

Tax appraisal unrest grows

By MIKE DOWNEY
Staff Writer

Howard County Commissioner O.L. "Louis" Brown claims he, and county taxpayers, were given "erroneous information" about taxes staying the same after the reappraisal. Brown said in a letter to The Herald: "I was led to believe that the tax rate could be reduced ... where taxpayers would not have to pay any more tax this year than ... 1981."

However, Chief Appraiser Gene Pereira says he has never told anyone taxes would stay the same. Pereira, who said he has never met with Brown, said it was only "logical" for some taxes to rise.

"Everything, all property, has to go up exactly the same on an individual one-to-one basis to stay the same," Pereira said.

Jim Robinson, associate director of the Texas Property Tax Board, said taxes always vary after a reappraisal. "Generally, one-third pay more taxes; one-third pay the same; and one-third pay less," Robinson said.

Commissioner Brown, who joins several other elected officials in questioning the reappraisal, said he intended to investigate why "we were led to believe the tax rate could be reduced to the extent no one would suffer an increase." The commissioner said he found it "improbable" the county tax rate (contained on appraisal notices) will not generate more revenue than 1981.

Brown also claimed the adjustments currently being made by the appraisal office would reduce the county's tax base and "further inequities in the appraisals."

Pereira said the corrections being made would lower the tax base. "That's why I've used 'estimate' all the way," he said.

Brown, agreeing with other elected officials, urged taxpayers with increased values, to file a protest and appeal to the board of review. Pereira said, however, that taxpayers should not expect a "wild cut" of their values by the appraisal review board.

Car crash kills one

An accident, possibly involving a stolen car, killed one man and injured three others near the Glasscock County line last night, a Sterling City Department of Public Safety official said.

The car, a 1975 Oldsmobile Cutlass Supreme, had been reported stolen by Cresencio Gomez of Robstown, DPS Trooper Tim Bundick said. The case is still under investigation. "It's a mess. Nobody wants to say anything," Bundick said.

A hitchhiker, 39-year-old James Douglas Barrington of Covington, Ga. died of head, neck and facial wounds after the car hit a concrete culvert and rolled over, Bundick said.

The accident, which occurred about 7:15 p.m. 19 miles northwest of Sterling City, also injured Sao Renteria and Juan Valdez of Robstown and another hitchhiker, Silo Wagner of San Antonio.

The three were taken to Malone-Hogan hospital where Wagner is listed in stable condition with contusions, a hospital spokesman said. The other two were treated and released, Bundick said.

Council to mull rental rates

By CAROL DANIEL
Staff Writer

Master Leo T. Gaje Jr. has asked the Big Spring City Council to set a weekly rental rate for the Dora Roberts Community Center, according to the council's Tuesday agenda.

Gaje, national chairman of the National Arnis Association headquartered in Big Spring, requested one-week rental of the center's ballroom in December to hold a martial arts seminar.

The Parks and Recreation Board recommended rent be established at $100 per day with one-half due immediately and the remainder and deposit due one week before the seminar.

The matter is scheduled to be considered at Tuesday night's city council meeting at 6:30 p.m. in City Hall, Fourth and Nolan.

The council also is scheduled to discuss a mobile home permit request from Mr. and Mrs. Richard Haro. The couple asked permission to place a mobile home at 203 N.E. Sixth.

In another matter, the council will hear the second and final reading of an ordinance allowing the city to add a 15 percent penalty to delinquent taxes. At the last meeting, the council passed the ordinance on preliminary vote.

The Texas Legislature allowed taxing entities to impose the penalty to defray their collection costs.

TEARS — A Palestinian child cries outside a schoolhouse in the heart of Israeli-held west Beirut, while Israeli troops keep up the pressure on the PLO with more bombing.

The siege

Attack on Beirut continues

By The Associated Press

War-ravaged west Beirut shuddered under yet another heavy bombardment today as Israeli and Palestinian gunners traded punishing salvos of artillery, tank, rocket and mortar fire. Israeli warplanes also bombed Palestinian artillery positions 19 miles east of the Lebanese capital.

The latest shelling came amid reports that Israel has agreed to a phased withdrawal of PLO fighters from west Beirut. But completion of an agreement was stalled by Syria's continued refusal to accept any guerrillas until Israel agrees to withdraw its army from Lebanon, and by nettlesome details about the timing of the withdrawal and the arrival of an international peacekeeping force.

Sporadic shelling overnight picked up intensity after dawn, driving residents back into basements and shelters after a brief weekend respite, during which the Israelis turned on the taps allowing water into west Beirut for the first time in two weeks.

In today's exchanges, witnesses said Israeli tanks fired massive barrages at PLO positions near the National Museum checkpoint on the Green Line, dividing Christian east Beirut from the Moslem western district. The guerrillas battled back with mortars and bazookas.

Associated Press correspondents Tom Baldwin and Samuel Koo, watching from a rooftop vantage point close to the museum line in Christian east Beirut, said there was no sign of an Israeli armor advance despite the intensity of the tank fire.

Blaming PLO fighters for sparking the latest exchange, Israel said its gunners fired at the guerrillas who launched Katyusha rockets at Israeli forces near the city's race course. The Tel Aviv command also said its troops "consolidated" their positions around the PLO enclave at the Bourj al-Barajneh refugee camp on the southern edge of the city.

The military command also reported that Israeli jets bombed Palestinian artillery positions in Syrian-controlled territory 19 miles east of Beirut. The command charged that the guns had shelled Israeli positions east of Beirut. It was the first Israeli air raid in three days.

Big Spring cooled off by showers

A hardy thunderstorm moving through Big Spring late Sunday afternoon dumped heavy showers in the area and provided relief from the recent hot temperatures of summer.

The rain, accompanied by crackling lightning and rolling thunder, poured out in various amounts over the city and area, according to residents. The U.S. Big Spring Field Station recorded nine-tenths of an inch which brings the city's 1982 rainfall to 12.67 inches. Normal for the year is 11.13 inches.

The cool rain did have its drawbacks though, as high water was reported by the Big Spring Police Department on Alamesa St. between Parkway and Wason Road. The sudden high water caught some motorists unaware and caused several cars to stall in the area.

The Big Spring Fire Department was kept busy during the rain as it answered eight calls, according to a department spokesman. The calls were minor ones and only one of the calls pertained to lighting as an air conditioner apparently was struck by a bolt of lightning.

Big Spring Cable TV service was hampered by the storm yesterday as lightning caused a service interruption in some areas for approximately an hour and a half before repairs could be made to damaged equipment.

Jim Lancaster, manager of Big Spring Cable TV, said lightning struck and destroyed a transformer which had to be replaced at the corner of 15th and Owens. He also said six fuses in various parts of town were blown out by the lightning. Lancaster said crews were out minutes after the rain stopped and had repairs effected in "one and a half to two hours."

Rainfall reports in the area ranged from one-tenth to 2.5 inches.

James D. "Red" Thomas of 107 E. 13th measured 2 inches in approximately 30 minutes. Chuck Benz of 2807 Apache said 1.75 fell at his home. A spokeswoman at Elbow Elementary said approximately 1 inch of rain drenched that area during the thunderstorm. The Planters Gin in Lomax received nine-tenths of an inch.

O.A. Ivie of the CRMWD said he did not expect any appreciable rainfall amounts to be reported from the company's pump stations.

"From what I can tell from visiting with personnel late last night the rainfall the area got was confined to Big Spring," he said.

The National Weather Service is predicting a 30 percent chance of rain again today with cooler temperatures.

6 shot in Grand Prairie

GRAND PRAIRIE, Texas (AP) — A man went on a shooting rampage this morning, killing at least six people and wounding or injuring four others before police killed him, authorities said.

The man began shooting at people in a warehouse district of this Dallas suburb, police spokeswoman Alexia Griffin said. He shot his victims in three different locations before he had a running gun battle with police, authorities said.

He was in an 18-wheel semi-trailer truck when he rammed a police car, critically injuring one officer. He fired at police from his truck and they returned the fire with pistols, rifles and shotguns. He managed to get out of his truck after it rammed a telephone pole. The man continued firing, and was killed by police gunfire.

Police got the first call at 8:02 a.m. and reported the shooting spree ended at 8:27 a.m. when the gunman rammed a police barricade. The rampage covered a 15-square-block area in the west central part of town.

Threat of prison doesn't stop crime, report suggests

WASHINGTON (AP) — The threat of mandatory prison terms for lawbreakers doesn't necessarily reduce crime, according to a new study prepared for the Justice Department.

In the study, released Sunday, researchers examined New York's required imprisonment of certain drug offenders and a Massachusetts law mandating a one-year prison term for illegal possession of a gun.

"Although the intent has been to reduce crime by increasing the certainty and severity of punishment, the available evidence shows a large gap between legislative intent and actual criminal justice practice," the report said.

"It is difficult, perhaps fundamentally impossible, to substantiate the popular claim that mandatory sentencing is an effective tool for reducing crime," it said.

The report, prepared by a private consulting firm for the department's National Institute of Justice, does not necessarily reflect the department's views.

President Reagan in a speech last September called for mandatory prison terms for anyone convicted of carrying a gun while committing a felony.

Thirty-two states have mandatory sentences, many of them for gun-related crimes, according to the American Civil Liberties Union. Several states also have various related plans restricting judges' authority to grant probation or shorten the length of prison terms.

THE CONSULTING firm, Abt Associates Inc. of Cambridge, Mass., noted that following enactment of mandatory sentencing laws, drug deaths in New York City fell, and armed assault, armed robbery and homicides dipped in Massachusetts.

But it said attributing the reductions to mandatory sentences was difficult to substantiate, since both laws were adopted at times of unusually high crime rates and the decrease could be due to other factors.

"Highly ambiguous statistical results should be a source of caution to those who promise that mandatory sentencing will deliver more certain punishment, harsher penalties and reductions in crime," the researchers said.

"In view of the uncertain consequences of mandatory sentencing provisions, such promises can only be based on faith, not fact," they added.

For example, the researchers said they found that police sometimes are reluctant to enforce the laws involving mandatory sentences because court cases drag out longer and defendants often flee in the interim.

"Perhaps the clearest lesson of the experience is that sentencing is only a part of the whole picture of crime and punishment, and that the results of legislation depend not only on the provisions of law, but on the environment in which the law operates," the report said.

Focalpoint

Action reaction: Office hours

Q. Isn't there any way the tax appraisal office can stay open at night so that people who work days can meet with the appraisers?

A. If individuals can come by the office sometime during the day, they can sign up for a meeting. Chief Appraiser Gene Pereira said. He noted the appraisers and his staff were staying until 7:30 or 8 p.m. every day to meet with people. Although the office stops taking names at 5 p.m., it holds meetings until completed, Pereira said. "They (appraisal office staff) volunteered to stay late," he said. The bulk of the concerned parties could meet during the day, Pereira said.

