Bush still in hospital

■ If president doesn't respond to medication, he will undergo a medical procedure, during which powers would briefly shift to Quayle.

Associated Press

BETHESDA, Md. — President Bush continued to experience an irregular heartbeat Sunday and his spokesman said doctors may administer an electrical shock treatment on Monday during which presidential power would be shifted to Vice President Dan Quayle.

Marlin Fitzwater said doctors at Bethesda Naval Hospital would consider the shock procedure if Bush did not respond adequately to medication overnight. He called the procedure routine and said it carried minimal risk.

■ Related story/7A

The shock will "erase the heart's rhythm and let it restart, hopefully with a normal rhythm," said cardiologist Jonathan Halperin of Mt. Sinai Medical Center in New York.

Bush

The 66-year-old Bush was evacuated from Camp David after suffering fatigue and shortness of breath while jogging on Saturday. He was diagnosed as having an atrial fibrillation, a fast, irregular heart rhythm.

"We want to assure the American people that the president is in a healthy condition. He has not suffered a heart attack. He has not suffered heart muscle damage," Fitzwater said Sunday evening in a nationally televised briefing.

Trying to curtail any alarm about Bush's condition, the White House projected an air of business as usual. Brent Scowcroft, the president's national security adviser, went to the hospital to brief Bush on global developments. "The world hasn't stopped," Scowcroft told reporters, holding aloft a satchel of briefing papers.

Fitzwater said doctors hoped Bush's heartbeat would return to normal under medication during the night. If not, they will decide early Monday whether to try the shock procedure, known as electrical cardioversion.

Fitzwater described it as "a single application of direct electrical current to the heart — "one very quick jolt."

He said Bush would have to be under a general anesthesia during the treatment but might be sedated

Gas prices up

LOS ANGELES — A springtime surge in demand pushed gasoline prices up nearly 3 cents a gallon over the past two weeks, according to an industry survey released Sunday. The average price for all grades of gasoline at full- and self-service pumps increased 2.77 cents a gallon to 122.61 cents by Friday, according to the biweekly Lundberg Survey of 13,000 stations nationwide. The price increase reflected increasing demand brought on by warmer weather, industry analyst Trilby Lundberg said.

No relations

NICOSIA, Cyprus — Iran's President Hashemi Rafsanjani said Sunday his country was not interested in ties with the United States, and had no connection to groups holding Western hostages in Lebanon. "Iran is not thinking about establishing ties with the U.S.," Rafsanjani said at a seminar at Tehran University. "The U.S. is always trying to make the issue of establishing ties with Iran subject to conditions." Washington severed relations with Tehran after Iran held 52 Americans hostage for 444 days during the 1979 Islamic revolution. Financial disputes from the hostage crisis as well as the issue of the 13 missing Westerners continue to hamper relations between the two countries.

U.S. troops force soldiers from Iraqi town

■ Elite 3rd Battalion of the U.S. Army's 325th Airborne advances deeper into northern Iraq.

Associated Press

DOHUK, Iraq — U.S. Army troops backed by Apache helicopter gunships pushed to the outskirts of this provincial capital Sunday, expelling hundreds of Iraqi soldiers in the allied forces' deepest advance into northern Iraq.

Soldiers from the elite 3rd Battallion of the 325th Airborne roared 20 miles down a main north-south highway in Humvees equipped with TOW anti-tank missiles.

About 200 Iraqi soldiers fled as the American convoy of 50 vehicles and several hundred troops arrived. Some Iraqis walked from their positions; others hitched rides in overloaded pickup trucks.

Taking Dohuk would mark the most significant expansion of the allied security zone since the military forces moved into northern Iraq and began establishing security zones for returning Iraqi refugees on April 20.

Dohuk, a city of 380,000 residents about 30 miles south of Turkey, is the capital of the northwest sector of Iraq and one of the main communication hubs in the region. Until now, the allied troops have secured smaller cities.

Allied commanders said they believed a decision to occupy the city was imminent.

Hundreds of Iraqi soldiers sat under tents pitched along a major thoroughfare. Residents said they had recently come from towns in the north, now occu-

Area parachutist dies in accident

Staff Report

An Odessa man was killed and a Midland man remained in Memorial Hospital and Medical Center late Sunday following a parachute accident at Martin County Airport about 6:40 p.m. Sunday, Martin County Sheriff's Office officials said.

By presstime, officials had not released the names of the deceased and injured men, pending notification of next of kin.

The accident occurred when the two men and a woman from Martin County were filming an advertisement while parachuting near the airport, located just north of Stanton, officials said.

The woman parachutist had begun her descent when her parachute failed to open completely. She was forced to cut it loose in order to release the reserve parachute.

The Odessa parachutist, descending above the woman, had to dodge her discarded parachute. In doing so, he turned and became tangled with the Midland man's parachute.

Both men, entangled, fell to the ground.

The Odessa man was pronounced dead at Martin County Hospital. The Midland man was transported to Memorial Hospital, where he was undergoing medical evaluation late Sunday, officials said.

Identity of the woman was not available.

Most long-term care decisions reached in reaction to crisis

By Chris Van Wagenen
Staff Writer

Sandra Neill had never heard of Alzheimer's disease in 1980. Nor could she imagine her mother's mind slipping away.

Today, Mrs. Neill has come to grips with the fact that her 63-year-old mother will never be the same.

At Rockwood Manor, a north Midland nursing facility, Imojene Duncan is mostly a memory to her grandchildren.

"Mother was an exceptional woman. Not because she was my mother, but because she was very competent . . . very capable. She always fit in with the young children, her peers and older people," Mrs. Neill said.

In 1985, Mrs. Duncan was admitted to Terrace West Nursing Home after becoming violent with her caregivers. She was later transferred to Rockwood, where two Alzheimer care wings were set up for men and women.

"This was a person who needed love and care. . . . You can look into her eyes and still see my mother, but the mother I know is gone. She does not know my name, but she does recognize me. She'll cry and hold my hand and laugh, but when I leave, she cries again."

Mrs. Neill said she handles it better now, but admits getting teary-eyed when she thinks about it. "It's like a death being relived. You never quite get over the pain . . . you just wish for the end to come. Of course, that's selfish, because we deal with other mortality better than our own."

No one knows the decisions and the guilt that follows better than those who have gone through it.

Although situations differ, many physicians believe families can work through their grief.

Dr. Richard Reese, a Midland physician who works with geriatric patients, said a common problem among families is that no one ever plans on a loved one being placed in a nursing home.

"Most of the anxiety comes before the decision is made. Once they finally make it, then that period of anxiety tends to dissipate. . . . But everyone needs to know what to expect beforehand," he said.

Agreeing was Laura Lyons, an administrator at Trinity Towers retirement community.

"It's not a pleasant subject — or at least not perceived that way — but we plan our whole lives. We start planning when we're teen-agers. We plan where we're going to college, our career, who we're gong to marry. We plan for our family. We plan for our children's education. So why don't we plan for ourselves?"

Dr. Robert Vogel, who sees a great number of nursing-home patients in his practice, said going to a home is not a death sentence.

"It's not like a prison where you'll never see them again. The family can go out and visit everyday . . . and if they're well enough, they can be taken out on a pass," he said.

Vogel knows about the stigma at-

Schwarzkopf saluted in tribute

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf was saluted Sunday at a flag-waving tribute that included a visit by Mickey Mouse, a fireworks show and a fly-over by fighter jets.

Schwarzkopf, dressed in the desert camouflage fatigues made famous by Operation Desert Storm, thanked more than 28,000 cheering supporters at Tampa Stadium for "the mother of all homecomings."

"With your support we could not lose," said Schwarzkopf, 56.

The Persian Gulf War effort was bolstered by homefront efforts like the making yellow ribbons, letter-writing campaigns and the shipment of "thousands and thousands of tons of cookies" to the troops in Saudi Arabia, he said.

"We may be known as the thunder and lightning of Desert Storm but you're the heaven from whence we came and you're the silver lining of our welcome home," he told a crowd that broke into spontaneous chants of "USA, USA."

Schwarzkopf and his family rode in a motorcade on a three-mile drive to the stadium for the "Red, White and Blue Troop Celebration," which featured 200 school children singing the Pledge of Allegiance, fireworks and a fly-over of fighter jets from MacDill Air Force Base.

Ex-New York Yankees owner George Steinbrenner served as master of ceremonies for the hourlong salute conducted in 90-plus degree heat.

"Kuwait is free today because the United States of America is still the home of the brave," Schwarzkopf said.

As a finale, Schwarzkopf stood on stage shoulder-to-shoulder with Mickey Mouse as country singer Lee Greenwood belted out "God Bless the USA," the general's favorite song.

They were backed by a sea of American flags, balloons and Disney singers and dancers. The field was decked in patriotic colors with a huge yellow ribbon painted in front of the podium.

Schwarzkopf gave a thumbs up sign as he rode onto the field in a red convertible with his wife Brenda, and children Cindy, 20, Jessica, 18, and Christian, 13.

The tribute originally was intended as a party on the downtown Franklin Street Mall to welcome home the troops. But as interest in Schwarzkopf soared, the gala was switched to the 74,000-seat stadium.

Since his return from Saudi Arabia two weeks ago, Schwarzkopf has been to Washington for lunch with President Bush and to Louisville to participate in Kentucky Derby festivities.

BUSH: President gets second medication

(From 1A)

only a few minutes. During that period, Quayle would be acting president under provisions of the 25th Amendment.

"The risk is minimal particularly in a patient such as the president who has no demonstrable heart disease," Fitzwater said. "During the short time that the president would be under anesthesia, the vice president would be acting president under the 25th Amendment."

If the procedure is successful, it will momentarily stop electrical activity in all of the president's heart cells, and a normal rhythm will resume in about 1 second, said Dr. Halperin.

Fitzwater said there had been "some evidence of positive response" to medication but that "his heartbeat has not returned to normal."

Despite the continued hospitalization, Bush was in a good mood when he poked his head out of the window of his fourth-floor hospital suite to talk to reporters. "Don't worry about me," he said at mid-afternoon. Asked if his heart were still beating irregularly, Bush joshed, "Yes, can't you hear it?"

Pointing at his heart, Bush said, "It's a question of this getting back to normal." Mrs. Bush spent much of the day at the hospital, and other family members visited with the president.

"I'm going home to bed. He's going to bed," Barbara Bush told reporters as she departed for the White House on Sunday evening.

The day's medical activities were far more extensive than originally expected. Aides had told reporters Saturday night that Bush was likely to leave the hospital early Sunday, but at mid-morning Fitzwater said Bush would spend the day at Bethesda and doctors would monitor medication intended to stabilize the president's heartbeat.

The irregular heartbeat condition, which strikes 1.5 million to 2 million Americans a year, does not necessarily pose a serious medical threat but can increase the risk of a stroke, according to medical specialists.

It can be caused by a variety of factors, ranging from a heart attack to a reaction to stress or fatigue.

Doctors administered a second drug, procainamide, to restore Bush's heart to a normal rhythm and said it was not unusual that he had not responded immediately to the first medication, digoxin.

"He's in fine condition, good spirits," Fitzwater said of Bush. He said doctors were not concerned that Bush's heart had not stabilized, adding that some people go the rest of their lives with such a condition.

Even before the current problem, Bush had signed letters to the Senate pro tem and the House speaker to turn over his powers to Quayle in event of emergency. Fitzwater said the letters are routinely carried by his military aide along with the codes for launching a nuclear attack.

Fitzwater said the standing letters have been updated and that White House chief of staff John Sununu talked with Quayle at 8:30 p.m. Sunday evening to review procedures.

The last time a president turned ove. his power was when Ronald Reagan turned over his authority to Bush during cancer surgery in 1985.

Bush was not experiencing any lingering symptoms Sunday such as the shortness of breath or fatigue, said Fitzwater. He said Bush was up at 6 a.m. and moving about his hospital suite, meeting with aides and doing paperwork.

Procainamide was prescribed to supplement the drug digoxin, which Bush began taking Saturday.

Vice President Quayle called the president this morning and then went to church. Bush also received messages from world leaders.

A photo released by the White House showed a smiling Bush, wearing a crew-neck sweater and casual slacks, playing a hand-held video game with grandchildren Sam and Ellie LeBlond. Sununu and Scowcroft also were in the room. Bush wore a bandage and gauze on his right wrist, perhaps indicating he was receiving his medication intravenously.

"He's anxious to get out of the hospital," Fitzwater said. "It's mostly just the frustration of having to sit there and wait for the medicine to take effect, especially when he can't feel any symptoms."

Dr. Halperin said people respond differently to atrial fibrillation.

IRAQ: Republican Guard pilfers electrical items

pied by allied troops.

Scores of men, wearing the black and red berets and eagle insignias of the Republican Guard, packed refrigerators, television sets and other electrical items onto dump trucks and troop carriers. Other soldiers operated stores and sold cigarettes at roadside stands.

Local residents said the electrical items had been looted and the stores and goods commandeered by the army.

"It's just like Kuwait, only worse," said Ahmed Abdullah, a Kurdish shopkeeper in Dohuk, who said all of his family's electrical items as well as a set of leather suitcases had been pilfered by the Iraqis. "They are stealing from their own people."

Abdullah, who was selling copies of Sunday's editions of the Al-Iraq newspaper — a picture of Saddam Hussein holding aloft a revolver on the cover — said he hoped the allies would move as far south as Mosul, the major city in the north.

"Clean the Arabs out of Kurdistan," said Abdullah, 43. "Give us our Kurdistan."

U.S. troops stopped their advance at a ramshackle hotel just outside the city where what appeared to be a platoon of Iraqis refused to budge.

After several minutes of negotiations, the battalion commander, Lt. Col. John Abizaid, emerged from the hotel and told his men to relax.

"Guys, don't be pointing your weapons!" he shouted to heavily armed American infantrymen surrounding the guest house. "Everybody be cool, calm and happy."

American soldiers said they believed the Iraqis would be retreating soon.

"We ain't giving an inch," said Sgt. 1st Class Scott Plymessel, 33, of Okeechobee, Fla.

American troops began to set up camp near a stone placard of Saddam decked out in a full-length leather coat.

Behind them a highway sign read: Danger.

U.S., British, French and Dutch forces have already extended their security zone east to an area past Amadiyah, a hilltop town about 50 miles from Zakho, the first point of entry for allied forces in late April.

The zone was established to protect the estimated 450,000 to 800,000 Kurdish refugees who escaped into the mountains between Iraq and Turkey, fleeing Saddam's crackdown on their rebellion in March. Another 1 million refugees fled to the Iranian border.

