Negotiators reach deal in heated tobacco talks

By Lauran Neergaard
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — In a historic settlement that will cost cigarette makers $360 billion over 25 years — and billions more after that — the tobacco industry surrendered Friday to unprecedented rules that will change how tobacco is sold in America.

In exchange, the industry got major relief from mounting lawsuits and legal bills.

Michael Moore, Mississippi's attorney general and leader of the hard-fought talks, called it "the most historic public health achievement in history."

"In essence, the Marlboro Man will be riding into the sunset on Joe Camel," said Florida Attorney General Bob Butterworth. "Industry that has never been regulated before is now the most regulated industry in America and that is the way it should be."

But the agreement must be ratified by Congress to take effect — something far from certain.

Public health groups immediately questioned if the deal was strong enough to get smokers to kick the habit and protect teenagers from starting — particularly because it placed conditions on how the Food and Drug Administration would regulate nicotine.

"That should not be a price that was paid," Dr. David Kessler, the former FDA chief who intensified the nation's war on tobacco in 1994, told The Associated Press. "I'd love to declare victory, but the answers are going to be in the details."

President Clinton, a longtime tobacco foe, also said he wanted to look at the details before taking a stance on the agree-

Professor tells group to go for entrepreneurial opportunities

By Dana Bartholomew
Staff Writer

ODESSA — We can overcome — through entrepreneurial gumption, says a visiting black professor of sociology.

If black Americans heed their self-reliant ancestors, and not the politics of discrimination, their offspring will prosper through education and better jobs, said John Butler of the University of Texas, Austin.

"Our history was struggle, entrepreneurship and saving so the kids could go to college," Butler told 25-or-so mostly black business people during a Juneteenth Celebration luncheon here.

"So what we're doing here is trying to put the entrepreneurial spirit at the front, like people do all around the world."

Butler, chairman of the University of Texas Sociology Department, is author of "Self Help and Entrepreneurship Among Black Americans: A Reconsideration of Race and Economics," and advises the Japanese on how to open small businesses.

Butler and UTPB sociology professor R. Colbert Rhodes are studying West Texas and other entrepreneurs to confirm Butler's theory that people who own small businesses pass on values of thrift and self-reliance to their children.

Such children, they say, prosper through higher education and better jobs. Butler compares the success of Japanese Americans and Jews — "a people of small shops" — to the entrepreneurial history of southern blacks.

"In Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi and Tennessee — the Old South ... — where there was legal discrimination, if you turned around and did the right thing, then future generations blossomed," Butler, a native of New Orleans, said.

"My grandpa died a wealthy man and my father did, also. It's not segregation, necessarily, (that made it possible), because if you're white and got no money, you're not worth a damn no way,

Afternoon storms electrify Midland

By Rick Lopez
Staff Writer

A Friday afternoon downpour brought more than half an inch of rain to Midland.

At least five motor vehicle accidents occurred during the storm, according to local authorities. There were no serious injuries, officials said.

Flooding was not reported within city or county limits, but a lightning storm that preceded the showers did cause damage to several local sites.

Midland Fire Department officials said lightning struck two 500-gallon tank batteries at the Irvin Ranch on State Highway 137. No injuries were reported. The flames were extinguished within an hour, officials said. The blaze was reported at 4:42 p.m.

Another tank battery caught on fire at 14500 S. County Road 1160, fire officials said. The flames were extinguished shortly after fire officials arrived, Midland County Sheriff's Office officials said. It was reported at 5:24 p.m.

Lightning struck a tree in the 1800 block of I Street, causing panic for nearby residents. Most of the fire had been put out with a garden hose before firefighters arrived at the scene. No one was injured.

Meanwhile, the lightning caused several sporadic power outages throughout the city. LuAnn Morgan, a district manager with TU Electric, said the local office received about 600 complaints from residents experiencing electrical difficulties.

National Weather Service officials said that the rain shower brought 0.57 inches of rain to the Permian Basin. Midland's temperature peaked to 100 shortly before the downpour.

The storm was caused by morning humidity and wind shifts, a forecaster said. A humidity patch in the mountains south of Midland contributed to the drastic weather change, NWS forecaster John Pendergrast said.

Judge sentences teens to 15 years behind bars

Associated Press

TAMPA, Fla. — As family members on both sides of the courtroom wept, three friends were sentenced to 15 years in prison Friday for pulling up a stop sign for kicks and causing the deaths of three teens who drove into the path of an 8-ton truck.

"I understand your parents love you as much as these parents loved their children. There are no winners in this case," Circuit Judge Bob Mitchum told the young woman and two young men who were convicted last month of manslaughter.

Three 18-year-old buddies who were driving around listening to music after a night of bowling were killed when their car breezed through the intersection and was broadsided. The stop sign was found lying on the roadside near the accident.

Turning to the sobbing families of those killed, Mitchum said: "My heart breaks for you."

Though a presentence recommendation called for up to 50 years in prison, the judge known as "Maximum Bob" for his harsh sentences decided to give the defendants far less.

"I don't believe for one minute that you or the other two defendants pulled these signs up with the intent of causing the death of anyone," he told 20-year-old Christopher Cole.

He then sentenced Cole to 30 years, suspending half, and did the same for Nissa Baillie, 21, and Thomas Miller, 20. The three could be eligible for parole after nearly 13 years.

Three offenders convicted of manslaughter for removing stop sign. Three people died as a result of their actions.

City hopes to rectify offending smells produced by recycling

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

Business managers downwind of the new recycling facility off Business Interstate 20 West have been raising a stink with city officials, asking why protecting the environment must foul the air so.

Warm weather, especially coupled with the recent rains, have greatly aggravated an already pungent situation, according to businessmen near the 4000 block of West Wall Street.

"It's been terrible out here for a couple of months," said David Lewis of Datsun Nissan.

"I had the maintenance crew walking the lot ... I thought it was a dead dog," said Rebecca Frazier, manager of the Hampton Inn.

The source of the olfactory insult is Recycle Midland's new $1.8 million Materials Recovery Facility (MRF).

Partly by machine and partly by hand, recyclable materials are pulled out of the city's refuse at the 25,000-square-foot site, located at 4005 W. Industrial Ave.

On some days, the garbage at this site is aromatic enough to send employees home with complaints of nausea, according to people who work in the area.

Couple this with the smell's deleterious effect on customers, and some business leaders are turning their noses up at the facility.

"I have 20 people working full time cleaning this hotel until it's absolutely spotless," Ms. Frazier said. But with the smell of decaying garbage wafting over "all that effort is lost," she said.

Complaints from area businessmen have city and Recycle Midland officials scrambling to put the lid on emanations from the MRF.

Immediate steps are being taken to DEAL: Industry to pay $360 billion over 25 years

Tobacco companies, in a statement, called the settlement "a bitter pill, because our companies have made concessions that were extremely difficult. But on balance, this plan is preferable to the continuation of a decades-long controversy."

Not all 50 states endorsed the settlement. Maryland Attorney General Joseph Curran "regretfully concluded that we need to go further." He criticized provisions that restricted how smokers could sue.

Under the agreement, smokers would see dire new warnings on cigarette packs, get free medical help to quit and be inundated with nationwide anti-smoking advertising.

In all, the industry would pay out $360 billion over 25 years, most for anti-smoking campaigns and to repay state Medicaid funds spent treating sick smokers — the reason 40 states sued.

After those 25 years are up, the industry would continue paying $15 billion a year.

Sick smokers could still sue the industry, and any money they won for medical bills, lost wages or other "actual damages" would come out of a $5 billion-a-year fund the tobacco industry would establish. Smokers also could receive punitive damages for any future wrongdoing by tobacco companies out of that fund.

But individual smokers could not sue for punitive damages for any past misconduct by tobacco companies. Instead, as punishment for all past wrongdoing, part of the settlement includes a $50 billion tobacco industry fund, part of which would be used to provide health care.

Tobacco winners & losers

The Winners

- Despite the big payout, tobacco companies reap rewards. They escape the threat of future class action lawsuits. And their profits are expected to hold steady thanks to higher prices and increasing reliance on foreign markets. Tobacco stocks should rise in value.
- Children and future generations will be less tempted to take up a life-threatening habit. No more Joe Camel ads; anti-tobacco campaigns will take their place. Parents can breathe a sigh of relief.
- Children who aren't covered by health insurance receive about $25 billion worth of medical care over 25 years thanks to a fund paid for by tobacco companies doing penance.
- 40 states who filed lawsuits recover billions of dollars from costs of Medicaid bills for sick smokers.
- Smokers who want to kick the habit may qualify for free nicotine patches and other help, plus get an extra nudge from public service ads and large labels on cigarette packs warning "Smoking can kill you."
- Lawyers who brought 17 class action suits and those representing the states win big fees paid by the tobacco companies.
- The Food and Drug Administration takes on new power to regulate nicotine as a drug, maybe even banning it after 2009.

The Losers

- Smokers could pay 75 cents to $1 more a pack, or $520 a year for a carton-a-week habit. And that doesn't count higher taxes that Congress is considering separately.
- Farmers, mostly in the South, might suffer from dropping tobacco sales, although sales to overseas smokers could make that up.
- Convenience stores, which sell half of the cigarettes smoked in the United States, could lose business.
- Children overseas get no protection from cigarette promotions by U.S. companies seeking to expand their markets.
- People who might sue tobacco companies in the future lose the right to seek punitive damages for past industry wrongdoing; they can only recover actual damages such as medical costs. Their lawyers lose out, too.
- Winston Cup racing and other sporting events lose tobacco company money because name brand sponsorship is banned.

Too Soon to Say

- Congress and President Clinton face political risks as they weigh whether to embrace or reject the deal, which will be the subject of intense lobbying. Clinton benefited in the public eye by taking on tobacco companies; that could change if he supports a settlement viewed by some as too lax either," Butler said to laughter all round.

TALK: Professor urges blacks to be self-reliant

Friday's lunch at Sam's Bar-B-Q and Lounge was hosted by the Permian Basin Black Chamber of Commerce, the Greater Odessa Chamber of Commerce, the UTPB Sociology Club and the Odessa Ministerial Alliance.

Discrimination, said the garrulous professor with the optimism of Dale Carnegie, has become everyone's lament, and is no reason to be held back.

"I used to walk up to my man here and say you know, 'I got the poor colored people here,' and take out a checkbook, 'How much you need?'

"Now I say, well, there's some white women over here, and some white homosexuals over there, some white people in wheelchairs over here, you know, and everybody got a story to tell.

"The politics of suffering — somebody's done somebody wrong — is over," Butler said. "...It gets to the point now where I tell people, 'Quite voting and go to work.'"

In West Texas, he said, shops in a once-thriving black business community have been torn down. Those who sacrificed to make the community strong have been forgotten.

Go back to what your grandparents did, to what your great-grandparents accomplished through self-reliance, Butler urged West Texas blacks. "You gotta put entrepreneurship at the center."

His message was well-received Friday by black entrepreneurs.

"Our community cannot survive without entrepreneurs," said Odel Crawford, president of the Permian Basin Black Chamber of Commerce, after Butler's talk.

Forget Fortune 500 companies, he said, and look to the mom and pop shops for community stability.

Gene Collins, a self-employed insurance man and regional coordinator for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, remembers a thriving black Odessa business district.

"We had a taxi company, restaurants, stores, even our own movie theater," he said. "The whole phenomenon of integration was an effort to assimilate into white society.

"We were taught to think white was better, so we went to white movie theaters. We were brainwashed to think the white man's ice was cooler. We abandoned our black business community," Crawford said.

Robbyn Fuller, president and CEO of the Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs, remembers a similar excitement in Midland.

"One of the things that contributed to that demise was desegregation," said her husband, James Fuller, a Midland school board trustee.

"So African-Americans left their shops and went to Furr's, Lowes and all that. As a result, the African-American business community lost some impetus."

To regain it, the Fullers started Kidpreneurship, a program to teach children entrepreneurial skills. Of the 45 children enrolled last summer, five have opened businesses ranging from snow cones to video production.

A walk in the back of Sam's Bar-B-Q found its owner, Leroy Hammond, patiently stuffing sausage. Hammond, 58, who is black, works 14 hours a day seven days a week to run his Odessa and Midland barbecue pits.

"My dad was an entrepreneur, that's right," Hammond, who financed his son's college education, said. "It's a hard hustle, ain't it?

Hammond attributes his success to developing good work habits and an attention to detail.

"If my business fails," he said, "it's not because I didn't give it 110 percent."

PRANK: Emotions run high in court room

(From 1A)

All three cried and repeatedly wiped their eyes with tissue as each stood before the judge in orange jail jumpsuits, their hands cuffed. Their families and friends stood behind them and the families of the victims across the courtroom.

Randall White, Kevin Farr and Brian Hernandez were killed on Feb. 7, 1996, the day after the stop sign was pulled up.

Cole testified he and his friends stole as many as 19 signs along the rural roads east of Tampa the night before the accident. But he told jurors they didn't touch the stop sign at that intersection.

The defendants told investigators they panicked when they heard about the accident and ditched the signs they had collected in a river.

"There's been many a night that I stayed up and cried ... because your sons did not return home," Miller said, his face red and twisted by sobs, as he looked toward the victims' families.

Just before the sentencing, the judge refused a new trial request based on a witness' claim that a prosecutor forced him to lie.

The mother of one of the dead teens also sided with the defendants, saying she believes investigators manipulated evidence. She joined their families in pleading for leniency.

"From day one, I didn't believe these kids were guilty of this," said Ann Hertle, Randall White's mother. She described a telephone conversation with Miller from jail in which he told her, "We had nothing to do with taking down that sign."

"I told him, 'I know, honey. I know you didn't,'" she said. "One day we're going to see Randall again and I'm going to know. I'm going to know who took that sign down."

But Les Farr, Kevin's father, said of the defendants: "Their only remorse at all is that they got caught, and now they're going to be accountable."

improve the air quality downwind of the facility, according to Glen Hackler, assistant city manger.

Since rotting food is a major culprit in garbage odor, restaurant wastes are no longer being accepted at the MRF and no garbage is being left on the concrete site overnight, Hackler said.

MRF personnel will even be washing down the concrete after the day's waste has been processed, he said.

These measures will be taking place immediately, and for the near future, city and Recycle Midland officials will be working with an industry specialist to develop a deodorizing process for the area, Hackler explained.

These measures should have a profound effect on the facilities aroma, and further steps are planned for the future. "That should improve things considerably," Hackler said.

Those involved are determined to make the MRF more acceptable to its neighbors, Hackler said.

Plans are under way to enclose the entire waste processing site, thereby sealing off its offensive vapors.

This will be a long-term goal, with funds needing to be allocated and construction plans determined, but months down the road this facility should be enclosed, he said.

Meanwhile, southerly winds have been keeping the problem at bay for the past several days. It is hoped that the measures being implemented will protect the air even after the next rain.

The facility is expected to recycle between 10 and 15 percent of the 110,000 tons of garbage generated annually.

Demonstrators lob firebombs in clashes with Israeli soldiers

HEBRON, West Bank (AP) — Palestinian demonstrators shouting "God is great!" escalated their attacks on Israeli soldiers Friday with a new weapon: firebombs.

In the seventh straight day of protests in this tense West Bank town, gas-filled bottles exploded in staccato near the feet of Israeli troops, forcing them at the height of the bombardment into retreat.

While some protesters threw the bottles, others busily concocted new firebombs or carried stones to the front for comrades to throw at the soldiers. Israeli troops responded with rubber bullets.

By the end of the day 39 Palestinians were injured — including one in critical condition with a head injury. An Israeli soldier was injured by a stone.

Relations between Israel and the Palestinians hit their lowest point this year after Israel began construction of a housing project for Jews on disputed Jerusalem land that Palestinians claim as theirs.

U.S. Ambassador to Israel Martin Indyk, who has been closely involved in the peace talks, said Friday the situation "was fragile" and urged both sides to resume negotiations.

Israel says Yasser Arafat's Palestinian Authority has instigated the daily riots, hoping the violence will spur Israeli concessions at the negotiating table.

The Palestinians have denied the charge, saying instead that the demonstrations are a reflection of growing frustration over the stalled peace talks. And they predicted the violence could increase.

"Unless the Israelis change their policies the situation will continue to be dangerous and definitely spread to other cities," Mohammed Horani, the leader of Arafat's Fatah movement in Hebron, told the Associated Press.

Horani said he has urged Palestinians to take to the streets to protest Jewish settlement construction, but insisted he had no role in organizing the clashes.

"We called for the defense of the land, and people can interpret this any way they want. They chose to interpret it by using firebombs and rocks," Horani said.

Still, there was evidence of organization Friday. Dozens of Palestinian youths arrived at the scene carrying empty bottles, rags and lighters. Others carried plastic bags filled with stones to the line of confrontation, fresh ammunition for those who had run out of nearby rocks.

After Friday noon prayers, the crowd swelled to 300. Taunting the soldiers, rioters held up two Israeli flags near Israeli positions and set them on fire.

"Now we are starting the war of the Molotovs," said an 18-year-old rioter who only gave his last name, Dandis, for fear of being arrested by Israeli authorities.

"The peace we gave a chance to, the peace we thought would get the Jewish settlers out of here, is not going to work. It's all on paper," he said as he lined up to have his empty orange juice bottle filled with gasoline.

Many stone throwers covered their faces with Arab headdresses, Palestinian flags and ski masks, apparently to avoid future arrests by Israel. Israeli troops reportedly have begun filming the riots.

Khmer Rouge radio claims Pol Pot captured

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP) — Clandestine Khmer Rouge radio claimed Friday that Pol Pot had been captured by his former troops, but a senior minister in Cambodia's polarized government dismissed the report as a trick.

The broadcast, which could not be verified, marked the second time this week that the Khmer Rouge leader had been reported captured in the remote northern jungles by guerrillas who have turned against him.

Skepticism has mounted that Cambodia's feuding governing parties are manipulating information about Pol Pot for political advantage. The broadcast claimed the guerrillas would support the royalist party in elections next year.

"On the night of June 19, 1997, the national army captured Pol Pot," the radio said. "The capture of Pol Pot is an important event."

It did not say whether Pol Pot would be turned over to an international tribunal and judged in the deaths of 2 million people between 1975 and 1979, when his genocidal regime turned Cambodia into a brutal agrarian labor camp.

In the broadcast, a man identified as Chan Youran, Khmer Rouge deputy foreign minister, was said to be addressing a cheering crowd of 3,000 in Anlong Veng, Pol Pot's one-time stronghold.

"The Pol Pot regime is completely finished," Chan Youran said. "Pol Pot has already confessed."

Chan Youran claimed Khmer Rouge was in the hands of another movement leader, Khieu Samphan. He did not speak. Nor did Ta Mok, the top guerrilla general.

"I don't believe it," commented Sar Kheng, a co-interior minister from the Cambodian People's Party, the royalists' rival. "It's a political game the Khmer Rouge are using to eliminate three hardliners from public view."

The rival parties have courted former guerrillas since the Khmer Rouge collapsed last year as hopes dimmed that it could win a civil war. Some 10,000 guerrillas have already defected.

Both parties view the military skill of the former guerrillas, and the territory they run under nominal government control, as crucial in deciding elections next year widely expected to be violent. The royalists, who are weaker militarily, have been more willing to cut deals to secure Khmer Rouge allegiance.

"I still think that Pol Pot is the top leader of the Khmer Rouge," Hun Sen said. "The government should have divided the Khmer Rouge. Instead, the Khmer Rouge has divided the government."
— Second Prime Minister Hun Sen

The estimated 1,000 guerrillas at Anlong Veng were the final holdouts. But before they could defect they needed to distance themselves from Pol Pot, who could face a genocide trial before an international tribunal.

Pol Pot was said to have destroyed the clandestine radio transmitter when he fled — ill and unable to walk — after executing his former defense minister for allegedly negotiating his own defection.

It was not certain who controlled the radio, which returned to the air, which returned to the air this week with a report Pol Pot had "confessed." That triggering claims by a royalist general negotiating with the guerrillas that he had surrendered. The claim was retracted Thursday.

Earlier, royalist party leader and co-premier Prince Norodom Ranariddh said the guerrillas had launched an offensive Friday to capture Pol Pot.

Second Prime Minister Hun Sen disputed the claim.

"I still think that Pol Pot is the top leader of the Khmer Rouge," Hun Sen said. "The government should have divided the Khmer Rouge. Instead, the Khmer Rouge has divided the government."

Police and bodyguards allied with the feuding premiers have clashed recently in the capital, Phnom Pehn.

The royalists were allied with the Khmer Rouge against Cambodia's military occupation by Vietnam, which invaded and toppled Pol Pot in 1979.

In U.N.-supervised elections in 1993, the royalists won the most votes but Hun Sen's party forced its way into a coalition by threatening renewed civil war.

Watchdog group reports high incarceration rates, violence

LYON, France (AP) — An international watchdog group has condemned the United States for violence in its prisons and faulted authorities for overcrowding in jails around the world.

The International Prison Observatory said in a report issued Thursday that a state prison in Corcoran, Calif., organized "gladiator battles" between opposing gangs. It also reported simulated executions at a jail in Sacramento, Calif., last June.

The report also detailed high incarceration rates around the world. Rwanda had the highest rate with 1,100 people jailed per 100,000 inhabitants. Russia had 700 prisoner per 100,000 people and the United States had 602, the Lyon-based group said.

In Europe, the rate is 70-120 people per 100,000; in Canada it is 114.

The worst prison conditions were reported in Africa; a prison in Butare, Rwanda, built for 1,200 people held 17,537.

Task Force drug bust

ODESSA — The Permian Basin Drug Task Force arrested four people Thursday evening in connection with two unrelated drug busts.

The first arrest occurred at 419 N. Lynn at 5 p.m. Officers arrested Stella Kendall after executing a search warrant at her residence, where they found two ounces of methamphetamine. Officials said the drug has an estimated street value of $2,400.

Ms. Kendall, 37, was taken to the Ector County Jail.

Three Odessa residents were arrested at about 9 p.m., by the task force, U.S. Customs inspectors and officers with the Ward County Sheriff's Department on marijuana possession charges.

Gabriel Gomez, Annabel Acosta and Alma Fuentes, all 19, were charged with possession of a controlled substance after authorities found 25 pounds of marijuana inside their vehicle.

The drug, officials said, has an estimated street value of $15,272.

The marijuana was stashed inside a hidden compartment of the car.

House votes to increase troops in border areas

Associated Press

Up to 10,000 U.S. troops could be stationed along the Mexican border to help stop illegal immigration and drug trafficking under a measure approved Friday by the House.

The troops would be barred by law from making arrests and other civil law enforcement activities, but could help the border patrol and Immigration and Naturalization Service in inspections and detaining illegal aliens, said the sponsor of the measure, Rep. Jim Traficant, D-Ohio, said.

"If the Pentagon can send hundreds of thousands of U.S. troops to protect our allies, it should be able to spare about 10,000 military personnel to protect America," he said.

The provision, passed 269-119, was an amendment to a $268 billion authorization bill for defense programs now working its way through the House. It is not in a version awaiting Senate consideration.

Under the amendment, troops would be transferred to the border only if the attorney general requested the aid and the Pentagon agreed to the deployment.

The military has AWACS surveillance planes involved in drug-detection operations and has a small number of troops, Joint Task Force Six, based at Fort Bliss, Texas, helping the border patrol in construction and setting up listening stations.

Denver summit masks diverging economic policies

By Bernard Kaplan
Hearst News Services

■ News analysis

PARIS — For all the good intentions being voiced at the Denver summit this week, economic policies of the United States, Japan and western Europe are actually diverging, not growing closer, according to analysts here.

President Clinton and other leaders at the so-called Summit of the Eight will put their usual gloss on their cooperation in tackling the world's most pressing economic problems — especially, the severe unemployment afflicting such major industrial nations as Germany and France.

The United States, at the height of its business boom, is primarily concerned with expanding world trade and maintaining low interest rates as an incentive to growth.

But, except for Britain, the Europeans are concentrating on keeping their plan for a single currency on track even if it means limiting Europe's economic recovery and doing little for the continent's 18 million jobless.

