Communication key to success of mock chemical spill

By JEFF WEST
Staff Writer

The truck driver in the simulation was theoretically dead, but all the other mock victims survived a hazardous-material (haz-mat) disaster simulation yesterday.

The exercise was run by the Local Emergency Planning Committee and involved most of the emergency agencies that would be involved in a real incident, both public and private.

"I think it went real well," said Ken Hall emergency management coordinator. "We had our critique at Columbia Medical Center and there was nothing but good things said."

Besides area law enforcement agencies, a haz-mat team from Celanese was there and a representative from Burlington Northern Railroad were there. Representatives from the Red Cross and Salvation Army were there, too. Hall said the Celanese team showed up because of a request for mutual aid. The Pampa Fire Department could handle the chemicals that were simulated at this exercise, but for many other chemicals they would have to rely on the Celanese haz-mat team to deal with the spill.

Hall said communication between the agencies often is a problem at exercises and simulations, but not yesterday. He said Kelly Randall, a member of the LEPC acting as master controller for the exercise, was impressed that the incident command staff used plain language more which helped simplify things as far as communication with other persons who responded.

Hall said that he was impressed with the job that Angela Cobler did in Central Dispatch. She had to handle normal traffic plus all the traffic from the "accident" scene. She said she got several calls from people who heard the sirens go

After today, elementary students are joining the ranks of students on summer vacation. Pampa's elementary schools stayed in school longer because of a late start in the fall due to school renovations. Kay Harvey's gifted and talented students at Austin Elementary are enjoying the last week of school as they work together with capsellas to create objects using gears and circuits. Students include Trevor Talley, Ben Briscoe, Tyler Doughty, Clayton Young, Anna Shafer, Stacey Pepper, Angela Henthorn, Jacey Planteen and Miles Anderson.

Republican satisfies House dress code with jacket, tie — and shorts

WASHINGTON (AP) — A jacket and tie is standard for any man on the floor of the House, but the dress code says nothing about shorts, as Rep. Jack Quinn proved Wednesday.

"They said you need a tie and a coat and I qualify," the Republican from Buffalo, N.Y., told a group of reporters aghast at the sight of his casual attire.

He also wore deck shoes without socks.

With the House regrouping after a week's recess, Quinn explained that he had just flown in from his district, where he was celebrating the Buffalo Sabres' 2-1 win Tuesday night over the Washington Capitals in the NHL Eastern Conference finals.

He said he also wanted to dispel the notion that it's always cold in Buffalo.

"I just came from Buffalo and it's gorgeous," Quinn said.

'World's Largest Fish Fry' in Borger?

By MIRANDA G. BAILEY
Staff Writer

Borger's "35th Annual World's Largest Fish Fry" this weekend brings with it a large-size claim. But, according to locals, there is plenty of proof to support the plenty of fish in this title.

"Calling the fish fry the world's largest has struck up some controversy," said the Borger Chamber of Commerce President Joe Frank Wheeler. "Back in 1965, the people who ran the fish fry started calling it the World's Largest Fish Fry with the hopes that it would become the world's largest."

The reason for the controversy is the World's Largest/Biggest Fish Fry in Paris, Tenn., according to Wheeler.

"Those in the Volunteer State claim to feed 8,500 pounds of catfish in five days," he said.

But, Wheeler said, 8,500 divided by five is 1,700. And the chamber plans on serving 2,500 pounds of catfish this Saturday, he added.

"So I would still say, based on everything I've ever learned, we have the world's largest one-day fish fry," said Wheeler.

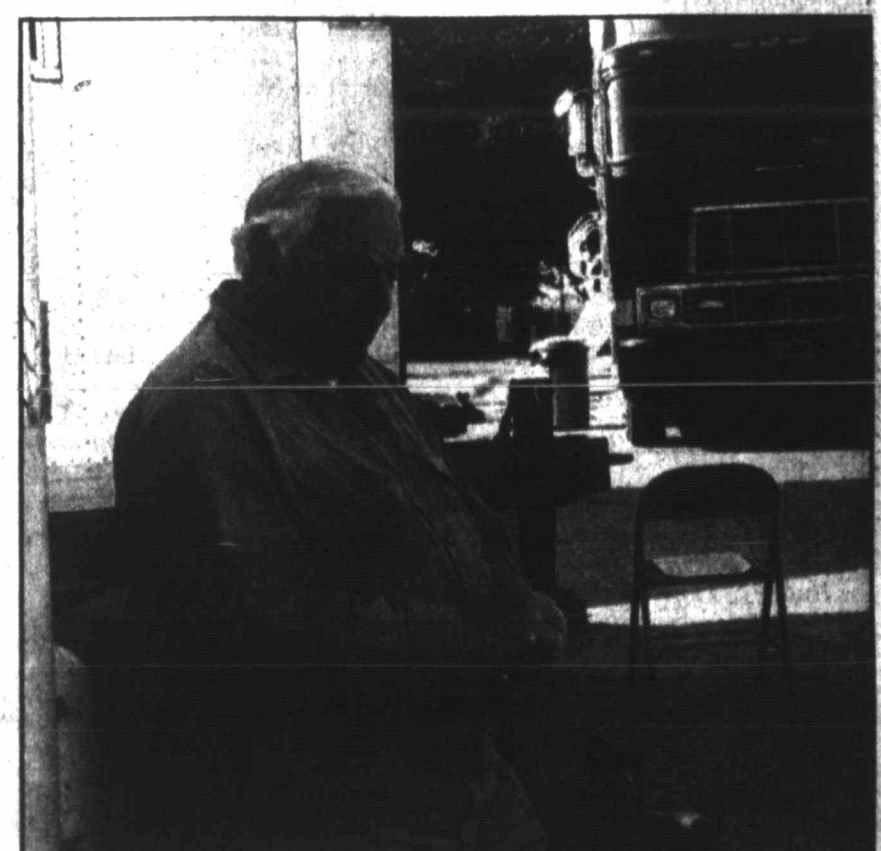

The fish fry, which began as the Lake Meredith Fish Fry when it was founded in 1964, was started by Jack Roberts and Joe Reed.

"They decided it would be a good idea to recognize Lake Meredith and draw attention to the area," according to Wheeler.

The beach bash is scheduled to have a dunking booth put on by the Girl Scouts, a 40-foot basketball shoot, sidewalk sales, sandpiles for the kids, a ping pong ball drop, Mustang Club Car Show, a rodeo and of course ... a little bit of fish.

"Grain fed, farm raised, Southern Pride Catfish," reads the advertisement from the Alabama company bringing in the fish to

Federal Trade Commission finds little privacy at Web

By TED BRIDIS
 Associated Press Writer
 WASHINGTON (AP) — The vast majority of sites on the World Wide Web fail to tell visitors how they use personal information collected during Internet surfing, the Federal Trade Commission has concluded.

In a report being released today the commission also recommended that Congress put into law restrictions on Web sites collecting information from and about children who use the Internet.

Experts had warned previously that the industry's failure to adequately regulate itself on privacy issues could prompt the government to get involved.

"The commission now recommends that Congress develop legislation placing parents in control of the online collection and use of personal information from their children," the report said. "Such legislation would protect children and ensure parents have knowledge of, and control over, the collection of information from their children."

People who don't use the Internet frequently cite privacy concerns as their primary reason for staying off-line. The issue has taken on growing importance as more companies have begun selling products using the Internet.

"This report should serve as a wakeup call to the online industry," said Rep. Billy Tauzin, R-La., chairman of a House subcommittee on consumer protection. "Either you develop voluntary new privacy guidelines or run the risk that Congress will do it for you."

"I hope it does not take legislation, but I think the window is growing increasingly small for the industry without some government action," said Christine Varney, a former FTC commissioner and Washington lawyer who represents several online how they're using that information."

