Senate gives Reagan $3.3 billion in cuts

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate, facing a veto threat, gave President Reagan about $3.3 billion in new cuts in domestic programs today as it passed an emergency spending bill that would keep the government operating past midnight tonight.

Passage came just before 7 a.m. EST on a 69-26 vote that ended a rare all-night session. The key was a carefully crafted compromise amendment by Senate Majority Leader Howard H. Baker Jr., R-Tenn., that incorporated the new budget cuts.

The stopgap bill now goes to a House-Senate conference committee that will work out differences between the House and Senate-passed versions. The House had refused to make the cuts Reagan wanted in the bill it passed Monday, but House Republican leaders are hopeful that position can be changed.

Any compromise bill worked out by conferees must be approved by the House and Senate before it can be sent to Reagan for his signature.

The Senate bill was passed after a 21-hour session that featured 25 separate roll call votes and the consideration of dozens of amendments. Baker revised his proposal several times during the night in an effort to pick up the necessary votes.

The Republican leader told his weary colleagues early today that "the president will sign the bill" if it would cut more than $3 billion, on an annual basis, from domestic programs while sparing the Defense Department.

Without the additional spending cuts — an average of 4 percent in hundreds of programs — Reagan "would undoubtedly veto" the measure, Baker warned Thursday before the marathon session began.

Republicans and Democrats in both houses said Reagan had enough support to sustain a veto.

The Senate Appropriations Committee brought its version to the floor as a $417.4 billion spending package. Dozens of minor floor amendments changed that figure, but a new total was not immediately available.

The stopgap spending bill would keep almost the entire government in business after existing legislation expires at midnight. The bill is necessary because except for its own operations, Congress has not yet approved any of the regular money bills for fiscal 1982, which began Oct. 1.

Baker's plan would exempt the Pentagon, revenue sharing to the states, the judiciary and benefit programs such as food stamps and Medicare from the newest round of spending reductions.

The plan, which was agreed to on a 62-35 vote at 4:29 a.m. EST, specifies that no individual program may be reduced by more than 5 percent and gives the president flexibility in determining how reductions will be applied.

Some senators said giving Reagan this authority was an abdication of legislative responsibity.

"It appears that just a threat from the president down the avenue is enough to make us toe the mark," said Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio.

Reagan's rating 'recessing'

NEW YORK (AP) — President Reagan's job ratings in the Associated Press-NBC News poll continue to decline as the nation's economy settles into recession.

Forty-six percent of the 1,602 respondents telephoned in a nationwide random sampling Monday and Tuesday said they think Reagan is doing a good or excellent job as president.

Thirty-five percent said he is doing only a fair job, 16 percent said a poor job, and 3 percent were not sure.

This month's 46 percent good or excellent response was the lowest approval rating for Reagan since he became president, down from the previous low of 51 percent last month and the high of 66 percent in April when he was recovering from an assassination attempt.

The pattern of declining popularity for Reagan during his first year in office parallels the drop in approval ratings in 1977 for former President Jimmy Carter, who received a 43 percent good or excellent response in an NBC News poll during his 10th month in office.

Reagan's marks for handling the nation's economy were also down this month. He received a 35 percent good or excellent rating for handling the economy, down from the previous low of 39 percent last month and the high of 52 percent in August.

Respondents' answers reflected the heightened recession which has led Reagan administration officials to predict declining inflation and interest rates but rising unemployment during the coming months.

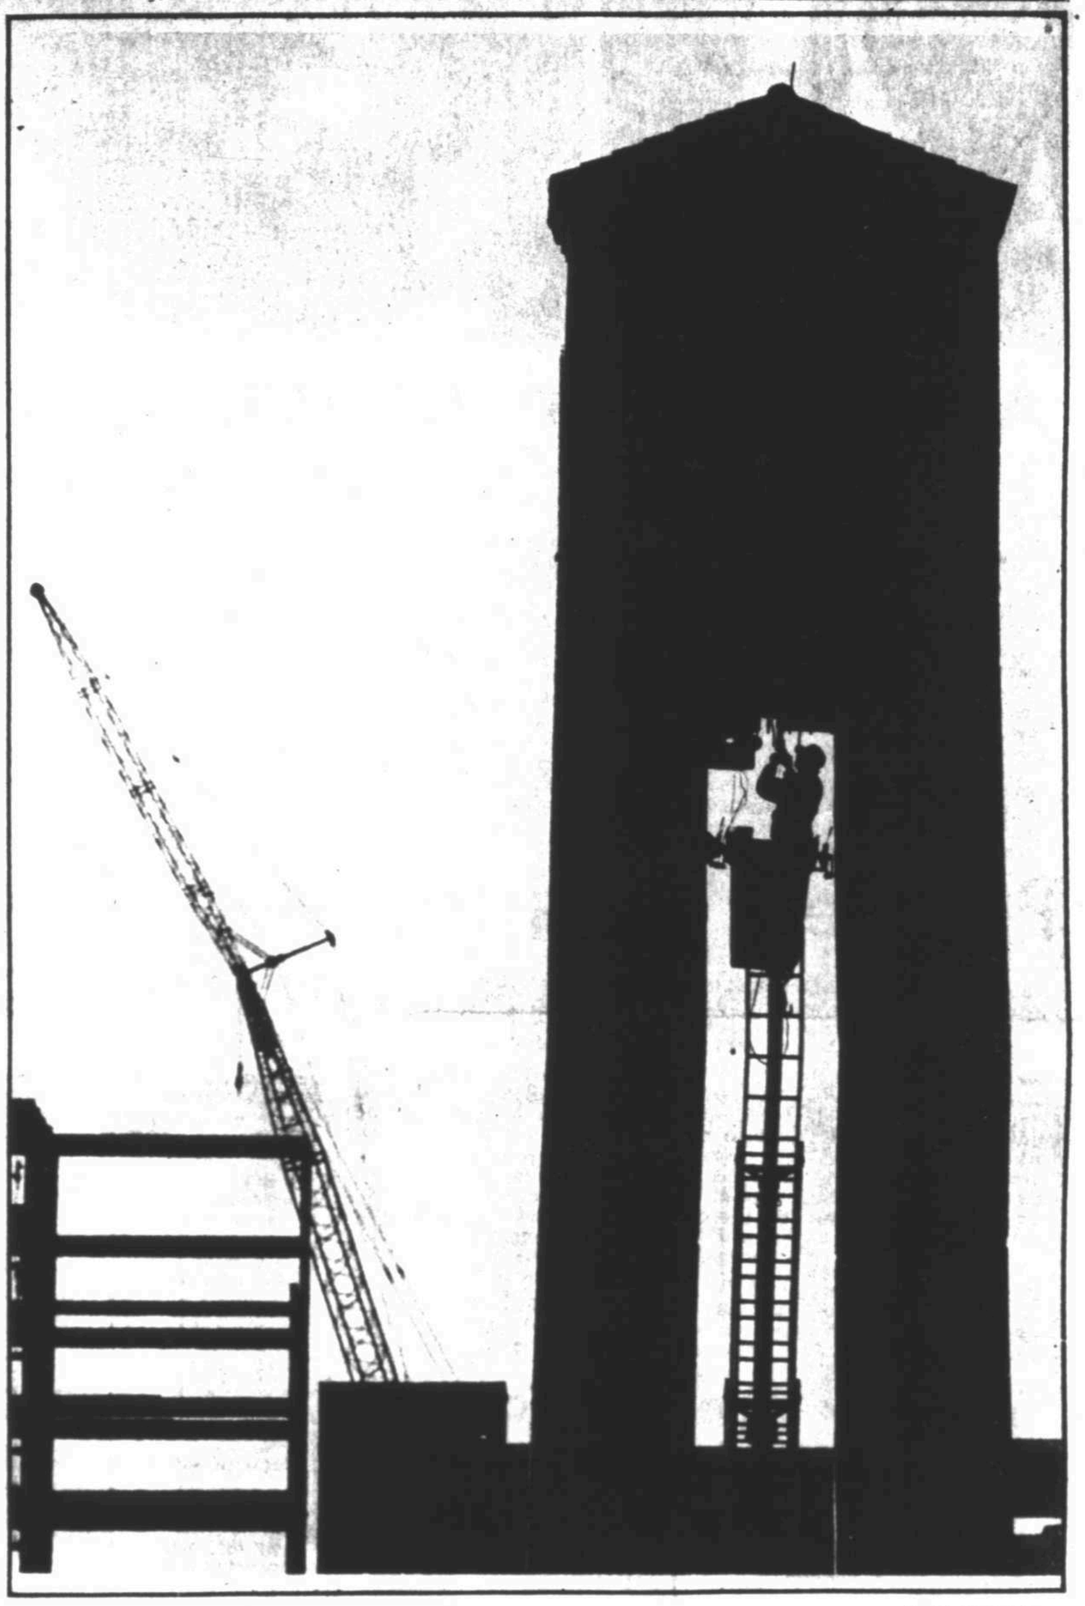

In August and September, poll respondents were more likely to say inflation rather than unemployment or interest rates is the most important economic problem for the government to help control.

But in the latest poll, 34 percent said high unemployment is the most important economic problem for the government to help control, while 32 percent said high inflation, 28 percent said high interest rates and 6 percent were not sure.

People who said unemployment was the most important problem were less likely than other respondents to give Reagan high marks for his performance in office.

Thirty percent of all respondents said they think their families are financially worse off today than they were a year ago, while 16 percent said they think they are better off. The rest either said they were about as well off or not sure.

In looking to the future, responses remained relatively consistent with last month's poll: 37 percent said they expect the economy to get worse in the next year, 27 percent said it will get better, 33 percent said it will stay about the same and 3 percent were not sure.

Odessa man dies in mishap

An Odessa banking official was killed in a two-vehicle traffic accident just west of Midland late Thursday night.

John Stanley Hodges, 58, a vice-president and personnel officer with the First National Bank of Odessa, was pronounced dead at the scene by Justice of the Peace Charlie Sprayberry.

According to the Department of Public Safety, Hodges was westbound on U.S. 80 in a GMC pickup truck when he ran into the rear of another westbound pickup driven by 51-year-old Joseph. R. Barr Jr. of Midland. There was no street address available on Barr, who was not injured.

The accident occurred about 11 p.m. in the inside lane of the highway. The DPS said it appeared the Barr vehicle was either stopped or going very slowly at the time. Hodges' body was taken to Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home. Arrangements are incomplete.

Parents file suit in gas line explosion

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The parents of Joe Gregg Dawson, a 20-year-old Midlander who was killed last Sept. 27 when a rat-hole drill bit struck a gas line and exploded, have filed a $1.4 million lawsuit in federal court in Midland against Jet Oil Co.

The suit, filed in behalf of the parents, Ernest and Rose Lee Dawson, apparently is the first of several suits expected to emerge from the multi-fatal mishap about 30 miles northeast of Stanton in Martin County.

The suit cites Jet for negligence.

Young Dawson and two others — Paul Hemphill, 32, and Willie Joe Waller, 41, both of Lamesa — were killed when their drill bit struck a shallow natural gas pipeline and the gas erupted.

A fourth man, Delmer Oller, 48, of Midland, working at the site, died later of burns.

The suit's petition says that Dawson was working for Harris Rat Hole Service, which had contracted with Jet Oil Co., to drill a rat hole at a drill site in prepartion for the drilling of an oil well by Jet Oil Co. of Tulsa, Okla.

"The location of the drill site had been selected by Jet Oil Company and...the site had been staked and prepared" for rat-holing by Harris Rat Hole Co. of Midland.

However, the petition says that the original drill-site location was changed by Jet and the new site turned out to be directly over a subsurface high-pressure gas pipeline.

"Without knowledge of the pipeline, the crew of workers at the site began to drill the 'rat hole' and in doing so, struck the gas pipeline, causing an explosion which killed Joe Gregg Dawson and three of his fellow workers," the petition says.

Representing the Dawson couple in the case are Midland attorneys Robert Freeman and John Hyde.

'Waltz Across Texas' filming finished 'in time to music'

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Hailing it as a "marvelous feat," Terry Jastrow, actor and instigator of "Waltz Across Texas," announced that the month spent filming the movie in Midland came to an end on Wednesday "right on schedule and right on budget."

In a press conference held Thursday in the Midland Chamber of Commerce, executive producer Martin Jurow cited the weather and the generosity of different area residents who provided private settings for much of the filming as being responsible for meeting the timing and budgeting schedule.

The film, which had a budget of over $2 million, would have cost "no less than $5 million" if it had been made by a major company in California, according to Jurow, who also produced "Breakfast at Tiffany's" and "The Pink Panther."

Jastrow, a Midland native, and his wife, actress Anne Archer, formed Astor Corporation to make films together. Though they have worked together on stage, "Waltz Across Texas" is their first team effort on film.

Jastrow, who began as producer-director for ABC Sports where he was nominated for 13 Emmys and won four, conceived the original idea for the movie and personally rounded up the investors, including several Midlanders.

He and Ms. Archer headed a cast that included Mary Kay Place of "Mary Hartman, Mary Hartman," Noah Beery of "Rockford Files," Josh Taylor of "Days of Our Lives" and Richard Farnsworth of "Comes A Horseman."

"I wish that every movie would allow me to have a cast like this," Jastrow said, adding that the "useful cast" represented a sure television market.

Jurow said that a healthy gross for the final film, which will probably be given a rating of PG (Parental Guidance), would be between $12-$15 million.

"It's a very interesting narrative," Jastrow explained. "People from age 8 to 80 would find it an interesting story."

Besides having the "oilmen, people and business for a background," which Jastrow said he thinks is one of the movie's elements for success, it is also a love story.

"When was the last time you saw a really good love story? We think there is a tremendous market out there for love stories," he said.

"Waltz Across Texas" will now enter the post-production stage in Los Angeles. Five companies have already contacted Jurow about distribution. The movie is expected to premiere in Midland in May and be in the theaters by late summer 1982. Jastrow said he would like to see the premiere centered around a charitable cause in Midland, but nothing definite has been scheduled.

According to a press release, almost 300 extras from the Midland area were used in the filming, which took place in a bank, several ranches, a private club, a restaurant and a country-western dance hall. MGF also allowed filming on one of its working rigs.

"Midland has been a perfect backdrop for filming," Jastrow was quoted in the release, "combining, as it does, the raw oilfield environment and the presence of the business side of the industry. Our company of filmmakers has been very pleased with Midland — the sites for filming, the presence of marvelous acting talent and the kind hospitality and generosity of its people."

When asked if he thought this would open the doors for more movies to be filmed in the Midland area, Jurow replied, "I don't see too many films with oil in the background.

"But I do anticipate more and more productions in Texas and some of that can be shared by Midland."

Administration explore new plan to free 'Siberian Seven'

By JAMES H. RUBIN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration is exploring a new approach toward winning freedom for seven fundamentalist Christians living in the U.S. Embassy in Moscow that also could enable 17 of their relatives to emigrate, a U.S. senator says.

The seven members of a fundamentalist Pentecostalist sect shoved their way past Soviet guards on June 27, 1978, and have been staying in a cramped basement room of the American Embassy for 3½ years.

The Pentecostalists, known as the "Siberian Seven," say their lives and freedom will be in jeopardy if they leave U.S. protection. But Soviet authorities have refused to consider allowing them to leave the country unless they first return to their home in the Siberian city of Chernogorsk.

Sen. Carl Levin, D-Mich., said Thursday that the United States is considering a novel approach to break the deadlock that involves convincing the Soviets to show good faith by allowing 17 relatives of the seven to emigrate. The 17 are living at home in Siberia.

Then, Levin said, the seven would voluntarily leave the embassy and return to Siberia in hopes that they, too, might be allowed to leave the Soviet Union.

Levin was overheard discussing the idea Thursday with Thomas W. Simons of the State Department. It was not clear from fragments of the conversation how far the idea has proceeded, and Simons declined to comment on the details publicly.

The development came to light outside a Senate Judicary subcommittee hearing room after Simons testified in opposition to a bill to make the "Siberian Seven" legal residents of the United States.

Simons said the bill might only harden Soviet resistance to letting them emigrate.

Levin, sponsor of the bill, accused the State Department of lacking compassion and being mainly interested in not "shaking the boat" and not disrupting U.S.-Soviet relations.

The seven are members of two families named Vashchenko and Chmykhalov. They say they are not being allowed to practice their religion free of interference from the Soviet state and want to be allowed to come to this country.

Levin's bill would grant them status as residents in the United States, although they are still on Russian soil. He said the intent is to guarantee the families that they can remain in the embassy indefinitely.

But more critically, he said, it could put pressure on the Russians to permit them to emigrate.

"As a diplomatic mission, we have been inhumane and uncaring when faced with the reality of what these individual members of the Vaschchenko Chmykhalov families have had to endure," Levin said.

Sixty-five senators have co-sponsored Levin's bill, including Sen. Roger W. Jepsen, R-Iowa, who testified Thursday.

While avoiding direct criticism of President Reagan, Levin and Jepsen both recited a 1979 radio commentary given by Reagan.

"In 1979," said Levin, "Ronald Reagan asked a simple question. He said then that 'our wheat and technology can get into Russia. Why can't the Vashchenko and Chmykhalov families get out?'"

Simons said the problem was an extraordinarily complex one, and he refused to describe any details of negotiations to free the Siberian Seven.

Sen. Alan K. Simpson, R-Wyo., the subcommittee chairman, said he may hold a closed hearing to learn the details.

President pulls the plug on video games

By DAVID BRISCOE
Associated Press Writer

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — The Philippines pulled the plug today on Space Invaders, Asteroids and thousands of other video games to stop the "devilish contraptions" from corrupting the morals of the young.

President Ferdinand E. Marcos ordered the estimated 3,000 coin-operated games dismantled, destroyed or surrendered to the military within 15 days. Failure to do so could net operators a $620 fine and up to 12 years in prison.

The presidential crackdown Thursday came in response to a letter from civic groups that called the machines "devilish contractions (that) wreak havoc on the morals and discipline of our youth."

"My God, it's the computer age," an unidentified teen-ager was quoted as saying by Manila's Daily Express newspaper. "What do parents expect us to do? Play cops and robbers?"

At Harrison Plaza shopping mall, the usual din of more than 100 screeching, buzzing and beeping machines was silenced today, and crews were removing rows of Space Invaders, computerized shooting galleries and a variety of table-top screens.

But youngsters continued to gather around isolated machines in backstreet stores where sophisticated video games provided a one-peso (about 12 cents) space-age diversion from the surrounding poverty.

"It makes you feel that you're Buck Rogers, Luke Skywalker and Flash Gordon all rolled into one," 13-year-old Monchit Cruz, summing up the national obsession with the games, told the Daily Express.

"The president's action came as a surprise," said Claro Carlos, supervisor of the Harrison Plaza machines. He said operators had expected some kind of regulations to keep the machines, valued at up to $2,000 each, away from schools but not a total ban.

Carlos estimated about 20 operators have installed more than 3,000 video machines in the Philippines but customs sources said there could be many more.

He said some operators plan to store the machines while making an appeal either directly to Marcos or to the Supreme Court.

Newspaper editorials praised the president's action. The Times Journal called video game centers "breeding grounds for petty corruption which, if left unchecked, could eventually engulf a schoolboy and make him a liability to society."

Marcos banned pinball and slot machines in 1974 under martial law decrees that are still in effect. Although he lifted martial law in January, Marcos retains the power to enforce the decrees without legislative approval.

Solidarity urges creation of supervisory council

By W. JOSEPH CAMPBELL
Associated Press Writer

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Getting down to concrete proposals in its talks with the government, the Solidarity labor federation urged creation of an independent council of experts to supervise the overhaul of Poland's debt-ridden economy.

"It would consist of individuals representing a high degree of expertise and of impeccable honesty who would be willing to drag this country out of economic chaos," said union spokesman Marek Brunne.

While not rejecting the proposal at the meeting Thursday, the government said it believes "conditions already exist for a wide-ranging consultation on all important existing economic conditions," the official PAP news agency said.

The Communist government and the 9.5 million-member union opened discussions on Solidarity's role in rehabilitation of an economy beset by years of mismanagement and faulty planning, acute shortages of food, raw materials and machinery, falling production, strikes and a $27-billion debt to Western banks and governments.

PAP said the talks were held in a "calm, matter-of-fact atmosphere"

But Brunne told The Associated Press "official propaganda is destroying hope" for the negotiations. He accused the government of "drumming up charges to the effect that there is social tension all over the country."

"The truth is...there is peace," Brunne said. "The most crucial element of these talks is that they have begun against the backdrop of social peace and quiet for the first time since August 1980," when a national strike wave led to creation of the independent union.

Seeking to insure continuing calm, the union's presidium, or inner cabinet, called on the workers to show "maximum internal discipline." It warned them they might be "exposed to festering propaganda and provocations, intended to involve factory crews in strikes, only to prove that the union does not control the situation and is responsible for economic losses."

Poland's strike situation has dwindled to a handful of isolated protests, down sharply from a month ago when wildcat job actions idled upwards of 250,000 workers.

Zirconium shipment to Pakistan under investigation

NEW YORK (AP) — A foiled attempt to ship to Pakistan a key metal used in construction of nuclear reactors has set off an investigation by federal authorities, it was reported today.

The shipment of the metal, 5,000 pounds of zirconium worth about $153,000, was seized on a Pakistan Airlines jet Oct. 31 at Kennedy International Airport here, The New York Times reported.

The shipment did not have the necessary export license from the Commerce Department, and the exporter, Albert A. Goldberg of the National Tronics Co. of New York City, never applied for one, according to the Times.

The United States prohibits shipment of zirconium to foreign countries without a license because of its potential use in nuclear reactors.

Had Goldberg applied, the request almost certainly would have been denied because Pakistan is ineligible to receive zirconium from the United States, the Times quoted Sharon R. Connelly, head of the compliance division of the Commerce Department's Office of Export Administration.

There has been growing speculation that Pakistan is secretly trying to develop nuclear weapons.

The Commerce Department, the Customs Service and the U.S. Attorney for the Eastern District of New York are examining the roles of Goldberg and the buyer, identified by Goldberg as a retired Pakistani army colonel who is a friend of Pakistani President Mohammad Zia ul-Haq, the Times said.

The newspaper quoted Goldberg, who said he had been questioned under oath, as saying he had not applied for an export license for the zirconium because he did not know it was a controlled commodity.

The newspaper reported that investigators said they were questioning Pakistan Airlines employees because the metal was checked as baggage, which they said was unusual.

Only one cost-cutter effective

BOSTON (AP) — Of the three major strategies used by the government to hold down medical costs, only the practice of telling hospitals in advance how much they can charge actually results in significant savings, a study shows.

However, it says the savings result in worse care and social tensions.

Dr. William B. Schwartz, who conducted the survey, said the method that works is called mandatory prospective reimbursement. It either limits the total amount of money a hospital can take in each year or sets rates for specific services.

Schwartz says this program is used in eight states, and it cuts the growth rate of hospital expenditures by 3 to 5 percentage points.

However, he added, "any regulatory process that markedly restrains expenditures can ultimately be expected to affect patient care adversely and to create social and political tension within the health care system."

Schwartz is a researcher at Tufts University School of Medicine. His report was published in today's New England Journal of Medicine.

Schwartz said the professional standards review organization program, which is intended to reduce the length of stay in hospitals, has resulted in savings of about $20 million a year. This is one-tenth of 1 percent of Medicare costs.

And he said the certificate of need program, which requires hospitals to get approval for expensive projects, probably costs more than it saves.

In New York, where hospital spending is controlled, the state's hospitals are more than $265 million in arrears, he said. Morale is low, nurses are in critically short supply and equipment is scarce.

Winter's on its way for Midland

Autumn is just about to stall out, as wintery cold weather starts its annual take-off in the Permian Basin.

Tonight's cold will be gauged in the mid-30s but will seem somewhat colder with 5-10 mph winds.

The high Saturday will be in the upper 60s, according to a weatherman at the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

Winds Saturday are to be southerly to southwesterly at 10 to 15 mph.

Thursday's high was 62 degrees, which was far afield from the record high of 83 degrees for the date in 1950.

The overnight low of 30 degrees was within seven notches of tying the record low of 23 degrees for the date in 1937.

City sales tax ahead of last year

AUSTIN — Midland's sales tax rebates are running 46 percent ahead of last year's, according to the latest figures released by the office of State Comptroller Bob Bullock.

The November check for Midland is for $1,313,884.32, which is about $363,000 above the payment made a year ago of $950,443.05.

Payments for the year to date total $8,353,129.39 as compared to the $5,715,711.02 paid up to this point last year.

Odessa, meanwhile, runs slightly ahead of Midland in the payments, receiving $1,395,711.38 this month. Last year in November the city received $988,367.08. Payments for that city tally $8,469,523.79. This is 33.86 percent above the total last year of $6,327,339.99.

The optional 1 percent city sales tax is collected along with the state 4 percent sales tax by merchants and businesses. It is rebated each month by the comptroller to the cities where it is levied.

For November, Midland and Odessa ranked among the top 13 cities receiving the most in rebates.

Midland man in critical condition

ODESSA — A Midland businessman is in critical condition at an Odessa hospital today, following a shooting incident there early this morning.

According to Odessa police, William J. Harvey, 46, owner of the Midland Radiator Wrecker and Salvage Co., 2703 W. Francis Ave., was shot in the right cheek about 12:30 a.m. outside the El Que Que Club on West Clements Street in Odessa.

Police said they arrived on the scene and found Harvey lying in the parking lot of the club. A witness told them Harvey had been standing at the bar with another person and there did not appear to be any trouble between them. Just after the pair left, however, a shot was heard and police were called.

Harvey had been shot once with a medium caliber weapon. The bullet lodged in his upper neck. He was taken to Medical Center Hospital, where he was listed in critical condition this morning in the intensive care unit. An investigation is continuing.

White House says it made mistakes

By MAUREEN SANTINI
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's chief spokesman is acknowledging that the White House has made mistakes about the investigation of national security adviser Richard V. Allen but says the matter has been handled in an "appropriate and proper manner."

Nevertheless, White HOuse communications director David R. Gergen said Thursday, the full story won't be told until the Justice Department completes its investigation into Allen's receipt of $1,000 from two Japanese journalists who interviewed first lady Nancy Reagan last Jan. 21. Allen helped arrange the session.

JUSTICE OFFICIALS HAVE said they hope to end the probe quickly, and sources said Thursday that department lawyers believe Allen committed no crime when he took the cash, put it in his safe and forgot about it for eight months.

Attorney General William French Smith will decide whether there is enough evidence to appoint a special prosecutor.

Even as Gergen was acknowledging mistakes in public pronouncements on the matter, the White House issued another written clarification. It said that, contrary to previous statements, Allen participated in a White House meeting last March on restricting Japanese auto imports.

That statement came a day after deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said Allen had disqualified himself from all consideration of the auto import question because of his previous business dealings with the Japanese.

The New York Times reported today, meanwhile, that unidentified senior White House aides, concerned that they do not have full information about Allen's activities, have ordered him to review his office records on contacts with Japanese businessmen.

Administration officials said the White House did not know if the Justice Department also was looking into the contacts, the newspaper said, adding that the president's three top advisers began their own inquiry because of worry about damage to Reagan's reputation.

SOME TOP WHITE HOUSE aides "are pursuing the question of the extent that he met with Japanese businessmen during the time the auto import question was before" the administration, the official told the Times.

Gergen insisted that the White House has tried "to be straightforward about this" and added: "It is our view that this matter has been and continues to be handled by White House authorities in an appropriate and proper manner."

The Japanese journalists, representing the magazine Shufu no Pomo — Housewife's Friend — say they intended the money for Mrs. Reagan as an honorarium. Allen says he intercepted it to avoid embarrassing the first lady.

Gergen said the White House mistakes were made because aides were trying to answer reporters' questions quickly.

"We attempted to deal with that story as rapidly as we could," he said. "We made a couple mistakes along the way in trying to get the information out. We have tried as honestly as we can to correct that record."

When reporters asked Gergen, the main source of public information on the subject, whether he was given all the facts by top White House aides, he replied:

"I think I have a reasonable amount of information. There have been times when I've gone back and asked for more information."

Some of the inmates shown above had been brought here from other towns and cities in the area recently to provide a central location for the pickup. The jail has a current capicity of about 89 inmates. When renovation work is completed, it will be able to accommodate about 104 prisoners.

Former CIA agent for Ugandan deal

NEW YORK (AP) — Fugitive former CIA agent Frank Terpil and an associate conspired to funnel $135,000 worth of guns, ammunition and coding devices to Idi Amin in 1979 via the Ugandan mission to the United Nations, a federal indictment charges.

Terpil and George G. Korkala were indicted by a federal grand jury Thursday on charges of conspiring to transport arms to Uganda. In addition, both men and Terpil's wife, Marilyn, also were charged with conspiring to obtain false travel documents for an Iranian official in the government of the Shah of Iran.

In 1980, Terpil and Korkala jumped $100,000 bail rather than stand trial in New York state on charges of conspiring to sell machine guns to undercover agents posing as South American revolutionaries. Tried in absentia, they were convicted last May and each sentenced to 17 years, 8 months to 56 years.

Thursday's indictment said Terpil and Korkala received orders for the arms from diplomats at the Ugandan Mission to the United Nations and delivered them to the mission in spring of 1979.

The men allegedly delivered shotguns, handguns, silencers, high-velocity ammunition and devices known as "exercise twisters" to the Ugandan diplomats. The "exercise twisters," while not further identified, were believed to have been used as torture devices.

Terpil formerly controlled a company called Oceanic International Corp. of Washington, D.C., and Korkala operated an electronics concern called Amstech International Ltd. of Nutley, N.J., the indictment said.

The men used their corporations in their gun-running schemes and delivered lead-lined, X-ray-proof packing sheets which the Ugandan mission's staff used to ship of the arms by air to Africa under diplomatic seal, the indictment said.

In addition to conspiracy, the indictment relating to arms also carried charges against Korkala of unlawfully dealing in firearms and ammunition, aiding and abetting others who dealt in illegal shipment of firearms and transporting arms to other unlicensed people.

Assistant U.S. Attorney Raymond Levites said Korkala's firm was not registered to export arms and that the firms of both men were not licensed for the shipments.

The former Iranian official was not identified in the indictment, but The New York Times, quoting unidentified sources in the Manhattan United States Attorney's office, said he was Amir Farhang Momtaz, chief of protocol in Iran before the Islamic revolution.

Momtaz was arrested in Washington last year on charges he used false documents when applying for a United States passport. The charges were dropped in September, the Times said.

If the Terpils and Korkala are tried on the charges, it is expected that Momtaz would testify against them, the source told the Times.

Terpil's wife, Marilyn, allegedly posed as the Iranian's daughter and helped him sumbit a false passport and drivers license to obtain a U.S. passport. The indictment charged Mrs. Terpil with conspiring to file false statements.

Terpil and Korkala were interviewed from Beirut earlier this month on the CBS program "60 Minutes." They said they fled the United States before trial because Korkala's lawyer got a message from an FBI agent saying they "would not be alive long if they were to testify."

On Nov. 10, two days after the "60 Minutes" report aired, CBS reported that the two men had been abducted by Syrians.