As for Japan, its recent decision to introduce a new consumer tax seems certain to discourage imports and boost that country's already top-heavy trade surplus. The gap is not likely to be reduced by the new U.S.-Japan trade accord signed Thursday that will allow Washington to monitor Japanese deregulation efforts in high-tech industries.

The result could be another stormy confrontation between the two countries like that of the 1980s and early '90s.

Aside from its perennial battle to open up the Japanese market to U.S. goods, Washington wants a flourishing Europe that will offer greater trade opportunties for American manufacturers.

Paris-based American economist Richard Barlett said an underlying aim of the Clinton administration is to "push, prod and cajole" European governments into adopting policies that are "job friendly."

Only Britain, which has declared it will not be a candidate to join the single European currency when it is scheduled to start in 1999, has consistently followed America in reducing costs and making itself more competitive. At 7 percent, the British unemployment rate is now Europe's lowest.

"As a matter of self-interest, the United States wants to see unemployment in Europe close to America's below-5-percent level instead of more than twice that high as in most countries over here," Barlett noted.

But notwithstanding agreement at recent economic summits and other meetings to promote transatlantic cooperation in dealing with the problem, nothing much has happened, he added.

"American officials have had little success persuading the Europeans that jobs can be generated in large numbers only by cutting taxes and reducing Europe's high social welfare and other labor-related costs to employers," said Barlett, a consultant to several multinational companies.

According to French banker Andre Vernon-Lesieur, "European and American officials haven't been talking to each other so much as talking past each other."

Despite their insistence that reducing unemployment is a top priority for them, such leaders as German Chancellor Helmut Kohl and President Jacques Chirac have refused to relax tight budget restrictions and high interest rates designed to allow their countries to be eligible to join the single currency, Vernon-Lesieur said.

"Even a country such as Spain, with more than 20 percent of its work force unemployed, has been tightening its fiscal policies in order to qualify for the single currency," he pointed out.

At a European Union summit in Amsterdam earlier this week, France's new Socialist Prime Minister Lionel Jospin — fresh from a parliamentary election triumph over Chirac, a conservative — demanded that EU policy must shift to make jobs, rather the single currency, the main consideration.

In the end, in order to avert a row with Kohl, Jospin accepted a conference declaration agreeing the jobs crisis had to be solved but providing no concrete proposals.

Fuel shortage could stall relief efforts as North Korea slides toward famine

'It's beyond the point of being at risk, these people are about to die.'
— U.S. Rep. Tony Hall D-Ohio

WASHINGTON (NYT) — A impending fuel shortage in North Korea could stall delivery of desperately needed food as that country continues its slide toward famine, an official with the World Food Program said Friday.

Meanwhile, the International Red Cross issued a fresh warning from Geneva that 5 million people are about to starve in North Korea, but the relief effort will confront a new political obstacle if providing gasoline becomes necessary to the cause.

"We've come to a very dangerous intersection," said Michael Ross, a spokesman for the United Nation's World Food Program in New York.

Defense hawks in Washington have been wary of sending food to the heavily armed North Korean government for fear that it would be diverted to the military. In recent days rhetoric has highlighted that danger, as the North Korean defense ministry has issued threatening statements accusing South Korea of military provocation.

"I would guess that it is essentially impossible that South Korea and the United States would provide gasoline as part of food aid," said Mike Mazarr, an expert on North Korea at the Center for Strategic and International Studies, a private think tank in Washington. "It's much more of a directly military issue."

After months of work, U.S. Rep. Tony Hall, D-Ohio, and others orchestrating food relief efforts for North Korea say they can boast only modest progress. A "trickle" of food has been sent, Hall said, but about 1 million tons still is needed.

So far just over 325,000 tons of food has been sent to North Korea through the WFP, and another 155,000 has been pledged by Europe. Ross said his office will announce a new appeal for more food next week, and officials said the U.S., which has provided 77,000 tons so far, will consider giving more when the next appeal is made.

"The situation is not significantly better," Hall said Friday. "It's beyond the point of being at risk, these people are about to die."

Experts say North Korea's economy, which at best produced substandard steel, clothing and some minerals, has all but collapsed under the food crisis. Poor harvests and lowered trade caused by North Korea's political isolation in the post-Cold War era, have combined to cause the food shortages.

Industrial production is about 20 percent of normal, and many idle factories are being dismantled and sent in pieces to China in exchange for grain, said Ross of the World Food Program.

Ross said that to avoid starvation the country is devouring itself. With no industrial production, no goods to sell and few allies to trade with anyway, North Korea doesn't have the capacity to make fuel or to earn the hard currency to buy it.

"And no fuel, no food distribution," Ross said.

Nan Borton with the Agency for International Development, the humanitarian arm of the State Department, said Friday that in light of the fuel problem her office is looking for ways to move North Koreans to centers where food aid has been sent.

Borton said that in the past the U.S. has dyed fuel when it wanted to ensure it was used only for specific purposes in hostile territories abroad. But in secretive North Korea, monitoring isn't easy.

"That's one reason we're talking about moving to food," Borton said.

Talk shows give China taste of Hong Kong's brand of free speech

By Raymond Chow
Associated Press

HONG KONG — Radio host Leung Ka-wing remembers his surprise some years back when people from China started calling a talk show in Hong Kong.

Today, he says, it's routine.

The democratic freedoms Hong Kong has won in the last years of being a British colony have unleashed a tidal wave of chit-chat on the airwaves that has spread across the border with unexpected results.

Radio shows have been giving mainland Chinese a taste of the colony's freedom of speech and democratic ways — as well as the chance to say things they never could on state-run radio at home. From Chinese callers, Hong Kong people get insight into mainland attitudes.

Now, some in Hong Kong fear the lively, often raucous exchange will end after China resumes control of the colony July 1, leaving Hong Kong people, like their mainland neighbors, unable to speak their minds so publicly.

Leung, co-host of "Talkabout" on government-owned Radio Television Hong Kong, says that in the 1980s "it took guts for mainland people even to listen to our programs, let alone call us."

The proportion of callers from the mainland is small. Still, listeners in China were busy dialing "Talkabout" in the days before June 4 — the anniversary of Beijing's bloody crackdown on pro-democracy demonstrators in 1989.

Some wanted Hong Kong to know that the Tiananmen Square protesters were not forgotten, despite China's attempts to label them criminals and expunge them from public memory.

"People here are angry. Many of us believe the verdict on the June 4 crackdown will be overturned one day," said a caller from Zhongshan, in south China, who gave his name as Mr. Kong.

Other callers defended China's image. A Hong Kong woman surnamed Chan demanded proof that the crackdown killed anyone, asking: "Which of your eyes saw tanks roll over students? Or photos, or footage?"

Chinese diplomats in Hong Kong have said Radio Television Hong Kong, being government-owned, should behave like a government mouthpiece. RTHK considers itself editorially independent, and wants to remain so under the "high degree of autonomy" China has promised Hong Kong.

The post-colonial legislature is expected to enact an anti-subversion law. Broadcasters say its content, as yet unknown, will dictate how far they can go.

"I won't start censoring myself, but I will abide by the law," says Albert Cheng, a China critic who hosts a talk show on RTHK's rival, Commercial Radio.

Joseph Chan, a journalism professor at the Chinese University of Hong Kong, says talk shows sprang up in Hong Kong in the late 1970s to fill the void created by the absence of representative government.

The leap forward came in 1984, when Britain and China finished negotiating the change of sovereignty. The public, which was not consulted, "used the media to express their opinions," he says.

Today, as in any country where speech is free and most homes have phones, Hong Kong's three radio stations are awash in chatter about everything from housing costs to pornography on the Internet.

Late-night listeners can talk to gravel-voiced Raymond Wong, a vitriolic China-basher who revels in the nickname "Mad Dog."

Then there's "City Forum" every Sunday at Victoria Park, where politicians debate before a lively, heckling audience and occasional scuffles break out. TVB, the colony's most popular channel, screens it live.

Zeng Xinhua of Radio Guangdong says Chinese authorities bar certain subjects — "things that we don't care about much, so we don't need to discuss."

He wouldn't elaborate, except to say: "You know, we are different. Hong Kong is capitalist and open. China is communist."

U.N. team arrives in Congo to investigate alleged massacres

KINSHASA, Congo (AP) — U.N. investigators reached Congo on Friday to begin a probe into reported massacres of Rwandan refugees by the army of new President Laurent Kabila.

International humanitarian groups claim Kabila's troops slaughtered thousands of refugees as the fighters swept across the country, then known as Zaire, during an eight-month campaign to oust dictator Mobutu Sese Seko.

Also Friday, about 1,000 people held a peaceful march through Kinshasa to protest Kabila's rule. The marchers, who support longtime Mobutu opponent Etienne Tshisekedi, accused Kabila of establishing a new dictatorship.

Soldiers, who had broken up similar marches earlier, did not intervene.

Kabila, who took the presidential oath in May, has promised elections within two years. In the meantime, he has banned political activity and rules with a Cabinet made up mostly of members of his Alliance of Democratic Forces for the Liberation of Congo.

Kabila denies the massacre allegations, and his troops have barred humanitarian groups, diplomats and journalists from the sites in eastern Congo where massacres reportedly occurred.

But under growing pressure from the international community, Kabila agreed earlier this month to allow the U.N. investigation.

"There has been a clear understanding between the secretary general of the United Nations and President Kabila about this investigation," U.N. investigator Georg Mautner-Markhof said, after arriving at Kinshasa airport. "We have now come here to talk business."

The eight-member U.N. team — composed of forensic, human rights and security specialists — will lay the ground work for a larger group of investigators, expected to begin their labors on July 7.

Soldiers of Rwanda's former Hutu-dominated government and allied militiamen fled along with more than a million refugees into eastern Zaire in 1994, fearing retribution for the slaughter of a half-million minority Tutsis.

But once in refugee camps inside Zaire, the Hutu soldiers and militiamen continued to wage attacks against Rwanda's Tutsi-led government.

About 50,000 more refugees have returned to Rwanda since Apr. 27 in a U.N. airlift, but up to 180,000 remain unaccounted for. The exact number of refugees who fled Rwanda into the country will probably never be known.

Kabila's forces — many of whom include Tutsis from Congo or Rwanda — took up arms in September and attacked refugee camps, forcing about 750,000 people to return to Rwanda and scattering the others deeper inside Zaire, which Kabila renamed Congo.

About 50,000 more refugees have returned to Rwanda since Apr. 27 in a U.N. airlift, but up to 180,000 remain unaccounted for. The exact number of refugees who fled Rwanda into the country will probably never be known.

The U.S.-based Human Rights Watch/Africa on Friday reiterated allegations by similar groups that the United Nations shares responsibility for the deaths of Rwandan refugees because it failed to separate armed soldiers from the civilian refugees in 1994.

U.N. officials have repeatedly said that disarming Hutu militiamen in the camps was impossible.

Former Maryland U.S. Senate hopeful Ruthann Aron, was arrested Monday, June 9 on charges she tried to hire someone to kill her husband and an attorney, Montgomery County Police said. Her victims were to be Dr. Barry Aron and Arthur G. Kahn, a lawyer with the Baltimore firm of Levin & Gann, said Montgomery County Deputy Chief Fred Alles at a news conference.

Authorities accuse politician of putting out contract on her husband, lawyer

ROCKVILLE, Md. (AP) — Ruthann Aron was wearing a floppy hat, a wig and a trenchcoat when she was arrested. In her car were what prosecutors say were the makings of silencers. She had just dropped off a $500 down payment on a $10,000-per-head contract to kill her husband and her lawyer, police say.

Her arrest June 9, disguised and alone at a hotel pay phone, was a far cry from her campaign for the U.S. Senate in 1994.

Ms. Aron's apparent meltdown shocked friends who described the woman with three college degrees as a brilliant politician and aggressive developer.

The 54-year-old member of the Montgomery County Planning Board is being held without bail on suspicion of soliciting murder and could get life in prison. Two psychiatrists hired by her lawyer diagnosed her as depressed and possibly suicidal.

"This is just a very bizarre case," said Montgomery County Executive Douglas Duncan. "Clearly, it's a very tragic situation."

Prosecutors refused to discuss a motive, but one of the potential victims, attorney Arthur Kahn, opposed Ms. Aron in a civil trial arising out of her Senate campaign in 1994. She lost the GOP primary to former Tennessee Sen. William Brock, who went on to lose to Democratic Sen. Paul Sarbanes.

After the primary, she sued Brock for saying during the campaign that she had been "convicted" and "fined" $300,000 in two development disputes, when in fact she had paid settlements in civil cases.

Dr. Barry Aron, 56, a urologist, called the evidence against his wife "very frightening."

The couple had been married 32 years but had slept in separate beds in their $700,000 Potomac house since 1993. Ms. Aron agreed last year to a divorce but asked her husband to remain by her side through a County Council campaign in 1998.

She routinely wore a holstered handgun when home alone, her husband said. Police also found an assault weapon with a laser sight in her bedroom.

One person claimed he knew Ms. Aron had serious problems. Richard LaVay, a former homebuilder and a GOP member of the House of Delegates, said he dealt frequently with her during the early 1990s. LaVay said she was unpredictable and mean.

One time, he said, she decided not to pursue a real estate deal with him. But after hearing LaVay had found a buyer for the piece of land, she arrived on his doorstep at 8 a.m. on a Sunday with paperwork to get into the deal.

"She was so volatile, there was something wrong there," LaVay said. He said he used to joke with fellow lawmakers: "One day, I'm afraid she's going to show up with an AK-47 at the planning board."

"I felt she was violent and I was right," LaVay said.

Prosecutors contend she had been scheming since March to carry out the killings — by herself, if necessary.

Ms. Aron's plans came to light after she contacted William Mossburg Jr., asking if he could recommend someone to do a killing, police said. Mossburg's son had been charged two years earlier with trying to hire a hit man to kill his father. The charges were later dropped.

Police said Mossburg, who has known Ms. Aron from political and development circles, helped them tape incriminating conversations with Ms. Aron.

Police arranged for Ms. Aron to drop off the $500 in an envelope at the front desk of a hotel. After making the drop, she got a call on her pager from the supposed hit man. She was arrested when she stopped to return the call.

In her car, police found empty plastic soda bottles, packing peanuts and two lawn mower mufflers. Prosecutors said the materials were for making silencers for guns, as described in books in the car. She also had brochures on obtaining false IDs and had a stolen license plate.

Ms. Aron graduated from Cornell University, earned a master's in education at New York University and got a law degree from Catholic University. She started a development company in 1984 and developed a reputation as a tough operator.

Delegate Jean Cryor, a Republican who knew Ms. Aron for 15 years, characterized her fall as a Greek tragedy. "Obviously the pressure of all of this just kept building. She didn't seem to be able to step back and look at it with a cool eye," Cryor said.

Ms. Aron's lawyer, Barry Helfand, said she will plead innocent.

During her first days behind bars, she was kept alone and forced to wear a paper gown as a possible suicide risk. Helfand's request that she be transferred to a private psychiatric hospital was turned down.

During two bail hearings, Ms. Aron wore a neck brace. She told a jail official that she suffered domestic violence. Her husband strongly denied that.

Whatever the verdict, he said he won't live with his wife again: "I'm starting the rest of my life."

House grants wide authority to campaign-finance investigation

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House's chief campaign-finance investigator was granted authority Friday to summon witnesses and take sworn testimony despite objections by Democrats that he was waging a "political witch hunt."

The House voted 216-194, mostly on partisan lines, to approve the resolution empowering Rep. Dan Burton, R-Ind., and his staff investigators to conduct depositions of witnesses without the concurrence of Democrats.

Although he has promised to consult Democrats, Burton said the seriousness of the allegations that the 1996 election was tainted by illegal fund raising justified the unilateral authority he sought to question at least 150 witnesses.

"We are investigating a possible massive scheme for funneling millions dollars in foreign money into U.S. electoral system" and an allegation that "the Chinese government at the highest level decided to infiltrate our political system," Burton said.

"We are investigating a White House which was a frequent stop for major contributors with foreign ties who have now fled the country or taken the Fifth Amendment," Burton said.

Rep. Paul Kanjorski, D-Pa., said Burton's description of the probe showed "this is not going to be an investigation to find facts; this is a political witchhunt."

"The chairman has just written the conclusions that he intends to find," Kanjorski said.

Republicans argued that the authority Burton received was no different than powers given to House chairmen who investigated the Iran-Contra affair, Koreagate, Abscam and other scandals.

But Democrats argue that such authority was seldom exercised by House chairmen, who instead chose to confer with leading members of the minority before issuing subpoenas or questioning witnesses.

"No member of Congress, no American, has ever had this breadth of power," said Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif. "It is a terrible idea even if it were being handled responsibly. But it's not. The record proves it is being used as a raw partisan tool."

Waxman noted that Burton has already issued 282 subpoenas aimed at Democrats, compared with 10 seeking cuments from Republicans.

Burton's investigators "don't seem to be out to get facts, they seem to be out to get Democrats," said Rep. Joe Moakley, D-Mass.

"This is campaign reform Republican style — ... intimidate anybody who gave money to the Democrats," said Rep. Thomas M. Barrett, D-Wis.

"We are not going to try to intimidate anybody," Burton said.

Republicans argued it would be impractical to require Burton to seek votes of the 44-member House Government Reform and Oversight Committee each time he sought to question a witness.

Democrats sought a veto power to force a vote every time Burton's investigators wanted to question a witness, said Rep. Christopher Cox, R-Calif.

The authority Burton received enables him to "guard against any dilatory tactics that may be employed by those opposed to the investigation," said Rep. Deborah Pryce, R-Ohio.

Rep. Marge Roukema of New Jersey was the only Republican to vote against the resolution. Four Democrats broke ranks and voted to grant the deposition authority to Burton. They were Reps. Virgil Goode of Virginia, Gene Taylor of Mississippi, Ralph Hall of Texas and Jim Traficant of Ohio.

Woman gives birth in medical copter

ERIE, Pa. (AP) — Raven McDonald entered the world appropriately for someone with a bird's name: 1,500 feet over northwestern Pennsylvania, giving new meaning to the word "airborne."

Raven's 22-year-old mother, Rebecca Collier of Corry, went into labor two months early Thursday night and her doctor decided to send her via helicopter to a better-equipped hospital in Erie.

The baby was ready to disembark three minutes into the 13-minute flight.

"We had presentation of the head and full delivery of the infant within a matter of seconds," said flight medic Don Millar, who delivered the baby with nurse Becky Spinks.

Raven was in an incubator by the time the helicopter landed at Hamot Medical Center.

It's the first airborne birth in the 11 years that Lifestar Air Medical Transport Service has been in service.

Black caucus to work with Clinton on race relations

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Congressional Black Caucus will work closely with President Clinton's new advisory board on race and support efforts to bring about a national conversation on race relations, chairwoman Maxine Waters said Friday.

"The president's 'bully pulpit' is a great launching ground for this dialogue," she said.

'White America must respond to the president's challenge.'
— Rep. Louis Stokes

During a June 14 commencement address, Clinton announced the creation of a seven-member board that will hold a yearlong series of town meetings. The White House will compile a report on the board recommendations for coping with the country's new multiracial, multiethnic reality.

"Because of America's volatile history involving race, we believe it is critical to the future of our country to foster an honest and straightforward dialogue among the races," said Waters, who was backed by 20 caucus members at a news conference.

Rep. Louis Stokes, D-Ohio, said the response of white Americans was important.

"The real question is how will white Americans respond to the challenge put forth to them by the president of the United States," he said. "We are the victims of slavery. We are the victims of racism in this society. White America must respond to the president's challenge."

Jury orders death for Megan's killer

TRENTON, N.J. (AP) — A jury ordered the death penalty Friday for the child molester whose rape and strangling of his 7-year-old neighbor led to passage of Megan's Law.

The jury rejected defense arguments that Jesse K. Timmendequas's life should be spared because a childhood of violence and abuse left him unable to control his lust for young girls.

Timmendequas, 36, blinked quickly when the verdict was read, and began to shake nervously, but his face remained expressionless. Spectators outside the courthouse applauded.

The same jury convicted Timmendequas (pronounced tih-MEN-duh-kwahs) on May 30 of murder, aggravated sexual assault and kidnapping in the slaying of Megan Kanka.

Timmendequas lived across the street from the little girl in suburban Hamilton Township. He lured her into his house to see his puppy, then raped and beat her, strangled her with a belt and dumped the body in a park nearby.

The 1994 slaying caused even more outrage when it was learned that Timmendequas had two prior sex crime convictions: for a 1981 attack on a 5-year-old he lured into woods, and for an attempted sexual assault the following year on a 7-year-old.

Megan's parents channeled their grief into a campaign for laws to notify a community when a sex offender moves in. New Jersey and most other states passed versions of "Megan's Law," and President Clinton signed a national version last year.

The jury of six men and six women deliberated a little more than 10 hours over two days. They determined that aggravating factors presented by the prosecution — that Timmendequas killed the girl as part of a kidnapping and rape and that he killed her to avoid detection — outweighed mitigating factors including the defendant's sordid childhood.

Defense attorney Roy Greenman had argued that Timmendequas should get life in prison because he was sexually and physically abused as a child and "didn't have a chance" for a normal childhood. Greenman also said Timmendequas expressed remorse for killing Megan.

Timmendequas' brother, Paul, testified via videotape that his father repeatedly sexually abused him and Jesse, and once raped a neighborhood girl in front of them. But a prosecution investigator said Paul told him he was drunk when he made the videotaped statement, and exaggerated the tale.

Prosecutor Kathryn Flicker acknowledged Timmendequas' childhood "was not a bed of roses." But she asked: "Where does individual responsibility fit into the whole scheme? He was responsible as an adult, as we all are."

On Wednesday, Timmendequas read a 30-second statement apologizing for the killing and pleading with the jury to spare his life.

"I ask you to let me live so I, someday, I can understand and have an understanding why something like this could happen," he said without emotion.

World leaders to gather at U.N. for Earth Summit

By Bob Dart
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Five years after coming together at the Earth Summit in Rio de Janeiro, world leaders will gather at the United Nations next week to continue efforts to preserve the planet's delicate environmental balance from the onslaught of economic development.

President Clinton will be among more than 50 national leaders at the special U.N. session dubbed Earth Summit Plus 5, which will review what has happened since the original conference and look at possible future steps.

Eileen Claussen, assistant secretary of state for oceans, environment and science, is a member of the U.S. team negotiating Earth Summit Plus 5 agreements. On Friday, she answered questions from Cox Newspapers Washington correspondent Bob Dart.

Q. Why does what happens at Earth Summit Plus 5 matter to a family in an Atlanta suburb or elsewhere across the country?

A. Because most big global issues that we are dealing with — whether it is sustainable management of forests or the issue of trade in highly toxic chemicals or climate change — are truly global issues. The United States can't solve these problems for its citizens on its own.

It doesn't matter where in the world greenhouse gases are emitted, they will affect the climate in the United States. If we don't have any forests left, we won't have any biodiversity. If we don't have any biodiversity, we don't have any sources for medicines or many other things because much of it comes from the natural world.

It is in every American's interests that we move forward in a positive way on these issue.

Q. Why has this second global environmental summit been convened?

A. At the first Earth Summit in Rio, the nations of the world put forward a very ambitious agenda, describing in some detail the kinds of actions that needed to be taken. This is a five-year mark to say 'What have we done?' and 'How have we done?' and 'Do we need to do things better?' So it is essentially a stock-taking meeting. And I think it is really significant that so many heads of state are coming to do a stock-taking on what happened in Rio.

Q. What has changed — good or bad — since the original Earth Summit?

A. We've made some progress in terms of negotiations of international agreements that we called for in Rio, which is a positive. But on the negative side, I think there's been very little real change on the ground. We've spent five years negotiating some more ... but we haven't spent very much time implementing what we negotiated. So I'm not sure you can see much real change.

Q. So is the world in better or worse shape?

A. There's not much difference. In some areas, we're clearly in worse shape than we were. In others, I think we've made at least limited progress.

Q. What are the successes?

A. Let me give you an example of one. In Rio, we called for development of a program of action to deal with land-based sources of ocean pollution — which is the major cause of ocean pollution. We met for a couple of years and developed a very strong program of action that almost all nations — more than 150 — agreed to. We've started to go beyond the negotiating and the agreement and a lot of individual governments are starting to ... implement it. ... You're starting to see some real progress.

