Duarte's party claims victory in El Salvador

By REID G. MILLER
Associated Press Writer

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — President Jose Napoleon Duarte's Christian Democratic Party said today it was virtually assured of picking up a majority of National Assembly seats in a surprising sweep of Sunday's election.

The Christian Democrats said their own tally showed them winning 33 of the 60 assembly seats, based on about 60 percent of the vote counted.

The president's moderate party said 25 seats apparently had been won by its major opposition, a coalition of the nation's two largest conservative parties — the Republican Nationalist Alliance, or ARENA, and the National Conciliation Party, or PCN.

The remaining two seats, the Christian Democrats said, went to the moderate Democratic Action

Party and to the rightist Authentic Institutional Salvadoran Party, or PAISA.

The Christian Democrats based their claims on reports from party poll watchers at each of the nation's voting places. Those figures have proven accurate in past elections.

The Central Elections Council in San Salvador, in charge of the official tally, said it would not have any figures until Tuesday.

But the Christian Democrats' count squared with the results of the Spanish International Network's exit poll, which also gave the president's party an overwhelming and unexpected assembly victory.

Neither the Christian Democrats nor the network made any early predictions on the number of mayors' races won in the nation's 262 municipalities.

SIN, a major Spanish language broadcasting company with 250 affiliated stations in the United States and Latin America, said its exit poll gave Christian Democrats 32 or 33 seats, with one or two seats going to Democratic Action and possibly another to PAISA.

Scattered violence by leftist rebels who have been fighting the U.S.-backed government for more than five years did not disrupt the voting.

A firefight broke out late Sunday between government soldiers and rebels in and around a remote hamlet in Chalatenango Province, about 62 miles north of the capital. An army spokesman said about 150 government troops were engaged in the battle at San Fernando, a village near the border with Honduras.

The military press office in San Salvador said the fighting lasted at least six hours. It said one soldier was killed and 10 were wounded, but gave no casualty figures for the rebels.

Salvadorans wait at a voter registration table to cast their ballots in the national assembly race.

Five seeking at-large council seats

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the third of a seven-part series looking at local races and the candidates. This third part focuses on the five candidates running for the District 2 seat on Midland City Council.

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

Each candidate for the two at-large seats on the Midland City Council has a different background and varying reasons for wanting to serve. But in their campaigns one theme has been consistent, and that is the need for economic diversification in a one-industry city.

Seeking to come out as the top two vote-getters Saturday are Manuel Carrasco, Katie Heck, Terry Lowry, Gordon Marcum II and A.A. Thomas Jr.

Carrasco has listed economic diversification as his top priority. "Basically, Midland is an oil and gas town. We know it's not going to last forever. We should seek alternate industries that would like to locate to Midland," he said.

Discouraging some companies from locating to Midland is the lack of a four-year university, according to Carrasco. "A university with a four-year status would help in recruiting some industry," he said. "Turning the University of Texas of the Permian Basin into a four-year school would be appropriate at this point."

Thomas said he can remember when 14 or 15 years ago people were moving houses out of Midland during a downturn in the economy. "We definitely need to diversify now to get other sources of income coming in."

Lowry, who is running as a member of the National Democratic Policy Committee, wants to turn the economy more toward high-tech industries and specifically those which would be working on President Reagan's Strategic Defense Initiative, commonly called Star Wars.

Pointing out that Texas Tech University and University of Texas — Arlington have received grants to do research for SDI, Lowry suggested UTPB should also seek such grants. These would help UTPB's chances of getting back on its feet and expanding, not just in enrollment but also in its course offerings, according to Lowry.

Mrs. Heck said that Texas Instruments employs about 1,000 persons. "We've got the highly educated labor force here. We should be able to attract more industry (like TI). Oil is what made Midland, but the economy could stand some smoothing out of the bumps."

But Marcum, who has served eight years on the council, said the public isn't aware of the the council's efforts toward economic diversification. "We have several things working in the community. Possibly we don't publicize the efforts of the chamber and the mayor's office as to what we're trying to do."

About $100,000 to $150,000 a year has been spent through the mayor's office, Industrial Foundation and chamber's Economic Development Department in attempting to bring in new industry, with part of that amount being paid by the city government.

However, the candidates' issues are more diversified than the economy.

Mrs. Heck, drawing on her years serving on the Planning and Zoning Commission, focuses on trying to get the city's Master Plan completed before another boom comes. The commission and council want to hold neighborhood meetings and get the public's input on how a planning firm suggested that area should develop.

"We need as much citizen input as possible so we'll have a good framework for making decisions. We're past the shoot-from-the-hip stage," she said. Some of the zoning done in past years hasn't worked, said Mrs. Heck, citing Industrial Park as an example. "It's for pretty industry. It's not working, that land is not developing."

Marcum and Thomas are both looking at the budget, but in slightly different ways. Marcum wants to balance it; Thomas wants to see why it's so large.

This year and last the council had to take money out of the unappropriated surplus to balance the budget. "It's important for us to live within our budget and get it to a point we can manage it." He said it's a matter of how much the council can do for the community vs. the cost and taxes.

World War II's end led to Vietnam War

By RICHARD NIXON

The Vietnam War began when World War II ended. The war in the Pacific radically changed the geopolitical landscape of Southeast Asia. It marked the end of Japan's regional hegemony and, most significantly, the beginning of the end of colonialism.

The great powers were totally at odds on the future of the European empires. President Roosevelt insisted on rapid decolonization. Prime Minister Churchill and Gen. de Gaulle demanded a return to the status quo ante bellum. General Secretary Stalin, while talking of national independence for the colonies, consolidated his grip on Eastern Europe and began scanning the world for possible Communist conquests like a vulture searching for fresh carcasses.

Before World War II France had ruled all of Indochina — Laos, Cambodia and Vietnam. The French first controlled only Southern Vietnam, but local politics, geopolitical competition from China, and imperial ambition soon led them to conquer the entire region. Some popular histories portray French colonial rule as an unrelieved reign of terror. That picture is less a truth than it is a caricature.

Like other imperial powers, France was often guilty of economic exploitation of its colonies. But the French also instituted social programs, particularly in education and land development, that greatly improved the lot of the average Vietnamese.

NO MORE VIETNAM

Although in many respects Vietnam did benefit from their presence, the French failed in the most critical respect: They lacked the vision to prepare the Vietnamese for eventual self-rule and to set up a process to ensure stable government during the transition.

Vietnam was destined to be independent. In the 1920s and 1930s, Vietnamese resentments over colonial rule, coupled with a deep sense of nationalism, led to a groundswell of opposition to the French. The fashionable view that only Ho Chi Minh's Communist Party sought independence is a myth. Scores of political groups organized to alter Vietnam's status as a colony. Some sought self-determination within the French community. Others wanted to break all ties with France and pushed for open warfare. Still others favored collaboration with Japan.

The turning point was the Second World War. The Japanese conquests of Southeast Asia shattered the aura of invincibility that the European powers had enjoyed as colonial masters.

Commissioners call for jail issue referendum

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Midland County Commissioners today called for a non-binding voter referendum on May 11 to solicit citizens' input on the Midland County jail issue.

The referendum, proposed by Commissioner Durward Wright, passed on a split vote of 3-1-1.

"We have never allowed the people to participate (in the jail issue),"

Wright said. "Let's let them participate."

During a meeting this morning in the County Courthouse, Commissioners Wright and Win Brown and County Judge Bill Ahlers voted for holding the referendum vote. Commissioner Scott Welch opposed the proposition and Commissioner Wally Craig abstained. The three-pronged proposition by Wright is:

— The Midland County Jail Task Force's recommendations be followed. This would call for $3 million of Certificates of Obligation to renovate the existing jail, build a maximum security juvenile detention facility and make a long-term study. That study would include a proposed courthouse, jail, library and other county facilities which Wright estimated would cost between $25-50 million.

— The $9.9 million jail, proposed to be built east of Midland, be constructed along with juvenile detention facilities. This proposal, which could cost up to $11 million, would also include maximum security juvenile facilities. The commissioners had proposed to finance a $9.9 million jail through Certificates of Obligation but their plans went awry after the Committee of Concerned Voters objected and asked the issue be submitted to a vote of the people. The commissioners called an election but subsequently canceled it.

Reporters among persons named in Smith-Gideon suit response

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

A response to a request for names and documents related to a $4 million slander lawsuit filed by former Midland County Sheriff Dallas Smith against Chief of Police Wayne Gideon lists the names of three local news reporters "with knowledge of relevant facts pertaining to this case," but objects to releasing any information concerning Smith's campaign or income tax returns.

The response, filed March 15 by Smith's attorney Thomas J. Sims of Foubt & Moore Attorneys at Law in Houston, objects to releasing information on contributors to Smith's re-election attempts, contributions to his political campaigns since 1976 and complete income tax returns from 1976-1984. Basis for the objections is "irrelevant to any issue in this lawsuit."

In the documents filed in district court are the names of 22 persons who may have some knowledge of relevant facts, including Conrad Coleman of KOSA-TV, and Bryan Wood and DeAnn Holcomb, both of KMD-TV.

Hi-tech advances help save yachtsman

By STEVE WILSTEIN
Associated Press Writer

SAN FRANCISCO — A 50-year-old yachtsman was rescued after 13 hours afloat on a raft in the 8-foot swells of the Pacific Ocean, thanks to his electronic distress beacon which bounced a signal off a satellite to an Air Force computer 2,000 miles away.

Jack Hoover was clinging to the side of his raft in 30-mph winds and 50-degree water when the Coast Guard helicopter crew spotted reflective tape on his foul-weather gear and plucked him from the sea about 10:50 p.m. Saturday.

"I'm kind of beat, but it's good to be alive," said Hoover, who was hospitalized overnight for hypothermia but went home Sunday morning.

Hoover said he abandoned his 39-foot sloop at about 10 a.m. when it began taking on water soon after he started sailing near the Farallon Islands, 25 miles west of San Francisco.

Hoover, who had no insulated survival suit, launched his raft and took along food, a few flares, a strobe light and a $300 "emergency position indicator radio beacon" that relays a distress signal through one of three satellites.

"He was well-prepared," said Coast Guard Petty Officer Wayne Winner. "The thing that saved his life was that emergency beacon."

Hoover used up his flares in vain attempts to attract two freighters that passed nearby, and he lost his food on one of the several times when swells tossed him out of the raft.

But he kept operating the emergency beacon, whose signal is picked up by orbiting satellites and relayed to a computer at Scott Air Force Base in Illinois.

"It's a pretty fantastic system," said Winner. "We're proud of it. There are three satellites that orbit the earth for this purpose, two Russian and one American. We have great cooperation from the Russians on this."

RESPONSE

Smith, defeated in his bid for reelection as sheriff during the May primaries, filed the suit July 2 against Gideon, stating Gideon "was one source of false rumors" that a New York pollster hired by Smith supporters said led to the defeat of the sheriff.

The rumors allege Smith "beat" his ex-wife, the former Gail Mabee, who has since remarried.

According to the suit, "Just prior to May 5, 1984, Defendant orally stated to a local newsman that the people of Midland County were not going to have a Sheriff that beats his wife's ass." Smith declined to name news reporters at the time he filed the suit.

William R. Moss of Lubbock law firm Crenshaw, Dupree & Milam, who is defending Gideon in the slander suit, filed a request Jan. 30 for names and documents related to the case.

The petition gave Smith and his attorneys 30 days in which to respond.

In reply to a request for recordings, transcripts or other "tangible evidence of such alleged conversation" between Gideon and Coleman or the name of who has control of it, Smith said they were not in his possession nor did he know who would have them, if they exist.

The response also said there are no other witnesses to the alleged conversation other than former Midland County Attorney J. Scott Henderson.

A list of persons Smith claims to have heard Gideon "make and publish, or cause to be published by third parties in his control" statements pertaining to allegations Smith beat his ex-wife were Henderson, Coleman, Wood, Ms. Holcomb, Darrel Stidham and Mike Moran. Also listed as third persons "under the alleged control" of Gideon who helped publish similar statements were J.D. Luckie, Joe Carr and Tom Sloan, the response said.

Those who have identified Gideon as the source of "any remarks about (Smith) and his treatment of his wife (ex-wife)," were Coleman, Wood, Henderson, Stidham, Moran and Ms. Holcomb, according to Smith's response.

Included in Gideon's request were "any and all tapes, recordings, memorandums, notes, transcripts or other recordings of any conversations between" Gideon and Smith; and any materials relating to polls taken on behalf of Smith, results of the polls, names of those polled, the pollsters and those who prepared the questions and trained or instructed the pollsters.

Also requested were documents relating to news media releases concerning allegations in Smith's original petition, names of all contributors to Smith's re-election campaigns, reports of contributions to Smith's political campaigns since 1976 and Smith's complete income tax returns since 1976.

According to the response, Smith's attorneys said copies of all communication between Smith and Gideon will be released but that Smith does not have copies of polling information in his possession and further objects to the request as being irrelevant.

Also listed as having knowledge of relevant facts to the case were Joe Mabee, Gail Commagere, Win Brown, Arthur Finkelstein, J.C. Barnes, Bill Mathis, King Hughes, LeeAnn Wilson, Robert Settles, David Godfrey, Sue Brannon, Joe Carr and Tom Sloan.

— Transport the Midland County prisoners to other county jails. Wright estimated the cost of housing inmates elsewhere would be $2 million per year.

"Let the people tell us what they want to do," Wright said. "It would give us direction and purpose. Give them a voice in it and let them make the decision."

Welch said, "I think we need a bond issue, a bond election. We need the chamber's support. Welch proposed the county go along with the Task Force study, which was commisioned by and approved by the Midland Chamber. "If we have the support of the chamber, we'd better not lose it."

Anders said he thinks the "study is a waste of money. We have been studying for the last six years."

"We have fought this for four hard years," said Brown. "I like Durward's referendum idea."

Craig said he would prefer the jail be built east of town under the once-proposed $9.9 million financing program and to "expand the courthouse after the jail has been moved."

Thomas, who served on the council in the early 1970s, contends that the $61 million budget today is too much when the budget used to be $11.5 million when he left the council. "We want to look closely at personnel. A year or two ago there was a tremendous amount of building going on. Do we need all those people?"

Mrs. Heck lists provision of services as a priority. "People don't want to think about these services; they want them to be there," she said of water, utilities, streets and police protection. "We're in a catch-up period after being in a boom."

Lowry, saying he has no basic complaints about the council, said he had heard some isolated complaints about the streets and lack of drainage during a rain. "But if you don't have a way to pay for it (storm drainage system) there's no sense in doing it," he said.

POLICE PROTECTION was cited by Carrasco and Thomas as items the council should consider.

"Several people have talked to me about the need for more police protection," said Carrasco. "It's not that the police aren't doing a good job. I personally believe in a prevention type of program and I'd work hard with the Crime Prevention Unit. The need for the Neighborhood Watch program tends to say there is a problem. The people I've talked to would like to see whatever it takes to help the police do a better job."

Thomas, who serves on the board of the 17-county Permian Basin Law Enforcement Academy, would like to see more coordination between the various law enforcement agencies. "We need to keep the police department in the city updated and with new equipment," he said. Marcum said the council wants to continue the rebuilding, maintenance and repair of the streets but it may mean a bond issue in the near future. Looking at several arterials which are under construction, such as Wadley or Midkiff, Marcum said the community has been understanding. "These streets were built in 1948 and with the traffic counts we have they're deteriorating fast."

Lowry, a 31-year-old independent landman, focuses his attention on the worldwide banking crisis, contending that the collapse of the First National Bank of Midland wasn't an isolated case. He said the collapse of smaller banks is being allowed to save larger New York banks that are in trouble with their loans to Third World countries.

"If elected, I would get information to the public in general. People have to be made aware of it and how it affects us directly here. It's important for the public to focus attention to the larger issues which do affect our lives every day," he said. "I fully realize the primary function of city government is to provide services that people expect — water, utilities, protection of property. But at the same time it is becoming very important for Midland to look beyond the city limits."

Carrasco also cited longrange planning for water development as important to Midland's future. "Without water, we are nothing," he said.

ALTHOUGH THESE candidates are running for the at-large positions, they voiced a positive outlook on the change to single-member districts.

"I'd like to be part of the team that is going to put it into effect," said Carrasco. "People on all sides of town don't understand it. We need to do more communicating."

"After talking to a lot of people in the community, they really feel like their area has not been represented by the present council," said Marcum. "It's an opportunity for more people to become involved in city government. I feel the council has been extremely open to any suggestions or phone calls or neighborhood meetings to discuss the issues. But the neighborhoods haven't felt compelled to come to meetings in the past."

Mrs. Heck noted that not understanding what happens at City Hall faced by all people and not just those living in District 2. She recalled a story of one man who was building a home and "had problems with City Hall all along the way. It seems the average citizen gets balled up in red tape once they enter City Hall. People get shuffled from one department to another."

Thomas said when he previously served on the council he faced the problem of not getting citizen input. "I sat through so many council meetings and the public didn't get involved as they should. It was only special interest groups."

The council may be taking a stronger look at how south and east

Midland can be developed in the next two years, according to two candidates.

Mrs. Heck noted those areas were designated in the Objectives for the '80s program as needing the most help. Some of that assistance has to come from private enterprise, and she cited as an example the development of a three-block area near Washington Park. "It's got potential to develop freshly as an example."

Beginnings have been made in that part of Midland, she said, including new businesses on Lee and Carver streets. "The city should do what it legally can to aid that."

Carrasco also looked at the Objectives program and the Washington Park housing project. "People are involved in it; it's not a handout. It's a take-pride-in-yourself project. I think that can go a long way in the community," he said.

After the war, Europe's former subjects no longer held them in awe and would not tolerate foreign rule indefinitely. The Europeans found that they could either grant independence to their colonies voluntarily or be driven out militarily.

Some, like the British in Malaysia, saw the writing on the wall and provided for a peaceful transition to independence. Others, like the French in Vietnam, asserted that they had come, as one French general put it, "to reclaim our inheritance" and delayed serious consideration of independence until it was too late to do so without bloodshed.

For France the result was the first Vietnam War. From 1946 to 1954, the French battled Vietnamese insurgents in a vain attempt to stay in Indochina. The United States from the outset urged France to give the colonies their independence. Presidents Roosevelt, Truman and Eisenhower all pushed for decolonization. But it took over $5 billion in military expenditures and 150,000 casualties before the French government was forced to follow that advice.

France's principal enemy was the Communist Viet Minh, led by Ho Chi Minh. During World War II, Ho had taken carefully-calculated steps to position himself to strike for power afterward. At the war's end, his opportunity came. Through ruthless and adroit fighting, he had eliminated his nationalist rivals as significant military forces. When the sudden surrender of Japan produced a vacuum of power in Vietnam, Ho moved quickly to exploit it. In 1945, he seized power in Northern Vietnam and declared the creation of the Democratic Republic of Vietnam.

The United States kept the French war at arm's length. Truman wanted non-Communist governments in Cambodia, Laos and Vietnam, but he did not want to taint American policy with colonialism by cooperating with the French in their war against the Viet Minh. He understood that the Indochinese needed to be given a stake in the battle against Communism. They would not fight indefinitely in order to keep Indochina for the French, but they would do so if they were defending their own governments.

Still, Truman believed he had little leverage to force the French to decolonize. His priorities were in Europe, where he needed French help to ward off a bellicose Soviet Union, and therefore he was reluctant to antagonize France over Indochina.

The fall of China to Mao's Red Army in 1949 swept away previous assumptions. The French, who had planned to grind down their weak opponent, now had to fight an enemy who as a result of assistance from the Chinese was better armed and supplied. Ho, who had waged a poor man's war, now could turn up the heat on the French.

Truman, who had considered the war a colonialist misadventure, now saw it as a necessary element in his strategy to contain the expansion of communism. And when communist Chinese troops intervened in the Korean War in late 1950, Truman came to regard the French presence in Indochina as the means to draw at least some Chinese forces away from the Korean peninsula.

Chairman Mao became Uncle Ho's godfather. He overhauled the Viet Minh's primitive forces, training his troops at Chinese bases and providing them with combat advisers, trucks, artillery, and automatic weapons. Over the next three years, the Viet Minh cleared the French out of the areas adjacent to China but failed to take any major population or agricultural centers. In 1954, Ho's forces retreated toward Laos, but the French pursued them, establishing their principal base at Dien Bien Phu.

The French decision to entrench their forces there was a catastrophic strategic miscalculation. Those who supported it were defending the defense of the indefensible: Dien Bien Phu was an isolated island of French power in a sea of Viet Minh territory. Supplies could reach it only by air, and it was situated in a basin dominated by surrounding high ground held by the Viet Minh. Ho would have been a fool not to hit it with all the force he could muster. Ho was no fool.

The battle of Dien Bien Phu dealt a death blow to French morale. Because only about 5 percent of French forces in Indochina were involved, even total defeat at Dien Bien Phu could not have been decisive in the outcome of the war. But it took on symbolic importance out of proportion to its significance and proved to be a mortal psychological defeat.

The Viet Minh suffered over three times as many casualties as the French did at Dien Bien Phu, but it was the French will to resist that was broken. Opposition to the war had been building in France. Now it snowballed. In the end, the war was lost on the home front in France rather than on the battlefields of Vietnam. No one dreamed that the same thing would happen to the United States 20 years later.

Our primary interest in Vietnam was to prevent the fall of Indochina to the communists. We wanted to prevent the loss of Vietnam because we believed it would lead to the fall of the rest of Southeast Asia. This came to be known as the domino theory.

Many would scoff at the domino theory in later years. But it is revealing to note that the siege of Dien Bien Phu was made possible only by the fall of Asia's largest domino — China. With the French war effort in imminent danger of collapse, the United States had to decide what it would do to stop the next domino from tumbling over.

When France asked the United States for help at Dien Bien Phu, its request was for air strikes, not ground troops. Only if the French were to withdraw from Vietnam would ground troops be needed.

Adm. Arthur Radford, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, suggested that we use 60 B-29 bombers in the Philippines in night raids to destroy the Viet Minh positions. He also devised a plan, known as Operation Vulture, for accomplishing the same objective with three small tactical atomic bombs. This option was never seriously considered. President Eisenhower later spoke of possibly using diversionary tactics, such as a naval blockade, against the Viet Minh's patrons and principal source of military supplies, the Communist Chinese. This plan was also abandoned.

Both Eisenhower and the Secretary of State John Foster Dulles were reluctant to take any of these steps. Like Truman, they believed any direct intervention to help the French would gravely damage our relations with newly independent countries. The president also insisted that we have congressional approval before acting. When the administration tested the waters, it found significant opposition to the idea of another military involvement in Asia, especially so soon after the Korean War. Eisenhower concluded that he could only bring the Congress along if the United States acted in concert with its allies.

The proposal for united action ran into a roadblock in Britain. Churchill refused to cooperate, and Eisenhower steadfastly opposed a unilateral American intervention. The French were therefore left to fend for themselves.

On May 7, 1954, after 55 days of gallantly defending a territory that had been reduced to the size of a baseball field, the French garrison at Dien Bien Phu was overrun by human wave assaults. The defeat signaled the beginning of a complete and rapid withdrawal of the French from all of Indochina and left the United States as the only power capable of blocking further communist expansionism in Southeast Asia.

Our first critical mistake in Vietnam was not to have intervened in the battle of Dien Bien Phu. The military situation was tailor-made for the use of our air power. The Viet Minh's siege required them to concentrate huge stores of material and hordes of soldiers in a relatively small area, and the terrain restricted them to only a few supply routes. The French air force in Indochina was too weak to exploit this vulnerability. But if we had sent in fleets of heavy bombers to drop conventional explosives, we could have crippled the Viet Minh in a matter of days.

The French were in a much stronger position in Indochina as a whole than the plight of their isolated garrison indicated. In his memoirs, Nikita Khrushchev wrote that in 1954 the situation for the Viet Minh was "very grave" and that "the resistance movement in Vietnam was on the brink of collapse." Khrushchev also reported that Zhou Enlai had said that unless the Geneva Conference concluded a cease-fire soon the Viet Minh would not be able to hold out against the French. According to an official North Vietnamese history published in 1965, the communists were seriously worried about the effect a possible American intervention would have on the balance of power in the war.

By standing aside as our ally went down to defeat, the United States lost its last chance to stop the expansion of communism in Southeast Asia at little cost to itself. We should have intervened alone if necessary to help the French because they were the strongest regional power fighting Communist aggression. If we had saved Dien Bien Phu, the

FRENCH INDOCHINA

INDOCHINA UNDER FRENCH COLONIAL RULE

French still probably would have withdrawn and finally given their colonies independence, as we had urged for so long. But they would have done so in a deliberate and responsible manner rather than in a headlong rush for the door.

