State praises MISD; review finds $5.6 million in savings

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

Officials with the Texas Comptroller's Office have high praise for the cost-effective management of schools in the Midland Independent School District and made recommendations that could save MISD an additional $5.6 million in the next few years.

Following a detailed audit and performance review of MISD, Comptroller John Sharp referred to the district as a "benchmark for the entire state of Texas."

Olga Garza of the comptroller's office said Midland was one of the very best of the 12 districts reviewed thus far around the state.

"They (MISD officials) are very keen on getting the most Lesbian Sharon Bottoms smiles after the Virginia Court of Appeals awarded her custody of her child.

Court rules for gay parenting, awards lesbian mom custody

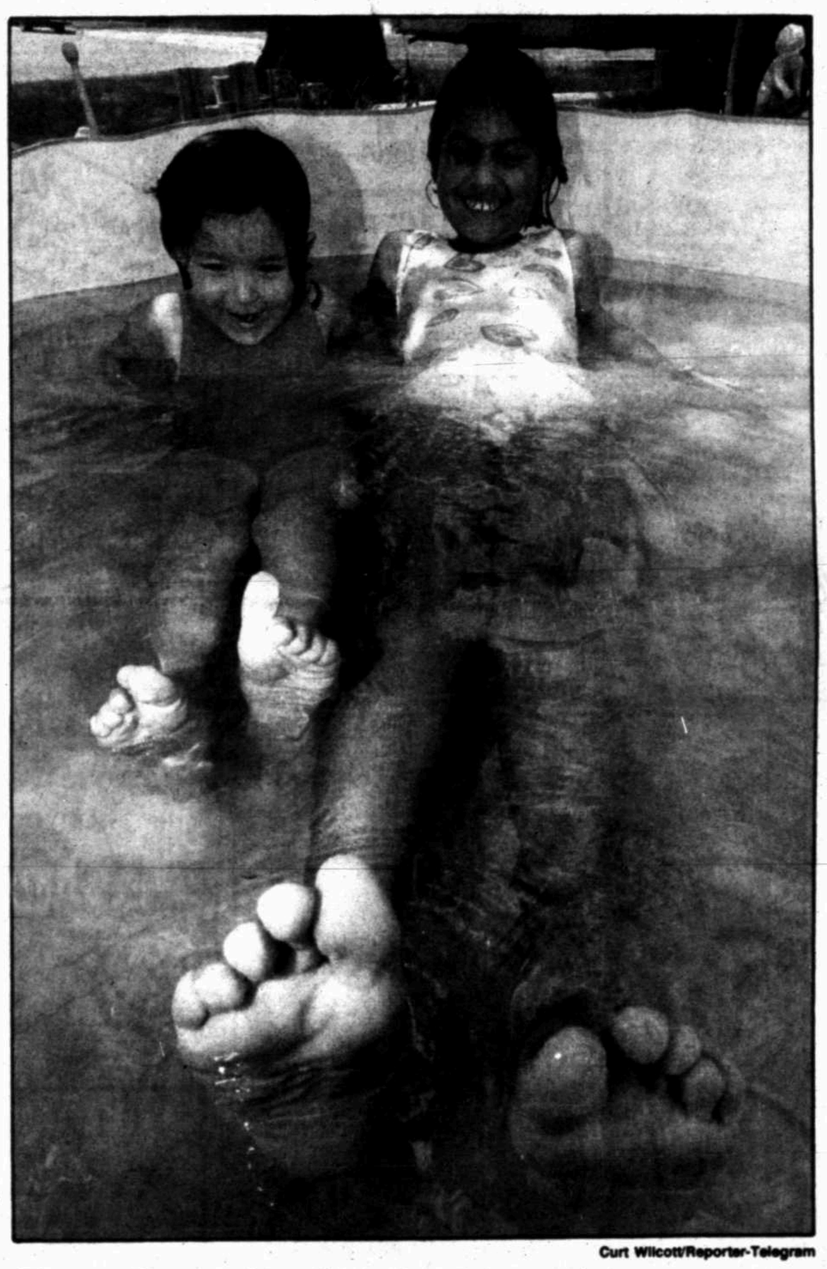

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — A lesbian regained custody of her son Tuesday when a state appeals court ruled that the woman's sex life — though illegal under Virginia law — does not make her an unfit parent.

"A parent's private sexual conduct, even if illegal, does not create a presumption of unfitness," Judge Sam W. Coleman III wrote in the 3-0 decision by a Virginia Court of Appeals panel.

In the case closely watched by gay rights groups, Circuit Judge Buford M. Parsons last year awarded custody of 2-year-old Tyler Doustou to Sharon Bottoms' mother, Kay Bottoms. The judge said Sharon Bottoms was an unfit mother because she and her live-in lover engaged in oral sex, a "crime against nature" in Virginia.

At a news conference, Sharon

Nicotine-level charges ignite tobacco wars

WASHINGTON (AP) — A major company secretly developed tobacco with double the usual nicotine, pumped it into "light" cigarettes last year and then misled federal investigators about it, the government charged Tuesday.

Food and Drug Commissioner David Kessler stopped short of using the word "lie," but said Brown & Williamson Tobacco Co. denied breeding any such tobacco until Friday, when it learned that the FDA had uncovered its genetically altered tobacco plant called Y-1. "That sounds like a pretty deceptive way or misleading way of answering the question," said Rep. Henry Waxman.

B&W also pulled its U.S. patent application for Y-1 and removed its seeds from the National Seed Storage Laboratory just after the FDA announced its investigation, Kessler told Waxman's Energy and Commerce health subcommittee.

Kessler has "blown the issue completely out of proportion," B&W spokesman Tom Fitzgerald said.

He insisted the Louisville, Ky., company never hid Y-1 — but he couldn't explain why FDA records show B&W told the agency in May that higher-nicotine tobacco breeding was not "feasible."

"These findings lay to rest any notion that there is no manipulation and control of nicotine undertaken in the tobacco industry."

— David Kessler, FDA chief

On Friday, the company told the FDA that high-nicotine tobacco would "maintain" nicotine levels in low-tar cigarettes. Lowering tar can also lower nicotine.

Kessler said Y-1 shows cigarette makers manipulate nicotine levels in their products, one item the FDA must prove before deciding if it can legally regulate tobacco as a drug. Such a decision would force the FDA to ban most nicotine-containing products. Waxman's subcommittee is considering requiring the FDA to regulate tobacco without banning it.

In April, the chiefs of seven tobacco companies testified before the subcommittee that they do not manipulate nicotine.

"This raises the serious question of whether tobacco executives deliberately and intentionally misled the Congress," said Rep. Ron Wyden, D-Ore.

"We cannot depend on the tobacco industry to tell the truth," said Rep. Mike Kreidler, D-Wash.

Tobacco companies also used ammo-

Survey: Most callers get kick out of soccer, World Cup '94

Staff Report

Cityline

Almost 75 percent of callers to Cityline's Community Pulse Poll this week say they have an active interest and are following the World Cup '94 Soccer tournament, being played out at venues across the United States.

The sport has been wildly popular in other countries, but has yet to gain a stronghold in the American sports scene. The United States' hosting of the tournament is seen by soccer experts as an ideal way to spread the sport's appeal in this country. There are plans to launch a major soccer league within the next couple of years.

Still, the relative lack of respondents to the question "Will you actively follow and have an Old name meets new bank

By John Paul Pitts
Business/Oil Editor

A group of Midlanders is in the process of organizing a new bank with an old name: First National Bank.

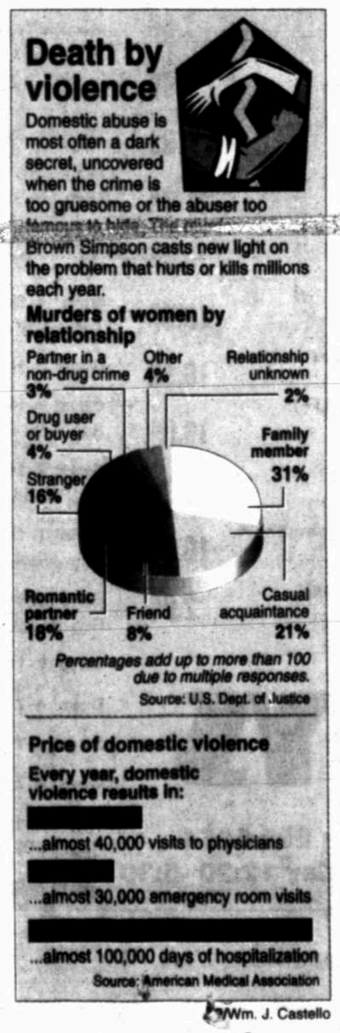

"The name was available and we thought it would create loyalty," said Allan Norwood, agent for a group of Midlanders who want to revive First National Bank of Midland.

First National of Midland had 100 good years and three bad ones, Walt Holten said Tuesday when organizers met to discuss details of the proposed bank.

"That's a pretty good record" for the bank that was once the centerpiece of Midland's commerce, he said.

Norwood said he talked to nearly 100 potential investors in Midland and all but three had positive response to the bank project.

Arrest of Simpson shines light on America's 'dirty little secret'

Domestic violence finds public forum, help's near in basin

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

Circumstances surrounding the arrest of O.J. Simpson for the murder of his ex-wife and another man have put domestic violence in the public eye.

"The case itself has already raised the awareness of domestic violence," said Eleanor Josting, executive director for the Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and Their Children.

News reports of the case have included information that victim Nicole Brown Simpson, 35, had been abused by Simspon.

"People are definitely talking about domestic violence," Ms. Josting said. "Hopefully something positive for other battered women will come out of this."

Although awareness is far from an inclusive factor in battered women seeking help, publicity does help.

LOS ANGELES — The arrest of O.J. Simpson for allegedly killing his ex-wife — a woman he once beat so severely she sought hospital care for split lips, head bruises and a black eye — has focused new attention on America's dirty little secret of violence against women.

From California to the nation's capital, hotlines for abused women have been deluged since the June 12 slayings of Nicole Brown Simpson and Ronald Goldman.

"There's a lot of talking going on right now about domestic violence," said Stacey Kabat, co-producer of the 1993 Oscar-winning documentary "Defending Our Lives."

"Hopefully it will force people to confront the myths — one is that it's not that bad," said Kabat, who also works with a Boston group called Battered Women Fighting Back. "We have clergy who say, 'Pray and try to work it out.' We have law-enforcement officials who walk (men) around

Rwanda's civil war takes toll on 'most innocent victims'

KIGALI, Rwanda (AP) — The 7-year-old girl, her head swathed in bandages, remembers the men with clubs who bashed her in the head and bludgeoned her mother to death.

Still, Nyiralikobwa doesn't understand why. She doesn't even know whether she is Hutu or Tutsi.

The girl has yet to be taught the tribal animosities fueling the civil war in this Central African nation which has taken the lives of about 200,000 people and created a generation of orphans with wounds that will never heal.

"These children have suffered so much. They're alone, they're scared. They are some of the most innocent victims of Rwanda," Dr. Eric Vreeda said Tuesday as he dressed the wounds on some of 65 children evacuated to the King Faisal Hospital in east Kigali.

Ten weeks of violence between the Hutu-dominated government and the Tutsi-led Rwandan Patriotic Front has left the capital, Kigali, an armed camp.

Last month a gang of militiamen burst into Nyiralikobwa's home, beat her and her 5-year-old brother, and killed their mother. Her brother remains in the makeshift Red Cross hospital across town in the government-held sector, where more than 600 wounded have overwhelmed a small staff.

The King Faisal Hospital, by contrast, is in relatively safe rebel hands and a monument to good intentions gone awry in the Third World. Built by Germans with Saudi money and packed with the best medical equipment, it never opened before the war because the Rwandans didn't have the money to operate it.

The empty shell quickly became home for swelling thousands of refugees fleeing violence. Now the Red Cross and Doctors Without Borders aid groups are transforming it into the best facility for dealing with Kigali's wounded.

Some of the Hutu children have been badly maimed by shelling and are missing legs and arms; their Tutsi counterparts have suffered wounds from machete-wielding Hutu militias.

Vreeda and Dr. Efke Bakker, both Dutch volunteers for the French aid group Doctors Without Borders, showed compassion as they cleaned the children's open wounds — grabbing hold of their chins to keep them from biting their tongues, and holding down their arms.

"I know it hurts. That anesthetic must have worn off. You're brave," Vreeda told one boy, stroking his cheek while Bakker cleaned his shattered left ankle.

The boy's eyes welled with tears and he cried for his mother. But he doesn't have a mother anymore.

The violence around them, meanwhile, turned worse after dark Tuesday. Heavy machine-gun fire erupted along rebel-government lines in east and north Kigali, sending tracers tearing through the darkness.

A series of heavy mortar blasts fired from government positions shook walls and shattered windows in the Meridien Hotel, home to hundreds of U.N. personnel, journalists and refugees.

U.N. observers reported seeing trucks full of rebel soldiers heading for Kigali from the north, fueling suspicions that the RPF intend to take as much territory as possible before French troops intervene in Rwanda.

France pressed ahead Tuesday with its plans to lead a force of about 2,000 soldiers into Rwanda. It sent an advance team of advisers to Goma, on Zaire's eastern border with Rwanda, intending to pave the way for deployment into government-controlled western Rwanda.

The TEXAS CENTER FOR JOINT REPLACEMENT is pleased to announce the opening of an office in Midland-Odessa ...

The Texas Center for Joint Replacement has opened an office in the Midland Orthopaedic Clinic, at #10 Desta Drive, Suite 100E, in Midland. This new office will serve the many patients from West Texas who have come to the Center for joint replacement treatment of their arthritis disorders or injuries.

The Center is directed by Roger H. Emerson, Jr., M.D. and William C. Head, M.D. These internationally recognized orthopaedic surgeons bring unequalled experience and innovation to the specialty of hip, knee, shoulder, and elbow joint replacement. Drs. Head and Emerson have opened the Midland office to make office visits easier for their patients, friends and neighbors.

The Texas Center for Joint Replacement has teamed with Presbyterian Hospital in Plano to create Texas' only orthopaedic hospital within a hospital dedicated to the art and science of joint replacement surgery. The Center offers fully equipped state-of-the-art orthopaedic operating rooms, private patient rooms, and a highly-trained, totally committed nursing team. The Center provides patients with the focused care and treatment they require in order to return to an active lifestyle.

Teen claims he's innocent of vandalism that got him flogged

SINGAPORE (AP) — Looking pale and thin but sounding cheerful, American teen-ager Michael Fay emerged from prison Tuesday protesting his innocence of the vandalism that got him flogged.

He said he shook hands with the official who caned him last month as a matter of pride.

The 19-year-old claimed his interrogators slapped him and pulled his hair to bully him into falsely confessing that he sprayed paint on cars last autumn with other foreign teen-agers. But he said he was in good health, and his father said Fay survived his lashing and imprisonment better than he had expected.

As Fay prepared to fly home today after 83 days in prison, his Jewish heritage moved into the foreground. Among his strongest supporters were Israeli human rights campaigners, and he repaid the favor by giving his only interview to Israel radio.

"I was smacked in the face. My hair was pulled. I was actually pulled out of my chair by the hair. I was hit on the head with one of the officer's knuckles," he said in the telephone interview.

Fay said other youths swept up with him in a police anti-vandalism drive "were also tortured and some were tortured worse than me."

Singapore authorities denied police abused Fay.

Last March, Fay pleaded guilty to two counts of vandalism for spray-painting and damaging cars and also to possessing stolen road signs.

"I say from the deepest of my heart that I did not commit any of these things except that I had some signs in my house," he told Israel radio.

He said the signs were taken by a Swedish youth who was among the teens arrested nine months ago, but has returned home.

Fay was sentenced to six lashes on bare buttocks with a rattan cane, a penalty reduced to four after President Clinton appealed for clemency.

Pressure mounts for Bosnian peace

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Pressed for time, international mediators struggled Tuesday on the framework for a Bosnian peace settlement, while U.N. peacekeepers worried about an increasingly shaky truce.

The mediators are trying to produce at least the broad outlines of a settlement to end Bosnia's 26-month-old war before a summit of major industrial nations next month in Naples, Italy.

Diplomatic sources said foreign ministers of the United States, Russia, Britain, France and Germany tentatively planned to meet July 1-2 in Geneva in hopes of preparing a settlement for discussion in Naples.

Those nations are pushing a partition plan that none of Bosnia's warring parties fully accepts, and a monthlong cease-fire intended to provide breathing room for the negotiations has been marred by increasing violations.

A Geneva-based diplomat, speaking on condition of anonymity, emphasized the Geneva meeting was tentative. But he predicted it would produce a take-it-or-leave-it proposal to the warring parties "because any side will always be unhappy."

Italian Foreign Minister Antonio Martino said Tuesday that leaders of Russia and the Group of Seven major industrialized countries probably would join in trying to achieve a Bosnian setttlement at their Naples meeting starting July 8.

"It's one of the issues Italy is particularly interested in, and it will probably happen," Martino said.

90s, some clouds, winds on tap

Staff Report

Today's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies with a less than 20 percent chance of afternoon thunderstorms and south winds 10-15 mph. The high is expected to be in the mid-90s, according to a forecaster with the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport.

Tonight should be partly cloudy with a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms and a low in the upper 60s.

For Wednesday, forecasters are calling for partly cloudy skies, 20 percent chance of thunderstorms and a high in the mid-90s.

After an overnight low of 66, Tuesday's high reached 94, compared to the record high for that date of 107 set in 1934. The record low was 60 set in 1973.

STATE

Heavy thunderstorms pounded parts of South Texas on Tuesday, the first day of summer.

Some of the rainfall was heavy. Victoria got an inch and three-quarters of rain in just half an hour, and Corpus Christi got an inch and a quarter in an hour. San Antonio and Harlingen also were drenched.

Temperatures fell from 93 to 72 in just a few minutes after the storm hit San Antonio, and winds gusted to 35 miles an hour. Some flooding was reported.

The thunderstorms were blamed on a warm, moist, unstable air mass that has hung over South Texas for several days.

An ozone advisory was in effect Tuesday for the San Antonio, Austin and Dallas-Fort Worth areas and has been reissued for Wednesday.

Summer officially arrived at 9:48 a.m. CDT Tuesday.

Temperatures across North Texas on the first day of summer were in the upper 80s to lower 90s, with readings of 85 at Tyler, 91 at Abilene and Mineral Wells and 93 at DFW Airport. The heat index topped the century mark at several places; at 3 p.m., a heat index of 106 degrees was reported at Sherman.

NATION

Showers and thunderstorms were scattered throughout the East on Tuesday, ending days of record heat, while muggy conditions covered most of the rest of the nation.

A cold front from the Northeast through the Ohio Valley to the central Plains and a warm front in the mid-Atlantic states spread showers and thunderstorms across those areas. A broad area of low pressure produced showers and thunderstorms across the Gulf Coast states.

Elsewhere, a broad area of high pressure was in control of the weather west of the Continental Divide. Skies were cloudy but little rain fell in most areas, with heavier showers in parts of Arizona.

Hazy conditions continued across portions of the middle Mississippi Valley and the southern Plains.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

PRAISES: State finds $5.6 million in savings

(From 1A)

bang for the buck," she said. "It's a school district that other school districts can learn from," she said.

Cost-saving suggestions resulting from the performance review were outlined in such a manner as to augment programs already in use at MISD, Ms. Garza said.

"We believe our proposed savings are the minimum Midland taxpayers should expect over the next five years," said Comptroller John Sharp, who released the audit on Tuesday.

As an example, Ms. Garza brought up MISD's program of building its own computers from component parts and repairing its own computers.

"That's something very positive that they were doing that other school districts were not," she said.

As a way to increase savings from this program, auditors suggested using vocational education students to assist in computer repair as a way of teaching them electronic skills.

Outlined in a two-year implementation schedule, Sharp said the recommendations could result in savings of $411,352 for the 1994-95 school year. In 1995-96, that could climb to $863,926 — or about 1 percent of the district's total operating budget, Sharp said.

The report contained 109 recommendations. They ranged from improved planning and scheduling to reducing the number of leased automobiles available to school district staffers. Other recommendations included selling off redundant technology systems, streamlining payroll and purchasing procedures, improving transportation efficiency and more aggressively pursuing state and federal funds and grants.

The audit also praised a number of the district's programs. For example, it said the maintenance department employs only a small core of full-time staff members and contracts with private companies for peak-load periods and specialized jobs.

As the current school budget is already being compiled, many of the auditors' recommendations can be put into place in the next budget, said MISD Superintendent Joseph Baressi. Many of the cost-saving suggestions have been previously discussed by school district officials and can be quickly included, he said.

"We're going to incorporate as many of the first-year suggestions as we can into the 1994-95 budget," Baressi said.

The Midland audit was the 12th performance review of school districts around the state conducted by the comptroller's office.

The reports have identified about $85 million in possible savings. Sharp said nearly $25 million of those savings have been realized so far.

It was during his tenure with the Texas Railroad Commission that Sharp first came up with the idea of reviewing school districts to save taxpayer dollars, Ms. Garza said.

The auditors do not specifically deal with salaries during their reviews. "Salaries are kind of a local issue," Ms. Garza said.

If the salaries of one kind of employee or another are not in line with state averages, auditors suggest school district officials do a review of similar districts in the state to see how their salary schedules stand, she said.

