Lethal bee sting

HARLINGEN — An allergic reaction from dozens of bee stings filled a rancher's lungs with fluid and killed him, a pathologist said Saturday in a preliminary ruling. Initial measurements showed that the bees that swarmed Lino Lopez were of the so-called killer bee variety, bee researchers said. That would make the 82-year-old Starr County man the first documented person killed by Africanized honeybees in the United States since the more aggressive strain crossed from Mexico into Texas in 1990./7B

Stun spray

COLUMBUS, Ohio — A woman says she's invented a chemical spray that's easy on the environment but tough on attackers. Loveda Finley, 47, of Columbus, Ohio, spent the past year developing and testing STUN 1, a spray whose key ingredients are military-strength tear gas and hot pepper gas. The device shoots up to 20 one-second sprays that causes skin to burn, makes breathing difficult and closes eyes.

Underwater fishing

FREEPORT — It's the newest wrinkle in theme parks — an underwater pyramid under construction in the Gulf of Mexico for sport fishermen and divers. The pyramid, which will consist of huge blocks made from power plant coal ash, is designed to serve as habitat for grouper, red snapper and other fish and as prime exploration territory for sport divers./6B

Switch from self-indulgence to self-denial is sign of times

By Robert Dvorchak
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK — Looking for a sign of the times? Try a circle with a red slash through it and fill in the blank.

No smoking — in offices, restaurants, planes, airports, the White House and sports stadiums (baseball has even banned cigarettes and chewing tobacco in all minor league parks). Smoking is also prohibited in bars in the California towns of San Luis Obispo and Davis.

No drugs.

No drinking, at least the hard stuff, although a glass of wine with a meal is OK.

No fat and no cholesterol. Fish, pasta, poultry and oat bran are in; red meat and fried eggs are not. And please, Simplesse instead of superpremium ice cream for dessert.

William Sessions

Source: Officials tell FBI director to quit or be fired

WASHINGTON (AP) — Embattled FBI Director William Sessions met Saturday with top administration officials about his future and one official said Sessions was told he must quit or be fired — perhaps as early as Monday.

The source, a law enforcement official who asked not to be identified, was not in the meeting, but understood that such an ultimatum was given to Sessions.

The 63-year-old Sessions clearly was distracted as he left the half-hour meeting: He tripped over a curb just outside the Justice Department gate as he strode briskly away, flanked by an aid on each side.

Clinton meets with 'flood summit' to talk relief

Vice President Gore claps as President Clinton is presented a shirt from Iowa Gov. Terry Branstad during a meeting between Clinton administration officials and state leaders from areas affected by floodwaters Saturday.

■ President considers sending in federal troops to assist National Guard.

Associated Press

Pounding rainstorms brought renewed flooding to parts of the Midwest on Saturday, with no letup in sight. President Clinton shook his head as he surveyed the devastation for a third time, and he told a nine-state "flood summit" that federal troops could be sent in.

A new round of strong thunderstorms, some of them with wind exceeding 60 mph, moved through parts of Nebraska, Kansas and Iowa on Saturday evening and caused flash flooding. Stockton, Kan., got an inch of rain in 10 minutes. Des Moines, Iowa, experienced at least three bouts of heavy rain.

The region's transportation troubles kept worsening. The Mississippi River became a 200-mile-long wall blocking traffic when a levee burst and flooded the road leading to a key bridge.

"It's economic devastation for the entire area," groaned Mayor Richard Schwartz of Hannibal, Mo., near the West Quincy, Mo., levee that failed Friday night. Water spewing through the break blocked access to the Bayview Bridge, connecting the town to Quincy, Ill.

The water flowed with such force that a barge was sucked through the break. A gas station blew up and a stream of burning gasoline flowed with the flood-

Inmate's family disputes accident claims

■ Director of LULAC claims Gonzales' rights were violated; family to file civil rights lawsuit against sheriff's office.

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff writer

Although the death of Tomas Gonzales has been called accidental, a late Saturday afternoon news conference disputed those claims.

Preliminary autopsy results indicated the death of Gonzales — a Midland County jail inmate who collapsed in jail and later died — resulted from a combination of positional asphyxia and alcohol withdrawal.

"We are appalled by these claims. We are concerned by the chain of events which occurred (in the jail and later at Memorial Hospital and Medical Center) and discrepancies in stories (from law officials)," said Rosa Rosales, Texas State Director of LULAC (League of United Latin American Citizens) in San Antonio.

Ms. Rosales, speaking on behalf of the Gonzales family — members of which also attended the 5 p.m. news conference in Beto's Burritos restaurant — said the organization has heard reports that Gonzales was beaten twice while in jail.

"He was beat twice. He was beat one day and beat up again the next day. . . . After the second beating his cell was covered with blood. It was a horrible scene of blood," said Ms. Rosales, who said this in-

Vollyball players to get digs in at new four-court complex

Sand volleyball — played passionately at local apartment complexes and at a number of area tournaments — officially became a part of the Midland park's department this weekend.

City councilors recently budgeted $16,000 for the four-court volleyball complex at Ulmer Park at the request of a group of local teen-agers.

The 10-member Wake-Up Teen Task Force — an outgrowth of a new community task force — viewed the additional sports outlet as essential toward helping keep local teenagers occupied and therefore curb drinking and drug abuse.

Ulmer park-goers are just happy for the chance to play.

Ginsburg pleases GOP, Dems as non-controversial moderate

By Dan Freedman
Reporter-Telegram Washington bureau

WASHINGTON — In choosing Ruth Bader Ginsburg as his Supreme Court nominee, President Clinton wanted a non-controversial moderate who offered something for everyone.

What he didn't want, White House officials said, was a liberal version of Robert Bork, whose strident conservatism produced a bitter defeat in the Senate in 1987.

Clinton apparently got what he wanted in Ginsburg, a 60-year-old federal appeals court judge here. Her nomination is likely to glide through the Senate Judiciary Committee, which begins hearings Tuesday, and then through the full chamber.

Liberals can cite her work as the tireless American Civil Lib-

Pope: Priestly celibacy isn't essential, but it's definitely best pathway to follow

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II on Saturday said celibacy is not essential to the priesthood, but made clear that the Vatican would continue to demand that priests be celibate.

The statement, made to a weekly audience of tourists and pilgrims, gave no indication of a softening of one of the central and most controversial tenets of the Roman Catholic priesthood.

Instead, the pope appeared to be acknowledging two arguments by opponents of the marriage ban: that Rome accepts that the Eastern Rite churches, which recognize the authority of the pope, allow the ordination of married men; and that in its early centuries, the Christian church allowed married priests.

As if answering the critics, the pope in clear terms gave the church's reason for this seeming inconsistency.

Celibacy "doesn't belong to the essence of priesthood," he said. But he added that the Church has come to conclude that being single is more suited to carrying out a priest's duties, and he made clear the Vatican is content with the ban on marriage.

"Jesus didn't make a law, but proposed an ideal of celibacy for the new priesthood that he was establishing," the pope said. "This ideal is affirmed ever more in the church."

The pope's latest statement championing celibacy for priests seemed to indicate the Vatican would not lift the ban anytime soon.

The pope has repeatedly reaffirmed that Roman Catholic priests must remain celibate despite challenges from some clergymen and church members.

Most other Christian denominations allow priests to marry and raise families. Eastern Rite churches, a group of Catholic churches organized along ethnic lines, have considerable autonomy in ritual and questions of discipline, such as married clergy.

Insistence on celibacy is often blamed for the difficulty in recruiting Roman Catholic priests and for priests leaving the church.

In the talk, the pope acknowledged that Roman Catholic priests were allowed to marry in the early days of the church.

U.S. diplomats to make historic return to Hanoi

BANGKOK, Thailand (NYT) — The United States will station diplomats in Hanoi for the first time since the Vietnam War under a plan disclosed Saturday by senior American and Vietnamese officials.

The three diplomats would help the growing number of American families who visit Vietnam seeking information about missing soldiers.

The arrival of the officials should not be misread as a sign that Washington was preparing for normal relations with Hanoi, said Winston Lord, assistant secretary of state for East Asian and Pacific affairs.

But diplomats and Vietnamese officials are sure to see it that way, since it will allow the State Department to have day-to-day contacts with the Vietnamese government.

The plan, proposed by the United States, was announced Saturday in Hanoi after two days of talks on broader cooperation in investigating the fate of the 2,253 Americans still listed as missing in action in Indochina.

The 22-member U.S. delegation, led by Lord, was dispatched by President Clinton earlier this month when he announced his decision to end Washington's opposition to loans to Vietnam by international development agencies.

Lord said in Hanoi Saturday that he had been given a letter for Clinton from President Le Duc Anh that promised continued cooperation on the MIAs. "I can tell you that it expresses great appreciation for the president's decision on the clearing up of Vietnam's debts," Lord said.

English jurist blocks titillating 'Fergie' memoir

LONDON (AP) — The High Court has prevented a former employee of the Duchess of York from publishing details about her onetime boss' turbulent private life.

Saturday's order prevents Simone Vanderpump from publishing any details relating to the two years she worked as a cook for the duchess, better known as Fergie.

In its early editions, the Sunday Mirror said Mrs. Vanderpump would reveal "her incredible Upstairs Downstairs life with the Royals."

But the tabloid could only publish a picture of the blonde Mrs. Vanderpump, who worked for the duchess during the period leading up to her March 1992 separation from Prince Andrew, the second oldest son of Queen Elizabeth II.

The Sunday Express reported Mrs. Vanderpump had apologized to the duchess. "I never meant to cause her any pain or embarrassment," it quoted her as saying. "I have nothing bad to say about the duchess."

The 33-year-old duchess, the former Sarah Ferguson, has recently been trying to improve her poor public image.

Tune in to the new mating call: "Drug-free, disease-free, nonsmoking, nondrinking, nonreligious, trim, politically correct vegetarian seeks soulmate with runner's high to lighten decaf brew with nondairy creamer."

What's it all mean?

This is the age of self-control and self-denial. Self-indulgenee is not in one's self-interest.

Some call it New Puritanism, Neo-Prohibitionism or Non-ism, although those names are clumsy fits. The people who observe social patterns believe it's more accurate to call it Preservationism.

"It's not puritanical. It's aging. Baby boomers who had a long run at youth are looking age in the face and saying, 'Holy cow, I'm not going to live forever and I've been living like I would,'" said Pepper Schwartz, a sociologist at the University of Washington.

"It's not narcissism. It is the preservation of the active and good life for a group of people who believe life is precious. There's a perspective at the risks one used to take, a feeling that I may have done it then but now I see the light," she said.

Ironic, huh?

A generation defined by wretched excess, one that questioned authority and parental values while searching for life's deeper meaning, has sobered as it reaches midlife parenthood and positions of responsibility. What goes around, comes around.

Yet from an historical perspective, the swing is hardly extraordinary.

"Every time you see a generation of narcissists in their 30s, you find a generation of moralists in their 50s," said Neil Howe, co-author of the book "Generations."

"They become very value focused in midlife. A boomer is like a black-cloaked preacher with a purgative tonic. There's a pessimistic edge, a dark edge, a tone of finality separating good from bad."

Howe finds one parallel at the turn of the century. Red meat was on the outs when muckraking author Upton Sinclair's "The Jungle" carped about Chicago meatpacking practices. And crusading evangelists helped outlaw heroin, cocaine and ultimately booze during Prohibition.

An earlier comparison involves the Puritans, noted for their solemn spirit of morality and religion that determined their whole way of life in colonial America. The Puritans fostered the "blue laws" to keep the Sabbath holy, and they went to extremes even in their black-and-white garb.

Although Puritans had plenty of scarlet letters, they had no aversion to alcohol, and some historians say one out of three colonial marriages came when the bride was pregnant. Still, H.L. Mencken once described Puritanism as "the haunting fear that someone, somewhere, may be happy."

Of course, any place as large and as complex as America contains pockets and countertrends where people smoke heavily, eat freely, drink liberally, have sex openly and can claim to live rich, full lives.

But in general, one-time symbols of hipness — cigarettes, lines of white powder, roach clips, a martini tumbler, ample waistlines — carry baggage as icons of the low-life.

According to an Associated Press poll taken by ICR Survey Research Group of Media, Pa., part of AUS Consultants, 60 percent believe the practice of healthy habits with regard to diet, exercise, drinking, drugs and personal behavior is increasing. And 78 percent said they personally worry some or a great deal about healthy behavior.

By sheer weight of numbers, the bulge in the population born after World War II influences older and younger generations. Per capita consumption of cigarettes and hard liquor have dropped significantly from 1980, and beer and wine consumption is down.

But baby boomer progeny are part of the pattern. Among high school seniors, drinking and smoking are down sharply, and in a recent survey conducted by the University of Michigan's Social Research Center, 73 percent said smoking is a dirty habit and 61 percent think smoking reflects poor judgment.

High to be 90 with chance of rain

Staff report

Today's forecast is partly cloudy with a 30 percent chance of thunderstorms, southeast winds 10-20 mph and a high in the low 90s, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport.

Tonight is predicted to be partly cloudy with a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms and a low in the upper 60s.

Monday's forecast is partly cloudy with a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms and a high near 90.

Saturday's high was 92, compared with the record high of 108, set in 1989. The record low for today's date is 62, set in 1986, the NWS said.

STATE

A high-pressure system over the Gulf of Mexico kept skies mostly clear to partly cloudy across Texas on Saturday, with scattered rainfall reported and a chance of more precipitation later.

Under the influence of the system and a low-pressure air mass in West Texas, showers and thunderstorms in Val Verde County dissipated by Saturday afternoon.

Showers and thunderstorms developed in West Texas because of moist, unstable tropical air in the region, the National Weather Service said.

High temperatures were in the upper 90s in much of the state, with 71 degrees at rain-cooled El Paso, 97 at Abilene and 99 at Cotulla. The heat index was between 100 and 110 degrees at many locations.

Overnight lows were in the lower to mid-70s.

Winds were mostly southerly to southeasterly at 10 to 20 mph, with some gusts at Waco and along the coast near 25 mph.

Widely scattered to isolated thunderstorms were expected by early today along the coast and in North and West Texas, with a few evening thunderstorms in the southeast and west through Monday.

A chance of thunderstorms was also forecast across South Texas.

NATION

Rain was scattered from the Northwest to the East on Saturday, with the heaviest amounts soaking the waterlogged Midwest. Temperatures dipped to record lows in the Northwest.

Showers and thunderstorms extended over the Northwest, northern Plateau, southeastern New Mexico, northern Plains, Mississippi Valley, lower Ohio Valley, Tennessee Valley, eastern and central Gulf of Mexico and across northern New England.

A severe thunderstorm watch was posted over sections of Iowa, northwestern Missouri, southeastern Nebraska and northeastern Kansas, the National Weather Service said.

Widespread flooding continued along the middle and lower Mississippi River and its tributaries.

Intense thunderstorms rumbled from Nebraska across northern Iowa early Saturday, dumping as much as 5 inches of rain.

Up to 2 inches of rain fell during about a half-hour across the southern half of Iowa's Jones County.

Overnight rainfall over eastern South Dakota ranged to up to 4½ inches, threatening to extend flooding along the James River as well as sections of the Sioux and Vermillion rivers.

The heaviest rainfall during the six hours up to 2 p.m. EDT was 0.84 of an inch at Waterloo, Iowa, and 0.80 of an inch at Hanford, Wash., the National Weather Service said.

Hot weather continued in the Southeast and a heat advisory was posted over the midlands of South Carolina, where crops are suffering from lack of rain.

NOMINEE: Clinton gets what he wanted

erties Union lawyer whose victories before the Supreme Court in the 1970s made women's rights a part of American law.

Conservatives can cite her 13-year court record of more than 300 opinions and dissents from which she emerges as a non-doctrinaire jurist. Her goals, she has said, are "fairness" and "getting it right."

Despite some grumbling, both sides appear pleased.

"What she did in the 1970s was to convince the court to start taking sex discrimination seriously," said Georgetown University law professor Susan Deller Ross, who heads the law school's Sex Discrimination Clinic."She turned the court around 180 degrees. It was a remarkable achievement."

Kenneth Starr, who served with Ginsburg as an appeals court judge before becoming U.S. solicitor general in the Bush administration, said that although she is "moderately liberal," Ginsburg is a "thoughtful, careful and highly intelligent judge."

Since her nomination June 14, interest groups and Senate staffers have picked her 34-year legal career clean, searching for immoderate impulses among her court opinions, law review articles and speeches.

The result? "There's nothing I've seen in looking at her record that would cause me to doubt the (confirmation) outcome," said one Senate Judiciary Committee staffer, who asked not to be identified.

But the staffer warned that the hearings won't be free of bumps in the road. Among the issues likely to arise are:

— Speeches in which Ginsburg criticized the court's 1973 Roe vs. Wade ruling legalizing abortion. Rather than dictating a timetable of when a state can regulate abortion, the court should have struck down state abortion bans on the basis of "women's equality," she said. Ginsburg supports a woman's right to choose, but abortion rights advocates fear she might not be tough enough in evaluating state restrictions.

— Her concurring opinion last year striking down a Washington, D.C. law requiring city officials to set aside 35 percent of their construction work for minority contractors. Ginsburg joined with the majority in applying a conservative 1989 Supreme Court ruling to the case, a ruling civil rights leaders have bitterly criticized.

— Her concurrence in a 1984 ruling against a sailor discharged from the Navy for being gay. She cited a Supreme Court precedent as controlling her decision, but she did not join the majority in saying that constitutional privacy rights could never cover gay activity.

"She missed an opportunity to do some good, but clearly she felt constrained by prior Supreme Court rulings," said Evan Wolfson, an attorney with Lambda Legal Defense and Education Fund, a gay rights organization.

The petite (5-foot-2-inch) Ginsburg is quiet, precise in her speech and painfully shy on occasion, according to those who know her.

At Cornell University, she met a student in the class ahead of her, Martin Ginsburg, whose ebullience was in sharp contrast to her shyness. They were married after her graduation in 1954 and she joined him at Harvard law school.

There she confronted the legendary law school dean Erwin Griswold, who hosted a dinner for the nine women entering in the fall of 1956 and asked each in turn how they felt about "occupying a seat that could be held by a man," as Ginsburg later recalled in a 1989 law review article.

It was the first of several brushes with sexism. After graduating tied for first in the Columbia University law school class of 1959, she received neither Supreme Court clerkships nor job offers from major New York law firms.

By the end of the 1960s, Ginsburg was the mother of two children and a tenured professor at Rutgers University law school in Newark.

Ginsburg went on to launch the ACLU Women's Rights Project and personally argued six major sex discrimination cases before the Supreme Court, winning five. President Carter nominated her to the appellate bench in 1980.

In 1982, they recall, her fellow appeals court judges were about to deny a lawyer's request for a delay in arguing a case because his wife had given birth to their first child. Ginsburg asked the judges if the lawyer were a woman, would they not give her the extension?

The judges sheepishly reversed themselves and granted it.

OUT: Sessions meets with officials about his future

tinued on his way, but FBI spokesman John Collingwood said the director broke two bones in his elbow and a family friend said later that Sessions was to stay overnight in a hospital.

Sessions' ability to complete the second half of his 10-year term has been in doubt since January when the Justice Department's Office of Professional Responsibility accused him of ethical lapses.

But until Saturday, the apparent certainty of his ouster had not been put so bluntly to him by Clinton's representatives.

A senior administration official said Clinton had decided to replace Sessions but still wanted "to find a graceful exit" for him because Clinton was concerned that some of the allegations seemed baseless.

Clinton met Friday night at the White House with U.S. District Judge Louis Freeh of New York, reportedly a leading contender for the FBI post, said the senior administration official, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

But, the official said: "Don't assume it's a done deal."

There will be an announcement on a new FBI director soon, but not necessarily over the weekend, said the official.

Sessions arrived late to Saturday's meeting, leaving Attorney General Janet Reno, Deputy Attorney General Philip Heymann, Associate Attorney General Webster Hubbell and White House Counsel Bernard Nussbaum waiting for a half-hour.

Asked what he expected, Sessions said on his way in, "I think it's probably no secret."

He said he would not offer to resign, and when reminded he has said previously he would do so if Clinton asked him, he responded, "I'm not going to get into that."

A top administration official denied that Clinton — who alone has the power to fire Sessions — had provided a letter to give the FBI chief at the meeting. However, the official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, would not comment when asked about a possible verbal message from the president.

Clinton also refused to talk about Sessions on Saturday.

"I have nothing to add to what's been said or speculated about," he told reporters while aboard Air Force One, heading for a meeting with officials in the flooded Midwest.

He referred all questions to Reno, who had her secretary deliver a "no comment" to reporters waiting outside her office. Sessions gave the same response in person.

Clinton did mention the director's broken arm. "I'm very sorry about that. I heard about it," said Clinton, speaking with reporters at the airport in Little Rock, Ark. Clinton was there for a brief personal visit after traveling to the flooded Midwest.

The Office of Professional Responsibility has accused Sessions of using government cars and planes for personal travel, avoiding taxes on chauffeured travel to and from work, having a taxpayer-funded fence built at his home and using his position to receive a "sweetheart" deal on his home mortgage.

Sessions, a former federal judge from Texas, has denied the allegations and has fought to keep his job.

waters for several minutes, sending flame and towering columns of smoke out of the water.

In Glasgow, in central Missouri, the Army Corps of Engineers dumped large boulders into a 1,000-foot gap in a levee in an attempt to keep the Missouri River from cutting a new channel and changing course, said Corps spokesman Larry Crump.

In Des Moines, Iowa, National Guardsmen and other workers moved mounds of dirt, big rocks, tree limbs, sand and gravel to shore up a severely eroded levee near downtown, and people began returning to hundreds of homes and businesses they had hurriedly fled. Later rains didn't immediately cause further erosion to the weakened area.

The crisis didn't affect efforts to restore running water to 250,000 people in the Des Moines area who went without for a seventh day. The water plant is in a different part of town. One of its three pumps was flown back to the plant Saturday.

Intense thunderstorms rumbled from Nebraska across northern Iowa early Saturday, dumping as much as 5 inches of rain. Heavy rain also fell overnight in the Dakotas, Minnesota, Illinois and parts of Wyoming.

One storm dumped blinding volumes of water into the South Skunk River near Ames, Iowa, which was almost isolated by flooding a week ago. Nearly incessant lightning illuminated the predawn sky.

Officials broadcast a request for volunteers to help evacuate an Ames nursing home along Squaw Creek, which rose about 5 feet after midnight, including 1 foot in 45 minutes. Ames is 30 miles north of Des Moines.

The new flooding meant new frustration for Andy Long, who is helping coordinate flood-battling efforts at hard-hit Iowa State University.

"You get a day or two where you can get in and work and clean up, then you have to take all the equipment out, seal all the entrances again, sandbag everywhere and just wait to see when it will crest," Long said.

"Then you bring everything back in again and start over."

Flash flooding struck sparsely populated areas of the eastern Dakotas. In northeastern South Dakota, a flood warning was posted for the James River, which flows into the Missouri River, after an area that got 3 inches of rain Friday got that much more Saturday.

Illinois' Calhoun County, bordered by both the Mississippi and Illinois rivers, was in danger of being cut off from the rest of the state. A road leading to the last access, a bridge over the Illinois at Hardin, was threatened by an impending levee break.

In short, it was another day without relief for a region that has been inundated for more than a month and a half. Flooding has been blamed for 27 deaths and more than $5 billion in damage, with more than 10 million acres of farmland submerged. Bridges, roads and rail lines were shut, disrupting cargo shipments.

Clinton, who visited the region twice before in the last two weeks, shook his head as he leaned out of a helicopter and saw where the Mississippi and Missouri rivers had converged in St. Charles County, Mo.

"Mother Nature is having its way with us," he said.

Later, in Arnold, a St. Louis suburb, Clinton told eight states' governors and a representative of a ninth that he was considering sending in federal troops — as was done after Hurricane Andrew last year in Florida.

DEATH: Inmate's family to sue sheriff's office

formation came from "someone who saw the cell."

Asked if the information came from an inmate, she said, "No, this is inside information."

His family members said Gonzales appeared to be choking on blood when he arrived at the hospital from jail on July 5. Gonzales later died July 9.

Details of Gonzales' condition while he was in the hospital were sketchy. Justice of the Peace Robert H. Pine called a news conference Wednesday where he announced preliminary reports indicated the death was accidental and restraints were a factor in Gonzales' collapse.

At the Wednesday news conference Capt. Gene Powell of the Texas Rangers, who are investigating the incident to see if the inmate's civil rights were violated or if excessive force was used, said on the morning of July 5 Gonzales began exhibiting signs of paranoia. He told the jailers that he thought the other inmates in his cell were trying to kill him.

He said as the jailers attempted to move Gonzales to different cells he continued to claim that the inmates wanted to kill him. Powell said the jailers then tried to place Gonzales in a padded cell when they had to restrain him in efforts to "prevent him from injuring himself."

The jailers then used a restraint method described as similar to "hog-tying" when the inmate collapsed. He was then given cardiopulmonary resuscitation by jail personnel and transported to the hospital, jail officials indicated.

Ms. Rosales said Gonzales' rights were violated and the family will be filing a federal civil rights violation lawsuit against the sheriff's office.

"I will contact the Justice Department Monday," she said, noting that the hospital may be included in that lawsuit pending further investigation. The investigation is to include allegations the Gonzales family was denied a second medical opinion on the condition of the former inmate.

She said the doctor attending Gonzales refused to answer the family's questions to their satisfaction about his condition.

Ms. Rosales described Gonzales as a "mild-mannered family man." He was resident of Stanton for 20 years and an employee of Martin County Funeral Home and cemetery. She said he had been serving out a DWI sentence on weekends since January and the DWI was his first offense.

"He was a healthy man when he went into the jail," she said. "He was serving on weekends and working the rest of the week. He was a good citizen and well-liked and came out of the jail a dead man."

Information from the sheriff's office described Gonzales as experiencing paranoia and being in need of restraint.

Findings from the preliminary autopsy — performed by Ector County Medical Examiner Dr. Sparks Veasey — indicated alcohol withdrawal contributed to Gonzales' death. However, the physicians' reports from Gonzales' admission and hospital stay indicated Gonzales had no alcohol in his system when he was admitted.

When asked about the alcohol withdrawal factor at the Wednesday news conference, Veasey answered, "I'm not going to go into a lot of detail on that. That is based upon investigative information and I'm not really going to go into that. People that are in alcohol withdrawal may be anxious and may become physically exerted."

"There was no alcohol withdrawal," Ms. Rosales said, noting that a second autopsy is being performed on Gonzales, out of county. "Those results will be announced when we get them," she said.

Pine said, as a result of Veasey's findings, he anticipated the cause of death to be listed as "accidental," and was expected to make his final ruling Friday.

When contacted Saturday night, Pine said he had not made an official ruling. "I haven't received the doctor's report yet," he said.

Ms. Rosales also said while Midland County jail cells are usually videotaped, sheriff's officers told the family the camera was not operating in Gonzales' cell.

Sheriff Gary Painter could not be reached for comment at his home Saturday night. A dispatcher at the sheriff's office said she had "a stack of messages for him" and he "is apparently out of town."

Several Texas Rangers involved in the investigation also could not be reached.

"On behalf of the Gonzales family we will begin our investigation by contacting federal agencies," Ms. Rosales said.

"Something is very suspicious here and a lot of questions have not been answered," she said. "A lawsuit will be filed. This is just the beginning . . . It doesn't matter what color you are here, this is not a Latino issue. It is an issue of the way people are treated in prison . . . We want a thorough and unbiased investigation. That there was an 'accident' already tells us something went wrong. The system is guilty."

few digs," Pat Jameson said. "I just like getting dirty and getting sand up your shorts."

Contractors Friday dumped several tons of sand onto land that once was the site of four decaying and seldom-used tennis courts. The amenities — including nets, poles, lights and boundaries made of rope — are included in the total cost of the project.

Kit Tomlinson, a member of the teen task force, said the group determined that many youths turn to alcohol and drugs out of sheer boredom. He said the volleyball complex will give them another option.

"I feel strongly about this recreation center," he said. "I am sick and tired of watching my friends waste their lives. I've been doing it for four years."

The prominence of underage alcohol abuse was outlined earlier this year in a special grand jury report. The grand jury examined several community problems during a nine-month period last year and had suggested that city councilor Claudia Egan head a task force to study ways to alleviate the problems.

George Logan, director of Community Services, said the courts will provide a safe recreational alternative for the youth of Midland.

"It will also do a lot for sand volleyball in Midland. People are looking all over the place for places to play it," he said. "Sand volleyball or beach volleyball is a very popular and fast-growing sport across the United States. This renovation attempt will help meet the needs of the youth and volleyball players in Midland."

Italian health-care system makes American care dilemma look good

ROME (AP) — Italy's health system is a bitter pill to swallow.

Nurses and doctors sometimes watch soccer games instead of patients. The ailing often wait months to see public health doctors or have medical tests. Hospital food is so bad, families bring pasta instead of flowers.

Now Italians are finding out that drug companies, politicians and even scientists are allegedly involved in kickback schemes worth hundreds of millions of dollars.

If true, it could be one reason why Italians pay some of the highest drug prices in the West.

More than 100 lawmakers, five former premiers and many business leaders have been under investigaton or jailed in corruption scandals unearthed over the past 1½ years.

But this month's drug probe disclosures have jolted even the jaded. A former health minister, his brother, heads of pharmaceutical companies and members of the government's national committee on AIDS are among those involved.

Suspects in scandal are accused of 'transforming human body into gold mine.'

The suspects are accused of "transforming the human body into a gold mine," wrote columnist Saverio Vertone of the Milan newspaper Corriere della Sera.

Investigators who issued 12 arrest warrants this week alone suspect that drug firms routinely made payoffs in exchange for swifter government approvals of drugs and higher drug prices. Drug prices in Italy are government controlled.

The "fee" allegedly was set by former Health Minister Francesco De Lorenzo, a Naples-born surgeon and biochemistry professor. He resigned earlier this year after he was told he was under investigation in another corruption scandal.

Punsters, playing on Pope John Paul II's honorific "Sua Santita," or "Your Holiness," have dubbed De Lorenzo "Sua Sanita," or "Your Healthiness."

Prosecutors have asked lawmakers to lift the parliamentary immunity De Lorenzo enjoys as a parliamentary deputy so they can issue an arrest warrant for him.

Health Minister Maria Pia Garavaglia, who has vowed to eliminate the price-setting system, on Wednesday suspended two of the suspects from their jobs — the director general of the ministry's pharmaceutical service and the director of the Superior Institute of Health, one of Italy's premier medical research facilities.

Other warrants were issued for Elio Rondanelli, vice-president of the national AIDS commission and an expert on infectious diseases.

Thai police rescue more than 100 sex slaves inside prison-like brothel

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Police arrested 144 Burmese prostitutes who say they were working without pay in prison-like brothels surrounded by barbed wire and guarded by pimps, a welfare group said this week.

Nearly a third are under 18 years old, according to the Foundation for Children, which is urging police not to press charges and to treat the prostitutes as victims of crime.

The group is affiliated with the Center for the Protection of Children's Rights, a private organization that aided in the raids Wednesday night on three brothels in the southern city of Ranong, 270 miles southwest of Bangkok.

The city is across a small bay from Burmese territory and is a trading and fishing center.

Nine men alleged to be pimps were arrested, including seven Burmese. Newspapers reported that the brothel owners escaped arrest. The brothels were behind the city's immigration office, which is part of the police department.

A number of the women displayed marks on their bodies they claimed were caused by beatings, newspaper reports said. One woman who had become pregnant was quoted in the newspaper accounts as saying she was beaten until she had a miscarriage.

If charged, the prostitutes could face $60 fines or three-week jail terms as well as deportation.

Numerous unconfirmed reports have claimed that Burma's military government punishes repatriated prostitutes. Burmese officials deny the allegations.

The foundation estimates Thailand has as many as 800,000 child prostitutes, while the total number of sex workers may be as high as 2 million.

A small but increasing number of prostitutes are poor young women lured and sometimes abducted from neighboring countries and southern China.

The Thai government began a campaign against child prostitution last year after the murder of a young woman who was seeking refuge after escaping from a brothel in another southern city.

A number of policemen were accused of involvement in the death of the woman, who had her throat slit before being thrown from the window of a city hall building.

An elderly voter in summer kimono casts her ballot as polls open Saturday in Tokyo. A total of 955 candidates in 129 electoral districts are vying for 511 seats in parliament's lower house during historic races.

Japanese election could drastically alter future

TOKYO (AP) — Japanese voters on Sunday began to deliver their verdict on 38 years of rule by the Liberal Democratic Party in an election that could throw the nation into a period of political instability.

Voting began at 7 a.m. Sunday (6 p.m. EDT Saturday) under rainy skies in most of Japan. The polls close at 6 p.m. (5 a.m. EDT Sunday), and most results were expected by midnight (11 a.m. EDT Sunday).

Polls have indicated that the party, suffering from a series of corruption scandals, is almost certain to fall short of a majority in the powerful lower house of parliament in Sunday's national elections.

But there also is speculation that the LDP could come close enough to form a coalition government.

"The biggest issue of this election is whether we can land a decisive punch against the Liberal Democrats' one-party dominance," boomed Japan New Party leader Morihiro Hosokawa to several hundred supporters in Tokyo on Saturday during the end of a two-week campaign blitz.

Prime Minister Kiichi Miyazawa repeated the LDP's theme that a vote for the opposition could threaten Japan's stability.

"This is a time of great change both at home and abroad. In such a time, politics must have proper and secure direction, without any mistakes," he told supporters.

Miyazawa called the elections after losing a parliamentary vote of no-confidence.

In all, 955 candidates in 129 electoral districts are vying for the 511 lower-house seats.

Most of the campaign has focused on vague promises from all sides to toughen campaign-finance laws.

Saddam accuses U.S. of 'political insanity'

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — President Saddam Hussein, facing an increasingly tense standoff with the United Nations, accused the Clinton administration Saturday of "political insanity and racial fanaticism."

In one of his harshest attacks on Washington since Clinton took office, Saddam also urged other countries to distance themselves from the United States — an apparent attempt to drive a wedge into the international alliance that has supported actions against Iraq.

"The Iraqi people will bow to no one but God, and will reject treachery, deceit and threats," Saddam declared in the speech, broadcast nationwide on television and radio. It marked the 25th anniversary of the coup that brought the ruling Baath party into power.

The speech referred only obliquely to the latest Iraqi standoff with the U.N. Security Council over long-term monitoring of Iraqi weapons production. Baghdad rejects surveillance cameras at two missile test sites.

'The Iraqi people will bow to no one but God, and will reject treachery, deceit, and threats.'

— President Saddam Hussein

U.N. envoy Rolf Ekeus was in Baghdad for talks to try to resolve the crisis, and U.N. spokesman Tim Trevan said Ekeus's scheduled meeting with Iraqi officials had been postponed until Sunday.

There was no immediate Iraqi comment on the postponement, but Trevan suggested it was because the Iraqis were celebrating the marriage of Saddam's eldest son to the daughter of Saddam's half-brother, a senior intelligence official.

Baghdad had tried to portray its conflict with Washington as a feud between Saddam and former President Bush.

But its hopes for a reconciliation with the Clinton administration faded after the June 27 U.S. missile attack on a Baghdad intelligence complex in retaliation for an alleged plot to kill Bush. Iraq has denied involvement.

Clinton has warned that he would not rule out force to compel Iraq to comply with terms of the Gulf War cease-fire that call for the elimination of Iraq's weapons of mass destruction.

The Security Council has warned Baghdad of "serious consequences" if it continues its defiance.

In his speech the Iraqi leader said Europe, Japan and China had failed after the collapse of the Soviet Union to devise policies "that counter U.S. ambitions for supremacy and hegemony."

"Declaring continued war against Iraq, and insinuating Iran is next under the pretext of safeguarding U.S. interests, is a form of political insanity and racial fanaticism that serves only the charlatans in Israel," Saddam said.

He told the Europeans and Asians, "Do not allow yourselves to be dragged behind U.S. policies, for you will find yourselves deeply regretting the guilt you will have to shoulder for the American crimes and hegemony committed in the name of its interests in the Middle East," Saddam warned.

"But such tyranny and hegemony cannot last forever," he added.

India says rockets will liftoff despite opposition

NEW DELHI (NYT) — India said Saturday that it would develop powerful rocket technology that it says it has been denied as a result of an accord between Washington and Moscow.

"The government of India will not allow any setback to India's space technology and space program," the Foreign Office said in an official statement.

The statement added that while India could consider cooperation with other nations on space technology, it will continue to develop the technologies itself.

It will take India at least five to seven years to develop the technology that the Russians had agreed to transfer, and the indigenous program will be far more expensive.

After negotiations in Washington this week, Moscow backed off its agreement to sell cryogenic rocket engines — or giant, liquid hydrogen fueled engines meant for major space launches — and to transfer technology that would help India manufacture these sophisticated engines.

Officials said the news was conveyed to the Indian ambassador in Moscow on Friday.

Top Indian officials, including Prime Minister P.V. Narasimha Rao, met throughout the day Saturday to discuss the issue. A senior Indian official who demanded anonymity said that while India regretted the Russian decision, it was not surprised.

"We've been long aware of the pressure that the United States has been bringing to bear on Russia and India to prevent the transfer of technology," the official said.

In January 1991, the Indian Space and Research Organization signed an agreement with Glavkosmos, the Russian space agency, involving the sale of the engines.

In May of that year, the United States began sanctions against both the Indian and Russian space agencies, saying that their agreement violated the Missile Technology Control Regime, an informal accord between major Western nuclear powers that seeks to curb nuclear proliferation.

The sanctions continue to be in force although Russia has now accepted the regime.

India says it will not accept the regime, saying it does not have the force of international law, and underscored its traditional position on the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty, saying the treaty was discriminatory.

In January, during a state visit to this country, President Boris N. Yeltsin pledged that Russia did "not plan to backtrack" on the rocket contract despite American pressure.

The issue figured in talks between Yeltsin and President Clinton last week at Tokyo and was followed up in Washington this week by meetings between officials from both sides.

'Skinheads' are most violent white supremacists, group says

By Peter Applebome
N.Y. Times News Service

ATLANTA — The arrest this week of eight white supremacists who are accused of plotting to incite a race war in Southern California comes at a time of rising violence by skinheads who form the shock troops for the neo-Nazi movement in America, experts on hate groups say.

Skinheads in this country have not previously been tied to wholesale acts of terrorism, but the Federal Bureau of Investigation says some of those arrested in Los Angeles were members of a skinhead group who were plotting to bomb the First African Methodist Episcopal Church there and shoot worshipers.

Violence has become so ingrained in skinheads' life that a report on their activity issued by the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith just three days before the arrests concluded: "The skinheads are today the most violent of all white supremacy groups. Not even the Ku Klux Klans, so notorious for their use of the rope and the gun, come close to the skinheads in the number and severity of crimes committed."

Irwin Suall, fact-finding director of the Anti-Defamation League, said the Los Angeles charges raised the possibility that skinheads were prepared to move to more large-scale violence from the random beatings, shootings and attacks on blacks, Jews, homosexuals, immigrants and members of other minority groups that have resulted in 28 deaths since 1987 (22 of them since 1990) and thousands of other crimes.

Watchdog group, however, says hard core skinheads only number between 3,300-3,500 nationwide. Number of sympathizers could be much larger.

"I do think we're in a period of transition in the white supremacist movement," Suall said. "Clearly, there are trends within it to move toward more serious violence, to escalate the violence. Whether the arrests in Los Angeles will serve for a time at least to deter further action of that type, we'll have to wait and see."

In numbers alone, skinheads are hardly a major force. The Anti-Defamation League puts the number of skinhead youths given to white supremacist ideology, overtly racist music and random violence at 3,300 to 3,500 nationwide. Despite the prevalence of shaved heads, some wear their hair longer to avoid being conspicuous.

Suall said skinheads were scattered over 40 states in 160 or so groups like the Confederate Hammer Skins, the Aryan National Front and the Nationalist Skinhead Knights. Among those arrested in Los Angeles was the leader of the Fourth Reich Skin Heads.

Danny Welch, director of the Klanwatch project of the Southern Poverty Law Center in Montgomery, Ala., which monitors and has filed numerous lawsuits against hate groups, said: "What makes skinheads noteworthy right now is their random violence. They have been responsible for the majority of the violence committed by organized racists. They get out and just beat the heck out of anybody that's a minority or anybody that doesn't agree with them."

In some ways, the disorganized nature of skinhead groups, many of which regularly break up and re-form, has kept the groups from becoming more of a force, he said. At the same time, their fluid nature has made the groups harder to monitor and combat.

"It's very hard to get a grip on," Welch said, "because they are subject to start some kind of underground or secret organization, and we won't know about it until the crimes have beem committed."

To some who study hate groups, what is most worrisome about the potential for skinhead violence is the groups' tendency to ally with and serve more established racist organizations. In the Los Angeles case, the authorities say, the suspects were also tied to the White Aryan Resistance, led by Tom Metzger, and the Church of the Creator, two of the nation's most virulent hate groups and among the most aggressive in forming alliances with skinheads.

The loose nature of many skinhead alliances can make prosecutions difficult, and the accusations against the Los Angeles suspects represent somewhat uncharted territory.

Black leadership appeals for calm after arrests of racial extremists

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Black leaders urged calm as the impact of an alleged white supremacist plot to blow up a major black church and ignite a race war sank in on the riot-scarred city.

In the streets, some residents said they are afraid other supremacists might take up where the FBI says the people it arrested left off.

"The sad part is not that this has happened. The sad part is that this is not as big a surprise as it should be," said Jeff Holliday, who is a member of the church authorities said white supremacists planned to attack. "It's just the way things are."

Eight people were arrested Thursday in what authorities said foiled a plot to bomb the First African Methodist Church, shoot parishoners there, and kill videotaped police beating victim Rodney King and other prominent black people.

Members of other religions and minorities that have been targeted by white supremacists also pondered the arrests.

"It's a bit of a rude wake-up call, maybe a cold slap in the face, to all of the diverse ethnic groups that make up Los Angeles," said Rabbi Abraham Cooper, associate dean of the Los Angeles-based Simon Wiesenthal Center, a major Jewish human rights agency.

Some residents worry that more white supremacists will take up where arrested group left off.

"We all have our differences," he said. "What this plot reminds all of us is that there are forces working out there who are not ready to accept any of us as equals."

Mike Ramirez, an assistant manager at a supermarket in a mostly Hispanic neighborhood, said he thought "we were away from racism," but added, "I guess not."

"This shows that it is really heavy, to go into something like that," he said. "(The race war) would have started if they had gone through with their plans."

Holliday and other First AME parishioners gathered outside the church Friday and discussed the previous day's arrests.

"A lot of people are scared because there's no telling what they're going to do," said Nigeria Larkins, a 19-year-old choir member. "I'm going to come on Sunday, but I'm still scared for my life."

First AME has taken a lead in promoting harmony in racially tense Los Angeles, especially since the spring 1992 riot sparked by the acquittals in state court of four white officers in the beating of King, a black motorist.

Murray, the church's pastor, said he shook with fear when he heard that he and his church were on the supremacists' hit list.

"I think being human we all tremble, but a lot depends on who's your employer," he said. "God tends to take care of you."

Many judges feel officers in King trial were wrongly convicted

Being tried in federal court after state court acquitted them violates Constitution's double jeopardy clause, they say.

WASHINGTON (AP) — More than one-fourth of the nation's judges believe that two Los Angeles policemen were convicted unconstitutionally for beating motorist Rodney King, according to a new survey.

Twenty-seven percent of 401 federal and state judges polled for the American Bar Association Journal said a federal trial conducted after the officers were acquitted in a state trial amounted to double jeopardy — being tried twice for the same crime.

"On one level, it doesn't surprise me," said Ira Robbins, an American University law professor who specializes in criminal law. "Many state judges resent having the federal courts being the backstop for the failures of state courts."

Sgt. Stacey Koon and Officer Laurence Powell were convicted last April of violating King's civil rights during a March 3, 1991, beating that was videotaped. Two other policemen were acquitted in the federal trial.

A state trial jury previously had acquitted all four of various violations of state law, chiefly assault with a deadly weapon and excessive use of force.

The Constitution says no defendant should "twice be put in jeopardy of life or limb." But the Supreme Court has ruled in a long series of decisions that double-jeopardy protections do not apply to successive prosecutions in state and federal courts.

Nevertheless, only 62 percent of the judges polled said the federal trial in the King case posed no double-jeopardy problem.

Eight percent of the judges responding said they did not know, and 3 percent refused to answer the question.

Ten percent of the federal judges found a double-jeopardy violation; 30 percent of the state judges did. The poll included far more state judges.

Has nation that spawned T. Roosevelt, Davy Crockett become one of whiners?

By Elizabeth Weise
Associated Press writer

Nation has become 'culture of victimization' where people whine when going gets tough, author says.

SAN FRANCISCO — Has America become a nation of spoiled crybabies, with more and more people whining their lives away?

An author who thinks so has a term for the phenomenon — "culture of victimization" — in which people react with petulance rather than perserverance when faced with personal setbacks.

Happiness is no longer something to work for, but something people believe they're entitled to, according to Charles J. Sykes, who outlined his beliefs in a speech Friday at San Francisco's Commonwealth Club.

"If you lose your job, you sue your boss for mental distress. If you get drunk and run your car into a tree you sue the bar that sold you the liquor," Sykes said. "Americans expect life to be painfree."

In his book "A Nation of Victims: The Decay of the American Character," Sykes has more fancy terms for whining and self-pity, including "depersonalization of blame," and the "medicalization of sin."

"A disease is something that happens to you, not something you're responsible for," Sykes said. "Now if you sleep around, gamble away your money, drink yourself into the gutter or ignore your family, you are no longer irresponsible, but merely in need of treatment."

Society promotes a culture of victimization by providing rewards for being a victim, Sykes said, telling the story of a man who did a flip in a bar and hurt his back.

"He turned around and sued the bartender, on the theory that the bartender should have stopped him from doing the backflip in the first place," Sykes said. The man received $5,000 in an out-of-court settlement.

All hands on deck to patch Iowa levee as river rises

By Keith Bradsher
N.Y. Times News Service

DES MOINES, Iowa — Flood water eroded more than halfway through a 30-foot-thick levee in southeastern Des Moines Saturday, but Iowa National Army Guard troops and local contractors quickly dumped dozens of truckloads of sand and rock to stabilize it.

Col. Roger Schultz, the senior National Guard official at the levee, said the patch appeared likely to hold as long as the Des Moines River did not rise any higher. The National Weather Service has predicted heavy rain upstream Saturday, but it is expected to drain into a portion of the river that is partly controlled by a dam.

The damage to the levee was found at 9 a.m. Police officers patrolled the streets of southeastern Des Moines, warning that the levee could burst at any minute and urging residents to flee immediately to higher ground.

If the levee were to break, city officials said, the result would be more dangerous than what happened last Saturday, when the municipal water-treatment plant was disabled by floodwaters from the Raccoon River. A broken levee would send deep, fast-moving water through streets that now lie eight feet below the level of the river. The eroded levee is below the confluence of the Des Moines and the Raccoon Rivers, where the combined river, known as the Des Moines, is especially deep.

Residents raced out of the area's 700 homes and headed for the nearby high bluff where their Capitol stands. Alvin Simon, a 37-year-old hospital worker, pulled on a pair of sneakers, but no socks, and pedaled to the top of the hill on his blue 10-speed bicycle. He carried a red gym bag with a few toiletries and a change of clothes. "I've been packed all week," he said.

Rumors immediately spread that a large tree might have fallen into the water, pulling a chunk of levee with it. Harold Smith, the city engineer, said that officials did not what had caused the sudden erosion Saturday morning but that he had ordered the removal of trees along the levees anyway.

City employees are walking the levees every 30 minutes to check for damage. Saturday morning's damage was discovered by such a worker on the north side of the river at Eighth Street Southeast.

When the damage was found, the crest of the levee had already fallen in and the river was working its way through to the back of the levee, Schultz said.

The city water plant will begin pumping water again on Sunday night, and officials hope to have running water for all the city's homes by the end of the week. But the water will not immediately be drinkable; it will be suitable only for showers and toilets because of potential contamination from sewage discharges upstream. The provision of drinking water may take several more weeks, city officials say.

Mary Fosseen,12, left, and LaDana Clark, 13, of Radcliffe, Iowa, take laundry off clothes line in Clark's flooded backyard Saturday. More than 4.5 inches of rain fell that morning alone, which made it hard to keep laundry dry. People all along the swollen Mississippi and Missouri Rivers have been experiencing heartache and hardship during one of the worst floods in American history.

'Floodbath': Fish, frogs, snakes, plenty of muck

By Robert Dvorchak
Associated Press writer

CRYSTAL CITY, Mo. — Hilda Harrell stacked her furniture and pumped out her basement while fish swam around a half-submerged Mazda in the waters creeping higher and higher up her driveway.

And she knows her ordeal is just beginning.

"It's going to take a lot of work to clean this place up after the water goes down," Mrs. Harrell, 51, a survivor of a 1973 flood that destroyed her home, said with a deep sigh.

"Everything this water touches, it messes up. It ruins everything," she said. "And the odor never leaves. The house smells like sewer gas. It's terrible."

The floods are still days away from peaking in some places, but veterans of past catastrophes know the real Mississippi misery begins when the waters recede and the cleanup starts.

The future holds months, perhaps years, of scrubbing away the residue of a runaway river that has swept with it raw sewage, drowned animals, fertilizers, pesticides, industrial wastes and all kinds of nasty filth.

The muck gets inside walls and cars. It invades insulation, carpets, mattresses, sofas, chairs, stereos, televisions, videocassette recorders, dishwashers and clothes dryers.

But you can't just let the affected items dry: everything that isn't trashed has to be washed, disinfected and deodorized to get rid of the germs and the stench.

"It's really a dirty job. There are going to be frogs and fish and snakes inside walls. It's going to smell. The water contains GKW — God knows what," said Cliff Zlonick of RESTORx, a company specializing in cleanups after disasters. "The problem with floods is the water just sits and sits and sits. The damage is progressive. It gets worse and worse and worse. This is going to be a monumental job, an impossible cleanup problem."

Braddock, Pa.-based RESTORx helped clean Kuwait's Royal Palace after the Iraqis vandalized it, the World Trade Center in New York after terrorists bombed it and south Florida after Hurricane Andrew smashed it. Zlonick also provided information for a pamphlet on disaster cleanups put out by the Federal Emergency Management Agency.

"This is going to be much bigger than Hurricane Andrew," Zlonick said. "Water is pretty malicious. It gets into every crack and crevice, even those that can't be seen."

Already, about 22,000 homes have been flooded in eight states. No tally is available for the number of flooded offices, businesses, factories, and schools.

Health authorities worry about flood contamination

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — "We're walking around in waters in a contaminated environment," said Loren Will, an Iowa State University public health specialist and extension veterinarian. "We have, in a sense, a large cesspool. It's diluted, but that's what it is."

A team of federal public health officials, some from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention, has been reviewing conditions in Iowa, and they so say so far, so good.

"We're not seeing any outbreak at this time," said Scott Lillibridge, a CDC epidemiologist. "We're not finding any serious infectious disease, no major injuries."

In Des Moines, about 250,000 people have been without running water since the city's water plant was flooded last Sunday. People are flushing toilets with rain water or using portable toilets.

Colonnade at Polo Park

When A.W. "Bill" Rutter, Paul Rutter, and Rick Motycka bought the Colonnade two years ago, one of Midland's finest retail centers needed an economic revival. Today, Colonnade is home to unique shops and showrooms, not to mention fine restaurants, including Abuelo's, Shogun, and Chili's. The Colonnade partners' decision to acquire the development required an acute sense of timing - and a bank that saw the potential of their business plans. They came to Texas National and found bankers with confidence in their partnership, and a strong commitment to Midland. Come see us at Texas National Bank of Midland. We're Midland's Banker.

Federal agencies investigate report into an apparently amorous dolphin

KEY LARGO, Fla. (AP) — Two federal agencies investigating a park's swim-with-the-dolphins program are looking into a videotape of a dolphin being sexually aggressive toward a woman swimmer.

The tape shows a young tourist in a lagoon at Dolphins Plus park with a 7-foot male dolphin identified as Fonzi. The dolphin becomes aroused and repeatedly rubs its sexual organ against the woman.

The woman laughs and appears to exhibit no fear. When she later tries to get out of the lagoon, the dolphin blocks her exit.

Spokesmen for the National Marine Fisheries Service and the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service said the tape broadened an investigation of allegations that animals and people have been injured at the park.

The fisheries service, which licenses marine swim programs, will decide whether to take away or alter the park's operating permit, or take no action, said Brian Gorman, a spokesman in Silver Spring, Md.

"We don't expect the investigation to be completed until almost the end of the year," said Gorman.

But Lloyd Borguss, an owner of Dolphins Plus, said that as far as he knows, the investigation has been completed.

"We do not know what the final results are, but we are not afraid of anything," he said Friday.

Borguss said the videotape was nearly 5 years old, and the employees shown on the tape were fired in part for not stopping the encounter. Borguss said the park's policy always has been to carefully monitor the encounters and stop any if a dolphin behaves aggressively.

He also disputed the identification of the dolphin in the videotape.

"Fonzi still swims with visitors, and Fonzi is not the animal in the videotape," Borguss said.

Russ Rector, founder of the Fort Lauderdale-based Dolphin Freedom Foundation said it was made in February 1990 by a park visitor

Researchers discover exact shape of molecular motor that drives muscles

WASHINGTON (AP) — Researchers have determined the precise shape of a protein molecule that plays a key role in the contraction of muscles.

In a study published this monthin the journal Science, researchers report they have found the three-dimensional shape of a protein molecule called myosin, the most abundant of the so-called "molecular motors" that make muscles move.

Movement on a molecular level is thought to occur through the interaction of two types of filaments that make up the major structures in muscle. Thin filaments within the muscles are made of a protein called actin. Thick filaments are made up of myosin.

To effect movement, it is thought that the myosin attaches to the actin in the adjacent filament. The myosin then rotates, imparting a thrusting-like force that causes the muscle to move. The myosin then detaches and returns to its previous position.

Myosin works by converting chemical energy from food into a mechanical motion.

The primary author of two related papers on the structure and function of myosin is Ivan Rayment of the University of Wisconsin-Madison.

Dr. Richard Lymn, a research executive at the government's National Institute of Arthritis and Musculoskeletal and Skin Diseases, said the discovery give important new fundamental knowledge of how muscles work.

Divers search for mysterious Nazi submarine that 'sank' off Cape Cod

By Michael Cooper
N.Y. Times News Service

CHATHAM, Mass. — As sun bathers along the beaches here flip through John Grisham's latest thriller, this quiet Cape Cod town has been caught up in a real summer tale.

It began last month when Edward Michaud, a commercial diver, said he had found the wreck of a Nazi submarine, the U-1226, four miles off the coast in only 41 feet of water.

His announcement led the German government to request that the site be preserved as a sailors' grave and sent archivists in Washington and Bonn combing through World War II documents. The Boston Globe sent a reporter scuba diving, and, not to be outdone, The Boston Herald sponsored an expedition to take Michaud back to where he said the wreck was.

Michaud, a Navy veteran from Framingham, said that he had used sonar imaging equipment to find the U-1226 but that the weather had been too rough for him to dive down to see the submarine firsthand. His discovery, he said, was the result of three years' research in which he determined that the U-1226 was prowling along the coast on a spy mission when it was sunk by American forces on Oct. 28, 1944.

The Navy disputes Michaud's account, saying that no attacks on U-boats were reported in the area at the time. And while the U-1226 actually existed, Bernd Lessmeister, a German vice-consul in Boston, said its last transmission came from the mid-Atlantic a day before the submarine vanished, leaving not enough time for it to have reached Cape Cod.

Lessmeister accompanied Michaud on the expedition sponsored by the Herald. "When the divers went down," he said, "there was only gravel and sand and rocks, but no submarine."

Michaud shrugged off the dive, saying he did not have the proper sonar equipment with him. "It was a depressing day," he said, "but it didn't dampen the possibilities. That damn thing is out there. We're definitely going back." As soon as he has the money, he added.

Despite the lack of hard evidence, people in this town of gray-shingled houses are fascinated by the possibility of a Nazi submarine nearby.

Shipwrecks loom large in Chatham lore. It was here that Cape Cod's first recorded wreck occurred, in 1626, when the Sparrowhawk foundered off Nauset Beach. The dangerous shoals along the rocky coast have long since become known as the graveyard of the Atlantic.

'Fergie' works hard to clean up her tarnished royal image

By Louis J. Salome
N.Y. Times News Service

LONDON — Lady Sarah Ferguson, the disgraced Duchess of York, is being primed and polished in an attempt to improve her public image and perhaps renew her life in the royal family.

The duchess's carefully orchestrated reemergence as a caring, responsible person fit to be loved by royals and public alike got a boost recently when she was named a roving goodwill ambassador for the United Nations.

Last month, Fergie — as she is known to the public here — was photographed kissing her suddenly-not-so-estranged husband, Prince Andrew, at Queen Elizabeth II's Balmoral estate in Scotland. The couple spent considerable time at Balmoral with their two young daughters, and six weeks ago press reports said the separated duo "shared the same bedroom" after a party at their mansion.

This month, another published report said the queen, who "has always got on well with Fergie," invited the duchess to spend a two week summer holiday with the royal family at Balmoral Castle.

'Fergie' will travel, make speeches on behalf of U.N. High Commission for Refugees. Her symbolic pay is $1 per year.

It was nearly 15 months ago that Buckingham Palace announced that Fergie and Andrew were seeking a "formal separation" after 5 1/2 years of marriage.

The separation notice followed numerous press accounts of flare-ups in their marriage with the final straw being the discovery of photographs of the duchess enjoying the companionship of wealthy Texas businessman Steve Wyatt in Morocco at a time when Andrew was on duty with the British Royal Navy.

Last August, a British newspaper published photographs of Sarah kissing, embracing and sunbathing topless with American businessman John Bryan near St. Tropez, France. One photo showed Bryan, Sarah's "financial adviser," sucking her toe.

Despite recent pointed press speculation of a Fergie-Andrew reconciliation, Buckingham Palace refuses to comment.

Joining the high-profile likes of Italian film star Sophia Loren and Europe-based American opera singer Barbara Hendricks, Fergie will travel and make speeches and public appearances on behalf of the U.N. High Commission for Refugees (UNHCR). She will be paid $1 a year.

As a magnet for public and press attention, Fergie is expected to focus on the plight of refugees, notably women and children, worldwide. Her U.N. affiliation, in turn, is designed to bathe Fergie in a new aura of seriousness and stability.

Researcher peers into violent upbringing of German neo-Nazi

SOLINGEN, Germany (AP) — He was kicked as a kid, and he kicked back.

From the time Christian Riher entered a special kindergarten for disturbed children to the day of his arrest for the arson murder of five Turks who lived four houses away, his life was chaotic and violent, according to witnesses and police reports.

His great love was the Schalke city soccer club, and he liked to paint swastikas and shout "Heil Hitler!" according to schoolmates.

Sometimes he would go to Graefrath, a quaint medieval town on a hillside down the road, to drink beer at a club with a reputed right-wing activist who taught other youngsters tae kwon do.

Riher and the three other young men arrested for the May 29 arson attack were known to be hostile to foreigners.

The extreme-right scene is small in Solingen, an industrial city of 160,000, but many youths seem to be aware of it.

He was kicked as a child, and he kicked back. Schoolmates say he liked to paint swastikas and shout 'Heil Hitler!'

"I have some friends who were involved for a few years, then quit," said a 21-year-old construction worker who identified himself only as Moreno. "The members in Solingen are only fellow travelers. They aren't hard-core types."

The best-known neo-Nazi figure in town is Bernd Koch, an unemployed typesetter who has pictures of Hitler on his office wall. Koch, who leads a group called the Mountain Front, says he had nothing to do with Riher.

"What happened is horrible. It damages me and all of my comrades," he told Stern magazine.

Riher was friendly with Bernd Schmidt, who ran a karate and tae kwon do studio at an inn in Graefrath, according to an instructor at the school.

Unconfirmed news reports claim Schmidt is the Solingen representative of the rightist National Front.

Riher's father left his mother, Brigitte, before Christian was born. She sometimes beat the boy, and he occasionally smashed up the house or set fires, the reports say.

At about 8 he was sent to a home for wayward boys, then spent a year in Sweden and another year with foster parents, according to police reports quoted in two Solingen newspapers, the Tagesblatt and the Morgenpost.

They sent him back.

Archaeologists discover gold mine while exploring Egyptian ghost town

N.Y. Times News Service

Archeologists exploring a ghost town in the remote eastern desert of Egypt have discovered the remains of what almost certainly was a major gold-mining operation for the Byzantine Empire. The stark granite cliffs surrounding the town were the source of a rich supply of the metal that gilded the icons and lavish art of early Christianity.

The site, called Bir Umm Fawakhir, should give scholars a rare look at the conditions of ordinary people in Byzantine Egypt, a poorly understood period from A.D. 330, when control of the Roman Empire shifted to Constantinople, until the Muslim conquest in A.D. 642.

Archeologists have generally neglected the period, concentrating instead on the temples, tombs and other splendors of the ancient Pharaohs. Historians studying Byzantine Egypt have had to rely on tax rolls, legal and religious documents, textiles, art and churches, which give a limited view of most individuals' lives.

