Jetliner crashes in storm

At least 18 die as DC-9 goes down near Charlotte

■ Rescue workers describe chaos, confusion at scene.

Associated Press

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — A USAir jet crashed Saturday while trying to land at the Charlotte-Douglas International Airport during a thunderstorm, killing 18 of the 56 people aboard. The tail section of the plane slammed into a house with five people inside and caught fire.

One man in a military uniform was seen running from the plane yelling, "Help me, help me. I'm on fire."

At least 33 people were taken to area hospitals, at least five were unaccounted for and an undetermined number were injured on the ground, authorities said.

Most of the injuries were from the impact, others were from burns and smoke inhalation. Many were reported in serious or critical condition.

"I saw a young boy they brought out. Then a man with a wedding ring. He was dead," said Tripp Wood, who lives near the airport and was one of the first at the scene. "The skin on his arm was gone. About all you could see was

Near-epic heat melts records, fries patience

■ Mercury tops 100 degrees for 10 straight days; dry conditions, holiday fireworks spark wildfire concerns.

By Myra Lee Salcedo

It's not quite to the point where eggs will fry sunnyside up in the middle of Wadley Avenue, but does anyone remember the last time the afternoon high did not top 100?

It's been 10 days since the mercury peaked less than 100 degrees — 98, on June 22. In the 10-day period ending Saturday, not only have daily record high temperatures been topped or tied six times, the all-time high of 112 was tied on June 26 and shattered Monday when mercury climbed to an asphalt-melting 116 degrees. The previous high also was topped when the thermometer hit 114 on Tuesday.

Saturday's high temperature of 107 was not a record breaker, but don't put those raw eggs away yet.

The high for Independence Day is expected to hover between 105-110 with more of the same predicted through Wednesday. And the other news —

Midlander recalls nightmare of being kidnapped by leftist rebels in jungles of Colombia

Editor's note: This is first in a four-part series that profiles the 1993 abduction of Lewis A. Manning from a gold-mining camp in Colombia, South America, by a group of leftist rebels. He was released one year and eight days later and now resides in Midland with his family.

By Michael Kashgarian

Staff Writer

The Colombian jungle and river were blackened in contrast to the lights that illuminated the hut-like structure: a wood floor, a thatched roof and no walls.

Lewis A. Manning had finished dinner and was sitting at a table discussing the gold-mining business.

The conversation and the generator's lawn mower-like buzz — which always irritated Manning — were interrupted by a loud clap.

"It was a noise that got everybody's attention immediately," the 53-year-old Manning recalled.

About 10 heavily armed men in camouflage fatigues had appeared out of the darkness.

The loud sound, Manning would later determine, was that of intruders slapping their hands against the automatic weapons when brought to sight's view.

Manning thought about the .22-caliber pistol tucked under his belt. That idea faded quickly.

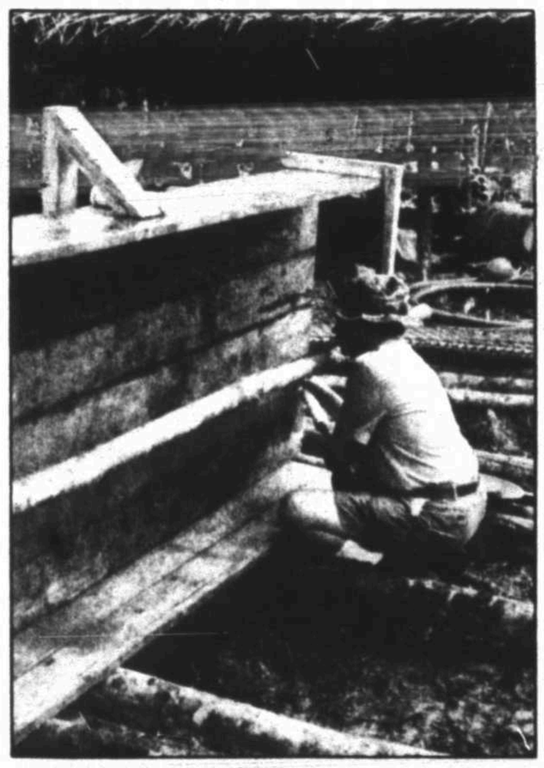

An AK-47 was pointed in his direction.

"I didn't take my eyes off the young man the whole time," Manning said.

There were no markings on the men's uniforms except black-and-red shoulder patches. Grenades were clipped to their shoulder harnesses.

One of the men wore a black-and-red hood with the initials

Unfolding story of O.J. spellbinds nation

Public chastises itself for voyeurism, goes right on watching

By Michiko Kakutani

N.Y. Times News Service

Just what has made the O.J. Simpson story fascinating enough to dominate news coverage and talk show (and living room) conversations for days?

Certainly there is something a little ghoulish about the whole spectacle: 95 million Americans watching the 90-minute car chase to see if the whole awful story would end in further violence, a car crash perhaps or a cinema verite gunshot; and on Thursday, an estimated one in four households tuning into the first day of the preliminary hearings, as though a new murder mystery miniseries had debuted.

Many of those who watched last week's installment — concerning the bloody murder scene and efforts on the part of Simpson's defense team to sup-

Sex-education poll

No tickets win

No tickets correctly matched all six numbers drawn Saturday night for the twice-weekly Lotto Texas game, state lottery officials said. The numbers drawn Saturday night from a field of 50 were: 29-31-33-35-47-48. Lottery officials estimate the jackpot for Wednesday night's game will be $25 million.

Everyone's happy

SAN ANTONIO — The top two officials from a chapter of the National Organization for Women were arrested Saturday during a protest of a restaurant known for its use of scantily attired waitresses. They were among more than 60 NOW members who converged upon a Hooters restaurant on San Antonio's downtown Riverwalk. They said they were protesting the chain's portrayal of women as sex objects. Police reports quote one of the arrrested women as telling the arresting officer: "Thank you, officer, for arresting us. That's what we needed here today for the media." Hooters managers also professed to be thankful. "It'll be the talk of the river," said general manager Tim Myers.

MELTS: 10-day heat wave shatters records whether it's good or bad news is debatable — is that Midlanders may see another weather record shattered Tuesday. If triple-digit temperatures persist as expected, the all-time record of 12 days in a row of temperatures rising to — or above — the century mark will bite the dust.

The bad news is that dry grass will remain brittle and soil will continue to bake under a relentless sun. The worse news is that as Midland scorches under one the hottest summers ever reported, and conditions are prime for grass fires, it's the time of year celebrated with fireworks.

The good news? "The good news is that it didn't get to 110 in El Paso on Saturday. So, that means it could be cooling off some," said a National Weather Service forecaster at Midland International Airport.

Blame the heat on high pressure from the Pacific that refuses to let up. "Until the Pacific high pressure system moves, the temperatures will stay high," the forecaster said. He said thunderstorms moving into New Mexico the past few days remain higher in the atmosphere than usual keeping the precipitation from hitting the ground.

"Any precipitation falling to the ground in the mountains of New Mexico or far West Texas stays there and is not coming our way," the forecaster said. Likewise, Tropical Storm Alberto, which formed in the Gulf of Mexico Saturday morning is expected to head east to Florida and avoid Texas altogether.

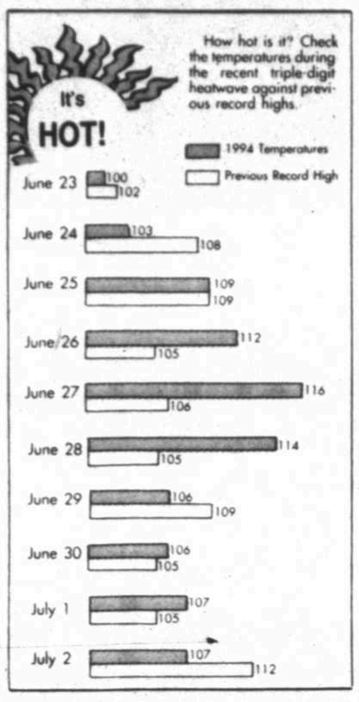

So, for residents of the Tall City, it's more of the same.

Dry heat, and soil-drying winds have baked and withered garden plants. Lightning storms have ignited field foliage like so much tinder resulting in a rash of grass fires, including an 80-acre blaze near Rankin Friday and fires burning out of control for hours near Highway 80 and FM 1788 on Tuesday.

Residents of north and west Midland said they saw falling rain that dissipated in the heat before it touched the ground Tuesday night.

Some Midlanders were evacuated from their homes when grass fires ignited in far north Midland early Wednesday morning and one Greenwood man saw both his mobile homes consumed in flames in a Thursday night blaze.

Midland County Fire Marshal Dale Little — who can't be reached other than by his car radio — has been literally putting out grass fires in various counties since Tuesday. "The biggest danger is yet to come," Little said, referring to the Independence Day celebrations which could involve exploding fireworks.

Little is on 24-hour alert, along with rural volunteer fire departments, who he said are "out there for the life and safety of their community, and they are putting their lives on the line to do it."

While shooting off certain fireworks in the city is prohibited, county commissioners from Midland, Ector and Martin counties moved to ban any fireworks that explode in the air, or start at one location and fly to another.

If prime conditions for fires and moisture-sapping heat aren't enough to frazzle nerves, recent police reports indicate burglars breaking into Midland residences, businesses — and in one case — a church, are doing so to steal air conditioner units.

Police officers and firefighters alike have put the word out to be cautious with fireworks or tossing lighted cigarettes into fields.

And with or without fireworks displays, Midland is heading into a sizzling Fourth of July.

"It's plenty hot, and conditions are severe. That's why there is a ban on burning in the county and using certain fireworks," said fire marshal Little.

It may be small comfort, but in Lake Havasu City, Ariz., the high for June 29 was 128.

Today's forecast is mostly sunny with a high near 102, and winds south to southeast 10-20 mph and gusty.

Tonight is expected to be partly cloudy with less than a 20 percent chance of thundershowers and low between 70-75, the NWS said.

Monday's forecast is mostly sunny with a high around 105 and a slight chance of thundershowers in the afternoon.

Yesterday's high was 107, below the record high of 112, set in 1989. The record low for today's date is 61, set in 1942.

SLAY: Enraged fans kill player

(From 1A)

Colombia had been a favorite to win the championship, but instead was eliminated in the first round, partly due to the upset.

Police said Escobar was shot 12 times in an early-morning confrontation with three men and a woman, who surrounded him after he left a bar in Medellin, Colombia's third-largest city.

"Thanks for the own-goal," one of the gunmen said before shooting Escobar, an unidentified witness told a radio reporter. Other reports said he was shot three times.

The national police reported the arrest of two suspects Saturday afternoon and said two others were being sought, including the owner of the truck that the arrested men were using. The truck owner reported his vehicle stolen Friday night, but now he can't be found.

Colombians, already plagued by the highest murder rate of any country not at war, reeled from the news.

President Cesar Gaviria described Escobar's death as "a loss which causes Colombia to mourn and which fills us with pain."

"Soccer is only a game and there's no justification for Andres to have been killed," said Francisco Maturana, coach of the Colombian World Cup team.

Medellin Mayor Luis Alfredo Ramos said other Colombian World Cup players living in Medellin would be given bodyguards. A reward for the assassins' capture was set at $62,500.

Escobar's body was taken to Medellin's basketball stadium, where a line of at least 5,000 mourners, including past soccer stars, stretched for 10 city blocks.

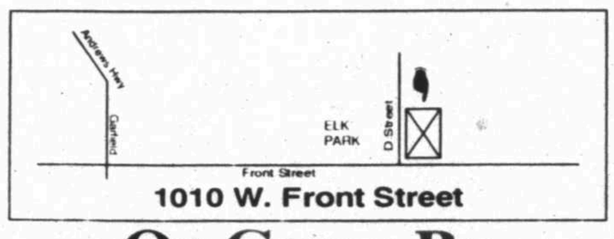

The subdued crowd filed past Escobar's open dark-wood casket, flanked by dozens of bright bouquets and a dozen police standing at attention, and gazed at Escobar's pale face under his mop of dark, curly hair.

"Justice!" someone in the crowd shouted, the word echoing off the arena walls.

Escobar was admired as much for his courtly manners and fair play as for his delicate, precise ball handling.

"He was a tender, sweet man," said Maria Eugenia Valencia, who waited in line for three hours to see the body. "I loved him. It makes no sense that someone killed him. There's no way to be happy or get excited about soccer anymore."

Escobar had returned with the team on Wednesday. After the team was eliminated, anonymous threats against the players and their coach began arriving at TV and radio stations.

Diverted nuclear material, organized crime spur Freeh

MOSCOW (AP) — A chilling trio of suspected diversions of weapons-grade nuclear material and a handful of Russian organized crime cases prompted FBI director Louis Freeh to launch his unprecedented tour of Eastern Europe and Russia.

He arrived in Moscow on Saturday for a three-day stay during which he will open the FBI's first office in Russia. In earlier stops, Freeh won commitment for expanded opportunities for his agents to interview witnesses, gather records and seek evidence in Germany, Slovakia, the Czech Republic, Hungary, Poland, Lithuania, Latvia, Estonia and Ukraine.

In two interviews in the 10-day trip that ends Wednesday, Freeh has revealed the troubling problems that led him to become the first FBI director to tour the formerly Communist East Bloc.

"I realized that as far as police work went, East Europe was a complete vacuum to us, including throughout Russia," Freeh said.

Russian organized crime syndicates are mushrooming in former East Bloc nations and emerging in the United States.

Freeh said German police gave the FBI a list last fall of purported illicit sales of nuclear material.

But there were a couple of significant cases in 1993 involving weapons-grade materials, Freeh said.

■ Two kilograms of enriched U-235 uranium were reported missing from a site in St. Petersburg, Russia.

■ Two nuclear fuel rods containing several kilograms of highly enriched U-235 were reported missing from a Russian ship in Murmansk.

Then just after Freeh's trip was announced May 25, the German Federal Criminal Police advised him of an alarming seizure outside Stuttgart: Searching a home in a counterfeiting case, they found 60 grams of highly enriched, weapons-grade plutonium. Police believe it came from Russia.

Coast Guard grapples with giant rescue

■ Haitian boat people keep coming; diplomats think bigger boats may bring thousands more.

Associated Press

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti — Tired Coast Guardsmen labored Saturday in their biggest rescue mission since World War II, intercepting boats jammed with Haitians and bracing for a new surge in refugees.

Diplomats say they believe bigger boats are being readied for thousands more Haitians to try to escape their impoverished and repressive homeland.

More than 6,700 have fled in the past two weeks, including 1,365 who were picked up Friday. That was the highest single-day total since the current exodus began after Washington changed its policy on boat people on June 16.

Under the policy, intercepted boat people will be given a hearing to see if they qualify for political refugee status in the United States. Previously, all boat people had been considered economic refugees and had been returned to Haiti.

Although only about one of every three boat people has been granted asylum so far, the chance has been enough for Haitians to take to the sea under wretched conditions.

On Friday, the Coast Guard cutter Hamilton stopped a 50-foot sailboat on which 468 people had managed to jam. "I don't think you can get any more people on a boat that size. That's extremely unsafe," Coast Guard spokesman Dan Waldschmidt told The Associated Press.

Thirteen boats carrying 488 more people were intercepted by late afternoon Saturday. "We've got plenty more out there," Waldschmidt said.

The boat people are taken either to a ship off Jamaica or to a recently reopened facility at the U.S. Naval base at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, just across the 80-mile Windward Passage from northwest Haiti.

Until the reopening of Guantanamo, most boat people had set sail from the southwest peninsula that reaches toward Jamaica. But the availability of Guantanamo makes departing from the north more feasible, and thus is likely to increase the flow, said a diplomatic source.

The diplomat, who is familiar with the number of boats being built on the island, said he foresees a surge in the next few weeks. Boat organizers, particularly in the north, are aggressively promoting voyages, he said on condition of anonymity. Northern Haiti has bigger boats, built primarily for cargo traffic to and from Miami or the Bahamas.

STORY: We can't stop watching O.J. on TV

press evidence they say was improperly gathered by police — chastised themselves for their voyeurism, even as they continued to channel surf avidly from network to network.

What the Simpson story possesses is a raw narrative appeal that uncannily taps into the collective unconscious, combining the most sensationalistic aspects of a variety of literary genres, from Greek tragedy to the gothic romance to the true-crime thriller.

Much has already been made of Simpson's celebrity and our fascination with the fall of a famous man, but if the old O.J., the one we thought we knew from the football field and the Hertz commercials, appeared to personify one version of the American dream — the poor kid from the ghetto who reinvented himself as a genial spokesman for corporate America — the new O.J., the one we saw in the white Bronco, being chased by a phalanx of police cars and helicopters, seems to embody another potent American myth, that of the outlaw, the renegade in flight from the law.

Perhaps this is one reason why people stood on overpasses in L.A., shouting "Go, Juice, Go," and why vendors selling T-shirts (reading "Pray for O.J." and "Turn the Juice Loose") continue to do brisk business, even in the face of disturbing revelations about Simpson's history of spousal abuse.

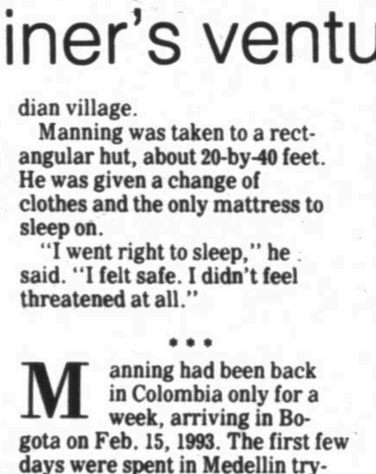

NO DOUBT MOST of these supporters believe or hope that he is innocent; no doubt many have not even allowed the fact of the brutal murders — which he may or may not have committed — to fully sink in.

Others do not seem to even want to confront the question of guilt. Indeed, the presumption of innocence Simpson enjoys in our legal and civic tradition wars with our romantic impulse to believe the worst, to seek Mr. Hyde in Dr. Jekyll, the monster within the gentleman.

What the Simpson story possesses is a raw narrative appeal that uncannily taps into the collective unconscious, combining the most sensationalistic aspects of a variety of literary genres, from Greek tragedy to the gothic romance to the true-crime thriller.

From the start, there has been a bizarre circus atmosphere surrounding the case, heightened by the defense and prosecution's theatrics and the news media's raucous coverage.

Helping to blur the lines between reality and fiction, many commentators have come up with movie analogies to try to describe the Simpson phenomenon, including "The Fugitive," which recounted the story of a man wrongly accused of killing his wife; "Thelma and Louise," which ended with its two heroines driving off a cliff, as they're pursued by the police; "Dog Day Afternoon," which depicted a likable bank robber's hapless efforts to pull off a heist, and "The Sugarland Express," which chronicled a young fugitive couple's flight from the law.

These movies, like "Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid" and "Bonnie and Clyde," reinforce the myth of the outsider, the people on the fringes who somehow find themselves beyond the law.

What's more, they help nurture a reflex reaction — to root against the sanctimonious envoys of officialdom (be they humorless police officers or stuffy government bureaucrats), and to root for the beleaguered hero, regardless of whether he's committed a harmless prank or a savage crime.

EVIL, OF COURSE, has always exerted a powerful fascination. Satan remains the most compelling character in "Paradise Lost," just as Darth Vader dominates "Star Wars" and Hannibal Lecter commandeers "The Silence of the Lambs."

Members of the Romantic movement embraced man's darker impulses as a source of energy and freedom, while Dostoevsky frequently used the criminal as a mirror of man's conflicted nature.

Today it is serial killers (until the advent of the Simpson case, anyway) who have cornered the market on public attention, generating grisly T-shirts, trading cards and comic books of their own.

Actually, the ordinary, non-political criminal, especially when gifted with intelligence and talent, has long exerted a bizarre hold on the literary imagination.

Andre Gide, Jean Cocteau, Paul Claudel and Jean-Paul Sartre helped win a presidential pardon for Jean Genet, who had been jailed for theft and prostitution, while Norman Mailer helped win parole for the writer Jack Henry Abbott, who subsequently killed a waiter in Manhattan's East Village six weeks after being released from prison.

IN HIS FAMOUS 1957 essay, "The White Negro," Mailer equated violence with virility and creativity: "One is Hip or one is Square," he wrote. "One is a rebel or one conforms, one is a frontiersman in the Wild West of American night life, or else a Square cell, trapped in the totalitarian tissues of American society, doomed willy-nilly to conform if one is to succeed."

Such arguments, clearly, are well rooted in this country's pioneer tradition.

The anti-authoritarian legacy of the Revolutionary War, after all, was galvanized by the frontier experience — which gave us folk heroes like Jesse James and Billy the Kid, and which suggested, as the historian Richard Slotkin has observed, that redemption could be found in violence, that the violent man of action was superior to the plodding machinery of the law.

All of which perhaps helps to explain how a woman in front of the Los Angeles courthouse could stand before a CNBC camera and make the astonishing statement: "Guilty or not, we love you O.J."

KIDNAP: Miner's venture turns nightmarish

(From 1A)

UCELN.

Despite the setting, Manning did not fear for his life. "The obvious explanation was that God was in control of the situation," he said.

Manning, another American and five Latino employees were ushered into a laboratory building at the compound.

Meanwhile, the guerrillas conversed with Ruben, a Colombian geologist who worked at the camp.

"They were quiet with their actions and did not speak a lot," Manning said.

Ruben relayed that the guerrillas wanted an American.

Steve Baker volunteered. Ruben said no, they wanted Manning. Perhaps Baker, who was a larger man than Manning, would be more resistant.

Manning was allowed to gather some belongings in a backpack.

The kidnappers took what they wanted — ammunition, electronic equipment, and the company's 35-foot canoe and motor. Two employees of the gold-mining camp were taken to operate the hijacked canoe.

Manning and the rebels headed up the Icho River in the stolen canoe and the one the kidnappers came in. Manning was given one of two life jackets.

The jungle was dark. No one spoke.

At midnight — about three hours into the trip — as the canoe entered a swift area of the river, the motorman revved the engine, pulling the boat left. As the canoe rocked back, Manning — unbeknown to the rebels — shifted his weight in that direction. The boat flipped.

Manning had planned on the rapid water dragging him downstream.

The escape failed; a rebel in the other canoe pulled Manning from the water.

As Manning waited on a rock, the rebels became preoccupied with retrieving supplies from the clear 4-foot water. Manning saw another chance and scooted up the boulder.

"But I couldn't get in the jungle. The vines were so thick and I didn't have a machete," he said.

As Manning struggled nonetheless, he heard the rebels ask about the American as they shined lights along the river bank. The escape was futile; Manning spoke up.

The overturned canoe was left behind with the two gold-mining camp employees. As Manning and the rebels departed, the employees struggled to pull the disabled motor from the river.

The journey continued. Around 5 a.m., Manning and the band of rebels arrived at an Indian village.

Manning was taken to a rectangular hut, about 20-by-40 feet. He was given a change of clothes and the only mattress to sleep on.

"I went right to sleep," he said. "I felt safe. I didn't feel threatened at all."

Manning had been back in Colombia only for a week, arriving in Bogota on Feb. 15, 1993. The first few days were spent in Medellin trying to find his luggage lost by the airlines.

He went on to Quibdo in the state of Choco, then to the gold-mining camp, nestled in the mountains, jungles and winding rivers of western Colombia.

"We would go out to the site by boat," Manning said. "We just carved the camp right out of the jungle."

Manning was part of a modern-day gold mining expedition.

His older brother Bob, a geologist, formed Gold and Resources Company International in 1992. The older Manning — who managed a gold-mining project in Colombia in the early 1980s for a subsidiary of Gulf Resources and Chemical Co. — had received reports of secondary gold deposits 12 miles from a mine he had worked.

The two brothers had been successful in an oil and gas venture in 1991 in Gonzalez County, where they secured investors to go to Colombia.

Lewis Manning was to serve as comptroller in his brother's company.

The two would take turns at the gold-mining camp — located about 30 minutes by canoe from the mine — and at home in Midland.

On Feb. 22, Manning — who hadn't be able to track down his lost luggage — arrived at the camp about 5:30 p.m. The camp was invaded about three hours later.

When daybreak came — after being awakened several times during the night by rebels going in and out of the hut — Manning was moved to another shelter and fed.

He was free to roam around the village but chose not to. No one talked to him about why he was taken.

A tired Manning soon was hiking through the jungle with his captors. The terrain was rough and for the next four or five hours, Manning concentrated on walking, on keeping up, on not being intimidated by not being able.

"I don't know why . . . I wanted to keep things as tranquil as possible," he said.

The group arrived at a road, one that Manning recognized. The roadway was near the La Equis mine, which his brother had managed in the early 1980s.

Walking down the road, the rebels appeared nervous. They were more comfortable in the safety of the mountainous rain forest.

A yellow maintenance truck was broken down on the roadway. As the group approached, Manning saw that the truck driver and worker had staged a flat.

Manning was put in the front while two rebels rode on the sideboards, the rest in the back.

They drove about 1½ hours to a maintenance compound, where Manning was fed. Exhausted, he fell asleep in the truck.

The road trip continued until the group reached a bridge, where the walking resumed down a path along the river. A tall black rebel appeared to be assigned to watch Manning.

"We get into some very rough terrain," Manning said. That was coupled with lightning and thunder.

The hike ended at a large building with a porch. Some slept in hammocks; others — including Manning and his guard — slept on the concrete.

The night was chilly.

The next morning, Manning discovered the building was a school. Wearing khakis and a straw hat, he watched as Latino children talked and pointed at him. The youngsters did not appear alarmed by the guerrillas.

Manning was put on a saddled mule for the day's journey, which continued up a mountain amid the lush green countryside. Twice they crossed a river.

Despite the circumstances, Manning couldn't help but notice the "beautiful scenery."

The day ended at a ranch house where a family resided.

The armed men seemed more relaxed. "They seemed to leave their weapons unattended and available," Manning said.

He wondered if the rebels were tempting him or just stupid. He contemplated picking up one of the automatic rifles and making a stand. The desire grew.

Manning walked past the weapons several times "to see what I could see." He had never fired such guns and knew if he grabbed one he would have to use it or be killed.

The timing wasn't right that day.

That night and the next Manning slept in a bed in the ranch house. He was given a wool blanket and a piece of black plastic for bedding that he was to be responsible for from then on.

When the journey continued, the mule stayed behind. The group progressed up a mountain for several hours. Manning stayed strong, telling himself that he, an American, would not be outdone by Colombian rebels.

He kept up until they arrived at a hut occupied by Latino mountain people. They camped there for the next couple of nights.

While there, Manning heard a military aircraft overhead; he hoped they were looking for him.

Manning was no longer stunned about the abduction; he was angry. He again eyed the guns left unguarded.

"The thoughts of getting this weapon were very strong at this point," he said.

Manning knew he would have to kill the rebels and any sympathizers in his way back to civilization. He wondered if the guns were fully loaded and ready to fire. He wondered how many he would have to kill.

As he neared a weapon, he told himself to pick it up. Whenever he did, he began to shake uncontrollably.

"There's some force saying no, no . . . don't do it," he said.

Manning reasoned the situation. He had no justification to kill aside from being mad. And he knew he would have to answer to God.

"I am very frustrated, hoping someone is looking for me."

the ring."

Flight 1016, a DC-9, had originated in Columbia, S.C., and Charlotte was its final destination, said USAir spokesman Dave Shipley.

The plane smashed into trees and sheared off the top of telephone poles then broke into three large pieces after hitting the ground less than half a mile from the runway, said airport director Jerry Orr.

"This is utter chaos. It's a traumatic experience," Orr said near the scene, his voice breaking. "It's just mindboggling what these people have to go through out here."

Orr said 17 bodies were found on the ground. One person died at Carolinas Medical Center, a hospital spokeswoman said. There were 51 passengers and five crew members.

Kathleen Bergen, manager of public affairs for the Federal Aviation Administration in Atlanta, said the plane was not able to land on an initial approach, but she did not know why. Storms in the area had reduced visibility to about a mile.

"They were trying to come out of the landing attempt, to come around and try to land again" just before the crash at about 6:40 p.m., Bergen said.

Crews rescued several passengers who were trapped in the crumbled rear section that ended up on the carport of the house. CBS radio reported that several people in the house suffered from smoke inhalation. At least two of them were being treated at a hospital.

A motorist whose car was struck by debris from the plane was being treated at Presbyterian Hospital, a spokesman said.

Dead bodies remained at the scene hours after the crash because officials were waiting for investigators from the National Transportation Safety Board.

In Columbia, S.C., relatives and friends of passengers waited nervously at the Metropolitan Airport late Saturday for word of their loved ones.

Chris Lewis said his uncle Steve Mattox was married Saturday and left aboard the flight with his wife, Rita. The couple was headed for a honeymoon.

Phillip Robinson, a minister who lives near the Charlotte airport, said he was sitting in his car watching planes take off and land when he saw the jet crash about 200 yards away during a fierce lightning storm.

He saw a man with his clothes on fire running from the plane yelling, "Help me, help me. I'm on fire."

Arafat wants Jerusalem as capital

■ Right-wing Israelis in Jerusalem hold huge demonstration, denounce Arafat, government peacemakers.

Associated Press

JEBALIYA REFUGEE CAMP, Gaza Strip — Yasser Arafat visited the birthplace of the Palestinian uprising Saturday and asked a wildly cheering crowd to help him build an independent state with Jerusalem as its capital.

"The challenge is to be or not to be," Arafat said from a balcony hung with banners praising the Palestinian struggle. "Can we really build a national authority that will lead to a Palestinian state with Jerusalem as its capital?"

The crowd roared: "Yes, yes, yes."

Jerusalem is the crown jewel for Palestinians, who dream of someday making the city's Arab sector the capital of a future independent state. Israel considers Jerusalem its capital. It seized Arab east Jerusalem in 1967.

Arafat saluted Jebaliya camp, where youths fought Israeli soldiers with stones and bottles in a rebellion that paved the way for the autonomy agreement with Israel and Arafat's own return.

He appeared more animated and forceful than in his speech in Gaza City on Friday, hours after he crossed into Palestinian lands for the first time since 1967.

Although he has been careful not to anger the Israelis with incendiary statements, he shook his index finger violently when he spoke about Jerusalem.

In the holy city, right-wing Israelis burned pictures of Arafat and denounced government peacemakers in one of the largest street demonstrations in years.

Tens of thousands of demonstrators gathered after sundown to decry the visit of the PLO leader to the autonomous Gaza Strip. Their anger was also turned toward Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin for concessions to the Palestinians.

Police, who were deployed in the thousands, estimated the crowd at about 100,000. There were no immediate reports of violence in the largest protest in the city since peace marches against involvement in Lebanon in the early 1980s.

"What Arafat really wants isn't an Arab state next to Israel, but an Arab state instead of Israel," said Benjamin Netanyahu, leader of right-wing Likud Party.

A French soldier, with a group of Tutsis behind him, peers through the scope of his sniper rifle at Hutu militiamen on top of a nearby hill about 40 miles southwest of Kigali.

Tutsi rebels surround Hutus stranded in Rwandan capital

GISENYI, Rwanda (AP) — Rebels have surrounded the capital of Kigali, a French military officer said Saturday, hours after the Rwandan government asked French troops to abandon their neutrality and fight off the insurgents.

Soldiers of the Hutu-dominated government army in the capital are penned in and face a "critical situation," said French military spokesman Lt. Col Jean Claude Perruchat.

"Government forces seem to be preparing a counterattack from hills in the northwest . . . but for the first time they are completely surrounded in Kigali," said Perruchat, who was in western Rwanda but has daily radio contact with U.N. forces in Kigali.

But in Kigali, the commander of U.N. forces, Maj. Gen. Romeo Dallaire, said early today he couldn't confirm the city was surrounded by rebels. He said Perruchat's information didn't come from his command.

"We can't go out to see now, it's dark. It's too risky," Dallaire, a Canadian, said in a telephone interview with The Associated Press. "There is fighting now. There is shooting in the city."

Earlier Saturday, mortar fire ripped into an open market in the besieged city, killing 16 people and injuring 25.

The rebel Rwandan Patriotic Front, led by the minority Tutsi tribe, has taken some two-thirds of the country since the fighting began in early April, and has mounted a ferocious assault on Kigali.

Ex-monks battle to get royalties from chant CD

MADRID, Spain (AP) — Two former Benedictine monks who say they scored the music on a hot-selling CD of Gregorian chants claim they are entitled to some $5 million in royalties.

The two-disc CD, entitled "The Best of Gregorian Chants," unexpectedly soared to the top of the Spanish music charts this year and subsequently gained worldwide sales of more than three million.

The CD of medieval Latin plainsong was released in March in the United States under the title "Chant." It made it to No. 1 on the American classical charts — then shocked the pop charts by breaking into the top 10.

The album was compiled from recordings in the 1970s and early 1980s by monks in a Benedictine monastery in northern Spain. Previous sales of chants recorded by the same choir never exceeded several thousand records or CDs.

The ex-monks — Ismael Fernandez de la Cuesta and Francisco Lara — both served as directors of the choir at the Santo Domingo de Silos Abbey, a small monastery near the northern city of Burgos. De la Cuesta was director during a 1973 recording and Lara held the post during recordings in the early 1980s.

Both left the monastery more than 10 years ago. De la Cuesta teaches at the Madrid Conservatory. Lara's current occupation was not immediately available.

The two have just published their scores and registered their arrangements with the General Society of Spanish Authors, claiming they and the society are entitled to royalties from the CD sales.

"Besides the marketing, we think it was our arrangement that contributed to the success," the two said in a statement last week. "If something is owed to us, we want to collect it."

Fighting shuts down Yemen's largest oilfield

MARIB, Yemen (AP) — Northern forces shelled the besieged southern stronghold of Aden on Saturday and officials confirmed that a raid by southern warplanes has forced the country's largest oilfield to suspend production.

Escalating attacks by both sides on vital economic targets, including the fledgling oil industry, are a measure of their frustration as the 2-month-old civil war drags on with no end in sight.

The Marib field 80 miles east of San'a, the northern capital, produced 188,000 barrels of oil a day — more than half the nation's total output.

A northern oil ministry official, Ismail Yahya al-Dailami, told reporters in Marib it could take a week before production resumes.

In Thursday's raid, two southern MiG-21 jets dropped six bombs, wrecking two coolers at the key pumping station that propels oil to a port on the Red Sea. Reporters saw a tangle of twisted metal.

The warplanes also strafed the area with cannon fire.

A gasoline station was hit and set ablaze. Nearby offices were blasted out and the hulk of a burned-out tanker truck stood on a dirt road.

A Yemeni worker was killed and 10 others were wounded in the attack on the oil field.

Tobacco industry claims it's being victimized by biased scientists

■ Firms launch advertising campaigns to change public attitudes.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The tobacco industry says it's being victimized by biased scientists who skew data to make it falsely appear that smoke — yours or somebody else's — is bad for you.

And it's spending millions of dollars in advertising to take that message to vulnerable Americans already reeling from scandals involving cancer and radiation research.

"The general public has a skepticism about the results of scientific inquiry and they're playing on that," said Dr. Morton Lippman of New York University Medical Center.

The tobacco industry is facing increasing hostility: The Justice Department is investigating it for fraud and perjury, indoor smoking bans are on the rise and the government wants to regulate nicotine.

So it's fighting back through full-page newspaper ads. Once a week, R.J. Reynolds says smoking's no worse than caffeine or fatty hamburgers and spreads dire warnings that the government wants to ban all cigarettes — even in private homes.

Philip Morris capped off a weeklong attack with a three-page ad in 40 Sunday newspapers that charged the Environmental Protection Agency with using seriously flawed science to label secondhand smoke a carcinogen.

Scientists say the ads aren't truthful but they don't have big enough wallets to counterattack. The companies won't say how much they're spending, but a single full-page ad in the Sunday Washington Post costs $64,000.

"Unfortunately, it's not uncommon for an industry to be able to outspend the public interest," said Jeff Cohen of the media watchdog group Fairness and Accuracy in Reporting.

Fed up residents take to streets to fight crime

By Shannon Johnson
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Amid growing fears of crime and waning confidence in police, citizens groups are sprouting throughout the country to rid their neighborhoods of criminals.

Anxiety-ridden residents, fed up with burglaries, assaults and drugs, have joined local police, parks and recreation departments, schools, businesses and churches to initiate innovative, low cost crime-fighting programs.

In some cases, the results have been dramatic — sharply reduced crime rates at little or no cost to the taxpayer.

"We've seen more people entering into real partnerships to solve problems," said Jean O'Neil, a spokeswoman for the National Crime Prevention Council, a private crime prevention group.

Neighborhoods are moving beyond the basic neighborhood watches — simply reporting suspicious activity to the police — and are beginning to take a more active role. In Iowa, for example, members of a group attend sentencing hearings for repeat drug offenders to pressure judges to impose stiff sentences. Senior citizens in Florida conduct home security checks in low-income areas, testing door and window locks and smoke detectors.

The new attitude is "we're not just here to look out our windows, we're here to solve the problem," O'Neil said.

Ironically, this burgeoning grassroots activism comes as overall crime rates have dropped slightly in the past two years, according to the federal Bureau of Justice Statistics.

The bureau reported that crime decreased by 1 percent in 1992 and by 3 percent in 1993.

But fear of crime is soaring. A survey of 1,000 adult Americans earlier this year showed that 19 percent consider crime the main problem facing the nation — up from just 4 percent a year earlier.

Police say citizens can make a difference in the crime rate.

"The good people outnumber the bad people. Instead of staying in the house and barring the windows. . .get out and do something about it," urged Officer Jerry MacCauley of the Community Oriented Police Association in West Palm Beach, Fla.

Active neighborhood groups can reduce burglary and other property crimes by 40 percent, said Matt Peskin, director of the National Association of Town Watch, another crime fighting group.

"The bottom line is that police officers enforce the law (but) it's up to the community to prevent crime," he said.

First family trades hustle for Camp David

WASHINGTON (NYT) — Bill Clinton has finally decided that there's nothing wrong with a presidential retreat.

For his first 17 months in office, Clinton rarely set foot in Camp David, the rustic compound that his predecessors loved but he shunned as too remote. But now, the president who cannot get enough human contact appears to have discovered a yearning for peace and quiet.

In what has suddenly become a summertime habit, Clinton and his family packed up their things Friday night and flew into the Catoctin Mountains, a half-hour north and a world away from the White House. They brought with them no aides, no reporters and no circle of friends.

As Ronald Reagan once recommended to Clinton, it was perhaps as close as a president can get to being alone.

In all of 1993, the Clintons ventured just five times to the mountaintop complex, blaming allergies, school schedules, an aversion to isolation and the inaccessibility of good golf for their virtual absence.

Even Mikhail Gorbachev, the former Soviet leader, had visited there twice, but no-shows by the Clintons left the mossy cabins, chapel, swimming pool, tennis courts and other diversions, whose upkeep costs taxpayers an estimated $2 million a year, nearly always vacant.

The potential embarrassment was so great that this neglect lent credibility to the explanation given by David Watkins, a former White House official who lost his job after borrowing the president's helicopter for a golf outing this spring: he said he had simply been scouting out a course whose proximity might make Camp David more attractive to Clinton.