Allied commanders hope to encourage the Kurds to return. Dayton Maxwell, head of a U.S. State Department team assisting in the relief effort, has said that if the allies take Dohuk, all but 50,000 of the Kurdish refugees would have a home to return to.

Throughout the deserted city of Dohuk, scars of the rebellion remain. Most of the stores in the downtown area of about 10 square blocks are either closed or burned out.

Architect designs offshore rig to resemble luxury hotel

HOUSTON (AP) — A Houston architect is designing Santa Fe Drilling Co.'s new offshore oil rig with a few extras for the crew — a sauna, weight room, carpeting and interior decorator colors.

Santa Fe has hired Peter Jay Zweig to design and dress up Galaxy I jack-up rig as an offshore luxury hotel. The improvements will cost nearly $1 million.

The Galaxy oil drilling rig is a barge-like floating platform with legs at each corner that can be lowered to the sea floor to raise or "jack up" the platform above the water.

"They used to be like boats, and they really were hell holes," Zweig said. "They were cramped and painted military green."

Zweig said he's working to make the 25,000-square-foot rig seem more spacious and cheerful. Colors other than military green will be used, and carpet will replace vinyl in some of the rooms.

Mirror accents on walls and ceilings will create the illusion of more space for the 100 people who will work aboard the rig, he said.

"The trick is to use every device you know in architecture to expand the space you have," Zweig said.

Joe Pekarek, Santa Fe's vice president, said the furniture that's on order is a big improvement over standard rig furnishings.

"It looks like something you'd be willing to put in your house," Pekarek said.

The Galaxy rig is part of a new class called Universe, designed for the North Sea's blustery conditions. It can drill in waters of 360 to 400 feet, depending on the season.

Ex-gangster finishes last

AUSTIN (AP) — Former mobster-turned-politician John Johnson ended his campaign for mayor much like he started it — with an American flag draped around his neck and criticizing the system.

With all 141 precincts reporting early Sunday, Johnson was last in a seven-candidate field with 496 votes, or less than one percent of the 57,098 ballots cast.

County commissioner Bruce Todd and city councilman Robert Barnstone will face each other in a May 18 runoff for the mayor's seat. Todd won a 46.1 percent of the votes cast to 42.6 percent for Barnstone, or 26,340 votes to 24,322, said city clerk Elden Aldridge.

Johnson, 53, brought national attention to the race when he revealed that he was former gangster John Patrick Tully, who was imprisoned on murder charges.

He said he has lived in Austin for several years under the witness protection program after helping convict members of the New Jersey Campisi crime family.

Now a hot dog and fajita vendor, Johnson said he entered the mayor's race because he feared local police.

"If they're gonna hit, they're gonna hit me in the limelight," he said.

During the campaign, he accused the media of ignoring the lesser-known candidates and stomped off the stage of at least one candidate forum.

While other candidates courted special interest groups, Johnson picked up the endorsements of former U.S. Attorney General Ramsey Clark, and former New York police officer Frank Serpico, who gained fame for exposing corruption in that city's police department.

On Saturday, Johnson arrived at the city convention center draped in a flag, saying that he may challenge the election results in court because the ballot was confusing.

"I therefore feel that this election has been tainted sufficiently that if they don't call this election a fraud or a tainted election then I am going into federal court," he said.

At least one candidate didn't appreciate Johnson.

Austin Teutsch, owner of a vehicle safety inspection business, and Johnson ran neck-and-neck in the battle for last place. Teutsch received 618 votes.

Teutsch said he was incensed that he spent $4,000 on his campaign and participated in more than 50 candidate debates, only to wind up in the bottom of the race along with Johnson.

"I didn't kill anybody, and this is my reward," Teutsch said.

Houston newspaper report calls into questions judge's ethics

HOUSTON (AP) — Harris County Probate Judge Pat Gregory recused himself eight years ago from a high-profile guardianship case because of ethics questions, then returned the case to his court after years of apparently receiving financial favors from attorneys on both sides of the case.

The Houston Chronicle, in a copyright story published Sunday, reported that in the eight years between Gregory's dropping the di Portanova guardianship case and his taking it back, he received loans with unusually favorable terms and his family members have been represented by attorneys involved in the case.

In 1983, in the throes of handling the tangled, multimillion-dollar case involving Ugo di Portanova, a mentally ill member of a jet-setting family, Gregory retreated after lawyers accused him of accepting favors from opposing counsel.

In the intervening years, Gregory's influence soared. He became presiding judge of the state's 14-member probate bench and — with a $99,433-a-year salary — the highest paid elected judge in Texas.

Last year, he quietly returned the di Portanova case to his court.

The judge declined to be interviewed or photographed for the Chronicle story and efforts to reach him Sunday by The Associated Press were unsuccessful.

Records examined by the Chronicle show that he borrowed close to $400,000 from 1980-90, including a 1989 loan for $193,000 from a Baytown bank on terms that appear unusually favorable to him. Lawyers involved in the di Portanova case helped the judge obtain two other bank loans.

When two of his sons needed legal representation, it was provided by attorneys who were or would be associated with the di Portanova case.

Another di Portanova lawyer pushed legislation framed by the judge that boosted Gregory's salary and status as chief judge.

In general, the state Code of Judicial Conduct prohibits judges from accepting favors from lawyers and preferential treatment from lending institutions, said Robert Flowers, executive director of the State Commission on Judicial Conduct.

Gregory, 57, presides over one of Harris County's four statutory probate courts — comparatively obscure benches whose functions include ruling on wills, guardianships and mental illness cases.

Care becomes family learning experience

By Chris Van Wagenen
Staff Writer

Edgar and Eleanor Williamson are the first to admit that long-term care is a learning experience.

And learn they did.

Two years ago, while at home in Beaumont, Edgar's mother, Rachel Elizabeth Williamson, suffered a massive stroke.

"She couldn't speak. She couldn't feed herself. She didn't recognize anyone," said her son. "We didn't have an awful lot of choices at the time."

Two months ago, his mother died in peace at Terrace Gardens Nursing Home in Midland at age 83.

Rachel Williamson had always led an independent life, even after suffering a minor stroke a few years earlier.

In April 1989, Mrs. Williamson was admitted to the skilled-nursing unit at St. Elizabeth's Hospital in Beaumont.

With Medicare running out and the monthly cost expected to run about $18,000, the Williamsons were forced to make a dreaded decision.

"We could have brought her home with nurses around the clock, but when you're thrown into something like that . . . we had seven, eight days to figure out what to do," her son said.

Together, he and his wife began searching for a home in or around Beaumont.

The one they found was new, clean, and according to Williamson, appeared to have qualified people who knew what they were doing.

"The care appeared to be all right, but in fact (the home) had a lot of shortcomings to it," he said. "When someone tells you something, you have a tendency to take it at face value."

Williamson said basic care such as regular baths, the turning of his mother on a regular basis to prevent pneumonia (a common development for a bedridden patient) and the cleaning of her were not up to standards, as far as he was concerned.

According to the family, had it not been for a companion they had hired to watch over their mother a few years earlier, the situation might have been much worse.

Williamson's first lesson in critical care came after his mother was taken out of intensive care and placed in the home, but kept on oxygen for months after her condition had stablized.

"One of the things you'll find is, the instructions doctors give are really never looked at from a practical standpoint. So, we started asking questions. Does she really need oxygen? The nurses looked at it and it turned out she was breathing on her own."

The expense had been unnecessary.

"You have to be practical. Did she really need that to sustain life? It turned out she didn't."

His second experience came while checking on his mother's vital signs from Midland. Williamson said he was told day after day that his mother's condition never changed. That made him suspicious.

"I got to looking at those charts and found out they were only looking (in on her) once a week."

"Yes, the home was new and nice, but you can't judge just by looking," said his wife, Eleanor.

It was then that the couple decided immediate steps needed to be taken.

"So, we went through a series of experiences to the point where we just decided to move her here. We weren't happy with them and they certainly weren't happy with us," Williamson said.

The couple said all the "nagging questions" ended when they brought Edgar's mother to Midland and to Terrace Gardens.

Eleanor said she and her husband were candid with the home's management about what the family expected. "It wasn't as new as the other one, but as I said, you can't judge by looks. And you can't just put them in there and take it for granted. You have to check and see that things are being done," Eleanor said.

Rachel Williamson had always led an independent life.

With one bad experience and a world of knowledge in terms of what questions to ask behind them, the couple now knew what they wanted from a nursing home.

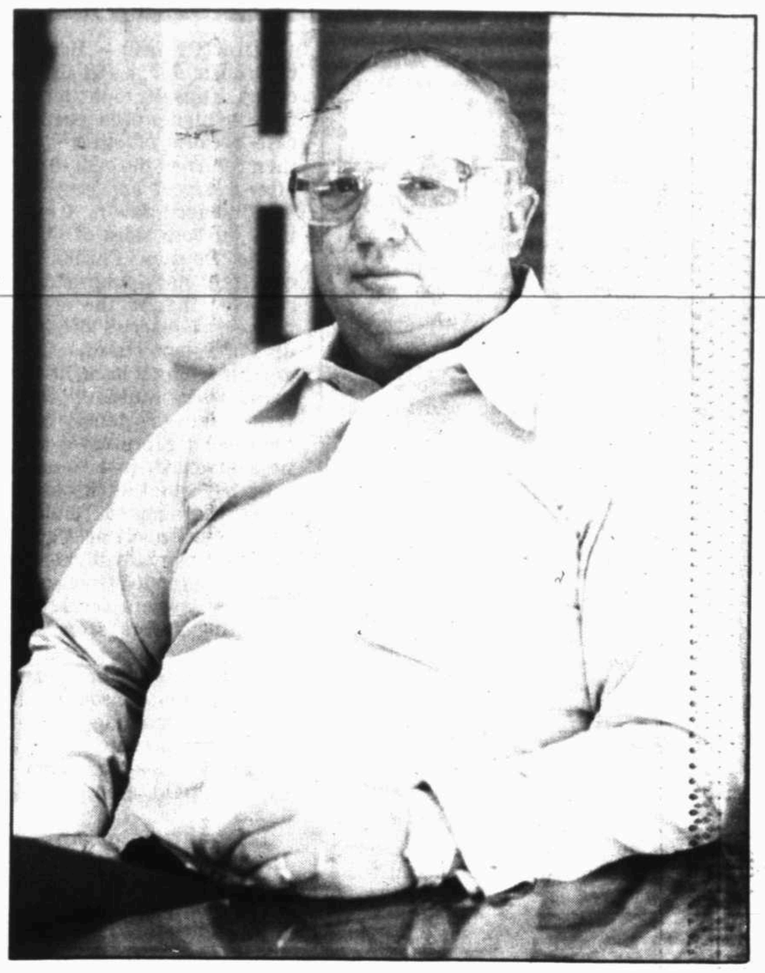
"We knew what kind of care we wanted and we made that abundantly clear," Williamson said.

Based on their personal experience, the couple said it's imperative to first find a good doctor who is willing to listen and understand.

In their case, the family found Dr. Richard E. Reese, a Midland physician familiar with problems of the elderly.

"The doctor has to have an influence on the nursing home from the standpoint that staff is kept informed. . . . If you have the right doctor, these things get done," he said.

As for other advice, Williamson said that those considering a home need to get references, names of patients and other responsible parties. "Do your homework . . . look underneath all the covers."



Edgar Williamson and his wife are the first to admit that long-term care is a learning experience.

Common sense, homework spell relief for loved one

By Chris Van Wagenen

Federal regulations that took effect seven months ago under the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987 changed care guidelines for most nursing homes relying on Medicaid reimbursement payments. But, will they guarantee quality care?

Experts say no.

Fact is, in the end it is still up to families to do the leg work necessary to ascertain the type of treatment they can expect once a decision is made to place a loved one in a nursing home.

"Looking at other residents can tell you a lot," said B.J. Norton, nursing administrator at the Mabee Health Care Center at Manor Park. "Are they dressed or in the clothes they slept in? Is someone talking to them or are they just lumped into a day room? Is there an odor of urine?"

Ms. Norton said the problem most people have with nursing homes is lack of exposure. "People don't like going into nursing homes because they're considered a last step. . . . But if they did, they would learn the differences between nursing homes and just how to judge them."

Ms. Norton and others interviewed for this series suggest checking with the local health department, which is responsible for annual surveying of Medicaid-funded facilities as well as for licensing and certification.

Records are open to the public.

"From those, they can find out what deficiencies have been written up over the past few years. If deficiencies involve food or medication, those are serious," Ms. Norton said.

Of course, Ms. Norton and others say that deficiencies aren't the sole factor in making a judgment. "Maybe they had a bad survey and those things were corrected, and now everything is running well."

Concurring was Laura Lyons, administrator for Presbyterian Homes' Trinity Towers retirement community.

B.J. Norton, R.N.

"Do they have patient-care deficiencies that have been a problem for a while? Is the place clean? If they can't keep the building clean, can they keep your mother clean?"

Ms. Lyons said snapshots of a home, such as a deficiency report, aren't enough when going through the selection process. "Talk to people. Word of mouth goes a long way in this business."

"Deficiencies can be inconsistent from time to time, depending on the inspectors. If you're going to look at them, what you need to do is maybe look back at two or three reports. Are the same deficiencies repeated over and over?"

Betty Russell, an administrator at Courtyard Care Center in Midland, said it also is important to look at the staff.

"What you want to look for is how the staff treats the residents as well as how they treat each other," she said.

One person who has been on both sides of the fence is Gary Martin, a former state inspector, now regional director of Texas Health Enterprises, which operates both Terrace West Nursing Center and Terrace Gardens Nursing Home in Midland.

Martin suggested that families inspect every home they are considering. "They should walk down every hall. They should talk to the staff and see how they feel about their jobs. How do they (staff) interact? Obviously, if you see the staff bickering or fighting, it should give you second thoughts."

Martin said observing a building's upkeep also can give families an idea of what goes on day-to-day. "That will tell you something about the ownership.

"I'd also ask either the administrator or the director of nurses what their philosophy of care is in the facility."

Betty Compton, director of personal-care services for Presbyterian Homes in Midland and a registered nurse, has worked in and out of nursing homes for 35 years. She suggested still other ways families can investigate homes.

"If I were looking for a facility, I would want to visit it perhaps in the early morning. I'd like to know if the people were groomed for breakfast. Has someone taken the time to make them feel nice and clean?"

Ms. Compton said she would also visit in the evening at dinner time. "Evening meals tend to provide what residents don't like."

