America pauses to remember Challenger

By HOWARD BENEDICT
AP Aerospace Writer

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — In emotional ceremonies, space workers here and around the nation observed 73 seconds of silence, the length of the space shuttle Challenger's final flight, as America honored seven astronauts who died a year ago today.

Schoolchildren around the country planned memorial observances, a statue made of 1 million pennies donated by youngsters was being dedicated, the families of the crew planned to join public memorials or grieve privately, and President Reagan was to address NASA workers via satellite.

All activity ceased here and at nine other NASA centers at 11:38 a.m. EST, the moment on Jan. 28, 1986, when the shuttle roared away from icicle-laden Launch Pad 39B. Today was cold, with temperatures falling to 33 degrees overnight, a grim reminder of the conditions that contributed to the shuttle explosion.

Many of the nearly 14,000 workers at the Kennedy Space Center walked out of their buildings and gazed up at the spot 8.9 miles above the Atlantic Ocean where Challenger erupted into a fireball.

Tears welled in the eyes of several.

They were joined in the tribute by most of the 13,000 workers at nearby Cape Canaveral Air Force Station and Patrick Air Force Base, hundreds of tourists and thousands of local residents.

Tour buses, cafeteria lines, the processing of the three remaining shuttles, everything, came to a standstill.

Flags in the area were lowered to half-staff.

When the silence ended, Air Force Lt. Gen. Forrest S. McCartney, center director, told the workers by television, "As we return to our work places, we should keep the memories of the Challenger crew bright within us. Let us rededicate ourselves to the work ahead, work that they will always be part of."

Killed in the accident were Cmdr. Dick Scobee, Pilot Michael Smith, New Hampshire schoolteacher Christa McAuliffe and crew members Judy Resnik, Ronald McNair, Ellison Onizuka and Greg Jarvis.

At Woodlawn Memorial Park in Orlando, Bruce Jarvis was to lay a wreath at the Astronauts Memorial in honor of his son.

Jarvis' widow, Marcia, said she would be alone.

"I'm going to spend that day quietly on a trail somewhere...because we always did things outside," she said.

Onizuka's family plans a happier observance Saturday, gathering in Houston for a Hawaiian-style luau.

"We promised Ellison a luau when he got back...and the luau never occurred," said Claude Onizuka, his younger brother. "So we made a promise to the NASA people that on the one-year anniversary we'd come back and put that luau back on."

On Tuesday, the astronauts' families issued a joint "Letter to America" in which they said they hoped to raise $50 million for space learning centers around the country, "places where children, teachers, and citizens alike can touch the future."

Reagan's address was to be followed by a tape of a memorial service attended by members of the Challenger astronauts' families at Arlington National Cemetery.

Vice President George Bush met for about a half-hour with relatives of several of the Challenger astronauts in his office.

Elsewhere, Texas Gov. Bill Clements designated Jan. 28 as "Challenger Memorial Day" in his state.

Optimism follows words of regret

Local party leaders split on Reagan's speech

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

Local party leaders expressed mixed reactions to President Reagan's State of the Union address Tuesday night.

Young Democrats' President David Mandell called the speech a "bunch of Republican propaganda," but Midland County Republican Chairman Dean Rucker said the address showed Reagan to be an "in-charge" leader.

"I thought he was absolutely terrific. He was upbeat, positive and he showed his illness has not at all affected his ability to lead us. He showed America he is very much in command of our country," Rucker said.

However, Mandell said he was disappointed in Reagan's speech, which he characterized as "full of rhetoric."

"I expected more substance. It seemed to me he was just playing to the camera and playing for his popularity," Mandell said.

Reagan's brief comment about the arms sale to Iran also was disappointing, Mandell said.

"I still don't think he's answered the questions fully. America deeply needs to know the truth."

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, saying "I took a risk...it did not work," has appealed to Congress to put aside its preoccupation with the Iran-Contra controversy, but the Democrats say he still must clear away the sense of mistrust and incompetence the affair has evoked.

Reagan used his sixth annual report on his view of the nation Tuesday night to briefly express regret over the failed initiative that involved selling arms to Iran and then to plead: "Now, ladies and gentlemen of the Congress, why don't we get to work?"

It was a speech marked by Reagan's characteristic optimism, cheerfulness, nostalgia and patriotism — and his first public appearance since before Christmas — but a few moments afterward Democrats were on the television screens with their response, insisting on answers to their questions about Iran.

On other matters, the president:

— Deplored the deficit but rejected a tax increase to reduce it as "shopworn."

— Called for a system of insurance to shelter Americans from catastrophic health bills and a reworking of the nation's "welfare monster."

— Promised to submit proposals to give America a competitive edge in international trade. Reagan said that could be accomplished by "guaranteeing that government does everything possible to promote America's ability to compete."

But when Reagan had finished, the Democrats talked mostly of the arms sale.

"The sale of arms to Iran — in direct contradiction to our stated foreign policy — raises real questions about trust," said Senate Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va. "But it also raises real doubts about competence."

"The administration has the obligation to tell 'we, the American people' exactly what led to the arms-for-hostage deal — and what happened to accountability in the White House," Byrd said.

A celebration that brought such notables as Vice President and Mrs. George Bush, celebrated author James Michener and movie star Tommy Lee Jones to the Tall City ended this morning amidst teary eyes and humorous anecdotes.

Robin Jackson, executive director of the Midland Centennial/Sesquicentennial Commission, brought to an end the city's three-year-old celebration of the birthdays of Midland and Texas, with refunds to four city entities which provided funding along the way.

Representatives from Midland College, the City of Midland, Midland Independent School District and Midland County received checks totaling $33,211.72 from Commission Co-Chairman Linda Cowden Isbell.

Fifteen specially-made "Centennial Rifles" were presented to Haley Museum Librarian Beth Schneider for permanent display in its library.

The Centennial/Sesquicentennial celebration began with a February 1985 kickoff which was attended by Bush and his wife.

Has Waite become another hostage in Beirut?

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — No word was heard today from Anglican Church hostage negotiator Terry Waite as unconfirmed reports said he has become the latest prisoner of Shiite Moslem kidnappers.

Following 11 kidnappings of foreigners in two weeks, France asked all French journalists to leave Lebanon and U.S. officials in Washington said the Reagan administration is poised to force the departure of any Americans remaining in Lebanon without authorization.

Waite was last seen eight days ago when he left his hotel in Moslem west Beirut for secret talks with Islamic Jihad, a Shiite Moslem group that holds two Americans.

Archbishop of Canterbury Robert Runcie, the spiritual head of the Anglican Church, said Tuesday in London he was "greatly concerned" about his envoy's safety.

The statement followed a report Monday night by Kuwait's official news agency KUNA that the kidnappers bargaining with Waite had placed him under house arrest in a secret location after negotiations "were snarled." It quoted unidentified sources close to the talks.

Runcie said he had "no direct evidence" to confirm the report. Col. Ian Johnstone, defense attache at the British Embassy in Beirut, said in a radio interview that the government was "pursuing every available channel to discover more information" about Waite's fate.

Druse warlord Walid Jumblatt's Progressive Socialist Party, whose militia has been responsible for Waite's security, refused to comment Tuesday.

The Christian Voice of Free Lebanon radio said Waite was "continuing tough negotiations with the hostage-holders in Beirut." The radio, with a history of inaccuracies about Moslem-related matters, gave no attribution.

Other Lebanese radio stations carried a range of rumors about Waite, reporting variously that he was in Beirut, outside Beirut, kidnapped, under house arrest or continuing talks.

Waite arrived in the Lebanese capital Jan. 12 on his fifth visit since 1985 to seek freedom for foreign hostages held by various extremist groups.

State's economy 'bottoming out'

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas economy is "bottoming out" and will begin to improve later this year, three Austin economists told the House Ways and Means Committee Tuesday.

Meanwhile Railroad Commissioner Jim Nugent said slow increases in oil prices gave the energy industry a shot in the arm in December.

The size and the speed of the recovery, the economists said, depends on the state of the national economy and the relative stability of oil prices.

"The worst of the downturn is over, and we'll scrape along the bottom for a while," said Tom Plaut, senior economist in Comptroller Bob Bullock's office. "We look for a recovery in the Texas economy in the spring of the year."

Plaut predicted steady improvement through next year, with the state catching up to and eventually "outpacing" the U.S. economy by 1989.

Jim Smith, chief economist with the University of Texas at Austin Bureau of Business Research, said non-Texas economic monitors see the state in much better shape than what most Texans have come to believe.

Grant may change things for dropouts

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

A $114,000 state grant to create an Alternative School in Midland could make studying a popular task for hundreds of local high school dropouts, the Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees heard Tuesday.

The Alternative School, slated to open next month at Dellwood Mall, is designed to meet the Midland Independent School District's goal of providing educational services to young people who have not been successful in a regular school setting.

The funds were granted by the Texas Department of Community Affairs through Section 123 of the Job Training Partnership Act. The grant was approved last December by the Private Industry Council.

Its purpose, said MISD Vocational Education Coordinator Tex Paris, is to inspire the high school dropout to obtain the equivalent of a high school diploma as well as pre-vocational training.

An equally important task, he said, will be to "provide tutoring to the 'at risk' youth still enrolled in the schools so that they can successfully reach grade skills and stay in school instead of dropping out."

Teen's lottery win may fund childrens' ranch

SEATTLE (AP) — A teen-ager who won more than $4.2 million in a lottery jackpot has died following surgery to correct a congenital heart defect, and his family plans to use some of his prize money to set up a ranch for other ill children.

Philip Agne died Sunday. A funeral service was planned for this afternoon.

David Agne, who bought the winning ticket for his son last year, thought of the ranch, said the boy's mother, Sally Mapanao. "He feels it's something Philip would do," she said.

Ever since Philip split an $8.5 million Washington State Lottery jackpot last March with a King County deputy prosecutor, he had been buying presents for his family, Mrs. Mapanao said Tuesday.

The boy bought a house in the country for his family, gave some money to his four brothers, one sister and two stepsisters and bought a horse and motorcycle for himself, Mrs. Mapanao said.

"He never flaunted his wealth, but he just had a great time buying things for himself and his brothers and sisters," she said. "At times it seemed he wanted to buy everything he saw, but now I'm glad we let him."

The eighth-grader celebrated his 15th birthday with a party Jan. 20 and attended school until the week before his surgery, his mother said. But he knew he was gravely ill, she added.

"He knew it was his time," Mrs. Mapanao said. "He knew he was special. Sometimes he was afraid, but without a doubt" he was better prepared for his death than anyone else in the family.

Texas Congressmen describe reactions to annual address

By PEGGY ROBERSON
Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON — Texas congressmen Tuesday night failed to see President Reagan's state of the union speech as a "make or break" event in the life of the administration, as some political analysts had predicted it would be.

"Either he was real tired or I was real tired," said Rep. Charles Wilson, D-Lufkin. "I think there was a little zip lacking, but he's been through a tough operation and has not had a full recovery period. It was kind of a flat evening."

Republicans were on their feet, cheering many of the president's statements, while Democrats sat silently or laughed at some of the remarks.

Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, described the speech as "a powerful address by a vigorous, optimistic president with a clear vision of America."

Responding for the Democrats, House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, and Sen. Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., served notice they are in charge of the legislative agenda.

Wright said in less than three weeks the Democratic-controlled Congress has approved a clean water bill, now on the president's desk, and the House passed a major highway bill that the Senate is expected to clear this week.

Shortly before Reagan's address, the House approved a $50 million emergency appropriation to help the homeless, who have doubled in number in a year, Wright said.

On the president's handling of foreign policy, Byrd said he sensed a "gathering sense of mistrust," chiefly because of the Iran arms sale.

The president had been advised by some aides to "apologize" for selling arms to Iran in violation of his stated policy of not trading with terrorists, but instead he said it is "not wrong" to try to "establish contacts with a country of strategic importance or to try to save lives (and)...secure freedom for our citizens held in barbaric captivity."

Wilson, a member of the House Select Committee on Intelligence, said he would have preferred for the president to say the Iran arms sale was "a mistake" and to "promise not to do it again."

Gramm said, however, he believes the president took the correct position. "He addressed the Iran thing head on, assumed responsibility, committed himself to get to the bottom of it and make changes if necessary. But he wasn't absorbed about it and got on with the problems of concern to America."

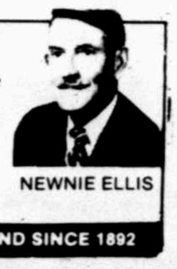

"The president is back. I'm glad, and I think the country is glad, too," added Gramm.

Rep. Lamar Smith, R-San Antonio, the Texas delegation's only freshman, said the president "turned the corner on Iran, seized the reins, and served notice he is ready to go."

Smith said he supports the president's call for a constitutional amendment to balance the budget and a "line item veto" that would permit the president to delete appropriations of which he disaproved.

Rep. Albert Bustamante, D-San Antonio, a former high school teacher, said the most impressive thing about the speech was the president's discussion of the celebration of the Constitution's 200th anniversary. "I appreciate that; it's a great document and every American should be acquainted with it."

Rep. Larry Combest, R-Lubbock, who represents part of the Texas "oil patch" suffering from depressed oil prices, favors most of the agenda Reagan outlined. But in the part of the speech dealing with national defense the president "should have made a connection between the energy crisis and a strong national defense," Combest said.

AT A GLANCE

IRAN-CONTRA CONTROVERSY: "I took a risk with regard to our action in Iran," the president said. "It did not work, and for that I assume full responsibility.... I do not believe it was wrong to try to establish contacts with a country of strategic importance or to try to save lives. And certainly it was not wrong to try to secure freedom for our citizens held in barbaric captivity."

MILITARY BUDGET: He said his new defense budget would "maintain our momentum to make up for neglect in the last decade." He said the Soviet Union has, since 1970, invested $500 billion more on defense than this country.

AFGHANISTAN: He said the Soviet Union "continues a brutal war and props up a regime whose days are clearly numbered." He offered "to support a political solution that guarantees the rapid withdrawal of all Soviet troops and genuine self-determination for the Afghan people."

NICARAGUA: Reagan called Nicaragua the "odd man out" in Central and South America, "suppressing the church, the press, and democratic dissent and promoting subversion in the region." He pledged to fight any effort to deny American aid to the counter-revolutionaries which, he said, would "consign them to death, defeat, or a life without freedom."

ARMS CONTROL: He charged that the Soviets destroyed an opportunity for an arms control agreement in Iceland last October by insisting on limits on his Strategic Defense Initiative program. "I wouldn't let them do it then. I won't let them do it now or in the future."

THE DEFICIT: Reagan called anew for a constitutional amendment mandating a balanced budget and asked Congress again for a line-item veto "so we can carve out the boondoggles and pork that would never survive on their own."

TAXES: He repeated his opposition to higher taxes to help balance the budget, saying, "the American people have repeatedly rejected that shopworn advice."

WELFARE: Terming the current welfare system an "outmoded social dinosaur," he said he will propose a new national welfare program.

CATASTROPHIC ILLNESS: He said he will submit legislation shortly "to help free the elderly from the fear of catastrophic illness," but gave no details.

COMPETITIVENESS: Reagan said he plans to propose ways to enhance U.S. competitiveness. The proposals will include science and technology centers, money for basic research, legal and regulatory reforms and weapons to fight unfair trade practices. He said farmers must have "a shot at participating fairly and fully in a changing world market."

JOBS: The president said he will propose substantial new federal commitments for re-training and job mobility to enable workers to adapt to the rapidly changing nature of the workplace.

DRUG ABUSE: He called for redoubling "personal efforts" to provide drug-free environments for every child.

SPEECH

Still, Byrd and House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, stressed that they wanted to work with Reagan during his final two years in office.

Republicans exaggerated their reaction to the applause lines in Reagan's speech, rising to their feet to clap and shout, while Democrats sat silently.

Only when Reagan made reference to issues the Democrats have criticized him for, such as the huge federal budget deficit, did the Democrats come to life.

"In 10 years I have never seen the floor of the House that way," said Rep. Leon Panetta, D-Calif. "The last time I was part of something like that was at a high school basketball rally."

Even Senate Republican Leader Bob Dole of Kansas was a little sheepish about the display.

"A couple of times it got a little out of hand," Dole said. "It started on our side, although not among senators. Some of those (House) guys, you tell them it's Tuesday and they applaud."

White House aides and congressional supporters hoped Reagan's address, would show him as in command after prostate surgery on Jan. 5 and the damaging revelations about the Iran-Contra scheme. The atmosphere and perception of it were at least equally as important as its substance.

On that score, reaction also broke along party lines.

"I think he's back," said Rep. Jack Kemp, R-N.Y.

"I felt a little bit sorry for him because I thought the speech was weak, and I don't want to see a weak president," said Rep. Dan Glickman, D-Kan.

Reagan used most of his speech to lay out a broad agenda ranging from boosting America's competitiveness overseas to domestic concerns like the budget deficit and welfare reform.

On Iran, the president said it was not wrong to try to establish contact with a nation of strategic importance and "certainly it was not wrong to try to secure freedom for our citizens held in barbaric captivity." Unlike his earlier statements on the subject, Reagan, in a single sentence, linked the effort to open contacts with Iran with trying to free the hostages.

He added, "But we did not achieve what we wished, and serious mistakes were made in trying to do so."

Reagan said his administration had made progress on many fronts but "I have one major regret.

"I took a risk with regard to our action in Iran. It did not work and for that I assume full responsibility."

While mentioning mistakes, Reagan did not say he, specifically, was guilty of any.

REACT

However, Mandell said he didn't think Reagan would ever disclose what he knows about the Iran deal without being forced to.

But Rucker said the president did not need to "spill his guts" about the Iran arms deal.

"Basically the president was just telling Americans we can't dwell on this failure. We've got to move ahead.

"He didn't apologize for his motives and that led him into other issues — domestic issues that are much more important at this time," Rucker said.

However, Reagan did not address one domestic issue — poverty that affects up to 30 million Americans, Mandell said.

The president's resolve to stick to the "Reagan agenda" pleased Rucker.

"He was directly talking to Congress as a whole and told them exactly how he felt about certain issues and what he would do if certain issues did not fit his agenda. He showed his resolve to stick with the Reagan program."

"They uniformly consider Texas to have been and to still be one of the shining stars in the firmament among all 50 states," Smith said. "We are about No. 6 or No. 7 in growth prospects for the rest of this decade, for the rest of this century and as far out as you want to go."

Jared Hazleton, president of the non-partisan Texas Research League, said he expects a modest recovery sometime this summer. A gradual increase in oil prices, Hazleton said, "will increase the confidence we have in ourselves and the confidence others have in us."

Plaut said he expects oil prices to slide from the current $18 a barrel back to about $15 as the high winter demand slows. Even $18 oil, he said, won't do much for the oil patch economy.

"It would take oil prices to go up to $20 to $25 and stay there for at least a year to see a sizeable upswing in drilling activity," he said.

Nugent said new holes drilled, well completions and drilling applications all increased in December. "After a year of record-setting declines in drilling and exploration rates, the holiday season brought some welcome good news to the oil and gas industry in Texas," the Railroad Commissioner said.

Nugent said U.S. companies spent about $10.2 billion on drilling last year, down 53 percent from 1985 and 75 percent from 1982. "Deprived of that badly needed capital, it's no wonder the industry in Texas saw a 30-percent drop in new holes drilled, a 35-percent decline in well completions and a 48-percent drop in drilling applications," he said of a year that did "irreparable harm" to the domestic oil industry.

HEART

Philip lived with his mother and stepfather on Bainbridge Island, across Puget Sound from Seattle.

The youth's heart was missing two of four chambers, and problems with blood vessels leading to the heart caused blood to flow irregularly, his mother said. The family had hoped the bypass surgery would give him a few more years.

The condition had nearly killed him twice before, and when he won the prize his parents hailed it as something that would allow their son to live a normal life, since his health would likely prevent him from holding a full-time job.

"Last year was really fantastic for him. We figure we had an extra 14½ years," said Agne, who signed the winning ticket for his son and has charge of the money's trust account, which will continue to receive $170,000 a year after taxes for the next 19 years.

Plans for the children's ranch are indefinite, but it would most likely be in the Puget Sound area and serve other chronically ill youngsters, Agne said.

Lawyers for the state said a parent or guardian can legally buy a lottery ticket for a minor. If the minor has a winning ticket, the prize money can be kept in a trust account until the youngster reaches age 18.

Events which Commission Co-Chairman Chris Scharbauer said were too numerous to name individually included the world's largest birthday cake — 50 feet by 50 feet — made on July 4, 1985, and documented by the "Guiness Book of World Records."

Centennial Plaza, a sunny place to sit and enjoy the outdoors, was built as a lasting tribute to Midland. It is located across the street from the County Courthouse.

The Sesquicentennial Wagon Train came through and camped in Midland last May as part of its 3,000 mile journey through Texas.

Street dances, parades, fairs and musical programs were held. Souvenirs were sold.

A time capsule containing Midland memorabilia was buried in Centennial Plaza and will be opened in 40 years.

Scharbauer thanked Ms. Jackson and Ms. Isbell for their help in making the celebration come off without major hitches.

"There were some hard times in Midland, but it's coming to life," he said.

Islamic Jihad, or Islamic Holy War, the group with whom Waite reportedly was negotiating, holds Terry A. Anderson, 39, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press; and Thomas Sutherland, 55, of Fort Collins, Colo., acting dean of agriculture at the American University of Beirut.

The sources said the first faction also has internal splits corresponding to the political rivalry in Iran between Khomeini's designated successor, Ayatollah Hussein Ali Montazeri, and Parliament speaker Hashemi Rafsanjani.

It was not clear which faction Waite was dealing with.

Since Waite's arrival in Beirut, 11 more foreigners have been abducted in Beirut, bringing the total missing to 26, including eight Americans.

The latest victim, a Saudi Arabian, was grabbed by gunmen Monday night.

French Premier Jacques Chirac said Tuesday in Paris that he has asked French television, radio and newspaper organizations to withdraw all their journalists.

Paris said the MISD will provide the staff, facilities and programs for basic education and pre-vocational training to 40 young people between the ages of 16 and 21.

State law says we're responsible for educating people until they are 21 years old," said Paris. "This provides a service to the community we need very much. We're trying to get people back into the school setting."

The school will be open from 9 a.m. to noon and from 1 to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Paris said the Alternative School will use the Comprehensive Competencies Program developed by the Remediation and Training Institute of Washington D.C. — a non-profit institutution. The RTI developed the program with Ford Foundation funds and research from the Department of Education and other governmental agencies.

Included in the "CCP Turnkey Package" are 11 student computers and one management system computer. The software includes English, mathematics, social sciences and non-laboratory physical sciences programs for kindergarten through 12th grade as well as prevocational materials.

Paris said the computer-based individualized program tests students before they enroll to determine their academic status. Students then progress at their own pace as they successfully complete each learning segment.

Heading the staff will be Isreal Dominguez, a bilingual specialist with MISD. Assisting Dominguez are instructor Virginia Conner and aides Hal Hebert and Robbie Drain.

Staff training is slated to begin Friday at the Permian Basin Alternative Education Center in Odessa. Dr. Richard Rutter, a licensed technician with the Remediation and Training Institute, will train the staff in the proper way to utilize the CCP.

In other business Tuesday, trustees reviewed students grades for the third six weeks and first semester reporting periods.

Larry Lusby, director of computer and special services for MISD, told trustees that grades are "a little bit higher than they were the same time last year.

"It's postive looking at the kids who are failing two, three, four or more courses," he said. "The numbers are down significantly."

Districtwide totals for the third six weeks show 36 percent of all secondary students earned grades of 90 or above — equal to figures reported in January, 1986.

Meanwhile, 30 percent earned grades between 80 and 89, 21 percent between 70 and 79, and 10 percent below 70 (failing).

First semester grades also were higher, said Lusby, with 30 percent of all secondary students earning grades of 90 or above, compared to 29 percent at the same time last year.

Lusby said 34 percent earned grades between 80 and 89, 24 percent between 70 and 79, and 7 percent below 70.

'Ultimate field trip' becomes national tragedy

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

Christa McAuliffe came to Cape Canaveral full of excitement for the adventure she called "the ultimate field trip." No teacher, she said, had ever been more prepared for just two lessons. "I just hope everyone tunes in on Day 4 to watch the teacher teaching from space," she said.

On Day 4, with the nation in mourning, Navy men were skimming the remains of space shuttle Challenger from the Atlantic Ocean and came across a few pages of the lessons the teacher never got to teach.

And, a second grade pupil in Chevy Chase, Md., brought to school an explanation of the accident, that said: "The space shuttle exploded in the sky because there was a leak and all the space people died when the space ship exploded."

And, on that day, when millions of children in classrooms all over the world had planned to tune in on the flight of Challenger, they watched instead a eulogy being delivered in Houston by President Reagan, which also was a lesson.

"The future is not free," he said. "The story of all human progress is one of struggle against all odds. We learned again that this America, which Abraham Lincoln called the last, best hope of man on Earth, was built on heroism and noble sacrifice."

It was built, he said, by the likes of Dick Scobee, Mike Smith, Ellison Onizuka, Judy Resnik, Ron McNair, Greg Jarvis and Christa McAuliffe — men and women "who answered a call beyond duty, who gave more than was expected or required and who gave it little thought of worldly reward."

WHEN THE Challenger exploded after 73 seconds of flight on the morning of Jan. 28, 1986, only a few thousand people were on hand at Cape Canaveral. But around the country, schoolchildren, gathering around TV, cheered when the shuttle lifted off and did its majestic roll, then cried out in horror when it was engulfed in a fearsome white and orange fireball while its booster rockets, breaking free, painted a horrible V across the blue sky. Before the day was out hundreds of millions of people had seen replays of the scene.

Without the teacher from Concord, N.H. aboard, few would have paid attention to the preparations for Flight 51-L. Without her, there was nothing to distinguish this mission from the 24 that preceded it. No derring-do was planned; no spacewalks, no satellite rescues, no fancy rehearsals erecting 100-foot solar panels. Challenger was to deliver a satellite to space. Ho hum.