The FTC study found an online medical clinic that offers to refer patients to a local physician — but only after they provide their name, postal address, e-mail address and the name of their insurance company. The site did not indicate how that information is used or whether it's ever sold to a third party.

"The Web site does not tell children to ask permission before providing information," the report said.

The FTC study of 1,400 randomly selected Web sites found that 85 percent collect some form of personal information from consumers. But only 14 percent offered any notice about how the information is used, and fewer than 2 percent included a so-called comprehensive privacy policy.

Advocates have urged companies that collect such information to allow customers to make decisions about how their data is used, to correct inaccuracies and to feel confident the information is safely protected.

"The statistics tell us that self-regulation has not resulted in real privacy protections on the Internet," said Deirdre Mulligan, staff counsel at the Washington-based Center for Democracy and Technology. "What they found is very few Web sites are being honest with consumers about savings bonds or certificates of deposit.

"The Web site does not tell children to ask permission before providing information," the report said.

Tauzin said such "exploitation of children is unacceptable." By far, most of the information that Web sites collect is requested in obvious fashion, with consumers asked to fill out a form on a page.

But information can be gathered behind the scenes: Typically, it includes the kind of software people use, the Internet provider they use and what Web site had steered them to the current page.

"A lot of it is strong-armed," said Beth Givens, who runs the Privacy Rights Clearing House. She can't visit her favorite newspaper site without disclosing personal information about herself.

The Jr. Ranch Rodeo is being held in conjunction with the Pampa Street Fair on June 20, hosted by Celebration of Lights. Pokey will be autographing pictures.

Recording artist Casey Lee Green to hold Saturday performance, appear at Hastings Midlander and Texas World Records recording artist Casey Lee Green is scheduled to appear at the Hastings Superstores in Borger and Pampa this weekend. Live performances, autograph signings and give-aways are scheduled from 3-5 p.m. at the Hastings in Borger and from 6-8 p.m. at the Hastings in Pampa Saturday, June 6.

Texas World Records announced recently Green's debut album entered the international marketplace with rave reviews. Eight tracks from his debut album, including the hit single "Come Home," are on the airways in Australia. "This station will play 'Come Home' and seven additional songs from Casey's CD," said Mike Bedford, program manager for Sydney's Coolest Country, SKY-Country 88FM, Sydney, Australia.

Additionally, the label announced the company has elected to expand Green's album distribution to nationwide. Currently, the debut release is available at Hastings stores with national distribution availability in effect at press time. Plans for additional releases and a second album are already underway.

"Casey had been extremely busy..." reported Judy Farris, president of Lonestar Investments, Green's management company.

"Casey will continue his live radio interviews throughout the State as well as his national Hastings appearances and the Texas BBQ Tour performances." Green has been well received throughout the state at the "Top Texas BBQ Joints" (per Texas Monthly Magazine) and the Hastings stores.

"Casey's hit single 'Come Home' is the number one requested song in West Texas (reported KNFM 92.3 FM) and is generating a great deal of excitement ... 'Come Home' speaks of a promise of unconditional love; a graduation gift from a father to his son. It's a powerful and emotional song ..." Farris concluded.

Green's accompaniment on his album is literally a who's-who listing of major musical talents including Gene Elders (George Strait), John Carroll (David Kersh), Lynn Williams (Lee Roy Parnell), David Grissom (John Mellencamp), Joe Ely and Storyville, Jim Gairrett (Sammy Kershaw), John Inman (Jerry Jeff Walker) and Lloyd Maines.

Green is a native Midlander and a 1995 graduate of Midland High School. He has performed at Fiesta Texas in San Antonio, South by Southwest in Austin and numerous musicals and plays. Green has been active in the performing arts since the age of six.

They never give up. They are always looking for old cases. If they can find additional evidence. That's the motto of the Pampa Herald. Based on those interviews, new information came forward.

According to his mother, Evans is currently unemployed and receiving government compensation as a disabled Vietnam veteran.

Evans, who has also used the name Gays Abdul Rahim-Ahmad, has a lengthy criminal record of mostly misdemeanor offenses, authorities said. However, he has no history of violent episodes.

Police arrested Evans on Monday after he responded to a summons to settle three outstanding citations for animal code violations. "He had tickets because his dogs had gotten out," Mrs. Evans said. "He volunteered to go down there (to police headquarters)."

Evans has served as president of the Carver Neighborhood Association for three years.

Board member Jean Laster said she was shocked by the allegations.

Opinion

Military should stick to what it does best

► A House bill to allow the military to be used to patrol the border is misguided and dangerous.

Members of the House of Representatives recently passed House Amendment 648, which allows the military to be used to patrol U.S. borders to help other agencies and serve their goals.

The amendment authorizes: "The Secretary of Defense may assign members of the armed forces to assist — 1) the Immigration and Naturalization Service in preventing the entry of terrorists, drug traffickers and illegal aliens into the United States; and 2) the United States Customs Service in the inspection of cargo, vehicles and aircraft at points of entry into the United States."

We question the wisdom of this idea for a very basic reason: the military is trained to perform one kind of job, while the police, INS agents and customs investigators, quite another.

The raison d'être for military personnel is aggression and defense, strategy and tactics, one person acting in concert with a unit. In contrast, a police officer has a depth of training that covers many of those areas and more — psychological, conflict resolution, behavioral.

A police officer serves a community and treats its members accordingly; a sergeant looks for enemies and is prepared to engage them.

So the missions are different, the training is different and so is the approach to the job.

The danger of deploying the military as police was shown just a year ago. On May 20, 1997, Marine Cpl. Clemente Banuelo shot dead Esquivel Hernandez Jr., an 18-year-old high school student with no criminal record who was shooting a .22 rifle while tending goats on his own farm in Texas near the U.S.-Mexico border.

Farmers commonly fire rifles on their own land. Certainly such a practice is not illegal. Banuelo isn't to blame because he was trained to storm beaches, not police a border. The military patrols along the border were canceled after the killing of Hernandez. But due to House Amendment 648, such fatal errors could become more likely as the wrong kind of force — military instead of civilian — might be deployed even more extensively.

Proponents of the amendment say using the military on the border would be an option, not a mandate. Nevertheless, the amendment opens the door.

Another problem is that such an approach would stretch even thinner America's over-deployed military. Despite being reduced in size by 40 percent the last eight years, the U.S. military has been given new commitments in Bosnia, Macedonia, Haiti and the Persian Gulf. The U.S. military now has personnel in more than 100 foreign countries.

"The U.S. military machine is sputtering along like a WWII tank that's made too many invasions," recently reported retired Army Col. David Hackworth, America's most decorated living veteran in his Internet "Defending America" column.

If existing units already have been depleted, how are they going to take on the vast new mission of patrolling the border? The overall defense bill to which this amendment is attached authorizes $270.4 billion for defense for 1998-99, virtually the same as for the 1997-98 budget. So there won't be any money to ease the military's existing personnel and equipment shortages.

The appropriate agencies should find civilian responses to these civilian concerns.

—Odessa American

Is monopoly good or bad?

Since the Justice Department's attack on Microsoft, we're hearing all the familiar legalistic nonsense about monopoly.

Courts have wrestled with monopoly, sometimes defining it as: "the power to control prices and exclude competition," "restraining trade" or "unfair and anticompetitive behavior."

Should monopolistic practices be condemned and outlawed? Let's look at it — but let's not stick with what's usually called monopolistic practices.