An obsessive fear of associating with European colonial powers blinded successive American administrations to a very simple fact: Communism, not colonialism, was the principal cause of the war in Indochina. Colonialism complicated the prosecution of the French phase of the war because it allowed the communists to obscure the issue, but the war itself originated in Ho Chi Minh's willful push for total power and was sustained by Communist China's massive support of the Viet Minh. Our mistake was failing to understand that the issue was not whether colonialism would succeed, but what would succeed colonialism.

More hot check warrants cleared

HOUSTON (AP) — Harris County authorities say they expect to clear at least 5,000 more hot check warrants this week as the result of massive arrest sweep carried out by hundreds of law officers.

In a crackdown that began Saturday, county constables and sheriff's deputies cleared more than 3,000 worthless check warrants, almost one-third of those the county has issued, authorities said.

"The great majority of people who write bad checks are fine, upstanding people," said Bill Camp, head of the district attorney's worthless check division.

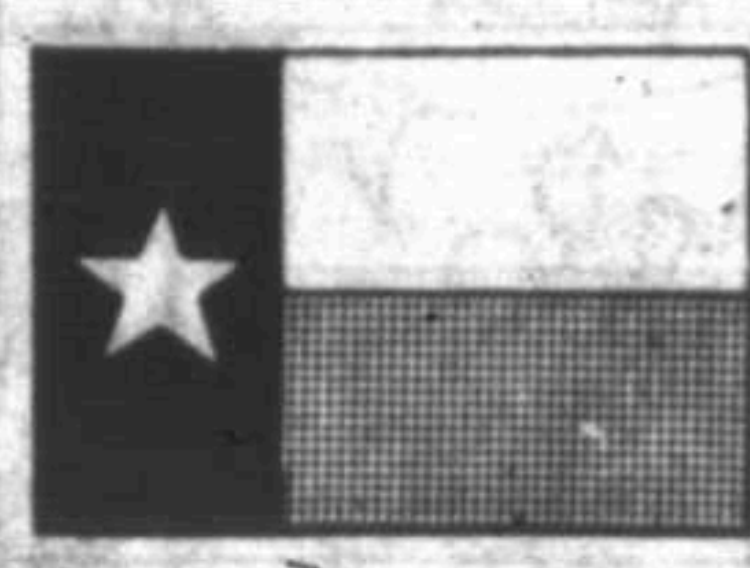

But many people unintentionally write bad checks and fail to pay restitution despite being given ample time to make good on the debts, Camp said.

Hot check arrests totaled 263 by the time officers ended their sweep Saturday night, said Lt. David Wingo of Precinct 1.

Authorities said a final figure on the restitution payments would not be available until Monday, but estimated more than $500,000 was collected.

Precinct 1 Constable Walter Rankin spearheaded the sweep, which included more than 400 deputies and constables.

"This sweep shows a spirit of cooperation we've never had before in county law enforcement here," said Sheriff Johnny Klevenhagen. "We had constables and sheriff's deputies even riding in the same cars serving warrants."

Authorities said officers would follow up on unserved warrants this week.

"We want to try to get the bad check sweeps going every three to four months," Rankin said. "We have a pretty good backlog of warrants built up and we need to start chipping away at it."

More than 10,300 warrants were issued before the raid and about 3,000 were cleared by arrests or people arranging restitution payments, authorities said.

"I feel certain we'll clear 5,000 to 6,000 warrants by the end of this week," said Don Chumley, chief of the Precinct 1 constable's warrant division.

All of the cases involved checks of less than $200 and some people had as many as 40 warrants issued against them for worthless checks, Chumley said.

People who were arrested were checked through a central computer for other warrants, helping clear up several traffic violations and felonies, Klevenhagen said.

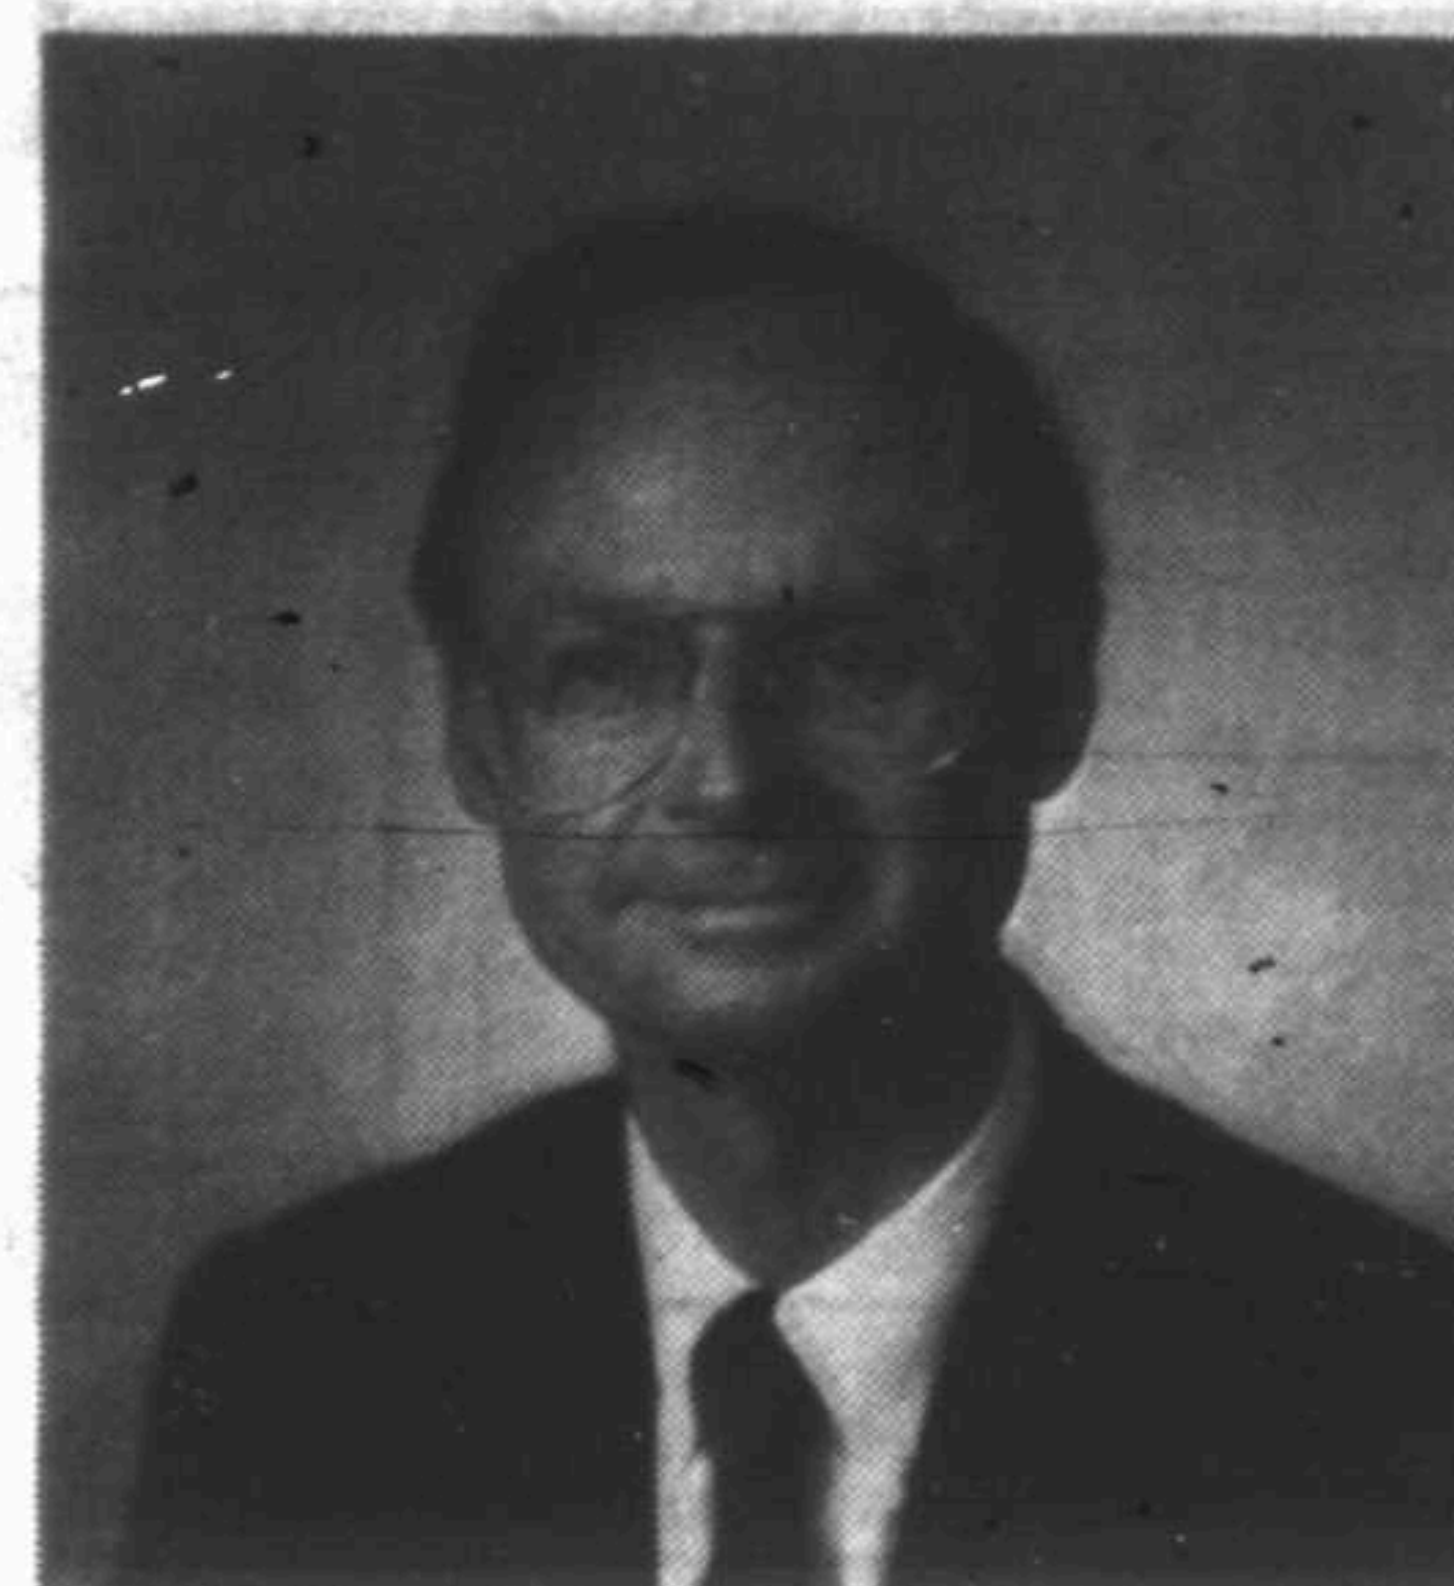

Most of those arrested posted personal recognizance bonds before justices of the peace, who were on duty from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. Saturday, the sheriff said. Those wanted for felonies were jailed.

Camp said the defendant would be taken before a magistrate who could accept a guilty fee and assess them the maximum $200 fine. Otherwise, the defendant could post bond and then make restitution to the merchant — in whatever form he would take it — and receive a receipt to show the magistrate.

STATE IN BRIEF

Black opposition not factor in all-white town

VIDOR, Texas (AP) — A 75-year-old man who claims to control the Ku Klux Klan in Texas says that if he is elected mayor he will allow Blacks with "proper backing and a clean record" to move to Vidor.

Ku Klux Klan Grand Dragon A.W. Harvey is challenging incumbent mayor Dru Stephenson, 59, in the April 6 mayoral election.

Harvey isn't worried about Black opposition in the election. All 13,440 Vidor citizens are white.

Harvey told the Orange Leader that he is running because property taxes, school taxes and utility bills are too high. Vidor residents, who have traditionally opposed tax increases, recently rejected a bond issue to provide sewer services in some parts of town.

"I pay $600 a year in school taxes, and I don't even have any one in school," Harvey said.

But Harvey also said he fears blacks will take over the town and ruin the school district.

Hotel braced for trip

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Movers hauling the historic Fairmount Hotel on a four-block journey to a new home braced for a trip across a bridge spanning the San Antonio River.

The bridge was to be shored up by early today and ready for the 3.2

million pound hotel to roll across.

The 79-year-old hotel, being moved to make room for a new downtown mall, was nudged off its foundation for the first time Saturday.

The three-story brick structure was moved a half-block the first day, then turned a corner and traveled another half block Sunday.

It was to spend the night in the street between the Marriott Hotel and the San Antonio Convention Center.

The hotel has suffered no damage so far.

Arrest made in dam case

COLDSRING, Texas (AP) — A 26-year-old former convict was arrested on charges he allegedly threatened to blow up the Lake Livingston dam to flood out his former roommates, who lived downstream, authorities said.

Harrison County sheriff's officers arrested Wesley Gene Simpson just outside Marshall Sunday, said Tina Murray, San Jacinto County sheriff's dispatcher.

Simpson was taken to San Jacinto County Jail, where he was being held on $50,000 bond. Ms. Murray said Sunday night. She said details of the arrest were not immediately available.

