Jan. 6, 1932.

My dear Miss Abbott:

Your note in reply to my advertisement for movie aspirants interests me greatly.

I'm to be in Salem the 10th. May I see you in person? Then, perhaps we might decide on the definite future of a prospective movie star.

Sincerely yours,
—THOMAS BLANE.

Dear Mr. Blane:

I shall expect you at 4:30.

Then—you did like the photographs?

—LILLIAN ABBOTT.
1450 Broadway,
New York City,
Jan. 9, 1932.

Dear Miss Abbott:

Consider this a postscript to my first reply to your engaging letter: Your photograph reminds me of Norma Talmadge at her best.

You may expect me.

—THOMAS BLANE.

A lip-stick was nothing but a mark of a devil—a she-devil.

She used it to make her mouth like that of an Elinor Glyn heroine—like a crimson flower. So men would yearn to kiss her reddened lips—and wasn't that wrong?

Anyway Lillian Abbott said to her maid: "Nancy, get me my lip-stick. In the top drawer there."

Lillian Abbott had told her maid that twice before the prim, aproned little woman pulled open the drawer of the orchid taffeta dressing table. . . .

The best New Englanders did not use make-up—except for a little powder. Maybe the faintest touch of rouge for a party at night. Nancy had always worked for the best New England families, and she knew. This sub-deb Lillian was going to no party that afternoon. Some gentleman was calling for tea, that was all.

Lillian Abbott, with a cream lace dressing gown draped nonchalantly about her tall, slim body was busy before a mirror at the far side of her room.

She alternately dipped a small brush into a glass of water, pushed it over a cake of black mascara, and then touched it to the graceful fan of her eye lashes.

Apparently Lillian was pleased with the result. She was so pleased she did not notice that drops of black ran down her bare arm and made ugly black blots on her cream-lace dressing gown.

Certainly none of that scarlet perfumed salve would touch the thin, pale lips of Lillian's maid! The light fuzz about her compressed lips bristled with righteousness of her Puritan ancestors as well as the disgust of all the early Abbotts.

"Nancy, did you know that all actresses put on lip rouge with their little fingers?" asked Lillian, smoothing the lip-stick about the softness of her mouth.

"I beg your pardon, Miss Lillian, I know nothing of stage people."

Ignoring the defensive tone, Lillian said: "Stage folks have a grand time. Some day I'm going to be on the stage."

"Not if your mother has anything to do with it, Miss Lillian, you're not."

Lillian laughed as if she were exceedingly amused. Really, she wanted to see how her lips looked when she laughed. She watched her reflection in the long mirror.

"When the gentleman comes to tea—are you going to have that stuff on your face?" Nancy ventured.

"Yes—and I'm wearing my new orange velvet lounging pajamas."

"Why—Miss Lillian, your mother wouldn't—"

"No—she wouldn't approve. I know—but she won't know. She's gone to the historical society meeting at Swampscott today. She's far more interested in her forefathers than she is in her own daughter!"

Exasperation seemed to radiate even from the starched bow across the thin lips of the maid as she walked to Lillian's dressing room and brought out some lace and blush satin things on her arm with the colorful pajamas. She marched dutifully to Lillian's orchid taffeta bed and flung the wearables across the foot. She looked as if she challenged rebuke.

"Go see about tea now, Nancy, said Lillian, throwing off the few clothes she wore and advancing toward the fresh ones.

Nancy started for the door, looking embarrassed because of Lillian's lack of modesty.

"If I need you again I'll ring," Lillian said, pulling a wisp of a brassiere about her and catching up a cob web of a stepin.

"Oh, another thing, Nancy. Get father's bottle of cognac from the library. Put it with the tea things."

Nancy's shock became horror. She turned quickly: "Why—Miss Lillian—I—"

"Do as I say. That cognac, I tell you. What if my gentleman caller detests tea?"

As a matter of fact Thomas Blane did detest tea. But he liked Abbott Senior's cognac.

If it had not been for the cognac perhaps he would have stalled a little. But as he sat in the low chair—a real antique, with a high back and a very high price—there before the flickering fire of Lillian Abbott's sitting room he came out with his plan.

"It's lovely here," he said, taking in the old prints on the wall, the hook rugs, the brass andirons. "True colonial," he added. "But I understand how you feel—you want to get away."

It made Lillian radiant—having this handsome- man-of-the-world, with the touch of gray in his temples, the small mustache, which made him look somewhat like Paul Lucas—understand how she felt.

"When I saw your picture I knew that at last I'd found a girl who could be a success in pictures," he was saying, filling his glass with cognac for the third time.

Lillian's Puritan forefathers would have turned over in their graves had they known Lillian's thoughts right then: "If you were that impressed with my face," she thought, "you should see my legs." She was a little sorry that the bell-bottomed pajamas pants covered them. Maybe sometime she'd tell him that at finishing school the girls used to call her "Legs" Abbott just as movie fans now spoke of Marlene Dietrich as "Legs" Dietrich because her legs were so pretty—

CHAPTER II

Lillian Abbott, wise in the ways of her birthplace, would never have entertained one of the local swains at tea wearing those clinging orange velvet pajamas.

But Thomas Blane was not local talent. Thank goodness, he wasn't at all New England.

"I guess all you know about this town of Salem is that they used to burn witches here," she ventured in her brightest voice.

Thomas Blane still sat in the low chair with the high back. He was a little ill-at-ease, but Lillian did not detect that. He smiled, touched his mustache and said, "Well, about that?"

She was thinking of how much he looked like a movie actor. "You are a movie director, aren't you, Mr. Blane?" she asked.

He had not offered any information concerning himself since he arrived half hour ago. Lillian had been kept talking about herself. She had told him most of the things she had written in that first letter. She repeated them a bit shyly. But she kept reminding herself that she was not talking with one of those painfully stiff New Englanders. This handsome man was a New Yorker!

He didn't expect her to be so prudish. Why, he wasn't surprised to see a girl in lounging pajamas. Or with mascara on her eyes, or with lots of lip rouge. Lillian adored all of these, which are labeled "vices" in proper New England.

"Why—er—I have been. Been connected in various capacities with pictures for years. Now, what I had in mind for you is—er—to make a long story short is—"

Lillian could not hide her enthusiasm.

"Could you come to New York right away?" he asked.

"Why—I might."

"Well, in New York, you see, I have various contacts with people in the money. I mean—er—people of power, you understand."

She didn't quite understand but she smiled and nodded encouragement.

"I have a studio, where I instruct talented girls for the screen," he said, with an air of what could not be mistaken for anything but importance.

Lillian was impressed. "Yes—I"

"I'd like to have you in New York where I could train you for—well, say, a few weeks. Some trial pictures would be shot. You would be taught how to make up, and all the interesting little details of movie art—"

He talked like an advertisement in a motion picture magazine, Lillian thought.

"Well, you see, Mr. Blaine, my family never would consent to my going to New York—alone. Of course, I knew when I answered your advertisement that I was not following the wishes of my family—" she smiled and sipped her cup of tea.

"Naturally, I suspected that," he encouraged her. His gray eyes were simply contagious when he smiled, she realized. He didn't smile often. Perhaps it was a good thing, because Lillian forgot what she intended to say under the influence of his smile.

"Mr. Blaine, I want to live. I—I can't go on and on here in New England. I hate ancestors and historical societies. I can't bear the thought of growing up into one of those old colorless women with fuzzy faces and flat-heeled shoes that you see prowling around this part of the country."

Thomas Blane poured himself another glass of cognac and holding it, lounged back in his easy chair and gave himself over to a good laugh.

"Perhaps I do sound a bit silly," Lillian added, smiling, "to you. But I am serious."

"Of course, you're serious. You want to do things, go places, see the bright lights along the old stem—Broadway, don't you? Isn't that it?"

"Oh, Mr. Blane—that's it!"

He gulped half of his drink before he spoke again.

"Don't mind my asking you this so soon, but have you any money? I mean—a personal account?"

"Why—"

"I just mean that it will cost you a little something to live in New York, you know—while you're training at my studio—"

"And, I guess you can't afford to train a girl—even if you feel comparatively sure of her future—for nothing. I thought of that, Mr. Blane."

He smiled a little indulgently.

"Well I'd like to instruct you absolutely free—"

She felt her face flush under its make-up. That was the first thing he had said which could have been taken as personal. And Lillian took it.

"How long do you think it would be before I could be earning something—in pictures?" Lillian asked.

"Not long. Not long. With your background. With your looks. I'm sure you had dramatic training to some extent in school, didn't you?"

"Yes, some. I know how to speak a line—but as you said, I'll have to be taught proper picture make-up and, oh, a lot of things—but I'd love learning, I'm sure."

"I'm sure you'll be an apt pupil, too—" he lowered his eyes, thoughtfully. "Now, how will you plan to get away from home?"

"Just bundle and leave," she said. The very idea of sneaking away to a career thrilled her.

"Well, you'd have some trouble doing that, wouldn't you?"

"No—I wouldn't. I have sufficient clothes to last a year—provided the styles don't change completely, I have enough money saved out of my allowance to keep me going for—until I begin earning money, I guess.

"I could work—at something, if I got in difficult circumstances, couldn't I?"

Lillian was chattering away to this Thomas Blane, as if she had known him years, instead of minutes. He had a way of making her feel as if they were not at all strangers, but friends of long standing.

It was not what he said, but his easy way. The way he held her eyes when he spoke, and when she talked he seemed to interpret her meaning so clearly, so sympathetically.

"I'm sure you wouldn't get into difficult circumstances," he assured her. "It would be swell—I mean, it would be a big experience for you, getting away from home for awhile on your own. A girl feels she owes that sort of thing to herself. I know a man does."

"When should my training begin at your studio, Mr. Blaine?" Lillian shot straight to the point.

He drained his glass of cognac, then answered: "Would you like to meet me on the train tomorrow—ride right into New York with me tomorrow?"

Lillian tingled. She caught her breath and buried her teeth in her rouged lower lip. "—yes! Yes, tomorrow!"