The marriage contract is essentially a monopoly document. Both parties form a colusive agreement to exclude competition and restrain trade. There's a good side and bad side to this monopolistic collusion. I place a higher value on Mrs. Williams and give her a higher share of my wealth, knowing that I have an exclusive monopoly on her affections. That's the benefit for her, but there's a losing side, as well. I'm not nearly as attentive, I don't open car doors, and I don't use all the breath fresheners and colognes I did before we got married 38 years ago. The reason is that before we married, I was in competition with other men and couldn't afford to act like a monopolist.

Read Deuteronomy, Chapter 5, where God gave Moses the Ten Commandments. First, there's, "Thou Shalt have none other gods before me." That's followed by, "Thou shalt not make thee any graven image, or any likeness of any thing that is in heaven above. ..." Then there's, "Thou shalt not bow down thyself unto them, nor serve them: for I the Lord thy God am a jealous God. ..." These are all monopolistic commands that there shall be neither substitutes for, nor competition with, God.

Walter Williams

Williams is a nationally syndicated columnist.

For one to condemn all monopolistic practices, one would have to also condemn marriage and the basic tenets of Christianity. I neither condemn marriage, Christianity nor business and labor-union monopolies.

The only moral argument that should lead us to condemn and outlaw monopoly is when coercion is involved, as in the case of government-sponsored, protected or created monopolies. Thus, the U.S. Postal Service is an example. Federal law in effect says, "Thou shalt have no other deliverers of first-class mail before the USPS, and we shall visit great pain on he who ignores this commandment."

Getting back to the Justice Department's claims that Microsoft has excluded competition, is the Justice Department charging that Microsoft has done so well in pleasing customers that some of its competitors go out of business or are threatened with loss of market share? If they charge that, that's precisely what competition is supposed to do: get what customers deem as the highest quality product at the cheapest price.

What about the Justice Department's efforts to get Microsoft to package its product without its Internet browser? If that has merit, how about stopping General Motors from packaging its cars with Delco batteries, since it also owns Delco?

What about even-the-playing-field arguments? The U.S. Postal Service delivers small packages and so does United Parcel Service. However, unlike United Parcel, the Postal Service pays no state or local property taxes. Nor does it pay state or federal excise tax on motor fuels and tires, and it pays no road-use tax. Plus, there's no payment of federal unemployment tax and taxes on its alleged surplus (profits). In the interest of an even playing field, the Justice Department should demand the same exemptions for United Parcel Service.

Microsoft is successful because people like you and me voluntarily purchased its products. We, the millions upon millions of consumers, have spoken. Attorney General Janet Reno and her Justice Department thugs want to overrule us. We ought to tell them to stuff it.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Thursday, June 4, the 155th day of 1998. There are 210 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On June 4, 1942, the Battle of Midway began during World War II.

On this date:

In 1647, the English army seized King Charles I as a hostage.

In 1812, the Louisiana Territory was renamed the Missouri Territory.

In 1878, Turkey turned Cyprus over to the British.

In 1892, the Sierra Club was incorporated, in San Francisco.

In 1896, Henry Ford made a successful pre-dawn test run of his horseless carriage, called a "quadricycle," through the streets of Detroit.

In 1940, the Allied military evacuation from Dunkirk, France, ended.

In 1944, the U.S. Fifth Army entered Rome, beginning the liberation of the Italian capital during World War II.

In 1947, the House of Representatives overwhelmingly approved the Taft-Hartley Act.

In 1954, French Premier Joseph Laniel and Vietnamese Premier Buu Loc initialed treaties in Paris according to "complete independence" to Vietnam.

In 1986, Jonathan Jay Pollard, a former Navy intelligence analyst, pleaded guilty in Washington, D.C., to spying for Israel. He is serving a life prison term.

In 1989, Chinese army troops stormed Beijing to crush the Tiananmen Square pro-democracy movement.

Ten years ago: Secretary of State George Shultz flew to Jordan, where he met with King Hussein. Afterward, Shultz said the Jordanian monarch was reluctant to engage in peace talks with Israel unless Israel agreed to give up land on the West Bank.

Five years ago: The U.N. Security Council agreed to send up to 10,000 more U.N. peacekeepers to six Bosnian cities to protect Muslim havens. Rejecting allegations of "quota queen," Lani Guinier expressed regret President Clinton had dropped her nomination to head the Justice Department's civil rights division.

Public distrustful of public servants

Charley Reese
Syndicated columnist

Conservatives have been saying for years that one of the failings of liberals is that they think they know better than we do what's good for us. Well, a new survey of top government officials confirms that.

The Pew Research Center for the People and the Press interviewed 81 members of Congress, 98 presidential appointees and 151 top-level federal civil servants. And guess what?

A majority of them do not believe the American people are well enough informed about issues to make an intelligent decision.

Three-quarters of the presidential appointees and the executive level civil servants said the American people do not know enough to make wise policy decisions. Forty-seven percent of the congressmen interviewed said they did not trust their constituents' knowledge of the issues.

Most blamed the press, and while the press is owed some lumps in this respect, much of the blame resides with the government officials. Left unsaid in those interviews, I believe, is the feeling of many in government that the public should not be allowed to make policy decisions.

The evidence for this assertion is the process. Rather than attempting to inform the public about issues and invite their participation, the standard procedure in America is for the government officials to make the decision and then try to sell the decision to the people or ignore them altogether.

The press deserves some blame because it generally passively reports whatever government officials and favored special interests feed it. All too often reporters will tend to identify with the government officials rather than with their readers. It's that old allure of thinking one is "an insider" with special knowledge and privileges, and smart politicians know to play on this ego weak point. Those of us who have worked both sides of this street know, of course, that the politicians and their paid staffs are laughing at the reporters behind their backs even while they manipulate them into thinking they are "friends."

Reporters who need friends should buy a dog.

But, there is blame enough for everyone, including the public. Many Americans have been lulled into the belief that government is so benign that it does not need watching and that anyone who promises to feel their pain and provide them some favor ought to be elected. That's a good way to wake up one morning in a dictatorship.

It's not that people should think government is bad and politicians are bad per se. We just have to keep remembering that there's nobody in this country but us folks. And folks are folks, flawed and error-prone, whether in government or out. There's nothing magical about the oath of office that will turn a pig into a prince.

We have to be damn careful for whom we vote just as we have to be careful about whom we hire to patch the roof or paint the house. Some people are honest, and some are not. Some people are competent, and some are not. Whether choosing a roofer or a president, the same rules apply.

But as for being uninformed about the issues, that is generally the fault of the government officials who take the elitist attitude of making the decisions themselves and presenting the public with a fait accompli. When was there ever any discussion about expanding NATO, for example? President Clinton just up and said it was going to expand.

I don't know the cure for elitism. Even the most ordinary person, once he gets a whiff of power, seems to get a suddenly new and inflated opinion of himself. Years ago a lady city commissioner visited my newspaper to talk about the League of Municipalities agenda. Item 1 was a public relations campaign to convince people that they should become more involved and participate in their government. The second item was to pass a law that would allow the city council to raise taxes without a referendum.

Honest to Pete, the lady commissioner could not see the blatant contradiction between Item 1 and Item 2. Apparently her idea of citizen participation did go beyond allowing them to show up and applaud her decisions.

Somehow we've got to find a way to get the public and the public servants reconciled and remarried before the split becomes irreparable.

Government revising what's healthy weight and what's not

WASHINGTON (AP) — Millions of Americans maintaining what they think is a healthy weight are in for some bad news from government scientists who are changing a widely used standard for what's safe.

5-foot-4, 145 pounds? Better lose a few to stay healthy. 5-foot-10, 174 pounds? Cut down on the calories and step up the exercise, according to the guidelines released Wednesday by the National Institutes of Health.

A group of experts convened by NIH concluded that body mass index, a way to measure body weight in relation to height, provides patients and doctors with the most accurate way to determine when extra pounds begin to hold health risks.