Skeletons found buried inside Hill County well

BLUM, Texas (AP) — Authorities say a year-long murder investigation led them to the skeletal remains of perhaps four people and prompted them to arrest a "mountain man" who lives in the remote area where the bodies were recovered.

Acting on an informant's tip, authorities burrowed 25 feet into an abandoned, dirt-filled well Sunday to recover the remains.

Hill County Sheriff Brent Button said the man in custody was arrested at his house Saturday and was being held in the county jail. Button said the man would be questioned today, but had not been charged.

"The man is pretty much a mountain man who lives all over these hills," Button said. "He's quite a character."

The sheriff said his office began its investigation after hearing widespread and persistent reports that several missing people had been slain and their bodies dumped in a well.

"Some rumors had them shot and others had them hit in the head with an ax," he said.

Button said investigators believe four more bodies may be concealed in the wooded, remote area of Central Texas. Authorities planned to continue excavating today in the area of the abandoned well, accessible only by a twisting dirt trail.

The sheriff said the only motive so far appears to be a series of "fights between drinking buddies."

He said the victims apparently had been dumped into the well over a long period of time, but authorities could not immediately pinpoint the cause of death.

Button said one intact skeleton of a man and bone fragments of at least two other people were sent to forensic experts in Dallas for analysis. He said the fragments possibly could come from three bodies.

Protestors set to square off at state textbook hearings

AUSTIN (AP) — Fifty-five protestors representing a political spectrum including feminists and religious conservatives are set today for the start of the battle over which textbooks will be used in Texas schools.

The Texas Education Agency's textbook selection committee begins five days of hearings in Austin today to draft a list of books school districts may purchase.

Texas' textbook selections are of particular importance to publishers because of the volume purchased by Texas schools, about $60 million worth annually.

The hearings this year have drawn the attention of television situation comedy producer Norman Lear's anti-censorship group, "People for the American Way."

The Lear group announced last month that it would battle conservative textbook protesters Mel and Norma Gabler of Longview at the Texas proceedings. The group asked to testify at the hearing, but was told it could submit only written comment.

"Texas is the second-largest market for textbook sales, accounting for about 8 percent of the nation's textbook purchases," said People for the American Way state coordinator Michael Hudson at a July 29 news conference.

"Education experts agree that a textbook that is rejected by Texas is almost guaranteed to be an economic failure nationally," he said.

The Gablers have received national attention for their conservative approach to textbook selection, protesting books that contain ideas contrary to their interpretation of the Bible, or that do not support their view of "traditional family" values.

Another group that regularly protests textbooks is the National Organization for Women, which objects to books that portray females in stereotypical or inferior roles.

NOW had several representatives signed up for the hearings this week.

After the state textbook committee hears all the objections, it will meet Sept. 7 to compile a list of books it will recommend for adoption. State Education Commissioner Raymon Bynum approves the final list.

The hearings are held yearly, with subjects rotated, so lists of approved purchases are valid for up to eight years.

Books adopted during this fall's process can be bought by school districts beginning Sept. 1, 1983. Textbook expenditures for the coming school year, including replacements and specialized reading materials, will total about $60 million, said TEA officials.

Police Beat Scuffle leads to man's arrest

Police said they arrested 45-year-old Willie Myles of Northeast Apartments No. 59, 1002 N. Main, yesterday on suspicion of assault on a police officer, resisting arrest and aggravated assault.

The arrest was made at 5:15 p.m. after police and Shaffer ambulance attendants responded to a report of a possible stabbing at the apartment, police said.

Mrs. Jeraline Myles told police her husband had beaten her and she wanted to file charges, police said. The ambulance attendant reported Mrs. Myles had a broken wrist and possibly a broken arm. She was treated and released from Malone-Hogan emergency room, a hospital spokesman said.

The suspect struck officer Curtis Becker in the arm and chest when Becker and the another officer told Myles he was under arrest, police said. Two other officers arrived, handcuffed Myles and took him to city jail, police said.

6 shot dead in Paris restaurant

PARIS (AP) — At least three men with automatic weapons sprayed bullets at a lunchtime crowd at a popular Jewish restaurant today, killing at least six people and wounding 15 others before escaping, police said.

The attackers opened fire shortly after 1 p.m. (6 a.m. CDT) near Jo Goldenberg's Restaurant on the Rue des Rosiers in central Paris, then ran down the street shooting wildly at passersby and escaped on foot down a sidestreet, police and witnesses said. Earlier unconfirmed reports said the gunmen opened fire near a synagogue.

No group immediately claimed responsibility. It was the fourth anti-Semitic attack in Paris in a week. A left-wing anarchist group has claimed responsibility for earlier attacks, saying they were retaliations for Israel's 2-month-old invasion of Lebanon to rout the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Police said at least three attackers were involved, but it was unclear if the shooting started inside or near the restaurant. Witnesses said between two and four gunmen escaped, and described them as "Mediterranean looking."

Pools of blood soaked the floor of the popular eatery and the sidewalk outside, and emergency medical teams erected a makeshift hospital across the street to treat the wounded. One of the dead was a plainclothes police officer, police said.

"Don't cry for me," wailed restaurant owner Jo Goldenberg, who was uninjured. "Cry for the others. It was horrible, horrible."

Hinckley won't seek his release

WASHINGTON (AP) — Presidential assailant John W. Hinckley Jr. is returning to court to tell a federal judge he will not "at this time" seek release from a hospital where doctors consider him mentally ill and dangerous.

U.S. District Judge Barrington D. Parker ordered Hinckley back into court today, although Hinckley has agreed in writing to waive a hearing on his release.

The last time he was in Parker's courtroom, Hinckley stood, tears streaking down his cheeks, while a jury found him innocent by reason of insanity of the March 30, 1981, shooting of Reagan and three other men.

That verdict, seven weeks ago today, generated nationwide outrage and gave new vigor to a congressional drive to change the insanity law.

Hinckley, 27, faced life imprisonment if convicted on charges of attempting to assassinate the president and assaulting, with intent to kill, Reagan, White House Press Secretary James Brady and two law enforcement officers.

Instead, as required under the law, he was sent to St. Elizabeths mental hospital in Washington for evaluation on June 21. The law entitled him to a hearing within 50 days to determine if he should remain institutionalized. It was that proceeding Parker scheduled for today.

Nagasaki remembers

Atomic bomb hit city 37 years ago today

NAGASAKI, Japan (AP) — Church bells rang over this cradle of Japanese Christianity at 11:02 a.m. today as residents paid a moment of silent tribute to the 74,000 people killed in the American atomic bombing of the city 37 years ago today.

The bells also memorialized nearly 300 people killed last month in flooding and landslides caused by torrential rains that swept Nagasaki and surrounding areas of southwestern Japan.

Commuter trains throughout the city came to a halt. Rescue workers, still digging for victims of the July 23 floods, laid down their shovels to observe a moment of silence and pray for peace.

In Peace Park, built near the explosion point of the second atomic bomb drop, Prime Minister Zenko Suzuki led 20,000 bomb victims and sympathizers in a memorial service.

Suzuki reaffirmed the nation's commitment to the principle that it will never possess, produce or allow nuclear weapons in the area.

"The threat to world peace is continuing, with the world arms race intensifying and international tensions rising," said Suzuki. "Japan is doing its utmost to maintain world peace."

Roman Catholic churches held special peace masses for the city's estimated 40,000 Catholics. Nagasaki has remained the heart of Christianity in Japan since the first Europeans brought the religion to the city in the 16th century.

The Nagasaki bombing on Aug. 9, 1945, came three days after the bombing of Hiroshima. In addition to an estimated 74,000 people killed, 75,000 were injured.

These victims, called "hibakusha" in Japanese, are a dwindling army of witnesses to the suffering caused by nuclear weapons. About 1,500 die every year, and the survivors worry that as time passes the horrors of nuclear weapons will become too abstract.

"The leaders of the world will soon be a new generation, and they don't know the horror of nuclear weapons. That is very dangerous," said Dr.

Tatsuhiro Akizuki, who was about a mile away when the bomb exploded.

Most of the seriously injured have died, he said. About 10 percent of the surviving victims are disabled in some way and receive government subsidies of $150 to $450 a month, amounts the victims claim are "stingy."

Miyoko Yamaguchi, now 68, said she, too, worries that "things tend to be forgotten."

"Every day as I do my daily chores, I wonder what my life would have been like if my husband and sisters had not been killed," she said.

Mrs. Yamaguchi was in the basement of the Nagasaki Medical College hospital on that day. Two months pregnant, she shielded her year-old daughter when the bomb exploded about 700 yards away.

About 1.2 million people a year visit the city's peace museum, built in 1955 after the end of the U.S. occupation ended its prohibition of discussion of the atomic bomb attacks.

A U.S. sailor, visiting from nearby Sasebo Naval Base, said the museum's displays of photographs awakened him to the destructive powers of nuclear weapons.

"It never hit me before, the threat we are all living under. What really scares me is that the Nagasaki bomb was a small weapon, just a toy compared to the nuclear weapons we have now," said Seaman Jim Ham-mill, of Enterprise, Ala.

"I'm in the service, but I don't like war. I got a job to do, getting planes to land on my ship. They say we dropped the bombs on Hiroshima and Nagasaki to save a million lives that would have been lost if we had had to invade Japan. It was war. What can you say?"

Salvador leftists attack

SAN MIGUEL, El Salvador (AP) — Leftist guerrillas killed 14 soldiers and an undetermined number of national guardsmen in a weekend siege on the northeast town of Ciudad Barrios, military officers said today.

Guerrillas fighting all day Saturday and early Sunday destroyed the town's national guard command post with rocket barrages, local residents said. It was not known how many guardsmen were killed.

On Saturday, guerrillas ambushed two troop trucks four miles south of the town, killing 14 soldiers with rocket and automatic rifle fire, officers based in the nearby city of San Miguel said.

Four-hundred tearful relatives and friends attended a funeral for the soldiers Sunday afternoon in San Miguel, about 12 miles south of Ciudad Barrios.

Officers said it was the heaviest troop loss the army garrison based in San Miguel had taken in a single battle since El Salvador's civil war erupted three years ago.

Turkish troops move in after airport slaying of 9

ANKARA, Turkey (AP) — The government assigned extra troops to Turkish airports and resort areas to protect them against a followup to the Armenian terrorist attack that killed nine people and wounded 71 at the Ankara airport.