Seven teens guilty in youths' deaths

By TRUDY TYNAN
Associated Press Writer

PITTSFIELD, Mass. (AP) — A jury's verdict that seven teen-age boys were guilty of involuntary manslaughter in the drowning of two youths from a rival high school "has renewed my faith," says the father of one of the victims.

Several of the young defendants broke down in tears after the jury announced its verdict Thursday night. The mothers of some of the youths were in tears too as they stood with their arms around their sons at the bar.

The bodies of the two victims, Richard Retzel Jr., 18, and Barry Griffin, 19, were found June 5 in the back seat of a white 1971 Cadillac pulled from the bottom of a lake bordering the two small towns of Lee and Lenox in the Berkshire Hills. Autopsies showed they had enough alcohol in their systems to be considered drunk.

Both victims were 1980 graduates of Lee High School. All seven defendants were June graduates of Lenox Memorial High School, an athletic rival of Lee.

The prosecution contended the youths drowned after the car, borrowed by a friend, rolled into the water about 1 a.m. during a melee at a boat ramp involving the two victims, another Lee youth and the seven from Lenox.

It took the jury eight hours to convict Peter Bianco, 17; Todd Terpak, Steven Piretti, Joseph Burke Jr., Mark Hinman and Robert Walker, all 18; and Bruce Kern, 19. They were released on their own recognizance for sentencing Dec. 4.

Each faces up to 20 years in prison on each of the two involuntary manslaughter counts.

The seven defendants also were convicted of one of two assault and battery charges they faced. The misdemeanor charge has a maximum 2½-year jail term.

"I'm just shocked. I can't believe it," said Andrew Campoli, who represented Walker, adding the verdict may be appealed. The rest of the 14 defense attorneys refused to comment.

"It's just fantastic," said Richard Retzel Sr., the father of one of the dead boys, his voice cracking and eyes filling with tears. "I have a different outlook on law and order since this happened. I had felt the way things were going there were too many people getting away with things.

"This will not bring the boys back. But this has renewed my faith," Retzel said, whispering, "May God bless Barry and Richard," before he ducked out of the courthouse door.

"These seven young men went down there to start a fight to get even for a beating the Lee boys had given their friends earlier in the evening," Assistant Berkshire County District Attorney Daniel A. Ford said in his closing argument. "They went looking for trouble and, by God, they found it."

After the verdict was announced, he said, "It's very difficult to say I'm happy because it's such a tragic situation, but it's fair to say that justice has been done."

Prison riot investigated

HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — Prison officials say an investigation is underway into what sparked a riot in which 400 to 500 inmates threw bottles, shattered windows and started fires in the Darrington prison for more than five hours.

Most of the nine convicts and four guards who were injured suffered cuts from flying glass. One guard, Sgt. Ariel J. Obregon, 29, was hospitalized for treatment of a severed tendon in his arm.

The disturbance began about 9 p.m. Wednesday and was brought under control at 2:30 a.m. Thursday, said Texas Department of Corrections spokesman Rick Hartley.

Several thousand dollars in damage was done by inmates, who burned mattresses and tents set up last summer to relieve overcrowding, Hartley said.

The Darrington Unit is a prison farm with a vocational school and a tire-recapping plant. It is in Brazoria County, five miles north of Rosharon.

Hartley said disciplinary action against the riot's ringleaders was pending.

He said the disturbance began with 21 inmates and spread quickly.

"The inmates were on the run on the second tier of the three-tiered cellblock. They refused to go back into their cells when the officers instructed them to," Hartley said. "They started shouting obscenities and making loud noises and that kind of chain-reacted to two to three other cellblocks."

Migraine, weather related?

Dear Dr. Solomon: Does weather have any effect on susceptibility to migraine headaches? I seem to suffer more with migraine when the weather turns bad, but my doctor feels there is nothing to this. Is there any evidence that migraine and weather are connected? — Pete, Oakland, Calif.

Dear Pete: Some people who suffer from migraine headaches do say they are more vulnerable to an attack when the barometric pressure is low. However, a six-month study of 44 patients by the Royal Infirmary in Edinburgh, Scotland, could not find an association between the two; in fact the researchers found that the patients had fewer attacks when the atmospheric pressure was low.

One explanation of these findings is that sunlight tends to trigger migraine headaches; and the cloudy weather that is often associated with low pressure may block the sun and, therefore, decrease the number of attacks.

Dear Dr. Solomon: You have mentioned a number of times that a decision for a coronary bypass operation is a very individual thing; it may be good for one person but not for another. But in trying to make that decision, I'd like to know the answers to two questions: Will an operation help relieve the discomfort I now feel as a result of angina? And will an operation help me feel good enough so that I could return to work. — Jeff, Boston

Dear Jeff: A National Institutes of Health (NIH) panel has reported that at least half of all patients who undergo coronary bypass surgery experience only temporary relief as a result. In addition, the possibility of a return to work is no more likely with the operation than if the patient had been treated only with drugs.

In spite of this NIH has endorsed bypass surgery on the grounds that the operation better enables patients to enjoy life, and is therefore worthwhile.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I'm not a female jock, but I do enjoy sports and I'd like to continue to be active during my pregnancy. Would exercise have any harmful effects on me or on the baby? — Pattie, Ft. Lauderdale, Fla.

Dear Pattie: Dr. Luis B. Curet, professor of obstetrics and gynecology at the University of Wisconsin Medical School, says that moderate aerobic exercise by pregnant women does not appear to have any adverse effects on the fetus. Moreover, it seems to have a beneficial effect on the mother.

These conclusions were reached after a study of 20 percent women, 12 of whom exercised during their pregnancies, while eight did not. Those who exercised rode stationary bicyles for 30 minutes, three times a week, for an average of 14 weeks. The exercise was found to have no adverse effects on the fetus. As for the mothers, they were judged to have increased their physical fitness significantly more than the women who did not participate in the exercises.

Allergy hormone, spasms related

By BRIAN SULLIVAN
AP Science Writer

DALLAS (AP) — Clogged arteries appear to be susceptible to spasms after exposure to histamine, a hormone that produces sneezing and itching in allergy attacks, scientists say.

Stanford University Medical Center researchers at the American Heart Association's scientific sessions presented studies Wednesday showing blood vessels that have become arteriosclerotic — clogged — are more susceptible to spasm than normal vessels.

Dr. Robert Ginsburg, Dr. Michael R. Bristow and others showed that arteriosclerotic arteries are supersensitive to histamine.

Spasm in a clogged artery increases the chances of a complete stoppage of blood flow, depriving part of the heart muscle of oxygen and producing angina, severe chest pain, or a heart attack.

The studies show that histamine may be involved because arteriosclerosis seems to increase the number of "histamine receptors" in the blood vessels. Receptors are substances that bind or link up chemically with other substances, in this case intercepting histamine molecules passing in the blood.

"The walls of arteries contain a layer of smooth-muscle cells that constrict and dilate the arteries to help regulate blood flow," Heart Association officials explained at the panel. "Spasm occurs if the constriction of that layer of muscle is excessive or occurs at the wrong time. There have been many different theories on the factors that initiate coronary spasm, but none has been proven."

Arteriosclerosis, sometimes called hardening of the arteries, is a clogging and narrowing of the arteries by deposits of cholesterol and fats that decrease the diameter of the vessel channel.

Dr. C. Richard Conti of the University of Florida School of Medicine, part of the panel of specialists in the field, said the cause of spasm may be a basic abnormality of the blood vessels and called for more studies in "basic physiology."

Ginsburg was able to use human coronary arteries because the world's most active heart transplant team is at Stanford. He used coronary arteries from about 50 diseased hearts removed from transplant recipients.

The Stanford team also reported on a spasm study using rabbits, in which the rabbits were fed a diet high in cholesterol. "It was identical to the cholesterol humans eat every day in fatty steaks and hamburgers," said Keith Lurie, a senior medical student who conducted the experiment with Bristow and Ginsburg.

The researchers analyzed the rabbits' arteries in the laboratory after eight weeks and found that the arteriosclerosis seemed to cause supersensitivity to contractions involving histamine because of an increase in histamine receptors.

Birth control campaign begun

...Even if it takes 'act of congress'

PARIS (AP) — The new Socialist government, keeping one of last spring's election promises, has launched a prime-time television campaign to reduce the "inequality of information" about birth control.

President Francois Mitterrand's Socialist government, in a hurry to implement other campaign promises, also said it will seek the power to enact urgent social measures by decree.

The birth control campaign kicked off this week with the showing of 30-second commercials produced by the Women's Rights Ministry.

Particular emphasis is placed on women 20 or younger, who account for one-third of the abortions in the country, and on rural and working class women, who traditionally have been slower to accept birth control, according to Yvette Roudy, minister of women's rights.

Studies show that 70 percent of all French people have sexual intercourse for the first time before the age of 18, but only 15 percent of women aged 16-18 use any form of contraceptives, she said.

The pill, the IUD and other forms of modern birth control only became legally available to the general public in 1967.

"Our message is simple," Mrs. Roudy told a news conference. "Information about contraception is a legitimate right, and today every woman must have the right to choose."

She said she also hopes the campaign will reduce the "inequality of information" about birth control.

The Roman Catholic Church, to which about 85 percent of France's 53 million people claim to belong, has not organized a campaign against the TV spots although it strongly opposes any form of birth control.

In addition to the commercials, which will be shown nightly during prime viewing hours through Dec. 9, the Women's Rights Ministry will distribute eight million brochures throughout the country detailing the services and the hours of the 1,413 government family planning centers, Mrs. Roudy said.

Regarding the need for rapid social change, the Cabinet approved a draft bill to be submitted to Parliament in response to the "expectations of the country in acting...to make the beneficial effects of the new polices felt as soon as possible," said presidential spokesman Pierre Bergeovoy.

The bill, which should have little trouble in the Socialist-dominated Parliament, will enable the government to bypass the legislature in reducing the legal work week, lowering the retirement age, instituting a fifth week of paid vacation and entering into special contracts with businesses to create new jobs.

Premier Pierre Mauroy, explaining the government's action, said it was a race against the clock to respond to the impatience of the French people. After six months under the Socialists, unemployment has gone over the 2-million mark, about 8 percent, and inflation continues to hover at a steady 14 percent.

More opposition to farm bill forecast

WASHINGTON (AP) — After more than two weeks of bargaining, congressional negotiators face stiff administration opposition to their proposed compromise on a four-year package of commodity price support programs.

Although House negotiators made major concessions in their version of the farm bill, William Lesher, the Agriculture Department's top economist, said Thursday that its chances for approval are slim.

"It comes back to the fact that every little bit helps, but nothing satisfies," says Rep. Thomas Foley, D-Wash., who has led the House contingent in insisting on more protection for farmers than President Reagan wants.

The House-Senate conference committee was going back to work today, with the Senate members hoping to find further spending cuts to satisfy administration objections. A prime target was the dairy program, which cost $2 billion over the last year and could cost as much again in fiscal 1982.

In putting the final touches on the proposed farm bill compromise late Thursday, the joint committee had slashed more than $5 billion from the $16.6 billion House-passed farm bill.

That brought the cost to $11.3 billion, still about $681 million more than the Senate bill that Reagan has endorsed.

Rep. Thomas Coleman, R-Mo., said that after forcing that much movement on the House's part, the administration "ought to declare victory and get out."

But Lesher said the compromise not only remains too expensive but also includes provisions that could push the four-year price tag even higher.

"I'm not going to say the president is going to veto the bill. The president will reserve that decision," Lesher told the committee. "All I'm saying is I think things look grim."

The president has indicated that he might veto any compromise farm bill that costs more than the Senate's version. But Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., has speculated that Reagan might accept a bill costing up to $500 million over that target.

Foley said that if a veto is the only alternative for the president, "he's got to exercise his responsibility."

Lesher said the administration endorsed only the cotton, soybean, sugar and peanut programs covered by the agreement.

Even the rice program, which by Lesher's own estimate will cost less than the Senate-passed plan, is unacceptable because of provisions that could prompt unanticipated costs if the government's assumptions about future production prove wrong.

The government, through loans, payments and purchases, supports commodity prices to give farmers minimal income protection so they'll continue to provide consumers with adequate supplies of food. Without price supports, food would be subject to substantial price and supply swings.

But in trying to reach agreement on a new support package, replacing the one that expired in September, Congress has been caught between the mandate to cut federal spending and producer demands for increased income protection at a time when farm income is at one of its lowest levels.

In addition to the veto threat, House members opposed to specific programs in the proposed compromise, especially sugar and peanuts, say they have the votes to defeat the farm bill in the House.

In disposing of the final area of dispute Thursday, the committee agreed to require the agriculture secretary to conduct random inspections in foreign slaughter houses to ensure that meat containing chemicals or compounds banned in the United States is not shipped to this country.

That plan was an alternative to one that would have barred importation of meat in which such chemicals or additives were ever used even if no trace of them could be found at slaughter.

Cesar Chaves, president of the United Farm Workers of America, joins fellow demonstrators Thursday outside Newark, N.J., city hall calling for a national boycott of Andy Boy brand broccoli and lettuce and Double-O brand lettuce. The UFW contends owners of the brands have refused to sign contracts with union workers.

Farmers switching to crops less dependent on market

UVALDE, Texas (AP) — South Texas farmers are cutting back the planting of vegetables for crops which do not require as much labor and do not depend on a fluctuating market to determine price.

Jose Pena of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service pointed to cabbage and guar as good examples in this shift.

Guar is a warm season legume used to produce such diverse products as drilling mud, pharmaceuticals and ice cream.

"About 80,000 acres of guar were planted in South Texas during 1981, compared to approximately 19,000 acres last year," Pena said. "Such low input crops generate less cash, but they require less capital and labor, and farmers feel they can reduce this risk during inflation-prone times.

"Costs of production have increased over 30 percent during the last two years, yet the price of the output products have generally remained at 1975 prices.

On the other hand, Texas has an over-abundant cabbage crop this year and the price has dipped to as low as $2.50 for a 50-pound bag in November. It costs $1.75 to $2 a bag to harvest the crop in the Winter Garden area here.

Texans have bountiful food crop for which to give thanks, Brown says

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Texans have plenty to be thankful for on Thanksgiving — an abundance of food, State Agriculture Commissioner Reagan Brown said Thursday.

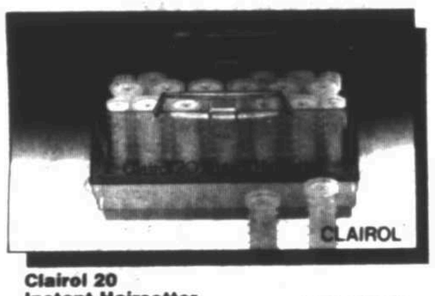

Brown called to say the "availability of turkeys for Thanksgiving and Christmas is the most bountiful in a long time."

He said turkeys would sell for 49 cents to 59 cents a pound — "a very, very fine price."

He's small-town in the big time

By EILEEN PUTMAN
Associated Press Writer

NEW CITY, N.Y. (AP) — A small-town prosecutor with big-time ambitions, Kenneth Gribetz is preparing to try the biggest case of his career.

But although last month's $1.6 million Brink's armored car robbery that left three people dead has grabbed national attention because of its daily twists involving '60s radical groups, the Rockland County district attorney says it's nothing special.

"I'm going to try it like a murder-robbery and not an international conspiracy," Gribetz said. "The penal law says 'thou shalt not kill.' It does not say 'thou shalt not be a Weatherman.'"

On Thursday, a Rockland County grand jury indicted seven people on murder and robbery charges stemming from the bloody Oct. 20 holdup. Three of those indicted were identified by authorities as members of the Weather Underground, a militant group that grew out of the Students for a Democratic Society.

Handsome and trim, Gribetz, 37, is of the same generation as those charged in the case, but the comparison ends there.

An American flag flanks a massive wooden desk in his office. Phi Beta Kappa certificates, diplomas, letters of praise and pictures of Gribetz with politicians adorn the walls. He wears three-piece suits and uses the word "control" a lot.

"I'm calling my own shots," he said. "I just like things done my way."

When two Nyack policemen and a Brink's guard were killed in the holdup, Gribetz was prosecuting another murder case. It appeared the case would keep him out of a story that was drawing headlines.

But reporters at preliminary court appearances for the Brink's suspects noticed that Gribetz's other murder trial seemed to recess in time for him to appear for the Brink's proceedings.

"Some of it just fell that way. In others, it was intentional," Gribetz admitted.

He acknowledges his political ambitions with a blunt, "There's no two ways about it.

"If there's an opportunity that develops and it's something to my liking, fine. If there isn't, there isn't," he said.

In 1972, four years out of New York University law school, Gribetz joined the Rockland district attorney's office "with a desire to be district attorney."

His successful prosecution of several homicides put his name in the newspapers and before the voters. In 1974, the Democrat was elected to the $53,550-a-year job, the highest post in this suburban and rural county. He has been re-elected twice without opposition.

Gribetz, who is married with three children, has lived here for most of his life.

His courtroom style is agressive. During a recent trial, Gribetz asked one defense witness in front of the jury how much the defendant's mother was paying him to testify. He then had the witness arrested on a family court warrant during a recess, prompting another defense witness to flee.

The witness later returned to become what Gribetz called "one of the best prosecution witnesses." He denied the arrest tactic was meant to intimidate.

The agressiveness also extends outside the courtroom, where he has been known to come down hard on staffers.

"It's just that I get emotionally involved in what I'm doing," he said. "There's no hard feelings. I don't yell at people or abuse them."

Black Liberation Army involved in Brink's

NEW CITY, N.Y. (AP) — Two fugitive members of the radical Black Liberation Army are among seven people indicted on robbery and murder charges in last month's bloody Brink's armored car holdup, authorities said.

A security guard and two Nyack police officers were slain in the $1.6 million robbery and shootout on Oct. 20. Five defendants named in the 13-count indictment, handed up Thursday, are in custody.

Rockland County District Attorney Kenneth Gribetz also said that "additional evidence may be forthcoming to lead to further indictments." He said at least six others were being investigated in connection with the holdup.

The defendants named Thursday are former Weather Underground members Katherine Boudin, Judith Clark and David Gilbert; BLA member Nathaniel Burns; and Samuel Brown, who has a long criminal record, but no known political connections.

All five defendants in custody except Burns were arrested within an hour of the shooting. Burns was arrested three days later following a gun battle with police in the New York City borough of Queens in which a companion, Samuel Smith, was slain. Gribetz said that had Smith lived, he also would have been indicted.

Gribetz said he could not legally identify the the two other defendants, but acknowledged that warrants have been issued for Marilyn Jean Buck and Anthony Laborde.

Ms. Buck is a convicted BLA gunrunner and is believed to be the group's only white member. Laborde is a BLA member wanted in last April's slaying of a police officer in Queens, according to sources who asked not to be identified.

Laborde also is suspected in the 1979 prison escape of BLA leader Joanne Chesimard. Gribetz said he had no evidence "at the present time" to link her to the robbery.

Gribetz said that two others, William Johnson and Donald Weems, were under investigation in connection with the Brink's job. Both have been linked to the BLA, and Johnson is the common-law husband of Cynthia Boston, who was arrested in Mississippi in connection with the case but was released when the charges against her were dropped.

Each of the seven defendants was indicted on three counts of second-degree murder, six counts of first-degree robbery, one count of second-degree robbery, one count of first-degree assault, one count of second-degree assault and one count of second-degree grand larceny.

The maximum term for a second-degree murder conviction is 25 years to life.

Although killing a police officer in New York state is a first-degree murder charge technically punishable by death, Gribetz said he pursued the second-degree charges rather than risk having the indictment overturned on appeal. First-degree murder had been ruled invalid by the courts in New York and "the death penalty has been struck down," he said.

The five defendants will be arraigned in two groups, on Monday and Tuesday, for security purposes. Burns is recovering from severe wounds and probably will not be arraigned with the others, Gribetz said. The trial probably will be held in February, he added.

Ms. Clark, meanwhile, has asked for court permission for an abortion, said Rockland County lawyer Marc Parris. She is in her first trimester of pregnancy and has agreed to pay for the abortion.

In a separate action, Ms. Clark, 31, also has filed a federal court suit asking for "contact visits" with her infant daughter.

She is being held at the federal Metropolitan Correction Center in Manhattan along with Ms. Boudin, 38.

Prisoners from that federal facility routinely are treated at nearby Bellevue Hospital, but Parris would not confirm that Ms. Clark would undergo the operation there.

Family still fighting nation's 'incomprehensible killer'

By GAYLORD SHAW
Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — On a summer day in 1980, Tom Sexton sat in a southern Maryland courtroom and watched as defendants in criminal cases were called before the judge.

The first man was accused of car theft. Two years in jail, the judge said.

Then came the case of David William Watkins Jr., the man accused of killing Sexton's 15-year-old son, Tommie.

A month earlier, Tommie Sexton and two friends were returning from a fishing trip when Watkins' car swerved across the center line and smashed into theirs. Young Sexton was killed and his friends injured. Watkins was unhurt, and on this day he pleaded guilty to homicide by motor vehicle while intoxicated. The judge placed him on two years' probation and fined him $200.

Tom Sexton and his wife were stunned. A car thief gets two years in jail; the man who killed their son pays a $200 fine and goes free.

Today, they still grope for words to express their anger. It is "totally incomprehensible," Dot Sexton said, that "our son died as the result of a senseless crime and the criminal is not punished.

"The courts seem to place a much higher priority on a loss of personal property than they do on the loss of human life when it comes to drunk driving cases," she said.

"You feel a lot of outrage when something like this happens," Tom Sexton added. "You wish there was some way you could strike back."

NOW THE SEXTONS — and thousands of others whose lives have been scarred by drunk drivers — are striking back. They have become part of a snowballing citizens' movement, stretching from California to Maine, which is demanding — and, in some instances, getting — comprehensive action to curb drunk driving and the frightening toll it causes.

Every 23 minutes, someone in the United States is killed in an accident involving a drunk driver. The 26,000 deaths each year amount to half of all traffic fatalities, and drunk driving crashes kill more persons under age 34 than cancer, heart attacks or any other single cause. More than 1 million others are injured or crippled each year and annual economic costs exceed $5 billion.

On a typical Saturday night, studies have found, one out of every 10 drivers is drunk. But of every 2,000 drunk drivers, only one is arrested. And stiff punishment is meted out in only a fraction of the cases.

Armed with statistics like those and countless tales of personal tragedy and lax justice, citizens' groups have descended on city halls, court houses, state capitols, Congress and the White House with their demands for action.

"They're mad as hell, and they're saying, 'We don't have to take this any more,' " said John Moulden, a research psychologist with the National Highway Transportation Safety Administration who has helped coordinate the federal government's alcohol and highway safety programs for nine years.

They have already scored some successes.

CALIFORNIA RECENTLY adopted tougher drunk driving laws, as did Maine, Maryland, New York and Connecticut. A dozen other states are considering tightening their laws and task forces on drunk driving are springing up from Arizona to Pennsylvania.

More than 60 members of Congress are co-sponsoring federal legislation to mandate stiffer punishment, especially for repeat offenders. And 20 senators and 130 House members have signed a letter urging President Reagan to form a blue-ribbon presidential commission "to develop a realistic national master plan to curtail the tragic suffering caused by the drinking driver epidemic."

The administration has not taken a position on the request for such a commission, but the president may soon find himself under the same type of citizen pressure that persuaded California Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. last year to form a governor's task force on drunk driving.

Mothers Against Drunk Driving led the campaign for the California task force and now has collected 150,000 signatures on a petition to Reagan urging formation of the national group.

"Drunk drivers kill more people in the United States than murderers ... yet we can't get a national commission on how to deal with this problem," said Candy Lightner, who founded MADD 18 months ago after her 13-year-old daughter was struck and killed by a fifth-offender drunk driver while the girl was walking in a bicycle lane.

From a single chapter in California, MADD now has grown to 32 chapters in eight states and plans to form chapters in every state.

A SIMILAR ORGANIZATION, Remove Intoxicated Drivers, was formed three years ago in New York by Doris Aiken after two neighborhood children were killed by a drunk driver. It has grown to 29 chapters in eight states and, Aiken said, "New chapters are emerging in 200 cities."

MADD and RID recently received grants totaling more than $100,000 from the National Highway Transportation Safety Administration, and Lightner said the money would be used to promote local efforts across the nation.

"Our goal is to teach every community how to fight the problem, to form local citizen action groups...to pressure the system," she said.

Indeed, there is ample evidence of lax enforcement of drunk driving laws.

When Newsday, the Long Island newspaper, did a computer study of court records in two New York counties, it found that a person arrested for drunk driving the first time enjoyed nearly 20-1 odds that he would not be convicted; that a driver caught for a second, third, or even fourth time enjoyed odds of 4 to 10 that he would be spared a jail term, and that a driver who killed someone while driving drunk had a better than 4-in-10 chance of avoiding prison.

THROUGHOUT THE UNITED STATES, plea bargaining on drunk driving charges is commonplace. But, authorities agree, more than new laws are needed. Almost without exception, they say that a change in public attitudes is essential.

When the General Accounting Office, the investigative arm of Congress, conducted a nationwide study two years ago, it concluded that "society's general acceptance of drinking and driving is the main obstacle to solving the drinking-driving problem.

"Before any significant reduction in alcohol-related traffic accidents will occur," the GAO said, "a long-term, continuous educational commitment must be made. Governments, educational institutions and the general public need to work together to change attitudes about drinking and driving."

Moulden, the federal coordinator, agrees. "Drunk driving is the most socially accepted violent crime we have," he said. Because they themselves are likely to drink — statistics show that only one-third of the adult population abstains from alcohol — too many prosecutors, judges and jurors are too tolerant, he said. "When they see a drunk driver, sometimes they tend to see themselves and take the view that, 'But for the grace of God, there go I.' "

"That's one of the problems we have on this issue...we have to do a lot of educating," Moulden said.

IN MOST STATES a person is considered too drunk to drive if his blood alcohol level is 0.1 percent (one-tenth of 1 percent).

Senator says government delaying Agent Orange probe

By MIKE FEINSILBER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A senator says the government is stalling its investigation of whether Agent Orange harmed servicemen in Vietnam because it fears the cost of potential damages.

"We would be looking at hundreds of millions of dollars per year, going into the middle of the next century," said Robert Nimmo, head of the Veterans Administration, in response to a question by Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa.

Nimmo's comment at a Senate Veterans Affairs Committee hearing Wednesday marks the first time any high official had put even a ballpark figure on the cost of compensating veterans suffering from ailments they blame on the herbicide. During the war, 12 million gallons of Agent Orange were sprayed to kill crops and clear jungles.

More than 10,500 veterans have filed for disability payments, claiming that exposure to Agent Orange left them with severe health problmes, but the VA has not honored any claims.

THE AGENCY SAYS it cannot acknowledge a link between Agent Orange and any health disorders until research establishes one.

Specter told Nimmo that he suspected the high potential cost of compensation is "a major inhibiting factor" in reaching a conclusion about the health effects of exposure. He urged a speedup in a scientific study to settle the issue.

Later, Specter was asked by a reporter if he thought the government was taking a go-slow approach because if feared the cost would be enormous if compensation had to be paid.

"I think we are," he said. "I think that's a big ingredient."

MEANWHILE, Nimmo reported a further delay in getting a start on the government's principle research project. He disclosed that the VA had rejected a proposed design for the study and gave the designers 35 days to revise it.

The design, prepared by the University of California at Los Angeles under a $114,288 VA contract, outlines how to compare the health of a large sample group of Vietnam veterans with those who did not serve there.

Roger Detels, dean of public health at UCLA, said the study would be hard to conduct because of the difficulty in determining which men may have been exposed to the herbicide.

Detels said the UCLA researchers were inhibited by a months-long delay in getting security clearances needed to examine old military recods.

Scientific panels that reviewed the design criticized it for proposing to conceal from examined veterans whether they had been exposed and whether they had any symptoms being looked for. Detels said secrecy was necessary to prevent veterans from reporting ailments they do not suffer.

So far, research into the effects of exposure is inconclusive.

Veterans have blamed herbicides for birth defects in their children and a wide variety of ailments — cancers, liver and kidney disorders, tingling in their fingers, nerve and skin disorders, numbness, vision and hearing impairments, fatigue, miscarriages by their wives, reduced sexual drive and impotence.

"Vietnam veterans have every right to question what actions are being taken on their behalf and 'where are we going next?'" Nimmo said. "I am determined to set this agency on the path which will lead us to a scientific resolution."

Independent Djibouti holds key to peace

By EDITH M. LEDERER
Associated Press Writer

DJIBOUTI (AP) — Since the French Tricolor was lowered after 115 years in 1977, Djibouti has successfully managed to maintain a delicate balance between its hostile neighbors — pro-Soviet Ethiopia and pro-American Somalia.

President Hassan Gouled Aptidon has committed his desert nation to neutrality in the superpower rivalry on the strategic Horn of Africa and is trying to turn Djibouti into an enclave open to trade from all nations.

The government has kept 4,000 French troops, including 1,000 Foreign Legionnaires, to defend the country against any aggression from Somalia and Ethiopia. Both neighbors recognize Djibouti's independence but have previously made territorial claims to its 9,000 square miles.

For the moment, the French military presence hasn't aroused criticism from the Marxist governments in Ethiopia and South Yemen, the latter just 40 miles across the Bab el Mandeb Strait. Western diplomats and Djiboutians agree that this is because everyone is getting something from Djibouti, formerly known as the French Territory of the Afars and the Issas.

IN THE BUSY PORT, WHICH expects to have a container terminal by 1983, ships load Ethiopian molasses for Europe, goats for Saudi Arabia, coffee, animal skins and vegetables. Imported raw materials and consumer goods are also unloaded for shipment to Ethiopia and Somalia, North and South Yemen, Saudi Arabia and the east coast of Africa.

At all times, the French have at least half a dozen ships in port at their naval base. Every month, a group of two or four American ships arrives to take on water and provisions and very rarely to make a three-day port call. Occasionally, Soviet ships are among the hundreds of vessels that call here every year.

At the modern Ambouli Airport, some 1,000 French airmen fly and service a dozen Mirage jet fighters. U.S. and Soviet planes are free to refuel here — but strictly on a commercial basis.

Djibouti is the closest African country to the Arabian Peninsula, sticking out like a vulnerable sore thumb on the west bank of the Bab el Mandeb Strait that links the Red Sea and the Indian Ocean.

"Djibouti's greatest natural resource is its strategic location," said one Western diplomat. "If the Russians could have Djibouti, they'd have the Red Sea sewn up since they've already got Ethiopia and South Yemen."

Djibouti's 300,000 natives, mainly Issas of Somali origin and Afars of Ethiopian stock, generally have somewhat strained relations with the 11,000 French who in addition to the military run everything from supermarkets to plumbing shops. Many local residents appreciate the French military presence, but not forever.

William J.F. Syad, a Djibouti sociologist and writer, said he believes the country needs the French military presence for its first decade "to impose upon its socialist neighbors — Ethiopia, Somalia and South Yemen — its democratic outlook through its promotion of free enterprise.

"After this takes hold, all of these states will have a stake in keeping Djibouti independent. So, the French will not have any interest in keeping their military presence. ... The Djibouti bases can then serve as the infrastructure for all friendly Western powers," he said.

MANY BELIEVE THE KEY TO preserving Djibouti's independence is to maintain the ethnic balance between the Issas, who dominate the capital city, and the Afars. Diplomats said a new tough nationalities law was designed to prevent large numbers of Somalis from crossing the border and claiming Djibouti citizenship.