MISD salary schedules, however, are well within accepted parameters for teacher, administrator and non-teaching employees, she said.

Any savings made from the auditors' suggested changes are kept for use in the school district.

Sharp strongly suggested reinvesting at least $1.1 million from these savings "in worthy programs that will continue to provide Midland's school children with the high-quality education they deserve."

SURVEY: Most Midlanders follow World Cup

interest in World Cup '94?" suggest that many people still have a large indifference to the sport.

Of the 127 callers who phoned Community Pulse, 95 said they do have an interest in World Cup '94. The remaining 32 said they were not interested in the tournament and felt it would have little impact on the status of the sport in America.

"It's time that the United States stop being so egocentric and tune in to some of the things the rest of the world has to offer," one anonymous caller said. "It's an absolutely electric sport. I've seen it in person in Europe and in South America on the professional level. It's an absolutely incredible game, and it's exciting America has the opportunity to catch the fever."

A caller by the name of Kathy, who has two children involved in youth soccer, said she saw the sport "picking up speed in the United States," but complained that coverage by the media is "very poor. We need a lot more upbeat coverage."

Another caller said the sport is appealing "because it has less violence on the field than football or hockey. It is gaining ground all over," she said of the sport's popularity.

"I do think the World Cup will help catapult soccer into a more popular event," said a caller by the name of Jim. "However it is still years away from being a major sport in the United States."

The caller added that only when today's youth grow into young adults will the sport be accepted on a wider scale.

Then there were those who seemed not so sure about the tournament and the game.

"Why do people play soccer?" the female caller asked. "So they won't have to watch it."

Another caller said she felt soccer is, "being forced on us and is still going to be something mainly young people are interested in."

Jay Menendez, a soccer fan, said, "It's very difficult to predict whether the tournament will have an impact on the sport in this country, but it won't detract from its popularity, that's for sure. I would hope it would have an impact. It's a worldwide sport."

WARS: Companies alter nicotine, FDA says

(From 1A)

nia to raise nicotine levels, Kessler said.

Companies insist ammonia and other chemicals merely add flavor or preserve cigarettes. But Kessler detailed industry documents that call ammonia an "impact booster," a chemical that frees nicotine inside tobacco so nearly twice the usual amount inhaled gets into a smoker's bloodstream.

"These findings lay to rest any notion that there is no manipulation and control of nicotine undertaken in the tobacco industry," Kessler said.

The FDA discovered Y-1 in Brazil, where B&W grew and patented the plant. B&W developed the super leaf with seeds from a 1970s U.S. Department of Agriculture experiment that cross-bred tobacco to produce slightly higher nicotine. USDA abandoned that plant because it didn't grow well.

B&W took those seeds, made genetic alterations and produced a tobacco plant with the highest-known nicotine yield yet — 6.2 percent, well over the 2.5 percent to 3 percent found naturally in flue-cured tobacco, Kessler said.

Last year the company used the new leaf in five U.S. cigarette brands, including three "light" cigarettes implied to be healthier.

CALL: Case spotlights domestic violence

(From 1A)

"It brings it into focus for them," Ms. Josting said. "It confirms to women just how serious the outcome can be. It causes them to think."

And although the local shelter hasn't seen an increase in the resident count, Ms. Josting anticipates more inquiries and possibly more help sought.

She said that's because seeking help or leaving the abuser isn't a simple act. "It takes quite a while for women to leave."

A woman may leave a battered relationship five times before leaving for good, she said.

And leaving isn't always as easy as it may sound. Leaving doesn't cure the problem of the batterer, stop him from forcing contact, or interaction due to other ties such as children. And then there's fear and economic restraints.

The average population at the local shelter is 51 people a month. Statistics from the state indicate that the number of abused individuals that receives such help is only 1 in 10.

"That's where public awareness comes in," Ms. Josting said.

And domestic violence isn't just about a woman — or a man — leaving an abusive relationship. That doesn't deal with the problem of the batterer.

"The whole family unit needs help, not just the victim," Ms. Josting said.

According to police Sgt. David Garcia, calls of family violence are sometimes isolated incidents diffused by an arrest being made, and other times the problem is ongoing.

The introduction of family violence laws a few years ago has broadened the circumstances in which an arrest can be made. Previously, an officer could only make an arrest if he witnessed violence; today, an officer can make an arrest based on evidence of abuse or indications that someone will remain threatened if an arrest isn't made.

As a result, many situations are quelled by an arrest, which also acts a deterrent, Garcia said.

Other cases are not so easily solved.

"Unless they make up their mind they want to get away from a situation there's not much we can do," Garcia said.

One step is to seek help at the battered women's center and seek a protective order, which unlike a restraining order, can be enforced by police, he said.

The hot line for the Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and Their Children is 683-1300; the number for Project Adam, a perpetrator's program, is 520-0277.

CUSTODY: Court ruling backs gay parents

(From 1A)

Bottoms said she "screamed and cried and was really happy" when she learned of the ruling. She said her lover, April Wade, also cried when she heard the news.

Bottoms, 24, said the effort to regain custody of Tyler has been draining, but "he makes it all worth the fight."

Richard [illegible], an attorney for [illegible] to be deviant" unless the boy's grandmother, said she probably will appeal to the Virginia Supreme Court. "I think it's a tragedy as far as the boy Tyler is concerned to put him back in that environment," he said.

In his decision, Coleman said a child cannot be taken from a parent "based on proof that the parent is engaged in private, illegal sexual conduct or conduct considered [illegible] there is a substantial threat of harm.

Psychologists who testified in the September custody hearing described Tyler as happy and well-adjusted and Sharon Bottoms as a loving mother.

Paula Ettelbrick, director of public policy for the National Center for Lesbian Rights, praised the ruling. "The court's decision follows what is logical in this particular case and most lesbian custody cases, and that is the unrefuted evidence that sexual orientation does not make a parent unfit," she said.

Walt Barbee, president of the Springfield, Va.-based Family Foundation, said of the ruling, "We are witnessing another step in the gradual degradation and deconstruction of American society."

SECRET: Arrest focuses attention on battering

(From 1A)

the block, calm them down and then leave."

The answer, women's advocates say, is for women to speak out and get out.

Neither is easy.

"A woman is conditioned to believe it's her fault," said Tammy Bruce, president of the Los Angeles chapter of the National Organization for Women. "A woman is conditioned to think, 'If I'm better it will stop. If I'm better in bed it will stop. If I'm better around the house it will stop.'"

Domestic violence is currently the No. 1 cause of injury to American women, and has been an intractable problem for decades.

"It's our dirty little secret," said Health and Human Services Secretary Donna Shalala.

To grasp it, one must understand its insidiousness.

"There is a very slow seduction, where you don't see the violent side for a while," said Sandy Condello of Laura's House, an Orange County resource center for abused women.

"She feels that maybe it's just a fluke, that it will never happen again. It always does," Condello said. "And the next time it's usually worse."

Society still deems it a private, family matter, but national statistics provide some shape to the shadows:

Each year, 1,500 battered women are killed by their abusers, according to The Women's Center, a resource center in suburban Washington. An estimated 4 million to 6 million women are beaten. That means once every five seconds, somewhere in the United States, a woman is punched or kicked or thrown against a wall or held down and pummeled.

The number of reported attacks has remained steady for a decade, but the nature of the reports is shifting. In San Diego, for instance, where the police formed a domestic violence task force two years ago, abuse reports have increased dramatically, while homicides have decreased.

"If women think someone will listen, they'll report it," said NOW's Bruce. "And if they report it, and someone does something about it, less women die."

Many states have toughened spousal abuse laws, but it is still up to the courts to apply the stiffer penalties.

Witness the Simpsons.

In 1989, Simpson received two years' probation for punching and kicking his wife, a sentence the city attorney who prosecuted the case last week called "a joke."

"He's going to kill me!" Mrs. Simpson told police who responded to a 911 call. "You never do anything about him. You talk to him, then leave. I want him arrested."

Cyndy Garvey, former wife of baseball star Steve Garvey, told Monday of running into Mrs. Simpson over the Christmas holidays.

"She put her hand on my shoulder, held my sleeve and said, 'I read your book (a 1989 autobiography that described physical abuse by her father). . . . If they won't believe you, they won't believe me,'" Garvey said on KNBC-TV.

"I said, 'Nicole, what are you doing about it?' . . . I saw her back literally stiffen and she pulled away from me."

Mrs. Simpson told her that people see only "the charming, handsome man alongside you," Garvey said.

Kabat recognizes the image. "People say, 'He's a great guy.' And I'm sure (Simpson) is a really nice man a lot of the time. That is a batterer's M.O.," she said.

NAME: Group plans new bank

(From 1A)

He said the organizational effort has passed the exploratory stage. The group expects within three to five weeks to file papers with the state to charter the new First National Bank.

After that there will be a 30-day waiting period for review and a finalization of paperwork.

"We expect the completed process will take four to six months," said Norwood, a former Fort Worth banker who now is a banking consultant.

After the charter is granted, the group will begin efforts to capitalize the bank. It expects to raise $5 million to $10 million for the initial capitalization.

Jack Ladd, a lawyer present at the organizational meeting, said capital would be the key to the new bank's success.

Norwood said a newly chartered bank can expect to lose $100,000 to $150,000 the first year, break even the second year and recoup losses in the third year.

He said the availability of warrants that allow the original organizers of a bank to later buy additional shares at the original price was a very attractive prospect for investors.

The organizers think a new independent Midland bank has potential to do business in Mexico and to take advantage of an improved Midland economy.

Document reveals spy plane never spotted Soviet missiles

WASHINGTON (AP) — Exaggerated fear of a Soviet nuclear missile buildup in the late 1950s put the CIA under enormous pressure to send U-2 spy flights over Soviet territory, a CIA internal history says. The spy planes never spotted a single missile, it says.

Yet, the Air Force kept pressing its view that an intolerable Soviet missile push was under way, the document says.

The report, citing U.S. intelligence records still classified top secret, says the first firm identification of a deployment site for Soviet intercontinental ballistic missiles was made in June 1961 by a spy satellite.

That was 13 months after the Soviets had shot down a U-2 piloted by Gary Powers. U-2 overflights of Soviet territory were stopped after Powers was captured.

Most details about U-2 flights have been highly classified since they began in 1956. The aircraft, developed by Lockheed for the CIA, is credited with providing vast amounts of valuable information on Soviet naval bases, industrial complexes and geographical details needed to produce maps for the U.S. Air Force.

The Powers shootdown led many to assume America had hard evidence of Soviet missile deployments, but in fact U.S. intelligence analysts were still in the dark.

"We knew little about the missiles and nothing about Soviet intentions," the report said.

The U-2s' cameras never photographed an operational ICBM in the Soviet Union because there were none besides a small number for testing, the report said. The U-2s flew a classified number of missions over the Soviet Union from July 1956 until the Powers shootdown on May 1, 1960 — a period during which U.S. intelligence analysts repeatedly warned that Moscow was on the verge of a large-scale deployment that could total hundreds of missiles by 1962.

The Air Force, whose Strategic Air Command was responsible for targeting Soviet military installations in the event of nuclear war, consistently overestimated the Soviets' missile capability, the CIA report says.

"The tendency of SAC was to give at least tentative validity to any scrap of indication" that a photographed location was a Soviet missile site, the report said.

Two months after the photo reconnaissance satellite spotted the first operational ICBM base, U.S. intelligence agencies drastically reduced their estimate of planned Soviet missile deployments, and the heated, sometimes confused public debate over a "missile gap" favoring Moscow was essentially over.

The once-secret information about early CIA operations is contained in a five-volume history of Allen W. Dulles' tenure as director of central intelligence from February 1953 until he resigned in November 1961.

The Dulles manuscript was written in 1973 by Wayne G. Jackson, who was a special assistant to Dulles at CIA during the Eisenhower administration. The manuscript, originally intended for use only within the CIA, was declassified this month.

The section of the manuscript dealing with the U-2 and the CIA's role in assessing the Soviet ICBM program had been classified top secret.

Officials hope to change way babies sleep

WASHINGTON (AP) — Health officials want to change the way American babies sleep in the hope of saving thousands from sudden infant death syndrome.

At least 2,000 infants' lives could be saved annually in the United States if babies were always put to sleep on their backs or sides and not on their stomachs, said Dr. Duane Alexander, director of the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development.

Alexander said Tuesday that's the message the federal government and some private agencies hope to relay to parents, baby sitters and day-care workers in a national campaign to change the way baby sleeps.

At least 2,000 infants' lives could be saved annually in United States if babies were always put to sleep on their backs or sides, not on their stomachs, said Dr. Duane Alexander.

Alexander said that research in the United States and in several other nations has shown that up to half of the fatalities from sudden infant death syndrome may be related to how a baby is put to bed.

"Traditionally, American parents have placed their babies on their stomachs to sleep," Alexander said. "It is a goal of this campaign to reverse this practice and to have nearly all babies sleeping on their back and side."

The physician said back-sleeping will not prevent all of the 6,000 U.S. deaths from sudden infant death syndrome (SIDS), but it's hoped that at least 2,000 babies will be saved.

Sleep position studies in New Zealand, Britain, Australia and Norway have shown that the sudden infant death rates can be cut by up to 50 percent.

But Alexander said that not all of the U.S. SIDS fatalities can be attributed to sleep position. Other causes are unclear.

"SIDS is one of medicine's unsolved mysteries" despite intense scientific studies by the federal government since 1974, said Alexander. "But face-down sleeping finally has given us a risk factor that we can do something about."

SIDS is defined as sudden death of an infant under one year old that cannot be explained despite an autopsy, examination of the death scene and a review of the child's history.

The campaign to educate parents about the importance of sleep positions for babies is called "Back to Sleep." It is supported and endorsed by U.S. Surgeon General Dr. Joycelyn Elders, the U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commission and the American Academy of Pediatrics. It will include television and newspaper ads, and 4 million brochures will be distributed in doctors' offices and hospitals.

Elders, a pediatrician, said the intensive campaign is needed to overcome decades of incorrect medical advice.

"This is contradicting what doctors, including me, have been telling parents for decades," she said.

Until recent years, the common advice of pediatricians to new parents was to put a baby to sleep on its stomach.

Ann Brown of the Consumer Products Safety Commission said her group also has found that crib bedding can be lethal. She said soft, fluffy pillows, blankets, mattresses and comforters have all been found to cause infants to suffocate.

Research has shown that babies, particularly those sleeping on their stomachs, tend to breath into the soft bedding, saturate it with carbon dioxide, and then inhale the trapped gas, she said.

See Texas first in vacation season

Summer has officially arrived, and many Midlanders already are studying maps and almanacs, trying to determine where they want to spend their vacation time.

While many of them will bid the Lone Star State farewell for a few weeks to visit other locales, there are definite advantages to vacationing in Texas. One major advantage is the travel required to take vacationers out of the state. By staying in Texas and enjoying the many attractions within its borders, vacationers can significantly reduce their travel time and save on travel expense at the same time.

And the attractions within easy driving distance of Midland are numerous and varied. Area lakes and rivers provide cool, water-oriented vacations or weekend getaways for Midlanders. Favorite lakes include E.V. Spence at Robert Lee, Moss Creek Reservoir near Big Spring, O.H. Ivie Reservoir near Ballinger, Lake Nasworthy, Twin Buttes Reservoir and O.C. Fisher Lake, all at San Angelo, Buffalo Gap State Park at Buffalo Gap, Possum Kingdom Lake near Graham, Lake Buchanan at Burnet and many more. Water hangouts also include the Balmorhea swimming pool at Balmorhea State Park.

Others enjoy visiting old West Texas forts such as Fort Davis, Fort Stockton, Fort Concho at San Angelo, Fort Lancaster near Ozona and others to learn about our history and heritage in addition to enjoying a vacation in yesteryear.

Of course, Big Bend National Park annually attracts hundreds of thousands of tourists, and thousands more visit Guadalupe Mountains National Park to see beautiful desert and mountain scenery. Both are within a few hours driving time of Midland and offer recreational pursuits for vacationers.

And, of course, there are many other vacation opportunities available throughout West Texas — depending on the specific interests of the vacationers. The point is that there are ample opportunities for enjoyable, inexpensive, and entertaining vacations not far from home in Texas.

Before embarking for other states, think of seeing Texas first!

EEOC should abandon ban on harassment

A proposed regulation that would supposedly ban religious harassment in the workplace has gotten people quite upset. They are clogging the mailboxes, phone lines and FAX machines in Congress.

The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, with what it says are the best of intentions, is seeking to define religious harassment. A worker could seek legal retribution if conduct "denigrates or shows hostility or aversion" to someone based on his or her religion as well as his or her race, gender, age, etc.

That sounds fine. Someone should not be mistreated because of his or her beliefs, or subjected to another's religion.

The only problem is the predicament in which it puts an employer. One law firm says the issue is so volatile that it would advise banning all religious expression. So, could an employee wear a cross or a yarmulke? Keep a copy of the Bible or Koran on his or her desk? Invite a coworker to church?

EEOC Executive Director Douglas Gallegos told members of Congress that the policy would not do any of these things. He said it is designed to protect people who are harassed because of their religion, not attack those who express religion.

The fact that Gallegos is having to go to Congress to explain this shows the problem in trying to define such harassment. ...

The EEOC should drop this idea. It will create a lot of needless lawsuits and probably more problems than it is trying to solve.

Census plan for 2000 count may be just as troublesome

Census officials say they will change the way population tallies are handled for the 2000 census, their action is in response to widespread criticism of undercounting for the 1990 census.

Many of the protests came from urban areas, but undercounting is a problem wherever there are poor and transient populations.

Population numbers are critical for several reasons, including congressional representation, and federal funds for many programs are calculated based on population.

Officials say that instead of relying on actual counting of people in 2000, they will use statistical methods to extrapolate final population tallies.

Population numbers obtained through the proposed method could be just as far off as those for 1990 — but the Census Bureau would have a way of using "extrapolation" to please its political critics.

Census numbers are supposed to be as accurate as possible and several studies and federal lawsuits have shown that the present methods do not work well enough to provide an accurate count.

The proposed new statistical method may prove to be as troublesome as the present hit-or-miss method, but surely it can't be worse.

North prepares for second Korean war

WASHINGTON — As the Clinton administration plays nuclear brinkmanship with North Korea, the specter of war has Pentagon planners thinking the unthinkable: a surprise North Korean invasion of South Korea, where more than 35,000 American troops are stationed.

Anderson

For the last year, the head of the Defense Intelligence Agency, Lt. Gen. James R. Clapper, has believed North Korea is the greatest threat the U.S. military is likely to face in the next few years.

North Korea would probably prevail in the initial phase of a second Korean war, according to Top Secret Pentagon assessments we have reviewed, because dictator Kim Il-Sung has designed his armed forces to meet the specific tactical needs of the Korean peninsula.

Since November 1970, Pyongyang has sustained a massive program of military modernization which has reversed the balance of forces on the Korean peninsula dramatically in its favor. North Korean armed forces personnel has tripled from 393,000 in 1970 to 1.2 million today. Meanwhile, the South Korean army has not similarly expanded, giving the North a greater than two-to-one advantage. "By nearly every measure of relative combat power, the North Koreans enjoy significant advantages over the South," says a highly classified DIA estimate.

DIA calculations note, however, that South Korea's equipment is much more modern than the North's. American troops and air power would eventually carry the day — but it would take two months and result in tens of thousands of casualties.

The DIA's biggest concern is the massive North Korean buildup in the area along the demilitarized zone (DMZ). More than 8,400 artillery pieces and 2,400 multiple rocket launchers have been positioned near the border.

As we have reported, the North has already dug an intricate network of tunnels along the DMZ in preparation for an assault on the South. "The discovery of the tunnels and continued searches for others reduce somewhat their ability to effectively contribute to a North Korean offensive," one classified DIA report allowed. "Nevertheless, until all are located and neutralized, North Korean-built tunnels represent a potentially significant military threat to the South."

DIA officials believe they would be used "to place specialized troops behind (South Korea's) forward defense line." In their reports, the DIA believes North Korea has a huge special forces unit, some 100,000 men who would tunnel under the DMZ or be dropped behind South Korean lines by air.

Two geographical features dominate the Korean battlefield at this point. The first favors the defender, South Korea, since the rugged, mountainous terrain running the length of the DMZ means that an invasion spearheaded by armor must progress down three corridors.

But the second geographical factor favors the attacking North — Seoul is only 30 miles from the DMZ. The fact that this city, the economic and strategic heart of South Korea, is so close favors the invader: It denies forces protecting the capital room for defense in depth, or even much space for tactical retreat.

The Pentagon scenarios of a renewed Korean war frequently include the initial loss of Seoul to the North Korean forces, because it is so difficult to defend without adequate preparation. But the newest scenarios include a planned U.S.-South Korean counteroffensive to capture the North Korean capital of Pyongyang, possibly even in a leapfrog manner.

And some of those scenarios suggest the use of nuclear weapons to slow down any North Korean attack.

WILLIAM SAFIRE

Responsibility rests on murderer — admired or hated

WASHINGTON — The moving images in our minds of O.J. Simpson breaking through tackle or racing through an airport have slammed to stillness in a mug shot issued by the Los Angeles police.

Safire

For the first time, we are faced with this question: How do we react to the charge that someone famed for his winning ways may be a knife-wielding murderer of two people?