Q. What are the interests and goals of the United States in next week's conference?

A. I think what's most important is that we reinvigorate the process. A lot of what we agreed to in Rio was probably too ambitious. That's one reason why we haven't been altogether successful. But if we are actually to meet those goals, we need a lot more energy and creativity and drive behind our activities. I certainly hope that what comes out of this session is strong statements by heads of government on what needs to be done. Not just individual statements, but a collective statement. That's what we're hoping for.

DENVER (AP) — After six years on the outside, Russia was initiated Friday as an equal partner at the summit of industrialized nations, completing an improbable journey from the era when the Soviet Union was the antagonistic target of summit policies.

President Clinton called it a "hopeful moment for the world," and praised Boris Yeltsin for his "vision and persistence" in pursuing democracy and reforms after seven decades of Communism.

"What you see here is a sweeping integration of Russia into the major decision-making institutions in the world in a way that is very positive for the rest of us," Clinton said. Leaders of eight summit nations were beginning a three-day summit with an opening banquet.

Clinton and Yeltsin met at the Brown Palace Hotel where a buzz broke out when sightseers saw the approach of Yeltsin's motorcade. The Russian president stepped from his limousine as the crowd began snapping photographs and chanting "Boris! Boris!"

Clinton's day was diverted by the announcement of a landmark tobacco regulation settlement. While saying tobacco companies had made concessions once unimaginable, Clinton declined to endorse the agreement, saying the administration would have to review it.

Meeting with Clinton at a downtown hotel, Yeltsin appeared fit and in good spirits, grabbing for Clinton's hand when photographers suggested a handshake. "Of course we want to be a full member" of the summit, Yeltsin said — winning swift assurances from Clinton.

Following private meetings among the leaders, the 23rd annual summit began with a courtyard reception at the colonial mansion of Gov. Roy Romer. After admiring French tapestries and 16th century carvings, the leaders were sitting down for a western dinner to talk about international developments — particularly the fragile Bosnian peace accords.

Yeltsin was invited to lead off the discussion with Clinton and leaders of Britain, France, Germany, Italy, Canada and Japan. Without Russia, the group had been known as G-7 but Clinton renamed its meeting "Summit of The Eight."

Yeltsin's inclusion was both a symbolic and substantive gesture of support for Russia's reforms and its desire to participate in international economic and political institutions.

It also gave a deep dose of international prestige to the Russian leader, who was almost written off as a political relic last year after a heart attack and widespread doubts about his leadership. With Russia joining the summit, Clinton said, "It's quite a hopeful moment for the world, I think, and I give him a lot of credit...

"This is the first time we've ever had a meeting where the Russians were here from the beginning to the end. It's a great tribute I think to President Yeltsin's leadership and to the commitment of the Russian people to democracy and reform."

Clinton and Yeltsin announced that Moscow had achieved a long-sought goal: Agreement in principle among finance aides to admit Russia to the Paris Club, a group of wealthy countries that negotiates debt terms with developing nations. Russia's inclusion will give it leverage to press for payment of loans from Cuba, Iraq, Iran and other debtor nations.

"I am very pleased with this," Clinton said.

Away from the summit, leaders took the opportunity to meet among themselves. After a session with Japanese Prime Minister Ryutaro Hashimoto, Yeltsin grinned and said, "I think we need to improve our personal contact and I'm glad you're of the same opinion. ... I'm distressed that our relations are not at the needed level.

Russia and Japan have had a long-running territorial dispute over the Russian-held Kuril islands. Hashimoto had said he would press for an early solution. But Yeltsin spokesman Sergei Yastrzhembsky said the two leaders did not specifically discuss the matter.

"We cannot expect to solve this problem today or tomorrow or in the near future," a Japanese Foreign Ministry official said after the talks.

Clinton met French President Jacques Chirac and Italian Prime Minister Romano Prodi — both unhappy with Clinton's insistence on limiting new membership in NATO to Poland, Hungary and the Czech Republic.

Chirac was pushing for to include Romania while Prodi is leading a campaign to include Slovenia.

At a picture-taking session with Clinton, Chirac expressed concern over the slowdown in Mideast peace-making. "I am, in fact, worried about the situation," he said.

German Chancellor Helmut Kohl brought a proposal for a World Environmental Organization, a new U.N. agency that would oversee international environmental agreements. The leaders also are to discuss common problems with terrorism, drugs, international crime and infectious diseases spreading around the globe.

Liberals wary of backing Disney

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton's communications director urged members of a liberal group to "go see a Disney movie" in defiance of the Southern Baptist Convention's boycott of Disney interests.

But Ann Lewis' comment Friday drew a mixed response from Americans for Democratic Action because some in the group say Disney exploits cheap labor overseas.

Lewis said later she did not know Clinton's opinion of the boycott. She concluded her speech on Clinton's second-term priorities by saying, "Remember, go see a Disney movie this weekend."

Clinton simply said "no" when asked Thursday whether he would abide by the boycott. The president is a Southern Baptist but has disagreed with the denomination's leadership on homosexual rights and abortion.

The Southern Baptist Convention voted Wednesday to boycott Disney and its subsidiaries to protest the company's gay-friendly workplace policies and marketing of films containing violence and sex. The vote is not binding on any church affiliated with the convention.

Lewis' brother, Rep. Barney Frank, D-Mass., is gay. Her comment on Disney came at a luncheon marking the 50th anniversary of an organization founded by prominent liberals, including Eleanor Roosevelt.

"I don't want to support Disney if Disney is involved in working conditions I find horrible," said Sue Rosenthal, a Philadelphia school teacher and ADA member for 46 years.

ADA president Jack Sheinkman said later he witnessed poor working conditions in Haiti for adults making Disney products and "we don't support exploitive labor."

Sheinkman is also a board member of the National Labor Committee, which has accused some U.S. retailers and manufacturers, including Disney, of selling products made under sweatshop conditions in low-wage countries.

Disney disputed the allegations when they were made last year and said it could find no evidence of minimum-wage violations in Haiti, where some of its clothing has been made. Under exchange rates at the time, Haiti's minimum wage was 28 cents an hour.

Lewis, who in addition to being White House communications director is a national vice president of the ADA, spoke about Clinton's anti-sweatshop efforts when she was questioned about her remark.

"We should all put pressure on these companies," she said. But there's "not much we can do to enforce what companies do overseas."

Lewis pitched Clinton's economic and social policies to a group that in the morning heard a different view from her brother.

Frank said Clinton's budget deal with Congress provides valuable help for children on education and health care but spends too much on the military, overemphasizes deficit relief and leaves struggling adults in the cold.

"He has nothing in his budget to relieve the pain and distress for these kids' parents," he said.

SAN ANTONIO — Like Southern Baptists, leaders of the Church of the Nazarene are hopping mad about what they see as immorality in movies, television shows and other media under the corporate umbrella of the Walt Disney Co.

But unlike their Baptist brethren, Nazarenes have stopped short of endorsing a boycott.

Instead, they plan to meet with Disney chairman Michael Eisner to urge a return to values that mirror their beliefs.

"While we are concerned and would condemn practices that are against our standard, we would like to negotiate some kind of return of their value system where our people could comfortably go to Disney events," said Jack Stone, general secretary of the Nazarenes.

Stone said the Disney empire used to be synonymous with family entertainment, but the direction the company and its subsidiaries has taken in the last five years "has just been explicitly immoral to us."

There are about 1.2 million Nazarenes throughout the world.

A meeting with Disney officials was to have occurred last week, but it was postponed, Stone said.

Some 40,000 members of the international Church of the Nazarene are in San Antonio for their 24th Quadrennial General Assembly at the Convention Center and Alamodome.

The topic of Disney and what Nazarenes feel are warped values promoted by the entire movie industry are expected to be discussed during business sessions next week, Stone said.

Nazarenes support the decision by Southern Baptists to stop buying Disney products, going to Disney theme parks or watching movies made by Disney studios or TV production companies, Stone said.

A call for a mass boycott by Nazarenes is not expected, although the letter to Eisner warned that members of the church have been urged "to diligently monitor Disney offerings and pro-actively respond accordingly in their entertainment and investment choices."

When such concerns were conveyed to Eisner, he requested a meeting with leaders of the denomination.

Documents show factories might have contributed to border birth defects

By Paulina Arriaga
Associated Press

BROWNSVILLE, Texas — Judy Guerrero remembers the ashes.

The grayish flakes of unknown matter rimmed the front door of her south Brownsville apartment, forming a welcome mat of soot.

She also remembers the smoke drifting north across the border from Matamoros, Mexico, a slow-moving cloud that ignored international boundaries.

It was August 1990. Mrs. Guerrero was pregnant with her first child, and she and her husband were thrilled.

Nine months later, the couple's daughter was born with a boil on her back and a spine that was not completely closed, a defect known as spina bifida.

"I thought they were going to tell me you had a girl, 7 pounds or whatever," Mrs. Guerrero recalls. "Instead, the doctor said she was going to be paralyzed from the waist down.

"I wanted an answer. I wanted somebody to tell me why, why did this happen."

Justine Guerrero was one of 33 children born with birth defects in 1990 and 1991 in Cameron County, a rate three times higher than the national average. Most were diagnosed with anencephaly, a fatal condition in which babies are born with undeveloped brains.

Scientists are searching for a cause of the mysterious outbreak. There are many theories, but no conclusive answers.

Nevertheless, Mrs. Guerrero says she knows who is at fault.

She blames the ashes and the smoke. And she blames the American owners of factories operating in Matamoros, which she contends released toxic chemicals into the air.

Documents in a lawsuit brought against the companies by the Guerreros and 27 other families may support those allegations.

The documents show that some of the plants, known as maquiladoras, used toxic chemicals at levels that were not allowed in the United States and violated less stringent Mexican environmental laws both prior to and during the birth defects outbreak.

Other companies deposited materials in open dumps just miles from the border, where trash is burned by scavengers, potentially releasing dangerous chemicals into the smoke that drifted back toward Texas.

The lawsuit named the U.S. owners of about 40 maquiladoras, including General Motors. But before the case went to trial in 1995, the companies settled for $17 million.

The companies never admitted wrongdoing, and many maintain they have always operated their Mexican factories in compliance with U.S. environmental laws,

Judy Guerrero sits on the floor of her McAllen home watching a video with her daughter Justine, 6, and son Nicky, 2, on Wednesday, June 4. Justine was born with a birth defect known as spina bifida. Scientists are searching for a cause of the mysterious outbreak which occurred in 1990-91 in Cameron County.

even though they aren't required to do so.

They say they settled the case to avoid a potentially more costly verdict based on emotion, not facts.

Randy Whittington, an attorney for the families, says the companies avoided trial for another reason: "They knew we were going to be able to prove they were environmental polluters who were violating the law."

Among the evidence plaintiffs' attorneys gathered are depositions from some company officials, who admitted their Mexican plants adhered to different environmental standards than their U.S. plants.

"In Mexico, we would never have been in compliance with the (U.S.) Clean Air Act," a senior environmental engineer for General Motors was quoted as saying in one deposition.

Lawsuit documents show that GM, which operates three plants in Matamoros, used dangerous chemicals there at levels that were not allowed at its U.S. plants.

One paint product consisted of 90 percent xylene, a chemical some studies have linked to birth defects.

A company memo noted the paint would not have been allowed at a GM plant in Dayton, Ohio, without a solvent recovery system. No such system was in place at the Matamoros plant.

GM's environmental engineer, in his deposition, said the Matamoros plant did not require a recovery system because the air was considered cleaner there than in Dayton. However, he said that assessment was based on the clean-air level in Cameron County, Texas, not Mexico.

GM spokesman Kyle Johnson denies any connection between emissions from maquiladoras and the birth defects. He notes that some mothers whose infants developed defects lived more than 10 miles from the border.

"There is no causal link between the maquiladora operations and the birth defects," he says. "The scientific evidence suggests that a primary cause of these types of birth defects is a lack of sufficient folic acid in the diet."

But plaintiffs' documents show other companies not only ignored U.S. environmental laws, but also violated less stringent Mexican standards.

Nashville-based Magnetek Inc. was ordered to close its Matamoros plant in May 1991 after Mexican environmental officials cited the company for hazardous waste and air pollution violations.

Officials discovered that since 1988, the plant had ignored a requirement that says materials imported from the United States must be returned to the United States for disposal.

Instead, Magnetek stored the waste on-site, either in an open pile outside the factory or in a warehouse, according to the deposition of Magnetek's former general manager of the Matamoros plant.

The official also stated that paper products such as packing materials and bathroom trash were deposited in the Matamoros city dump.

But Mexican officials in 1990 discovered the company also had dumped metal components and steel laminations still covered with hazardous materials.

Magnetek, which reopened after submitting an environmental plan, was cited at least four other times between May 1991 and May 1994 for environmental violations, according to lawsuit documents.

Magnetek spokesman Bob Murray says the company's environmental policy "is to meet or exceed host country standards and reporting requirements. Where the standards are not in place, we follow U.S. standards."

Murray says the environmental violations were due to errors in administrative paperwork, not bad practice.

Another plant, operated by South Carolina-based Kemet Electronics Corp., in 1988 was found to be emitting methylene chloride at levels 20 times higher than those allowed at the company's Georgia plant, according to a deposition by one Kemet official.

Methylene chloride causes cancer in lab animals.

Don Adams, managing director of Kemet's Matamoros operation, says that if the plant was discharging higher levels of methlyene chloride 10 years ago, it was because the plant had a higher volume of production.

"The exposure to anyone in the facility was not greater than anywhere else," he says.

Researchers have found no scientific evidence linking maquiladoras to the birth defects outbreak. However, they also aren't ruling out any possible causes, including factory pollution.

"It may be that this is one of those questions that we will never be able to answer," says Dr. Dennis Perrotta, chief of the bureau of epidemiology at the Texas Department of Health.

That provides little comfort to Mrs. Guerrero.

Today, her daughter is a vivacious 6-year-old who likes to color and play with her little brother. Mentally, she is fine. But physically, she never will be.

Braces bind Justine's legs from hip to foot. She can walk, but her knees buckle outward. She has no feeling in her feet and little control of her bladder, which forces her to wear pullup diapers.

Mrs. Guerrero worries that her daughter's condition may someday deteriorate, leaving her in a wheelchair or worse.

"Our suffering is forever," she says.

Birth defect rates along the border have dropped since the 1990-91 outbreak, although they remain higher than the national average.

The environmental situation in Matamoros also has improved. Some factories have switched to less-toxic materials and updated their emissions equipment. Others, like GM, have built wastewater treatment plants.

But problems remain.

On a recent trip to the Matamoros dump, paper products bearing the Kemet logo were spotted among miles of trash that still burns out in the open.

And the ashes and smoke still drift.

A&M suspends at least four on hazing charges

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — At least four Texas A&M students have been suspended and two pleaded no contest Friday to charges involving hazing on a precision rifle team.

Attorneys confirmed that Christopher Scott Monk, 19; Kyle Raymond Jud, 19; Michael Poskey, 19; and Dusty Hugh Boyd, 22; have been suspended.

The students were among nine upper class advisers to the Fish Drill Team, made up of freshmen, who were suspended from the Corps of Cadets in March pending the outcome of charges pursued by university officials.

They were charged in a 61-count indictment returned in May by a Brazos County grand jury.

Luis A. Torres and Grayson Alexander Hoffman, both 20, pleaded no contest to one count of assault and one count of hazing each on Friday, said Rod Anderson, first assistant county attorney.

Torres was fined $500 per count and ordered to serve two years of probation and 100 hours of community service.

Hoffman was fined $100 on each count and ordered to serve six months of probation and 40 hours of community service, Anderson said.

Hoffman's brother, Zachary Todd Hoffman, 18, also was scheduled to appear in court but waived arraignment as he was out of town.

A&M began informing the students of their punishments from the school on Thursday. Federal laws don't allow university officials to release the names of those involved in disciplinary hearings or reveal sanctions.

New Mexico exports unwanted puppies 2,000 miles to mutt-less Massachusetts

By Deborah Baker
Associated Press

ESPANOLA, N.M. — On a sunny spring morning the Espanola Animal Shelter is bursting at the seams.

Two squirming, squealing litters of five puppies each — one dumped at a landfill, the other in a front yard — have taken the last available cages.

The newest arrival, freshly bathed, de-ticked and wrapped in a towel, is being cradled by a staffer.

"I don't know what we're going to do with you, puppy," says shelter director Diana Wells with a sigh.

It's an all-too-familiar problem for which the northern New Mexico shelter has an unusual solution: flying puppies to a city 2,000 miles away for adoption.

The black, brown and blonde fur balls of indeterminate heritage will end up as prized family pets in an area north of Boston that has a shortage of newborn mutts.

Since the end of 1994, the Northeast Animal Shelter in Salem, Mass., has been flying in 8- to 14-week-old, mixed-breed puppies from shelters in New Mexico, Nebraska and Virginia.

"We're going to the airport sometimes as often as three times a week," says Cindi Shapiro, president of the Salem shelter and the program's founder.

About 1,500 of the 4,000 animals the shelter adopts out annually are part of what it calls the "Puppies Across America Rescue Program."

According to The Humane Society of the United States, the Salem shelter is the only one that imports puppies by air on such a massive scale.

Other shelters may occasionally put puppies on planes in emergencies, and a rescue group in Puerto Rico flies adult dogs to several U.S. shelters, including Salem. The other major puppy importer, the North Shore Animal League in Port Washington, N.Y., uses vans to bring puppies from Tennessee, Virginia and South Carolina.

In Massachusetts, aggressive spay-and-neuter programs, along with lifestyle changes — more condominium- and apartment-living, for example — have dramatically decreased the number of unwanted puppies left at shelters in the last decade.

"It's one of those things. You brush your teeth in the morning, you send your child to school, you get your dog spayed," Shapiro says.

Many families want mixed-breed dogs because they're healthier and more even-tempered — and less expensive — than their purebred counterparts.

And Shapiro says many families insist on having puppies, not older dogs.

It's not only sensible to import them, "it's morally irresponsible for us to be doing anything else, because we have the resources," Shapiro says.

The Salem shelter pays the costs of shipping — about $30 per puppy — and charges adoption fees of $100 to $125, which includes spaying or neutering. Shapiro says that by the time the shelter's other expenses are figured in, the program breaks even.

If the Espanola shelter didn't export the puppies, it would end up killing many of them.

Located on the outskirts of this city of 10,000 about 25 miles north of Santa Fe, the small, city-owned shelter draws from a huge, largely rural area. It takes in about 2,500 dogs a year; about one-third are adopted out, and nearly all the rest are destroyed.

"Pets are so disposable because there's such an overpopulation," Wells says.

She says low-cost spay-and-neuter clinics such as those offered at the Espanola shelter have made some inroads, and "we aren't seeing so many return litters from the same people."

And, like the other shelters that feed the Salem program, the Espanola operation tries to make sure mama is spayed — if she's known — before the puppies are exported.

Still, the problem remains enormous, and since June 1996, more than 200 Espanola puppies — in batches of a dozen or more — have caught Boston-bound midnight flights out of Albuquerque, about two hours to the south.

The puppies first spend at least two weeks in Espanola-area foster homes to ensure they're healthy.

However, the Humane Society of the United States, based in Washington, D.C., questions whether flying puppies cross-country simply shifts a problem from one area to another.

"My concern is ... is it a shell game to some extent," says Martha Armstrong, the organization's vice president for companion animals.

While there may be a shortage of mixed-breed puppies, Massachusetts shelters have plenty of slightly older dogs — 6 months and up — that might well be adopted if puppies weren't available, she says.

And she suggests such importation programs might reward irresponsible behavior by pet owners and remove incentive for local governments to enact — and enforce — tough animal control laws.

The Massachusetts shelter began its puppy import program with the Midwest Animal Shelter in Auburn, Neb., a town of about 3,500 in the state's southeast corner.

Gov. Bush signs budget measure into law

AUSTIN (AP) — A two-year state budget topping $86 billion to fund education, criminal justice, welfare and other government services over the next two fiscal years was signed into law Friday by Gov. George W. Bush.

The measure leaves $1 billion on the table for school property tax relief for Texas homeowners — assuming voters on Aug. 9 approve a proposed constitutional amendment to implement the cut.

"This is a responsible budget which includes the largest tax cut in our state's history, yet fully funds the basic needs of our growing state," said Bush, who had pushed for a more ambitious tax revamp that died in this year's legislative session.

Specific appropriations Bush struck from the measure weren't immediately released by his office.

The Republican governor was expected to use his line-item veto power to trim about $54 million from the budget sent to him by lawmakers. That would leave the two-year total at $86.18 billion.

The line-item vetoes will primarily eliminate appropriations for measures that either didn't pass the Legislature or that Bush won't allow to become law, according to the governor's office.

Sunday is the deadline for Bush to sign or veto bills. He planned to file the budget measure and his line-item vetoes with the secretary of state today.

Besides direct appropriations, the measure includes provisions that affect state spending but are not subject to line-item vetoes.

One high-profile provision will make Texas the first state where state government agencies can't invest in companies whose artists' songs promote violence or degrade women. Supporters said the provision was aimed at gangsta rap.

Under the provision, government agencies that make investments will have to sell such stock or risk losing state funding. The music industry has threatened a legal challenge of the provision.

Another provision restricts out-of-state travel by Texas Human Rights Commission employees and commissioners in the wake of state-paid trips to luxury locales.

The Associated Press reported the travel in January after a review of Human Rights Commission records for fiscal year 1996.

Many of the trips were made by Executive Director Bill Hale and others in connection with Hale's post as president of the International Association of Official Human Rights Agencies, a position he says has helped Texas.

Overall, the budget increases state spending by 6.5 percent for the two-year fiscal period beginning Sept. 1, according to the governor's office.

That compares with a projected growth rate of 11 percent in the state's economy.

The measure leaves nearly $450 million unspent and available for emergencies, Bush said. He signed the budget in San Angelo, home of Democratic House Appropriations Committee Chairman Rob Junell.

Under the budget, the state share of public school funding increases to nearly 49 percent, the highest level in more than a decade, Bush said. The measure provides $200 million for new school facilities, and includes money for Bush's push to help youngsters read on grade level by third grade.

The measure also includes a new higher-education funding formula designed in part to encourage professors, instead of less-experienced instructors, to teach undergraduate courses.

As forwarded to Bush, before taking into account his line-item vetoes, the budget includes an increase of $1.7 billion for public education through the high-school level. That includes state and federal money and amounts to an increase of 7.1 percent.

Higher education was given $806 million more, a 7.3 percent increase.

Among other areas, the Legislature's budget included an increase of $1 billion, or 4.2 percent, for health and human services; an additional $58 million for the judiciary, or 21.4 percent; $353 million more for public safety and criminal justice, or 5.3 percent; and $505.3 million, or 5.2 percent, for business and economic development.

The budget bill is HB1.

Bible is book most often stolen from secular, Christian stores

By Kelly Ettenborough
The Arizona Republic

PHOENIX — It was the week before Mother's Day. A shopper at Berean Christian Stores in Phoenix asked for help in choosing a Bible, apparently as a gift.

He picked up a nice leather one, then proceeded to wander the store for other shopping. Then he left.

Later, the Bible turned up missing, its empty box found stuffed among the T-shirts.

The Good Book — ripped off?

The Bible, long known as the world's best-selling book, has also earned the less-inspiring reputation as the one most often stolen from bookstores.

They also disappear from hotel and motel rooms, churches and libraries.

"Bibles do leave the store without being paid for, as hard as it is to believe," said Frankie Dagna of the Parable Group. "I would just feel like I would be struck by lightning.

"I just couldn't imagine doing that. What a world we live in!"

The Parable Group is a California-based organization of independent Christian bookstores.

Expensive leather Bibles can cost $100 or more. In addition to shoplifting, store managers said, people will switch pricetags on a Bible or put an expensive Bible in a cheaper one's box.

"If we check a Bible to make sure it's the right Bible in the box, people look at us like, 'Do you think we're going to steal it?'" said Jan Brehmer, manager of The Christian Emporium in Phoenix.