Ms. Compton said supervision of prescribed drugs also is important. "Do staff actually supervise, or do they set medication down and walk away?"

Over the years, Ms. Compton said she has observed residents taking medication and then spitting it out when a nurse leaves.

One pressing problem in all care facilities, according to her and others, is dehydration of residents.

Ms. Compton said it is important that a home have one person who does nothing else but make certain that residents receive plenty of water and juice during a given day.

IN THIS SERIES

Sunday 5 — For millions of Americans no longer able to care for themselves, the future will include a nursing home stay, but that is not the dreary life sentence it once was. Nursing homes are an industry in evolution and revolution.

Today 6 — Selecting the proper care setting for an elderly loved one is as individual a decision as the family facing it. But guidelines and the lessons of those who have gone before can prove helpful for those grappling with the serious questions that lie ahead.

Tuesday 7 — Life-care communities integrating independent living with more supervised settings and long-term skilled nursing are one care choice for the '90s. Home health agencies and day care centers are other emerging options to full-time live-in facilities.

Wednesday 8 — For growing numbers of elderly and their families, private payment is no longer an option in seeking care. That means a trip through the federal government's Club Med -- Medicaid and Medicare -- that is no easy exercise.

Thursday 9 — As the Baby Boom generation marches relentlessly toward the geriatric wards of the 21st century, health care-delivery and financing systems are in peril. All approaches to long-term care will likely be stretched to their limits.

For the Arnolds, Mabee was a blessing

Joe and Wilma Arnold came to Midland to spend Thanksgiving with their children and grandchildren.

As always, it was a happy reunion for daughter Pat Benefield, son Jim and his wife Suzy and their children.

At age 80, Joe couldn't walk very well because of a fall, but he was in good health and good spirits for the holidays.

On Dec. 11 at 2:30 a.m., Jim got out of bed to check in on his father. What he found would change the family's life forever.

"Dad couldn't talk. He couldn't say anything. He was just clenching his chest. I thought he was having a heart attack," his son said.

Joe was taken by ambulance to Midland Memorial Hospital, where hours later Dr. Gregory Bartha's diagnosis presented a new fear. Joe had suffered a stroke.

"We've always been a real close family," Jim said. "All this was so unexpected."

In subsequent days, family members, along with Joe's wife of 60 years, came to a conclusion that was filled with as much love as there were tears.

Joe would need a nursing home.

"The doctor told us he needed 24 hours' skilled-care nursing," Pat said. "We discussed it with dad. . . . We knew at the time we just weren't able to give him the care that he needed."

Jim and Pat said they looked at several nursing homes in the Midland area before deciding on the Mabee Care Center, part of the continuing-care retirement community (CCRC) at Manor Park.

"We compared. We looked at a lot of different things, cleanliness and such, but the one determining factor was the doctor. We thought a lot of Dr. Bartha," Jim said.

Ironically, the family said they had talked with their father about the possibility of long-term nursing care on two or three occasions.

"Now this was prior to the stroke," Jim said. "Dad was very supportive of that. We talked with him and that's important. You just don't come in and say 'Hey, this is what we're going to do.' "

Pat said the family was apprehensive about the decision, knowing it would be difficult to take their father away from his home in Tulia, Texas, located just north of Plainview.

"But we also knew by having him here in Midland, we could see him all the time, love him and be with him," she said.

Manor Park wasn't new to the family.

Jim said he became familiar with the retirement community through his insurance business.

Pat also was familiar with it. During an earlier visit, she and her father took a drive out to Manor Park, "And I asked him, Daddy, if the time comes when you need 24-hour care, what do you think about this place? He turned to me and said, 'It's beautiful.' . . . That's one of the things about it."

Since the stroke, family members and the children try to see their father once each day.

"We get him in his wheelchair and push him around and take him out (of Manor Park) once a week," she said.

While Joe Arnold can no longer speak, he is still very much alert.

This day, Pat sits with him in an open atrium, squeezing his hand as she recalled events that occurred after the stroke.

"I'll tell you, I don't know what we would have done without Suzy and the grandchildren. They've been so supportive . . . because it isn't always easy, is it dad?," his teary-eyed daughter said.

While Joe's children have adjusted to the change, Jim admits it's been very difficult for his mother to accept.

"She (Wilma) wanted to take care of him, but she knew she couldn't. What bothers her is that she can't see him every day. She's torn between staying here and going to Tulia, and that's hard. She gets more upset now than when all this was going on because she doesn't like to leave."

Both children said they're satisfied with the care their father is receiving at Manor Park. Pat said one good indication is when they take their father out and then bring him back. "The staff is always happy to see him . . . everyone makes a point here to get to know the patients."

Jim said the experience has made him much more appreciative about life and health in general.

"We learned so much (from this), about getting older and what to look for — not only for ourselves, but our other family members. . . . I don't think you realize the day is ever going to come until you deal with it firsthand. I know it's made me more aware."

Joe Arnold, a resident at Mabee Center, is escorted by his daughter, Pat Benefield.

'We've always been a real close family,' Jim Arnold said. 'All this was so unexpected.' In subsequent days, family members, along with Joe's wife of 60 years, came to a conclusion that was filled with as much love as there were tears. Joe would need a nursing home.

DECISIONS: Choosing nursing home often becomes inevitable

tached to nursing homes — the going in and never coming out again. "But a lot of it depends on what their problem is. They may go in and it may be a temporary situation."

Mildred Ford, until last month director of nurses for Courtyard Care Center in Midland, said many will not admit their guilt. "I did the same thing. I feel so sorry for people who have to put their relatives in nursing homes. Very often, when they (the family) tell me something wasn't done, I think of my mother."

Today, Mrs. Ford watches over her own mother, Bertha Pate, who has been at Courtyard for two years. Like Mrs. Neill's mother, Mrs. Pate was diagnosed with Alzheimer's.

"I knew she would be cared for. That wasn't the problem. What worried me was how I felt about myself. I had a feeling I should have made some type of other arrangements, but I could see that just wouldn't work," Mrs. Ford said.

"She had a good life. The thing that hurts now is, she isn't living. She's just alive. It's very hard. It's very hard when I walk out that door and see her."

In the 35 years Betty Compton has worked in and out of nursing homes as a registered nurse, she has noticed a marked improvement in the care that's going on.

"I've seen people who were not able to function with family care and at that time, might go into a nursing home. I've also seen them literally make a complete turnaround."

Ms. Compton said many times an elderly person at home becomes stale — mentally inactive — as he sits in front of a television with nothing to do. "But when they're with other people they do change."

She added that while families have the feeling patients are not loved, "that's wrong. I know for a fact that these people are easy to love. I had an employee once who had a very limited income and whose child was sick. Each week she would buy something for the residents who didn't have families. Tell me that's not love."

And sometimes, the residents, themselves, accept being in a home better than the families.

Pearl McLean, an 87-year-old resident who entered Courtyard Care Center in Midland in January, said she came to a point where she realized she could no longer go on alone.

Mrs. McLean, the mother of four, decided with the help of her family to enter a home that was near one of her children.

Today, she and her daughter, Connie Killion of Midland, visit more than ever.

"So much of my adjustment depended on my faith . . . knowing that I wouldn't be alone . . . that the Lord was going to be with me."

Mrs. McLean suffers from a degenerative spine condition and no longer gets around like she used to. "I don't get out, but Connie is good about bringing me dinner from different places."

At Easter, Connie and her children came to visit for the day. Mrs. McLean said it was wonderful seeing them all. "We visited. It was simply beautiful. Different than any other Easter I had ever spent. . . . But she (Connie) has a life, too."

Dr. Henry Page, who works with residents at Trinity Towers and Manor Park, said one reason a number of elderly people end up in poor health and require managed care is that many live alone, losing contact with the outside world.

'She had a good life. The thing that hurts now is, she isn't living. She's just alive. It's very hard. It's very hard when I walk out that door and see her.'

Mildred Ford, former director Courtyard Care Center

"They don't eat properly and they reduce their outside social contact to the point where their physical and mental well-being deteriorates rapidly."

But Page, like others, is convinced conditions that require care can be reversed, giving families hope.

"We've had people who have come in here who, from a medical standpoint, maybe had six months' life expectancy. In a good percentage of cases, the trend can be reversed with adequate nutrition, minimal physical therapy and exposure to outside stimuli. It can be done."

Still, according to Dr. William Hibbitts, another Midland physician, the same cannot be said for those with Alzhiemer's — a progressive, degenerative disease that attacks the brain.

Hibbits said in that case, ongoing family support plays an important role, particularly where there's another spouse involved — a spouse who is now on his or her own.

In making his rounds, Hibbitts said the most common complaint among nursing-home residents who suffer from little or no dementia is sheer isolation. "Oftentimes, I hear about their loneliness . . . that no one comes to see them."

Page agreed. "You would be amazed at the number of patients who don't see anyone for months. One of the saddest things to see is these people who are pushed aside and forgotten."

He said children who visit regularly should feel no guilt, especially if they've done everything they can to investigate the home and pay close attention to the care their parents are receiving.

In Mrs. Neill's case, she's convinced her mother, Imojene, is getting the best possible care at Rockwood.

"You never think about these sort of things until they hit home. She is getting tremendous care, better there than what I was capable of giving her at home. Her hair may not always be combed, but she has people there who really love her."

Dr. Henry F. Page visits with patient Lorene Martin, 95, at Mabee Center/Manor Park. Dr. Page said one reason a number of elderly people end up in poor health and require managed care is that many live alone, losing contact with the outside world.

Let's not forget Saddam's threat

Bringing Saddam Hussein to justice — and removing him from power in Iraq — is not going to be easy or occur rapidly. That fact is becoming more obvious as days tick into weeks and weeks into months.

But Saddam still has to go.

The 12 nations of the European Community wanted to bring war crimes charges against him. They believe his wars against Iran and Kuwait, and his genocide against the Kurds, require a trial of the kind faced by German and Japanese militarists after World War II.

It wasn't such a bad idea, but the initial U.S. reaction to the EC's unanimous vote in mid-April was not encouraging. Asked about it, Defense Secretary Dick Cheney said, "If they want to send somebody to Baghdad to arrest the gentleman, we have nothing against it."

That is an inadequate response. There is more to the Europeans' proposition than arresting Saddam.

Since the cease-fire, President George Bush has been slow in dealing with the war's aftermath. The White House finally admitted it had underestimated the savagery of the suppression of the Kurds and sent help their way, which the United Nations claims created the largest human exodus in history. Since that time refugee camps have been established for the Kurds in Iraq which should work to the United States' advantage in the drive to rid itself of Saddam.

It would be nice if someone delivered up Saddam. But that isn't likely to happen and he isn't the kind of law-abiding, rights-respecting national leader one finds in the United States or one of a handful of other nations.

What it all boils down to is this: either the United States government can maintain its embargoes against Iraq thus making it tough enough on that nation's citizens that they will oust Saddam or the U.S. can drop all efforts aimed at getting Saddam out of power. That decision would admit the failure of what President Bush and the forces of Desert Storm have attempted to do.

Bush is correct to maintain the pressure on Iraq. As long as Saddam is in power, the world is not safe. We must not forget the threat posed when Iraq invaded Kuwait on Aug. 2 and the entire civilized world responded to the challenge.

JACK ANDERSON

Revamp of Weather Service stymied

WASHINGTON — Top officials at the Commerce Department may have threatened and intimidated their own employees to stop them from tattling to Congress about mismanagement of a $1 billion federal project.

Anderson

The project is a remake of the National Weather Service to upgrade its ability to predict storms, tornadoes and other potentially dangerous weather conditions. The project is beset by delays and cost overruns.

A congressional subcommittee chaired by Rep. James Scheuer, D-N.Y., began investigating the project, but now finds itself investigating whether the Commerce Department, the parent agency of the National Weather Service, threatened employees who cooperated with Scheuer's investigators.

Scheuer and Rep. George Brown, D-Calif., sent a letter to Commerce Secretary Robert Mosbacher spelling out the allegations about intimidation. "Some of the alleged threats were of a severely menacing nature, were obviously intended to intimidate and chill further cooperation with the subcommittee and were made by department officials with the apparent authority and capability of following through with retaliatory actions," the two congressmen wrote.

Sources told our associate Scott Sleek that some who cooperated with the subcommittee were even worried that their jobs were on the line. The letter to Mosbacher doesn't mention the names of Commerce staffers who may have threatened the whistleblowers.

The subcommittee was already irked by the Commerce Department's reluctance to answer questions about the overall modernization program. Among those thought to be holding back information from Congress was Commerce Inspector General Frank DeGeorge. His office described the problem as a misunderstanding over what documents could be publicly released.

The most troublesome piece of the modernization plan is also its most expensive piece — the Weather Service's radar system. The old system is antiquated and the agency is so unhappy with the progress on a new system that it is threatening to cancel the $700 million contract with Unisys Corp. to build it. Unisys has asked for up to $250 million more because of unexpected costs, and the company claims that the government isn't paying fast enough.

The Unisys-made radar has gotten mixed reviews in testing. A prototype for the system — NEXRAD, for Next-Generation Radar — performed inadequately when the Air Force tested it last year. But it fared better in a more recent test.

The National Weather Service employees' union has been warning for months that the delays on the Unisys contract could leave the agency in a dangerous bind. The old equipment is so antiquated that it hampers the Weather Service's ability to forecast dangerous weather, they say.

For example, last summer the Weather Service radar was too weak to predict the magnitude of a storm that brought surprise flooding to Shadyside, Ohio.

The Weather Service introduced its modernization plan two years ago. It called for replacing old equipment, closing some Weather Service offices and eliminating 800 jobs. The idea was to replace people with more sophisticated equipment. Many of the jobs have been eliminated by attrition, but the new equipment hasn't come along to replace them. And new weather satellites have remained grounded because of design flaws.

The Weather Service maintains its modernization plan is going well, except for the problem with the Unisys contract. But that's a problem with a price tag that deserves close scrutiny without interference from heavy-handed Commerce officials.

Do what you can to help veterans

The letter headlined "Don't forget our soldiers in the gulf" was a good reminder to us Midlanders who are known for our support programs nationwide.

On the same day this letter was published (April 30) I noticed another reminder of our soldiers, another article pointing out the needs of our veterans — soldiers of all military forces — and there have been other articles telling of the needs and inefficiency of our current Department of Veteran Affairs. So, let's don't forget our veterans and give them the support they need.

