Bank Elections—
Two Tragedies—
Be Careful—
From Tom Green—

WHILE bank presidents and directors, or other corporation officials, are not usually elected because of public popularity, The Record News knows of no selection that could meet with greater public favor than that which placed W. B. Hamilton as president of the Wichita State Bank and Trust company, and N. H. Martin and John Hirschi as directors.

These three men have served this section so well, have endeared themselves so much to the public because of their many activities, it is doubtful if a more fitting choice could have been made even if the election had been upon the results of a popularity contest.

THE public will feel that the selection of Mr. Hamilton, Mr. Martin and Mr. Herschi as leaders of the Wichita State bank is a deserved and fitting honor. Business leaders of the town and state will know that the bank is fortunate in its association with such capable men.

Continued expansion and growth of Wichita Falls is greatly dependent upon the strength and progress of its financial institutions, and in this respect, no city in Texas is more fortunately situated. Wichita Falls banks and financial institutions as a group present strength and ample resources to continue, as they have in the past, to supply the backing for meritorious industrial expansion.

TWO lives were snuffed out Saturday night, both in seemingly unavoidable accidents.

We are shocked by such tragedies, we feel a passing regret if the persons involved are known to us only through newspaper accounts, or perhaps a deeper regret if they happen to be personal acquaintances or friends.

Under any condition, we forget all too soon these tragedies called unavoidable. Few of us consider that except for the protection of providence, fate, fortune of whatyou-will, we or some friend or member of our family might have been the victim.

We thrill at the iron worker sitting on a 12-inch beam 15 stories from the ground, or we shudder for the man painting a flag pole 150 feet in the air, when we risk our own lives quite as often dodging traffic lights, speeding, cutting corners, disregarding stop signals, racing trains, looking in the gas tank with a match, or doing any one of a score or more of daily pursuits.

The chief difference between the ironworker, the flag pole painter and the average man is that the former gentlemen know they are risking their lives and are careful.

GEORGE HENSHAW of Tom Green county must have "money to burn." He is an oil man. He sold his holdings in Brown county to the Texas company for $2,000,000. He is going to spend $25,000 on a non-stop flight to Tokio, and fly by proxy over the Pacific from California to Japan.

His pilot, D. W. Griffin of Oklahoma, may make the trip alone if Henshaw changes his mind. Griffin is a former University of Oklahoma football player, and piloted a bombing machine over the Alps during the World war.

George Henshaw is a West Texan. His money is West Texas money. He is the head of two $2,000,000 oil concerns, and he sees no reason why West Texas should not be placed on the map in a flying sense.

Dallas Financed Captain Billy Erwin and spent $400,000 on a municipal aviation field. Henshaw of Tom Green is going to give Dallas a run for its money.

Police Protest Members Of Sect Who Aroused Viennese Mob

By Universal Service.

VIENNA, July 17.—(By Courier to the German Border.)—Fifty dead, 250 seriously injured, an equal number slightly injured and 130 under arrest—these were the casualties resulting from the street battles which have been raging in Vienna from Thursday to the early hours of this morning which the Universal Service Staff correspondent found on his arrival here late this afternoon after a thrilling dash by automobile from the German border.

These figures were given officially to Universal Service by police headquarters.

While the city was quiet and orderly under the show of thousands of rifles and bayonets, there were sinister indications that the rioting might be renewed at any moment.

An Armed Camp.

This once gay capital of European royal splendor today resembled an armed camp. The whole police force of 5000, together with an equal number of troops, armed with rifles, machine guns, and even artillery and armored cars, patrolled the streets constantly. Police headquarters looked like a beseiged fortress because of the huge concentration of police reserves in the vicinity.

The socialist mayor Seitz has established a city-wide prohibition, with all wine shops tightly closed, as a means for maintaining order.

Within th ecity the government appeared in perfect control of the situation, and the police authorities insisted all danger of further

Arrests Follow Work By Under Cover Agents In Rapid City

By Universal Service.

RAPID CITY, S. D., July 17.—A flying squadron of revenue agents under the personal direction of E. L. Senn, state prohibition director, swooped down on this summer capital of the nation late last night and in the early hours of this morning, and when they rested from their labors, Rapid City and its environs were distinctly arid.

Eleven alleged purveyors of "Black Hills" corn were out under heavy bond in Rapid City today and a half dozen more awaiting trial at Deadwood, 60 miles away.

So far as could be ascertained, Senn and his men made a clean sweep of the "temporary capital" for a drink of any description was unpurchasable today in the vicinity of President Coolidge's summer home. Up to Saturday, green rye and colored corn liquor had been quite available.

Those arrested here included Mr. and Mrs. Amos Michael, Mr. and Mrs. Gustav Gloser, Harold Phillips, Harry Snelling, George Belknap, M. D. Daugherty, Nate Reynolds, Arlie Miser and "Slim" Wilson. Only a small quantity of liquor was seized as the agents made the raids from previous information.

Cackle of Hens Will Bring Jingle of Coins

Wichita Falls Has Great Future as Texas Egg Capital

By B. M. WHITEAKER
The Record News Correspondent.

ABOARD WICHITA FALLS SPECIAL ,OUT OF GALLUP, N. MEX., July 17.—Texas has greater possibilities for the development of the poultry industry than has California, and will in the next few years exceed that state in this industry, J. A. Kemp told The Record News representative today as the Wichita Falls special raced on its way toward the Pacific coast.

"Wichita Falls is the logical place for the beginning of this development, because of its many natural advantages, and its great irrigation system," said Mr. Kemp, who is sponsor for this tour of the California farming and poultry section.

This opinion is also borne out by M. Johnson of Bowie, owner of the world's largest poultry ranch. The following covers outstanding adventures to date on the special train:

New Mexico appears to have no plows, no farms, little grass, few cows, less sheep, no water, no trees and no shades.

G. C. McGown, who claims to be county agent of Wichita county, says that New Mexico needs but one county agent and an airplane, because farms are about as conspicuous here abouts as ears of corn in a West Texas corn field on a dry year.

O. K. Barnes, agricultural director of the Wichita Falls Chamber of Commerce, had the misfortune today of maliciously exchanging his grip for one belonging to a lady in the party, but will recover. J. M. Reynolds of Ennis discovered after sitting up all night in Amarillo in order to save berth fare, that his berth had been paid for when he purchased his ticket. He has been sleeping loudly all day.

E. C. Knox, a high tenor singer of Iowa Park and mayor, has been legally elected bouncer for the party. "Uncle Jimmie" Marlow

MARTIN AND HIRSCHI NAMED AS DIRECTORS

R. M. Waggoner Resigns Post as President Of Institution

CHANGES ANNOUNCED

New Bank Officials All Prominent in Wichita Business Affairs

Announcement was made Sunday by officials of the Wichita State Bank and Trust company of the resignation of R. M. Waggoner as president and director, and the election of W. B. Hamilton to succeed him.

N. H. Martin and John Hirschi have also been elected to the directorate of the bank, it was announced in the Sunday statement.

Mr. Waggoner's resignation, which became effective at its submission to directors at a meeting Saturday, was tendered in order that he might devote full time to the affairs of the American Refining company, in which company he holds a large interest. He had served as president of the Wichita State Bank and Trust company for the last three years.

The naming of W. B. Hamilton as president, and the addition of N. H. Martin and John Hirschi as directors, brings together in common association a group of Wichita Falls' most prominent and substantial business men.

Bank 18 Years Old.

In expressing regret at Mr. Waggoner's withdrawal, officials and stockholders of the bank were at the same time happy in the new associations formed, which gives the Wichita State Bank and Trust company one of the strongest directorates in the state.

The bank has served Wichita Falls and its growing needs for more than 18 years, and has showed a steady advancement in both resources and services given to its friends and customers.

W. B. Hamilton, who was immediately elected president and director with the acceptance of Mr. Waggoners resignation, has been a stockholder in the institution for a number of years. He is actively associated with the financial affairs of the city, and his choice as the head of the bank is expected to meet with instant approval.

Mr. Hamilton came to Wichita Falls less than a decade ago, devoting his first activities to oil development, which together with his associates, he later formed into one of the major industries of Northwest Texas—the Texhoma Oil and Refining company. The Texhoma company was sold to the Continental Oil company in February, 1926, for one of the largest purchase prices in the history of the Texas petroleum industry.

Developed Residence Area

Mr. Hamilton subsequently turned his attention to development of other interests in Wichita Falls, including Country Club Estates, said to be the finest residential sub-division in the south, and the Hamilton building, which has been declared one of the finest in the nation from a viewpoint of structural design, beauty of finish and perfection of detail. The building, 11 stories in height, is now being given two additional stories to house the Wichita club.

Indictment For Murder 49 Years Ago To Be Enforced By Texas Tribunal

AUSTIN, July 17. (AP)—A comrade of Sam Bass in the battle at Round Rock in 1878 when Bass was killed, is still living, and has been located in a nearby state, according to information received here by persons who searched out the faded landmarks of the historic gun fight at the Old Settlers' reunion at Round Rock, the Sunday American-Statesman says.

Only last week, the district judge of Williamson county refused to quash the 49-year-old indictment still hanging over the fugitive, the paper said it learned, continuing:

"It was understood the indictment charged Bass' associate in connection with the fatal shooting of deputy Sheriff Grimes, who was among those killed in the fight which took Sam Bass life.

"Grimes was a relative of Captain H. A. Highsmith, who took part in the fight with Bass' gang, and who days ago led engineers and a throng of the old settlers over every part of the battle ground.