Unfortunately, the answer is yes.

"People are always surprised Bibles do get stolen."

At Central Christian Supply in Phoenix, a person bought a Bible by writing a check on a closed account. Another person had apparently shoplifted a Bible, then tried to sell it, still in its shrinkwrap, at a nearby McDonald's.

Spokesmen for major bookstore chains Borders, Barnes & Noble, Waldenbooks, Bookstar and B Dalton Bookseller — would not comment on losses. The American Booksellers Association in New York does not compile loss statistics, but agreed that the Bible is considered the most often stolen.

Bibles are likely targeted because they are higher-end merchandise that's easy to sell, said Donna Paz, owner of Paz & Associates, Bookstore Consultants, of Nashville.

"They're looking for things that are easily marketable with a wide demand, so why not target the Bible?" Paz said. "It's the most well-known book and has the greatest readership."

Larger bookstore chains have gate security systems at their doors; a microchip in the books triggers an alarm if it isn't deactivated. In January, The Parable Group has arranged a membership discount on such security systems.

Berean, the largest Christian bookstore in Arizona, keeps its more expensive Bibles on a higher shelf and in plainer view. Other bookstores keep the more expensive ones behind the counter.

When she came to work at Berean four years ago, Shirley DeTienne said, she found the prospect of someone stealing a Bible baffling. But now she's found Bibles may not even be safe at church.

Some customers come in to buy new Bibles to replace those stolen at church, DeTienne said.

"They're stealing from God."

Twice a year, members of The Gideons International check local hotel and motel rooms. They replace worn Bibles and always find a few missing, said W. W. Vardell of the international headquarters in Nashville.

In the Tempe area, an average of 10 percent of the Bibles typically must be replaced. But after Super Bowl XXX in January 1996, as many as 25 percent had to be replaced at some hotels, a local Gideons volunteer said.

"We would like for the Bible to stay there, but if someone feels the need to take it we're not going to strenuously object, because we feel like they might have a strong need for it," Vardell said.

"It isn't so bad if you figure people will read the Bible," Brehmer said. "I've heard people in testimonies say they were saved by Bibles they had stolen."

Still, most — like Bill Hughes of Berean — doubt that Bible thieves take the opportunity to study God's admonition, "Thou shalt not steal."

"I'd have trouble reading it, personally, if I had stolen it," he said.

Bush signs bill to increase under-21 drinking penalties

AUSTIN (AP) — Teen-agers will be punished if they even try to drink alcohol under a new law signed by Gov. George W. Bush Friday.

The law, touted as a zero-tolerance measure by lawmakers, raises the penalties for young people under 21 caught trying to buy, in possession of or driving under the influence of alcohol.

Sen. Royce West, D-Dallas and sponsor of the bill, said the law's message shouldn't be mistaken.

"You drink, you drive, you lose," he said.

West said the stiffer penalties will save lives and attract to Texas millions of dollars in federal highway transportation funds.

Under the law:

■ It's illegal for people under 21 to drive with any amount of alcohol in their blood system.

■ Underage drinkers who drive would lose their driver's licenses for 60 days on the first offense, 120 days on the second offense and for six months on the third and subsequent offenses.

■ They also will face criminal charges punishable by up to 40 hours of community service and $500 in fines for the first offense and up to six months in jail and a $2,000 fine for third and subsequent offenses.

Under current law, drivers under 21 can [illegible] alcohol content up to .07. Older drivers are considered intoxicated at .10.

There also would be new punishments, including driver's license suspensions, for selling alcohol to someone who is under age and for purchasing alcohol for someone under 21.

Congress has mandated that states adopt zero tolerance laws by Oct. 1, 1998, or face the loss of $38.5 million in federal highway funding over the next two years.

The zero tolerance bill is SB35.

Sports software

Kids ages 8 through 12 can work with reading comprehension, spelling and vocabulary skills while managing a major-league baseball team.

Major League Reading (Windows, Macintosh; about $30) from Sanctuary Woods Multimedia is part of the company's Head Coach family of sports-based educational software titles. The teams and play statistics are licensed from Major League Baseball. The program contains more than 1,500 articles on big-league players; it also has more than 750 articles on World Series games or All-Star players.

Kids can compete against each other or against the computer. There are four levels of difficulty, and an option to choose either four-, seven-or nine-inning games. In addition, there's an option for playing a best-of-five World Series, with each game lasting at least nine innings.

During the game, kids pick the type of pitch when playing on the field. At bat, the child selects whether the swing should be for a base hit, extra bases or home run. The decisions affect the difficulty of questions, and the play is shown on a "Jumbotron scoreboard" in the outfield.

The glossary feature allows children or parents to enter spelling or vocabulary words, which will then appear during the game. There's also an arcade-like game that allows kids to see if they can improve their team's ability by doing well during the 60-second tryout.

Additional questions can be added by purchasing Power Packs from Sanctuary Woods. Major League Reading is available from retailers or direct from the company: 800-943-3664. The company's Web site: www.ah-hah.com.

Stationary

Just because you run a small business doesn't mean you can't have professional-looking business materials. Coupled with designer stationery from an office supply store and a color ink-jet printer, business cards and brochures can look like the company's bottom line is in the seven-figure range.

ProVenture Custom Business Stationery (Windows; about $35) provides coordinated business letterhead, cards and envelopes in one package.

It has a built-in address book, allowing new employees to have business cards and other materials available their first day on the job.

Company logos can be added to materials. The program has more than 5,000 logos and clip-art pieces, and supports 15 file formats commonly used by scanners or graphic programs.

Users can resize and crop images, or make adjustments to brightness and contrast.

To place addresses and names on all materials, simply type the information once into a form. The program fills in the blanks in the cards, letterheads and envelopes.

The program can use color ink-jet printers to print full-color, pre-designed backgrounds on plain paper. Or it can use color printers or black-only laser printers to produce finished materials from PaperDirect and BeaverPrints.

ProVenture is a brand of MySoftware Co. The software requires at least 8 megabytes of RAM and 12 megabytes of disk space. The company's Web page: www.mysoftware.com.

Build yourself a virtual storefront

By Julia Angwin
N.Y. Times News Service

So, you want to build a company Web site? You're not alone. Small businesses are thriving in cyberspace.

The majority of Web site domain names are registered to small or home-based businesses, according to Network Solutions in Herndon, Va.

The boom is prompted in part by the fact that building a Web site is easier than ever.

You used to have to hire a programmer or learn HTML — the language used to build Web pages.

These days, you can build a Web site yourself, without knowing a lick of computer code, using software programs designed for nontechnical users.

"It's not really necessary to get into HTML to do really cool pages," said Rafe Needleman, editor of www.cnet.com which reviews Internet software.

Here's a glance at some of the most popular software programs that let novice users build sophisticated sites. All were reviewed on a computer running Windows '95,

New technology offers protection for Internet kids

By Alan M. Wolf
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The computer industry is developing technology to better protect children on the Internet, industry experts told federal regulators today, adding that current tools are far from foolproof.

Software designed to keep children away from objectionable material has gained popularity with parents and Internet users, although it is not always effective, several experts told a Federal Trade Commission panel.

"Nothing is going to prevent a determined child from going to a web site," said Susan Getgood, a spokeswoman with Microsystems Software Inc., which makes Cyber Patrol.

The FTC concluded a four-day hearing into online privacy issues today by examining children's privacy online. The agency expects to use testimony from the workshop to make a series of recommendations for Congress, which is considering online privacy legislation.

One commissioner cautioned that the FTC will use the information collected over the last four days only to make recommendations. The agency can enforce its "deceptive and fraudulent" regulations to protect consumers, but is limited in the area of privacy, said FTC commissioner Roscoe B. Starek.

The FTC commissioners did not offer any timetable for when they would present advice to Congress, but Starek did say that the agency would continue to accept comments. Other federal officials seemed to suggest that at least some governmental action may be necessary, particularly in the area of children's privacy.

"We need some sort of framework to focus all of this wonderful technological advances we've heard about today," said Leslie Byrne, the director of the U.S. Office of Consumer Affairs.

Jodie Bernstein, the director of the Bureau of Consumer Protection, offered her own conclusions at the close of the workshop: "There is a consensus that some protections for children are needed."

To fully safeguard children's privacy online, the industry and U.S. government must educate the "lost generation" —parents — Gordon Ross, CEO of Net Nanny International Inc., told the FTC.

"We're all coming out with new products," Ross said. "We can develop technology and make it more sophisticated, but how do we educate the consumer? We have to make the software simple and easy to use."

Digital certificates, fingerprinting and identification will one day allow parents to easily control their child's access to the Internet, Ross added. Net Nanny is working on a product that identifies an individual by matching typing rhythm — the speed and pattern a person types on a computer keyboard.

The technology, some of which is now available but not yet used extensively, will become the "driver's licenses of the information superhighway," Michael Baum of VeriSign Inc., told the FTC panel.

Blocking software such as Net Nanny, Cyber Patrol and GTE Corp.'s CyberTrust has been touted as an alternative to censorship. By allowing parents to screen what children access on the Internet, adults can have the choice to view whatever they want, privacy groups contend.

Future Goof: Technology not focused on robots

By Marilyn Geewax
N.Y. Times News Service

A generation ago, when science fiction writers would envision the future, they'd see a world filled with robots, ray guns and rocket ships. Influenced by their stories, I used to imagine that by the turn of the century, I'd be flying around with a jet-pack strapped to my back and a deadly ray gun holstered to my thigh.

My childhood fantasies about the future ran into reality last week at Comdex, the gigantic computer trade show at the Georgia World Congress Center. More than 100,000 people came to show off and learn about the latest high-tech gadgets.

As it turns out, most midcentury writers didn't have a clue about what technology was coming. With the notable exception of the creators of the TV cartoon family of George Jetson, sci-fi writers were fixated on weapons and rockets. Meanwhile, the real futurists were building communications devices to allow humans to share information.

I supposed that at age 10, I would have been more interested in reading about robots roaming the Earth with ray-beam eyes than in computers. I realize that the authors did have to sell their books. Still, it's amazing how far off they were about the future.

Today, we have lots of robots, but rather than prowling the planet, they are standing on assembly lines doing repetitive work with great precision. And we do have weapons that use laser beams, and rockets that roar into outer space.

But these things don't have much impact on our daily activities. The gadgets transforming our lives involve communications. We are using computers, pagers, cell phones, faxes and other devices to improve our ability to connect with each other. Overwhelmingly, the devices featured at Comdex were designed to help people communicate.

Dear Amy: Why is the Internet so popular? How do you make a Web page, anyway? —Devin Arnold, MD
Dear Devin: It's popular because it has something for everyone, especially schools and kids. The WWW is easy to use and it has pictures, sounds, interactive games and movies. You can get information on everything for your homework right from your computer. For a lot of links about making your own World Wide Web page, check out this TrackStar page at http://scrtec.org/track/tracks/s00057.html To get started, choose the frames version. It will guide you through all the things you need to think about. The URLs are listed so you can visit them without TrackStar, too.

Dear Amy: My friend and I both use Netscape and she keeps asking me for URL's I've found. Is there a way to copy my bookmarks for her? —Anita Birmingham, AL
Dear Anita: When you are running Netscape, open the Bookmarks window under the Windows menu. From the Bookmarks window, just drag the Bookmarks to a floppy disk for your friend to have. Now she has to drag them from the floppy disk to the bookmarks window on her computer. BUILD: You can create a site without knowing computer code but the programs are also available for Macintoshes.

■ Adobe PageMill 2.0 for Windows. Adobe's product costs about $100 and provides a simple, no fuss approach to building Web sites.

Unlike some of its competitors, PageMill is easy to install and won't take up too much disk space on your computer.

But it's not going to hold your hand, either. When you launch the program, it takes you straight into a blank Web page where you can place objects and text. There are no templates or wizards to guide you through the process.

However, PageMill has a good help function and a useful box called the Inspector that sits on the side and lets you choose the color, shape and style of each object.

PageMill also includes a handful of clip art for gussying up your Web page — although it takes a little experimentation to figure out that the file called 0s05002.jpg contains a picture of a piggy bank.

But the program has got a great way to build frames, which are mini Web pages that can be used to build a larger Web page.

PageMill lets you build a frame with a single mouse click. The process is much more complex with other programs.

More advanced users who want to override the program can do so by tinkering with the HTML code. Other nifty features: a spell checker and a chart that shows how long your page would take to download at different modem speeds.

My only complaint is that PageMill doesn't let you preview your work in a real Web browser to make sure it appears the way you want it to on the Web. Instead, you can only preview your site in a mini-browser on your screen.

■ Claris Home Page 2.0 for Windows. Although it's still an Apple subsidiary, Claris makes a passable $100 program for Microsoft Windows.

This bare-bones program has most of the Web-building essentials. It has fewer buttons on the tool bar than PageMill, but it compensates with a more extensive help function.

And you can preview what you've created right inside the built-in Web browser. It also has a spell checker, an easy-to-use HTML editor, and a library of clip art and sample Web pages.

But it's also got a lot of clunky parts.

For example, it will show how long your Web page will take to download — but only at 14.4 and 28.8 modem speeds, not faster ones.

And it's hard to build frames, because you have to make a separate file for each one.

Home Page is a serviceable product — but I think can you get more for your money with Adobe PageMill.

■ Microsoft FrontPage '97. Selling for about $140, this program costs a bit more than the competition but provides a lot more features.

The only problem is that this software program is a control freak — you have to do things its way or not at all.

Installing the program is horrific. Halfway through the installation, it shuts down your computer and it has a tendency to cause crashes.

Once the program is installed, it gobbles up all sorts of disk space by installing an image composer, a personal Web server, Internet Explorer (Microsoft's Web browser) and other functions.

The purpose of all this stuff is to make the Web building process as easy as possible. And it is easy — if you follow the rules.

The program uses so-called wizards to guide you. All you have to do is enter in your company name, mission statement, etc. and it will do the rest.

But then you're stuck with Microsoft's design ideas — which are unitspiring to say the least. It's hard to sneak a little personality onto the page.

The program also provides a confusing view of a Web site. It breaks the site into a number of components that you build separately. But when you're working on the components, each appears to be its own separate Web page.

However, there are some advantages to FrontPage.

It has all sorts of advanced functions for running corporate intranets and connecting to databases. It also works well with other Microsoft Office documents — allowing you to simply drag and drop a Word document into your Web page.

But for my money, I'd rather have freedom.

■ NetObjects Fusion 2.0 for Windows. This program costs about $300, but it's worth it for people who want the power of Microsoft Front Page with more design flexibility.

Be warned, though. It takes up an enormous amount of space on your computer — up to 80 megabytes, four times as much as Adobe PageMill.

But once it's loaded, Fusion is a terrific way to build a Web site. You start by visualizing the site like a family tree — with each page branching to other pages on the site.

Then you can zero in on each page's design. The controls are reminiscent of desktop publishing programs like Adobe PageMaker or Quark Express.

You can place objects, move them around, stretch and compress them with the tool bar on the side of the screen.

It also comes with dozens of funky design ideas — from a corporate medical site with images of doctors to a psychedelic red and purple swirl called Lava Lamp.

Frames are easy to create, and Fusion even color codes them to make sure you don't mistake them for the rest of the page. For Web wonks, it also lets you build your own frames in HTML.

However, you can't edit the HTML directly in Fusion — which infuriates Web design purists. And Fusion lacks some features — such as the ability to check how long your page will take to download.

But for those of us who would rather leave HTML to the experts, Fusion is a great program that makes snazzy Web pages.

Site Maintenance

When it comes to updating and maintaining your site, you'll find a large difference between these four programs.

Adobe PageMill and Claris Home Page wont' provide much help for running a site. You'll either need a person on staff who can do it, or buy a separate program like Adobe SiteMill.

NetObjects Fusion and Microsoft Front Page include more extensive site-running capabilities.

China's computer buying spree raises U.S. fears of enhanced nuclear weapons

By Jeff Gerth
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Since President Clinton deregulated the export of computers in 1995, China has gone on a shopping spree, buying 46 American-made supercomputers and many more that are nearly as powerful, according to government officials.

The newly acquired computers could be used by the Chinese to design more efficient or lighter nuclear warheads that could be put on missiles capable of reaching the United States, American intelligence officials and nuclear experts said.

Several officials said they have suspicions — but no direct evidence — that China is using the powerful computers for this purpose.

Clinton administration officials who defend the 1995 policy said they believe that the civilian purchasers in China are making sure the equipment is not diverted to military uses.

Gary Samore, the senior director for nonproliferation and export control at the National Security Council, said: "We don't have any information that these computers are being used by the Chinese for military purposes, including nuclear weapons."

At the same time, Samore said, there were no formal military or intelligence investigations of that question. The government's knowledge, he said, was drawn largely from the computer companies.

There are disagreements among American officials about the importance of the Chinese purchases of supercomputers. But Gary Milhollin, a nuclear expert in the private sector, said of the 46 supercomputers: "For the first time these give China access to a larger number of computers in this range, and that's a big jump for the Chinese."

The supercomputers sold to China would allow the country to significantly improve its nuclear weapons by processing huge amounts of data from very small underground nuclear weapons tests. These tests are currently banned by international treaty but the high-performance computers would allow the Chinese to conduct weapons tests with explosions so small that they would be undetectable by outsiders, said American government officials who requested anonymity.

Under the 1995 policy, most supercomputers sold for civilian purposes do not need to be licensed for export by the federal government. Exporters consequently cannot be required to track how they are used.

The disclosure earlier this year that American companies had sold supercomputers to two Russian nuclear facilities prompted Congress to ask for an accounting of how many had been sold to other countries.

At the time, the Republican chairman and the ranking Democrat on the House National Security Committee asked the president to "refrain from further" deregulation of supercomputer exports and to reassess the national security risks of allowing exporters to decide who may buy supercomputers.

"We think many of the supercomputers sold to China are being integrated into the military weapons development area in a way that is going to make their weapons more sophisticated and lethal and this could jeopardize our own national security interests," said Sen. Thad Cochran, R-Miss., chairman of a Senate subcommittee overseeing the issue.

Clinton administration officials said on Monday they were satisfied with deregulation. They argued that it would be nearly impossible for the United States to effectively prevent the Chinese from obtaining these computers from other sources. The Commerce Department has been investigating last year's sale by Silicon Graphics of a supercomputer that performs almost 6 billion operations per second, operating at 10 times the speed of the fastest personal computer, to a Chinese science academy. The company says the buyer is a benign civilian institution, but according to nuclear experts, the academy has other functions, including helping China develop long range missiles. The Justice Department is also investigating another Silicon Graphics supercomputer sale in 1996, to a Russian research institute that also serves as a nuclear weapons laboratory, the officials also said.

"One reason I ran for president was to tailor export controls to the realities of a post-Cold War world," Clinton wrote in a September 1993 letter to Edward McCracken, the chief executive officer of Silicon Graphics.

In his 1992 campaign, Clinton received important political support from executives of high-technology companies, including McCracken.

Shortly after the president's 1993 letter, the administration took its first steps toward decontrol. In October 1995, Clinton announced that he would relax export controls on all but the most powerful supercomputers to help American companies compete abroad, saying the system would "adjust to the global spread of technology while preserving our vital national security interests."

The undersecretary of commerce for export administration, William Reinsch, said the department was investigating some cases of unlicensed export of supercomputers to China and Russia, which could uncover more information about how the computers are being used. But he insisted the relaxation of controls was a realistic solution since rapid changes in the flexibility and availability of computer technology make it easy for purchasers to circumvent controls.

"Where do you draw the line to be absolutely certain that no one in China has a supercomputer? The only way is to insist on validated licenses on all computers and then deny them," Reinsch said.

Another obstacle was thrown up when diplomatic and intelligence officials, wanting to protect their sources, refused to allow the Commerce Department to publish a list of buyers suspected of nuclear activity, according to Reinsch. Then earlier this year, 16 months after the White House promised that the Commerce Department would keep manufacturers informed of nuclear proliferation risks, the department publicly disclosed one name of a suspected nuclear facility — an Israeli university.

Reinsch says more names will be disclosed soon, a move industry officials say they favor.

Robert Rarog, a spokesman for Digital Equipment Corp., which has sold supercomputers to China, said his company feels the deregulation "basically works" but that "the government has to step up to the plate" and disclose questionable buyers "to level the playing field for U.S. companies" who compete with foreign manufacturers that may be less diligent.

In early 1996, government nuclear experts asked the Commerce Department to provide supercomputer manufacturers with a list of sensitive nuclear sites in Russia and China to prevent misuse of their technology, but the administration turned down the request, according to Milhollin, the director of the Wisconsin Project on Nuclear Arms Control. A Department of Energy spokesman confirmed Milhollin's account.

In an interview, Milhollin compared the relaxation of export controls to the 1980s deregulation of the savings and loan industry.

"The decision to decontrol supercomputers, without adequate safeguards was the equivalent to the deregulation of the savings and loans — the industry benefited but the public welfare and security was sacrificed."

What will 'Net become? Shopping center or mass media clone

By Bill Husted
N.Y. Times News Service

When radio was invented, the technologists of the day were sure they knew how it would be used. Radio would become a two-way communications service that let people conduct business and chat wirelessly.

That, of course, eventually happened. But there was also a new use for radio, one that no one expected. It became a way of broadcasting, a one-way medium where the listener did not talk back. Instead, it became an invisible pipeline that delivered concerts, baseball games and mindless chatter from late-night talk shows.

There are a lot of folks who think that they understand the Internet and what it will become. The heaviest bets are that it will gradually turn into an important electronic shopping center, letting you browse the shops of the world and order from your keyboard. You'll buy chocolates from Belgium, toys from Germany and the latest in fashion from Paris.

Odds are those people are correct, in the same way that the early experts were right that radio would become a two-way communications service. But there is an even better chance that the real innovators will be folks without a bunch of fancy degrees; people who don't know HTML from TCP/IP and — even better — don't care.

The real inventors of the Internet are reading this column. They are the people, ordinary people, who are now using it for the first time. No one can tell them what the Internet is, and if someone did they wouldn't care. There's a good chance that they will turn the Internet into something the experts wouldn't recognize.

I don't know any better than the experts what that might be. If I had to guess, I'd bet it will follow the same scenario as commercial radio and television. That, eventually, it will become very much like radio and TV.

If I'm right, that means that you won't always pay for the Internet. Instead, it will be subsidized — just as is commercial TV and radio — by folks who are eager for you to tune in. The first signs of that commercial subsidy are already here in the form of free e-mail services and Web sites that offer free home pages.

There's good and bad in that, just as there is in the case of radio and television. The good is that almost everyone who wants access to the Internet will have it. After all, you can find radios and television sets in the most humble of homes. And, if everyone has it, that means that poor kids will have the same access to electronic encyclopedias and the libraries of the world as the rich.

But the bad is pretty obvious, too. When radio and television became true mass media, that meant that the content broadcast on them experienced a great leveling. I don't want to sound like an egghead, but when popular tastes set the standards, you can expect to see the cyber equivalents of the mindlessness of commercial radio and television.

The most frightening thought that I have, when it comes to the Internet, is that we are now in its golden age. If you remember or have heard of the golden age of television, you know that was a time when the programming was heavily weighted toward fine dramas, intelligent comedies and witty talk shows. Those were the earliest days of TV.

We are now in the earliest days of the Internet as a mass media.

There's only one comforting thought when I think of what that means.

I, like the rest of the so-called experts, am probably wrong.

Money on 'Net: College financial aid a mouse click away

BLOOMBERG (NYT) — Elisa Rudd was elated when she got her acceptance letter to Florida State University's graduate program in career counseling.

Then reality set in — to the tune of $33,824 for two years.

"I'm trying to get as much financial aid as possible," the 28-year-old Florida native said. "I'd prefer not to be in debt when I graduate."

Rudd isn't alone. With college tuition rising at twice the rate of inflation, students and parents are looking for any leg up on expenses that can run as much as $31,515 a year at elite schools like California's Stanford University.

Many are turning to the Internet. About a million use the global computer network in their quest for a sliver of the $1 billion to $2 billion a year in private scholarship aid, said Mark Kantrowitz, creator of FinAid. The site, one of several cropping up on the World Wide Web, is sponsored by the National Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators.

