Oil imports at eight-year high

NEW YORK (AP) — Oil imports last month surged to the highest rate since 1980 as domestic production fell and consumption rose, reviving fears that foreign producers may soon control more than half of U.S. oil supplies, energy analysts said Wednesday.

The American Petroleum Institute, which represents major oil producers and refiners, said U.S. crude oil production fell to 7.9 million barrels a day, a 3.4 percent drop from January 1988.

Alaskan production, which in recent years offset declines in other parts of the United States, slipped for the second straight month with no major new oil fields tapped, the Washington, D.C.-based group said in its monthly report. About a quarter of U.S. oil comes from Alaska.

Imports of oil and oil products surged to a rate of 8.2 million barrels a day, an increase of 20.6 percent over the January 1988 level of 6.8 million barrels. It was the first month that imports averaged more than 8 million barrels since 1980, the API said.

Last year, imports jumped to the highest level since 1979 and domestic production hit a 12-year low, according to an earlier API report.

Of the 18.3 million barrels of oil consumed daily in the United States, 45 percent is from foreign sources and experts say that number will soon exceed 50 percent.

About 15 percent of U.S. imports are from Persian Gulf countries. Larger percentages come from Latin America, including Venezuela and Mexico, and from the North Sea.

"We better do something to ensure that this dependency doesn't cause us economic and security problems," said John Sawhill, former deputy energy secretary and now a director of the McKinsey & Co. Inc. management consultant firm.

"We're putting ourselves in a situation where we're gradually going to become more dependent and at some point OPEC is going to be in a position to curtail our supplies."

Weak oil prices have curtailed incentives to find and develop new oil in the United States. Furthermore, because imports are cheaper, experts predict they will continue increasing.

Proven, or recoverable, U.S. reserves are about 26.5 billion barrels, or 3 percent of total world reserves, said John Redpatch, an oil analyst with Security Analysis Inc. in Washington.

That compared with 170 billion barrels, or 19 percent, of proven reserves held by Saudi Arabia, he said.

"Out of all the oil left in the world today to be produced and exploited...about two-thirds is in the Middle East," he said. "So sooner or later if we continue consuming oil the way we do now we are going to become dependent on Middle East supplies — sometime in the next century."

Futures prices break 'barrier'

From Staff and Wire Reports

Energy futures prices broke through an important price barrier and posted significant gains Wednesday after reports that non-OPEC oil producers have proposed limiting their output of crude oil by 300,000 barrels a day.

Crude oil futures settled 83 cents higher in the spot month of March, with the contract for delivery reaching $18.25 a barrel. By midmorning West Texas Intermediate futures had gained another 11 cents to $18.36. Gains ranging from 29 cents to 66 cents were registered in the back months at the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Permian Basin crude purchasers responded to the strong gain by boosting their posted prices by 50 cents a barrel to $16.75 effective Wednesday.

Among the buyers announcing a 50-cent hike were Permian Corp., Texaco Transportation & Trading Co., Marathon Oil Co., Koch Oil Co., Phillips Petroleum Co., Pride Pipeline Co. and Sun Refining & Marketing Co.

One local buyer's representative speculated that prices "won't have to stay above $18 for too long, before we see another price move."

The runup in crude oil helped heating stocks climb 1.29 cents to 1.64 cents higher, with March at 48.74 cents a gallon; unleaded gasoline rose .45 cent to 1.44 cents, with March at 48.77 cents a gallon.

Basin area may get weekend rain

From Staff Reports

A continued chance of rain through the weekend is the forecast from the National Weather Service as one Pacific system moves out of the Permian Basin and another moves in.

The service, with local offices located at Midland International Airport, foresees a gradual decrease in the chance of wet weather through Sunday morning, according to Meteorologist Constantine Pashos.

Midlanders this morning were feeling the tail end of a system centered over the Big Bend area. Airport instruments measured .18 of an inch of rain after recording only a trace Wednesday, Pashos said.

Feeling the brunt of the system were residents in the Alpine-Marfa-Fort Davis area near Big Bend and the Davis Mountains southwest of Midland. Marfa instruments recorded .4 of an inch of rain through this morning.

Even as the current system vacates the area, another was preparing to make an entranee, Pashos said, surveying a system centered off Baja California.

That system should reach the area Friday afternoon, bringing more Pacific moisture with it, Pashos said.

Temperatures have remained above normal the last five days as the weather phenomenon known as the Jet Stream — strong easterly winds high in the atmosphere — protects West Texas from cold temperatures of a Canadian origin.

The Jet Stream has effectively blocked weather from northern regions reaching the Permian Basin and left room for easterly moving weather systems from Baja California, said Pashos.

The weather service is predicting a 90 percent chance of continued rain tonight, a 60 percent chance Friday, a 30 percent chance Saturday and less than a 10 percent chance Sunday morning.

Temperatures should range from the mid- to upper 30s to the mid- to upper 40s, Pashos said, adding that 50 degree temperature are a possibility Sunday.

STATE

Widespread rain was expected to continue across Texas through Friday with thunderstorms possible over North Texas and the Concho Valley and freezing rain expected in the Panhandle tonight.

Forecasts called for mostly cloudy skies statewide through Friday.

Lows tonight will be in the 30s in the Panhandle and in the 40s across the rest of West Texas, in the 30s and 40s across North Texaas and in the 40s and 50s across most of South Texas except in extreme southern portions where readings will be in the 60s.

Highs Friday will be mostly in the 40s in West Texas, ranging from the upper 30s in the Panhandle to the upper 50s in extreme western portions and the upper 60s in the Big Bend area, in the 40s and 50s across North Texas and in the 40s and 50s across South Texas.

A cold front stretched along the coastal plains into extreme South Texas today, located from just north of Beaumont westward to Corpus Christi and to just south of Laredo.

Arsenic pollution of water spreading

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Deadly arsenic in shallow groundwater is definitely a "problem," particularly in West Texas sandy loamy soil where cotton is planted.

"It is a problem, but I don't know how widespread it is," Mark Hoelscher, manager of the Martin County Underground Water Conservation District, said today.

But traces of arsenic, a poison which accumulates in the body and can cause death and cancer, has been "located in areas where groundwater is shallow — close to the surface — and the soil is sandy," said Hoelscher.

And "usually," said Hoelscher, any arsenic-tainted water is found "under areas where cotton is grown. The contamination is coming from the soil."

Arsenic contamination in underground water was first found in Knott in Howard County northeast of Midland in December 1983 when cattle were found dead from arsenic poisoning, Hoelscher said. The problem is worsening, he said, apparently due to arsenic-laced chemicals used in agricultural production.

Local firm ready to run on CNG fuel

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant Business/Oil Editor

After several "false starts" in recent years, compressed natural gas appears poised to explode as a vehicle fuel in coming months.

One local company is positioning itself to take advantage of the coming boom. Pinnacle Gas Co., owned by Midlanders John Smart and Charles Kuss, has recently purchased a 25 percent stake Continental Gas Co. of Denver.

Continental has contracted to convert more than 100 ground support vehicles at Stapleton International Airport to CNG power and expects to begin delivering gas by March 1.

Denver is an attractive market for CNG because of the city's well-documented air pollution problems and stringent ordinances aimed at cleaning up the "brown cloud."

Recently introduced state legislation proposed by General Land Office Commissioner Garry Mauro would mandate conversion of many of Texas' largest vehicle fleets. Mauro is in town today drumming up support for his bill, addressing the Permian Basin Petroleum Association's board of directors' luncheon.

Rock Hudson's gay lover wins $14.5 million

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A jury awarded Rock Hudson's lover $14.5 million — $3.5 million more than he sought — in a case that appears to increase the legal responsibility of AIDS sufferers to tell sexual companions of their plight.

In what one expert called a landmark decision, the jury declared Wednesday that Hudson engaged in "outrageous conduct" before his death by withholding his AIDS diagnosis from Marc Christian so he could continue their sexual affair.

The settlement could go still higher. Jurors were scheduled to return today to hear evidence and consider punitive damages against Mark Miller, Hudson's secretary, who was found to have conspired to keep the late actor's AIDS diagnosis a secret.

Hudson's estate and Miller were co-defendants in the seven-week trial in Los Angeles Superior Court, where jurors listened to often-lurid testimony about the late star's sex life before deciding in favor of Christian, 35.

"I'm very pleased, very pleased that they (the jurors) answered the way they did on all the questions," Christian said, adding that the verdict shows "people have a duty to disclose if they have AIDS to their lovers."

Some pay price for parking tickets

By CHRIS VAN WAGENEN
Staff Writer

Some people make a hobby out of collections.

Earlier this week, Midland Police Department ordered a number of cars towed away to the surprise of their owners.

"Anyone who has more than $100 worth is running a real risk out there," said Midland Municipal Judge Robin Smith, whose court collects between $12,000 to $14,000 in parking fines each month.

But Midland Police Lt. Jerry Morris, who heads up the department's traffic division, said the towing of vehicles is nothing new.

"I don't think the problem is any greater than its been in the past," said Morris. "We usually get a court-issued list every month...we just haven't received it lately."

Because of that, those who read the meters, are now catching up with offenders — in some cases towing off their vehicles straight to the city pound until the fines are satisfied.

City officials estimate between eight to 10 vehicles are on the list to be towed each month.

Judge Smith said some fines are being satisfied with credit cards. For those who don't have the cash, the court is willing to work out a time payment plan.

NATION

More rain was forecast in the Tennessee Valley today, but flash flood watches have been discontinued in Kentucky, where flooding the last few days was labeled the worst in a decade.

Moisture continued along a stationary front that reached from southern Texas to the mid-Atlantic coast, and flash flood watches were posted early today for much of Arkansas, western Tennessee, southeast Missouri, southern Illinois and portions of West Virginia.

Between 6 and 10 inches of rain have been measured since Sunday night in Kentucky, where the Rolling Fork River was expected to crest at an all-time high of 18 feet above flood stage tonight. The rain was tapering off by late Wednesday.

Flight 103 bomb was in tape player

LOCKERBIE, Scotland (AP) — The bomb that blasted Pan Am Flight 103 out of the skies over Scotland on Dec. 21 was planted in a radio-cassette player and was probably loaded aboard the plane in Frankfurt, the detective heading the international investigation said today.

Detective Chief Superintendent John Orr refused to describe the size of the stereo recorder. A total of 270 people were killed when the New-York jet exploded, including 259 aboard the plane and 11 on the ground.

He also said it was not certain the bomb was put aboard in Frankfurt. But answering questions, he said "the balance of probabilities" pointed to Frankfurt, where the flight originated, rather than London where it took on new passengers and changed to a Boeing 747.

"While there is insufficient evidence at this stage to establish the identity of the person or group responsible for this dreadful crime, the progress made and the evidence obtained has been substantial," Orr told a news conference. Asked whether the discovery would direct the investigation to a particular country, Orr said: "It may."

"The particular baggage which contained the device has not been identified at this stage, but there is the most detailed work under way, with forensic assistance, to achieve this identification," he said.

Orr said the baggage container had been reconstructed from pieces scattered over 40 miles of hills, forests and pasture east of Lockerbie, the Scottish town that bore the brunt of the flaming wreckage.

While not spelling out why he believed the bomb was planted in Frankfurt, he said: "The reconstruction of the baggage container suggests that the explosive device may have been among the baggage from the Frankfurt flight."

He said the container was filled mostly with baggage from Frankfurt and a small amount of "inter-line" baggage from connecting flights.

Orr said he was aware of "certain aspects" of the explosive used, but he would not elaborate.

American woman shot to death in north Lebanon

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — An American woman was shot in the head and killed while driving her car in north Lebanon, one of her friends said today.

Gail Pascoe Harfoush, 38, a native of Washington, D.C., was killed Wednesday afternoon as she drove her Mercedes-Benz from Tripoli to the village of Burj Akkar, 25 miles away, said her friend, Marilyn Rashka.

Ms. Rashka, an American who lives in Beirut, said she heard about Mrs. Harfoush's death from friends whom she declined to identify.

She said Mrs. Harfoush was shot twice in the head and neck. Ms. Rashka said the motive for the killing was unknown.

The victim's husband, Abdul-Majed Harfoush, works in Washington as a taxi driver. Mrs. Harfoush had stayed in Lebanon because she was supervising workers building a house for the family, her friend said.

George Wolf/Reporter-Telegram

GAS

Political, environmental, technical and economic forces are all coming to bear on the issue at the same time.

CNG is politically attractive because domestic supplies of natural gas could stem the flood of imported oil being used for transportation uses.

While Mauro's bill specifies CNG as the alternate fuel for conversion as a means of stimulating gas sales in the state, Colorado statutes require emission reductions by use of alternative fuels, without dictating CNG, methanol, ethanol or oxygenated fuels.

However, Smart says that CNG's economic advantages stand to make it the fuel of choice as Coloradans move to comply with the law.

Through its investment in Continental, Pinnacle has access to a unique natural gas-powered hydraulic gas compressor, which reduces the compression costs for the 2,400 to 3,000 psi pressures needed for transportation CNG to about one-third the cost of traditional multi-stage electric compression.

Compression costs of 4 or 5 cents per gallon-equivalent are possible with the patent-pending Continental Gas Co. equipment, Kuss said. Compression costs have been one historic barrier in efforts to market CNG.

Natural gas will maintain its price competitiveness against gasoline and diesel in the future, Kuss says, because of the minimal processing required to make field gas ready for vehicular consumption, compared to the extensive and economically less efficient process of defining gasoline from crude oil.

While price will be the ultimate determining factor for private sector conversion, "establishing a 'comfort level' with the safety and technology of CNG," is a key hurdle to be cleared, according to Smart.

The physical properties of natural gas make it safer than gasoline: it dissipates into the air if leaked rather than pooling, offering the potential for burning or exploding; has a much higher ignition point than gasoline; and the Department of Transportation-approved pressurized tanks required as part of a CNG system are routinely more durable than the vehicles in which they are installed.

One study cited by Kuss documents nearly 2 million miles driven by CNG-powered vehicles without a single fuel-related fatality, in contrast to conventionally fueled vehicles, where fire and explosion are primary injury risks.

Pinnacle is gearing up for burgeoning demand, having just bought 6,000 CNG fuel tanks for vehicle installation from Southern California Gas Co. in Los Angeles. Availability of the thick-walled DOT-approved tanks needed for safe on-road operation are seen as the most likely supply bottleneck as demand picks up.

Each vehicle conversion requires four to six tanks, depending on the configuration.

There are various suppliers of the fuel regulator and mixer components vital to conversion kits and other needed equipment. Abundant supplies of gas are also readily available both in Texas and Colorado.

With open access to the nation's gas pipelines, potentially attractive CNG markets aren't limited to producing areas, Smart added.

For its Stapleton project, Continental is bypassing the local utility pipeline and will be supplying gas by truck, off-loading with compression directly into vehicles. As the market develops, the Midlanders expect to see greater cooperation with the local distribution company in setting up on-line fueling stations as a means of increasing transportation income for the LDC.

Continental has identified more than 60,000 vehicles in the Denver area as prime conversion candidates, setting a modest goal of a 6-to-8 percent market share.

Exhaust emissions are not the only environmental issue that CNG addresses, Kuss points out. One business prospect for the company, a bakery on Long Island, N.Y. is interested in converting its fleet as a means of eliminating underground fuel storage tanks in its yard.

With the Environmental Protection Agency stepping up enforcement efforts to monitor underground leaks and levying hefty clean-up fines in the process, above ground storage of CNG could prove an attractively priced alternative, Kuss said.

Continental and Pinnacle are taking a unconventional approach to marketing CNG conversion to fleet operators.

As gas consultants and marketers, Smart and Kuss have expertise in buying, gathering and reselling gas in the field. Through their Continental co-venturers — Vancouver-based BC Sugar Co. and Industrial Gas Service, a Denver gas engineering and consulting firm — they have gained know-how in vehicle conversion, gas compression and non-traditional delivery methods.

The Midland duo, along with local partner Mike Barrett, believe they are first company to offer a turnkey CNG package — providing gas supplies; conversion kit installation, maintenance and warranty; and fueling facilities — all under a single contract.

The company hopes to encourage local fleet operators which have initiated pilot programs in the past to follow through with additional conversion. The Midland Independent School District and the City of Midland each have some CNG vehicles already on the road.

In addition to lower initial fuel costs, cleaner burning natural gas can significantly extend the life of an engine, doubling the distance between oil changes and other routine maintenance.

Conversion kits are transferrable, so companies buying kits for a fleet today can pull them off and reinstall them when vehicles are traded in.

Even with the conversion in place, vehicles remain capable of being powered by gasoline or diesel, so drivers do not run a risk of being stranded if they run out of CNG far from a refueling station.

Fleet operators whose fuel consumption averages six gallons of gasoline or 15 gallons of diesel per vehicle daily are considered likely economic candidates for conversion, Smart said.

WATER

Without the defoliant, farmers would have to wait until late autumn's first freeze to kill the leaves and caused them to fall off prior to sending cotton-strippers into their fields.

"If you didn't have arsenic acid, you'd have to wait for the first freeze to kill the leaves," he said.

Hoelscher, who will be carrying out a systematic testing of water wells in Martin County, recommends that people who have access to groundwater, particularly below sandy-loam soil, get the water tested before drinking.

Arsenic "renders the water undrinkable," he said. "Once it's there, it's there."

And once arsenic is ingested, "It never leaves the body. It accumulates" and is not dissipated. And that's "why it's not safe to drink" water contaminated by arsenic. 'It is a health threat. It's a long-term threat."

The Texas Department of Agriculture this week confirmed that six pesticides, including arsenic, were found in 44 of 116 wells tested last year in North, South and West Texas, according to the Texas Department of Agriculture.

"The bad news is these results are no surprise," said Assistant Agriculture Commissioner Susan Rieff of the contamination of groundwater resources.

Of the 116 wells sampled, 96 were used in part for household purposes, according to the TDA.

The water wells were sampled in Dawson, El Paso, Haskell, Hidalgo, Howard, Knox, Lynn, Martin and Terry counties. Arsenic was found in wells in seven of the nine counties. None was detected in Haskell and Knox counties.

In Dawson, Hidalgo, Howard, Martin and Terry counties, concentrations of arsenic at or above federally-established safe drinking levels were found in 27 wells, the Texas Department of Agriculture The Associated Press.

A particular danger in the defoliants, Hoelscher said, is building up "hugh piles of (cotton) trash" collected in fields. "Now it's setting in one big pile," he said, and rain water will cause the arsenic to leach through the pile and into the soil and into shallow water supplies.

Arsenic will not bond to sandy loam soil, which is cotton West Texas farms, and may leach into the shallow ground water.

But the if arsenic acid is "spread out" widely over a field, "it won't hurt anything."

"If you have sandy soil and cotton production," he said, "you need to test your grand water."

Arsenic may be found in "many places," but Hoelscher said, "The problem is when you get the combination" of shallow water and cotton production.

"Nothing can be done about the arsenic in the water," Hoelscher said. "You can use the water for many things but not for drinking. You can use it for bathing and washing dishes, the whole nine yards."

Hoelscher noted that "It's important to remember that arsenic is something that you don't taste. And you can't smell it. And if it's there, it's just there, and it's going to get you. The ultimate symptom is death."

"It can be a problem because of the use of arsenic in defoliants," said Jed Barker, a sanitarian with the Texas Department of Health in Midland. "It's on the leaves of cotton, and the cotton leaves fall off. It's also on the bolls and on the trash."

After cotton is ginned, the contaminated trash may be buried. And through leaching on sandy soil, the poison could infiltrate the shallow water table.

"It can kill you," Barker said. And chronic low levels can lead to cancer and genetic problems.

"But we generally don't like getting into the banking business ... we'll do it, but only if there's no other choice," he said."

Midland meter employees issue between 3,500 to 4,000 parking tickets per month in the downtown area, according to the court. Fines range from as little a $5 for an expired meter to $50 for parking in a handicapped area.

"Where they get into problems is when the let they fines double after 10 days," said Smith. "We used to have people that would run up more than $1,000 (in tickets), but we get them now before those fines get that high."

Morris said police don't make a point of running plates for the sake of running plates. However, if a vehicle is parked illegally and also is on a list of outstanding warrants, it is towed.

City officials suspect the number of tickets issued will decline once the traffic department completes an ongoing meter conversion program that will give motorists more time for their money.

Two weeks ago, council announced plans to modify 51 parking meters in a four block area both west and south of the courthouse from one-hour parking to two.

The four-phase program, which was prompted by numerous complaints by downtown visitors, eventually will provide extended parking at 360 parking meters. "Hopefully, the number of tickets will go down once when they've (the city) made the change," said Morris.

In the meantime, Judge Smith said he's exploring the possibility of listing all outstanding tickets by interfacing the court's computer with the police department's own system.

Aside from Hudson's fame, the case was unusual because Christian apparently was not infected by the AIDS virus in spite of his exposure. It is believed to be the first case of its type in which damages were awarded to a plaintiff who had not developed physical symptoms of AIDS.

Christian claimed he was entitled to compensation for the emotional distress of fearing he would get AIDS, a fatal illness that attacks the body's immune system.

Margaret Davis, an attorney and author of "Lovers, Doctors & The Law," said the Hudson case is "absolutely a landmark" that will likely encourage other lawsuits by people who are "deceived by promises in the dark."

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A desert power plant burns enough cow dung to electrify up to 20,000 homes, thanks to 250,000 cattle, $37 million in tax-exempt bonds and an environmentalist-lawyer seeking his fortune as an "entremanure."

It's the first commercial power plant that burns only cattle chips for fuel, although smaller facilities "digest" manure to produce methane to generate electricity, said Will Parish, founder and president of National Energy Associates Inc.

Parish, 36, left his job with a San Francisco law firm to start the Mill Valley company, which he said is dedicated to "doing well by doing good" by building profitable but socially and environmentally responsible energy projects.

The $46 million, 17½-megawatt Mesquite Lake Resource Recovery Project, financed by the bonds plus $9 million from investors, is located next to its fuel supply: cattle feedlots near Imperial in the desert about 110 miles east of San Diego. It fired up in November 1987 and began continuous on-line electricity production last October.

"It truly is a unique plant," said Bill McCroskey, a project development manager for Southern California Edison Co.

"We are presently buying power from them (under a 30-year contract). The plant satisfactorily passed its operating test last fall. They are considered a reliable energy source."

The plant runs at 70 percent to 85 percent of its maximum capacity as its construction company, Lurgi Corp. of Frankfurt, West Germany, "tweaks" it toward full net capacity of 15 megawatts, enough to power 15,000 to 20,000 homes using 800 to 900 tons of manure daily, Parish said. The plant runs on the other 2½ megawatts it produces.

Parish said the plant's output represents annual savings of 300,000 barrels of oil that otherwise would be burned for power, and relieves pressure on Imperial Valley landfills.

Until the entrepreneur came along, feedlot owners paid to have manure carted away and dumped. It has little value as fertilizer because it contains too much salt and weed seeds. Now NEA buys the dung for $1 per ton from 15 feedlots.

"I've been called a manure mogul," Parish joked. "My alma mater ...referred to me in the alumni notes as the class of 1975's first 'entremanure.'"

Loaders scoop up manure from some 250,000 cattle, and about 60 trucks deliver it to the Mesquite Lake plant, where "we stack it like a precious commodity," Parish said.

Conveyor belts feed 40 tons of manure an hour into the plant, where it is dried and dropped into special furnaces. The heat produces more than 150,000 pounds of steam hourly to drive a turbine and electric generator.

Because the power plant qualified as a waste recovery operation, the California Pollution Control Financing Authority issued $37.2 million in bonds to help finance construction. NEA raised $9 million more by forming a limited partnership. Repayment of the 20-year, investment-grade bonds is guaranteed by National Westminster Bank USA.

"We have seen a number of unusual proposals, and this is clearly one of them," Keith Seegmiller, the financing authority's deputy executive secretary, said by phone from Sacramento.

Parish has called the plant "a cash cow" because "manure costs a penny a kilowatt hour, and we sell electricity at 7 cents a kilowatt hour. That translates on an annual basis to a fuel cost of about $2 million and gross sales of about $10 million, leaving $8 million to cover (other) expenses and profits."

While tax-free bonds are attractive, Parish said it wasn't always easy soliciting partners to invest a minimum of $50,000 each.

"I got questions like, 'What will happen if the cattle get constipated?'" Parish recalled.

The power plant yields about 160 tons of ash daily, but Parish expects to be selling all of it by year's end.

Bush seeks civil rights chief to reverse Reynolds' policies

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — The four top candidates for the Justice Department's chief civil rights job all would sharply change the controversial policies that William Bradford Reynolds followed for the last eight years.

A leading candidate is Evan Kemp Jr., a disabled-rights advocate who publicly battled Reynolds over a proposal to reduce anti-discrimination protection for handicapped people.

Kemp, a member of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, is being considered for the post of assistant attorney general in charge of the Justice Department's civil rights division, said administration sources.

Confined to a wheelchair, Kemp has been an advocate for handicapped Americans and once successfully sued the Securities and Exchange Commission after being told his disability would bar his promotion to supervisor.

Also under consideration are Daniel Rinzel, minority chief counsel to the Senate's permanent investigations subcommittee and Martin Gerry, former head of the Office of Civil Rights for the Department of Health, Education and Welfare who has served as counsel to the Wednesday Group of moderate House Republicans.

A former career Justice Department employee, Rinzel once headed the criminal section of the civil rights division and set records for the number of cases brought. That performance won him a promotion under Reynolds to deputy assistant attorney general.

Another candidate is James P. Turner, longtime career deputy assistant attorney general in the division who early in the civil rights movement prosecuted white supremacists and other rights violators in the deep South, sources said.

"Everyone on the list would turn it around," one of the candidates, who knows the others, said on condition of anonymity.

David Runkel, an aide to Attorney General Dick Thornburgh, said "we're looking for someone whose views reflect Thornburgh's and the president's views on the importance of the civil rights division."

"We're looking for somebody who can work with civil rights organizations," said Runkel.

The major civil rights organizations tangled regularly with Reynolds throughout the Reagan administration.

Reynolds helped formulate and direct the Reagan administration's policy of challenging affirmative action hiring quotas. He also moved to overturn court-ordered busing programs and to restrict federal guarantees for women's rights and the rights of the mentally ill and disabled.

Without committing himself on specific issues, President Bush has said he wants civil rights policy to be sharply different from that followed under Ronald Reagan.

After meeting with the attorney general last month, Jackson praised Thornburgh and said, "The lights have been turned back on in the Justice Department."

Runkel noted Thornburgh's "interest in the civil rights area that goes back to the 1960s."

"He knows many of the civil rights leaders first hand," Runkel said. "He is personally committed to making sure the laws are enforced."

While Thornburgh is still reviewing other applications, Kemp "is certainly a leading candidate," said one source, who spoke Wednesday on condition of anonymity.

Kemp confirmed in a telephone interview that he met with Thornburgh this week and was told a decision would be made "in a couple of weeks."

The appointment, which will be made by Bush with Thornburgh's recommendation, is subject to Senate confirmation.

Kemp said he had been told earlier by White House counsel C. Boyden Gray that he was a leading candidate for the position and nothing that Thornburgh said during their meeting dispelled that impression.

"I just thought it was a good interview," Kemp said.

Without directly criticizing Reynolds, Kemp said the GOP's failure to attract black voters was due in part to the Reagan administration's civil rights record.

"I think it's very important for the Republican Party to have a civil rights record they can run on and attract votes from groups covered by the civil rights laws."

"I've seen estimates as low as 9 percent of the black voters voted for Bush in 1988," Kemp said. "I don't think that's good for black people to be taken for granted by the Democratic Party or for this country."

Washington State wildlife officials check out their first captured sea lion Wednesday in Seattle, where sea lions have been devastating runs of salmon and steelhead trout.

Senate communications panel reportedly holds stock in industry

WASHINGTON (AP) — Members of a Senate communications panel held stock in the industry and acted on issues that could have affected their holdings, a practice that is forbidden in the executive branch but legal for lawmakers.

Critics complain about the double standard on conflict-of-interest rules, but others say it would be impossible to apply the same standards to the executive and legislative branches.

The Associated Press selected the communications subcommittee of the Senate Commerce, Science and Transportation Committee to show examples of stock holdings and congressional action. Financial information for the 11 senators came from their disclosure forms for 1987, the most recent year available.

Sen. Ernest F. Hollings, D-S.C., the committee's chairman and member of the subcommittee, had larger holdings in telecommunications than any other senator on the communications panel.

On Aug. 21, 1987, he bought about $100,000 worth of stock in McCaw Cellular Communications Inc., the day the company went public. In December, Hollings helped postpone the Federal Communications Commission's plans to hold lotteries for licensing cellular telephones in rural areas, according to Sen. Brock Adams, D-Wash.

As committee chairman, Hollings had to approve a Jan. 27, 1988, communications subcommittee hearing on the FCC's proposed lottery idea. John E. McCaw Jr., executive vice president of McCaw, testified in opposition to portions of the FCC's plan.

Hollings said he didn't know he owned the stock because his broker bought it for him.

"As soon as it was brought to my attention that I owned it, I told him to get rid of it, which he did," Hollings said through a spokesman. He said he first found out about his holdings in McCaw in February 1988, but it is unclear whether he made a profit or a loss on the stock. Some of the stock was sold in November 1987.

In 1987, Hollings also sold between $100,000 and $250,000 in stock and $2,000 and $10,000 in options in General Electric Corp., which in 1986 purchased the National Broadcasting Co.

A communications subcommittee member, Sen. Ted Stevens, R-Alaska, said he had no qualms about his longtime interest in Northern Television in Anchorage, Alaska, which owns two television stations and two radio stations in his home state. The holding is worth less than $5,000.

"It's not a substantial holding," Stevens said. His votes include one against a bill extending the fairness doctrine, which required stations to air opposing views.

Marla Romash, an aide to Sen. Albert Gore Jr., D-Tenn., said the senator is sensitive to conflict of interest issues but hasn't felt the $1,540 in Tandy Corp. stock owned by his wife, Tipper, to be an issue. Tandy, which manufactures electronic goods including telephones, is the parent company of Radio Shack.

Officials capture two sea lions in battle to save migrating fish

SEATTLE (AP) — Wildlife agents who trapped two sea lions in a floating cage planned to release the mammals on the southwest Washington coast and hope they don't swim right back for the easy pickings of fish at a spawning ladder.

If the ploy works, it'll be a first. So far, protective nets, tape recordings of killer whales, firecrackers and foul-tasting chemicals have all proved powerless against the voracious California sea lions.

For five years, sea lions have been hanging out at the Ballard Locks a few miles north of downtown Seattle, wolfing down the steelhead and salmon that use a fish ladder to get from Puget Sound to Lake Washington and the spawning streams beyond.

Some local fishing advocates suggest the 20 or so beasts be shot, but they are protected by federal law.

According to federal agents, one of the two sea lions captured Wednesday, known as Blue Eye because of a cataract, has been a problem at the locks for three years.

The plan was to tranquilize the sea lions, attach radio transmitters to them and transport them by truck on a trip of five hours or more to the coast for release today off the Long Beach Peninsula, 250 miles southwest of Seattle.

Bob DeLong, a marine mammal biologist with the National Marine Fisheries Service, admitted that scientists have no idea whether "Operation Goodbye" will work. He conceded that Blue Eye certainly knows the way back.

"He's come back at least three years in a row from California and Mexico and if he wants to come back, he'll return," DeLong said, adding that he could probably make the trip in two days if he hurried.

Wildlife officials said they eventually hope to capture at least a half dozen animals and haul them to the peninsula, then see if they return.

If they don't, the rest of the problem animals that can be caught will be moved, DeLong said.

Wednesday's operation was observed by Ben Deeble of Greenpeace, which has protested some of the anti-sea lion actions in the past but gave qualified support to the removal effort.

Deeble said a primary concern was the drugging of the sea lions, which he said could kill the animals.

Deeble said long-term solutions to the problem of the hungry sea lions would include modifying the approach the fish have to make to the fish ladder, and increasing the number of fish in the watershed. However, that could be difficult at the rate the steelhead are being killed by the sea lions.

Steelhead are rainbow trout which return to their native rivers and streams in western Washington after a few years in the Pacific Ocean.

The male sea lions, which summer in California and Mexico waters and winter off the coasts of Oregon, Washington and British Columbia, have increased dramatically in numbers since the passage of the Marine Mammal Protection Act in the mid-1970s.

Luxury liner strikes anchored Navy vessel

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — A 400-foot luxury liner attempting to dock in the Port of Palm Beach Wednesday night hit an anchored Navy ship and tore several holes in the 110-foot vessel, the U.S. Coast Guard said.

The accident involving the Viking Princess and the unnamed naval cargo loading craft at about 7:30 p.m. caused no serious injuries to passengers or crew, said Coast Guard Petty Officer Jerry Snyder.