"Swell!" he exclaimed, rising a little unsteadily from his chair. "You won't change your mind—now?"

Lillian stood up, too. She hoped he would leave before her mother returned.

"There's nobody here who could have heard, is there? I mean, that would wise up your folks?" he said, standing quite close to her and speaking in a low voice.

"Not a soul—my mother's gone to a historical society meeting. Father's in Boston. His office is there."

Mr. Blaine's hand reached for her arm and his fingers fastened around it eagerly. She was a little bit frightened, but more thrilled with the promising adventure—New York . . . Imagine walking down Fifth avenue on the arm of this handsome man . . .

"You are beautiful—" he said to her, his eyes holding hers.

She smiled. "You'd better—better not be here when my mother returns . . ." She didn't want anything to spoil their plans.

CHAPTER III

Lillian Abbott looked out of the train window into the snow-spattered sunshine of a Boston morning—and saw Thomas Blane standing on the platform of the station.

She wondered whether he had been looking for her long. She wondered whether there had been any doubt in his mind as to whether she would keep their appointment.

It had been his suggestion that they would not leave Salem together.

When the gossips of the town began to wonder why Lillian Abbott had left her fine old home there wouldn't be a soul, not one eye-witness, to say: "She boarded the train with a tall, dark man." There would be no one to say that she had gone with any one. They could just say she departed wearing her becoming white caracul beret and black coat, carrying her white muff. She had walked to the train that morning, too. She had left home immediately after her mother had gone to a committee meeting at the church.

Lillian left a note—not addressed to any one in particular. She had drawn every cent she had out of her savings account. She had a little over $2,000.

Knowing her New England, Lillian realized that were she seen boarding a train with a strange man, and not returning, there would be one conclusion at which those who knew her would arrive. But, thank goodness, they wouldn't have a clue.

At Boston Thomas Blane spied her through the window. His eyes lighted. He touched the brim of his gray hat. She could tell he was pleased at seeing her—and, yes, she thought a little surprised.

Then he was in the coach, there by her, with his hat in his hand.

"You charming thing!" he greeted her in a low voice, as if he didn't want any of the other passengers to hear. "I was so afraid you'd change your mind."

"Could you come to New York, right away?"

She held out her white-gloved hand and he pressed it as if in sheer relief.

Lillian did look charming in her trim little white hat, which hugged her black wavy hair and exposed her broad forehead. Her coat, too, was becoming, with its silver fox collar. A white gardenia snuggled down in the soft fur. And she wore white kid gloves, the kind with gauntlets which turned back over her coat sleeve.

Her face was flushed. And her dark eyes were sparkling.

"No—I haven't changed my mind—yet," she said.

A frown appeared between his handsome eyes as he sat down beside her.

"I tried to get a drawing room for us—but it seems I can't."

"Oh," said Lillian, "don't bother. We don't need one—this seat is comfortable."

"But not at all private," he answered, catching her eyes and smiling, raising one eyebrow a little higher than the other.

"Oh—no, it isn't," she answered, and felt a little silly. It wasn't at all the kind of answer she would have made to some of the fellows near her own age. But the fellows she knew would not be likely to say anything like that to her.

Thomas Blane seemed nervous. As soon as he could he sought the conductor for seats in the parlor car.

He carried Lillian's bag and lifted it into the baggage rack above them, and he took pains to turn the backs of their chairs to the aisle, as if he were trying to hide her from the eyes of the other passengers.

Lillian settled herself comfortably and smiled across at him. The train slid out of Boston, along the snowy trail leading to what Lillian believed to be the adventure of a lifetime. It was the trail which led from her quaint, quiet homeland, which she had long yearned to escape.

Blane was personable, and he fascinated Lillian. She observed that his clothes were well made, and that at all times he had a poise which remained unruffled.

Here was a man who could direct her. She felt it. He could make her a star. He stood for adventure. For big things. He wasn't the type her mother would approve. He was too worldly. And it was likely his ancestors could not be traced back to the Mayflower, as could the Abbotts'.

Now, in Salem that was something of great importance. But, in New York she imagined it was not the one talked of, evening after evening, between sets of chess and backgammon!

Lillian could not prevent the thought from scampering through her mind—that perhaps she was falling a little in love with this man.

What if she did? He was charming. She no longer felt he was a stranger. Queerer things had occurred, but of course, not in her set . . . that a girl answered an ad and the man who had advertised fell in love with her. . . .

Blane smiled back at Lillian.

It would be delightful, having him take her to the smart places in New York, she was thinking. To play where the real play boys and girls played.

Perhaps he soon would forget that she had told him she was only 18.

"What are you thinking?" he asked.

"About home—but not what you imagine," she answered. "I'm not sorry I've left. My mother won't even miss me for a couple of days—she's so busy with committees and historical societies, that sort of thing."

"But when she does miss you? Then what?"

"By that time I will have registered at some little hotel, under another name—and become another girl. I'll probably read in the papers something like this: 'Heiress Disappears From Wealthy Home.'"

"Heiress?" asked Blane, as if he didn't know.

"The newspapers no doubt will call me that."

"But why?"

"Well, my father is the Abbott who owns a chain of grocery stores over New England."

"Oh, really?" answered Blane, and to one more discerning than Lillian the tone of his voice would not have held conviction of news.

Thomas Blane's mind had gone through the entire situation, sifting each possibility for a hitch.

She really was an heiress. He'd checked up on that long before he decided to come to Salem. Any way he looked at it he was to make money by this little contract—inveigling the daughter of Cyrus Abbott into a career.

Some might call it blackmail—if he wrote that he could give him news of his daughter, her address, etc., for a sum. They couldn't prove anything really bad about him, though. He had taken care not to pay her fare, or leave the town with her. She was 18. She was her own woman.

"Let's go into the club car," he suggested, rising.

There Blane ordered white rock and produced a flask from his hip pocket.

Lillian put her hand over the top of her glass and shook her head.

"Oh, you'll get over that, all right," he said, pouring the liquor into his own. "In New York. When you get into the movies!"

"Will I?" she smiled.

"We're going to have a swell time together," he said.

"And going to work hard, too, aren't we?" she added. "I'm mad to get down to work. It must be great—to have definite things to do every day—instead of just sleepnig until noon, then lunching with some boring person, then having tea with some more boring person . . . and, to think, if I hadn't left I'd be doing that all the rest of my life—unless I took to historical societies and church committees as mother has—poor mother."

"You're too pretty to work too hard—" he said, reaching for her hand. "You're not the type to work. . . . Just look at your hands. . ."

CHAPTER IV

"Alma Reubens—that's of whom you remind me!" Blane exclaimed. "Blue-black hair, high rounded forehead—except your features are even more delicate. More beautiful. Say—girlie, when you smile!"

Lillian smiled then. She couldn't think of a thing to say. She smiled and threw her head back.

"I know you'll photograph like nobody's business. I know—when you're made up professionally."

"Will we start my training—say, tomorrow?" asked Lillian.

"Tomorrow?" Blane repeated. Then he drew his lips together as if he were going to whistle. He said, "Whew! That early. Say—you are anxious to get down to business."

Well, she had come away from home to get down to work. She wanted her career to start as soon as possible. Really, it had started. It started the very minute she wrote in answer to Thomas Blane's advertisement for movie types.

"Oh, I am. I really am, Mr. Blane!" she said, seriously.

"Have you ever been to New York before, girlie?" he asked, leaning over the arm of his club chair and looking at Lillian with new interest.

"Yes—about seven times. But always with mother. We'd stay at one of the hotels on Fifth avenue across from the park. We'd lunch there. Then we'd shop in the Fifties until matinee time. After the show we'd have tea in one of the places on Park avenue—and there! You couldn't call that really having been to New York, could you?"

"No—I couldn't. Say, girlie, are you sure you don't want a little drink before lunch?"

He brought out his flask again.

Lillian shook her head. "No—thank you. I—I guess this will sound silly to you—but I've never had a drink—"

"Not even a little one?"

"No—honestly. I haven't Mr. Blane."

He tried to pour some of the liquor into her glass.

"Well, why not? Gee, you don't know what you're missing.

"Nobody in our set drinks—I mean, girls."

"That's all cook-eyed. What's the matter with a little drink? Nothing. Lots of fun. Say—I'm glad you're so pretty."

"Oh, am I, though?"

"To me—you're a real knock-out."

Lillian laughed. He talked differently from the men she had known.

"I've never known any one like you, before, Mr. Blane—"

"Like me? What am I like now? Tell me, what do you think of me, anyway?"

She felt her face color as he leaned toward her, smiling.

"Oh—I think you're—that you're a grand person.

Lillian Abbott meant it, too.

"Tell me now—you're kidding."

"No, I'm not, Br. Blane, I—"

"Say—have you a sweetheart? Tell me that, Lillian."

It was the first time he'd called her Lillian. She liked the quick way he said it. It was as if she spelled it with but one "L" in the middle.

"Would you mind, though?" Her face stretched in a smile she couldn't control.

"Would I mind—if you had a sweetheart? Well, now—"

"I haven't, Mr. Blane—but if I did, though. That's what I mean?"

"Oh—of course, I'd mind. Say—girlie, I like you. I like you a lot."

She knew that the two highballs had made him a little more talkative than he might have been.

But she had always heard that when a man was intoxicated he often said aloud the things that he merely thought at other times.

"I guess you do—or you wouldn't have bothered with me like this."

"Like what?"

"Bringing me into New York with you like this. I think it's just grand—coming in with you . . ."

"Why—you're coming in yourself. I'm not bringing you." Blane was eager to establish the difference between her coming and his bringing her out of one state into another. There was considerable difference.

"You're 18. You're your own woman. You have your own money. You can do as you please. And, beatuiful, you pleased to come to New York. Get that?"

"Oh, I mean, that you let me come along with you—I think that was ever so kind of you, Mr. Blane."

"You're coming into New York girlie, on your own. You're not coming with me, and don't let anybody tell you different, see?"

Lillian looked at him for a second. She sensed that his manner had changed, but she didn't understand just what it was. He was being too emphatic. Perhaps liquor made a man that way. She became silent. He lighted a cigarst and inhaled the smoke. When he looked at her again she smiled.