History points out that since the late 16th century the concept of community responsibility for those who served in military forces is a must for citizens of any country. Today we depend on a group in Washington, D.C. to dole out the benefits and with the growing rate of veterans (6.6 million in 1988) the bureaucracy leaves a tremendous gap and many of these veterans are left on the street, cold, hungry and handicapped. As a community of service to others, let us as citizens fill in this gap and become more aware of the complexity of being a veteran and meet their needs.

A support group is being formed at the local Vet Center at 3404 W. Illinois. Contact them at 697-8222 or 683-3300 and find out what you can do to help a veteran.

It's time to care about profession that cares

The American Nurses Association has designated the week of May 6 as "Nurses Week," a departure from previous years in that a week instead of a day has been set aside to honor the profession that "cares."

The official slogan this year is "Nurses Care for America." Central to the very core of nursing is the practice of caring. Caring consists of factors that are practiced interpersonally, that accept people not only as they are now, but for what they can become.

To be a nurse is to care. To be a nurse is to never hesitate at the crossroads of choice. It is to live intimately with and to confront, on a daily basis, the issues of life and death, of love and hate. To care is to never withdraw behind an objective point of view. It is to take the light into the bleak and desolate places and help transform them into ones of possibilities.

If you know any nurses, care about them during "Nurses Week."

George Bush: Impaled on his own rhetoric

I don't know why people think George Bush is such a brilliant statesman. He made yet another dumb mistake when he let the British talk him into establishing so-called safe havens for Kurds inside Iraq.

Reese

The Kurds, of course, are assuming the United States will protect them indefinitely. They may not believe it but it's to their political advantage to assume it.

Bush, however, will have to abandon these Kurds. He could do it now or he can do it later, but abandon them he will because the alternative is a permanent U.S. presence inside Iraq.

You see, the problem for the Kurds is not Saddam Hussein. Whoever replaced Saddam Hussein would follow the same policy of not granting independence to the Kurdish minority and of crushing any Kurdish rebellion. Our Turkish allies, who have 10 million Kurds in their country, likewise don't wish to see an independent Kurdistan in Iraq or anywhere else in their vicinity. Neither do the Iranians, who also have a Kurdish minority.

That's tragic perhaps for some Kurds, but there is nothing the United States can do about it in 1991 unless the American people wish to restart the war and occupy the whole of Iraq. The American people's sympathy for the Kurds does not extend that far.

Bush's present problems stem from his own excessive and careless rhetoric. Instead of being honest with the American people about a limited objective to drive the Iraqi army out of Kuwait and create an excuse for a permanent military presence in the Persian Gulf, he demonized Saddam Hussein as some kind of reincarnated Hitler who threatened the peace of the world.

Now, of course, the American people who had only Bush's rhetoric for information, think we lost the war because Saddam Hussein is still in power. For the same reason, they think if Saddam Hussein remains in power, he's going to wipe out the Kurds.

Hussein is a repressive dictator. He's cruel to his enemies and he's very quick to decide somebody who doesn't agree with him is an enemy. That said, however, the man is no Hitler. For one thing, he isn't as smart as Hitler and for another, he is far from the murderous tyrant Hitler was. When Hitler decided to rid Europe of Jews, he darn near succeeded. Saddam Hussein has never tried to exterminate the Kurds. There were about 4 million Kurds in Iraq when Saddam took power more than a decade ago and there are still about 4 million Kurds in Iraq.

Saddam Hussein has always used a carrot and stick approach — putting down armed rebellions but otherwise courting the Kurds. He has already signed an agreement with the United Nations to facilitate humanitarian aid to the Kurds and an agreement with some Kurdish chieftains to grant some level of additional autonomy. That doesn't mean he won't make it excruciatingly painful for any Kurd his government decides participated in the rebellion, but it does indicate he has no intention of exterminating the Kurdish people or expelling them en masse. Remember, a majority of the Kurds did not flee and are living now under Iraqi control.

Sitting over here in the United States, you have to be careful to note the source of information. It's in the interest of Kurdish rebel leaders, as well as Iraqi exiles, to paint the government in Bagdad in the most vicious colors. After all, they would like nothing better than for the U.S. to topple the government for them. Keep in mind, too, that just because an Iraqi exile hates Saddam Hussein that doesn't mean the exile is a great humanitarian democrat or fond of the U.S. for that matter.

At any rate, Bush is now impaled on his own rhetoric. He should have stuck to his guns and pulled the U.S. forces out and not let TV images of human misery and bad advice from British politicians bog us down. The Kurds have to remain in Iraq. We don't.

Saddam Hussein is no Hitler and George Bush is no Winston Churchill. At best, he's a Gerald Ford who kept his helmet on when he played football.

Sununu stirs an unerring sense of sleaze

NEW ORLEANS — When Thomas Jefferson's political hatchet man, James Monroe, was told to derail the career of Alexander Hamilton, he leaked to a sycophantic editor some embarrassing letters. They seemed to show Hamilton abusing the public trust by secretly making payoffs.

Safire

Hamilton responded to this Jeffersonian hardball by making public the full, sordid story: He had been blackmailed years before by the husband of a woman with whom he had a torrid affair.

The father of Federalism chose to accept the opprobrium of his attempted cover-up of an adultery scandal rather than let it be thought he had abused the public trust at Treasury. His morals in private life were questionable but his ethics in public life were impeccable. The citizens of the new nation agreed with those priorities, and Hamilton's career was saved.

The grand tradition marches on. Americans are being presented again with a brouhaha about private morality and a concern with public ethics.

Sen. Charles Robb of Virginia stands accused by NBC News of having attended parties at which a former used-car salesman claims cocaine was used (a charge already heard and shrugged off by Virginia voters), and for having taken at least a massage in 1984 from a former Miss Virginia.

Will this outdated gossip gain NBC News respect? No. Will it ruin Robb's chances for a run for the White House? I think not; even if he did absent himself from fidelity with Miss Virginia, voters will see that as a private moral matter.

Ah, but what of the Character Issue? Would we want as our leader one who has sinned while professing to be pure? It's not the morality but the hypocrisy, say the moralizers.

That's like a headline-hunting prosecutor who cannot prove a crime seeking an indictment for conspiracy to commit one. "Character Issue" is a euphemism used by those not honest enough to admit to peephole interest; it's a hypocritical charge of hypocrisy, a powdering of the bluenose.

The morally upright John Sununu's sin, on the other hand, is the hubris that leads to ethical blindness.

Some brilliant but shallow minds, thrust into positions of power, assume they can do no wrong in the pursuit of right. Whipsawed by great power and little money, they feel like impoverished billionaires, and order up luxuries that others use money to buy.

So he paid only $1,200 for trips that cost taxpayers a half-million dollars plus crew salaries, on the arrogant notion that the president would be helpless if denied "secure voice contact" with his indispensable chief of staff winging to the ski slopes.

That pompous excuse for a plush ride is a thumb in the eye to every taxpayer — and in the case of an ostentatious cost-cutter, genuine hypocrisy. Using national security as a cover for personal luxury is not wrong because it appears wrong, but because it is wrong. Secretly padding the paycheck with perks may not be unlawful, but it is surely unethical. Our palindromic pal is not being punished for being this administration's Abominable No-Man, but for stirring the public's unerring sense of sleaze.

Today's highlight in history:

One hundred years ago, on May 6, 1891, electrician Irwin H. Hoover began installing the first electrical wiring in the White House. (According to William Seale in "The President's House," published by the White House Historical Association, President Benjamin Harrison and his wife, Caroline, refused to touch the switches that operated the electric lights because they feared being shocked.)

Quayle returns to spotlight in Bush's absence

By Matthew C. Quinn
Hearst News Service

■ An Analysis

WASHINGTON — With the possibility that he could become acting president Monday, if President Bush is anesthetized for heart treatment, Vice President Dan Quayle faced a new round of scrutiny about his qualifications to assume the nation's highest office.

Bush, 66, remained hospitalized for a Sunday night at Bethesda Naval Hospital for treatment for an irregular heartbeat.

The condition was diagnosed after the president suffered fatigue and shortness of breath while jogging Saturday afternoon at the Camp David, Md., presidential retreat.

Press secretary Marlin Fitzwater said that Bush's heartbeat had not returned to normal Sunday night despite treatment with two drugs for atrial fibrillation — a fast, irregular heart rhythm — a condition that strikes 1.5 million to 2 million Americans a year and is not normally considered life-threatening.

Should Bush not respond to the drugs overnight, Fitzwater said, doctors will decide early Monday whether to conduct electro-cardioversion, an electrical shock treatment that would require general anesthesia and incapacitate Bush for "only a short period of time."

If that relatively common, low-risk procedure is performed, Fitzwater said, Quayle would become acting president under the terms of the 25th Amendment to the Constitution that allows the temporary transfer of presidential power to the vice president in the event the president is incapacitated.

The White House did its best to project a business-as-usual air and minimize Bush's condition. Bush received Chief of Staff John Sununu and National Security Adviser Brent Scowcroft, had lunch with his wife Barbara, and leaned out a hospital window and told reporters he was "feeling pretty good." He added, "Don't worry about me."

Bush's hospitalization created speculation about its political impact and put the spotlight on Quayle, who was plucked from relative obscurity for Bush's ticket in 1988.

Democratic political consultant Michael McCurry said Quayle's qualifications to assume the presidency are "a doubt that nags the electorate."

Stephen Hess, a public policy analyst at the Brookings Institution, said the president's medical condition inevitably will provoke speculation about Quayle "being a heartbeat away from the presidency."

Quayle spokesman David Beckwith said Quayle welcomed the scrutiny. "He has stated publicly he's ready to do what's required," he said.

Opinion polls have shown that the public has grave doubts about the abilities of the boyish-looking, 44-year-old former Indiana senator who would become president in Bush were to die or become incapacitated.

Although Bush made an effort to boost Quayle's stock by bringing him into deliberations during the Persian Gulf War, a poll taken last month found Quayle's standing at an all-time low. The Time-Cable News Network poll found that only 19 percent agreed that Quayle "is qualified to be president if something were to happen to George Bush."

Stephen Ambrose, biographer of former Presidents Dwight D. Eisenhower and Richard M. Nixon, said when he heard that Bush had been hospitalized Saturday night his first thought was, "Quayle. Oh, my God."

NBC News prefaced a round of critical man-in-the-street interviews by saying: "The very thought of 'President Quayle' caused a few hearts to skip a beat in New York's Central Park."

But several analysts said Quayle faced a golden opportunity to enhance his stature, much as then-Vice President Nixon did in 1955 when Eisenhower suffered a heart attack at the summer White House in Colorado and Nixon took over some of his presidential duties.

Former President Reagan, attending church in Bel Air, Calif., said Quayle is up to taking over the presidency, if that becomes necessary. "I remember him as a very competent senator. I think he will do just fine," Reagan sad.

But Norman Ornstein, an analyst at the American Enterprise Institute said: "Obviously now, the question of who is No. 2 is much more salient in people's minds than it was before, and it's going to change political thinking if this is more than a transient episode."

Fitzwater emphasized that Bush had not suffered a heart attack, was in good spirits and had shown some indications of response to the drugs.

But he said Bush's doctors would meet at dawn to decide whether to go ahead with the electrical treatment. Quayle would then become acting president.

Cyclone-strength winds may pound Bangladesh

DHAKA, Bangladesh (AP) — Forecasters on Sunday predicted winds approaching cyclone strength for Bangladesh's storm-devastated coast, and news reports said survivors from last week's killer cyclone looted food trucks in one town.

Steady rain and inadequate transport upset distribution of relief supplies Sunday to the estimated 10 million people displaced from the cyclone, and relief officials and physicians said "secondary deaths" may start occurring soon in remote islands still awaiting aid.

The Red Crescent, the Islamic equivalent of the Red Cross, said the death toll in Tuesday's cyclone was likely to reach 200,000. The official count was put at 125,720. Newspapers predicted the toll would be 500,000.

A helicopter carrying the prime ministers of Bangladesh and Pakistan and Nobel laureate Mother Teresa over the disaster area made an emergency landing Sunday but returned safely to Dhaka hours later. State TV did not report any injuries to Mother Teresa, Prime Minister Khaleda Zia or Pakistan's Nawaz Sharif.

Of the food supplies reaching the stricken southeastern coast, some packages were airdropped into the sea atop piles of dead bodies, newspapers said. Plastic containers of drinking water were dropped from 500 feet high, bursting on impact, a foreign photographer on one relief flight said.

As time began to run out for refugees without shelter or food, relief officials criticized the government for not coming up with a specific relief plan. As an example of the country's lack of aid coordination, its political parties are conducting separate relief efforts apart from the government operation.

"The critical period has started. Famished men, injured men can only survive for four to five days under the circumstances," said Dr. Mohammad Musa of CARE International, a relief organization.

"We are talking about the dead. What about the injured people? There are people with fractures," Musa told reporters.

Gusty winds and rain, which continued Sunday, handicapped Bangladesh's fleet of 17 helicopters and a few fixed-wing airplanes.

The Weather Bureau Sunday forecast winds of 60 to 70 mph will hit nine northern districts as well as the eastern districts of Noakhali, which caught the lashing edge of Tuesday's storm.

Fishing boats and other small craft were warned to keep away from the sea along the eastern coast, including Chittagong. Few trucks could travel southward because the roads were flooded, officials said.

The independent Bengali-language Sangbad newspaper said groups of hungry men looted at least three trucks carrying rice at Faujdarhat late Saturday, 135 miles southeast of Dhaka.

The newspaper quoted an official as saying the men left a note on one of the trucks saying, "People are dying of hunger. So we need the food.

"Until now no relief has reached us. The food will be distributed amongst us," the note said, according to the newspaper.

Ittefaq, another independent Bengali-language daily, said the packages of dried food and clean water dropped from the air often miss their target and fall in the sea.

"Many packets of food fall on piles of dead bodies or into muddy waters," Ittefaq said.

Relief officials said the government has not given foreign relief organizations a list of specific needs, but has only issued a general appeal for help.

'Many packets of food fall on piles of dead bodies or into muddy waters.'

— Ittefaq newspaper

Mrs. Zia's 6-week-old government has denied the charge of ineptitude, saying the job at hand is enormous.

Red Crescent volunteers said decomposing bodies are contaminating water and threatening the survivors with epidemics.

"We are very concerned. There are areas where we have no presence and we are yet to get reports from there," Red Crescent Secretary General Ali Hassan Quereshi said.

John Mohrbacher, a spokesman for CARE International in New York, said fouled drinking water and contamination from corpses and cattle carcasses would breed epidemics.

