Cameroon searched for victims of fumes

YAOUNDE, Cameroon (AP) — Soldiers in gas masks today searched villages and the surrounding countryside for more victims of the toxic fumes that escaped from a remote volcanic lake, killing at least 1,200 people.

Reports from the stricken region, its remoteness compounded by muddy roads, described a surreal scene of human and animal corpses strewn about an otherwise peaceful-looking panorama.

Britain's Independent Television News interviewed the Rev. Richard Suttle, a Roman Catholic priest who works at the Cameroon Church Mission 40 miles from the disaster area.

"Three villages were pretty well completely wiped out and all the people were killed," he said.

"The hospitals are completely full. They're trying to erect tents for the homeless and the evacuees. There are a lot of orphaned children whose parents were killed," said Suttle, whose nationality was not disclosed.

The French news agency Agence-France Presse quoted the Rev. Fred Tern Horn, a Catholic missionary in the disaster area, as saying, "It was as if a neutron bomb had exploded, destroying nothing but killing all life. In the first village we went through, we saw men, women and animals stretched out dead on the ground, sometimes in front of their huts or in their beds, sometimes on the path."

Paul Biya, president of this tropical nation in West Africa, told a news conference Monday that casualty figures were incomplete, and that a commission would try to establish an exact number.

Biya ordered the dead buried immediately to avert the threat of disease and said troops were trying to prevent people from entering the disaster area.

He said army teams were searching the 6-square-mile disaster area in northwest Cameroon for more victims, but that at least 1,200 people had died since the poisonous fumes were released Friday, and up to 300 others had been hospitalized.

Biya, who toured the disaster site Sunday, said he had been told the gas has subsided, but added, "Still, we have to be careful."

Earlier, Information Minister Georges Ngango told reporters that military reports from the scene gave a preliminary death toll estimate of at least 2,000.

An explosion deep in Lake Nios, about 200 miles northwest of Yaounde, apparently cracked open the lake bottom and released the gases Friday night, Biya said. He did not elaborate on the nature of the explosion, which apparently was a volcano-like geological phenomenon.

"Some heard the noise but did not realize poisonous fumes were released," Biya said. Others fled, and soldiers were helping many evacuate, including the 10,000 inhabitants of the nearest town, Wum, officials said.

Deadly gas from lake seldom leaves lasting effects

■ Life in Cameroon explored — 2A

NEW YORK (AP) — The gas that Cameroon government officials said killed thousands of people can kill quickly, but most who escape suffer no lasting effects, experts say.

"You're either going to die or you're going to fully recover, is the general rule," said Roger Smith, chairman of the pharmacology department at Dartmouth Medical School.

The gas, hydrogen sulfide, can kill within minutes or cause a lung complication that can kill within two days, experts say. Delayed effects, such as headaches, mental problems, dizziness and partial paralysis, can last months or longer, experts said Monday.

There's no evidence of increased risk of cancer or harm to reproductive ability, but complete studies are lacking, they said.

Cameroon officials said the deaths occurred after hydrogen sulfide spewed from a volcanic lake. However, some volcanologists speculated that carbon monoxide or carbon dioxide was to blame because hydrogen sulfide so light, it can dissipate quickly.

In the short term, hydrogen sulfide acts quickly. It can knock out a victim "within a breath or two" at high concentrations, paralyzing breathing and killing within minutes if the victim is not resuscitated, said Harriet Ammann, biologist with the federal Environmental Protection Agency.

The gas prevents bodily cells from using oxygen, and its attack on brain cells can stop a victim's breathing.

Officers stumble onto drug lab

From Staff Reports

McCAMEY — Upton County Sheriff's officers "stumbled" upon the first amphetamine lab ever uncovered in that county, Sheriff Glen Willeford said this morning.

"We just kinda stumbled into this thing," Willeford said.

The lab and 51 firearms were found after the department issued a search warrant Monday for a trailer and side buildings located about seven miles east of McCamey.

Officers were called to the trailer on a runaway complaint around midnight Sunday.

After the officers were invited into the home, they saw some marijuana and returned back to Rankin to get a search warrant, Willeford said.

Returning with the search warrant around 5 a.m. Monday, sheriff officers found what appeared to be an amphetamine or methamphetamine lab in a side building, Willeford said.

"We mostly found the makings of a laboratory and the separated chemicals," Willeford said.

Denise Hall, 33, and 19-year-old Steve Bruton both of Sherman were arrested and charged with conspiracy to manufacture amphetamines, Willeford said.

Uzis — Israeli-made rifles and pistols — black-powder fling lock pistols, blowguns and swords were among the weapons found, he said.

"I think if we hadn't surprised them, it might have been a little hairy out there," Willeford said.

Until lab findings are returned, officials will not know whether the lab was used to produce amphetamines or methamphetamines, Willeford said. Methamphetamines are a higher quality of speed, he said.

Convicted rapist third executed within week

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Convicted rapist Chester Lee Wicker became the third Texas prison inmate to be executed within a week when he was put to death by injection early today.

Wicker made no final statement. He was sentenced to death for abducting, trying to rape and then choking and burying alive a woman on a Gulf Coast beach.

His lone personal witness, Judith Lamblion, identified as a friend and spiritual adviser from Salt Lake City, told Wicker that his mother sent her love.

"I love you," were his only words.

He took a couple of deep breaths and stopped moving. He was pronounced dead at 12:20 a.m., 10 minutes after the lethal injection began.

Attorney General Jim Mattox, however, said it appeared death came within 30 seconds.

"He was very calm but obviously very nervous," said Mattox, who was present as Wicker was strapped to the death chamber gurney. "He said he was going to make the best of it. He realized it was not a pleasant thing for everyone involved and was concerned about his mother and her well-being."

Wicker had spent a relatively quiet final day visiting with his mother, grandfather and Ms. Lamblion, but flew into a rage when they departed, destroying property in his death row cell as he was about to be moved to the death house.

"He smashed his electric fan and threw his personal property on the floor and just started stomping over all of it," Texas Department of Corrections spokeswoman Sarah Grisham said.

After the tantrum, he was described as quiet.

Tax bill's oil effects 'could have been worse'

DALLAS (AP) — Texas oil industry officials say the nation's new tax bill is likely to siphon off investment capital because of scaled-down deductions, but most said the tax overhaul didn't put as big a squeeze on the industry as had been feared.

The tax bill could have been worse, said Jim Hunt, chairman of Dallas-based Cenergy Corp. But he said it still will add to the problems of the industry, which was hit by a sharp decrease in oil prices at the beginning of this year.

"It's certainly not going to help (exploration)," he said. "The shame of it is they've done it all in the name of reducing taxes."

The tax changes come at a time when the Texas economy is reeling from collapsing oil prices and the accompanying high unemployment rates and low sales tax revenues. Legislators are meeting in a special session this month to make up for a predicted $3.5 billion shortfall.

"We're just in what's known as a plain old classic recession," said Tony Proffitt, spokesman for Texas Comptroller Bob Bullock.

Proffitt said the fact that much of the oil and gas industry's tax deductions were left intact will help stabilize the industry, thereby helping the state.

"In the short run, it (the tax overhaul) will kind of pinch us a little bit, like the sales tax deduction. In the long run it should be beneficial because it will mean more people will retain more of their income and can spend that income on things that will generate economic activity," he said.

The tax overhaul eliminates the deduction for sales taxes and retains the one for state income taxes — doubly painful for Texas, which has no state income tax and depends on sales taxes for much of its revenue.

U.S. prepared to counter threat of Libyan terrorism

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — The Reagan administration is prepared with military and economic contingency plans to be used if Libya's Moammar Gadhafi sponsors a new campaign of anti-American terrorism, officials say.

In Washington, Pentagon sources point to "clear indications" over the last few weeks that Gadhaff may be preparing "to get back into the terrorism business" — perhaps in West Germany or Greece — but insist they are not planning a preemptive strike.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes, however, refused to deny a Wall Street Journal story published Monday that said a plan to foment political and economic dissent against Gadhafi had been developed "to preempt more Libyan-sponsored terrorism."

One official seemed eager to confirm the Journal's story, calling it "very authoritative."

Speakes would not go that far Monday in a briefing for reporters who are covering President Reagan during his vacation at his ranch near here.

Speakes, however, did say: "The United States is prepared to take whatever action is necessary to prevent terrorist activity and could continue to do so.

"We have reason to believe that the Libyan state headed by Colonel Gadhafi has not forsaken the desire to create terrorist activities worldwide and the capability is still there to do so," the spokesman added.

Detective Sgt. David Garcia of the Midland Police Department checks a window on the third floor of Hillcrest Manor, 700 W. Scharbauer, following a shooting about 8 p.m. Monday. A 79-year-old resident was treated and released with a gunshot wound to the arm. Police have a suspect in the shooting.

Assault charges likely in Hillcrest shooting

From Staff Reports

A 24-year-old Midland man is expected to be charged later today with aggravated assault following the shooting late Monday of a 79-year-old Midland woman.

Rosa Nichols, a tenant at Hillcrest Manor, 700 W. Scharbauer Dr., was treated and released at Midland Memorial Hospital following a shooting shortly after 8 p.m.

Police were called to Mrs. Nichols' apartment on the third floor, and found the woman on the floor holding her left arm. She told police she had heard a gunshot while watching television, and was reportedly shot when she tried to reach her telephone.

Officers found a bullet hole in the apartment window, and at least one bullet. Further investigation led police to an apartment facing that of the victim at the Courtyard Apartments, 2300 N. A St., where they found a .22 caliber rifle that had apparently been recently fired. A witness at the scene told police the man in custody had been firing the weapon randomly earlier Monday.

The man was arrested at the apartments and was booked at city jail on the assault charge and other outstanding warrants with the Midland County Constable's office.

Ancient threat countered with modern technology

By MORT ROSENBLUM
AP Special Correspondent

PARIS — Cameroon, a contrast of old and new, is using modern technology to fight a natural disaster that some of the people threatened attribute to ancient volcano gods.

Poisonous gas seeping from a lake has killed at least 1,200 people in the country's northwest, according to preliminary reports cited by government officials.

For rescue workers racing from Cameroon's high-living modern capital, the stricken area near Wum might be another planet. Wum is far more different from Yaounde than Yaounde is from Paris.

Their destination is a dramatic chain of volcanic peaks and valleys that reach into eastern Nigeria. It is an area of ranches, tourism and smugglers, with some of Africa's most spectacular terrain.

Rescue teams, shuttled in helicopters, rely on gas masks and testing devices. Villagers and herders depend more on amulets and the goodwill of their gods.

The threatened people are Fulani and other ethnic groups who live just north of the Bamileke, an industrious tribe of traders and farmers who lost out in a bitter fight for national power.

Some who live near the lake are Roman Catholics who traveled to the western town of Bamenda to see Pope John Paul II last year. Others are Moslems, but most are animists, who believe that spirits reside in plants, objects and natural phenomena.

They live in huts of mud and straw that cling to the hillsides, growing millet and cassava. Their highlands are some of Africa's best cattle country and many measure wealth in livestock.

Sir Richard Burton led a race up the nation's most prominent volcano, the 13,353-foot Mount Cameroon, in 1861 to scout out a hill station where colonials could escape the pestilential coast.

For local people, Mount Cameroon is Mudongo ma Loba, the Mountain of the Gods. They believe its eruptions signal the immortal anger, which sometimes has exacted heavy tolls.

The latest tragedy occurred 150 miles to the north in a range separated from Mount Cameroon by lowlands.

Volcano country is in West Cameroon, which was explored by the British, colonized by the Germans and then taken over again by Britain. It joined the larger French portion at independence in 1961 to form Africa's only bilingual French-English nation.

On a turbulent continent, Cameroon is stable and prosperous, with oil and minerals, agriculture and modest but substantial industries.

Ahmadou Ahidjo, its first leader, avoided the political rhetoric and experimental economics that left many other emergent nations in shambles.

When oil was discovered, he put the profits into agriculture and communication, escaping the economic turmoil suffered by Nigeria and Gabon, neighbors on the West African coast.

Ahidjo suppressed political opposition, sometimes with France's help, and chose Paul Biya to take over as president in 1982. Biya survived a coup attempt two years later.

In contrast to primitive lifestyles in the remote mountains, northern deserts and thick rain forests, the port of Douala is a humming metropolis of high-rise buildings, noisy discos and elegant restaurants.

Douala, on the rain-sodden coast at the bend of Africa, is a mixture of old colonial town and a boom city. American oilmen stride the mossy sidewalks, doing business with French bankers and Lebanese importers.

Yaounde is smaller, spread over the hills of central Cameroon. It has the university and research centers and is the hub of railways and roads that link the country, which is the size of California.

The nine million Cameroonians have a per capita yearly income of $800, four times the level of Africa's poorer states.

Israeli Prime Minister Shimon Peres is greeted by dancers at the Yaounde, Cameroon, airport during arrival ceremonies. The nations announced restoration of diplomatic relations.

Israel, Cameroon announce their restoration of diplomatic relations

YAOUNDE, Cameroon (AP) — Israel and Cameroon have restored diplomatic relations after a 13-year break, the two governments announced today in a joint communique.

The announcement came at the end of two days of talks between Israeli Prime Minister Shimon Peres and President Paul Biya.

Peres arrived Monday, a day after it was first reported that a fatal gas emission had occurred from a volcanic lake in northwestern Cameroon. A 17-member army medical team accompanied the Israeli leader.

Cameroon was among 29 African countries that severed ties with Israel after the 1973 Arab-Israeli war. Three have restored ties since, and Israeli officials have said they hoped renewed ties with Cameroon would open the door toward relations with other African nations.

In the statement, the two countries said they would emphasize cooperation in the fields of agriculture, commerce and industry, tourism, construction and housing, communication and security.

An Israeli government official in Jerusalem told reporters today on condition of anonymity that Israel helped Biya rebuild an army of 6,000 plus a "gendarmerie" or paramilitary corps.

Israel also has supplied weapons to Cameroon, and has military personnel in the country, the official said, but he declined to elaborate.

Biya, at a separate news conference Monday, said Cameroon broke ties with Israel as an act of solidarity with the Arab states, "but an act of solidarity can be limited in time." He said other black African countries would follow Cameroon in renewing relations with Israel, but he declined to name them.

Today's joint statement, read to reporters in Cameroon in French and Hebrew, said the two countries would combat apartheid in South Africa.

The communique also said Israel and Cameroon supported peace in the Middle East based on United Nations resolutions 242 and 338 and a solution to the Palestinian problem.

U.N. Security Council Resolution 242 of 1967 says a "just and lasting peace" in the Middle East should be based on the withdrawal of Israeli troops from Arab territories occupied during the Six-Day War and recognition of the right of all states in the region "to live within secure and recognized boundaries free from threats or acts of force."

Resolution 338, adopted Oct. 22, 1973 called for a cease-fire, implementing Resolution 242 and negotiations for a "just and durable peace in the Middle East."

Peres told reporters Biya had agreed in principle to visit Israel, but a date for the visit was not established.

Nation's governors near consensus on education, tax bill

HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C. (AP) — With little partisanship showing, the nation's governors are ending their annual conference after nearing consensus on proposals to improve education and cope with federal tax overhaul.

Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton, a Democrat, today was to take over as chairman of the National Governors' Association, succeeding Republican Lamar Alexander of Tennessee, who tried to keep the governors focused on education reforms during his one-year term.

The governors rotate the leadership positions between the parties each year, and the Republican Governors Association today voted to elect New Hampshire Gov. John Sununu as vice chairman of all the governors.

He defeated Indiana Gov. Robert Orr in secret balloting at a closed-door meeting. The vote was 8-7, said Michelle Davis, executive director of the GOP governors' group.

Assuming tradition is followed, Sununu would be elevated to chairman of the National Governors' Association next year, and serve as its leader at the time of New Hampshire's first-in-the-nation presidential primary in early 1988.

Clinton said in an interview he was willing to accede to the wishes of other governors in staking out a position on federal tax legislation, but that he was willing to accept the compromise version agreed upon last week by House and Senate conferees.

That bill caused much agonizing by governors, since it would achieve some of their goals of tax reform, produce a revenue windfall for some states through its effects on their tax base, but also pressure their taxing systems by eliminating the federal deduction for sales taxes.

Clinton echoed Colorado Gov. Richard Lamm, chairman of the governors' tax committee, in saying it was time to accept tax reform despite deep opposition on the deduction of sales taxes. Removal of the deduction is seen as making future state tax increases more difficult and pushing states that rely on sales taxes to an income or other tax.

"We've got a lot of other battles to fight," Clinton said.

About 10 governors held a closed-door meeting on the issue, but said later the talk was of how to adjust to the expected federal changes, not how to oppose them.

The governors' proposals to reorganize education were being bolstered by the release of a poll by the Carnegie Forum on Education and the Economy, which showed a majority of Americans back tax increases to improve education.

Virtually no dissent was heard among governors in two days of discussions about their recommendations, which included granting more authority over school decisions to local educators and increasing reporting of schools' performances.

The governors today also were to vote on policy statements including one aimed at persuading Congress not to try to wrest control from the governors over the peacetime training activities of Air and Army National Guard troops.

The resolution states that governors believe the U.S. Constitution gives them authority over the troops in their states. It was being pushed by, among others, Maine Gov. Joseph Brennan, who has led the opposition to the use of guard troops by the Reagan administration in exercises in Honduras.

The House has adopted legislation aimed at giving control of the guard to the federal government.

"The point is the National Guard is not the foreign legion," Brennan said in an interview, "and should not be shipped off to places like Honduras for foreign policy reasons."

Another statement to be voted on was one backed by Vermont Gov. Madeline Kunin, calling for giving the states authority to shut down nuclear power plants within their borders if they violate state safety standards.

About the only evidence of partisanship to emerge during the four-day conference was in a committee meeting on drugs, where Rep. Glenn English, D-Okla., accused the Reagan administration of misleading rhetoric in announcing a war on drugs. He said the administration had actually cut, not increased, anti-drug agents.

The Reagan administration's top anti-drug official, Carlton Turner, countered that the administration felt the best way to fight drugs was among users, and that sealing the borders against smugglers wouldn't work.

But governors themselves generally shied away from partisanship, a contrast to last year's conference when Democratic governors reacted with outrage to a GOP fund-raising letter signed by Reagan that accused them of advocating "tax and spend" policies. Republicans agreed to tone down their letter after Democrats threatened to block Alexander's elevation to chairman.

Conferees urge non-political choice of nuclear waste site

HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C. (AP) — Wisconsin Gov. Tony Earl, accusing federal officials of being politically motivated, urged the government to designate a single site as the nation's permanent burial facility for high-level nuclear waste.

"One of my frustrations is states have been put in a wholly reactive position," Earl said Monday at a work session on nuclear waste at the National Governor's Association meeting.

"My principal concern is that these decisions have been made on political grounds," he said.

Following the passage of the 1982 Nuclear Waste Policy Act, the Department of Energy initially narrowed the choice of a permanent repository to three possible sites — Washington, Nevada and Texas. Georgia, North Carolina, Virginia, Maine, New Hampshire, Wisconsin and Minnesota were named later as other possibilities as required by the law.

When DOE subsequently announced it was postponing indefinitely any consideration of the second group of states for the site, it was sharply criticized as yielding to political pressures.

Arizona Gov. Bruce Babbitt, who attended the work session, called it senseless to have more than one site, and Earl, who moderated the meeting, contended DOE's actions could encourage nuclear waste proliferation.

Representatives of governors from other states also complained about DOE notification of high-level nuclear waste shipments through their regions.

The state of Washington tried to negotiate travel routes and other details with federal officials on non-classified waste only to have their efforts nixed in Washington, one spokesman said.

FBI praises spy informant

NEW YORK (AP) — Federal prosecutors have nothing but praise for the mystery informant who cooperated with an FBI sting operation against an accused Soviet spy, but decline to reveal the man's identity.

"He is to be applauded," U.S. Attorney Andrew Maloney of Brooklyn said of the informant after the Soviet suspect was arraigned on espionage charges Monday.

Maloney said the FBI had long been monitoring the suspect's movements because the computer science student he cultivated as a source went to authorities three years ago.

Since then, the Soviet citizen had been given only unclassified material until he was arrested Saturday in a subway station with plans for jet engines, according to court papers.

Maloney would identify the informant only as a permanent resident alien from the South American country of Guyana.

As Soviet officials watched, Gennadiy Fedorovich Zakharov, 39, was arraigned before a federal magistrate on charges he conspired to obtain and transmit secret defense documents to the Soviet Union in violation of espionage law.

Zakharov, a United Nations employee, was ordered held without bail pending a bail hearing Wednesday.

Maloney said the physicist, who faces a possible life sentence if convicted, is "a Soviet citizen believed by the FBI to be a member of the KGB."

At a news conference later, Maloney would not comment further on Zakharov's alleged KGB connection, but said, "I do know there are situations ... other investigations going on and pending right now of a similar nature." He would not comment when asked if there would be more arrests.

He said the FBI obtained a search warrant for Zakharov's apartment in The Bronx and that up to 80 items were seized, but that he did not know what was found.

According to court papers, Zakharov first approached the informant about spying for the Soviets in 1983 while the informant was a third-year student majoring in computer science at Queens College.

The student immediately went to the FBI, and from May 1983 through March 1985 provided Zakharov with unclassified microfiche purportedly stolen from various libraries and information centers, according to the FBI.

"It's a classic case of Soviet intelligence trying to corrupt and bring along young students like it was in this case, so that they can be compromised to the detriment of the United States," said Maloney.

"This, fortunately, was a controlled situation by the FBI," he said.

In May, Zakharov dictated a 10-year spy contract for the informant to write down and sign, Maloney said. The contract was "not unusual, but it's a little bit silly."

Following his graduation last year, the informant went to work for a Queens firm that is a subcontractor for Bendix and General Electric, allegedly at the encouragement of Zakharov, court papers said. The company manufactures unclassified precision components for military aircraft engines and radar units.

Speakes said a ranking U.S official was being sent to Europe to discuss with allies anti-terrorist plans and the possibility of tightening political and economic sanctions against Libya that are already in place.

On the record, officials were cautious in talking about U.S. plans, but they were more forthcoming when speaking on condition they not be identified.

Gadhafi disappeared from public view for a time following the U.S. raids on two Libyan cities last April that were taken in retaliation for the bombing of a discotheque in West Berlin that was patronized by American soldiers.

Asked about the possibility of another military strike on Libya, one Pentagon source replied: "There's been some contingency planning, sure, but that's normal. We have no strike planned. We're not planning a preemptive strike of any kind."

But Pentagon sources said military force could be brought to bear against Libya rapidly if that became necessary.

The source cited last week's arrest of four Lebanese nationals in West Berlin as an example of American monitoring of the terrorism threat.

The West German government arrested the four Wednesday night. One was subsequently released, but the other three remain in police custody. West German television said the Lebanese are suspected of plotting a terrorist attack either on a movie house or library frequented by U.S. soldiers in Berlin.

"That fits in the pattern of Libya using surrogates to make it difficult to trace," one administration source said. "And there has been an influx of Middle East natives into West Berlin via East Berlin, the same way these guys came in."

As for military activity in the region, Pentagon and administration sources said the aircraft carrier Forrestal and three smaller ships — the cruisers Wainwright and Belknap and the frigate Hart — continued to operate in an exercise with Egypt in the eastern Mediterranean. The week-long exercise had been planned for months.

The four ships are participating in a joint air-defense exercise with the Egyptian air force and are remaining well to the east of Libya, sources said. The exercise is scheduled to last through Thursday, at which point the Forrestal is expected to pay a port call to Haifa, Israel, the sources said.

"And we certainly wouldn't provoke an international incident (with Libya) with the Egyptians on board," said one source, who noted Egypt was planning to send some dignitaries and reporters to the Forrestal on Wednesday to observe the exercise.

The sources said the Soviet Union was keeping close tabs on the exercise.

WICKER

The American Civil Liberties Union, acting on his behalf, tried to halt the execution on the grounds that Texas unfairly assesses the death penalty, contending the convicted killer of a white person is more likely to be sentenced to death. The Supreme Court, however, rejected the argument.

Wicker, who would have turned 38 on Thursday, was convicted in the slaying of Suzanne Knuth, 22. Mrs. Knuth's car broke down at a Beaumont shopping mall on April 4, 1980. As she was walking home, she was abducted, assaulted and found 18 days later buried in a shallow grave on a Galveston County beach.

An autopsy showed she was alive when buried face down in the sand.

Wicker was awake early Monday, about 2:30 a.m., ate breakfast and met with his family. He refused a midday lunch but ordered a final meal of lettuce and tomatoes, telling prison officials he was a vegetarian. His breakfast, however, had included creamed beef.

Wicker's death followed the execution last Wednesday of Randy Woolls, convicted of killing a drive-in movie cashier, and Friday's execution of Larry Smith, who was put to death for killing a Dallas convenience store worker.

The bill leaves intact property tax deductions.

Proffitt said 27 percent of taxpayers itemized in 1984, taking an average $449 each in sales tax deductions. Under the new bill, taxpayers will pay a greater share of the burden because there is no state income tax here, he said. Texans traditionally have been strongly opposed to such a tax.

The final tax overhaul plan approved by a House-Senate conference committee preserved a one-year writeoff for intangible drilling costs and depletion allowances.

However, the lower tax rates and loss of investment tax credits probably will dampen the enthusiasm of investors, said Richard Adkerson of Arthur Andersen & Co. in Houston. Lower tax rates mean a deduction will be worth less to investors.

Tom Haywood of the North Texas Oil and Gas Association said investment-related portions of the tax bill make it a "nail in the coffin instead of a hammer trying to pry the lid off the coffin."

But Haywood conceded that the industry had braced for a less favorable tax bill. "There is no doubt the fear cast into the oil and gas industry over what might happen makes this look good," he said.

Wichita Falls oilman Ed Spragins said the tax bill is a risky experiment because of the investment-related provisions.

"I don't know whether the nation can afford to gamble," he said.

Club sponsors non-alocholic 'Teen Night'

From Staff Reports

A night out on the town — complete with non-alcoholic drinks, loud music and potential dance partners — gave Midland teenagers a chance to feel a bit more "grown-up" Monday night.

"Teen Night," sponsored by Midland nightclub Dallas Nights, gave young persons between the ages of 15 and 20-years-old the chance to get out and have some fun, without alcoholic beverages being served, a club spokesman said.

About 200 or so teenagers turned out at the event, which lasted until midnight. The event was also simultaneously broadcast on KBAT radio station.

Soviets now dealing more openly with 'narcomania'

WORLD

MOSCOW (AP) — After years of dismissing drug abuse as virtually non-existent in socialist society, the state press is now chronicling how "narcomania" affects many young Soviets' lives.

Recent newspaper articles have echoed urgent calls by law enforcement officials and sociologists to deal more openly with a problem that the Soviets once said only existed in the West.

One sociologist said abuse of illegal drugs such as hashish cuts across all social strata, and a major general in the national militia, or police, suggested addiction be treated as an illness rather than a crime.

Along with this more modern approach, the Soviet press has printed horror stories apparently designed to scare young people away from drugs.

An article in the newspaper Sovietskaya Rossiya recounted the gruesome experiences of Moscow teen-agers who made their own narcotics from stolen medicine.

Two teens died of overdoses or poisoning, the article said, describing a basement hideout where young men were injecting themselves with drugs.

"It would be an illusion to think we can deal with this problem only with the militia," the government newspaper Izvestia wrote. "The struggle should be organized everywhere — in colleges, schools, technical schools and medical organizations."

As recently as 1983, a leading Soviet drug expert was quoted as saying narcotics addiction was almost nonexistent here, limited mainly to invalids and those dependent on painkillers.

But the problem was deemed serious enough to be raised at the Communist Party Congress in February and the press has followed with vigorous reports that seem to reflect official concerns that illegal drug use has gotten out of hand.

There also appears to be anxiety that as vodka, wine and beer become scarcer and more expensive under the government's 16-month-old anti-alcoholism campaign, more Soviets may turn to drugs.

Some writers have speculated that raising the drinking age from 18 to 21 also aggravated the problem.

In June, the national youth newspaper Komsomolskaya Pravda called drug addiction a new problem, referring to abuse of cocaine and hashish and teen-agers sniffing varnish and glue.

The Sovietskaya Rossiya article was more graphic, saying a youth, identified only as Dima K., was horrified when he entered a basement in search of a friend and found a drug orgy in progress.

"Boys were lying on the floor, and nobody was paying attention to them," Dima was quoted as saying. "Two of the most experienced were injecting themselves every five minutes. They grabbed the syringe with trembling hands, crying because of pain, trying to find the vein. Their hands were covered with blood and pus."

The Soviet Union enacted its first tough drug laws in 1974, imposing penalties of up to 15 years in labor camp for large-scale production, sale or use.

But it is becoming clear, as it has been in the West for decades, that law enforcement may not be enough.

Suggestions for fighting drug addiction range from public education programs to centers where addicts can seek help without fear of reprisal from authorities.

"If a person has come himself, if he would like to get treatment for this dangerous vice, the militia should have nothing to do with it," Maj. Gen. Gennady Alexeyev of the state militia was quoted as saying in the weekly Literaturnaya Gazeta.

The problem, Alexeyev said, is that many Soviet republics have laws requiring criminal prosecution of addicts. "I am against such laws," he said.

Alexeyev said Soviet police are trying with difficulty to zero in on suppliers and dealers, rather than users.

"You can ask me: Are you satisfied with the results of the struggle against narcomania? And I can answer you honestly: No, we are not satisfied."

One Soviet report said 80 percent of the country's drug abuse arises from "natural" narcotics like hashish and opium, the balance from illegally obtained medicinal drugs.

Alexeyev said most illicit drugs come from wild or illegally cultivated fields of marijuana and opium poppies in this country.

U.S., Mexico settle drug spraying dispute

Copley News Service

The United States and Mexico have settled a dispute over procedures for verifying Mexican claims regarding the effectiveness of its aerial anti-drug spraying campaign, diplomatic sources said Monday.