"It's a very small harbor," with only two shipping channels and a small area where the cruise liners have to turn around, said Snyder.

Two Coast Guard utility boats plugged three holes below the Navy vessel's water line, and minor flooding was quickly brought under control, Snyder said. No fuel was known to have leaked into the harbor.

Some passengers of the Viking Princess were shaken up, but the crew was able to care for them without assistance, Snyder said.

The West Palm Beach-based ship, owned by Crown Cruise Lines, was returning from an all-day Florida coastline cruise, which it runs three days a week. The other four days a week it sails on a day cruise to Freeport, Bahamas.

Five days earlier, the Miami-based Celebration, owned by Carnival Cruise Lines, sliced a Cuban cargo vessel in two, leaving three Cuban crew members missing off the Cuban coast. No cruise passengers were injured.

Employees of the Chevy Chase Savings Bank embrace outside the bank's Bethesda office Wednesday after a disgruntled employee entered the facility and shot four workers, killing three. The gunmen then killed himself.

'Disgruntled employee' kills three, self

BETHESDA, Md. (AP) — A debt collector who fatally shot three coworkers at a savings and loan bank before killing himself had spent two years in a mental hospital after allegedly asking a police officer to shoot him, a state health official says.

Emanuel Tsegaye, 33, of Silver Spring, Md., argued with a supervisor Wednesday, left work and returned with .38-caliber revolver concealed in an athletic bag, police said. A fourth employee was shot in the jaw, police said.

Tsegaye, a native of Ethiopia, had been a collector reportedly since October in the Visa card department of the Chevy Chase Federal Savings Bank in this Washington suburb. The shootings began in the seventh-floor office where he worked — a large room in which about 75 employees are grouped and separated by six-foot partitions.

Officer George Ludington, spokesman for the Montgomery County police, said Tsegaye was a "disgruntled employee" but would not elaborate. He said detectives were still piecing together the motive.

A spokesman for the Maryland State Health Department said, however, that Tsegaye had been released about a year ago after two years at the Clifton T. Perkins Hospital Center in Jessup, Md.

Tsegaye was sent to the mental hospital after he was ruled criminally insane following his arrest on charges of assaulting a police officer, the spokesman, Mike Golden, told WUSA-TV in Washington.

"All of the people that I have talked to about it are very disturbed, very surprised by it...because all indications were that Mr. Tsegaye was doing very well," Golden told the station.

The station said Tsegaye had originally been arrested after approaching a Montgomery County police officer and saying, "I want to die, kill me," and then reaching for the officer's gun. He was charged with attempted murder in that case, according to the television report.

A Montgomery County police official said late Wednesday the department would not release any details about Tsegaye's background.

The dead women were identified as: Cynthia Mitchell, 28, of Landover, Md.; Tanya Walker, 23, of Fort Washington, Md.; and Mahasty Agha-Khan, 29, of Silver Spring.

Tsegaye also wounded Edward Johnson, 22, of Silver Spring, police said. Johnson, who was shot in the jaw, was in critical condition at Suburban Hospital after surgery.

"I was right next to Ed when he shot him first," said Dean Abellano. "I dived under my chair."

Employee Victor Walker said Tsegaye had had a fight with a male coworker last week and that worker might have been the target of his anger. Others said Tsegaye also had had a disagreement Wednesday with his female supervisor, allegedly about a personal phone call.

But witnesses said neither of those two people was shot.

One of the women who died was killed in the office area, and the other two were shot in a nearby lunch room, Ludington said.

"I had no idea that he would flip," said co-worker Carla Waters.

Wall of molasses collapses building

GERING, Neb. (AP) — A 400,000-gallon tank of molasses burst at a sugar factory, spilling a cascade of sticky liquid that coated three workers and flattened a small building "as if someone had stepped on a pop can."

One of the workers was swept 100 feet out of the building Wednesday and waded through the syrupy flood to help his co-workers from the rubble, Scotts Bluff County sheriff's deputies said. No one was seriously hurt.

"At this point we're just going to try to contain it. There's nothing hazardous about the material. It's just sticky," said John Sagaser, manager of the Western Sugar Co. plant where the accident occurred about 20 miles east of the Wyoming border.

The factory's one-story, modular office-laboratory was demolished when it was buried by a wave of molasses. Sheriff's Deputy Bob DeLara said it looked "as if someone had stepped on a pop can, just squashed it down."

City crews built a dike to keep the molasses from entering a storm sewer. The wave apparently crested at 10 feet, leaving marks that high on walls and piles of dirt nearby.

"We saw this stuff all gushing out and saw the cars by the road," said witness Julie Wooden of Scottsbluff. "We saw people digging themselves out. It looked like a flood."

The three workers caught in the goop, Russell Dilley, 69, Vernon Dyer, 45, of Gering and Gloria Thompson, 45, were treated at Regional West Medical Center in Scotts Bluff for cuts and scrapes.

Sheriff's Deputy Jack Medearis said the workers told him they heard a rumble and knew the building they were in was starting to collapse.

Senate could hold closed-door session to make Tower choice

By STEWART M. POWELL
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — In yet another hurdle to John Tower's confirmation as defense secretary, Senate Armed Services Committee Chairman Sam Nunn raised the possibility Wednesday that the full Senate may hold a rare closed-door session to examine sensitive information on the Texan.

The remarks by the influential chairman of the Senate panel considering Tower's nomination suggested that the White House faces a protracted struggle both in the committee and on the floor of the 100-member Senate to gain acceptance of the embattled nominee.

Sen. J. James Exon, D-Neb., the second ranking Democrat on the 20-member committee, said details of a floor battle over Tower's fitness would leak to the public and "complicate" his ability to be "an effective secretary of defense if and when he's confirmed."

Nunn said the decision on holding an executive session depends on "the type of questions posed on the Senate floor by senators who are not members of the Armed Services Committee. If an accurate answer to these questions includes personal information, I would recommend that a limited closed session be held to answer these questions and only these questions."

Earlier Wednesday, Vice President Dan Quayle said in an interview with the Hearst Newspapers' Washington bureau that the Bush administration would have no objection to such a closed session.

"If the Senate wants to have an executive session and they decide that's what they want to do, it's fine with me," said Quayle, who as vice president serves as president of the Senate.

The political ramifications of such a session, however, could damage prospects for Tower, who served 23 years in the Senate as a Republican from Texas. Going behind closed doors to consider the fitness of a prospective defense secretary, especially one who is a former chairman of the committee now reviewing his record, would be highly unusual, according to Senate staffers.

An investigation by the full Senate also would suggest that questions about Tower linger regarding allegations of alcoholism, womanizing and conflicts of interest when he was a $25,000-a-month defense consultant despite more than 10 weeks of background checks by the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) as well as Senate staffers.

The Senate Armed Services Committee plans to take up Tower's nomination after returning from a 11-day recess that ends Feb. 21. The latest FBI investigation is nearing completion, with Tower still facing another FBI interview, according to White House officials.

Nunn, who has said that senators ultimately may have to make a "subjective judgment" on Tower's qualifications, appears prepared to continue the committee's deliberations despite White House eagerness for a quick decision.

One aide explained: "As long as there's something that the committee feels needs to be checked out, they're not going to close out the investigation."

Quayle, however, expressed impatience, saying: "There is a time that have you to sort of close the doors and say, 'Look, enough is enough, we've got to make our mind up on John Tower.'"

Quayle, who has contacted Democrats as well as Republicans in a bid to build Senate support for the troubled nomination, said the vote by the 20-member committee is crucial. Democrats on the committee last week said that as many as six senators were expressing reservations about Tower's fitness to head the federal government's largest department, a $300 billion-a-year operation with more than 3 million military and civilian employees around the world.

The committee vote "will be very important...very indicative of what kind of support John Tower has not only in the Senate Armed Services Committee but in the entire Senate," Quayle said.

After the committee votes, Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell of Maine will consult Senate Republican leader Robert Dole of Kansas to decide the "best, fairest and most expeditious way to handle the nomination," an aide to Mitchell said.

Mitchell has not decided if a full-Senate executive session is needed, the aide said.

Dole, in response to a question, said a closed-door session was "not necessary."

Gramm hopeful Senate will vote on Tower soon

AUSTIN (AP) — Calling John Tower "the most-investigated living American," U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm says he believes the Senate should vote soon on Tower's nomination as defense secretary.

"We have been fair to Sen. Tower's critics. They have made their case. No I think it's time to be fair to Sen. Tower. I am hopeful that by the end of next week we will have a vote," Gramm said Wednesday.

"Unless something new emerges in the investigations that are being conducted this week, I think Sen. Tower will be confirmed," he added.

Gramm, who succeeded fellow Republican Tower in the Senate in 1985, said the confirmation hearings had shown that Tower's strong pro-defense stand during a 24-year legislative career earned him some enemies.

"He is not the cuddly, teddy bear, loveable kind of guy. He's a hard charger. He had strong views. He supported defense in many years when it wasn't popular. Clearly, you rub some people wrong in doing that," Gramm said.

But Gramm said the Senate hearings on Tower's nomination had been fair.

He said such a full-blown inquiry was needed for two reasons — the importance of the job and Tower's previous stint as chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee.

"We've now spent two months checking out every midnight call and every accusation we've had. I think that's something that needs to be done. I think the American people have a right to know who the person is who is secretary of defense," Gramm said.

"But I think it's a legitimate concern. I think it had to be checked out very closely...I also think the Armed Services Committee rightly decided that they couldn't give him a free ride — that they had to check out any accusation about him — because they did not want someone to come back and say they treated him differently."

However, Gramm added, enough is enough.

"I think you reach a point — whether you're confirming a secretary of defense or whether you're holding a wedding — where you have to say speak now or forever hold your peace," he said.

Stanford accused of exploiting migrants

On one side of the wrangle is prestigious Stanford University. On the other is Webb Ranch, which leases 300 acres from the school and pays the migrants wages below the poverty line to pick berries and vegetables.

Webb charges 75 cents out of every hour worked for rent, so the more hours worked the higher the rent, said Reuben Serna, a spokesman for United Stanford Workers,the union representing 1,200 maintenance workers at the school.

The shacks are a half-mile from the center of campus and have no heat, toilets or running water. During harvest time, they are crowded with up to eight people who pay up to $1,600 a month for the space, Serna said.

The migrants have asked the United Stanford Workers to represent them. Earlier this week the union sent university President Donald Kennedy and the ranch a letter demanding recognition as sole bargaining agent for the farm workers.

Union attorney Jim Eggleston claims that Stanford, as the land's owner, is the workers' true employer under state law and is legally responsible "for the shameful activity that's going on here."

"There are more illegalities, more exploitation of workers, more breaches of workers' rights in this one plot of ground right here than we've seen in a long, long time,' he said Wednesday.

Kennedy declined to comment on the issue, but Stanford attorney Priscilla Wheeler said the university isn't responsible for the employment policies of its lessees or contractors.

"We would, of course, be concerned if any lessee violated the law," Wheeler said in a statement. "So far as we know, Webb Ranch has not done so. If there are issues of mistreatment, we hope they are brought up with the state."

Wheeler acknowledged that the migrants sometimes work on campus as contract workers, but said there is no basis for the union's claim that the university is a joint employer with Webb.

If Kennedy and Webb refuse to accept the bargaining demand by Friday, the union plans to file a petition with the state Agriculture Labor Relations Board that could lead to a vote by the migrants on representation, Eggleston said.

Union officials said Webb receives $8.50 an hour for the contract workers, but pays them only $4.25 and pockets the rest.

Ranch manager Stanley Webb was not available for comment, his office said. Other ranch officials declined to comment.

Whatever doubt remains about the migrants' legal employer, no one denies that their poor living conditions make a striking contrast to the campus 30 miles south of San Francisco, which covers thousands of acres and boasts elegant Spanish-style buildings and eucalyptus trees.

"I think this is a step backward in history," said Art Pulaski of the San Mateo County Central Labor Council. "It's somewhat reminiscent of the company towns, where the employers control people not only at work but at home after work...Stanford University is acting like a Third World employer here."

Tibuecio Cabrera, 67, and his 58-year-old wife, Cointa Mendoza, are among up to 90 migrants — including as many as 20 children — who live in four wooden sheds with four rooms each. Only a few speak any English or read.

Cabrera and his wife have shivered through the winter with the warmth of only a small electric heater and some blankets. They have a hot plate to make tortillas, but there is no running water in their 7-by-8-foot room. Light comes from a bare bulb dangling from a wire tacked to a wall.

Cabrera's last monthly pay receipt shows he worked 194 hours and earned $824.50. But he took home $514.86 after deductions for Social Security, unemployment tax, a $50 personal advance, rent and utilities.

Like the others, Cabrera received no health care, no holidays and no vacation. He said he had to use all his savings to pay for a stomach ailment and got no help from Webb or Stanford.

The camp has only one portable toilet and three indoor toilets with no partitions between them for both men and women. There is a communal kitchen with immovable metal seats for eight. Refrigerators are padlocked between meals.

Judge orders bid to delay North trial dropped

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government says adequate national security safeguards are in place for Oliver North's Iran-Contra trial, and Attorney General Dick Thornburgh is dropping his efforts to delay the case.

North

Thornburgh on Wednesday accepted an order from U.S. District Judge Gerhard A. Gesell barring the attorney general from filing affidavits continuously during the trial objecting to individual pieces of classified material that North wants to introduce in his defense.

The office of independent counsel Lawrence Walsh made it easier for Thornburgh to accept Gesell's order. Walsh devised a plan saying that he will, if necessary, seek an affidavit from the attorney general to prevent the disclosure during the trial of classified information which could harm national security. Walsh's statement added that he "is prepared to discharge his responsibility" under Gesell's order.

Thornburgh said Walsh's promise "provides the government with the substance of what we have been seeking for the past week."

As he left work, Thornburgh told reporters he was satisfied because "the independent counsel has agreed to be my representative" on all secrecy matters in the trial.

Late Wednesday, Acting Solicitor General William C. Bryson filed papers asking the Supreme Court to dissolve a stay that Supreme Court Chief Justice William Rehnquist issued Sunday at the Justice Department's request.

"In light of the district court's order and the report of the independent counsel, the attorney general believes that the concerns that gave rise to the relief from this court have been satisfied," the department said in its brief.

North is accused of shredding evidence and lying to Congress to cover up the Reagan administration's attempts to help the Nicaraguan Contra rebels during a period in which Congress had banned direct U.S. aid.

In a preview of their defense, North's lawyers have said President Reagan and other top officials directed that the efforts be kept secret.

The Justice Department on Feb. 8. sought a court order that would have barred North from disclosing any classified material without a court ruling that it is admissible and only when there was no objection by the government.

Gesell rejected the request and last Thursday, the same day a jury was chosen in the case, the Justice Department began seeking to delay the trial.

Walsh's statement said the independent counsel will notify Thornburgh if evidence in any of eight categories is to be introduced.

Those categories include information identifying undercover CIA officers, or revealing locations of CIA stations and U.S. covert activities other than paramilitary support for the Contras. Also included are details about specific CIA operations with foreign intelligence services and government officials as well as information identifying by name or description foreigners who cooperate with the CIA.

Walsh said that if the attorney general objects to release of any of the information, he will "ask the court to take appropriate action."

Walsh also said he will object "to any classified information not previously" designated by North as being part of the evidence he plans to introduce at trial.

North faces 12 criminal charges. He is accused of concealing from Congress in 1985 and 1986 his efforts on behalf of the Nicaraguan Contras and of covering up from the attorney general the National Security Council's role in diverting money from the Iran arms sales to the Contras.

Defendant in child molestation trial freed on bail

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Raymond Buckey, one of two remaining defendants in the McMartin Preschool child molestation trial, expressed concern about threats and criticized news coverage of his case after being freed on $1.5 million bail.

Buckey, 30, refused to talk to a crowd of reporters Wednesday as he left a downtown jail with his attorney, Danny Davis. They climbed into a Mercedes-Benz and drove to a Chinese restaurant, where Buckey was interviewed by television station KABC.

Buckey, who spent more than five years in jail, said he was worried about threats against him, his attorneys and his family.

"I still realize there are people out there, that as far as I'm concerned, have gone off the deep end," he said.

He further derided news coverage, saying reporters had flocked to the trial's prosecution phase but few journalists have been attending while the defense is presenting its case.

"It's discouraging to think that they won't come to hear what we have to say, but they'll come and make a mob scene at my getting out on bail," he said.

Raymond Buckey, center, is escorted from the Los Angeles Men's Central Jail Wednesday night by his attorney, Danny Davis, right, and an unidentified police officer. He is charged with molesting preschoolers.

Buckey said he has been in jail so long that "I don't remember emotional feelings that everybody out there takes for granted. I've been isolated in a nightmare..."

He and his mother, Peggy McMartin Buckey, 61, face 65 child molestation and conspiracy counts stemming from alleged sexual attacks at the family-run preschool. She has been free on bail since 1987.

Superior Court Judge William Pounders on Friday ordered Buckey freed although his release was delayed by paperwork involving the real estate that had been pledged for bail.

Pounders said he wanted Buckey's long pretrial incarceration to end as soon as possible, but he also set several conditions for Buckey.

The defendant was ordered to have no contact with the alleged victims in the case, to stay away from the seaside area southwest of downtown where the school had operated, and to turn over his passport and remain under 24-hour security protection.

Buckey also was prohibited from coming in contact with anyone younger than 14 and from drinking alcohol.

Family friends, as well as Davis and co-counsel Dean Gits, arranged for Buckey's bail by pledging title to real estate properties worth twice the required bail of $1.5 million.

The case drew national attention when it broke in 1984 with allegations of nursery school children being raped, sodomized, then terrorized into silence by satanic rites and animal mutilations by teachers.

Luck, as well as skill, prevented nuclear war in Cuban crisis

By ALAN COOPERMAN

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — President Kennedy's moderate response during the Cuban missile crisis was perceived instead as "a virtual declaration of war" by the Soviets, and Premier Nikita Khruschev backed down from the brink for unexpected reasons, scholars now say.

Newly declassified documents indicate that luck, as well as skill, played a great role in resolving the world's last major nuclear crisis 27 years ago, Soviet and American experts at Harvard University said Wednesday.

Kennedy and Khrushchev made key decisions based on serious misperceptions and faulty intelligence, which, however, may have helped to resolve the crisis as well as to start it, said Graham T. Allison, dean of Harvard's John F. Kennedy School of Government.

"Looking at it in retrospect, with all the new information, I still give high marks to President Kennedy and...also, perhaps surprisingly, to Khrushchev, for the degree of control they tried to exercise," said Allison, author of "Essence of Decision," one of the authoritative books on the crisis.

"But nonetheless, it is now clear that there was a great component of good fortune. It was a combination of extraordinary skill, extraordinary courage and equally extraordinary good luck that permitted us to avoid catastrophe," he said.

Harvard researcher James T. Blight said the documents, examined during two recent international conferences, demonstrate that the Soviets knew about U.S. covert operations to destabilize the Cuban regime.

The Soviets had put the missiles in Cuba mainly because they believed a full-scale Marine invasion was likely, said Blight, co-author of a new book, "On The Brink: Americans and Soviets Reexamine the Cuban Missile Crisis."

Kennedy and his advisers believed that setting up a naval blockade was "a relatively mild response" to the missiles that would help defuse the crisis by rendering an invasion unnecessary.

"They had no idea that the way that blockade would be perceived in Moscow was as a prelude to an invasion and a virtual declaration of war," Blight said.

Indeed, the documents reveal that an enraged Nikita Khrushchev ordered Soviet ships to steam through the U.S. blockade, but the order was reversed by Anastas Mikoyan, the first deputy Soviet premier, just hours before a military confrontation would have occurred.

It remains unclear whether Mikoyan circumvented the decision on his own or obtained Khrushchev's permission to change it.

Allison said it now appears that Khrushchev gave in partly because he had received an urgent message from Castro, dictated from a bunker, saying an American military attack was imminent.

A Soviet general, Dmitri A. Volkogonov, also advised that an attack was coming, which turned out not to be true, said Allison, author of "Essence of Decision," a classic 1971 study of the crisis.

The crisis flared on Oct. 15, 1962, when a high-flying American U-2 spy plane photographed the installation of nuclear-tipped Soviet SS-4 and SS-5 missiles in Cuba. Kennedy deliberated secretly with his aides for a week before announcing a naval quarantine of Cuba and a demand that the Soviets withdraw the missiles.

The world sat glued to television sets and radios as Soviet ships steamed toward the blockade and what seemed to be an inevitable military confrontation. But the Soviet ships stopped short, and the Soviets and Americans came to peaceful terms.

The historical re-examination, organized by the Kennedy School, included a reunion of former Kennedy advisers on Hawks Cay, Fla., in March 1987; a conference of Soviet and American experts and officials at Harvard in October 1987; and a second conference that included Cuban officials last month in Moscow.

Among the other revelations it has produced:

■ U.S. intelligence estimates of Soviet and Cuban troop strength were way off. According to Cuban Politburo member Jorge Risquet, 270,000 troops were ready to go to war, including 42,000 Soviet soldiers — four times the U.S. estimate at the time.

■ Cuban leader Fidel Castro may have asked the Soviets to launch a pre-emptive nuclear attack. Sergei Khrushchev, son of the former Soviet leader, reportedly described Castro's request in private conversations at the Moscow conference but has since denied he said such a thing.

■ Soviet and Cuban leaders believed a U.S. invasion was imminent before the missiles were installed. U.S. officials, including former Secretary of Defense Robert S. McNamara and former National Security adviser McGeorge Bundy, have said the United States had no such plans although a recently declassified memo indicates there were contingency plans set.

ATM theft scheme causes re-evaluation

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A foiled scheme to steal $14 million from automated teller machines has sparked concerns about the vulnerability of the systems, particularly when an insider is involved, officials said.

Secret Service agents raided an apartment here 12 days ago and broke up what the government described as a ring created by a 28-year-old computer programmer designed to obtain cash from thousands of Bank of America accounts.

"There has never been an attempt like this in the history of shared ATMs," said Dale D. Browning, president of Plus Systems Inc., the nation's largest automatic teller machine network and one of the aborted scheme's targets. "We can certainly learn a lot from it."

"I think the potential there should be very scary for the networks," said Shirley Norton, a Bank of America spokeswoman.

ATM use has grown dramatically over the past 10 years as a means for bank customers to access their accounts 24 hours a day. There are more than 72,000 ATMs nationwide, and Plus Systems alone links 25,000 of the machines.

ATM crimes have been considered minor, usually involving people being robbed after taking money out of the machines or small thefts by employees. But a study by the Bank Administration Institute, an industry research organization, found that losses in 1986 nationwide were $40 million.

Woman to pay hefty fine

KENOSHA, Wis. (AP) — A woman who was told she could either lose 100 pounds or pay a $500 fine as part of her sentence in a marijuana conviction failed to drop the weight and must now put up the dough, a judge said.

Tina Usinger, 29, was convicted last year of possession of marijuana with intent to distribute. Judge Michael Fisher told her he'd knock $5 off the $500 fine for every pound she lost before she next returned to court.

The unusual sentence had been recommended by her former probation agent, who reasoned that with a better self-image, Ms. Usinger would be less likely to turn to criminal activity.

If she lost 100 pounds, she wouldn't have to pay a fine.

But on Tuesday, Ms. Usinger weighed 265 pounds, the same as she did when Fisher first fined her.

At the sentencing, Fisher stayed a two-year prison term for Ms. Usinger. He said he was satisfied that she had met other conditions of probation, including 100 hours of community service work and participation in a drug program.

Bugging devices found

WASHINGTON (AP) — The CIA is denying a report that Americans found bugging devices in the old American Embassy in Moscow while investigating allegations that Marine guards let the KGB into the facility.

Bill Baker, a spokesman for the Central Intelligence Agency, also denied allegations that it withheld information on the discovery of the listening devices from the State Department, which administers the embassy.

Both allegations were made by author Ronald Kessler in his book, "Moscow Station," which expands on earlier reports that the KGB had gained access to the embassy and the highly protected code rooms by sexually compromising U.S. Marine guards.

Kessler wrote that the National Security Agency, the U.S. communications intelligence organization, discovered in 1987 that the Soviets had put listening devices in the Communications Programs Units.

colossal — (adj.) Something that is "colossal" is of great size, gigantic or enormous. "Colossal" can be traced to the Latin word "colossus" and the earlier Greek word "kolossos" meaning large. Our present definition comes from ancient times and the "Colossus of Rhodes." The Colossus of Rhodes was a bronze statue of the sun god which stood at the entrance to the harbor of Rhodes. Because of its size — 120 feet high — it was considered one of the seven wonders of the ancient world. It took 12 years to erect the statue, but unfortunately it stood only for about 60 years due to an earthquake that took place in 280 B.C.

National Park Service Regional Director Lorraine Mintzmyer works out of her Denver office as the service's highest ranking woman. She overseas 41 parks in six states.

Top woman in park service recalls political storm over Yellowstone fires

By TAD BARTIMUS

DENVER (AP) — Whether facing down dynamiters or fighting forest fires, the National Park Service's highest ranking woman has spent most of her 30-year career fending off threats to America's most precious natural resources.

As one of 10 regional directors Lorraine Mintzmyer oversees 41 parks, including some of the "crown jewels" — Glacier, Mount Rushmore, Rocky Mountain, Grand Teton, Mesa Verde, and the mother of them all, Yellowstone, the world's first national park.

In the three decades it has taken the 53-year-old civil servant to work her way up from secretary, she has survived many political storms. But the uproar over last summer's wildfires, which burned 706,278 acres within Yellowstone and cost millions of dollars, was one of the sorest tests in a pioneering career.

"Let it burn" was the name critics gave the park's natural fire policy, the subject now of congressional hearings in Washington, D.C., and around the country, including one scheduled Tuesday in Cody, Wyo.

The Park Service's wildfire management plan, in effect in Yellowstone since 1972, gave officials discretion in suppressing lightning-caused fires, which usually were allowed to burn unless they threatened life or property.

But last summer's extraordinary drought, combined with experts' miscalculations on just how dry Yellowstone really was, forced the Interior Department to declare total fire suppression parkwide on July 21. By then, however, it was too late.

Ultimately, 25,000 firefighters struggled unsuccessfully to contain eight major blazes in and around Yellowstone. Only an early autumn snow brought the conflagration under control in mid-September.

Throughout the crisis, Ms. Mintzmyer consulted almost daily with Park Service Director William Penn Mott and Interior Secretary Donald Hodel, along with Yellowstone Superintendent Bob Barbee.

It was she who backed Barbee's decision to limit the use of bulldozers to cut fire lines, a decision which angered senators and congressmen from the region as well as hundreds of Monday morning quarterbacks who thought the park service deliberately dragged its feet in firefighting efforts.

She still believes her judgment call was right.

"As responsible managers, we can't be defensive when our decisions are questioned or our policies are challenged," she said. "I think, over the long term, there will be a realization that the park and the people who were fighting the fires were doing the best they could under the circumstances.

"It's one thing to deal with an event like a hurricane or an earthquake because it happens in one day and then it's done, you clean it up, you live with it. But it's quite another thing to go through months of it as we did.

"It's a test the likes of which I'd never had before."

She praised Barbee, who endured public ridicule and threats. "We know that every time we do something in Yellowstone it takes on proportions which just do not accrue to other areas," said Ms. Mintzmyer.

"We all get tired, regardless of what profession we're in. The test is whether you get up the next morning and go at it again."

Barbee has that kind of stamina, his boss said, but he's not alone.

"I have the energy of two people," she boasted.

At mid-life she is an avid outdoorswoman and inveterate hiker who tries to sneak in an outing or two in her parks when she visits them on business. Her region covers Utah, Colorado, Wyoming, North Dakota, South Dakota, and Montana.

Dressed in her official olive-colored Park Service uniform, her only flamboyance is fire-engine-red fingernails and the gold ring she had fashioned from her distinguished service pin. The gold, embossed circle is one of her most prized possessions.

As only the second woman in Park Service history to be awarded that honor, Ms. Mintzmyer was acutely conscious that she was a trailblazer as she became the first female superintendent of a major park, then the first woman regional director.

"I know that I've got to do a good job so that other ladies will have an opportunity. If I were to falter it might be difficult for some of my successors to overcome that," she said.

Always an over-achiever, she grew up in a small Iowa town where music dominated her life. She left a banking career and joined the park service in 1959 after a less qualified man got the job she wanted.

She started out as a clerk-stenographer, became program and budgeting officer, transferred as superintendent of Herbert Hoover National Historic Site in Iowa, and took the helm of Buffalo National River in Harrison, Ark., in 1977, shortly after that park service unit was established.

If she makes mistakes, Ms. Mintzmyer says, she hopes she errs on behalf of her parks.

"I have a very rewarding feeling about being a public servant, and I see myself as a leader — when something needs some action I'm not reluctant to get out front and do something about it."

More Americans dying in nursing homes, study says

BOSTON (AP) — Americans are increasingly going to nursing homes to die as hospitals discharge terminally ill patients to keep them from running up big bills, thus helping reduce the nation's Medicare costs, according to two reports today.

One study, based on nationwide death statistics, suggests that the trend results largely from new Medicare rules that pay hospitals flat fees for taking care of the elderly. This approach gives them a financial incentive to keep patients' hospital stays as short as possible.

"What has to be said is that hospitals are in a bind because they are being pressured by cost cutting," said Dr. Mark A. Sager, who directed the study. "Nursing homes are in a bind because nobody wants to pay for nursing home care. Patients are in a bind because they are in a system that does not want to provide continuity of care and health care financing is fragmented."

His research showed that the number of elderly Americans dying in nursing homes rose sharply during the 1980s, while fewer died in hospitals.

Sager, a physician at Dean Medical Center in Madison, Wis., said that sending dying people to nursing homes rather than keeping them in hospitals "may be very appropriate and less costly."

"The issue is whether nursing homes can adequately take care of a sicker population today than they were seeing a few years ago," he said.

Medicare's new system began in October 1983, paying hospitals flat fees in advance. Hospitals get the same amount for each person with a specific disease, regardless of whether a patient stays in the hospital for a day or a month.

Another report provides evidence that the strategy is saving money.

That study, directed by Dr. Louise B. Russell of Rutgers University, estimated the savings to Medicare from the new payment system and compared Medicare's projections of rising costs with what actually happened.

In 1980, the Hospital Insurance Trust Fund, the federal government's branch that pays Medicare hospital bills, predicted that it would be spending about $55 billion by 1990. Instead, it appears the actual expense by then will be $43 billion in 1980 dollars.

The savings will amount to $12 billion in 1980 dollars or $18 billion in 1990 dollars. The researchers said this means the new payment program will be responsible for a 3 percent reduction in the nation's total health care bill, which is expected to be $650 billion in 1990.

Both studies were published in today's New England Journal of Medicine.

Sager's study found that in 1981, 65 percent of all deaths among people older than 65 occurred in hospitals. By 1985, this had fallen to 61 percent. At the same time, the percentage of deaths in nursing homes rose from 19 percent to 21.5 percent.

Sager said that although he is concerned about whether nursing homes can adequately care for their increased burden of dying patients, there is no sign that quicker hospital discharges have shortened people's lives.

His study, which used mortality data from all 50 states compiled by the National Center for Health Statistics, found that the changes were most pronounced in the Midwest, South and West.

He attributed that in part to the heavy concentration of health maintenance organizations in some states in these regions.

"HMOs save money by reducing rates of hospitalization," said Sager. "Hospitals in high-HMO states may have already experienced significant cost cutting" before the Medicare program began. "They were much more threatened by the prospective payment system."

Sager's work showed that between 1983 and 1984, 35 states showed significant declines in hospital deaths, and 33 had increases in nursing homes deaths.

In New York, New Jersey, Massachusetts and Maryland — states that did not participate at first in the new payment system — there was no change in where people died.

Children find skeleton inside trunk

ELKRIDGE, Md. (AP) — Martha C. Shields told her children when they were young never to touch the old steamer trunk in the basement. Before she died, however, she asked them to take care of what was inside of it.

Expecting to find her will when they opened the trunk Wednesday, her son and daughter were shocked to discover the blanket-wrapped skeleton of an infant, a Bible, a small chest and the remnants of a baby's white dress, police said.

The 67-year-old Elkridge woman may well have taken the secret of the trunk's contents to her grave when she died Monday, police said.

A police search of the house turned up no sign of a will or anything to explain the infant's remains, state police Detective Michael E. Davey said.

Mrs. Shields' children, Robert, 29, and Joyce, 31, told investigators they could remember no family discussions about an infant brother or sister who may have died at birth or shortly thereafter. Nor did they recall their mother ever being pregnant while they were growing up, Davey said.