The three commercial television networks didn't consider the launch newsworthy enough to cut into their morning programming. Those roads in the area with a good view of launch pad 34B — in spaceport towns like Titusville, Cocoa Beach and Port Canaveral — no longer were bumper to bumper with cars and campers on launch day. Local sheriffs used to claim a million people watching. For recent shuttle liftoffs there were hardly enough spectators to fill a college basketball arena.

The shock that followed the explosion was not hard to explain. To Americans, space flight was matter-of-fact. It had been going on, after all, for a quarter century. Ninety million Americans had been born since John Glenn circled the globe; a generation had grown up knowing that people went into space, walked on the moon and returned to Earth with not so much as a scratch.

"WE HAVE allowed ourselves to be beguiled by space as a place where only beauty and mathematics worked, where there was no disease, where we listened to the music of the spheres, where it was Aristotle and Descartes and Einstein," said John Chancellor, NBC News commentator and space buff. "The idea that you could take this beautiful, pristine, icy-cold, germ-free environment and introduce death and uncertainty and destruction in it made people take it personally."

On the day of the accident, Glenn himself commented: "This is the day that NASA has been postponing for 25 years."

But was it an accident? Or was it the tragic culmination of a can-do agency gone sloppy and making compromises to meet an increasingly ambitious schedule with its four-orbiter shuttle fleet?

The Rogers Commission, investigating the tragedy for President Reagan, found troubling lapses in judgment, expertise, communications and management. It called the Challenger explosion "an accident rooted in history" and said the agency had accepted growing risks "because they got away with it the last time."

The direct cause of the explosion was a leak at a joint between segments of one of two booster rockets that provide 80 percent of the power to push the orbiter into space. Superheated gases shot through that leak toward the adjacent fuel tank and triggered the conflagration.

Some NASA managers had feared for years that trouble lurked in the huge rockets. As early as 1977, an engineer at NASA's Marshall Space Flight Center in Alabama warned superiors that the rocket designed by Morton Thiokol, Inc., was unacceptable, that two quarter-inch diameter O-rings intended to seal in the searing gases could leak under pressure. A paper trail that extended from that point until the Challenger explosion showed 17 instances where soot was found on the recovered boosters, indicating they had leaked during their two minutes of flight.

THE WORST case had been on a mission almost exactly a year before Challenger's when O-ring damage occurred in both rocket boosters. A backup O-ring, the last-ditch defense against burnthrough, showed the effect of heat. That Jan. 24, 1985, liftoff had taken place when the temperature was 53 degrees at the launch site, the coldest to date.

The Challenger launch was to take place after a night when temperatures were forecast to be in the low 20s and Thiokol engineers argued heatedly that it be postponed. One Marshall official, told about the concerns, responded "my God, Thiokol, when do you want me to launch — in April?" In the end, Thiokol bosses overruled their engineers and gave NASA the go-ahead. The Rogers Commission said Thiokol acted under pressure from NASA.

The men who made the final decision to launch say they knew none of this; not about the suspect O-rings, not about the history of leaks and not about the launch-eve argument. John Young, chief of the astronaut office and NASA's most experienced astronaut with six flights, referred to the O-rings as "the secret seal, which no one that we know knew about."

But the Rogers Commission disputed that. The O-ring history, presented to the top level at NASA headquarters in August 1985, "was sufficiently detailed to require corrective action prior to the next flight," the commission said.

The commission also determined that NASA was under too great pressure to launch and was stretching its capabilities to the limit in scheduling 15 flights for 1986. But it found no substance to the rumor that the White House had pushed for the Jan. 28 launch so that the shuttle could be in orbit when President Reagan delivered his State of the Union speech.

WHILE THE space agency scrambled to satisfy nine major recommendations made by the commission, shuttle operations were stopped — not to resume until after a hiatus of at least two years. Not in the forseeable future would the flight rate again envision two dozen flights a year; the first post-Challenger flight is scheduled for Feb 18, 1988, with four to follow later in the year.

The agency was shaken up. A new administrator took over to replace an acting chief who had the misfortune of being at the helm at the wrong time. A new shuttle program director — an experienced astronaut — came aboard. There were wholesale resignations and shifting of duties in the top ranks at the Marshall Space Flight Center, which deals with propulsion systems, and at Morton Thiokol Inc., which built the boosters. The directors of the Kennedy and Marshall centers retired, and the head of the Johnson Space Center — who had approved the Challenger launch — took a leave of absence.

The spouses and children of astronauts Scobee, Onizuka, Jarvis and McAuliffe made financial settlements with the government and Morton Thiokol that are reported to be at least $1 million each. The family of Smith, having been rejected in a $15.1 million claim against the government, is free to sue if current negotiations break down. The Smith and Resnik families are still talking with the Justice Department. McNair's family is suing Morton Thiokol.

After mulling it over for six months, President Reagan agreed to a $2.8 billion replacement for Challenger. At the same time, he ordered the space agency out of the business of launching commercial satellites and said private industry should be encouraged to do so. But there was almost no private launch industry left and no prospects of rockets until 1989; so, satellite owners turned to foreign firms, in Europe and China. Even the Soviet Union was offering deals for its large rockets.

Two billion dollars worth of scientific programs were put on hold, including the $1 billion Hubble Space Telescope, the most ambitious scientific space project to date, and the space probes that were to have been sent in 1986 toward Jupiter and the sun.

Ten astronauts, unwilling to wait for a renewal of fewer flights, resigned from the corps or were reassigned to other duties. NASA and its contractors laid off thousands of workers.

Boy still has dream of being astronaut

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — Millions felt the impact of Challenger's explosion when they saw the bewilderment on Ben Provencal's face in a full-page magazine photo as he stared at the smoke cloud marking where his friend's mother had just died.

Now, a year since the boy stood in the cold and watched the space shuttle Challenger explode, his words may offer some hope.

Ben's photograph in Newsweek was devastating. He sat in Cape Canaveral bleachers next to his mother. His eyes, filling with tears, gazed skyward at the white smoke and zigzag rocket contrails.

The photo hangs on his bedroom wall, surrounded by other shuttle mementos, six space models and an astronaut Cabbage Patch Kid.

The 9-year-old talked with a reporter about his models, how the terrifying experience changed him and why he still wants to be an astronaut.

"I know it will be safe when I grow up because people who are going to be running NASA will be people my age and they'll remember this and so they won't let anything go wrong."

Before going to Florida, the class, which included teacher-astronaut Christa McAuliffe's son, Scott, was preoccupied with space, studying it daily.

Not afterward.

"At first, when we saw anything about space, it was like, 'Oh no! I don't want to look at this.'

"Now, I want to see the next space shuttle launch. I want to see if they do it right because if something goes wrong again, no more space, (no more) NASA.

"I want everything to be right because I want to go into space sometime," he said.

In one week before the launch, Ben and his classmates visited Disney World, Epcot Center, Sea World, besides the space center.

His classmates "try not to mention a lot about the shuttle launching, especially since Scott is in my class again," he said. They do talk about the other, happy moments of the trip.

"We counted down for a full minute," he recalled.

Still, the blast that followed impressed on him how easy it was for someone he knew to lose his mother.

Ben Provencal, 9, of Concord, N.H., who watched from the grandstand at Cape Canaveral last year as Challenger exploded, said he still plans to be an astronaut. Ben is a friend of Christa McAuliffe's son Scott.

'The country lost more than a teacher'

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — Kevin Judd, a kindergartner, stood at the grave of Christa McAuliffe one cold Sunday in January, fascinated by the black granite memorial.

"You can see yourself on it, it's so clean," he said with a smile, upon his discovery. "You can use it as a mirror."

His mother, Jenny, admonished him not to be silly. But that's the way Christa McAuliffe would have wanted it. After all, the inscription on her memorial says she was a mother herself and that she liked to laugh.

Christa McAuliffe always touched off a wide spectrum of emotions. Kevin's dad, Bruce, a machine shop worker from Laconia, N.H., broke down and cried.

"I feel like a part of us went with her," he said. "I felt like I knew Christa. I wished I could have met her. I felt like she belonged to us. You saw her in the paper. The country lost more than a teacher. I always get emotional when I think of her."

She lies at rest in the Calvary Cemetery on the top of a hill surrounded by pine, sugar maple and oak trees. The snow falls gently on her grave and the two smaller red maple trees planted there. She was buried in a private ceremony last May. The memorial, 3½ feet high and seven feet long, was put up last November. It says this:

"S. Christa McAuliffe

"September 2, 1948 — January 28, 1986

"Wife Mother Teacher

"Pioneer Woman

"Crew Member Space Shuttle Challenger

"America's First Ordinary Citizen to Venture Toward Space

"She helped people. She laughed. She loved and is loved. She appreciated the world's natural beauty. She was curious and sought to learn who we are and what the universe is about. She relied on her own judgment and moral courage to do right. She cared about the suffering of her fellow man. She tried to protect our spaceship Earth. She taught her children to do the same."

Many visitors have come to pay their respects, including many teachers during summer vacation.

They pray. They run a hand gently over the memorial. They cry. Some have left coins, which have been turned over to a fund to build the Challenger Center for teaching children about space.

'This time next year we'll have bird on the pad,' director says

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — A year of remorse, retrenchment and repair is ending at Kennedy Space Center where NASA is assembling a team of veteran launch officials to prepare plans for returning the nation's surviving shuttles into space during 1988.

"People are busy, they're not marking time," says the new NASA director here, Air Force Lt. Gen. Forrest McCartney. "This time next year we'll have a bird on the pad."

Throughout the space center, technicians and engineers clamor around the shuttles — Atlantis, Discovery and Columbia — fighting to keep up morale and working to ready the ships for the post-Challenger era of spaceflight.

The man put in charge of repairing the damage revealed by last January's Challenger accident speaks with optimism for those here who believe that man's destiny is still tied to a machine like the space shuttle.

"The first, second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth, ninth and tenth priorities of this organization is to have a successful mission," the new boss says of his safety-first orientation. He emphasizes that he won't cut any corners to meet the Feb. 18, 1988, target for the next launch.

Deputy center director Thomas E. Utsman was named to head a team of veteran space workers to guide the center through the first few launches.

"The intent was to gather people who have a lot of experience and concentrate all that experience on getting those first couple launches off," says Utsman. "We call ourselves the over-the-hill gang."

Discovery, which flew six times before, is to be the first shuttle sent into space since the Challenger explosion revealed NASA's spindly safety legs, led to layoffs and put McCartney in charge of launch operations.

The memories of last January are close to the surface here.

The Challenger crew cabin is being buried in two abandoned missile silos along with tons of other shuttle wreckage. Launch pad 39A is simply on standby status; pad 39B, used just once, by Challenger, is down for repairs.

The quiet in the American space program has been practically deafening, with the shuttles awaiting improvements that begin with redesigned solid rocket boosters and end no one knows quite where.

Atlantis, attached to an external fuel tank and two solid fuel booster rockets, stands upright on a mobile launch platform in the cavernous Vehicle Assembly Building. Discovery and Columbia are surrounded by work platforms in two smaller buildings.

Workers are making modifications recommended by the Rogers Commission, which investigated the Challenger accident, for several shuttle systems besides the faulty booster rocket joint blamed for the explosion. They include changes to the main engines, external tank and launch support equipment.

"I don't think any of us really perceived the impact the loss of Challenger would have on the nation," McCartney said in an interview. "All of a sudden we realized, with the loss of the shuttle and the problems we had with the Titan and Delta rockets, that we just didn't have the strong launch program that we once perceived we had."

Now, a year later, "morale is on the upswing," he said. "The uncertainty of the layoffs is behind us, and we are getting a better fix on the modifications that will be required" to prepare the shuttles for 1988.

Nearly 2,400 workers, out of a work force of 16,000, were laid off after the Challenger accident as a combined result of the suspension of shuttle flights, the termination of the shuttle-Centaur upper stage contract and the completion of various work projects at the space center.

The accident prompted NASA to conduct a detailed self-analysis of the entire space shuttle system, and as a result, says McCartney, "We found a lot of things here that, while they did not contribute to the 51-L (Challenger) accident, should be addressed in a more disciplined system." He cites training, quality control, work hours and shuttle processing methods.

The Rogers Commission said NASA had too few quality control inspectors and was critical of the great amount of exhausting overtime by shuttle workers in the weeks before the launch, mainly because the previous flight had a record seven postponements and Challenger had five.

New procedures will allow managers to get some rest, even in the face of numerous postponements.

"What happens if we get behind?" McCartney said. "If at any time we feel we are not comfortable with that (February 1988 launch) schedule, you're looking at a fellow who is going to stand up and say I want to extend that schedule...

"All you have to do is think of what happens if we break another one of those birds."

Deadline passes, government troops fire

Philippine loyalists send warning to rebels

By RICHARD BILL

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Government troops fired warning shots of tear gas tonight at about 200 rebels holding a walled broadcast center in suburban Manila after they ignored an ultimatum to surrender.

"Don't let this get worse, declare your surrender," an officer shouted through a bullhorn. "The Filipino people are asking you to please think this over thoroughly so we can solve this problem. We beseech you to come out."

The center was the last position held by rebels linked to deposed President Ferdinand E. Marcos who attempted a pre-dawn coup Tuesday, the most serious challenge by right-wing military members since President Corazon Aquino came to power 11 months ago.

The commander of the 1,000 government troops surrounding the studios of Channel 7 and DZBB radio station in Quezon City had told the rebels to surrender within 30 minutes.

Heavily armed troops wearing gas masks moved toward the station in a five-truck convoy. Marines in civilian clothes and wearing yellow armbands — the color of Mrs. Aquino's "people power revolution" against Marcos — were on standby to move in on a second wave.

Four tear gas canisters were fired at the compound after the deadline passed in what an officer at the scene described as a warning. There were no reports of fire from the rebels.

Five minutes earlier, rebel leader Col. Oscar Canlas in an interview aired by the Roman Catholic Radio Veritas urged military chief Gen. Fidel V. Ramos to "return to your senses."

Ramos, who met with Canlas for 45 minutes before dawn and ordered him to surrender, said about 190 troops and 55 civilians who supported Marcos were in the studio. The government blamed Marcos backers for the coup attempt, but Canlas said the takeover was aimed at dramatizing the threat from Communist rebels.

Asked what Ramos' instructions were after the warning shots were fired, Armed Forces spokesman Col. Honesto Isleta said: "We cannot wait until tomorrow. ...We have to finish it tonight."

Canlas had issued a statement during the day saying he was prepared to leave the station but wanted more time "to arrange these matters, these matters of procedure."

The rebel leader, who also spoke with small groups of reporters allowed into the station, demanded a guarantee from the government that only he be held accountable for actions during the rebellion.

Mrs. Aquino has vowed to punish all those who participated in the failed coup, which involved attempted takeovers of other media and military facilities around Manila.

Military sources said Canlas wanted to wait until Thursday morning before surrendering. A senior civil official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said military commanders suspected the rebel leader was stalling for time to allow pro-Marcos reinforcements to arrive, but Canlas said his troops were afraid of harm if they left in the dark.

The uprising, which the government said involved a total of about 500 troops, came just six days before Monday's scheduled plebiscite on ratifying a new constitution that is opposed by both Marcos supporters and the left.

At his home in exile in Honolulu on Tuesday night, Marcos answered, "No, no, no, no," when asked if he directed the rebellion.

Marcos fled the country Feb. 26 following a civilian-military coup that swept Mrs. Aquino into office.

In his statement, Canlas said he considered himself a loyal member of the armed forces who feared a Communist takeover.

Canlas said Filipinos "should be made aware of the growing menace of Communism with increased strength and influence," claiming that Marxists had "gained access to critical government and information offices."

Mrs. Aquino's government has negotiated a cease-fire with Communist rebels and has held peace talks to end the 18-year-old insurgency. Some military officers have criticized the peace overtures and claim many Aquino advisers are sympathetic to the Marxist rebels.

During the day, priests and wives of mutineers streamed in and out of the studio.

As the troops began clearing the area of civilians, Canlas' wife, Leah, who is seven months pregnant, rushed up to a group of officers and demanded to speak with the officer in charge of the operation.

She was hustled into a jeep and driven away.

After sundown today, Marcos loyalists inside the station began transmitting messages to their families over an FM sister station to DZBB.

"Mommy, take care of my children, whatever happens to us here," cried one unidentified woman, her voice choking with emotion.

Government radio repeatedly broadcast tearful appeals by relatives asking the rebels to give up. The 5-year-old daughter of Canlas whimpered, "Daddy come home. Mama is waiting for you and so are my brothers."

Hundreds of Marcos supporters surged around the station Tuesday, chanting for his return. Late Tuesday, police and troops fired tear gas and smoke bombs to break up gangs of Marcos loyalists who set fires on a busy boulevard near the station and threw rocks at pro-government crowds and security forces.

Police said at least 34 people were injured and six arrested in the clash.

Ramos told a news conference Tuesday the uprising have been part of a "bigger scenario," which he hinted might include Marcos' return from Hawaii.

Late Tuesday, the rebels released 37 station employees and said they were holding no other workers. Earlier they freed three female employees and three children of guards who live at the station.

Hall allowed to leave Nicaragua for home

By REID G. MILLER

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — Sam Nesley Hall, a self-styled American soldier of fortune accused of spying in Nicaragua, was freed from custody today and allowed to leave the country.

"I just have one thing to say to the Nicaraguan people," the 49-year-old Hall told reporters before boarding a flight to Costa Rica. "I'm sorry I tried to ambush them."

Hall, who has been held since his arrest Dec. 12, said he was not mistreated during his detention, adding, "Prison authorities were terrific. They treated me like a human being."

Asked how he felt about going home, he said, "Terrific."

The Sandinistas say Hall, the brother of U.S. Rep. Tony Hall, D-Ohio, was released because he is mentally unstable.

Hall was brought to Sandino International Airport this morning and put aboard an Aeronica national airlines flight for San Jose, Costa Rica. Aeronica is the Nicaraguan national airline.

Dressed in a pink shirt and brown trousers, Hall was taken to the airport by Sandinista security agents and turned over to U.S. Vice Consul Luis Moreno. The two men embraced briefly and Hall boarded the plane for a flight accompanied by family lawyer Gary Froelich of Dayton, Ohio, who arrived in Managua on Monday night.

Nicaraguan officials had planned an airport news conference, but Hall was late in arriving and answered only a few shouted questions as he was hustled on the waiting plane.

Hall's travel plans from San Jose were not known. There are several daily flights from the Costa Rican capital to Miami.

Froelich said Hall's family was trying to arrange for him to receive a complete medical examination in Miami before going on to Dayton.

Hall was arrested in a restricted area of the Punta Huete air base, 13 miles northeast of Managua. Authorities said they found maps and sketches of military targets, crudely drawn on hotel stationery, stuffed in his socks, and threatened to try him for espionage.

But Javier Chamorro Mora, deputy foreign minister, told a news conference Tuesday night that Hall was being released "so he may be taken to the United States and receive adequate treatment at a specialized institution."

He said a psychiatrist and a clinical psychologist had found Hall to be "a very unstable personality ... inclined to carry out acts that could end his own life."

As a result, he said, Hall had been "declared exempt from responsibility" for acts that "clearly violated" Nicaragua's criminal code.

In press interviews after his arrest, Hall said he was paid $12,500 for his mission and worked for a previously unknown group called the Phoenix Battalion. He also said his superiors were code-named Tinker, Evers and Chance, the last names of a famous Chicago Cubs double-play combination early in the century.

Chamorro called the decision to release Hall "one more demonstration of the generosity of the Nicaraguan people," referring to the Sandinistas' pardon last month of American mercenary Eugene Hasenfus.

Hasenfus, 45, of Marinette, Wis., was arrested after the Contra supply plane on which he was a cargo handler was shot down Oct. 5 in southern Nicaragua. He was convicted of crimes against the state, sentenced to 30 years in prison, and spent 72 days in jail before his pre-Christmas pardon.

Froelich had flown to the Nicaraguan capital to arrange local counsel for the prisoner and was surprised by the announcement Hall would be released.

"We'd like to get him back as soon as possible," Froelich said. "We are concerned about what his medicial condition is because it is a very vague description from the information we have.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Mines ordered along strip to stop Sandinista crossings

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (AP) — The armed forces commander said Tuesday he has ordered mines laid in a long strip of territory on the frontier with Nicaragua to impede passage of Sandinista troops across the border.

Gen. Humberto Regalado did not say where the mines would be planted on the ill-defined frontier that runs through more than 500 miles of mountainous terrain.

"The only thing we want is to complete our constitutional mission to maintain the sovereignty and integrity of our territory, violated many times by Sandinista troops," the general said.

Large numbers of Sandinista soldiers have entered Honduras at least six times in the past nine months to pursue U.S.-backed Nicaraguan rebels who operate from bases in an area of southern Honduras called the Las Vegas salient.

Last March and again in December, the Honduran military received U.S. assistance in moving soldiers to the border by helicopter because of the incursions.

A ranking Western diplomat in the region, who speaks to journalists only on condition of anonymity, has said more than 1,000 Nicaraguan troops were based inside the salient for several months last year.

The military press office said Honduran soldiers deactivated 289 antipersonnel mines and more than 170 pounds of plastic explosives this month that Nicaraguan troops had planted inside Honduras.

Canada names first woman

OTTAWA (AP) — Canada appointed its first woman general Tuesday, selecting a veteran administrator currently in charge of women personnel.

Defense Minister Perrin Beatty announced that Col. Sheila Hellstrom, 52, a native of Nova Scotia, who joined the Royal Canadian Air Force in 1954, was promoted to brigadier general.

She joined the ranks of 115 male generals, commodores and admirals in the Canadian Forces, which have about 7,400 women, or 8.8 percent, among 84,000 regulars.

Her new job will be director-general of officers' careers.

A task force report on the role of women in the military is scheduled to be released soon. Press leaks last month said it will recommend that women be barred from combat roles, except in helicopter squadrons.

The Canadian Human Rights Tribunal heard complaints at a hearing in Ottawa Tuesday from women seeking front-line involvement in the military.

Government fights radon

LONDON (AP) — The government said it would help needy homeowners seal their houses against radon, a radioactive gas that seeps from the ground as natural deposits of uranium decay.

The government said about 20,000 homes, mostly in the southwest counties of Devon and Cornwall, are seriously at risk from radon. The National Radiological Protection Board estimates 800 to 900 people die annually from radon in Britain.

Radon is particulary found in granite areas. The gas decays into minute solid particles which, if inhaled, can be deposited in the lungs.

Clements: TDC needs $18-20 million

By JIM WARREN

STATE

AUSTIN — The state prison system needs $18 million to $20 million in the next two months to avoid fines from a federal court, Gov. Bill Clements said Tuesday, but the governor and legislative leaders still haven't decided where to get the money.

Clements met with House Speaker Gib Lewis and key House members, who all agreed the Texas Department of Correction needs more money right away. Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby laid out a plan Tuesday to divert tax dollars as they come into the Treasury into a special TDC fund for short-term improvements that could bring the system into compliance with U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice's court orders.

But Clements said Hobby's plan is no longer an alternative because Comptroller Bob Bullock would have to certify the diversion. With the state facing a $1 billion deficit, Bullock cannot certify new appropriations without violating the Texas Constitution's pay-as-you-go provision that prohibits deficit spending.

Hobby said Clements, who again Tuesday pledged to avoid new taxes, must come up with a plan for TDC if he wants to avoid fines that could come to $24 million a month.

Earlier this month, Justice found TDC in contempt of court for failing to live up to agreements of a long-running inmate lawsuit against TDC. The system faces fines of up to $800,500 a day starting April 1 if it doesn't improve medical care, hire additional staff, provide better recreation facilities and segregate nonviolent and violent inmates.

The emergency money for TDC is aimed at bringing the system into quick compliance by March 31, which Clements called "the drop dead date." Clements said the money would be phased in, with the first $18 million to $20 million installment coming within the next several weeks.

Meanwhile, Senate Criminal Justice Committee Chairman Bob McFarland, who has worked closely with Clements on the prison crisis, said he is working out details of a legislative package to bring TDC into compliance with Justice's orders. McFarland's plan would upgrade medical care in TDC and pour more money into intensive supervision parole and other programs to divert inmates from prison to relieve overcrowding.

Clements and legislative leaders said they support McFarland's concept, and the governor said he will have bills "in the hopper" by Thursday.

Lewis said he is "going over scenarios" to find money for TDC but acknowledged that the state's gloomy fiscal condition is making it difficult to find spare cash in the state's tight budget. "We squeezed that sponge pretty dry last year," Lewis said, referring to budget cuts made during special legislative sessions.

After the first installment, Clements said, TDC will need about another $20 million between April 1 and June 1 and then about $40 million between June 1 and Sept. 1.

Besides facing the fines, TDC is hovering around its legal capacity limit of 95 percent. The system was 94.69 percent full Tuesday, prison officials said, with only 123 open beds and more inmates arriving today.

Austin businessman launches recall fight

AUSTIN (AP) — The mayor and city council may have to defend their records and fight for their jobs in the coming months if a businessman rallies enough support for a recall referendum.

Bryan Hardeman launched a petition drive Tuesday seeking a recall of the six-member council and Mayor Frank Cooksey.

"The mayor and city council, although personally nice people, just are not providing the leadership for Austin that we elected them to provide for these critical times," said Hardeman, chairman of Send a Message to City Hall.

Council member Mark Rose, who is seeking re-election in April, agreed in part with Hardeman.

"There's no question there is a leadership problem," said Rose, who also served under former Mayor Ron Mullen. "Frankly it all comes back to the mayor."

But he said he's not sure a recall election is the answer.

"Next year's election would be a prudent opportunity to make a change," he said.

Mayor Frank Cooksey did not answer two calls from The Associated Press.

Hardeman, an auto dealer, said he is optimistic about collecting the 26,000 signatures needed to force a recall election so Cooksey and the council members must "run against their own record."

