? Sure would."

Weber says if he were offered a job paying "half a buck more, I'd be gone. I've made good money with Chrysler. In that way, I'm lucky. A sense of gratitude, yes. Loyalty. I'm not sure that's even in the American language."

Yet Weber says he's impressed with the way Chrysler Chairman Lee Iacocca turned the company around after its near-bankruptcy, and he notes improvements in the plant over the past couple of years.

But Weber is loyal to his union and to his country. "Without a union, I probably wouldn't want to work there," says Weber, a former shop steward for six years.

The Webers also try to buy American. Renate drives a 1982 Dodge Charger. They shop at Sears and J.C. Penney's.

"If I were to buy anything foreign-made, it would be German," Mrs. Weber says. "I do believe in supporting your own. Why would I feed my neighbors' kids and leave my own hungry?"

At Weber's plant, the attitude is much the same. When Japanese officials tour, he says, they are booed. Workers driving foreign cars to the plant have had their tires slashed.

Still, Weber says he sees efforts to imitate the Japanese — such as the installation of horseshoe pits, basketball courts and Ping Pong tables at the plant.

At home, Weber leads a simple life.

A small, talkative man who jogs to fight a middle-age paunch, Weber wakes at 4:10 a.m., dons blue jeans, a shirt and sometimes a baseball cap and heads to work, which begins when the whistle blows at 6 a.m. He often goes without breakfast or lunch — preferring a beer and a mid-afternoon dinner. He goes to bed promptly at 10 p.m.

For recreation, Weber camps, hunts, fishes, coaches boys baseball and occasionally travels to Chicago 80 miles south for Cubs games.

Mrs. Weber, a redhead whose accent reflects her Munich upbringing, sells jewelry at Penney's. In their early years, she worked nights, doing piecework at a factory. Now she works by choice.

The Webers' other sons range in age from 20 to 24. One is in the Marines and a second is in the Army. Tony plans to enter the Air Force. None attended college — and Mrs. Weber cried about that.

Weber says college or trade school would have been fine but he approves of the military because "you learn you're going to have a boss in your life."

But Weber stresses his job is nothing to be ashamed of.

And he thinks his foreign competitor is overrated. If there is a fault with U.S. carmaking, he feels, it's short-sighted management — not labor.

"You'll never convince me a little Japanese man is building a better car than I do. He's probably doing a good job, but to say he's doing a better job isn't fair."

But he concedes there may be one difference.

In America, he says, the blue-collar worker has his place and the boss has his. "They make you know 'you're here and we're there and never the twain shall meet.'

"The Japanese worker loves his boss," Weber says. "Is that an important thing in my life? No. What's important to me is I go to work, I do my job, the man pays me and I go home."

America industry short-sighted, outdone on technology frontier

Copley News Service

American industry has found itself outdone on the technology frontier because it has too often been short-sighted, a study written by three Californians contends.

The report, to be published in the fall issue of "The Journal of Marketing," suggests the emphasis that American managers have placed on short-term profits over long-term stability must change if U.S. industry is to survive in the changing world market.

Co-authored by Michael H. Jones and William S. Bishop — both of Solar Turbines Inc., of San Diego — and John L. Graham, a University of Southern California assistant professor, the study is called "Volatility of Derived Demand in Industrial Markets and Its Management Implications."

It deals with the economic forces that heighten volatility for industrial firms.

"One of our conclusions was that you can't manage on short-term variables," Jones said in an interview Tuesday.

"That's a problem because most managers are judged on short-term performance," he said. Those managers are often rewarded because they have maximized profits over a short period of time, even at the expense of long-term operations.

Many U.S. operators are now recognizing this and changing their methods to ensure the industry's survival. One result is that management and workers are paying much more attention to job stability, Jones said.

In areas of the country dominated by blue-collar industry, he said, workers are being re-educated and trained in new skills.

This has been adapted from the Japanese model. As in the case of that country's sagging shipbuilding industry, workers have not been laid off, he said. They are being retrained in a long process that requires a lot of open discussion with the employees.

But Jones said that U.S. firms never will completely adopt the Japanese model.

"Americans will never be like Japanese or the Europeans to be satisfied with long-term goals. We tend to be too volatile. We want too much too fast," he said.

Trident problems hushed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Disclosure that delivery of the first Trident submarine was behind schedule was delayed by its maker, General Dynamics Corp., to protect the price of the company's stock, the Washington Post reportes.

A secretly made tape recording shows that General Dynamics' chief financial officer was told by the general manager of its shipyard that the Trident delivery date of October 1979 in a company press release was "not real," the newspaper reported.

In reply, the financial officer said the company's chairman, David S. Lewis, "understands that. But he wanted to go ahead anyway only to stop our stock from sliding," the Post said.

In a statement issued Wednesday, Lewis said he had "no memory of a schedule slippage being an issue at the time, nor any discussion about the price of General Dynamics stock." And company spokesman Fred J. Bettinger added that the taped conversations are not a full and accurate record of the statements of company officials.

The tape recording was made by P. Takis Veliotis, a former executive vice president and director of General Dynamics, who was indicted in September 1983 for sharing in kickbacks on unrelated ship construction. Veliotis now lives in Greece and is regarded as a fugitive by the Justice Department.

Veliotis was the shipyard's general manager and he was speaking on the taped telephone call to chief financial officer.

Factory use indicates slow growth

NEW YORK (AP) — Two straight months of decline in factory use is a sign the economic expansion is slowing, but hasn't "run into a wall" and will keep on going at least through the end of the year, economic analysts say.

However, private housing industry analysts say increases in mortgage interest rates likely will dim chances for a repeat performance of September's burst of new home construction.

Meanwhile, Bank of America, the nation's largest bank, and Crocker National Bank fell in line Wednesday with other major banks by cutting their prime interest rates from 12.75 percent to 12.5 percent.

The two San Francisco-based banks had been the largest lending institutions to hold back as their rivals reduced their prime rates Tuesday.

Bankers Trust Co. of New York, the nation's ninth largest bank, started the reductions Monday by cutting its prime rate to 12.25 percent. It was the nation's only major bank to go that low.

The prime rate is the base banks use to compute interest charges on short-trm business loans. The most creditworthy clients often borrow at below the prime rate, while small businesses typically are charged more.

In its report on factory use, the Federal Reserve Board said Wednesday the nation's industrial operating rate fell 0.7 percentage point to 81.9 percent of capacity in September, the second consecutive monthly decline.

The measure of how much of available capacity is being used peaked at 82.7 percent in July, then declined 0.1 percentage point in August, the first monthly drop since the end of the recession.

Roger Brinner, chief U.S. forecaster for Data Resources Inc. of Lexington, Mass., said the slowdown resulted from growth in business inventories as consumer demand slackened this summer.

"I don't believe the economy has run into a wall," Brinner said, citing a September gain in retail sales. "With the consumer still spending, I believe factory production will be up nicely in October, November and December."

The Commerce Department said Wednesday that new housing construction advanced 8.9 percent in September to an annual rate of 1.68 million units after declining for two months.

Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige predicted that a recent half-point decline in mortgage interest rates would lead to further rate drops, spurring sales and building activity.

Housing industry analysts were less optimistic, contending the one-month upturn was not the start of a rebound.

Bob Hawk offers professional asphalt services to businesses and homeowners

Bob Hawk and Associates has something to offer the big business as well as the individual. Moreover, they understand that whether a new parking lot or a simple trail of stepping stones is in the works, quality materials are essential.

Bob Hawk and Associates are blacktop specialists, having been in the business since 1946. They do asphalt paving, sealing, trench patching. So, whether you need a driveway for your home or a parking lot for an office building, Bob Hawk is the expert to call. From original construction to maintenance and repair work, he has the job covered.

Bob warns that winter weather is especially tough on asphalt surfaces. Having the surface sealed properly with an impervious coal tar emulsion can save you a lot of money in the long run. The emulsion which Bob Hawk uses is designed to protect against deterioration which is caused by gasoline, oil, jet fuels and other hydo-carbons. The deteriorated asphalt allowswater to seep through and unstabilize the subbase.

While Bob is repairing your parking lot, he is prepared to also replace old and missing concrete bumpers and restripe the lot. You just can't beat getting all this good professional service with only one phone call to Bob Hawk at 694-6572.

Bob Hawk and Associates not only offers their own professional services, but they also cater to the do-it-yourselfers. After all, there are many energetic do-it-yourselfers in West Texas that need just a little help. Some are putting in fences or building a patio while others are edging flower beds. These are wonderful home improvement ideas, but they all require concrete.

To have a company send out a truck with a small amount of concrete is expensive. But what other alternative is there?" Bob Hawk and Associates have the answer.

Bob Hawk offers do-it-yourselfs ready mix trailers. The experts at Bob Hawk's office will mix the concrete to the right consistency for you and furnish the trailer. All you have to do is hook up the trailer and drive home. Once you have emptied the trailer just wash the trailer out and return it.

Concrete is available in small amounts only which is usually all a do-it-yourselfer needs. You can get ¼, ½, ¾, 1 or 1¼ yards of concrete at a time.

Bob also understands the tight schedule of do-it-yourselfers. To meet your needs, this convenient service is available Monday through Friday 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. AND Saturday and Sunday by appointment.

For contractors that have a smaller job coming up, Bob Hawk can offer the same service.

Ready mix concrete is not all that Bob has to offer the do-it-yourselfer. Are you tired of leaving worn paths from your house to the swimming pool or dumpster? Bob Hawk has the solution: attractive stepping stones can take the place of those dusty paths. Bob has stepping stones in a number of styles, so stop by 5508 W. Industrial and select the ones that you like best.

Over 37 years of experience goes into driveway construction when Bob Hawk and Associates are on the job. Dial 694-6572 for the experts in asphalt construction, maintenance and repairs.

To get more information about any of Bob's professional services, call 694-6572.

Sheryl Sledge (left) and her sister, Billie Brand, of Frames and Things carefully select a mat which enhances the colors in the piece of art they are framing. Their new location next to Walmart is easy to find just between Toys Plus and Kid's Kountry. So go by and take advantage of their half price sale on gold metal framing this week.

Frames and Things is especially contemporary

Frames and Things specializes in contemporary framing. Though they carry everything from the most ornate to the simple acrylic, they have a special k nack for selecting just the right mat and coordinating frame for contemporary pieces. They also have a knack for selecting convenient locations, such as their new location just East of Walmart, between Toys Plus and Kid's Kountry.

Sheryl Sledge and Billie Brand are expert framers. These two sisters learned much about design and quality as they were growing up because their father was a carpenter. They also learned that each customer has unique needs and preferences. That's why they have over 500 frame samples in the store and a wide selection of mats. Their goal is is to treat each customer as their only customer. Now is a great time to go in and get acquainted with what Frames and Things can offer you. This week only you can take advantage of their 50% off special on gold metal framing.