Davey said the infant was full-term and may have been stillborn or died soon after birth, possibly as long as 30 years ago.

The remains were sent to the state medical examiner's office.

Both children still live in the house. They declined to comment to The (Baltimore) Sun on Wednesday.

Sheriff gets last laugh on criminals

After last year's "cattle roundup" cost his department its surveillance helicopter and more than a little embarrassment, it would have been understandable if the sheriff had banned helicopters altogether in this county.

Of course, Sheriff Painter had a constant reminder around of why he couldn't do that: the illegal drug traffickers.

The helicopter that crashed last May had been credited with helping the sheriff's department crack down on both burglars operating in the county and drug dealers. But the 'copter tangled with a cow while the sheriff's department was rounding up cattle it was ordered to seize, and the cow won. The helicopter crashed the few feet to the ground and Painter caught the business end of bad jokes and ridicule from local residents who obviously believed a few men on horseback would have been much preferable to the light helicopter for the task. To make matters worse, for Painter, the incident was even featured in Texas Monthly magazine's "Bum Steer" issue last December.

After all the chuckling died away, U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm helped the county acquire a new helicopter for only $1,200. Such an aircraft is necessary to help the department keep tabs on criminals operating in the county. As Sen. Gramm noted when presenting the helicopter to Midland County on Tuesday, law enforcement needs to at least have as good equipment as the criminals. We agree with that sentiment because if law enforcement officers are outclassed by criminals in terms of equipment, the battle against drugs could be lost before it's really even begun.

Surveillance helicopters can give law enforcement an edge which could mean that the joke will be on the drug dealers and Sheriff Painter will have the last laugh.

Another View:

Farewell to a dictator

Well, there goes another dictator, getting the bum's rush he should have gotten long ago, we said upon viewing the overthrow of Gen. Alfredo Stroessner. The question is, should we also be saying, Well, here comes another dictator, on his way to grabbing the loot and power his predecessor enjoyed?

Maybe that won't come true in Paraguay. Maybe the general who seized power from Stroessner will turn it over to the people, as he says he will. Gen. Andres Rodriguez, leader of the coup that threw the old strongman out, has called elections for May 1. Opposition groups are to be allowed to challenge the ruling power structure for the first time, he says.

It sounds great. Still, we await the proof from Rodriguez, to match the moving words. The prime question: Will the elections be fair or fraudulent? For a country that has no heritage of democracy — has known nothing but tyrannies since it gained independence from Spain in 1811 — we must say that less than 90 days is a short time indeed to organize a new era.

Does the allowance of such a brief span before the elections make it impossible for opposition parties to get organized, nominate candidates, raise money and conduct nationwide campaigns of any sufficiency? Can they stand up to the generals' powerful party — the single effective party until now — in that time? And will the armed forces, which continue as the power center, facilitate a quick transition to democracy or undermine it, in the interest of continued military dominance?

It's up to Rodriguez and his military commanders. They can propel the electoral system forward if they really are tired of Paraguay's image of being the last of the worst old rightist dictatorships to make any concessions in this hemisphere. They can use government resources for logistical and other help with the elections, without interfering. They can take steps to make possible a fullness of debate and adequate travel, nationwide, by opposing candidates.

The aging Stroessner, who had ruled for 34 years, is off to exile in Brazil, the victim of his second in command, Rodriguez. We hope the latter's denial of links to the drug trade is valid, and that his interest instead is in political reform. Stroessner has stayed in power longer than any dictator in the hemisphere by repression, and Rodriguez obviously has been a part of it. But he has seen even Gen. Pinochet in Chile begin to bend to democracy, after rightist strongmen were toppled elsewhere in Latin America. We may see now whether Rodriguez has decided that time is running out on tyranny, and is ready to show it the door.

Washington must apply pressure for fair elections and keep a critical eye on the processes as they develop. Paraguay, poor and landlocked, is of small strategic interest to us, some say. But if it emerges from despotism to democracy after all these years, it will provide a model of shining worth that other repressed peoples might use to pry their strongmen out of power. And that would be a large strategic gain.

Bad bolts sold to commercial airline

Jack Anderson

United Airlines bought bolts from the same company that federal investigators say sold dangerously fraudulent fasteners to defense contractors and the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

The bolts came from Lawrence Engineering and Supply Inc. of Burbank, Calif. A federal grand jury is expected to reveal the results today of its investigation into allegations that Lawrence peddled bogus bolts to government contractors. Federal investigators say the company routinely faked certificates indicating aerospace bolts met strict industry standards for strength. The required tests were rarely performed, according to the federal investigators.

We broke the story in 1986 that so-called schlock houses sold millions of substandard bolts to the government. Since then, we have reported on dangerously weak bolts in tanks, trucks, bridges and nuclear power plants. In 1987, we reported that bogus bolts had failed in private and military aircraft.

A purchase order from Lawrence Engineering files, obtained by our associate Stewart Harris, is the first hard evidence showing that Lawrence was doing business with a commercial airline. That order says the company shipped 1,000 bolts to the United maintenance center at San Francisco International Airport on March 30, 1987. United had previously said it had no record of doing business with Lawrence.

When confronted with the purchase order, a United spokesman told us the bolts were installed on pneumatic pressure controls, anti-skid systems and air-conditioning units. However, testing of many bolts revealed no problems, the spokesman said.

Bolt experts told us the tiny bolts sold to United are also commonly used on aircraft instruments and electrical motors. And, the experts warned, a broken bolt could fall into other critical flight components. The bolts were too small to be used on wing or engine attachments.

The shipment to United was during the time when federal investigators say Lawrence routinely falsified results of bolt tests that never took place. Information about the bogus tests comes from Roland Gulke and Saverio Goffredo, Lawrence laboratory technicians who talked to Defense Department investigator Mike Kreps. According to an affidavit filed in federal court by the investigators, Lawrence stopped faking the test results in September 1987 after the company was caught by Teledyne Brown Engineering Inc., a space shuttle contractor.

Defense investigators allege in that affidavit that many aerospace bolts sold by Lawrence failed strength tests. Martin Marietta Astronautics Group flunked 26 lots of aerospace bolts bought from Lawrence for use on Air Force missiles.

NASA also bought bolts from Lawrence. Testing showed structural defects in those bolts, even though they arrived at NASA with a certificate signed by a Lawrence employee saying they met specifications.

Lawrence also sold bolts to foreign airlines and governments, according to an alert issued by the Government-Industry Data Exchange Program. An attorney for Lawrence told us the company has never been informed that its bolts have failed. "If there is any defect, it's in the (quality control) paperwork, not the product."

Lawrence is just one of dozens of bolt companies under investigation by a task force of federal agents from the Defense and Transportation departments and the Customs Service.

The federal probe began in 1986 when an agent in the Defense Criminal Investigative Service read our column on bogus bolts while he was sitting in his dentist's office waiting to have his teeth cleaned.

'Consultants' merely sell contractors service

One of the things that seems to have gotten Sen. Tower into so much trouble is the fact that he worked as a consultant on defense contracts. He is supposed to have made $775,000 at this job. What does someone have to deliver to earn this kind of dough? I couldn't guess, so I asked another defense consultant, Roy Chardonnay, to tell me exactly what people like him did for that sort of money.

Art Buchwald

"It's too complicated to explain," he said. "You would be much better off if you came with me on my rounds. My first stop is the office of Flatwing Aviation, that keeps me on a $250,000 retainer. Whenever they have a problem, I come running."

An hour later we were in the offices of Scotty Hoopster, CEO of Flatwing. He was pacing up and down.

"I don't understand those SOBs in the Pentagon. We gave them the finest plane that money could buy, and now they want a rebate because there are cracks in the wings. Roy, should we go public and attack them for this?"

Chardonnay referred to a loose-leaf book he was carrying. He read:

"There is so much good in the worst of us,/ And so much bad in the best of us,/ It hardly becomes any of us,/ To talk about the rest of us."

Hoopster looked at Chardonnay as if he couldn't believe his ears.

"Is that your advice?"

"Yessir. I'll fax it to you tomorrow."

Hoopster continued, "We're not just talking about money, Roy. We're talking about criminal charges. The Pentagon said we kept two sets of books on the job. If the attorney general goes after us, we're sitting ducks. What should I do about that?"

Roy opened his notebook again: "If you can keep your head — when all about you are losing theirs and blaming it on you;/ If you can trust yourself when all men doubt you;/ but make allowance for their doubting too;/ Or being lied about don't deal in lies, or being hated, don't give way to hating;/ And don't look too good or talk too wise. If ..."

Hoopster shouted, "Will you shut up and give me a game plan! We've got two weeks before the grand jury convenes. Now, Roy, you know how things operate in this town. Do we stonewall like Ollie North, and use the national security defense ploy, or do we make a deal with the Justice Department? I don't think we've got a prayer to beat this one."

To my amazement, Roy went back to the loose-leaf book once more. He read aloud, "Somebody said that it couldn't be done/ But he with a chuckle replied/ That 'maybe it couldn't' but he would be one who wouldn't say so 'til he tried/ So he buckled right in with a trace of a grin, on his face/ If he worried he hid it/ He started to sing as he tackled the thing/ That couldn't be done and he did it."

"What the hell does that mean?" Scotty wanted to know.

"I'm only here to give you advice. I'm not going to tell you what to do. If you want me to go further, it will cost you another $100,000."

"I do want you to tell me what to do. Here's a check."

Roy stood up and looked directly at Hoopster, "If you can't be a pine on the top of the hill/ Be a scrub in the valley — but be/ The best little scrub by the side of the rill; Be a bush if you can't be a tree/ If you can't be a bush be a bit of the grass, and some highway happier make; If you can't be a muskie then just be a bass,/ But the liveliest bass in the lake."

Hoopster was deeply moved. "I don't know how I'll ever be able to thank you, Roy. Nobody in my organization has had the guts to tell me what you just did."

"You need someone from outside who isn't emotionally involved," Roy told him.

When we got out of the building, I said to Roy, "You really helped him by giving him the big picture. Now I can see why you get paid so well."

He shrugged his shoulders, "The only thing you have to sell when you're a consultant is your brains."

For 'Christabel' television was a blessing

WASHINGTON — Christabel and Peter Bielenberg, now great-grandparents, live in an 18th-century house 50 miles south of Dublin. It has been a long, winding, dangerous road that brought them to rural Ireland, a road that took them to Gestapo headquarters on Berlin's Prinz Albrechtstrasse and to Ravensbruck concentration camp.

George F. Will

This Sunday evening and on the three subsequent Sunday evenings you can see a dramatization of this couple's harrowing experiences. The Masterpiece Theater series "Christabel" on PBS involves two exciting rescues, that of Peter by Christabel and of her memoir, "The Past Is Myself," from oblivion. The book has been republished, thanks to an unlikely stimulus to the book culture — television.

In 1934, Christabel, niece of Lord Northcliff, married a German lawyer. She lived in Germany throughout the rise and fall of Hitler's Reich. Hers is a story of physical danger and an even more gripping moral danger, one peculiar to our century's most important political invention, totalitarianism, a system of mass conscription into complicity with evil.

Christabel's story is a tale of small things charged with large significance. In the spring of 1945, a crumpled Lucky Strike pack told Christabel the war was over: Allied troops had passed by. Years earlier, "I had been in a tram with Nicky when an elderly lady with a Jewish star pinned to her coat had got up from her place so that my Aryan eight-year-old son could sit down."

Christabel, her son and the elderly lady all remained standing, staring at the empty seat, and Christabel was oppressed by the feebleness of her gesture of resistance. But what does one do when informed by one's pediatrician, who is Jewish, that he no longer is allowed to have Aryan patients? For the Bielenbergs, life had become a series of small affronts to civilized sensibilities, maddening reminders of their demoralizing impotences in an enveloping system of evil.

In the struggle to maintain "the delicate balance between opposition, compromise and corruption," the Bielenbergs avoided major concessions such as joining the Nazi Party. But as the regime "spread its tenacles, with Germanic devotion to detail, throughout the fabric of public life, it became increasingly difficult for us to escape the occasional compromise. By compromising we could learn how each small demand for our outward acquiescence could lead to the next and, with the gentle persistence of an incoming tide, could lap at the walls of just that integrity we were so anxious to preserve."

As a British national living beneath a rain of bombs delivered by the Royal Air Force, Christabel maintained her moral equilibrium and lived "to sing the unsung song, that not all Germans were bad." The Bielenbergs were friends of many of the best, those who plotted against Hitler and tried to kill him on July 20, 1944.

When Peter was sent to Ravensbruck, Christabel, no longer an ingenue, acted with astonishing grit, brass and aplomb in dealing with the Gestapo. Her efforts helped save Peter from the fate of other plotters — the fate of being filmed, for Hitler's amusement, as they strangled hanging from piano wire from a meathook.

When Christabel visited Peter in prison, she noticed that he had found two pieces of hemp to replace the shoelaces that were taken from all prisoners as part of the Nazis' meticulous attention to the details of degradation. He could walk with dignity: "Somehow those improvised shoelaces gave me great courage. No bloody power on earth was going to make him shuffle. They were so typical of him, those little flags of freedom."

That splendid phrase, "flags of freedom," is from the book. The phrase exemplifies the richness of language that can breathe life into detail better than — by engaging the imagination more than — a visual medium.

Some scholars, such as George Steiner, wonder whether we are witnessing the gradual passing of what began with Gutenberg, a culture built around books. The emergence of that culture, which coincided with the emergence of a middle class, required, Steiner believes, certain conditions, particularly living space and leisure for periods of private silence. Also, there emerged a supporting body of popular periodicals that discussed books seriously.

Today we live in a world awash with noise. Tape and record shelves supplant book shelves in many homes. Competing media, especially television, are, as Steiner says, appropriating the scarce resource of time. We are popularizing alternative modes of perception, entertainment and acquisition of information.

However, the longer I am in journalism, associated with newspapers, magazines and broadcasting, the more I believe that books are still the primary carriers of ideas. It is, therefore, gratifying that television does occasionally, as in the case of "Christabel," raise a good book from its grave.

Afghanistan seeks U.N. border outposts

WORLD

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — The government has asked the United Nations to set up outposts along the border with Pakistan to check the flow of arms to Moslem guerrillas, the foreign minister said today.

The minister, Abdul Wakil, also accused Britain, France and other Western nations opposed to Afghanistan's Marxist government of blocking emergency airlifts of food into Kabul, which has been facing severe shortages.

An official with the United Nations, which is coordinating the airlift, declined to comment on Wakil's statement.

Moslem guerrillas, who are backed by the United States and have bases in Pakistan, fired six rockets into Kabul today, shattering the calm that began on Wednesday when the Soviet troop withdrawal was completed.

There were no immediate reports of casualties.

Some Western officials have predicted that the Afghan army will be unable to prevent Kabul and other major Afghan cities from being taken by Moslem guerrilla forces now that the Soviet forces are gone.

At a news conference in an unheated room at the Foreign Ministry, Wakil reiterated allegations President Najib made over the weekend that Pakistan is planning to invade the eastern city of Jalalabad.

He said Afghanistan has asked the United Nations Good Office Mission to Afghanistan and Pakistan to set up outposts near six towns along the border. The agency, UNGOMAP, monitors compliance with the Geneva accord signed in April that paved the way for the withdrawal of 115,000 Red Army troops and called on Afghanistan and Pakistan to stop interfering in each other's internal affairs.

Wakil said Afghanistan has asked that outposts be set up near the towns of Quttarr, Landi Kotall, Torkahn, Chaman, Spin Boldak and Parchinarr.

"We have requested that UNGOMAP establish outposts along the border to prevent the open transport of arms, ammunition and other deadly weapons into Afghanistan from Pakistan," he said.

Wakil also blamed Western countries for blocking an emergency airlift of food, medicine and blankets into Kabul.

Five U.N. agencies organized the airlift in an effort to help 30,000 women and children in some of Kabul's poorest neighborhoods.

Egypt Air originally agreed to fly a chartered plane from Pakistan to the Afghan capital, but it backed out, citing security fears.

Ethiopian Airlines flew 30 tons of the 390-ton load before it canceled its contract, citing unspecified technical problems.

Wakil, however, said Western countries, particularly Britain and France, were creating obstacles.

"There are circles that are pressuring these airlines and trying to force them not to fly to Afghanistan. They say there will be bloodbaths, security problems and the dismantling of the government," he said.

"The situation as you can see is contrary to that," he said.

On Wednesday, Najib thanked Moscow for its military support and accused the United States of trampling on the accord under which the Soviets withdrew.

The government said in a statement that Washington's support for the guerrillas had sharply risen since the accord was signed in April.

U.S. Secretary of State James A. Baker III, who is touring NATO capitals, said in Spain on Wednesday that Moscow should help rebuild Afghanistan now that Soviet troops have withdrawn.

In Washington on Wednesday, State Department spokesman Charles Redman said the Soviet pullout marks "a long awaited day for the Afghan people."

Clements promises bridges won't harm environment

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements promised cooperation with Mexican officials to ensure that three planned international bridges linking Texas and Mexico will not harm the environment.

"I can assure you that in the planning of these new bridges there is planned development and not the type of helter-skelter development that's taken place in the past," Clements said Wednesday after meeting President Carlos Salinas de Gortari.

"We in Texas are building bridges, not ditches," Clements said. "We don't need ditches in Texas, we don't need fences in Texas."

"What we're doing is building bridges of all kinds: for traffic, students, educational exchanges, and to borrow a phrase, bridges of opportunity," the governor told a news conference at the National Palace.

Clements laughed when asked about the ditch proposed for the San Diego-Tijuana border, but declined to give an opinion.

The proposed ditch at Otay Mesa near San Diego would control sewage runoff and, according to the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service, block drug trafficking and illegal migrants.

It has not yet been approved.

Clements was in Mexico to attend a conference of border governors in Saltillo, Coahuila. The conference today and Friday will gather the governors of Texas, New Mexico, Arizona and California with the governors of Tamaulipas, Nuevo Leon, Coahuila, Chihuahua, Sonora and Baja California Norte.

Clements said that in their first meeting, he and Salinas discussed economic development, drugs and police cooperation along the border.

"(The problem of) drug trafficking is very important to Mexico and to President Salinas as it is to the United States, and especially Texas," the governor said.

Clements spoke strongly for the twin plant, or maquiladora program. U.S. firms employ low-cost Mexican labor in assembly plants south of the border, then ship completed products duty-free under the program.

Clements also said it was too early to measure the impact that 1986 U.S. immigration reform has had on illegal immigration, but said Mexican workers and the U.S. economy benefit from the reform's legalization of resident workers.

"I want to make it clear that migrant workers, with permits, are an important part of the U.S. economy up to and including Canada," the governor said.

Officials call for efforts to combat terrorism in sky

MONTREAL (AP) — U.S. and British officials called at an international aviation meeting for swift efforts to combat terrorism in the skies through tougher screening of passengers and luggage and better bomb-detection devices.

"People around the world are calling for leadership and decisive action to eliminate the gruesome, common threat of terrorism in the skies," U.S. Transportation Secretary Samuel K. Skinner told the meeting Wednesday.

Britain and the United States had asked that the 33-member council of the International Civil Aviation Organization convene for the two-day meeting because of the December terrorist bombing of Pan Am Flight 103 over Scotland.

The attack killed 259 passengers and crew and 11 people on the ground.

Although the 160-member United Nations agency has no power to enforce its resolutions, the presence on the meeting's first day of more than a dozen transport ministers underscored the urgency with which they view the problem.

Skinner reminded the council that 867 people have died in 21 explosions aboard civilian airliners in the last decade.

He said "the time for action is now."

The U.S. aviation system has instituted more stringent security measures in recent weeks, but American officials say concerted international action is needed if the terrorist threat is to be defeated.

A draft resolution co-sponsored by Britain and the United States calls for improving the technology of bomb-detection devices so they can detect plastic explosives — which investigators say downed the New York-bound Flight 103.

It also advocates stricter baggage and passenger screening, tighter control of access at airports and closer inspection of cargo and mail.

In addition, the resolution questions whether computers, radios and other electronic devices should be allowed aboard aircraft since X-ray scanners cannot distinguish between concealed explosives and the devices' own components.

"Let us be prepared, provided this effort is successful, to work towards international agreement on ways to thwart terrorist use of powerful modern explosives," said Britain's transport minister, Paul Channon.

At least two devices are currently under development that can detect plastic explosives.

Ortega denies he's insincere about holding elections

Ortega

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — President Daniel Ortega dismissed claims that his promise to hold free elections is insincere, telling the nation he can now promote democracy because the Sandinistas are strong and backed by the people.

In a televised speech Wednesday night, Ortega also hinted that he might run for re-election.

At the end of a regional summit Tuesday in El Salvador, he promised to hold presidential, legislative and municipal elections by next February and to allow the opposition help organize them.

The summit agreement signed by five Central American presidents also calls for disbanding of the Contra guerrillas, most of whom are encamped in neighboring Honduras.

"We'll see who is strong, who the people will vote for," Ortega said. "Whoever is afraid of this (early elections) is not interested in peace or in the strengthening of democracy in Nicaragua."

The balloting had been scheduled for November 1990.

In Washington on Wednesday, the State Department signaled its skepticism about free elections in Nicaragua by saying it had no plans to lift a four-year ban on diplomatic contacts with the leftist Sandinista government.

Rebel leaders said they felt abandoned by the United States, which had supported their seven-year fight to oust the Sandinistas.

Despite vows to fight on, they ran out of ammunition and moved into the border camps after Congress suspended military aid a year ago. On March 23, they signed a preliminary cease-fire accord with the Sandinistas.

Asked by reportres what would happen if the Contras refused to lay down their arms and relocate, Ortega said:

"The Contras are creating a problem for Honduras...You can't force them to return to Nicaragua. But they will have to choose between coming here, staying — some of them — in Honduras, or leaving for the United States or whatever other countries are willing to take them in."

One opposition leader said the Sandinistas must be watched carefully in the elections or they'll try to cheat.

"President Ortega only talked with the Central American presidents, but he still needs to talk with the Nicaraguan people,' said Gilberto Cuadra, president of the opposition Superior Council of Private Enterprise.

The Sandinistas' popularity has been hurt by the state of the economy. Inflation is at a 20,000 percent annual rate, food and consumer goods are in short supply and at least 30,000 public employees have just been laid off.

The government says the war is mostly to blame for the state of the economy, not their management of it.

Opposition leaders said Wednesday that elections as early as next February do not allow enough time for political parties to organize a campaign.

In his nationwide address, Ortega went over the points contained in a communique he issued jointly with the presidents of El Salvador, Honduras, Guatemala and Costa Rica at their summit.

He stressed his willingness to promote greater democracy and submit elections to international observers, saying this "shows our political strength, which is rooted in the Nicaraguan people, the working people, the peasants...and every patriotic Nicaraguan."

Speaking to journalists afterward, he was asked if he would be the Sandinista presidential candidate.

"We have to consider that re-election is no crime. Even (former President) Reagan...complained that it was undemocratic that he could not run for office again," he said.

Ortega was asked how he interpreted the fact that President Bush had not publicly established his policy toward Nicaragua and the rest of Central America: "That fact in itself shows a different policy."

Earlier, Ortega said he told the Central American presidents "Nicaragua would not be promoting the political and economic actions it has been promoting since the start of the year if U.S.' policy had been maintained along the lines of President Reagan."

Government representatives have been meeting with labor, business and opposition parties seeking a commitment to support the government's economic plan.

Sakharov says he's quitting race

MOSCOW (AP) — Human rights activist Andrei D. Sakharov says he is pulling out of the race for a territorial seat in the new national legislature because he believes he should represent the Soviet Academy of Sciences.

The prestigious academy's governing body last month rejected Sakharov's candidacy, a move that critics of the new electoral system said showed entrenched Communist Party bureaucrats' advantage in the nominating process.

"I feel that I am inseparably linked with the academy, of which I have been a member 35 years," Sakharov said in a letter published Wednesday in the Moscow News.

The 67-year-old physicist, who won the 1975 Nobel Peace prize, has been nominated to represent a Moscow district in the new 2,250-seat Congress of People's Deputies.

"I have come to the conclusion that I should be a candidate namely of the academy in the new elections or not be one at all," Sakharov wrote in the letter to the weekly newspaper.

U.S. Air Force general cancels air shows in West Germany in '89

RAMSTEIN, West Germany (AP) — The U.S. Air Force canceled all its air shows in West Germany for 1989, six months after the Ramstein Air Base crash that killed 70 people and injured hundreds, a military spokesman said today.

That crash, and a series of NATO training flight crashes in West Germany last year that killed more than 100 people, caused a public outcry and demands for a stop to low-level military flights throughout the country.

Air Force spokesman Capt. Kevin Krejcarek said the decision by Commanding Gen. William Kirk to cancel the air shows applies to all flyovers and aerial demonstrations for the general public at U.S. Air Force installations in West Germany.

In a telephone interview with The Associated Press, Krejcarek said the order also applies to "open houses for the public," events regularly staged in the past by the Air Force to permit Germans to familiarize themselves with the U.S. military in Europe.

However, Krejcarek said some air installations may still stage displays of aircraft for members of the military and "invited guests only."

The U.S. military's unofficial Stars and Stripes newspaper reported today that the leftist Social Democrats and Greens parties in the Ramstein area had stepped up their campaign against air shows by circulating petitions and writing letters to newspapers and U.S. officials.

The newspaper quoted Ramstein Mayor Julius Divivier as saying Kirk's move was "a wise and good decision."

Firms violating hazardous chemical rules

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

An estimated 90 percent of all Midland companies that use hazardous chemicals are violating federal guidelines aimed at identifying those substances.

"We've found that so many people in the Midland area are not aware that they should be reporting (their use of chemicals to state and local agencies)," County Commissioner Win Brown, who chairs the Local Emergency Planning Committee (LEPC), reported Thursday.

Brown asserted that the primary culprits — dry-cleaning establishments, filling stations and buildings that store cleaning fluids — are subject to stiff penalties if they don't come forward.

Under Title III of the Superfund Amendment and Reauthorization Act (SARA) and the Texas Right to Know Act, companies are no longer allowed to ignore rules that require businesses to report certain chemicals in their possession.

As of November 1988, only 30 companies had complied with the guidelines, which in turn are on file with the department of Public Safety's Division of Emergency Management.

At some point, Brown expects the Environmental Protection Agency and state authorities to crack down on those who omit or fail to report on-site toxic materials. For example, under SARA Title III requirements, a company can be fined up to $25,000 per incident of non-compliance.

Meanwhile, the commissioner said the public and private sectors are putting together what he views as a viable working disaster response.

"This covers more things than you would imagine," he said, referring to a four-volume plan aimed at disaster prevention and/or minimizing life and property damage if such a mishap occurs.

Not surprisingly, much of what Midland adopted was lifted from other plans related to floods and tornadoes. What the city lacked was a formidable identification system listing the location and amounts of hazardous chemicals stored inside the county, according to Frank Schroeder, a volunteer member of the LEPC.

Still, Midland is in excellent shape as far as having a written action plan in place, Schroeder asserted.

"We were one of 29 counties in the state of Texas that met the deadline," he said, referring to a portion of the law that required communities to have a working plan by Oct. 1, 1988, or face penalties imposed by EPA.

City Councilman Bob Monaghan, also a LEPC committee member, said both county and city authorities are making a special effort to "understand the law and get the word out."

According to Brown, the accidental release of methyl isocyanate from a chemical plant in Bhopal, India, is what sparked the federal government to pass laws concerning hazardous chemicals.

He said the incident clearly demonstrated the potential for disastrous accidental releases of the chemicals that have become part of modern life and resulted in a new urgency to establish national programs that address chemical accidents.

Under the Air Toxics Strategy, the EPA administrator committed the agency to developing a program to foster community planning and preparation for serious releases.

That resulted in the EPA initiating its Chemical Emergency Preparedness Program (CEPP), which was launched in November 1985 as a voluntary effort. In 1986, Congress mandated many facets of CEPP in the Emergency Planning and Community Right-to-Know Act, Title III of SARA.

Title III creates a structure for emergency planning efforts to ensure that state and local governments will have entities in place to receive information and to coordinate planning with industry.

These entities bring together representatives of all the important elements, including environmentalists, health organizations, and public officials. They provide a forum for a continuing dialogue on accident prevention preparedness.

In addition, Title III required the EPA to conduct a "review of emergency systems for monitoring, detecting and preventing releases of extremely hazardous substances at representative domestic facilities that produce, use, or store" these substances and to report to Congress on the findings.

Condoms' use touted as barrier to spread of AIDS

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Some sexually active people protest that the use of condoms is unromantic, troublesome, immoral or too embarrassing to discuss.

But supporters of National Condom Week, which began on Valentine's Day, are imploring that population to consider one depressing alternative.

AIDS.

More than 84,000 Americans have fallen prey to the deadly virus and nearly 4.5 percent of those cases are heterosexuals, according to the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta.

A National Research Council study released this month said condoms must be "readily available to all sexually active persons" if the U.S. has any hopes of containing the spread of the virus.

The AIDS virus likely has infected more than one million Americans, the National Research Council study said.

In the Permian Basin, 24 have died from AIDS and another 13 have full-blown cases of the disease, figures from the Permian Basin AIDS Resource Center state.

Another unhappy alternative to the use of a condom is often unwanted pregnancy.

National Planned Parenthood statistics reflect that nearly 50 percent of the annual six million pregnancies in this country are accidents.

Of those three million unwanted cases, about half are aborted, a Planned Parenthood spokeswoman in New York City said today.

Texas female teen-agers accounted for 10 percent of all pregnancies in the country, Department of Health figures show.

"Condom use now is becoming a matter of life and death," explained Alice Ashmore, director of the Permian Basin AIDS Resource Center.

"It's a nice concept to try and tell people to be abstinent, but that doesn't work in the real world."

One of the biggest dangers about AIDS is its long incubation period — up to eight years in many cases.

Even more frightening is that antibodies formed to combat the AIDS virus may not appear on a blood test for up to six months after initial infection, Ms. Ashmore added.

Local health officials keep eye on measles

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Midland health officials are keeping abreast of the measles outbreak in Odessa, but said today no cases here have been confirmed.

Two blood samples of Midland children were sent this week to an outside laboratory for confirmation of measles, said Gretchen Parsley, nursing supervisor at the Midland City-County Health Department.

One returned negative and the other's result was expected later today, Ms. Parsley said.

Over the past two weeks, eight Odessa junior high school students and two Medical Center Hospital employees have been diagnosed with the measles.

Another three cases were diagnosed in Odessa Tuesday, bringing the total number to 13, health officials say.

One case in Kermit has been confirmed as well.

In the wake of the outbreaks, some 850 of Odessa's Crockett Junior High School students and staff members and another 200 hospital employees have been vaccinated against the disease.

No emergency vaccination actions have gone into effect in Midland yet, Ms. Parsley said.

The nursing supervisor explained that the Texas Department of Health advises against mass inoculations unless cases are diagnosed.

Odessa's Medical Center Hospital is forbidding children under the age of 14 to enter the hospital for three weeks, spokesman Frank Beaman said this morning.

Big Spring woman's death by drowning ruled homicide

COLORADO CITY (AP) — The drowning last June of a woman in Lake Colorado City has been ruled a homicide.

Mitchell County Justice of the Peace Joan Merkett said autopsy results from the Dallas County Medical Examiner show that Tammy Gray, 27, of Big Spring, died from asphyxia by drowning and strangulation.

The woman's husband, Travis Gray, reported he pulled her from the lake early on June 23. She was pronounced dead at a hospital in Colorado City.

Sheriff Wendell Bryant said the case will be presented Feb. 24 to a Mitchell County grand jury.

Wheeler-dealer's days limited by borrowing trouble

Back in Midland's latest boom days when many folks would prefer, and could afford, to buy a new car rather than putting up with the old one, I was borrowing and bumming.

Todd

Well, at least for a short while. I bummed a car, from friends, and got into a bit of a stew with the police — those well-intentioned sorts bearing badges.

Fun times.

Believe me, the Todd household was not socking away tons of money even while, as it turned out, some big-name banks here and across the county line were squandering funds. They could afford to ... until the gravity of unresolved debts pulled them down. There was no magic golden parachute when bailout time came. Just hard times for quite a few people, including the usually well-heeled couples.

I wasn't usually well-heeled.

Pay-wise, I couldn't tell a boom from a bust. My economic barometer was measured by how much money I took out of savings and put into the checking account without incurring a deficit in either account. It didn't always work.

And though inflation was clicking right along then, I had less spending money then than I do now. I was married. And that's another tale to mourn. Lovely gal — talented, caring, sincere, tenacious, very tenacious. Lousy marriage, though. She was the unfortunate No. 3 spouse. And after she had wept a season of tears and suffered in anger over the breakup, all was well — at least forgiven. Maybe. In fact, before and after the divorce, the wife and my precious mother were delightful friends. They got along famously and remained dear friends even until mother's death two years ago last October. A friendship like that never ends as long as remembrance of that bond lives on.