"A state ranger recently located the remaining member of Bass' gang, living in another state. The man is now extremely old, and has been living in good repute among his neighbors for over a quarter of a century, it was said.

"It was pointed out that limitation does not run against indictments for murder."

Austrian Archduke Challenges Envoy to Duel

By Universal Service.

LOS ANGELES, July 17.—"Takloss!"

"Lakal!"

These two words, contained in an exchange of telegraphic communications between an ambassador and an archduke, today precipitated an international affair of honor.

One challenge to a duel has been passed—and it has been accepted.

The challenge was hurled by Archduke Leopold of Austria, now a visitor in Los Angeles. It was directed at, and received by Ambassador Count Lascio Szechenyi.

To understand this proposed settlement of an affront—which Archudke Leopold today insisted was hurled in his face—one must return to a period of two months ago.

Archduke Leopold, grand-nephew of Franz Joseph I, arrived in the United States two months ago with his secretary, Alfred Neuhardt. They journeyed to Washington, D. C., to Miami, to New Orleans and thence to Los Angeles.

"But his highness lost most of his money—how, I am not permitted to say," the secretary said today at the Californian hotel.

"Arriving in Los Angeles, his highness found himself financially embarrassed."

Archduke Leopold conveyed this information to Count Szechenyi, Austrian ambassodar at Washington. He expected a loan from friends in New York, to facilitate the return to Austria, and requested that the loan be forwarded to him through the Austrian legation at Washington.

Then came the affront—the insult that cast a blotch upon his family honor, according to Archduke Leopold. Count Szechenyi replied, on July 6th.:

"I received today your 'takloss' telegram. You must say to your friends in New York that they must not send money to you through the Hungarian legation."

In the word, 'takloss,' Archduke Leopold received the "insult" that only can be answered with swords or pistols, according to Alfred Neuhardt who is acting as the Archduke's second.

"'Takloss,'" Neuhardt said, "is the word of affront. The dictionary says it means 'without tact—indiscreet'—and that is a word unknown to the family of Hapsburgs since its birth."

In answer to the asserted insulting telegram, Archduke Leopold replied:

"I received today your offending telegram. It is very difficult for me to answer it because you were before the war only a 'Lakal' of my family. But I will say that the duel can be arranged and I slap in your face my fighting glove."

The word "Lakal" in the telegram from the archduke to the ambassador was the "insult" that brought forth acceptance of the

U. S. TO BRING MARINES HOME

Situation in China Eases Off Considerably

By Universal Service.

WASHINGTON, July 17.—With the Chinese crisis apparently subsided, this government has ordered the return of one regiment of American marines from Shanghai, it was learned today.

The marines will be brought back to American soil on a merchant ship, probably one of the dollar lines, because no naval transports are available, it was stated. After landing at Seattle or some other Pacific port, the regiment will be transported by rail to the marine base at San Diego.

This will be the first withdrawal of American armed forces from China since the sudden outbreak of anti-foreign demonstrations early this year seriously imperiled the lives of American citizens and caused this government to rush three regiments of marines for their protection.

Guns Protect Aliens.

The disturbances reached their peak at Nanking where one American was killed and the lives of over 100 others threatened by a mob which surrounded them in the Standard Oil concession. They were rescued only by the protecting guns of American and British destroyers which laid down a barrage to drive off the Chinese.

The administration's decision to withdraw one regiment from Shanghai was taken to indicate that conditions in south China, at least, are rapidly getting back to normal. The marine force at Tientsin in north China, however, will be retained there for the present because conditions are still unsettled, it was stated. A marine force will also be maintained at Shanghai for some time to come.

The proposed withdrawal of the marines was interpreted as a friendly gesture towards the Chinese people by the United States and gave color to reports that the administration is seriously considering extending diplomatic recognition to the nationalists.

Start Home Soon.

Officials stated today that the marines will be started back just as soon as an available ship can be secured, probably some time next week. An attempt will be made to embark the regiment on some merchant ship, returning with a small cargo, which will have ample room to accommodate the marines.

The government was forced to charter the President Grant of the Dollar lines in order to transport one regiment to China when the situation was acute.

Vienna Looks Like War City

outbreaks was past. No serious clashes have occurred within the city limits since 1 o'clock this morning, but minor and intermittent clashes were occurring in the suburbs continuously.

Calls for Help.

Even while the Universal Service correspondent was conversing with the police frantic calls for help came in from the suburbs from conservative factions who feared violence at the hands of the onmarching mobs.

Outside of the city the socialist defense league mobs apparently were more or less in control of the situation. They had stationed outposts on all of the roads leading to Vienna who searched all incoming automobiles for arms. It was necessary to get a pass from the socialist defense league, which is supposedly a private organization, before being permitted to enter the city.

Meanwhile the entire country was paralyzed by the general strike which appeared to be functioning 100 per cent. No work of any kind, except agricultural work, was going on. On the way to Vienna the Universal Service correspondent saw many farmers diligently working in their fields, gathering their crops while the weather held good.

Strikers Meet.

The strikers, especially the railroad workers and the members of the socialist defense league, distinguished by red arm-bands, were meeting in all the large towns and cities debating what measures they should take.

Work, on part-time basis, was scheduled to be resumed tonight. Indications were, however, that the railroads, telegraphs and telephones would be out of commission indefinitely.

The city plainly showed evidence of the three days of rioting. The ministry of justice building was merely a hollow ruin, which was still smoking. Other buildings sacked by the mobs included those of the newspapers Reichpost and the Vienne Neueste Nachrichten and two police stations.

Police Portest Fascists.

The three fascists, whose acquittal of charges of murdering three workers, were reported to have been taken into custody by the police to prevent the people from lynching them.

Although under the warmth of a bright sun everything in the city appeared calm, except for the ominous show of rifles and armed forces, Vienna appeared almost a city on a holiday. In fact, the quiet was disturbing, as it savored of the quiet before a storm.

Chancellor Seipel's national conservative government has steadfastly refused the socialists' demand that it resign. The socialists, who still are the leaders of the masses, appeared unwilling to take over the responsibility of the government.

The socialist leaders were trying hard to maintain order, and indorsed the government's order closing all drinking places. The socialist leaders warned their followers against starting new riots, and particularly cautioned them against listening to the exhortation of communist agitators.

Fear Civil War.

They openly entreated their followers not to precipitate a civil war, which they warned, would result only in a new levy on the lives of the people.

The question which is bothering both the socialists and the government leaders, however, is whether the socialist leaders will be able to maintain their control of the mobs.

PLANES WILL SPEED MAILS

Airplanes to Meet Liners Out at Sea

By Universal Service.

WASHINGTON, July 17.—Shore to ship airplane service out of New York to speed incoming and outgoing mails and also transport passengers will soon undergo a test, it was learned at the postoffice department today.

The department, in fact, is ready to undertake such an extension of its trans-Atlantic mail system just as soon as air transport concerns are prepared to submit bids for such service, Assistant Postmaster General Glover declared.

Under the department's plan giant multi-motored seaplanes capable of carrying a dozen or more passengers and heavy consignments of mail would meet incoming liners, or overtake outgonng ships 500 miles at sea.

By this method the time for crossing the Atlantic would be cut to less than four days, it was stated and with similar service on the other side of the Atlantic many more hours would be cut from the schedule.

Byrd has suggested that the larger trans-Atlantic liners could be equipped with catapults and launch their own planes when within striking distance of the coast, rushing passengers and mail to New York at distances ranging from 500 to 1000 miles depending upon flying weather.

The U. S. shipping board has interested itself in the propostion, it was learned, and Captain Hartley is expected to lay before it his recommendations as to the best workable plan by which such an auxiliary servic efor the government's crack liners could be inaugurated.

NOT ABLE TO EXTEND LIFE

Rejuvenation Theory Gets Jolt From Scientist

By Universal Service.

PARIS, July 17.—Dr. Max Thorek, the chief surgeon of the American hospital, Chicago, announced to Universal Service tonight that his experiments over a period of years had demonstrated that old people cannot be made young by glandular treatment, and he wants the world to know the truth.

He admits that certain vital organs may be stimulated by grafting glands from lower animals, but this has no tendency to increase the age limit.

Revitalized Humans

Said Dr. Thorek:

"Steinach and Voronoff agree with me that "revitalization" is a more accurate term. Both these eminent specialists have promised me never again to use the word "rejuvenation" in connection with this form of surgery, which made them famous.

"Women respond better than men to gland treatment, but this treatment cannot make an 80-year old woman a spring chicken. It cannot evgn make her fifty."

Dr. Thorek claims to have discovered a new treatment for infectious bone diseases that will eliminate the necessity for using the knife. He regards this as more important than any so-called rejuvenation process.

"As soon as my method becomes known," said Dr. Thorek," there will be fewer legless and armless people in the world. I have no claim to make where cancer is involved, but in practically all other examples of bone infection, amputation is made unnecessary.

To Reveal Discovery

"The details of this treatment will be disclosed by me for the benefit of humanity before a group of Italian surgeons I am to address. I will, at the same time, make known carefully prepared results of my extensive researches concerning the effects of glandular treatment. It is unethical to discuss the details before reading my paper at the convention arranged for that purpose."

Dr. Thorek will leave on Tuesday for Vienna, and proceed thence to Rome. The exact date of the Italian conference has not been determined, he said.

Austrian Duke Sends Challenge

challenge, according to Neuhardt.

"His highness meant that before the war the Count Szechenyi was only a menial servant. This was the affront his highness hurled at the Count Szechenyi,' Neuhardt explained.