In announcing the discovery, Dr. Carol Meyer, an archeologist at the Oriental Institute of the University of Chicago, said that Bir Umm Fawakhir was one of only two Byzantine villages known in Egypt, and by far the better-preserved one. The partial walls of granite cobbles are still standing, and they outline the ruins of more than 200 houses in the central village. There remain wells, streets and quarries, as well as outlying settlements, some with more than 40 structures.

Pottery fragments show that the site, about 60 miles east of Luxor, near a road between the Nile River and the Red Sea, was an active settlement of miners and other workers in the fifth and sixth centuries. Some of the designs included Christian crosses. Labels painted in red on wine jars were in Greek. One of the first words the archeologists deciphered was the Greek word for sweet, presumably referring to the quality of the wine.

The ruins lie on the hot, sandy floor of a narrow, isolated valley, a bleak and arid moonscape surrounded by steep granite cliffs. The sides of the cliffs are pitted with gold mines, usually shallow shafts or trenches following a vein of quartz containing gold.

Among the artifacts found in explorations last January was a granite pounding stone that had been used to crush gold-bearing quartz. Written accounts of mining practices at the time describe workers using mills to grind stone into a powder from which gold was then washed.

"It was a wonderful find," Meyer said. "The pounding stone was surrounded by chunks of white quartz that a worker had crushed and then just walked away from.

Studies suggest moderate coffee not bad for heart

LONDON (AP) — Coffee drinkers do not suffer an increased risk of heart disease, according to a new study.

Some studies in Europe have linked coffee to a higher incidence of heart disease, but other studies indicate no problem for moderate consumption.

"The bulk of the evidence suggests a few cups of coffee a day is not associated with heart disease. I don't know if this study adds more to that," Dr. Eric Rimm, an epidemiologist at the Harvard School of Public Health in Cambridge, Mass., said in a telephone interview.

Rimm worked on a study of heart disease and coffee a few years ago, based on more than 45,000 men, that found no danger in drinking a few cups a day.

"There is evidence that a very heavy consumption level — about eight to 10 cups day — is associated with heart disease," he said.

The latest report, based on a study between 1984 and 1986 of 10,359 men and women in Scotland, is in the June issue of the Journal of Epidemiology and Community Health.

Dr. Colin Brown, a researcher at Ninewells Hospital in Dundee, Scotland, said the participants were between the ages of 40 and 59. The study included a physical exam, heart test, blood samples and 300 questions about health, life and diet.

Doctors divided participants into four groups depending on daily coffee consumption: none; one to two cups; three to four; or more than four.

Brown said heart disease affected 27 percent of the people in the no-coffee group compared to 20 percent of those in each of the other three groups.

Although participants in the Scottish study were not asked how they prepared their coffee, it was assumed that most drank instant coffee with caffeine, like the overwhelming majority of British coffee drinkers.

Without confirmation from other studies, Brown said he does not recommend drinking instant coffee to ward off heart disease.

Research indicates Earth's climate could change abruptly

By Walter Sullivan
N.Y. Times News Service

To the astonishment of climate specialists, an analysis of ice extracted from the full depth of the Greenland ice sheet has shown that except for the 8,000 to 10,000 years since the last glacial epoch, the climate over the past 250,000 years has changed frequently and abruptly.

The findings suggest that the period of stable climate in which human civilization has flourished might be unusual, and that the current climate may get either warmer or colder much more quickly than had been believed — in spans of decades or even less.

The data are likely to bolster concern that future changes in climate might not be spread over many centuries, allowing farmers to adjust to altered growing conditions and coastal cities to deal with rising sea levels, for example.

Scientists have speculated for years about the effects of climate warming. Even a rise of a few feet in sea level would flood many food-producing regions and populous areas.

Commenting on the new research, Dr. Andrew J. Weaver of the University of Victoria in British Columbia said that if the climate becomes colder, Europe would be covered with snow much longer. As glaciers advanced, he said, they would reflect more of the sun's energy back into space, chilling the climate even more.

Findings suggest that period of stable climate in which human civilization has flourished might be unusual.

The scientists said their data showed that a significantly warmer period and a significantly colder period had occurred during the last interval between glacial epochs, about 115,000 to 135,000 years ago. They said they could not tell whether that meant similar changes were in store.

Previous studies had shown that there were abrupt changes in climate during glacial epochs, but the new results, which are being reported Tuesday in two papers in the journal Nature, unexpectedly showed that the same was true in the periods when glaciers had retreated. In one "catastrophic event" at the height of the last interglacial period the average temperature plunged 25 degrees Fahrenheit, to ice-age levels, for about 70 years, the scientists reported.

The authors said they did not have an explanation for the rapid shifts. They also said it was a mystery why the climate of the last 8,000 to 10,000 years had been "strangely stable."

In a commentary in the journal, J.W.C. White of the Institute of Arctic and Alpine Research of the University of Colorado said it was "difficult to express the importance" of the reports on the ice findings.

"Adaptation — the peaceful shifting of food-growing areas, coastal populations and so on — seemed possible, if difficult, when abrupt change meant a few degrees in a century," he wrote. "It now seems a much more formidable task, requiring global cooperation with swift recognition and response."

The new studies found that the average global temperature can change as much as 18 degrees Fahrenheit in a couple of decades during interglacial periods, White said. The current average global temperature is 59 degrees Fahrenheit.

The Greenland studies are based on ice samples extracted by a consortium of scientists from eight European nations. They reached a depth of 9,938 feet, using a drill mounted on the crest of the Greenland ice cap, 10,624 feet above sea level.

Amateur fossil hunters uncover rare dinosaur

By Bob Moen
Associated Press writer

RHAME, N.D. — While millions pack air-conditioned theaters to watch fictional dinosaurs in "Jurassic Park," amateur fossil hunters are braving the elements in North Dakota's badlands to find the real thing.

Merle Clark, 55, a rancher, and Dean Pearson, 36, a feed mill operator, are part of a group of Bowman County volunteers working carefully to unearth a Tyrannosaurus rex skeleton. They may be amateurs, but they've had special training and get guidance from paleontologists.

Only 13 other specimens of the meat-eating giant have been found. This particular Tyrannosaurus, which died some 65 million years ago, is entombed in part of the Hell Creek rock formation in North Dakota's southwest corner. The adult Tyrannosaurus was usually 20 to 23 feet tall and 40 to 45 feet long.

The group began digging last fall, after Pearson found a single fossilized bone sticking out of a steep hillside. He took it to the Museum of the Rockies at Bozeman, Mont., to find out what it was.

"We thought we had a leg bone, but it was nothing like we'd ever seen," Clark said.

He showed it to John Horner, a well-known paleontologist at the museum and a technical adviser to the hit movie "Jurassic Park."

Horner "took one look at it and said 'T-rex,'" Pearson said.

"Everybody's pretty excited about it," he added. "The stuff is pretty well-preserved."

The desolate site, kept secret by the group, is surrounded by a snow fence and posted only with a sign warning "No Admittance."

"We're not trying to hide anything," Pearson said. "We're trying to preserve the security of the site and prevent damage."

It's hard to imagine anyone moseying by. The site is three-quarters of a mile off a little-used gravel road, shielded by the badlands' jagged buttes, towering hills and deep gullies.

"We're assuming the site was not scavenged, but until we get more uncovered we won't know for sure," Pearson said.

The Denver Museum of Natural History and the North Dakota Geological Survey have been providing expert advice. Thirty-six residents have gone through hours of paleontology training on their own time.

Whatever bones are uncovered at the site are destined for the new Pioneer Trails Museum, a small volunteer-run operation in nearby Bowman with an undinosaur-like annual budget of $750 and plenty of space for new exhibits.

'El Nino' current heats waters at Pacific beaches

LOS ANGELES (NYT) — The Pacific "El Nino" current is heating Southern California coastal water at least 5 degrees above normal, and the conditions are likely to continue because the beach waters reach their warmest between now and October, lifeguards say.

From San Pedro to Malibu, swimmers are relishing the ocean temperatures, lifeguards are vigilant because bathers spend more time in the water, and coastal anglers are hooking varieties of fish that prefer warmer waters, officials said.

"The polar bear club is disappointed," said Scott Linkletter, a senior ocean lifeguard at Hermosa Beach, which is in the Los Angeles region. "It's been consistently warm since March."

Seasonal temperatures for Santa Monica Bay are normally in the mid-60s, but readings have been at least 5 degrees higher during the last week, said Tom Overmire, a county lifeguard for 27 years.

"This is real nice," Overmire said Monday, as the bay was 71 degrees.

He said that people who avoided Southern California beaches over the Fourth of July weekend because of hazy coastal weather would have been surprised by the warm surf.

Children learn safety in trailer

By Katherine Poteet
Staff writer

The deaths of two Midland children earlier this year in a housefire have prompted Midland Fire Department officials to look into new and better ways of teaching area children the importance of fire safety.

One of those ways is a Fire Safety House, a trailer equipped to simulate fire conditions and allow small children to practice proper safety techniques in case of a fire.

The department is currently soliciting funds for the trailer, which has proven successful along the East Coast and is currently used in several Texas cities.

"We can pull the trailer up to school and do public education and fire safety programs," said Midland Fire Marshal Jerry Petree.

"It teaches safety techniques with a hands-on approach."

Midland Fire Inspector Patrick Repman is in charge of raising the money needed for the trailer.

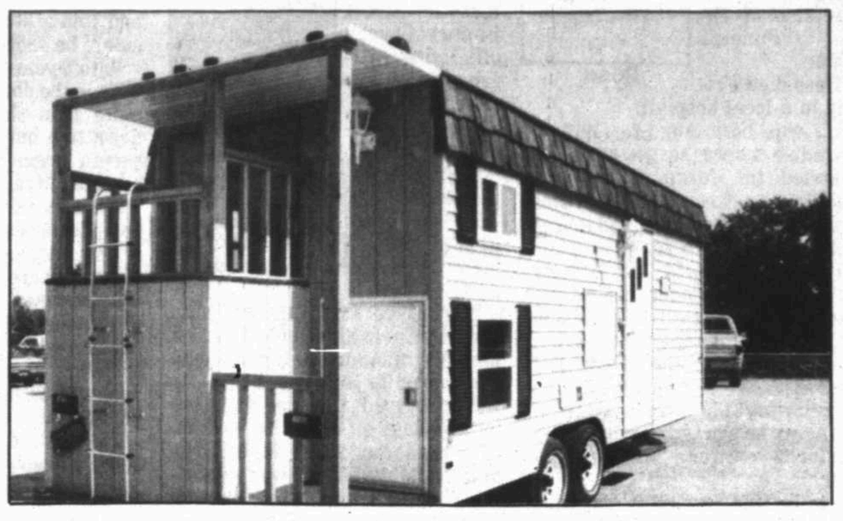

"We have been depending on private sections for donations and grants," Repman said. "We are aiming for between $25,000-$30,000. Right now, we have close to half of that, about $13,000-$14,000.

"We're reortunate to get the money we have received," he said. "We hope the community will be just as generous on the second part."

The department has been working on the project since March, but Repman said no timetable has been set for getting the trailer.

"We want to get to the point so that we can get what we want rather than just settling for something less," Repman said. "If we get over what we need, we can get several options on the trailer, such as a television monitor sys-

Small-town shop offers clips, quips

By Tonie Miller-Uzzel
Staff writer

Living in the big city, few Texans today get to experience small-town life — sitting in a family-run barber shop and exchanging tall-tales while waiting for a turn in the big chair.

The Dal Paso Barber Shop on South First Street in Lamesa is one such piece of Americana still in existence today.

In the same location since 1971, the barber shop has been in Lamesa since 1921. (Dal Paso was a nickname given Lamesa from days longgone by, when cattle men would stop and stay in the town because it was one of the few sites between Dallas and El Paso).

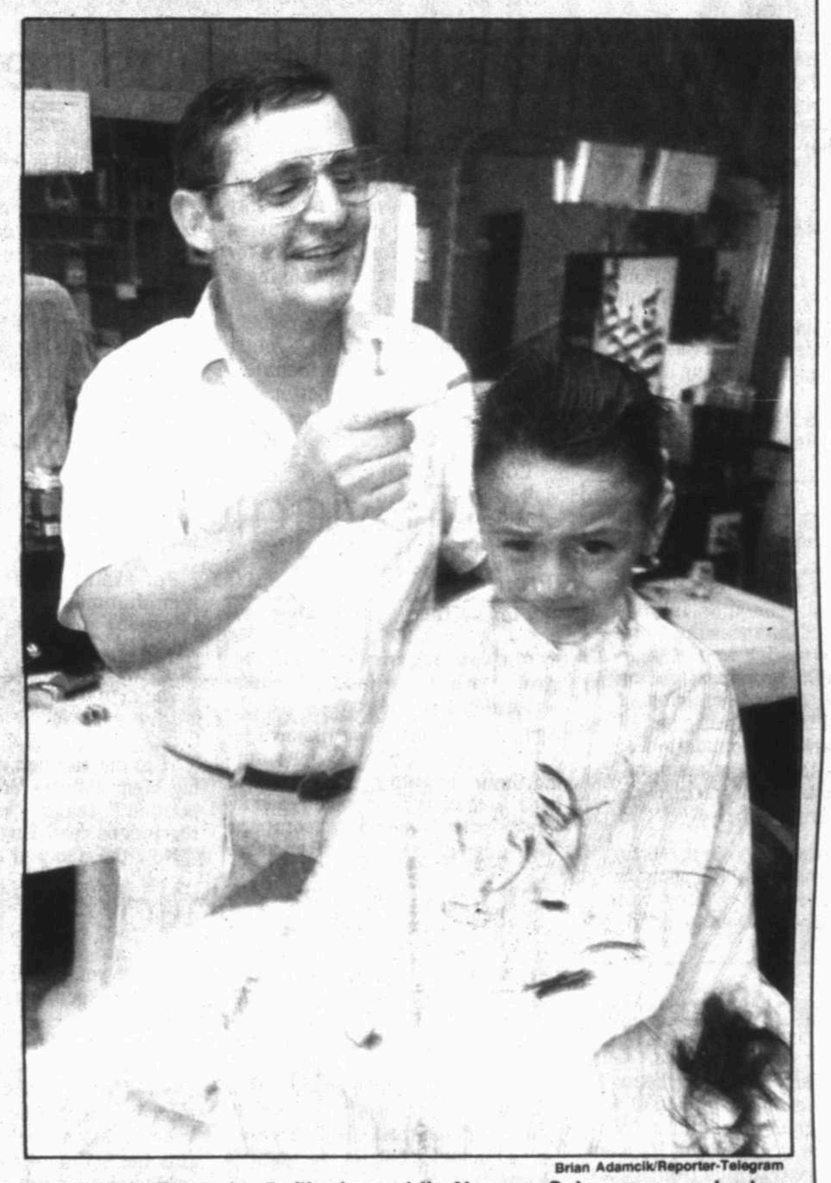

The Dal Paso Barber Shop owner and chief barber Norman Schoonover took over the operation 29 years ago. His father — who bought the shop in 1951 — had been a barber there since 1927.

The family-operated business also employs Schoonover's cousin as a part-time barber in the evenings.

Schoonover said he hadn't always aspired to be a barber. He said he went to barber school to work his way through college and made more money than he anticipated, so he kept on doing it.

Plus, being a barber kind of runs in the family. Not only was his father a barber, but so was his mother's fa-

Like magic, local act wins trip to Japan

They've got magic to do.

A local magic team's performance has made believers out of audiences at state and international competitions.

Inagaki

Now the magic act of "Fumio and Juliet" (Fumio Inagaki of Odessa and Theresa Lambdin of Midland) is headed to the coveted 1994 World Magic Competition in Yokohama, Japan.

"I can't believe it," Inagaki said. "Over the last 10 years, I never thought about being in this position."

Lambdin

The magic duo had 11 minutes to wow judges at an international competition over the July 4th weekend in New Orleans.

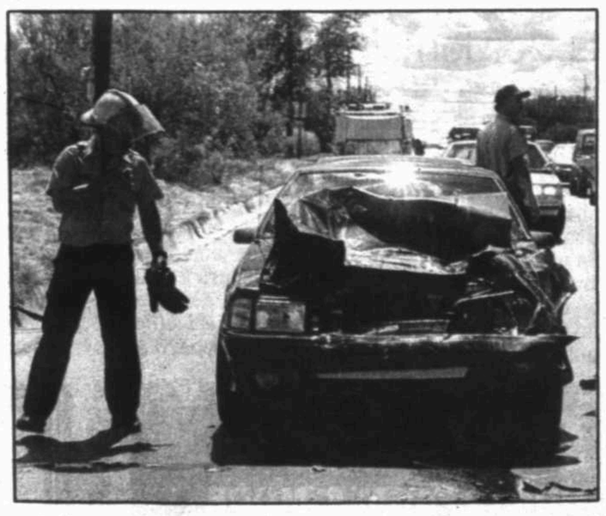

"We got the only standing ovation at the the competition (of 15 acts). I was surprised," Inagaki said.

The competition was held at the Society of American Magicians International Convention. It was attended by 2,000 magicians, representing 12 countries.

Inagaki, orignally from Japan, said he employs humor into his act, and is not afraid to play off his ethnicity.

Anti-abortion campaign ends

By Linda Leavell
Associated Press writer

DALLAS — Operation Rescue's "Cities of Refuge" campaign in Dallas-Fort Worth has been either a great success or a dismal failure, depending on who's talking.

By Operation Rescue's count, seven children were saved during the nine days of the Texas campaign through Saturday. During two rescues, when abortion opponents blocked the doors to a clinic, 45 people were arrested.

About 750 people new to anti-abortion activism attended the nightly rallies hosted at the Metroplex Chapel in Euless.

Anti-abortion protests began the night of July 9 in Dallas-Fort Worth and several other U.S. cities as part of Operation Rescue's 10-day campaign. The demonstrations conclude Sunday.

"We're pleased with the results," Operation Rescue's Dallas-Fort Worth spokesman, Rick Blinn, said. "We think it was a great campaign."

Janie Bush, executive director of the abortion rights group CHOICE, had a different view of the week's events.

"There were no patients coming or going because they had already come and gone," Ms. Bush said.

According to information from the national Operation Rescue office in Summerville, S.C., the Texas protests were smaller and less intense than those in some other cities. In Philadelphia, 400 people were arrested during demonstrations.

GARY OTT

Fun is foreign to single-minded, frowning fanatics

Are you feeling a little feisty about now? Good. Let's have some fun. We'll start by ridiculing others.

Ott

Hey, why not? It's a time-honored tradition. If you can't laugh at yourself, do the next best thing. Laugh at others.

Of course, for this exercise to be successful, it is essential we pick the right person, or persons, to tease. But that shouldn't be difficult. After all, everyone has flaws. All we have to do is choose those who possess the most irritating ones.

Let's see, who can we target this morning?

How about ugly people? No, that's not really fair. They can't help what they look like. Let's show a little compassion here and look elsewhere.

OK, then, how about redneck thugs? No good, either. They might take offense to what we say and beat the you-know-what out of us. They may be dumb, but that doesn't mean they can't cause us bodily harm. Let's leave those folks alone, too.

Hmm, where does that leave us? How about sissies? That's got possibilities, you must admit, but somehow those people are too easy a target. Jokes about them have become almost cliche. Limp wrists, wimpy voices, the prissy way they walk, that sort of thing. Yeah, you're right. We need something a bit more challenging.

Gee, this is tougher than I thought. Who can we make fun of today? Think, people. This is important. Surely, there is someone out there who has gotten on your nerves in the last few days.

Wait a minute! I just had a thought. How about those dreadful single-issue fanatics who haven't laughed in the past eight years because they are too busy worrying about their own little cause?

Yes! This is perfect. No one is more grating, more loathsome, more irritating than those half-baked fanatics who can't enjoy a normal conversation with normal people because all they can think about is that the whole world — and everyone in it — is engaged in a giant conspiracy to destroy their special cause.

Be honest, don't you just hate those people? Of course you do. We all do. They are dreary parasites who are no fun to be around.

You make an innocent joke about their cause and all you get in return is a hateful glare and a 30-minute lecture about how "the federal government is really nothing more than an evil front for the foreign demons who are stealing our individual freedoms one by one, and all we do — especially pinko liberals like you — is stand by and watch it happen."

At that point in the conversation you have two choices:

ther, two uncles and the cousin who works for him.

"We've been in hair a long time," he said with a smile. He didn't indicate if he'd been "teased" too often or if he had any "tangles" with his clients.

But, Schoonover said being a barber involves much more than just cutting hair.

"I'm a PR man, a bartender . . . and I do a little counseling on the side," he said.

With 5-year-old Justin Eric Renteria in the chair, Schoonover does more than shave the boy's hair down to a burr haircut — he also gets a tissue and helps the boy blow his nose.

When asked the best thing about being a barber, he said, "I guess it is the people and the money is right up there too."

Schoonover said he has a group of regulars who come in to visit, but this particular day the barber is giving flat tops to Justin Eric and his brother as well as three "old-timers" and a teen-ager.

The gentleman who wanted his boots shined left disappointed — the shoeshine man had gone to lunch.

But the old-timers hung around, just waiting to sit in the chair and have Schoonover work his magic on what was left of their hair.

One of the clients-in-waiting, Jack Rhyne, joked that he ought to get a discount on his haircut because "all he has to do is cut around the bald spot."

Rhyne's partners in the swapping of old stories that afternoon were Dee Breeding and Wayne Davis.

"Those three men have been getting their hair cut before I was here," Schoonover said about his regular customers.

All three of the men visit Schoonover once a month, without fail, to get their $7 haircut.

"I come in once a month to get my hair cut whether I need it or not," Breeding said, removing his baseball hat and rubbing his palm over his scalp.

Each of these men have their own reasons for returning to the Dal Paso for their monthly trims, but the story-telling is their collective favorite.

Rhyne said he likes to come up to the barber shop to listen "to all the bull."

Schoonover added to the bull by smiling and indicating that "these are the best customers I've got . . . besides they can't go nowhere else, no one would cut their hair for 'em."

The barber performs a few specialties on his customers. For instance, Schoonover will do a little complimentary shave job on some unruly eyebrow hairs.

Plus, Schoonover won't cut Davis' hair too short, even though he likes it that way, because his wife has come in and requested he leave a little extra on top.

But, his cutting style isn't the main thing that keeps the customers in the chairs; the jokes and the insults that fly freely in the little barber shop with the four old barber chairs (which were bought new in 1948), are the main draw.

In between the wisecracks, Breeding has taken the chair.

Schoonover recalls a time back in 1949 when his client loaded up the Schoonover family and took them to Chama, N.M., to live for a while.

The barber's conversation veers to memories of living in Chama as a child before the family returned to Lamesa.

The discussion returns to the present when Davis asked the barber to hurry it up because he was missing his dominos game down on the courthouse corner.

Schoonover completes the job on Breeding, who is now on his way home for his afternoon nap and then fills the seat with 14-year-old Mike Davis, the grandson of the elder Davis.

"See ya in a month," Breeding hollers at Schoonover as he heads out the door.

"Now what am I supposed to do with your hair?" the barber asks the teen.

The youth explains he wants the bangs left long, but the back cut without a wedge.

"This is one of the differences between when I started and now — the boys used to come in and they wanted a regular haircut, a burr or something. Now I had better know what they want because they all want something different," Schoonover explains.

Meanwhile the teen rolled his eyes with his face making that "you adults are so out of it" expression.

"I've been cutting this boy's hair just about as long as he has been around. I guess he hasn't lived here all his life," Schoonover said.

Rhyne and Davis said they have both lived in Lamesa for most of their lives and enjoy small-town living.

"Everyone knows everyone else," Schoonover began. "And if you don't know somebody by name you know where they came from," Rhyne finished.

The teen-ager said Lamesa isn't too bad, although there isn't much to do except "drive around the square 'till you run out of gas."

"It is just a small town and I wouldn't have it any other way," Rhyne said.

When asked what he liked best about it, Schoonover and Rhyne both responded, "it's home."

OTT: Fanatics never seem to have any fun

(From 1B)

■ You can argue with them, which, of course, is an incredibly stupid thing to do since you have a better chance of finding a cure for the common cold than changing a fanatic's mind; or

■ You can say, "You're right, I agree with everything you're saying" and then immedately change the subject, or, better yet, make a mad dash for the exit and get as far away from the person as possible.

But the point is, neither option is any fun. That's because these people don't know the meaning of the word "fun." It is completely foreign to them. Instead, they walk around in a maniacal daze, convinced that everyone who doesn't share their point of view is a mindless tool of the conspirators.

What these people need to do, of course, is lighten up. Come on, Mr. Fanatic, take a deep breath. There's more to life than your special cause. You just need to loosen up and laugh a little.

You can't let your cause — no matter how important it might be — completely dominate your life. You'll become obsessed. It is not a healthy situation. That frown you're carrying around with you will freeze on your face permanently.

Now you might be thinking, "Gary, what you say is true, but the world needs single-minded people. They're the ones who get things done. Their obsession with a cause is what drives them to action. And, that action — when channeled in a proper direction — results in a better world for all of us."

OK, I'll grant you that point. Fanatics DO get things done.

But now you must acknowledge my point. They make lousy guests at cocktail parties.

Teen fulfills dream at match

Staff report

Yes, that was Lee High School junior Scott Dunlap interviewing wrestler Ric Flair on TBS Atlanta's World Championship Wrestling match Saturday night.

Looking dapper in a tuxedo, Scott queried the wrestler about his toughest match and who he would like to challenge in the upcoming "Big Blast" match.

Flair said he hoped he would be able "to style, and profile, and walk that illustrious aisle," and qualify for the Big Blast.

The local teen-ager fulfilled his dream of interviewing a professional wrestler and appearing in a TBS broadcast during the 5 p.m. Saturday airing of the WCW. His wish was granted by the Starlight Foundation of Atlanta. Although not terminally ill, Scott is chronically ill, and has cerebral palsy.

He showed nary a butterfly when he took the microphone and interviewed Flair from MGM Studios in Orlando, Fla.

ACT: Magic team heads to world competition and his partner's impeccable timing — brought the audience to its feet in New Orleans Orpheum Theatre (where Houdini once performed).

The magic duo is well known locally for past performances during Summer Mummer's olio. The act has always been performed silently, with musical accompaniment, though signs are often used.

For example, one sign in a former Mummers act read "Don't try this trick at home." On the flip side it read, "Go to your neighbors."

The sign was translated to Spanish for a performance in Mexico City.

"I'm not worried about translating signs for the Yokohama competition," Inagaki said. "Most of the judges read English."

Now the duo will be working on perfecting a 10-minute act to present at the world competition.

"It has to be 10 minutes," Inagaki said. "If it goes past the time limit, no matter what, that curtain comes down."

Born in Tokyo, Inagaki looks forward to returning home for the world competition and the challenge of putting on a bring-down-the-house performance. "The world competition is like the Olympics for magicians. It's the highest competition you can get to."

A tough self-critic, Inagaki videotapes his performances to look for ways to improve the act.

In the international competition, the team was judged on stage presentation, costumes, props, technique, skill, showmanship and audience response.

They also won five state awards between 1983 and 1991 from the Texas Association of Magicians.

TRAILER: Children learn proper safety techniques

tem which allows the children to watch their friends inside the trailer."

Repman said he has looked at several models for the safety house and has just about decided on a model that is in use in Pennsylvania.

"I looked at some that were way too big for what we might need, like some two-story ones," he said. "We haven't decided on one for sure yet, but the one in Pennsylvania seems to be the most functional."

Each trailer is basically equipped with several rooms, including a bedroom, living room, kitchen, bathroom and a control room. It has a smoke machine that fills the bedroom with a non-toxic material to simulate fire conditions and teach children the proper "drop and roll" technique.

Children also learn the importance of touching a door to ascertain if it's hot before opening it and learn to climb down a chain ladder from the second-floor bedroom in case they cannot leave the room via the door.

The trailer is equipped with fire safety devices such as smoke detectors, fire extinguishers and non-functional sprinkler system and a 911 telephone system that allows the operator in the control room to answer the phone as a police dispatcher.

Repman said the trailer is set up for elementary school-age children.

"Even in the older elementary school kids, they are not as responsive to stuff like this," he said. "We use different methods with older kids than we do with kindergarten through about third or fourth grade."

He said until the department has obtained the trailer and had a chance to use it, a particular age group has not been targeted.

Jury convicts Houston man of murder

SHREVEPORT, La. (AP) — A Caddo Parish District Court jury has convicted a Houston man of murdering two men outside the Caddo Career Center in a drug-related robbery-shooting.

Wesley Thomas, 25, was found guilty Friday of second-degree murder after the eight-woman, four-man jury deliberated 3½ hours. He faces two mandatory life prison sentences. A sentencing date has not been scheduled.

Thomas denied involvement in the shooting, saying he was asleep in the back of the van when the shots were fired.

Defense attorney Michael McDonald told the jury that the witness' testimony should be discounted because of his handicap.

Thomas is one of four men indicted for the murders. Gary Stacy, 18, and Donnie Gilliard, 23, both of Houston, are jailed at Caddo Detention Center. Michael Birklett, no age available, of Houston, is fighting extradition from Texas.

Thomas was convicted of killing Latson Williams, 24, and Ken Lowston, 27, in September 1991. Both were shot repeatedly inside a parked car found idling on a street near the center.

Assistant District Attorney Hugo Holland said money was stolen from the victims, who were allegedly involved in drug trafficking.

Thomas was picked from a police lineup of 36 men by an 18-year-old, mildly mentally impaired witness who testified he saw Thomas shoot into the car from a van parked nearby.

Jury indicts Borden employee for rigging milk contracts

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — A Corpus Christi man has been indicted in connection with an alleged scheme to divide up business on milk purchases from some South Texas school districts.

Kelly B. Longbotham was indicted Friday on charges of conspiracy to commit mail fraud and conspiracy to eliminate competition in supplying milk to public schools. The two-count indictment states that the school districts are located in, but not limited to, Bee and Live Oak counties.

A company official confirmed that Longbotham is an employee of Borden Inc.

"There has been an investigation into the milk industry throughout the nation," said Alan Pason, chief of the Dallas field office of the U.S. Justice Department's antitrust division. "The antitrust division has numerous grand jury investigations throughout the country."

Federal probes grew out of state investigations that started in the late 1980s. Investigators in at least 20 states have found evidence that dairy companies and employees have conspired to rig bids on milk products for years.

University summer enrollment shows increase

Staff report

ODESSA — Summer enrollment at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin increased over the same period a year ago, making it the only component in the UT System to show growth this summer, figures show.

The number of students enrolled for 1993 is 1,136, a four percent gain over the 1992 total of 1,096.

While UTPB Registrar Nan Goodwin partially credited the increase to additional course offerings on the freshman and sophomore levels, she added, "I also think it's an overall indication of the steady incline we're experiencing in enrollment each semester."

Registration for the fall semester begins Aug. 26. For admission information, call 367-2210.

EDUCATION IN BRIEF

The students, age 15 through 18, will arrive in the United States in August, attend a local high school, and return to their home countries in June of 1994. The students, all fluent in English, have been carefully screened by the local representatives in their home countries, and have their own medical insurance and spending money.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

Midland College to host coed sand volleyball tournament

By H.A. Tuck

One of the most-used facilities on campus this summer has been the new sand volleyball court. Until next week, most of the organized events have been two-on-two or three-on-three matches which are for the VERY SERIOUS players.

Tuck

But the finale of organized play for the summer is a coed six-player team event on Saturday and Sunday, July 24-25. Three males and three females comprise each team, which will pay a nominal $30 entry fee for the double-elimination event.

Prizes are being awarded for teams finishing first, second or third.

Now these teams also can be very serious, but the six-member teams do require just a bit less athleticism or conditioning than the teams with fewer players.

If you'd like to enter, or need more information, call John Edgar at 682-3426.

If you planned on taking a course during the second summer session at MC, but you missed registration last Wednesday, there's still a chance. Late registration is going on through Wednesday. And, since the session just started Thursday, you've only missed one day of class so far.

I'd suggest that you try to register Monday and not miss any more classes since the summer moves rapidly. Class sessions are two-hours in length Monday through Thursday, plus any labs. Summer II ends on Aug. 19. You can register in the Student Services Office, located in the Student Center, or call 685-4501 for more information. The office is open from 7 a.m.-5 p.m. for late registration.

July's breakfast for owners/operators of small businesses and minority-owned businesses begins at 7:30 a.m. Tuesday in the Roadrunner Room, Student Center. Cost of the meal and the meeting is just $5, which can be paid at the door.

You'll have an opportunity to meet major purchasers in the community as well as others from small businesses. It's a great chance to make new contacts and find ways to increase your business.

The breakfast is normally held on the third Tuesday of each month at the Roadrunner Room.

This year's annual Cheerleader Camp at Midland College takes place July 26-29. It's for youngsters who will be in first grade through 12th grade this fall. They'll get to learn cheers, chants, tumbling, and dance routines from the award-winning Midland College Chaparral Cheerleaders.

Cost of the camp, which runs from 9 a.m.-noon for the four days, is just $50. Registrations are accepted until 9 a.m. the first day. To register or reserve a space, call 685-4502 Monday through Thursday from 7 a.m.-5 p.m., or come to the Physical Education Building the first day at 8:30 a.m.

Another reminder that the Board of Trustees isn't meeting this month. Their next meeting is Tuesday, Aug. 10, at 6 p.m. in the Roadrunner Room, with a special meeting slated for 4 p.m. Tuesday, Aug. 17, in the Board Room. The Roadrunner Room is the large meeting room located in the Student Center Building.

The Aug. 10 meeting is a public hearing about the proposed change in tax rate, which will result in a net decrease in taxes. That meeting also will be the regular monthly meeting of the Board. The Aug. 17 meeting is solely so the Board can formally adopt the 1993-94 budget.

You might not have heard much about it lately, but the Chaparral Corps Volunteer Program is alive and well. Quite a number of Chaparral Corps volunteers worked last week at Summer II registration. Others serve as tutors, help in the library, or assist in labs. The Chaparral Corps utilized 94 volunteers during its first year of operations and is seeking more volunteers to become members of the Chaparral Corps for 1993-94.

Training is provided for specific skills needed. If you'd like to learn more about the Chaparral Corps, contact Chaparral Corps coordinator Linda Powell at 685-4767.

There's nothing new on the Continuing Education class schedule for this week, as the summer winds down. Except for the twice-weekly offerings of Defensive Driving, there are just three more classes being offered the remainder of the summer.

There are two Hunter Education classes starting in Aug. One meets Monday and Wednesday from Aug. 2-11 and another on Tuesday and Thursday from Aug. 3-12. Cost of this class is $7.

An Adult CPR class is scheduled Aug. 9 and 11 for a fee of $25.

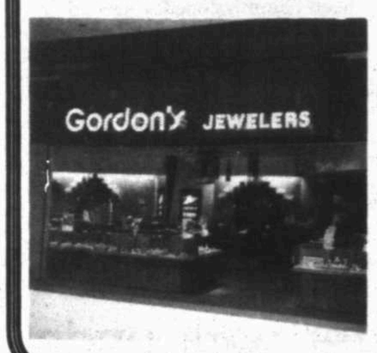

You should visit the Continuing Education office in the Administration Building to register for any of these classes. You can call 685-4518 for more information or to pay for a class using your MasterCard, Visa, or Discover card.

For those eager beavers, the fall schedule of Continuing Education classes will be published soon.

Official pushes veterans' support of amendments

EL PASO (AP) — The state's special veterans benefits programs could be out of money by November due to record-setting demand for home loans, Texas Land Commissioner Garry Mauro said Saturday.

Mauro urged support for Proposition 10, which will go before Texas voters Nov. 2. The constitutional amendment authorizes the Veterans Land Board to issue $500 million in general obligation bonds to continue funding veterans home loans and $250 million to continue financing for veterans land loans.

"Unless we get the authority to issue new bonds to finance new loans, the Texas Veterans Land Board programs, the best veterans programs in the country, will be dead," Mauro told the American Legion of Texas.

Veterans now have a $90,000 total benefits package that allows them to get low-interest loans at below-market rates for home or land purchases or making home improvements.

Legislation that raised the ceiling on Veterans Land Board home loans from $20,000 to $45,000 and competitive interested rates were responsible for a big jump in loan activity over the past 18 months, Mauro said. During that period, the agency has made more than $161 million in home loans to more than 3,000 Texas veterans, Mauro said.

The board is on a record pace toward loaning $140 million during fiscal 1993, ten times more than the previous year, he said.

"That's the good part. The bad part is we have approximately $90 million left in housing bond money to get us through the summer. That should be enough to get us through the first week of November and the bond election," Mauro said. "It'll be close but I think we'll make it."

Photographer gets 50 years for child molesting

HOUSTON (AP) — A photographer has been sentenced to 50 years in prison for molesting and taking nude pictures and videotapes of children.

Larry Lynn Wallace, 44, pleaded guilty Friday to one count of aggravated sexual assault, two counts of indecency with a child and four counts of sexual performance by a child in connection with what authorities say was a year of illegal activity beginning in 1991.

Wallace, who faces similar charges in McLennan and Bastrop counties, was arrested in February after his girlfriend's 8-year-old daughter said he had molested and photographed her.

Harris County sheriff's deputies who arrested him found thousands of sexually explicit photographs and videotapes of Wallace and young girls. Most of the children in the pictures have been identified, authorities said.

Prosecutor Dan Rizzo said Wallace would make friends with women who had young daughters and then would molest the girls and their friends.

Rex and Rita are counting on you this summer.

New underwater park under construction in Gulf of Mexico

FREEPORT (AP) — It's the newest wrinkle in theme parks — an underwater pyramid under construction in the Gulf of Mexico for sport fishermen and divers.

The pyramid, which will consist of huge blocks made from power plant coal ash, is designed to serve as habitat for grouper, red snapper and other fish and as prime exploration territory for sport divers.

Located about 30 miles east of this coastal town, the park is being built at a popular fishing spot just a couple of hundred feet from several sunken ships and an artificial reef made of industrial pipe.

Along with the other underwater structures, the new reef will form an underwater entertainment complex that may be a prototype for many more.

"It's the intent of Texas Parks and Wildlife to create these underwater parks offshore for future generations," said Jim Morrison, chairman of the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department's Artificial Reef Advisory Committee.

Other artificial reefs have built up around a number of sunken structures and oil rigs in the Gulf.

Morrison's committee backed construction of the reef, sponsored by Houston Lighting & Power Co., Texas A&M University at Galveston and JTM Industries, Inc., a Fort Bend County coal ash management firm.

More than 300 two-ton blocks are being used to build the pyramid. The first blocks were lowered in a huge basket and deposited on the barren ocean floor Thursday.

Construction is scheduled to be completed late Sunday.

The cost of manufacturing the blocks and building the reef is about $60,000. The scientific monitoring will coast another $70,000 or $80,000 over the next couple of years.

The first blocks had barely settled Thursday before fish began hiding in the nooks and crannies among them, said Jean Bristol, a Brazoswood High School marine science teacher and volunteer who helped film the deployment.

Ms. Bristol said a host of small sea creatures, including sponges, coral and barnacles, will soon attach to the block.

"Once you've got a base down, that will attract small fish and the bigger fish will come to eat them," she said. "Pretty soon, you've got a nice ecosystem created."

Officials charge woman for false claim of needles

HOUSTON (AP) — A Houston woman remained at large Saturday after a federal grand jury indicted her for what it said were false claims that she found sewing needles in a can of Coca-Cola Classic.

The woman, Deborah Sue McGuire, is believed to be the first Texan to be charged since the so-called Pepsi scare began early last month.

The Galveston County sheriff's department had no record Saturday of the woman's arrest, said Deputy Jose Lozano.

Doctor confirms rancher died from killer bee stings

HARLINGEN (AP) — An allergic reaction from dozens of bee stings filled a rancher's lungs with fluid and killed him, a pathologist said Saturday in a preliminary ruling.

Initial measurements showed that the bees that swarmed Lino Lopez were of the so-called killer bee variety, bee researchers said.

That would make the 82-year-old Starr County man the first documented person killed by Africanized honeybees in the United States since the more aggressive strain crossed from Mexico into Texas in 1990.

"I think he most likely got enough poison from all of those stings, whether they were African or not, that he had an allergic reaction to it," said Ruben Santos, the forensic pathologist who performed the autopsy.

Scientists waited the results of additional tests scheduled Monday for official word whether the hive was Africanized or the more common European variety.

"I'm almost positive that the bees — whatever kind of species they were — were responsible for the cause of death," Santos said.

Santos, who found about 40 stings with the stingers still attached to the body, listed the preliminary cause of death as acute pulmonary edema due to the insect stings.

Lopez had emphysema and a heart condition, but neither problem appeared serious enough to have caused his death so suddenly, Santos said.

A swarm attacked Lopez on Thursday afternoon inside an abandoned house at his ranch about 30 miles north of Rio Grande City.

Lopez likely had little chance to escape once he agitated the bees by trying to drive them out of a wall with a burning burlap sack attached to a long stick, authorities said.

With stings on his head, chest and arms, Lopez died on his way to the hospital, his family told investigators.

"The day was hot, real hot. He should have been in air conditioning," said Dewitt "Chachi" Jones, Starr County justice of the peace. "But he was pretty active. He always kept going back and forth."

Lopez lived in Rio Grande City but spent much of his time at the ranch, Jones said.

Entomologist Stormy Sparks of the Texas A&M Agricultural Extension Service in Weslaco said Africanized honeybees are much more aggressive in defending their nests than the European variety.

"It's not any different sting for sting, but there's just a much bigger potential for multiple stings with the Africanized bees," Sparks said.

Waylon Chandler, who killed the bees Friday morning and brought samples to the USDA's Agricultural Research Service Honeybee Lab in Weslaco, estimated there had been some 60,000 bees at the hive in a wall at the old ranch home.

Preliminary measurements of bee samples showed most of them were Africanized, although some had European dimensions, Sparks said.

The hive showed signs that it was once purely European, but it had been taken over by Africanized bees in crossbreeding during swarmings, he said.

In another preliminary study Saturday, all 20 bees from a different sample appeared to be Africanized, according to Elba Quintero of the USDA's Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service office in Harlingen.

A definite answer was expected Monday following studies of more samples at the Bee Research Lab in Beltsville, Md., which performs national identification on honeybees, authorities said.

If confirmed, the first U.S. fatality caused by Africanized bees shouldn't cause South Texans to panic, said Dave Mayes, a spokesman for Texas A&M's Agricultural Department.

Consultants hope law spells new business

By Peggy Fikac
Associated Press writer

AUSTIN — The new school finance law might spell new business for some high-powered consultants who say they can ease the potential transfer of property from rich to poor school districts' tax bases.

The consultants — including two former lawmakers, a former Texas education commissioner and a prominent lawyer who represents poor school districts challenging portions of the new law — haven't done any property transfers yet.

But their venture could boom if rich school districts can't get voter approval to reduce their property wealth in another way, such as sending some money to the state.

Unlike several other options for sharing wealth allowed under the new law, transferring property doesn't require a school district election.

"I'm going to be surprised if any substantial number of these elections pass," said Austin lawyer Buck Wood. He represents poor school districts suing over part of the new law and also is involved in the Property Placements Inc. consulting business.

Texas voters in May overwhelmingly turned down a share-the-wealth school funding proposal. That prompted lawmakers to pass the current measure, which didn't require a statewide vote of the people.

The Legislature had to act by a June 1 Texas Supreme Court deadline to even out funding available to school districts, which rely on state aid, local property taxes and some federal money.

Under the new law, the 100-plus school districts with more than $280,000 in property wealth per student must choose by Sept. 1 among five options for reducing their riches.

The alternatives include sending money to the state; contracting to educate other districts' students; merging tax bases with one or more poorer districts; consolidating voluntarily; or moving some taxable property to another district's tax rolls.

The first three options require voter approval. Officials say their discussions with school districts indicate the first two are the most popular, likely because there is a court challenge and those options could be easily abandoned.

But if those elections fail — and the law remains in place for at least this school year, which appears likely — school districts must make another choice to avoid having the state either move their property or consolidate them with others.

School districts "might find themselves here in the middle of August with a failed election," Wood said. "Then there's going to be a mad scramble to get this done."

Besides Wood, the consultants include former state Sens. Kent Caperton and Jack Strong and former education commissioner Bill Kirby.

"We think we can be of help," Caperton said. "That's not to say a district could not accomplish a transfer without our services."

Property-poor Karnes City Independent School District is among those that have told the consulting firm to see what sort of arrangement it could come up with, said Superintendent William Gary.

"We should be attractive" to a business, considering the district's tax rate of 94 cents per $100 property valuation, Gary said. The state average local property tax rate in school districts was nearly $1.30 in 1992, according to the state comptroller's property tax division.

The rich and poor school districts must agree for property to be transferred. The business involved doesn't get a vote in the matter, said TEA spokeswoman Della May Moore.

But businesses — which could see their tax bills cut if they are moved to a low-taxing district — are the ones that would pay for the consulting service, said Caperton. "No taxpayer dollars would be paid to us," he said.

The fee likely will be a range of 2 percent to 6 percent of the business's tax savings, he said. "It's certainly no windfall."

Stanton soreheads sure are friendly!

Driving along Interstate 20 a motorist might not give much thought to the little agricultural community of Stanton, located about 20 miles east of Midland.

In fact, a billboard along the highway makes it clear that Stanton is home to "3,000 friendly people and a few old soreheads." The community's residents, in fact, take quite a lot of pride in their "old soreheads" — it even has an "Old Sorehead Band."

The band was out in full force last weekend for Martin County's 60th Annual Old Settlers' Reunion, and so were crowds of people. If there's one thing the people in Stanton know how to do it is have fun and they proved it during the reunion!

There were plenty of activities for the "home folks" who have since moved away, but returned for the reunion — cow chip throwing, an egg tossing contest, and a reunion of former students of Our Lady of Mercy Academy and Convent, among others. It was typical "down home" fun and what a visitor might expect to find on a festive Saturday in a community like Stanton.

Of course, Stanton has numerous other attractions that make it not only a good place to visit but a good place to live: an active business community, wide streets and quiet neighborhoods, a rich history detailed in such fine institutions as Martin County Historical Museum, and people who are truly caring, friendly and disposed to help others in need.

And there are other features that make the community attractive — good places to eat, a roller rink that attracts youngsters from the surrounding area, and a slow-paced lifestyle.

A representative of the Chamber of Commerce concedes that the assertion that there are 3,000 friendly people in Stanton may be a bit bloated today. That figure came during the "boom" years, she said, and today it may be more like 2,500.

But they are 2,500 friendly people — even if there are a few old soreheads mixed in!

Social Security reform plan could close deficit

In the battle of Washington politics, where Bill Clinton's budget package is being shaped by competing forces, one Clinton proposal has drawn surprisingly little response: the plan to increase the amount of Social Security benefits subject to taxation. Republican legislators put up some opposition to the proposal, which would increase taxes on Social Security benefits for couples earning over $32,000 and singles earning over $25,000. But the plan, which is a moderate attempt at reforming a lightning-hot entitlement program, has not been the subject of massive attack.

The lack of excessive demagoguery about the president's Social Security changes is a step in the right direction. If the United States is ever to control its budget and reduce its deficit, mandatory spending programs like Social Security and Medicare must be confronted.

Now, yes, there are other ways to control entitlement spending. A temporary reduced cost-of-living adjustment for all entitlement beneficiaries is one alternative.

But since insufficient political will exists for that reform, Congress has opted for a plan embraced by Ross Perot and fiscal watchdogs like former Sens. Warren Rudman and Paul Tsongas. Under the Clinton proposal, the amount of Social Security benefits subjected to taxation would increase from 50 percent to a maximum of 85 percent. About half of all Social Security recipients would be subjected to the increase, but it would most affect upper-income retirees.

For instance, on average, a retired couple with yearly income of $30,000 to $40,000, including Social Security benefits, would realize only a $62 annual tax increase. By contrast, a retired couple with $100,000 or more in income would experience an annual tax hike over $1,000.

The budget plan approved by the Senate asks that only retired couples with earnings over $40,000 and singles earning $32,000 or more to subject more of their Social Security benefits to taxation. The Senate's tack seems to be the preferable alternative, since it would affect fewer recipients. It would raise just $6 billion less than the House's plan, and would still serve the twofold purpose of providing funds to help close the deficit and providing some change in that portion of the budget that has long been resistant to change.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, July 18, the 199th day of 1993. There are 166 days left in the year

Today's highlight in history:

On July 18, A.D. 64, the Great Fire of Rome, which lasted several days, began. (Contrary to popular belief, Emperor Nero did not fiddle as the city burned, but probably recited poetry.)

On this date:

In 1536, the authority of the pope was declared void in England.

In 1792, American naval hero John Paul Jones died in Paris at age 45.

In 1872, Britain introduced the concept of voting by secret ballot.

In 1918, during World War I, American and French forces launched a counter-offensive against the Germans between the Aisne and Marne rivers in France.

In 1927, Ty Cobb hit safely for the 4,000 time in his career.

In 1932, the United States and Canada signed a treaty to develop the St. Lawrence Seaway.

In 1936, the Spanish Civil War began as Gen. Francisco Franco led an uprising of army troops based in Spanish North Africa.

Congress avoids tightening the tax code

WASHINGTON — Lobbyists and members of Congress can confirm that the sneakiest way to tunnel into the U.S. Treasury is through the tax code. A loophole here, an exemption there and pretty soon you're talking real money.

Anderson

Last year, special-interest tax breaks cost a whopping $375 billion — more than the entire deficit. Over the past decade, such de facto spending has soared by more than $100 billion. As House and Senate conferees gather to hammer out the details of the Clinton budget package, tightening the tax code certainly beats taking an ax to Medicare. But it's unlikely Congress has the stomach to tee off on special interests.

According to Sen. Bill Bradley, D-N.J., a lesson on the power of special interests in Washington can be gleaned from the story of a golf tournament.

"If you rent your home for up to two weeks, you pay no taxes on the rent," Bradley told us recently. "I'm told that it got into the code because a number of years ago, a senator who sat on the Finance Committee had a friend who had a big house close to the Masters golf tournament in Augusta, Ga. And during the Masters, he could rent his house for an incredible amount of money. Therefore, here is this little provision that popped up in this giant tax bill."

This "little provision," according to Senate Finance Committee staffers, costs taxpayers $333 million over five years.

What began as a favor to a friend is still on the books as a tax break for anyone who rents out their house for two weeks or less. Despite an ambitious reform attempt in 1986, engineered by Bradley and Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., the tax code remains a trough of exemptions and exceptions.

Many of these provisions, like the golf course exemption, begin as tiny openings but end up as gaping holes. The secret is in the wording.

Ironically, it was President Clinton's hero — John F. Kennedy — who began the modern system of tax code tinkering.

All too often, members of Congress are only too eager to comply. "Frequently the (special breaks) are disguised. You have to be a sleuth to know who benefits," Bradley says.

Some loopholes have become sacred cows to the general public. Any attempts to remove tax deductions for charitable contributions or mortgage payments would trigger rebellion. But most of the favors are tucked away too deeply for most people to notice. For example:

■ Even as politicians issue pleas to "the forgotten middle class," $32 million is buried in the tax code for special depreciation schedules for rental tuxedos.

■ Millions of dollars are spent trying to clean up lead, mercury and asbestos, yet production of these minerals is subsidized through the tax code at a cost of $62 million over five years.

■ Energy strikes a geyser in the tax code. Coal is subsidized in part through the capital gains treatment of royalties. Cost: More than $10 million a year.

A potpourri of smaller provisions also adds up. Typical is the "firearms excise tax exemption for custom gunsmiths." Cost: $3 million over five years. It exempts custom manufacturers and importers from the 11 percent excise tax on rifles and shotguns.

"You've got to understand there's an industry in this town, and the industry's purpose is to get special interest tax provisions for its clients," explains Bradley. "And sometimes its clients mean a few number of people."

Mighty river shrugs off man's restraining hand

WASHINGTON — One hundred and thirty Julys ago the President, referring to the Mississippi, said, "The father of waters again goes unvexed to the sea." Lincoln was pleased, the occasion being the triumph of the siege of Vicksburg by a general from the Mississippi River town of Galena, Ill.: U.S. Grant.

Will

It would be nice if that willful river — today 16 miles wide on some Illinois and Missouri plains — would be more vexed by human ingenuity. But the big river, by riveting our attention on the unpredictable and uncontrollable sphere of life (which is almost all of life), has some lessons for the river town in which the national government sits. Mother Nature along the Mississippi and human nature along the Potomac are both misbehaving.

The Mississippi runs through America's imagination. On it Huck Finn found freedom by floating away from Aunt Sally and other chafing facets of civilization.

For a long time now people have been trying to tame the river. Today, while deeply regretting the material damage and mourning the human tragedies the river is causing, it is difficult to suppress a secret exhilaration about the way the river casually shrugs off the restraining hand of man. We need recurring reminders of how little mastery our species has — of itself, of events, of nature, of the present or the future.

Regarding nature, at least, we have come some way toward caution about what we can know and do. Not long ago serious people felt that manipulating nature was a practical possibility. Physicist Edward Teller, perhaps hoping that Eisenhower's interest in such uses might make Eisenhower support additional atomic detonations for test purposes, suggested the possible use of atomic devices for altering the flow of rivers and even to modify the weather by changing the dust content of the air.

Such technological hubris has a jarring, even childlike, ring today. Who nowadays would try to interest a president in attempting to control the climate? Well, come to think about it, the vice president might.

By some strange law of the physics of intellectual life, an intellectual excess in one direction is apt to produce a comparable and opposite excess. So today we hear much from people (today's Vice President, for example) who believe that climate, and much of the rest of the natural world, is highly changeable, even fragile. They believe that human behavior, unless controlled by wise government, will have large and lasting and deleterious consequences — global warming, or cooling, or whatever. And they believe that well-regulated societies can regulate the planet's thermostat, and much else.

However, the greening of the blasted slopes of Mount St. Helens testifies to the planet's often underestimated resiliency. In contrast, we consistently overestimate the ability of our governance to subdue social events, which always are at floodtide. Consider two current matters, one abroad, one domestic.

U.S. forces went to Somalia eight months ago for a few weeks — a few months, at most — to facilitate food distribution. Now U.S. gunships have used missiles and cannon to blast something called "the command center" of someone identified as a "fugitive Somali warlord."

Meanwhile, back along the Potomac, some members of the gargantuan House-Senate conference on the $500 billion five-year "deficit reduction" package say the final package may actually have $20 billion less in deficit reductions. Oh.

Still, it is awesome that these people have such mastery of economic projections and manipulations.

With such fine-tuning, they must have that Mississippi of red ink tamed. Like the river.

Blue-collar workers deserve champagne salaries

My Baltimore sisters who don't know beans about baseball came by the other night and right away started fuming about the players being scandalously overpaid. Their ire had been fomented, if I may lapse into crossword-puzzle talk, by the imminent All-Star Game to be played today in their town.

Baker

Like everybody else who hates to see a ballplayer have a big payday, they started in on the shame of a society that pays a schoolteacher only $15 a week, or whatever the current shameful figure is, yet pays millions to Cal Ripken Jr.

They specifically cited Ripken, who plays for their hometown team, the Orioles, as an example of nearly utter worthlessness. Whether this was because he is having a terrible year with the bat seems doubtful, since their interest in RBI statistics is nil.

Most likely it was simply because Ripken is as prominent a piece of the Baltimore landscape as the Bromo-Seltzer tower or the statue of George Washington in Mount Vernon Place, both of which Ripken has closely resembled this season when batting with runners on base.

I hate talking baseball with people who know absolutely nothing about it, even when they are my sisters and I love them. I also hate talking baseball with people who know practically everything about it because they make me feel so ignorant.

For instance, I have been itching to ask this question of Thomas Boswell, baseball wizard of The Washington Post whose eye is always on the Orioles: Is there a law that says you can't walk Frank Thomas when he comes to bat with two men on base?

Thomas, who plays for the Chicago White Sox, comes to bat against the Orioles every few days with two men on base and usually hits a three-run homer. Being pathetically unlearned about baseball, however, I hesitate to ask baseball-wise Boswell why the opposing team doesn't simply walk Thomas in this situation.

Is it because they yearn to be three runs behind? Is it bad sportsmanship to deny Thomas his regular three-run homer by walking him? I'm so certain that this question shows I am completely stupid about baseball that you will never catch me asking it of a master.

I'm not so shy, however, about asking why so many people abuse baseball players for earning princely salaries. You rarely hear anybody say it's shameful that America throws millions at Barbra Streisand, Frank Sinatra, David Letterman, Madonna, or Robert Redford while treating teachers like dirt.

Corporate lawyers and investment bankers aren't constantly abused because they happen to be egregiously overpaid, or at least considerably better paid than the schoolteacher my sisters fret about.

For years, top corporate bosses have regularly been receiving huge pay boosts while running their businesses into the ground. Since the whole economy finally hit the rocks, public hostility, to be sure, has been rising against them, but the overpaid, incompetent CEO still doesn't provoke the kind of bile reserved for baseball players, many of whom are actually quite competent.

Part of it is probably that baseball is blue-collar work widely thought of as entertainment for blue-collar guys. Its long association with beer tells the story. Millionaires are the wine classes. Real guys drink beer.

There may be some mean-spirited streak of envy in Americans which makes them hate seeing a blue-collar worker being paid on the champagne scale along with show-biz stars, lawyers, bankers and corporate bosses. As evidence that the ballplayer doesn't deserve champagne living, note the TV scenes in the winner's locker room at season's end when baseball players use champagne bottles as water pistols.

In any case, you never hear anybody — except maybe schoolteachers — say it's disgraceful that movie, TV, rock, legal, banking, and corporate stars are paid so much better than schoolteachers.

This concern for schoolteachers, though doubtless sincere with my sisters, is probably just gassy discharge from the population at large. Americans' readiness to let the public school system go right on decaying if money is the price of stopping it is illustrated in election after election.

Ignore the humbug, Ripken. Get your money every Friday.

Media coverage unfair to hearing aid industry

There has been some negative media coverage recently concerning the hearing aid industry.

The recent NBC program, "Dateline," is another in a series of TV shows that unfairly characterizes an industry that has improved the lives of millions of people.

We are particularly concerned about these reports because of Beltone's over 50 years of quality service to millions of customers. Beltone has an exceptionally low complaint rate. Company records show that of the 500,000 plus people who purchased our hearing aids over the past three years, substantially less than 1 percent registered a complaint with Beltone's home office in Chicago.

I want to reassure our customers in Odessa, Midland and Big Spring as well as in our monthly service center areas of Alpine, Andrews, Fort Stockton, Kermit, Monahans, and Pecos that we value them highly, and if they have any questions or concerns about their hearing aids in light of this negative, and unfair, media coverage that they get in touch with us.

Musicians deserve college's support too

Well, I notice that the MC Chaps' basketball schedule has been announced. I guess that means that, again, our local tax dollars will afford the "Boys from Brazil" (or wherever else) and their interpreters to receive all inclusive scholarships during their sojourn in Midland, Texas. Noted also, was the fact that the college is searching for, and has scholarships available for, male cheerleaders. They, too, will perform at the basketball games.

Meanwhile, my burning question — which I have harbored since last year's season — is: What happened to the "live" musicians who, previously, had performed during game intervals? I've been told that the "powers that be" thought the "canned" taped music more appropriate to the occasion!

As I understand it, the musicians (representatives of the waning MC music department) were willing to volunteer their time and services. Please enlighten me! Say it ain't so!

Certainly we can all be proud of our local college. The basketball games are great affordable family entertainment. But perhaps we should keep things in perspective.

So — OK, the music department isn't ready for Carnegie Hall, but the basketball team isn't ready for the New York Knicks! Shouldn't they share our support?

Abortion clinic would kill 11 babies per day

Planned Parenthood recently announced their plans to open an abortion center in Midland. They said 4,000 women each year are in need of this "service" in West Texas.

Maybe, Mr. and Ms. Citizen of Midland, you have not stopped to think, to really consider, what having an abortion mill in Midland is all about. I wanted to calculate mathematically its true meaning. So I got my pocket calculator out. . .4,000 abortions divided by 365 days equals 10.95 dead babies per day, times 30 days equals 328.76 dead babies a month.

Does this shock you? I hope so, it shocked me. If something or someone was taking 11 of our children out to be killed each and every day of the month of the year, would you quietly tolerate such a slaughter? I think not.

Bad idea will further country's destruction

NAFTA, a bad idea being sold in high places as good. What does the past tell us about these good deals?

Back in 1913 someone sold the idea of the income tax as being good. Over the years it has ballooned to the monstrosity it is today.

That same year the idea was sold that U.S. senators should be elected by popular vote instead of being selected by the states. America's founding fathers made it right in their wisdom. The process was fixed to favor a special group. Not many people knew or cared.

Again in 1913 the idea was sold to the country that a super-secret Federal Reserve system was good for the nation. Was it really for our good to give America's monetary system and policy in the hands of a group of private individuals?

Now they say NAFTA would be good for the country.

As Patrick Henry said in Virginia, "I smell a rat."

Congress has been influenced already by the monied interests to provide tax incentives to corporations to move out of the country.

Congress has further provided generous tax breaks for persons with cunning and corruption to financially rape and legitimately destroy American companies with leveraged buy-outs.

All of this began in 1913 when the public was fooled. And now they want us to play the fool again in 1993 with NAFTA.

Please, please read, "America, What Went Wrong," by Barlett and Steele. Let's stop the destruction of America.