Body mass index is closely linked to a person's body fat, and anyone with a body mass index of 25 — that is someone, for example, who is 5-foot-4, 145 pounds or 5-foot-10, 174 pounds — should be considered overweight, the researchers determined.

Anyone with a body mass index of 30 — such as 5-foot-6, 186 pounds, or 6-foot, 221 pounds — is obese.

Using those guidelines, about 97 million American adults — some 55 percent of the population — would be considered overweight or obese, the National Heart, Lung and Blood Institute said.

Another government agency, the National Center for Health Statistics, previously has said a woman with a body mass index of 27 or a man with a BMI of 28 was overweight. And dietary guidelines released by the federal government in 1996 defined anyone with a body mass index of 26 or above as overweight.

That standard — a body mass index of 26 — was used by outside researchers in a widely publicized report issued last week. Using that definition, about 54 percent of the U.S. population would be considered overweight.

But officials from the heart and lung institute lowered the threshold, concluding that health risks can begin with a body mass index as low as 25. As body mass index levels go up, blood pressure and total cholesterol levels also rise, increasing the risk of problems such as heart disease, diabetes and some cancers, the researchers said after combing through thousands of health studies.

People who are overweight but have no other health risk factors should exercise and eat healthier to keep from gaining additional weight, the guidelines recommend.

People who are overweight and also have health risks such as high blood pressure or high cholesterol should try to actively lose weight, the study said.

Diet drugs should be reserved for people with body mass indexes of 30 or over, or people with BMIs of 27 but with other risk factors such as diabetes or high blood pressure, the researchers said.

They also recommended that doctors first try to change patients' eating and exercise habits for six months before beginning any diet drug.

In addition to measuring body mass index, the guidelines advise doctors to measure a patient's waistline, which is closely associated with the amount of abdominal fat and another predictor of disease risk.

A waist measurement of more than 40 inches in men and more than 35 inches in women indicates an increased health risk in people who have a body mass index of between 25 to 34.9, the researchers say.

People of healthy weight should have their body mass index checked every two years, the researchers recommended.

The group of 24 experts called together by the heart and lung institute was headed by R. Xavier Pi-Sunyer, director of an obesity research center at St. Luke's/Roosevelt Hospital Center in New York City. The recommendations are under review by other health researchers and are scheduled to be formally announced later this month.

Historical exhibit on display at Devil's Rope Museum

McLEAN — The Devil's Rope Museum is displaying the traveling exhibit "Texas Post Office Murals of the New Deal" until July 28. The exhibit is being sponsored by the Texas Historical Commission.

From 1934 until 1943, the government sponsored a program for artists who competed for grants to decorate the walls of public buildings across Texas. This New Deal Art Program has become one of the most significant cultural projects of the depression period. Most of the art appeared in U.S. Post Offices where the public could view them regularly.

The murals are mounted on display boards with outstanding colors and information cards explaining the period and times of the painting. The subjects depict almost every facet of Texas life during the hard times of the Great Depression and the Dust Bowl. The display of Texas History may be viewed from 10 a.m.-4 p.m., Tuesday-Saturday at the museum in McLean. For more information, call (806) 779-2225.

Liquor store becomes key in mob case

BOSTON (AP) — The young couple had owned the liquor store for just a week when they received an offer they couldn't refuse.

James "Whitey" Bulger, Stephen "The Rifleman" Flemmi and their cronies wanted Stippo's Liquor Mart. They allegedly brought along a gun and $67,000 in cash to help seal the deal with owner Stephen Rakes and his wife, Julie.

That was back in 1984, when Rakes knew Bulger and Flemmi were dangerous, reputed mobsters but had no way of knowing they were protected FBI informants.

New testimony in federal court is reviving the faded memory of how Stippo's Liquor Mart was renamed South Boston Liquor Mart and became Bulger and Flemmi's favorite hangout. But prosecutors are not after the man who sold the store from Rakes 15 years ago.

Instead, Rakes, 44, is accused of perjury and obstruction of justice, including trying to eat out the man, Francis X. Sullivan, testified that he was afraid to talk to him.

Prosecutors say Rakes lied by saying he had no contact with Bulger and Flemmi in 1991 and 1992, the years when Bulger's associate Kevin Weeks was killed.

The case is closely connected to federal hearings in a nearby courtroom, where defense lawyers are trying to prove that the FBI gave Bulger and Flemmi carte blanche to commit crimes because they provided inside information on mob rivals.

End of year party

Tonie Bolin and Pat Crocker, teachers at First Baptist Church Child Development Center, supervised the day care's end of year party recently. Students participating in the party included Kristen White, Dokota Cochran, Cager Osborne, Dokota Watson, Alyssa Wesley, Katelyn Royce, Jordan Lemons, Sheldon Reeve, Jacoe Bynum, Taylor Dalton, Kenneth Reagan, Ryan Bromlow, Alison Alexander, Amber Preston, Kenzie Parks, Hunter Meyers, Renee Baggerman, Chiles Spencer and Sydney Hoelting.

Thousands of shell-shocked Kosovo refugees cross border into Albania

TROPOJA, Albania (AP) — Thousands of shell-shocked Kosovo refugees who escaped Serbian artillery back home face misery and squalor in the most destitute region of Europe's poorest and most backward country.

More than 5,000 refugees fleeing homes shelled or burned by the Yugoslav military have flooded the impoverished border town of Tropoja and surrounding villages in the last five days, since the full-scale Serbian artillery offensive began. Thousands more are said to be en route.

Some families, including women, children and the elderly, have been on their feet for two days or more, trekking across perilously narrow mountain paths. Some are said to have died of exhaustion or in accidents. They often suffer dehydration, diarrhea and skin infection.

Kimete Nitaj gave birth to a healthy boy Sunday while climbing a mountain with about 100 refugees from the besieged western Kosovo region of Decani. Minutes later, she had to start walking again to keep up with the convoy.

Her family decided to call the baby Clirim, the Albanian word for liberation. "Maybe he'll grow up in a liberated Kosovo," she said, nursing the 3-day-old infant in a hospital room in Tropoja.

Local officials and villagers near the border have been overwhelmed. The people of this poorest Albanian region opened their homes and shared their limited basic food — bread, milk and cheese — with the newcomers.

"I have food only for two more days," said Hasan Mulaj, 55, a teacher from Tropoja, who is hosting 30 refugees. His wife bakes five loaves of bread every night for the "guests," but she says this is still not enough.

Many men take their families across the border, then return to fight the Serb onslaught. Others say resistance is hopeless and stay.

What refugees hope will be the liberation of Kosovo is a hazy, distant goal, while bloodshed continues in the Serbian province where ethnic Albanians overwhelmingly outnumber Serbs.

The Kosovo Liberation Army, a clandestine rebel force of unknown size, is fighting for the province's independence, a goal shared by most ethnic Albanians.

Casualty figures are increasingly sketchy, but well over 200 people have been killed since early March. Monitors of the 54-nation Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe said Wednesday they saw plumes of smoke and fires in villages across the border.

Library Staff Picks for June

"Obsession" by John Douglas
The nation's undisputed top expert on the criminal mind — the founder of the FBI's Investigative Support Unit — and his co-author follow up their international best-sellers "Mindhunter" and "Journey into Darkness" with an in-depth look at domestic crimes committed against women and the elderly and the motives of their perpetrators. Offering profiles of many well-known cases, criminals and their victims along with an invaluable chapter on how readers can protect themselves and their loved ones from violence, the authors shed light on the darkest corners of the minds of abusers, rapists and stalkers.