He reached over and patted her gloved hand. "We're going to be good friends. Good friends. And everything's going to be 'jake.' Now, what do you say?"

Lillian felt easier, then. He was himself again. When he was in his present humor she felt that really he was her friend. She hoped he would not drink any more.

A white-coated waiter passed through the coach sounding the luncheon gong. And that reminded Lillian that she had left home without breakfast.

Lillian was the type of healthy girl who relished a hearty first meal, and usually did well by a breakfast tray proffering fresh fruit, hot cereal, toast, bacon, marmalade and a good sized pot of coffee.

In the diner that day she ordered a substantial luncheon, which made up for her missing breakfast.

Blane ate oysters on the half shell and an omelet. He drank three cups of black coffee.

When the waiter placed the check for their luncheon beside Blane's plate he pretended not to notice. Finally, after emptying some of his flask into the remainder of his last cup of coffee and draining it he reached for the check.

"Everything's going to be swell. Going to be jake, I tell you. Don't you ever let me see that little old worried look in your pretty brown eyes again," he said, putting on his best manner.

"I didn't have on a worried look, did I?" Lillian asked, determined not to admit, even to herself, that for a few minutes she had felt a little less certain.

"Yes—you did. But, listen to me, child, you're going to have the time of your life with Blane. Listen, why don't you begin right now calling me Blane. Will you? Huh? Let me hear you say it?"

"Blane," she said. "Like that?"

"Call me that again. I like to hear you. You little New England girls have a quainty way of saying things. Always like to hear New Englanders and Southerners talk. Will you say Blane for me, girlie?"

She said it. "I can see your little tongue a little point when you say it." He leaned over toward her, smiling indulgently, and the veins in his flushed forehead showed.

Lillian felt embarrassed. She didn't know why, exactly. She felt strange.

Blane had out his wallet, running his fingers into it and eyeing the check.

"Oh, I say—can you beat that? Now—how do you suppose—?"

"What's the matter?"

"Well, plenty, I'll say. I've simply lost a twenty!"

She could see that his wallet was empty.

"Oh, I'm sorry. Goodness, that's too bad—"

"I'll say it is. It's worse than that, why—I wonder would you mind—" His eyes shifted to the waiter standing near, and his voice dropped.

"Would it be asking too much if I—?"

"Oh, I'd be gald—ever so glad if you'd let me—" Lillian opened her purse and ran her fingers down into its depths as she spoke.

Around the huge roll of greenbacks she had drawn out of her savings account she had several twenties. She pulled off one and crumpled it across the table to Blane, holding it under her palm so no one could see.

"I'll hand it back when we get to the city,"— he said, taking it without any sign of embarrassment. He didn't thank her, but Lillian said: "Not at all. I'm glad to do that for you—just consider that the down payment on my training course."

"All right, then," he said.

CHAPTER V

The train would soon be in Grand Central station.

Every time Lillian thought of it she felt something catch about her heart. It really was exciting. It was thrilling. It was going to be the best fun she had ever imagined—being in New York on a glorious snow-spattered afternoon with this tall, handsome, talkative fellow—Thomas Blane.

They were back in the parlor car now, and Lillian was watching the dingy tenements glide by. She always thought of New York as glittering. All lights, and froth and mad music. Of nothing but town cars, bright-colored taxi cabs and smiling traffic policemen. Of nothing but smartly dressed women with stilted heels and slender bodies,—looking so different from those she saw walking past the shops in Salem!

She never had seen women even on Tremont street in Boston looking like those on Fifth avenue in New York. In New York you never saw a woman without lip-stick, or with low-heeled walking shoes as you did in Boston.

"I love New York!" she said in a low, vibrant voice. She said it as much to herself as she did to Thomas Blane.

"And you're not going to regret coming, are you?" he asked, seeking her eyes.

"Of course, I'm not. Why—I couldn't."

"That's the girl!"

Her eyes took him in. Not with a brief glance.

He made an impatient gesture. Maybe the confidence in her look penetrated him and that was not in his scheme.

"You understand now, Lillian. We are going to be friends. You must have faith in me. You must believe in me. I—I have great plans for you—and I know you're going to ring the bell."

"Oh, I understand—why, you're going to get me into the movies and no one will ever know who I really am. You're helping me to do something that I really want to do—you're helping me escape being, well—you understand why I've been so unhappy at home, don't you?"

"Yes, yes," a little impatient. "We went into all of that pretty thoroughly, didn't we?" Not waiting for her to say anything he went on hurriedly. "But I want to be sure you understand. You see, dear—pardon, I mean, you see, Lillian—I'm not guaranteeing anything. I couldn't. It's a chance. But, I believe you can make the grade. I think you have—well, I think you have everything. And, that's why I'm going to give you the chance of your sweet young life—right in old New York!"

"Oh, I understand, all right," she assured him.

A faint smile touched his lips. He smoothed one side of his light mustache with two fingers.

"I understand perfectly what I'm doing," Lillian said. "That's what I wrote to my family when I—"

"What? You wrote what—what did you write?" he asked, excitedly.

"Oh, nothing—nothing that would matter—"

"Why in h— why in the name of goodness did you have to write anything! I told you not to tell a soul that you were going—didn't I tell you that yesterday?"

Temper showed in his eyes. They gleamed. His brows pushed a line between them. Even his well-combed hair seemed to bristle to punctuate his quick words.

Lillians' voice was trembling. She mumbled.

"What did you write? Tell me—quickly!"

"I just wrote a little note—a little one, I—just said—" In her excitement she couldn't remember just what she did say.

"Did you say where you were going? Answer me?"

"I—"

"We might be trailed, why—you—you little—"

"No—no! I just wr—"

"Did you put my name in it? Did you leave any of those letters I wrote you?"

He was merciless. His questions came furiously. His face was flushed His hand moved jerkily. Lillian realized that he had been drinking those times he had excused himself and left her alone in the parlor car.

"No, no. No, I didn't—I'm positive, Mr. Blane," making an effort to get control of herself.

"Can't you remember what you wrote—what did you say?"

"Wait. Just a minute—I'll remember. I'll tell you all of the note . . ." She put her fingers to her temples and pressed them there. She took her eyes from him. He sat looking at her, as if he was electrified, as if he were waiting for some lever to be pulled and he would jump—at her.

Lillian remembered. She said: "I just said: 'Don't try to find me. I am going away. Don't worry. I have enough money to take care of me until I find a job. I've sent my clothes on ahead. You can not trace them through the postoffice because I sent them to another name in care of another postoffice in another town—" She posed trying to remember the rest.

"Yes—that's not all you said, is it?" he said, impatiently.

"No—wait, I'll remember," she closed her eyes a second, tightly. "Then I said—'I know what I'm doing.' No, that wasn't it. I said: 'I understand perfectly what I'm doing. I'm leaving here. I'm going out on my own.'"

She opened her eyes and looked at him. He asked, anxiously: "What else?"

"That's all—that's every word I wrote—honestly, Mr. Blane."

"Sure you didn't tell them any more than that?" he asked, but she could see he was relieved somewhat by her revelation.

"Oh, I'm positive," she answered anxiety in her tone. "You—you do believe me, don't you? Please, Mr. Blane?"

He forced a smile and pushed himself back in his chair, pretending an ease which he did not feel.

Her blue-black eyes glistened with tears, which she was ashamed for him to see. She turned them away from Blane, on to the gay-colored sign boards bordering the entrance to the tunnel which led into Grand Central station.

His hand slid across and closed over hers. But somehow Lillian, despite the tingling fascination Blane and his glorious plans held for her, could not respond to the pressure of his hand as it held her fingers.

She was arriving in the city of great adventure with ears in her eyes. She tried to smile. She couldn't just then.

"Oh, say now— forget it!" Blane said, giving her hand a series of nervous little pats. "I just wanted to be sure to avoid tangles—see? You understand. We don't want any trouble—do we? You see, girlie, I couldn't use any of that sort of thing right now—what with the depression and all."

Her gaze lifted gravely to his.

"You're too pretty to work hard."

He smiled and leaned nearer. "Savvy, pretty thing?"

But something inside of Lillian was all achy and tight. Her lips seem to set in a hard line, although she tried to make them smile for the fascinating Blane.

When they emerged from the lower level of Grand Central station into the auditorium of hurrying people and flickering lights Blane signaled a red cap and gave him Lillian's bag. "Taxi, boy," Blane said, and Lillian followed the red cap as Blane directed.

She hoped they would ride through Central park. It would be beautiful on a snowy afternoon. She thought, too, it would be fun tripping down Fifth avenue in the chilly snowy air.

But in the taxi Blane directed the driver to a quiet little hotel on a street leading off of Broadway. He didn't ask Lillian whether that suited her. He took for granted that what suited him was the thing.

Blane's arm rested on the back of the seat and as the taxi picked its way through the mid-afternoon traffic on Broadway Lillian jostled against the arm behind her.

Blane kept his profile toward her. It was a striking profile. "Sort of like Jack Barrymore's," Lillian thought, watching him out of the tail of her eyes, even while she took in the clutter and color of the street of theaters and crowds.

Once when the cab skidded a little about another car Lillian was shoved against her handsome companion. And his arm closed about her shoulders, and for a second fastened her to him.

"Oh—" she said, pushing him, "I—I'm sorry."

He turned toward her. "What's the matter, beautiful?" She was very close to his eyes. She thought they were almost hypnotic with their brightness.

She smiled and moved over into her corner of the cab.

He made a motion to catch his arm about her again, but she slipped from him. But he caught her hand and she did not take that from him.

It was so romantic, she thought. Her small, slim hand in its smart white glove looked so ineffectual held in his large hand, wearing a brown pigskin glove.

As if Blane were caught by the appeal his long fingers closed about her hand and he held it so tightly she winced.

He made a motion to hold her again, and Lillian was a little frightened when he made a motion to kiss her. He laughed.