'Endeavour' lands in San Antonio for overnight stay

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The new space shuttle Endeavour landed at Kelly Air Force Base Sunday, where it will remain overnight before continuing its maiden flight to Florida, NASA and Air Force officials said.

Endeavour left Biggs Army Airfield near El Paso at 3 p.m. CDT and landed at Kelly AFB at 3:25 p.m., said Lt. Dave Ebner, a Kelly spokesman.

Weather permitting, the space shuttle will head to Kennedy Space Center in Florida sometime Monday, Ebner said.

The $2 billion shuttle, strapped atop a modified jet, took off Friday from Rockwell International's shuttle assembly plant in Palmdale, Calif. and landed at the Fort Bliss airfield in El Paso to refuel.

Bad weather grounded the spacecraft at the Fort Bliss airfield Saturday, delaying its journey, which originally was planned to take two days.

Endeavour was built to replace the destroyed Challenger. It rolled off the assembly line last week.

Astronauts wrap up voyage

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The astronauts aboard space shuttle Discovery squeezed in as many experiments for the Pentagon as possible Sunday as the arduous "Star Wars" research mission drew to a close.

In their last full day in space, the seven astronauts took time out to commemorate the 30th anniversary of America's first manned space flight. They crowded in front of a flight deck camera that beamed down the scene live.

"Thirty years ago, we were flying one man at a time. Now we're flying seven or more," said shuttle commander Michael Coats, surrounded by his crew. "So we're all wondering what it's going to be like 30 years from now, how many people will be up here in what kind of vehicle."

Alan Shepard became the first American to fly in space on May 5, 1961. His suborbital trip lasted 15 minutes.

Discovery's eight-day voyage is the 40th flight of a shuttle and America's 71st manned space flight.

The shuttle has been orbiting 161 miles above Earth since April 28 and is due to return Monday. Landing was scheduled for 1:49 p.m. CDT at Edwards Air Force Base in California. Weather forecasters said conditions there should be good.

The astronauts spent Sunday getting ready to come home and operating two scientific instruments that were incapacitated most of the flight because of broken data-collecting recorders.

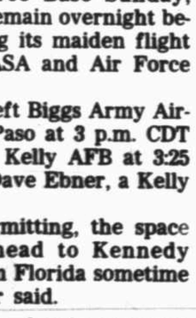
In a complex salvage operation Saturday, the crew succeeded in getting the instruments' data to the ground through a shuttle antenna.

DEAR ABBY

Man eager to swim winds up over his head

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am a 24-year-old guy who recently faced a big decision. Two years ago, I decided to move away from home and start my own life away from my parents. This was the most fun time of my whole life — dating, parties and the general good time that comes from living with friends. Well, things started to change shortly after I moved. I was not really prepared financially at the time I moved out. I went deeper and deeper into debt.



Van Buren

I will not give you the exact amount except to tell you that it went well above $10,000, not including my car loan. I asked myself over and over again, "How did I let this happen?"

There were no answers. It was plain stupidity. I considered bankruptcy because I couldn't pay all of my bills with my salary, and it seemed like a good way out.

My parents wanted me to move back home with them and pay my bills back. Abby, bankruptcy seems so simple — an easy way out. The bankruptcy lawyers will tell you that it will be on your record for only 10 years. But this is not the whole truth. When you fill out a credit application, it asks, "Have you ever filed bankruptcy?"

If you say, "Yes," you really don't have too good a chance. If you say "No," that's fraud.

Abby, please help me tell other young people that they shouldn't file Chapter VII. Tell them, instead, to swallow their pride and go back home if they can, because the long-term effect on their credit rating is devastating. — HUMBLED IN SAN DIEGO

DEAR HUMBLED: I am printing your letter because I think the message it carries could be valuable to everyone, regardless of age. Credit counseling is available for people who find themselves in over their heads. For the location of a local credit bureau, people with a debt and budgeting problem should send a self-addressed, stamped envelope to: The National Foundation for Consumer Credit, 8611 Second Ave., Suite 100, Silver Spring, Md. 20910; or call the toll-free number at (800) 388-CCCS.

Houston chief to review shootings

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Police Chief Elizabeth Watson says she'll personally review the fatal shooting of one man and severe wounding of another by police in a five-hour period last week.

Mitchell Wayne Kennard, 31, was killed by a shot in the head by officer M.W. Dew late Friday while in his car in a northwest Houston apartment complex parking lot, said police spokesman Richard Retz.

In an incident earlier Friday, Rodger Biedanski, 25, was critically wounded when he was shot five times by police along a highway feeder road after holding officers at bay for 90 minutes by pointing a pistol at his own head.

Police said they stopped to question Kennard and two companions, Kevin Johnson, 18, and Edgar Harris, 22. The three were standing next to Kennard's car.

"We had just gotten out of the car when the police drove up with their lights on us," Johnson said. "They had their guns out and ordered us up against a fence, where they searched us."

Harris said the officers asked for their identification.

"When they went to Mitch, he brushed by the officer and got in his car, which was parked facing out," Harris said. "For some reason, Mitch gunned the engine, and because it was wet, the tires began spinning.

"The police told him three times to turn off the engine and get out of the car, but he didn't do it," Harris said. "When the car started moving forward, the police officer fired one shot, hitting Mitch in the head."

A preliminary police report said Kennard was reaching under the seat of the car when he tried to drive away from the officers.

"Officer M.W. Dew considered himself to be in danger and fired one time, hitting the man in the left side of the head," Retz said.

No weapons were found in Kennard's car following the shooting, Retz said.

In the earlier incident, officers said they were trying to talk Biedanski out of killing himself when he suddenly pointed the pistol at them.

Biedanski was shot twice in the chest and three times in an arm. He was listed in poor condition at Ben Taub General Hospital Sunday, and was being held in a surgical intensive care unit, a spokeswoman said.

Biedanski was charged with aggravated assault Saturday and ordered held without bond.

Watson said the cases were her top priority, adding that "anytime a shooting occurs, it is a tragedy."

Hyenas routinely kill siblings after birth, researcher says

WASHINGTON (AP) — With slashing teeth, a first born rips into her twin moments after birth. Soon, in a typical family event for the spotted hyena, the youngest cub dies and big sister alone is nourished by their mother.

Laurence G. Frank of the University of California, Berkeley reports Friday in the journal Science that this routine killing of brothers and sisters, a practice he calls "siblicide," has never before been observed among mammals.

"It occurs among eagles, egrets and some other birds," said Frank, "but this is the first time anything like this has been observed among mammals."

Frank said that the mother usually produces twins, born about an hour apart. The young come into the world with fully developed canine and incisor teeth.

"The first born usually attacks the second within minutes of birth," said Frank. The bites are non-lethal, but the attacks continue over days and have the effect of preventing the younger cub from nursing. Eventually, it dies of starvation or infection.

Frank, who has spent years observing a clan of spotted hyenas in Kenya, said he suspected the fratricide but was unable to prove it in field research.

Spotted hyenas use abandoned aardvark burrows as dens in the wild. These burrows have a narrow entrance, which is large enough to admit the cubs but not the mother.

As a result, said Frank, the birth occurs at the mouth of the burrow and the cubs then crawl inside. They crawl back out to nurse.

The scientist said he noted that the second born in a twin litter died the most often. If this was caused by chance alone, the pattern would not favor the first born.

Fratricide was proven when scientists observed a spotted hyena birth in captivity.

"It was the most dramatic thing to see," said Frank. "We expected to see aggression, but not so severe or so early."

In one case, he said, an older sister attacked a sibling even before the victim had drawn a single breath and was still covered by the amniotic sack.

What apparently happens in the wild, said Frank, is that just after birth, the first cub goes into the den and waits. When the second born enters, the younger cub is ambushed by its brother or sister. In the following days, the older cub continues the attacks and in this way prevents the younger cub from leaving the den to nurse. Eventually it dies.

Frank said that in an excavated den in Kenya, researchers found one cub that weighed more than four pounds and a second that weighed half that. The smaller cub bore infected wounds on his shoulders and was emaciated. It soon died.

Nearly 25 percent of the cubs die from fratricide, the study said.

This pattern of violence among siblings may be related to the high amount of a male hormone that is found in the animal. This hormone triggers aggression.

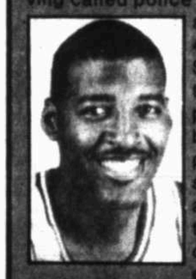
Trouble again

HOUSTON (AP) — Dallas Mavericks forward Roy Tarpley was arrested Sunday and charged in the assault of a woman who claims to be his girlfriend, police said.

Tarpley was charged with Class-A assault and released from the Houston Police Central Jail at 3:30 p.m. (CDT) on $500 bond.

A 30-year-old woman from Irving called police from Tarpley's apartment at 4:16 a.m. (CDT) Sunday and told them the player had beaten her, said police spokesman Richard Retz. After making the call, she waited for assistance in the apartment complex's parking lot, Retz said.



Tarpley

The woman, who had a dislocated right shoulder and bruises on her back, was taken to Hermann Hospital for treatment, Retz said. She was treated and later released, hospital officials said.

Tarpley's most recent brush with the law came in March when he was arrested in Dallas on a charge of driving while intoxicated. He was suspended indefinitely without pay for violating his NBA-mandated aftercare program for substance abuse.

Race washed

TALLADEGA, Ala. (AP) — The drivers said the rain on Sunday didn't change anything about the running of the Winston 500 except the day.

A heavy thunderstorm forced Talladega Superspeedway officials to send home a crowd of more than 120,000 people and postpone the 500-mile NASCAR stock car event until today at 11 a.m. CDT.

Midland owns playoff edge

■ Tall City baseball teams own a combined 3-1 record against Lubbock's two bi-district playoff entries.

By Bill Price
Staff Writer

Even though Midland Lee and Midland High have recorded wins over their bi-district baseball opponents earlier this season, it was at a time when most tournament-weary teams are pitched out.

The eighth-ranked Rebels (18-8) swept Lubbock Coronado (17-11) in a twin bill March 4, while the 13-10 Bulldogs split a double header with No. 9 Lubbock Monterey (25-6) the following day.

On that March Monday against Lee, Coronado started Wagner Wicks and Brian Cristan. Wicks took the loss in the first game after giving up four runs through four innings in the 12-8 Rebel win. Cristan was equally ineffective in the second game, as he and Steve Jones allowed seven runs in the first three innings of an 8-2 Lee victory.

However, since that time all three have shown glimpses of prowess. Wicks, a senior righthander, has gone on to post a 7-3 record with a 3.56 ERA, though an injured finger and a bout with the flu have made him susceptible of late. Jones, also a right-handed senior, is 5-3 with a 4.28 ERA, and Cristan is 3-3 with a 3.69 ERA.

Jeff Johnston (12-1) and Jon Nelson (1-0) earned the wins for Lee.

MHS got a short look at Monterey ace Allan Wolf (15-4) in their doubleheader, as Wolf picked up his fifth win of the season by tossing the first two innings of a 10-2 Plainsmen win in the second game. The first game, a 9-6 Bulldog victory, saw the 'Dogs beat up Michael Davidson and Brad Rush for 12 hits.

Davidson is now 7-2 with a 2.54 ERA, while Wolf has maintained a 1.59 ERA despite starting Monterey's last three games over a seven-day span.

Dewayne Culpepper (4-3) picked up the MHS win while Jeremy Burton took the loss to the Plainsmen.

Leading batters for Coronado are junior first baseman Chip Reed (.438, two homers and 29 RBI from the clean-up spot), Wicks (.326 and 29 RBI), shortstop Jason Haggard (.318 and 17 RBI) and center fielder Billy Lightner (.291).

Among Monterey's top hitters are third baseman Clint Bryant with a .405 average and 24 RBI, Stephen Reed (.402 and a school record 14 triples), catcher Joes Gonzales (.329) and Chris Shuffield (.286).

Mac McGee, left, and partner Dennis Sledge watch after Sledge lets sail a tee shot Sunday afternoon en route to their win at the 20th annual Midland Country Club Invitational.

Sledge, McGee win MCC crown

■ Defending champion Kelly Cox loans a driver and loses tournament.

By Jimmy Patterson
Assistant Sports Editor

As fate would have it, a friendly gesture turned out to play a major role in the final outcome of the 20th annual Midland Country Club Invitational golf championship Sunday.

The tournament was won by Dennis Sledge and Mac McGee, with a little help, that is, from twice-defending champion Kelly Cox.

Sledge and McGee combined for a final round 69 in the two-man low ball tournament, for an 8-under, 208 final over 54 holes. Cox and partner Allen Waddell charged into second place Sunday with a final round 68. Their three-day total of 210 was just two strokes off the winning pace.

After repeatedly trying to convince Sledge to borrow his driver, Cox finally succeeded prior to the start of the tournament. As a result of the borrowed club, Sledge said he drove with more authority. That, along with McGee's sensational play on 16, helped the pair to their first-ever championship flight title.

Cox shrugged off suggestions that his driver had any effect on the tournament's outcome.

"Oh, he'd have probably done all right without it," Cox quipped of Sledge and a driver that had suddenly turned on him. "But it didn't hurt him any did it?"

"Thanks to Kelly's driver, I was finally hitting the ball really well," said Sledge, who doubled as tournament director. "It has a stiffer shaft than the one I had before.

"He kept insisting that I use it. Now he's gonna have a hard time getting it back."

As well as Sledge was hitting off the tee, McGee had the drive of the day, on the par-3 16th hole.

Using a six-iron, McGee set the ball down 20 feet from the cup. And if his driving heroics weren't impressive enough for the small but appreciative gallery, McGee wowed them some more by stepping up and tapping in for birdie. Hardly the actions of a man who experienced nervous butterflies all day.

"We were very nervous," McGee admitted. "This was the first big tournament that Dennis and I ever had a chance to win.

"But we established our confidence, and it (nervousness) went away after nine or 10 holes."

As well as the twosome played, they did have their trouble with the par-4 17th hole. Both hit their drives behind trees, Sledge's lie so ugly that he was forced to waste a stroke to kick out diagonally away from the hole just to get a better angle on his approach.

"We were just trying to get bogey; trying to avoid double bogey," Sledge said. Bogey they did, putting them back to three-under for the day. After saving par on 18, the two had assured themselves of their two-stroke win

Celtics find a game Bird

Associated Press

BOSTON — Larry Bird was like a true heavyweight champ. He hit the floor hard, but he refused to be counted out.

As a result, the Boston Celtics are in the second round of the playoffs for the first time in three years.

Already playing with a bad back, Bird left the game after being kicked in the cheek in a spill late in the second period.