Meanwhile, the sources said, the United States is pouring an additional $2 million into Mexico's drug eradication efforts, with $500,000 earmarked for an intensive aerial sweep next month.

The new money will bring the U.S. contribution to $11.5 million in the joint campaign to eradicate marijuana and opium poppy fields in Mexico for the fiscal year that ends Sept. 30.

The U.S. participation in the drug eradication program is run by the State Department, and is separate from interdiction efforts of the Drug Enforcement Administration, which is an agency of the Justice Department.

The State Department began helping to finance Mexico's aerial spraying of narcotics plantations in 1976. Over the years, however, U.S. officials have frequently questioned Mexican claims that the spraying has been effective.

Indeed, U.S. officials sought to have American observers in Mexican aircraft fly over the targeted areas some time after the spraying to check on whether the eradication had been successful. Mexican officials, however, balked at that request.

But the diplomatic sources Monday said modern technology has now resolved that dispute.

What has happened, one of the sources said, is that both nations have quietly completed a joint aerial photographic survey of major drug-producing areas in Mexico.

"The photographs are now being developed into maps, with mutually agreed upon coordinates," the source said. "This means that when Mexico says it has sprayed from X to Y in a certain area, we will be able to pinpoint that area on the map. In the past, we often had no way of knowing if both sides were talking about the same acreage that had been sprayed."

Once the maps are completed, the source said, aircraft with cameras will fly over the same routes as the spray planes, a week or so after the spraying, to check on the effectiveness of the airborne dousing.

At an Aug. 20 White House meeting with Mexican President Miguel de la Madrid, President Reagan said the two nations had agreed to "bolster" the bilateral narcotics eradication campaign.

As part of that strengthening, a State Department official said, the United States had been considering the $2 million purchase of three vertical takeoff and landing planes for the drug eradication program in Mexico. Three of those planes already are operating in the program.

However, another U.S. official said that purchase of the planes has been shelved, at least for the moment, and the $2 million will be used for immediate operating expenses.

The original U.S. appropriation for the program for the current fiscal year was $9.5 million. Over the last 10 years, U.S. financial assistance to the campaign has exceeded $82 million, and last year the United States formally gave Mexico title to 70 helicopters and fixed-wing aircraft used in the program.

Captain of 'refugee ship' located

By JEFF BRADLEY

TORONTO (AP) — The sea captain suspected of leaving 155 Tamil refugees in boats off Canada has been found in the Canary Islands, and a newspaper quoted him Monday as confirming indirectly that he carried the illicit human cargo.

"I did everything to save the lives of the people," the Toronto Star quoted Wolfgang Bindel as saying. The West German is captain of the 455-ton freighter Aurigae.

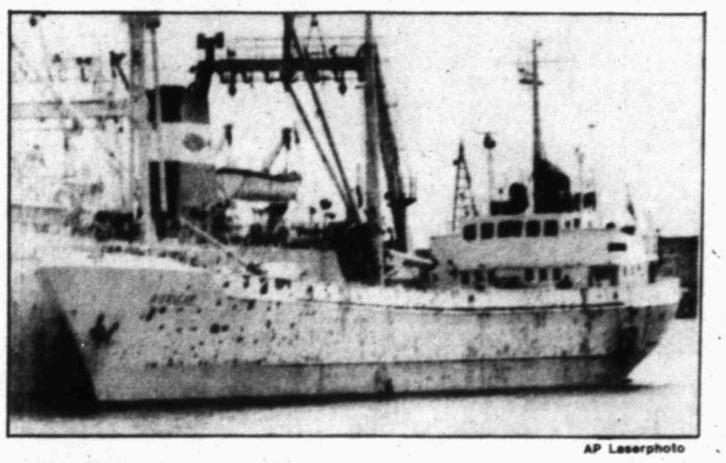

"As a captain and navigator, I can say from my view that they had a compass and it was 100 percent safe," Bindel was quoted as telling Star reporter John Picton, who said he talked to the captain and his wife, Anatte Bindel, aboard the Aurigae in Las Palmas on Sunday.

The Star said Bindel, whom police want to question about the voyage, refused comment at first on advice of his West German lawyer but opened up when asked about the safety of the refugees from Sri Lanka's civil war, who have settled in Toronto and Montreal.

Neither West German nor Canadian police have filed charges against him.

Bindel, 45, was quoted as saying: "How are the Sri Lankans getting on with the Canadians? Canada is a big country."

The Aurigae was refueling in the Canaries, a Spanish island group in the Atlantic off Morocco. Picton said he found Bindel in the engine room working with a Turkish crew member.

Honduran-registered ship Aurigae, moored at Las Palmas, Canary Islands, is believed involved in the transport of Tamil refugees to Canada.

Members of the Tamil group have said the only crewman they saw on the delivery ship was a Turk.

Bindel refused comment on the Tamil trip when The Associated Press reached him Monday at his shipping agent's office in Las Palmas. He said he was sailing later in the day for Bremerhaven, West Germany.

"No comment, no comment. See me in Bremerhaven," he said.

The Star said it found the captain after learning from the International Maritime Bureau in London that the Aurigae had refueled in the Canaries twice in recent months, and a call to Las Palmas port authorities confirmed the ship had docked there.

Police in Hamburg, West Germany, have said Bindel was paid $500,000 to smuggle the Tamils to Canada in the Aurigae, which left Brake, near Bremerhaven, on July 28. The refugees were discovered Aug. 11 in two open lifeboats six miles off Newfoundland.

Six of the Tamils who were shown Bindel's photograph have said they think he was the man who loaded them aboard for a grueling 13-day voyage in the ship's hold during which food grew moldy, clean water ran out and human waste spilled onto the deck.

In earlier ship-to-shore radio interviews, Bindel gave his location as off the North African coast and denied knowledge of the Tamil refugees, who first told police they came from India but later said they lied because of intimidation from Bindel.

Police say more voyages had been planned to smuggle Sri Lankans to Canada.

Mrs. Bindel also denied involvement by her husband when she was contacted 10 days ago at the couple's home in Nordenham, West Germany.

Liane Popken, who manages a supermarket in Elsfleth, about 24 miles from Bremen, said Monday that she sold a huge order of food to Mrs. Bindel on July 22 and 23, a few days before the Tamil voyage to Newfoundland.

She told the AP that Mrs. Bindel "bought an extraordinary amount of groceries."

The Toronto Star quoted Ms. Popken as saying the order came to the equivalent of $2,300, about six times more than normal for a small freighter, and included 96 cans of mock turtle soup, 600 loaves of light rye bread, 300 rolls of toilet paper, 216 containers of margarine and 30 bags of parboiled rice.

Mrs. Bindel said she did not want an invoice and loaded the goods into her car, the grocer was quoted as saying.

Tamils, most of whom are Hindus, make up 18 percent of the people in Sri Lanka, the island off India's southern tip formerly called Ceylon.

Promise to pursue emigration issue greets Shcharansky family

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Freed Soviet dissident Anatoly Shcharansky, hugging and kissing his mother and brother after their arrival from the Soviet Union, vowed to keep up his fight to persuade Moscow to ease emigration restrictions.

Shcharansky, jailed for nine years in the Soviet Union on espionage charges, was reunited Monday with his 78-year-old mother, Ida Milgrom, his brother Leonid, 39, and Leonid's wife and two children.

The family left Moscow Monday morning with tearful farewells, stopped over in Vienna where they were met by Shcharansky and flew here aboard Israel's El Al national airline.

"This is a very exciting moment," Shcharansky, 38, told reporters at Ben Gurion International Airport.

"But it is not simply wonderful," he said. "It is an important lesson that no quiet diplomacy, even at the highest levels, can help if it isn't accompanied by a strong public campaign to convince the Soviet Union to let our people go."

Shcharansky's public campaign for his family began in June when he announced that the Soviets had agreed to allow them to emigrate as part of the prisoner exchange that led to his freedom in February.

He said he was making the agreement public because he feared the Soviets would go back on it.

Shcharansky, who now lives in Israel, said he had only seen his mother twice during his years in Soviet prisons, the last time in January 1985. He last saw his brother in 1980.

The other family members are Leonid's wife Raya and their sons, Alexander, 14, and Boris, 1.

Mrs. Milgrom spoke briefly to reporters as she sat between her two sons, holding their hands.

"I am happy, happy, happy to be at last with all my children," she said in Russian. Her comment was translated by Anatoly Shcharansky.

Leonid Shcharansky said it was "very, very good to be here in our land. I am very happy that the case of Shcharansky has ended just now." He said Jews in the Soviet Union "were not hopeful" that they would be allowed to emigrate soon. "The situation is very bad," he said.

He added that he intended to stay in Israel, but wasn't sure of his future plans.

"What I want first of all is to have a good rest," he said.

Even though his family has been allowed to leave Moscow, Anatoly Shcharansky said he would continue his struggle for improved emigration rights for all Soviet Jews, saying he wouldn't end his efforts until "all the Jews who want to go are released."

Hugging his mother, Ida Milgrom, is former Soviet dissident Anatoly Shcharansky.

Before talking to journalists, the family rushed into a small room at the airport where they hugged Avital, Anatoly Shcharansky's wife. Avital was allowed to leave the Soviet Union in 1974 and traveled the world seeking support for her husband's release.

Israel says 400,000 of Israel's 2.5 million Jews have taken initial steps toward emigration but are prevented from leaving by the Kremlin. Moscow denies those figures and argues that the issue of Soviet Jews is an internal one.

Israel presented its viewpoint on emigration rights last week in Helsinki, Finland, when delegations from the two countries met for the first formal talks in 19 years.

British astronomers spot distant quasar

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) — Two British astronomers working in Australia have found the most distant object yet observed in the universe, a quasar in a galaxy up to 20 billion light years from Earth, a leading Australian astronomer said.

Dr. David Allan, acting director of the Anglo-Australian Observatory at Siding Spring in New South Wales, said Monday the quasar was discovered Aug. 15 by Paul Hewett and Richard McMahon of Cambridge University.

"This is light that was formed when the universe was only about 1 billion years old," Allan said in a telephone interview.

Quasars, first discovered in 1963, are mysterious objects that appear in the sky as star-like masses but seem to generate more energy that 100 billion stars. About 3,500 of them are known.

Scientists believe quasars may be collections of black holes, objects so incredibly dense they suck in all light around them.

Quasar distances are determined by measuring the amount of light they emit as they speed away from Earth at high velocities with the expansion of the universe.

The object previously believed the oldest and farthest to be observed in the universe was a recently-discovered quasar identified as Q1208+1011 in the constellation Virgo, said to be about 12.4 billion light years away.

The quasar in Virgo was discovered by astronomers Wallace L.W. Sargent of the California Institute of Technology, Charles C. Steidel of Caltech in Pasadena, Calif., Cyril Hazard of the University of Pittsburgh, Alexei Filippenko of the University of California at Berkeley and McMahon.

In India, ringing telephone often signals trouble

By G.G. LaBELLE

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — The ring of a telephone in India is more often a signal for frustration than conversation.

Faulty equipment creates a plague of wrong numbers. Frequent cross-connections mean the person answering may find two strangers already talking. Often, too, there is dead silence or a tiny voice straining to be heard.

That may be why one leading Indian newspaper offered backhanded sympathy Monday for the gun-toting politician who set off a three-day phone strike in New Delhi by insulting operators at a telephone office.

Former Cabinet Minister Prakash Chand Sethi barged into the exchange Thursday when he could not get a long-distance phone call through from home.

His actions set off the strike, but at its end, the Hindustan Times wrote: "Let not in the midst of Sethi's acts of indiscretion a crucial point be missed — the level of inefficiency, callousness and simple insolence in the telephone exchanges in India would drive anyone mad."

Even the government admitted in a statement last year that India "perhaps has the lowest level of telephone service in the world."

To begin with, there are only 3 million phones for the 780 million populace. That's one for every 260 people, compared to one for every two people in England and France and one for every 1.3 people in the United States.

As of January, 997,000 Indians were on the waiting list to get a telephone.

A study by the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry says the country needs 28 million phones to function properly with its present population.

Then there is the matter that telephones break down so often that the visit of the repairman is a favorite subject of cartoonists. One cartoon features a frustrated customer saying to the lineman, "Sorry to bother you perpetually. Why don't you just stay with us?"

During last year's monsoon season, 30,000 phones went out in New Delhi at once when the annual heavy rains hit. The same thing happens regularly in Bombay and Calcutta, much soggier cities.

In Calcutta in 1982, one angry citizen put up a tombstone for his dead telephone. It remains today, bearing the poem:

"Oh, child of communication,
"You were born to bridge the gap.
"But corruption has caused a mishap,
"Inefficiency and procrastination
"Caused the telephone lines to go snap."

Even when India's phones are working, they are not up to those in most places in the world.

Sometimes there is a long wait for a dial tone. It often takes several dials to get a call through. There are so many wrong numbers that many people begin conversations by asking if they've reached the number they dialed.

For long distance, the few direct-dial facilities are so overloaded that most times it's necessary to book a call through an operator.

In recognition that the system is less than perfect, there is one number for bookings and another for complaining that the call did not go through.

One woman wrote a newspaper article chronicling how she spent an entire day dialing the two numbers trying to make one call.

She finally gave up, but was awakened at 11:55 p.m. when an operator called asking whether she would she like to rebook the call for the next day.

Complaints about phones are not only sent to the telephone company but debated in newspaper editorials and on the floor of Parliament.

It's not that the government isn't trying. At India's independence in 1947, there were 82,000 phones, about one for every 4,150 Indians. But India's population has more than doubled since then and is expected to pass the 1 billion mark around the year 2000.

Indian writer Ranjit Lal theorized in a recent article in the Times of India that the country's phone troubles resulted because telephones, like India's Hindus, believe in reincarnation.

"Most telephones in India suffer from a collective and impelling death wish," he concluded. "This is because they wish to be reincarnated as something better as quickly as possible."

He added: "It is also likely that if you have sinned grievously in this life, you may be born an Indian telephone in your next life."

Aquino gains Indonesian support

JAKARTA, Indonesia (AP) — President Suharto told Philippine President Corazon Aquino on Monday that he supported her and would not back Moslem rebels in the Philippines, officials reported.

Filipinos have expressed concern in the past that Indonesia might give its support to Moslem rebels fighting for independence in the southern Philippines because over 90 percent of Indonesia's 165 million people are Moslems.

Leticia Ramos Shahani, deputy foreign minister of the Philippines, said, "We are heartened to hear from the Indonesians that they regard the Moslem problems in the southern Philippines as an internal issue of the Philippines."

Indonesia state secretary Sudharmono said Indonesia would like to help Manila find a peaceful settlement but will not support the Moslem rebels headed by Nur Misuari, exiled leader of the main faction of the Moro National Liberation Front.

Suharto also warned Mrs. Aquino that communists have constantly tried to take control in Indonesia, Sudharmono said.

"The communists, if given an opportunity, will always be dangerous and become a threat to the nation," Suharto was quoted as saying. "If the communists are given a chance to grow they will definitely consolidate to take over power."

Suharto came to power in 1965 when he led the Indonesian army in crushing a communist coup attempt.

Since becoming president, Mrs. Aquino has initiated peace talks with communist rebels, claiming that many joined the movement due to the abuses of the regime of former president Ferdinand E. Marcos. There are about 26,000 armed communist guerrillas in the Philippines.

Mrs. Aquino, scheduled to arrive in Singapore early Tuesday, expressed satisfaction with her visit and was pleased to have found a powerful new friend in the region, Filipino officials said. Singapore is the last stop on her two-nation tour.

Jose Conception, Philippines minister of trade and industry, said cooperation in the fields of trade, investments, tourism and education had been discussed with Indonesian officials. Mrs. Aquino was accompanied by her ministers in those fields, who conducted separate talks with their Indonesian counterparts.

Some of Mrs. Aquino's advisers had suggested she cancel her four-day trip, warning that Marcos supporters might try to grab power in her absence.

On the eve of her Sunday departure, the armed forces chief, Gen. Fidel V. Ramos, put the Philippine army on alert to forestall possible disturbances.

Mrs. Aquino plans a visit to the United States Sept. 15-23.

Rebel, feudal attacks claim 24 lives in Philippines

ZAMBOANGA CITY, Philippines (AP) — Communist rebels killed 11 soldiers and a civilian in an ambush Monday, and unidentified gunmen massacred a family of 12 in an apparent personal feud, the military and police said.

The ambush occurred as government negotiators prepared for the resumption of peace talks with communist guerrilla representatives to end a 17-year insurgency.

Brig. Gen. Pedro Balbanero, deputy chief of the Zamboanga-based southern command, said about 100 insurgents attacked the soldiers in Ludiong village, 110 miles northeast of here.

Eight soldiers and militiamen were wounded in the ambush, he said.

Balbanero said the soldiers belonged to a civic action brigade sent to distribute medicine to villagers.

In another incident, unknown gunmen killed former Moslem separatist rebel leader Villamin Laurente Aga, his wife, six children and four other relatives while the victims were asleep, Zamboanga police spokesman Maj. Augustin Calumpang said.

Aga's seven-year-old daughter, seriously wounded, was the only survivor, Calumpang said. He said hundreds of empty bullet shells were found in Aga's house located in Baliwasan village just outside this city.

Calumpang said police suspect the mass murder was the result of a feud between Aga and another Moslem family.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Hurricane's tail end kills three persons in Ireland

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) — High winds and torrential rains lashed Britain and Ireland, killing three people and forcing the evacuation of up to 1,000 others as the tail end of Hurricane Charley swept over northern Europe.

According to the London weather bureau, the only part of Britain to escape Monday's stormy weather was the north of Scotland.

Rescue workers in Ireland recovered the bodies of a woman and a 7-year-old girl from Dublin's River Liffey and police said they believed the two were blown into the water by 60-mph winds.

In Northern Ireland, a workman installing sewage pipes at Newry in the southeast of the British-ruled province was killed when a rain-soaked trench caved in, police said.

Up to 1,000 people were evacuated from their homes in the Irish seaside town of Bray 12 miles south of Dublin Monday night when the rain-swollen River Dargle burst its banks, creating floods up to 5 feet deep.

Four arrested in slaying

CAPE TOWN, South Africa (AP) — Police today arrested four men and two women in connection with the slaying hours earlier of the father of South Africa's first test-tube quadruplets.

Stan Hinrichson, 52, was shot in the face and stabbed in the back by masked intruders at his luxury home in Constantia, a posh suburb of Cape Town about 8 p.m. Monday, police said.

The quadruplets' mother, 33-year-old Renate Hinrichson, also was stabbed several times but was reported in good condition at a hospital.

One of the couple's four children born in May died recently. The other three were not hurt in Monday night's incident and were being looked after by friends, police said.

Korean ministers named

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — President Chun Doo-hwan today named ten new ministers to his 22-member Cabinet in a major shake-up that included the replacement of Foreign Minister Lee Won-kyung.

Also dismissed only 25 days before the Seoul Asian Games are scheduled to open was Sports Minister Park Seh-jik.

He will, however, be retained as president of the Asian Games Organizing Committee and the Seoul Olympics Organizing Committee for the 1988 summer games, officials of the committees said.

Others removed from the Cabinet included Lee Won-hong, minister of culture and information. The outgoing foreign minister, Lee Won-kyung, will be succeeded by Choi Kwang-soo, South Korea's ambassador to the United Nations.

A government announcement said the Cabinet reshuffle took place after Prime Minister Lho Shin-yong received the resignations of all Cabinet members and then called on Chun at the Blue House presidential residence.

Chess game called draw

LONDON (AP) — World chess champion Garri Kasparov battled challenger Anatoly Karpov in the most complicated game yet in their championship series, but both agreed to a draw on the 41st move.

As play in the 11th game began Monday, Karpov produced a novelty in the opening that led to an intense struggle with both kings having open defenses.

At one point Kasparov appeared to be indeep trouble, but escaped with a brilliant 24th move.

Eventually both queens were exchanged and Kasparov gained a small edge. But he gave up trying to win from the position. After Karpov had made his 41st move, Kasparov looked up, and the two players shook hands, agreeing to a draw.

The score in the match now stands 6-5 in Kasparov's favor. The 12th game is scheduled for Wednesday with Kasparov playing white.

That will be the final game before the match moves to Leningrad in the Soviet Union for the last 12 games.

Tainted liquor blamed

PEKING (AP) — Liquor tainted with methanol alcohol caused the deaths of seven people in southern China and hundreds of others became ill, the official China Daily newspaper reported today.

It said the poisonings in the Guangxi Zhuang autonomous region were traced to the Liangsuo Winery in the town of Baihe, and that three employees there were placed under house arrest pending completion of an investigation.

The newspaper did not say why the liquor might have been laced with the toxic alcohol.

The report said that on Aug. 17, about 140 people became ill after drinking liquor at a funeral feast.

Two days later, scores of people required medical treatment after attending a local festival, and the township said it had recorded 589 cases of methanol poisoning.

French fires kill four

NICE, France (AP) — Wind-fanned fires on the parched hills above the Cote d'Azur killed four people, injured hundreds and continued to blaze out of control today despite the efforts of 5,000 firefighters and rescue workers, authorities said.

Five hundred soldiers and two military helicopters were added to the ranks of firefighters and rescue personnel, bringing the total force to 5,000, according to civil security officials in Paris.

The fires began Saturday and were fueled by the "mistral" seasonal Mediterranean wind.

A 20-year-old firefighter died today of asphyxiation while battling the largest remaining blaze, located east of Aix-en-Provence, officials said. A 67-year-old woman was found dead Sunday at her home in Luceram, north of Nice. Her husband was severely burned when the flames consumed their home.

On Saturday, a retired post office worker suffered a fatal heart attack trying to protect his home in Tanneron. A farmer in the Bouches du Rhone region also died of a heart attack Sunday while fleeing the fire.

Five people are in serious condition with burns and about 200 others were treated after being overcome by smoke or heat, according to the prefecture at Nice.

Former Finnish leader ill

HELSINKI, Finland (AP) — The condition of ailing, 85-year-old Urho Kekkonen, the former Finnish president, has taken a turn for the worse, the Finnish news agency STT said Monday.

STT said in a brief announcement that Kekkonen's health had deteriorated over the past three days and that he was being cared for at his residence.

Kekkonen gave up his longtime presidency in October 1981 because of advanced hardening of the arteries.

Cigarette warnings begin

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — A law effective Monday says cigarette makers must print a health warning on packages and cannot advertise on television or radio from 8 a.m to 10 p.m.

The law, passed by Congress recently, also prohibits cigarette advertising in children's publications and theaters that show movies minors would attend.

Venice bridge reopens

VENICE, Italy (AP) — Pedestrians once more can stroll across the Grand Canal on the Accademia Bridge, which was reopened Monday after 2½ years of work to restore and strengthen it.

Authorities in this lagoon city decided that the bridge was too shaky for use and closed it in February 1984. It is one of three spanning the Grand Canal, the "main street" of Venice.

Reopening of the Accademia makes it easier for people to get from the St. Mark's Square area to the Dorsoduro zone, where a short walk brings tourists to the Academy of Fine Arts and its treasures of Giorgione, Titian and Tintoretto, and the Guggenheim gallery of modern art by such as Picasso and Ernst.

The bridge was strengthened with steel and wood in a project that cost more than $1 million.

Chile's army nervous about new role battling unrest against Pinochet

By RICHARD BOUDREAUX

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — Civilians who claim to be close to top echelons of Chile's army say senior officers are uneasy with the army's newly expanded role of combating growing popular unrest against President Augusto Pinochet.

While none of the officers have challenged Pinochet's command, the informants say, their wariness of direct involvement in prolonged civil strife could become a factor in getting Pinochet, an army general, to step down as president when his term ends in 1989.

The 53,000-member army, with its Prussian-instilled tradition of unquestioning obedience, has been Pinochet's power base for 13 years. As the army commander, he seized the presidency from Salvador Allende, an elected Marxist, in a 1973 coup.

Since April, army paratroopers have displaced the police as the dominant force in the streets of Santiago on certain days. Their faces streaked menacingly with black camouflage paint, the soldiers have raided shantytowns and broken up demonstrations.

The depth of dissent in the army has been a matter of speculation since a 19-year-old Chilean-born U.S. resident, Rodrigo Rojas, was fatally burned July 2 while in custody of an army patrol here during an opposition-led general strike.

According to press accounts here and in Washington, someone in the army leaked a classified report on the case to U.S. Central Intelligence Agency agents to discredit Pinochet's public explanation that the teen-ager burned himself with his own firebomb.

Meanwhile, a military court has challenged the official story by indicting the army patrol commander on a charge of unnecessary violence resulting in Rojas' death.

Civilians who speak to army officers claim the incident hurt Pinochet's credibility in the military at a time when the president was seeking its support for another eight-year term.

The week after the two-day general strike, in which 3,500 army troops patrolled Santiago and eight unarmed civilians died in disorders, Pinochet announced he expected to rule Chile until 1997.

Later, however, he backed away from that declaration after no military officer rose to second it. The navy commander called the announcement premature. The air force chief said his service wants out of the government in three years.

Under the 1980 constitution, the next president must be the unanimous choice of the army, navy, air force and police commanders and win a majority of popular votes in a yes-or-no referendum.

While the other three service chiefs are known to oppose a new Pinochet term, he was thought to have enough backing in the militarily superior army to impose his candidacy.

But army officials greeted Pinochet's announcement with silence.

Federico Willoughby and Adolfo Ballas, two conservative politicians with ties to the army, said in interviews they believed that many, if not most, of its 51 generals want talks with non-Marxist opposition leaders to seek agreement on a consensus candidate for president.

They said some of these officers would also welcome a constitutional amendment permitting open, competitive elections in 1989, a change favored by most of the broad-based civilian opposition.

"The generals are worried that Pinochet is forcing the army into a long-term conflict with the civilian population," Ballas said. "But they cannot act against him now if they want to preserve their rank."

Many Chernobyl-type nuclear reactors shut down for modifications

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — The Soviet Union has shut down about half of its Chernobyl-type nuclear reactors for modifications, according to a Soviet official reporting on the disaster at the Ukrainian atomic power plant.

The official, Valery A. Legasov, made the comment Monday on the first day of an international meeting hearing a Soviet report on the April 26 Chernobyl accident, which killed 31 people and sent radioactive debris around the world.

Legasov, head of the Soviet delegation to the conference, did not say how many reactors were involved, but an annex to the Soviet report indicated 18 reactors of the Chernobyl design exist in the Soviet Union, including the damaged No. 4 unit at the Ukrainian power station.

"About half (of the reactors) are in a shutdown position to carry out the measures proposed in order to increase their safety," Legasov told reporters after making a five-hour presentation to nuclear power experts from 50 countries.

The Soviets previously denied that any similar reactors had been shut down because of the Chernobyl disaster, the worst on record at a nuclear plant.

But Legasov on Monday said, "Our experts have proposed a number of technical solutions which fit fully into the actual construction of our RBMK reactors."

"Our specialists believe these should make it possible to continue their operation with a very high level of reliability."

RBMK is the Soviet abbreviation for light-water cooled, graphite-moderated reactors.

The 382-page Soviet report put heavy blame on human error rather than faulty equipment for the explosion and fire. Pressed by reporters, Legasov said:

"The defect of the system was that the designers did not foresee the awkvrdand silly actions by the operators."

The International Atomic Energy Agency is the host at the five-day meeting.

Pension changes significant, some of 'best features of tax bill'

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — Millions of Americans will become eligible for private pension benefits at retirement, and those benefits may be higher, because of changes in the tax bill awaiting final congressional approval.

The changes mean about 68 percent — instead of 59 percent — of Americans will be covered by private pension plans between the years 2011 and 2020, according to the American Association of Retired Persons' projections.

And the lobbying group for the elderly said pensions will be about 22 percent higher than they would have been without the revisions. The Census Bureau estimates the over-65 population at 51 million in 2020.

The Employee Benefit Research Institute, a non-profit group, said a little more than half the civilian work force was covered by company pension plans in 1983, or 51.5 million out of 99 million workers. However, 70 percent of the full-time workers were covered.

A key change in the trillion-dollar private pension system is the requirement that most companies fully vest employees in a pension plan after a maximum of five years, instead of 10 years.

Sen. John Heinz, R-Pa., a principal backer of pension changes, said the 10-year vesting requirement excluded too many people in the mobile American society.

"Half of all those who are working for an employer that does have a pension plan are never going to earn, invest and be entitled to their benefits because they may leave their job before they vest," he said.

Changing the vesting limit to five years would have qualified 1.9 million Americans for retirement benefits in 1985 at a cost of between $1.4 billion and $4.7 billion, the benefit institute said.

There are several other pension changes in the tax bill, which also restricted Individual Retirement Accounts and 401 (k) retirement plans, two savings programs popular with middle- and high-income workers.

The tax bill would:

— Ensure that companies do not discriminate against lower-paid workers by requiring that pension plans cover 70 percent of workers who are not highly compensated, instead of 56 percent, in order to qualify for special tax treatment.

— Prohibit an employer from reducing a worker's retirement benefits by more than 50 percent when taking Social Security benefits into account.

— Slap a 10 percent penalty tax on early withdrawals of pension money, and shorten the 10-year averaging period to five years.

Most of the changes will not go into effect until Dec. 31, 1988, to allow companies to adjust.

"We think the pension changes are very significant and are some of the best features of the bill," said David Certner, a tax specialist with the retired persons association.

But business groups were opposed to changes in the private pension system, which, according to Certner, receives about $40 billion in tax breaks annually.

Jim Klein, a pension specialist at the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, said the changes will take away the incentive of business to start pension programs, which are voluntary for employers.

Moreover, companies required to spend more money on pensions may cut back on other benefits, such as health and education, he said. "You don't make the (benefit) pie any bigger, you just slice it into smaller pieces."