But this is the third weekend in a row that Clinton, his wife, Hillary, and their 14-year-old daughter, Chelsea, have traded the White House for the 134-acre refuge.

And their aides describe that abrupt change of course as a sign in part that the president has come to recognize how important it is sometimes to change pace.

"This hasn't been an easy month," one White House official said, "and he's needed a chance to be human again."

By his advisers' accounts, Clinton has become increasingly frustrated about how his administration has been portrayed in the news media, with his outburst nine days ago on a radio talk show unexpected only in that it was a public declaration of that sentiment.

Analysts: Moderate high court justices lean liberal on key cases

■ Conservative Rehnquist, Scalia, Thomas bloc loses ground to centrist O'Connor, Souter, Kennedy, Ginsburg camp.

By Richard Carelli
Associated Press

■ News analysis

WASHINGTON — A generally conservative and cautious Supreme Court provided a surprising number of liberal rulings in its 1993-94 term. The court added new protection against sexual harassment, placed limits on abortion protesters and refused to relax church-state separation.

"The justices in the center are up for grabs, and took the liberal side in some important cases," conservative commentator Bruce Fein said. "That central coalition seems to have strengthened."

The court is divided into three camps, but that alignment is changing with the retirement of Justice Harry A. Blackmun. He, along with Justice John Paul Stevens, comprised the liberal wing.

The conservative bloc of Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist and Justices Antonin Scalia and Clarence Thomas seemed less influential during the just-completed term than the alliance of centrist Justices Sandra Day O'Connor, David H. Souter, Anthony M. Kennedy and Ruth Bader Ginsburg.

Souter and Ginsburg, especially, were inclined to part company with the conservatives.

Legal experts say President Clinton's choice to take Blackmun's place, federal appeals Judge Stephen G. Breyer, is another centrist.

The number of signed decisions — 84 — dropped sharply from the 107 produced in the 1992-93 term. It's the lowest total in more than 30 years.

The court's decision workload hadn't dipped below 90 since the early 1960s; and not under 100 since 1969. Through the 1980s, the justices averaged 140 signed decisions a term.

"One of the reasons the current court does so little is that it thinks it has so little to do," said Georgetown University law Professor L. Michael Seidman. "The justices view their role as limited and interstitial."

Erwin Chemerinsky, a University of Southern California law professor, added, "At times, it was almost a sleepy term."

But Elliot Mincberg, legal director of the liberal People for the American Way, called it "an iceberg term — there's a lot more than meets the eye."

"This was not a term with many blockbuster decisions with immediate impact, but the court laid some very important groundwork for resolving future disputes," Mincberg said.

"The decision in (a cable television case) could affect generations of cases involving the information superhighway. And the decision on property rights, although of limited immediate impact, could have enormous future ramifications."

In summary, the court's major decisions:

ABORTION CLINICS

■ Judges can bar pro-life protesters from getting too close to abortion clinics. If access to a clinic has been interfered with in the past, a judge may require that even peaceful demonstrators keep a certain distance from it.

■ Protesters who block access to abortion clinics or in other ways conspire to use illegal tactics to stop women from having abortions may be sued as racketeers under a federal law primarily aimed at fighting organized crime.

N.M. Apaches fight over atomic waste

By Eduardo Montes
Associated Press

MESCALERO, N.M. — The serene vistas of pine-laden mountains that dominate the Mescalero Apache Reservation belie an undercurrent of tension surrounding the Indian homeland.

Among these green peaks best known as a vacation getaway, the tribe's leaders are crafting a deal that would bring tons of highly radioactive nuclear waste to the south-central New Mexico reservation.

The plans are breeding animosity within and without the Apache nation, where some complain the tribal council is putting aside the tribe's best interests as it works with 30 utility companies to design and construct a spent nuclear fuel storage facility.

"The tribal council has deliberately excluded the voices and the wills of the people," said tribal member Rufina Marie Laws, an opponent of the storage facility.

As conceived by partners in the venture, the facility would hold spent nuclear reactor fuel rods for up to 40 years. The rods eventually are to be transferred to a permanent disposal site, which the federal government is obligated to build although no site has been chosen.

Mescalero leaders argue that their facility, one of several being sought by tribes nationwide, will create jobs for tribal members and provide money for schools, housing and other programs.

"This gives us an opportunity to choose and to do what we want to do," said Silas Cochise, the Mescaleros' manager for the project.

Cochise and tribal Vice President Frederick Peso said the facility will also further the tribe's attempts to diversify its business enterprises, which now include a sawmill, ranching, a ski resort and the luxurious Inn of the Mountain Gods.

The latter two have for years been drawing tourists up N.M. 70 to the heart of the 461,000-acre reservation with its soaring peaks and looming pines.

Yet some tribal members are leery of this particular attempt at diversification, if not downright opposed.

"They say we're going to get millions of dollars from the project," said tribal member Joseph Geronimo. "They said the same about the other tribal enterprises."

The reality, said Geronimo, is that "the money goes into a few pockets. Our people get service jobs. They clean up after the people. They don't get anything."

The rumblings of displeasure also can be heard elsewhere.

Political leaders from Gov. Bruce King to members of the state's congressional delegation to officials from communities surrounding the reservation have expressed determination to oppose the spent-fuel repository.

But as they bristle and fume, the Mescaleros' leaders and their utility company partners continue apace, while government agencies seem unwilling or unable to act, even when they say they want to.

U.S. Department of Energy Secretary Hazel O'Leary has said she wants to keep the project at arms' length.

The New Mexico Public Utility Commission has no jurisdiction over the facility, since the participating utilities are from outside the state.

INTRODUCING INVISA

Better hearing incredibly just got smaller.

Beltone has developed an exciting new hearing aid called Invisa (pronounced In-VEE-za). Now all the joy of better hearing comes in the tiniest aid Beltone makes.

We call Invisa our "hidden hearing aid" because its incredibly small size allows it to hide deeply, yet comfortably inside your ear canal. Out of sight and out of mind.

TINIEST AID BELTONE MAKES!

It's also available with a selection of faceplate colors designed to match the shadow of your ear canal. This natural camouflage can make it virtually impossible for anyone to see Invisa once it's in place.

Invisa also gives you the luxury of totally hands-free operation. Your Beltone specialist will pre-select a volume setting that's right for you, so you'll never have to mess with a volume control.

SEE THE DIFFERENCE INVISA MAKES

Of course, the Invisa hearing aid is not appropriate for everyone. The benefits of hearing aids vary by type and degree of hearing loss, noise environment, accuracy of hearing evaluation and proper fit. That's why we feel that a personal evaluation is necessary to determine if the Invisa is right for you.

Only Beltone offers both Invisa and BelCare™, a commitment to customer satisfaction unmatched in the hearing aid industry.

Municipal Judge Kathleen Kennedy Powell, shown in a TV image, holds an envelope that was turned over to her during O.J. Simpson's preliminary hearing. The mysterious envelope has become a subject of wide speculation.

Envelope adds mystery to O.J. case

LOS ANGELES (NYT) — The first two days of testimony in the O.J. Simpson case did not end without a tantalizing mystery to ponder over the holiday weekend: Just what is inside that business-sized manila envelope Judge Kathleen Kennedy-Powell held up Friday during the second day of testimony in the preliminary hearing?

"Well, we all hope it's the knife, don't we?" said Charles Lindner, a Los Angeles defense lawyer not involved in the proceedings. "The case would be more dramatic that way."

Allen Wattenberg, the owner of a downtown cutlery shop, testified on Thursday that Simpson had bought a collapsible knife with a six-inch blade on May 3, a day on which Simpson was in the area filming a television pilot for NBC.

Prosecutors say they have not recovered the weapon that was used to kill Simpson's former wife, Nicole Brown Simpson, and a male friend of hers, Ronald L. Goldman. The envelope was delivered to the court sometime this week by lawyers defending Simpson, who is charged in the killings.

Presumably, by producing a knife, Simpson's lawyers would be confident that it was not the weapon used in the killings. But even if the envelope contained the knife, it could be difficult to prove it was the same one that Wattenberg said Simpson bought.

Gary Kalaydjian, owner of Recon 1, a knife shop in the San Fernando Valley that sells the same stiletto said Saturday that a knife has no serial number stamped on it.

Also, he said, a knife cannot be traced to a particular retailer by a lot number or control number.

But the owner of a knife shop in Santa Monica, Calif., who asked not to be identified, said that a knife could be tied to a place of purchase by marks left during a blade sharpening. Wattenberg testified that Simpson had asked that the knife he bought be sharpened. Kalaydjian said that by Friday, he had sold out his current stock of the stiletto and took orders for nine more.

Storm Alberto gains strength, might hit Alabama, N.W. Florida

CORAL GABLES, Fla. (AP) — Tropical Storm Alberto, still lopsided with most of its winds and rain east of its center, got a little stronger Saturday and was expected to drench parts of Florida, Alabama, and possibly Mississippi, forecasters said.

Hurricane warnings were issued for areas from Gulfport, Miss., to Cedar Key, Fla.

"I think it's going to continue towards the north," National Hurricane Center specialist Lixion Avila said Saturday afternoon. "The most important thing, it has gained some intensity and it's a little bit stronger now.

"The winds are 50 miles per hour, and we would not be surprised if by the time the center reaches land, it could be have some wind gusts of hurricane force winds, just on the threshold, at about 74 or 75 mph," Avila said.

Landfall was projected at midday today, according to an advisory issued at 3 p.m. CDT Saturday.

A tropical storm warning remained in effect for the northern Gulf of Mexico coast, from Gulfport, Miss., eastwards to Cedar Key, Florida.

"The projected track we have now is (Alberto) moving northwards," Avila said. "And it'll probably make land somewhere in the extreme northwest Florida Panhandle or somewhere between northwest Florida and Alabama — and perhaps even Mississippi, just the eastern part."

In Tallahassee, Florida Gov. Lawton Chiles declared a state of emergency for West. North and Central Florida, while the State Operations Emergency Center prepared for Tropical Storm Alberto's landfall. Chiles asked Florida residents along the Gulf coast to stay tuned to radio and television updates of the storm's progress.

"We want to make certain everyone stays safe, calm and out of harm's way," the governor said. Staying informed is the best way to do that."

Tropical Storm Alberto, which remained a disorganized cluster of thunderstorms, had top sustained winds of 50 mph Saturday afternoon.

"We can get a little more intensity," said Avila at the hurricane center. "Most of the weather, of the winds, are to the east of the center. "They'll probably get five to 10 inches of rain today east of the center," along Florida's Gulf coast.

The tropical storm watch, Avila noted, is aimed at getting residents in areas expected to get the storm to secure loose debris, and get ready for strong winds.

"Residents and visitors to the warned area should complete preparations by tonight for a strong tropical storm," the hurricane center said in its advisory. "Squally weather with gusts to near hurricane force is expected to spread over portions of the Florida Panhandle tonight."

At 3 p.m. CDT Saturday, Tropical Storm Alberto was centered near latitude 27.2 degrees north latitude and 87.0 degrees west longitude, or about 225 miles south of Pensacola. The storm was moving towards the north at 12 mph, and was expected to continue on that course through Saturday night.

Tropical Storm Alberto started out Thursday with the formation of a tropical depression off western Cuba.

Hot winds fan wildfires across Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho

Associated Press

Western wildfires spread by hot, dry winds burned across parts of four states Saturday, from the deserts of Arizona to Rocky Mountain forests.

Record-breaking heat and electrical storms combined to spark dozens of fires late in the week.

In Colorado, a 900-acre wildfire in woods west of Fort Collins flared up Saturday, pushed by gusty 25 mph winds and threatening a group of summer homes.

In Arizona, dozens of wildfires sparked by lightning had blackened nearly 80,000 acres of brush, grass and trees by Saturday.

Gov. Fife Symington asked the federal government to declare a state of emergency for all of Arizona.

Two Idaho range fires spread across more than 40,000 acres Saturday, but one was declared controlled and the second was contained.

Two smaller lightning-sparked forest fires burned in Southern California, keeping hundreds of firefighters busy Saturday, but each blaze affected less than 500 acres.

Secret transcripts shed light on Fed

NEW YORK (NYT) — Just weeks after the 1987 stock market crash, Federal Reserve policymakers grimly speculated that a run on the dollar might trigger renewed chaos or that consumer fears might cause a recession.

Despite their reassuring public pronouncements, they also confessed privately to an inability to foresee the economy's future with any certainty, according to previously secret transcripts released Friday.

In the middle of it all they could still joke with Fed Chairman Alan Greenspan about missing baseball's pennant race.

But Greenspan underscored the seriousness of the situation, saying at one point that the nation was closer to a monetary collapse "than we would like to believe."

The transcripts provide an extraordinary glimpse into the inner sanctum of the central bank during crisis. The Fed released some 600 pages of what it described as lightly edited transcripts from the period between Aug. 18, 1987, and July 19, 1988.

On Oct. 19, 1987, stock markets around the world plunged. The Dow Jones industrial average tumbled a record 508 points.

The Federal Reserve and its chairman, Greenspan, are widely credited with helping contain the damage by swiftly lowering interest rates and prodding banks to lend to strapped financial market investors.

At the time, policymakers suspected — but had no assurance — they would be successful in preventing the crash from setting off a worldwide economic downturn, as the 1929 stock crash did.

The Fed's chief policymaking group, the Federal Open Market Committee, held telephone conferences each workday from Oct. 16 to Oct. 30, 1987.

However, only one telephone transcript survives, a partial one from Oct. 20. Federal Reserve spokesman Joseph Coyne said Fed officials did not know why the other meetings weren't recorded.

Nation was closer to monetary collapse 'than we would like to believe,' Greenspan said.

Under pressure from Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez, D-Texas, chairman of the House Banking Committee, the Fed has been releasing transcripts more than five years old. In a statement, Gonzalez said the missing telephone transcripts illustrate the need for legislation requiring the Fed to make and release detailed records of its meetings.

On Oct. 20, Fed policymakers were in what Greenspan called "a crisis environment" and were focusing on the "immediate period of chaos."

An anxious E. Gerald Corrigan, then president of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, reported on conditions on Wall Street. "It's quite clear that a lot of people are not entirely sure where they are," he said.

By the time policymakers met face-to-face, on Nov. 3, they were breathing a bit easier but were still worried about a recurrence of market trouble and about the crash's impact on the broader economy.

PDAP's treatment program steers young, old away from drug abuse

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

The Palmer Drug Abuse Program in Midland continues to grow since its 1980 opening, and officials there are beginning to see changes in the kinds of people they treat, indicating the program is having an effect on the use of drugs and alcohol in the Midland population.

If current client loads are maintained for the rest of the year, the total number treated at PDAP could be 1,000 by the end of 1994, Executive Director Bob Savage said.

Unlike in the early years, most referrals to PDAP nowadays are not court referrals. Rather, patients come to the centers at the request of friends, peers, parents, churches and other means, Savage said.

Most of those being treated are no longer coming after their lives are to-

Fire officials step up manpower

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Local fire officials, as well as licensed fireworks vendors, are urging Permian Basin residents to take extra caution this year when celebrating the Fourth of July.

■ Severe conditions such as hot, dry weather call for extra precautions during Fourth of July weekend.

By Katherine Poteet
Staff Writer

Fire officials always get a little nervous on July 4th, when residents gather over barbecues and fireworks are more often than not found in the hands of young children.

This year, however, the stakes have been raised during one of the most dangerous holidays of the year.

Sweltering temperatures and no rain have turned the Permian Basin into a tinderbox just waiting to be ignited. And, residents, as well as firefighters, have already gotten a taste of what happens when a blaze is set.

After five days of temperatures above 100 degrees, an early evening thunderstorm Tuesday turned several hundred acres of land north of Highway 191 into a runaway range fire after lightning touched off more than seven blazes.

Another fire threatened residents in north Midland early Wednesday morning and yet another fire raged Wednesday afternoon off of FM 1788.

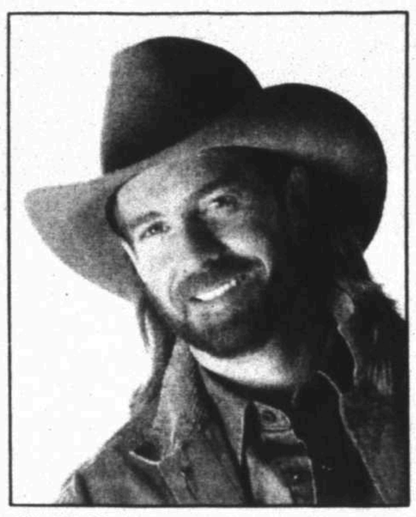

All of which has left firefighters not only tired, but highly anxious about the upcoming holiday.

"We always warn people to be careful with fireworks and open fires during the holiday, but this year, the conditions are severe," said Midland Fire Chief James Roberts.

Midland County Commissioners Court agreed, declaring a state of emergency at its Thursday meeting and banning fireworks such as skyrockets, bottle rockets or any firework that fires into the air. Open fires were also banned. All fireworks were prohibited on county roads and right-of-ways.

The potentially explosive conditions have led fire officials to step up their manpower this weekend and will have law enforcement officials aggressively

Country artist to sing during July 4 activities

By Georgia Todd Temple
Staff Writer

Country recording artist Martin Delray won't soon forget a recent experience he had while performing his song, "If the Wind Blows Sand," at an annual cow-chip throw in Beaver, Okla.

"We were playing out in the open on a dirt track speedway, and when we started playing that song, a 60-mile an hour wind came up and was blowing red dirt across the speedway and into the crowd," Delray said. "That was pretty wild."

West Texans, who are daily feeling more like the Sons of the Pioneers' quest for "Cool Water" and are eager for relief from the stifling heat, might prefer he sing pop star Paul Davis' late '70s hit "Cool Nights" during his 7 p.m. concert here today at Christensen Stadium, home of the Angels.

The fireworks display that follows the concert is the culmination of two days of activities that include the Living Historical Military Encampment.

Actor enjoys conventions but he misses his Star Trek family

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel
Staff Writer

Space — the final frontier. These are the voyages of the Starship Enterprise.

Star Trek fans of both eras know those words as the beginning of their favorite show. For 21-year-old actor Wil Wheaton the words hold even more meaning.

He was a regular cast member of "Star Trek: The Next Generation" for four seasons, starring first as Ensign Wesley Crusher before becoming Starfleet Cadet Wesley Crusher.

Wheaton joined TNG in its first season in 1987.

A creation of Gene Roddenberry, the original series Star Trek started out in 1966 and lasted only three seasons. Since then Trekkies get ready to beam up as the Starship Enterprise touches down briefly in Midland next Sunday when Trek-O-Rama '94 arrives at the Midland Hilton.

KPEJ Fox 24, the FOX affiliate for Midland-Odessa, will sponsor Trek-O-Rama '94. The Star Trek convention will feature Wil Wheaton, who portrayed Wesley Crusher on Star Trek: The Next Generation.

Trek-O-Rama is in its second year, having had its maiden voyage in Odessa in summer 1993. The convention is designed for fans of all the Star Trek series and subsequent movies. The latest Star Trek "gossip" is always a favorite of Trekkies.

GARY OTT

Large outdoor concerts should be against law

They're having the 25-year reunion of Woodstock later this summer, and like the first time around, I won't be there.

Ott

It's not a matter of money, and, for that matter, it has nothing to do with travel arrangements. Those obstacles, expensive though they are, can be overcome with a credit card or two.

What will stop me from attending, however, is the simple fact that the concert is being held outdoors.

I don't do large outdoor concerts.

There are several reasons for that . . . heat, wind, rain, dirt, mud and dust, just to name a few. Throw into that mix a healthy dose of strange-looking people with body odor and you begin to get the picture.

For some reason, being surrounded by a mob of sweaty people in 100-degree heat while sitting in a giant field of dirt — complete with lots of bugs and insects — does not appeal to me. Neither does the fact that you can't hear the music because the stage is located two counties away.

So, in effect, what you're doing is spending an entire weekend getting dirty and pretending to listen to songs that are being performed by band members you can't see . . . or hear.

Great fun, huh?

But, despite all those drawbacks, the first Woodstock turned out to be a huge success and, as a result, outdoor concerts became quite the rage all over the country. Perhaps the biggest proponent was Willie Nelson, who began hosting a series of Fourth of July picnics down around Austin.

It was one of the few things Willie Nelson has done in the past 20 years with which I do not approve, that and popularizing the wearing of earrings by male country-western singers.

Still, being the devoted fan that I am, I did my patriotic duty and attended his first extravaganza.

It was also my last.

And, it will remain my last.

Maybe the thing that turned me off most was the fact that the nearest parking spot required a two-hour walk just to get to a point where I could be told that I was at the wrong entrance. Or, perhaps it had something to do with the harsh realization that the only shade I was going to find was located in the middle of an ant bed. Or, and this was a biggie, maybe it was because I soon realized I had to go to the bathroom and there was nothing I could do about it except rapidly move my legs back and forth in a rather foolish — and unsuccessful — attempt to make the pain go away.

Making matters worse, my companion, who was never a particularly logical person, decided these conditions were somehow my fault, and, as a result, she spent the remainder of the day giving me hateful glances.

I, being the more mature one, responded by sticking my tongue out at her.

It was a truly delightful experience.

Which brings me back to my original point: large outdoor concerts — especially those that are held in giant ant beds — should be against the law, and I don't care if the greatest names in music are involved. Civilized people simply do not torture themselves by spending large periods of time playing in the dirt.

Little children do that. Grown-ups do not.

There comes a time when mature human beings must outgrow certain behavioral habits. This is one of those times.

After all, we're not kids any longer. We're responsible adults, leaders of our communities. We must change our ways.

So the next time you get the urge to attend one of those giant concerts, be strong. Resist the temptation.

Instead, do the adult thing. Turn your stereo up full blast, grab an old tennis racket, stand in front of a full-length mirror and perform your best Eric Clapton imitation.

Ahh, maturity is a wonderful thing.

ACTOR: Former Star Trek cast member misses series, family of co-stars

there has been an animated series, six major motion pictures with another due out this year and two spinoff series — TNG and Deep Space 9 — with completely new casts.

A Star Trek fan himself, Wheaton speaks fondly of both the Star Trek shows and his co-stars on TNG.

"I love Star Trek," Wheaton simply said.

In addition to his attachment to TNG and its stars, Wheaton obviously admired Roddenberry, who also created TNG and shaped the Wesley character.

According to "The Star Trek: The Next Generation Companion" by Larry Nemecek, Roddenberry's creation of the Wesley Crusher character was very meaningful to him.

"Although I identify with every character," Nemecek quoted Roddenberry, "I identify probably more so with Wesley because he is me at 17. He is the things I dream of being and doing."

Additionally, Wesley is Roddenberry's middle name.

Nemecek quoted a memo passed between Roddenberry and one of TNG's producers that indicated how the character, who was young and inexperienced, would be selected for bridge duty, despite his obvious brilliance.

"Because of his youth, Wesley Crusher has not yet had to learn to go with the herd and compromise his thinking just because compromising is easier and more socially acceptable. He has the ability to grow with the job and to devise new approaches and new capabilities for whatever unforeseen events we encounter. In effect, he is a one-man think tank without preconditioned limitations," the memo stated.

The character of Wesley was the teen son of the chief medical officer, Dr. Beverly Crusher, on the U.S.S. Enterprise. He was seen as a prodigy when it came to mathematical technologies and was allowed to be a part of the bridge-crew on the starship despite his tender age.

As the character grew older he left to attend Starfleet Academy. Later he left the academy to pursue other interests.

Wheaton said many of the transitions and characteristics in Wesley's life and his life are congruous.

"The public didn't see much of Wesley other than 'Yes sir, no sir.' But there is a lot of me that is part of Wesley," Wheaton said.

He described Wesley as a brainy teen who probably didn't have many friends his age on the Enterprise, mostly because of his intimidating intellect. He also mentioned Wesley was "kind of shy with girls."

"Most of my life I've been a nerd and have been shunned by my peers," Wheaton said correlating his life to Wesley's.

Wesley's departure from TNG was an interesting choice, Wheaton said, with Wesley seeking to broaden his horizons and search for his destiny.

"It was very allegorical to my own life," Wheaton said.

He explained that in the last year he took a break from acting to "explore myself." During his sabbatical, he worked for a computer company.

"It was an enlightening experience. While I was gone I realized I wanted to act," Wheaton said.

"I don't think Wesley got that opportunity" to come full circle on TNG and realize he was destined to complete his stint at the academy and return to the Enterprise crew, Wheaton said.

Similar to Wesley, who was born on a starship, grew up on a starship and just assumed he would join Starfleet, Wheaton said, he was born into a family highly involved in the entertainment industry.

"There was a wonderful scene in the final episode (he appeared in) when I explained that I wanted to see what else was out there because I had always been around Starfleet. I had a very similar conversation with my mother when I thought maybe I didn't want to be an actor," Wheaton said.

"I was born into the entertainment industry and I took for granted I would be in the entertainment industry throughout school, so I didn't take my studies very seriously. That was a colossal mistake."

Since then, Wheaton has decided he would like to attend college and seek a degree.

Wheaton left TNG in its fourth season returning for occasional guest roles before the show quit production this past year.

He was already a fan of Star Trek when he joined the cast and since departing the show has become an even bigger fan.

"In the last year or so I've become a real big admirer of The Next Generation," Wheaton said.

While he enjoys TNG shows better than the original episodes, he praised the original series for its role in changing television and society.

He described a kiss shared by Captain James T. Kirk (William Shatner) and Lt. Uhura (Nichelle Nichols) in one of the episodes. Kirk kissing a woman wasn't too unusual; however, Uhura is an African-American woman.

"That was absolutely groundbreaking. It was the first interracial kiss on television. You have to realize that was in 1968 during the heat of the civil rights movement," Wheaton said enthusiastically.

Although Wheaton left TNG voluntarily to pursue more feature film roles, the completion of production disappointed him.

"Its been incredibly sad for me," Wheaton said.

"It was a comfort to know it was still being made . . . knowing that I could go to the set any time and still be around my surrogate family," Wheaton said.

"That's gone now."

"There has been an enormous change in my life. I feel a part of it has come to a conclusion. I mean, I can turn on the television every day and watch the show, but it's like I've moved away from my family," Wheaton said.

Another reason Wheaton is disappointed TNG stopped production is the loss of one television's few quality shows.

"The Next Generation is good, quality television. Not like the garbage on the sea of television today," Wheaton said.

"Star Trek consistently rises above the level of what we see on television," he added.

"Also, Star Trek, both series, had a great impact. Just look at the world today. Star Trek is an important show — it says we have a future. For everyday people to see and accept these bizarre aliens and strange cultures in the 20th century while today we are so busy killing ourselves; its amazing," Wheaton said.

Although a major motion picture featuring TNG and the original Star Trek crews is due out this year, Wheaton won't be a part of it.

Wesley Crusher is not part of the movie, Wheaton said, which "kind of bums me out."

However, Wheaton did give some insight into the movie indicating he has heard rumors that the uniforms and even the Enterprise may be changed from the series.

"I've heard that all that resembles Gene Roddenberry has been taken away and that is disappointing," Wheaton said.

Despite having no role in the upcoming motion picture, Wheaton has been immortalized as Wesley Crusher with an action figure.

When asked how he felt about his own action figure, he responded "I'd probably be more excited if it resembled me."

Wheaton is pretty accurate on that point — the Cadet Wesley Crusher action figure doesn't resemble the collector card with Wheaton's picture on it.

Despite those disappointments, Wheaton is excited to be a part of the continuance of Star Trek by participating in Star Trek conventions such as the one coming to Midland next Sunday.

Wheaton said he enjoys attending the conventions and meeting the fans. He said he dislikes strictly question-and-answer sessions because he doesn't get a chance to visit with people.

He said he enjoys philosophizing with fans and presenting some of his written works at the conventions.

"I like going to show fans I'm not the 14-year-old pain in the a-- I was on Star Trek. I'm a grown-up now who is educated and can share my ideas," Wheaton said.

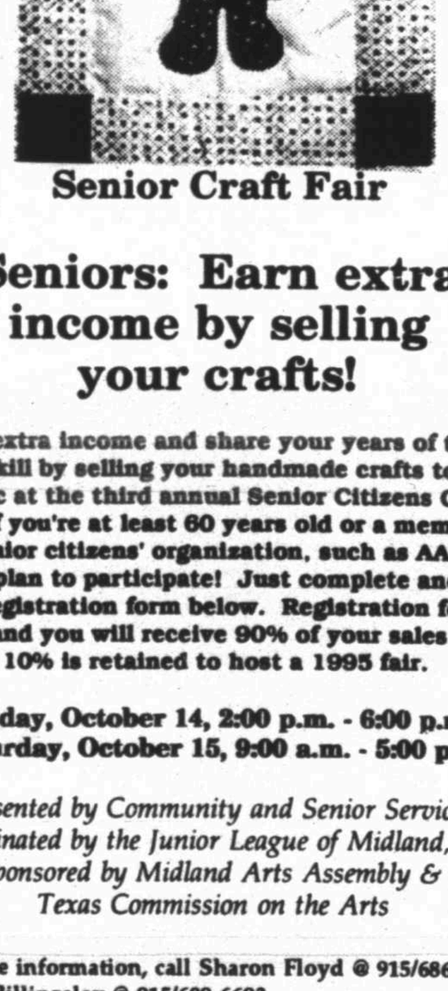

Beyond his stint as Wesley on TNG, Wheaton has also received critical acclaim for his starring roles in the movies "Toy Soldiers" and "Stand By Me."

Although Wheaton began acting at age 7, he established his career with the role of Gordie in Rob Reiner's "Stand By Me."

Wheaton said being a part of that movie "profoundly affected his life" by giving him the opportunity to read for more roles as well as be considered for more roles.

"On the flip side, Wil Wheaton is nearly 22 years old and it's hard to

TREKKIES: Event comes to Midland

(From 1B)

"There will be a lot of vendors, who have virtually any kind of Trek merchandise anyone could possibly want," said Becky Kelly-Norris, promotions director of KPEJ-TV. "T-shirts, comic books, trading cards, even phasers and communicators — you name it, they'll have it."

"If you haven't had a chance to see the famous Star Trek blooper reels, they really are a must-see. There will be door prize drawings all day and a costume contest and some people put a lot of work into their costumes. They really are a sight to see.

"And of course, there's the opportunity to meet our terrific guest star, Wil Wheaton. If he's anything like stars at other conventions I've attended, he'll be very entertaining," Ms. Kelly-Norris said.

The convention is slated for noon to 6 p.m. Sunday, July 10, at the Midland Hilton.

Ticket prices are $14 at the door; $12 in advance; $9 for children 6-11; children under 6 are free. Discounts are available for college, military and Starfleet fan club members who present a valid I.D. at the door. To purchase advance tickets call 1-800-243-8328. CAREFUL: Officials take holiday precautions enforcing city ordinances and the commissioners' ruling.

"We have the assurance of the police department and the county law officials that they will vigorously and aggressively enforce all fireworks ordinances," Roberts said. "And, the courts have assured us that they will aggressively prosecute anyone caught illegally firing fireworks."

Roberts said the fire department will bring in off-duty personnel today and Monday, adding about six extra firefighters to the normal daily total of 40-45. In addition, all volunteer firefighters will be called in and water trucks and road graders will be distributed throughout the county.

Officials are urging residents to attend public fireworks displays. Fireworks will be shot after the game at Angel Stadium today and Water Wonderland will have displays today and Monday.

"Displays are put on by people who are licensed," Roberts said. "They have a lot of regulations they have to go by. They have to clear off areas around the displays, have fire protection devices available, have to clear out a fallout area. These are professionals."

Those residents who still insist on popping fireworks are reminded by officials that it is illegal to possess or explode any fireworks within the city limits. The fireworks will be confiscated and fines can range from $1 to $2,000. The standard fine is $500.

Firecrackers that are not fired into the air may still be exploded in the county, but extra caution is advised.

"People need to be very careful this year and take all precautions," Roberts said.

Safe guidelines for discharging fireworks include:

- Discharge fireworks only in open, calm areas, away from brush, automobiles, houses or power lines.
- Keep water handy.
- Buy fireworks only from a licensed vendor.
- Never let children use fireworks unattended by an adult.
- Stay a safe distance from an ignited firework and never touch a firework once it has been lit.
- Cool the remains of fireworks with water.

SING: Country star to perform at stadium

(From 1B)

A military fly over of F-16s speaking from their cockpits to the crowds begins at 5 p.m. This show includes Ole Olson performing aerobatic drills and an army repelling team dropping out of an Apache helicopter and performing a drill prior to the concert.

Proceeds benefit Casa de Amigos. Gates open at 3:30 p.m. Tickets are $8 for box seats, $6 for reserved grandstand and $5 for general admission with those 5 and under admitted free.

Delray, whose videos include "Get Rhythm," featuring Johnny Cash and the remake of his rockabilly hit, and "Lillie's White Lies," has "always been fascinated with music.

"Seems like the first thing I ever remember hearing was my parents having the local (country) radio station on in the mornings," Delray said.

He first began singing when he was 13 or 14, and his friend, Jack Hill, acquired a guitar from his older brother who was in Vietnam courtesy of the U.S. Air Force. Hill started playing guitar and the two sang together. Not too many months later, Delray bought his own guitar.

"The first professional gig I had was at the local VFW hall in Bentonville, and I think we made like $5 — big money," said the Arkansas native, laughing.

Delray had a country band while in high school, but found himself playing rock 'n' roll and rhythm and blues in college.

"My guitar playing is probably based more on rock 'n' roll and rhythm and blues, but my voice is country."

After graduating from the University of Arkansas with a bachelor of science degree in political science, his next stop was the U.S. Marines, where he only played music for his own enjoyment.

When he was discharged, he and a musician from his college band days went into a booking and talent agency.

"I didn't really enjoy it, but it did give me a feel for the other side of the business. So, I've got a little sympathy for these guys who are booking talent."

He next co-managed a recording studio in Arkansas, which was loosely tied to the booking agency, and produced Northwest Arkansas acts of all kinds.

Then, he spent a year playing nightclubs in Fort Smith before moving to Los Angeles, where he played the Southern California honky tonk circuit and became a staff writer with Dawn Breaker Music, the Seals and Crofts Publishing Company. During that time he had his first recording as a writer — "Old Fashioned Love," a No. 1 hit for The Kendalls.

In early 1983, Delray moved to Nashville, signed as a writer with Terrace Music and made a singles recording contract under another name. This contract landed him a couple of chart records that didn't get out of the 70s, and he didn't put a band together and go out and tour.

With his career seemingly stymied, he began dividing his time between playing guitar in the summer with a band and substitute teaching in the winter in Nashville. He was still writing songs and trying to sign a record contract.

As the 1980s became the 1990s, Delray found himself, through producer Blake Mevis and Atlantic/Nashville's vice president of operations Rick Blackburn, signing with the Nashville office of Atlantic Records, which released his debut album "Get Rhythm" in 1991. The LP scored a Top 20 record with the title track and yielded the No. 1 hit video "Lillie's White Lies," which has since become one of country music's most requested videos.

His years in the music business have taught him that perseverance is the single most important quality a performer needs to have, he said. He also has learned that other factors contribute to the success equation.

"Time can play a big role in what level of success you achieve. Any time you go through that whole process, you learn a lot. I was naive a little bit. I tended to think if I took care of my end of the business, everybody else was going to take care of their responsibilities."

His experience taught him that wasn't the case.

"We definitely had success off the first album. 'Lillie's White Lies' was the No. 1 video; it should have been the No. 1 record. I think the record company probably missed the boat on it."

With the release of the LP "What Kind of Man?" recorded at Scruggs Sound Studio and produced by Mevis, Delray feels confident that his dream of making a living as a recording artist is coming true.

This week, he and his band, The Twangmen — drummer and vocalist Bill Bonnette, bass guitarist and vocalist Don Morris and pedal steel guitarist Dannie Jones — have been invited to headline the Nashville Entertainment Association's Music City Music 1994. The two-day event offers 10 unsigned U.S. and Canadian acts the chance to showcase their talent in front of record executives, talent agencies, managers and publishers.

"They decided to have a special guest to close the show," Delray said. "It's an opportunity for us to be seen by those we want to be seen by. All these other acts get to do three songs. We get to play an hour and actually show our stuff."

When he's not working on his recording career, Delray is participating in another passion of his — tennis.

"One of my biggest goals I got accomplished this year was I co-captained the team that won the Music City Tennis Invitational. Out of 150 players I was the only recording artist. So, hopefully, one day there will be the Martin Delray Invitational Tennis Tournament."

'Groom-a-thon' benefitted Midland's SPCA

Staff Report

The Animal Outreach Association (A.O.A.) of Midland and V.I.P. Grooming recently co-sponsored a "groom-a-thon" benefitting Midland's SPCA.

Regular V.I.P. customers cooperated by taking their "best friends" to V.I.P. on a day when the shop was usually closed. Members of A.O.A., some of whom are professional groomers, donated their time and expertise of the day's activity and all proceeds were donated to the SPCA of Midland.

The A.O.A. is a tax-exempt, non-profit, charitable organization created in 1993 by four Midland women who are committed to helping the many unfortunate dogs and cats in the city and county.

For additional information on the A.O.A., write P.O. Box 11411. Midland, Texas, 79702, or call 684-8149.

High temperatures raise danger of fire

Extremely hot and dry conditions prompted both Midland and adjoining Ector counties last week to ban use of certain fireworks and outside burning in hopes of preventing more grass fires. Local officials were wise to take that step, particularly with the Fourth of July celebration on Monday.

Numerous grassfires during the past week kept area fire departments busy and aptly illustrated the fire danger that exists with the high temperatures and dry conditions. A fire that starts from lightning or a cigarette thrown from a vehicle and whipped to flames by the incessant plains wind, can spread rapidly through the dry prairie grass, threatening fences, livestock, homes and people.

For the ban on specific fireworks and outside burning to be effective, though, it's essential that Midland and other area residents adhere to the ban. Midland County Commissioners banned use of "skyrockets with sticks" and winged "missiles" which explode in midair and can cause fires. As County Judge Charles W. "Bro" Seltzer noted, the fireworks ban and disaster declaration will be renewed as long as the threat of wildfires remains.

Midland County Fire Marshal Dale Little has also urged the county's residents to be extremely cautious with fire now. "With the wind that we've got and the high temperatures, it's not going to get any better," said Little.

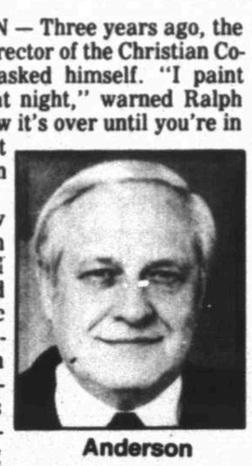

Keeping grass fires from starting and reporting any fires that they see is the responsibility of every person. The quicker that a fire is reported to proper authorities, the faster that fire units can be dispatched and the fire can be brought under control.

Remember that the grass fire danger is extremely high now. Work to prevent fires from starting. A fire that gets out of control can be deadly.