First, we suspend judgment until he enters his plea. If he continues to maintain he is not guilty, we extend to him the presumption of innocence — not just as a formality, but as our assertion of the rights of every individual against the power of the state.

Next, we knock off this stuff about his being "an American hero." Although he was an authentic football hero, later capitalizing on his celebrity in films and television, Simpson was by no means a figure like Jackie Robinson — who, through his sports example and later by extensive community work, found a way to have a positive impact on American life.

Then we do our best to set aside the usual racial overtone in the prosecution of a black in the killing of whites. Simpson came under suspicion because he was the former husband of one of the victims, not because of his color; his jurors must not be influenced by concerns of the impact on his fans and supporters of every race, exemplified by those mindless motorists who lined the freeway shouting "Go, O.J.!" as he was followed to his arrest by a procession of police cars.

Finally, those of us outside the judicial process should focus on what we know about this case, rather than on leaks from defense and prosecution. And the most stunning piece of evidence so far made public is his suicide note, addressed "to whom it may concern," which is you and me.

That the document is a suicide note, or was intended by Simpson to be read as such, seems beyond dispute. After reasserting he had "nothing to do with Nicole's murder," he bade farewell to friends: "As I leave, you'll be in my thoughts." He used the dramatic suicide cliche: "I can't go on." He twice put his life in the past tense: "I've had a good life ... I've had a great life." Impending self-destruction thus declared, Simpson — "this lost person" — then ran away from the cops, reportedly gun in hand.

The obvious question: If innocent, why couldn't he "go on"? Why run away from life, or from the police? His defense may say he was gripped by mental depression and irrationally thought a fair trial was impossible.

That's arguable; but the suicide note strikes me as evidence of a flight from responsibility — Simpson's attempt to manipulate the emotions of friends and fans by claiming reverse victimhood.

"At times I have felt like a battered husband or boyfriend," he wrote. This from a man who, after eight previous complaints of wife-beating, was finally arrested five years ago and pleaded no contest to his wife's charge. An overly lenient judge let the celebrity off with a small fine, quickly forgotten community service, and promised phone calls to a psychiatrist.

Simpson would have us believe that the victim in 1989 was not the abused wife with the black eye and bruised neck, but the famous football hero. The real perpetrator was not the husband who did not contest her charge but the press: he claims he entered his nolo plea only "to protect our privacy" and to "end the press hype." He dismissed her repeated calls to police as "all this press talk about a rocky relationship." Back then, in other words, the media made him do it.

A legitimate Simpson defense to today's murder charges would demand the government prove its case. We can hope he avoids the no-responsibility defense, popularized by the Menendez and Bobbitt lawyers, holding that the real victim is not the dead or injured but the abused accused.

Justice can also do without this argument: A person who has money, looks, and public adulation would have to be crazy or drugged out of his mind to commit murder — and thus insane, cannot be held responsible.

This case will force domestic violence out of the shadows, which is good. But all justice is individual: two human beings were stabbed to death.

Responsibility rests not on cruel society, nosy reporters, drug-related derangement or maddening provocation, but on the murderer, whether an admired celebrity or a hated hoodlum.

ART BUCHWALD

Author has way to make everyone talk

It doesn't surprise me that Bob Woodward would write another book giving us the inside details of what happens at 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue.

Buchwald

This book is about the often chaotic inner workings of the White House under the Clinton Administration.

What perplexes me is that people still talk to Woodward even though they know that their chances of coming out alive are only 50-50. It is something I've been curious about ever since I stole hubcaps in a basement garage with Woodward and Deep Throat.

I went over to the White House to see if I could find the answer there.

I asked Tim St. Maxens, who runs the Oval Room Information Office: "I know that this is a stupid question but everyone in the White House talked to Bob Woodward, including the President and Mrs. Clinton. Do you have any explanation why they were all sucked in?"

"Bob is a very beguiling person, and if you don't talk to him he looks as if he's going to cry," Tim told me.

"I understand that, but his book is full of back-biting and double-dealing. Aren't the staff smart enough to realize that what they are doing could hurt the President?"

"No, they aren't," said Tim. You have to understand something about the President's staff — most of them are only interested in protecting themselves. They hope that if they open up to Woodward they will at least come out in his book better than the guy who works in the next office."

"Woodward made Hillary Clinton sound as if she ran the country. Do you think that Mrs. Clinton sounded off to Woodward to protect her own position in the White House?"

"More than likely. There are a lot of people in the White House who would give their eye teeth to be that close to the President."

"Woodward portrays the President as clumsy and indecisive. Do you think that Clinton told Bob that himself?"

Tim responded cautiously, "Probably. Once Woodward gets people talking they even blow the whistle on themselves."

"What will those staffers quoted as saying nasty things do now?"

"If they hope to keep their jobs they will deny that they ever talked to Woodward."

"Will the President believe them?"

"Being indecisive, he may or may not."

"Woodward quotes people when there were only two of them in the room. In his opening chapter he has Clinton and Hillary in bed discussing his chances of winning the Presidency again. The conversation is all dialogue. Was Woodward in the room with them?"

"There are two theories on this. One is that Woodward was sitting on the edge of the bed unnoticed while the first couple were talking, or he was under the bed. Knowing Bob, we all think that it was the latter."

I had one final question for Tim, "What is the effect on the President now that he knows what everybody thinks of everybody else in the White House?"

"At first it didn't bother him, but lately he's worried because Woodward is not returning his calls."

Airman who killed 4, wounded 23 was discharged 6 weeks ago

■ Victims included two therapists who recommended gunman's discharge.

Associated Press

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — Six weeks after Dean A. Mellberg was discharged from the military for emotional problems, he stuffed an assault rifle in a gym bag, took a cab to Fairchild Air Force Base and killed four people, including two therapists who recommended his discharge.

The former airman wounded 23 other people during his five-minute rampage through the base hospital Monday.

A military police officer who sped to the scene on a bicycle killed him from 70 yards away with a handgun as Mellberg chased a man around a car in a parking lot.

"It was sheer pandemonium," said Gordon Fagras, who owns a coffee cart in the hospital.

Dressed in black jeans and a black T-shirt, the 20-year-old Mellberg went to an office shared by a base psychiatrist and psychologist, killed both, then walked through a hallway in the hospital annex, firing as he went, Spokane County Undersheriff John Goldman said. He briefly entered the main hospital and shot up the cafeteria before running outside.

"When you start hearing rounds going off ... there's no fear because you're thinking, 'They ain't going to get me,' " said Orson Lee, a veteran who was at the hospital for follow-up treatment.

Lee said Mellberg shot at him but hit a tree outside the hospital. Shrapnel hit him in the arm.

The dead included an 8-year-old girl. A 4-year-old boy and a 5-year-old girl were among the wounded.

Mellberg had had problems with a roommate in a dormitory while he was stationed at Fairchild, said the base commander, Col. William Brooks. The Seattle Times reported the dispute started last year when the roommate started rumors that Mellberg was homosexual.

"They put out rumors he was gay. ... They stole chairs from inside his room. ... They flattened the tires on his bike," said Mellberg's mother, Lois Mellberg of Lansing, Mich.

Mellberg arrived at Fairchild in April 1993 as an aircraft maintenance worker, Brooks said. He received an honorable discharge May 1 after transferring in March to Cannon Air Force Base in New Mexico.

Marlene Anderson, manager of a Spokane hotel where Mellberg checked in five days before the shooting spree, told The Associated Press his parents called her to complain about his treatment at Fairchild.

"She says if you could only know the horrible horrendous things that Spokane did to that boy," Anderson said. "So something really bad happened to him here, but she didn't elaborate, she didn't tell me."

The gunman targeted psychiatrist Maj. Thomas Brigham, 31, and his office mate, Capt. Alan London, 40, a psychologist.

Authorities warn newlyweds, new parents of scam

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) — Two shadowy companies have tried to deceive Nebraskans into paying a fee for a service the government provides at no charge, the attorney general's office said Tuesday.

Dan Parsons, who runs the consumer protection division of the attorney general's office, said newlyweds, new parents and people who have changed their names are getting materials in the mail from companies offering to have the information processed through the Social Security Administration.

The fee usually is $15, Parsons said.

If you read the fine print on the official looking solicitations, you learn that the government will do the same thing for free, Parsons said.

But new parents and other busy people aren't taking the time to read the fine print. "They're preying on people who are most vulnerable," he said.

New parents, for example, may fill out a form at the hospital, which then ships it on to the government so that the child is registered with Social Security.

It's entirely legal for a company to charge a fee to do that, but the solicitations are deceptive, Parsons said.

The mailings are made to appear as if they come from a government agency, right down to including an image of the United States Capitol building on the letterhead, he said.

Football hero stands trial in 'court of public opinion'

By Tony Freemantle
Hearst News Service

LOS ANGELES — The courtroom drama already billed as the "case of the century" is months away, but O.J. Simpson, the beloved football hero accused of brutal murder, is already on trial in the court of public opinion.

And the toughest obstacle in that trial stands in the path of Los Angeles County prosecutors, who must overcome widespread emotional support for a man the public does not want to believe is capable of the crimes he is charged with committing.

Celebrity cases are not new to this city of the stars. Indeed, Simpson is being held in the "celebrity section" of the county jail — an area used to segregate high-profile defendants from the general jail population.

But few people can recall a defendant who enjoys the popularity of Simpson, nor a case that poses such a challenge to the prosecutors who have the task of trying to convict him.

"What we are seeing in the Simpson case is a public trial preceding the criminal trial, and that is simply because of his huge popularity," said Peter Aranella, a University of California at Los Angeles criminal law professor. "When you have charged with capital murder a man who millions believe is incapable of such actions, you start out with a few strikes against you."

Obviously conscious of this fact, L.A. County District Attorney Gil Garcetti has embarked on what legal experts said is an unprecedented public relations campaign on network television. Garcetti is portraying Simpson as a cold-blooded, wife-beating killer and reminding the public of the two people who were so brutally slain.

Simpson, 46, is accused of murder in the stabbing deaths of his ex-wife, Nicole Brown Simpson, 35, and her friend, Ronald Goldman, 25, a waiter in a restaurant she frequented, outside her fashionable Brentwood condominium the night of June 12.

On Tuesday, Simpson remained under suicide watch in his cell while a grand jury continued an investigation that could lead to indictments. Simpson pleaded not guilty to the murder charges during a brief court appearance Monday. He is not expected to appear at a hearing scheduled for today on what evidence police have gathered and when it will be made available to the defense.

Prosecutors and police have not commented on their evidence against Simpson.

Conscious of the public relations difficulties facing the prosecution, Simpson's attorney, Robert Shapiro, who has defended numerous high-profile celebrities, has said he, too, is concerned that Simpson's star status will make it difficult for him to receive a fair trial.

Shapiro maintains he has not yet formulated a defense, but there is widespread speculation that by constantly reminding the public about Simpson's fragile emotional state, he may be setting the stage for an insanity defense.

But Simpson's image and popularity also may hinder that strategy, said Aranella.

"If the defense chooses to raise the insanity defense they will have a difficult time convincing the jury that this successful, much-loved legend, who has made a fortune and appears to be charming and lovable, was, in fact, a crazed demon," he said.

Schools to teach values

IRVING — School board members in a Dallas suburb have voted to teach traditional values in the district curricula.

The Irving school board voted 6-1 Monday to adopt a resolution presented by city resident Stephen Fellows.

The resolution commits the school district, which educates about 25,600 students, to emphasizing such tenets as "determining right from wrong, honesty, sexual abstinence, love of country and respect for and value of human life."

Analyst: City jobs outlook iffy

Area unemployment rate increases modestly in May

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

Unemployment posted a slight increase in Midland and Odessa in May, according to figures released Tuesday by the Texas Employment Commission.

The unemployment rate in the Odessa-Midland Metropolitan Statistical Area (MSA) inched up to 7.7 percent in May from 7.5 percent in April. The rate in May 1993 was also 7.5 percent.

According to the statistics, 400 residents left the civilian labor force — which fell to 117,400 from 117,800 in April — but is well above the 115,300 of May 1993.

Fewer of those in the labor force were employed in May. Total employment fell to 108,400 from 109,000 in April. In May 1993, employment was 106,700.

Total unemployment was also higher

■ Future depends on development, oil prices, retail sales, economic diversification, consumer confidence, TEC analyst says.

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

Like a jigsaw puzzle, a number of pieces have to fit together to form a clear picture of Midland's employment outlook for the remainder of the year and into the next.

"The jobs outlook for Midland is a big fat 'if,'" said Mark Dermit, labor analyst with the Texas Employment Commission's Midland regional office.

■ If development along Loop 250 — the Olive Garden and Black Eyed Pea restaurants and Best Buys electronics store — gets final approval.

■ If oil prices remain stable near or above $20 — encouraging producers to reactivate secondary projects.

■ And if the summer and Christmas seasons are strong, that would provide a strong starting point for job creation in 1995.

"If all these things come together and at least they're there — several years ago they weren't even there — if they come together and coalesce, the outlook for the end of the year and into next year is good," Dermit said.

Harrell case testimony comes before sentence

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel
Staff Writer

Testimony began late Tuesday in the sentencing of convicted murderer Ramsey Blake Harrell, who was found in contempt of court for refusing to testify.

Harrell was found in contempt of court by 238th District Court Judge John Hyde on June 8 when Harrell refused to testify during the capital-murder trial of Michael Scott Thomas, 20.

Jury selection for the sentencing lasted three hours. The seven-man, five-woman jury heard only one witness before being dismissed Wednesday.

Harrell faces 12 separate counts of contempt, although he refused to answer 26 questions during the Thomas trial. The 12 counts were based on the different areas of inquiry in which he refused to testify.

He could face up to six months in jail

'Rag burglar' wife goes back to jail

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel
Staff Writer

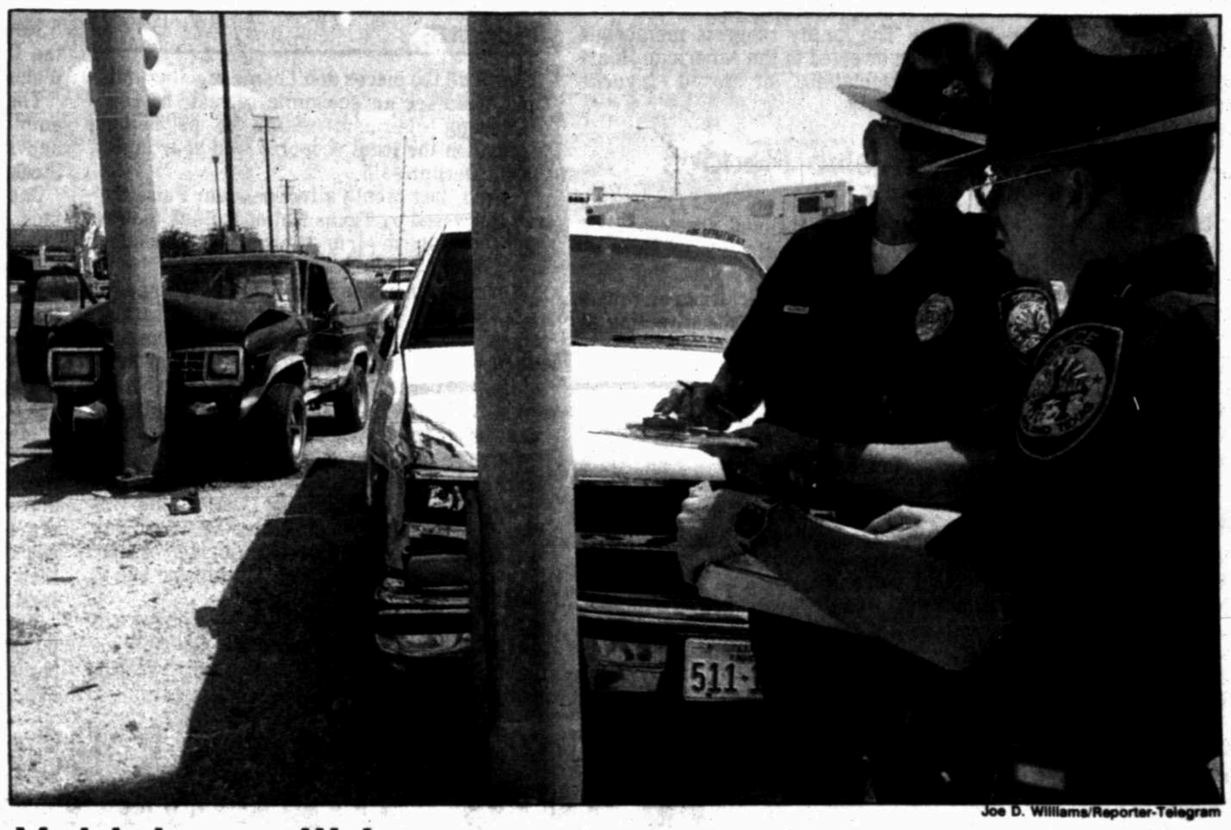

After pleading guilty to receiving stolen property and getting a probated sentence, the wife of the "rag burglar" is back in jail and could have her probation revoked.

Cybil Bonnette, 36, aka, Barbara Bustamante was sentenced to eight years probation in exchange for her guilty plea just a few weeks ago.

However, Ms. Bonnette was arrested again Tuesday afternoon and charged with public intoxication and two counts of parole violation. She is scheduled to appear in court today for arraignment.

Further details surrounding the possible revocation of her probation were not available late Tuesday.

MISD votes down AIDS education game

By Katherine Poteet
Staff Writer

The inclusion of an AIDS education game into the Midland Independent School District's health curriculum invoked strong emotions and arguments Tuesday before it was voted down by the board of trustees.

Three residents spoke in favor of adding the teaching tool, "AIDS Is No Game" and seven spoke out against the game, which was introduced at the June 8 school board meeting by Richard Torres, executive director of secondary operations.

The game consisted of two levels of questions concerning AIDS. The first level — which was recommended for the seventh grade — presented basic facts on AIDS in an age-appropriate and community-sensitive manner. The second level — recommended for high school students — dealt with AIDS in a more frank manner. Both levels taught abstinence as the best way to avoid getting AIDS.

Suzanne Bloodworth and Geriann Green, who both were instrumental in getting the game presented to the district, spoke in favor of including the game in the cirriculum.

"I am personally very conservative," Ms. Bloodworth said. "But, I feel a personal responsibility for getting AIDS education into the district."

Ms. Green said the game was simply

MC board OKs $18 million budget that includes raises for instructors

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

The Midland College Board of Trustees granted tentative approval to a preliminary $18 million budget for the institution, including an overall 3 percent increase in salaries.

Most of the increase will be realized by instructors at the institution, rather than administrators and non-teaching personnel, explained Bob Phillips, vice president of administrative services.

Instructors' pay raises have been left out of recent budgets, President David E. Daniel said.

"We're aware of that and want to take measures to correct it, even in a lean year," he said. "We've sent a good, clear message here that instruction is the most important thing we do."

The preliminary budget represents a 2.5 percent increase over last year's budget. Factors influencing this increase are the pay raises and, to a lesser degree, the initiation of a women's basketball program and adding two additional staff members.

To compensate for these budget additions and an anticipated loss of more than $150,000 in state funding, tuitions are scheduled to increase by $1 or more per credit hour. Other fees could be increased as well under the new budget.

As it stands, the budget is within [illegible] of being balanced, Daniel said. "We've been through this budget now three times, reducing it each time, and we'll go through it again," he said.

The finalized budget will be presented for board approval at the August board meeting.

One of the new staff members is to be employed in the financial aid office to help

Stanton prepares for Old Sorehead Trade Days

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

STANTON — Texas and New Mexico flea-market merchants bearing goods and wares from antiques and foods to arts and crafts are getting ready for Stanton's Old Sorehead Trade Days this weekend.

"We have streets blocked off that we never have blocked off before," said Trade Days promoter Kathryn Burch. "It is going to be a huge, huge show."

More than 350 vendors — including fresh-food merchants — will be setting up booths for the fifth in a series of Old Sorehead Trade Days — inspired by the First Monday Trade Days in Canton.

The most recent Trade Days, in April, attracted between 25,000 and 30,000 browsers and bargain-hunters.

"They were packed in here like sardines," recalled Trade Days booster Brenda Kaye Kendall.

Old Sorehead Trade Days was launched last year to bolster the community's agriculture-based economy. It was viewed as a way to provide jobs for its youth and funds to restore Stanton's Old Convent and to create a rustic facade in downtown Stanton — to put a "nostalgic flavor" on the business district, Mrs. Kendall said.

Trade Days hours will be from sunrise to sunset on Saturday. On Sunday the event will last from "right after church until five o'clock so you'll have enough time to get back home and go back to church that night," Mrs. Kendall said.

"As far as I can tell, I think we've got everything coming, everything from arts and crafts to antiques," she said.

Vendors throughout much of Texas and New Mexico will be setting up booths to exhibit and sell their wares, arts, crafts and food.

Trade Days — jointly sponsored by the Martin County Chamber of Commerce and the Community Development Committee of the county's Texas Agricultural Extension Service — is drawing community-wide support.

It has "put a new spark into downtown," Mrs. Kendall said. "The business owners are painting their buil-

Memorials may be made to Mothers Against Drunk Driving, P.O. Box 8874, Midland, 79708.