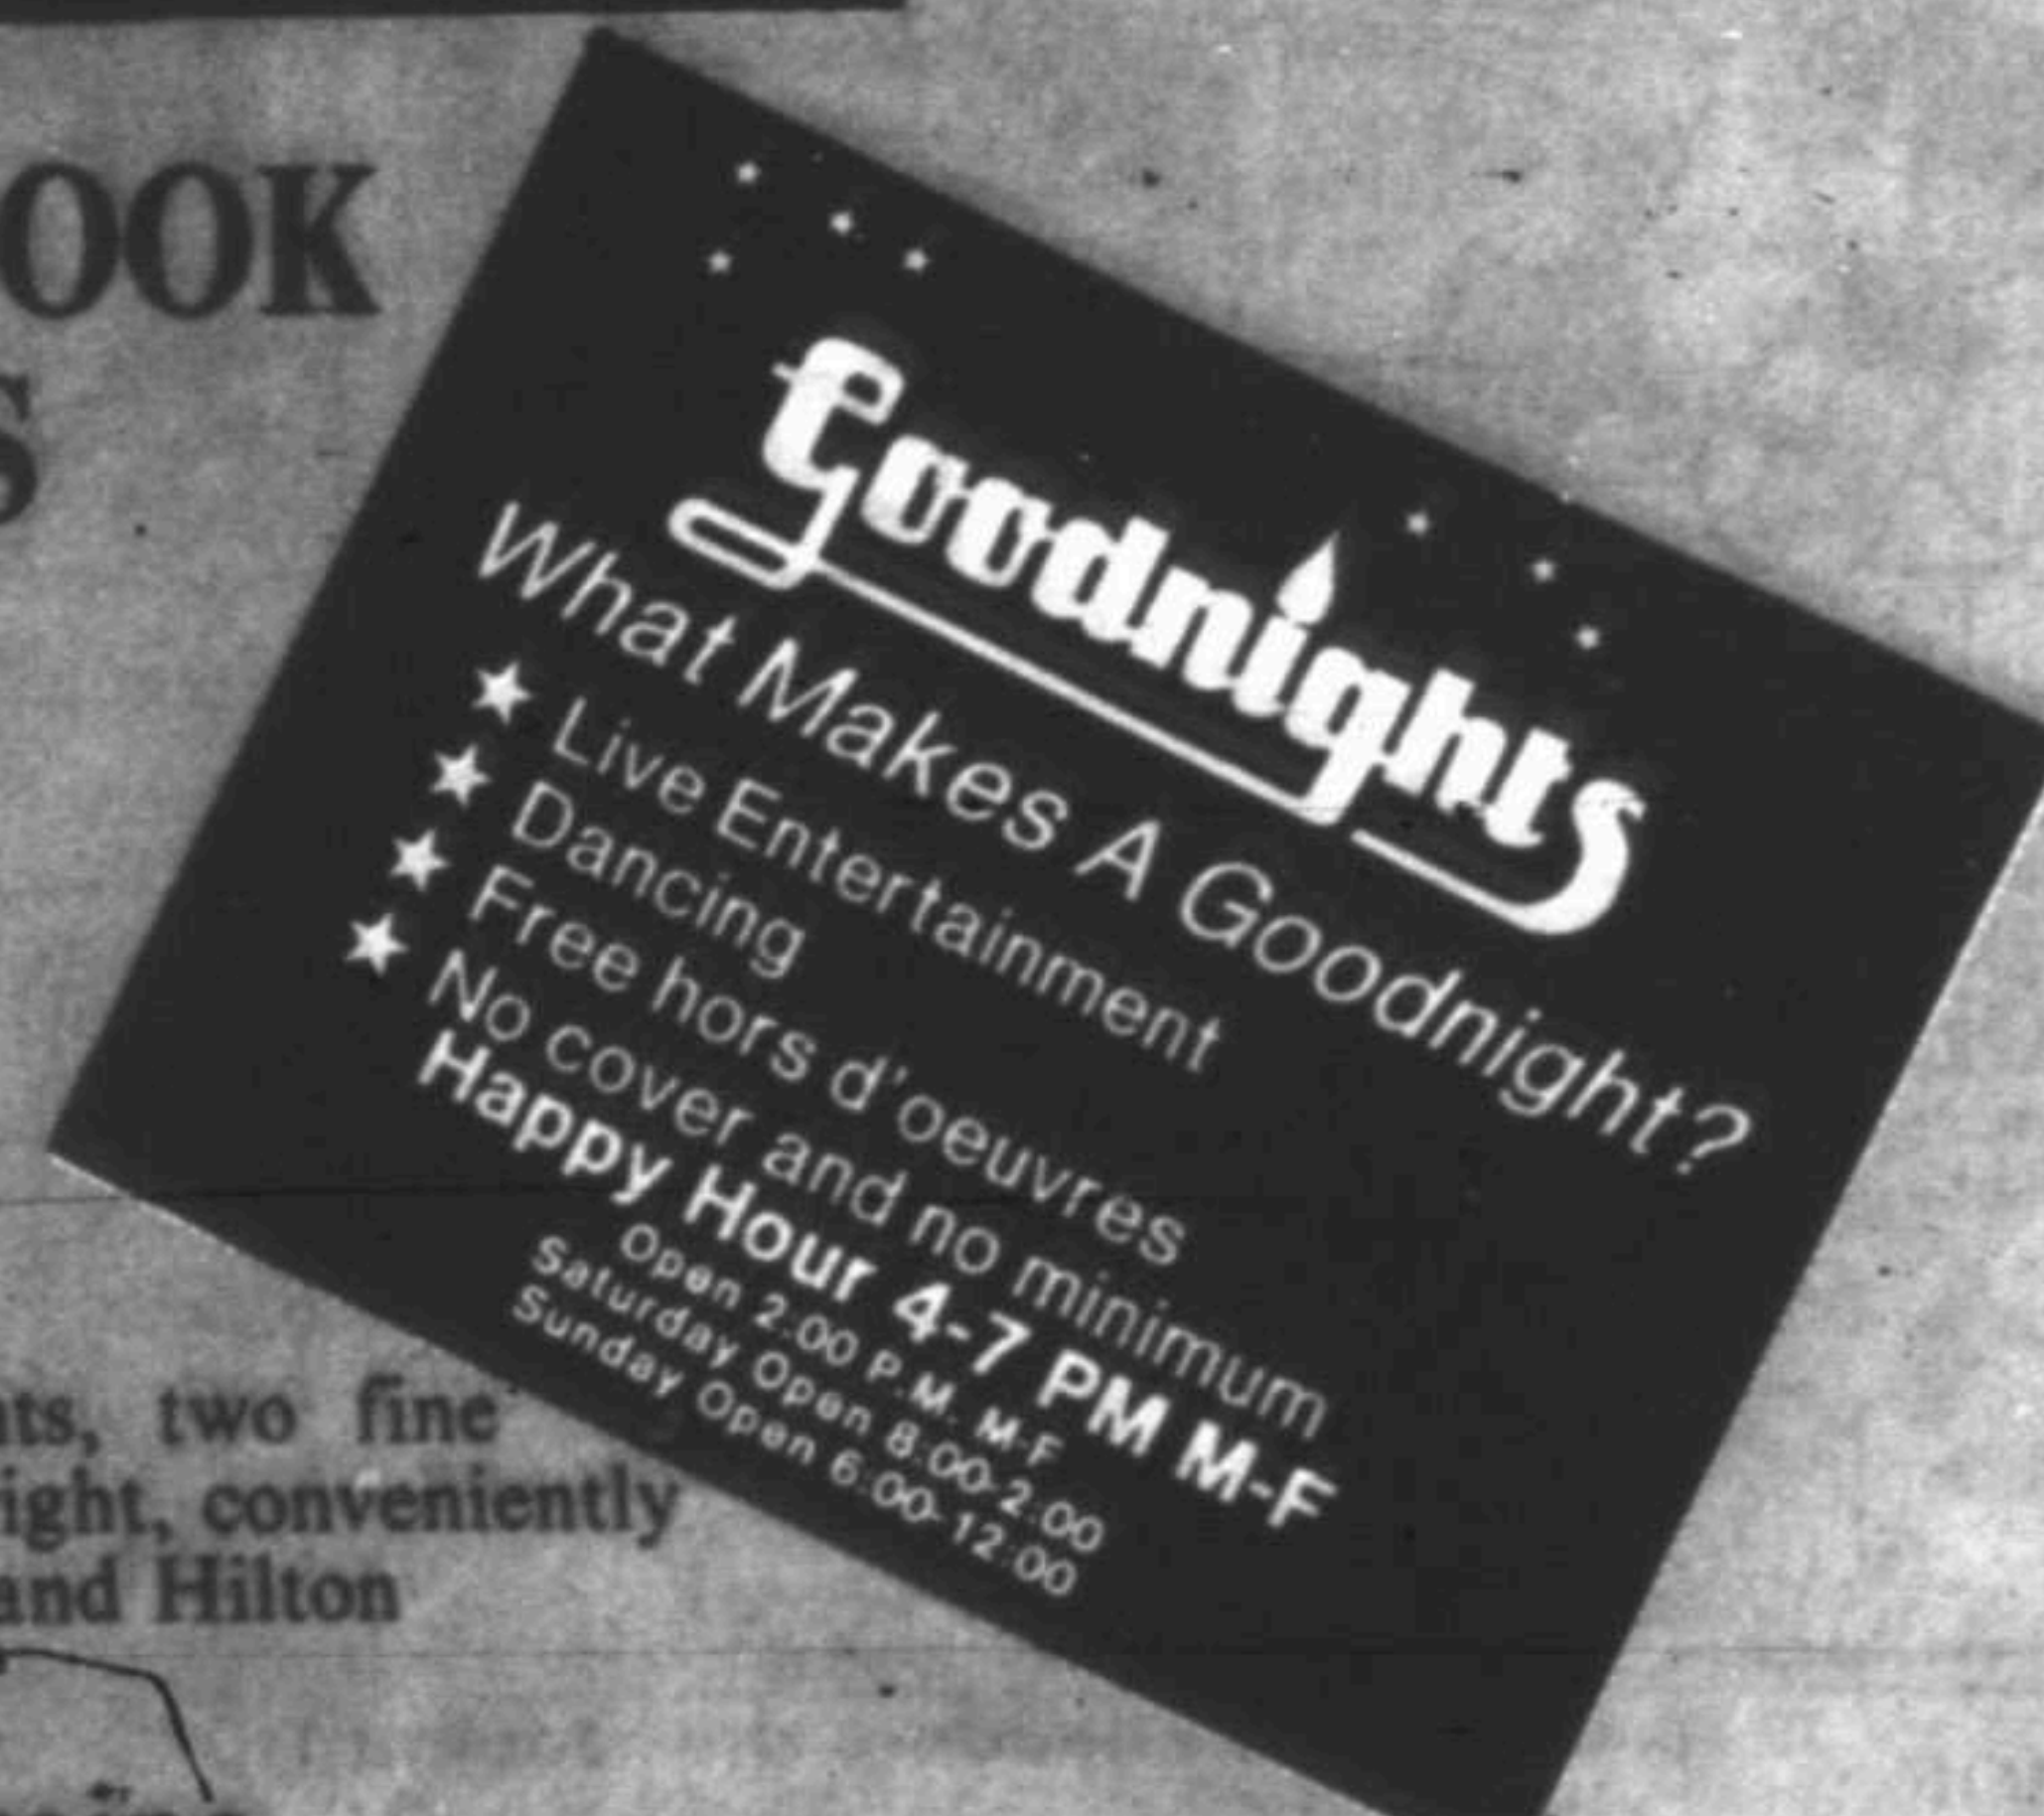

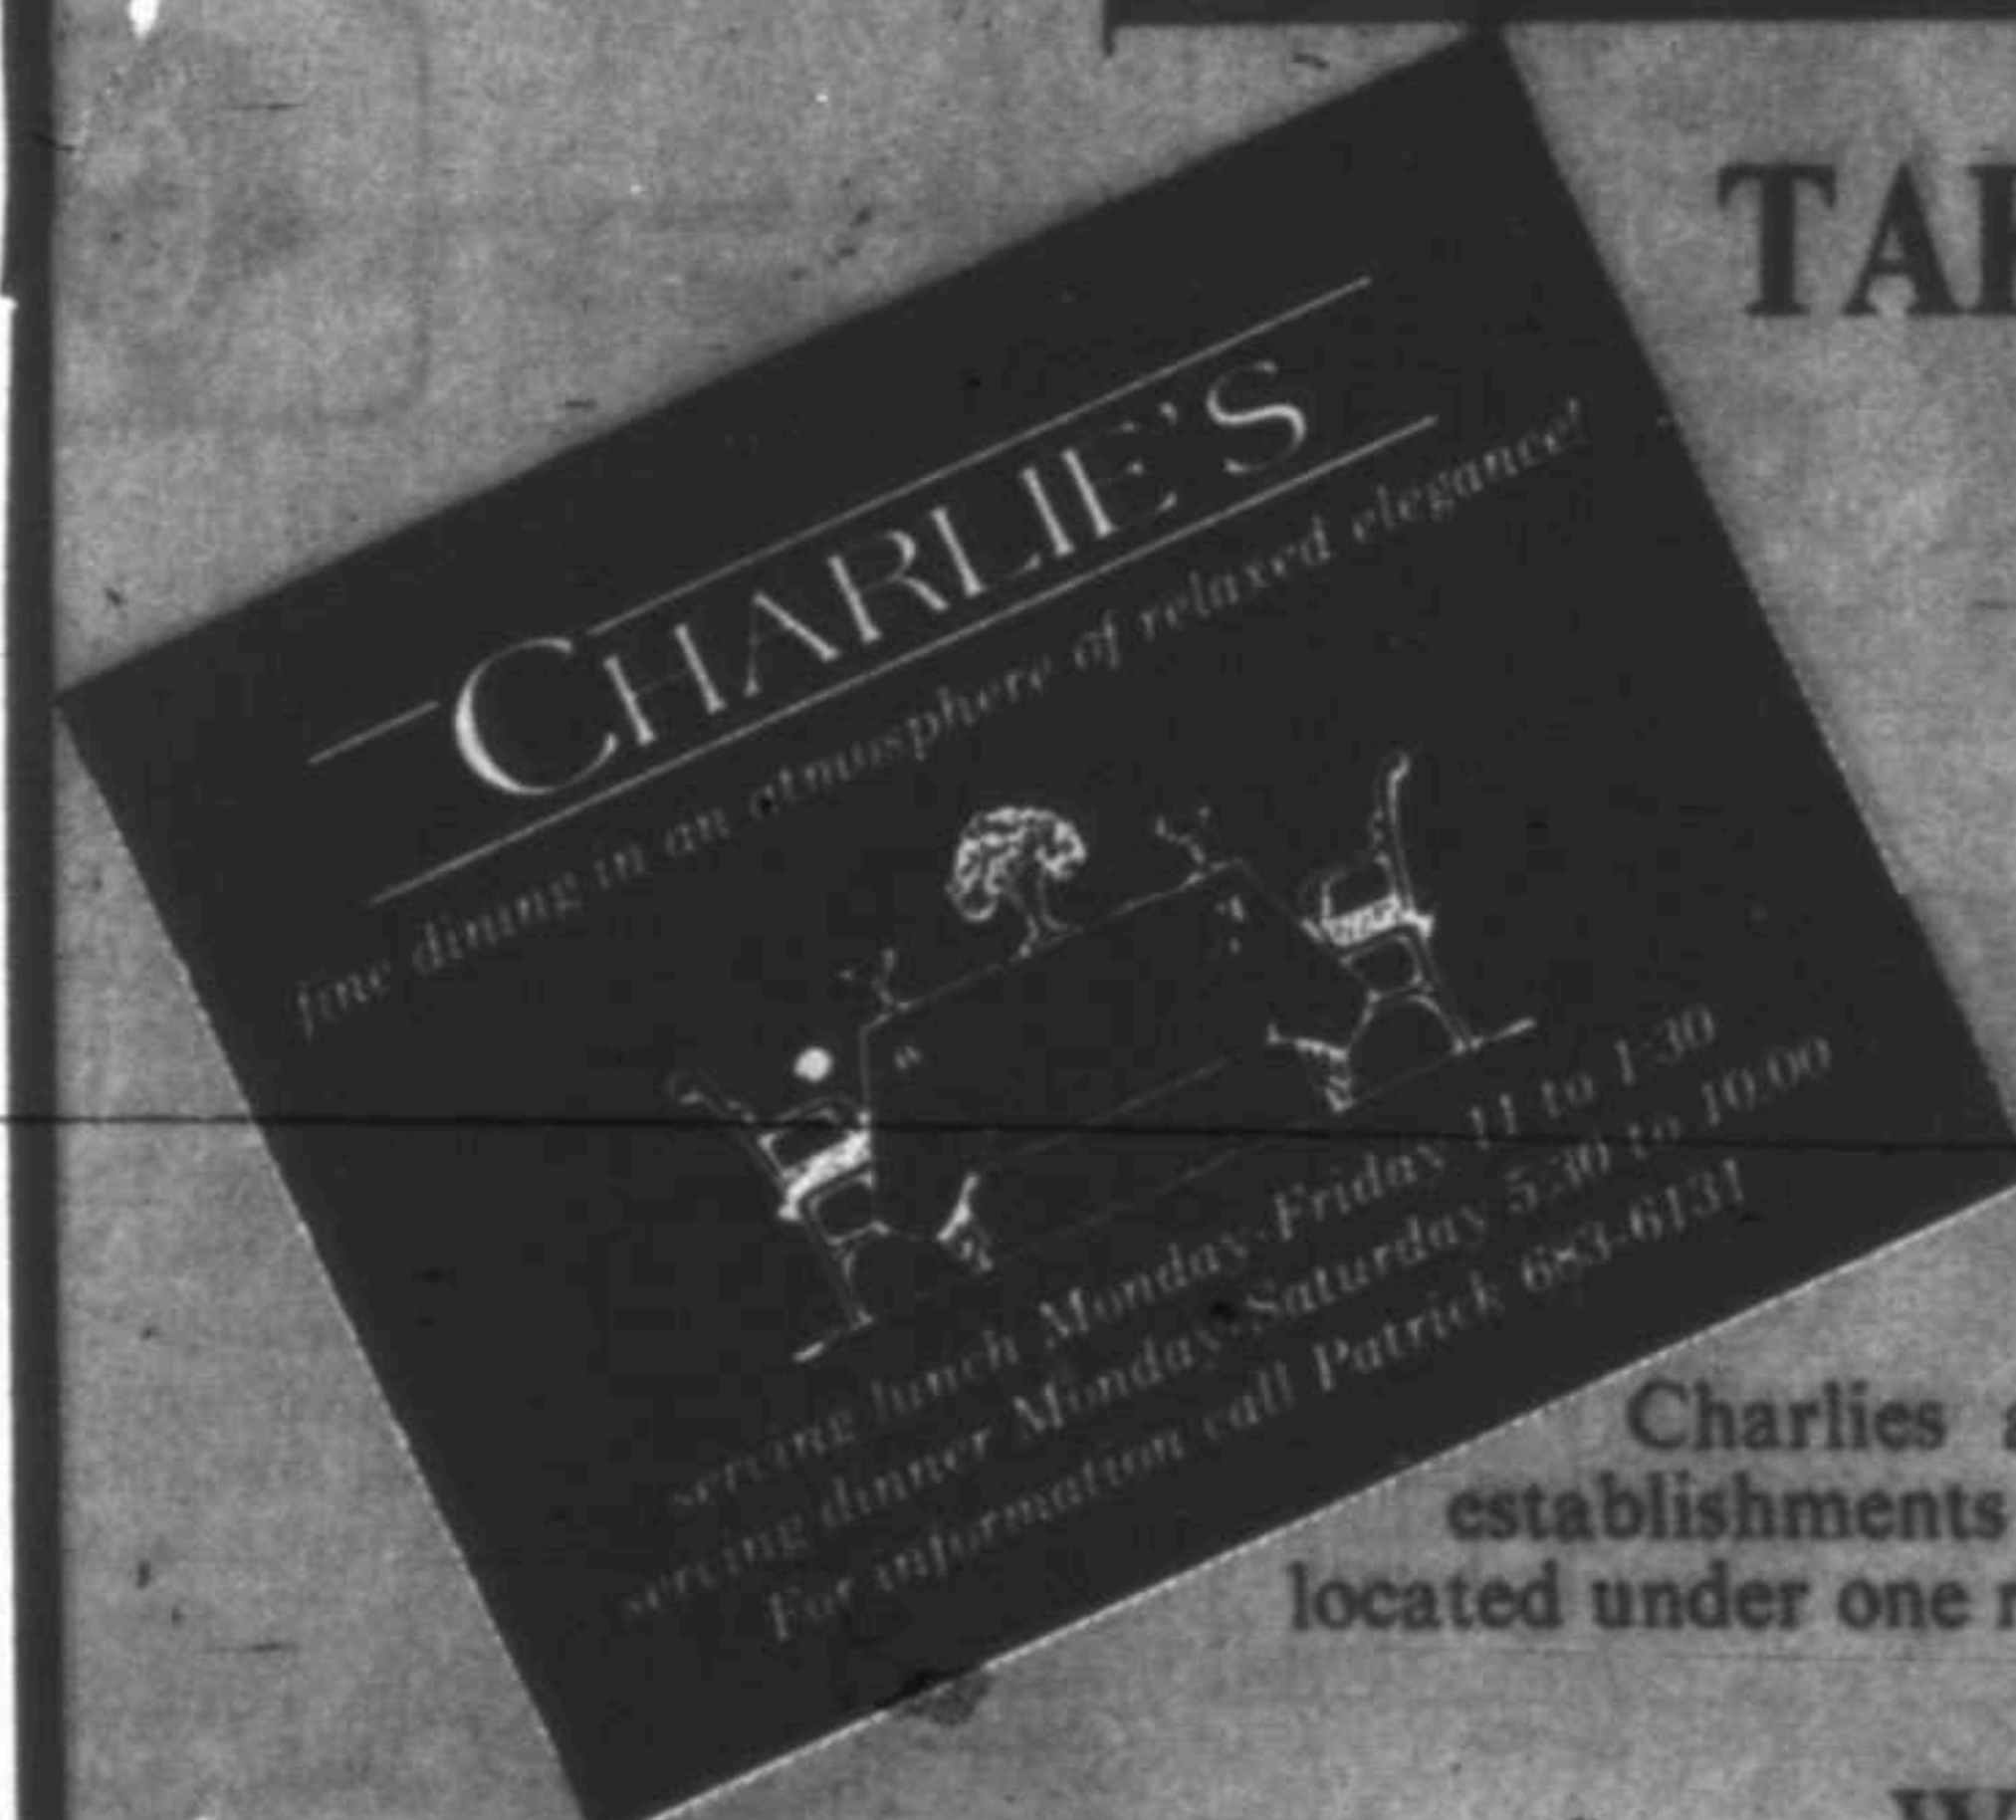

Simpson, a former Texas Department of Corrections inmate, is charged with making a terroristic threat, authorities said.

The arrest ended a four-day search that began after witnesses tipped San Jacinto County sheriff's investigators they overheard Simpson on Wednesday allegedly threaten to blow up the dam.

Hi-tech advances help save yachtsman

By STEVE WILSTEIN
Associated Press Writer

SAN FRANCISCO — A 50-year-old yachtsman was rescued after 13 hours afloat on a raft in the 8-foot swells of the Pacific Ocean, thanks to his electronic distress beacon which bounced a signal off a satellite to an Air Force computer 2,000 miles away.

Jack Hoover was clinging to the side of his raft in 30-mph winds and 50-degree water when the Coast Guard helicopter crew spotted reflective tape on his foul-weather gear and plucked him from the sea about 10:50 p.m. Saturday.

"I'm kind of beat, but it's good to be alive," said Hoover, who was hospitalized overnight for hypothermia but went home Sunday morning.

Hoover said he abandoned his 30-foot sloop at about 10 a.m. when it began taking on water soon after he started sailing near the Farallon Islands, 25 miles west of San Francisco.

Hoover, who had no insulated survival suit, launched his raft and took along food, a few flares, a strobe light and a $300 "emergency position indicator radio beacon" that relays a distress signal through one of three satellites.

"He was well-prepared," said Coast Guard Petty Officer Wayne Winner. "The thing that saved his life was that emergency beacon." Hoover used up his flares in vain attempts to attract two freighters that passed nearby, and he lost his food on one of the several times when swells tossed him out of the raft.

But he kept operating the emergency beacon, whose signal is picked up by orbiting satellites and relayed to a computer at Scott Air Force Base in Illinois.

"It's a pretty fantastic system," said Winner. "We're proud of it. There are three satellites that orbit the earth for this purpose, two Russian and one American. We have great cooperation from the Russians on this."

Smith, defeated in his bid for reelection as sheriff during the May primaries, filed the suit July 2 against Gideon, stating Gideon "was one source of false rumors" that a New York pollster hired by Smith supporters said led to the defeat of the sheriff.

The rumors allege Smith "beat" his ex-wife, the former Gail Mabee, who has since remarried.

According to the suit, "Just prior to May 5, 1984, Defendant orally stated to a local newsman that the people of Midland County were not going to have a Sheriff that beats his wife's ass." Smith declined to name news reporters at the time he filed the suit.

William R. Moss of Lubbock law firm Crenshaw, Dupree & Milam, who is defending Gideon in the slander suit, filed a request Jan. 30 for names and documents related to the case.

The petition gave Smith and his attorneys 30 days in which to respond.

In reply to a request for recordings, transcripts or other "tangible evidence of such alleged conversation" between Gideon and Coleman or the name of who has control of it, Smith said they were not in his possession nor did he know who would have them, if they exist.

The response also said there are no other witnesses to the alleged conversation other than former Midland County Attorney J. Scott Henderson.

A list of persons Smith claims to have heard Gideon "make and publish, or cause to be published by third parties in his control" statements pertaining to allegations Smith beat his ex-wife were Henderson, Coleman, Wood, Ms. Holcomb, Darrell Stidham and Mike Moran.

Also listed as third persons "under the alleged control" of Gideon who helped publish similar statements were J.D. Luckie, Joe Carr and Tom Sloan, the response said.

Those who have identified Gideon as the source of "any remarks about (Smith) and his treatment of his wife (ex-wife)," were Coleman, Wood, Henderson, Stidham, Moran and Ms. Holcomb, according to Smith's response.

Included in Gideon's request were "any and all tapes, recordings, memorandums, notes, transcripts or other recordings of any conversations between" Gideon and Smith; and any materials relating to polls taken on behalf of Smith, results of the polls, names of those polled, the pollsters and those who prepared the questions and trained or instructed the pollsters.

Also requested were documents relating to news media releases concerning allegations in Smith's original petition, names of all contributors to Smith's re-election campaigns, reports of contributions to Smith's political campaigns since 1976 and Smith's complete income tax returns since 1976.

According to the response, Smith's attorneys said copies of all communication between Smith and Gideon will be released but that Smith does not have copies of polling information in his possession and further objects to the request as being irrelevant.

Also listed as having knowledge of relevant facts to the case were Joe Mabee, Gail Commagere, Win Brown, Arthur Finkelstein, J.C. Barnes, Bill Mathis, King Hughes, LeeAnn Wilson, Robert Settles, David Godfrey, Sue Brannon, Joe Carr and Tom Sloan.

JAIL

— Transport the Midland County prisoners to other county jails. Wright estimated the cost of housing inmates elsewhere would be $2 million per year.

"Let the people tell us what they

Welch said, "I think we need a bond issue, a bond election. We need the chamber's support. Welch proposed the county go along with the Task Force study, which was commissioned by and approved by the Midland Chamber. "If we have the support of the chamber, we'd better not lose it."

Anders said he thinks the "study is a waste of money. We have been studying for the last six years."

"We have fought this for four hard years," said Brown. "I like Durward's referendum idea."

Craig said he would prefer the jail be built east of town under the once-proposed $9.9 million financing program and to "expand the courthouse after the jail has been moved."

Thomas, who served on the council in the early 1970s, contends that the $61 million budget today is too much when the budget used to be $11.5 million when he left the council. "We want to look closely at personnel. A year or two ago there was a tremendous amount of building going on. Do we need all those people?"

Mrs. Heck lists provision of services as a priority. "People don't want to think about these services; they want them to be there," she said of water, utilities, streets and police protection. "We're in a catch-up period after being in a boom."

Lowry, saying he has no basic complaints about the council, said he had heard some isolated complaints about the streets and lack of drainage during a rain. "But if you don't have a way to pay for it (storm drainage system) there's no sense in doing it," he said.

POLICE PROTECTION was cited by Carrasco and Thomas as items the council should consider.

"Several people have talked to me about the need for more police protection," said Carrasco. "It's not that the police aren't doing a good job. I personally believe in a prevention type of program and I'd work hard with the Crime Prevention Unit. The need for the Neighborhood Watch program tends to say there is a problem. The people I've talked to would like to see whatever it takes to help the police do a better job."

Thomas, who serves on the board of the 17-county Permian Basin Law Enforcement Academy, would like to see more coordination between the various law enforcement agencies. "We need to keep the police department in the city updated and with new equipment," he said.

Marcum said the council wants to continue the rebuilding, maintenance and repair of the streets but it may mean a bond issue in the near future. Looking at several arterials which are under construction, such as Wadley or Midkiff, Marcum said the community has been understanding. "These streets were built in 1948 and with the traffic counts we have they're deteriorating fast."

Lowry, a 31-year-old independent landman, focuses his attention on the worldwide banking crisis, contending that the collapse of the First National Bank of Midland wasn't an isolated case. He said the collapse of smaller banks is being allowed to save larger New York banks that are in trouble with their loans to Third World countries.

"If elected, I would get information to the public in general. People have to be made aware of it and how it affects us directly here. It's important for the public to focus attention to the larger issues which do affect our lives every day," he said. "I fully realize the primary function of city government is to provide services that people expect — water, utilities, protection of property. But at the same time it is becoming very important for Midland to look beyond the city limits."

Carrasco also cited longrange planning for water development as important to Midland's future. "Without water, we are nothing," he said.

ALTHOUGH THESE candidates are running for the at-large positions, they voiced a positive outlook on the change to single-member districts.

"I'd like to be part of the team that is going to put it into effect," said Carrasco. "People on all sides of town don't understand it. We need to do more communicating."

"After talking to a lot of people in the community, they really feel like their area has not been represented by the present council," said Marcum. "It's an opportunity for more people to become involved in city government. I feel the council has been extremely open to any suggestions or phone calls or neighborhood meetings to discuss the issues. But the neighborhoods haven't felt compelled to come to meetings in the past."

Mrs. Heck noted that not understanding what happens at City Hall faced by all people and not just those living in District 2. She recalled a story of one man who was building a home and "had problems with City Hall all along the way. It seems the average citizen gets balled up in red tape once they enter City Hall. People get shuffled from one department to another."

Thomas said when he previously served on the council he faced the problem of not getting citizen input. "I sat through so many council meetings and the public didn't get involved as they should. It was only special interest groups."

The council may be taking a stronger look at how south and east

Midland can be developed in the next two years, according to two candidates.

Mrs. Heck noted those areas were designated in the Objectives for the '80s program as needing the most help. Some of that assistance has to come from private enterprise, and she cited as an example the development of a three-block area near Washington Park. "It's got potential to develop fresh as an example."

Beginnings have been made in that part of Midland, she said, including new businesses on Lee and Carver streets. "The city should do what it legally can to aid that."

Carrasco also looked at the Objectives program and the Washington Park housing project. "People are involved in it; it's not a handout. It's a take-pride-in-yourself project. I think that can go a long way in the community," he said.

After the war, Europe's former subjects no longer held them in awe and would not tolerate foreign rule indefinitely. The Europeans found that they could either grant independence to their colonies voluntarily or be driven out militarily.

Some, like the British in Malaysia, saw the writing on the wall and provided for a peaceful transition to independence. Others, like the French in Vietnam, asserted that they had come, as one French general put it, "to reclaim our inheritance" and delayed serious consideration of independence until it was too late to do so without bloodshed.

For France the result was the first Vietnam War. From 1946 to 1954, the French-battled Vietnamese insurgents in a vain attempt to stay in Indochina. The United States from the outset urged France to give the colonies their independence. Presidents Roosevelt, Truman and Eisenhower all pushed for decolonization. But it took over $5 billion in military expenditures and 150,000 casualties before the French government was forced to follow that advice.

France's principal enemy was the Communist Viet Minh, led by Ho Chi Minh. During World War II, Ho had taken carefully-calculated steps to position himself to strike for power afterward. At the war's end, his opportunity came. Through ruthless and adroit fighting, he had eliminated his nationalist rivals as significant military forces. When the sudden surrender of Japan produced a vacuum of power in Vietnam, Ho moved quickly to exploit it. In 1946, he seized power in Northern Vietnam and declared the creation of the Democratic Republic of Vietnam.

The United States kept the French war at arm's length. Truman wanted non-Communist governments in Cambodia, Laos and Vietnam, but he did not want to taint American policy with colonialism by cooperating with the French in their war against the Viet Minh. He understood that the Indochinese needed to be given a stake in the battle against Communism. They would not fight indefinitely in order to keep Indochina for the French, but they would do so if they were defending their own governments.

Still, Truman believed he had little leverage to force the French to decolonize. His priorities were in Europe, where he needed French help to ward off a bellicose Soviet Union, and therefore he was reluctant to antagonize France over Indochina.

The fall of China to Mao's Red Army in 1949 swept away previous assumptions. The French, who had planned to grind down their weak opponent, now had to fight an enemy who as a result of assistance from the Chinese was better armed and supplied. Ho, who had waged a poor man's war, now could turn up the heat on the French.

Truman, who had considered the war a colonialist misadventure, now saw it as a necessary element in his strategy to contain the expansion of communism. And when communist Chinese troops intervened in the Korean War in late 1950, Truman came to regard the French presence in Indochina as the means to draw at least some Chinese forces away from the Korean peninsula.

Chairman Mao became Uncle Ho's godfather. He overhauled the Viet Minh's primitive forces, training his troops at Chinese bases and providing them with combat advisers, trucks, artillery, and automatic weapons. Over the next three years, the Viet Minh cleared the French out of the areas adjacent to China but failed to take any major population or agricultural centers. In 1954, Ho's forces retreated toward Laos, but the French pursued them, establishing their principal base at Dien Bien Phu.

The French decision to entrench their forces there was a catastrophic strategic miscalculation. Those who supported it were defending the defense of the indefensible: Dien Bien Phu was an isolated island of French power in a sea of Viet Minh territory. Supplies could reach it only by air, and it was situated in a basin dominated by surrounding high ground held by the Viet Minh. Ho would have been a fool not to hit it with all the force he could muster. Ho was no fool.

The battle of Dien Bien Phu dealt a death blow to French morale. Because only about 5 percent of French forces in Indochina were involved, even total defeat at Dien Bien Phu could not have been decisive in the outcome of the war. But it took on symbolic importance out of proportion to its significance and proved to be a mortal psychological defeat.

The Viet Minh suffered over three times as many casualties as the French did at Dien Bien Phu, but it was the French will to resist that was broken. Opposition to the war had been building in France. Now it snowballed. In the end, the war was lost on the home front in France rather than on the battlefields of Vietnam. No one dreamed that the same thing would happen to the United States 20 years later.

Our primary interest in Vietnam was to prevent the fall of Indochina to the communists. We wanted to prevent the loss of Vietnam because we believed it would lead to the fall of the rest of Southeast Asia. This came to be known as the domino theory.

Many would scoff at the domino theory in later years. But it is revealing to note that the seige of Dien Bien Phu was made possible only by the fall of Asia's largest domino — China. With the French war effort in imminent danger of collapse, the United States had to decide what it would do to stop the next domino from tumbling over.

When France asked the United States for help at Dien Bien Phu, its request was for air strikes, not ground troops. Only if the French were to withdraw from Vietnam would ground troops be needed.

Adm. Arthur Radford, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, suggested that we use 60 B-29 bombers in the Philippines in night raids to destroy the Viet Minh positions. He also devised a plan, known as Operation Vulture, for accomplishing the same objective with three small tactical atomic bombs. This option was never seriously considered. President Eisenhower later spoke of possibly using diversionary tactics, such as a naval blockade, against the Viet Minh's patrons and principal source of military supplies, the Communist Chinese. This plan was also abandoned.