That aside, the wife and I survived — never really thrived. But we did well enough to get into debt. In this world, it seems you've got to pile up some creditors' good will before you can plunge further into debt. So we did — nothing particularly extravagant.

But, like most all Americans, we had the means to get around — cars and other play things.

But the means didn't always pan out.

The wife's bright green Volkswagen "bug" was suffering from a fouled-up ignition-firing system and was in the shop for about the fourth time in a month. It ended up crashed and in a junk yard.

Scout is still around.

Our only bit of rolling community property, the motorcycle, wasn't running because of contrariness and neglect. The two-wheeler was purchased in a careless moment, which must have been fraught with a "let's-have-fun and why-not?" attitude.

I found out why after a few spills. The bicycle was in good repair and never turned on me. However, the motorcycle surely did. But I never rode a bicycle drunk, either.

Now, a couple of sympathetic friends, Duck Mailliard and his wife, Bonnie, volunteered to loan me their third car — a dark-green clunker, an old Chevrolet sedan that had been around too many blocks and back streets. Duck, a mechanic, had an outdoorsman's delight, a Jeep that didn't leak oil, and Bonnie had a sunroofed sporty car, a Honda Prelude, which she kept in the garage even though the run-roof didn't leak.

So, I borrowed the old green jalopy one day. Then, one night, as usual, I parked it just outside our old Haystack Apartment in northwest Midland.

The housing complex was pretty busy and noisy in those days.

Early the next morning, we got up. And I went outside to crank up the old car and to get it warmed up, since the weather was a bit cold.

The car wasn't there. So, I figured I must have parked it somewhere else. Not there, either.

I was alarmed. The wife would be late for work in Odessa; I was to drive her over there and return to Midland to my own job. I feared hurting my friendship with Duck and Bonnie, and I could ill afford to pay them for a missing car.

My telephone ring awakened Duck. He didn't seem as concerned about the missing Old Green as I was. Nevertheless, I called the police station to report a "stolen car," which I couldn't imagine anybody being desperate enough to steal.

It wasn't stolen after all. The police had it. It was impounded.

The spouse and I were taken aback.

During the night, as it turned out, a cruising policeman had spotted a young man, quite drunk, "relieving himself" on the lawn or parking lot right next to the borrowed car. Upon being questioned by police, the man said that the old dark green car was his.

Of course, the clunker wasn't his. And after the policeman had used his radio powers to check out the car's registration, he determined that Mr. Relieving Himself didn't own that old car. So, the cop presumed it to be stolen. The tipsy man was arrested and booked. The car was towed in and impounded.

Now comes the rub.

After the police and I figured out what had happened and they were convinced that, indeed, I really had borrowed the car, they told me that I would have to pay a $40 impoundment fee.

"What gall those rascals have," thought I.

No, sir. I would not pay.

But you will, said they.

" No."

"Yes."

So, from the booking desk, I headed to the headquarters' front offices to powwow with the police chief, the major or some other big shot.

Forty dollars for what?

No thanks. Horsefeathers and frog warts!

So, the chief, the major or some other big shot "forgave" the impoundment fee and expressed faint regrets.

Old Green was rolling again.

I got the wife, who was due in for work at 6 o'clock, on her job late. I, too, was late, but what can you say? Presently, repairs were made to the Todd vehicles, and I returned the old dark-green clunker to Duck and Bonnie.

I don't recall bumming or borrowing a car since. But I did end up with an old title-less station-wagon that sort of moved down the road when it didn't overheat, didn't run low on oil, and when its gears didn't jam, which they often did. I gave it away, for it was given to me.

No more bumming. Not today. No more borrowing, I hope. And, please, mister, watch where you get relief.

Teen waives extradition on murder charge

SANTA ROSA, N.M. (AP) — A New Jersey teen-ager has waived extradition and is to return to his home state to face charges in the stabbing death of a 17-year-old boy and the abduction of a girl over whom he was alleged to have argued.

Ardila

Mike Ardila, 19, appeared Wednesday in Las Vegas, N.M., before state District Judge Jay Harris, who ordered his return to New Jersey by Feb. 21. Ardila was returned to jail in Santa Rosa afterward.

Ardila is charged in the stabbing death last weekend of Anthony Pompelio of Sparta, N.J., and the abduction of Donna Shaban, 17, also of Sparta.

Ardila wore a red jail jumpsuit and had a cigarette behind his right ear during the hearing Wednesday. He was handcuffed and wore leg irons.

When Harris asked if he understood the complaint and charges and if he was satisfied with his court-appointed attorney, Ardila responded "Yes sir" three times.

Attorney Anna Aragon said her client wanted to exercise his constitutional right to remain silent and requested that no one speak to him about the case while he awaits extradition to New Jersey.

The complaint filed Tuesday in New Jersey was read in court Wednesday by District Attorney Jesus Lopez, advising Ardila he stands accused of first-degree murder, kidnapping, unlawful possession of a weapon and auto theft.

Pompelio was stabbed seven times in the head and torso. An autopsy found that he died about 7:30 a.m. Sunday of a neck wound which tore through his jugular vein, said Sussex County, N.J., prosecutor Richard Honig.

Donna Shaban, right, and her mother, Patricia, walk through the Amarillo airport Wednesday on their way back to New Jersey. Donna Shaban had been missing from Newark, N.J., since Sunday. AP Laserphoto

Ardila was arrested Tuesday night in Santa Rosa after his car overturned during a 65-mile chase by New Mexico State Police. He was treated for minor injuries at Guadalupe County Hospital, dispatcher Roberta Parker said.

State police began the chase on Interstate 40 near Tucumcari, Ms. Parker said. Ardila allegedly ran a roadblock, then turned south on U.S. 84 before the car overturned, officers said.

Ms. Shaban apparently had been pushed out of the car in Groom, Texas, investigators said. She was picked up by a trucker and taken to the sheriff in Carson County, Texas, Honig said.

The girl suffered a leg cut but otherwise was fine, Honig said.

The hearing Wednesday was held at the San Miguel County Courthouse in Las Vegas, 59 miles north of Santa Rosa, because there was no public defender in Santa Rosa to represent Ardila. He was returned to the Guadalupe County Jail after the 20-minute hearing, deputies said.

Ms. Shaban's mother, Pat Shaban, flew to Amarillo, Texas, Wednesday to be with her daughter. The pair returned by airplane to Newark International Airport, arriving early today, said Lt. James McGovern of the Port Authority police. McGovern said they were met by a Sussex County investigator.

"My prayers have been answered and I'm very grateful," Mrs. Shaban told the Amarillo (Texas) Globe-News after being reunited with her daughter.

The girl had been kept overnight in the Carson County jail for her own protection, Deputy Sheriff Jerry Gaines said.

"She was pleading with me not to leave," Gaines said. "She kept saying, 'I'm afraid he's going to come back and kill me.'"

Stefan Lubinski, 18, of Montclair, N.J., said Ardila was a close friend who was probably scared.

"He's a kind person," Lubinski said.

New Mexico authorities began looking for Ardila after an Amarillo gasoline station reported a purchase Tuesday night with a credit card belonging to Pompelio's father, Richard.

Honig said that during the search for Ardila and the girl, Ms. Shaban twice placed collect phone calls to her parents and two other calls to friends, with possibly one of the calls initiated by Ardila.

Tuesday, U.S. Magistrate G. Donald Hanecke issued an unlawful flight to avoid prosecution warrant for murder and related charges against Ardila, Newark FBI spokeswoman Drucilla Wells said.

Pompelio was found dead Sunday at the home of Lance Monti, a classmate of Pompelio and Ms. Shaban at Sparta High School. Ardila and Pompelio had argued over Ms. Shaban during a party at the home, police said.

John Greed, Sparta schools superintendent, said Pompelio had never been in trouble with the law before.

Greed said Pompelio "is not the kind of kid who has a quick temper."

Sparta police Sgt. Nick Irons said investigators still haven't established a motive.

"It would appear at this point, she (Ms. Shaban) was the witness to the incident," Irons said.

Honig said Monti, who slept in another room, found Pompelio's body in the foyer when he awoke. By the time an ambulance arrived, Ardila and Ms. Shaban were gone.

From 1961 to 1971, Turner served as a missionary in Uganda where he was a tutor at Tucker College and a lecturer at Makere University at Kampala.

The speech will be from 9:30 a.m. until noon Saturday, during the 9 and 11:05 a.m. service Sunday and during the 10 a.m. adult education class at the Episcopal Church of the Holy Trinity, located at 1412 W. Illinois Ave.

A nursery is available on both days.

His recent publications include "Divorce: A Christian Perspective," "Sex, Money and Power," "Sexual Ethics and the Attack on Traditional Morality," "Cross Roads are for Meeting" and "Men and Women: Sexual Ethics in a Tumultuous Time."

Crash survival 'miracle'

SEMINOLE (AP) — A woman who heard the crash of a light plane said after seeing wreckage scattered across the countryside it was a miracle both men on the craft survived.

"To me, it looks demolished," said Susan Stansell, 45, the wife of Gaines County deputy sheriff Jay Stansell. "There are pieces of fiberglass scattered all over the field."

Kent Plaster, 32, of Woodward, Okla., and the pilot, John E. Kirkpatrick III, 46, of Oklahoma City, were reported in stable condition with cuts and bruises Wednesday at Seminole Memorial Hospital, nurse Teresa Guerra said.

The plane was headed to an oil field auction in Midland, but was diverted to Hobbs, N.M., because of dense fog in the Midland area, the Texas Department of Public Safety said.

But the 1968 Piper crashed about 2 p.m. Tuesday in a cotton field about four miles north of Seminole, DPS Communications Supervisor Lloyd Christmas said. Plaster said the plane apparently ran out of fuel.

EPA likely to fine utility

EL PASO (AP) — The EPA plans to impose sanctions, probably fines, on El Paso's water utility for allowing businesses to pollute the sewer system, officials say.

The amounts of the fines have not been determined, and they could be assessed daily until the utility comes into compliance, said Sandy Sevier, spokeswoman for the federal Environmental Protection Agency.

El Paso Water Utilities is violating the EPA's pre-treatment program, which sets limits on how polluted water can be before industries discharge it into sewers or rivers, Ms. Sevier said.

The city's sewers are contaminated by laundry waste from jeans prewashing factories, oil and grease from refineries and plating wastes. The pollutants clog and overload the sewer system.

Robert Bustamante, assistant general manager for the water utility, said the utility can't fine industrial polluters because the city does not have an ordinance allowing it to.

"The most we could do is cut off their service," he said. "That would put them out of business."

The utility probably will try to get an ordinance passed allowing it to fine industrial polluters, Bustamante said.

Swaggart has secret meeting with Dallas ministers

DALLAS (AP) — TV evangelist Jimmy Swaggart met in secret with a group of Dallas area ministers earlier this week to talk about recent allegations against the embattled preacher, an associate says.

The Rev. Don George, pastor at Calvary Temple in Irving, said Wednesday, "This was primarily for the purpose of bringing a small group of ministers up to date on recent allegations.

"It was an attempt to let ministers meet with Jimmy personally and to hear what he had to say," George said of the secret meeting.

Swaggart, whose credibility has been damaged by accusations that he paid for extramarital sex, is seeking to shore up local support.

Invited guests were from the Assemblies of God, Swaggart's former denomination, and other Pentecostal churches, the pastor said.

Swaggart, once the most popular TV evangelist in the United States, said he had sinned, and subsequent reports linked him to Debra Murphree, a New Orleans prostitute who said he paid her to perform sex acts.

Swaggart was defrocked last May by the Assemblies of God when he returned to his pulpit rather than spend two years repenting for the illicit liaison.

The Baton Rouge, La.-based evangelist has since fought to rebuild his ministry, which lost thousands of supporters, hundreds of employees and access to three cable-TV networks in light of the scandal.

A new allegation against Swaggart has surfaced in the form of a story in the current issue of Penthouse, in which New Orleans stripper Catherine Mary Kampen says Swaggart paid her to perform sex acts similar to those Murphree described.

Swaggart told reporters that he never met Kampen and that Penthouse published the article even though the ministry gave the magazine evidence the allegations were false.

Dennis Brewer, a Dallas-based attorney for Swaggart, who attended the meeting Tuesday, has said a libel suit will be filed against the magazine.

Swaggart has "been involved in hell on Earth because of charges brought against him," the lawyer said Wednesday. "This was an effort to re-establish relations with old friends."

Swaggart could not be reached for comment, the newspaper reported.

George said about 60 people attended the meeting, which lasted nearly three hours. Swaggart's wife, Frances, and son, Donnie, flew in from Baton Rouge for the gathering.

Frances and Donnie Swaggart told listeners how difficult it was to deal with the false accusations, and that their faith in God had sustained them, Brewer said.

TV show needs funds to continue

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Evangelist Jimmy Swaggart, who has said his television show will go off the air this month unless supporters send in money, says people are responding to the plea.

"But I don't want to shoot too much because there are newsmen here and they might think we're rich," he told his congregation during a Wednesday night prayer meeting.

He also hinted at a lawsuit, saying several times that he, his wife and son had met with "one of the world's foremost lawyers" and the attorney's associates. He refused to name the lawyer or say what they talked about, but said the world soon will know.

Swaggart and his lawyers in New Orleans and Dallas have said he will take Penthouse magazine to court over the magazine's latest article about him.

The Penthouse article quotes New Orleans "strip-o-gram" worker Catherine Mary Kampen as saying Swaggart paid her to perform sex acts similar to those described by a prostitute in an earlier issue of the magazine.

Swaggart, who made a tearful confession to an unspecified sin on Feb. 21 and was defrocked by the Assemblies of God when he returned to the pulpit May 22 rather than staying out for 12 months, has said that he never met Kampen.

He told his congregation Wednesday that he learned a lot in the past year.

"I've been going to school for the last year. Sometimes I wonder if He could make the classes easier," Swaggart said. "The Holy Spirit is a teacher, and he knows just how far to take us. He shoves us 'til we have to use it and he pulls out faith we don't think we have."

CONDOMS

Since 1976, condoms have been regulated under the Medical Device Amendments to the Federal Food, Drug and Cosmetic Act. The FDA uses a water-leak test in which a condom is filled with 300 milliliters of water and checked for leaks.

Condoms have a failure rate of 2.3 per 1,000, CDC statistics state.

"When buying a condom it's a good time to buy American," Ms. Ashmore said. American-made condoms meet higher quality control standards, she said.

FDA reports show that 21 percent of the foreign-made condoms have failed to meet American quality control standards, she explained.

A study by Consumer Reports, issued Wednesday and endorsed by the FDA, found the top-rated condoms were Gold Circle Coin and LifeStyles Extra Strength Lubricated. Both were thicker than the others tests, the report said.

While statistics aren't wholly conclusive, experts also agree the use of condoms and a spermicide can help prevent the spread of other sexually transmitted diseases.

"As far as condoms not working ... that's just terrible misinformation," said Jane Hellinghausen, director of education at the West Texas Planned Parenthood office in Odessa.

Other than retail stores, condoms are available at the Midland Health Department, the Midland Planned Parenthood office or at the AIDS Resource Center in Odessa.

There are some basic rules of thumb men should follow when using a condom, Ms. Hellinghausen explained.

Users should:

- Put on the condom before sexual contact occurs;
- Avoid oil-based lubricants which can increase chances of breakage;
- Use only latex-made condoms;
- Be aware of the expiration date on the condom package and don't use them if it has passed;
- Store the condom in a place other than a wallet; condoms can't tolerate the heat and friction associated with being carried in a wallet; and
- Buy American-made condoms.

"This piece of latex can save your life and maybe it's not very sexy," Ms. Ashmore said.

"But a lot of these people have never seen someone die of AIDS. That's a lot less fun than using the condom."

MEASLES

He added he didn't know how the two employees contracted the measles.

In Houston, at least 900 cases of the measles have been reported since November.

The virus, medically known as rubeola, is highly contagious and is spread through the air.

Symptoms include fever, runny nose, cough, watery eyes and a rash, which usually appears on the head and face and spreads to the body.

Rubeola should not be confused with rubella, or German measles, which can cause deformities in unborn babies.

Those who were born after 1956 or immunized prior to 1968 should be vaccinated against the disease, Beaman suggested.

UNT officials inspect dorm rooms

DENTON (AP) — A new, hard-line policy against drug use at the University of North Texas dormitories prompted officials to search rooms for evidence of narcotics.

"We have zero tolerance" of drug use, Greg Sawyer, assistant dean of students, said Thursday.

When six students were suspended in the fall semester amid drug accusations, housing officials responded with the policy of inspecting rooms immediately after narcotics use is suspected instead of waiting for UNT police.

Nearly 800 Central American refugees lined up overnight outside the Immigration and Naturalization Service detention center in Bayview to apply for political asylum, after a three-day hiatus in processing claims created a backlog of applicants. Border Patrol agents escorted groups of refugees in to be processed as buses take those who have completed the procedure back to the highway.

INS says new measures needed for refugees

BAYVIEW (AP) — The top U.S. immigration official in southern Texas says new measures are expected soon from Washington — and may include detention — to deal with more than 100,000 Central American immigrants who will pass through the area this year.

"Something's got to be done to stop people from abusing the asylum process," said Omer G. Sewell, Harlingen District director for the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

More than 1,000 Central Americans, primarily from Nicaragua and El Salvador, formed a half-mile-long line Wednesday to apply for political asylum at the INS' new processing location at the agency's remote rural detention center southeast of Harlingen.

About 300 were camped at the center's entrance Wednesday night and border patrol agents at the scene said they expected twice as many by this morning.

"We're just out here in the open air. It's something you have to do," Julio Cesar Ramirez, 32, a Guatemalan headed for Los Angeles, said Wednesday night.

Sewell and other INS officials contend that many seeking asylum are here only to better themselves economically and use the asylum process and lengthy appeals to get into the United States. Political asylum is granted only to those fleeing persecution for political or other reasons.

"I'm waiting for more direction from Washington, and I think there's going to be some action taken to relieve this problem," Sewell said while taking a look at the line of immigrants outside the minimum-security, 347-acre Port Isabel Service Processing Center.

He declined to reveal what that action might be.

Sewell said Tuesday that detention for the asylum-seekers while their cases are under review is one alternative being considered. Mario Ortiz, the INS' regional public affairs director repeated Wednesday that a detention camp remains a possibility.

"This tremendous line here represents a large number of Central Americans flooding into the Rio Grande Valley, and we just can't continue like this," Sewell said Wednesday.

The INS detention center is in eastern Cameron County near the unincorporated community of Bayview, just south of the Laguna Atascosa National Wildlife Refuge and 15 miles northeast of Brownsville. Detainees awaiting deportation proceedings inside the double fencing totaled 411 on Wednesday.

Henry Torres, 27, from Nicaragua, said he plans to go to Los Angeles, and had camped out overnight.

"I'm fleeing from military service," Torres said. "A communist country is no good."

U.S. District Judge Filemon Vela of Brownsville has said he would rule by Monday whether the INS can resume a policy of requiring asylum-seekers to stay in southern Texas while their cases are under review. The judge on Jan. 9 issued a temporary restraining order forcing the INS to allow them to travel on to their U.S. destinations after checking in with the agency's Harlingen District, if they had not been apprehended by the Border Patrol.

Those caught before applying for asylum still may be held in the area under bonds averaging $3,000.

But Vela has said he probably would allow the INS to resume the no-travel policy for all asylum-seekers after the restraining order expires Monday.

The INS originally began the travel restriction to relieve huge backlogs of thousands of asylum cases in cities such as Miami and Los Angeles.

Kennedy exhibit in Dallas opens Monday

Sixth Floor deals 'positively' with assassination

DALLAS (AP) — The sixth floor of the former schoolbook depository where Lee Harvey Oswald allegedly fired the shots that killed John F. Kennedy will open to the public on President's Day, for the first time ever, the exhibit's organizers say.

The Sixth Floor, which examines the assassination in the context of American cultural history, drew not from the morbid past in its photos, films and other exhibits but from Kennedy's legacy, creators said Wednesday.

"This exhibit is an attempt to deal with it positively, in that it is educational," Conover Hunt, the exhibit's project director, said. "It is objective; I think it is extremely sensitive, and I think it is dignified."

"And I think in terms of matters of American history of great importance, it is treated accordingly."

Built at a cost of $1.3 million, the 9,000-square-foot exhibit contains 350 photographs, 30 original artifacts, a 30-minute audio tour and six films running a total of 40 minutes. It was organized by the Dallas County Historical Foundation.

The assassination, 25 years later, remains an emotional subject for the Kennedys, a spokeswoman for Massachusetts Sen. Edward Kennedy said.

"The family will not have any comment on the (exhibit) opening," Melody Miller, deputy press secretary in Washington, said. "They prefer to focus on President's Kennedy's life, not his death. They will remember him on May 29, his birthday."

Reporters in a media preview were ushered past a bookstore in a lobby area of the Dallas County Administration Building, then up twin elevators to "The Sixth Floor: John F. Kennedy and the Memory of a Nation."

An estimated 500,000 visitors yearly will view the exhibits, which span Kennedy's political career to the assassination on Nov. 22, 1963, and the investigations that followed, said Ms. Hunt.

Stacked near the southeast corner window from which Oswald allegedly fired the shots were replicas of schoolbook boxes. The area was sealed off, but visitors could look through the glass partition and adjacent windows to Dealey Plaza and the Kennedy motorcade route.

"The exhibit has extraordinarily famous photographs, taken by some of America's most talented photographers through the years," said Ms. Hunt. "We have been most fortunate in that these photographers have largely waived their fees for this educational use."

The exhibit in the former Texas School Book Depository attempts to recount, as accurately as possible, what happened the day of the assassination and findings of official investigations, she said.

An opening ceremony at 10 a.m. Monday in the Dallas County Commissioner's Court will be "low-key and dignified," after which the facility will open its doors, said Ms. Hunt.

She coordinated the efforts of more than 30 consultants in the exhibit, including designers and architects. She also wrote the text interspersed through the exhibits.

"We looked at thousands of visuals to select the 350 that are in this exhibit," said Ms. Hunt, adding that some materials, including rare photos, could not be acquired for the project.

Allen Mondell of Dallas, who with his wife, Cynthia, produced and directed the films, said one segment has the formidable task of chronicling "1,000 days of the Kennedy presidency in five minutes."

"We did not want museum visitors, through these films, to feel that they were in a morbid place that concerned death," Mondell said. "But we wanted to convey hope for the future — the Kennedy legacy."

All visitors will undergo a security check, using a metal detector and X-ray machine, before entering the ground-floor visitors' center, which was built at a cost of $2.2 million.

"Vandalism is a major concern in museums," Ms. Hunt said. "We have an historic space that we do not want to see destroyed."

Previously, thousands of tourists have come to the building but could not gain access to the sixth floor because it was closed. The rest of the building is used for government offices.

County officials have been developing plans to convert the building's sixth floor into an exhibit area since 1981, but the project was stalled by funding problems.

Lindalyn Adams, the historical foundation's chairman, said county employees who previewed the facility over the weekend had praise for the exhibit. Other residents said they planned to see it but one had reservations.

"It is unfortunate that it (the assassination) happened here, but it did," Lee Barton of Dallas said. "However, we have been far too preoccupied with it in the intervening years. Some are a little burned out on it."

An unidentified visitor, above, Wednesday tours the sixth floor of the building that was once the Texas School Book Depository in downtown Dallas. The Dallas County Historical Foundation has made the floor an exhibit of the life, death and legacy of President John F. Kennedy. At left, the sixth-floor window, center, has been arranged to look as it did on Nov. 22, 1963, when Lee Harvey Oswald allegedly shot the president.

Organizations want lottery for pay raises, jobs

AUSTIN (AP) — Support for a state lottery has formed among statewide organizations that would like to use the revenue for pay raises and possibly jobs for their members.

Two lottery proposals do not allocate the projected lottery revenue to any specific areas of state government, but sponsor Hector Uribe says he would reconsider if his colleagues wanted him to do so.

Representatives of the Texas Public Employees Association and Texas State Teachers Association, both seeking pay raises for their members, endorsed a lottery Wednesday at a hearing of the Senate State Affairs Committee.

The lottery, which has been portrayed as a "job creator," also was favored by a representative of the Texas AFL-CIO, according to a witness card.

Uribe's proposed constitutional amendment authorizing the Legislature to establish a lottery operated by the state, and companion bill spelling out details, were sent to a subcommittee after a two-hour hearing.

"I don't think there's any need to sell the lottery to anybody. The people want lottery so that they can get basic state services without having to raise taxes," Sen. Uribe, D-Brownsville, told reporters.

Feds mum on reducing immigration funds

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Bush administration is not responding to inquiries regarding possible reductions of reimbursements to states that must spend millions of dollars helping amnesty-seeking immigrants, Rep. John Bryant says.

President Reagan had proposed in his fiscal 1990 budget that the State Legalization Impact Assistance Grants (SLIAG) be cut from $1 billion to $700 million. But Bryant said Bush hasn't told him whether he will go along with that recommendation.

Bryant, D-Dallas, said the funding issue is critical for Texas and other states with large populations of immigrants applying for eventual citizenship under the 1986 Immigration Reform and Control Act.

The state was approved to receive $103 million in fiscal 1988 for its share of the SLIAG pie, said Marguerite Rivera, program analyst for SLIAG at the Texas Health and Human Services Coordinating Council in Austin.

The state is seeking $91 million this fiscal year, based on estimates of need that may be on the low side, Ms. Rivera said.

"As late as today," Bryant said Tuesday night, "I cannot get the administration to tell me what they propose for the SLIAG grants. This is a critical budgetary question for border states like Texas so heavily impacted by immigration.

"I've been asking that question since the day of the state of the union address (Feb. 9), and I've gotten no answer," Bryant said.

A staffer at the Office of Management and Budget told a Bryant aide Wednesday that if Bush's budget does not specify a change in SLIAG funding, which it does not, then the administration favors the $300 million cut proposed by Reagan, a Bryant aide said. Still, no official word has been received.

SLIAG is designed to reimburse local communities, through the states, for money spent on public assistance, housing or education for amnesty-seekers.

Postal workers open up shelter for homeless

HOUSTON (AP) — Two postal employees who are spending at least $3,000 of their own money each month on a homeless shelter said residents at the new facility will be able to stay even after they get a job.

Vivian Suttles and Roxanna Walker opened the Mercy and Grace Foundation in response to a recent citywide effort to relocate and refer the homeless to shelters and agencies according to their needs.

The two women opened the 66-unit shelter Feb. 1 in northeast Houston with their own money. Rent is $3,000 a month and monthly utility bills are expected to total $2,000-$3,000.

"What we're trying to do is give people a free place to stay until they get back on their feet," Ms. Suttles said.

More than half the foundation's 20 residents have arrived since Thursday, the first night of an effort to relocate the homeless who lived under a downtown overpass called the Pierce Elevated.

The relocation, prompted in part by complaints from nearby residents, culminated Tuesday as city crews cleaned up, hosed off and returned the area to its intended use — a parking lot.

Ms. Suttles said part of the problem in helping the homeless is some transients' perceptions of the traditional shelters.

The Mercy and Grace Foundation's flexibility in length of the residents' stays is important, said Bob Dean, director of the mayor's Citizens Assistance office.

"If someone picks you up and dusts you off — if you've been kicked around for five years, it may take you that long to get yourself together again," he said. "That is what (the new shelter) is doing."

Ms. Suttles and Ms. Walker, who have had to skimp on their own expenses since opening the 3½-acre complex, hope to open men and women's dormitories for individuals eventually and to keep the current units for families.

Those who stay at the foundation after obtaining jobs will pay $22 a month for rent and $25 for utilities, Ms. Suttles said.

STATE IN BRIEF

Houston has highest rate of births of AIDS babies

Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — Nearly two of every 1,000 mothers who gave birth in Harris County in mid-1988 may have been infected with the AIDS virus, the highest such infection rate in Texas, health officials said this week.

In addition, 6 percent of the people who sought treatment in the city's venereal disease clinics during the latter part of 1988 carried antibodies to the virus that causes AIDS, said Dr. John E. Arradondo, Houston's public health director.

He called the 6 percent figure excessively high.

Meanwhile in Austin, the Rev. Chris C. Steele, chairwoman of the Legislative Task Force on AIDS, urged state lawmakers to appropriate as much as $75 million for Texas' AIDS fight.

"A killer is loose in the human household," Steele said. "It does no good to affix blame or waste precious time arguing how it got in."

The task force reported that as of Feb. 3 more than 5,900 Texans had been diagnosed with AIDS, and 60 percent of those, or 3,575, had died. The number of Texans with AIDS has more than doubled since the last legislative session in 1987, Steele said.

In the Houston metropolitan area, health officials have confirmed AIDS in 2,725 people. Of those, 63 percent have died.

Gay ex-officer cleared

HOUSTON (AP) — A former Houston police officer who was cleared of misdemeanor theft charges said he was harassed and subjected to numerous false accusations when his fellow officers discovered he is a homosexual.

Jurors in state District Judge Mary Bacon's court deliberated five hours Wednesday before acquitting Mark L. Timmers, 28, who was a police officer for 4½ years before resigning Oct. 31, 1987.

Timmers had maintained that his trial on charges of stealing concert tickets also was an example of harassment — a witch hunt," in his lawyer's words.

"After they found out I was gay, it started snowballing," Timmers said. "I got notes on lockers, notes on patrol cars. When I tried to hide it, it got worse. In the department, you either fall under a rock or you stand and not let people push you around."

Texas third in contracts

WASHINGTON (AP) — Contracts for two nuclear-powered aircraft carriers helped propel Virginia into second place in Pentagon spending by state last year, but it still lagged far behind the perennial leader California.

Texas was in third place.

Bucking a trend of "procurement decrease" in 32 states in fiscal 1988, the value of contracts awarded in Virginia rose 31 percent, the Defense Department said in a report released Wednesday.

Virginia contractors won $10.2 billion in awards, up from $7.8 billion in fiscal 1978, when the state finished fifth. Part of the Virginia increase came from contracts the Newport News Shipbuilding & Drydock Co. received for two nuclear-powered aircraft carriers.

California contractors won $23.5 billion in awards, down 4.3 percent from the fiscal 1987 total of $24.5 billion. California is the home of many large aerospace, computer and electronic concerns that work on military weapon projects.

The information on defense spending trends was contained in a statistical report entitled "Prime Contract Awards by State." The latest Defense Department report covers fiscal 1988, the 12-month period that ended Sept. 30.

'Rigs to reefs' approved

AUSTIN (AP) — The Senate Wednesday approved a "rigs to reefs" bill that would require the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department to develop a plan for using abandoned offshore oil and gas platforms as artificial fishing reefs.

The measure, which was amended to prohibit the use of state funds from general revenue, was sent to the House on a 31-0 vote.

The parks and wildlife department would have to complete the artificial reef plan by Sept. 1, 1990.

Man charged in Valentine's Day murder

Fencl

LUFKIN (AP) — An East Texas man was charged with murder in connection with the shooting death of his former girlfriend following a shooting spree that also claimed the lives of his sister and brother-in-law, authorities said.

After the shootings early Tuesday, police said, Richard King, 42, then turned the gun on himself. He remains in critical, but guarded condition at a Lufkin hospital.

King reportedly walked into the Bros. grocery chain's central bakery around 7:20 a.m. Tuesday and dragged his former girlfriend, Denise Rae Fencl, into the parking lot where he apparently had concealed a rifle, said Lufkin Police Chief Sherman Collins.

"We had two officers arrive at the scene just in time to see him shoot her three times with a .30-caliber carbine," Collins said. "Then he turned the gun around and shot himself in the stomach."

King was charged Wednesday afternoon with murder in the slaying of Ms. Fencl, 24, Lufkin police Lt. Amos Lewis said.

It was hours after officers were called to the disturbance, which left Ms. Fencl dead, that the two other slayings were discovered.

"This is probably the first crime of its type that we've had in this part of the state," Collins said.

Kay Buford Scott, 38, and her husband, Bill Scott, who turned 42 Tuesday, were both found dead in their home near the Woden community, about eight miles southeast of Nacogdoches. King lived on the same property in rural Nacogdoches County as his sister and brother-in-law.

She had been shot once in the head at point-blank range with a .30-caliber rifle and her husband apparently was shot three times in the head at close range — twice with the rifle and once with a shotgun, said Lt. Bill Ball of the Nacogdoches County Sheriff's Department.

Meat industry officials pleased with new negotiator in beef dispute

WASHINGTON (AP) — Meat industry officials say they're glad to have new Trade Representative Carla Hills representing the United States in a dispute with Europe over hormone-treated beef as both sides prepare for weekend discussions.