In October, the National Assembly made the ruling Popular Assembly for Progress the only legal party in order to prevent tribalism which leaders said could split the nation.

President Gouled, an Issa, had ordered the arrest of 13 opposition leaders in September, including two former premiers who were Afars. Six leaders accused of distributing leaflets and undermining national and popular unity were released after the one-party state was adopted.

Along with France and other Western countries, many Arab states also have a stake in preserving Djibouti's independence. Iraq has promised Air Djibouti a new jet. Saudi Arabia has given the country $80 million since independence and is prepared to give more. Kuwait also has been a major donor.

The extremely hot country, largely populated by nomads, lives mainly on airport and harbor fees plus a chunk of the annual $200 million worth of French aid and military expenditures.

Diplomats estimate that about one-third of the French military outlay makes its way into Djibouti's economy. But local residents claim that virtually the entire amount is returned to France, except for what the soldiers spend on prostitutes and liquor.

In recent months, technicians have discovered water under the desert scrub at levels of 600, 1,200 and 2,400 feet, which could open up agriculture in a country where locally grown vegetables are more expensive than those flown in from France.

Djibouti has also discovered large geothermal deposits, which reportedly could produce the equivalent of 70 million barrels of oil annually, but the country hasn't found the money to tap them.

Inquiry is being made into FDA approval of suture

By CHRISTOPHER CONNELL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A "preliminary inquiry" is being launched into the Food and Drug Administration's approval of a new suture despite agency claims that the decision was not influenced by White House inquiries at the behest of Nancy Reagan's stepfather.

Both FDA and White House spokesmen said Thursday that there was no effort to pressure the drug agency to approve the suture.

And the manufacturer, Ethicon Inc., says it did not ask Mrs. Reagan's stepfather, Dr. Loyal Davis, to enlist the White House's help last May to find out why the sutures had not yet been approved.

The FDA granted approval last Friday to Ethicon Inc.'s new PDS (polydioxanone) suture.

Health and Human Services spokesman Robert Wilson said Thursday that the department's inspector general had opened "a preliminary inquiry" into the matter to see if a further probe is warranted. Health and Human Services is the FDA's parent agency.

The first lady's stepfather, a retired neurosurgeon now living in Phoenix, Ariz., could not be reached for comment.

FDA spokesman Wayne Pines said it was very unusual for the White House to ask the agency for status reports on drugs or medical devices awaiting approval. But, he added, "We do not feel that there was any pressure placed by anyone to approve this product. The decision was based on science."

The FDA fielded two phone calls from a White House aide last May after Davis mentioned the sutures to Reagan's deputy chief of staff, Michael Deaver, according to presidential press aide Mark Weinberg.

Davis and Deaver had "a casual conversation a while ago during which Dr. Davis mentioned the suture and wondered if somebody could check the status," Weinberg said.

The White House said Thursday it had queried the FDA on behalf of Nancy Reagan's stepfather, retired neurosurgeon Loyal Davis of Phoenix, shown here in a 1973 file photo, concerning a new surgical suture awaiting approval.

Deaver subsequently ordered an aide to do just that, Weinberg added, but "the White House at no point whatever recommended, requested or suggested any type of action on the matter."

Cigarette enforcement program threatened by latest budget cuts

By MARTIN WALD
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A nationwide program to stop illicit cigarette traffic, which has been paying for itself many times over, is among federal activities threatened by the latest round of budget cuts.

A Treasury Department study found that for each federal dollar spent on the program, states collect at least $5 and perhaps as much as $20 in additional tax revenue.

The program also resulted in scores of arrests and the seizure of nearly a quarter-million cartons of contraband cigarettes, according to the internal Treasury Deparment study, a copy of which was obtained by The Associated Press.

The program is run by the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, which is being dismantled by the Reagan administration.

Treasury officials said publicly that most ATF tobacco activities would be taken over by the Customs Service. But the department's memo said of the contraband cigarette program: "Only minimal resources will be committed to it on a very selective and restrictive basis."

The cutback comes at a time when state and local officials are complaining that President Reagan seems more intent on reducing their federal aid and increasing their responsibilities than on giving them the enhanced resources he had promised.

Sen. Daniel Parick Moynihan, D-N.Y., has said he will try to restore funds for the cigarette enforcement program when the Treasury Department's annual appropriation comes before the Senate, but larger budget considerations may prevent that bill from ever being considered.

Until the ATF became involved a few years ago, states were losing nearly $400 million annually in state tax revenues because racketeers were purchasing cigarettes in low-tax states and selling them in other areas without paying the local taxes.

For example, in North Carolina, the cigarette tax is only 3 cents a pack. It is 23 cents in New York City.

In 1978, a new law made interstate trafficking in untaxed cigarettes a federal crime and imposed new reporting and acccounting requirements on manufacturers and wholesalers. Since then, the ATF has been keeping track of interstate cigarette movement, a task that state officials say they had been unable to handle for themselves.

The city and state of New York had been losing as much as $72 million a year, according to state tax commisioner James Tully. Since the federal enforcement program began, however, Tully said the loss has been reduced to approximately $28 million. Other states which have suffered significant losses include Florida, Texas, New Jersey and Pennsylvania. In all, 34 states are said to lose tax revenue because of "buttlegging."

Tully said curtailment of the federal program could cost New York about $40 million a year.

Over the past 2½ years, the federal government has spent $7.3 million on the enforcement program to help states collect between $35 million and $104 million a year in additional cigarette taxes, according to the Treasury Department study.

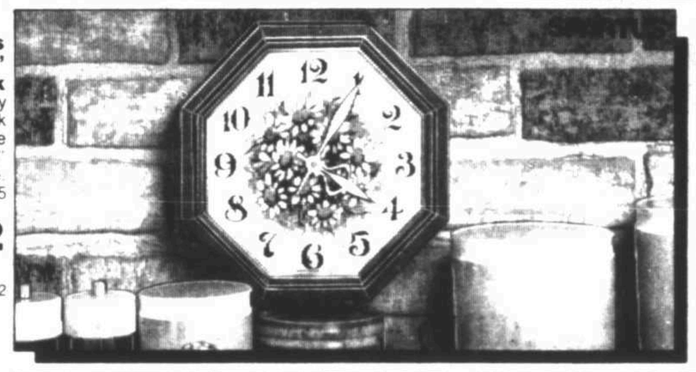

The disparity in the estimates arises from the difficulty in determining what part of the increased revenue is due to increased tax collections and what part is due to increased smoking.

U.S. warns it will no longer shrug off harsh criticism

By O.C. DOELLING
Associated Press Writer

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The United States has "laid down a marker" to warn the Third World it no longer is going to shrug off harsh criticism, its chief delegate to the United Nations says.

Ambassador Jeane J. Kirkpatrick, who says she advocates "a certain level of candor" in diplomacy, fired off a sharp note to more than 40 countries that supported an anti-American communique issued by the 93-nation non-aligned group.

Other U.S. diplomats at the United Nations also are returning hostile verbal fire with greater intensity.

Meanwhile, the U.S. veto is blocking the election of the non-aligned candidate for U.N. secretary-general, Foreign Minister Salim Ahmed Salim of Tanzania. But Mrs. Kirkpatrick denies that this is a result of hostile stands taken by his supporters.

"There has developed a kind of pattern of discounting even harshly critical comments about the U.S. if they're made by relatively smaller or less powerful or less developed nations, as though they didn't matter," Mrs. Kirkpatrick said in an interview with a small group of reporters at her office.

"We're supposed to sort of bear this with dignity as one of the prices of power in the world.

"There may have been a time when Americans were ready to shrug off even harsh, even unfair, even unbalanced criticism. But that time is past."

After the U.N. delegates of the so-called non-aligned countries adopted a 21-page communique without a vote on Sept. 28, Mrs. Kirkpatrick wrote some 40 of them whose governments are considered generally friendly to the United States.

She told them she was "startled that you or your government would or could associate yourselves with a document composed of such base lies and malicious attacks upon the good name of the United States."

She also faulted the Cuban-engineered communique for picturing the United States as a major threat to world peace while making no mention of the Soviet Union.

"We were laying down a marker, in a sense: that we noticed and cared," Mrs. Kikrpatrick told reporters.

Cuban diplomats claimed those who received the letter were outraged. They compared it to the confrontational style of Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan when he was the chief U.S. delegate.

However, Mrs. Kirkpatrick said some of the non-aligned delegates "felt bad about the communique anyway. They knew as well as we did it was unbalanced and unfair. And a few had already entered reservations."

One Third World diplomat, she said, "told me it was the first time ever that the United States had taken note of a non-aligned communique and it never occurred to him that we either noticed or cared what the non-aligned did. And he thought in fact it was useful...to know we cared."

Her deputy, Ambassador Kenneth Adelman, said a developing country that is hostile to the United States should not expect American aid.

"There's enough poverty and suffering, unfortunately, in those countries that generally share our approach to the world to really soak up...all the resources we have in this area," he told The Associated Press.

"If a country wants to be hostile toward the United States,...that is a country's right to do so. ... But we're not going to pay for their hostility."

He said the U.S. objective is "to infuse some responsibility into a country's pronouncements" and to encourage moderate members of the non-aligned movement to speak out against the better-organized and more vocal radicals.

Shortly after Mrs. Kirkpatrick sent her letter, the U.S. Senate adopted an amendment to the foreign aid bill calling on President Reagan to take into account, when considering aid to members of the non-aligned movement, which of them dissociated themselves from the anti-American communique.

Moynihan sponsored the amendment.

Soviet newspapers fume over Reagan's proposal

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet newspapers were still fuming today over President Reagan's call for bilateral nuclear disarmament in Europe, charging the American leader with laying down a "smokescreen" and employing a "propagandistic trick."

"A smokescreen is being set so that the NATO program could be ultimately implemented under the cover of it," charged Sovetskaya Rossiya, the newspaper of the Communist Party Central Committee. NATO plans to deploy 572 new U.S. cruise and Pershing II missiles in Europe, beginning in 1983.

Reagan's speech Wednesday to the Washington Press Club came just four days before Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev is to visit Bonn for talks with West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt.

It put Brezhnev in the position of responding to the proposal to forego deployment of the new U.S. missiles in return for dismantling Soviet SS-20, SS-4 and SS-5 nuclear-tipped missiles.

A commentary by Soviet Communist Party newspaper Pravda said Reagan's speech had not fooled "objective observers in the United States."

Correspondent N. Kurdyumov, in a Pravda commentary entitled "propagandistic trick," said American commentators viewed the Reagan proposal as an acknowlegement that the previous "bellicose anti-Soviet policy is leading it to lose friends... in Europe and is encouraging an increase in anti-nuclear and anti-American sentiment."

Pravda repeated the Soviet line that Reagan's plan "skipped over such facts as nuclear warheads on American submarines as well as nuclear arms delivery systems such as U.S. bombers based in Europe."

Komsomolskaya Pravda, the paper of the Communist Party youth organization, said the Reagan opening was "alas, just an awkward and absurd attempt to achieve by deceptive means a military superiority and to sharply violate the existing balance of forces in the world in favor of the United States."

The United States and its NATO allies contend that the Soviets have achieved substantial nuclear superiority in Europe.

The Soviets claim there is a "rough nuclear parity" in Europe. They say to dismantle their SS-series missiles would leave NATO with superior nuclear strength.

Most East bloc countries joined the Soviet condemnation of Reagan's proposal, but Romania reacted with caution. Romanian state radio and television reported Reagan's speech tersely Thursday night and refrained from direct comment.

In Oslo, Zbigniew Brzezinski, national security advisor to former President Jimmy Carter, called Reagan's statement "a positive initiative in the best American tradition." Brzezinski was in Norway for a seminar for businessmen today.

Norwegian Defense Minister Anders Sjaastad joined a chorus of favorable reaction from Western Europe, calling Reagan's initiative "extremely interesting" and the Soviet response "completely unacceptable."

Shcharansky's prison sentence lengthened

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Soviet Jewish dissident Anatoly Shcharansky has been sentenced to an additional three years imprisonment and transferred from his labor camp to a closed prison, his wife Avital said today.

Mrs. Shcharansky said her brother-in-law in Moscow told her by telephone that her husband had been sentenced in secret trial at his Siberian labor camp for breaking camp regulations.

He was transferred recently to Chistopol closed prison on the Volga River to start a three-year sentence, she said. She did not know the regulations he was accused of breaking.

Shcharansky was sentenced to three years in prison and 10 years in a labor camp in 1978 on charges of spying for the West and "anti-Soviet activities." His supporters say he was imprisoned for leading the movement for the right of Soviet Jews to emigrate to Israel.

His new sentence is to be added to the thirteen years previously imposed, Mrs. Shcharansky said.

African nations accept Western constitutional plan

WINDHOEK, South-West Africa (AP) — Key black African nations have accepted a Western constitutional plan for independence in this South African-ruled territory, the South-West African People's Organization announced today.

In a statement sent here by telex from its office in Lusaka, Zambia, SWAPO said Nigeria, Kenya and the front-line African states agreed to the plan proposed by five Western nations.

The guerrilla organization's president, Sam Nujoma, announced SWAPO's acceptance of the plan Thursday.

The front-line states are Angola, where most of SWAPO's guerrillas are based, Botswana, Zimbabwe, Mozambique, Tanzania and Zambia. They and other black African nations support SWAPO in its 15-year war against South Africa for control of this mineral-rich territory, also called Namibia.

Murderer threatens judge

LEEDS, England (AP) — A man who killed a judge for putting him in a reformatory 13 years ago threatened to kill another one who sentenced him to 25 years in prison for the murder.

"I'll cut your throat when I get out," shouted 31-year-old John Smith after Judge Charles Lawson sentenced him Thursday for stabbing Judge William Openshaw to death with a hunting knife.

Judge Lawson is 68.

Openshaw sentenced Smith in 1968 to 18 months in a correctional center for young offenders for breaking into houses and shops.

Smith pleaded innocent.

U.S. denies a Navy plane dropped flare near oil tanker

TOKYO (AP) — U.S. military officials denied that a Navy plane dropped flares near a tanker loaded with crude oil, the Foreign Ministry said today.

The near miss was reported by crewmen aboard the World Ambassador who said a plane with Navy markings dropped two flaming objects "the size of volleyballs" within 500 yards of the Liberian-registered tanker.

If the objects had hit the tanker, "it would have resulted in disaster," a spokesman for the Maritime Safety Agency said Thursday.

The incident occurred Nov. 9 about 42 miles south of Cape Ashizuri in southwestern Japan and 10 miles northeast of an area designated for U.S. military maneuvers, the MSA spokesman said.

No damage to the ship or injuries among the all-Japanese crew were reported.

The agency said that crewmen aboard the 237,000-ton vessel gave a discription of the plane that appeared to match the Navy's PSC Orion anti-submarine plane.

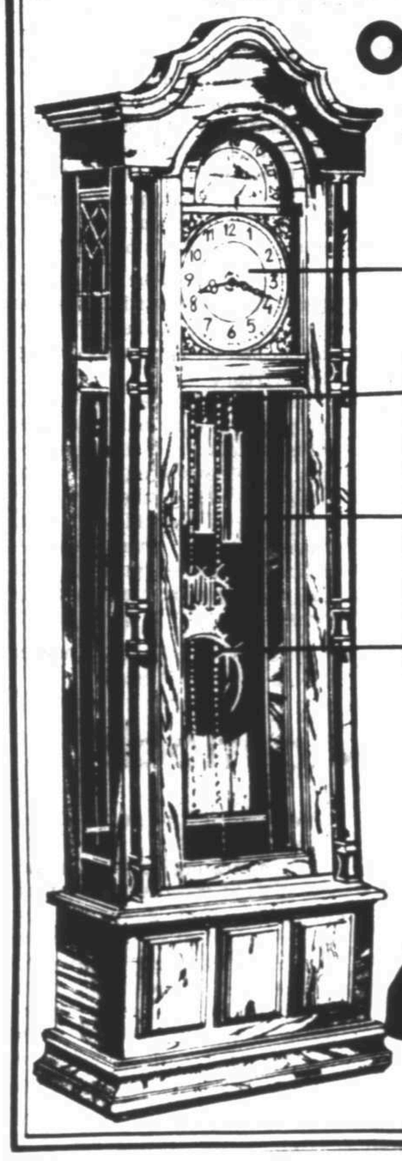

U.S. military officials, responding to the Japanese government's request for an investigation, said Thursday that no American planes were in the area at the time of the incident.

The Foreign Ministry, apparently unhappy with the U.S. reply, asked Thursday that the United States re-open the investigation.

A spokesman for the U.S. military forces in Japan declined comment in a telephone interview.

Earlier this year, the United States admitted that one of its nuclear submarines collided with a Japanese freighter on April 9, sinking the cargo vessel and killing its captain and first mate. The U.S. agreed to pay compensation to the victim's families and the shipping company.

Mr. Reagan's offer

While no one should hold his breath pending the final Soviet response to President Ronald Reagan's Wednesday offer of a joint reduction of nuclear and conventional arms in Europe, it's clear that the president laid the groundwork for that offer and his administration likely will stand only to gain.

The president's offer obviously was carefully orchestrated. It should serve a number of purposes, such as putting the bee on the Soviets' backs at the Nov. 30 arms limitation talks in Geneva, quieting to some degree the anti-nuclear movement in Europe and dispelling at least partially the myth that he is "trigger-happy."

In challenging the Soviets to take this "giant step for mankind," Reagan has "called" the Kremlin's bluff, in a manner of speaking. No one is naive enough to think the Soviets would even entertain thoughts of Reagan's "zero option" — the proposal to cancel planned deployment of Pershing II and ground-launched cruise missiles to NATO allies if the Soviets agree to dismantle their SS-20, SS-4 and SS-5 missiles. That's simply not going to happen.

Neither will the Soviets agree to Reagan's call for a reduction of conventional forces in Europe. They have staunchly opposed such suggestions for eight years.

The president's best hope is that the Soviets will agree to negotiations on a reduction of the nuclear arsenals now on European soil.

In yet a larger sense, though, Reagan is holding some pretty powerful "hole" cards in this particular hand. Already his actions in standing up to the Soviets in Central America and the Persian Gulf have bought respect for his administration. The fact that the arms limitation talks begin at the end of this month and the anti-nuclear voices in Europe have been increasing their intensity only add impetus to Reagan's proposal.

He stands, at the very least, to bolster the American image once again in Europe, while giving the Soviets just enough rope to hang themselves.

Boil down Reagan's proposal and you'll find he has said he's willing to talk a reduction of arsenals if the Soviets agree. If not, he's prepared to go ahead with deployment of Pershing II and ground-launched cruise missiles in NATO countries, possibly with less resistance from anti-nuclear forces.

The ball very definitely is now in Leonid Brezhnev's court.

Greece's new outlook

The Greeks, who are said to have a word for virtually everything, are using the word "out" to indicate where they want the North Atlantic Treaty Organization nuclear warheads now on Grecian soil.

According to a government official in Athens, Greece will seek the removal of all nuclear warheads from its territory during forthcoming talks on the future status and operation of United States bases in that country. That and other recent Greek statements raise questions as to how strongly Greece is committed to its membership in NATO.

Press and Information Undersecretary Demetrios Maroudas, speaking at his first news conference since he assumed the post after the Oct. 18 elections, said the issue of the nuclear warheads would be among the first to be raised during the negotiations early next year.

The interesting part about the new missile controversy is that previous Greek governments have never admitted the presence of nuclear warheads in Greece. All that changed, however, when Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou and NATO officials said recently that there were indeed surface-to-air Nike Hercules missiles in Greece.

New regimes bring new outlooks, and the early indications are that the new Greek government is looking out for Number One with little regard for the future of the Western alliance.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Olympians-for-profit plan involved Casey

WASHINGTON — Another hobgoblin has appeared from out of Bill Casey's corporate past: In his pre-Washington life, the dour CIA director conspired to use American Olympic athletes for personal gain.

Jack Anderson

This is just the latest in a succession of tawdry discoveries, which point to something amiss in Casey's background. In earlier columns, I've reported on his involvement in other questionable business deals.

These untoward incidents don't add up to a criminal case against Casey but raise questions about his fitness to run the Central Intelligence Agency. Someone else with Casey's dubious background would be turned down for employment by the CIA. Shouldn't the chief be judged by the same standards as his subordinatess?

The Olympic scheme has been dug out of musty files by my reporters John Dillon and Corky Johnson. It involves not only William Casey but ex-Treasury Secretary William Simon, who was his partner in an outfit called Scientific Life Systems.

Their big money-making idea was to form a chain of computerized fitness spas, using the official Olympic logo as a come-on and Olympic athletes as paid "instructors."

At the time, Simon was treasurer of the U.S. Olympic Committee; he is now its president. The idea of using Olympic athletes to run bodybuilding salons came from Dr. Irvin Dardick; he headed the Olympic sports medicine program. Another participant in the venture, Gideon Ariel, was a specialist in sports medicine; he was also on the Olympic payroll.

Casey had no Olympic connection; he was brought into the deal strictly to provide venture capital and legal advice. Here's how the project evolved:

Bicep boutiques are big business — some $5 billion a year. Scientific Life Systems' edge over the competition was to be its Olympic logo, its computer gimmick and its Olympic athletes.

"Dardick would provide the Olympic connection, Ariel would provide the technology and Casey would provide the legal expertise," explained David Liskin, an Olympic bobsledder and former associate of Dardick.

Casey incorporated the company in Delaware in January 1978. In a letter to his partners, he wrote about "the $100,000 which Simon and Casey would invest."

The prospects looked bright at first. The company worked out an agreement with the U.S. Olympic Committee for the exclusive use of the Olympic insignia; in return, the committee would get $25 for each fitness fan who signed up at one of Scientific Life's centers.

But the potentially lucrative venture eventually came to grief when a competitor, Arthur Jones, founder of Nautilus Body Centers, accused Ariel, a former associate, of pirating business secrets from Nautilus. Suits and countersuits threatened to make the whole project public.

Casey was subpoenaed, but the process server was blocked by the Secret Service at a May 1980 Reagan rally in New Jersey. The $12,500 initial investments that Casey and Simon had each put up were returned. Scientific Life is now effectively dead.

Footnote: Simon, whose plain talk and rockribbed conservatism made him a controversial figure during his tenure at the Treasury, depicted himself as a "Good Samaritan" trying to do a favor for Dr. Dardick.

AN EXPENSIVE TOY: "Maverick" was originally an unbranded calf. It was also the family name of a feistily independent Texas congressman, then of a pair of gambler-con artist brothers on a TV show some years back. In its latest incarnation, the Maverick is a $58,000 airborne anti-tank missile that should never have made it off the drawing board.

The trouble with the Maverick is its guidance system. It requires a pilot to pick up an enemy tank on an infrared screen, lock onto it by flying in a straight line for 15 seconds and then fire. But according to an unpublished government study, the Maverick is riddled with problems.

Here are some of the difficulties:

— The Maverick has "trouble identifying targets in a close air-support role."

— It also has trouble "maintaining missile lock-on to targets."

— It can't tell enemy tanks from friendlies when they're maneuvering on the battlefield. In other words, the heat-seeking missile could just as easily knock out one of our own tanks.

A Pentagon engineer familiar with air-support weapons reports that it can take as many as 20 Mavericks to knock out just two tanks. Yet the aircraft can carry only four at a time.

He also noted that 15 seconds' flight in a straight line can put a pilot in a very vulnerable situation.

By contrast, the already operational 30-millimeter cannon on our attack planes can knock out a tank for approximately $900 — instead of $580,000 — and subjects the pilot to only a couple of seconds of aiming vulnerability.

Yet the Air Force is determined to press on with its dubious, dangerous, expensive toy. The eventual cost is projected at $4.7 billion.

INSIDE REPORT:

Reaganites 'astounded' David Stockman still on the job

WASHINGTON — The tight little circle of administration officials who fought off David Stockman's tax-raising "fall offensive" are distraught that he remains budget director after unrepentant betrayal of the tax reductions that are the cutting edge of the Reagan revolution.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

Stockman's dramatic press conference last week only deepened their concerns. He shrugged off his apostasy quoted in William Greider's Atlantic Monthly article ("The education of David Stockman") with what can only be termed disingenuousness.

That keeps in office President Reagan's most visible economic policymaker as living proof of Democratic claims that Reagan's is a rich man's administration intent on soaking the poor. Reagan's staunchest defenders against those assaults cannot believe that Stockman sits in the Cabinet today with no prospect for quick dismissal.

Greider's superbly-written article depicts Stockman's understandable frustration in trying to whittle down the government. Stockman's complaint that "none of us really understand what's going on with all these numbers" is widely quoted out of context and carries no great meaning. Rather, the trouble with Stockman stems from three explosive paragraphs about the tax cut.

Tax reduction for everybody, Stockman tells Greider, "was always a Trojan Horse to bring down the top rate." He adds: "It's kind of hard to sell 'trickle down,' so the supply-side formula was the only way to get a tax policy that was really 'trickle down.'" In those two sentences, Stockman tears away veils hiding his nine months of attempting to slow and dilute the Reagan tax cut.

Contrary to published commentaries that Stockman told Greider essentially what he said publically, the truth is that he said nothing in administration meetings and put nothing in inter-agency memos that approached the "Trojan-Horse" and "trickle-down" descriptions. While increasingly obsessed by budget deficits, Stockman never once openly disdained across-the-board tax reduction.

But the Greider revelations show Stockman did not accept the Kemp-Roth bill's premise that marginal tax reduction for ordinary workers is no less important as an incentive to work and produce than tax cuts for the rich. Since it was in Stockman's view only camouflage for the rich man's tax cut, it could be shunted aside without damage to the economy.

The overriding importance of this revelation was seemingly lost on the administration's legislative strategy group, consisting of Reagan's senior domestic advisers. On the morning after Greider's story broke, they all signed a letter kidding Stockman about being a magazine cover boy.

No wonder these officials trivialized Stockman's words. With one exception, they had supported Stockman's tax increase offensive. The exception was Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan, who defeated Stockman in the battle for the president's mind. But Regan, insiders felt, preferred a deflated Stockman at the Office of Management and Budget (OMB) to a powerful successor.

The trivialization of Stockman's apostasy was continued by Stockman himself at his press conference that afternoon. After he clouded understanding by twice referring to a Trojan Horse as "a wooden beast with no brain," a reporter reminded him it historically has been "a device to betray." Stockman's rejoinder that "I will not go into literary history" was topped by this stunning disavowal: "I am not certain what trickle down means."

Not even that fast footwork bothered Stockman's old colleagues in Congress who have pledged him undying support. But many (such as Senate Finance Committee chairman Bob Dole, who called Stockman's apostasy "refreshing") never liked across-the-board tax cuts anyway. Such Republicans had backed the program only because the president and public wanted it.

However, some canny Democrats, such as Sen. Ernest F. Hollings, caught on — after a day or two — to what Stockman had done. Hollings, senior Democrat on the Senate Budget Committee, first indicted Stockman as the "great deceiver" and called his press conference "reminiscent of Nixon's Checkers speech."

But by last Sunday on ABC's David Brinkley program, Hollings had changed his tune about Stockman: "He is a brilliant fellow. And I think really, rather than losing his credibility, what in essence he is doing is winning it, finally, in leveling with everyone." Leveling about what? That the president's program "was only a Trojan Horse to enrich a privileged few."

In fact, Reagan believed so deeply in broad tax reduction that he stood with Don Regan and a few middle-level officials to turn back Stockman and nearly all other senior advisers. As first word of Greider's article broke, the president was telling an interviewer that his biggest mistake early this year was agreeing to postpone and pare down — at Stockman's urging — the first-year tax cut.

Quick, smart and determined Dave Stockman had joined the long list of those who had underestimated Ronald Reagan's will and intensity. What astounds Reaganites within the administration is that he has not yet paid for it with his job.

CHARLEY REESE

Refugee tide raising fears of Americans

Some people are not used to dead Haitians washing up on the beach in Florida. Being an old police reporter from a coastal city, I am used to dead bodies on beaches. I saw so many it was a long time before I would go to a beach for pleasure. I still don't care for beaches all that much.

Charley Reese

Actually, you could say it was rude of the Haitians to die in public view like that. Most of the refugees of the world are more considerate and die at sea or in some isolated camp. Most Haitians, in fact, are considerate enough to die in Haiti. Out of sight, out of mind.

On the other hand, the Haitians who died on the beach did a favor for those hypocrites who love to get publicly emotional about public issues. They can wring their hands and talk and write reams about their compassion for the Haitians. Compassion is one thing which is immune to inflation. It's still dirt cheap. Costs you nothing.

The fact is, of course, most people don't give a rat's toenail about Haitians. It's nothing personal. We just never think about them. If you ask most people what comes to mind when they hear the word Haiti you would never get past black and voodoo, if that far. An intellectual might get to Graham Greene.

There are too many people in the world today to think about them all. If you tried to think about all the people who are hungry, homeless and hurting, you wouldn't have time to shine your shoes or brush your teeth.

Also, there aren't many Sister Theresas in the world. Most people in the compassion business make good salaries and live well. If Jesus or Buddha showed up at the door, they'd probably get sent down to the Salvation Army instead of being invited in. They were pretty shabby dressers.

I don't really hold that against the compassion professionals. If I were in that business I'd want to do as well for my family as I could too. You don't really help a poor person by being poor yourself. That's like those dumb media events when the hypocrites have a public "Third World meal" to demonstrate their compassion. Of course the people in Ethiopia aren't going to be any better off whether you eat bread and water or steak and wine.

If we really wanted to help the Haitian people, for example, we would send a Ranger battalion to Haiti to shoot their president and all of his goons. Of course, if you did that, you would catch heck from the same people who claim to care so much about the Haitians. They would call you barbaric and undemocratic. Nevertheless that's the only solution to the Haitians' problems.

The only important thing to remember is that a Haitian refugee and everybody else is human just like us. As such, they have a right to be treated with dignity and with kindness.

The refugees of this world are not concerned with sociology, immigration laws and macro economics. They are just trying to survive, to find a place were they can live and work, not get shot or bombed, and earn enough to provide for their children. It just so happens the United States still meets most of that criteria and it's handy to the Caribbean.

It's not being callous to recognize that if we open the doors completely to everybody who might want to come, we would soon reach a point where our own living conditions would deteriorate. At the same time, there is no good reason to be unkind or to imagine that people with a different color and different language are inferior beings.

We are still a nation of refugees and immigrants and their descendants. Our forefathers killed off most of the native Americans. Maybe that's what makes some fourth-generation Americans today nervous about refugees. They know what a mistake the Indians made when they let us come ashore.

When winter hits Midwest . . .

By The Associated Press

The first big snowstorm of the Midwestern winter killed at least five people and may have been a factor in the collapse of the huge fabric dome over the new Hubert H. Humphrey Metrodome in Minneapolis, officials said.

The storm left up to 11 inches of heavy, wet snow in the southern half of Minnesota and ranked "somewhere in the top 10" of the worst storms in the state's history, said radar specialist Rainer Dombrowsky of the National Weather Service. More than 100,000 homes and businesses lost electrical power when snow-covered trees fell on power lines.

Slushy roads led to an automobile accident that killed two teen-agers near Marshall, Minn., on Wednesday, the State Patrol said. They were identified as Brian Martin, 18, and Keith Paradis, 17, both of the Marshall area.