Ellen Goldstein, a spokeswoman for the Association of Private Pension and Welfare Plans, said Americans should not be too optimistic about the changes.

"We just don't think this is the answer to everyone's prayer," said Ms. Goldstein, whose industry-backed group supported some provisions but opposed others.

On vesting, for instance, she said workers who job hop every five years are likely to get very small benefits because the size of the benefits often depends on length of service and salary level toward the end of a career.

Although the tax law now has several vesting formulas, the 10-year waiting period is the standard used by 86 percent of the defined benefit plans, the most common pension systems. Under those plans, employers guarantee workers a benefit at retirement based on a formula combining years of service and salary.

Heinz and Rep. William Clay, D-Mo., first initiated revisions in the pension system, which Congress has regulated since it passed the Employee Retirement Income Security Act in 1974.

Medical deduction 'one to be felt by elderly,' says AARP official

WASHINGTON (AP) — The elderly, long a favored group under federal tax law, lose some of their special status under the income tax overhaul awaiting final congressional passage, but most retirees won't notice the difference.

Social Security pensions are tax-exempt under current law and will continue to be exempt under the rewrite, approved earlier this month by a House-Senate conference committee.

That means low-income retirees will continue paying nothing and middle-income retirees will get a substantial portion of their income tax-free.

In fact, lobbyists for the elderly say, more than half of all retirees pay no tax now, and that percentage will increase under the new law.

Eric Shulman, legislative director for the National Council of Senior Citizens, said only 40 percent of the nation's 28.5 million elderly — or roughly 11.4 million people — pay income tax now.

And David Certner, legislative representative for the American Association of Retired Persons, said the tax bill is expected to remove an additional 700,000 elderly people from the tax rolls.

Middle-income retirees who pay taxes on income other than Social Security will lose their special "65-and-older" exemption in the current law. But that will be largely offset because the bill increases the exemption for everyone. It also will cut tax rates for the middle-income retiree.

But not all the elderly will benefit from the tax changes.

Wealthier retirees who have itemized deductions in the past may end up paying more on their investment income. Retirees who have held investments for decades may pay more because the higher value of their stocks will be fully taxed when sold, even if the increase is due only to inflation.

And sick people, a disproportionate number of whom are elderly, will be taxed more heavily whether they are rich or poor. The bill increases by 50 percent the amount of medical bills a taxpayer must pay before qualifying for a deduction, and lowers the value of the deduction once it's taken.

"The medical deduction is one that definitely will be felt" by the elderly, said Certner. He said about 80 percent of elderly people who itemize deductions now take a deduction for medical expenses.

Under the new law, he said, "some won't qualify (for the deduction), and the ones who do are going to lose part of it."

The tax bill says medical expenses are deductible only to the extent they exceed 7.5 percent of adjusted gross income, rather than 5 percent under current law.

That means a retired taxpayer with $20,000 in income could deduct only those medical bills that exceed $1,500, rather than $1,000 under current law. The contrast is even starker when viewed against the tax law in effect in 1983; then, this person would have been able to deduct all medical spending above $600.

Certner said the medical deduction is one of the four most commonly used by retirees — the other three are state and local taxes, charitable deductions and mortgage interest — but is the one over which the retiree often has the least control.

But other deductions also will affect at least some of the elderly, he said. The end of the 60 percent exclusion on the capital gains tax will hit hard at older people who have held securities for decades and must cash them in. They no longer will receive preferential tax treatment, even though the appreciated value is due largely to inflation.

But, said Certner, those are the exceptions. For most retirees living on Social Security and private pensions, plus modest investment income, the tax bill carries little impact one way or the other.

White Mountain peaks see one die, two walk away on own

RANDOLPH, N.H. (AP) — A climber stranded overnight in winter-like weather suffered severe exposure and died Monday after being carried off a 5,300-foot mountain hours after his son and a companion were rescued, officials said.

On nearby Mount Washington, the highest peak in the Northeast at 6,288 feet, two other men stranded overnight walked down on their own.

Temperatures overnight hovered around freezing, with snow, thick fog and high wind on Mount Washington and Mount Madison, the 5,363-foot peak about four miles to the south where the victim was stranded, said National Weather Servive forecaster Michael Turner.

One gust on Mount Washington was recorded at 121 mph, said Peter Crane of the Appalachian Mountain Club. "Not the kind the conditions you would choose to be out in," he said.

The victim, who suffered severe hypothermia, was hauled down Mount Madison by two dozen rescuers using a sled, said Crane. The four-mile trek to the base of the mountain took more than four hours because of high winds and heavy rain, he said.

The victim was hiking with his son and a German exchange student when they ran into trouble Sunday evening near the peak of Mount Madison, in the Presidential Range of the White Mountains, said Crane.

State police dispatcher Thomas Andross identified the victim as MacDonald Barr, 52, of Brookline, Mass., who had been hiking with his son, Tavis, 13, and Christian Stieher, 16.

When the three became stranded between the summit and the mountain club's hut, Stieher went for help, reached the hut, and told an attendant about the Barrs, said Crane. The attendant reached Tavis Barr, who told him his father was farther up the mountain and needed help, Crane said.

The attendant found MacDonald Barr unconscious and sheltered him as much as possible. He returned to the hut and got two other attendants, and the three brought the younger Barr back to the hut, Crane said.

Rough terrain, bad weather and nightfall forced the attendants to discontinue their rescue efforts until morning, when the elder Barr was found and the younger Barr and Jorrens walked off the mountain with rescue workers, said Crane.

Neither youth required treatment, said state police dispatcher Thomas Andross. The elder Barr was taken to a Berlin hospital, where he was pronounced dead, said Andross.

Conservation Officer Harold Reed said the mountain club hut attendants "did a remarkable job" in the rescue effort. "If it had not been for their efforts, three lives would have been lost instead of one."

Two hikers who spent Friday and Saturday nights on Mount Washington were reported missing Sunday six hours after they were due back in Massachusetts, said Mountain Washington State Park manager Michael Pelchat.

However, the men, identified as Wayne McNeil, 33, of Framingham, Mass., and Mike Debonis, 37, of Waterbury, Conn., walked off the mountain Monday and apparently were in good condition.

Winter-like conditions are not unusual even in summer on Mount Washington and other mountains in the area.

The White Mountains have claimed more than 100 lives since record-keeping was started in 1849, most of them on Mount Washington.

Mount Washington has snow in every month of the year and recorded the Earth's non-tornado, surface wind speed record of 231 mph on April 12, 1934.

Average snowfall on the mountain is 178 inches and wind exceeds hurricane force of 74 mph on an average 100 days a year. Fog enshrouds the peak 300 days a year. The warmest temperature recorded on the mountain is 71 degrees Fahrenheit, the coldest 47 degrees below zero.

Lunch deductibility may be 'diluted' to 80 percent

NEW YORK (AP) — Glasses won't stopping clinking at lunchtime and people will still do business over a meal even though the deductibility may soon be diluted to 80 percent, operators of swank restaurants say.

"I think businesses will consider it an additional expense and accept it like all other rising costs," Brian Daley, manager of the 200-seat restaurant Top of the Park, said of the tax overhaul bill awaiting Congress' approval.

Sheldon Tannen, manager of the 21 Club, said he didn't expect the change to affect his business at all.

"Our patrons can and will absorb the 20 percent," he said.

Mike Repass, a senior manager at the accounting firm of Price Waterhouse in Washington, said the bill will have some impact on restaurants, "but it'll be less than many people think."

However, the National Restaurant Association in Washington, which fought to retain full deductibility of business entertainment expenses, predicts the measure will cost the government and the restaurant industry.

The association says it calculates that the limit on deductibility will translate into a loss of $8.9 billion in restaurant sales in 1987 and the elimination of 342,000 jobs that year.

"In terms of the loss to the federal Treasury, over three years it will be $6.3 billion," said association spokeswoman Dorothy Dee. "To state and local treasuries, the loss would be $8.3 billion over three years."

Repass, while not disputing the numbers, said that when businesses weigh the benefits of the expense-account meal, chances are they will conclude the gustatory ritual is still worth it.

"There are a lot of reasons why people want to have a business lunch besides having a free meal, and I think those reasons will continue," he said.

Currently, the after-tax cost of a business meal is 54 cents per dollar to corporations that are taxed at the 46 percent tax rate, Repass said. With the overhaul cutting the top corporate rate to 34 percent and allowing only 80 percent deductibility, the meal will cost roughly 73 cents on the dollar.

"The employer had been paying for half; now he'll pay for three-quarters," he said. "Since he could justify half, now he can presumably justify three-quarters."

Clint Stretch, director of tax legislative affairs for Deloitte, Haskins & Sells, said he thought the provision to limit the tax deductibility of business meals might be the bill's Achilles' heel when it is voted on by Congress.

"A lot of people are watching this one because there are a lot more people out there eating business meals than Congress understands," he said.

But the business meal has been under attack since John F. Kennedy was president.

More than 20 years ago, Kennedy sent legislation to Congress seeking to limit the deductibility from $4 to $7 a lunch.

Former Sen. George McGovern harped on the theme in his 1972 presidential campaign. "There is something fundamentally wrong with a tax system that permits a corporate executive to deduct his $20 martini lunch, while a working man cannot deduct the price of his bologna sandwich," McGovern said.

President Carter picked up the theme in 1978: "A business executive can charge off a $50 luncheon on a tax return, and a truck driver cannot deduct his $1.50 sandwich."

So perhaps it was just a matter of time before some form of the proposal got through Congress.

"Every time Congress needs money, they go look at these old proposals," Repass said. "It takes a while to soften people up to the idea."

Harsher drug policies needed as college year begins

WASHINGTON (AP) Nineteen days after the cocaine-induced death of University of Maryland basketball star Len Bias, Education Secretary William Bennett advised college presidents to write students this summer: "Welcome back for your studies in September. But no drugs on campus. None. Period."

As the new school year approaches, the call for harsher drug policies is being heeded at some colleges.

Ohio Wesleyan's President David L. Warren wrote letters to parents and students serving notice that drug use would bring on a range of reprisals, including dismissal. The school is also outlawing drug paraphernalia this year.

Harvey Saunders, president of tiny Westminster College in Fulton, Mo., sent letters to each of his 650 students this summer citing the Bias case and warning that any drug user who refused counseling could be expelled.

At Newberry College in South Carolina, the police, rather than the tiny school's disciplinary council will be called in to handle even minor drug offense..

Freshman orientation at Mount St. Mary College in Newburgh, N.Y., will include drug education for the first time, offered by college officials, health experts and law enforcement officers.

Many other schools have begun voluntary or mandatory drug testing programs for athletes. The University of Maryland this summer announced it will have more frequent unannounced drug testing of its athletes in the wake of the Bias death, along with closer scrutiny of the testing to ensure that urine samples can't be switched.

An annual Gallup poll on education issues released last weekend found that the public considers drugs the biggest problem facing schools, and 49 percent approve drug testing of students, while 44 percent opposed it.

Some congressmen hope to apply added pressure for campus anti-drug action with a proposed amendment to the fiscal 1987 education appropriation bill which would block federal funds to any school that doesn't have a drug prevention program.

But many college officials contacted by The Associated Press took issue with suggestions that their drug policies weren't tough enough.

Only a minority said they planned stiffer penalties for drug offenders or tighter campus security.

The University of Michigan and Boston University, for instance, are among many schools that have long claimed the right to search a student's dorm room for illegal substances or terminate a student's residence hall lease for sale or use of drugs.

"We're not new to that game," said Southern Illinois University chancellor Lawrence Pettit. "We've always been against drug use. It's not as though the administration in Washington is going to change regulations or sanctions at any university."

Many argued that more and better drug education, rather than harsh legal or academic penalties, would better solve the problem.

Before the Bias incident, Temple University in Philadelphia had focused its anti-drug efforts on athletes. This fall, the administration plans drug talks and literature for the entire student body, spokeswoman Kathy Gosliner said.

"In one sense I have a funny feeling that the rhetoric that is being used is going to amuse a lot of college students," said David Burns, assistant vice president of student life, policy and service at Rutger University, adding that words like "crusade" will not get students to think about drug abuse. No new disciplinary measures or dorm rules are planned at Rutgers this fall.

"It's not like the military, where you can shake a duffel bag out on someone's bed," said Charles L. Shearer, president of Transylvania University in Lexington, Ky.

College officials said that campus drug use is down considerably from the 1960s and 1970s. For most students, alcohol is by far the "drug of choice."

An annual survey of 17,000 college students nationwide published in July by the University of Michigan's Institute for Social Research found that roughly one-third will have tried cocaine by their senior year.

But virtually all other drug use is down since 1980, according to the federally sponsored survey. Most notably, college students who said they used marijuana fell from 51 percent in 1980 to 41.7 percent in 1985. Daily marijuana use dropped from 7.2 percent of those surveyed in 1980 to 3.1 percent in 1985.

At the University of Illinois, "Hash Wednesday," an annual campus marijuana bash, drew just 200 to 300 people this past school year, compared with thousands in the 1970s.

"I came on in the '70s; you could smell marijuana walking around campus," said Karen Abraham, associate dean of students at the University of New Mexico in Albuquerque. She said that's no longer true.

Still, some administrators say they are concerned that the drug "crack," a highly addictive, inexpensive form of cocaine, may pose new problems.

"I know there are students who use it (crack), but I think it's a very small percentage," she said.

Nuclear contest

Some of the recent conversations regarding disposal of nuclear waste give us reason to be a bit uncomfortable, particularly in light of the nuclear disaster at Chernobyl in the Soviet Union.

Take this one, for example, when Steve Frishman, director of the governor's nuclear waste program, was testifying before the House Joint Committee on Hazardous Waste Transportation, a timely subject for the state's residents since Texas is one of three "finalists" for the right to serve as the nation's nuclear graveyard.

Testifying regarding the potential shipment of nuclear waste contained in casks by rail, Frishman noted that one potential rail route through the state could begin in the Houston-Galveston area and extend northeasterly through Dallas, Fort Worth and Amarillo. Said Frishman: "If a cask ruptures, you are dealing with a few tons of spent fuel. In a city, you could have injuries, death and long-term effects."

There goes Texas Stadium, the Astrodome and Palo Duro Canyon.

Of course, the rail industry does have an outstanding safety record. So, there shouldn't be any problem. How long would these shipments continue?

According to Frishman's testimony, once every three days for 25 years. Hmm, our confidence in the rail industry's safety record is getting shakier.

And what's the likelihood that in another 25 years the United States won't be creating even more nuclear waste than it is now? Not much.

Of well, Texans only have to wait until 1992 to see if the state "wins" this contest.

What's that you say? Read the fine print that says even if the nuclear dump site is placed in another state, the shipments can still come through Texas.

Ever get the feeling somebody rigged this game?

Warsaw challenged

One of the many commendable characteristics of the courageous people of Poland is that they never have accepted oppression without fighting back. The world again was reminded of this the other day when the Soviet-dominated communist government in Warsaw was challenged from two directions, first by the Catholic Church and then by leaders of the labor union Solidarity.

Poland's Jozef Cardinal Glemp, an effective champion of church and country, warned the government there would be a real church-state confrontation if the communists should attempt to teach atheism in Polish schools. The occasion was a Mass attended by more than 200,000 pilgrims celebrating the Feast of the Assumption at the Jasna Gora monastery. The Cardinal picked an appropriate spot for his warning, for the monestery is the home of Poland's most revered Catholic icon, the Black Madonna.

The Marxist rulers have said they planned to introduce religious studies in schools this fall designed "to teach humanism, tolerance, and respect for other opinions." Cardinal Glemp's response grew from the knowledge those fine-sounding words have a different meaning for the Moscow-Warsaw axis than they do for freedom-loving Poles.

The anti-Warsaw challenge from Solidarity came from two leaders just released from prison, Adam Michnik and Bogdan Lis. They, along with union leader Lech Walesa, were greeted at a rally attended by more than 7,000 well-wishers. Afterwards they attended a church service, where Michnik said: "I can only shout out loud now what I shouted to our union leader in the courtroom a year ago. Lech, keep it up! Solidarity will win!"

The Church and the union are Poland's two best hopes for the future.

Up in clean air!

Airline passengers who gripe about the air quality in aircraft cabins now have new foundation for their complaints. A report by the National Academy of Sciences confirms that the air inside many airplanes is barely breathable. One sure way to ease the problem, says the academy, is to ban smoking on domestic flights.

That sensible suggestion was rejected several times by the now-defunct Civil Aeronautics Board, which bowed to the argument that separate smoking and nonsmoking sections are sufficient to keep all passengers comfortable. The academy's report, requested last year by Congress, contradicts that claim. It notes that ventilation in most crowded planes is already poor, and that cigarette smoke reduces the quality of air throughout the cabin to unhealthy levels. The still and smokey air contains dangerous amounts of carbon dioxide and ozone, according to the report, and creates an "excellent environment" for the spread of infectious diseases.

The report's findings are especially worrisome because of mounting evidence that second-hand smoke causes heart and respiratory ailments in nonsmokers and may be responsible for as many as 46,000 deaths a year in the United States. The hazard of aircraft air is greatest for frequent or frail flyers and for the 70,000-plus flight attendants who are regularly exposed to drifting cabin smoke. According to the report, full-time attendants absorb an amount of smoke "approximately equal to that associated with living with a one-pack-a-day smoker."

Smoking is already prohibited on commuter planes, which are too small to accommodate separate sections for smokers and nonsmokers. But the academy's findings suggest that isolating smokers in larger aircraft does little to prevent harmful effects. Its recommendation that smoking be prohibited on all domestic flights acknowledges the palpable health dangers of such contaminated air. Lawmakers can heed the academy's advice by passing a new bill, introduced by Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah, that would ban smoking on commercial aircraft and other public conveyances.

Duarte says Ortega alienating nations

SANTO DOMINGO, Dominican Republic — The leaders of two hostile nations, Nicaragua's President Daniel Ortega and El Salvador's President Jose Napoleon Duarte, had a brief encounter the other day in the Dominican Republic. Both were there for the inauguration of Dominican President Joaquin Balaguer.

Jack Anderson

Ortega supports the Salvadoran rebels who want to overthrow Duarte. They have often resorted to terrorism; once they even kidnapped his daughter. Accusing Ortega to his face, Duarte called on him to stop supporting the rebels and allow Central America to live in peace.

As Duarte later described the conversation to me, Ortega demanded evidence; he asked for proof. Duarte said he could cite evidence that was only three days old. Then he told Ortega about a telephone call that the rebels had made to a Dominican bishop. The call not only came from Nicaragua but was traced to a high-security area where the rebel operations center is located, Duarte said.

The Salvadoran president also recalled his negotiations with the rebel leaders after they kidnapped his daughter. They repeatedly interrupted the negotiations to clear their next moves with the Ortega regime, Duarte said. They would explain the interruption, he added, by saying: "Let's find out what Managua thinks about this."

In response, Ortega urged bilateral talks to settle the differences between the two countries. But Duarte turned him down; he explained to me that Ortega was trying to break up the unity of the Central American nations.

Duarte had some parting advice for Ortega: He said Ortega should never have brought military pressure on neighboring Costa Rica, which is a peaceful, model democracy. This has alienated other nations, Duarte said. He told Ortega it was also a mistake to blame all Nicaragua's troubles on the United States. This has cost Ortega credibility, Duarte said.

I asked what he thought of Ortega. Duarte shot right back: "Ortega is a liar." Duarte said Ortega's public statements had only one purpose: To promote his political interests, without regard for the facts.

Duarte agreed that Ortega is an unsurpassed operator at the subterranean level of politics but contended that the real power in Nicaragua is held by a nine-member directorate. Ortega is merely their soft-spoken pitchman, whose quiet approach is sometimes mistaken for candor, Duarte told me.

He has mixed feelings about the military aid that the Senate and House have approved for the contras. A military solution may be necessary in Nicaragua, he conceded, but a diplomatic solution would be preferable. He likes ex-Secretary of State Henry Kissinger's plan to seek a settlement at the superpower level.

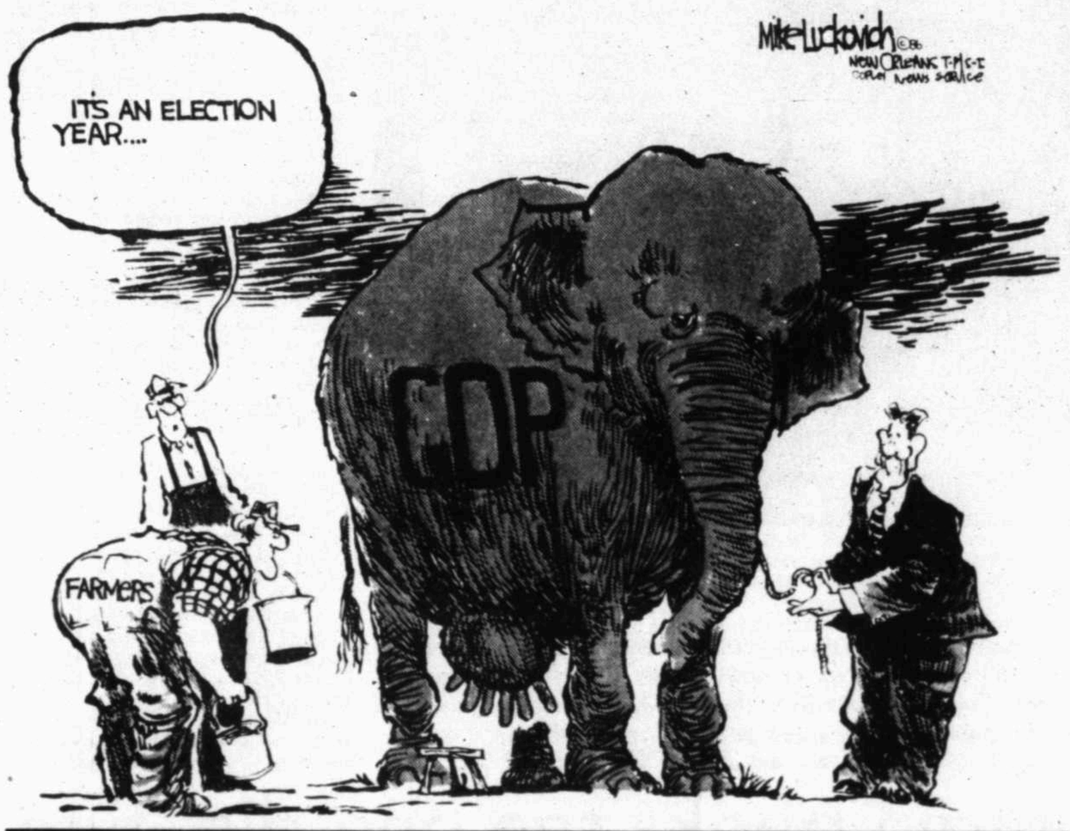

Duarte would like the superpowers to set up zones of influence, then agree not to meddle in each other's zones. Presumably Central America would fall in the U.S. zone. If the Soviets abandoned Nicaragua, he believes the United States would also pull back and let the Central American nations arrange their own settlement.

Footnote: The Salvadoran president made a wry comment, which suggests that some Ugly Americans may still be kicking around Central America. When he passes through the United States, Duarte said, he must fill out the proper immigration form, though he is a head of state. But some private American citizens recently showed up in his country without visas or entry cards. "We are Americans," they said impatiently, as if no further explanation were needed.

BLIND PRESIDENT: Joaquin Balaguer, the wise old man of the Dominican Republic, became president the first time in 1960. He was forced out in 1962 and spent the next three years in exile. He came back to win the presidency three consecutive times before he lost it again. Now, on the eve of his 79th birthday, he's president once more. He's also nearly blind, yet the handicap hasn't dulled his prodigious mind. I discovered this during a private meeting. El Salvador's President Jose Napoleon Duarte made the same discovery. He told me: "Balaguer may be almost blind, but he sees the issues more clearly than men with good eyes."

California's GOP bumps into party politics

LOS ANGELES — The disaster threatening Rep. Ed Zschau's race for a seat Republicans may need to keep control of the Senate is measured by these private comments by one of his running mates on California's statewide GOP ticket:

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

"Zschau's situation is impossible. He has the same position as Alan Cranston on so many issues that he can't hit him. How can any of us really go all out for him?"

Conservative Republicans certainly have not. That helps explain the stunning 13-point lead in the polls taken by Senate Majority Whip Cranston, given up for dead a year ago by key Democrats. For the first time since Ronald Reagan's nomination for governor 20 years ago brought it peace, the California GOP is bleeding from ideological wounds.

That is not the conventional interpretation of what's gone wrong for Zschau. The producer of Ronald Reagan's 1984 commercials has been hired by Zschau to devise a new media strategy. Campaign torpor following the June primary is compared with Cranston vitality. Republican politicians curse him for provoking the pro-Israeli lobby, which counts Cranston as its top Senate Democratic partisan.

But at the heart of Zschau's fall is regression to California Republican thinking of the previous generation: nominate a liberal and point him left in quest of Democratic votes. That not only ignores the election of Reagan, George Murphy, S.I. Hayakawa and George Deukmejian over the past 25 years but what has happened to the party nationally.

Any Republican candidate today is asking for trouble if, as Zschau does, he takes a pro-choice position on abortion and is inconstant in support of President Reagan on national security. It is deeply ironic, then, that hope of reversing that tide rests with Reagan convincing fellow Californians that he needs Ed Zschau to keep the Senate Republican his last two years. The president's campaign trip here early in September is the chance to bring the party back together.

High-tech millionaire Zschau is new to big-time politics and did not appreciate that his nomination as a minority winner was no vote of confidence. The war chest raised by fellow high-tech entrepreneurs and other chief executive officers was enough to beat the money-starved campaign of the conservative runnerup, TV commentator Bruce Herschensohn, but it did not buy love.

That became apparent to one veteran Republican operative immediately following the primary. When he urged unified support for Zschau in speeches to the stolidly loyal Republican women's clubs, he got boos and hisses. Yet, when we related that story to politicians here, they scoffed at the notion of left-wing Cranston winning GOP votes.

That attitude carried over into the Zschau camp. Instead of moving right to secure his base, he travelled left to pick up Democrats. Since the primary, Zschau has come down Democratic on key issues such as calling on the president to observe SALT II and opposing the judgeship confirmation of Daniel Manion. The result has been abnormally high support for Cranston from conservatives who weigh one more term for the 72-year-old liberal Democrat against 24 years for the 46-year-old liberal Republican.

Nobody can claim great Democratic insight in foreseeing this scenario. Just as they prayed for Ronald Reagan's nomination in 1966, they dreaded Zschau's in 1986. On the day after the primary, Cranston commented sourly that he finally was facing a formidable candidate on his fourth Senate campaign. The devastating Cranston media campaign that depicted Zschau's flip-flopping on Nicaragua and other issues was devised by Washington-based consultants Bob Shrum and Dave Doak to save Democratic voters rather than alienate Republicans.

Cranston's lead is seen in both campaigns in tactical rather than strategic terms. Zschau's operatives complain that his "charisma" has been obscured. Cranston is praised for showing unexpected vigor, of looking much better than he did in his ill-fated presidential effort in 1984. Zschau is criticized for going on summer vacation after the primary.

Thus, Zschau's princpal move has been tactical: Sig Rogich of Las Vegas, who produced Reagan's 1984 "morning in America" spots, has been hired to devise a new Zschau campaign that won't be ready until after Labor Day. That may show the fine hand of Reagan adviser Stu Spencer, who has been helping the Zschau effort informally.

But what about those angry Republican activists? A turn toward the right, such as Zschau's primary election conversion for the contras, would be ludicrous. All hope rests on the president using his magic on old supporters in pleading for a Republican Senate. But that is a flimsy argument. "Sometimes party loyalty asks too much," John F. Kennedy said in the 1950s. California GOP stalwarts agree today.

West Berlin isn't an 'outpost of freedom'

Foolish rhetoric causes two problems. One, it can, if you become a captive of it, get you into a war you don't want to fight. Two, if you discard it in a showdown, it destroys your credibility.

Charley Reese

The rhetoric that marked the 25th anniversary of the building of the Berlin wall was foolish rhetoric. To say, as the official U.S. statement said, that Western nations will defend Berlin militarily is to say that West Berlin is worth a nuclear war, because that is the only way it can be defended militarily. West Berlin is 110 miles inside East Germany.

Certainly neither the people in Europe nor the United States would wish to see a nuclear holocaust unleashed just to maintain an archaic political status for a city that would be destroyed in the process of defending it.

Nevertheless, even democratic governments do not consult their citizens when they decide to go to war and human beings in government have, in fact, gone to war for just such foolish reasons.

A second part of the U.S. statement was that we would never allow West Berlin to become isolated. This is an example of rhetoric divorced from reality. West Berlin is isolated. It is surrounded by communist territory and communist military forces.

A third flight of fancy was to characterize West Berlin as the spiritual center of the West. Since when? What great philosophical or spiritual movements have originated in Berlin? Other than decadence and Nazism, I can't recall any. The truth is that for the past few hundred years, Britain and France and their allies have been at odds with Germany.

Ever since John F. Kennedy, who was a great speaker but an incompetent president, made his famous "I am a Berliner" speech, rhetoric has been employed to cover up the failure of Western nerve and policy.

The first failure was the agreement to allow the Soviets to occupy most of Germany. This political agreement resulted in the present day isolation of Berlin which, technically, is still under World War II military occupation.

The second failure was Harry Truman's decision to fly over the blockade of West Berlin instead of facing down the Soviet Union which had, in violation of its agreements, blocked ground access to the city. For better or worse, Truman did not want to risk a war with the Soviet Union and so he conceded while masking the appeasement with the Berlin airlift.

The third great failure was that of Kennedy's, when the communists began to build the now famous Berlin wall, again in a clear violation of agreements. Kennedy mobilized American forces (including me) and then lost his nerve and did nothing. Instead of knocking down the barbed wire fence, Kennedy made a speech about what bad public relations the illegal wall was for the communists.