Hardeman said taxes, utility rates and fees have increased while services dwindled. He said promises to protect the environment have been unfulfilled and little economic progress has been made during the current council's term.

"We have heard more about decorating new city offices... than we have heard about jobs," he said.

Hardeman said his group includes a cross-section of residents. But he refused to reveal the names of most others participating in the recall effort, saying they were afraid of reprisals from city government. Some do business with the city, he said.

Dick Stanford, spokesman for the recall drive, said Hardeman's group believes an overhaul is needed, so it is pushing the recall rather than supporting opponents to incumbent council members, three of whom are up for re-election in April.

"The problem is not just one member on the council. We want to fire the entire council for not delivering," he said.

Jailers quit over sexual allegations

DALLAS (AP) — Twenty-four female inmates at the Dallas County detention center exchanged sex for cigarettes on 25 different occasions with three jailers who resigned and another who was fired, officials said.

No criminal charges have been filed against the officers who resigned Sunday and Monday, or a fourth officer who was fired after an administrative hearing Tuesday, said Jim Ewell, a spokesman for the Dallas County Sheriff's Department.

Ewell said the jailer, a processor in the fingerprinting section, admitted to fondling at least 40 women.

"We have elected to go the administrative route," Deputy Cmdr. Bob Knowles said. "First, to make sure it doesn't happen again, and second, to get rid of the officers now. A criminal investigation would have been lengthy."

An investigation into the the alleged activities began Jan. 17 after jail officials heard inmate rumors about the sexual activity, Ewell said.

In one incident, Lt. John Slovak, a watch commander, saw a jailer and a female prisoner enter an elevator and was curious because the officer was not assigned to escort prisoners, Ewell said.

Slovak told investigators he took an adjacent elevator to the second floor, where he waited about 12 minutes for the jailer and his prisoner to arrive.

Ewell said the prisoner told internal affairs officers she had sexual intercourse with the jailer in exchange for cigarettes. She also told investigators she had sex with another officer.

America flexes military muscle in Mediterranean

WASHINGTON (AP) — A wave of hostage-taking in the Middle East has prompted the Reagan administration to hold the aircraft carrier John F. Kennedy in the Mediterranean Sea, keeping two carrier battle groups in the region indefinitely, Pentagon sources say.

The Pentagon announced the decision without giving a reason Tuesday, and the sources, who demanded anonymity, said the cancellation of the Kennedy's scheduled move from the area was a "precaution" prompted by terrorist kidnappings in Lebanon.

The action is expected to be followed by orders that the carriers move farther eastward toward the Middle East, said one source.

In another move, the Navy has issued orders to a group of smaller warships to move deeper into the Persian Gulf, sources disclosed. That move was described as a sign of U.S. support for the Organization of Islamic Conference that got underway Tuesday in Kuwait.

Col. Marvin Braman, a Pentagon spokesman, declined to discuss the reasons for extending the deployment of the Kennedy and her 11-ship combat group.

"The Kennedy battle group has been extended on deployment with the 6th Fleet in the Mediterranean," Braman said. "The extension at this point is indefinite."

The Kennedy left its home port in Norfolk, Va., last August and had been scheduled to depart the Mediterranean next week after completing a standard six-month deployment.

The nuclear-powered carrier Nimitz arrived in the Mediterranean earlier this month to relieve the Kennedy, and the two carriers were said to be completing exercises on Tuesday in the central Mediterranean.

One source stressed Tuesday the Navy had not been given any instructions to prepare for a military strike in Lebanon or elsewhere. The source agreed it would be difficult at this point to select any targets such as terrorist bases in the Mideast for military strikes.

But the official added the administration had grown alarmed over the wave of hostage-taking since the capture in West Germany of one of the men thought responsible for the 1985 hijacking of a TWA airliner.

The number of foreigners missing in Lebanon has soared to 26 — eight Americans, six Frenchmen, two West Germans, two Britons, two Saudis, an Irishman, an Italian, a South Korean, an Indian and two as yet unidentified foreigners.

"With things this unsettled, you don't let an aircraft carrier start home if there's a chance you might need it," said one official. "It's a precaution."

The orders to the Navy ships also came amid reports that Anglican church envoy Terry Waite might have been placed under house arrest in Beirut by Moslem extremists with whom he had been seeking to negotiate the release of hostages.

Waite arrived in the Lebanese capital on Jan. 12. Since then, 11 more foreigners have been abducted in Beirut. The latest, a Saudi Arabian, was grabbed by gunmen Monday night.

One source said the Navy has five warships in the area iof the Persian Gulf — two frigates and three destroyers. They have been ordered to steam northward, and hence deeper into the gulf, the sources said.

Those orders were issued as the Islamic Conference opened its three-day summit in Kuwait with King Hussein of Jordan appealing for an immediate truce as a prelude to peace talks between Iran and Iraq. Ending that conflict, which is raging only 50 miles north of Kuwait, is one of the summit's prime objectives.

Iran has refused to attend the summit, claiming Kuwait supports Iraq in the war. Pro-Iranian terrorists have condemned the summit and threatened to disrupt it.

Sources said Tuesday the movement of the Navy ships deeper into the Persian Gulf was meant as a signal that the United States supported the summit's effort to stop the fighting.

Brief statement on Iran fails to quiet criticism

By TERENCE HUNT
AP White House Correspondent

An Analysis

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's brief treatment of the Iran-Contra affair in his State of the Union address failed to satisfy Republican expectations or still Democratic criticism about a subject that has sapped Americans' confidence in his truthfulness and ability to govern.

But the president was able to deal with his problem on a more personal level. He had not been seen in public since before Christmas, and questions have been raised with growing insistence over his vitality and his command of the office.

What America saw Tuesday night was the familiar, confident Reagan — smiling, fit, forceful, speaking in ebullient terms with his trademark optimism about a nation whose "best days have just begun."

In his 37-minute speech, Reagan offered no new details about the sale of arms to Tehran or the diversion of profits to Contra rebels in Nicaragua.

While proclaiming progress on other fronts, Reagan said he had "one major regret. I took a risk with regard to our action in Iran. It did not work and for that I assume full responsibility."

But he did not apologize, as some lawmakers had urged.

And, while he said that "serious mistakes were made," he did not acknowledge that he was guilty of any of them.

Despite previous statements denying any arms-for-hostages swap, Reagan linked the two initiatives in a single sentence, saying it was not wrong to try to establish contacts in Iran or to save the lives of American captives.

Reagan's advisers said the speech was intended to begin untangling the president from the Iran-Contra affair by presenting an agenda of programs that would attract attention in their own right.

But that was not the message that Republicans in Congress wanted to hear.

Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., had said in advance the speech was "an opportunity for the president to put to rest a lot of stories, a lot of rumors that are out there" about Iran and the Contras. He called it one of the "few opportunities left" for Reagan "to regain control of his presidency."

On the other side of Capitol Hill, House Minority Leader Bob Michel, R-Ill., had said that only one thing would satisfy Americans, and that was "to lay out everything cold turkey for them."

Reagan chose not to do that, sticking to his strategy of letting the facts come out from investigations in Congress, a review panel he appointed and a independent counsel. In a speech of 5,200 words, Reagan dealt with the Iran-Contra subject in 229 words.

Senate Majority Leader Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia, delivering the Democratic response to Reagan's speech with House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, was quick to criticize Reagan.

"The administration's recent dealings with Iran have cast a long shadow over this country," he said. "There's a gathering sense of mistrust."

Byrd added that the administration "has the obligation to tell 'We the American People' exactly what led to the arms-for-hostage deal — and what happened to accountability in the White House."

A Gallup poll earlier this month said 42 percent of Americans considered the Iran-Contra case so serious that it has hurt Reagan's ability to run the country, while 46 percent said Reagan was generally not believable. A New York Times-CBS News poll released Monday said 52 percent of the people surveyed believed Reagan lied when he said he did not know about the diversion of money to the Contras.

Reagan, smiling and looking fit after a month in seclusion for the holidays and for recuperation from prostate surgery, pledged anew not to abandon the rebels in Nicaragua, but likely will find it harder to win money for those forces because of the Iran-Contra controversy.

Sketching his overall agenda in the broadest possible terms, Reagan vowed to work for arms control and fight for his Star Wars missile defense plan. On the economic front, he promised to submit legislation to make American businesses more competitive in international trade and to overhaul the welfare system with experimental programs by state and local governments.

Although he was not ready to propose a program yet, Reagan said he would offer a plan soon to help elderly Americans deal with the high costs of catastrophic illness.

1787 Constitution Daybook

EDITOR'S NOTE — This day-by-day account of 1787, the year that the U.S. Constitution was written, blends the significant with the small, personal details that bring history to life. The authors spent three years in research and writing, drawing on letters and personal diaries as well as the better-known historical documents. The writers are David D.C. Dutcher, David A. Kimball, Robert K. Sutton and Anna Coxe Toogood, all of the Independence National Historical Park in Philadelphia, where the Constitution was created 200 years ago.

PHILADELPHIA TODAY

With the wind continuing from the west, the weather cleared and turned much colder, with a mean temperature of 27 degrees. Stablekeeper and local office-holder Jacob Hiltzheimer went to church in the forenoon. He did not, as he usually did, cite the sermon text.

CONFEDERATION TODAY

William Blount of North Carolina was hanging on in New York in hopes that once a quorum formed, Congress would elect him president. Today he sent word to North Carolina Gov. Caswell that "the Yankees" apparently objected to "a delegate from No. Carolina being put in the Chair." Blount had heard that North Carolina was on the verge of committing the money from recent tobacco sales to the interest payment due on the foreign debt, rather than handing the sum over to the Continental Treasury where it would be subject to the federal government's choice of appropriation. "If this is true," Blount said, "it is surely a very anti-federal Act." But he wrote off such rumors from "imprudent Members" with the conviction that "the Legislative Acts will evince a different Spirit."

There was another rumor around New York that Spain had ceded Florida to France, but the ministers of both countries denied it.

DELEGATES TODAY

George Washington awoke to find the ground frozen. Col. Henry (Light Horse Harry) Lee, his wife, nee Matilda Lee (the 18th century accepted marriages between cousins), Miss Lee and Mr. Fendall came to dinner. Mr. Fendall left for Maryland after dinner.

Virginia Gov. Edmund Randolph wrote two letters to Thomas Jefferson in Paris — one official, one personal. The official letter promised to reimburse Jefferson for money he spent helping one Mercier, and discussed paying for weapons Jefferson was buying for the state. The private one reported that there was no political news, that the Capitol designed by Jefferson was progressing with the walls up past the first floor windows, and that Randolph had sent money to their Italian/Virginian friend Phillip Mazzei.

LOOKING BACK
Sectional Rivalry

While New Englanders occasionally referred to themselves as Yankees, they regarded use of the term by those born elsewhere as an insult. Blount probably intended to convey his displeasures when he used the word in his letter to Gov. Caswell. Regardless, his letter reflected a growing sectional split which increasingly imperiled both Congress and the Union.

There had always been inter-colonial rivalries. Connecticut disliked New York and vice versa. Maryland and Virginia disagreed on matters affecting the Potomac River. Virginia and Pennsylvania were rivals in the Ohio Valley. But, by 1787, these rivalries had given way to a north-south sectional rivalry. Political leaders were beginning to speculate that two or three confederacies might be preferable to one.

As yet, this growing sectional division had almost nothing to do with slavery, and almost everything to do with economic differences. From Pennsylvania north, subsistence farming was the rule, and shipping and manufacturing were vital to regional prosperity. In these states, except for Pennsylvania, good vacant land was scarce, and migration was occurring out of Delaware, New Jersey and Connecticut to the frontier. From Virginia south, large farms or plantations growing one or two cash crops dominated. All of the states had vast acreages of vacant lands within their boundaries, and in none were shipping and manufacturing significant factors.

In 1787 these differences led to fights in Congress over the location of the capital (the south wanted it in Philadelphia, New England preferred New York) and over a treaty with Spain (the North would give up the right to navigate the Mississippi for a time in order to get access to Spanish markets for its ships and its products; the South would fight to keep the Mississippi open). Key congressional votes often split on sectional lines. Nationalists were alarmed at this trend, an alarm which helped lead to the Federal Convention.

U.S. may invalidate passports for travel to Lebanon

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration is poised to take measures forcing U.S. citizens to leave Lebanon, where at least eight Americans are currently held hostage, two U.S. officials say.

The administration within a few days is expected to invalidate U.S. passports for travel to the Middle Eastern nation, an action demonstrating that the United States no longer is able to protect the estimated 1,500 citizens who have ignored repeated advice to depart, the officials, who demanded anonymity, said Tuesday.

Two procedures are under "active consideration," according to one of the officials.

The passports held by U.S. citizens in Lebanon would be declared invalid within a limited period, probably 30 days. As a result, Americans who did not quit the country promptly could find travel elsewhere extremely difficult.

The other procedure is to simply stamp new U.S. passports invalid for travel to Lebanon. Currently, only travel to Libya is officially off-limits. Travel to Cuba by tourists is all but impossible.

Anti-smoking policy misrepresented, USG says

TOLEDO, Ohio (AP) — USG Corp. says its new policy requiring some workers to quit smoking doesn't necessarily mean they will be fired if they don't kick the habit.

The company says the employees must give up smoking because of tests showing that potential harmful effects from mineral fiber used in its nine plants may be greater for smokers.

Spokesman Paul Colitti at USG headquarters in Chicago said Tuesday that reports of the policy have been inaccurate. The company announced last week that workers at its nine plants have five months to quit smoking or they will face losing their jobs, and will conduct lung tests to make sure they are complying.

"We went on to say such situations will be reviewed on a case-by-case basis," Colitti said. "That means what it says — we will look at those situations on an individual basis and act accordingly. Those words were carefully chosen.

"We will not be taking blanket, automatic actions" against smokers.

He also said pulmonary function tests, which are used to determine lung capacity, will not be administered to find out who is still smoking.

"Lung tests will be given to monitor the health of employees, not to say whether or not they're smoking," Colitti said.

The company said the ban covers employees at USG's acoustical products plants in Ohio, Wisconsin, Indiana, Minnesota, Washington, Mississippi, Alabama and Texas. Excluded from the ban are workers at United States Gypsum Co. in Gypsum, Ohio, a subsidiary of USG.

Workers at USG's acoustical tile plant in Gypsum, however, are included in the smoking ban, he said.

Some USG workers say the plan will give them incentive to quit, but others consider it an invasion of privacy.

The ban was established because of mineral fiber used in production of acoustical tiles, Colitti said.

Challenger's cost

It was one year ago today that the space shuttle Challenger, carrying seven astronauts to a rendezvous with the stars, exploded 73 seconds after liftoff as millions of horrified television viewers watched. Although a tragedy of immense proportions, the Challenger disaster was magnified by the fact that 19 years and one day earlier — on Jan. 27, 1967 — three American astronauts were killed in an accident as fire swept their spacecraft on the ground.

But for all the differences in the two tragedies that killed Challenger astronauts Francis R. "Dick" Scobee, Mike Smith, Ronald E. McNair, Ellison Onizuka, Gregory B. Jarvis, Judith A. Resnick and Christa McAuliffe, and Apollo astronauts Virgil I. Grissom, Edward H. White II and Roger B. Chaffee, the resulting investigations in both instances revealed that mistakes were repeated — costly, foolish mistakes.

In both instances, officials for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration were cutting corners and taking shortcuts on the testing of equipment — in effect, compromising safety in the interest of saving time. In both instances, what normally would be considered obvious features to ensure the crews' safety were not employed. And in both instances the results were fatal.

Now, as NASA is working to bring the space program back on track the question still remains: Is the safety of future astronauts getting all the attention it deserves?

Without question the Challenger disaster and the resulting public concern for the inattention to the crew's safety has brought the issue of safety into sharp focus and NASA has followed through by instituting changes designed to slow the pre-launch process and make human safety a primary consideration. For example, NASA has already created an Office of Safety, Reliability and Quality Assurance and taken other steps to stop launches if anything appears to be out of the ordinary.

That and other changes are crucial to the future of the space program, which various polls have indicated the public wants to see continued. But it must be continued with utmost consideration given to the safety of astronauts.

Challenger was a nightmare for the space agency and for the nation as a whole. The lessons it provided about the need for safety, along with avoidance of hurry-up missions, must not be forgotten. The cost of shortcuts is much too high.

Arms deal profits diverted to Mossad

WASHINGTON — Millions of dollars in profits on the Iran/contra arms deal are unaccounted for — and some of the money was diverted to Mossad, the Israeli intelligence service, according to our sources.

Jack Anderson

Congressional investigators are trying to find out if some of the profit made from overcharging Iran wound up going to the Nicaraguan contras and, if so, whether this diversion was legal.

But what the investigators don't know is that, during the secret discussions with the Israelis over the arms sale, it was understood by all concerned that some of the profits would go to Mossad for its undercover operations in Europe and the Middle East. Part of the intelligence "take" from these secretly funded operations was to be shared with the CIA.

"The Israelis always need cash, and especially Mossad," explained one source familiar with the arms deals. "They need fat Swiss accounts to pay off informants and run their intelligence network."

The arrangement would help to explain the Israelis' crucial role in the arms-for-hostages deal. Their enthusiasm reportedly kept the dubious scheme alive when some U.S. officials began to get cold feet.

In fairness to the Israelis, they have for years provided intelligence of incalculable value to the CIA. Mossad's most important information has been on the Soviet Union, where the Israeli secret service has a network of agents whose access and "take" the CIA can't begin to match.

One source, who was close to Lt. Col. Oliver North and was part of the arms-for-hostages operation, said it was understood by North and others that some of the profits would go to Mossad. In fact, an intimate of CIA Director William Casey said he and Casey discussed that understanding early last year.

Casey went along with the secret diversion of money to Mossad, the source explained, because in the past Mossad has undertaken delicate intelligence jobs for the CIA on request. These were clandestine operations that Casey didn't have congressional approval to conduct.

Sources close to North, who was fired from the National Security Council staff because of the alleged diversion of funds to the contras, told us that North held the view that profits resulting from overcharging Iran for the U.S. weapons didn't belong to the federal government. The deals were made overseas, the money was put in a Swiss bank, and the Pentagon and CIA were paid back what the arms cost them. Anything else was up for grabs in North's opinion, according to the sources.

"We knew the middlemen would probably get rich on this," a North associate told us. "But as long as our objectives on the hostages and contacts with Iranian leaders were met, we would be happy."

A classified and revealing CIA "portrait" of Mossad explains the role of this most respected of spy organizations — and also makes clear why its interests should not necessarily be expected to coincide with those of the United States.

"Mossad is responsible for foreign intelligence collection, political action and counterterrorism," the secret report states. "The principal function of Mossad is to conduct agent operations against the Arab nations and their official representatives and installations throughout the world, particularly in Western Europe and the United States. ...

"Mossad is also charged with inciting disturbances calculated to create mutual distrust among the Arabs and to draw Western sympathy away from the Arab cause, and monitoring and counteracting Arab propaganda and detecting and countering Arab terrorism. In the area of counterterrorism, at times the Israelis have carried the fight to Arab terrorists."

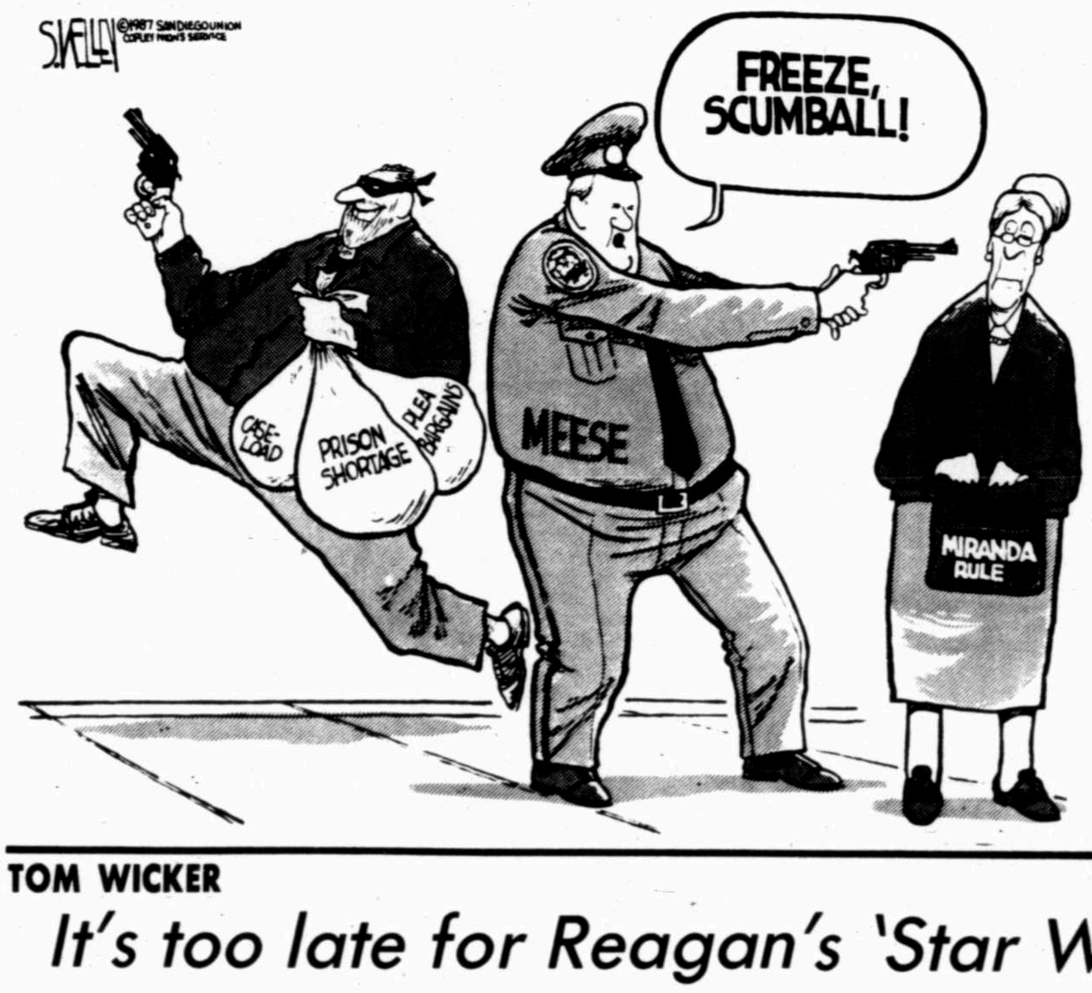

Mossad's overriding function, of course, is "protection of the state of Israel," as the CIA document notes — but as the White House gunrunners apparently forgot.

FOR CHALLENGED KIDS: There's a new unique line of dolls on the market called Hal's Pals. What makes them unique is that each one has a physical handicap: One is in a wheelchair, one in leg braces, one an amputee skiing on a single ski, etc. They are produced by "For Challenged Kids by Mattel Inc.," a not-for-profit corporation, and according to the company, experts feel they are good for all children. Kids with disabilities feel better about themselves, and children lucky enough to have no disabilities gain understanding.

A Washington-based organization called American Pride Corp. hopes to give a Hal's Pal to as many disabled children as possible. Individuals or organizations interested in helping in this effort should call (202) 857-0990 or write to American Pride Corp. at 1155 15th St., N.W., Suite 1108, Washington, D.C. 20005.

Hat on the stick

A frequent scene in old Hollywood westerns depicted a cowboy, crouched behind a huge rock, lifting his 10-gallon hat on a stick to test if there were enemies about. If the hat got riddled with bullets, there were bad hombres out yonder.

Historian Arthur Schlesinger Jr. raised his hat on a stick by urging the United States to follow Brazil's "civilized example" of giving political parties free prime time on network TV. It was in the public interest, he said.

His hat now has more holes than a Swiss cheese.

One critic replied, "Such time would not be free, but would be a multimillion-dollar subsidy to political parties, ordered by politicians, and paid for by the broadcast industry."

Just so.

The networks' business is selling time. Under Schlesinger's plan, instead of a soap commercial that pays for the entertainment, viewers would get political spiels that don't. Besides, soap ads are cleaner than most political campaigns. And by and large, the guy with the "ring around the collar" is more entertaining than the guy with his hat in the ring.

Another critic, recalling his stay in Brazil during its recent election campaign, recognized "the tedium of the incessant, nightly, free political programming." Intelligent Brazilian viewers, he added, dubbed the program the "nightly comedy hour."

One of the bullets in Schlesinger's hat was from a lady who gunned down his view that free political debates would be in the public interest. A free and competitive market spurs networks to air what they think the public wants, she said. The network most successful in this endeavor will capture the largest audience and hence the most advertising dollars.

"If what the public demands is 'Dynasty,' then that is in the public interest," she maintained. That argument is hard to dispute.

The main issue here is who should be the final arbiter of what appears on TV?

Schlesinger is a distinguished scholar with two Pulitzer Prizes, one in history, one in biography. Should people such as he, solely on the basis of academic credentials and literary accomplishments, decide what the public's interest is — or should the public itself decide what it accepts on TV or any marketplace?

With due respect to Schlesinger, the public can best decide what is and what isn't in its interest.

It's too late for Reagan's 'Star Wars' plan

NEW YORK — If a new Democratic Congress were to make a difference in only one thing, it probably ought to be in President Reagan's plan for a "Star Wars" strategic defense. Now the Pentagon is talking of deploying elements of such a defense in the early 1990s — a dubious notion that Congress should dispel promptly and firmly.

Tom Wicker

The motives behind the Pentagon statements, some of them by Caspar Weinberger, the defense secretary, seem plainly political. Promising early deployment might make it more difficult for members of Congress to oppose or cut back Star Wars appropriations. It might also give the project more credibility and momentum within a skeptical public, just when a scandal-weakened administration faces a new Congress in the control of the Democrats.