Hills met Tuesday with officials of five meat organizations, but representatives of some of the groups said she did not indicate whether she supports efforts by Texas Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower to sell hormone-free beef to the EC.

They said she would press, however, for full access to European markets for their products when she meets with the European Community officials Friday and Saturday.

The European Economic Community has banned imports of beef treated with artificial hormones, contending the growth stimulants are a health threat.

The U.S. claims Europe is using the hormone issue as an excuse to restrain trade and retaliated against the loss of a $100 million export market by setting higher tariffs on about $100 million in Common Market goods.

The EC has warned it would slap tough tariffs on American walnuts and dried fruits if no progress is made by Monday to end the dispute.

Tom Cook, director of industry affairs for the National Cattlemen's Association, was at the meeting and said the organizations represented told Hills they didn't approve of Hightower's "demagoguing" the issue.

They also said they disapproved of the way Hightower was dealing directly with the Europeans, rather than through U.S. officials, Cook said.

Advertising claims dump on men

By CARLA MARINUCCI
Hearst News Service

CNS Graphic

SAN FRANCISCO — They can't cook. They can't change diapers. They tend to be complete idiots in front of a washing machine.

In fact, men can't handle much of anything — according to television commercials.

So says Men's Rights Inc., a Sacramento advocacy group that surveyed more than 1,000 print and television ads to grant its third Mr. Media Watch annual awards for the most offensive ads of the year.

"Advertisers are gearing their message to women. They heard a lot of anger from women these days in the media and in literature," says Frederic Hayward, founder of the 12-year-old nonprofit organization. Therefore, in commercials selling everything from diapers to deodorant, "it's politically chic to dump on men," Hayward says.

The study by Men's Rights found that, despite the changing roles of men, advertising ignores their work as care givers and parents, he says.

"Among the thousands of pages that feminists have written about sexism in language, it is never mentioned that mothers give birth and breastfeed, but parents change diapers and raise children," he says.

"We live in an age of male bashing," he says. "We're being blamed for everything that goes wrong." Advertising copywriters, he contends, therefore feel free to insult men in a way that they would never do to women.

Some of the most offensive ads, according to his group:

■ Stay Put Shoulder Pads. A "dehumanizing" ad that contains the following copy: "They're like a good man: a little bold, a little square, around when you need them, and they stay put . . . They never lose their shape. Which is more than you can say for most men."

■ Bill Cosby. A "self-proclaimed anti-sexist" whose Jell-O commercial states: "Moms love it, 'cause it's made with milk." Says Hayward: "When the hypocritical Cosby did E.F. Hutton commercials, would he have tolerated a voice-over saying, 'Dads love it because it earns money for your family?'"

■ Nutri-grain. Its cereal commercials depict a hapless male eating cold pizza for breakfast, and being rescued by his nutritionally aware girlfriend. The commercials are "consistently portraying men as ignorant and/or at the mercy of women," says Hayward.

■ Pampers. For its "sexist slogan": "All the dryness a mother can love."

■ Nyquil. For "stabbing men in the back." Its commercial was a breakthrough ad for health care products, he says, because it's one of the few showing "a woman who was suffering and a man who knew what to do." But here, "the man didn't help her. He lets her cough and goes to sleep with a smile on his face."

■ Grape Nuts. For creating "the most obnoxious couple of the '80s . . . the woman would rather die than give him some positive feedback, and he never seems to tire of her abuse."

Hayward says that his organization has continually surveyed male-female relationships as depicted in advertising, and that men invariably come out looking bad.

"Whenever there was a jerk, 100 percent of the time, it was a male," he says. "One hundred percent of the ignorant people — the ones who panicked, the ones who lost some kind of contest, who smelled bad or sweated a lot" were men. "In every single category, when one person was worse than the other, it was a male."

The organization lauded several ads for their fair-minded portrayal of men, including Anheuser-Busch's Budweiser, for a spot in which a young man — looking back on his old baseball glove — finally thanks his father for sacrificing to buy it.

Judy Dyer, director of strategic planning at J. Walter Thompson, San Francisco, says advertising executives are becoming more aware the changing roles of males, because of the increase in the two-income household.

But stereotypes, she says, do still exist.

She says the agency made a major survey of some 18,000 commercials and 70,000 print ads in its huge New York creative library for a study called "Visual image, the Visceral Response: Men in Advertising." The study showed "there were nine basic stereotypes used for men back in 1960 that are still being used today."

The nine characters include "The Lone Wolf," i.e., the Marlboro man; "Mr. Success," the Rolex guy; "The Expert," typified by the late actor John Houseman's spots for Smith Barney; "The Lover," such as portrayed in sensual Paco Rabanne spots; "The Stud," ads like Calvin Klein depicting blatant sexuality.

But a particular stereotype has been "The Husband," usually portrayed as "someone who was hopeless around the house, was sick and didn't know how to take care of himself," Dyer says.

New consumer guide rates companies on social issues

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — In an age of high-fiber and macrobiotic diets, shopping for groceries has become a ritual of the healthy style of life.

If the publishers of a new consumer guide are successful, a visit to the supermarket will soon be good for the soul as well as the body.

The pocket-sized guide, called "Shopping for a Better World," rates 138 companies on their corporate citizenship and commitment to responsible social policies.

Shoppers can buy Ivory Soap and Folger's Coffee knowing that Procter & Gamble, which makes both, has a solid record in charitable giving and promotion of women and members of minority groups, the guide says.

They can steer clear of a toothpaste or spaghetti sauce from a manufacturer that is listed as having a major presence in South Africa.

The guide is published by the Council for Economic Priorities, a non-profit research group in New York.

"People want to conduct their lives in an ethically consistent way," Alice Tepper Marlin, the executive director of the council and an author of the guide, said in an interview last week. "With this, you can cast your economic vote as conscientiously as you do your political vote."

The 128-page booklet evaluates companies on several issues: charitable giving; advancement of women and minorities; involvement in military contracting, nuclear power or animal testing; disclosure of company policies; presence in South Africa; community outreach programs, and concern for the environment.

Companies are rated from poor to outstanding in each category, except military contracting and nuclear power, where they are simply noted as being active or not active.

Mrs. Marlin said the guide allowed consumers to concentrate on one issue or to evaluate companies across the board.

For example, she said, she did not buy products from companies that make cigarettes or have operations in South Africa.

The council began its research by sending a 26-page questionnaire to 93 major companies and a shorter survey to 45 smaller companies; about a third of the companies responded. The council also sifted through records and interviewed dozens of company officials.

Procter & Gamble, Campbell Soup and General Mills each posted top ratings in 8 of the 10 categories. Not surprisingly, Newman's Own, the salad dressing company founded by Paul Newman, earned high marks for donating all proceeds to charity.

Texaco was among those with the poorest ratings, getting the lowest marks in 6 of the 10 categories.

A spokesman for Texaco, K. Peter Maneri, said, "If they want to learn about our company, let them talk to the Metropolitan Opera about our 49 years of support, or OSHA about our health and safety citations."

Copies of the guide will be available from the council itself by calling 800-822-6435 or 212-420-1133 in New York state. Each copy costs $4.95, plus $1 shipping and handling.

Ad campaign replaces idle repairman

New York Times News Service

Jesse White, the Hollywood actor who for 21 years has doubled as "the loneliest guy in the world" in Maytag commercials, is about to turn over his toolbox to a successor.

Beginning next month, Gordon Jump, best known for his role as Arthur Carlson on "WKRP in Cincinnati," will appear as the repairman, Ol' Lonely, in the Maytag ads.

White, 70, will become a consultant to the Maytag Co.

He has appeared in all 68 of the lonesome repairman commercials, in which he never has anything to do because Maytags do not break down.

"Since we're introducing an advertising campaign this spring on refrigeration, it seemed like a logical time to introduce a successor," said Linda Eggerss, a Maytag spokeswoman. The commercials with White will continue until late March, Eggerss said.

New frozen dinners better, but not great

By LINDA ANDERSON

Anderson

When I was a child, the proverbial "frozen TV dinner" was somewhat limited in scope — you could get turkey and dressing with mashed potatoes and green peas; fried chicken with mashed potatoes and green peas; meat loaf with mashed potatoes and green peas; and for variety, ham with sweet potatoes and carrots with peas. The potatoes tasted instant, the peas were too green for reality, and the meat tasted — well, the word "cardboard" comes to mind.

Not any more. Today's frozen dinners may contain frozen chicken enchiladas, French bread pizza, teriaki beef, Chicken Divan, Fettucini Alfredo, Yankee pot roast or fast-food favorites such as chicken nuggets and cheeseburgers. And the list goes on.

Sizes vary, too. The ones we just sampled were individual-sized side dishes, a size that was totally unheard of just a few years ago.

We found two potato side dishes — Nacho Potatoes, and Cheddared Potatoes & Broccoli — from The Budget Gourmet. We tried them both for taste, price and advertising accuracy. (These new frozen dinners are amazing in their variety — and much easier to live with than "TV dinners" of the past.)

Both potato side dishes are marketed in 5-ounce boxes in the frozen foods section of the supermarket. Both were priced at 79 cents each. (Price listed is from a local supermarket. Price at other locations may vary.)

Label advertising claims the Nacho Potatoes are "Lightly-fried potato wedges in a cheese and sour cream sauce laced with spicy green chilies, and topped with a melt of Cheddar and Parmesan cheeses. Ole!" (That last work was added by the manufacturer, not me.) Cheddared Potatoes & Broccoli's label advertising says: "We serve our tiny borccoli florets and shredded potatoes in a butter cheese sauce, then cover it all with a generous toping of aged Cheddar." (It's hard to be generous with anything when the serving is only 5 ounces and costs 79 cents.)

The taster in the taste-test ended up being mostly just me. The small tasters don't like anything that even looks like it might have green chilies in it, because they have the mistaken idea that green chilies are always hot and will burn their mouths. And one of the little testers refuses to touch broccoli, or any other vegetable, for that matter.

But since I love both potatoes and cheese, I didn't mind having the entire burden fall on me. And I have to say that both were interesting concepts. Unfortunately, they didn't taste as good as the pictures on their packages looked. The shredded potatoes had a funny texture, and the nacho potatoes cooked unevenly (which may be because of my microwave oven, not the dish itself).

But even though I was disappointed by the taste of both dishes, I'd take them over the "cardboard" TV dinners of my youth, anytime.

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Some time ago, I wrote to tell you that Keith, our eldest son, was killed when he fell from a roof, and I was heartbroken because nobody — neither my friends nor his — remembered his birthday or the date of his death.

With my permission, you published my letter and my name. Abby, since my letter appeared, I've received so many wonderful cards and telephone calls from people who read it! It was especially gratifying to hear from so many of Keith's friends who came forward to tell me how his life and death affected their lives. Parents appreciate knowing that their dead child had an impact on other people besides his immediate family.

The pain of losing a child — or any loved one — never "goes away;" it must be dealt with. And discussing the child's life and death is one way parents work through their grief. The immense pain does ease a little, day by day, and you gradually learn to live with your loss, but your life will never be the same.

Thank you for printing my letter, Abby. I hope that many more people will know how to react, and help friends and relatives who have lost a child. — CAROLE EDWARDS, FLORIDA

DEAR CAROLE: Hundreds of people wrote to say they never realized that talking to grieving parents about the deceased is therapeutic. All feared it would "stir up" emotions, so they talked about everything else, assuming that the distraction would be preferable.

Thank you for giving me yet another opportunity to assure my readers that it's a kindness to remember the birthday and death date of the deceased.

DEAR ABBY: You've often said that the best (but hardest) way to quit smoking is "cold turkey."

Well, chocolate is to me what cigarettes are to smokers. I'm a grown woman, married and the mother of two sons, and I couldn't wait for my husband and boys to leave the kitchen so I could have something chocolate. I used to love to go marketing so I could buy two packages of chocolate cookies. I'd eat one package in the store, and one in the car on the way home. I even hid chocolate candy in my dresser drawers so no one else would see them.

Every other day I'd mix a batch of brownies — only they rarely made it to the oven. I'd eat the raw batter in one sitting!

After my aerobics class three times a week, I'd stop at the store for a chocolate treat. Of course I knew I had a problem, so I once tried to make myself sick — eating 10 chocolate cupcakes at one sitting. It didn't work. I was too addicted.

I finally realized I would have to quit — cold turkey. So that's what I did.

It can be done if you set your mind to it. I also prayed a lot, and have been a reformed chocoholic for five months now! — SUE WELCH IN MARYLAND

Parents claim kinship only with offspring who behave

It came as no surprise to me that "my son" took the car keys back with him to California after a recent visit home. It is something "my son" has been trained to do by me throughout the years. If he had taken the car back with him, there's no doubt my husband would have granted me permanent custody of him for the rest of my life.

It's something I've never really understood. How is it a child can be sectioned off at birth like the steer on the poster at the frozen meat locker? Mothers get the rump and fathers get the good stuff. It's one of those divisions we seem to accept without question.

"The baby needs changing/wiping/powdering."

"That's Mama's part."

"The baby is hungry/cranky/bleeding."

"It's Mama's son."

We have discussed it. "Why is it," I asked my husband, "that 'your son' never needs a laxative — it's always 'my son'?"

"For the same reason," he explained, "that 'your son' never needed shoes. Just try to remember that every time his feet were flapping out of a pair of gym shoes and it cost $80 to cover them, you said, 'Your son needs shoes.'"

I thought about that moment. "Yes, but when the same feet were all over the furniture and never on the floor, they became my son's feet again."

"Not always," he laughed nervously.

"And when he stepped in something disgusting, they were always my son's feet to clean off. ALWAYS!"

"Make your point."

"I am saying," I said, "that you can't have one part one day and trade it off the next. Do you want the hair or not? If you say yes, remember he's your son when his hair is down to his shoulders and he's your son when it's short. Make up your mind."

"I'll think about it. What else is up for grabs?"

"He's always my son when he's out of a job."

"That seems reasonable," said my husband. "You always seem to have so much patience."

"You always said that when he was throwing up. I bought it then, but I'm not buying it now. Besides, we had the children together. Why can't we both be parents when they screw up? It's a shared responsibility. We're in this together. After all, isn't sacrifice what being a parent is all about?"

The phone rang. Our son wanted to be picked up at the airport. He had been skiing and had a few hours before he took off at midnight and thought he'd kill them in the bosom of his family.

My husband and I looked at each other. Then we turned to our other son and said, "He's YOUR brother!"

Nothing childish about new banks for young depositors

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — A commercial bank in a toy store, or in a caboose, may be hard to take seriously. But banks for children seem to be more than a novelty. A handful of them operate around the country.

While is different, their purpose is the same: to capture a market ignored by big banks that have high fees and little patience.

"I think these banks have hit upon something," said Peter Zollo, executive vice president of Teenage Research Unlimited in Lake Forest, Ill.

One of these banks opened last fall at the F.A.O. Schwarz toy store in New York. The bank is a division of the First Women's Bank, whose president, Neale S. Godfrey, said there were two reasons for starting it: "It's an educational experience for the children, and it gets their parents and grandparents acclimated to planning for their children's future."

The venture may also be profitable. "The checking accounts are a loss leader," she said, "but you're talking about building very stable savings accounts and certificates of deposit."

There are aspects of the First Children's Bank that might be called gimmicky. Checks are larger than normal, to accommodate childish scrawls, and standard disclosure statements are printed in big type.

Some parents may not like the location, but Ms. Godfrey believes "an environment positive to children" is the best place for such a bank to be.

"Children are consumers," she said. "That's a fact of life. This is a very directed marketing campaign."

In one form or another, efforts to get children to save money have been going on for generations. For years, elementary-school pupils have experienced various versions of in-school banking. And commercial banks, savings banks and savings and loan associations have long accepted trustee and custodial accounts for children.

But the banking upheavals of the 1980s have left most banks less than eager to get involved with children's accounts. "Children are not encouraged by the big banks anymore," said a senior officer of a major New York bank, who asked not to be named. "They don't make any money on them."

Although the various children's banks have different styles, they are all legitimate banks. All of their accounts are insured up to $100,000 by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. And they pay market rates of interest on savings accounts and CDs.

Commercials viewed by young consumers

By MICHAEL deCOURCY HINDS
New York Times News Service

How savvy are children as consumers? A communications company has given the question new currency by planning to test-market a daily television news program with commercials in six public schools next month.

The company, Whittle Communications of Knoxville, Tenn., ultimately hopes to transmit its 10-minute news program, "Channel 1," with 2 additional minutes of advertising to 8,000 high schools and junior high schools.

In exchange the schools will receive free television sets, videocassette recorders and satellite dishes.

Some educators and children's advocates have condemned the plan, saying that advertisers should not be allowed to exploit a captive classroom audience.

But many specialists in children's advertising, communications and child development said that exposing children to a few more commercials would have little negative impact — and it might even have a positive effect if the advertising promotes classroom discussion.

Studies indicate that most children gain consumer experience at a very early age and have a healthy skepticism about advertising.

Today's child watches 30,000 to 40,000 television commercials a year and does a fair amount of shopping alone and with parents.

CHILDREN ARE very willing consumers.

"They take a certain pride in learning to shop, making change, getting good value," said Dr. Richard Heslin, an associate professor of psychology and consumer behavior at Purdue University. "It's one more way they feel some control over their lives in an adult world."

Dr. John C. Condry, a professor of human development and family studies at Cornell University, said the "Channel 1" program was not itself cause for alarm: "There is no issue here about doing kids any evident harm with 'Channel 1.'"

But like others interviewed, Condry lamented the commercialization of childhood: "You wonder if there can be any place in the children's environment that can be free of the clutter of advertising."

Companies have advertised products directly to teen-agers for almost 50 years. Seventeen Magazine, for example, began publishing in 1944.

But direct advertising to younger children has been traditionally reserved for products they could be expected to beg their parents for: candy, toys and sugary cereals.

But in the last few years, companies began advertising many different products on children's shows as they came to realize that young children have about $5 billion in spending money and influence buying decisions involving another $50 billion.

As children's spending power has grown, so, too, have the number of products: sophisticated adult-styled apparel, microwave snacks and dinners, catalogues for mail-order gifts and direct-mail offerings of books, magazines and model kits.

THE CHILDREN'S market has grown along with changes in the family structure and children's being given more responsibility.

Two-thirds of children between the ages of 6 and 11 now live in households with working parents, according to Yankelovich Clancy Shulman, a marketing consulting and research firm in Westport, Conn.

Last winter, Yankelovich conducted 1,500 interviews with children in their homes around the nation. The children most receptive to television advertising were the ones who lived with a single working parent and who had the responsibility for some of the family's grocery shopping.

Receptivity to advertising also varied by age: children in grades 7 through 9 found the advertisements the most useful, children in grades 1 through 6 found them moderately useful and children in grades 10 through 12 were the most skeptical of advertising.

"Kids are growing up faster these days," said Amy S. Schafrann, a senior vice president at Yankelovich. "I know; I've got a 3-year-old daughter. Allie helps select cereal and orders clothes from a catalogue. It's easier to buy something she likes so she will get dressed in the morning."

Last fall, companies started advertising soft drinks, yogurt, cheese, soup, microwave snacks and dinners, clothes, sneakers, cassette players, videotapes and telephone message lines on children's programs, said Horst H. Stipp, the director of development and research at NBC.

"People blame the media for changing society, but when you look at it carefully, it really goes the other way around," he said. "Take microwavable foods. There are microwave ovens in three-quarters of all households with children, and a majority of these children use the microwave. But the ads for microwavable foods are just coming."

EXPERTS CONCEDE the usefulness of some advertising but also worry about exploitation.

"Even the most savvy youngsters don't have the perceptive or cognitive sophistication to fully appreciate the implied promise that is part of a commercial," said Dr. Helen Boehm, the director of the Children's Advertising Review Unit of the Council of Better Business Bureaus in New York.

Dr. Boehm said most complaints about children's advertisements come from competitors, but about 20 percent come from children, among them readers of Penny Power.

This magazine, with 130,000 subscribers, is the children's version of Consumer Reports, both published by Consumers Union in Mount Vernon, N.Y.

New York Times News Service

How should adults discuss advertisements with young consumers? Dr. Helen Boehm, an educational psychologist who is the director of the Children's Advertising Review Unit of the Council of Better Business Bureaus in New York, suggests this approach:

- Ask the children what is really being sold. Suggest that the product be isolated from the advertisements' special effects and beautiful scenery.
- Discuss whether the advertising suggests that buying the product will increase prestige, glamour, skills or popularity.
- Ask what it would be like to own the product, how it would be used and whether it would be as valuable as it first seems.
- Talk about the language in the advertisement. Is the product really the best or the only one of its kind? Are supplies really limited?
- And discuss who is doing the selling. Why is Fred Flintstone or Michael Jackson endorsing the product?

Lee's Lady Rebels try to climb bi-district mountain

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Midland Lee's Lady Rebels almost never have a problem making the state Class 5A state basketball playoffs, but that first hurdle on Austin's road has been a big one. In fact, it has been a mountain.

The Lady Rebs have been in the state's run for roses every year except 1981 since basketball started at the school in 1978. That's a record any team across the state would cherish.

And Lee is on that lofty perch again tonight, thanks to a 67-57 District 4-5A second place playoff victory over Odessa Permian Tuesday night in Andrews. They meet the Lubbock Monterey Lady Plainsmen at 7:30 p.m. today in Seminole for the bi-district title and the right to stay

But now the rub comes. Lee has won only one bi-district title since 1978, finding teams from the rugged District 3-5A a tough first round match. Such teams as Monterey, Amarillo Tascosa, Plainview and Amarillo High have been dead solid tough in the state playoffs over the past decade and District 4-5A has paid the price.

For instance, Lee lost 63-42 to Tascosa last year in the bi-district round. Haymaker losses like that have been common for 4-5A in the first round.

"We've played some really tough teams in the first round," notes Lee coach Shirley Stephenson, "but you always feel you have a chance. We played Monterey a close game on the road to open the season. We'll just go out and see if the ball goes in the hole."

But Monterey will be a tough chore. The Lady Plainsmen, under coach Dale Pectol, own a 24-5 overall record and won the 3-5A title with a 13-1 mark.

But Lee owns a very respectable 20-8 season record and did play Monterey tough in the season opener, 60-52, in Lubbock.

"We put Monterey on our schedule early to show our kids what it takes to play against them," said Stephenson. "They were also in our tournament and won it."

Lee senior Monica Ramirez is the top scoring dynamo for both teams, averaging 22.8 points per game while senior Mary Ann Isom, who had a big game against Permian, is averaging at 11.2.

Monterey, on the other hand, features a balanced attack with junior forward Diana Kersey, averaging 14.9 points and nine rebounds per outing, and junior forward-post Janice Farris, averaging 13.7 points and 6.4 rebounds.

Monterey also has four other players that contribute in a balanced attack and all are seniors. Ashley Ince (9.8 points and 4.3 rebounds) is the point guard while Shonie Box (5.1) is a post-forward type. Shawn Shoemake (4.6) is the other starter at guard, but Lisa Bryant has come off the bench to average 6.1 per game.

Ramirez and Isom have carried a big load for the Lady Rebels, who have averaged just over 60 points per game this year and will need big games from the rest of the cast in Seminole tonight.

A big game from any one or two of the following on the defensive or offensive end of the court would be a big boost for the Rebels. Gina Navarette (6.3) can be a big key both on offense and defense. Kim Davis (5.4), Marcia del Llano (5.0), Leslie Swann (4.3), Keyshia Crisp (2.7) and Twala Medearis (1.7) will be counted on for career outings.

The winner will advance to the area round against an El Paso team either Monday or Tuesday and four area winners advance to the Region I girls tournament Feb. 24-25 at Midland's Chaparral Center. One of those team will be Austin bound for the Final Four.

Chaparrals start stretch drive today

From Staff Reports

Facing two long trips in three days, the Midland College basketball team is trying to focus on each game as if it were for the championship.

Coming off a disappointing loss at Odessa Monday night, the Chaps must regroup and head for a road meeting today with the Clarendon College Bulldogs.

Their 77-74 loss to the undefeated and top-ranked Odessa College Wranglers dropped the Chaps back into a tie for third place with the Howard College Hawks, who edged New Mexico Military 95-89 Monday. In their first meeting with Clarendon, the Chaps blasted the Bulldogs 106-81. But things somehow are much different for the teams which visit the Bulldogs up in the Panhandle.

"We were disappointed about losing to Odessa, of course, but we've got to concentrate now on the last three games," said MC coach Reggie Franklin. "This is a tough week, but we have to take care of each game in turn and get into the (regional) tournament."

THE CHAPS play a make-up game Saturday in Roswell, N.M., against the improving New Mexico Mililtary Institute Broncos. This game was originally set for Dec. 8, but was postponed because of weather. It will be their second meeting in 12 days. The Chaps defeated the Cadets 99-88 in Midland last week, but it was a tough game.

On Monday, Feb. 20, the Chaps have an off-date and a chance to catch their breath. They finish up the regular season at home Thursday, Feb. 23, by hosting Frank Phillips College.

The FPC Plainsmen have perhaps the toughest schedule as they play three games on the road this week, play next Monday at home, then venture to Midland for their final game. FPC plays at New Mexico Junior College Wednesday, at NMMI Thursday, and at Odessa Friday. The Plainsmen then get to stay home Monday to host Clarendon in a battle for the Panhandle's bragging rights.

First place in the conference will be on the line in Levelland today when undefeated Odessa College goes against South Plains College. In their first meeting, OC won 81-80.

Odessa College's Larry Johnson stuffed this one past Midland College's Darryl King Monday, but the Chaps must now turn thoughts to other things down the WJCAC stretch drive.

Bi-district twinbill slated for Chap

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

Two-and-21 is not the stuff from which playoff teams are made.

But through the magic of realignment and relocation, the Rankin Red Devils have carved out a niche for themselves in area girls basketball.

The Red Devils, District 15-A champions despite an 11-12 overall record, face District 14-A runnerup O'Donnell in the second half of a bi-district playoff doubleheader tonight at Chaparral Center. Once-beaten Borden County faces Grandfalls Royalty at 6:30, while Rankin will play at 8 p.m.

In other girls playoff action this weekend, District 6-2A runnerup Stanton hosts 5-2A runnerup Iraan at 7 p.m. tonight in the Odessa College Sports Center; 7-3A champion Greenwood faces 8-3A runnerup Llano Friday at San Angelo; 6-2A champion Reagan County battles 5-2A runnerup Presidio Friday at Fort Stockton; and 4-4A champion Big Spring plays 1-4A runnerup Dumas Saturday at Abernathy.

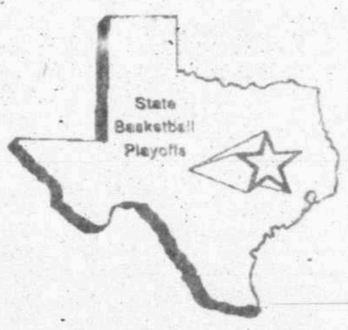
After making the playoffs twice in three years during the mid 80s, Coach Johnnie Jones' Rankin five was cruelly treated for two years in Class 2A.

But the Red Devils were knocked back down to Class A during the last realignment. Things still might have been grim, however, but for the addition of transfers Callie Kennedy, Tricia Shedeck and Carrie Culpepper.

The three, all of whom moved in as a result of their fathers' employment with the Rankin Independent School District, comprise three-fifths of Rankin's starting lineup tonight.

Shedeck, a 5-foot-11 junior post, leads the team in scoring with about 12 points per game. Kennedy, a senior wing, averaged about 11 ppg in district play, while Culpepper has held down the other wing position despite only being a sophomore.

The combination of new players plus youth (Kennedy is the only senior starter) added up to trouble for the Devs in non-district play, especially considering the fact that Rankin faced eventual playoff teams like Sonora (twice), Sterling City (twice) and Iraan.



Jones said his girls are none the worse for wear despite the tough pre-district slate, however.

"We've gotten more used to each other all the time," he said. "We've been able to get the ball inside more and more."

The Devils have only managed 30-plus points per game, but a tough zone defense has kept opponents down to that level. Against O'Donnell, the Devils hopes they can handle the Eagle press.

"One of the coaches in their district said that they press as soon as they get off the bus," Jones said.

Stanton-Iraan

The Buffs have had their share of injuries, but Young expects his girls to be healthy tonight.

"All we have to do is get our injury situation under control," Young said. Guard Stacie Tom had been bothered by a thigh bruise, while center Heather Colburn and guard Karen Graves had turned ankles.

All three saw limited action in the regular season finale against Eldorado last week, though they may have been ready had the game had any meaning.

"I just didn't want to take a chance," Young said.

Forward Kaki Elmore and guard Kelli Glaspie continue to carry the Buffs' scoring load, scoring 17 points per game each. Colburn added double figure scoring output in district play, while Graves had occasional three-point capability.

Midland Christian girls make state cage debut

From Staff Reports

Midland Christian will be making its basketball debut in the Texas Association of Private Schools state championship tournament in Waco's Farrell Center Friday when they step onto the floor against Sweetwater Christian of Houston at 8 a.m. Friday.

The TAPS state tournament features six divisions of play for both boys and girls, forcing Coach Gordon Awtry's Mustangs to play almost before the breakfast call. In the other semifinal game, Brook Hollow of San Antonio and Sacred Heart of Fort Worth, the defending state champion, will meet. The two winners will advance to the finals at 9 a.m. Saturday in another early call.

Awtry doesn't completely know what to expect in the single elimination tournament, but this will be a new experience for the Midland school.

"We know that Sacred Heart is the defending champion and favored to win it again," said Awtry. "At least, we don't catch them in the first round.

"However, we hear that Sweetwater Christian has Michelle Williams, who is averaging 15 to 20 points a game. She moved in there just a month ago and has made their team. All my scouting reports say we have to stop her."

The Mustangs will carry a fine 17-6 record into the tournament with three players who have gained some state-wide attention in Kim Jackson, Elizabeth Coffman and Christy Boles.

All three are All-District selections while Coffman is a first team All-State choice for TAPS. Jackson is second team All-State and all three will be playing next week in the North-South TAPS All-Star game in San Marcos. Awtry will be one of the coaches in that game.

Coffman leads the Mustangs in scoring, averaging 12 points per game. She also hauls in 12 rebounds per game to go with four blocks per outing.

Boles is scoring at an 11-point clip, averaging 12 rebounds and two steals. Jackson averages 7.2 points, five rebounds, five assists and four steals every time out.

The Mustangs also feature three other players who have helped the team gain state tournament status. Jill Fuller averages five points, nine rebounds and three assists; Diane Womack four points, four rebounds, four assists and three steals; and Jeannette Moralez four points, four rebounds and two steals.

"The one thing I will say about Adrian Dantley is that he plays hard. He wants to play. He's a winner. That's the one thing we could never say about Mark." — General Manager Norm Sonju after trading malcontented Mark Aguirre.

NBA Today...

SLOPPY

The San Antonio Spurs committed an NBA-high 40 turnovers — three short of the all-time record — Wednesday in their 133-96 loss to Golden State. Frank Brickowski led the Spurs with eight miscues; Michael Anderson had six and Willie Anderson, Vernon Maxwell and Jay Vincent each made five. The Warriors, despite turning the ball over only half as many times, were led by rookie Mitch Richmond with eight giveaways.

Mavs trade Aguirre to Pistons for Dantley

DALLAS (AP) — The Dallas Mavericks ended one era and began another with their trade of talented but moody small forward Mark Aguirre to the Detroit Pistons for Adrian Dantley, the 10th-leading scorer in NBA history.

"It looks like everybody is happy," Mavericks coach John MacLeod said after Wednesday's deal was announced.

Aguirre, 29, who scored 13,390 points in his eight seasons, wore out his welcome recently with a series of incidents that included refusal to play in one game, loafing in several others, and an obscene gesture to the press table when he was pulled in one game.

Because Dantley is almost four years older than Aguirre, the Mavericks held out until the Pistons agreed also to give Dallas their first-round draft choice in 1991.

For Dallas' part, if the Mavericks make it to the NBA finals this year with Dantley, they must give Detroit a No. 2 draft choice this year and a No. 2 in 1991.

Dantley was a member of the 1976 Olympic team, then left Notre Dame after his junior season to go into the NBA. He was rookie of the year, went on to lead the league in scoring twice, and has been an all-star six times in his 13 years in the league.

Dantley, who turns 33 on Feb. 28, thrives on producing points in late-game, pressure situations. Among active players, only the Lakers' Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, Atlanta's Moses Malone and Denver's Alex English have scored more than Dantley's 21,830 career points.

Like the 6-foot-6 Aguirre, the 6-foot-5 Dantley is a forward who scores most of his points from the low post. Also like Aguirre, Dantley has a reputation of moodiness, but it was never evident in his play.