Some Democrats stalk religious right

WASHINGTON — Three years ago, the executive director of the Christian Coalition unmasked himself. "I paint my face and travel at night," warned Ralph Reed. "You don't know it's over until you're in a body bag. You don't know until election night."

Anderson

Democrats are now paying rapt attention to Reed. At a political boot-camp sponsored by the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee on June 17 and 18, congressional incumbents underwent basic training for their upcoming campaigns — including lead-off seminars on combating the religious right.

Democrats are girding for battle because the religious right is delivering votes and doing the GOP's dirty work. Disinformation and distortion are their weapons — as President Clinton recently complained — but so is a seductively simple message. As one of the organizers of the DCCC event told us: "The religious right has legs because they speak a language that most Americans agree with. Most believe that the country's going to hell in a hand basket. They want simple answers to very complex social problems..."

The DCCC answer to the political threat also sounds simple. Confidential DCCC strategy documents lay out a counterattack for incumbents that relies heavily on detective work, polling and cultivating friendly clergy. Here are some of the elements:

■ Included in a list of "warning sings of radical right activity" is whether a district has "active Christian radio stations." Anti-gay, domestic partnership initiatives and school voucher proposals are also bad omens.

■ The intelligence-gathering steps include compiling information on the radical right from all available sources. Speak with "friendly local ministers regarding any radical right activity apparent in the religious community. Ask them to help identify any current or new 'evangelical' churches in the region with relatively large congregations." Even "moderate local Republican" leaders can be allies, the document states, as well as local teachers unions.

■ Next is a systematic effort to "determine who or what the radical right groups are targeting." One recommendation is to "recruit volunteers to monitor and tape Christian radio programs and local call in programs..." The DCCC suggests sending "a friend to sign on to radical right or Christian coalition mailing lists."

■ Under "countering radical right organizing against your campaign," incumbents are advised to unleash pollsters to test a series of questions, even where the religious right hasn't surfaced. "Place Pat Robertson on the feeling thermometer scale.... Test reactions to extreme positions taken by the radical right on issues, such as abortion. ... Ask voters if they'd be more or less likely to 'support a candidate who has the backing of the Christian Coalition.'" That question should be preceded with this description: "The Christian Coalition is a conservative religious organization led by Pat Robertson."

■ Democratic campaigns should expose radical right activity. "Have friends write letters-to-the-editor denouncing the extremism of the radical right."

In the "state by state radical right listings," the Democrats may be succumbing to some of the sleazy stereotyping that is the trademark of the radical right. In Georgia, mainstream right-wingers such as the Christian Coalition and Focus on Family are listed with the Aryan Resistance League. In Mississippi, pro-life groups are in the same company as the Ku Klux Klan.

OTHER VIEWS

Clinton shouldn't burden folks with his problems

It is worth noting that President Bill Clinton wouldn't be piling up so many legal bills if his powerful position didn't make him such a tempting target.

It also is worth noting that Clinton wouldn't be piling up such hefty legal bills if he were willing to settle for lawyers who charge moderate fees.

But here is the president, slogging through a swamp of legal troubles with some of the nation's priciest lawyers at his side. So he has taken to wondering, apparently, if some of his fellow Americans might have pity on him and chip in to cut the cost of his bills.

Americans are a generous people, of course, quick to respond when well-meaning folks hit a spell of bad luck. But there is something about this pitch that doesn't sit quite right.

We elect presidents, after all, to help solve our nation's problems — not to burden us with their own.

Hawaiian representative shows hypocrisy on health

It would be hard to top U.S. Rep. Patsy Mink, D-Hawaii, for hypocrisy.

When the House Education and Labor Committee on which she serves began working up a health-care bill modeled on the Clinton plan, which she co-sponsored, Mink quickly moved to get a waiver for her home state.

She apparently views government-run health care the same way most people view nuclear waste disposal: A great idea, but not in my back yard.

You know, maybe she's right.

GEORGE WILL

Americans should recall Whiskey Rebellion

WASHINGTON — Two hundred years ago this Independence Day, Western Pennsylvania was acting altogether too independent. It was up in arms and jeopardizing what had been accomplished in Eastern Pennsylvania at the Constitutional Convention seven years earlier. This Independence Day let us remember the Whiskey Rebellion, with its interesting echoes.

Will

In exchange for Hamilton's agreement to a national capital where Washington now is, Jefferson and Madison agreed to federal assumption of state debts. An excise tax on whiskey was considered the least objectionable means of financing assumption. The initial grievances of people near the coast were palliated by reductions of the tax, but the West, across the Allegheny Mountains, was unassuaged.

Out there, folks didn't cotton to tax collectors. And as to the theory that the cost of the tax could be bumped along to consumers, well, the tax was collected at the still and owners of stills often were consumers, there being few other amusements at hand. Furthermore, currency was scarce so whiskey sometimes served as currency. And because canals were few and roads were problematic, it was difficult getting grain to market in bulk, so grain was turned into something more transportable: whiskey.

Taxing this staple proved that taxation with representation was not much more tolerable than taxation without. It was unfair, for several reasons, said these early populists.

Some large distillers, who could pay the tax more easily than their small rivals, rather liked it. (Just as today some large corporations accept government burdens that will cripple their smaller competitors.) And the Westerners felt they were being taxed to fatten the purses of Eastern speculators.

And what were the Westerners getting for their taxes? The federal government had neither removed the Indian menace nor pried Spain's grip off the Mississippi. Westerners, like most Americans most of the time ever since, wanted government to do more and cost less.

Law-abiding Westerners trembled. James Flexner, Washington's biographer, writes: "The inhabitants of the little metropolis of Pittsburgh — 200 houses, 150 built of logs — were in terror that their town would be sacked by the wild men of the forest." With reason. A wealthy friend of the president, John Neville, who first opposed the tax then agreed to help collect it, had his house burned. Soldiers arrived, a man was killed, the soldiers were routed. Soon stills whose owners paid the tax were being perforated with bullets, and government agents were being tarred and feathered, and even seared with hot irons, which was somewhat severe, even for tax collectors.

But rough justice was in character for the insurgents, who were stiff-necked Scotch-Irish Presbyterians.

Excisemen had been familiar afflictions back in Scotland and Ulster and "had come to serve as acceptable objects for social aggression."

A Scotch-Irish congressman, James Jackson, who understood the ravenousness of government, warned the House of Representatives, "The time will come when a shirt shall not be washed without an excise." Excise taxes frequently are fixed upon the enjoyments of the portion of the people least nimble at finagling exemptions. The tax on whiskey spared the effete Eastern upper crust that went on sipping untaxed wines.

It is ever thus. Today cigarettes are not only anathematized by government, they may soon be burdened by a whopping excise tax increase, evidence that the middle and upper classes have decided smoking is declasse, and that smoking is increasingly a habit of the lower orders.

George Will's column is distributed by Washington Post Writers Group.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, July 3, the 184th day of 1994. There are 181 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On July 3, 1863, the three-day Civil War Battle of Gettysburg, Pa., ended in a major victory for the North when confederate troops retreated.

On this date:

In 1608, the city of Quebec was founded by Samuel de Champlain.

In 1775, Gen. George Washington took command of the Continental Army at Cambridge, Mass.

In 1890, Idaho became the 43rd state of the union.

In 1898, the Navy defeated a Spanish fleet in the harbor at Santiago, Cuba, during the Spanish-American War.

In 1930, Congress created the Veterans Administration.

In 1944, 50 years ago, during World War II, Soviet forces recaptured Minsk.

In 1950, American and North Korean forces clashed for the first time in the Korean War.

In 1962, Algeria became independent after 132 years of French rule.

In 1971, singer Jim Morrison of The Doors died in Paris at age 27.

In 1986, President Reagan presided over a gala ceremony in New York Harbor that saw the relighting of the renovated Statue of Liberty.

In 1987, British millionaire Richard Branson and Swedish-born Per Lindstrand became the first hot-air balloon travelers to cross the Atlantic Ocean.

In 1988, the U.S.S. Vincennes shot down an Iran Air jetliner over the Persian Gulf, killing all 290 passengers and crew, after the crew of the Vincennes misidentified the plane as an Iranian F-14.

RUSSELL BAKER

New ism runs rampant throughout the nation

In May I became aware of the disturbing new ism that is loose in America. It is activism.

Activism must have been putting its roots down for several years because it was in full bloom when I first noticed it. In fact, activism and activists — people who believe in the doctrine of activism — had become as commonplace in the media as Communism and Communists had been back during the cold war.

Russell Baker

Had I detected a new menace of which hardened investigative reporters were still unaware? I began collecting media references to activism and activists, and had a trunk full in a jiffy.

What's astonishing is the tremendous variety of forms that activism now takes and the many shapes in which these curious activists come. A man pictured berating the governor of Florida in the May 16 issue of U.S. News & World Report, for instance, was identified as an "angry ecoactivist."

From the story I deduced that an "ecoactivist" believes in the doctrine of "activism" toward or about ecology. Considering what's happening to the world, this seems very likely to make him an "angry ecoactivist."

An even more extraordinary find was the "equitation activist" who popped out of The Washington Times. A man of the Virginia horse country, in a Times interview, spoke of one of his three daughters. She was, he said, "the strongest equitation activist" of the three.

Is the horse world now undermined by a doctrine of "equitation activism"? What is "equitation activism" anyhow?

The Washington Times also reported on "pro-life activists" conducting a sit-in. Sitting-in seems more passivist than activist, but activism can apparently take many shapes, including simple relentlessness.

Thus a cover picture on the magazine U.S.A. Weekly identifies Edward James Olmos as a "relentless actor-activist."

Even high-brow publications are not above joining the common press in seeking out and exposing activists. Thus The New York Review of Books for May 19 identifies a man in a 1907 photograph as "the Jewish activist Alexander Braudo," and The New Yorker of June 6 identifies Sir Isaiah Berlin as, among other things, "an activist in Jewish affairs."

A New York Times story about the new Supreme Court appointee, Judge Stephen Breyer, reported not only that he had been praised by "community activists," but also that he seemed better fitted for the work than "a more abrasive activist."

"Student activists," "anti-abortion activists," "AIDS activists," "conservative activists," "liberal activists" and "civil-rights activists" were a dime a dozen, of course. Sometimes you could guess from the context of the story what distinguished these hackneyed old "activists" from people who were not "activists," but reporters often seemed to use the "activist" label to outwit their editors when they didn't quite know what people did or couldn't possibly describe it.

A Washington Post headline, for instance, referred to "California Activists." Their activism aimed at stamping out smoking, not stamping out California. "Hundreds of activists" turned up in a Post obituary, referring to people who worked in the campaign to register blacks to vote in Mississippi in the 1964 "Freedom Summer."

The Associated Press referred to "black activist, convicted police killer" Mumia Abu-Jamal. Is the AP slyly suggesting that "black activism" must lead to terrible crime?

As in this instance, "activism" often seems vaguely like something of which the reporter disapproves and the "activist" like someone the reporter regards as a nuisance, a kook, a trouble-maker. Not always, though. The "activists" being detained by the Chinese government in a Washington Post story are clearly the good guys we all cheered in the Tiananmen Square uprising.

And what of "activist celebrities" like the actor Ed Asner, who appeared in the same AP story that starred the "black activist, convicted police killer"?

Russell Baker's column is distributed by New York Times News Service.

Man questions Williams' red-shirted road crews

I want to voice my views regarding the article written by Ed Todd entitled "County Crew Transforms Marred Road" in which he alluded to as the biggest pothole in Midland County — County Road 1160.

Johnny Williams seems to have little trouble finding the biggest potholes — good for him! Now that he's "honed" his eyesight, perhaps he also can zero in on CR 140 East along with several others in like condition. . .namely, bad. While the potholes are small, and maybe not newsworthy, it does make you aware of how numerous the potholes are when the kids use the roadway for a giant Wahoo game board.

The $430,000 cost, being approximately half of what a "profit making road builder would charge," should come in quite handy to cover the insurance liabilities (i.e. damage lawsuits, bodily injuries — employee related as well as the general public), excessive equipment maintenance and repairs just to mention some of the problems associated with the hiring of county inmates with no experience in operating heavy equipment. "We're teaching them out there as we go along" Williams said. Has anyone inquired as to the cost of this equipment? Are we satisfied these people in the red suits (prisoners) are being punished severely enough? After all, they're not locked up — that's punishment! No guards are supervising or monitoring their actions; evidently they must be "trustees." If the red suits don't need to be in jail, free up the bed space for our next batch of road crews who will be placed on very expensive county equipment and trained by the "as we go along" practice.

I wonder. . .are there just a few of us who were taught you must render honest work in order to pay your own way in this world, abide by the rules and try to be a contributing, decent member of the human race. . .that "good" is where the rewards are found? Or are we sending signals to young and old alike — those who break the rules don't get punished. No, they go to jail where they receive free room and board, free medical and dental insurance and are provided with the means of acquiring college diplomas, (free to them, of course) and are given the jobs of people who've followed the rules and are trying to provide for their families.

Well, I guess after Mr. Williams' road building days are over, he can open his own employment firm — all of us know where he can find lots of red-suited clients.

Youngsters deserve place to skate safely

As a parent of a junior high-age son, I commend the resourceful folks who are offering our kids an opportunity to skate unimpeded each Thursday evening during the Summer in the City program. Thank you for your concern for, and belief in, Midland's youth. Too often we focus on the problems generated by a few undisciplined youth. Instead we should celebrate the gift we have in the majority. Those fine kids and all they accomplish in school and in other scholastic achievements, organized sports, youth groups, church groups, community groups, music, etc.

Gone are the lazy days of summer when kids skate and bike through their peaceful neighborhoods, play games in the street and on vacant lots. Today's fast-paced lifestyles, neighborhood anonymity, insurance concerns and the constant fear of potential danger to self and property have virtually shut our kids up in their homes. Kids can't play in-line hockey in the street in front of their own homes without a permit to close the street (these are virtually impossible to obtain due to numerous restrictions, we've tried). Skating is legal only on sidewalks. Parking lots and vacant lots are private property, subject to trespassing restrictions.

Kids that excel in school, participate in organized sports and youth groups, play in the school bands and orchestras are praised for their achievements in such but become "juvenile delinquents" the moment they strap on their in-line skates to play the fledging sport of in-line skate hockey.

We tell our kids, "Just Say No" to drugs, alcohol and sex. We expect our kids to "do their best" in school, sports, community service, etc. When are we going to say, "YES" to their needs and desires as a reward for fulfilling our expectations?

Midland needs a place for kids to skate safely and legally. There's no privately owned skating rink in Midland that allows in-line skaters on their floor. How about a skate park?

Again, I thank the fine folks who are allowing our kids to skate legally for an hour and a half each Thursday at Summer in the City. It's the best we have, and we appreciate it.

Girl's softball league board gets 3 strikes

It's time for a changing of the guard within the Midland United Girls Softball Association (MUGS) Board. During the recent MUGS city tournament, a double elimination format was scheduled and used until the championship game. The night before this game, coaches and parents of the team that won the winners bracket were informed by the board that only one game would be played even if the undefeated team lost. This is not a double elimination format, and worse, it is blatantly unfair to the young ladies who fought hard to reach the finals. A formal written protest was filed by the parents prior to the championship game, but to no avail. The board was not only unresponsive but arrogant and rude as well. The board president even asked me, "How long have you been in Midland?"

The issue at stake was fairness, not my arrival date in this outstanding community! It's time for MUGS parents to take back their girls' softball association from an entrenched board.

I have been living on the South Side of Midland for about two and a half years, and I am puzzled. Every time we have an electrical storm here, the lights go out.

Personally, I like it, but I am concerned because there are a lot of senior members in this community, as well as children.

What puzzles me is this, on several occasions, I have, after a storm, ridden around to see if the lights were out all over town. . .they were not. In fact the area that is always dark for the longest amount of time (from hours to days), is from U.S. Highway 80 to Florida Street (and possibly beyond Florida) and Fairgrounds Road to Terrell Street. I realize that this is an old neighborhood, but some of the other areas are just as old. If the backup and/or repair service in those areas has been maintained or replaced to the extent that their service interruptions are minimal, why is it that we cannot get the same service?

Bush has what it takes to be governor of Texas

George W. Bush is for concealed weapons and is endorsed by the Texas Rifle Association. Gov. Ann Richards vetoed a bill that would have put the issue before the voters.

Bush's goals are to improve the way our children are educated, provide safe streets and have jobs available for everyone who wants one.

Bush believes in getting tough. He wants anyone on welfare cut off after two years and to force recipients to work or to go to school while on welfare. He believes that unwed mothers who give birth to a third child, while on welfare, should not receive increased benefits for the third child and that unwed mothers on welfare must identify the fathers. Welfare spending increased 142 percent during Ann Richards' tenure in office. Aid to families with dependent children has grown 20 percent since she took office. Bush also supports the idea that the driver's licenses of parents who abandon their children should be revoked.

I agree with George W. Bush's statement that "the state needs a governor who can tell the federal government when to butt out of Texas' business. . .who has the courage and the will to stand up to the intrusive federal government. . .and I think that it's going to be me."

I feel a vote for George W. Bush for governor of Texas is our best bet for our future.

Outback Steakhouse helps Midland youth

Thanks to all the Midlanders who braved the record heat and waited in line on June 27th to welcome the Outback Steakhouse and support Big Brothers-Big Sisters. Outback donated the food, drinks, service and all the proceeds from their opening celebration to our organization. Their staff worked hard all evening to fill our guests with their great food and drinks. Managing partners Tony Miles and David Schwab can be very proud of the hospitality we received.

Big Brothers-Big Sisters will use the much-needed funds from this event to recruit, screen and match adult mentors with children from single-parent homes throughout Midland. Over 130 children are currently matched and another 160 children are still waiting for a Big Brother or Sister.

We Midlanders are fortunate to have another good restaurant to enjoy. Big Brothers-Big Sisters is grateful to the new Outback Steakhouse for their very generous support.

Judeo-Christian tradition supports health reform

The United States spends more than any other country on health care, yet our vast resources are distributed very inequitably. Some receive more care than they need, while others have none. While our Judeo-Christian tradition does not provide a detailed technical solution to this health-care dilemma, it does nevertheless provide several important principles, founded on justice, which we can, and need to, apply.

Our bodies are not just shells that hold our spirits, but mysterious realizations of the power and love of God. We are created in God's image. This makes health care, which preserves and heals the body, a basic human right and unlike any other kind of human service. Throughout most of history, health care has been seen as an altruistic, other-directed activity undertaken for its own rewards. As an altruistic profession, the greatest reward of health care is the service rendered.

Many people fear that health care reform is primarily a matter of raising taxes and putting the government into the business of health care. Health-care reform is not just a matter of more or less government involvement, but of achieving justice.

Justice is a virtue, which assures that each receives his or her due. This means, on the one hand, that health-care benefits should be allocated according to need, while, on the other hand, we keep in mind what is best for our collective good.

One of the most contentious issues in health-care reform is "Who is going to pay for it?" This also is a primary concern of justice, since the cost as well as the goods of health care have to be justly distributed. The basic principle should be that we receive according to our need, and pay according to our ability.

After the fear of taxes, the greatest obstacle to serious health-care reform is the fear of rationing. The amount we spend on health care should enable us to provide universal access with very few waits and with restrictions on only the most exotic and marginally effective treatments. Justice is not an exact science, but it surely dictates that we begin with what is best for the greatest number of us most of the time. That means working toward a system in which everyone has immediate access to basic, preventive and emergency care.

Walvoord represents fair, honest judge

This is a letter in praise and commendation of Judge Al Walvoord. He is a man who also is a judge who possesses a remarkable God-given talent for seeing the truth in any number of situations and circumstances. The undeniable fact that he is honest and fair with high morals and standards that he lives by makes him a unique and praiseworthy judge and man. We should all be thankful that he is a resident and judge in Midland County as well as a fine representation of the kind of man we all admire — the type who is sadly diminishing.

Judge Walvoord has spent untold hours in the law library and searching his own mind and heart to determine what is right and best and good for each individual and society as a whole. Thank you for being the kind of man and the honorable judge that you are!

Commander Gore leads fight to fix air traffic control system

As a frequent flyer, I am alarmed about the air traffic control situation.

As you probably know, air traffic control is the system set up by the federal government to keep airplanes from crashing any more than is absolutely necessary. This is accomplished via radar. Here's how it works: A thing at the airport sends out radar beams that travel through the atmosphere until they strike an airplane, causing it to shake violently during the meal service (this is called "turbulence"). The radar beams then bounce off the plane and travel back the other way until they are detected by the supersensitive ear of the bat, which is thus able to locate the mosquito, eat it, and throw up.

Barry

No, wait, that is sonar. The radar beams travel back to the airport, where they collapse, exhausted, but not before forming little blobs of light on a TV screen in the control tower. By analyzing these blobs, air traffic controllers can tell exactly where the various airplanes are on the map, and advise the pilots accordingly.

AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL: Flight 1793, your current position is directly over the "b" in Nebraska. Continue on your current heading until you see the state capital, Lincoln, which will be indicated by a big star.

PILOT: This is Flight 1793, and we are still on the ground in Chicago.

AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL: Whoops. Our mistake. Apparently we are picking up a bat.

BAT: Roger.

X X X

Using radar, air traffic controllers are able to keep many planes flying around airports, without hitting each other, until every single passenger on board has missed his or her connecting flight. This system has served our nation well, but it's getting old. It has been in use, without major modernization, since the original flight by the Wright brothers (who had to wait three hours for takeoff clearance because air traffic control was convinced that there were other aircraft in the area).

I'm not saying that commercial air travel is dangerous. Statistics gathered by the U.S. Transportation Department show that you are far safer in an airplane that is flying 35,000 feet above the Earth's surface than you are in an airplane that has crashed into the ocean and is sinking like a cement truck while the passengers, who were busy reading John Grisham novels during the safety lecture, frantically try to remember exactly which part of their seat is supposed to float. But there is reason to be concerned about the air traffic control system, which is why we should be glad that Vice President Al Gore is getting involved.

Al has been a very busy executive-branch beaver lately, because President Clinton, due to various unforeseen world crises, has had to occupy himself pretty much full-time with hiring personal attorneys. Thus it has been left up to Al to protect the environment, reinvent the government, appear on Letterman, etc.

So Al held a press conference with Secretary of Transportation Federico F. Pena, wherein they announced that the air traffic control system is antiquated. To demonstrate this point — and here I am quoting from The New York Times — "Mr. Pena handed Mr. Gore a vacuum tube used in an air traffic control computer at National Airport and said it was a symbol of the inefficiency that characterized the air traffic control system."

I am troubled by that image. I mean, picture the scene in the National Airport control tower while the Vice President's press conference was going on.

FIRST AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLER: OK Flight 1793, due to congestion in the airport area, we're going to have your plane fly around until it spells out "HAPPY BIRTHDAY MYRON A. HORSEWHACKER JR." So I want you to fly straight until . . . Hey! My screen went blank!

SECOND AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLER: Look! Some idiot has removed a vacuum tube from our antiquated computer!

FIRST AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLER: Wait a minute! That's Secretary of Transportation Federico F. Pena! Sir, that's our vacuum tube!

PENA: Sorry men, but the Vice President needs this as a symbol of the inefficiency that characterizes the air traffic control system.

FLIGHT 1793: Hey, how big are these letters going to be? Because it looks like we're about to fly right into this . . . (silence).

X X X

I'm confident that, in time, the federal government will make the air traffic control system every bit as modern and efficient as the postal service. But for now, we members of the public should avoid commercial air travel, at least until certain basic steps have been taken to assure our safety. And I think we can all agree on step number one: Al should give back the tube.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

MC invites everyone out to campus to hear patriotic music

By H.A. Tuck

Tuck

For something different on this weekend, come out to the campus and enjoy the patriotic music pealing from the Hodge Carillon Tower. You can hear a great selection of patriotic tunes at 10 a.m., noon, 4 p.m., or 8:20 p.m. each day.

You might even find the campus a nice place to have a picnic. We would ask only that you clean up your litter and dispose of it in one of the many trash containers around the campus.

Monday is being observed as a holiday. Classes resume and all offices are reopened on Monday. Oh yes, another reminder that offices are open at 7 a.m. in the summer, most of them close at 5 p.m., and all offices are closed on Fridays.

Time permits for Summer II registration are being issued Tuesday through Thursday this week and then for a final day on Monday, July 11. Midland College uses the permits to assign specific periods for prospective students to report for registration.

Those who haven't attend Midland College previously, or who are transferring from another college, need to check with the Admissions Office about transcripts, placement exams, TASP-exempt status, and other such details prior to registration.

Official registration takes place on Wednesday, July 13, in the Student Center from noon-2 p.m. and 5-7 p.m. Summer II classes start on Thursday, July 14,and end on Aug. 18. The bad news about summer classes at MC is they meet daily; the good news is that the daily is Monday through Thursday so every weekend is a three-day weekend.

Persons wishing to obtain time permits should visit the Student Services Office, Student Center, between 7 a.m.-5 p.m. or call 685-4501 for more information.

Both Summer and Fall Class Schedule bulletins are available in the Student Center. Bulletins also are placed in the Midland College South Facility at 201 West Florida, Midland Chamber of Commerce Office, and the Midland County Library.

Cheers for coordinator Donna Hewett and her dedicated Kids' College staff for their innovative methods of coping with the heat during the first session. The youngsters who laughed a lot were those enrolled in the course called "Wild and Crazy Kids". Most of their activities seemed to be centered around lots of different ways to get wet while having fun.

If you missed out having your children or grandchildren, from first to sixth graders, in Kids' College, you might find an opening or two in Session II. Call 685-4747 to find out which courses aren't filled. Session II is July 18-28, Monday through Thursday both weeks with three classes each afternoon.

Another activity for children this summer is the Chaparral Cheerleader Camp July 25-28 from 9 a.m.-noon Monday through Thursday. The MC cheerleaders will direct the camp, which includes instruction in cheers, chants, tumbling and dance for youngsters who have completed first through 12th grades. Cost is $45 if paid by July 15 and $55 after that. Call Tommy Ramos at 685-4544 for details.

If you have been eating too much during this holiday weekend, register for Tummy Trimmers and Thigh Thinners, a great aerobic class which begins Wednesday. Next week's menu of continuing education classes includes Aerobics, Introduction to Business, Real Estate Agency Relationships, and Real Estate Mandatory Continuing Education. Register for any of these in the Continuing Education office, Administration Building, or call 685-4518 if you have questions.

tally destroyed. "There's a heightened awareness that people don't have to get down and out before they look for help," Savage said.

There was a point in the center's history when those coming into the center would need hospitalization before PDAP counselors could begin treating them, he said.

PDAP's services are divided into three parts.

Prevention comes in the form of substance-abuse-prevention presentations at area schools. Currently, those PDAP officials who present the dangers of substance abuse are concentrating on the junior high schools, but present programs are tailored to fit elementary and high school students as well.

"We're seeing large numbers of kids who don't get high," Savage said. Many of Midland's young people appear to be less inundated with drugs and alcohol than those of 10 or 15 years ago. "They don't smoke. They don't drink. They don't do other drugs," he said.

PDAP is now treating more parents than at any time in the past, he said.

Intervention is supplied by PDAP's trained counselors. When a person comes in for help with his or her chemical dependency, counselors help them through the crisis on a one-to-one basis.

Support groups provide ways for recovering drug and alcohol abusers and/or their families to keep their lives free from the influences of substance abuse. Information helps the recovering substance abuser to deal with life without turning to chemicals. "It helps you prepare yourself for the problems of life," Savage said of the support group discussions.

Support groups at PDAP are geared to age groups and meet at four different places in the community, Savage said. These groups study the 12-step method used to help recovering alcohol and substance abusers around the world.

For the future, PDAP is planning the opening of a new Hispanic outreach center, geared specifically to service that portion of Midland's population, Savage said.

The Hispanic center is expected to be in operation by late September and will be the only outreach center of its kind in West Texas, he said.

Of PDAP's many success stories, Savage tells of one woman who came to the center many years ago at the age of 50 and has now celebrated 10 years of sobriety. PDAP was originally established to treat those younger than 25, but treats many who are older. "That's an unusual case for us," Savage said of the now 60-plus year old woman.

The youngest ever treated at PDAP have been about seven or eight years old, Savage said.

More than 100 young PDAP patients left Friday for an outing near Alpine. Called a "Blowout," PDAP organizes many such events. These outings are fun for the recovering substance abuser, and provide a forum for further learning, called "theme-related retreats," Savage said. "This weekend, we'll be concentrating on the first four steps (of the 12-step plan)," he said.

PDAP does not charge for its services, unlike many drug and alcohol treatment programs.

Funds for the programs come from donations from individuals, fund-raising events, foundations and corporations. No state or federal money is used to support the Midland programs, he said.

Kent Kwik stores are currently having a fund-raising event. Proceeds from all sales of coffee from July 2-4 will be donated to the Palmer Drug Abuse Program.

U.S. team gets call

PALO ALTO, Calif. (AP) — President Clinton telephoned members of the United States soccer team during dinner Saturday night, wishing them well against Brazil on Monday and inviting them to the White House.

Clinton, calling from Camp David, said he would be watching the game — the first second-round appearance for the United States in the World Cup since 1930 — with his wife Hilary and daughter Chelsea.

"We're sitting here on pins and needles and pulling for you," Clinton said.

"My family has watched all the games together and my daughter is a big soccer fan, so she is making sure I understand what I see," the president added.

"I think the whole country is just carried away by your success and we're really very, very proud of all of you."

Clinton talked on a speaker phone to the entire team, and then chatted separately with coach Bora Milutinovic and team captain Tony Meola.

Aggies hire coach

COLLEGE STATION — Candi Harvey, head women's basketball coach at Tulane, was hired Saturday to take the head coaching job at Texas A&M.

"I believe she will do an outstanding job. She inherits a solid program here at Texas A&M, and I believe she will help us continue to strive for excellence," said A&M Athletic Director Wally Groff.

Ms. Harvey, 36, led Tulane to its first postseason berth in women's basketball last season.

She posted a 46-68 record in four seasons, impreving each year from 6-22 in 1990-91 to a school record 17-14 last year when Tulane finished fourth in the National Women's Invitational Tournament.

■ An emotional Martina Navratilova says goodbye to Wimbledon after Conchita Martinez ends her bid for a tenth championship.

By Stephen Wilson
AP Sports Writer

WIMBLEDON, England — Win or lose, it was bound to end in tears for Martina Navratilova.

In an emotional farewell appearance at the tournament she most cherishes, Navratilova lost her bid for a 10th Wimbledon singles title Saturday when she was outplayed by Conchita Martinez of Spain 6-4, 3-6, 6-3.

Martinez used brilliant passing shots to win her first Grand Slam title.

The 37-year-old Navratilova had hoped to crown her 22nd and final Wimbledon appearance with one more title. But she came up short against the flashing groundstrokes of the 22-year-old Spaniard, playing in her first Grand Slam final.

■ Wimbledon Tennis

Tears filled Navratilova's eyes as she savored a final standing ovation from the Centre Court crowd. Before walking off for the last time, she plucked a small piece of grass from the famous lawn court as a souvenir, then bowed for the final time to the Royal Box, which included Princess Diana.

"I gave it everything I had," Navratilova said. "I'm very sad. I would have been sad even if I'd won. It was not the ending I was hoping for. But she played better, on the big points anyway.

"I'm happy I got to the final. I don't think many people picked me to get to the final ... I have nothing to hang my head about ... I lost a match, but what a way to go. It's been a

Angels rally to salvage series split

By Bill Petitt
Staff Writer

For much of the season the Midland Angels bullpen has been erratic at best, with blown save situations and big leads trimmed to the bone.

But the second half of the Texas League season is considered the start of a new season, and for the Angels' bullpen the slate has been cleaned.

For the second straight night the Angels relievers have come in to shut down Wichita, Saturday night preserving a come-from-behind 7-5 win in front of 5,140 at Christensen Stadium.

Relievers Julian Heredia and David Holdridge combined for 3⅓ innings of scoreless relief as the Angels salvaged a six game split with the league-leading Wranglers despite losing three of the first four games in the series.

While the bullpen has been impressive as of late, Saturday's game was not without its nervous moments. Holding a 7-5 lead going into the ninth inning, Angels pitching coach Kernan Ronan went to Holdridge, who promptly allowed three consecutive singles on four pitches to load the bases with none out.

"I'll admit after that I was looking

Quick scores lift Germany

■ Juergen Klinsmann scores two goals against Belgium to put Germany in the World Cup's quarterfinal round.

Associated Press

CHICAGO — Put Rudi Voeller and Juergen Klinsmann together and Germany becomes a different team.

Voeller struck twice Saturday and Klinsmann scored his fifth goal of the tournament in a 3-2 victory over Belgium that put the defending champion into the quarterfinals of the World Cup.

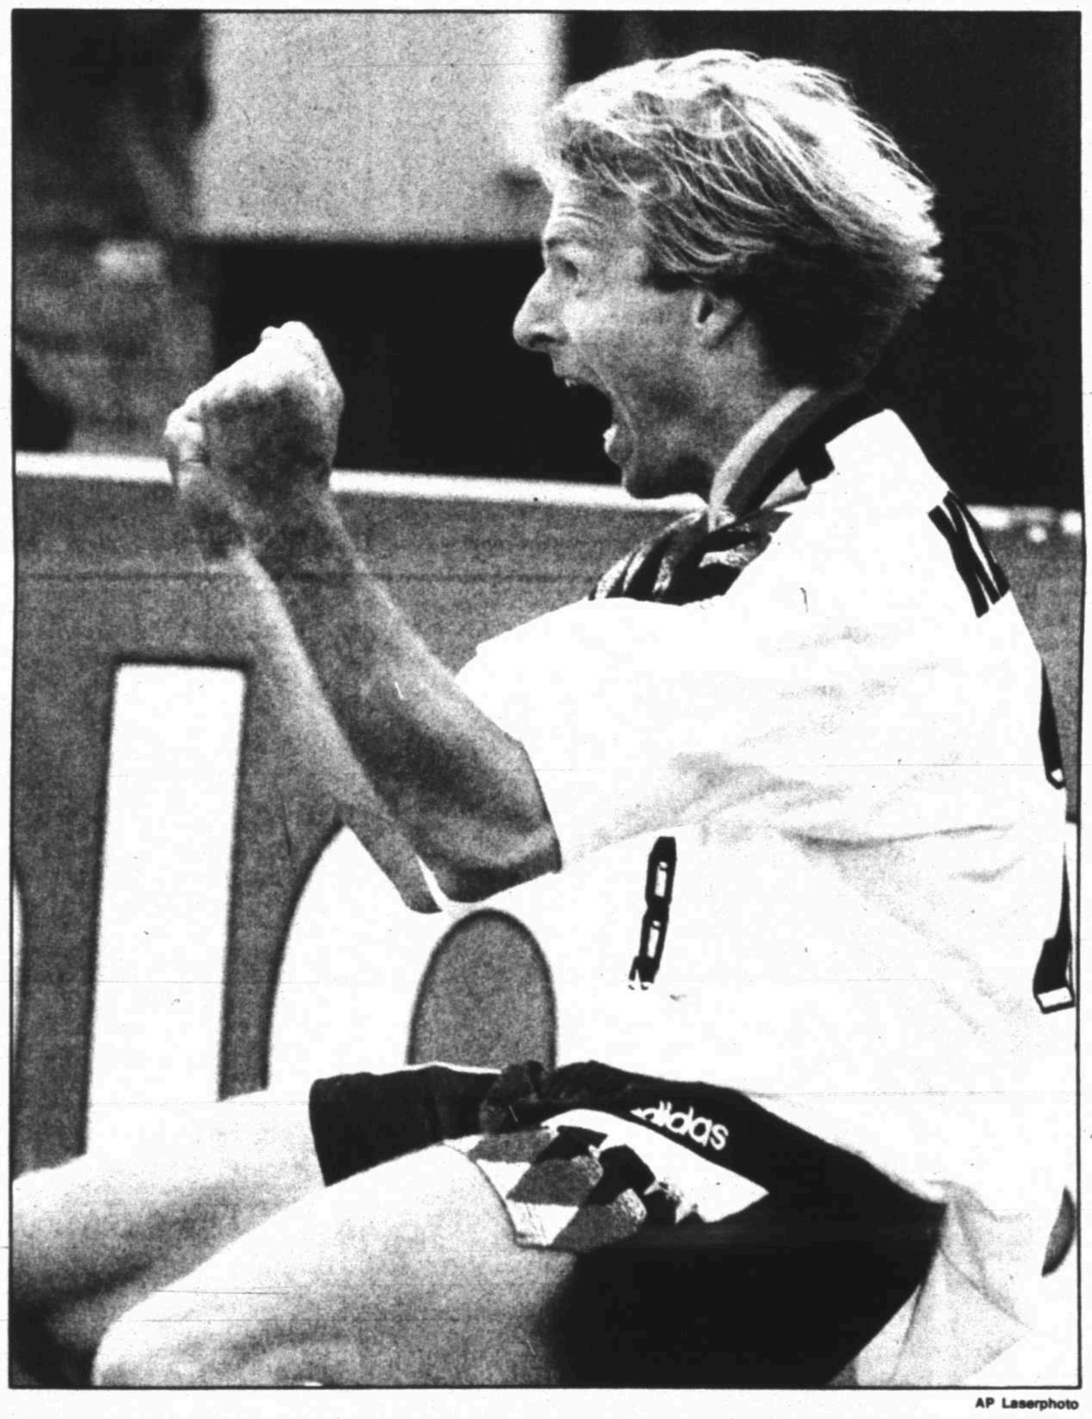

Germany has its own formula for winning World Cup titles: start poorly but finish strongly. It is beginning to do just that.

After three unconvincing performances in the first round, coach Berti Vogts resurrected the forward line of Klinsmann and Voeller, the two strikers who led Germany to the 1990 World Cup title.

"I think we a saw a first-class German team today," Vogts

Record-breaking pace for Hobday

■ Rain delays don't phase Simon Hobday as he sets the U.S. Senior Open pace at 13-under-par.

By Bob Green
AP Golf Writer

PINEHURST, N.C. — South African Simon Hobday converted a 13-hour work day into a three-shot lead on Saturday in the U.S. Senior Open, which once again was delayed by a storm and suspended overnight.

Hobday was 13-under-par for the tournament with five holes to go in the third round Saturday when darkness halted play on the rain-soaked No. 2 course at the Pinehurst Country Club.

Hobday, who tied the Senior Open 36-hole scoring record of 133, again was on a record-breaking pace.

He played without a bogey, birdied the last hole he played, the 13th, and was in sight of the 54-hole Senior Open scoring record of 9-under 204.

"I'm playing better than I know how," Hobday said. "I don't even want to talk about it. It might go away."

Jim Albus, a former club pro who has been on a scoring binge for five weeks, also had the scoring record in reach, despite being a distant second. Playing in the same threesome with Hobday, Albus was 10-under for the tournament through 13 holes.

Those two and 16 others — including most of the leaders — marked their positions and were due to return at 7:45 a.m. EDT Sunday to complete the third round.

Weather permitting — and it may not — the final round is scheduled for Sunday afternoon. The forecast includes the possibility of thunderstorms for the third consecutive day.