Sheryl points out that framing is not just for prints. For needlepoint they offer both stretch mounting, where padding is put behind the piece of needlework, and mounting behind glass. Or, you may have an artistic design which is best floated between two pieces of glass. Sheryl and Billie can do that, too. Even large geophysical maps are not beyond the capability of these framing experts. Their museum mounting will be most appropriate for you limited edition prints. There are so many beautiful and unique possibilities that you should go in and talk to them. So that they can offer you the very best, they stay up on the latest innovations and ideas by attending workshops and seminars.If you don't have anything to put in a frame, Sheryl and Billie are prepared to help you find something that fits your budget. They carry prints that range in price from $5 to $100. Penas, Michael Atkinson prints, and Christian Argus prints are all in stock. They have recently received a group of prints which have the newest popular decorator colors. Soft florals are just one of the possibilities.

For those special pictures you want to keep on your desk or dresser, Frames and Things has a wide selection of Carr free standing frames. Whatever style or size you need, they have it. So drop in between 10 a.m. and 6 p.m., Monday through Saturday. Decorators get a special discount and local artists are entitled to a discount on frames for their personal works.

Crowded skies mean tight schedules

By RICK HAMPSON
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Delays are virtually guaranteed for travelers flying into or out of New York's airports at peak travel hours — more flights are scheduled than the runways can handle, even at their clearest and driest.

So far this year Kennedy and La Guardia have reported more flight delays than any other U.S. airport. About 12 percent of La Guardia's flights have been delayed more than 15 minutes, about 11 percent of Kennedy's.

Air traffic controllers refer to the line of jets awaiting takeoff at the two airports as "the conga." Eastern says its air shuttle to Boston and Washington is "frequently" hours late.

Pan Am's chairman says delays at Kennedy threaten his airline's very existence, and Eastern says it will lose $60 million this year because of delays, mostly in the Northeast and mostly involving New York.

Federal Aviation Administration figures suggest that some delays are built into airport schedules. At La Guardia, popular with many travelers because of its proximity to Manhattan, the maximum capacity is 60 flights an hour under ideal conditions.

However, the weekday schedule calls for 65 flights from 5 to 6 p.m. — 31 arrivals and 34 departures. The next hour is worse. From 6 to 7 p.m., there are 72 scheduled flights — 34 arrivals and 38 departures.

The same bunching of flights occurs at Kennedy. On a typical weekday between 3:30 and 4:30 p.m., 90 airline flights are scheduled to take off or land at JFK — whose runways can handle a maximum of 70 to 80 flights an hour.

"The airlines do not want to fly empty planes," explained the FAA's Louis Achitoff. "Who's going to schedule a flight at 9:30 p.m. when everyone wants to fly at 5 p.m.?"

Although the FAA said it had no figures on the duration of delays, interviews with frequent travelers and travel agents indicated that most were from 30 minutes to an hour.

In May, according to the FAA, La Guardia handled about 31,000 flights, 6,816 of which were more than 15 minutes late. That was three times more than the previous May.

Kennedy had 5,611 delayed flights in May out of a total of about 31,000, a 50 percent increase over the previous May.

Nationally, the average May late rate at the nation's 22 largest airports was only 41 per 1,000 flights.

When delays began to increase this spring, New Yorkers had almost forgotten the days in the late 1960s to the mid-1970s when planes circled above airports for hours waiting to land.

But several factors — larger planes, an economic recession and restrictions on the number of flights following the 1981 air traffic controllers' strike — eliminated the aerial traffic jam for more than a decade.

Now, the skies are getting crowded again. More people are flying, some post-strike FAA restrictions on the number of flights have been lifted and the FAA has not finished training its new air traffic controller corps.

In addition, deregulation of the industry has given birth to new airlines. La Guardia was served by 18 airlines in 1977, and 35 today. These competing airlines want to bring as many of their arriving flights into Kennedy and La Guardia around the same time as possible to allow passengers to transfer to departing flights.

So far 90 percent of the waiting is being done on the ground, aboard loaded planes that leave the gate on time but then sit in conga lines on runways waiting to take off. The FAA calls this policy of holding flights on the ground at their point of departure, rather than in the air over the point of arrival, "flow control."

Besides the weather, which is the greatest cause of airline delays and has been bad this year, the airports and the FAA blame each other for the delays.

Their complaints boil down to these: airports are too small, scheduled flights are too many, air traffic control is too slow.

Each problem can be observed in rich detail at Kennedy or La Guardia.

The latter is tiny. At 650 acres, the whole airport could fit in the main terminal area at 5,000-acre Kennedy. If the wind is not right, planes may use only one of two crossing runways for arrivals and departures, cutting airport capacity in half.

And, since La Guardia is surrounded on three sides by water and on the fourth by a highway, there is virtually no hope of expansion. Meanwhile, airline traffic is up 13 percent this year.

Several airline executives, notably Frank Borman of Eastern and Edward Acker of Pan Am, have blamed the FAA for the New York delays.

Between the hours of 3 p.m. and 6 p.m. over four days in May, for example, air traffic control delayed 79 of 86 Pan Am flights into Kennedy.

"Pan Am is faced with an air traffic control problem at (Kennedy) that is threatening its ability to exist," Acker wrote to FAA Administrator Donald Engen.

The airlines complain that a shortage of experienced controllers forces the FAA to employ conservative air control tactics. One is to keep incoming flights on the ground elsewhere rather than allow them to circle over New York, where they would be in a position to land sooner when a spot opens.

The FAA's regional air traffic control center, which before the strike had 404 controllers, now has 293, close to the FAA's target, Achitoff said. In addition to Kennedy and LaGuardia, controllers must handle traffic for Newark Airport and 21 smaller airports in the metropolitan area.

Borman, who says the FAA needs more, better-experienced controllers, points out that although delays have increased dramatically this year at La Guardia, the airport's arrivals and departures are up only 1 percent over the number before the strike.

But the sky above New York "is the most busily occupied air space in the world" — so crowded that adding runways or controllers would not solve the problem, according to Achitoff.

"You don't need three controllers to look at one radar screen," he said. "You can only pump so many planes into a finite number of cubic miles of air space."

Royalty owners to discuss tax concerns

DALLAS — National political issues and state legislative snarls will share the spotlight with growing tax concerns for delegates to the fourth annual convention of the National Association of Royalty Owners, Inc. (NARO), here on Oct. 26-27 at the Marriott Park Central Hotel.

Tom Lucas, chairman of the organization, said that Assistant Secretary for Congressional Affairs, Robert Odle, is among speakers that will appear.

"Most royalty owners I talk to are currently scared out of their wits by Walter Mondale's anti-business campaign speeches," said Lucas, a Woodward, Okla. rancher and oilman.

"In recent years when a politician talks of closing loopholes, he's usually drawing another bead on the energy industry. History proves it's usually the small oil and gas royalty owner or the marginal independent producer who gets shot in the wallet in the crossfire," he said.

The need for decontrol of all natural gas, a campaign which Lucas states was being "totally subverted by Congress in recent weeks into a highly dangerous re-control measure," will also be a red-hot issue for delegates. He said decontrol of all natural gas prices would result in lower consumer prices by stimulating increased activity in older fields, where lower cost gas is readily available.

"At a time when energy-related bankruptcies are rampant and drilling slowdowns are epidemic, it would seem economic and politcal suicide for either federal or state governments to further penalize oil producers for the nation's 2.5 million royalty owners. Yet tax threats are painfully real on several fronts," said Lucas.

Royalty owners from over 30 states have registered in advance for the annual meeting and about 10 percent of the group's 4,000 members are expected in Dallas, he said. NARO, organized in 1980 to combat the windfall profits tax, also represents by affiliation an additional 38,000 members of regional, state and local mineral, surface and royalty owner groups throughout the nation.

Retired U.S. Senator Carl T. Curtis, a 40-year veteran of the U.S. House and Senate, will moderate all political sections of the convention. He has served as the chief Washington legislative strategist for NARO since 1982.

Lucas said convention seminars on mineral leasing and taxation on October 26 would gather some of the Southwest's premier legal, tax and leasing experts, including Dr. John Lowe of the University of Tulsa School of Energy Law and Rodney Owens, attorney and estate planning specialist of Dallas.

Satellites look for gold vein

Cox News Service

MEXICO CITY — This country was once Eldorado. Over 41,000 kilograms of gold were excavated at the peak of the rush in 1910. The bonanza's luster faded after the Revolution, though. Output was less than 7,000 kilos in 1983, meeting only half of Mexico's domestic needs. Importing 7,000 additional kilos cost the already debt-hobbled economy nearly $70 million.

There was no lucky strike on Mexico's horizon. Hopes for finding a new Mother Lode are orbiting the planet, however.

U.S. satellites are prospecting with images of Earth's reflected light. NASA's multi-spectral scanners can't spot gold, but they can detect "pathfinder" minerals often found alongside precious ores. Such devices onboard the space shuttle pinpointed several potential sites when the craft overflew Mexico in 1981.

Crews from the Energy, Mines and State-owned Industries Ministry, SEMIP, are now working fields in the state of Jalisco that could hold up to 500 tons of gold. Experts predict Mexican mining output could increase by as much as 25 percent this year, but there seems to be little rejoicing at the agency's offices.

"There is gold in Jalisco," a SEMIP spokesman said, "but we don't want to make a big thing out of it."

The official said the agency is downplaying the new boom for fear Mexicans will develop the same illusions of easy riches the oil boom of the late 1970s fueled. SEMIP Minister Francisco Labastida personally cautioned against hoping that mineral wealth can free Mexico from its economic crisis.

"I hope we never make the mistake again of thinking that a natural resource will develop the country," Labastida said.

The Mexican press has paid little mind to the warning. A recent article in Excelsior, the country's most prestigious daily paper, implied that Jalisco's El Barqueno gold mine alone is rich enough to wipe Mexico's $96 billion debt off world ledgers.

"Famous last words," scoffed Jorge Leipen, the head of SEMIP's Mineral Resources Council.

According to Leipen, gold is important to Mexico only for the limited jobs and revenue it provides. He said the country's most fabled gold fields were tapped out long ago, and labor costs make lesser deposits only marginally profitable. Other minerals have become more strategic, he said, adding, "Gold is a myth."

Finding valuable ore deposits from space isn't fiction, according to Dr. Alex Goetz of the Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena, California. NASA's first thematic mapping device was launched into space onboard Landsat One in 1972. Goetz said the clarity of those early images of visible light and infrared wave lengths was good, but not great.

"You could see the Rose Bowl," he said, "but not the playing field, and certainly not the players."

Actress Angie Dickinson will be running for Attorney General of California in the film "A Touch of Scandal" to air on CBS-TV.