"Me and My Shadows, A Family Memoir: Living With The Legacy of Judy Garland" by Lorna Luft

The daughter of Judy Garland and half-sister of Liza Minnelli offers the first memoir by one of Garland's family members, an unsparing candid account of one of Hollywood's most celebrated families besieged by fame and self-destructive behavior. The author chronicles her mother's powerful dependence on alcohol and prescription drugs and her family's desperate struggle to hang on to her. Filled with behind-the-scenes dramas, amusing family lore and never-before-seen photographs from family albums, the memoir tells a lasting story of forgiveness and hope, of love and its limitations.

"Pillar of Fire: America in The King Years, 1963-64" by Taylor Branch

The eagerly awaited second volume of Branch's monumental trilogy on the civil rights era begun in "Parting the Waters." From Birmingham to Selma, in Mississippi and Washington, D.C., from Kennedy's assassination to beyond Johnson's tumultuous first year, this volume covers the pivotal divide that ended segregation, restructured partisan politics and set in motion new meanings everywhere in America's democratic crucible of equal votes and equal souls.

"Fortunes of War" by Stephen Coonts

The consistently popular author presents a frighteningly realistic techno-thriller about the outbreak of World War III, ignited by a cabal of fanatic Japanese nationalists out to seize the oil reserves of Siberia. To help Russia fend off the attack, Washington sends Air Force Col. Jack Cassidy to thwart the Japanese invasion in the skies, pitting him against his former friend, Captain Jiro Kimura. Meanwhile an outdated Russian submarine attempts a daring raid on Tokyo Bay, ratcheting up the situation and raising the specter of a nuclear war.

"Damascus Gate" by Robert Stone

Set in Jerusalem, where violence, ecstasy, heresy and salvation are all to be found, the latest novel by the author of "Outerbridge Reach" is simultaneously the story of a man's search for truth — or some version of it — and the story of a city where sanity is casually traded for faith. Christopher Lucas's investigation of religious lunatics who have fallen victim to "Jerusalem Syndrome" leads him to a series of colorful characters — and places him at the center of the world's next flashpoint.

"Switcheroo" by Olivia Goldsmith

Every wife wants to be treated like a mistress. Every mistress wants to become a wife. The switch is on when a look-alike wife and mistress decide to change places and see if the grass is really greener on the other side, in this hilarious tale from the best-selling author of "The First Wives' Club."

Keeping an eye on Texas

Flora and fauna of the Lone Star State

While traveling the Texas byways this summer season, look for the numerous examples of plants, animals, seashells and insects that are some of the official symbols of the state. They include:

Mexican free-tailed bat, state flying mammal, cave dwellers of Southwest and West Texas.
Nine-banded armadillo, state small mammal, in all but western Trans-Pecos areas of Texas.
Lightning bolt, state seashell, found on the Gulf Coast.
Texas red grapefruit, state fruit, grown in the Rio Grande Valley.
Mockingbird, state bird lives year-around across Texas.
Guadalupe bass, state fish, native to rivers within the northern and eastern Edwards Plateau.
Prickly pear cactus, state plant, grows especially from Central to Far West Texas.
Longhorn cattle, state large mammal.
Bluebonnet, state flower grows from Big Bend to Northeast Texas.

Monarch butterfly, state insect, especially in Orange County during fall migration to Mexico.
Cotton, state fiber and fabric, grown especially in the Panhandle.
Texas sweet onion, state vegetable, grown commercially and in home gardens.
Sidecoats grass, state grass, grown in a variety of soils throughout the state.
Jalisco pepper, official state pepper, although the chiltepin is the official native pepper.
Pepin, state tree, with $68 million commercial crop in 1985.

Mom's Shining Example Still Lights Up Her Children's Lives

DEAR ABBY: I had to write after reading the letter from "Mom in Denver," who asked how to be a great mother. She wanted to avoid the mistakes her own mother had made with her and her siblings.

I have no children, but my life was enriched and greatly blessed by my own wonderful mother. She loved unconditionally, whether we were good or mischievous. She taught us humility and respect for our fellow beings by her altruistic example. She encouraged us to learn about the magnificent world in which we live, and gave us the freedom to learn about our place in it. She gave us the courage to explore our gifts and talents. When we failed, she never once said, "I told you it wouldn't work," or, "What a waste of time and money." Instead, she praised our efforts and, in so doing provided us with self-confidence and determination so we could persevere and achieve.

Our mother made mistakes, but when she did, she apologized with her heart and soul. When we made mistakes, she accepted our apologies. Conversations with Mother were never "adult talks and children listen." She taught us to express our emotions and thoughts on issues we faced. In short, we learned that we were valued for what we thought and how we felt, because she listened patiently and sincerely.

There was never a question of who was in charge; all it took was a stern look to know when we were on the outskirts of good standing. She knew what decisions a child could and should make and which were the responsibility of an adult, as well as age-appropriateness in relinquishing those decisions. By example we learned to nourish ourselves properly, value our health, and strive to lead full, balanced lives. We learned about God and were schooled in religion, but were also given the opportunity to question, ponder and disagree.

Abigail Van Buren

We shared in laughter and in tears. We told jokes and hilarious stories to each other. We had fun and learned to always have time for a friend. We shared stories and photographs from Mom's childhood and teens, so that we could know who she was before she became our mom. When one of us lost a friend struck by tragedy, she'd cry with us and share our grief.

This letter may be too long for your column, but if you print it, I hope it helps mothers like the one in Denver. Our beloved mom passed away from ovarian cancer at the age of 48 almost 11 years ago. From her, each of her children learned to navigate in a world from which she is physically absent. We celebrate each other's lives because we see her within each of us. Now, after having completed my Ph.D. in neurobiology, I'm finishing my M.D. and pursuing a future in neurosurgery. I have wanted to be a doctor for as long as I can remember, but I wonder sometimes if such would be the case had I not had such an extraordinarily great mom.

MELISSA Y. MACIAS,
ORIGINALLY FROM
EL PASO, TEXAS

DEAR MELISSA: Not only have you provided great insight in what it takes to be a terrific parent, you have written a loving and eloquent tribute to your own mother. Please accept my deepest sympathy for having lost her at such a young age.

I know she would be proud of raising a daughter who is pursuing her dream, and who is already so intellectually accomplished. I hope that someday you can pass on what your mother taught you to children of your own.

Readers: I have received more wonderful letters on this subject than I can print in one, or even several columns. Therefore, I will continue to print them in the coming weeks.

FRIDAY, JUNE 5, 1998

BY JACQUELINE BIGAR

The Stars Show the Kind of Day You'll Have: 5-Dynamic; 4-Positive; 3-Average; 2-So-so; 1-Difficult.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)

★★★★ Get the job done, and return all calls. Make a lunch appointment with a key associate. Your ability to zoom in on the nitty-gritty counts. Network, socialize and touch base with others, who readily agree with you. Tonight: To bed, but only when you tire of the fun.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)

★★★ You tend to project negativity more than you are aware. Work is your primary focus, but even there you might be sending out negative vibes. Be more in touch with your limitations, and develop boundaries accordingly. Plan for downtime this weekend, to recycle. Tonight: Make it an early night.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)

★★★★ A friend disappoints you, but this is no reason to change plans. Allow your creativity to flow into your ventures. Your incisive wit and professional acumen make you a winner. Allow more flirtation and caring into your life. Emotions run high. Tonight: Flirt the night away.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)

★★★ A boss pressures you beyond your level of tolerance. You might need to cancel plans this evening, so you can meet these requirements. You see through a problem, and come up with a clear solution. Be careful with your temper. It could erupt! Tonight: Chill out as soon as you can.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)

★★★★ You see through someone's maneuvers. Call it as you see it, though this is very different from your normal style. Return messages, and stay on top of communications. News from a distance forces you to reassess, and possibly change, plans. Tonight: Hang out with a friend.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)