But no evidence of technological breakthroughs that could speed up deployment has been offered. As recently as last fall, the administration was making arms control offers on its own assumption that strategic defense deployment was at least 10 years away. The weight of scientific opinion outside the administration holds that an effective strategic defense cannot be deployed until well into the future — if ever.

Sens. William Proxmire of Wisconsin and Bennett Johnston of Louisiana — neither can be accused of being soft on defense or military needs — already have voiced strong opposition to the Pentagon's hurry-up offensive. Both are Democratic members of the Defense Subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee.

The two senators said at a news conference that even if partial deployment were feasible for the early 1990s, it would cost far too much — perhaps $100 billion, some experts have suggested. The senators also expressed doubt that the weapons involved could be fully developed so soon, and suggested that the Soviets could counter those weapons relatively cheaply — with fake missiles and decoys, for example, or by attacking the satellites that would control the defensive system.

Just to place those satellites in orbit — an early phase of any space-based defense system — would require bigger rockets than the U.S. will have available for years to come, Proxmire said. And Pentagon officials already are saying that if they move ahead with early Stars Wars deployment, the U.S. will have to retreat from arms control proposals it has placed on the table at Geneva. These are reasons enough for Congress to prevent a Pentagon crash program to bring into being something it could call a strategic defense within the next few years. Another, more important, reason is that the Reagan administration — nearing the end of its incumbency and drastically reduced in public confidence — should not be permitted to commit the nation any further to strategic defense.

Once final, such a commitment would be a dramatic change in strategic doctrine dating back to the Eisenhower administration. It probably would touch off a defensive arms race as costly as the offensive arms race. It would end the prospect for a major arms control agreement any time soon. A fully effective population defense, moreover, probably never will be possible; and it's not even clear that a partial defense or a point defense of American retaliatory missiles would be worth the time and effort to develop and deploy it.

A new president will take office in two years. He may be a Democrat. Even if not, he may have an entirely different view of nuclear strategy, and of the evolution of Soviet-American relations. He may see strategic defense — as former President Nixon does — as a super-bargaining chip to be used in a grand compromise to reduce the Soviets' offensive missile capacity.

Reagan's own proposals to the Soviets — notably his suggestion at Iceland that each side adhere to the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty for 10 years — allowed his successor proper latitude and flexibility. But a crash program to deploy in the early 1990s would limit that successor's national security choices, make it far more difficult to reverse, modify or delay the move to strategic defense and probably foreclose arms control initiatives he might have wished to pursue.

Strategic defense research should continue, both to pursue at an orderly pace the technological possibilities, and to guard against a surprised Soviet "break-out" in defense technology. But why should a Democratic Congress allow Reagan's Star Wars dream, with all its predictable and unknown consequences, to be imposed — like a Supreme Court justice or the current budget deficit — either on his successor or on the American future?

ART BUCHWALD

Suite people can be found in New York!

There have been recent reports that President Reagan's attention span is getting shorter and he keeps wandering away from the subject at hand.

One article written by Martin Tolchin in The New York Times reported Congressman Robert Michel, the House Republican leader, urged the President to support a federal health insurance program for catastrophic illness. Mr. Reagan responded to the request by telling a story about a welfare family living in a plush hotel in New York at enormous cost to the taxpayer. When it was pointed out to the President that health insurance is not a welfare program, Mr. Reagan is said to have repeated the story again.

Art Buchwald

Before anyone comes to any conclusions that the President has changed since the Republicans lost the Senate and the United States lost the contra money in Switzerland, let me say the story of a welfare family living in a plush hotel in New York has been bugging Mr. Reagan for six years.

White House sources say the President is obsessed with finding this family and showing them up for what they are — liberal chiselers feeding at the government trough.

The problem Mr. Reagan has in producing the family is that he heard the story about them second-hand. He can't remember who told it to him, and so he has been forced to instigate a search himself. It's taken up a great deal of his time.

They say the President will sit in his Oval Office late at night studying a map of Manhattan. Then he'll pick up the phone and speak to FBI Director William Webster.

"Bill, did you find them yet?"

"No, Mr. President. But we're thinking of organizing a sting operation and offering free rooms in the Ritz Carlton to anyone now on welfare. We think that way we could smoke them out."

"What about the Plaza, Bill?"

"We've got every room wired and we're giving lie detector tests to anyone who gets on the elevator."

"They have to be somewhere," the President protests. "A welfare family can't just disappear among eight million people in a city like New York."

Mr. Webster says, "The FBI swat team is raiding Mrs. Helmsley's Palace tomorrow."

"Be careful, Bill. A welfare family who lives in a deluxe hotel can be very dangerous."

The President hangs up and buzzes the Air Force command center. "Any photos of the welfare family who are living off the fat of the land?"

"No, sir. Today's satellite pictures show nothing but a string of muggings and a dozen city commissioners being paid off by contractors."

Don Regan comes in, "Mr. President do you want to check over this trillion-dollar budget?"

"Don, if you were a welfare cheat what fancy hotel would you hole up in in New York?"

"How about the Hilton?"

"That's a thought. Why don't we stay there the next time we're in the city. Then when I'm taking a nap Pat Buchanan can hold you up on his shoulders and you can peek over the transoms."

"I think you ought to read this latest Senate report which tells how badly you fouled up on the Iran business."

"What I'd like to do," says Mr. Reagan, "is drag the entire family on television and show the American people what kind of welfare bums are living in our best hotels these days."

"That's fine, sir. Now what do you want to do about the contras in Nicaragua?"

"Fly them up here and have them search the Waldorf Astoria room by room."

Bush calls Iran policy 'debatable'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Vice President George Bush said today the Reagan administration's policy of selling arms to Iran is "debatable," but he stopped short of saying either that he supported the decision or that it was wrong.

"I think history has to prove whether it's wrong," Bush said in an interview on ABC's "Good Morning America."

Asked if he believed the arms sale was wrong, Bush replied: "I think it is debatable, and I think on the surface, you can make the case that it's wrong.

"Having said that, when you look at the whole policy and look at Iran's geographic standing and look at the problems facing them, if a small shipment establishes contact with moderate elements and if it results down the line in a solution to the Iran-Iraq war...I think we could argue that it was right."

"On the surface, selling arms to a country that state-sponsors terrorism, of course, clearly, you'd have to argue it's wrong, but it's the exception sometimes that proves the rule," Bush said.

He said that while the president accepted responsibility for the decision and admitted mistakes were made, there was no need for an apology.

In his State of the Union message to a joint meeting of Congress, Reagan said he has but one "major regret" regarding events of the last year and that is the failure of his initiative toward Iran.

Meanwhile, House investigators are reluctant to promise independent counsel Lawrence Walsh that they will not grant immunity from prosecution to former National Security Adviser Vice Adm. John Poindexter and his former aide, Marine Lt. Col. Oliver North, whose testimony is considered crucial to unraveling the Iran-Contra controversy.

Murdered nun 'willing to sacrifice herself'

NEW YORK (AP) — After four decades of good works, Sister Virginia Thomann heeded a call to counsel homeless men in the South Bronx and found joy in her new ministry. But too soon, death found her.

While in the office of a church-run men's shelter, the 65-year-old Roman Catholic nun was stabbed four times in the neck and died last weekend, just four months after she started work there.

A former shelter resident, Norberto Torres, was arrested Tuesday on charges of second-degree murder in the death. Torres, 19, had been expelled Saturday for violating the rules at My Brother's Place, a three-story brownstone residence, police said.

Grief has gripped Sister Thomann's friends and associates, but they console themselves with the legacy of loving care that survives her.

"She was such a gentle person, so warm and so caring," said Sister Mary Pauline Bilbrough, regional director of Sister Thomann's religious order. "She was a hard worker. And she did a lot of work in her lifetime."

Sister Thomann joined the Order of the Good Shepherd in 1945 and spent her life fulfilling her vows of human service at child- and health-care centers in Philadelphia. She worked for seven years, until last fall, caring for ailing Jesuits in an infirmary at their residence, the Loyola Center in Philadelphia.

"She was constantly thinking of others — not just the sick but everyone around her," recalled Sister Mary Inez Fitzpatrick, head of the 13-bed infirmary. "She was unique in her willingness to sacrifice herself."

She read a Catholic magazine's feature article on My Brother's Place, shelters in Brooklyn and the South Bronx for young, homeless men. She visited the Bronx shelter in September.

Within a month she joined the three other staff members living at the shelter, working as receptionist and bookkeeper and organizing voluntary religious services for the 12 residents, all recovering alcoholics or drug addicts.

"She was one of the most beautiful people I have ever met — a very, very spiritual person," said Sister Patricia Moore, a fellow staff member.

A small and soft-spoken woman, Sister Thomann attacked her work with great spirit, Sister Moore said.

NATION in brief

Jobs more important than school to more teen-agers

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. (AP) — Studies often take a back seat to jobs for high school students who want cars to keep up with their peers, and the apparent trend has some educators worried.

"It's almost like being addicted to drugs," said Don Bishop, principal at Red Bank High School. "It's an overriding desire to have a car despite all other things. They're not grown up or not accepted unless they have a car."

Students who log long hours at work may show a decline in classroom performance, said Don Loftis, Hamilton County school superintendent.

Up to half the system's 3,500 juniors and seniors work, many at full-time jobs, Loftis said this week. While after-school employment is usually constructive, he warns that some students overdo it.

"I hate to say, 'Don't work.' It's a valuable experience in dealing with people that we can't give them at school. I don't want to kill off their initiative.

"Still their main job is to go to school and learn something. Their secondary job is taking way from their main job," he said.

Old fossil traces found

EUGENE, Ore. (AP) — The oldest fossil traces of land creatures ever discovered have been unearthed in Pennsylvania, according to a report in a scientific journal.

No complete fossil was found at the site, estimated to be 438 million to 448 million years old, University of Oregon geologist Gregory Retallack and Harvard student Carolyn Feakes reported in the Jan. 2 issue of the journal Science.

The evidence found near Potters Mills in central Pennsylvania consisted of a series of burrows left by small, hard-shelled creatures that may have resembled modern millipedes, the researchers said.

The oldest land creatures previously known were believed to have been millipede-like animals dating from 414 million years ago and found at sites in Scotland and Wales.

Retallack and Ms. Feakes said their findings suggest that creatures large enough to be seen by the human eye may have evolved on dry land earlier than current evidence would indicate.

Condom ads criticized

DETROIT (AP) — A television station that broke the industry's tradition of rejecting advertisements for condoms reported Tuesday that viewer reaction was critical by a 2-1 margin.

Two 30-second advertisements for LifeStyles condoms were broadcast Monday and early Tuesday, and the ABC affiliate plans to run the ad twice later this week, said Jeanne Findlater WXYZ vice president and general manager.

"We were the first TV station in the country to do this," Findlater told The Associated Press. "We let it be known a year ago that we thought such advertising was appropriate for television, and we would be interested in carrying them."

American television stations have rejected condom advertisements in the past, citing questions of taste and a desire not to offend viewers with religious objections to contraception.

But stations in Indianapolis and Boston have said that they intend to run such ads, and a San Francisco television station aired a 15-second condom commercial Tuesday night after President Reagan's State of the Union address.

Arson blamed in prison fire

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Arson has been blamed for a smoky blaze that routed hundreds of inmates, caused fights among prisoners and guards and prompted some convicts to set fire to outdoor picnic tables to stay warm, authorities said.

Officials initially said Tuesday's predawn fire appeared to be an accident, but a city investigator said later it was set.

"We've ruled out all natural and accidental causes," said Assistant Fire Chief Kevin Mellott. He did not speculate about who might have set the first of several fires.

At least 25 inmates and three guards were injured from fighting or suffered smoke inhalation before the initial fire and several others were extinguished, said Thomas Seiverling, spokesman for the 105-year-old State Correctional Institution at Pittsburgh.

Inmates hurled bricks at firefighters as they battled the blaze, officials said.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Conditions forecast for 7 PM Wednesday

Fair skies anticipated

From Staff and Wire Reports

The National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport is calling for fair skies and mild temperatures for Thursday. The high is predicted to be near the 70-degree mark. Winds will be out of the northeast at 10-20 mph.

A low in the middle 40s and fair skies are forecast for tonight. Winds will be out of the west at 10-20 mph.

Tuesday's high of 77 was three degrees below the record high set for that date in 1970. Today's 41-degree low was 31 degrees above the record low set in 1948.

STATE

Heavy fog dropped visibility to virtually zero in Houston, Beeville and Victoria today, and the National Weather Service said traffic could be hazardous until mid-morning along the upper and middle Texas coast.

East and Southeast Texas had light and variable winds early today. Winds were light and northerly for the low Rolling Plains and North Central Texas, but southerly at 5 to 15 mph for the rest of the state.

Temperatures overnight were mainly in the 30s across most of West Texas. Elsewhere, readings were mainly in the 40s. The mercury early today ranged from 39 at Marfa in the Davis Mountains to 59 at McAllen in the Rio Grande Valley.

The weather service said it should be generally fair to partly cloudy through tonight except for widely scattered thundershowers in Southeast Texas.

NATION

A Pacific storm pushed inland today, spreading snow, rain and high winds, while snow was scattered across the Midwest and low temperatures prevailed across the East.

Rain, with snow in the mountains, extended from southern California to Oregon and Washington.

Elsewhere, snow was scattered from the southern Appalachians across the Ohio Valley to the Great Lakes. Snow was mixed with freezing drizzle in southern Michigan and northern Indiana.

Low temperatures held their grip on the eastern half of the nation, with early-morning readings from 11 degrees below zero to the single digits common from the middle-Atlantic Coast region across upstate New York to northern New England. Temperatures dipped into the 20s to 30s in the Southeast.

The Pacific storm prompted a heavy snow warning for the Cascade and Siskiyou mountains of western Oregon.

Council OKs contracting out maintenance

By RICK BROWN
Assistant City Editor

City Council Tuesday approved a plan to contract out the maintenance of 395 city vehicles, a move that means a yearly savings of over $100,000 and could portend future city maintenance contracts with the private sector.

The "privatization" plan also means that three or four city auto shop employees will either be given jobs in shops run by Tuesday's successful bidders or elsewhere in city services, Assistant City Manager Mike McGregor said today.

District 1 City Councilman David Godfrey said this morning that the move could be the first of many privatization contracts the city may sign, a development that he supports philosophically.

"I would much prefer that private industry preform the services for the city if they can do it competitively," Godfrey said.

Other areas the council is investigating for privatization are city hall and parks maintenance, trash collection and landfill operations, he said.

Whether actual contracts emerge from the proposals "will depend on whether private industry can do it more cost effectively than city employees," Godfrey said.

Primary beneficiaries of the cluster of contracts approved Tuesday were the local offices of U-Haul, Inc., which was awarded a total bid of about $151,000 for vehicle drive-train and electrical maintenance.

"I would much prefer that private industry preform the services for the city if they can do it competitively."
— Councilman David Godfrey

Big 3 Tire, Inc. of Midland also was awarded bids totalling about $39,000 for brakes, shock absorber and wheel alignment maintenance.

Had the city auto shop handled the vehicle maintenance, costs would have topped $291,000, city administrators had estimated.

The 395 vehicles involved in the contracts include about 150 police cars, McGregor said.

In other action Tuesday, the council presented a citation of appreciation to outgoing City Manager Jim Brown, and City Secretary Bill Clanton administered the oath of office to incoming City Manager Fred Poe.

Poe, the current deputy city manager, is scheduled to assume the duties of Brown's office Feb. 1.

Also Tuesday, the council:

— approved spending approximately $620,000 for a computerized well control system for city water wells contained in the Paul Davis Well Field, located about 22 miles north of the city limit.

— approved on second reading an ordinance to annex land for the proposed Executive Airpark north of the city limits.

— approved issuance of almost $50,000 in matching funds to organizations that use city parks and recreation facilities. Many of the funds will go toward improvements such as additional lighting or rest room facilities at city parks.

— approved issuance of an alcoholic beverage permit to owners of a new bar and restaurant, Club Soda, planned for the Polo Park shopping center on Loop 250. Dissenting in that vote was District 2 Councilmember Oralia Corrales.

— approved a oil and gas well permit applied for by GCO Drilling of Midland. Ms. Corrales also dissented in that vote.

The council also heard a report from David Thayer, director of the Bid Center, on progress at the center, which helps Midland businesses apply for government contracts.

The center earlier this month received $35,000 in funding from the city.

Rural routes are on the way out with the postal service planning to give numbered addresses this summer to homes in the county.

Address system to replace rural routes

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

Up to five minutes could be cut off response time by ambulance and sheriff's deputies once the U.S. Post Office begins to replace rural routes with numbered addresses this summer, law enforcement officials say.

Fire Department Communications Supervisor Richard Kolas said the address system could knock off from three to five minutes in response time.

"The hard part now is trying to get directions. We have to sit here and take directions over the phone and relay those to people responding," Kolas said.

Sheriff Gary Painter said the addresses will allow his deputies to respond faster to calls in the county.

Post Office Customer Relations Manager Stan Sartain said, "It will certainly help the county sheriff and fire department readily locate people."

In early summer the postal service expects to begin numbering about 4,400 mail boxes in the 14 rural routes around Midland, Sartain said.

About 6,000 people live in rural Midland, but 30 percent of these already have numbered addresses in the newer developments, Sartain said.

The change in addresses from rural routes could take up to two years, said Postmaster Bill Williams.

The change will be a big help, said Fire Chief James Roberts.

"It's a great idea. Most of our directions now...it takes a lot of time. But our dispatchers are trained to keep asking until they get good directions," Roberts said.

A man's life might have been saved several years ago with an address system when law enforcement officials were unable to locate a trailer after a man shot two people, Roberts said.

The man called the sheriff's office, but left the trailer before giving directions, Roberts said.

About nine hours after the call, the trailer was located when a woman, who was shot, came to, and called law enforcement officials. The woman survived, however, another wounded man was dead when officers arrived, Roberts said.

"We don't know if we could have saved the guy that had been shot," he said.

Along with allowing sheriff's deputies or an ambulance to get to rural homes quicker, the postal service will be able to sort and deliver mail faster, Williams said.

Man convicted of forging check gets probation

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The judge suggested that the bookkeeper might have a "death wish" when he forged his landlady's $22,108 U.S. Treasury tax-refund check and deposited the check in a newly opened savings account.

The teller at Vista Savings in Odessa was suspicious, told the Odessa bookkeeper that the savings institution would put a hold on the check for 30 days and opened the account. The U.S. Secret Service investigated the matter.

"That's one of the more stupid things you could do," U.S. District Court Judge Lucius D. Bunton told the 32-year-old bookkeeper, Randy Cornell Howard. "I sometimes wonder if you have a death wish."

Bunton on Tuesday placed Howard on a probation for five years, committed him to spend not more than 90 days to the Alternative House II, a halfway facility in Odessa, and ordered him to pay the landlady, Ella R. Rogge, $727.91 in restitution to compensate her for the interest on the money she would have earned had she placed the money in an interest-bearing account.

Howard, who had asked the court for mercy, said he had forged and deposited the check because he needed the funds to help pull him out of a financial bind.

"I have several clients who went bankrupt on me," he explained, "and that threw me into a financial frenzy. I have regretted doing it as soon as I dropped the check off," Howard said. "I asked the wife to forgive me and Ms. Rogge to forgive me." Howard had received Ms. Rogge's mail at the house which he was buying from her in a lease-buy plan.

His attorney, Robert Sykes, said Howard was willing to make amends "as you (the judge) direct." The lawyer also said that Howard had gotten involved in "circumstances beyond his control," had fallen into a financial bind, and "succumbed to the temptation." The lawyer also said Howard has had problems with his personal checks bouncing "because his (former) employer's checks were insufficient."

But the judge told the self-employed bookkeeper that "writing hot checks (is) not the way to handle money problems."

Howard told the judge that he already had discontinued writing checks and was handling his affairs on a cash basis.

"Maybe you know your own problems," Bunton told him.

The judge also warned Howard that were he to violate terms of probation. "I'm going to sentence you to the whole five years.

"It's not a threat; it's a promise."

In an earlier case out of the Pecos Division in Pecos, Bunton sentenced a 30-year-old Columbus, Ohio, man to 10 years in prison after the man, Mark Kohler, had pleaded guilty to possessing 3,049 pounds of marijuana.

Kohler was arrested Sept. 22 in Rio Grande Village in Big Bend National Park by U.S. Border Patrol agents and Park Rangers, who became suspicious over the heavy-ladened motor home which Kohler was driving. The U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration investigated the case.

In sentencing Kohler, Bunton said that Kohler's motivation was "greed."

Kohler was represented by San Antonio attorney Jerry Goldstein.

Lobby spokeswoman protests tort reform

She says reform could be threat to public

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Tort reform would make it more difficult to remove dangerous and defective products from the market place, thus threatening the public safety in Texas, a spokeswoman for a consumer lobbying group said today.

"Manufacuturers of dangerous products and chemicals, toxic waste dumpers and their insurers have joined in the concerned public relations and lobbying campaign in each of the 50 states, including Texas, to intimidate legislators into immunizing manufacturers from suits by closing the courthouse door to burned, blinded or paralyzed consumers, preventing them from recovering their losses," said Jessica Shahin of Public Citizen, a Washington D.C.-based consumer lobbying group.

During an early morning news conference at Midland County Courthouse, Ms. Shahin displayed dozens of allegedly dangerous or defective products which have been removed from the market place or modified as a result of product safety lawsuits.

She was in Midland to protest tort reform, advocated by nation's corporations and insurance companies.

Among what she called the "Dangerous Dozen" were Agent Orange, A.H. Robbin's Dalkon Shield, toxic substances such as asbestos and untested drugs like DES. Also included are common household goods, easily opened containers of poison, flammable baby pajamas and defective baby formula.

"Jury awards forced the manufacturers to remove these dangerous products from the market place or to modify them" said Ms. Shahin, "but today the big business insurance companies want to change the rules. They call their plan tort reform. We call it tort deform."

She said measures will be introduced in the Texas Legislature to "deny full compensation to victims, to allow liable parties to hide behind each other and to remove legal penalities for corporate misconduct for the manufacture and marketing of unsafe products, risking public health and safety.

"The 'Dangerous Dozen' are examples of why product liability laws are needed to protect the public," Ms. Shahin said.

Ms. Shahin said consumer-initiated lawsuits, not regulations, nor morals, nor new technology caused the products to be removed from the market place or to be modified.

She pointed out that A.H. Robbins stopped manufacturing the Dalkon Shield and recalled it only after lawsuits forced them to.

In addition, Ms. Shahin displayed a 1971 model pickup with a gasoline tank located behind the seat.

She said customers complained about injuries received in rear end collisions when the bed was pushed forward into the cab as early as 1956.

"It took federal regulators 17 years, or until 1973, to order the tank be moved from the cab," she said.

Ms. Shahin said consumers "can't rely on federal regulators to protect them from unsafe products. They are too slow and too often controlled by politics.

Ms. Shahin said Texas lawmakers are expected to consider changes in civil liability laws advocated by manufacturers and the insurance industry.

Included among them are limits on pain and suffering awards, limits on punitive damages and the elimination of joint and several liability.

She said the reforms "wouldn't solve the real problems, which are negligent behavior and poor product design.

"We don't need tort reform," she said. "Our system of civil justice has evolved over the last 200 years to give consumers the tools that they need to drive dangerous products from the market place."

The group advocates insurance reform rather than reform of the judicial system, she said.

GARY OTT

Being unattached good way to lose those extra pounds

Ott

A friend I hadn't seen in several months dropped by the office the other day and it suddenly occurred to me that he had put on a little weight around the old gut.

I asked him about it.

"Got me a girlfriend," he said.

That was all he needed to say. There is something about a relationship, at least the early phases of it, that will add three or four inches to your waistline.

For whatever reason, involved people eat better than those who are unattached.

When you think about it, it makes sense.

A new couple is sitting around the apartment watching TV when one of them, who has become slightly bored with the program, says, "Want something to eat?"

"Sure," the other says.

They then go to the kitchen, whip up 18 tacos, a dozen or so buritos and, if they are particularly hungry, maybe scramble up eight or nine eggs.

They enhale it all in record time and then pass out on the couch.

The excess poundage forms overnight.

If a single person, on the other hand, is watching the same TV program and gets a craving for food, he will go to refrigerator, open the door, stare at some leftover bean dip that has started turning green and suddenly realize he is really not all that hungry, after all.

As a result, he will sometimes go days without eating. He smokes a lot, instead. He may die of lung cancer, but fat ain't going to get him.

I speak from experience on this subject. Over the years, I have been a member of both categories.

Before I was married, I was a skinny little thing, often resembling a toothpick with longish hair and big feet.

After a couple months of marriage and countless plates of French toast drenched with maple syrup, a not-so-subtle lump had formed on the middle of the toothpick.

When that ill-fated experiment ended, the lump began to subside.

Since then, depending on my degree of involvement, the lump has taken turns growing and shrinking.

It is not a particularly healthy situation, of course, but it does make shopping for clothes an intriguing experience.

What is needed here is some sound advice for those who find themselves temporarily unattached and, yet, harbor no immediate plans to die of starvation. Here are three helpful hints on how to add a lump to that toothpick of yours:

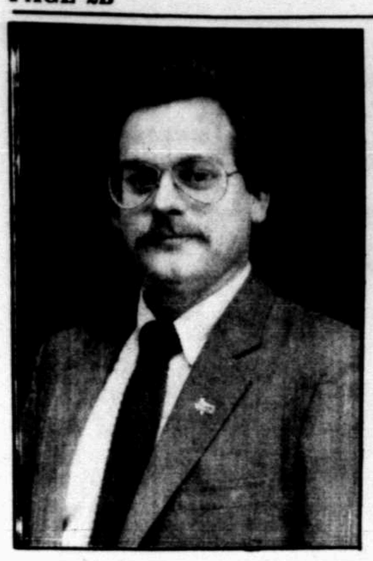

1.) Learn to cook. I realize this is drastic action, but if you start off slow you can do it. Step No. 1: Find the kitchen. It is usually a small room off to the side of your house or apartment. It's where you keep the beer. Got it? Good. Step No. 2: Purchase something fancy, like maybe a box of frozen fish sticks. Step No. 3: Take them out of the box (that's very important) and place them in the oven. Step No. 4: Turn it up full blast.