Angie: beautiful, famous, lucky

By JANE ARDMORE
King Features Syndicate

Angie Dickinson will be running for Attorney General of California. On screen, that is. The film is Columbia's "A Touch of Scandal" which will air on CBS, and Angie agrees the timing is right:

"I felt a woman would be nominated for vice president and said, 'Write a script!' The script writer, director and producer all agreed 'perhaps.' But listen to this:

"We started shooting mid-May, finished late in June and July 12, Geraldine Ferraro was named to run on the Democratic ticket. I think it's wonderful for women. I love seeing us strive constantly in new areas.

"I enjoyed the Democratic convention. New York Governor Mario Cuomo's speech! I got a transcript of that and had it Xeroxed for all my friends, and I'm practicing cooking spaghetti in case he and his family ever come to L.A. on holiday.

"Of course, Cuomo's own story and Mrs. Ferraro's story are better than any script because life is more fantastic than fiction. If you put reality on screen, no one would believe it," says Ms. Dickinson.

WHICH IS NOT to say that "A Touch of Scandal" isn't pretty dramatic in its own right. The story: Involved in a loveless marriage with her wealthy husband/campaign manager (Don Murray), Ms. Dickinson as Katherine Gilvey pleads for romance, only to be told, "I'm not a tactile person. This sort of thing means nothing to me. I thought we had an understanding."

To which Katherine murmurs, "I thought we had a marriage" and turns in desperation to a fantastic-looking man played by Stephen Shellen, "a blond Alain Delon," explains Ms. Dickinson, "loose, sensitive and terrific."

Someone, spying on them, takes incriminating photographs; the man is killed, and his body dumped in her apartment building. When the press discovers that Katherine has once defended the dead man in court, the case becomes a three-ring media circus. Fighting for her reputation and her career, the candidate feels the special pressures put on a woman in public life.

"Our fortuitous act," Ms. Dickinson says, "was to have this story of a candidate filmed and in the can, ready to air when it is prime-timely. "Police Woman" (the long-running NBC series which made her a national favorite) was a success for the same reason. It came out just when the women's movement really started to take hold, when women were first moving into all kinds of new careers.

"Here we were, the first dramatic series starring a woman in what was considered until then a man's job. We were right on the button, and I think we're right on the button again."

BETWEEN THE LINES

Duran Duran

Q. Being a Duran Duran fan, I was upset to read that the group is breaking up. Is that true and if not, when are they going to do another tour?

Lisa
Meshoppen, Pa.

A. Relax, it's not true. You've seen members solo recently because of well-publicized weddings and time off after a long, hardworking stretch. But the group itself is still together and about to start recording another album.

Regarding a tour: According to a New York associate, they're not even thinking about it until sometime next year.

Q. I would like to know about Tyne Daly. Is she married, does she have children, where was she born?

H.P. Barron
Pensacola, Fla.

Is her real name Ellen Tyne Daly, where did she grow up and where did she get her start in show business? It must have been Brooklyn — she has a marvelous Brooklyn accent.

Teri Harpster
Las Vegas, Nev.

A. Ellen Tyne Daly — yes, that is her real name — was born in Madison, Wisc., but grew up in Suffern, N.Y., which is the source of her real accent. The Brooklyn dialect is put on for "Cagney and Lacey."

She is married to actor-director Georg Stanford Brown, whom she met at the American Musical and Dramatic Academy, where she got her acting start. (Her late father, actor James Daly, had discouraged it.) She and Brown have two daughters: Elisabeth, 16, and Kathryne, 12.

Q. Please help me! I have looked everywhere for information on French film actress Isabelle Huppert from the film "Entre Nous." How old is she? Is she married? Where did she study and what films has she made?

M.K. Lewis
Waterbury, Conn.

A. She's 29, the youngest of four daughters of Hungarian emigres to France. She was born in Hungary and raised in Ville d'Avray outside of Paris. After finishing high school, she moved to Paris where she got a college degree in Russian and then decided to transfer to acting, so she enrolled at the National Conservatory of Dramatic Arts.

She made her first film in 1971 and in the interim 13 years has made a remarkable 31 more. A few of those films: "Going Places," "Violette," "The Lacemaker," "Coup de Torchon" and the epic bomb "Heaven's Gate."

A lot of those films have required nude senes, which she doesn't seem to mind, but which, she says, bothers her father, so her mother goes to see all of them and then dictates to her husband which ones he should see.

She describes herself as a "bulldozer" — very determined when she sees something she wants. Last year, apparently, she wanted to become a mother and gave birth to her daughter, Lolita, last October. She didn't, however, want to be married, and she describes Lolita's father as "nobody important."

Q. I'd like to know where Christopher Walken was born. I think he has a slight accent — where did he pick it up? Is he married, how old is he, is he doing any more movies?

Elvira A.
Ceress, Calif.

A. The accent you detect is a New York one, the borough of Queens specifically, where he was born Ronald Christopher Walken 41 years ago. There may also be a bit of German mixed in since both of his parents were immigrants from that country.

He is married to a former dancer, Georgianne Thon, whom he met when they were both in a touring company of "West Side Story." He showed off his dancing skills a few years back in the movie "Pennies from Heaven," and got raves from no less than Gene Kelly and Fred Astaire.

Now, after a stint in the Off-Broadway version of the play "Hurlyburly," he is in the process of making another movie, the new James Bond epic "A View to a Kill." He plays the villain, Max Zorin, an East German refugee-multimillionaire industrialist. Grace Jones portrays his partner in crime.

Q. I've been watching "Riptide" since it first came on and I think Joe Penny is the hottest thing on TV. Can you tell me about him?

Lori Smith
Sioux Falls, S.D.

Joe Penny

A. He was born in London, lived in Georgia until he was 12, when he moved with his family to Los Angeles. He was pretty much of a jock in high school, excelling in football, track and wrestling.

At 18, though, he discovered acting and decided instantly that this was what he wanted to do with his life. He started out in small roles in stage productions in L.A., at the same time working as a truck driver and a dishwasher to support himself.

Finally, in 1977, he started to get roles on TV that paid enough so that he could quit his other jobs: in the premier episode of "The Nancy Drew Mysteries"; episodes of "Lou Grant," "Archie Bunker's Place" and "Vega$"; and in 1981 the role of Bugsy Siegal in "The Gangster Chronicles." That led to other projects, such as the film "S.O.B." and the TV movies "The Gossip Columnist" and "The Girls at the Office," which led to "Riptide."

Offscreen: He's single, lives in the San Fernando Valley near L.A., loves to cook and work out, and when he gets the time, to go back to Georgia for some hunting and fishing.

Q. I recently saw the movie "Octopussy" and became very interested in Louis Jourdan. Can you tell me about him?

Devon Miller
Vineland, N.J.

A. He's 64, which is hard to believe from the way he looks. He is originally from Marseilles, France, but now lives in Beverly Hills. He decided to study drama at 18, so he left Marseilles for Paris and was working as a director's assistant when friends convinced him that, with his looks, he should be in the movies.

He was just starting to do that and had finally settled on his professional name — he'd changed his given name, Louis Gendre, to Pierre Jourdan and then to Louis Jourdan — when the Nazi occupation of France put an end to his career. He was ordered to a work gang and his father was arrested by the Gestapo. He turned to the Resistance for help and soon was working with them, carrying messages. He also married a fellow worker, Berthe.

Following France's liberation, he made several movies and in 1947 was brought to Hollywood by producer David O. Selznick for the film "The Paradine Case." He was soon typecast as a suave European, a categorization he protested, but a role he played well in films such as "Madame Bovary," "Three Coins in the Fountain," "Can-Can," "The Swan" and his most famous, "Gigi."

Recently, his projects have been as varied as the PBS production of "Dracula," the horror film "Swamp Thing" and a stint as spokesman for a soft-drink company.

Louis Jourdan

Currently, he's on tour with a revival of "Gigi" which runs through May 1985 and is scheduled to play, among other cities, Boston, Baltimore, Toronto, St. Louis, Chicago and Denver.

Now, though, because it's 26 years after he starred in the film, he's playing Honore, the Maurice Chevalier part, instead of his original role, the young romantic Gaston.

ANGIE

AND WHEN YOU tell her how much she's been missed since "Police Woman," she lights up her beautiful living room with that smile. "I'm leading such a busy life. I feel I have a 24-hour-a-day job..."

Right now she is serving as co-chairperson of the big fundraiser for SPRINT (Special Preventive Research Intervention in New Techology), a research program being conducted at UCLA to prevent or correct birth defects in babies before they are born.

And she goes on to tell you how they will soon be able to perform heart and eye surgeries in the womb. Ms. Dickinson has been involved in other causes including the anti-child-abuse movement.

"If you've been lucky, and I have been, you have to give in return. That's what I'm trying to do, but I would like to work more than I have lately.

"I haven't done much on film, have I? The things I have occasionally done, I haven't always chosen well. 'Jealousy' had possibilities as a TV film, but it was too short, like an article instead of a good book. Players and audiences are geared to two-hour shows, and this just didn't work.

"Besides, we were opposite the 'George Washington' mini-series which was so good. 'Dressed to Kill' was really the last picture I did that I thought worked.

"YES, I'D LIKE to work more, but the scripts have to be right. So many leading roles call for women in their 30s. I don't get those anymore. I get the ones where it doesn't matter what age she is. I would like to play a courageous woman, like the one who was killed in the civil rights march in '69. That would interest me."

Her eyes shine. Dark brown, flecked with gold. She is beautiful, and she is a woman who has been successful for a long time. "I was lucky from the beginning." She has said earlier that reality is more unbelievable than fiction. "Look at Geraldine Ferraro's life. Look at Mario Cuomo's."

Well, for that matter, look at Ms. Dickinson's own life, little Angeline Brown from Kulm, N.D., whose father was an alcoholic and whose mother kept the family going by operating a small-town weekly newspaper. They moved to Burbank when Angie was nine, and she never dreamed of being an actress. She thought she was lucky, after a brief stint at Glendale College and then secretarial school, to land a job as secretary in an airplane-seat plant.

"I dropped out of college because I couldn't find any path. I just couldn't keep studying not knowing what I was studying for. So I took shorthand and typing, learned how to work some of the machines and got a job."

It was at the urging of friends in her office that she entered a couple of local beauty contests, and she did that "just to get the prizes. Chrome hub caps! That was the best. And a watch and a bathing suit and a trip to Vegas." The real prize was being noticed at one of these contests by a casting person who assumed she was an aspiring actress.

Angie Dickinson

"I RECEIVED this phone call, and the man, who was representing a TV show, asked if I wanted to be on it. I said, 'I can't act.' He said, 'You can walk, can't you?' It's true. All I was to do was walk around in shorts. A show girl. So I said, 'Yes, what time should I be there, and what does it pay, and oh, God, yes, I'll be there.'

"I was able to get Fridays off from my regular job, and Fridays, Saturdays and Sundays I made more money as one of NBC's TVenuses on 'The Colgate Comedy Hour' than I did all the rest of the week.