★★★★ A partner puts a negative slant on one of your financial projects, which puts you off. Talk about your career objectives with a boss, or someone who understands. You get powerful feedback. Check out different types of checking accounts. Tonight: Keep to your budget!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)

★★★★ You can't believe what you are hearing, but it's true. Take action, which might involve a trip. Be careful with a loved one who is hyperactive and feels challenged. Steer clear of a cantankerous person. Nothing good is happening here. Tonight: Join a friend.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)

★★★ Listen to instincts, and follow through on what you feel is needed. A partner gives you powerful information about finances and how to manage them. Absorb what is being said. Be honest with yourself about your job. You might need a change. Tonight: Early to bed.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)

★★★★ Friends have strong ideas. You might want to listen to partners' feedback more carefully. Their understanding is clear. A child or love relationship becomes difficult. Is this person jealous? Listen more carefully to what others are saying.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)

★★★ Think through a decision that could affect your work. Others have excellent suggestions. Don't toss them by the wayside. Sometimes you might not like the answers you get, but they are worth listening to. A family member is out of sorts; back off. Tonight: Out late.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)

★★★★ A misunderstanding won't throw you the same way it does others. Your independence takes control here. Follow through on what is important to you. A lover or child is demanding. It is your pleasure to comply! Be more sensitive to another's needs. Tonight: Start the weekend, ASAP.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)

★★★ It's easy to understand what someone is complaining about, especially when the complaints are so explicit. Be in touch with the confusion, and talk about the ideas that arise. Your empathy makes you special. Avoid any actions that involve your checkbook. Tonight: Candlelight and togetherness.

TENNIS

PARIS (AP) — At her gritty and relentless best, Arantxa Sanchez Vicario is back in the French Open finals.

The two-time French champion defeated an error-prone Lindsay Davenport 6-3, 7-6 (7-5) today and will meet Martina Hingis or Monica Seles in the title match.

Davenport, the No. 2 seed, hit her groundstrokes with power, but had trouble keeping them inside the lines. She made 56 unforced errors, with 34 in the second set. Sanchez Vicario had 29 the entire match.

"I know she was very tired, and I just had to just hang in there," said Sanchez-Vicario, the No. 4 seed from Spain.

Leading 6-5 in the tiebreaker, Sanchez Vicario made a great effort to send back a high defensive lob. Davenport responded with an overhead, but it sailed wide.

GENERAL

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Nebraska's name on an opposing schedule is enough to inspire fear — and some frustration — in athletes throughout the Big 12 Conference.

The frustration is bound to continue. For the second straight year, Nebraska sits solidly atop the Big 12's composite standings for 1997-98.

"We tell our coaches each year that the goal is to dominate the Big 12 the same way we dominated the Big Eight," athletic director Bill Byrne said.

Byrne said NU also seeks to be the highest-ranked conference team in the running for the all-sports Sears Directors' Cup, awarded by the National Association of Collegiate Directors of Athletics. The Huskers finished fourth in 1997.

Under a system that awards 12 points to the league champion, 11 to the runner-up, 10 to the third-place team and so on, NU scored a Big 12-best 177 points in 21 sports with six conference titles.

HOCKEY

DALLAS (AP) — No NHL team has won consecutive Stanley Cups since Pittsburgh did it in 1992.

Wednesday night's game between the defending champion Detroit Red Wings and the Dallas Stars illustrates just how bumpy the road can be.

A hockey version of a "Hail Mary" pass beat Detroit 3-2 in overtime to keep the Stars alive in their Western Conference finals.

Jamie Langenbrunner's 70-foot slap shot from beyond the blue line sent the series back to Detroit on Friday night for Game 6, with the Red Wings wondering what happened to goalie Chris Osgood.

Dallas is trying to beat tremendous odds to get into the Stanley Cup finals.

No team has ever overcome a 3-to-1 deficit in the conference finals.

BOXING

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — WBC welterweight champion Oscar De La Hoya is looking forward to next week's title defense in the Sun Bowl — and already is planning a return to El Paso.

De La Hoya's June 13 bout with Patrick Charpentier, the WBC's No. 1-ranked contender, is expected to draw upwards of 50,000 spectators and could boast the biggest U.S. fight crowd since 71,000 people saw Muhammad Ali take on Leon Spinks in the Superdome in 1978.

De La Hoya made it clear Wednesday he wants to try it again in the future.

"Once we go back to El Paso once again, we will see that same event happen, one more time," he said. "People in El Paso have just shown me that they're real true boxing fans and they're real Oscar De La Hoya fans."

Utah takes OT win in NBA Finals opener

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — It wasn't about the old MVP, the new MVP, which team was tired or which team was rusty.

Game 1 of the NBA Finals turned out to be about a certain future Hall of Famer, and John Stockton showed he wants to head there with a ring.

Stockton, after missing a desperation jumper at the end of regulation, showed the savvy that has defined his career as he scored seven of his 24 points in overtime Wednesday night and the Utah Jazz defeated the defending champion Chicago Bulls 88-85.

In a sloppy game that seemed to take forever to be decided, the Bulls missed a chance to steal a game and wrest homecourt advantage away from the Jazz.

"You couldn't ever ask for a better opportunity to win on their court," Chicago coach Phil Jackson lamented. "I feel like we let one slip away."

That's because Stockton made all the big plays in overtime and Scottie Pippen missed a tying 3-pointer at the buzzer. And the Jazz walked off leading the series, something they never did in last year's finals.

Stockton ended up shooting 9-for-12 from the floor with eight assists and two steals. Karl Malone added 21 points and Bryon Russell had 15 to help Utah overcome 33 points from Michael Jordan.

Stockton started his overtime flurry with an assist to Malone for a layup that broke a 79-all tie.

Pippen, yelled at by Jordan late in the fourth quarter for rushing a 3-point shot, then had the ball poked away by Jeff Hornacek as he drove to his right. Stockton gathered the loose ball and went in for a three-point play that put Utah ahead 84-79.

Jordan made one of two free throws and a jumper to cut the deficit to two with 2:07 left, but the Bulls would not score for another two minutes.

With 43 seconds left and the ball in Chicago's hands, it ended up going to Luc Longley. He tried going to the hoop and had the ball deflected away for Chicago's third turnover of overtime. Bryon Russell recovered, the Jazz ran the clock down and Stockton made the shot of the game.

Guarded by the slow-footed Steve Kerr, Stockton drove to his right, jumped off the wrong foot and shot from about 10 feet away.

All net.

Toni Kukoc hit a 3-pointer with 5.4 seconds left, and Stockton made two free throws with 3.5 seconds left to give the Jazz another three-point lead.

"They just kept coming back. We're going to have to play better than that if we're going to win this thing," Stockton said.

The Bulls fired the ensuing inbound pass upcourt and tipped it to Pippen at the 3-point line, but his shot was too long.

"Stock's got the ice water in his veins," Russell said. "You know he wants that ring. Stock took over that game."

Coming off 10 days rest and playing a Bulls team that was extended to seven games by Indiana in the Eastern Conference finals, the Jazz led most of the game but could never pull ahead by more than eight.

They kept Jordan somewhat in check, limiting him to 13-for-29 shooting, and didn't let anyone else hurt them.

Pippen shot only 7-for-19 with five turnovers. Kukoc was 4-for-12 and Chicago's reserves scored only eight points.

The Jazz got 22 points from the bench, including eight by Howard Eisley, outscored Chicago 52-34 in the paint and 21-6 on fast-break points.

Cree keeps unbeaten streak going in Babe Ruth League

By MATT HUTCHISON
Sports Writer

PAMPA — After a few back and forth innings, Cree Oil brought out the bats in an offensive attack that cleared the way for a 22-5 victory over a struggling Foto Time squad Tuesday night in Babe Ruth action.