Health care reform strains sick economy

When President Clinton was elected to office, he vowed to tackle this nation's economic problems. His number one target: Health care reform. He wants to ensure that all 37 million Americans without health care coverage can get the health care they deserve. Guess what, Mr. President?

Your "reform package" would add a new $100 billion a year strain on the already sick economy you are trying to piece back together.

How is the government going to pay for this?

Clinton unveils to you the value added tax — another tax to help the government pay for all its costly programs. We need to let the private sector dealing with health care do their job to take care of America. Clinton's plan of socializing health care damages our system of free enterprise and capitalism. A $100 billion strain of new tax increases and socializing the health care industry is not what America needs, especially now when it is barely crawling out of recession.

Reader apologizes for assumption error

In a letter (Letters, July 5) I wrote that Claudia Egan had promised, during her campaign, that if elected she would have Woodcrest paved. This impression was garnered when one of her constituents remarked during an appeal before Midland City Council about how a succession of officials had promised that the street would be paved and never was.

I erred in assuming that Claudia was one of those officials.

My position that those residents must agree to pay some of the cost of such paving remains the same. My apologies to Claudia.

Shopper appreciates small-town attitudes

I have a neighborhood grocery store. No kiddin'! Remember YEARS ago in small towns when you would go to your grocery store and all the people who worked there called you by name, smiled and really appreciated your business. If you had been out of town or sick and hadn't been there in awhile, they noticed and wanted to know where you had been. Further, if you wanted something they didn't have in stock, they tried their best to get it.

Well, I'm glad to say we still have one of those in Midland — it's bigger than the ones of years ago, but nevertheless, the same friendly and helpful service. It's the Albertson's at 1002 Andrews Highway. I want to say a big THANK YOU to Charlie Stephens, the store director, and each and every one of his dedicated co-workers for making my "neighborhood grocery store" such a pleasant place to shop.

SPEAKING OUT

Doctrines provide God-given rights of people

By Alan D. Boyd

The Fourth of July means far more than just picnics, flags and fireworks. One cannot help but wonder just how many of us pulled out the Declaration of Independence, signed on July 4, 1776, to review the foundation of our republic and the cornerstone of the United States Constitution.

It has been 217 years since the signing of the Declaration of Independence, and 250 years since the birth of the primary author of that timeless document — Thomas Jefferson. His original draft has some alterations made by Franklin and Adams, and Congress also made some minor modifications, but the finished work was substantially Jefferson's original, complete with his felicity of style, graceful turns of phrase and evocative use of words. Of his many achievements, the Declaration is what Jefferson is remembered for most. Over the years, the Declaration has generally been revered by Americans; many of its phrases have become slogans quoted by people of diverse backgrounds, from school children to Supreme Court justices.

A brief review of this document of liberty and the philosophy of Jefferson is appropriate, especially as now, in 1993, many Americans are beginning to wonder just what is the morally correct function of government.

Jefferson was a vigorous and instructive advocate of the constitutional dispersion of powers of government — the separation of powers within the United States government and their dispersion between the central and states governments. He championed this aspect of the Constitution because it limited government — which is essential to individual liberty. He once wrote that he had "sworn upon the altar of God eternal hostility against every form of tyranny over the mind of man."

Jefferson's attitude on the proper role and function of government and the crux of the Declaration are readily found in the first sentence of the second paragraph. "We hold these truths to be self evident, that all men are created equal. . ." Is this saying all men (and women!) are equal in height, weight, intelligence and social background, et cetera? Of course not; indeed these very differences are what make up one of our most prized possessions — our individuality. Rather, it refers to a moral equality, a belief that we are equal in the eyes of God. This has long been an fundamental Judeo-Christian ethic and hence is "self-evident."

The sentence continues with ". . .that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the Pursuit of Happiness." This is the doctrine of God-given, natural rights to life, liberty and property. The right to life means, most basically, that no one has a right to take a life. The right to liberty means, most basically, the right to the exercise of one's faculties (mind and body) without restraint by others, especially government. The right to property means the right to the fruits of one's labors. All these rights, of course, were conditional inasmuch as the right to life, liberty or property could be forfeited should one take the same from another. Jefferson coined the phrase "pursuit of happiness" to refer to the satisfaction that arises from developing one's abilities and reaping the rewards from so doing. In summary, the government has no other valid purpose than to protect the God-given rights of the people who formed the government in the first place; government is to be the servant and not the master.

It is also notable that the Declaration also set forth the right to revolution by a people who are subjected to "a long train of abuses and usurpations" when there is a design for "absolute despotism. . ." Jefferson's attitude here was later amplified in another paper where he stated "the strongest reason for people to retain the right to keep and bear arms is, as a last resort, to protect themselves against tyranny in government." All of the founding fathers shared this logical reasoning, and this was one reason for the Second Amendment in the Bill of Rights.

What would Jefferson say about America today? One can only speculate, but I would venture to say that he would admonish us for not binding down our politicians "with the chains of the Constitution." We still have the time and freedom to do this, but it will take a moral electorate armed with knowledge, commitment and character.

If you need a copy of the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution, please write to P.O. Box 1828, Midland, Tx. 79702.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

Beware of movie if you first read book

If you haven't read the smash novel "The Firm" by John Grisham of Mississippi, you might enjoy the recently released movie of the same name, which stars Tom Cruise.

Grizzard

My problem, however, is that I did read the novel before I went to see the movie. The movie was terrible.

I nearly went to sleep. If it hadn't been for Maude and Clyde, an elderly couple who were sitting behind me, I might have.

Maude had read the book, too, so she spent the entire movie complaining to Clyde how the filmmakers hadn't followed the book.

Clyde, meanwhile, had no business at the movie in the first place, since he apparently couldn't hear it thunder.

Whenever Maude would say, "Clyde, this isn't the way it happened in the book," Clyde would say, "What's that, Maude?" — and Maude would go up a decibel level or two repeating her statement for him.

They really butchered John Grisham's book, which is about a law student who recently graduated, played by Tom Cruise, and taking a job with a Memphis law firm run by the Mafia.

Only Tom Cruise doesn't know that when he takes the job because they offer him a lot of money and a new Mercedes.

"It's a BMW in the book, Clyde," said Maude.

"What did you say?" asked Clyde

"I said, 'IT'S A BMW IN THE BOOK, CLYDE!' "

That's why I thought the movie was so disappointing, the book simply was so much better.

In the book, the Tom Cruise character, Mitch McDeer, has to give up practicing law because he divulges privileged information when he decides to cooperate with the FBI, which is trying to nail the Chicago Mafia family that runs the firm.

In the movie he gets around all that. In the book, he and his wife have to go live on a deserted island somewhere for the rest of their lives, hiding from the Mafia.

In the movie, Mitch turns the two Mafia guys who come to Memphis to kill him into pussycats. He will be able to continue to practice law, and, instead of moving to a deserted island to hide from the Mafia, he and his wife move back to Boston, where Mitch went to Harvard law school. All he will have to worry about is some nut shooting up his office.

I didn't like some of the casting in the movie, either. Holly Hunter plays the hotblooded, chain-smoking, wig-wearing secretary of a private detective who helps nail the firm. Holly Hunter is a Sunday school teacher.

Wilford Brimley plays the firm's evil head of security. Wilford Brimley sells oatmeal on television.

Hal Holbrook plays a bad guy. Hal Holbrook is Mark Twain, for crying out loud.

Gene Hackman plays attorney Avery Tolar, a weasel in the book. Gene Hackman is no weasel. Gene Hackman saved all those people aboard the Poseidon.

Maude agreed. "Gene Hackman is all wrong for that part," she said.

"What did you say?" asked Clyde.

"I said, 'GENE HACKMAN IS ALL WRONG FOR THAT PART!' "

Clyde said, "Mine's too salty, too."

High TAAS failures prompt soul-searching in Brownsville

By Josh Lemieux
Associated Press writer

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — Pick a statistic about Brownsville schools. Chances are it will be sobering.

Four in five students here are economically disadvantaged, nearly two in five speak limited-proficiency English, and one in five seniors — a shocking 386 students — didn't graduate this year because they failed the state minimum-skills test.

Low scores plague the lower grades as well, prompting some soul-searching throughout the Brownsville Independent School District and a new effort to avoid a yearly graduation class of anguish.

Most districts along the border are fast-growing and poor. The Equity Center, an advocacy group for the state's poorer districts, projects that all but three border districts will be losers under the state's new education-finance plan.

With Brownsville expected to lose as much as $12 million and district growing by 1,000 new students per year, Superintendent Esperanza Zendejas says she's trying not to dwell on excuses.

Her strategy for fighting complacency is giving principals more autonomy while making them more accountable for test scores.

"I want to see them more in the classroom making sure that the academics are being taught," she said.

But Zendejas, who comes from a Mexican immigrant family like many of her students, is under pressure herself: she is waiting out results of the superintendent's exam she has twice failed.

"There are certain things in your life that always serve to humble you," said Zendejas, who has been superintendent since April 1992. "What I would hope that I convey is you cannot make one social, cultural, or other impediment prevent you from thinking you can do it."

That message hits home for some students at Hanna High School, one of 13 schools that Zendejas placed on probation because of low scores on the Texas Assessment of Academic Skills test.

"After graduation I would like to go to college in order for me to be someone. That's my main goal," says Rudy Pedraza, 19, who failed all three TAAS segments last school year — reading, writing and math.

Pedraza, who says he struggles with English, believes a summer remedial program is teaching him what he needs to get through the TAAS in his coming senior year.

Administrators are encouraged that about 900 Brownsville students are voluntarily attending the remedial classes this summer.

Sylvia Perez, the new Hanna principal, says this spring's crop of nearly 400 seniors without diplomas because of the TAAS helped inspire some struggling younger students to get serious about the state test.

"We need to teach them responsibility. I think that's one of the R's that's has been possibly missing," she said.

The district is recruiting many of the TAAS summer remedial instructors from middle-schools so they can incorporate the lessons back to the classrooms, Perez said. Zendejas also plans to boost Saturday academies for math, science, reading and writing during the school years.

Still, the district is huge — about 6,000 employees in a city of about 110,000 — and its challenges are daunting.

About 97 percent of Brownsville's 39,000 students are Hispanic. Many new arrivals from Mexico, both legal and illegal, are expensive to educate because they lack English skills.

A Texas Education Agency profile says 81.9 percent of Brownsville students are economically disadvantaged, and 38.4 percent haven't mastered English proficiency.

"We have kids from Mexico enrolling in the 9th grade and we expect them to pass the TAAS," said Angie Tenorio, the administrator in charge of TAAS remediation at Hanna High School. "They are coming from a foreign country and we are asking them to adopt in all aspects in one year."

The newcomers drag down district scores, Tenorio said. Brownsville's exit-level TAAS failure rate of nearly 20 percent this year compared to about 6 percent statewide. Many middle-grade scores lag even farther below the state average.

Despite slightly higher-than-average teacher salaries, only 15 percent of Brownsville instructors have a master's degree, compared to about 30 percent statewide.

The majority of the district's high school math teachers didn't major in math as their primary subject, Zendejas said.

"Many of our problems are in the math," she said. "And that kind of threw me off because math is one of those subjects that you can't bring in language as a reason why you didn't do well."

Money is another issue, even though the district's per pupil expenditures are nearly $900 higher than the state average.

The local property tax base, averaged per pupil, comes to less than $50,000. The state average is more than 3½ times higher.

"I think they are zero," Zendejas said of the chances for a property tax increase in Brownsville. "I don't think this community would tolerate it."

Brownsville depends on the state for 75 percent of its $220 million budget budget. The average Texas district gets 40 percent of its money from Austin.

Zendejas said she must target expenses to cut. A recent state audit questioned $840,000 in district expenses, particularly in consultant and telephone costs.

All along the border, low tax bases make it hard for any district to offset losses from the state's school-finance plan, said Al Kauffman, a lawyer for the Mexican-American Legal Defense Fund.

"Not only are they going to be getting less, but they are not going to make it up," Kauffman said.

Nearly 100 poor districts have challenged the new plan, which was passed in the final days of the legislative session.

The Equity Center estimates that all border districts will lose state money except for tiny Sharyland, near McAllen, and Socorro and San Elizario in El Paso County, which both have extremely high growth rates.

Equity Center Executive Director Craig Foster said he found it ironic that the state elevated TAAS standards the same year that his projections show it will cut funding to poorer districts, which generally achieve lower test scores.

"It's mind-boggling," he said.

Meanwhile, Zendejas said her district must do more with less, and she's putting the pressure on principals.

Principals at each of the schools on probation must submit a plan to Zendejas for improvement. She says she'll expect results or the principals will go.

"I told them, that's what's going to happen to me too, you know. If I can't bring results to the district, what's the board going to do?" she said.

Coast Guard rescues four in Galveston

GALVESTON (AP) — The U.S. Coast Guard said it rescued four persons floating in Galveston Bay early Saturday after the group's pleasure boat began sinking.

None of the group of two men and two women from Longview was injured. They had alerted the Coast Guard Station in Sabine via a cellular phone aboard the boat.

They phoned for help when their 28-foot boat began taking on water and sinking fast around 2:30 a.m. The line went dead almost immediately.

A helicopter was sent from Coast Guard Air Station Houston and a 41-foot patrol boat assisted from Coast Guard Base Galveston.

The helicopter arrived about 3:20 a.m. Rescuers found the four people in the water wearing life vests and signaling for help with a flashlight.

Ranger trade

CINCINNATI — The Florida Marlins traded reliever Cris Carpenter, one of their most productive pitchers this season, to the Texas Rangers on Saturday for two young pitchers.

Texas sent Robb Nen, 23, and Kurt Miller, 21, to the Marlins.

Carpenter, 28, was 0-1 with a 2.89 ERA in 29 games. The middle reliever had allowed just one run in his last 23 1-3 innings and held opposing batters to a .131 average in that same 15-game stretch.

Carpenter had pitched for the St. Louis Cardinals in five seasons before being taken by Florida with its sixth pick in the second round of the expansion draft. He was 10-4 with a 4.23 ERA for St. Louis in 1991 and 5-4 with a 2.97 ERA in 1992.

The Rangers were one game behind first-place Chicago in the AL West when the trade was announced. Texas had been looking to bolster its bullpen with middle relievers.

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — Doug Flutie threw three scoring passes, ran for the winning touchdown and ushered Canadian football into the United States on Saturday night as the Calgary Stampeders beat the Sacramento Gold Miners 38-36.

A crowd of 20,082 braved heat in the 90s to watch the first Canadian Football League game ever played in this country. The expansion Gold Miners, whose roster — unlike other teams in the league — is made up exclusively of Americans, remained winless after three games.

Calgary (2-0) led 31-14 late in the third quarter, but the Gold Miners rallied with three straight touchdowns to take a 35-31 lead with 7:51 left.

Flutie, a former NFL quarterback playing football in his native land for the first time since 1989, put the Stampeders ahead for good with a 3-yard scoring run with 4:25 remaining.

DENVER — The Denver Broncos signed top drat choice Dan Williams and three others Saturday, the eve of the opening of their training camp.

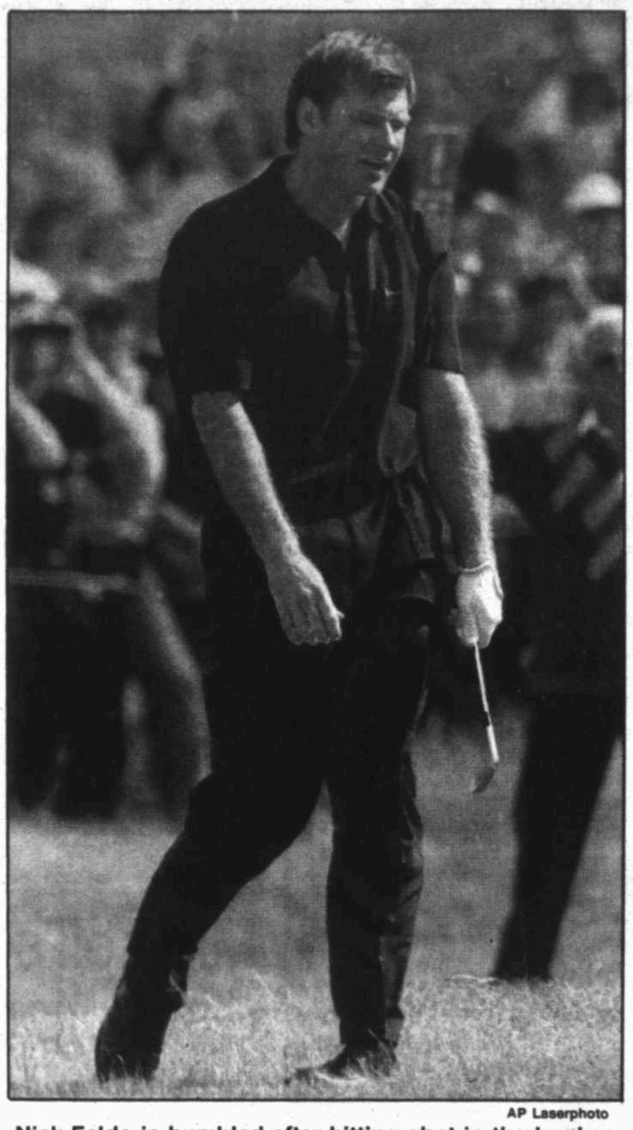

Williams, a defensive end chosen 11th overall, signed six one-year contracts, Broncos spokesman Jim Saccomano said. Terms were not announced.

The Broncos also re-signed veteran quarterback Shawn Moore and draft choices Melvin Bonner, a wide receiver from Baylor, and Kevin Williams, a running back from UCLA.

Pavin ties Faldo for Open lead

AP Sports Writer

SANDWICH, England — Round and round in the swirling wind went the lead of the British Open until a hungry Corey Pavin finally caught a humbled Nick Faldo.

One day after carding a Royal St. George's record 63 for a 1-stroke lead, Faldo settled for par 70 Saturday and a tie at 8-under 202 with the hot-putting Pavin, who posted 68.

Heavy rains and fierce winds are forecast for today's finale, setting up the likelihood of another wild round of shifting leads.

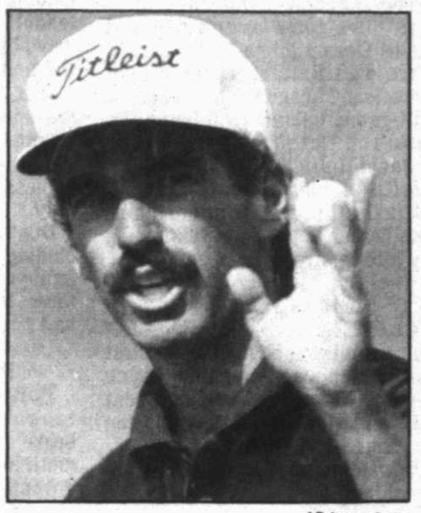

Greg Norman, who shot 69, and Bernhard Langer, who made par, each grabbed a piece of the lead during the five-hour drama before finishing a stroke behind. Nick Price and Peter Senior came in only 3 shots off the lead, and Wayne Grady's 64 in the calmer morning put him into a group at 206 with Fred Couples and Ernie Els.

John Daly and Fuzzy Zoeller also stayed in contention at 207.

"Nick is a threat but not the principal threat," Norman said. "There are six or seven principal threats, all on equal footing.

"I wish I could play right now, that's how good I feel."

Faldo, the defending champion and three-time winner of the British Open, didn't feel quite so eager to play right away, returning to the practice range after his round. He blamed the stiff two-club wind, devilish pin placements and himself for his slide of 7 strokes from the second round.

Corey Pavin

"I want to sort a few things out," the Englishman said. "I hit a few bad shots today and a few bad putts, and I want to get everything into good shape for tomorrow.

Faldo celebrates his 36th birthday today, but he'll be doing it in a cauldron of pressure as he goes around with Pavin.

"I think Corey Pavin has a great chance," Norman said. "He is one of the most underestimated players in the game. He can almost make the ball talk."

N. Central wins title

■ North Central beats Odessa Salinas in District 3 Little League championship.

By Amy Wolfenbarger
Staff Writer

BIG SPRING — The Midland North Central hitters took advantage of a fatigued opposing pitcher in the third inning to defeat Odessa Salinas 7-1 Saturday in the District 3 Little League Tournament at the American Legion field and advance to the Sectional Tournament starting Thursday in Lubbock.

North Central's opponent will be determined at a later date.

North Central, 6-0 in tournament play, led 1-0 going into the bottom of the third when Salinas pitcher Gabriel Garcia walked David Harris. Then Aaron Perez slammed a triple into left field, scoring Harris and boosting the North Central lead to 2-0.

With Perez on third, Brent Lawlis caught the Salinas infield off guard with a bunt and beat the throw to first. Eric Neatherlin hit a double, North Central's second and final extra base hit, scoring Perez and Lawlis.

Garcia then hit a North Central batter and walked two more to load the bases before walking in North Central's fourth run in the third which brought the score to 5-0.

North Central coach Kenny Clodfelter said that Garcia had pitched an entire game Thursday for Salinas and was showing fatigue.

"He (Garcia) was tough on us in the first and second inning, but we got four or five good hits after that," Clodfelter said. "In the third, we just kind of exploded."

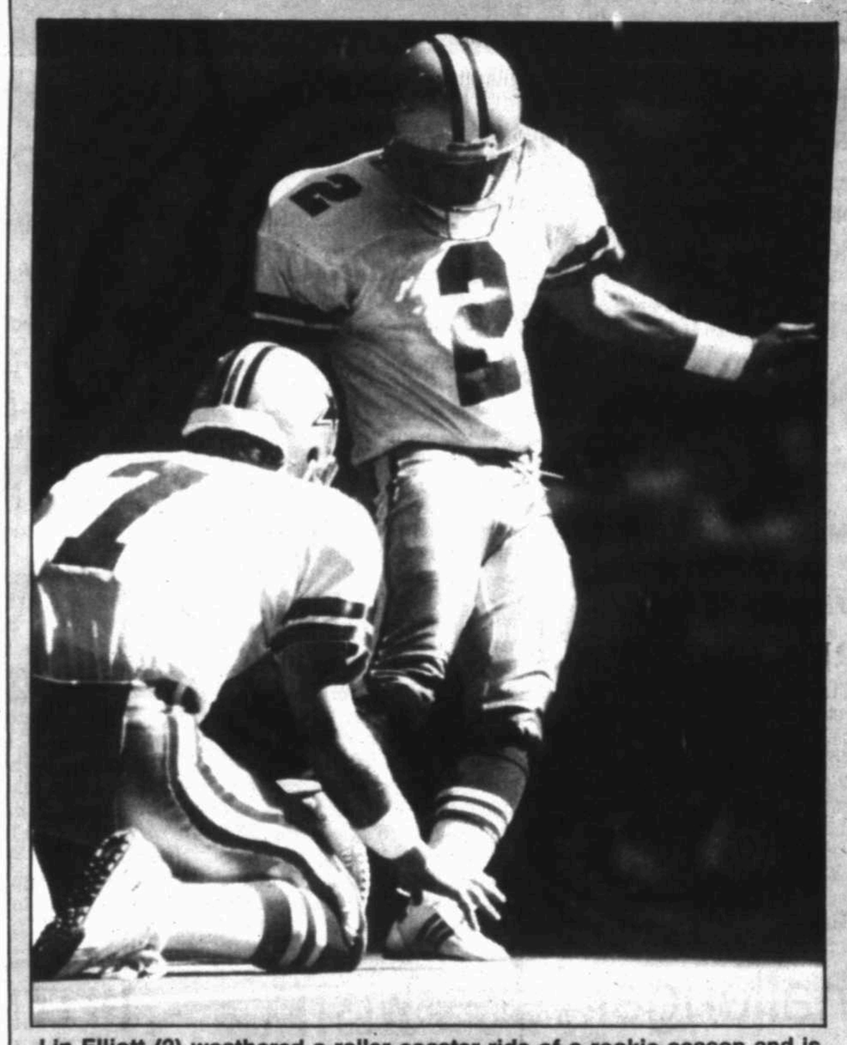

For three innings of work Garcia got the loss for Salinas, which worked its way through the loser's bracket to make it to the championship game. A win by Salinas over undefeated North Central would have prolonged the championship another game in the double-elimination tournament.

"He (Garcia) pitched six tough innings Thursday. That didn't help them any," Kenny Clodfelter said. "We had some good, hard hits but that didn't help them any."

Winning pitcher Eric Clodfelter started on the mound for North Central and pitched five innings and allowed only one run. But it started catching up with him in the top of the fifth as gave up a single and walked two.

Pair holds commanding lead at Jamboree tourney

Mike Butts
Staff Writer

With Saturday's West Texas July sunshine hammering down, the Green Tree Country Club didn't need any more scorching. But Jeff Moses and David Garcia burned up the club's golf course anyway.

The pair shot a second-round 60 to take a five-shot lead going into today's championship flight final round of the annual GTCC Jamboree golf tournament.

Garcia and Moses smoked the course's first five holes for birdies and went on to record an 11-under-par round. They totaled nine birdies and an eagle on the day. The 60 is the best round so far in the three-day competition.

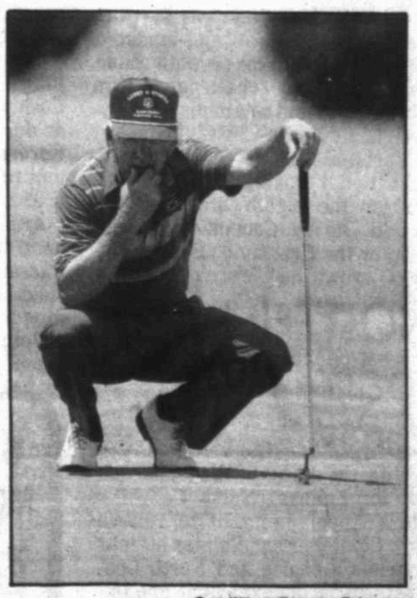

"We both hit a lot of greens and we both putted real well," said Moses, who trailed the father and son team of Ron and Dub Huckabee by one stroke after Friday's first round. "You can't make the low numbers without making putts."

Moses and Garcia finished the first ten holes at eight under.

"We made the turn at six under and then David chips in for an eagle on 10 — that kind of helped the cause," Moses said.

The leaders have a five-stroke advantage over the Huckabees, who followed their round-best 62 Friday with a 66 Saturday. Also still relatively close to the leaders are Michael Guss and Steve Whiteside, who shot 66 Saturday to fall six shots off the pace, and Scott Lovett and Mac McGee, who shot 61 to move from 14th to a tie for third. Detroit stops Texas' win streak, 6-4

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP) — Cecil Fielder's three-run homer after a controversial call in the third inning Saturday night lifted Detroit to a 6-4 defeat of Texas, the Rangers' first lost in seven games.

The Tigers were ahead 1-0 with Tony Phillips and Travis Fryman on base when Fielder hit a pitch from Roger Pavlik 417 feet into the left field seats for his 24th homer. He leads the majors with 80 RBIs.

Phillips singled with one out and Lou Whitaker walked before Fryman was safe on a fielder's choice grounder to shortstop Jeff Huson. Umpire Ted Hendry ruled the relay throw to first pulled Rafael Palmiero off the bag, although replays indicated otherwise, and the call allowed Fielder to come to the plate.

The outcome snapped the Tigers' three-game losing streak and pulled Detroit into a tie for second place with Baltimore in the tight American League East race, a half-game behind first-place Toronto and New York.

David Hulse knocked in the first two Texas runs with a two-run single in the fifth and Palmiero hit his 19th homer in the sixth, extending his hitting streak to 16 games.

Indians 3, Angels 0

CLEVELAND — Rookie Jeff Mutis pitched a shutout in his first career complete game and Wayne Kirby homered as Cleveland beat California for its eighth win in the last nine home games.

The left-handed Mutis (2-2) scattered four hits, two of them by Damion Easley, walked two and struck out two in his second career win. Easley was erased twice by double plays, and Mutis — who had never pitched longer than six innings in the majors — did not allow a runner past first base until Ron Correia doubled with one out in the eighth.

Russ Springer (1-4) lost despite limiting the Indians to four hits in his first complete game.

Yankees 9, Athletics 5

NEW YORK (AP) — Jim Abbott won for just the second time in seven starts, and Bobby Witt had another terrible outing in Yankee Stadium as New York beat Oakland.

Abbott (6-8) allowed five runs and five hits in six-plus innings, including Rickey Henderson's 62nd leadoff homer and a three-run drive by Ruben Sierra. Bobby Munoz and Steve Farr finished.

Witt (8-7) had his worst start of the season, getting tagged for seven runs and 10 hits in 3 1-3 innings. He is 1-7 in Yankee Stadium and winless in five starts there since July 3, 1987.

Don Mattingly had three hits, including his first triple in nearly four years. Dion James also had three hits for the Yankees, who had 14 hits in all.

Royals 5, Blue Jays 4

TORONTO — Brian McRae's two-run, inside-the-park homer broke a tie with two outs in the ninth inning and Kansas City beat Toronto, the Blue Jays' 12th loss in 14 games.

With Felix Jose at third base, McRae hit a sinking liner to center field. Devon White, a four-time Gold Glove winner, charged the ball, but it skipped past him and rolled to the wall.

The relay throw sailed over catcher Pat Borders' head. McRae scored standing up with his seventh home run of the season for a 5-3 lead.

Toronto got a run in the ninth. White drew a one-out walk, advanced on a wild pitch and scored on a single by Roberto Alomar.

Mark Gubicza (3-6) pitched one inning for the win. Jeff Montgomery got three outs for his 27th save. Danny Cox (5-5) took the loss.

Red Sox 4, Mariners 3

BOSTON — Bob Zupcic singled in two runs in the seventh inning as the Red Sox rallied for a win over Seattle, giving Boston its 17th victory in 22 games.

Ken Griffey Jr. tripled home two runs in the sixth inning to give the Mariners a 3-2 lead, but Zupcic's soft liner over the glove of shortstop Omar Vizquel gave Danny Darwin (9-7) his sixth straight win at Fenway Park.

Jeff Russell pitched the ninth for his 22nd save. He retired Vizquel on a grounder with the bases loaded to end the game.

Chris Bosio (3-5) has not won as a starter since April 27. Bosio, limited to 10 starts this season because of injury, suspension and a bullpen stint, allowed four runs on seven hits in 6 1-3 innings.

The Mariners lost for the second straight time after a six-game winning streak.

Twins 4, Orioles 2

BALTIMORE — Baltimore missed a chance to move into first place as Kevin Tapani pitched seven strong innings and Kent Hrbek homered in the Minnesota Twins' win.

Brady Anderson and Mike Devereaux homered for the Orioles, who needed a win to claim the top spot in the AL East. The loss left Baltimore a half-game behind coleaders Toronto and New York.

Tapani (4-11) allowed two runs, eight hits and two walks in his seven innings. Before Saturday, he was 0-5 with a 6.83 ERA since June 10.

White Sox 9, Brewers 4

MILWAUKEE — Jack McDowell became the major leagues' first 14-game winner as Chicago White scored six first-inning runs and beat Milwaukee.

McDowell (14-6) allowed six hits, walked two and struck out a season-high nine in eight innings. He has won seven of nine starts and is now 8-1 in his career against the Brewers.

Lance Johnson's two-run double highlighted Chicago's big first inning off Jaime Navarro (5-7), who has lost four straight.

Cardinals withstand heat, Houston 5-3

■ NL Roundup

ST. LOUIS — Todd Zeile and Mark Whiten each homered and drove in two runs, and Bob Tewksbury survived seven innings in 120-degree heat as St. Louis defeated Houston 5-3 Saturday afternoon.

Tewksbury (10-7) gave up two runs on six hits, struck out three and walked none, extending to 49 his streak of innings without a walk. His last walk came June 15, and he now has as many walks as wins since the start of last season — 26.

Whiten broke a 2-2 tie leading off the sixth inning with his 13th homer off Houston starter Brian Williams (2-3).

Other than the two home runs, Williams allowed only a single to Tewksbury in his six innings but walked five, hit a batter and had two wild pitches.

Cubs 5, Rockies 1

CHICAGO — Mike Harkey pitched three-hit ball for eight shutout innings and Rick Wilkins homered, leading Chicago over Colorado.

Harkey (7-3) allowed just a bunt single in the first by Roberto Mejia, a double by Alex Cole in the sixth and a single by Freddie Benavides in the eighth. He walked one and struck out six.

Harkey is 3-0 against the Rockies this year. He was 1-2 with a 4.03 ERA overall in his last five starts.

Chicago won its third straight game in the series. Cubs pitchers have held the Rockies to only three runs in the three games.

Mets 3, Giants 1

SAN FRANCISCO — Frank Tanana held San Francisco hitless until Barry Bonds homered with two outs in the seventh inning, and pitched New York past John Burkett and the Giants.

The Mets have never had a no-hitter in their 32-year history. Tanana's longest previous no-hit bid was 5 1-3 innings on Aug. 26, 1975, while with California.

Tanana (5-8) gave up two hits in seven innings, walking none and striking out two. He had been 0-3 in five starts since June 14.

Padres 4, Phillies 2

SAN DIEGO — Andy Benes allowed five hits in eight innings and outdueled All-Star teammate Terry Mulholland as San Diego rallied for the third straight game to beat slumping Philadelphia.

Ricky Guiterrez used a bunt single to break a 2-2 tie in the seventh inning, when the Padres scored three runs off Mulholland (9-7), the NL starter in Tuesday's All-Star game.

The Phillies, who lost for the seventh time in nine games, saw their lead in the East shrink to three games over the St. Louis Cardinals.

Benes (10-6), who followed Mulholland on the mound at the All-Star game, was relieved in the ninth by Gene Harris, who recorded his 16th save. In his last five starts, Benes has allowed just seven runs and 18 hits in 38 innings.

Marlins 6, Reds 3

CINCINNATI — Jack Armstrong scattered five hits in eight innings and Jeff Conine went 4-for-4 with three RBIs, leading Florida past Cincinnati.

Armstrong (7-9) blanked the Reds until Chris Sabo hit a two-run homer with two outs in the eighth, ending the right-hander's bid for his first shutout in three years. Bryan Harvey allowed a single run in the ninth to finish the Marlins' first road victory in nine games.

It was Armstrong's most impressive game of the season, coming against the team that dealt him to Cleveland after the 1991 season. Armstrong, the Reds' top draft pick in 1987, came away with a no-decision in his other start against Cincinnati last April.

He out-pitched Tom Browning (6-5), who didn't get much help from his defense. Reds manager Davey Johnson put first baseman Tim Costo in left field for the first time in his professional career Saturday night and the move backfired, playing a role in the Marlins' first three runs.

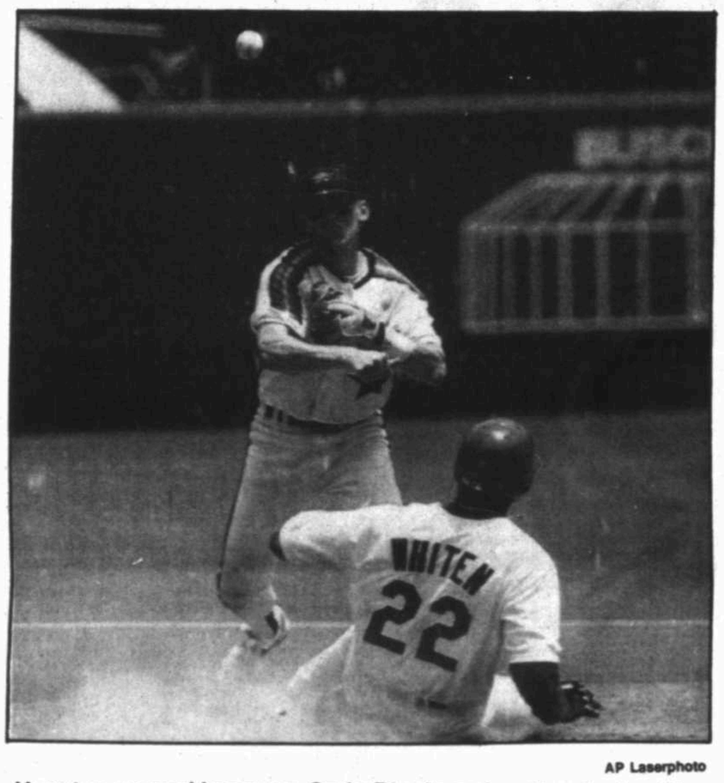

The Reds are short on outfielders because Kevin Mitchell is disabled by a pulled hamstring and Reggie Sanders bruised a finger Friday night. The Reds hit Costo some fly balls in left field before the game, and he had trouble catching them in the sun.

Pirates 4, Braves 3

ATLANTA — Rookie Scott Bullett's run-scoring triple — one of his three hits — capped a three-run fifth inning, lifting Paul Wagner and Pittsburgh to a win Atlanta.

Wagner (5-5) gave up a three-run homer to David Justice in the first inning, but he allowed only three hits in the next seven innings as the Pirates rallied. Stan Belinda pitched a perfect ninth for his 18th save, matching his career high.

The Braves, whose three-game winning streak ended, missed an opportunity to gain ground on first-place San Francisco in the National League West, remaining nine games back despite the Giants' 3-1 loss to the New York Mets.

Mitchell's actions become distraction for Cincinnati

CINCINNATI — For the first half of the season, Kevin Mitchell was just about everything the Cincinnati Reds hoped for. Now he's become the player they were wary of.

Mitchell went AWOL this week, got a major fine, then got into an altercation with manager Davey Johnson on Friday, resulting in a two-game suspension and his third fine in three days.

The only explanation: personal problems.

"They knew what they were getting into when they got Kevin Mitchell," said pitcher Jose Rijo, who tried to help him get into shape during the season. "I like Kevin. He's a great guy. He's a great player. But he also has personal problems that have to be taken care of."

Whatever they are, they've become a big problem for the Reds.

General manager Jim Bowden had his staff do a thorough investigation of Mitchell last fall before trading for him. A 100-page report said Mitchell was what the Reds were looking for: a guy who could hit homers and drive in runs. Bowden made the trade, sending reliever Norm Charlton to Seattle.

Mitchell has proven he can still hit, batting .357 with a team-high 15 homers and 52 RBIs in just 67 games. He's the only real home-run threat in the lineup.

Trouble is, he's not in the lineup nearly enough, one of his big problems the last two years with San Francisco and Seattle. He showed up late for training camp and overweight, broke his foot in his first exhibition game, and has missed games because of a bad leg, back, shoulder and elbow. He's on the disabled list with a pulled hamstring.

The team has been patient with its most publicized offseason acquisition. He got an excused absence in spring training to attend to personal matters at home in San Diego. There was no criticism of his excess weight.

He also got another break last Thursday, when the club let him return to San Diego to attend to personal matters. He had a pulled hamstring and couldn't play, anyway.

But he was expected back for a mandatory workout Wednesday. He and several other players didn't show, drawing $500 fines. Mitchell didn't show up for a game Thursday night, either, and was docked one day's pay — roughly $20,000.

His altercation with Johnson, who was questioning him about the absence, resulted in the two-day suspension and another undisclosed fine.

Carbajal KOs challenger to retain championship

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Unbeaten Michael Carbajal landed a solid left hook in the seventh round to knock out challenger Kim Kwang-Sun and retain his light flyweight title Saturday night.

Carbajal was defending the International Boxing Federation title for the eighth time and the World Boxing Council championship or the first time. He won the WBC crown last March 13 with a seventh-round knockout of Humberto Gonzalez.

Carbajal was ahead on all three judges' cards when he caught Kim flush with the left as the challenger ducked toward him. The South Korean crumpled to the canvas and referee Richard Steele ended it at 2:23 of the round.

Although Carbajal had the upper hand through most of the bout at Caesars, Kim landed a number of solid blows himself, at times stunning the champion.

Both fighers weighed the 108-pound limit.

NORTH: Local team wins

(From 1C)

With the bases loaded and one out for Salinas, North Central's Chris Appel came in to relieve Eric Clodfelter and Salinas hit into a fielder's choice and North Central turned a double play to end the inning and the comeback threat.

David Saxon scored from third in the bottom of the fifth on a Salinas throwing error for North Central's final run in the game.

Miller 500 race runs without an Allison driving

LONG POND, Pa. (AP) — For the first time in nearly 18 years an Allison will not be starting a NASCAR Winston Cup race. Two drivers will be there to carry on for the family.

Jimmy Spencer would rather not need to, just five days after his car owner, NASCAR great Bobby Allison, lost his second son in 11 months, and the circuit lost one of its most popular drivers.

"This isn't a perfect world," Spencer said. "You've got to do what's right. What's right is coming here to the racetrack. ... It's easier said than done."

Cars in Sunday's Miller Genuine Draft 500 at Pocono International Raceway will carry small No. 28 decals to note the memory of Davey Allison, who died Tuesday of injuries from a helicopter crash the previous day at his home track, Talladega (Ala.) Superspeedway.

■ Miller 500

Spencer and Hut Stricklin will carry Allison's memory most prominently. While Spencer will drive Bobby Allison's car, Stricklin is a part of the Allison family. He married Davey Allison's cousin, Pam. Davey introduced them.

"I never had a brother," Stricklin said. "Davey was like a brother to me. ... It's very hard to keep focused."

The feeling is too familiar for Stricklin. Last year, he had to race in Michigan after Clifford Allison, Davey's younger brother, died in practice for a Grand National race.

"Last year at Michigan after Clifford died was a hard one," Stricklin said. "But Sunday is going to be tough. As long as I've been running Winston Cup there's always been a No. 28 and a Davey Allison out there. Sunday there's not going to be."

Ken Schrader has his Chevrolet on the pole Sunday after a track-record speed of 162.934 mph. Bill Elliott joins him on the front row in a Ford. Ricky Rudd and Ernie Irvan are on row two in Chevys and Mark Martin and Jimmy Hensley follow in Fords.

The last time an Allison was not in the lineup was at Bristol, Tenn., on Nov. 2, 1975, when Bobby Allison was running a limited schedule for car owner Roger Penske.

Now, the streak is being broken at the track where Bobby Allison's career ended in a bad crash in June 1988, and where a year ago Davey Allison survived a horrifying crash and went on to challenge for the championship. Next weekend, the circuit goes back to Talladega and the Allisons' home crowd.

"Of all the races the we have to run, Pocono and Talladega are probably the toughest from an Allison standpoint," Carolyn Carrier, spokeswoman for Bobby Allison Motorsports, said.

Trips to Pocono are supposed to hold good feelings for Spencer, who is from nearby Berwick, Pa. Not this time.

"I'd have liked to have the week off," he said. "My heart's not in this race like it should be. Bobby's not going to be here."

Spencer joined Allison's team for the final four races of 1992. He recalls coming up on Davey during a race at Phoenix and asking Bobby on the radio, "How do I handle the car in front of me?"

"His exact words were, 'He's no different than anybody else,' " Spencer said.

But he was, really, to the team. The team's rig was a frequent hangout for Davey Allison, who would come by to make peanut butter sandwiches. "He'd eat whatever we had in the truck," Spencer said, smiling.

"He loved his dad," Spencer said. "Clifford's death probably brought them even closer than they've ever been."

Spencer arrived at the track Friday worried about his boss, but by Saturday was confident "Bobby'll be back."

Fittipaldi takes pole for today's Molson Indy

TORONTO (AP) — Emerson Fittipaldi has been a competitor in top-flight international auto racing for 21 years. And apart from learning to go very fast, his experience also has taught him patience.

■ Molson Indy

He used that to great effect Saturday when he waited until the final lap of final qualifying to win the pole position for today's Molson Indy Toronto.

Fittipaldi, 46, of Brazil, shattered the lap record with a speed of 109.998 mph, bumping teammate Paul Tracy into second place.

"I followed Paul around for 10 laps at the start of the session and saw a few places where I could go quicker," Fittipaldi said. "So near the end I put on a new set of tires and just went for it. The car was perfectly set up to go faster."

Tracy, who lives in Toronto, was unable to keep the pole before the home town fans. "I just couldn't find the extra grip I needed to improve," he said.

Several drivers, however, did improve their times from Friday — some in dramatic fashion. Bobby Rahal went 2 mph faster and moved from sixth to third on the grid, while Danny Sullivan jumped from 12th to fourth.

Teo Fabi, of the Midland-baed Hall/VDS team, is in eleventh position to start the race.

An indication of just how competitive Indy car racing has become is the fact that the first 13 cars were separated by less than a second per lap.

Fittipaldi said that Indy car racing is increasing in popularity worldwide because so many drivers have a chance of winning.

Another driver who improved his times Saturday was Formula One world champion Nigel Mansell. He improved from 17th Friday to ninth in final qualifying but still was disappointed.

"People forget the most important thing — and that is I have never been here before," Mansell said. "I might be a genius, but if you don't know the track and you don't know how to set the car up because you've got no history of the circuit, you're way behind on everything.

"Give me a year or two and maybe we'll be a lot better. But on this course, setting up the car, we've had major problems."

U.S. wins in semifinal

DALLAS (AP) — Alexi Lalas scored in the first half Saturday night and his teammates made it stand up, leading the United States national team to a 1-0 victory over Honduras and a berth in the semifinals of the Gold Cup soccer tournament.

Lalas moved up from his position on defense and flicked a header into the right side of the net in the 29th minute. Chris Henderson's corner kick started the play.

The U.S. team, unbeaten with six points in Group A, will meet the runner-up of Group B, being played in Mexico City, on Wednesday at the Cotton Bowl.

The Groups winners will then play for the Gold Cup title on July 25 at Azteca Stadium in Mexico City. The U.S., defending Gold Cup champions, and Mexico are favored to reach the finals.

Lendl avoids upset in U.S. Tennis Championships

BROOKLINE, Mass. (AP) — Ivan Lendl won't belabor the matter, but even in midsummer his mind is on the next major — the U.S. Open in September.

Lendl struggled before beating upset-minded, unseeded Patrick Baur 6-3, 6-4 in the semifinals of the $250,000 U.S. Tennis Championships at Longwood Cricket Club Saturday night.

Today, Lendl will play fourth-seeded Todd Martin, who defeated second seed MaliVai Washington 6-2, 6-4 on Saturday.

"Obviously, winning a major is very important for me," said Lendl, who has won eight. "It's early, but I'm hoping I'm able to continue to play well all summer so I'll be able to play in the open with as much confidence as possible.

"I didn't play well tonight. It's difficult to explain. I couldn't get comfortable with my timing."

The 24-year-old Baur began the matching promisingly enough, holding serve for a 2-1 lead and then breaking Lendl for a 3-1 advantage in the first set.

But Lendl rallied, breaking back in the next game, holding serve and breaking serve again for a 4-3 lead when Baur double-faulted. Lendl won the final two games to close out the set 6-3.

Both held serve through the opening five games of the second set. Leading 3-2, Lendl broke Baur in the sixth game for a 4-2 advantage, only to see Baur rally. Lendl double-faulted to lose one game, and Baur then held for a 4-4 tie.

But Lendl then assumed control of the match, holding his serve to win and then going up love-40 on Baur's serve in the final game.

Baur fought back to deuce, but Lendl sent home two backhand winners for the match.

In an earlier match, Martin broke Washington in his first two service games, setting the pattern for the match. After a 2-2 tie in the first set, Martin won the next four games, taking 16 of the final 18 points.

Pavin seemed just as upbeat about his game.

"I played very smart golf today (Saturday) ' the 33-year-old American said, "and I did not let the situation bother me. I am always ready to win my first major. I won't be ready too much longer. All the cards are in place."

Faldo was talking to himself most of the round Saturday.

He fought distractions from the first tee, where at the top of his backswing he heard a spectator's shrill whistle. Faldo struck the ball a bit thin and it landed 10 yards behind Langer's drive straight up the fairway. Faldo glared angrily when he finished his swing.

"Shocking," an R&A official said of the incident. "Golf's been free of that sort of thing. I hope it doesn't start here."

The whistler was quickly ejected.

"I certainly heard him," Faldo said. "It's nice to know he had a short walk around the golf course."

Faldo didn't let it rattle him long. He made par to keep the 1-stroke lead he carried into the round against Langer after going 8-under with a course record 63 Friday.

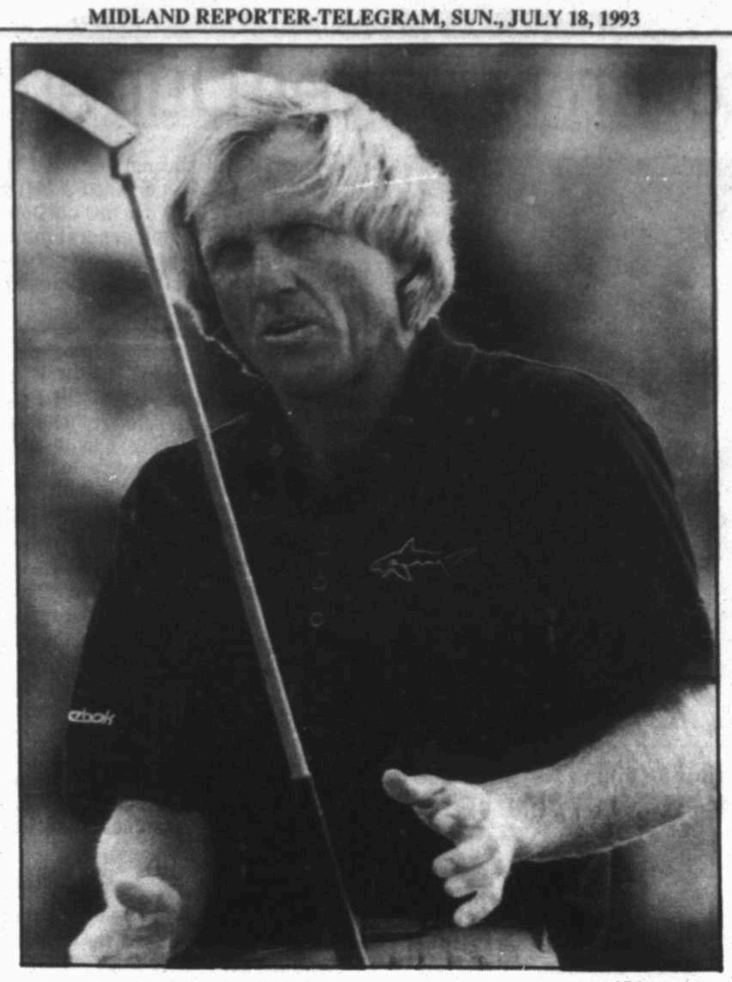

Norman, a hole ahead with Fred Couples after both started the day 6-under, had already set the scene for a long day of drama when he birdied the first hole to jump into a tie for second with Langer.

And at almost exactly the same time in the pairing ahead of Norman, Pavin birdied No. 2 to join them at 7-under.

The sun hid behind menacing clouds, backlighting them with silver, and a light breeze brushed the course. Conditions were perfect, though the more the wind blew and the longer rain stayed away, the more the fairways and greens were drying out and playing hard.

Faldo and Langer took advantage of the kind weather on the second hole, each getting out of trouble to make birdies. Faldo's drive got buried in the low rough on the right, but he pitched perfectly to 6 feet in front of the pin. Langer had to pitch from a downhill lie on the far side of a hill, but set it down 8 feet past the pin. Langer made his putt, then Faldo matched him with a putt that rolled to the left rim of the cup, half-circled it and decided to fall in.

At 9-under now, the best he would be all day, Faldo still led Langer by a stroke and Norman and Pavin by 2.

■ LPGA Big Apple

NEW ROCHELLE, N.Y. (AP) — Betsy King shot a 3-under-par 68 on Saturday and built a one-shot lead over Japan's Hiromi Kobayashi after 54 holes of the JAL Big Apple Classic women's golf tournament.

King completed three rounds over the 6,109-yard, par-71 Wykagyl Country Club course in 208.

King, who won the Big Apple Classic in 1990 and 1991, is trying for her first victory of the season in this, her 17th event of the year. So far, she's had to settle for three second-place finishes.

With 28 career victories, King is two shy of the 30 required to qualify for the LPGA Hall of Fame.

Kobayashi, who won seven tournaments in Japan before joining the LPGA Tour in 1990, shot a 69 and was at 209.

Rosie Jones, with a 68, was at 211, one stroke better than Jan Stephenson, who had a 68, and Mary Ann Zimmerman, who shot 69.

King broke a deadlock with Kobayashi with a 4-foot birdie putt on the par-3, 157-yard 16th hole. She missed an opportunity to pad her lead when she missed a birdie attempt of about 10 feet on No. 18.

"The greens are really fast," said King, currently third on the LPGA money list with $267,883. "You can't afford to putt aggressively.

"This is my favorite course on the entire tour, but it also is the hardest we've played all year. The LPGA Tour has to bring about some consistency. I know the weather is hot, but last week they soaked the greens and this week there's no water."

King, who missed the cut twice in her first eight tournaments this year, was looking forward to Sunday's final, especially the challenge from Kobayashi.

"I like Hiromi. She's having her best year ever and it's still anybody's game. I hope what I did today carries over to tomorrow, but I know it's going to be tough."

Kobayashi, 27th in earnings with $126,861, has a best finish of fourth in the Sara Lee Classic.

"I was nervous for the first couple of holes today, and I'll probably be the same way tomorrow," she said.

"It will be hard to make birdies, so driving accuracy and putting will be extra important. Since the course is so tough, making pars is very important."

catching Moses and Garcia today.

"Realistically, as good players as they are, you're going to have to shoot 60 (to beat them)," the elder Huckabee said. "I think probably tomorrow they're going to lengthen it (the tees) probably all the way back, which really makes it much more difficult to make birdies."

Garcia, formerly of Midland but now an El Paso resident, has played in several tournaments with Moses. The two know each others strengths and weaknesses, which aids strategy on the course.

"We have a lot of fun together. That's what makes a good partnership," Moses said. "If you're used to each other's games you know what you can count on. You know there's certain chances you can take."

Despite the five-stroke lead and the likelihood of a tougher layout today, Moses sees a possibility of any team in the field catching him and Garcia.

"Somebody can come back Sunday and light it up," he said. "There's some strong teams out there."

Rhyan ties course mark at Ameritech

AURORA, Ill. (AP) — Dick Rhyan called it "a happy situation considering what happened last year."

Rhyan shot an 8-under-par 64 on Saturday to tie the Stonebridge Country Club course record one year to the day after suffering a heart attack during the same Ameritech Senior Open.

"It was kind of emotional coming back here. There were a lot of people pulling for me and saying 'Good to see you back,' " Rhyan said.

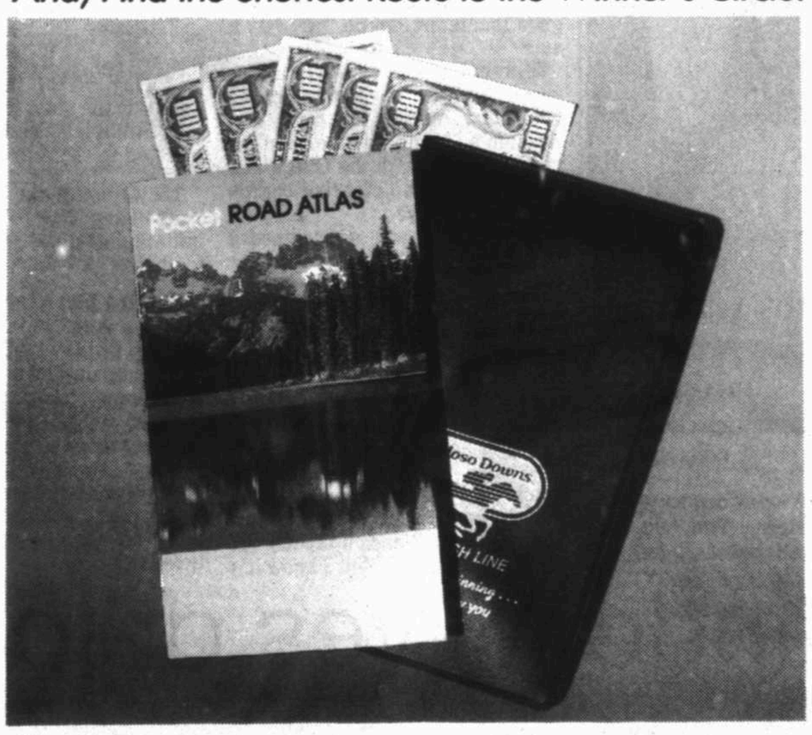

Rhyan's 64 gave him a share of the course record with Chi Chi Rodriguez.

Dolphins release veteran receiver Duper

Associated Press

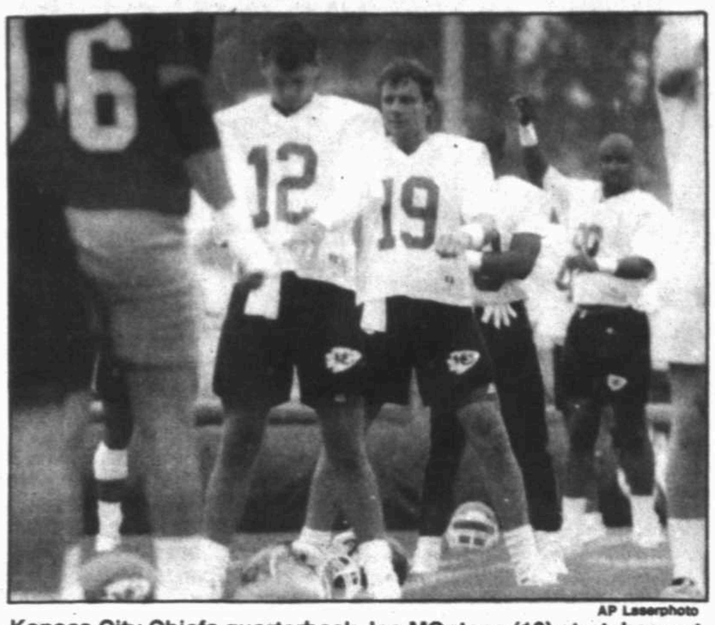

Dan Marino, who spent most of the past decade throwing to the "Marks Brothers" — Duper and Clayton — will have new targets this season.

The 34-year-old Duper was released by the Miami Dolphins on Saturday, a month after Clayton left the team to sign with the Green Bay Packers. Duper was the second-leading receiver in the team's history, with 511 receptions to Clayton's 550, and is No. 1 on the yardage list with 8,869 yards in 11 seasons.

"This was a very difficult choice to make, but with offseason acquisitions and the personnel we have, we made the decision to go in another direction," coach Don Shula said in a prepared statement.

The personnel includes Irving Fryar, obtained from New England in a trade; Mark Ingram, signed as a free agent from the New York Giants; and O.J. McDuffie, the Dolphins' first pick in the NFL draft.

Duper, who has played in three Pro Bowls, caught 44 passes for 762 yards and seven touchdowns last season.

Kansas City Chiefs quarterback Joe MOntana (19) stretches out with the team during morning practice at River Falls, Wis. Saturday.

Steelers

Barry Foster still was a no-show at Pittsburgh's training camp, and the man who blocked for him last season said he can stay out as long as he wants.

Foster, an All-Pro running back, wants to renegotiate the deal he signed 10 months ago from a base salary of $460,000 to $3 million. He is the first Steelers' veteran to hold out in consecutive seasons while under contract.

Fullback Merrill Hoge said Foster's absence isn't fair to the rest of the Steelers because the other signed veterans, except for tight end Adrian Cooper, are in camp. Cooper is in his option year and also wants a new contract.

"If Barry comes in here and plays like he did last year, the Steelers are the kind of organization that will take care of him and reimburse him," Hoge said. "But they don't have to do anything when he's got two years left. They don't have any obligation to do that and I don't fault them for not giving in to him."

Colts

Jack Trudeau, as much in the dark about Jeff George's absence from training camp as anyone, may turn out to be the starting quarterback only one year after his own holdout, which lasted until the eve of Indianapolis' preseason finale.

George still had not reported to camp Saturday and faced a third daily fine of $4,000. He has not contacted the Colts, and general manager Jim Irsay says he will not renegotiate the final three years of George's six-year contract.

Bengals

Top draft choice John Copeland, a defensive lineman chosen fifth overall, has fired agent Carl Poston for moving too slowly, leaving Cincinnati wondering how it will get him into camp.

Saints

Rookies and veterans pushed through a 300-yard conditioning run, completed physicals and picked up playbooks Saturday, but several key members of the roster were not in attendance on the eve of the first practice.

Five-time Pro Bowl linebacker Rickey Jackson still hadn't checked in, and wide receiver Eric Martin, running back Dalton Hilliard, guard Jim Dombrowski and kicker Morten Andersen were among seven unsigned veterans missing.

Eagles

Wide receiver Victor Bailey, the club's second round selection in the 1993 draft, signed a two-year contract plus an option year.

Bailey, 6-foot-2 and 200 pounds, finished as the career receiving leader at Missouri with 128 receptions for 2,114 yards and 12 touchdowns. In 1992, he was fourth in the nation with 75 receptions for 1,201 yards and six touchdowns.

The Eagles still have nine unsigned players.

Stallings third in Pan Am Games

WINNIPEG, Canada — Stanton's Jeremy Stallings, who is headed for the University of Florida this fall, placed third in the 800 meters here Saturday during competition in the Junior Pan Am Games, consisting of the top athletes from the Western Hemisphere.