NBA

But he returned to sparked a 42-point third quarter Sunday as the Boston Celtics edged the Indiana Pacers 124-121, although they almost blew a 16-point lead in the final minutes.

"I was coming back no matter what," said Bird, who scored 32 points and had an aching jaw to go with his painful back injury after the game. "The fans were pumped up and I wasn't going to let them down."

Greeted by a thunderous roar from the Boston Garden crowd when he rejoined his teammates five minutes into the second half, Bird scored 12 of his points in the third quarter as the Celtics pulled away from a 73-73 tie for a 100-91 lead at the three-quarter mark.

Boston widened the advantage to as much as 16 points, 112-96, at 4:58 of the fourth period, then hung on to win the deciding game of the best-of-5 series. That spoiled the upstart Pacers' bid for a second round berth for the first time since the team joined the NBA in 1976.

But the Celtics were helped by the Pacers, particularly Chuck Person, who took an off-balance 3-pointer with 15 seconds left and Indiana trailing by just two points. Brian Shaw then hit two free throws, making a later 3-pointer by Person meaningless.

"I didn't want to go into overtime here, so I went for it," said Person, who made 5-of-9 3-pointers en route to 32 points.

"I think our players gutted it out," Boston coach Chris Ford said after the Celtics improved their record to 21-7 in deciding playoff games. Last year, they lost 3-2 to the New York Knicks in the first round.

Golf replay hurts Kite

IRVING (AP) — Nick Price's first victory in eight years on the American pro golf tour was upstaged Sunday by the initial application of golf's instant-replay rule.

Price, a one-time globetrotter who now resides in the United States, scored a welcome but more-or-less routine one-stroke victory in the Byron Nelson Classic.

"Eight years is a long time to be patient," Price said after his closing 68 and 270 total made him a winner in this country for the first time since the 1983 World Series of Golf.

He won it with a three-foot birdie putt on the 16th hole at the TPC at Las Colinas and a pair of critical pars on the final two holes. The winning pars were of the routine, two-putt variety.

But a controversy centering on Tom Kite and, for the first time, the use of instant-replay television equipment in the application of the rules was far from routine, however.

As far as Kite was concerned, it was far from welcome, too. It cost him one stroke at a point when he was very much in title contention.

"I don't think television has any business doing what they're doing," Kite said after blowing a two-stroke lead and finishing five shots behind the winner. "Putting an official in a trailor is a copout."

Kite, the third-round leader, was two strokes off the pace when he hit his tee shot into the water on the 11th hole.

He and playing partner Phil Blackmar judged the ball crossed a point of land jutting into the lake before entering the water, and Kite took a penalty drop on that point of land.

The PGA Tour rules official assigned to monitor television — in this instance George Boutell — questioned whether the ball had crossed that point of land and contacted Mike Shea, the Tour's Tournament Director and the man in

Bagwell bags one for Astros

NL Roundup

Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — Jeff Bagwell hit the ninth upper deck home run in Three Rivers Stadium history and Steve Finley had a two-run drive, leading the Houston Astros to a 6-4 victory Sunday over the Pittsburgh Pirates and struggling Cy Young Award winner Doug Drabek.

Drabek (1-5), a 22-6 pitcher last year, gave up seven hits and three runs in five innings. He failed to last past the fifth inning for the fourth time in his six starts.

Drabek's start is his worst since he was 1-8 in 1987 before finishing 11-12.

Bagwell's pinch-hit drive in the seventh inning off Bob Kipper made it 4-1 and landed five rows deep into the upper-deck stands. The drive was estimated at 456 feet, the longest homer to left field since Three Rivers opened in 1970.

Only three other players — Bob Robertson, Greg Luzinski and Howard Johnson — have homered into the upper deck in left, with Johnson's shot coming on April 15. Willie Stargell and Bobby Bonilla have the only homers into the upper deck in right, with Stargell doing it four times from 1970-73.

Mark Portugal (3-1) brought a 5.82 ERA into the game, but checked Pittsburgh on one hit — Gary Varsho's RBI double in the fifth — until tiring in the eighth. Portugal was lifted after Don Slaught and Jose Lind singled ahead of Orlando Merced's three-run homer, his second homer and fourth extra base hit of the series.

Curt Schilling got the last out for his fourth save.

Pittsburgh's 3-4-5 hitters — Andy Van Slyke, Bobby Bonilla and Barry Bonds — were 0-for-27 in the series until Van Slyke singled in the eighth off reliever Dwayne Henry.

Cubs 9, Braves 6

ATLANTA — Mark Grace, Ryne Sandberg and George Bell hit home runs as Chicago beat Atlanta.

Grace hit a three-run homer in the third inning and Sandberg a two-run shot in the fifth as the Cubs ended Atlanta's three-game winning streak. Bell's sixth homer started a three-run eighth, making it 8-4.

The Cubs jumped on Charlie Leibrandt (2-3) for five runs and eight hits in 4⅔ innings.

Jerome Walton singled and Sandberg doubled off the left-field fence before Grace hit his second home run. Sandberg's home run was his second.

Charles McElroy (1-0), who allowed one hit and one walk in 2⅓ innings, got the victory.

Terry Pendleton hit an RBI triple and scored on pinch hitter Mark Lemke's single in the eighth, finishing Paul Assenmacher.

Doug Dascenzo hit an RBI single in the Cubs' ninth. Dave Smith pitched the ninth for his fifth save.

Cubs starter Mike Bielecki gave up four hits and four runs in four innings, leaving in the fifth after walking Otis Nixon and Deion Sanders.

Nixon and Sanders executed a double steal and pinch-hitter Jeff Blauser had an RBI groundout. Sanders scored on David Justice's third hit of the game, an infield single off McElroy's glove.

Justice singled and scored Atlanta's first run in the second on a grounder by Mike Heath.

Giants 2, Mets 0

NEW YORK — Bud Black outdueled Dwight Gooden and Kevin Mitchell hit his major league-leading eighth home run as San Francisco beat the New York Mets to snap a five-game losing streak.

Black (2-3), hit hard in his last two starts, pitched a five-hitter for his second shutout of the season. He struck out six and walked two.

Black allowed one hit in each of the first five innings. He then retired 13 of the last 15 batters in his ninth career shutout.

Gooden (3-2) had won his last 10 decisions at Shea Stadium. He gave up six hits, struck out four and walked two in eight innings.

Mitchell, who entered the game with only five hits and three RBIs in his previous 37 at-bats, led off the seventh inning by homering on a hanging curveball. The home run was the Giants' 27th, most in the major leagues.

In the first inning, McGee tripled with one out and scored on Will Clark's groundout. The Giants won for just the second time in 11 games.

Padres 6, Expos 3

MONTREAL — Benito Santiago hit a three-run homer and Jim Presley added a solo shot, helping Ed Whitson break his three-game losing streak.

Whitson (2-3), supported with only three runs during his skid, gave up seven hits, including a three-run homer by Marquis Grissom. He struck out eight and walked three in his first complete game of the season.

Brian Barnes (0-1), making his first appearance of the season after a shoulder injury in spring training, lasted only 4⅔ innings. He gave up six runs on seven hits.

San Diego went ahead in the fourth on triples by Tony Gwynn and Fred McGriff.

Dodgers 3, Phillies 2

PHILADELPHIA — Alfredo Griffin singled home the tie-breaking run in the eighth inning and Jay Howell pitched around a lead-off triple in the ninth, preserving Los Angeles' victory.

John Morris opened the ninth against Howell with the second triple of the game off right fielder Darryl Strawberry's glove.

But Howell, who gave up Charlie Hayes' go-ahead homer in the eighth inning Saturday night, protected the lead.

Mike Morgan (3-2) allowed two runs on seven hits in seven inning.

Detroit's Travis Fryman scores one of five runs in the second inning against Texas as Ranger catcher Geno Petralli watches. The Tigers won the game 8-7.

Rangers hit by Deer

Associated Press

DETROIT — Rob Deer had two home runs among his four hits as the Detroit Tigers held on to defeat the Texas Rangers 8-7 Sunday.

Texas took a 1-0 lead in the second on Ruben Sierra's sixth homer, but the Tigers sent 10 batters to the plate in the bottom of the inning and scored five runs.

Mickey Tettleton doubled to start the Detroit second, and Deer followed with a single. After Pete Incaviglia struck out, Travis Fryman tied the score with an RBI double.

Milt Cuyler walked to load the bases and Tony Phillips gave Detroit the lead with a two-run single. Alan Trammell followed with a two-run double to chase Kevin Brown (2-2).

Deer hit his American League-leading eighth home run in the seventh. Reliever Gerald Alexander hit Incaviglia with his next pitch, and was immediately ejected by home plate umpire Ken Kaiser.

Walt Terrell (1-3) ended a slump by Tiger starters by allowing four runs in 5⅓ innings. In the first two games of the series, Frank Tanana and Dan Petry combined to go 3⅔ innings, giving up seven runs. Mike Henneman, the fourth Detroit pitcher, worked the last two innings and gave up three runs and six hits.

Red Sox 9, White Sox 1

CHICAGO — Kevin Romine hit his first major league grand slam, leading Matt Young and Boston to a sweep of the three-game series.

It was the sixth victory in the last seven games for the first-place Red Sox. The White Sox have lost five straight.

Romine, making his first start of the season in place of slumping Ellis Burks, hit his grand slam off Alex Fernandez (2-3) in the second inning after the Red Sox had loaded the bases on singles by Carlos Quintana and Luis Rivera and a two-out walk to Jody Reed.

It was Romine's first homer of the season, the fifth of his career and first away from Fenway Park. It was also the first grand slam in new Comiskey Park.

Blue Jays 3, Royals 0

KANSAS CITY — Dave Stieb pitched no-hit ball for 5⅔ innings and combined with two relievers on a three-hitter as Toronto beat struggling Kansas City.

Stieb (3-2) gave up singles to Bill Pecota in the sixth and Warren Cromartie in the eighth. He struck out one and walked four in 7⅔ innings and is 12-1 on the road the past two seasons.

American League

Midland's Mike Timlin relieved Stieb with two outs and none on in the eighth and Duane Ward got the last three outs for his seventh save, allowing one hit.

Stieb, who pitched a no-hitter last Sept. 2 against Cleveland, held the Royals hitless until Pecota flared an opposite-field single into left field with two outs in the sixth.

Twins 5, Brewers 2

MILWAUKEE — Shane Mack's bases-loaded sacrifice fly sparked a three-run 10th inning for Minnesota.

Rookie Chuck Knoblauch walked to start the 10th off Edwin Nunez (1-1) and moved to second when Nunez fumbled Kirby Puckett's sacrifice for an error. Gene Larkin sacrificed the runners up before Nunez walked Chili Davis inentionally to load the bases.

Mack then hit a sacrifice fly to right field, scoring Knoblauch, and when Dante Bichette's throw skipped past catcher Rick Dempsey for an error, Puckett and Davis moved up a base and scored on Brian Harper's two-run single.

Rick Aguilera (1-2) pitched three innings, giving up four hits and one run, for the victory.

Indians 15, Athletics 6

OAKLAND — Cleveland crushed Oakland pitching for the second straight game as light-hitting Jerry Browne drove in four runs to lead the Indians over AL Cy Young Award winner Bob Welch.

After scoring 20 runs on 21 hits in Saturday's victory, the Indians had 19 hits, scoring four runs in the first inning and five more in the fifth off Welch. Welch gave up a career-high 11 runs and lost to Cleveland for the first time in 10 career decisions.

The total of 35 runs was the most ever against Oakland in two consecutive games. The previous high was 29 runs by visiting Texas on July 2-3, 1983.

Angels 6, Orioles 4

ANAHEIM — Jim Abbott survived an early three-run deficit for his first victory in nine starts as Gary Gaetti keyed a six-run rally in the fourth inning with a three-run homer.

Abbott (1-4), who last won on Sept. 10, allowed eight hits and three earned runs in 5⅔ innings. Mark Eichhorn worked 2⅓ innings and Bryan Harvey finished for his for his sixth save.

Angels fall to El Paso

EL PASO — Midland's road woes continued Sunday night as the Angels lost their fifth straight game, 6-3, to the El Paso Diablos.

The Angels, who have lost 14 of their last 16 games, and are 11 games out of first place in the Texas League West Division through just 24 games, have yet to win on the road in nine tries this season.

In the first three innings of each of their last 16 games, Midland has been outscored a total of 57-23.

The Diablos, riding on the coattails of a 20 game hitting streak by centerfielder Dave Jacas, have won eight straight and are 12-1 at home.

The Angels were held scoreless through seven innings Sunday night before finally striking for three runs in the eighth.

Dave Linhart, 3-1, scattered eight hits through 7⅔ innings for the win. Midland's Dave Shotkoski fell to 0-3 for the season, giving up 14 hits and striking out seven through five innings.

Sunday's game was the first time since April 28 the Angels have played error-free ball.

charge of this event.

Shea reached Kite before he played his next shot, advised him of the situation and suggested he should return to the tee to play the next shot. Kite asked to play a provisional ball from the site of his original drop, did so and then returned to play another ball from the tee.

He eventually made bogey-5 on the ball dropped on the point of land, and double-bogey 6 on the ball dropped from the tee.

After a review of the film, Shea ruled the tee shot had not crossed the point of land and thus, the ball replayed from the tee was the ball in play. The 6 stood and Kite was out of contention.

"It's all new to us, too; brand new," Shea said of the use of television replay, instituted after Paul Azinger was disqualified at the Doral Open after a day-late call-in from a television viewer.

"This was a judgment call," he said. "It was not a rules violation. After reviewing the film, it was my judgment the ball could not have crossed over the land and entered the water where it did."

Kite, obviously shaken, promptly bogeyed the next hole and finished with a 75 and a 275 total.

the half until I heard the crowd. He is truly amazing and courageous."

Ford said that Bird got "busted in the face." Bird said, later though, that he hit his cheekbone hard on the floor when he apparently slipped and was tripped over by an Indiana player.

"The momentum really changed when Larry came back," Indiana coach Bob Hill said. "He is amazing. I hope you all respect him and appreciate his guts.

"But I was really pleased with our effort. We had our chances. If we had executed on the next to last possession (a missed off-balance 3-point shot), we may have won."

"We were one shot away from going to the next round," said Person, who missed the big shot but added a 3-pointer a couple of seconds later. "We were one bullet short."

Pistons 113, Hawks 81

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. — Detroit kept alive its hopes for a third straight NBA title as Isiah Thomas had 26 points and 11 assists against Atlanta in the fifth and deciding game of their first-round series.