Step No. 5: Smoke three cigarettes and then remove the fish sticks from the oven. Step No. 6: Dig in. Step No. 7 (optional): If they don't taste right, smother them in green bean dip.

2.) Learn where the nearest Burger King is to your home. Teach your car to get there automatically. Whenever you feel the slightest hunger pang, regardless of the hour, go to your car and order it to drive directly there. Buy two whoppers, three large fries and a couple of milkshakes. Consume them immediately and then go straight to bed. Do not exercise. A nice little lump should start forming in no time.

3.) Stand in front of your bathroom mirror and practice making sad faces. If you can get tears to form on command, that's even better. Repeat this over and over. Now add a whining sound. Once this has been mastered, go to a married friend's house and watch the family eat. If they don't ask you to join them, whine louder.

Sprayberry: Ad brings 'good repsonse'

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Former Justice of the Peace Charles Sprayberry said Tuesday response has been good to a newspaper advertisement asking for information about perjury committed during his trial for attempted sexual assault.

Sprayberry, 46, was convicted in April of last year of assaulting his former secretary in April 1984. He was sentenced to four years probation and $2,000 restitution.

The former magistrate said he took out the ad in the Odessa American "so that the truth will come out."

Sprayberry said he had received several calls since the ad, discontinued at the urging of his father, was placed last Thursday.

"I am looking into some of the information," he said.

He was asked who committed perjury in his trial.

"A lot of people testified as to what they were supposedly told," he said. "The persons that testified firsthand I know perjured themselves repeatedly."

Sprayberry said he has been unable to talk to the Midland County grand jury about his allegations, and said officials, including District Attorney Al Schorre, have wrongly ignored him:

"There is very little interest from officials in office; there are several players."

Schorre bristled at Sprayberry's accusations.

"He did ask us to look at some material, I looked at it, and can find no grounds for doing anything," he said.

He said the "material" was transcripts from the trial.

Sgt. David Cobos, Crime Stoppers coordinator, said he was upset when he found out that the ad had run with the programs' telephone number without his permission.

"He approached me last Friday and asked about the possibility of using Crime Stoppers in his investigation," Cobos said. "He wanted to publicize the fact that he would pay the reward for the indictment and conviction of someone connected with his case.

"He asked if he could do it and I told him no," Cobos said.

The ad also contained the main Midland County number and Sprayberry's number.

Cobos said Crime Stoppers is interested in all crimes, but he said only those crimes that are "index crimes" — officially reported to police — are considered appropriate.

"Here, there was speculation on his part that a crime has been committed," he said. "Plus, he said he wanted information about the indictment and conviction, and we only deal with information that leads to the felony indictment."

Cobos said Schorre called him and told him about the advertisement that ran last week in the Odessa American.

"I called the Odessa American," Cobos said. "They read me the ad over the phone, and I told them he did not have permission to use the Crime Stoppers number."

Sprayberry said when he found out about Cobos' objections, he changed the ad, then cancelled it. But, he said he hopes some new information about his case will come to light.

After his conviction, Sprayberry agreed to a deal with special prosecutor Andy Shuval who guaranteed him probation. In return, Sprayberry agreed to drop a motion for a mistrial and waive his right to appeal.

SENTENCE

The federal prosecutor, Assistant U.S. Attorney Tom McHugh of El Paso, noted that defendants in drug cases often are represented by "high-priced attorneys."

"More often than not, they are mules" — mere haulers of narcotics and other drugs for peddlers.

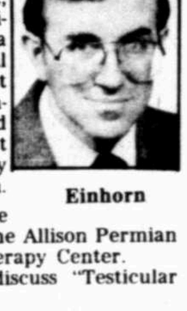

In an illegal alien case, Bunton sentenced Cruz Bustamante-Morales, 29, of Andrews to one-year in prison for entering the United States after he had been deported. Bustamante-Morales was arrested in Andrews last year after he got involved in a fracas and subsequently was convicted in state court of aggravated assault.

Speaking through an interpreter, he told the judge that he had returned to the United States to join his wife and child who both are U.S. citizens.

"I can't blame you," said the judge.

AUSTIN — Delegates to the annual Texas Farmers Union convention in Austin this week are to propose "bold new solutions" to farm problems, said TFU President Joe Rankin of Ralls.

The convention is keyed to the theme "New Directions for Agriculture — A Future for Family Farmers."

"The picture we paint of agricultural problems and solutions can best be done if we (farmers) unite in one voice," Rankin said.

He said that 1987 "will truly be a the turning point for the future of American agriculture — especially the family farm.

"The 1985 Farm Bill, with market-clearing prices and decreasing loan and target prices, has hastened the collapse of the agricultural economy," Rankin said. "Our policy statement must propose bold new solutions."

Handicapped burglary victim hopes TV recovered

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Neighbors have brought Norman Huron food, cleaned his house and a locksmith has replaced locks on the doors of his house and car.

But Huron, a paraplegic, was the victim of a burglary. Thieves took a stereo, television and video recorder and his specially equipped car.

Huron has his car back and now hopes he can get his other valuables.

"Everything's going good. They replaced the locks and my neighbors are still coming by looking in on me, bringing me food, but they've got their own lives to lead," Huron said Tuesday. "I wish I had my TV or something. I'm just sitting here doing nothing," he said.

Huron said he has lived in the same house 24 years and doesn't want to move despite the robbery.

Early Saturday, Huron was awakened by a man standing over him and brandishing a knife. The man slashed Huron's left hand, took $60 from his wallet and a television, stereo and video recorder from the living room.

"He made some comment that he had been in prison and that life had been horrible to him," Huron said. "I got the impression that he had been drinking and he looked like he was about to cry. The whole thing was like a Twilight Zone movie."

The thief also took the keys to Huron's car and was shocked when he got inside the 1971 Camaro.

Rudd says Legislature no longer considering one-year budget

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The once-ballyhoed suggestion that lawmakers use a one-year budget to help solve the state's fiscal crisis appeared dead Tuesday with negative comments Gov. Bill Clements and House Appropriations Committee Chairman Jim Rudd.

"There was some thought that in some way a one-year appropriation makes the problem easier," Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby said after a Legislative Budget Board presentation to the Senate Finance Committee. "In fact, it makes it worse."

Because they meet in regular session only once every other year, legislators traditionally write a budget for the next two fiscal years. The 70th Legislature now is working on appropriations for fiscal 1988 and 1989.

Banking on the economy improving by 1989, Clements and some lawmakers had considered writing only the fiscal 1988 budget now and returning next spring to finalize 1989 spending. The thinking was that waiting for an economic upturn could ease some of the pressure to boost taxes or cut spending to solve the projected $6 billion deficit.

But LBB Director Jim Oliver told the Finance Committee Tuesday that lawmakers would have to make 30-percent greater cuts or raise 27 percent more in new taxes if they take the one-year approach. The problem is the $1.03 billion fiscal 1987 deficit, which the Legislature must take care of no matter which option it chooses.

"When it boils down to it, the question is whether you're going to swallow a $1 billion egg in one year or in two years," said Sen. Ray Farabee, D-Wichita Falls. Sen. Roy Blake, D-Nacogodoches, called a one-year budget "not practical."

Rudd, D-Brownfield, said House leaders have reached the same conclusion. "I can honestly say that it's not being considered."

Reggie Bashur, Clements' press secretary, said the governor's budget staff had prepared a similar one-year vs. two-year study for Clements. "I don't think he's going to push for it," Bashur said.

Farabee added later that Clements always has the option of calling a special session to re-write the second year of the budget, but he believes the state benefits from the traditional two-year plan.

"It does cause us to project out and say, 'Where are our colleges going to be not only next year but the year after?'" Farabee said. "We look at other human services such as the mental hospitals and programs for the retarded and we say, 'Where we will be not just next year but two years from now?'"

Insurance chairman to stay on board

By JIM WARREN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — At the urging of Gov. Bill Clements, State Board of Insurance Chairman Lyndon Olson Jr. will stay on the board during the legislative session, partly to oversee possible reforms in insurance regulation and tort law.

Olson, whose term expires Saturday, has been talking with Clements "over the last several weeks" and agreed late last week to remain as chairman of the powerful regulatory agency.

For the last year, Olson has said publicly that he wanted to leave the board when his term expired so he "could enter the private sector." He also had said he wanted to become more involved in politics, something he had to limit because of his quasi-judicial post.

"Gov. Clements talked to me about it, and for a number of reasons I decided to stay on through the session and maybe through whatever special sessions we have," Olson said Tuesday. "There's a lot to do."

Former Gov. Dolph Briscoe, in one of his last appointments, put Olson on the insurance panel at the end of 1978 to fill an unexpired term. Clements, a Republican, reappointed Olson, a moderate-to-conservative Democrat, in 1981 to a full six-year term.

Olson is recognized nationally as an expert on reinsurance practices and international insurance trends and often is featured in national business and industry publications. He currently represents the United States on insurance issues at the United Nations and other international forums.

Insurance industry representatives and political observors describe Olson as a blunt, outspoken critic of many insurance practices. "I've made the insurance industry mad, consumer groups mad, got the trial lawyers mad and probably other people too," he said.

Olson is responsible for many of the regulation reforms set up by the three-member state board, which has been an example for other states to follow.

Associates expected Olson to work as an insurance consultant or as a representative of an international reinsurance company like Lloyds of London when he left the board. But Clements convinced him to stay and work with lawmakers on tort and insurance reforms.

"Some of the things that have been done in other states haven't helped the liability (insurance) problems," Olson said. "I've seen some of the reforms exasperate the problem. This will give me input into what is needed to restore predictability" to the the civil justice system and to the insurance industry.

STATE IN BRIEF

Fog results in 38-vehicle pile up

RICHMOND (AP) — Heavy fog and two parked cars on Texas Highway 90 contributed to a 38-vehicle pileup early Tuesday that injured 16, officials said.

Hundreds of cars were backed up before officials had cleared the highway, about an hour after the pileup was reported, authorities said.

There were no deaths but three people suffered fractured bones, said officials at the Fort Bend Community Hospital and Polly Ryon Memorial Hospital in Richmond where the injured were taken. Thirteen others were treated for relatively minor injuries and released, the hospital officials said.

The pileup occurred at about 7:46 a.m. west of Richmond in the eastbound lane of traffic, sheriff's dispatcher Jeanette Garcia said.

It began when two cars were involved in a minor accident, she said. The motorists involved parked their cars off to the side of the highway while they exchanged names and discussed possible damages, she said.

Due to heavy fog, other motorists did not notice the cars were parked and collided into them, the dispatcher said. That prompted a chain reaction that involved a total of 38 vehicles in 11 separate accidents, she said.

Sanctuary worker ordered to prison

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — A federal judge Tuesday ordered Stacey Lynn Merkt, a worker in a sanctuary movement for aliens fleeing political upheaval, to begin serving a six-month prison sentence.

Ms. Merkt, once a worker at the Casa Oscar Romero in San Benito, a refuge house for illegal aliens from Central America, was sentenced to prison in March 1985 after being convicted of conspiracy to transport illegal aliens.

U.S. District Judge Filemon Vela denied her motion to reconsider the sentence on Jan. 13 and ordered her to surrender Thursday. He ordered Ms. Merkt to serve 179 days in prison, followed by three years of probation.

Her first conviction stemmed from an arrest in 1983 at a Border Patrol checkpoint in Jim Hogg County with a nun, a newspaper reporter from Dallas, and three illegal aliens from El Salvador. That conviction was later overturned.

A second conviction stemmed from charges she bought bus tickets for five Salvadoran aliens in November 1984 and allegedly drove them to the bus station in McAllen. She was acquitted on the transporting charge, but was convicted of conspiracy.

Doctors cleared in malpractice suit

LUFKIN (AP) — Two doctors were cleared by a jury of malpractice in a $19 million lawsuit that alleged the men were negligent in connection with a girl born with brain damage.

The jury deliberated about three hours Tuesday in State District Judge David Walker's court before voting 11-1 in favor of obstetrician-gynecologists Richard Huddleston and Michael Arnold.

David and Annette Davis claimed in the lawsuit the doctors were negligent in the care and treatment of Mrs. Davis during the labor and delivery of their daughter, Erin, on July 20, 1982. The doctors, who were filling in for Mrs. Davis' regular doctor who was out of town, denied all allegations, saying they had given Mrs. Davis the best treatment possible.

The child was born with brain damage and suffers from cerebral palsy, epilepsy and mental retardation, according to testimony.

Bridge players at the Fall North American Championships in Atlanta had a surprise visitor. Omar Shariff was in the country on a promotional tour, and he took a few days off to play some bridge. It did not take him long to come up with a pretty defense in the Swiss Team event.

After a strong no trump opening bid by South and a Jacoby Transfer Bid by North, South became declarer at a contract of two hearts. Sharif led the queen of spades, which by agreement asked his partner, Tannah Hirsch, president of Goren International, Inc., whether he liked the suit or not. East's deuce was discouraging, Declarer won the ace, crossed to the king of diamonds in dummy and tried a low trump to the nine and king. Sharif ducked smoothly!

Not surprisingly, declarer continued with a trump to the ten, and the hand collapsed. East won the jack and shifted to the queen of clubs. Declarer took his ace, then used a club ruff as the entry to the table for a diamond finesse. Sharif was delighted to win the queen. Declarer's failure to play on spades made it a certainty that East held the jack, so the hand was an open book. Sharif cashed the ace of trumps and then reverted to a club, forcing the table's last trump. The defenders took the rest of the tricks for down two.

At the other table North used the Stayman Convention over his partner's one no trump opening bid, and as a result Sharif's teammates ended in a contract of two spades. They made nine tricks in that contract, so the Sharif team gained 6 International Match Points on the hand. Had they done as well on the rest of the boards, they would have won the event!

Four reporters, photographer win Heywood Broun Award for work

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two months that four reporters and a photographer spent living on the streets of Dallas, eating in soup kitchens and sleeping in shelters has paid off with a $1,000 Newspaper Guild award.

Three of the five winners accepted the 1986 Heywood Broun Award at a luncheon on Tuesday at the National Press Club.

The five-member Dallas Morning News team produced a special report on the plight of the hungry and homeless in Dallas in a 16-page Thanksgiving Day report.

The team included reporters David Tarrant, Melinda Henneberger, Leslie Pound and Dan Barreiro and photographer David Leeson. All but Ms. Henneberger and Barreiro, who has left the Dallas paper and now works as a columnist for the Minneapolis Star and Tribune, attended the luncheon, Guild spokesman Philip M. Kadis said.

The five "put faces on the anonymous and revealed an unhidden but invisible world," said the Broun award judges, who noted that the report brought a deluge of contributions for the homeless.

The judges for the 46th annual award were James Polk, an NBC News investigative reporter; Juliet O'Neill, senior correspondent in the Canadian Press Washington bureau; and Ray Jenkins, editor of the Baltimore Evening Sun's editorial page.

Broun, whose concern for the underdog and the underprivileged was reflected in newspaper columns published in the 1920s and 1930s, was the Guild's founding president. The award is given for outstanding individual journalistic achievement in Broun's spirit.

H. Ross Perot

NEW YORK (AP) — Texas billionaire H. Ross Perot is putting on hold his proposal to move the Museum of the American Indian from New York to Dallas.

Perot on Tuesday came out in favor of having the museum remain in New York City if it could be housed at the former U.S. Custom House in Lower Manhattan.

The 71-year-old museum is located in three places in New York, making visits difficult, said Roland W. Force, its president and director.

Legislation is expected to be reintroduced in Congress to allow use of the vacant, 460,000-square-foot Custom House, Force said.

Perot, a Texas entrepreneur, offered $70 million two years ago to move the financially troubled museum.

Billy Joel

WASHINGTON (AP) — Billy Joel's anti-suicide plea has been cited by the Congressional Arts Caucus, which gave the singer-songwriter its annual award for cultural contributions.

Joel, a five-time Grammy Award winner, received the award from the caucus, composed of nearly 200 lawmakers, at a Capitol Hill luncheon Tuesday.

"He is a model and inspiration to struggling young musicians — as well as all people — that success depends on a unique combination of talent, hard work and dedication," said the caucus chairman, Rep. Thomas J. Downey, D-N.Y., adding that Joel's most powerful song was the anti-suicide plea aimed at young people in "You're Only Human."

BURBANK, Calif. (AP) — Paul Newman, who enjoyed critical success in "The Color of Money" for Walt Disney Pictures' Touchstone Films, has signed a three-year contract with the company for movie development and production.

The non-exclusive agreement provides that Newman will develop film properties in which he will direct, star, or both, said Disney Studios chairman Jeffrey Katzenberg and president Richard Frank.

Neither the number of projects nor the titles have been determined. No dollar amount for the contract was disclosed. Disney will provide Newman with a New York office, the officials said recently.

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (AP) — Liberace is gravely ill from anemia, emphysema and heart disease but resting comfortably at his home here, a publicist says.

The flashy 67-year-old pianist, known by the trademark candelabra atop his piano, was under the care of doctors at his desert home, according to a statement by New York publicist Denise Collier.

"It is my great regret to inform you that Liberace is gravely ill with pernicious anemia, complicated by advanced emphysema and heart disease," she said Tuesday.

"Liberace is resting comfortably at his home...and is sincerely appreciative of the hundreds of get-well wishes and prayers he has received from his fans."

Asked if Liberace's illness was a complication of AIDS, Collier said: "All I know is this statement. He's only being treated for emphysema and heart disease. It seems to me that all this is heavy enough."

Liberace's manager, Seymour Heller, angrily denied persistent reports that Liberace has AIDS, including a story in the Las Vegas (Nev.) Sun. The newspaper based its report on unidentified sources.

"The statement (from Collier) is it. There is nothing else, and anything else is vicious rumor," Heller said Tuesday.

NEW YORK (AP) — Chrysler Motors Corp., whose commercials feature upbeat, patriotic images, says it wants to drop out as a sponsor of ABC's controversial "Amerika" miniseries next month about Soviet domination of the United States.

The automaker said Tuesday it had reached its decision after reviewing six hours of the 14½-hour program.

"The subject matter and its portrayal are so intense and emotional that our upbeat product commercials would be both inappropriate and of diminished effectiveness in that environment," Chrysler said in a statement from Detroit.

In New York, ABC said it was "disappointed that Chrysler has requested that we sell off their commercial time" and said it would try to accommodate the company. But the ABC statement said Chrysler "will continue to be responsible for their commercial order."

Industry sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Chrysler had ordered about 25 percent of the commercial time available for the program scheduled in seven episodes Feb. 15-22. A Chrysler spokesman, Dennis Lopez, would not say how much time the company had ordered.

Dollar dives anew

LONDON (AP) — The dollar fell sharply in Europe early today in absence of a decisive move by West Germany's central bank to halt the plunge. Gold bullion rose to around $416.50 in response to the dollar's weakness.

Currency traders in Frankfurt said there was no sign of market intervention by West Germany's Bundesbank in the first hour of trading as the dollar fell to a new six-year low of 1.7915 marks.

The dollar fell further in later dealings, hitting 1.7830 marks, down from 1.8160 marks late Tuesday. The dollar had briefly slipped below the psychologically significant 1.80-mark barrier Monday for the first time since 1979.

Midmorning dollar rates compared with levels in Europe late Tuesday:

—1.7905 West German marks, down from 1.8160

—1.4990 Swiss francs, down from 1.5248

—5.9805 French francs, down from 6.0600

—2.0195 Dutch guilders, down from 2.0465

—1,270.25 Italian lire, down from 1,290.50

—1.3392 Canadian dollars, down from 1.34485

The British pound rose to 1.5425 dollars, up from 1.5310 dollars.

The dollar fell against the Japanese yen for a third consecutive day on the Tokyo Foreign Exchange Market, closing at 151.20 yen, down from Tuesday's closing of 151.95 yen. Later, in London, the dollar fell further, to 150.75 yen.

Traders in Frankfurt and Tokyo said the dollar's fall would be even steeper if were not for concern over the possibility of concerted intervention by Japanese and European central banks.

Gold bullion rose, and a London dealer said, "The buying is coming purely on the back of the weaker dollar."

London's five biggest bullion houses fixed a recommended midmorning gold price of $416.50 a troy ounce, up from $411.40 late Tuesday.

Gold traded at a bid of $416.70 in Zurich, up from $411.50.

Dow hits new record

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market bounced back strongly Tuesday, catapulting the Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks to a new closing record as it resumed its impressive early-1987 rally.

Traders said investors jumped back into the market with renewed vigor, recovering confidence that had been badly shaken by Friday's wild session.

The closely watched Dow Jones average climbed 43.17 points to a new record close of 2,150.45, topping the previous high of 2,145.67 set Thursday.

The rise by the blue-chip average, coupled with Monday's modest gain, erased Friday's loss of 44.15 points. However, it did not not come close to Friday's intraday high of around 2,210 points, which preceded an unnerving 110-point plunge by the market's best known indicator.

Reorganization claims 50 Midland jobs

From Staff and Wire Reports

Corporate reorganization — two words that continue to strike fear in the hearts of oil industry workers everywhere — will claim another 50 Midland jobs in the next six months. Fifty of 130 local Cities Service Oil & Gas Corp. employees will be retired, relocated or terminated as a result of an Occidental Petroleum Corp. restructuring announced Tuesday.

The net reduction of 50 positions locally is nearly 10 percent of the worldwide total of 450 jobs to be cut in the consolidation, which will take at least six months to complete, says Linda Hauser, a company spokesman in Tulsa.

Hauser said that notices of termination, eligibility for early retirement and offers of relocation were made Tuesday as part of the restructuring notification process.

Employee decisions on whether to participate in early retirement programs or accept transfers are expected to take some time and it could be as long as six months before all job changes are made, Hauser said. Workers may be transferred into Midland as well as out of the area in the restructuring, but the net impact is expected to be 50 positions.

Terminations will also affect the Occidental Oil & Gas Corp. operation in Bakersfield, Calif. and Cities Service activities in Denver, where a 90-person office is being closed; in Jackson, Miss., where the work force is being cut from 120 to 70; as well as in Midland.

The administrative offices of Occidental Oil & Gas Corp. will be moved from Bakersfield to Tulsa, with about 75 positions transferring to a new Tulsa headquarters for the subsidiary, said David A. Hentschel, chairman of Occidental Oil & Gas.

Los Angeles-based Occidental Petroleum Corp. took over Cities Service in 1982. Occidental Chairman Armand Hammer said in November the exploration and production work of the companies would be consolidated.

Under the consolidation program, Cities Service will continue to conduct Occidental's domestic oil and gas exploration and production activities. Another Occidental subsidiary, Occidental Oil & Gas Corp., will conduct international domestic oil and gas exploration and production.

In Bakersfield, the Occidental Oil & Gas Corp. work force will be reduced from 600 to about 400, said Oxy spokesman Ron Peters.

Worldwide, the two Occidental subsidiaries' combined employment level will be reduced to 8,600 as a result of the consolidation, Peters said.

He said about 70 positions will be eliminated in Tulsa, but the establishment of the new administrative offices will create an equal or greater number of jobs.

"The net effect on the work force in Tulsa will be a slight increase," he said. "We feel it's very positive that Tulsa has been selected as the headquarters, because if the oil industry does turn around and improve, that can only mean good things for Tulsa.

"Because of the restructuring, we now have in place the work force we need to go forward in this very competitive environment," he said.

Hammer said in November that an estimated 300 staff jobs were expected to be cut because of the consolidation as areas of duplication were identified.

Before merging with Occidental, Cities Service employed 21,650 people including 4,500 in Tulsa. Since 1982, employment has dwindled to about 4,000 with 1,800 Cities Service Oil and Gas Corp. employees remaining in Tulsa.

J.M. Huber office closing cuts 16 jobs

From Staff Reports

Closing of J.M. Huber Corp.'s district exploration office in Midland will result in an additional 16 lost local jobs by this fall, according to district exploration manager Bill Enis. "Ten workers have been terminated, four will be transferred to Amarillo, two will retire and we will have a one-man production office left," Enis said.

Enis, one of the two retirees, will man the local Huber office until September.

Former exploration and production offices in Denver and Oklahoma City are also being closed, leaving district offices only in Amarillo and Houston, Enis said.

Economist says 1987 will be better

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

A former Midland banker-economist believes Texas and the Midland-Odessa area will will see a better year economically in 1987 than they did in 1986.