Stallings posted a 1:50.2, not a personal best since he broke 1:50 at the state Class 2A track meet in Austin in May. Canada's Kevin Sullivan, who has run a 1:47.6 before and broke the 4-minute mile as a high schooler, won the event in 1:48.9 while Cuba's Alain Miranda, who has previously beaten Stallings, took second with a 1:49.4. Sullivan is headed for the University of Michigan.

American wins Senior contest

Mark Holley pitched Midland American to a 9-0 win over Midland National in the Senior League Tournament at Angels Stadium Saturday night, moving American into the championship finals, which is slated for 5:30 p.m. Monday at Simon Field.

Bo Garrison had a big triple for the Americans while Holley recorded the shutout. Both teams came into the game with perfect 3-0 tournament records. On Friday, Midland National handed Lamesa a 6-2 loss with Keith Lant getting the win and Ryan Elder going three-for-four.

Also Friday, Midland American's Lance Watters pitched a complete game, striking out 13 and allowing only three hits as Midland American defeated Odessa Floyd Gwin 11-1.

Mark Holley and Watters had three hits each and Matthew Withrow had two hits in the win.

American, now 4-0 in tournament play, moves to the championship game Monday while National must play again today to earn the other championship berth.

Two aces holed

Joe Williams, the former Midland College tennis coach, and Bob Williamson produced holes-in-one Saturday at different courses.

Williams aced the No. 8, 160-yard hole at Ranchland Hills Country Club with a 7-iron. He was playing with John Castillo and Tom Tinney.

Williamson got his first hole-in-one at Midland Country Club, acing the 159-yard, No. 3 hole with a 7-wood.

Williamson was playing with Tom Welch, Charles Coffman and Randy Randerson.

Angels come home after 1-8 road trip

Staff report

SHREVEPORT, La. — The Midland Angels lost another road game, 3-1, to the Shreveport Captains here Saturday night, but there was one bit of good news for the Angels: The horrible road trip is over.

Midland finishes this current road with a woeful 1-8 record, but will have three days to recover before facing Jackson at Angels Stadium Wednesday. The Angels will now play 26 of the final 41 games at home.

The three-day break in the schedule is for the Texas League All-Star game, which will be Monday night in Wichita, Kan. Midland's all stars include catcher Jorge Fabregas, outfielder Chris Pritchett, pitcher John Fritz, second baseman P.J. Forbes, reliever Jose Musset and outfielder Orlando Palmeiro.

The Angels will return home Wednesday, having lost four games in a row and will face Jackson, a team that beat Midland four consecutive times to start the road trip.

Shreveport scored all three runs in the third inning off Fritz, who will enter the All-Star game with an 8-5 record and 3.72 ERA. Berry Miller hit a sacrifice fly with the bases loaded for the first run and Adell Davenport then delivered a two-run single to center. That was all the Caps needed.

Midland didn't strike until the ninth inning when Chris Pritchett scored from third on a single by Jeff Kipila. However, Midland left the bases loaded at the end of the game.

The Angels fell 7½ games off the second half pace of El Paso, but Midland is only 2½ games behind second place Wichita. Should El Paso, the first half winner, win the second half, the second place team would automatically get a Texas League playoff berth this year under the new league playoff format.

Cowboys force new look at punter position

By Denne Freeman
AP Sports Writer

AUSTIN — A year ago punter Mike Saxon didn't have any competition in the Dallas Cowboys training camp.

His biggest chore was making sure he didn't wear out his kicking leg. This year the veteran Saxon has a Super Bowl ring but wasn't even invited to St. Edward's University for training camp.

Saxon was a victim of coach Jimmy Johnson's produce-or-you're gone system. Saxon was inconsistent during the NFL playoffs last year and even though the Cowboys won the Super Bowl he had his exit visa punched.

Saxon had a punt blocked in the 52-17 victory over the Bills. It didn't set well although Saxon had a 40-yard average in the playoffs. All Johnson saw was Saxon's 30.9 net yardage in crunch time.

Enter free agents John Jett and Steve Domingos of whom you've probably never heard.

One of them will likely survive to be the Cowboys starting punter when Dallas opens defense of its NFL title on Sept. 6 against the Washington Redskins.

Domingos punted two years for the Fresno Bandits. He didn't get paid but got some experience.

The 26-year-old Domingos punted four years at San Francisco State. He's a tall (6-foot-3) kicker and has a big stride.

Domingos was in the Los Angeles Rams training camp last year but couldn't unseat Don Bracken.

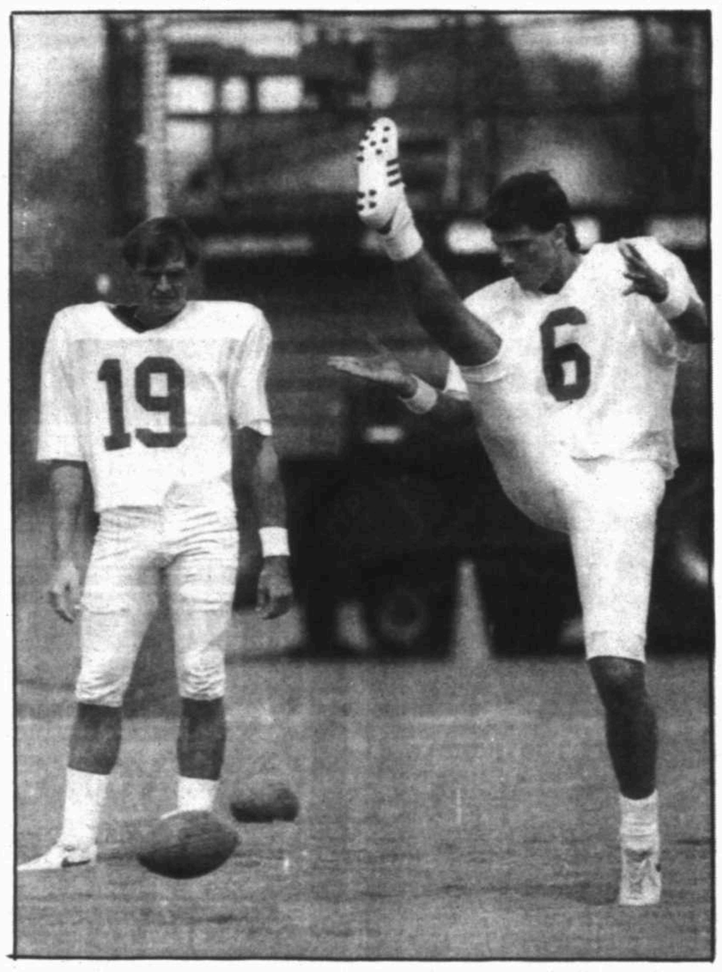

"Nobody comes to San Francisco State looking for punters so I have a tape of my punts so I can get some interest from teams," Domingos said. "Who would have thought we would have a chance to make the Cowboys this year?" Jett, who played collegiately at East Carolina, signed with the Minnesota Vikings last year but was given little chance to beat out veteran Harry Newsome, who was the NFL's leading punter.

"I think it was a good experience because it gave me an idea of what the NFL is like," Jett said. "I know I'll have to produce."

Steve Hoffman, the Cowboys kicking coach, and head coach Jimmy Johnson will make the call on which one to keep after the long exhibition season.

"We're not saying these guys are going to be better than Mike but sometimes you have to make a call on a younger player," Hoffman said. "We don't know what's going to happen. We just hope the competition is so close we have a hard time making a call."

Hoffman said, "Domingos looks great in practice but he needs to perform in a game. John is more consistent.

Oilers prepare for start of training camp

HOUSTON (AP) — Bringing the Houston Oilers defense up to the level of its run-and-shoot offense gives Wilber Marshall chills.

"It gets you excited when you've got an offense like that and bringing the defense up to that level, it brings chills down your spine how good this team can be," Marshall said.

Marshall's chills will turn to sweat this week when he reports to the Oilers training camp at San Antonio's Trinity University for his first camp with the Oilers and his reunion with defensive coordinator Buddy Ryan.

It was Ryan who guaranteed a Super Bowl for the Oilers if owner Bud Adams would spring for the $2.75 million one-year contract needed to install Marshall as an outside linebacker.

Adams did and now the time is approaching to just do it, although Marshall declines being labeled a savior or Super Bowl missing link.

"People will say what they're going to say and I'm just going to play as hard as I can play," Marshall said. "If it ends up that way, then I'm the savior, but I know it's not that way.

"Warren Moon, Cody (Carlson) backing him up, look at the running backs and the line. That's the biggest I've seen in a long time. There is your savior when they put points on the board."

Rookies and free agents report to camp Thursday and the veterans are due on Sunday. The Oilers will play all of their exhibition games in the state this year, two in San Antonio's new Alamodome and two in the Astrodome.

They'll play the New Orleans Saints Aug. 7 in the Alamodome, initiating the new facility to pro football.

Houston plays Detroit in the Astrodome Aug. 16, returns to San Antonio to play Dallas on Aug. 21 and closes out the preseason in the Astrodome Aug. 28 against Seattle.

Ryan, hired in the off-season to replace Jim Eddy as defensive coordinator, and Marshall, obtained from the Washington Redskins, will be center-stage for the defense.

ELLIOTT: Former Tech standout lives dream

a rookie. If you were even going to get a chance to kick in practice, what happened if you missed one in practice. This year I know if I'll go out and kick the way I'm suppose to kick, everything's going to fall into place."

Entering training camp as a long-shot, Elliott felt the pressure of kicking frequently despite straining his groin on his kicking leg. Elliott finally gave into the pain and went on to miss the first three preseason games.

"One thing I didn't want to do was admit it that it was hurt," said Elliott. "I kept saying that it was strained, that it doesn't feel good. I had to keep kicking because I couldn't give him the opportunity to take all the kicks. It got to a point finally to where I couldn't do anything — I couldn't kick anymore."

"At that point, it was really disappointing because I was putting pressure on him at the time and this gave him a chance to forget about me."

Coincidentally, Daluiso, who was known for his kicking distance but was short on accuracy, began to falter during Elliott's absence.

Elliott returned the fourth preseason game and kicked three of four field goals to earn a roster spot.

"(Daluiso) started struggling and that's when I got well and they remembered how well I was doing before I was injured so they gave me this shot. It was perfect timing really," said Elliott.

He began the regular season as shaky as the training camp. During the first seven weeks of the year, despite making six field goals during the 'Pokes 6-1 start, Elliott remained inconsistant.

"The start of the season was rough. It was really rough because things really weren't flowing well," said Elliott. "Each game I was getting like one kick. The first kick (versus Washington) I hit the upright from a short distance. Then I missed one from like 51 (yards) and one from 49, missing one a game from tough distances."

"Then the Philadelphia game came when I missed two early in the game."

It was game billed as a measure of revenge, Herschel Walker returning to Dallas for the first time since being traded to Minnesota. The Cowboys were atop the NFC East with a 6-1 record prior to the game and led the Eagles by one game despite losing to Philadelphia 31-7 a month earlier. 65,012 fans packed Texas Stadium, the largest crowd since 1985.

Elliott missed field goals of 42 and 38 yards in the first half, blowing two key scoring opportunities against the stingy Eagles' defense.

Just before the half, Elliott gained a measure of confidence with a 35-yard field goal that gave Dallas a 3-0 lead into the lockerroom.

"That's when it seemed to be at it's roughest. But, instead of falling apart, that's when things came together. I ended up hitting 13 in a row."

The 13 in a row set a franchise record for most consecutive fields goals. Elliott also went on to post the third highest scoring total in club history with 119 points and broke the record for most points by a rookie and set a Super Bowl record connecting on seven-of-seven extra points in Dallas' 52-17 drubbing of Buffalo.

He also provided the Cowboys with something it looked for in signing Daluiso — distance from kickoffs. Elliott posted more touchbacks (five) in the first five games of the season than Dallas had in its two previous seasons combined.

"The thing I really liked about that streak is that I had numerous long kicks," said Elliott. "I had back-to-back 53 yarders, a couple of 48 yarders. Anytime you can tie those in to a streak like that, it can tie into your confidence.

"Each thrill during my rookie season was a big thrill. Playing on Monday Night Football against the Washington Redskins to open up the season was a big thrill. Playing big games late in the season and then playing Philadelphia in the playoffs was a big thrill.

Playing San Francisco at Candlestick in the playoffs was a big thrill and then the Super Bowl was icing on the cake.

Born in the Dallas suburb of Euless and growing up in Richardson until the sixth grade, Elliott was a Cowboys' fan before being weened from the bottle.

"One thing I did was worship the Cowboys," said Elliott. "Roger Staubach, Tony Dorsett, Drew Pearson — I can name them all. I cried when they lost in the Super Bowls, I loved it when they won. I remember as a kid I'd be nervous all day long before a game, even it's was a regular season game.

Elliott played high school football at Waco before walking on to the Tech campus where he established himself as the top kicker in school history, setting Red Raider career marks for extra points (100) and points by a kicker (220).

"To get a chance to play for a team like that, growing up in Texas and watching them every week, to be playing for them and actually being on a Super Bowl team is pretty remarkable."

Benoit grabs El Paso Open

EL PASO (AP) — Bob Benoit put together four consecutive strikes and then survived an open frame in the ninth to win his fourth career Professional Bowlers Association title in the $130,000 El Paso Open on Saturday.

Benoit, who turns 39 on Wednesday, beat top-seeded Robert Lawrence of Austin 216-191 in the title match to win his first tournament in over two years and a paycheck of $20,000.

The win capped an outstanding comeback for Benoit this year. After making only one check in the first 10 tournaments of 1993, he has won money in 13 of the last 14.

"I wanted this more than anything in the world," Benoit said. "Three months ago, I was ready to quit the game. Things were just going so bad for me. Now the monkey is off my back."

The second-seeded Benoit defeated Mike Miller of Albuquerque, N.M., 203-184 in the semifinal to reach the title match. In the final, Benoit fell behind early when he spared in the first two frames and Lawrence spared and struck. A strike in the third drew Benoit even.

Both spared in the fourth and Benoit put together four straight strikes. Lawrence struck in the sixth and seventh but then failed to convert a 3-10 split in the eighth.

Benoit gave Lawrence some light when he opened in the ninth, leaving a 10-pin on his first ball and then rolling his spare ball into the gutter.

Lawrence struck in the ninth to pull closer but needed two strikes in the 10th to put the pressure on Benoit. He left a 3-6-10 on his first ball to hand the victory to Benoit.

"You never know when it's going to be your turn," Benoit said. "Robert outbowled all of us all week and I really thought he was going to be the one to beat."

"I just didn't play the lanes right," said Lawrence, who has made the finals for the second time this year. "I tried to play the right lane up the edge and my mistake was I should have played it like I did all week. When I missed that baby split (3-10 in the eighth), I knew I was in trouble."

The victory, which qualified Benoit for next year's Tournament of Champions, was his third in Texas. He captured his first title by rolling a 300 in the 1988 title match at Grand Prairie, then teamed with Del Ballard Jr. for a doubles title at Beaumont in 1991. Benoit's other title came in Sunrise, Fla. in 1991.

"I just feel comfortable in Texas," said Benoit, who was making his third championship round appearance of the year. "Three of my national titles and all of my six regional titles have come in this state and I think that has a lot to do with the people here. I know all of them and it just makes me feel relaxed."

Americans shine in world games

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — The disappointing showings by Americans at the track ended swiftly Saturday in the World University Games.

■ World University Games

Michelle Collins of Houston won the first event of the day, the women's 400 meters, with roommate Youlanda Warren of Louisiana State second. Flirtisha Harris of Seton Hall then took the women's 200.

Not to be outdone, the men went 1-2 in the 200, with Bryan Bridgewater of Cal State-Los Angeles edging NCAA champion Chris Nelloms of Ohio State.

The U.S. water polo team, sparked by three goals from Mike Burke of Long Beach State, won gold, beating Hungary 13-12. Todd Hosmer of Pacific scored with 2:29 left and Alex Asta of Pepperdine clinched it with 1:10 remaining.

"We wore them down once again in the fourth period," Burke said. "We're able to go 13 deep and that makes a difference."

After blowing a 19-point second-half lead, the American women's basketball squad went on a 14-2 run to clinch the bronze medal with an 83-73 decision against Lithuania. It was the third straight international event in which the U.S. women got bronze, beginning with the 1991 Pan American Games and extending through last year's Olympics.

"Believe me, we're not satisified," coach Joan Bonvicini said. "We're very pleased with getting a medal. It was not necessarily the color we wanted."

Tari Phillips of Central Florida led the United States with 19 points and eight rebounds. She had WUG averages of 18.8 points and 11 rebounds, both team highs.

China beat Cuba 84-81 for the women's basketball crown. The unbeaten U.S. men played Canada for the basketball gold at night.

The first loss for the U.S. women in soccer cost them the gold medal. They fell 2-1 to China.

Julie Foudy of Stanford opened the scoring in the 23rd minute and the United States lead 1-0 at halftime. But Yang Zhou tied it at 47 minutes and, with 15 minutes remaining, Qingmei Sun won it.

Russia won the bronze, 2-0 over Taiwan.

Japan won the men's volleyball crown, beating Poland 15-1, 8-15, 15-7, 15-9.

China continued its strong showing in diving with a silver and bronze off the women's platform. Canada's Anne Montminy won, followed by Yan Yang and Ren Wen.

Collins, who has qualified for the 400 in next month's world championships, is a relative newcomer to the event.

"I've been running in the 100 and the 200," she said after a time of 52.01. "Seeing as how I just got in the 400, it's kind of new to me. I'm just learning how to run the race. I plan on running much faster than that in meets to come."

Bridgewater, the NCAA Division II champion who lost to Nelloms in their previous meeting, wasn't concerned with revenge.

"I didn't think like that," he said. "I just wanted to run as fast as I can."

He nearly did with a wind-aided time of 20.14, .03 seconds slower than his personal best.

Harris admitted she is looking forward to next week's U.S. Olympic Festival in San Antonio.

HOMES & CLASSIFIED

Stately Elegance

With tiled floors and a lovely wooden ceiling, the front room features an enormous fireplace and a wonderful view over the garden.

Out of all the wonderful things in the world, surely one of the nicest is owning a beautiful house and calling it home. A family home always has a certain something; flair, practicality, convenience, style or originality, which transforms their house into a real home.

This fantastic four bedroom home, located in Saddle Cub North has all of these elements which come together to produce a home that combines unsurpassed elegance with practicality and convenience.

The first thing that one notices when driving up to the house is just how unpretentious the house looks from the outside. Nestling among trees on a circular driveway this ranch style house displays a neatness which belies its large floor plan and generous interior.

Once inside, you notice just how big and luxurious this house is; the front door leads into the huge front room which is stunningly appointed with a wooden A-framed ceiling and terra-cotta tiles. The main body of the room is sunken level with the covered patio which runs the length of the front room and it gives a very warm and comfortable feel to the room.

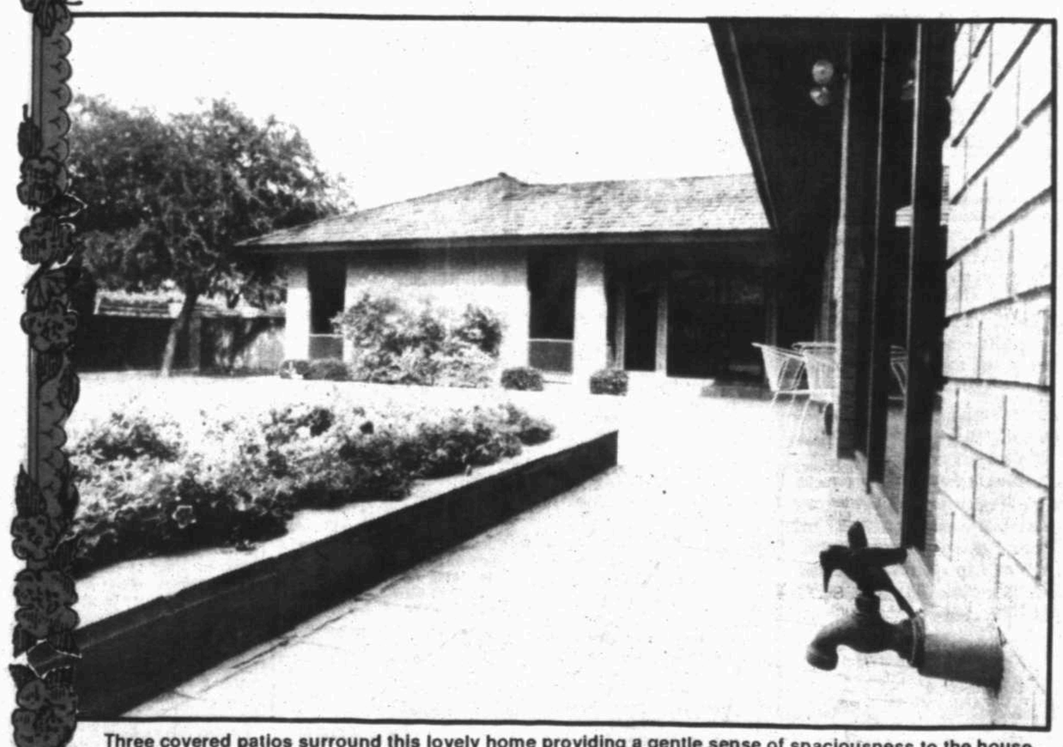

This is a room which has been designed very carefully; a wet bar is tucked into the corner of the room next to the formal dining room to make this space ideal for entertaining, but is also perfect for those quiet winter evenings. A huge fire-place and gentle wood paneling give a feeling of warmth and elegance to this lovely room.

The main hall-way runs around the house, linking each area with the common threads of warm tiling and interesting detailing. It also separates the front room from the second of the family rooms which can be used as a study or as a more informal leisure area.

Conveniently placed near the formal dining room are the fabulous kitchen and informal dining rooms. With everything that a gourmet chef could desire, this is a functional but elegant area which has its own tree shaded patio and plenty of space. A two-tiered breakfast bar, large sub-zero fridge, center island with built in grill, burners and recessed lighting overhead makes this kitchen perfect for every kind of meal. Large formal functions or small family suppers can all be prepared with consummate ease.

Off from the kitchen is the utility room, which boasts a tremendous amount of storage, a half-bath and an enormous built in freezer to complement the fridge in the kitchen.

There is more to this home than one could ever put into a short descriptive piece: for more information about this large, fantastically appointed home call Vicky McWilliams of ReMax at 682-8820.

Three covered patios surround this lovely home providing a gentle sense of spaciousness to the house.

With a two tiered breakfast bar and an informal dining area that has its own patio, this kitchen is a gourmet delight.

Keep cool this summer...and save energy too!

Summer's here and today's savvy home owners are looking for ways to deep cool while keeping energy costs low. Here are suggestions on keeping your home cool during these warm weather months from the Midland Association of Realtors, Inc.

Nearly one-fourth of your home summer heat comes in through your windows. You can reduce this amount by shading your windows from direct sunlight. "The most simple solution is to use interior window shades, curtains or blinds, particularly those with a white or reflective backing that won't absorb heat," says Midland Association of Realtors, Inc. "Regularly lowering the shades when the sun is directly on the window can reduce heat gain through a window by some 25 percent."

Awnings or overhanging eaves (especially on the south side) work well to shelter windows from sunlight. You may prefer eaves because they don't block desired winter sunlight as the winter sun is lower. Solar shade screens will block out up to 75 percent of the sun's rays without obscuring your vision. Louvered sun screens are also recommended in warm climates.

If the time has come to replace your glass windows, consider Low-E glass which can minimize unwanted heat. Low-E glass also blocks out more than 60 percent of the sun's harmful ultraviolet rays which can damage carpeting and furniture.

"if you prefer not to add to or alter your home's windows, consider planting a tree or shrub that will shade your window," recommends Kay Sutton. "Select a fast-growing or mature plant for cost effectiveness. It's a good idea to consult with a local nursery to make certain your choice is practical. This type of natural shading can cut interior heat by 10 to 15 degrees."

Windows are not the only source of heat gain. The walls and roof absorb heat as well. On a hot day, your roof surface may reach 150 degrees Fahrenheit and interior attic temperatures may reach 130 degrees Fahrenheit.

Consider installing a radiant barrier, a special type of reinforced foil that is stapled to rafters or laid over attic insulation. Foil barriers can block about 90 percent of the incoming radiant heat to the attic insulation. Radiant barriers could save 10 percent on your utility bill.

When re-roofing, choose light colored shingles since they absorb less solar heat. Consider light colors when selecting siding or exterior paint colors.

Air leaks can result in significant heat gain during the summer months. Look for such unwanted air passages around doors and windows and where electrical, plumbing and gas enter.

Caulk around windows and doors and where piping and wiring run into the home. Add insulation to the attic floor or between the roof rafters. Consult a local insulation specialist to determine the recommended amount of insulation in your area.

Until the outdoor air temperature reaches 85 degrees Fahrenheit, circulating the air inside your home can have a remarkable cooling effect. "Open doors and windows at sundown and pull in cooler outside air with fans," advises Sutton. Open adjacent windows from cross ventilation. Close the house in the morning to retain the cool air, unless it's humid outside. In humid weather, avoid opening the windows at night when the air temperature may be lower, but the moisture content higher."

Use room fans to move air around. Portable fans cost less than $.05 per hour to operate, ceiling fans a penny or two more. Whole house fans installed in a hallway ceiling or attic, can move 3,000 to 6,000 cubic feet of air per minute, thereby quickly replacing warm indoor air with cooler outdoor air. These fans can eliminate the need for an air conditioner during certain times of the year and, for maximum efficiency, can be wired to automatically turn off when your air condtioer comes on.

While you can't control the heat produced by the sun, you can reduce the amount of heat produced indoors. Cooking, bathing and using appliances all produce heat. Use appliance in the morning and evening hours and avoid heating your stove if possible. A microwave oven not only saves heat, but utility costs as well. A very hot day is a great time to use the outdoor grill.

When buying appliances, look for energy efficient models, especially for those appliances, look for energy efficient models, especially for those appliances that run frequently. Consider moving your freezer or washer and dryer to non-air conditioned space.

"Following these steps should help you feel cooler this summer," says Sutton. "But when all else fails, remember that autumn is just around the corner."

The Midland Association of Realtors, Inc., is one of more than 1,800 local boards and associations of Realtors nationwide that comprise the National Association of Realtors. As the nation's largest trade association, NAR is "The Voice for Real Estate," representing nearly 750,000 members involved in all aspects of the real estate industry.

E-R-C awards CRP designation to Richard K. Langston

The Employee Relocation Council recently announced that Richard K Langston, Vice President for Corporate Relocation, Langston Realtors of Midland, TX has earned the Certified Relocation Professional (CRP) designation after successfully completing the CRP exam held on May 5, 1993 in Orlando, FL.

The CRP program was introduced in 1990 to formally recognize E-R-C members' knowledge about the entire relocation industry, and requires awareness of residential real estate and appraising, corporate relocation policies and issues, relocation tax and legal issues, and family relocation issues. To date, 3,223 E-R-C members hold the designation, and must earn 30 recertification credits within each three-year period following certification to maintain their CRP.

The May 5 exam was administered to 335 candidates, and Richard Langston was one of 235 E-R-C members who were awarded the designation from this group. David Du Mez, SCRP, Chairman of E-R-C's 1993 Certification Review Board notes that, "The CRP program helps us accomplish two goals simultaneously: to strengthen communication and heighten the quality of service we are able to offer. Since the start of the Certified Relocation Professional programs, our members have not only enhanced their professionalism, but have also increased their knowledge of various industry disciplines."

Richard Langston, CRP, and Joanne Langston, CRP, President of Langston Realtors are two of only three members of the Midland Association of Realtors who have earned this prestigious designation in the relocation industry.

Child care is a vital concern for today's children by today's parents and for this reason the Midland Reporter-Telegram is publishing our annual Child Care Directory on Sunday, August 8th.

The Child Care Directory is a method used to reach parents with information about the services that are available in the Midland area and who provides them. This section focuses on the basic "who, what, where and when" of quality child care in our area and the section includes a map so that your facility can easily be located.

You will probably want your facility represented with an ad in this special Child Care Directory, a story about your facility, a photo of your facility and a dot on the map to show your location. PERMIAN BASIN OILREPORT

Petroleum Perspectives/3E
Oil & Gas Activity/6-8E
Activity Indicators/9E

Serving 54 counties in West Texas and New Mexico

BRIEFING

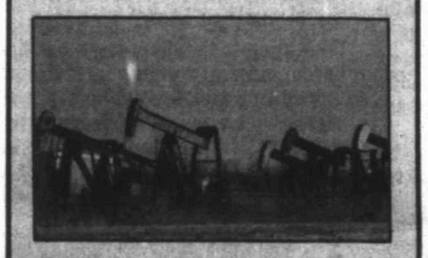

Rigs mixed

The U.S. and Permian Basin rig counts were mixed for the week ended July 9, according to Baker Hughes Inc.

The Houston-based company said that the Basin rig count gained two to 108 during the week, above the year-ago level of 87.

The U.S. count, however, lost 19 rigs for the week, falling to 713. However, the count is well above the year-ago tally of 667.

Among major oil producing states, Kansas saw the sharpest decline, 10 rigs; Texas lost one rig. New Mexico saw the sharpest increase, five rigs.

Used pumpjacks ready for resale at a Midland equipment yard.

SPE conference

An SPE Technical Conference will look at stategies for the oil industry in the future and examine technology that could keep pumpjacks on wells and out of equipment yards above.

Acid acquisition

Nowsco Well Service Ltd. has entered into an agreement to buy Acid Engineering, with facilities in Andrews, Hobbs, Levelland, Iraan, Midland, Denver City and Snyder and should conclude the transaction within 60-90 days. No terms were released. Nowsco had sales of $230 million, and one month ago acquired Ntact, a company that supplies coiled tubing and nitrogen services in Gulf Coast and South Texas. In process of moving U.S. Strategic Business Unit to Houston, International Nowsco says it plans to participate heavily in the U.S. stimulation market.

Mexico venture

Diamond Shamrock Inc. says it will open 200 convenience store franchises in Mexico over the next five years. The first franchise opened in late June near Monterrey, and a second is scheduled to open in Mazatlan, Mexico, later this summer.

"Mexico is a large country with growing demands for U.S. products and services. Franchising our Corner Stores in conjunction with PEMEX gasoline operations is an important step toward growing our business south of the border," senior vice president A.W. "Ed" O'Donnell said.

AGA marks 75

The American Gas Association will celebrate its 75th anniversary at the 1993 American Gas Conference to be held Oct. 10-12 in Washington D.C.

The meeting will feature breakout sessions on FERC Order 636, natural gas vehicles, manufactured gas plant sites, total quality management, natural gas cooling, natural gas power generation, integrated resource planning, customer communications and energy legislation.

A keynote speaker from the Clinton administration will discuss the impact of its new policies on the natural gas industry.

Analysts bullish despite oil drop

■ Traders unsure what effect Iraq-U.N. agreement to sell oil will have on oil prices

By Mella McEwen
Staff writer

This week's plunge of oil prices to three-year lows may have oil producers wanting to run for cover.

But analysts remain bullish on the future of crude prices, though they don't expect price levels to rise much above the $18 and expect them to have trouble hitting the optimistic $22 level predicted earlier for the remainder of the year.

Oil prices began weakening last week when the United Nations and Iraq opened talks on allowing Iraq a one-time sale of $1.6 billion in crude oil to raise money for food and medicine.

Prices moved sharply lower in mid-week when negotiators reached a tentative agreement.

What has traders jittery, however, is not this one-time sale but that it could possibly open the door to further sales, thus adding to a market already awash in oil.

While analysts at PaineWebber point out that the tentative agreement to allow Iraq to sell oil still faces a very difficult time getting approval from the U.N. Security Council, if passed it could put serious downward pressure on oil prices. This is because the amount of crude to be sold is fixed at $1.6 billion, and if prices fall that would mean that Iraqi could put more oil in the market for $1.6 billion. Experts estimate that Iraqi sales could exceed a million barrels a day.

Traders warn that the market can expect an unusually high level of volatility in coming sessions, with prices possibly falling as low as $16.30 per barrel.

However, they say, prices could rise back above the $18 level due to the uncertainty of the Iraq-U.N. situation.

Even though it would take one to two months for Iraqi crude to begin moving after an agreement is finalized, analysts predict OPEC members will hold an emergency meeting to alter members' quotas and accommodate Iraqi's exports.

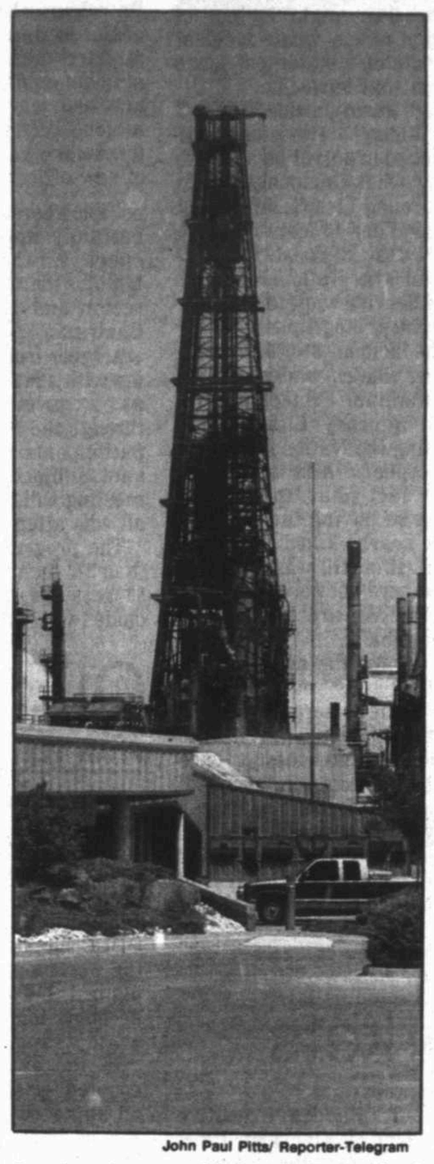

Not everyone, however, puts so much stock on Iraqi oil. Tony Annuziato, an analyst with Shearson Lehman Brothers in Houston, said he believes the market has oversold and that traders have placed too much emphasis on the reentry of Iraq into the world market.

"The market's overfocused on Iraq," he said. "By the time they come online, we'll probably need what they can produce."

He blamed the decline in prices on traders' perceptions, which are more negative than the market's fundamentals.

Jeff Robertson, vice president of energy research for Rauscher Pierce Refsnes, said traders are concerned not just about the possible return of Iraqi crude to the market but about members

U.S. crude production at new low

■ Oil imports jump as oil production hits 35 year low.

N.Y. Times News Service

Energy dependence once again became the focus of the industry, when American Petroleum Institute reported this week that imported oil had jumped by 9.2 percent in the last six months as domestic production plunged to the lowest level in 35 years.

It was numbers that returned the country to the consumption patterns of the early 1980s, when imports were surging.

The dependence on currently cheap and plentiful foreign oil is expected to grow even further as oil companies continue to cut back on drilling in increasingly exhausted domestic fields while being prevented for environmental reasons from drilling in offshore coastal areas.

The price of oil plunged Wednesday to $17.49 a barrel, its lowest close in three years, amid indications that Iraq may soon be allowed to add its oil to an already oversupplied market.

The expense of production will continue to make the United States more dependent on imported oil, which accounted for 48.2 percent of domestic deliveries over the six-month period, according to figures released Wednesday by the American Petroleum Institute, an industry trade group.

Analysts said, however, that the growing dependence was of less concern than in the early 1970s, when an embargo by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries caused huge

Tougher injection rules loom

■ New costly EPA rules could be excessive, resulting in more plugged wells and fewer EOR projects.

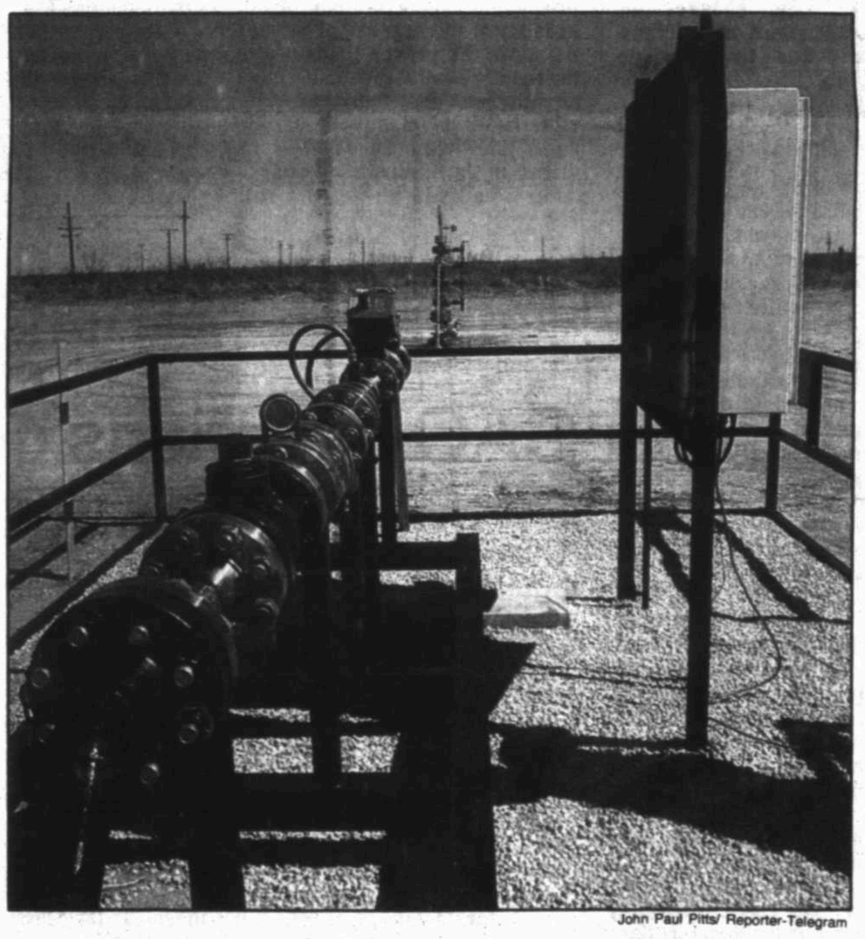

By John Paul Pitts
Business/Oil editor

Tough new injection well rules, proposed by Environmental Protection Agency (EPA), could result in the plugging of many marginal wells and seriously discourage enhanced oil recovery (EOR) projects, yet there is still some division in the industry over the severity of the rules.

"Some of our members contend that the rules shouldn't be a problem in Texas, which already has the most stringent rules in the U.S., but others think the program is excessive," says Harry Spannaus, executive vice president of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association. "We might be somewhere in the middle. I don't know."

Even the Oil & Gas Journal, normally outspoken about issues that affect the profitability of the oil industry waffled on the issue. In a recent editorial on the rules the Journal noted: "The effects of these rules should cause alarm ...This is not a case of regulatory extremism...The draft proposals are tough-...What should the industry do? Maybe nothing...Maybe current oilfield practices do pose a threat to drinking water-...But if there is no general problem, however, industry should fight the regulations as going too far."

According to Harry Spannaus the new rules have their roots in the Safe Drinking Water Act of 1974, which gave EPA the power to protect and monitor drinking water in the states, but was amended in 1980 to allow states to monitor their own drinking water, providing EPA approves of the monitoring programs.

Pipeline options expand for area gas producers

■ System additions will open new markets gas sold at Waha header

Staff report

HOUSTON — American Pipeline Co. has announced modifications to facilities operated by its West Texas pipeline affiliates, Red River Pipeline and Westar Transmission, that will provide additional options for shippers desiring to transport natural gas from the Waha area to interstate and intrastate pipeline connections in the Permian and Anadarko Basins in Texas and Oklahoma.

Since its construction in 1982, Red River Pipeline has transported gas south from Wheeler County near the Oklahoma-Texas border to Waha in Pecos County. Now, construction of facilities has begun that will allow for the bi-directional flow of natural gas by September 1 between Waha and Wheeler County.

This project also includes bi-directional flow capability at Waha with Westar and the Lone Star Header and in Wheeler County with ONG Western Inc. through its affiliate OkTex Pipeline.

The second project, the reversal of Westar Transmission's meter with El Paso Natural Gas Co. at Waha, was re-

Pitts

The Clinton administration has just received a bitter dose of its own medicine, which it has been dishing out to the oil industry for decades. It's called hassle and it's packaged in the form of environmental impact statments (EISs).

The reverse hassle dose came early this month when a federal judge, Charles Richey, of Washington D.C., threw a monkey-wrench in the works of the North American Free Trade Agreement (NAFTA) by ruling that the Clinton administration would have to conduct an environmental impact statement before Congress could consider the revolutionary trade agreement.

Environmental Impact Statements have stalled dams, highways, pipelines and drilling projects, but whoever thought one would stall an international trade agreement put into motion by the President and Congress.

Hopefully, the bitter pill will cause Clinton and Congress to wake up to the nonsense of environmental impact statements and the excessive power they pack.

When Congress created the National Environmental Policy Act, it never intended for such factors as EISs to become the road blocks to progress and obstacles to legitimate commerce that they have become. The Oil & Gas Journal describes them as little more than "legal endurance tests" for commercial projects inside and outside the petroleum industry.

TOTAL CONTROL — Another law that doesn't make sense is the $300 permit fee that the Department of Transportation wants to issue to every oil producer and every oil or water hauler in the U.S.

Rep. Larry Combest is working to head off the proposal, which the oil industry is resisting on the basis that it is just another unnecessary cost of doing busines. However, the cost of doing business may be the least of the reasons for fearing the proposed permit. The real threat may be the permit itself, whether it costs $3 or $300.

When Washington is able to put all oil production, intrastate and interstate, under a single permit; when no oil can move without this permit, it will then have the power to, little by little, modify the requirements and scope of a single permit to gain more and more control over the upstream oil industry. And that's what its all about — control.

This simple permit, which DOT confesses is just a revenue move, could become a giant boot on the neck of the oil industry.

IRS HASSLE — One of the biggest hassles being placed on the oil industry comes from the Internal Revenue Service, which now requires oil and gas associations like the Permian Basin Petroleum Association (PBPA) to make available its membership lists to the IRS and to make the dues in such organizations as non-business deductions.

IRS would also require PBPA and other associations to document every hour and every day in which it was engaged in lobby work. In the case of PBPA, that would probably amount to every hour of every day.

Please see PITTS/2E

PITTS: Tangled brain

(From 1E)

It's all part of a Clinton promise to reduce the influence of lobby groups on Congress. To many in Washington "special interest" and "lobby" have become dirty words, and there is much talk about limiting their influence.

What is not brought out, however, are these simple facts: It is the right of every American to lobby for his or her own interest. It is the right of Americans to bond together to seek legislative support for common interests. And, if contributing to an association that battles government for one's personal business interests is not a legitimate business expense, what is?

It doesn't make sense that Americans should be punished by a federal agency for exercising their God-given right to affect the political process, either individually or collectively.

"The only redeeming value to this law," says Harry Spannaus, PBPA executive vice president, "is that it also applies to the Sierra Club."

EPA AGENDA — It has long been rumored in the oilpatch that the EPA has as its unwritten agenda the desire to become the most hard-nosed, toughest and most-feared bureaucracy in Washington.

Now, there is indication that there may be more truth than fiction to that rumor. There is also indication that some inside EPA may be getting fed up with the agenda.

According to news reports, Congressional investigators are looking into allegations that top officials at the Environmental Protection Agency in Seattle harass employees who criticize EPA's harsh environmental enforcement efforts and those EPA employees that are not hard enough on polluters. The probe also is examining allegations of civil rights violations of EPA employees at the regional office.

Now it all begins to make sense.

SAVE THE PEOPLE — We in the oilpatch have long suspected that the value system of the environmental wackos might be out of whack, and now a whale incident and a whale of a statement tends to confirm that suspicion.

Last fall a nationwide NBC "I Witness Video" television audience watched in horror as a friendly looking whale suddenly closed its jaws around Lisa Costello's leg and dragged her 40 feet under the sea off the Hawaii coast. Now, attorneys for the National Marine Fisheries Service want to fine Costello and the photographer who recorded the incident $10,000 for harrassing the whales, under the 1972 Marine Mammal Protection Act.

Federal attorney Lisa Caplan, representing the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, says the fact that the whales seemed to be having fun and Costello was nearly killed is legally irrelevant. It is still whale harassment: "We are not here to protect the humans. We are here to protect the animals."

Now, perhaps the next time an EPA official tells you that he is "here to achieve zero non-attainment in the oilpatch — even if its impossible — and doesn't care what it going to cost you," you will know where he is coming from.

Once you understand "them," their wacky value system, and how they think about the rest of "us," it all begins to make sense.

Strategies theme for SPE meet

RICHARDSON — "Oil and Gas Strategies in the 21st Century" are the themes of the 1993 SPE Annual Technical Conference and Exhibition (ATCE) scheduled Oct. 3-6 at the George R. Brown Convention Center in Houston.

The 68th edition of the Society of Petroleum Engineers' hallmark conference includes a comprehensive technical program, an international exhibition of oilfield products and services, presentation of major Society technical and professional awards, and installation of new officers.

"The theme for this meeting is certainly appropriate," said Michael T. Cotton of Exxon Co. U.S.A., the Gulf Coast Region Director and 1993 Annual Meeting Chairman. "Our industry has emerged from major restructuring with advanced technology seen as a primary industry force through the 1990s. Annual Meeting participants will have many relevant subjects to listen to. This meeting will be a valuable asset to all who attend."

The program will include more than 325 technical presentations in 59 sessions. Special features include two sessions dealing with the multidisciplinary team approach as well as scenarios for the industry's future, two sessions on horizontal wells, and three sessions each on environment/safety and economics and investment strategies.

In the Keynote Session on Monday, Oct. 4, industry executives will present perspectives on Issues Impacting Strategic Direction in the 21st Century. Panelists include Raymond Plank of Apache Corp., Richard L. Oliver of BP Exploration, Raffaele Santoro of Agip SpA, and Harry J. Longwell of Exxon Co. U.S.A. Topics include: "Future of Oil & Gas in North America: The Next 25 Years," "Emerging Opportunities in the International Scene," "Evaluation of the Roles of Multinational and State Oil Companies," and "The Role of Technology in the 21st Century."

"More than ever before, the highly competitive and complex nature of the worldwide petroleum industry demand advanced and environmentally sensitive new technology," said 1993 SPE President Jacques Bosio of Elf Aquitaine Production. "No better venue exists than the SPE Annual Meeting to provide a platform to present and disseminate such information, as well as to share experiences and achievements. Together, such technology-transfer activity will make an important contribution to the best strategies for success in future international oil and gas operations." Bosio will pass the gavel to the 1994 SPE President E.A. (Al) Breitebach of Scientific Software-Intercomp Inc. during the President's Luncheon Wednesday, Oct. 6.

More than 200 companies from seven countries will display products and services essential to efficient oilfield operations during the ATCE exhibition. Exhibits include tools, equipment and supplies for drilling exploration, oil and gas production and offshore operations plus computer hardware, software and services.

Other activities include the popular Monday Evening Reception at Houston's Museum of Fine Arts, one of the nation's outstanding art institutions. The Expofare, scheduled Tuesday from 11 a.m. to 2. p.m. in the exhibition area, includes drawings for door prizes. The popular activity gives registrants the opportunity to visit informally with exhibitors about new materials, tools, products, and services that contribute to efficient oilfield operations.

The Monday Awards Luncheon recognizes significant personal contributions to the industry, profession, society and community. The luncheon will honor recipients of the Lucas Gold Medal, the Carll Award, the Uren Award, the SPE Distinguished Service Award, DeGolyer Distinguished Service Medal, Ferguson Medal, and several other specialized achievement awards and honors.

Registrants can participate in a wide range of SPE Short Courses offered on Saturday and Sunday, Oct. 2-3. Registrants also may preregister for a day-long geology field trip on Sunday to study two classic gulf coast geological features - the Galveston Island coastal barrier and the Brazos River delta. Other Society functions during the meeting include many committee meetings, alumni functions, an extensive program for spouses and guests, and a variety of social events.

The advance registration deadline is Sept. 15.

GAS: New markets

(From 1E)

Waha, was recently completed. This enables American to transport shippers' gas from the Westar/El Paso interconnect (IWESTARW) to various intrastate and interstate pipelines in the Anadarko and Permian Basins through Westar and Red River.

These pipelines include Lone Star Gas, Oasis Pipeline, Valero Transmission, ONG Western Inc., Natural Gas Pipeline Co., ANR, Williams Natural Gas, Northern Natural, KN Energy and Arkla Energy Resources.

Michael T. Fadden executive vice president of American Pipeline Co., commented that "Westar and Red River are ideally situated to transport gas originating from the San Juan and Permian Basins to pipelines that serve markets in the Midwest and eastern United States. In today's marketplace pipelines must have the flexibility to transport gas to the highest value market. The changes announced today give Westar Transmissions and Red River Pipeline this flexibility."

WELL: New EPA rules

ground water that Texas does.

In drafting the rules, EPA cited three government reports to justify additional control. One was a 1987 report on geothermal, another examined productiona and exploration waste and drinking water and still another was an abandoned well analysis.

Said Spannaus: "Some alledge that these studies overstated the problem and were not accurate in that they used a very small sample audience and did not look at the whole picture. The American Petroleum Institute said that of the 100 cases studied by EPA, only 23 were alleged to have contaminated aquifers, and only four of the 23 were the result of injection wells.

API contends that given the fact that there are 170,000 active injection wells and 2.2 million abandoned or inactive wells in the U.S., 23 cases of contamination is a good indication that the present system of monitoring is working and that additional EPA controls are not needed.

The area generally considered excessive by the industry is the so-called Area of Review (AOR) that would require oil and gas producers to analyze all wells within one-quarter mile of an injection well to see if it might provide a vertical conduit to an aquifer.

Spannaus says this cost might run as high as $18,000 per well and would deprive the industry of capital badly needed to develop current production.

"The added cost could wipe out some stripper wells, cause premature abandonment of wells, over burden oil company staffs with paperwork and take capital away from workover projects."

Spannaus noted that Jerry Mulligan head of underground injection control for the Texas Railroad Commission had always been diligent in creating rules to prevent aquifer contamination and that he didn't think EPA could do much better than Texas. Some of the rules will serve no purpose, he said.

Other aspects of the rules, which were drafted with the assistance of the oil industry, call for surface casing, a long casing string cemented through the injection interval and tubing set on a packer.

PRICES: Fall short-term of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries and whether or not they can rein in their production.

"Iraq wants to sell $1.6 billion of oil," he said, "and when you put that much on a market that's already got plenty of supply, that pushes prices down.

"The other problem is the demand side. With continued recession in the U.S. and Europe,the only real growth in energy demand is in the Pacific Rim and Latin America, and that's not enough to absorb what's out there," he added, noting that demand growth in the U.S. and Western Europe is expected to be stagnant this year.

If Iraq and the U.N. do indeed reach agreement on the sale of Iraqi crude, Robertson said, "if they do it once, they can do it again. The resolve of the U.N. against Iraq selling crude will be shown to have weakened."

That, he said, is just one wildcard facing the energy market. The other is Russia and other oil-producing countries that once belonged to the Soviet Union.

Russian production is still declining, he said, as is demand within that country, making it difficult to gauge the impact on Russian crude exports.

"There are a lot of obstacles to get through before Russia really opens up," he said.

In the meantime, the near-term focus will be on OPEC and any production-cutting agreement they're able to reach.

"I think it's more difficult for OPEC to push prices up very high as they were able to do in the early 1980s," Robertson said. "But they have a knack, or the ability, to push it down through oversupply. The nature of OPEC is that someone is going to cheat and so, when they cheat, others will start cheating and that leads to prices going down. OPEC members can put enough pressure on the cheaters to stabilize prices, but I don't see them able to push prices too high. They want to keep prices in the $18 to $22 range, and that's probably possible."

He added that, in his opinion, U.S. producers have resolved themselves to seeing prices in that range.

"They learned in the late 1980s how to make money at much lower prices," he said.

OIL: U.S. production declines to 35-year low price increases and lines for gasoline.

"We're pretty comfortable now," said John D. Hervey, oil analyst for the investment firm of Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette. OPEC supplied about 55 percent of the world's oil in the 1970s, he explained, but the organization now accounts for only one-third of the world's supply.

In the early 1970s, OPEC accounted for about 85 percent of the oil imported to the United States. It is now down to about 58 percent.

Of that, he added, about 90 percent comes from nations friendly to the United States, such as Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Venezuela and Nigeria.

With secure supplies and plentiful oil, he said, the specter of lines at gas stations is farfetched. He added, however, that domestic production would continue to fall because of the expense of producing oil in the proven fields where the readily available supplies have already been depleted.

In the first six months of this year, the number of oil wells drilled in the United States fell to 3,658 from 4,212 in the first half last year.

Drilling for gas showed a sharp rise, however, with 5,597 wells completed, compared with 3,250 last year, although most of these were in proven fields as opposed to exploratory wells.

Edward H. Murphy, an official of the petroleum institute, said in a news briefing Wednesday that the decline in domestic oil drilling was expected to continue a trend that began in 1985. "Indeed, the trend for U.S. crude oil production is pessimistic at best," he added.

Adding to the domestic woes has been only a modest increase in consumption of petroleum products, which rose 1.5 percent over the first six months last year, as cars, airplanes and other modes of transport grew more fuel-efficient.

Growth has been low for the last 10 years, averaging a little more than 1 percent a year. That weak demand is one reason oil prices have continued to fall in recent months; another is that OPEC was unable to persuade Kuwait to hew to its production quotas. Also, Iraq could resume exports, if its negotiations with the United Nations to ease sanctions are successful.

American dependence on imported oil jumped by 9.2 percent in the last six months as domestic production plunged to the lowest level in 35 years, returning the country to the consumption patterns of the early 1980s, when imports were surging.

The dependence on currently cheap and plentiful foreign oil is expected to grow even further as oil companies continue to cut back on drilling in increasingly exhausted domestic fields while being prevented for environmental reasons from drilling in offshore coastal areas.

The expense of production will continue to make the United States more dependent on imported oil, which accounted for 48.2 percent of domestic deliveries over the six-month period, according to figures released Wednesday by the American Petroleum Institute, an industry trade group.

Analysts said, however, that the growing dependence was of less concern than in the early 1970s, when an embargo by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries caused huge price increases and lines for gasoline.

"We're pretty comfortable now," said John D. Hervey, oil analyst for the investment firm of Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette. OPEC supplied about 55 percent of the world's oil in the 1970s, he explained, but the organization now accounts for only one-third of the world's supply.

GAO questions costs of FERC Order 636

■ The General Accounting Office says regulators misrepresented the costs and benefits of FERC Order 636.

By Bill Mintz
Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — Federal regulators overestimated the benefits and underestimated the costs to consumers when they changed the way natural gas pipelines sell their services, the General Accounting Office says.

Altering the ways local gas utilities pay for their gas will increase costs for the utilities — particularly residential consumers in small towns — by $1.2 billion a year, according to a draft of the long-awaited study by the watchdog agency for Congress.

The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission has said that Order 636, when it takes effect this winter, will increase utilities' costs by about $800 million but will allow increased competition that will boost the economy.

"We question FERC's estimate, because it is based on various independent projections of increased gas use" that would have happened with no change in pipeline regulations, the draft of the GAO report says.

Operators of small utility companies have been the loudest critics of Order 636, saying they could bear the worst of the increased costs, which, they say, could be as high as $4.3 billion.

The new rule take pipeline companies out of the business of buying gas from producers, transporting it and selling it to local distribution companies. Instead, the pipelines will be paid only to move gas for users — the utilities and other large consumers.

Until this rule takes effect, FERC will continue to allow pipelines to allocate fixed costs between customers that need commitments for gas — mainly utilities — and large industrial consumers that are willing to take interruptible service to get cheaper rates. Those customers generally have ways to shift to oil or other fuels when gas supplies are interrupted.

The small utilities object to Order 636, because it shifts more of the fixed costs to "firm" customers that need gas commitments. That, in turn, will translate into higher bills for their customers, most of whom are residential.

The GAO analysis, however, gave all sides of the controversy something to welcome. "It appears to generally endorse the Order 636 policy to encourage competition," said William Scherman, an attorney in the Washington office of the law firm Skadden, Arps, Slate, Meagher & Flom who was FERC general counsel when the rules were written.

"Every time the GAO took a stand and made a statement, it said the costs were shifted disproportionately to residential and commercial consumers," countered Howard Marlowe, a lobbyist who represents small municipally owned gas utilities that belong to the American Public Gas Association.

Order 636 opponents want FERC to delay the effective date of the new rules, but a pipeline industry leader said the industry cannot afford the uncertainty.

Edwin Rothschild, energy policy directory for Citizen Action, a consumer group, said the regulators should rewrite Order 636 to "ensure that residential consumers do not bear the brunt of restructuring costs."

FERC has given preliminary approval for restructuring plans for 69 of the 76 interstate pipelines in its jurisdiction.

FERC Chairwoman Elizabeth Moler has announced plans to give final approval of all of the plans by the end of August so the pipelines can make the changes needed for the new system in time for the 1993-94 winter heating season.

PETROLEUM PERSPECTIVES

Russian aid a slap to U.S. oil industry

By Harry Spannaus

The New York Times reprint in the July 7, 1993 issue of the Midland Reporter-Telegram regarding U.S. loan to the Russian Petroleum Industry reflects not only an added governmental slap to the U.S. domestic petroleum industry, but the promotion of a double standard by the Clinton Administration, since it prefers to favor foreign industry.

Spannaus

While I admit that I have little expertise on foreign aid type issues and programs, it is inconceivable to me that the U.S. government is providing $2 billion in loans and loan guarantees to Russia for the sole purpose of assisting that country in its oil industry recovery efforts.

According to the Times article, the $2 billion loan is intended to allow Russia to buy American made spare parts to repair and upgrade its crude oil production and refinery equipment. The need being, up to 40 thousand Russian wells representing 25 percent of the country's production is shutdown for equipment failure, thus depriving Russia of badly needed crude oil revenue for the purchase of foreign goods and services.

Isn't it ironic that we are providing Russia $2 billion in loan (most likely to develop into aid) to rebuild its petroleum industry which is responsible for one of the world's greatest environmental man-made disasters of all times.

Isn't it sad that while our own environmental movement is basically destroying the industrial foundation of our nation, we are committing $2 billion to Russia's petroleum industry in which no restrictions, constraints or provisions are included in the lending criteria for the cleanup and protection of the Russian environment as pertains to the petroleum industry.

Does this "loan" not establish a double standard and basically a double cross when it provides financial assistance and special concessions to a faltering foreign industry when our own petroleum industry has suffered more than 450,000 jobs lost in the past decade, has reduced its domestic production volume by 25 percent while increasing imports up to 50 percent of demand, has been brought to its knees by unjust tax policy and environmental regulation, and a self-destructive policy of cheap oil, at any price, regardless of the source?

I have no problem with assisting those in need — I do have a problem when Americans and American business aren't placed first.

I have a problem with governmental induced-business disincentives such as unjust windfall profit tax policy, the passing of the fuel use act to obstruct the expansion of natural gas markets, the full governmental control of natural gas pricing, the numerous tax disincentives of the tax reform act of 1986, a BTU tax which penalizes crude oil and product consumers at double the tax rate over coal, and an administration and congress that appears to be well on their way to being suckered in by environmental groups to making unjust and unwise decisions by using the "dollar power" and "flower power" principles instead of sound scientific fact for environmental policy.

Last November in a speech at a Houston Oil and Gas conference, Mobil Oil Co. Chairman Allen Murray explained the reasoning behind the current exodus of "majors" from domestic operations.

He bluntly, yet correctly stated, "The major producing industry isn't abandoning the U.S. by going overseas as some in Washington have charged...We are being thrown out by their anti-business decisions of the administration and congress and unless this attitude changes, foreign business investment will continue to be more luctrative to American business than most opportunities at home."

The U.S. domestic petroleum has never asked for a handout to help in its recovery efforts. Although our business is unique in not enjoying the concept of supply and demand values because of Middle East worldwide crude oil price controls, all that we have ever requested from our federal government is a fair shake — to be put on a balanced playing field with other business, especially in regard to domestic tax policy.

But our government continues to degrade and demean and deface the industry through unwarranted and unjust tax policy and regulation even to the extent to publicly announce that fossil energy is public enemy number one on the environment and that petroleum must be sacrificed for other energy sources if the bird, bees and the trees are to continue to exist.

You will notice that in most of such writings and charges, the element of a human's creature comforts is seldom addressed.

The old saying of "What's good for the goose is good for the gander" certainly should fit regarding our new "loan" program to help russian oil. It's a national tragedy to help rebuild the Russian petroleum industry while being the catalyst in our own industry's destruction.

FERC denies rehearing on merger of utilities

The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission denied rehearing requests on its order setting for hearing the proposed merger of Entergy Corp. and Gulf States Utilties Co. (Applicants).

On January 28, the Commission ordered a hearing on the proposed merger, questioning the merger's effect on operating costs and rate levels. Also set for hearing was the proposed accounting treatment and an amendment to Entergy's System Agreement (Docket No. ER92-806).

Many of the intervenors challenged the decision not to set competitive issues for hearing. In today's action the Commission answered their arguments noting that "There is more than enough information in the record to enable us to make a reasoned decision whether Entergy's open-access tariff, when extended to Gulf States' service territory and in perpetuity...will mitigate any anticompetitive effects arising from the merger."