"The one thing I will say about Adrian Dantley is that he plays hard. He wants to play. He's a winner. That's the one thing we could never say about Mark," Mavericks general manager Norm Sonju said.

"Last night (29 points, 9 assists in a 117-98 victory over the LA Clippers), Mark played as well as anyone could play. But in Portland, he chose not to. That's something we could not take."

Aguirre left on Wednesday. The Pistons play at Sacramento tonight, and Aguirre will be there.

MacLeod said he expects Dantley to arrive in Dallas on Friday and play his first game on Saturday against the Houston Rockets. MacLeod said Terry Tyler would start in tonight's game against the Miami Heat, with Detlef Schrempf coming off the bench.

"Dallas has a good team, and I think they've got a chance at (competing for the title against) the Lakers, maybe even this year," Dantley said. "I wanted a (championship) ring in Detroit, that's all. I still want the ring."

Aguirre had openly spoke of wanting to go to another team, and there was an open rift between him and his teammates in recent weeks because of his apparent attempt to force a trade by playing at less than full effort or by sitting out because of questionable injuries.

"Thank goodness, the distractions are over. Mark got his wish. He's gone," Dallas guard Derek Harper said.

Arkansas sits alone at top

Houston upsets Texas; Rice trips TCU

Associated Press

SWC Basketball

Lenzie Howell's homecoming and a little help from the Houston Cougars allowed the Arkansas Razorbacks to take sole possession of the No. 1 spot in the Southwest Conference basketball race.

Howell scored 24 points and grabbed 10 rebounds to lead the Razorbacks to an 81-68 victory over Southern Methodist Wednesday night while the Cougars defeated Texas, 105-96.

The combination allowed the Razorbacks to break the tie and take a full game lead over the Longhorns.

"This is the first time I played at home since high school. I wanted to play well. I love a team that plays zone because I can stay at the top of the key and shoot the jumper," Howell said.

Arkansas increased its overall record to 17-5 and stayed atop the SWC standings with a 10-2 record. SMU dropped to 10-12 and 5-6.

Lee Mayberry added 17 points for the Hogs. Todd Day contributed 12 points and Keith Wilson 10 points.

SMU senior Glenn Puddy scored 25 points, tying his career high, but couldn't get any help in the scoring column except from Eric Longino, who had 12 points.

Arkansas coach Nolan Richardson said Howell was the key.

"What a game he had," Richardson said. "He was just tremendous. The thing that was bothering us was SMU's offensive stick backs, and Lenzie did a good job of shutting that off.

Richard Hollis scored 27 points to lead the hard-luck Cougars, losers of five Southwest Conference games by a total of seven points, to a 105-96 victory over the Longhorns.

Texas, 9-3 in league play and 18-6 for the season. Houston improved to 15-9 and 6-5.

It was the first time the Cougars have won in Austin since 1984 and only the second time the Longhorns have lost at home all year.

Travis Mays, the conference's leading scorer, finished with 24 for Texas, while Lance Blanks, the second leading scorer, was held to 17, only four in the first when he was 2-for-11 from the floor.

"Houston played a great basketball game and I feared that," said Texas Coach Tom Penders. "They have been kind of a hard-luck team all year. With a couple of breaks their record could be as good as ours."

Dana Hardy scored 18 points, including eight of the final 10, as the Rice Owls beat Texas Christian 70-67.

Danny Hughes of Texas Christian led all scorers with a personal and team season-high of 23 points, including seven 3-point field goals.

The Owls improved their record to 10-13 overall and 4-8 in conference play while Texas Christian is 14-10 overall and 7-5 in conference play.

The Horned Frogs, who came out strong in conference play by winning their first six games, have now lost five of their last six games.

Horned Frogs' coach Moe Iba said TCU "played good offense in the first half other than a few mistakes, but Rice just beat us so badly on the boards."

"There was no excuse for us falling 13 points behind," Iba said. "We played the last 14 minutes the way we are supposed to play."

The Owls' four wins in conference play this year have all been at home in Autry Court.

Tony Milton and Freddie Ricks led a 10-1 scoring run in the final 2:02 that lifted Texas A&M to a 76-65 victory over Baylor.

The loss all but ending the Bears' hopes for a spot in the Southwest Conference post-season tournament.

The league's last-place team doesn't play in the tournament, and the loss dropped Baylor to 1-11 in league play with only four SWC games remaining. Every other league team has won at least four games. Baylor is 5-18 for the season.

Keady tops A-State list

TEMPE, Ariz. (AP) — Purdue basketball coach Gene Keady could be among the candidates to become Arizona State head coach in the wake of the resignation of Steve Patterson, a Phoenix newspaper says.

The afternoon Gazette said in its Wednesday editions that Keady "flirted with ASU" in 1985, and it quoted an unidentified source as saying Keady had removed himself from consideration at Texas last year because he felt the Arizona State job would become open eventually.

The possibility also had been mentioned on network television on two occasions since The Sun Devils position became open.

Keady was in Ann Arbor where his team plays Michigan on Thursday so couldn't be reached immediately for comment, but Purdue sports public relations director Jim Vruggink said Keady wasn't a candidate so far.

Arizona State Athletic Director Charles Harris, who signed a new three-year contract last week, said he knew what he wants, what everyone else wants and what he has to get: "a good coach."

Patterson, 40, resigned Feb. 4 in his fourth season with a 48-56 record. He had replaced Bob Weinhauer, who was dismissed in 1985 after going 44-45 in three seasons. Weinhauer had replaced Ned Wulk, who had a 406-272 record in 25 years but was dismissed in 1982.

Bob Schermerhorn, 44, a second-year assistant who has been named interim head coach for the rest of this season, says he wants the job in his own right.

COM racks up victories in Monahans

From Staff Reports

Seventy City of Midland Swim Team swimmers competed in the Monahans ABC Invitational at Monahans High School recently, a meet that featured age group swimming, ranging from six and under to 15-18.

COM members racked up wins in over half of the individual events as well as wins in all relay events.

The meet was the last meet for COM in preparation for the West Texas Championships to be held next month at the Texas Tech University Recreation Center pool in Lubbock.

Many COM tankers gained a spot for the WTC meet in Lubbock, but Patrick Durham made his first qualification to compete in the Texas Age Group State Championships in Dallas by swimming a time of 37.20 seconds in the 10-under boys 50-yard backstroke.

Other Midlanders to to swim state qualifying times in Monahans were Margaret Ann Brown in the 10-under girls 50-yard backstroke and Jennifer Miller in the 11-12 girls 100-yard backstroke and 100-yard freestyle.

COM competed against teams from Monahans, Abilene, Pecos, Odessa, Fort Stockton, Big Spring and San Angelo. COM will be competing in Lubbock next month for its sixth consecutive WTC team title.

MAVS

"I feel 40 pounds lighter," a beaming Sam Perkins, the Mavericks' other forward, said after the team's first practice without Aguirre. "A load has been dumped. You never know if the guy wanted to play or not."

"There was a night and day difference in practice today," said center James Donaldson. "I'm ready for somebody to come in here who is willing to play hard every night. Sometimes Mark would just loaf around."

Guard Rolando Blackman said: "Mark could dominate a game when he wanted to, only when he was in the right frame of mind. You just can't let your teammates down and he let us down a lot."

Detroit was one of the teams Aguirre most wanted to be traded to. The Pistons have guard Isiah Thomas, a childhood friend of Aguirre's in Chicago.

"I'm excited, I'm gone to join Isiah" said Aguirre, the Mavs' all-time leading scorer. "We've dreamed of being on the same team since we were in grade school. Finally, it comes to pass."

This season, in 42 games with the Pistons, Dantley averaged 18.4 points per game on .521 shooting.

Aguirre averaged 21.7 points for Dallas in 44 games this season, on .492 shooting.

CHAPS

SPC has just two losses this season, having lost by two points to Jacksonville in the second round of the Chaparral Classic. Jackonsville is rated second in the nation, just behind OC.

The other conference game today has New Mexico Junior College at Western Texas. All the Midland College games are carried on KCRS Radio, 550 AM. The Clarendon game has an 8 p.m. start, while the NMMI game begins at 8:30 p.m. CST.

The Region V Tournament in Waco March 2-4 pits the top four finishers in the Western Conference against the top four from the Northern Conference. The Region V winner then plays the Region XIV winner for the right to compete in the National Junior College Tournament at Hutchinson, Kan., March 13-18.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 17, 1989

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: You pay more attention to business, increasing your share of the profits. You learn a lesson in humility that will be of great benefit. Share the limelight and credit. An arrogant attitude could lead someone in authority to snatch away special perks and power. The financial outlook brightens. Do not put all your eggs in one basket.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: contralto Marian Anderson, broadcaster Red Barber, actor Alan Bates, manager Roger Craig, running back Jim Brown, actor Hal Holbrook, author Chaim Potok, author Margaret Truman, actor Arthur Kennedy, industrialist H.L. Hunt, merchant Montgomery Ward.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You can get your ideas across now if the facts are there to support them. Be more assertive. An artistic project gets off the ground. Learn to take things in stride.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Rise and shine! The early bird gets the prize today. You are inspired by events and want to pitch in and help. Good service is the key to business success. A financial situation improves.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your aspirations become clear. Learn more about a project before putting your money on the line. A positive attitude counts big when it comes to smoothing out a troubled relationship. Follow your intuition.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Concentrate on making the most of a fresh start. Look beyond the present; evaluate potential and pay attention to your first impressions. A change of environment lifts your spirits and sharpens your wits.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A relationship may be draining your financial resources. Better step back and look at what is going on. You need to put your foot down. Even a mistake works to your benefit today.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Work conditions improve. Personnel show new cooperation. A financial decision should not be postponed. Bite the bullet and do whatever is indicated now. Travel plans are subject to change. Be flexible.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A sudden flurry of sales or business activity provides you with an opportunity to show your special skills. Raises and promotions are under consideration. Put your best foot forward. Do not slack off.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): This is no time to make waves. Consolidate recent gains, then take off for a relaxed, romantic weekend. Startling financial developments put the icing on your cake. Seek a more fulfilling relationship.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You may be a bit accident-prone today; think about letting someone else drive if you hit the road this weekend. A financial plan looks brighter after a phone call. Romance is favored.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Decisive action lets you remove a millstone from around your neck. Hold fast in the face of a trying situation. You hate to tell anyone "no," but today you must. Be firm.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Recognize your limitations and let others handle things they can do better. An apology helps you reconcile your differences with partner. Focus on making a romantic relationship whole again.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Do not be stingy when it comes to showing affection for those you love. Taking out some travel insurance could give you peace of mind. A child plays the central role today.

Opening lead: King of ♠ Position at the table can be a crucial factor. Whether you are first or second to play to a trick will often determine how many tricks you can take from a given combination of cards.

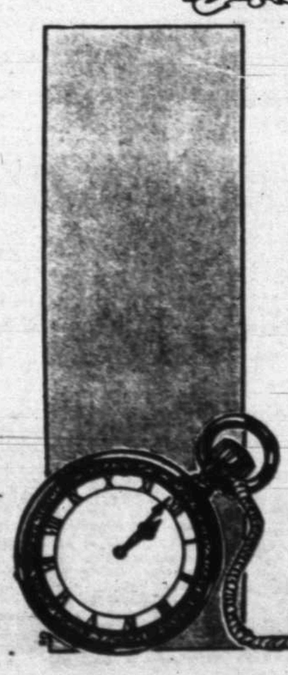
We are not enamored of North's decision to remove three no trump to five diamonds, despite his unbalanced hand. His six-card diamond suit was a source of tricks at no trump, and the 11-trick contract would have failed but for skillful play by his partner.

Declarer won the opening lead in hand. If he picked up the trumps without loss, declarer's only problem was to avoid losing two club tricks in addition to the heart. If he broached the suit, he could accomplish that only by finding a rather fortuitous lie of the cards and guessing the position. But there was a sure-trick line.

Declarer ruffed a spade and drew trumps in two rounds. After ruffing his remaining spade, he cashed the ace and king of hearts before surrendering the lead with a third round of hearts.

It made no difference to declarer which defender won the heart trick. With the major suits stripped from his hand and dummy, whichever defender gained the lead could not play one of those suits without yielding the game-going trick via a ruff-sluff. Yet, when either defender broached the club suit, declarer was guaranteed two tricks because he possessed the ten. Best would be for West to win the heart and shift to a club, but declarer has only to play low from dummy to endplay East when he wins the club. Try it.

WATCHES



Mr. Sears and Mr. Roebuck got together because of a classified ad!

In the late 1800's, Richard W. Sears had a pretty good business going selling watches and needed someone to handle his watch repairs. He placed a classified ad in the newspaper and Alvah C. Roebuck got the job. That's how the nation's biggest retailer got started... through a classified ad!

If you need a good helper, try advertising in our classifieds. Who knows? You may spark the beginning of something big!

Fonda, Hayden now separated

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actress Jane Fonda and her husband, state Assemblyman Tom Hayden, will separate after 16 years of marriage that began as a romance between two of the best-known activists of the anti-Vietnam War movement.

Hayden and Fonda

They have two children, Troy, 15, and Vanessa, 20, who is Fonda's daughter from a previous marriage to director Roger Vadim. The couple have lived in a large home in suburban Santa Monica and on a ranch near Santa Barbara.

The separation will be on a trial basis, spokesman Stephen Rivers said Wednesday.

"Tom and Jane consider this separation a private matter and will have no public comment or statement on it," Rivers said.

Friends said the pair's divergent careers placed a strain on the marriage. Hayden himself has joked: "If Jane and I have an evening at home alone together, it is a scheduling mistake by the staff."

Fonda, 51, who won best-actress Oscars for the 1971 film "Klute" and in 1978 for "Coming Home," and Hayden, 49, a Democrat representing coastal Santa Monica in the state Assembly, were married in January 1973.

Hayden, the radical young co-founder of Students for a Democratic Society, was one of the Chicago Seven defendants acquitted of plotting to incite a riot during the 1968 Democratic convention in Chicago.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Comedian Gilda Radner, an original "Saturday Night Live" cast member who successfully battled ovarian cancer, underwent surgery to correct complications of cancer treatment, a hospital spokesman said.

Miss Radner, 42, was listed in fair condition after the surgery Wednesday at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center, said hospital spokesman Ron Wise.

Wise called the surgery routine and said it corrected complications stemming from cancer treatment Miss Radner had last year. He declined to give precise information about the complications or the treatment.

Wise said Miss Radner should be released from the hospital next week. The actress was expected to launch her book titled "It's Always Something" after her recovery.

TRENTON, N.J. (AP) — Attorneys for the Beatles and Michael Jackson have sued to stop a video distributor from selling videocassettes featuring the Fab Four.

The federal lawsuit alleges that Video Wholesalers Inc. of Neptune illegally distributed and sold several Beatles videocassettes, including "The Beatles at Shea Stadium," "The Beatles in Tokyo," "Beatles Concert in Washington D.C." and "The Beatles in The Magical Mystery Tour."

Jackson owns the copyright to most Beatles songs.

After the lawsuit was filed Wednesday, attorneys for Video Wholesalers agreed to halt sale of the videotapes until the matter is resolved in a hearing March 3 before U.S. District Judge Garrett E. Brown.

NEW YORK (AP) — Actress Linda Evans says she's more secure and doubts she can ever make a man the center of her life again, thanks in part to a 35,000-year-old spiritual guide named Ramtha.

"As I've become more secure and wiser, I've attracted more secure and wiser men," the 46-year-old "Dynasty" star says in an interview in the March issue of McCall's magazine. "But making a man my whole life again? God knows I once would have been thrilled to do that. ... My relationships have become healthier as I have less and less need."

Evans said she has learned to value her freedom with help from Ramtha, who she says speaks through her close female friend and Tacoma, Wash., neighbor, J.Z. Knight. Mrs. Knight is the psychic and channeler mentioned in Shirley MacLaine's autobiography, "Dancing in the Light."

Evans says she ignores those who criticize her relationship with Mrs. Knight and Ramtha, whom she says "does not say follow me. He says, know yourself and love yourself."

Richards and Jagger

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Guitarist Keith Richards and singer Mick Jagger, who got little satisfaction pursuing solo careers, are planning to reunite the Rolling Stones to record their first album in three years and may go on the road again.

They apparently smoothed over their differences during a recent stay in the Caribbean, said Paul Wasserman, a spokesman for Richards.

"Nothing is official yet, but it looks like it's going to happen," said Wasserman. "Keith was down there. Mick was down there. And they talked about writing some songs. They might have even written some already."

The album would be the second in the group's $28 million, four-record deal with CBS, following the 1986 album "Dirty Work." The tour would be their first since the record-setting 1981 tour that brought in $54 million in ticket sales.

Richards, in New York working on a video for his "Talk Is Cheap" album, hopes to get into the studio by month's end. The other band members also have a clear calendar, said Wasserman.

Shepherd

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Two weeks after their separation, "Moonlighting" star Cybill Shepherd has filed for divorce from her husband of nearly two years, chiropractor Bruce Oppenheim.

A divorce petition citing irreconcilable differences was filed Wednesday in Superior Court here, said publicist Cheryl Kagan.

Miss Shepherd and Oppenheim were married on March 1, 1987, and became the parents of twins, Ariel and Zachariah, seven months later.

Miss Shepherd, who will be 39 on Saturday, plays detective Maddie Hayes on ABC's "Moonlighting." Her film roles include "The Last Picture Show" and "Taxi Driver."

He was admitted with an acute respiratory infection Feb. 6.

Sooners survive No. 1 status jinx

College Roundup

LAWRENCE, Kan. (AP) — Love may be lovelier the second time around, but being No. 1, says Oklahoma Coach Billy Tubbs, is "just nice."

And maybe that's the attitude the Sooners need to avoid being the fifth straight No. 1 team to lose and fall back.

Oklahoma was atop the polls two weeks ago for the first time in their history, but suffered a loss at Oklahoma State the next week.

"I promise you there was not one time tonight that I thought about being No. 1," Tubbs said Wednesday night after his Sooners beat the jinx and hiked their record to 22-3 with a 94-89 overtime victory over Kansas.

"And I doubt there was one time that Kansas thought about who was No. 1 either," Tubbs added. "I don't think it makes much difference, one through five, or whatever. We don't mind being No. 1, and whether we deserve it or not, I don't know.

Kevin Pritchard's layin at the buzzer knotted the rematch of last year's NCAA finalists at 80. Then Stacey King, the leading scorer in the Big Eight, took charge in overtime, scoring the first four points for the Sooners. Tyrone Jones, who hit three straight 3-pointers during one torrid stretch in the second half, made a three-point play to give Oklahoma an 87-82 lead, but Sean Alvarado's three-point play made it 89-87 with 2:17 left.

Lincoln Minor's free throw brought the Jayhawks to within a point, but a few seconds later King grabbed a rebound and converted it into a short jumper for a 92-89 lead.

Mike Bell's free throws accounted for Oklahoma's final points, and the Jayhawks, 16-9, 3-7, suffered their sixth straight loss, their longest losing skid since 1973.

For what seems like a month, Kansas has been trying to become the third team in NCAA history to win 1,400 games.

"We got off to a bad start in the overtime," said first-year coach Roy Williams. "They put pressure on us so we couldn't make the 3-pointer."

For a stretch in the second half, it seemed no one could miss a 3-pointer.

After King's two free throws gave the Sooners a 63-61 lead with 10:23 left, Scooter Barry hit a 3-pointer for Kansas and Tyrone Jones answered with a 3-pointer for Oklahoma.

"That was really exciting, I like that," said Jones, who finished with 16 points. "Both teams were really trying to take control at that point. Sometimes you just get the feeling that you're hot, that anything will go in for you. That's how I felt."

"Tyrone really hit some big buckets for us," Tubbs said. "He was there when we needed him."

A sellout crowd of 15,600 — many holding 83-79 signs to remind the Sooners of the score of last year's NCAA championship game — rocked venerable Allen Fieldhouse.

"I love this crowd. They really know their basketball," Jones said. "I'd like to play in front of this crowd every night."

Mark Randall had 29 points for the Jayhawks and Milt Newton fouled out in overtime with 23. Randall also fouled out during the extra period.

No. 12 Seton Hall 72, Conn. 69

Ramon Ramos had 27 points and Andrew Gaze 22 to lead Seton Hall past Connecticut in a Big East game. Gaze's total included six 3-pointers and a driving one-hander that iced the game.

Connecticut, which trailed by 10 points at the half, used an 8-0 run midway through the second half to come within a point. But the Huskies were never able to take the lead as the Pirates, 21-4 overall and 8-4 in the conference, won their second straight Big East road game.

Gaze made his final 3-pointer with 5:15 left to increase Seton Hall's lead to five points. Ramos made nine of 10 shots from the field and all nine of his foul shots.

No. 19 N.C. State 90, Clemson 75

Avie Lester scored 17 points and Chris Corchiani 16 to spark North Carolina State over Clemson.

The Wolfpack raised its record to 16-5 overall and 7-2 in the Atlantic Coast Conference on the strength of a nine-point run late in the first half and a bigger burst to start the second. Clemson dropped to 4-5 in the ACC and 15-7 overall.

The Tigers were within 26-24 after Rob Mitchell's goal with 8:24 left before halftime. But North Carloina State ran off nine straight points, five by reserve Kelsey Weems, en route to a 48-36 halftime lead.

The Wolfpack opened the second half with a 15-6 spurt, in which Corchiani hit two 3-point baskets, to stretch its lead to 63-42 with 15:54 to play. The Wolfpack didn't get a field goal in the last five minutes, but hit 11 of 15 free throws as Clemson fouled in an attempt to catch up.

Elden Campbell had 21 points to lead Clemson.

No. 20 LSU 99, Kentucky 80

Ricky Blanton scored 18 points in the final 11:40 of the game as Louisiana State beat Kentucky, sending the Wildcats to a 14-loss season for the first time in the 86-year history of the school's basketball program.

It was the fourth straight defeat for Kentucky, 11-14 overall and 6-7 in the Southeastern Conference. It was the third straight victory for LSU, 18-6 and 10-3, and its ninth in the past 10 games.

Clemens gets rich; Hershiser next

NEW YORK (AP) — Roger's deal is done at $7.5 million. Orel's couldn't be closed, however, setting up the largest arbitration battle in baseball history.

Roger Clemens, Boston's two-time Cy Young Award winner, agreed Wednesday to a three-year, $7.5 million contract with the Boston Red Sox. The average annual salary of $2.5 million is the largest in baseball history, though Clemens will receive only the sixth-highest salary for 1989.

But more records may break today. Hershiser, the 1988 National League Cy Young Award winner and the Most Valuable Player of the playoffs and World Series, is scheduled for an arbitration hearing in Los Angeles with the Dodgers.

Hershiser is asking for $2.425 million, which would be the highest salary for this year and an arbitration record if he wins. The Dodgers are offering $2 million.

Meanwhile, players won all three decisions issued on Wednesday. Cincinnati left-hander Danny Jackson was awarded $1.15 million by arbitrator Thomas Roberts, rather than the $865,000 offered by the Reds. Los Angeles right-hander Tim Leary was awarded $670,000 by Anthony Sinicropi rather than the $575,000 offered by the Dodgers. And New York outfielder Len Dykstra was awarded $575,000 by Frederick Reel rather than the $455,000 offered by the Mets.

Players have won five of the eight cases decided so far. Texas Rangers outfielder Pete Incaviglia and Reds pitcher Tom Browning had their cases heard Wednesday. In addition to Hershiser, San Diego Padres right-hander Walt Terrell are to go before arbitrators today.

Eric Davis and the Cincinnati Reds were scheduled for a hearing, but they agreed early today to a one-year contract worth $1.35 million, a raise of $421,000.

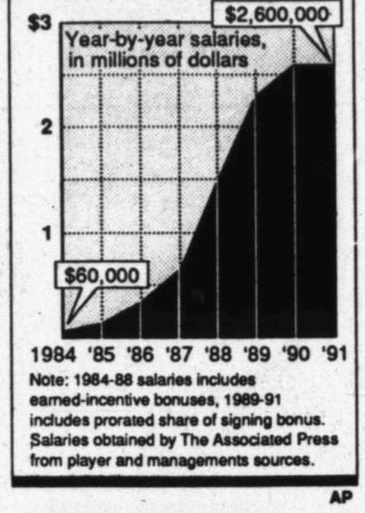
Davis, who demanded a trade last week, met with Reds owner Marge Schott in New York and reached the agreement. In addition to his salary, he can earn $200,000 more in incentive bonuses.

Clemens and the Red Sox came to their agreement after two months of on-and-off negotiations. Clemens will get a $300,000 signing bonus, $2.2 million this season, $2.5 million in 1990 and $2.5 million in 1991.

Including a prorated share of the signing bonus, Clemens will get $2.6 million each in 1990 and 1991, the highest baseball salary ever, topping the $2.5 million New York Yankees first baseman Don Mattingly will get in 1990.

"Now, I'm just looking to bigger and better things," Clemens said. "I've tried to perform at the top level of all the pitchers in the league. I always knew if I did the job, everything off the field would take care of itself."

At four years, 142 days of major league service, Clemens reached $2 million faster than any other player in history, beating Minnesota's Kirby Puckett by five days. Clemens is 78-34 in his major league career and won Cy Young Awards after going 24-4 in 1986 and 20-9 in 1987.



AP

In addition to his salary, Clemens can earn $350,000 per year in bonuses. He would get $100,000 for winning the Cy Young Award and $50,000 for finishing second. He would get $100,000 for winning the American League Most Valuable Player and $50,000 for finishing second or third. He would get $50,000 if he is MVP of the AL playoffs and $100,000 if he is MVP of the World Series.

"We're buying out a year of free agency and two years of arbitration," Boston general manager Lou Gorman said. "If players give up some rights, you have to pay for it. Based on what Gooden got and Hershiser is looking for, we felt this was in the ballpark."

Dwight Gooden signed a three-year, $6.7 million deal with the New York Mets last week. Orel Hershiser and the Dodgers continued discussions Wednesday on a multiyear deal but were still far apart. According to a source familiar with the negotiations, the Dodgers were offering $6.8 million over three years at the start of the day and Hershiser was asking for $8.35 million.

Robert Fraley, Hershiser's agent, met Wednesday night with Los Angeles general manager Fred Claire and Dodgers lawyer Bob Walker in an attempt to reach an agreement. But sources reported no substantial progress was made.

Arbitrator Stephen Goldberg is set to hear the case. Goldberg ruled against Andre Dawson last year in his attempt for an arbitration record of $2 million and this year has heard two cases and ruled for the player both times.

Cavs 'block' Knicks' path to top

Associated Press

Once again, the Cleveland Cavaliers blocked the New York Knicks' path to the top of the Eastern Conference.

The Cavaliers blocked 17 shots, including seven by Larry Nance, and trounced New York 129-107 Wednesday night for their team-record 16th straight victory at home.

On the Knicks' other trip to Cleveland this season, the Cavaliers blocked 21 shots — 11 by Nance — in another rout.

"I didn't sense it was the difference in the game, but I sensed they were aware of me," said the 6-foot-10 Nance, who also scored 28 points. "If they see you and that makes them not take the shot, it's almost as good as a block."

The Cavaliers lead the Central Division at 37-11, the best record in the NBA. The Knicks, whose six-game winning streak was stopped, head the Atlantic Division at 33-17.

Cleveland shot 60.5 percent from the field, getting many fast-break baskets after blocking New York tries. Ron Harper scored 29 points and had nine rebounds and nine assists and Mark Price had a career-high 18 assists.

The Knicks shot just 41 percent. Johnny Newman scored 20 points and Patrick Ewing had 18, but Mark Jackson was just 2-for-12 from the field.

"We played with about the smallest amount of intelligence that we have all season," Knicks coach Rick Pitino said. "We still have not realized that Cleveland is a great shot-blocking team."

Bob Uecker has mild heart attack

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Bob Uecker, a broadcaster for the Milwaukee Brewers and one of the stars of the television series, "Mr. Belvedere," was resting comfortably Wednesday after suffering what his agent called "a very mild heart attack."

"He's in a hospital in Burbank but we don't want to give out the name," said Deborah Miller, Uecker's agent. "He'll be returning to work after about four weeks rest. The doctors said he's in extremely good physical shape so the prognosis is excellent."

According to Miller, Uecker suffered the attack Tuesday morning at his Los Angeles-area residence. Paramedics then took him to the hospital.

"They want him in the hospital for observation and tests, so it will be a week maximum he'll be hospitalized," Miller said.

Uecker, 54, recently finished filming of a feature-length film entitled "Major Leagues," a Paramount picture starring Tom Berringer and Charlie Sheen, Miller said.

"He had just completed a very difficult, busy week," Miller said. "He taped an episode of 'Mr. Belvedere,' he taped a co-host stint on 'Friday Night Videos,' he had done a Tonight Show, and he had done filming on the movie.

"All of that was last week, so you can imagine he was worn out.

Oklahoma wind blowing over all college athletics

By ED SCHUYLER JR.
AP Sports Writer

There is an ill wind whistling down the plain in Oklahoma.

It carries the stench that people like to categorize as wafting only over the mean streets of our inner cities. This wind, however, is blowing over college athletics, and it isn't dying at Oklahoma's borders.

The University of Oklahoma basketball team is No. 1 in the nation, but the headlines belong to the school's highly successful football program.

Last week Charles Thompson, the Sooners' starting quarterback, told students at a Norman, Okla., elementary school to "just say no" to drugs. Thompson was arrested Monday night for selling 17 grams of cocaine for $1,700 to an undercover agent.

"They feel betrayed," Dottie Caldwell, principal of the school, said of the students. "They were lied to."

Thompson became the fifth Oklahoma football player to run afoul of the law in a month. One was arrested for allegedly shooting a teammate in the university's athletic dormitory. Three players are charged with first-degree rape in the assault of a 20-year-old woman in a player's dorm room.

"There really are some bad apples and we're not going to let those people come to OU anymore," said Sarah Hogan, a University of Oklahoma regent.

Shootings, drugs, rapes and generally unruly behavior by athletes have become a national stain on the fabric of college athletics over the past several years.

Winning football games means big money, and so there is immense presssure to get the best athletes, which leads often to a bending of the rules.

In December, the Oklahoma football program of head coach Barry Switzer was placed on three years probation for violations including payments to players and recruits, resale of players' tickets for profit and breach of ethics in recruiting.

It seems many college athletes are incubated in an atmosphere of cheating and pampered to the point where they feel not only apart from other students, but also feel above them.

This attitude of worrying only about oneself should not be surprising in a society in which violence is commonplace and respect is old-fashioned, a society in which every level from the ghetto to the boardroom has been touched by drugs.

All of us should take a good look at ourselves and our values before comdemning one player or one athletic program. On the other hand, the Oklahoma situation should not be dismissed as a just a sign of the times and forgotten when the headlines fade.

Meanwhile, it should be hoped that there will be headlines about incidents such as the one at Prairie View A&M, a small college in Texas.

Thompson released in mother's custody

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Suspended Oklahoma quarterback Charles Thompson was released in the custody of his mother Wednesday while he awaits trial on a charge of selling cocaine to an undercover FBI agent.

Meanwhile, the Norman police chief said Wednesday evening that Thompson's arrest may have hampered an ongoing drug investigation.

Police Chief David Boyett said police did not have "firm" evidence that information was leaked to Coach Barry Switzer, but "there's a lot of speculation."

"We were still conducting the investigation at the time," said David Boyett, Norman police chief. "We had to go ahead and make the arrest."

FBI spokesman Dan Vogel said he could not comment on reports that obstruction of justice charges could be filed against the individual that leaked the information.

Boyett said authorities were planning to attempt another drug deal when agents arrested Thompson.

Thompson, who wore a black suit and tie for his second court appearance since his arrest Monday night, waived his right to a preliminary hearing. The U.S. attorney's office waived its request for a detention hearing because of what it said were Thompson's strong ties to the area.

Prosecutors were willing to release Thompson on certain conditions, one being that he confine his travel to the court's Western District of Oklahoma and the Northern District of Texas, which would cover his hometown of Lawton, Okla., and the Dallas home of his mother, Willie Jean Yarborough.

Thompson must also submit to drug screening, actively seek work and report regularly to the probation office in Oklahoma City. In addition, he is barred from possessing a firearm or using alcohol or drugs during his release.

He also was required to post 10 percent of $10,000 bond, or $1,000.

U.S. Magistrate Robin Cauthron repeatedly asked Thompson if he understood the conditions of his release. He answered "yes" to each of her queries but made no other response during the 20-minute hearing inside a packed courtroom.

The judge told Mrs. Yarborough that by accepting custody of her son, "you have agreed to two things: to assist him in complying with all the conditions ... and to notify the appropriate officials immediately if he fails to comply."