COURT: Harrell's appearance changes and a $500 fine for each count.

(From 1B)

Harrell, 18, was convicted of murder on Feb. 14 and sentenced to 12 years in prison for the murder of Tommy Edward Musick, 48, of Midland.

Musick was shot four times in the back of the head and left to die on a county road April 14, 1993. He died in the early morning hours of April 15 in an Odessa hospital.

Thomas was a co-defendant in the Musick murder. He was acquitted of capital-murder charges and found guilty of aggravated robbery. He was sentenced to nine years in prison.

During Harrell's trial in February, he confessed to being the triggerman in the murder. He had been charged with capital murder, but the jury found him guilty of a lesser charge of murder.

Harrell's highly publicized trial focused on his defense that he shot Musick for making sexual advances toward Thomas. Thomas disputed those claims, telling the jury he didn't know why Harrell shot Musick.

When he appeared at Thomas' trial, Harrell looked different from how he appeared at his own trial. At his trial, he was dressed in a dark suit and wore thick glasses. On June 8 at Thomas' trial, Harrell sported the "skinhead" look and had a large tattoo showing on his left arm. He was not wearing his glasses.

On the first day of his contempt sentencing trial, Harrell's hair had grown out to more of a flattop haircut and the thick eyeglasses and dark suit had returned.

Midland County Attorney Mark Dettman is serving as the prosecutor in the contempt trial. The first witness he called was Midland County District Attorney Al Schorre.

Schorre testified about the 12 different lines of questions posed to Harrell in Thomas' trial. He explained to the jury that each time a question was asked, Harrell refused to answer, even after the judge instructed him to do so.

Schorre said the judge explained to Harrell that he had no privilege to refuse to answer questions and failing to cooperate could result in contempt charges. He also explained that contempt could result in fines or additional jail time.

Schorre said he believed Harrell's refusal to testify "had a bearing" on the outcome of the Thomas trial. He said he thought Harrell's testimony was important to the trial and "could have had a significant impact on the jury."

"The state felt (Harrell's testimony) was evidence that Scott Thomas actively participated in the murder and robbery," Schorre said.

"Had he testified, I'm sure it would have influenced the jury," Schorre said.

Upon cross-examination by Vern Martin — Harrell's attorney — Schorre said Harrell's testimony could have been beneficial for Thomas as well as the state.

Schorre also said he didn't want to call Harrell to testify after his refusal because he "didn't know what he would say or do . . . he had become very hostile.

"I could no longer count on the fact that he would give testimony . . . he had already given," he said.

The district attorney said that prior to the time that Harrell refused to testify, he had told Harrell's attorneys that he didn't plan to introduce any new charges against Harrell.

He also said that Harrell and Thomas contradicted each other's testimony during their respective trials.

Martin asked Schorre about any intentions he may have had for presenting perjury charges against Harrell to the grand jury. Schorre explained it would take more than one witness to prove perjury on Harrell's part and he wouldn't present a case like that to the grand jury.

"Do you think Mr. Harrell knew that?" Martin asked Schorre.

"It never came up," he replied.

Testimony will continue this morning in 238th District Court. The trial is expected to end sometime today.

ECONOMY: Perception comes into play

(From 1B)

But if all the pieces don't come together, Midland could see an economic retreat, he said.

Growing optimism seems to be helping strengthen the local economy and spur investment, Dermit said.

Indeed, last month's Independent Pulse Survey sponsored by Texas National Bank found a slight increase in planned hiring by responding companies.

A similar increase was found in Manpower Inc.'s quarterly employment outlook survey, which found 13 percent of local businesses planned increased hiring in the third quarter — up from 10 percent in the second quarter. At the same time, 3 percent planned to cut staff, the same as the previous quarter.

Jobs are coming not only from national restaurant and retail chains. According to the Small Business Development Center of the University of Texas of the Permian Basin, 20 new businesses opened in the final quarter of 1993. These 20 businesses created 39 full-time and 20 part-time positions.

New jobs have been created by, among others, Wal-Mart's new Supercenter, the Outback Steakhouse and Rosa's Cafe and Tortilla Factory.

New jobs are expected with construction of the Office Depot, Builders Square and other planned development.

The TEC has been working with these new employers. It brought in a trailer from Austin and set it up at the location of the Outback Steakhouse to help with hiring employees.

Jackie Moseley, office manager of the Midland TEC office, said such assistance is available to all new employers, with approximately two weeks' notice.

She said the TEC can assist with interviewing, taking applications and employee screening.

As important as attracting new businesses is the attitude of residents and existing businesses, Dermit said.

"Perception is very important," he pointed out. "If consumers feel the economy is better, they'll spend more — consumer spending drives the economy. . . . That prompts employers — who are seeing dollars coming in — to get optimistic and spend money to upgrade their facilities or expand or move into better facilities. It's a domino effect."

Dermit said Midland has weathered cutbacks by oil companies and manufacturers in 1992 by having a solid core labor force. He said the city appears positioned for an economic expansion, but he offered some suggestions.

He recommended that city officials look hard at zoning as well as examine what attracts businesses to Midland and how to sell them on the city.

And "you always want a strong manufacturing base" — which city officials need to encourage — to diversify the city's dominant oil-field manufacturing base, he said.

Most of the new jobs being created are in retail, which is good because it's a fast-growing — though low-paying — sector of the economy, he said. However, the sector is also very sensitive to economic recession.

Midland is also seeing growth in other parts of the service sector, such as health services, which are less sensitive to recession, he said. Memorial Hospital and Medical Center has recently completed a multi-million dollar expansion, and Physicians and Surgeons Hospital has announced plans for a new, larger hospital.

"With factors still in flux, it's real hard to nail it down and say 'Yes, this will be a good year.' If we wait and see how certain external factors work out, then we'll see developments much better.

"Hopefully, by August we'll see more clearly how job creation — by the end of the year and hopefully into next year — will be," he said.

SCHOOLS: AIDS stirs emotions

(From 1B)

another way of getting the message of AIDS education to Midland students.

Molly Kruger, who said she was a member of First United Methodist Church and a supporter of AIDS victims, said she is in favor of including the game in the district, especially in light of the 153 cases of AIDS reported to date in Midland.

Iris Englet was among those who argued against the game. She said that the game referred to anal sex, which was considered sodomy under the Texas sodomy law and therefore against the law.

Other opponents of the game included Doug Bacon, who called the game "full of lies," and Daren McIntyre, who said the game "teaches our children perverse and immoral sex acts."

Trustee Robin Hightower said she objected to 16 specific questions in the game because the terms were not currently used in the district's health curriculum. She made the motion to approve the game with the amendment that it be adapted to current curriculum. That motion did not pass after a tie vote of 3-3.

The original recommendation to include the game as is was voted down by a vote of 1-5. Trustee James Fuller voted for the recommendation.

A recommendation to form a task force to further study the game was voted down by a vote of 2-4. Fuller and trustee Michael Dobey voted for the task force.

The board also heard a preliminary budget report from Superintendent Joseph Baressi, Director of Finance Art Martin and Business Manager Don Ferguson.

Baressi told the board that the preliminary budget figure was $16.7 million.

"We have done a deliberate job of holding down our current level of expense," he said. "I am concerned about the tax rate and holding the line on tax increases.

COLLEGE: Grants may replace loans more students apply for Pell grants. A greater number of Pell grants are anticipated for next year to compensate for the board's decision to drop student loans because of the institution's high default rate.

(From 1B)

Also at the board meeting:

- Daniel told board members that the first summer-term enrollment was 1,660 — within four students of last year's summer enrollment.
- It was announced that 821 students have registered for the first semester of Kid's College. If this number holds for the second term, Kid's College will have a new record summer attendance.
- Board members passed a resolution — to be presented to state officials — for the promotion of the selection of a Midland route for the future extension of Interstate Highway 27 south from Lubbock.

JOBS: State records similar increase

(From 1B)

— rising to 9,000 from 8,800 in April. Unemployment in May 1993 was 8,600.

"We saw a similar small increase in the state rate," said Rachel Porras, employment supervisor in the TEC's Midland office.

She said the increase is seasonal. The influx of students and others seeking summer work and a decrease in school-related employment usually send the unemployment rate higher.

According to the TEC, Midland County's unemployment rate was unchanged from April's rate of 5.8 percent. Ector County's rate rose to 9.4 percent from 9.1 percent.

Odessa-Midland was ranked 18th among the commission's 27 MSAs.

The lowest unemployment rate was seen in Bryan-College Station, with 3.4 percent, followed by Austin-San Marcos with 3.6 percent, Amarillo with 4.1 percent, Lubbock with 4.3 percent and San Antonio with 4.7 percent. The highest rate was seen in McAllen-Edinburg-Mission, with a 14.2 percent rate.

Statewide, the unemployment rate inched up to 6.3 percent in May from 6.2 percent in April, just below May 1993's rate of 6.4 percent.

TEC officials said the state added 221,400 jobs since May 1993 — a 3 percent increase.

dings" and volunteers are sprucing up vacant downtown buildings.

"They are making downtown look wonderful. I am just so proud of everybody. Everybody has really pulled together," she said.

Trade Days president Corky Blocker said the weekend event is having a favorable effect on Stanton.

"Downtown Stanton is looking better all of the time," Blocker said.

Displays will be set up on St. Peter, Broadway and Convent streets, in the Martin County Community Center and near-by buildings.

Foods will be sold from booths at the Broadway Food Court and Red Light Food Court, which will be centered under the traffic light on St. Peter Street. It is the town's main street and fronts the Martin County Courthouse.

"Both food courts are going to be really good," Mrs. Burch said. Foods will include sliced watermelon, fresh-food-on-a-stick, roasted ears of corn, shaved ice and restaurant foods.

Austin high school girls get marital advice from Richards, Bush

By Sam Howe Verhovek
N.Y. Times News Service

HOUSTON — As their campaign for governor gets under way, Ann W. Richards and George W. Bush have been trading jabs over the Texas economy, taxes and crime. But Tuesday the sparring turned to a highly unusual campaign issue: whether men are frauds.

Speaking to hundreds of high school girls in Austin on Monday, Governor Richards, a Democrat running for re-election, urged the teen-agers to become more self-reliant.

"I cannot tell you what a pitfall it is to count on Prince Charming to make you feel better about yourself and take care of you," she said.

"Prince Charming may be driving a Honda and telling you you have no equal, but that's not going to do much good when you've got kids and a mortgage," she continued. "And I could add he's got a beer gut and a wandering eye."

A campaign spokesman for Ms. Richards said that she was simply using "humor and wit" to make an important point.

But Bush, the governor's Republican opponent and the eldest son of the former president, was quick to attack the governor's comments, which he characterized as unfortunate and anti-family.

"This is not the message Texans want their leaders to give our daughters or sons," Bush said in a statement. "Our leaders should be building up the family, not tearing it down. We want our sons and daughters to look upon marriage as an equal partnership where — contrary to the governor's assertion — husbands and wives help and love each other."

The spokesman for Ms. Richards, Cindy Rugeley, said the message was one the governor has preached before, about the importance of both sexes assuming responsibility in life. "That's not anti-family," Ms. Rugeley said.

After the speech, Ms. Richards, who is divorced, said she thought it was important for girls to be prepared for the reality that many marriages will end in divorce.

"I know that isn't going to happen to you, but it is going to happen to half of you," she said in the remarks to the 50th anniversary gathering of Texas Girls State, a convention of high school student leaders. Ms. Richards is a 1949 alumna of the gathering.

Some Texans wondered what campaign strategy the governor might have had in mind when she made her remarks.

One important reason Ms. Richards squeaked to victory in 1990 was her appeal to conservative Republican women, many of whom crossed party lines because they were turned off by the Republican candidate, Clayton Williams. During his campaign, Williams joked about rape and talked of soliciting prostitutes in his college days.

Police Reports

Accident injures man

A man remained in critical condition at Memorial Hospital and Medical Center Tuesday following a two-vehicle accident at the intersection of Loop 250 and Midland Drive earlier in the day.

Police officials said a pickup, driven by 33-year-old Bobby Green, was eastbound in the inside lane on Loop 250 at about 3:45 p.m. At the same time, a sport utility vehicle, driven by 42-year-old Lyane King, was eastbound in the outside lane. At the intersection of Midland Drive, the utility vehicle attempted to turn left from the outside lane in front of the pickup, sending both vehicles into traffic light poles.

King was transported to the hospital with facial injuries. Green was not injured.

Police said alcohol was a contributing factor in the accident and they plan to charge King with driving while intoxicated.

CHARGES: Getting in legal trouble upsets probation

(From 1B)

Probation conditions require that the probationer stay out of legal trouble during the probation period. An arrest could lead to having probation revoked by a judge.

Ms. Bonnette was initially arrested in March following the arrest of her common-law husband, Andrew Bonnette, 36.

Bonnette pleaded guilty to three counts of burglary of a habitation last week and was sentenced to 40 years in prison.

Bonnette was taken into custody March 31 after he led Midland police on a high-speed chase that ended near the Odessa Country Club on Highway 80.

Bonnette was dubbed the "rag burglar" because of his method of operation in the break-ins of a large number of Midland homes in the north and west areas of town along Loop 250. In most of the burglaries a knife or screwdriver was used to pry open doors and rags and towels were used to handle items.

Officials said Bonnette was on parole from the Texas Department of Corrections for burglary and other offenses.

No advance purchase. Fully refundable.

Hurry, seats for this summer are going fast. Now when you buy a Continental Pal Fare,℠ roundtrip in coach to one of the cities below (via specific connections), you can take a Pal along for just a penny more each way. It's called Add-A-Penny-Add-A-Pal.℠ There's no advance purchase required. And all tickets are fully refundable.

From Midland/Odessa

Austin • Baton Rouge • Brownsville • Corpus Christi El Paso • Harlingen • Houston • Kansas City Lafayette • Little Rock • Louisville • McAllen • New Orleans Oklahoma City • Omaha • San Antonio St. Louis • Tulsa, starting June 23, Milwaukee and starting July 1, Albuquerque

Very few, very small, very reasonable restrictions. However, this great Add-A-Penny-Add-A-Pal deal does have a few small restrictions.

First, you have to be at least 18 years old, but your Pal can be any age. Both of your roundtrip reservations have to be made at the same time, for the same flights, and at least one day in advance. With such a tempting offer, demand will be high and seats are limited. (Certain flights may not be available between all cities.) So, go ahead make your plans now. You will need to stay over for at least one night, but any night is fine. You're also eligible to earn mileage from our frequent flier program: OnePass.℠ It's really a pretty good deal, don't you think? (Unfortunately upgrades are not available, and your Pal is not eligible to receive OnePass miles.)

The best summer days for you and your Pal to fly. To take advantage of this great offer, we encourage you to travel Monday through Thursday or all day Saturday. Typically, Fridays, Sundays and holidays (i.e., 4th of July) are the most popular days to travel, and most seats have already been sold so plan carefully. It's just that simple. Koslow testifies during teen-age daughter's capital-murder trial

By Mike Cochran
Associated Press

FORT WORTH (AP) — The survivor of a deadly 1992 assault testified Tuesday he awakened that night to the shrill sounds of a home alarm, shouts, a crashing door and the screams of his terrified wife.

"They're in the house!" Jack Koslow recalled his wife crying moments before intruders broke down their bedroom door.

Testifying in his teen-age daughter's capital-murder trial, Koslow said the assailants ordered him and his wife to lie face down on the floor and someone began beating him.

"I remember the whole world turning black. I remember him beating me and beating me and beating me until I didn't remember anymore," he told the spellbound courtroom.

Once he regained consciousness, Koslow said, he rushed to his wife and tried to lift her from the floor.

"I knew then she was either dead or dying," Koslow said, recalling that he was swept by a feeling of "rage and hatred."

Koslow's chilling recollections capped the first day of testimony that included a blueprint of the prosecutions devastating case and a pivotal ruling by the judge that jurors will hear Kristi Koslow's "confession."

Chief Prosecutor Alan Levy, in his opening remarks to the jury, portrayed the 19-year-old defendant as the admitted mastermind of a bizarre scheme to kill her adoptive father and stepmother.

Lead defense attorney Tim Evans argued that Miss Koslow's statement was not a confession, but the remarks of a confused and frightened 17-year-old.

Step by step, Levy told jurors how two teen-agers, one Miss Koslow's boyfriend, invaded the Koslow home two years ago and beat Jack and Caren Koslow with a pry bar and cut their throats with a knife.

Mrs. Koslow, 40, died. Koslow, 51, was seriously injured and gave testimony that helped put one of the other defendants on death row.

Jeffrey Dillingham, 21, was convicted of capital murder last year and sentenced to die by injection. Brian Salter, 22, Miss Koslow's boyfriend, later pleaded guilty in exchange for a life sentence.

Salter and Koslow are both expected to give key testimony against Miss Koslow.

Evans attacked the plea bargain in his comments to the jury and suggested that Salter had the motive, means and opportunity to set the murder-for-hire plot in motion.

Tuesday's opening presentations came after state District Court Judge Bob Gill denied a defense motion to suppress the statements Miss Koslow gave the morning of her arrest.

That was two weeks after the March 11 bloody assault in the upstairs master bedroom of the Koslow's stylish Rivercrest home.

And, Evans said to jurors, it was only 24 hours after homicide Detective Curt Brannan and other investigators were poised to arrest Koslow and charge him with his wife's murder.

"Detective Brannan was concerned with nothing but that Jack Koslow had done it," Evans asserted. "His investigation was focused exclusively on Jack Koslow."

Evans went on to suggest that Brannan, "embarrassed" and vindictive, "badgered" Miss Koslow for an hour before flipping on the tape recorder for her formal statement.

"When he got it as good as he could get it, he went back and turned the tape on," Evans told the jury of six men and six women.

"You will learn that this was not a confession at all."

Levy, Tarrant County's top prosecutor, told the jury the state would show that Miss Koslow provided Salter and Dillingham the alarm code and a drawing of the Koslow home.

Private Sheenway school radiates hope in heart of Watts

By Deborah Hastings
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Hope is a scarce commodity in the heart of Watts. But at the Sheenway School and Culture Center, it springs eternal from the heart of Aunt Dolores.

Her real name is Dolores Sheen Blunt, but to 42 black students in brown plaid uniforms she is simply Aunt Dolores — a take-no-guff, stand-up-straight, spit-that-gum-out kind of principal who does something very special at this private school in the rumbling shade of the Harbor Freeway.

Blunt teaches respect, self-pride and manners. She teaches reading, writing and arithmetic, too, but don't expect to find much in the way of institutionalized book-learning at Sheenway.

"We've got all kinds of state-approved textbooks the kids use as a resource and for research," Blunt says. "I rarely use them when I teach."

What she does use, in a one-room schoolhouse setting for preschool through 12th-grade students, is simple common sense.

"I go by what they don't know," she says.

Each day begins with morning assembly, where the children line up in neat rows to recite the Pledge of Allegiance and to sing their alma mater ("Sheenway takes us, Sheenway makes us, true to what we are . . . ").

Each day also brings assorted conflicts of human nature. On a recent afternoon, two boys stood before Blunt, one seething, the other contrite.

They had been arguing, and the exchange had degenerated into critiques of each other's mother. Blunt, in a low, steady voice, admonished them to "find some place to talk and come to some conclusion and write it down so I can see it tomorrow morning."

Blunt, a medium-sized woman with salt-and-pepper hair, then looked the angry student straight in the eye. "Robert," she said evenly, "your temper's going to be the death of you."

In this ramshackle gathering of nine buildings populated by two dogs, a pony, various ducks and a pet snake, there is plenty to learn. On the other side of the school's chainlink fence, there is plenty to fear.

It is a blighted community of abandoned cars and lost potential, and Aunt Dolores' charges come from all points on the spectrum of societal ills. Some show signs of sexual abuse. Others have parents who are in jail.

One 10-year-old boy, now being raised by grandparents, had been locked in a trunk as a toddler while his father had sex with prostitutes in his car.

"He laid there in the dark, in the trunk, hearing everything," Blunt says, shaking her head.

Rolisha Smith comes here joyously, determined to study hard and make something of herself. Her 14-year-old brother is a gang-banger, and she frets that "he could get killed on the street."

Her mother, single parent Gloria Bluitt, has high hopes for her 9-year-old daughter. "She would not miss a day out of school," Bluitt says proudly. "She had a fever and was sick for two days, and everyday she wanted to get up and go to school."

Bluitt also has hope for her son, even though he seems beyond it. Nothing fazes him, she says, not even the body of a Crips gang member she dragged her son to see, laying in the street with its face blown off by a shotgun blast.

Magazine photo raises questions

N.Y. Times News Service

One mug shot, two magazine covers.

O.J. Simpson's photograph, taken by the Los Angeles Police Department when he was booked Saturday, was on the cover of Time and Newsweek magazines this week.

But Time's cover was darker, blurrier and more sinister-looking than Newsweek's, and his case number, a 15-character jumble of numbers and letters, were smaller in Time than in Newsweek.

Simpson's expression, his blazer and his open-at-the-collar shirt were the same from one cover to the other, and the two images were almost exactly the same size, positioned squarely in the center of each cover. But what appeared to be a 5 o'clock shadow in Newsweek looked like much heavier stubble in Time. His skin was also darker on the Time cover.