"Besides, I loved it. From the first day, I knew this is where I wanted to be, if only I had what it took. So I started taking lessons. After work every day, I went to acting class.

"My mother thought I was crazy. She said, 'What do you want to do this for? What are you going to do if you can't pay the rent?' My sisters are both such sensible girls. The both married quite young and had lots of babies. One of my sisters is a nurse and the other has done clerical work. They are both very sane, very well-adjusted people, and we've stayed close.

"But my mother, I can just hear her now. She was such a practical person. Of course she had to be. My poor daddy was great, but living with an alcoholic must have been very difficult for her.

"SOMEHOW, IT DIDN'T mean our childhoods were unhappy. If they were, we were too dumb to know it. We struggled through and made do. We were small-town girls who loved to go ice skating, and if he was drunk again, we were used to it. He was a handsome, witty man; very talented, a good writer, but drunk.

"I remember telling him I was going to be in a movie. He said, 'You're what? You're what?' But nothing could stop me, and my mother certainly didn't try. She doubted my wisdom, but she was on my side. She used to love coming on the set.

"When it comes together and you suddenly find there's something you want to do and you're learning to do it — it's wonderful. It was marvelous from the beginning. Actors, very good actors, let their light shine on me.

"One of my first jobs was with David Niven. Later I did a pilot for him, and we were buddies. He was great. And, of course, John Wayne. I did a bit with him even before 'Rio Bravo.'"

Ms. Dickinson continues, "My first biggie was, of course, as the dance-hall girl in 'Rio Bravo.'" Then she was the nurse in "Bramble Bush" with Richard Burton; in "Captain Newman, M.D." with Gregory Peck; "Rachel Cade" with Peter Finch; "Ocean's 11" with Frank Sinatra; "The Chase" with Marlon Brando; "Point Blank" with Lee Marvin.

"If you've been lucky, and I have been, you have to give in return. That's what I'm trying to do, but I would like to work more than I have lately... but the scripts have to be right. So many leading roles call for women in their 30s. I don't get those anymore. I get the ones where it doesn't matter what age she is. I would like to play a courageous woman..."

— Angie Dickinson

The one thing she never had in mind to do was a TV series. It was a very full life being a movie star and also being Mrs. Burt Bacharach, jetting with her composer husband from Bel Air to London and Monaco for concerts and parties, and being mother to her adored daughter, Nikki.

MS. DICKINSON HAD always accepted parts of short duration only and requiring no location trips. She used to say she'd never succumb to a TV series until Nikki was in college and then it would probably be "as Lucy Ball's next-door neighbor."

But she gave such a keen performance as Pepper Anderson on an episode of "Police Story" that the producers offered her a series of her own as a spin-off.

"I had been very happy to work as little as possible and do whatever was necessary to keep my husband and baby happy. I remember an interview I gave when I was under contract at Universal: 'I'd give up everything for the right man.' That's what I'd said, and that's just about what I did, very happily for the first seven years of our marriage.

"When 'Police Woman' came along, I turned that down too. I explained that a series was too demanding for a woman who was a wife and mother. But they kept insisting I should tell them what conditions I could live with.

"Burt and I talked it over. His feeling was that it 'wasn't fair to keep a first-rate actress doing inadequate roles because of her personal life,' and when they agreed to a working day that would end at 6 p.m. and two days off every six weeks, he said, 'Oh, well, go ahead and do it. It won't last more than two years.'

"That's why he didn't do the music. I wished he had. Anyway, he believed in me. He always did like my work, but he didn't believe in the series. Women had succeeded in sit-coms, but a woman starring in a drama? But I did it. And it went on for four years.

"A WONDERFUL AND terrible experience. The demands of shooting were terrible. I'd forgotten to mention any stipulations about locations, and as it turned out, we were on location three or four days out of seven. Rough. It cost me my husband.

"It's very hard for a husband to have his wife virtually leave home, especially for a creative man like Burt, who is entitled to have his wife's companionship at dinner and not have her off on locations on the weekends. I think if I ever married again, I'd give up work, give up films, because it's too difficult for a man to constantly be waiting for you to finish shooting.

"I'm still a man's woman, you know." And indeed she is. Recently the tabloids were making a thing about her and Ted Kennedy at a celebrity tennis tournament in Aspen. But the fact is there is no major attraction in Ms. Dickinson's life right now. She's right back where she was before she met Burt.

"I never planned to marry when I met Burt, nor did he. I was crazy about someone else, and he was married. Not only that, but I enjoy a single life. I love the sense of freedom. I was just keen on enjoying the rest of my life the way it was. But we met, and that was that.

"So now I'm back at the same point except now I have my daughter Nikki"...who is 18 and away at school because, much as Ms. Dickinson adores her, she knows that overprotection can be crippling. She shows me a picture of Nikki and is delighted that the girl is deeply involved with music and is playing the drums.

UNLIKE MANY OF THE golden girls of film, Ms. Dickinson has a very realistic view of life. When she says that the demands of her "Police Woman" series cost her her husband, she honestly adds, "We probably would have had problems anyway. Burt and I broke up because our marriage was not what it had been.

"You can't just be slightly discontent. Not in the wonderful arena we have in the world of show business. The superlative lifestyle is available. To settle for anything less — there's no point.

"I am a romantic. I would love to do a truly romantic adventure film. A grown-up, mature romance like 'An Affair to Remember' with Cary Grant and Deborah Kerr. That kind of movie where the people are old enough to express tenderness, to value love and make it interesting. The woman should be involved in a career of her own to add conflict, but where two people care deeply that the other person is happy.

"I had hoped my marriage would be like that. I would still, very willingly, give up the work for that kind of marriage; but he'd have to be one hell of a guy, and, at the moment, I don't even know of him.

"I still enjoy being with a man, going places and doing things with him, and I have a few images that I could live up to. But there is no point unless you can make a man happy and be happy yourself."

If that doesn't happen, Ms. Dickinson will still find happiness because she's a vital person. When it's too late for the starring bit in films, when the camera "become cruel," she will take to writing or hosting "like my friend Dinah Shore...or try a talk show or pick wild flowers in Wyoming."

Meanwhile, she's running for Attorney General of California in "A Touch of Scandal," and the Angie Dickinson fans who have missed her on TV will find her as alluring and spirited as ever.

Audience helps solve crime

LOS ANGELES (AP) — If you like to solve mysteries, the show for you might be NBC's "Scene of the Crime."

Orson Welles will be the host of the two-part program, in which the audience will be asked to participate in solving a murder mystery and figuring out the twist ending to a dramatic suspense story.

A first look at the show was offered Sept. 30, but NBC is considering making it a midseason replacement.

NBC Entertainment president Brandon Tartikoff calls it "the first interactive mystery show on television." Well, not quite.

Last March NBC had a show called "You Are the Jury," in which the audience was asked to telephone in their decision on the verdict. And in 1959 Ed McMahon was the host of "Whodunnit," a quiz show in which short mysteries were presented for three contestants and a panel of experts to solve.

"The Complete Director to Prime Time TV Shows" lists among other similar shows: "Stand By for Crime," 1949; "Chicagoland Mystery Players," 1949; and "Crawford Mystery Theatre," 1951.

Artist Windberg autograph tour brings him to Midland

Windberg

Texas artist Dalhart Windberg is on an autograph tour of West Texas. Windberg will autograph copies of his books at the Texas American Bank, 3201 W. Wall Ave., between 10 a.m. and noon and 1 to 2:30 p.m. Monday.

Windberg is best known for the romantic quality of his Texas landscapes. The University of Texas Press recently published "Dalhart Windberg: Artist of Texas." artist-writer Jerry Allen Porter, who wrote the biography, stated, "Probably no artist has been able to place a viewer into a given place and evoke a mood with the subtleness and power of Windberg."

The method Windberg employs to accomplish this has been detailed in his book "The Windberg Technique of Oil Painting."

Artists Mark Pettit and Darryl Trott, whose works are being printed and marketed by Windberg Enterprises, Inc., will attend the autograph session and sign copies of their work.

Pettit is a landscape artist who occasionally paints still lifes. Trott, an Australian, paints living flowers in watercolors. He is now working on a book on his technique, "Painting Living Florals in Watercolor."

Several original paintings by each of the three artists will be displayed during the autograph session. Their books and prints are available for purchase at most frame and prints galleries in the area.

Author to appear at dinner

Gordon Baxter, author, columnist and commentator, will appear at a community buffet dinner at the Atrium Building, 110 W. Louisiana Ave., at 7:30 p.m. Saturday. His talk will be on behalf of the State of Israel Bonds.

Baxter, who was born in Port Author, has been involved in writing and broadcasting in the Beaumont-Port Author area since 1945. He writes a weekly syndicated column which is carried in 10 Texas newspapers. He has produced television commercials for 20 years.

He is the author of four books including "13/13 Vietnam," a photo essay of his tour as a combat correspondent, and "Bax Seat," a book of his columns.

The Israel Bond Organization is a major source of development capitol for Israel, having provided over $6.2 billion since its inception to help the nation's economy. Israel Bond proceeds, channeled through Israel's Development Budget, help to finance industrial and agricultural projects, the construction of highways and harbors, the expansion of communications and transport, the building of new towns and the development of new sources of energy.

Pianist to give recital

Crawford

Midland Music Teachers Association will present Jannifer Crawford in a benefit piano recital at 7 p.m. Oct. 27 for the Wallace Wimberly Scholarship Fund. The recital will be held in the sanctuary of First Baptist Church.

The program will include works by Mozart, Liszt and Oliver Messiaen.

Miss Crawford was the 1981 recipient of the Wallace Wimberly Scholarship and a former student of Dorothy Matthews. The daughter of Shelley and Jim Crawford, she is an honor graduate of Lee High School.

She is a senior at Baylor University and the student of Dr. David Albee. At Baylor, she is a member of Mu Phi Epsilon, Baylor A Capella Choir and Alpha Delta Pi.

Each year MMTA offers a scholarship to a student of a member teacher who will major in music with a keyboard emphasis. The scholarship was established in 1967 as a memorial to Wallace Wimberly, a charter member of MMTA.

Those interested in contributing to the scholarship fund may send contributions to Lou Nelle George, 2809 Stutz Drive, Midland, 79705.

Weaver will demonstrate

BIG SPRING — Nancy Martin will demonstrate spinning and weaving at the Heritage Museum from 1 to 5 p.m. Saturday and Oct. 28.

Mrs. Martin will illustrate the steps involved in cleaning and carding raw wool to prepare the wool for spinning. She then spins prepared wool into thread on a spinning wheel.

On a small floor loom, Mrs. Martin weaves the thread into fabric. She is currently working on a woolen tartan. As a plaid, tartans require more precision in weaving than some fabrics. The one she is working on is a variation of the Black Watch tartan, a hunting tartan in blue, green and black.