The Iowa Highway Patrol said a 49-year-old minister, Roderick Jackson, was killed in an icy crash Thursday near Maurice, Iowa, and police in Lincoln, Neb., said Mabel B. Yaney, 91, died of exposure Thursday after accidentally locking herself out of her home.

Jane A. Folsom, 30, of Robinson, Kan., was killed Thursday after losing control of her car on an ice-covered bridge near Hiawatha, Kan., the Kansas Highway Patrol said.

Sixteen people were hurt in a 26-car pileup Thursday night just north of Kansas City, Mo., authorities said. The wrecked cars stretched for a half-mile along the icy highway.

The snow, chilly air and gusty winds snapped a spell of unusually mild weather Wednesday, and only a few flurries were still falling in most areas Thursday night.

The Humphrey Metrodome in downtown Minneapolis collapsed in about an hour Thursday night, less than a day after the roof sagged under the weight of heavy, wet snow. No injuries were reported. Don Poss, executive director of the Metropolitan Sports Facilities Commission, said the collapse may have been caused indirectly by the 10 inches of snow that fell on the Twin Cities Wednesday night.

"The dome was under higher pressure than normal because of the snow load," he said. "The additional pressure may well have been enough to catch a manufacturing flaw in the dome panel."

Seen through the stadium doors, the sagging roof resembled a souffle gone flat.

Up to 8 inches of snow fell in parts of Wisconsin, and winds gusted up to 41 mph Thursday night. Temperatures were in the mid-20s in some areas, but the wind-chill factor made it feel more like 2 degrees, officials said. Iowa had up to 3 inches of snow.

In Atlanta, meanwhile, a line of thunderstorms slashed across the huge Hartsfield International Airport early today, damaging buildings and six Delta Air Lines planes. There were reports of three minor injuries.

"Two aircraft were struck by ground equipment and one 727-200 was moved 90 degress at the gate," said Delta spokesman Jim Ewing.

"We had some roof damage and some aircraft damage. I don't know how major anything is," said Carolyn Wills, a spokeswoman for Eastern Airlines. She said the only injuries she knew of were "a couple of minor personnel injuries at Eastern."

"No passengers or visitors on parked Delta aircraft or on Delta's concourse were injured. One stations employee was injured. We don't think it is very severe," Ewing said.

Snow may have caused dome collapse

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — The fabric roof of the new Hubert H. Humphrey Metrodome in downtown Minneapolis deflated Thursday night, apparently as a result of the season's first major snowstorm, police said.

The collapse came less than a day after the roof sagged under the weight of a heavy, wet snow.

Stadium officials declined comment, but a police officer who had been inside the arena, Sgt. A.J. Larson, said the dome apparently collapsed from the weight of ice that ripped out one of the roof's pie-shaped panels.

The sagging roof, looking like a souffle gone flat, could be seen through the stadium doors. No one was allowed inside the stadium.

The problem Wednesday night was corrected by stadium workers with only minor damage, according to Don Poss, executive director of the Metropolitan Sports Facilities Commission.

Poss could not be reached for comment on the complete collapse Thursday night.

The dome shape is maintained by fans that circulate air outward, making the entire stadium act like an enormous steel and fabric balloon.

Poss attributed Wednesday night's sag to a lack of steam from a central heating plant and failure of the internal system to deliver enough warm air to the stadium roof to melt the snow.

The Metrodome is still under construction, and Poss noted that the stadium's heating system is only 75 percent completed.

He said Wednesday night's problem was solved when an accumulation of water and slush that was making the roof sag was dumped through an emergency valve in the dome into the interior of the stadium.

Eventually, he said, there will be an alarm system that will be triggered when there is a snow accumulation, and also an automatic snow-melt system.

The Metrodome is expected to open next spring.

Midwestern snows continue falling

By The Associated Press

Snow, accompanied by high winds, continued falling over the Midwest early today, and scattered snow showers were forecast to continue from the Great Lakes to New England.

The first big Midwestern snowstorm of the winter killed five people and may have contributed to the collapse of the huge fabric dome over the new Hubert H. Humphrey Metrodome in Minneapolis, officials said.

The storm left up to 11 inches of heavy, wet snow in southern Minnesota. More than 100,000 businesses and homes lost power as snow-laden trees fell on power lines. Slushy roads made driving hazardous.

Elsewhere, thunderstorms moved through the eastern Ohio Valley and the Southeast, and showers also were reported in the Pacific Northwest and southern New England.

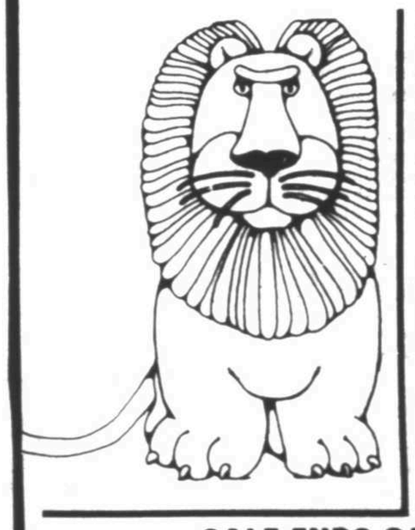

Sunshine was forecast for the South, the Rockies and most of the Plains.

Temperatures around the nation early today ranged from 15 in Laramie, Wyo. to 74 in Pamama City, Fla.

Here are weather reports from selected cities:

Eastern U.S.: Atlanta 67 cloudy; Boston 45 cloudy; Buffalo 38 foggy; Charleston, South Carolina 62 fair; Cincinnati 47 windy; Cleveland 51 rain; Detroit 43 rain; Miami 62 fair; Nashville 45 cloudy; New York 51 partly cloudy; Philadelphia 41 fair; Pittsburgh 49 showery; Washington 54 fair.

Central U.S.: Bismarck 23 snow; Chicago 37 rain; Dallas-Fort Worth 46 fair; Denver 30 fair; Des Moines 30 windy; Indianapolis 40 windy; Kansas City 30 windy; Minneapolis-St. Paul 28 snow; New Orleans 62 fair; St. Louis 37 drizzle.

Alabama's battler may again make gubernatorial race

Wallace considering comeback bid

By KENDAL WEAVER
Associated Press Writer

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) — George Corley Wallace left the Alabama statehouse three years ago, a small man in a wheelchair, ready to find his place in the history books.

It was quite a history — once a jut-jawed, fist-shaking firebrand of a segregationist, four times Dixie's wild card candidate for president, a battler for "the little guy, the average American," then a crumpled victim of a would-be assassin at a Maryland shopping center.

When he left office in January 1979, he had dominated Alabama politics for 14 of the previous 16 years. To some, he said quietly, "I'm through."

He wasn't.

Wallace, at 62, is now on the verge of a political rebirth, emerging this time as a mild and healing man for all seasons — and, some say, of all races.

He says he will decide early next year if he will run for governor in 1982. Already he has begun assembling the framework of a campaign, meeting with longtime Wallace loyalists, who are urging him to run, and peppering his schedule with numerous public appearances.

Wallace is hardly the near-unconquerable figure he was when he ran for governor his last time, in 1974. But there are no dominating campaign personalities on the Alabama scene, at least not yet, and the idea of a Wallace candidacy is viewed with more than a little gravity by his opponents.

The man who succeeded Wallace — Gov. Fob James — could seek re-election in 1982, but as yet hasn't said what he will do.

James won in 1978 on the slogan "It's Time for a New Beginning," a veiled call for Alabama to leave the Wallace political era. A millionaire sporting goods manufacturer, James promised to run Alabama like a business, not a political machine.

Unlike Wallace, he has not used the governor's office to lay the groundwork for a long-term reign.

Out of office for three years, Wallace no longer has instant clout in all the counties. But he has the remnants of his old organization. And he has something of a new coalition, which could include blacks.

On his speaking itinerary today was the keynote address to the Alabama Conference of Black Mayors, a group of 20 black mayors holding a weekend meeting in Tuskegee.

The president of the conference, Tuskegee Mayor Johnny Ford, said the group wasn't endorsing any candidate. But, he said, Wallace was invited "because he has always been a friend of our conference."

Ford, once a campaign worker for the late U.S. Sen. Robert Kennedy of New York, said he personally hopes Wallace runs for governor. But he said he will eventually go along with the final endorsement of the Alabama Democratic Conference, the black political wing of the state Democratic Party.

Wallace's appearance in Tuskegee comes on the heels of a virtual endorsement by E.D. Nixon, an 82-year-old black who is the patriarch of the civil rights movement in Montgomery, a man instrumental in Martin Luther King Jr.'s rise to prominence.

"Wallace has done more for blacks than any other governor in the last 20 years," said Nixon. If Wallace runs, he said, "I certainly wouldn't be against him."

Wallace shed his segregationist stand years ago. When he ran in 1974, he was the incumbent, a man who had faced death while campaigning for president in 1972. No possible heavyweight candidates opposed him, and in his status as a shoo-in, he won endorsements from black leaders and got a significant number of black votes.

Last April, a University of Alabama poll showed again that Wallace is hardly the nemesis of the black community. Among blacks responding to the poll, Wallace was the favorite gubernatorial candidate of 44 percent. The next closest candidate got 31 percent. James got 8 percent.

Wallace also enhanced his standing among some Alabama Democratic party leaders when he stuck by President Carter in 1980. James, a former Republican, was the only Democratic governor in the country who refused to endorse Carter.

But Wallace, as he nears his decision, may find the gamble of another campaign more than he wants to risk.

It could alter his place in Alabama history, leaving him with something of a Jim Folsom stigma. Folsom, the colorful 6-foot-8 "Big Jim" who won two terms as governor, lost on his try for a third term and later turned into a perennial loser with repeated campaigns for one office or another.

A campaign also would raise Wallace's "health factor" to the level of public debate.

Wallace, who was left paralyzed by an assassin's bullet in 1972, is confined to a wheelchair and has repeatedly sought to ease the periodic pain he suffers in his midsection. But his health appears to be no different than it was when he held office, and, as before, campaigning seems to be his best medicine.

Then there's his personal life. He recently married for a third time, exchanging vows with a 32-year-old former country music singer, Lisa Taylor, the daughter of a wealthy coal miner. Their public appearances have been rare. A campaign might prompt a change.

Before his recent spate of speaking engagements, Wallace kept a low profile, working out of a Montgomery office as director of rehabilitation resources for the University of Alabama at Birmingham.

In that job, he's paid a salary of about $60,000 and has two secretaries and his longtime personal aide, Elvin Stanton, on the payroll.

Under a special state law, he was given six state troopers for round-the-clock protection, plus an $18,000-a-year stipend as "governor's counselor" when he turned 60.

In many ways, Wallace is a state agency all to himself. But it's still a far cry from the politically powerful life he lived in the white-columned governor's mansion.

Former Alabama Gov. George Wallace, right, joins the man who succeeded him, Gov. Fob James, and local teen-age pageant winner Brenda Oliver at a recent function in Montgomery, Ala. Wallace is considering another race for governor in 1982.

Agent Orange screening plan appears stalled, VA reveals

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Veterans Administration's plan to find out if Vietnam veterans are any less healthy than men who did not serve there is stalled.

Doctors in VA hospitals were told to take a body tissue sample from every Vietnam veteran who underwent any sort of surgery in a VA hospital — even just the removal of a wart. The idea was to analyze the tissues in a laboratory to see what diseases Vietnam veterans suffer from.

But like a number of other attempts to reassure Vietnam veterans worried about the effects of exposure to herbicides, such as Agent Orange, in the war zone, the plan has barely gotten off the ground.

A scientific advisory committee was told Thursday that only 650 tissue samples had been submitted from the VA's 172 hospitals.

Most doctors ignored the directive.

"It appears to be a flagrant disregard of a VA regulation and in one sense it is," Dr. Barclay Shepard, chairman of the VA's Advisory Committee on Health-Related Effects of Herbicides told the committee.

He said the problem was that patients who served in Vietnam were flagged for the procedure. Although samples are routinely taken from all who undergo surgery, samples from Vietnam veterans were not forward to Washington.

"Clearly we need to get a better handle to identify people who served in Vietnam," Shepard said.

Dr. Nelson S. Irey of the Armed Forces Institute of Pathology, which was to have analyzed the samples, said only 408 tissues had been analyzed — too small a number to provide conclusions.

"I can't account for that," he said when asked why so few had been collected. If instructions had been followed, he said, he would have gotten thousands of samples — "a blizzard of them."

Other investigations designed to show whether Vietnam veterans suffered adverse affects from Agent Orange and other herbicides have not been productive either.

A massive examination comparing the health of men who were exposed to the herbicide and men who were not exposed is to be conducted, but the design for the study was rejected this week as inadequate.

Veterans to gather

The first meeting of the Brotherhood of Vietnam Veterans will be at 7:30 tonight at 511 W. Missouri Ave. in the Energas Community Room.

Veteran Roger Stinson, a victim of the toxic chemical Agent Orange, formed the Midland chapter of the Brotherhood to inform other veterans about the effects of the defoliant used in Vietnam.

Recent legislation has prompted Chris McCormack from West Texas Legal Services along with aides from U.S. Congressman Jack Hightower and U.S. Congressman Kent Hance's office to attend the meeting to answer any questions.

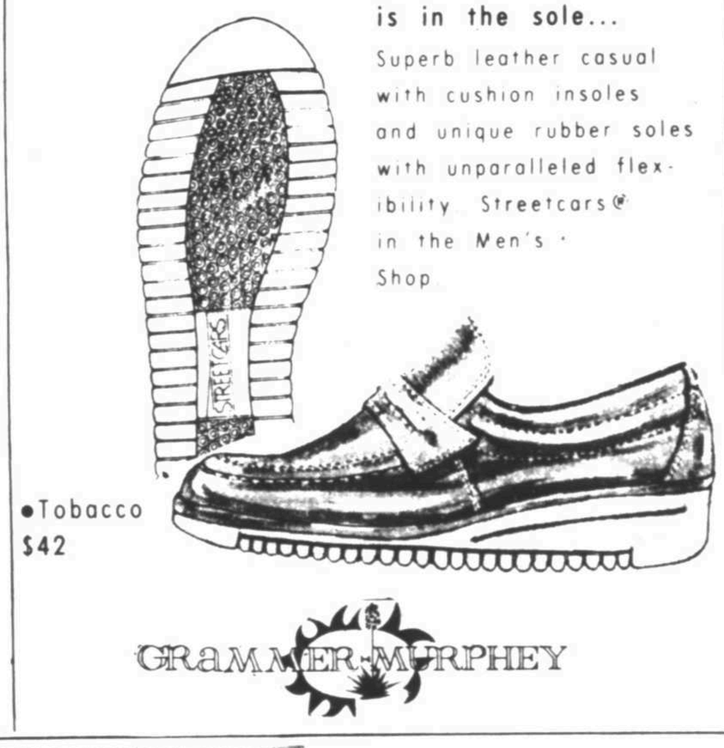

Agent Orange has been linked with cancer and birth defects in veterans and their families, according to Stinson.

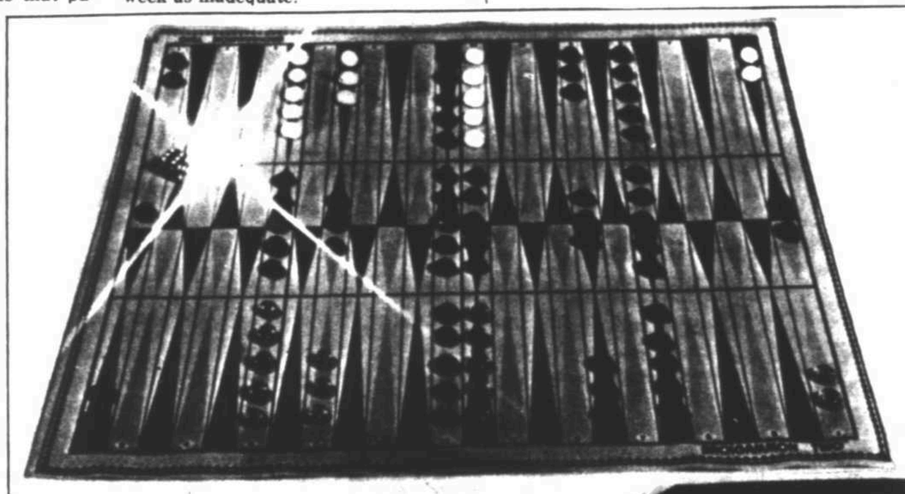

Texas legislation that will be initiated in January allows the attorney general to represent veterans in class action suits against government and provide genetic counseling and screening for veterans.

Ken Wolf, director, and Clyde McClain, deputy executive director of the Permian Basin Community Center for Mental Health/Mental Retardation, also will be on hand to answer any questions.

Anyone interested in the Agent Orange legislation and how it will affect veterans and their families are urged to attend. For further infor-

Mom of the year

By ANN COMBS
Hearst Feature Service

They're at it again. The folks consumed with, "who's the fairest of them all," are gearing up for another national contest.

This time they're not looking for Miss America or Miss Teen-age America or even Miss Pre-Teen-Age America. This time they're sifting through the mothers of the country, looking for 1982's Mother of the Year.

The starting gun went off a few weeks ago when American Mother Inc. announced that the floor was open for nominations. Every woman on speaking terms with her children is sitting in her kitchen wondering how it would be to have someone say, "And the winner is . . ."

Even I have my flights of fancy. I've imagined the trip to Salt Lake City in May when the winners at the state level gather for the finals. I've thought how it would be to have photographers dogging my every step.

Of course I doubt they'd want group pictures of us all skipping down to the edge of the Great Salt Lake. With 45 being the minimum age, they'd probably by-pass the bikinied body event.

They might like a casual shot of each of us in our den mother's uniform. They'd probably call for a few poses in the family car getting ready for a typical afternoon run to the dentist, the orthodontist, Little League, the library, piano lessons, and back to school to pick up "my math book." And I assume they'd want to show a simulated "Mom in the kitchen at midnight baking three dozen cookies for tomorrow's Cross Country Bake Sale" layout.

Heaven only knows what I'd do for the talent competition since I don't knit ski sweaters, I haven't made anyone a drop-waisted formal for the junior prom, and my children voted me the worst badminton partner anyone could ask for.

I might try folding two weeks worth of laundry to see if I could end up with all the socks matched up. I could demonstrate how I get rid of leftover meat loaf. (I grind it up in the food processor, add it to the spaghetti sauce, and tell everyone it's a new extra thick variety.)

But I'm afraid these acts would pale in comparison to those by the mother I read about who baked her son a World Trade Center birthday cake and put a chocolate King Kong on top of one of the towers.

I don't even like to think about the title of Mrs. Congeniality, since I doubt I could even be pleasant once I'd learned that all the other mothers enjoyed listening to their children tell them the entire plot of "Raiders of The Lost Ark."

Even if I made it to the finals, however, I'd surely be counted out in the spontaneous answer competition. You know the event I mean. It's when the master of ceremonies calls each contestant up individually and says, "Mrs. Michigan, can you tell the nice folks here and all the wonderful viewers at home what you would wish for if a genie suddenly appeared on this stage and granted you any three wishes in the world?"

And Mrs. Michigan, or Miss Michigan depending on the contest, blinks, swallows hard and says, "If I could have any three wishes in the world I'd ask for world peace, perfect happiness for all mankind, and a cure for the common cold."

I could never be that munificent. I'd say, "How about someone to do all my Christmas shopping? That includes wrapping too, of course. That's one. I'd like someone to invent bathtubs and shower stalls that clean themselves electronically. And I'd like dinner out for the rest of my life."

By the time they stopped booing I'd be out in the street and on my way home.

Thai cuisine unique, sophisticated and varied

Karen and Wanchai Sriuttamayotin display Thai cuisine, clockwise from upper left, roast beef salad, mee grob, hot and sour shrimp soup (in black bowls), tapioca with fruit (in white bowls); in center is a stuffed omelet.

NEW YORK — It is a cuisine that borrows from India, absorbs a bit of China, but remains uniquely its own.

And while it shares many ingredients with other Southeast Asian cultures, Thai food represents the most sophisticated, varied and developed taste in that region.

At least, this is the opinion of Wanchai Sriuttamayotin, a native of Bangkok whose wife, Karen, also shares his chauvinistic enthusiasm. And now they are preaching the word to their eager students at the New School Culinary Center in New York City.

"Sometimes it is very hard to explain what Thai food is," they admit. ". . . (it's) a cross between Indian and Chinese. But after that, it has its own taste. It has the stir-fry technique from China, curry from India, but the use of coriander, very hot pepper and dried shrimps is uniquely Thai. Then there is fish sauce, used in Vietnamese, Laotian, Cambodian, Filipino and Indonesian foods instead of salt. But the decoration of Thai is the best, it's the most sophisticated wide range of food. It's as artistic as Japanese, but Japanese is minimal, Thai is not."

No platter of food is served unadorned: Cucumbers are turned into flowers, scallions and hot peppers become curls of color. Even baskets of hot chilies or other vegetables displayed on the streets of Bangkok are arrang3d to please the eye, according to the Sriuttamayotins, who have just returned from a pilgrimage to his hometown.

"Bangkok has changed, the city is getting crowded three times as much. My lifestyle has also changed," said Wanchai, who came to New York 11 years ago to study at the New York Institute of Advertising. "There were some new creations, but basically the food was the same. The produce is available all year 'round and it's very good. Prices have jumped up a lot — they're very high for the people who live there. For us, they are half as much."

Since Bangkok's streets are filled with food stalls, no one has to cook at home unless he or she wants to. "Along the streets, there are vendors with compartments of roast pork fish balls, noodles and scallions. You pick and choose what you want," said Karen, who marveled at the wide variety of choices. Vendors hawk everything from noddle soup to sate, the popular skewers of barbecued meat with a hot peanut sauce, essentially a steal from Indonesia.

Hot is a thundering understatement. When the Thais say their food is hot, believe. "When you're in a restaurant, tell the waiter to mak3 it medium. The very smallest pepper are usually the hottest onces. I think green is hotter than red when fresh; when they're dried, red is hotter," said Karen, who spent one sleepless night bathing her hands in Bactine after working with the chili peppers all morning. "The other thing about Thai food is that in almost every dish, there is a balance between sweet and sour, hot and salty. Eve, a dessert can have a salty topping," she added.

"Salty flavors come from the fish sauce. And don't buy any Chinese or Filipino brands," cautioned Wanchai. This is not strictly chauvinism, he said; the Thai fish sauce is more delicate because of the processing m3thods. He recommends Squid Brand or Tiparos fish sauce, a clear red liquid made by fermenting anchoives and salt. While the heat of Thai food comes primarily from chili peppers, there are also hot soybean pastes and a hot sauce. "We use Siracha from Thailand. It's very good. There is mild, medium and strong; we use medium, but we used to use strong. Getting older . . .," he said, laughing. The sour taste comes mostly from lemons, limes, vinegar or lemon grass — literally a stalk available fresh (the preferred version) and dr8ed — but it can also come from tamarind. However, the Sriuttamayotins believe Thai chefs in New York restaurants tend to overuse that flavoring. "To our taste, tamarind isn't as fresh because you have to reconstitute it. Chefs who use it are probably from the northeast part of Thailand. From Bangkok, they will use lemons and limes instead. It's the classic urban versus peasant situation — Bangkok is wealthier," he said. "The sweet comes from sugar or coconut. Coconut milk is used in curries or sweet dishes, we use no milk products." If you decide not to make your own coconut milk or cream — a time-consuming process described in books devoted to Indonesians or Southeast Asian cooking — the Sriuttamayotins suggest buying frozen coconut milk from the Philippines; they believe the canned and frozen varieties from Thailan- are not as good.

Coriander, also known as cilantro or chinese parsley, is another important ingredient used both as a garnish and flavoring. It is available in some supermarkets and Oriental markets along with garlic and ginger, two other key ingredients. In Bangkok and the south, plain rice is widely used; in the north, sticky glutinous rice is more popular. The Sriuttamayotins theorized that the glutinous rice provides more substance needed in the cooler north. Noodles are also a major ingredient, a reflection of the Chinese influence. "There has been a lot of intermarriage between the Thais and Chinese," he said.

Thai food may appear complicated because of the number of new ingredients — new, at least to western cooks. However, it is not difficult, especially if you've tackled Chinese cooking. "We really do cook a lot of Thai food," said Karen, 2hose background is Slovak and Jewish. "We are both very busy, so we don't have much time. If you make a lot of curry and let it sta d in the refrigerator a couple days, it only gets better. The roast beef salad is easy and the filled omelet is very versatile."

The following recipes from the Sriuttamayotins do not require any special equipment, although a wok is handy. It is ess3ntial, however, that you have very sharp knives. And while decorating the plates is not critical, it does add to the appreciation of the meal.

Any of the canned products, once opened, keep indefinitely in the refrigerator and the lemon grass and makrut leaves, if dried, also have long shelf lives.

Mee grob is a classic Thai dish; in Bangkok it's sold on the streets. While not difficult to make, it does require advance preparation and must be served immediately. The stuffed omelet is extremely versatile and can be prepared very quickly; the shrimp soup is also quick to prepare as are the beef salad and dessert.

Jennifer Brennan's new book, "The Original Thai Cookbook" (Marek, $12.95), is the only one devoted solely to Thai food, although other cookbooks on Oriental food offer chapters on Thailand.

Tom yam kung
(Thai hot and sour shrimp soup)

4 cups water
1 tablespoon finely sliced fresh lemon grass or 2 teaspoons dried
4 to 5 fresh makrut leaves or 3 dried
1 tablespoon nam prik pao (roasted chili paste)
1 pound medium shrimp, peeled with tails left on
1-2 cup thinly sliced fresh mushrooms
3 tablespoons lemon juice or to taste
1 fresh red chili, finely sliced, or a pinch of dried chili flakes
2 tablespoons fish sauce or to taste
2 tablespoons chopped fresh coriander

1. Bring water to a boil; add lemon grass and makrut leaves. Let simmer about 5 minutes to extract flavor of the herbs. Bring back to the boil and add the nam prik pao; stir thoroughly.

2. Add shrimp and mushrooms, stir quickly and watch for the shrimp to turn pink. Do not overcook. Add lemon juice, chilies and fish sauce. Garnish with the coriander and serve immediately. Makes 4 services.

Saku lamyai

3 cups water
1 1-2 cups small tapioca pearls, do not wash
1 cup sugar
1 can rambutan or longan coconut cream
salt

1. Bring water to the boi and add tapicoa. Stir to prevent sticking. Reduce heat to as low as possible and cook, stirring frequently, until amost all of the pearls are translucent, about 15 to 20 minutes. Remove from heat and let stand another 5 minutes. Stir in sugar, allowing it to dissolve, then stir in the fruit and its liquid.

2. Serve in individual cups, topped with a few spoonsful of coconut cre$m mixed with a little salt. Serve warm or cold. Makes 6 8 servings.

Nua yuang nom tok
(Thai roast beef salad)

1 head romaine lettuce
1 large ripe tomato
1 large cucumber, peeled
1 red onion
1 fresh chili pepper, finely sliced or a good pinch of dried chili flakes juice of 2 limes
2 tablespoons fish sauce or to taste
2 large cloves garlic, pressed
1 1-2 teaspoons sugar
1 pound round steak

1. Arrange lettuce leaves on large serving dish. Finely slice tomatoes, cucumber and onion. Arrange them in layers over the lettuce, tomatoes first, then cucumber and onion. Mix ch8li pepper, lime juice, fish sauce, garlic and sugar and set aside.

2. Broil or grill steak to desired doneness. Slice thinly and lay over the vegetable. Serve immediately with the dressing. Makes 4 servings.

Mee grob
(Crispy Thai rice noodles)

2 to 3 eggs
vegetable oil
1-2 package sen mee (Thai rice noodles)
1 tablespoon onion, minced
1 tablespoon garlic, minced
1-4 pound pork, cut in thin, small slices
1-4 pound small shrimp, cleaned and deveined but with tails left on
1-4 pound chicken, cut into thin, small slices
2 tablespoons pickled garlic, minced
2 teaspoons lemon peel, minced
1 tablespoon yellow soybean paste
4 tablespoons lemon juice
1 tablespoons fish sauce
5 to 6 tablespoons sugar
1 tablespoon Thai-style tomato paste

For garnish:
3 cups raw bean sprouts, rinsed
4 red chilies, sliced thinly on the diagonal
fresh coriander springs

1. Beat the eggs well. In a small frying pan, add about half an inch of oil. Heat oil, until a small piece of egg fries quickly. Using your fingers, drizzle a small amount of egg into the hot oil, trying to shape it into long threads. The egg will good very quickly. Turn over to brown other side, then drain immediately on paper towels. Repeat using remaining egg. Set aside.

2. Divide the sen mee (Thai noodles) into 3 equal portions, twisting and breaking the noodles with your hands. In a wok or large frying pay, heat oil for deep-frying. Test the oil with a small piece of noodle — when it puffs up instantly, the oil is ready. Add the noodles by large handfuls, turing noodles once, then removing very quickly. The noodles should not brown. Let drain on paper towels in a large colander. Repeat, using all noodles.

3. Remove all but 3 tablespoons of the oil. Add the onion and garlic and fry briefly. Add the pork, shrimp and chicken and stir-fry quickly until all are done. Push the meats to the edges of the pan, leaving a well in the center.

4. Combine pickled garlic, lemon peel, soy paste, lemon juice, vinegar, fish sa7ce, sugar and tomato paste. Stir into the center of the pan and cook briefly. Taste and adjust seasoning.

5. Holding the meats b$ck in the pan, pour the sauce over the noodles and using chopstick , toss gently to coat. Place the noodles on a serving platter and arrange the meats as a border around them. Arrange the bean sprouts around the noodles as well. Sprinkle the noodles with the sliced chilies, coriander sprigs and egg threads. Serve immediately. Makes 4 servings.

Kai yat sai
(Thai stuffed omelet)

1 tablespoon oil
1 tablespoon minced garlic
1 tablespoon minced ginger
1 small onion, finely sliced
1-4 pound ground beef or pork
1 tablespoon soy sauce dash ugar
fish sauce to taste
1-2 cup thinly sliced mushrooms
1-2 cup sliced bamboo shoots
3 eggs, beaten
fresh coriander, for garnish

1. Heat oil, add garlic and ginger and stir-fry quickly. Add onion and stir-fry until golden. Add beef (or pork) and stif-fry until browned. Season mixture with soy sauce, s7gar and fish sauce to taste. Add mushrooms and bamboo shoots and stir-fry just a minute more. Set mixture aside.

2. In a large, flat pan, heat 1 tablespoon oil until quite hot. Add eggs, swirling them around quickly so they coat the pan. When they no longer stick to the bottom and are set on top, slide the omelet onto a large warmed plate. Place the filling in the middle and fold the sides up, like a box, to form a square enclosure for the filling. Place another warmed plate on top and invert. Serve immediately, garnished with fresh coriander. Makes 2 servings.

Mayans vanished; no one knows why

The Mayan civilization in Guatemala, which stretched north through Mexico's Yucatan Peninsula, built enormous temples, palaces and magnificent metropolises like Tikal. It reached its peak between A.D. 250 and 900.

The Mayans developed a fine art style, a writing system, an accurate calendar — and then mysteriously vanished. Where once a million Mayans lived, now only about 40,000 survive, scattered in tiny villages.