Authorities feared Saturday's three-hour rampage of explosions and gunfire by Armenian nationalists was the first of a series of attacks in Turkey. The Secret Army for the Liberation of Armenia claimed credit for the attack Saturday and said more bombings and killings would follow within seven days if 85 Armenians are not released from prisons in the United States, Canada and several Western European countries.

Armenian nationalists have been striking at Turkish targets abroad for the last nine years, but Saturday's attack was their first terrorist action within Turkish borders.

Turkish officials said extra troops were assigned to the international airports at Istanbul, the country's largest city, and Izmir, the second largest seaport after Istanbul. Reinforcements were also sent to resort areas on the Aegean coast where thousands of European and other foreign tourists spend their vacations at this time of the year.

The martial-law government, which took power in September 1980 following a wave of political violence by leftist and rightist groups, began an investigation to find out how the Armenians entered the airport and concealed their weapons, security officials said.

Turkish media expressed anger and astonishment that the gunmen successfully evaded airport security checks.

Military spokesmen said Saturday's attack was carried out by two terrorists, one of whom was killed and the other wounded and captured. Some eyewitnesses said there was a third gunman, but the government denied this.

An American woman, Jean G. Bosworth of Falmouth, Mass., and a West German engineer, Herbert Rosanowski, were among the nine dead. Other victims included three policemen, a Turkish passenger, an unidentified woman and the airport manager.

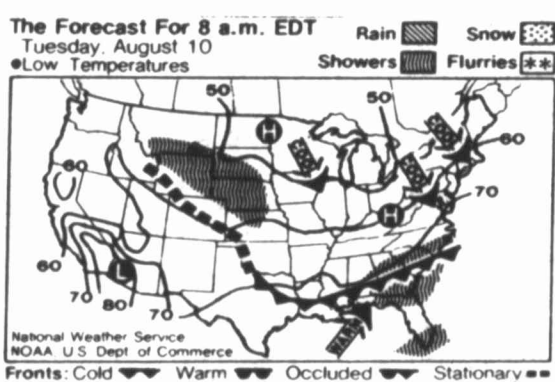

The Massachusetts woman was shot in the back as she tried to run, police said. Her husband, Donald Bosworth, was injured by shrapnel but was reported in good condition at an Ankara hospital. He is an electrical engineer who had been working on hydroelectric projects in Turkey for several years.

Eyewitnesses said the gunmen mingled with Turkish passengers seeing off relatives leaving for West Germany. Suddenly, they said, the gunmen set off at least one bomb and sprayed the crowded lounge with gunfire.

The police said they opened fire, wounding and capturing one of the gunmen, but the other one ran into the airport cafeteria, took about 20 people hostage and threw an explosive that wounded several people. The police stormed the cafeteria and killed the gunman, the military command said.

The Secret Army is one of four Armenian terrorist groups blamed for the killing of at least 22 officials of Turkish government missions abroad and members of their families and staffs since 1973. The organizations say they are avenging the massacre of Armenians by the Ottoman Turks between 1894 and 1915. They are also demanding creation of an Armenian state in eastern Turkey.

More storms forecast

By The Associated Press

Scattered thunderstorms were forecast for much of Texas today.

Forecasts called for scattered thunderstorms over southern sections of the state and for widely scattered thunderstorms over northern and western sections of the state.

Highs were to be mostly in the 80s and 90s.

Only a few isolated showers were reported around the state early today after widespread thundershowers activity late Sunday.

Street flooding was reported at Haskell late Sunday where an estimated 5-6 inches of rain fell. At least one home at Haskell was flooded.

Skies were partly cloudy statewide early today. Some light fog was reported over the eastern half of the state.

FORECAST

West Texas — Partly cloudy with widely scattered afternoon and evening thunderstorms south, otherwise fair through Tuesday. Highs 80s mountain and north to upper 90s extreme south. Lows mostly 40s except near 70 Big Bend. Highs Tuesday 90s, except near 101 Big Bend valleys.

More violence in Northern Ireland

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Irish nationalists ambushed a police patrol in Armagh early today and youngsters hurled gasoline bombs in three other cities in protests marking the 11th anniversary of a Britain's internment-without-trial order in Northern Ireland.

Five policemen and one British soldier were wounded, none seriously, and authorities jailed at least 42 people in disturbances that erupted after midnight, police said. But the trouble was reportedly less widespread than in previous years.

A police spokesman said there were no police casualties in the bomb and bullet attack on four officers in Armagh, Ireland's ancient ecclesiastical capital. He said the attackers, believed to be militants in the mainly Roman Catholic Irish Republican Army, escaped.

There was no immediate claim of responsibility for the ambush by the IRA, which is fighting to end British rule in Northern Ireland and unite the Protestant-dominated province with the overwhelmingly Catholic Irish Republic.

In Belfast, which apparently suffered the worst violence, a police spokesman said rioters pelted officers with gasoline bombs, attacked the central police station and gutted a factory and restaurant.

Police reported most of the arrests in Belfast and Northern Ireland's other main city Londonderry, where gangs of young Catholics lobbed more than 100 gasoline bombs at police, who retaliated by firing stinging plastic bullets at the rioters.

Sporadic violence was also reported in Cookstown, County Tyrone, where a store was burned out.

Police said a man from Belfast's Catholic New Lodge area was hospitalized with a gunshot wound in the leg after he had apparently been "kneecapped" by a guerrilla punishment squad.

Giant bonfires were lit in Catholic quarters to commemorate the pre-dawn roundup of 300 IRA suspects by British troops on Aug. 9, 1971.

Drowned scouts 'ran out of energy'

CHATTAROY, Wash. (AP) — Four Boy Scouts and two of their leaders found floating dead in a glacier-fed lake in Canada apparently died of hypothermia while trying to bail out their canoes, a scout official says.

The bodies of the six, all from eastern Washington, were found at dusk Friday, floating head-up and wearing life jackets along the shore of Lake McNaughton in the Canadian Rockies.

"They were in the Ram Patrol, our most experienced group," Troop 207 scoutmaster Lynn Hunt of Chattaroy said Sunday. "We had them follow the others because they were the best."

Hunt theorized that the Ram Patrol ran into rough water after stopping in a cove and started taking on water.

"They probably couldn't maneuver and had to get out of the canoes to get rid of the water," he said.

The Scouts made it as far as dumping out the water and righting the canoes.

"Then they must have run out of energy and hypothermia set in," Hunt said. "The water was maybe 45 degrees or so. We had been bathing and swimming in it all week."

"There was no sign of panic," Hunt said. "One of the leaders still had his hat and glasses on. It was like they had just gone to sleep in the water. They probably ran out of energy and died."

The victims were part of a group of 29 Scouts and leaders that traveled across the mountain lake last week.

The dead were identified as David Allen Fair, 41, and Nathan Jerome Peterson, 13, both of Elk, Wash.; Rickey Dale Taylor, 29, of Newport, Wash.; and Gary Merritt, Derek Samuel Maxfield and Gregory Relden Whittle, all 13 and from Chattaroy.

Lake McNaughton is about 110 miles long but only one-half mile to 3 miles wide.

Other patrols saw and talked to members of the Ram Patrol last Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday.

"But then things got sort of strange on the lake," Hunt said. "The wind started blowing and the swells grew."

The Scouts were trained in rough water survival, their leader said. "Each patrol lashed its two canoes together, attached a sail in the middle and started sailing," he said. "It was one of the most fun days ever."

Gradually, the 8-inch swells grew to 2-foot waves.

"I was with the two point patrols and we pulled over several times to decide whether to continue," Hunt said. "Our decision was to go on. We never felt there was any undue risk."

About noon Wednesday, the Cougar Patrol saw the Ram's canoes head into a small cove on the lake's west side.

That was the last time the four boys and their leaders were seen alive. Thursday morning, another patrol found one of the Ram's canoes floating empty in the water.

The four patrols that made it to Mica Creek, a town of about 100, thought their friends were waiting for a powerboat to transport them up the lake.

Hunt set out in a helicopter to look for the Ram campsite. He spotted a second empty canoe.

Two other helicopters were enlisted and the older Scouts joined several leaders in powerboats to help with the search along shore. Near Kinbasket Arm, only a few feet from shore, they saw the bodies.

In one of the rescue boats was Wayne Fair, 14-year-old son of David Fair.

"He helped pull his dad from the water," Hunt said.

One-parent families

Their number has grown 53% since 1970

WASHINGTON (AP) — As more and more Americans divorce or separate, the number of children living with only one parent has climbed to one in five, the Census Bureau says.

And in almost all those cases, the children stay with their mother.

The bureau said Sunday that 20.1 percent of children under age 18 live with one parent. That's about 12.6 million children — one out of every five — an increase of 53.9 percent from 1970.

The study said about 90 percent of the children in one-parent families lived with their mothers.

The number living with fathers grew 61 percent between 1970 and 1981.

1981, from 748,000 to 1.2 million, the bureau said. But their proportion remained small. In fact, more children lived with other relatives (1.9 million) than lived with their father only (1.2 million).

Divorce was listed as the primary reason children lived with one parent, while some resided with a parent who was separated, widowed or divorced.

The study "Marital Status and Living Arrangements: March 1981" also reported that:

- The divorce ratio grew from 47 to 109 divorces per 1,000 married persons with spouse present between 1970 and 1981.
- Twenty-two percent of women aged 25 to 29 in 1981 had never married, double the percent in 1970.
- And the median age at first marriage for both men and women has increased by 18 months since 1970. In 1981, the median age at first marriage was 22.3 years for women and 24.8 for men.

Overall, the report said Americans had a rate of 109 divorced persons for every 1,000 married ones in 1981. The rate was 47 per 1,000 in 1970 and 35 per 1,000 in 1960.

The divorce figure was calculated on the status of people when the survey was taken. Those who divorce and then remarry are counted among the married, not the divorced.

Man held for beating nun

CHICAGO (AP) — An ex-convict previously convicted of attacking an elderly woman was being held on $500,000 bond on charges of beating and stabbing a 60-year-old Roman Catholic nun who had offered him food.

Sister Mary Constance Polek underwent surgery Friday after being stabbed 18 times in the face and choked with a bicycle chain, authorities said. She was listed in good condition late Sunday.

Joseph Barnes, 27, was charged with attempted murder, attempted rape, armed robbery and home invasion, police said.

Water is our biggest problem

With a 50 per cent surge in population projected for Texas over the next 18 years, the state can expect some problems, and the biggest one will be water.

In fact, water scarcity holds the greatest potential for disrupting the Texas economy.

WE HAVE INHERITED vast amounts of good quality water which have been stored for centuries in water-bearing formations below ground level. Only in the last few decades have significant amounts been withdrawn from these groundwater accounts.