She also spins and weaves materials other than wool, and she has created a supplementary display of various fibers. The display illustrates raw wool, linen, silk, cotton and other more exotic fibers and the steps involved in processing and spinning those fibers into thread.

The Heritage Museum is located at 510 Scurry in Big Spring. Admission is $1 for adults and free to children, members, youth and state hospital groups.

Art work will be shown

A showing of limited edition artwork, antiqued engravings, reproductions, border rugs, poster art, porcelain and other decorative accessories by TransDesigns will be on show and for sale at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave., from 2 to 7 p.m. today.

"The unique appeal of TransDesigns' high quality artwork is twofold," says Pam McKnight, design director for TransDesigns. "First is its custom designing capability. From dozens of samples, the client selects mat colors and a frame style to blend well with the chosen piece of art, in addition to the other decor of the client's home. The selection is then matted and framed to specifications at TransDesigns' professionally managed plant, all for a price usually less than that found in a readymade art store.

"The second major appeal is that viewing, selection and custom designing of art can be done by clients in their own home through the free personal service of a TransDesigns accessory designer."

For more information call Ms. McKnight, 699-6226.

Le Master to present Twain

David Le Master is presenting "An Evening with Twain" at 2 p.m. today at Lee High School Auditorium.

Hal Holbrook's "Mark Twain Tonight" inspired Le Master to put together his own program using the body of Mark Twain's work. He, like Holbrook, assumes the character of Twain as he tells stories and makes comments.

Le Master, a senior, is a state, regional and national competitor who has been in demand performing for clubs and classes in local schools and at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin. He is a student council officer who holds advanced degrees in the National Forensic League and Thespians.

Tickets, priced at $1 for students and $2 for adults, may be purchased at the door.

Artist will demonstrate

Susan Rogers of Dallas will demonstrate speed painting techniques in Odessa Wednesday at 11 a.m. and 7 p.m. at the Executel Hotel, 3075 E. Highway 80, and in Midland at 11 a.m. and 7 p.m. Thursday at the Holiday Inn Country Villa.

The free demonstrations will last 30 to 45 minutes. In that time, she will paint an oil painting.

Ms. Rogers' West Texas visit has a two-fold purpose. She is here to promote her husband's book, "You Can Paint, I Promise" and to offer a weekend workshop at the Holiday Inn, 3001 E. Highway 80, Odessa, Friday and Saturday. Hours for the workshop are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Participants who attend both days will complete four oil paintings, two each day. Cost for one day is $35. Cost for both days is $60.

Supplies are not included. For more information or to register call 563-0330 or attend the free demonstration.

Local artist on exhibit

Heard

Nancy Heard, local freelance artist, is exhibiting a selection of her work on the mezzanine of RepublicBank First National Midland through Oct. 31.

The public is invited to view the free exhibit during business hours.

Ms. Heard received a bachelor of fine arts from Texas Tech University in 1982 where she studied 2-D drawing with a double minor in design communication and studio painting. Her art has been included in exhibits in several Texas towns, and her work is being considered for an upcoming art show in New York.

Art exhibit to close

Midland Arts Association's 7th annual Juried Art Exhibition, cosponsored by Midland College, closes Saturday in the McCormick Gallery, Allison Fine Arts Building, at MC.

Juror for this year's show was Otis O. Lumpkin, director of art activities and European studies at Angelo State University. Lumpkin received his bachelor of arts degree from the University of Arkansas and a master of arts degree from East Texas State University.

Out of 219 entries, 97 were accepted into the show by Lumpkin.

Most of the works in the exhibition are for sale.

'Tumbleweeds' remains on exhibit

The Permian Basin Petroleum Museum has a temporary exhibit entitled "Tumbling Tumbleweeds" on display through Oct. 31.

The exhibit, which was assembled by the museum's assistant director Roger Godin, is based on Midland free lance writer Mary Frances Beverley's story of the same name that appeared in the November 1983 issue of Texas Monthly. The photographs and textual material is largely taken from Mrs. Beverley's story.

Mrs. Beverley's story and the exhibit take their name from the famous song of that name. Written by the late Bob Nolan, one of the founding members of the Sons of the Pioneers vocal group, the song has become indelibly linked with the American West.

Nolan wrote the song in 1934 and it ultimately became the group's theme song. The group continues to entertain and their most requested song is "Tumbling Tumbleweeds."

Songwriter Sager writing novel

By MARY CAMPBELL
Associated Press Writer

Carole Bayer Sager has written a novel and she and her husband Burt Bacharach joke that maybe it'll be the first book to enclose a title song.

"We could put it on the sleeve. When we say sleeve we only think of a record sleeve," she says.

That's logical, since Bacharach is a composer of popular music and Miss Sager is a lyricist.

As she is interviewed, in their 37th floor Manhattan apartment, white-beige with restful rose and blue accents, faint sounds of a piano can be heard from another room. Bacharach is composing the score for Peter O'Toole's movie "Creator." They will write the title song together.

Julio Iglesias' "Moonlight Lady," Miss Sager says, "is a song I wrote a number of years ago. Albert Hammond, who kind of worked as his interpreter, played him this song. Julio must have cut three or four of my songs for this album but he way overcut. This is the one of mine that remained on. I didn't even remember the song. Those are the lucky things that happen.

"Burt and I wrote 'Sleep with Me Tonight,' which is the new single off Neil Diamond's album.

"Dionne Warwick recorded 'Finders of Lost Love' which Burt and I wrote for a TV show of that name. It's the first time we've done a TV song and the first time he and Dionne worked together in 10 years."

She used to record songs by Bacharach and his former song-writing partner Hal David.

Miss Sager says, "I think emotionally Dionne and Burt put a lot behind them in order to reunite. The whole session was very exciting. It looks as though it might be a single for Dionne. Luther Vandross sang with her.

"To me it was an eye opener, the ease with which she sings his melodies and how well suited his melodies are for her vocally."

She continues, "The song we had the most fun with in the last two years is 'Heartlight.' It went top five for Neil Diamond. The three of us wrote it together. And it's the name of a horse Burt and I share. Neil would show up to sing the song when it ran. He said he didn't mind until the horse became more valuable than the copyright.

"And I have a song which I wrote with Quincy Jones for the new Neil Simon film, 'The Slugger's Wife.' I don't know who Quincy will make the single with.

"But what I've really done the last six months is write a long song — a novel."

Miss Sager has been writing lyrics a long time. She wrote "A Groovy Kind of Love" when she was 18, 20 years ago. Right now she is more enthusiastic about projects other than writing lyrics. "Maybe it is just doing the same thing over and over gets boring," she says. "I tell myself it didn't get boring to Cole Porter. He just refined his craft.

"It's fun to have a hit on the charts. But lately I've been enjoying the making of records in the studio more than the writing of songs. We did the production of Roberta Flack's recent, 'Making Love,' produced 'Heartlight' and produced Dionne's record.

"I like creating the sound of the record."

But the novel, which despite talk of a title song, doesn't yet have a title, is in the front of Miss Sager's mind right now. She says, "I have to rewrite some and catch some things I didn't the first time through. Arbor House told me if it's rewritten by Feb. 1, and I can't imagine that it wouldn't be, it would be its No. 1 fiction book for September 1985. That's hilarious to me. I'd have five songs out by then.

"Neil Simon always talks to me that way. He has himself booked for two years. Usually I don't know what I'm going to do next Wednesday, except I hope I'm going to be creating."

She has a computer in their Southern California home and a smaller computer in the New York apartment, on which she wrote the book. Writing lyrics, she uses "lots of yellow legal pads and lots of pencils."

She says, "The novel is the first thing I've ever written alone in my life. I thought my greatest strength was in collaboration and it still may be musically that that is so. In some ways writing lyrics lowers the amount of risk taking. You're aware of commercial restrictions and expectations, so you write within it. Music, as fabulous as it makes me feel and as much as I love it, is constricting to a lyricist. I'm writing within eight, 12 and 16 bars.

"For the first third of the book, I felt like, if it doesn't work out so what? That is very freeing. That allowed me a certain fantasy and freedom that I hadn't felt in my composing in a long time.

"By nature I'm funny. This book is very funny. My songs are not funny for the most part. Usually they're romantic, sometimes a little poignant, when I let them touch a place inside people.

"Burt and I just performed in New York at a benefit. I told him next time instead of me opening with a medley of my hits, 'It's My Turn,' 'When I Need You,' 'Nobody Does it Better,' I'll just read a chapter and he can underscore it on the piano."

Her book is about a mother and daughter, Miss Sager says. "The daughter is an author. A friend of hers is a superstar. You have the New York-Hollywood bicoastal, that trendy word, world, inhabited by people who are not worrying about the rent. But their problems are universal.

"There are people in the book that I don't know what part of me they evolved from. That's my favorite part of writing, invention. A song feels like it comes much more processed through my thinking, at least today. Maybe once upon a time it was a more spontaneous eruption. Today it is my work. I sit down and have to figure it out."

She has ideas for more books and she wants to write more songs, with Melissa Manchester and Peter Allen. She has been collecting prizes for a "Night at the Races" at Hollywood Park Nov. 14 to benefit the Neil Bogart Memorial Laboratories for children's cancer research.

Miss Sager and Bacharach were married in April 1982 at the home of Neil and Joyce Bogart, with Neil and Marcia Diamond present. Bogart died a month later of cancer.

Miss Sager made her third album, with Bacharach, "Sometimes Late at Night," for Bogart's Boardwalk Records.

Selections of Anschutz collection displayed until Oct. 28

The last day to see "Masterpieces of the American West: Selections from the Anschutz Collection," at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., is Oct. 28.

Hours at the museum are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday and 2 to 5 p.m. Sunday.

The 103 works, one-fifth of the entire collection, on display in the Midland showing are representative of the collection as a whole.

"I think its particularly interesting to the people of Texas because it is a documentary of the development of the West starting from the Hudson River School on the East Coast all the way to the West," says Elizabeth Cunningham, curator for the Anschutz Collection.

The exhibit includes major works by Frederic Remington, Charles Russell, George Catlin, Helen Frankenthaler, Jackson Pollack, Stuart Davis and Georgia O'Keeffe.

"What's fun about the collection is it starts in the 1830s and actually goes through 150 years of history. The artists came West with the particular wave of people that were coming West."

Selected collections from the Anschutz Collection have not been exhibited in Texas since 1978, and the museum showing here is the only stop it will make in Texas for the next three years.

The exhibit was brought to Midland by the Atlantic Richfield Foundation and the Midcontinent Production and Southwestern Exploration Divisions, Exxon USA. Their co-sponsorship includes covering the cost of shipping, insurance, promotion, as well as providing public educational programs and docent training materials.

"Masterpieces" has toured extensively throughout the world, making stops in such major European cities as Vienna, Paris, Munich, Brussels and Helsinki as well as in major cities in China.