The crowds moved along Broadway. No one seemed to notice that a man in a taxi was trying to kiss a very beautiful girl, who snuggled down in furs beside him.

If anybody on Broadway had noticed they certainly would not have blamed the man—they might have blamed him if he hadn't. That was the spirit of Broadway.

Blane caught Lillian's fingers to his lips, crushed them against his mouth, and for the moment seemed content with that.

The cab pulled up in front of a little hotel. Snow filtered over the discolored awning which led from the brass and glass entrance out to the curb.

"Here we are," said Blane.

It did not look very inviting to Lillian, but she was too excited to take much notice, or to say anything.

He helped her from the cab. A porter came out and took her bags, also the small one Blane had brought for himself.

STORM AREA BEGINS RECONSTRUCTION

MOST OF DEAD GIVEN BURIAL

Wind-Torn States Survey Tornado Damage

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., March 24. (AP)—With most of the 359 dead buried and hundreds of injured receiving treatment, government agencies and private citizens joined hands with the Red Cross today in rehabilitating the areas slashed by Monday night's tornadoes.

For the first time since the vicious winds cut their paths of destruction across Alabama, Georgia, Tennessee, Kentucky and South Carolina, there was time to begin an accounting of the physical damage wrought. The surveys showed a picture of desolation around the storm centers, with estimates of loss jumping into millions of dollars.

Alabama, where there were 298 known dead, was the center of relief activity, with another concentration in the ravaged district of North Georgia. That state counted 38 dead. Pulaski and nearby areas in Tennessee where 18 were killed also were being surveyed. Three were killed in South Carolina and two in Kentucky.

Gov. B. M. Miller of Alabama, making his own investigation of the destruction and suffering in this state pushed through the wind-torn districts.

Stone J. Crane, general field representative of the Red Cross, described deplorable conditions upon his return to Atlanta after a survey through Madison and Clark counties in Georgia. He found 56 houses demolished and 39 partly wrecked in a strip approximately 10 miles long and 400 yards wide.

One of the major problems presented by the disaster is housing for the homeless with conservative estimates of their number ranging from 7,000 upward in Alabama alone.

FARMER RELIEF BILL PROPOSED

Wheeler to Introduce Bill Within Next Few Days

NEW YORK, March 24. (AP)—Senator Burton K. Wheeler of Montana, declaring that "the people of the middle-west are on the verge of revolt," announced today he will introduce in congress within the next few days a farmers' reconstruction finance bill parallel to the measure recently enacted for the benefit of financial institutions.

He doesn't see, he said, "how there can be much of a fight against it, because it contains almost identically the same provisions the administration has made in its own bill for the relief of the financial institutions."

"Something has got to be done," said the Democratic senator from Montana.

The resolution branded as unfair "the inference that immediate payment would increase taxes, because the obligation is already outstanding . . . and provisions have been made for its retirement."

"The soldiers pay now asked for is 13 years past due, and immediate payment would release $95,641,000 in cash in the state of Texas alone, at a time when it is sorely needed," the resolution said.

The veterans recommended that "a saving could be had by deferring the payment of all public officials' salaries for the ensuing 13 years, or until such time as the soldiers have received their back pay."

OIL LEADS WAY TO NORMALCY

Demand for Leases Stronger In West Texas

Special to The Record News.

AUSTIN, March 24.—The oil industry is leading the way in Texas back to normal conditions, according to statements made in the industry-planning conference and the board of regents meeting on the University of Texas campus.

A stronger demand for oil leases in West Texas was reported to the regents and better prices in prospect for leases on the university lands. The result will be the early opening of more university lands to development, it was indicated.

Regent Robert L. Holliday, member of the leasing board, left Austin for an extended tour of university lands in view of the probably early tender of the lands for bids, to be awarded on the best royalty and bonus in addition to the basic rentals and royalty reservation.

During the industrial conference, the university research leaders were told that the oil debacle of last summer cost the state $5,000,000 in petroleum taxes. The taxes for 1930 were $6,500,000, while they were cut to $3,500,000 in 1931, the conference was told. This decline would have been far more severe had not prices been restored and the industry put back on a more orderly basis, speakers said.

"This March has been an important month in the petroleum industry," Donald C. Barton, Houston petroleum geologist and geophysicist, stated before the conference.

"It has seen an improvement in demand for products; and a general brightening of outlook that indicates the oil business is leading the way back toward a better norm for Texas industry."

Olton Woman Sues Power Firm for $37,500

OLTON, Texas, March 24. (AP)—Suit for $37,500 against the Texas Utilities company has been filed by Mrs. Jessie Dear of Olton, who alleges that she received personal injuries when she poured water on a fire started by the company's high line.

Mrs. Dear alleges that a fire was started on her property when a high line between Hart and Olton came in contact with a fence on her property. The petition claims that when she threw a bucket of water on the fence blaze she received a severe electrical shock, transmitted through the stream of water from the power line to the bucket in her hands. The fire later spread to her barn.

The woman claims permanent physical injury and property damage. The suit has been transferred to Amarillo.

Dumas Attorney Only Man Eligible for Post

DUMAS, Texas, March 24. (AP)—There is a least one elective county officer in Texas who is totally unconcerned about not being re-elected. This official is the county attorney of Moore county, who is the only man in the entire county of some 2,300 souls eligible, under the law, to hold the office.

H. G. Bennett, who is the incumbent and candidate for re-election did not decided if he would spend the money to announce his candidacy or not. If he does it will be merely a matter of good will. It happens that he is the only licensed attorney in Moore county and that it would be impossible for another attorney to move in in time to qualify.

Negro Files Appeal In Ice Pick Slaying

AUSTIN, March 24. (AP)—Robert Cubit, negro, convicted in Caldwell county and given the death penalty for the slaying of G. W. Mann, keeper of a Hamburger stand near Luling, appealed to the court of criminal appeals today.

Mann was stabbed to death with an ice pick. Louis Rogers and Willie Ray Autrey, also negroes, were indicted for the slaying with Cubit. Robbery was the motive for the killing, the state contended.

OIL OFFICIALS FACE CHARGES

M-K-T Pipeline Promoters Indicted for Fraud

CHICAGO, March 24. (US)—Frank P. Parish, dubbed "the boy wizard of finance," and three other officials of the $67,000,000 Missouri-Kansas Pipe Line company and its subsidiaries were indicted by a federal grand jury here today on charges of using the mails to defraud.

Besides Parish, the president, those named were S. J. Maddin, vice president; Ralph G. Crandall, vice president, and James F. McMannon, director.

The indictment charges false statements regarding the cash assets of the company in circulars, advertising matter and financial statements.

The statement also is made that a Francis I. DuPont of Wilmington, Del., was in January, 1930, the owner of about 3,000 shares of the company's stock and that representations were made by the company officials that the E. I. DuPont de Nemours company was heavily interested in the pipe line company.

This was done, according to the indictment, in the face of repeated objections of the DuPont company.

The stock manipulations of the pipe line company have been under investigation by the government for about a year and presentation of the case to the grand jury has been going on for nearly a month.

Parish, formerly of Kansas City and Chicago, more lately has made his headquarters in New York. The stock transactions of the pipe line company were handled by a subsidiary, Frank P. Parish & Co. This firm sold $50,000,000 worth of stock at up to $40 a share, but the price on the New York curb exchange had dropped to around a dollar.

Federal Judge Charles E. Woodward recently dismissed a receivership petition against the company on the ground the court was without jurisdiction.

The order was established by George Washington during the revolutionary war and was revived on the 200th anniversary of his birth.

Easter Festivities

The weeks preceding and following Easter are ideally suited for spring time entertaining and the clever hostess will utilize the Easter color scheme of yellow, lavender or pale pink in planning her menus and table decorations.

Nothing is more appropriate as a centerpiece for an Easter table with a yellow scheme than jonquils and fern. Mixed spring flowers and Easter lilies as well as a scene arranged with chickens, ducks, hens, bunnies, grass and colored eggs may be used.

The menu should carry a "breath of spring" and be as colorful as possible. The heavy foods that are served during the winter months should be discarded. The dessert should be light, evanescent, almost ephemeral in quality, and therefore dishes composed in part of whipped cream, or the feathery, foamy whites of eggs or something equally alluring, are in order.

The salad, too, must partake of the joyousness and lightsomeness of the season. French dressing or some of its many variations is more appropriate for Easter salads than the heavy mayonnaise or whipped cream dressing. The latter may be used, however, at luncheons or suppers if only a few dishes are offered. A salad course is not obligatory for a company breakfast, neither is it forbidden, so you may or may include it at your pleasure.

The following recipes meet the above requirements and may be used for many occasions during the spring months:

Honey and Nut Bran Muffins
One-half cupful honey.
One cupful whole wheat flour.
One teaspoonful soda.
One-half teaspoonful salt.
One teaspoonful baking powder.
Two cupfuls bran.
One tablespoonful melted butter.
One and one-half cupfuls sour milk.
Three-fourths cupful finely chopped walnut meats.

Sift together the flour, baking powder, soda and salt and mix them with the bran. Add the other ingredients and bake in greased gem tins for 25 or 30 minutes in a 400 degrees Fahrenheit oven.

Cocktails of Apricots-Greengages

The color note for Easter is struck in this opening course. Use canned apricots and greengages, cut in small pieces, garnish with crumbled dried tansy (one of the Easter herbs) and pour over all a lemon syrup. A slight heightening of the green and yellow by the use of vegetable colors will be an improvement and the cocktail will be lovely served in gold-rimmed glasses on gold paper mats. Tarragon may be substituted for tansy, or even bright green dried parsley will do.

Asparagus in Sauce Poulette

Pour sauce poulette over hot cooked asparagus and serve at once. Sauce poulette is made of three tablespoonfuls butter, three tablespoonfuls flour, one cup chicken stock and one-half cup cream. Season to taste with pepper and salt and just before serving add yolks two eggs and one-half tablespoonful lemon juice.

Dressed Tangerines on Green Lettuce

Divide the tangerines into sections and skin each with a pair of sharp scissors. Serve with French dressing on green lettuce nests.