Since the Hungarian legation has declined to handle any funds for the archduke, Leopold has forwarded a telegraphic request to Dictator Nicholas V. Horthy of Hungaria for funds to return to Europe.

The last telegram relative to the duel, the secretary said, was received from Count Szechenyi July 8. I tread:

"I say to you the same I said in my first telegram. I will fight this duel and I will wait for you in Europe, in Hungary. I leave New York today."

In the meantime, Archduke Leopold stated through his second, he is endeavoring to earn his return passage to Europe and to meet the count by working in motion pictures.

From Secretary Neuhardt it was learned that Archduke Leopold is playing a small part, as a teuton colonel, in a production.

The royal funds have sunk so low, the secretary admitted, that Archduke Leopold tonight was compelled to give up his hotel suite.

"But we still have an automobile and a camping outfit," the secretary said. "We shall live with out camping outfit in the wide, open spaces. I shall do the cooking."

Tarantula Is Replacing Rattlers On Pastures

By Universal Service.

SAN ANGELO, July 17.—The rattlesnake is losing out as the deadly ruler of the bad lands of the western section of Texas.

In fact, the rattlesnake is getting scarcer each year. That does not mean, though that West Texas is entirely rid of such things.

The tarantula, not near so deadly but equally as fearsome, apparently is taking the rattlesnake's place and seems to be increasing in numbers.

WEEKLY PAPER FOR NEW CITY

Gin Also Constructed At South Plains

PLAINVIEW, July 17.—A weekly newspaper has been started, one brick building is under construction, a gin has been completed, and five brick business houses will be started as soon as material is placed on the ground in the new town of South Plains in Floyd county, 30 miles northeast of Plainview where the new line of the Fort Worth and Denver South Plains railroad from Estelline to Plainview crosses the Floydada-Silverton highway.

The town is being promoted by A. B. Brown of Lockney, president of The First National bank, and J. S. Edwards, veteran town promoter of Slaton.

Three Weeks Old

The new town which was launched some three weeks ago, lies on one of the most thickly populated portions of Floyd county, and already several industries have purchased and will erect buildings including a lumber yard, and five grain elevators. The South Plains Gin company, George T. Merewether, owner, has already built its plant and will be ready for the cotton season this year.

One of the new brick buildings will house the bank, and another will possibly house the South Plains Sun, the newspaper that has already begun publication. The paper is owned by the Nunn-Warren Publishing company who own a string of newspapers on the Plains.

The streets of the new town are named for various parties connected with its promotion and for officials of the Fort Worth and Denver South Plains Railroad company. F. E. Clarity of Fort Worth, John A. Hulen of Houston, W. D. McKoy of Fort Worth, and W. S. Brooms of Plainview, all Denver officials, have streets named for them in South Plains.

On Caprock Edge

The new town will be the first Fort Worth and Denver station of the plains after the line ascends the caprock, and it will be 30 miles from Plainview, 17 from Silverton, 15 from Lockney, 23 from Quitaque, and 17 from Floydada.

Lots in the new town will be placed on the market at auction on July 22 and 23 and Co. W. A. Nash and son of Plainview with W. H. Seale of Floydada, and John McDonald of Lockney will have charge of the sale as auctioneers.

Crashing Through

MEXICAN aliens are crashing through the international boundary line. This is the story from the Lower Rio Grande cities. Federal labor agents deported 340 of the crashers in a single week. Now bootlegger smugglers of aliens are hot footing it out of the country.

Cotton picking time is here. It is said that 35,000 additional pickers will be necessary. Mexico is a labor reservoir. Mexicans are first class pickers. Picking begins in the Magic Valley and the pickers make their way northward to Corpus Christi, and then on to the counties of Central Texas. They close late in the fall in the Panhandle and the plains country.

Congressman John C. Box is going to shut them out. He is going to apply the quota provision to the Mexican and all South Americans as it is applied to natives of European and Asiatic countries. All this is scheduled to take place in the year 1928. Secretary of Labor James J. Davis is behind Box. He is for shutting out the Mexicans and the South Americans.

As for the South Americans, they never come to Texas. They are not cotton pickers. They are not shearers of sheep or goats. They do not do rough work on the railways. They do not clear virgin land by felling the timber. Should the Mexicans be shut out, the white laborer will be boss of the job and fix his own wage schedule.

There is a vast army of white tenant farmers, Mexican tenant farmers, black tenant farmers. They are deserting the rural regions. Gone is the man-power age. In evidence is electricity. Ever present is gasoline. Farming of the future will be farming that will be machine driven. This is the electric age. This is the gasoline age and the scientific farmer will be the farmer of the future. It is possible for a blind man to read the signs of the time.

Dividends For the Farmers

MCLENNAN county, with a cotton crop of 280,000 acres, promising 110,000 bales, which, together with the seed, should be worth $12,650,000, is preparing to climb back to the high plane of business activity from which the last two years she has been dethroned," remarks the Waco News Tribune.

Farmers and business men in McLennan and adjoining counties are said to be in a cheerful mood. They were hit hard in 1925 by the drouth. They were hit again in 1926 by the low price of cotton. This year conditions are favorable. There is an ever increasing demand for American cotton in the markets of the world. There is an ever increasing demand for cotton goods in the markets of the world. There is an ever increasing consumption of cotton by the textile mills of the old south states east of the Mississippi river.

Texas' farmers should enjoy a fair share of prosperity this year. First they did their own work in the ground breaking and planting line. They did their own work in the cotton chopping line. They did not employ outside labor as in other years. Man was made to work. If he doesn't work then his wallet is flattened and his home larder is bare.

Gypsum Production in Texas

GYPSUM produced in the United States in 1926 had a value of $46,871,219. Texas gypsum for the year had a value of $4,126,400. Only New York, Iowa and Michigan had greater production than Texas.

Judge me, O God, and plead my cause against an ungodly nation; O deliver me from the deceitful and unjust man.

For thou art the God of my strength: why dost thou cast me off? Why go I mourning because of the oppression of the enemy?

O send out thy light and thy truth; let them lead me; let them bring me unto thy holy hill, and to thy tabernacles.

Then will I go unto the altar of God, unto God my exceeding joy; yea, upon the harp will I praise thee, O God my God.

Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted within me? hope in God; for I shall yet praise him, who is the health of my countenance, and my God.—Psalm 43:1-5.

How Land Values Increase

DALLAS has a municipal air port known as Love field. It is a tract of more than 400 acres. It was a training school for flyers during the World war. It was purchased by the mayor and the commissioners of Dallas not long since, and the consideration was $2500 an acre.

William S. Taylor came to Texas from South Carolina in 1866. He had been a soldier in the army of the Confederacy. What is known as Love field was a wilderness at the time. This son of the Palmetto state who is yet in the land of the living purchased the tract and paid $2.50 an acre for the same.

He made a small cash payment and gave his note for the balance. His children, to whom he had given the property, sold it to the government during the World war at $350 and $400 an acre. Ten days ago the city of Dallas paid $2500 an acre, which shows how land values have jumped in the forward moving state of Texas.

In 1866 the ox-cart was the popular vehicle of transportation. First owner Taylor came on the back of a mule. Now there are airplanes everywhere in Texas, the ox-cart is kept for exhibit purposes and the mule and the plow are going into the discards. Gasoline propelled tractors are doing the work and the finish is not in sight.

The Day Book of a New Yorker

By BURTON RASCOE.

NEW YORK, July 17.—A new regulation in City Hall square requires the full time of three husky policemen to keep small boys from bathing in the fountain around the Civic Virtue. An order has gone forth from city hall forbidding the gamins to cool themselves off in the fountain.

It was found that one policeman could not cope with the situation. The youngsters would undress to their underwear in the shrubbery and climb into the fountain. While one policeman was chasing one boy, others would dart from the shrubbery into the water. They seemed to consider it a great joke on the policeman, and they liked nothing better than to give him a chase.

Now three policemen, with drawn clubs, are detailed to guard the fountain.

It seems that the order resulted from the complaint of some prudes that the youngsters weren't sufficiently covered by their underwear.

These new and popular brass rail sandwich shops are establishing a new form of unique public personage. This is the young man who stands in the window, carving the tempting display of roast meats therein displayed. People seemed to be fascinated by the man's dexterity. He, however, is a very haughty figure. His face continually wears an expression of boredom. He never glances at the absorbed spectators in front. Apparently his is the most important office in these places. He treats the waiters and the men who serve food and near beer over the bar as so many scullions. He is a new sort of petty czar, surpassing even the head soda-jerker in dignity and hauteur.

I have just heard indirectly from a woman who was in Paris the night Lindbergh arrived, a story that seems characteristic of the flier. When he arrived at Le Bourget field, a group of French aviators kept the crowd away from him by a ruse. They stood pointing and shouting toward exactly the opposite direction in which Lindbergh was being escorted. In this way he was permitted to get into a car that was to take him to the American embassy.

A tremendous crowd of people had gathered in the Place de la Concorde, and when the car bearing Lindbergh entered the square, Lindbergh said: "They certainly have crowds in Paris on Saturday nights, don't they?"

What, I wonder, has become of the old fashion of kissing people at the railroad station when they are going away on the train? I don't mean indiscriminate of promiscuous kissing, I mean people kissing relatives goodby. I observed the crowds around the gates to the Twentieth Century Limited, the Detroiter, the Wolverine and other fast passenger trains at the Grand Central, and I saw only one young couple kiss goodby. The other couples separating for the time seemed to take it very airily. It seems to me I remember a time when a wife seeing her husband away on a trip or a young girl at the station bidding Godspeed to her sweetheart, hugged and kissed him and broke down and cried after the train pulled out.