The collection has been well received on tour because, Ms. Cunningham says, "Each generation of artists has emphasized the significance of the West during the years of its exploration. In telling the story of this unique region, artists found elements that were both national and universal."

Guest finds it's hard to find right dress for party

By LINDA PUNER
King Features Syndicate

A month ago. What do I buy to wear to a party — described by the hostess as "festive," translated by me as "fetid" and elucidated by my husband as "mandatory" — in a size too small because I'm planning to lose 10 pounds?

The salesperson leads me to the rack. Each hanger scrape grates on my nerves. In the fitting room, zippers and snaps tighten their social noose. Out on the floor, "Mirror, mirror on the wall. Snow White doesn't have to worry at all" as long as the gray wool crepe is set off by my kelly green knee socks.

Parading around in the subtle garb, the glitter of a black, slinky number catches my eye. But the salesperson insists that the gray shroud is "me." Exactly what I was afraid of.

"I'll take it. Charge and send." At least I save 2¼ percent tax.

After the shopping ordeal, I recuperate with a Snickers bar. The Mistake was expensive and candy is cheaper than lettuce.

A week ago. In the middle of dialing my 11th-choice babysitter, I realize that The Mistake hasn't arrived. I hire the sitter whose family has a history of mental disease and who lives inconveniently on the far side of town, and dash back to the store.

No signs of the gray blob; the black slink is gone, too. Even the persuasive salesperson has taken early retirement.

Her young replacement suggests a purple tent adorned with red ant tracks. It isn't me. I take it gratefully. No time to send it this time. I pay the extra tax and race home to lick my wounds and a chocolate ice-cream cone.

The morning of the event. My chiefs-in-training create pancakes and a mess for breakfast. Scrubbing the grill, I envision the other partygoers luxuriating in manicures. Brillo is my favorite cuticle remover, I'll tell them.

That afternoon. United Parcel delivers The Mistake. It is as gray as I remember it. The bill includes the wrong tax, a delivery fee and a "No Returns After 7 Days" tag.

Late that afternoon. The dog bounds in reeking of Kennel No. 5 Dog D'Ou. As I shampoo her, a chimera of other partygoers primping at fancy beauty salons floats through my mind.

Early evening. Everything is going too well. The nincompoop babysitter has remembered to arrive. The kids don't have fevers, although I've checked them 10 times. So I slip into my purple tent.

"Oooh, Mommy, that's excellent. Why didn't you say it was a costume party?"

I rip off the tent and resort to The Mistake. No comment from anybody.

The event. Driving into the city, life improves. Lights, traffic, crowds. This is why all us kids from the Midwest left home. I cheer myself with small victories. I remembered to pack Kleenex. We can pick up the Sunday paper Saturday.

Nancy the Hostess, in the black slinky number, greets us at the door. "Come meet Laura," she croons. "You'll love her. She doesn't work either."

If I don't work, why am I suddenly so tired?

Laura is talking with Tanya, who is swathed in smashing shreds. "I'm made for the new Japanese clothes," Tanya says with a wave of her red talons. No hint of dog hair beneath them.

"But where can you wear them?" asks Laura.

"Anywhere but work," Tanya avers. "I'm so sick of dressing 1950s Connecticut."

Suddenly I feel as matronly as Mrs. Addison, my fifth-grade auditorium teacher.

Subsequent conversation reveals that Tanya is a lawyer. What does she wear to work? "Oh you know, mainly gray suits, something like yours," she answers.

4 a.m. The Mistake graces the kids' dress-up box. I contemplate a zestier lifestyle. The theater? The circus? I already own a costume.

Casseroles all-purpose dishes

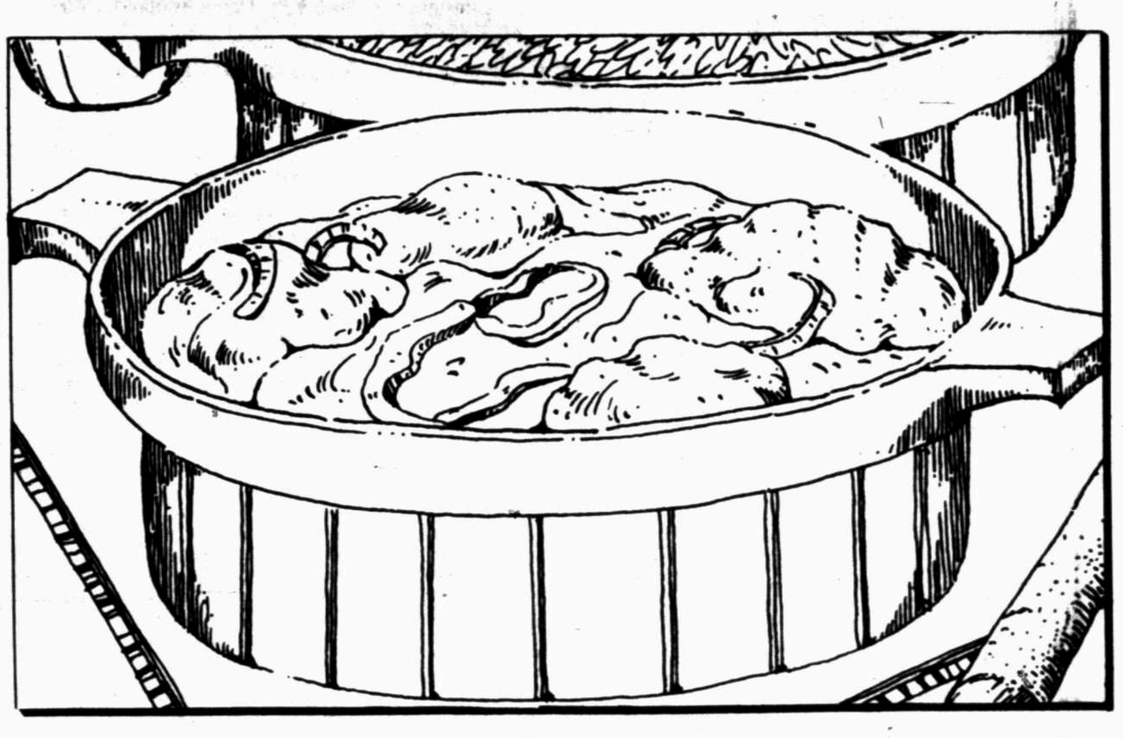
Recipes can be frozen, delicious left over

By JANET LORIMER
King Features Syndicate

Casseroles won't abandon you in your hour of need, like when you discover you have a tad less cheese than you're supposed to have or you want to toss in some extra noodles. Leave it to your ever-lovin' casserole to patiently adjust without a single reproachful glance.

They are excellent traveling companions, as anyone who's ever been to a potluck will tell you. Drape a casserole in orchids and it will sit in magnificent state at the governor's mansion. Garnish it with a humble piece of parsley and it fits right in at the PTA fund-raiser.

A casserole goes from freezer to oven to table with grand aplomb. I've never met one that didn't taste just as delicious as leftovers as it did on the day it was born. In short, casseroles are terrific all-purpose dishes. So, without further ado, I'd like to introduce you to some of my favorites.



SPANISH DELIGHT

1 pound lean ground beef
½ onion, chopped
1 green pepper, seeded and chopped
1 to 2 cloves garlic (or to taste)
1 large can tomato sauce
1 cup cooked whole kernel corn
Dash pepper
1 tablespoon chili powder (or to taste)
2 cups cooked egg noodles
Grated cheddar cheese

Brown ground beef and drain off fat. Add chopped onion, green pepper and garlic to meat. Continue cooking till vegetables are tender. Add tomato sauce and corn. Season with pepper and chili powder.

Add cooked noodles and spoon everything into a casserole dish. Top with cheddar cheese. Bake at 350 degrees for 30 minutes, or until dish is heated through and cheese melted.

HOT POTATO SALAD CASSEROLE

5 or 6 large potatoes, boiled in their jackets
1 pound sausage links
½ onion, finely minced
¼ cup cider vinegar
2 large packages cream cheese
¾ cup milk, more if needed
1 or 2 teaspoons mustard

Slice cooked potatoes (skin and all) into thick slices and arrange in bottom of shallow baking dish (about 9-inch by 13-inch by 2-inch). Fry sausage links till well-browned. Drain links on paper towel, then arrange links on top of potatoes.

Saute minced onion, stirring well till tender. Add vinegar and stir well. Pour onion/vinegar mixture evenly over sausages. In blender, place cream cheese, cut into chunks, and milk. Blend to make a thickish sauce. Add mustard till sauce is pale yellow with a faint mustard flavor. Pour over casserole. Cover tightly and bake at 350 degrees for about 30 minutes.

SPAGHETTI PIE

Crust:
1 cup cooked spaghetti
2 tablespoons melted butter
⅓ cup grated Parmesan
2 well-beaten eggs

Before cooking spaghetti, break into short (3-inch to to 4-inch) lengths. Cook as directed on package and drain. Mix cooked spaghetti noodles with melted butter, cheese and egg. Press mixture into square casserole or pie pan, covering sides and bottom evenly to form a crust.

Filling:
2 cups cooked spinach, drained
1 clove garlic, finely minced
1 tablespoon olive oil
¼ cup grated Parmesan
1 egg, well-beaten

Mix all ingredients thoroughly. Spread filling evenly over bottom of noodle crust.

Topping:
1 can tomatoes (if you use whole tomatoes, be sure to cut them into small chunks), juice included
1 (6 ounce) can tomato sauce
1 teaspoon oregano
½ can mushroom bits and pieces, well drained
½ pound lean ground beef, cooked (optional)

Brown, drain and crumble meat if you plan to use it. In large saucepan mix tomatoes, tomato sauce, oregano and mushrooms. Bring to a low boil, then turn to simmer for about 15 minutes. Add meat (if you are using it) at this point. Simmer five more minutes. Pour over top of "pie." Top with more Parmesan or grated Monterey Jack cheese if desired. Bake at 350 degrees for about 20 minutes.

GREEN CHILE PIE

2 cans whole peeled green chilies
½ pound cheddar cheese, grated
5 eggs, slightly beaten
2 tablespoons milk
Dash pepper
1 can sliced black olives

Grease a 10-inch pie pan or square casserole dish. Cut chilies open and layer across bottom of pan. Sprinkle olives over chilies. In blender, mix eggs, cheese, milk and seasonings. Blend on low speed till well mixed. Pour mixture over chilies and olives. Bake at 325 degrees for 30 minutes or until mixture is set.

ENCHILADA CASSEROLE

1 package corn tortillas
2 cups enchilada sauce
1 pint sour cream
1 can sliced black olives
2 green onions, chopped
2 cups grated Monterey Jack cheese
1 can chopped green chilies
Oil

Either soften tortillas in hot oil or steam for a minute or two. In shallow dish, pour about ⅓ cup enchilada sauce. Place a layer of tortillas over the sauce, slightly overlapping them.