Both Eisenhower and the Secretary of State John Foster Dulles were reluctant to take any of these steps. Like Truman, they believed any direct intervention to help the French would gravely damage our relations with newly independent countries. The president also insisted that we have congressional approval before acting. When the administration tested the waters, it found significant opposition to the idea of another military involvement in Asia, especially so soon after the Korean War. Eisenhower concluded that he could only bring the Congress along if the United States acted in concert with its allies.

The proposal for united action ran into a roadblock in Britain. Churchill refused to cooperate, and Eisenhower steadfastly opposed a unilateral American intervention. The French were therefore left to fend for themselves.

On May 7, 1954, after 55 days of gallantly defending a territory that had been reduced to the size of a baseball field, the French garrison at Dien Bien Phu was overrun by human wave assaults. The defeat signaled the beginning of a complete and rapid withdrawal of the French from all of Indochina and left the United States as the only power capable of blocking further communist expansionism in Southeast Asia.

Our first critical mistake in Vietnam was not to have intervened in the battle of Dien Bien Phu. The military situation was tailor-made for the use of our air power. The Viet Minh's seige required them to concentrate huge stores of materiel and hordes of soldiers in a relatively small area, and the terrain restricted them to only a few supply routes. The French air force in Indochina was too weak to exploit this vulnerability. But if we had sent in fleets of heavy bombers to drop conventional explosives, we could have crippled the Viet Minh in a matter of days.

The French were in a much stronger position in Indochina as a whole than the plight of their isolated garrison indicated. In his memoirs, Nikita Khrushchev wrote that in 1954 the situation for the Viet Minh was "very grave" and that "the resistance movement in Vietnam was on the brink of collapse."

Khrushchev also reported that Zhou Enlai had said that unless the Geneva Conference concluded a ceasefire soon the Viet Minh would not be able to hold out against the French. According to an official North Vietnamese history published in 1965, the Communists were seriously worried about the effect a possible American intervention would have on the balance of power in the war.

By standing aside as our ally went down to defeat, the United States lost its last chance to stop the expansion of communism in Southeast Asia at little cost to itself. We should have intervened alone if necessary to help the French because they were the strongest regional power fighting Communist aggression. If we had saved Dien Bien Phu, the

French still probably would have withdrawn and finally given their colonies independence, as we had urged for so long. But they would have done so in a deliberate and responsible manner rather than in a headlong rush for the door.

An obsessive fear of associating with European colonial powers blinded successive American administrations to a very simple fact: Communism, not colonialism, was the principal cause of the war in Indochina. Colonialism complicated the prosecution of the French phase of the war because it allowed the communists to obscure the issue, but the war itself originated in Ho Chi Minh's willful push for total power and was sustained by Communist China's massive support of the Viet Minh. Our mistake was failing to understand that the issue was not whether colonialism would succeed, but what would succeed colonialism.

More hot check warrants cleared

HOUSTON (AP) — Harris County authorities say they expect to clear at least 5,000 more hot check warrants this week as the result of massive arrest sweep carried out by hundreds of law officers.

In a crackdown that began Saturday, county constables and sheriff's deputies cleared more than 3,000 worthless check warrants, almost one-third of those the county has issued, authorities said.

"The great majority of people who write bad checks are fine, upstanding people," said Bill Camp, head of the district attorney's worthless check division.

But many people unintentionally write bad checks and fail to pay restitution despite being given ample time to make good on the debts, Camp said.

Hot check arrests totaled 263 by the time officers ended their sweep Saturday night, said Lt. David Wingo of Precinct 1.

Authorities said a final figure on the restitution payments would not be available until Monday, but estimated more than $500,000 was collected.

Precinct 1 Constable Walter Rankin spearheaded the sweep, which included more than 400 deputies and constables.

"This sweep shows a spirit of cooperation we've never had before in county law enforcement here," said Sheriff Johnny Klevenhagen. "We had constables and sheriff's deputies even riding in the same cars serving warrants."

Authorities said officers would follow up on unserved warrants this week.

"We want to try to get the bad check sweeps going every three to four months," Rankin said. "We have a pretty good backlog of warrants built up and we need to start chipping away at it."

More than 10,000 warrants were issued before the raid and about 3,000 were cleared by arrests or people arranging restitution payments, authorities said.

"I feel certain we'll clear 5,000 to 6,000 warrants by the end of this week," said Don Chumley, chief of the Precinct 1 constable's warrant division.

All of the cases involved checks of less than $200 and some people had as many as 40 warrants issued against them for worthless checks, Chumley said.

People who were arrested were checked through a central computer for other warrants, helping clear up several traffic violations and felonies, Klevenhagen said.

Most of those arrested posted personal recognizance bonds before justices of the peace, who were on duty from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. Saturday, the sheriff said. Those wanted for felonies were jailed.

Camp said the defendant would be taken before a magistrate who could accept a guilty fee and assess them the maximum $200 fine. Otherwise, the defendant could post bond and then make restitution to the merchant — in whatever form he would take it — and receive a receipt to show the magistrate.

STATE IN BRIEF

Black opposition not factor in all-white town

VIDOR, Texas (AP) — A 75-year-old man who claims to control the Ku Klux Klan in Texas says that if he is elected mayor he will allow Blacks with "proper backing and a clean record" to move to Vidor.

Ku Klux Klan Grand Dragon A.W. Harvey is challenging incumbent mayor Dru Stephenson, 59, in the April 6 mayoral election.

Harvey isn't worried about Black opposition in the election. All 13,440 Vidor citizens are white.

Harvey told the Orange Leader that he is running because property taxes, school taxes and utility bills are too high. Vidor residents, who have traditionally opposed tax increases, recently rejected a bond issue to provide sewer services in some parts of town.

"I pay $500 a year in school taxes, and I don't even have any one in school," Harvey said.

But Harvey also said he fears blacks will take over the town and ruin the school district.

Hotel braced for trip

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Movers hauling the historic Fairmount Hotel on a four-block journey to a new home braced for a trip across a bridge spanning the San Antonio River.

The bridge was to be shored up by early today and ready for the 3.2

million pound hotel to roll across.

The 79-year-old hotel, being moved to make room for a new downtown mall, was nudged off its foundation for the first time Saturday.

The three-story brick structure was moved a half-block the first day, then turned a corner and traveled another half block Sunday.

It was to spend the night in the street between the Marriott Hotel and the San Antonio Convention Center.

The hotel has suffered no damage so far.

Arrest made in dam case

COLDSRING, Texas (AP) — A 26-year-old former convict was arrested on charges he allegedly threatened to blow up the Lake Livingston dam to flood out his former roommates, who lived downstream, authorities said.

Harrison County sheriff's officers arrested Wesley Gene Simpson just outside Marshall Sunday, said Tina Murray, San Jacinto County sheriff's dispatcher.

Simpson was taken to San Jacinto County Jail, where he was being held on $50,000 bond. Ms. Murray said Sunday night. She said details of the arrest were not immediately available.

Simpson, a former Texas Department of Corrections inmate, is charged with making a terroristic threat, authorities said.

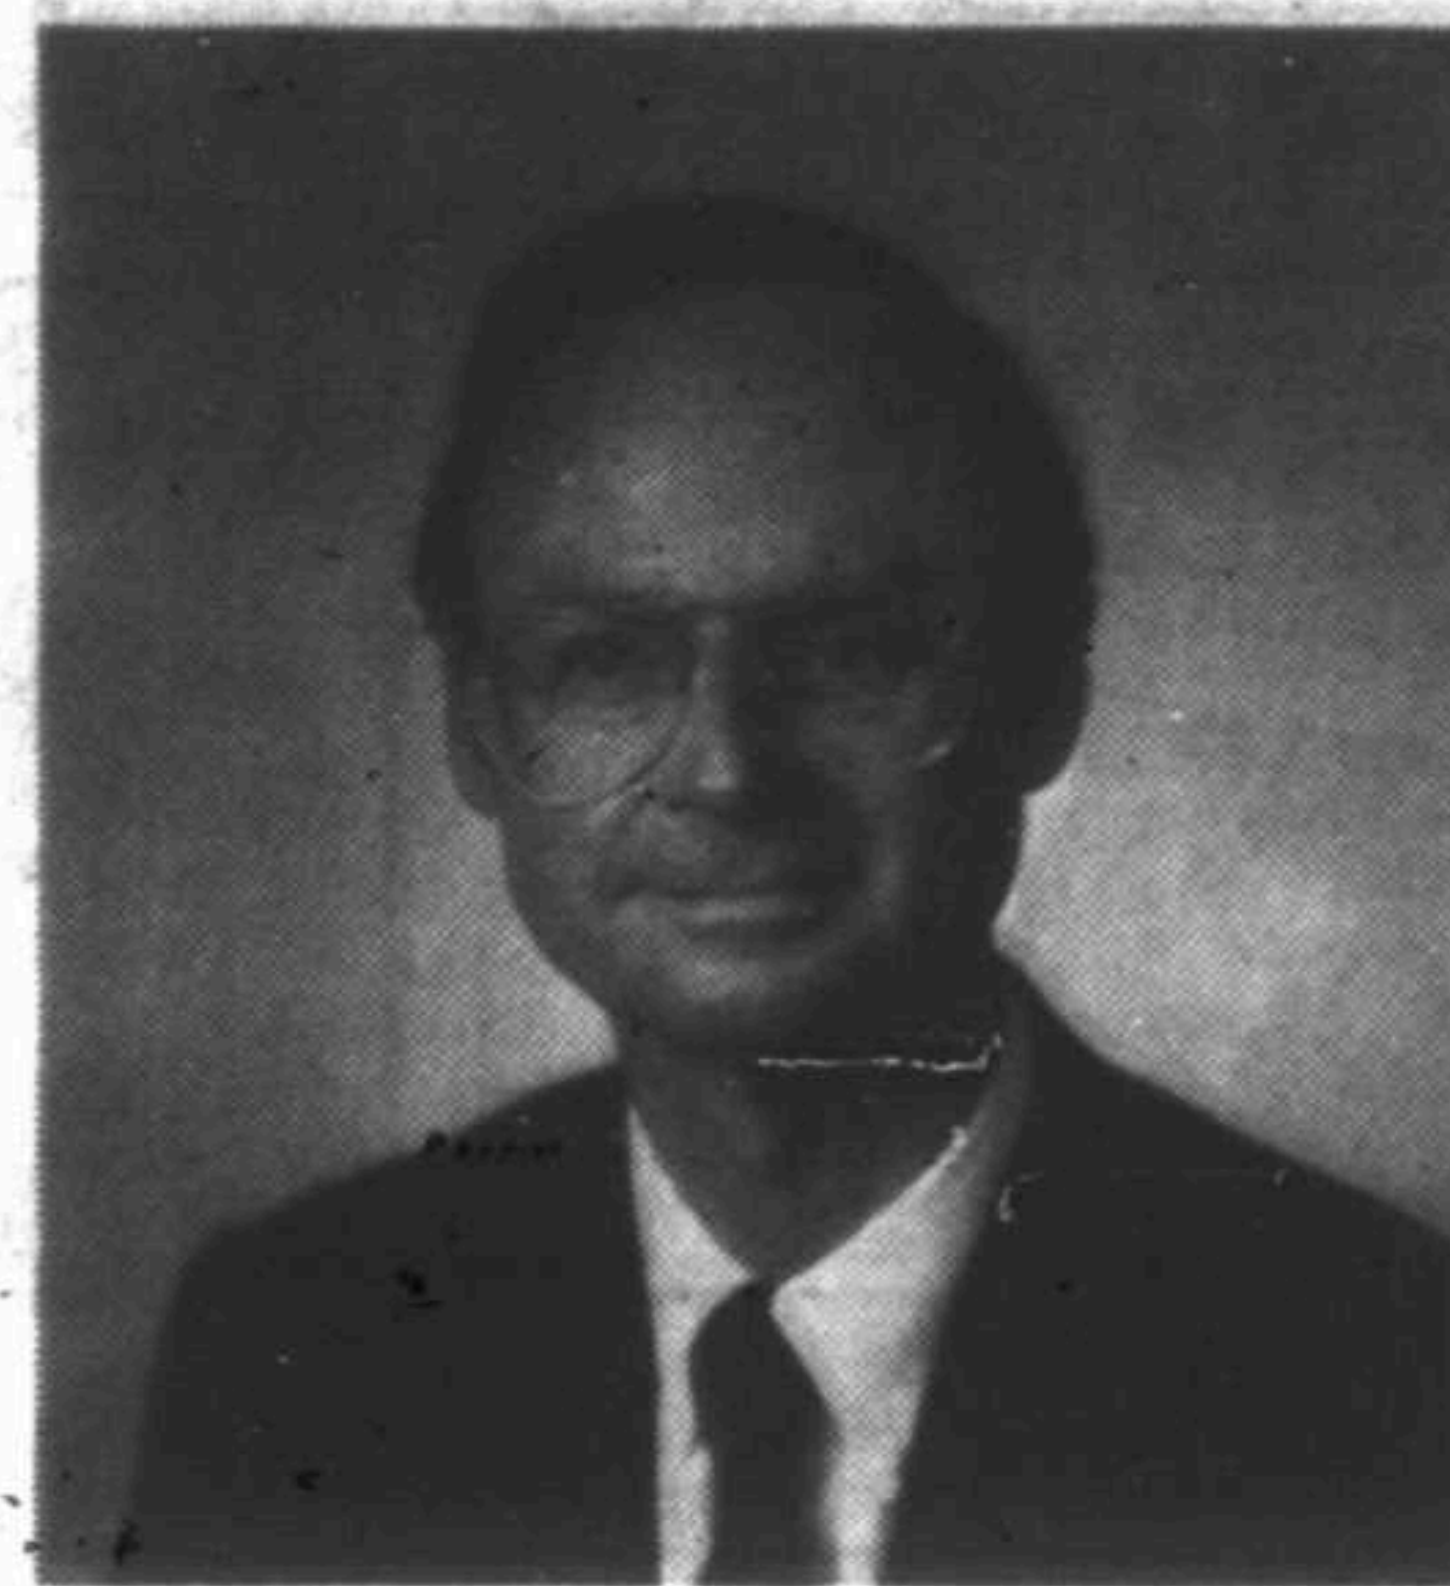

The arrest ended a four-day search that began after witnesses tipped San Jacinto County sheriff's investigators they overheard Simpson on Wednesday allegedly threaten to blow up the dam.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AK1093 ♥8 ♦54 ♣Q9832

The bidding has proceeded:
North East South West
1 ♦ Pass 1 ♣ Pass
2 ♣ Pass ?
What action do you take?

A.—You have a hand rich in trick-taking possibilities, so we would not blame you if leaped right to four spades. However, if you are more scientifically inclined you should make the trial bid of three clubs, asking partner to evaluate his holding in that suit for game purposes.

Q.2—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠K10765 ♥93 ♦85 ♣A984
The bidding has proceeded:
West North East South
1 ♥ 2 ♦ Pass ?

What action do you take?
A.—Had partner been interested in your spade suit, he could have made a takeout double. While he should have a reasonable hand for his vulnerable overall, the fact you don't have a good fit makes any action on your part risky. Pass.

Q.3—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠Q ♥K105 ♦J76 ♣Q98732
The bidding has proceeded:
West North East South
1 ♥ Dble Pass 2 ♣
Pass 3 ♣ Pass ?

What action do you take?
A.—Your two club response to the takeout double promised nothing. By raising to three clubs, partner has shown a useful hand in the 16-18 range. You should have fair play for three no trump, so go ahead and bid it.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠72 ♥95 ♦Q10954 ♠AKQ3
The bidding has proceeded:
North East South West
1 ♥ Pass 2 ♦ Pass
4 ♥ Pass ?

What do you bid now?

A.—With the equivalent of an opening bid facing a partner who has opened and jumped raised, you are in the slam zone. But you can't do anything precipitate because of your weakness in the major suits. Cue-bid five clubs and see if that inspires partner to seize the initiative.

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠63 ♥8762 ♦A952 ♠764
The bidding has proceeded:
North East South West
1 ♥ Pass Pass 1 ♣
Dble Pass ?

What action do you take?
A.—Since you have not yet bid, partner's double is for takeout. You could hardly have more than you hold and still pass one heart. Therefore, a simple preference to two hearts now would be a gross understatement of your values. Jump to three hearts.

Q.6—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠A5 ♥Q76 ♦KQ10532 ♠K6

The bidding has proceeded:
South West North East
1 ♦ Pass Pass 1 ♥

What action do you take?
A.—Facing a partner who could not respond to your one diamond opening bid, this hand is going nowhere. Any bid by you can only serve to help the opponents reach the right contract and read your distribution during the play of the hand. Pass.

Your play to the first trick could decide the fate of the contract! A writer once remarked: "There's no such thing as a blind opening lead, only deaf opening leaders!" Artist Marc Chagall buried in France

ST. PAUL DE VENCE, France (AP) — Marc Chagall, the artistic giant who died at age 97, was buried today in a cemetery at St. Paul de Vence, the tiny Provencal town where he lived and worked for the last 20 years of his life.

Hundreds of mourners and friends of the artist crowded into the tiny cemetery at the edge of the walled town, once a medieval fortress overlooking a valley.

French Culture Minister Jack Lang told the mourners, "As long as the sun continues to shine, the light of Marc Chagall will never go out."

"Today is a day of mourning," Lang told a reporter later. "But I think the beauty and the generosity of Chagall's work will live on in all of us. His was a message of peace and hope."

Chagall collapsed Thursday and died almost immediately. The exact cause of death was not disclosed.

In addition to Lang, other dignitaries attending the 10-minute graveside ceremony included Foreign Minister Roland Dumas and Israel's ambassador to France, Ovadia Soffer.

"We have lost a giant," Soffer said. "Chagall means a lot to the state of Israel, for his work was infused with Judaism, humanity and the statehood of Israel."

Chagall delighted the world with canvases peopled with happy couples floating over strange colored barnyard animals and quaint village scenes.

At the request of the artist's widow, Valentine, Chagall was buried in a civil ceremony. The family stood silently in front of a wall draped in black as the oak coffin was lowered into the ground. Leon Leneman, a friend of Chagall, said the Kadesh, the Jewish prayer for the dead.

"Somebody had to do it," said Leneman, who is author of "The Child of Vitebsk," a book about the Russian-born painter.

China expected 'healthy' Wham

PEKING (AP) — Britain's chart-topping pop band Wham has been hailed as "very healthy for youth" by the Chinese, who are enlarging the stage at Peking Workers' Gymnasium for the group's April 7 concert.

"Wham is not rock 'n' roll, you mustn't call it that. Rock 'n' roll was in the 1950s," said Zhou Renkai, of the All-China Youth Federation, which is running the event. "It's electronic music. Very healthy for youth."

He disclosed that the Rolling Stones also hope to perform in China. "They want to come and we're presently discussing it. In future, all groups are welcome to apply if they are healthy." He did not define healthy.

Asked if he approved of the Beatles, Zhou said: "I've heard of them. I think they're even more famous than Wham."

Ten thousand tickets for Wham will be distributed, and a full house is expected. Wham consists of two singers, George Michaels and Andrew Ridgeley, accompanied by a 14-member band.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Actress Mario Thomas says her husband Phil Donahue's decision to move his talk show from Chicago to New York has made their five-year marriage a lot smoother.

"It is so great to have him in the same city, the same house, the same room. Our problems are melting away," she said Friday while in Nashville for a workshop.

"There was a lot of stress," Ms. Thomas added. "Phil was getting very tired of doing five shows in three days so he could be in New York by Wednesday evening and I felt a tremendous pressure to get to Chicago the other weeks by Thursday."

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — Fred Grandy, the Sioux City native who plays the hapless character Gopher on "The Love Boat" television series, says he might give up his role to move back to Iowa and run for Congress in 1986.

"In my position as a TV actor, I expect a degree of skepticism," he said Saturday. "But I would say that at this point I'm seriously considering it."

Grandy, 38, a Republican and resident of Venice, Calif., would be up against Democrat Berkeley Bedell, who last year easily won reelection to a sixth term. He said that if he ran, he would give up his regular role in the popular television series.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa. (AP) — Opera in the United States has fallen victim to glamour at the expense of art, says renowned tenor Jon Vickers, one of 21 singers inducted into the first Hall of Fame for Great American Opera Singers.

"I think today the American scene has become seduced by glamour," said Vickers, a Canadian. "The figures aren't out, but it's been estimated the new 'Tosca' at the Metropolitan Opera Company cost $3.5 million. Now is this art?"

Vickers, who opens at the Met in "Parsifal" April 8, was applauded by his colleagues Saturday. Others honored were Martina Arroyo, Richard Cassilly,

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — Geraldine Ferraro says the press was generally fair to her during her 1984 Democratic vice presidential campaign, even though one newspaper printed stories she says were "totally false."

Ms. Ferraro, speaking before the New York State Press Association on Saturday, said that during her campaign certain New York Post articles implied her family was connected to organized crime.

"The implication they lodged was totally false and unsupported by the facts," she said. "Am I unjust in believing that some members of the press are unfair — worse than unfair, that they abuse their power so as to harass, defame, and try to defeat a candidate for public office?"

Ms. Ferraro said she will announce late this summer whether she will run in 1986 for the Senate seat now held by Republican Alfonse D'Amato. She is devoting her time to writing her memoirs of her campaign.

BOSTON (AP) — Jamaica must move away from its dependency on foreign aid and toward self-sufficiency if it wants to cure its economic crisis, the island's former prime minister says.

Jamaica and all Caribbean islands must "be the masters in their own house," Michael Norman Manley said Saturday at the University of Massachusetts.

"In the Caribbean, if there is one thing that is part of our heritage and which we won't give up easily, it is the tradition of free political institutions," he said.

Manley, 60, was elected prime minister in 1972 and was defeated in 1980 by the island's current Prime Minister Edward Seaga.

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Dr. Luther L. Terry, a former smoker who as U.S. surgeon general helped prod Congress into requiring health warnings on cigarette packages, has died of heart failure. He was 78.

President Reagan has made a rare exception in allowing civilian Terry, who also worked to get cigarette commercials off public airwaves, to be buried at Arlington National Cemetery, the military cemetery's superintendent said Sunday.

"We get many, many requests and very rarely are any exceptions made," cemetery superintendent Raymond Costanzo said.

Terry, who issued the first federal report linking smoking to heart disease and cancer, died of heart failure Friday at Pennsylvania Hospital, according to relatives.

A Philadelphia resident since 1965, Terry devoted the last two decades of his life to warning Americans that each cigarette they smoke increases their chances of death from heart disease, cancer and emphysema.

Appointed surgeon general by President John F. Kennedy in 1961, Terry issued the U.S. Surgeon General's Report on Smoking and Health in 1964.

KENOSHA, Wis. (AP) — Actor-director Ron Howard has been touring automobile assembly plants searching for a location for a new movie starring Eddie Murphy.

Howard was at the American Motors Corp. plant in Kenosha last week, and AMC spokesman Lloyd Northard said Howard and officials of his production company also recently visited the AMC plant at Toledo, Ohio.

J.D. Garoutte, Kenosha's economic development coordinator, said Kenosha is one of three or four sites being considered for the movie, which reportedly has an automotive theme.

No fool's joke

Did you hear the latest? Between 100,000 and 500,000 children are sexually abused each year.

Don't start thinking this is some form of cruel April Fool's joke. Unfortunately, the statistic isn't a joking matter. It's the truth.

Today, the reason for all those jokes you've been hearing, also marks the start of National Child Abuse Prevention Month. This is the fourth consecutive year for the emphasis on child abuse prevention, but that's good because there is a big job to do.

On March 7 the House passed a bill sponsored by Rep. John Hiler, R-Ind. and sent it to the Senate. It states starkly that about 2 million children are victims of abuse each year and that approximately 5,000 die as a result.

"This resolution involves no expenditure or appropriation of funds," says Hiler. Rather it's intended to give child abuse prevention groups "the vehicle by which they can continue to create much needed awareness of this national tragedy and the remedies available."

Over the past year, there have been numerous revelations of alleged sexual molestation of children at day-care centers and elsewhere in New York, California, Florida, Illinois and Texas, including investigations of various day-care facilities in Midland.

Not all the investigations involve actual wrongdoing, of course, and the attention now directed at the child abuse problem may result in unintentional suffering for innocent individuals. That's highly regrettable.

Brian Taugher, 38, an aide to California's attorney general, knows the consequences and also the breadth of the problem. He was acquitted in December of sexual molestation charges lodged by a 9-year-old.

He endured extensive media coverage of the case and spent $50,000 defending himself. But he maintains faith in the system, saying: "The vast majority of people who get accused of this are guilty as hell."

That's why there is a need for a National Child Abuse Prevention Month.

Another View:

The endless war

Most of the world has paid little attention to the savage war between Iran and Iraq, now four-and-a-half years old, in large part because it became obvious fairly early that the war wasn't having any appreciable impact on the supply or price of oil. But the war has taken a new and dangerous turn that began with a major Iranian infantry offensive involving an estimated 100,000 soldiers. It was smashed by Iraq's better-armed and better-trained forces, with the loss of perhaps tens of thousands of lives, most of them Iranian.