It is a tribute, if you can call it that, to the cleverness of propagandists, the shallowness of journalism, and the gullibility of the public that Kennedy is remembered as a bold president when in fact he was one of the most ill-informed, timid, and incompetent presidents in American history. His legacy consists of the Berlin wall, the Bay of Pigs, and the Vietnam War. It is a cruel, sad irony that Lee Oswald salvaged the playboy-president's reputation by taking his life.

The bloody, unpalatable truth is that West Berlin is in an indefensible geographic position, which the Soviet Union can strangle whenever it chooses to do so. Despite the hot-air rhetoric Western leaders know that and so West Berlin is a lever with which the Soviets can manipulate the West. All they have to do to scare the West is threaten to move on West Berlin, which puts the West on the horns of an ugly dilemma: either have a nuclear war or lose face by surrendering West Berlin.

West Berlin is not an outpost of freedom. It is a tragic hostage of tyranny and a symbol of Western weakness and mistakes.

Large majorities support 'revamping' of schools

HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C. (AP) — Americans are willing to pay higher taxes for improvements in public education, according to two polls released today.

The parallel surveys of Americans generally and top business executives were to be presented at the National Governors' Association, which has proposed a new round of education reforms in its annual meeting that ends today.

Seventy-seven percent of Americans would pay higher taxes for education, according to the Louis Harris and Associates poll. Twenty percent oppose higher taxes to pay for educational improvements.

Sixty-four percent of business leaders were willing to see corporate taxes raised if it would lead to better education, the other Harris poll said.

The surveys were conducted for the Carnegie Forum on Education and the Economy, a panel that released a report in May proposing radical restructuring of public education, with higher pay for many teachers and putting increased control over local education decisions in the hands of teachers.

The polls found large majorities supporting a revamping of the schools as a way to increase American productivity and remain competitive in world markets.

"It is clear from these sizable majorities," Harris said in a statement, "the American people and business leaders are convinced that the way for this country to become competitive with foreign business, especially the Japanese, is not to try to revert back in time and try to compete with unskilled and low-skilled labor."

Fifty-four percent of the public give the public education system positive marks, but 60 percent of the public and 63 percent of business leaders feel negatively about what taxpayers get back for the money invested in schools.

The survey also reported solid majorities supporting most Carnegie Forum recommendations. Seventy-nine percent of the public backed the recommendation that teachers be given a real say over what is taught, how materials are used and how money is spent in schools. Eighty-two percent backed paying teachers on a level of accountants and other professionals, in a range of $20,000 to $60,000 for a full year's work.

The two-part survey polled 1,513 adults and 202 top executives selected from among 1,000 of the top corporations. It was conducted during July.

Congress burning midnight oil prior to three-week vacation

By Lawrence L. Knutson

WASHINGTON (AP) — The midnight oil was burning and the Senate and the House were churning toward a three-week vacation.

The hour was late, near four in the morning on Saturday, Aug. 15, and Congress was finally close to wrapping up an 18-hour day and going home, ending a two-week marathon of late-night sessions.

In the sedate Senate, Sen. Rudy Boschwitz, R-Minn., was asleep, slumped in his chair on the Senate floor as debate droned on around him. It took a roll call vote to wake him up.

In the House, which recessed for hours waiting for the long-winded Senate to complete work on a debt ceiling bill, Rep. Clarence E. Miller, R-Ohio, complained about procedures.

The House leadership wanted unanimous consent to order the House into recess "subject to the call of the chair." But Miller wanted the recess to end at "a time certain."

It was all too much for house Republican Leader Bob Michel of Illinois.

"Some of us want to get our bags packed and get out of town tomorrow," he said. "If the gentleman is tired he can go back to the office and poop out and we will call the gentleman."

The leadership prevailed and the House waited out the Senate. Some members napped in their offices. Others abandoned Capitol Hill altogether and went home to bed.

Finally, at 3:30 a.m., the word came that the Senate had acted and House members were called for a roll call vote.

It was obvious that some House members had come to the floor straight from their slumbers, a haste that put some in violation of the dress code that requires the wearing of a coat and tie on the Senate floor.

When Rep. Timothy Wirth of Colorado, a Democrat, walked onto the floor he was tieless. And Republicans, observant of the rules at any hour, shouted, "Tie! Tie! Tie!"

Democrats had their revenge a few moments later when Republican Rep. E. Clay Shaw of Florida walked in clad in a dark suit and tie.

One fellow member noticed that although Shaw was wearing shoes, he had neglected to put on socks.

So the cry went up from the Democratic side of the aisle, "Socks! Socks! Socks!"

Back in the Senate, Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., and Minority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., assessed the situation.

"We were forced into this spurt of frenetic activity, having frittered away a great deal of time in the period immediately prior to this two-week mad dash toward the recess," Byrd told the Senate.

And noting the long list of legislation awaiting congressional action in the four weeks remaining on the Senate schedule for the year, Byrd told his colleagues: "I am afraid we did not use our time wisely earlier in the year, and now the chickens have come home to roost."

But Dole said he was satisfied at the Senate's accomplishments to date.

"On July 14 when the Senate returned from its Independence Day recess I came to the floor and outlined the full platter of legislative initiatives we had before us," he said.

"If you had asked me whether I truthfully believed we would swallow everything — or even almost everything — on that plate I would have said, 'No way.

"Maybe a bit of nibbling. But amazingly we have accomplished almost everything we set out to do."

But many House members evidently thought the Senate took all too long to do that.

And many were out of sorts.

When the time came early on that Saturday morning to adjourn until Sept. 8, Rep. Philip Crane, R-Ill., demanded a recorded roll call vote.

When it was concluded, 202 representatives had voted to recess.

But 91 had voted no. One member voted "present."

And 137 had not shown up at all.

Marcos, family allowed to stay one more year

HONOLULU (AP) — Former Philippines President Ferdinand Marcos, his family and aides will be allowed to stay in the United States for at least one more year, an immigration official said Monday.

A six-month immigration parole for Marcos and the 87 members of his entourage, who arrived here Feb. 26 after Marcos was overthrown in Manila, expires Tuesday.

"I have decided to authorize a new one-year parole," said William W. Craig, district director of the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

There was no question raised about whether Marcos and his family could remain in the United States because "they have been an exemplary group as far as immigration goes," Craig said.

"It's really a very standard procedure," Craig said.

A spokesman for the Marcos family was not immediately available to comment on the action by immigration officials, said a man who answered the telephone at Marcos' home.

Craig said he decided to authorize a full year, instead of six months, as a matter of convenience to the family, which lives in a rented beachfront home on the island of Oahu.

Soviet delegation to stage new round of superpower talks

By BARRY SCHWEID

WASHINGTON (AP) — A high-level Soviet delegation arrives here late today for a new round of superpower talks on regional issues, with South Africa certain to be high on the agenda.

This could pose a ticklish problem for the Reagan administration, which is trying to withstand international calls to impose economic sanctions on the Pretoria government to force an end to apartheid.

The head of the Soviet delegation, Deputy Foreign Minister Anatoly Adamischin, is a specialist on South Africa and is virtually certain to bring up the subject when the two-day session opens Wednesday at the State Department.

Michael H. Armacost, undersecretary of state for political affairs, will lead the U.S. team in the talks, which are designed to prepare for a superpower summit meeting later this year.

Initially, President Reagan proposed regional conflicts in Afghanistan and other areas where the Soviets appeared to be on the defensive as logical topics for summit discussion. It was partly a way of taking the focus off arms control, on which Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev intended to concentrate attention.

But at their "fireside" summit meeting last November in Geneva the two leaders decided to have officials hold periodic meetings on a variety of regional problems, including the Arab-Israeli dispute.

This left the Soviet delegation free to try to concentrate on South Africa, where the United States stands in lonely but wavering support of President P.W. Botha's government.

Reagan imposed limited sanctions last fall, including a ban on most loans to Pretoria, and has spoken out against racial segregation. But so far he has resisted pressures from Congress and other nations and refused to reduce economic ties with South Africa.

The administration's reasoning is that blacks in the country and in neighboring states would be hurt the most.

This week's meeting is designed to prepare for summit agenda talks here Sept. 19 and 20 between Secretary of State George P. Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze.

Separate discussions on Afghanistan will be held in Moscow next week.

All these discussions are intended to clear the way for Gorbachev to set a date to come here to see Reagan.

The two leaders committed themselves in November to back-to-back summits this year and next in the U.S. and Soviet capitals.

But Gorbachev has held off setting a date until he has assurances the next summit meeting will produce progress toward reversing the nuclear arms race.

The State Department, meanwhile, was noncommittal Monday on a call by the leaders of six black states bordering on South Africa for an urgent summit meeting with Reagan, either in Africa or in Washington.

"The situation in southern Africa has reached boiling point," Kenneth Kaunda, president of Zambia and chairman of the "front-line" group, said Sunday. "We are close to an explosion."

A State Department spokesman, Charles E. Redman, said the United States is always ready to do its part to promote a negotiated settlement and shares the black countries' objectives, including an end to apartheid.

But he said no invitation to a summit had been received or details made known beyond those appearing in news accounts.

Efforts under way to restructure regulation of NRC

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — With construction of new nuclear-power plants coming to an end and revelations about slipshod operation of existing plants on the rise, efforts are under way in Congress to dramatically restructure the way the government regulates the industry.

The efforts come at a time of controversy about the Nuclear Regulatory Commission's ability to maintain an arms-length relationship with utilities, as well as concern about chronic mismanagement at several plants. According to the commission's own reports, lax operating procedures and a failure to adhere to safety standards have caused a number of potentially dangerous reactor mishaps. Some congressional observers fault the Nuclar Regulatory Commission as much as utilities for those incidents.

Even the nuclear industry and defenders of the agency cite the need for some basic reforms. The nuclear commission, they note, has not been altered substantially since it was created as part of the Atomic Energy Act 32 years ago.

Sen. Alan Simpson, R-Wyo., chairman of the Senate Environment and Public Works subcommittee on nuclear regulation, is pushing legislation that would abolish the commission's current five-member board and replace it with a single administrator.

Environmental groups and other critics of the commission and the nuclear industry have proposed establishing a strongly independent safety board that would investigate accidents and mishaps, and issue corrective recommendations to the Nuclear Regulatory Commission and industry. It would be modeled after the National Transportation Safety Board.

A third measure would create a separate Inspector General's office within the commission, to audit the internal workings of the agency, again with specific emphasis toward safety.

The drive to revamp the agency that watches over all phases of atomic power production in many ways stems from the changing nature of its task. After three decades of steady growth, the nuclear-power industry has peaked at 100 plants nationwide. Just a half-dozen plants remain under construction, and there are no outstanding orders to build additional units.

"(Stagnation) was the case before Chernobyl, and obviously the situation didn't improve with news of the accident," says Victor Gilinsky, a former commissioner of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission who now is a consultant to the industry. "The job the NRC was originally set up to perform, the licensing of nuclear power plants, is very nearly over."

At the same time there is growing disenchantment with the commission's performance — especially in maintaining the heightened safety standards enacted after the 1979 accident at Three Mile Island.

"The American public is on to the commission, they understand it doesn't work," Simpson said in an interview. Much of its ineffectiveness, he said, can be attributed to lapses in leadership and "a bizarre lack of accountability" among the five commissioners.

"They don't make decisions, they just bounce things back and forth in memorandums (between) layers of lawyers," said Simpson, who is considered to be one of the nuclear-industry's strongest allies in the Senate. A single administrator could establish a clearer direction for the agency, allowing it to more quickly respond to changing demands, he said.

Even though it would abolish their jobs, a majority of commission members have announced support for the Simpson plan. In the view of commission member Frederick Bernthal, group management no longer results in consensus, as was intended, but rather fosters confusion and paralysis.

Despite some strong differences of opinion among the five board members, a majority has insisted that the commission's current safety departments are adequate and have denounced proposals for an independent safety board or special inspector as unneeded.

However, outside assessments, including a 1985 study by Brookhaven National Laboratory and two reports on the Three Mile Island incident, have found serious fault with Nuclear Regulatory Commission accident investigations.

Proponents of a safety board contend a tougher, independent watchdog is needed because the commission is reluctant to criticize it self, and is too cozy with those it is supposed to be regulating. "Obviously there can't be a high degree of public confidence whenever you have the NRC investigating an accident which may have been caused — even in part — by NRC error or negligence," said Sen. Joseph R. Biden Jr., D-Del., sponsor of the nuclear safety board bill.

Biden has said the need for his legislation was demonstrated by a 1983 mishap at the Salem I plant near Wilmington, Del., during which a reactor continued to run despite a malfunction that should have immediately shut it down. The Nuclear Regulatory Commission, Biden said, neglected to follow up obvious leads in its investigation, and may have been hampered by the manufacturer of the flawed device that had failed.

Others say the commission is reluctant to prosecute those who have violated its regulations. In 1985, Assistant Attorney General Steve Trott complained in a letter to then-commission Chairman Nunzio Paladino that high-ranking Nuclear Regulatory Commission officials betrayed "opposition as well as resistance...to the detection and disclosure of deliberate wrongdoing" by utilities.

Prosecutors want convicted spy imprisoned 150 years

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Prosecutors on Monday asked that convicted spy Jerry Whitworth be sentenced to at least 150 years in prison with no parole eligibility for 50 years.

Whitworth, 47, was convicted July 24, of selling Navy code and communications secrets for $332,000 to the espionage operation run by his longtime friend, John Walker Jr.

Whitworth, a former Navy radioman from Davis, is to be sentenced Thursday by U.S. District Judge John Vukasin.

Defense lawyers have requested a delay to allow for the normal presentence investigation, but the judge has said he does not need the study.

Seven of Whitworth's convictions carry maximum life sentences.

Assistant U.S. attorneys William Farmer and Leida Schoggen requested a 150-year term for at least two of Whitworth's espionage convictions, and sentences of either life or 150 years for each of the other five espionage convictions.

On Whitworth's five convictions of tax evasion on the money Walker paid him, the prosecutors recommended the maximum sentence of 17 years in prison and $270,000 in fines. They also sought a $250,000 fine on one of the espionage charges.

Portion of hotel front falls

BOSTON (AP) — A portion of a suspended ceiling over the main entrance to a luxury hotel collapsed Monday, injuring two people, one critically, and damaging at least four vehicles.

Pieces of ceiling tile, fiberglass insulation and several lightweight metal ceiling support beams landed on three cars and a van that were parked at the entrance to the 37-story Westin Hotel. The cars were damaged extensively.

Firefighters cut through the debris to get to the vehicles, but authorities said they found nobody inside them.

"We have no idea why this occurred," Westin spokeswoman Susan Mooncai said of the 4:15 p.m. accident.

Robert Dickson, 65, of Palm Beach, Fla., was taken to New England Medical Center, where he was listed in critical condition, said hospital spokeswoman Leslie Fuhrer. She said he was alert but suffering from lacerations and blunt trauma.

Hotel guest Fred Harrison, 70, of Thornton, Ind., was treated for minor head lacerations at the hospital and released, Ms. Mooncai said.

Man has 'enough' snakes

GULF BREEZE, Fla. (AP) — A man who spent 100 days in a room filled with poisonous snakes says that's enough, and vows he won't try to break his record.

Juergen Hergert, 43, emerged Sunday from the room at The Zoo that he shared with 24 cobras, rattlers and other poisonous serpents.

His stay in the glass-walled enclosure broke a record of 90 days he set three years ago in his hometown of Schladen, West Germany, where he has a snake farm.

"I'm very tired," said Hergert, who averaged two hours of sleep because a deadly Indian cobra insisted on sharing his bed. He was never bitten.

About 60,000 people saw Hergert at The Zoo where he put on snake shows and conducted experiments during his stay. Hergert got a percentage from each admission.

Hergert said his goal was to educate people that snakes are a valuable resource, including a source of medicinal painkiller made from their venom, and shouldn't be destroyed.

Cameroon gets relief aid

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States is sending $25,000 for relief efforts in Cameroon, where 1,200 people are reported dead from a natural release of toxic gas, and is awaiting a specific request before sending more, according to a foreign aid official.

Also, two teams of U.S. officials will travel to the West African nation, one to determine the cause of the gas release and a second to determine the cause of the deaths, M. Peter McPherson, administrator of the Agency for International Development, said Monday.

Dr. Edward Koenigsberg is heading the team that is attempting to determine the cause of death. It also will recommend treatment for 200 persons who have been hospitalized.

The second team is being led by Joseph Devine of Brown University, a specialist in fresh water geologic chemistry.

Tonight, according to the NWS at Midland Regional Airport, will be partly cloudy with a low in the upper 60s. The chance of thunderstorms is 30 percent. Winds will be out of the southeast at five to 10 mph.

A weak upper-level disturbance moving across the High Plains today triggered showers and thunderstorms over parts of North and West Texas.

Showers and a few thunderstorms stretched from the Concho Valley southeast of San Angelo across the Permian Basin to near Lubbock on the South Plains.

Elsewhere, thundershowers spread across the low Rolling Plains and the Big Country into the north central part of the Lone Star State.

A few showers developed offshore in the Gulf of Mexico east and south of Brownsville. Meanwhile, skies were clear over the Panhandle and Northeast Texas while partly cloudy to mostly cloudy skies covered the rest of the state.

Winds were south to southwest across most of the state at speeds generally in the 5 to 15 mph range.

Early-morning temperatures were in the 60s over the Panhandle, while a few readings in the 80s dotted the mid to upper Gulf coast. Readings elsewhere in the state were in the 70s.

NATION

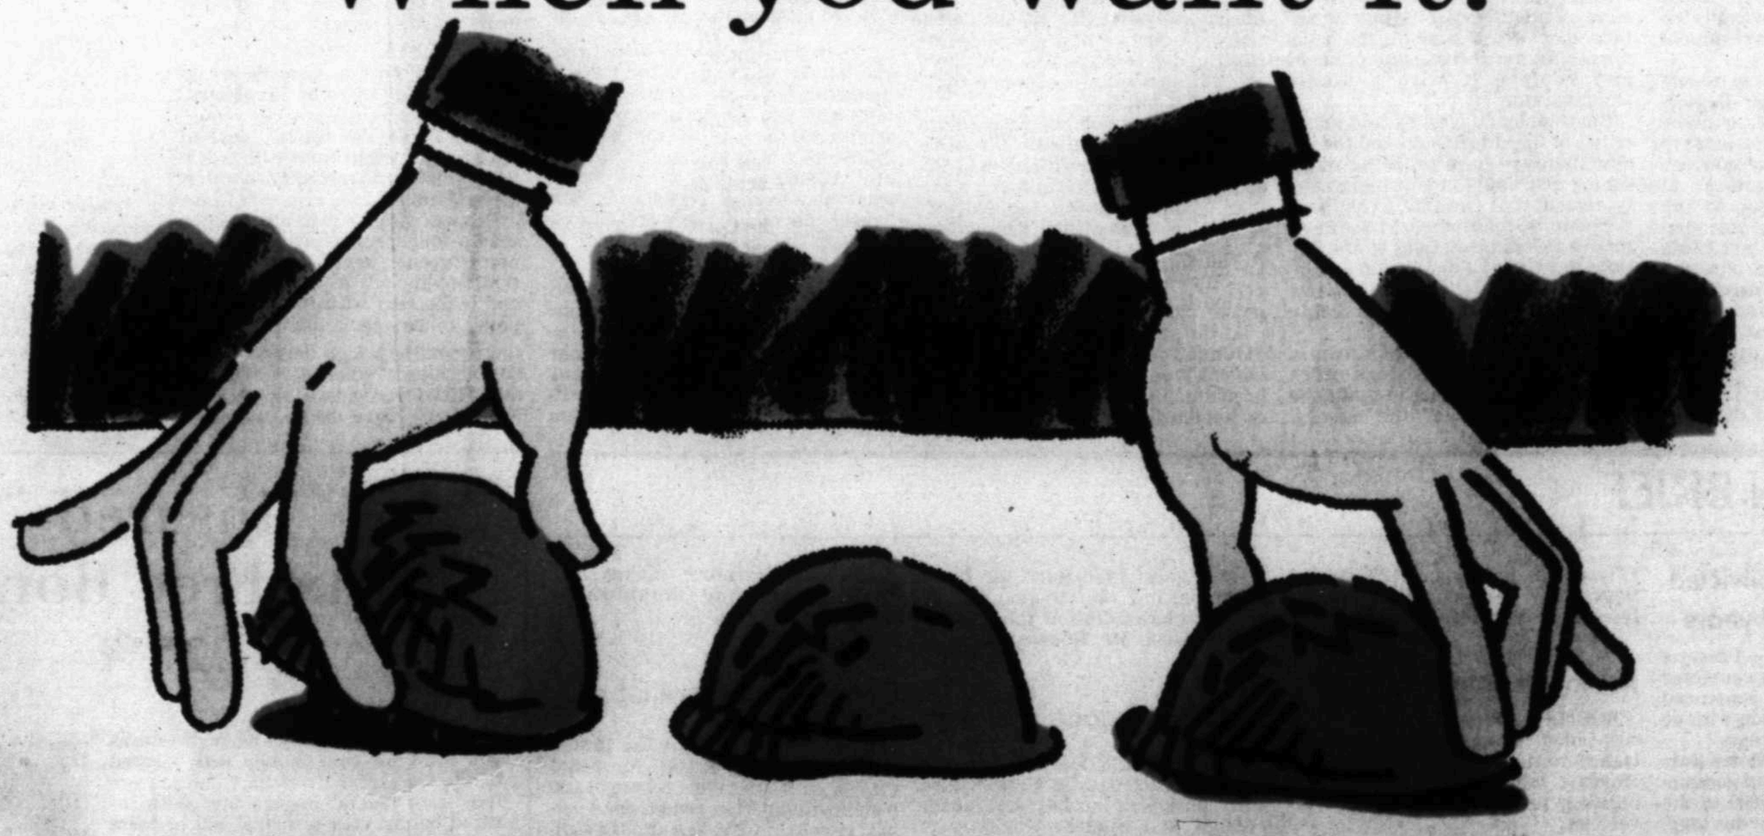

Mild weather prevailed from the Northeast across to the northern Rockies today while rain was scattered from the Gulf Coast into the Midwest and southern Rockies.

Showers and thunderstorms were scattered along the eastern Gulf Coast, the upper Ohio Valley, southern Great Lakes region and southern Plains.

Showers and thunderstorms also extended from the upper Mississippi Valley and middle Missouri Valley across the central and southern Rockies.

Boston's Mike Greenwell jumps back to first base safely as Texas' Pete O'Brien snags the pick-off attempt, but the Rangers won the game, 4-2, to stay on the heels of the California Angels.

Ranger homers nip Sox

Texas keeps Clemens from win No. 20

Associated Press

It will take a truckload of Geno Petrallis and Ruben Sierras to stop Boston's Roger Clemens from winning 20 games this season. To stop him last night, though, one of each was enough.

Clemens, 19-4, entered the eighth inning Monday with a two-hitter and a 2-0 lead over Texas. But Petralli hit a two-run homer in the eighth, taking away the decision, and Sierra victimized reliever Calvin Schiraldi with a his two-run homer in the ninth as the Rangers defeated the Red Sox 4-2.

"That was some game. That game may best characterize this team this year," Texas Manager Bobby Valentine said. "They just don't quit."

SIERRA AND Petralli have 10 career homers between them.

Petralli, at 26, is two years Clemens' senior, with two homers in his 257 career at-bats. Sierra is a 20-year-old rookie from Puerto Rico who hit his eighth homer Monday.

The two Rangers beat up on Clemens and Schiraldi, a pair of former University of Texas stars.

"I'm not a home run hitter," Petralli said. "He's a great pitcher, but I got around on it and hit it well. I knew when I hit it that it had a chance."

Petralli's display did not awe Clemens. "I was throwing the ball well and I still felt strong going into the eighth," Clemens said. "I didn't know anything about Petralli when he came up to bat. I figured he was just a slap hitter. I guess I just hit his bat."

Clemens left after the eighth, author of a four-hit, 10-strikeout performance. Schiraldi, 1-1, struck out Darrell Porter. He struck out Gary Ward. An out away from extra innings, he walked Larry Parrish, then, gave up the biggest homer of Ruben Sierra's life.

"Nothing as big as this one," Sierra said in broken English. "I was looking for a fastball and that's what I got. I just tried to drive the ball hard and when I hit it I just dropped my bat. I knew it was out."

"We beat their two best pitchers tonight. We pitched a great game," said Texas' winning pitcher, Dale Mohorcic, 2-1.

Texas starter Bobby Witt went seven innings, striking out six and walking five. The Rangers' single-season walk champ passed three in the fourth as Boston took a 2-0 lead.

Mike Greenwell, after walking, scored on Rich Gedman's double. After two more walks, Gedman scored on Bill Buckner's single.

Witt leads the AL in walks and wild pitches. He set a Texas club record, raising his 1986 total to 116 free passes.

American League

Angels 5, Yankees 3

Two home runs by Doug DeCinces, two RBI singles by Bob Boone and 3 2-3 innings of hitless relief helped John Candelaria raise his record to 7-2. Vern Ruhle, Gary Lucas and Donnie Moore followed Candelaria. Moore got the last three outs for his 17th save.

Candelaria gave up all three runs but only one was earned. He allowed seven hits, struck out seven and did not walk anyone.

DeCinces hit his 19th and 20th home runs of the season for the 19th multi-homer game of his career.

New York starter Joe Niekro, 8-9, lasted only 4 1-3 innings, failing for the 10th straight start to get past the sixth inning. He was starting for the first time since Aug. 12.

A's 8, Tigers 4

Mark McGwire hit his first major-league homer, Mickey Tettleton hit his second in two days, and Jose Rijo, 6-9, allowed five hits as the A's won their third straight by beating Detroit.

Jose Canseco tripled in the third and scored on a grounder, tying the game 3-3, Donnie Hill broke the tie with a two-run single in the fourth, then McGwire and Tettleton homered. McGwire's was a two-run drive over the 440-foot mark in center field.

"I don't know if I've ever hit one farther," McGwire said. "It's a long ways. They were working me with sliders and stuff. I just kept telling myself to keep in there."

Detroit's Walt Terrell, 11-10, missed a no-hitter by one out his last time out. He lasted only 4 2-3 innings Monday.

Darrell Evans hit a two-run homer for Detroit, his 22nd homer of the year.

Royals 2, White Sox 0

Frank White's two-run homer with two outs in the eighth inning broke up a scoreless duel between Jose DeLeon and Scott Bankhead, 7-7. Bankhead combined with Bud Black on an eight-hit, two-walk shutout. Black retired five straight batters for his sixth save.

DeLeon, 3-3, left after the eighth having, allowed three hits. In his seven starts, DeLeon has been supported by a total of one run in his three losses, has had a no-decision in a 2-1 game and has won 1-0.

After Jorge Orta walked, White hit a 3-2 pitch into the upper deck in left field for his 18th homer of the year — only his second career homer at Comiskey Park and his first since 1981. The other "was off Britt Burns but I can't remember the situation," White said.

The Royals extended Chicago's losing streak to four and broke their two-game losing streak.

Ticket deadline nears

From Staff Reports

Midlanders have until 3 p.m. Friday to purchase season tickets for Midland High and Midland Lee football home games.

"We have to close the books on season ticket sales at 3 p.m. Friday in order to post what we have," said Janelle Dozier, Midland athletic department secretary. "Some people think we will be open until 5 p.m. on Friday, but we're going to have to close a little earlier than that."

No season ticket packages will be sold after the Friday deadline. All remaining tickets will be sold each game week, with home game tickets going on sale each Wednesday at 8 a.m. for $5 adult tickets. Season tickets can be purchased for $4 per home game.

Currently, season tickets for Midland Lee home games are all but gone. "We have a few singles left, but that's all," said Dozier. "However, there will be tickets available to Lee fans on the east side of the stadium each week, with the possible exception of the Permian game."

Lee has sold 2,699 season tickets thus far. UIL rules prohibit taking more than half the stadium for season ticket holders, student sections and school related members such as band and pep squads.

Midland High fans have purchased 904 season tickets, down from the 1,035 sold last year, but activity in that area has increased this week. Bulldog fans are expected to near or break last year's mark before Friday.

Dozier said that tickets for out of town games will be sold each Tuesday at 8 a.m. to season ticket option holders and will then be open to the public at 8 a.m. on Wednesday when home game tickets are sold throughout the season.

Season ticket holders are also served first for any playoff games that might arise with the two teams.

Angels reject 'Mr. October'

NEW YORK (AP) — If Reggie Jackson plays baseball next season, it will not be for the California Angels.

Jackson, sixth on the all-time home run list, says he was told recently by Angels General Manager Mike Port that the team will not resign him for 1987.

"I know I still can play," Jackson said Monday night, prior to the Angels' 5-3 victory over the New York Yankees. "I'd like to play here in California, but it's not going to happen."

Jackson, 40, signed a one-year contract for 1986 worth an estimated $900,000. This season, the designated hitter has 11 homers with 40 runs batted in, and a current 3-for-25 slump has dropped his average to .252.

Jackson said Port told him during spring training that a decision on his status would be made by August.

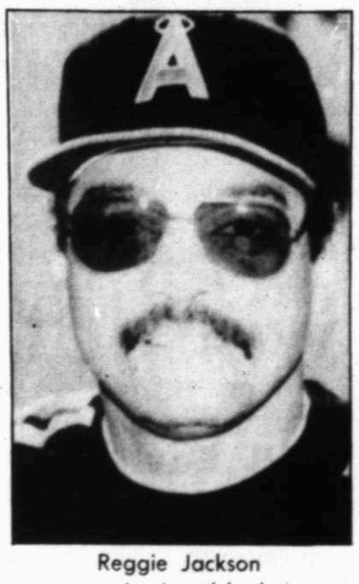

"August came and they told me," Jackson said. "It's a blow. When someone tells you that you're not wanted, it's not something you enjoy hearing."