The Pistons, trying to become only the third team in NBA history to win three consecutive championships, will open the second round against the Celtics in Boston on Tuesday night.

Thomas, playing with a nylon covering on a right wrist that required surgery and a wrap on his pulled left hamstring, scored 16 points to help the Pistons to a 59-42 halftime lead. He scored 10 more in the third quarter as the Pistons continued to pour it on.

The Pistons defense held Atlanta to 16 third-quarter points and took a 90-58 lead into the fourth quarter. For the game, Atlanta made only 30 percent of its field-goal attempts.

Detroit's defense was best in the NBA this season. The Pistons held opponents to an average of 96.8 points per game.

Lakers 126, Warriors 116

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — Magic Johnson had 21 points, 17 assists and 10 rebounds, leading Los Angeles over Golden State in the opener of their second-round playoff series.

The Warriors played without leading scorer Chris Mullin, sidelined by a knee injury.

The second game of the best-of-7 series is Wednesday night at the Forum before the matchup shifts to Oakland for games Friday night and Sunday afternoon.

The Lakers, who never trailed and led all the way after the first quarter, were in front 96-83 heading into the final 12 minutes and built the lead to 110-91 4½ minutes into the period.

Mullin, who averaged 25.7 points and 5.4 rebounds this season, will probably be ready to go in the second game, helped by an extra day between contests.

He suffered a sprained right knee in Friday's game against San Antonio when he was fouled by the Spurs' David Wingate. Mullin sat on the Warriors' bench Sunday, dressed in street clothes.

Tim Hardaway led the Warriors with 33 points, and Mario Elie had 21.

The game had a regular ebb and flow through the first three quarters as the Lakers — taller at every position than the Warriors — would build a double-digit lead and seem on the verge of opening a safe margin, only to see Golden State surge back to within striking distance.

Los Angeles led 35-25 at the end of the first quarter, outscoring Golden State 15-6 in the last five minutes.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

MONDAY, MAY 6, 1991

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: The change and challenge you relish so much should be plentiful. Combine originality with practicality to send profits soaring in September. All types of financial speculation should be avoided in November and December. Although romance is exciting, family life could be somewhat unsettled until the winter holidays.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Trying to force your opinions on others will backfire. Shy away from anything unconventional for a while. Home is a very pleasant place to be right now.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): It may be necessary to drive long distances today. Make certain you have everything you need! Pay more attention to your personal appearance.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A joint effort to please higher-ups could fall short of the mark today. Concentrate on solo projects. Your mate or partner is a tower of strength. Be equally supportive. Avoid issuing ultimatums.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Hidden factors may hinder some of your efforts. You are irritated by those who prefer discussion to action. Learn to play the waiting game. Sign legal documents only after checking with experts.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Experts' advice will accelerate your career progress. Embrace the great outdoors with open arms. Continue to work on projects already under way. Improve communication with overseas contact.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A persuasive friend may try to talk you into something. Think twice! Platonic relationships may be more fulfilling than romantic ones now. Your reputation for discretion is a great asset.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): The emphasis now is on saying the right thing at the right time. Control a tendency to fly off the handle when opposed. A crisis can be averted through your calm intervention.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): An authority figure may challenge you today. Stay on your toes! Look for ways to expand your business base without violating budget restrictions. Keep personal spending to a minimum.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A great day for negotiating contracts and finding new talent. Those in real estate or interior decorating can make record financial gains. Be optimistic about a relationship.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Waste and extravagance could put a business in the red. Enlist family members' cooperation before revising a budget. You can learn a lot from an older person's experiences.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Be flexible. Keep an open mind. Benefit from the propositions that help you to build up a firmer basis for family life and understanding.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Keep your feet planted on the ground when it comes to financial issues. An unexpected problem could catch you off-guard. Diplomacy helps you handle it gracefully. Romance will delight you.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are original, funny and tender-hearted. Count on them to champion the neglected and oppressed. These Taureans attract many admirers who will often become lifelong friends. Quick learners, they also have excellent memories — a big asset in politics as well as business. Openly affectionate and magnanimous, these Taureans make wonderful spouses and parents.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠6 ♡QJ8763 ◇Q52 ♣873
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	1 NT	?

What action do you take?
A.—When partner's opening bid has been overcalled with one no trump, a common practice is to double with any hand containing enough strength to suggest that your side has the balance of power. Therefore, if you compete in a suit you are showing a weak hand with a long suit. Bid two hearts.

Q.2—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠J9543 ♡AK109 ◇AJ10 ♣6
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	1 NT	2 ♡	Pass

What action do you take?
A.—What started out as a near minimum hand has become very powerful. You have no wasted values in spades, and any cards partner holds will mesh well with your hand. Jump to four hearts. Match this hand with the first one and you will see that you are on a finesse for five-odd despite a combined holding of only 18 high-card points.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠A83 ♡AK8 ◇A6 ♣K10952
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	1 ♡	1 ♠	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—When you opened one club, you intended bidding two no trump over any response by partner. West's overcall and partner's spade bid have altered your course of action. Your high cards are all prime, and the best way to tell partner of your powerful hand and fit is to cue-bid two hearts.

Q.4—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AK64 ♡K85 ◇Q1053 ♣62
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♡	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—It is awfully tempting to bid one spade, but resist seduction. No matter what partner does, you will feel guilty about not having supported hearts, and to do so later would show a stronger hand than you have. Raise to two hearts now, which is clearly justified by your ruffing value in clubs.

Q.5—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠K7 ♡K85 ◇65 ♣J109543
Partner opens the bidding with two no trump (22-23 points). What do you respond?
A.—How do you show slam interest in clubs after partner has opened two no trump? First you bid three clubs, which partner will take as a Stayman inquiry for majors, and then bid four clubs, which cancels the previous message. An immediate jump to four clubs would be Gerber, asking for aces.

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AJ9653 ♡8 ◇5 ♣AK843
Partner opens the bidding with one diamond. What do you respond?
A.—It is unwise to make a jump shift when you have no idea where you want to play the hand. Start by responding one spade, then bid three clubs at your next turn, unless partner's rebid prevents you from doing so.

Sharon Gless marries 'Rosie' producer Barney Rosenzweig

MALIBU, Calif. — Helicopters buzzed the sunset nuptials of actress Sharon Gless and her "Rosie O'Neill" producer, Barney Rosenzweig.

Gless

The two were married Saturday at a private surfside home as paparazzi hovered overhead. Dozens of guests attended the ceremony, but burly bodyguards kept the media at bay.

Gless, 47, has never been married. It's the third marriage for Rosenzweig, 53, who produces her show, "The Trials of Rosie O'Neill," and did the same for her old series, "Cagney & Lacey."

• • •

NEW YORK — Madonna said she's a little nervous about her straight-laced father's reaction to her new movie, "Truth or Dare."

"He should definitely see it, but at a private screening," she said. "I think it will be painful for him but ultimately necessary and growth-provoking, like all truth."

Madonna said the movie, in which she curses like a truck driver, swaps sexual gossip with pal Sandra Bernhard and mocks Kevin Costner behind his back, is not just a ploy for media attention.

"The point of the movie is not so much to reveal my personal life, but to reveal life in general," she said in an interview published Sunday in The New York Times.

The film, which opens Friday, was shot during her 1990 "Blond Ambition" tour.

Keaton

In "One Good Cop," Keaton plays Artie Lewis, who takes money from a criminal so he can afford to adopt the children of his gunned-down partner.

"I know what Artie did was wrong. It ain't too great, but considering where the money comes from, it ain't too bad, either," Keaton said in an interview published Sunday in The Tennessean.

"I know him. I like him," Keaton said. "I sympathize with him. I've been playing a string of pretty unsavory people and just wanted a dose of decency for a change."

Keaton's next project is the sequel to the smash hit "Batman," in which he will reprise the lead role.

• • •

LONG BEACH, Calif. — Actress Lee Remick was honored by the International Winston Churchill Society for her portrayal of Churchill's mother.

Gregory Peck presented Miss Remick the Blenheim Award at a black-tie gala Saturday night on board the Queen Mary. The award is named for Blenheim Palace, where the late British statesman was born.

Miss Remick was honored for her performance in the 1975 television movie "Jennie, Lady Randolph Churchill."

The 55-year-old actress, who is battling kidney cancer, has played other famous women, including a former first lady in "Eleanor — In Her Own Words: A Tribute to Eleanor Roosevelt," and Frances Bradshaw Schreuder, a socialite who was convicted of talking her 17-year-old son into committing murder.

She was nominated for an Academy Award for her 1962 portrayal of a drunken wife in "The Days of Wine and Roses."

• • •

NEW YORK — Dr. Richard K. Lieberman, a historian and the director of the archives at LaGuardia Community College, is ecstatic about his latest acquisition, the memorabilia of three generations of Wagners: Sen. Robert F. Wagner, the New Dealer; his son, New York's 102nd mayor, Robert F. Wagner; and his grandson, Robert F. Wagner, a former deputy mayor and president of the Board of Education.

"It's important that the papers stay here," Lieberman said.

DENVER — Civil rights activist Dick Gregory, folk singer Pete Seeger and author Leo Buscaglia offered their wisdom to the ages via videotape.

The three and Dr. Edward Teller, the father of the hydrogen bomb, spoke Saturday night at a theater to 1,000 people as part of a show for broadcast by public television station KBDI.

The show, called the "11th Hour Library," will feature taped, 25-minute segments from "major contributors to our time."

Teller, 83, said he invented the hydrogen bomb because "It had to be done." He didn't offer much hope for the future, saying: "Man and woman are problem-creating animals."

Gregory mused on absurd contradictions of life to which "love is the answer." He won a standing ovation when he said: "I just want to apologize to everybody in the history of the planet that was ever mistreated."

Seeger took the stage with his banjo. He urged future generations "to don't ever give up no matter what happens" and never stop fighting injustice.

Buscaglia, who wrote "Loving Each Other," reiterated that advice and added that death "is only morbid if you never lived."

Prices rally

NEW YORK (AP) — Oil prices rallied modestly Friday on news that the United Nations would not immediately allow Iraq to resume crude oil exports.

West Texas Intermediate for delivery in June settled at $21.37 per barrel, up 20 cents, at the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Volume was light and the session was mostly quiet. Traders said nothing boosted prices except continuing uncertainty about when Iraq's oil will return to the market.

Oil traders also contemplated that a maintenance shutdown at an important Canadian crude pipeline might lead to more supply disruptions this summer than had originally been thought. That gave prices a modest lift.

Gasoline prices also held firm. Demand has been weak because of the recession, but supplies are at extremely low levels.

For the week, crude oil futures for June delivery gained 11 cents a barrel.

Natural gas prices remained weak, amid warmer weather and an oversupply. Gas for delivery in June settled Friday at $1.356 per 1,000 cubic feet, down 1 cent for the day and 1.8 cent for the week.

Car sales slump

DETROIT (AP) — Sales of North American-made cars and light trucks slumped 17.9 percent in late April, and auto analysts said a recovery from sluggish sales may still be months away.

Nine of the 10 major U.S. automakers Friday reported selling cars and trucks at an average daily rate of 33,334 during the April 21-30 period this year, compared with a rate of 41,686 a day during the same time last year.

New cigarette

NEW YORK (AP) — Philip Morris Cos. will add another cigarette to its pack of smokes next month when it unveils a new version of its No. 1 Marlboro brand, industry sources said.

The new cigarette, dubbed Marlboro Medium, will contain lower tar and nicotine levels than the company's full-strength Marlboro, but levels higher than those contained in its Marlboro Lights version, sources said Friday.

Bonds retired

NEW YORK (AP) — RJR Nabisco Inc. said it is retiring all of its remaining subordinated debentures due in 2007, junk bonds used to finance the $24.53 billion buyout of the food and tobacco conglomerate.

The company said in a statement Friday that it was paying the entire face amount of the bonds, which total $1.83 billion, plus $27.67 million in interest.

Pollution concerns industry

■ Oryx Energy's Stan Blossom says that the petroleum industry is faced by environmental challenges.

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

Stan Blossom thinks the petroleum industry has a bad reputation — that the public thinks of it as a polluter and environmentally insensitive.

But no industry is free of pollution, he said: "We as individuals are polluters."

Blossom

Blossom, director of environmental affairs for Oryx Energy in Dallas, was the guest speaker at Saturday's Industry Appreciation Dinner held by the Desk and Derrick Club of Midland.

He observed that the energy industry "needs to get on the ball.

"We face new environmental challenges," Blossom said. "And environmentalists and lawmakers could put us out of business — intentionally or through legislation — if we don't get busy."

Blossom said the industry is confronting its pollution by working to purify air emissions and clean water. It also is developing new technologies that will prevent damage to the environment.

He called on the industry to educate the public about it works and its concerns about the environment.

"We have to tell the public about what goes into providing gasoline for their cars, heating oil for their homes, the plastic that is used for containers for household goods like soft drinks and detergent," he said.

Blossom, who was regional operations manager of Oryx's Southwest region in Midland before transferring to Dallas, said the industry also must educate legislators on how best to balance environmental protection with energy industry needs.

"Lawmakers can't make law in a vacuum or eventually we all suffer," he said.

The public, as well as legislators, must realize that there are trade-offs involved in the issue.

"Every day at the grocery store comes the question: 'Paper or plastic?' Do we use paper, for which a forest of trees has been cut down, or do we use plastic, made from chemicals that pollute our air and water? It's a trade-off," Blossom said.

"This country loves its cars, yet our nation's biggest polluters are our cars, which emit 25 percent of the carbon monoxide found in the air. Do we want the freedom of personal transportation, or cleaner air? It's a trade-off.

"The industry cannot continue to be the perennial bad guy when we merely provide products demanded by the public."

Blossom encouraged the audience to improve the environment through recycling.

"Each one of us generates five pounds of solid waste each day. That's double what it was three decades ago. There are over 200 people in this room tonight, and together we've created a half-ton of solid waste," he said.

Blossom cited a recent article in National Geographic magazine on a study of the nation's 5,500 landfills. According to the article, claims that disposable diapers, polystyrene and fast food wrappers are clogging the landfills are not valid, because those items comprise only 2 percent of solid waste.

The study also found that biodegradability rarely occurs in landfills without large amounts of moisture, he told the audience.

A major concern for the petroleum industry should be the increasing number of landfills that are becoming Environmental Protection Agency Superfund sites,

Law to place some limits on Swiss accounts

GENEVA (AP) — The Swiss Banking Commission has announced a new law that will impose some restrictions on anonymous bank accounts, but its practical effects were expected to be limited.