Jake Woodruff started on the mound for Foto Time, pitching a competitive contest throughout the first three-fourths of the game before his arm finally gave way to Cree's offensive machine.

Pounding out continuous offensive stands in the late innings of the contest, Cree's squad made it apparent why they are standing undefeated at 6-0 halfway through the Babe Ruth season. Adam Jones walked away with the offensive highlight of the game, belting a scoring home run past the fence.

Jones' homer was just one of the many productive hits for the Cree lineup, as Travis Lancaster, Tanner Hucks and Adam Wright all produced runs with well-placed hits. Every Cree player reached base at least once during the contest.

But despite the late-inning explosion, Foto Time kept the contest close in the early innings, taking advantage of pitching errors to find their way across home plate. Foto Time's first run of the night was produced on a passed ball from starting Cree pitcher Lancaster to the usually consistent catcher Jared Snelgrooves. A similar incident occurred later to give Foto Time their second run and a chance to come back down only four runs, 6-2.

But with the late inning offensive attack, coupled with the pitching skills of Lancaster and relievers Jones and Wright, the Cree squad was able to keep the game in check and come out with the lofty victory.

PAMPA — The Operating Company, making a strong run for the top spot in conference play, defeated Dean's Pharmacy, 10-4, in Bambino Minor League 9-10 action Tuesday night.

Braydon Barker notched the win with a steady performance on the mound for Operating Company. Barker did not allow a run until the top of the fourth inning, but had lots of help from his infielders as Bradley Johnson, Ryan Torres, Logan Langford, Weston Teichmann and Lexton Rabel all played well defensively.

For Dean's, Jake Craig started the top half of the fourth with a triple to left field. Clay Jones had an RBI triple and Russell Dougless had an RBI single. Barker then struck out two of the next three batters to end Dean's scoring.

The Operating Company has a 6-1 record while Dean's is now 4-1-1 in conference play.

1st Bank of Southwest improved its record to 6 wins, no losses and one tie by defeating Dunlap, 12-6.

The game was scoreless until the top half of the third inning when Dunlap committed four straight errors to load the bases for 1st Bank. Then Brett Ferrell was hit by a pitch, followed by a walk to Robbie Dixon, and then the big hit of the inning, a triple by Corbin Biehler to clear the bases. 1st Bank scored six runs in the inning and then scored six more in the top of the fourth.

Dunlap scored six runs in the bottom of the fourth, but time ran out.

1st Bank of Southwest remains in first place and is the only unbeaten team in the 9-10 boys' division.

Real Quiet ready to make noise

NEW YORK (AP) — David Cross, trainer of Classic Cat, didn't see Real Quiet arrive at Belmont Park on Wednesday. And on Saturday he sure doesn't want to see the Real Quiet who beat his colt in the Preakness.

"In the Preakness he was awesome," Cross said. "If he runs that way in the Belmont (Stakes), we're all in trouble."

"I think the horse is going into the race a fresher horse than Silver Charm was last year," said trainer Bob Baffert, who missed winning the Triple Crown last year when Silver Charm finished second in the Belmont. "He's going to run a big race."

The Kentucky Derby-Preakness winner arrived at his barn at Belmont Park at 10:35 a.m. after being vanned from Kennedy Airport following a flight from Louisville, Ky. Accompanying the bay colt were Baffert, owner Mike Pegram and jockey Kent Desormeaux.

"I feel indebted to Mike and Bob and I'd like to be in the winner's circle with them," said Desormeaux, who became Real Quiet's jockey when the colt broke his maiden in his seventh start last year. "I'd like to win the $5 million bonus for them."

Should Real Quiet become the first Triple Crown champion since Affirmed in 1978, he would earn a $5 million bonus offered by Visa. His purse total for the three races also would total a little more than $2 million.

Asked if he was guaranteeing a win, Desormeaux said, "I'm 98 percent sure. There are things to overcome — health, a stumble at the start."

"Win lose or draw, we've had a great ride," Pegram said.

Real Quiet could face as many as 11 other 3-year-olds in the 1 1/2-mile Belmont, and his two leading challengers could be Classic Cat, third in the Preakness, and Victory Gallop, runner-up in the Derby and Preakness.

"Any horse that wins the Triple Crown, I think, is a deserving champion," said Elliott Walden, Victory Gallop's trainer. "I can appreciate what it takes to run in the three races competitively."

In fact, Victory Gallop is in better shape than his 35-year-old trainer, who has a cast on his right foot because of a severely fractured right ankle. He hurt himself playing basketball last week at Monmouth Park and had to have five screws and a surgical plate inserted into the ankle.

"It shows what can happen when you get tired," said the 6-foot-4 Walden, who was playing a fourth game of 3-on-3 basketball when he was injured.

DFB escapes with narrow victory over Celanese

PAMPA — With Clayton Young providing the highlight of the game, Duncan, Fraser and Bridges escaped with an 11-10 win over Celanese in a Major League Bambino game Tuesday night.

Young hit the first over-the-fence home run this season in the 11-12 year-old league.

In the first inning, Chance Henley started off with a walk. DFB pitcher Ryan Barnes then struck out the next batter. Andy Rogers reached first on a throwing error. Kile Carbone then reached first with a walk. With the bases loaded, Mitchell Carroll singled, scoring two runners. Carroll was forced at second on a fielder's choice by Jason Brown. Carbone and Brown scored on a double by Alex Couch. Couch was tagged out to end the inning.

The DFB batters came out slugging. Ryan Barnes led off with a single. Cody Jenkins walked, Dusty Lenderman and Clayton Young singled, Garrett Johnson and Shane Willett had doubles. Chance Henley struck out two batters to end the inning. After one inning, DFB led 5-4.

In the second inning, walks again plagued DFB. The first three batters walked and a batter was hit. Celanese scored three runs before the DFB defense shut them down.

In the bottom of the second, DFB batters Barnes, Jenkins and Lenderman all slammed long balls to center field, resulting in two flys caught for outs by Brad Britten. Jenkins was safe with a single. With two outs and a runner on second, Young hit his home run which cleared the center field fence to tie the score at 7-7. Kolby Gilleland then singled, Johnston walked before the inning ended with second baseman Mitchell Carroll throwing out the next hitter.

In the third, pitching problems still plagued DFB. Three batters walked before the DFB defense could shut down the Celanese batters. Three runs scored, giving Celanese a 10-7 lead.

DFB batters again came out swinging. Willett led off with a hit, Dak Fallon walked, Barnes singled, Jenkins singled and Lenderman doubled. Two runs scored before outstanding defense doubled up the DFB baserunners. Celanese kept the lead 10-9.

Relief pitcher Dusty Lenderman went to the mound in the top of the fourth, striking out the first batter. Barnes then fielded a hard-hit ball at shortstop for the second out, and Lenderman struck out the next batter to retire the side.

In the bottom of the fourth, Johnston led off with a single, Eric McClure walked and Jarrod Winegart's single was the game-winning hit, scoring both runners. After four innings, DFB led 11-10.

In the top of the fifth, leadoff hitter Alex Couch hit a triple. Ricky Gattis walked, putting runners at first and third. The next batter struck out. Couch was thrown out at home by catcher Jarrod Winegart. The last batter flew out to first to end the game.

Hitting for Celanese were Couch with a double and a triple, Henley, Rogers, Carbone, Carroll and Brown had one single each.

Pitching for Celanese were Henley, who struck out two and walked one, and Gattis, who struck out one and walked two.

Hitters for DFB were Willett, Winegart and Jenkins with singles, Barnes and Gilleland with two singles, Lenderman and Johnston with a single and double, Young with a home run and single.

Pitching for DFB were Barnes with one strikeout and four walks, Young, two walks; McClure, three walks; Lenderman, three strikeouts and no walks.