Yet asked if he was suprised at the Angels' position, he merely shrugged.

Port, at Monday night's game, would neither confirm nor deny that Jackson would not be back with the Angels.

"I won't talk about anything on an individual basis," he said. "I won't get into that."

The Angels have several aging veterans, such as Jackson, Bob Boone, Rick Burleson, John Candelaria, Bobby Grich and Doug DeCinces, with contracts that expire after this season.

Reggie Jackson
...not in Angels' plans

"We'll talk about individuals after the season ends," Port said.

Jackson joined the Angels in 1982 as a free agent and helped them to the American League West title that year, hitting 39 home runs with 101 RBI and a .275 average.

He slumped to .194 with 14 home runs and 49 RBI in 1983, but came back to lead the team with 25 homers in 1984 and 27 last season. He tops all active players with 541 career home runs.

Jackson said he has not specifically thought about his plans for next season, but said he wanted to end his playing days when the time was right.

"I'd rather leave too early than too soon," he said. "I don't want to be let go and be wandering out there looking for a job.

"Trying to leave with dignity and class is more important to me than trying to wring out the rag of my ability. I'm not going to just hang around."

Jackson, nicknamed "Mr. October," has played on five World Series winners, three with Oakland and two with the Yankees. In 27 World Series games, he has a .357 batting average with 10 home runs.

Jackson could get another chance at postseason glory this season with the Angels, who currently lead their division by three games over Texas. But he said the uncertainty over his future was making it hard to enjoy the prospect of another playoff and World Series appearance.

"It ruins it a bit for me out there," he said. "I'm still trying, but your mind wanders. I'm out there somedays saying, 'What am I doing here, where am I going?'"

More trouble in paradise

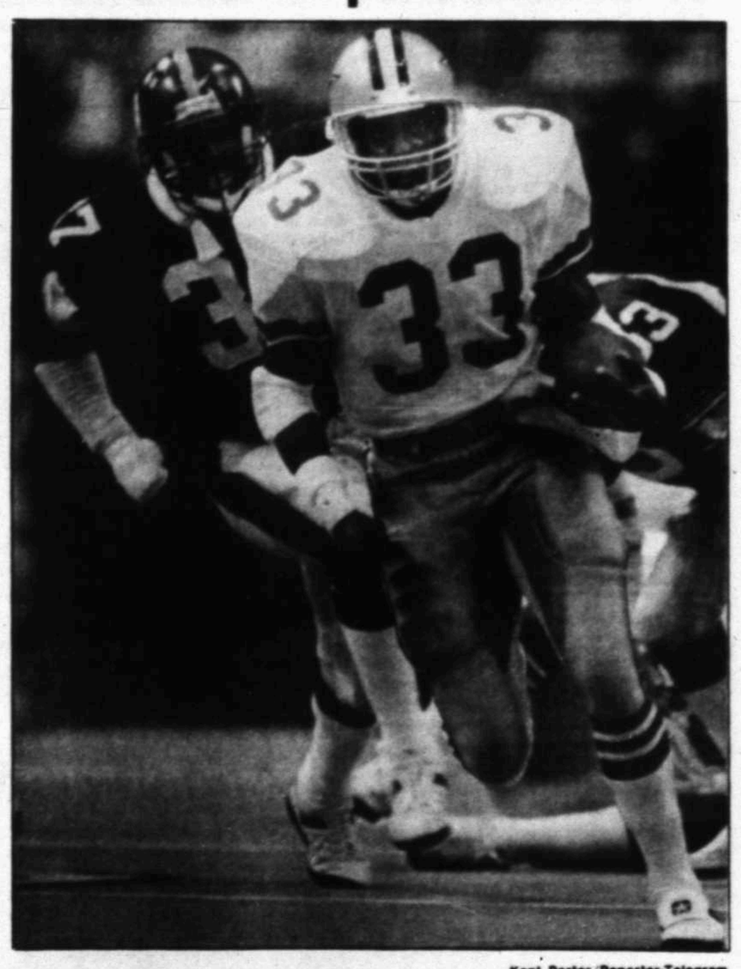

By WILLIAM C. RHODEN
New York Times News Service

DALLAS — It's not as if there had never been trouble here in paradise before. Indeed, from Duane Thomas's icy silence to the debate over whether Danny White or Gary Hogeboom would be the starting quarterback, the Dallas Cowboys have always had enough controversy to keep the pot boiling.

But what has happened here in the last 10 days is something more than controversy. It hints of a dramatic and fundamental change in the Cowboys' longheld offensive philosophy.

On Aug. 13, the Cowboys signed Herschel Walker, the explosive running back from the U.S. Football League, to a multiyear contract valued at $5 million. The package was not only generous but had been expeditiously agreed upon by the Cowboys, an organization often criticized by players for protracted contract negotiations.

No sooner had the ink dried on Walker's contract than Tony Dorsett, the team's career-leading rusher, lashed out at the Cowboys' organization. He said that he wanted to renegotiate his contract and even hinted that he could be a disruptive influence on the team. Last week Dorsett said that the Cowboys couldn't keep two high-priced running backs and he asked to be traded. The Cowboys said no.

Kent Porter/Reporter-Telegram

Tailback Tony Dorsett
...running away from Cowboys?

IN THE intervening days, Dorsett, who has had a love-hate relationship with the Dallas community and Cowboy fans, has attempted to modify-correct-forget his position.

Last Friday after the Cowboys lost their fourth straight exhibition game — this time to the Pittsburgh Steelers — Dorsett talked to reporters for almost an hour, going back and forth between on-field success and off-field hassles with management.

It had been a bittersweet evening, beginning with choruses of boos when he was introduced. When someone asked if Dorsett had noticed that the boos weren't as loud as they had been at a previous home game, he chuckled and said: "I don't try to compare the boos. They tend to all sound alike."

Dorsett fumbled on one drive. Later he scored on a neat-looking 22-yard run off a quick pitch.

"The touchdown? It was routine," Dorsett said matter-of-factly. "I didn't feel like playing football tonight. Mentally I was not there. I'm surprised I was able to do the things I did. Mentally, there's a lot of disarray. I'm totally upset.

"It's a bad deal right now for me. I've been through a lot of things over the years, but I've never been as unhappy as I am now."

Dorsett went out of his way to make sure that his sentiments were not construed as criticism of Walker.

"Herschel Walker and I get along fine. It's not Herschel's fault that Tony Dorsett is upset. Herschel had nothing to do with it. He just got a real good deal; that's all anyone can hope to do. We talk every day, I help him with the plays. When his wife gets in town, I'll invite them over for dinner. Don't try to create something between Herschel Walker and Tony Dorsett. There's not a problem there."

THERE COULD be another element, beyond financial compensation, to Dorsett's apparent uneasiness.

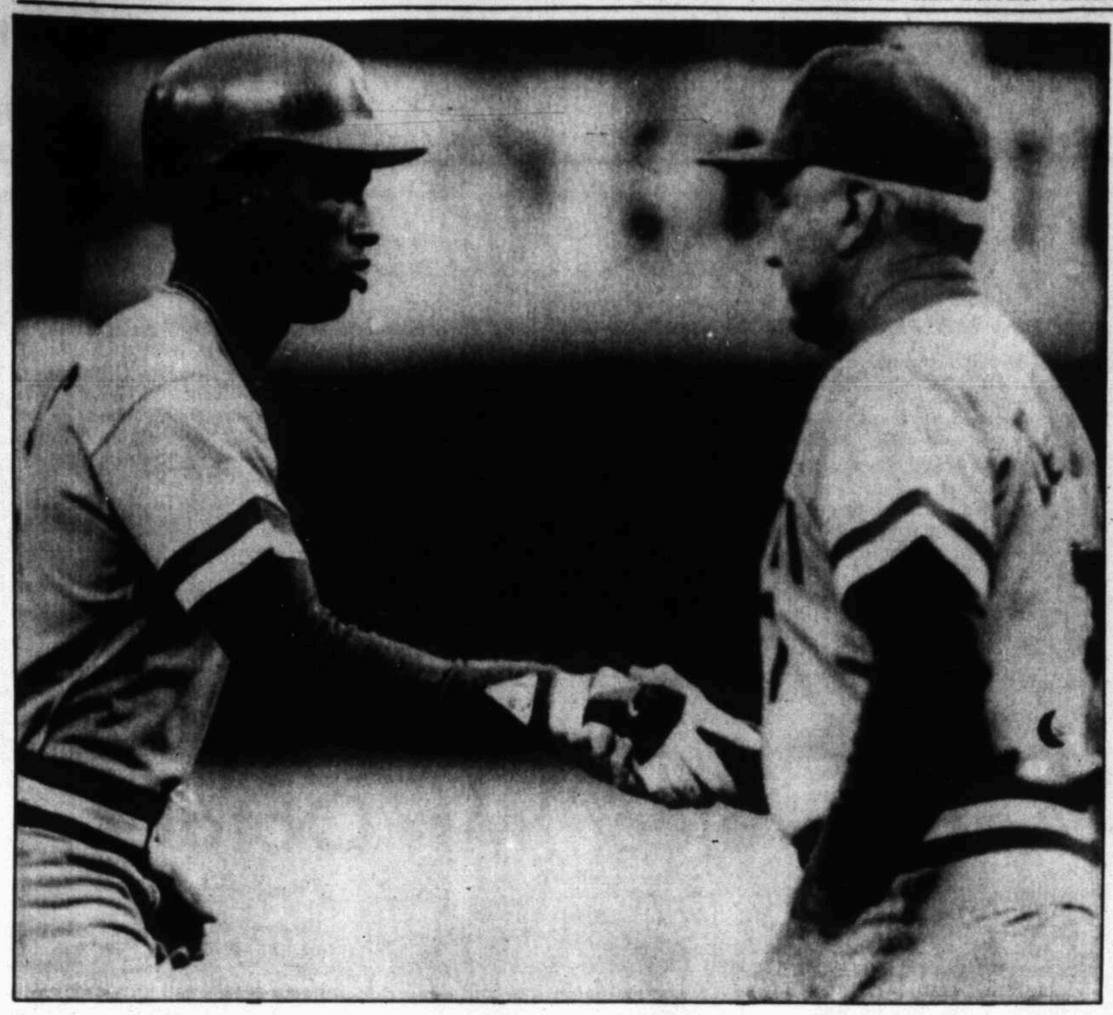

For the last 10 years, he was the focal point of the Cowboys' multifaceted offense. Indeed, in Landry's scheme, the cornerstone of the Cowboys' offense had always been the tailback, going back to Thomas and Don Perkins.

Beginning this season, Dorsett, 32 years old, must face the prospect of sharing time with and ultimately being replaced by the 24-year-old Walker. After 10 years as the backbone of the offense, he is beginning to see a de-emphasis on the tailback in favor of a more varied passing game.

"The removal of the I formation as the total formation and the use of the other formations has put Tony in a position of learning," said Paul Hackett, the Cowboys' new pass offense coordinator. "He now has to be much more diverse in where he lines up. He's got to have the ability to line up as a wide receiver, as a fullback, he's got to learn a tremendous amount of motion and he has to become a more accomplished route runner. He's not a natural pass catcher. His career has not been leaping down the field and catching."

Hackett added: "That touchdown run on Friday was vintage Dorsett — the way he turned the corner and split the defense, that was excellent. In fact, the most dramatic thing to me in training camp is how fast the man continues to be. If he's lost something, I'll be surprised. He's absolutely a blur. We can't lose that. The trick will be to fit that in with the new role Tony plays, which is doing a few more things in the passing game. Remember, it's been 10 years for him in a sphere that's different, yet he's responded beautifully to this decision by Coach Landry and indoctrination by me. We have to get the ball in his hand."

Dorsett wants the ball, too. He needs 1,481 yards to become the Nationl Football League's second leading career rusher, passing Jim Brown and trailing only Walter Payton.

Cincinnati's Eric Davis, left, is congratulated by coach Billy DeMars after his 20th homer Monday that put him with Joe Morgan and Rickey Henderson as the only major leaguers to hit 20 or more homers and steal 60 or more bases in one season.

Houston wins late again

Associated Press

Last-inning magic is a 20-game winner for the Houston Astros this season.

Alan Ashby's RBI double and Craig Reynolds' single keyed Houston's two-run rally in the eighth inning Monday night as the Astros beat the Chicago 3-2. It was the 20th time this year that they have won a game in their last at-bat.

"That's the trademark of this team and everybody in the whole league knows it," Manager Hal Lanier said. "We don't quit. It's not coming from one or two or three players but all 24. When you see that we've won 20 games like that, that tells you about the character of this team."

"That's the great thing about this ball club, our attitude that somebody is going to get the key hit or the key play," said ex-Cub Billy Hatcher, who had three hits and drove in the Astros' first run against his former club. "We don't consider ourselves out of it until we're sitting in here in the dressing room after the game and we've lost."

The victory left the Astros with an eight-game lead in the National League West over San Francisco and Cincinnati.

The Astros, trailing 2-1 on Chris Speier's two-run home run for Chicago in the sixth inning, started their rally in the eighth when Jose Cruz singled with one out and scored on Alan Ashby's opposite-field double.

Pinch-runner Davey Lopes took second base on a passed ball by catcher Jody Davis prior to Reynolds' game-winning hit.

Speier's homer, with two outs and Ron Cey on first with a single, kept Houston starter Bob Knepper from becoming the first 16-game winner in the NL. The left-hander allowed two runs on seven hits in six innings.

"I've seen him (Knepper) a lot better," Speier said. "I got a couple of hits on breaking balls and then I figured that he would come in with a fast ball so I sat on it and he threw it."

Charlie Kerfeld, 8-2, pitched two innings for the victory, while Dave Smith pitched the ninth for his 26th save. Lee Smith, 8-8, was the victim of Houston's eighth-inning rally.

NL Roundup

Expos 6, Giants 5

Montreal scored five runs in the top of the first inning, two of them on a triple by Tom Foley, and held on to beat San Francisco.

The Giants cut the deficit to 5-4 with three runs in the first and one in the second, but Foley made it 6-4 in the third with a sacrifice fly.

Andy McGaffigan, 8-4, pitched four shutout innings for the victory. He relieved starter Jay Tibbs in the fifth with none out and the bases loaded and gave up the final run of the game on Chris Brown's sacrifice fly.

McGaffigan allowed only a hit and two walks in his four innings. Jeff Reardon got his 28th save by pitching the ninth.

Giants starter Mike LaCoss, 9-9, retired only two batters and gave up all the Expos' first-inning runs. In addition to Foley's triple, Mitch Webster had a two-run single and Dann Bilardello added an RBI single.

Reds 5, Pirates 4

Eric Davis became the third player in baseball history with 20 homers and 60 stolen bases in one season when he homered twice and knocked in four runs as Cincinnati beat Pittsburgh.

Davis also helped set up the game-winning run. With the score tied 4-4 in the top of the eighth, Buddy Bell had a one-out single off losing reliever Larry McWilliams, 2-10, and went to third on Davis' hit-and-run single.

Bo Diaz walked to load the bases and reliever Buddy Jones' first pitch to Barry Larkin hit the dirt and bounced away from catcher Tony Pena, allowing Bell to score.

Earlier, Davis hit a three-run homer in the first and a solo homer, his 21st, in the seventh.

The loss snapped a four-game winning streak for the last-place Pirates and was the seventh victory in the last eight games for the Reds, who moved into a second-place tie with San Francisco.

Mets 5, Padres 2

New York extended its East Division lead to 20 games, with pinch-hitter Ray Knight singling in the go-ahead run in the top of the eighth to help beat San Diego.

With the score tied 2-2, Howard Johnson doubled off reliever Craig Lefferts, 7-5. After Rafael Santana was intentionally walked, Knight singled home Johnson and Santana also scored when left fielder Kevin McReynolds fell down fielding the ball and was charged with an error.

Jesse Orosco, 5-5, got credit for the victory although he pitched just one-third of an inning. Roger McDowell pitched the final 1⅔ innings for his 17th save.

Dodgers 3, Phillies 1

Fernando Valenzuela pitched a four-hitter to win his 16th game on his fourth try, and Mike Scioscia and Bill Madlock homered as Los Angeles knocked off visiting Philadelphia.

Valenzuela, 16-9, who struck out seven and walked two en route to his major league-leading 15th complete game, said he wasn't worried about his three-game losing streak.

"I've never had a problem," Valenzuela said. "I've lost three in a row before. That's part of the game. The difference in those games was one pitch. I pitch the same way every time."

Scioscia, who hadn't homered at Dodger Stadium since July 31 of last season, snapped 1-1 tie against Don Carman, 6-5, in the second inning with a leadoff homer to right field, his third of the season and his first since April 22. Madlock made it 3-1 with his eighth homer in the third.

Mike Schmidt gave the Phillies a 1-0 lead with a two-out single.

Braves 4, Cardinals 2

Dale Murphy's two-run, two-out double in the eighth inning helped Atlanta's David Palmer win his fifth fifth straight decision as the visiting Braves edged St. Louis.

With St. Louis leading 2-1, pinch-hitter Chris Chambliss singled, and Omar Moreno stole second after reaching base on a fielder's choice. Todd Worrell relieved Bob Forsch, 12-8, with a 2-1 count on Ken Oberkfell and completed the walk. Murphy followed with a drive to the center field wall that scored both runners.

Brown's financee drops battery charges

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The fiancee of former football star Jim Brown will not press battery charges against the Hall of Fame running back, whom she accused of hitting her during an argument, police said.

"She came in here at about one this afternoon and signed off the report," Los Angeles police Detective Jack Luther said Monday.

Debra Clark, 22, called police for help from a locked bedroom of Brown's Hollywood Hills home following an argument that began at about 3 a.m. Friday, police said.

Brown, 50, who played nine seasons with the National Football League's Cleveland Browns and later turned to acting, was arrested for investigation of spousal battery, a felony. He was freed on $5,000 bail.

Ms. Clark told police that Brown had hit her during the argument. She was treated for a bruise under her eye and another on her side.

The case had not been presented to the district attorney, Luther said.

"We hadn't finished investigating it," he said. "Before we could finish, she came in and signed off the report and said she didn't want it prosecuted."

The district attorney's office could still decide to prosecute the case, but Luther said the chances were "slim and none."

Ms. Clark's decision not to press charges is not unusual, Luther said.

Diablos hand M-Angels another loss, 7-4

From Staff Reports

EL PASO — After another 7-4 loss to the El Paso Diablos here Monday night, the Midland Angels were on their way to San Antonio for the final five games of the Texas League season.

It will be from San Antonio that the Angels will scatter across the nation with what will probably be a welcomed respite from baseball and a season that was sour on the field.

El Paso, on the other hand, won 22 of 27 games in August, including five of six here against the Angels and clinched the West Division title last week. They face Beaumont tonight while waiting for the Texas League championship series against either Shreveport or Jackson, who must play each other in an Eastern Division playoff.

Dan Scarpetta, 14-6, pitched seven innings for the victory. The Diablo lefty allowed four runs but struck out seven. Dave Stapleton earned his fifth of the season by allowing just one Angel hit in two innings.

El Paso trailed 3-1 until the fourth inning. The Diablos took the lead on hits by Jesus Alfaro, Alan Cartwright, Robbie Allen and John Gibbons. Gibbons, who had two RBIs, extended his hitting streak to 11 games.

The Angels tied the game 4-4 in the fifth inning. But El Paso took the lead for good in the sixth on a run-scoring single by catcher John Beuerlein.

In other league action, Tulsa edged Shreveport 2-1 and Jackson beat Arkansas 7-3.

Former Redskin Jerry Smith
...first pro athlete to contract AIDS

Smith reveals battle with AIDS

WASHINGTON (AP) — Jerry Smith, a former All-Pro tight end with the Washington Redskins, said he decided to reveal he's suffering from AIDS so that people who have the disease will not suffer the pain and loneliness of being ostracized, feeling they have no hope or no reason to continue to battle.

"I want people to know what I've been through and how terrible this disease is," Smith, a 13-year NFL veteran, told the Washington Post in its Tuesday editions. "Maybe it will help people understand. Maybe it will help with development in research. Maybe something positive will come out of this."

In the past year, well-known Americans such as actor Rock Hudson, lawyer Roy Cohn and fashion designer Perry Ellis have died as a result of AIDS. Smith is the first well-known professional athlete, retired or active, to suffer from the disease, according to the Post.

Smith's playing weight during his football career was 210 pounds. Now his weight is about 150 pounds and he grows weaker each day.

When asked how he contracted the disease, Smith told the Post, "it just happened. It just happened."

AIDS, or acquired immune deficiency syndrome, is said to afflict mostly homosexual men. Between 600,000 and 1.2 million Americans have been exposed to AIDS antibodies since the disease was discovered in 1981. Currently, about 24,000 Americans suffer from AIDS.

AIDS is caused by a virus called human T-cell lymphotropic virus, or HTLV-3. The virus is a killing agent, destroying the body's ability to fight disease. The virus reduces the body's infection-fighting white blood cells, allowing serious infections to develop.

Smith, although willing to discuss his struggle with the disease, would not elaborate on his lifestyle in his interview with the newspaper.

During the past eight months, he has been in and out of Holy Cross Hospital in Silver Spring, Md., and George Washington University Hospital in Washington D.C. several times.

Smith said he also attempted to get into a special program at the National Institutes of Health, but could not do so "because I did not meet the medical criteria."

He has lost weight steadily and, according to his mother, "hasn't eaten since June." Smith is being sustained intravenously and is kept comfortable by pain-killing drugs.

Murray backs off 'trade me' stance

BALTIMORE (AP) — Baltimore Orioles' first baseman Eddie Murray did use the words "trade me" during some heated moments last week, but his agent says "cooler heads" exist now and it's unlikely such a move would come to pass.

"It is clear to me that the club is not about to trade Eddie," said Ron Shapiro of the superstar who has led the Orioles in home runs and runs batted in for each of the past six seasons.

Last September, Murray signed a five-year contract, extending through the 1991 season, worth an estimated $12.7 million and containing a no-trade clause.

"Eddie expressed a feeling last week, his feeling at the time," Shapiro, who is vacationing in New Jersey, said Monday in a telephone interview. "But it has to be put in a longer-term perspective."

Apparently stung by the public criticism of team owner Edward Bennett Williams at a time he was trying to make more of a somewhat frustrating season, Murray confronted General Manager Hank Peters with his demand last Friday.

"I think the man walked into Hank Peters' office and said some things, including the words, 'Trade Me,'" Shapiro said.

But "we have not put that in a formal request mode, though," he said.

When the words "trade me" were spoken, "There was a lot of frustration in Eddie ... justifiable frustration," Shapiro said.

"Eddie is a man with an open mind, but he had an open wound, and he reacted to it," Shapiro said. "People have feelings; Eddie expressed his. His feelings come from a lack of communication. He believes the press is telling him what he should and shouldn't do.

"He thought Mr. Williams' comments should have gone to him first, not the newspaper. From that came what he said and what he did. But we're not at a stage of fait accompli — far from it. I know after Mr. Williams talks with Eddie, that's where the resolution will take place," Peters said.

"As I spoke to Eddie this morning, I felt cooler heads existed," he said.

Shapiro said Murray is willing to wait until the club returns from its West Coast road trip on Sept. 4 before sitting down with Williams.

Tech's Hastings injured

LUBBOCK (AP) — Texas Tech linebacker Brad Hastings must sit out for three or four weeks to recover from arthroscopic surgery he underwent to repair torn cartilage in his right knee, school officials said.

The 6-foot-3, 235-pound senior from Arlington injured his knee during a Saturday night scrimmage, Tech said.

Texas Tech is scheduled to meet Kansas State in a Sept. 6 opener and Miami on Sept. 13.

"A lot depends on how hard he works as to when he will get back," said head coach David McWilliams.

Eagles 'fumble' famed lineman

Associated Press

Herman Edwards, whose recovery of "The Fumble" cost an opposing head coach and his offensive coordinator their jobs, got too old to do his job any longer for the Philadelphia Eagles.

Ironically, Edwards, who played cornerback for the Eagles for nine years, will be remembered almost as frequently — albeit bitterly — by New York Giants' fans, who watched in horror in 1978 as he returned a fumble that never should have been for a game-winning touchdown.

"But he got old and he can't do it anymore," Coach Buddy Ryan said Monday in explaining why he waived the 32-year-old Edwards, whom he praised for his contributions to the team.

"He had all the things that you look for in a football player. He was a positive leader, had a good attitude and experience," Ryan said.

"The Fumble" came as the Giants were leading the Eagles 12-10 with just 31 seconds left and needed only to fall on the ball to win. Instead, quarterback Joe Pisarcik missed connections with fullback Larry Csonka on a handoff, the ball came loose, Edwards picked it out of the air and ran 26 yards for a touchdown.

Offensive coordinator Bob Gibson, who called the play, was fired before the next game, and Head Coach John McVay was let go at the end of the season.

All NFL teams, now limited to 60 players, must be down to 50 by 4 p.m. EDT today. The final cut to 45 comes next week.

Saints

Veteran quarterback Richard Todd, who spent eight seasons with the New York Jets before moving to New Orleans in 1984, got the ax from the Saints.

Todd, whom New Orleans obtained from the Jets for its first-round draft choice in 1984, lost his starting job last season.

"Richard is a good quarterback who competed hard to be our number one quarterback," Saints Coach Jim Mora said. "However, at this time I felt that Bobby Hebert and Dave Wilson fit better into our plans than Richard did."

Bengals

With the waiving of running back Charles Alexander, the entire starting backfield for Cincinnati's 1982 Super Bowl team is gone with the exception of quarterback Ken Anderson, who is now a backup.

The Bengals reduced their roster to 51 by placing eight players on waivers, including Alexander, a seven-year veteran who was the Bengals' first-round draft choice from LSU in 1979.

The Bengals also announced they placed running back Stanley Wilson on injured reserve. Wilson, who is attempting to come back from an 18-month drug abuse suspension, is recovering from knee surgery.

Jets

New York thought it made a steal by taking offensive tackle Doug Williams — projected as a middle-to-high first-round pick — in the second round.

But the Jets, who had hoped Williams and first-round choice Mike Haight of Iowa would help solve their offensive line problems, cut the 6-foot-5, 290-pounder from Texas A&M.

The Jets also cut their tight end Glenn Dennison, a former second-round pick, and last year's third-round choice, cornerback Donnie Elder.

NFL Cuts

Bears

Veteran wide receiver Brian Baschnagel, one of the Chicago's top receivers and kick returners in the team's leaner years, said he had "no regrets" after being cut.

"I knew it would be difficult making this team," said Baschnagel, who sat out the Bears' Super Bowl season after knee surgery. "The people who are important in this organization felt I was too old."

Coach Mike Ditka indicated last week that Baschnagel was close to being cut because of his age, 32, and because of the number of young wide receivers in training camp.

Baschnagel's best year was 1981, when he caught 34 passes for 554 yards and three touchdowns. A third-round draft pick from Ohio State in 1976, Baschnagel was a leading tackler on special teams. But he had caught only 11 passes since 1982.

Packers

Green Bay cut defensive end Jackie Cline and linebacker John Joyce, both former USFL players. They came to camp late and never played in a preseason game.

"Two things I really regret," Packers Coach Forrest Gregg said. "We didn't have the opportunity to see Jackie Cline and John Joyce in ballgames because of a numbers situation. But their two-game roster exemption is up."

Dolphins

Miami axed veteran return specialist and third-down receiver Tommy Vigorito, who showed flashes of brilliance in in 1982, hurt his knee a year later and missed almost two full seasons.

Owner says decision imminent on Frontier Airlines

DENVER (AP) — Frontier Airlines remained grounded today, its employees in limbo, as its owner said a decision is imminent on whether the carrier would be sold or protected under the U.S. Bankruptcy Code.

Donald C. Burr, chairman of People Express, the Newark, N.J.-based carrier which owns Frontier, said late Monday a decision to file bankruptcy was being postponed until today to explore other possible alternatives.

"The decision to seek relief under the bankruptcy code, with the consequent disruption of the lives of thousands of Frontier employees, is a most difficult one," Burr said in a statement. "Accordingly, we are looking at every possible other alternative before Frontier takes that step."

People Express spokesman Russell Marchetta said Frontier would not resume operations once it filed for bankruptcy protection.

Frontier, the nation's 15th-largest airline, shut down operations Sunday morning. People Express said Frontier has lost $10 million a month for the past six months and had run out of money.

The closure idled nearly 4,700 Frontier workers in 55 U.S. cities west of Chicago and four Canadian cities, and left about 17,000 passengers a day scrambling for seats on other airlines.

United Airlines agreed in July to buy Frontier from People Express for $146 million but the sale hinged on United reaching labor agreements with Frontier's unions.

Negotiations between United and the Air Line Pilots Association have concerned salary differences between United and Frontier pilots. United and ALPA couldn't agree on when Frontier pilots would receive the same salaries as United pilots, said United spokesman Matthew Gonring.

Joe Hopkins, a United spokesman, said a Boeing 737 captain at Frontier makes about $68,000 a year compared to $115,000 at United. United wanted to close the gap in five years; ALPA asked for about four years in its last proposal, Hopkins said.

Meanwhile, directors of People Express met in Newark on Monday to consider reducing the $146 million price United agreed to pay.

Talks in Chicago between United and its members of ALPA were suspended after several hours of meetings.

United's 6,400-member ALPA group has the right to approve any agreement with United on how the 550 Frontier pilots will be merged into United's higher pay scale.

Jamie Lindsay, an ALPA spokesman, said meetings on Monday between lawyers for Frontier, People Express and United did not involve the unions.

"Labor is not involved at all," Lindsay said. Lindsay was referring to negotiations regarding purchase of the airline, not possible future discussions on merging the United and Frontier personnel.

Rep. Tim Wirth, D-Colo., met with about 400 teary-eyed Frontier workers at Stapleton International Airport Monday and said the proposed sale to United was not dead.