"That's the money everyone's scrambling for," said Mark Rothschild, scholarship director of FastWeb, another free Web site that matches student profiles with information on more than 180,000 aid awards.

For Rudd, who majored in psychology as an undergraduate at LaGrange College in Georgia, the profiling was important. She filled out an online application with FastWeb, listing writing and cultural arts as hobbies.

In return, she got information on a dozen scholarships for which she qualified — including the Southern Scholarship Foundation awards and the graduate scholarship program sponsored by the National Association of Junior Auxiliaries.

"Using the Internet made it really convenient," she said. "I didn't have to go through the physical effort of going to the library and sorting through a lot of books."

She also didn't have to pay the $1,000 fee typical of many private scholarship search firms. Online search companies make their money from advertisers, corporate or university sponsorship, or selling their subscriber lists or products like college guides.

FastWeb's listings run the gamut from the Asian American Journalism Association and Howard Scripps Foundation to news about the Westinghouse Science Talent Search and essay contests sponsored by the U.S. Institute of Peace. Information is updated daily and more than 20,000 people log on each day, FastWeb said.

"Any scholarship search is only as good as the size of the database, how often it's updated, and how well the matching technology suits one's background," said FastWeb President Bob Michelson.

With about three-quarters of all scholarships based on criteria besides financial need, it also can help to have diverse, specialized or even quirky interests.

"The winners in this game are parents and kids committed to looking for opportunities," FastWeb's Rothschild said.

Bats Conservation International gives grants to graduate students researching the furry flying mammals. The American Concrete Institute hands out money for specialties in engineering or architecture using cement products. The National Quilters Association wants to help enhance quilt-making skills, while Whirly-Girls scholarships go to women studying helicopter flight.

"No sponsor's going to give you money for just breathing," Kantrowitz said. Yet many will fork over funds for diverse, if obscure, requirements or hobbies if you just apply, he said.

That's giving Brandon Kane hope.

The 17-year-old is setting his sights on a prestigious engineering school, University of California at Berkeley or Cal Tech, or his dream choice, Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

All three lie half a continent away from his 2,000-person hometown of Hoxie, Kansas, where Kane's one in a class of four dozen juniors at the local high school.

ROBOTS: Authors were way off on future

the rich. Teenagers routinely wear beepers so their parents can contact them quickly. Many mothers wouldn't think of leaving the house without a cell phone, just in case the car breaks down or one of the kids has an emergency. Brothers who rarely talk on the phone now use e-mail to chat frequently.

A recent Atlanta Journal-Constitution poll found that in metro Atlanta, about two out of three households have personal computers. And most computer owners use a modem to connect with other users. The number of households with ray guns remains statistically insignificant.

To the degree that midcentury futurists did consider the development of communications devices, they tended to envision tools for government spying. Big Brother was going to have an electronic eye hidden behind every mirror.

But while the government has yet to implant a transmitter in my brain or a camera in my potted plants, companies are making great advances in the use of communication devices. Last week, at a Delta Air Lines ticket office, I was profoundly impressed by one of these new tools — an electronic kiosk for booking flights.

I assumed the screen on the kiosk would list flight schedules and then give me a bunch of confusing commands for typing in an order. To my astonishment, a friendly face suddenly appeared on the video screen. A ticket agent smiled and said she could see me through a camera in the kiosk. And so we talked.

Amazing. I told her what I needed and she booked the flights. She asked me to swipe my credit card through a slot. I was issued an electronic ticket, which means I don't have to worry about losing a paper ticket. When I get to the airport next month, I'll just flash my driver's license to get a boarding pass.

I may not have a jet-pack on my back, but flying is getting easier because of new communications technology. The future has not turned out the way I expected, but that's OK; my cell phone fits into my purse better than a ray gun anyway.

RELIGION IN BRIEF

Singer to minister

Johnson sang several years for Jimmy Swaggart as a soloist on the crusade team.

His own television program has aired in Dallas and Houston, Greenville, S.C., and Monroe, La. He has produced seven gospel albums.

The church's pastor, the Rev. Sammy Hayes, invites the public to attend.

Summer changes

Summer has brought changes to the Samaritan Counseling Center of West Texas Inc.

An additional building features a state-of-the-art play therapy treatment center and more offices for counselors, according to a release from the center.

Terry Albright, M.Ed., LPC, RNC, has transferred to Midland from Samaritan Center for Counseling and Pastoral care in Austin. She has dealt with clients with eating disorders, catastrophic and chronic illnesses, women's issues, especially relating to pregnancy and complications, as well as parenting, adolescent and martial counseling.

Planning for the third annual "Family of the Year" banquet is underway, and nominations are currently being sought for healthy family role models from each of three cities where Samaritan has a satellite office: Midland, Odessa and Big Spring.

The center is approaching its 25th year of service to Permian Basin residents. For more information call 563-4144.

Churches expect their role in AIDS prevention to grow

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — AIDS hits poor and minority communities hardest in the United States, and clergymen say the role of churches in preventing the disease will grow as a result.

About 175 ministers and social workers gathered recently to discuss ways to fight prejudice against those infected with HIV and to expand services such as hospice care.

"The heart of communities of color, especially for blacks and Hispanics, is the church," said Dr. Elaine Daniels of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. "There's a tremendous need for education and for their involvement."

While AIDS first took off in the U.S. among gay, white men, the disease is now spreading fastest among blacks and Hispanics, explained Ms. Daniels, associate director for science at the Office of HIV/AIDS Policy.

Unlike early AIDS victims, who were often financially secure and politically connected, some of these new patients — many of them drug addicts — have little power or influence, experts said.

"I think it's going to be even harder to get (white, middle-class churches) to respond in the future," said the Rev. Anthony Campolo, associate pastor at Mount Carmel Baptist Church in West Philadelphia.

Getting mainstream churches involved with AIDS patients has been enough of a challenge as it is, Campolo said. Congregations that were quick to help those with cancer or other terminal illnesses often shunned people infected with HIV, he said.

"The church has not fulfilled its calling," Campolo said.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Saturday, June 21, 1997:

This year, you discover you are more tuned into a partners' needs and choice of directions. You will enjoy greater closeness and care than in previous years. A financial investment becomes likely by 1998. Consider going back to school or doing some traveling then as well. This will be an eye-opening experience for you. If you are single, because of strong desires you are likely to create a deep, important relationship. If attached, the bonding between you and your significant other becomes a lot deeper. You might plan a special trip. CAPRICORN plays devil's advocate.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★ You feel tense, and note a change in the atmosphere. Emphasize domestic matters for the next month, though now you might be obsessing about work. No one can be more demanding of you than you are. Ease up, and enjoy your life. Tonight: Free up your time.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★★ Make an effort to reach out for those who are uncommunicative. You don't have to, but sometimes that kind of graciousness can make all the difference. Plan a day trip for a loved one. A different setting helps both of you relax. Tonight: Don't feel like you have to stay up.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★ Money matters take a major priority for the next month. You have been careless with spending. It looks like bills have piled up! Plan a firmer budget, and ask for an associate's assistance; then you will be on a roll. Let another treat. Tonight: A friend lets you down.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★★ The spotlight is on you. Others have a clear expectation of what they want from you. Consider limitations you place on yourself. Let go of them! Popularity is high, and you enjoy the demand for your presence. Tonight: Get on the party circuit.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★ You need to think more before you act. The month before your birthday was a period of reflection. Dig into a project, and relax as you complete extra work. By concentrating on something specific, you rest and recharge simultaneously. Tonight: Easy does it.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★★ Emphasize relationships, both close and friendly. Add more simple joys to your life. Let your inner child out more often. Others appreciate the kid in you. Choose to do things that are only fun, and ask a loved one to join in. Tonight: Be your mischievous self.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★ Tension is high. Over the next few weeks, you will feel a stronger need to excel in what you do. However, today you can spend time with family members, who appreciate your time. Don't push another away; be open to his vulnerability. Tonight: Order in!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★★★ Consider going back to school or traveling. Today is a great day to start discussing these desires. Conversations are animated as you catch up on news. Make plans to stroll through a favorite area. Tonight: Share a little gossip!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★ Handle funds now. You question yourself about what you offer and what you need. This is a time of giving and sharing on multiple levels. Be careful about going overboard. A loved one could get jealous! Tonight: Indulge another.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)

Steven Seagal declared a lama and sacred vessel of Tibetan Buddhism

SAN FRANCISCO — And you thought he was a mere movie star.

Steven Seagal has been declared a reincarnated lama and a "tulku" — a sacred vessel of Tibetan Buddhism.

Penor Rinpoche, the Supreme Head of the Nyingma School of Tibetan Buddhism, named Seagal a tulku and a "terton" — someone with the abilities to perceive the root teachings of Tibetan Buddhism — in Feburary in a ceremony at the Namdroling Monastery in India.

Rinpoche's representative in the United States, Khenpo Tsewang Gyatso, called Seagal's spiritual elevation a great honor.

"Seagal had his own vision of having some deeper knowledge in the dharma," Gyatso said.

Steven Seagal declared sacred to Buddhism.

Some American Buddhists are wondering whether the declaration was made because of Seagal's donations to Rinpoche's school of Buddhism.

Michelle Bega, publicist for the star of "Hard to Kill" and "Under Siege," said Seagal was given the title on his own merits.

NEW YORK — Forget for a moment all the talk of her impending nuptials. The other news about Barbra Streisand is that she's looking to expand her empire into television.

The diva is in talks with syndicators King World about a deal to let her develop television programs, according to published reports.

Streisand, who is engaged to actor James Brolin, has already produced three movies and has bought the rights to the "Carolyn McCarthy Story," about the woman who was elected to Congress on an anti-gun platform after her husband was killed in the Long Island Rail Road massacre.

King World sells its programming directly to local television stations. It syndicates Oprah Winfrey's top-rated talk show and is developing a new daytime program for Roseanne.

LOS ANGELES — Jurors won't be taking a field trip to see Aaron Spelling's place.

Los Angeles Superior Court Judge Dzintra Janavs ruled Thursday that it would be an unjustifiable expense to take a jury to the TV producer's mansion in Holmby Hills.

Her ruling came during pretrial motions is Spelling's $5 million lawsuit against R.W. LaMar Construction and Steg Manufacturing Co., which did work on the 45-room home in the late 1980s.

Aaron Spelling is suing a construction company for its work.

The suit claims the defendants raised two beams by about 5 feet, causing a near-level roof slope that won't let water run off, leading to leaks and other damage.

The defendants say the architects ordered the change.

NEW YORK — Take those old records off the shelf: Tom Cruise, who boogied in his BVDs in "Risky Business," is working on a film about that old-time rock 'n' roll.

The movie star is developing a biographical film about music producer Phil Spector, the legend behind the Ronettes and the Righteous Brothers, among others, Entertainment Weekly magazine reports in its latest issue.

He has talked to his "Jerry Maguire" director, Cameron Crowe, as well as the reclusive Spector about it. Crowe has written many articles about popular music for Rolling Stone.

Meanwhile, Cuba Gooding Jr., who won supporting-actor Oscar for his work in "Jerry Maguire," is negotiating to star in "Blaze of Glory," the story of soul man Otis Redding.

Biopics also are in the works about '60s music icons Jimi Hendrix and Janis Joplin.

"A lot of filmmakers are in their 30s and 40s," says "Blaze of Glory" producer Ben Myron. "So there's a nostalgia factor. They're interested in the topics that influenced their lives."

DAVENPORT, Iowa — Lady Bird Johnson apparently figured that no trip to Iowa would be complete unless she saw corn.

The former first lady, traveling the Mississippi River on a luxury steamboat, took advantage of a break in the trip to see the sights on land — which around here means farm fields.

"She simply wanted to go for a ride in the country. She was interested in Midwest agriculture, especially corn," said Secret Service agent Jack Fox.

Mrs. Johnson's take on the heartland: "It's absolutely beautiful."

Focolare Movement founder preaches 'love one another'

By David Briggs
Associated Press

HYDE PARK, N.Y. — Drive down the Circle of Love, take a left at the Crossroads of Joy and you will run right into Holy Spirit Square at the center of Mariapolis Luminosa — where a Catholic religious community tries to live the Gospel command to love one's neighbor as oneself.

Waiting for a visitor in a simple house in this "spiritual little city" in upstate New York is Chiara Lubich, the diminutive 77-year-old founder of the Focolare Movement.

Begun in a bomb shelter in northern Italy during World War II, the Focolare Movement now embraces some 2 million adherents in more than 180 nations throughout the world.

Yet its founder and the movement itself remain relatively little known. There were no banks of television cameras or large crowds of reporters following Lubich around during her recent trip to the United States, which included visits to the United Nations and a Harlem mosque.

In a church where the hierarchy often takes center stage, her work is based on building the church from below, enlisting laypeople to take seriously Jesus' command in the Gospel of John: "Love one another as I have loved you. No one has greater love than this, to lay down one's life for one's friends."

> 'Unity is the 'charism' — that is the gift of God — that underlies all that has come to life under the name Focolare Movement.'
> — Chiara Lubich, founder

And that commandment includes Lutherans, Buddhists, Jews, Muslims and others desiring to live in harmony with one another.

"Unity is the 'charism' — that is the gift of God — that underlies all that has come to life under the name Focolare Movement," Lubich said during a visit to Malcolm Shabazz Mosque in Harlem.

There at the mosque formerly led by Malcolm X, she pledged to Imam Warith Deen Muhammad, son of the late Muslim leader Elijah Muhammad, that she would be willing to lay down her life for him.

Those were the same words she exchanged 44 years ago with a group of young women enduring heavy bombing in Trent, in Northern Italy.

The Focolare Movement began with Lubich and some of her friends reading the Gospels in the bomb shelter, and then trying to put the words into practice.

Whether it was reassuring a child or making the dangerously slow passage to the shelters with an elderly woman, Lubich said, "Every neighbor we met was helped as if it were ourselves."

From that small group other followers came, and over the next few decades it would spread to nearly 200 nations. Communities of men would be formed alongside communities of women. Although it was a lay movement, bishops and priests also would embrace the movement's philosophy.

Focolare remains a Catholic movement, but people of other Christian denominations and other faiths stand with the "focolarini" in attempting to bring about peace through mutual love.

In addition to the communities such as the one in Hyde Park, where they try to model the early Christian communities in sharing both goods and affection, the movement is involved in some 700 social projects throughout the world.

There are a lot of reasons to be discouraged in a century of two world wars and massive acts of inhumanity, Lubich said in an interview.

There are 27 wars going on now, and there is always the risk of new acts of terrorism, she said.

But she also sees signs of hope. The continued existence of the United Nations, political moves toward unity in Europe and, in the religious field, organizations such as the World Conference of Churches and the World Conference on Religion and Peace stand as testimony to an ongoing desire for peace.

But she said religious leaders cannot do it alone. Back in the Council of Florence in the 15th century, church leaders were able to reach agreement on reunion with the Greek Orthodox Church. The union fell apart shortly afterward, partly for political reasons but also in part because the people were not ready.

In her movement, Lubich said, she is trying to prepare the people to live together in mutual love so union reached by church leaders will be accepted by people in the pews.

It may be humanity has reached a special moment in history, she said.

"One of the signs of our times," she said, "is this movement [illegible]nity in spite of everything [illegible]ing."

Astros ink top pick

HOUSTON — Rice first baseman Lance Berkman, who led the NCAA in homers and RBIs this season, signed a minor-league contract with the Houston Astros on Friday for a $1 million signing bonus.

Berkman, the 16th pick of the first round of June's amateur draft, was voted player of the year by the National Collegiate Baseball Writers Association. The 21-year-old switch-hitter batted .438 this season with 41 homers, 134 RBIs and 109 runs.

"Lance clearly has a chance to be an impact player in the major leagues," Houston general manager Gerry Hunsicker said. "Not since the signing of Glenn Davis in 1980 has this organization signed a player with this much offensive potential."

Berkman will report to the Astros' Rookie League team at Kissimmee, Fla., on July 1.

"I'm ecstatic," Berkman said. "The Astros were very generous and we had a very smooth negotiation. Right now I'm just ready to get back to work playing."

SEC tops NCAA

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — The Southeastern Conference, winners of eight national championships in 1996-97, placed first Friday in a survey of conferences.

The survey, which takes into account only the 20 sports contested by SEC-member schools, is patterned after USA Today and the Sears Trophy recognition for individual schools in national competition.

This year's survey was compiled by Bo Carter, Director of the Service Bureau at the Big 12 Conference.

Points were compiled from NCAA team standings in championship events and the Associated Press football poll. The Collegiate Baseball Poll was used to determine the 9-20 places in baseball after the final eight teams competed in the College World Series.

The SEC, which received 929.375 points, beat the Pac-10 by 93 points. The Big 12 was third with 529.625 points, followed by the Big Ten with 443.375 points and the Atlantic Coast Conference with 344.875.

The SEC placed first among the nine men's sports, scoring 434 points to the Pac-10's 341. In the SEC's 11 women's sports, the Pac-10 was first with 495.375 points to the SEC's 453.375.

Diablos come out on top in latest fireworks show

By Stewart Doreen
Sports Writer

There should be a bunch of El Paso Diablos kicking and screaming when the bus leaves Midland. After all, they have had a pretty good time here.

Friday in the series' finale between El Paso and the Midland Angels, the Diablos made their farewell to Christensen a fond one with a 14-8 drumming of the Angels to tie the series at three games apiece.

In the process, El Paso hit double digits in the run column for the third straight night, making Christensen their unofficial home away from home.

"This park is a hitter's ballpark," Diablos' outfielder Mike Rennhack said. "When the wind blows straight out, it doesn't matter where you hit it."

Rennhack led the hit parade with monster night. The 22-year-old switch hitter hit a three-run home run in the first to stretch El Paso's advantage to 5-0, and then with the score 8-3 in the seventh, Rennhack lashed out with the final blow, another three-run bomb.

Before the night was over, Rennhack added a tripl, finishing with three runs scored, six RBIs and a 3-for-5 performance. Not bad for a guy riding a 0-for-30 streak a few days ago. Although he doesn't put too much importance on the streak, he is glad to get out of it.

"It is just a stat. I was screwing myself mentally," Rennhack said. "I was looking for that one spurt that would get me out. I saw the ball

Agassi's withdrawal from Wimbledon further deadens rivalry with Sampras

By Stephen Wilson
AP Sports Writer

WIMBLEDON, England — Remember when Pete Sampras and Andre Agassi used to slug it out in Grand Slam finals? Remember the Nike commercials where they dueled on a makeshift court in the streets of San Francisco?

Two years ago, Sampras vs. Agassi was hyped as the best thing in tennis since the days of Borg vs. McEnroe and McEnroe vs. Connors.

But what was supposed to be THE rivalry of the '90s died quickly. And with it, so has much of the interest in the game.

What happened? Basically Sampras held up his end of the deal, and Agassi didn't.

Sampras is still the world's top-ranked player and he heads into Wimbledon next week as the favorite to win his fourth title in five years.

"When I played Andre quite a bit a couple of years ago, he made me a better player," Sampras said.

Agassi, meanwhile, hasn't won a Grand Slam title in 2 1/2 years and has plummeted to No. 29 in the ATP Tour rankings. On Friday, he pulled out of Wimbledon, citing a recurring wrist injury.

At a time when tennis is hurting from a shortage of superstars, Sampras says he misses seeing Agassi across the net.

"One thing tennis needs now is a rivalry," he said. "You don't have a rivalry now that can sell the game. Andre and I had it a couple of years ago and that helped the game."

Agassi has played only 12 matches this year, winning six and losing six. Since reaching the semifinals at San Jose in February, he has lost five of his last seven matches.

Agassi hasn't played since losing to Magnus Norman in the second round of the Atlanta clay court tournament in April. He reportedly injured his right wrist at Atlanta, but there is also speculation that he has lost interest in the game — especially since getting married to Brooke Shields in April.

"I haven't talked to Andre in quite a while," Sampras said. "I don't know what's going on with him."

Many people in tennis consider Agassi one of the game's greatest underachievers. He has won three Grand Slam titles, including Wimbledon in 1992, but much more was expected from a player with his talent.

With his exciting game and rock star persona, Agassi stood out from the rest of the pack.

"His absence hurts the game," Sampras said. "He is one of the more popular players and he brings a lot of attention to the game. And the game

UTEP appeals NCAA's ruling for probation

■ El Paso university considers five-year sanctions too harsh, sends 100-page response.

Associated Press

EL PASO — Texas-El Paso has responded to NCAA sanctions with a 100-page appeal that argues the penalties imposed against the university were too harsh.

The NCAA announced May 1 that it was putting UTEP on probation for five years because of a lack of institutional control and what were characterized as minor but rampant transgressions of NCAA regulations in the football, men's and women's basketball and other programs.

The NCAA found UTEP used ineligible players, incorrectly certified ineligible players and exceeded the permissible number of football scholarships, among other violations.

"We're basing the appeal on what we've said all along. We don't believe that the penalties fit the violations," said athletic director John Thompson.

Thompson also said the university objects to the NCAA's finding that UTEP lacked control over its sports programs.

"In our interpretation of rules and understanding of them would lead to the conclusion that there was institutional control," he said. "Of course, that's a matter of opinion."

Once the NCAA receives the appeal, it will have 30 days to issue a response and UTEP will have 15 days to file a rebuttal.

After that, the school will have the option of arguing its position before the NCAA Infractions Appeals Committee, which UTEP is predisposed to do.

"I think we're trying to give the appeals committee an impression that we're in need of relief," said Mike Gentile, UTEP's compliance director.

UTEP will also stress that adjustments have been made, including the hiring of compliance staff, to ensure the same problems don't occur again.

"It's something that may not have been developed as well the first time," Gentile said. "But it's something we're very proud of."

Celts, 76ers make three-player trade

By John F. Bonfatti
AP Sports Writer

PHILADELPHIA — The Boston Celtics shipped Dino Radja to Philadelphia for Clarence Weatherspoon and Michael Cage on Friday, marking the first player moves by the new regimes with both teams.

Radja and Cage are both center-forwards, while Weatherspoon has played both small and power forward in his five years with the 76ers.

"Now we have another big guy who can play more than one position," new 76ers coach Larry Brown said. "It gives us more of an option."

Boston coach Rick Pitino said the trade gives him roster flexibility because Weatherspoon has one year left on his contract and the Celtics can buy out the second year of Cage's deal.

Ryan's advice pays off for Johnson

By Denne H. Freeman
AP Sports Writer

ARLINGTON — A frustrated Randy Johnson went to Nolan Ryan for some pitching tips in August 1992.

At the time, Johnson was struggling with a 44-46 record for the Seattle Mariners.

Ryan told Johnson he needed to cut down on his walks, develop a dependable second pitch beyond his 100 mph fastball and learn to win on nights when he didn't have his best stuff.

"I told Randy he could be the most dominating pitcher in baseball if he would just work on his game," Ryan said at the time. "He was a lot like me when I was younger. He was just pitching and not doing a lot of thinking."

Since getting the advice from baseball's all-time strikeout leader, Johnson has a 71-19 record with a 2.90 ERA. He also has become deadly against the Texas Rangers, a team the retired Ryan used to pitch for and now works as a consultant.

■ Mariners edge Rangers/2C

Depending mostly on his slider on a hot 88-degree night in which he didn't have his usual crackling fastball, Johnson allowed only four hits in seven innings, struck out six and walked one in a 2-1 victory over the Rangers Thursday night.

It was Johnson's seventh consecutive win and gave him an 11-1 record for the year. He has allowed one earned run in the last 44 innings.

Johnson admitted that the weather "zapped me." He also said, "I'm not a robot out there."

"The heat was draining and my arm and back were tired," Johnson said. "That was about my B-minus stuff."