The Commission said that even if the competitive issue has been litigated in past merger cases, "this Commission cannot, and will not, take a 'cookie-cutter' approach to merger applications...the Commission must look at each individual merger proposal on a case-by-case basis..."

Requests to make public the Commission's internal market analysis were also addressed. In considering the requests, the Commission explained that in its January order it presented, in great detail, the analytical framework and data used to reach its conclusions. However, the Commission nevertheless agreed to make public a lengthly description of the methodology used to compute market shares.

Although the hearing in this case has concluded, the Commission directed the presiding administrative law judge, to the extent necessary, to reopen the record to allow parties the opportunity to present evidence on whether the Applicants will be able to operate the merged company as planned, and if not, how that affects the projected savings resulting from the proposed merger. If necessary, the intial decision, expected by August 31, may be delayed until September 30.

The Commission also denied requests for a stay in the proceeding, citing its "long-standing practice" to generally deny such requests because of "a need for definitiveness and finality in administrative proceedings..."

Gulf States, headquarted in Beaumont, Texas, transmits and distributes electric energy over 28,000 square miles in southeastern Texas and southern Louisiana, serving approximately 540,000 retail customers and 10 full or partial requirements wholesale customers. Gulf States had a net system generating capacity of 6,372 megawatts and an additional 405 megawatts in storage at the end of 1991. The utility owns and operates 4,830 miles of transmission lines in Texas and Louisiana and maintains seven transmission ties with the Entergy System.

Under the merger proposal, Entergy and Gulf States would form a new holding company which would hold all of the outstanding shares of common stock of the two companies.

Edisto Resources president, CEO resigns

DALLAS — Edisto Resources Corp. has announced that David N. Broussard, its President and Chief Operating Officer submitted his resignation to the Board of Directors.

Mr. Broussard's resignation was preceded on July 1, by that of James R. McNab, Jr., Chairman and Chief Executive Officer. Both resignations were immediately effective.

Edisto's Board of Directors announced that it had selected Michael Y. McGovern, President and Chief Executive Officer of American Petroleum Co., to succeed McNab as Edisto's new Chairman and CEO.

American National Petroleum, a Houston-based oil and gas exploration and production company and a marketer of natural gas, is scheduled to be sold to Patrick Petroleum Co. of Jackson, Michigan on July 29.

In announcing it selection, the Board said "McGovern has been chosen to head the newly-reorganized Edisto because of his prior experience in managing the operations of public oil and gas companies and for his ability in achieving operating efficiencies and enhancing values of corporate assets in a post-bankruptcy environment."

In a meeting with Edisto's employees, McGovern said that he intends to review with management the business plans for each of Edisto's business segments to evaluate the direction of the company.

He also said in developing a definitive plan, he would be drawing on the knowledge of the company's newly-appointed directors who have vast experience in the company's principal lines of business.

In addition to McGovern, members of Edisto's new Board of Directors are: Vernon T. Jones of Tulsa, Okla., who formerly serves as Vice Chairman of the Williams Companies, President of Williams Pipeline Company and President and Chief Operating Officer of the Williams Companies; Joseph E. Reid, of Houston, an oil and gas consultant who formerly held the positions of President and Chief Executive Officer of Meridian Oil Company and Superior Oil Company, and served as both a director and officer of Panhandle Eastern Pipeline Company, all of Houston; John G. Graham, presently Senior Vice President and Chief Financial Officer of General Public Utilities Corporation of Parsippany, New Jersey; and Timothy Andrews, of Los Angeles, Calif., a Vice President of Trust Company of the West, the largest stockholder of the Company.

Business Review

An Oil Report Special Feature

Safer productivity with Rod-Way Specialties

Making oil fields safer and more productive has always been a priority for everyone in the oil business; but now, with the barrel price down it has become essential to maximize profitability.

Rod-Way Specialties, a division of Pro Gas Operating Inc. was founded to distribute specific tools made by Spears Specialty Oil Tools Inc. which are designed to increase safety levels and/or increase profits. Buddy McDonald and Don McCown, the co-founders, have brought together over 35-years of combined experience in all aspects of the oil business and directed their energies into a vacant area in the oil market place.

Up until now there hasn't been a distributor in this region. Bearing in mind just how many oil wells and installations there are in the West Texas and New Mexico area, this has proved to be a gap in the market that needed to be filled.

Rod-Way specializes mainly in Steel and Glass rods and Back-Wash tools and it is in this last area that they are concentrating and they have a range of equipment that is lower in price than other manufacturers, easier to maintain and very long lasting. Several major oil companies are currently using their back wash tools in Texas, Louisiana, Denver City and Oklahoma to mention just a few of the locations.

The Backwash Valve is designed for use with Sucker Rod Pumps. This device has a number of benefits; it can reduce the amount of oil required by up to 80% when your well is hot oiled. For the first time, you can now back wash your well using the hydrostatic head in the tubing and inject corrosion inhibitors directly into the tubing, reducing the amount of expensive inhibitor required.

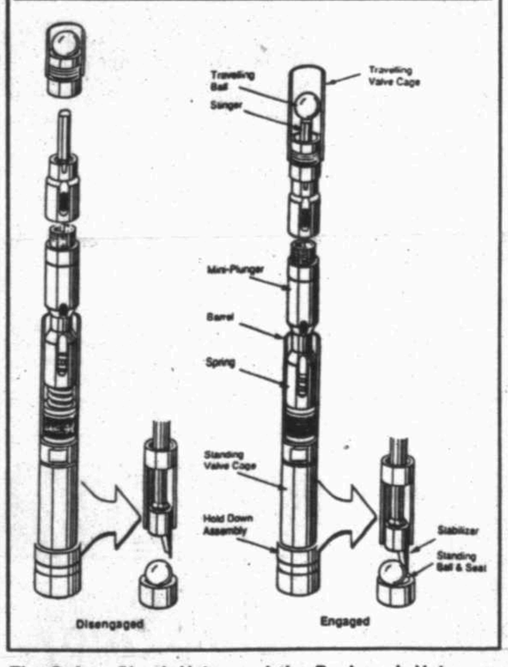

There are no depth limitations to the Backwash Valve and down time is reduced drastically helping it to turn a marginal field into a profitable one, or improve a good one.

The other tool is the Safety Check Valve. Designed to be located between the pumping tree and the stuffing box, it should be installed on wells with H_2S and those located in sensitive areas such as fields near homes, watersheds, rivers and highways. In the event of a polished rod breaking the safety check valve will will automatically close off, eliminating the possibilities of H_2S, oil, gas, CO_2 and salt escaping through the stuffing box.

A well can never to be too safe, and the Safety Check Valve can help reduce the effects of an accident, providing invaluable security to not only the well but also the public and the environment.

For more information about these effective products, call Rod-Way Specialties on (915) 561-9912 or (800) 765-9181.

BRIEFS

Poll shows opposition to BTU tax

Americans oppose BTU energy tax - A nationwide public opinion poll, conducted June 25-27 by Cambridge Reports/Research International, shows 88 percent of those surveyed believe Congress should cut spending before increasing new taxes to reduce the federal deficit. The survey, released by the American Energy Alliance (AEA), shows 57 percent of Americans oppose a broadbased BTU energy tax to reduce the deficit. AEA is a coalition of more than 2,100 companies, farm organizations, consumer groups and associations opposed to a BTU energy tax.

Some states hike gasoline tax

States increase gasoline taxes July 1 - Several states increase state gasoline excise taxes July 1, raising the average state gasoline tax to 18.2 cents per gallon. State tax increases will be seen in Connecticut, Montana, New Mexico, Ohio, and Nebraska. With the federal excise tax of 14.1 cents per gallon, plus other state taxes, motorists' average federal and state gasoline tax bill is about 34 cents per gallon.

Satellites see global cooling

Global cooling seen by satellites - recent data from the University of Alabama Earth System Science Laboratory indicate the global composite temperature in April 1993 was slightly lower than the months 10-year average. The university is working with NASA's Earth Science Lab to get accurate temperature readings for most regions of Earth. Slight global composite temperature drops also were noted in February and March.

Petroleum imports continue rise

U.S. petroleum imports (crude and products) in May were 8,390,000 barrels per day (b/d); imports same month in 1992 were 7,823,000 b/d. Total imports in May as a percentage of total U.S. domestic petroleum deliveries, 49.1%; imports as a percentage same month 1992, 47.3%. On a percentage basis Persian Gulf petroleum represented 22.7% of total U.S. petroleum imports in March: 24.2% same month, 1992.

OPEC crude averages $15.82

The average price per barrel OPEC crude, $15.82 (6/18/93), and the average refiner acquisition cost for barrel U.S. crude oil, was $18.31.

Operations begin at Synhytech

DENVER — Rentech Inc. says it has begun operations at its recently acquired Synhytech facility, the first full-scale plant to use the company's technology for converting carbon-bearing gases into liquid hydrocarbons.

Results from the first phase of the plant's operations, if favorable, are expected to enable several licensees to complete their financing and design plans and begin construction of plants using Rentech's technology.

Although the company budgeted at least $1.7 million for the phase one program. the costs are now expected to reach $2.7 million after implementing engineering work and modifications to assure the plant operates safely and reliably, according to a filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

API: New York tops in gas taxes

New York is number one when it comes to gasoline taxes, says the American Petroleum Institute.

Empire State motorists have to pony up 45.8 cents a gallon in taxes. These levies consist of the 14.1 cents-a-gallon federal excise tax and 31.7 cents in state taxes. These taxes include the state excise levy, the petroleum business tax, environmental and motor fuel quality taxes, plus county taxes.

By contrast, gasoline consumers in Georgia pay only a state excise levy of 7.5 cents a gallon and 4 percent sales tax, in addition to the federal tax of 14.1 cents a gallon.

The average state excise tax rate is 18.2 cents a gallon. Six states - Alabama, Arizona, Kansas, Mississippi, New Hampshire and South Dakota - have a tax near the average, at 18.0 cents per gallon.

All told, taxes account for nearly one-third of the pump price of a gallon of gasoline.

Public can view NM assessment

The Environmental Assessment (EA) prepared by the Bureau of Land Management analyzing the potential impacts of allowing oil and gas development within the Mudgetts Wilderness Study Area is available for public review.

An Application for Permit to Permit to Drill (APD) filed by Yates Petroleum Co. triggered the preparation of the EA.

The APD was filed on an oil and gas lease that existed prior to Congress enacting the Federal Land Policy and Management Act (FLPMA) of 1975. Under FLPMA, BLM must allow the continued development of mineral leases that existed prior to passage of the act, provided the development does not unnecessarily or unduly degrade the land and its resources.

The EA identifies potential impacts associated with the proposed development outlined by the APD. It also identifies mitigating measures and alternatives needed to allow development of the lease according to FLPMA.

Mudgetts Wilderness Study Area is 2,941 acres in size and located approximately 20 miles southwest of Carlsbad, N.M. along the north boundary of Carlsbad Caverns National Park. The study area contains other oil and gas lease developments. The Mudgetts Wilderness Study was recommended as non suitable for designation as a wilderness area when the recommendations were sent to Congress.

Requests for copies of the EA should be directed to the Carlsbad Resource Area, 620 E. Greene in Carlsbad or call (505) 887-6544.

Energy Ventures buys Ensco units

Energy Ventures, Inc. announced the acquisition of two segments of Ensco Tool & Supply, a subsidiary of Energy Service Co. The two segments are International Supply and Tubular Services.

The International Supply segment, which has been incorporated under the name International Tool & Supply ("ITS"), is a Houston based oilfield procurement and logistics company with over 35 years of operating history.

ITS provides complete purchasing services designed to meet the needs of the petroleum industry worldwide. At present its business is essentially abroad with development focus on China and the CIS.

China and the CIS are also areas of developmental focus for Energy Ventures' artificial lift subsidiary, Highland. Upon closing, ITS will become Energy Ventures' fourth oilfield subsidiary joining Grant TFW, Highland and Mallard Bay Drilling.

Tubular Services is a Channelview, Texas based threading facility for oil country tubulars. Tubular Services specializes in premium tubulars with large diameters such as 9 5/8" to 24" casing.

Premium tubulars are used primarily in deep, high pressure and high temperature wells typically associated with natural gas formations.

Upon closing, Tubular Services will become a division of Grant TFW, Energy Ventures' tubular subsidiary.

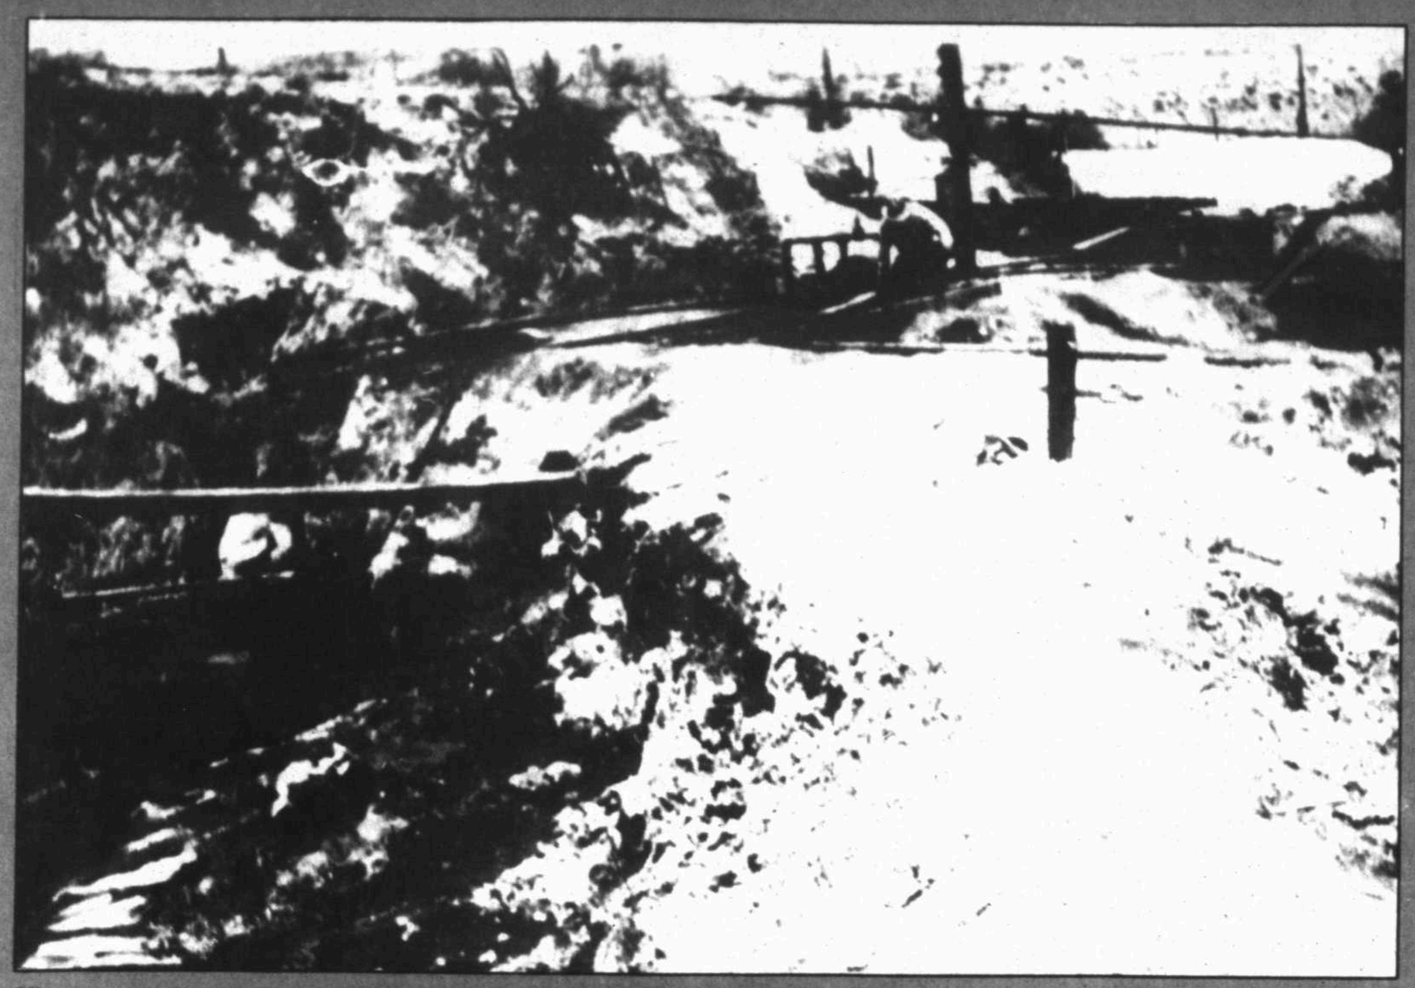

Stake in oil company reduced

Fund American Enterprises Holdings Inc. and its related investment vehicles cut its stake in San Juan Basin Royalty Trust, a Fort Worth, Texas, oil company, to 25.9 percent by selling 4 million shares for $8.75 each.

The July 7 sale leaves the Norwich, Vt., group with 12,063,976, down from almost 23 million shares representing a 48.7 percent stake, according to a filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Oil seepage from wells near the Pecos River in the Yates oilfield developed a unique situation in the Permian Basin, when a number of enterprising persons skimmed off the oil and "bootlegged" it. Oil flooded and spilled into springs, canyons and gullies near producing wells. Marland Oil Company (Later Continental Oil Company) dug a number of ditches some 30 feet wide, 15 feet deep and 300 yards long, to collect the oil; pumps were connected to the ditches through 3-inch tubing and as much as 5,000 barrels were recovered daily. In all, several million barrels of oil, none of it subject to proration, were recovered from the unexpected underground flow. The seepage was eventually stopped when the leaks in the well were located and the new casing was run. Shown here in 1928 is Marland Oil Company (Later Continental Oil Company) -- men during this unique situation.

Mobil asks to drill off Florida

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) — Mobil Exploration and Producing U.S. Inc. has asked to join Chevron USA in drilling for natural gas off the Florida Panhandle.

Chevron's plans for a single well 27 miles south of Pensacola have stirred opposition from state officials, environmentalists and tourism interests, but they are afraid Mobil's plan will present a more serious pollution threat.

Mobil has proposed as many as seven wells, some as close as 13.5 miles off the Panhandle's sugar-white beaches. Industry officials insist that exploring for gas poses no threat of a spill and that drilling wastes would be disposed of without harming the environment.

The application from Mobil has been under review by the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration since March and is expected to take 18 months before it goes to Commerce Secretary Ron Brown for a decision.

Chevron received permission to drill in the waning days of the Bush administration, but opponents view President Clinton as more sympathetic to their cause.

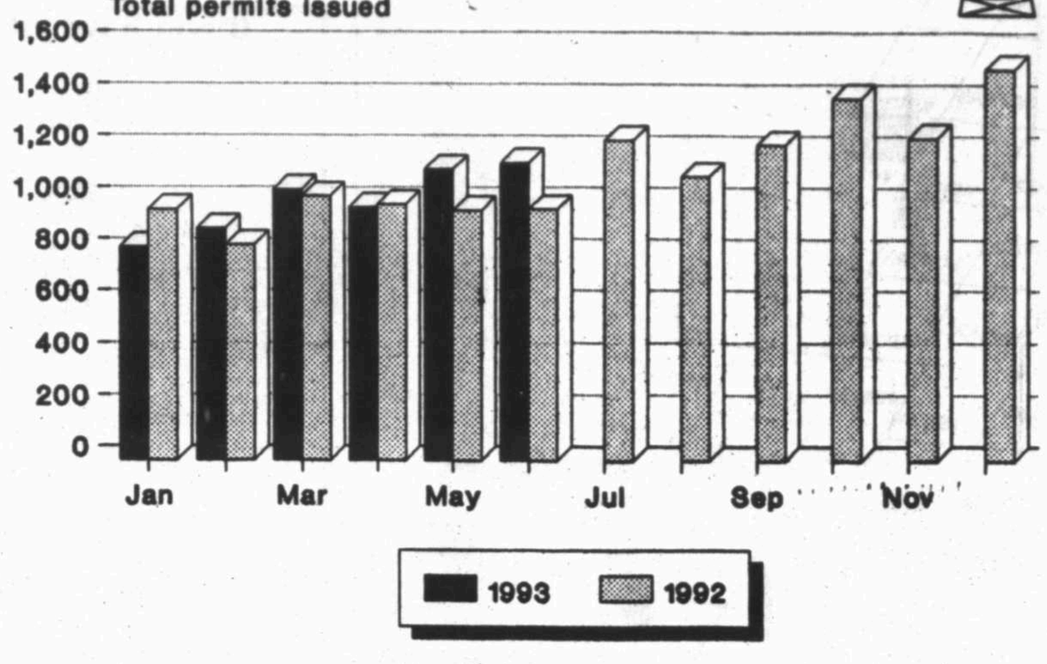

"From what we've heard, Mobil and all the other companies are waiting to see what happens with Chevron's permit," said Athan Manuel, field director of Florida Public Interest Research Group, a Tallahassee-based organization that opposes offshore drilling.

Gov. Lawton Chiles, who wants drilling banned within 100 miles of Florida's shores, had objected to the Chevron permit. The state asked Brown to review it, but he refused.

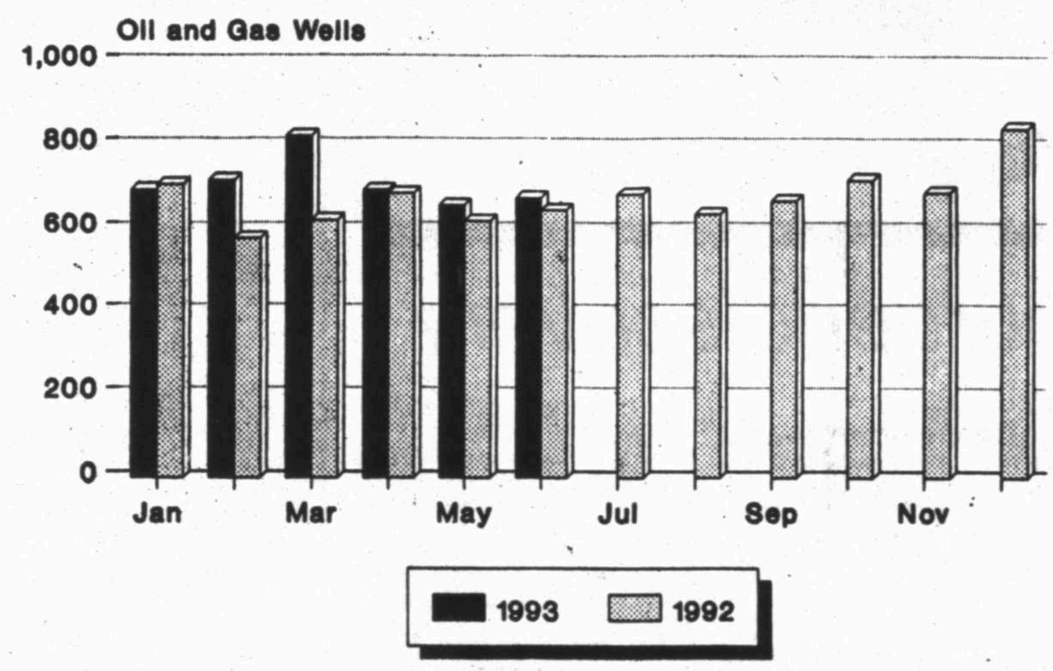

Now, FPIRG and other opponents are trying to persuade Interior Secretary Bruce Babbitt to block Chevron's well. But Assistant Interior Secretary Bob Armstrong said that would be unlikely after meeting with Chiles last week.

"Our fear is that if Babbitt allows Chevron to go through, Ron Brown will follow through to overturn the governor on Mobil," said FPIRG Executive Director Ann Whitfield.

Texas Well Completions
Monthly, 1992-1993

Texas activity

The Texas Railroad Commission issued 1,149 drilling permits in June, up from 968 in June 1992. The June total included 714 permits to drill new oil and gas tests, 44 to re-enter existing well bores, 39 to deepen existing holes, 139 to plugback existing holes, and 78 for other wells. There were 138 permits for new oil and gas holes issued in the Midland area, District 8. To date in 1993, the commission has issued 6,011 permits, a 5 percent increase from the 5,734 issued in the same period of 1992. Operators reported 252 gas, 386 oil and 36 service completions in June, compared to 177 gas, 396 oil and 72 service completions in June 1992. There were 85 oil and 4 gas completions in the Midland area. The total well completions for 1993 to date is 4,255, up 10 percent from the 3,852 recorded in 1992 year-to-date.

Cooper gets award from SPE

Cooper Oil Tool Division of Cooper Industries was selected by Petroleum Engineer International's Special Engineering Awards judging Committee as a winner of the 1993 Special Meritorius Award for Engineering Innovation for the division's new SpoolTree subsea production system.

The award was presented at the 1993 Offshore Technology Conference in Houston. This marks the 12th time over the course of the Meritorious Award for Engineering Innovation that a Cooper Oil Tool product has been selected as a winner.

The SpoolTree has a different basic configuration than a conventional tree. Compared with conventional subsea trees, the SpoolTree system offers distinct advantages in the areas of safety, operability and cost.

One of the biggest cost savings with the SpoolTree subsea completion system is that it eliminates the need for an expensive, specialized completion and workover riser system.

A contract for 14 subsea trees and wellheads was placed by Kerr-McGee Oil (U.K.) PLC for the Gryphon field on UK North Sea Block 9/18b. The total value to Cooper is in excess of $19 million.

The $400-million Gryphon field development, for which Annex B Approval was granted in December 1992 by the Department of Trade and Industry, will utilize up to 14 subsea wells tied back to a floating production system consisting of a turret-moored tanker. The water depth is 370 feet.

Gryphon is one of the latest-generation fields with reserves around 100 million barrels where use of innovative technology has made development attractive. Kerr-McGee has been working closely with Cooper Oil Tool to determine the specific requirements for the subsea tree.

The SpoolTree subsea production system, which is being launched in the North Sea, is expected to have numerous subsequent applications worldwide.

MEETINGS

PBPA to host state representatives

The Permian Basin Petroleum Association will host its monthly general membership luncheon Thursday at the Petroleum Club, beginning at 11:30 a.m.

Guest speakers will be State Representatives Tom Craddick and Buddy West, who will provide a summary of the good and bad of the recently-adjourned 73rd Texas Legislative Session.

The luncheon is open to the public. Cost is $12 per person and reservations should be made by noon Wednesday by calling 684-6345.

Outcrop gamma-ray logging WTGS topic

Tony D'Agostino will be the guest speaker at Tuesday's meeting of the West Texas Geological Society. The meeting will be at the Midland Center beginning at 11:30 a.m.

D'Agostino will present a paper he co-authored with Douglas W. Jordan, Roger M. Slatt and Robert H. Gillespie Jr. entitled "Outcrop Gamma-Ray Logging to Improve Understanding of Subsurface Well Log Correlations and Scales of Reservoir Heterogeneity."

Reliable, reproducible gamma-ray logs of outcrops have been generated by two techniques which aim to improve the visualization of inter-well-scale lateral continuity and discontinuity of strata. These techniques demonstrate the reliability and potential pitfalls of subsurface wireline log correlations.

One innovative technique was developed which uses a standard gamma-ray sonde, run from a logging truck in order to log vertical cliff or quarry faces. A second technique employs a hand-held gamma-ray scintillometer to log more easily accessible outcrops.

Examples are presented from the Jackfork Group (Pennsylvanian) of the Ouachita Mountains in Arkansas and are of logs of both laterally continuous and discontinuous turbidites in structurally complex settings.

D'Agostino has been a stratigrapher-sedimentologist at Arco Oil & Gas Co. in Houston, Plano and Midland, since 1980. His current work is focused on stratigraphy and reservoir characterization of major fields in Arco's Western District.

Cost is $7 per person and reservations should be made by Monday afternoon by calling 683-1573.

Cometra buys gas properties

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — American Cometra Inc. has said its affiliate Cometra Oil & Gas Inc. has agreed to buy more than 20,000 acres of producing gas properties from Oakridge Energy Inc. for $21.5 million.

The properties are located in Edwards and Sutton counties, Cometra said in announcing the deal. The property includes 59 producing wells, said Mark W. Young, executive vice president and chief financial officer of American Cometra.

The effective date of the acquisition is May 1, and the closing date is expected to be Sept. 1, the company said. Cometra said it plans to begin further development of the property, including workovers, recompletions and drilling, immediately after the closing.

American Cometra, based in Fort Worth, is a wholly-owned subsidiary of Belgian corporation Electrafina S.A.

Enron earnings up 21 percent

HOUSTON (AP) — Enron Corp. reported that second quarter earnings climbed 21 percent over a year ago due to rising natural gas volume.

Earnings for the quarter ended June 30 totaled $61.2 million, or 48 cents per share, compared with earnings of $50.6 million or 42 cents per share during the second quarter a year ago.

Revenue improved to $1.9 billion in the second quarter compared to $1.3 billion a year ago.

The earnings included after-tax gains of $18.4 million on the sale of Mobil stock, $3.3 million on oil and gas property sales and a loss of $0.8 million from the early retirement of debt and income of $1.4 million from discontinued operations, the company said.

"We are extremely pleased with the growth Enron continues to demonstrate," said Kenneth L. Lay, chairman and CEO of Enron Corp.

Foreign investors flood Latin American oil

■ The Latin American oil industry is finding itself awash in foreign investors.

N.Y. Times News Service

BRASILIA, Brazil — Long a crusty redoubt of nationalism, the Latin American oil industry is quietly opening to a flood of foreign investment.

In late June, attention focused briefly on the successful privatization of Argentina's state oil company, YPF SA. But beyond that sale is a broad movement in the region to attract foreign oil capital and technology.

"Oil nationalism was born in Latin America, so it is quite a turnaround," said Daniel Yergin, president of Cambridge Energy Research Associates, a consulting firm in Cambridge, Mass. "There is no question that Latin America is becoming a real hot spot for oil and gas investment and exploration."

Just how hot can be judged by the crowded waiting room outside the office of the new president of Petroperu, Emilio Zuniga.

"I have been in this job for three weeks, and I already have received representatives of 23 foreign oil companies interested in investing in Peru," said Zuniga in an interview in late June. By the end of next year, Petroperu, Peru's largest state company, is to be sold to foreign investors.

The investors are lining up throughout the region for a variety of reasons. Some want to diversify their portfolios away from the politically unstable Middle East.

For U.S. companies, transportation to the United States is generally quicker and cheaper from Latin America than from the Persian Gulf. Environmental standards are generally less stringent than in the United States. And, finally, the oil is here.

Latin America led the world in oil discoveries from 1982 to 1991, according to a recent survey of the region except for Mexico by Petroconsultants SA, a Geneva-based firm.

During that period, companies found 29.7 billion barrels of light, medium and heavy grades of oil in Latin America, or 35 percent of world discoveries. Overall, proven reserves in Latin America and the Caribbean come to 123 billion barrels, five times the level of United States reserves.

Yet in many countries in the region, the legacy of years of oil nationalism is declining production. Short of capital and modern technology, officials of state oil companies increasingly see the value of partnerships.

"The silent confrontation of the 1960s and '70s between North America and South America has eased greatly," said Gabriel Sanchez Sierra, secretary general of the Latin-American Energy Organization, a group based in Quito, Ecuador.

The opportunities in the region range from huge privatizations like the one involving YPF to equally ambitious joint production ventures and construction contracts.

Still, despite the oil rush atmosphere, obstacles remain. Bucking regional trends toward free markets and capitalist development, anti-American feelings linger in some corners. And Marxist guerrilla groups in Peru and Colombia continue to target foreign oil interests.

What's more, oil companies seeking to escape tight environmental restrictions will discover that Latin American countries are tightening traditionally lax enforcement of environmental laws.

What follows is a snapshot of industry changes in five key Latin countries.

Venezuela

Unlike Argentina's wholesale privatization, Venezuela offers what will most likely be the oil policy prototype for Latin America in the 90's — foreign companies nibbling at the edges of a state monopoly. In the case of Venezuela, the Saudi Arabia of the Americas, the edges are juicy.

Venezuela hopes to see $40 billion invested in the oil sector by the end of the decade, according to Gustavo Roosen, president of Petroleos de Venezuela SA, the state oil company.

Short on capital, the company plans to invest $22 billion. The remaining $18 billion is to come from joint ventures, including $10.4 billion in deals expected to be approved by year-end.

"We're convinced that strategic associations — that is, partnerships with international companies — are a far better alternative than indebtedness," Roosen said.

In the largest project, Exxon, Mitsubishi and Royal Dutch/Shell would join Petroleos de Venezuela to convert natural gas into liquefied natural gas for export to the United States. In two other projects, the state company would work with Total SA of France, Itochu of Japan and Conoco Inc., a unit of E.I. du Pont de Nemours.

Mexico

With national control of the oil industry exerting an almost mystical hold over Mexican politics, officials in Latin America's second-largest oil-producing nation maintain a strong nationalist front.

"Ownership and control of oil will remain unalterably in the hands of Mexicans," President Carlos Salinas de Gortari said last March in a speech marking the 55th anniversary of the expropriation of foreign oil companies in Mexico.

But the monopoly is loosening slightly around the edges. Next year, Petroleos Mexicanos, or Pemex, plans to start selling some of its 60 petrochemical plants.

In other departures, foreign companies are financing a $1.4 billion refinery and have started drilling dozens of offshore oil wells. Pemex will lease the refinery and wells until construction costs are repaid.

Colombia

Buoyed by a sea of oil that represents the largest find in the Americas since the discovery in Alaska's Prudhoe Bay in 1968, Colombia is embarking on an oil boom that could lead it to rival Mexico as a major source of imported oil for the United States.

The new find is Cusiana, a field of 2 billion barrels of low-sulfur oil that officially started pumping June 29. Half the oil is to go to Ecopetrol, Colombia's state company, and the rest is being divided among three foreign partners: British Petroleum, Total and the Triton Energy Corporation of Dallas.

To raise production to 600,000 barrels a day by 1997, the four companies are to invest $7 billion. In a measure of foreign confidence in the field, Ecopetrol successfully offered a $150 million Eurobond issue in late June, the first ever for a Colombian company.

With only one third of Colombia's oil-bearing area explored, Ecopetrol will accept a new round of exploration bids in October. So far, the state company has 86 joint ventures with foreign companies

But while Colombia's guerrillas believe the government is giving away the nation's riches, many foreign oil companies complain that the government is driving such hard bargains that it may kill the golden goose.

"Other countries are offering more attractive economic conditions," Stephen Newton, president of Occidental of Colombia, said in a recent interview with a Colombian newsweekly, El Corredor.

For every barrel of oil pumped by Occidental, he said, 87 percent of revenues over operating costs go to Colombia in the form of royalties, taxes and production sharing with Ecopetrol.

Brazil

Latin America's largest nation has the region's most conservative oil policies. With the exception of foreign-owned gas stations, the entire oil sector is a Government monopoly.

But, in contrast to Mexico and Venezuela, Brazil imports about half of its oil. Petrobras, the state oil company, has little hope of reaching an often stated goal of rendering Brazil self-sufficient in oil in the '90s.

To hold down inflation, politicians routinely depress domestic gasoline prices. Since 1980, this policy has deprived Petrobras of $25 billion. Capital expenditures are now almost half the level of a decade ago, and 200 development plans are sitting on shelves.

Focusing on the Achilles heel of oil imports, Shell is coordinating a business group to lobby Brazil's Congress to loosen the oil monopoly. The move is well timed: starting in October, Congress will have the authority, by simple majority vote, to amend the nation's Constitution, which prohibits foreign investment in the industry. No amendments are now permitted.

A recent survey found that just 40 percent of members of Congress favor keeping the state monopoly intact.

Until the laws change, the only major area open to foreign participation is a $2 billion, 2,100-mile gas pipeline that is to be built from fields in eastern Bolivia, which hold six trillion cubic feet of natural gas, to Brazil's "industrial triangle" — the cities of Sao Paulo, Rio de Janeiro and Belo Horizonte.

Tenneco and British Gas have shown interest in forming a consortium to construct the pipeline and thermo-electrical plants along the route. Pressuring Brazil to open the monopoly, multilateral lenders like the World Bank and the Interamerican Development Bank have indicated that they will not help finance the gas line if the project remains under Petrobras majority control.

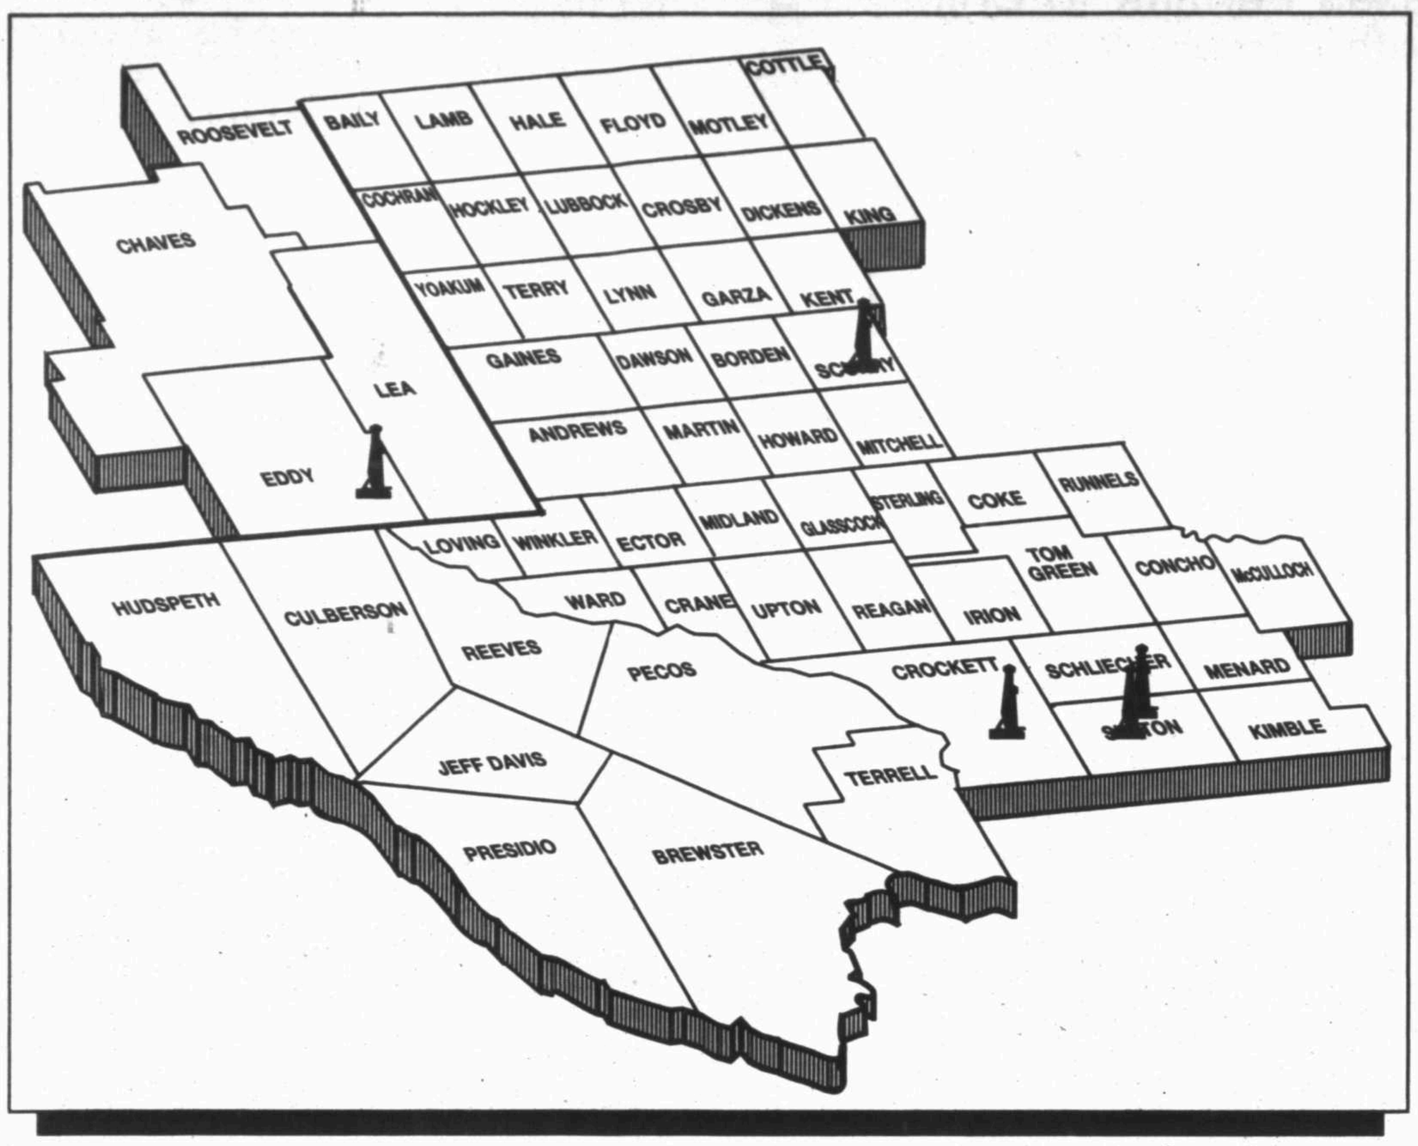

Peru

One of the most radical turnarounds in Latin America's oil patch is in Peru.

With nationalizations in the '70s and legal tangles in the '80s, Peru long ago made it clear that foreign oil companies were not welcome. Paying a price for hostility, Peruvians watched production and proven reserves drop in half during the '80s. By 1987, Peru, once an

Conference on NGVs scheduled

The 11th annual conference on natural gas vehicles (NGV's), sponsored by the American Gas Association and the Natural Gas Vehicle Coalition, will be held at the Radisson Hotel in Denver, Sept. 12-15.

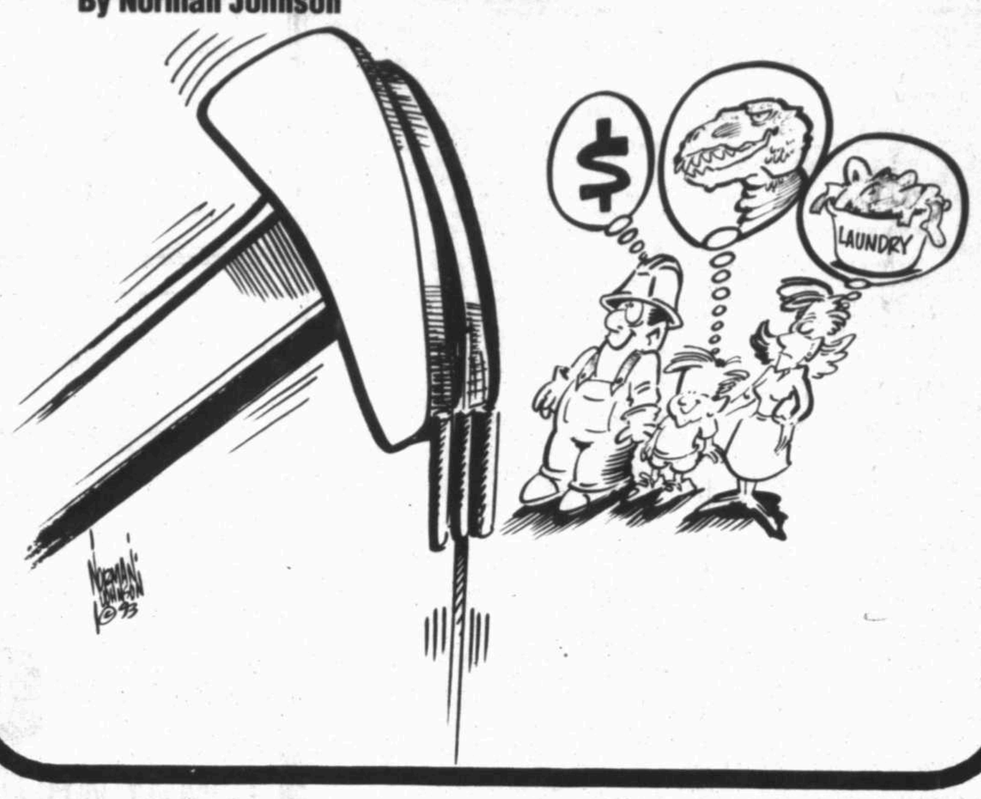

Appropriately for a conference held in the mile-high city, the theme for this year's conference is "NGVs: It's High Time."

Presentation will cover such topics as market development, equipment standards, fuel accessibility, technological advances, applications for liquefied natural gas, government programs, legislative mandates for alternative fuels, state implementation plans for compliance with clean air legislation, U.S. automakers and their NGV programs, mechanics' training, service quality assurance, NGV resale and more.

Equipment Day on Sept. 14 at Red Rocks Community College will feature a display of state-of-the-art NGV technology and applications, and will offer conference participants the opportunity to test drive a variety of NGVs.

Fuel for thought.

Dairy farmers and oilmen both work hard to bring you a gallon of quality goods. At a fair price.

But it may surprise you to learn that the average price of gasoline is still much less per gallon than most other products. Like milk ($2.75), orange juice ($4.50), or cola ($2.75). And gasoline prices have increased less in the past 10 years than any of these.

Americans still pay the lowest price-per-gallon of 17 leading nations, while our oil companies still have one of the lowest retail profit margins-only 2 cents a gallon.

When pump prices do rise, it's often due to factors beyond the oil companies' control. Like Saddam Hussein. Or the fact that the U.S. imports 50% of its crude oil. And, unfortunately, it may be that way until the cows come home. Or Congress formulates a rational energy policy.

Recover very low vapor volumes at a profit

STORAGE TANK EMISSIONS → VAPOR JET™ VAPOR RECOVERY SYSTEM → GAS SALES

Strict government air quality standards now regulate hydrocarbon vapor emissions from oil production storage facilities. For many low volume vapor producers, compliance has become a significant factor in their profitability—or even survival.

To meet air standards, the vapors must be recovered. But the low volumes captured for gas sales often do not justify the cost of a conventional compressor-based vapor recovery unit (VRU).

The patented Vapor Jet system is a simple, cost-efficient and virtually maintenance-free alternative to conventional VRUs. Its ability to handle very low vapor volumes at a very low cost makes it ideally suited for marginal production facilities. In many cases, the system will allow the continued operation of sites where the cost of compliance with air quality standards might otherwise have been prohibitive.

Compliance doesn't have to be an expense. At an operating cost of just dollars a day, the Vapor Jet system can pay for itself with recovered gas sales.

It is easily installed at about 50 percent of a VRU's cost. And with its trouble-free design and minimal maintenance cost, the Vapor Jet system performs at 25- to 50-percent of a VRU's operating expense. For more information call Conoco Specialty Products, 1-800-962-5882.

ENVIRONMENTAL CONCERNS?

Let The Backwash Valve and Safety Check Valve ease your mind.

For the first time an operator can mechanically open the traveling and standing valves in a sucker rod pump without the need for a workover rig. Increase profits by lowering the cost of pulling jobs and protect the environment by avoiding pulling a wet string. If the rods part during operation, the weight of the sucker rods sit down on the Backwash Valve assembly and open the pump. You pull a dry string. The valve can also be used to hot oil and chemically treat down the tubing.

The Safety Check Valve is located between the Pumping Tee and the Sutffing Box. In the event the Polish Rod breaks, the Safety Check Valve will automatically close off, eliminating the possibilities of oil and salt water spillage and CO_2 or H_2S gas escaping through the Stuffing Box.

FERC seeks to simplify oil pipeline rate rules

Staff report

The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission has proposed a rule designed to streamline its oil pipeline rate regulations, as mandated by the National Energy Act of 1992 (Act of 1992).

The Act requires the Commission to establish a new "simplified and generally applicable" methodology for determining oil pipeline rates.

The Commission proposes establishing an indexing methodology as its general approach to regulating oil pipeline rates. The index would determine the maximum rate an oil pipeline could charge. Pipelines may also set, at any time, a rate below the maximum ceiling rate produced by the index.

The Commission proposes that the indexing methodology be based on the Gross Domestic Product-Implicit Price Deflator. The Commission stated that the indexing methodology would meet the statutory criteria requiring simplicity and general applicability and satisfy the criteria that rates charged be "just and reasonable" under the Interstate Commerce Act.

The proposed rule follows a review of public comments filed in response to a March 18, 1993, staff analysis of alternatives for regulating future oil pipeline rates. The proposed rule adopts many of the staff's recommendations.

— It would allow pipelines to depart from the indexing methodology and propose other methodologies such as rates based on a company's cost of service or market-based rates in markets where the pipeline can demonstrate that it lacks market power. Pipelines proposing alternative methodologies must justify a departure from indexing.

For market-based rates, the Commission would allow companies to show on a case-specific basis that they lack significant market power. The Commission would encourage pipelines to submit market-rate proposals that would include streamlined procedures to identify their competitive markets and implement market-based rates.

For the cost of service methodology, a pipeline would be required to show that, due to extraordinary circumstances, use of the index in a particular instance would fail to result in a just and reasonable rate within the meaning of the Interstate Commerce Act. The cost of service alternative is proposed as a temporary rate established under the cost of service alternative would be governed by the index.

— The proposed rule would also include procedural revisions. Among these, the Commission proposes abolishing the Oil Pipeline Board and will process suspension orders directly.

Pipeline customers may object to rate changes by filing protests with the Commission.

LATIN: Less nationalistic

exporter, had started importing crude oil.

The turnaround came after Alberto K. Fujimori, a free-market pragmatist, became president in 1990. Fujimori immediately worked to create a pro-business environment by cutting government controls and adopting one of Latin America's most liberal foreign investment codes.

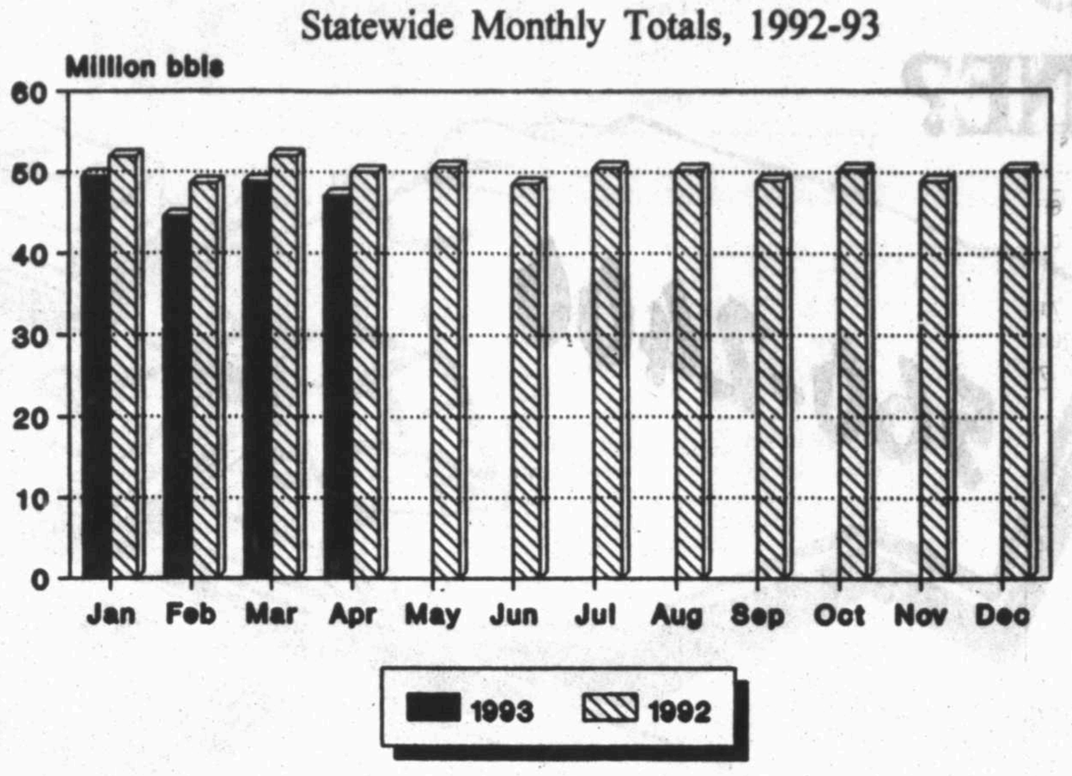

Since 1990, 14 foreign oil companies have signed exploration or production contracts and 14 more are expected to sign by the end of this year.

"Foreign companies are waiting in line," said Roger Alderson, general manager for Simon Petroleum Technology, part of a U.S. consortium that signed an offshore exploration contract last month.

Further whetting foreign interest, Peru's Congress is expected to approve an oil investment bill this month that provides for international arbitration of disputes and a stable tax regime, among other things.

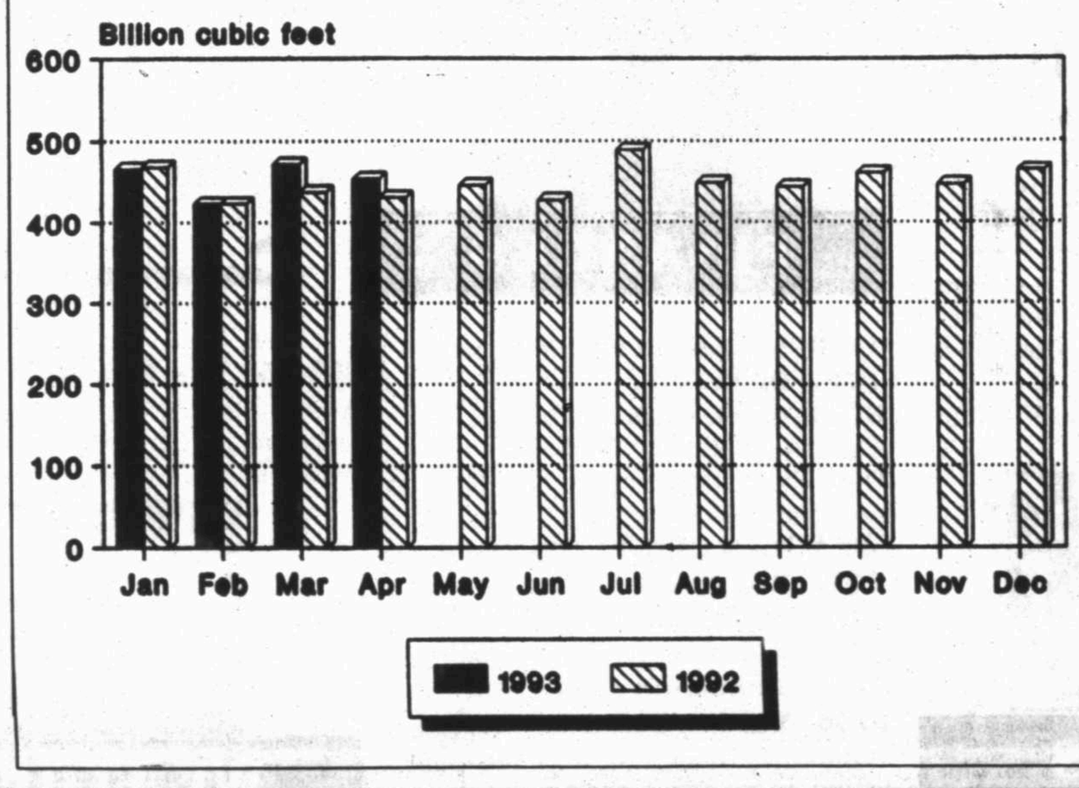

In a final blow to the old order, the Fujimori government plans to follow Argentina's example by privatizing Petroperu.

"Peru is now one of Latin America's most attractive nations in the oil sector," said Sanchez of the Energy Organization.

Texas production

Texas preliminary April crude oil production averaged 1,569,167 barrels daily, down from the 1,665,853 barrels daily average of April 1992. The preliminary Texas oil production figure for April is 47,075,015 barrels, down from 49,975,586 barrels last April. Texas oil and gas wells produced 453,239,435 Mcf of gas in preliminary April production, up 5.03 percent compared to April 1992 gas production of 430,399,124 Mcf.

Eureka Springs Historical Museum is itself a restored Victorian building.

Christ of the Ozarks statue near Eureka Springs, Ark., graces the grounds of The Great Passion Play which is presented each year.