Thompson was arrested Monday night by FBI agents on a federal complaint alleging he sold cocaine to an undercover agent Jan. 26.

Just last week, Thompson and Oklahoma placekicker R.D. Lashar told students at Jackson elementary school in Norman to avoid drugs.

"Regardless of what anyone tells you about drugs, regardless of what anyone has told you, it's the quickest way to end your life ... the quickest way to be in jail," Thompson told the student assembly.

"I hope everyone makes the right decision and says no to drugs."

"They feel betrayed," Dottie Caldwell, principal of Jackson, said of the students. "They were lied to."

Oklahoma trainer Dan Pickett said Thompson has been tested for drugs 16 times since August. He said each of the tests, including one last week, were negative.

Pickett said of the more than 2,000 tests the university has given to athletes in the past year, only a few have tested positive.

"It's a very insignificant number, I guarantee you that," Pickett said Wednesday. "Basically, it's non-existent as far as I'm concerned."

Friends and fans crowded the courtroom for Thompson's first court appearance Tuesday, when he wore bright orange jail coveralls, and again for the Wednesday proceedings.

Switzer intends to remain as coach

Associated Press

Barry Switzer concedes he is responsible for Oklahoma's troubled football program because he recruited the players who caused the problems but says he intends to remain as coach of the Sooners.

"I feel so used by these four or five kids," Switzer told The Associated Press by phone late Wednesday night. "They've done me wrong. It's not fair what they did to us. They didn't think one thought whether what they did was right or wrong. It's just so selfish."

In December, the NCAA put Oklahoma's football program on three years' probation for recruiting and rule violations. That triggered a series of events which have continued to drag the program down.

Last month, cornerback Jerry Parks was charged with shooting and wounding teammate Zarak Peters in the football dorm.

Last week, three players were charged with first-degree rape following an alleged gang rape in the football dorm on Jan. 21. And earlier this week, quarterback Charles Thompson was arrested on a complaint of selling cocaine to an undercover FBI agent.

"I'm responsible," an obviously distraught Switzer said. "I feel a tremendous sense of responsibility to the program because I recruited those kids.

"Obviously, I didn't know when I recruited Charles Thompson that 2-3 years later he'd do what he did. How do you know? The rape — how do you know what's going to happen? Somebody shoots his best friend from high school. No one expected it to happen, but it did.

"Three, four, five kids created this problem. Obviously, I wish I'd never seen them.

"I'm depressed, I'm embarrassed and ashamed these things happened for our program and our great fans. I feel sorry for everyone connected with our program ... but we've done it to ourselves."

On Wednesday, the Tulsa World and the Dallas Morning News called for Switzer's resignation. In Thursday's editions, the Daily Oklahoman, the state's largest newspaper, noted it had called for Switzer's resignation in 1982 when problems surfaced concerning the football program and the coach's financial dealings.

Switzer said he expected as much.

"I'm tough and thick-skinned," he said. "They don't bother me. I'm not going to quit.

"The only people who can fire me are the regents. The president and the regents are the people I work for — not the newspapers, not the TV stations, not the fans. If they (the regents) believe we're committed to restoring the image ... If we work at it 24 hours a day we'll do it. Time will handle it, and how we handle the time.

"It's got to be a team effort — the coaches and the players. Coaching is not blocking and tackling any more. Ninety percent is dealing with it off the field, making them aware of their responsibilities and actions.

Oklahoma has just hired an assistant athletic director for academics who, Switzer says, will "reassess who we recruit" and also will deal with the players' private lives, whom they socialize with, etc.

Oklahoma papers call for Switzer's resignation

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — The state's largest newspaper has joined Oklahoma's other two major metropolitan papers in calling for the resignation of Oklahoma coach Barry Switzer following the arrests of five football players on felony charges recently.

The Daily Oklahoman, stating it had initially called for Switzer's resignation in 1982 when problems surfaced concerning the football program and Switzer's financial dealings, renewed its call for Switzer's dismissal.

"Other newspapers have recently called for Switzer's ouster. We didn't bother this time," stated the Oklahoman in the editorial printed in Thursday's editions. "We called for that more than six years ago before the football program's troubles turned to probation, shooting, alleged rape and suspected drug dealing ...

"Switzer has never set the best of examples in his personal life for the young men on the Sooner football team. Perhaps it's time for him to move on."

The Tulsa World, the state's second largest newspaper, also called for the resignation of Switzer and of Athletic Director Donnie Duncan in an editorial Wednesday.

The Tulsa Tribune had written an editorial in December calling for Switzer to step down one day after the NCAA placed Oklahoma on three years' probation.

Since then, Oklahoma has suspended five players for criminal allegations, including the arrest Monday of starting quarterback Charles Thompson for allegedly selling cocaine.

"The current situation has all the markings of a classic case of chickens coming home to roost," the Oklahoman's editorial states. "We hesitate to say, 'we told you so,' but at newspapers, that's our job."

The student newspaper at the University of Oklahoma also said Switzer should resign if he cannot control the off-field problems plaguing the Sooners' football program.

"Now that you've let any kind of positive attraction to your program become a fading dream, you are helping no one," the Oklahoma Daily editorial said. "Take responsibility for your department or resign."

"Everybody knows something is wrong with the program, coach, and we all are waiting for you to do something about it," the Daily's editorial said. "If you are not going to do anything about it — get out."

Four offers made to purchase Cowboys

DALLAS (AP) — Four offers have been made to buy the Dallas Cowboys and two more are expected to join the bidding for the National Football League team, a key person involved in the negotiations says.

Jack Veatch, managing director of the Dallas office of Salomon Bros., which is helping to line up prospective buyers, said Wednesday that H.R. "Bum" Bright has received four written offers for the team and the Texas Stadium lease.

Veatch said he expects the sale to take place soon and thinks it's probable that the new prospective owner will surface in late March before the NFL owners meet in Palm Spring, Ca.

The Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported today that two of the people known to have made offers are Cowboys minority owner Ed Smith Jr. and Dallas Mavericks owner Donald Carter.

A source told the newspaper that Jerry Jones, the president of Arkoma Exploration in Little Rock, Ark., also has made an offer. The fourth person has not been identified.

The additional bids are reportedly expected from an unamed Japanese businessman and Jerry Buss, owner of the Los Angeles Lakers of the National Basketball Association.

Veatch said he expects to receive an offer from the Japanese business man before the end of the month. Buss has told Veatch he also intends to submit an offer.

"I have been led to believe that Dr. Buss will have the strongest offer of those made so far," said Veatch, who added that a new owner should be in place before the '89 season.

But Jim Francis, an aide to Bright who's screening the list of potential buyers, confirmed that "we've had discussions with several groups, and I would say four are more serious than the others."

Francis made it clear that doesn't mean the sale has reached an advanced stage.

Chamber considers enterprise zone

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant Business/Oil Editor

In the fiercely competitive arena of economic development and attracting outside business as a means of economic diversification, Midland stands well-equipped for the hard fight, according to one expert in the field.

John Prickette, manager of economic development for TU Electric in Dallas, and several members of his staff were in Midland Wednesday familiarizing themselves with the area and what the city has to offer to relocating firms.

They came away "very impressed" with the foundation Midland has laid for corporate recruitment and other forms of economic development marketing, Prickette said at a reception with Midland Chamber of Commerce leaders Wednesday afternoon.

"It's just a matter of time before we make a match," between the city's abundant resources and some company's needs, he added.

However, he noted there are more than 220 economic development organizations in Texas alone competing for businesses' attention. Last year, TU made more than 2,000 out-of-state corporate contacts, generated internally and by the Texas Department of Commerce, Prickette said.

"The better you know an area, the better you can sell it," Prickette said.

The local chamber's hosting the Dallas delegation was reciprocating for a similar visit by local economic development experts to TU's headquarters last month, according to chamber chairman Steve Davidson.

"We invited them for a visit while we were in Dallas. We can talk about Midland and show them pictures, but they can't get a real feel for it until they're here on the ground," Davidson said.

TU has a long-standing tradition of commitment to developing the communities it serves, with a program in one form or another in place for more than 40 years, Prickette said.

Locally, one program TU is supporting is the Texas Department of Commerce's Enterprise Zone program. Stan Garrison, western region customer service manager for TU in Midland, chairs the task force which is currently working to identify a target area for an enterprise zone in the city.

Texas thrifts in rate war

By SARAH BARTLETT
New York Times News Service

A bidding war for savings deposits has broken out in Texas, just days after the Bush administration announced its proposal to rescue the savings and loan industry.

That proposal was intended, in part, to shut down insolvent institutions that were forcing up deposit rates for the rest of the industry.

Rates as high as 10.75 percent for six-month deposits are being offered by savings institutions, including some that have been officially earmarked to be taken over by the federal government. One savings unit that had already been placed under the regulators' control was also participating until Wednesday.

"So far the administration's plan has not had the effect that it was intended to have," said Lewis S. Ranieri, a former vice chairman of Salomon Brothers, whose investor group acquired an insolvent savings association in Houston in December.

Ranieri complained that this spike in interest rates made it almost impossible for institutions like his, which have been recapitalized, to remain competitive.

"We're running for cover and hoping that the cavalry comes soon," Ranieri said.

There are already some signs that the Texas rate war has started to spill over to a few institutions in Colorado, Oklahoma, Arkansas and California, said Noberto Mehl, chairman of Banxquote Money Markets, a New York-based information service. "Among smaller savings and loan associations, there's a little regional rate war going on," he said.

Manufacturing firm makes first sale

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

Economic diversification in Midland has taken another step forward.

Tomcat Inc., run by Midlander Mitch Clark in conjunction with Tomcat Engineering Ltd. of England, has sold its first U.S.-made lighting system to Fitzco Sound Inc., also of Midland.

"Naturally we're pleased, first because the system was manufactured in the U.S., and second a Midland company bought it," Clark stated.

His manufacturing facility at 1009 S. Goode has been in operation a month and employs five. In addition to the sale to Fitzco, Clark has secured a contract to make a 150 ft.-by-50 ft. master grid for an arena production of "The Wizard of Oz." In addition, he's also making another 50-by-150 grid for "Holiday on Ice," which is scheduled to begin rehearsals in Austin this April. "It's been a real positive start," Clark notes.

Mark Eichert of Fitzco says purchase of the lighting system won't have a major impact on Midland's total economy, but it could help liven up the local entertainment market.

The system — which includes 132 cans and a 48-channel dimming board — is the largest in West Texas, he said.

"You'd have to go to Dallas or Houston for a system that size."

Having such a system available should help attract new acts to the area, because it will help reduce costs, according to Eichert.

Housing Starts

Seasonally adjusted annual rate, millions of units

Housing starts up 8 percent

WASHINGTON (AP) — Housing construction shot up 8 percent in January, the biggest monthly gain in nearly a year, the government said today.

The Commerce Department said new homes and apartments were built at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 1.69 million units last month, up from the 1.57 million rate in December.

January's gain followed a revised 0.1 percent gain in December and a 2.3 percent rise in November. The good showing was attributed in part to unusually warm winter weather.

It was the biggest monthly jump since an 8.6 percent increase in February 1988, and was the highest level of activity since March 1987, when construction took place at an annual rate of 1.72 million units.

Housing construction dropped 8.2 percent in 1988 to its lowest level in six years, but analysts said the industry still was in good shape despite a moderate slowdown.

Building activity is expected to decline somewhat again this year as mortgage rates continue to rise, the economic expansion slows and demand for housing declines.

Interest rates on fixed-rate mortgages averaged 10.56 percent last week, up from 9.84 percent a year earlier, according to a survey by the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp.

Single-family homes were built in January at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 1.2 million units, the highest since September 1987.

Church's, Popeyes reach merger terms

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Church's Fried Chicken Inc. has agreed to a merger agreement with Popeyes Famous Fried Chicken and Biscuits, ending a four-month long hostile takeover battle in which federal judges ultimately sided with Popeyes.

In the agreement reached late Wednesday, Popeyes owner Al Copeland said he would purchase up to 30.1 million shares, or about 86.5 percent of Church's outstanding shares, in a tender offer deal worth about $330 million or $11 per share.

Each share of Church's not purchased in the tender offer will be converted to .44 share of a new series of redeemable preferred stock to be issued by the corporation surviving the merger, the companies said in a jointly issued statement.

Church's financial advisers have told the company that the preferred stock will trade on a fully diluted basis at a substantial discount from face amount, the statement said.

"After having met Popeyes' management during the due diligence process over the past month, we are excited about the opportunity of combining our two organizations," Church's president and chief executive officer Ernest Renaud said in the statement.

Popeyes previously had offered about $290 million for San Antonio-based Church's. During the hostile takeover process, Church's sued Popeyes, closed 120 restaurants to make the company more profitable and put itself on the auction block.

The companies' statement said that Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce has offered to provide up to $300 million and Merrill Lynch & Co. has offered up to $178 million in financing for the tender offer.

The statement did not say what the new company would be called and whether any jobs would be lost.

No. 3 Popeyes had been attempting since November to take over No. 2 Church's, a publicly held company rocked by management and marketing problems and plummeting sales over the last several years.

"I am pleased that we have agreed to this merger and believe it will create a very strong No. 2 fast food fried chicken chain," he said.

Houston bank closed

HOUSTON (AP) — Almost exactly six years after it received its national bank charter, the First Continental National Bank of Houston is no more.

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. shut down the bank at 3 p.m. Wednesday because of continued deterioration of the institution's loan portfolio. No bids were received for the bank, and the FDIC said it would pay off insured depositors.

The bank was the 13th to be regulators have closed in Texas in 1989 and 20th in the nation.

All of about $8.9 million in deposits in 661 accounts were insured except for about $97,000 in nine accounts that exceeded the federal insurance limit of $100,000, officials said.

Owners of such uninsured deposits will share proportionately with the FDIC in the proceeds realized from liquidation of the bank's assets.

The bank, with total assets of $9.2 million, was closed by Dean S. Marriott, Senior Deputy Comptroller of the Currency, and the FDIC was named receiver.

Soviet trade may jump five-fold

New York Times News Service

A top Moscow economist predicted Wednesday that if the United States abolished trade barriers with the Soviet Union, commerce between the countries would expand "by a factor of five to 10 times" in five years.

Abel G. Aganbegyan, an economic adviser to the Soviet leader, Mikhail S. Gorbachev, said that restoration of most-favored-nation status — the tariffs that govern American trade with 150 nations — would "also be a very positive symbolic act," signaling an improved political relationship.

Gorbachev and other senior Soviet officials have urged Washington to lift the trade restrictions.

Trade between the countries in 1987, the last year for which figures are available, was nearly $2 billion, most of it American wheat ordered by Moscow to supplement Soviet food supplies.

Aganbegyan, 56, one of the architects of Gorbachev's perestroika program of economic and political restructuring, was in Washington as part of a 13-day American tour to publicize a book that he had edited, "Perestroika, A Collection of Essays by Prominent Russians on the Changes Taking Place in the Soviet Union."

The tour was arranged by Hill & Knowlton Inc., a public relations firm that works for the British publisher Robert Maxwell, who owns Charles Scribner's Sons, which has brought out the book.

Easing Soviet trade restrictions — set by Congress in 1974 under the Jackson-Vanik Amendment to the Trade Act that bars trade privileges to Communist countries that do not allow free emigration — promises to be one of the more contentious international economic issues facing the Bush administration. Any change must be approved by Congress.

The issue has come to the fore because some Jewish organizations, encouraged by increases in the emigration of Soviet Jews in the last two years, have expressed a willingness to consider a waiver from the Jackson-Vanik law that would temporarily give Moscow better tariff treatment.

State Department officials say the rise in emigration is one factor that President Bush will review when he considers whether to seek a waiver.

Aganbegyan, who was once close to Gorbachev but is now considered more of a spokesman on Soviet economic policy than a key adviser, also

From Staff and Wire Reports

After skyrocketing 83 cents Wednesday, oil futures prices continued higher, but at a slower pace. At midmorning, prices for West Texas Intermediate had gained 11 cents to stand at $18.36 on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Posted prices followed the lead of Wednesday's futures prices as local crude oil purchasers raised their prices 50 cents to $16.75.

The price hike was fueled by a report saying a group of non-OPEC members is considering a 300,000 barrel-a-day cut in output.

Traders also speculated that a report that Louisiana oil field pipes are contaminated could lead to production cutbacks. Louisiana state officials denied there was any contamination of stocks.

LONDON (AP) — The dollar firmed in early European trading today. Gold prices also rose.

Traders in Milan, Italy, said the market was looking ahead to Friday's release of the December U.S. trade result.

"Naturally a monthly deficit under $10 billion will guarantee a major dollar rally," said one trader. The U.S. merchandise trade deficit widened sharply to $12.5 billion in November from $10.3 billion in October.

In London, one British pound cost $1.7665, cheaper for buyers than $1.7805 Wednesday.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $383.35 a troy ounce, up from $382.00 bid late Wednesday. At midmorning, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $384.25.

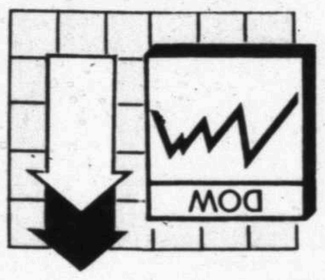
Stocks end slump, climb 22 points



NEW YORK (AP) — Blue chips led the way as the stock market rallied Wednesday, breaking out of a week-long slump.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, which had fallen 65.89 points over the five previous sessions, climbed 22.68 to 2,303.93.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by about 5 to 3 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 907 up, 556 down and 498 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 154.22 million shares, up from 149.56 million in the previous session. Nationwide, consolidated volume in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 183.19 million shares.

As measured by Wilshire Associates' index of more than 5,000 actively traded stocks, the market increased $20.93 billion, or 0.73 percent, in value.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks added 1.27 to 165.21.

Personal computers topic for engineers

Eckels

Personal computers in the oil industry will be the subject of Wesley W. Eckles, featured speaker at the February meeting of the Permian Basin Section of the Society of Petroleum Engineers.

Eckles, a Dallas-based consultant, says the engineer today who can't use a computer is like the engineer of the '50s who couldn't use a slide rule. In his speech he will review the potential for the use of the personal computer in the field of independent consulting.

As an independent consultant, Eckles specializes in reservoir management and microcomputer application. He is also a consulting editor for Petroleum Engineering International. Eckles has a BS in physics from the University of Texas, and joined Sun Oil Co. in 1952. He retired from Sun in 1985.

He is a 1988-89 SPE Distinguished Lecturer. The luncheon meeting will be Feb. 21, at 11:30 a.m. at the Midland Hilton. Attendees may make reservations by calling 686-7329.

Coleman leads Christian oilmen's convention

From Staff Reports

Midland oilman Thomas I. Coleman Jr. will preside over the annual convention of the Christian Oilmen's Association in New Orleans, March 2-5.

Coleman was elected president of the international association in 1988 and has traveled extensively for the organization during his one year term.

Featured speaker for the event is Pat Robertson, founder and chief executive officer of Christian Broadcasting Network and former candidate for the Republican presidential nomination.

Rev. Harald Bredsen, founder of the Christian organization will also be a speaker, along with Father Stephen Barham, who is co-pastor of the association along with Bredsen.

Those interested in attending the convention may contact the association at 1031 Andrews Hwy., Suite 100; or call 699-5149.

AT&T plans to cut long-distance rates

NEW YORK (NYT) — Continuing a trend toward lower long-distance prices, the American Telephone and Telegraph Co. said Wednesday that it plans to cut its rates an average of 1.6 percent on April 1.

The reduction, if approved by the government, would save customers more than $533 million a year, or about 8 cents on the average monthly residential long-distance charge of $8.60. The Federal Communications Commission is expected to approve the reduction.

AT&T said the rate cut would apply mainly to calls made in the daytime and to business services like wide-area telecommunication services, or WATS, and toll-free 800-number service.

Grand jury looks at Texas Eastern subsidiary

HOUSTON (HNS) — A federal grand jury in Houston is investigating Texas Eastern Transmission Corp., the natural gas pipeline subsidiary of Texas Eastern Corp., in connection with certain "environmental matters," the company said in a filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

The company said it is cooperating with the investigation.

Texas Eastern Vice President Fred Wichlep would not comment Wednesday when asked what environmental matters were involved.

Factory capacity use remains high

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. industry is using more of its capacity than at any other time in nearly a decade, the government said in a report that showed operating rates approaching levels that could worsen inflation.

The stock and bond markets were not alarmed by Wednesday's report. Bond prices rose modestly and the Dow Jones average of 30 industrials climbed 22.68 points to 2,303.93. The dollar fell sharply but later made back most of its losses.

The Federal Reserve Board said January's operating rate of 84.4 percent of capacity was unchanged from December, for which the figure was revised upward from an earlier estimate of 84.2 percent.

Drilling continues in Sugg Ranch field

IP PETROLEUM CO. INC., Midland, continues development drilling in the Sugg Ranch field, adding a new Canyon producer to the Irion County portion of the field.

On potential test, the No. 1-25 Pfluger "G" flowed 122 barrels of 41.5 gravity crude and 38 barrels of water on a 16/64 inch choke. The well flowed from perforations 7,688 to 7,824 ft., which had been acidized with 200 gallons of acid and fractured with 1,964 barrels of water and 130,000 lbs. sand.

Drilled to 7,975 ft., the well was plugged back to 7,922 ft. with 4 1/2 inch casing set at 7,970 ft.

tax arrearages, or chronic space vacancy — for areas which can be established to offer temporary tax abatements as an inducement to industry looking to relocate.

"An enterprise zone is another important tool which we could have available for attracting businesses," Garrison said. "No one program is a panacea, but we need to have all the tools we can at our disposal."

The task force is now examining detailed local economic data to outline as large an area as possible, up to 20 square miles, which can qualify under the state guidelines.

Economic development director for the chamber, Jim Crider said the zone could include commercial areas in east and south Midland as well as Midland Industrial Park.

Tax abatements and other incentives offered in the zone, which is so designated for seven years, are tied to the number of jobs created by the new or expanding business and are temporary by design to enhance the local tax base over the long term, Garrison said.

Other members of the chamber task force, which plans to meet again before the end of the month, are: Mitch Clark, Roger Robles, Tracy Elms, John Fowler, Gregg Owens, Steve Davidson, JoAnne Langston, Odell Walker, Elvia Hernandez, Jerry Jones, Richard Hennessy, Lloyd Powell, Gordon Marcum, Van Folger and Don Byerly.

He explained having the system here and renting it to acts saves the cost of trucking systems in from another Texas city. That cost savings may be an incentive to bring big-name acts to Ector County Coliseum or Chaparral Center.

The system is very versatile, able to go from a small two-tree arrangement to large front-and-back truss and two-tree configuration. The system should be operational by the end of March, Eichert said. "We're just waiting on some parts. The four Genie lift towers come from Washington; the cables came from Europe, the cans from Tomcat in England, and the board and racks came from Michigan. It's been real interesting," he noted. He estimates the system is worth close to $100,000. He noted that the decision to buy from Tomcat was a mutual choice between Tomcat and Fitzco. "The opportunity was right, so we seized the moment."

Fitzco bought the system because it enabled them to add lighting to their eight-year-old sound support business, Eichert said. "We thought West Texas needed something like this, and we felt there was a demand for it," he added.

The system will be rented out to promoters for concerts in the region, with or without crews, as requested. Fitzco, founded by Michael Fitz-Gerald, employs four full-time.

Eichert says business has been good, but it hasn't come easy. "It's not like Dallas, where you can fill an arena. Here, it takes a good act at reasonable prices to draw a crowd. And getting jobs takes beating the bushes, making lots of calls and lots of contacts."

While bringing in rock concerts or ice shows or jazz sessions may not totally rearrange the local economy, Eichert notes that the concert halls and hotels benefit. "We may not change the local economy, but we hope we can bring in a little more fun."

TRADE

predicted that the ruble would become "fully" convertible by the last half of the 1990s. The ruble is now valued at $1.40.

The change — considered unlikely by many Western economists because of the weakness of the Soviet currency — would require major alterations in the economy, including the introduction of more market mechanism than Gorbachev has so far indicated that he was willing to allow.

It would also require extensive changes in the system of heavily subsidized prices, including increases in the cost of staples like bread, butter and sugar.

Aganbegyan, who spoke to reporters at a luncheon and later addressed students of the School of Advanced International Studies at the Johns Hopkins University, said moving too quickly would be a mistake.

He said he had recommended in a recent article in Pravda, the Communist Party newspaper, that retail price increases be "taken off the agenda at the present time and delayed until after a healthy economy is achieved."

THRIFTS

The events of the last few days illustrate how difficult it will be to translate the administration's rescue plan for the industry into action and bring the problems afflicting the industry under control.

But others say it reflects a decision by insolvent institutions now facing certain regulatory control to abandon any restraint, as well as confusion among the various regulatory agencies as to who is supposed to intervene, and for what reason.

Regulators say that once they take control of failed institutions, they can exert some pressure on rates offered by their new wards, and point to one in which they have already done so.

"We do not intend to have institutions in our program paying the highest rates," said Alan Whitney, a spokesman for the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., which has just been given responsibility for taking control of insolvent savings institutions.

Studies look at long-term economics of blindness prevention

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government could save more money in the long run if it paid for the early detection and treatment of a blinding disease in diabetics, says a study that is one of a growing number to stress the economics of health care.

"The cost of saving a year of sight is substantially less — approximately one seventh — the cost of a year of disability paid by the federal government (to the blind)," Dr. Jonathan C. Javitt, an ophthalmologist at the Wilmer Eye Institute at Johns Hopkins University and principal author of the eye disease study, said in an interview Tuesday.

In the face of soaring health care costs, more researchers are considering the financial implications of expensive medical treatments and the savings that can be had through preventive measures.

This growing new class of research based on financial as well as clinical considerations of treatment comes from the "recognition that just outcomes of care without sensitivity to cost is not enough," said Jonathan Weiner, associate professor of health policy at Johns Hopkins.

The studies come in response to increasing pressures from the federal government and other health-care payers in the face of escalating health care costs and the consequences for an estimated 35 million Americans who don't qualify for government health assistance and can't afford private insurance.

"More and more clinical journals are talking about cost effectiveness," Weiner said, and doctors are increasingly looking at "dollars along with their doses."

The eye disease that was the subject of the study, diabetic retinopathy, is the leading cause of new cases of blindness among working-age Americans. The study said more than 70 percent of diabetics will develop the disease in their lifetime.

Early detection and treatment of the eye disease, though, can reduce the likelihood of severe vision loss by 60 percent, said the study published in the February issue of Ophthalmology, the journal of the American Academy of Ophthalmology.

As many as 880,000 of the 11 million Americans who have diabetes have no medical insurance, and many more may be underinsured, the study said. These people are less likely than insured diabetics to seek medical care for screening and treatment of the eye disease.

Early screening and treatment could save an average three years of sight for each diabetic, the study said. Adding up the costs of screening and treatment for all diabetic patients, this amounts to an average savings of $966 for each year of sight saved per person, the study said.

In contrast, the average annual cost of Social Security disability payments made to each American worker disabled by diabetes-related vision loss is $6,900, the study said. In addition, anyone who remains eligible for Social Security disability insurance for two years automatically becomes eligible for Medicare benefits.

Javitt and his colleagues at Johns Hopkins' Dana Center for Preventive Ophthalmology developed a computer model that analyzed progression of the disease, vision loss in afflicted patients, treatment outcome and mortality.

These disease-related events were applied statistically to 31,000 cases — the estimated number of new cases of juvenile-onset, insulin-dependent diabetes each year in the United States. People with this kind of diabetes generally get the disease before age 30.

Diabetes deteriorates small blood vessels in the body, including those in the retina at the back of the eye. In the early stages of the eye disease, weakened blood vessels may leak, causing the retina to swell and resulting in blurred vision.

In more advanced stages of the disease, the retina becomes so starved of oxygen-carrying blood, new blood vessels begin to grow, but they tend to rupture and bleed. This results in more scarring and blurred vision and can cause the retina to detach from the back of the eye, which often leads to severe vision loss or blindness.

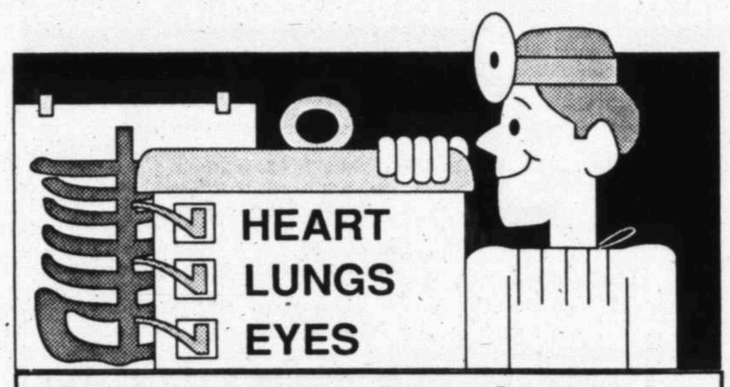
The computer model predicted that 54 percent of the 31,000 people studied would have severe vision loss if not screened or treated for the eye disease, compared with 28 percent who received early treatment.



Mexican-born Americans have poorest health

Almost 44 percent of Mexican-born Americans aged 65 or over responding to a recent survey reported having only fair or poor health, compared to 30 percent for native U.S. citizens. In the 45-to-64 age group, persons of Mexican birth were twice as likely to have fair or poor health as native-born or other foreign-born Americans.

Starches, sugar are real cavity culprits

New York Times News Service

The ancient Greeks said eating figs caused the teeth to rot. Twentieth-century parents say the culprit is candy. Both are right, but only partially.

While most people tell their children not to eat sticky sweets like caramels and cream-filled cookies, what they should be telling them is to stay away from frequent snacks of fermentable carbohydrates, especially the kind that stick to your teeth.

Fermentable carbohydrates?

In the 1970s, dental researchers discovered that it was not sugar alone that caused cavities; cooked starches — fermentable carbohydrates — were also culprits.

"The ramifications of that discovery are enormous," said Dr. Stephen Moss, chairman of the department of pediatrics at New York University.

Bread, cereals, potato chips, crackers and fruit, it turns out, will make holes in your teeth. Before carbohydrates can get to your stomach, saliva must turn them into sugar. When that sugar comes in contact with your teeth, it makes no difference whether it is in the form of maltose from milk, fructose from fruit, corn sugar or sucrose.

Very few people have paid attention to this information, if they were aware of it at all.

Perhaps this is because Americans have been more concerned about making sure they eat bread, cereal and fruit for their overall health. To be told that these foods can rot your teeth is more than most health-conscious consumers want to deal with.

What is important to remember is that what may be harmless for your teeth may not not necessarily be harmless for the rest of the body.

While dental experts may see the issue from the perspective of dental health, "nutritionists see the overall health perspective," said Dr. Carole Palmer, a co-head of the division of nutrition and preventive dentistry at Tufts University School of Dental Medicine in Boston.

There is more to this research than the fact that bread can cause cavities.

According to Moss, researchers now know that the amount of sugar in food is not terribly important to dental health. Whether a food contains 5 percent sugar or 15 percent sugar does not matter in terms of that food's ability to cause cavities. More salient factors are the stickiness of the food and the frequency with which its sugar comes in contact with the teeth.

Palmer puts it this way: "Whether you put one teaspoon of sugar in your coffee or three teaspoons of sugar in your coffee, it doesn't make any difference if you still have six cups of coffee." It would be preferable, from a dental health point of view, Palmer said, "to have six teaspoons of sugar in one cup of coffee than one teaspoon of sugar in six cups of coffee at various times during the day."

If stickiness is a factor in the creation of cavities, caramels must be one of the most cariogenic (capable of producing cavities) foods in the world, right? Not at all.

"The human perception of stickiness," Moss said, "is quite different from what actually sticks to the teeth."

Because a caramel is pure sugar, it dissolves quickly, he explained. But a cream-filled cookie, a combination of starch and sugar, stays on the tooth surface longer.

Research conducted by Dr. William H. Bowen, chairman of the department of dental research at the University of Rochester School of Medicine and Dentistry, indicates that cream-filled chocolate cookies are far more cariogenic than plain sucrose.

In an experiment with rats that were fed a single food, cookies caused more cavities than any of the other 18 foods tested, with the exception of raisins.

Cheese may protect teeth from cavities

Hearst News Service

ALBANY N.Y. — Ever see a mouse with cavities? Probably not, for recent research suggests that eating cheeses may protect teeth from cavities and gum disease.

So says the Dairy Council Inc., a non profit nutrition education organization affiliated with the National Dairy Council.

Spokeswoman Michelle Coyne, who is a registered dietician, says that sugars and starches like those in potatoes and breads form acids in the mouth. The acids eat away at the tooth, causing cavities.