Johnson, now 12-3 for his career against Texas, also beat the Rangers 5-0 in May. Texas can't handle his stuff even in the B-minus category.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★ Money matters take a major priority for the next month. You have been careless with spending. It looks like bills have piled up! Plan a firmer budget, and ask for an associate's assistance; then you will be on a roll. Let another treat. Tonight: A friend lets you down.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★★ The spotlight is on you. Others have a clear expectation of what they want from you. Consider limitations you place on yourself. Let go of them! Popularity is high, and you enjoy the demand for your presence. Tonight: Get on the party circuit.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★ You need to think more before you act. The month before your birthday was a period of reflection. Dig into a project, and relax as you complete extra work. By concentrating on something specific, you rest and recharge simultaneously. Tonight: Easy does it.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★★ Emphasize relationships, both close and friendly. Add more simple joys to your life. Let your inner child out more often. Others appreciate the kid in you. Choose to do things that are only fun, and ask a loved one to join in. Tonight: Be your mischievous self.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★★★ Consider going back to school or traveling. Today is a great day to start discussing these desires. Conversations are animated as you catch up on news. Make plans to stroll through a favorite area. Tonight: Share a little gossip!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★ Handle funds now. You question yourself about what you offer and what you need. This is a time of giving and sharing on multiple levels. Be careful about going overboard. A loved one could get jealous! Tonight: Indulge another.

★★★ Taking a back seat feels right and allows you to open up to another. You also will want to reconsider a work-related decision. You don't have to push as hard to make a point. Sometimes by saying less, you say more. Be a listener, not a talker. Tonight: A little mystery works wonders.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★★ Going for what you want involves groups of friends. Find a better direction. How you feel about another comes out. Don't limit possibilities. This is a time of openings and greater creativity. Have fun wherever you are. Tonight: Crash a summer shindig!

Steven Seagal declared a lama and sacred vessel of Tibetan Buddhism

SAN FRANCISCO — And you thought he was a mere movie star.

Steven Seagal has been declared a reincarnated lama and a "tulku" — a sacred vessel of Tibetan Buddhism.

Penor Rinpoche, the Supreme Head of the Nyingma School of Tibetan Buddhism, named Seagal a tulku and a "terton" — someone with the abilities to perceive the root teachings of Tibetan Buddhism — in Feburary in a ceremony at the Namdroling Monastery in India.

Steven Seagal declared sacred to Buddhism.

Rinpoche's representative in the United States, Khenpo Tsewang Gyatso, called Seagal's spiritual elevation a great honor.

"Seagal had his own vision of having some deeper knowledge in the dharma," Gyatso said.

Some American Buddhists are wondering whether the declaration was made because of Seagal's donations to Rinpoche's school of Buddhism.

Michelle Bega, publicist for the star of "Hard to Kill" and "Under Siege," said Seagal was given the title on his own merits.

NEW YORK — Forget for a moment all the talk of her impending nuptials. The other news about Barbra Streisand is that she's looking to expand her empire into television.

The diva is in talks with syndicators King World about a deal to let her develop television programs, according to published reports.

Streisand, who is engaged to actor James Brolin, has already produced three movies and has bought the rights to the "Carolyn McCarthy Story," about the woman who was elected to Congress on an anti-gun platform after her husband was killed in the Long Island Rail Road massacre.

King World sells its programming directly to local television stations. It syndicates Oprah Winfrey's top-rated talk show and is developing a new daytime program for Roseanne.

LOS ANGELES — Jurors won't be taking a field trip to see Aaron Spelling's place.

Los Angeles Superior Court Judge Dzintra Janavs ruled Thursday that it would be an unjustifiable expense to take a jury to the TV producer's mansion in Holmby Hills.

Her ruling came during pretrial motions is Spelling's $5 million lawsuit against R.W. LaMar Construction and Steg Manufacturing Co., which did work on the 45-room home in the late 1980s.

Aaron Spelling is suing a construction company for its work.

The suit claims the defendants raised two beams by about 5 feet, causing a near-level roof slope that won't let water run off, leading to leaks and other damage.

The defendants say the architects ordered the change.

NEW YORK — Take those old records off the shelf: Tom Cruise, who boogied in his BVDs in "Risky Business," is working on a film about that old-time rock 'n' roll.

The movie star is developing a biographical film about music producer Phil Spector, the legend behind the Ronettes and the Righteous Brothers, among others, Entertainment Weekly magazine reports in its latest issue.

He has talked to his "Jerry Maguire" director, Cameron Crowe, as well as the reclusive Spector about it. Crowe has written many articles about popular music for Rolling Stone.

Meanwhile, Cuba Gooding Jr., who won supporting-actor Oscar for his work in "Jerry Maguire," is negotiating to star in "Blaze of Glory," the story of soul man Otis Redding.

Biopics also are in the works about '60s music icons Jimi Hendrix and Janis Joplin.

"A lot of filmmakers are in their 30s and 40s," says "Blaze of Glory" producer Ben Myron. "So there's a nostalgia factor. They're interested in the topics that influenced their lives."

DAVENPORT, Iowa — Lady Bird Johnson apparently figured that no trip to Iowa would be complete unless she saw corn.

The former first lady, traveling the Mississippi River on a luxury steamboat, took advantage of a break in the trip to see the sights on land — which around here means farm fields.

"She simply wanted to go for a ride in the country. She was interested in Midwest agriculture, especially corn," said Secret Service agent Jack Fox.

Mrs. Johnson's take on the heartland: "It's absolutely beautiful."

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Saturday, June 21, 1997:

This year, you discover you are more tuned into a partners' needs and choice of directions. You will enjoy greater closeness and care than in previous years. A financial investment becomes likely by 1998. Consider going back to school or doing some traveling then as well. This will be an eye-opening experience for you. If you are single, because of strong desires you are likely to create a deep, important relationship. If attached, the bonding between you and your significant other becomes a lot deeper. You might plan a special trip. CAPRICORN plays devil's advocate.

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★ You feel tense, and note a change in the atmosphere. Emphasize domestic matters for the next month, though now you might be obsessing about work. No one can be more demanding of you than you are. Ease up, and enjoy your life. Tonight: Free up your time.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★★ Make an effort to reach out for those who are uncommunicative. You don't have to, but sometimes that kind of graciousness can make all the difference. Plan a day trip for a loved one. A different setting helps both of you relax. Tonight: Don't feel like you have to stay up.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★ Money matters take a major priority for the next month. You have been careless with spending. It looks like bills have piled up! Plan a firmer budget, and ask for an associate's assistance; then you will be on a roll. Let another treat. Tonight: A friend lets you down.

CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★★ The spotlight is on you. Others have a clear expectation of what they want from you. Consider limitations you place on yourself. Let go of them! Popularity is high, and you enjoy the demand for your presence. Tonight: Get on the party circuit.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★ You need to think more before you act. The month before your birthday was a period of reflection. Dig into a project, and relax as you complete extra work. By concentrating on something specific, you rest and recharge simultaneously. Tonight: Easy does it.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★★ Emphasize relationships, both close and friendly. Add more simple joys to your life. Let your inner child out more often. Others appreciate the kid in you. Choose to do things that are only fun, and ask a loved one to join in. Tonight: Be your mischievous self.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★ Tension is high. Over the next few weeks, you will feel a stronger need to excel in what you do. However, today you can spend time with family members, who appreciate your time. Don't push another away; be open to his vulnerability. Tonight: Order in!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★★★ Consider going back to school or traveling. Today is a great day to start discussing these desires. Conversations are animated as you catch up on news. Make plans to stroll through a favorite area. Tonight: Share a little gossip!

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★ Handle funds now. You question yourself about what you offer and what you need. This is a time of giving and sharing on multiple levels. Be careful about going overboard. A loved one could get jealous! Tonight: Indulge another.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★★ Popularity is high. Decide which way to go with a loved one or key relationship. Think through a decision with care. Get into the moment, and enjoy being in the limelight. Make a point of visiting with friends. Tonight: Just ask.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★ Taking a back seat feels right and allows you to open up to another. You also will want to reconsider a work-related decision. You don't have to push as hard to make a point. Sometimes by saying less, you say more. Be a listener, not a talker. Tonight: A little mystery works wonders.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★★ Going for what you want involves groups of friends. Find a better direction. How you feel about another comes out. Don't limit possibilities. This is a time of openings and greater creativity. Have fun wherever you are. Tonight: Crash a summer shindig!

Steven Seagal declared a lama and sacred vessel of Tibetan Buddhism

SAN FRANCISCO — And you thought he was a mere movie star.

Steven Seagal has been declared a reincarnated lama and a "tulku" — a sacred vessel of Tibetan Buddhism.

Penor Rinpoche, the Supreme Head of the Nyingma School of Tibetan Buddhism, named Seagal a tulku and a "terton" — someone with the abilities to perceive the root teachings of Tibetan Buddhism — in Feburary in a ceremony at the Namdroling Monastery in India.

Steven Seagal declared sacred to Buddhism.

Rinpoche's representative in the United States, Khenpo Tsewang Gyatso, called Seagal's spiritual elevation a great honor.

"Seagal had his own vision of having some deeper knowledge in the dharma," Gyatso said.

Some American Buddhists are wondering whether the declaration was made because of Seagal's donations to Rinpoche's school of Buddhism.

Michelle Bega, publicist for the star of "Hard to Kill" and "Under Siege," said Seagal was given the title on his own merits.

NEW YORK — Forget for a moment all the talk of her impending nuptials. The other news about Barbra Streisand is that she's looking to expand her empire into television.

The diva is in talks with syndicators King World about a deal to let her develop television programs, according to published reports.

Streisand, who is engaged to actor James Brolin, has already produced three movies and has bought the rights to the "Carolyn McCarthy Story," about the woman who was elected to Congress on an anti-gun platform after her husband was killed in the Long Island Rail Road massacre.

King World sells its programming directly to local television stations. It syndicates Oprah Winfrey's top-rated talk show and is developing a new daytime program for Roseanne.

LOS ANGELES — Jurors won't be taking a field trip to see Aaron Spelling's place.

Los Angeles Superior Court Judge Dzintra Janavs ruled Thursday that it would be an unjustifiable expense to take a jury to the TV producer's mansion in Holmby Hills.

Her ruling came during pretrial motions is Spelling's $5 million lawsuit against R.W. LaMar Construction and Steg Manufacturing Co., which did work on the 45-room home in the late 1980s.

Aaron Spelling is suing a construction company for its work.

The suit claims the defendants raised two beams by about 5 feet, causing a near-level roof slope that won't let water run off, leading to leaks and other damage.

The defendants say the architects ordered the change.

NEW YORK — Take those old records off the shelf: Tom Cruise, who boogied in his BVDs in "Risky Business," is working on a film about that old-time rock 'n' roll.

The movie star is developing a biographical film about music producer Phil Spector, the legend behind the Ronettes and the Righteous Brothers, among others, Entertainment Weekly magazine reports in its latest issue.

He has talked to his "Jerry Maguire" director, Cameron Crowe, as well as the reclusive Spector about it. Crowe has written many articles about popular music for Rolling Stone.

Meanwhile, Cuba Gooding Jr., who won supporting-actor Oscar for his work in "Jerry Maguire," is negotiating to star in "Blaze of Glory," the story of soul man Otis Redding.

Biopics also are in the works about '60s music icons Jimi Hendrix and Janis Joplin.

"A lot of filmmakers are in their 30s and 40s," says "Blaze of Glory" producer Ben Myron. "So there's a nostalgia factor. They're interested in the topics that influenced their lives."

DAVENPORT, Iowa — Lady Bird Johnson apparently figured that no trip to Iowa would be complete unless she saw corn.

The former first lady, traveling the Mississippi River on a luxury steamboat, took advantage of a break in the trip to see the sights on land — which around here means farm fields.

"She simply wanted to go for a ride in the country. She was interested in Midwest agriculture, especially corn," said Secret Service agent Jack Fox.

Mrs. Johnson's take on the heartland: "It's absolutely beautiful."

Focolare Movement founder preaches 'love one another'

By David Briggs
Associated Press

HYDE PARK, N.Y. — Drive down the Circle of Love, take a left at the Crossroads of Joy and you will run right into Holy Spirit Square at the center of Mariapolis Luminosa — where a Catholic religious community tries to live the Gospel command to love one's neighbor as oneself.

Waiting for a visitor in a simple house in this "spiritual little city" in upstate New York is Chiara Lubich, the diminutive 77-year-old founder of the Focolare Movement.

Begun in a bomb shelter in northern Italy during World War II, the Focolare Movement now embraces some 2 million adherents in more than 180 nations throughout the world.

Yet its founder and the movement itself remain relatively little known. There were no banks of television cameras or large crowds of reporters following Lubich around during her recent trip to the United States, which included visits to the United Nations and a Harlem mosque.

In a church where the hierarchy often takes center stage, her work is based on building the church from below, enlisting laypeople to take seriously Jesus' command in the Gospel of John: "Love one another as I have loved you. No one has greater love than this, to lay down one's life for one's friends."

> 'Unity is the 'charism' — that is the gift of God — that underlies all that has come to life under the name Focolare Movement.'
> — Chiara Lubich, founder

And that commandment includes Lutherans, Buddhists, Jews, Muslims and others desiring to live in harmony with one another.

"Unity is the 'charism' — that is the gift of God — that underlies all that has come to life under the name Focolare Movement," Lubich said during a visit to Malcolm Shabazz Mosque in Harlem.

There at the mosque formerly led by Malcolm X, she pledged to Imam Warith Deen Muhammad, son of the late Muslim leader Elijah Muhammad, that she would be willing to lay down her life for him.

Those were the same words she exchanged 44 years ago with a group of young women enduring heavy bombing in Trent, in Northern Italy.

The Focolare Movement began with Lubich and some of her friends reading the Gospels in the bomb shelter, and then trying to put the words into practice.

Whether it was reassuring a child or making the dangerously slow passage to the shelters with an elderly woman, Lubich said, "Every neighbor we met was helped as if it were ourselves."

From that small group other followers came, and over the next few decades it would spread to nearly 200 nations. Communities of men would be formed alongside communities of women. Although it was a lay movement, bishops and priests also would embrace the movement's philosophy.

Focolare remains a Catholic movement, but people of other Christian denominations and other faiths stand with the "focolarini" in attempting to bring about peace through mutual love.

In addition to the communities such as the one in Hyde Park, where they try to model the early Christian communities in sharing both goods and affection, the movement is involved in some 700 social projects throughout the world.

There are a lot of reasons to be discouraged in a century of two world wars and massive acts of inhumanity, Lubich said in an interview.

There are 27 wars going on now, and there is always the risk of new acts of terrorism, she said.

But she also sees signs of hope. The continued existence of the United Nations, political moves toward unity in Europe and, in the religious field, organizations such as the World Conference of Churches and the World Conference on Religion and Peace stand as testimony to an ongoing desire for peace.

But she said religious leaders cannot do it alone. Back in the Council of Florence in the 15th century, church leaders were able to reach agreement on reunion with the Greek Orthodox Church. The union fell apart shortly afterward, partly for political reasons but also in part because the people were not ready.

In her movement, Lubich said, she is trying to prepare the people to live together in mutual love so union reached by church leaders will be accepted by people in the pews.

It may be humanity has reached a special moment in history, she said.

"One of the signs of our times," she said, "is this movement toward unity in spite of everything that is happening."

Astros ink top pick

HOUSTON — Rice first baseman Lance Berkman, who led the NCAA in homers and RBIs this season, signed a minor-league contract with the Houston Astros on Friday for a $1 million signing bonus.

Berkman, the 16th pick of the first round of June's amateur draft, was voted player of the year by the National Collegiate Baseball Writers Association. The 21-year-old switch-hitter batted .438 this season with 41 homers, 134 RBIs and 109 runs.

"Lance clearly has a chance to be an impact player in the major leagues," Houston general manager Gerry Hunsicker said. "Not since the signing of Glenn Davis in 1980 has this organization signed a player with this much offensive potential."

Berkman will report to the Astros' Rookie League team at Kissimmee, Fla., on July 1.

"I'm ecstatic," Berkman said. "The Astros were very generous and we had a very smooth negotiation. Right now I'm just ready to get back to work playing."

SEC tops NCAA

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. — The Southeastern Conference, winners of eight national championships in 1996-97, placed first Friday in a survey of conferences.

The survey, which takes into account only the 20 sports contested by SEC-member schools, is patterned after USA Today and the Sears Trophy recognition for individual schools in national competition.

This year's survey was compiled by Bo Carter, Director of the Service Bureau at the Big 12 Conference.

Points were compiled from NCAA team standings in championship events and the Associated Press football poll. The Collegiate Baseball Poll was used to determine the 9-20 places in baseball after the final eight teams competed in the College World Series.

The SEC, which received 929.375 points, beat the Pac-10 by 93 points. The Big 12 was third with 529.625 points, followed by the Big Ten with 443.375 points and the Atlantic Coast Conference with 344.875.

The SEC placed first among the nine men's sports, scoring 434 points to the Pac-10's 341. In the SEC's 11 women's sports, the Pac-10 was first with 495.375 points to the SEC's 453.375.

Diablos come out on top in latest fireworks show

By Stewart Doreen
Sports Writer

There should be a bunch of El Paso Diablos kicking and screaming when the bus leaves Midland. After all, they have had a pretty good time here.

Friday in the series' finale between El Paso and the Midland Angels, the Diablos made their farewell to Christensen a fond one with a 14-8 drumming of the Angels to tie the series at three games apiece.

In the process, El Paso hit double digits in the run column for the third straight night, making Christensen their unofficial home away from home.

"This park is a hitter's ballpark," Diablos' outfielder Mike Rennhack said. "When the wind blows straight out, it doesn't matter where you hit it."

Rennhack led the hit parade with monster night. The 22-year-old switch hitter hit a three-run home run in the first to stretch El Paso's advantage to 5-0, and then with the score 8-3 in the seventh, Rennhack lashed out with the final blow, another three-run bomb.

Before the night was over, Rennhack added a tripl, finishing with three runs scored, six RBIs and a 3-for-5 performance. Not bad for a guy riding a 0-for-30 streak a few days ago. Although he doesn't put too much importance on the streak, he is glad to get out of it.

"It is just a stat. I was screwing myself mentally," Rennhack said. "I was looking for that one spurt that would get me out. I saw the ball

Agassi's withdrawal from Wimbledon further deadens rivalry with Sampras

By Stephen Wilson
AP Sports Writer

WIMBLEDON, England — Remember when Pete Sampras and Andre Agassi used to slug it out in Grand Slam finals? Remember the Nike commercials where they dueled on a makeshift court in the streets of San Francisco?

Two years ago, Sampras vs. Agassi was hyped as the best thing in tennis since the days of Borg vs. McEnroe and McEnroe vs. Connors.

But what was supposed to be THE rivalry of the '90s died quickly. And with it, so has much of the interest in the game.

What happened? Basically Sampras held up his end of the deal, and Agassi didn't.

Sampras is still the world's top-ranked player and he heads into Wimbledon next week as the favorite to win his fourth title in five years.

"When I played Andre quite a bit a couple of years ago, he made me a better player," Sampras said.

Agassi, meanwhile, hasn't won a Grand Slam title in 2 1/2 years and has plummeted to No. 29 in the ATP Tour rankings. On Friday, he pulled out of Wimbledon, citing a recurring wrist injury.

At a time when tennis is hurting from a shortage of superstars, Sampras says he misses seeing Agassi across the net.

"One thing tennis needs now is a rivalry," he said. "You don't have a rivalry now that can sell the game. Andre and I had it a couple of years ago and that helped the game."

Agassi has played only 12 matches this year, winning six and losing six. Since reaching the semifinals at San Jose in February, he has lost five of his last seven matches.

Agassi hasn't played since losing to Magnus Norman in the second round of the Atlanta clay court tournament in April. He reportedly injured his right wrist at Atlanta, but there is also speculation that he has lost interest in the game — especially since getting married to Brooke Shields in April.

"I haven't talked to Andre in quite a while," Sampras said. "I don't know what's going on with him."

Many people in tennis consider Agassi one of the game's greatest underachievers. He has won three Grand Slam titles, including Wimbledon in 1992, but much more was expected from a player with his talent.

With his exciting game and rock star persona, Agassi stood out from the rest of the pack.

"His absence hurts the game," Sampras said. "He is one of the more popular players and he brings a lot of attention to the game. And the game

UTEP appeals NCAA's ruling for probation

■ El Paso university considers five-year sanctions too harsh, sends 100-page response.

Associated Press

EL PASO — Texas-El Paso has responded to NCAA sanctions with a 100-page appeal that argues the penalties imposed against the university were too harsh.

The NCAA announced May 1 that it was putting UTEP on probation for five years because of a lack of institutional control and what were characterized as minor but rampant transgressions of NCAA regulations in the football, men's and women's basketball and other programs.

The NCAA found UTEP used ineligible players, incorrectly certified ineligible players and exceeded the permissible number of football scholarships, among other violations.

"We're basing the appeal on what we've said all along. We don't believe that the penalties fit the violations," said athletic director John Thompson.

Thompson also said the university objects to the NCAA's finding that UTEP lacked control over its sports programs.

"In our interpretation of rules and understanding of them would lead to the conclusion that there was institutional control," he said. "Of course, that's a matter of opinion."

Once the NCAA receives the appeal, it will have 30 days to issue a response and UTEP will have 15 days to file a rebuttal.

After that, the school will have the option of arguing its position before the NCAA Infractions Appeals Committee, which UTEP is predisposed to do.

"I think we're trying to give the appeals committee an impression that we're in need of relief," said Mike Gentile, UTEP's compliance director.

UTEP will also stress that adjustments have been made, including the hiring of compliance staff, to ensure the same problems don't occur again.

"It's something that may not have been developed as well the first time," Gentile said. "But it's something we're very proud of."

By John F. Bonfatti
AP Sports Writer

PHILADELPHIA — The Boston Celtics shipped Dino Radja to Philadelphia for Clarence Weatherspoon and Michael Cage on Friday, marking the first player moves by the new regimes with both teams.

Radja and Cage are both center-forwards, while Weatherspoon has played both small and power forward in his five years with the 76ers.

"Now we have another big guy who can play more than one position," new 76ers coach Larry Brown said. "It gives us more of an option."

Boston coach Rick Pitino said the trade gives him roster flexibility because Weatherspoon has one year left on his contract and the Celtics can buy out the second year of Cage's deal.

Ryan's advice pays off for Johnson

By Denne H. Freeman
AP Sports Writer

ARLINGTON — A frustrated Randy Johnson went to Nolan Ryan for some pitching tips in August 1992.

At the time, Johnson was struggling with a 44-46 record for the Seattle Mariners.

Ryan told Johnson he needed to cut down on his walks, develop a dependable second pitch beyond his 100 mph fastball and learn to win on nights when he didn't have his best stuff.

"I told Randy he could be the most dominating pitcher in baseball if he would just work on his game," Ryan said at the time. "He was a lot like me when I was younger. He was just pitching and not doing a lot of thinking."

Since getting the advice from baseball's all-time strikeout leader, Johnson has a 71-19 record with a 2.90 ERA. He also has become deadly against the Texas Rangers, a team the retired Ryan used to pitch for and now works as a consultant.

■ Mariners edge Rangers/2C

Depending mostly on his slider on a hot 88-degree night in which he didn't have his usual crackling fastball, Johnson allowed only four hits in seven innings, struck out six and walked one in a 2-1 victory over the Rangers Thursday night.

It was Johnson's seventh consecutive win and gave him an 11-1 record for the year. He has allowed one earned run in the last 44 innings.

Johnson admitted that the weather "zapped me." He also said, "I'm not a robot out there."

"The heat was draining and my arm and back were tired," Johnson said. "That was about my B-minus stuff."

Johnson, now 12-3 for his career against Texas, also beat the Rangers 5-0 in May. Texas can't handle his stuff even in the B-minus category.

The victory moved Seattle two games ahead of Houston Astros second baseman Craig Biggio lands on the Chicago Cubs' Scott Servais, who succeeded in breaking up a double play as the Cubs' Rey Sanchez was safe at first. The Astros won, 7-3, Friday in Houston.

Astros win as Gonzalez ties club record

Associated Press

HOUSTON — Luis Gonzalez isn't used to the attention. Then again, he isn't used to a 23-game hitting streak.

■ NL Roundup

"It's been strange, my wife and I go places to eat and people see me and mention the streak," he said after helping the Houston Astros beat the Chicago Cubs 7-3 Friday night. "Even my outs feel like I'm hitting the ball good right now."