Gator countries

MIAMI, Fla. (AP) — Alligators are an aquatic reptile native to only the United States and China.

In this country they are found in swamps and sluggish streams from North Carolina to Florida and along the Gulf coast.

Alligators hibernate at least two months during the winter. Their eyeballs are located outside of the skull, and alligators have the ability to grow a new tooth if one breaks off.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Old-fashioned vinegar candy

DEAR HELOISE:

I'd sure love to have the old-time recipe for vinegar candy. It's clear when you cook it but turns white when you pull it. Delicious!

Nothing more fun than going to a candy pull in cold weather. Such memories! — Edith Smith

The simplest things in life seem to hold the most meaning.

And what's simpler than vinegar! My, that stuff gets around! How can something so sour taste so sweet? Makes the cycle, I guess, from sweet fruit to sour fermentation, back to delicious candy. It's all in how you use it...

I did come across a recipe that's been handed down and it might be just the one you're loooking for. Hope so.

Using a medium saucepan, put in three cups of sugar, one-half cup vinegar and one cup water. Stir well before you put it on the stove.

Cook this over low heat about 8 to 10 minutes until it reaches the softball stage (228F).

Add a quarter stick of butter or margarine and one teaspoon vanilla. Pour the mixture onto a buttered platter and let it cool enough so you can handle it.

Now for the fun part, as Mrs. Smith calls it. Pick up the blob and begin to pull it. The more you pull, the whiter it gets.

When it has reached the right consistency, cut into small pieces with a pair of scissors. They are easier to use than a knife.

You'll need to keep a pat of butter handy to rub on your fingers while pulling that stuff, though, or you'll find yourself all stuck up.

Now, gather the family around and have some old-fashioned fun! — Heloise

HINTS FROM HIM

Dear Heloise: Here's one for college students: As a recent graduate, I still remember the money I used to spend on highlighter markers! Can you believe it!

They got expensive after buying so many, so here is how I survived:

I bought a bottle of yellow (or whatever color you highlight with) food coloring. When my highlighter ran dry, I'd soak the tip of it in the food coloring for about 10 minutes.

It's a little messier but you can also pull out the cotton tip and put a little of the food coloring into the plastic body of the pen, replacing the tip.

Voila! New highlighter! Great for felt-tip pens too. Happy scribbling!

Now if I could only find a job! — Brian Green

COOL COFFEE

Dear Heloise: Fill plastic ice cube trays with milk and freeze; then put these in a plastic bag.

Next time you serve hot coffee, drop in a milk cube and it's ready to drink. — Carolyn Hale

SILK FLOWERS

Dear Heloise: I have an even quicker way of cleaning those silk flower arrangements, and there's no worry about rearranging them or trying to clean the whole bouquet at one time.

Just pluck each flower head off the stem and gently swish it in lukewarm water.

Give a few shakes to remove excess water, then return it to its stem.

Repeat the process until you have cleaned all the flowers. — Vicki White

This worked on two of my arrangements. Be sure and test washing one flower to see if it holds up before doing the whole bunch. — Heloise.

Film society thinks small

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — It's an aging, featureless storefront with no glittering marquee and only 70 seats inside, but 2,000 South Carolinians say this is the best place in the state to see a movie.

Most of these dedicated film fanciers are from Columbia, but many come from Charleston, Aiken, Greenville and beyond to sip French coffee or fruit juice, munch imported pastry and watch movies that will never make it to the shopping malls.

The place is Nickelodeon, just off the Statehouse square. Years ago it was a little bank, and the safe-deposit box is still taking up precious space behind the concession stand.

A small group of cinema buffs formed the Columbia Film Society in 1979, signed up 200 members and leased the place, installing a tiny lobby, seats and a rickety portable movie machine.

Today there's a big Eastman projector in the booth and the membership has multiplied tenfold. But managers James Wilson and Dale Campbell are still deliberately thinking small.

"Watching a film at Nickelodeon is really an intimate experience," says Campbell. "It's like a home away from home. There are people who are down here three nights a week with a cup of coffee and a pastry."

There's evidently something special about snuggling into a small room with a crowd of high-minded film aficionados to watch the flicker of images that not just anybody would pay to see.

"Our volunteer workers tell us this is one reason they keep coming back," Campbell says. "These are the kind of people they like to meet."

Nickelodeon fare is a mixed bag. There is the occasional revival of a commercial success, like "A Man for All Seasons." There are hardy perennials like the Marx Brothers and Humphrey Bogart, and such relatively obscure offerings as "Dersu Uzala" or "Wiseblood."

Wilson and Campbell try to balance domestic and import, classic and experiment, sublime and ridiculous.

"There's a lot of hit and miss," Wilson says. "You don't always know what will sell and what won't."

Generally Nickelodeon sells. Many times it sells out, thanks to Wilson's and Campbell's avid attention to big city reviews and trade publications.

They say professionalism, from film selection to box office to projection room, is the key to their success. Commercial theaters, they claim, are too often run by absentee mass marketers with young, untrained help.

"The only way to run a theater is to have people working there who are really interested in the medium of film," Campbell says.

Nickelodeon customers must either be annual members for $10 a year plus $2 per film, or pay an extra buck at the box office for a temporary membership. With a $25 annual membership, you can bring two guests inside for the $2 admission.

Non-profit status and no advertising gives Nickelodeon access to low rentals from distributors who deal with the so-called "non-theatrical" circuit.

The formula is working so well that Wilson and Campbell are scouting around for a slightly larger house, although their lease will keep them at their current address for another couple of years.

But they don't want to lose the amiable blend of serious cinema buffing and amusement which seems to be making the theater a modest cultural landmark in the state.

DEAR ABBY

Woman's outlook turns pain to joy

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: "Sue in San Francisco" wrote: "Recently, I received a phone call from the 35-year-old illegitimate daughter of my deceased husband. She said she was anxious to know something about her father. She knew before contacting me that she had been conceived within six months after my marriage and that the affair with her mother, of which I had no knowledge, was an ongoing thing since before our marriage. She also knew that her father had died some years ago."

Sue closed with, "I don't need this woman to enter my life as a constant reminder of my late husband's infidelity. Abby, I beg you to ask those who seek their natural parents to please consider the heartaches they can bring to others in order to satisfy their own curiosity."

I had been married only seven months when my husband told me that his son by another woman had just been born. I recall that I literally "froze." But the next morning I made up my mind that I would acknowledge that child so he could bear our surname. (My mother-in-law's advice was, "Leave him in the street where he belongs.")

Although today my husband is in a mental hospital and will not get better, our own daughter, 9, and I make twice-yearly visits to her stepbrother of whom she is very proud. He has also brought me a great deal of joy, and his own mother has done a splendid job of bringing him up. Sign me ... BARRY'S STEPMOTHER

DEAR STEPMOTHER: There must be a special place in heaven reserved for people like you, but I hope you don't have to wait that long for your reward. Bless you for your generous, understanding heart.

DEAR ABBY: A while back someone wrote in asking if pigs made good pets. May I add my 2 cents' worth? Pigs may be cute when they are little piglets, but when they grow up to be hogs, they are mean and dangerous. And they will eat anything! I know. My husband (at 71) was knocked down by a sow. He was alone at the time, and the fall rendered him unconscious, and before anyone could get to him the sow had killed him. Once a sow tastes blood, she continues to eat and there is no stopping her.

All farmers know this, Abby, and they never turn their backs on a hog or sow. I hope you print this letter. It may save someone from going through what I experienced. — WITHHOLD MY NAME

DEAR ABBY: You forgot to tell that man who has a large backyard and a nice piece of property that it won't stay that way if he puts a pig back there.

First of all, a pig is going to "root" up all the grass so he can have a wallowing hole. This wallowing hole will have a very unpleasant odor after being used as a bathroom and playground combined, and before long, the whole neighborhood will know where "Miss Piggy" lives.

If this man can train the pig to come inside and use the bathroom, bathe daily, use a good deodorant, keep himself clean and eat like a person, then I would say he has a wonderful pet that probably smells better than some people. — LIVES IN HOG COUNTRY

TOPAZ ISN'T WHAT IT USED TO BE
History tells us that hundreds of years ago Topazios was a fog-enshrouded island in the Red Sea where pirates of old often landed. As the sailors searched for drinking water, they sometimes stumbled upon bright yellowish-green pebbles to add to their coffers. These also were called "Topazios," Greek for "to guess." The island and the gemstones were probably given their names because the fog made them so difficult to find. These first gemstones to be called topaz, however, were probably not what we know today by that name. Most likely they were peridot, and the island was probably St. Island, a location known to be rich in this greenish-yellow gem.
For many centuries all yellowish stones were called topaz. The gem we call topaz today was then qualified as "Brazilian topaz" or "Saxony topaz."
Why all the confusion; Well, the early names given to gems were based on their color, appearance or surroundings. Modern scientists have more sophisticated ways of classifying minerals. They consider their chemical composition and physical and optical characteristics.
The mineral now called topaz is a flousilicate of aluminum. The most familiar colors range from yellowish-brown to red. The gem also occurs in a colorless variety and light greenish-blue which resembles aquamarine.
If you are interested in this or any other gems, I welcome questions any time. Just like any other person who loves his or her work, I've got lots of tales (and facts); to tell.

2 tsp. vanilla
9½ cups unsifted flour
4 eggs, slightly beaten

Flatten each part into an oval about ¾ inch thick. Brush with melted butter. Cut oval in three strips and braid together to form a loaf. Place in pan, cover and let rise in warm place until double. Bake in a hot oven (425 degrees) for 10 minutes. Reduce the temperature to 350 degrees and bake for 25 to 30 minutes longer.

GOLDEN PUMPKIN ROLLS
Soften 1 package active dry yeast in ¼ cup warm water (110 degrees). Scald 1 cup milk; stir in 2 tblsp. each shortening and sugar, 1 tsp. salt and ½ cup canned pumpkin; cool to lukewarm. Add 2 cups sifted all-purpose flour, beat smooth. Beat in yeast and one slightly beaten egg. Stir in 3 to 3½ cups sifted all-purpose flour, or enough for soft dough. On lightly floured surface, knead 8-10 minutes. (Don't skimp on this step). Place in greased bowl, turning to grease surface. Cover; let rise until double, about 1¾ hours. Punch down, cover; let rest 10 minutes. Form into 32 balls. Place in 2 greased 9x9x2-inch baking pans. Cover; let double, about 50 minutes. Bake in hot oven, 400 degrees, 15 minutes or until done. Makes 32.

These are very moist and good for the holidays, as they are colorful.

CANNELLONI TOMATO SAUCE (Makes 3 cups):

I always start with the tomato sauce so it can cook while I go about preparing the rest of my recipe for Cannelloni.

4 tblsp. olive oil
2 tsp. finely chopped garlic
1 cup finely chopped onions
4 cups Italian plum or whole-packed tomatoes, coarsely chopped but not drained
6 tblsp. tomato paste
1 bay leaf
1 tblsp. dried oregano
2 tsp. dried basil
2 tsp. sugar
1½ tsp. salt
Freshly ground black pepper

Using a 3-4 quart enameled or stainless steel saucepan, heat the olive oil until a light haze forms over it. Add the onions and garlic and cook them over moderate heat for 1 to 8 minutes, or until they are soft but not browned. Add the tomatoes, tomato paste, bay leaf, oregano, basil, sugar, salt and a few grindings of pepper. Reduce the heat to very low and simmer, with the pan partially covered, for about 50 minutes. Stir occasionally.

Press the sauce through a fine sieve (or food mill) into a bowl or pan. Taste for seasoning.

PASTA TUBES FILLED WITH MEAT AND BAKED IN CREAM AND TOMATO SAUCE:

Pasta Tubes:

In a 3-4 quart enameled or stainless steel saucepan bring salted water to a boil. Drop in the pieces of pasta and stir gently with a wooden spoon or fork for a few moments to prevent it from sticking to the bottom of the pot or to one another. Then follow directions on the box and cook accordingly. Drain, set aside and spread the pasta pieces side by side on paper towels.

Filling:

2 tblsp. olive oil
¼ cup finely chopped onions
1¼ tsp. chopped garlic
1 10-oz. package frozen chopped spinach, defrosted, squeezed completely dry and chopped again (about ¾ cup)
2 tblsp. butter
1 pound ground beef steak, or 1 cup finely chopped leftover beef
2 chicken livers
5 tblsp. Parmesan cheese
2 tblsp. heavy cream
2 eggs, lightly beaten
½ tsp. dried oregano, crumbled
Salt
Freshly ground pepper

Heat the olive oil in an 8 to 10 inch skillet. Add the garlic and onions and over moderate heat, stirring frequenly, cook for 7-8 minutes until they are soft but not brown. Stir in the spinach and cook, stirring constantly, for 3 or 4 minutes. When all the moisture has boiled away and the spinach sticks lightly to the pan, transfer it to a large mixing bowl. In the same skillet, melt 1 tblsp. butter and lightly brown the ground meat, stirring enough to break up any lumps. Drain on paper towels, then add meat to the onion-spinach mixture. Then melt one more tablespoon of butter in the skillet and cook the livers, turning them frequently, for 3 or 4 minutes, until they are lightly browned, somewhat firm and pink inside. Chop them coarsely. Then add them to the mixture in the bowl along with 5 tblsp. of Parmesan cheese, 2 tblsp. of cream, the eggs and oregano. With a wooden spoon, mix the ingredients together, gently but thoroughly. Taste and season with salt and pepper.

BESCIAMELLA FOR CANNELLONI

Besciamella:

4 tblsp. butter
4 tblsp. flour
1 cup milk
1 cup heavy cream
1 tsp. salt
1/8 tsp. white pepper

In a heavy 2 or 3 quart saucepan, melt the butter over moderate heat. Remove the pan from heat and stir in the flour. Pour in the milk and cream all at once, whisking constantly until the flour is partially dissolved. Then return the pan to high heat and cook, stirring constantly with the whisk. When the sauce comes to a boil and is smooth, reduce the heat. Simmer, still stirring, for 2 or 3 minutes longer, or until the sauce is thick enough to coat the wires of the whisk heavily. Remove the sauce from the heat, and season with salt and white pepper.

Topping:

3 cups tomato sauce (refer to Tomato Sauce)
4 tblsp. freshly grated imported Parmesan cheese
2 tblsp. butter, cut in tiny pieces

ASSEMBLING AND BAKING THE CANNELLONI:

Preheat oven to 375 degrees. Fill the manicotti shells with the filling. Pour just a film of the tomato sauce into two 4x14-inch shallow baking and serving dishes. Lay the cannelloni side by side in one layer on the tomato sauce. Pour the besciamella over it and spoon the rest of the tomato sauce on top. Scatter in 4 tblsp. of grated cheese and dot with 2 tblsp. butter. Bake the cannelloni uncovered in the middle of the oven 20 minutes, or until the cheese is melted and the sauce bubbling. Slide the baking dishes under a hot broiler for 30 seconds to brown the top. Serve the cannelloni directly from the baking dish.

TOMATO BREAD

1 stick margarine or ½ cup
1 tsp. garlic powder
½ tsp. basil
1 loaf French style bread
Mozzarella cheese
1 tsp. salt
½ tsp. pepper
1 tsp. oregano
Sliced tomatoes, about 3 medium size

Mix margarine, garlic powder, pepper, basil and oregano. Cut bread lengthwise so you have 2 long slices (1 top, 1 bottom). Spread margarine mixture on bread. Top with tomatoes and sprinkle with salt. Top with cheese. Bake at 350 degrees 10 minutes or until cheese melts.

I use grated cheese; you can use any type of cheese you have on hand. Also you might try spreading horseradish sauce on top of margarine mixture. Then complete the recipe.

SPANISH MACARONI

This is a large amount and seems complicated, but it is not.

1 pound macaroni
3 sections garlic, chopped
1 cup grated Longhorn cheese
1 large can tomato juice
½ cup salad oil or olive oil

Jar of stuffed olives (can use salad olives, they are cheaper), about 1½ or more cups in size

Par boil macaroni until good and tender. Drain, shower with cold water. Put oil in big pot or roaster, mince garlic and let cook SLOW, do not brown. Put macaroni in and mix well and then add tomato juice and stir in other ingredients and bake at 300 degrees for 30-40 minutes. Cook and let set day or at least half a day before using. Best cooked the day before, and when warming (if you are just going to eat half of it or more) just warm what you want to eat and add a little tomato juice to moisten it.

SAUSAGE AND CHEESE DIP

1 pound sausage
1 pound Velveeta cheese
½ cup minced onion
¼ cup Picante sauce
1 can crem of mushroom soup
½ tsp. garlic powder

Brown sausage and drain. Melt cheese in double boiler. Pour sausage into cheese and mix other ingredients.

This is also great for sandwich spread.

If you do not use all, it may be kept in refrigerator for up to four days; if it is too thick after a day or so, it can be thinned by heating and adding a small amount of milk.

By MRS. GEORGE R. DAVIS

BEANBURGERS

1 cup dried lentils
½ cup bread crumbs (whole wheat or mixed grain)
¼ cup finely chopped onion
3 tblsp. wheat germ
1 tblsp. vinegar
1 tblsp. mustard
½ teasp. salt
¼ teasp. garlic powder
1 egg, beaten
3 tblsp. butter
Sliced cheddar cheese
Other topping ingredients, such as mushrooms, jalapenos
6 sesame seed rolls

Rinse dried lentils under cold water after sorting. Place in a large saucepan and cover with cold water. Let stand overnight in the refrigerator. Bring to a boil, then reduce heat to low and cook for several hours, or until soft, the next day. Drain; combine with next 8 ingredients. Divide mixture into 6 equal parts and form each patty. In a large skillet, fry patties in butter for 3-5 minutes on each side. As second side is cookin, put cheese and any additional ingredients on each patty. Serve on rolls. Good with potato chips or zucchini french fries.

Severely deformed fish, such as the smallmouth bass shown in this x-ray, have been discovered in Lake Chatuge in northern Georgia and may be the result of acid rain, according to Georgia Chief of Fisheries Mike Gennings. Auburn University scientists could find no genetic, nutritional or water temperature changes that could have caused the deformities. Some rain in the acid rain range has been reported in Georgia.

Labor-Reagan truce possible?

NEW YORK (AP) — The AFL-CIO, its leadership and financial support set for the next two years, is pondering what kind of truce might be arranged with the Reagan administration.

The four-day biennial AFL-CIO convention closed the same way it opened — with federation President Bane Kirkland polling members of the executive council to determine who will join him in accepting President Reagan's invitation to a White House peacemaking session on Dec. 2.

Reagan's invitation was delivered to Kirkland Saturday, two days before the labor federation's convention opened. And following Thursday's final convention session, the AFL-CIO chief broached the matter anew with the 34 other labor leaders who sit on the executive council, the federation's top policy-making body.

During the convention itself, a week in which the AFL-CIO and its Democratic Party allies vented their anger over Reagan's policies, Kirkland refused to discuss any effort to smooth relations with the administration and didn't say anything publicly about the White House invitation.

All meetings of the council are closed to the public, but AFL-CIO spokesman Saul Miller said after Thursday's session that all but five members of the council would go.

Glenn Watts, president of the Communications Workers of America, said he is one of those refusing to go.

"It just strikes me as some kind of counter move on their part," he said. "I've seen nothing that shows a useful dialogue can be carried out."

William Winpisinger, fiery leader of the International Association of Machinists and a member of the Democratic National Committee, also has refused to take part in the meeting. He complained earlier in the week that "it would be a chance for him (Reagan) to co-opt us with the weight of the presidency."

Miller said another member of the council who won't attend is Jerry Wurf, president of the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees. Wurf has been ill, and was unable to attend this convention.

Miller said two other council members — John DeConcini of the Bakery, Confectionary and Tobacco Workers union, and James Hatfield of the Glass Bottle Workers — also declined.

At Thursday's closing session, the 900 AFL-CIO convention delegates renewed a call for Reagan to rehire air traffic controllers who struck the government Aug. 3 and were fired two days later.

The administration has insisted all along that it is rebuilding the air traffic control system with new workers, and that it will not consider any kind of amnesty for those who walked out.

Robert E. Poli, president of the now-decertified Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization, thanked fellow unionists for their support and apologized for failing to consult with other union leaders before calling the strike.

AFL-CIO leaders consolidated a host of pro-PATCO resolutions into one statement, knocking down in the process a proposed national one-day "show of support" that could have led to widespread walkouts.

Are money-market funds worth it?

By CHET CURRIER
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — As the 1981 recession deepens, a new test is shaping up for the booming money-market mutual funds.

The high interest rates that have contributed so much to their popularity suddenly aren't so high. The funds' average yield, as reported by Donoghue's Money Fund Report of Holliston, Mass., now stands at about 14½ percent, down from 17 just a couple of months ago.

Financial experts, meanwhile, are engaged in a loud debate over how well the funds might weather the storm should the slumping economy lead to some sort of credit crisis.

There remain many people who regard the funds as a safe and sound investment, even though they carry no guarantees like the federal insurance that covers bank and savings deposits.

And legions of investors seem to agree with that assessment. They have poured close to $100 billion into the funds this year, more than doubling the industry's total assets.

But some observers lately have raised new questions about the funds' heavy investments in commercial paper — unsecured short-term IOUs issued by corporations and financial companies.

The commercial paper market has grown dramatically of late. In September, the Federal Reserve Bank of New York reports, commercial paper outstanding increased by a record $8.26 billion to $165.38 billion.

Of that total, about a third is owned by the money funds, which also invest in such other debt instruments as Treasury bills and bank certificates of deposit.

Ample gas supplies expected

Thanksgiving weekend motorists should find ample supplies of gasoline at mostly lower prices than they paid during the Labor Day weekend.

A survey of 325 service stations conducted by the American Automobile Association shows that prices at self-service pumps have declined by as much as 1.3 cents per gallon since Labor Day. Full-service prices rose slightly, except for premium unleaded fuel, which fell in price by 2.1 cents per gallon.

According to AAA, average gasoline prices in the Midland-Odessa area are: full service, regular, 133.3 cents per gallon; unleaded, 136.9; and premium unleaded, 137.7. Self-service prices are: regular, 120.8 cents per gallon; and unleaded, 126.7 cents.

Declining gasoline prices continue a pattern which began last March, when prices reached their highest point following decontrol two months earlier. Current prices are about six cents a gallon lower than they were in March, though still 10 to 15 cents a gallon higher than they were last Thanksgiving.

The survey showed that gasoline availability will be excellent throughout the weekend except for Thanksgiving Day itself, when nearly half the stations will be closed.

Current average full-service gasoline prices, with September's prices in parentheses, are: regular, $1.336 ($133.1); unleaded, $1.387 (1.384); and premium unleaded, $1.431 (1.452). Average self-service prices are: regular, $1.213 (1.219); unleaded, 1.281 (1.294); and premium unleaded, 1.352 (1.358). The average price of diesel fuel is $1.241 per gallon, compared to $1.205 in September.

Airline announces new flight routes

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Texas International will start flying the only non-stop air service between San Antonio and Albuquerque and San Antonio and Amarillo as of Dec. 1, airline officials have announced.

The airline said it also would begin new direct service from here to Denver and Salt Lake City.

"We are excited about the prospects of new service from San Antonio to these four important destinations, and our new, low fares mean both business and pleasure travelers can take advantage of TI flights," said Ben Karr, director of marketing.

Karr said the airline's "Peanut Fares" of $80 and $85 would apply to the Albuquerque and Amarillo flights, respectively, and of $136 and $165 to the Denver and Salt Lake City flights, respectively.

TI's daily flight to Albuquerque will depart at 10:15 a.m., with the return flight set for 3:14 p.m. The Amarillo flight will depart at 6:18 a.m., with return scheduled at 8:07 p.m. Karr said the Albuquerque flight would continue to Salt Lake City, and the Amarillo flight will continue to Denver.

Handicap committee pushes for amendment

DENVER (AP) — Colorado schools should educate severely handicapped children, not teach them living skills like toilet training, an interim legislative committee has agreed.

The Interim Committee on Exceptional Children voted 7-1 Wednesday to urge such an amendment to the state's handicapped education law during the 1982 session.

Colorado Commissioner of Education Calvin Frazier recommended most of the proposals the committee approved. They are an attempt to provide clear guidelines to Colorado's 181 school districts — not to limit education of handicapped children, he said.

In 1980, former State Rep. Tom Tancredo, R-Arvada, who was chairman of the House Education Committee, pushed for a study that eventually concluded that at least half — maybe three-quarters — of the 26,837 Colorado children then in handicapped classes did not belong there.

Tancredo now heads the regional office of the U.S. Department of Education.

Does music make the man?

By FREDERICK P. SZYDLIK
Hearst Feature Service

ALBANY — If clothes make the man, what do his musical instruments do for him?

If the findings of two researchers are to believed, trombone players are likely to be loud, pushy and virile. They might be accused of blowing their own horns.

Drummers undergo even more drastic personality modification, thanks to their instruments. They're loud, extroverted and, ahem, sexually active.

Oboe players, on the other hand, are quiet, intelligent and maybe a little effeminate. Apart from an occasional lilting melody during a moment of quiet, you wouldn't know oboe players were around if someone didn't point them out to you.

Viola players are fairly inconspicuous, too. They're very smart and very sensitive, but a bit bashful and not too good at athletic pursuits. You don't find many viola players in the National Football League.

Stereotypes — that's what they are, all stereotypes. They are the kind of easy images and pigeon-holing perceptions of musicians that many people — including musicians themselves — take as gospel, according to a study conducted by Union College assistant psychology professor Jack P. Lipton and junior psychology major Scott Builione.

Why would anyone care what people's stereotypes of musicians were?

Lipton sees his study as fitting into a broader field of investigation having to do with general perceptions, stereotypes, racism and sexism.

"An orchestra is like a little culture," Lipton said, "with little subcultures within it. It's somewhat a model of a larger society."

Builione explained that the question he and Lipton originally wanted to answer was why people select the instruments they do: Is there something conscious or unconscious that makes a child play the piano instead of the French horn? What are the overlapping traits in people who play the same instruments? What is it they have in common?

To gather data for their project, Lipton and Builione surveyed 100 local high school musicians, asking them for personal information as well as how they rated their own athletic ability, sensitivity, like or dislike of alcohol and how them viewed themselves intellectually.

Also, the questionnaire asked the musicians how they perceived the members of the other sections of their orchestra or band.

The questionnaire confirmed that players in each group of instruments — brass, percussion, woodwind and strings — are stereotyped as to personality and character.

Percussion members were thought of as being loud. Woodwind players were more quiet and intelligent. Brass players were perceived as outgoing, loud and macho. And members of the string section were thought of as sensitive and introverted and as being the most intelligent and the least athletic.

Where do these stereotypes come from? "Think of the trumpet," Builione said. "You go to ao concert and you can't miss hearing the trumpet. Its part is always going to stand out. It's going to be noticed. So the person who plays a trumpet is thought of as being extroverted and loud."

An important question Builione admits he has no anwer to is: Does the personality of the musician determine what instrument he winds up playing, or does the musician's extended experience with a particular instrument affect his personality? The survey only asked the opinions of high school musicians, regarded as a "limited base sample."

"I do not feel comfortable generalizing about all musicians based on that sample," Builione said. "That's why we want to do a second study with larger, adult orchestras, to increase the data base."

Will they meet the deadline this year?

WASHINGTON (AP) — It always sounds like doomsday — the government is going to run out of money and shut down at the stroke of midnight because Congress hasn't passed the appropriations to keep it going. That never quite happens.

And this season's rendition is likely to run to form, with dire forecasts but no lasting disruptions of the federal machine.

Appropriations have lapsed in the past, once for a 12-day span, without anything really stopping. During that lengthy hiatus, two years ago, some government checks were delayed, some paydays postponed and some programs stalled. Then Congress acted and everything went back to normal.

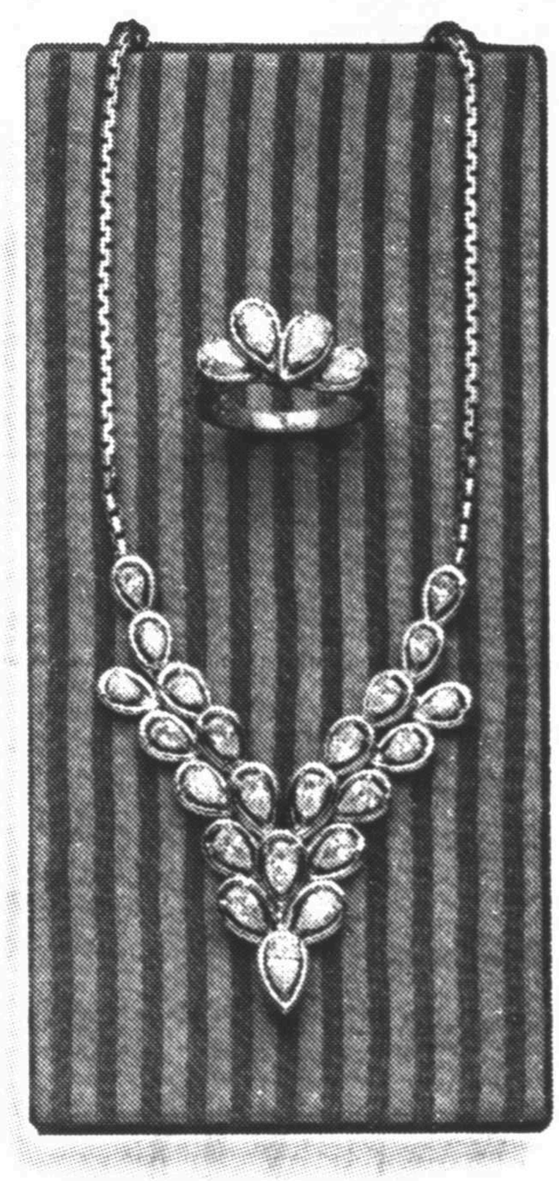

There is one unusual feature in the current appropriations dispute between President Reagan and Congress. It is about appropriations.

After Farmers' disappointment last year...

Lewisville harvests bumper crop in 1981

BY TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

LEWISVILLE—It's funny how things work out sometimes. This year was supposed to be the rebuilding year for the Lewisville Farmers. Last year was the year every one expected big things out of the plow jockeys.

So what happened. In 1980, Lewisville stumbled to a 4-5-1 record and this year the Farmers breezed to a 10-0 mark and will battle Odessa Permian in a bidistrict battle of unbeatens at Odessa's W.T. Barrett Stadium at 2 p.m. Saturday.

"In 1979 we defeated Abilene Cooper in bidistrict and went to the state semifinals," recalled Coach Neal Wilson. "So with six defensive starters and three offensive starters returning, some people even picked us No. 1 in the state. As it turned out we just didn't play very well."

Next year, Wilson could find himself in the same spot he was in a year ago, coaching a team with great expectations. This year's team has seven underclass men on defense and four on offense. "I just hope we play better next year," says Wilson.

HOWEVER, last year was the exception. Wilson, who played college ball under Odus Mitchell at North Texas State, is in his fourth year at Lewisville and has three district 6-5A titles to show for it.

Before that he was at Boswell where his teams won district titles in four of seven years, "And in my last year we got to the state finals before losing to Brownwood."