Ingredients in cheese neutralize the acids, Coyne said. According to dental research performed at the University of Iowa, aged cheddar, Swiss and Monterey Jack, as well as mozzarella, muenster, Edam and Gouda cheeses may help protect against cavity formation.

The calcium, phosphates, protein and fat found in cheese also stimulate saliva flow, which is beneficial for reducing tooth decay. Coyne said.

Study: Milk top source of cholesterol for children

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Youngsters who love milk should stick to the fat-free variety, because dairy products have surpassed meat as the top source of unhealthy saturated fat in teen-agers' diets, a researcher says.

Studies by Dr. Curtis Ellison at two elite New England prep schools found that 35 percent of students' daily intake of saturated fat comes from milk, cheese, ice cream and other dairy food.

Preppies are not unique in what they eat, according to Ellison, who said at least two other unpublished studies have reached similar conclusions.

"The studies show that the main source of saturated fat is not meat anymore," he said. "It is milk and other dairy products."

Eating too much saturated fat raises cholesterol levels in the bloodstream. This clogs the arteries that feed the heart. Decades of bad eating eventually can result in a heart attack, but many experts believe that the damage begins early in life.

Ellison measured the sources of salt and saturated fat in the diets of students at Phillips Exeter Academy in New Hampshire and Phillips Academy in Andover, Mass., as part of a study of dietary changes.

He found that after dairy products, meat, fish, poultry and eggs provided 28 percent of the students' saturated fat; baked goods and cereals 16 percent; ketchup, gravy and other "food adjuncts" 7 percent; fruits and vegetables 7 percent, snacks 6 percent, and everything else 1 percent.

Ellison said that many people shy away from red meat because of its fat content, but they sometimes substitute kinds of cheese, such as cheddar cheese, that contain far higher levels of saturated fat.

"Kids love milk," he said. "Some of them drink two liters a day, and they grow up thinking that it's a good thing to have. We are not trying to take their milk away. Just take the fat out of it."

Ellison presented his data Tuesday at a program on school lunches held at Massachusetts Institute of Technology's Clinical Research Center.

Ellison is among health experts who believe youngsters should cut down on saturated fat and salt to establish good eating habits and prevent coronary artery disease and high blood pressure as they get older.

Chemical structure of AIDS found, may lead to new drugs

NEW YORK (AP) — Scientists said today they had discovered the three-dimensional structure of a crucial protein made by the AIDS virus, defining a target for potential new AIDS drugs.

The discovery will aid attempts to design drugs that block the action of the protein, crippling the ability of the virus to spread its infection, researchers said.

While such a drug would not cure acquired immune deficiency syndrome, it might keep the disease under control, said researcher Manuel Navia.

He and eight other scientists from the Merck Sharp and Dohme Research Laboratories in Rahway, N.J., and West Point., Penn., report their discovery of the protein's structure in today's issue of the British journal Nature.

The accomplishment, the first time a three-dimensional structure has been reported for any AIDS virus protein, is "pretty dramatic," commented AIDS researcher Jay Levy of the University of California at San Francisco.

William Haseltine of the Dana-Farber Cancer Institute in Boston called the finding "an important and critical step along the pathway to rational, anti-AIDS drug development."

The protein is an enzyme, which is a class of substances that permit or speed up chemical reactions. The AIDS enzyme comes into play as the virus makes more copies of itself.

After the virus infects a cell, it orders the cell's protein-making machinery to make proteins for producing new viruses.

The proteins are manufactured in a string, like cars on a train, and they will not function unless separated. The newly analyzed enzyme is responsible for cutting the proteins apart.

If the enzyme fails to do its job, the newly produced viruses cannot infect other cells, Navia said. So a drug that blocks the enzyme should stop the spread of infection, he said.

Haseltine said such a drug should also keep an infected person from being infectious to others.

Researchers would have to make sure that the drug would not block similar enzymes elsewhere in a person's body, Levy said.

The structure of the AIDS enzyme looks like a tangled string in the general shape of an angelfish. It is formed by the joining of two identical structures.

LONDON (AP) — Moslem fundamentalist leaders in Iran said today suicide squads were preparing to carry out the "death sentence" imposed on novelist Salman Rushdie and his publishers by Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

The declaration on Tehran Radio followed other reports that death squads from Islamic countries were en route to Britain in search of the writer, whose novel "The Satanic Verses" has outraged many Moslem fundamentalists.

Britain, which reopened its embassy in Tehran in December for the first time in eight years, said it had frozen plans to "build up further our embassy." It also condemned the threats against Rushdie.

The British Broadcasting Corp. reported that British Airways had received threats that bombs would be placed on their flights to India unless Rushdie, reported under armed guard in Britain, appeared in public. The airline said it was taking the threats seriously.

Pakistan's government demanded the United States and Britain ban the book and that all copies of it be destroyed. Six people died in Pakistan during a weekend riot over the book.

An Iranian cleric on Wednesday offered up to $2.6 million for Rushdie's murder, and the author canceled a U.S. promotional tour that was scheduled to begin Friday.

British news media said the Indian-born Rushdie was hiding with his wife, American novelist Marianne Wiggins, under police guard. Press Association, the domestic British news agency, said Rushdie's first wife, Clarissa Luard, also had been given police protection.

Tehran Radio, monitored in Cyprus, said religious figures in the northwestern Iranian city of Urumiyeh declared in a statement:

"We have already put on our death shrouds and pledge to carry out the Imam's (Khomeini's) death sentence against Salman Rushdie and his publishers in the United States and Europe."

Iran's lone diplomat in Britain, Mohammed Basti, was summoned to the Foreign Office in London to discuss the situation and emerged defiant, telling reporters Khomeini's "decree or verdict" had been delivered "after careful consideration."

"It has nothing to do particularly with your country," the charge d'affaires said.

"We recognize that Moslems and others may have strong views about the contents of Mr. Rushdie's book," it said in a statement."However, no one has the right to incite people to violence on British soil or against British citizens."

The Guardian newspaper said police were believed to have stepped up surveillance of Khomeini supporters in Britain in a bid to foil any attempt to kill Rushdie, a Cambridge-educated British citizen.

Ian Gelderd, a researcher at the Institute for the Study of Terrorism, said about 1,000 radical Khomeini supporters are believed to be in Britain, either as students or on short-term visas.

Gelderd said the 41-year-old Rushdie might need protection the rest of his life. "No way will the Ayatollah rescind the sentence. There will always be those wishing to carry out hit orders," he said.

Rushdie, 41, was born into a Moslem family in India but is a British citizen. Since "The Satanic Verses" was published in Britain in September, it has sold more than 100,000 copies here and received critical acclaim.

Pakistan's Foreign Ministry said today protests were being filed in Washington and London seeking a ban on the novel.

Pakistani fundamentalist leaders called for nationwide protests Friday to condemn the book and denounce the deaths and injuries in Sunday's protests by Moslem fundamentalists demanding "The Satanic Verses" be pulled from U.S. shelves.

The book has been banned in countries with large Moslem populations, including India and South Africa, as well as most Islamic nations, including Pakistan, Bangladesh and Egypt.

No official ban has been announced in Iran, where the population is overwhelmingly Shiite Moslem, but most foreign publications have been banned in that country for years.

One of Italy's leading publishers, Arnoldo Mondadori Editore SpA, said today it was debating whether to release "The Satantic Verses" because of the protests.

The French publishing house Christian Bourgois said it was delaying publication of the novel to avoid risk to the company, its clients and readers.

'Satanic Verses' author cancels U.S. tour

canceled a planned promotional tour of the United States after Iran put a $2.6 million price on his head.

"The current climate is not appropriate for a promotional tour of the U.S.," said a statement issued Wednesday by the book's publisher, Viking Penguin Inc.

Viking Penguin had scheduled an 11-city U.S. tour for Salman Rushdie, including readings at four universities. The tour was to begin Friday to coincide with the official U.S. publication of the book on Feb. 11. The book has been available in stores in this country for several weeks.

But Rushdie, who lives in London, was reported to have gone into hiding with his wife, American novelist Marianne Wiggins, following the Iranian threat.

Police said seven bomb threats have been made in the past two months to the publisher's Manhattan offices.

The book, banned in Iran, India, Pakistan, Bangladesh, Egypt and South Africa, was described as "a dirty conspiracy" against Islam by the Iranian government

Paul Slovak, a Viking Penguin spokesman, said recent events in Pakistan and India, "combined with our understanding of threats made against the author and those associated with" the book's publication led the publisher to cancel the tour.

"We reiterate that no offense was intended in the creation or publication of this work," the publisher's statement publisher said.

"It is also our unalterable position that freedom of speech, freedom to publish and freedom to read must be guaranteed internationally," it added.

Rushdie received support Tuesday from The Authors Guild, which issued a statement saying it supports the right of all authors everywhere to write without fear of constraint from any quarters.

"We are appalled by Ayatollah Khomeini's threats against Salman Rushdie and his publishers," the statement said.

Dawud Assad, president of the Council of Masajid of the United States, called the book "garbage" and said he welcomed the cancellation of the U.S. book tour.

But Assad said it was wrong to sentence the author to death.

"Islam is a religion of peace and tolerance," he said. "Who knows what is really in the heart of Salman Rushdie."

Muslim leaders in Los Angeles and Detroit reacted similarly.

"I'm shocked by (Rushdie's) insensitivity, but I think calls for his murder are absurd, absolutely absurd," said Khaled Abou El Fadl of the Los Angeles-based Muslim Political Action Committee. "I am not even in favor of banning the book. I personally think the whole thing was blown out of proportion."

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency reported Wednesday that a senior Moslem clergyman in Iran, Hojatoleslam Hassan Saneie, had offered $2.6 million to any Iranian who kills Rushdie and $1 million to a foreigner who kills the author.

Tehran Radio said today that Mohammad Hashemian, the religious leader in the southeastern city of Kerman, pledged another $2.6 million reward.

A major character in the novel is named Mahound, a medieval corruption of the name of the prophet Mohammed. Moslems have complained the book represents the prophet's wives as prostitutes and suggests that he wrote the Koran, rather than receiving it from God.

Expecting to be freed, detainees end fast

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — About 170 blacks imprisoned without charge outside Johannesburg halted a prolonged hunger strike today, and state-run radio said many detainees will be freed soon.

Civil rights lawyers said the hunger strikers at Diepkloof Prison, some of whom had not eaten for 24 days, ended their fast at 7 a.m.

"An important victory has been won," the detainees said.

In Cape Town, Anglican Archbiship Desmond Tutu and other activist clergymen emerged from a meeting with Law and Order Minister Adriaan Vlok to announce "a substantial number" of detainees would be freed within two weeks.

Vlok issued no statement, but the clergymen's announcement was confirmed by the state-run radio.

The church leaders said Vlok promised to give urgent personal attention to the cases of individual detainees and told the delegation that the death of any striker would be "too ghastly to contemplate."

"A very significant move has happened," said Tutu. "It has given hope to our people that non-violent action can in fact sometimes achieve goals they have set for themselves."

Tutu later received a standing ovation from 1,500 people at a church service held in support of the detainees.

He said church leaders have asked the hunger strikers to suspend their fast for two weeks to test the government's pledge.

"Never before has Minister Vlok and the government been shaking in their boots like they are today," said activist Cheryl Carolus.

Oliver Tambo, president of the African National Congress guerrilla movement, said in Harare, Zimbabwe, that the latest developments proved the hunger strike was "a jolly good idea."

Kathleen Satchwell, a lawyer representing several hunger strikers, said at a news conference in Johannesburg the government indicated a majority of the estimated 1,000 people detained without charge nationwide would be freed soon.

Ms. Satchwell said the decision to halt the strike applied only to Diepkloof Prison.

Civil rights workers in Port Elizabeth, the other major center of the strike, said the 105 hunger strikers at St. Albans prison were continuing their fast pending results of their lawyers' meetings with Vlok.

The Diepkloof detainees said their decision was based on concern for the health of some of the hunger strikers and on Vlok's pledge to review their cases individually.

"There have been broken promises in the past. We hope that this is not the case now," their statement said. "We have succeeded in our principal objection...to highlight the desperate plight of detainees."

Ms. Satchwell said there was no specific assurance from the government about who would be freed. But she said officials had convinced her that "detainees would be released."

Another lawyer, Azhar Cachalia, said detainees who had been fasting since the start of the strike would need several weeks to regain enough strength to leave prison.

He said the government had given no indication it was considering ending its policy of detention without trial but was seeking a way to free a substantial number of detainees without losing face.

Cachalia said the detainees suffered because Vlok generally had to give authorization before any of them could be freed. "The minister is not able to cope with the workload of dealing with thousands of detainees. They just forget about many of our people," Cachalia said.

An estimated 30,000 people, most of them black activists, have been detained for varying periods since a national state of emergency was declared in June 1986.

The six-member church delegation that met with Vlok included the Rev. Allan Boesak, who had fasted since Monday in solidarity with the hunger strikers.

JERUSALEM (AP) — Near the site where the Dead Sea scrolls were found, archaeologists have dug up a 2,000-year-old flask filled with an oil that might have been used to anoint the ancient Israelite kings.

Joseph Patrich of Hebrew University unveiled the flask Wednesday and said the oil, which has a honey-like consistency, may be the only surviving sample of the balsam oil used as an aromatic body cream or perfume.

"After conducting extensive laboratory analysis and checking literary sources, there is a good possibility that what we have here is the fragrant balsam oil that was famous throughout the Roman Empire," he said.

The oil matches a description of a perfume mentioned by the Roman historian Pliny. Known as persimmon oil, it was distilled from a bush-like plant now believed to be extinct.

The ancient perfume was very expensive — a sort of Chanel No. 5 of its day — and was coveted throughout the Roman Empire.

The persimmon plant, which was different from the modern tree of the same name, grew only in the Dead Sea oasis of En Gedi and around Jericho. The ancient Israelites guarded the secret formula for making the oil, going so far as to post warnings against anyone revealing the process.

When the Roman legions approached, the Israelites tried to destroy the orchard of plants. Pliny's writings indicate the Romans took over production, archaeologists say.

Hebrew University chemist Zeev Aizenshtat, who spent three months analyzing the substance, said whatever fragrance the oil had evaporated in the desert cave, where summer temperatures hover over 104 degrees.

He said he was unable to make an absolute identification because there were no surviving samples of the ancient plant to make a comparison.

"This oil is very different from other ancient oils in that it did not deteriorate," Aizenshtat said. "This may be the oldest oil that contains such organic matter and whose properties have not been greatly altered by chemical reactions over time."

The clay juglet stands 5 inches high and contains about 1½ to 3½ ounces of the reddish oil, which is well-preserved and dates to the 1st century B.C. It was wrapped in palm leaves and carefully concealed.

It was found last year by an expedition, which includes an American team of volunteers from the Institute of Judaic-Christian Research in Arlington, Texas.

The flask was buried in a 3-foot-deep pit in the honeycomb of caves at Qumran, 50 miles southeast of Jerusalem and the site where the Dead Sea Scrolls were discovered in 1947.

The scrolls, ancient holy writings including the Book of Isaiah, were hidden by the Essene Sect in the 1st century A.D. to avoid plundering by the advancing Romans.

The expedition will resume digging soon as part of a 6-year-old project to explore the thousands of caves in Qumran overlooking the Dead Sea.

Menachem Boorstein, a scholar at the Mercaz HaRav Yeshiva in Jerusalem, said the oil was one of 11 holy fragrances burned as incense on the altar of ancient Jewish Temple. It is mentioned in Exodus and in the collection of Jewish law and commentary called the Talmud.

Boorstein said the Talmud describes the oil as highly inflammable and tells the story of a woman killing her daughter by convincing her she should light a candle after rubbing her body with the oil to make its perfume effect stronger.

The balsam oil, described by some ancient rabbis as more valuable than gold, was used to anoint the kings of Israel after King Solomon in the 10th Century B.C.E.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Arab and Jew make beautiful music together

JERUSALEM (AP) — Two Israeli musicians, an Arab and a Jew, have formed a duo to promote Arab-Jewish coexistence through music.

The twosome, called "The White Bird," features Taisir Elias on violin and oud, a lute-like stringed instrument of the Middle East and North Africa, and Migel Hartstein on guitar and banjo.

Elias, an Israeli Arab from the northern town of Shfaram, said he met Hartstein, a Jewish farmer, at the annual Israel Festival last year and "saw that we have to work together, to maintain this coexistence, this musical dialogue."

Since then Hartstein, a farmer from the Ganot agricultural cooperative, and Elias, a teacher at the Jerusalem Academy of Music, have performed in Jerusalem, Tel Aviv, Haifa and West Germany.

Their music is a gentle blend of Eastern tones and Western popular music, with some motifs derived from American country music.

"It is human music, universal music," says Elias. "It is a mid-way meeting between Eastern and Western music. From there, we start to create a special musical language."

But, according to Elias, there is a political message too: "The moment a Jew and an Arab play together and create together, they cannot hate each other. That's the ideal we strive for."

Arms production to be cut

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (AP) — The government says Czechoslovakia's largest armarments plant will halve its military production this year and increase its turnout of heavy equipment for civilian use.

The official CTK news agency said Wednesday that the cuts are linked to recent disarmament initiatives by Czechoslovakia and other East bloc countries that follow Moscow's lead in announcing cuts in military manpower and spending.

While halving its military production, the plant at Martin in western Slovakia will make more equipment for civilian use, such as construction and road-building machinery, CTK quoted company director Jozef Uhrik as saying.

Czechoslovakia last month announced it would cut defense spending by 15 percent and trim its armed forces by 12,000 men in the next two years. The cuts are also to include the scrapping of tanks and other hardware.

According to NATO figures, Czechoslovakia has about 145,000 troops.

Nine peasants killed

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Four people have been arrested in a clash of rival farmers that left at least nine dead in a remote town of southern Mexico this week, the Excelsior news service reported.

The news service Wednesday quoted Chiapas state Attorney General Jorge Arias Zebadua as saying that the four were arrested Wednesday in the Sunday killings on a cattle ranch near Pijijiapa.

State officials earlier said that eight of the dead were among a group of about 100 peasants who had occupied a 500-acre tract since last December, after they lost an 8-year-old legal battle over the land.

The ninth was among 83 campesinos who together own the 7,000-acre cattle ranch.

According to official accounts, the owners tried to run off the occupying peasants, who were reportedly killed with AK-47 automatic rifles.

Independent Center for Farm Laborers and Peasants leader Enrique Vazquez said on Tuesday that peasants occupying the land had petitioned for about 2,500 acres for expansion of their cooperative farm.

Search for bodies continues

TOULON, France (AP) — Rescue workers uncovered 10 more bodies today from the rubble of a six-story building that exploded and collapsed, bringing the number of dead to at least 12, city officials said.

Two people were still missing from the five-story building that crumbled into ruins on Wednesday and 31 people remained hospitalized, three with serious injuries, the officials said.

Mayor Francois Trucy said the explosion appeared to have occurred on the second floor of the 18th century building that collapsed. It contained both apartments and businesses.

Authorities were investigating the cause of the explosion, which was initially attributed to gas.

DURHAM, England (AP) — A convict and his girlfriend united their palms to protest the man's robbery conviction and stuck together for 21 hours.

Jeremiah Miller, 30, used an instant-bonding glue to affix his right hand to the left hand of Maria Birchall, 25, when she visited him at Frankland Prison on Tuesday.

Miller's attorney, Peter Edwards, said his client wanted to publicize his claim of innocence of the robbery charge that led to a 15-year sentence at Liverpool Crown Court two years ago.

Edwards said Miller told him by telephone from the warden's office that the couple, having received the publicity they wanted, separated themselves within a few minutes using soap and water.

He said there was no intervention by prison officials, who had been talking to the couple since they glued themselves togther.

The lawyer said prison staff treated Miss Birchall "extremely well," making her as comfortable as possible during the protest and giving her train fare back to Liverpool when it was over.

U.S. labor leader dies

PARIS (AP) — Irving Brown, longtime European representative of the AFL-CIO, has died at the age of 77, the Paris office of the U.S. labor federation announced Wednesday.

Brown was buried Tuesday at the Montparnasse cemetery in southern Paris. The AFL-CIO office in Washington said he died of cancer at his home on Friday.

Brown, born in New York City, helped organize strikes at the General Motors Corp. and the Ford Motor Co. between 1936 and 1942, and was assigned to Europe in 1945.

He was known for his support for anti-communist causes, and was barred from France in 1956 for supporting Algerian rebels. He was allowed to return only after the North African country won its independence in 1962.

Brown was awarded the Presidential Medal of Freedom in October by then-President Reagan for helping lead the resistance to communist takeovers of trade unions in Western Europe after World War II.

Brown continued working until 1986, when he suffered a stroke. The AFL-CIO office said he was survived by his wife, Irene Brown, and a son, Robert.

Explosives investigated

JERUSALEM (NYT) — The Israeli army, air force and national police have begun an investigation to identify mysterious exploding devices that have killed and wounded several West Bank Palestinian children in the last two weeks, the army said.

A spokeswoman said Wednesday that the army had determined that one of the children, a 15-year-old boy, died after picking up an unexploded shell in a closed military area. But she said the army did not yet know what caused the other injuries.

Several of the wounded children said the explosives were thrown at them by soldiers. One girl said two men wearing skullcaps in a car threw an explosive at her. A member of Parliament, Dedi Zucker of the leftist Citizen's Rights Movement, wrote to Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin and demanded that the army examine the incidents.

Crewmen say they were ordered not to rescue refugees

SUBIC BAY NAVAL BASE, Philippines (AP) — The captain of a U.S. Navy vessel ordered crewmen to keep Vietnamese refugees from climbing up the side of the ship, witnesses testifed Wednesday at the skipper's court-martial.

Capt. Alexander Balian, former skipper of the USS Dubuque, is accused of abandoning more than 80 Vietnamese refugees who allegedly resorted to cannibalism to survive.

Ensign Allen Esperum testified that Balian, 48, of Los Angeles, ordered him "not to throw any life rings into the water" when they encountered the boatload of refugees on Jan. 9 about 230 miles north of the Philippine island of Palawan.

A seaman apprentice, Jay Allen Philippsen, said he was at the port side of the upper deck when he saw the refugee boat and three Vietnamese with life preservers swimming toward the U.S. ship.

"Esperum ordered me to shake up the monkeyline," he said, adding that two sailors assisted him.

"The refugee who climbed up the monkeyline appeared to have a lot of strength. He splashed in the water, submerged and came up and tried to grab the monkeyline again," Philippsen said.

Petty Officer Benjamin Torango and seaman apprentice Charles Walag, who were both at the ship's deck, also testified that they saw the refugees try to climb aboard but were turned back. Torango said he was told to stay away from the deck.

Petty Officer Reid Bushard, meanwhile, said he was at the ship's pilot house at that time and that he heard Lt. Dan Steakley, the navigational officer, giving orders "not to let any refugee aboard the ship."

Balian is accused of violating navy regulations by failing to render necessary assistance to the refugees. A decorated Vietnam war veteran, Balian was relieved of command in August after Vietnamese survivors reported the encounter to U.N. officials in the Philippines.

United Nations officials say 31 of the Vietnamese perished before the others were rescued by Filipino fishermen June 27. Survivors said they devoured five of the dead, including two who were murdered.

If convicted of all charges, Balian could be jailed for four and a half years, discharged dishonorably and ordered to forfeit all pay and allowances.

U.S. ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION AGENCY

HAZARDOUS WASTE MANAGEMENT PROGRAM. APPROVAL OF STATE HAZARDOUS WASTE PROGRAM REVISIONS FOR TEXAS: The State of Texas has applied for final authorization of revisions to its hazardous waste program under the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act (RCRA). Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) has reviewed the Texas application and has made a tentative determination, subject to public review and comment, and a legislative change which would allow Texas to implement the permitting portion of its program, that the Texas hazardous waste program revision satisfies all of the requirements necessary to qualify for final authorization. Thus, EPA proposes to approve the Texas hazardous waste program revisions. The Texas application for program revision is available for public review and comment. DATES: Comments on the Texas program revision application must be received by the close of business on March 10, 1989. A public hearing will be held on Tuesday 28, 1989, in Room 118 of the Stephen F. Austin Office Building at 1700 North Congress in Austin, Texas at 7 p.m. to allow interested members of the public to express their views on the program revision application. ADDRESSES: Copies of the Texas program revision application are available from 8:30 a.m. to 4:00 p.m. Monday through Friday at the following addresses for inspection and copying: Texas Water Commission (TWC), Library, Fifth Floor, Stephen F. Austin State Office Building, 1700 North Congress, Austin, Texas 78711, Phone (512) 463-7834; U.S. EPA Region VI, Library, 12th Floor, First Interstate Bank Tower at Fountain Place, 1445 Ross Avenue, Dallas, Texas 75202, Phone (214) 655-6444; and U.S. Headquarters, Library, PM 211A, 401 M Street S.W., Washington, D.C. 20460, Phone (202) 382-5926. Written comments should be sent to Ms. Lynn Prince, Grants and Authorization Section, RCRA Programs Branch (6H-HS), U.S. EPA Region VI, First Interstate Bank Tower at Fountain Place, Ross Avenue, Dallas, Texas 75202, Phone (214) 655-6760. FOR FURTHER INFORMATION CONTACT: Ms. Lynn Prince, Grants and Authorization Section, RCRA Programs Branch (6H-HS), U.S. EPA Region VI, First Interstate Bank Tower at Fountain Place, 1445 Ross Avenue, Dallas, Texas 75202, Phone (214) 655-6760. SUPPLEMENTARY INFORMATION: States with final authorization under Section 3006 (b) of the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act ("RCRA or "the Act") 42 U.S.C. 6926(b), have a continuing obligation to maintain a hazardous waste program that is equivalent to, consistent with, and no less stringent than the Federal hazardous waste program. In addition, as an interim measure, the Hazardous and Solid Waste Amendments of 1984 (Public Law No. 98-616, November 8, 1984, hereinafter "HSWA") allows States to revise their programs to become substantially equivalent instead of equivalent to RCRA requirements promulgated under HSWA authority. States exercising the latter option receive "interim authorization" for the HSWA requirements under Section 3006(g) of RCRA, 42 U.S.C. 6926(g), and later apply for final authorization for the HSWA requirements. Revisions to State hazardous waste programs are necessary when Federal or State statutory or regulatory authority is modified or when certain other changes occur. Most commonly, State program revisions are necessitated by changes to EPA's regulations in 40 CFR Parts 260-266 and 124 and 270. The State of Texas initially received final authorization in a notice published on December 12, 1984, and effective December 26, 1984. Texas received authorization for revisions to its program in notices published in the Federal Register on March 26, 1985, October 4, 1985, January 31, 1986, and December 18, 1986. On November 12, 1987, Texas submitted a program revision application for additional program approvals. Today, Texas is seeking approval of its program revision in accordance with §271.21(b) (4) for the non-HSWA revisions to the Federal RCRA program that were published in the Federal Register through July 3, 1986. These revisions include such changes as the interim status standards for landfills and the regulation of radioactive mixed waste. EPA has reviewed the Texas application, and has made a tentative determination, subject to public review and comment, and a legislative change which would allow Texas to implement the permitting portion of its program, that the Texas hazardous waste program revision satisfies all of the requirement necessary to qualify for final authorization. Consequently, EPA has made the tentative determination to grant Texas final authorization for the additional program modifications once the EPA concerns are satisfactorily addressed by the State. Texas passed Article 7 of the Texas Department of Commerce Act (Tex. Rev. Civ. Stat. Ann art. 4413(301) $7.00(a) (Vernon Supp. 1988)), in July of 1987, and it became effective September 1, 1987. Section 7.00(a) of the act is not specific to environmental permits, but applies to all permits issued by a Texas State Agency or political subdivision. It states in part: The approval, disapproval, disapproval, or conditional approval of an application for a permit shall be considered by each regulatory agency solely on the basis of... requirements in effect at the time the original application for the permit is filed. If a series of permits is required for a project, the...requirements in effect at the time the original application for the first permit in that series is filed, shall be the sole basis for consideration of all subsequent permits required for the completion of the project. Federal regulations require that EPA approve or disapprove RCRA State program revisions based on the requirements of 40 CFR Part 271 (40 CFR §271.21(b)(2)). One of these requirements, Section 271.14, concerns permitting. All State RCRA programs must have legal authority to implement the conditions in Section 270.32 (40 CFR §271.14(k)). Section 270.32(b)(1) states that RCRA permit shall include conditions necessary to achieve compliance with the regulations including the applicable requirements of the regulations (40 CFR §270.32(b)(1)). For a State-issued permit, an applicable requirement is a State statutory or regulatory requirement which takes effect prior to final administrative disposition of a permit (40 CFR §270.32(c)). Texas regulations are equivalent to these regulations. They require that any statutory or regulatory requirement which takes effect prior to final administrative disposition of a permit application shall be included in the permit (31 TAC §305.127(4)(b)). However, in July 1987, the Texas Department of Commerce Act was passed and, as noted above, it requires that State agencies use solely those regulations in effect at the time of permit filing when processing a permit. Because statutory authority prevails over regulatory authority, the provisions of 31 TAC §305.127(4)(b) may be considered to have been legislatively pre-empted. Therefore, Texas does not currently have equivalent regulations for 40 CFR §270.32, nor does Texas have the authority to carry out the conditions in 40 CFR §271.14. The regularly scheduled session of the Texas legislature began in January, 1989. The Governor of the State of Texas indicated by letter to the Regional Administrator of Region VI, dated August 22, 1988, that the executive branch of the State government is committed to taking steps to ensure that the legislature passes an amendment to the Department of Commerce Act which would exclude permitting under the RCRA program from the requirements of the act. When a legislative amendment becomes effective, Texas' program will satisfy all the requirements necessary for final authorization. EPA proposes that Texas be granted final authorization for its revised RCRA program once a satisfactory amendment to the Department of Commerce Act becomes effective. EPA will provide subsequent notice once the amendment is adopted by the legislature, and the Final Authorization will become effective only after the effective date of the amendment. If the amendment is not adopted by the end of the next regular legislative session in 1989, then EPA will commence proceedings under the regulations at 40 CFR Section 271.23(b) to withdraw approval of the authorized Texas program. The criteria for withdrawing approval of State programs is found in 40 CFR Section 271.22. The public may submit written comments on EPA's tentative determination until March 10, 1989. Copies of the Texas application for program revision are available for inspection and copying at the locations indicated in the "Addresses" section of this notice. The Final Determination will be published in the Federal Register. The Texas program revisions include changes to the base program as well as changes to the subsequent post-base program. The Texas Water Commission adopted permanent revisions in 31 TAC Chapters 281, 301, 335, and 337. The State's new regulations pick up changes in the Federal RCRA program through the July 3, 1986, publication of the Federal Register. The State of Texas has also picked up some of the provisions of HSWA although the State is not seeking HSWA authorization. For example, Texas does not seek authorization of the availability of information provisions contained in Section 3006(f) of RCRA. EPA can authorize those Texas rules which are more stringent than the Federal program. Since Texas' regulations include many more stringent "HSWA-type" requirements, EPA plans to authorize these regulations as more stringent provisions of the Texas authorized RCRA program. The "HSWA-type" requirements will not be authorized for HSWA purposes at this time, and EPA, therefore, will retain its responsibilities to carry out the HSWA provisions in Texas. The Texas provisions incorporating the Federal HSWA provisions concerning research, development, and demonstration permits for authorization cannot be considered as equivalent, or more stringent, RCRA (pre-HSWA) requirements. Although these new provisions are not as stringent as RCRA permitting requirements, they may be equivalent to, or more stringent than, the newer and more flexible permitting authorities for research, development and demonstration facilities that HSWA provides. EPA will consider these provisions when Texas applies for HSWA authorization. Texas has not applied, nor is it required at this time to apply, for authorization of these Federal HSWA requirements. Therefore, Subchapter K of 31 Texas Administrative Code Chapter 305(as amended July 14, 1987) is not being considered as part of the authorized State program. The State also submitted revisions to the Program Description, Attorney General's Statement and the Memorandum of Agreement between the State of Texas and EPA, Region VI. Three executed Memoranda of Understanding (MOUs) were also submitted. The first MOU is between the Railroad Commission of Texas, TWC and the Texas Department of Health (TDH). That document addresses the jurisdictional division among the agencies over wastes that result from activities associated with the exploration, development, and production of oil or gas and the refining of oil. The second MOU between TWC and TDH concerned the regulation and management of radioactive mixed wastes. The third MOU between TWC and the Attorney General of Texas concerned public participation in the State hazardous waste enforcement process. The State of Texas is not seeking authority over activities is not seeking authority over activities on Indian lands. AUTHORITY: This notice is issued under the authority of Sections 1006, 2002(a), and 3006 of the Solid Waste Disposal Act as amended, 42 U.S.C. 6905, 6912(a) and 6926.