He could hardly believe his eyes. It was Natlee!

WHAT HAS HAPPENED

Phillip Wynne Tracy has had a childish engagement with Natlee Jones. Becoming interested in Lyra Hilliard happened—he finds himself falling in love with her. Natlee overhearing him making love to Lyra, breaks her engagement.

America enters the World war, and Phil is the first to enlist. Before leaving for France he meets Natlee again and, they plan to be married. The immediate departure of the troops, however, prevents this. The regiment is ordered to France and Phil is wounded and decorated for bravery.

After the armistice, Phil comes face to face with his mother, who has come to France to hunt him. Mrs. Tracy learns with dismay that Phil intends to marry Pat, a rich French divorcee. Phil compromises with his mother; if she will refuse Major Aukland's proposal of marriage, he will give up Pat for two years. They return to America.

Mrs. Tracy invites Natlee to their home. Natlee seems cold and flippant. Phil is then convinced that she is interested in Jerry Kenyon, her father's young partner in business.

Phil receives a letter from Pat, telling him that she is going to marry a wealthy Frenchman. Sick at heart, Phil's thoughts turn to Lyra Hilliard. They talk over the old days together, and Lyra, fearing for Phillip's future if their unhallowed love continues, sends him from her with a lie. She pretends devotion to her dissipated husband, and after Phil's departure she falls sobbing to the floor.

Here the story further unfolds.

CHAPTER LVIII.

Another Chance

Lyra Hilliard never knew how long she lay upon that cold hearthstone, her head bruised against its brass fender. Again and again at longer intervals her grieving form was racked with sobs.

Serenely the moon peeped through the window and compassionately covered the woman lying there with a merciful, lustrous sheen.

Finally as Lyra raised her tear-stained, swollen eyes, a pitying cloud veiled the luminous face. It was not seemly to look upon such abject despair.

Outside, a blue roadster was burning up the miles, and a hare-head boy, with nervous impatience, had opened the throttle wide, and yet at eighty miles an hour the car seemed crawling.

He had learned at last that there was—there had never been—any other girl than Natlee, and he was terrified with the fear that he had learned it too late.

Again and again he thanked his stars that he had had the chance encounter with Jerome Kenyon and "spoiled his beauty," as—the automobile salesman had described it.

If Jerry was as conceited as he thought—he would not call upon Natlee until he had had time to have a dentist repair the loss of his two teeth.

Upon what a little thing did the happiness of a man's lifetime rest. He had allowed Natlee to be disappointed in him, when she first saw him, and because she did not look and act just as he had thought she was going to, he had been peeved and impossible. She had met him more than half way.

"Natlee, I'm coming, I'm coming. Wait for me." He kept trying to project his thoughts through the miles of space that was fast decreasing between them.

"Natlee, don't let me go out of your life. I'm coming! I'm coming, and if I am fortunate enough to find you, I will never let you go away from me again."

He seemed to me listening with his soul for some expression from her, but he heard nothing except the purring of the engine.

He felt that he had only one chance of happiness — had never had but one chance. He marveled that fate had thrust that chance to him again and again, and he had brushed it aside.

He could hardly make it seem possible that Natlee would let him come back to her again. Whenever that though slipped into his brain, he would jam on the gas, and although the car responded immediately he would have sworn it was only creeping had not the speedometer before him told him otherwise.

His thoughts raced back all over his life, and every hour spelled Natlee. Because she had been so much a part of himself he had never taken her into consideration.

Her picture came to him as he danced with her that night at Arrowhead Inn. How innocent had been their happiness that night!

Again, what was the use of saying that little word "if,"—there was no "if," and all the last year had been a restless hunting for something—something—he knew not what, until tonight.

His motor was steaming, and he stopped at a little oil station to have it refilled. He begrudged every minute that the sedate attendant took to fill up his car with water, gasoline and oil.

On again, almost flying over the smooth roads! He had only thirty miles to go. It was that dark hour just before dawn.

He was glad that Natlee was living in her own house, for he knew that her father would never have allowed him to see her so early in the morning.

His nerves were in a state of panic. What if she also would refuse to see him? If she did, he would camp in front of her house until she decided to come out to him.

How beautiful she was with that nimbus of gold about her head! He had never known her yellow hair was curly.

It was no wonder she told him to leave her when he went down to the car that other morning and found her crying. She had come to see him; she had done all she could to tell him that she was ready to take up things where they left off—and he failing her. He had always failed her!

He found himself praying for another chance. "I will never fail her again," he promised.

The first faint dawning was now lighting the sky down on the eastern horizon. Thank God! he was entering the city. He saw an officer plodding along, and slowed down. At last, as he drove up to the door of the house, the sun came up, coloring the whole heavens with brilliant red and gold. Was it a good omen?

Frantically he sent peal after peal through the house. It seemed an interminable time before a maid threw open the door.

"Will you tell Miss Jones that Mr. Tracy is here? Please say that he would not have ventured to call her out of bed, but it is very important; almost a case of life and death."

The girl looked at him stupidly. She seemed hardly awake.

"Miss Jones is not home, sir."

Phillip Tracy put out a hand to the top of a wooden settle that stood near him. The long hours at the wheel, the loss of sleep and the nervous tension had taken his strength. He felt as though he were falling.

"Can you tell me where she is? If she is not out of town, I will try to see her as soon as possible."

"Miss Jones went over to her father's yesterday and late last night she telephoned that she was staying there all night."

"Thank you, I will try and get her there," said Phil as he walked somewhat unevenly out of the door.

"You've lost her. You've lost her!" The words were pounding upon his brain. He got into the car and started, he had no idea where, until he found himself headed toward Mr. Jones' house. He had no clear idea that he was driving the car. It was still early. There was no one on the streets except here and there a few men and women on foot or in cars hurrying to some morning work.

He drove up the street. The old elm—the tree where he used to meet Natlee in the long ago—loomed up at the other end of the block. He started so suddenly that the car swerved almost into the curb. He quickly righted it and went on slowly.

Yes, it was true! There was a woman standing by the old elm tree, her arms about it—her cheek against its rough bark.

He could hardly believe his eyes. It was Natlee!

(To Be Continued)

Phil is crazy with anxiety that he has lost Natlee forever; but he finds here at their old trysting place. What she has to say to him, the final chapter tells.

MODISH MITZI — "Dad's Vacation?" — By JAY V. JAY

Dad's preparing for a vacation. Mitzi is mussing up his flies. "They'll chatch in your chiffon dress, Mitzi," Dad warns her knowing that clothes present a good argument any time. Mitzi is wearing a new printed chiffon dress with a bertha-like collar. It has a flared skirt tucked up at the hip to give a snug hip line. Polly wears a silk dress with a red flannel jacket. "You know, I'd adore to learn how to fish," hints Polly. Dad doesn't encourage Polly. After all, this is to be his vacation. "Oh, you wouldn't like it, Polly," says Dad firmly. "Fine fish, aren't they," says

Dad as he looks at last year's pictures. The lake is immense and the mountains . . ." Dad loses himself in the wonders of the wilds. Mitzi in a very simple silk dress with slashed neckline wonders if it wouldn't be fun to rough it for a while.

"I hate to think, Dad," says Mitzi, "of your taking your vacation alone. So Polly and I have decided to go with you." It's a blow. But what can Dad say to his thoughtful daughter when she looks so charming in this frock with the kerchief scarf and trimmed with scallops and stitching. What can he say but "Yes, indeed, do," in a tone about five shades more enthusiastic than he feels.

WIFE NOT SO POORLY OFF

Husband's $10,000 Salary Should Suffice

The Ten-Thousand-a-Year Man Whose Wife Reproaches Him for Not Making More Money; How Can a Young Man Who Wants to Keep His Job Escape the Boss' Wife Who Is in Love With Him?—Breaking an Engagement.

Dear Miss Dix—Is my wife justified in scolding me incessantly for being "lazy and unsuccessful"? I hold down a $10,000-a-year job, which gives her every comfort, a good house, a good car, a maid and a laundress; but many of the people we go with have bigger incomes and more luxuries. But what my wife chiefly objects to is that I don't like to do chores around the house and when I come home I like to loaf and play with the children and read and let the handy man cut the grass and put up the screens and paint the bathtub. My wife says that this is "yellow" and that as she has to darn the stockings at night, I should be at some job instead of reading.

I need a smile and a friendly pat when I start out in the morning. I get the opposite, and I am losing my morale. My wife says a lazy man, a shirker, doesn't DESERVE an amiable wife. What do you make of this?

SOCRATES.

Answer: Well, I should say that your wife was in a fair way of losing a perfectly good husband and a mighty comfortable meal ticket, for, if you are not a lineal descendant of Job—and the breed seems to have about run out in these days—you won't stand being perpetually nagged at for a sin that you have not committed.

Judged by every standard of success and achievement, the man who has worked his way up to a $10,000 salary has proved his mettle and made good. The wife should be proud of him and give him the glad hand instead of reproaching him for not making more money.

Also, you have been liberal with your family and certainly deserve more than to be called a lazy loafer by the wife you support in luxury. It is hard lines on a man to toil all day to support his family and then to get a kick instead of a caress, and I don't wonder that you feel sore about it.

As for a man doing odd jobs around the house after he comes home in the evening, that's up to the man himself and not a thing his wife has a right to expect of him unless they are too poor to hire any one else to do it.

There are men who are handy with tools and who like to putter around and put up shelves and hang pictures. There are men who have a passion for gardening and who delight in raising flowers and vegetables and cutting the lawn. Fine for them and convenient for the wife. They get relaxation following their hobbies.