The two magazines are particularly competitive when it comes to covers, which can be attention-getters and can increase newsstand sales, turning an issue into a best seller.

Karen Wheeler, spokeswoman for Newsweek, said the magazine "ran it exactly as we received it."

Time's credit line said, "Photo-Illustration for Time by Matt Mahurin."

Nancy Kearney, spokeswoman for Time, said the magazine's editors had turned to Mahurin, an artist who had done 10 Time covers in the past, because they "wanted to make it more artful, more compelling."

"This was a photo most people would have seen and would know was different, that it wasn't the mug shot but was being used as an illustration," Ms. Kearney said.

"It was not an attempt to mislead readers," she added. "It was clearly identified as a photo illustration. They're two completely different covers."

SUMMER in the City

Thursday, June 23, 7:30-9 p.m.: Summer in the City features Dick Bowdon, "Sounds of Victory" and artist Janabeth Cook.

"Sounds of Victory" combines choreography with tamborines and Christian music to create exciting performances. Also, Janabeth Cook, well-known for her one-of-a-kind portraits, will give a demonstration of her art.

Dick Bowdon, singer/songwriter whose major influences are Townes Van Zandt, John Prine and Bill Staines. You're most likely to call him country folk, but he'll throw in a little blues, Western Swing and Beatles. He's played at Summer Mummers, Celebration of the Arts and the Kerrville Folk Festival.

When: Every Thursday in June and July, 7:30-9 p.m.
Where: The south side of Centennial Plaza, downtown Midland
Who: FREE to the public
What: Each week a different performing group, a visual artist and "something else." Food and drink available at Sonny's in the Park
Why: To enjoy a wide variety of talent outdoors in the heart of the city

COMING UP: June 30, gospel music performed by the choirs of several Midland churches; art by jo duFo who designed the mural at the corner of Big Spring Street and Cuthbert.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 22, 1994

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: A new job or change of residence will make you the center of attention. Make the most of this higher public profile! An in-depth assessment of recent financial difficulties will point out possible solutions. Make sure the members of your inner circle share your strong interests and desires. The year 1995 brings you another chance at romance. Follow your heart!

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actress Meryl Streep, fashion designer Bill Blass, basketball player Clyde Drexler, actress Lindsay Wagner.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Tact and diplomacy are essential when dealing with difficult work associates. An older person needs assistance. Be accommodating without acting overly solicitous.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Avoid incurring huge expenses when carrying out plans you made earlier in the year. A teen-ager who is going through a difficult period needs your caring, loving attention.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A project that has been underway for some time finally bears fruit. A new business or social alliance almost guarantees a rich harvest. Lighten up in romance.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Family life is a proving ground for loyalty and trust. Talk out any differences with loved ones in a mature way. The social swing holds great appeal tonight.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Thoughts of someone you once loved deeply could be revived by a chance meeting. You could find real pleasure in renewing the relationship. Be more practical about financial matters.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A creative project you started last week may have to be abandoned. Do not despair. You just need time to regroup! Try to get away from routine chores for a few hours.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Not a good day for making major decisions. Recycle materials to cut operating expenses. Romance will benefit from a friendly nudge. Pay monthly bills promptly.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Business finances are less sensitive than in the past. Keep up with the times to ensure greater profits. A friend offers to play Cupid. Accept social invitations from old friends and former neighbors.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Your enthusiasm for a certain project may subside when you see the advantages of an alternative idea. Keep an open mind and establish new lines of communication wherever possible. Stroll down memory lane tonight.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Some hopes you have long harbored could come true now. Do not try to rush things! Time is on your side. Imaginative thinking helps you move forward at work. Create a need for your services.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Although the financial picture is not as bright as you would like, help is on the way. A newcomer may try to undermine an important relationship. Trust those who have been loyal in the past.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): It is always good policy to accumulate as many valuable holdings as you can afford. Spend part of the afternoon analyzing current trends. Once you feel sure of what you want, take direct action.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are kind-hearted, tactful and somewhat indecisive. They are never quite sure whether to follow their head or their heart! It is this on-going tug-of-war between intellect and emotion that accounts for these Cancerians' famous "mood swings."

Among the first books we read on bridge was one that was destined to become a classic: Why You Lose at Bridge, by the great British player/writer S.J. Simon. First published in the U.S. in 1946, the writing is as fresh and the advice as sound as when it first appeared. As an added bonus there is an hilarious account of a rubber of bridge at the club, which introduces a series of characters that everyone knows and recognizes. The book has long been out of print and this new edition (Devyn Press, 160 pp, paperback, $9.95 plus $1.50 postage and handling. Available from The Bridge World, 39 W. 94th St., New York, N. Y. 10025) will give much pleasure and knowledge to a new generation of bridge players.

On this hand from the rubber, Mr. Smug became declarer at six diamonds after Futile Willy had made a typical overbid. The Unlucky Expert found the brilliant lead of a low club away from the ace and declarer finessed.

"Mrs. Guggenheim hovered agonized ... She pulled out the queen of clubs. She put it back. She pulled it out again. The Unlucky Expert gritted his teeth. She played it...

"'No clubs, partner,' (Mr. Smug) announced, trumping the queen with gusto. He now inspected the hand. Even his cheerful optimism blanched a little 'One or two things have to be right,' he conceded and led a heart.

"The Unlucky Expert won with the ace and played the ace of clubs. 'Oh,' said Mr. Smug, just about to trump it. Then he realized this would leave him with only two trumps. He tranced.

"But eventually it occurred to him that if he did not trump it he was down one anyway ... (The contract was now due to fail, since East held three diamonds to the king.) The Unlucky Expert leaned back, purring at his own cleverness.

"But he purred to soon. Mr. Smug entered dummy by ruffing a heart and led the queen of diamonds. Without a trace of hesitation, Mrs. Guggenheim covered! Always cover an honor with an honor! Had not the Unlucky Expert told her this only two rubbers back?"

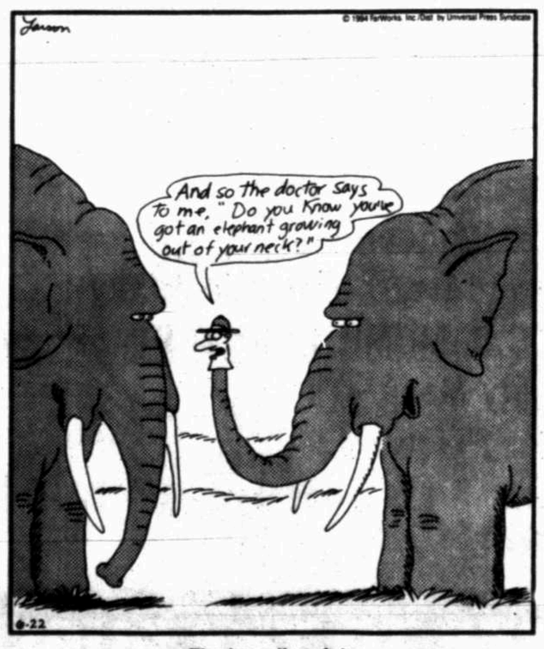

Get your copy now, before it goes out of print again!

Pop star George Michael loses his lawsuit to end Sony contract

LONDON — Pop star George Michael will appeal a court ruling Tuesday that refused to let him nullify his recording contract with Sony, saying the decision upholds "what is effectively professional slavery."

Pop star George Michael will appeal court ruling.

High Court Judge Jonathan Parker ruled the singer's $12 million, multi-album contract with Sony Music Entertainment was "reasonable and fair," and was not a restraint of trade as claimed.

Michael, whose debut solo album "Faith" sold 14 million copies worldwide, told reporters he was "extremely disappointed." His lawyer, Mark Cran, confirmed that he would appeal.

"I am convinced that the English legal system will not support Mr. Justice Parker's decision or uphold what is effectively professional slavery," said Michael.

Sony, meanwhile, said in a statement: "We have great respect for George Michael and his artistry, and look forward to continuing our relationship with him."

Cran told The Associated Press that Michael was liable for both sides' legal bills, but that the situation would be reversed should he win on appeal.

He refused to comment on the amount of legal costs. However, the British news agency Press Association said Michael could face a bill of $4.5 million for the case.

Michael vowed before the case began that if he lost he would never record with Sony again. But fans won't necessarily have to do without.

"He will continue to record charity records alone and produce and write for other people which will keep his work before us. But not new material featuring him as a vocalist for Sony," pop historian Paul Gambaccini said in a BBC interview.

WASHINGTON — In the Rose Garden of the White House on Monday night, 180 rockers and rollers — including Bill, Hillary and Chelsea Clinton, Commerce Secretary Ron Brown, Jesse Jackson and Eleanor Holmes Norton — clapped, swayed and sang along, with Aretha Franklin, Lou Rawls and Les McCann.

The president said the concert was a display of "majestic talent ... (They) have given us tonight a precious gift, music full of power, beauty and soul." Among Franklin's numbers were "Respect," "Natural Woman" and "Freeway." Clinton was observed rocking back and forth to the music while the first lady nodded in time.

Franklin said she had been asked during previous administrations to join in with other entertainers performing at the White House, but had turned down the invitations. According to the Washington Post, only Clinton had paid "proper homage to the queen."

"Well, they said he was a bubba, didn't they?" she said at a press conference before the concert. "I think he's very down to earth, very decent. That's the impression I get."

PBS will broadcast the hour-long concert on October 12.

NEW YORK — Barbra Streisand was thrilled to return to the New York concert stage the same week the city is playing host to the Gay Games.

One of the best things about the games, she told an adoring audience Monday night at Madison Square Garden, is that "I can walk down the street and not be recognized because there are so many impersonators.

"I passed two people on Broadway today and the man said, 'Look, there's Barbra Streisand.' And the woman said, 'That's the 10th time you've said that today. This one isn't even close.' "

The concert was the first of a five-show run in New York that ends next Thursday.

LOS ANGELES — Dennis Quaid shed 45 pounds for the part of gunslinger Doc Holiday in the movie "Wyatt Earp" — and quickly started to put it back on.

Dennis Quaid shed 45 pounds for Doc Holiday role.

"I had a nutritionist who put me on 1,200 calories a day. And I'd run five to nine miles every day," Quaid told "Entertainment Tonight" in an interview set for broadcast Wednesday.

"I ate these huge meals — I'd cut up three red peppers and three onions and put them in with about four egg whites. So it was a big meal, but it was all fiber," Quaid said.

Since completing the film, which opens this weekend, Quaid has made up for lost time.

"The last day I went out and bought three banana cream pies and I think I personally ate two of them myself," he said.

Highway images of O.J. had imagination prisoner in public dream

By Walter Goodman
N.Y. Times News Service

■ Week in review

For about two hours, we were really there, yet always at a considerable remove. The competing realities of other network programming disappeared, leaving us with the dreamlike reality of a car chase in slow motion.

What made the episode so real was its departure from television's carefully crafted reality. Fans of the so-called reality-based shows are accustomed to having the facts laid out for them, with the help of close-ups, music, reenactments, whatever it takes.

If there's a police chase, you know what to expect. Whether it ends in a shootout or a crash or a surrender, you can count on being in on every moment of it, in the best seat in the house, kissing distance of the perpetrator or protagonist.

For about two hours Friday night, we were really there, yet always at a considerable remove. The competing realities of other network programming disappeared, leaving us with the dreamlike reality of a car chase in slow motion.

Instead of a chase, there was a stately procession along Los Angeles freeways: the white Bronco containing, we were told, O.J. Simpson, American icon and accused murderer, holding a gun, perhaps, or maybe it was only a cellular telephone, was followed at a careful distance by half a dozen police cars we could see and who knows how many in that other, off-camera reality. They were not moving very fast or doing anything daring.

What a strange show to watch for an hour or more, a car on a highway. Inside, of course, was O.J. Simpson. But who ever thought of O.J. as a mere human being? He was much too big for that, too big by now for the television screen that had created the O.J. who came to bestride the medium itself.

He was a man for all network seasons: professional football player, sports commentator, rent-a-car pitchman, movie actor, charity golf staple. He fit so many of television's forms. Was this a show or his life? The problem is, when television announces, "This Is Your Life," you can be sure it's a show.

The on-screen chatter never stopped, but you could hear almost nothing from the scene itself; the images in our sights held their silence and their secrets.

Other cars slipped out of the Bronco's lane, while on the opposite side of the freeway barrier, drivers alerted by their radios had parked every which way to see things for themselves (and, perhaps, to be seen by the television audience.)

And then when the car finally turned into the driveway of the Simpson house in Brentwood and stopped and a door opened, there was no climax. For another hour we watched from our television helicopter and waited.

Simpson was in the car. Was he suicidal? Was he armed and dangerous? Some sort of negotiations were presumably going on.

Now and then the scene shifted to a crowd outside the house, mostly young people who waved to the camera, to us. When, finally, Simpson left the car, we saw nothing at all, and only learned of the big event after the fact. Fans of television movies are not accustomed to that kind of letdown.

So, no, it did not have the appeal of fiction or the immediacy and force of the Rodney King beating or the Los Angeles riots, yet it was just as hypnotic, in a spooky way. Looking through the face of a man as familiar as a neighbor or family friend, we were seeing glimpses of a complex, troubled psyche.

As Friday night wore on, there was less and less mention of the event that provoked the torment: the bloody murder of his former wife, Nicole Brown Simpson, and her friend, Ronald L. Goldman.

There had been a week of build-up to this story, which seemed to channel-surf through so many of television's cliches. Thursday, all local and national news programs and all the tabloid shows and network newsmagazines had covered the story in some fashion, most of them showing the bloody entrance to the murder house, juxtaposing pictures of yesterday's O.J. Simpson in action to today's O.J. Simpson in handcuffs or to an unshaven, dazed looking O.J. Simpson being led somewhere in slow motion.

And then, Friday afternoon, came the Los Angeles Police Department news conference, comical in the circumstances, at which it was announced that the police had lost track of their famous suspect. We were prepared for a denouement, but not for anything like the strangely powerful and prolonged anticlimax.

The news anchors, those surrogates from whom we expect incessant explication, were, as they kept confessing, stunned; they were as far from the action or lack of action as the rest of us.

The presence of Dan Rather, Connie Chung, Peter Jennings, Barbara Walters, Tom Brokaw and company confirmed the significance of the event; but when the nation's guides to everything are all at sea the audience, too, must feel adrift.

The unanimous perplexity came through even as these professionals recapitulated, vamped, talked about sports, the law, fame, technology, their own feelings.

After the basketball game, Brokaw, who had had a relatively easy night, confessed he could not remember anything like it in his 30 years at the job.

You didn't know whether, as they say, to laugh or cry. Was that a policeman impersonating a bush guarding the house? Were those psychologists and hostage experts on loan from "Oprah"?

In a moving few moments, as twilight touched Los Angeles and it became difficult to make out much of anything, Jennings read in full the "I can't go on" letter that Simpson was said to have written before his brief disappearance, in which he denied any crime, admitting only to his own confusion and despair.

It had a sad rambling authenticity that could never have been scripted for syndication, but the list of thank-yous made it sound like a speech at the Emmys.

Now and then the camera turned on the crowd outside the house. There were a few signs — "We love the Juice!" "Save the Juice!" Ms. Walters vapored about "the love that everyone feels," but a mere reporter said the scene reminded him of "Dog Day Afternoon."

Jennings mused on whether they, too, were "participants in this drama." That may have been the hope of some, and you can imagine them hurrying home and turning on their sets in anticipation of seeing themselves

Until they did that, they were outsiders. When an event brings the nation together for an hour or two, the insiders are the millions doing the watching,

Fans can count on the television tabloids and newsmagazines and made-for-television melodramas to tell the Simpson story in a more coherent way,

But for the Friday night audience watching that little car down below, with its hidden occupant whose thoughts and emotions we could only speculate about, making his way home for what may well be the last time, future productions are bound to seem faked. They will tell everything, which is a lot more than reality ever tells.

For two hours Friday, our screens were filled with the real thing, and esthetically unsatisfying as that may be, those silent, ungiving images on a highway and in a driveway held the imagination prisoner in a public dream.

Troubled Kidd

OAKLAND, Calif. — A female college student has filed a lawsuit against Jason Kidd, saying the former University of California basketball star hit and pushed her during a party at his apartment in March.

Takema Tate of Hayward filed suit in Alameda County Superior Court on Friday against Kidd, an All-America point guard who's expected to one of the top picks in next week's NBA draft.

Tate, an 18-year-old student at Oakland's Laney College, claims in her suit that during a party in Kidd's apartment, he "struck the plaintiff forcefully in the face, jaw and chest several times ... slammed her against the front door of his residence ... and then slammed the door on her face."

Tate's attorney, Rick Hicks, said Kidd, 21, was drunk and angry that his girlfriend, a friend of Tate's, was seeing someone else.

Police gave a different account. They said the two were playfighting, but things got out of hand when she struck him and he hit back.

The District Attorney's Office decided not to press charges because witnesses gave conflicting accounts of the incident.

'Wolves to stay

NEW YORK — The Timberwolves will remain in Minnesota for at least one more season. And NBA commissioner David Stern thinks they'll stay much longer.

The NBA Board of Governors voted Tuesday to reject the sale of the Timberwolves to a group that planned to move the team to New Orleans.

The owners followed the recommendation of the league's relocation committee, which decided last week that the offer by Top Rank of Louisiana was inadequately financed.

Kupchak new GM

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — Mitch Kupchak, who turned down an offer to become general manager of the Philadelphia 76ers earlier this month, was promoted to general manager of the Lakers on Tuesday.

So where does that leave Jerry West? Same place he's always been, in charge of the Lakers. In a dual promotion, West was named executive vice president of basketball operations.

"Basically, things are not going to change a whole lot," Kupchak said. "As long as Jerry West is here, which I anticipate to be for a long time, he will always be Mr. Laker and will have final say on all basketball decisions."

Title centers on big men

■ Centers Patrick Ewing and Hakeem Olajuwon face each other one more time to decide the NBA championship.

By Howard Ulman
AP Sports Writer

HOUSTON — The championship is on the line and it comes down to one more matchup of Hakeem Olajuwon and Patrick Ewing.

The centers faced each other in the 1984 NCAA championship game; Olajuwon for Houston, Ewing for Georgetown. On Wednesday night, 10 years later, they'll meet again for the NBA title; Olajuwon again with Houston, Ewing with New York.

"That would really complete the season, a dream season," said Olajuwon, the league's MVP.

"It would mean a lot," said Ewing, who won the NCAA meeting and two Olympic gold medals. "This is the one missing thing. I won on every level and this is the last step. I definitely feel within my heart that I'm going to get it."

■ NBA Finals

The low-scoring, tight series in which each game has been decided in the final minutes has come down to a Game 7.

Olajuwon has led the Rockets and outscored Ewing in all six games. Ewing has dominated the boards for the Knicks, outrebounding Olajuwon in each of the last five games.

Olajuwon has had a better overall series, while Ewing has a finals-record 28 blocks.

The spotlight has been shared by their teammates, with different players making important plays at critical times. But with just one game left to determine a champion, the stars may step up.

"It's a seventh game, the two greatest centers in the game playing head-to-head," New York's Charles Oakley said Tuesday, "so it's going to be a showdown between the centers."

The centers see it differently.

"My role is always just doing whatever is necessary at the time, whether it's blocking shots or big plays or intimidation, but the key is just not to try to do too much," Olajuwon said. "You can't take over. This is a team sport."

Olajuwon got into foul trouble in Houston's 86-84 Game 6 victory. Ewing thinks the Rockets will try to avoid a repeat by double-teaming him.

"I'm just going to play with a lot of poise," Ewing said. "If I have a shot, I'm going to take it. If I have a drive, I'm going to drive and just play basketball and just do what I have to do to win."

Early shocker drops Graf

■ Defending champion Steffi Graf loses to American Lori McNeil, becoming the first No. 1 Wimbledon seed to bow out in the first round since 1962.

By Hal Bock
AP Sports Writer

WIMBLEDON, England — Lori McNeil has always been one of those tennis players on the brink of breaking through, always knocking on the door.

On Tuesday at Wimbledon's Centre Court, she walked right through it, defeating defending champion Steffi Graf 7-5, 7-6 (7-5) and writing a bit of history in the bargain. It was the first time a women's defending champion lost in the first round at this Grand Slam event.

McNeil knows she never quite delivered on the potential she showed when she came out of Houston's playground program with her pal Zina Garrison in 1983. She was ranked as high as No. 11 in 1987 but never pushed past that plateau.