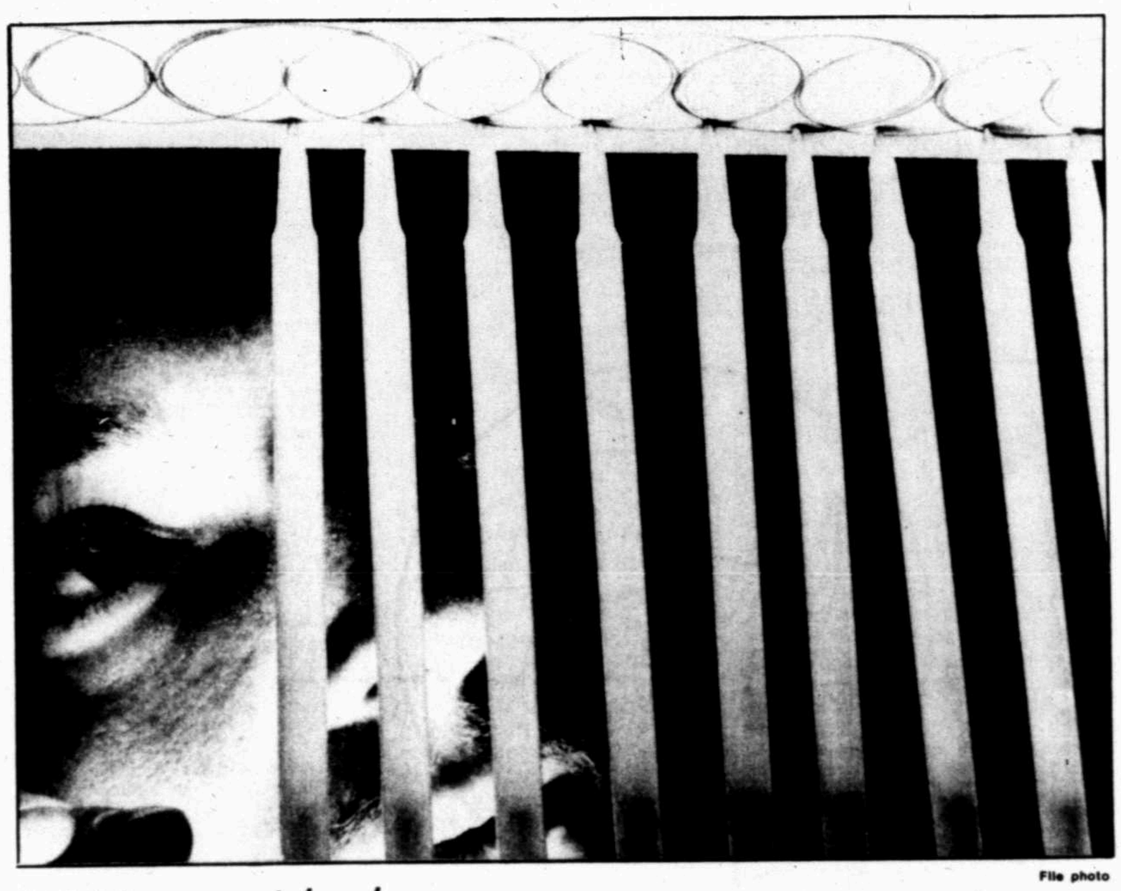

Dr. Michael Williams, a senior vice president with MBank in Austin who was formerly a vice president with RepublicBank First National Midland, thinks "the Texas economy is turning right now," in the first quarter of 1987. He believes the state will see growth on the order of about three percent this year.

Addressing members of the Permian Basin Economics Club Tuesday noon at Mission County Club, Williams, citing his belief in the importance of the health of the U.S. econonmy to the state and local areas, expressed the belief there will be "more impetus from the U.S. economy in 1987" than there was in 1986.

Williams described the national recovery as "the third longest Postwar recovery that we've had," having lasted about 50 months.

Leading U.S. economic indicators, he said, "were up 1.2 percent in the month of November and that was the sharpest rise we've had since January 1985." Williams noted durable goods sales nationwide were up

Tax changes don't mean end of IRAs

By DEANNA J. NEAL
Business/Oil Writer

Individual Retirement Accounts (IRAs) took America by storm when the Internal Revenue Service made them a retirement savings option in 1981. Under 1987 tax law, however, they may lose much of their allure as millions of middle- and upper-income workers already covered by company pension plans will no longer be able to deduct IRA contributions.

All taxpayers may make contributions to an IRA account until April 15 of this year, and still deduct them from their 1986 gross income.

But the rule changes for 1987 by no means spell the end of IRAs. Despite the changes, moderate income individuals and couples will still be able to deduct IRAs in 1987 and subsequent tax years, whether or not they are covered by a pension plan:

- If adjusted gross income (AGI) is less than $25,000 a year — $40,000 for married couples filing jointly — IRAs remain fully deductible; or,
- If AGI is between $25,000 and $35,000 for single taxpayers — $40,000 and $50,000 for joint filers — the deduction is phased out proportionately as AGI increases.

The other historic benefit of IRAs — retirement planning value — is not affected by changes in tax rules.

Linkletter: Texas will survive oil crunch

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Television personality Art Linkletter told more than 1,000 people at the annual Corpus Christi Chamber of Commerce banquet they will survive the severe energy crunch that has hit Texas and will be better for it.

"Failing is where you learn," said Linkletter, who said he was an abandoned, "throw away" child who was reared by a Bapist preacher and his wife.

"Speaking as an experienced business man who has had his lumps, things will come back and grow," Linkletter said Tuesday night in his address to the coat-and-tie crowd familiar with the economic lumps that falling oil prices have left on the Corpus Christi-area economy.

The "down depths" have almost always strengthed the businesses that survive, said the former host of the defunct "People are Funny," radio and television show whose investments include oil and gas exploration in Oklahoma, Texas, Louisiana, Alaska and Argentina.

"I've been very poor and quite rich," Linkletter said. "Rich is better in every way I can think of. You can't buy happiness, but you can buy a Rolls Royce to drive while you look for happiness."

Linkletter suggested that businessmen keep a good attitude to guide them through tough economic times. He said he does not believe that low oil prices will be a death blow to the energy industry because it is essential.

He lamented the stripper wells being plugged, the rigs being stacked, but added that people who hang in there will reap the rewards.

"I'm drilling. I'm buying land," Linkletter said.

Linkletter characterized Corpus Christi as an ideal-sized city with room, a good climate and opportunities.

Wage increases in 1986 less than 1985

WASHINGTON (AP) — American workers received wage increases averaging 3.5 percent in 1986, down from the 4.4 percent average a year earlier, but more employers gave lump-sum bonuses instead of higher weekly paychecks, government figures show.

For the fourth year in a row, non-union workers in 1986 won larger percentage wage gains, 3.6 percent, than union members, 2.1 percent, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported Tuesday.

But unionized workers earn more, and BLS analysts said there was little indication that the dollar gap between union and non-union workers was narrowing significantly.

That average gap was $104 per week in 1985, with weekly earnings for union members averaging $419, compared with average weekly earnings of $315 for non-union workers. Figures on those comparisons in 1986 have not yet been released by the government.

Also, about 40 percent of the workers covered in major collective bargaining settlements negotiated in 1986 received lump-sum bonuses ranging up to $4,000, the bureau said. Those lump-sum payments also are not included in its wage calculations.

Teachers continued to enjoy the largest average pay gains, 5.9 percent last year on top of the 6.1 percent increase they received in 1985. State and local government workers were second with pay raises averaging 5.4 percent in 1986, compared with 5.6 per cent the previous year.

Workers in private industry received pay increases averaging 3.2 percent in 1986, down from 3.9 percent the previous years.

Manufacturing workers, however, fared better in 1986 than those in the rapidly expanding service sectors of the economy — just the opposite of what occurred in 1985.

BUSINESS BRIEFS

USX Corp. losses mount in last quarter of '86

PITTSBURGH, Pa. (AP) — USX Corp. announced a fourth-quarter loss of $1.42 billion, contributing to a record annual loss of $1.83 billion that was attributed largely to steel plant closings.

The quarterly deficit, equivalent to $5.55 per share, came on sales of $2.8 billion. The per-share loss for the year was $7.46 on sales of $14.9 billion. The steel division alone lost $1.17 billion for the quarter.

Most of the $1.37 billion in steel operating losses for the year were generated by $1.03 billion in fourth-quarter charges. The charges were largely due to planned shutdowns at 12 long-idled plants as agreed under a tentative contract with the United Steelworkers union, analysts said.

Tentative pact reached by Greyhound drivers

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. (AP) — Union leaders representing more than 6,000 employees of Greyhound Lines Inc. voted overwhlemingly to recommend acceptance of an agreement with the Dallas-based investment group that plans to buy the bus company.

Members of Joint Council of Greyhound Unions voted 22-2 Monday to support "the basic concepts" of a contract proposed worked out during five days of meeting with the group headed by Dallas businessman Fred Currey.

Union leaders said they had recommended acceptance of the offer even though it would slash wages by as much as 20 percent.

Bell earnings slide in Southwest, up on coasts

NEW YORK (NYT) — Southwestern Bell, based in St. Louis, said its fourth-quarter earnings slipped 3.8 percent, to $221.6 million, or $2.22 a share, from $230.4 million, or $2.31 a share, in the 1985 period. Revenues in the latest quarter fell slightly, to $2.01 billion from $2.03 billion.

Revenues for the entire year, Southwestern said, were almost unchanged at $7.9 billion, compared with 1985's $7.93 billion. Earnings rose 2.7 percent, to $1.02 billion, or $10.26 a share, from $996.2 million, or $10 a share, in 1985, helped by a $100 million drop in operating costs.

The Nynex Corp. and the Pacific Telesis Group reported higher fourth-quarter profits.

Analysts said the reports from these three regional telephone holding companies, all created at the breakup of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, were in line with their estimates of earnings, considering year-end charges and adjustments.

Owner Rob Humphries says it is a complete 18 hole miniature golf course. "Some holes have electronic obstacles, and others will have fixed obstacles you have to go around."

The center will book parties, and will offer a wide array of candy and soft drinks. "I don't plan any snacks (such as nachos or hamburgers) at first," Humphries said. "I plan to schedule league or tournament-type activity for different age groups," he noted. "It all depends on what the customers tell me they want.

THE EXECUTEL MOTEL, 100 Airport Plaza, is getting new owners, a new look and new name.

Pearson Hospitality Group of Salt Lake City, Utah, took over the hotel Dec. 1, 1986, and will spend approximately $150,000 in renovations, according to new general manager Steven Howard. And in early February, the motel will become the Best Western Airport.

"We're putting in new carpeting, redoing the pool and the parking lot, the lights in the parking lot, redoing some of the rooms, and painting the exterior — just an overall renovation," Howard said.

Pearson has nine hotels, including three Hiltons, but this is their first hotel outside the state of Utah. "We're real excited about being in Texas," Howard said.

Howard and new sales and marketing director Rox Ann Olsen plan a grand opening for the renovated motel in March.

5.9 percent in November and non-defense capital goods, which tend to be a barometer of the health of durable goods orders, was up seven percent in the month of November.

Inflation seems to be remaining low level primarily due to energy prices, Williams stated. Consumer prices were up 2/10ths of one percent in the month of December, while producer prices for the month were unchanged, he said. For the whole of 1986, producers prices moved downward 2.5 percent, which was the first decline in producer prices in 23 years and the steepest drop in producer prices in 37 years, Williams said.

More good news on the U.S. economic front was the decline in the unemployment rate, from 6.9 to 6.7 percent, "the lowest since March 1980," he stated.

Williams noted there has also been a drop in the unemployment rate in Texas, as well as the Midland-Odessa area. He believes the local area will continue to see improvement in its employment numbers, "though some of the improvement will be due to the out-migration of people as well as growth of the Texas economy."

Forecasts show, Williams, said, "Texas will soon become the second most populous state in the nation." He observed that "more population means more consumers and basiclly means more sales than we have." He noted that consumer consumption has been the primary motivator of the recovery at the national level and indicated Texas can expect comparable benefits.

"With 7.5 million people," Williams said, "Texas ranks third in the nation in the number of employees, only 440,000 behind the State of New York."

Expressing the belief that "the Texas economy is diversifying," Williams said the efforts are directed toward "such stable areas as tourism, military spending and so forth."

Another favorable point for Texas in the area of diversification efforts, according to Willams, is that Texas remains one of the lowest cost areas for businesses. "I've also seen a lot of activity of foreign investors coming to the Texas area, buying up land and real estate because they're anticipating Texas is coming back," he stated.

Williams says foreign investors are not restricting themselves "simply to real estate. They're buying up factories and other real assets in the State of Texas because they basically feel like it's a bargain," he said.

As Williams sees it, most new jobs in Texas "can be expected to come from displaced oil industry workers starting up small businesses in an attempt to take control of their own economic destinies," he stated.

"It is small businesses that contribute the most to economic growth and jobs," Williams said, observing that statistics show 58 percent of all new jobs come as a result of small businesses.

Economic Club President Jim Williams, a principal in Texas Business Forecasts, a consulting firm, announced Dr. Dennis O'Brien, senior economist for Caltex Petroleum, will address the February meeting of the economics club.

WAGE

The Labor Department said pay increases for service workers were dampened by the 1.3 percent average wage gains in the deregulated transportation industry, including large pay decreases among airline workers.

The size of raises also dropped sharply in the finance, real estate and insurance businesses, from an average 9.2 percent in 1985, to 2.8 percent last year.

Meanwhile, many employers in 1986 continued to provide lump-sum bonuses in lieu of large wage increases to union members.

In a separate report, the Labor Department said first-year pay raises for the 2.5 million workers covered in major collective bargaining settlements signed in 1986 averaged only 1.2 percent, rising to an average 1.8 percent annual increase over the usual two- or three-year lives of the agreements.

That is down from first-year increases averaging 3.5 percent and contract lifetime annual average increases of 3.2 percent in the previous labor pacts covering those workers.

But bonus increases partially offset smaller wage gains or even decreases in some cases, the government said.

For example, most of the steel industry contracts negotiated last year included wage and benefit decreases. However, they also included bonuses ranging from 50 cents to $1.75 an hour.

Similarly, in the aerospace industry, the Boeing Co. negotiated with the Machinists union last fall for bonuses amounting to 12 percent of a worker's earnings for the year.

"By and large, those payments are being offered to entice union members to accept what are still concessionary contracts," said Richard Belous, a labor economist for the Conference Board, a business research group. "The sweetener for management is that when contracts are negotiated the next time, the increases then are figured on lower wage scales."

In addition, non-wage benefits such as pensions usually are calculated from the wage scale in most union contracts. By keeping those scales down, employers also are able to save on other, non-wage labor costs.

John Zalusky, an economist for the AFL-CIO, said the labor federation's members averaged $12 in wages and $5.98 in negotiated benefits per hour in September, compared with average wages of $9.77 and benefits of $3.35 per hour for non-union workers.

"Union workers tend more to be in jobs that they intend to make careers of," he said. "That means that non-wage benefits for them such as longer vacations and pensions are more costly."

While employers are becoming more enchanted with lump-sum payments, Zalusky said unions are becoming more resistent to them. He predicted they will fall off in popularity "in time" just as two-tier wage scales won by employers in the 1981-82 recession began disappearing in some of the contracts negotiated last year.

IRAS

Even for taxpayers who do not qualify for a contribution deduction, the new tax law maintains one sizeable advantage: taxes are still deferred on interest and other earnings on an IRA until the time of distribution.

After the 1986 tax year, most taxpayers will enjoy less flexibility in choosing a retirement plan. And they won't be able to salt away as much tax-deferred income as in the past.

The 1981 IRA law allowed individuals to place the lesser of 100 percent of their earned income or $2,000 per year into special accounts. Savers did not have to pay taxes on either contributions to the IRA or earnings that accumulated until they began withdrawing, in most cases at the age of fifty-nine and one-half. However, Congress has designated 1986 as the last year many taxpayers may make deductible IRA contributions.

Legislators say they want to make sure that people use tax-deferred plans for retirement — not just as savings accounts or shelters for income.

JOBS

After Occidental took over Cities Service Co. in a $4 billion merger, Occidental retained the Cities Service Oil and Gas Corp. exploration and production arm of the company and sold the Citgo refining and marketing division to Southland Corp. of Dallas.

About 850 Citgo employees remain in Tulsa, a number roughly equal to those who worked in refining and marketing before Cities Service was purchased by Occidental, said Citgo spokesman Kent Young.

In the most recent previous staff reduction, Cities Service officials announced last July that 150 positions would be eliminated system-wide. About 90 of those jobs were eliminated immediately, 30 of them in Tulsa.

The company cut 530 jobs, 430 of them in Tulsa, in an organizational streamlining announced in September 1985. Most of those job eliminations were in the domestic exploration and production areas.

A CHINESE NEW YEAR CELEBRATION FEAST

Share in the spirit of the Chinese New Year's festival this January 29th by planning a celebration feast.

This festive and easy to prepare menu uses classic Oriental seasonings and cooking techniques to transform American favorites—pork and rice—into a traditional Chinese buffet.

Our centerpiece entree features elegant and distinctive "Glazed Pork Tenderloins." The glazing is deliciously easy with bottled Teriyaki Baste & Glaze. The Oriental flavor of these succulent tenderloins is heightened by the addition of crushed anise seed and cloves.

It's no surprise that versatile pork, nutritious and flavorful, is one of the favorite meats of China. Pork is now leaner and meatier with more protein and fewer calories. In fact, an ounce of lean cooked pork has only about 70 calories.

Serve hearty portions of tender and fluffy white rice with the main dish. Rice always plays an important role in every Chinese New Year's celebration. In fact, the Chinese set aside an entire day of the New Year to commemorate the first planting of rice.

Known for centuries as a symbol of good luck in China, rice is also recognized worldwide for its nutritional value. Rich in complex carbohydrates and low in sodium and fat, rice contains a mere 82 calories per half cup.

Following tradition, a "Mustard-Soy Dipping Sauce" is served with the pork. Be sure to try a small taste first. If hot mustard isn't for you, try a sprinkling of naturally brewed Soy Sauce right on the pork.

A graceful "Cucumber Fan Salad" surrounds the sliced tenderloins. The authentic Chinese dressing features sesame seed, cayenne, vinegar, and naturally brewed soy sauce. The taste of brewed soy sauce guarantees a spritely dressing so tantalizing you'll know why the Chinese have relied on brewed soy sauce as their premier condiment for centuries.

We've included another classic banquet dish, "Cashew Pork Stir-Fry". Preparation has been simplified by using bottled Stir-Fry Sauce. There's no need to measure or mix, because everything you need for an authentic tasting sauce is right in the bottle.

What New Year's feast would be complete without a fried rice dish? Try our favorite recipe for "New Year Fried Rice". A combination of crispy diced bacon, green onions, sweet red pepper, green peas, golden egg and cooked rice; it virtually sparkles with color and flavor.

Savor the happy ending of your feast and the beginning of the Year of the Hare with an adaptation of a famous Chinese banquet dessert. "5-Precious Rice Pudding" is named for its five key ingredients—rice, pineapple, raisins, ginger, and red cherries.

Happy New Year!

GLAZED PORK TENDERLOIN

2 pork tenderloins, about 3/4 pound each
1/2 cup Teriyaki Baste & Glaze
1/4 teaspoon anise seed, crushed
1/4 teaspoon black pepper
1/8 teaspoon ground cloves
*Mustard-Soy Dipping Sauce

Place tenderloins on rack in shallow foil-lined roasting pan; tuck thin ends of each tenderloin under. Combine teriyaki baste & glaze, anise, pepper and cloves; brush each tenderloin thoroughly with glaze. Bake in 325°F. oven 1 hour, or until meat thermometer inserted into thickest part registers 160°, brushing occasionally with glaze mixture. Remove from oven and let stand 15 minutes. Cut across grain into thin slices and serve with Mustard-Soy Dipping Sauce. Makes 4 to 6 servings.

*Mustard-Soy Dipping Sauce: Blend 2 tablespoons dry mustard with 1 teaspoon each distilled white vinegar and water to make a smooth paste. Cover and let stand 10 minutes. Thin with enough naturally brewed Soy Sauce to dipping consistency.

CASHEW PORK STIR-FRY

3/4 pound boneless lean pork
1 tablespoon Stir-Fry Sauce
3 tablespoons vegetable oil, divided
2 stalks celery, cut diagonally into 1/2-inch slices
1 onion, chunked
1 large green pepper, chunked
1/4 pound mushrooms, sliced
2 medium tomatoes, chunked
1/4 cup Stir-Fry Sauce
1/4 cup salted roasted cashews
Hot cooked rice

Cut pork across grain into thin slices; combine with 1 tablespoon stir-fry sauce. Heat 1 tablespoon oil in hot wok or large skillet over medium-high heat. Add pork and stir-fry 3 minutes; remove. Wipe out pan with paper towel and heat remaining oil in same pan over high heat. Add celery, onion and green pepper; stir-fry 2 minutes. Add mushrooms and stir-fry 2 minutes longer, or until vegetables are tender-crisp. Add pork, tomatoes and 1/4 cup stir-fry sauce. Cook and stir only until tomatoes are heated through. Just before serving, sprinkle cashews over pork and vegetables and serve with fluffy rice. Makes 4 to 6 servings.

CUCUMBER FAN SALAD

2 large cucumbers
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon sesame seed
2 tablespoons vegetable oil
1/8 teaspoon ground red pepper (cayenne)
1/4 cup distilled white vinegar
2 tablespoons sugar
1 tablespoon naturally brewed Soy Sauce

Trim and discard ends off each cucumber, then peel lengthwise with vegetable peeler to form stripes. Cut each cucumber in half lengthwise; remove seeds. Slice each half crosswise into 1-inch pieces. Score each piece crosswise, making cuts close together to within 1/4-inch of edge. Place cucumber in bowl and sprinkle evenly with salt; let stand 30 minutes, tossing occasionally. Meanwhile, toast sesame seed in small dry skillet over medium-high heat. Remove from heat and stir in oil and red pepper; cool. Blend vinegar, sugar and soy sauce; stir into sesame-oil mixture. Rinse cucumber pieces, drain and pat dry; return to bowl. Pour dressing over cucumbers and toss to coat well. Cover and refrigerate 1 hour, stirring occasionally. Remove cucumbers from dressing. Gently spread each piece to form a fan and arrange on serving dish. Makes 6 servings.

5-PRECIOUS RICE PUDDING

1 package (4-1/2 oz.) egg custard mix
2-1/4 cups milk
1 can (8 oz.) crushed pineapple in juice
1-1/2 teaspoons vanilla extract
3/4 teaspoon ground ginger
2 cups cooked rice
1/2 cup seedless raisins
Whipped cream
Maraschino cherries

Combine custard mix, milk, pineapple and juice, vanilla and ginger in large saucepan; cook according to package directions. Remove from heat and stir in rice and raisins. Divide equally into eight 1/2-cup custard cups; cool slightly. Refrigerate at least 1 hour, or until thoroughly chilled. To serve, run knife around edge of each cup and turn out onto dessert plate. Garnish each pudding with dollop of whipped cream and maraschino cherry. Makes 8 servings.

NEW YEAR FRIED RICE

3 strips bacon, diced
3/4 cup chopped green onions and tops
1/3 cup diced red bell pepper (optional)
1/4 cup frozen green peas, thawed
1 egg, beaten
4 cups cooked rice, chilled
2 tablespoons naturally brewed Soy Sauce

Cook bacon in wok or large skillet over medium heat until crisp. Add green onions, red pepper and peas; stir-fry 1 minute. Add egg and scramble. Stir in rice and cook until heated, gently separating grains. Add soy sauce; cook and stir until thoroughly heated. Serve immediately. Makes 4 to 6 servings.

FIVE STEPS TO PERFECT RICE

1. Carefully measure the amounts of rice and liquid.
2. Time cooking accurately.
3. Keep the lid on tightly during cooking.
4. At the end of the cooking time, if the rice is not quite tender or the liquid is not totally absorbed, cook 2 to 4 minutes longer.
5. When the rice is cooked, fluff with a fork to allow steam to escape and to keep the grains separate.

HOW TO PREPARE PERFECT RICE

Use the easy-to-follow directions on the rice package or follow this simple recipe and chart.

Combine 1 cup rice with indicated amount of liquid in a 2 to 3-quart saucepan. If desired, add 1 teaspoon salt and 1 tablespoon butter or margarine. Heat to boiling. Stir once or twice. Lower heat to simmer; cover tightly. Cook as directed below.

1 cup Uncooked Rice	Liquid	Cooking Time	Yield
Regular-Milled Long grain	1-3/4 to 2 cups	15 min.	3 cups
Regular-Milled Medium or short grain	1-1/3 to 1-1/2 cups	15 min.	3 cups
Brown	2 to 2-1/2 cups	45 to 50 min.	3 to 4 cups

Stuffed chicken rolls ideal for buffet

By NANCY BYAL
Associated Press

Stuffed chicken rolls are my specialty for entertaining. Each plump, golden roll equals one serving portion so they're convenient for buffet dining. I've tried many fillings but this one made of Boursin cheese with garlic and herbs is the one my guests seem to like best. The cheese is available in the dairy case in most supermarkets.

When my schedule calls for a make-ahead, I pound, stuff and roll the chicken breasts, then cover and refrigerate them for several hours. I add the crumb coating just before baking so it stays crispy.

CHEESE AND HERB STUFFED CHICKEN

2 whole medium chicken breasts (1½ pounds), skinned, boned and halved lengthwise
5-ounce package Boursin cheese with garlic and herbs, softened
1 tablespoon all-purpose flour
¼ cup shredded carrots
¼ cup coarsely chopped walnuts
¼ cup snipped parsley
⅓ cup fine dry bread crumbs
2 tablespoons grated Parmesan cheese
2 tablespoons margarine or butter, melted

Place each chicken breast half, boned side up, between 2 pieces of clear plastic wrap. Using the flat side of a meat mallet, pound lightly, working from center to edges to form a 5½-inch square. Remove plastic wrap.

In a small mixer bowl beat together Boursin cheese and flour until smooth. Stir in carrot, walnuts and half the snipped parsley. Place one-fourth of the cheese mixture on each chicken breast half; fold in 2 sides and roll up jelly-roll style. Press edges to seal.

In a small bowl combine remaining parsley, bread crumbs and Parmesan. Brush chicken rolls with melted margarine; roll in coating mixture. Place rolls, seam side down, on a wire rack in an 8 by 8 by 2-inch baking dish. Sprinkle with any remaining coating mixture. Bake in 350-degree oven for 40 to 45 minutes or until tender and golden. Makes 4 servings.

Food innovations part of trend

Associated Press

A movement toward a new breakfast club, packaging innovations and more attempts to improve on nature with things such as non-caloric fat, are among the items noted in Better Homes and Gardens analysis of trends for food in 1987.

According to the magazine, Americans may find breakfast time the only part of the day left for scheduling family time or business meetings. Informal on-the-run meals still outsell the rest, though.

At-home convenience foods let people turn out speedy, full-blown breakfasts. Consumption of frozen breakfast entrees jumped more than 12 percent between 1983 and 1985.

New package designs are creating big changes in the supermarket. The magazine says to watch for more plastics, paper and foil.