But there are other men, like yourself, who loathe doing these household tasks and who want to relax entirely when they get home and do no work of any kind whatever. They have a right to their idleness. They have earned it by their concentration on their work at the office and they will be better able to grapple with their business problems the next day if they can go back utterly refreshed in body and mind.

It's curious that it is only the occasional woman who ever seems to realize that her husband's health and his mental attitude are just as much a part of his working capital as his money is and that it is just as important to conserve one as it is the other. The average woman can see how she must save up the dollars to put into investments, but she does not see that she must save up her husband's strength and energy, and that if he spends these on heating the rugs or washing the dishes or getting up in the night with the children, that he has just that much less ability and pep to put into his work the next day.

If women only knew that it was actual money in their pockets to keep their husbands happy and contented and to send them away from home feeling that their wives at least believed them to be Napoleons of finance, capable of any achievement, it would make many a wife hold her nagging tongue and it would turn many a poor, discouraged man from a failure into a success.

Perhaps if you make your wife realize that she is killing the goose that lays the golden egg by shaking your faith in yourself, she will cease accusing you of being a shirker.

And you might also tell her that any woman who has servants to help her with her housework is an awfully poor manager if she has to work at night.

DOROTHY DIX.

Dear Dorothy Dix—I have a job that I like very much and I would feel very downhearted if I had to give it up. Also I have a mother and two younger brothers to support and I cannot afford to be out of work. And the gentleman that I work for is a great man and I think the world of him. But here is the trouble:

He has a beautiful wife and two children, and the wife has fallen in love with me. I have tried to discourage her, and told her that her husband would find out sooner or later about this little love affair. She realizes what the outcome would be, but can't seem to keep away from me. What can I do? How can I avoid her? Will I have to give up my job?

DISCOURAGED.

Answer: Accept my sympathy. I know of no predicament worse than that of a youth who is pursued by a married woman. There is no possible safety for him except in flight, and, as in your case, so often he has no place to which to flee.

It would seem that when a married woman falls in love with a boy that a sort of madness possesses her and she takes leave of every particle of common sense she ever had. She cannot hide her infatuation and it soon becomes known to all her little world.

She knows that she will not only bring scandal upon herself but ruin upon the young man. She knows that the end of is bound to be disgrace for herself and her children and a broken-up home, yet nothing stops her.

So you have no hope of mercy from the woman. She will not be stayed by the thought of wrecking your life or by the necessities of your poor mother and little brothers, and when you try to break away she will flatter you and cajole you and weep upon your breast and use all the armory of feminine weapons from which you are too young to know how to defend yourself. So your situation is really a more desperate one than you apprehend.

But the only thing you can do is, as I said, to flee. Give up your job, because you will lose it anyway when her husband finds out about the affair. So go now while the going is good and when you can leave yourself instead of being kicked out and when you can go with your employer's good opinion. You will find it easier to get a situation now, for business men are not keen on hiring clerks who have had affairs with their former bosses' wives.

DOROTHY DIX.

Dear Miss Dix—I am a woman 27. Have been engaged to a man who has tired of me and shows that he wishes to break the engagement. Before meeting this man I belonged to a young people's association in a church and had many friends, but I gave them all up for him. Now I would like to go back among them again, but I am afraid they will laugh at me. Should I go back to them or join some other church where nobody knows anything about me?

MAE.

Answer: Break the engagement with the man before he has time to do so. Beat him to it. Then go back to your old friends and just say that you found the engagement to be a mistake. Only that and nothing more. Never tell them any details, and if the curious ask questions just say that it is a subject you don't care to talk about.

Nobody will ridicule you, and in a week everybody will have forgotten all about it. Other people are not half as much interested in our affairs as we think they are.

DOROTHY DIX.

ICE CREAM IS A REAL FOOD

It is well to understand that the food value of ice cream is very high, and it should at all times be considered a real food and not a delicacy. Most ice cream manufacturers use a certain standard formula which they consider produces the best grade of ice cream. There is no secret about the formulas or methods of making ice cream, and most of them contain the following ingredients:

10 per cent milk fat
14 to 15 per cent cane sugar
10 to 11 per cent milk solids
Less than 1 per cent of edible gelatin.

It will be seen that ice cream contains more than twice as much milk fat as the best grade of certified milk. This makes ice cream very rich in vitamin "A," which is so necessary to the proper growth of children. The large amount of milk solids contain an excellent kind of protein and a large amount o filme and other organic minerals. Ice cream is especially rich in calcium, containing from 30 to 50 per cent more than does milk. A half pint of ice cream contains as much lime as:

1-2 pound of butter, or
4 pounds of meat, or
3 1-2 pounds of potatoes.

Most foods are deficient in calcium, but ice cream furnishes a very large supply of this valuable mineral which is essential to bone and cell structure.

Manufacturers are often criticized for using gelatin in ice cream, but I would suggest that the laws be changed to admit of the use of even more gelatin, as this is an excellent food product which makes the ice cream still more palatable and nutritious.

When ice cream is used with a regular meal, it is wise to serve only small portions because of its high food value; but if ice cream is made the principal part of the meal, I suggest that you try some summer lunches with ice cream as the principal part of the meal, using with it any one kind of the acid fruits, such as cherries, peaches, oranges or berries; or, in place of the fruit, use whatever is desired of cooked and raw non-starchy vegetables. With this meal you should leave out meat, potatoes, bread, and all other heavy foods, as they are not needed with such a highly nutritious food as ice cream.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

QUESTION: M. H. R. writes: "Will you kindly tell me what is the cause of pains in the tips of my fingers and numbness in my arms? Also, I have white spots on my hands."

ANSWER: If you do not also have the same trouble in your legs, the numbness in your arms may be caused by an impingement of the nerves issuing from the spine which carry the nerve impulses to your arms. An osteopath or chiropractor can tell you if this is causing the trouble.

QUESTION: F. E. R. writes: "I work in an office from 8 a. m. until 5 p. m. Would it be advisable for me to continue work while taking a two weeks' orange fast?"

ANSWER: Plenty of people have been able to fast while doing their work and I feel sure you will be able to do so.

QUESTION: J. T. W. writes: "Will you kindly explain in your health talk what locomotor ataxia is? It is anythink like shaking palsy? Is there any cure for it?"

ANSWER: Locomotor ataxia is a disorder of the nerves which affects principally the legs. Persons so affected must walk with a characteristic knee-jerk, where the knees are snapped straight out at every step. They cannot walk with the eyes closed, and sometimes cannot even stand still in the dark without falling. If taken in time, it is possible to arrest this disorder, and cures have been effected through certain dietetic and physiotherapy treatments.

NOT SO GOOD

You might say that Harlem Joe certainly knows how to bear down effectively on the Bears. Also, that Mitze's men are bears for punishment.

And if you would reason along those lines: It is quite natural Mr. Williams should pitch Fussell, the lefthander, today, it being "Ladies' Day" and the Ladies the world over credited with being great lefthanded thinkers.

BUT IT DOESN'T STAND

While on the subject, says Harry Ables, "The San Antonio club will win or lose the Texas league pennant just as it stands." And that's another load off your mind.

WELL, KNOCK IT OFF

Zero in sports: Those numerous patriotic bozos who interrupt perspiring sports ed at his busiest moments with teelephonic requests for "All today's baseball scores." "How'd the Texas league come out today?" "Gimme the results of the National and American league," etc., etc., etc. You'd think a guy didn't have enough trouble doing his regular duty without being a radio announcer for a bunch of bloakes who don't even care whether or not HE eats regularly.

Habits of great men: R. O. Harvey, wincing as if hurt every time some guy kicks up the turf or tears out a chunk of the Bermuda at Spudder park. Mr. Harvey is a stockholder in the club, and grass, like everything else, costs money, they say.

AND THIS IS NO HOKUM

The unusual in sports (or is it): The guy who requested a bootlegging concession on the Spudders' Dixie series train, offering 20 per cent split with the club, and the guy who propositioned for the crap game concession.

* * *

As result of these requests, Cop Commish Roy Carter plans to play safe by patrolling very scrupulously the train both going and coming, at least one coach ahead of the Rev. Gus Barnes and a Doc Paul H. Packard.

* * *

another unusual in sports; The Spudders gained a game on Santone yesterday and a half game on every other team in the league, the other six splitting double headers while we were licking the Grizzlies.

"Ladies' Day" Today, Gents

Eminent Mr. Fussell Picked To Do Throwing

It's "Ladies' Day" today, Gents, so if the wife or sweetheart wishes to see the Champion Spudders play, don't try to keep 'em from it, because it won't cost you a nickel. Yessir, all the fem fans crash the gate this afternoon free.

Game starts at 4 o'clock. The Santone Bears are still with us. That's nice, and the great Fred Fussell has been nominated to do the Spudder hurling. With the eminent southpaw on the knob, everybody's due for a real baseballic treat.

It begins to look like nobody can beat us. Yesterday's win was our eighth out of nine games played since we came home Saturday a week ago. It put us nine games ahead of Houston in second place, because the Buffs lost a half game on us when they split a double header with the Cats Sunday. Waco split, so the third-placers didn't do much to undermine us either, also slopping a half game further behind.

TIGERS 5, A'S 4

DETROIT, July 17. (AP)—McManus' triple and Dykes' fumble in the ninth inning gave Detroit a 5-to-4 victory over the Athletics in the second game of the series here today. With McManus on third and one out, Rube Walberg walked Woodall purposely. Diveros was sent to bat for Holloway. He swung at the first two balls pitched and missed. Then he caught the Philadelphia defense off guard by bunting with two strikes on him. Dykes raced in to field the ball and when he fumbled McManus scored the winning run.