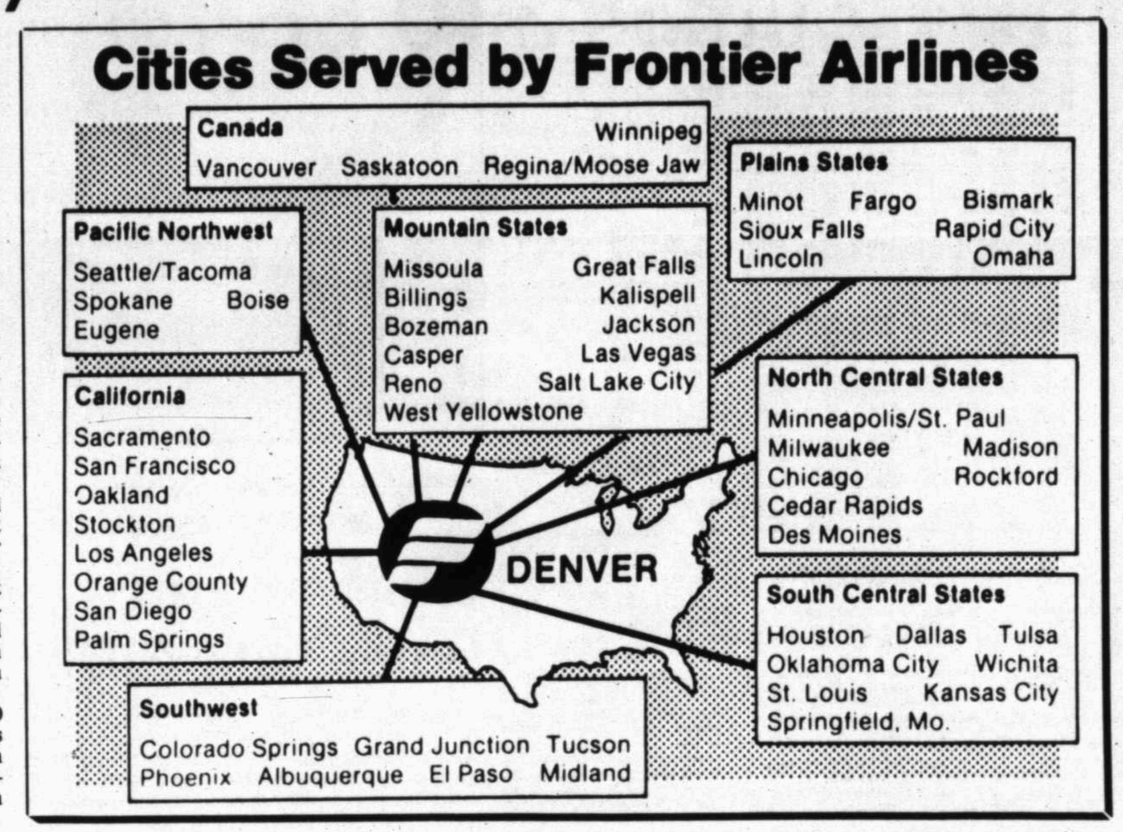

Wirth said the sale must be put together in the next 48 hours.

"There's a slim chance we can still put it together," Wirth said. "The odds are long. But I've seen nine runs scored in the ninth inning."

Wirth said Frontier's apparent demise was due to a combination of events. Economics, labor and deregulation of air carriers all led to Frontier's problems, he said.

"There are no villains in this," Wirth said.

"It's not over yet," he added. "The fat lady hasn't sung yet."

Britain would welcome informal talks with OPEC

LONDON (UPI) — A spokesman for Britain's Department of Energy Monday said his country, the key independent oil producer, would welcome informal talks with OPEC on the cartel's efforts to prop up sagging oil prices, the OPEC news agency reported.

But the spokesman said formal negotiations between Britain and OPEC members at the government-to-government level has been ruled out.

Britain, the prime target of OPEC's eight-month pricing war, has repeatedly refused to join forces with the 13-nation cartel to reverse the oil price collapse.

Late last year, the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries began flooding the already glutted market in a bid to force outside producers — primarily Britain and Norway — to scale back production and help salvage prices.

On Aug. 5 OPEC agreed to lower its output by nearly 4 million barrels to about 16.8 million barrels a day for two months beginning Sept. 1 and called on non-OPEC members to restrain their production.

The spokesman said British Energy Secretary Peter Walker would welcome informal talks with OPEC President Rilwanu Lukman of Nigeria and Kuwaiti Oil Minister Sheikh Ali Khalifa al-Sabah, who are due in Britain this fall.

Tipperary Corp. posts loss

From Staff Reports

Midland-based Tipperary Corp. reports a net loss of $734,000 on operating income of $694,000 for the third quarter ended June 30, 1986.

This compares to a loss of $2.3 million for the same quarter in 1985. Revenues for the current quarter were $5.1 million, down from $10.8 million a year ago. The company lists assets of $36.3 million, down from $127.7 million a year ago. Tipperary also lists current liabilities at $44.1 million, as compared to liabilities of $22.7 million a year ago. Debt, less current maturities, is down to $25.5 million from $64.8 million last year.

For the nine months ended June 30, 1986, Tipperary shows revenues of $22.3 million, down from $35.4 million for the same period last year. Net loss for the first three quarters of 1986 has risen to $57.4 million, compared to $5.2 million for the first three quarters of 1985. This translates to a loss of $2.03 per share for the first nine months of 1986, up from $.41 for the first nine months of 1985. For the third quarter of 1986, per share loss is $.03, down from $.17 per share for the third quarter a year ago.

James D. Ross, president, and Deane H. Stoltz, chairman of the board, wrote in their letter to the shareholders that the company is continuing to work with its primary creditors to restructure its debt "in a manner that will permit us to continue to operate in the current worldwide pricing environment. Our lead bank and some large noteholders have expressed interest in working with us to find a viable solution."

At the same time, the executives noted that they were having discussions with several prospective investment groups to interest them in making a cash investment in Tipperary. However, they warned that the company will file for protection under the U.S. Bankruptcy Code if all other negotiations fail.

"We still believe in a better day for the country and the industry," they stated in their letter. "If successful, the present OPEC agreement could be a positive start towards a healthier pricing structure."

Texans excused from fraud case

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — State District Judge H. Richard Blackhurst has dismissed two Texas men from a criminal case involving the operation of the defunct State Savings and Loan Association of Clovis.

W.W. "Doc" Taylor of Dallas, and Joe T. Boyd of Odessa, Texas, were denied their right to a speedy trial, the judge ruled Monday.

The two men had been charged with fraud and conspiracy stemming from the operation of the Clovis financial institution, which was declared insolvent and closed its doors on Nov. 3, 1983.

Blackhurst's ruling is the second time charges against Taylor and Boyd have been dismissed.

A Curry County indictment was dismissed in October 1984 because of grand jury irregularities. But the attorney general's office refiled the charges in May 1985.

Blackhurst ruled that the seven-month period of time between the dismissal and refiling of the charges "is inadequately explained by the state and delay is attributed to the state for that period."

Five investors, including Taylor and Boyd, originally were charged in an 18-count indictment alleging they defrauded the federal government by devising a scheme to continue Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp. backing of an insolvent savings association.

Blackhurst found insufficient evidence to try Hobbs lawyer Glen Houston and Randolph Shipley of Laguna Beach, Calif., on the charges.

And on Aug. 7, Blackhurst dismissed charges against Hollis Grissom, former president of the thrift. Hollis had been charged with one count of violating New Mexico's Savings and Loan Act.

Attorney General Paul Bardacke will decide whether to appeal Blackhurst's Monday ruling, an assistant said.

PBPA backs limiting fees

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Business/Oil Writer

The Permian Basin Petroleum Association (PBPA) has taken the first in a number of steps toward a pre-emptive strike against increased fees and operating costs which could face the oil industry.

The group's executive committee adopted a recommendation to endorse a $10,000 per well upfront bonding requirement (up to 10 wells) and a $100,000 'blanket' bond for operators with more than 10 wells. Bonds are required to cover the future cost of plugging a well once it becomes no longer economical to produce.

"Upfront bonding does nothing to solve the current problem of the high number of unplugged abandoned wells, but it will put a cap on the growth of the problem," explains Joyce Studlar, chairman of the PBPA Regulatory Subcommittee, which proposed the executive committee make the recommendation to the group's board of directors.

However, Studlar notes, the Texas Railroad Commission and the state Legislature are expected to take some actions to stem future plugging problems and solve the current overload of unplugged wells. Among the fund raising proposals thought to be under consideration at the TRC are: raising drilling permit fees by as much as $625; increasing severance taxes; instituting an annual fee for inactive wells; or, possibly requiring the plugging costs to be deposited, in cash, into an escrow account at the time of completion.

The TRC states that there is a definite need for at least $25 million in additional plugging funds, with a possible need for $250 million and has estimated a 'worst case' scenario of $1 billion in additional funds required to plug abandoned wells.

In addition to the bonding recommendation, the executive committee proposal urges the TRC to consider no more than a $150 increase in drilling permit fees.

In voicing opposition to the proposal, PBPA executive committee member and Midland gas consultant Hans Hansen said that any additional fees on the oil industry at this time can only further cripple an ailing industry.

"While not endorsing any increase in fees, it may be easier to introduce lower numbers, such as the $150, before the TRC staff sets forth its proposed fee changes. Once numbers get attached to proposals, it is often much more difficult to get them reduced," noted Grant Billingsley, Regulatory Subcommittee member and public affairs director for Midland-based Wagner & Brown, in support of the recommendation.

The executive committee's recommendation will be presented to the group's board of directors at their next meeting, Sept. 16 at the Big Spring Country Club.

In other business, the committee finalized arrangements for its participation in the biennial Permian Basin Oil Show in Odessa in mid-October. Also, the group voted to continue its cooperative effort with other regional oil and gas associations to employ former State Representative Joe Hanna as a state legislative watchdog and lobbyist.

The committee voted to evaluate the possibilities to add offering group insurance coverage to PBPA members as an added benefit of membership.

Committee members were also briefed on recent national developments at the Independent Petroleum Association of America and its recent productive meetings with influential White House staff members and President Reagan.

Oct. 2 is the date for a PBPA-sponsored luncheon and debate by 21st District congressional candidates Pete Snelson and Lamar Smith. The event will take place at the Holiday Inn Country Villa in Midland.

Fewer wells capped under new well rules

AUSTIN (UPI) — The plugging of inactive oil wells has dropped 18 percent since the Texas Railroad Commission extended the period for capping wells from 90 days to one year, commission Chairman James Nugent said Monday.

The commission temporarily extended the period from 90 days to one year in March, and earlier this month made the rule change permanent.

The move was aimed at bolstering the state's depressed oil and gas industry.

"The policy appears to be working to save hundreds of wells in the state from premature abandonment," said Nugent. "Hopefully, this action will continue that favorable trend."

Nugent said the rule change buys time for the financially-strapped operators of marginal wells while also protecting Texas' oil reserves.

"Postponing the plugging decision saves thousands of barrels of oil," he said. "Once plugged, the cost of re-entering these wells makes it unlikely they would ever produce again."

Nugent said the state's 142,000 stripper wells — those that produce 10 barrels a day or less — benefit the most from the extended plugging deadline.

Stripper wells produce about 420,000 barrels a day — about 19 percent of Texas' total daily production of 2.17 million barrels.

Nugent said the extended deadline does not mean the commission is backing off its enforcement of fresh water pollution laws.

"Any well with pollution is still subject to be plugged," he said.

Stock market tumbles, auto sales decline

Associated Press

A 10.4 percent mid-August sales decline for General Motors Corp. pulled down overall figures for the domestic auto industry despite good performances by Ford Motor Co. and Chrysler Corp.

Total domestic auto sales for the Aug. 11-20 period slipped 1.3 percent from the year-earlier period, the carmakers said Monday.

Ford, the No. 2 U.S. automaker, said its sales were up 20.3 percent, and No. 3 Chrysler had a 10 percent increase.

In other economic news Monday:

—The stock market took a tumble on investor uncertainty over the direction of the economy and some profit-taking following recent strong gains. The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials fell 16.03 points to 1871.77.

—Interest rates on short-term Treasury securities dropped about one-third percentage point to the lowest level in nine years. The Treasury sold $7.82 billion in three-month bills at an average discount rate of 5.32 percent.

—Wells Fargo Bank, 10th largest bank in the United States, dropped its prime rate from 8 percent to 7.5 percent Monday, the first major U.S. bank to do so following a cut last week in a key rate set by the federal government.

—Americans sold homes at a healthy annual rate of 3.45 million last month, the National Association of Realtors said. Sales increased 1.8 percent in July after declining the previous two months.

—The University of Michigan released a study showing that three of four American families are optimistic about buying homes and cars, as low interest rates have raised buying attitudes to their highest level in at least 40 years.

The seven major U.S. automakers said they sold 200,282 cars during the nine official selling days in mid-August, compared with 180,446 in eight selling days during the comparable period last year.

A comparison based on daily selling rates yielded the 1.3 percent decrease. Analyst David Healy of Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. in New York said the numbers didn't look too bad.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

'T' bills of 26-, 52-weeks defers interest tax a year

BY BILL DOYLE

Q. We had a substantial capital gain on a payment received this year. As a result, our 1986 income tax bill will be quite large and I would like to keep it from getting even larger. I want to put our money into 26-week U.S. Treasury bills, so that the T bill interest will be taxable for 1987, when our total income will be lower.

I have tried to explain this to my husband and have shown him on paper that it would save us $2,000 in income tax. But he thinks getting higher interest on a bank certificate of deposit is better. May we have your opinion?

A. You're correct about postponing the tax on interest by purchasing T bills due next year. You collect T bill interest when the T bill matures and federal income tax is due on that interest at that time.

Doyle

T bills come with maturities of 13, 26 and 52 weeks. So, by buying either 26- or 52-week T bills now, you won't have to pay income tax on the interest until you file your 1987 return or make quarterly estimated tax payments.

Considering your overall income situation, deferring tax on interest for a year is a smart move.

However, you can accomplish the same thing with some — not all — CDs. On a CD with a maturity of no more than one year, on which interest is not to be credited until maturity and which has a substantial early withdrawal penalty, income tax on the interest is due for the year in which the CD matures.

If you put your money into a CD with the above provisions and which matures next year, tax on the interest will be due for 1987.

Your husband has a point, because CDs usually pay slightly higher interest than T bills with similar maturities. If you go the CD route, make sure it has the provisions mentioned above. Most banks offer such CDs.

Q. I had two U.S. Treasury bonds in "bearer" form. Wanting to sell them, I went to the local office of a very large brokerage firm. The broker I spoke to refused to sell the bonds for me. He said it is his firm's policy NEVER to handle bearer bonds.

I phoned another brokerage firm and was told to bring the bonds in and open an account. That broker said the bonds would be sent to New York City and, after four days, I could sell them.

Why would one brokerage house refuse to handle the sale under any circumstances, while another implies it's no problem?

A. Because many brokerages have been stuck by sharpies with stolen bearer bonds. Unlike a "registered bond," which has the owner's name printed on it and on the record books of the issuer, a bearer bond has no permanent record of ownership. Technically, it's payable to the "bearer" — whoever has possession of the bond certificate.

The first brokerage house, which you named in your letter, is ultracautious. The second sent your bonds in to be checked for "stops" placed against stolen and/or lost bond certificates.

The broker at the first firm fractured the line from the old song: "Never say never." Along with many other brokerages, that firm won't sell bearer bonds for "walk-in" customers, or even for established clients who bought those bonds elsewhere. But it will sell bearer bonds bought through that brokerage house by customers who have confirmation statements of their purchases.

Q. I am retired and have $500,000 to invest. I would like to receive $4,000 after-tax monthly income from this amount, without any risk of reducing the principal. What do you suggest?

A. That you be more realistic. You're looking for a 9.6 percent yield — even before taxes. There's no way you can get that kind of income, without taking on some risk.

With your bundle of money, a sensible choice would be U.S. Treasury securities, which are considered the world's safest investments. But Treasury notes due to mature in five years currently are yielding just a bit more than 7.3 percent.

You'll have to either pare your income expectations or invest in something where risk is involved.

Second grader only 35

CHRISNEY, Ind. (AP) — Yong Duckworth is entering the second grade. It's enough to make her husband and baby son proud.

The 35-year-old woman, a native of South Korea, attended first-grade classes last year to learn English and enjoyed the experience so much she plans to enter second grade in the fall.

When the Duckworths moved to Chrisney last year, she approached the elementary school principal about finding a tutor. He suggested she might want to come to school.

Mrs. Duckworth said she was especially motivated by her young son.

"Some day he go to school. He ask me things and I don't want to be embarassed," she said.

Mrs. Duckworth hasn't had to shop for school supplies this summer because she still has the crayons, glue, scissors and pencils she bought for first grade.

Officials: Odessa's drug problem serious

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Through the first seven months of this year Crime Stoppers tips led to the confiscation of nearly $500,000 worth of illegal drugs and Odessa police made 179 arrests on narcotics-related offenses.

The offenses ranged from possession of narcotics paraphernalia to possession of drugs with intent to distribute to the manufacture of illegal drugs.

Deputy Police Chief Jim Dodson and Ector County Sheriff Bob Brookshire both agree that the area has a serious illegal drug problem. Both also agree that their departments lack sufficient personnel to have much impact on illegal drug traffic.

Sgt. Jack White, head of the Odessa Police Department's narcotics unit, estimates city and county narcotics officers manage to "seize maybe a 10th of what's coming through" the area.

Based just on the amount of illegal drugs confiscated as a result of Crime Stoppers tips through July of this year, White estimates the value of illicit drugs being smuggled into the area at between $5,000,000 and $10,000,000 annually.

He believes that may be a very conservative estimate, but no one really knows for sure.

Ector County Sheriff's Narcotics Investigator Jim Dickson says there is "a hell of a demand" for illegal drugs in the Odessa area and that, because of undermanned narcotics units in the sheriff's and police department, "anybody can smuggle drugs into the Odessa area and get away with it."

WHITE AND Dickson each agree that it is reasonable to describe Odessa as a "drug hub." As Dickson explains, Odessa is centrally located, which makes it a good point for shipment of illegal drugs to other parts of the country.

White says there is a significant demand for illegal drugs from residents of communities in the immediate area.

Noting he was raised in the area, White says it amazes him occasionally when he's required to arrest someone for dealing drugs that he's known for many years. But it has happened, he says.

As to Odessa being a distribution center, a drug hub, for illegal drugs, White recalls a couple of drug dealers from New York who came to the area to pick up a load of drugs and were subsequently arrested.

"People up there know about Odessa," he says. "Odessa is well known in the drug trade."

White says he's spent five years in narcotics and that he's seen "a definite increase" in the amount of drug traffic in the area. He terms the increase "unbelieveable."

Through July of this year, he says, Odessa police narcotics officers have processed 247 misdemeanor and felony drug cases, compared to 205 through the same period last year.

Dickson and White agree that Mexican brown heroin and marijuana smuggling are major problems and Dickson says cocaine is becoming a problem.

White says the Mexican brown heroin that used to be smuggled in was in powder form. Now, he says, it is brown chunks, or black tar, which is brown heroin in its purest form.

He says this can be "stepped on" (cut with additives) at least five times and that each ounce of this cut heroin has a street value of $36,000 to $40,000.

DICKSON SAYS Mexican brown heroin has been known in the area for at least four years. It's just shown up in the Detroit, Mich., area in the last year or so, he says.

According to Dickson, heroin is the primary drug of choice among area Hispanic users, while cocaine use is about equal between Anglos and Hispanics.

An increasing favorite illegal drug mix is heroin and cocaine, which is called a "speedball." Dickson says some cocaine users are getting away from "snorting coke" (inhaling) and are going to a liquid form of the drug and injecting it directly into their veins.

Concerning the contention by some that illegal narcotics use is a "victimless crime," Dickson says the cost is passed on to everyone because people with drug habits that cost hundreds, even thousands, of dollars a day can only get the money by stealing and robbing. The cost of these habits, he says, is reflected in the prices we pay for whatever we buy.

And, Dickson says, "Don't let anyone tell you marijuana use is harmless. Most everyone now using hard drugs started out using marijuana."

Asked about periodic reports from parents, who say their kids tell them they can "buy anything they want at school," Dickson said there is a problem in the schools, mostly marijuana. But, he said, dealers have begun using school age children to distribute illegal narcotics because if juveniles get caught all they get is a "slap on the wrist."

As to drug dealers in the area, Dickson says there are at least five known major illegal drug distributors law enforcement officers haven't been able to get so far.

A major drug dealer, who lives in Ojinaga, Mexico, has relatives in Odessa and has an extensive smuggling organization, Dickson says. The dealer is well known by law enforcement agencies throughout the country, but no one has been able to catch him yet.

"THE ONLY way to stop, or at least reduce, drug trafficking," Dickson says, "is to put more narcs on the street."

Dickson is one of two men in the sheriff's department who work narcotics full time. White is authorized to have four narcotics officers but is operating shorthanded with only two, plus himself, at the present time.

Deputy Chief Dodson takes exception to the use of the term "drug hub" to describe drug trafficking in Odessa.

"It's pretty serious," he says, "but many other places of comparable size are also potential distribution centers. However, we have our fair share," he acknowledges.

Sheriff Brookshire says the drug hub phrase comes "pretty close" to describing the seriousness of the problem in Odessa and Ector County.

"We've got a big problem," he says, estimating that around 85 to 90 percent of the crime occurring in the county is drug-related; people stealing or robbing to support their expensive drug habits.

And, Brookshire says, "I'm thoroughly convinced we're going to see an increase. As long as there's big money (in drug smuggling) they're going to keep on."

Part of the problem in trying to combat drug trafficking in the area, Brookshire says, is the sheer size and geography of the area.

"There's lots of back roads, pastures and out-of-the-way airstrips."

Using a hypothetical situation, Brookshire says, "Imagine you're a hardup farmer with an airstrip, or pasture land that can be used for one, and somebody comes up and says 'I'll give you $5,000 to use your airstrip for one night,' what would you do?" the sheriff asks.

DISTRICT ATTORNEY Eric Augesen has estimated that as much as 90 percent of the crime that occurs in Ector County is drug-related.

In an effort to explore the problem, the foreman of the current grand jury, Jim Richards, has asked Augesen, Brookshire, Police Chief Alan Stewart, 244th District Judge Joe Connally and County Judge Jan Fisher to meet with grand jurors.

In a letter to Judge Fisher, Richards said, "It has been made increasingly clear that our community is facing a serious problem involving the traffic in illegal drugs."

Richards went on to say, "It's well known in the drug business that Odessa is known as the hub for the drug business in this part of the country."

"If the word on the street is that Odessa is a drug hub, then we want the word on the street to be don't come here. We don't want to be a drug center."

Richards has indicated the session with officials would entail no action, but would be a discussion of the problem.

Augesen said, given the makeup of the current grand jury, the action did not surprise him. He noted that several grand jurors have been heavily involved as volunteers in alcohol and drug abuse programs.

Richards had initially sought to have grand jurors meet with local county and city officials today, but Judge Fisher and other Commissioners Court members were scheduled to be in Austin for a civil lawsuit filed against the county. Trial of the suit is expected to last most of the week.

The meeting with grand jurors has been delayed until the county judge returns.

Local Frontier official 'losing hope' for pact between United, pilots

By JANE DEES
Staff Writer

Though reports say bankruptcy proceedings have been delayed until today, United Airlines and its pilots have still not reached an agreement and a Midland Frontier Airlines employee said he's losing optimism.

"Honestly, I'm losing hope. I try to be very optimistic, but we still can't determine anything at this time," the employee said.

The employee, the manager of the Denver-based Frontier Airlines office at Midland Regional Airport, asked not to be named.

People Express shut down Frontier, the nation's 15th largest-airline, Sunday, saying the subsidiary had run out of money. During the past six months, Frontier had lost $60 million while People Express lost $132.5 million.

United Airlines agreed in July to buy Frontier from People Express for $146 million, but the sale hinged on United reaching agreements with both United and Frontier pilots, which were at a stalemate as of Monday night.

The manager said it's been irritating to him to see the delay blamed on Frontier pilots.

"It's not the Frontier pilots who can't reach agreement with United — it's the United pilots.

"Their (present United pilots) union contracts come up for negotiations in 18 months. They want all the pilots in their union (United and newly acquired Frontier pilots) to have parity of income so the group as a whole will be in a better position to bargain for new contracts," the manager said.

Reports show that at present, a Frontier pilot makes $47,000 less a year than a United pilot, whose base salary is about $115,000 annually.

Although the shaky financial status of Frontier was common knowledge, the manager said the Sunday shutdown came as a surprise.

"We got the call at about 3 a.m. Sunday morning. They told us to go down to the airport (Midland Regional Airport) and get things done.

"I'm getting instructions from Frontier on a daily basis, but what they are is not really for public information at this time," the manager said.

People Express Inc., which bought Frontier just nine months ago for $300 million, had said bankruptcy proceedings would begin Monday, but delayed making a decision until today, the Associated Press reported.

There was "no movement on either side toward breaking the stalemate," but a filing would be delayed until today while alternatives were examined, Donald C. Burr, chairman of People Express Inc. said in a statement.

Midland Regional Airport Frontier employees said they are hoping for the United buyout and, for the time being, are still on Frontier Airline's pay scale.

"At least I hope so," the manager said.

Cutbacks threaten funds for Sheriff's Office computer

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

The county Monday accepted 10 bids for a Sheriff Department computer that may not be purchased because of budget cutbacks, said Sheriff Gary Painter.

"With the economic slowdown it appears we may have to back out altogether," Painter said.

Bids on the computer's software and hardware system ranged from $94,375 to $265,112. The county may award a bid by September 22.

The computer would be used by the sheriff's department to store jail and criminal investigation facts and figures, Painter said.

"We have 20,000 jail files. We've got to have something to store the information. We need to make it more accessible."

The computer would also allow the department to store records it is required to keep by state law, he said.

"We're running out of room for storage of files that we're required to keep by the state."

Originally the new computer was to be paid for over a five-year period, Painter said.

First fund-raiser for KOCV garners $14,000

From Staff Reports

The first of three fund-raising events by KOCV-Channel 36 has garnered more than $14,000, and television station officials say they are optimistic about reaching their goal of $100,000 by March.

"We had already raised $7,000 before we went into the membership drive. We think that by next month we'll probably be over the $20,000 mark. That's one-quarter of the way there. I'm confident we'll be able to raise the $100,000," said John McCarroll, the public television station's general manager.

The station conducted the first of three membership drives from August 16 to Sunday. The other drives are planned for December and March.

"We knew there were people who were having tough times economically. We knew we wouldn't get the level of support we would have gotten two to three years ago. But people would call and they'd say 'I can't join, but I'd like to give $5 or $10,' " McCarroll said.

Memberships were sold for $30 and $15 for senior citizens. The largest single donation was $500, McCarroll said.

Along with the $14,000 raised, the station expects to bring in about $2,500 more through matching funds donated by corporations such as Chevron, Mobil and Southwestern Bell who match employee contributions.

"I'm really optimistic with the matching funds and the money we've gotten already," said Gloria Munson, volunteer membership director.

KOCV replaced the Dallas-based public television station, KERA-Channel 13, on June 1 in Odessa and July 1 in Midland.

McCarroll said he expects the next two fund-raising events to raise more money.

"August is traditionally the worst month for all public TV stations because there is so much daylight and no one watches much TV in the summer because of reruns."

Ms. Munson agreed that the next two fund-raisers would probably garner more money.

"Historically the fall fund-raising drive is the slowest. Also it's our first drive and people are just now getting to know us," she said.

Judge says he'll choose words carefully next time

EL PASO (AP) — El Paso County Judge Pat O'Rourke says he will choose his words more carefully when giving orders in the future.

After a two-hour hearing Monday, a peace justice dismissed a disorderly conduct complaint filed against O'Rourke by private security guard Johnnie Dopson.

Dopson, 27, alleged O'Rourke had used profanity two months ago during a confrontation at Ascarte Park.

The guard says he didn't recognize the county judge, who was wearing shorts and sunglasses and was riding a bicycle.

After the decision by Justice of the Peace Tom Rosas, O'Rourke quickly apologized to Dopson and shook his hand.

"In giving an order, I should use my vocabulary in a better way," O'Rourke said. "I've learned my lessson — choose my vocabulary more thoughtfully."

"I wanted to show him a point, that you can talk to people in different ways, using other language," Dopson said. "When you're in the public you have to watch what you say and how you act."

Connecticut couple places ad in Texas papers for baby

WACO (AP) — When Bill and Marian decided to adopt a baby, they followed the lead of a growing number of people across the nation.

They took out a classified ad.

The Connecticut couple, working from a list supplied by an attorney, recently picked out about 20 cities across Texas, including Waco. Then in the newspaper section most associate with used cars and garage sales, they put in an ad for a baby.

Two similar advertisements ran beside the one that Bill and Marian — both of whom are in their late 30s, articulate and college-educated — took out in the Waco Tribune-Herald on Aug. 17.

But why is the "baby chase" spreading to newspaper advertising's bargain basement?

"It works," says Laurel Strassberger, a volunteer with Families Adopting Children Everywhere, a group that dispenses information on private adoption.

"My first reaction was, 'How gross!' But I've gotten used to it," she said. "It seems viable once you get past the commercialism. A couple needs a child; a mother needs to place her child; and the child needs a home. It serves everyone."

One of the tricks to placing a successful classified baby ad, advocates say, is to advertise in rural towns rather than cities. For best results, though, they recommend advertising in any place that has a college.

Bill and Marian, who asked the Tribune-Herald not to use their last name, have received an average of one phone call a day since they placed their ads in Texas newspapers.

They says they chose Texas because it allows private adoptions. The couple's home state does not.

"We can have a finalized adoption there and bring the baby back to Connecticut," Marian said. "Our state is perfectly well-pleased with the adoption at that point."