Bird's Egg Salad

Mash cream or cottage cheese, mix with chopped nut meats and moisten with French or mayonnaise salad dressing; shape like robin's eggs, using one teaspoonful of cheese for each egg. Dry parsley in the warming oven and rub between the fingers until very fine. Sprinkle the eggs with parsley, arrange in nests of lettuce leaves and garnish with radish flowers.

Sunshine Cream

Dissolve a tablespoonful of granulated gelatin in cold water for a few minutes; meantime boil together till a thread is formed, a cupful of granulated sugar and half a cupful of water. Pour syrup over the stiffly beaten yolks of three eggs and add the gelatin and the juice of an orange. Whip till almost congealed, then beat in the stiffly whipped egg whites and pile in tall slender glasses. Garnish with whipped cream which may be tinted green and strips of candied pineapple.

Hot Cross Buns

Scald one cupful of milk with half a teaspoonful of salt and a quarter of a cupful of sugar. Cool to lukewarm. Dissolve a yeast cake in a quarter of a cupful of warm hot water and add to the milk. Whip in two cupfuls sifted flour, beat well and set aside in a warm place to rise for two hours, or until very light and spongy. Then fold in three tablespoonfuls of melted butter, two well-beaten eggs, a quarter of a teaspoonful each of cinnamon and nutmeg, a quarter of a cupful of small seedless raisins, two tablespoonfuls of candied citron shaved fine, and enough flour to make the dough stiff enough to handle. Add the flour gradually, keeping the dough soft, knead well and let rise again. When double in bulk, form into round buns about two inches in diameter, place on buttered baking pans and leave to rise once more. When light, press or cut the form of a cross on each bun. Bake in a hot oven 15 to 20 minutes. When finished brush over the top with a mixture of one tablespoonful of cream and one of granulated sugar. When cool, fill the cross with plain white confectioners icing.

Hot cross buns made with baking powder are less trouble and very good. Sift together three cupfuls of flour and six teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one teaspoonful of salt, a quarter of a teaspoonful each of cinnamon and nutmeg, add a quarter of a cupful of sugar, mix well and rub in a quarter of a cupful of butter. Add fruit as in previous recipe, moisten with one to one and a quarter cupfuls of milk, make into buns and place on a buttered pan. Make a cross in the top of each bun and bake in a hot oven 425 degrees Fahrenheit. Finish by brushing with cream and sugar as in previous recipe.

Grapefruit With Mint

Cut three grapefruit in two and remove seeds and membrane. Sprinkle pulp of each half with one cream peppermint broken in pieces, and chill. Serve on green glass plates, if you are fortunate enough to own them, and garnish with mint leaves.

Baked Ham, Apricot and Cherry Border

Select a nicely shaped ham, scrub it thoroughly, soak overnight in cold water. Place over the fire to boil slowly in water which has been made slightly acid with cider vinegar. Cook very gently until tender, then cool in the liquid. Drain, remove skin and trim neatly, score the ham all over its fat surface in squares and insert a clove in each square. Brush with beaten egg, sprinkle well with bread crumbs mixed with brown sugar and paprika and place in a hot oven for 30 minutes. Then place large canned apricots, each with a maraschino cherry in its cavity, around the ham and continue baking for 15 or 20 minutes, or till nicely browned. Remove to a warm platter, arrange the apricots around the edge, garnish with cress. Make gravy from the fat in the pan, using the apricot juice diluted with an equal quantity of water for the liquid.

Buttered Carrots With Green Pea Sauce
Four cupfuls diced carrots.
One and one-half cupfuls medium white sauce.
One cupful canned or fresh cooked peas.

Prepare, cook and then dice carrots. Drain. Add peas to white sauce and pour over the seasoned carrots.

Medium White Sauce
Two cupfuls milk.
Four tablespoonfuls flour.
Four tablespoonfuls fat.
One-half teaspoonful salt.
Dash of pepper.

Melt the fat in the top of a double boiler and add the flour, salt and pepper. Blend thoroughly. Pour in the cold milk and stir constantly until thick. Cover and cook without stirring 20 minutes. Serves six. Makes about two cups.

Spinach Molds

Wash four pounds spinach and boil 25 minutes in one-half pint of water. Drain and chop very fine. Then add two tablespoonfuls butter, two tablespoonfuls cream, one tablespoonful grated onion, and salt and pepper to taste. Pack in individual molds. Place molds in a pan of water and bake for 15 minutes in a moderate oven (375 degrees F.). Turn out of molds on a platter and wrap each with one or two strips of broiled bacon. Garnish with parsley and deviled eggs, cut in quarters.

Chiffonade Dressing
One teaspoonful salt.
One teaspoonful sugar.
One-fourth teaspoonful paprika.
Two tablespoonfuls chopped onion.
Three tablespoonfuls vinegar.
Three-fourths cupfuls olive oil.
Two tablespoonfuls chopped parsley.
One hard cooked egg, chopped.
One-fourth cupful chopped cooked beets, well drained.

Mix the salt, sugar and paprika

20 YEARS OF ILL HEALTH

Then Mrs. Duke Discovered Kellogg's ALL-BRAN

Of her own accord, Mrs. Duke sat down and wrote us a glowing tribute to Kellogg's ALL-BRAN:

"I have been constipated all my life, which has been about 20 years, up until last year when I started eating your ALL-BRAN. Since I have been eating it, people tell me I am looking better, and I am sure that I feel a great deal better."—Mrs. L. W. Duke, 210 Hardin Ave., College Park, Ga.

Constipation is usually caused by lack of two things in the diet: "Bulk" to exercise the intestines; Vitamin B to help give them tone. Kellogg's ALL-BRAN provides both of these dietary necessities, as well as iron for the blood.

Within the body, the "bulk" in ALL-BRAN forms a soft mass, which gently clears the intestines of wastes.

How much more natural it is to enjoy this delicious cereal than to risk taking pills and drugs—so often harmful.

Just eat two tablespoonfuls daily—serious cases with every meal—for most types of constipation. ALL-BRAN is not habit-forming. If your intestinal trouble is not relieved this way, see your doctor.

Sold in the red-and-green packages. Made by Kellogg in Battle Creek.

MASONS HOLD ANNUAL FEAST

Maundy Thursday Services Held Here

Ed Peterson, 32nd degree Mason, presented a historical sketch of Scottish Rite Masonry, in the feature address of the local Maundy Thursday celebration of the Wichita Valley Scottish Rite club at Ansley's cafe Thursday evening.

"Scottish Rite masonry was founded in 1786 by Dr. Frederick Dalcho. The supreme council of the 33rd degrees was established at Charleston, S. C., and received authority of what is known as the 'French constitution.' The constitution recites, 'The supreme council will exercise all Masonic sovereign powers of which His Majesty Frederick II king of Prussia was possessed,'" Mr. Peterson said.

First Council

"It was not until 1802 that the whole number of inspectors general was approved. The first council of the ancient and accepted Scottish Rites, while now exercising authority only over a portion of the United States, is recognized as the mother council of the world. It is to this body that all Scottish Rite masons in Texas allege," Mr. Peterson added. Mr. Peterson is vice president of the club and a past potentate of Maskat temple.

Rabbi Salvador J. Schwab, 32nd degree and club president, was toastmaster for the celebration. Dr. Bruce Corbin, 32nd degree, pastor of the Grace Methodist church, delivered the invocation. Toasts were offered by W. B. Hamilton, Guy Rogers, G. W. L. Spencer, Sydney A. Gaines, K. C. C. H., Al Ellis, K. C. C. H., and club secretary. Ed Peterson, all 32nd degree Masons and by W. H. Caldwell, 14th degree.

Toast to Departed

Guy Rogers, past potentate of Maskat temple, stated that 333,000 Scottish Rite Masons were now active in the world and with consistories all over the world with the mother council in America. Sydney A. Gaines, potentate of Maskat temple, spoke of Sovereign Grand Inspector General Sam P. Cochran, 33rd degree, who is head of Scottish Rite Masonry in Texas. Mr. Cochran, Dallas, who has been an active Mason for over 50 years, has a record probably unequaled by any other Mason, in that he has filled every office in Masonry from the lowest in the Blue Lodge to the 33rd degree, Mr. Gaines said.

Message from Mr. Cochran and Wise Master Chas. D. Turner of the Lone Star chapter Knights Rose Croix Valley of Dallas, were read by Mr. Ellis. The messages brought greetings to the local club on the Maundy Thursday occasion. Mr. Ellis discussed the club's work in Wichita Falls and emphasized the charity phase of the activity.

A silent toast to the memory of club members who died during the past year closed the program. The silent toast honored the memory of L. P. Hammond, Philip Meyer, A. H. Smith and Mason Wilson, all 32nd degree Masons.

REPLANT AFTER FREEZE

NACOGDOCHES, Texas, March 24. (AP)—The recent freeze gave a decided set-back to the truck industry but no means discouraged the growers of this section. They are taking a new hold and going into the business on a larger scale than contemplated before the freeze. Tomato seed has been ordered, land re-plowed and prepared and a general feeling of optimism prevails.

Annual Program of Music Pupils Tonight

Members of the Wichita Falls High school music department, including boys and girls glee clubs, choruses, the orchestra and individual numbers, under the direction of Mrs. Hermione Stewart Vaughan, head of the music department, will present their annual gala concert at the Memorial auditorium Friday evening.

Admission to the concert will be free, though a silver offering will be taken to aid in sending some of the organizations of the music department to the tri-state tournament to be held at Amarillo in April.

Other numbers, according to information given by Mrs. Vaughan, include "Bridal Rose Overture," by a mixed quartet, a chorus of 125 girls, violin solos by Arthur Davis, the girls' glee club, the high school quartet, a boys' chorus and a grand finale by the combined organizations.

Your stomach deserves this good turn

Cook with CRISCO the fat that's digestible!

Crisco is not a "loaded" fat

A lot of people in this world aren't as happy as they should be—simply because they don't do right by their stomachs.

Remember—there's a big difference in fats. And you're better off when you cook with Crisco. Crisco is pure and digestible.