Science will continue to hunt for no-consquence foods. Here are three items now being tested. Developed in Japan, new sodium-free salty peptides promise not to have the chemical taste of most salt substitutes. Yet another sugar substitute, L-sugar, adds sweetness without calories because it passes through the body without being absorbed. And, non-caloric fat, known as sucrose polyester (SPE), has the same texture, taste and melting qualities as butter fat and vegetable oil, but no calories.

WHAT'S COOKING

Salad-making talents win girl awards

By MYRA SALCEDO
Lifestyle Writer

Kent Porter/Reporter-Telegram

Amy Dossey

Amy Dossey, a Greenwood seventh grader, has an accomplishment she can be proud of — a prizewinning taco salad. After winning her division of the Midland County Food Show, the 12-year-old recently competed in the 4-H District Food show in El Paso and won third place.

Amy, daughter of Terry and Shirly Dossey, said, "I entered my taco salad in the main dish category because it had enough of the main food groups in it — meat, dairy and vegetable. It was more than just a salad."

Amy is no stranger to the art of salad making. Two years ago she won a blue ribbon for her fruit salad in a Midland County Food show. In a previous show, the Method Demonstration in the spring, Amy demonstrated her technique for making a garden salad to judges. Jill Pronger, Midland County extension agent, said, "For her method demonstration, Amy received 195 points out of a possible 200. This was very good."

"What I liked best about going to the demonstration was the contest itself," Amy said. "It was fun demonstrating the salad for the judges — a little scary — but mostly fun."

Pronger said there is a lot more involved in entering a food show than one might think. "The judges are very technical about the nutritional knowledge required. Entrants must also prepare a ten minute speech for the method demonstrations, be able to plan a full day's menu and write a brief paragraph on what the project has taught them for the food shows."

Amy said that aside from being fun, her recent food project was a real learning experience for her.

"The project helped me learn about what a person with diabetes can and can't eat. I also accomplished the task of cutting up a chicken and learned the techniques in cake decorating," she said.

Amy has been active in Midland County 4-H for three years and said the cooking classes are her favorite activity. As a result, she spends a lot of time in her kitchen at home making tuna casseroles or baking pies and cakes. Last Halloween she won a ribbon from her school for cake decorating.

One of the biggest fans of her cooking is her 2-year-old brother,Eric.

"He doesn't cook yet, but he likes to stand by me and pretend he is cooking," Amy said.

Amy's other interests include practicing cheerleading or listening to pop music.

"She also participates in community service activities," Pronger said, "such as decorating muffins to be served to senior citizens and helping with fund-raisers for 4-H."

Amy included her winning recipes for Taco Salad and Fruit Salad.

TACO SALAD
1 pound ground chuck
1 package taco seasoning mix
1 10-oz. package cornchips
1 head of lettuce, chopped
6 oz. cheddar cheese
1 tomato, chopped
1 small onion, chopped

Brown ground chuck in skillet, stirring until crumbly. Add taco seasoning, mixing according to package directions. Layer corn chips, lettuce, cheese, ground chuck, tomato, green pepper and onion. Alternate in large bowl until all ingredients are used. Serve with corn chips.

NOTE: Taco Salad can be topped with sour cream or avocado dressing.

FRUIT SALAD
1 large can fruit cocktail
1 large can pineapple
1 large can pears
2 or 3 oranges, peeled and sliced
2 eggs, beaten
2 tablespoons, vingegar
2 tablespoon butter
2½ cups marshmellows
1 cup whip cream
1 teaspoon of vanilla

Empty fruit into colander and drain well. Cook eggs, vinegar, sugar and butter for a few minutes while stirring. Let cool. Add marshmellows and fruit mixture. Add whipped cream and vanilla. Stir and pour into chilled bowl. Cover and place in refrigerator for two to four hours.

Why make fiber an important part of your diet? According to the National Cancer Institute, a diet low in fat and high in dietary fiber may reduce chances of getting cancer. So reports the flyer Good News: Quick and Easy Tips to A High Fiber Diet.

The four-panel publication answers basic questions about our need for fiber, and it supplies some ideas for including bran in everyday menus. Straightforward and clear, the flyer also includes tips about fiber for the calorie-conscious.

In addition, the flyer will tell you where you can obtain a recipe collection that focuses on bran and other high fiber foods and assists folk who want to design a high fiber diet.

Sauce won't trade speed for flavor

Associated Press

Some days there just isn't time to give an Italian-style tomato sauce the long, slow cooking that's traditional, so you trade authenticity for speed.

But you don't have to trade flavor for speed when you make this off-the-shelf main dish. The sauce is as tasty as the slow-simmered kind and coats the tortellini just as richly. Packaged dried tortellini works just as well as the frozen.

TORTELLINI DINNER
12-ounce package frozen tortellini
10½-ounce can ready-to-serve low-sodium tomato soup with bits
½ of a 6-ounce can tomato paste
½ teaspoon dried marjoram, crushed
Dash bottled hot pepper sauce
6½-ounce can minced clams
Grated Parmesan cheese

In a saucepan cook tortellini in boiling unsalted water according to package directions; drain. Meanwhile, in another saucepan combine soup, tomato paste, marjoram and hot pepper sauce; cook until bubbly. Add undrained clams; heat through.

Serve hot clam mixture over hot tortellini. Sprinkle with Parmesan. Makes 4 servings.

Eating 'not done' at power breakfasts

Associated Press

A power breakfast is a meal where people wheel and deal but seldom eat.

Eating is the least important part of a power breakfast, according to an article in the January issue of Harper's Bazaar, and that is particularly true at New York's Regency Hotel, where the early-morning meeting tradition began 10 years ago.

The power breakfast started as working meetings among those trying to solve New York City's financial crisis — financier Felix Rohatyn, realtor Lewis Rudin and Robert Preston Tisch, then president of Loews Hotels and now U.S. Postmaster General.

Power breakfasters at the Regency today include Rohatyn, ABC's Roone Arledge, realtor Donald Trump, football's Pete Rozelle, baseball commissioner Peter Ueberroth and former presidential candidate Walter Mondale.

The food is excellent at the Regency — but on the East Coast eating it is not done. Christopher Buckley, author of "The White House Mess" and "Steaming to Bamboola," said:

"I eat hearty before I get there so to offers of eggs, waffles, muffins and whatnot, I can reply, 'No, thanks, I'll just have coffee.'"

To order waffles or pancakes is virtually to announce you are from out of town, possibly Los Angeles.

The power breakfast place in Los Angeles is the Polo Lounge at the Beverly Hills Hotel, a favorite of arbitrager Ivan Boesky.

Regulars include Marvin Davis, Sherry Lansing, Mark Goodson, Norton Simon and Jack Valenti, as well as many out-of-towners.

"They're the ones in suits and ties, sometimes with a phone in each ear — London on one, New York on the other," said hotel spokesperson Jean Majors.

In Washington, D.C., the place to be seen is the Senate Dining Room. Diane Wolf, a political fund-raising consultant for various Republican senators, said:

"The real power breakfasts take place in a senator's office or private room in the Capitol. The food is awful, but no one cares about the food."

The power breakfast is spreading.

"Power breakfasts have been picking up tremendously in the past three or four years," said Rene Peyrat of New York's Carlyle Hotel, favored by Rupert Murdoch, Henry Kissinger and New York Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan.

New York power breakfasts also are held at the Mayfair Regent, the Villard House in the Hemsley Palace and Harry Cipriani's in the Sherry-Netherland. "21" will create a members-only breakfast club next spring.

Chicago's breakfasting is done at the Park Hyatt's La Tour and the Mayfair Regent's Ciel Bleu. In Washington, it's the Hay-Adams and the Watergate, where Buckley said, "The food is excellent and the name alone is pure POW!" The Bel-Air Hotel and the Beverly Wilshire are Los Angeles power places.

Group: Seafood needs more regulation

WASHINGTON (AP) — Seafood, which makes up a growing proportion of American diets because of its health benefits, also may present health risks because it is among the least regulated of foods, a private health advocacy group said.

"The vast majority of seafood reaches the consumers' plates without being inspected by any government agency, state or federal," said a report by Public Voice for Food and Health Policy, a non-profit nutrition advocacy group.

The group said thousands of Americans become ill each year from eating seafood contaminated with bacteria or viruses, and many others are at long-term risk from consumption of products that contain toxic chemicals.

The report said the federal government should assume responsibility for setting uniform national standards for fish and seafood and set up an inspection program to make sure those standards are met, much like the program governing meat and poultry.

"The microbiological and environmental contamination in seafood is widespread and presenting harm, risks and unnecessary costs to the public," the group's report said, although it acknowledged that data on health consequences are sketchy because of inadequate reporting.

Inspection is handled primarily by the National Marine Fisheries Service, an arm of the Commerce Department. But that inspection is entirely voluntary and intended more to promote sales of seafood than to protect consumers, the group said.

The service's inspections have been declining at the same time that U.S. seafood consumption has risen, the report found. In 1985, the average American ate a record 14.5 pounds of fish and shellfish, an 11 percent increase since 1980.

The service inspected 567 million pounds of fish in 1983, about 18.6 percent of all consumption. By 1985 that figure had dropped to 443 million pounds, about 13 percent of all fish and shellfish eaten in the country.

"The lack of a unified (inspection) program, coupled with the failures of the existing programs, put the seafood consumer in a precarious position," the report concluded.

Richard Gutting, vice president for government relations of the National Fisheries Institute, said the seafood industry has been pushing for improved inspection for 20 years, and has won passage of a $350,000 appropriation to design such a program over the next two years.

"We believe that our industry would be significantly enhanced and consumers would be benefited if inspection were stepped up and improved," Gutting said.

Public Voice said any federal oversight should include standards for fishing vessels to assure adequate protection of the catch from sun and weather, and sanitary cold storage; a more thorough sampling system to catch microbial and chemical residues; adequate recordkeeping so problem products can be traced to the source; and sanitation standards for processing and transportation.

Microwave oven cook's 'friend'

Copley News Service

Many of the recipes your grandmother handed down to you include directions like these: "Simmer slowly for three hours," or "Bake in a low oven all afternoon."

Grandma worked at home all day, so she could prepare the evening meal over the course of an afternoon. Most cooks today feel lucky if they have even one hour to put something palatable on the table.

Enter the best friend of the 1980s' cook — the microwave oven. Add a copy of Quick And Easy Microwave Meals, and you and your microwave can produce delectable meals in only half an hour.

Just imagine arriving home from work at 5:30 and sitting down to Chicken Marengo at 6:05. Or picture yourself whipping up Southwest Fiesta Beans and Chili Queso Dip at 11:15 for a brunch scheduled at noon.

Before launching into its appetizing array of recipes, this freebie pamphlet offers brief instructions on using a microwave oven.

With a little practice, you might be able to adapt some of Grandma's recipes to the microwave. She won't mind. She knows you can't stay at home and watch a stew simmer all day.

Fish inspection needed

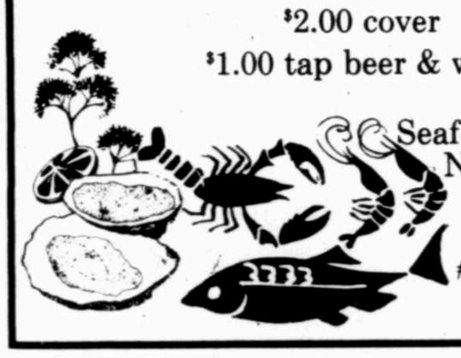

Associated Press

A nutrition group, saying there was "a public health scandal in the making," requested an improved federal inspection program for seafood.

By eating more fish because it is a healthy source of protein, Americans are at increased risk from bacterial, viral and toxic contamination, said a study released by Public Voice for Food and Health Policy, a non-profit advocacy group in Washington.

Spokesmen for the fisheries industry agreed on the value of inspection, but called the warnings overblown.

Good nutrition possible at fast-food restaurants

By SHIRLEY BRIGHT BOODY
Copley News Service

Fast food is a big part of today's American life whether we like it or not, and according to the U.S. Department of Agriculture, consumers spend an average of $200 a year on it.

Are we getting our money's worth of good healthful food, or are we being nutritionally shortchanged? It depends on what we order and how it's prepared.

A recent fast-food guide revealed both the good and the bad. The bad things about many fast foods is that they are high in calories, fat, sodium and are "inappropriately" processed.

They aren't all bad, however, because it's possible to order a very nutritious fast-food meal in many fast-food outlets.

Let's look at the worst first. The highest in calories (1,060) was Dairy Queen's chocolate malt. The most fat (15 teaspoons) was found in Wendy's triple cheeseburger. The most sodium (1,953 milligrams) was in Roy Rogers' large roast beef with cheese.

The most compromised was Arby's "deluxe" potato with 38 grams of fat added per potato and the most "inappropriately" processed was chicken nuggets injected with ground-up skin by McDonald's, Kentucky Fried Chicken and other "nuggets."

The top-rated fast foods were Wendy's salad bar, Roy Rogers' roast beef, D'Lites Jr. hamburgers, Arthur Treachers' broiled fish and Wendy's chicken sandwich on a multi-grain bun.

This thumbnail list doesn't begin to cover all the worst and the best of more than 55,000 fast-food outlets available to us, so how can we determine what's good and what's bad in our own neighborhood? Here are some guidelines:

■ Cleanliness should top the list, so check out the restrooms. If they are dirty and lack supplies, the kitchen and the rest of the restaurant are apt to be the same.

Look at the help. Are they neat, clean and courteous, or dirty, sloppy and rude?

What does the place smell like? Fresh, clean food aroma or rancid grease? Unfresh air of any kind? If you value your health, walk out of any dirty restaurant, fast food or otherwise.

■ To limit the calories and fat: avoid the fried foods, milk shakes, extra cheeses, double or triple hamburgers, mounds of french fries and rich desserts.

■ To avoid extra sodium, skip the cheeses and ask that no salt be used. Don't be afraid to ask the manager how any food is prepared, then order accordingly.

■ To ensure a nutritious meal, keep the four food groups in mind (meats, fish, fowl, fruits and vegetables, milk and dairy products, breads and cereals) and order so that you get at least one of each.

Example: Broiled hamburger on a whole wheat bun with lettuce, tomato, onion and a glass of milk. Skip the soft drink and order orange or other fruit juices and/or milk as your beverage.

You can add a lot of good nutrients to your fast-food meal simply by ordering better choices. Coke, a hot dog and french fries will give you a lot of fat and calories with less nutrition for a similar price.

Most restaurants do not offer their customers low-fat or skim milk, a big mistake because so many people today are watching their diets for fat, calories and cholesterol, yet they continue to offer only whole milk. Their customers then have to switch to coffee, tea or pop, none of which compares to the nutrition in low-fat or skim milk. Only one chain that I know of has had the foresight to offer low-fat milk, and that is Carl's Jr.

We can eat heathfully in fast-food restaurants but they must help by providing good, fresh foods that are free from excessive fat, unwise processing and questionable handling. Clean, well-supplied rest rooms are a must.

Sandwiches easy, inexpensive, delicious

By JIM WOOD
Hearst News Service

The trouble with sandwiches is that they are so easy. Hardly anyone has any respect for them, which is too bad. Given a little attention, they can be not only inexpensive and quick to make, but really delicious.

If you want to make a serious sandwich, one that you can respect, start with good bread, the best you can find — for example, a baguette with a crust that is hard, dark brown and covered with herbs and seeds, a chewy interior and perfectly flavored — the kind of bread that is great by itself or with just a little butter and cheese. But add a hearty filling, such as andouille sausage and grilled red peppers, and you'll have an exceptional sandwich.

First, cut a five-inch length off the baguette and cut in half horizontally. The result will be a little like a bun that has been sliced in half. Then take the sausage, cut it crossways into thin slices and lay the slices on a hot grill. That way you get the flavor of the fat, but most of it melts and drops into the hot grill. One way to avoid the resulting flare-ups is to do your grilling in an iron skillet with a ridged bottom. The ridges keep the sausage out of the fat in the bottom of the pan.

MEANWHILE, PUT a red pepper under the broiler and blister the skin. You have to turn the pepper about every five minutes, and the whole process takes around 20 minutes. It's a little tedious. When the skin is blistered all over, drop the pepper into a paper bag and twist the bag shut so that the pieces are absolutely flat. If you fail to do this, the sandwich won't stay together.

Next, put a large saucepan filled with hot water over a burner turned to high, core a large fresh tomato and cut a cross in the bottom. Drop it into the boiling water for a moment, run it under cold water and peel the skin off. Cut the tomato into the thinnest slices you can, unless you want to imitate Dagwood Bumstead when you eat the sandwich. The tomato will lend moisture as well as add flavor. The main flavor, however, comes from the sausage and the contrasting sweetness of the pepper.

TO ASSEMBLE the sandwich, pour a little good olive oil into a bowl or deep plate. Using a small brush, coat the cut side of each piece of bread with the oil, lay the ingredients on one slice of bread, add a pinch of whatever fresh herb is available, top with the other slice of bread, pour yourself a glass of hearty red wine and serve. You'll have a nutritious meal that's satisfying and delicious.

SUPERHERO
1 individual hero roll (6 to 8 inches long)
2 tablespoons olive oil
1 small garlic clove, crushed
½ teaspoon crumbled, dried oregano leaves
½ teaspoon crumbled, dried basil leaves
¼ teaspoon black pepper
Filling:
½ cup shredded romaine lettuce or escarole
1 large tomato, thinly sliced
1 small onion, thinly sliced (optional)
½ green pepper, cut into julienne strips
½ sweet red pepper, cut into julienne strips
4 thin sliches cooked, smoked turkey or chicken (about 2 ounces)
4 thin slices skim-milk mozzarella or provolone cheese

Cut hero roll in half lengthwise. In small bowl, blend olive oil, garlic, oregano, basil and black pepper. Brush or drizzle half of mixture onto both cut surfaces of bread.

On bottom half of roll, arrange half the shredded lettuce in a layer. Arrange half the tomato slices and half the onion slices in alternate layers on top of lettuce. Place half of green and red pepper strips on top of tomato-onion layers. Drizzle with little olive oil mixture. Fold two of turkey slices; place on top of peppers. Top with the cheese.

Layer remaining turkey, peppers, onion and tomato slices and, finally, shredded lettuce. Drizzle with remaining olive oil mixture.

Secure top of roll in place by spearing with toothpicks so layers are held firmly together.

VEGETARIAN PITA SANDWICH
1 6-inch whole wheat pita bread
Filling:
1 8-ounce can red kidney beans, rinsed and well drained
¼ cup thinly slivered fresh green beans
¼ cup crumbled feta cheese or skim-milk cottage cheese (about 1 ounce)
¼ cup chopped parsley
2 tablespoons pine nuts or toasted sesame seeds
2 tablespoons finely chopped onion
Dressing:
1 8-ounce can chickpeas (garbanzo beans), rinsed, drained and crushed
3 to 4 tablespoons olive oil
2 to 3 tablespoons red wine vinegar
1 clove garlic, crushed
½ teaspoon crushed thyme leaves

Cut edge of pita bread so it may be stuffed.

To make filling, blend together kidney beans, green beans, cheese, parsley, pine nuts and onion.

To make dressing, stir together crushed chickpeas, enough olive oil and vinegar to give mixture a creamy consistency, and garlic and thyme. Moisten filling with dressing.

Note: For brown baggers, pack bread and moistened filling separately; combine just before eating.

DEAR ABBY

Fiancee dreads thought of moving

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: What's wrong with me? I'm engaged to a wonderful man and I should be the happiest woman in the world, but I'm not. I'm depressed because of this one problem:

I was born in West Virginia and have lived here all my life. "Buddy," my fiance, moved here seven years ago from Oregon. He was offered a job in California. He says it's an opportunity of a lifetime, so he took it, so that is where we'll be living after we're married. Buddy has already relocated there, and I visited him for three weeks to see what it was like. I suppose most people would say California has more to offer than West Virginia. Not for me, it hasn't.

I don't care for the California climate, the people, the distances or their way of life. I guess it boils down to the fact that I don't want to move to California, raise a family there, grow old there and die there.

It breaks my heart to think of leaving my family, friends and the state that I love. I'm not a career-type woman. All I want to do is be a good wife and mother. I truly love Buddy. He would make a wonderful husband. But while I'm making wedding plans, I'm dreading the day. Please help me. — TEARS ON MY PILLOW

DEAR TEARS: Obviously Buddy doesn't know how you feel, so TELL him at once. Let him know that you are dreading your wedding day because you don't want to leave your family and the state you love. Perhaps he will consider returning to West Virginia for your sake. (Maybe not.) In any case, put your wedding on hold until you can replace your tearful sadness with genuine joy. You may not be ready to marry Buddy or anybody else yet.

DEAR ABBY: On the issue of signed vs. unsigned credit cards, I am one of the "unsigners." The reason: I work in a prison and have heard many inmates talk about how they became experts on forging signatures of stolen credit cards.

I can prove who I am by simply showing my driver's license or ID from work, both of which have my picture and signature. If anybody gives me an argument, I leave the merchandise at a checkout station.

Last Christmas season I used three major credit cards for a total of 40 times. Not once did anybody even look at my signature. Sign me ... UNSIGNED IN GEORGIA

DEAR UNSIGNED: My mail is running 10-to-1 AGAINST signing credit cards. Read on for a letter from a sharp reader:

DEAR ABBY: An item in your column touched me where my credit cards are: in my wallet. I flatly refuse to sign my credit cards, and I'll tell you why:

If I should lose a signed credit card and a crook gets ahold of it, he could copy my signature and run up more bills all over town than I could pay off in two lifetimes.

I carry my I.D. and picture, and any clerk who gives me any trouble will lose a sale. Guaranteed! — V.G. SHARP, GRANTS PASS, ORE.

Cooking mussels not complicated

Hearst News Service

SEATTLE — Here's the advice of the mussel experts from Penn Cove Mussels, Penn Cove Seafarms and the Captain Whidbey Inn on how to handle and prepare mussels.

When you're shopping for the little beauties, don't buy any that are cracked or beardless. As soon as their beards are removed, mussels cock up their toes and die.

Once you get them home, place the mussels in a colander with a catch bowl beneath and cover them with a damp cloth or paper towel. Don't allow the mussels to sit in the liquid they release. For the best quality, serve the mussels within a day or two of purchase.

Preparing mussels for cooking is an easy task — not half so arduous, for example, as cleaning a fin fish or shucking an oyster. Rinse the mussels in cold running water. Discard cracked mussels and those that don't shut up tight when tapped on the shell.

Pull off the beard with a sharp tug in the direction of the broad lip of the shell. You can do this up to three or four hours before cooking the mussels, but no more or their quality will suffer.

Mussels need very little cooking — five minutes in an inch or two of simmering liquid will do it. The liquid can be water or wine, flavored with anything you like. Some people cover the pot, some don't. The mussels are done when they open up and the flesh is slightly firm.

CAPT. WHIDBEY ORIGINAL RECIPE MUSSELS

1 ounce white wine
1 ounce clarified butter
4 ounces water
½ teaspoon fresh sweet basil
5 ounces mussels

Bring wine, butter, water and basil to a boil in a deep saute pan. Add cleaned, debearded mussels and steam until open and firm. Serve in small bowl with lemon wedge. A sprinkle of very finely minced parsley won't go amiss.

Americans tend to be somewhat shy when it comes to eating messy foods with their hands, but mussels are worth a few drops down the shirt-front. You can scoop the bite-size tidbit of flesh from the shell with a spoon or with the upper shell (a great design — it fits perfectly). Or just use your fingers. Plain steamed mussels may be dipped in melted butter or other sauce, but they're so mildly sweet that the extra calories really aren't necessary.

Some people steam the mussels with the beard on and use the beard as a handle.

MUSSEL AND SAFFRON SAUCE PURSES

12 scallions, blanched (see note)
½ cup white wine
1 ounce clarified butter
½ teaspoon basil
1 pound mussels
A pinch of saffron threads
¼ cup shallots, minced
4 ounces cream
Salt and white pepper to taste
12 finished crepes (see note)

Cut green tops of scallions into thin strips. Set aside. Bring wine, clarified butter and basil to a boil. Add debearded mussels. Steam mussels until open. Remove mussels and strain mussel liquid. Reduce liquid by half by maintaining steady, low boil. Add saffron threads, shallots and cream. Boil until thick, adjust seasonings with salt and pepper, and add shelled mussels.

Lay out crepes and put 1 or 2 tablespoons of the mussel-saffron mix into center of each crepe. Gather edges around mussels and use scallion strips to tie crepe up, purse-fashion. Place crepes on cookie sheet and heat in 350 degree oven for five minutes. Serve in a pool of saffron sauce.

NOTE: Crepes can be made ahead of time and refrigerated or frozen. Blanched leek leaves may be used for purse-ties instead of scallions.

THE BUTCHER

Tasty dishes made with varieties of livers

By MERLE ELLIS

The lack of liver in local supermarkets is lamentable. There was a day when every butcher shop offered not one type of liver but several. Calves' liver or veal liver was the most favored. They still are, but they are very scarce. Most of the really good calves' liver goes to the white table restaurant trade. I don't know where the pork liver goes, but I never see that anymore. Too bad, too. It used to be the cheapest; a bit stronger in flavor than other livers but perfect for the pates.

Lambs' liver! I don't know how long it's been since I have had, or even seen, a lamb's liver and yet it is, to my taste, on a par with calves' liver for mild-flavored tenderness. I worked at a market once that sold lambs' liver labeled and priced as calves' liver and nobody knew the difference. I'm sure butchers don't do that anymore. They're much more "honest" in the meat business these days. We don't even put our thumbs on the scale anymore. You can't hold those computerized scales steady anyway, and you can't even get lambs' liver.

About the only liver that you see in most markets these days is beef liver, and, unfortunately, all too often that is presliced, dumped into plastic cups and presented as if its only use is as cat food. Not so! Liver can be marvelous.