Couples who want to adopt babies are trying new ways to find them because of the delays they encounter at adoption agencies. It can take years just to get on an agency list. Once there, it can take several more years to get a baby, and some couples end up waiting more than 10 years.

The National Committee for Adoption, which urges couples to adopt through agencies, estimates that 2 million couples each year want to adopt a baby. Somewhere between 50,000 and 80,000 couples do.

That has led to an unquantified black market, but "for the most part, couples are very careful to follow the law," Ms. Strassberger said.

"There's a simple reason for that," she added. "When they want to tell the child how the adoption came about, most people would rather not say, 'I bought you on a parking lot.'"

Placing an ad for a baby is illegal in Connecticut, Massachusetts, Delaware, Michigan, Minnesota and North Dakota.

States that do allow ads for babies restrict the flow of money between couples and a pregnant woman or "birth mother," as she is commonly called in the adoption field.

Couples may offer to pay medical expenses, hospitalization, rent and — in some states, but not Texas — compensation for lost wages to a birth mother in return for being allowed to adopt her baby.

If a couple goes beyond these financial limits in Texas and offers a birth mother "a thing of value" for her baby, they can be convicted of a third-degree felony.

Attorney Lucille Rosenstock of Rosenstock & Lowe in Blauvelt, N.Y., said it costs her clients between $5,000 to $10,000, counting the classified ad bills, to adopt a baby.

Amish come to Texas as hired hands, to save money for farms

GONZALES (AP) — The straw-hatted Amish migrating to Texas come as hired hands, hoping to save up enough money to buy farmland for themselves and for their children.

West of Dallas, around Stephenville and Dublin, the bearded followers of Jakob Ammann are working as contract dairymen.

In Gonzales and Lockhart east of San Antonio, and in Boling near Bay City, they tend the turkeys and broilers on poultry farms.

"It's hard to make a living farming. Everybody's trying to farm," said Kenneth Knepp, 26, who came to Gonzales four years ago from an Amish settlement near Jamesport, Mo.

"You've got to go in debt to start, and then you stay in debt. I guess we're here because we found the job," he said.

Knepp is the head of one of three families totaling 25 people now working for Fred Koricanek, who raises 100,000 hens and a third as many turkeys outside Gonzales.

"We're here trying to save up some money to buy land somewhere else. Just trying to get ahead," Knepp said.

According to William Kuvlesky, a professor at Texas A&M University who has studied the Amish in Texas for the past four years, there are about 35 families among three main settlements, and all are here for the same reason as Knepp.

"They all come to accumulate as much capital as they can as fast as they can," Kuvlesky said. "Although many people don't know this, many Amish are poor. The majority are just subsisting. They have trouble holding onto their farms and buying farms for the young men."

The first families came in the summer of 1980 to work as contract labor on a poultry ranch in Smiley, south of Gonzales. Eventually that settlement dissolved, with some families moving back to Tennessee and others to Gonzales. The other settlements soon followed and have remained fairly intact, Kuvlesky said.

Those who have come to Texas are Old Order Amish, the descendants of a conservative group founded in the 17th century in Europe under the leadership of Jakob Ammann. The Amish began migrating to North America early in the next century, initially settling in eastern Pennsylvania.

Today the largest settlements are found in Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana. Smaller communities exist in other states and, all told, they number about 100,000.

The Amish dress simply, shun modern conveniences and often decline to enroll their children in public schools.

"All of these homes they get have electricity in them, which, of course, none of their homes in their traditional communities have," Kuvlesky said. "The same thing is true of telephones. They view it as temporary and see it as part of the house that's presented to them. It's part of the job.

"They are spread out over such a large base that they are just not an easy buggy-ride distance from one another. What has happened, the telephone has replaced that buggy ride," he said.

The Knepps, for example, live in a house provided by Koricanek that appears contemporary in every sense, from the furniture to the self-cleaning electric oven, lacking only a telephone. Knepp shrugs off the thought of any permanent contamination, despite the fact that two of his three children were born in Texas and know no other life.

"They'll just have to learn," he said.

Almost all the Amish in Texas are working as contract farmers, like the Knepps. The type of work discourages stability for the Amish community, they say. In the last several months, seven Amish families have left the Gonazales area. Each departure diminishes the chance of a permanent settlement.

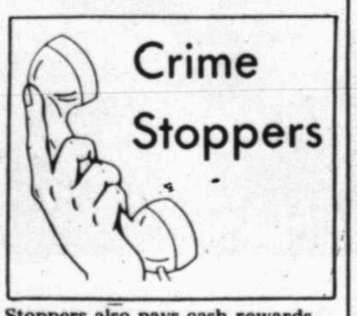

"It's dwindling a litte. There's another one that's going to leave," said John Yoder, the owner of a buggy-repair business. "But then again, there might be others coming in."

Man arrested on charge of sexually assaulting woman

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — A 25-year-old man employed by a Midland County business equipment firm was arrested Monday afternoon on a charge of sexual assault involving a mentally retarded woman.

Ector County Sheriff's Deputy Roy Gladden said Michael Mark Mitchell, 25, 3806 W. 15th Street, was arrested at the business equipment firm where he worked in the 10,000-block of East Interstate 20 about 2:30 p.m. Monday with the assistance of Midland County Sheriff's deputies.

Gladden said he and Deputy Troy Davis obtained an arrest warrant on a probable cause affidavit alleging that Mitchell forced one of the clients of the Mariah Flats House, a facility for the mentally retarded, to have sexual intercourse with him. Gladden said Mitchell had been a part-time aide at the facility.

Gladden said the 22-year-old woman had been psychiatrically evaluated as having a mental age equivalent to a 9-year-old.

Gladden said Mitchell was arraigned before Midland County Peace Justice Robert Pine on the sexual assault charge. Pine set Mitchell's bond at $50,000 and he was immediately transferred to the custody of Gladden and Davis.

Mitchell remained in the Ector County jail this morning in lieu of bond.

COMPUTER——

But with the county facing a $1 million revenue shortfall, money for the computer may not be available, Painter said.

However, County Judge William Ahders said the commission will find the money to buy the computer.

The computer will save the county time and labor costs, he said.

In other action, the commissioners tabled a resolution supporting a volunteer center proposed by the Human Relations Council.

The commissioners told representatives from the council that they had to consult with the county attorney before they could approve the resolution.

"We like your idea. We just need to see if we can legally do it," Commissioner Winfree Brown said.

If the county participates in the volunteer center, they would receive help from adult probationers who would be channeled through the program to do grounds maintenance and cleanup for the county, said Human Relations Council Director Bob Jones.

Texan dies in fall while at climbing school

GRAND TETON NATIONAL PARK, Wyo. (AP) — A Texas man participating in a climbing school fell to his death in Grand Teton National Park when his safety harness somehow opened, park officials said Monday.

Edward Carrington Jr., 41, of Houston was making an ascent up "Hole in the Wall," a practice area used by the Exum climbing school, when he slipped Friday afternoon, said Assistant Chief Ranger Ed Christian.

Climbing instructor Jim Bridwell was holding Carrington's safety rope when Carrington slipped, but then felt the rope go slack, said Christian.

Bridwell looked down and saw Carrington fall some 135 feet to his death, the ranger said.

When the instructor climbed down to an alcove where three other students were waiting he found Carrington's safety harness still attached to the rope.

"At this time we don't know how he came out of his harness," Christian said. "We know the harness opened up. We don't know why at this point. Maybe we'll never know."

Bridwell, some other guides and students administered first aid to Carrington but were unable to revive him, said Christian.

Rangers reached the site near Hidden Falls on the west side of Jenny Lake at 3:10 p.m. Friday and used a helicopter to remove Carrington's body. An autopsy showed that the man had fractured his spinal cord and some ribs.

Carrington, who was wearing a climbing helmet at the time of the accident, was the second person to die this year while climbing.

In July a Massachusetts woman who was employed at nearby Yellowstone National Park for the summer died when she fell while climbing a glacier on Mount Moran.

Girl strangled because she wouldn't be quiet, police say

WATAUGA (AP) — A woman said she strangled a 5-year-old girl because the child refused an an order to be quiet, according to police.

Vicki Lynn Kirkpatrick, 20, was charged Monday with murder in connection with the death of Renee Greer, Hurst police investigator Steve Moore said. Bond was set at $50,000, and Ms. Kirkpatrick was transferred to the Tarrant County Jail.

The child's body was found Saturday next to a furniture store's Dumpster.

Neighbors and police had said the child was last seen shortly after 6 p.m. Friday at Ms. Kirkpatrick's home, where she had been playing with Ms. Kirkpatrick's nieces.

Police said Ms. Kirkpatrick made a statement Sunday in which she admitted strangling the girl after walking into her bedroom and finding her 5-year-old niece beating on her furniture and yelling.

After the niece left the room, Renee refused a second command to be quiet, according to the statement.

"She grabbed her around the neck with one hand...and grabbed her with the other hand and began squeezing," said Moore, who took the statement from Ms. Kirkpatrick.

"When the child laughed at her, she apparently became enraged," said the Watauga Department of Public Safety director, M.W. Jackson. "It's an unfortunate set of circumstances."

The woman said she took the body to the Dumpster after dark, police said.

Ms. Kirkpatrick was arrested about 11 hours after the body was found. A Hurst police officer reported seeing Ms. Kirkpatick's car near the furniture store about 11:30 p.m. Friday.

Big Spring woman dies from injuries

From Staff Reports

A 22-year-old Big Spring woman died Monday from injuries she received in a one-car rollover Sunday in Howard County, according to Department of Public Safety reports.

Sherrie Delaine Baird was injured when her vehicle overturned about 4:10 p.m. Sunday on FM 821, just west of FM 461. Reports said the 1981 Subaru she was driving was traveling westbound on FM 821 at a "high rate" of speed when it ran off the south side of the road. The vehicle rolled over several times and the driver was thrown from the vehicle. She was not wearing a safety belt, reports said.

Ms. Baird was taken to Scenic Mountain Medical Center in Big Spring, and transferred to Lubbock General Hospital at 8 p.m. Sunday. She died from her injuries at 12:20 p.m. Monday.

Designers remember fashion's forgotten women

Copley News Service

Before big, beautiful women decided to stand up for their fashion rights in a world that celebrates skinniness, there was a self-mocking myth that large sizes were dominated by Omar the Tentmaker. Someone had to be responsible for all those drab, shapeless creations. He was the culprit. Trends? Sexiness? Fun? Forget it. Anyone determined to outwit Omar and come up with something appealing had her work cut out for her.

Meanwhile, petites — women 5-foot-4 and under, were getting pretty tired of being relegated to the teen sections of department stores to find their sizes. Styles were cute and trendy, but usually fell short on sophisication.

Well, women of all sizes can take heart for fall '86. Fashion designers are no longer ignoring the "special interest groups" and have come up with some innovative designs for larger and petite women.

This season, the big woman of taste has some potent allies against the awful Omar. Diane Von Furstenberg has joined such luminaries as Albert Nipon and the House of Givenchy in designing for large sizes. Their effect has been an immediate infusion of good design, and a fresh new sense of the excitement and fun of trends.

There are trumpet skirts, lithe fabrics, draping details, bold graphics, dramatic shoulders ... and everywhere, the ripples of a newly discovered audience. In New York, Bloomingdale's doubled its large size space and gave it a prominent new location. On the West Coast, the California Mart presented its first large size market. Vogue magazine is producing its second major section for large sizes.

VON FURSTENBERG explains her entry into large sizes simply. "Whatever I design, from a wrap dress to stationery or couture, I always keep in mind a woman who is feminine, intelligent and busy. She wants clothes that make good sense, and she wants them to be flattering and a pleasure to wear. It's high time larger women are able to dress like that."

Part of that pleasure and good sense is reflected in the heightened colors and bold graphics the designers are introducing. The teals, golds and jewel tones, the dramatic reversals of color and all the splendid, sharp-edged patterns that glorify other clothes are now doing wonders for large sizes.

Such drama is a radical change. A big woman has always been told to wear a single color that's dark, retiring and as close to solid as possible in order to look thinner. The new designers believe that in large sizes, a few pounds are a poor trade for a depressing look. Why strain to look 175 pounds instead of 180? It's better to have fun boldly and let good design make up the difference.

The draping that's making headlines in such collections as Donna Karan and Oscar de la Renta is having its effect in large sizes this year, in part because of the new suppleness of lightweight challis and silky rayon that are replacing the old stiff fabrics. There are tulip wrap skirts and gentle gathering at the shoulders. And the overall effect can be given considerable splash with the addition of an oversized shawl picking up one of the colors of the dress.

THE TRUMPET, a hot silhouette in any size this year, has a gradually easing line with many gores that flare out fully at the knee. Its gentle fit and low flare move gracefully.

Several designers are using shoulder tucking to their advantage. Part of the big shoulder look that continues this year, the tuck extends the shoulder line slightly, creating definition and a more linear silhouette made even more striking over shoulder pads.

Pleats are certainly not new to fashion or to large sizes, but the new fabrics are giving a fresh sense of richness and motion to classic tunics over pleats. A grand master of pleating, Albert Nipon has brought authority and verve to pleats throughout his collection.

On the flipside, designers and fashion experts like Allison Kyle Leopold have turned their attentions to the smaller woman. Leopold has created a petite clothing line for J.C. Penney.

In developing the clothing line, Leopold learned that petite women have two distinct body types — those who are long-waisted and short-legged and their counterparts who are short waisted and long-legged, a factor that makes a major difference in choosing clothes that both flatter and fit. According to the National Bureau of Standards, over 37 million American women — 55 percent — are under 5-foot-4.

"Petites should look for clothes that accent their body assets, and not just scaled down styles made for taller women," Leopold says. "We want to bend fashion rules without breaking them outright by offering certain fashion shapes petite women haven't been able to find in the past."

A collection may highlight cropped pants and big shirts, bold patterns or coordinates that can be layered together — all usually considered hard to wear or overpowering for the smaller, shorter frame.

All of this is heady change from the apologetic dresses for both large sizes and petites of old. Top designers are bound to have an influence that will be good for everyone.

Designer patterns reduce costs

Copley News Service

As the new fall '86 designer clothes begin to fill department stores and boutiques across the country, many well-dressed women are taking out their sewing machines.

The inspiration to make designer clothes at home, for a fraction of their retail cost, has gained in popularity due to an increase of designer patterns on the market.

"It's very creative to sew at home. I find it a joy to see how another person can wear my clothes in ways I never imagined," said American designer Geoffrey Beene.

"Making your own clothes is very creative and fun to do," said European designer Karl Lagerfeld in an interview from Paris. "Doing things yourself shows a modern attitude."

Lagerfeld's designs will be available for the first time this fall. He joins Beene and such other well-known names as Calvin Klein, Oscar de la Renta, Yves St. Laurent, Christian Dior, Bill Blass and Issey Miyake in pattern books.

"Although you can save hundreds of dollars by sewing your own clothes, interestingly enough a common motiviation for sewing is the freedom to adapt a designer pattern into an individualized look. Our customers love well-made clothes in beautiful fabrics they've chosen themselves," said Herman Phynes, director of promotion for Vogue/Butterick Patterns.

Calvin Klein, whose popular designs consistently top the best-seller list, appreciates the distinction of custom-made clothes: "If you don't like Calvin's blue or pink one season, you can do it in a floral print."

Fabric stores have responded to a new rise in demand for fine fabrics by reflecting retail fashion trends, according to Phynes.

"Designer-quality fabric is readily available," he said.

"We work very closely with the designers, so that the patterns can be sewn at home easily and logically," said Joan Watkins, director of product at Vogue Patterns. By working from sketches, Watkins and the designers often develop a complementary pattern to highlight a signature look.

"In this way, the designers are working exclusively for us, so that we can offer our customer designs that are not available in stores," she said.

Spectator aerobics ideal for sports

By ERMA BOMBECK

We have all come to appreciate the hazards of playing sports. The knees that have been tackled once too often ... the teeth that have stopped too many hockey pucks ... the tendons that have been worked to death in too many marathons.

But here's a new wrinkle. The New England Journal of Medicine has revealed that WATCHING sports may be hazardous to your health.

Case in point: A bartender who watched three games nonstop last year on New Year's Day. He moved only for refreshments. The day after the game he developed sharp chest pains and shortness of breath. Diagnosis: too much inactivity.

The problem is most people are not in shape to relax that much. Especially after a long summer in which they watch a few tennis matches. They think they can just plop down into a chair, turn comatose and watch weekend football without any ill effects.

I offer today the Erma Bombeck Prime Time Spectator Aerobics Program, that promises to make you fit for sports viewing before the season officially starts Sept. 7.

First, the warm-up. Standing in the middle of the floor, turn your neck slowly to the right ... all the way to where the screens need to be replaced by storm windows before October. Now pivot your neck around to the left far enough to see the burnt-out porch light and the trees that need fertilizing.

Doesn't that feel good? Next, try to touch the floor that needs sanding with your fingers. And finally, stretch and reach, extending your waist all the way over to the pipes under the sink that are leaking.

Now for the arms. Grab a stack of papers from the top of the basement stairs and, balancing them, make small circles as you head toward the garage. That's it, make it burn. While you're in the garage, work the shoulder muscles by heaving some of that insulation into the attic that has been sitting around for three years.

You're ready for aerobics. Start slowly, running in place, and then try to outrun your children who want to be car-pooled to the playground. Be careful of the furniture! Run past the bathroom where the toilet needs to be reseated, the bedroom that needs painting and through the front door with a broken bell. About eight minutes should increase your heart rate.

For the cool-down, sit on the floor with legs outstretched and bend over one knee. You should be at eye level with your wife who is painting the baseboards. Next, lie on your back and tighten every muscle in your body ... the buttocks, the pelvic, the arms and the legs. Now, relax. Clear your mind of the dog that wants to be let out and the phone ringing off the hook.

Feel better? I hope so. We women only want our men to be healthy.

DEAR ABBY

Caring staffs typify good nursing homes

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I read Kirk Douglas' letter about the horrors of nursing homes with a strange kind of wonderment. On one hand, as the son of aging parents, I felt a sense of dread that one day my parents might be forced to live in a nursing home, which, judging from Mr. Douglas' "research," would be a fate worse than death. On the other hand, as one who has chosen a career dedicated to caring for the elderly, I was outraged that such irresponsible generalizations could be presented as gospel truths. As a nursing home administrator, I can tell you that they are not!

I cannot imagine a family tolerating their loved one's being subjected to "bedsores, rapes and broken bones." I certainly would not. Nor would I tolerate in my facility any thievery, neglect or abuse. I pray that any nursing home that permits such abuses be closed immediately and their operators be prosecuted to the fullest extent of the law. Mr. Douglas' letter, which I assume was well-intentioned, served only to reinforce old stereotypes and further confuse and frighten those of us who may be faced with some frightening decisions. — STEVEN P. MONROE, ADMINISTRATOR, FOX RUN MANOR NURSING HOME, FINDLAY, OHIO

DEAR ABBY: With regard to Kirk Douglas' tirade against nursing homes, the staff and residents of this nursing home want to say, "BULL!"

Granted, there may be some pretty bad nursing homes in this country, but there are far more good ones than the kind that Mr. Douglas described in his letter. We love our residents, and give them more time and personal attention than their own families are able to. Mr. Douglas should not make such broad, sweeping statements about nursing homes until he has seen ours. — CINDY HARMON, ACTIVITY DIRECTOR, JOHNSTON'S NURSING HOME, LANCASTER, OHIO

DEAR ABBY: If Kirk Douglas is truly concerned about our elderly, he should take his handsome face and dimpled chin to Washington and lobby for more money for Medicaid so nursing employees wouldn't have to work two jobs in order to live. — ALSO CONCERNED IN VERMONT

DEAR ABBY: I am a nurse in a nursing home. Yes, I am paid to do my job, although I would be paid more had I gone into another field of nursing. But there isn't enough money in the world to "pay" me to hold an old woman whose children never find the time to visit her. Nor is there enough money in the world to pay for the love that I give freely to our oldest, sickest citizens. Their love is returned to me in amounts too vast to calculate.

I am not alone. I am only one of thousands of nurses who struggle against red tape and budget cuts, and worst of all, the apathy of families and animosity of the press.

We provide food, shelter, around-the-clock nursing care, laundry, rehabilitative therapy and social services for $44 a day — less than a second-rate motel charges for a bed!

Of course, more money would help. It would pay for more equipment and increased staffing, but it would never replace the greatest need our patients have — visits from families and friends. — CONSTANCE E. STANLEY, R.N., SANTA ANA, CALIF.

DEAR ABBY: Kirk Douglas notes that his mother spent her last seven years in a nursing home where she was well cared for. Then he cites horror stories, giving the impression that good nursing homes are the exception, when, in fact, they are the rule. Thousands of families will attest to this. We have a file of letters thanking us for the excellent care we have rendered to loved ones.

I invite Mr. Douglas to come to Vermont and see our facility, and speak personally to our residents. — DAVID L. SILVER, ADMINISTRATOR, NEWPORT HEALTH CARE CENTER, NEWPORT, VT.

J-R'S Water Well Supply offers parts, expert service

Ray Wall, Ron Stanley and Jeff Niedecken of J-R'S Water Well Supply offer a complete line of water well supplies and expert service. In addition, the store has swimming pool pump supplies and ornamental windmills.

J-R'S Water Well Supply is equipped to meet all your water well needs, whether you are a die-hard do-it-yourselfer or a totally hands-off owner. J-R'S Water Well Supply store has a complete stock of supplies, equipment and expert advise for those who don't mind getting their hands dirty. Owner Ron Stanley adds they are equipped to service just about any pump.

Being without water can be awfully inconvenient, so J-R'S keeps a wide variety of parts in stock and strives to offer one day service in most cases.

Ron says that in six years of working on pumps the question he's been asked the most is "I punched the reset button and nothing happened, now, what do I do?"

Before you call for repair, Ron says to check the power supply to see if a fuse is blown? Is a breaker off? Are there broken wires? You may be able to save yourself a service call. At the very least, you'll know a little more about the problem.

Ron also encourages well owners to watch for warning signs and call before the pump is completely out. These are some things that generally indicate a problem:

1. Water logged pressure tanks
2. Rapid cycling
3. Lowered pressure
4. Pump running with no water flowing

Manufacturers expect the average submersible pump to last five to seven years, Ron says. The poor quality of water in most Midland wells may further reduce that life expectancy.

Ron explains that customers who want to save some expense are welcome to pull the pump and bring it in to the shop. On request, Ron will pull the pump.

Once the pump is pulled, he will use his expertise to determine whether only part of the pump - the motor or the fluid end - needs to be replaced, or if it would be more cost efficient to replace the entire pump.

J-R'S test pit facilities, the only such facilities in Midland for the benefit of the general public, allow them to test the pump for efficiency before returning it.

Pool and spa pump repair is also offered by J-R'S.

To enhance their service and meet the needs of do-it-yourselfers the store maintains an extensive stock. Ray Stanley is always ready to assist you with your selection at the store.

There is a complete line of pumps, tanks and windmill supplies. Plumbing and electrical parts, including submersible wire, are stocked. J-R'S also has control box repair parts for most boxes used in this area.

PVC pipe and fittings, as well as steel pipe and fittings and galvinized pipe fittings, are in the inventory. Even drip irrigation fittings and supplies are available at J-R'S.

For those facing sand problems in their well, J-R'S has filters, sand separators and screens.

Pool and spa pump repair parts and kits, filters and replacement cartridges are available at J-R'S. They also sell air conditioner pumps.

In addition, J-R'S offers ornamental windmills.

The experts at J-R'S remind Midlanders that it's time to prepare for winter. Their stock of winter pipe protection material, including heat tape and pipe insulation, will help you do just that.

J-R'S Water Well Supply is open Monday through Saturday, 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. They are located on County Road 1130 N. To get there just go four miles east of Midland on Highway 80, turn north onto County Road 1130 at Wallace Grocery. You'll see J-R'S sign on a white building with blue trim, just 3/4 mile down the road. For service you can call 687-2544 or 687-3236. MasterCard and VISA are accepted.

JEANE DIXON'S your horoscope

© 1986, Los Angeles Times Syndicate

By Jeane Dixon
Wednesday, August 27, 1986

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Work on projects that will bring you wider recognition and lucrative offers. The decisions you make in the next few months will have long-range consequences. Avoid anyone who has made trouble for you in the past. Your social life shifts into high gear as Christmas approaches. Be more affectionate with family members.

CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: 36th U.S. President Lyndon Johnson, Cincinnati Reds third baseman Buddy Bell, actress Barbara Bach, author Ira Levin, golf's Susie McAllister, singer-actor Tommy Sands, actress Tuesday Weld, Mother Teresa, comedienne Martha Raye and producer Samuel Goldwyn.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A friend gives you the solution to a domestic problem. A change of residence could bring great relief. Your social prestige and clout are on the rise. A new romance boosts your confidence.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Success is yours thanks to a younger person's assistance! Let others know that you expect them to live up to their promises. Good luck is linked to who you know.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A change in a co-worker's personal life could put you in line for a promotion or raise. A move to another city is a strong possibility. Let your guard down with old friends.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): An unexpected development could bring rapid change at work. A chance remark provides new insights. Keep regular office hours if you work at home and you will accomplish more.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Make important phone calls. Take the first steps toward straightening out a misunderstanding with higher-ups. Refuse to take on more responsibility than you can handle at work.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A family situation may require the help of experts. A new environment changes your outlook. Technological investments will improve the bottom line. Stay in close touch with an old friend.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Push harder to accomplish your personal goals. Higher-ups are impressed by your drive. Financial worries subside when someone sends a check. A current love affair is not what it seems.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Work pressures mount if you are not well organized. Tackle one thing at a time. A major purchase bought on sale proves to be an excellent investment. Return calls and answer mail promptly.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Avoid someone who tries to involve you in office politics. Long-distance phone calls bring good luck. A creative idea strikes when you least expect it. A great day for writers and artists.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Welcome opportunity to deal with people you seldom have a chance to meet. Seek advice from someone who knows a lot about a certain aspect of a business. Call a friend.

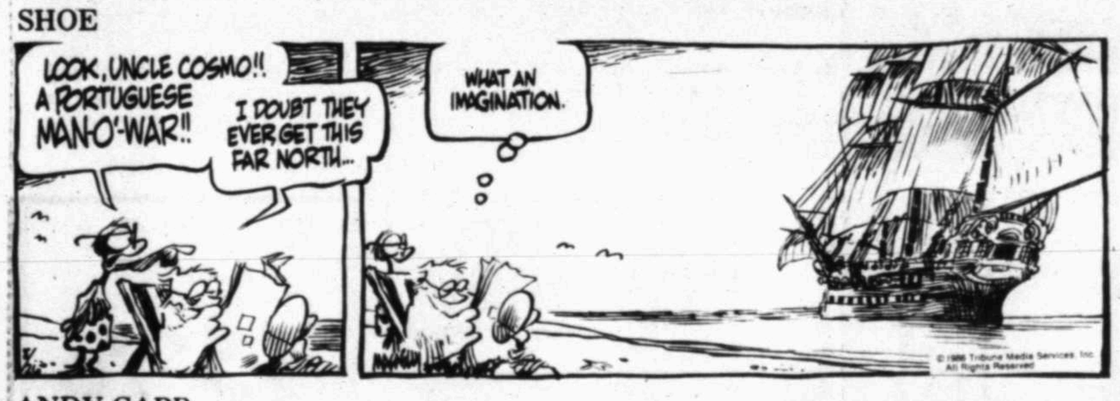

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Remain well in the background today. You profit from what you are able to observe. You are able to deal successfully with a challenge from an associate.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your co-workers could be contrary today. Find projects you can handle alone. Cash may be in short supply, but you are better off than you think. Look for ways to cut expenses.

Bridge has borrowed terminology from a number of sports. One of the most appropriate names comes from boxing — the uppercut. It is used to describe a ruff by a defender aimed at promoting a trump trick for his partner.

Despite his five-card heart suit, South decided that one no trump was the most descriptive opening bid he could make. North used Stayman to look for a 4-4 major fit and struck gold. His hand was just good enough to raise to the heart game.

West got his side off to a grand start with the king of clubs opening lead. His partner signalled enthusiastically with the eight, so West continued with the queen and another club to East's ace. That completed the defenders' book, and East took time out to consider the situation.

The most he could hope for from his partner was another 2 or 3 points, and no matter where they were, they were unlikely to combine to produce a trick. A far more promising way to find the setting trick was to promote one of his trumps. For that to succeed, East needed to find his partner with no more than the nine or ten of hearts.

Breaking all taboos about not giving declarer a ruff-sluff, East boldly led his 13th club, and declarer's goose was cooked. He needed no discard from either his hand or the dummy, and it certainly wasn't right to ruff in hand. He discarded a spade and West ruffed with the nine to seal declarer's fate. Although South could overruff with one of dummy's honors, as the trumps lie East was assured of a trump trick by simply covering as cheaply as possible whichever heart declarer led from the table.

South African claims he's relative of late Elvis Presley, is imprisoned

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A South African who claimed he was a relative of the late rock 'n' roll idol Elvis Presley in order to obtain immigration documents has been sentenced to 13 months in prison.

Earl R. Presley, 28, who was born in Durban, also must serve five years probation and faces deportation proceedings.

The sentence Monday by U.S. District Court Judge Consuelo Marshall, revises the 25-year term she imposed in May, a sentence which had made Presley eligible for a psychiatric evaluation in prison.

The judge said Presley would get credit for the four months already served.

Presley was convicted in April of five counts of making false statements about his birthplace on passport applications and of attempting to obtain documentary evidence of U.S. citizenship.

Under the five counts, Presley obtained or attempted to obtain such documentation in Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi and South Carolina under such names as Chad Elvis Presley, Reginald Chad Jarrod Presley and Earl Reginald Presley.

He entered the United States in 1977 and served in the Marine Corps before his immigration troubles began.