Because water stored underground is a more dependable water supply than rainfall and requires less treatment than water from rivers or reservoirs, Texans presently use twice as much groundwater as surface water. Water pumped from underground reservoirs called aquifers furnishes more than half of the state's city systems and irrigates seven million acres of Texas cropland each year.

The problem is that every year we withdraw 12 million acre-feet from our groundwater savings — 7 million acre-feet more than nature deposits annually. This deficit spending has already seriously depleted major groundwater supplies in the state.

TEXANS MUST LEARN to manage their water income without going in the red every year. Just as in any budgeting situation, we must start by cutting out wasteful or frivolous spending.

Before we spend down to our last acre-foot, we must learn to reduce our extravagant taste for water. We should also save enough water to see us through the driest of times.

The greatest potential for reducing the state's water use is to develop more water efficient ways to produce crops.

But the best investment Texans can make today to assure a prosperous future for their state is in water resources research.

Research can help us (1) balance our water budget, (2) protect our assets, (3) reduce our demands, and (4) manage our capital.

We must learn to live within our means. We must develop a sound plan for water management before we are down to our last acre-foot.

How we save and spend the water today could be the most important decisions we make for the future.

Football fallout

One of the craziest things grown men do this time of year is attempt to play football in the August heat. Yes, professional football made its debut this year on August 7 with the Minnesota Vikings playing the Baltimore Colts in the annual Hall of Fame game. I don't know about you, but I'm just not ready for football to start.

First of all it's just too hot. This is baseball weather, not football weather. Football is an October sport, not an August sport. Recently, I went to watch the Houston Oilers work out in San Angelo. The players were all sweaty and looking for shade trees to sit under, while the fans all stood around getting sunburned and paying big money to a concessionaire for small cups of Coca-Cola. Nobody seemed to be having a very good time, so I knew it wasn't time for football to start.

Another thing that bothered me about the Vikings-Colts game this past Saturday was why did the networks begin with such a boring game? The Colts were 2-14 last year, while the Vikings were 7-9 for the season. These teams would hardly make a diehard fan go out and stock the refrigerator with beer and snacks in anticipation of a great afternoon of football.

Why didn't the networks arrange for the 49ers to play the Cowboys? Surely having last year's Superbowl champs and America's team playing would have sparked more interest than two cellar-dwellers sweating in the summer sun.

ANNOUNCING THE game Saturday were Frank Gifford and Howard Cosell without the aid of either Don Meredith or Fran Tarkenton. Starting the season so early means we must endure just that much more of Howard and his cronies' commentary.

I've never figured out why it takes three of them to announce a game. Frank's okay, but he's just not that exciting. He's competent enough, but he has the personality of a fence post. Don is the best thing that has happened to broadcasting in a while simply because he doesn't take himself seriously. Fran should stay on "That's Incredible" because he is an incredibly bad announcer. And that leaves Howard — does anybody know what he does except provide obscure statistics that no one cares about?

Starting the season so early makes the chances of an injury to a player increase. After six months of games even the most hardy player is bound to feel some aches and pains. Superbowl teams play approximately 25 games a year and I'm willing to wager that from two to four key players on those teams will either miss the Superbowl or be playing with severe injuries. Sometimes it seems we expect too much of the players without realizing what they have to go through just to complete a season. With all the pain and stress it's no wonder some of them turn to drugs and alcohol for an escape.

FOOTBALL SHOULD wait a while before starting. People soon will be too interested in the World Series to care how football teams are doing. Someone should make a rule stating that football can't begin until after the World Series. Then we'd have fewer players injured, less Howard Cosell and summer wouldn't seem like it was over so soon.

On the energy front

WASHINGTON — Continued fighting in the Middle East draws new attention to the matter of energy security. Only now the country has a new, and unusually candid spokesman on that perplexing subject. Secretary of the Interior James Watt has revealed an approach so hooked on free enterprise that it compromises this country's most vital foreign connections and weakens its energy security.

Secretary Watt showed the administration's hand in a letter to liberal members of Congress. His congressional letter is not confused with his letter to the Israeli ambassador, for which Watt apologized at the behest of the White House. On the contrary, at his news conference last week, President Reagan endorsed the congressional letter. In it, Watt

"It would be easier to explain to the American people why we have oil rigs off our coasts than it would be to explain to the mothers and fathers of this land why their sons are fighting in the sands of the Middle East."

THE UNMISTAKABLE implication is that the U.S. can unload its security responsibilities in the Middle East by finding more oil at home. But what engages the U.S. in the Middle East is not the oil need of this country. In fact, the U.S. currently brings in less than 5 percent of its oil from the Persian Gulf.

Japan, in contrast, imports over 80 percent of its oil from that part of the world. Western Europe brings in about 70 percent from that source. If the Persian Gulf fell to the Soviet Union, there would take place a major shift in the world balance of power. So it is for reasons of global security, intimately involving the welfare of

Manna from heaven

WASHINGTON — Most rational people would have a hard time making the connection between a $4 million heating plant in Minnesota and the International Communication Agency's desire to move its scattered offices into a single building in downtown Washington.

But there is a connection, and his name is Charles Z. Wick. He is not only the director of ICA, but a close friend of President Reagan. And he desperately wants congressional approval for the agency's consolidation into one building, instead of having the various offices housed all over the capital in rented space.

So Rep. Arlan Stangeland, R-Minn., is using Wick and the ICA as a lever to pry support for a heating plant in his district out of a reluctant administration. As the ranking minority members of the House buildings subcommittee, Stangeland has a lot to say about whether the president's buddy Wick gets his consolidation plan okayed by Congress.

When he brought up the Minnesota heating plant to the astonished ICA director, Stangeland said later, he was just trying to get the administration's attention — like the man with the two-by-four and the recalcitrant mule. Under a little pressure, the administration "takes not just a cursory look, they take a good look" at his cherished heating plant, he explained to my associate Peter Grant.

Stangeland wasn't the only one to hear opportunity knocking when Wick approached the subcommittee for help. Rep. Elliott Levitas, D-Ga., told the president's friend his consolidation proposal would be approved "in 24 hours" if the administration would do just one small favor: support legislation that would let the General Services Administration borrow from the Treasury to construct government buildings.

Levitas insists that this bill would save the taxpayers hundreds of millions of dollars. It would also, of course, substantially increase the subcommittee's power — and Levitas would be in line for the chairmanship when Rep. John Fary, D-Ill., retires this year.

Levitas candidly acknowledges that he broached the GSA plan to the ICA director because Wick is "a very influential person in this administration." The congressman said he's "always looking for intermediaries to get messages back to people."

It seems that Wick will never be lonely as long as he has the president's ear — and wants something from Congress. Even Fary, the outgoing chairman, twice mentioned to Wick his deep interest in having the government waive postal fees for packages to Poland. Fary brought up the matter first in Washington, then again at a Fourth of July ceremony Wick attended in Fary's heavily Polish Chicago district.

The thing to remember is that none of the subcommittee members seem to have any serious reservations about the ICA consolidation plan, which government auditors have estimated would increase the agency's efficiency and save the taxpayers more than $10 million over 10 years.

So the free market approach landed the administration in its present pickle on the Soviet pipeline deal. It delivered, as Secretary Watt still delivers, the message that the U.S. doesn't care about the energy requirements of its major allies.

EVEN THIS country's energy security, moreover, has not been well served by complete reliance on the market. The oil glut has made it difficult to use the price mechanism as an incentive for new production. In the past six months alone, the number of rigs active in this country has dropped from 4,500 to 2,900. To stimulate new ventures in oil and gas and coal, Secretary Watt practically has to give away the mining rights.

Still, the administration has moved to destroy various programs for synthetic fuel production and research into solar energy. Even the drive for nuclear energy — which the President favors — has been compromised by ineptitude in developing programs for waste disposal, and for more rapid certification on the design and siting of nuclear power plants.

IN ONE AREA, to be sure, the administration has performed well. The Defense Department has been active in filling the Strategic Petroleum Reserve. So the U.S. is less vulnerable to an emergency cutoff in oil supplies.

Otherwise, the Reagan administration has made zero progress in improving this country's energy security. To calculate that any foreign policy objective ought to be subordinate to that energy program is to calculate that something is less than nothing. It is sheer thoughtlessness. But, of course, the case against ideological zealots is precisely that they don't think.

College has me scared

DEAR DR. GRAHAM: In just a few weeks I will be going away to college. Do you have any advice to give me, especially so I can remain a good Christian? It all has me a bit scared. —K.L.

DEAR K.L.: I hope you will use the few weeks you have before going to college to prepare yourself. The college years can be great ones for you — or they can be very harmful to you spiritually. Now is the time to decide which they will be.

First of all, now is the time to decide without reserve that Jesus Christ will be Lord of everything you do — not just in college, but for the rest of your life. I assume that you have invited Christ into your life to be your personal Savior — but is he actually in control of your life? In college you will probably face many decisions — about your career, your goals in life, your marriage. You also will face many temptations — which will be much stronger because you are going to be away from home. Now is the time to tell Christ that you want his will for everything. Let your desire be that of the writer of Psalm 40: "I desire to do your will, O my God; your law is within my heart" (Psalm 40:8).

Then determine that you will make your college years a time of spiritual growth and witness. You need to set aside time each day to study God's Word and pray. There will be times when this will be difficult to do because you will be busy — but that makes it that much more essential. A consistent time to be alone with God each day should be one of your top priorities. Begin it now. In addition, pray right now that God will lead you to other Christians on your campus for fellowship. If you are attending a secular college, you may find there are relatively few who are actively following Christ. But you need each other.

Pray also that God will help you to be a witness for him. All around you — in your dorm, in your classes, in your social activities — are people who are searching for peace and meaning in life. Let God use you — and as you do you will find he will strengthen you.

Terrorists need death penalty

Dear Editor:

In the last decade, over sixty threats to unleash nuclear materials have been made in the United States. While no device has been detonated, the dissemination of information about nuclear devices increases the prospects for disaster in the all-too-near future.

To this end, the U.S. and other nations participated in the Convention on the Physical Protection of Nuclear Material, which obligates its signatories to take appropriate steps to insure the protection of such material. The State Department and the Judiciary Committee have used the vehicle of H.R. 5228 to create criminal offenses.

This bill falls far short of providing a deterrent to one who might kill millions of people. Under the bill as presently drafted, a nuclear terrorist who intentionally removed New York City from the map might receive life, but would most likely receive only a 20-year term of imprisonment and might be released on parole after only 7 years.

To put teeth in this law, I offered an amendment to provide the death penalty if death or severe injury resulted from nuclear terrorism. The amendment failed and I intended to offer it again on the House floor. However, the leadership in the House is trying to consider this bill under a procedure which will prevent my amendment from being offered. This "gag rule" should not be tolerated.