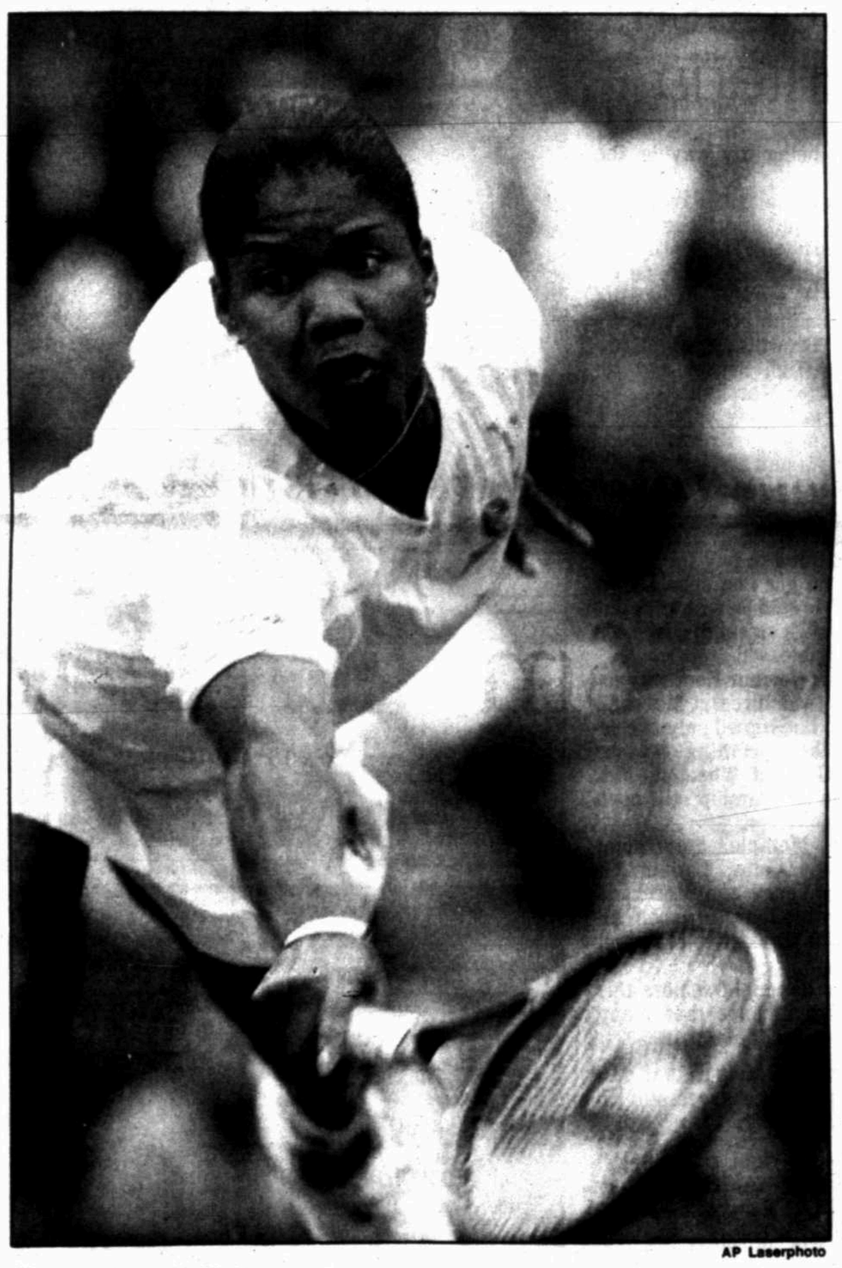

"I feel that in my career, I've had some great wins and I've had some bad losses," she said. "It's hard to look back and say what I should have or could have done. I think right now I'm doing all I can and I'm pleased with that."

The opening round of a major tournament is supposed to be easy pickings for the defending champion and No. 1 seed. Graf got a little unlucky, though, when in a blind draw, up popped McNeil, a grass court specialist. She had sent Graf packing in the first round of the Virginia Slims championship two years ago. Why not do it again?

"I was looking forward to the challenge," McNeil said.

Her close friend, actress Robin Givens, helped. Givens and her mother are staying with McNeil in London. After breakfast Tuesday, in an effort to relax her pal,

Where have all our heroes gone?

Whatever the outcome, the O.J. Simpson debacle will be a topic of conversation for years to come. And no doubt, the idea that sports heroes are often put on a pedestal will be the focal point of many heated debates among sportswriters, fans and athletes.

Wolfenbarger

So what is the answer? Should athletes be considered role models or does America just need to grow up and quit looking for heroes among a group of men and women just because they happen to possess physical attributes that many of us mortal folks only dream about?

After watching the hero status that was relegated to O.J. go up in flames Friday night while he led police on a bizarre chase on national television, I became convinced that what Charles Barkley has been saying all along is right on the money.

Barkley, who doesn't always say the most sportsman-like things on television, has been preaching to the public that just because he is a star in the NBA doesn't mean he should change the way he acts just so children watching won't think it's cool to act up and get into fights. I, like many people, tend to disagree with him.

For years I was taught that as an athlete, I must conduct myself in a mature, adult-like manner on and off the playing field so I would make a good impression for my school, my coaches and my parents. And I still believe that today. But as I look back, I realize I never once kept my temper in check just so I could be a role model.

I'd like to think I turned out to be a productive, law-abiding citizen and just an all-around good person. But it wasn't O.J. Simpson or Roger Staubach or Nolan Ryan who taught me that lesson. It was the real heroes in my life who had the most effect on me. It was my parents, my older brother and sister and my coaches and teachers.

Sports is filled with characters, both in recent memory and in the past, who are far less than proper role models. Pete Rose was banned from the baseball Hall of Fame for gambling against his own team. Mike Tyson was convicted of rape and Darryl Strawberry has admitted cocaine abuse.

Sports fans can go back a lot further to find evidence of this as well. Mickey Mantle checked himself into the Betty Ford Clinic this year to dry himself out from a lifetime of alcoholism. The legendary Babe Ruth was a known womanizer and drinker. The list goes on and on.

My question is, why do we look to the sports world for our heroes? And why are sports figures unfortunate enough to be scrutinized so closely? What about actors? They certainly don't have any pressure to act like mature, responsible adults and they are just as much in the limelight as any professional athlete. Unfortunately, our government is in shambles and people stopped looking at our elected leaders as role models a long time ago.

Our role models should be based on more of an ideal of what a person should be like, not who a person is. A hero can be the fictional characters of Sgt. Joe Friday or Rob Petry. It can be your high school football coach. It could even be your father. It should be up to the entire adult human race to be role models.

But because I know I don't always display the best example of what a good human being should be, I propose that we choose our role models very carefully. It is easy to set yourself up for a fall because even the best human beings are given to selfish, immoral and petty behavior.

And the demise of a golden boy from California is perhaps the saddest example of that.

U.S. faces desperate Colombia team

PASADENA, Calif. (NYT) — If American hopes in this national soccer revival called World Cup '94 are low on fuel going into Wednesday's game in the Rose Bowl, consider the plight of Colombia.

The South American team that many, including the fabled Pele, predicted would advance to July 17's title game is running on fumes after just one game.

Dispatched 3-1 by Romania, the Colombians will be desperate for victory when they meet the United States at 4:35 p.m. A loss would certify total humiliation for a team with such promise when the World Cup began last weekend.

A U.S. victory probably would clinch advancement to the second round, the American team's main goal against the world's top teams.

The U.S. players will be pulling for Romania when the Eastern Europeans face Switzerland earlier Wednesday at the Silverdome in Pontiac, Mich. A victory could wrap up Group A for Romania.

"The chances are more likely that (Romania) might rest some of their top players against us next Sunday," said Steve Sampson, an American assistant coach.

Most experts figure it will take at least four points to move a team into the round of 16. The United States earned one point in its opener by tying Switzerland, but faces an uphill struggle against the rest of its group.

"We know we need three points to advance, which means we have to beat either Colombia or Romania," said defender Paul Caligiuri.

Some American players said they think the Colombians, feeling stinging rebukes over their unimpressive Cup debut, will lose patience, panic and take more chances in an attempt to get their potent offense going.

"I hope they panic and come right at us," said defender Cle Kooiman, figuring those tactics would provide openings for U.S. forwards. "If they play their normal game, with no sense of urgency, that would be more difficult for us."

American coach Bora Milutinovic only shook his head.

"I do not think they will do much different," he said. "It is just one game, and Colombia is still one of the favorites to win this World Cup."

Against Romania, Colombia controlled the ball much of the game but was unable to contain Romanian star Gheorge Hagi. The most glaring weakness was Colombian goalkeeper Oscar Cordoba, who strayed far from his line at the wrong time and appeared slow to react. At one point Romania had four shots and two goals.

Sampson, who has scouted Colombia, is more hopeful than confident, noting the "tremendous pressure" facing the Colombians. "I think we proved we can handle the pressure of the World Cup (in the tie with Switzerland)," Sampson said.

One area targeted for work is the midfield, controlling the ball more effectively to keep Colombia from dominating play.

CUP: Klinsmann scores again for Germany much of the game, but Klinsmann sent in a header off a free kick by Thomas Haessler in the 48th minute. Then both teams missed excellent opportunities to win it.

(From 1C)

Klinsmann has scored both of Germany's goals in the tournament. The Germans are 1-0-1, while Spain also tied South Korea in Group C.

Juan Antonio Goikoetxea put the Spaniards ahead in the 14th minute with his second goal of the competition. He floated the ball into the net from the wide side on the right wing with what looked like an attempted crossing pass.

The Germans were stunned by the goal and suddenly looked very ordinary. Spain pressed, but never beat goalkeeper Bodo Illgner again.

Instead, it was Klinsmann who tied it and nearly won it in the second half.

Nigeria 3, Bulgaria 0

DALLAS — The big guy in the middle from Nigeria can play. He showed that to America and the rest of the world.

It wasn't Hakeem Olajuwon this time. No, this dream was turned in by Rashidi Yekini, who scored the opening goal and assisted on another as the Super Eagles won their World Cup debut over Bulgaria.

It was the biggest World Cup victory by an African nation and marked the second consecutive impressive start for a new finalist from Africa. Cameroon was the sensation of the 1990 World Cup, reaching the quarterfinals.

Like Olajuwon, a former Nigerian junior goalie who has the Houston Rockets in Wednesday night's decisive seventh game of the NBA Finals, Yekini had a strong supporting cast.

Daniel Amokachi scored on a brilliant bump-and-run late in the first half, and Emmanuel Amunike added a third goal on a diving header in the 55th minute.

Argentina 4, Greece 0

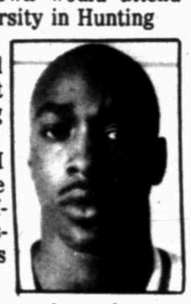

FOXBORO, Mass. — Argentina put aside all its pre-World Cup woes and, led by rising star Gabriel Batistuta and supposed faded legend Diego Maradona, romped past Greece.

Batistuta scored three goals. He set the tone with a superb individual effort for a goal in the second minute. He also connected in the 45th minute, then Maradona — whose career quickly nosedived after he led Argentina to second place in the 1990 tournament — put home his eighth World Cup goal.

CHAPS: Brown doesn't meet coach's criteria

(From 1C)

College next season, but was unaware that Brown would attend Marshall University in Huntington, W. Va.

Lampley

Tyson

"I had heard rumors that John was going somewhere else, but I wasn't sure where," Rafferty said Tuesday. "John has tremendous basketball skills, but in my last communication with him, I wasn't sure if he was willing to do what we wanted.

"In addition to abilities, I require three things — that our players commit themselves to basketball, academics and work hard on becoming a good citizen of the community. I won't take two out of those three.

"I think all three were in the same boat. We weren't compatible in terms of them remaining at Midland College."

Brown will leave Midland College and transfer to Marshall. Brown, a 6-foot-8, 235-pound post led Midland (31-6) in scoring last season with 14.8 points a game and shot 57.6 percent from the field and 61.1 percent from the free-throw line. He was all-tournament at the national JUCO tournament in Hutchinson, Kan., and tournament MVP in the Region V tournament in Waco.

Lampley, a forward from St. Petersburg, Fla., averaged 9.2 points per game and 3.9 rebounds. Tyson, a guard from Washington, D.C., averaged 8.4 points, 3.2 assists and 2.5 steals per game.

"I don't know where Lampley and Tyson will go," Rafferty said, "but I will assist them in finding another school. It was just a matter of this being my way or the highway."

Brown said he will have three years of eligibility with the NCAA Division I Thundering Herd, but the Miami native said he must sit out the 1994-95 season.

Herd assistant coach Anthony Grant was Brown's coach at Miami Senior High School and recruited him for Marshall.

"He got me to play as well as I can play now," Brown said. "Working with him and coach (Billy) Donovan will be a good experience."

Brown is working at a Huntington radio station to pay for his tuition until he goes on scholarship next year. He said he will work out with Marshall's strength coach until he is eligible.

Donovan, a former Kentucky assistant who was hired at Marshall this spring, has signed only one recruit for the upcoming season: Christian Gray of Wheaton, Md. He has one scholarship still open for 1994-95.

However, Memphis State point guard Sidney Coles, Lamar forward Keith Veney and Morehead State forward John Brannen all say they will transfer to Marshall next year.

The Herd has eight seniors this season and will have that many scholarships available in 1995-96.

Rafferty is confident that MC will continue to be successful on the basketball floor.

"We'll keep right on rolling," Rafferty said. "We think we have some good recruits coming in."

Rafferty has not released his recruiting haul to the media, but plans on doing that when the final results are in.

"We're just waiting until our recruiting is all done instead of releasing the names in bits and pieces," said Rafferty, who was hired last April to replace Steve Green, who had resigned after guiding the Chaps to a national tournament berth.

Midland netters rise to new level

Three area athletes have literally raised their tennis game to a new level.

Midland's Toffee Wilson and Beau Baker, along with Chris Late, a former Trinity student who will now attend Odessa Permian, have climbed from championship status to the super championship level in the United States Tennis Association ladder of competition.

All three climbed to the super championship level of play over the weekend by advancing to the finals of the Highway 80 Tennis Tournament in Lubbock.

Wilson, an 8th grader at Trinity, won the Girls 14 Singles title by defeating Julie Klauk, 6-7, 6-3, 6-2 in the finals. She also won three other matches on the way to the championship. She is now among the top 40 in the state by advancing to the super championship level.

Baker, who will be a junior at Midland High, earned enough points for super championship level by gaining a finals berth in the Boys 18 Singles, where he lost in the finals to Reese, 6-1, 6-3. Baker won three matches before the finals. This ends a 2½-year search for Baker to obtain super championship status.

Late also lost in the finals to Joe Don Ridgell, 6-4, 6-3, in the finals of his division, but his previous three victories also qualified him for the super championship level.

Other Midlanders to compete in the Lubbock Highway 80 Championship, which was a Major Zone tournament, were Sarah Innerarity, Carrie Geltmeyer, Douglas Prieto, Matthew Gray, Douglas Scharbauer, Brian Briethaupt, Conner Austin and Callie Kerr.

Two teams post Prickly Pair wins

Rob and Mary Emma Bennett posted a 239 over the weekend to win low gross honors in the Midland Country Club's Prickly Pair golf tournament while Mike and Georgeanne McConoughey posted the low net score of 202.

Results from Midland Country Club's Prickly Pair golf tournament.

Championship Flight: Low Gross: Rob and Mary Emma Bennett, 239. Low Net: 1. Mike and Georgeanne, McConoughey, 202; 2. Bob Herrell and Evelyn Cowden, 203; 3. Ron and Ann Williams, 204.

Thomas puts big hurt on Rangers in 10

Associated Press

CHICAGO — Frank Thomas hit two solo homers and Ozzie Guillen singled home the winning run with two outs in the 10th inning, lifting the Chicago White Sox over Texas Tuesday 5-4.

Tim Raines' solo homer with one out in the ninth tied it for Chicago at 4. Rusty Greer had led off the Texas ninth with a home run, and Jose Canseco had homered earlier in the game for the Rangers.

The White Sox won for only the fourth time in 16 games.

With one out in the 10th, Darrin Jackson and Lance Johnson singled off Cris Carpenter (2-4).

■ AL Roundup

Orioles 6, Brewers 1

BALTIMORE — Harold Baines homered and had a season-high four RBIs, and Mike Mussina got his 10th victory as Baltimore beat Milwaukee.

Baines had three hits, including a two-run single in the first inning and a two-run homer in the sixth. He is 6-for-9 with six RBIs in the first two games of the three-game series.

Yankees 6, Twins 4

NEW YORK — Jimmy Key won his 10th straight decision and became the first 11-game winner in the majors as New York defeated Minnesota.

Bernie Williams' three-run double highlighted a five-run rally in the sixth inning that gave the Yankees a 6-3 lead. Paul .

Tigers 7, Indians 5

DETROIT — Lou Whitaker's grand slam capped a six-run rally in the ninth inning and Detroit stopped Cleveland's 10-game winning streak.

Jason Grimsley held the Tigers to one unearned run on four hits for eight innings, and left with a 5-1 lead.

Red Sox 13, Blue Jays 1

TORONTO — Mo Vaughn doubled twice and drove in three runs during a 10-run first inning that sent Boston over Toronto.

The Red Sox combined six hits, including two-run doubles by Scott Cooper and John Valentin and an RBI double by Mike Greenwell, and seven walks in the 41-minute first inning.

Royals 2, Athletics 0

OAKLAND, Calif. — Four Kansas City pitchers combined on a one-hitter and Felix Jose hit a two-run homer off Ron Darling in the ninth inning, giving the Royals a victory over Oakland.

The A's got only three runners and had their six-game winning streak stopped.

Angels top El Paso to start second half

Staff Report

EL PASO — The Midland Angels began the second half of the Texas League West in the same manner as they did the first half: in first place.

Midland starter Korey Keling pitched eight complete innings staking the Angels to a 7-4 victory over the first-half champion El Paso Diablos at Cohen Stadium here Tuesday night.

The Angels began the first half by besting Wichita 4-of-5 in the season opening series in Midland to grab the first lead of the season from the Diablos, who had won both halves of the 1993 season. El Paso, however, eventually took over the lead from Midland on April 18 and finished with the best record of any Double-A or Triple-A team in the country. Midland finished in second place two games ahead of San Antonio. Wichita was fourth.

The victory gave the Angels a good start for the second half but the final moments were tense as Midland reliever John Pricher collected his second save of the season against a team known for its comebacks in their own ballpark.

More Sports/8C

Keling allowed all four runs but struck out nine and handcuffed the Diablos for the first five innings while the Angels were building an insurmountable lead. Keling retired 13 of the first 14 batters he faced. He gave up two home runs: a solo to Leon Glenn in the second to tie the game at 1-1 and a two-run shot to Tim Unroe in the eighth, giving the Diablos their last two runs of the game.

Unroe had a chance to rally the Diablos in the ninth coming to the plate with two men out. Emmitt Cohick, however, ended the game with a catch of Unroe's shot to deep right field. Midland's pitching staff was backed up by strong defensive play as the Angels did not commit a single error.

Offensively for the Angels, Rob Katzaroff continued to be strong after joining the team at the beginning of the road trip. He got on base four of the five times he came to the plate and finished 2-for-3 with an RBI.

The statistics and game box were not available at press time.

McGriff's hit lifts Atlanta in ninth, 4-3

Associated Press

ATLANTA — Fred McGriff's two-out RBI single in the ninth inning gave the Atlanta Braves a 4-3 victory over the New York Mets on Tuesday night.

John Franco (1-3), trying to become the career saves leader among left-handers, squandered a 3-2 lead for his fourth blown save in 20 opportunities this season. Franco and Dave Righetti are tied with 252 career saves.

Bill Pecota walked with one out in the ninth and Franco struck out Dave Gallagher. After Jeff Blauser's infield single, Roberto Kelly singled to make it 3-3 and McGriff followed with his line single to left.

Cubs 7, Marlins 2

MIAMI — Sammy Sosa hit his 16th homer and drove in four runs to lead a 15-hit attack as Chicago beat Florida.

Sosa had a pair of RBI singles and added a two-run homer in the eighth.

Steve Trachsel (6-4) threw 115 pitches in 6 2-3 innings on a rainy night.

Reds 2, Giants 1

CINCINNATI — John Roper anchored a two-hitter and Barry Larkin hit a solo homer in the bottom of the eighth to give Cincinnati a victory over slumping San Francisco.

Roper allowed just one hit over seven innings — a two-out, game-tying homer by Dave Martinez in the sixth. Martinez pulled a belt-high, first-pitch fastball over the wall in right for his first homer.

■ NL Roundup

Pirates 7, Phillies 1

PITTSBURGH — Dave Clark and Don Slaught homered as Pittsburgh beat Philadelphia, keeping Shawn Boskie winless in his career in Pittsburgh.

Clark hit a three-run shot in a four-run first inning aided by three Philadelphia errors. Slaught added a two-run drive — only his third extra-base hit of the season — in the third.

Boskie (3-4), who beat Pittsburgh 1-0 on May 15 for his first career win against the Pirates, fell to 0-6 with a 9.13 ERA in seven appearances in Three Rivers Stadium. He lasted just three innings in his second consecutive ineffective start. He gave up six runs, three earned, and seven hits.

Cardinals 5, Expos 4

ST. LOUIS — Bernard Gilkey's RBI single snapped a ninth-inning tie and St. Louis climbed back to the .500 mark with a victory over Montreal.

It was only the second victory in eight games for the Cardinals, now 34-34 overall but only 17-19 at home. The Expos have lost four of five.

Todd Zeile lined a single off the thigh of pitcher John Wetteland (2-5) with two outs in the ninth and Mark Whiten walked on four pitches. Gilkey then hit a liner into the left-field corner.

Rockies 8, Astros 0

DENVER — David Nied pitched a four-hitter for his first career shutout — and the Rockies' first shutout at home in their history — as Colorado beat Houston.

Nied (6-4) did not allow a hit after the third inning until the ninth, when Andy Stankiewicz lead off with a single. The right-hander struck out four and walked one to win at home for the first time in five tries this season.