Saturday's storm struck before the leaders teed off, causing a 3-hour, 43-minute delay and, eventually, the overnight suspension.

It also stretched Hobday's work day into overtime.

Hobday, 54, who won the Senior Tour Championship last winter, was among the 33 players stranded on the course by darkness Friday, the result of a storm that caused a 2½-hour delay.

■ U.S. Senior Open

He returned Saturday morning at 7 a.m. to complete one hole — making a routine par — then waited about 10 hours before hitting his next shot, the drive off No. 1 to start the third round.

"I never had a longer day on the golf course. Never," Hobday, who warmed up on four occasions, said. "I was very pleased to hear the whistle go off and stop play."

Hobday, the 36-hole leader, made a good save for par on the second hole, using a 5-wood for a bump-and-run from just off the green and sinking a 15-foot putt. He began to pull away with three birdies in a stretch of four holes beginning at No. 4.

He scored from about 15 feet there, hit a 3-iron to five feet on the sixth and a 6-iron to two feet on the seventh. Then he capped it with a little pitch to four feet on the 13th.

Albus, a cumulative 51-under for his four previous tournaments, was 3-under for the third round.

At the overnight suspension, Australian Graham Marsh held third at 7-under with five holes to play.

said. "We wanted to go to New York, we are going there and now we want to stay there for a while."

On July 10 in Giants Stadium, Germany will play the winner of the match between Bulgaria and Mexico.

"After not so great performances we wanted to show something today," Voeller said. "And I think we did, at least in the first 60-70 minutes."

The Germans may not have played brilliantly in their first three games, but they won their group and earned the right to stay in Chicago and play at their "home ground" of Soldier Field.

Belgium also was seeded first, but ended up only third in Group F after a shocking defeat against Saudi Arabia. The Belgians had to wait until late Thursday night to find out their second round opponent. They left hot and sunny Florida for cool and rainy Chicago, arriving only 24 hours before the game, with two days rest.

Belgian coach Paul Van Himst said it was not fair to make such a schedule, saying the planning favored big soccer nations.

And the Belgians also felt robbed by Swiss referee Kurt Roethlisberger, who denied their calls for a penalty kick when Josip Weber appeared to have been brought down in front of the German goal.

"It's a scandal, I don't know what was going on in the referee's head," Van Himst said.

But the Belgians conceded they had been outplayed by the Germans.

"We were under a lot of pressure, especially in the first half," said goalkeeper Michel Preud'homme. "The way they played today, I think they will be in the final, against Brazil."

Comforting words for Vogts, whose team struggled early, but is a proven commodity as the tournament proceeds.

Spain 3, Switzerland 0

WASHINGTON — In a World Cup full of surprises, Spain's game against Switzerland was as predictable as the steamy heat.

Spain advanced to the quarterfinals for the third time in four World Cups by beating Switzerland 3-0 Saturday.

A sensational solo effort by Fernando Ruiz Hierro in the 15th minute provided the Spaniards with the only goal they needed.

Spain remained unbeaten (2-0-2) in this year's World Cup and stretched its overall record against Switzerland in international competition to 15-0-3.

Before an RFK Stadium crowd of 53,121, Luis Enrique Martinez scored in the 74th minute and Aitor Begiristain added a penalty shot in the 87th minute.

It was the last of five games in Washington, all played in sweatbox conditions.

Sapin will next face the winner of Tuesday's game between Nigeria and Italy. Spain will play its first quarterfinal game since 1986 on July 10 in East Rutherford, N.J.

DARK: World Cup has faces of joy, violence

(From 1C)

The murder of Andres Escobar, who scored an own-goal in the 2-1 loss to the United States that eliminated Colombia from the tournament, was a reminder of the passion and attention soccer generates.

"The popularity of our game has two faces," said Sepp Blatter, general secretary of soccer's governing body, FIFA. "The first face produces joy and enthusiasm and brings poeple together, as we have witnessed at the World Cup here. And on the other face, the game mirrors our life. It has violence, tears, corruption. Like life, it has all its problems."

Blatter, who has been involved with the sport for decades, called Saturday "the saddest day I have ever witnessed in football, in the World Cup or any other competition."

It was the second time in three days that soccer and its fanatically followed championship suffered a shock off the field.

On Thursday, Diego Maradona, the captivating but troubled star of Argentina, tested positive for using five banned stimulants and was kicked out of the World Cup. Maradona was suspended for 15 months in 1991-92 for cocaine use.

"It's like somebody does not like the success of the World Cup," Blatter said. "I don't know who to blame. But the two cases we have had in 48 hours — it's hard to digest for us."

The tournament itself has been blissful. Capacity crowds have enthusiastically but peacefully cheered games that have seen more scoring, the emergence of new stars and a surprisingly strong showing for the home team, with a second-round berth for the United States for the first time since 1930.

FIFA has cracked down on on-field thuggery, handing out stiff suspensions for players who go at each other too violently. That has sidelined some key players, such as America's John Harkes, at important times, but it also has opened up the game.

There has been none of the hooliganism that sometimes springs up around European club matches and had American organizers on the alert.

But death has haunted this World Cup.

Two weeks ago, 12 fans flying to Washington for Mexico's opener against Norway were killed when their private plane crashed. Highway crashes have killed at least two other soccer travelers.

The Colombian team received a death threat against midfielder Gabriel Gomez before its game with the United States.

Last week, riots broke out in Mexico City as fans celebrated their team's advancement to the second round. At least two people were killed, including one who, witnesses said, was beaten unconscious and then blown apart by a firecracker placed next to his head.

Those deaths, as tragic as they were, were different than the murder of Escobar, a quiet man and smooth player who, for the second time in a week, found himself in the wrong place at the wrong time.

Angry Maradona denies he took drugs

MERRIMACK, N.H. (AP) — Diego Maradona lashed out at soccer authorities for banishing him from the World Cup and denied he took a banned substance during the tournament.

"They killed me just when I wanted to prove to my two daughters that I can play with 20-year-olds," the Argentine star said in an interview with Italian state television. "I didn't take drugs. I didn't do what they are accusing me of. But they will not kill me."

Maradona was interviewed at poolside at a resort 45 miles north of Boston. He has been barred from World Cup play for testing positive for ephedrine, a nasal decongestant that can act as a stimulant, and related drugs.

In 1991, Maradona was suspended for testing positive for cocaine while playing in the Italian League.

"I have already paid once for my faults, and I can't continue to pay for them for eternity," he said.

FIFA, soccer's ruling body, says it will try to see that the 33-year-old star can play again despite a second suspension for drug use, The Dallas Morning News reported Saturday.

ARLINGTON, Texas — The Texas Rangers signed veteran right-hander Tim Leary on Saturday and activated left-hander Roger Pavlik from the 15-day disabled list.

Leary, 35, worked out for the Rangers on Wednesday in Minneapolis, and the club was impressed enough to offer him a contract. He has a career record of 77-104 in 286 games with six teams.

This season, he was 2-4 with a 5.40 ERA in nine games for Class AAA Ottawa of the American Association.

Griffey gets 5 singles in win

Associated Press

■ AL Roundup

NEW YORK — Keith Mitchell's two-run single ignited an eight-run fifth inning Saturday and the Seattle Mariners snapped Jimmy Key's 11-game winning streak with a 12-6 victory over the New York Yankees.

Key (12-2), who had not lost since April 9, allowed 10 hits and six runs before departing without retiring a Mariner in the fifth.

Ken Griffey, Jr. failed to homer for the seventh straight game but went 5-for-6 with five singles.

Dave Fleming (6-10) allowed nine hits and three runs in seven innings.

Bernie Williams homered and Jim Leyritz had three hits for the Yankees, who lost their third straight game following an eight-game winning streak.

With the score tied 2-2 in the fifth, Edgar Martinez beat out an infield single and the first six Mariners got hits, leading to six runs.

Tigers 6, Rangers 1

ARLINGTON — Mike Moore rebounded from the shortest outing of his major league career with a seven-hitter as Detroit beat Texas.

Moore (8-7), who lasted only one-third of an inning on June 26 in a 10-5 loss to Oakland, shut down a Rangers lineup that banged out 18 runs and 23 hits in a doubleheader sweep of the Tigers Friday night.

Moore retired the first 10 Rangers before Jeff Frye got a one-out single in the fourth. Texas got a home run from Jose Canseco in the ninth, but the Rangers again disappointed a crowd of 46,668, the largest in club history.

Moore walked two and struck out five in extending his lifetime record against Texas to 16-6, helping the Tigers snap a four-game losing streak. It was Moore's third complete game of the season.

Angels 1, Orioles 0

BALTIMORE — Mark Langston pitched a three-hitter for his first shutout in two years, retiring the last 16 batters he faced, and Tim Salmon singled in the game's only run.

The outcome was a marked contrast to Friday night's between the two teams, when the Orioles beat the Angels 14-7 in a game that featured 11 homers, tying a major league record.

Langston (5-4) walked one and struck out five in recording his first shutout since beating Texas on June 17, 1992.

In the process, Langston stopped Baltimore's club-record streak of 17 consecutive games with a home run.

White Sox 5, Brewers 0

CHICAGO — Alex Fernandez pitched a four-hitter and Darrin Jackson drove in three runs, lifting Chicago to a victory over Milwaukee.

Fernandez (7-7) matched a career-high with 10 strikeouts and didn't yield a walk. In one stretch, he struck out seven of nine batters he faced.

It was his third shutout this season, a single-season career high, and third complete game. He also blanked Milwaukee on a six-hitter April 26.

Cal Eldred (9-8) lost for the first time in four starts, scattering nine hits in his fourth straight complete game.

Jackson hit a two-run homer and drove in a run with a bases-loaded fielder's choice to help the White Sox win for the 11th time in their last 13 games.

Red Sox 10, Athletics 2

BOSTON — Tom Brunansky hit his seventh career grand slam and Mo Vaughn hit his 21st homer as Boston ended Oakland's eight-game winning streak.

Brunansky hit the first pitch from reliever Billy Taylor far over the screen atop the left-field wall with two outs in the fifth to break open the game. It was his fourth homer this season, all coming since he was traded back to Boston by Milwaukee on June 19.

Brunansky is hitting .308 with four homers and 14 RBIs since rejoining the Red Sox, with whom he played in 1990-92. He was hitting .214 with no homers or RBIs when he was traded by the Brewers.

Indians 9, Twins 1

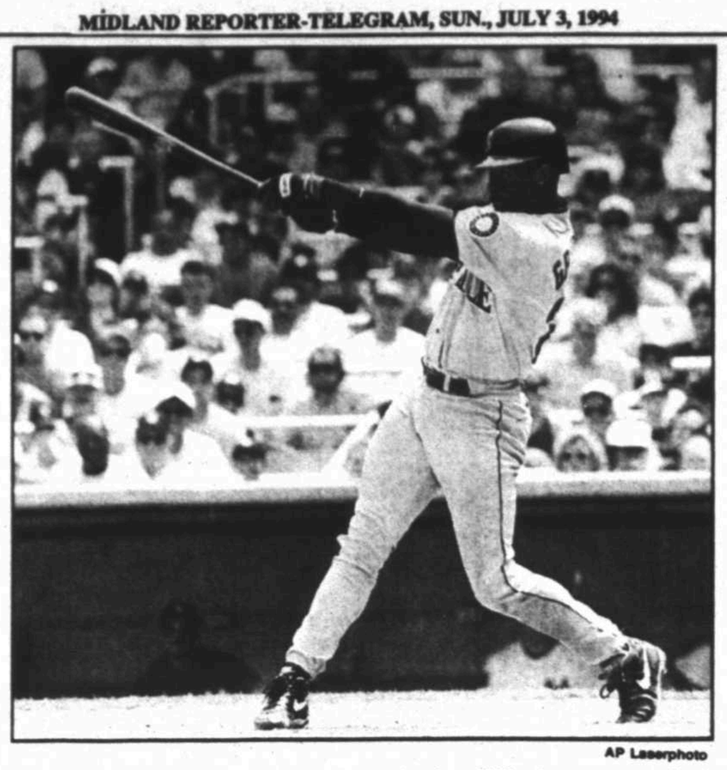

CLEVELAND — Charles Nagy pitched a five-hitter for Cleveland's third straight complete game and Albert Belle homered again as the Indians beat Minnesota.

Belle has homered in six of the last eight games and has hit safely in 18 of the last 19.

Blue Jays 7, Royals 6

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Ed Sprague's sacrifice fly in the eighth broke up reliever Rusty Meacham's club record streak of 22 1-3 scoreless innings and gave Toronto a victory over Kansas City.

Sprague's fly ball to left drove in John Olerud after Olerud and Mike Huff had singled with one out and allowed the Blue Jays to overcome 10 walks by their pitchers and three errors.

Astros Biggio drives in winning run over Cubs

Associated Press

■ NL Roundup

HOUSTON — Craig Biggio's single off the left field wall drove in Andy Stankiewicz from third in the ninth inning, giving the Houston Astros a 5-4 victory over the Chicago Cubs on Saturday night.

Stankiewicz led off the ninth with a walk, and one out later he moved to third on a single by Brian Hunter, who was caught in a rundown and tagged out on the play. Biggio followed with his game-winning hit off Chuck Crim (3-2).

Shane Reynolds (6-3) was the winner, getting two outs im the top of the inning.

The Astros, who took a 4-3 lead on Luis Gonzalez's two-run double in the bottom of the eighth, saw the Cubs tie it in the ninth off John Hudek, who blew his first save in 13 opportunities.

Jose Hernandez and Shawon Dunston singled, and when Hunter attempted to throw out Hernandez at third from center field, the throw bounced past third baseman Ken Caminiti and into Chicago's dugout, allowing Hernandez to score.

Dodgers 9, Phillies 3

LOS ANGELES — Henry Rodriguez homered and had a career-high five RBIs as Los Angeles beat Philadelphia.

Tom Candiotti (6-3) pitched his fifth complete game, allowing 10 hits and two walks while striking out seven.

Emergency starter Paul Quantrill (2-2) became the 11th pitcher to start a game this season for Philadelphia, allowing two runs and five hits in four innings in his first NL start. The right-hander made all 14 of his previous big-league starts last year for the Boston Red Sox.

Reds 8, Pirates 2

PITTSBURGH — Reggie Sanders mand Tony Fernandez had four hits apiece and Cincinnati continued to give Erik Hanson plenty of run support in Pittsburgh as the Reds beat the Pirates.

Hal Morris also kept on tormenting Pirates pitching, going 2-for-3 with two walks to give him a .407 average and 14 RBIs in six games against Pittsburgh.

Sanders and Morris had RBI singles in a three-run third started by Jacob Brumfield's triple.

Braves 5, Marlins 0

MIAMI — Greg Maddux pitched seven shutout innings and Fred McGriff homered and drove in two runs, lifting Atlanta to a victory over Florida.

Maddux (11-4), who lost his previous two decisions, scattered four hits. He threw only 85 pitches and allowed only one runner to reach third base — Gary Sheffield in the first inning.

Mark Wohlers and Greg McMichael, with an inning apiece, completed the four-hit shutout, Florida's 10th loss in 13 games.

Expos 10, Giants 9

SAN FRANCISCO — Montreal hit five homers, including Lenny Webster's three-run shot in the seventh inning Saturday, to beat San Francisco.

Wil Cordero, Mike Lansing, Sean Berry and Moises Alou also homered to help Ken Hill become the National League's first 12-game winner. The Expos have hit 10 homers in the first three games of the four-game set.

Rockies 7, Cardinals 5

ST. LOUIS — Pinch-hitter Dante Bichette hit a three-run homer and Andres Galarraga singled in the go-ahead run in Colorado's five-run seventh inning, lifting them to a victory over St. Louis.

The loss stopped the Cardinals' winning streak at five, and snapped the Rockies' four-game losing streak.

Padres 4, Mets 1

SAN DIEGO — Andy Ashby pitched a four-hitter and Tony Gwynn went 3-for-4 with three RBIs as the San Diego Padres defeated the New York Mets 4-1 Saturday night.

Ashby (4-6), who tied a career high with nine strikeouts, lowered his ERA to 2.82, third-best in the National League. He has pitched four complete games in his last seven starts after failing to go the route in his first 48 major-league starts.

Ashby, trying for his first career shutout, lost it with two outs in the ninth when Rico Brogna hit his third homer in three games and third of the season.

ANGELS: Bullpen shuts down Wichita

down at the bullpen," said Holdridge who recorded his second save since being placed in a relievers role after starting the season as a starter. "(Allowing three straight singles) is not the way you want to begin the ninth inning. I was up in the strike zone with my fastball and had to make some adjustments with my slider, and it seemed to be effective."

Holdridge struck out Wrangler first baseman Paul Gonzalez on a 1-2 pitch for the first out and then struck out Mat Witkowski on a 3-2 count after he fouled off two pitches.

Designated hitter Scott Bream hit a grounder to Chris Pritchett to end the game.

"It's been nice to throw those guys from the bullpen out there and have them do their job," said coach John Morris, who is substituting for Mario Mendoza, in California on personal business. "It was nice to see David come back after getting off to a rough start in the ninth.

"We hit the ball well, we got a little lucky with that ball that went over the center fielder's head, but we played well."

In the Midland fourth, third baseman Chris Smith hit a line drive to center field which took a monster hop over Ira Smith's head and rolled to the wall, scoring Wolff and Emmitt Cohick to trim Wichita's 3-0 lead to 3-2. Ramirez followed with a single to left field to tie the game.

Heredia replaced starter Kyle Sebach in the sixth inning after Wichita took a 5-3 lead on a sacrifice fly by Smith. Heredia, who had an earned run average of 1.80 over his last five appearances before last night's game, struck out three and walked one in 2⅓ innings.

While the second half of the season has been good to the bullpen, it has been a series of land mines for all-star second baseman J.D. Ramirez.

After hitting over .300 during the first half of the season, Ramirez has been mired in a 12-for-63 slump since returning from the mid-season classic.

Ramirez put Midland ahead for good in the sixth inning with a solo home run down the left field line to give the Angels a 6-5 lead.

"I have been struggling a little bit," said Ramirez, who finished the night 2-for-4 with two RBIs and one run scored. "I guess part of it is fatigue and part of it is the pressure that comes with expectations, but you have to learn to live with pressure if you are going to make it."

Ramirez's shot came after Mike Wolff sent a Jose Martinez pitch over right field for a two-run home run, his sixth of the season, that scored Pritchett and tied the game at five. For Wolff it was his fourth home run in 23 games while hitting .340 (31-91).

The Angels added an insurance run in the seventh inning when Rob Katzaroff singled, stole second base and scored when Jim Walewander hit a single up the middle.

ANGEL NOTES: Midland will travel to San Antonio for a six game series beginning Sunday. The Angels and Missions are tied for second place in the Texas League Western Division with 6-6 records... Monday's game has been moved to 6 p.m. and can be heard on KCRS (AM 550) beginning at 5:40 with Bob Hards providing the call... Former Midland Angel Luis Raven will stay atop the the Texas League in runs batted in and home runs for another night. After a month and six days Raven still leads the Texas League in home runs with 18 and is tied with El Paso's Tim Unroe in RBIs with 57. Last night, Unroe went 1-for-2 with 2 runs scored, but no RBIs in San Antonio's 4-2 win over El Paso.

Spencer thrills at Pepsi

By Mike Harris
AP Motorsports Writer

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. — It took Jimmy Spencer 129 Winston Cup races to live up the the nickname he earned years ago on NASCAR's Modified circuit.

■ Pepsi 400

Spencer was certainly "Mr. Excitement" Saturday, nipping Ernie Irvan by less than a half-car-length in a bumping, banging last-lap duel in the Pepsi 400 at Daytona International Speedway.

"Ernie wanted to win and I wanted to win," Spencer said as he celebrated his first Winston Cup stock car win. "You've got two hard chargers there. I don't know how many times we touched (on the last lap). A lot."

Irvan said, "He led one lap, but it was the last lap. We led the most laps and got the most points, so we did our job. It's just that we sure would have liked to be in Victory Lane."

It appeared Irvan, the series points leader, was on the way to his fourth victory of the season after charging from 12th place following his final pit stop to the lead just 29 laps from the end of the 160-lap.

But Spencer, among the contenders throughout the race, moved past Ken Schrader to take second place on lap 149. Schrader, believing a caution flag was about to wave after Daytona 500 winner Sterling Marlin spun to the infield grass on the backstretch, had momentarily slowed, allowing Spencer to move by.

From that point on, Spencer stalked Irvan in a battle of Ford Thunderbirds that had nearly everyone in the crowd estimated at 100,000 on their feet to the end.

The driver from Berwick, Pa., kept the pressure on Irvan, feinting inside and out and trying to move alongside several times without success before the final lap.

On the last trip around the 2½-mile, high-banked oval, Spencer tried again in the first turn, moving to the outside and failing to catch the leader. But, coming off turn two, Spencer moved to the inside and rocketed alongside Irvan on the long backstretch.

The two remained side-by-side to the finish, touching several times through the last two turns and onto the front straight.

Spencer barely pulled ahead at the finish, winning officially by 0.08-seconds.

That gave team owner Junior Johnson his first victory since Bill Elliott's win in the 1992 season finale at Atlanta.

"Junior came on the radio and said 'Just do the same thing you did at Talladega,'" Spencer said in reference to his best previous finish — second to Irvan in the 1993 Winston Select 500 at Talladega, Ala.

"If I had passed Ernie with two laps to go, he'd have done the same thing to me," Spencer said. "The crew had told me 'Go on the white flag.' That move had worked for me all day."

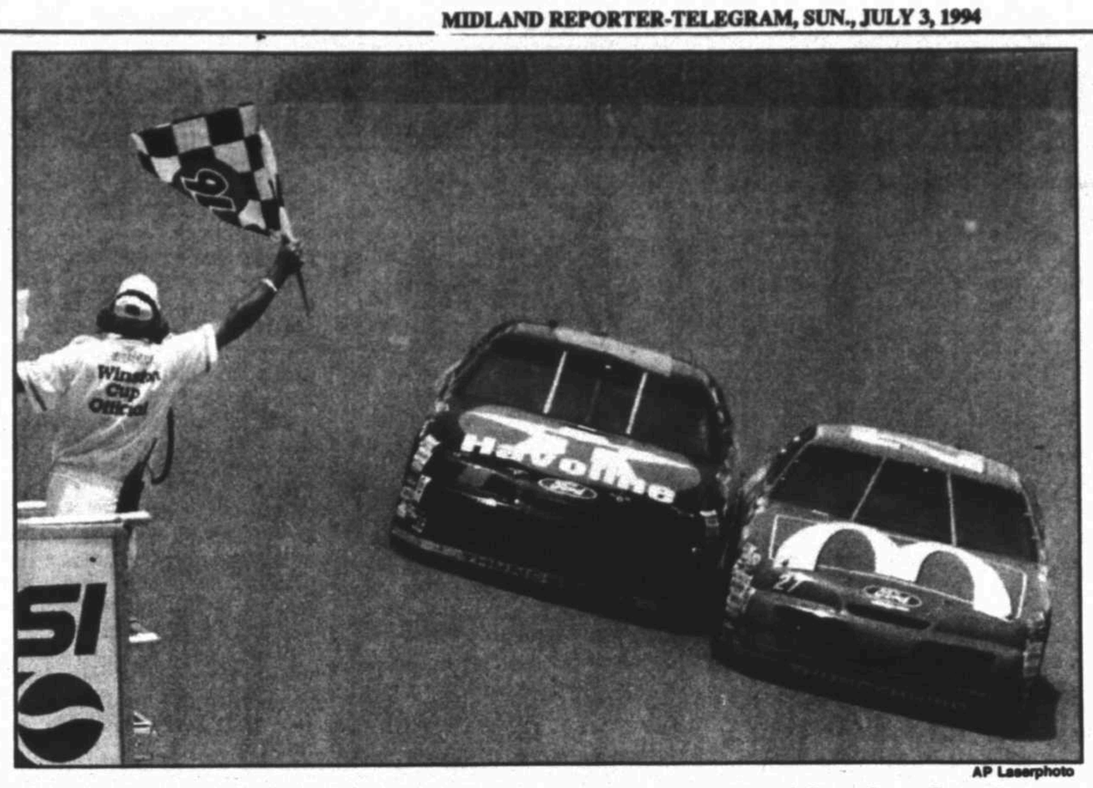

"I had to have a plan and my plan was to pass him in the second turn," Spencer added. "I was just hoping I wouldn't have to get out of (the throttle). I moved up the banking hoping that when his air and my air met, he'd have to lift and I could get under him. That's exactly what happened."

Spencer has been criticized by other teams in the past for being too aggressive and for running into other cars. But Irvan didn't criticize the new winner this time.

"Anytime you pass a car that's leading the race one-on-one at this place , it's a great move," Irvan said. "He tried different places and knew what he was going to do when it got to the end of the race. He was just awful strong."

Dale Earnhardt, who started from the pole and finished third after battling Irvan most of the way, lost 10 points to the latter, who now leads the Winston Cup standings by 88 after 15 of 31 races.

Rusty Wallace, who had won three straight races coming in, never was a factor. He finishing a distant 26th, falling from 224 to 319 points behind Irvan.

Ryan's Cards aim to rule East

■ New coach Buddy Ryan has the Phoenix Cardinals ready to take on Dallas and the rest of the NFC East.

By Samantha Stevenson
N.Y. Times News Service

PHOENIX — James (Buddy) Ryan doesn't like the posture of a loser. When rookie linebacker Ja mir Miller, the Arizona Cardinals' first-round draft choice out of UCLA, began throwing up after a minicamp practice in May, the eight-year veteran Seth Joyner walked over and said: "Don't ever have your head down and hands on your knees around Buddy Ryan. Stand tall and keep your head up."

Ryan

It was a vintage Ryan anecdote, the kind that began to accumulate here on the very February day that the club announced Ryan's hiring as head coach and general manager and the new man quickly proclaimed, "You've got a winner in town."

From that moment, the concept of Ryan and the legend of his combative leadership have galvanized people here, bringing a sudden wave of loyalty unknown to the Cardinal organization since the team moved from St. Louis in 1988. And at a time when the Dallas Cowboys and Washington Redskins also have new coaches, and the Giants have lost Lawrence Taylor and Phil Simms, Ryan's Cardinals suddenly look more like contenders than pretenders in the National Football Conference East.

Season-ticket sales — 27th in the league last season — have rocketed past the 48,000 mark, doubling the total sold by this time last year. No one seems to care that the Cardinals have not had a winning season since 1984.

Ryan has done his part to shore up the faithful's belief by convincing Joyner, an outside linebacker, and defensive end Clyde Simmons, teammates and friends from Ryan's stint as head coach of the Philadelphia Eagles, to join the Cardinals. Meanwhile, other free agents and out-of-work coaches have called Ryan, ready to join the

Green continues qualifying mastery; wins pole

MILWAUKEE (AP) — David Green has become the master of qualifying in the NASCAR Busch Grand National Series.

On Saturday, Green shattered the track record in winning the pole position for Sunday's $314,467 Havoline 250 stock car race at The Milwaukee Mile, his fourth pole of the season.

The Owensboro, Ky., driver toured the historic one-mile speedway at 115.407 mph in a Chevrolet, breaking the previous track record of 113.845 set last year by Bobby Dotter.

■ Havolina 250

Green, third from the end in line, knocked Hermie Sadler off the pole. Sadler had made a mid-session run of 114.442 mph in a Chevrolet. He settled for second on the grid.

NASCAR Winston Cup driver Ken Schrader, who competed in Saturday's race at Daytona Beach, Fla., will start third in the race. Schrader's car was qualified by Milwaukee's Scott Hansen and, under NASCAR rules, will be credited with starting third, although Schrader will have to drop to the rear of the field on the pace lap.

Robert Pressley was fourth and rookie Dennis Setzer fifth, both in Chevys.

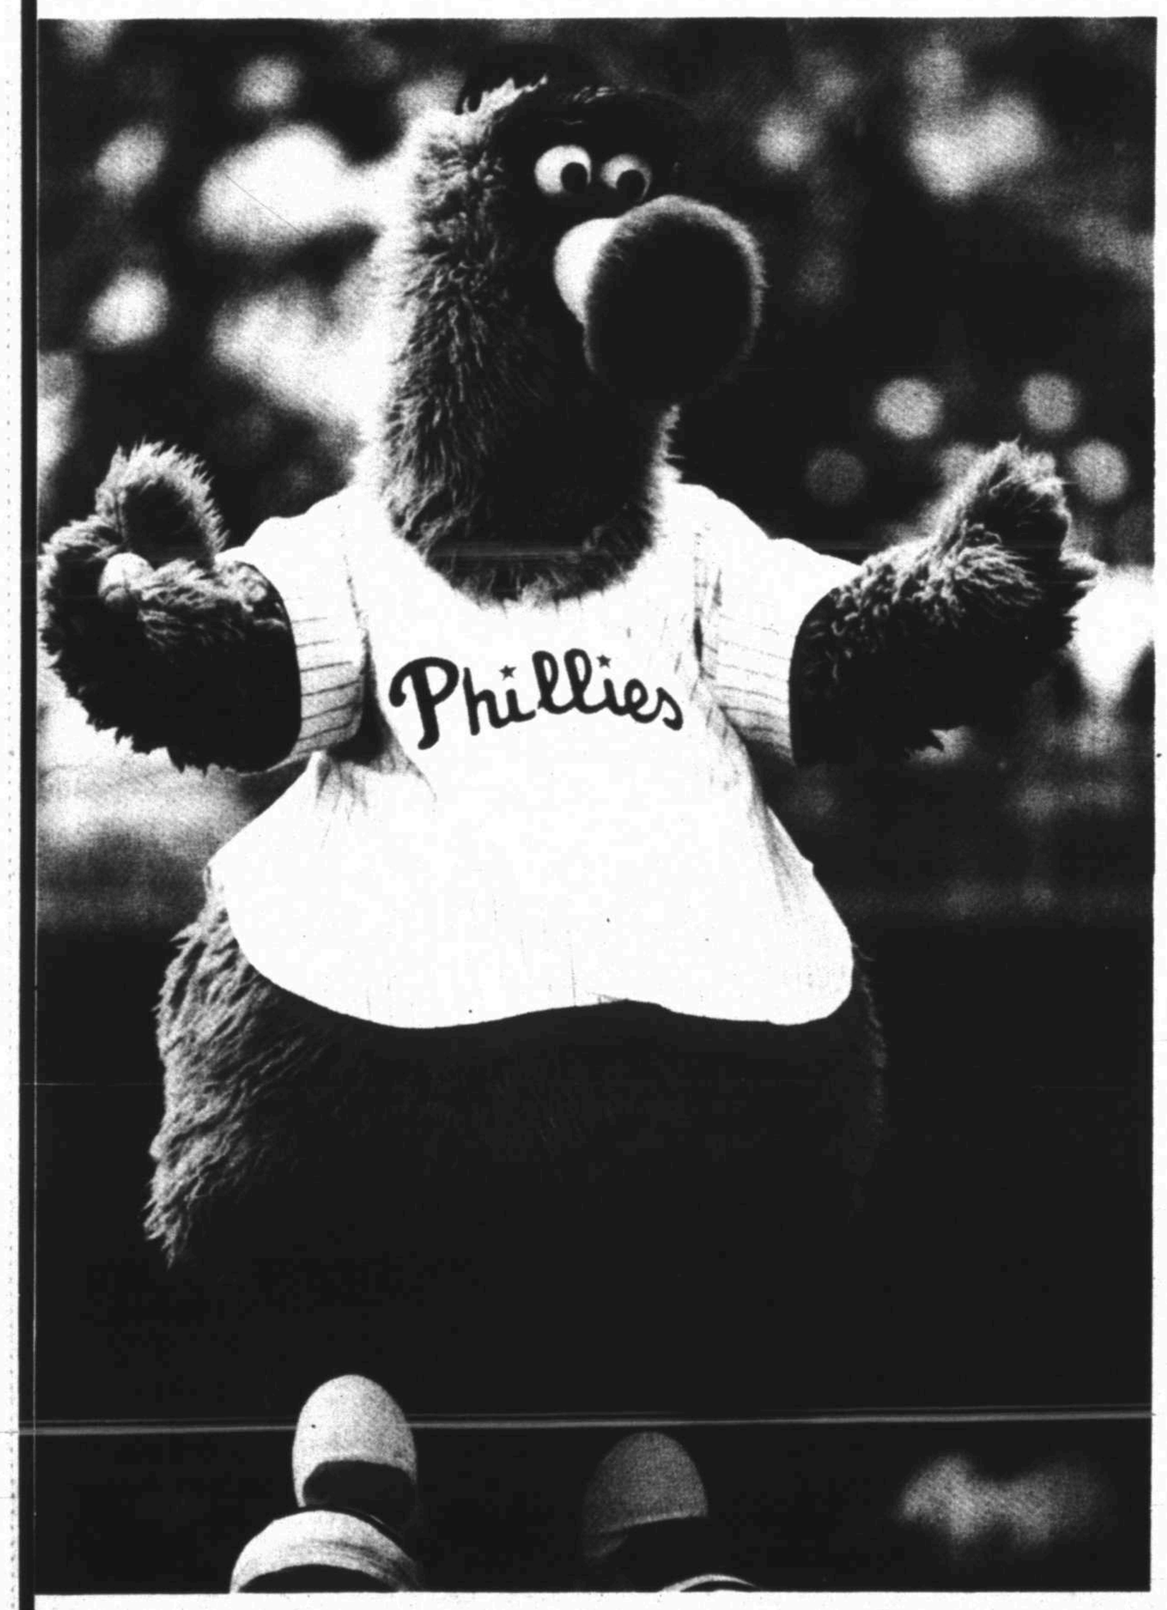

Rounding out the top 10 were Chad Little, Mike McLaughlin, series point leader Ricky Craven, Randy LaJoie and Larry Pearson. Forty-two cars will start the event.

The 250-lap race is the 16th of 28 events in the NASCAR Grand National series.

Magazine to print more Rocket editions

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Rockets fans can't get enough of the Sports Illustrated souvenir issue dedicated to their team, so the publication has decided to print another 214,000 copies.

The issue, featuring Hakeem Olajuwon on the cover, should be available on Houston newsstands Monday, magazine officials said.

An initial run of 300,000 copies, available only in the Houston area, were sold almost immediately. Stores were deluged with phone calls and many resorted to hanging signs in their windows saying, "No More SI."

"We sold 200 copies in 15 minutes," said Anastasia Benton, a worker at one bookstore. "People were lined up at the door. They cleaned us out."

Stop N Go vice president Jayar Daily said his chain sold 18,000 copies of the issue in 1½ days.

Called a special souvenir edition, the July 4 issue contains a 48-page section on the Rockets' NBA championship season.

Kwan one of top attractions

■ Olympic Festival

ST. LOUIS (AP) — On a hot, humid afternoon, where better to spend your time than at a skating rink?

About 7,000 people filed into St. Louis Arena on Saturday to watch the early rounds of the figure skating competition in the U.S. Olympic Festival. Outside, temperatures were in the 90-degree range with high humidity on the first full day of competition.

The day included a quick-trigger timekeeper at the boxing venue, a big day from basketball player Ray Allen and a pair of double gold medalists at the swimming pool.

Michelle Kwan was one of the top figure skating attractions. The second-place finisher in the U.S. championships made her mark in the 1993 festival, winning the gold medal as a 13-year-old. She was on hand Saturday to put on an exhibition before the girls who hope to turn out like her took to the ice.

Tara Lipinski, a 12-year-old from Newark, Del., finished first in the technical program, scoring 70.6 points to edge her friend, Chrisha Gossard. The two skate on the same rink five days a week and share the same coach, but this is the first time they've competed against one another.

"I skate with Tara at home, and she always does better than me," said Gossard, 16, who scored 66.7 points. "She's more easygoing, and I get more tense."

Lipinski, the lightest skater at 66 pounds, skated a clean and quick program in her first festival. Gossard's only slip came when she put her fingers to the ice during a jump combination.

Jennifer Karl of North St. Paul, Minn., winner of the 1994 U.S. junior title, was third going into Sunday's free skate, which counts for two-thirds of the score.

For the first time, the festival is serving as the U.S. qualifier for spots on the 1995 World Junior Championship team. The top three finishers will compete in the world juniors at Budapest, Hungary, in November.

On the men's side, 15-year-old Derrick Delmore of Fort Washington, Md., took the lead in the technical program. Delmore skated first and stayed on his feet, something none of the other seven skaters managed to do.

He leads John Bevan of Spokane, Wash., and Timothy Goebel of Lakewood, Ohio heading into the free skate.

The boxing competition got off to a shaky start. The bell to end the third round of the 112-pound bout was inadvertently rung a minute early, and when that happened the electronic scoring devices used by judges were turned off.

As a result, Mario Bueno of the Army wound up beating Lee Rodriguez of Denver 3-0.

One of the better bouts of the day came at 125 pounds, with Augustine Sanchez of North Las Vegas, Nev., outpointing Diego Corrales of Sacramento, Calif., 42-39.

Sanchez had helped light the cauldron during the opening ceremony Friday night.

"There's always going to be a favorite, a good guy and a bad guy," Corrales said. "I'm not saying I was the bad guy, but I thought I won."

In basketball, Allen scored 28 points and grabbed 12 rebounds in leading the East to a 115-114 victory over the West. Allen, who will be a sophomore at Connecticut, made four of his seven 3 pointers.

Dayna Abrams of Boston College provided the winning points with two free throws with 20 seconds left. A turnaround jumper by Dontae Jones of Nashville with five seconds left bounced off the rim and the East rebounded to secure the victory.

Michigan recruit Jerod Ward was impressive for the West, hitting 9 of 12 shots and scoring 22 points.

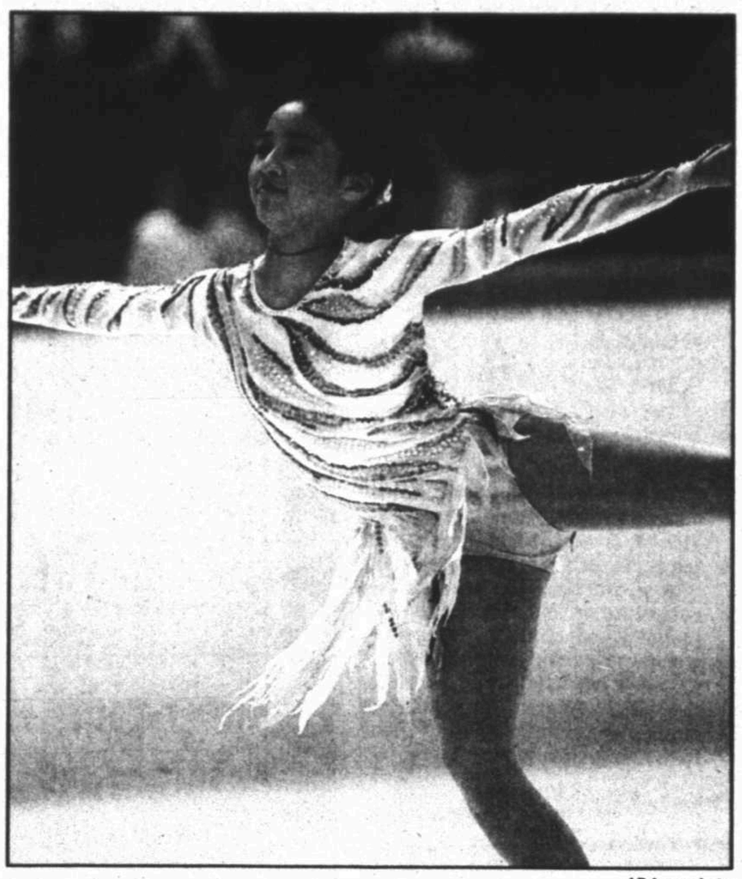

Late Saturday, James Collins of Florida State scored 21 points as the South beat the North 104-99. Kansas recruit Raef LaFrentz and Damon Flint of Cincinnati scored 14 apiece for the losers.