Crisco is not a "loaded" fat.

Not a single bit of hard, indigestible fat is mixed into Crisco to thicken it and make it solid. Crisco is free of this "loading."

Just pure wholesome oils, and nothing else, are turned into Crisco by Crisco's own secret process! Pure. Not "loaded"! Crisco is digestible.

Your eyes will tell you the truth about Crisco. It's as creamy as whipped cream. Your taste will tell the truth about Crisco. It's sweet and fresh. And it stays that way. Keep a big can of Crisco in your kitchen for weeks and you'll see no change. It never turns "smelly." Crisco stays digestible.

If you want to make a day start out with sunshine—try Apple Griddle Cakes (see recipe). They're wonderful. Crisco's in them—and Crisco fries them to a golden turn. That's why you can be sure they'll be digestible.

APPLE GRIDDLE CAKES

2 cups bread broken in pieces
2 cups hot milk
2 eggs, separated
1 tablespoon Crisco
1 cup chopped ripe apples
1 cup flour
2 teaspoons baking powder
1 tablespoon sugar
½ teaspoon salt
3 tablespoons Crisco, for frying

Soak bread and milk together over-night or until soft. Then rub to a paste. Add Crisco, sugar and salt, then egg yolks beaten until light. Add flour and baking powder sifted together. Fold in the stiffly beaten egg whites. Stir apples into the batter with a fork. Drop by spoonfuls on Crisco'd griddle or skillet. Fry in sweet, digestible Crisco that makes fried foods digestible. Fry until partly done and then turn and finish cooking. Serve hot with butter and sugar or syrup.

Crisco is the registered trade-mark of a shortening manufactured by the Procter & Gamble Co.

Why does CRISCO digest easily? It is not a "loaded" fat

The Rambler's Corner

By FRED THOMPSON

Art's Little Brother

Scoop Scharein's 18-year-old brother, George Scharein, is on trial as a shortstop in the camp of the Galveston Pirates.

For the Scharein family's sake we naturally hope young George burns up the Texas league this year; but purely from a Spudder standpoint we hope George doesn't get as good as his older brother.

Another Record

As it now stands, the Spudder outfield would be hard to match anywhere in organized baseball.

Each outfielder—Garms, Badgro and Fuss—bats left-handed and throws right-handed.

Which Reminds Me

That in this town we have a Whitey Badgro and also a Whitey Grovo, and both are athletes, although one of them has turned promoter.

Safety for Umpires

From St. Louis comes a yarn about Bob Kober, who will call plays in the Texas league this season, and who is glad they ride trains down in this sector.

In Kober's own words, here's why:

"A good many leagues have taken up buses and autos as a means of transportation," says Kober, "and it's a good move in some ways. But for umpires, give me the choo-choos.

"My partner and I tried the gasoline trail over in the Three-I league last season, and we were beginning to get a big kick out of it and think it was the one big idea until something happened.

"We were scheduled to make a move at the close of a series, and wishing to get an early start, we packed up at the hotel and loaded our flivver, driving to the ball park and figuring to jump right out on the highway after the game.

"Unfortunately, it was one of those bad afternoons for umpires and we had several close plays which stirred the fans. They were pretty hostile, but we got through without any bumps or bruises.

"Rushing to the dressing room after the game, we made a quick change and hurried to our little chariot. Right then and there I was cured of traveling by auto.

"The fans had spotted our car in the parking lot and taken their revenge. There wasn't a pound of air in any of the tires, and when we tried to start, we found our ignition disconnected and all jimmed up. We got out of town next morning.

"Yes, the auto is all right for travel for some folks, but for umpires—well, I'm glad I'm going to Texas, where the jumps are longer and the railroads don't have pneumatic wheels."

Tough on Fowler

And that brings to mind the bad luck Leon Fowler ran into the other day. The slugging Goree outfielder parked his car near the player's gate as usual, but on returning after the daily drill with the Spudders found that a wheel had been stolen. The car had been jacked up and pilfered in broad daylight.

Too Bad, Too Bad

Sitting among the railbirds the other day we heard one veteran Spudder patron describe the days of yesteryear when the old grandstand stood at Athletic park. The grandstand proper then was along the first base line. Bleachers were along the third base line and approximately to the rear of home plate.

You could see the game better from a bleacher seat, naturally. This fan, therefore, bought bleacher seats all season while most everyone else sat along fashion row in the grandstand, and paid for it.

But one day the grandstand burned to the ground. And when they rebuilt it, the clubowners put the grandstand where the old bleachers stood, and thereafter the fan had to pay grandstand prices for his good seat.

Because of which, of course, he beefed, and beefed, and beefed; as who wouldn't?

About Doyle Taylor

Doyle Taylor, the southpaw flinger who was with us last year during the training period, should do well this season if he retains the punch that carried him through last season. With a club in the Washington state league, Taylor won nine and lost one, but made the mistake of pulling the strong-arm stuff. He pitched two games on successive days, one July 4 and another July 5, and won both; but he developed a sore arm thereafter.

REGULARS WIN WILD CONTEST

Isekite and Smiley Victims Of Batting Orgy

Manager Hank Severeid's gang of youngsters saw real pitching in a camp game for the first time yesterday, and it made just all the difference in the world.

The young hopefuls, who had been slam-banging so-so hurling all over the lot in past contests, were called upon to brave the corking delivery of Lester White and Tot Pressnell for six innings yesterday, and Harry Saller, young mound recruit who is showing much improvement, did just as good a job as his predecessors in the last three frames.

The result was the Walker Taylors, a team made up almost entirely of rookies, collected only six scattered hits and never scored a run, while the Tommy Heaths, mainly regulars, bagged 15 hits and scored 16 runs.

Regulars Hit Hard

It was a wild affting contest on the part of the regulars, who Wednesday had not looked so good against young pitching. The regulars, or the Heaths, whichever you want to call 'em, plastered about everything the left-hander, Floyd Isekite, and the right-hander, Frank Smiley, had to offer. Isekite was particularly off color. His control was bad and in the fifth he yielded five runs.

Ferrell opened the game for the youngsters. Young Marvin, in contrast to his usual wildness, had pretty fair control, and yielded not a hit to the regulars the first three innings, although he walked three. After Ferrell's stay on the mound, the slaughter of Isekite and Smiley began.

It was a regulation nine-inning contest, but there were several things about it that were not regulation. Art Scharein, for instance, started at second for the Taylors but after two innings was ordered to play short for the Heaths when Harlan Clift, Heath's shortfielder, was forced out with a sore arm. Later Treabor Douglas, who started in center for the Heaths and who was replaced later by Hainline, reentered the game to bat for Smiley in the ninth. But these little irregularities are permitted in camp games.

Powell Injured

James Powell, catcher and "talk-'em-up" artist who has kept the railbirds laughing and the players hustling with his energetic jaw-wagging since camp opened, was painfully injured yesterday. He was hit by a ball—right on the jaw!

Three stitches closed the wound, and Powell was expected back in uniform shortly.

Severeid said he was uncertain about plans for today, but that he probably would not order another intra-squad game in view of the opening exhibition game of the season here Saturday with the Texas Christian university Horned Frogs.

On Sunday the Spudders play the Sullivan's Grocery team of the City league.

Yesterday's camp game was preceded by a lengthy batting practice.

Training Camp Chatter

GALVESTON BUCS

GALVESTON, March 24. (AP)—The Ryes triumphed over the Pratts again today in a Buccaneer intra-camp game, 9 to 6, to take a lead of seven to one in the series. The base running of Harvey Ballew, converted third baseman featured the game with the Indian stealing second twice and third once during the contest. Ballew also hit safely twice out of four trips to the plate.

YANKS 4, CARDS 3

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla., March 24. (AP)—With Babe Ruth hitting his first home run of the spring exhibition season, the New York Yankees nosed out a 4 to 3 victory over the world champion St. Louis Cardinals today. The triumph was the Yanks' second over the Cards and their eighth in 11 games.

Ruth hit his circuit drive off Bill Hallahan with Myril Hoag on base.

BROWNS WIN

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla., March 24. (AP)—The St. Louis Browns found the pitching of Mike Janesko and O'Grady of the House of David, harder to solve than they expected but the St. Louisans defeated the Benton Harbor, Mich., team, 5 to 2, in a practice game here today.

FORT WORTH CATS

FORT WORTH, March 24. (AP)—Homeward bound after a month's training in Texas, the Chicago White Sox will drop in at La Grave field tomorrow for a joust with the Panthers and this city's first sample of 1932 major league baseball. Manager Lew Fonseca is bringing his White Sox here for two games after breaking camp today at San Antonio.

Pat Moulton and Bill Terry have been named by Manager McCabe to work against the big leaguers.

BLUES 5, SHIPPERS 3

BEAUMONT, Texas, March 24. (AP)—Scoring three runs in the ninth after two were down, the Kansas City Blues made a clean sweep of their exhibition series with the Exporters, winning the final by the score of 5-3. Tomorrow they leave for Shreveport, where they are scheduled Saturday, Sunday and Monday.

CLEVELAND WINS

GULFPORT, Miss., March 24. (AP)—Johnny Hodapp and Earl Averill each pounded out four hits here today to help the Cleveland Indians win an exhibition baseball game from the Baltimore Orioles, 10-2.

DALLAS STEERS

DALLAS, March 24. (AP)—An intra-club practice game featured training camp activities of the Dallas Steers here today. Grady Atkins, veteran right-hander, who pitched for the losers, showed need of more work. He was batted severely, Tom Nash sending one ball over the fence for a homer. Other pitchers were Archie Wise, rookie right-hander from Waxahachie, George Hutto, left-hander from Brownsboro, and Spec Jones, another Waxahachie right-hander. The pitchers face plenty of work until the opening of the Texas league season, being scheduled to meet the St. Paul Saints, the Chicago White Sox, Rochester and Columbus.

INDIANS 3, U. T. 2

AUSTIN, March 24. (AP)—The San Antonio Indians of the Texas league defeated the University of Texas Longhorns 3-2 in a hard game at Clark field today.