Colorado, which did not have a shutout in its expansion season, has four this season, and Nied has been the starter in three of them.

Dante Bichette had three hits and scored three runs, and Danny Sheaffer hit two RBI doubles.

GRAF: McNeil is slam appearance champ

(From 1C)

Givens dispatched McNeil to the kitchen to do the dishes.

It was not exactly the image of champions. "It was a joke," McNeil said. "Her mom cooked a great breakfast amd I contributed. I did my part and washed the dishes." She wasn't offering the information but after watching McNeil's victory, Givens squealed on her.

"I'm not thinking anything right now," the actress said. "I'm just speechless. I'm just so tired from screaming and yelling."

Givens said she and her mother were like family to McNeil. "We're as family as it gets," she said.

McNeil, of course, is the Grand Slam champ of the women's tour. Not for wins. For appearances. She set a record by playing in 35 straight Slams, a streak that started in the 1985 French Open, when she was a promising 22-year-old, to the 1993 U.S. Open, when she was approaching 30 and wondering if she would ever deliver on the promise. The streak ended last January when she had to withdraw from the Australian Open because of the death of her father.

Since 1989, she has never lasted past the third round in a Slam and came into Wimbledon at No. 22 in the world. That may be why Graf wasn't exactly endorsing McNeil's chance the rest of the way at Wimbledon.

"That's her opinion," McNeil said. "I'm not going to say. I'm just going to focus on my next match. It's hard in the second round to say 'I'll go all the way.' That's looking way ahead, but well see."

Graf-McNeil Facts

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — Facts concerning defending champion and No. 1 seed Steffi Graf's 7-5, 7-6 (7-5) first-round loss Tuesday to Lori McNeil at Wimbledon:

— Graf became Wimbledon's first women's defending champ to lose in her opening match. It happened once on the men's side, when Manuel Santana lost to Charlie Pasarell in 1967.

— Graf has lost two straight matches for the first time since 1984-85. She lost to Mary Pierce in the French Open semifinals earlier this month, her last match prior to Wimbledon.

— Graf is only the second No. 1 women's seed to lose her opening match at Wimbledon. Margaret Smith, who received a first-round bye, lost to Billie Jean Moffitt in a second-round match in 1962.

— Graf is the first No. 1 women's seed to lose in the first round of a Grand Slam event since Virginia Ruzici lost to Mary Sawyer at the 1979 Australian Open.

— Graf's last first-round loss on the WTA Tour was also to McNeil, at the 1992 Virginia Slims Championships. Before then, Graf had gone seven years without a first-round defeat.

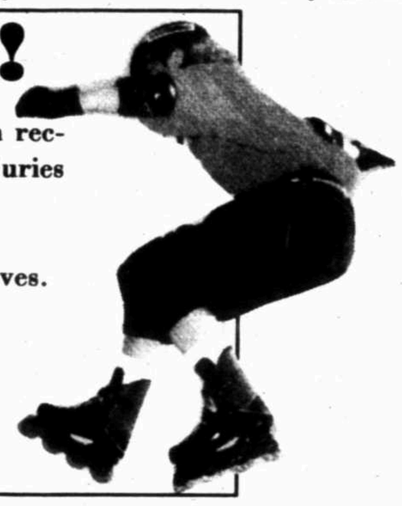

— Graf, a five-time Wimbledon champion, now has a career record of 52-5 at the All England Club. In nine previous Wimbledon appearances, she had never been eliminated before the fourth round.

SAFETY ALERT!

The U.S. Consumer Product Safety Commision recommends these safety tips to help prevent injuries with in-line roller skates:

- Wear a helmet, elbow pads, knee pads and gloves.
- Learn to stop safely
- Skate on smooth, paved surfaces without any traffic
- Avoid skating at night.

Prices plunge

NEW YORK — Oil futures prices finished lower Tuesday as the deadline to trade July-delivery contracts and expectations for weekly inventory figures spurred a late sell-off.

The monthly deadline to trade near-term contracts on the New York Mercantile Exchange typically sets off wide price swings. Tuesday's scheduled release of domestic supplies, which was expected to show an increase, added to the downward pressure on prices.

West Texas Intermediate for July delivery settled at $20.04 per barrel, down 71 cents, at the New York Mercantile Exchange. The August contract, which will represent the near-term price beginning Wednesday, finished at $19.38, down 33 cents.

Local crude purchasers lowered their posted price 75 cents to $18.75 a barrel.

July crude plunged shortly after 2 p.m. Wednesday from the day's high of $20.95 per barrel to a low of $19.40.

The expiration of a futures contract can prompt frenzied last-minute trading as investors try to nullify earlier purchases or sales before the deadline.

After the oil market closed on Tuesday, the American Petroleum Institute reported stockpiles of crude oil and gasoline rose, while supplies of distillates, which include heating oil, fell.

The API said crude oil inventories fell 2.02 million barrels to 324.61 million, while gasoline stocks dropped 1.27 million barrels to 217.94 million. Distillates rose 2.59 million barrels to 116.39 million. Refineries cut production to 94.8 percent from 96.2 percent.

Natural gas prices were mixed, with contracts for delivery in July settling at $2.075 per 1,000 cubic feet, up 2.5 cents. Later delivery months were lower.

Lotus loss

BOSTON — Lotus Development Corp. shares lost more than a fourth of their value, as investors reacted to the company's forecast of lower second-quarter revenues and profits.

The stock Tuesday closed down $14.37½ at $37 per share on the Nasdaq Stock Market, down 28 percent. The drop came after Lotus's announcement Monday that delays in new versions of its 1-2-3 spreadsheet and other office software had diminished its chances of meeting analysts' estimates for the quarter ending July 2.

Stocks tumble

NEW YORK — Stocks suffered a third straight losing session Tuesday as another setback for the dollar unnerved investors.

The Dow Jones industrial average and broader market indicators finished substantially lower but above their worst readings of the day. The blue chip indicator ended off 33.93 at 3,707.97 after rebounding from more than a 50-point deficit.

Dollar hits postwar low against yen

■ Report that U.S. trade deficit widened dramatically in April throws financial markets into tailspin.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The dollar hit a postwar low against the Japanese yen Tuesday as financial markets were thrown into a tailspin following a government report that America's trade deficit widened dramatically in April.

The Commerce Department reported that the April deficit in goods and services jumped an unexpectedly sharp 22.1 percent to $8.4 billion as U.S. exports sank deeply and imports edged up to an all-time high.

The weak dollar sent stock and bond prices plummeting on Wall Street with investors bracing for the possibility that the Federal Reserve will be forced to boost interest rates a fifth time this year in an effort to defend the dollar.

A weaker dollar against the yen makes Japanese products more expensive for American consumers while making U.S. exports to Japan cheaper.

However, by making foreign goods more expensive, a weaker dollar also adds to inflation pressures. It is for that reason, analysts said, that the Fed will move to increase its target for the federal funds rate, the interest that banks charge each other, from its current level of 4.25 percent, perhaps as soon as its next policy meeting on July 5-6.

Interest rate increases help support the U.S. currency by making dollar-denominated investments more attractive to foreign investors.

Private economists said the central bank may delay another rate increase to give the Clinton administration time to stem the dollar's slide with another massive round of dollar-buying by the United States and its trading partners.

Analysts said such an operation could come within days. On May 4, the United States led a 16-nation effort to halt the dollar's decline. That action, combined with a move by the Fed on May 17 to boost interest rates, worked for a time.

But in recent days, the dollar has come under renewed downward pressure against both the Japanese yen and the German mark.

In tumultuous trading in New York, the dollar hit a postwar record low of 99.92 yen at midday before staging a slight comeback. At midafternoon, $1 was buying 100.10 yen, still below the previous low of 100.40 yen set last August.

The dollar was also under heavy selling pressure against the German mark, falling to 1.5905 marks in afternoon trading in New York.

Analysts blamed the dollar's free fall on a variety of factors, from persistent inflation fears in the United States to a perceived lack of leadership by President Clinton on foreign policy.

"There is a lack of confidence in the administration's ability to handle foreign affairs from North Korea to the U.S.-Japan trade talks," said Allen Sinai, chief economist at Lehman Brothers in New York.

Sinai and other analysts blamed Tuesday's dollar slide on the sharp jump in the U.S. trade deficit. The deficit with Japan remained stuck at $5.48 billion, a figure equal to two-thirds of the total deficit.

Investors fear that with the U.S.-Japan trade talks going nowhere, the administration will eventually be forced to fall back on a policy of devaluing the dollar to narrow the huge trade gap between the two nations.

Before the latest round of dollar weakness, analysts had expected the Fed would wait until August before making any further rate increases. Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan could give a hint about Fed intentions Wednesday.

Enron unit, Calif. retirement fund top P&P Bridge Oil bid

HOUSTON (AP) — Enron Corp. unit and the California Public Employees Retirement System have placed a joint $263 million bid for Bridge Oil Ltd., an Australian oil and gas firm, on the table.

The offer of approximately 63 cents per share tops the bid of about 59 cents per share offered by Parker & Parsley Petroleum of Midland.

The 63-cent offer has been welcomed by the board of directors of Bridge Oil Ltd., subject to no higher offer being received, said a spokeswoman for Enron in Houston.

"We find that they (Bridge) have some very good operations, are efficient, and have a good management team," said Diane Bazelides of Enron.

In May, Parker & Parsley made an unsolicited offer to buy Bridge Oil for approximately 50 cents per share, or $208 million. At that time, the president of the large independent said didn't intend to increase the bid. But the company, which owns 6.1 percent of Bridge Oil's shares, did go to 59 cents Monday.

Parker & Parsley Executive Vice President Herbert Williamson told reporters in Sydney, Australia, Monday that a still higher offer was possible. But analysts there called that unlikely.

"It's a bit of a white knight situation," said Mike Sandy, an oil and gas analyst at BZW Australia, of the Enron action.

Parker & Parsley said in a news release Tuesday that it had filed for a public offering of 2.36 million shares, an amendment to an earlier shelf registration. Company officials did not immediately return a telephone call.

The Enron bid was made by the Gantry Acquisition Corp., wholly owned by the Joint Energy Development Investments Limited Partnership, which in turn is composed of a subsidiary of Enron Gas Services Group of the USA and the California Public Employees Retirement System.

The latter is one of the largest public pension funds in North America.

This acquisition could be the first by the partnership of Enron and the California pension fund, better known as Calpers, which was created in 1993 to invest in natural gas.

Bridge directors said they would accept the Enron group's offer if no other bidders came forward.

American, TWA want government to prohibit double-listing of flights

NEW YORK (AP) — American Airlines and TWA said Tuesday they want the federal government to prohibit airlines from listing flights more than once on computerized reservation systems.

Listing the same flight twice or more, they said, pushes other flights off the bottom of the computer screens used by travel agents to sell about 85 percent of airline tickets. If pushed from the first screen, flights will only be found if an agent takes the extra time and effort to find them.

"It's a handy scam to bury flights of competitors," said American spokesman Tim Doke.

American admits it engages in the same practice, listing one flight to Johannesburg as an American flight and a second time as a South African Airways flight. American defended its practices as limited to that route, while its competitors list flights more than once routinely.

Double-listings come about through agreements that typically link routes of a U.S. airline with a foreign carrier. The agreements to share reservation codes have become more widespread in recent months, most notably with a deal between United Airlines and Lufthansa German Airlines.

The code-sharing agreements make it common for a passenger with, for instance a United ticket, to wind up on a Lufthansa flight for at least part of the journey.

When it comes to computerized reservation screens, that flight may be listed once as a United flight and again as a trip on

INS probes Guatemalan's links to Lorenzo

HOUSTON (AP) — Federal immigration officials are investigating whether a Guatemalan woman either was a tourist or potential employee for former Continental Airlines chairman Frank Lorenzo.

The outcome of the informal probe, dubbed a "preliminary inquiry," will determine how the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service should proceed in the case, said Mariela Melero-Chami, an INS spokeswoman in Houston.

Employers who knowingly hire undocumented immigrants are subject to fines under the employer sanctions provision of the 1986 Immigration Reform and Control Act. Helping an immigrant enter the country illegally is a more serious offense, punishable by up to a year in prison.

On June 13, Luz Ixen-Aju was stopped by INS upon her arrival at Houston Intercontinental Airport, the Houston Chronicle reported Tuesday.

Local couple starts computerized phone service

By Mella McEwen

Midlanders Kyle and Diane Lawson have begun HEARTLINE COMMUNICATIONS, a computerized service that lets clients check on their loved ones.

McEwen

The computerized service phones the person receiving the person, asking him to respond if he is OK or needs help. If there is no response, the phone doesn't answer or is busy for over an hour, the system alerts three friends, neighbors or relatives.

The system can monitor anyone in Midland County for $25 a month or anyone in the continental U.S. for up to three times daily for $29 a month.

In a similar vein, HeartLine's "Home Alone" service monitors children up to three times a day for $20 a month.

HeartLine can be reached at 684-5469.

What comes next for Open champ?

■ Some say Ernie Els is good enough to be the game's next dominant player.

By Ron Sirak
AP Sports Writer

OAKMONT, Pa. — Hey, Ernie Els, you've won the U.S. Open! What are you going to do now?

Unfortunately, the answer for the 24-year-old South African is not as easy as saying he is going to an amusement park. It could be the hard part of his dream to win a major golf championship is just starting.

Els could be the next great golfer, taking the title of best-in-the-world claimed at one time or another over the last decade by Nick Faldo, Ian Woosnam, Greg Norman and Fred Couples.

Or he could be the next this-is-just-what-golf-needs golfer whose flirtation with greatness is only a tease, like when 25-year-old John Daly won the PGA Championship in 1991 then unraveled in every conceivable way.

No one has really proven to be the kind of golfer who can dominate the game since the Arnold Palmer-Jack Nicklaus-Tom Watson Era ended with Nicklaus' victory in the 1986 Masters. From 1958 through 1986, they won 33 major titles between them.

Can Els be that kind of golfer? Some think so.

"He has got all the game," said Loren Roberts, the man Els defeated Monday on the second sudden death hole to win the U.S. Open. "He hits it long. He putts great. And usually that works pretty good for champions."

"I think I just played with the next god," Curtis Strange said earlier.

"He's not up-and-coming," Watson said. "He's there. He's going to be a world beater."

Els seems to have it all in perspective, but only time will really tell if that is true.

"If people want to label me as the next whatever player, good for them," Els said after winning the Open. "I want to do it my way. People are going to maybe expect me to win every week, but that is not going to happen."

It's true that Els showed the resourcefulness to hold his game together after a bogey, triple bogey start in the playoff.

And its true he made several huge pressure putts on the back nine Monday — a 15-footer to save par on No. 13, a seven-foot par-saver on 15, a seven-foot birdie on top of Roberts on 17 and the nervy four-footer on 18 to force it to sudden death.

But there are parts of his game that are suspect.

It's not so much that he was all over the Oakmont Country Club on Monday, missing 10 of the 16 driving fairways. That could be explained, understandably, by nerves.

But he also showed just enough brain glitches to make you wonder.

He escaped by the skin of his teeth in Sunday's final round when he hit driver off the tee at the 315-yard 17th instead of laying up with an iron. Els was saved only because his drive went into the stands and he not only received a free drop, but a free drop in front of the stands and closer to the hole than the ball surely would have been otherwise.

Then, on 18, he hit driver again, apparently because he never looked at the scoreboard to see that he had a one-stroke lead and could play safely for a par and the championship with an iron off the tee.

Milk cholesterol cure

If you are a milk drinker, there is one simple change that could make a whopping dent in your cholesterol: Switch from whole milk to skim milk.

That's what new tests by University of Minnesota researcher Kristi Steinmetz and colleagues have found.

When eight healthy men on low-fat diets drank two or three glasses a day of skim milk instead of whole milk for six weeks, their total cholesterol dropped 7 percent and their bad-type LDL cholesterol fell 11 percent.

Steinmetz figures that men now drinking two to four cups of whole milk a day could slash their odds of heart disease by 14 percent by that simple switch to skim milk.

She points out that milk products, excluding butter, still account for up to 15 percent of the total fat we eat and up to 23 percent of saturated fat, the kind that contributes to clogged arteries.

One cup of whole milk contains 150 calories, 8 grams of fat (60 percent of it saturated) and 33 milligrams of cholesterol. A cup of skim milk has 85 calories, half a gram of fat and 4 milligrams of cholesterol.

Hot dog alarm

Could eating hot dogs and other cured meats promote cancer? There is some disturbing new evidence to support that possibility, as reported in Science News.

When researchers at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill studied the diets of children with cancer and their mothers, they discovered two alarming facts:

■ Offspring of mothers who ate hot dogs at least once a week while pregnant were twice as likely to develop a brain tumor.

■ Youngsters who ate hot dogs once a week or more had twice the risk of a brain tumor.

Moreover, youngsters eating most other cured meats, such as ham, bacon and sausage, had an 80 percent higher risk of brain cancer.

Interestingly, children taking vitamins were less vulnerable to the brain cancer.

Hot dogs are also linked to childhood leukemia, suggests new research at the University of Southern California School of Medicine in Los Angeles. Youngsters eating more than 12 hot dogs a month had nearly 10 times the risk of leukemia as kids who ate none. The culprit could be the nitrates used to cure the meats, researchers say.

Chicken low-fat?

Sure, fast-food chicken sandwiches can be a good lower-fat substitute for fatty hamburgers.

But, if you choose Hardee's Frisco Grilled Chicken, you get even more fat and calories than you would in a McDonald's Quarter Pounder with Cheese.

That's the word from the Center for Science in the Public Interest, a public interest group in Washington that has compared fast-food chicken sandwiches.

Here are CSPI's chicken sandwich ratings, ranked in order of those with the lowest percent of calories from fat to the highest:

Carl's Jr. Charbroiled BBQ Chicken (17 percent); Wendy's Grilled Chicken (22 percent); Arby's Light Roast Chicken Deluxe (23 percent); McDonald's McGrilled Chicken (28 percent); Arby's Grilled Chicken Barbeque (30 percent); Burger King BK Broiler (32 percent); Hardee's Chicken Fillet (32 percent); Arby's Roast Chicken Club (48 percent); Hardee's Frisco Grilled Chicken (49 percent).

You can make the chicken sandwiches even lower in fat by leaving off cheese and sauces.

Sleep like baby

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Those middle-of-the-night feedings are exhausting for new parents.

But mom and dad can ease the transition to having a new baby at home by training themselves to sleep like a baby, says Dr. Ruth A. Lawrence, professor of pediatrics at the University of Rochester's medical school.

"Discipline yourself to sleep while your baby sleeps," says Lawrence. "You have to learn how to nap during the day again."

"Life Watch" is compiled from Reporter-Telegram news services and from "Food Pharmacy" by Jean Carper.

Researcher urges warning labels

By Lauran Neergaard

WASHINGTON (AP) — A little-known type of fat found in margarine and other processed foods could be responsible for 30,000 deaths from heart disease in the United States each year, according to a researcher who is recommending warning labels to alert consumers to the risk.

"Such warning labels are, indeed, more justifiable than those on cigarettes and alcoholic beverages, because the nature of the product is invisible to the consumer," Harvard University's Dr. Walter Willett says in a commentary published today by the American Journal of Public Health.

U.S. researchers last year reported that diets high in margarine, long touted as a healthy alternative to butter, and similar foods could double the risk of heart attack.

But Willett, Harvard's nutrition chief and a renowned researcher on diet and heart disease, goes even further, saying the trans fatty acids found in those foods are probably worse than saturated fat.

"Will people be shocked? I suspect so," said Willett. "Many people who are trying to make good nutritional decisions for themselves and their kids are being grossly misled."

But other scientists and the food industry said Willett is overreacting.

"Yes, it's true they raise your cholesterol level but whether they're going to impart the same risk as saturated fat is still unknown," said Dr. Margo Denke of the University of Texas.

Doctors have long warned people to avoid saturated fat, the animal fat found in butter and meats, in favor of polyunsaturated vegetable oils, which do not pose a heart risk.

But using liquid oils isn't always practical, so food manufacturers solidify them in a process called hydrogenation. Hydrogenated or partially hydrogenated vegetable oils are used to make margarine, shortening and a wide range of cookies, crackers, chips and other processed foods.

Hydrogenation creates a new type of fat not found in nature; hence, the name trans fat.

Many of these foods are regarded as healthy because they contain no cholesterol or saturated fat — and Americans don't know that the trans fats they contain are bad, too, Willett said.

Studies show trans fats increase the so-called bad cholesterol — low-density lipoprotein, or LDL cholesterol — to the same degree that saturated fat does. Some studies show they also decrease good cholesterol — HDL or high-density lipoprotein.

Willett assessed available research and determined that the median U.S. in-

Child victim of more than AIDS

By Ron Word

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) — When Tashia came to live with Carl and Arlene Shipley, they knew that her life had been hard and that her death would come too soon — that this 9-year-old girl had AIDS.

But there were things — unspeakable, ghastly details — they did not know.

"She trusted us enough to start telling all these horrible stories," Mrs. Shipley says. "And we would have to sit at the dinner table and hear the most horrendous things come out of this child's mouth."

In her short life, Tashia had been neglected by her mother, molested by her mother's boyfriends, physically and emotionally abused. From the time she was 3 years old, officials of the Florida Department of Health and Rehabilitative Services heard allegations of her mistreatment.