Until now, Iran's leader, the Ayatollah Khomeini, has been undaunted by such reverses, and has demanded as the price of peace the ouster of Iraqi President Saddam Hussein and his Baath Party and the branding of Iraq as an aggressor. A recent speech by Khomeini seemed to hint that his attitude may be softening, though it's too early to draw such a hopeful conclusion about this seemingly endless war.

The newest escalation also involves the bombing of cities, including the two countries' capitals. This violates a U.N.-sponsored moratorium, agreed to last June, on attacking civilian targets. If Iran's situation becomes more desperate, it's anyone's guess what new departures from traditional warfare may occur. Until now, despite violations by one side or the other against conventions banning the use of chemical weapons (Iraq) or the mistreatment of prisoners (Iran), the two sides have avoided the kind of provocations that could involve third parties. There have been attacks against foreign commercial vessels in the Persian Gulf, to be sure, but that is one of the acceptable consequences of trying to do business in a war zone. Neither belligerent has tried, as Iran has so often threatened, to close the entrance to the Gulf by attacking attacks against targets in other countries.

Despite the brutality of the war and its threat to peace elsewhere, and despite the dangers of direct superpower involvement, there has been next to no effort from outside to stop it. U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar has tried without success to play the role of peacemaker, but the General Assembly has failed even to condemn either party. It should denounce both, and put its moral force behind a campaign to persuade Iran to accept some form of mediation.

Perhaps nothing short of total defeat can bring Iran, as long as Khomeini is in charge, to the bargaining table. That would mean prolonging the tragedy for the people of both countries. Because of it, and because of the ever present danger that some unforeseen act of depression may force others into the conflict, the world community should stop taking refuge in the assumption that as long as Iranians and Iraqis are killing each other, it doesn't matter. It does.

Memo says LBJ sought book

WASHINGTON — One of history's strangest attempts at literary collaboration is described in an internal FBI memo that tells how President Lyndon Johnson tried to get FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover to write a book on the assassination of President John F. Kennedy.

The time was October 1966, three years after the assassination in Dallas. Every conspiracy theorist in the country seemed to have a scenario contradicting the Warren Commission's conclusion that the accused assassin, Lee Harvey Oswald, had acted alone.

Johnson was dismayed at the public's fascination with the Kennedy assassination and the persisting conspiracy theories. He had tried to close the door on the conspiracy idea by appointing a bipartisan commission of prominent, credible public figures to investigate the assassination.

Yet later learned from sources close to Johnson that he had his own suspicions about a conspiracy.

From his earliest intelligence briefings on the assassination, he privately suspected that Cuban President Fidel Castro may have ordered it. He feared that if the American people learned of this, they would demand military reprisal against Cuba, and this could lead to a dangerous confrontation with the Soviet Union.

To prevent this, Johnson appointed the Warren Commission. I don't know whether he tried to influence its deliberations, but he was clearly distressed that the commission's verdict was still under attack three years later.

Johnson wanted to do something to re-establish the commission's credibility and lay to rest the conspiracy talk. He decided that Hoover, then still a formidable figure, had the credibility to persuade the American people, once and for all, that Oswald was the lone assassin.

So LBJ, using his best behind-the-scenes technique, got his close friend, Supreme Court Justice Abe Fortas, to approach Hoover. Fortas was skeptical but made the overture through Hoover's trusted assistant, Cartha D. DeLoach.

DeLoach conferred with Hoover, who rejected the book idea as Fortas had expected. According to an internal memo that DeLoach wrote on Oct. 10, 1966, he broke the news to Fortas and explained "the many reasons why the director could not accede to the president's and Justice Fortas' request."

Fortas then confided, states the memo, that "he had argued with the president that it was not logical for the director to prepare this book inasmuch as the director in doing so would necessarily have to substantiate the investigative efforts of many other agencies."

But Johnson had a fallback position, which Fortas then presented. He asked that Hoover at least issue a statement on one point the critics had raised: the discrepancies between FBI reports and the Warren Commission concerning the Kennedy autopsy.

DeLoach told Fortas he "felt certain" Hoover would agree to this modest proposal and immediately set to work drafting such a statement. The files contain a handwritten note from Hoover about the statement, saying simply: "Let me see it. H."

DeLoach, now retired, told my associate Les Whitten that the matter was resolved by issuing the Hoover-approved statement in response to an inquiry from The Washington Star. As DeLoach remembered it, the statement reiterated the FBI's view that Oswald acted alone.

DIPLOMATIC DIGEST: Czechoslovakia's communist government is struggling with a problem that supposedly afflicts only decadent capitalist countries: drug addiction. A report on a hush-hush conference in Prague estimates the number of Czech addicts — mostly teenagers — at some tens of thousands in a population of about 15 million.

Heroin and cocaine are hard to get, so the junkies get their kicks by mixing various over-the-counter painkillers and sedatives.

Sudanese President Gaafar Nimeiri's stubborn insistence on imposing strict Islamic law on the largely Christian southern part of his country may have cost him more than he realizes. My intelligence sources say that Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak has secretly decided that he will no longer protect Nimeiri from an internal coup, only from external threats by Libya or others. Nimeiri, incidentally, may be suffering from Bright's disease, or nephritis, an ailment of the kidneys.

Tired of buses passing by without stopping for you? Here's a suggestion that might work — if you happen to live near a zoo. The villagers of Shimoga, India, got fed up with bus drivers who refused to stop and, so help me Hannibal, they parked an elephant in the middle of the road. This created such a traffic jam of buses that the drivers promised they'd stop at Shimoga in the future.

A British researcher has figured out how to swat a fly with deadly accuracy. To overcome the pesky critter's all-around vision and super-fast reaction, simply take a rolled-up newspaper in each hand and swat fore and aft. Bingo!

Maureen's ticket-lists Jeane

WASHINGTON — Although her father only hints that he wants his vice president to succeed him, Maureen Reagan does not disguise her choice for the 1988 Republican ticket: George Bush for president, Jeane Kirkpatrick for vice president.

As consultant to Republican National Chairman Frank Fahrenkopf, the president's dynamic daughter arranged the big April 3 "Welcome to the Party" celebration in Washington noting Kirkpatrick's conversion from Democrat to Republican.

Vice President Bush is expected to "drop by" in an unscheduled appearance.

Maureen has no great affection for Rep. Jack Kemp, Bush's prospective chief rival for the 1988 nomination, and did not invite him to address the Kirkpatrick party. However, Kemp is making his own contacts with the former U.N. ambassador. She addressed the Kemp Forum in Buffalo last week, and a private dinner between the Kemp and Kirkpatrick families is planned.

GORBACHEV'S SUIT
The description of new Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev that President Reagan likes best came from a top Western leader: "Khrushchev in a $900 suit."

The leader, who met Gorbachev at Konstantin Chernenko's funeral in Moscow, gave the description to Reagan privately. That both titillated and worried the president.

Khrushchev was one of the toughest of all Soviet leaders, threatening to "bury" the West and almost provoking nuclear war by putting Soviet missiles in Cuba. "Khrushchev in a $900 suit" suggests Gorbachev's charm conceals a brutal instinct for the jugular.

CONTRA CIVIL WAR
As part of the battle waged within the Reagan administration over how hard to fight for aid to the Nicaraguan freedom fighters, a State Department study of contra leaders intended to improve their image was nearly suppressed.

The study shows that nearly all the top freedom fighters are free of past association with Nicaragua's dictatorial Somoza regime. But Secretary Bernard Kalb, representing the public information office, argued that the study of the contra leaders was going into areas that were not the department's business and ordered a freeze.

Ambassador Otto Reich, the State Department hard-liner pushing the program to aid the contras, intervened. After some editing changes, the document was OK'd for future release. But that is only one skirmish in a widespread struggle over the administration's degree of commitment to the freedom fighters.

LORD IN CHINA
Winston Lord, who served as Henry Kissinger's top aide in the Nixon administration, appears certain to be nominated as U.S. ambassador to China. Conservatives are complaining for two reasons: The Kissinger connection and Lord's present job as head of the Council on Foreign Relations.

Senate confirmation, however, looks sure because of Lord's sponsorship: Ronald Reagan himself. The president's interest resulted from Lord's briefing before Reagan's trip to China last year. Reagan was also intrigued by Lord's wife, novelist Bette Lord, whose Chinese Nationalist family left mainland China in 1946.

A footnote: More controversial is Secretary of State George Shultz's desire to send Deputy Secretary Kenneth Dam to the Soviet Union as ambassador. Dam would be going to the nation's most demanding ambassadorial listening post with no prior diplomatic experience abroad.

IOWA ANGRY
Gov. Terry Branstad of Iowa is a conservative Republican and Reaganite, but is growing ever angrier at the administration's handling not only of the farm crisis but of himself.

Branstad steamed when his scheduled meeting at the White House two weeks ago was abruptly cancelled (without explanation but probably because of the MX vote). He was further miffed last Thursday when his meeting there with Policy Director John Syahn was set back an hour. After the meeting, he was boiling over with complaints that the administration was reneging on farm credit promises.

Branstad's problems with the president probably help his re-election prospects for next year. Sen. Charles Grassley has been opposing the White House down the line ever since the president's men threatened reprisals against the conservative Republican for non-support in the Senate. Grassley, trying to be the first Iowa senator re-elected since 1966, is rising in state polls as fast as Reagan falls.

'Natural' foods even dangerous

If you are eating organically grown, all natural, and pesticide-free fruits and vegetables, you are getting a load of all natural toxic chemicals including those which cause cancer (carcinogens) and damage to your genes (mutagens).

You will find natural carcinogens in black pepper, sassafras, edible mushrooms, celery, parsnips, figs, herbs, herbal teas, honey, mustard and horseradish to name only a few.

thousands of natural foods which contain toxic chemicals.

No kidding. Health foods can be hazardous to your health. Don't forget the former publisher of "Prevention" and "Organic Gardening" magazines, a non-smoker, dropped dead on the Dick Cavett Show. Or that Adele Davis, another food faddist, died of bone cancer in her early 60s.

But before you throw out your alfalfa sprouts, which contain a highly toxic chemical — cavanine — listen to Bruce Ames, head of the biochemistry department at the University of California from whose article I extracted the above information.

"There are large numbers of mutagens and carcinogens in every meal, all perfectly natural and traditional. Nature is not benign. It should be emphasized that no human diet can be entirely free of mutagens and carcinogens," he wrote in an article in "Science" magazine.

Biochemistry is a complex subject and complexity is what journalism, politics and law handle least well. The fact that you eat a carcinogen does not mean you are surely going to get cancer.

What you have to do these days is beware of wild exaggeration and oversimplification. Food faddists are today's equivalent of the traveling medicine show. Health has become a political issue and in politics, truth is a frequent casualty. Journalists are more inclined to look for a kernel of drama than carry the baggage of dull and complex scientific explanations, reservations and qualifications.

Don't, for example, fall for the line that all your health hazards are a result of an industrialized society. This is pure baloney, usually peddled by frustrated socialists who want to malign a system their own can't compete with.

In the first place, never forget that in our polluted, industrialized society people are living not only longer but healthier lives. We obviously are doing something right. Secondly, don't get conned into believing that people in the pre-industrial age lived idyllic and happy lives in their smog-free environment. That's baloney. In the pristine wilderness free of acid rain and industrial fumes, life was hard, dirty and short.

Don't get me wrong. We have pollution and health hazards that are a consequence of our industrial and high-tech society. We have to deal with those as our ancestors had to deal with the hazards peculiar to their environment.

But the way to deal with them successfully is the same way our ancestors dealt with theirs. First, we have to understand the nature of the problem. For us that means we have to become more literate about technology than certainly most of us are. Public schools are going to have to do a better job. So is journalism. And so are scientists who must develop the skills to communicate their complex knowledge in ways non-scientists can understand.

Our planet, bathed in radiation, perilously hurtling through space, full of toxic substances, has always been a dangerous environment.

And human beings have always been the bravest of the planet's life-forms. Let's not panic at this late date just because a lot of environmental jeremiahs are functional illiterates in the field of biochemistry.

Kennedy moves to reclaim starring role in Democratic Party

SHEPHERDSTOWN, W.Va. (AP) — Teddy Kennedy is back.

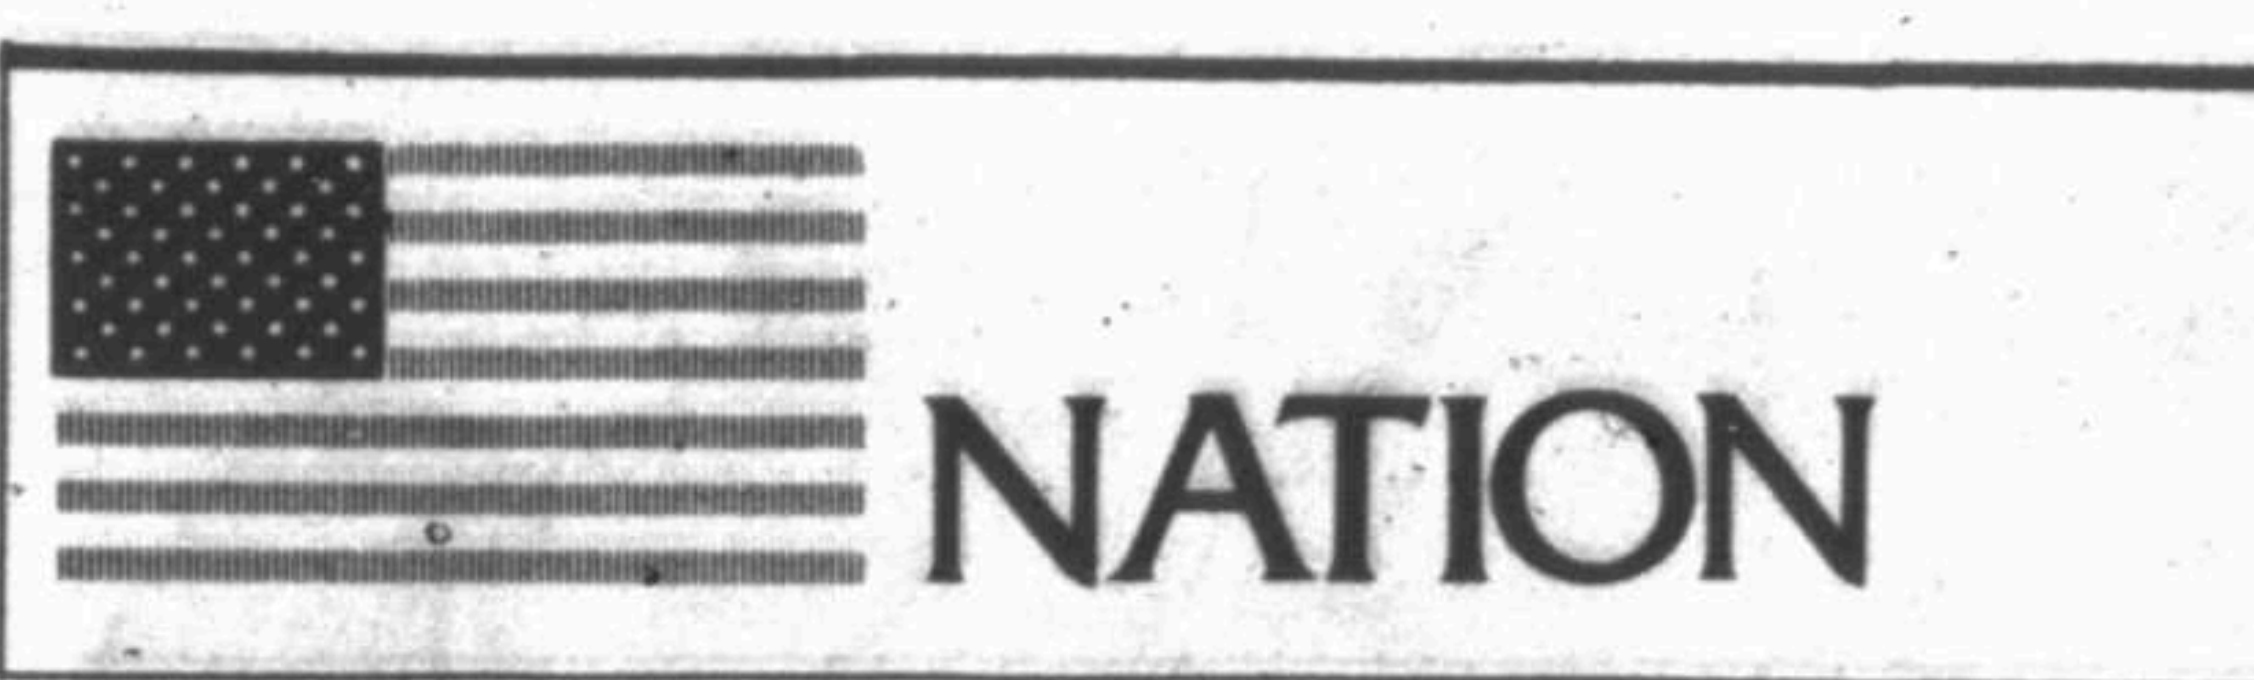

After more than two years as a supporting actor on the political stage, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy moved forcefully this past weekend to claim a place at the table in the debate about the future of the Democratic Party.

From such a position, the Massachusetts Democrat obviously would be positioned to run for the party's presidential nomination in 1988. He didn't deny the possibility, calling his desire to be president "the least well-kept secret of public life." But such a decision, he said, is at least a year away.

In an interview with The Boston Globe, Kennedy said, "I will maintain my political committee and contacts and hopefully that is something that could be readily activated should any decision come."

But what may be more important for the party in the long run was that Kennedy, long the leading liberal spokesman within the partisan councils, made it clear that he understands the party is changing and that he is changing as well.

Since December 1982 — when he vowed not to seek the 1984 presidential nod — Kennedy had been out of the political spotlight, playing the role of faithful party soldier and senior senator from Massachusetts while others fought for the party leadership.

But that sideline role ended with a Friday speech in New York, in a remarkably impassioned talk to his Senate colleagues meeting here and in interviews with reporters as Kennedy sketched his views of the new Democratic Party and the challenge of the Reagan-led Republican party.

"The issues of the economic expansion that we have listened to (this weekend) belong to Democrats and have been stolen by the Republicans," Kennedy told his colleagues at their weekend meeting. "And, most of all, the issue of hope belongs to us. I think the real question is: How do we reclaim it?"

Kennedy said some of the cherished creations of liberal Democrats — public housing, public service jobs programs and the like — are failures and should be replaced. More government spending is not the solution for many problems, he declared, and a new program is not always the way to alleviate a social ill.

Government, food experts agree on additives

WASHINGTON (AP) — Concern about food safety has concentrated too heavily on chemical additives, while other dangers have been slighted, according to two health experts who say they rarely agree about anything.

"Additives have gotten a lot of attention, greatly out of proportion to the harm they cause," Dr. Michael Jacobson, executive director of the private, non-profit Center for Science in the Public Interest, said.

"Food safety is more than just chemicals in food," reflected Dr. Sanford A. Miller, director of the Center for Food Safety and Applied Nutrition at the federal Food and Drug Administration.

The two spoke separately at a three-day conference on U.S. food quality and safety, sponsored by the Washington Journalism Center.

In yielding the floor to Jacobson at the meeting, Miller joked that the two men would disagree about "virtually everything."

But they then proceeded to reach many of the same conclusions.

They concurred that there are, indeed, hazards associated with certain food additives which should be explored. But they also indicated that these dangers are not the greatest hazard to Americans and should be considered in context of the overall diet.

"Certainly there are problem additives, but their danger is small compared to hazards of smoking, alcohol and dietary patterns," Jacobson said.

Miller warned that he sees what seems to be a "chemophobia" developing, a fear of food additives regardless of their danger or safety.

Food is far safer today than it was in the past, he said, because many unsafe chemicals have been eliminated from food uses and others are used to preserve food and protect food from other contaminants.

Concerns about food additives invariably seem to focus on cancer, Miller said, but studies indicate that as many as 70 percent of cancer cases are related to tobacco and dietary patterns.

Diet, Jacobson said, contributes to half of all deaths in the United States.

Eating too much sodium and fat contributes to high blood pressure which can lead to heart disease and stroke; fats also have a relationship to cancer; lack of fiber leads to intestinal problems and may contribute to some cancers, and sugar causes tooth decay and obesity, he said.

There has been progress in improving the American diet, he said, with more concern about dangerous foods, improving government and private education efforts and the appearance of salad bars in fast food stores and health foods in supermarkets.

But getting enough information for a proper diet is still a struggle, Jacobson said, with inadequate labels on processed foods and little government activity in regulating food hazards or requiring manufacturers to label contents.

One of the biggest dietary changes in the last century was the decline in eating potatoes and bread, Jacobson explained. This lack of complex carbohydrates, which are often replaced by dangerous fats and sugars, is a serious problem.

"We need to make starch not a dirty word," he added.

Miller concurred on the dangers of diet, commenting that "we've reached a point in this country when we can no longer talk about health policy and agricultural policy as separate issues. We need to talk about a national nutritional policy."

Cattle, for example, are currently graded on the amount of fat, and that could be changed to emphasize lean meat for a more healthy diet, Miller suggested. Or, he said, perhaps dairy farmers could be paid according to the total solids in the milk their cattle produce, rather than butterfat content as at present.

"Current policies were developed in the 1930s when there was widespread hunger in this country, when we couldn't produce enough to feed our people. That is no longer the case," Miller said.

Jacobson did raise one question about food additives, warning that he does not believe that those in use are tested adequately.

The tests are conducted on well fed, healthy animals, he explained, and that "is totally unlike the human experience."

For example, the additives allowed in alcoholic beverages are 4%h: alcoholic animals. But, he said, they are often consumed by alcoholic humans and the reaction in a healthy animal may be different from that of a person with an already damaged liver.

Miller termed the dangers of changing microbes a "much, much more hazardous situation than the chemical problem."

So far his agency has been able to deal with the new developments, he said, "but it's nip and tuck."

Each year there are several hundred illnesses and some deaths traced to new microbes, he said, citing outbreaks of cholera in Louisiana and of intestinal disease in a New England nursing home.

HCA to merge with supply firm

NEW YORK (AP) — A merger agreement has been approved unanimously by directors of the Hospital Corp. of America, which runs 420 hospitals here and abroad, and the American Hospital Supply Corp., maker of health care products.

The announcement was made Sunday by Karl D. Bays, chairman and chief executive of American, and Thomas F. Frist Jr., president and chief executive of HCA.

American and HCA will continue operations as separate units after the merger is consummated. Terms of the agreement require approval by American's and HCA's shareholders, expected to meet in June.

The exchange rate in the merger has been set at one share of American's stock for three-quarters of a share in the combined company. HCA shareholders will have one share in the combined company for each share they currently hold.

Democrats make bid to save benefits

WASHINGTON (AP) — Working against deadline pressure and the will of President Reagan, House Democrats will try this week to save federal unemployment benefits for 339,000 jobless workers.

On Tuesday, the House Ways and Means Committee is scheduled to consider a $270 million proposal to extend the program through June 30. An alternative that several House Republicans support would cost $100 million and phase out the program to allow people already on the federal rolls to collect their full benefits.

The federal supplemental compensation program, which was set up by Congress in 1982 as a recession stopgap, provides up to 14 weeks of payments to jobless workers who have exhausted their 26 weeks of state benefits.

President Reagan opposes any extension of the program, citing federal statistics that show the growing economy is creating 300,000 new jobs a month.

"The place now for people who are having problems is our job-training program, particularly job training directed at those who have to be relocated because something has happened to the industries that they formerly worked in," Reagan said at his last news conference.

Action on the extension measure is complicated by the fact that the House is scheduled to adjourn for its Easter-Passover recess at close of business Thursday, two days before the unemployment program is to expire.

House Majority Whip Thomas Foley has given notice that action could come as early as Tuesday on the House floor. However, the attempt could be blocked if Republicans invoke a rule requiring a two-thirds vote of the House before bills can be moved that quickly.

In the Republican-controlled Senate, the Finance Committee also has scheduled a Tuesday meeting on the federal program, but chairman Bob Packwood, R-Ore., says he opposes anything more than a phase-out of benefits.

House Majority Leader Jim Wright, D-Texas, noted that the Democratic proposal is only a temporary extension and said last week he hoped for a compromise.

On other matters, meanwhile, there were signs that the Senate's angry reaction to Japan's trade policies could spread to the House. The Senate last week voted 92-0 to approve a non-binding resolution urging President Reagan to retaliate with quotas and tariffs if Japan doesn't open its markets to U.S. products.

The vote came on the heels of Japan's announcement that it would increase its automobile exports to the United States by 25 percent.