Man Bitten By Bear In City's Zoo Sues

FORT WORTH, July 17.(AP)—The second court of civil appeals held today that Jack Wiggins, 8, has the right to sue the city of Fort Worth for $25,000 damages in connection with injuries which he sustained in May, 1925, when he was severely clawed and bitten by a bear at a city park here.

Wichita Falls Routs Bob Couchman and Wins, 8-1

Joe Kiefer Chunks Immaculate Brand of Ball—Santone's Run Unearned—Benton Leads Hitters

By BLONDY CROSS

Add unusual in sports: The game that passes in which your Spudders clout not a home run!

Such was the situation Sunday at the orchard when the Dixie series bound Wichita Falls bludgeoners pummeled the wily Robert Couchman, aged dipsy-dew hurler, from the knob, combed 16 safe hits, not a one of which was stronger than the two-base variety, and set back the San Antonio Bears in their second straight, 8 to 1.

If it was base knocks you wanted, base knocks you got as the speeding Spudders ripped and slapped at Couchman for five runs in the fifth, recessed in the sixth and then came back to spank over three more in the eighth.

If it was sharp, scrupulously careful pitching you came out to see, you saw it with the adroit Harlem Joe Kiefer, side-winding and overhanding the boys assiduously, short, pudgy arms working in a windmill style that has licked many a fiercer Don Quixote than the Bruins characterized yesterday as they launched futile attacks against the whirring Gothamite.

Bear Run Unearned

That one Bear tally came in the second and it was not earned. Olle, who scored the run, was put on first safely when Rabbit heaved one into the dirt, too dusty for LaFayette to handle. Thereafter, Kiefer controlled the situation with ease. Ten base blows did the Bear outfit manipulate, but they were spread. Three bingles were plunged in the eighth after all was lost for the Mitzemen, but careful (nothing spectacular) work on the infield and a strike-out becalmed this miniature squall.

Rabbit Tops Hitters

Dabbing a brace of straight singles and out-hoofing a couple of bunts, Stan Benton, the notorious shortstop, snagged the mitting garland, making it four for four. Mr. Benton drove in two tallies.

Turgeon and Lamb divided second honors with Philbin of the Bears, each clicking thrice. One of Turge's three was a double. Philbin was safe once on an out when the ball took a happy hop and hit an infielder in the neck. Lamb's three clouts were safe and sane drives to virgin territory, all in the air.

One Large Round

LaFayette started the advance in the fifth after there was one out and the Spudders had looked surlily for three frames at a 1-0 Bear advantage. George drew a walk. Then Turgeon rattled the welkin with a full-sized two-base slam to left. Froggums drew up at third. Robert walked Griffin without giving him a chance, a purpose pass and with Lamb next at bat. But Lambie didn't get mad at the insult. If he had, he'd have hit a double, or a three-bagger or a homer. As it was, Lambie just smirked then leaned into a bent ball and straightened her out for a one-base ride. The blow sent LaFayette and Turgeon across the plate and put Griffin on third. Jenkins forced Lamb at second, Griffin scoring. Benton beat a bunt and then got his head between his knees and galloped home behind Jenkins when Swenson followed with a two-cushioned rift to left. Tobin histed out to center. Those were five runs in that round on four hits, two walks and no errors.

Jenkins Doubles

Lamb opened with a single in the seventh and paddled to third when Jenkins plunked the upper right field tier with a two-bagger. Benton singled to center and the other two gentlemen cleared out and went home. Rabbit, you can believe it or not, made the circuit on wild pitches, Williams, relief hurler, uncorking three before he could get three out.

CONOCOS NIP TEXAS ELECTRICS IN HOT TWILIGHT MELEE, 5 TO 3

The Continental Oilers slipped up on the Texas Electric league leaders Sunday afternoon and defeated them, 5 to 3, behind the great pitching of Dickey. This threw the Conocos and the Panhandle Longhorns into a dead lock for the league leadership and threw the Texas Electrics a half game back.

Everette Blue led the battaing attack and was the hitting star of the game. Blue poled out three clean bingles out of his team's five hits off Dickey.

Smoke Luphor let up only seven hits and fanned seven men. With Ernie Carrington leading the attack for the winners. Nine errors back of Luphor played havoc with the fireball pitcher.

Cox hit a triple while both Carrington and Taylor hit two base blows.

Did You Know That—

SLEEP OF THE INNOCENT

Two of San Antonio's ball players, Phipps and Brown, forgot there was to be a ball game Sunday until awakened from heavy slumber at the hotel by a bell hop. Manager Mitze shortly before game time discovered the two noble athletes hadn't shown up for the preliminaries at the park, so instituted a frantic last-minute search. They were located deep in the feathers doing their sleeping in the day time.

The umpires graciously held up the game until arrival of the two delinquents, the melee starting seven minutes late Western Union time and 11 minutes behind schedule by the dugout clock.

NO KIDDING

There are many and various little items that can effect a sharpshooter's aim. For instance, during the first frame Umphs Daly stood directly behind the pitcher, Bob Couchman, while the Bear chunker was throwing to Pug Griffin. The Spud slugger, batting gaze be-dazzled by the noble arbiter's white Sunday pants, stepped out of his box and refused to swing until Daly shifted.

There's nothing more satisfactory than knowing what you want to do and then doing. With two out and a runner on second in the fourth, Kiefer purposely walked Wirts in order to get at Couchman. Then Harlem Joe whiffed Ole Bob cold, the veteran succumbing to a called third strike.

TWO SUCH FEET

Boasting a standard size foot, if there are such, has its advantages. Something went wrong with Leslie's shoe as he rounded first in the fourth. He imemdiately sat himself down on second base and refused to budge until given relief. That was easy. Newman trotted to the rescue and evidently sporting a hoof with the same dimensions of Leslie's pedal, pulled a shoe off, stuck it on the Bear first sacker's lower paw and let it go at that. Perfect fit and the game was saved.

PETE IN A PINCH

Pete Turgeon's ability as the league's premier pop fly shagger was tested rather sharply at one stage of the contest by Philbin who popped a Texas leaguer to short right. The poke looked like a sure safety, but Pete pranced out into the greensward, back to the ball and seemingly without giving it a second glance reached up and clutched the sphere while at a dead lope toward the starboard barrier.

THAT'S NICE

Mr. Couchman is a thoughtful old bird. You know, has feeling for others. Simultaneously with hauling off in the seventh and batting one back at the box with the ferocity that cripples, he excitedly warned, "Look out, Joe!" Joe looked out to the extent he barely jerked a leg out of the way, fended with a gloved hand, recovered and tossed to LaFayette at first 20 feet ahead of Ole Bob steam-rollering up the base path.

WILD WILLIE.

Williams, Santone's relieving hurler in the seventh, pulled one for the book. He came to the rescue with Benton on first, uncorked a wild pitch and sent Rabbit to third, then jungle heaved again and put him on third. Then Tobin and Rabbit decided to put on the squeeze. The pitch selected was wild, also, but Tobin swung at it as per instructions. So wild was it he missed, but Rabbit scored.

YES, NO.

It all depends on the mood of the umpire, whether he had a hard evening the night before and the like. We've seen many an athlete waved out of the park by an agitated arbiter for not half so lusty lectures as Manager Mitze eloquently declaimed at Harry Kane when the arbiter called a close one on Wirts at the plate and leveled down on a couple of called third strikes.

SPEED BOYS.

It looked for awhile like our bunters were going to run Couchman and Olle clear out of the lot. Benton put a brace of bunts down the third base line and beat them with yards to spare. Turgeon caught everybody flat-footed once with a 1000—per cent effective bunt. Got Harlem Joe prodded up and he tried to lay one down at the start of the sixth, if you can imagine short-legged, keg-shaped Joe outfooting a bunt. But he fouled to Wirts who enacted a wondrous one-hand catch.

Najo beat out a bunt for Santone in the eighth.

Mr. LaFayette explained after the game, "Yeah, those guys watched me the day before and learned how."

EIGHT BOOKED IN BEER RAID

Constable's Deputies Jail Man After Haul

A white man was lodged in the county jail late Sunday afternoon on a charge of illegal possession of intoxicating liquor following a raid on his place on the Iowa Park road, staged by Deputy Constables John W. Say and T. R. Slusher under the direction of Constable Frank Morgan. The report made on the raid stated that a quantity of beer was seized and three women and five men were involved. The men, outside of McBride, were charged as vags and gave fictitious names when booked. One additional charge of possession will be made later.

The raid Sunday was one of a number made by the constable force during the past three weeks. Their reports show a total of approximately 3000 bottles of beer destroyed and two dozen raids made in the period.

The constable was also credited with the capture of a still and two liquor manufacturers recently. Saturday night's activity by deputy constables netted 10 arrests for drunkenness.

WHEN LOVE DOUBTS

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

Under-Current of Distrust Will Ruin Marriage

By Beatrice Fairfax

An Authority on the Problems of Love and Marriage.

IS IT possible to really love and yet not trust a man?

Is there any possibility of a marriage proving happy when there is an under-current of distrust on either side?

What is best to do when the man you have promised to marry falls you by falling away from his own high standards?

These questions, suggested by the following letter, face many a girl, who is torn between love and doubts.

"Dear Miss Fairfax:

"A young man has been going with me for some time—in fact, we expect to marry. I have known him nearly ten years.

"He is of a splendid family and is a fine young man. He holds a good position and could go with almost any girl in town.