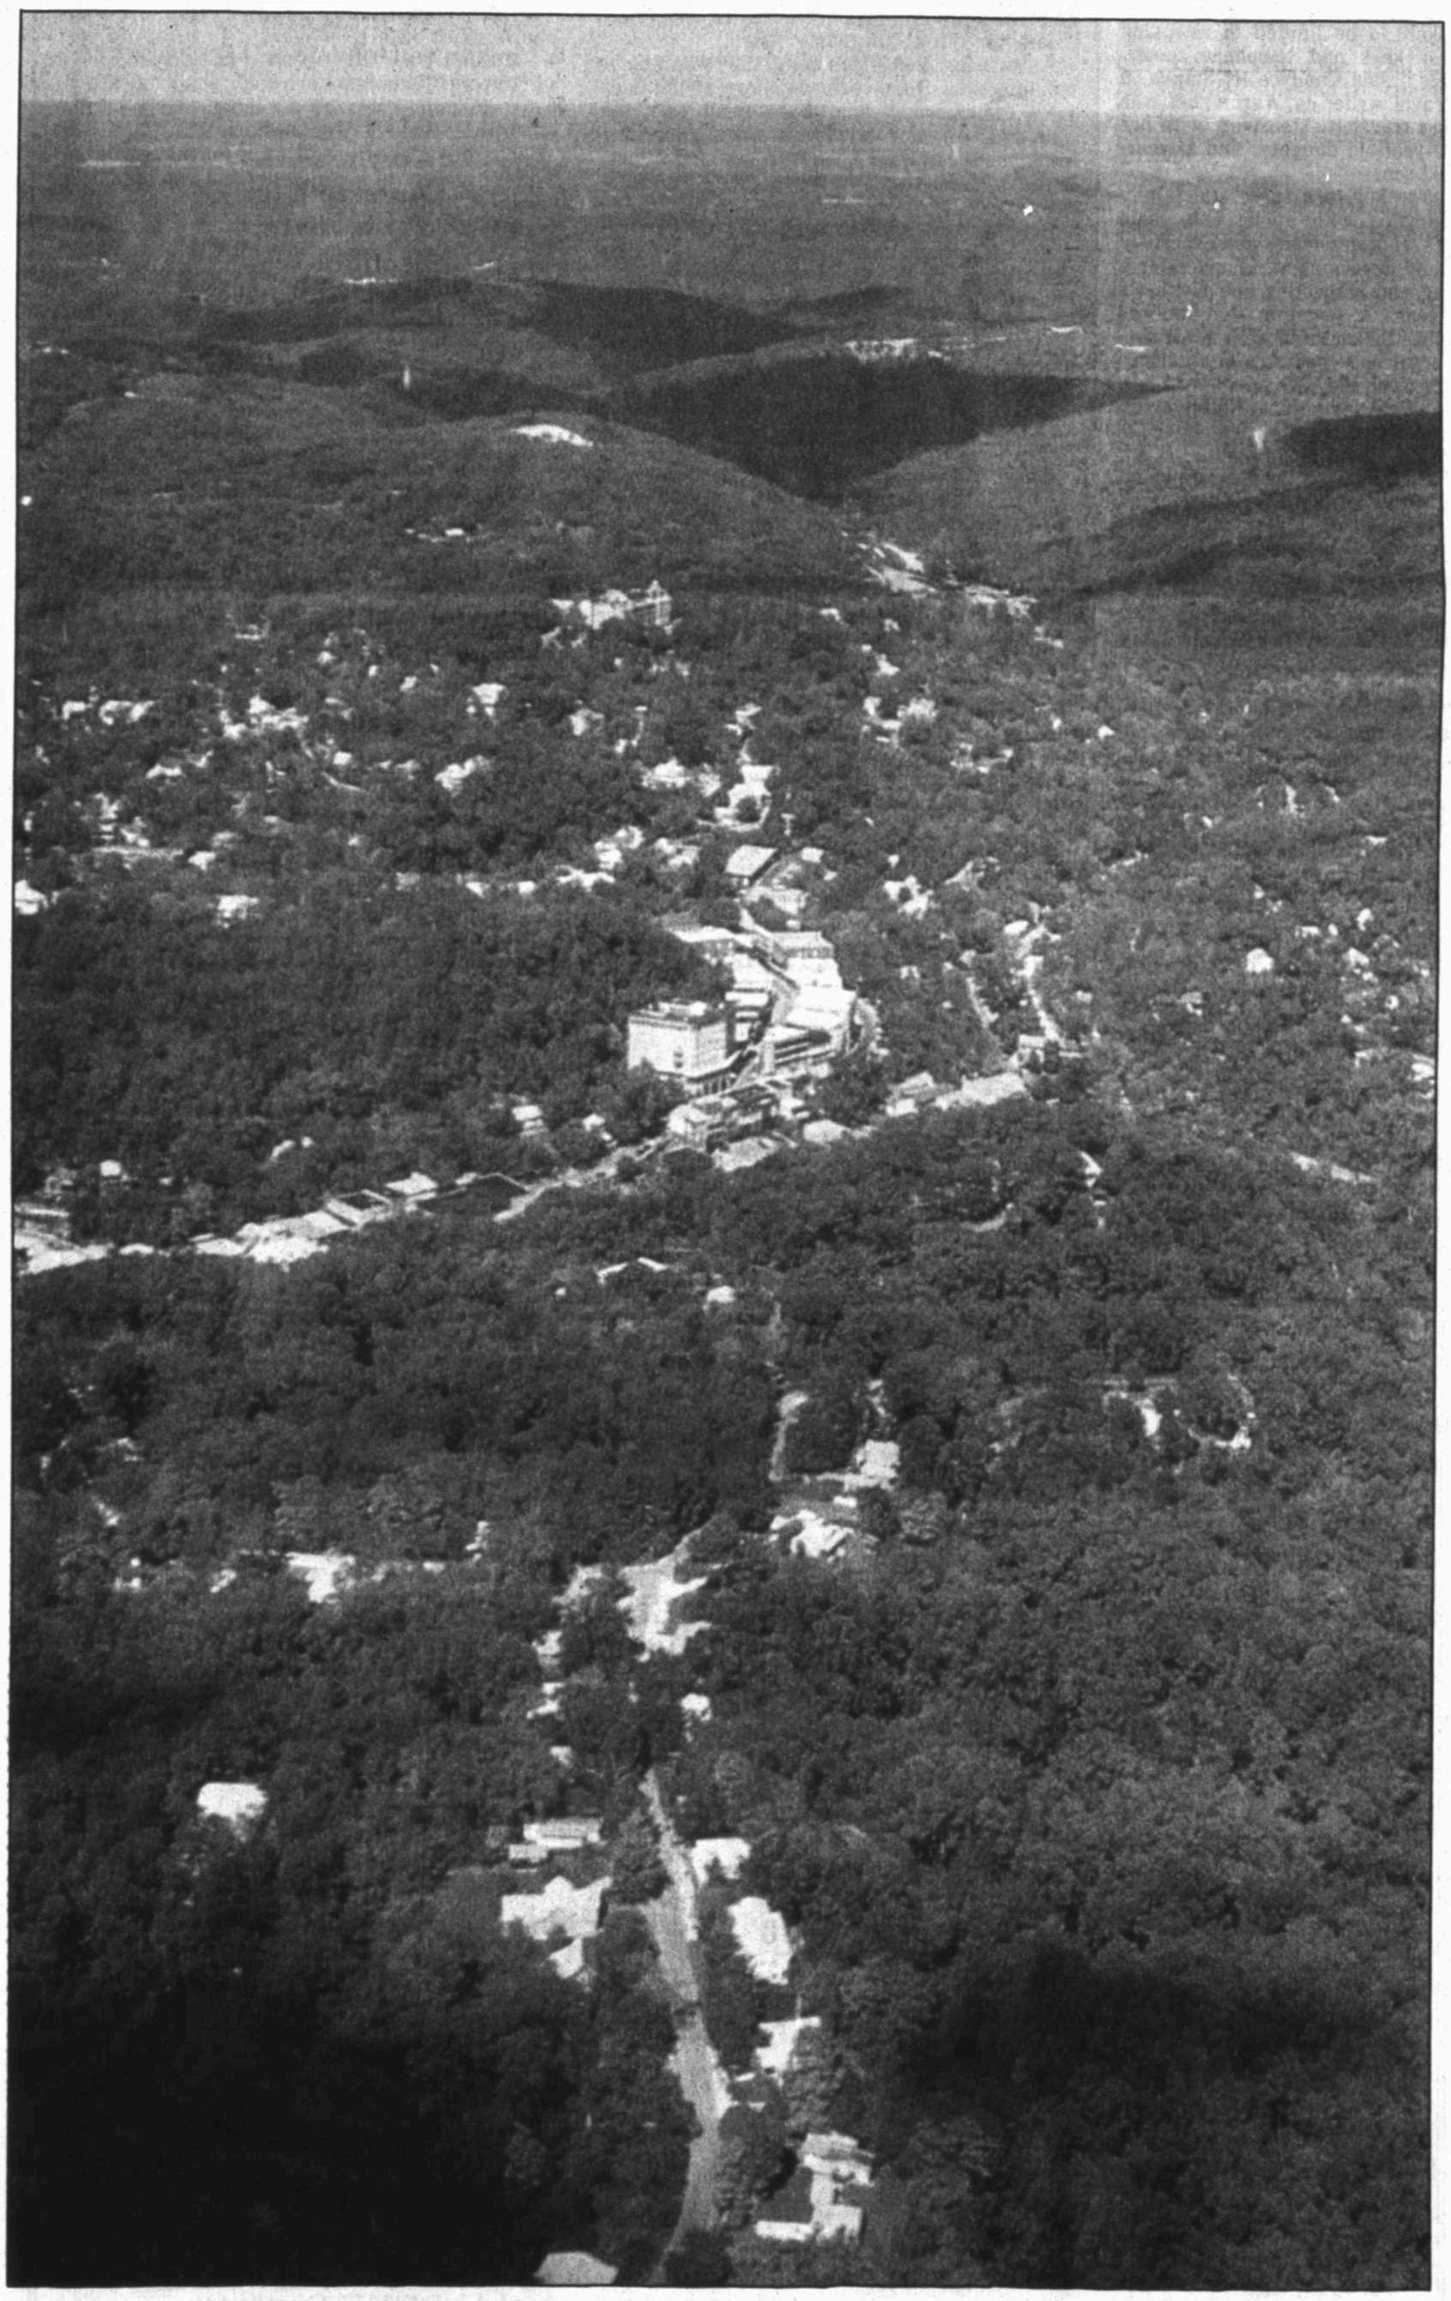

A Victorian atmosphere is preserved in Eureka Springs, Ark., with preserved and restored homes, such as the one shown in this photo, and even a trolley.

EUREKA SPRINGS, Ark. — Arkansas has been in the news a lot lately, but before there was a Razorback football team, before there was a President Bill Clinton, before there was a Hillary or a Chelsea or even a Socks — there was a Eureka Springs.

A beautiful little Victorian village (population about 2,000) that was built on the steep hills and valleys of the Arkansas Ozarks, Eureka Springs was named after the waters that brought it fame. In fact, the area was famous for its springs long before it was settled. According to information from the Eureka Springs Historical Museum, Native Americans visited the site for centuries before white settlers ever set foot in the region.

The natural springs the town was named for — and according to some sources, there are nearly 65 of them — were reported to have certain healing properties that made drinking of and bathing in these waters a healthy thing to do. According to the Historical Museum, Eureka Springs was "founded on the belief the springs would cure human ills."

In 1856 Dr. Alvah Jackson was the first white man to learn of the springs' "therapeutic qualities," the information goes on. Of course, Native Americans had known about these qualities for generations.

From the late 1800s to the early years of the Twentieth Century, Eureka Springs was a popular resort area, especially for those who sought cures from the water. According to information from the World Book Encyclopedia, Arkansas is the home of many such springs. "Some of the springs contain minerals. Many, however, are known for their purity and their lack of minerals."

Today, however, many of the visitors to Eureka Springs are there to enjoy the atmosphere and the sights, rather than to seek healing waters.

And the area is rich in sights. Nestled in the Ozark region of northwestern Arkansas, Eureka Springs hugs the hills and offers visitors a peek at the past. Victorian-style buildings that are still in use as homes and offices grace much of the town. The three-story Historical Museum itself is housed in the Samuel Calif (or Califf — the spelling varies) family building which was built a century or so ago; the Courthouse has housed government offices for decades; even one of the local taverns has a historical marker. In fact, according to information from the Eureka Springs Chamber of Commerce, the entire downtown area of Eureka Springs "is listed on the National Register of Historic Places."

For those who want to sample Eureka Springs the way it was, there's the Palace Hotel and Bath House, which the Chamber of Commerce describes as "The Ozarks' only historic operational bathhouse, furnished throughout with genuine antiques for a delightful Victorian atmosphere. The finest in hydrotherapeutic baths, steam treatments, massages, body wraps and tanning sessions." Well, almost the way it was — Victorians probably didn't indulge in too many tanning sessions.

Eureka Springs and the surrounding area are home to some of the most varied attractions to be found in one location, according to the Chamber of Commerce. In addition to the historical architecture, the area is home to the Anita Bryant Theatre ("America's sweetheart performing a dynamic show that features her singing some of the greatest songs of our time..."), The Great Passion Play, "depicting the life, death, burial, resurrection and ascension of Jesus Christ;" at 10-foot section of the Berlin Wall on display at The Great Passion Play with Psalm 23 lettered on it by an East Berliner who lived behind the wall; Castle and Museum at Inspiration Point; Dinosaur World ("Over 100 life-sized prehistoric figures. Dennis the Menace Park rededicated

By Marilyn McKnight Harrison

It was a trip down memory lane for many and a high ol' time for the younger set at the rededication of Dennis the Menace Park last Sunday afternoon.

McKnight-Harrison

The reopening of the park, after a nine-month revitilization project, took place 34 years to the day since the park originally opened on July 11, 1959. Sunday's crowd included many adults who played in the park as youngsters and returned for the reopening with their children and in some cases, their grandchildren.

Clowns and Juice the Moose (the Midland Angels' mascot) also were on hand for the occasion, and multi-colored balloons added to the festive atmosphere.

Following the rededication and ribbon-cutting ceremonies, the stampede began into the park. Immediately, long lines formed, both in front of the new lion-shaped drinking fountain (replacing a similar one, which had been quenching children's thirsts for years) and the main piece of play equipment, known for want of a better term as "The Thing."

Among those present, who had a part in the park's original completion, were Charles Campbell, former director of the Midland City Parks and Recreation Department, and his wife, Katherine, who came out from Fort Worth; Clyde Reyes, who was superintendent of parks at the time, and Betty (Mrs. Clem) George, who was a member of the Parks Board.

Everyone has his or her own memories of the park. Chuck Swallow, now assistant director of Community Services for the Parks and Recreation Department, remembers the 1959 opening well, even down to the fact that he was sitting on the bumper of a 1956 Dodge during ceremonies much like those Sunday, and like today's children, wanting the speeches to end and the play to begin. Chuck's wife, a hometown girl, the former Nancy Brimberry, also played in the park as a child, and now they bring their daughter, Meredith.

Our 21-year-old son, Tim Harrison, a true conservative who does not like change, was disappointed in the alteration of "The Thing," although he realizes it was necessitated by today's safety standards. He has fond memories of riding his tricycle on the walkways, of playing in the wading pools (now converted to sand piles) and of racing toy cars hither and yon.

The park has been the site of many a child's birthday party, and Link Grimes, now a father himself, recalls those parties fondly.

Linda Bond, who was there for the original opening, was seen Sunday with her mother, Peggy (Mrs. Bill) Thorsen; her son, Danny Partain; her niece, Emily Thorsen, and several little friends. Linda said high school students congregated there in the evening until signs were posted, which disallowed admission after dark.

The renovation was clearly a "labor of love" by those who spearheaded the project. The park has been well used and well attended throughout the years and is beautifully spruced up — definitely worth a drive over to Garfield Street and Indiana Avenue to see the results.

VISITS WITH LOVED ONES often provide an opportunity to slow the hectic pace and to enjoy gracious entertaining. Such was Midlander Linda Faulkner's experience during a recent convalescent period.

Linda's niece, Carlanda Radig of Las Vegas, Nev., honored her with a tea party at Tricia's Tearoom inside the Red Rooster Antique Emporium of Las Vegas. Close friends arrived to find an array of clothing and jewelry of Victorian vintage ready for their choosing to wear during the party. Owner-hostess Pat Schell created an elegant mood for the event with her exquisite antique china and linens and lavish teatime refreshments.

Linda and her husband, R.L., also were entertained by Carlanda and her husband, Lee Williamson, with tours to Zion National Park in Utah and Mount Charleston in Nevada.

In addition, the foursome enjoyed Dolly Parton's performance at the Mirage and Slash at the Riviera. At the Mirage, their table was next to that of Elizabeth Taylor; her husband, Larry Fortensky, and party.

The trip, which Linda says "was indeed a wonderful gift of love and a healing time for me after several surgeries and weeks of treatment," was made possible by Carlanda and Lee, Karen and Lee Mitchell of Dallas and Clift King and Fred Turner, both of San Antonio.

AND ON A FINAL NOTE: Jazz lovers, don't forget this afternoon's Jam Session, scheduled for two o'clock at the Odessa Hilton. The event, sponsored by the West Texas Jazz Society, will feature some of the finest jazz and blues musicians in this part of the country. It is open to all interested persons at no charge.

Marilyn McKnight-Harrison is social columnist for the Reporter-Telegram.

Plan vacation for whole family

By Lawrence Kutner
N.Y. Times News Service

For some families with teenagers, taking a vacation together is an exercise in frustration for both generations. For others, it's an opportunity to rebuild relationships and discover things about one another away from the day-to-day stresses of home.

"Unless you travel with your teen-agers, your time with them is likely to be limited to swapping car keys and telephone messages," said Candyce H. Stapen, a travel writer in Washington who has traveled extensively with her 11-year-old daughter and 23-year-old son.

The key to a successful family vacation with adolescents, said travel professionals and experts in child development, is understanding and respecting one another's needs. A vacation that worked when the children were in elementary school may turn into a disaster when they are teen-agers.

"What the parents find interesting may bore a teen-ager to death," said Dr. Peter A. Wish, the director of the New England Institute of Family Relations in Framingham, Mass., and the father of a 17-year-old daughter.

The last thing many adolescents want to do on vacation is sightsee. Only the rare 14-year-old can tolerate day after day of uninterrupted art museums or beautiful vistas.

"If they have to sit in a car for hours, they're likely to plug into things that isolate them from you, like a Walkman or a portable video game," said Dorothy Jordon, the managing director of "Travel With Your Children," a specialized book and newsletter publisher in Manhattan.

Another important issue is independence. Adolescence is a time for children to experiment with being less reliant on their parents.

Family vacations offer teenagers an opportunity to experiment with new levels of independence and self-reliance. Sports like wind surfing or rock climbing allow them to test the limits of their growing bodies.

Peer relationships are much more important for adolescents than for younger children. Teenagers will seek out and want to spend time with people their own age.

This combination of needs and opportunities can make parents worry about their teen-agers' safety. Yet, if parents keep a tight rein on them, adolescents will probably rebel.

Some cruise lines, resorts and hotels have responded by developing programs for teen-agers that complement their supervised activities for younger children. At their best, these programs offer enough structure and supervision to please the parents and enough independence, adventure and socializing to satisfy the adolescents.

Julie Halpern, the director of special markets for Hyatt Hotels Corporation in Chicago, said her company introduced "Rock Hyatt," a set of special programs for teen-agers, in 1992 after they noticed that families who had used their children's programs were going other places when those children were adolescents. "We see teen-agers as future business customers," she said.

Still, the mere presence of organized activities and special facilities for adolescents doesn't mean all children will find them attractive. "Many programs at hotels and resorts claim to be for children 13 to 17, but generally few teen-agers over 15 show up," Ms. Stapen said. "They don't want to be with the younger kids, even though they might have a good time."

Travel with teens takes planning

N.Y. Times News Service

If you're going on vacation with teen-agers, one of the best things you can do is get them involved in the planning from the start. This addresses their need to be recognized as being more mature than when they were younger. For example, if they're aware of your budget and know how much things cost, they're less likely to ask for things you can't afford.

"Also, when things go wrong, they won't be as unhappy since they've made more of the decisions themselves," said Dorothy Jordon, the managing director of "Travel With Your Children," a specialized book and newsletter published in Manhattan, and the mother of two teenage boys.

Here are some other things to consider:

■ Look into package plans, especially if your child likes sports. An inexpensive room is a false economy if the only thing your teen-ager wants to do is zoom around on jet skis at $35 an hour. "You can go broke keeping a teen-ager happy with sports," said Candyce H. Stapen, a travel writer in Washington. "A package plan also means you don't turn into the bad guy who has to keep saying 'No!'"

■ Be considerate of one another's privacy and schedules. One way to do this is to rent two adjacent rooms or a small suite. That way you're not being awakened at 1 a.m. when your teen-ager comes home from the disco or late movie, and you're not waking him up at 7 a.m. when you get up for a round of golf. Many hotels will offer discounts on a second room or a suite to families with teen-agers.

■ Don't push teen-agers to do early-morning activities. Teen-agers are notoriously late sleepers. Pushing them to do things early in the morning that they're not especially excited about may leave them grumpy for the rest of the day. "Expect to have dinner but not breakfast with your kids," Ms. Jordon said.

■ If you're a single parent, look for communal dining. You may see very little of a teen-ager who gets swept up in his own activities. "You can end up eating every meal by yourself, which can be a very lonesome experience if that isn't what you wanted," Ms. Jordon said. Most cruise ships and resorts will allow you to share a table with others. They'll also allow you to discreetly change your seating.

EUREKA: Surrounding area offers varied attractions

King Kong."); Eureka Springs Gardens; Frog Fantasies ("Over 50 years of frog collecting."); Gay Nineties Button and Doll Museum; Hammond Museum of Bells; Miles Musical Museum ("An extensive collection of musical instruments including band organs, nickelodeons, player pianos, music boxes, calliopes, reed organs, stringed instruments, etc."); Ozark Mountain Hoe-Down; and Quigley's Castle ("The Ozarks' strangest dwelling has suspended rooms with two-story tropical plants. A unique rock, arrowhead and butterfly collection beyond imagination. Beautifully designed and built with rocks covering four walls.")

The area is old and, in large part, historically accurate and preserved. Unfortunately, so is the road through town. Perhaps the least nerve-racking way to see Eureka Springs is to park and walk or ride the trolley. Five routes (color coded for riders' convenience) can take visitors to most of the sites the area has to offer.

Xeriscape: Conserve water; grow lush, lovely landscape

By Deborah A. Benge

Benge

Even though we've been blessed with wonderful, timely rainfall this year, the need to conserve water is more important than ever. The best way to have a beautiful landscape and still conserve water is by using Xeriscape principles.

Xeriscape is a trademark term that simply means "water-efficient landscapes." Xeriscape does not mean zeroscape. Many people have the misconception that it means large expanses of gravel, a few cacti and yucca. It can be as beautiful and lush-appearing as any landscape without the extravagant water use that is needed to maintain many traditional landscapes.

Xeriscape is comprised of seven interrelated principles that will result in a water-efficient landscape. These seven principles are:

■ A good design and plan: Any beautiful, functional landscape begins with a good design. Get your plans down on paper to avoid mistakes and to incorporate Xeriscape principles from the beginning. Include existing structures, property lines, utility lines, east and west sun exposures and other factors that need to be considered in your landscape development. A good landscape should be comprised of roughly one-third hardscaped areas, one-third landscaped areas and one-third turf grass or ground cover areas.

■ Soil preparation: Proper soil preparation can make or break your water efficient landscape plan. Soils should be improved by adding organic matter which will increase the amount of water it can hold for plant use. Any soil type will benefit from added organic matter, especially some of our sandy soils. A rule of thumb is four to six inches of organic material thoroughly tilled into the soil.

■ Plant selection: A very important step in Xeriscape is plant selection. Plants must be selected that are water-efficient. This again doesn't mean all cacti and yucca. Trees, shrubs, ground covers and vines should be selected on how well they grow in the Permian Basin and how much water they need to grow. A list of recommended landscape plants can be picked up at the extension office to help you make these decisions.

■ Mulches: Using mulches in all landscaped beds and other areas where there is bare ground will conserve soil moisture. Mulches are layers of non-living materials covering the soil surface around plants. Good sources of mulches include pine bark, compost, wood chips, pine needles, composted gin trash, pecan shells and inorganic mulches like gravel. Mulches do much more than conserve soil moisture. They also reduce salt accumulation on soil surfaces, inhibit weed growth, moderate soil temperatures and provide an attractive surface.

■ Prudent turf grass use: Unfortunately, many of our home landscapes are made up of mostly turf areas, with turf grass being one of our biggest water users. Turf is an important part of a landscape, but the total amount of grass area can be reduced by increasing the hardscaped areas (decks and patios) and landscaped bed areas. Turf species selection can have a big bearing on the amount of water used. Buffalo grass, common bermuda grass and selections of bermuda are very water-efficient turf grasses. Tall fescue St. Augustine grasses can use tremendous amounts of water and should be avoided or used in small areas.

■ Efficient irrigation methods: The goal of any irrigation system is to give plants a sufficient amount of water without waste. By zoning an irrigation system, grass areas can be watered separately and more frequently than ground covers, shrubs and trees. Both sprinkler and drip irrigation can be incorporated to achieve water conservation in the landscape.

■ Appropriate maintenance: This simply means using maintenance techniques that are water efficient. For example, applying fertilizer at the proper time of year and using slow-release nitrogen or organic fertilizer for more water efficiency. Mowing your grass at the proper height will also save water; mowing too short not only uses more water but also weakens the grass.

It is our responsibility as stewards of the land to be conservative with one of our most valuable resources — water. Xeriscape is an excellent way we can reduce water use but still have beautiful landscapes. If you would like more information on Xeriscape principles, contact the county extension service.

Bathing has ancient history

Associated Press

Bathing has come a long way. As early as 3000 B.C., some homes in the Indus Valley of Pakistan were equipped with bathrooms. However, it wasn't until the 19th century that Americans made bathing a regular part of their lives, reports Kitchen and Bath magazine.

Shifting attitudes, increasing medical knowledge, and advancing technology account for the changes that led to our conception of the bathroom as a luxurious private sanctuary from daily pressures.

Ancient Greeks enjoyed public baths as much for social as hygienic reasons. Continued by the Romans, public bathing took on a decidedly sensuous nature, including perfumed massages and steamings. The addition of gardens, art galleries, libraries and markets transformed the baths into social clubs.

Early Christians, mortified by nudity and self-indulgence, saw the baths as pools of licentiousness. Because some even considered filth a penance, bathing became uncommon during the early Middle Ages. England's King John bathed only three times a year, before major religious festivals; his subjects undoubtedly bathed less frequently.

Still, the practice survived. Apparently the idea that "cleanliness is next to godliness" had taken root, as several monasteries of the late Middle Ages boasted baths with warm running water. Outdoor public baths enjoyed a brief revival in some larger cities. While musicians played, servants offered food to men and women lounging in immense wooden tubs. In England, the immorality and disease associated with the baths led Henry VIII to close them.

As the connection between cleanliness and disease prevention became accepted, bathing grew in popularity, but the idea of discreet bathrooms did not evolve until the Victorian Era. In fact, when Victoria ascended the throne in 1837, Buckingham Palace had no bathroom. The queen bathed in a portable tub set in front of the bedroom fireplace and filled by servants. Most well-to-do Victorians followed this practice, considering separate bathrooms to be vulgar.

As technology produced practical plumbing systems, the convenience of having separate rooms for bathing prevailed. Spare bedrooms metamorphosed into bathrooms, appointed in true Victorian style with patterned carpets, heavy draperies and massive dark furniture.

Once rejected as pretentiously ornate, the Victorian-style bath is making a comeback. Perceptions of the bathroom as an in-house haven from the demands of society have caused people to appreciate the opulence of the 19th-century bath. Manufacturers have responded with reproductions of the massive Victorian tubs and patterned sinks. Popular accessories include ornate taps, Victorian-print wallpaper and lace curtains.

Silver vanity pieces and new lines of bath products, echoing 19th-century preferences in fragrance, complete today's version of the Victorian bath.

Cognac produced in France

COGNAC, France (AP) — In this little town 300 miles southwest of Paris, where cognac brandy has been made since the 1600s, three out of four townspeople work at producing the community's best known product. According to the Cognac Information Bureau, these local experts do not regard cognac merely as an after-dinner drink. They have long favored it also as an aperitif or cocktail mixed with soda, tonic, ginger ale, orange juice, or simply on the rocks.

Ellis Island was gateway to USA

NEW YORK (AP) — Ellis Island, formerly America's major immigration processing center lying in the shadow of the Statue of Liberty, opened in 1892. From then until 1954, some 12 million immigrants of many nationalities moved through its facilities. Today, more than 40 percent of living Americans — or over 100 million — have ancestors who came through Ellis Island. The island's main building, restored to its original condition, was reopened to the public in 1990 and now contains an immigration museum. Photos, movies, artifacts and displays illustrate the story of the largest human migration in modern history.

Bombeck

I hate to say it but money talks.

Axles get greased, wheels move and red tape is severed when major bucks are involved.

A couple of weeks ago I read where a large hotel in our city was expanding. It is adding four swimming pools, three waterfalls, a slow-moving river for tubers, and a "tad pool" for the kids. There will be several heated whirlpools and a mountaintop slide built into a natural rock formation. Also an 18-hole putting course and 2,000-square-foot kids' arcade with video games, tubes for rafting and mountain bikes. Plus, a new gift shop.

Now, get this. This is July and the area is slated to open Dec. 27. That's five months away!

Does anyone care that I can't get my sofa slipcovered in five months?

You all know what I'm talking about. You drive to work each day and you know the area well. One morning you are waiting for a light to change and something appears out of the corner of your eye. It's a 20-story office building, complete with landscaping, that was built overnight. It's the same with malls. They look like someone planted mall seeds on 50 acres and they materialized.

My all-time favorite movie is "Witness." I loved it because it showed the Amish community putting up a barn in ONE DAY! I'm speechless when I can get shirts laundered in one day.

To get services in this country like child care, house cleaning, yard work or appliance maintenance, you have to audition.

When we were married about 20 years, we bought an old farmhouse in Ohio. We renovated the kitchen and three workers literally lived with us for two years. The last I heard they were playing golf in Hilton Head. (One of them probably owns the course.)

I know America can be strong and productive. I've seen it, but only at the corporate level where there are serious dollars at stake.

In the meantime, my sister-in-law in Miami has been living without her original roof over her head for a year now following Hurricane Andrew. She locks her house by nailing the front door shut and climbing through a back window.

Maybe if she told a contractor she was planning a waterfall, a putting course and a gift shop she'd see some action.

Steamers ply Mississippi River

N.Y. Times News Service

Floodwaters on the Upper Mississippi, which have swelled the flow of the river by hundreds of thousands of cubic feet per second, have stopped neither the steamer Mississippi Queen nor the National Historic Landmark paddlewheeler the Delta Queen.

The high waters forced the closure of the Upper Mississippi to river traffic but is not blocking traffic on the wider and deeper Lower Mississippi. Delta Queen Steamboat Co., which owns both boats, said the Mississippi Queen, scheduled to cruise the Upper Mississippi this month, has been traveling instead between Ste. Genevieve, Mo., 70 miles below St. Louis, and Chattanooga, Tenn., which lies on the Tennessee River.

The Mississippi Queen will cruise as planned from Memphis to New Orleans July 23-30. The flooding has raised water levels the length of the river but company officials say they expect no unusual navigation problems.

The Delta Queen is cruising this month as planned on the Ohio and Cumberland Rivers, east of the heavy rainfalls which have caused the flooding.

In Good Hands
Child Care You Can Count On.....

We're rounding the corner to summer's end and it's time to start making arrangements for child care for the school year. Child care is a vital concern for today's children by today's parents and for this reason the Midland Reporter-Telegram is publishing our annual Child Care Directory on Sunday, August 8th.

The Child Care Directory is a method used to reach parents with information about the services that are available in the Midland area and who provides them. The parents of children in the Midland area have come to rely on this directory as a guide to quality child care. This section focuses on the basic "who, what, where and when" of quality child care in our area and the section includes a map so that your facility can easily be located.

You will probably want your facility represented with an ad in this special Child Care Directory, a story about your facility, a photo of your facility and a dot on the map to show your location. Special ad packages, ranging from an 8" ad to an 18" ad, are available. There are also rates for regular ads of any size.

Deadline for this special Child Care Directory is Thursday, July 29, 1993. For more information, and to reserve your ad space in the Child Care Directory, please call:

DEAR ABBY

Small talk is big issue for quiet people

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Thank you for printing the letter from the teenage girl who was struggling with shyness.

Van Buren

I, too, am a very shy and quiet person. I've been this way all my life. I can't tell you how many people have said, "You sure are quiet." I can't imagine anyone going up to a person and saying, "You sure have a big mouth!"

I would like to reassure everyone that I know I am quiet, but I am a very well-adjusted, happy person who enjoys being quiet. I am quiet because I have nothing to say, and I don't want to fill the quietness with empty chatter. I would find it quite exhausting to make small talk, or worse yet, try to be the life of the party, or the center of attention.

In the past, I have tried to talk more and be more outgoing so people would like me better, but it did not become me ... it was not natural.

It has taken me years to like myself just the way I am. I have many friends who like me just the way I am, so to the others who are disturbed by my quietness and shy personality, please leave me alone. Please don't try to make me feel that there is something wrong with me because I am different from you who feel compelled to talk all the time.

Abby, if you print this — and I hope you do — you will be doing an enormous favor to all the shy, quiet people who read your column. There are more of us than you could possibly imagine. — QUIET IN ATLANTA

DEAR QUIET: Here's your letter, which should make a highly audible statement, and will put an end to that question — "Why are you so quiet?"

DEAR ABBY: "Frustrated in Kansas" suggested that a description of the gift be included on the back of the gift card, so the bride can say something nice about the gift when she acknowledges it.

That wouldn't have helped me when I was married 46 years ago. My father came home one evening quite upset. A family friend, "Mrs. Smith," who worked at the Lutheran Book Store, had given my father a wedding gift for my husband and me. Daddy had tossed it in the backseat of his car and carried it around for several weeks. That day, he noticed it was gone! (Imagine someone stealing a gift-wrapped package from an unlocked car!)

Daddy said, "Now, you write them a nice thank-you note." I asked, "What did it feel like?" He growled, "My god, Marjorie, how should I know? It was a book of some kind."

I dutifully wrote a note saying how interesting the book was, and I was sure my husband and I would enjoy it.

Some months after our wedding, Mrs. Smith asked my mother if we had received any other "family Bibles"!

I thought you might get a laugh out of this. — MARJORIE MACKEY, OXFORD, OHIO

DEAR MARJORIE: I did. And so did my staff. Thanks for sending it. The moral to that story is, "It doesn't pay to bluff; even if you have four kings — someone else might have four aces."

THOUGHTS WHILE SHAVING: "Happiness is having a large, loving, caring, close-knit family in another city." (George Burns)

For everything you need to know about wedding planning, order "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." Send a business-sized, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

Museum displays Navajo weavings

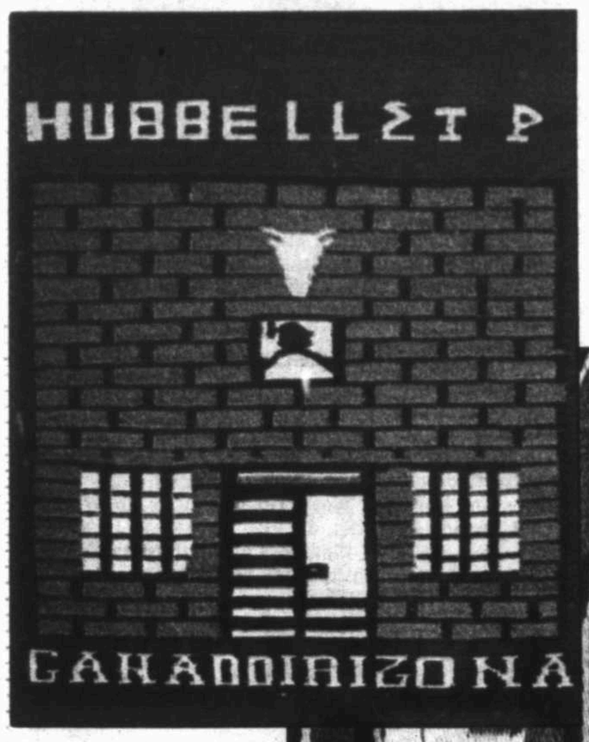

The Hubbell Trading Post, Ganado, Ariz., 30 miles west of Window Rock in the heart of the Navajo Nation, began operations in its present building April 15, 1883. Although now run by the National Park service, the trading post continues operating in the traditional way with Navajos in the Ganado area bringing in wool, pinon nuts, jewelry and rugs to pay off their accounts.

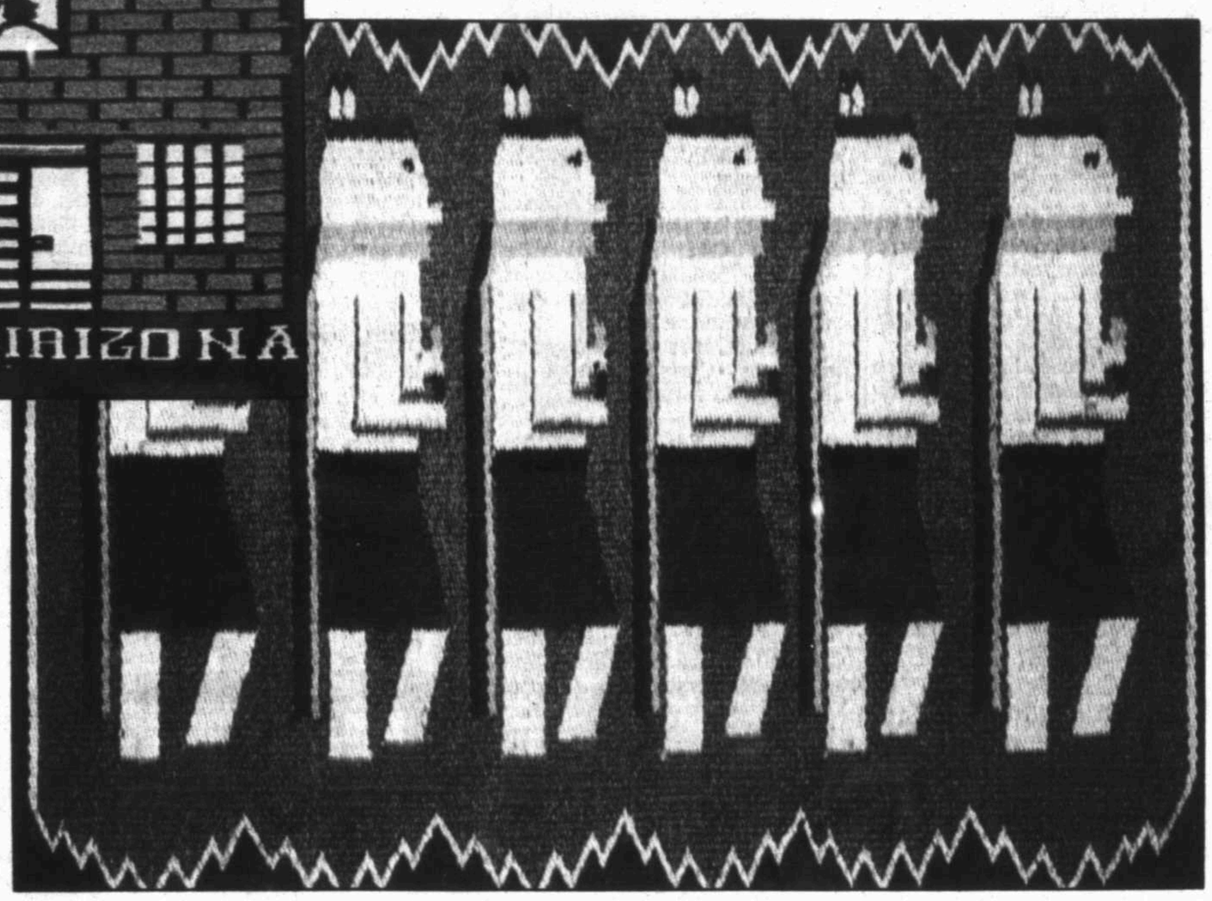

An exhibition of contemporary weavings from the stock of the trading post's rug room is on display at the Museum of the Big Bend, Sul Ross State University, Alpine, through Aug. 9.

"It's a wonderful exhibit," said curator Karen Green, who is an historian. "It's very, very colorful, and the colors are very rich.

"When people come down the ramp into the museum, their heads immediately turn into the deep, deep reds in the rugs. I think the amazing thing is that it's a very classical show. It has classical traditional styles

This "Tree of Life" rug by Colleen Mountain is among 35 contemporary Navajo weavings from the Hubbell Trading Post on display at the Museum of the Big Bend, Sul Ross State University, Alpine, through Aug. 9. Most pictorial rugs are now woven in the Lukachuka area. After the 1820s, pictorial patterns and geometric patterns were rarely seen in the same rug. Prior to this, birds and geometric patterns were common.

"Storm Pattern" by Mary Gilmore, below. Since the early 1920s, Tuba City and the western part of the reservation have become the center of weaving the Storm Pattern design rugs. This pattern usually has four heavy stepped lines, representing lightening, which radiates out of a central rectangle.

that have existed since the 1900s. And it's set up so there's not just one rug and one pattern. Their may be an old style and a new style to show you the evolution of the rug."

Three of the rugs are in the Ganado style, popularized by Don Lorenzo Hubbell, who established the trading post in 1876. The red ground Ganado rug incorporates the classic designs of the Navajos with the design elements of the crystal type rugs that buyers seemed to prefer in the 1890s.

The exhibit can be seen Tuesday through Saturday, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., and Sunday, 1-5 p.m., at the museum, located on the campus of Sul Ross State University. No admission is charged.

The weavings are accompanied by interviews with 28 weavers, ranging in age from 16 to 98, conducted during 1985 and 1986.

"The labeling that comes with this show explains the background to every pattern and the evolution of every pattern so it's an extremely educational show, too," Ms. Green said.

"The great thing about this show is the fact that you can look at it and you can see, if you know anything about Native Americans at all, that all of the traditions that were lost or starting to fade out of their culture are starting to come back tenfold," Ms. Green said.

"After the Indian wars when Indians were forced on the reservations, their culture started to fall apart. A lot of the children were taken and educated off the reservations, and because it was so hard to make a living on the reservation, a lot of Indians left the reservation to make a living. The traditions, especially in weaving where a grandmother or an aunt will teach a child how to weave, those traditions were starting to be lost.

"There were very few people who were doing the crafts or art forms of the Native Americans. Then in the 1960s, when everybody started forming groups the and we had a lot of protests, Native Americans got together and they started protesting all this interference. Families started coming back to the reservation. Indians basically took charge of their reservations and started creating jobs there and started promoting a renewal of the culture.

"This show is kind of a benefit of that renewal. It's 30 years later and here we are, we have all these very talented weavers and they do range in age from 16 to 98. We have a giving of the traditions from one generation to another, and I think that's just great."

Primarily, weaving among the Navajo continues to be a woman's activity that is integrated into her daily routine.

"Weaving not only augments the family's income, but also contributes to the standing of the weaver and her family within the community," said a release from the Traveling Exhibitions Program, the Arizona Commission on the Arts. "An accomplished weaver represents the ideals of patience and productivity — characteristics admired by the Navajo, especially if the weaver handles her achievements with humility and reserve."

All of the rugs are hand-dyed. Included in the exhibit, which has been made possible through the Arizona Commission on the Arts and the National Endowment for the Arts, are a number of photographs of the Hubbell Trading Post.

"Even thought it's a national historical site, it's still used as a trading post today," Ms. Green said. "In the photo, you get to see this beautiful decor. Huge pinon pines ceiling girders. Baskets and rugs hung all over the walls."

The exhibit shows work that reflects different periods of time including pre-reservation, reservation and today, Ms. Green said.

"I think one of the major things sets this exhibit apart is that it is completely Native American. All of the weavers are Navajos.

"You can see some of the outside influences that have come in. For instance, the oriental blend that came in the 1920s. Some of the patterns have been around a long time like the Tree of Life, that's a major quilt pattern and has been since colonial time in America.

"You can see the blending of the cultures with that type of pattern exchange, but you also can see the uniqueness of the Native American art form."

Tim McCarver is perhaps best known as one of the finest catchers of his day, first for the St. Louis Cardinals and then for the Philadelphia Phillies. Today he is arguably the top baseball color commentator on the tube. He also is a bridge player of considerable skill.

This hand was played on a Bill Root bridge cruise some years ago. McCarver sat West and heard the opponents reach three no trump on the auction shown. As the cards lie, with North as declarer, that contract would have coasted home, but after the lead of the four of spades the defenders were in the ballgame.

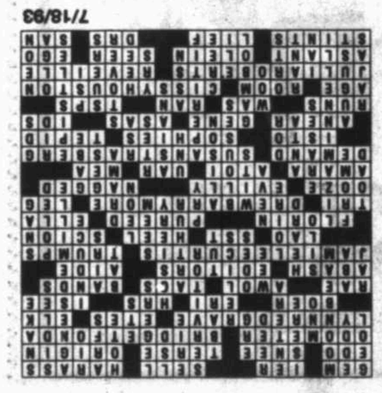

Dummy's queen was covered by East's king and declarer made a slight technical error by ducking—that would help only if spades were 7-2 and winning might cause a defender to wonder who held the missing spade honor, or the suit might block. The spade return was taken by the ace and declarer saw that, realistically, the only hope for the contract was to find the diamond king on side.

There was one slight extra chance—that West held a singleton king of clubs. So before starting on diamonds, declarer led a club from hand and was delighted when West produced the king.

Declarer lost no time in winning the ace and running the nine of clubs, fully expecting to be able to claim the contract after the "marked" finesse succeeded. Unfortunately, for South, McCarver produced the jack and three more spade tricks completed a one-trick set.

Author of Kennedy book collects battle scars

N.Y. Times News Service

Joe McGinniss' forthcoming book about Ted Kennedy, "The Last Brother," isn't out yet, but the author is already accumulating battle scars.

Last month when Simon & Schuster announced that upon the recommendation of its lawyers, a notice would be inserted in the book to the effect that some of the dialogue "and thoughts attributed to figures" had been "created" by the author, McGinniss demanded that the statement be withdrawn. The author prevailed.

In the latest issue of New York magazine, journalist John Taylor takes aim at another aspect of the book. According to Taylor, large parts of McGinniss' work have been lifted from William Manchester's 1967 book, "The Death of a President."

Finally, comes Lester David, self-proclaimed "dean of America's Kennedy writers," who says, "It infuriates me that a book like 'The Last Brother' is being passed off as a serious biography when so much of it is fiction."

Bonilla es Considerado un Rebajador del Déficit por el Unión Nacional de Pagadores de Impuestos

WASHINGTON — De acuerdo con su promesa a la gente del Distrito 23, Henry Bonilla, miembro del Congreso (R-Tejas 23) ha sido considerado un rebajador del déficit por la Unión Nacional de Pagadores de Impuestos (NTU).

"Muchos políticos en Washington parecen tener la inhabilidad de oír el mensaje que manda el corazón del país — PRIMERO CORTEN LOS GASTOS PARA REDUCIR EL DEFICIT FEDERAL," dice Bonilla. "Es como si la Carretera de Circunvalación en la Capital provee una pared insonorizada que impide a los políticos oír a la gente que los eligieron."

"Pero yo e oído el mensaje recio y claro, de la gente a través de todo el Distrito 23 de Tejas," dice "Bonilla. "No importa donde estoy en el Distrito, la gente me dicen que quieren que el Congreso corte los gastos y nivele el presupuesto.

En sus primeros meses en el Congreso, Bonilla ha presentado o co-patrocinado proyectos de ley que cortaran gastos por mas de 9 billones, de acuerdo con una investigación del NTU. El NTU basa sus consideraciones en legislación que Bonilla presento o co-patrocinio durante el fin de Abril.

"Washington necesita una dosis fuerte de la realidad," dice Bonilla. "Cuando la mayoría de Americanos no tienen bastante dinero para comprar todo lo que quieran, y siguen gastando dinero que no tienen," dice Bonilla. "Es tiempo de tener el Congreso con los mismos niveles que cualquier familia a negocio pequeño, y eso incluye nivelando el presupuesto y amarrándose el cinturon durante tiempos duros."

La Unión Nacional de Pagadores de Impuestos es una organización sin partidarios, sin ganancias quienes 250,000 miembros trabajan para reducir los gastos del gobierno y los impuestos.

Bonilla Rated a Deficit-Cutter by National Taxpayers Union

WASHINGTON — In keeping with his promise to the people of the 23rd District, Congressman Henry Bonilla (R-Texas-23) has been rated a deficit-cutter by the National Taxpayers Union (NTU).

"Many politicians in Washington seem to have this inability to hear the message being sent from the Heartland — CUT SPENDING FIRST TO REDUCE THE FEDERAL DEFICIT," Bonilla said. "It's as if the Capital Beltway provides a sound-proof wall that prevents politicians from listening to the people who elected them."

"But I've heard the message loud and clear from people all across the 23rd District of Texas," Bonilla said. "No matter where I am in the district, people tell me they want Congress to cut spending and balance the budget."

In his first few months in Congress, Bonilla has introduced or co-sponsored bills that would cut spending by more than $9 billion, according to the NTU study. The NTU based its rating on legislation that Bonilla introduced or co-sponsored through the end of April.

"Washington needs a strong dose of reality," Bonilla said. "When most Americans don't have enough money to buy everything they want, they choose only the items they can afford."

"Washington, on the other hand, continues to spend money it doesn't have," Bonilla said. "It's time to hold Congress to the same standards as any family or small business, and that includes balancing the budget and tightening its belt during tough times."

The National Taxpayers Union is a nonpartisan, nonprofit organization whose 250,000 members work to reduce government spending and taxes.

"Lugares Popular" – Para la Vacación en el Oeste de Tejas

Por Amarante Cordova y Jeffrey McDonald

Tiempo de verano es tiempo de viajar para muchos de nosotros, con los muchachos fuera de escuela, los calientes, y soleadas temperaturas. Con eso en el pensamiento Amarante Cordova y Jeff McDonald, los guerreros del camino de NuevaVista, fueron a investigar de algunas localidades que usted podría querer visitar en su siguiente paseo de verano. El énfasis esta en lo barato, fácil de encontrar, que toda la familia puede disfrutar. Entonces aquí vamos!

La primera parada de nuestro viaje por medio del Oeste de Tejas, es uno de los viajes que viajeros han hecho por cientos de años. La ciudad de Big Spring se encuentra a través de una intersección de los muchos senderos que fueron usados primeramente por tribus de Indios Comanches, en su camino por Tejas, o al sur dentro de México. Un poco afuera del Camino 700 Farm & Market, en la cima de la montaña viendo a la ciudad por el sur, esta el Parque Estatal Big Spring, 382 acres de altos campos que dejan a los visitantes observar por millas en todas direcciones.

El parque estatal de Big Spring puede ser visto de día, y áreas de acampar no son proveidas. Caminatas son animadas, de todas maneras, hay algunas rutas para escoger, incluyendo senderos naturales interpretativos, y caminos que van completamente alrededor de la montaña por el pintoresco camino o paseo.

Visitantes son también animados para que usen las instalaciones para día de campo, las cuales incluyen mesas cubiertas, parrillas para asar carne, un área de recreo para los chicos, y sanitarios.

Exhibición del centro natural presenta a los visitantes a las plantas, a los animales, y los recursos naturales que a hecho de esta área una parada atractiva para los viajeros, por siglos.

El Parque Estatal de Big Spring esta abierto los siete días de la semana, desde las ocho de la mañana, hasta las diez en punto de la noche. Admisión al parque es de $3.00 por vehículo.

Cuando a la gente se le pregunta que nombre algunos de los productos del Oeste de Tejas, ellos naturalmente que pensaran del petróleo, gas natural, algodón, melón, y ganado. Pero que pasa acerca de los cielos? Mucha de la gente no se da cuenta que el Oeste de Tejas goza de una reputación internacional de primer nivel para observar las estrellas.

Un modo de ser presentadas las maravillas de los cielos nocturnos del Oeste de Tejas es por medio de las funciones celebradas cada semana en el Marian Blakemore Planetarium, parte del museo del complejo Suroeste, en la Avenida Missouri, en Midland.

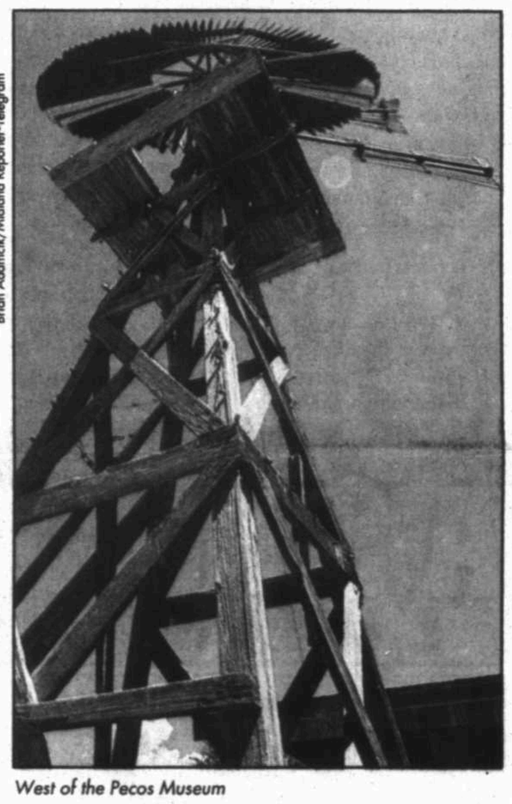

Un nuevo equipo de proyección a sido añadido a las instalaciones, y las funciones cubren una variedad de tópicos tan grande como el espacio mismo. Un paseo por el

"Hot Spots" — For That West Texas Vacation

By Amarante Cordova and Jeffrey McDonald

Summer time is travel time for many of us, with the kids out of school, and the warm, sunny weather. With that in mind, Amarante Cordova and Jeff McDonald, NuevaVista's road warriors, went in search of some locations you might want to visit on your next summer outing. The emphasis is on inexpensive, easy-to-reach locations, that the whole family can enjoy. So, here goes!

The first stop on our tour through West Texas, is one that travellers have made for hundreds of years. The city of Big Spring lies across an intersection of the many trails that were first used by bands of Comanche Indians, on their way through Texas, or south into Mexico. Just off Farm & Market Road 700, on a mountaintop overlooking the city from the south, is Big Spring State Park, 382 acres of high country that allow visitors to see for miles in all directions.

Big Spring is a day use only state park, and no campsites are provided. Hiking is encouraged, however, with several routes to choose from, including nature interpretive trails, and a road that goes completely around the mountaintop for scenic driving or walking.

Visitors are also encouraged to make use of the picnic facilities, which include covered tables, charcoal grills, a playground for the children, and restrooms.

Nature center exhibits introduce visitors to the plants, the animals, and the natural resources that have made this area such an attractive stop for travellers, for centuries.

Big Spring State Park is open seven days a week, from eight in the morning, until ten o'clock at night. Admission to the park is $3.00 per vehicle.

When people are asked to name some of the products of West Texas, they'll naturally think of oil, natural gas, cotton, cantaloupes, and cattle. But what about sky? Many people do not realize that West Texas enjoys an international reputation for first-rate stargazing!

One way to be introduced to the wonders of the West Texas night skies is through the shows held every week at the Marian Blakemore Planetarium, part of the Museum of the Southwest complex, on Missouri Avenue, in Midland.

New projection equipment has been added to the facility, and shows cover a variety of topics as large as space itself. A tour of our solar system, for example, or a ride on a comet! You can also learn what to look for in the West Texas skies that particular night. The

Las Gestiones de los Periódicos para Comunicarse con los Hispanos Empiezan a Fructificar

Por Zita Arocha

Hay noticias alentadoras de que informar en este año sobre la gestión continua de la industria periodística para contratar a más Hispanos: Las cifras han aumentado.

Al mismo tiempo, el trabajo de diversificar las redacciones de la nación, especialmente al nivel administrativo, está lejos de haber terminado.

Los editores y publicistas de periódicos deberían estar orgullosos del hecho de que, entre 1990 y 1992, la cantidad de periodistas Hispanos en los grandes diarios de todo el país aumentó en un 27% — desde 509, o sea el 3% del personal total de las redacciones, a 634, o sea el 4%, según el estudio para este año de la Asociación Nacional de Periodistas Hispanos (NAHJ en inglés) sobre los 57 periódicos principales.

El conteo, publicado el 24 de Junio en la convención nacional de la NAHJ en Washington, DC., también muestra que la representación Hispana en los diarios principales estudiados creció en un 0.5% entre 1991 y 1992 al 4% — un punto de porcentaje mayor que la tasa de toda la industria.

En este año, por primera vez desde que la NAHJ empezó a contar en 1989, todas las 57 redacciones informaron por lo menos tener un empleado Hispano.

Por otra parte, los dirigentes de la industria deberían sentirse abochornados de que la cantidad de administradores latinos en esas redacciones (algunas de ellas situadas en comunidades predominantemente Hispanas) todavía sea desastrosamente baja. Hay 87 latinos entre 3,606 administradores y supervisores. En toda la industria, hay menos de 300 administradores latinos.

Las razones de esta falta de diversidad en las alturas no son un misterio. Como advierte Ernie Sotomayor, uno de los editores de "New York Newsday":

"Aunque muchos periódicos han salido a reclutar reporteros de otros periódicos, muchos se han detenido ahí y no se dan cuenta de que el paso siguiente es llevar a estas personas a la administración."

Richard Thien, fundador de USA Today, que da charlas y escribe sobre el adiestramiento en las redacciones, lo dice más bruscamente: "La mayoría de los publicistas son neandertales en el modo de proceder sobre el asunto de incluir a todos en la administración. Hablan de un buen juego y salen a golpear la pelota sin llevar un bate en la mano."

También contribuye al número insignificante de administradores Hispanos en los periódicos la falta de oportunidades para el adiestramiento administrativo en la industria. Pocos Hispanos que se hallan en plazas claves sirven como mentores a los jóvenes periodistas Hispanos. Hay una insatisfacción cada vez mayor con la profesión entre todos los periodistas, no solamente entre los de color.

Los periódicos deberían continuar reclutando a Hispanos al nivel de entrada para ser escritores, reporteros y editores de copia, hasta que sus cifras reflejen sus porcentajes en sus comunidades locales.

Pero el impulso hacia la diversidad debe moverse hasta el nivel inmediato superior — el de ascender a latinos adiestrados y talentosos a las plazas donde se toman las decisiones, en las que puedan afectar las decisiones sobre la contratación, el contenido de las noticias, la información de las noticias y la "envoltura" de las noticias. Una vez que lleguen allí,, pueden servir como mentores para los periodistas latinos más jóvenes y ayudarles a prepararse para que se adentren en las filas de la administración.

— Identificar y localizar a periodistas de color que tengan posibilidades para la administración y desarrollar planes individualizados de carreras para ellos;

— Situarlos en las relaciones de los candidatos para cada apertura al nivel de supervisión;

— Proporcionar oportunidades de adiestramiento administrativo para los latinos y otras personas no blancas;

— Sensibilizar a los administradores y ejecutivos de los periódicos respecto de la importancia de la diversidad en la redacción;

— Mirar más allá de la industria periodística al buscar posibles periodistas no blancos;

— Desarrollar programas de internado periodístico enfocados a los alumnos de las escuelas secundarias y superiores que no sean blancos. Los beneficios de tener un personal administrativo diverso son muchos y se hacen evidentes por ellos mismos. Los periódicos que reflejan los intereses y las preocupaciones de sus comunidades y que se mantienen en contacto con ellas, tienen probabilidades de permanecer haciendo negocios.

Una administración inteligente es una administración diversa.

Newspapers' Efforts to Reach Hispanics Starting to Pay Off

By Zita Arocha

There is encouraging news to report this year about the newspaper industry's continuing effort to hire more Hispanics: the numbers are up. At the same time, the job of diversifying the nation's newsrooms, especially at the management level, is far from done.

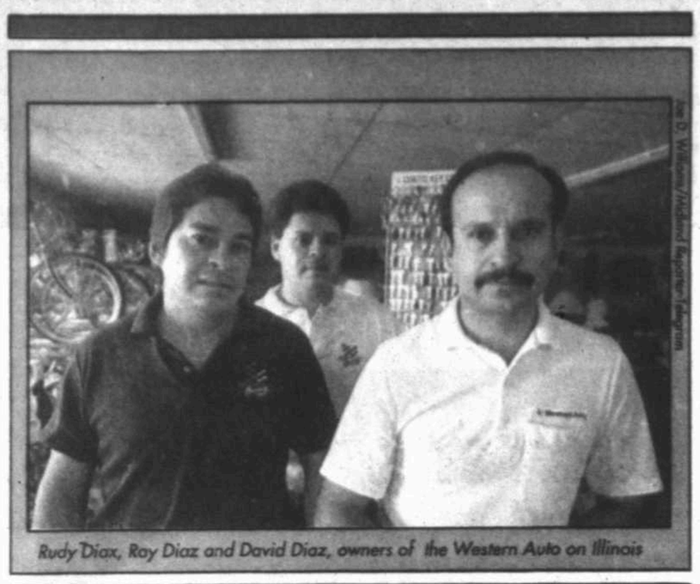

Newspaper editors and publishers should be proud of the fact that between 1990 and 1992, the number of Hispanic journalists at big dailies across the country increased by 27 percent — from 509 or 3 percent of total newsroom staff to 634 or 4 percent, according to this year's National Association of Hispanic Journalists, survey of 57 top newspapers.

The tally, released June 24 at the NAHJ convention in Washington, D.C., also shows that Hispanic representation at the surveyed major dailies grew by 0.5 percent between 1991 and 1992 to 4 percent — about 1 percentage point higher than the rate for the entire industry. This year, for the first time since NAHJ began counting, in 1989, all 57 newsrooms reported at least one Hispanic employee.

On the other hand, industry leaders should be embarrassed that the numbers of Latino managers in those newsrooms (some of them in predominantly Hispanic communities) still are distressingly low: 87 Latinos among 3,606 managers and supervisors. In the industry at large, there are fewer than 300 Latino managers.

Rudy Diaz, Ray Diaz and David Diaz, owners of the Western Auto on Illinois

Hispanic Business... is Good Business

By Jeffrey McDonald

There's a family tradition on both sides of the counter at the Western Auto Associates Store on East Illinois, in downtown Midland. On one side is the Diaz family, which has owned and operated the store for more than two decades.

"There's M. C. Diaz, which is my father, and Louisa Diaz, my mother," explained David Diaz. "And Ray Diaz and Rudy Diaz, my brothers."

"Actually my dad started it. A little over twenty years ago, he became a Western Auto franchised dealer. Western Auto was, at that particular time, trying to open up as many associate dealers, around the country, as it possibly could. And we were fortunate enough to find out about it, because of their aggressive campaign, and applied for a franchise."

"I was only about sixteen when my dad got into the business. So I grew up in it, and I've liked it, and stuck with it."

Although associated with a nationwide chain of stores, the franchise agreement allows the Diaz family complete control over local operations of their business.

"We control it a hundred-percent. The only stipulation that Western Auto Supply Company requires, is that they be our number-one supplier," said Diaz. "We are still considered the 'old' Western Auto format, that carries everything from household goods, lawn and garden, to automotive parts."

The Diaz family has seen many changes in the community over the years, and has had to adapt to those changes, concentrating upon the strengths, and the advantages, they offer over their competition.

"Well, over the years, it has certainly become more competitive. When we first started, we didn't have the mass merchants that we do now. So it has gotten a little tougher," said Diaz. "To compete? I guess number-one would be customer service. We rely heavily on our repeat business. And you don't get the repeat business unless you treat the customers right, and provide the goods and services that they are willing to come in and buy, over and over again."

Which brings us to the family tradition on the other side of the counter. The customers who first came in the store when M. C. opened for business, and still come in today. And their children, as well.

"Yes, we're working on second, perhaps even third-generation," said Diaz, adding that many of those customers have also become friends.

"Yes, we have customers who started out by purchasing goods. And over a period of years, they have become very good friends, to where they invite us to go hunting and fishing, whatever the case may be. We get together for cookouts, picnics. Yes, we have quite a few of those."

It's the kind of business and personal relationships that Diaz has found are especially possible in a community like Midland.

"Very much so. It's an environment where you have the ability to know your customers on a one-to-one basis," explained Diaz. "Not only that, but there is enough activity within the community, to get involved in the volunteer roles, doing Chamber work and that sort of thing."

For Diaz, who serves on the Board of Directors of both the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, and the Midland Chamber of Commerce, such work benefits the community, the business, and the individual.

"It's a role that I enjoy very much," said Diaz. "It provides a lot of insight into what is going on in the community. So it's very beneficial."

Business has been good for the Diaz family, generating strong, supportive ties with the customers, the community, and within the family.

"Very much so. We grew up working together. And even now, as adults, we each have our own families. But we still work very cohesively, and we work well together," said Diaz. "I guess we had good upbringing. We owe that to my father!"

Negocio Hispano... es Buen Negocio

Por Jeffrey McDonald

Allí esta una tradición familiar en ambos lados del mostrador, en la Tienda Western Auto Asociados en el Este Illinois, en el centro de Midland. En un lado esta la familia Diaz, quien ha poseído y operado la tienda por mas de dos décadas.

"Allí esta M.C. Diaz, quien es mi padre, y Luisa Diaz, mi madre," explica David Diaz. "Y Ray Diaz y Rudy Diaz, mis hermanos."

"En realidad mi padre lo comenzó. Hace un poco mas de veinte años, el se hizo concesionario, Western Auto en ese tiempo particularmente, trataba de abrir las mas concesiones que se pudiesen, alrededor del país, como fuera posible. Y nosotros fuimos lo suficientemente afortunados para enterarnos acerca de esto por su agresiva campaña y aplicar para una concesion."

"Yo solamente contaba con diez y seis años de edad cuando mi padre obtuvo el negocio. Así es que yo crecí junto con el, y a mi me gusto, y me aferre a el."

Aunque asociados con toda la cadena nacional de tiendas, el acuerdo con la franquicia permite a la familia Diaz control completo sobre las operaciones locales de su negocio.