Now in his 16th year of coaching, he won two district titles at Decatur before moving to Boswell.

Against 5-5A, his Lewisville teams are 1-1 in bidistrict competition. The Farmers were beaten by Permian three years ago, 15-7.

"WE'VE PLAYED Permian before and we've played three teams that have run Permian's basic offense and defense, the Wing-T and 5-2, so we won't be seeing anything new," says Wilson.

However, none played either the way Permian does. "It's a typical Permian team, great defense and a ball control offense. They don't make mistakes and we'll have to play errorless ball to beat them."

As to how this Permian team compares with last year's state champs and the team Lewisville faced in 1978, "Defensively about the same...offensively , perhaps perhaps not as much firepower," Wilson answers candidly.

LEWISVILLE operates out of the wishbone and is a basic 5-2 on defense. The Murphy brothers fuel the attack. Dwayne has gained 1,200 yards rushing and brother Marvin 750.

Ron Bills, the Farmers' quarterback, has rushed for 500 yards and passed for another 350-to-400 yards. His favorite receiver is Donald Hooten, who has caught two TD passes.

"We don't throw that often, maybe five times a game," says Wilson.

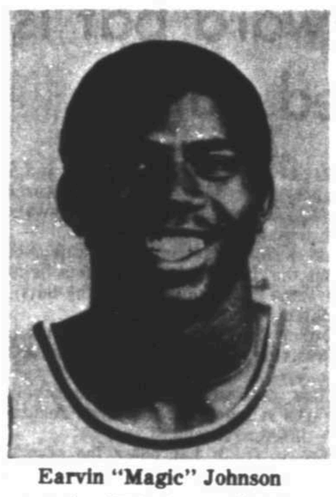

Defensively, safeties Mark Latham and Dwayne Mosley and linebackers Mark Martinez and Rodney Murphy, the brother of the other offensive Murphys are the pillars of strength.

Lakers can coach in stunning move

Westhead out; Magic stays in LA soap opera

Paul Westhead

Earvin "Magic" Johnson

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Los Angeles Lakers, less than a day after Earvin "Magic" Johnson's outburst of discontent, made a stunning change in leadership when owner Jerry Buss fired Paul Westhead as head coach and appointed Pat Riley and Jerry West his successors.

BUSS ANNOUNCED at a news conference Thursday that Westhead was out and assistant coach Riley and Lakers' special consultant West would be in charge. Buss said of the dual coaching arrangment: "I did not want to specifically make someone head coach and someone else the assistan' coach."

Riley and West said they expect to work out details later about each's responsibilities, but they also indicated West would be the offensive coach and be subordinate to Riley. Both are former Lakers players, and West coached the team for three years beginning in 1976.

The shakeup came on the heels of Johnson's statement Wednesday night that he was not having fun and wanted to be traded.

Westhead guided the Lakers to the NBA championship in 1980 and the team had won seven of 11 games this season as the players adjusted to a new offensive scheme installed by the coach. But Johnson erupted after a 113-110 Lakers' victory at Utah, saying he was not happy and that he and Westhead "did not see eye to eye."

BUSS, HOWEVER, said Johnson's comments had nothing to do with his decision to fire the coach.

"In the best interests of the entire Lakers organization, I decided to relieve Westhead," said Buss, who spoke with some of the players after the team flew back to town Thursday morning. "I am dedicated to providing the Los Angeles fans an exciting brand of basketball."

He said he was close to making a decision on the coaching situation last Sunday but waited because it was a very big step, with millions of dollars involved.

Buss said his decision was "based on the appearance of the team. I am doing what every single person believed I had to do."

"Obviously it was a difficult decision for us," said Buss, whose club won the NBA title in 1980, his first year as its owner. "There is no way to criticize anybody. I was disappointed in not seeing an exciting team once again. This started after the first or second game."

Although the owner indicated Riley would be in charge of the defense and West the offense, West said: "As I see it, my role is as an assistant coach to Pat Riley. I'm going to work for Pat.

"This will not be a permanent situation for me. I will feel much more confident with Pat taking over. He has ideas and I have ideas.

"I don't think the changes will be very major. I'll be here until Pat can get along by himself. Nobody is happy about this situation (the firing of the coach)."

RILEY, ASKED if West would be his assistant, said, "That's what he expressed to me. He'll have input into the game — everything. That's the only way we can work together."

Riley has been an assistant the past two years.

West played 14 years with the club and led the team in scoring nine times. He was selected to play in the NBA All-Star Game 13 consecutive years and has been inducted into the NBA Hall of Fame.

The Lakers will make their first appearance under the Riley-West duo tonight against the San Antonio Spurs at the Forum.

Johnson, 22, was the catalyst of the Lakers' NBA championship two seasons ago. Last summer, the former Michigan State standout signed a $1 million per year, 25-year contract, starting in the 1984-85 season with the understanding that after his playing days, he would become part of the millionaire Buss' organization.

Buss also had signed Westhead to a four-year contract in 1980 and said he would live up to the terms of the agreement.

"He and I separated on good terms," the Lakers' owner said. "I will live up to all contracts I have signed." Buss also indicated that Westhead might have a job in his various enterprises.

JOHNSON, WHO had expressed displeasure with Westhead's new offense, said when informed of the change: "I'm just happy to be here in L.A., I'm happy to still be on the Lakers. I just want to play, and that's the bottom line."

Asked if it would have been difficult for him to stay had Westhead not been fired, Johnson replied: "I don't know ... pretty much, but since that's over with, we'll just leave that alone and go on with the new day."

The new Westhead offense was complicated, with more picks and moves, and allowed for little freewheeling, one of the strongest parts of Johnson's game.

A feud apparently had been simmering between Westhead and Johnson for some time. It reached its climax in Utah when Johnson told reporters he wanted to be traded.

Buss had expressed shock over the Johnson statement and said said he planned to talk with several leaders of the Lakers after they arrived home from Salt Lake City.

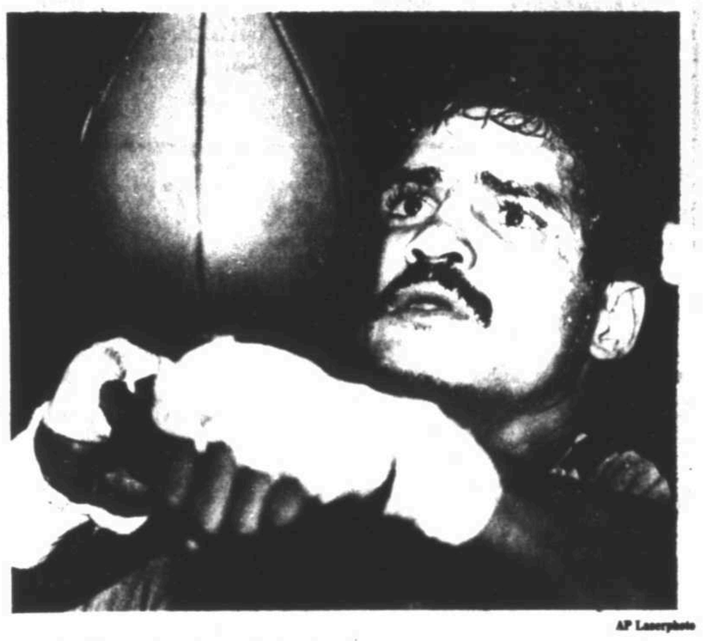

"I'm going in and ask him (Buss) to deal me," Johnson said. "I haven't been happy all season and I'm not happy now."

JOHNSON WAS asked if Westhead was the reason of his discontent and answered, "Yeah. We don't see eye to eye on a lot of things. It's time for me to go."

Westhead relieved Jack McKinney on Nov. 9, 1979 after the latter was seriously hurt in a bicycle accident. Westhead, an assistant coach with the Lakers at the time of McKinney's injury, guided the club to the NBA championship.

McKinney left the Lakers on less than pleasant terms and is now coach of the Indiana Pacers. He called Westhead's firing, "ridiculous." Said McKinney: "The guy won the championship for them."

Last season, the Lakers were eliminated in the first round of the playoffs. Ironically, they lost the final game to Houston when a shot by Johnson that could have won the game wasn't close.

World Boxing Council lightweight champion Alexis Arguello concentrates on the light bag as he works out in preperation for his title defense Saturday against Roberto Elizondo.

Arugello to defend title from Roberto Elizondo

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Less than seven weeks after going 14 tough rounds in a successful title defense against Ray Mancini, World Boxing Council lightweight champion Alexis Arguello puts his title on the line Saturday against once-beaten Roberto Elizondo.

Arguello had planned to take some time off after the Mancini bout, but the Nicaraguan native was almost immediately matched against the little-known, but No. 3-ranked Elizondo.

"I wanted to take a 10-day vacation with my wife, but they called and asked us to fight," the soft-spoken Arguello said. "But this is my job and I have to make the money now. There is plenty of time for other things later."

Arguello, who at 29 is only one of six boxers to hold titles in three different weight divisions, says he has been able to withstand the rigors of his 13-year ring career because he always is in shape.

"Boxing is a tough business and each fight of my life is tough," he said. "But I take good care of myself and that's the only way a boxer can continue."

Now living in Coral Gables, Fla., Arguello says that he, like fine wine, has gotten better with age.

"I feel better than ever before," he said. "I wish I had the strength and ability I have now when I was 18."

Arguello, who sports an impressive 72-4 record, lost his first bid for a title when he dropped a 15-round decision to Ernesto Marcel for the World Boxing Association featherweight crown in February 1974.

That was the last time he was to lose a championship bout. Arguello took the featherweight crown later that year from Ruben Olivares, defended it four times and then moved up to take the WBC junior lightweight crown from Alfredo Escalero in January 1978.

He captured his current title with a 15-round decision over James Watt and went a tough 14 rounds against Mancini in his first lightweight defense.

Elizondo, 22-1 with 17 knockouts, is the No. 3-ranked contender by the WBC and has won his last 15 bouts. He last fought in March when he knocked out Roberto Torres in the third round of their fight in Las Angeles.

The fight from the Showboat Hotel will be televised by CBS beginning about 3:20 p.m. CST.

SMU goes after grid title in Arkansas

By The Associated Press

Southern Methodist is calling the game "The Polyester Bowl" since the probation-soiled Mustangs can't go to any bowl game, particularly the Cotton Bowl.

SMU CAN win its first Southwest Conference title in 16 years Saturday in Fayetteville by defeating the Arkansas Razorbacks.

"It's a one-shot opportunity for our team," said SMU linebacker Eric Ferguson. "Fayetteville is a tough place to play but road crowds don't seem to get to our team. We won at (Texas) A&M and that's a hard place to play."

The Mustangs are a safety favorite over the Razorbacks who could pull into a tie at 6-2 with SMU by pulling off an upset.

Should Arkansas beat SMU and Texas lose to Baylor it would put the Razorbacks in the Cotton Bowl.

An Arkansas loss and a Texas victory would give the Cotton Bowl host role to the Longhorns.

FRESHMAN QUARTERBACK sensation Brad Taylor of Arkansas was a doubtful starter with a bruised right hand.

The No. 6 ranked Mustangs are looking for the ninth SWC title in the school's history.

They stand 9-1 for the season and 6-1 in SWC play. No. 16 ranked Arkansas is 8-2 overall.

Arkansas and Texas both have a consolation prize--the non-Cotton Bowl traveler goes to the Gator Bowl to play North Carolina.

No. 8 ranked Texas was a 12-point favorite over Baylor in Austin. The Longhorns are looking for their 17th Cotton Bowl appearnace.

Texas will be without All-American tackle Kenneth Sims and his opposite Mark Weber, both out for the season with injuries.

BAYLOR HASN'T won in Austin in 30 years.

In other games, Texas A&M was a touchdown choice over Texas Christian in Fort Worth and the Sun Bowl-bound Houston Cougars were a 16-point pick over Texas Tech.

The Aggies are hoping an impressive victory over the Horned Frogs will earn them an Independence Bowl berth.

A&M is 5-4 and 3-3 in the SWC while TCU is 3-6-1 and 1-5-1. A TCU victory would clinch the Horned Frogs best record since 1972.

Tech is still looking for new Coach Jerry Moore's initial SWC victory.

IF THE Raiders lose, it will be the poorest start ever for a first year Red Raider coach. Grady Higgenbotham was 1-7-2 back in 1929. Moore is 1-8-1.

Houston is 5-3-1 and 3-2-1 and scheduled to play Oklahoma in the Sun Bowl when the SWC Cotton Bowl picture is finally settled.

SMU Coach Ron Meyer said of the Mustang-Razorback showdown: "This is what we've worked hard all season for...we can finish in the top five in the nation and still earn the title...that will be our reward."

Coach Paul Stueckler's Midland Lee Rebels, holding high hopes for the 1981-82 season, opens the season today at 8 p.m. at Chaparral Center with a home debut against Lubbock Monterey.

Experience is the key for the Rebels this year as they return nearly everyone from last year's 14-20 team. Tonight's game will be the last home appearance for the Rebels until the Tall City Invitational tournament next weekend.

"Monterey is much like they have always been in the past," Stueckler said. "They take good shots and pass a lot like always. I saw them play an overtime game against Permian and they have a good team. Permian won it in overtime."

It will be a full night at the Chap since the sophomores will square off at 4 p.m. and the junior varsities will meet at 6:15 p.m.

Meanwhile, the Lee girls, 1-0 on the season after a victory over Reagan County Tuesday in the season opener in Big Lake, hit the road again today for an 8 p.m. game against defending state champion Monterey. There will also be a 6:15 p.m. JV contest.

The Bulldogs of Midland High take to the court again Saturday in Odessa when they face the Ector Eagles at 8 p.m. with a JV contest set for 6:15 p.m. The MHS boys will make their home debut at the Chap Tuesday when they host Ector at 8 p.m. The MHS girls will play Pecos that same day at the Chap at 6:15 p.m. with a JV game at 4:15 p.m. The MHS boys JV will play Ector at Midland High at 5:15 p.m. Tuesday.

The Lee boys and girls will be back in action Monday. The boys hit the road to face Lubbock Dunbar at 6:15 and 8 p.m. while the girls host Monahans at the same times at the Lee gym. The MHS girls will use Chap Center Monday for 6:15 and 8 p.m. games with Sweetwater, the team MHS won its season opener against last Tuesday in Sweetwater.

On Tuesday, the Lee girls will host San Angelo Lake View at the Lee gym in 6 and 7:30 p.m. outings.

Defending champion Midland High and Lee will host the annual Tall City Invitational tournament next Friday and Saturday at the Chap. Game times will be published later.

Herzog wheeling and dealing again

By The Associated Press

Whitey Herzog, that aggressive wheeler-dealer from St. Louis, is at it again.

Last year, his first as general manager-manager of the Cardinals, Herzog was one of the most active barterers in baseball. After participating in a three-way deal Thursday, Herzog promised he wasn't through yet.

The Cardinals acquired outfielder Lonnie Smith from Philadelphia — along with a player to be named later — with the Phillies getting catcher Bo Diaz of Cleveland and the Indians picking up pitchers Lary Sorensen and Silvio Martinez.

"There's a lot more to come," vowed Herzog, who had acquired Sorensen in one of his many transactions last winter.

"Sorensen is probably the one pitcher on our staff who is very unlucky, He should have been more like 11-5 than 7-7. He's a low ball pitcher and should be better on grass than Astroturf."

The Indians play on a grass field while the Cardinals have artificial turf.

"I just don't feel Silvio was very happy here. A change of scenery should help him. His shoulder bothered him a bit, but the night before the strike he beat Fernando Valenzuela 2-1 and then he didn't win another game."

Martinez, 26, was 2-5 with a 3.99 ERA in 18 games. He won 15 games for St. Louis in 1979.

Smith, who will be 26 next month, has hit .339 and .325 in his two major league seasons. Last season he tied Houston's Art Howe for the longest hitting streak in the National League — 23 games.

Herzog said he was attracted by Smith's speed — the outfielder stole 30 bases in 1980 and 21 last year.

Herzog said Smith would play center field for the Cardinals. George Hendrick will return to right field, while three left fielders will be platooned.

Diaz, 28, was a reserve on the 1981 American League All-Star team. He hit .313 while sharing catching duties on the Indians with Ron Hassey.

Cleveland is desperate for pitching help because starters Rick Waits and John Denny and reliever Sid Monge all are free agents.

Phil Seghi, the Indians' general manager, said, "We're trying to assemble what we consider a pretty good pitching staff. I would like to have a numbers problem with our pitchers."

Bum returns to Houston

HOUSTON (AP) — The Houston Oilers and New Orleans Saints will play a football game Sunday but it could be a secondary to the REAL event scheduled in the Astrodome–the return of Bum Phillips.

The Oilers, 5-6 and likely out of the playoffs for the first time in four years, and the Saints, 3-8, may create less excitement on the field than Phillips, who makes his first appearance in the Astrodome since being fired last January by Oiler owner Bud Adams.

PHILLIPS WAS dispatched last January after taking the Oilers to the playoffs three straight years and replaced with his No. 1 aide, Ed Biles, who has found it uncomfortable fielding constant reminders of the Oilers' apparent fall from playoff status.

"I'm sure he'll get a big welcome when he comes into the Astrodome," Biles said. "He deserves it. He did a great job while he was here."

Aside from the Biles-Phillips coaching matchup, Saints rookie running back George Rogers and the Oilers' Earl Campbell will invite comparison on the playing field.

ROGERS HAS GAINED 1,137 yards this season and ranks second in the NFL behind Dallas' Tony Dorsett and ahead of Campbell in the No. 3 position with 1,099 yards.

Quarterbacks Archie Manning and Ken Stabler are returning to the starting lineup after recovering from injuries. Stabler, whose wrist sprain has healed, got his job back in the second half of last week's 23-10 loss to Kansas City. Manning has missed two games with pulled stomach muscles.

Kickoff is at noon CST.

Bulldogs open season with win

ABERNATHY — Coach Jack Stephenson's Midland High Bulldogs opened the 1981-82 cage season here Thursday night with an 83-51 decision over the Abernathy Antelopes.

"Abernathy is a good basketball team and can play with anyone I've seen this year," Stephenson said. "So I was very pleased with what I saw from our kids. We were expecting a close game, but I played 16 kids and 13 scored. I don't think you can ask much more than that."

Returning starter Don Sharnowski led the Bulldog attack with 18 points and Preston Robertson pumped in 16. Raymond Parker scored 13 points and was the only other Dog in double digits. Jim Gunnels had a good night with eight points.

Abernathy was led by Rodney Cannon's 20 point performance and Cletus Irlbeck had 13. Abernathy's 6-6 Glen Houston was blanked by the Bulldogs and he fouled out of the game.

In junior varsity action, the Bullpups dropped a 69-60 decision to Abernathy, despite the 22 points by Jerry Johnson and 11 by Ben Conley. It was also the season debut for the MHS JV.

The Bulldogs will be back in action Saturday at 8 p.m. against Odessa Ector in Odessa.

Chaps drop first game

GREAT BEND, Ks. — Midland College ran afoul of tall, talented Independence Junior College Thursday night in the first round of the Barton County Classic here and fell 100-89. It was the first defeat for the Chaparrals after two wins while Independence was making its first start of the young season.

The Chaps stayed closed throughout the first half and trailed by five, 50-45, at intermission.

In the second half, the Chaps' inexperience caught up with them and the more seasoned Pirates took firm command of the game behind the shooting of Gary McIntosh and Carl Brown. McIntosh finished the night with 22 points and Brown added 20.

One bright spot for Midland College was the balanced scoring attack. Sophomore Puntus Wilson fired in a game-high 24 points to lead the Chaps while freshman point guard Spud Webb pumped in 17 points. Freshman Brad Richardson had his best night in a Gold and Green uniform as he canned 14 points. Jerome Crowe tallied 12 points and Chester Smith hit 10 points playing inside against the taller Pirates.

Indpendence picked up scoring support from Joe McAdoo and Curtis Moore with 14 points each.

MC will play Oklahoma's Murray State today at 6:30 p.m. and then close out the tournament with an 8:30 p.m. game Saturday against Barton County.

Abernathy's McKenzie sinks MHS girls, 67-54

ABERNATHY — Abernathy's Vicki McKenzie, a starter on last year's AAA state championship Pirate team, scored 28 points here Thursday night to lead a 67-54 win over the Midland High girls basketball team.

The loss for MHS dropped the Bulldogs to 1-1 on the year while Abernathy is 2-0.

The score was tied at 30-30 at the half, but Abernathy gained a four-point advantage after three periods and had a 21-14 advantage in the fourth.

Virgie Cooks led Midland with 12 points while Janice Littlefield and Shelia Christian each had nine points. Margaret Cooper pumped in 12 and Stacy Kelly added 11 to aid the showing of McKenzie.

"Even though we lost, I thought we played well because Abernathy is the defending state champion," MHS coach Jane Young said. "We had a chance to win it and we are getting more scoring from other members of the team. Eight of our girls scored."

The MHS junior varsity scored a 46-37 win over Abernathy to go to 2-2 for the year as Rebecca Caton led the way with 18 points. Sharon Mendenhall had nine.

MHS hits the court again Monday when they play Sweetwater at Chaparral Center and then again Tuesday at the Chap against Pecos. The Bulldogs defeated Sweetwater last week and Monday's matchup will be a rematch.

Wayward bat is judged guilty

PITTSBURGH (AP) — An Allegheny County judge ruled that a baseball fan, who suffered a ruptured spleen when he allegedly was struck by a wayward bat, can sue for damages.

"When you are seated at a baseball game, you obviously assume the risk of being hit by foul balls. But you don't assume the risk of being hit by bats," said Judge I. Martin Wekselman.

He said the ruling Thursday may be the first in Pennsylvania involving a fan allegedly injured by a bat.

Under state law, fans who are hit by baseballs can't seek damages in court. But the judge decided bats belong in a different category.

"It's very rare to see a bat enter the stands, whereas it is very common to see a baseball going there," the judge said.

Wekselman rejected a request by the Montreal Expos to dismiss the suit on grounds that the fan assumed a risk when he entered the ballpark. The trial will continue today, with the Expos defense expected.

The suit was brought by Patrick Traynor, 53, of Belle Vernon, who allegedly was hit by a bat that flew out of the hands of former Expo Tony Perez. Perez was swinging a 35-inch bat when it allegedly slipped out of his hands and traveled about 100 feet into the stands along the third base line.

Point shaving trial to jury

NEW YORK (AP) — A jury in Brooklyn's U.S. District Court was prepared to deliberate charges against former Boston College basketball player Rick Kuhn and four others accused of conspiring to fix games in the 1978-79 season to benefit their betting ring.

Two days of final arguments by four attorneys and prosecutor Edward McDonald ended after nearly eight hours Thursday, and the jury of eight women and four men were to get instructions today from U.S. District Judge Henry Bramwell before beginning deliberations.

Accused of racketeering conspiracy and sports bribery in connection with the alleged point-shaving and betting scheme are Kuhn, of Swissvale, Pa., brothers Rocco and Anthony Perla of Braddock Hills, Pa.; Paul Mazzei, of Pittsburgh and James Burke of Queens.

The defendants are charged with conspiring to shave points and rig BC games during the 1978-79 season so their betting consortium could beat bookies' odds and cooperating players could make money. Kuhn allegedly was paid with yrugs and $2,500 per game.

Much of final arguments by the remaining three defense attorneys Thursday was taken up with assaults on the character and testimony of Henry Hill, the government's key witness who was described by one lawyer as a "vicious, slimy viper" who had broken all 10 commandments during his long life of crime.

Hill was a participant in the alleged scheme who told the government what he knew in exchange for immunity from prosecution on drug charges and protection under the Witness Protection Program.

In addition to Coiro, Leonard Sharon and Gary Zimmerman, who represent Mazzei and Kuhn respectively, told the jury the government had no case without Hill's testimony, testimony they argued was inconsistent and untrue. Kerry O'Malley, attorney for the Perlas, presented his final argument on Wednesday, making the same points.

Zimmerman told the jury to disregard testimony about a confession Kuhn made to an FBI agent about shaving points because his client had been coerced and argued Kuhn was not shaving points, but only being paid by the co-defendants for inside information on the team.

Coiro in particular spent a large portion of his summation on Hill, a long-time friend of his client's, repeating his argument that the "only evidence against my client" was testimony by Hill.

McDonald called Burke the "boss, the man without whom the fix could not succeed" and said telephone records placed him at the center of the betting conspiracy.

Wadkins leads in Japan tournament

MIYAZAKI, Japan (AP) — American Bobby Wadkins shot a seven-under-par 65 Friday to take a one-shot lead after two rounds of the $363,636 Dunlop Phoenix golf tournament.

PLAYING IN perfect weather, Wadkins carded an eagle and seven birdies against two bogeys for a 137 at the halfway point and the lead over American Scott Simpson and Severino Ballesteros of Spain.

Both Simpson and Ballesteros had second-round 66s for 138 totals on the 6,990-yard, par-72 Phoenix Country Club course.

Tssuneyuki Nakajima of Japan shot a 71 for a 36-hole total of 139 to stand alone in third place, while American Craig Stadler, with a 71, was another stroke behind.

AMERICAN MIKE Reid, with a 72, joined West German Bernhard Langer, Isao Aoki of Japan and Howard Clark of Britain at 141. Langer shot 72, Aoki 70 and Clark 71.

Leonard Thompson and Larry Nelson, both of the U.S., were among four players tied at 142. Thompson had a 69 and Nelson a 70.

Americans Tom Watson, the first round co-leader, and Tom Kite, were tied for 15th place at 143. Watson shot a two-over 74 while Kite had a 71.

Dunk leads golf meet

MELBOURNE, Australia (AP) — Australian Bill Dunk carded a one-under-par 71 Friday for a one-stroke lead at the halfway point in the $150,000 Australian Open golf tournament.

Dunk rolled in a birdie on the final hole to break out of a three-way tie with American Bill Rogers and Australian Jack Newton.

Dunk's round, combined with his opening-round 68 Thursday, gave him a two-day total of 139, five under par. Rogers, the reigning British Open champion, and Newton were at 140 after two tours over the Victoria Gold Club course.

Amother stroke back were South African Gary Player and defending champion Greg Norman of Australia.

Despite having the lead, Dunk said he was still struggling with the flaws in his game.

"My main problem was that I drove about the same as I did on Thursday," he said. "If I could get my driver to work I would be happy, but I'm still not confident where it's going."

Rogers got in contention by carding a three-under 69. He ran in a number of long, curling putts as he steadily ran down the leaders.

Newton, the 1979 Australian Open, started the round with one of the most embarrassing shots of his career.

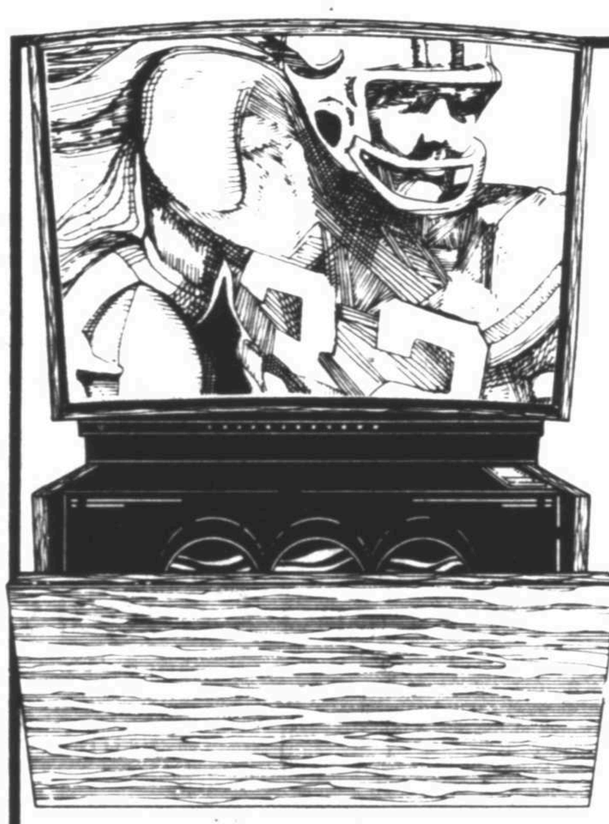

While teeing off at the first hole, Newton said a small insect got into his eye at the top of his backswing. He hit a high shank that travelled about 25 yards down the fairway and about the same distance to the right, landing near the press tent.

"The only time I've been more embarrassed was when I topped my drive off the first tee in the British Open at Troon," Newton said.

Detroit continues to be NBA's surprise team

By The Associated Press

How much better are the Detroit Pistons this year?

Statistics are for losers, but there's one meaningful piece of arithmetic that probably answers that question best.

Last year's Pistons lost 16 games before they won their sixth.

Thursday night, in their 10th game of the 1981-82 National Basketball Association season, Detroit notched its sixth victory. At this rate, the Pistons can just about forget Ralph Sampson — if he declares hardship — in the draft next year.

"This is a young team and they give me everything they have all the time," Pistons Coach Scotty Robertson said after Detroit blasted the Washington Bullets 122-97. "If we can start our running game, we can win some games just like we did tonight. When we play defense, we can turn the break and when we run the break, we can play with anyone in the league."

Rookie Kelly Tripucka scored 22 points and John Long added 20 as the Pistons led virtually the entire game. As usual, when the Pistons win, rookie point guard Isiah Thomas plays the key role. Against Washington, he scored 14 points and dished off 13 assists.

In other NBA action Thursday night, the Atlanta Hawks defeated the New York Knicks 89-84; the Indiana Pacers knocked off the Kansas City Kings 102-99 and the Golden State Warriors beat the San Diego Clippers 105-100.

Pacers 102, Kings 99

Johnny Davis hit two free throws with four seconds remaining as Indiana held off a second-half Kansas City rally. Davis' free throws ended a run of five straight points in the final two minutes by the Kings. Kansas City's Mike Woodson had 24 points but was charged with a key offensive foul with 24 seconds left when the Kings could have taken the lead. Billy Knight led the Pacers with 18 points.

Hawks 89, Knicks 84

Dan Roundfield scored 23 points, including a short jumper with 40 seconds left, to hand the Knicks, 3-7, their fourth straight loss. Atlanta never led by fewer than seven points in the second half until New York staged a comeback in the last two minutes, pulling within 87-84 on a three-point shot by Mike Newlin with nine seconds left. Tree Rollins clinched the game with two fouls shots with seven seconds remaining.

Warriors 105, Clippers 100

Lloyd Free scored 24 points and Larry Smith had nine of his 13 in the fourth quarter. The victory may be a costly one for the Warriors. Bernard King, who finished with 22 points, left with an injured left knee with 6:16 remaining.

Jerome Whitehead, replacing Swen Nater as the starting center for the second consecutive game, led the Clippers with 18 points and 11 rebounds. Rookie Tom Chambers also had 18 points for San Diego.

Sun Bowl will invite Sooners and Cougars

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — Oklahoma and Houston will be invited to the Dec. 26 bowl game in El Paso, the chairman of the Sun Bowl selection committee says.

John Folmer confirmed the two teams had been chosen and said he believed they would accept the invitations, it was reported Thursday.

"We will have our representatives in Norman and in Houston Saturday, and nowhere else," he said.

Folmer said the only requirement for the two teams to be invited after Saturday's games is "finishing their games. If they finish their games Saturday like the rules say they're supposed to, we plan on inviting both teams. And we believe both will accept."