House members will watch closely Japan's expected announcement next week of rules for U.S. companies seeking to sell telecommunications equipment in Japan. U.S. trade negotiators have said the announcement would be a signal of Japan's attitude. Pessimistic reports from the trade negotiations indicated the Japanese may virtually lock out American equipment.

Minority Leader Robert Michel, R-Ill., said prospects for passage of a resolution against Japan in the House are good, saying the Japanese must be made to know the "natives are restless."

Budget negotiations continue as Republican Senators work with the Reagan administration to fashion a compromise, but leaders say they don't expect to finish before Congress begins the recess.

"We're making progress," said Sen. Pete V. Domenici, R-N.M., chairman of the Senate Budget Committee. "We'll know a lot more in three or four days."

In other action, an issue that has divided the House along party lines since January may emerge again this week.

House Republican leaders were expected to make their third attempt Tuesday to have Richard McIntyre seated as the representative of Indiana's 8th District. Two previous attempts have failed.

McIntyre was certified winner of the Nov. 6 election over incumbent Democrat Frank McCloskey by Indiana's Republican secretary of state. But Democrats claimed many votes were left in doubt by differing standards used to count ballots in different counties.

The House voted to seat neither candidate while the House Administration Committee investigates the disputed election. The committee is in the midst of recounting all ballots in the election.

Springlike weather due back in Basin

From Staff and Wire Reports

Spring will return to Midland as clear skies and warmer temperatures are forecast for Tuesday by the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

Tonight will be clear with a low in the upper 30s, becoming sunny and warmer Tuesday with a high near 80. Tonight's light and variable winds will increase from the south Tuesday at 5 to 15 mph.

Sunday's high of 68 was 21 degrees below the record high set in 1946. This morning's low was 6 degrees above the 1936 record of 29.

STATE

A high-pressure system kept skies clear over most of Texas today, but a weak upper-level ridge was expected to bring cloudiness and scattered showers to western sections.

The National Weather Service said some high cloudiness covered the high plains and the Red River, and light rain fell in the Panhandle.

Low temperatures ranged from the upper 20s in the high plains and west of the Pecos through the mid to upper 40s over most of the state and low to mid 50s in extreme South Texas.

Extremes were 37 degrees at San Angelo and El Paso and 56 degrees at Brownsville.

Winds were light and northerly over the Panhandle and light and variable elsewhere.

NATION

Snow piled up in the Midwest and Colorado today while snow and freezing rain spread across New England.

Snow was falling across parts of the Great Lakes region, Iowa, northern Vermont and New Hampshire and southern Maine.

Freezing rain spread from eastern New York state to southern New England.

Winter storm warnings were issued for either today or tonight in northern Vermont and much of Maine, with snow accumulations of as much as 8 inches possible, and for northern Michigan, where accumulations of as much as 18 inches of snow were possible.

Marquette, Mich., had 14 inches of new snow early today.

In the West, snow-prompted travelers' advisories were posted for the Colorado mountain passes.

Today's forecast called for snow over the Great Lakes region and northern Maine.

Hoyas 'blowing smoke' for title game

By ROY S. JOHNSON

New York Times News Service

LEXINGTON, Ky. — College basketball coaches have a clever phrase for publicly assessing an opponent. They call it "blowing smoke," as in setting up a screen that hides the truth.

By that definition, many observers believed, Coach John Thompson was sending up billows of the stuff Sunday afternoon when, in discussing his approach to Monday's championship game between his Georgetown team and underdog Villanova, he said, "We feel more comfortable when the other team's the favorite, so I'm telling my kids that Villanova's the favorite."

If Thompson is successful in imparting that belief to his players, they are likely to be the only 13 people who actually think so. Yet the matchup of Big East teams has the Hoya players and coaches worried for several reasons.

One is that the Wildcats, who finished the regular season tied for third in the conference behind Georgetown and St. John's and not among the nation's Top 20 in any poll, are on an emotional roll. They have won five consecutive games, three from highly ranked Michigan, North Carolina and Memphis

State, which they eliminated in the semifinals on Saturday.

"We're in the final game," said Gary McLain, Villanova's point guard and spiritual leader. "We're there. We're ready to play our hearts out."

Another reason is that unlike the Hoyas' first four tournament opponents, each of which had the disadvantage of facing them for the first time, the Wildcats are a familiar foe. Thus the Hoyas are losing a subtle mental edge that usually works to their advantage.

Asked about his strategy against the Hoyas' 7-foot center, Patrick Ewing, 6-9 Ed Pinckney said: "I'm more accustomed to his style of ball, since I've played against him for four years. I won't be as much in awe as I might be otherwise."

Familiarity did not help St. John's, which went home Sunday with the bitter taste of a humiliating loss to its season-long nem-esis. But unlike St. John's, which came into the semifinal with vivid memories of its two crushing losses to Georgetown in recent weeks, the Wildcats do not have to contend with nightmares such as Ewing dunking shots at one end of the court and rejecting them at the other. Reggie Williams and David Wingate hardly missing from long range, and Michael Jackson dissecting their defense with his playmaking. Williams aggravated an ankle injury in Saturday's game, but Thompson said he would be ready to play.

The Wildcats can derive confidence from the memories of their two previous meetings with the Hoyas this season. They lost both games, one by only 52-50 in overtime and the other by 57-50, a game that was close until the final seconds.

One key in playing the Hoyas is to keep them from forging ahead.

When they do so, they dictate the tempo and force the opponent out of its game plan and into playing harried catch-up.

In both games Villanova burst out to 11-2 leads and was able to conduct its tempo, which is slower than the Hoyas' break-neck transition game. "We had to play their style," said Jackson. "But if we play our style and get ahead, they'll have to play it, too."

Thus the keys to the outcome for the Wildcats will be keeping the Hoyas under control during the first few minutes of each half, and their ability to conduct the pace, a tactic that in the absence of a 45-second shot clock, they appear to have mastered in the last three weeks.

"The clock is really more psychological than actual," said Villanova's coach, Rollie Massimino. "We don't hold the ball, except when we actually go into our stall."

Massimino, who is relishing his first appearance in the championship game even more than his players, refused to match Thompson and blow smoke about the Hoyas.

"I got up at 7 a.m. and began watching films," he said, "and they're as awesome as they can be. We'll do what we think we have to do to win the game, but that still might not be enough."

It's time again for City battle

4-5A Baseball

Though the season is still one game away from the halfway mark, the upper echelon in District 4-5A is starting to pull away from the rest of the field.

The Midland Lee Rebels took sole possession of first place in Week One, game two of play when they defeated Abilene Cooper 5-4 at Lee Field. They've kept on winning, claiming a perfect 8-0 record to go with their 14-4 season mark.

Since losing to Lee, the Cougars ripped off four straight victories to maintain a firm grasp on second at 5-1, 15-1. They hold a two-game lead over the Midland High Bulldogs, alone in third at 3-3, 9-7.

The remaining five teams in 4-5A are under .500 on the year, and unless teams start sneaking up on the leaders, the two league playoff berths could be decided well before season's end.

District 4-5A teams will reach their midway marks Tuesday — except Big Spring and Odessa High with a darkness-delayed game to conclude — and the matchups could lead to some interesting outcomes if past history has anything to say about the outcomes as six teams go into their cross-town rivalries.

DURING THE past two seasons, the Lee Rebels have reached the playoffs as the No. 2 team in the league and it was Midland High that cost them, dearly in the standings, winning three of the last four 4-5A meetings.

"We were 6-0 my sophomore year and lost to Midland High," said Rebel shortstop Keith McDonald Saturday after Lee's 13-2 victory over Odessa High. "They always play us tough so we've got to give it everything we've got."

That year, 1983, the Bulldogs failed to make the playoffs but went 2-0 against the Rebels. In 1984, MHS made it three straight 4-5A victories before the Rebels were able to end the skid in their final game of the season and earn their second straight playoff berth. Again, MHS stayed home.

"I tell you what, it's mostly the pride deal," said MHS coach Tim Whalen, whose Bulldogs rebounded from the flaccid Cooper with back-to-back drubbings of Odessa High (18-1) and Odessa Permian (11-1). "We have to live in the same town and we don't want to get embarrassed. Every time we see those kids, we don't want to have to duck our heads in shame."

And that's the way it's been, "at least for the past couple of years," said Lee coach Ernie Johnson. "This is really just another game but I think the players have a little different feeling about it this year than last year. I sense a little stronger attitude about taking games one at a time. I think we're taking Tuesday's game very seriously."

"In a district race, there's not a whole lot of margin for error and I think these kids are serious about winning the whole thing. I've seen more of a serious attitude this year than in the past and I think we'll be ready to play."

NEITHER WHALEN or Johnson are sure who they will throw Tuesday when the two teams meet at 4 p.m. at Zachary Field. Whalen expects his Bulldogs to see Mike Rittenberry while Johnson is looking for Mike Stanton or Kenny De La Garza.

Both coaches admitted that each of the pitchers are being considered, as are others on the team.

"Stanton's got a muscle spasm in his back but could go and I could come back with (Michael) Gonzalez (who went the distance against Permian) if he's not to sore. He didn't throw all that many pitches. I could also go with De La Garza and put (Robert) Malacara at shortstop."

"They'll probably throw Rittenberry and I'm waiting to see if we can hit hard throwing. I don't know if we've been hitting the ball or haven't been facing overpowering pitching. We'll know Tuesday because Lee will put somebody on the mound who can throw."

Rittenberry is second on the Rebel staff in innings pitched (37.1) and earned run average (2.06). So far, Mike Small has seen the most duty (43.1 innings) and is fourth in ERA (3.03). In consideration for the starting job is George Matta (28.1 innings, 1.98 ERA).

"It will either be Rittenberry or Matta," said Johnson. "Small has a real loose arm and could come back and relieve on Tuesday (after Saturday's seven innings against OHS) but he's definitely not going to start."

For Midland High, De La Garza leads the team in ERA (23.2) while Gonzalez has seen the most action (48.0 innings, 4.08 ERA). Stanton has been having problems on the mound, falling to 6.82 ERA in 28.2 innings of duty.

WHALEN HAS a lot of respect for the Lee hitting attack, which boasts six 300-plus hitters. "They're all hitting the ball. There's no free passes in their lineup," he said.

Johnson seems to agree. "The best thing about our hitters is we have them scattered throughout the lineup and I never know who's going to get hot."

Johnson has also seen Midland High knock the ball around a bit. "They're going to get their hits. Tim does a good job coaching hitting. We'll have to play steady defense, that's the main thing."

Based on two or more at bats per game, both MHS and Lee have a hitter fighting for the district hitting honors.

Bulldog Mark Torres is currently tied with Cooper's Scott Anderson with a .529 district average (17 at bats each in six games) while McDonald is hitting at a .520 clip with 25 plate appearances.

For the season, Dirk Bergoon, Toney Rankin and McDonald are hitting at .388, .385 and .382 respectively while Mike Small, Donny Rivas and Paul Cotwell are in the .368 to .303 range.

Tracy Claxton (15) wears the winner's basket net around the neck while Old Dominion coach Marianne Stanley hugs Donna Harrington after winning the NCAA Women's basketball championship Sunday in Austin by defeating Georgia.

Old Dominion wins women's title

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Nobody can second guess Old Dominion Coach Marianne Stanley again.

"The last time I coached ODU to a championship (the 1980 AIAW), people questioned if it was my team, my kids," she said. "Now, there's no question. This is my team, my kids."

The Lady Monarchs dominated the boards and outscored Georgia's Lady Bulldogs 70-65 on Sunday in the fourth annual NCAA Women's Final Four Championship Basketball game, before a crowd of 7,597.

And they did it the old-fashioned, blue-collar way by outbounding Georgia 57-30 with Medina Dixon getting 15 caroms and Tracy Claxton hauling down 20. Dixon also scored 18 points and Claxton had 17.

"I've heard Tracy say a million times her favorite part of the game is rebounding and it showed," said Stanley, who has coached at Old Dominion eight years. "A lot of rebounding is more heart and concentration than just ability."

Another key to the game was getting the Lady Bulldogs into foul trouble.

"Part of our game plan was to get Janet Edwards and Katrina McClain into foul trouble," Stanley said. "We did that then we rebounded well."

"I didn't know we could rebound as well as we did. The kids hit the boards hard."

Stanley now has the distinction of having played for a national championship team at Immaculata, coached two AIAW national champions at Old Dominion, and coached an NCAA champion.

"Getting to this point has been a thrill," she said. "It's special to share it with a new group of people."

Georgia Coach Andy Landers admitted his team was killed on the boards.

"The bottom line in this game was rebounding," Landers said. "Old Dominion did and we didn't. They got a lot of second shots and we didn't."

"ODU's first shots were the ones we wanted them to take but their rebounds gave them all the chances they needed."

No. 4 ranked Old Dominion, 31-3, overcame a nine-point deficit to earn its first NCAA title after taking two AIAW championship in 1979 and 1980. The eighth-ranked Lady Bulldogs, Southeastern Conference champions, finished 29-5.

They were led by Traci Waites who came off the bench to be the offensive catalyst for Georgia with 19 points, 13 of them in the second half. Lisa O'Connor also had 10 points, all of them in the second half.

The Lady Bulldogs suffered a double blow when Edwards fouled out with 8:10 to play and McClain went out three minutes later. Edwards finished 13 points and McClain added eight.

"I can't remember fouling out this season," said Edwards.

Claxton was voted the most outstanding player of the tournament.

"Coach always says don't watch the ball, just watch for positioning and that's what I did to get inside," Claxton said.

Dixon said Claxton told her to get into gear on the boards or the Lady Monarchs were going to lose the national title.

"She motivated me, and when I'm motivated I play well," said Dixon. "We're the best rebounding team in the nation. We proved that."

Tulane scandal creates worry for students

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Reaction to an alleged Tulane University point-shaving basketball scandal has been extraordinary among students who traditionally have been passive about the mediocre records compiled of late by the school's athletic teams.

In interviews last week, many students were apprehensive that the controversy might devalue their diplomas from a school whose academic credentials are impeccable.

Three athletes, three other students and a convicted bookmaker were arrested last week. A Louisiana grand jury resumes its investigation Thursday and Orleans Parish District Attorney Harry Connick said more arrests are possible.

Two other basketball players have been granted immunity from prosecution in return for their testimony before the grand jury, Connick said.

By the weekend, university officials said they were considering plans to test all scholarship athletes for drug use beginning this fall.

"You think of your school and then you think of your resume" and that your future employer is going to look at it and say, "Oh, the point-shaving school," said Aline Betancourt, a senior biochemistry major from Miami.

The three team members arrested last week are senior star John "Hot Rod" Williams, a 6-foot-10 All-Metro Conference center considered a No. 1 pro draft prospect; sophomore swingman David Dominique and senior guard Bobby Thompson. All three were booked for gambling law violations during Tulane's 15-13 season and were freed without bond.

"I had heard all the rumors, but I am astounded by what has actually happened," said senior biology major Suzanne Lamm, also from Miami. "Johnny Williams had his career laid out for him. I'd like to believe he's been framed, but that's probably naive."

Peete wins TPC, but wants more

PONTE VEDRA, Fla. (AP) — Calvin Peete has had to set some new standards for himself. "I wanted to win $1 million and win a major."

"Now I've done that."

"Now I want to win more majors and win another $1 million," Peete said Sunday after a spectacular triumph in the Tournament Players Championship.

Peete, the embodiment of one of the most remarkable rags-to-riches stories in golf's history, won the annual championship of the game's touring pros with a 6-under-par 66 in the final round over the windswept Players Club at Sawgrass, one of the most difficult courses the touring pros encounter.

"Under the circumstances," he said, "it was my best round ever."

By way of illustration, the 66 was two shots better than the best ball carded over the last 18 holes by Arnold Palmer, Jack Nicklaus, Lee Trevino and Tom Watson. It provided Peete with a 72-hole total of 274, a course record. And it stamped him as a force to be considered in the Masters, two weeks away in Augusta, Ga., and Peete's next scheduled start.

The victory was worth $162,000 from the total purse of $900,000 and lifted Peete's earnings for the year to $269,585. It was his second title of the season, the 10th of his career and, without question, the most important.

"This is just as much a major as any of the other tournaments we call majors," Peete insisted.

Golf's major championships generally are recognized as the Masters, U.S. and British Opens and the PGA. But that is by acceptance only.

There are no rules, no regulations, no standards, nothing of an official nature that indicates the major status of a tournament.

"It is not something that can be done by decree," said PGA Tour Commissioner Deane Beman.

"All we can do is provide all the ingredients necessary for a major championship."

"Then it remains for the players, the press and the public to decide. If enough players call it a major, if enough writers and commentators call it a major, if the public accepts it as a major, then it is."

"If this isn't a major, we don't have one," said D.A. Weibring, who chased Peete to the title, played the last nine holes in 4-under-par 32 and made up no ground at all.

McEnroe wages reach $283,000

MILAN, Italy (AP) — John McEnroe, the reigning king of international tennis, won his fourth straight tournament this year and headed for Chicago hoping to extend his winning streak and add to his 1985 earnings, which already amount to $283,000.

In Chicago, McEnroe is expected to face a tougher challenge from fellow American Jimmy Connors and South African-born Johan Kriek, who did not play the Fila Indoor Trophy tournament here. Connors lost Sunday to Ivan Lendl of Czechoslovakia in a tournament at Fort Myers, Fla.

The 26-year-old McEnroe won the Milan competition for the fourth time since 1979, making short work Sunday of Sweden's Anders Jarryd in the finals. The top-seeded American trounced the 23-year-old, second-seeded Swede 6-4, 6-1 in 66 minutes.

McEnroe conceded after the victory that he had expected a tougher challenge from Jarryd, who had not lost a single set in the previous four rounds.

Jarryd, a member of the Swedish Davis Cup team which defeated the United States in the 1984 finals, missed several easy points and never was a threat to the favored American, who improved his record to 5-1 against the Swede.

McEnroe, who had previously won tournaments in New York, Philadelphia and Houston this year, staged an impressive comeback after a three-week rest caused by an aching wrist.

McEnroe said he felt fit again and eager for more victories.

Retired Swedish star Bjorn Borg, who handed the Fila Trophy to McEnroe after the finale, agreed that the American would reign unchallenged for some more years as the world's No. 1 tennis player.

Borg, who had not seen McEnroe in action since Wimbledon two years ago, said "he has greatly improved his playing from the baseline, is more self-confident and almost unbeatable."

John McEnroe
...winner again

Jarryd, who won the tournament in Brussels two weeks ago, upsetting fellow-Swede Mats Wilander, blamed himself for the defeat, saying he made too many unforced errors.

Ivan Lendl has beaten Jimmy Connors three straight times, but he still hasn't impressed the irascible Connors.

"Lendl didn't do anything exceptionally, except that he served well and was able to keep the ball in play," Connors said after losing to the Czechoslovak 6-3, 6-2 in the finals of the Paine Webber Tennis Classic. Lendl served eight aces and kept Connors on the run with his powerful groundstrokes.

"Eight aces only means eight points in the match," Connors said. "I feel that I was hitting well but not with enough sting. In a two-of-three match, Lendl gets in there and bangs and booms."

Midland nips Giants, 3-1

From Staff Reports

PHOENIX, Ariz. — An RBI triple in the top of the ninth inning by first baseman Glenn Riebel broke a 1-1 tie and gave the Midland Angels a 3-1 exhibition baseball victory over the host Shreveport Giants Sunday.

The win was the third straight for Midland and upped their exhibition record to 3-1. Right-hander David Smith picked up the win in relief after throwing two innings and giving up two hits.

Riebel's game winner was his second hit of the day. Outfielder Reggie Montgomery also collected two hits for the Angels.

Gamblers facing financial problems

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Gamblers part-owner Alvin Lubetkin says the United States Football League team is like a baby that nobody loves.

Attendance at the team's home games last season was sluggish, averaging about 24,000 spectators an event.

"It takes time to win people over," Lubetkin said, adding that the team faces a more pressing problem.

"The big thing is getting another investor. You can't operate without money. The extra 5,000 fans is not the swing factor," Lubetkin said in a recent interview.

If the owners don't find another investor by September, the Gamblers may be looking for a new home, Lubetkin said.

"We continue to feel that it is very important that we bring in another partner," he added. "If it's an outside person, the decision will pass from us to them, and I would think they would be motivated the same way we are — to have the team in their hometown."

Charlotte businessman George Shinn has said he is interested in the Gamblers, who were granted rights to the city.

Motivated Pistons shine

Associated Press

The Detroit Pistons had a couple of reasons for wanting to beat the Boston Celtics, one based on the past and the other on the future.

On March 3, the Celtics beat the Pistons 138-129 and Kevin McHale scored 56 points. As for the future, Detroit is fighting for a homecourt advantage in the first round of the National Basketball Association playoffs, while the Celtics are virtually assured of finishing with the league's best record.

The Pistons got some satisfaction on both motivational fronts Sunday, holding McHale to three points in the pivotal fourth quarter while rallying for a 113-105 victory. The decision kept Detroit 3½ games ahead of Washington in the race for fourth place in the conference and snapped Boston's 10-game winning streak.

"The victory was well-earned, but both teams were kind of struggling," Detroit Coach Chuck Daly said. "They (the Celtics) don't have much motivation right now and we do have a little, trying to keep the homecourt advantage."

Forward Scott Wedman filled in for Bird and scored a season-high 31 points, while Isiah Thomas paced Detroit with 26 points and 15 assists. Long added 22 points for the Pistons.

Spurs 126, Clippers 115
Mike Mitchell scored 18 of his 32 points in the first quarter to help San Antonio beat Los Angeles and clinch a playoff berth for the Spurs.

San Antonio, which pulled ahead 30-29 after one period, led by 17 points with eight minutes left in the game, but the Clippers rallied with an 18-6 spurt over the next 5½ minutes to cut the deficit to 117-112. The Spurs then scored the next nine points to clinch the victory.

Derek Smith led Los Angeles with 24 points.

Lakers 123, Suns 96
Los Angeles completed March with a 13-1 record as Kareem Abdul-Jabbar and Byron Scott scored 20 points apiece against struggling Phoenix.

After the first quarter ended in a 26-26 tie, the Lakers outscored the Suns 36-14 in the second period for a 64-40 halftime lead. The game wasn't closer than 15 points thereafter.

Phoenix, which lost its fifth straight game and the ninth in its last 10 outings, was led by Alvan Adams with 27 points.

Bullets 111, Pacers 105
Washington rallied in the fourth quarter to hand Indiana its 10th consecutive defeat.

The Bullets, who pulled ahead of New Jersey for fifth place in the Eastern Conference, got 26 points from Gus Williams and 23 from Jeff Malone, who also hit the go-ahead basket with 2:05 remaining.

The Pacers, who got 22 points from Clark Kellogg, led 87-82 entering the fourth quarter, but Darren Daye tied the game at 95-95 with 5:49 left and the Bullets went ahead to stay at 103-101 on Malone's basket.

Singer Cyndi Lauper yells from the ring Sunday after "WrestleMania." Richter, whom she manages, won a bout during "WrestleMania."

'WrestleMania' places headlock on chic peak

NEW YORK (AP) — Professional wrestling has grabbed the big time by the throat, smashing bad guys, trotting out big names and cashing in on its new chic status at a sold-out Madison Square Garden show.

Muhammad Ali recalled his glory days at Sunday's extravaganza. Liberace high-kicked with his Rockettes and singer Cyndi Lauper regained her honor — all before a national closed-circuit television audience of 1 million people.

Billed as "WrestleMania," the event marked wrestling's hammerlock on hype — and its arrival, after years out of style, at the peak of chic.

The scene was as grandiose as the promotion: large, sweaty performers heaved one another across the ring, staging brutal kicks and stomps as fans yelled for gore.

"It's rough out there," panted television's Mr. T, who joined good-guy champion Hulk Hogan in a tag-team match. "It's not for no wimps, wrasslin'."

Hogan and Mr. T bashed Rowdy Roddy Piper and Paul "Mr. Wonderful" Orndorff, extracting punishment for the bad guys' criticism of Lauper, a wrestling aficionado. Piper, Ali, as referee, joined briefly in a free-for-all on the mat.

"We're giving people what they want in sports entertainment. The chance to cheer for the good guys, boo the bad guys, have a couple of beers and let off a little steam," said Rex Jones, spokesman for the show's promoters.

The fans let it off in jets, filling the 21,000-seat Garden with boos, hollers and screams for vengeance, downing beers and hoisting banners as spotlights swept the elevated wrestling platform.

Fans also packed the adjoining 5,000-seat Felt Forum for the closed-

With the added spice of grudge matches so intense they make the soap operas look like dishwater, the event is a heady mix of staged brutality, glamour, flying glances, screaming fans and shameless hypbole.

Sunday's show was billed "as the single greatest sports entertainment event of all time," noted WWF spokesman Jones. "And we firmly believe that to be true."