They investigated each complaint — and then returned the girl to her mother or grandmother, until she was doomed.

In March, Tashia lost her life. She was much a victim of Florida's bumbling social services bureaucracy as of the deadly virus.

"There was a day when they could have saved her life and it didn't happen," says Mrs. Shipley. "This child didn't have to die like this."

In September 1986, police were called to a domestic disturbance involving Tashia's mother, Rosemary Fisher. A neighbor involved in the complaint told police the child grabbed his penis and said that her mother's boyfriend taught her to do that. But Tashia denied any sexual abuse and the case was closed.

Weeks later, Tashia's mother was accused of giving her little girl to a stranger. HRS placed Tashia in a temporary shelter. A report said she exhibited "inappropriate sexual behavior" by demonstrating sexual intercourse with anatomically correct dolls.

Counseling was ordered. Tashia was returned to her mother with the recommendation that the child not be left in the care of men; a psychological evaluation of Ms. Fisher in November of that year found her to be mildly retarded with "very poor parenting skills."

To settle the abandonment case, Tashia was placed with her maternal grandmother in February 1987. HRS staffers made periodic visits for about a year.

In February 1988, the HRS determined Tashia had been physically abused, probably by her mother. Although the girl was in her grandmother's care, she often stayed with her mother, reports said.

A year later, Tashia was diagnosed with herpes and gonorrhea. A medical report also noted damage to her hymen and vagina. The HRS concluded she was the victim of "chronic sexual abuse." Later, she was found to have syphilis and venereal warts.

"The police were unable to arrest a suspect for sexual abuse until February 1992 because of the mother's denials that she left the child alone with any particular men and because of the child's inability to identify a perpetrator," a grand jury report issued in January 1993 stated.

Levon Bernard King, one of Tashia's mother's boyfriends, was charged with capital sexual battery for assaulting the girl. He was sentenced to 10 years in prison after pleading no contest to a charge of attempted sexual battery.

According to court and police files, Tashia said that King placed his penis on the child's vagina and and lay on top of her. The abuse took place before Christmas 1991. Tests showed King was not infected with the AIDS virus.

Tashia was diagnosed with AIDS in February 1992. HRS said she contracted AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases from her mother's boyfriends. Tashia's mother also has been diagnosed with AIDS.

Tashia finally was taken from her mother when a caseworker found Tashia had a fever of 105 degrees. Her mother had no plans to seek medical treatment.

Attempts to locate Tashia's natural mother for this story were unsuccessful. She does not have a telephone. Neither the HRS nor Mrs. Shipley could provide an address.

In March 1992, Tashia — timid,

10 steps can lead to better health

WASHINGTON (AP) — Half of all deaths can be traced to ten controllable root causes, says the U.S. Public Health Service. The root factors were established in a study by two doctors, Dr. Michael McGinnis, director of the PHS Office of Disease Prevention and Health Promotion, and Dr. William H. Foege, a former Centers for Disease Control director. The study was published in the Journal of the American Medical Association.

Based on their findings, here are 10 ways to cut your chances of death and improve health:

■ Stop smoking. Tobacco causes 19 percent of all deaths (400,000 a year), including 30 percent of cancer deaths and 21 percent of cardiovascular deaths.

■ Cut down on fat in your diet, and eat at least five fruits and vegetables each day. Poor diet, coupled with lack of exercise, causes at least 300,000 deaths a year, or 14 percent of the total.

■ Get 15 to 30 minutes of exercise each day, or at least every other day.

■ Get help for alcohol problems, and always designate a driver who has not had a drink. Alcohol misuse causes 100,000 deaths a year, or 5 percent of the total. It accounts for 60 to 90 percent of cirrhosis deaths, 40 to 50 percent of motor vehicle accident deaths, and 3 to 5 percent of cancer deaths.

■ Make sure your shots are up to date. There are vaccines or preventive measures for infections like hepatitis and pneumonia, and some shots, like those for tetanus, need occasional boosters. Bacteria and viruses account for 60,000 deaths a year, or 3 percent.

■ Be alert for possible toxic exposure at home or on the job. These include asbestos, lead in old paint, solvents, radon gas, pesticides, and second-hand tobacco smoke. Use appropriate masks for do-it-yourself projects. Pollution, toxic contamination of water and food, radiation and ultraviolet light, and tobacco smoke cause 60,000 deaths each year, or 3 percent.

■ Get rid of any guns at home, or keep them securely locked up. Firearms are the source of 36,000 deaths a year, including 16,000 homicides, 19,000 suicides, and 1,400 accidents. McGinnis says that the risk of teen-age suicide is nearly three times greater in homes with guns. He also points out that guns kept as protection are more likely to kill the owner or a member of the family than an intruder.

■ Have sex only with one faithful, uninfected partner, or at least use a latex condom. Unprotected sexual intercourse leads to about 30,000 deaths a year, about 1 percent of the total. This source of death is one of the fastest growing; deaths from HIV infection increased 20 percent in 1990 over the previous year, and each year 12 million people get sexually transmitted diseases.

■ Next time you buy a car, make sure it has air bags. In any car, consistently use lap and shoulder belts. Obey traffic laws, especially the speed limits. About 25,000 people a year, or 1 percent, die from vehicle accidents — and this total excludes deaths attributed to alcohol or drugs.

■ Don't do drugs. Get help from your doctor or community agencies if you need it. Illicit use of drugs accounts for 20,000 deaths a year.

Seek safety when in sun

MEMPHIS (AP) — You can't make the sun go away this summer, but you can limit its impact on your skin. Dr. Rex Amonette, founder of the Memphis Dermatology Clinic, lists some sun-smart moves:

■ Limit sun exposure between 10 a.m. and 3 p.m., when the sun's rays are strongest.

■ Wear protective clothing — hat, long-sleeved shirts, long pants, and sunglasses — when you're out in the sun.

■ Apply an SPF 15 sunscreen before every exposure to the sun, reapplying liberally at least every two hours or after swimming.

■ Keep track of your time in the sun, and do not stay in unshaded spots for long stretches.

■ Be aware that sunlight bouncing off reflective surfaces can reach you even if you're under an umbrella or tree.

■ Stay out of tanning salons.

■ Protect your children from the sun, and teach them good sun habits.

■ Examine your skin every three months, and know the signs of skin cancer: A skin growth that increases in size and appears pearly, translucent, tan, brown, black or multicolored; a mole, birthmark or any brown spot that changes color, increases in size or thickness, changes texture, is irregular in outline, bigger than 6mm (the size of a pencil eraser), or appears after age 21; a spot or sore that continues to itch, hurt, crust, scab, erode or bleed;

An open sore that does not heal within three weeks.

Optimistic outlook can improve health

COLLEGE PARK, Md. (AP) — Think up. You'll probably feel better.

That's because optimists are more likely to to pay attention to potential health problems and do something about them, says Lisa G. Aspinwall, psychology professor at the University of Maryland at College Park.

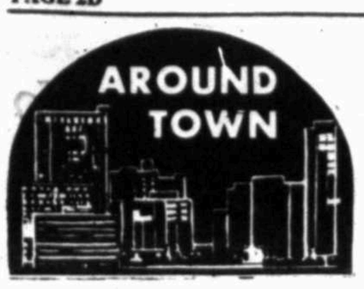

For seven years, Aspinwall studied the effect of optimism on health and discovered, to her surprise, that optimists pay more attention to risk information than pessimists.

"Both popular belief and psychological theory hold that optimists, because they deny threats, will be less attentive to warnings about their health and will suffer for it. But I found no evidence that optimism functions like denial."

About 70 percent Aspinwall's study group members consider themselves at lower risk than others for experiencing negative events — in other words, optimists. She studied their responses after asking them to read health-related information about illnesses.

She found that the optimists spent more time reading — and remembering — severe risk information than their less optimistic colleagues. And when given a choice of reading neutral, positive or negative information about health risks, the optimists paid more attention to the negatives.

"These findings are contrary to prior research that assumed that people stay optimists by tuning out negative information. Instead, optimists actually pay more attention to risk-relevant information, which may, over time, translate into better health."

TASHIA: System failed to protect child frightened, given to hiding in closets and hoarding food — came to live with the Shipleys, her foster parents.

"They didn't want to give you to us, as a first foster child," Arlene Shipley said in a letter to Tashia, after the child's death. "I told them that you were the child God had chosen for us. Why else would a childless, white couple in their 40s, married 18 years, suddenly decide: 'Gee, we need to take in a discarded, little African-American girl who is dying of AIDS.'"

Because the Shipleys never knew how long Tashia would endure — doctors had predicted she would live four months — they planned a party every month.

Mrs. Shipley and Tashia flew to California to visit with Roseanne Arnold and watch a taping of the television show "Roseanne." The Shipleys took Tashia to Disney World and made weekly trips to a restaurant, where Tashia could eat crab legs, her favorite food.

Arlene Shipley proudly spreads her photos of Tashia over a monstrous green chair and hassock — Tashia as an angel last Halloween; Tashia sitting on Santa's lap, the first time she recalled celebrating Christmas.

TAMMY ANDERSON, a legal services counselor, recalls spending seven hours fixing "Little Miss Tashia's" hair with beads and dreadlocks before a court-allowed visit with her mother.

"She was a tough little girl. She wanted what she wanted. She prided herself on looking nice. She was a little Southern belle," Ms. Anderson says.

For much of the time Tashia was in foster care, she had to take more than 20 medicines daily, including an AIDS drug.

"She couldn't play outside. She couldn't run. She couldn't ride a bike. Physical activity left her tired out," Mrs. Shipley says.

"Tashia knew she had a disease she could die of. Toward the end, she knew she had a disease she would die of. But she did not know the name of her disease. All we said was she had bad blood and she accepted that."

Tashia questioned the Shipleys about God and heaven. She decided heaven was like Disney World and God was like Mickey Mouse.

"I told her there was no pain in heaven. She would have a brand-new body in heaven," Arlene Shipley says. "God would protect her and no one ever would hurt her again. And that she could slide down the rainbows."

Her battle with AIDS ended two years to the day that she had moved in with the Shipleys. Tashia died after an unofficial "adoption" ceremony was performed in the hospital to make the Shipleys her Mommy and Daddy. She was 11 years old.

"She was so afraid that we wouldn't find her in heaven if she wasn't Tashia Shipley.

"I believe Tashia chose to die that night," Mrs. Shipley says. "I said, 'Tashia, you know ... that the minute you want to be in heaven, that you can't take it here anymore because you hurt so bad, all you have to do is ask God and he will take you to heaven.

"I am so grateful for the privilege of having this child in my life."

FOUR MONTHS before Tashia died, First Coast Advocates Inc., a nonprofit agency appointed as Tashia's guardian, filed a lawsuit on her behalf.

"This is a case where a child did not have to die," said Jacksonville attorney S. Grier Wells, who filed a lawsuit against the HRS claiming "negligence in the performance of its duties" in failing to protect the young girl. Any money collected from the lawsuit, will go to help other children like Tashia, Wells said.

The agency's handling of Tashia's case led to a grand jury investigation in early 1993. It called the lack of action "inexcusable and shocking."

"Allowing the child to remain unsupervised in the mother's house is analogous to allowing the child to walk a tightrope without a safety net, additional abuse was certain to occur," the grand jury's report said.

As a result of Tashia's case, said Lee Johnson, HRS district administrator, the agency is more responsive and aggressive. Case workers now are required to check prior abuse reports when a new complaint is made. Children are removed more quickly from abusive situations.

"Her life cannot pass without having some meaning," Johnson said. "Her life is a beacon shining a light on the terrible result of child sexual abuse and AIDS."

BUT MRS. SHIPLEY remains embittered at a system that fumbled the life of a little girl. At one point, in her frustration, she had called Jim Towey, secretary of Health and Rehabilitative Services.

"I want you to come here," she said, "and look this child in the eyes so that when she dies ... I know somebody who is part of the system has this child's soul on their conscience."

DEAR ABBY

Professor: Creating drug-free society is impossible dream

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: May I commend you for your open-minded and courageous response to those who have expressed doubts about the war on drugs. Millions of American now recognize that drug prohibition is responsible for many, perhaps most, of our drug problems. It is time for the government to respond to the appeals of Surgeon General Joycelyn Elders, former Secretary of State George Shultz, Mayor Kurt Schmoke of Baltimore, and others who recommend that we re-evaluate our current drug policies.

Van Buren

Our choices are not limited to either fighting a war on drugs or legalizing them. There is, in fact, a spectrum of options. We can learn much from Europe and Australia, where governments have turned their backs on the "war on drugs." They began by accepting the obvious: That it is both futile and dangerous to try to create a drug-free society. Focus instead, they insist, on reducing the dangers associated with drug use if people continue to use them.

To stop the spread of AIDS, we must make sure that junkies have access to clean needles; make it easy for addicts to obtain methadone; give heroin maintenance programs a chance to work; decriminalize marijuana; stop spending billions on incarcerating drug users and drug dealers. We know we can reduce drug abuse more effectively by spending that money on education, pre- and post-natal care, and job training programs.

We must not forget that drug users are citizens in most cases, and human beings as well. We can reduce drug abuse in America without creating a climate of fear, hatred and intolerance. — ETHAN NADELMAN, ASSISTANT PROFESSOR OF POLITICS AND PUBLIC AFFAIRS, PRINCETON UNIVERSITY

DEAR ABBY: This problem concerns my 13-year-old daughter. It started last year when we had some new neighbors move in on our block. Their 12-year-old daughter, Shelly (not her real name) wants desperately to be friends with my daughter Susan (also not her real name). Shelly is extremely immature, and it is obvious to me that the girls have nothing in common.

Susan does not want to hurt Shelly's feelings, but she finds Shelly increasingly annoying. Shelly has called our home as early as 6:30 a.m. to ask if she can get a ride home after school.

Abby, I have spoken with Shelly's mother and tried to be as kind as possible without saying that Susan wants nothing to do with Shelly. Any help you can give me will be greatly appreciated. — SUSAN'S MOTHER

DEAR MOTHER: This is one of those problems that may not be easy to solve. I know of no kind or gentle way to tell a friendless child (or anyone) that you want nothing to do with him or her. However, your daughter must tell Shelly that she is not to telephone her at 6:30 a.m. It is also up to your daughter to explain to Shelly that she needs a little more space, "and please, don't call me ... I'll call you."

FAT: Scientist issues warning about trans fats take of trans fats is 2 percent of daily calories. That means half of Americans eat fewer than that and half eat more.

Willett urged Americans to stop eating trans fats and called on the Food and Drug Administration to add them to food labels. Hydrogenated oils as ingredients indicate their presence but doesn't tell the amount.

FDA is considering the issue, said the agency's Dr. Ed Scarbrough.

"The story about trans fat is still emerging," he said. "I see this as a potentially major issue the FDA will have to deal with."

But the food industry blasted Willett's report. "The science is not clear at this point," said Susan Borra of the International Food Information Council. "We have to come back to the big picture: Reduce your total fat intake to 30 percent" of daily calories.

"This is an editorial, not a new study with more data," said Dr. Jeffrey Barach of the National Food Processors Association.

The journal, published by American Public Health Association, asked Willett to do the assessment, and it did undergo internal — although not outside — peer review, said journal editor Mervyn Susser. "It's respectable scientific opinion," he said.

The Center for Science in the Public Interest, a Washington consumer group that asked FDA to add trans fats to food labels, praised Willett for "providing a scientific underpinning for changing food labels."

"Is it worse than saturated fat? I'd like to see more studies on that, but just showing it's as bad as saturated fat is indictment enough," said center director Michael Jacobson.

CONSUMING INTERESTS

Tasters 'dip' into low-fat dips

By Linda Anderson

Got a present in the mail the other day — a box of four different flavors of Land O Lakes No-Fat Dips. Naturally the other people in the office were very interested in my new gift (food is always a welcome addition to any newsroom), so we broke the dips out and gave them a good, thorough taste-test.

Anderson

According to information from the company, the new dips, "Made from Land O Lakes No-Fat Sour Cream ... have the creamy texture and rich taste of regular sour cream dips, but with no fat and only half the calories. Yet Land O Lakes No-Fat Dips still contain all real dairy ingredients, unlike some light dips made from vegetable oil or imitation sour cream."

The dips are available in five flavors — French Onion, Ranch, Salsa, Bacon Horseradish and Cucumber Dill — and the only one the company didn't send us was the Ranch.

Company information goes on to say: "Unlike some vegetable oil-based dips, new No-Fat Dips retain their creamy texture when heated. Warm Salsa dip is wonderful on nachos, and hot Bacon Horseradish makes a good vegetable topping."

Also, the company has provided a suggested retail price of 99 cents for each eight-ounce container.

Nutritionally speaking, the new dips are said to contain 30 calories and 0 percent fat in each two tablespoon-sized serving, as compared to 50-60 calories and 18 percent fat in regular sour cream dips.

The taste-test was very interesting. For one thing, none of us could figure out why sour cream — real or low fat — would be part of a salsa dip. But we went ahead anyway, and discovered that the new dips are very tasty. The salsa one isn't really salsa, it's salsa mixed with sour cream or something like it. The cucumber dip was a little strong for my taste, and so was the French onion. But the bacon-horseradish was wonderful, especially when you consider that I don't like horseradish.

All in all, the four samples we tasted were very, very good, and a big hit with the tasters. And for 99 cents each, you can afford to have a little indulgence now and then.

PSD PERMIT

EXAMPLE A

Publication in the Public Notice Section of the Newspaper TO ALL INTERESTED PERSONS AND PARTIES:

You are hereby notified of the opportunity to request a public hearing and/or submit written comments concerning air quality construction permit application No. 22065 and PSD-TX-819 by MOBIL PRODUCING TEXAS AND NEW MEXICO, INC. to modify the PEGASUS GAS PLANT near Midkiff, Midland County, Texas. The proposed location is 17 miles south of I-20 on FM 1788. The existing facility will emit the following air contaminants in amounts significant enough to require a Prevention of Significant Deterioration permit: carbon monoxide and sulfur dioxide. In addition, the proposed PEGASUS GAS PLANT will emit: nitrogen oxides, particulate matter, and unburned hydrocarbons. No other pollutant emission increase will result from this facility.

The Executive Director of the Texas Natural Resource Conservation Commission (TNRCC) has determined that the proposed facility will not violate any state or federal air quality regulations and will not have any significant adverse impact on soils, vegetation, or visibility. All air contaminants have been evaluated, and "best available control technology" has been addressed for the control of these contaminants. He, therefore, has made the preliminary determination to issue these permits.

The degree of PSD increment predicted to be consumed by the proposed facility and other increment consuming sources in the area is as follows:

Averaging Time	Maximum Increment Consumed (ug/m3)	Maximum Allowable Consumed (ug/m3) sulfur dioxide
3-hour	59.6	512
24-hour	21.6	91
Annual	3.8	20

A copy of the administrative record, including all materials submitted by the applicant and additional information, are available at the office of Bill Lockey, Regional Manager, Texas Natural Resource Conservation Commission, Odessa Regional Office, Air Program, located at 1901 East 37th Street, Suite 101, Odessa, Texas 79762, Telephone (915) 367-3871 and at the Texas Natural Resource Conservation Commission at 12124 Park 35 Circle, Austin, Texas 78711-3087. Interested parties may inspect these materials during regular business hours (8-5, M-F) and submit written comments and/or request for hearing to the Executive Director of the TNRCC. Any person who may be affected by emissions of air contaminants from the proposed facility may request a hearing from the Commission. Requests for hearing must be in writing and shall state the the nature of the issues proposed to be raised in the hearing. Comments should be limited to the air pollution aspects of the proposed project and should not concern land use aspects which are beyond the jurisdiction of the TNRCC. All air pollution related comments and requests for a public hearing must be received in writing by July 22, 1994. All written comments submitted to the Executive Director shall be considered in determining whether to issue or not to issue the permits. All comments will be available for public inspection at the TNRCC office in Austin.

310 General Help Wanted

Distributorships Now Available

PART-TIME INCOME OPPORTUNITY

The Midland Reporter-Telegram has early morning routes which need to be filled with dependable individuals with reliable transportation. Often asked questions:

➥ Is it worthwhile for adults also?

YES! 95% of our Distributors ARE adults! Morning Routes are attractive for:

- ★ ADULTS who have fulltime jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job!
- ★ MOTHERS who can't justify a small job AND daycare, because as a Distributor, you don not need daycare!
- ★ COLLEGE STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
- ★ SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added retirement income, or just want to work with people, neighbors, and friends!

➥ How much money can I make as a Distributor?

Depending on the size of the route(s), from $350 to $800 monthly, in some cases...even more!

➥ OK...but how long does it take?

The actual delivery takes 1-2 hours Monday-Saturday, and 2-3 hours on Sunday, depending on the size of the route(s). Also some time is needed each month to collect from subscribers. Many Distributors choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in the subscribers' papers and having payments mailed to them. Some collecting in person will be necessary though, particularly on some routes more than others.

➥ When do the papers have to be delivered by?

Papers must be on the yards by 6 am Monday-Friday, and 7 am on weekend mornings.

➥ Do I ever get a day off?

The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, most Distributors do take days off by finding a friend, family member, or another Distributor to substitute for them!

➥ What else?

A small deposit is required.