Try to find a market where you can have beef liver sliced to order. There are plenty around. Ring a few bells. Ask for the liver to be skinned before it is sliced. The skin toughens in the cooking process. If you can get calves' liver or lambs' liver, it doesn't much matter what part of the liver you get; but if beef liver is all there is, the "small end" is the better. It has a little less gristle to deal with.

Liver with onions and-or bacon is the most common liver dish, but there is an almost endless array of others. Try any one of these:

LIVER IN WINE SAUCE

1 pound sliced liver
½ cup seasoned flour
4 tablespoons butter
6 slices bacon, cut in 1-inch strips
2 large onions, cut in half and buttered
½ cup red wine
¼ cup garlic-flavored croutons

Dredge liver in seasoned flour and saute in butter over moderate heat until nicely browned on both sides. Don't overcook. It should be pink in the center. Remove to hot platter and keep warm.

Add bacon and onions to pan and saute until onions are soft and golden. Pour on wine; cover, reduce heat and simmer five minutes.

Put slices of liver in sauce to heat through. To serve, arrange liver on warm platter, pour over sauce and garnish with croutons.

LIVER IN SOUR CREAM

1 pound liver, sliced thin
4 tablespoons butter
1 large onion, cut in half and thinly sliced
2 teaspoons paprika
Salt and pepper to taste
½ cup sour cream

Cut liver slices into narrow strips about the thickness of a pencil. Saute onions in one-half the butter until golden. Remove from pan and set aside. Melt remaining butter in pan; add liver and saute five minutes, stirring occasionally to brown strips evenly on all sides. Return onions, add seasonings, stir in sour cream and heat through. Serve on toast or with rice pilaf.

LIVER EN BROCHETTE

Cut liver into 1½-inch cubes. Fry pieces quickly in butter, just to stiffen them. Arrange liver cubes on metal skewers alternately with almost any combination of the following: rolled bacon slices, partially precooked tiny onions, mushroom pieces, water chestnuts, green peppers, cherry tomatoes, bits of pineapple — or use imagination.

Brush skewered goodies with butter and broil for about 10 minutes, turning occasionally until liver nicely done.

Seafood key to Northwest cuisine

SEATTLE (UPI) — There's hardly a food magazine worthy of the name that hasn't spent considerable space in recent months on the booming cuisine of the Pacific Northwest.

This cooking, as much an abundance of raw materials as any exotic collection of techniques, has drawn the kind of raves that might even make it a fad with a few charismatic personalities for the faithful to rally around.

Whether this actually takes place or not, both raw materials and kitchen expertise are magnificent. Seafood, understandably is the key, but it is paired with a vast selection of vegetables available fresh that turn up only frozen in many other parts of the country.

A wonderful introduction to the Pacific Northwest is provided by the new Seattle Times Cookbook (Peanut Butter Publishing, $18.95), the product of one of the nation's finest food writing and test kitchen staffs. The book is available in bookstores or from the publisher in Seattle.

NORTHWEST SALMON PIE

Crust:
1½ cups flour
½ cup grated Parmesan cheese
¾ cup vegetable shortening
2 tablespoons cold water
Filling:
1 pound poached salmon, well drained
1 large onion, diced
1 clove garlic, minced
2 tablespoon butter
1 pint sour cream
4 eggs
1½ cups shredded Gruyere cheese
1 teaspoon dill weed, crumbled
¼ teaspoon salt

Preheat oven to 375 degrees. To prepare crust, combine flour and cheese. Cut in shortening until mixture resembles small white peas. Sprinkle with water. With hands, form dough into ball, adding more water as needed.

Press dough into bottom and up sides of an 8-inch springform pan. Bake for 10 minutes, remove and leave oven on.

To prepare filling, drain salmon and remove dark skin and bones. Break into bite-sized pieces. Saute onion and garlic in butter until onion is soft.

Beat sour cream and eggs until blended. Stir salmon into sour cream mixture along with sauteed vegetables, 1 cup Gruyere cheese, dill weed and salt.

Pour mixture into crust and top with remaining Gruyere cheese. Return to oven and bake 55 to 60 minutes. Cool 15 minutes in pan. Remove sides of pan and cut pie into wedges.

Note: It may be necessary to cover top loosely with foil toward the end of cooking to prevent too much browning.

Serves 8.

Hogan golfers up in arms..Campbell holds frozen ground

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Hogan Park's golfing regulars are up in arms again, this time it has nothing to do with escalating greens fees or annual dues, but, like the guy on the bench, they are unhappy about the amount of "PT", playing time, they are getting.

Some mornings, the faithful show up only to find the course closed.

They understand that the early morning closings are to protect the sensitive greens from insensitive feet, but they don't understand why the course remains closed until sometime in the afternoon "when the temperature is 55 degrees."

"Last week there were 40 golfers waiting to play at noon," reports one irate golfer. "There was no snow, it was warm and I checked the putting green with my Pro Thermometer and got readings of 38 and 40 degrees."

What really chaffs the folks at Hogan is that golfers are out and playing on nearby Ranchland Hills while Hogan is closed.

ROBERT CAMPBELL, who oversees the well-being of the 27 holes of Hogan, sympathizes with the complaints and admits the course looks playable at times, but the problem goes deeper than appears on the surface.

"I think most golfers understand that we close the course to play where there are frozen conditions," Campbell begins. "If golfers walk on the green during this period, they can kill the root structure.

"So this time of year when we get cold weather, we keep the golfers off until the frost is gone."

Some golfers feel Campbell and his crew are overly protective. But the problem goes deeper than that.

"This time of year when we get cold weather the extreme frost that goes with it causes the ground to freeze, like last week. It was frozen two or three inches down and you've got to let it thaw out," said Campbell.

If you let only the top half inch thaw, contends Campbell, traffic on the green will shear the roots off.

THE GOLFERS will pay the price for such damage later in the year, the spring and summer, the reasons winter's precautions are taken.

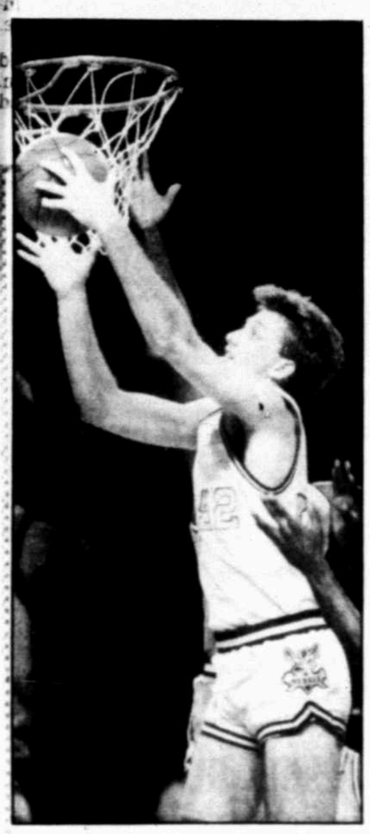

"I know we lose some revenue now," says Campbell, "but it will cost more later to repair the damage. And people will be unhappy with the shape of the greens."

Campbell confeses he hates to see December and January come. It's the same every year. "We aren't trying to inconvenience anyone. We are just trying to keep the course in shape and by doing so, we are saving revenue in the long run, assuring that the course will be in shape when we get our heaviest play in spring and summer."

As for the golfers at RHCC, Campbell, whose background includes stints at Midland CC and Odessa CC, says, "It's an entirely different situation. Under similar circumstances, they can open up the course to three or four golfers. You can't compare us to RHCC. We get heavier traffic here. You are not talking about three or four golfers, but more 40 or more."

CHARLES B. White, director of Southeastern Region, USGA Green section, explains, "Little damage is done to the crowns (growing points) or roots if only a light frost appears; however, when the frost is heavy, cell disruption may occur at the crown, thus killing the entire plant.....

Cooper cools MHS hopes as Permian takes over first

From Staff Reports

ABILENE — Midland High saw its faint playoff hopes grow even dimmer Tuesday night, as Abilene Cooper ran off to a 82-54 District 4-5A romp over the Bulldogs.

Cooper jumped out to a 12-point lead at the end of the first quarter and poured it on from there. Jay Estes' 23 points and Doug Starr's 21 led the Cougars, who evened their district record at 3-3. MHS, led by Varrick McDonald's 10 points, is now 2-4, 8-15.

In the battle for first place in Odessa, Odessa Permian took sole possession of the district lead with a 77-69 win over San Angelo. Permian outscored the Bobcats 23-12 in the crucial second quarter and held off a furious Bobcat rush in the third quarter.

The Panthers were led by Lance Watkins' 28 points and 16 from Todd Evans while San Angelo was paced by Chris Lowry's 21 points.

Odessa High beat Crane in a non-district game.

Jeff Buchard, Midland Lee, dribbles down court on fast break as Rebels upset Abilene High Tuesday.

Midland Lee scales Alps for 55-52 win over Abilene

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

Abilene High presents everyone in District 4-5A a unique challenge with their extraordinary height.

Tuesday night, Midland Lee's own big man, 6-5 Mark Van Cott, lived up to that challenge, grabbing a game-high 11 rebounds and scoring a career-high 20 points over the taller Eagles for a 55-52 Rebel win.

Lee evened its district record to 3-3 at the half way mark, still two games behind league-leading Odessa Permian, but just a game back of second-place San Angelo.

The thought of catching the Bobcats has some of the Rebels thinking about playoff possibilities, but coach Paul Stueckler is just happy to end the Rebels' three-game losing streak.

"Playoffs? It feels good just to win one," Stueckler said. "We've lost three games in a row, but it feels like a lot longer, seems like we haven't won in three weeks. No, we can't think about that (the playoffs), we just want to keep playing well and win one once in awhile."

But you couldn't convince Van Cott of that.

VAN COTT, who was often dwarfed by Abilene's 6-8, 6-7, 6-8 front line, leapt over, around and sometimes through the trees in efforts to show the Eagles who the game's big man really was.

He succeeded.

"They (Abilene) looked pretty impressive in pre-games. But I think I play better against bigger people," said Van Cott, who has been averaging 10.4 points per game. "Those smaller guys have the quick hands and knock the ball away a lot."

"That was probably the best game I've seen Mark play," said Lee coach Paul Stueckler. "The way he played down low and was so tough on the boards."

Van Cott started the Rebels' winning rally in the final four minutes with a sweeping hook shot that brought Lee within one, 50-49, with 3:50 to play. On AHS' next trip down the floor, Doug Brown, all 6-8 of him, took a pass down low and made a power move to the basket, ready to put the Eagles up by three.

Instead, Van Cott snuck up from behind and stripped Brown of the ball as he drove the baseline. The Rebels then took the lead for good as Danny Allen scrambled and fought for a loose ball off his own missed shot and put it back in with 2:30 to go.

WES WATSON put in a short jumper 30 seconds later and Allen sank one-of-tow free shots and Lee led by four, 54-50, with just over a minute left.

AHS scored only one more bucket, a desperation 20-footer by Pat Garrett in the final minute. Lee was able to let the clock tick down by taking the air out of the ball as the Eagles gambled looking for a steal and the tying two points.

They came close twice, but never got it, and the Rebels remained alive for the second half of the season. AHS, which had won three straight games after losing its first two, fell to 2-4 and a long shot chance at best for the playoffs.

After the first quarter, it was hard to believe the Eagles would even be in a position to pull this one out. Lee jumped out to an easy 15-point lead, 22-7, as Van Cott banged in 10 first quarter points.

The two sides then traded baskets in the second quarter before AHS put on a 10-2 run to go into halftime trailing just 34-25. Lee managed just six points in the third quarter as AHS rallied to pull ahead, 42-40.

Thanks to Van Cott and Allen, who scored six of his 12 points in the final period, it was the Rebels that were able to come from behind for the final time.

LEE, DESPITE Stueckler's claims, can still write its own ticket as far as playoffs are concerned.

"I think we have a good chance at the playoffs," Van Cott insisted. "We just have to play hard and beat the teams that beat us the first time around."

Lee gets a chance to get back over .500 in district on Friday when it plays Midland High at Chaparral Center at 8 p.m.

UTEP sports drowning in blotter

EL PASO (AP) — It's been a tough season for the Texas-El Paso sports program, with some athletes arrested on shoplifting charges and, in the latest incident, investigation of an alleged gang rape at a dorm.

The run-ins with the law have hurt the image of the athletic program at UTEP, whose track and cross-country is now begining a three-year probation imposed by the National Collegiate Athletic Association last July.

"I can remember athletes getting in trouble. I can't remember when we've gotten so much publicity," said Joe Avila, UTEP dean of students since 1976.

That may be because for 12 weeks, as one scandal involving UTEP athletes was dying down, another one would pop up.

Basketball players Tim Hardaway and Keith Manuel and Manuel's brother Gerry, a former football player, were arrested Oct. 29 and charged with misdemeanor theft.

Giants' Big Tuna looks more like Dirty Harry

The Giants call him Big Tuna because he looks like something that should be fighting a hook around a party boat in the North Atlantic.

But Bill Parcells reminds you more of a New York cop. You wouldn't want to ask him directions to the Metropolitan Museum but he'd be nice to have around if a motorcycle gang showed up.

He's blunt, antagonistic, irascible, outspoken, cynical and superstitious. Dirty Harry to a T. A perfect part for Clint Eastwood.

And a perfect coach for the New York Giants. These are football's version of the Bowery Boys if the Bowery Boys all gained 150 pounds and 4 inches in height. This is not a team, it's a street gang. Convicted felons are less fearsome.

If you found yourself in a cell next to the New York Giants in the big house, you'd be afraid to leave. And you wouldn't even want to know what they were in for. They make Hell's Angels look like kids in a Christmas pageant.

BILL PARCELLS gets to run this wild-animal act. He must feel more like a keeper than a teacher. As if he's got the wrong tools. An earphone and clipboard instead of a whip and a chair and a gun that shoots blanks. Or shoots, period.

This is not a team that takes kindly to direction. It appears at first blush to be more a collection of bullies than athletes. The Giants favor churlishness. Their basic attitude is, "Take a hike."

How would you like to coach this bunch? How would you like to make a living telling Lawrence Taylor what to do?

Other teams call their coach Mister or Skip or Boss. The Giants dump Gatorade on theirs.

Given their reputation, he's probably lucky they don't dump him in the East River. With concrete blocks tied to his feet. The Giants are the kind of people who, if they weren't football players, the FBI would be taking pictures at their family weddings.

BILL PARCELLS looks as if he understands this state of mind, even encourages it. There's an element of the platoon commander of "The Dirty Dozen" about him, as if he rounded up this crew on a Marseilles waterfront, in the French Foreign Legion or found them jimmying open a window from a fire escape. They might be right for this dirty kind of work but you dassn't turn your back on them for a minute, all the same.

Not many people could handle this New York Giant team, you have to feel. The impression you get is, this is a bunch of barely-sociable thugs. There's nothing finesse-like about them. There's no secret to the way they win football games.

They win football games the way Hitler won Poland. They should have spiked helmets. They come at you with the maniacal fervor of ax-murderers, someone once said. They cluster around the ball like a shark frenzy. They are as merciless and unrelenting as a tidal wave.

They were probably as mutinous a crew of cutthroats as ever got shanghaied when Parcells first took them over. They led the world in talking behind the coach's back, and most of them spent so much time in the whirlpool bath on injured reserve, the club symbol should have been a rubber duck.

Parcells didn't know whether to coach this team or quarantine it. When he went 3-12-1, the prevailing opinion was, he had resolved the issue by doing neither.

Parcells was ready in one respect: He was from New York, too. He could be as brusque, sarcastic, insensitive and impatient as any cabdriver or hot-watch peddler on Seventh Avenue. He knew the score. He didn't come into town with a straw suitcase to buy the Brooklyn Bridge, either. He might have been just what this team of bad boys needed. Bill had grown up in the tenements, too. He wasn't in awe of these guys. He just made sure he cut the cards, too.

YOU DON'T usually find career coaches who grew up in the shadow of Manhattan. Coaches usually come from places where they say "fim" for film and "tin" for ten and they talk in the soft drawls of Dixie or the nasal twang of the prairies and they answer to names like Bear or Hoss. Places where football coaches rank right alongside archbishops and the state governor tries to get next to them at picture taking.

North Jersey is hardly a hotbed of football coaches and even the Giants historically had to hire on guys with two first names to take on the chore. In Jersey, coaching football ranks right alongside pool hustling or selling vegetable peelers.

If you want to learn to coach, or even play, football, then, you have to escape the industrial flatlands and go somewhere where campuses aren't ivied and the game isn't considered just to be PE for students, in fact, where it's considered too important to be turned over to students.

This is what Bill Parcells did. He left the football ghettos of the East and traveled as far from Hasbrouck Heights as he could get a scholarship, all the way to Wichita State in the Missouri Valley conference where football is not a life-and-death thing but it's not a part-time thing, either.

ACTORS COME from England, singers come from Italy, generals come from Germany, comedians come from the Lower East Side – and football coaches come from the prairies, the magnolias and the amber fields of grain. You don't get to the big time from Princeton or Seton Hall anymore.

Parcells was not willing to single out the coach or the program that did most to steer him into his chosen profession but the reality is, he kept the act well west of the Mississippi and well away from the institutions on the Raritan or Upper Montclair, where football is mistakenly believed to be just a game.

He had the best of all possible worlds – a New York outlook and a plains state training. He learned X's and O's in the crucibles of football. He already had the requisite sardonic parade-ground attitude.

Pro football is structured so that all you have to do to get a good team is lose consistently. This gives you first crack at the elite talent annually. The catch is, you have to know how to handle it once you get it. Also, to recognize it. The game is a coach's medium.

The Giants lost for 23 years. They became, physically, the most menacing group of brigands since Genghis Khan's Mongols. They won the fights but lost the games.

Parcells changed all that. He channeled the aggression. He didn't dissipate strengths, he consolidated them. He treated some players with New York condescension, others with camaraderie. He was as uninsultable as a vacuum cleaner salesman. When one of his players, Jim Burt, slammed him to the ground for not putting him in game, Parcells didn't lose him, he used him. New Yorkers are used to yelling at each other.

THIS WAS a team famous for letting great coaches get away. Tom Landry and Vince Lombardi, for instance.

They finally picked a winner. Bill Parcells is as rough and gruff as the town or the team. It's a match made, not in Heaven but on 42nd Street. He's as right for the town and his times as George M. Cohan.

They won't let him go. This is his team. As much as it was Lombardi's Packers, Blaik's Army or Rockne's Irish, these are Parcells' Giants. But don't expect them to go around calling him genius. They call him Tuna.

Okay, Broncos, let's hear it for Instant Replay

Battles

Fans like it so Instant Replay will be around the NFL next season.

Even Sunday's Super Bowl fiasco failed to shake the faith of those who support the TV innovation designed to eliminate human error in NFL officiating.

Only trouble Sunday was that it not only didn't correct what it was supposed to correct, but only compounded what may have been a bad call by an official.

Influence the outcome of the game? Well, let's not get into that.

The pass reception that was called an incompletion in the second period cost Denver two points on the next play, not to mention possession and no telling what else, if John Elway had spotted someone wandering around unattended downfield.

THE SYSTEM has exhibited a plethora of deficiencies throughout the year, not the least of which is an almost complete erosion of faith in those staunch guardians in stripes. The competency of NFL officiating has come under scrutiny as never before.

The TV camera hasn't treated them nearly as kindly as it has the baseball umpires. In the baseball, it's "Ah, we finally caught you." In football, it's "Can't they get anything right?"

The awareness of an eye in the sky peeking critically, ready to veto, over the shoulder may have contributed to that loss of competency by undermining the officials faith in their own judgment.

Before this season, there was really never that much fault to find. It was bang-bang, you make a call and it usually took 10 replays before the tv people could make up their minds whether a mistake had been made.

In Sunday's game, it was simply a case of the tv cameras never being in position to make the call. Eleven cameras and not one strategically located to see the play.

IT TOOK nine minutes to dig up a view of an angle that allegedly showed tight end Clarence Kay had actually caught an Elway pass and by then it was too late. The play was over and the Broncos had already kicked off to the Giants following the safety.

Even the version that confirmed that the men in stripes had indeed blown one was not all that conclusive.

In fact, CBS cameras rarely showed any play conclusively.

DURING the season, the Instant Replay system caused more controversy than it solved, most disturbingly on plays over which it had no jurisdiction.

However, what really undermined the faith in NFL officiating came on plays on which the Replays had no recall. Flagrant fouls, touchdowns that never were, and clear, indisputable evidence of miscalls went free, unmolested, without reprimand.

But the fans like it and are convinced it avoids incorrect calls that might cost a team a game, which, it is contended, is worth the inconvenience of delay.

Maybe so, but don't tell it to the Denver Broncos.

Jayhawks calm Cyclones

Associated Press

Kansas does have other players besides Danny Manning and Coach Larry Brown was passing the praise around after the 20th-ranked Jayhawks beat Iowa State.

Manning scored 23 points Tuesday night in the 72-48 victory over the Cyclones and the 6-foot-11 forward moved into fourth place on the Jayhawks' all-time scoring list. But it was the Jayhawks' defense and the 12 points each from Chris Piper and Mark Turgeon that had Brown talking.

"It was a great win," Brown said. "I thought Turgeon gave us a big lift. Chris also played much better. He's playing with more confidence.

"We played great defensively," he said. "We did as many things on defense against them as we've done in the four years I've been here."

Iowa State's Jeff Grayer did manage 26 points but no other Cyclone broke double figures as the Jayhawks won their 44th consecutive game in Allen Field House.

Iowa State, 10-8 and 2-3, made just nine of 31 shots from the field in the first half, while Kansas made 17 of 31 in taking the 36-20 halftime lead.

No. 7 Temple 76, Rutgers 56

Temple registered its 29th consecutive victory in McGonigle Hall as it had no trouble with Atlantic 10 foe Rutgers.

Mike Vreeswyk scored 22 points as the Owls improved to 19-2 and 8-0. Rutgers, 3-13 and 1-8, closed to 52-43 with 10:20 to play but Vreeswyk led a 16-2 run that put the game out of reach.

Eric Riggins led the Scarlet Knights with 21 points.

No. 8 DePaul 70, Weber State 51

The Blue Demons romped over the visiting Wildcats as Coach Joey Meyer was able to clear the bench early in his team's first game since having their undefeated season ended last Sunday.

Dallas Comegys scored 16 points and Rod Strickland added 14 on seven of nine shooting from the field to lead DePaul, 17-1. Strickland did not start the game because Meyer disciplined him for missing Monday's practice when he was snowed in at Newark (N.J.) Airport.

No. 10 Oklahoma 87, Colorado 62

Oklahoma broke from a 40-27 halftime lead with a 20-10 burst to seal the Big Eight victory.

Daryl Kennedy scored 21 points and Harvey Grant added 18 as the Sooners improved to 15-3 and 4-1.

Colorado, 6-12 and 0-6, led 17-16 midway through the first half when the Sooners went on their first run of the game, a 24-10 burst led by David Sieger, who made all four of his shots.

No. 15 St. John's 61, Villanova 58

St. John's managed the Big East victory despite another poor shooting performance. The Redmen, 14-3 and 5-3, shot 42 percent from the field, just slightly better than their 39 percent showing in a one-point loss to Syracuse last Saturday.

Willie Glass led St. John's with 19 points, while Shelton Jones added 17, 13 in the second half, and Mark Jackson 15.

UTEP

They were accused of stealing two $15 plants from a nursery. The three were in a car borrowed from assistant coach Rus Bradburd, a violation of NCAA regulations.

On Nov. 16, basketball player Chris Sandle and former football player Greg Williams were arrested for allegedly taking $16.66 worth of groceries from a supermarket.

More recently, football players Roderick Tobias Richard, Dwight Myers and Charles Edward Lewis were arrested Jan. 19 and accused in an alleged gang rape at the campus coed dorm.

"What some athletes do looks so much worse because they get the publicity, but it's not disproportionate to the rest of society," Avila said Tuesday. "There's as many non-athletes getting into bad things."

Avila, though, said he was not belittling the accusations.

"The athletic department, the coaches talk to the players on how behavior reflects on the university, that they're role models," he said, adding that he has spoken to some of the players involved.

"I don't think that these students, after I've talked to them, think I'm extra-friendly," he said.

The players have undergone no disciplinary measures but the first two incidents are been looked at in quite a different light from the alleged rape, said Athletic Director Bill Cords.

An 18-year-old woman who is not a UTEP student told police that Richard threatened her with a knife, stole her purse and invited others to have sex with her for $2 in a room at Barry Hall, a dorm on campus.

"Fifteen-dollar plants and $16 worth of lunch meat is a lot different than the other," Cords said. "It's one hell of a difference."

Cords, though, said he is planning to meet with his coaches.

"We're in the middle of recruiting and it's the middle of the basketball season, but when we get a chance we'll get the people together and look at things and see why they happened and what we could have done," said Cords. "I don't know if it's preventable."

Basketball coach Don Haskins, in his 26th year at UTEP, was not available for comment, his secretary said. Football coach Bob Stull, brought in last year to rescue the Miners' dismal performance, was out of town, said a secretary.

Hardaway and the Manuel brothers pleaded guilty to the charges and were each fined $50 plus $90 court costs and six months probation. The NCAA declared Hardaway and Keith Manuel inelegible for five days then reinstated them on condition they repay the university for the mileage they put on the car.

Sandle's appearance before a municipal court judge was postponed. In a previous telephone interview, Sandle said he would take care of the fines.

Richard paid $38,500 bond and was released from the El Paso County Jail Jan. 22. He had been booked on investigatory charges of sexual assault, promotion of prostitution, aggravated assault, possession of an illegal weapon and theft, Myers and Lewis were released after paying $10,000 and $11,000 bail, respectively. Myers was booked on investigatory charges of sexual assault and Lewis on similar charges, attempted sexual assault.

Abe Hernandez, assistant district attorney in charge of the rape and child abuse unit, said he would decide by Monday whether to present the case before a grand jury.