In separate bowl, mix sour cream, grated cheese, olives onion and chilies. Spoon this mixture evenly over tortillas in baking dish. Top this with ⅓ cup enchilada sauce. Add a second layer of tortillas. Pour second cup of enchilada sauce over top. Cover tightly and bake at 350F for about 20 minutes. Cut into squares and serve.

Enchilada Sauce:
1 small can tomato paste
½ cup chicken broth
1 can green chile salsa
1 teaspoon chili powder (or to taste)
¼ teaspoon cumin

Heat all ingredients in saucepan to boiling, then reduce heat to simmer and simmer for about 10 minutes. (Note: You can make this in larger quantities and refrigerate what you don't use. May also be frozen.)

MY MOM'S SPAGHETTI

1 pound ground beef
1 tablespoon olive oil
1 large onion, chopped
1 clove garlic, chopped
1 green pepper, deseeded and chopped
½ cup chopped parsley
1 large can tomatoes, undrained
1 can tomato paste
1 can green chilies, chopped
1 can mushroom pieces, drained
1 can green olives (not the Spanish-style green olives with pimiento)
Dash pepper
1 tablespoon leaf sage, crushed
¼ teaspoon powdered cloves

Brown hamburger, drain fat. Add olive oil, onion, garlic and green pepper and continue cooking till vegetables are tender. Add all other ingredients. Simmer mixture for at least an hour, uncovered, until sauce is thick and well-blended. Serve over hot spaghetti noodles.

Interest in home cooking growing, research indicates

By JULIANNE BELOTE
King Features Syndicate

Cookbooks have long been the old dependables for booksellers and publishers alike. Though they represent only one or two percent of the books published each year, 25 percent of all books sold are cookbooks, according to recent studies.

There seemed small reason for successful cookbook publishers to question this happy phenomenon (why mess with success?) except for the occurrence of a well-documented food revolution. Our national love affair with food, with its attendant cooking celebrities, cover stories in "Time" and "Newsweek" and booming gourmet cookware stores, has obviously created an even larger market potential for cookbook sales.

Nitty Gritty Cookbooks of Concord, Calif., launched a study of that market, what its trends are, who buys cookbooks, and what they want in cookbook recipes. The results of their 18 months of research were so striking they have given an entirely new direction to the books Nitty Gritty will publish.

"It didn't take market research to tell us that interest in food and home cooking is the hottest trend going," says Robert Belote, Nitty Gritty's marketing vice president, "but the research produced numbers that made us listen and start responding.

"It told us that the number of people cooking at home more than doubled in the '70s and is forecast to grow even more in the '80s." The economy, for one thing, seems to be responsible for more people spending more time at home, reports Belote.

Cooking has also become home entertainment. People are expanding their cooking skills; they are much more sophisticated about food than they once were. "Can you remember when only Orientals used woks and no one made pesto sauce except Italians?" asks Belote.

"We knew the potential customer for our cookbooks today must be far different than we had 15 years ago when we first began producing books, and we wanted to know who this customer is."

The profile of the cookbook buyer that emerged from the study is a female (yes, it still is) between 18 and 44 years old. She has attended college, works full- or part-time and has an income of $20,000 or more — 45 percent had incomes of $40,000 or more. She buys one to three cookbooks a year and probably owns a food processor and a microwave oven (over half those surveyed did). This is a younger, better educated and more affluent customer than had been supposed.

And what is this customer looking for in a cookbook? Hundreds of interviews disclosed specific preferences: first, a demand for dependable, good-tasting recipes; and second, easy instructions with quick preparation time. No surprises here.

But third in priority was a demand for recipes using healthy, nutritious ingredients. Here was the news. In fact, here is the food story of the '80s — an awareness of and interest in nutrition.

Ten years ago a demand for healthy ingredients would not have made a list of even the top 10 preferences in a cookbook. Today, research figures tell a story of not just another food fad, but a substantive change in the way we are feeding ourselves.

Nitty Gritty first realized how widespread the health market was when it published "No Salt, No Sugar, No Fat" and (despite the addition of "No Fun" to the title by some unreconstructed eaters) it rapidly became one of the company's best sellers.

Other publishers, too, report heavy sales of health-inspired, good-nutrition books, as do cookbook buyers for major book chains. Buyer Maureen McMahon at Waldenbooks says that in trade paperback cookbooks, 60 percent of sales are in the natural food category. Shelly Hurley at B. Dalton also confirms a definite move to nutrition cookbooks.

Government figures reflect a dramatic shift toward buying healthy food — fresh vegetables, salad greens, fresh fruit, poultry, fish, cheese — as part of the total food dollars spent. Equally dramatic is the decrease in dollars spent on convenience and snack food, frozen entrees, beef, pork and canned foods.

Other cookbook choices selected by those surveyed were a strong preference for color photos; a compact design that stays open on a counter allowing the cook to have both hands free; and recipe ideas for using convenience appliances like the food processor and the microwave oven.

Two major trends on the culinary scene are for lighter, low-calorie meals and a strong interest in cooking "from scratch."

At first, the latter item seems inconsistent with the demand for fast preparation time, but maybe consistency is the hobgoblin of dull cooks. Recipes in the past using a can of this and a packaged mix of that hardly constituted creative cooking. That era appears to be as passe as Jell-O salad with canned fruit and marshmallows.

Today's talented, health-conscious food writers are reflecting the call for time-saving, lighter meals with recipes using fewer ingredients — but those must be fresh. Ms. McMahon, who buys both health books and cooking books for Waldenbooks, says three out of every 15 hardcover titles sold in this category are related to weight control.

"American cuisine" is another new interest. In the '70s, thanks to Julia Child, Americans discovered French cooking; in the '80s it is American food, incorporating our ethnic influences and using fresh, local ingredients, that is the rage. Ms. Hurley at B. Dalton cites strong sales of "American Whole Foods Cuisine," even at $17.95, as just one example of this interest.

How the decision to purchase a cookbook is made was also included in the survey. Surprisingly, 60 percent of all cookbooks sold are purchased on impulse. The customer was attracted by a display, a title or an eye-catching cover.

Half of those purchased are intended for gifts. A few consumers said they would buy one of the 8½ by 11-inch magazine-style cookbooks on the market, but a majority wanted something "different" for a gift — a quality paperback or a hardback — especially if it is under $10.

Using this research as a recipe for stocking cookbook shelves, a bookseller will be able to deliver more confidently just what the customer wants.

For a detailed summary of Nitty Gritty's research, which is a compilation of nine different studies, seven commissioned by Nitty Gritty, write to Marketing Department, Nitty Gritty Cookbooks, 2100 Meridian Park Blvd., Concord, Calif. 94520.

Skunk seemed interested in banks

VERNON, Conn. (AP) — A skunk that hopped out of a garbage truck and trotted into a bank here sent depositers and tellers racing for the exits.

The People's Bank shut down for an hour after the skunk's 11 a.m. visit one day earlier this week, and then closed for the day an hour early because employees and customers were repelled by the odor, said Anne McCarthy, a manager.

The 10-pound skunk remained calm throughout the episode, chewing up curtains, lifting its tail for a spray here and there, and refusing to budge when offered crackers in an attempt to coax it out.

Finally, firefighters covered the skunk with a cardboard box and shoved it outside.

Fire Chief Donald Maguda said the skunk was last seen skulking outside the Connecticut Bank & Trust Co. office next to the People's Bank branch.

"Maybe looking for lower interest rates?" Maguda said.

Books chronicle formation of Solidarity

"The Polish Revolution: Solidarity," by Timothy Garton Ash; Scribner's; $17.95; 416 pp.; and "The Passions of Poland: From Solidarity to the State of War," by Lawrence Weschler; Patheon; $9.95; 288 pp.

A Review

For reasons not altogether clear, some Americans treat Poland and its citizens as the target of distasteful jokes. This is a sorry state, for it is an indisputable fact that Poland and her people have an honored and heroic history. That Poland has been a pawn of European politics is no fault of her own; that her nationhood has consistently re-emerged, largely due to a national consciousness that never has been defeated, is to be respected. Perhaps nowhere is this respect better deserved and illustrated than in the attempt of Polish workers to form a nationwide labor union, Solidarity, independent of the ruling Polish Community Party. These two books document this remarkable struggle.

Both Tinothy Ash, in his "The Polish Revolution: Solidarity," and Lawrence Weschler, in "The Passions of Poland," chronicle roughly the same time period, from the middle of 1980, when a series of local strikes grew into a nationwide labor movement, until late 1981, when the government declared a state of war and effectively broke the strength of the movement. Both authors sketch the historical antecedents of the movement as well as speculating what the future might hold. Obviously, most of the dramatis personae are the same. Yet the two books are quite different, although in a complementary manner.

Reading Weschler, one senses the participants' thoughts and tensions without fully understanding the political background in which the individual acts of rebellion are set. Reading Ash, one appreciates the historical, social and economic forces motivating the Solidarity movement without completely appreciating the emotions that ultimately moved its participants. "The Passions of Poland" clearly is one observer's impressions gathered from visits to Poland during the 16 months of Solidarity. Weschler draws extensively from personal interviews and offers a balanced picture of Polish society. He is frank about Poland's anti-Semitism and dwells on the impending sense of Polish doom. "It doesn't matter how clever the underground is," says one of his correspondents, "it will lose. And it doesn't matter how clever the regime is, it will lose. Poland — Poland always loses."

Weschler convincingly develops his account through personal narrative, a discussion of contemporary Polish literature and, most imaginatively, reference to Polish cinema. Readers new to Poland might wish for greater attention to political happenings, but rarely will they be unmoved.

"The Polish Revolution: Solidarity" offers far greater detail to the economic, political and institutional forces that defined the Solidarity movement. Ash describes at some length the economic malaise endangering the nation, the political pressures brought upon the Polish government by Soviet leaders and, especially, the policy disputes that grew within Solidarity. It is the more informative of the two books, but somehow lacks empathy. The academic discourses and jargon stand in stark contrast to Ash's more florid descriptions. His conflict between writing a straightforward historical narrative of unquestioned power and his desire to display a seemingly irresistible literary precociousness detracts from the book. Ash certainly educates the readers in a way Weschler does not, but he fails to involve them emotionally.

Recent events in Poland, including the 1983 Nobel Peace Prize to Lech Walesa, provide new and continuing evidence that the "revolution of the soul" has not been squelched or resolved by the repressive actions of the Polish government. Ash and Weschler give ample and stirring testimony as to why this is the case. These histories of Solidarity support a phenomenon that always can bear reiteration — the basically irrepressible nature of human dignity, here reflected in a Gdansk shipyard and a rural farming community. We should be grateful to Ash and Weschler for bringing Solidarity so compellingly to our attention, for the movement benefits us all.