The two teams were tied at the start of the ninth inning at 2-all but San Antonio forced over a run, the runner being declared safe in a close decision at home plate that caused supporters of the university nine to jeer the umpire.

SHREVEPORT SPORTS

SHREVEPORT, La., March 24. (AP)—Bolton, a left-handed pitcher who formerly played in the American association, reported to the Shreveport club today. Walsh, a husky semi-pro, and Hankins, from the Kansas City club, also arrived to add strength to the pitching department.

The Sports held long workouts both morning and afternoon. Tomorrow they will go to Ruston for a game with Louisiana Polytech.

NEWARK 5, PHILS 3

WINTER HAVEN, Fla., March 24. (AP)—The Newark Internationals, who have been treating big league clubs rough this spring, defeated the Philadelphia nationals today, 5 to 3.

HOUSTON BUFFS

HOUSTON, March 24. (AP)—Eight Houston rookies today left for Mobile, where they will play for Manager Clay Hopper's Southwestern league club, which is controlled by the St. Louis Cardinals. The rookies are Perez, Gaffney, De Hoog, Sanders, pitchers; Barton, Batterton, Mooney, infielders; Gildig, outfielder.

Dissenger, Dillon and Savidge are other young pitchers sent to Mobile from the Rochester and Columbus clubs.

Vernon Wins Track Meet From Crowell

Special to The Record News.

CROWELL, Texas, March 24.—By winning the last event, the mile relay, Vernon High school came from behind a two-point lead in a track meet here Tuesday afternoon to defeat Crowell High school, 69.5 to 66.5.

Dick Todd of Crowell was high point man with 17 points. Thompson of Vernon was next with 13.25 points. Out of the 13 events Crowell and Vernon tied for one first place and scored six first places each.

Last week Crowell won a three-way track meet at Vernon by defeating the Lions, 62 to 60. Oklaunion, the third team, scored 21 points.

CARDS FAVORED TO WIN AGAIN

Giants Most Likely Threat If Flock Falters

By BRIAN BELL

LOS ANGELES, March 24. (AP)—It's a good rule in any sport to support the champion until he, she or it, is defeated, so the St. Louis Cardinals will start the 1932 National league season a favorite to repeat. However, it may be a two-horse race before the last putout is made.

Old Sergeant Street's Red Birds seem just as good now as they were a year ago and they were good enough then to win a pennant and move right on and capture the world series.

Club Well Fortified

Burleigh Grimes, the gnarled oak of the pitching mound, has moved on in his tour of the league, but the Cardinals have some youngsters, notably Tex Carleton and Dizzy Dean, to take his place in the rifle pits. In every department the Cards seem well fortified and if the baseball fences need fixing later on there are hundreds of players on St. Louis farms ready to rally round.

If the Cardinals are to be challenged, the New York Giants seem to be the ones to do it. With a team in as good physical condition as any he has had in the spring, Manager John J. McGraw thinks, with a little luck, he will have something to say about the ultimate disposition of the championship.

Only One Newcomer

The Giants will start with a recruit outfielder, Leonard Koenecke, as the only new face in the lineup. The Giants were good enough last year as long as they remained intact and if Hughie Critz continues fit, the baseball news should be interesting. If New York had the reserve strength of St. Louis a nip and tuck race would be assured.

Chicago and Brooklyn should be in the neighborhood, ready for a drive if the Cardinals or Giants falter. The Cubs will be experimenting with two young, green infielders, Billy Herman and Stanley Hack, and the outfield has looked none too impressive in the spring, but the pitching will be good when hot weather comes around.

Dodgers Dark Horse

Brooklyn, in the past prone to jump from the sublime to the ridiculous, will be rated a dark horse which seems about right for in recent years it has been difficult to judge what the Dodgers will do from one day to the next. Manager Max Carey procured two infielders from Cincinnati when he needed infielders but he had to give away Babe Herman, not consistent but nevertheless a driving hitter.

The Pittsburgh Pirates, Boston Braves, Philadelphia and Cincinnati should put on a good show. None of the quartet can be rated a pennant possibility on the face of the early returns but they should smite all opposition part of the time as they go along.

Chick and Lyons Mix it Tonight

Dude Chick, the Toledo cyclone, and Red Lyons of Austin, are ready for their battle tonight in Grovo arena on the main event of the weekly wrestling program. Chick is a well-known grappler here. Lyons, who is a stranger in Wichita Falls, comes here with a reputation of being a fierce grappler. Both men are classed among the leading light heavyweights of the country.

Tistu Higami, the Jap, will find his hands full tonight if all the advance reports on Joe Reno, the Kansas City grappler, are true. Reno has a reputation of being "double tough" and Higami will find that his "button" style wrestling will be sorely pressed to win. They will meet in the semifinal. There will also be a preliminary.

Sweaters Awarded Eight Crowell Cagers

Special to The Record News.

CROWELL, Texas, March 24.—Letter sweaters were presented to eight members of the Crowell High school basket ball team, district No. 3 champions, here Wednesday morning. Those winning letters were John Todd, J. M. Crowell, Jack Russell, Bill Middleton, Dick Todd, Mitchell Allee, Loraine Carter and Harold Hinds.

Crowell completed its most successful basket ball record the past season, suffering only three defeats out of 32 games, with every defeat being inflicted by one team, the Olney Cubs, who defeated the Wildcats twice in the bi-district series and once in a practice game. Crowell succeeded in defeating Olney, 30 to 14, in one unofficial game. During the season Crowell scored 1,186 points to opponents' 586.

Loraine Carter, substitute forward during the past season, has been elected captain for next year.

A civic club at Auburn, Ala., has banned the word "depression" from the conversation of its members.

Veteran Billy Petrolle Smashes Technical Kayo Over Battalino

NEW YORK, March 24. (UP)—Billy Petrolle, game old war horse, smashed out a technical knockout over Christopher (Bat) Battalino, idol of Hartford, Conn., fight fans, in the final round of their scheduled 12-round bout before a new record crowd of 18,000 in Madison Square garden tonight.

Petrolle, favorite of New York fans, received a stunning ovation from the crowd which had bet on him at odds of 8 to 5. To Battalino went the cheers for the loser, but they were tempered with nothing short of genuine pity for a boy who had been cut to ribbons by the more experienced slugger.

Battalino, who had bled continually from a cut over the bridge of the nose received early in the second round, was so weak he was scarcely able to walk, even with assistance, from the blood-stained ring.

Petrolle, weighing 139, came into the ring with a four-pound advantage. Behind Battalino was a legend of having been on the short end of the betting on every New York bout, and of having won each of those fights.

While it was not until after one minute and 31 seconds of the 12th round that the fight was ended, the contest virtually was won in the second when a crushing right-hand uppercut caught Battalino flush on the front of the nose. Blood began to spill and the best efforts of Battalino's seconds were unable to stop it.

In only one item was Petrolle matched by his younger rival. That was in gameness. Battalino gave a remarkably brave exhibition in coming in for more and more after already, having absorbed enough punishment to make an ordinary boxer fold up and quit. But in offense and defense, in repertoire of ring craftsmanship, the fight was all Petrolle. The United Press score sheet credited him with every round except the fourth which Bat won by greater aggressiveness.

NEW YORK COTTON
NEW YORK, March 24. (AP)—Pre-holiday covering following recent declines was reflected by moderate rallies in cotton today, but the market met further liquidation and the advances were not fully maintained.

After selling up to 6.55 early, May reacted to 6.48 and while it advanced later to 6.56, prices eased again, the late trading with that delivery closing at 6.50. The final tone of the market was barely steady at net advances of 1 to 4 points.

The opening was steady at an advance of 4 to 7 points on trade buying and covering stimulated by the relatively firm showing of Liverpool. The opening gains here were hardly a full response to the showing of the English market. There was some buying through houses with Liverpool connections possibly on the differences.

Some southern selling was reported but offerings from that quarter were light and prices worked about 8 to 9 points net higher during the early trading on an extension of the opening demand.

Active months sold about 8 to 11 points net higher on an afternoon bulge, but the demand was supplied by further liquidation and foreign selling and the market lost the greater part of the advance in the late trading, closing within a point or two of the lowest.

Liverpool cables said that continental and Bombay buying in that market had been supplied by liquidation on the advance in sterling, home trade and India. Exports today 31,113 making 6,704,416 so far this season. Port receipts 14,961. U. S. port stocks 4,447,173.

Futures closed barely steady 1 to 4 higher. Spot steady; middling 6.60.

NEW ORLEANS COTTON
NEW ORLEANS, March 24. (AP)—The cotton market was largely a pre-holiday affair today. After a firm and active opening and early gains of 7@12 points the market turned easier with stocks and because of liquidation in advance of the Easter holidays, losing 8@11 points from the highs. It kept within the earlier range most of the afternoon and the close was steady at or near the lows the general market showing net gains for the day of 1@3 points.

The close was steady and at or near the lows with May at 6.51, up 3 points net for the day, July at 6.66, up 2 points net and Oct. 6.85, up 1 point net.

Liverpool is due on Monday next, 2 penny points down at New Orleans.

Stock and Bond Markets Listless While Waiting for Sales Tax Vote

By BROADAN WALL

NEW YORK, March 24. (US)—It was not until the market had closed that the results of the sales tax vote in congress was available. Defeat of the proposals may not come to the market as an entire shock, since it has been definitely ascertained for some days that the opposition was formidable.

At the same time the market will be confronted with the quite natural inquiry: From where, now, will the funds come to balance the federal budget?

The difficulty to date has been the failure of the sales tax opponents to bring forth a substitute plan of their own. In the face of the impending vote, the markets were inclined today to continue in the doldrums, tending toward lower levels. Concrete news was lacking but there was a plentiful supply of rumors, mostly reconstruction of old stories, such as the German financial difficulties. Amsterdam seemed particularly concerned over the reports, according to international financiers.

Bond quotations moved lower with the stock market.