Houston athletic director Cedric Dempsey said the Sun Bowl would fit in with the school's exam schedule and would give the game the national television exposure the school is seeking.

"We would consider it a great challenge to go against Oklahoma," he said. "I talked to Coach (Bill) Yeoman and he said he would like to have the chance."

Folmer said he believed a Houston-Oklahoma matchup "could very well result in the most exciting bowl in the nation."

Although each team has a record of 5-3-1, Oklahoma's rushing offense is No. 1 in the nation and Houston's defense is ranked sixth nationally. Neither team has ever played in the Sun Bowl.

There had been speculation earlier that Sun Bowl officials were striving to get UCLA in this year's game, but Folmer said Wednesday that it appeared that UCLA would go to the Bluebonnet Bowl.

Judge rules Conroe out

HOUSTON (AP) — McCullough High School will be allowed to represent District 16-5A in the bi-district schoolboy football playoffs, a federal judge has ruled.

The ruling knocked Conroe out of the state playoffs.

U.S. District Judge John V. Singleton Thursday restrained the University Interscholastic League from enforcing a rule that declared a player ineligible for a year because he did not live with his parents. Enforcement of the rule by the UIL would have forced McCullough to forfeit seven of its nine victories.

But Judge Singleton restrained the UIL from enforcing the rule against Danny Lyons, 18, a second-string McCullough running back ruled ineligible by the District 16-5A Executive Committee Nov. 10.

Senator says government delaying probe

Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A senator says the government is stalling its investigation of whether Agent Orange harmed servicemen in Vietnam because it fears the cost of potential damages.

"We would be looking at hundreds of millions of dollars per year, going into the middle of the next century," said Robert Nimmo, head of the Veterans Administration, in response to a question by Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa.

Nimmo's comment at a Senate Veterans Affairs Committee hearing Wednesday marks the first time any high official had put even a ballpark figure on the cost of compensating veterans suffering from ailments they blame on the herbicide. During the war, 12 million gallons of Agent Orange were sprayed to defoliate jungles and clear jungle areas.

More than 10,500 veterans have filed for disability payments, claiming that exposure to Agent Orange left them with severe health problmes, but the VA has not honored any claims.

THE AGENCY SAYS it cannot acknowledge a link between Agent Orange and any health disorders until research establishes one.

Specter told Nimmo that he suspected the high potential cost of compensation is "a major inhibiting factor" in reaching a conclusion about the health effects of exposure. He urged a speedup in a scientific study to settle the issue.

Later, Specter was asked by a reporter if he thought the government was taking a go-slow approach because if feared the cost would be enormous if compensation had to be paid.

"I think we are," he said. "I think that's a big ingredient."

MEANWHILE, Nimmo reported a further delay in getting a start on the government's principle research project. He disclosed that the VA had rejected a proposed design for the study and gave the designers 35 days to revise it.

The design, prepared by the University of California at Los Angeles under a $114,288 VA contract, outlines how to compare the health of a large sample group of Vietnam veterans with those who did not serve there.

Roger Detels, dean of public health at UCLA, said the study would be hard to conduct because of the difficulty in determining which men may have been exposed to the herbicide.

Detels said the UCLA researchers were inhibited by a months-long delay in getting security clearances needed to examine old military recods.

Scientific panels that reviewed the design criticized it for proposing to conceal from examined veterans whether they had been exposed and whether they had any symptoms being looked for. Detels said secrecy was necessary to prevent veterans from reporting ailments they do not suffer.

So far, research into the effects of exposure is inconclusive.

Veterans have blamed herbicides for birth defects in their children and a wide variety of ailments — cancers, liver and kidney disorders, tingling in their fingers, nerve and skin disorders, numbness, vision and hearing impairments, fatigue, miscarriages by their wives, reduced sexual drive and impotence.

"Vietnam veterans have every right to question what actions are being taken on their behalf and 'where are we going next?'" Nimmo said. "I am determined to set this agency on the path which will lead us to a scientific resolution."

Asian lions rarity at L.A. zoo

There are two new babies at the Greater Los Angeles Zoo whose lineage goes back to biblical times — their ancestors' portraits were drawn in ancient Greece. The newomers are lion cubs, each one a fubzy handful, and they just celebrated their one-month birthday.

Michael Crotty, curator of mammals at the zoo, says that as far as zoo officials know, these are the first Asian lion cubs born in captivity.

The zoo has always been a marvelous island, a retreat from the city, where you can stand and wonder at the dignity of animals, their mischief, their humor, their grace and strength. And as the world grows so much smaller, as acres of living space disappear every day to development, the zoo has become much more: It is the only place left for the preservation of animals. The Los Angeles zoo is a world class zoo with a distinguished record of captivity breeding.

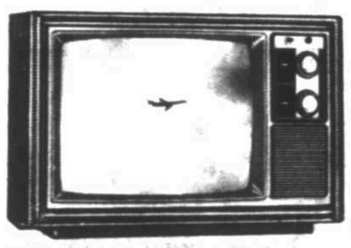

THE WORK being done by Crotty and his confederates will determine what animals our grandchildren will see 100 years from now. It is a bleak thought, b7t not all animal species will last. The Barbary lion is gone, last seen walking through the tawny grass more than a century ago. And every day another animal makes the $wesome list of endangered species. The gaur, an Indian ox, and the Siberian tiger are already there.

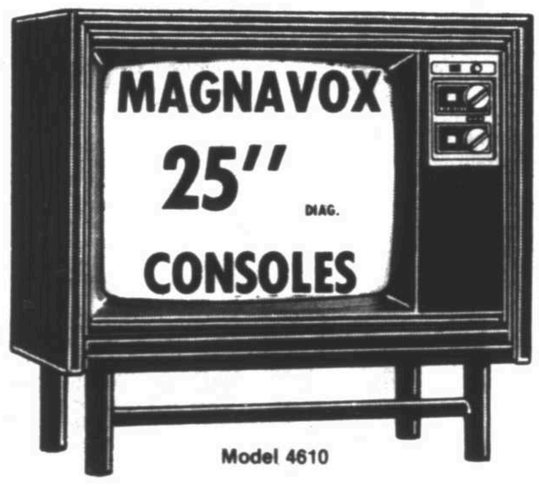

But there is hope for the zoo animals. The two lion cubs who are stumbling around and falling over their tennis ball-sized feet in the zoo's nursery will go to the Lincoln Park Zoo in Chicago. Their father is on loan from there. The next lion cubs will stay in Los Angeles.

Trading zoo animals is the best way to ensure their survival, to keep bloodlines uncluttered and to avoid inbreeding. To keep track of zoo animals all over the world, Crotty told me, a careful record is kept.

NRC suspends reactor license

AP Laserphoto

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission has suspended the operating license of the controversial Diablo Canyon nuclear plant near San Luis Obispo, Calif., Thursday, saying it would require verification of earthquake safety systems.

SAN LUIS OBISPO, Calif. (AP) — A power plant that protesters sought to make a symbol in the struggle over nuclear safety temporarily lost its license because design errors cast doubt on its ability to withstand an earthquake.

The Nuclear Regulatory Commission suspended the low-power testing license it granted Sept. 21 to the Diablo Canyon nuclear plant, which stands on the coast 2½ miles from a fault in the Earth's crust.

AT A CLOSED meeting in Washington, D.C., the commission voted 4-1 Thursday to suspend the license until the $2.3 billion plant passes a series of seismic tests.

Malcolm H. Furbush, senior vice president and general counsel for the plant's owner, the Pacific Gas & Electric Co., said the utility was the victim of a "concerted attack" by anti-nuclear activists and Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr.

A statement released by PG&E said the utility was "disappointed" at the license suspension, "especially since nothing has been discovered to date that would indicate that the plant is not safe."

Brown said the license suspension was "unprecedented, quite remarkable and very sobering."

"The real test is what's to come," said the governor, who has demanded a completely independent safety review. "What will the government do? Will it be a paper study, a whitewash?"

BROWN PROMISED in San Francisco to "direct my energies to making sure the audit is independent, adequate and extensive."

The NRC called for verification of Diablo's seismic safety systems, but left the choice of an independent consultant and testing program to the utility, subject to NRC approval.

A coalition of 60 anti-nuclear groups that staged a two-week demonstration at the $2.3 billion seaside plant in September, resulting in 1,900 arrests, objected to the utility's role in the safety review.

"We're encouraged they won't be able to fire up their reactor, but it seems now that PG&E will have a hand in the (safety) audit," said Tim Carpenter, an organizer of the Abalone Alliance. "It's difficult for us to see how a utility can audit itself given the problems they've already had."

COMMISSION Chairman Nunzio Palladino said opponents of the plant would have 15 days to comment on the utility's choice, but NRC spokesman Joseph Fouchard said another round of public hearings wouldn't be required.

Neither the utility nor the NRC would estimate how long the suspension would last. The utility has estimated each day's delay in full operation costs $1 million in interest charges — a bill that Jan Miller, a PG&E spokeswoman, said would probably be passed to consumers.

The plant, midway between Los Angeles and San Francisco, ran into trouble in the mid-1970s with the discovery of the Hosgri earthquake fault 2½ miles offshore.

PG&E modified its earthquake safety systems to take the fault into account, but on Sept. 27, six days after the low-power testing license was granted, a consultant revealed that incorrect diagrams were used in Unit 1's construction.

Diagrams for Unit 2, which is still under construction, were mistakenly used in the analysis of Unit 1. Although the reactors are twins, they are different distances from the fault line and require different capabilities for withstanding stress.

THE NRC'S license suspension followed several days of congressional subcommittee hearings on nuclear power safety at which Palladino said nuclear power plants had been constructed without sufficient attention to quality control.

"After reviewing both industry and NRC performance in quality assurance," he said Thursday, "I readily acknowledge that neither has been as effective as they should have been in view of the relatively large number of construction-related deficiencies that have come to light."

The dissenter to the NRC decision was Thomas Roberts, who plans to file a separate opinion.

Air traffic controller is guilty

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — A second former air traffic controller has been convicted of violating federal laws forbidding federal employees from striking.

Clements is disappointed

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements said Thursday he was "greatly disappointed" that the U.S. Justice Department decided not to pull out of the suit against the Texas Department of Corrections.

The governor said the state was "somewhat misled" by Justice Department officials who had been negotiating with the state and had indicated "that we were going to make more progress than we did."

The Justice Department is an intervenor on the side of the inmate-plaintiffs who filed a lawsuit against the state prisons. The suit has sparked a federal judge's opinion that the prisons violate inmates' rights.

"The right word that sums it up is that we all are greatly disappointed," Clements said of the Justice Department's decision earlier this week not to pull out.

Clements predicted the state would win at least some of the points appealed to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans. He also said talks with the Justice Department would continue.

"I don't intend for us to roll over and play dead," he told reporters.

Irving restaurants sell liquor again

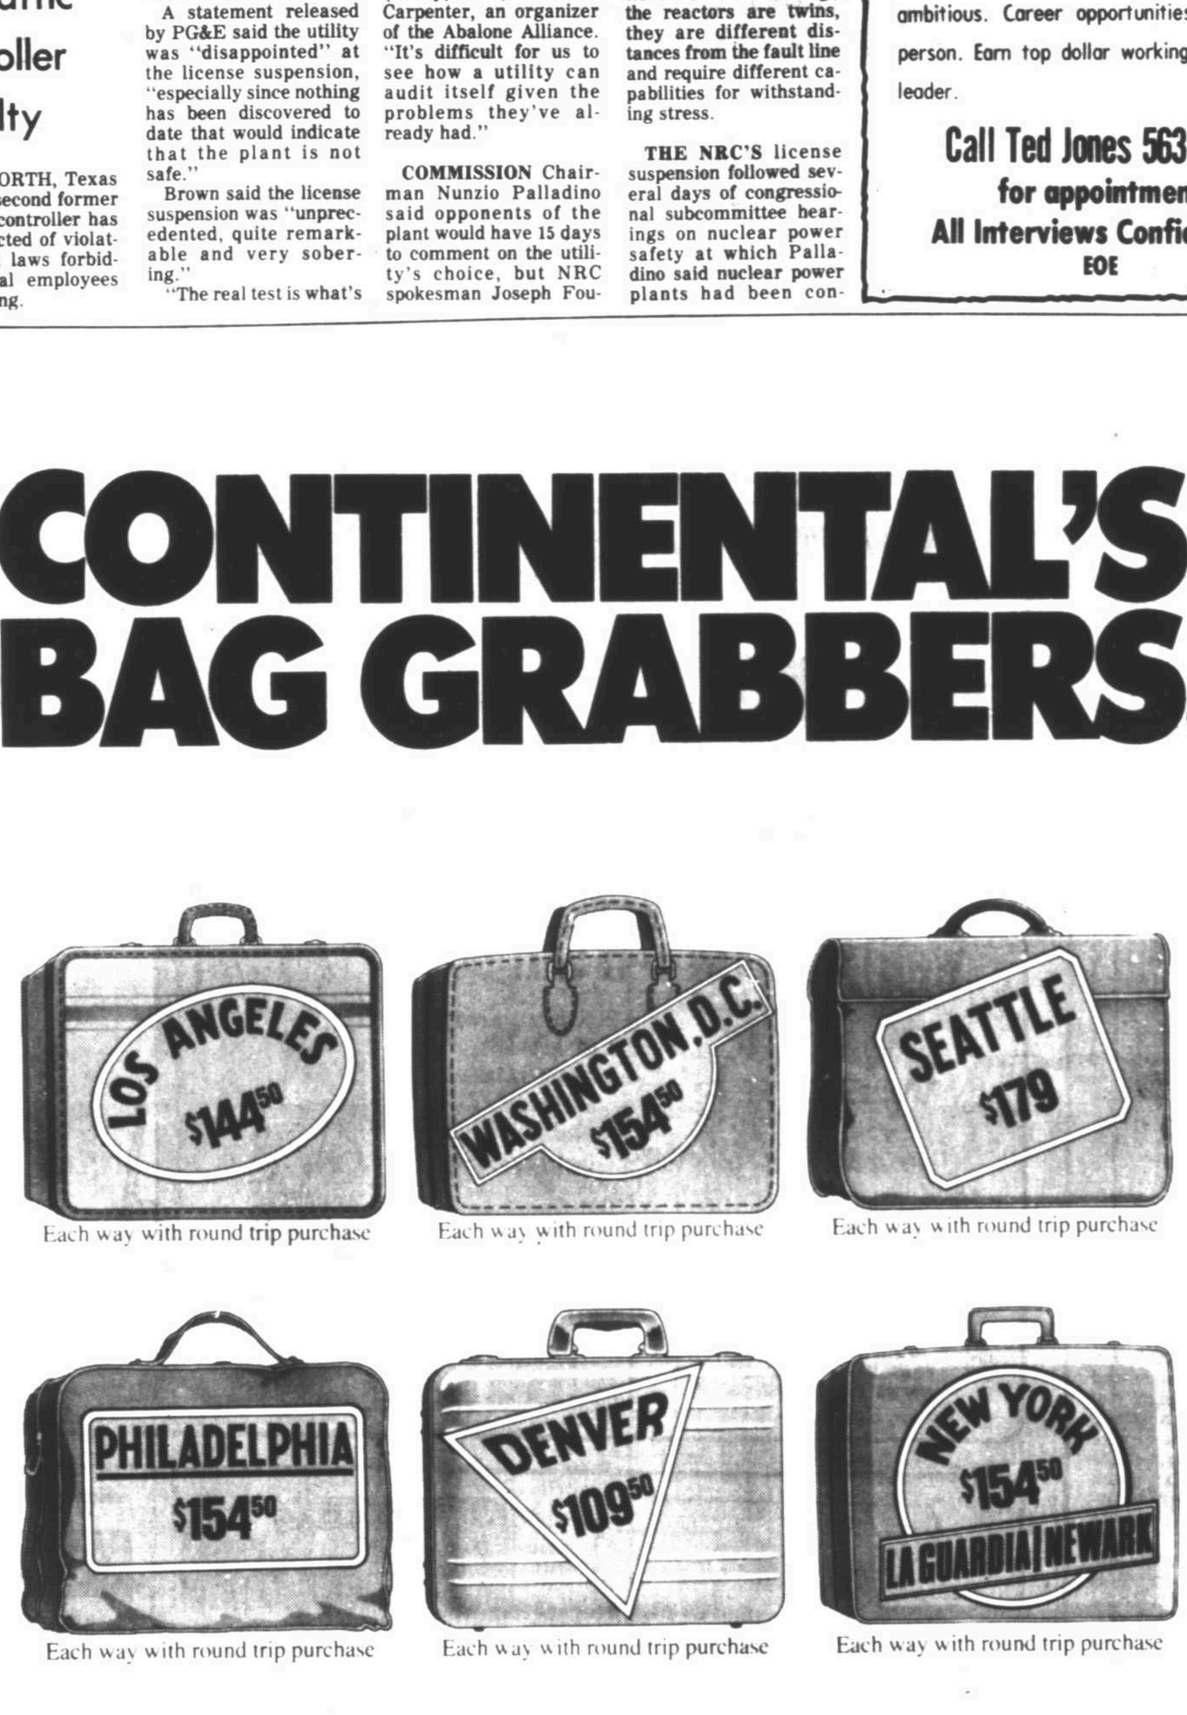

IRVING, Texas (AP) — An ordinance legalizing the sale of alcoholic beverages in restaurants was approved unanimously Thursday night by the City Council.

Under the ordinance, which officially makes the city "wet" for the first time since 1943, restaurant owners must derive at least 60 percent of their revenue from food sales to qualify for selling liquor by the drink.

Voters in this Dallas suburb approved a referendum Oct. 17 that made legal the sale of alcoholic beverages in restaurants.

Cleaning statues serves past

By ROBERT BARR
Associated Press Writer

WELLS, England (AP) — St. Eustace, St. Erkenwald and St. Ethelburga of Barking are clean and fit for another century on the freshly scrubbed north tower of Wells Cathedral.

Statues of bishops and hermits on the south tower, now hidden by scaffolding, await cleansing from hot lime poultices.

SOLOMON, casting a longing eye over his shoulder at the Queen of Sheba, will lose his black coat of grime in the final phase of a 10-year program of cleaning and conservation.

The aim of the $5.6 million effort, begun in 1976 and funded entirely by voluntary donations, is to preserve what remains of statuary carved in the mid-13th century.

If an arm or leg is missing, so be it. There is no attempt to restore the paint and gilding which once must have dazzled pilgrims. Previous repairs, however well intentioned, are removed.

"Even if we find a Victorian nose or finger, we take it off," said the Rev. Patrick Mitchell, the cathedral's dean. "The policy here is very much to keep what we've got in Wells."

What Wells has is the world's largest collection of Gothic sculpture: 127 life-size or larger statues; 35 scenes from the Bible; 21 busts of angels; 85 panels depicting the resurrection; 12 apostles and more.

THE CATHEDRAL Church of St. Andrew, the first English church built entirely in the Gothic style, enjoys a setting of uncommon beauty and serenity in the Mendip Hills 115 miles west of London.

Behind the cathedral are the wells of St. Andrew, springs really, which gave the town its name and which feed the moat around the walled bishop's palace south of the church.

The statues stand in three tiers of covered niches across the 147-foot wide west front, and around the north and east faces of the north tower. As the cleaning progresses, the pale yellow tones of the locally quarried stone are revealed.

SOME STATUES were lost to wind and weather, some to Puritan rage. By the 1970s, the 297 survivors were in peril.

A photograph taken in 1975 showed St. Matthew with a luxurious double beard. Seven months later, the beard, along with the chin and the lower part of the face, had disintegrated and fallen off.

In the cleansing process, the statues are covered with a thick poultice of hot lime putty, which is kept moist and in place for three weeks. The putty softens dirt and encrustations and draws out acid, while lime — a natural constituent of the stone — seeps in.

The poultice is removed inches at a time, the surface is cleaned with brushes and fine sprays of water, and old repairs are removed. Cracks are filled, and each statue gets a protective spray of lime wash.

WORK STOPS in October, when freezing weather begins to threaten.

Only one of the 13th century statues has been replaced. It was a statue of a king which had acquired a new head and shoulders in the 1840s. Rather than leave an empty niche by removing the repairs, a new figure was commissioned.

The occasional conflicts between the demands of preservation and worship are illustrated by a pair of legs at the summit of the central gable — all that remains of a statue of Christ in Majesty. Carved in the 15th century, the figure apparently succumbed to erosion at least three centuries ago.

A lesson in learning

By MICHAEL PUTZEL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — When a Tokyo newspaper first reported a bribery investigation involving a high White House official, there was a momentary breath of candor mixed with misjudgment by President Reagan's aides.

"I don't think it's much of a story," said Larry Speakes, the deputy White House press secretary. He quickly identified the White House official in question as Richard V. Allen, the president's national security adviser, and said it was not a case of bribery but merely one of forgetfulness.

SPEAKES RECOUNTED the story as he had heard it from Allen and White House counsel Fred F. Fielding. He said Allen had received $1,000 in thank-you money that had been meant for Nancy Reagan, had left the money in a safe in the Executive Office Building and had forgotten about it until the cash was found by others eight months later.

Allen said he took the money to avoid embarrassing Mrs. Reagan or the Japanese journalists who presented it in gratitude for a brief interview the day after her husband's inauguration.

Five wildcat wells are planed for the Basin. An attmept will be made to extend one small field. A hybrid project is planned for Winkler County.

COCHRAN WILDCAT

H.L. Brown Jr., Midland, will drill the No. St. Clair, a 5,800-foot wildcat, four miles northwest of Lehman.

The drillsite is 660 feet from the north and west lines of labor 8, league 128, Coke County School Land.

It appears the well will go down in an essentially untested area.

GAINES GAMBLE

Forest Oil Corp., Odessa, plans the No. 2 Maxey as a 13,550-foot wildcat, to be drilled five miles southeast of Seagraves.

The location is 2,150 feet from the south, and 1,980 feet from the west line of section 60, block G, WTRR survey.

The drillsite is 5/8 of a mile south of Monterey's No. 21 Oil Development Co., abandoned July 15, 1957 at 13,536 feet. It is also 1/2 mile southeast of Forest's own No. 1 Maxey (F-1) abandoned March 12, 1980 at 13,495 feet.

LOVING EXTENSION

Bass Enterprises Production Co., Midland, will be drilling the No. 2 Bass TXL "45" to 6,600 feet, as an extender to the Dimmit (Cherry Canyon) field, six miles northeast of Mentone.

At last official count, there were no producing wells in this field, but four were expected. Unofficial records available to the Reporter-Telegram oil news staff indicate perhaps five have since been completed in the field.

The drillsite in 1 1/2 miles south-southwest of the discovery well, Mobil No. 1-E Johnson.

LUBBOCK WILDCAT

Harvey E. Yates Co., Roswell, will drill the No. 1 Tisdale as a 7,300-foot wildcat.

The location given is 467 feet from the north and east line of section 88, block C, D&WC RR survey.

The oil news staff was unable to spot the project using the above information, which has been filed with the Railroad Commission.

STERLING PAIR

Dorchester Exploration plans a pair of Ellenberger wildcats in the Sterling city vicinity.

The No. 3 Westbrook "28" will be drilled 1,083 feet from the south and east lines of section 28, block 13, SPRR survey; 7 miles southwest of Sterling City.

An attempt will be made to locate wildcat Montoya oil at 8,385 feet, and Conger (Penn) gas at 6,300 feet.

There are a number of dry holes and producing wells, ranging in depth from 1,975 feet to around 9,000 feet, near the drillsite.

Dorchester's No. 4 Conger F "6" will be drilled 1,320 feet from the north, and 990 feet from the east line of section 6, block 21, H&TC survey; 13 miles southwest of Sterling City.

More oil news on page 8E

On the way to TD, checks will be made for wildcat Montoya production at 8,760 feet, WAM (Fusselman) gas at 8,615 feet, and Conger (Penn) oil at 6,915 feet.

The drillstie is surrounded by a great deal of gas and oil production.

WINKLER HYBRID

Gill Petroleum Corp., San Antonio, will drill No. 2 Fernandes Ranch as a 10,655-foot Kermit, South (Ellenberger) well, however attempts will be made to locate shallower pool wildcat pays on the way to TD.

The location is 1,980 feet from the northeast, and 660 feet from the southeast line of section 20, block B-3, PSL survey.

Wildcat gas and oil will be hunted at 10,390 feet, and wildcat gas will be sniffed out at 10,110 feet. Kermit, South (Devonian) will be looked for at 8,040 feet.

The well will be drilled on the eastern edge of the Kermit, South field. A generous well spotter might call it an extender.

Watt declares his commitment

WASHINGTON (AP) — Declaring he is "committed to preserving these areas," Interior Secretary James G. Watt says he will hold public hearings and consult with Congress before allowing any oil drilling in federal wilderness preserves.

Watt, who had been faced with an imminent vote in Congress to remove his authority to issue such permits, made the promise Thursday after a lengthy meeting with the senior Republican on the House Interior Committee.

Rep. Manuel Lujan, R-N.M., in return agreed to withdraw his resolution declaring a state of emergency in 23.4 million acres of designated wilderness, effectively blocking Watt from approving any mineral leases in the areas. The resolution had been scheduled for a vote today.

"I have accomplished my objective, that no leases will be issued in wilderness areas unless there is an overriding national need," Lujan said. Earlier this week, he said an emergency vote was needed to prevent the desecration of wilderness areas.

Watt said that under the informal procedure, mineral leases would be issued in wilderness areas only after completion of an environmental assessment or an environmental impact statement.

He said that process would include taking public comment on the leases and holding public hearings.

In addition, he said, the Interior Department will give Congress at least 30 working or 60 calendar days' notice of its intention to issue a mineral lease.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Saturday, November 21, 1981

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Among those celebrating this birthday with you are actresses Goldie Hawn and Marlo Thomas, baseball Hall of Fame hitter Stan Musial, ballerina Natalia Makarova and rodeo cowboy Larry Mahan. Those born on this date love intrigue, but in the year ahead, a straightforward approach to business will net you the best results. Your own opinion of your performance is what matters to you, and not how others judge your efforts. Romance continues to be prominent in your plans and family ties become more important than ever. You are not an easy person to get to know, but those who persevere find you a wonderful friend!

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Many of you can look forward to greater domestic harmony. Revision of family budget will help restore communication. You may decide to visit relatives or old friends.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Family and marital ties provide warm, loving reassurance. You receive wonderful news from someone far away. Group gatherings are very appealing as long as the costs are within reason.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your special ties with certain groups or individuals bring new benefits. In some cases, these could involve greater financial security or health protection.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Stick close to home base today. Loved ones will be anxious to spend the lion's part of the day with you. Creative work enjoys favorable influences.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Rely on yourself more. Others are busy pursuing their own interests. Let your affectionate nature take over if romance is on your mind.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): People in authority may be difficult to reach today. Gambling of all types should be avoided. Look for a chance to make some extra money, however. You will not be sorry!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Old friends could arrive unexpectedly from out of town. Enjoy seeing the sights without running up an expensive tab. Some brisk activity this afternoon will raise your energy level.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Romance could be running first hot, then cold. Talk over your plans for the upcoming holidays with mate or partner. He or she may have additional ideas to offer.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A weekend trip and thoughts of old friends put you in a jolly mood. Someone you meet now will play a dominant role in your future. Long-term financial prospects look excellent.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Do not overlook details; mistakes could cost you a lot of money. Difficult relationship requires more give and take. Ignore gossip. Money matters need careful handling.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Avoid the limelight today and bask in the company of your loved ones. Entertaining a small group at home can be a fun and inexpensive way to spend the evening.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): An unusual new relationship could make you temporarily put aside your ideals. Slow down before you do something you will later regret! Travel plans begin to shape up.

Opening lead: Queen of ♡.

In the bridge player's Garden of Eden, the serpent tempts with a finesse instead of an apple. Consider this hand.

As the cards lie, three no trump cannot be defeated. However, should hearts divide 5-3, as is normal, three no trump would stand little chance while four spades would be an overwhelming favorite. North acted wisely when he chose to correct with four trumps and a balanced hand.

To those declarers who are expert in the art of the finesse, the hand presents no problem. Win the king of hearts and lead the nine of clubs, finessing West for the jack. Although this fails, declarer can now force an entry to dummy in clubs by leading low to the ten. Declarer uses this entry to run the ten of spades. Unfortunately, that loses to the king, but declarer is not yet through. The nine of trumps is now an entry for the diamond finesse. Tough luck — West wins the queen for down one. Declarer can rail against the gods for his fate — he went down in a contract because three finesses were wrong!

Rather than complain, declarer should brush up on his technique. He can make the hand without having to take a single finesse! Look what happens if declarer wins the first heart trick, cashes his other high heart, then bangs down the ace and queen of spades.

West should refuse to win this trick, for otherwise declarer has two trump entries to dummy. But declarer continues with the jack, and West must win perforce. His only safe exit is a heart. Declarer ruffs and now makes what seems to be an unusual play — he cashes the ace and king of diamonds, then exits with the jack!

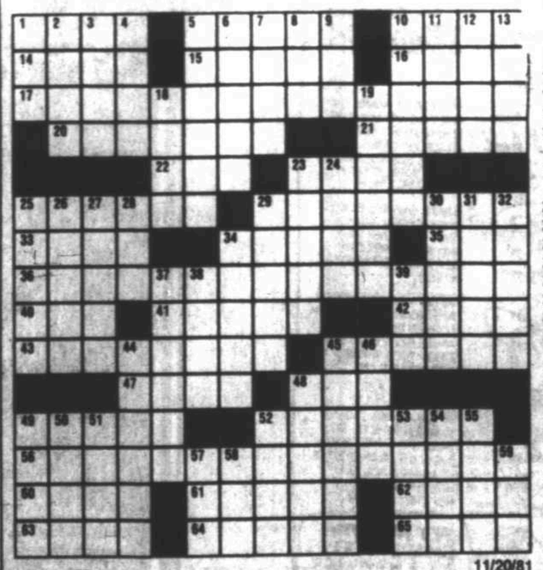

South does not mind which defender wins this trick. Whoever gains the lead has an unappetizing choice of continuations. He can either lead a red suit, which allows declarer to ruff in one hand while discarding a club from the other, or lead a club, which gives declarer a free finesse. Either way, the defenders cannot get more than one club trick and the contract rolls home.

Hope salutes NFL on third special

By JERRY BUCK
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Bob Hope, a one-time team mascot and a former team owner, salutes the 60th anniversary of the National Football League in his third special of the season on NBC.

Hope's show Sunday night will include a number of sketches and special numbers — plus game film clips — focused on the football theme. One sketch even has sportscaster Howard Cosell rendered virtually speechless, for a change.

"I'm a football nut," said Hope, who once owned 11 percent of the Los Angeles Rams and had season tickets for more than 30 years, until the Rams moved to Anaheim. "Now I watch it on television."

He said in 1950, he and Bing Crosby were invited to buy a piece of the Rams. "And Bing didn't take it," he said. "I wanted to take his percentage. It became very valuable. Not as valuable as it is today, because we sold out just before television."

Hope, who turned 78 last May 29, was associated with pro football before there was a National Football League.