"It's good showmanship. They give you the excitement that you want," said spectator Joseph Vafades of Valley Stream, N.Y., watching the match with his 10-year-old daughter, Dawn Marie. "They get the adrena-lin flowing."

As for the wide-eyed Dawn Marie? "She goes to school and practices the leg lock on her friends."

Where eagles fly

Each fall and winter since time immemorial, the great bald eagles have flocked to Haines, Alaska, by the thousands.

They roost in the cotton woods, bare of leaves for the season, to soar majestically and dive purposefully over the gravelly braids of the Chilkat River. There, they feast on spawned-out salmon, fighting over a catch even as scores of other fish slosh helplessly nearby.

It is an extraordinary sight to behold: the largest collection of eagles in the world.

Perhaps 3,500 of them at any given time are drawn by one of nature's delicately balanced mysteries, a rare upwelling of warm water in the Chilkat, a phenomenon that brings the salmon to spawn so late in the year.

But in a classically Alaskan conflict between the environment and development, between jobs and wildlife, the eagles' treasured habitat not long ago faced almost certain damage from logging and was threatened by mining.

Then, in a strangely rewarding twist, environmentalists and development interests came together in an unusual spirit of compromise to preserve, forever, this great gathering of eagles.

Moreover, the eagle preserve they assured, which many once thought would wreak economic havoc on this community, is now becoming the underpinning of a new economy that may well bring tourists — and jobs — to this scenic little postcard of a town in the Southeast Alaska panhandle.

It is a turn of events that many see as a model for settling environmental conflicts elsewhere, particularly in Alaska, where national conservation goals so often collide with narrower local interests.

"Alaska is the last great battleground of the environment," said state Sen. Bill Ray, who sponsored the legislation that set aside 49,000 acres of the Chilkat Valley for the eagles. "We all want to see the country stay as nice as it can, but we realize there has to be some (development) where we can."

"We took second best, and we're determined to make that work," David R. Cline, regional vice president of the National Audubon Society in Anchorage, said of the compromise that finally brought environmentalists and opposing interests together. "So far, it's working."

"It is a real testament that both sides felt they gave up something," said Thomas R. Quinlan, 59, an accountant and local power broker who drove through here from New York in 1950 and "just never left" after his car broke down. He was a leader in the local coalition that fought against the conservationists.

"Fortunately, it never got to the point where we either had an eagle or a mine. It turned out we could have both."

That was no small accomplishment in a place that once saw bald eagles as a threat to salmon fishing and paid a $2 bounty for a pair of talons. Officials used to fill 55-gallon steel drums with talons as some locals made a living killing bald eagles.

Still, timber-cutting plans now being drawn by the state for the forest that surrounds the Alaska Chilkat Bald Eagle Preserve threaten to open old conflicts and, some say, pose another threat to the eagles.

The effort to preserve the eagles' seasonal habitat dates to the 1920s, when unsuccessful efforts were made to include the area in the Glacier Bay National Monument. But it was not until 1972 that any action was taken to assure the continuation of a stretch of valley so populated by eagles it was called the Bald Eagle Council Grounds.

That year, the state set aside 4,800 acres as a "critical habitat area" but left thousands more acres around the grounds — which were essential to its survival — open to logging and mining.

To help the ailing lumber industry, the state entered into a long-term timber sales agreement in 1979 with the Schnabel Lumber Co. Conservationists feared it allowed excessive cutting at the expense of the environment.

Worried that the state would never act to save the eagle sanctuary, the Audubon Society asked U.S. Sen. Gary Hart, D-Colo., to sponsor federal legislation that would lead to a national wildlife refuge's being created for the eagles.

"People thought people in the Southern 48 would keep enlarging, and enlarging, and enlarging this thing into one big park, locked up — and 'locked up' is fighting words," said Vivian C. Menaker, who was president of Lynn Canal Conservation Inc. when the preserve agreement was reached.

But the threat of a federal solution intensified efforts for an Alaskan solution. Then Gov. Jay S. Hammond imposed a moratorium on "all major development" in the eagles' habitat. Meanwhile, the Audubon Society launched a critical study of the eagles and the woods and streams and fish on which they are so dependent.

It ultimately led to compromise. "More was feared than was known on both sides of the fence," said Ray Menaker, a retired teacher and publisher of the Chilkat Valley News.

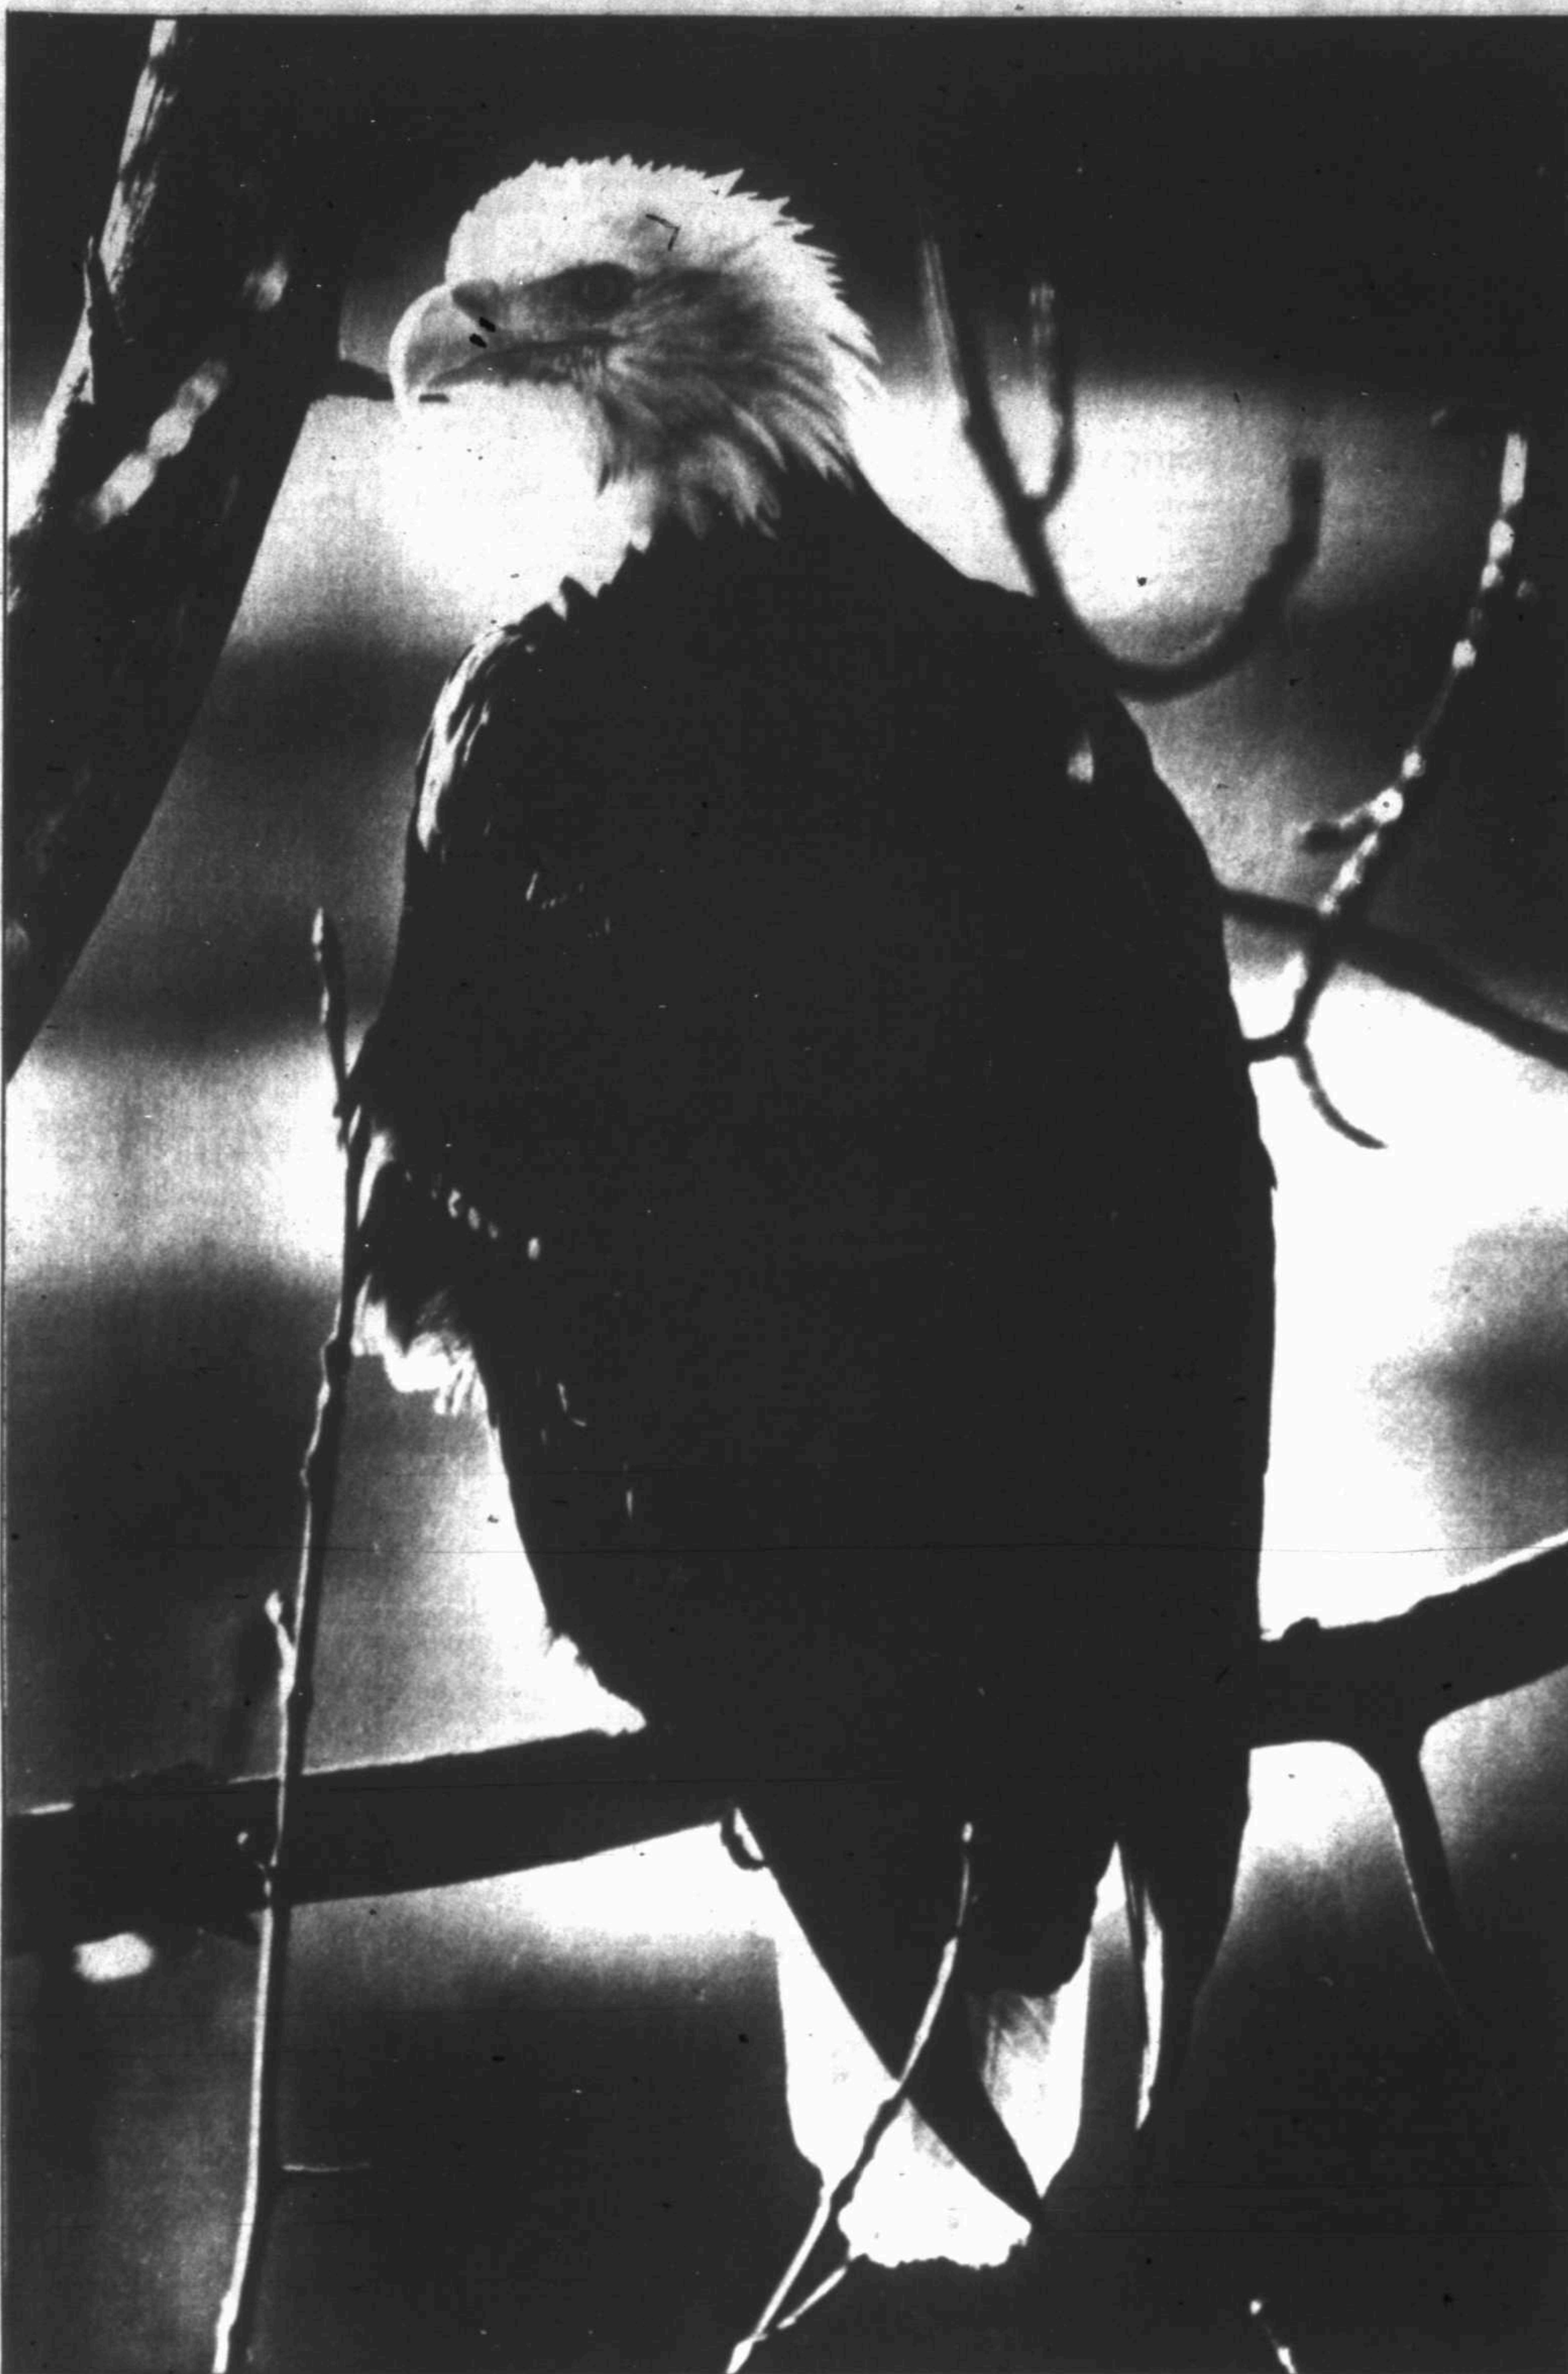

"The studies justified what didn't have to be done," said David E. Olerud, who opposed the preservationists. "It turned out you didn't need 100 miles in each direction to preserve the eagles' grounds."

Instead, the study identified 53,000 critical acres necessary to preserve the pristine, relatively warm water that supports the only thing that attracts the eagles — the late run of salmon.

"We moved from hot air with no basis to a position of facts," Olerud said of the study.

For almost two years, the moratorium dragged on. "That had to be removed," John Schnabel, one of the largest employers in town, recalled. "Finally, at one meeting I stood up and said, 'If we don't solve the problem, the sawmill will close in six months because of the moratorium. If we don't compromise, we're dead.'"

Meanwhile, Cline of the Audubon Society also thought the time was ripe for compromise. "We had to take advantage of the political window," he said. "We had to compromise." And, ultimately, the 49,000-acre preserve was created by the state in 1982 with a state forest area surrounding it. "There's room for logging and mining," Cline said, "if it is done correctly."

The world's largest gathering of eagles takes place each fall and winter at the Bald Eagle Council Grounds, left, below Alaska's Chilkat Mountains. Man and eagle have learned to co-exist in the rugged but valuable area.

Collazo pleads innocent; April 29 trial scheduled

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — State Rep. Frank Collazo Jr. pleaded innocent today at his arraignment on a charge of commercial bribery.

State District Judge Leonard Giblin scheduled Collazo's trial for April 29.

A Jefferson County grand jury alleged on March 21 that Collazo, 53, offered to use his influence to fight pollution charges against a local shipyard owner, Chester Slade, in exchange for part ownership in Slade's business.

The Port Arthur Democrat, a former refinery worker now serving a fifth term in the Texas Legislature, is the vice chairman of the House Environmental Affairs Committee.

Collazo's attorneys, former state Reps. Louis Dugas and Wayne Peveto, both of Orange, have said they are eager to try the case and would like to get the matter settled before the legislative session ends next month.

Slade is also a former state representative.

Man, charged in robbery of gas station, in custody

From Staff Reports

A 21-year-old Midland man remained in custody this morning in connection with the Saturday night robbery of a southside gas station.

The man, who gave police a South Jackson Street address, was arrested at 12:25 a.m. Sunday at a bar at 900 E. Illinois Ave. The unemployed laborer was charged with the 9:15 p.m. Saturday aggravated robbery of the L&L, Inc., gas station at 808 S. Big Spring.

Reports indicate two men, one of them carrying a small pistol, entered the store and demanded money. The clerk emptied the cash register and the men left on foot.

According to police, the man was picked up after investigating officers determined he matched the description of one of the robbers provided by the clerk.

A second man has not been apprehended and the investigation is continuing.

A 22-year-old Midland woman was arrested Saturday night in connection with the burglary of Carter's Furniture warehouse at 300 E. Indiana.

According to reports, Midland police responded to the scene at 9:10 p.m. after being notified of a burglary in progress. While police were taking a report about the burglary, another officer stopped a 1973 Oldsmobile Delta 88 that had merchandise strapped on the top and trunk of the car.

When the officer attempted to stop the car, the driver fled before abandoning it. According to reports, all occupants of the car but the one woman escaped.

Reports indicate 15 chairs valued at $4,440 were stolen in the burglary. Midland police are continuing their investigation into the burglary Sunday night of a residence at 117 E. Cowden. According to reports, Mary Lou Alcocer said she left the house at 8 p.m. and returned an hour later to find a television set, cable television converter box and a video cassette recorder missing. Total valued was placed at $1,125. Entry was gained by forcing open a sliding back door, reports said.

In reports filed Sunday with the Midland County Sheriff's Office, Joe Hoover of P.O. Box 2817 told deputies he returned home at 11 p.m. Sunday to find his southside mobile home had been burglarized. According to reports, Hoover had been out of town since 5 a.m. that day. Taken were a television set, stereo, tool box and an antique .22-caliber rifle. Value of the items had not been determined.

A 20-year-old man was arrested early this morning on charges of evading arrest and felony possession of marijuana.

According to reports, the man was driving east in the 4400 block of West Industrial when an westbound deputy made a U-turn to check out his vehicle and the driver "decided to elude."

Reports indicate the man was caught and placed under arrest for eluding an officer. During inventory of his pickup, more than four ounces of what is believed to be marijuana were found, reports said.

Ten Midland firefighters responded about 9 p.m. Sunday to a trailer house fire at County Road 80-E and CR 1162.

Owned by Darrell Truex of Route 2 Box 125-D, the trailer house sustained heavy damage in the fire, which began in a bedroom.

Cause of the fire, which was extinguished with 1,500 gallons, had not been determined.

Environmentalists say cure worse than problem

LUFKIN, Texas (AP) — Environmentalists say the U.S. Forest Service is waging an unwinnable war against the pine beetle and in the process is destroying hundreds of acres of Texas wilderness.

"It's the Texas Chainsaw Massacre," Rodney Snodgrass, regional director of The Wilderness Society, a Washington-based environmental group, told the Dallas Times Herald.

"The question is, are we going to have any wilderness left when the forest service gets done cutting?"

The U.S. Forest Service has cut down thousands of acres of East Texas pine trees in an effort to destroy the ubiquitous Southern pine beetle.

Forest service workers have drawn the battle lines with chainsaws, cutting 200-foot buffer zones through the forest to stop the pest.

"You can't eliminate the beetles; you just try to keep the population as small as possible," said David Daley, deputy forest supervisor for the national forests of Texas.

But many experts disagree with the method, saying the pine beetle cannot be eradicated by cutting down trees because beetles can fly thousands of feet, across the widest buffer zone.

"I'm not convinced this is an effective means of diminishing the beetle populations," said Thomas Mueller, an entomologist for the Texas Department of Agriculture.

"There's good evidence that in many cases, the Southern pine beetle has no trouble crossing these buffer zones."

Last year, the forest service denuded 3,000 acres in the Angelina National Forest to reduce a beetle infestation of timber in the Four Notch area, which had been considered for designation as a wilderness area.

"By the time they got done, it was no longer worth designating as a wilderness," said Snodgrass.

Environmentalists claim the insect war cannot be won, and that the forest service has already destroyed 285 acres of Texas wilderness.

Environmentalists fear the insects will be used as an excuse to begin logging in other states. Already, they say, wilderness areas in Louisiana and Mississippi are being cut in efforts to control the beetles.

"It damages the wilderness severely," Ned Fritz of Dallas, Texas Committee on Natural Resources director, said. "It's like trying to control a flu epidemic by killing everyone in the neighborhood."

Rep. John Bryant, D-Dallas, has introduced a bill in Congress that would ban the forest service from cutting trees in wilderness areas. Bryant sponsored legislation last year that set aside 37,000 acres of wilderness in Texas national forests.

"It's galling," said Bryant, adding that the forest service has continued to cut down trees even after the Texas wilderness bill was signed into law by President Reagan last October.

"Within a few months of the bill being signed by the President, they suddenly decide they've got to go in there and cut these areas to control pine beetles," he said. "There's supposed to be no cutting."

Two men go on trial for murder of minister

PALO PINTO, Texas (AP) — Jury selection in the capital murder trial of two men indicted in the February 1984 slaying of a Dublin minister was to begin today.

Dale Arthur John Carrasquillo, 23, and 25-year-old Robert Michael Purcell, are charged with killing 55-year-old Rev. John H. Basham Feb. 7 during a robbery.

The trial comes nearly 14 months after Basham's beaten, stabbed and strangled body was found Feb. 9 in the back seat of his Volkswagen van, parked along Interstate 20 about two miles south of Gordon.

Basham, minister of First United Methodist Church in Dublin, was last seen Feb. 6 on the way to a ministerial conference in Dallas.

When he failed to appear at the conference and didn't meet his wife Jo Ann the next day, family members became concerned and reported him missing.

Investigators said Basham died from strangulation, but he also had been stabbed with a penknife and hit over the head with a small television set.

As lawmen sought leads in the murder, they discovered Basham had two prior convictions in Dallas County — one for drug possession in 1976 and the other for soliciting prostitution in 1978.

More than a month passed with no arrests in sight, when Palo Pinto County authorities were informed two men had bragged to an undercover Phoenix, Ariz., police officer, about killing a Texas minister.

Initially identified as brothers Steven John Radcliff and Christopher Andy Radcliff, the suspects were arrested in mid-March of 1984 and subsequently charged in connection with a car theft ring in Phoenix.

Officials in Arizona said the men bragged about killing Basham, claiming they met him in a Dallas bar and all three went for a ride in Basham's van.

Traveling west on I-20, the suspects apparently set out to rob Basham and a scuffle broke out.

Although Mrs. Basham said her husband only had about $40 when he left for Dallas, the men bragged of taking more than $1,000 from the minister, officials said.

Purcell and Carrasquillo pleaded guilty to trafficking in stolen property in Phoenix and each received 10-year sentences.

They then were extradited to Palo Pinto in August 1984 on capital murder warrants, despite vows never to return to Texas alive and at least two suicide attempts.

Last week, 29th District Attorney Jim Ashby said only half the jury panel, numbering more than 200, would be called Monday.

He said he was unsure how long it would take to seat a jury, but that it could take three weeks.