The market in stocks was influenced throughout by the uncertainty regarding the tax bill. All along it has been conceded that a balanced national budget would stimulate the markets perhaps as no other single development could. For a time up to very recently, congress appeared to be working cooperatively toward a logical solution of the nation's fiscal problems. Then, suddenly, the entire program was interrupted by the demands for war-time levies against wealth, for destruction of the sales tax movement, and a general all-around return to leaderless, threatening tax-making methods which seemingly had been sidetracked in the emergency.

Elimination of the sales tax leaves the market with a highly vital problem still unsettled.

Generally, the selling today was dribbling rather than concentrated. A spurt in oil shares helped to offset the softness elsewhere. Advance in mid-continent oil prices stimulated the oil group and some of its leaders enjoyed the largest turnover in weeks.

The mid-continent action may be followed by strengthening of quotations in other departments of the industry. Westinghouse and General Electric were not particularly affected by reports of a price-slashing conflict within their industry, although both companies are reported preparing for any eventualities.

General Motors was under steady pressure, losing almost a point net and other leaders likewise were soft. Telephone dropped almost a point net as announcement was made of establishment of a five-day week for employes.

General Motors' weakness followed announcement of the concentration of manufacturing activities into fewer units.

CHICAGO GRAIN
CHICAGO, March 24. (AP)—Significance attached to curtailment of wheat shipments from the southern hemisphere did much to make grain values average higher today.

Evening up of accounts to prepare for tomorrow's holiday tended likewise to give relative firmness to grains. Another steadying factor was that some late estimates put the total of Canadian export sales of wheat at high as 1,500,000 bushels, with 250,000 bushels additional of hard winter wheat taken from the United States.

Government figures from Washington indicating enlarged acreage of domestic spring wheat and corn were construed as bearish, but came after trading had ended.

Wheat closed irregular at ¼@¼c decline to ¼c advance compared with yesterday's finish, corn unchanged to ¼c higher, oats ⅛@¼c up, and provisions 7@17c down.

Corn and oats pursued an unsettled course, determined almost entirely by the action of wheat. Country offerings of corn were light and shipping demand here was slow.

Provisions sagged owing to downturns in hog values.

Closing indemnities: Wheat—May 52¾@52⅞c; 54¼@55c; July 54¾@54¾c; 56⅞@56¾c; Sept. 56¾@56⅞c, 58⅛c. Corn—May 35⅞@36c, 36⅞@36⅞c; July 38⅞@38⅞c, 39⅛c; Sept. 40¼c, 41¼c.

PIT NOTES
CHICAGO, March 24. (US)—Expectations are for a very quiet trade in wheat over the Easter holidays. All exchanges are closed tomorrow. Winnipeg and Chicago open Saturday, but Buenos Aires remains closed until Monday and Liverpool re-opens Tuesday.

Cables said there were no wheat sales in either London or Liverpool on Thursday.

Broomhall says Argentine wheats are closed C. I. F. in Liverpool at 53¾@55c, with United States varieties approximately 5c higher.

A harvest of 336,000,000 bushels of wheat is expected in India. The total is just about the amount required for home consumption.

Some North American rye was reported worked for export today.

C-C COUNCIL MEETS TODAY

Cline to Discuss Plans For Celebration

Business men of Wichita Falls will be given their first opportunity to aid in direct planning for the city's golden jubilee celebration of organization at the business council luncheon Friday at the Kemp hotel. Executive Chairman Walter D. Cline of the celebration committee will outline the plans for the three-day party, Sept. 26-28. Leon Deaton business council head, will preside at the luncheon.

The golden jubilee party will be the biggest celebration of its kind in this section of the state, according to tentative plans of those in charge. The city's history will be traced from the obscure bearing of Columbus' discovery trip in 1492 to the present, covering all major peaks of the life of the people and community.

A full attendance of business men is expected at the luncheon in view of the interest in the celebration.

Wichitans to Attend Olney Junior C-C Meet

Jerry Vinson of this city will be the principal speaker Friday evening at a membership meeting of the newly organized Olney Junior chamber of commerce. Several representatives of the Junior chamber of commerce, including President Don T. Haynes, are expected to accompany Mr. Vinson to Olney.

The inspection will be made to assist local postoffice officials in selecting the latest type equipment for installation in the new federal building here.

Assistant Postmaster Lon Howard has been working for the past several days outlining details of furniture and other requirements preparatory to filing requisitions with the United States treasury department for the needed new supplies.

Latest type of boxes as well as regulation furniture will be installed.

Nation's Hope Is in Young People, Landrith Tells Rotary in Address

"Raise your own boy to respect and obey the laws of the United States; any nation that can not enforce its laws is not a nation, but an abomination," declared Dr. Ira D. Landrith of the Allied Campaigners before members of the Rotary club Thursday noon at the Kemp hotel.

Dr. Landrith, chairman of the National Temperance council, and head of the International Society of Christian Endeavor, presented a vigorous defense for present-day youth. Denying that prohibition is "debauching American youth," the speaker said contact with millions of young people in this country has convinced him that they "are a mighty force not only for the 18th amendment, but for the enforcement of all laws." Prohibition, he said, is the result of more than a century of growing temperance sentiment.

"The hope of our nation is in the young people," Dr. Landrith continued. "We must make it possible for our boys to become the men which we want them to become, and which they wish to be. Not only what a man does, but what he wants to do, is to be considered."

P. B. Flynn and Roy B. Jones were introduced by John Kilgore as new members of the club.

Horrace Robbins announced that the Rotary Easter egg hunt for children of this city will begin at 2 o'clock Sunday afternoon at the Miles O'Riley park. Boy Scouts, Rotary Boys' club, the police department and national guard units here will assist Rotarians in staging the hunt. About 7,200 eggs are being boiled and colored for the event.

George Gutzman, vice president, was in charge of Thursday's meeting.

DeMolay Leaders to Tell Truth About Soviet

A direct refutation of George Bernard Shaw's recent claims for the attractiveness of Soviet Russia will be made in Wichita Falls March 25-28, by Frank I. Buckingham, Kansas City lawyer. The address will be free to the public and under the auspices of the order of DeMolay, Hope chapter. Buckingham is a member of the DeMolay grand council and went to Russia as a representative of Frank S. Land, founder and grand scribe of the organization.

Monday, March 28, Mr. Buckingham will speak at the Junior college auditorium at 9:30 a. m. before the student body and others. At 8 p. m. he will speak at the education building of the First Methodist church.

Tour of Russia

The trip to Russia was made by the Kansas City attorney at the personal expense of Mr. Land and came about through a statement published by Shaw, to the effect that were he a young man he would live in Russia. As the head of an order promoting good citizenship among young men, 16 to 21 years old, Mr. Land wanted first-hand information as to the worthiness of Shaw's declaration.

Mr. Buckingham was in Russia for an extended period and covered nearly 6,000 miles, visiting many of the smaller communities and remote districts not usually touched by travelers. In his talks Mr. Buckingham takes an opposite stand to that of the English author and makes some startling statements about the deplorable conditions encountered in the Communist-ruled country.

The speaker's trip has been endorsed by the Texas department of the American Legion as part of its program to combat the spread of Communism.

Auto Accident Basis Of $876 Damage Suit

Suit for $876 was brought in district court Thursday by J. W. Zink and his wife against G. W. Hanna for damages allegedly received by the plaintiffs in a traffic accident Jan. 12.

According to the pleading, the defendant entered a public highway from the left-hand side, driving his car rapidly from the ditch beside the pavement and turning into the path of the plaintiff's car. The petition alleges that the defendant's car was closed on its right side so that he could not clearly see such cars as already might have been on the highway, and that upon seeing the Zink car, he failed to change his direction so as to avoid a collision. The plaintiff's car was thrown into the ditch, overturned, and practically demolished, according to the petition.

The plaintiff asks $350 for damages to his car, $500 for personal injuries sustained by his wife and $26 for medical treatment required by the injured woman.

MUNDAY GAS HEARING SET

Court Asked to Enforce Higher Rates

Judge William H. Atwell of the federal district court will be asked here next Monday morning at 11 o'clock by the Stamford and Western Gas company to grant an injunction restraining the city of Munday from interfering with a proposed gas rate increase there, according to a petition filed in Dallas Wednesday by the gas company. The petition was received here Thursday morning by Miss Jessie Cowan, deputy federal district clerk with the announcement that Judge Atwell will hear arguments on the petition here.

Domestic consumers at Munday now are paying 85 cents per 1,000 cubic feet for the first 25,000 feet, the petition relates, and 75 cents per 1,000 cubic feet above that amount each month. A service charge of 50 cents monthly also is imposed, and the minimum monthly bill is set at $2.

The company alleges that business in Munday in 1931 showed a return of only 1.64 per cent. It claims to have an investment of $1,821,423 in pipe lines and distributing system, upon which the 1931 return was but $29,970.96. The petition alleges that the Munday city officials have refused permission for a higher rate schedule, and that the state railroad commission has failed to give the gas company any relief. There are 150 domestic gas consumers in the city of Munday according to the petition.

The March term of federal court opens here next Monday morning at 10 o'clock. Hearing on the gas company's petition will be held after grand and petit juries have been impaneled. Motions are to be heard Monday morning, and civil law cases Monday afternoon. Only about 30 criminal cases are included in a docket of 66 cases for this term.

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE— WITHOUT CALOMEL

And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to Go

If you feel sour and sunk and the world looks punk, don't swallow a lot of salts, mineral water, oil, laxative candy or chewing gum and expect them to make you suddenly sweet and buoyant and full of sunshine.

For they can't do it. They only move the bowels and a mere movement doesn't get at the cause. The reason for your down-and-out feeling is your liver. It should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily.

If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas bloats up your stomach. You have a thick, bad taste and your breath is foul, skin often breaks out in blemishes. Your head aches and you feel down and out. Your whole system is poisoned.

It takes those good, old CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS to get these two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up." They contain wonderful, harmless, gentle vegetable extracts, amazing when it comes to making the bile flow freely.

But don't ask for liver pills. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills. Look for the name Carter's Little Liver Pills on the red label. Resent a substitute. 25c at all stores. © 1931 C. M. Co.