"I have never seen him with a girl other than myself. And he says I am the only one he ever loved or ever told he loved. I work nights. His work is during the day, which means we can't be together as often as we would like.

"About a year ago, he went to a wild party with a man he knows and two girls. He had an affair with one of these girls they picked up. A month later, he confessed this to me, said the reason he acted as he did was that he got drunk, and asked me to forgive him, saying he would never do it again. I overlooked that affair, blaming it on the drink.

"But about three months ago, the same thing happened again. He would not come near me. I wrote and asked him what was wrong. He would not answer. He looked terrible—everyone spoke of it.

"When he did come to see me, I could tell from the way he acted that he was keeping something from me. He did not tell me until I worried myself sick. He explained then that he had been beside himself—that he rode and rode past the house. He said he stayed away because he had been off on another wild party and could not hurt me by telling me.

"He loves me, I know, and I love him. I told him not to worry any more—that we would forget it. Now he is happy—his old self again. I try to be the same when I am with him. But some nights when I am working, I find myself wondering about him. The perfect faith I had in him is gone. He doesn't know this. He thinks I still trust him.

"What shall I do? If I show him I don't trust him, he will not care what he does. He thinks I am so good. He is not bad. You know there are very few young men who would hang around every night—even Sundays—with only another young man, for the sake of a girl. And that is just what he does.

"I do not want to break with him, yet I feel I could stand even that, better than the doubt I feel now. I know there can be no happiness for us without faith and trust. He is happy, for he thinks I have forgiven and trust him. Won't you please let me hear from you? I thank you.

"ALICE."

SHE ACCEPTS HIS PROPOSAL.

HE TELLS HER OF HIS "FLINGS."

SHE FORGIVES AND MARRIES HIM.

You have known your fiance nearly ten years, Alice. Under the most trying circumstances, without your companionship for his leisure he has averaged 100 per cent, except for two wild, perhaps disgraceful, parties.

He loves you, and you love him. On the occasions when he did drink and misbehave, he was frank enough to tell you the truth and promised to do better.

He needs your faith and trust, even as he needs your love. Rise above your foolish doubts and fears and give him whole-hearted affection. Unless you can and will do this, you do not love him, and will be wise in breaking the engagement.

You are not perfect yourself; none of us are. I would not for one moment advise you to marry a man incapable of loyalty and self-control. But, do you not wrong any man—any human being—by demanding 100 per cent perfection and withholding trust in case there is the least deviation from perfection?

Not the one or two faults he may have been guilty of in the past, but his general character and mental and physical health today are what count for your happiness and his.

Your fiance is trying with all his heart to do what is right—for your sake and his own. Be tolerant—trustingly, good-humoredly tolerant. Enjoy serenely this beautiful gift of mutual love. Banish doubts and fears. If you do not do so, they will kill your love and your happiness.

Can you not find work that will leave your evenings free, so that you and he can enjoy the companionship that means so much to both of you? Or, better still, plan to marry as soon as you can, and proceed to make yourselves and the world better and happier by founding a real home.

Let the Children Settle Their Own Quarrels

By L. Lamar Matthews

ELLIE BAKER and Sicily Brown were playing paper dolls. They had been playing together all morning at Ellie's house and that was long enough for any two children to be together. But after lunch Sicily gathered up her paper dolls and went over to return the visit. Naturally the zest had gone out of the game by mid-afternoon and the children were beginning to feel cross. So, before either one knew what it was all about they were in the midst of an argument. Ellie said something impolite and Sicily retaliated by tearing up one of her friend's dolls. Then Ellie flew into a rage.

L. LAMAR MATTHEWS

"I wish you would go home, Sicily Brown," she cried, stamping her bare foot. "I hate you and I hate your brother and I hate your mother and I hate your father. You are nothing but poor white trash anyhow."

So Sicily went home and told her mother what that bad little Ellie had said.

"Poor white trash!" exclaimed Mrs. Brown. "That child did not make that up. She evidently heard her mother or father say that about us. I'm perfectly furious."

Now as a matter of fact, Ellie had not made up that remark about "poor white trash," but she had heard a nurse in the park use the expression and she liked the sound of the phrase. She had practised saying it over to herself; and then she had this opportunity to use it on somebody.

But Mrs. Brown cherished the grudge against Mrs. Baker and at the first opportunity she passed her with a cool nod. And that was foolish. Sensible parents know that children are likely to say and do many things that are unreasonable and absurd, and they make allowances for other people's children as well as their own.

Ellie and Sicily had entirely forgotten their little quarrel and were quite ready to resume their play together next day. But when Ellie presented herself at Sicily's door she was not admitted. After that each child found a different playmate and their happy days together were ended.

Grown-ups should leave children's quarrels alone. Little folks can adjust their own differences if their elders do not interfere.

Since time was foolish mothers have been taking up the quarrels of their children. In the neighborhoods where the boys are given to fistfights there is always one mother who will rush out and berate her son's opponent. The usual result of such interference is that the boy becomes one of those poor little fellows who whine "They are always picking on me!"

Nothing makes a child more unpopular than having his mother assume the role of champion and protector. It simply invites persecution from other children.

Of course, no good mother likes the idea of her child struggling against adversaries, but since this is a world that often thrusts unpleasantness upon youngsters it is better to let them fight their own battles and settle their own disputes.

Words that homefolks say often add fuel to the flame of a child's wrath. It is much better to minimize the difficulties between children.

A little wort of affection at home, an unexpected treat, a new interest to absorb his attention will often ease the hurt of humiliation that a child has received from his playmates. Then he can return later to the walks of his daily life prepared to make the best of whatever the day brings forth.

Folly's Daughter

A Thrilling Mystery of New York Night Life.

By Ann Lisle

Roy Dines with Bonnie.

BONNIE CLAIR had always insisted that she wasn't a marrying woman. She said she didn't see why the men should take their fun where they found it and the women must insist on listening to the parson's blessing before they could feel free to be themselves. She boasted of her lovers, of her fickleness and her independence.

ANN LISLE

"Men used to love and ride away. I love and—dance away," was her pet bon-mot.

And she seemed to get away with it. And then Folly Duane came back into her life. But before that happened several other things occurred. Foremost among them was the securing of the Shannon advertising by Mr. Roy Scarlett.

After Roy's misadventure with Jill Hathaway he felt more abused than ever. He might not have been quite so angry at Vivian for continuing to absent herself from home on what her telegram assured him was an errand of mercy if the little Hathaway girl hadn't been so suspicious of his intentions in bringing her home when Viv was supposed to be there and wasn't.

Roy thought well of himself for getting the Shannon account. He thought badly of his wife for not being on deck to rejoice with him. And he grumbled at her and her whole tribe—which meant Jill, the girl who had the nerve to look like Viv and who was as annoyingly mum about it all as Viv had always been about that darn family skeleton of hers.

So Roy turned to Bonnie at the moment when he needed soothing, flattery, kindness and something to salve his wounded pride.

It just happened that Bonnie's birth-certificate and her first glimpse of herself on arising agreed in their verdict that she was thirty-five. A screen test the week before had been rude enough to register her a hag. She was finding her smile during her exhibition Black Bottom as difficult as the most intricate of the steps . . . So she reminded herself suddenly that men had a way of settling down, and that her's was a man's philosophy.

This brought Bonnie and Roy into conjunction just when both of them were ripe for something new.

Roy telephoned Bonnie with a sullen realisation that she was forbidden fruit, and that the embargo had been placed by the very man whose advertising account was something Roy had simply to discuss with a sympathetic listener. Bonnie invited Roy to dine with her. She gave him a good dinner. She was properly appreciative of his news. She kissed him now and then, and was chummy and maternal and altogether disarming. She told him she understood wives and th way they left their husbands to seek what consolation for loneliness they could find. She sighed very prettily when she said it.

"You're some little consoler," Roy laughed. "You seem to understand how a fellow feels when big news like this breaks."

"I want to understand. I'm nothing but a little nit-wit, Roy. My brains are in my feet. But I guess my heart is at yours"—

"Go on! Don't tell me little Bon-Bon Bonnie is slushy over me." He swelled his chest out as he said it.

"You're the only real man I've ever known," she sighed.

"You've had the world to pick from."

"For playmates. Not for friends. Not for"——

"Go on; say it," he challenged.

Her eyes met his. "Gay Bonnie" had what her admirers called "incandescent lamps." Big, yellow eyes that sometimes looked brown. Now they shone into Roy's and dazzled him.

"I can't say it," she gasped finally.

"Then I will."

"Don't. Please don't, Roy. This is serious to me. I can't bear to have you play with me just because your wife's away and you're lonely. It isn't fair to her. It isn't—fair to me."

"Viv isn't fair to me," he said sullenly. "What right has a wife to go traipsing off and leave her husband?"

Something inherently decent, something of the love he had given Vivian, if intermittently, for ten years, held Roy. He couldn't tell Bonnie that his wife had a family skeleton she'd never let him see. Wouldn't tell Bonnie that he suspected Viv of all sorts of things—and that he'd give the whole Shannon account to know they weren't so. Above all he didn't tell Bonnie that Jill Hathaway's resemblance to his wife unnerved him and that he found himself doing sums in arithmetic now and then. Like this: "Viv says she is thirty. The girl Jill looks seventeen. Viv might be thirty-two or three. The girl might be—"

Roy wouldn't say certain things to Bonnie. But he couldn't make his hands behave, or his lips, nor his eyes. And Bonnie, remembering that she was thirty-five and on the verge of looking it in any but a rose-shaded light, began to tell herself that even if he was a little runt and awkward as the deuce, he had the New York Shannon. He might get the whole chain. The man who landed all the Shannon hotel advertising for the good old U. S. A. would be a millionaire.