In women's basketball, Virginia recruit Monick Foot and Kwana Williams of Maryland scored 18 points apiece as the East beat the West 91-89. Erica Routt of Texas scored 25 for the West.

In the other first-round game, Pashen Thompson of Tennessee scored 15 points to lead four players in double figures as the South beat the North 96-67.

Swimmers broke in the new, $16 million Rec-Plex at St. Peters, Mo. with several personal-best times, although no festival records fell.

One of them was Keiko Price of Honolulu, who won the women's 100-meter freestyle in 57.35 seconds. The favorite in the event was Kim Johnson of Richardson, Texas.

Unknown Kraft leads Price

■ Western Open

LEMONT, Ill. (AP) — Greg Kraft, a virtual unknown who ranks 169th on the money list, fired a 4-under-par 68 on Saturday to grab a one-stroke lead over Jeff Sluman and defending champion Nick Price after three rounds of the $2.1 million Motorola Western Open.

With an 11-under-par 205 total after 54 holes, Kraft enters the final round as the leader for the third time in his brief career. He has never won an official PGA event, although he did finish first a year ago in the Hattiesburg, Miss., event held the same weekend as the Masters.

Price, 11-under after the front nine on Saturday, three-putted the par-5 11th for bogey and wound up with an even-par 72 over the Dubsdread course at the Cog Hill Golf and Country Club. He completed 54 holes at 206.

Sluman turned in a third-round 69, capping his round with birdies on the last two holes.

Three strokes back at 208 were Jim Gallagher, tying Kraft for the day's best round of 68, Fred Couples with a 69 and Bill Glasson with a 72.

Another stroke back at 209 were Bob Gilder and Mark Calcavecchia, both with 72s, and Scott Hoch, who shot 73.

Kraft, with just $34,895 in earnings this year after ranking 60th with $290,581 last season, got off to a good start.

"I got a good break on No. 3, sinking a 15-footer for a birdie. It gave me a lot of confidence," he said. "Actually, I pulled some shots today."

After admittedly playing poorly for seven months, Kraft said he began to turn things around in the Memorial.

"I have to be a level player," Kraft said. "But I can sleep at night now. I did all the right things for the wrong reasons. But I'm so happy to be playing well again.

"I'm not standing in front of the mirror checking my swing."

To win on Sunday, Kraft said he would "have to come out of the box fast. There is not a lot of anxiety on my part."

Kraft followed the birdie on No. 3 with a 2-footer on the par-5 fifth and a 4-footer on No. 7.

He saved par on the par-4, 372-yard 10th by two-putting from 100 feet. His fourth birdie was a 30-footer on the par-3 13th.

Price said his round "was kind of like a British Open today. We've played 13 different golf courses, but today, I completely misread the wind five times.

"But even par is not a bad score today. I did get the job done, but I didn't putt well. In fact, my putting has been erratic. I suppose I'm not making the bonus putts."

Kraft, Price said, has "been around. He's ready to win. There are so many good guys waiting to win a tournament."

Sluman, 94th on the money list, has a ninth-place tie to show for 1994.

"I played good, solid golf today," Sluman said. "This is one of those courses where you get rewarded for a good shot and penalized for a bad one."

"It was a difficult day," Couples said. "It was freezing out there. The temperature must have dropped 20 degrees. But this course sets up well for my game and it's appealing to my eye."

Peruvian's 68 takes lead

■ LPGA Y-W Classic

YOUNGSTOWN, Ohio (AP) — Alicia Dibos of Peru shot a 4-under-par 68 on Saturday and held the lead in the rain-interrupted second round of the Youngstown-Warren LPGA Classic.

Only 65 of the 131 players managed to complete the second round, which was suspended after a four-hour rain delay. Of the early starters who finished the second round, Dibos held a one-shot lead at 3-under 141. Barb Bunkowsky matched Dibos' 68 and was at 142, and the group at 143 included Michele Redman and Lisa Kiggens. Redman shot a 69 and Kiggens, winner of the Rochester International two weeks ago, had a 70.

At even-par 144 were Lenore Rittenhouse, who shot 69, and Loretta Alderete, who had a 71.

The only other sub-70 round posted Saturday was a 69 by Laurel Kean, who came back from a 78 on Friday.

The 66 golfers caught on the course Saturday must return Sunday morning to complete the second round. Those surviving the 36-hole cut will then play the third round Sunday afternoon.

The first-day leaders had just begun play when weather interrupted their second tour of the 6,308-yard Avalon Lakes Golf Course. Kim Shipman, who shot a 3-under 69 on Friday, birdied three of the five holes she played and was at 6-under. The 10-year pro has never won an LPGA event.

Tammie Green, the Somerset, Ohio, resident who shot 67 for a one-stroke lead Friday, was at even par through three holes Saturday to remain 5-under.

Also 3-under in Saturday's round was Betsy King, who got in eight holes before play was halted. King, one shy of the 30 victories needed to qualify for the LPGA Hall of Fame, stood at 5-under along with Colleen Walker, Katie Peterson-Parker, Julie Larsen, Dottie Mochrie and Jean Zedlitz.

Defending champion Nancy Lopez was 2-under for the day after 10 holes following a 1-under 71 on Friday.

RYAN: New coach runs tight ship

crusade.

"I have a gift about judging players," said the always confident Ryan, who turned 60 in February. "It can't be taught."

Ryan has already assembled a friends-or-family-of-Buddy coaching staff. And early on, he announced that players would wear coats and ties on trips and sing the national anthem in straight-line formation with helmets in hand. In fact, the players must be standing at attention for the anthem — they will be monitored by video camera — and those who are out of line will be fined. It's no surprise that Ryan, who likes his players to call him Buddy, calls them by their number.

No. 23 (Garrison Hearst) learned quickly about Ryan's gifts about judging players. Two weeks after the coach arrived, Ryan realized that his second-year running back, in the process of rehabilitating torn cartilage in his left knee, was working out in Georgia, and not under the eyes of the Cardinals' trainers.

Ryan called Hearst's agent and demanded that his "property" move to Arizona to rehabilitate his knee. Hearst, in the second year of a $7.5 million contract, agreed.

"Buddy Ryan is a lot like George Patton," said Ronnie Jones, now the Cardinals' defensive coordinator and a man who worked as a linebacker coach for Ryan in Philadelphia, and then rejoined him in Houston last season. "Patton feared he would never get the opportunity to fulfill his dream. Buddy left unfinished business at Philadelphia."

Ryan was dismissed as the Eagles coach in 1991 after five seasons in which he produced solid teams, including the NFC East Division champion in 1988, but always fell flat in the playoffs.

"I was the third-winningest coach in the National Football League," said Ryan.

"When the guy fired me in Philly, that was ridiculous. There was nothing to prepare me for that owner," he said, referring to the Eagles' Norman Braman. "He didn't understand the people business at all. That's what the NFL is — the people business."

Ryan was out of coaching for two years before Bud Adams, the owner of the Oilers, brought him in as Houston's defensive coordinator in January 1993 "to save Jack Pardee's job," as Ryan brashly interpreted it.

Just weeks earlier, the Oilers had somehow blown a 35-3 lead to the Buffalo Bills in an AFC wildcard game. The fallout over that embarrassment led to the dismissal of Houston's defensive coordinator, Jim Eddy, and the secondary coach, Pat Thomas, and to Ryan's re-emergence in the NFL.

Although the Oilers got off to a rocky start with Ryan on board, they eventually reeled off a long winning streak and captured the AFC Central title only to get upset in the playoffs by Joe Montana and the Kansas City Chiefs.

One of Ryan's notorious moments came in the final game of the regular season when the Oilers, who were manhandling the Jets, turned the ball over near halftime on an interception instead of running out the clock. An enraged Ryan threw a punch at the Oilers' offensive coordinator, Kevin Gilbride, and then essentially refused to apologize. The consensus around the league was that Ryan would never be an NFL head coach again. But the experts were wrong.

"Buddy was not only worried about winning that game," said Joyner, "he didn't want anyone getting hurt. The offense should have kneeled on the ball. Don't put the defense in the position to defend a touchdown or field goals. It makes no sense.

"I talk to players on every team. Coaches fight and yell at each other. So do players. Swings are taken. Buddy Ryan got caught on nationwide film."

To hear his 31-year-old twin sons, Rex and Rob, tell it, Ryan is unrepentant about the punch and not about to change his overall behavior. Rex and Rob, hired as the Cardinals' defensive line and defensive back coaches, respectively, believe that it was their father who taught Gilbride a lesson.

"Buddy Ryan saw Kevin Gilbride as a challenge," said Rex, who was a defensive coach at Morehead State in Kentucky for four years. "He's never backed down in his life."

"He's the type of guy," added Rob, a former running backs coach at Tennessee State, "that players know will do whatever he can to make them better. Go into battle with them. Protect the family.

"It shows that he was a master sergeant in the Korean War. Everyone volunteers to go with him. Other leaders don't get the same respect. He's passed that on to us. We have the attitude. Be honest with your people. Win."

At the Cardinals' $13 million, state-of-the-art training facility in Tempe, Ryan is surrounded by all the accouterments of winning that money can buy. The new coach's only regret is that his presidential-proportioned office is encased in windows, leaving little wall space to allow his wife, Joan, to decorate. His coaching memorabilia defines his career, and he wishes it to define his walls too.

"I always wanted to be a coach," said Ryan, who grew up in Frederick, Okla. "I thought about it walking back and forth to school. My high school coach, Francie Young, he must be 100, he inspired me.

"But, Weeb Ewbank had the biggest influence on my philosophies. His offensive mind was 100 years ahead of his time. And I guarantee you Weeb was as tough as Vince Lombardi, but Lombardi was quoted more. Weeb always had people in his office chewing their butts out."

"I don't know about that," Ewbank demurred, from his home in Oxford, Ohio. "I do know that Buddy learned about his defense from the way I wanted Joe Namath protected. I don't think any quarterback will do any good without protection. Buddy made up his mind about defense because of the attacks on Namath.

TITLE: Navratilova ends 'love affair that grows'

(From 1C)

great run."

Navratilova has said this would be her last singles match at her favorite tournament. It was her 12th Wimbledon final and 85th appearance on Centre Court.

Asked if she would consider returning next year, Navratilova said, "I don't think so. I think I've had enough. This is a nice way to end. I've had a great run, better than anything I could have imagined. I'm obviously sad, but I'm also happy. It's a new beginning for me. I'm looking forward to my life after tennis."

On her relationship with Wimbledon, Navratilova said, "It's like a love affair that grows ... I feel this place in my bones ... There's no place like it."

Martinez, the first Spanish woman to win the Wimbledon championship, became the first player other than Navratilova and Steffi Graf to win since 1981.

"I knew she was so excited to win the 10th," Martinez said of Navratilova. "I'm sorry that she couldn't win it, but I'm very pleased that I did."

"I felt shivers all around. It was a great feeling. I'm not totally conscious of what I've done."

Martinez was the second Spanish woman to reach the final. The first was Lili de Alvarez in 1928.

Her victory marked the first time that Spanish women have won two Grand Slams in the same year. Arantxa Sanchez Vicario won the French Open last month.

Martinez received $410,844, with Navratilova getting $205,422.

Martinez hit a remarkable 28 passing shots — most off the backhand — in keeping the charging Navratilova at bay. Navratilova, charging the net at every opportunity, had 22 volley winners.

"Today, she passed me as well as anyone has," Navratilova said.

The match ended after 1 hour, 59 minutes, with Martinez going to the net after a backhand slice approach shot — and watching Navratilova's backhand sail wide. Martinez then flung her racket into the air and let out a shriek.

Navratilova sat in her chair, let out a sigh and smiled at her friends and coaches in the players' box. When she received the runner-up trophy from the Duchess of Kent, Navratilova smiled, laughed and bowed — then tears came to her eyes as the Centre Court crowd gave her a long standing ovation.

"How about next year?" a fan shouted as Navratilova walked around the court to show the trophy to the crowd.

"That's when it hit me," she said. "This is the last time. That was rough. But no regrets, absolutely none."

After the players split the first two sets, Martinez took advantage of double faults by Navratilova on crucial points in the decisive set. The first on break point in the second game gave the Spaniard a 2-0 lead. Although Navratilova broke back to make it 2-2, she double faulted again on break point in the next game, giving Martinez a 3-2 lead.

Navratilova had a chance to even the set when she earned two break points in the eighth game. But Martinez held her nerve and saved both, followed by two passing shot winners to win the game for 5-3. Navratilova, perhaps deflated, was broken at 15 in the next game to end the match.

The first set was ragged, with five service breaks, including four in a row. But Martinez prevailed by breaking in the 10th game with a forehand cross-court pass.

Navratilova took command in the second set by breaking in the first game and raced to a 4-0 lead.

During the changeover at 3-0, Martinez took a three-minute injury tinmeout and received treatment on her upper left thigh or hip. As Martinez lay face down on a towel while a trainer worked on her, Navratilova came over and said, "Can I help?" She then held up a towel to shield Martinez from photographers.

No distractions for Sampras

N.Y. Times News Service

WIMBLEDON, England — For the past three weeks, Pete Sampras has quietly commuted between an apartment in a London hotel, where he has been just as sequestered as the occupants of nearby Buckingham Palace, and the grass courts at Wimbledon, where he will attempt to defend his title Sunday against the searing serve of Goran Ivanisevic.

Sampras has admitted no distractions, done no sightseeing, read none of the tabloid laments about his unprovocative lifestyle.

"I see Big Ben every night on my way home, and that's about it," said Sampras.

At 22, Sampras already holds four Grand Slam titles, and the one he earned here last year represented a lifelong quest for which he began making sacrifices — no team sports in high school — and taking risks — abandoning his trusty two-handed backhand — when he was only 13.

While his game is based on a strategic attack, his present mission at Wimbledon, where he has now won 13 consecutive matches, involves defense.

"I'm not here just to play, I'm here to defend my title," said Sampras, who had captured three straight Grand Slam titles before being derailed by Jim Courier last month at the French Open. "There's a huge difference between winning and losing the final; I mean, everyone only remembers the winner."

Ivanisevic, who like Sampras has dropped only one set through six rounds, can relate to that. The runner-up to Andre Agassi in 1992, Ivanisevic hasn't managed to keep his cool and survive six Slam rounds since then. But this year, vowed the left-hander, is different.

According to the 22-year-old Croat, Sampras will be facing a player just as determined as he is. Ivanisevic leads their rivalry by 5-2 and won both matches they played on grass, one of them the 1992 semifinal here.

"This year is different," said Ivanisevic. "I mean, I'm keeping the level. I'm confident, I mean, I'm playing Pete and I'm playing better than I did two years ago.

"Two years ago I didn't think I can lose that match against Agassi; now I don't think anymore. I just go out there, and everybody says Pete is the favorite, so that's nice to hear."

Sampras, whose No. 1 ranking appears inviolable this year, has already won eight tournaments in 1994. Ivanisevic, who has used his run here to move to a career-high No. 2, is seeking not only his first Grand Slam title but his first 1994 title. Of his last 18 finals, Sampras has won 16, a tenacious streak that began after his disappointing loss to Stefan Edberg in the 1992 U.S. Open final.

"I'm not satisfied," Sampras said after his semifinal victory against Todd Martin. "Like you get so close, you want to be holding up that trophy."

King of Spain misses Martinez win Wimbledon

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — The king of Spain, who cheered Sergi Bruguera and Arantxa Sanchez Vicario to victories at the French Open, wasn't on hand Saturday when another of his subjects won a Grand Slam crown.

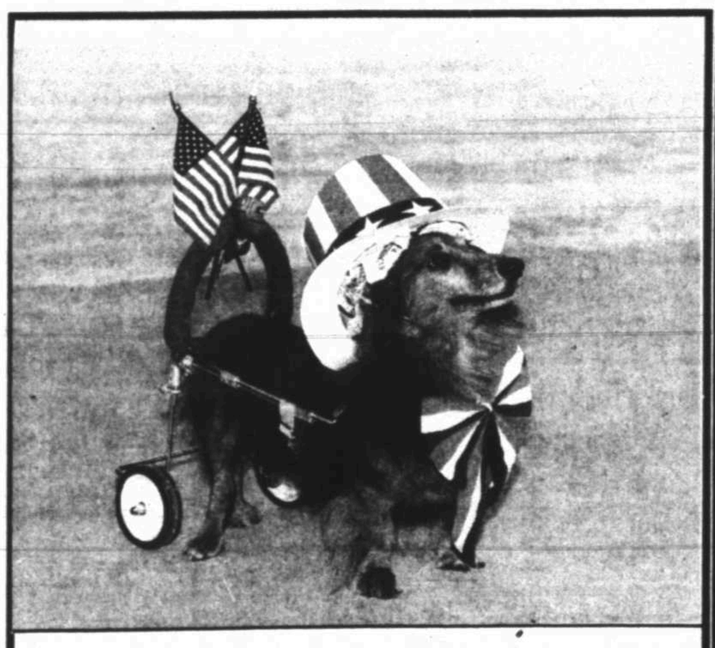

Despite rumors and newspapers reports that he would show, King Juan Carlos was instead represented by Spain's ambassador to Britain, Alberto Aza, as Conchita Martinez beat Martina Navratilova to become the first Spaniard woman to win the Wimbledon women's title.

The ambassador joined a well-stocked Centre Court royal box, which included Princess Diana and her 12-year-old son William.

Also on hand were the Duke and Duchess of Kent, the royal patrons of the All England Club, former

Author recounts evils of murderer he calls 'human crime wave'

By Mike Cochran
Associated Press

DALLAS — He was known as the "Mall Passer," a cunning and elusive counterfeiter who crisscrossed the country flooding shopping malls with bogus money.

Finally, in 1983 at a Tennessee shopping center, the Secret Service captured and unmasked its quarry, Arkansas-born Mike DeBardeleben.

And then, to their mounting amazement, federal agents confronted what Dallas author Stephen G. Michaud describes as "a species of evil totally beyond their experience, or their imaginations."

DeBardeleben, they would discover, was also a car thief, con artist, bank robber, forger, kidnapper, rapist and suspected killer of "monumentally perverse appetites."

"A human crime wave," Michaud calls him in his latest book, "Lethal Shadow," an Onyx True Crime paperback.

Michaud, who, with co-author Hugh Aynesworth, has written two books on serial killer Ted Bundy, notes that authorities tend to compare DeBardeleben with such degenerate killers as Bundy, John Gacy and Jeffrey Dahmer.

"Where these comparisons falter," Michaud points out, "is in the breadth of DeBardeleben's depredations, and in his painstakingly patient and methodical approach to murder, which allowed him to remain at large for longer than his putative peers."

Some 18 years in fact.

In the end, he was indicted 11 times in Texas and eight other states, twice for murder, and convicted in six cases. He was assessed a total of 375 years in prison.

Authorities insist, however, that covers only a fraction of his crimes. He remains the prime or sole suspect in four murders and is suspected of several more.

"Mike DeBardeleben," says FBI Special Agent Roy Hazlewood, "is the best-documented sexual sadist since the Marquis de Sade."

Almost everything about Debardeleben was bizarre, not the least of which was his twisted propensity to tape record his activities before, after and sometimes during his sex crimes.

Evidence suggests that he also killed one or more of his female victims without sexually assaulting them.

Occasionally, he rated his targets on a scale of 1 to 10 and was even harsher on his own shortcomings.

"I'm too old/ugly/poor . . . to attract . . . young pretty girls," he wrote in one rambling critique. He said he needed drugs to "get going" and "accomplish things."

He said he hated women and, haranguing over one of several wives, wrote that he did not want to kill her: "I want to punish her . . . make her cry, crawl, beg."

And that's only the things that are printable.

He wrote of his "low self esteem," "anxiety," "fear" and his lust for "total control."

Conversely, when in custody, he defended himself eloquently if not always successfully.

Clashing with a trial judge in a New Jersey sexual assault case, the defendant snarled: "With all due respect, I think your honor should have an examination for senility."

On another occasion, he declared in court:

"I am innocent of this crime. . . . Yet I was framed, framed in a sinister, evil and insidious machination, conspiracy if you will."

And this: "A foul odor of corruption emanates from this courtroom. Corruption so pervasive, arrogant and reprehensible that it is repugnant to any civilized notion of fundamental fairness or human dignity."

Eerily, he reminds one of Anthony Hopkins' fictional Hannibal the Cannibal in "The Silence of the Lambs."

How could one so deranged, deviant and complex escape notoriety?

"Unlike other aberrant offenders in his category," Michaud says, "DeBardeleben did not acquiesce in his imprisonment, or acknowledge his guilt or seize the occasions of his several sensational trials to reach for the black celebrity that America accords its truly weird and outrageous criminals."

Paradoxically, Michaud points out, "he would become the most infamous largely anonymous felon in American criminal history."

Read "Lethal Shadow" and shudder.

Parents' worst nightmare: Koslow saga ends

By Mike Cochran
Associated Press

FORT WORTH — In the early morning hours of March 12, 1992, Kevin Levy awakened to the ominous sound of a doorbell ringing at his Rivercrest home.

"Ken!" a voice cried. "It's Jack! You've got to help me!"

He opened the door to find his neighbor, Jack Koslow, covered in blood. His face was swollen and mangled and his neck was slashed.

"We've been beaten and robbed," he mumbled as Levy telephoned police.

So began a compelling murder case that escalated from a mystifying society slaying to what a lawyer called "every parent's worst nightmare."

One that inspired a prosecutor to tell a jury that "the greatest crime of all" was the defendant's treachery and betrayal: "The killing of your own parents for profit has been denounced through the centuries from the dawn of time."

The saga ended last week in a packed courtroom when a jury convicted 19-year-old Kristi Koslow of killing her stepmother and assessed her a life prison sentence.

The panel ruled in effect that Miss Koslow orchestrated a murder-for-hire scheme to dispose of her parents, Jack and Caren Koslow, planning to finance the plot with a multimillion-dollar inheritance.

When investigators entered the Koslow's bedroom that March morning, they found Mrs. Koslow, 40, lying in a pool of blood. She had been beaten and her throat cut.

"The killing of your own parents for profit has been denounced through the centuries from the dawn of time.'

Prosecutor to jury

Within hours, Fort Worth was awash in rumors, most of them focused on Jack Koslow, then 48, a rakish onetime Vietnam helicopter pilot who had lost his job at the city's oldest bank.

His first marriage had ended in divorce and his ex-wife, Paula Koslow, was awarded custody of their adopted daughter, Kristi.

In 1983, he remarried, and quite well. Blonde, attractive and socially active, Caren Courtney worked at his bank. She also was an heir to a vast Texas oil fortune.

Even worse than the rumors, a cowboy cop named Curt Brannan was convinced that Koslow killed his wife and had spent two weeks building an awesome case against him.

On March 24, 12 days after the slaying, the veteran homicide detective arranged a videotaped interview with Koslow as a prelude to his arrest.

That same day police received a call from a teen-ager named Paul Carillo, who said he had some items they might find interesting. Among those items, he said, was the metal pry bar used to kill Caren Koslow.

He told investigators he got them from a friend, Jeff Dillingham, 19.

Within hours, police arrested Dillingham, then swooped down on Kristi Koslow and her boyfriend, Brian Salter. All three gave statements admitting their involvement.

Salter, though not forthcoming at once, admitted he cut the Koslows' throats after Dillingham had beaten them unconscious with the pry bar.

After rejecting a plea bargain offer, Dillingham was convicted and assessed the death penalty. Salter wasted no time striking his own deal.

In exchange for a life sentence, he pleaded guilty and agreed to testify against Miss Koslow, obviously the prime target of the district attorney's office.

Alan Levy, who heads the criminal trial section, left no doubt that he wanted a death penalty. On 10 previous occasions, he persuaded juries to assess the maximum punishment.

The most recent was the Dillingham case.

Now, if he succeeded, Kristi Koslow would become only the fifth woman on death row in Texas.

Levy laid out his evidence against Miss Koslow through 23 witnesses spread over seven days. Jurors got the case Wednesday and were back in little more than three hours with a conviction.

Thus the stage was set for the final chapter: life or death. Jurors had no other options.

In the deathly silent courtroom, defense lawyer Mark Daniel appealed to the panel to spare Miss Koslow's life. As his time expired, he suddenly whirled and pointed directly at Levy.

"He's probably the only lawyer in this state who could talk a jury into killing this girl," Daniel declared.

And he may have been right.

What greater crime, Levy asked the jury, could this defendant have committed?

He said the Koslows were not assaulted on "impulse, a fleeting thought or an immature moment. This was rehearsed and planned and thought out."

Responding to defense arguments that a turbulent childhood and a dysfunctional family were mitigating factors, Levy said:

"The philosophy that someone's parents or one's schools or environment should diminish their moral responsibility is a bankrupt philosophy. It is the philosophy that turned the Koslow home on March 12 into a slaughterhouse."

The jury was out 80 minutes before arriving at the lesser penalty. It did not buy the argument that Miss Koslow is a continuing threat to society, one of two mandatory "special issues" required for a death penalty under Texas law.

It is a sentence, however, that requires Miss Koslow spend 35 years in prison before becoming eligible for parole.

Drive-by shooting bill comes too late for many young victims

By Kelley Shannon
Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO — Emma Baretto was sleeping peacefully in a room with her parents late one April night when 40 rounds of gunfire ripped into their small San Antonio home.

Twelve-year-old Emma was struck in the head and stomach.

Emma died.

Raymundo Manuel Diaz, 4, was settling in to watch the Super Bowl with his family when a barrage of shots from a passing car besieged their house.

When the shooting ended, Raymundo was standing against a wall, his eyes rolled to one side, blood dripping from his head. A smile was on his small face, then he cried.

"It hurts, Mommy," Raymundo's mother recalled him saying.

Raymundo died.

Cory Weems was eating ice cream on his grandmother's front porch in Dallas on a warm spring morning when a car chase became a gun battle and the bullets came his way.

Cory, 9, was shot once in the head.

Cory died.

Sleeping, watching TV, eating ice cream — all such simple joys. Joys that can quickly turn deadly for innocent children and adults caught in the path of drive-by shootings and other random gunfire.

Once strictly a threat in big metropolitan areas, these acts of violence, often committed by youth gangs, have spread to smaller cities and towns.

"It is no longer just a big-city problem. It is no longer just inner-city Dallas, Houston and San Antonio," Texas Attorney General Dan Morales said in San Antonio recently as he unveiled a new juvenile crime-fighting package.

U.S. Attorney General Janet Reno, also while in San Antonio, described youth violence as "probably the greatest single crime problem in America today."

"It is an aimless, random violence that is terrifying in terms of the neglect it reflects that part of America has to its children," Reno said.

San Antonio is all too familiar with the problem.

There were 1,262 drive-by shootings in San Antonio in 1993, the year the city's police department began keeping a count after the shootings became "a phenomenon," said police spokesman Sgt. David Ramos.

That compares with 221 drive-by shootings in Dallas in 1993 and 186 in Fort Worth. Dallas recorded 356 in 1992, while Fort Worth had 224.

Other big Texas cities, like Houston and El Paso, don't track drive-by shootings per se, but categorize them with homicides or assaults. That's also the case with other large police departments across the country.

The FBI doesn't count the number of drive-by shootings nationally, nor does the Texas Department of Public Safety tally them for the state.

But statistics aren't necessary for victims and police officers to understand the tragedy. The rampage has become so prevalent that, especially in larger cities, the deaths are hardly news anymore.

At Christopher Castillo's funeral in Houston in May, his friends weren't shocked by the random shooting death of the 13-year-old sixth-grader. A classmate died last year in a drive-by shooting. Another friend was shot in the head during a drug deal.

The widespread worry about youth violence has prompted Texas politicians — like Democratic incumbent Gov. Ann Richards and Republican challenger George W. Bush — to seize the issue this election year.

The Texas Legislature already has attempted to take a stand against drive-by shootings by passing an anti-gang bill last year that makes it a third-degree felony to shoot or point a gun from cars at people, other cars or homes.

HOMES & CLASSIFIED

Have A Cool Drink!

Text by Tonya Bullard

Built for a large family that likes to play and entertain, the home at 3913 Northfield Court offers ample space for a homeowner to these recreational dreams.

Such a dream begins at the curb in front of the home. From the outside, the size of the home is hidden. A vaulted roof, too, is deceiving--the home appears to have two stories.

Only when visitors walk up the winding sidewalk, past a lush green lawn and carefully manicured flowerbeds and enter the home will they see the home's awesome expanse.

Once through the solid front door, the view from the entry way these visitors encounter may continue to amaze them.

Straight ahead, the warmth and acceptance of the gigantic living room is obvious, and slightly to the right, an atrium, accessible through sliding doors, allows sunlight and vegetation to enhance this warmth.

Perfect for fragile plants in winter or reptilian pets in summer, this atrium, lined with clean, white rocks, brings a breath of freshness and openness to the entry way.

Adjoining the atrium, a formal dining room creates the perfect atmosphere of elegance needed to host memorable dinner parties.

A door off the dining room leads to the kitchen. This could be quite convenient for discreet serving at any gathering. The kitchen, too, offers a place forpersonal entertaining.

Here, in the kitchen, one could prepare scrumptious dishes to tempt guests of any age or background. A chef's delight, this large room features a triple sink, a dishwasher, a built-in pantry and a double refrigerator.

Below any chef's feet, Mexican tiles reflect the ultraviolet lights above the major work areas. The island, complete with cooking range, provides an area to cook and still remain involved in household activities.

At one end of the work area, which is below artfully-stained, custom-molded cabinets, a phone area and place for a barstool provide a quiet nook for an extended conversation or a place near enough to the range to watch food.

Although the water for the entire home flows through a water softener, a reverse osmosis drinking unit enhances the kitchen.

Much entertaining may be done in the kitchen, but the living room is a central guest area.

Here, visitors may be welcomed with a huge fireplace (with a gas starter), accent lighting, wooden decor and neutral carpet.

In the living room, a built-in wet bar and easy access to a large covered patio give entertainers opportunity for relaxed, summer group gatherings.

The master suite, off the living room hallway, has a private courtyard with aggregate paving. On the wall, a mountain scene mural adds peace to the privacy of this room.

The master bath is complete with a garden-level tub, walk in closets and his-n-her sinks.

Nearby, two smaller bedrooms, one with a walk-in closet, and the other with a special shoe rack in its closet, allow occupants quiet corners for play or sleep. A bathroom, with a built-in clothes hamper, serves these rooms.

On the same hall as the bedrooms, an office with large closets is a great place to study or to make a guest list. Present owners have two desks in this room--this shows the multi-purpose, usable space of this room.

Through the office, though, is perhaps the greatest feature of the home: a huge family room.

With bleached, hardwood floors and a vaulted ceiling, this room is truly where any entertainer realizes a dream. A corner brick fireplace invites guests to sit and share.

An entire wall of built-in storage opposite a long window seat (with storage below it) provides room for any sort of amusement imaginable.

The windows above the window seat open out to Quanah Parker Park, what the current owners describe as the biggest back yard possible.

Outside this huge room, a built-in hot tub on a redwood deck sits, still another attraction to visitors. Also, a circular gravel area may be used for a swingset or a trampoline.

At the end of the family room is a sequestered, well-lit bedroom and bathroom, with a built-in laundry hamper.

Smith said this room accommodates the privacy needs of a family with an older teen or a mother-in-law. She said with minor adjustments, the shower area could be wheelchair-accessible.

A utility room off the kitchen leads to the backyard and garage area.

Beside the double, rear-entry, detached garage is a covered, fenced parking space to store a boat or a recreation vehicle. Realtor Linda Smith said such a feature is rare in Midland's city limits.

The separate side and backyards may be kept elegantly lush and green through the underground sprinkler system, fed by a water well.

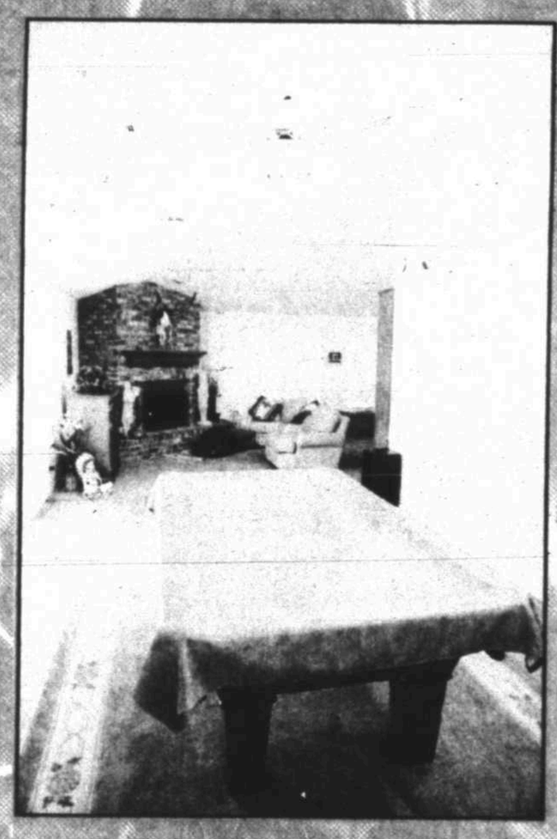

Maintenance of the yard is minimal as little grass requires mowing. Both live oak and red oak trees dot the landscape on this property.

The home, fitted with a zoned air-conditioning and system and padded with extra insulation, is protected by a superior digital security system.

Smith and Chaparral Realty will host an open house for this home, listed at $154,900, from 2-4 p.m. on Sunday, July 3. Smith said she will provide cold drinks to interested persons to help beat the heat.

To view this home at another time, or to discover more information, please contact Smith at 686-7000, or at 911 N. Midkiff.

Compost provides excellent source of landscape nutrients, eliminates waste

Pat Orseth
President/Midland
Association of Realtors

Summertime's warm weather and sunshine brings another season of mowing and maintaining your lawn. The Midland Association of REALTORS would like to share some tips on the use of grass and other yard clippings as a source of nutrients for gardening and landscaping your home.

On average, yard waste accounts for a large percent of all the material buried in Texas. During the summer, yard waste can amount to 50 percent or more of residential trash. It is time to change those statistics!

The Midland Association of REALTORS recommends recycling yard clippings for the good of both your lawn and the environment. Creating a compost pile is an ideal way to recycle your lawn wastes while simultaneously providing a source of nutrients for gardening and landscaping. Anything growing in your yard is potential compost material.

Ideally you should begin your compost pile in late spring for use in the fall and in the fall for use in the spring. However, it is never too late to begin the process.

To begin, remove any grass and sod cover from the area where you plan to construct a compost pile. Create a bin to enclose the compost. Prefabricated snow fencing, woven wire, wood pallets or bricks can serve as inexpensive compost bins. Be sure to allow for easy access through the top or sides for turning the compost.

For best results follow these recommendations:

- 1st Layer: 3 to 4 inches of chopped brush or other coarse material.
- 2nd Layer: 6 to 8 inches of leaves, grass clippings, sawdust, etc. Material should be "sponge" damp. You may want to sprinkle sulfur over the heap to increase its acidity.
- 3rd Layer: 1 inch of soil (to speed up the process)
- 4th Layer: 2 to 3 inches of commercial fertilizer to provide the nitrogen needed.
- 5th Layer: Repeat steps 1-4 until the bin is almost full. Top off heap with a 4 to 6 inch layer of straw and scoop out a "basin" st the top to catch the rain.

A properly mace heap will reach a temperature of 140 to 160 degrees Fahrenheit in four to five days. At this time, you will notice a settling, a good sign that your compost is working properly. After five to six weeks, fork the materials into a pile, turning the outside of the old heap into the center of the new pile. Add water if necessary. It should not be necessary to turn your heap a second time. The compost should be ready to sue within three to four months.

Compost is ready when it is dark brown, crumbly and earthy smelling. For best results when using, turn your soil, apply 1 to 3 inch layers of compost and work it in well.

Fertilizing your garden and lawn with compost can improve the overall landscape and beauty of your home.

In addition to saving landfill space, recycling your lawn reduces your water usage and the need to purchase soil conditioners and trash bags. That is good for you and the environment.

You can find out more about caring for your lawn and about composts by contacting your local nursery.

The Midland Association of REALTORS is one of more than 1800 local boards and associations of REALTORS nationwide that comprise the National Association of REALTORS. As the nation's largest trade association, NAR is "The Voice for Real Estate," representing nearly 750,000 members involved in all aspects of the real estate industry.

Real Estate Facts:

The doctor will see you now

Vicky Garrett
Chaparral Realtors

Have you ever noticed they your doctor's office works by appointment only? If you show up announced, you may have a long wait.

Doctors offer a valuable service, are in high demand, and must, by the nature of their profession, be organized. Other professionals work by appointment also, i.e. attorneys, accountants, etc. They are highly trained in a complex field of knowledge. To perform their responsibilities efficiently, they must work by appointment.

The same need for organization exists in the real estate profession. Real estate agents don't just "show houses" to buyers. The majority of their time is spent researching properties, planning and implementing promotional campaigns, and coordinating transaction closings with attorneys and lenders.

While your doctor spends most of the time in one location, a real estate agent conducts most activities away from the office. This diverse schedule of meetings with attorneys, tax officials, loan officers, surveyors, and title companies requires careful time management. As a result, you will often find that highly active agents work by appointment too.

Homes aren't bought and sold by accident. Succesful real estate transactions occur as a direct result of careful planning and effort by organized, efficient agents.

When buying a home, plan ahead. Begin with an appointment for a pre-search interview. Explain your home buying objectives, and be prepared to describe the home of your dreams.

When selling, ask for an appointment to discuss the marketing strategies for your home. expect your agent to research the market thoroughly, providing accurate information upon which to base your selling decision.

If you expect excellence from a real estate agent, expect to make an appointment too.

OIL REPORT

SUNDAY, JULY 3, 1994 SERVING 54 COUNTIES IN WEST TEXAS AND NEW MEXICO

BRIEFING

A separator looms over a lease near Lamesa, as industry enjoys higher oil prices.

Prices see-saw

Oil prices saw sharp drops and sharp increases this past week, buffeted by various news reports.