Houston defeats San Diego

SAN DIEGO (AP) — The San Diego Padres could have used Sean Bergman this time.

The right-hander the Padres traded to Houston in the offseason outperformed the pitchers on his former club Wednesday night as he helped lead the Astros to an 8-2 victory, his first win over his former club.

Bergman allowed just two runs on 10 hits in recording his first complete game in three years. He also hit a two-run single and scored once.

It turned into a special game for Bergman since he decided not to treat the matchup as anything special.

"I pitched against them a couple of weeks ago and I let a little emotion get into it," Bergman said. "This time, I treated them as any other team and concentrated more on my location than I had my last couple starts."

Bergman allowed no walks, in contrast to the Padres, who issued 10, including seven by starter Joey Hamilton, who saw his personal losing streak reach six straight games.

"This was a little hard to swallow — seven walks," said Hamilton, who gave up six runs and six hits in 6 1-3 innings. "I was ahead of 20 of 29 hitters. But then it slipped for me. When you walk that many people, you're going to get your butt kicked."

The loss extended a career-long losing streak for Hamilton (3-7), whose ERA has been 6.89 in going winless since May 2. His seven walks, including one intentional, topped his previous career high of six on April 1, 1997, against the New York Mets.

The 10 walks by the Padres included one intentional pass by Brian Boehringer and two more by Pete Smith in the Astros' five-run seventh. That followed seven walks in Tuesday night's 4-3 loss to Houston.

"It's definitely been a deterrent these two games," Padres manager Bruce Bochy said. "They count like hits."

Bergman (5-3) had five strikeouts in recording his first complete game since Aug. 2, 1995, with Detroit, his only career shutout. He made his only other appearance against San Diego on May 22, when he had no decision in a 9-6 loss.

"For me, the story of the game is Sean Bergman, not how many guys they walked, but how well he pitched. They have a lot of really good left-handed hitters," Astros manager Larry Dierker said. "That's as strong as he's been all year. And he was on the bases twice."

Tony Eusebio had a two-run single in the seventh, giving him three RBIs in the game, as the Astros put together three hits, four walks, a wild pitch and a sacrifice fly to seal their 10th win in 13 games over the last three seasons in San Diego.

"I tell you what, we have a lot of selective hitters," Dierker said. "I imagine we are one of the better teams. We just won't swing unless it's in the strike zone, and that's a tremendous asset that's often overlooked."

Charges of bias cloud tobacco settlement

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Jurors spent 15 weeks listening to complicated testimony in a case the nation was watching and were all set to start hashing out a verdict in the landmark Minnesota tobacco trial. Then came the $6.6 billion settlement.

So the jurors asked whether they could hear the state's closing arguments anyway. They got their chance Monday — with the judge, in private and nearly a month after the settlement.

That has tobacco lawyers fuming.

The attorneys called the meeting improper, and on Wednesday asked the judge to recuse himself. The judge refused, instead chastising the attorneys for once offering jurors $100 an hour for post-trial interviews.

It has been anything but a smooth ride between Ramsey County Judge Kenneth Fitzpatrick and industry lawyers. While other states that have settled tobacco lawsuits have had problems — squabbles over attorney fees in Texas and hassles over whether settlement money was delivered too early in Florida — the issues in Minnesota have centered on the courtroom.

Tobacco attorneys accused Fitzpatrick and plaintiffs' attorneys of judicial misconduct for arranging to have the former jurors hear the summation lead attorney Michael Ciresi would have delivered.

"By any ethical or judicial standard, it was totally improper and indefensible of the court — while still sitting in judgment of defendants and deciding motions against them — to be secretly furnishing its services to plaintiffs' counsel," the defense motion said.

Roberta Walburn, an attorney who represented the state and Blue Cross and Blue Shield, called the motion nonsense.

"The jurors had requested that we give our closing argument so they could reach some sort of closure in the case," she said.

"We felt that the jurors who had given up four months of their lives were entitled to that."

"It was the right thing to do and we're glad we did it."

The state and Blue Cross had sued to recover money spent treating sick smokers. There are 37 states with similar lawsuits pending against Big Tobacco.

In rejecting the tobacco companies' motion, Fitzpatrick said he considered the meeting "innocuous in light of the conclusion of the case and helpful to former jurors who sought closure after their four months of jury."

Philip Morris attorney Peter Sipkins told the Star Tribune of Minneapolis that the meeting "clearly reflects" an anti-tobacco bias by the judge.

"There was no chance for us to stand up and object," Sipkins said.

It wasn't the first time Fitzpatrick angered the industry. Before the settlement, Fitzpatrick told jurors that they may assume the worst from the tobacco companies' failure to produce some secret documents relating to the case. The judge also directed the jury to find that the industry voluntarily undertook a duty to safeguard public health in 1954.

All 12 jurors attended Monday's meeting in the Minneapolis law offices of Robins, Kaplan, Miller & Ciresi, said juror David Olson of White Bear Lake. He said no vote on a verdict was taken.

"The closing statement was real good," Olson said. "It kind of helped us on our closing."

Texas officials not aiming to follow California

AUSTIN (AP) — Bilingual education isn't in danger of being dismantled in Texas — as long as it's working, Texas Gov. George W. Bush says. The Republican said Wednesday that he's in no hurry to follow California's lead in doing away with the program.

"The ability to speak English is key to success in America. If a bilingual program is not teaching children to read and comprehend in English as quickly as possible, it should be eliminated," Bush said.

"But if a bilingual program is helping to achieve the goal of teaching children to read and comprehend in English, then we should applaud it and say well done."

State Board of Education member Mary Helen Berlanga of Corpus Christi, a Democrat, said Texas has a "very good bilingual program" that's monitored to make sure it is working properly.

Students entering the school system are tested to see if their English is so limited that they need bilingual education. Parents get a say in whether the student is placed into the program, and student performance is checked afterward, she said.

"I just know that where you have a good program, you have success stories. That's exactly what we want: children to be successful," Ms. Berlanga said.

"We want that for all the children in this state. It's to our benefit if we want to see a strong economy."

While some children who would have otherwise gone into bilingual education will succeed in school without it, a large number won't, Ms. Berlanga predicted.

"I feel sorry for the children who don't make it," she said. "They're doomed them for failure. I feel sorry for the state of California, and I especially feel sorry for the children of that state who have been abandoned by their leaders."

State Board of Education Chairman Jack Christie of Houston, a Republican, said there are some success stories in school districts that get large numbers of Spanish-speaking students.

But still, he said, improvement is needed in getting all Texas children proficient in English. One way to do that is by attracting more top-quality bilingual teachers, he said.

"I think it would be a mistake to take draconian measures like California. We've got to keep in mind that this state has a strong accountability system, and we hold all cultures highly accountable. I don't think California has that type of strong accountability system," Christie said.

"We need all children mastering the core subjects in this state, so we have to do anything and everything to bring them up to that standard."

Sen. Carlos Truan, author of the 1969 Texas Bilingual Education Act, said, "Bilingual education works, but it can be improved. We must focus on improving the bilingual education we have before we look elsewhere for a quick fix."

"In the age of globalization, citizens who are literate in more than one language supply us with intellectual capital that gives us an edge in the global market," added Truan, D-Corpus Christi.

Al Kauffman with the Mexican American Legal Defense and Educational Fund in San Antonio said students who need but don't get bilingual education may learn English after a year or two in the immersion system in a regular classroom. But they then will be "way behind in their content," he said.

MALEDEF in California is involved in a lawsuit to halt implementation of Proposition 227 on bilingual education, which was approved Tuesday by California voters.

The proposition does away with bilingual education, instead assigning students to up to a year of an English immersion program. It includes $50 million annually for 10 years for tutoring.