NEW YORK (AP) — CBS expects to announce the format and anchors next month for its abbreviated "CBS Morning News" program and a new 90-minute program which will replace most of the news show, the network said.

Van Gordon Sauter, president of CBS News, told department managers and bureau chiefs Sunday in Park City, Utah, that hard news would be carried between 6 a.m. and 7:30 a.m. when the new format begins early next year.

A new, entertainment-oriented program will run in the 7:30 a.m. to 9 a.m. time block now occupied by "CBS Morning News," and may include segments of hard news, Sauter said. It will not be produced by the news or entertainment divisions, but by new group reporting to Sauter, Ann Morfogen, a network news spokeswoman, said Monday.

The new programs are expected to debut early next year, she said in a telephone interview from Utah.

NEW YORK (AP) — Twenty newspapers ranging in size from the 7,000 circulation Daily Journal in Wheaton, Ill., to the 500,000 circulation Philadelphia Inquirer have been selected as finalists in The Associated Press Managing Editors Association's 16th annual Public Service Awards competition.

APME judges selected 10 finalists in each of two circulation categores. The winner in each category will be announced in October at the APME convention in Cincinnati.

The competition attracted 153 entries, 16 fewer than a year ago. There were 114 entries from newspapers over 50,000 circulation and 39 entries from the under 50,000 circulation category. All newspaper members of The Associated Press are eligible.

Entries dealt with subjects including abuses in the selection of juries, in the transportation of human organs, in charitable fund raising, in absentee ballots and in the use of lie-detector tests.

"The wide range of work done by newspapers in this country is impressive," said Michael J. Davies, immediate past president of APME and chairman of the judging committee.

Michael Reagan

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Michael Reagan, the last of the presidential progeny to try show business, says he'd like to have his own television talk show and maybe "pinch-hit for Johnny Carson."

Reagan, 41, who had a radio talk show on KABC in Los Angeles, says he plays comic relief in the film "Cyclone," starring Heather Thomas.

"I'm new, and I'm having fun," he said last week. "You've got to start somewhere, and I want to be around a long time from now. I enjoy doing KABC radio, and pinch-hitting for Tom Snyder. I would love to have my own talk show."

Asked if he would like to pinch-hit for Chicago talk show host Oprah Winfrey, he replied: "Pinch-hit for Johnny Carson! I hear he's looking for relief!"

Although it's not known what Reagan's chances are as a Carson stand-in, NBC announced Monday that Bill Cosby will be substitute host of "The Tonight Show" on Sept. 23, 24 and 26.

Fats Domino

DENVER (AP) — Rock 'n' roll legend Fats Domino had to cut short one show and cancel another after his voice wore thin, a newspaper says.

Domino opened Sunday night for Jerry Lee Lewis, whose plane was delayed, and fans listening to "Blueberry Hill" were told by the singer that the microphones were a problem.

After a brief break, Domino returned, gave a 35-minute performance, then left the stage for good. Fans waiting outside for the second show were told that Fats' voice had conked out, The Denver Post reported Monday.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Nell Carter headlined an AIDS benefit show called "Choices."

Proceeds from Monday night's $65-a-ticket event at the Biltmore Hotel will go to support programs for victims of the deadly disease, organizers said.

Hosts included Shari Belafonte Harper, Ed Asner, Betty Thomas, Esther Williams and Rene Enriquez.

• • •

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The fiancee of Jim Brown will not press battery charges against the 50-year-old football star-turned-actor, police said.

Debra Clark, 22, made her decision to drop the charges on Monday, Detective Jack Luther said.

Brown was arrested Friday after Ms. Clark telephoned police for help from a locked bedroom of his home during an argument early Friday, police said. She had told police Brown hit her, and she was treated for a bruise under her eye and another on her side.

DALLAS (AP) — Author Dan Jenkins, who worked as a sports-writer at the Dallas Times Herald early in his career, will write a weekly front-page column for the newspaper beginning next month.

The column will be titled "Semi Serious" and deal with a wide range of topics, said Times Herald editor David Burgin.

Jenkins, author of the best-selling novels "Semi-Tough" and "Life Its Ownself," worked for the old Fort Worth Press before joining the Times Herald.

San Antonio police chief thinks two-week vacation cost him his job

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Police Chief Charles Rodriguez, who announced his resignation after the city manager requested it, said he believes his two-week vacation cost him his job.

"I guess that brought it to a head — being out of town," Rodriguez said Monday, hours after he quit his $72,172-a-year job at the behest of City Manager Lou Fox.

Rodriguez drew the wrath of Fox and other officials because he couldn't be reached while vacationing on the East Coast. The last week of his holiday coincided with the fatal shooting of officer Stephen Smith last Monday night by fellow policeman Farrell Tucker.

"I was asked to resign," said Rodriguez, who took office Nov. 14, 1983. "The fact that I didn't call in precipitated the whole thing. The prior police chiefs have done the same thing (not contacted officials while on vacation). I can't see any deliberate improprieties."

But Fox countered Monday that "I don't think that (Smith slaying) had anything to do with this. That is a separate and apart issue."

The FBI is investigating the shooting, and last week, Mayor Henry Cisneros said a bloodbath similar to the slayings of postal workers in Edmond, Okla., may have been averted with Smith's death.

Smith allegedly planned assaults on Assistant Police Chief Frank Hoyack, Deputy Police Chief Robert Heuck and Bexar County District Attorney Sam Millsap, officials said.

Rodriguez learned of the shooting when he returned home Friday night.

But city officials told the San Antonio Light that Rodriguez's unavailability while on vacation was only part of a long list of managerial problems that had put him in disfavor at City Hall.

During a five-minute meeting Monday morning in which Fox asked Rodriguez to quit, Fox said "negative media coverage" and the chief's lack of rapport with the San Antonio Police Officers Association weighed in the decision.

An official at the police union headquarters said association President Harold Flammia and Vice President Joe Martinez were unavailable for comment.

Despite the fallout, Rodriguez said he hopes to stay in San Antonio, but added, "I'm not sure if I'm going to stay in law enforcement. I've already talked to several people (about jobs)."

San Antonio City Manager Lou Fox, right, announces the resignation of Police Chief Charles Rodriguez at a press conference Monday in San Antonio. Assistant Chief Frank Hoyack, left, was named interim chief until a replacement can be found.

He also defended his tenure with the department. "We've done quite a bit," said Rodriguez, who counted the addition of 200 patrolmen, the creation of the police Special Operations Unit and the reorganization of "police brass" as his foremost accomplishments.

Rodriguez is the former commander of the Los Angeles County Sheriff's Department. He holds a master's degree in public administration from the University of Southern California.

Hoyack, a 26-year veteran of the city's police force, was named interim chief, Fox said.

Escapees from Louisiana prison remain at large with one hostage

HOUSTON (AP) — Police say they have no leads as they continued their search today for two prison escapees who prompted a nationwide alert after abducting two women.

Danny Weeks, 33, and James Colvin, 32, were discovered missing along with a third inmate during a count Saturday night at the Louisiana Penitentiary at Angola, Warden Frank Blackburn said.

"We haven't made any ground," Houston police Sgt. Bill Stephens said Monday night. "Right now, we're taking into consideration that they may not still be in Houston. We just don't have any leads."

The pair forced Linda Mayeax, 38, into her car at knifepoint as she sat in the parking lot of St. Frances Cabrini Hospital in Alexandria, La. at about 9:30 a.m. Sunday, Stephens said.

About eight hours later, she was freed unharmed in Houston and Karyn Laccheo, 29, an Army lieutenant home on leave, was forced to drive the pair, witnesses told police.

The convicts and their hostage were believed to be in the woman's 1986 Toyota Celica.

Police said Mrs. Mayeax told them the pair was armed with a .38-caliber gun. Authorities were not certain how the inmates escaped the prison, but they apparently crossed the Mississippi River by floating on a log.

Colvin, of the Shreveport area, was sentenced in 1983 to 80 years for armed robbery. Weeks, of Monroe, La., was serving life plus 99 years since 1985 for armed robbery.

Colvin was convicted in April 1983 of the July 12, 1982, armed robbery of a Shreveport delicatessen. Jurors took just 13 minutes to find him guilty.

Weeks last year already was serving a 99-year sentence for armed robbery in the September 1982 robbery of a Bank of Commerce branch in Shreveport when he pleaded guilty to second-degree murder in the Christmas 1981 contract slaying of Army Sgt. Maj. Hubert Ester.

Weeks escaped in June 1982 and again in August 1983 while in the custody of Ouachita Parish authorities in Monroe. The second escape ended a month later in Austin.

The third inmate, Robert Downs, 50, of Kansas City, was serving 198 years for armed robbery and being a habitual criminal. He was imprisoned in 1985.

The warden said Downs may not have made it across the river or he may still be on prison grounds.

Millionaire philanthropist Mary Moody Northen dies in Galveston

GALVESTON (AP) — Millionaire philanthropist Mary Moody Northen, whose relatives challenged her competency as head of a multimillion-dollar foundation in sensational legal battles, has died at age 94.

Northen

Mrs. Northen's death Monday at the University of Texas Medical Branch at Galveston was attributed to complications of pneumonia, hospital spokeswoman Helen Smith said.

She had developed pneumonia since being hospitalized July 20 after choking on food at an evening meal. Her condition was serious until Friday, when she was downgraded to critical.

"Her passing is a sorrowful occasion not only for her family but all of Texas," Mrs. Northen's family said in a statement. "Her life was a testimony to her values and her standards and her great love for people. She leaves behind a legacy of humanitarian acts that will enrich the lives of others for generations to come."

A funeral service is scheduled for 10 a.m. Thursday in Galveston. Texas Gov. Mark White, Republican gubernatorial candidate Bill Clements and former governors John Connally, Dolph Briscoe and Preston Smith are scheduled to be among the pallbearers.

Although she held the reins of a multimillion-dollar foundation and once headed 50 corporations, Mrs. Northen claimed she never spent a day in big business before her father died.

Born in Galveston on Feb. 10, 1892, she was one of four children of wealthy businessman William Lewis Moody Jr. and Libbie Shearn Moody, who together established the Moody Foundation in 1942.

Her grandfather, William Moody Sr., built on the businesses started by his father, a Confederate Army colonel, expanding the family empire to more than 50 firms with interests in cotton, insurance, banking, newspaper publishing, ranching and farming.

She married a Galveston insurance man, Edwin Clyde Northen, in 1915, and the couple never had any children.

Two months after Northen's death in 1954, William Moody Jr. died, leaving Mary control of the foundation and the family businesses. He left only $1 to his oldest son, William L. Moody III.

Asked why she was favored instead of her brother, Mrs. Northen once replied it was because her ideas "conformed more with father's ideas."

Mrs. Northen's nephews — Shearn Moody Jr. and Robert Moody — tried to break the will, claming they did not receive their fair share of the family fortune. Five years of sensational court squabbling followed, resulting in a settlement of more than $10 million to the plaintiff heirs.

The family battles became so bitter that then-Texas Attorney General Will Wilson in 1958 filed suit to expand the foundation board. The number of trustees was increased from four to seven, bringing in three non-Moodys to help manage the trust.

The Moody Foundation was valued at an estimated $350 million in 1984, making it the state's third-largest trust. The charity had awarded more than $25 million in grants by 1965 and made contributions of more than $7.5 million in 1983 alone.

The family legal snarls continued in 1984, when Robert Moody filed a lawsuit alleging his aunt was mentally incompetent because of her age and should not manage the trust. The suit was settled out of court.

A judge appointed a limited guardian for Mrs. Northen, but also ruled she could maintain her posts on the foundation and family businesses.

The family owned the Galveston News, Galveston Tribune and Texas City Sun newspapers for 33 years. Mrs. Northen said she was brokenhearted when trustees voted to sell the publications to The Houston Post Co. in 1963.

She sat on the boards of several large companies, including American National Financial Corp., the American National Life Insurance Co. and the family-founded Moody National Bank.

She credited her father with helping develop her business acumen and recalled how, as a young girl, she and William Moody Jr. would go over the details of the family business each day.

Man: McFadden called himself 'Animal'

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A man who calls himself "Animal" terrified a Tyler couple when he demanded money at gunpoint and then took beer from them, one of the victims testified.

"He was talking about how he rode with the Hells Angels and how they called him 'Animal' and about how it wasn't nothing to kill somebody," Clifton Phillips said during the first day of Jerry McFadden's aggravated robbery trial.

Testimony was to resume today amid tight security at the Bexar County courtroom. The trial was moved here from Quitman in Wood County because of the publicity surrounding McFadden, 38.

Thrice convicted of rape and currently charged with capital murder, McFadden led about 200 lawmen on a two-day manhunt in East Texas after breaking out of an Upshur County Jail and taking a deputy hostage last month.

Monday, McFadden was brought to and from the courtroom in leg chains and handcuffs attached to a chain around his waist.

Phillips testified Monday that he and Denise Bailey were about to leave the park after a May 4 afternoon outing when McFadden pointed a snub-nosed .38-caliber revolver at them as they sat in their car and demanded money.

Phillips said when he told McFadden he spent his money on beer, McFadden demanded the beer. Phillips said he was so terrified that he complied.

"I didn't know what to expect. God was with me. I just more or less went along with him," Phillips said, adding that McFadden then went away without harming them.

At one point in the trial, McFadden was ordered to take off his shirt, revealing several tattoos on his upper body.

Among the winged creatures, bugs and a ghoulish figure with the word "Harley" were the words "Death before dishonor" that Phillips said he remembered seeing on the man who he said attacked him at the lake. The words were part of a tattoo that ended with "for the lonesome loser."

The capital murder charge against McFadden stems from the May 5 death of 18-year-old Suzanne Harrison, who was sexually assaulted, beaten and strangled in East Texas.

McFadden also is accused of killing two of Harrison's companions, whose bodies were found five days later in a ditch. Harrison's slaying occurred in the same park surrounding Lake Hawkins and one day after the robbery involving Phillips and his fiancee, whom he has since married.

Sympathy note at murderer's grave work of 'sick' person

IRVING (AP) — A sympathy note left at the grave of Patrick Henry Sherrill that was purportedly from fellow letter carriers was the work of a "sick" person, a postal union officer says.

Flowers appeared Sunday at the grave of the man who killed 14 Postal Service workers before killing himself last week in Edmond, Okla., and they bore a card that was signed "The Letter Carriers of Irving, Texas."

"From those who understood what he went through as a carrier," it read. "No one will ever know how far he was pushed to do what he did."

The note left at Sherrill's grave in Watonga, Okla., was an apparent reference to problems he had been having at work. He had met with superiors the day before over his poor work record as a part-time carrier.

"Someone has gone up there and misrepresented us. I don't like this kind of nonsense," said Charlie Swanson, president and chief steward of the 150-member Irving chapter of the National Association of Letter Carriers. "Whoever did it was sick."

He said letter carriers at the Carl Range postal station raised about $130 Saturday to send to the relatives of the victims and the union intended to raise more.

Neither the funeral home that handled Sherrill's arrangements nor the cemetery caretaker knew who sent the flowers.

Kenneth Russworm of Russworm Funeral Home, which handled Sherrill's arrangements, said no flowers were received at the funeral home for Sherrill.

Horse race betting bill wins tentative approval in Senate

AUSTIN (AP) — It's no longer a long shot that a horse race betting bill will be make it to the House this year as one way to ease Texas' financial woes, Sen. Ike Harris says.

Senators tentatively approved the Dallas Republican's pari-mutuel wagering bill 19-10 Monday, and a final vote was scheduled today.

"I think I'll get a final vote about like the one today," Harris said Monday after three hours of tough debate.

Pari-mutuel wagering has been outlawed in Texas since 1937. The Senate approved a betting bill in 1983 but it died in House debate. In 1985, a bill failed again in House debate.

If the current bill is approved by this Legislature, there would be a statewide referendum on the Nov. 4. general election ballot.

If voters approve, local-option elections could be held in 251 counties on horse race betting and in three counties for greyhound wagering.

Harris and other supporters have said the measure is not an instant cure to the state's financial woes, but would provide substantial revenue in the future.

Opponents counter that wagering would be an invitation to organized crime and would lead poor people to throw away their earnings at the track.

Gov. Mark White said later he would take "a close look" at any wagering bill sent him.

"My position on that has always been there should be a statewide referendum, local option and strong protection against organized crime," White said.

The proposed legislation calls for a Texas Racing Commission to supervise horse races and wagering in about four large tracks in metropolitan areas, about 17 regional tracks with mostly weekend race programs and any number of temporary race meets at county fairs and other celebrations.

Most efforts to change Harris' bill were defeated by lop-sided votes. But one that would have set aside all state income from pari-mutuel wagering for dependent children was settled only when Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby's vote broke a 14-14 tie and defeated it.

"Without this amendment, there is nothing in this bill for little people," said Sen. Craig Washington, D-Houston, who unsuccessfully sponsored pari-mutuel bills in the 1983 and 1986 sessions.

Harris and Sen. John Traeger, D-Seguin, argued the state was in a financial crisis today partially because too much of its revenue was tied up in special funds that could be used only for a certain purpose.

Other defeated amendments would have banned racing on Sunday, required that all financing come from Texas banks, allowed the Department of Public Safety to delay any race meeting for five days to investigate organized crime, and prohibited the use of public funds for improvements used in pari-mutuel wagering.

Harris accepted an amendment that would have horse race tracks offer at least five days of "charity races" each year to raise money for benefits.

"This is a revenue bill because it would provide a positive income in the future," said Harris. "This is a matter of economic development for this state."

"Most of the income generated would go to people who would build fences, who would be traveling from place to place," said Sen. Bill Sarpalius, D-Amarillo. "The bulk of money for feed and hay would not come from within the state."

Lottery clears first hurdle despite conflicting testimony

AUSTIN (AP) — A proposal to create a state-run lottery has cleared its first legislative hurdle, with backers saying it would be a financial boon to Texas and opponents saying it would prey on the poor.

The legislation won 8-2 approval Monday from the Senate State Affairs Committee, and its sponsor, Sen. Hector Uribe, D-Brownsville, said he hoped it might be debated by the full Senate as soon as Wednesday.

Creation of a lottery would require a constitutional amendment. The legislation being considered would put the question before voters this November.

"The lottery is not a tax. People play lottery games only because they want to," said Lynn Nelson, past director of the Pennsylvania state lottery, testifying in favor of the bill.

"The daily numbers game...appeals primarily to the poor and to the minority members of our society. Its appeal is based on the illusory promise and the desperate hope of a big win," countered opponent Larry Braidfoot, author of "Gambling: A Deadly Game."

Fiscal experts estimate that a lottery, costing about $11 million to start, could raise $88 million for state government in 1987. Profits would mushroom to $689 million by 1991, estimates indicate.

Nelson said lotteries played an important part in the nation's history. A lottery helped raised funds to start the Jamestown colony in Virginia, he said, and helped finance both the Revolutionary War.

"George Washington, Thomas Jefferson and Benjamin Franklin all ran lottery games. Harvard, Princeton and the University of Pennsylvania were founded by lottery games," Nelson said.

Nelson said modern, state-run lotteries are operated in 22 states and the District of Columbia, with seven more states considering such games.

There are many misconceptions about lotteries, Nelson said, noting that studies show a lottery isn't regressive, doesn't increase welfare rolls, hasn't caused compulsive gambling and doesn't contribute to organized crime.

Studies also show middle class people play more than others.

"I have not had one instance brought to my attention during the 13 years I was with the Pennsylvania lottery of any family that went hungry because they spent all their bread-and-butter money on lottery tickets," Nelson said.

He also said lotteries are a form of entertainment and that players realize it.

"The lottery player knows the odds of winning that prize are very small. People continue to play lottery tickets because they like the excitement and the fun of participating in that game," Nelson said.

His arguments, however, didn't convince the Rev. E.B. Beasley Jr., minister of United Methodist churches at Lissie and Wallace.

"I don't think the Bible would support this at this time. Morally, this is not a fair issue," Beasley said, adding that the poor shouldn't be called upon to do more than their fair share to support state government.

"The people with a lot of money don't feel the need to get rich. It's those who do not have it who feel the need. And they wind up being the ones who foot the bills of the state," he said.

Beasley also showed senators several newspaper clippings where poor families spent money on lottery tickets, only to lose.

"This is not a fair way to go," he said. "It's not good. It's not desireable. It leads to luck instead of human effort or faith in God."

STATE IN BRIEF

Smoke detector battery could have saved woman from death

AUSTIN (AP) — A 34-year-old woman who died when her sofa caught fire probably would have survived if the smoke detector in her bedroom had been equipped with a $1 battery, fire officials say.

Authorities identified the victim as Kathy A. Hampton.

"If the alarm had been operating, there is very little doubt she would be alive and would have suffered only minor injuries," said Fire Lt. Melvin Stahl, who investigated the blaze.

"The alarm would have gone off a long time before the smoke reached a critical level. She could have exited the building without any problem," Stahl said.

He said the smoke detector operates on a single, 9-volt battery that cost just over $1.

Stahl said the fire began when smoking materials — possibly a cigarette butt — ignited the living room sofa. He said the fire smoldered for a long time, "probably several hours," before it was reported at 4:10 a.m. Sunday.

Small fence sparks big dispute

HOUSTON (AP) — Ron Ainsworth is being taken to court by his neighborhood civic club in a dispute over a two-foot-tall fence that he built at a cost of $30 to protect a small flower bed and a tree.

"I've never dealt with anything as stupid as this," Ainsworth says. "I cannot fathom that this thing has been taken to court and gone this far. I was really angry when it started happening, but now it's hilarious."

According to the Gulf Freeway Oaks Civic Club, the fence violates a neighborhood deed restriction and lowers the visual and aesthetic quality of the subdivision.

"We sent him numerous letters and he wouldn't even accept them," says Club President Alton Yauch. "Twice we went over to talk to him. It could've all been resolved just in a matter of moments."

If Ainsworth loses the suit, his $30 investment in the fence could cost him the $191 filing fee in court plus legal fees the club says already have reached $1,000.

The club insists Ainsworth should have asked its permission to build the fence.

No court date has been set yet.

Resolution honors ZZ Top

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas House passed a resolution Monday honoring the band ZZ Top, which the resolution said enjoys international appeal and acclaim.

In approving the resolution, the House decided to declare Wednesday as "ZZ Top Day" in Texas.

"This universally popular blues-rock trio of Billy Gibbons, Dusty Hill and Frank Beard was founded and is still based in Houston," said the resolution authored by Rep. Ron Wilson, D-Houston.

"Their last two albums have achieved total sales of over 12 million copies; their imaginative music videos have earned praise and awards," the resolution said.

Grain can be stored on ground

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Department of Agriculture said Monday it will allow state-licensed grain elevators to store surplus grain sorghum on the ground.

"These emergency rules are necessary because Reagan administration farm policies have left elevators in many parts of the state full of grain from the 1985 harvest and even years before that — and the 1986 crop is just now coming in," said Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower.

"Obviously, dumping grain on the ground has to be done right or it will be susceptible to weather damage and other problems," Hightower said. "TDA is drawing up strict rules to make sure this storage is handled properly."

Panel rejects cutting administrative funds

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — A House committee Monday quickly shot down a move to remove all state funding from six university system administrative offices — including the University of Texas.

Rep. Jim Horn's bill would have forced those six systems — UT, Texas A&M, Lamar University, the University of Houston, the University System of South Texas and the Texas State University System — to pay for the administrative offices from other appropriations or from local funds.

The systems oversee 33 of the state's 46 universities and medical schools. General revenue appropriations for fiscal 1987 total $4.3 million, including $753,000 for the UT System, which oversees University of Texas of the Permian Basin and 13 other universities. Thirteen schools operate with no system offices.

"I do not feel it is fair to take general revenue from all around the state and give special administrative funds on top of their normal administrative funds just to fund a system that those particular institutions asked us to create," Horn, R-Lewisville, said.

"We're not abolishing the systems. We're just doing away with general revenue funding."

As an example, Horn pointed out that the UT System reduced its general revenue draw from $4.6 million in 1984 to $700,000 this year. But Rep. Paul Colbert, D-Houston, said UT used money from the Permanent University Fund to replace the general revenue dollars. Only UT and A&M may use PUF money.

"None of the other systems have that money," Colbert said, asking Horn where those schools would turn to make up for the lost revenue.

Rep. Jim McWilliams, D-Hallsville, complained that Horn's bill "would be a no-confidence vote to the leadership of our universities." Other House Appropriations Committee members pointed out that the House has already voted to take almost $300 million from higher education to help balance the budget.

Committee Chairman Jim Rudd, D-Brownfield, tabled the bill for the special session, saying the panel would consider it again during the 1987 regular session.

House passes bill to reallocate cigarette tax to general fund

AUSTIN (AP) — Legislation to take about $9.2 million in cigarette tax money from local parks and use it to help balance the state budget was approved Monday by the Texas House.

Voting 88-35, lawmakers sent the measure to the Senate.

Cigarettes carry a 20.5-cent per pack tax. A penny of that tax goes to the Local Parks, Recreation and Open Space Fund, which provides grants for local parks.

Under the bill sponsored by Rep. Edmund Kuempel, R-Seguin, that one-cent allocation would go into the state's general revenue fund instead of the park fund for a year. Kuempel has said it wouldn't force the closing of any park or delay opening of any planned park.

The House approved an amendment that would repeal a portion of the tax discount given cigarette distributors, providing about $1 million that would go into the park fund next year. Combined with earlier action, that would leave about $1.5 million going into the park fund during the 1987 fiscal year.

In other action Monday, the House:

— Voted 111-7 to send the Senate a bill that would allow the state comptroller to stop paying rent on 13 leased field offices which recently were closed as a budget-cutting move.

— Gave preliminary approval to legislation that would repeal a state law which requires the comptroller to pay 10 percent annual interest on refunds made for overpayment of state taxes.

Repealing the law, which has been in effect since 1982, would save the state about $1.1 million next year and $12 million over the next five years, backers said.

— Tabled a bill that would have repealed the bonus paid to retailers and others who collect the state sales tax and pay it on time.

Under current law, merchants who sell taxable goods receive a 1 percent reimbursement of their total tax collections for paying by the 20th day of each month.

Repealing that bonus would have given the state an estimated $34 million in additional revenue in the 1987 fiscal year, said the bill's sponsor, Rep. Bill Blanton, R-Farmers Branch.

Opponents said they saw little difference between the proposal and a tax increase and noted that merchants have been receiving the reimbursement to help with the expense of collecting the tax.

White: It's too soon to talk of another special session

AUSTIN (AP) — Although the House and Senate are some $300 million apart in their budget-cutting plans, Gov. Mark White says it's too soon to talk about another special session.

"There's still time for them to do their work," White said Monday.

Senate leaders say Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby, who favors a sales tax increase to help solve the $3.5 billion budget deficit, has indicated the Senate won't approve spending cuts unless the House agrees to some form of tax hike.

But House leaders say their resolve to oppose any new taxes remains firm. Under the Texas Constitution, all tax bills must start in the House.

Asked if he saw a stalemate developing, White replied, "Not at all. They're making progress on other bills that are important, too."

The full House has approved a bill cutting more than $740 million from the state budget. A Senate committee, however, has approved its own version of a budget-trimming plan that would cut only about $418 million.

"I am in hopes of being able to accomplish what we need to in the next 10 days," White said.

The current 30-day special session began on Aug. 6. It is scheduled to end Sept. 4.

House Speaker Gib Lewis, D-Fort Worth, who has been solidly opposed to any tax hike at this time, last week said he canceled his planned September vacation in case White calls another special session.

On Monday, Lewis said he also hopes there is no stalemate, but he refused to rule out such a logjam.

"If we have not reached some conclusion or some stopping point, we'll be here Friday (Sept. 5)," Lewis said.

"We sent the appropriations bill over (to the Senate)," he said. "It's not...in never-never land, it's in the Senate. Some people might consider that never-never land, but I don't."

With the two spending cut plans so far apart, Lewis said only, "The conference committee's got a lot of work ahead of them."

Charities may lose millions under tax reform

HOUSTON (AP) — Texas charities stand to lose millions of dollars under the proposed income tax reform bill because taxpayers will have to itemize to deduct money they give to the poor, worried officials said.

The United Way of Texas alone could suffer up to $25 million in contribution losses over the next five years, UWT executive vice president Bill Link said.

"It's like a slap in the face," said Beverly Schneider, comptroller of Houston Catholic Charities. "This city is one with many economic problems, and after cutting off funds, the government expects us to take up the slack helping people in need."

Because of the reform bill, many taxpayers are expected to stop itemizing because they won't be able to write off Individual Retirement Accounts, consumer interest and sales taxes, analysts say.

In turn, since they need to itemize to do it, they will probably not make as many contributions to non-profit organizations, says Steve Delphin, spokesman for UWT's parent group based in Alexandria, Va.

"Congress is giving us (charities) conflicting messages," Delphin said. "First they cut programs, like day care and food programs, saying volunteer groups can pick up the slack. And now they are taking away the incentive to give to charities."

But some officials say most people who contribute are not looking for a tax writeoff.

Only about 20 percent of Americans taxpayers itemize under the current tax law, said Jack Devore, Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen's press secretary.

"It's like President Reagan said, the individual is going to get a tax cut of about $1 billion, and they will have enough money in their pockets that they'll give for the right reasons," Devore said.

Some charity organizers agree.

"The bill will have no great bearing on us," said Maj. Neil Saunders, a Salvation Army spokesman in El Paso. "People who give little items want to see people use it, and those are the people who give us the majority of our items."

At Southern Methodist University in Dallas, Colin French, director of planned giving said the impact would be "very slight." French said his office is scrambling to make use of the current tax code before it expires.

"We will see a decline in the amount given over the next two years as the tax bill is phased in, but people who are more interested in creating something other than tax deductions will continue to give," he says. "People will give just for the love of the school."

Still, others fear that donations will drop, causing a shortfall in their already strained budgets.

At the University of Texas system, administrators said fewer contributions could adversely affect growth and improvement in higher education.