Purcell's court-appointed defense attorneys are former senators Tom Creighton and Ken Tarleton, both of Mineral Wells.

Attorneys John Moore and Mike Smiddy, of Mineral Wells, were appointed to represent Carrasquillo.

Beaumont police leave illegal aliens to Feds

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — Hispanics here are honoring their local police chief for adopting a new police policy that discourages the arrest of illegal aliens solely because of their immigration status.

"(Hispanics) are a lot happier now," said Johnny Ortiz, local LULAC chapter president. "Hispanics were being stopped for no reason at all. Police weren't treating them like everyone else. It reached the point where you would go out in the streets and see Hispanics running and hiding if they saw a police officer."

The policy, which took effect on Feb. 18, says the federal government — not Beaumont police — are responsible for enforcement of immigration laws, the Beaumont Enterprise-Journal reported.

Officers "will not detain, arrest or place an immigration hold on any person not suspected of committing a crime (but) solely on the basis that they may be deportable aliens," the order said.

Beaumont Police Chief John Swan said the new rule simply reflects court decisions throughout the United States that say people should not be bothered "just because they have brown skin."

The League of United Latin American Citizens plans to honor Swan for the effort at the league's convention in May.

An illegal presence in this country is only a misdemeanor, Swan said, and the Beaumont policy follows the example of police departments in Houston, Austin and San Jose, Calif.

"We will handle Hispanic individuals like any other citizen," Swan said. "In the past, many Hispanic citizens were stopped for no apparent reason other than they were Hispanic," he said.

"There are about 12,000 to 13,000 Hispanic people in Beaumont," Swan said. "If we stopped one every seven to 10 days, that is a lot of harassment of our own citizens."

Swan said officers will continue to arrest illegal aliens if the department has a charge against them, and will cooperate with the U.S. Border Patrol when requested. The policy states that if an illegal alien is arrested for a felony offense or has an extensive criminal record, a staff officer will automatically notify the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service.

An INS spokesman said the new policy mirrors one that agency has been following for about six months.

Richard Powell, an INS criminal investigator in Houston, said the agency is informing law enforcement officials throughout the country that the primary responsibility for arresting illegal aliens belongs to INS.

The new attitude was spurred by lawsuits brought against the INS and local police departments by Hispanics, Powell said.

Marchers protest soviet oppression

AUSTIN (AP) — Between 150 and 200 Austin Jews have marched three miles in protest of the Soviet Union's oppression of the Jewish race.

The marchers, from toddlers to retirees, carried protest signs Sunday bearing slogans such as "Free Soviet Jewry," "To Be Silent is to Forget," and "Let Our People Go."

Marcher Linda Greenberg said participants also carried a long white paper chain that symbolized the bondage of Soviet Jews.

"The march is symbolic because Passover is coming up, and that's when we celebrate our release from bondage," she told the Austin American-Statesman.

Passover begins Friday. The celebration is an eight-day holiday commemorating the deliverance of the Hebrews from Egyptian slavery.

"The importance of this occasion is that our children learn what it is like to be Jews in this world and to be free in this world," said Jeff Friedman, former Austin mayor.

Soviet Jews are living under the reign of a "modern day Pharaoh," said Rabbi Cary Kozberg.

Built: Absentee voting totals 665

From Staff Reports

Absentee voting in Saturday's city-hospital-school elections totals 665 since voting began March 18, Janeice Built, Midland County Elections Administrator, said today.

Absentee voting ends at 5 p.m. Tuesday at the Elections Administration Office, 707 W. Washington Ave.

"It seems like it's a little heavy," Ms. Built said of the voting, "because people are going out of town over the (upcoming) Easter weekend."

She said that 54,806 Midlanders are registered to vote in the elections for representatives to the Midland City Council, the Midland and Greenwood Independent School Districts' boards of trustees and the Midland County Hospital District's board of directors.

Election-day voting for Greenwood school trustees will be at the Greenwood School, she said, while voting places will be set up at nine additional sites for the city, Midland ISD and hospital elections.

In addition, Ms. Built noted that between 2,000 and 3,000 of the 16,000 modified voter-registration certificates mailed out due to precinct changes effected by the recent single-member districting have been returned to her office. "The post office just didn't deliver them because of various reasons," including address changes. Voter certificates are not forwardable by the U.S. Postal Service, she noted. Those who have not received their new blue voter certificates may contact Ms. Built or her deputies her office or by dialing 687-0231 or 687-0232.

Young Democrats to present forum

The Midland County Young Democrats will present a forum for the City Council at-large candidates Tuesday at 7 p.m. in the Flame Room of the Energas Building, 2402 W. Wall.

Each candidate will be allowed a

Preschoolers study piano

DALLAS (AP) — Five-year-old Christopher Graney of suburban Philadelphia can play a spirited two-handed piano rendition of "Hot Cross Buns." His classmate, Kristi Wellington, plays "Mexican Hat Dance" on the piano and on the zither as well. Matthew Cox, of Macomb, Ill., also 5, taught himself how to play "Mary Had A Little Lamb" — first on the piano, then on the violin.

Christopher, Kristi and Matthew are members of a growing corps of preschoolers who are studying piano, an instrument once thought too difficult for children their age. Now, however, educators and parents are finding that preschoolers take to music study naturally, and to piano in particular, reports The National Piano Foundation, headquartered in Dallas.

Furthermore, music study at an early age develops non-musical attributes such as discipline, motor skills, language skills and vocabulary, music educators say. As a result, an increasing number of independent piano teachers, piano preparatory schools and piano retailers are offering preschool classes.

"The importance of learning experiences in the early years is becoming more and more apparent," says Linda Clary, education coordinator of the Music Education Center in Houston and co-author of "Sing and Play," a preschool instruction guide for piano teachers. "The young child is more capable of learning and more susceptible to learning than he or she will ever be again. The more learning experiences that occur in these years, the greater the learning potential."

Her co-author Ann Collins, associate professor of piano and piano pedagogy at Western Illinois University and an advisor to The National Piano Foundation, adds that "music and children are a natural combination. Most children respond to the pitches and rhythms of music practically from birth." Mrs. Collins has written a pamphlet on the subject for parents, "Piano and Your Preschooler."

The piano is an ideal instrument for teaching preschoolers music, says Larry Harms, educational manager of a Philadelphia music education center, because "merely by pressing a key, you get a sound. You don't have to position your lips just right, you don't have to hold a big heavy instrument, you don't have to worry about producing a good tone. It's multisensory — not only can you hear the tone, you can see and feel how it's produced."

"Preschoolers are usually eager to learn," says Mrs. Collins. "But this interest may diminish if they're put off until they're 'old enough.' Older children can become frustrated in their desire to play difficult music immediately. Preschoolers are much more patient with themselves." Alice Graney, Christopher's mother, says, "He loves it. We practice every day from 15 minutes to half an hour. I've never had to coax him to do it."

Matthew Cox often asks, "Mommy, can I play the piano?" reports his mother, Sheila. "He's never seen it as work, never seen it as an assignment, because he started when he was so young. He will go the piano on his own when he's walking through the house, work out songs that he's learned in preschool, and ask, 'Can we write the notes?'"

Kristi Wellington was given a zither at the Montessori preschool she attends. "Once she found middle C, she just went crazy," says her mother, Sheri. "She could figure out and play all the songs she had learned on the piano. You could see it was a thrill."

Harms, who has been teaching piano to Philadelphia preschoolers for seven years, says, "What impresses me is that kids come in with wild enthusiasm, pure exuberance. They'll say, 'Can I show you this piece I made up?' and 'Let's play this first.' They have a sense that I'm good at this — I have a skill that not too many other people have."

The pamphlet, "Piano and Your Preschooler" is available for a stamped, self-addressed No. 10 envelope from The National Piano Foundation, 15080 Beltwood Parkway East, Suite 108, Dallas, Tex. 75381.

Working mothers, such as these picking up their children at the Child Educational Center of the Caltech/Jet Propulsion Laboratory in La Canada, Calif., nearly all have something in common — guilt.

Working mothers feel unnecessary guilt

Associated Press

The majority of American mothers work outside the home and they have one thing in common — guilt.

Working mothers fear their absence from the home will hurt their children but, according to an article in the April issue of Redbook, the experts advise them not to worry.

The consensus among social scientists, who have been researching the problem since the 1930s, holds that a mother's working has no predictable effect on children. What does matter is whether a mother feels good about whether she works or stays home.

Lois Hoffman, a psychologist at the University of Michigan and a researcher into maternal employment, said that when working mothers are happy about their decision to work, they are more likely to encourage their children's independence.

"These kids are proud of learning how to take care of themselves," said Sally Wendkos Olds, author of "The Working Parents Survival Guide." "The older kids of working mothers even speak a little condescendingly of their friends who have had less responsibility at home and are 'helpless.'"

The experts say working mothers must not only be comfortable with the decision to work, but also must be happy in their jobs. Some studies indicate children of mothers who are dissatisfied with their jobs show more signs of poor adjustment than children of nonworking mothers or mothers who like their work.

A common worry among working mothers is that working outside the home will interfere with the mother-child relationship. Not so, concluded Sally Kilmer in a review of the literature on day care published in "Current Topics in Early Childhood Education."

"Whatever the unique features of mother-child relationships," she wrote, "they clearly were maintained even though children began group care as young as two to three months of age and were away from their mothers up to 40 or more hours a week during the first three years of life."

Children of working mothers also may benefit by receiving extra paternal care. Not every father pitches in. But those who do, said Diane Ehrensaft, a psychologist at the Wright Institute in Berkeley, Calif., are rewarded with "a very intimate child-parent relationship that might not have developed between them if the mother were at home full time."

She added that having two working parents can broaden a child's perception of sex roles.

"In cases where both parents define themselves as 'primary' and parenting responsibilities are equally assumed," she said, "the children develop a broader sense of self. The roles they choose in life won't be dictated by their sex."

A survey on working mothers, conducted by the University of Arizona and representing about one-third of the country's pediatricians, found the majority of respondents viewed favorably the idea of working mothers.

One group differed, according to Redbook, and voted that children of employed women were at higher risk than those of nonworking mothers. The doctors who disapproved were older male pediatricians whose wives do not work outside the home.

Use 'street smarts' to prevent crime

Associated Press

FBI statistics predict that one out of three women in the United States will be the victim of a sexual assault, but learning to be street smart can help beat the odds.

Don't make it easy for the criminal to commit a street crime, advises New York City Detective Lucille Burrascano in an article in the April issue of Harper's Bazaar, and don't play the role of victim.

"Body language is crucial," she said, "and not just for women. Also for men. When you are on the street, make eye contact with people. Let them know you aren't afraid, that you have control and power. Always be outer-directed, instead of inner-directed. And the minute you spot trouble, walk away from it."

Don't pretend all is well and do nothing.

"Convert your fear into good, healthy anger," she said. "Tell yourself, 'I am not going to let this person intimidate me.' You may be scared, but you must also act. It's natural to be afraid, but do something about it."

Burrascano offered these pointers for self-protection:

— If you are being followed by someone more than 20 feet away, blow a whistle or scream — but not making is only effective well before a crime begins.

— Or go into a store and tell the proprietor you want to call the police.

— If possible, tell a passerby what is happening.

— Never duck into a hallway or lobby. You are safer outdoors.

— Avoid walking alone at night. If you must and you spot a suspicious person approaching, step off the curb and walk in the middle of the street so a potential attacker must reveal his intentions early by following you off the sidewalk.

— Always walk on the side of the street facing oncoming traffic so a criminal can't sneak up behind you in a car.

— Take care if possible when coming home late at night. Ask the driver to wait until you get indoors.

— Case the entrance to your building before going in. Look both ways on the street.

— If you live alone, pretend you don't. Burrascano told of a woman living alone who always shouted up at her window, "Hey, Fred, I'll be right up."

— On payday, go to the bank with others.

— If you must carry a lot of cash, split it up. Stash some in your purse and some in pockets, preferably held shut with Velcro.

Burrascano opposes carrying a handgun or mace for self-protection because there is no guarantee that the victim will get them out in time — or that they will work.

"Weapons never help a situation," she said. "People put too much faith in them. Another mistake is thinking they are ready for the kind of violence they may encounter in a robbery or rape — when they are not."

In case of robbery, Burrascano advised compliance. In rape, Detective Ellen King of the NYPD Sex Crimes Division said whether to fight or comply is a matter of individual circumstance.

"Above all, use your instincts," Burrascano told Bazaar. "When something happens and you get an unexplained feeling, which is what an instinct is, don't try to talk yourself out of it."

Brothers get walking papers after school bus suspension

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: The whole town is talking about two brothers, ages 9 and 11, who were suspended from using the school bus for five days because they created a disturbance on the bus.

The boys' parents refused to drive them — they made the boys walk 14 miles a day to teach them a lesson!

Well, it got into the newspapers all over the nation, and the parents received phone calls from California, Wisconsin, Florida and Switzerland, from people calling to congratulate them. The parents said they told their sons that if the type of behavior that got them kicked off the bus in the first place ever occurred again, they'd be walking for 10 days instead of five. The boys' father said he followed them in his car to assure their safety.

Personally, I think making kids that age walk 14 miles a day borders on child abuse. How do you feel about it, Abby? — J. IN CONWAY, ARK.

DEAR J.: As long as the boys were in no danger, I think the punishment fit the crime. I see no child abuse here. In my book, those parents care enough about their children to discipline them. They should be cloned — not criticized.

DEAR ABBY: I am 59 and the lady I am marrying is 50. This is the second marriage for both of us. Both of our spouses are deceased.

All our friends want to come to our wedding and they will probably give us gifts. Here is the problem: We have two of everything — two toasters, two steam irons, two blenders, etc., and we do not need any more things.

I would like to insert the following in our wedding invitations: "We do not need any wedding gifts, so instead of registering for china and silver with a department store, we have registered with the () travel bureau for a seven-day cruise."

"You may make a donation to the () travel bureau in our names. But remember, attending our wedding is all the gift we really want."

You may not agree with this approach, Abby, but doesn't it seem silly to get a lot of presents at our age when a wedding cruise would be more practical?

Sign me ... LONGING FOR THE LOVE BOAT

DEAR LONGING: If a few of your close friends were to spread the news about the cruise, you would have smooth sailing. But to insert a pitch for a cruise with your wedding invitation would be going overboard.

DEAR ABBY: If you can tolerate one more letter regarding the lady who found a diamond ring in a Chicago hotel, I would like to tell you what is going on in Kentucky. Unlike Illinois, Kentucky doesn't have an estray statute that specifies the rights of finders. As a result, the law is unsettled and sometimes unfair. A recent case involved a young student who found $35,000 cash in a brown paper bag in the garbage can at his college. He did the honest thing and turned in the money. Despite his good deed, the Kentucky Court of Appeals recently ruled that he would not receive one cent for his honesty because he couldn't prove that the original owner intended to abandon the money! This proof would be difficult to present because the true owner has never been heard from.

Many people are hopping mad about the legal system's treatment of this young man. Unless the laws are fashioned to protect finders of lost property, honest people like the lady in Chicago and the young man in Louisville will be discouraged from turning in the valuables they find, making those who have been innocently separated from their property the biggest losers of all. — CONCERNED CITIZEN, LOUISVILLE, KY.

(Do you hate to write letters because you don't know what to say? Thank-you notes, sympathy letters, congratulations, how to decline and accept invitations and how to write an interesting letter are included in Abby's booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions." Send your name and address printed with a check or money order for $2.50 (this includes postage) to: Dear Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Cap, gown business booms

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. (AP) — Students in U.S. high schools and colleges continue to show increased interest and participation in graduation ceremonies, according to an executive of a major manufacturer of graduation apparel.

"During the Vietnam years, participation in graduation ceremonies by students and faculty dropped significantly," says Ted Beach, vice president marketing for Collegiate Cap and Gown here.

"But the volume and kind of orders this year indicates students and faculty not only want to participate, they are seeking ways to make the event more memorable — adding more color, more pageantry, and a stronger emphasis on souvenir items like tassels, cords and pendants."

The executive said a substantial increase in the number of gowns for graduates of day care and other preschool programs reflects the increasing number of two-career and single-parent families.

"The day could come when one individual might go through six or more graduations in a lifetime — kindergarten, grade school, junior-high, high school, college and graduate school," Beach added.

Iraq reports jet raid of Iranian capital

Associated Press

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Iraq said its jet fighters raided the Iranian capital today — the second attack in seven hours. The Iranian military command confirmed both raids and said 15 people were killed and 121 others wounded.

A Baghdad military spokesman said Iraqi warplanes also struck a "large naval target" in the Persian Gulf south of Iran's Kharg Island oil terminal. Marine salvage executives along the gulf region said they had no confirmation of the attack.

The Iraqis use the term "large naval target" to refer to supertankers. The Baghdad spokesman said the raid in the gulf was in line with the Iraqi policy of trying to cut Iran's oil export income.

Iraq has warned international shipping companies to keep their vessels out of a 50-mile radius around Kharg or risk sea and air attacks.

Iran and Iraq have crippled more than 70 vessels in the gulf waters since January 1984, according to independent maritime shipping sources along the gulf.

The attack on Tehran was the 18th reported by Iraq in 18 days. The Iraqis said the raids were "our response to aggression committed against our peaceful cities and people." The military spokesman said all jet fighters returned to base.

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency, monitored in Nicotia, Cyprus, said women and children were among the 15 people killed and 121 wounded.

IRNA said the raid was by "intruding Iraqi planes that hit two residential areas destroying and damaging many houses," and followed one on Sunday by a solitary Iraqi plane that was driven back by anti-aircraft fire.

Iran announced that following the latest raid on Tehran, Iranian artillery batteries opened fire on the southern Iraqi city of Basra in retaliation.

IRNA said military and economic installations in Basra "were heavily pounded, inflicting losses and casualties."

Meanwhile, residents near a Baghdad park said a Sunday afternoon explosion in the park shattered windows in stores, offices and hotels and damaged cars. They said they did not know of any casualties or substantial damage.

IRNA said Iran fired two surface-to-surface missiles into Baghdad at about the same time as the blast, but Baghdad residents said they heard only one explosion.

An Iraqi military spokesman said Iraqi warplanes also raided the Iranian towns of Gilan-e Garb, Sar-e Pol Zahab, Dehlaran, Mehran and Hormuzabad, and the Husseinabad army camp. Iran did not confirm those attacks.

The attacks were a continuation of the latest flare-up in the 4½-year-old war. The new fighting has been marked by stepped-up air raids and missile and artillery barrages against each others' cities.

An IRNA dispatch said Iranian jets bombed Iraqi troop concentrations and other military and economic targets in the Iraqi cities of Suleimaniyah and Kut, inflicting heavy losses.

An Iraqi communique said Iraqi jets conducted 113 bombing raids Sunday against Iranian soldiers along the southern and central sectors of the 733-mile-long border.

It said Iraqi helicopter gunships chased troops and destroyed six river boats in the southern Huwaz marshland.

Iraqi gunners shelled Iranian positions and forces in the southern desert sector, the communique added.

U.N. Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar was in Saudi Arabia today as part of a gulf swing in a new effort to arrange a halt to attacks on cities and shipping by Iran and Iraq.

Iraq's foreign minister, Tariq Aziz, today denied that the purpose of his recent trip to the Soviet Union was to seek permission to use Soviet-made long-range missiles, as a newspaper account stated.

Speaking to reporters in Tokyo, where he is meeting with officials about the war, he said: "When we acquire arms, we don't accept any preconditions on using those weapons."

He also denied that Iraq had ever used chemical weapons against Iran.

Christian pilgrims celebrate Palm Sunday

Associated Press

Tens of thousands of Christian pilgrims clutching palm branches retraced the steps of Jesus down the Mount of Olives to the walled Old City of Jerusalem to mark the start of the week of religious celebrations that precede Easter.

At the Vatican, more than 300,000 people waving flags and palm fronds filled St. Peter's Square on Sunday to hear Pope John Paul II celebrate a special outdoor Mass for Palm Sunday.

Palm Sunday commemorates the arrival of Jesus in Jerusalem before the Crucifixion, and the greeting he received from people who covered his path with palm branches. It begins Holy Week, the week leading up to the celebration of Jesus' resurrection.

Vatican officials said nearly 200,000 of those in the Square were high school and college students who came from more than 80 countries after the pope suggested a pilgrimage as part of the international Youth Year proclaimed by the United Nations.

Italy's state-run RAI television network, which broadcast the ceremony live, said more than 300,000 people filled the square and nearby streets.

"Never before has man felt so threatened as today," John Paul said.

"The young ask themselves what will be the future of man in this electronic world of stupendous discoveries, splendid, but at the same time threatening," the pope said in Italian from a raised, covered platform on the steps of St. Peter's Basilica.

The Polish-born pontiff read greetings in nearly a dozen languages, and youngsters from around the world presented gifts to him.

Maria Gomez of Argentina and Julio Catalan of Chile presented a replica of the statue of Jesus that stands on the border of the two South American nations. The gift was a sign of gratitude to the pontiff for mediating an accord between the two countries, which almost went to war over the strategic Beagle Channel off their southern coasts.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Police fire on crowd

of black marchers, kill 19

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — A police officer testified today he saw one stone thrown by an approaching crowd of black marchers before he ordered his men to open fire, killing 19 people.

Li. Johan William Fouché's testimony at an inquiry into the March 21 shootings appeared to contradict the white-minority government's version that police opened fire only after they were surrounded and pelted with stones and gasoline bombs.

However, Fouché defended his action. "I believe my men and I would definitely be overrun and killed if I didn't give the order to fire," he said.

Israelis seize West Bank

JERUSALEM — Israel has seized effective control of more than half of the land in the West Bank during the almost 19 years it has occupied the territory, according to a critical study released Sunday.

The study says that 597,125 acres — 41 percent of the West Bank — are now in the direct possession of Israel, and that on another 142,500 acres owned by Arabs, Israel has imposed prohibitions against building and other land-use restrictions that preclude independent Arab development.

Together, outright expropriation and the land-use restrictions give Israel effective control of 52 percent of the West Bank, enough territory to support up to 1 million Jewish settlers, according to the report.

MOSCOW — If the Kremlin's new-generation leader, Mikhail S. Gorbachev, wants to rejuvenate Soviet society he will have to arrange major shifts in a Politburo that still resembles a gerontocracy.

Since his swift takeover of power from the late Konstantin U. Chernenko, there have been reports that the 54-year-old Gorbachev will make the all-powerful Politburo better reflect his own image as the group's youngest member.

Five of the 10 current members of the body that effectively governs the Soviet Union are more than 70 years old, and several owe their employment entirely to the late President Leonid I. Brezhnev, who died in 1982.

Plane crash investigated

EDMONTON, Alberta (AP) — A military board of inquiry is sifting through the wreckage of two Canadian Armed Forces C-130 Hercules aircraft that collided in the air Friday, killing nine Canadian airmen and a U.S. exchange pilot.

The shattered, fire-blackened debris, which is scattered over an area equivalent to four city blocks at CFB Edmonton, won't be cleaned up until one five-member board has gone over it, Maj. Dick Adam, base information officer, said Sunday.

After that, it will likely take several days to haul the wrecks away and clear the 2,133-meter runway.

The two giant, four-engine cargo planes, part of a formation of three, were in a fly-past as part of celebrations commemorating the 51st anniversary of the founding of the Royal Canadian Air Force. Fifteen minutes later, two of them collided and plunged to the ground. They exploded in a fireball near the end of the runway.

The U.S. exchange officer was identified as Capt. Lonnie Register, 36, of El Paso, Texas.

Bomb threat halts subway

TORONTO (AP) — Toronto's subway closed three hours early as police started a last-minute security sweep for explosives after Armenian terrorists threatened to bomb the train during morning rush hour today.

Hundreds of police officers, including some using dogs trained to scent explosives, checked 40 kilometers of routes before the subway's scheduled reopening at 6 a.m. EST.

The Toronto Transit Commission decided Friday to shut the subway early after police received the threat Tuesday.

Toronto police called in reinforcements from as far away as Ottawa and Montreal as an extra security measure.

The Toronto Star said an estimated 1,000 additional officers had been called in to back up Toronto police during rush hour, but police officials said that figure was blown out of proportion.

Doctor fights court, police

WINNIPEG, Manitoba (AP) — His clinic has been raided, his medical license suspended and, in all probability, he'll be served with more criminal charges this week. But Dr. Henry Morgentaler has shown no signs of giving up the battle to keep his Winnipeg abortion clinic open.

Hours after the clinic was raided by police for the second Saturday in a row, Morgentaler was launching another appeal for donations to replace medical equipment he said was taken in an act of "robbery" by police.

"I do not understand why you insist on raiding my clinic again and again," he said in an appeal to Winnipeg police and provincial Attorney General Roland Penner.

A staff member said the controversial clinic would again be providing abortions on April 3 but there are a number of obstacles to its reopening.