Gonzalez singled during a four-run third, tying the Houston hitting streak record set by Art Howe from May 1-24, 1981. Gonzalez has the longest hitting streak in the NL this season.

"I think it's kind of like a guy pitching a no-hitter or trying to hit for the cycle," Houston manager Larry Dierker said. "Everybody knows about it, but no one wants to say much. Once you get to 15 games any hitting streak is impressive."

Gonzalez, hitting .359 (42-for-117) in his last 30 games, also drove in a run with a fifth-inning groundout.

"One thing about Luis is he's very selective," Dierker said. "He walks a lot and that takes away at bats. But he's just taking every at bat as it comes and not worrying about the streak."

Derek Bell and Jeff Bagwell homered for the Astros, who rallied twice.

"It's pretty incredible when a guy can get one hit every game and hit .240 and have a 23-game hitting streak. He goes 1-for-4 every day and he's got the longest streak in the league," Bagwell joked. "But I don't want to jinx him. Twenty-three games is an awful lot of games."

Darryl Kile (8-3) won for the seventh time in eight decisions, allowing three runs and nine hits in seven innings with seven strikeouts and four walks.

With Houston trailing 3-2 in the third, Craig Biggio doubled off Steve Trachsel (4-6) leading off and scored on Bill Spiers' double. Gonzalez singled with one out and Bell hit a three-run homer for a 6-3 lead.

"I thought Steve threw the ball well other that one pitch to Bell," Chicago manager Jim Riggleman said. "This game was typical of the way a lot of our games have been, we can't see to get the hitting and pitching going in the same game."

Trachsel was tagged for six runs and nine hits in 2 1-3 innings.

"I've been sitting here scratching my head for the last hour-and-a-half trying to figure out what happened," Trachsel said. "Other than the pitch to Bell I was throwing good, you have to give the Astros credit, they really hit the ball well tonight."

Bagwell's 21st homer put Houston ahead in the first. He had popped up in foul territory but Trachsel dropped the ball for an error.

"I got greedy," Trachsel said. "I knew the runner was going and I was thinking about the double play instead of catching the ball and I dropped it. When you give a guy like Bagwell a second chance you always regret it."

Kevin Orie gave Chicago the lead with a two-run homer in the second. Pat Listach tied the score with an RBI groundout in the bottom half.

Braves 4, Phillies 1

PHILADELPHIA — Tom Glavine pitched a seven-hitter and Andruw Jones hit a two-run double as the Atlanta Braves beat Philadelphia and handed the Phillies their sixth straight loss.

Glavine (7-4) struck out four and walked one for his third complete game this season. He had a shutout until Darren Daulton's sacrifice fly in the ninth.

Atlanta scored four unearned runs in the sixth off Mark Leiter (4-8) as the Phillies, who at 22-47 have the worst record in the majors, lost for the 16th time in 19 games.

Marlins 2, Expos 1

MONTREAL — Alex Fernandez pitched a three-hitter to outduel Pedro Martinez, and Charles Johnson drove in both Florida runs to lead the Marlins over the Montreal Expos.

Fernandez (7-6) retired the final 16 in pitching his third complete game this season. The right-hander faced the minimum after the second inning, walked three and struck out seven.

Martinez (9-3) allowed five hits in his sixth complete game of the year. He gave up two runs, raising his major league-leading ERA to 1.64. Martinez lost for the third time in four decisions despite striking out 12.

Mets 1, Pirates 0

NEW YORK — Bobby Jones became the first 12-game winner in the major leagues, leading the New York Mets over the Pittsburgh Pirates.

Jones (12-3) allowed six hits in 8 2-3 innings, struck out eight and walked two. After Mark Smith's two-out single in the ninth, John Franco came in and threw a wild pitch, then retired Jose Guillen on a groundout for his 18th save in 21 chances.

Butch Huskey led off the sixth with a double off Steve Cooke (5-9) and advanced on Alex Ochoa's groundout. Jason Hardtke, the hero of Thursday night's game, followed with an RBI single.

Reds 4, Cardinals 2

ST. LOUIS — Aaron Boone drove in the go-ahead run, then was ejected from his major league debut as the Cincinnati Reds beat the slumping St. Louis Cardinals.

Boone, recalled earlier in the day from Triple-A Indianapolis to fill his brother Bret's spot on the roster, singled and had a steal in three at-bats. He was ejected in the sixth inning by home plate umpire Gary Darling for throwing his helmet after being tagged out on a close play at the plate.

Kent Mercker (5-5) won his fourth straight decision as the Cardinals lost their fifth straight. St. Louis rookie starter Matt Morris (5-4) had his four-game winning streak snapped.

Griffey's grand slam does in Rangers

Associated Press

ARLINGTON — Ken Griffey Jr. is held in such respect that Texas manager Johnny Oates thought about walking him with the bases-loaded.

"If I had a 20-year contract I probably would have walked him," Oates said. "But the way we have been swinging the bats, I couldn't walk him with us just down 1-0."

Given the chance to bat, Griffey hit a grand slam for his major league-leading 28th homer, and the Seattle Mariners held on to beat the Texas Rangers 5-4 Friday night.

Griffey connected off Bobby Witt (8-4) in the fifth inning for his ninth career grand slam, putting Seattle ahead 5-0.

Griffey was reluctant to talk about his heroics.

"I don't know what pitch I hit," Griffey said. "It was a fun game, real close. I'm not going to talk about myself. It put us up and that's all I can say. Winning was great."

Griffey raised his AL-leading RBIs total to 76 and his career total to 801.

"He's capable of breaking a game open, like he did," Mariners manager Lou Piniella said. "Sometimes we expect too much and that's unfortunate. With greatness comes expectation. And he's a great talent."

■ AL Roundup

Griffey's homer followed a single by Alvaro Espinoza, a double by Joey Cora, and a walk to Jose Cruz Jr. Dan Wilson had put Seattle ahead with an RBI single in the second.

"You can't make a mistake against him," Witt said. "He's the best. I got a ball up and he drove it."

Bob Wolcott (3-4) allowed all four runs and six hits in five innings. Scott Sanders got three outs for his second save. Pinch-hitter Domingo Cedeno singled and Benji Gil sacrificed, but Mark McLemore struck out and Ivan Rodriguez grounded out.

Witt (8-4) gave up five runs and seven hits in six innings.

Griffey gave Texas a run back with a fifth-inning error. Damon Buford walked, Gil singled and Griffey let the ball get past him, allowing Buford to score. Rodriguez followed with an RBI double.

Lee Stevens hit a two-run homer off Wolcott in the sixth following a double by Dean Palmer.

Yankees 7, Indians 1

CLEVELAND — Tino Martinez hit his 22nd homer and Dwight Gooden had his best outing of the season as the New York Yankees continued their mastery of Cleveland with a 7-1 victory over the Indians Friday night.

The Yankees won their seventh straight at Jacobs Field and improved to 13-2 at the three-year-old ballpark, where they are the only visiting team with a winning record. New York was 9-3 against the Indians last year, including 6-0 at Jacobs Field. The Yankees have won six straight overall against Cleveland and 27 of the last 36 meetings.

In his second start since coming off the disabled list, Gooden (2-0) allowed three hits and one unearned run in six innings, with two walks and two strikeouts. Martinez homered in a three-run first inning against Charles Nagy (8-4), who lost for only the second time in 19 starts following a Cleveland loss since 1995.

Blue Jays 3, Orioles 0

TORONTO — Pat Hentgen pitched a six-hitter for his third shutout this season, leading the Toronto Blue Jays over the Baltimore Orioles.

Hentgen (8-3) has not allowed a run in 21 consecutive innings. The 1996 AL Cy Young winner struck out four and walked one for his AL-leading sixth complete game.

Mike Mussina (8-2) lost for the first time in 14 starts, giving up three runs, two earned, and eight hits in 6 2-3 innings. He struck out five and tied a career-high with six walks.

Tigers 12, Red Sox 6

DETROIT — Melvin Nieves hit a three-run homer and Phil Nevin added a two-run shot as the Detroit Tigers beat the Red Sox and stopped Boston's four-game winning streak.

Detroit, which overcame a 3-0 deficit, had 16 hits, including eight for extra bases. Deivi Cruz had three hits, drove in three runs and stole two bases.

Justin Thompson (7-5) struggled, allowing six runs — three earned — and eight hits in five innings with five walked. Tim Wakefield (2-7) lasted just 2 1-3 innings in his shortest start this season, allowing six runs and six hits.

Brewers 7, Royals 5

MILWAUKEE — Jeromy Burnitz homered, doubled twice and drove in three runs as the Milwaukee Brewers defeated the Kansas City Royals for their fourth straight victory.

Burnitz, who was thrown out at third base and at home plate earlier in the game, homered off Tim Belcher (8-7) in the seventh to snap a 5-5 tie.

His ninth homer made a winner of Cal Eldred (7-7), who gave up five runs, all earned, on five hits in seven inconsistent innings. Mike Fetters pitched the eighth and Doug Jones worked the ninth for his 17th save.

Twins 3, White Sox 0

CHICAGO — Marty Cordova hit a two-run homer and three Minnesota pitchers combined on a five-hitter as the Twins beat Chicago, dropping the White Sox back into last place in the AL Central.

After drawing 124,666 for a three-game series against the Cubs, the White Sox drew just 22,043 on a wet night that included a 34-minute rain delay in the seventh inning. Chicago, which escaped the AL Central cellar on May 8 following a slow start, then dropped back to last Monday before winning two of three against the Cubs.

Angels 5, Athletics 2

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Kevin Gross, making his debut with Anaheim, won as a starter for the first time in almost a year and Tim Salmon hit a three-run homer in the Angels' win over the Oakland Athletics.

Gross (1-0) allowed four hits in 5 2-3 innings, struck out seven and walked five in his first major league start since last Aug. 8 with Texas. It was the 15-year veteran's first win as a starter since last July 1 — also at Anaheim.

ANGELS: Diablos depart with win

well (Friday night). When things are going good, there is nothing better. Hopefully, there are no more 0-for-30s out there."

He was a big part of a 17-hit performance that saw all but one Diablo get a hit. Mike Kinkade took over the Texas League batting lead at .374 with a 3-for-4 performance. He also scored four runs to claim the lead in runs scored (67). Kinkade leaves Midland with the league lead in hits (101), slugging percentage, and RBIs (67).

There were others. Scott Krause, who had three home runs on Wednesday, went 3-for-5, and Drew Williams went 3-for-5 with two RBIs and two runs scored.

"There are a lot of guys in the lineup who can swing the bat," Kinkade said. "We will score runs."

Kinkade went on to say that playing in Midland is much like Sun City and knowing that makes the batters more confident.

"The wind was blowing out and we swung the ball really well," Kinkade said. "Hitting is mental. If you have confidence, you will have a better chance."

El Paso (3-3) and Midland (3-3) both stand a game behind West-leading San Antonio, but not a lack of offensive effort. Both teams drilled the ball in the series and for the month of June. In the 12 games played between Midland and El Paso, there were 207 runs scored or 17.25 runs per game.

Midland did its part on Friday, but they just waited too long. Every Angel in the starting lineup had at least one hit, and some like Chris Norton and Jamie Burke, did a little better with 2-for-5 nights and a home run each. Burke's was a two-run bomb to left in the fourth which got the Angels on the scoreboard. Norton became the second Angel to hit double digits in homers with a monster blast over the center field fence in the ninth.

Catcher Ben Molina was the other Angel to get two hits for the Angels, which never found themselves closer than the 8-3 mark in the seventh when Rennhack hit his second bomb of the night.

The Diablos' Horacio Estrada improved to 7-7 on the season, working six innings while Midland's Fausto Macey fell to 3-2. Macey make his exit an interesting one. The right hander was ejected in the third inning after buzzing the ear of Rennhack. The errant pitch came right after Williams sent a Macey offering on to Hogan Park's 15th fairway.

LAUNCHPAD ANGELICS: The Angels now travel to Wichita for six games. Today's game time is 7:15 p.m. They will not return to Christensen until next Friday to host the Wranglers... Pitcher Anthony Chavez was promoted to Vancouver while Rafael Quirico was sent down to Lake Elsinore... Bill Bene, a former No. 1 pick of the Dodgers, Fernando De La Cruz and David Davalillo were all added to the Angels' roster...

Montgomery becomes Philly CEO

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — In a surprising change at the top of the Philadelphia Phillies Bill Giles said Friday he is handing over day-to-day operation of the team to Dave Montgomery.

Giles, the son of former NL president Warren Giles, is giving Montgomery the titles of president, chief executive officer and managing partner.

Giles, who put together the ownership group that bought the Phillies from the Carpenter family in 1981 for $30 million, will retain his ownership in the team, believed to be about 20 percent, and become the team's chairman.

JOHNSON: Mariner dominates hitters

(From 1C)

the Rangers in the AL West. The Mariners held Johnson back a day from facing the San Francisco Giants so he could be ready for the Rangers.

"Michael Jordan is great under pressure and that's the way I want to be," Johnson said. "(Manager) Lou Piniella looks to me in crucial situations and I like to think I've succeeded a lot in those situations.

"After losing two games to San Francisco, this is a big win for us against a divisional rival. What better way to start a four-game series than with a win here? This was a more important game for me to pitch in than against the Giants."

Johnson has become so dominating he puts a lot of pressure on opposing pitchers.

"I knew I couldn't give up much because I was going against Randy," Texas starter and loser Ken Hill said. "He beat us at their place and threw the ball well. He can dominate a game."

And he can do it with his slider, the second pitch Ryan said Johnson had to develop.

"It didn't look like he was throwing as hard as he did earlier this year," Texas manager Johnny Oates said. "It looked like he was throwing more sliders than normal. Even when he does that, he gets the ball up there pretty good."

"I've learned how to control that slider," Johnson said. "It's become a good out pitch when my fastball isn't at its best."

Perhaps it was a B-minus effort to Johnson. The Rangers had a higher grade.

Indians' prospect Colon tosses Triple-A no-hitter

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — Bartolo Colon, one of the Cleveland Indians' top pitching prospects, threw a no-hitter Friday as the Buffalo Bisons blanked the New Orleans Zephyrs 4-0.

It was the first no-hitter by a Bisons pitcher since Dick Marlowe in 1952.

The 22-year-old right-hander struck out eight and walked one, the second batter, who was caught stealing. He retired the final 25 batters in facing the minimum 27.

Colon (5-0) was making his first start since being sent down Tuesday by the Indians. He was 1-2 with a 6.75 ERA in six starts with Cleveland.

Grant wins International Boxing Council title belt

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Michael Grant remained unbeaten with a victory over Al Cole before 1,412 fans at Bally's Park Place Casino on Friday night.

Grant improved to 25-0 with 17 knockouts when referee Eddie Cotton stopped the fight after 10 rounds of the scheduled 12-round bout. The victory gave the 24-year-old Grant the International Boxing Council title.

The defeat dropped Cole to 28-3. It was the second loss in the Spring Valley, N.Y. resident's last three fights.

Grant, who fights out of Norristown, Pa., used his 87-inch reach to consistently land his left jab. He also stunned Cole with several overhand rights.

Cole, the former cruiserweight world champion, finished the fight with a welt under his bloody left eye. He was also bleeding from the mouth.

Nemechek wins first Winston pole for California 500

FONTANA, Calif. — A new track and a new pole-winner.

Joe Nemechek, the 44th of 45 drivers who made qualifying runs Friday on the 2-mile, high-banked oval at Roger Penske's impressive California Speedway, won the pole for Sunday's inaugural California 500 with a lap of 183.015 mph.

That knocked Ernie Irvan, last week's race winner at Michigan, off the top spot, which he held for more than half the qualifying session after posting a lap of 182.927.

"Awesome. This has been just an awesome day," said Nemechek, absolutely bubbling after winning his first Winston Cup pole in 105 tries.

It was just the latest high in a year of huge ups and downs for Nemechek, who sold his own team to Felix Sabates and became part of a three-car stable this season.

His brother John was fatally injured in March in a truck race at Homestead, Fla., and less than two weeks ago Joe and wife Andrea had their first child, a son they named after John.

"In a lot of ways, it's been a very tough year," Nemechek said. "But there certainly have been good things, too, and this is another one of them."

Jeff Gordon, the series points leader, was third in qualifying at 182.894, followed by Nemechek's Sabco Racing teammate Wally Dallenbach Jr., at 182.755.

Ken Schrader's 182.593 made it four Chevrolets in the top five, with only Irvan in a Ford.

Mark Martin, who trails Gordon by 46 points in the standings, was 12th at 181.653.

Cheered on by crew chief Tony Glover, Nemechek knew he had a good shot at the pole after being the quickest in practice earlier in the day.

"Tony told me I had a good speed in (turns) one and two," Nemechek said. "Then I just about gave it away. I got off the gas in three and four trying to be conservative.

"But I knew all I had to do was what I did in practice."

His lap was just 0.019-seconds quicker than Irvan's, which was just 0.007-seconds faster than Gordon's.

"As close as qualifying was, that's the way I expect it to be out here Sunday," Nemechek said. "You're going to see one heck of a race."

Nemechek is the 11th drive to win a pole in 15 events this season, and the fourth first-time winner, joining rookies Mike Skinner and Robby Gordon, and Kenny Wallace.

Gordon, the third Sabco driver, missed several Winston Cup races after being burned in an incident during the Indianapolis 500. He crashed in Friday's practice, taking a hard hit to the head, and was withdrawn from the event after being treated and released at a nearby hospital.

"Robby failed a motor skill test," team owner Felix Sabates said. "The doctor said it would be a week to 10 days before he could do another test."

Gordon was replaced by Greg Sacks, who qualified a backup car 33rd at 179.636.

Hornaday takes pole on birthday

BRISTOL, Tenn. (AP) — Ron Hornaday gave himself a birthday present Friday night as the defending NASCAR Craftsman Truck Series champion won the pole position for the Loadhandler 200 race at the Bristol Motor Speedway.

Hornaday, celebrating his 39th birthday, was the last of the five drivers to lower Mike Skinner's 118.738 mph record over Bristol's difficult concrete banking. The Palmdale, Calif., competitor, driving a Chevrolet owned by Dale and Teresa Earnhardt, covered the 0.533-mile oval at 119.910 to capture his first pole of the season.

Joining Hornaday on the front row for Saturday's $325,084 race will be rookie Boris Said in a Ford. Said, runnerup in the series' most recent race at Fort Worth, Texas, lapped at 119.440.

Defending race winner Rick Carelli in a Chevrolet, Bryan Reffner in a Ford and Tony Raines in a Dodge took positions 3-5 as the first 25 spots in a 38-truck field were decided. Texas winner Kenny Irwin will start sixth in a Ford. He was the first qualifier to break Skinner's two-year-old qualifying mark.

"You can't ask for more than that," said Hornaday, the next-to-last qualifier among 43 drivers who made first-round attempts.

Pruett holds provisional pole for Budweiser-G.I. Joe

By Bob Baum
AP Sports Writer

PORTLAND, Ore. — For the second race in a row, Scott Pruett has the provisional pole for an Indy-car race. This time, the weather might help him hold onto it until Sunday's race.

Pruett's Reynard Ford Cosworth was easily the best in Friday's first round of qualifying for Sunday's Budweiser-G.I. Joe's 200, putting together the three fastest laps of the day, with a best of 118.834 mph, a track record.

Five drivers bettered the track record of 117.614 mph set by Jacques Villeneuve in 1995.

Rookie Dario Franchitti, whose best Indy-car starting position is fifth, was second Friday in a Mercedes-powered Reynard at 118.260. Gil de Ferran was third in a Reynard Honda at 118.174 and Michael Andretti fourth in a Swift Ford Cosworth at 118.114.

With rain in the forecast for Saturday's second round of qualifying, Friday's speeds could well hold up as the race's starting grid.

"That's what they said in Detroit, too," Pruett said, recalling the race two weeks ago when he had the provisional pole on Friday, then lost it to de Ferran, in dry weather, on Saturday.

Pruett has just one pole in his Indy-car career, last year in Detroit. He is a two-time CART winner, including this year's Sunbelt IndyCarnival Australia.

But lately Pruett's Brahma Sports Team car has struggled, dropping out after 25 laps of the 77-lap Detroit Grand Prix because of engine problems after finishing ninth and 17th the previous two races. He is sixth in the driver standings.

"All the races are critical but for us, at this point, we need a good run," Pruett said. "We need to get that momentum going and finish in the top five the rest of the way, with a couple of wins, to be in the points race."

Pruett praised the vast improvements made by Ford in the engine from last year, when his car was 5-10 mph slower than the competition on the straightaway.

"Ford and Cosworth came to us last year and said, 'We're going to do a lot of work in the winter and we're going to be competitive,'" Pruett said, "and I said, 'Yeah, right.' But they have."

If it rains Saturday, the new Firestone rain tire will get its first test. The tire replaces the one that was severely outperformed by Goodyear last year. Pruett has done extensive testing with the new Firestone tire.

"I know it will be a big improvement over last year," he said.

Franchitti, 24, said the 1.967-mile, nine-turn Portland International Raceway course reminds him of those he has raced on in Europe.

"It's nice to turn right once in awhile," he said. "All we've had this year it seems are left turns."

Franchitti also knows how to drive in the rain.

"I'm from Scotland," he said, "and it rains

Els pushes Buick lead to three strokes

By Joel Stashenko
Associated Press Writer

HARRISON, N.Y. — Even when Ernie Els doesn't live up to his own expectations, he's still better than practically everyone else at the Westchester Country Club.

Els' 3-under-par 68 Friday, a mediocre round for him on a course he has come to dominate, still allowed him to increase his lead from two to three strokes midway through the Buick Classic.

Els birdied three of the first five holes Friday to get to 10-under, and he admitted that he started to think of matching or bettering his 64 of Thursday.

"I had visions of going really low again," he said. "It didn't turn out that way. I was quite patient with myself. I messed up a couple of par-5s on 9 and 18, I didn't birdie them. But I made some good saves, too."

Els played even-par golf after his hot start Friday to finish at 10-under 132, one shot off the tournament's record for best score after 36 holes he tied in last year's Buick Classic. David Graham also shot 131 here in the first two rounds of the 1976 tournament.

Els, the South African coming off his second U.S. Open victory last weekend at Congressional, had predicted that scores would not be as good Friday as they were on Thursday. Rains early Thursday softened up Westchester's tricky greens, but a second day of clear, warm and breezy weather Friday made it harder for the pros to get the ball close to the pin.

"They had some pins tucked away and I could hardly get very close today," Els said. "I hit it 25, 30, 35 feet most of the day, so it's kind of tough to make birdies from there. ... But around this course, par is not too bad."

Jim Furyk also shot 68 Friday and was alone at 7-under 135. Jeff Maggert (69) and Brad Fabel (67) were a stroke back at 6-under 136. Tour rookie Robert Damron shot 66 Friday and was among a large group at 5-under 137.

Tiger Woods birdied his last hole to shoot a 1-over 72 and was at 2-over 144. He has made all 22 cuts since turning pro in 1996.

Paul Azinger shot a 69 Friday for a two-round total of 136 and a share of third place, only to be disqualified for failing to sign his scorecard before leaving the scorer's tent after his last hole Friday, according to PGA tour spokesman Lee Patterson.

Els made birdie putts of 15 feet at No. 2, 35 feet at No. 4, 3 1/2 feet at No. 5 and 8 feet at No. 10. His most important hole may have been the tough 12th, however. He drove into the rough, pulled his second shot, flubbed his chip and was short of the green in 3. He chipped to within 6 feet and made the putt for a bogey.

"I feel like I'm concentrating quite nicely out there," Els said. "I feel like I am focused. I feel like I want to play well and as I get over my ball to play I'm focused on the shot I want to play."

Furyk said he also had trouble getting the ball close to the pin Friday, but made the most of the chances he had with a four-birdie, one-bogey round.

Els was one of the first players off the tee on Friday, and he dominated the scoreboard all day as the only player under par by double digits.

"It's pretty hard to miss the boards out there — they're about 25 feet by 20 feet — and I am one of those people who like to look up," Furyk said. "Ernie's been playing super. ... But you really can't worry about how other people are doing."