Volunteer 'does it for the kids'

By BILL WILLIAMSON
King Features Syndicate

It has been nearly a year. Why have I stayed and what brings me back? At 41, I simply wanted to volunteer to fill some of my idle time. Now it often seems to interfere with my skiing, my favorite TV shows, my midweek volleyball — and, when the lines are busy, it intrudes on my writing time.

Sometimes I think I'll not do this anymore; my time has run its course; maybe I'll give notice. After all, I work 40 hours a week for the U.S. Forest Service, and it's at the end of a full day that my evenings with the hotline begin.

And the drive. A drive home that begins near midnight and ends an hour later. And then it's up again at 5:30 to begin another day. If I quit, I could spend more time with Kelly and Leah, my own kids, 20 and 16, although their needs seem to diminish with each passing day.

There are lots of reasons — excuses — to stop working for the Child Abuse Hotline. But as I roll those reasons around in my mind, memories of the children creep in.

I think of 14-year-old Mary on the line, and of her fear of her father's touching her where she knows he shouldn't. And his coercing her to touch him, until she appeals to me, a total stranger, and pleads, "Can you make him stop?"

I recall 5-year-old Robby explaining on the phone why his mommy can't come back and talk, and how his daddy is hitting his mommy, the screams in the background punctuating his words. Robby goes on to tell how his daddy kicks him, too. Unable to give an address, little Robby talks on and on, until the lines goes silent with only a whimper signaling the end of the call.

I remember learning of Teresa, nearly 3 years old and still unable to walk well and refusing to talk. Her 25-pound frame is surviving on curdled milk and moldy dill pickles while her mother and live-in boyfriend stay high on dope.

I can't forget the frustration I felt when I discovered there was an error in Teresa's address, given by an anonymous caller. Now there's nothing for me to do but wait and hope someone else calls.

I think of Darin, a 4-year-old, unable to escape his mother's grasp as, once again incapable of controlling her temper, she flailed him against the side of a steel bridge.

I can't forget the father who reported he had discovered Ronald, his 13-year-old stepson, having intercourse with his 7-year-old son, Jason, a few moments before. His voice seemed to crack as he explained, "I didn't know what else to do but call."

The odor described to me so vividly by a caller still lingers in my nostrils when I think of the six children removed from their home, where seven dogs and seven cats also lived inside and were allowed to discharge their bowels freely throughout the house. Feces were smeared everywhere, even on the kitchen walls. Garbage laden with mold was piled in all the rooms. And I think of Gwen, the oldest at 13, lying on the urine-soaked couch amid the stench, too sick to get up.

I remember Nancy, sobbing as she called from a pay phone on a street corner, where she and her 8-year-old daughter, Carrie, cried for help in the night.

Nancy told me that she learned her husband had sexually entered Carrie repeatedly. "It was one thing for him to batter me about," she said, "but to do this to Carrie..." They had no clothes or belongings with them, and she asked, "Where can we go?"

Not many of these episodes have happy endings. But for some, the pain may be reduced. And for a precious few, the horror may someday be forgotten.

Mary was removed from her home temporarily until a determination of the validity of the case could be made.

Robby is still in his home, where he no doubt will remain until his talkative tongue reaches someone else's ear to provide an address.

Teresa also remains in her home, wherever it may be, until someone again cares enough to call.

Darin has been permanently removed from his mother's care.

Ronald and Jason remain in their home while their case is being investigated.

Gwen and her five brothers and sisters were removed from their home by a police officer. They are living in two temporary shelter homes awaiting the court's decision as to their future.

Nancy and Carrie were taken into a private home for protection and counseling.

As each of these thoughts again crosses my mind, I know the answer to my own question about why I continue to volunteer.

And I know, each time I pick up the phone and answer, "Child Abuse Hotline, may I help you?" there is a chance — a slim chance — that the ugly chain of abuse that is passed on from generation to generation just might be broken with this call.

I do it for the kids: 1-800-4-A-CHILD.

Accountant's determination brings her to top of field

By SUNNY MERIK
King Features Syndicate

Vickie Jackson

Ten years ago, Vickie Jackson was a young mother of two with a failing marriage. Today she is audit manager at the San Francisco CPA firm of Ernst & Whinney.

"When my marriage began floundering, my main concern was to be able to earn a living for myself and my children. I knew that accountants made good incomes, so I went to college and took accounting."

Ms. Jackson graduated from California State University, Hayward, in 1973, the same year she was divorced.

"The day after graduation, I went to work here as a staff accountant."

After a year, she stepped up to advanced staff accountant. One year later, she was promoted to senior accountant. Two years after that, she moved into the rank of supervisor. And on October 1, 1979, she became an audit manager.

"That's a typical career track within CPA firms. There is a policy in this industry of 'up or out,'" Ms. Jackson says. "It's a very competitive environment."

In her present position, she manages about 15 separate accounts, providing overall administrative audit services including planning, executing, report writing, and assisting with SEC filings.

"The main service I render is giving my clients opinions on their financial statements, decisions and plans. Advice and consulting is the typical service rendered by accountant auditors," Ms. Jackson says.

"For instance, a client is preparing a financial statement for their board or stockholders, and we go in and review what they've done and tell them whether their statement is a fair presentation of the financial condition of their company.

"Or they come to us when they're thinking about getting involved in some new venture and they want us to tell them what the accounting ramifications will be, or what we think the effect will be on their profits.

"So our most valuable service is the rendering of opinions."

Ms. Jackson designed the award-winning minority recruiting program for Ernst & Whinney's San Francisco office.

"There was a spurt of minority hiring in the '60s and early '70s and then things kind of died off. Every time I asked about the lack of blacks, I was told, 'We can't find them. They don't exist.'

"I kept insisting that surely there were qualified black accountants around, and one day the manager of recruiting said to me, 'OK, if that's what you think, why don't you write your own recruiting plan and go find them.'"

So she did.

According to Ms. Jackson, there are so many accounting graduates, it is impossible for recruiters to interview everyone who is looking for work. Therefore, they use grade point average as a screening device. Only those students with top grade averages are interviewed.

"This almost automatically excludes any students who had to work their way through college," says Ms. Jackson, "and most minorities work through college."

She devised more personalized alternative screening requirements.

"We established three areas which would indicate good employee status: leadership ability, maturity and sound academic background.

"To find out about students who fulfilled these criteria, we became personally acquainted with accounting professors and accepted personal recommendations. We also got involved with the minority accounting groups and clubs on the various campuses."

The program worked, not only for minority students but also for Ernst & Whinney, and in March 1982, the State Board of Accountancy awarded Ernst & Whinney an affirmative action accommodation.

"We have about 10 blacks on staff now, where for years we had only one or two. All but three of these workers are women," Jackson says.

When Ms. Jackson decided to become an accountant in a major accounting firm, her college instructors tried to discourage her.

"For two years, they told me all the reasons it wouldn't work — I was in my late twenties, beyond the acceptable employment age. And I had two children, and I was a woman, and black to boot. I just wouldn't be accepted in the business community. They kept telling me it just wouldn't work."

"They suggested I go into government employment. That was decent employment for a woman with children."

But Ms. Jackson was determined. The accounting field was just opening for blacks, and she saw it as an opportunity and a challenge.

She feels there is a great future for women in accounting. "We haven't even begun to fill the needs in accounting," she says. "Men are still making the final decisions. In very few cases have I come across a company where the woman has the final say, but that day is coming."

Ms. Jackson says that she was able to handle the break-up of her marriage, the pressure of two young children and the demands of finishing college because of her family.

"I've got a tremendous family; in fact, I think we're a clan. I have seven sisters and 22 nieces. They helped me through this period of life. My sister, who was about 13 then, went along with me and the kids on weekends when I had to go to campus to do research. She'd come along as my babysitter. Now she's working at a CPA firm."

How does a single parent who is a high-powered executive, with long work days and plenty of professional demands, keep in touch with her family?

"For one thing, I have great, independent and supportive, as well as very vocal, kids," Ms. Jackson says. "My kids and I talk a lot together. They share in the highs and lows of my work life. They feel like they're part of it all, and I think that's the only way it should be.

"A couple years ago I looked at my children and realized that they weren't 5 and 7 anymore. My daughter is 17 now and my son is 15. And I realized that my job was taking so much of my time that I hardly saw them at all. So I decided to start scheduling in my children on my calendar.

"That's what I do. Mornings are very important at our home. We're all together then. Tuesday nights belong to my daughter. And Thursday is my son's night. Sunday is our family day.

"I don't worry about my kids. They always know where I am, and they're free to call me whenever they choose.

"And whenever they phone, I take the call. I learned very early that you don't say to your children, 'Honey, I don't have time right now. I'll call you back.'

"I find that most of my clients understand if I have to take a moment or two to deal with a family situation."

Looking back over the past 10 years, Vickie Jackson says she has changed tremendously. "In 1973, I was insecure, scared, naive.

"Today I'm more secure, more confident and hopefully a bit more wise. I still like people. And I'm definitely no longer scared. I guess the most important change is my level of confidence, and that comes with knowing your skills and your weaknesses, and not being afraid of your weaknesses."

While she is pleased with the progress she sees blacks and women making in the accounting and business fields, she feels there is a long way to go.

"There's a big future for women in business. We haven't even begun making inroads. We're a little bubble that's just starting to rise."

She's silent a moment, considering the progress of women and minorities over the past 10 years.

"You could get discouraged, I suppose, at the slow growth of the numbers. But you look at the trend. As long as the trend is headed in the right direction, you take heart."

He had the overbearing personality of one who had been given power before he was quite ready for it. He was surrounded by a small group of sycophants who hung on his every word.

"The days are long gone when I was prepared to get into a game with anyone," sniffed the Jack of Spades. "Now, unless I know that the game is going to be of a certain quality, I'd sooner stay home. Just the other day I was invited to this expert game. Oh, the difference . . . it's like night and day. Take this hand, as an example of what I mean.

"In third seat, I must say that I agree with our opponent's decision to open four hearts. He had the worst possible distribution and, opposite a partner who had passed, there was no chance of slam.

"The expert who held me made his natural lead of the queen of diamonds. Our partner rose with the ace and, since the lead marked declarer with the king of diamonds and the club suit offered no prospect of a trick, he made his natural switch to a low spade.

"Now, if I had been playing with the penny-pinching crowd that you are used to playing with, the contract would have been made. Had one of them been in the West chair, he would have used me to win the second trick, cashed the ace and then searched around frantically for the setting trick. Declarer easily would have made the rest of the tricks.

"Watching my expert at work was a thing of beauty. He won the second trick with the ace of spades, then cast me to the dogs. His partner captured me with the king and led a third spade, and that was that.

"If declarer ruffed low, he would be overruffed by my cousin, the Knave of Hearts. If he ruffed high, my cousin would score a trick by force. Either way, the contract was doomed.

"I hope this dissertation will be of use to you in the future."