"Nosotros controlamos al cien por ciento. La única estipulación que la Compañia Western Auto Supply requiere, es que ellos sean los surtidores numero uno," dice Diaz. "Nosotros nos seguimos considerando el 'antiguo' formato Western Auto, que cuenta con todas las cosas desde artículos para el hogar, para el césped, y jardín, hasta partes para automóvil."

La familia Diaz a visto muchos cambios en la comunidad sobre los años y nos hemos tenido que adaptar a esos cambios, concentrándonos sobre las fuerzas y las ventajas, que ofrecen sobre sus competidores.

"Pues bien, sobre los años, ciertamente a habido mas competencia. Cuando nosotros primero comenzamos, no teníamos la masa de comerciantes que nosotros tenemos ahora. Así es que se a puesto un poco mas difícil," dice Diaz. "Para competir? Yo pienso que el servicio al cliente es el numero uno. Nosotros dependemos fuertemente de nuestro repetido negocio. Y usted no obtiene un repetido negocio si usted no trata bien al cliente y los provee de artículos y servicio que ellos están dispuestos de venir y comprar, una y otra vez."

Que nos trae a la familia tradición en el otro lado del mostrador. Los cliente que vinieron por primera vez a la tienda cuando M.C. abrió el negocio, y aun vienen ahora. Y sus hijos, también.

"Si, nosotros estamos trabajando en la segunda, tal vez en la tercera generación," dice Diaz, añadiendo que muchos de esos clientes se han hecho sus amigos.

"Si, nuestros clientes quienes comenzaron comprando artículos. Y sobre un periodo de años, se han convertido en muy buenos amigos, al punto que ellos nos invitan a cazar o a pescar, cualquiera que sea el caso que se amerite. Nosotros nos juntamos para salir a comer, ir de día de campo. Si, nosotros tenemos algunos de estos."

Es la clase de negocio y relación personal que Diaz a encontrado que es posible especialmente en una comunidad como Midland.

"Muchísimo mas así. Es el ambiente donde usted tiene la habilidad de conocer a sus clientes en una base de uno-a-uno," explica Diaz. "No solamente eso, pero allí hay suficiente actividad entre la comunidad, para involucrarse en los papeles voluntarios, haciendo trabajo de la Cámara de Comercio y esa clase de cosas."

Para Diaz, quien sirve en el Consejo Directivo de ambas la Cámara de Comercio Hispana de Midland, y la Cámara de Comercio de Midland, tal trabajo beneficia a la comunidad, al negocio, y al individual.

"Es un papel que yo disfruto mucho," dice Diaz. "Le provee de mucha compresión dentro de lo que esta pasando en la comunidad. Así es que es muy beneficioso."

El negocio a sido bueno para la familia Diaz, generando fuertes, lazos de apoyo con los clientes, la comunidad, y entre la familia.

"Muchísimo mas así. Nosotros crecimos trabajando juntos. Y aun ahora, como adultos, nosotros tenemos nuestras familias cada uno. Pero nosotros seguimos trabajando muy adheridamente, y nosotros trabajamos bien juntos," dice Diaz. "Yo pienso que nosotros nos llevamos muy bien. Nosotros esto se le debemos a mi padre!"

sistema solar, por ejemplo, un paseo en un cometa! Usted también puede aprender que mirar por los cielos del Oeste de Tejas particularmente esa noche. El Planetarium también tiene una exhibición en honor a la exploración del espacio.

El Marian Blakemore Planetarium esta abierto Martes a Sábado, desde las diez de la mañana, hasta las cinco en punto de la tarde, y Domingos, desde las dos hasta las cinco en punto de la tarde. Las funciones del Planetarium son presentadas los Martes por las noches a las siete y media y Domingos por las tardes, a las dos en punto y tres y media. Admisión es de $2.00 por adulto y $1.00 por niños menores de doce años de edad.

Entre las muchas cosas que usted aprenderá acerca del planetarium, están los meteoros, que también son llamados estrellas fugaces, o estrellas caídas. Si usted hubiera estado en Odessa hace 20,000 años, usted hubiera visto un meteoro particularmente grande caer a la Tierra. Pero si usted se perdió de su arribo, usted aun puede ver el hueco que hizo en la Tierra en el Odessa Meteor Crater, el segundo en tamaño crater meteoro en los Estados Unidos, y ahora sitiado en lo que es un Parque del Condado Ector.

El meteoro, hecho en su mayor parte de hierro, pero también conteniendo algo de cobre, azufre, y cromo, se cree que peso 1,000 toneladas. Se hundió cerca de 200 pies por debajo de la superficie, y creando un crater en forma de cono, 100 pies de profundidad, y 500 pies de ancho. Una porción substancial de ese crater a sido rellenada por arena que el viento a soplado, pero el meteoro esta todavía ahí abajo. Un interpretativo (sendero) (camino) lo toma a uno al crater, y explica como fue formado. Ahí esta también un área para día de campo, con parrillas para asar, viendo por encima el crater.

El Parque Odessa Meteor Crater, esta abierto los siete días de la semana, desde las ocho de la mañana, hasta las diez en punto de la noche. Admisión al parque es gratis. Del Centro de Odessa, a la Calle Grant, tomando la Calle Segunda al Oeste, por cuatro millas. Cruzando el sur, sobre las vías ferroviarias, hasta el Camino Murphy. Siguiendo el Camino Murphy al oeste, por cuatro millas, luego girando al sur, hasta el Camino Meteor Crater, por dos millas, hasta topar con el parque.

Cinco millas al noreste de Monahans, justo a unos cuantos cientos de pies de la Carretera Inter Estatal 20, esta el Parque de Monahans Sandhills. El parque cubre cerca de 4000 acres de arenas dunas, algunas de las cuales están a setenta pies de altura.

Usted pueda no saberlo solo mirándolo, pero alguna de esas arenas dunas actualmente estan cambiando, creciendo o moviéndose segun el viento sople sus arenas! Otras dunas esta establecidas por 'bosques' de roble completamente arboles maduros que aguantan grandes bellotas, aun son menos de cuatro pies de alto.

En tiempos de la prehistoria, tribus de indios acamparon en el área, para recoger las bellotas, las cuales las convertían en alimentos. Frijoles de mesquite también eran cultivados regados con la agua fresca que se acumulaba en los pequeños valles entre las dunas.

Esos charcos de agua pueden ser aun encontrados. En realidad, el parque recomienda que usted tranquilamente observe estas áreas al amanecer, y al crepúsculo para observar que la fauna silvestre lleguen ahí a beber. Ahí esta un centro para visitantes, con exhibiciones pintorescas acerca de la plantas, de los animales, de la geología, y de la historia del área.

Ahí hay numerosas áreas para un día de campo por todo el parque, y sitios para acampar para ambos carpas y coches habitación. Las áreas de coches habitación ofrecen agua y electricidad. Instalaciones de bañeras también estan disponibles. Usted también puede rentar tablas y discos del parque, para poder gozar de uno de sus mas populares actividades, rompiendo olas de arena dunas.

El Parque Estatal de Monahans Sandhills esta abierto los siete días de la semana, desde las ocho de la mañana hasta las diez en punto de la noche. Admisión al parque es de $3.00 por vehículo (hasta doce ocupantes), luego $12.00 por vehículo (hasta 48 ocupantes), luego $20.00 por vehículo (con mas de 48 ocupantes).

Si el Sandhills de Monahans le suena como un desierto clásico, entonces el oasis puede ser encontrado al suroeste, en el Parque Estatal Balmorhea, solamente cuatro millas oeste de Balmorhea, en la Carretera U.S. 290.

Actualmente, este a sido un lugar popular para las paradas de los viajeros, por largo, largo tiempo. Los Manantiales de San Solomon, proveyendo cerca de 25 millones de galones de agua cada día, haciendo a este lugar favorito para rebaño de búfalo, para tribus nómadas de Indios, y pobladores de México y el oriente de los Estados Unidos.

Esta maravilla natural fue para jugar un papel importante en la historia y desarrollo del Condado Reeves. Agua de los manantiales fue desviada para la irrigación de tierra agrícola, haciéndolo un centro agrícola del Oeste de Tejas. Ganadería también vino a depender sobre el agua, exactamente como el búfalo lo hizo, y el rancho vino a ser otra industria importante del área.

La Gran Depresión que symió al país en los 1930's, también tuvo su propio impacto sobre el Oeste de Tejas, y el CCC, Cuerpo de Conservación Civil, campamento que fue establecido aquí. De los muchos proyectos completados por el CCC en el área, tal vez el mas resistente fue el de la alberca de agua de manantial, el "Oasis del Oeste de Tejas", en le Parque Estatal de Balmorhea.

Esta piscina, la alberca mas grande del mundo alimentada de agua de manantial, cubre l y 3/4 de acres, y es rellenada cada día por la refrescante, y agua clara de manantial. Algunas partes de la piscina esta a 30 pies de profundidad, la cual hace atractivo al buceo y el esquiar sobre agua.

En adición al área para acampar con carpa, con agua y con las áreas para los coches habitación, con agua y electricidad, ahí esta un motel con 18 habitaciones, una sala recreacional para su uso por el día o la noche, y el área para día de campo con mesas, parrillas y agua para beber. Durante los meses de verano, allí hay concesión de puestos, y casas de baño con sus bañeras calientes. Visitantes estan advertidos, como quiera que sea, que este es un parque popular, y reservaciones para las áreas de acampar son altamente recomendadas.

El Parque Estatal de Balmorhea esta abierto siete días a la semana. Hay un cargo de admisión de $4.00 por vehículo. Nadar en la piscina, la cual esta abierta desde las ocho de la mañana hasta las ocho en punto de la noche, es gratis.

Claro que, estos son únicamente algunos de los atractivos en el Oeste de Tejas este verano. Nosotros esperamos que usted tenga tanta alegría, disfrutando esto, y descubriendo otras, como nosotros descubrimos. Y nosotros también esperamos que usted lo tome tranquilamente, lo tome lentamente, y llegue a su hogar seguro. Es el mejor modo de finalizar un día en las carreteras del Oeste de Tejas.

Vengan a Celebrar el Dulce Sabor del Melón de Pecos

Por Amarante Cordova

Ellos están celebrando el dulce sabor del éxito en Pecos, Tejas, la casa del nacionalmente famoso, Melón Dulce de Pecos.

La gente primeramente comenzó a cultivar los melones en el siglo diez y nueve. Era de pensarse la combinación del sol y el suelo en el Oeste de Tejas le dio a los melones un sabor distintivo.

Eventualmente, ese sabor seria disfrutado en las mesas a través del país, como cultivadores locales surtido de fruta fresca a los coche comedor del Ferrocarril de Texas & Pacific. Viajeros en el ferrocarril daban su reconocimiento al Melón de Pecos, haciéndolo un artículo popular en la mesa del comedor y restaurantes a través de todo el país. Lyndon B. Johnson, y Dwight D. Eisenhower, dos Tejanos que fueron Presidentes de los Estados Unidos, se aseguraron que el melón se sirviera en la Casa Blanca.

Cada año la gente del Oeste de Tejas viene a Pecos, para celebrar esta tradición, durante el Festival del Melón de Pecos, cual, este año, toma lugar del 6 de Agosto hasta el 8.

"El melón es una de las mas grandes cosechas, y es conocido por todos los Estados Unidos como el Melón de Pecos, probablemente el mejor melón que usted pueda obtener de cualesquier parte," dice Dick Alligood, Presidente del Allcomm Long Distance, y uno de los dos Directores del Festival del Melón del Club de Leones del Centro. "Es una oportunidad para los agricultores, como también para la gente que trabaja en el campo, de tener una celebración, y para nosotros de mostrar nuestro agradecimiento hacia ellos, para celebrar el Melón de Pecos."

Actividades del viernes por la noche presentara como atracción especial La Pequeña Señorita Melón, la cual será celebrada en el Teatro de la Escuela Secundaria de Pecos. También habrá un baile esa noche. La Mafia será uno de los tres grupos ofreciendo una noche completa de música en vivo, y baile.

Allí habrá alguna cosa para todos el Sábado, el séptimo, incluyendo el Torneo de Golf del Melón, en el Campo Municipal de Golf en Pecos, y un torneo de softball.

De nueve de la mañana hasta las cinco en punto de la tarde, el Centro Cívico será sitio de una exhibición de arte, de juegos y paseos, y puestos de vendedores. Entretenimiento tendrá lugar durante todo el día. Y continuar con el tema de la celebración de la agricultura, y los beneficios para la comunidad, fabricantes de equipo agrícola estarán a la mano en el Centro Cívico, con exhibición de lo último en tecnología en el área de la agricultura.

El Campeonato del Mejor Asado también será celebrado en el Centro Cívico ese día, comenzando a las doce del mediodía, con el jurado tomando lugar a la ocho y media esa noche. Ganadores del primero, segundo, y tercer lugar del mejor asado recibirá como premio trofeo y dinero en efectivo.

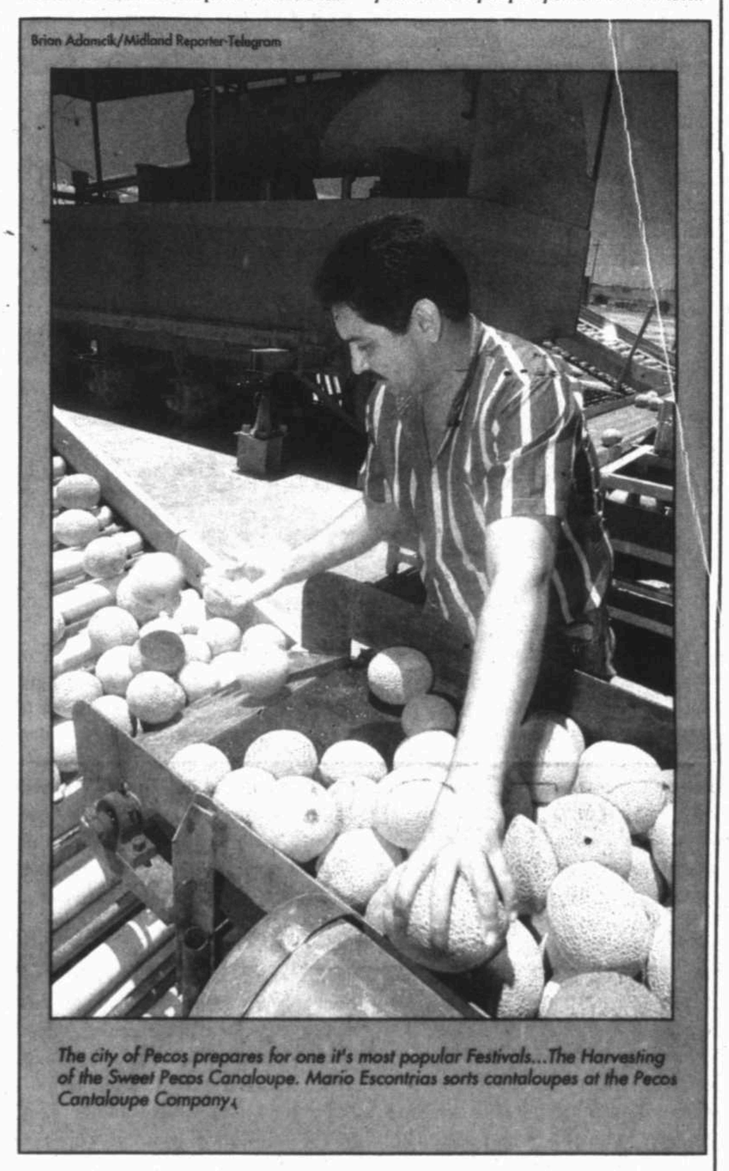

Inmediatamente después de la ceremonia de premios para los mejores asados, habrá un baile completamente gratis en el Centro Cívico, el cual continuara hasta la una de la mañana.

Nosotros no estábamos bromeando cuando nosotros digamos que allí habrá alguna cosa para todos! El cierre del evento del fin de semana será el Desayuno Fly-In, el cual será celebrado en el aeropuerto el Domingo ocho por la mañana, a las ocho en punto. Estarán volando pilotos de toda el área, con un contingente esperado que volara de California para su reunión anual. Después del desayuno, allí habrá algunos concursos muy únicos, como el Bombadeo de Melones, donde contendientes aéreo transportando para pegarle al blanco en el suelo con — usted imagínese — melones.

"Muestra invitación al Oeste de Tejas es para que venga a disfrutar nuestros melones," dice Alligood, quien dirigirá mas de 150 voluntarios en organizar el evento de este año. "Venga a echar un vistazo a lo que nosotros hemos preparado para ofrecerle nuestro aprecio a la comunidad agrícola, y a sus subsidiarias, por el negocio que ellos han generado y los trabajos. Esto es realmente de lo que se trata."

Una vez mas, el Festival de los Melones de Pecos tendrán lugar del 6 al 8 de Agosto, en Pecos, Tejas. Para mas información acerca del Festival, o para registrarse para cualquiera de los eventos mencionados en este artículo, llame a la Cámara de Comercio de Pecos, al 445-2406.

Come Celebrate the Sweet Taste of the Pecos Cantaloupe

By Amarante Cordova

They're celebrating the sweet taste of success in Pecos, Texas, home of the nationally famous, Pecos Sweet Canteloupe.

People first began growing the canteloupe in the nineteenth-century. It was thought the special combination of sun and soil in West Texas gave the canteloupe a distinctive taste.

Eventually, that taste would be enjoyed on tables across the country, as local growers supplied fresh fruit to the dining cars of the Texas & Pacific Railroad. Travellers on the railway took their appreciation of the Pecos Canteloupe home with them, making it a popular item in dining rooms and restaurants across the country. Lyndon B. Johnson, and Dwight D. Eisenhower, two Texans who became President of the United States, made sure the canteloupe was served in the White House.

Each year, the people of West Texas come to Pecos, to celebrate this tradition, during the Pecos Canteloupe Festival, which, this year, takes place August 6th through the 8th.

"The canteloupe is one of our largest crops, and it's known all over the United States as the Pecos Canteloupe, probably the best canteloupe you can get a hold of," said Dick Alligood, President of Allcomm Long Distance, and Co-chairman of the Pecos Downtown Lions Club Canteloupe Festival. "It's an opportunity for the farmers, as well as the people working the fields, to have a celebration, and for us to show our appreciation to them, to celebrate the Pecos Canteloupe."

Friday night activities will feature the Little Miss Canteloupe Pageant, which will be held at the Pecos High School Auditorium. There will also be a dance that night. La Mafia will be one of three groups offering a full night of live music, and dancing.

There will be something for everyone on Saturday, the seventh, including the Canteloupe Golf Tournament, at Pecos Municipal Golf Course, and a softball tournament.

From nine in the morning until five o'clock at night, the Civic Center will be the site of an arts and crafts show, games and rides, and vendors, booths. Entertainment will take place throughout the day. In keeping with the theme of a celebration of farming, and it's benefits for the community, farm equipment manufacturers will be on hand at the Civic Center, with displays of the latest technology in the area of agriculture.

The Championship Asado Cookoff will also be held at the Civic Center that day, beginning at twelve noon, with judging taking place at eight-thirty that night. First, second, and third-place winners in the cookoff will receive trophies and cash prizes.

Immediately after the awards ceremony for the cookoff, there will be a free dance at the Civic Center, which will continue until one in the morning.

We weren't kidding when we said there'd be something for everyone! The closing event of the weekend will be the Fly-In Breakfast, which will be held at the Pecos Municipal Airport, Sunday Morning, the eighth, at eight o'clock. Pilots will be flying in from throughout the area, with one contingent expected to fly in from California for their annual meeting. After breakfast, there will be some very unique contests, such as Canteloupe Bombing, where airborne contestants attempt to hit targets on the ground with - you guessed it - cantaloupes.

"Our invitation to West Texas is to come enjoy our cantaloupes," said Alligood, who will direct more than 150 volunteers in organizing this year's event. "Come take a look at what we have done to show our appreciation to the farming community, and their subsidiaries, for the business that they generate, and the jobs. That's really what it's all about."

Once again, the Pecos Canteloupe Festival takes place August 6th - 8th, in Pecos, Texas. For more information about the Festival, or to register for any of the events mentioned in this article, call the Pecos Chamber of Commerce, at 445-2406.

Los Hermanos Roman: Una Influencia Musical Desde Tarilas

Por Leonela

En algún tiempo, y si había un baile, la gente preguntaba '¿Quien esta tocando? ¿Es un conjunto o es orquesta?

¿Y por que preguntaban? Mayormente era por que la clase de banda usualmente significaba la edad y el entusiasmo del baile.'

Un conjunto era, la mayoría de las veces, guitarras, tamboras y acordeón. Este tipo de banda usualmente tocaban música Norteña, el cual tiene un ambiente de Country y Western, y también es muy tradicional. Una orquesta era todo eso mas pitos, guitarras eléctricas, luces y efectos con humo: Era esto adicional que permitía las orquestas que tocaran música moderna también como Jazz y en Español.

Los pitos hacían toda la diferencia a mucha gente. Ellos sabían que significaba fuerte, recio y emocionante. Pero, al pasar el tiempo, las orquestas ya no estaban disponibles.

El conjunto todavía está y también su música Norteña, pero que le paso a las orquestas? De una manera a de otra, siempre están cercas, nomas que ahora se llaman grupos. Grupos son versiones modificados de las orquestas por que tienen todos los pitos, guitarras eléctricas, luces y todo el ambiente de una orquesta. Realmente, la única diferencia es el nombre.

Bueno, Oeste de Tejas, eso es lo que tiene Pecos. Tarilas, como se conoce Pecos por mucha gente, es el hogar de una orquesta llamado los Roman Brothers. Que mas se puede o se debe de llamar a un grupo de hermanos que tocan una variedad de música, con todo los instrumentos de una orquesta. Ellos tocan canciones desde lo mejor de los 40's, Norteño, Salsa, estilo Santana, y por su puesto, Tejano.

Los Roman Brothers tienen mas de 20 años de influencia musical en la área del Oeste de Tejas. Desde el tiempo cuando Andy Roman toco con 'MARO', otra banda de Pecos de mas antes, hasta los Roman Brothers de ahora.

Esta familia ha caminado mucho en el mundo musical.

"Yo creo que esta en mi sangre. Desde que me acuerdo, yo siempre he tronado los dedos o he tarareado," dice Andy Roman. "Cuando yo tenia 13 años, me ofrecieron un trabajo con unos amigos, músicos locales. Se llamaban 'MARO'.

Los miembros originales de 'MARO' incluían Severo Jaques, Mundy Esparza, Larry Gonzales, Joe Luis Fuentes, Chocho Galindo y Bear Salcido, todos de Pecos.'

Muchos del Oeste de Tejas se acuerdan de 'MARO' cuando ellos tocaban a través de esta área. Este grupo tocaba una variedad de música la cual los hizo populares y muy apoyados por el público donde ellos se presentaban. ¿Pues quien escribía y componía la música de 'MARO'? "En ese tiempo, todos participábamos. Todos estábamos tratando de crear," dice Andy.

Como paso el tiempo, otros de los hermanos Roman se comenzaron a comprometerse. Cada uno en diferentes tiempos. Una vez que se acabo "MARO', aparecieron los Roman Brothers. "Era lomas de lo mejor 40, algo Funk. Y nos fuimos de gira," dijo Andy.

Unos miembros de los Roman Brothers tienen fondos únicos y tocan una variedad de instrumentos musicales.

Tito Roman es graduado de la Universidad de Sul Ross el año 1993 donde el estudio para ser maestro. El es tamborista del grupo. Toca los tambores, las congas y es también vocalista. El es el único miembro casado del grupo.

Joel Roman toca el bass. También toca el saxofón, los tambores y canta. El ayuda a componer la música y es el critico del grupo.

Artie Roman, el mas joven de los hermanos es el primer vocalista. "Cuando yo estaba mas joven," recuerda Artie, "ellos me daban algo que tocar, una campana o maracas, y las tocaba. Eso me inspiro." Ahora, Artie Roman es el sonido de los Roman Brothers. De acuerdo a Andy, "Con la música que hay ahora, la voz de él pega mucho mejor."

Artie toca el teclado, la guitarra, el trombón y el acordeón. Por supuesto, no todos al mismo tiempo.

Joe Romano es el guitarrista del grupo. Es uno de dos que han sido escogidos para tocar con la orquesta en los Tejano Music Awards en San Antonio. El fue invitado al 11th Annual Tejano Music Awards como guitarrista. El siguiente año, Andy Roman estuvo invitado a tocar su saxofón con la orquesta en el 12th Annual Tejano Music Awards. El público fue afortunado a tener la oportunidad de oír a Andy tocar un solo con su saxofón.

Andy Roman, como ya lo ha adivinado, es el originador del grupo. El toca el saxofón, el clarinete, teclado y el acordeón.

Andy trae con el una variedad de experiencia. Desde cuando trabajo con Johnny Hernandez en Corpus, Austin, San Antonio y Dallas, a presentándose en los Tejano Music Awards, a tocando con Stevie Wonder.

Si, Oeste de Tejas, Stevie Wonder. Andy audicionó y toco con el por un mes, mes y medio en Santa Fe, Nuevo México.

Todos estos antecedentes distintos hacen a una banda diferente, o debemos decir orquesta.

Unos de los recuerdos mas favoritos donde ellos se han presentado en donde fueron bien recibidos incluyen Fort Stockton, Midland, Odessa, Big Spring, Abilene, Roswell, Carlsbad, El Paso, San Angelo y Presidio. Así que ya ven, ellos tienen un radio de 200 a 300 millas.

La banda se ha presentado con tales artistas como Little Joe, La Mafia, La Sombra y Culturas.

Esta banda de Tarilas, aunque han estado en el público por mucho tiempo siempre son muchachos de 'pueblo pequeño'. "En esta área, siempre nos respaldan, nos miran como sus amigos, sus vecinos," dice Joe.

Los Roman Brothers han hecho muchas beneficencias para el área. Ellos se han presentado en la iglesia, fondos para enfermos de cáncer y para aliviar el área cuando se suscita accidentes. Esta banda esta realmente orientada para la comunidad.

Una rasgo de los Roman Brothers que se a vuelto en una tradición favorita en Pecos, son sus serenatas de las 'Mañanitas' el Día de las Madres.

Es una tradición comenzado por Andy cuando el tenia 13 años. Ellos han cantado y han hecho serenatas durante la noche el Día de las Madres desde entonces. Excluyendo el año que ellos estaban de gira. "Una vez lo hicimos hasta las 11:30 del siguiente día sin parar," afirmo Joel. "El cuerpo no mas no pudo mas," declaro Andy.

Con sus Padres orgullosos de sus hijos y el modo que la gente reacciona a ellos, todo esto les inspira a seguir con su música y sus presentaciones.

La música Tejana ya no esta limitada como antes, que era solamente algo para el fin de semana. "Ahora está expuesta tremendamente, y está creciendo cada año," explica Andy. "Yo deseo que la generación joven continúen apoyando la música Tejana."

La banda en la actualidad a sacado unas cuantas canciones para la radio, las cuales incluye 'Andy's Polka' y 'Puchelo, Puchelo'.

En un reciente concierto, en el Lienzo Charro Rodeo Grounds, por la calle Berry en el sur-oeste de Odessa, el grupo ofreció una presentación increíble. Cada canción, cada ritmo fue tocado con tanta emoción que cuando Andy toco su saxofón, le dejo 'la piel de gallina' al público al verlos y oírlos tocar. Todo el Jazz, Tejano y Salsa que se oía

The Roman Brothers: A Musical Influence from Tarilas

By Leonela

At one time, if a dance was going on, people would ask ' Who's playing? Is it a conjunto or an orchestra?' Why, you ask? Mainly because the type of band usually signified the age and enthusiam of the dance.

A conjunto was mainly guitars, drums, and an accordion. This type of band usually played Norteño music which has a little Country and Western aura about it and of course very traditional. An orchestra was all that plus horns, electric guitars, lights and smoke effects. It was these additions that let an orchestra play modern pop music as well as Jazz and Spanish music.

Horns made the big difference to a lot of people. They knew it meant loud, fast and exciting. But as time went on, these orchestras were no longer available.

The conjunto is still around and so is it's Norteño music. But what happened to the orchestras? Well, in a way, they're still around. Only now they are called grupos. Grupos are a modified version of orchestras because they have all the horns, the electric guitars, the lights and all the aura of an orchestra. The only real difference one can notice between a grupo and an orchestra is the name.

Well, West Texas, that's what Pecos has. Tarilas, as Pecos is known to many, is the home of an orchestra called 'The Roman Brothers'. What else can you or should you call a group of brothers who play a variety of music with all the instrumentation of an orchestra. They play songs from the top 40, Norteño, Salsa, Santana style and of course, Tejano.

The Roman Brothers have over 20 years of musical influence in the West Texas area. From the time Andy Roman played with 'MARO', another hometown band from Pecos a while back, to The Roman Brothers of today.

This family of brothers has come a long way with the music world.

"I guess it's in my blood. Ever since I can remember, I've been snapping my fingers or humming," said Andy Roman. "When I was 13 years old, they offered me a job with some friends, local musicians. They were called 'MARO'."

The original members of 'MARO' included Severo Jaques, Mundy Esparza, Larry Gonzales, Joe Luis Fuentes, Chocho Galindo and Bear Salcido, all from Pecos..

A lot of West Texas may remember 'MARO' when they used to performed throughout this area. This group played a variety of music which made them popular and were supported by the public they performed for. Now just who wrote and arranged the music for 'MARO'? "At the time, everybody was pitching in. We were all trying to create," said Andy.

As time went on, the other Roman brothers started getting involved. Each at different times. Once 'MARO' broke up, The Roman Brothers emerged. "It was more of a top 40, funk thing. And we went on the road," said Andy.

Some members of The Roman Brothers have very unique backgrounds and play a variety of instruments.

Tito Roman is a 1993 graduate of Sul Ross University where he studied to be a teacher. He is the percussionist of the group, playing the drums, congas and is also a vocalist for the band. He is the only married member of the band.

Joel Roman plays bass. He also plays the saxophone, percussions and sings back up. He helps with the arrangement of the music and is the critic of the band.

Artie Roman, the youngest of the brothers is the groups lead vocalist. "When I was younger," remembers Artie, "they'd give me something to play, like a cow bell or some maracas, and I would play. That inspired me." Now Artie Roman is the sound of the Roman Brothers. "With the music that is going on today, his voice fits a lot better," stated Andy.

Artie plays the keyboards, guitar, trombone and the accordion for the band. Of course, not all at the same time.

Por Amarante Cordova

El agua siempre a jugado un papel importante en la historia y el comercio de Fort Stockton. Así es que no es una sorpresa que uno de los eventos anuales mas importantes de esa comunidad es el Carnaval del Agua de Fort Stockton.

El principal evento durante esta larga semana de actividades es el propio Carnaval del Agua, el cual toma lugar en la piscina Comanche Springs. Este año la función, que esta escrita y dirigida por la propia Alice Durksen de Fort Stockton, es titulada "Juega Como. . ."

"Es un paseo cómico una pequeña representación, y tiene actos de nado y baile que envuelve a esta representación," explica Connie Morrow, quien es la presidenta de este año del Carnaval del Agua. "Da vueltas alrededor de una historia de que en una cápsula del tiempo que se a abierto en el siglo veinte y uno. Y ellos encuentran juguetes, diferentes juguetes. Trompos, y caballo mecedor, calidoscopio, y juegos de té. Usted nómbrelo, nosotros lo tenemos."

En adición a la función, habrá también una serie de concursos de belleza cada noche, con la selección de Señorita Fort Stockton el Sábado por la noche. El Sábado en la mañana pasara el desfile por el centro de Fort Stockton, cual es un Histórico Distrito en el Registro Nacional. También es un fin de semana popular para las reuniones de las escuelas secundarias.

Visitantes durante el fin de semana del Carnaval del Agua, el cual comienza el 15 de Julio, también tendrán la oportunidad de disfrutar de atractivos de todo el año de la comunidad. Esto incluye el Museo de Annie Riggs una historia local, el Museo de Wheels & Frills de autos antiguos y muñecas, y el histórico Fort Stockton, el correo postal del Ejército de los Estados Unidos, establecido en 1858. 'Paisano Pete', un correcaminos que mide 11 pies de altura, y 22 pies de largo, es una parada para los fotógrafos.

Allí hay varios modos en donde el impacto del Carnaval del Agua, cual fuese primeramente celebrado en 1936, sentido en Fort Stockton. Primero, provee una oportunidad para todos para promover a su comunidad a los visitantes que vendrán desde todas partes del Oeste de Tejas. Un exitoso fin de semana de Carnaval es únicamente posible por medio del apoyo de la comunidad entera.

"Normalmente tenemos un reparto de papeles de 300 participantes en actos de bailes, actos de nado, de reparto de orador," dice Morrow, que esta sirviendo su tercer año como socia de la mesa Directiva del Carnaval del Agua. "Y de la tripulación de apoyo. Nosotros construimos apoyo masivo alrededor de la piscina, en materia de dos semanas. Básicamente, nosotros ponemos en función, nosotros la pintamos, durante largas horas."

"Es todo voluntario, todo voluntario. Nosotros somos una organización de beneficencia pública. Nosotros tenemos lo que se llama la Organización del Carnaval del Agua, que envuelve a socios de todas partes, y ellos son nuestros apoyos de dinero."

El impacto del Carnaval del Agua también se siente en la economía local de Fort Stockton, como los negocios de todas partes de la comunidad complacen a los visitantes de fuera de la ciudad.

"Si, tiene un impacto económico muy grande," esta de acuerdo Morrow. "Nosotros sentimos a la ciudad a mero arriba. Los restaurantes están en una prosperidad repentina. Las pequeñas tiendas, usted sabe, las pequeñas tiendas de regalos, se benefician grandemente."

Es un ocupado, exitante momento para Morrow y la comunidad entera. Y ellos esperan que toda la gente vendrá y visitara, y compartirá la excitación.

"Si, si. Nos gustaría invitar a todo el mundo del Permian Basin, en Tejas, y del mundo, para que venga y presencien nuestra función!"

A Broadway Review at the Fort Stockton Water Carnival

By Amarante Cordova

Water has always played an important role in the history and the commerce of Fort Stockton. So it's not surprising that one of that community's most popular annual events is the Fort Stockton Water Carnival.

The main event during this long weekend of activities is the actual Water Carnival itself, which takes place at the Comanche Springs Pool. This year's show, which was written and directed by Fort Stockton's own Alice Durksen, is titled "Play Like . . ."

"It is a skit, a little play, and it has swimming and dance acts involved in it," explained Connie Morrow, who is President of this year's Water Carnival. "It revolves around a storyline of a time capsule that has been opened in the twenty-first century. And they have found toys, different toys. Tops, and rocking horses, kaleidoscopes, and tea sets. You name it, we have it."

In addition to the show, there will also be a series of beauty pageants each night, with 'Miss Fort Stockton' being selected on Saturday night. A Saturday morning parade will pass through Fort Stockton's downtown, which is a National Register Historic District. It is also a popular weekend for high school reunions.

Visitors during the Water Carnival weekend, which begins July 15th, will also have an opportunity to enjoy the community's year-round attractions. These include the Annie Rigg's Museum of local history, the Wheels & Frills Museum of antique cars and dolls, and historic Fort Stockton, a United States Army post, established in 1858. 'Paisano Pete', a roadrunner that is 11-feet tall, and 22-feet long, is a popular stop for photographers.

There are several ways in which the impact of the Water Carnival, which was first held in 1936, is felt in Fort Stockton. First, it provides an opportunity for everyone to promote their community to the visitors who will come from throughout West Texas. A successful Carnival weekend is possible only through the support of the entire community.

"We normally have a cast of 300 participants in dance acts, swim acts, the speaking cast itself," said Morrow, who is serving in her third year as a member of the Water Carnival Board. "And the prop crew. We build-up massive props around the pool, in a matter of two weeks. Basically, we get it put-up, we get it painted, during long hours."

"It is all volunteer, all volunteer. We are a non-profit organization. We have what is called the Water Carnival Association, that involves members from all over, and those are our money backers."

The impact of the Water Carnival is also felt in the local economy of Fort Stockton, as businesses throughout the community cater to the visitors from out-of-town.

"Yes, it has a very large economic impact," agreed Morrow. "We fill the town up. The restaurants are booming. The little stores, you know, the little gift stores, benefit greatly."

It's a busy, exciting time for Morrow and the entire community. And they hope everyone will come and visit, and share the excitement.

"Yes, yes. We'd like to invite everybody in the Permian Basin, in Texas, and the world, to come and see the show!"

Diet Especially Important to Teen Athletes

HOUSTON-Diet is an important factor in teenage athletes' performance, but many teens have poor and irregular eating habits.

To keep energy reserves "topped up," a well balanced diet should be divided into three meals and at least two between-meal snacks, said Dr. Marta Fiorotto of the USDA's Children's Nutrition Research Center at Baylor College of Medicine in Houston.

She recommends against eating candy for quick energy, preferring granola, peanut butter and jelly sandwiches, bananas, low-fat milk or dried fruits.

All young athletes should drink plenty of water to replace fluids lost through perspiration. Fiorotto suggests a cup of cold water every 20 minutes while working out to prevent dehydration, heat cramps and heat exhaustion.

Surgical Procedure Could Help Asthmatics

HOUSTON-A simple surgical procedure may help asthmatics who suffer from sinobronchial syndrome.

Sinobronchial syndrome occurs when patients are treated for an asthma attack but not for the clogged sinuses that triggered the attack, causing the asthma to repeatedly return.

Endoscopic surgery can clear the sinus drainage canals, said Dr. Gene Alford, an otorhinolaryngologist at Baylor College of Medicine in Houston.

A tube with a tiny cutting device attached at the end is inserted through the nose. Through a "telescope," the surgeon opens the sinus' bony channels and removes excess mucosa, the moist tissue lining the sinus cavity. In asthmatics or people with allergies, the tissue swells, causing the channels to close.

Endoscopic surgery is easier on patients than is standard sinus surgery which leaves large incisions, bruising and swelling, Alford said.

Abused Children Experience Anxiety Disorder

HOUSTON-Some children living through abuse and neglect suffer from post-traumatic stress disorder (PTSD), commonly associated with combat veterans.

PTSD, an anxiety disorder resulting from a stressful or traumatic event, can also affect burn, earthquake and flood victims as well as victims or rape and other violence.

Not all abused children will develop it, said Dr. Bruce Perry, a psychiatrist at Baylor College of Medicine in Houston.

"The child's age and the frequency and type of abuse make a difference," Perry said. "But, when the abuse involves life-threatening terror and physical violence, PTSD is common."

The children's bodies often operate at a low-level fear stage, Perry said. they have higher heart and breathing rates, disturbed sleep, high blood pressure and increased muscle tone.

"Their brains have adapted to survive in an unpredictable, violent world; however, that makes it hard to cope in healthy environments," he said.

La Dieta es muy Importante Para los Atletas Jovenes

HOUSTON-La dieta es un factor importante en la actuación de los atletas jovenes, pero muchos jovenes tienen hábitos de comer malos e irregulares.

Para mantenerse llenos los almacenes de energía, una dieta bien balanceada debe ser dividida en tres comidas y por lo menos dos meriendas entre comidas, dijo la Dra. Marta Fiorotto del Center de Investigación de la Nutrición de los Niños del Departamento de Agricultura en el Baylor College of Medicine en Houston.

Ella recomienda que no se usen caramelos para energía rápida. Es preferible comer "granola," sanwiches de mermelada y mantequilla de cacahuate, plátanos, leche baja en grasa, y frutas secas.

Todos los atletas jovenes deben tomar bastante agua para reemplazar los líquidos perdidos a través del sudor. Fiorotto sugiere una taza de agua cada 20 minutos durante el ejercicio para evitar deshidratacion, y calambres y abatimiento causados por el calor.

Un Procedimiento Quirúrgico Puede Ayudar a los Asmaticos

HOUSTON-Un procedimiento quirúrgico sencillo posiblemente ayude a personas con asma quienes sufren de "síndrome sinobronquial."

El síndrome sinobronquial ocurre cuando pacientes reciben tratamiento para un ataque de asma, pero no para los senos tapados que suscitaron el ataque, causando así que el asma regrese repetidamente.

La cirugía endoscopica puede abrir los canales de drenaje de los senos, dijo el Dr. Gene Alford, un otorrinolaringologo en el Baylor College of Medicine en Houston.

Un tubo con un aparato para cortar muy pequeño colocado en la punta se introduce por la nariz. A través de un "telescopio" el cirujano abre los canales óseos de los senos y quita mucosa excesiva. La mucosa es el tejido húmedo que reviste los senos. En los asmaticos o personas con alergias, este tejido se hincha, causando que los canales se cierren.

Los Niños Abusados Sufren de un Trastorno de Ansiedad

HOUSTON-Algunos niños que viven con abuso y descuido sufren del trastorno de estres post-traumatico (TEST), comúnmente asociado con veteranos del combate.

El TEST, un trastorno nervioso que puede desarrollarse después de un acontecimiento traumatico o estresante, también puede afectar a las víctimas de incendios, terremotos y diluvios, así como a sobrevivientes de violación y otras formas de violencia.

No todos los niños abusados desarrollaran el trastorno, dijo el Dr. Bruce Perry, un psiquiatra en el Baylor College of Medicine en Houston.

"La edad del niño, y la frecuencia y el tipo de abuso harán una diferencia," dijo Perry. "Sin embargo, cuando el abuso incluye amenazas aterrorizantes contra la vida y violencia física, el TEST es común."

Los cuerpos de estos niños funcionan en un estado de temor moderado, dijo Perry. Tienen frecuencias cardíacas y respiratorias mas altas, sueño alterado, presión arterial elevada y tono muscular aumentado.

"Sus cerebros se han adaptado para sobrevivir en un mundo violento e imprevisible; pero se les hace difícil acomodarse en un ambiente saludable."

planetarium also has an exhibit honoring the exploration of space.

The Marian Blakemore Planetarium is open Tuesday thru Saturday, from ten in the morning, until five o'clock in the afternoon, and Sundays, from two till five o'clock in the afternoon. Planetarium shows are presented Tuesday nights at seven-thirty, and Sunday afternoons, at two o'clock and three-thirty. Admission is $2.00 for adults, and $1.00 for children under twelve years of age.

Among the many things you will learn about at the planetarium, are meteors, which are also called shooting stars, or falling stars. If you had been in Odessa, just 20,000 years ago, you would have seen a particularly large meteor fall on Earth. But if you missed it's arrival, you can still see the hole it made in the Earth at TheOdessa Meteor Crater, the second-largest meteor crater in the United States, and now the site of an Ector County Park.

That meteor, made mostly of iron, but also containing some copper, sulphur, and chromium, is believed to have weighed 1,000 tons. It sank nearly 200 feet below the surface, and created a cone-shaped crater, 100 feet deep, and 500 feet wide. A substantial portion of that crater has since been filled in by wind-blown sand, but the meteor is still down there. An interpretive trail takes you through the crater, and explains how it was formed. There is also a covered picnic area, with charcoal grill,overlooking the crater.

The Odessa Meteor Crater Park is open seven days a week, from eight in the morning, until ten o'clock at night. Admission to the park is free. From downtown Odessa, at Grant Street, take Second Street west, for four miles. Cross south, over the railroad tracks, onto Murphy Road. Follow Murphy Road west, for four miles, then turn south, onto Meteor Crater Road, for two miles, until you reach the park.

Five miles northeast of Monahans, just a few hundred feet from Interstate Highway 20, is Monahans Sandhills State Park. The park covers nearly 4000 acres of sand dunes, some of which are seventy feet in height.

You may not know it just by looking, but some of those sand dunes are actually changing, growing or moving as the wind blows their sand! Other dunes are stabilized by 'forests' of shinoak, fully mature trees that bear large acorns, yet are less than four feet tall.

In prehistoric times, bands of Indians camped in the area, to gather the acorns, which were ground into meal. Mesquite beans were also harvested with the pools of fresh water that gathered in the small valleys between the dunes.

Those pools of water can still be found. In fact, the park recommends that you quietly watch these areas at dawn, and at dusk, in order to observe the wildlife that comes there to drink. There is a visitor's center, with colorful exhibits about the plants, the animals, the geology, and the history of the area.

There are numerous picnic sites throughout the park, and camping locations for both tents and trailers. The trailer sites offer water and electricity. Shower facilities are also available. You can also rent boards or disks from the park, in order to enjoy one of it's most popular activities, sandsurfing on the dunes.

Monahans Sandhills State Park is open seven days a week, from eight in the morning until ten o'clock at night. Admission to the park is $3.00 per vehicle (with up to 12 occupants), then $12.00 per vehicle (with up to 48 occupants), then $20.00 per vehicle (with more than 48 occupants).

If the Monahans Sandhills sound like a classic desert to you, then the oasis can be found to the southwest, at Balmorhea State Park, just four miles west of Balmorhea, on US Highway 290.

Actually, this has been a popular place for travellers to stop, for a long, long time. The San Solomon Springs, providing nearly 25-million gallons of water each day, made this a favorite watering place for herds of buffalo, nomadic bands of Indians, and settlers from Mexico and the eastern United States.

This natural wonder was to play an important role in the history and development of Reeves County. Water from the springs was diverted to irrigate farmland, making it an agricultural center of West Texas. Livestock also came to depend upon the water, just as the buffalo had, and ranching became another important industry of the area.

The Great Depression that swept the country in the 1930's, also had it's impact upon West Texas. One impact was a CCC, or Civilian Conservation Corps, a camp that was established here. Of the many projects completed by the CCC in the area, perhaps the most enduring was the outdoor swimming pool, the "Oasis of West Texas", at Balmorhea State Park.

This pool, the world's largest spring-fed pool, covers 1 and 3/4 acres, and is replenished each day by the cool, clear water of the springs. Parts of the pool are 30 feet deep, which makes them attractive scuba and skin diving.

In addition to the tent campsites, with water, and the trailer campsites, with water and electricity, there is an 18-room motel, a recreation hall for day or overnight use, and picnic areas with tables, grills, and drinking water. During the summer months, there are concession stands, and bathhouses with hot showers. Visitors are warned, however, that this is a popular park, and reservations for the campsites are highly recommended.

Balmorhea State Park is open seven days a week. There is an admission charge of $4.00 per vehicle. Swimming in the pool, which is open from eight in the morning until eight o'clock at night, is free.

Of course, these are just a few of the attractions in West Texas this summer. We hope you have as much fun, enjoying these, and discovering others, as we did. And we also hope that you take it easy, take it slow, and come home safe. It's the best way to end your day on the West Texas highway.

LULAC, an Organization of Strength

By Jeffrey McDonald

LULAC, the League of United Latin American Citizens, and the role it plays in the community, has always occupied a special place in the memory of Felipa Lara.

"You know, when I was little, I was from Pecos, originally. And LULAC was very strong in Pecos," recalled Lara, who now serves as local President of LULAC in Midland. "So it always stayed with me, that LULAC was a strong organization for the minority community."

"When I came to Midland - I came to Midland way back - they didn't have it. Or if they did, I never heard of it, never heard of LULAC. When it started organizing here, in Midland, my eyes opened, my ears tingled! I said, 'I want to belong to LULAC. I want to see what it stands for. I want to be in there with them, and see what it does for the community!'"

The history of LULAC actually goes back nearly 65 years. The first LULAC Convention was called to order May 18, 1929, at Allende Hall, in Corpus Christi, Texas. This came after two years of unification talks among such groups as the Sons of America, the Knights of America, and the Latin American League. The talks were aimed at uniting them, and other similar groups, into one organization, with a common charter, constitution, and goal.

The LULAC philosophy stresses belief in individual political and religious freedom, equality of social and economic opportunity, and acceptance of the duties and responsibilities that are a part of being a citizen. There is also an emphasis upon education, and the critical role it plays in the growth and development of the nation, it's principles, and it's people.

For Lara, these goals are met by assisting people as they try to sort through the large, often complicated system that administers various aspects of the community. She has found that people are not always aware of their rights within that system.

"I work with a part of the community that is not real involved and is in the dark as to what their rights are," explained Lara, who is active in the district and state levels of LULAC, as well as local. "Some of the people that I work with are people that don't know that these are issues that they can speak out on. That they don't have to take it."

"And things like that, you know. Things that make you angry, to where it makes you feel that you have to be a spokesman, I guess, to make them aware, and say, 'Well, you call me, and I'll try to help you find out what needs to be done, who you need to talk to. And if I need to, I'll go with you, or I'll find someone to go with you. But I'll try to direct you in the direction you need to take.'"

For Lara, volunteer service with LULAC has allowed her to grow as a person, to become more aware. It has led her to become more active in her community.

"I was getting involved in LULAC. Then it opened doors for me, that I could join other organizations. And I joined others," said Lara, who, in addition to LULAC, is also active with the Hispanic Chamber, neighborhood housing, and is a community liaison and home visitor for seven schools in the Midland Independent School District. "The more I joined, the more involved I became, because the more aware I became."

Lara stresses that membership in LULAC is not restricted to Latin Americans, just as the issues addressed by LULAC are not confined to those confronting Latin Americans.

LULAC does not have an office in Midland, and you will not find the organization listed by name in the telephone book. It is an organization of volunteers, working from their homes, over their private telephone lines.

For more information about LULAC and it's role in the community, you can call Felipa Lara, President of the Midland Chapter, at 570-8208.

"There are certain issues in Midland, that affect the Mexican-Americans, the Hispanics, where I think you need an organization like LULAC, and what it stands for," said Lara. "It's strong. It stands up strong behind the Hispanic community, on the issues."

"And what happens is, we don't stand alone. We have the support of the district, and the state. We're not standing here, alone!"

LULAC, una Organización de Fuerza

Por Jeffrey McDonald

LULAC, la Liga de los Ciudadanos Unidos Latino Americanos, y el papel que juega en la comunidad, siempre a tenido un lugar especial ocupado en la memoria de Felipa Lara.

"Usted sabe, cuando yo estaba pequeña, yo era de Pecos, originalmente. Y LULAC era bastante fuerte en Pecos," recuerda Lara, quien ahora sirve como Presidenta local de LULAC en Midland. "Así es que siempre se quedo conmigo, que LULAC fue una organización fuerte para la comunidad minoritaria."

Cuando yo vine a Midland — yo vine a Midland hace mucho tiempo — ellos no la tenían (organización LULAC). O si la tenían, yo nunca escuche de ella, nunca escuche de LULAC. Y cuando comenzaron a organizarla aquí, en Midland, mis ojos se abrieron, mis oídos me empezaron a zumbar! Yo dije, 'yo quiero pertenecer a LULAC. Yo quiero ver para que esta. Yo quiero estar dentro de allí con ellos, y ver que hacen por la comunidad!' "

La historia de LULAC actualmente va hacia atrás casi 65 años. La primera Convención LULAC fue llamada para sesión el 18 de Mayo de 1929, en la Sala Allende, en Corpus Christi, Tejas. Esto vino después de dos años de pláticas unificadas entre tales grupos como los Hijos de América, los Caballeros de América, y la Liga Latino Americana. Las pláticas fueron con el propósito de unir a estos, y otros, grupos similares, dentro de una organización, con una carta, constitución y meta común.

La filosofía LULAC de énfasis en la creencia de la política individual y la libertad religiosa, igualdad en las oportunidades sociales y económicas, y aceptación de los derechos y responsabilidades que son una parte de el ser ciudadano. También hay un énfasis sobre enseñanza, y un papel critico que juega en el crecimiento y desarrollo de la nación, sus principios, y sus pueblos.

Para Lara, estas metas son propiamente para auxiliar a las personas como ellas tratan de clasificar a través del largo, muchas veces complicado sistema que administra varios aspectos de la comunidad. Ella a encontrado que las personas no están siempre enteradas de sus derechos entre este sistema.

"Yo trabajo con una parte de la comunidad que no esta realmente involucrada, y esta en la obscuridad de cuales son sus derechos," explica Lara, quien esta activa a niveles distritales y estatales de LULAC, así como al nivel local. "Alguna de la gente con la que trabajo, son gente que no saben que estas son ediciones que ellos pueden comunicar por fuera. Que ellos no tienen que aguantárselo."

Brian Adomick/Midland Reporter-Telegram

"Y cosas como esas, usted sabe. Cosas que la hacen enojar, hasta donde la hacen sentir que usted tiene que ser un interlocutor, yo pienso, para hacerles saber. Y decir, 'Bueno, usted me llama, y yo trataré de ayudarlo a encontrar que necesidades se pueden hacer, con quien tiene que hablar. Y si yo necesito, yo iré con usted, o yo buscaré a alguien que vaya con usted. Pero yo trataré de dirigirlo en la dirección que usted necesite tomar.' "

Para Lara, el servicio voluntario con LULAC le a permitido a ella crecer como persona, de estar mas consciente. Y la a conducido a estar mas activa en su comunidad.

"Yo me estaba involucrando en LULAC. Cuando se me abrieron mas puertas, en las que yo podía unirme a otras organizaciones. Y yo me uní a otras," dice Lara, quien, en adición a LULAC, esta también activa con la Cámara Hispana, alojamiento para vecindad, y es enlace de la comunidad, y es enlace de la comunidad, y es visitadora de siete escuelas en el Distrito Escolar Independiente de Midland. "Los mas que yo me junto, mas me involucro, por que mas consciente me hago."

Lara enfática que la membrecia en LULAC no es limitada a Latino Americanos, exactamente como la emisión señala por LULAC no es confinada para esos que confrontan Latinos Americanos.

LULAC no tiene una oficina en Midland, y usted no encontrara a la organización enlistada por su nombre en el directorio telefónico. Es una organización de voluntarios, trabajando desde sus hogares, sobre sus líneas telefónicas privadas.

Para mas informaciones acerca de LULAC y su papel en la comunidad, usted puede llamarle a Felipa Lara, Presidenta del Cabildo de Midland, al 570-8208.

"Hay unas ciertas ediciones en Midland, que afectan a los Mexico-Americanos, los Hispanos, donde yo pienso usted necesita una organización como LULAC, y de lo que se trata," dice Lara. "Esta fuerte, usted sabe. Su posición es fuerte detrás de la comunidad Hispana, en las ediciones."

"Y lo que pasa es que, nosotros no estamos solos. Nosotros tenemos el apoyo del distrito y del estado. No estamos parados aquí, solos!"

Newspapers

Continued

The reasons for this lack of diversity at the top are not a mystery. As Ernie Sotomayor, an editor at New York Newsday, notes: "While many newspapers have gone out and recruited reporters from other papers, a lot have stopped there and don't realize that the next step is to get these people into management."

Richard Thien, a founder of USA Today who lectures and writes about newsroom training, puts it more bluntly. "Most publishers are Neanderthal in how they go about the issue of including everyone in management. They talk a good game and go up to hit the ball with no bat in hand."

Also contributing to the tiny number of Hispanic newspaper managers is the lack of management training opportunities in the industry. Few Hispanics in key positions serve as mentors to young Hispanic journalists. There's a growing dissatisfaction with the profession among all journalists, not just those of color.

Newspapers should continue recruiting entry-level Hispanics to be writers, reporters and copy editors until their numbers reflect their percentage in their local communities.

But the push for diversity must move on to the next level — that of promoting trained, talented Latinos into decision-making positions where they can affect hiring, news content, news coverage and news packaging. Once they get there, they can serve as mentors to younger Latino journalists and help groom them for entry into the management ranks.

How do they diversify their management ranks? Here are some ways already employed by some enlightened newspaper companies:

— Identify and track journalists of color with management potential and develop individualized career plans for them;

— Place them on candidate lists for every supervisory opening;

— Provide more management training opportunities;

— Sensitize newspaper managers and executives to the importance of diversity in the newsroom;

— Look beyond the newspaper industry when searching for potential non-white journalists;

— Develop newspaper internship programs targeted at non.white high school and college students.

The benefits of management diversity are many, and they are self.evident. Newspapers that reflect and stay in touch with the interests and concerns of their communities are likely to stay in business.

Smart management is diverse management.

Un Voto de Confianza Para el Comisionado del Condado Ward, Ben Villalobos

Por Jeffrey McDonald

El proceso político no ha sido todo el tiempo amable para Ben Villalobos Jr., Comisionado del Condado Ward. Pero eso no lo a detenido a el para renovar su compromiso para servir a la comunidad por medio de la oficina electoral.

La política en Tejas a ganado una reputación nacional como un proceso 'rudo y confuso'. La carrera competitiva entre Hutchison y Krueger, para ocupar el lugar en el Senado de los Estados Unidos que fue dejado por Lloyd Bentsen, fue únicamente la mas reciente competencia que atrajo atención a los medios informativos de la nación.

La presentación de Villalobos a ese proceso, para ambos el buen y el mal aspecto de este, vino en 1989, cuando el decidió ser candidato para la oficina del Comisionado del Condado Ward, Recinto Uno.

"Bueno, primero que nada, lo que a mi me intereso fue, que yo fui antes un oficial del departamento del alguacil mayor," recuerda Villalobos, quien atendió las academias de policía en Abilene y el Colegio del "Estado antes de servir en el Departamento de Policía de Monahans y el Departamento de Alguacil del Condado Ward. "Hay algunas cosas que yo vi en la comunidad, donde yo pensé que allí habrá algunos cambios. Es mas que nada en su mayor parte, estar allí, para representar mis antecedentes étnicos."

"Y entonces, una de las cosas, un poco atravesándose para hacerlas! Básicamente, Usted sabe, yo nomas quiero representar a la gente, protegerlos de sus derechos. Yo quiero ser un comunicador de la gente."

No a sido una carrera fácil para Villalobos. Primero fueron las elecciones primarias, contra numerosos contrarios. Seguida de una eliminatoria electoral y luego la elección principal, en el otoño de 1989, cuando el fue el primer Hispano elegido para el Comisionado del Condado Ward. Pero los desafiós no terminaron la mañana después de la elección.

"Es alguna cosa que, yo pienso, la mayor parte de los Hispanos pasan a través. Yo realmente me amargue de esto," dice "Villalobos. "Yo fui electo. Cosa siguiente, fui arrestado por fraude electoral. Entonces tuve que pasar através de un proceso legal, obtener un abogado, defenderme. Lo que finalmente paso fue que alguna gente no aceptaban el hecho que un Hispano fuera elegido."

Villalobos peleo estos desafíos, y completo el termino de sus primeros cuatro años como Comisionado del Condado, representando el septentrional de Monahans, la parte central de Monahans, y la comunidad de Barstow. El desarrollo la armonía con sus compañeros Comisionados, ayudándole a el mismo, representar hábilmente su recinto, quien lo eligió a el para un segundo termino.

"Si, yo lo hice. Y fue un voto de confianza, yo creo. Yo pienso que comprobé ser, y que no he tenido ningún problema desde entonces," recuerda Villalobos. "De primero, fue muy difícil para ellos aceptarme. Pero ahora, nosotros trabajamos como un buen equipo. Yo pienso que las diferencias estan en el pasado. Eso es lo que yo quiero ver, es por todos nosotros para trabajar unidos."

Ese trabajo implica directamente operaciones del Condado, y dinero que financEia estas operaciones.

"Es el proceso del presupuesto, y nosotros manejamos la mayor parte del dinero de los impuestos del contribuyente," explica Villalobos. "Nosotros tenemos albercas, nosotros tenemos parques, y el mantenimiento de los caminos."

"Pero la cosa mas importante es el proceso del presupuesto. Nosotros

"I've been in all kinds of work before. I was a law enforcement officer for eight years. And now politics. I'm just now getting to where I love politics." — Ben Villalobos, Jr., First Hispanic Ward County Commissioner.

distribuimos el dinero a diferentes departamentos principales. Y nosotros nomas dirigimos el negocio del condado. Básicamente, es solamente un negocio. Básicamente, es lo que es."

Es un negocio en el que Villalobos quisiera que mas gente participara, particularmente miembros de la comunidad Hispana.

"En mi condado, cuando fui elegido, fue realmente una desventaja. La gente no llegaba y no se involucraba en las elecciones. Yo hice algo que nunca nadie había hecho," dice Villalobos. "Y en seguida que tienes a estas personas motivadas, ellas fueron un buen respaldo mío. Pero usted tiene que estar encima de ellos y encima de ellos. Algunas veces, ellos olvidan."

"Pero ellos siempre estarán ahí por usted, cuando usted las necesite. Esta es una cosa de que yo estoy contento. Pero yo quisiera que ellos se involucraran mas en las reuniones de la Corte de los Comisionados, y otras actividades sociales que siguen."

Y con la participación, viene la satisfacción de ser parte de la comunidad a la que usted sirve. Una satisfacción y orgullo que Villalobos siente como un resultado de su servicio a la gente de Monahans y el Condado Ward.

"Oh, básicamente, yo he disfrutado de mi trabajo. Yo pienso que esta comunidad no a sido mas que buena conmigo!" dice Villalobos, quien fue criado en Barstow, y graduado de la Escuela Secundaria de Pecos. "Yo he estado en toda clase de trabajos antes. Yo fui oficial de la fuerza publica por ocho años. Y ahora político. Ahora mismo estoy llegando a donde quiero la política!"

A Vote of Confidence for Ward County Commissioner, Ben Villalobos

By Jeffrey McDonald

The political process has not always been kind to Ward County Commissioner Ben Villalobos, Jr. But that has not stopped him from renewing his commitment to serving his community through elected office.