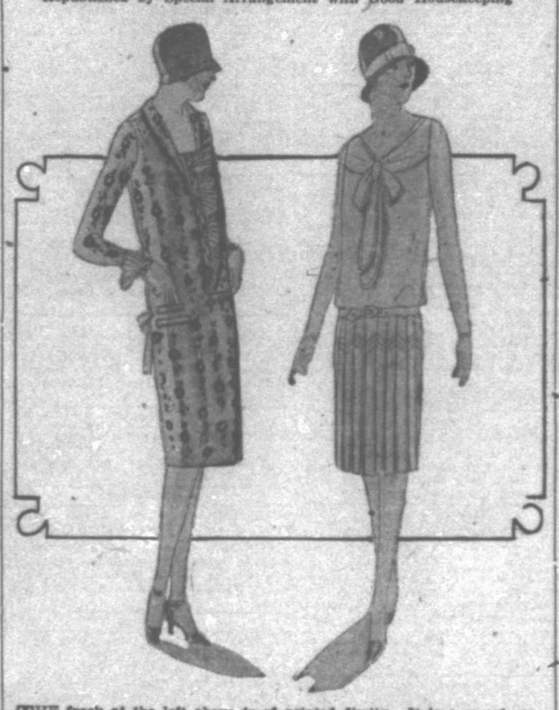

"I certainly ought to think of settling down with a substantial good provider," thought Bonnie.

"Why not Roy?"

Cool Frocks for Summer

Republished by Special Arrangement with Good Housekeeping

THE frock at the left above is of printed dimity. It is a smart one-piece, wrap-over model with a sash that goes through one side, tying at the back. The jabot has a plaited edge and Irish crochet trimming.

The second frock is one of the very newest things for summer. It is of flat crepe and has the lovely bow yoke. The skirt with narrow box plaits across the front is stitched near the waistline. The belt goes all around and is fastened in front with a buckle.

OH, the genius has wings that will bear him high, far up from the sordid earth to the mystical regions that touch the sky, where treasures of thought have birth. He soars aloft in a tireless flight with a joy that is never done, and out of the thread of his pure delight is the beauty of living spun. The genius knows nothing of care and dread, but those of his clan are few, and the plodding many must creep, instead, with no wings but the will to do. No wings but the urge of desire in the heart and a whisper that will not cease, for the plodders, though weary, must play their part ere they taste of the cup of peace.

Fashion Fads and Fancies

By Mildred Ash.

Piebald Flowers Are Fashion's pie, according to French stylists, who insist upon the vogue for the huge two-color flower. Of shaggy petal types made of chiffon or sheer silk, this piebald type of flower started by the two flowers of strikingly contrasting colors being made, or rather sold, in one. Black and white, and navy and brick red are the most popular combinations.

Dimity Not Dimmed by the brilliantly multicolor silk prints that are daily growing in favor, is blooming forth in a riot of painted flower motifs, bright geometric patterns, and embroidered foliage and floral effects. On white grounds, these colorful designs are extremely effective—the larger patterns being very stunning.

Paisley Pongee Pouch Purses with large kerchief squares of pongee, also printed in the paisley design, make very attractive accessories for the sports costume. These purse and scarf sets are often supplemented by belt and hatband to match.

Seen thru A Rosy Mesh slim limbs and slender ankles help to overcome the naturally cumbersome appearance invariably imparted, to even the smallest feet, by sports shoes. An entirely new note in hosiery fashions is struck this Summer by the wearing of silk open-mesh hose with sports, and semi-sports, types of shoes. Rosy beige shades are favored with any color shoe.

Stitching Shows Smartness of sports gloves, for the more conspicuous and large are the outside stitches, the more style have chamois, doeskin or fabric models. In slip-on or one-button types, many of these gloves have the heavy stitching so worked as to form a border of the leather, or fabric, around the entire glove.

Borrowing A Dash Of Color from purse, flower, belt and buttons, many a black and white checked traveling costume of lightweight woolen fabric gains sprightliness. The black and white theme, developed in small checks or stripes, continues popular but usually depends upon the "footnotes" of flaming red or vivid green to heighten its effect.

Burlesquing Beasts is a new millinery fad. Many small felt hats are trimmed with cut-out animals of a contrasting shade of felt. These little animals are most grotesque, being eccentric versions of horses, dogs, etc.

Ever-Welcome Strawberries

By Hannah Wing.

FAR be it from us to seek to lessen the deserved popularity of strawberry shortcake or its contemporary, plain strawberries and cream. However, when, or if, one wearies of these delights and seeks some half-way, in between service for this royal fruit the following suggestions are possibilities.

Strawberry Cream.

Mix half a cup of sugar, a cup of strawberry pulp and a pint of cream. Beat with a Dover egg beater until solid. Serve, thoroughly chilled in glasses or in meringue shells.

Strawberries a la Sherry.

For each quart of strawberries take the juice of one lemon and a cup of powdered sugar. Mix thoroughly, let stand ten minutes and serve.

Strawberries July Style.

Cut choice strawberries in halves. Squeeze over them a little orange juice and mix with sugar to sweeten; let stand in a cool place until the sugar is dissolved. Chill. Cook one quart of water and two cups of sugar for twenty minutes; add a teaspoonful of gelatin softened in cold water, stir and strain. When cold add two cups of orange juice and the juice of one large lemon. Freeze as usual for an ice or a sherbet. Serve in glasses or orange baskets and surround with the prepared berries.

Strawberry Frosting.

Crush one cup of strawberries, add one-third cup of sugar and let stand for an hour or more. Press through a fine sieve, add a tablespoonful of lemon juice and enough confectioner's sugar to make a frosting. Serve on plain cake.

Strawberry Pudding.

One-third cup butter, one cup confectioner's sugar, two-thirds cup strawberries.

Cream butter and add sugar gradually, while stirring constantly. Wash, hull and drain berries; add to first mixture one at a time, beating between each addition until well blended. If these directions are not followed, sauce will have a curdled appearance.

How Children Form Bad Habits of Eating

By Chas. A. L. Reed, M. D.,

Former President of the American Medical Association.

IF your child has developed bad habits of eating; won't give up milk; won't eat this and that; picks and chooses, always choosing the wrong thing; is "finicky" about food, the fault is probably yours. If you would cure the child's bad habits you must first give a little attention to yourself.

CHARLES A.L. REED, M.D.

Three chief faults of parents in the upbringing of their children are responsible for this kind of finickiness which the doctors call anorexia. One is unduly prolonged bottle feeding; another is unduly prolonged milk feeding, and the third is the use of toys, unkept promises, threats and other means as artificial pacifiers.

The habits of infancy should be confined to infancy. When they are extended into childhood, besides distorting the child's outlook they make it very likely that the habits of childhood will be extended into adult life, an event which, roughly speaking, is the cause of every ill suffered by humanity, at any rate every mental ill. A child should be weaned from the bottle to the spoon and cup at one year or earlier and the process should be complete at fifteen months.

Milk is the food of infancy and to carry it on into later childhood is the only substantial physical cause that can be found in nearly all cases of anorexia. When teeth begin to erupt, solids should begin to appear in the diet. Not only does this accustom the infant to the formation of proper habits, but, what is more important, it provides it with constituents necessary to growth and development which are either not present in milk at all or are not present in sufficient quantity. One of the chief of these is iron. Careful inquiry will show that most of these children with poor appetites drink a quart or more of milk a day. The adult who drank as much as this and performed ordinary physical work could have appetite for very little else. A sensible combination of ordinary other foods contains all the elements necessary for life and growth that can be found in milk, but in more abundance and in a more acceptable form; more digestible, more assimilable and more stimulating to appetite and bowel function. Milk is a solid more difficult to digest than a tender steak, and the other solids are not only better digested by the young child but give it more benefit, and there is no reason why the habit of eating them should not be formed in early life.

A new food should be presented to a child in a matter-of-fact way, and if it is met with refusal at first the mother should exhibit no undue concern and should not use force. To break new ground in diet is a matter of education, patience, tact and studied indifference. It is here that the first fatal error is usually made. The mother concludes that the child does not like the food and she rejects it for this reason, or she believes that the food is indigestible because, when the child is forced to eat it, it vomits. Both these conclusions are wrong. To begin with all that is required is that the child should get acquainted with the new substance, and its disastrous response to forced feeding is simply a nervous and psychic explosion, an example of negativism. She should take no notice of the refusal and try the same food again after a few days. It will eventually be eaten.

When Manners Are Correct

By Mrs. Cornelius Beeckman

Flowers for a Wedding.

DEAR MRS. BEECKMAN:

Kindly inform me as to who furnishes the bridesmaid's bouquet. I have been told that it is the custom for the best man to do so. J.

THE bouquets of the bridesmaids or any other attendants of the bride are usually furnished by the parents of the bride, or, if the bride is paying for her own wedding, by the bride herself. They are, or should be, an integral part of the color-scheme of the wedding—that is, of the decorations of the church or of the home and, of course, of the costumes of the bridal attendants. Therefore, they are planned with this in mind, and it is more convenient, in carrying out this artistic plan, for the bride's family to send the flowers. Sometimes the groom, as a compliment to his bride, asks for the privilege of sending the flowers to the attendants of his bride, and if he does, he talks over with the bride the kind of flowers that she wishes to have sent, and the colors.

There is no reason in the world why the best man should be expected to send these flowers, and he is not supposed to.

Mrs. Beeckman will be glad to answer questions on etiquette submitted by readers.