News Monday that Iraq had agreed to certain conditions allowing it to sell oil to Turkey sent August contracts for West Texas Intermediate to $19.01 on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Prices rebounded somewhat the next day amid reports of expected continued tight oil supplies in the Midwest, and news that Iraqi plans to sell crude to Turkey had run into problems. Traders also became nervous about reports of a possible strike by Norwegian oil workers.

Oil prices fell below the $19 level at mid-week, weakened largely by heavy selling of gasoline futures as those contracts expired. Also, an expected tightness in crude supplies did not materialize as a weekly report from the American Petroleum Exchange indicated the nation's crude supplies had risen in the previous week.

A flare-up in the civil war in Yemen, which saw an oilfield in the north bombed, sent prices climbing 54 cents to $19.37 a barrel. The market has traditionally been sensitive to any disturbances in the Middle East. The posted price settled at $18 a barrel.

Natural gas prices also were slightly higher, closing at $2.18 per thousand cubic feet late in the week.

A driller stands in the door of a dog house, as rig count holds steady.

Drilling mixed

Drilling activity was mixed during the week ended June 24, Baker Hughes Inc. reports.

The Permian Basin rig count inched up one rig to 109, just above last year's 107.

Lea County, N.M. was the most active in the Basin with 20 rigs, followed by Eddy County, N.M. with 13 and Midland County with nine.

Nationwide, the rig count slipped eight rigs to 761; a year ago the count was 702.

Among major producing states, New Mexico posted the biggest gain, six rigs, while the sharpest drop was in Colorado and Wyoming, four rigs each.

Andrews actvity

As part of its plan announced two years ago, Orbitron Operating Corp. has staked 11 wells in the Embar (Yates) and Shafter Lake (Yates) fields of Andrews County.

Two years ago the company announced it would drill or recomplete a number of wells in the Yates formation and produce natural gas from the wells. The company plans to clean nitrogen from the gas and sell the cleaned-up gas.

A remote well does its part to keep production up. Texas production is now at its lowest level since 1942, prompting concern from state officials for more state incentives.

Texas production hits record low

■ Record low oil production brings calls for government assistance for the domestic industry.

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

Texas oil production continues to decline to World War II levels, bringing calls for incentives for the industry from both the federal and state governments.

In April, the Railroad Commission reported, the state's oil production fell to its lowest level since 1942, 1.49 million barrels per day. In April 1993, production was 100,000 barrels per day higher at 1.596 million barrels per day.

The state produced 477,828,000 barrels or 1.309 million barrels per day for the year 1942 from 98,757 wells.

Railroad Commissioner Mary Scott Nabers estimates that the 100,000 barrel decline has cost the state economy $1.5 billion, and that is one reason the Texas Railroad Commission is looking a new package of incentives.

Nabers calculates the loss this way: With 100,000 barrels of production per day lost, that amounts to 36.5 million barrels lost over a year's time. At an average wellhead price of $15 per barrel, those lost barrels are valued at $547.5 million. Multiplied by the State Comptroller's economic multiplier of 2.91, the loss equals $1.59 billion.

"That's a serious blow to both the economy and the state's oil and gas industry," said James E. (Jim) Nugent, chairman of the commission.

"The figures serve to underscore the seriousness of the problems the industry faces," said Nabers, who presented historical evidence for the Texas decline.

Going back to 1935, the state's total crude production for the year was 375,617,000 barrels, an average of 1 million barrels a day was produced from 59,461 wells.

By 1950, the number of wells had risen to 123,271, producing an average of 2.2 million barrels per day for a year's total of 817,842,000 barrels.

In 1960, 192,627 wells were producing 2.4 million barrels per day for a year's accumulation of 892,084,000 barrels.

Yearly production passed the billion barrel mark in 1966, when total crude production was just over one billion from 196,308 wells. averaging 2.741 million barrels daily.

In 1970, the number of wells had declined to 177,221, but they were producing 3.309 million barrels daily, for a year's total of 1.2 billion barrels.

By 1980. yearly production had fall-

New round of incentives in planning

■ Declining prodution prompts more incentives for producers

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

"We know that there are 129 billion barrels of oil left underground in Texas, right now, today," states Railroad Commissioner Mary Scott Nabers. "That amount is worth $2 trillion to this state's economy. When you look at that, I know we will be successful with our legislative agenda."

Nabers and the other Railroad Commissioners, Chairman Jim Nugent and Commissioner Barry Williamson, have begun working on a new round of incentives for the state's oil and gas industry following reports that the state's production has fallen to a 52-year low.

"We are considering a wide range of concepts for the Texas legislature to consider in 1995," said Nugent. "As with previous incentives we hope they will prove revenue positive. But taxpayers should note that, at worst, they will be revenue neutral. We are also sowing the seeds for the high-technology future that is so critically important for this industry and Texas."

Among the proposals being considered by the commission are:

■ Excluding non-producing oil and gas fields from direct taxes when the fields are returned to producing status.

■ Incentives to encourage oil and gas research facilities in Texas.

■ Allowing producers to offset taxes on marginal well production with negotiable "chits" earned on new well production.

■ Encouraging more students to study petroleum engineering.

Nabers said that "We are probably 30 days away from having finalized a very basic plan to take to the Legisla-

Since the first of the year, Hy-Bon has landed contracts from the Shengli District of the China National Oil Co. for the sale of approximately $1.2 million in compressor packages, and is looking to substantially increase future orders and perhaps even execute a

Looking for an ocean of low-priced oil

Pitts

In Chinese its called: You-can-get-in-but-you-can't-get-out.

That's the local name for the immense, remote and hostile Tarim Basin of Western China, which is just one of the many remote regions of the world thought to contain vast oil and gas reserves. Hydrocarbon prospectors think it may hold as much oil as Saudia Arabia.

The 350,000-square mile Tarim Basin was just one of numerous regions around the world discussed at a recent International Petroleum Production Conference at the University of Oklahoma.

Other far-off and exotic-sounding regions discussed as possible oil and gas treasure chests were: Tiumen, Ukhata, Khakass and Sakhalin in the former Soviet Union, and the largely unexplored regions of Southeast Asia, Central and South America, Russia, the North Sea and the Gulf of Mexico.

A spokesman for the O.U. conference, which was designed to bring together U.S. oil companies and ministerial level energy officials of foreign countries, noted that it was the first time Dr. Ho Csi Thuang, chairman of Petro Vietnam, had ventured to the west in search of U.S. firms to explore for oil and gas in Viet Nam.

"Ministerial-level officials don't travel to a college town in Oklahoma without good reason," said Richard Benefild, coordinator of the event, noting that the conference was setting a historical precedent in the industry.

"It is a conference that can take oil producers to the door and even open the door, but whether or not they walk through the door is up to them," said Bob Kerr of Kerr-McGee, a conference sponsor.

Many have already entered the foreign door and others are looking to enter. For over six years now, major oil companies have been selling aging and declining U.S. fields to look for elephants overseas. Unocal announced just this week that it would seek to sell all its California assets to look overseas.

Now, well-attended, match-making conferences on foreign exploration, like the one at O.U., are indication that the lure of overseas exploration is spreading to a broader spectrum of independents.

"So what does all this mean to those who look yearningly at foreign vistas but are still drilling in established basins that have had more holes punched in them than grandma's pin cushion?" asked a press announcement on the conference.

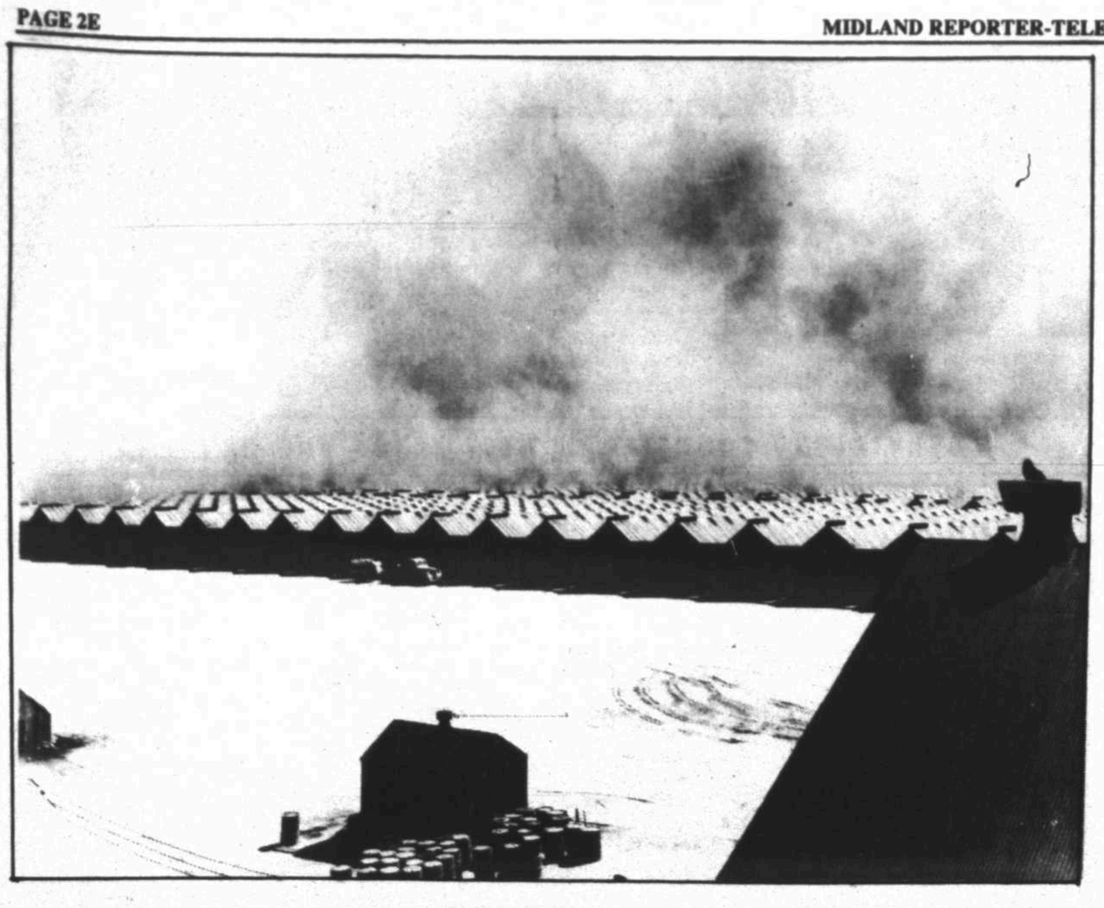

Indeed, what does it mean? More to the point, what does it mean for oil prices and the oil industry? Consider these points of logic:

■ Fact: The more oil on the world market the lower the price goes. This is a proven fact.

■ Fact: The oil is there to be found, because there are vast unexplored areas of the world that have never seen a seismic line or drill bit.

■ Fact: Vast reserves can be found in small geographical areas. It takes only 10 minutes to drive around the world-class Yates field in Pecos County. The field's discovery well, the Yates "A" 30, drilled to only

Second hand smoke

Carbon black plants, which burned crude oil to make carbon black for ink and tires, were once a prominent feature of the Permian Basin. Visible for miles, pilots used the plumes of dark smoke as navigation guides, and vegetation for miles around the plants, like this one at Odessa, were covered with sooty coatings. Legendary wildcatter Sid Richardson was instrumental in building some of the plants, which were disbanned in the late 50s and 60s.

PITTS: Finding cheap oil

■ Fact: Majors and independents now engaged in overseas oil exploration will set examples, cultivate relationships and establish beachheads that make it easier for other producers to follow. Because of his success in Yemen, Dallas independent Ray Hunt has caused the birth of an energy infrastructure in the company and other oil companies to take concessions in Yemen.

■ Fact: The more people you have looking for oil, the greater the chance for new discoveries.

And, what if just one of those discoveries turned out to be another Saudia Arabia, say in a place like the Tarim Basin of China? It could put world oil prices in a tail spin.

Discovered on Oct 5, 1930, the East Texas field was the largest reservoir in the Western Hemisphere. Loaded with six billion barrels, it was larger than the next 20 fields in the U.S. Eight months later, the East Texas field was producing one million barrels per day or one-third the national demand and oil prices dropped to 10 cents per barrel. In Mentone, Texas, water was selling for $1 a barrel.

When the Saudis opened the spigot in 1986 and flooded the world market with crude oil, prices dropped from $27 per barrel to $10 in a matter of six months.

Anyone who thinks there is not another Saudi Arabia or Permian Basin out there somewhere to be found simply does not understand how unexplored the world is.

But find another elusive ocean of oil and the entire oil industry may lose, because of falling prices. Ironic as it sounds, successful foreign exploration could be the key that puts the oil industry in a fix called: you-got-get-in-but-you-can't-get-out.

en below 1 billion barrels, though the most recent oil boom was getting underway. In 1980, 175,673 wells produced 2.544 million barrels daily for a year's total of 931,078,000 barrels.

The number of producing oil wells peaked in 1985 at 210,477, which produced a daily average of 2.276 million barrels for a yearly total of 830,597 million barrels.

For the first four months of 1994, production from the state's 180,000 producing wells has steadily declined from a daily average of 1.530 million barrels in January to 1.477 million barrels daily in April. To date in 1994, the wells have produced a total of 181,340,864 or 1.511 million barrels daily.

Increasing state production, Nabers said, will require government initiatives.

"It will not happen without some sort of stimulus," she said. "If the price of oil shot up tomorrow, then we wouldn't need a stimulus. Bit without an increase in price, it will take a stimulus package to get production back up."

She blames the decline on low prices, which have caused producers to shut in marginal wells that are uneconomical to produce. But she also blames what she calls the very rigid environmental regulations handed down by the Environmental Regulatory Agency.

"The small operator cannot live with those," she said. "They'd almost need a full-time compliance person just to stay abreast of the rules."

News of the sharp decline in Texas production came less than two weeks after almost 100 pro-industry Congressmen met with President Clinton to discuss the ailing energy industry, and prompted Nabers to call for quick federal action.

"These numbers further prove that immediate relief is needed to halt this downward spiral," she stated. "Federal action is critical. Huge job losses have already occurred. We now depend on foreign countries for more than half of our oil needs and run a $55 billion trade deficit."

Of the June 16 meeting with President Clinton, Nabers said she heard from some who attended the meeting that they believe administration officials are open to suggestions to help the industry.

"They feel the gist of Clinton's response was 'I'm interested in doing something, show me what you need the most, what would help the most, bring me a plan and let me look at it.' And Sen. David Boren's Senate Tax Committee may come up with some incentives. They've been talking with us for months, they have our economic models up there, and are studying the way we developed our incentives."

INCENTIVE: Package planned for producers

ture. But it will be, I believe, the most visionary thing ever to come out of state government.

"We have 12 brand new initiatives on the drawing board and our plan is to work on these, get the bugs out of them, make them simple, make them to where they have a positive economic impact on the state and then, in 30 days, send them to the private sector, to industry, ask them if they see any problems with them, if they can think of something better, if they see anything controversial, anything negative, and then spend the next 30 to 45 days getting comments.

"By October, November, we will have the plan totally finalized so we can go to the Legislature in January and say 'Pass all 12 of these.' By doing this, we'll say that if Washington can't lead, Texas will. The idea is to make Texas the most fertile environment in the nation for domestic production."

As state production neared 50-year lows — which it reached last year — the Railroad Commission helped put together a package of incentives, the Texas Incentive Package, which the Texas legislature enacted. The package included incentives for new field discoveries, returning inactive wells to production, and for enhanced oil recovery projects.

Since the incentives were enacted, almost 2,000 idled wells have been returned to production. Pricing oil at $15 a barrel and gas at $2 per Mcf, that production has been valued at $237 million or $700 million in economic impact using the Comptroller's multiplier of 2.91, and created 6,000 jobs.

Nabers this past week spent three days at a conference of members of the Interstate Oil and Gas Compact Commission, where she serves as Texas' official representative.

She told members about the state's incentive package and its success.

"Those wells were simply strangled by an onerous tax burden," she told them. "If the ability to make money is returned to the oil and gas industry, by a mechanism as inelegant as allowing producers to keep tax money that the state would never get anyway, surprising things can happen. By allowing producers of those reactivated wells to keep 63 cents a barrel of the production, $700 million in annual wealth was created."

"I am convinced," she concluded, "that if we stick these kinds of numbers and this kind of data under the noses of every decision-maker we can drag to the table, we will one day soon witness the dawning as the lights come on in Wshington."

The IOGCC has passed a number of resolutions urging federal action on energy and environmental policy issues.

Key resolutions include:

■ Curbing unfunded federal mandates, which the Congressional Budget Office estimates cost state and local governments over $12 billion between 1983 and 1990.

■ Asking Congress and the Environmental Protection Agency to scientifically evaluate risk at a federal pollution site clean-up, re-evaluate retroactive environmental liability and seek ways to lessen litigation costs and direct more funds to actual clean-up activities.

■ Lifting the ban on exporting Alaskan North Slope oil but require the oil be transported on tankers built and operated by the United States.

She said that "I came back with the same feeling everyone in the group has, that we're on the verge of something. Here's the critical thing: We need letters and phone calls going into Washington to our senators and representatives there. We're nearly there, we just have to push this on over, but the commission can't do it without the industry's help. We're pushing from the public side, but the private sector has to help too."

CHINA: New opportunity

joint venture arrangement with the Chinese.

Valued at approximately $300,000 each, the rotary screw compressor packages are used to collect gas, some of which is 8-12 percent H_2S, from a header inside refineries and transport it to a flare several miles away. "The intention," said Woodcock, "is to get the toxic gas away from populated areas." He noted that China was becoming more sensitive and conscious of environmental concerns."

So far the company has sold two of the packages and has orders for two more. Woodcock said there were 20 refinery locations where the compressors might be used, and that did not include production facilities. "We will be making a trip to China this fall, to the China National Oil Show, to scout out other possible applications. We think this new relationship could be very advantageous to us," said Woodcock.

He pointed out that the oil market in China was very positive now for American firms. "They are trying very hard to bring all their facilities up to current environmental needs. They have money to spend, and there are niches that can be very good opportunities for manufacturers."

Woodcock noted that the Chinese work with letters of credit and that payment is not a concern.

He credits Arnold Tims, a former executive for LTV automated products for 35, for putting the China deal together. "He has worked in the same region and knows some of the people, and that gave us a real advantage."

He also noted that a sister-city pact that began several years ago between Midland and Dongying, China may be finally producing positive results for one Midland oilfield manufacturer. "We don't know what a role it played in our getting recent contracts, but it certainly didn't hurt anything," said Woodcock.

Tims said the Chinese engineers came looking for Hy-Bon, because they were looking for a single source compressor company with certain qualifications and several of the majors gave them Hy-Bon's name.

Woodcock said the national oil company was looking for a company that was small enough that they could get to know on a personal basis, but big enough to take care of their business. They also wanted someone who had been around for sometime and had a stable track record.

Woodcock noted that China officials had indicated that they might want to look at a joint venture in which Hy-Bon would supply engineering and critical components that would be packaged in China, permitting the Chinese to take advantage of a cheaper labor market.

Woodcock said there was a growing trend for overseas business and said that with the China contract about 50 percent of Hy-Bon's business was foreign.

Shell launches coiled-tubing drilling program

Staff Report

HOUSTON — Shell Western Exploration & Production Inc. has launched an extensive coiled-tubing drilling program with Halliburton Energy Services for 68 injection wells in a California field. Based on the number of wells, the project is likely the world's largest single coiled-tubing drilling program to date.

With the first 12 wells already completed, Halliburton is now drilling about one well per day, saving considerable drilling and rig costs.

The wells are part of a 115-well project in Shell's McKittrick field near Bakersfield, Ca. The field has a complex system of steam distribution lines, production lines, power lines and pumping equipment which restrict the space required for conventional drilling methods.

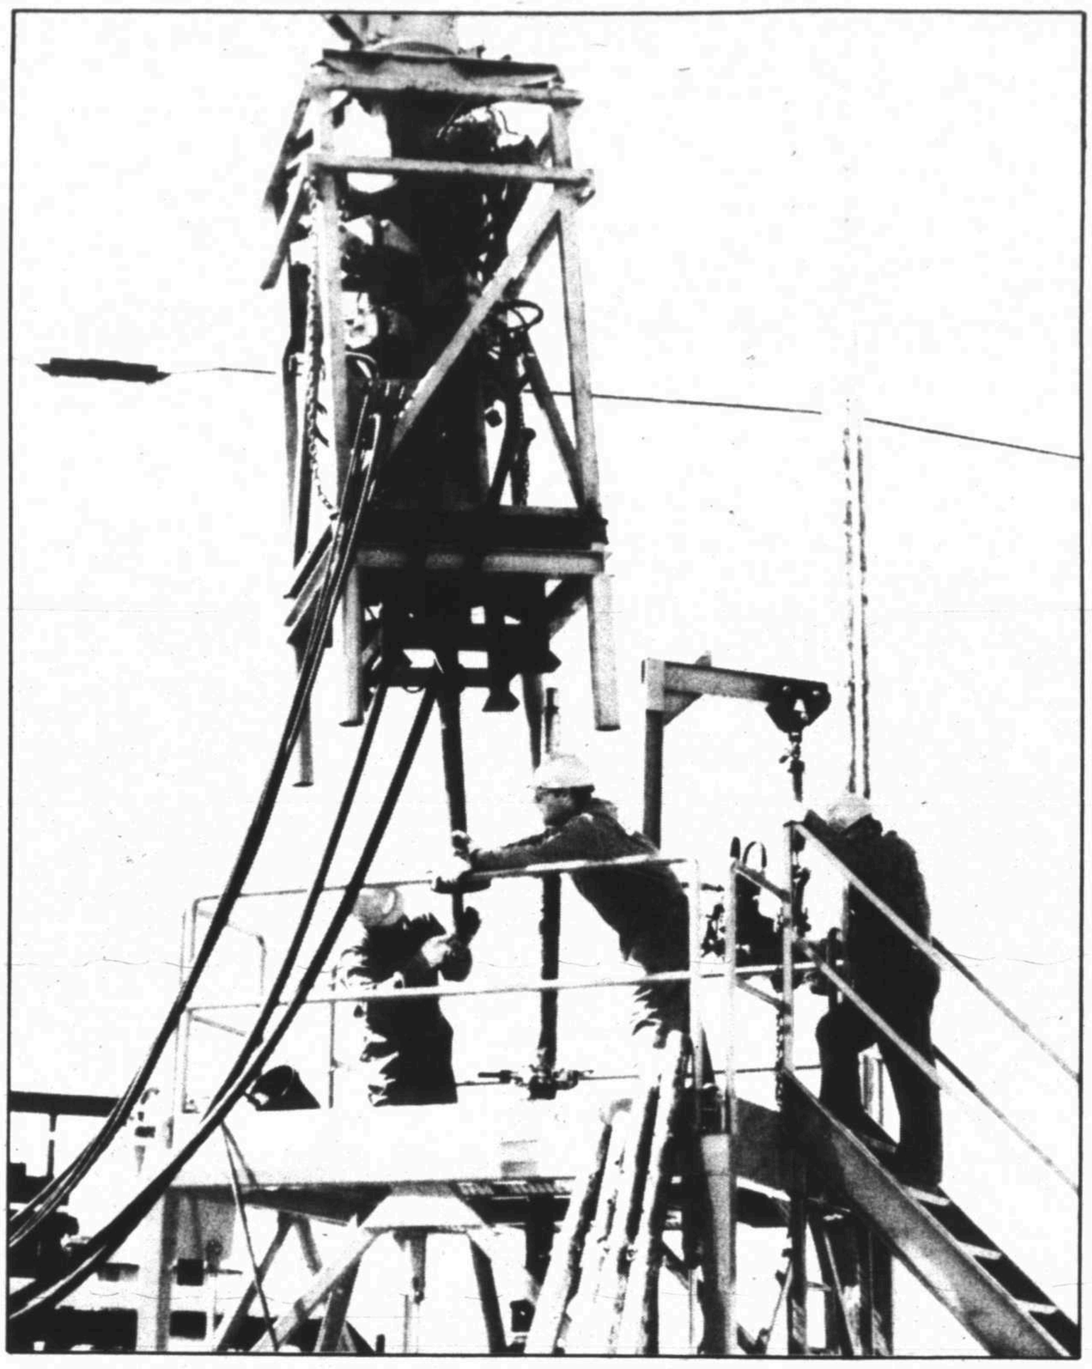

According to Roy Romagno, Shell's drilling foreman on the project, the coiled-tubing technology makes it possible to operate in limited space, without a mast, rotary table and other equipment necessary for rotary drilling. Environmentally, he says, the lower-profile coiled-tubing operation also generates less noise and emissions and, because of hole size, there are less cuttings to dispose of.

Halliburton has combined its coiled-tubing equipment and expertise with its Dyna-drill mud motor technology to offer the coiled-tubing drilling service in the Shell field. In the operation, tubing is fed into the well by an arched injector. Drilling fluid is circulated down the coiled-tubing, turning the rotor in a Dyna-drill mud motor and activating the bit. Halliburton is also providing open-hole logging as part of the service package.

Gene Rutland, a global coiled-tubing advisor for Halliburton, says that this is likely the largest single coiled-tubing drilling project ever undertaken, especially for new wells.

"It will account," according to Rutland, "for at least one-half of all the wells drilled this year using coiled-tubing."

The drilling program is expected to last three to four months. The wells range in depth from 775 to 960 feet.

Williams Energy, pipeline to operate market center

TULSA — Williams Energy Ventures Inc. and Northwest Pipeline Corp. have agreed to establish the Rocky Mountain Market Center this fall on Streamline, North America's first live computerized network for cash-market natural gas transactions.

Northwest Pipeline will operate the new market center to serve growing markets in California, the Pacific Northwest and the Midcontinent areas of the United States. Gas supply areas feeding the market center will include Wyoming, Colorado and Utah.

The two companies will develop the market center in three phases.

Phase One will include implementation of the Streamline system at the Opal Gas Plant near Opal, Wyo. The plant interconnects with Northwest Pipeline, Kern River Gas Transmission Co. and Colorado Interstate Gas Co. Initial daily physical capacity will be approximately 750 million cubic feet of natural gas.

Phases Two and Three will expand the geographic area covered to include interconnects with other pipelines, increasing capacity to more than 1 billion cubic feet. Services also will be expanded to include peaking, parking and balancing.

Streamline handles cash-market transactions from the time parties enter a buy or sell position, through matching and credit checking, to contract administration and physical delivery at a marketing hub. All transactions on the interactive system will preserve each party's anonymity. Each transaction has physical backup supplies through Williams Energy Ventures.

Williams Energy Ventures last year joined with a unit of Westcoast Energy Inc. to develop a computerized system to streamline cash-market natural gas transactions in North America. The system, which is accessible by personal computer, is known as Streamline. Natural Gas Exchange, a subsidiary of Westcoast Energy, operates in Canadian markets. Transactions began February 10 on the Natural Gas Exchange System at the Intra-Alberta hub.

Streamline began live transactions in the U.S. on June 6 at the Carthage hub operated by East Texas Gas Systems, a majority-owned affiliate of Union Pacific Fuels Inc. Two other hubs are scheduled to come online with Streamline this summer — the Permian/Waha hub, operated by Valero Transmission Co., and the Lebanon (Ohio) hub, operated by CNG's East Ohio Gas Co. subsidiary. The addition of the Rocky Mountain Market Center will increase the geographic reach, liquidity and regional price discovery that Streamline will offer.

The Williams Energy Ventures family of computer-based products also includes Chalkboard, an electronic brokering system for cash-market petroleum liquids and Capacity Central, a real-time brokering network for released firm natural gas pipeline capacity.

Northwest Pipeline operates 3,950 miles of natural gas transmission pipeline that extends from Sumas, Wash. on the Canadian border to the San Juan Basin in northern New Mexico. The pipeline provides natural gas service to eight states in the Pacific Northwest and Intermountain region.

Williams Energy Ventures and Northwest Pipeline are two subsidiaries of The Williams Companies Inc., which is listed on the New York and Pacific stock exchanges under the symbol WMB. Williams' other businesses include natural gas and petroleum liquids transportation, gathering and processing of natural gas, and telecommunications services and roducts.

Geology Foundation helps teachers

The West Texas Geology Foundation has awarded grants to support the attendance of two Midland science teachers at a Ground Water Studies course at Colorado School of Mines, Golden, Colo. Robin Bartel, Geology teacher at Midland High School, and Mary Elliott, Earth Science teacher at Goddard and San Jacinto Jr. High School, will attend the teacher training sessions June 16-18.

The "Ground Water Studies" module is a program developed at Colorado School of Mines for use in junior high and high school science classes. The module allows students to look at ground water- the largest accessible and most valuable source of fresh water on earth.

By using plastic ground water models included in the teachers resource kit, students can visualize the subsurfaace aquifer, water table, zone of saturation, and zone of aeration. Students look at the uses of water from personal and social perspectives. They also study water and wastewater treatment. By looking at water use in the home, students become aware of this natural resource.

Analysts raise interest in offshore drilling

N.Y. Times News Service

The offshore drilling industry, once only for the most stout-hearted investors, is now seen as a promising opportunity by some analysts.

After years of shrinking, merging and shifting strategy, offshore drilling has emerged stronger and more nimble to take advantage of rising oil prices and a recovery in drilling.

Investors who took a chance on the industry in 1992 and last year, have made substantial profits, said Varkki P. Chacko, an analyst who follows the industry for Salomon Brothers.

The industry Chacko follows has shrunk to about 20 leading companies, and he focuses on the high-yield bonds of six companies. He recommends the bonds of Global Marine, Rowan Co. and Noble Drilling Corp., saying they could have annual returns of more than 12 percent.

Michael LaMotte, an oil-service industry analyst for NatWest Securities, recommends the stocks of Noble, Energy Service Co. and Sonat Offshore Drilling.

Earnings of those companies, which specialize in drilling in the Gulf of Mexico, should improve because of rising contract rates for rigs. Sonat closed at $19.50 a share, up 25 cents, on the New York Stock Exchange on Wednesday, while Energy Service shares fell 50 cents, to $17.625, on the American Stock Exchange and Noble shares slipped 12.5 cents, to $7.375, in Nasdaq trading.

The offshore-drilling industry underwent a large consolidation in the last decade, with the number of rigs falling by an average of 19 rigs annually for the last five years.

But the companies that survived, drilling in the Gulf of Mexico and off the coasts of China, Russia, Africa and Southeast Asia, are better prepared to withstand the downturns in oil prices and the fierce competition in drilling, analysts said. Offshore exploration and drilling for oil is expected to increase from 33 percent now of all oil exploration and drilling to 40 percent by 2000.

As the industry has become smaller, Chacko said, some companies have become more specialized, such as having rigs for deep water drilling that make them less vulnerable to competition. And few new competitors are likely because the cost of a rig runs from $70 million to $200 million for the more advanced rigs for deep water drilling.

Oil companies are also contracting out more drilling on a "turnkey" basis, in which the offshore driller works under contract rather than being paid a day rate and working under the supervision of the oil company.

If the drilling company completes the work ahead of time at costs lower than the contracted figure, then its profit is larger. If costs are higher, then the driller must eat the overruns.

"Some of the risk is being transferred by the major oil companies to the drilling rig companies," Chako said. But those drilling companies that have survived the crunch of the last five years are better able to meet their contracted prices, he said.

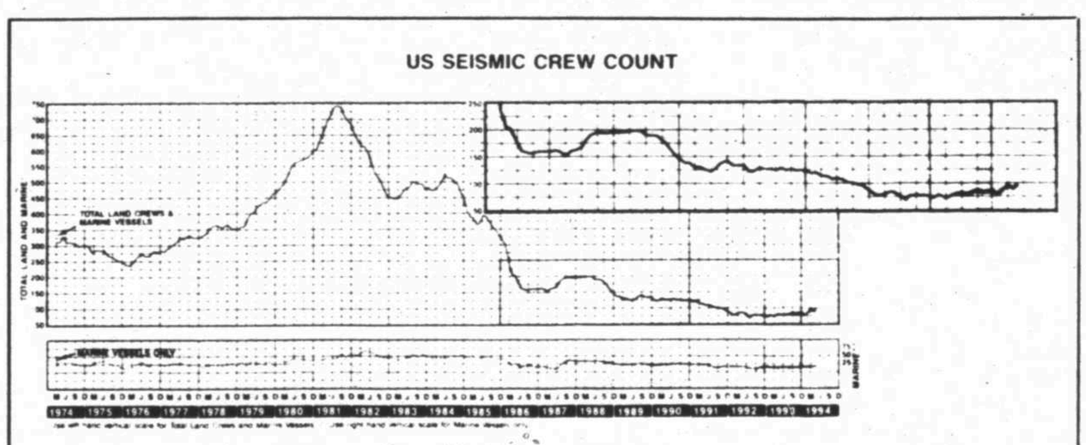

LaMotte predicted that most rigs that moved to the Gulf of Mexico when oil prices slumped will be in increasing demand, particularly when Pemex, the Mexican oil company, expands drilling later this year.

"That should increase the use of that fleet," LaMotte said. The increased demand from Pemex should lift contract rates, which have been running $16,000 to $19,000 a day. During a boomlet in 1993, day rates ran from about $28,000 to $32,000.

Still, offshore drilling has risks for investors. It remains a business that can turn from feast to famine in a short period of time.

Though prices of crude oil have been heading higher, they are subject to violent swings after a political crisis or a breakdown of production agreements among producer nations.

"The cash flow of these companies can be very volatile," Chacko cautioned.

Seismic crew count

Accoring to the Society of Exploration Geophysicists, the number of seismic land crews and marine vessels searching for oil and gas in the U.S. and its waters was unchanged from April to May. In May, the number of land crews fell by two to 66 and the number of marine crews rose two to 22 for a total of 88 crews.

API study details cost of gasoline taxes

A new API analysis, "The Cost of Motor Gasoline to Consumers: 1993 Annual Review," shows that federal, state and local gasoline taxes - on average - account for more than one-third (36 percent) of the retail price of gasoline.

■ Over the last dozen years federal gasoline taxes have more than quadrupled. IN 1981, the federal gasoline tax amounted to only 4 cents a gallon. By the end of 1993, it had risen to 18.4 cents a gallon.

■ Increases in the federal gasoline tax have become more frequent. For example, the 4-cents-a-gallon rate remained in effect from 1959 to 1982. Since then there have been four increases - in 1983, 1987, 1990 and 1993.

■ In 1981, federal taxes represented 3 percent of the retail price of a gallon of gasoline. By December 1993 such levies represented 16 percent of the pump price.

Oil found in north China

HOUSTON (AP) — A Louisiana-Texas partnership has become the first Western group to discover oil in one of China's northern provinces.

An exploratory well belonging to Exploration Co. of Louisiana and Houston-based Apache Corp. has tested at a rate of 2,160-barrels-of-oil-per-day, the companies said.

Exploration Co. is the operator of the well, controlling a two-thirds interest. Apache holds the remaining one-third.

The Chinese National Oil and Gas Exploration and Development Corp. has the right to take a 51 percent stake in the project.

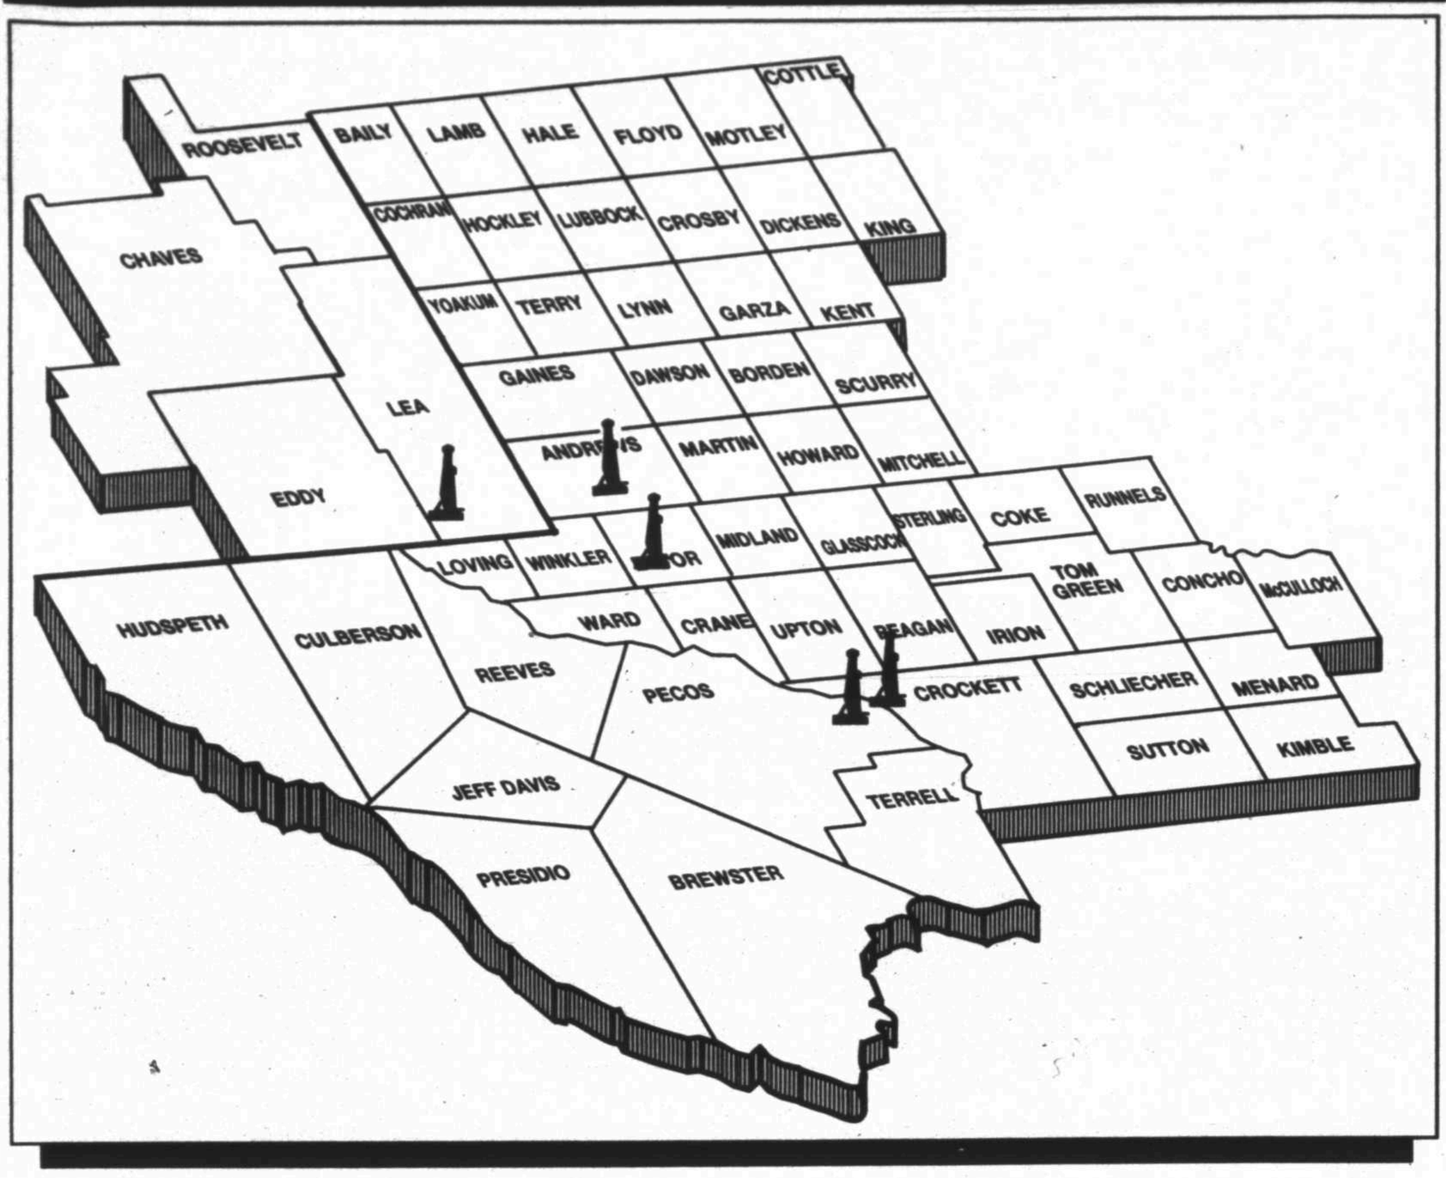

The partners plan to drill a confirmation well to determine precisely how much the Zhao Dong No. C-1 exploratory well, located in China's Bohai Bay about three miles offshore in about 8 feet of water, is likely to produce. They also plan two more exploratory wells in the Zhao Dong Block.