Maggert, who started the day at 4-under, had a roller coaster round. He birdied the first hole he played, No. 10, then bogeyed Nos. 11, 12 and 14. Then he birdied Nos. 18, 1, 2, 3 and 4. Then he bogeyed No. 7. On the day, he only had eight pars.

Brad Faxon, two strokes back of Els at 5-under to start the day, ruined his round Friday with a double bogey-double bogey-bogey finish. He shot 74 to stand at 2-under 140.

Vijay Singh, Buick Classic champion in 1993 and 1995, was at 2-under 140 after a 2-over 73 Friday. He made the cut for the 39th straight time, the longest current streak on the tour.

The winner of the $1.5 million Buick Classic will earn $270,000.

Bowen, Scranton take charge in Rochester

By Ben Dobbin
Associated Press Writer

ROCHESTER, N.Y. — Nanci Bowen, whose sole victory on tour came in a major championship in 1995, fired a 5-under-par 67 Friday to vault into a tie with Nancy Scranton midway through the LPGA Rochester International.

Both sank long birdie putts shortly before an afternoon thunderstorm interrupted second-round play for 40 minutes at Locust Hill Country Club. Bowen kissed her putter after dropping a 30-footer on the tiered 15th hole; Scranton scored from 40 feet on the 13th hole.

"I'm getting there, but I'm not about to make any predictions," said Scranton, rebounding from shoulder surgery that kept her off the golf circuit last year. Her 4-under-par round moved her to 135, 9-under overall.

"I've just been putting well," Bowen said. "That's usually why anybody's on the leaderboard, because you can hit it bad and putt well and still hang around. But everything's kind of come together for me."

Defending champion Dottie Pepper, Cindy Schreyer and first-round leader Michelle McCann were all at 6-under. Allison Finney was four off the pace.

Bowen, 30, won the Nabisco Dinah Shore, one of the tour's four majors, in 1995. She tied for fifth in the same tournament in March, but her best finish this year was a second-place tie in the Susan G. Komen International in April.

She stubbed her toe against a suitcase when she got out of bed before dawn Friday but said the injury turned out to be "a good distraction."

"I had to swing slow," she said. "There was no way I could swing fast because it hurt so bad."

Picking up where she left off last year, Pepper shot 69 to remain in contention. She birdied two of the last three holes, notably chipping in from 30 feet.

"I like to jockey myself into position," Pepper said."I don't lead many tournaments after the first round. But after two and three, I'm creeping my way in there. ... It feels very, very comfortable."

McGann was less accurate off the tee than on opening day and missed several approach shots. Her even-par round included two birdies and two bogeys and a few close misses from around 12 feet.

"That was the story today — no putts were made," she said. "The good thing is that it's only Friday. ... I would much rather have missed them today than tomorrow and Sunday."

The 1994 champion here, Lisa Kiggens, came in with a 66, tying the best round of the day, to claw her way back to 2-under. Nancy Lopez, a three-time winner who had never finished outside the top 20 here, missed the cut.

Murphy holds two-shot lead at Nationwide Championship

By Tom Saladino
AP Sports Writer

ALPHARETTA, Ga. — Two weeks off was just what Bob Murphy needed.

The relaxed Murphy fired a near-perfect, 8-under-par 64 Friday to take a two-stroke lead after the first round of the Nationwide Championship senior tournament.

Murphy, seeking his 12th senior tour victory, was as hot as the 90-degree temperature, carding eight birdies without a bogey over the 6,777-yard, par-72 Golf Club of Georgia Lakeside Course.

"It proves that two weeks off was the right thing to do for my brain," Murphy said.

Bob Charles was next at 66 followed by Graham Marsh at 67. Leading money-winner Hale Irwin and David Graham were another stroke back at 68 in the $1.3 million tournament with $195,000 going to the winner.

Defending champion Jim Colbert, with a double-bogey 7 on the 18th hole, was at 73.

"I took off two weeks and did nothing for five straight days but fish and relax," said Murphy, who shot an 81 on the final day of the Ameritech Senior Open on June 1, his last appearance before Friday.

Fox, TCI working on national sports network

By Farrell Kramer
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK — Gunning for ESPN's audience of sports aficionados, Rupert Murdoch and partner Tele-Communications Inc. are in negotiations to form a new, national sports network.

The two hope to challenge the entrenched cable sports network by buying a stake in Cablevision Systems' sports properties and using that relationship to assemble a giant. Cablevision owns seven regional sports channels, the New York Knicks and Rangers, Madison Square Garden and the MSG Network, a regional cable network.

Already 50-50 partners in Fox-Liberty Networks, Murdoch and TCI's Liberty Media programming arm plan to create a broad network offering both games and sports news by combining their own regional sports networks with the Cablevision assets.

The partners would be able to broadcast coast-to-coast, letting them negotiate for national sports programming rights and win lucrative national advertising contracts.

Talks are close to completion and a deal could come as early as Monday, one source close to the deal, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Friday. The purchase, according to published reports, would cost $850 million and involve a 40 percent stake in the Cablevision properties.

The new network, which will take the name Fox Sports Net, would have broadcast rights to about 40 sports teams and would reach about 55 million viewers in all major markets.

If the deal goes through, it would enhance's Murdoch's already powerful presence in sports. Fox in recent years acquired over-the-air rights to televise games in the NFL, major league baseball and NHL.

Also, Murdoch has made an offer to buy the Los Angeles Dodgers.

News of the discussions comes as TV programmers scramble to get their shows on cable systems — and in front of viewers — as available channels become harder to find.

"If you look at an environment of 500 channels, the question is how do you get people interested and get them to pay for all those channels?" said Dennis McAlpine, a media and entertainment analyst at the brokerage firm Josephthal, Lyon & Ross. "One of the areas they're definitely interested in is sports."

Fox and TCI, though their joint venture, already own sports channels in cities such as Los Angeles, Atlanta, Washington and Dallas.

The new network represents yet another scuffle in the mad scramble for media assets. Just last week, Cablevision announced it was increasing its presence in the New York area by buying 10 cable systems from TCI, the nation's biggest cable company. The deal pays TCI with a 33 percent stake in Cablevision.

Further, the Cablevision sports properties themselves were acquired by the Woodbury, N.Y., cable company through a buyout of partner ITT Corp., which was forced to sell them to defend against a hostile bid from Hilton Hotels. That $650 million deal was completed this week.

Fox and TCI outbid ESPN parent Walt Disney Co. for Cablevision's properties, some published reports said. News Corp., the parent of Fox, Cablevision and TCI all declined to comment on the deal.

The big question for TCI and Fox is how well a new sports cable network can compete with ESPN. Right away, the fare will be a bit different, with Fox and TCI building on their existing schedules of local and regional games.

The eventual winner?

"In this case, it's going to go with whomever gets the right programming," McAlpine said. "If you pick up the rights to the national tiddlywinks championship, no one's going to care."

Garrido paces German Open

STUTTGART, Germany (AP) — Spain's Ignacio Garrido, seeking his first tour victory, shot a 4-under-par 67 Friday and took a two-stroke lead halfway through the Volvo German Open.

Garrido had a 10-under 132 total after a round played in wet and windy weather.

Argentinian Eduardo Romero was runner-up at 134 after a second straight 67.

England's Mark James, a seven-time Ryder Cup player, led a threesome tied at 135, including coountryman Van Williams and Sweden's Robert Karlsson.

James, a 21-year veteran of the tour, had the first hole-in-one of his career, hitting a five-iron into the 194-yard eighth hole.

But James picked the wrong hole on the way to firing a 67, since the same feat at the 17th would have earned him a car.

Garrido has three second-place finishes in his four years on the tour.

"If you are there a few times, one time you will win," Garrido said.

American Bob May was in a group of five at 137, while defending champion Ian Woosnam of Wales shot a 69 and fell eight strokes back at 140.

Germany's Bernhard Langer, seeking his sixth German Open win and 50th title of his career, carded a 69 for 139.

AGASSI: Tennis star will miss Wimbledon

(From 1C)

definitely needs him."

Agassi and Sampras have played each other 20 times, with Sampras leading 12-8. The height of their rivalry came in 1995 when they met in five finals and joined to form a Davis Cup "Dream Team."

Agassi opened 1995 by beating Sampras in the final of the Australian Open, but Sampras ended the year by beating Agassi for the U.S. Open title 6-4, 6-3, 4-6, 7-5.

"It was exciting walking out with him at the final at Flushing Meadow that year," Sampras said. "It was one of the few times I felt the electricity from the crowd and the media. I felt like a heavyweight fighter, which I haven't felt too much in my career."

That defeat apparently was a knockout blow from which Agassi never fully recovered. He hasn't been back to a Grand Slam final since. He won the gold medal at the Atlanta Olympics, but Sampras and many other top players skipped the event.

Since the 1995 U.S. Open final, Agassi and Sampras have met only three times, and Sampras has won easily in straight sets each time. They haven't played since November 1996, when Sampras blitzed Agassi 6-2, 6-1 at the ATP Tour Championship.

With Agassi out of Wimbledon and his long-term status uncertain, who knows if they will ever play each other again.

Chang, Krajicek make finals of Heineken Trophy tourney

Associated Press

ROSMALEN, Netherlands — American Michael Chang and Dutchman Richard Krajicek pulled through tough quarterfinals Friday in the Heineken Trophy tennis tournament.

World No. 2 Chang took 2 hours, 36 minutes — including a 40-minute rain delay — to break down eighth-seeded Spaniard Francisco Clavet Spain, 6-7 (7-5), 7-6 (10-8), 6-1.

Chang complained of an injury to the right thigh during the match, but will play Krajicek on Saturday in a semifinal of this grass court tuneup for next week's Wimbledon.

Krajicek, ranked sixth in the world, unexpected resistance from 47th-ranked Czech Martin Damm in his quarterfinal, but won 7-6 (7-2), 7-6 (7-4).

Krajicek served two double faults to trail 4-2 in the second set tiebreaker, but buried three backhand volleys and took five straight points to win after 96 minutes.

After the match, Krajicek told Dutch television he wants to make Sunday's final here, despite focusing on his Wimbledon title defense.

"The more matches I win the more confidence I'll have for next week." he said.

The WTA women's tourney here was hit by an evening downpour, which cut short top-seeded German Anke Huber's semifinal with Dutchwoman Miriam Oremans with the match at 6-4, 4-6.

In the other semifinal, third-seeded Ruxandra Dragomir beat No. 8 Asa Carlsson of Sweden 6-4, 6-2.

The other women's is scheduled to resume Saturday, prior to the men's semis semis and the women's final.

The other men's semifinal pits Swede Jonas Bjoerkman, the fourth seed, and unseeded Frenchman Guillaume Raoux.

Both ousted young Dutch hopefuls. Bjoerkman beat qualifier Fernon Wibier 6-2, 6-4. Raoux took Sjeng Schalken, 7-6 (7-5), 6-4.

Henman, Kucera move indoors to reach semifinals

NOTTINGHAM, England — Rain forced play from grass to indoor hardcourts Friday as Tim Henman, Karol Kucera, Greg Rusedski and Sandon Stolle advanced to the semifinals of the Nottingham Open.

The players are using the tournament to prepare for Wimbledon, which opens Monday.

All four quarterfinals were moved from the slick lawns to a slower, hard surface where play was accompanied by the noise of rain hammering on the roof and cutlery rattling in the adjacent dining area.

There were no cheering crowds. None of the 2,500 spectators were allowed inside because of safety regulations although some managed to watch from outside through the rain-streaked windows.

Only the media was allowed in to watch matches played side-by-side on two courts only a few feet apart.

Fourth-seeded Henman and unseeded Kucera completed matches that had begun outdoors Thursday but were halted by rain at the start of the third set.

Kucera, from Slovakia, finished a 4-6, 6-2, 7-5 victory over Australian Scott Draper.

Henman had to save four match points before defeating Grant Stafford of South Africa 3-6, 6-3, 7-6 (8-6).

Britain's Greg Rusedski defeated last year's Wimbledon semifinalist, Jason Stoltenberg of Australia 6-3, 7-6 (7-4), while Stoltenberg's countryman Sandon Stolle outlasted American Alex O'Brien 7-6 (7-5), 4-6, 7-6 (7-4).

Kucera will play Henman in the semis and Rusedski goes against Stolle.

Weather permitting, the semifinal matches will be played early Saturday morning and the final will be in the afternoon.

If it does not improve, the semifinals will take place indoors on Saturday and the final will carry over to Sunday.

Rain falls on Eastbourne again

EASTBOURNE, England — Jana Novotna was three points away from clinching a place in the semifinals when rain washed out play Friday at the Eastbourne women's grass-court tournament.

Novotna was leading Ai Sugiyama 6-2, 6-5 and serving for the match at 15-15 when the quarterfinal match was suspended.

The rain also halted the quarterfinal between Nathalie Tauziat and Natasha Zvereva, with Tauziat leading 6-4, 5-7, 2-1.

Top-seeded Monica Seles never got to resume her quarterfinal, which was halted by rain Thursday with Brenda Schultz-McCarthy leading 7-5, 2-2.

Fourth-seeded Arantxa Sanchez Vicario never started her quarterfinal against No. 6 Irina Spirlea.

After waiting several hours for the rain to subside, tournament organizers finally called off play for the rest of the day.

Officials said they would try to complete the tournament on schedule Saturday, but it looks increasingly likely that play will be extended until Sunday.

The tournament is a warmup for Wimbledon, which begins Monday.

Oddsmakers hedge bets against streakers

LONDON — British oddsmakers have cut the odds of a streaker appearing during either of this year's Wimbledon singles finals, after losing the bet last year.

"We offered 6-1 against there being a streaker last year and got our fingers seriously burned," said Graham Sharp, spokesman for William Hill, one of the biggest U.K. oddsmakers.

The female streaker made her entrance on Wimbledon's Centre Court turf during the presentation ceremony before the men's final.

Sharp said he suspected last year's odds were generous enough to tempt unscrupulous gamblers into staging the streak themselves.

"We're only offering even money on a streaker putting in an appearance during a singles final this year," he said. "That way we hope to encourage a bit of propriety."

The All England Championships at Wimbledon begin Monday.

Ford Mustang/Ford Probe

Wheelin'&Dealin'

By Kenneth Chester, Jr.

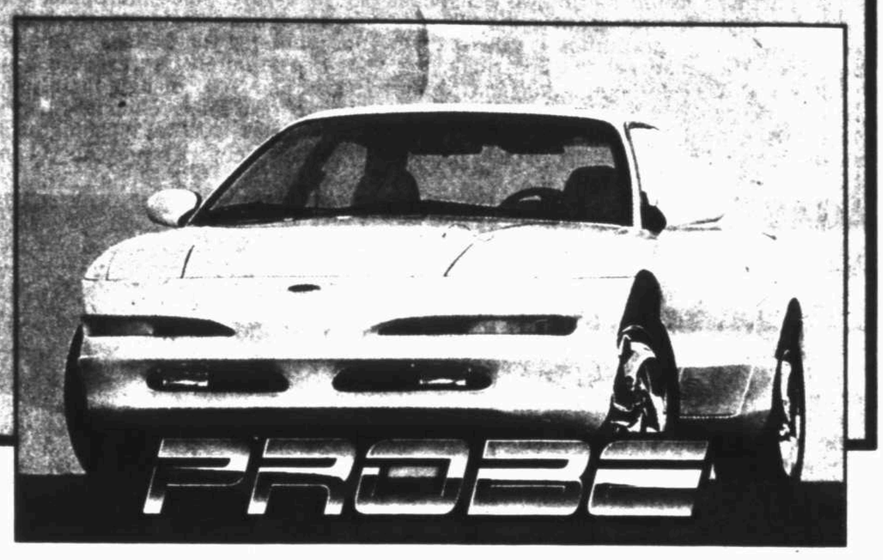
Ah, conventional Texas weather brings out the intense desire to enjoy the fullness of nature in your vehicle at breath-taking speed. Understanding this bit of human behavior, the folks at the Ford Motor Company offers consumers a real choice in coupes. Whether you prefer rear drive or front drive, the automaker has you covered with the Mustang and Probe. I have driven both coupes and here is what I learned:

Mustang Convertible

The pony car lives on at Ford! The debut of the redesigned rear-drive Mustang in 1994 breathed new life into the model. With its fastback looks and extensively reworked chassis, this teenager's dream continues to cruise American highways. Ford has developed three different Mustang convertibles that allow the buyer to choose based on pocketbook and performance considerations. The base convertible comes standard with a 3.8L V-6 joined to a five speed manual transmission, while both the GT and Cobra models come standard with different versions of the refined 4.6L V-8 engine. While the five speed manual transmission bolted to the V-8 demands your attention, the driver is rewarded with gobs of performance. A four speed automatic is a $715 option on the base and GT models, but not available on the Cobra. Displays and controls for the Mustang are complete and easy to use and operate. The drop-top switch is located between the front seats and requires the driver to come to a complete stop and apply the emergency brake before the ragtop can be lowered. While securing the top is accomplished easily with two fasteners, the driver must lower the driver, passenger, and rear quarter windows separately — a nuisance. Standard safety equipment for all models include dual airbags, side-door beams, and Traction-Loc axle ($200 option on GT, standard on the Cobra). The following safety features are extra-cost options on the base and GT models: Four-wheel anti-lock brakes, $570; and alarm system, $145. Both options are standard on the Cobra. EPA fuel economy numbers range from 20 city/30 highway for the 3.8L V6 engine to 18 city/26 highway for the 4.6L 32 valve V-8 Cobra engine. Sticker prices for the Mustang start at $20,755 for the base convertible up to $28,135 for the Cobra; destination charges add $525. Supplies are good and Ford is offering customer rebates of $750 to $1,500 on Mustang coupe and convertible models, (except Cobra), that expires July 7th.

Probe Coupe

This front drive model was initially designed to replace the Mustang when it debuted during the 1988 model year. A joint Michigan effort between Ford and Mazda, (now called AutoAlliance International, Inc.) the Ford Probe is the mechanical twin to the recently discontinued Mazda MX-6 coupe. Available in base and GT models, its mixed heritage brings the best of Detroit and Japan to the party. I recently drove a base coupe, powered by the standard 2.0L double overhead cam four cylinder engine bolted to four speed automatic gearbox, an $895 option. This powertrain is nimble, quick and responsive at speed. Steering and handling was well balanced — one of those cars that is fun to drive hard. The driver is treated to a full bank of analog displays and controls, while the view from the driver's seat is decent. The driver's seat was very comfortable while the "memory recline" feature is a nice touch. The fifty/fifty folding rear seatback makes the most of the available cargo space. Although the engine compartment is snug, fluids are clearly marked and easily seen. A short list of gripes include: a high lift over into the cargo area from the hatch, a lack of cupholders for back seat passengers, and that awful "chiclet" radio — too many buttons makes it difficult to use. Standard safety features include: dual airbags and side impact door beams. Four wheel anti-lock brakes are a $820 option, ($650 on the GT model). Traction control is not available. EPA fuel economy ranges from 26 city/33 highway for the 2.0L four cylinder/five speed manual to 20 city/26 highway for the optional 2.5L six cylinder/four speed automatic. Retail sticker prices range from $14,355 to $16,855 for the GT model. Destination charge adds $400. If you want to own a new Ford Probe, you better hurry. This model year is its last and Ford currently has $800 in customer cash on the Probe that expires July 7th. Supplies of this model are good.



Pontiac Trans Am Ram-Air Convertible bulges with hard muscle

By Bob Plunkett
Special to Midland Reporter-Telegram

POMONA, Calif. — With power top popped, a driver pinned this ragtop's bonnet down in order to cruise Mission Boulevard through the heart of Pomona, home of the Pomona Raceway that kindled California's suboulture of hot rods.

Sunshine warms a fat little sport steering wheel and leather top knot on the shifter stick. On a clear afternoon in La-La-Land with Mt. Baldy towering in the distance, it's a good day to see and be seen.

So we're showing out on the streets of Pomona, because this convertible draws the eye and demands attention. The incredible cantilever of a windshield rakes so far back that it tips over the cockpit like a fighter jet's acrylic canopy.

And check those twin flared scoops bulging on top of that long front hood. Consider these the seething nostrils of a dragon car which screams on big Z-rated rubber and spits fire when provoked.

It's the meanest monster on the boulevard, Pontiac Firebird's legendary Trans Am cast as slinky convertible and beefed up with new forced-air induction to make this drop-top the Grade-A muscle meat for power maniacs.

Go ahead: Punch the pedal and provoke it.

And I do, revving up the strength of more than 300 horses before releasing a tight clutch. The deep, throaty roar of this street serpent, channeled through dual back pipes, warns all challengers to get out of our way.

Now we're offwith the green light of a signal, smoking up an on-ramp of the 210 freeway and flying north toward Baldy to play with some dicy curve sets cast over slopes of the San Gabriel Mountains.

What makes this flame-spitter so unusual — after its convertible configuration and those sexy low lines — concerns the way it handles not only on a straight stretch but around tight-turn corners too: It hunkers and hugs.

Pontiac's most powerful convertible rides on a stable mid-size platform and carries the appropriate mechanical weapons to perform nimble tricks through twisty stuff. Quickaction rack and pinion steering with power assistance, plus a lively independent suspension with monotube gas-charged shocks, contribute to the control a driver commands.

The suspension, with short and long front arms and rear track bar, represents a significant improvement over previous generational predecessors of Trans Am, which begged to be steered strictly in a straight line.

Then the convertible's new Ram-Air package applies stiffer suspension components and special shock valving, which spur a firmer ride quality more akin to the feel of high-performance sports cars.

With classic sports-car setup, the front-mounted 5.7-liter V8 from Corvette's previous issue supplies outrageous forced-induction power to rear wheels.

Before attaching the ram-air fix, this plant generates a total of 285 horsepower, enhanced in part due to a dual converter exhaust system with small catalytic converter installed in each pipe in place of a single large converter.

Twin pipes and the twin small converters create a greater exhaust volume which means less back pressure so the engine can breathe better — and the better the breath, the better the power output.

Tack on forced induction from the Ram-Air package, along with twin port hood scoops to drive outside air into the engine, and it musters even more usable power.

Final output climbs to 305 hp, with enormous torque (350 lbs/ft) exerted.

With the Ram-Air package, Trans Am~~s stick gains another forward gear to become a tight-ratio 6-speed manual, but an automatic 4-speed is offered optionally.

The manual-6 slides like a sled and feels far more user-friendly than shifters on other muscle cars. The sixth gear, functioning as an advanced overdrive, can be deployed only at excessive speed where there's still torque available when you need it.

There's so much power here that a prudent driver must constantly guard against a lead foot on the accelerator. Without such caution, you're destined to meet the local law enforcement officials because, with that raked windshield, sporty convertible stance and bulging hoodline, Trans Am Ram-Air looks like it's speeding even when parked.

If you like the basic look of Pontiac's monster but don't need the overdose of adrenalin inflicted from such a power rush, other choices appear.

Trans Am represents the performance end of Pontiac's Firebird mid-size machine coined in both coupe and convertible styles. The convertible variations, each with the same racy lines and soR-top styling, begin with the value model, Firebird, and extend to Firebird Formula before leaping to Trans Am with its ultimate Ram-Air edition.

Major differences concern power because at entry level Firebird stocks GM's 3800 series 3.8-liter V6, rated at 200 hp, while Formula uses the 285 hp V8 of Trans Am but without an extra air-induced kick.

These variations look best not with visual inspection but an examination of their respective bottom lines.

Firebird Convertible tallies to $23,560, which includes the power-operated top with rear glass window, plus many items liRed from the option list of Firebird's coupe, like air conditioning, cruise control and power movement for mirrors and windows. A 5-speed manual transmission is also included, with automatic 4-speed available for $815.

Firebird Formula Convertible at $26,979 adds the V8 tied to 4-speed auto shifter, 4-wheel disc brakes with anti-lock controls and performance suspension components.

Trans Am Convertible begins at $28,899, as adorned with specific rounded front fascia, integrated foglamps and rocker panel extensions, plus bonus items like a leatherwrapped sport steering wheel with radio controls and remote keyless entry, while the Ram-Air package brings another $2,995 to the line with chromed alloy wheels applied.