With the increased concern of Americans about crime, the prevention of the opportunity to offer a death penalty amendment for such a serious crime is unfair. It is incumbent on us to show the cold-hearted, calculating fanatics who use nuclear terrorism that the U.S. intends to fight them with strong measures.

This legislation should be brought before the House of Representatives under an open rule so that Congressmen will have an opportunity to vote on and debate the issue. If there ever was a crime which merits the death penalty, nuclear terrorism is it.

Sincerely,
F. JAMES SENSENBRENNER, JR.,
Member of Congress

U.S. skier dies on Chinese slope

BEIJING, AP — I heard the ice crunch behind me and thought it was the wind howling, but when I turned around Roger was gone," the leader of an American mountaineering expedition said today.

I thought we were safe and Roger was just a few feet behind me but he slipped on the ice, skidded to the cliff and fell 2,000 feet down a precipice," Steve Creer of Denver, Colo., told The Associated Press.

Creer said Roger Kirkpatrick, a 41-year-old English teacher from Princeton, N.J., was killed July 29 after the two men skied to the top of Mount Muztagata, a 24,757-foot peak in the Xinjiang region of northwest China.

Kirkpatrick died on the descent at about 24,213 feet, Creer reported. He was the third American killed in a mountaineering accident in China in two years. Last May a woman climber, Marty Hoey of Seattle, fell to her death on Mount Everest, and on Oct. 13, 1980, Jonathan Wright, an ABC cameraman from Colorado, was killed in an avalanche on Mount Gongga, in Sichuan province.

Creer himself was lost for four days without food, tent or equipment on the mountain known by the local people as "Father of the Ice Mountains." All his toes were frost-bitten, he fell into a crevasse but climbed out, and often he was snowblind and could not see his feet, he said.

I thought many times during those four days that I, too, surely would die and that I couldn't possibly be alive the next day," he said. But he found his way back to his base camp at 15,420 feet, reaching it on Aug. 1.

Creer said he and Kirkpatrick skied up to the summit of Mount Muztagata on July 28 and started skiing down the north side. He said the descent should have taken only a few hours.

But they were caught in a blinding snowstorm and lost their way, he continued. They wandered far from their route and went closer to the edge of the cliff. They bivouacked that night in the storm and started out again next day.

They skied until they hit a small but treacherous area of hard-packed snow and ice. They decided to take off their skins and walk across. Creer crossed safely on the 20-degree slope and Kirkpatrick was not far behind. They were not using ropes.

Suddenly he was gone," said Creer. "There is no way he could have fallen that far and survived."

Creer and Kirkpatrick had planned to return to the camp and help the rest of the expedition up the mountain. The team included Jerry Clayton, 34, and Karen Ratner, 36, of Lakewood, Colo., and Bill McDowell, 60, of Glenwood Springs, Colo.

They were to leave for Tokyo and the United States today. Creer said no attempt would be made to recover Kirkpatrick's body because the attempt would endanger more lives and would take too long.

Soviet hunger striker ends 36-day fast

MOSCOW (AP) — Emaciated hunger striker Yuri Balovenkov broke his 36-day fast today after his visiting American wife lied to him, saying authorities had promised he could emigrate to the United States if he resumed eating.

"What else could I do? He was going to kill himself," said Elena Balovenkov, a 29-year-old nurse from Baltimore in a telephone interview with The Associated Press.

She said she fed her husband a small amount of Isocal, a substance designed for feeding people near starvation. She said she brought it when she arrived from the United States on Friday to visit her husband.

"I've never lied to my husband before but this lie was necessary — a lot nicer than watching him die," she said.

Piracy and plunder

Shipwreck offers clues of the ancient world

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — After several years studying the 2,300-year-old wreck of a Greek merchant vessel, an American underwater archaeologist has pieced together evidence of piracy and plunder in the ancient Mediterranean.

Michael Katzev, 43, an adjunct professor at the Institute of Nautical Archaeology at Texas A&M University, directed an international marine excavation team which spent six seasons exploring and conserving the 4th century B.C. shipwreck. The vessel went down near the port of Kyrenia, now in the Turkish-occupied sector of Cyprus.

"At the time of the excavation, we thought the ship foundered in the kind of sudden storm you get off northern Cyprus in the fall," Katzev said. "But work on the finds in the past five years suggests it didn't sink accidentally."

Buried in sand and silt at a depth of nearly 100 feet, most of the ship's wooden hull was salvaged by the archaeologists in 1969 and gradually reassembled. Now on display in Kyrenia's medieval castle, it is a unique museum piece: the oldest ship ever raised from the seabed and exhibited.

On its last voyage, the 48-foot vessel was loaded with clay jars of wine from the island of Rhodes. It also carried millstones as ballast and "perhaps sackfuls of fresh almonds," Katzev said.

Probably a typical coastal trader during the time of Alexander the Great, the vessel had a single square sail and carried a small crew who ate and slept on top of the cargo.

"We found four sets of domestic pottery — bowls, pitchers, drinking cups — and fragments of four wooden spoons," Katzev said. "A captain and three sailors would be right for handling a ship of that size."

Beneath a small deck at the stern were stowed piles of iron ingots and the larder — remains of figs, grapes, dried herbs, olives and beans were found. A few bronze coins helped date the wreck to around 300 B.C.

"But we didn't find any of the crew's personal belongings, no silver money for trading, and no indication of the cargo stored beneath the forward deck to balance the vessel," Katzev said.

SUCH EVIDENCE set the archaeologist to wondering about the excavators' first explanation of the shipwreck.

Carbon-14 dating on the ship's timbers showed they were felled about 388 B.C. The hull had been repaired and finally sheathed in lead to keep the aging planks seaworthy, suggesting it could have yielded to wave stress in a storm.

"But then we got to work on conserving some shapeless lumps of iron from the seabed and discovered they were spearheads," Katzev said.

Eight spearheads were found beneath the hull, indicating they were stuck in it at the time the ship sank.

"That inevitably led me to think of pirates, who are known to have been very active in the eastern Mediterranean at that time, as Alexander the Great's empire crumbled in the generation after his death," the archaeologist said.

He believes the ship may have been the prey of a fast, oared pirate vessel operating out a secluded cove in northern Cyprus. The pirates would have grabbed the captain's coin-bag and the forward cargo — perhaps bolts of valuable fabric — and taken the crew prisoner, to be sold into slavery.

"Then they would have scuttled the ship, to remove the evidence," Katzev said.

While all the clues point to a violent end for the ancient ship, Katzev notes that one important piece of evidence is lacking. During its centuries on the seabed the ship split apart, just at the point where traces of deliberate holing would be likely to show.

"I feel fairly convinced of having uncovered an ancient crime, but like much else in archaeological reconstruction, it can't be proved," he said.

Possible humiliation keys Floyd win

FLOYD, THE WINNER — Ray Floyd holds a golf ball aloft and walks off a green at Tulsa's Southern Hills County Club where he turned around a rough streak of luck on the 12th hole to win his second PGA title and third major tournament. Floyd's five-shot lead had dwindled to two strokes before he held a conference with himself and made his play more aggressive Sunday.

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — The potential humiliation of it all drove Ray Floyd to the 6th PGA Championship.

The man all the other players said couldn't lose was giving it away Sunday among the trees, rough and bunkers of Southern Hills Country Club.

"I don't know if I could have lived it down," said 20-year veteran Floyd. "All I would have read in the newspaper headlines would have been how Ray Floyd blew it ... I have a lot of pride."

The 39-year-old Floyd said he gave himself a talk on the 12th tee that was the kind of stuff that would get you committed.

"They'd put me in one of those places if I told you what I said," Floyd laughed.

At the time a fat five-shot lead had dwindled to two strokes as Fred Couples eagled the par-5 No. 16th hole.

Determined to be more aggressive, Floyd birdied the 12th, 15th and 16th holes to build the lead to five shots and coasted home despite an 18th hole double bogey to earn his second PGA title and third major conquest.

Even though he had a three-shot victory at 8-under-par 272 over runnerup Lanny Wadkins, Floyd's final round 2-over-par 72 wouldn't let him enjoy it.

"I made a lot of bad mental errors," he said. "I was in the trees, the rough, the bunkers. But my play from the 12th on in was equal to any during the week."

Floyd's first major tournament triumph in six years, will be remembered for 54 holes of pure shot-making precision including a record opening round of 7-under-par 63 and a record three-round score of 200, 10 under par.

But the pressure built as everyone assumed he was a sure winner.

"I took all the pressure away from the field," he said. "They know I usually play well from the front so they relaxed and free-wheeled it. 'Ole Ray Floyd won't blow it,' they said. It's not easy to win under a situation like that."

The struggle in the 94-degree heat, the pressure, the nerves, all hit home as Floyd stood over his second shot on the 434-yard par-4 closing hole.

"The awe of it all hit home," he said. "I was looking up the fairway at all the people and realized the tournament was mine ... it all happened too quick."

"I don't remember even standing over the ball. I just know the shot squirted right, low and bad."

From a horrendous lie in the steel wool-thick Bermuda rough, Floyd dumped his next shot into a bunker, exploded out and two-putted for a six.

"The victory means a helluva lot to me," said Floyd. "It was my first major since 1976 (the Masters) and it puts me winning a major in all three decades, the 60s, 70s, 80s."

Floyd earned $65,000 while final round 7-under-par 67, bagged $45,000 for his 275.

Couples' 66 tied him for third place with steady Calvin Peete, who posted a 69, at 276. Each earned $27,500.

At 277 were Jim Simons, who shot 69, Greg Norman, a 72 final round shooter, and Jay Haas, who shot 72.

Bob Gilder was alone at 278 with a final round 72.

At even par 280 were Tom Kite, 67, Tom Watson, 68, Jerry Pate, 69, and Lon Hinkle, 71.

Jack Nicklaus, seeking to become the first player to win six PGAs, fired a final round 67 and was at 3-over-par 283.

Floyd said "Some day I'll be able to look back at this tournament and I'll be proud to say I was able to gather it up."

It was Floyd's 18th tour victory, giving him $305,409 this year and $2,097,396 lifetime.

His goal is to win the British and U.S. Opens.

"I will not ever be happy with what I've done unless I win both the British and U.S. Opens," he said.

PGA crown tourney major by custom only

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — The PGA Championship is recognized and accepted as one of golf's "majors," one of the game's Big Four tournaments.

But it is only by custom, by acceptance, that there is such a thing as majors or the Big Four.

Nowhere is it written that golf's majors shall consist of the U.S. and British Opens, the Masters and the American PGA. There is no rule, no standard, no by-law that fixes those four events as golf's greatest tournaments. The organizers of those tournaments don't use the term themselves. But it is a highly coveted position, a distinction that provides instant, worldwide prestige.