The law, which was published Friday and takes effect in July, closes a loophole that allowed lawyers and fiduciary trustees in certain cases to deposit funds on behalf of their clients without disclosing their identity.

However, the law will not affect the holders of numbered Swiss accounts. The identity of such depositors is already known to a small circle of officials within a bank, who are obliged to reveal the names of the client in the event of criminal procedings.

The law will have no impact on the ongoing legal struggle by the Philippines government to recover more than $340 million allegedly stashed away by the late President Ferdinand Marcos and his associates.

It is also unlikely to shed any more light on unconfirmed rumors that Iraqi President Saddam Hussein has fortunes stashed in Switzerland. The main Swiss banks have denied they hold any of Saddam's funds and the Swiss government says it has no grounds to launch any investigation.

Experts say the main value of the change will be as a potential weapon against tax fraud. The extent to which it will help was unclear, however.

The so-called Form B that provided for anonymity will be abolished on July 1.

Electric van

The Chrysler Corp. showed off some of its research vehicles last week at the automaker's Highland Park, Mich., headquarters. This Dodge Caravan, called the TEVan, is one of four electricty-powered minivans developed by Chrysler and the Electric Power Research Institute of Los Angeles. It is powered by a nickel-iron battery, which weighs about 1,800 pounds, and a DC-powered motor. Top speed is 65 mph and cruising range is 120 miles. Chrysler has scheduled production for the mid-1990s.

USX shareholders expected to OK stock propsoal

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Stockholders of USX Corp., the nation's largest steel maker, are expected to approve on Monday in Houston a plan to create two classes of stock.

The plan by the Pittsburgh energy and steel giant ends a five-year effort by USX's largest single shareholder, financier Carl C. Icahn, to boost USX's stock price by separating the cyclical steel business from the conglomerate's energy unit.

Stockholders meeting in Findlay, Ohio, last year defeated Icahn's proposal to spin off 80 percent of USX's steel unit.

Wall Street reacted favorably to the idea of creating one class of stock for USX's energy operations and another that reflects the value of its steel, mining, real estate and other businesses. The stock price jumped from 28⅞ before the proposal was announced Jan. 31 to Friday's close of 32⅞.

Changes at USX come against a backdrop of increasing shareholder activism, particularly among pension funds and other institutional investors. The investors used to dump their stock when they were unhappy with a company's performance. Now, they are using their stakes as leverage to bring about change.

"What's happening at USX is reflective of what's going to be happening more and more," said John Pound, a Harvard University professor and expert on corporate governance issues.

Pound was one of five members of Icahn's USX Shareholders Advisory Committee. Icahn subsidized committee members and threatened to run them as a slate of directors unless USX took steps toward restructuring.

"This is a classic case where the market is trying to tell the company something and it takes the company some time to hear it," he said.

Prodigy online system has its problems

By Paul H. Pause'

■ Related story/7C

I've had several calls and comments about the last few columns dealing the GEnie and CompuServe online systems. I'm glad to see a lot of interest in PC telecommunications, since this is one of the most exciting and rewarding PC applications available.

Pause'

I've been asked about another online service that is being heard about: The Prodigy system from IBM and Sears. I DO NOT recommend Prodigy at this time, for the following reasons.

Prodigy has the highest monthly subscription charge of any of the popular services — $9.95/month. Supposedly, you make up for this by the fact that there are no online charges for the time you spend on the system. Admittedly, these charges can really add up, especially if you spend a lot of time in one of CompuServe's extra-charge areas. However, I find that I spend most of my time in the "free" sections of GEnie and CompuServe, anyway. My other charges are generally much less than $10 bucks, unless I've spent a lot of time downloading some important information.

But here's the catch: On Prodigy, you can't download ANYTHING. This defeats, or at the very least severely hampers, the whole purpose and attraction of an online service, which is the transmitting and sharing of information. There are many wonderful shareware programs, text files, graphics, etc., available for downloading on the other systems. Downloading is the best way to get useful, usable, information, because when you have it on your own system you can read, manipulate, print it, etc., etc. This is one of the most important aspects of online computing, and it's not available on Prodigy.

Also, Prodigy subsidizes its lack of online fees by selling advertising. A typical Prodigy screen has about one-fourth to one-third of the screen taken up by an advertising box. Personally, I see enough (Enough!) ads on TV every day.

Prodigy is a graphics-oriented service. This is all very pretty and entertaining for about a week, then you'll begin to be frustrated at how SLOW everything is, due to the time it takes to generate all those pretty pictures (including the ads).

Finally, Prodigy doesn't seem to have the same user-oriented management as GEnie or CompuServe. There was a big controversy recently when Prodigy, without warning, changed their E-mail policy. It seems that an unexpected (at least to management) number of customers was using the system to send electronic mail (E-mail) messages to each other all over the country. The nerve! Anyway, Prodigy put a limit on the number of free E-mail messages you could send. Then, they began to censor, and even cancel subscriptions, of those customers who had the gall to complain, online, to other Prodigy subscribers. Not a very class act, to my way of thinking.

Prodigy boasts a lot of subscribers, but that's mostly because they include the system with many IBM computers, including the heavily-advertised PS/1 (also NOT recommended). I think you'll get more out of GEnie or CompuServe.

Speaking of fees and CompuServe, the best way to save money online is to save TIME online. That's why I like "Glossbrenner's Master Guide to GEnie," reviewed here earlier. Another book by the same publisher, McGraw-Hill, guides you through CompuServe. "The Complete Guide to CompuServe," by Brad and Debra Schepp, is a thorough, enjoyable, tutorial and reference to much that CompuServe has to offer. I think it's the best CompuServe guide that I've seen.

New subscribers can take advantage of a start-up kit included with the book, which allows you to practice using the system before you get online and start spending money! The authors take a straight-forward analysis of CompuServe's many features. They don't pull many punches about telling you where you can get the most value online and, equally important, which sections to avoid.

The book includes a 5-1/4" diskette with the CompuServe tutor and TAPCIS, an online access program, as well as coupons for good discounts to online services.

"The Complete Guide to CompuServe," by Brad Schepp and Debra Schepp, 1990. Osborne/McGraw-Hill publishers, 581 pgs., $34.95.

Prodigy accused of spying on users

By Bart Ziegler

NEW YORK (AP) — Prodigy, the information and home-shopping service for personal computers, is facing accusations that it could spy on its nearly 1 million users by gleaning information from their private, non-Prodigy files.

Prodigy denies any wrongdoing.

"We cannot look at that data," Prodigy President Theodore Papes said Friday. "We have no mechanism to do that, nor do we ever intend to have one."

Prodigy — a service provided by IBM and Sears — has been the center of controversy before. Two years ago, it prompted accusations of censorship after it eliminated one of its "electronic bulletin boards" that had become the forum for a shouting match between homosexuals and Christian fundamentalists.

Late last year, it was criticized for censoring comments its customers posted to each other on its remaining bulletin boards. Prodigy said the messages had gotten out of hand.

The latest controversy involves the software that all Prodigy users must install on their PCs. The software links the PCs to Prodigy's central computer in suburban New York by phone lines, allowing the service to transmit news reports, games, horoscopes, among other services.

Each time a customer starts up the Prodigy program on a PC, the software has the potential to pick up random bits of information from the PC's hard disk or random-access memory.

This information was data the user had deleted. But because of the design of the software on IBM-type personal computers, deleted data actually is not erased until it is written over with new data.

When loaded into a PC, the Prodigy software sets aside a large block of space on the hard disk, which could contain some deleted files. The Prodigy software doesn't use all the space it sets aside, allowing some deleted files to remain.

Some Prodigy users have looked into the Prodigy file on their computer and found it contained random pieces of their other computer files, causing concern about privacy.

News of the software fluke was first reported this week in The Wall Street Journal, but Papes said Prodigy users had alerted the company about it weeks ago and that Prodigy is working on a way to correct it.

Computer writer Pam Kane, who has written a book on Prodigy, dismisses the controversy.

"It's hysteria, I guess. And one of the problems with Prodigy is most of the users are not particularly sophisticated (about computers)," she said.

She said that even if Prodigy devised the software needed to spy on its users, it could take the company more than an hour to retrieve each users' Prodigy file containing the random data.

Industry analyst Stewart Alsop agreed that the privacy concern was overblown.

"For them to get any useful data or value out of this supposedly private information they would have to review so much data," he said.

Alsop and Kane said Prodigy appears to be a lightning rod because of its corporate parents, International Business Machines Corp. and Sears, Roebuck and Co.

"They are the two largest companies in their fields," said Alsop, publisher of P.C. Letter. "They both are viewed in one way or the other as big brother-type companies.

"There is this underlying suspicion that Prodigy is a ploy by these two large companies to dig into our brains, to find out what we're into."

That suspicion is not without foundation, Alsop added.

CLUB: Blossom urges industry to educate public how it works

(From 6C)

Blossom said.

The EPA expects the industry, which legally put waste into the landfills now requiring detoxification, to bear the cost of that cleanup. Municipalities, which place 80 percent of the waste in landfills, are not expected to be financially responsible, he said.

"We've all been guilty of placing hazardous waste in local landfills, either deliberately or out of ignorance. Who of us in this room has not thrown away used motor oil or fingernail polish or batteries?" Blossom asked.

"We must become committed to recycling; we must challenge our traditional attitudes toward and methods of disposal. And the key to recycling is convenience. We need the cooperation of municipalities to help boost recycling."

Education, he said, is the key. The public schools are turning out a generation of environmentally aware, educated citizens.

Blossom described himself as an environmentalist.

"Who me, an environmentalist? Yes, I am. But I'm not a narrowly focused environmentalist. I'm a well-informed, educated environmentalist, aware that there are trade-offs, and I make my decisions accordingly."

The dinner was part of the Desk & Derrick Region V meeting, hosted by the Midland club. Jean Rinehart, 1991 Region V director, presided over the meeting.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Beneficiary rules may surprise bondholders

By Bill Doyle

Q. My Series E, U.S. Savings Bonds, are in beneficiary form — in my name, "payable on death" or "P.O.D" to the beneficiary I named some years ago. I now wish to change the beneficiary. Much to my dismay, I recently learned I cannot do that without the notarized consent of the present beneficiary.

Doyle

Then I read in your column that E bonds can be exchanged for Series HH bonds. Can this be done if the Es have not reached final maturity? And, if the E bonds are in beneficiary form, does the same beneficiary have to appear on the HH bonds received in the exchange?

I wonder how many E bond holders know they cannot change the beneficiary.

A. Even though there are no firm statistics, I suspect a large percentage are blissfully unaware of that wrinkle. And that's a major reason the rules were changed once E bonds were no longer being issued.

Owners of EE and HH bonds in beneficiary form, which have been issued since January 1980, can change the beneficiaries without the beneficiaries' consent. Owners of the older E and H bonds cannot.

You can exchange your E bonds, as well as any EE bonds and U.S. Savings Notes you own, for HH bonds in amounts of $500 or more before they reach their 30-year or 40-year final maturities and for one year after they pass that milestone. EEs you exchange must be at least six months old.

When you exchange the bonds you now own for HHs, you can remove the beneficiary without his or her consent — or even informing that person.

For that matter, you can have the HHs received in the exchange issued in single ownership form — your name alone — or in co-ownership form — your name "or" another name.

However, if you choose co-ownership form, you won't be able to change it unilaterally later on. Any attempt to change one co-owner must be made by both co-owners.

Q. I was going to exchange my E bonds for HH bonds until I learned the HHs pay only 6 percent interest annual interest, locked in for 10 years. The 6 per cent rate is fair in the present market. But the 10-year lock-in seems like a very poor option. What is your evaluation of this?

A. It's 20 years — not 10. HHs have a 10-year original maturity period and have been granted a 10 year extended maturity. If you swap your Es, EEs or savings notes for HHs now, you will receive interest at a 6 percent annual rate by direct deposit to your bank account twice a year. That interest is subject to federal income tax.

For people who own Es, EEs and/or savings notes approaching final maturity, this is similar to the Godfather's "offer you can't refuse:" Either exchange your old bonds and notes and keep the accumulated interest deferred from tax or don't exchange and pay a tax much larger than the levy on 6 percent annual interest.

The U.S. Treasury Department knows that the owners of Es, EEs and savings notes make up a captive market for HH bonds. Given the tax situation, the Treasury isn't forced to offer higher HH bond interest. So it doesn't.

SWISS: Depositors must be identified

(From 6C)

Banks will have until Sept. 30, 1992 to ask current Form B depositors to identify their clients. In the case of a refusal, the banks are required to stop the business relationship.

Switzerland's powerful banks long resisted the abolition of Form B, arguing that it was unnecessary and that clients seeking discretion would merely turn to Luxembourg and to Liechtenstein, Switzerland's tiny neighbor, as alternatives.

The banks dropped their opposition after talks with regulatory authorities earlier this year, although professional groups representing lawyers and trustees fought the plans to the end.

The regulatory banking commission had argued that the Form B provisions interfered with the ability of banks to meet the provisions of the country's recent money-laundering law.

Under the law, banks and financial companies are required to assure the identity of their depositors. The law, introduced last August, for the first time made money-laundering a crime.

In a further effort to ease the country's traditional banking secrecy, the government in March also proposed that financial officials should have a legal right to report suspicious dealings to authorities.

It suggested legislation be extended to cover companies and called for greater powers for investigating magistrates to seize suspicious assets. The proposals are still under consideration.

PART-TIME INCOME AVAILABLE

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has several distributorships which need to be filled with qualified, responsible individuals.

OFTEN ASKED QUESTIONS:

Is it worthwhile for adults also?

Yes! Our current carrier force is already 90% adult and 10% youth. Morning newspaper routes are attractive for:

- ADULTS who have full-time jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job.
- MOTHERS who can't justify a small job and daycare, because as a carrier, you do not need daycare!
- COLLEGE STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
- SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added income, or just want to work with people, neighbors, and friends.

How much money can I make as a carrier?

Depending on the size of the distributorship from $300 to $700 monthly! Some make even more!

How long does it take?

The actually delivery takes 1 - 2 hours Monday - Saturday, and 2 - 3 hours on Sunday, again depending on the size of the distributorship. Also, a few hours a month are needed to collect from subscribers. Many carrier's choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in subscribers' papers. Collecting in person will be necessary though!

When do papers have to be delivered by?

6 a.m. Monday - Friday and 7 a.m. on Saturday, Sunday and holidays.

Do I ever get a day off?

The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, carriers do take days off by finding a friend or family member to substitute for them!