The partners plan to spend at least $18 million in the area.

Inteq sets world record

Baker Hughes INTEQ recently set a world record for the longest tubing-conveyed perforating section completed in a single run. Well C-24, drilled from Norsk Hydro's Oseberg platform in the Norwegian sector of the North Sea, was completed with a single tubing-conveyed string measuring 6,298 feet (1,950 meters) from top shot to bottom shot.

The entire section was successfully perforated simultaneously. A total of 20 intervals, separated by blank guns, were perforated. Oseberg C-24 is an extended reach well with an average inclination of more than 60 degrees. The record perforating job saved rig time and accelerated production by eliminating the need for multiple completion runs.

Baker Hughes INTEQ is a leading worldwide supplier of integrated solutions, services and equipment for wellbore construction. The company has more than 100 service locations in 40 countries, with headquarters located in Houston, Texas. Baker Hughes INTEQ is a division of Baker Hughes Incorporated, also headquartered in Houston.

"They were ready for the game of the year. Settled in easy chairs, bowls of popcorn, where's the remote control? Turn it on!"

The World Series, the Super Bowl, the Final Four. Can you imagine life without these? Can you imagine being without electricity right at the opening ball, the kickoff or the first tip? No problem. Cap Rock Electric is in the field to assure you'll get all the power you've come to expect.

Cap Rock Electric knows you need electricity for your office and home, but we also know you need electricity for the really important items. Televisions, VCR's, stereos and Nintendo. We've been working hard to keep your costs as low as possible. In fact, while inflation has risen 30%, Cap Rock Electric rates have increased less than 12% since 1987. There's something to cheer about.

Early towns

Top photo, Goldsmith is seen around 1937. The town came into existence in May of 1937 to serve the needs of the oil field and was originally called Ector City. The Goldsmith field was discovered in Ector County in June 1935, centered on a ranch formerly owned by W.F. Cowden, who sold it to J.O. Nobles and C.M. Goldsmith in 1929. Bottom photo, an Odessa street is shown in 1926. The caption on the photo reads "Odessa, Texas: Gateway to the Crane County Oil Fields." Odessa is surrounded by such oilfields as the Harper, Foster, Penwell, South Cowden, North Cowden, Goldsmith, TXL and Andector. The city, county seat of Ector County, got its start in 1884 when the Texas and Pacific Railroad entered Ector County, followed by a few hundred settlers, mostly railroad workers.

Brabant finals ISE acquisition

HOUSTON — Brabant Petroleum Limited, a wholly-owned subsidiary of Energy Development Corporation has completed the acquisition of the entire issued share capital of Industrial Scotland Energy Limited (ISE) from Total Oil Marine plc. for a cash consideration.

ISE owns producing assets in the U.K. sector of the North Sea, including interests in Guinevere, Lancelot, Excalibur and Pickerill gas fields which compliment the existing interests held in these fields by Brabant. The combined Brabant ISE interest will amount to 25% in Guinevere field which is currently producing 35 million cubic feet of gas per day, and the acquisition will therefore significantly increase Brabant's U.K. gas revenues. ISE also holds a small interest in Forties oil field and royalty interests in Claymore, Scapa and Piper oil fields.

This acquisition marks a further major step in EDC's planned expansion in the United Kingdom, following its acquisition of Brabant in May 1993.

EDC ranks among the largest independent E&P companies in the U.S. conducting exploration, production, and development operations on a total of 6.1 million net acres in 13 states, in state and federal waters of the Gulf of Mexico, and internationally in seven countries.

EDC is a wholly-owned indirect subsidiary of Public Service Enterprise Group Incorporation and a wholly-owned subsidiary of Enterprise Diversified Holdings Incorporated, Newark, New Jersey.

Cheap gasoline U.S. enjoys not guaranteed

■ The recent rise in crude prices serves to remind Americans that the inexpensive gasoline the nation enjoys is not guaranteed.

N.Y. Times News Service

Oil for $20 a barrel? Is OPEC on the march again?

It would be precipitous to rush to the corner gas station to top off the tank. The surge that has raised crude oil prices by one-sixth in two weeks is largely being written off as a speculative bubble, another symptom of Wall Street's current inclination to discover inflation lurking under every bed.

But the oil boomlet is a reminder that the cheap fuel enjoyed by consumers over the last decade is not guaranteed by the laws of economics or nature. Indeed, some experts are convinced that the long-term trend is toward higher prices. "We've turned the corner in the cycle," said Daniel Yergin, the president of Cambridge Energy research Associates.

One recent projection, offered by the business-oriented World Energy Council in London, suggests that oil consumption will press against available supply by early in the next century. And last week the Economist magazine published a lengthy jeremiad explaining why "world energy markets will soon be roiled by surging demand."

Those inclined to such pessimism focus on projected demand from the developing countries. According to the International Energy Agency in Paris, urbanization alone sharply increases consumption, as people abandon animal power for the internal combustion engine and discover the joys of central heating. The IEA believes industrializing countries will increase their energy consumption by 4 percent annually through the year 2010, compared with about 1 percent in the rest of the world.

China, the world's sixth-largest oil producer, has just become a net oil importer. Over all, Cambridge Energy Research Associates predicts, Asia will increase consumption by some eight million barrels by the year 2005 — as much oil as is currently produced by Saudi Arabia.

There is certainly plenty of fossil fuel left below ground to meet rising demand. A good proportion of it, however, is coal, which emits roughly twice as much greenhouse-inducing carbon dioxide per unit of heat as oil or natural gas.

Renewable forms of energy, like hydropower, could yield a lot more power, but at high cost. Likewise nuclear energy, whose future would be bleak even if Chernobyl was still just another anonymous provincial city in the former Soviet Union.

There is also plenty of oil and gas left, much of it extractable at low cost. The catch is that the cheap stuff is almost all in the Persian Gulf, where development and production are largely determined by geopolitics and maneuvering within the OPEC cartel. Figuring how much oil Iran, Kuwait and Saudi Arabia will sell is thus as much "a problem in game theory," as it is a question of supply and demand, notes Dale Jorgenson, an economist at Harvard.

Convinced now that prices are headed up? Morris Adelman, an economist of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, begs to differ. "It's an old story," he says; "industry opinion just doesn't take account of basic economics."

For starters, he is skeptical of the assumption that rapid economic growth in China, India and Latin America will sharply accelerate world demand for oil. As these regulation-hobbled economies modernize, he argues, they are likely to allow energy prices to rise to free market levels, which in turn, will induce conservation of energy. "The more the Third World develops," he said, "the less it acts like the Third World."

Then there is the question of energy supply from outside the Mideast. Lots of oil remains to be found and extracted in Russia, China, Colombia, Mexico, Vietnam and even Australia. And while capital for investing in these new areas is not plentiful at the moment, Adelman is confident that countries yearning for oil royalties are growing more realistic about sharing the risks of development with the international oil companies.

Despite differences in opinion about the future of the oil market, it is possible to find some common ground. Almost no one is predicting a rerun of the 1970s oil shocks anytime in the foreseeable future. By the same token, almost everyone agrees with William Hogan, an economist at the Kennedy School at Harvard, "that the combination of low prices and rising demand can only be sustained over the next few decades with the cooperation of the Persian Gulf producers."

In essence, then, the key difference between the optimists and the pessimists is how they expect the low-cost producers in general and Saudi Arabia in particular to behave.

Adelman doubts that the Saudis have the will or the way to follow a high-price strategy. Hogan doubts that Adelman or anyone else can predict the oil producers' response to current events.

Gas suppliers hammer at policy contradictions

WASHINGTON — At a hearing held by two subcommittees of the House Natural Resources Committee, Natural Resources Committee, Natural Gas Supply Association President Nicholas Bush highlighted a major U.S. energy policy contradiction.

■ On the one hand, a) the U.S. offshore regions contain gas plays that are among the largest and most economic to produce in the United States, and b) congressional and Clinton Administration statements indicate a strong desire to increase domestic natural gas use to help improve U.S. air quality.

■ On the other hand, Congress and the Administration persist inn efforts to restrict or prevent U.S. natural gas exploration and production offshore.

Highlighting the NGSA Deliverability Survey finding that in 1993, 80 percent of the natural gas industry's increase in production came from sources in the Gulf of Mexico, Bush told congressional leaders at the hearing, "The most frustrating aspect of current governmental policy is the continued call for increased use of natural gas, even while other government policies - most particularly offshore leasing moratoria - prevent increase price-competitive gas production."

Bush emphasized that while there is no doubt about the abundant resource base of natural gas, the issue of cost-effective production is key. "It is only a matter of time before limited access to low-cost exploration areas will drive expenses upward," he said.

The gas demand drop in the early 1980s, when regulated prices skyrocketed, demonstrates that consumers will not sustain purchases of fuels whose costs are significantly out of line with other energy alternatives. Thus, an increase in natural gas use is unlikely unless natural gas comes onto the market at competitive prices - prices most likely to become a reality if offshore areas are opened to production.

"The natural gas industry is in a position to provide reliable supplies of a fuel that everybody is demanding," Bush concluded. "The only thing that will prevent us from satisfying this demand is if we are prohibited from doing so."

Santa Fe subsidiary signs gas contract

HOUSTON — Santa Fe Energy Resources announced that Petrolera Santa Fe, its wholly-owned Argentine subsidiary, has signed a long-term natural gas sales contract for production from the Sierra Chata field in Block CNQ-10 in Argentina.

Terms of the contract call for Metrogas S.A., an Argentine natural gas distribution company, to purchase 3 million cubic meters per day (approximately 106 million cubic feet) beginning in May 1995. The contract establishes competitive, seasonally adjusted and escalating sales prices through 1996. The 1997 winter sales price and prices thereafter will be based on market conditions. This contract covers the period through the year 2001.

In separate transactions, Santa Fe with certain partners in Block CNQ-10 granted to Central Puerto S.A., a large electricity producer in Argentina, the right to purchase up to a 10 percent interest in Block CNQ-10 in an arrangement which makes available to the partners under certain conditions an opportunity to sell substantial additional gas volumes in 1998 to Chilgener, the largest electricity producer in Chile and the principal affiliate of Central Puerto. This gas would be delivered to Santiago, Chile upon completion of the proposed GasAndes pipeline in which Chilgener is a partner along with NovaCorp., a Canadian gas transmission company and Gasco, a large gas distribution company in Chile. Santa Fe Energy also announced that Mustang Engineering Inc. of Houston has been selected to coordinate the design and construction of a $76 million gas gathering and processing facility at the Sierra Chata field.

The Sierra Chata natural gas field was discovered in April 1993 by Santa Fe Energy Resources, the operator of the block. A total of six wells have now been completed for a combined test rate of 130 Mmcfd with four more wells scheduled to be drilled in 1994.

If Central Puerto exercises its purchase option, working interest ownership positions in the Sierra Chata field and Block CNQ-10 will be approximately as follows: Santa Fe Energy Resources 19.9 percent; BHP Petroleum (Argentina) Inc., a subsidiary of BHP Petroleum of Melbourne, Australia 31.1 percent; Monument Exploracion Ltd., a subsidiary of Monument Oil and Gas plc of London 19.9 percent; Sociedad Petrolera Internacional S.A. 15.7 percent; Central Puerto S.A. 10 percent; and Compania General de Combustibles S.A. 3.4 percent.

Independents seek easing of offshore rules

WASHINGTON, D.C. — "The economic health of the offshore oil and natural gas industry depends upon the continued vitality of the nation's independent producers," testified Joe Foster, chairman of Houston-based Newfield Exploration Co.

Foster testified on behalf of his company and the Independent Petroleum Association of America before a joint committee hearing of the House Natural Resource Committee's subcommittee on Energy and Mineral Resources and subcommittee on Oversight and Investigation.

Foster warned the congressional subcommittees that unless changes are made to provisions of the Oil Pollution Act of 1990, his company and many other independent producers "could be forced to withdraw from the Gulf of Mexico." Newfield explores for and produces oil and natural gas reserves exclusively in the Gulf of Mexico.

"If you want my diagnosis of the economic health of the offshore oil and gas industry, OPA '90 is a deadly tumor, and unless its offshore provisions are treated, companies like mine will be on the terminal list," testified Foster.

A provision of OPA '90 would require domestic producers operating offshore to increase the level of financial responsibility on their oil spill liability policies from $35 million to $150 million.

Independent producers say the dollar amount is too high, would leave them uninsured and ultimately would put them out of business.

"Unless regulations implementing OPA '90 are less severe, we cannot obtain a certificate of financial responsibility to permit continued operations in the Gulf," Foster said.

"We have an excellent environmental track record," he said about Newfield's history offshore. "To us, being a good environmental steward makes good business sense."

Independent producers are taking the lead offshore, accounting for nearly 90 percent of the offshore operators according to a 1993 report by the National Petroleum Council.

"Is it good public polity to deny companies like Newfield the opportunity to explore and produce in the Gulf of Mexico?" asked Foster. "I don't think there is a rational argument for doing so, but that's what OPA '90 will do."

Western Gas to list Katy hub on trading system

HOUSTON — Western Gas Resources Storage Inc., a wholly-owned subsidiary of Western Gas Resources Inc., has signed a letter of intent to list its Katy Hub and Gas Storage Facility on the Channel 4 trading and information system.

Channel 4 is a joint venture of the New York Mercantile Exchange and EnerSoft Corp. Other companies which have already agreed to list their market centers on the system include Tenneco Energy Resources Corp., KN Interstate Gas Transmission Inc., NorAm Hub Services Inc., formerly Arkla, and Alberta Energy Company Ltd.

Western Gas Resources President and Chief Operating Officer Bill Sanderson said, "Western's intended partnership with Channel 4 will help facilitate our goal of developing the Katy Hub and Storage Facility into the industry's most versatile market center and continue our focus as a leader in the evolution of the rapidly changing natural gas market."

David Keller, president of EnerSoft, said, "Channel 4 has been designed to enhance the availability of information on pricing and market activity at market centers throughout North America. The addition of the Katy Hub not only expands Channel 4's geographical network but will also provide a key vehicle for regional price discovery in the Texas Gulf Coast area."

Exchange president R. Patrick Thompson said, "The addition of this key market center, combined with those services already listed, will help Channel 4 reach its goal of becoming a one-stop shop for physical natural gas and transportation transactions and information."

The Katy Hub and Gas Storage Facility has seven inter- and intrastate pipeline interconnects, including Transcontinental Gas Pipeline Co., Tennessee Gas Co., Koch Gateway Pipeline Co., Amoco Gas Co., Lone Star Gas Co., Houston Pipeline Co., and Tejas Gas Corp. Projected connections in the future include Midcon Texas Pipeline, Dow/Channel DT, Natural Gas Pipeline, Trunkline Gas Co., Oasis Pipeline Co., and the Exxon Katy Plant. The facility has transfer capacity of 800 million cubic feet per day storage capacity of up to 17 billion cubic feet of working gas.

Santa Fe reports Indonesian find

HOUSTON — Santa Fe Energy Resources has announced an oil discovery on its Mudi prospect on the Indonesian island of Java.

The No. 1 Mudi, completed in March, tested the Kujung formation at an initial combined daily rate of 1,350 barrels of 32 to 36 degree API gravity oil from various intervals between the depths of 8,3443 and 8,795 ft. The No. 1 Mudi sidetrack, designed to penetrate the reservoir approximately a half-mile northeast of the discovery well, tested at a stabilized rate in excess of 2,000 barrels of oil per day from a perforated liner between 8,418 and 8,800 feet.

James L. Payne, chairman and chief executive officer, said, "The test results from these two wells on the Mudi prospect are very encouraging. The sidetrack penetration confirmed our idea that improved reservoir conditions would be found at a structurally higher position northeast of the discovery well. As a result, we now plan to drill at least two additional delineation wells beginning in late 1994 to evaluate the size of the reservoir."

The Mudi prospect is one of several prospects the company and its partners have identified on the Tuban Block of East Java.

Parker & Parsley raises Bridge Oil bid

Parker and Parsley Petroleum Co. of Midland continues to pursue its acquisition of Bridge Oil of Sydney, Australia.

Monday, the Midland independent raised its cash offer, through its wholly-owned Australian subsidiary, from 80 cents (Australian) per share to 90 cents per share. This translates to 66 cents per share in U.S. currency.

Lon Kile, vice president and manager, investing services for Parker and Parsley, said the offer was well-received by Bridge Oil directors, who have accepted the offer in the absence of a higher offer.

Kile added that the offer is also being well received elsewhere, judging by activity in the stock.

Following the higher offer, Parker & Parsley received an additional 52.7 million shares and now owns 78.6 million shares or 18.7 percent of Bridge Oil's common shares. Prior to the new offer, Parker & Parsley had owned 25,853,379 shares or 6.2 percent of Bridge Oil.

In addition to raising its offer, Parker & Parsley has extended its offer from July 4 to July 13.

Parker & Parsley's latest offer values Bridge Oil at about $277 million, some $14 million above another offer by a unit of Joint Energy Development Investments Ltd. Partnership of the U.S., a joint venture between Enron Corp. and California Public Employees Retirement System.

Joint Energy unveiled its bid of about 63 cents a share June 20 and received immediate acceptance from Bridge Oil directors, who had previously rejected the 50 cents a share offered by Parker & Parsley in its bid May 11.

The bid prompted the filing of a lawsuit by Parker & Parsley in federal court in Dallas, asking the court to enjoin Gantry Acquisition Corp., the JEDI unit making the bid, from buying shares of Bridge Oil stock outside Gantry's tender offer, and claiming violation of U.S. securities laws.

Kile said the lawsuit was proceeding under normal due process.

A spokesman for Gantry Acquisition Corp., the unit of Joint Energy Development Investments Ltd. making the takeover offer, said the company is considering "all options open to it" in the wake of the higher offer from Parker & Parsley.

Texas governor to head IOGCC

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — President Clinton and Congress are being asked to consider subjecting the U.S. tax dollars spent overseas for oil and gas activities to the same environmental standards as those required for domestic operations.

The Interstate Oil and Gas Compact Commission released its resolution, authored by Oklahoma Corporation Commissioner Cody Graves this past week.

The resolution said tax dollars are being used to fund oil and gas activities that don't comply with U.S. environmental standards and gives foreign producers an unfair cost advantage.

"There is ample federal precedent for attaching compliance standards to the expenditure of taxpayer dollars," Graves said.

The United States has spent an estimated $2 billion in recent years to support oil and gas exploration and production in other countries, the group said.

The IOGCC also elected Texas Gov. Ann Richards chairman-elect.

Richards will succeed Gaston Caperton, governor of West Virginia, once his term expires, the commission announced in a news release from its Oklahoma City headquarters.

The group concluded its mid-year meeting in Breckenridge, Colo., Tuesday.

"We must recognize that, at the state level, we are at the forefront as laboratories of public policy," Richards said. "In conservation and in creating incentives which are beneficial in lowering costs to producers, we must collectively use all our intelligence, all our cooperation, and every ounce of shrewdness we have."

Ohio Public Utility Commissioner J. Michael Biddison was named first vice chairman. Charles Nesbitt, Oklahoma Secretary of Energy, was named second vice chairman of the 29-member group.

Unocal selling California assets

N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Unocal Corp. says it is considering selling all of its crude oil and natural gas assets in California, where it has been drilling for petroleum for 104 years.

Proceeds from the sale — which includes 10 drilling platforms off the Santa Barbara coast — would be used to finance exploration in the Gulf of Mexico and Southeast Asia, said Roger C. Beach, Unocal's chief executive officer.

"For a company of Unocal's size to continue growing, it must pursue large, long-life projects," Beach said. "Given our worldwide portfolio of opportunities, our capital is flowing to those areas that offer the highest growth potential."

Three companies — Torch Energy Advisors Inc., Contour Production Co. and Vintage Petroleum Inc. in conjunction with Venoco Inc. of Santa Barbara, Calif. have submitted purchase proposals, Beach said. Torch and Contour are based in Houston and Vintage is in Tulsa, Okla.

The company declined to put a value on its California holdings.

But analyst Donald F. Textor atGoldman, Sachs & Co. said Unocal's California fields contain proven reserves that could bring a selling price of between $400 million to $500 million.

Unocal has interests in 69 California oil and gas fields in the San Joaquin Valley, Santa Barbara Channel and Los Angeles, Ventura and Orange counties.

They produce about 33,000 barrels of oil and 80 million cubic feet of gas per day.

This represents about 22 percent of Unocal's domestic crude oil production and 8 percent of its natural gas production.

About 850 employees work in Unocal's California fields and they could find jobs with the new owners if a sale is completed.

"We certainly would want to take a substantial number of the Unocal employees," saidWilliam Rankin, Contour's chief financial officer. "We would anticipate using their staff extensively."

Representatives of Vintage and Torch could not be reached for comment.

Unocal's exit from California exploration ventures is part of an oil industry trend that started several years ago.

"The environment for exploration in the U.S. is loaded with regulatory and environmental land mines," said analyst John Hilton at Argus Research Corp. in New York.

Unocal has interests in geothermal projects in Indonesia; natural gas fields in Thailand and Indonesia and is evaluating exploration and development opportunities in China and Vietnam.

Selling its California fields is part of continuing asset reduction that began in 1988. Since then Unocal has sold about $2 billion in assets and concentrated its retail gasoline operations in the West.

Unocal was founded in 1890 as Union Oil Company of California in Santa Paula, a small community in eastern Ventura County, Calif.

Mobil cutting 2,300 chemical jobs

N.Y. Times News Service

Mobil Corp. announced Tuesday that it would cut 2,300 jobs from its chemical business, or about one-fifth of the division's work force of 11,800.

The company said it would take a charge of $315 million in the second quarter to cover the costs of the job cuts in chemicals and reviews of assets in its other businesses.

The chemical industry has been undergoing much consolidation in recent months, and other oil companies have reduced their chemical operations or are considering doing so.

Texaco Inc. sold most of its chemical business to Huntsman Corp. for $850 million in April. Chemical producers' profits have been shrinking because of a worldwide oversupply of chemicals.

The move by Mobil is the first major step to cut costs under Lucio A. Noto, who took over as chairman and chief executive in March.

Noto warned in an interview that the revamping at the company began in 1991 was "not finished.

"It's going to go on," he said. "This is not a cradle-to-grave company," he added, noting that the company had cut 6,300 jobs in the last two years.

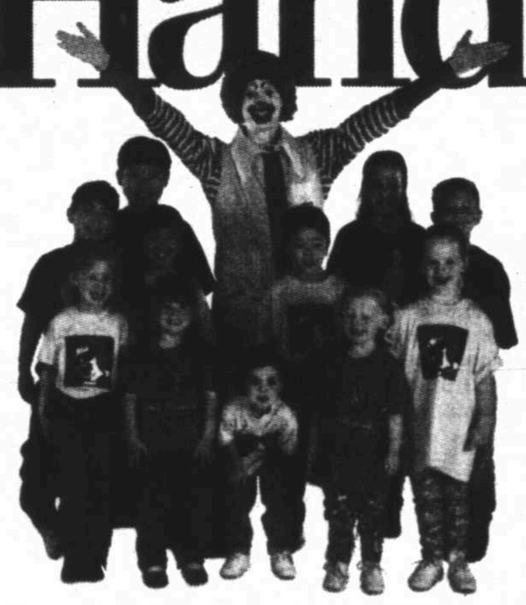

Of Mobil's total revenues of $63.97 billion last year, chemical operations accounted for $3.72 billion. But profits at the chemical division have been steadily falling, to $217 million in 1991, $136 million in 1992 and $44 million last year.

John Lord, a spokesman for Mobil, based in Fairfax, Va., said that most of the cutbacks in staff would come from the 9,700 employees in the United States. The chemical division employs 11,800 world wide.

The move will cost some jobs in the Northeast, with a plant being closed in Macedon, N.Y. and another plant being cut back from 150 to 110 workers in Stratford, Conn.

As part of the charge for the second quarter, Mobil said it would write down a producing oil and gas field and other properties in North America, which would account for $185 million of the charge.

Big Three announce joint NGV program

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S. automakers are pooling resources in an attempt to cut in half the added cost of building vehicles powered by natural gas, one of the most promising alternative fuels.

Chrysler Corp., Ford Motor Co. and General Motors Corp. announced the Natural Gas Vehicle Technologies Partnership, their 14th joint research consortium since 1988.

About 30,000 vehicles with compressed natural gas are on U.S. roads today, most of them in fleets. Worldwide, there are about 700,000 of the vehicles, many of them in Italy.

"It's particularly attractive because there is plenty of it available here in North America, there's no need to import foreign fuel; it burns very clean, resulting in benefits for our environment; and it's the only one of the alternative fuels that actually costs less than gasoline," said Richard Geiss, chairman of the partnership.

An equivalent gallon of natural gas costs 70 cents to 80 cents, compared to more than $1 for gasoline.

"There is no single silver-bullet fuel which is going to be able to totally replace gasoline," Geiss said. "But you'll see more and more alternative fuels taking a niche in the market."

The Big Three's main goal is to cut the cost of storage tanks used in natural gas-powered vehicles. That could mean using material other than the aluminum, steel or composite now used in making tanks and a shape other than the current cylinder mold.

Natural gas vehicles cost between $3,500 and $6,000 more to produce than conventional vehicles and the tank accounts for up to 70 percent of the extra cost, said Harvey I. Klein, manager of advanced vehicle and safety planning for Ford.

"Our research ... shows that our customers don't want to purchase a vehicle that's even one cent, one penny more than the current gasoline vehicles," Klein said Monday.

Another drawback is reduced range. Some compressed natural gas vehicles now in production or development achieve only half the range of gasoline vehicles.

Natural gas is about 60 percent cleaner than gasoline, however, Geiss said.

The automakers said they hope by 1995 to improve the reliability and durability of storage tanks, set common requirements for tanks so they meet the same standards, and work with natural gas suppliers to establish purity standards that would reduce emissions and improve vehicle performance.

Natural gas is among a handful of alternative fuels that automakers are working with under pressure from the government and interest groups to produce cleaner cars. Competing power sources include electricity, methanol, ethanol and propane.

The partnership initially will include only the Big Three automakers. But they hope to get the help of the government and private entrepreneurs later, Klein said.

National laboratories are expected to play a role, Geiss said. If the Energy Department agrees to carry 50 percent of the cost, the partnership's budget would be $8 million to $10 million.

Magazine features local Smocking Guild

If you happened to catch a peek at the June back-to-school issue of "Sew Beautiful," you may have seen some familiar faces. Several members of Midland's Tumbleweed Chapter of the Smocking Arts Guild had their work featured in the issue, modeled by their children.

"Sew Beatiful" is an heirloom sewing magazine which specializes in fine hand and machine sewing techniques with a national and international circulation of 45,000.

Members of the guild constructed, smocked and appliqued duplicate stitched back-to-school garments for the photo feature. These garments included hand-smocked dresses, rompers and overalls with motifs such as scissors, pencils,

Dogs are topped

Is there anything more American than hot dogs, baseball and apple pie? Add a few fireworks and you have the perfect menu for the Fourth of July, a totally American holiday.

Even though the hot dog — or frankfurter or wiener or any number of regional names — is a Great American Food, according to the World Book Encyclopedia, the frank has a longer history that the country does: "The frankfurter, named for Frankfurt (am Main), Germany, is the most popular sausage in the world. It is made of cured and well-smoked pork and beef. Experts believe frankfurters were first made in Germany during the Middle Ages. Frankfurters are also called hot dogs, red hots and wieners in America. Frankfurters served in buns are a favorite American food."

Richard Gehman, in his book, "The Sausage Book," wrote: "Sausage is one of the oldest foods known to man. Nobody knows who first thought of stuffing ground-up meat into a sheath, but Homer sang of sausages in the Odyssey, which was written (they say) about 850 B.C. ...

"We like frankfurters best in America."

And sometimes, he wrote, how American traditions can be combined: "Babe Ruth (the Great American Baseball Hero), according to legend, frequently knocked off 10 or 12 hot dogs during the seventh-inning stretch.

Hot dogs can be prepared any number of ways — grilled, boiled, broiled, baked, microwaved (carefully) or combined with other ingredients in a casserole. Beans and franks or macaroni and cheese with franks are two of childhood's favorites.

These experts don't say it, but in today's more health-conscious world, hot dogs can also be made of turkey or chicken.

The hot dog is also made with preservatives, which sometimes is a cause for concern.

So far no one has conducted research on the cancer-causing hazards of baseball or apple pie, but the hot dog has come under fire recently.

According to information from the American Cancer Society, an article in the May issue of the journal "Cancer Causes and Control" listed three reports of studies on cured meats as possible risk factors in childhood cancer.

The first study, conducted by researchers at the University of North Carolina-Chapel Hill, was on the association between broiled meat and cured meat by expectant mothers and their children's future risk of developing cancer. The second study, by researchers from the University of Pennsylvania, also studied expectant mothers' diets and the risk of the most common childhood brain tumor. The third study, by researchers from the University of Southern California in Los Angeles, studied children with leukemia and their food intake.

All three studies found possible links — even though they might have been tiny ones — between consumption of cured meats (which hot dogs are) and the risk of childhood cancer.

While most people realize the wisdom of eating a healthy diet — such as

Mummers moves to medieval times

By Marilyn McKnight Harrison

Picture this. It is medieval times, and in the hamlet of Godfrey, things have gone amuck. The citizens of that tiny place experience great agony and much wringing of hands as the brave Gregory Gallantlad attempts to rescue the fair maiden, Princess Gwenevere Goodgams from the clutches of the dastardly Cyrano de Cesspool.

McKnight-Harrison

Although first produced here in 1981, this tale of woe was revived and unfolded for the first time this year at Summer Mummers Opening Night June 24. It will continue to play Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights through Labor Day Weekend at the historic Yucca Theatre.

Entitled "Debauchery on the Drawbridge" or "Just Another Sworded Affair," the play focuses on the inhabitants of Gabalott Castle. Although the setting of the play changes each year, the plot remains the same — the dashing hero rescuing the damsel in distress, the villain getting his comeuppance and a happily ever after ending.

Following Opening Night tradition, the cast made their grand entrance, arriving by limousine and then proceeding down the theatre aisle to the stage, accompanied by the world-renowned Mummers Band. Multi-colored balloons in the lobby added to the gaiety of the occasion.

Among those spotted, both spectators and volunteers, Joe and Vicki Jensen, Earl and Kathy Keller, Skeet Doss, Bob and Ruth Price and David and Linda Whitaker.

OUR FOND FAREWELLS go with Kevin Oyenik in his move to Denver, Colo. He departed June 25 for the Mile High City, where he will join Lord & Taylor as a junior executive trainee.

Formerly assistant manager of Julian Gold Inc. here, Kevin was active on the local arts scene. He devoted time to Midland Community Theatre, Summer Mummers, the Midland-Odessa Symphony Chorale and Vocal Point at Midland College.

Among the guests were Kevin's mother, Shirley Wood of San Antonio; Vicki and Steve DeShaw, Susie and Steve Foy, Sue Smith and her husband, Jim Huddleston, Janna Thompson, and Nancy and Buddy Anguish.

FOR THE 32ND CONSECUTIVE year, the Colonel Theunis Dey Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution will sponsor its Fourth of July Children's Sidewalk Parade.

The event will take place at 10 a.m. Monday around the Midland County Courthouse Square, according to Gayle (Mrs. Doc) Dodson, who is observing her 20th year as parade chairman.

Following the parade, there will be a short patriotic program and awards ceremony in Centennial Plaza. The DAR chapter held the first paraded in 1962 at Hill Park, with former Midlander Helen (Mrs. Preston) Lea of Austin as the originator.

Through the years, the parade has been held at Hill Park, Wadley Barron Park, Downtown Midland and the Museum of the Southwest. "It provides a wonderful opportunity for families to be together, working on entries and showing how proud they are to be Americans," Gayle stated. Gayle may be contacted for further information.

AND THE WINNER IS ... "Maggie's Dance" by Big Spring District Attorney and playwright Rick Hamby. His play has been selected as winner of Midland Community Theatre's McLaren Memorial Comedy Playwrighting Competition.

If the playwright's name sounds familiar, rightly so, because he was the winner last year as well, with his "Gargoyles and Scarecrow Sins." That play was the first winner of the McLaren competition to be produced on MCT's main stage. It played for three weekends in June.

Although the winning play is from West Texas, plays were received from across the country, and finalists were from New York and Virginia. The judging took several months to complete, with the large number of scripts received, according to contest chairman Mary Lou Cassidy.

"Maggie's Dance," the fifth McLaren winner, is scheduled to be performed on Aug. 19-20 at MCT in a reader's theatre format.

crayons, country schoolhouses, bookworms, apples and bears reading books. Other designs featured dinosaurs, carrousel horses, footballs, pompons and megaphones, ivy, cotton bolls, a Halloween witch and some geometric smocking.

Several guild members have original designs featured in this issue. An original heirloom sewing pattern, "Adrianne's Seasons en Pointe," by guild member and local designer Sheryl Montgomery of Montgomery Methods is included as the feature pattern for the magazine. The dress is modeled by Mrs. Montgomery's daughter, Adrianne, and is pictured on the magazine's back cover and in the accompanying article written by Mrs. Montgomery.

Mrs. Montgomery's original smocking design, "Anchor Grande," applique design "Ivy League" and shadow applique design "Spring Daffodil" also are included as variations of the four seasons dress pattern. Mrs. Montgomery's son Alex appears with Adrianne on the back cover in another of Mrs. Montgomery's designs, "Alex's Windowpanes." Adrianne is also featured in the Tumbleweed Chapter's pictorial modeling her mother's latest pattern, the fall version of "Adrianne's Windowpanes."

Guild president Mary Jo Fortuna has two original designs published in "Sew Beautiful." The smocking design plate "Perfect Penmanship" was inspired by pencil-writing Emily's name in manuscript writing. Ms. Fortuna included directions for personalizing the design plate with other names. Also selected for publication was her "Bear Necessities Backpack."

The backpack pattern, drafted by Midlander Emmy Ulmschneider appears in the pull-out section of the magazine. This backpack has an appliqued bear reading a book on the pocket. The applique was based on the smocking design, "Encyclopedia bear-tannica" by "little memories. Emily Fortuna modeled a jumper smocked with "encyclopedia bear-tannica," her backpack and a skirt with the smocked "Perfect Penmanship" design.

Janet Bender, also a member of the local guild, has an applique based on the smocking design, "Country Schoolhouse" by Little Stitches published in the pull-out center section of the magazine. Ms. Bender's children, Kayla and Bryce modeled brother-sister outfits smocked with the schoolhouse design. Big sister Kayla's romper has Ms. Bender's applique on the back yoke.

Past president JoAnn May made an appliqued jacket for her daughter, Lauryn. This jacket has an applique called "Linn's Lambs" by the Vermont designer Becky B and the schoolhouse and road by JoAnn May.

Other guild members that made garments featured in the issue are Phyllis Price, Gwen Taylor, Diane Bles, Leslie Malone, Jennifer Anderson, Debbie Patterson, Linda McLaughlin, Paula McCown, Jane Cappodonna and Trisha Banks.

The garments were modeled by guild members and their children. Lisa Frosch took the photographs at the Trinity School campus. This project was funded in part by a grant from the Arts Assembly of Midland and the Texas Commission on the Arts.

The Tumbleweed Chapter is a nonprofit organization affiliated with the Smocking Arts Guild of America. The purpose of the guild is to preserve and foster the art of smocking and relating needlework for future generations through education, communication and quality workmanship. For more information about the guild, call 699-6932 or 683-5748.

The magazine is available at Waldenbooks and Needle Nook.

FRANKS: Toppings denote regional flavors

limiting intake of dietary fat, salt, sugar and anything else that tastes good, and establishing an exercise program — heck, it's a holiday weekend. One hot dog probably isn't going to hurt you.

And wouldn't it taste good right now?

Hot dogs may be an American institution, but they also come in regional flavors. They lend themselves to dressing up or dressing down. Some purists insist that a hot dog should wear nothing but mustard — which leads to the debate on whether the mustard should be on the dog or on the bun. Others like their hot dogs with "the works," which can include anything from chili to cheese to relish.

Nancy Byal, food editor with Better Homes and Gardens Magazine, lists the following six regional favorites:

■ New York: The Coney Island red hot, originated by Nathan's Famous of New York, the country's first hot dog chain. Nathan's began selling red hots in 1916. This famous dog consists of a grilled all-beef hot dog, placed in a plain bun and topped with sauerkraut and mustard.

A variety of toppings — which vary with the region of the United States — are popular for hot dogs.

■ Chicago: Originally sold for 5 cents during the Depression, this favorite is an all-beef hot dog on a steamed poppy seed bun and topped with mustard, relish, onions, tomatoes, dill pickles, small hot green peppers and a bit of celery salt.

■ New England: What else would Bostonians put on their hot dogs but their famous baked beans?

■ Midwest: For a different kind of taste, people in the middle of the country like to make the francheesie, which is a broiled hot dog stuffed with cheese and wrapped in bacon.

■ Kansas City: The Reuben dog is a big hit in this town. To make one, top a hot dog with sauerkraut and melted Swiss cheese, and put it all on a sesame seed bun. Some people also like a little Thousand Island dressing on theirs.

■ Southwest: Of course, what would you expect the favorite Southwestern hot dog to be but the chili dog? You can also top them with cheese or onions — or both.

Mothers' smoking affects fetus' lung capacity

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — The lungs of children whose mothers smoked during pregnancy take in less air than children of nonsmoking mothers, according to a study by Harvard University researchers.

The study, in the June 15 issue of the American Journal of Epidemiology, also said the lung damage seemed to occur in the first trimester, during the development of the airways in a fetus' lungs.