More than prestige is involved. There's the matter of finances. A Big Four tournament, naturally, commands much, much greater bargaining power in the area of television rights than a tournament of lower status.

There is the matter of convenience. The Big Four set their dates, and the rest of the golf world falls in around them.

Those four events are the big boys on top. And, like all the big boys on top, they are under constant pressure from those who would like to succeed and replace them at the highest level.

There have been changes in the past. There is no reason there cannot be changes in the future.

It is accepted, generally, that there can be no more than four of the big ones.

So the four current big ones are under pressure to maintain their positions. Among the more obvious challengers are the Tournament Players Championship — which has the strongest field of any event in the world — the prestigious World Series of Golf and Jack Nicklaus' own Memorial tournament.

The PGA, the national championship of the Professional Golfers Association of America, is making every effort to upgrade its event.

In the last few years, it has engineered a dramatic upswing in the quality of the courses on which its tournament is played. The purse has gone up faster than others on the elite list. It has added an international flavor by the inclusion of leaders of various orders of merit around the world.

One problem, however, is the traditional August date, which meant playing in 100 degree-plus heat in Tulsa this year and the anticipated summer thunderstorms in Atlanta last year.

It is a time of the year when, television survey show, golf interest is beginning to wane. The baseball pennant races are heating up. The pro football camps are in operation. The press corps at Tulsa this year was much smaller than that at the other three big tournaments.

But it provides the PGA with the responsibility of closing the majors, the heart of the golf season, with a bang — not with a whimper.

Neither Cox, Rains or shine stops Garcia in city tourney

By GREG JAKLEWICZ
Sports Editor

Rains finally won out at the Big Spring City Golf Championship but unfortunately for Bernard, it wasn't him.

Bernard Rains, leading the annual summer event by two strokes after Saturday's first round, lost a sudden-death playoff on the first hole to Royce Cox. Still there was no winner until late Monday morning when Ben Garcia, Jr., washed out on the 11th green Sunday when thunderstorm drenched Big Spring, completed his final eight holes.

Garcia left his ball on the 11th green and promptly birdied the hole this morning. He then reeled off pars on the next four holes before stumbling a bit coming in. He hit his tee shot out of bounds on No. 16 and a par performance from there gave him a seven. He then missed a short putt on No. 17 to see his lead drop to one stroke as he prepared to tee-off on the final hole.

But pressure was not going to get Garcia this day. He was on in two shots and sank a 15-foot putt for a birdie to win the tournament by two strokes with a two-day total of 144.

The victory comes after a two-year layoff and gave Garcia identical rounds of 72 for the tournament.

Cox used a hot putter to catch Rains on the back nine Sunday as both men finished 36 holes with identical 146 scores. Cox had a great chance to avoid the playoff but his 12-foot birdie putt on 18 lipped the cup and ran out.

The tie was broken just four shots later when Cox parred No. 1 while Rains got out of trouble only to bogey the hole.

Defending champ Howard Stewart had his troubles Sunday but a sharp-shooting putter kept in contention until No. 17. He missed a short birdie putt that would have vaulted him into a three-way tie with Rains and Cox and then parred the final hole. That knocked the Big Spring High golf coach out of a bid for a third-straight city title.

Cox wasn't home-free after beating Rains on No. 1. Garcia, starting in a late foursome, toured the front nine at even-par and parred No. 10. He was on the 11th green in two shots when monsoon-like rains hit and forced the last foursome to the clubhouse.

Garcia's finish Monday caused a few hearts to slow but was nothing like the windup Sunday between Rains and Cox.

"My putter got hot," Cox said of his finish. "The only one I was disappointed in was No. 14. And I thought I had that putt on No. 18."

Battling a stiff northeasterly wind, Cox came out of the front nine one shot over while Stewart was two over and Rains three over. Rains was three up on Stewart and four shots ahead of Cox entering the final day's play.

He assumed control after one hole on the back nine, birding No. 10. Stewart, meanwhile, lost control of his approach shots and needed some great putting on Nos. 13, 14 and 15 to keep from falling off the pace.

While Rains sank pars on the four holes following No. 10, Cox barely missed birdies on No. 12 and 13 before disaster struck on No. 14. After Cox, Rains and Jack White knocked in pars, Cox had the easiest try at the cup. He missed and the bogey seemed to take him out of the race.

On the next hole, however, Cox birdied and Rains parred. Then came No. 16 and a shank on a routine chip spelled disaster for Rains. He rolled downhill and had to fight to get a bogey on the par five hole. At the same time, Cox sank a 12-foot birdie and the three-shot swing brought the former Big Spring High coach right back into contention.

Rains three-putted on No. 17 and Cox parred to tie the two men up. Meanwhile Stewart muffed his birdie putt that would have made things even more interesting.

Don Belew won a four-man playoff to win the first flight. Belew, Jimmy Stewart, John Basden and Cary Wiggins each fired 162s for 36 holes but Belew outplayed Stewart and Wiggins on the first sudden-death hole to win out. Basden chose not to participate.

Garcia, a former Big Spring High golfer and fourth place finisher in 1979, won his first city title at age 21. Rains missed an opportunity to record his fourth city championship while Cox was trying to win for the second time.

Here are the final standings of the city championship tournament:

DOWN THE FAIRWAY — Ben Garcia tees-off on No. 11 before the rains hit Sunday afternoon during the Big Spring City Championship tournament. Garcia had to halt play and resume his round Monday morning. The delay didn't hurt as Garcia matched his 72 Saturday for a 144 total and the city title.

Rangers, Yanks split doubleheader

Outfielder Mazzilli traded for shortstop Dent

NEW YORK (AP) — "Hey," said New York Yankees Manager Clyde King, "don't you guys want to talk about the game?"

Yes, there was a baseball game at Yankee Stadium Sunday; two of them, in fact. But the action on the field took a back seat to the developments behind the scenes where the Yankees traded one matinee idol for another, sending shortstop Bucky Dent to the Texas Rangers for outfielder Lee Mazzilli.

When the two teams managed to get in some baseball, they split a doubleheader. Texas won the opener 6-4 on home runs by Dave Hostetler and Larry Parrish and the Yankees took the nightcap 8-5 with Oscar Gamble driving in three runs with a single, double and triple and John Mayberry blasting a three-run homer.

On his 246th at-bat since the Rangers brought him up from the minors May 28, Hostetler, the slugging 26-year-old first baseman, hammered his 19th home run of the season, setting a club record for a rookie. It came in the sixth inning off Shane Rawley and gave Texas a 4-0 lead, but the Rangers needed Parrish's tie-breaking two-run shot off Rudy May in the eighth, with Hostetler aboard via a walk, to fend off a Yankee comeback.

"It was a big thrill for me to play in Yankee Stadium," said Hostetler, who has hit five home runs in his last six games against the Yankees. "I was excited about coming in here. I had a good time this weekend."

"That's a big thrill for me to know that I did something that hadn't been done before. I always felt I could do it if I got the opportunity to play. That's the big thing — I got the opportunity and I've done well."

In just 67 games, Hostetler bettered a record which Putnam set over 139 games and 426 at-bats three years ago. If he keeps hitting, the 215-pound slugger has an outside shot at the American League rookie home run record of 37 by Cleveland's Al Rosen in 1950 and the major league mark of 38 shared by Wally Berger of the 1930 Boston Braves and Frank Robinson of the 1956 Cincinnati Reds.

"I don't even think about that," Hostetler said. "I just try to take one game at a time and not let that stuff worry me. So far, it's paid off for me."

In the nightcap, Gamble was most of the show in the early innings with an RBI triple in the first, a two-run double in the second and two outstanding plays in the field. In the second inning, he made a sparkling catch of Lamar Johnson's drive into the right field corner and an inning later he gunned down Bill Stein trying to stretch a double into a triple.

Ironically, Gamble was fined $500 before the game by King for a temper tantrum in the dugout Saturday when he claimed he wasn't given enough notice before being used as a pinch hitter.

"I just go out and try to do my job," said Gamble, who was benched in the opening game. "I've been playing 13 years and everybody who's been around knows what I can do."

Orioles 10, Royals 6
The score was tied in the bottom of the ninth inning, and the Baltimore Orioles needed a big hit.

In other words, it was Terry Crowley time. "Crowley's not supposed to get a lot of at-bats," says Baltimore Manager Earl Weaver. "He's supposed to come off the bench as a pinch-hitter in the ninth inning and hit a home run."

Weaver may be half-kidding — but it's close enough to the truth.

The Orioles' Old Reliable came through again

Sunday, delivering a pinch-hit grand slam homer with one out in the ninth to give Baltimore a 10-6 victory over the Kansas City Royals. It was the 101st career pinch-hit and fourth career slam for Crowley.

"It was a nice situation in that to hit," said Crowley. "I knew the (reliever Mike Armstrong) had to throw a strike. He was keeping almost everything away, and then he tried to come inside."

With Crowley's blow, incidentally, the Orioles tied the major league record of three grand slam pinch homers in one season. It was Baltimore's ninth pinch home run, one short of the AL record set by the New York Yankees in 1961.

Brewers 7, Indians 6
Paul Molitor hit a two-out, two-run homer in the top of the ninth inning to lift Milwaukee over Cleveland. With two outs in the top of the ninth and the Brewers trailing 6-5, Jim Gantner singled off Len Barker, 11-7. Molitor then worked the count to 3-1 before hitting his 13th homer.

Cleveland had taken a 6-5 lead in the bottom of the eighth on Andre Thornton's RBI single against Dwight Gooden, 3-1.

Before his homer, Molitor had struck out three times in each of his last two games against Barker. "I suppose if you keep facing a guy, some time you'll hit him," said Molitor. "Lenny's had my number most of my career. I'm certainly not going to get cocky against him now, because he's one of the best."

Red Sox 12, White Sox 6
Carney Lansford drove in four runs with three singles and a double and Gary Allenson and Dwight Evans hit solo homers to lead an 18-hit attack that fed Boston over Chicago.

Jim Rice also pounded a single, a two-run double and a triple and Wade Boggs added a run-scoring double and two singles as Boston ended its losing streak and Chicago's winning streak at three games each.

A's 5, Twins 2
Jeff Burroughs hit a two-run double in the sixth, leading Oakland over Minnesota for a sweep of their three-game series. Tom Underwood, 8-4, gained the victory after relieving starter Jeff Jones in the fifth. Brad Havens, 8-8, suffered the loss for Minnesota.

"I was looking for a fastball and just tried to hit it," Burroughs said after tagging reliever Terry Felton's second pitch for his big double as the A's won their fourth straight.