"I was the mascot of the Cleveland Tigers when I was about 12 or 14," he recalled. "I guess that was a semi-pro team and it had to be before the league was organized. I used to go to Canton and Massillon and all those places and sing on the train. They used to pass the hat and I made more money than the team.

"I had a high soprano voice," Hope said. "I inherited my voice from my mother, who was a concert singer in Wales. And that's how I got started — singing."

He paused to think. "That had to be my first job in show business. I couldn't have been more than 14 or 15."

One sketch on the show will take a look at the at-home life of Howard Cosell. Betty White will play his wife, and the usually voluble Cosell won't be able to get a word in.

Elizabeth Taylor will appear in another sketch as the first woman football commissioner. "She on to settle a dispute brought in by Georgia Frontiere, the owner of the Rams," said Hope. "Georgia was in one of my pictures, 'A Global Affair' in 1964."

Other guests on the show include Michael Conrad of NBC's "Hill Street Blues," who plays an early coach, Olivia Newton-John, Susan Anton, Barbara Mandrell, George Gobel, O.J. Simpson and Don Knotts.

Current and former coaches and players on the show include George Allen, Dick Butkus, Rosie Grier, Roger Staubach, Hank Stram, Earl Campbell, Tony Dorsett and Terry Bradshaw.

Hope, whose shows have been ratings' winners for 31 years, said, "This should do great because there're so many football fans today. The ratings of the Super Bowl proves that."

The comedian talked about his luca Lake home near NBC's Burbank studios. He divides his time between there and another home in Palm Springs — when doing benefits, personal appearances or concerts. He was wearing a Rams shirt given to him by Carroll Rosenbloom, the late owner of the Rams.

"I think I'll keep this house," he said, "at least until I finish doing television. I've got three more years to go on this contract. Then I'm building my own network."

Does he want to sign a new contract? "Sure, I enjoy it," he said. "Cable's getting big, too. Every day I get a call asking me to do something for cable, but I say there's no way. I've got an exclusive contract with NBC."

The Newspaper BIBLE

SICKNESS? OR JUST PLAIN SIN?

Since earliest times men have seen the earth and sky and all God made, and have known of His existence and great eternal power. So they will have no excuse when they stand before God at Judgment Day. Yes, they knew about Him all right, but they wouldn't admit it or worship Him or even thank Him for all His daily care. And after awhile they began to think up silly ideas of what God was like and what He wanted them to do. The result was that their foolish minds became dark and confused. Claiming themselves to be wise without God, they became utter fools instead. And then, instead of worshiping the glorious, ever-living God, they took wood and stone and made idols for themselves, carving them to look like mere birds and animals and snakes and puny men.

So God let them go ahead into every sort of sex sin, and do whatever they wanted to--yes, vile and sinful things with each other's bodies. Instead of believing what they knew was the truth about God, they deliberately chose to believe lies. So they prayed to the things God made, but wouldn't obey the blessed God who made these things.

That is why God let go of them and let them do all these evil things, so that even their women turned against God's natural plan for them and indulged in sex sin with each other. And the men, instead of having normal sex relationship with women, burned with lust for each other, men doing shameful things with other men and, as a result, getting paid within their own souls with the penalty they so richly deserved.

So it was that when they gave God up and would not even acknowledge Him, God gave them up to doing everything their evil minds could think of. Their lives became full of every kind of wickedness and sin, of greed and hate, envy, murder, fighting, lying, bitterness, and gossip. They were backbiters, haters of God, insolent, proud braggarts, always thinking of new ways of sinning and continually being disobedient to their parents. They tried to misunderstand, broke their promises, and were heartless--without pity. They were fully aware of God's death penalty for these crimes, yet they went right ahead and did them anyway, and encouraged others to do them, too.

Faltering economy, not Libya, poses greatest threat to Sudan

KHARTOUM, Sudan (AP) — President Gaafar Nimeiri has imposed severe measures to improve Sudan's faltering economy, which diplomats say poses a greater danger than Libya to his pro-Western government.

Merchants selling food above established prices can be fined or flogged after trials by price courts set up in tents in Khartoum's markets.

The vulnerability of Africa's largest nation — slightly larger in area than Western Europe — has led to increased military and economic commitments from the United States. The commitment on military aid came after the assassination Oct. 6 of President Anwar Sadat of Egypt, an ally of Sudan, and Nimeiri's contention that Libya was bracing for an attack.

"This country hurts in so many ways it is hard to know where to start," said one Western diplomat, speaking privately and asking not to be identified. "The people are warm by nature and infinitely patient, but even that is taxed when they line up for hours for bread and other necessities. Privation breeds unrest."

Among the main difficulties facing Sudan:

—Inflation estimated at 50 percent.

—A $700 million gap between imports and exports. Imports cost almost three times as much as Sudan earns from exports.

—A $1.5 billion debt to Western bankers and nations.

—A fall-off in the production of cotton, Sudan's main cash crop, from 747,000 bales in 1978-79 to 460,000 last season.

—The burden of more than 500,000 refugees from Sudan's troubled neighbors, including Ethiopia, Uganda and Chad.

—Poor food and commodity distribution because the country has only about 1,000 miles of paved roads.

Nimeiri, concerned over what he termed a "gravely deteriorating" economic situation, fired his Cabinet ministers Nov. 9, accusing them of inefficiency or allowing the budget deficit to triple over four years.

He announced a 19-point plan to redress the ills, including devaluation of the Sudanese pound, an immediate end of the government subsidy on oil imports and a gradually lifting of subsidies on basic commodities such as sugar, wheat and wheat flour. The moves were bound to be unpopular among the Sudanese who consume large quantities of heavily sweetened tea and use the wheat in many national dishes.

The International Monetary Fund, a specialized agency of the United Nations, had urged the removal of the subsidies in order for Sudan to qualify for IMF financial help.

Nimeiri, a military man who has survived about a dozen coup attempts in 12 years, has accused Libya of attempting to overthrow his regime by sending saboteurs to buy up food staples, hoping the resulting shortages will lead to anti-government riots.

This autumn, the government rounded up more than 10,000 "vagrants and illegal aliens" in the capital and after questioning them, jailed 3,000 on charges of working to destabilize the regime. About 2,260 unlicensed guns also were seized, many of them supplied by Libya, officials claimed.

In addition to the arrests, the government set up the price courts in the markets. Merchants and customers alike are fined or flogged for selling or buying above government prices. One offender, for instance, received five lashes for selling a lime at the equivalent of five cents instead of two.

"The fines and floggings have been a sharp lesson to merchants; violations have decreased," said police. Maj. Awad Mustaf, who supervises Khartoum's North Market. "We have not done this before, but it is in the public interest."

Western diplomats, however, believe the tough handling of economic crime could boomerang if nothing is done to attack the economy's underlying weaknesses.

U.S. economic assistance has increased from $7 million three years ago to $131 million in 1981, and Sudan also receives aid from several European nations and Saudi Arabia.

Foreign investment has increased as Nimeiri has liberalized the economy. The new hotels of Khartoum are crowded with U.S. and European businessmen, and about 30 commercial banks and other financial institutions have recently opened branches in the capital.

"The economic atmosphere is already better," said Charles H. Claudon, manager of the Pittsburgh, Pa., division of the Mine Safety Appliances Co. "I was here seven years ago trying to sound out the market, but my efforts failed miserably. There now is a definite change for the better, and market prospects are better."

Britain's Labor Party in shambles

By MAUREEN JOHNSON
Associated Press Writer

An analysis

LONDON (AP) — Born amid the political stirrings of labor unions at the turn of the century, Britain's Labor Party brought the nation free health care and social security, taxed the rich heavily and nationalized major industries.

Eighty years later, the flag of British socialism is in tatters.

Basic to the problem are the sharp differences between left-wingers and moderates over the direction of the party.

Moderate members say the party risks annihilation at the 1984 election because of a bid by radicals to take over the onetime movement of the working class — political home of generations of left-wing intellectuals and winner of four of the last six general elections.

Some see Labor's demoralization and disintegration since its May, 1979, defeat by Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's Conservatives as so rapid, they doubt it will survive the 1980s as a significant political force.

The centrist alliance of the eight-month-old Social Democratic Party and small Liberal Party is riding high in opinion polls, picking up a steady trickle of Labor defectors and hoping to replace Labor as the party of the left.

Michael Foot, 68, the silvery-haired intellectual who 12 months ago took over the Labor leadership, continues to blame his party's parlous state on internal fighting — which he appears incapable of stopping.

"A deeply frustrating and wasted year, and it is largely our own fault," was Foot's commentary on his first anniversary.

Labor has reaped no benefit from the increasing unpopularity of Mrs. Thatcher's right-wing administration. In October, when the SDP-Liberal alliance won its first parliamentary victory in a former Conservative district, Labor was driven into third place.

Critics accuse Foot of ineffectual leadership — a mixture of agonizing, pleading for unity, and "appeasement" of the party's hard left led by former Energy Secretary Tony Benn.

Benn narrowly lost the deputy leadership at Labor's annual conference in September but is fighting back.

Foot, fearing even worse trouble from the left, dares not intervene. Citing party unity, he blocked a moderate bid this month to oust Benn as head of Labor's home policy committee.

Benn, back as a senior party spokesman in the House of Commons, plunged Labor into a new round of in-fighting days after the new Parliament session began.

Goodwin can't climb anymore

CHICAGO (AP) — The sentence was unusual in the annals of justice. The perpetrator got one year of probation and an order from a judge: Don't climb the walls.

Dan Goodwin, who scaled the 100-story John Hancock Center last week, was sentenced Thursday and ordered not to climb buildings in Cook County.

Circuit Judge Harold Siegan withheld fining Goodwin, a 25-year-old acrobat from San Rafael, Calif., in connection with $16,000 worth of damage to building. The judge said he'll make a financial assessment and decide next May if Goodwin should be liable for damages.

Goodwin's lawyer, Stephan Zucker, said he will appeal within 30 days the contempt conviction under which the sentencing was made. The contempt finding stemmed from a previous court order enjoining Goodwin from climbing the Hancock building — he had failed at his first attempt to climb it.

Westmoreland

MIDDLETOWN, Conn. (AP) — Retired Army Gen. William C. Westmoreland says the psychological damage suffered by Vietnam War veterans is due mostly to the anti-war atmosphere in this country during the war.

The 67-year-old former commander of American forces in Vietnam told about 700 people at Wesleyan University Wednesday night that Vietnam veterans "carry a psychological burden that has never been carried by any soldier before."

Although he said he doesn't regret actions he took in Vietnam, Westmoreland said "if a crystal ball was such that we would have known what would happen, it was a mistake to get involved."

A campus controversy was sparked by opponents of Westmoreland's views and those who believed his $2,000 fee, paid from the student activities fund and approved by a student government committee, was too high. The appearance was canceled at one point, but arguments in favor of his right to express his views eventually prevailed.

Redford

BEDFORD, N.Y. (AP) — Police put the sting on Robert Redford after the actor and director allegedly drove 73 mph in a 55 mph zone on an interstate highway in Westchester County. Just like ordinary people, Redford got a ticket.

The star of movies such as "The Sting" and the director of the recent hit film "Ordinary People" has until early January to pay or contest the ticket, officials said Thursday. The amount of the fine was not disclosed.

Redford, whose name appeared as Charles R. Redford on his Utah operator's license, was in a 1981 Toyota with New Jersey license plates, police said. He has a Fifth Avenue apartment, where he recently slept through a burglary attempt by two youths who were scared off by Redford's wife.

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. (AP) — Jean Harris' lawyer says her trial in the killing of Scarsdale Diet author Dr. Herman Tarnower was marred by excessive publicity, but he didn't ask for a new trial location because publicity tainted "every state in the union."

"There was no place we could have changed venue to short of Tahiti," Joel Aurnou said Thursday in arguing that Mrs. Harris' murder conviction should be overturned.

Lawyers for the former school headmistresss told the Appellate Division of state Supreme Court that publicity, a biased juror and a wrongly admitted statement were grounds for overturning the conviction.

Assistant Westchester County District Attorney Anthony Servino argued that Mrs. Harris convicted herself by her own testimony.

Mrs. Harris, now 58, is serving a sentence of 15 years to life for the killing of Tarnower on March 10, 1980.

Mrs. Harris' lawyers charge that one juror was biased in favor of the prosecution because a member of the district attorney's office who became involved in the Harris trial had had charges against the woman's daughter dismissed in what court papers describe as a "flim-flam" scheme.

Defense lawyers also said Mrs. Harris' rights were violated when a police officer was allowed to testify that he overheard her telling her lawyer the night of the shooting, "Oh, my God! I think I've killed Hi!" Hi was Tarnower's nickname.

Handicapped soprano triumphs to portray Mimi

By PHIL SOUCHERAY
Associated Press Writer

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — Behind Irene Gubrud's debut tonight in Opera St. Paul's production of "La Boheme" is a struggle as touching as that of the sickly heroine she portrays.

But whereas Mimi succumbs, Ms. Gubrud has triumphed over her handicap — the inability to walk far without crutches.

Until tonight, the handicap kept Ms. Gubrud, 34, a successful soprano recitalist, out of a fully staged opera. She got her chance when Opera St. Paul decided to stage the special, one-night performance as part of the International Year of the Disabled.

"The experience itself is a dream coming true," said Ms. Gubrud, the only handicapped member of the cast. "What I'm hoping will come out of it is that other opera companies, opera houses and directors will say, 'Hm, she can do this.'"

Convincing them that she can is what the Canbury, Minn., native has been working toward since 1972, she said, when she was disqualified from auditions for the Metropolitan Opera in New York.

Ms. Gubrud lost the ability to walk freely after an accident when she was 12.

As a voice student at St. Olaf College in Northfield, Minn., and the Juilliard School in New York City, she was a successful recital singer and never considered her handicap a roadblock to becoming an opera singer.

But after rejections by the Met and a host of regional opera companies, Ms. Gubrud said, she decided she needed to do two things if she was going to reach her goal.

"One was to find alternative methods of therapy so I could get stronger, so I could go on stage, at least with limited mobility," she said. "Secondly, I just said, I'm going to have to become very well established as a soloist with orchestra and as a recitalist."

Ms. Gubrud doesn't blame the opera world for shying away from her, saying she always expected that she would have to prove her ability.

She said directors fear it will take too much time and too much money to work her into a production. Indeed, that was a fear shared at first by those involved with tonight's performance.

"I think the challenge was the three months before Irene even arrived, where I fantasized about all the times they would have to pull me off the ceiling," said Lyman Treadwell Smith, stage director. "I think the wonderful thing was that after the first rehearsal, I realized that those were worries I could have saved myself. We, together, found solutions and they were so simple."

Ms. Gubrud generally walks without crutches in the production, and although she has to make several entrances, only one in the third act will be made with the aid of a crutch, she said.

But the singer admitted her handicap does have an impact on a production.

"I have to probably be, in my mind, more well rehearsed than another singer in terms of movement, knowing exactly what movement is coming up next, simply because I don't have the choice of a smooth alternative movement," she said.

"I also feel I have to have more integrity as an artist," she said, "so that there's no question that I'm being hired for my artistic ability, not for sympathy."

If it's November it must be sweeps time

By FRED ROTHENBERG
AP Television Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Hollywood put King Kong on the Empire State Building in the name of entertainment, but this month a television station put a creepy Super Rat atop the Chrysler Building in the name of news.

The same New York station, WABC, had its star anchorman, 53-year-old Roger Grimsby, jump out of an airplane and risk life and limb in a speeding race car — all in the name of news.

It's not silly season in New York. Around the country, local news stations have offered quite an assortment of exotic features in November:

—"Secret fears," birth by appointment and missing children in Miami;

—Erotic home video cassettes, a seminar in human sexuality, and stress on the freeways in Los Angeles;

—Kvetching (complaining), escort services as fronts for prostitution and a new strain of gonorrhea in New York;

—Dr. Joyce Brothers on "What Every Woman Should Know About Men" in Chicago.

It's sweeps time in American television, time to determine the ratings that set the rates for advertising fees. With millions of dollars at stake, local TV broadcasters are going to great lengths to get viewers.

In Chicago, top newscasters have been dispatched to such exotic places as Africa, Thailand and Austria for not-so-local news. WBBM told of poachers who prey on rare animals in Africa and Thailand, while WMAQ reported on the plight of African refugees in Somalia and Kenya and Polish emigres in Vienna.

Journalism? Maybe. Ratings boosters? Certainly.

It's the same game that makes November such a big month for movie mavens. Ever wonder why there's a bonanza of riches now — "Grease," "10," "Every Which Way But Loose," "Close Encounters Of The Third Kind" — while in other months TV has little to offer?

Or, how about the way the networks' made-for-TV films, with their sanitized sex and violence, seem a little sexier, a little more violent? Already, they've tackled male strippers, the death of a Playboy centerfold, black market babies, teen-age love, and rape from the perspective of the victim's husband.

The networks, whose own commercial rates are establishd by daily A.C. Nielsen Co. ratings, are looking to help their affiliated stations during the sweeps with premium programming. More viewers will increase revenues for local commercials during prime time and build larger audiences for the follow-up news broadcasts. Nielsen and Arbitron, two ratings services, monitor local ratings during sweeps.

November, like the other sweeps months, February and May, is TV without pretension. Make the entertainment more entertaining. Make the news more entertaining. Get the viewer into the tent.

In New York City, the nation's biggest market, the rule of thumb is that a ratings point, measuring the percentage of all TV homes in an area watching, is equivalent to about $1 million in advertising revenue. More viewers in November pay off for the next few months.

"I don't believe we should be judged on just three months of the year," said Johnathan Rodgers, news director of KNXT in Los Angeles. "However, we're caught up in this game so I do it to bring new viewers to KNXT. I do the kind of pieces I can promote."

Super Rat bolstered the ratings for WLS in Chicago, although public sanitation officials scoffed at the danger. So when Bill Fyffe, general manager of WLS, switched to WABC in New York, he brought Super Rat along.

Thus began a five-part series designed to win friends and influence viewers. The station says the new breed of rat, immune to conventional poisons, is not a problem yet; it's a potential problem. WABC had trouble locating Super Rat and used some of WLS' more sensational footage.

Features can be informative without being exploitative, although the lines get blurred. Local stations have offered a wide range of sedate special reports this month: home protection equipment, religious cults in Los Angeles, day care centers, the clout of the tobacco industry.

Although the sex and violence stories peak during sweep months, there seems to be a little less of this kind of reporting than in the late 1970s, when "Happy Talk" news was more in vogue.

Recently, the public has demonstrated a greater desire for straight news, as seen by the high viewership of the networks' nightly newscasts and the success of ABC's "Nightline" and PBS' "MacNeil-Lehrer Report."

In addition, daily stories on the economy and the success of CBS' "60 Minutes" have spurred more consumer-oriented and investigative reports throughout the year, but particularly during the sweeps months.

This month, WLS has done investigative pieces on traffic court and series on home burglaries, pensions and the dangers of X-rays. "It wasn't too many years ago the station was doing 'killer ants' invading Chicago and 'Jaws' in Lake Michigan," said Tom Kuelbs, news director at WLS.

"People need an ombudsman," Kuelbs added. "Our special reports are proving that. Everybody gets an X-ray. Everybody gets a traffic ticket."

Last week, WABC followed "Close Encounters" with a special report on UFOs. UFOs and Super Rats are sighted more frequently in November, February and May. Not because they're hiding the rest of the year; it's just that TV stations are more interested in finding them during the sweeps.

CBS plans to expand to hour-long newscast

NEW YORK (AP) — CBS, which led the move from 15-minute to half-hour evening television news, says it is going ahead with plans to lengthen its evening newscast to as much as an hour by early 1983, despite opposition from network stations.

"It's our anticipation that we'll be able to offer an hour," James Rosenfield, executive vice president of the CBS Broadcast Group, said Thursday night.

CBS said, however, that three proposals are being considered — to expand the news to 45 minutes, expand it to an hour, or provide a combination under which stations would have the option of taking only the first half hour and tuning out for the second.

CBS' decision was announced after two days of what the network described as "extensive and intensive" discussion of the issue with the network's affiliates board, which is meeting in Hawaii.

Plans to expand the newscast have been criticized in the past by stations that say they will lose advertising income from local programming, which they air between 7:30 p.m. and 8 p.m. Eastern time — after the network news and before the networks' prime time programming begins.

James Babb, chairman of the CBS Affiliates Advisory Board and executive vice president of WBTV in Charlotte, N.C., said today his own station is "not very enthusiastic" about moving the time slot for its hour of local news because of the possible effect on the station's audience.

The CBS statement said, "The board generally agreed that expanded network news could be of value to the television audience, but that there were many existing obstacles, including local news and programming requirements."

CBS' founder and chairman, William S. Paley, one of the most influential figures in broadcasting, is believed to be a strong supporter of lengthening the evening news. CBS newsman Walter Cronkite has said that 30 minutes is not enough to offer more than a "headline service."

CBS was the first of the three networks to expand the original 15-minute evening newscast to a half hour, in 1963, and NBC and ABC followed suit.

All three networks have expressed interest in the longer format, and it appeared in September that NBC would be the first to take the step. NBC's affiliates board recommended a proposal to offer stations an hour-long newscast, from 7 to 8 p.m. Eastern time, in return for certain commercial considerations. But several influential affiliates, led by Westinghouse's Group W, opposed the plan, and it was shelved.

An NBC spokesman said late Thursday that there was no immediate network reaction to CBS' announcement.

ABC has said only that it is studying the concept. Thursday night, network spokesman Alan Raymond said there was no immediate official network reaction. He added, "it is no secret that ABC News would very much like to expand, but there are other factors." He said the issue would be discussed at the network's own affiliate board meeting in two weeks in Hawaii.

Westinghouse's Group W does not have a member on the CBS affiliate board. But its opposition to a one-hour program has not changed, its executives said earlier in the week.

"Our position is that what the country needs and desires most is more local news," said Larry Freiberg, president of the Group W television station division. "We have told all three networks that if they have a strong belief in the hour news, then they should find the extra half-hour in their own 8 to 11 p.m. time period."

A spokesman in Group W's offices in Stamford, Conn., said Thursday night there was no immediate reaction to CBS' announcement.

The New York Times quoted some network executives as saying an extra 30 minutes of network news could be worth as much as an additional $60 million to $70 million a year in advertising. It quoted a high CBS official as saying the network spent more than $50 million a year on its half-hour news, and that doubling the time could cost as little as $15 million more a year.

Expansion of the 30-minute newscast would require waiver by the Federal Communications Commission of the so-called "prime-time access" rule, which in effect sets aside the period between 7:30 and 8 p.m. Eastern time for local programming.

FCC Chairman Mark Fowler is on record as favoring elimination of the access rule as part of an overall deregulation of the industry, but it has not made any moves in that direction.

Puerto Rican issue in Supreme Court

By CONSTANZA ARENA
Associated Press Writer

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (AP) — The U.S. Supreme Court is being asked by a group of Puerto Rican voters to decide whether their ballots or a law favoring political parties should prevail in a dispute over a seat in the island's House of Representatives.

The case could have far-reaching effects on this island's electoral system.

One side says the issue is the concept of one man, one vote. The other side defends the law of this U.S. Commonwealth, which gives the political parties the right to fill legislative vacancies.

AT ISSUE AS WELL is control of the House of Representatives, which remains equally divided between the two major political parties more than a year after the elections of 1980.

The case before the Supreme Court in Washington involves a vacancy in the 51-member House created by the death last January of Rep. Ramon Muniz of the opposition Popular Democratic Party.

Gov. Carlos Romero Barcelo called a special election in the central mountain city of Caguas but the Popular Democrats challenged that order in the local courts and won the right to name Muniz's successor without a new election.

A group of Caguas residents then appealed that ruling to the U.S. Supreme Court, which has agreed to hear the case early next year.

The New Progressive Party, actually in control of the House on a provisional basis, is confident the court in Washington will order a special election in Caguas, keeping alive its chances to win final control of the House.

NEW PROGRESSIVE HOUSE floor leader Jose Granados Navedo maintains that any other ruling is "inconceivable," if only because of the impact such a precedent could have on U.S. elections.

"Political parties on the mainland could demand the same privilege," Granados said. "It could even lead to circumvention of the Voters Rights Act, allowing a political party to fill a vacancy in a black district with a white replacement."

Senate Vice President Sergio Pena Clos of the Popular Democrats admits the "one-man, one-vote" argument is a powerful one, but defends Commonwealth law on grounds of legislative continuity.

"The purpose of the law is to insure that control of either House not be affected by the death, incapacity or even assassination of a legislator, and for that reason I think it's valid," Pena said. "People have been killed for less."

Ironically, the special privilege granted political parties in Commonwealth law stems originally from an effort to insure political balance in the island legislature during the years the Popular Democrats held a lopsided majority.

The Commonwealth contitution, adopted in 1952, even provides for an automatic "addition" to minority-party representation in the House and Senate when a single party wins more than two-thirds of the seats in either chamber.

IT WAS THAT constitutional provision that prevailed the first time the "one-man, one-vote" issue was raised here following the 1972 elections.

In that case, former Gov. Roberto Sanchez Vilella had obtained some 65,000 votes in his bid for an at-large House seat but failed to be elected, while Puerto Rican Independence Party candidate Luis Angel Torres earned a House seat by "addition" — after polling only 127 votes.

Sanchez's supporters challenged the process in the courts on the basis of the one-man, one-vote concept, but the local Supreme Court ruled against them.

The ruling principle in that case was the special protection afforded political parties. Minority seats "by addition" in the legislature are not determined by the number of votes polled by the candidates for those seats, but rather by the proportion of votes obtained for each party's gubernatorial candidate.

But Sanchez, who had broken with the Popular Democrats in 1968 and formed his own party, was waging a new kind of campaign in Puerto Rico — one not based on an established political party.

The former governor believed he had enough appeal to be a viable legislature candidate outside the traditional parties and his reasoning was proved correct to a large extent. But as things turned out, since Sanchez ran for the House and his party's gubernatorial candidate did badly, his 65,000 votes simply didn't count toward his party's inclusion under the contitutional provision for minority-party representation.

THE COURTS UPHELD that result and, thus, the special position of political parties in Puerto Rico.

His candidacy, however, represented an important change in traditional political patterns here and may have indirectly led to the situation now before the U.S. Supreme Court. It was the first time a major political figure waged what amounted to a campaign as an independent, breaking the rigid straight-ticket voting pattern.

Rickover done as nuke head

By L. EDGAR PRINA
Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — It was Black Friday, indeed, for the crusty old admiral when Navy Secretary John F. Lehman Jr., announced Nov. 13 he would be replaced as boss of the Navy's nuclear program as of next Jan. 31.

Adm. Hyman George Rickover, 81, son of a Jewish immigrant tailor from Poland, knew the day was coming. But, as an intensely proud and dedicated man, he dreaded and resisted it.

Not even an offer by President Reagan to become White House advisor on nuclear science could ease the disappointment for the man known as "the father of the atomic submarine" and builder of the nuclear Navy.

Rickover's contributions to the nation and naval service have been great and his achievements legendary. He has made smooth the path of his successor, in terms of present programs and goals. There is no concern that suddenly everything will fall apart with his departure.

WHETHER THE ADMIRAL or civilian who replaces him can hasten the day of the reactor that will last for the lifetime of the ship or help produce a reduced-size nuclear plant for smaller and, therefore, less expensive combatants remains to be seen.

Lehman, 39, the third youngest man ever to serve as secretary of the Navy, said Rickover, who served longer on active military duty (59 years, plus four as a midshipman) than any other American, would have a voice in the selection of his successor and, in fact, has already proposed one. Lehman said the new man could be an active-duty four-star admiral, a retired admiral or a civilian and would maintain the Rickover organization as it is now set up.

The Secretary had, in effect, come to the news conference to praise Rickover, not to bury him. Lauding the admiral for his outstanding record, he noted that the naval nuclear propulsion program was one of "zero defects," that it has never had a failure.

While agreeing that Rickover was still sharp of mind as he nears his 82d birthday in January, Lehman said he decided it was time to begin "an orderly transition" in the leadership of the nuclear program. He said he had to take into account the "actuarial realities" of the situation.

(There is a dispute over Rickover's age. A new book, entitled "Rickover", by Norman Polmar and Thomas Allen, to be published by Simon & Schuster in January, says the admiral's elementary school records, in his own handwriting, indicate he was born in 1898 and not in 1900 as he told the Navy when he entered the naval academy in 1918.)

IN TELLING REPORTERS that Rickover's "extension on active duty will expire at the end of January," Lehman insisted that the admiral was not being "fired" and denied suggestions the White House job offer was a "sop."

He disclosed that he broached the subject of real retirement for the admiral on two occasions some months ago. At the recent and final meeting, the secretary conceded that Rickover had made it plain he wanted to stay on.

Lehman's superior, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, approved and passed the proposal along to Mr. Reagan for decision.

Ordinarily, such personnel actions would be handled by the secretary of the Navy, but with Rickover's stature and powerful connections in Congress, the President obviously had to make the formal decision.

It was gutsy of Lehman. Rickover is well-known for his habit of ignoring chiefs of naval operations and secretaries of Navy and defense if he couldn't convince them to follow his recommendations. He was also noted for his end runs to Congress where he usually found sympathetic ears on the committees that counted.

His offended superiors simply bit their tongues and counted to 10. They kept their mouths shut; at least in public they did.

Paul H. Nitze was an exception, but his decision to replace the czar of the nuclear program more than 14 years ago foundered.

AS SECRETARY OF THE NAVY, Nitze, like Lehman, came to the conclusion that it was time, in 1967, for a transition to a younger leader. He got the blessing of Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara, who told him to check it out first with President Johnson. With the Vietnam war at fever pitch, the president didn't need more trouble with Congress. Accordingly, he told Nitze it would be all right with him to replace Rickover if he got approval from the Joint Congressional Committee on Atomic Energy, then the home base of the admiral's political power.

"So, I went up to see Sen. (John) Pastore, D-R.I., the committee chairman," Nitze said in an interview with Copley News Service the other day.

"He told me he understood and would go along, but that he needed time to bring the other members around to the idea.

"Pastore told me to come back in a week. I did and when I entered the room who should be sitting in the center chair but Rickover himself. He was flanked by Senators (Henry) Jackson and (Clinton) Anderson. I soon found that I was the one under investigation for coming up with such an idea. That ended that."

Nitze, who heads for Geneva next week to chair the U.S. delegation for talks with Soviet representatives on theater nuclear forces, said Rickover had been "flagrantly insubordinate to me."

Nitze's timing obviously left something to be desired, although the "backing" he got from President Johnson was akin to George McGovern's statement that he stood "1,000 percent behind" his embattled running mate, Thomas Eagleton, in the 1972 presidential election campaign.

But in 1967, Rickover was at the height of his power on Capitol Hill. His lectures on the state of the world to the House Appropriations Committeee (in closed session) became an annual event. While he browbeat, humiliated and harassed subordinates and often opposed publicly the decisions of his military superiors, he could be an artful flatterer when it came to dealing with important members of Congress he was wont to cultivate. Thus, trying to get members of the Joint Committee to approve his retirement from the nuclear program was a no-win proposition in 1967.

THE TIMING BY LEHMAN and Mr. Reagan was significantly better. With many of the admiral's old supporters gone from the scene and some younger members of the Armed Services and Appropriations committees turned off by his hardline views, the danger of provoking a revolt on Capitol Hill was seen as remote.