That means the damage could be done before a woman realizes she is pregnant, the researchers said.

The study of 8,863 children ages 9 to 12 found pregnant smokers' children had an average of 5 percent less lung capacity than children whose mothers didn't smoke.

The reduced air flow in children's lungs could make them more susceptible to respiratory illness, the researchers said.

The researchers previously published a study showing reduced lung function in infants as young as 6 weeks whose mothers smoked during pregnancy.

"These children are at risk for significant respiratory disease in childhood and, as adults, they will be at special risk for the adverse effects of smoking and other respiratory hazards," said Douglas Dockery, associate professor of environmental epidemiology at the Harvard School of Public Health.

The studies were funded by grants from the U.S. National Institute of Environmental Health Sciences.

SEEDS FOR THOUGHT

Help plants through unrelenting hot spell

By Deborah A. Benge

When the temperatures are in excess of 100 degrees and the wind is a substantial 10 to 20 mph, plants take a beating and survival becomes very questionable. There are a few things we can do and should be doing to help plants make it through this unrelenting summer hot spell.

Benge

First of all, daily visits through the garden/landscape will cue you into what's suffering and what's not. As you come across plants that are showing stress, address that stress right away. In these temperatures, a delay in watering of even a few hours can mean death for some plants.

If water is the problem, be sure to immediately water that plant deeply and try to keep water off the foliage to prevent burn. At the same time, be sure to mulch that plant with a 3- to 6-inch layer of mulch. If the mulch is real dry, be sure to water it as well.

This kind of weather should make a believer out of anyone when it comes to drip or low volume irrigation. This is a form of irrigation that not only saves water but labor and plants as well. Drip, trickle or soaker irrigation is a superior method of watering plants because it applies a small amount of water over a long period of time, usually several hours. Drip can be used on vegetables, ornamentals, fruit trees, shrubs, vines and outdoor container grown plants. Drip can reduce the fluctuation of water, air and temperature that you get with other methods of irrigation, like flood, sprinkle and furrow irrigation. With more control of these fluctuations, you get better plant growth and performance.

With other forms of irrigation, drift, runoff, evaporation and watering unwanted areas are all a potential problems. Because water is being applied at a slow rate, soil can be watered deep to encourage deep rooting and almost eliminate the loss of water by drift or runoff.

Any time water can be kept out of the air by spraying or sprinkling, drift and evaporation are reduced and water is saved. With proper management, up to 60 percent of water can be saved due to the evaporation factor when compared to other methods. Because water is being applied directly to the plant's root zone, water isn't wasted by going on areas where desirable plants aren't growing. This not only saves water but it also reduces weed growth.

Don't let the installation of drip irrigation intimidate you . . . it's not hard to do. Besides that, there are some very knowledgeable people in the business to help you figure out what's what.

For drip, sprinkler or other types of irrigation, be sure to use some of the timers/programmers that are available for automatic watering and shut off. This can simplify life, save water and save plants.

Sprinkler irrigation is the most common method of watering lawns. Some pointers that will help you do a better job of meeting irrigation needs include, timing, amounts and fertility. The best time to water the grass is early morning before winds, intense sunlight and high temperatures begin. Water amounts on the average are about 1 inch every five to six days, but with the wind and heat we've seen of late, you may need to go to a three or four day basis until we get back into the 90s.

Avoid applying fertilizers during this stressful time. Many fertilizers cause an increased water demand and can easily damage the plants if water is deficient. Wait until the temperatures drop a little and then fertilize using recommended types, rates and methods.

When it comes to mowing, mow a little higher. A grass mowed slightly higher will grow slower, shade the soil surface slowing water loss and will tend to root deeper. All of these add up to lower water demands.

Now listen closely . . . I'm going to tell you an important plant survival secret . . . mulch, mulch, mulch. A 3- to 6-inch layer of mulch will significantly reduce soil water evaporation, keep the soil cooler and reduce weeds.

Several things can be used to mulch with. Organic mulches include leaves, grass clippings, hay, straw, cottonseed hulls, pine needles, pecan shells, compost, wood chips, shredded pine bark and the list goes on. If you run out of mulching materials, be resourceful. Try items like layers of newspaper, old carpet, cardboard and any other materials that will lay on the ground and help conserve moisture. These aren't as good as an organic mulch but they will help slow water loss and help your plants through the tough times.

Containers will dry out in a heart beat, so be prepared to water daily and possibly twice a day. Place a pot inside a larger pot with mulch filled in the space to slow water loss a little. Don't forget to pile mulch on top of the soil in your containers. If they are really taking a beating, place them temporarily in the shade of a tree, porch or other protection until weather cools somewhat.

New plantings of any type will benefit from a temporary shading. Make temporary shade with PVC, 2x2s, shade cloth, snow fencing or whatever you can find that will cut the sun's intense rays somewhat. These shades can also reduce the wind which will help a new struggling plant as well.

Use pesticides with extreme care or dispense with their use until conditions return to normal. Pesticide sprays applied to the foliage of plants with our current weather conditions can severely damage the foliage.

There are no miracles, just common sense approaches to taking care of plants during the ravages of summer heat. Water deep, check the soil by feeling, use 3- to 6-inch layers of mulch, provide shading where possible and the rest is up to the plants.

DEAR ABBY

Couple's visit to fishing lake fails hook, line & sinker

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My husband and I, both in our 60s, recently had the most disappointing weekend of our lives.

Our daughter and son-in-law invited us to their lake home for Mother's Day weekend. We were promised some good fishing. We love to fish, and because we both work long hours and don't own a boat, we had really looked forward to the weekend.

Van Buren

We drove two and a half hours to their home, and found their front door unlocked and a note on their kitchen table saying they had taken some friends out on the lake. We could have cried. Dad and I fished off the dock alone.

When the kids returned late that evening, they said, "We thought you'd be tired after that long drive, so when our friends stopped by, we took them out on the lake to fish." Not wanting to upset them, we didn't tell them how hurt we were.

Do you think we should have created a scene and told them how hurt we were? Or should we have driven back home before they returned, which was what we almost decided to do? — NOT A HAPPY MOTHER'S DAY

DEAR NOT: You were far more generous than most people would have been under the circumstances. I would not have blamed you had you left a note saying, "Sorry we missed each other" — and then driven home. To have created a scene would have made an uncomfortable situation even more uncomfortable.

DEAR ABBY: The letter about the three women showing up at the same place wearing identical hats was funny. (It resulted in two laughing while the third had her nose bent out of shape.) That letter reminded me of a well-publicized incident of many years ago.

At a large social gathering in Washington, D.C., a woman felt chagrined. She had been told that her gown was an original — then first lady Mamie Eisenhower descended the stairway wearing an identical gown!

When Mrs. Eisenhower spotted her, she went directly to the woman, smiled warmly, and said, "My dear, I hope mine looks as lovely on me as yours looks on YOU." — MIKE VARADY, LOS ANGELES

DEAR MIKE: Thank you for the human interest story about the gracious, down-to-earth Mamie Eisenhower.

Here's an interesting aside concerning President Eisenhower: He had wanted an appointment to the Naval Academy at Annapolis, but he had passed the age limit of 20, so off he went to West Point!

DEAR ABBY: The letters in your column about the rooster reminded me of a poem I wrote during my Ogden Nash period. Thought you might enjoy it:

The rooster is quite erudite
He's heard when he is out of sight.
His crow causes the sun to rise
And sleepy folks to open eyes.
Since there's no law against the rooster,
He takes a lot of getting useter.

DEAR BILL: Enjoy it? I cackled!

Bridal gowns in classifieds have a story

By Lisa Addison
Hearst News Service

"It really seems that people just aren't as sentimental about their wedding dresses anymore.,"

—Linda Reams
owner of Too Good to be Threw, San Antonio

SAN ANTONIO — Surely you've seen one of the ads before. "For sale: Wedding dress, never worn. Lovely. Full train, beaded bodice. Veil included. $350 or best offer."

Why wasn't the dress worn? Did someone wind up with a broken heart? Did the couple get cold feet? Could the bride-to-be no longer fit into the dress?

Whatever the reasons, local resale shops are seeing more and more women who are selling their new or only-once-used dresses, as well as people coming to the resale shops to buy wedding dresses.

Linda Reams, owner of Too Good to be Threw in San Antonio, said spring is the time of year her store does the most wedding business.

"Since we specialize in designer apparel, we accept only wedding dresses that cost at least $1,000 new," Reams said. "We sell the dresses for anywhere from $150 to $500.

"It really seems that people just aren't as sentimental about their wedding dresses anymore," Reams said. "Maybe the dress was taking up too much space at home, or they didn't have anyone to pass it down to. So they bring it in to us."

One woman, 23, had a novel reason for selling her dress to a resale shop.

"I just want somebody else to be as happy as I've been," said the woman, who didn't want to be identified.

She said her husband was going to be stationed in Germany, and she didn't want to have to pack the dress.

"We'll be moving around all of our married life, and I don't want to have to move the dress every time. The dress was so beautiful and brought me so much happiness. Maybe somebody else can enjoy it now."

Wedding attire accounts for a good part of the business at the Good as New Boutique.

"I'd say wedding clothes and accessories are about half of our business," manager Sammye Counts said.

"We sell new and pre-owned clothes, but we do sell quite a few of the used dresses. We get about three to five dresses in a week that are pre-owned. The used wedding dresses sell for $100, all the way up to $800," Counts said.

Counts says she's heard all the reasons for selling dresses.

"Some are selling their dresses because they broke off the wedding or something happened and plans changed. We also got in a lot of dresses during Desert Storm since quite a few couples ended up eloping because they weren't sure if they would be able to be married on the original wedding date. So the brides didn't need their wedding dresses and brought them back in."

Tom and Linda Heinrich, owners of The Lost Closet, specialize in wedding apparel at their store. "We sell just about anything that the bride and groom might need,"

"For us to consider buying a wedding dress for resale, it needs to be less than two years old and its original price should have been more than $500.

"Usually, the person selling it just doesn't want it in their closet anymore. Or sometimes there has been a divorce. Then there are the cases where the wedding just didn't happen and the last thing they want is the wedding dress as a reminder of that."

ANNIVERSARY

Tubbs celebrate 49th anniversary

BIG SPRING — Horace and Jewel Tubb of Big Spring celebrated their 49th anniversary June 25 with a family dinner hosted by their children.

Tubb and the former Jewel Forest Moore were married June 25, 1945, in Big Spring. They have three children — Richie Tubb of Big Spring, Gloria Hanson of Pecos and Patricia Eubanks of Plano — as well as eight grandchildren.

The couple has lived in Big Spring throughout their marriage. They have been active in farming, ranching and land development in Big Spring and Midland County. They are affiliated with First Baptist Church in Big Spring.

Weddings of older couples differ

By Barbara Mayer
Associated Press

"There's a world of difference when you marry at an older age," says Audrey Wertheim Phelps, who wed for the first time at age 60. "Your friends are older. Our wedding was more like a party than a social obligation. Our friends especially appreciated the music — not one rock-and-roll tune."

In terms of commitment, marriages among the over-50 set do not differ from marriages of younger people. But the older the couple, the more individualized the wedding is likely to be.

"The basic rituals are usually observed," says Barbara Tober, editor of Bride's magazine. "They send invitations, get dressed up, say vows, cut the cake and give toasts."

Yet weddings of couples over 50 do often have a slightly different feeling. For one thing, the bride is more likely to appear in something other than the traditional white bridal dress.

"The difference in feeling flows out of being more confident and, often, more tolerant," says Carroll Stoner, author of "Weddings for Grownups" (Chronicle Books).

WEDDINGS OF OLDER couples mirror their sophistication in every aspect, including choosing the place, the food, the time of day, the music, and the clothing, says Stoner. They are more likely to hire a different kind of photography — photojournalists who blend into the background instead of being obtrusive.

The party is separated from the wedding ceremony, and it's a celebration of everyone who cares, rather than a gathering of the entire clan. The guest list is more likely to be composed more of friends than of family.

The ceremony is likely to be short and custom-tailored. Often, the couple is married by a judge, because they might not share the same religion or they might be divorced. The ceremony may well be only for the couple and their immediate families.

The couple usually plans a wedding that's similar to its favorite style of entertaining, whatever that may be. Tober says the wedding breakfast and the sit-down dinner are both common in formal New England. The cocktail party format with finger food in the late afternoon or early evening is a California staple. Dessert buffets are popular in the south.

The number of marriages for individuals aged 50 and over actually has varied little between 1982 and 1992 and, indeed, the marriage rate for both women and men over 50 has declined, according to Barbara Foley Wilson, demographer with the National Center for Health Statistics in Washington.

However, it's safe to assume that the 96,000 women and 162,000 men over 50 who did marry in 1992 wanted to make their wedding day special.

A number of officiants are more willing to make changes in the liturgy to accommodate special situations than they were three decades ago, according to Tober.

The wedding industry also has recognized the desire to individualize the wedding. Many printers of invitations will print anything, even an invitation written out in longhand, says Tober. Acceptable invitation and wedding announcement wording has also greatly expanded from the more limited forms of the past.

Bridal apparel designers are making a wider variety of apparel, including wedding suits in lace and satin, ankle-length and short dresses; bridal shops carry a wider range of dresses than in the past, says Stoner.

Hotels are offering packages to appeal to older brides who are sure of their taste, says Stoner.

Experience of living makes it easier to plan a wedding with confidence. However, there can be a danger when the highly competent older bride plans her own wedding.

Older brides who have been successful and feel they can handle things are sometimes unwilling to let go of the details and just have a good time at their own wedding.

Add some fireworks to you July 4th celebration with spicy grilled Cajun Ribs. Serve with baked beans and corn on the cob.

Grilled ribs are perfect for July 4th outdoor celebration

Associated Press

Barbecued ribs make an excellent grilled dish for the Fourth of July. And spices from the Louisiana bayou inspire a Cajun dry rub that's perfect for grilled pork back ribs.

Pork back ribs are cut from the blade and center section of the pork loin while spareribs come from the side or underbelly of the pig.

Estimate 1 pound of back ribs per person. Serve with baked beans and corn on the cob.

Cajun Ribs

2 tablespoons paprika
2 teaspoons salt
2 teaspoons onion powder
2 teaspoons garlic powder
2 teaspoons red pepper
1½ teaspoons white pepper
½ teaspoon black pepper
1 teaspoon dried thyme leaves
1 teaspoon oregano leaves
4 pounds pork back ribs (about 2 whole slabs)

Combine seasonings. Rub on all surfaces of ribs. Place ribs on covered grill over indirect heat. Grill for 1½ hours. Cut ribs into serving-sized pieces. Makes 4 servings.

Nutritional information per serving: 729 cal., 52 g pro., 54 g fat, 1,233 mg sodium, 214 mg chol.

Warehouse shopping deals cause many to lose mind, gain bulk

By Erma Bombeck

My secretary holds a membership in one of those warehouse deals where you buy in bulk and save a lot of money. Actually, since our family is down to two, the idea seemed ludicrous, but I told her I'd go with her to check it out, which we did last Saturday.

Bombeck

If the Woodstock revival needs toilet paper for 150,000 people, I have it. If you want to stuff a mattress with trail mix to make it firm, look no farther than my pantry. I have enough batteries to save every Third World country from darkness. I went nuts.

I bought a can of tomato paste that I can't even lift. I purchased dog food that would last for the next 20 years -- if I had a dog. I purchased wedges of cheese that look like wagon wheels.

I don't know why I did it. There is just something intimidating about being a little person in the forest of food giants. They were taller than me, bigger than me and there were more of them.

My problem in buying large quantities is that I do not have the resistance to store an item on a shelf and pace myself. I used to buy cake mixes four for a $1. We had cake for dinner four nights in a row. I couldn't bear to save them.

I knew when I bought a carton of bagel dogs (a hot dog wrapped in bagel dough), it would be the same thing. I had a bagel dog every meal until every single one was gone. I can't look at a bun without barking.

I guess it's the old Titanic mentality. Eat it all now or you may be sorry.

The warehouse shopping idea seems to be gaining in popularity. It's as if we're going back to the days of the general store when Sarah and Zeb hitched up the buckboard and rode 50 miles to lay in supplies before the first big winter storm hit.

I could see the similarity in the shoppers at the warehouse. A man rolled a drum of oatmeal he could have driven home. "Think this will do us?" he asked his wife. "Better get two," she said. "I might make cookies."

People loaded up on lawn products, toys, tools, car parts, underwear, shoes, and I bet, by golly, if little Ned was good, he'd get a piece of red licorice for the ride home.

Shopping has turned into a family affair. There is something there for everyone.

I couldn't resist the large carton of fresh peaches. I made pies, cobblers, jelly, preserves, left them as tips, juggled them to amuse children, and shared them. Surely Martha Stewart will know what to do with eight dozen peach pits.

Barbecue for Independence Day

Tri-tip roast rubbed with seasonings is perfect for grilling

Associated Press

There's no day more appropriate for a barbecue than the Fourth of July.

According to Weber-Stephen Products' 1994 "Grill Watch" survey, the Fourth of July is America's No. 1 grilling day, with 80 percent of the survey's respondents planning to celebrate the nation's birthday with a barbecue. (Weber-Stephen says there were 400 respondents to its sixth annual survey.)

Lean beef tri-tip roast is a delicious and simple main dish for entertaining. It's only about 2 inches thick, so it can be cooked over direct coals just as you would steaks or burgers. A 1½-pound tri-tip cooks in about 35 to 45 minutes and serves six. Because of its unique triangular shape, when it's cooked to medium-rare in the center, the thinner outer edges will be medium to well-done.

In the following recipe, tri-tip roast has been rubbed with garlic, pepper and thyme prior to grilling. The same seasonings mixed with prepared Italian salad dressing accent the accompanying skewered vegetables that grill along with the roast. To complete the meal, serve toasted garlic bread and assorted fresh fruits like melon and berries.

PEPPERY BEEF TRI-TIP ROAST WITH SKEWERED VEGETABLES

1 tablespoon packed light brown sugar
2 cloves garlic, crushed
2 teaspoons cracked black pepper
½ teaspoon dried thyme leaves
½ teaspoon salt
1 beef tri-tip (bottom sirloin) roast (about 1½ pounds)
½ cup Italian dressing
6 cups assorted vegetables for grilling, such as medium yellow summer squash or zucchini (cut into ¼-inch slices), red bell pepper (cut into 1-inch squares), large mushrooms, small onion (cut into 6 wedges)

Combine brown sugar, garlic, pepper, thyme and salt; reserve 1 teaspoon for vegetables. Trim fat from beef roast. Press remaining seasoning mixture evenly into surface of roast.

Place roast on grid over medium coals. Grill 35 to 45 minutes for medium-rare to medium doneness, turning frequently.

Meanwhile thread vegetables onto each of six 12-inch metal skewers. Combine reserved seasoning mixture with Italian dressing; brush evenly on vegetables. Place vegetables on grid; grill 20 to 25 minutes or until squash is tender, turning occasionally.

Remove roast when meat thermometer registers 140 degrees for medium-rare, 155 degrees for medium. Let stand 10 minutes before carving. (The temperature will continue to rise to 145 degrees for medium-rare, 160 degrees for medium.) Carve roast across the grain into thin slices. Serve with grilled vegetables. Makes 6 servings.

NOTE: To check the temperature of the coals, cautiously hold your hand, palm side down, at cooking height (just above the grid). Count the number of seconds you can hold your hand in that position before the heat is uncomfortable and you have to pull it away; 4 seconds for medium coals.

Nutritional information per serving: 299 cal., 27 g pro, 12 g carbo., 16 g fat, 3.7 mg iron, 392 mg sodium, 76 mg chol.

Back by popular demand, play 'Snoopy' to take stage

By popular demand, the musical "Snoopy" will be back on the Davis Theatre I stage at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave., Thursday.

"So many of the Pickwicks I've got now were little kids in the audience watching 'Snoopy' seven years ago, and they wanted to be in it," said Rene Brister Chambers, Midland Community Theatre's educational theater director. "They saw it then as children, and that's when they decided they wanted to be Pickwicks and be in it."

The musical, with music by Larry Grossman and lyrics by Hal Hackady, is a series of episodes rather than a continuous plot.

"It's a family musical," Ms. Chambers said. "It's one of those shows that some of the humor adults will catch and it will miss the kids, but then a lot of it is aimed at children. And it's full of just delightful music."

The Pickwicks are not presenting the musical as it is most often done.

"Usually Snoopy is done with no set at all," Ms. Chambers said. "We are doing it with these really neat background panels that look like actual panels out of a cartoon strip, but then we're also using these bright colored blocks to be chairs and tables and benches and all the other things that are needed. I think the sets are going to be really neat, and we have a wonderful Snoopy dog house."

The musical, which has seven principal characters and a chorus of nine people, has

The cast of the Pickwick Players' production of the musical "Snoopy" invite children of all ages to see the show. The play runs July 7-11 and 14-16 at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave. Curtain is at 1:30 p.m.

Night Ranger gets back on track with own kind of music

For Night Ranger members Brad Gillis, Kelly Keagy and Gary Moon, it feels good to be in the studio deciding what songs to put on the next album.

After selling more than seven million albums worldwide, Night Ranger decided to take a hiatus from the business in late 1988. A perspective contract with an independent Los Angeles label comes after several disappointments suffered by Night Ranger since the group reformed in 1990.

"For the past few years, we've been trying to get new material together and get signed by a record company, and we finally got signed," Gillis said. "After we go do these two weeks worth of shows, we go right into the studio and start to record."

Those shows include Monday's July 4th West Texas Sizzle performance at Twin Cities Speedway. Performing on the same venue will be Loverboy, Quiet Riot, Dangerous Toys, Dirty Looks and Love-Hate.

This June 24 all three were in the studio narrowing down their new material, somewhere between 20 and 25 songs, and selecting the 10 or 12 songs for the upcoming record.

"It all comes down to sales and air play and how much touring you do," Gillis said. "We've always been a very hard-working band.

"In fact, from 1983 when we released our first album, we started touring 250 shows a year, and we did that till late '88. That's when the band broke up. We all had a problem with the record company. They wanted to release too many ballads — kind of turned us into a power ballad band. That's how they labeled us, which was kind of upsetting because we just wanted to play the big rock 'n' roll."

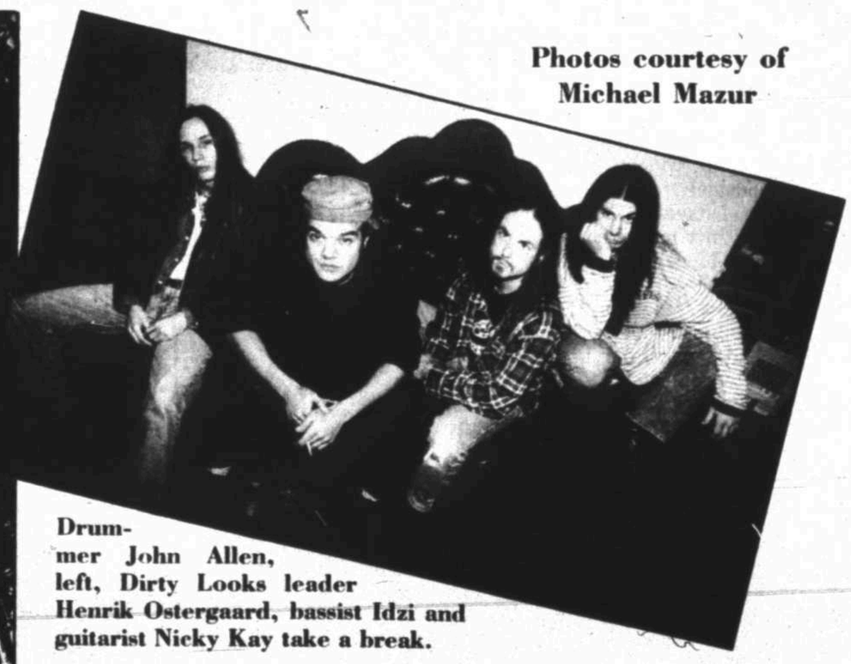

Gillis, after making two solo albums, approached Keagy about re-forming Night Ranger and, with former Night Ranger Jack Blades performing with Damn Yankees, the two

Dirty Looks' music focuses on things that are spiritual

Hard rocker Henrik Ostergaard of Dirty Looks credits his uncle, Soren Rasmusen, with instilling in him a love for music.

"I grew up with him playing the piano all the time, and when I was 11 or 12 he bought me a bass so I could play with them," Ostergaard recalled in a telephone interview. "I could play a little bit of piano at that time, but he was a lot better piano player than me so I was the bass dude."

That was in Denmark, the home of Ostergaard's youth, where his uncle played in a pit orchestra and any other place he looked around for a bass player and a lead singer and discovered Moon.

"He's a screaming, wild singer," Gillis said of Moon.

"His voice is amazing," Keagy said. "He's one of the few singers that I have ever played with that can sing consistently great for millions of hours in a row. When we got him in the band, we knew we had something that was special even to the old band."

When they auditioned Moon, he was in a group called The Pack and had a record out. Moon said he didn't even realize he was going to an audition because a mutual friend, whom he had not talked to in eight years, simply asked him if he was interested in jamming with a couple of great players.

"I'm a sucker for that," Moon said. "I just kind of walked in and started playing and it was magic from the first five minutes into a song. I found out during the session it was an audition. That night, I went home and sat down with a big glass of vodka and said, 'What am I going to do?' "

Several days later Moon called his group and said, "Sorry guys. I love you but this is what I've been looking for all my career."

You can still rock in America, but the approach has changed.

"I'm really enjoying what's happening, having this big, giant voice, talking about real things," Keagy said. "Back in the 70s and early 80s, the subjects were cars and girls and all that party stuff. Now we're dealing with real situations. It's about time.

"Now, it's like we have a chance to have a voice. Whether it's political or about a relationship or about drugs or whatever, we got to have an opinion through the music."

And the songs Night Ranger plans to record reflect this new approach.

"We're trying to be a little bit harder and a little bit more edged to get that message across," Keagy said. "To make a point and to get somebody to listen, you have to make a big noise."

Keagy said he's not unlike any other musician — they all start young with little thought to the business part of the music industry.

"You talk to any musician and they all started when they were young and got inspired by whoever was popular at the time. We didn't know it was a business. We just knew we loved what the sound was and it turned out we could actually make that sound.

"You never realize it's something you're going to do the rest of your life. Here I am almost 40 and still have as much or more energy to deal with problems that might crop up within the music, such as playing in difficult situations."

It's important to Keagy that people listen to music with an unbiased mind.

"It would be nice if music could just be heard and not criticized so much," Keagy said. "People are so worried about what's hip now. Music transcends everything. It can be heard by everybody and enjoyed. I just hope that's the case in the future. Let it be what it is instead of worrying about whether it's political or not or trying to be correct — saying the right thing."

Like Keagy, Gillis also developed an interest in music when he was young — 8 years old. His father was in the U.S. Navy and his parents went to a bingo game at the officers club. The children had a choice between seeing a magician or a flamenco guitar player.

"My dad already knew all kinds of card tricks and handkerchief tricks," Gillis said. "I went to see the flamenco guitar player instead, and I sat in the front of him for this whole 45 minute set and was in total awe of his playing. And that's right when the Beatles came out and the Rolling Stones and The Monkees."

Christmas was close so Gillis asked for a guitar. He received an acoustic guitar, which he played until his birthday six months later. This time he asked for an electric guitar. By the time he was 10, he had started his first band, the Invaders — four 10-year-olds.

"The drummer's mom couldn't handle us playing in the living room any more because he was playing to loud for the neighbor," Gillis said, laughing as he recalled the group's six-month history.

He continued forming bands.

"When I was a freshman in high school, the rest of my band, who were seniors, got us a gig playing the senior prom. It was the largest audience I had played for at that time and that's when I knew I wanted to be a rock 'n' roll star be cause these senior girls were giv ing me the eye. Girls that had nev er talked to me before were all of a sudden my best friends."

While playing in that band, he was discovered by a group named Rubicon, which signed a recording contract with 20th Century Fox Records. At 18, he was touring. An other pivotal moment came for Gillis when Rubicon played Ca Jam II March 18, 1978.

"I was 19 years old and I played in front of 250,000 people. It was the biggest day of my life. Still is."

The group then performed on the Merv Griffin Show and American Bandstand.

"That's when my parents saw me on TV for the first time, and that's when I went from a dirt bag no nothing musician to a rock star in their eyes," Gillis said. He laughed. "And their whole attitude changed toward me. My mom wanted me to come down and meet all her bowling lady friends and they were trying to set me up with their daughters, and my dad wanted me to come meet all his golfing buddies and meet their daughters."

Rubicon broke up and Gillis went through several other bands before Night Ranger began taking shape in 1980. Then, in 1982, Randy Rhoads, Quiet Riot's founder who was playing guitar with Ozzy Osborne, was killed in a plane crash.

"I left Night Ranger to fill in for eight months on the road with Ozzy Osborne. It was unbelievably wild and crazy for somebody like me who had played in pretty reserved bands. At least everyone was halfway sane in the ones before, and then playing with Ozzy was a whole new ball game. Not that I'm complaining but I was playing with an Englishman, a Cuban, a Texan and a Scotsman, and here I was a young, white boy from California.

"Night Ranger finally got a record deal so I left Ozzy, came back to Night Ranger and finished our first album and released it on Broadway Records the same week Ozzy released the 'Speak of the Devil' album (a double album recorded live during the months Gillis was with Ozzy). I had two albums out the same week, which was pretty exciting for me."

Moon, who is several years older than the other two, has been in the business for 25 years, writing songs, singing and playing bass. He's refused to compromise on his music and the opportunity to play with Night Ranger allows him to remain true to his beliefs about music and play with a known entity at the same time.

"I'm doing exactly what I knew I always wanted to do without giving anything up," Moon said. "In a way, it's like finding your soul mate. . .The whole reason why we are doing what we are doing is we believe in our music. The music is a part of us."

TODAY'S CHILDREN are cheerful but somewhat shy, letting others set the pace in social situations. They love the sun and surf and may want to live close to the ocean when they grow up. Penny-pinchers, they will always have a tidy sum of money in the bank. A career in accounting or banking will let them use their well-known head for figures.

Opening lead: Nine of ♣

Don't take a crucial finesse until you have to. There might be an alternative line available which offers a better chance.

Note that, despite a very strong hand, North did not jump on the first round, but waited until the next. North-South reached an excellent slam that would have been laydown had West not found an excellent opening lead.

Without an initial trump salvo, declarer would have been able to ruff two diamonds in dummy, discard a heart on the ace of spades and take the heart finesse in an attempt to score an overtrick. After the trump lead it might appear that the fate of the contract hinged on the heart finesse, but declarer had other ideas.

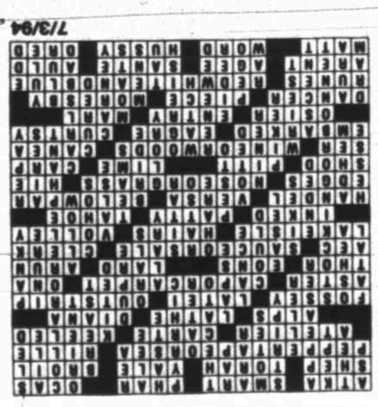

The first trick was won on the table, the ace and king of diamonds were cashed and a diamond was ruffed. Declarer returned to hand with a spade ruff and drew trumps. With the groundwork completed, declarer led the remaining diamond and, when West showed out, the contract could be claimed.

In with the queen of diamonds, East was snared in a major-suit endplay. Both a spade or a heart return would be into one of dummy's major tenaces, giving South 12 tricks via three tricks in the majors, two diamonds, a diamond ruff and six trump tricks.

What if West won the fourth diamond? That player would have to return a major suit and declarer would be back to a finesse for the contract. And if diamonds had not split 4-3, declarer would have had to rely on the heart finesse to get home.

A project of the Arts Assemby of Midland

Singing duo to perform at concert series

No Strangers, the singing duo of Joseph and Theresa Brunelle, performs at the Summer Sunday Lawn Concert Series July 10 at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave.

The Brunelles, formerly of Midland and now working out of Austin, are an acoustic/electric duo performing a variety of music from folk and rock to blues and country. Much of the material they perform is original.

Theresa Brunelle sings, plays harmonica and percussion, while Joseph Brunelle plays guitar and harmonica and also does vocals. The couple has performed several times at the museum.

The concert begins at 7:45 p.m. The museum invites those attending the free family entertainment to bring their own seating and picnics or snacks.

Now in their seventh year, the lawn concerts are sponsored in part by the Midland Reporter-Telegram.

There is no concert today because Monday is a national holiday, July 4.

been double cast. Principals include Clayton Cross and Doug Heintz as Snoopy; Reid Merritt and Matt Nicholson as Charlie Brown; Crystal Alvey and Whitney Lanier as Lucy; Stephanie Birnbaum and Cheryl Martin as Sally; Will Coombes and Jeremy Wood as Linus; Monica Cambron and Vanessa Oglesby as Peppermint Patty; and Clark Hodge and Morgan Merritt as Snoopy's feathered friend, Woodstock.

Chorus members include Whitney Blischke, Calvin Bogart, Ryan Britt, Tim Franklin, Renee Gandy, Katie Hinterlong, Amber Kelly, Melissa Leeper, Kristin Loftis, Ryan Miller, Peter Mills, Ashley McWilliams, Russell Parker, Rekha Reddy, Laurel Rhodes and Justin Tate.

"The thing that appealed to me about 'Snoopy' is the humor of it and the wisdom of the characters," Ms. Chambers said. "The show is like a series of little short stories and most of them have little lessons of life contained in them. They are funny and you are going to really enjoy them, but you also are going to think a little bit.

Tickets, priced at $5, may be purchased by calling MCT's box office, 682-4111, or going by the theater between 10 a.m. and 5 p.m. weekdays. Production dates are Thursday through July 10 and July 14-16. Curtain is at 1:30 p.m.

The Pickwick summer musical, which is co-produced by Texas National Bank, is the culmination of a five-week program in which the members of the company not only rehearse, but also study stage craft, acting, music, dance and other theater topics. Not only do Pickwicks appear in the play, they also work as the technical running crew. Stage managing the musical is Amber Hanson with Amy Mills and Whitney Stanco operating sound and lights. Kirsty Messer and Candice Settle, the assistant stage managers, supervise the backstage crew, comprised of Cassie Coker, Jodi Nolen and Morgan Pierce.

"Snoopy" isn't the only production being presented by the Pickwicks this summer.

"We have everyone — all the people that are ensemble and all the crew are also doing 'Safety Kids Play it Smart'," said Ms. Chambers, referring to the youth performing troupe's drug awareness play. The Pickwicks are performing the 25-minute musical for elementary-age children in churches and day care centers this summer. To schedule a free performance call Ms. Chambers, 682-2544.

Currently the Pickwick rooster, which includes 49 members this summer, has an almost even break between seasoned and new members with a nearly even split between junior high and senior high members.

Although Ms. Chambers hopes her students will remain active in theater during their adult lives, she doesn't encourage them to pursue a career in theater.

"I tell them I hope they include theater in their lives forever because it's very enriching and rewarding, but don't make theater their career," said Ms. Chambers, who is completing her fourth season as director of the troupe. "There are too many people that go into theater and not enough jobs. I encourage them to find a career in some other field and then do theater at community theater."

could find to play.

"You dabble in a whole bunch of different things just to get by over there," said Ostergaard, whose group plays here along with Loverboy, Quiet Riot, Night Ranger, the Austin-based Dangerous Toys and Love-Hate July 4 at the "West Texas Sizzle" set for Twin Cities Speedway.

"It's basically a lot more middle class (in Denmark), not that many poor and not that many rich because taxes are so high. The government basically pays for college and doctors, just about everything that you need."

Children also grow up earlier there than here, Ostergaard said.

"Children are a little bit more mature because they are forced to deal with different types of realities than American children. Over there, you are an adult when you are 15. When you are 12 or 13, you make a choice to either drop out of school or continue on. If you continue on, you make a commitment to the government to go to college."

"A 13-year-old is out working eight hours a day, 40 hours a week, supporting his family like they supported him."

And, like in many other countries, drug addiction among the young is a concern in Denmark.

"I think it starts a little younger over there than it does here," said Ostergaard, who spent three and a half years in drug rehabilitation by the time he was 15.

And, he said he didn't chose whether he would or would not continue his education.

"Actually, I got kicked out," the 28-year-old said. "I was an idiot when I was a little kid, and I had no conscious, and I did a lot of stupid things."

When he was 15, his mother, who had been moving around Europe, married an American and he came to the United States with them, living first in Pennsylvania, where he put together his first band, Adraxas. The band played blues.

"That's my favorite," said Ostergaard, whose first public performance was in this country when he was 15. "If I could make a living playing blues, that's what I would do."

He later moved to San Francisco, where Dirty Looks was born.

"We were fortunate enough to receive some airplay on the radio stations," said Ostergaard, adding that an investor made a full length record possible.

"As a result of that album doing pretty good, we received a contract from a label in France called Storm — the French label for Warner Brothers. As a result of that album, we got a deal in the States with a label called Mirror Records, and we put out an album Atlantic Records picked up."

Dirty Looks then cut several albums with Atlantic before "parting ways with them," and cutting two albums on Rockworld, a division of Krebs Music Corp. The latest release of the group — Ostergaard on guitar and vocals, Keith Barrows on bass, Charlie George on drums and Alex Kane additional guitars — on Rockworld is "Chewing on the Bit."

"It's not sex, drugs and rock 'n' roll," Ostergaard said of the CD. "That's not what it's about at all. It's definitely an album that focuses on the greatest spiritual things of the universe."

He's pleased the album contains a blues song, now called "Encore," but originally titled "King Snake."

"I didn't think the record company would let that go, but they heard it and said it was cool to go in the album," said Ostergaard, who usually writes the material but turns "to other people for imput also."

Those purchasing the CD will discover the lyrics are not included.

"I didn't think the record company would have liked the lyrics because their idea of what sells and my idea of what I want to do are two different things," Ostergaard said.

"I'm not out there trying to hustle the record company's album. I'm out there playing music for myself and not to sell records."

And he isn't touring with those who cut the record because of visa problems and prior commitments. Instead he touring with the guys from Child's Play — Nicky Kay, guitar; Idzi, bass; and John Allen, drums.

This hard rocker has a definite idea about what comes first in his life.

"I think you have to be in touch with God first, that's the first step, then once you have that awareness, then you build on that. You grow in that, you grow little by little. It's a learning process, step by step," Ostergaard said.

He doesn't claim membership in a specific denomination.

"I believe in Jesus Christ, and that's my religion," said Ostergaard.

He finds most of his needs are met.

"I don't need a lot of money. I've got a nice place to live, and I've got a couple of cars. I don't really need anything else. I like doing what I do. I like to play the blues."

He knows what he would like to accomplish in life.

"I'd like to change a few lives, once my own is in order. That's what I'd really like to do — for the better, in a positive way. I've been there. I'd like to do that through the music, but not in a preachy type thing. In a more eye-opening type of thing. Making people aware. Once they are aware, they have to make choices."