Astros drop two to Giants

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Success often is a matter of timing, whether it's in the business world or on a baseball field — ask the San Francisco Giants.

One week ago, they were languishing 13 games behind the division-leading Atlanta Braves with a 50-55 record. But what a difference a week makes.

Using two victories in Atlanta to gain momentum, the Giants extended their winning streak to seven games by taking a doubleheader from the Houston Astros, 3-2 and 8-3, Sunday.

While they were going 7-0 to climb above .500 for the first time this season, the Braves went 0-6. As a result, the Giants are only 6 and one-half games behind Atlanta entering the opener of a three-game series with the division leaders tonight.

"The timing couldn't be better," Giants manager Frank Robinson agreed. "We're playing the teams we have to beat, so you can't ask for any more than that."

Indeed, the Giants are in a race. How far they can go may be determined this week when they play four games in Los Angeles following the series against the Braves in Candlestick Park.

The last time the Giants won all five games of a series was June 18-20, 1971 against the San Diego Padres. That also was the year the club won its last division title.

"These guys can go as far as they want to," Robinson said. "We've been playing good ball for some time now, but we hadn't put a streak together. It takes something like this to get attention."

The Astros, who begin a three-game series at San Diego tonight, took a 2-1 lead into the ninth inning of the opener behind left-hander Bob Knepper, 4-12. Pinch-hitter Duane Kuiper's walk and singles by Chile Davis and Joe Morgan tied the game.

Frank Lacorte replaced Knepper and Jack Clark grounded a game-winning single to center. Fred Breining, 6-4, was the winner with three innings of hitless relief.

It wasn't so dramatic in the second game. The Giants jumped on loser Mike LaCoss, 4-4, for a 4-0 lead after four innings, watched Dickie Thon's two-run triple spark the Astros' three-run fifth and added four unearned runs in the seventh.

Gary Lavelle, 7-5, was the winner in relief as the Giants' vaunted bullpen pitched eight scoreless innings.

Rookie Tom O'Malley and veteran Reggie Smith extended their batting streaks to 15 and 11 games, respectively. Clark became the first National League player this year to collect game-winning RBIs in each game of a doubleheader, and now has a total of 15 game-winners to tie Keith Hernandez of the Cardinals for the league lead.

Cubs 8, Phillies 5
While helping the Chicago Cubs win and showing the Los Angeles Dodgers they were wrong, Jay Johnstone is thoroughly enjoying himself.

"It's fun to come back and prove some people were wrong," said Johnstone. "The Dodgers said I couldn't play the outfield anymore. That's what the Dodgers said."

Los Angeles released the 36-year-old veteran in May. He signed with the Cubs one week later.

"There were other clubs interested in me: Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, San Diego and Houston," Johnstone said. "But (Cub General Manager) Dallas Green told me I'd get the opportunity to play."

On Sunday, Johnstone slammed successive home runs and drove in four runs to lead the Cubs to an 8-5 victory over the Philadelphia Phillies and a sweep of their three-game series at Wrigley Field.

Johnstone blasted a three-run homer in the sixth inning, then knotted the score 5-5 with a solo shot in the eighth. His eighth homer of the season began the Cubs' winning four-run inning.

Asked when he had hit successive home runs before, Johnstone cracked, "Today in batting practice," then added, "I had back-to-back home runs pinch-hitting

"As far as I'm concerned we're still in it (the pennant race) even though we're a long ways off," A's Manager Billy Martin said. The A's are 15 games out in the AL West.

Blue Jays 7-7, Tigers 4-4
Lloyd Moseby's pinch-hit, two-run double keyed a four-run fifth inning as Toronto beat Detroit in the first game of their doubleheader. The Blue Jays won the second game as Ernie Whitt belted a two-run homer to back the pitching of rookie Dave Geisel, who posted his first American League win.

"This is a team that is growing full of confidence," said Toronto Manager Bobby Cox. "We've been getting excellent jobs from our starters — despite the fact that we're in last place in the American League East. We've lost a lot of one-run ballgames, and you can look it up."

Angels 9, Mariners 5
Doug DeCinces slugged three homers in a game for the second time in a week, as California unleashed a 15-hit attack to win its third straight game. DeCinces hit three homers against Minnesota last Tuesday and now has 11 in his last 10 games and 23 for the season.

last year."

"They were fast balls, good pitches," Johnstone said of the pitches he hit out. "I haven't been seeing too many fast balls. Curves, slow balls, sliders and spitballs. The other day they got me on a fast ball so I figured I might see fast balls again."

It was Chicago's fourth straight victory, while Philadelphia suffered its fourth straight loss.

Pirates 4, Mets 1
Bill Madlock tripled home two runs and winning pitcher Don Robinson singled in another to give Pittsburgh its victory over New York.

Madlock's triple capped a three-run fifth-inning rally. Robinson, who drove in the Pirates' final run in the eighth, had three hits as he raised his record to 12-6.

Dodgers 2, Braves 0
Bob Welch stymied Atlanta on three hits in eight innings of work and Pedro Guerrero singled home a run in the first inning to boost Los Angeles over the Braves and complete a four-game sweep by the Dodgers.

Los Angeles, who also swept a four-game series from Atlanta last week, has moved from 10 and one-half games behind the Braves on July 30 to just 1 and one-half games behind the NL West leader.

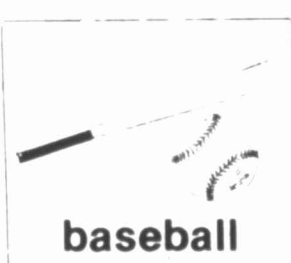

Expos 2, Cards 1
Tim Raines and newly-acquired Joel Youngblood drove in runs as the Expos edged St. Louis.

Winner David Palmer, 6-4, needed help from Woodie Fryman, who got his eighth save. Bob Forsch, 11-6, took the loss for the Cardinals.

Padres 3, Reds 1
Tim Flannery drove in two runs to back rookie left-hander Dave Dravecky and lead San Diego past Cincinnati.

Dravecky, 2-1, making his first major league start, went six innings to earn the victory, handcuffing the Reds on just four hits. The only run he allowed was unearned. Gary Lucas earned his 15th save.

Your Daily HOROSCOPE

from the CARROLL RIGHTER INSTITUTE

FORECAST FOR TUESDAY, AUG. 10, 1982

GENERAL TENDENCIES: Frustrations at not being able to do the things you wish are in effect today, but don't be upset, for disappointments could change later to your advantage. Your intuition is accurate now.

ARIES (Mar. 21 to Apr. 19) Keep active at something constructive for best results today. Good tidings could come from friends now. Think constructively.

TAURUS (Apr. 20 to May 20) If you get the aid of a higher-up, you can be successful in a new plan you have in mind. Your judgment is not good today.

GEMINI (May 21 to June 21) Take time for listening to ideas of new contacts. Use your intuitive faculties at this time. Avoid the frivolous tonight.

MOON CHILDREN (June 22 to July 21) You have a worry that can be alleviated if you go to an expert for advice. Try to be more courteous to others.

LEO (July 22 to Aug. 21) A close tie can be helpful in dealing with friends who are not acting as usual toward you now. Avoid lavish spending.

VIRGO (Aug. 22 to Sept. 22) Any risks you take with your good name now could prove expensive in the future. Sidestep a fair-weather friend.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 to Oct. 22) Discuss a new idea with associates before making any definite plans for the future. Look for bargains now and save money.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 to Nov. 21) Come to better terms with your creditors and forget worry. Avoid any temptations that could be costly in the long run.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 to Dec. 21) Forget worries at home and put more energy in career activities. Your hunches are accurate at this time.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 to Jan. 20) Use more progressive methods and advance in career activities. A business expert can help you solve a financial worry.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21 to Feb. 19) If you adopt a more cheerful attitude, you can solve a difficult problem. Keep poised at all times today.

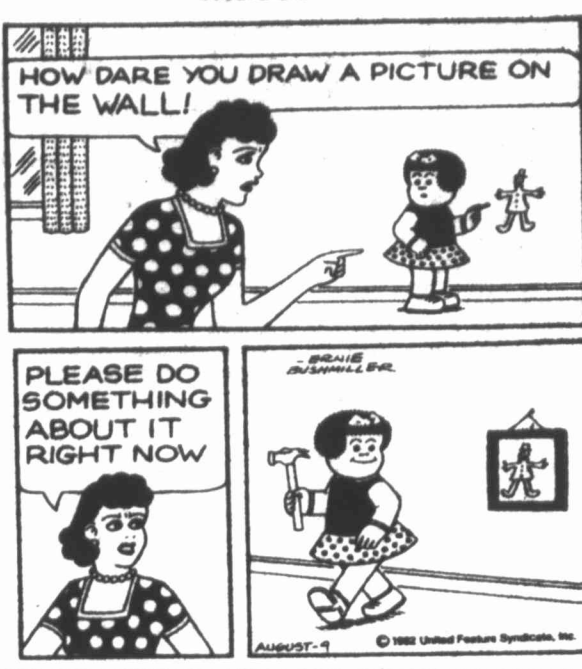

PISCES (Feb. 20 to Mar. 20) Your intuitive perceptions are not accurate now, so use only your best judgment to solve problems. Stick to facts.

IF YOUR CHILD IS BORN TODAY... he or she must be taught not worry in order to handle problems intelligently. Teach early in life to mingle more with others and not to hide any talents. Any profession connected with the humanities is fine here.

WE GOT 'EM! — Enthusiasm radiated from Daniel Travanti of "Hill Street Blues" as he sat with series co-star Barbara Babcock during recent announcement of the 1982 Emmy nominations. The popular "Hill Street Blues" took 21 nominations, one of them for Travanti's performance as lead actor in the series.

Filthy, rich... but not funny

By TOM JORY

Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The cast includes Slim, Delta and Dixie, and the creative folks have loaded the show with canned laughter just to make sure the audience will see the humor in lines like, "Eat turnips, Carlotta."

It's called "Filthy Rich," and the tilt is more toward the former than the latter. There's nothing rich about the half-hour sitcom that CBS will broadcast in three weekly installments, starting tonight. But then it's not filthy either — naughtiness is a better word.

In fairness, the premise is amusing. "Big Guy" Beck is dead, and he's left his body in an icebox capsule and his will on videotape. No one will get a penny from the deceased Tennessee land baron without meeting the conditions "Big Guy" sets in his televised will.

TV Tonight

Trouble is, the show — the first episode, at least — degenerates from there. Is there much humor in jokes about toilets and suppositories?

Slim Pickens plays "Big Guy" Beck, and that's good, though you don't see much of him. The rest of the cast is vaguely recognizable — they've all been in other, mostly short-run, series.

Delta Burke plays Kathleen, the dead man's second wife, and Dixie Carter is Carlotta, his daughter-in-law. Miss Burke played Bonnie Sue in "The Chisholms" on CBS two years ago, and Miss Carter was in a couple of forgettable series in the late '70s, "On Our Own" and "Out of the Blue."

Others in the cast include Michael Lombard (Harry Sinclair in the short-lived "Mary Tyler Moore Hour") as "Big Guy" Beck's eldest son, Marshall; Charles Frank ("The Chisholms," "Young Maverick") as his younger son, Stanley; and Nedra Volz (Adelaide, the housekeeper, in "Diff'rent Strokes," "Hanging In") is Mother B., his first wife.

This concert was worth recording

• "Live It Up," David Johansen, Blue Sky Records.

All too frequently, live albums by artists are nothing more than rehearsed versions of an artist's hit songs with nothing added except the irritating sound of whistles, applause and yells. Rarely does a live album truly offer anything different to warrant the live recording. However, "Live It Up" is worth it.

Johansen has to be one of the most underrated and underplayed rock performers in America. The man with the gravelly, booming voice first burst into prominence with the ill-fated punk rock group the New York Dolls. Following their comet-like end, Johansen has pursued a solo career with moderate success, but little airplay.

The first song — a medley of hits by the 1960s group the Animals — on this album is steadily growing in popularity on album-oriented rock stations. Johansen doesn't depart too much from the originals, but he does imbue the three songs with his own hard-earned combination of wisdom and spirit.

Backed by guitarist Huw Gower, formerly of the Records, and other competent musicians, Johansen powers his way through an amazing range of music from catchy rhythm and blues to blistering punk rock. Johansen live sounds like Warren Zevon from his live album "Stand in the Fire." Johansen's powerful voice enables the singer to easily shift from the quiet, soothing Sixties ballad "Is This What I Get For Loving You, Baby?" to the thrashing, roaring conclusion of the Dolls' classic "Personality Crisis."

Record Review

However, Johansen's true claim for rock stardom lies in his superb rendition of his own song "Donna." This is a song that reaches deep into the heart of every listener on several levels. Ostensibly about a lover who has left, "Donna" also tears at every lost dream and every destroyed hope that music could promise. Johansen pleads for the music that he once believed could change the world — a desperate belief to which he still clings.

The singer remembers how "you filled the room with bedlam and we all sang along" and disdaintfully dismisses the competition with "there's other girls around, but they're just not the same." Recalling a time when music was a lighthouse in the turmoil of life, he pleads "how I wish I could get you back."

In the last verse, Johansen aches for a last return to an earlier innocence and a better time: "Play for me one more song — with your guitars playing perfectly and your drummer pounding strong. Ever since you've been away, it's been so hard to dance. Ah, come on Donna, give us one more chance." As the music soars to the conclusion, the stirring cries of the singer linger on — one last chance to have it all.

Johansen's other originals on the live album range from the lively rock of "Bohemian Love Pad" to the Rolling-Stones-meet-the-Gap-Band jive of "Funky but Chic." No doubt about it, this album rocks, even through the remakes of some old favorites such as "Build me up, Buttermilk," "I'll Be There," and the humorous novelty of "Stranded in the Jungle."

"Live It Up" is an excellent opportunity to discover a hidden talent in rock music. Rock needs more power as demonstrated by Johansen on this album.

Under the gun: The Mob may be in trouble

By RICHARD T. PIENCIAK
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The mob is under the gun. Mafia dons are being sent to jail in record numbers, while syndicate underlings are killing each other in unrelenting warfare over the criminal spoils of Atlantic City casinos.

Now, a trusted compadre of the Bonanno crime family has unmasked himself in court as an undercover FBI agent, recounting conversations about mob rubouts, family rivalries and other goings-on during his five-year assignment.

Agent Joseph D. Pistone's disclosures last week came just days after two gunmen tried to kill the son of a slain crime boss in Philadelphia, where nearly 20 mob figures have been assassinated since 1980.

Prosecutors say Pistone's put-on was the FBI's deepest infiltration of La Cosa Nostra to date, and before a gag order was issued, FBI officials said it reflected the bureau's dedication to putting unrelenting pressure on the kingpins of organized crime.

Internal FBI documents show 1982 will be a banner year in the agency's war against the nation's 25 traditional syndicate families and their estimated 2,000 "made members."

One hundred and sixty-five mob members or their close associates were convicted in the first six months of fiscal 1981 of crimes including labor racketeering, corruption, infiltration of legitimate businesses, loansharking, arson, narcotics and murder, according to the FBI documents. That compared with 82 convictions in all fiscal 1980.

An internal FBI report states that as a result of recent efforts, "the majority of the 'bosses' and hierarchy of the major organized crime families across the United States were indicted and/or convicted."

Among those convicted were the reputed crime bosses for Cleveland, Kansas City, Milwaukee, New Orleans, Florida, New England, northeastern Pennsylvania, and two of the five family leaders in New York City.

"We're continuing to direct our efforts on the people who are in control," FBI Deputy Assistant Director Floyd Clarke said. "We're very satisfied with the progress that we're making, but we still have an awful lot of work ahead of us."

AS PART of its expanded attack, Clarke said the bureau plans to make wider use of civil forfeiture provisions of the racketeering statutes, which permit the government to seize property gained as a result of illegal activity.

"We would not only be impacting the organized crime problem by prosecution but also by directing our efforts to identify the assets that are derived from that enterprise, and seizing them," said Clarke, who heads the FBI's organized crime program.

While not claiming the agency has crushed the mob, Clarke added wryly that the hoodlums "are aware of our investigative interests."

Clarke said bosses indicted or convicted since last year include:

- Carlos Marcello, of the New Orleans family, convicted in the Brilab scandal and of conspiracy to bribe a federal judge.

- Santo Trafficante Jr., Florida's "boss of bosses," indicted in a labor union kickback scheme.

- Raymond L.S. Patriarca, of the New England mob, still fighting on health reasons a labor racketeering charge in the Trafficante case and allegations in Rhode Island and Massachusetts that he ordered rivals killed.

- Russell Bufalino, of the northeastern Pennsylvania mob, convicted of civil rights violations and of influencing a federal witness.

- Nick Civella, of Kansas City, indicted separately on bribery charges, then with the entire local hierarchy following a five-year casino skimming probe in Las Vegas, Chicago and Kansas City.

- Frank P. Balistrieri, of Milwaukee, his two sons, and local underboss Steve Di Salvo, indicted on racketeering, fraud and gambling in a plot to extort from a vending machine business.

- James "Jack White" Licavoli, of the Cleveland family, his capo, Anthony Liberatore, and four others convicted of racketeering for a series of crimes including the bombing death of a rival.

The latest prosecution involves five members of the Bonanno family, who are charged in a racketeering conspiracy that included the assassination of three mob rivals.

Courtroom replays of secret wiretaps and Pistone's chilling testimony have provided behind-the-scenes details of how the mob operates, including a Mafia family tree, plans to bug a fellow hood's phone as well as discussions about the slayings.

A secret internal FBI document says Pistone's ability to get as close as he did to "high ranking members of La Cosa Nostra" has "resulted in severe embarrassment to some, if not all 'bosses' and 'members' of the mob."

But recently the mob has had to endure other embarrassing troubles.

Nearly 20 organized crime figures have been killed in the Philadelphia mob's gang war over Atlantic City since boss Angelo Bruno was shotgunned outside his home March 21, 1980.

At least 20 other underworld figures have been murdered in New Jersey, New York and other surrounding states, according to the FBI.

Last week two reputed mobsters were accused of attempting to kill Salvatore Testa, the son of Bruno's slain successor. Young Testa was hit eight times with shotgun fire, while hanging out in South Philadelphia's Italian Market.

The two were released after posting 10 percent of their $50,000 bail, then failed to appear for a hearing on a request to raise their bail to $10 million each. They reappeared Friday, surrendering at a hotel.

Testa remains hospitalized but is expected to recover. His father, Philip "Chicken Man" Testa, died March 15, 1981, when a nail-filled bomb blasted a 30-inch hole in his home's concrete porch as he grabbed for the front door.

Meanwhile, a Senate subcommittee has been holding hearings in Washington on mob-influenced labor unions. It has turned up an allegation from Charles Allen, an admitted underworld enforcer, that organized crime, notably new Philadelphia chieftain Nicodemo "Little Nicky" Scarfo, controls the Hotel Employees and Restaurant Employees International Union in Atlantic City.

The New Jersey division of gaming enforcement has been trying to prevent the union from representing the 8,000 waiters, waitresses, maids, kitchen help and bartenders who work in the city's casino hotels because of Scarfo's purported control.

A federal grand jury in Camden, N.J., is probing the union's local too.

Immigration proposals questioned

BROWNSVILLE, Texas (AP) — Proposed immigration law changes would drastically inhibit the ability of American citizens to bring their foreign spouses, parents, children and siblings to this country, say some immigration lawyers.

Areas such as the Lower Rio Grande Valley, where families commonly span the Rio Grande into Mexico, could be vastly affected, they add.

Some attorneys are running radio commercials in Spanish about the proposal and urging those possibly affected to contact a lawyer soon.

"It's just going to eliminate a lot of people from being able to adjust their immigration status. The people need to know this," said lawyer Linda Yanez.

Congress is considering the proposal in the Simpson-Mazzoli bill, a package of proposed immigration law revisions, including amnesty for many illegal aliens and sanctions against employers who hire undocumented workers.

It would be unfair to grant legal status to those who unlawfully sneak into the country while others have waited years to process their immigration papers, said lawyer Laurier McDonald of Edinburg.

Amnesty is starting a person off with the idea that if you break the law and get away with it, it's all right," McDonald said. "I think recent surveys have shown the American public is 999 to 1 against amnesty."

Some sections of the bill, such as the amnesty provision, might be dropped while the quota restrictions might remain, he added.

A Mexican sibling of an American citizen would have waited six weeks in 1978 for his application to be processed, but it now takes up to five years, McDonald said.

Under current law, there is no restriction on the numbers of spouses, parents and children of American citizens who receive visas to enter the country.

The American citizen files a petition, which the Immigration and Naturalization Service checks to verify the relationship, said Ira Frank, an attorney in the INS district office in Harlingen. The prospective immigrant then must pass medical and criminal records checks, show ability to earn a living and not have engaged in alien smuggling, espionage or subversive activities.

In 1979 — the latest year with complete figures available — 28,065 Mexican nationals receive entry visas under the "immediate relative" provision, said Duke Austin, an INS spokesman in Washington.

Businessmen, investors and relatives of resident aliens are some of the other preference classes.