Politics in Texas have gained a national reputation as a 'rough and tumble' process. The runoff between Hutchison and Krueger, to fill the United States Senate seat vacated by Lloyd Bentsen, was only the most recent race to attract the attention of the national media.

Villalobos' introduction to that process, to both the good and the bad aspects of it, came in 1989, when he decided to run for the office of Ward County Commissioner, Precinct One.

"Well, first of all, what interested me was, I used to be a deputy sheriff," recalled Villalobos, who attended police academies in Abilene and State College before serving with the Monahans Police Department and the Ward County Sheriff's Department. There's some things that I saw in the community, where I thought there should be some changes. It was, mostly, being there, to represent my ethnic background."

"And then, one of the things, I kind of got dared to do it! Basically, I just wanted to represent the people, take care of their rights. I wanted to be a spokesperson for the people."

It was not an easy race for Villalobos. First there was the primary election, with numerous opponents. A runoff election followed, and then the main election, in the fall of 1989, when he became the first Hispanic elected to the Ward County Commissioners. But the challenges did not end the morning after the election.

"It's something that, I think, most Hispanics go through. I'm real bitter about it," said Villalobos. "I got elected. Next thing, I get arrested for voter fraud. So I had to go through the legal process, get an attorney, defend myself. What it boils down to is, some people here wouldn't accept the fact that a Hispanic got elected."

Villalobos fought those challenges, and completed his first four-year term as a County Commissioner, representing northern Monahans, part of central Monahans, and the community of Barstow. He developed a rapport with his fellow Commissioners, helping him to ably represent his precinct, which elected him to a second term.

"Yes, I did. And it was a vote of confidence, I guess. I think that I proved myself, and I haven't had any problems since then," recalled Villalobos. "At first, it was hard for them to accept me. But now, we work like a good team. I think the differences are in the past. That's what I want to see, is for all of us to work together."

That work involves directing county operations, and the money that finances those operations.

"It's the budget process, and we handle most of the taxpayer's money," explained Villalobos. "We have swimming pools, we have parks, and road maintenance."

"But the most important thing is the budget process. We distribute the money to different department heads. And we just run the county business. Basically, it's just a business. Basically, that's what it is."

It is a business in which Villalobos wishes more people would participate, particularly members of the Hispanic community.

"In my county, when I got elected, it was a real drawback. People weren't coming out and getting involved in elections. I'd do some things that no one had ever done," said Villalobos. "And once you got these people motivated, they were good backers of mine. But you've got to keep on pushing them, and pushing them. Sometimes, they forget."

"But they'll always be there for you, when you need them. That's one thing I'm glad of. But I wish they would get more involved in the Commissioner's Court meetings, and other social activities that go on."

And with the participation, comes the satisfaction of becoming a part of the community you serve. A satisfaction and pride that Villalobos feels as a result of his service to the people of Monahans and Ward County.

"Oh, basically, I've enjoyed my job. I think this community has been nothing but good to me!" said Villalobos, who was raised in Barstow, and graduated from Pecos High School. "I've been in all kinds of work before. I was a law enforcement officer for eight years. And now politics. I'm just now getting to where I love politics!"

Quietly, Clinton Entertains a 'Hispanic Agenda'

By Patricia Guadalupe

President Clinton is moving slowly yet steadily closer to developing firm ties with U.S. Hispanic political and activist leaders.

Short-term, such a relationship is important because of the Administration,s impending negotiations with Congress on the North American Free Trade Agreement.

Longer term for the former Arkansas governor, who still has to prove that he understands basic Hispanic community aspirations, there's the matter of reelection in '96.

With little fanfare, the President met at the White House June 3 with 24 board members of the National Hispanic Leadership Agenda, listening and responding to the group's ideas and concerns. It was the first time since his election that they have sat down to talk.

A few weeks ago, NHLA, a nonpartisan confederation of 28 national association leaders and a like number of community advocates and high-level Hispanic public officials, gave the President a C-minus grade for his Administration's record on Hispanic appointments to date.

But when they got together in the Oval Office this month, the agenda was a broader one, and over all, participants found the President sincere in his professed willingness to create a society in which Hispanics are no longer afterthoughts.

Talk centered on three issues: education equity, health reform and appointments.

On health reform, the President sent a markedly different signal than that given in April by First Lady Hillary Clinton, who heads his national Health Care Task Force, to a group of Latina health professionals. He said clearly that he would consider including undocumented persons in the national health care reform package. The First Lady had dismissed the possibility as "too costly."

"We told him how important it was to include evervbody, including undocumented workers, and he told us he has every intention of coming up with a plan that is truly universal," NHLA chair Janice Petrovich told Hispanic Link.

Petrovich, president of the education-directed organization ASPIRA, briefed Clinton on two issues of special interest to Hispanics:

1) equitable funding of school districts so that poor Hispanic ones are no longer shortchanged in resources and personnel, and 2) the need to revive and strengthen the federal Executive Order on Hispanic Educational Excellence, a 1990 gesture by President Bush that was backed with little significant support or action. Outlining some of his own education reform plans, Clinton asked for more information on both, with a promise to follow up.

He also assured NHLA executive director Frank Cota.Robles Newton that he was amenable to meeting more often with Hispanic leaders.

On the matter of Hispanic appointees, Juan Andrade, president of the Midwest/Northeast Voter Registration Education Project, expressed the group's concern. Hispanics make up 10 percent of the nation's population. Yet, to date, only 15 .- less than 5 percent — of the Administration's high-level appointments out of a potential 324 (to positions requiring Senate confirmation) have been Hispanic. Four Cabinet secretaries — at Agriculture, Defense, Veterans Affairs and State — have yet to name a single Hispanic to a key post on their staffs.

With some 138 slots remaining to be filled, Clinton said he hoped he could raise his grade to an A.

He was less committal on their concern about finally having a Hispanic serve on the U.S. Supreme Court, noting only that it was important to have a Latino there.

Jimmy Carter, the nation's last President to reach office with little or no prior contact with Hispanics, never really did seem to separate their issues from those of blacks.

In their appointments of Hispanics, Californian Ronald Reagan and Texan George Bush steered clear of individuals who were strong advocates on community-consensus issues.

By naming Federico Peña (Transportation) and Henry Cisneros (Housing and Urban Development) to his Cabinet, Clinton gained instant credibility. As NHLA's Newton emphasized after the latest session: "We still have some educating to do. But the reception we've received so far gives us hope that he'll be an attentive and responsive listener."

Brothers Continued

the Tejano Music Awards in San Antonio. He was invited for the 11th Annual Tejano Music Awards as a guitarist. The following year, Andy Roman was asked to play his saxophone with the orchestra at the 12th Annual Tejano Music Awards. The audience was also fortunate enough to have Andy play a solo at the awards.

Andy Roman, as you have may have guessed, is the origina- of the group. He is the woodwind section of the Roman Brothers. He plays the saxophone, clarinet, keyboards and the accordion.

Andy brings a variety of musical experience with him. From working with Johnny Hernandez in Corpus, Austin, San Antonio and Dallas, to performing in the Tejano Music Awards, to playing with Stevie Wonder.

Yes West Texas, Stevie Wonder. Andy auditioned and played with him for a month, month and a half in Santa Fe, New Mexico.

It's all these distinctive backgrounds that make for a distinctive band, or should we say orchestra.

Some of the most memorable places this band has performed at, in which they were very much supported by the public, include Fort Stockton, Midland, Odessa, Big Spring, Abilene, Roswell, Carlsbad, El Paso, San Angelo and Presidio. As you can see West Texas, they have a radius of 200 to 300 miles.

The Roman Brothers have performed with such artists as Little Joe, La Mafia, La Sombra and Culturas.

This band from Tarilas, although having been in the public eye for a long time, are still home town boys. "Around this area, they back us up. They see us as their regular friends, their regular neighbors," said Joel.

The Roman Brothers have done many benefits for this area. They have performed for the church, fund-raisers for cancer patients and relief aide around the area. This band is really community oriented.

Another trait of The Roman Brothers that has become a favorite tradition in Pecos are their special serenades of 'Las Mañanitas' during Mother's Day.

It is a tradition started by Andy Roman when he was 13 years old. They have sang and serenaded throughout the night on Mother's Day ever since, except of course, the year they were on the road. "One time we did it till 11:30 the next day without stopping," stated Joel. "The body couldn't sustain anymore," declared Andy.

With Mom and Dad pretty proud of their sons and the way people react to the Roman Brothers, this inspires them to continue with their music and performances.

Tejano music is no longer limited like it used to be, just a weekend thing. "Now it's exposed tremendously, it's growing every year," stated Andy. "I hope that the younger generation continued to support Tejano music."

The band currently has a few releases out on the radio which include 'Andy's Polka' and 'Puchelo, Puchelo'.

At a recent concert, at the Lienzo Charro Rodeo Grounds, on Berry Street on the southwest side of Odessa, the group gave a chilling performance. Every song, every beat was played with such enthusiasm that when Andy played his saxophone solo, it gave the audience 'goose-bumps' to see and hear them perform. All that Jazz, Tejano and Salsa heard just excited the audience. People were singing, dancing and giving a little yell when they felt the rhythm. That's a performance West Texas should be proud of. And if that's the way The Roman Brothers affect the audience, we're sure lucky their available to play in our area for our celebrations.

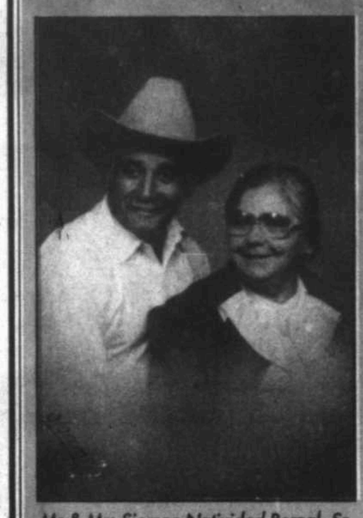

With the onda of Tejano Music being more progressive, The Roman Brothers have a bright future in the Tejano market.

For booking information, the Roman Brothers can be reached at (915) 445-5687 or 445-3130.

Artie Roman extends a warm invitation, "Next time you here that The Roman Brothers are going to play, I hope everybody goes up there and sees us."

Tranquilamente, Clinton Invita a una Agenda Hispana

Por Patricia Guadalupe

El Presidente Clinton esta moviéndose lenta, pero continuamente mas cerca al desarrollo de vínculos firmes con los dirigentes políticos y activistas Hispanos de los Estados Unidos. A corto plazo, dicha relación es importante debido a las negociaciones inminentes del gobierno con el Congreso sobre el Tratado Norte-Americano de Libre Comercio.

A plazo mas largo para el ex-gobernador de Arkansas, quien aun tiene que probar que comprende las aspiraciones fundamentales de la comunidad Hispana, existe el asunto de la reelección en 1996.

Con poca fanfarria, el presidente se reunió en la Casa Blanca el 3 de Junio con 24 miembros de la junta de directores de la Agenda Nacional de Dirigencia Hispana (NHLA en ingles), escuchando y respondiendo a las ideas y preocupaciones del grupo. Fue la primera vez desde su elección que se hayan sentado a hablar.

Hace algunas semanas, la NHLA, que es una confederación no partidarista de 28 asociaciones nacionales y una cantidad parecida de funcionarios públicos Hispanos de alto nivel y de activistas comunitarios, día al presidente una calificación de "C-" por el historial de su gobierno sobre los nombramientos de Hispanos hasta la fecha.

Pero cuando se reunieron en la Oficina Ovalada en este mes, el programa de trabajo fue mas amplio y, en su conjunto, los participantes hallaron que el presidente era sincero en su disposición declarada de crear una sociedad en la cual los Hispanos ya no sean mas ideas tardías.

La charla se centro en tres asuntos: La equidad en la enseñanza, la reforma sanitaria y los nombramientos.

Sobre la reforma sanitaria, el presidente dio una señal notablemente distinta que la que la primera dama Hillary Clinton, que encabeza a su Fuerza de Trabajo sobre la Atención Sanitaria, dio en abril ultimo a un grupo de profesionales latinas de la salud. El dijo claramente que consideraría la inclusión de las personas indocumentadas en el conjunto de la reforma de la atención nacional a la salud. La primera dama había descartado esa posibilidad como "demasiado costosa."

"Le dijimos cuan importante era el incluir a todo el mundo, abarcando a los trabajadores indocumentados, y el nos dijo que tiene toda intención de resultar con un plan que sea universal", dijo a Hispanic Link la presidenta de NHLA, Janice Petrovich.

La misma, que es presidenta de la organización ASPIRA, orientada hacia la enseñanza, informo brevemente a Clinton sobre dos asuntos de especial interés para los Hispanos:

1) La dotación equitativa de fondos para los distritos escolares, de modo que los distritos Hispanos pobres ya no reciban mas recursos y personal insuficientes, y

2) La necesidad de revivir y fortalecer a la Orden Ejecutiva Federal sobre la Excelencia Hispana en la Enseñanza, un gesto del Presidente Bush en 1990 que no fue respaldado por apoyo o acción de importancia.

Al delinear algunos de sus propios planes para la reforma de la enseñanza, Clinton pidió mas información sobre ambos puntos, con una promesa de proseguir respecto de ellos.

El aseguro también al director ejecutivo de la NHLA, Frank Cota-Robles Newton, que estaba dispuesto a reunirse mas a menudo con los dirigentes Hispanos.

Sobre el asunto de los nombramientos de Hispanos, Juan Andrade, presidente del Proyecto del Medio Oeste y el Nordeste para la Inscripción y la Enseñanza de Electores (MNVREP en ingles), manifestó la preocupación del grupo. Los Hispanos forman el 10% de la población nacional. Sin embargo, hasta la fecha, solo 15 — menos del 5% — de los nombramientos de alto nivel del gobierno de un potencial de 324 (para las plazas que necesitan de confirmación senatorial) han sido Hispanos. Cuatro secretarios del gabinete .. en Agricultura, Asuntos de Veteranos, Defensa y Estado - . todavía no han designado a ningún Hispano en alguna plaza de importancia en sus dotaciones de personal.

Con 138 plazas remanentes para cubrir, Clinton dijo que esperaba poder aumentar su calificación a una "A."

El se mostró menos dispuesto respecto del interés de NHLA por hacer finalmente que un Hispano preste servicios en el Tribunal Supremo de los Estados Unidos, haciendo notar solamente que era importante el tener a un latino allí.

Jimmy Carter, el ultimo presidente de la nación que llegara a su cargo con poco o ningún contacto previo con los Hispanos, nunca pareció realmente separar sus asuntos de los asuntos negros. En sus nombramientos de Hispanos, el Californiano Ronald Reagan y el Tejano George Bush se alejaron de los individuos que fueran defensores sólidos de los asuntos en que hubiera consenso de la comunidad.

Al nombrar a Federico Peña para la Secretaria del Transporte y a Henry Cisneros para la de Viviendas y Desarrollo Urbano en su gabinete, Clinton obtuvo verosimilitud instantánea. Pero, como enfatizo Newton, de NHLA, después de la ultima sesión: "Todavía tenemos alguna enseñanza que impartir. Pero la recepción que hemos recibido hasta ahora nos da esperanza de que el será un escucha atento y responsable."

Our 4-Year University Is Entering A New Era!

UTPB LOOKS BACK ON RICH 20-YEAR HISTORY

Some people make history by accident, their names etched across the pages of time by a chance encounter or unpredicted turn of events. For Bruce Behrendt, his place in history as the first graduate to accept a diploma from The University of Texas of the Permian Basin was the result of years' of carefully planned coursework coupled with a strong dose of patience and [illegible] help from a faculty member.

For that first commencement in May 1974, Behrendt was chosen upon the recommendation of history Professor J. Tillapaugh to be the first of the 37 graduates to come forward to receive his degree. It was, ironically enough, a bachelor's degree in history.

After graduation, he began a teaching career with the Ector County Independent School District, first as a coach, and today as the vocational coordinator for mentally handicapped students.

"I planned my 7 1/2 years of going to school to coincide with the opening of the university. From the time that a university in West Texas was first discussed, it was my goal to be in the first graduating class," explained Behrendt.

"Our commencement was held in the third floor of the Mesa Building, in the science wing," he recalled. "There were no interior walls and it was hot – no air conditioning."

THE CLASS OF '74

The 1974 graduating class earned 32 bachelor's degrees and five master's degrees. According to Susan McHan Luck, who lives in Temple, "The uniqueness of being in the pioneer graduating class was really an honor."

UT Permian Basin has maintained a commitment to excellence from its inception. Larry Turpen, who now lives in Alpine, Utah, came to the school as a graduate student. "I was looking for an educational challenge and I found it. The best time of my life was at UT Permian Basin and it was a great experience," he said.

THE FIRST STUDENTS

In September 1973, Midland and Odessa's goal for an upper-level school came to fruition when 1,011 students registered. Turpen, one of the school's first graduate students remembered registration as "a piece of cake." He added, "The faculty bent over backwards to accommodate the students."

Odessa's community enthusiasm was apparent to Ms. Luck, who moved to the city in 1973. She was thrilled to find that she could complete the degree she had begun at Southwest Texas State University in San Marcos. "The timing (for UT Permian Basin's startup) was perfect," she said. As she remembers, people throughout the city would ask her if she was a student at UT Permian Basin, like so many proud parents wanting the best for their children.

For Behrendt, one of the things he most appreciates about his education at the university was the one-on-one interaction with his instructors. "We even helped in the interview process for some of the faculty," he said. "The administration took our recommendations seriously."

THE FIRST YEAR

For students and staff alike, UT Permian Basin's first academic year streaked by in more ways than one. Vicki Gomez, director of admissions, recalled her most vivid memory from that time. In the spring semester of 1974, she not only watched a student streak across the campus into a waiting van, but also contributed to his bail fund in case he was arrested. The streaker's sprint across campus, with only his head covered, was a noble gesture aimed at squashing Odessa College's taunting that UT Permian Basin students were too old to ever produce a streaker.

HOW THINGS HAVE CHANGED

The Mesa Building, where most classes are now held, was completed by the fall of 1974. Behrendt and his classmates had attended classes in the building now known as the Founders Building and in six mobile units located on the south part of the 600-acre campus.

Bobbie Klepper, one of the school's first students and now a university employee, remembers sitting in class during a sandstorm and watching the ceiling pop up and down. Midlander Gertrude Thomason, an English and drama major and part of the Class of '74, remembers the Student Center as "a trailer with a few couches and maybe a Coke machine."

UT Permian Basin has come a long way in the past 20 years. Today there are vending machines on every floor of the Mesa Building, and a snack bar and grill area in the Student Lounge.

BIRTH OF A UNIVERSITY

Obviously, UT Permian Basin didn't just spring from the caprock formations it's so firmly planted upon today. The path leading to constructing a university in West Texas was paved by the efforts of many Permian Basin residents with the help of supporters in higher education and state government.

In 1965, a study by the Coordinating Board of the Texas College and University System revealed that the Midland-Odessa area was the only major population center in Texas not served by a bachelor's degree-granting institution. The nearest senior college was 125 miles away. In answer to this need, the state Legislature in 1969 authorized the establishment of The University of Texas of the Permian Basin within The University of Texas System. The Legislature designated UT Permian Basin as an upper-level school which would provide baccalaureate and graduate degree programs to junior, senior and graduate level students. UT Permian Basin was the first of its kind built in the state of Texas. Several other upper-level components were founded at the same time as UT Permian Basin, or shortly thereafter, including UT Brownsville, UT Tyler, Corpus Christi State University, and University of Houston at Clear-lake.

The UT System Board of Regents selected the present site of the university and appointed B.H. Amstead, then acting dean of the college of engineering at UT Austin, as the first president of UT Permian Basin. Using the First National Bank Building in downtown Odessa as headquarters, Amstead led planning for UT Permian Basin's curriculum, main building construction, and the hiring of faculty.

Classes began at UT Permian Basin in September 1973. The Mesa Building and gymnasium opened in 1974. Throughout the years, the Mesa Building and gym have been the hub of activity on campus. During the first two decades at UT Permian Basin, the university continued to carve its niche in the educational profile of the region, granting more than 6,000 bachelor's and master's degrees.

THE NEXT 20 YEARS

Without a doubt, the biggest change and continuing challenge for the young university has been the Legislature's decision in May 1991 to turn UT Permian Basin into a four-year university. On Sept. 3, 1991, 179 freshman students were welcomed on campus, with the first sophomore class enrolling in 1992.

Accommodating the needs of freshmen and sophomores on campus has invigorated the university in a variety of ways – new science laboratory facilities, new faculty, increased daytime course offerings and innovative student services programs.

"We want to move this institution forward and make it among the very best of its type. We will settle for no less," said university President Charles Sorber who will oversee the school's changing role in the Permian Basin and around the state. "With the ushering in of the university's third decade, UT Permian Basin faces the excitement of exploring new horizons and the challenge of continuing to serve the educational needs of the Permian Basin."

The Mesa Building is the main building on campus, housing most classrooms and laboratories, student lounge, administrative offices and bookstore.

BUILDING ONLY SURFACE OF UNIVERSITY STORY

From the very first glance at the Mesa Building in the heart of the 600-acre campus, you know that UT Permian Basin is different. But if this is all you ever see of the university, then you're not getting the whole picture.

Walk from the parking lot, through the aptly named breezeway, to the tree-filled, grassy courtyard tucked away in the heart of the Mesa Building. Throughout the year, this oasis is a quiet refuge for the student needing a fresh-air study break. At other times, it's transformed into the vibrant center of campuswide celebrations when the smell of grilled hamburgers wafts through the air as faculty host a cookout for students in the courtyard ... or the soft glow of luminaria-lined walks welcome carolers to the annual yuletide festivities.

The courtyard also is the hub of student services on campus. Financial Aid, Admissions, the PASS Office (Programs Assisting Student Studies) and the Student Lounge all open on the courtyard and the bookstore is right around the corner.

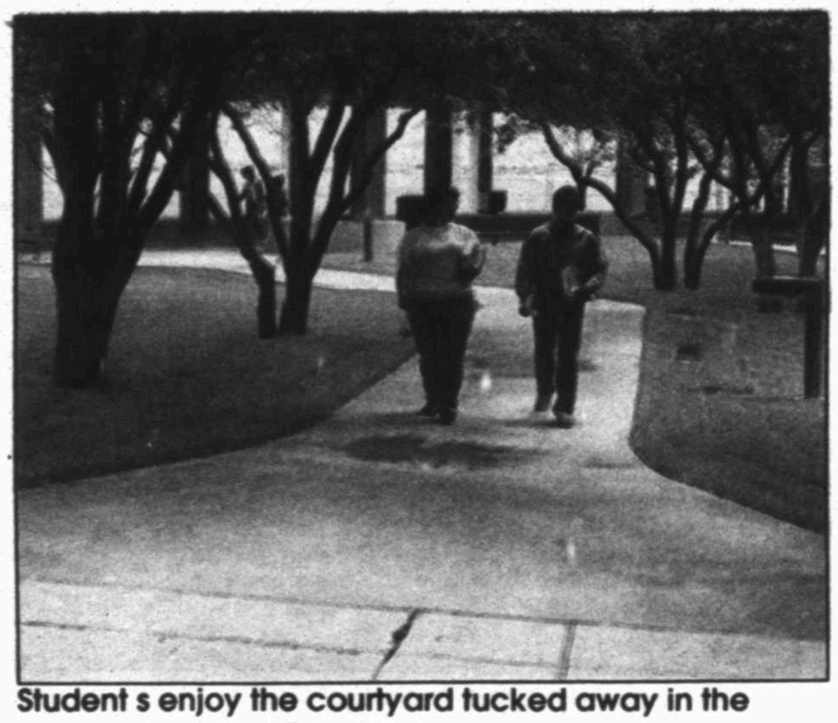

Two areas vital to any student's academic success – the library and computer center – are located on the second floor. The modern UT Permian Basin library is linked to the on-line catalogs of universities throughout the Southwest. Library resources staff seldom run into a research request that can't be handled. In the computer services center, students have unlimited computing access. "Most large schools have a rationing mechanism for use of the computers," said center Director Keith Yarbrough. "I don't see that happening anytime soon at UT Permian Basin. We have just installed the largest computer system ever in use at this university."

Classroom sizes in the Mesa Building range from accommodating 18 students, to holding as many as 75 students. You don't have to go far, either, to find space for your favorite activity. Whether you're interested in aerobics or a game of basketball, the three-story gym houses racquetball, volleyball, badminton, tennis, basketball courts, and a weight room. Outdoor facilities include tennis and racquetball courts and an athletic field.

On the south campus are the art and ceramics lab area, the physical plant and the Founders Building, which includes chemistry labs, math and science education lab, and the Center for Behavioral Analysis.

Also on the east end of the 600 acres are several areas open for public use. Any day of the week, residents play softball or soccer on one of the city-operated fields, or host a picnic at the UTPB park and playground.

So come take a closer look at UT Permian Basin. We think you'll like what you see!

Student s enjoy the courtyard tucked away in the heart of the Mesa Building.

HUMANITIES ARE CORNERSTONE OF CURRICULUM

'Liberal arts have long been the foundation of college curriculum, and they have played a prominent role on our campus," noted Warren Gardner, history professor and vice president for academic affairs.

Within this division, liberal arts come together with fine arts and communications. This educational backdrop gives students a setting in which to question, explore and justify theories; present new concepts; and develop tools necessary for lifelong learning.

You may enroll in one of seven bachelor of arts degree programs, including art, English, history, humanities, mass communications, Spanish, and speech.

As the university's curriculum expands to meet the demands of a four-year degree program, many facilities are being updated, too. "Our beautiful new language lab will enable us to offer French and German as part of our expanding curriculum," Gardner said.

The professors in the humanities and fine arts bring enthusiasm and experience to the curricula they present. Gardner said, "We have people who are alive and alert in their fields of study. Research attracts them because they love their disciplines and want to add to them."

If foreign language is your special interest, you may study Spanish with Professor Genaro Perez, whose latest book is now in publication.

Art students incorporate campus wildflowers in a drawing class.

If art is your choice, you may have your work featured in the annual student art exhibit or selected for display around the Mesa Building. The UT Permian Basin art program is directed by two respected artists, Pam Price and Chris Stanley.

In a history class, you may discuss modern-day Texas with Roger Olien, Dunagan professor of history. Olien and his wife, Diana Davids Olien, a part-time faculty member, have just completed a two-volume study of American attitudes towards the petroleum industry. Or you may trade ideas with Frank Sampanaro, history department chairman, in his Latin American history classes.

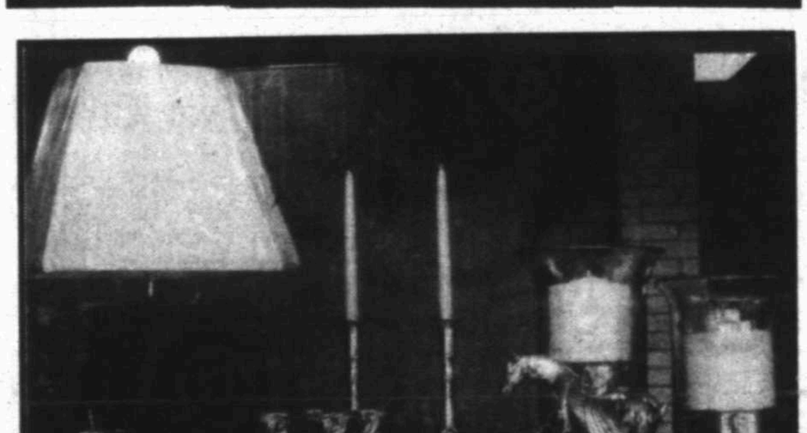

Mass communications classes include print and broadcast offerings. You could learn electronic editing from syndicated broadcaster Tumbleweed Smith or the basics of reporting from the 1993 Outstanding Faculty member, Robert Rothstein.

You may be fortunate enough to appear in a production at the Globe of the Great Southwest under the direction of Shawn Watson, assistant professor of English, whose recent efforts include directing "Romeo and Juliet" and "Rosencrantz and Guildenstern Are Dead" for the Globe. Ms. Watson also led a six-week, in-depth study of "Hamlet." She plans to bring "Hamlet" to the Globe's stage this fall.

SMALL BUSINESS INSTITUTE GETS THEORY OUT OF CLASSROOM

Experiencing the business world first-hand is the goal of the Small Business Institute at UT Permian Basin. "Business education is often classroom-bound," said professor Tom Schaefer, director of the SBI. "With this program, students are pushed beyond theory to come face-to-face with the ambiguities of the business world."

According to Schaefer, the SBI is a free consulting service for local businesses. "It's been said over and over that those that need this type of assistance the most usually are the ones that can least afford it."

Funded by a grant from the U.S. Small Business Administration, SBI matches the training and expertise of advanced business students with the needs of clients including manufacturers, restaurateurs, dentists, and oil companies.

"These clients are as diverse as the nation's business community," Schaefer said. "Virtually every type of business has, at one time or another, received SBI help."

The extensive research and study put into these cases are what distinguishes the SBI from other business-assistance programs, Schaefer said. "These studies last a full semester. The student meets the client 10-20 times during the semester for in-depth consulting that can cover such items as inventory and marketing plans."

Students involved with the SBI take the course as an elective through the business division. According to Schaefer, the ideal student is one who has been in business and has a good understanding of not only theory, but practical applications. "They really know where the client is coming from because of their background in the business world," he explained.

Any prospective business can request SBI assistance by completing a form available through the business division. Clients' names are then listed and handled on a first-come, first-served basis.

Schaefer enthusiastically sums up the importance of SBI to the region, "It's a free service with a bottom line impact that the community can see. Helping a guy in his business is much like helping his family. We have quietly won many friends through the years."

TUITION TOUTED AS INVESTMENT NOT JUST EXPENSE

Advanced business students work with clients through the Small Business Institute.

Business division director Corbett Gaulden observed, "When you look at the increased earning power that you will have as a college graduate, then you can look at tuition not as an expense but as an investment."

If you have chosen business for your career track, you can earn quite a return on your investment with a degree in one of UT Permian Basin's business-related programs – accountancy & information systems, economics, finance, management or marketing.

"You learn how a business is run in our classroom," said Gaulden. "I can't think of any of our faculty who haven't had significant contact with the business world."

The major in accountancy and information systems prepares students for careers in public, managerial, governmental and social accounting. Economics and finance courses cover both national and international topics, with applications in a range of fields, including banking and corporate finance.

Degrees in management or marketing provide a broad-based general business education for management positions or professional sales careers.

On the business faculty are respected scholars and professionals. You might take a management class from professor Thomas Schaefer, a Fulbright Scholar and former business school dean for the Sacred Heart University of Puerto Rico. Bill Buchanan, assistant professor of economics, formerly owned two companies in the Permian Basin, and Professor W. Griffin was in the national sales division for Proctor & Gamble before beginning his teaching career.

The number of students who are accepting positions upon graduation speak well for the education they receive at UT Permian Basin. "We have strong student organizations that allow our juniors and seniors to develop an extensive student-alumni network. It's an excellent way to cultivate job leads," Gaulden said.

For such a young school, the accomplishments of UT Permian Basin's business graduates speak well for its future success rate. "Our graduates are showing an excellent rate of success, especially for those who already held jobs and moved up the career ladder at their companies after completing degrees," Gaulden said. "Engineers who have enrolled in our master's degree program are moving into management positions, several graduates have gone on to law school and quite a few have opened their own accounting practices."

SCIENCES COMMAND PROMINENT ROLE ON CAMPUS

Science at UT Permian Basin is represented by the departments of chemistry, computer science, geology, life science and mathematics. Seventeen full-time faculty teach and work with their students – in small classes and in one-on-one lab situations.

"You get real faculty members here," said professor Doug Hale. "We don't use graduate assistants to lead classes, except as needed in freshman-level labs."

The importance UT Permian Basin places on the sciences is underscored by its commitment to provide students and faculty with up-to-date learning tools. Sophisticated laboratory equipment and computer facilities allow students to practice the latest techniques and methods.

For computer science students, probably one of the most exciting advantages of UT is access to the nation's largest supercomputer headquartered in Austin. Said Hale: "As far as I know, UTPB and UT Tyler are the only components in the UT System to provide undergraduate students this much time on the supercomputer."

With the addition of freshman and sophomore science classes, chemistry lab facilities were moved to the South Campus Founders Building to better accommodate the needs of the department. Geology students have the advantage of working with some of the latest thin-sectioning equipment and state-of-the-art hardware and software.

Throughout its 20 years, UT Permian Basin's natural science graduates have accumulated an impressive record. Life science students are being "snapped up by graduate schools," said life science professor Don Allen. The acceptance rate of UTPB graduates at health-related schools is about 75 percent, Allen said. The national rate is 60 percent.

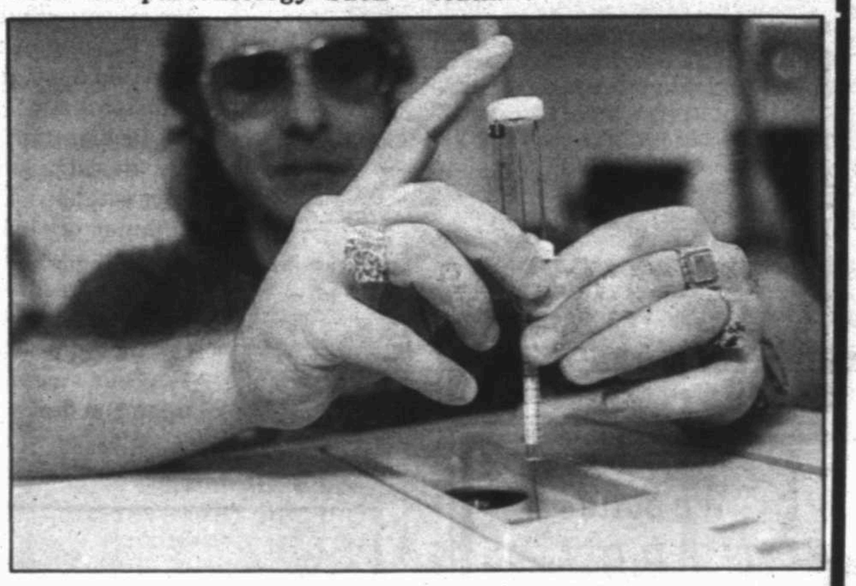

Math majors often elect to pursue a teaching career, Hale said, and many pursue graduate degrees. Computer science majors find a variety of opportunities in industry, ranging from small, independent companies to major employers like IBM.

Professors in the natural sciences are dedicated to teaching. They may expect a lot of their students, but they demand a lot from themselves as reflected in their extensive schooling, professional activities and teaching methods.

During the summer many faculty members continue research in their fields. For instance, assistant professor Marcin Paprzycki is in Europe where he will present a workshop on parallel computation. Assistant professor Paul Feit accepted an invitation to study at the prestigious Math Science Research Institute, a "think tank" for mathematicians at the University of California at Berkeley. Assistant professor Gwen Pearson is in North Carolina continuing her research on insect population controls.

Associate professor Daniel Womochel is the university's "dinosaur guy." A former research fellow and expedition mammologist with the Field Museum in Chicago, Womochel uses his paleontology background in his geology courses.

The faculty's strong points are best summarized by Allen. "We have a remarkable combination of good scientists who love to teach."

FALCON FORENSIC SQUAD OFF TO A HIGH-FLYING START

The newest team at UT Permian Basin doesn't rely on brute physical strength, just the power of the spoken word. The fledgling Falcon Forensics team consists of 12 members who participate in such events as debate, persuasive speaking, extemporaneous speaking and interpretation of literature.

Roger Bednar, speech instructor and team advisor, has been pleased with the team's showing during its inaugural season. He points out that several of the team members are competing for the first time in their events.

Team members describe their first year of competition as a learning experience. "We had never seen college competition before," said Chyree LeMaster, 18-year-old sophomore from Midland. "There's a lot to learn and I'm looking forward to learning the techniques we'll be using."

For Midland junior Scott Lunsford, the first year was a time to brush up on his skills. "I had not competed in five years, since high school. It's a lot more technical on the college circuit."

While the team is just beginning its quest for championships, Bednar sees some less obvious, but equally important victories for its members.

For aspiring thespian Marvin LeMaster, a Midland junior, forensics better prepares him for a career on stage. "Not only do you expand your personality through forensics, but you also develop new ways to look at things creatively."

Falcon Forensics is open to students from all disciplines, according to Bednar. Previous experience isn't a requirement. "We have team members who assist with research and observe at tournaments. They're getting a good background to move into competition from there," Bednar said.

For more information, contact Bednar at 367-2245.

FINANCIAL AID NEEDS GROW

More students are applying for financial aid according to Richard Renshaw, UT Permian Basin's financial aid director. "We've had a sizable increase in students applying for aid over the last three years. I'd estimate the number of students applying for aid is twice as many," Renshaw said.

Renshaw expects this trend to continue for some time due to a weak economy and job market. The soft job market is forcing many people to return to school to further their education or switch fields completely.

Funds for students in all types of financial circumstances can be obtained through UT Permian Basin's Financial Aid Office. Available aid comes from a broad range of federal, state, and privately funded sources which include grants, scholarships, loans, and employment.

Renshaw feels he has two main responsibilities as director of financial aid. "No. 1 is that I have to get the money to the students' accounts so they can go to school. My second responsibility it to the students themselves. If they want to go to school, I have to find the money for them," Renshaw said.

There are two types of aid available to students. Grants and scholarships are known as "gift-aid" because they don't have to be repaid. Student loans and employment are known as "self- help" aid. Unlike grants and scholarships, loans must be repaid once a student leaves school whether they graduate or not.

The first step in applying for student aid is to request an application packet from the Office of Student Financial Aid. The information the student provides on the application is put into a financial formula set by the federal government which determines the amount of aid the student will be eligible to receive.

Since funds are disbursed on a first-come-first-served basis, it's important to apply as early as possible.

Any student or prospective student can contact the Office of Student Financial Aid for a packet at 367-2354.

Renshaw encourages students to seek information on financial aid through his open-door policy. "If students are confused or need more money, they should feel free to talk to me and I'll do what I can for them—as long as it's legal," Renshaw said.

PARTNERS PROGRAM FUNDS OPPORTUNITIES

Thousands of dollars for student scholarships were available to UTPB students last year through the Partners for U.T. Permian Basin annual fund drive. "We can do it again if public support stays as strong for our '93-'94 campaign," according to development director Mike Barker.

"The support for this campaign in the communities tells us that the donors appreciate the value of education and the good they can accomplish through Partners," Barker said. "Our students need and deserve a quality education and our Permian Basin Partners are making those educational opportunities available."

The Development Board has set a goal of $200,000 for the 1993 campaign. "This is an increase in the goal we set for 1992," said Board President Steve Late. "There was an overwhelming response in the first year of the drive, and we hope the momentum will continue through this year's campaign and into the future."

"Partners is a way for everyone in the Permian Basin to help build for the future of their university and its students," Barker added. "It is a campaign to raise money. But just as importantly, it garners grass roots support for our future. Our university has enormous potential for growth in the coming years. However, that growth cannot and will not happen without the support of the Permian Basin."

In addition to scholarships, contributions to the "Partners" fund benefit the areas of student recruitment and retention, teaching innovations, and faculty development.

The 1993 Partners for UT Permian Basin campaign will run through Dec. 31. For more information, call Mike Barker in the University Development Office, 367-2200.

COURSES EXPAND SCOPE OF 'HUMAN SCIENCES'

One of the biggest challenges facing faculty in the behavioral science and kinesiology departments is encouraging students to think beyond the standard careers traditionally associated with degrees in the "human sciences" of criminology, psychology, political science, sociology, or kinesiology (physical education).

"People have a narrow view of the job potentials in these fields, and we try to expand that," said psychology professor James Olson. "Essentially, any of these degrees can be translated into careers anywhere that there are human beings."

For instance, someone with a degree in kinesiology can follow the traditional path and become a physical education coach, or can find opportunities in wellness fields such as sport medicine, corporate fitness programs, or physical rehabilitation.

A degree in political science can open doors for careers in government agencies or prepare a student to enter law school. "The acceptance rate of our graduates into law schools exceeds the national average," said political science associate professor Sean Kelleher. "Nationally, the average is 49 percent. Over the last 10 years, UT Permian Basin graduates have averaged 70-80 percent. We're fortunate to find some very good law schools who like our students."

In the expanding human services fields, criminology, sociology and psychology degrees open doors to a variety of professions. "The sky is the limit," Olson said.

How to apply the degree to a career choice is just one of the ways that faculty members support their students. "We're like cool parents," Olson said. "We're sympathetic and understanding to the student stretching into young adulthood. We nurture and watch each student's development, regardless of age or education level."

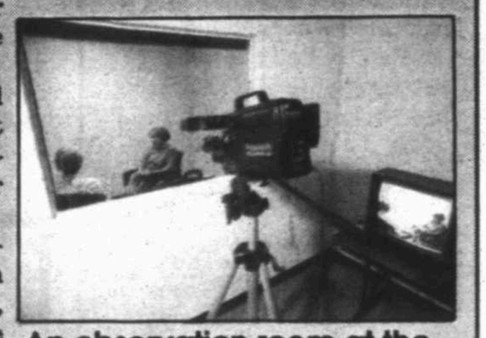

Kelleher attributes the success in all of the departments to the personal interaction between faculty and students. "When the students I advise request a letter of recommendation, I'm able to speak specifically to the student's strengths, because I have spent so much time with that student over the course of his or her education." As Kelleher points out, many times the letters of recommendation have made the difference in a student's acceptance to a law school or graduate program.

Olson is proud of the fact that more members of the "human sciences" faculty have received the annual Outstanding Teacher awards than any other division. "We have a full range of wit among our group," he said. "We have everything from the incredibly witty to the incredibly dry. And they are all dedicated to teaching."

BEHAVIOR CENTER OFFERS RESIDENT SERVICES

More than 4,000 Permian Basin residents have benefited from low-cost psychological therapy offered at UT Permian Basin's Center for Behavioral Analysis. "We service those clients for whom there are no services available elsewhere," said psychology professor James Olson. "Because of the demands on governmental agencies or the fees charged by independent therapists, there's often no place for people to go."

Fees at the center are charged on a sliding scale, based on ability to pay. "We see people that wouldn't be able to receive care elsewhere because they can't afford it," Olson said. "I like to think of this as a service to the community. Maybe by coming to us for help, they won't do something stupid that could have long-range effects on them and others."

An observation room at the center.

According to Linda Montgomery, clinical supervisor and assistant professor of psychology, the center's policy is to not turn anyone away, although those cases that involve acute crisis situations or chemical dependency are referred to other agencies or hospitals.

Psychological services provided by the center include personality, intelligence and behavioral assessments, assistance with problem solving, and psychological evaluations. Individual, group and family therapy sessions also are offered. Services are provided by faculty, staff and graduate students under the supervision of licensed clinical faculty.

In existence for more than 15 years, the center has recently expanded its mission to focus on the training of graduate psychology students. "We took a look at what type of experience and skills we wanted our students to have once they completed their master's degree," Montgomery said. "We saw the center as a good opportunity to provide supervised training for our advanced students and to provide low-cost therapy to those in need," she explained.

"The level of care our clients receive from our advanced students is good," Montgomery said. "Our students are in this field because they genuinely want to help people."

Montgomery closely supervises each session between graduate students and clients, either through live observation or videotaped reviews. "This type of supervision is common in most doctoral programs, but not often found in master's programs such as ours," she said. "It's certainly an asset for our students to receive this type of practicum."

For the future, Montgomery envisions adding parenting classes and marriage enrichment programs. In summing up the center's role in the community she adds, "Our goal is to provide well-rounded, complete care for the community and train caregivers for West Texas."

In addition to Olson and Montgomery, university faculty members involved with the center are Robert Rothstein, clinic director and co-founder, and Suzanne Rathbun, clinic coordinator.

The Center for Behavioral Analysis is located on the university's south campus, near the Founder's Building. It is open weekdays from 9 a.m. - 5 p.m. For more information, call 367-2373.

TRAINING BETTER TEACHERS CRUCIAL TO EDUCATION'S FUTURE

"We began as pioneers in teacher education; today, much of what has been in place here since the beginning is being implemented around the state," said professor Pete Ienatsch, director of the university's education division.

Ienatsch points to the education faculty as the most unique aspect of the program since its inception. "We have required since the beginning that our education faculty have degrees in academic areas, not just a generalist education degree. In 1973, we were the only Texas school with this requirement. Today, it is becoming more of the norm."

For example, John Hurn, associate professor of education, who teaches science methodology courses, combines his science background with his love of teaching. "I studied science in college, but my first choice for a profession was to teach," he said. Before joining the faculty at UTPB, Hurn taught high school science, at Duke University Medical School and the University of Iowa. "I share a lot of my experiences with my education students, methods that worked or didn't work for me," he said. "We don't just talk theory. We try to transfer the theory into real-world applications."

Ienatsch agrees with Hurn's emphasis on hands-on teaching. "We prepare our teachers through field-based education. We really want our methods courses to be taught in a public school setting; it's more realistic," he said. "This has our education students working with the populations they ultimately will be teaching."

Continuing with its pioneering role, the education curriculum is adapting to the growing trend in specialization. Already in place is a bilingual education endorsement program. "Between El Paso and Dallas, we're it for the type of courses we offer," said Susan Lara, assistant professor of education and director of the bilingual education program. "More than 200 UT Permian Basin students are involved in some aspect of English as a Second Language training."

Among new offerings Ienatsch sees being added at UT Permian Basin are a gifted/talented education certification, at-risk student education initiatives, and some distance-learning technology training. "Some of the new programs we are offering were developed in working with state agencies and some have been mandated by the Legislature," he said. "We get a feel for local needs from the school districts. There's so much involved in being a teacher that we try to offer them the best training that we can."

ESL CERTIFICATION PROGRAM POPULAR

Not many programs boast a 100 percent hire rate for its graduates, but the bilingual education training at UT Permian Basin is doing just that. "There is such a demand, that bilingual teachers can get jobs just about anywhere in the state of Texas," said Susan Lara, assistant professor of education and coordinator of bilingual education.

The education division at UTPB offers two programs dedicated to improving education for language-minority students in the region. Bilingual education training prepares teachers who are fluent in English and Spanish to teach children language development concepts in both languages. English as a Second Language (ESL) training prepares teachers to teach English to non-English speakers. Fluency in Spanish is not required for ESL certification.

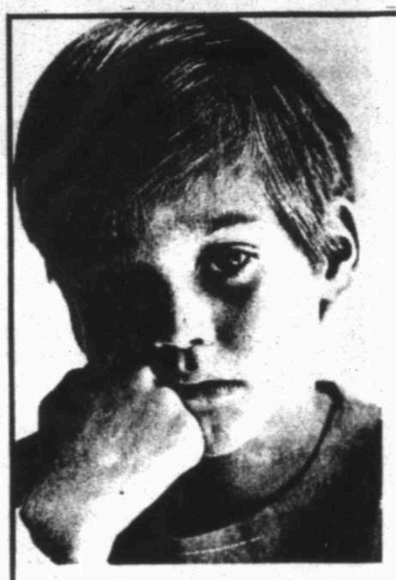

The projects are funded by Title VII federal grants. Of 28 grants awarded for language-minority programs throughout the nation during the 1992-93 school year, UT Permian Basin has received two.

"We're very committed to bilingual education at UTPB," said Lara. "The first grant we received in 1991 was initiated in cooperation with the Ector County Independent School District. Since then, we are working with seven other school districts in the area. So far we have supplied more than 40 people for their needs. Even with that number, there is still a shortage of teachers qualified to fill these slots."

The second project is not tied to a specific school district. It assists both graduate and undergraduate students. Graduate students are selected for part-time study and are working toward either a master's degree or bilingual-ESL certification. As with the other program, monthly stipends for living expenses are paid to full-time undergraduate students. Books, tuition, and fees also are paid for all students under both grants.

In order to qualify for assistance under the Title VII grant, an interested student must maintain a 2.75 grade point average and must have completed 60 hours credit toward a degree or have been accepted as a graduate student at the university.

For more information on the program, call Ms. Lara at 367- 2348.

STUDENT SERVICE GROUPS ADDRESS VARIETY OF NEEDS

PARENT INFORMATION PROGRAM PLANNED

Parents play an important part in developing their children's educational plans, and most experts agree that the process can never begin too early. At UT Permian Basin, informational materials are being developed to help parents prepare their children for college.

The information, which is to be printed in English and Spanish, will detail specifics including how to obtain financial aid, what courses to take in high school, how long it will take to earn a degree, what potential earnings are for different careers, how to plan for entrance exams and how to enroll in college.

UT PERMIAN BASIN OFFERS LEADERSHIP TRAINING

As students approach their final semesters in college, they begin to think how they will translate their years in higher education into a career. To help UT Permian Basin upperclassmen and graduate students gain a greater edge in marketing themselves to potential employers, Student Services will offer a series of leadership workshops for the first time this fall.

Workshops will cover topics including productive brainstorming, listening skills, group dynamics, group priorities development, strategic planning, task strategies definition, and an overview of total quality management.

MENTOR PROGRAM OFFERS HELP TO FRESHMAN, TRANSFER STUDENTS

Freshman and transfer students this fall will be the first to take part in a new mentoring program designed to help them make the most of their academic studies and campus life.

"With freshman and transfer students, they need lots of support to adjust to the university and its academic expectations," said Patricio Jaramillo, director of student services. "Traditionally, the freshman dropout rate is high. We're offering this program to address the needs of these students in their first year at UT Permian Basin."

Freshman and transfer students can expect to learn about the pitfalls of college life from the more experienced mentors.

UT Permian Basin juniors and seniors recommended by their professors will serve as the mentors, who will receive special training through the PASS Office.

TOOLS FOR SUCCESS

Also slated to begin in the fall are a variety of seminars to enhance students' cache of tools for succeeding at UT Permian Basin. Some of the seminars will be offered as early as orientation in August.

The skill-building seminars will assist in such areas as study skills, writing and reading skills, study planning, computer tutorials, avoiding pitfalls, self-assessment of success and failure traits, career decision making, and problem-solving strategies. Under the direction of a student assistance coordinator, the programs will be phased in over the fall and spring semesters.

DON'T PASS ON PASS

Whether the goal is to find a job or to complete a course, PASS (Programs Assisting Student Study) can ease the journey. Developed with students in mind, PASS provides services that help them reach their goals.

For instance, students surveying career options can make use of a library of various books, periodicals, and files to research a company as a potential employer. If you're looking for a job in the area, check the bulletin boards around campus. Notices of job vacancies are posted there by the PASS staff.

Additionally, on-campus interviews with companies, school districts, and other prospective employers are scheduled throughout the year.

Assistance with classes also is provided through PASS Correspondence.

STUDENT SERVICE CENTER ADDS TO CAMPUS LIFE

From the UT Permian Basin Student Senate to the Cultural Committee, the Student Service Center sponsors organizations which can enhance students' college lives through extracurricular activities.

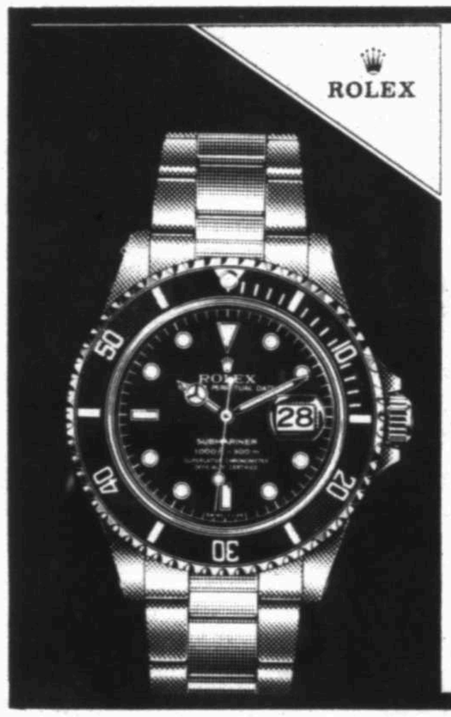

Benefits from these organizations are two-fold for students. They provide leadership opportunities for students elected senators or committee members and they provide a variety of cultural and social activities for students.

The Student Senate comprises four committees – Student Affairs, Minority Affairs, Community Affairs, and Public Affairs.

Members of the Program Board plan such sponsored activities as mixers, parties, morale boosters, intramural sports, and live entertainment.

The Cultural Committee serves as the university's host for a diverse program of art exhibits, lectures, musical performances, fine arts festivals, and cultural events offered to the Permian Basin community.

Today, many ex-students are staying active in the life of the university by joining the Alumni Association.

"The Alumni Association is vital to the success of UT Permian Basin. From its financial support with scholarships to its strong volunteer support on a number of projects, the association is an important link between the university and the people of West Texas," said UTPB President Charles Sorber.

Annual dues are $15. Lifetime memberships are available for $250. To become a member, contact the Student Life Office, 367-2136.

ON-, OFF-CAMPUS HOUSING AVAILABLE

Home away from home for some students at UT Permian Basin is the student housing complex – rows of mustard-colored manufactured housing units centrally located across from the Founders Building and within a few minutes' walk of the duck pond and pavilion.

Unlike traditional dorms, UT Permian Basin's apartment-style living is available to single and married students, as well as students with children.

There also is a greater variety of students than typical for on-campus housing; UTPB on-campus residents range from age 18 to 47. However, more students straight out of high school live on campus since UT Permian Basin became a four-year school.

Typically, students with families or married students occupy the one- and two-bedroom apartments, while single students stay in the efficiency units. In addition to the on-campus units, referrals are available for local apartment complexes.

Leta Blewett, student housing manager, strives to group students of similar ages and to accommodate special requests such as wanting to be in a quiet area or to be near the clubhouse.

Parents and small children in the apartments get an additional support network from the other students, Ms. Blewett said. "The students just fall in love with the little kids and become very protective of them. Some of the students even baby-sit."

All utilities are paid in the on-campus apartments, which are fully furnished.

Another amenity available is a clubhouse with a television, full-sized stove, and refrigerator. "Students living in the efficiencies use the clubhouse when their parents come to visit or when they want to prepare a home-cooked meal," she said.

Students living on- or off-campus have the option of eating at a full-service snack bar and cafeteria in the Mesa Building's Student Lounge. During fall and spring semesters, a cafeteria-style menu is available from 7:30 a.m. to 7:30 p.m. Summer hours are from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m., with deli and grilled items only served.

Information and applications are available from the Student Housing Office in the Founders Building or by calling 367-2258.

HOUSING UNDERCLASSMEN GAINS HIGH-PRIORITY STATUS

Now that UT Permian Basin is offering classes for freshman and sophomore students, reviewing the current on-campus housing arrangements and planning for future growth is becoming a priority.

Requiring the most study and consideration are ongoing plans for residential, dormitory-style living on campus. According to Patricio Jaramillo, vice president of student services, there are some immediate needs to be addressed as well. "For the immediate future, we are going to upgrade the existing housing on campus to accommodate student study needs," he said.

An option being considered to handle the increasing need for student housing involves a cooperative effort between the university and apartment complexes in the area.

"We're exploring the possibility of working with apartment managers to dedicate a section of their complexes to university students, with the appropriate security to ensure our students safety," Jaramillo said

Jaramillo continued, "Another feature we are examining is the option of meal plans on campus for our students. Perhaps something could be made available such as a semester-long meal ticket at the cafeteria."

The priority that consideration of these options and other housing opportunities are being given by university administrators indicates that student housing is important to the future of the university. Said Jaramillo: "If I am asked if new student housing is in the future of UT Permian Basin, I respond 'Most definitely yes!' "

ATHLETIC PROGRAMS UNDER CONSIDERATION

West Texas sports enthusiasts take note: A competitive athletic program at UT Permian Basin is on the horizon. According to those exploring the options for the university, two points are very clear – the program must be financially feasible and include equal distribution of resources between men's and women's programs.

"We're in a very unusual situation. Around the country, there are not many institutions that have the opportunity to start a sports program from scratch," said Cathie Tinney, graduate studies director and chairman of the university's sports task force. "We can learn from the experiences of other schools – what has worked for them and what hasn't."

The task force, created by university President Charles Sorber in response to interest in college athletics, includes faculty, staff, students, alumni and a member of the University Development Board.

"The task force will take into consideration the concerns of all interested groups – students, parents, fans and other educational institutions," Ms. Tinney said.

Options range from intramural programs to club sports to more traditional intercollegiate sports programs. "These things don't happen full-blown," she said. "We will examine whether we can develop a program that will grow into a larger one. While we know that whatever is implemented will change over the years, it must be broadly acceptable."

One of the first things the task force will do is to determine what factors will be important when judging program options. "Capital investment is a key factor," Ms. Tinney said. "But so are such areas as participation by the athletes, involvement of the student body, and support from the community."

She points out that her group is a fact-gathering group that will report to the president by December with recommendations. He will make the final decisions on implementation.

RECREATION VITAL PART OF UTPB CAMPUS LIFE

Sports and recreation are important parts of student life at UT Permian Basin. "Intramurals are probably one of the most popular aspects of student life," said Kelly McMahan, university recreation director. "It's a wonderful opportunity for students to meet others as well as to have physical activity."

Backing up her claim are the participation figures for intramurals in 1992-'93. According to McMahan, approximately 500 people signed up to do everything from shooting hoops to teeing off to returning volleys. She attributes the increase to more programs being offered and the addition of a student staff member to handle intramural sports exclusively.

Intramural sports at UT Permian Basin are open to students, faculty, staff and alumni. McMahan said. "Playing next to a faculty member lets students see them in a different light."

According to McMahan, plans for the upcoming year will include tournament play in sports such as volleyball, basketball, pool, ping-pong, golf, tennis, racquetball and pickleball. Other activities include evening tennis, pick-up basketball, coed drop- in volleyball, and bowling. Flag football and indoor soccer league play also are on the agenda.

Other activities may be organized upon request, according to McMahan. She encourages students to watch for information on upcoming events to be posted around campus or to come by her office in the gym.

CEED BLOSSOMING AS HUB OF BUSINESS ACTIVITY

Cars and trucks zoom past the modern structure at Highway 191 and FM 1788, their occupants oblivious to the hum of activity taking place inside the Center for Energy and Economic Diversification. If commuters were to stop and tour the building, they would find exciting opportunities for the region's business environment. Among its tenants are the Petroleum Industry Alliance, the Small Business Development Center and the Economic Development Administration University Center. All entities at CEED are non-profit, public service organizations, dedicated to providing businesses and entrepreneurs with assistance.

Petroleum Industry Alliance

The Petroleum Industry Alliance (PIA) is directed specifically to the region's most vital industry – oil and gas. PIA links the region's oil and gas industry with state and federal governmental entities such as UTPB, University Lands, the Department of Energy and federal labs.

Currently, PIA is focusing on research and technology transfer activities. "Tech transfer can be a complex concept. Basically, we're always looking for ways to encourage more openness within the industry to further the oil and gas activity of the region," said Steve Melzer, director of the PIA. "We are also examining the changing industry for new requirements for the university's curriculum and communicating continuing education and training needs to the faculty."

In April, the DOE selected five large enhanced oil recovery projects to be co-funded by oil companies. Laguna Petroleum, Fina, Oxy, Phillips and Texaco were chosen to take part in the government/industry cost-share programs. According to Melzer, the DOE conceived the cost-share projects to stimulate and fund innovations for producing more oil in existing reservoirs.

"Ector , Gaines, Dawson and Lea counties should see field expenditures increase as the value of the projects approaches $80 million, almost half of which involves federal funds," Melzer said. "PIA played a key role in alerting industry to the opportunity and assisting many of the companies with their proposals."

Melzer said PIA will continue its involvement in the DOE projects as technology transfer agent for Laguna, Fina, and Oxy.

Two UTPB faculty, Jim Reeves and David Rowland, were instrumental in preparing Laguna's proposal and will serve as consultants on the project.

PIA will continue to play a role in bridging petroleum industry educational and training needs with university assets. "College credit courses are being offered at CEED each semester and one of our goals will be to reach a broader audience of both engineers and geologists who desire further educational exposure," Melzer said.

SBDC

Since its inception in 1987, UTPB's Small Business Development Center has created its own success. "Despite having the smallest staff and budget in the region, we had the best overall performance," said Corbett Gaulden, associate professor of business and university liaison with the SBDC. "During fiscal 1992, the center was the top performer in client counseling and number of seminars given. We were second in the region for the number of jobs created."

Karl Painter, director of the SBDC, said much of the success can be attributed to a consortium created in 1992. Satellite centers were formed at Midland College's Business & Economic Development Center, the Odessa College Small Business Incubator and Howard College's Business Development Center.

Forging the consortium more than quadrupled the number of clients served — from 59 in 1987 to 270 in 1992. "We recently counselled our one-thousandth client since the program was started," Gaulden said. Of recent clients, roughly half have been women and minorities.

New businesses also hit a high mark in 1992 with 23 started.

The SBDC serves a 16-county area covering 16,033 miles and a population of 348,116.

Government investment is key to the success of the SBDC, which in turn leads to economic success in the community. A local government investment of $25,000 in the SBDC can be leveraged into a $125,000 program (combining other local government, state and federal funds) that returns approximately $500,000 to the community in the form of new businesses. A conservative estimate is that for every dollar invested in the SBDC program, there is a realization of about $8 in the local economy.

EDA University Center

Communities and non-profit agencies struggling to grow in today's economy can find some relief through federally funded programs and grants. But there's a catch: Many funding requests must be accompanied by extensive research that is often costly to produce.

Through programs offered by the Economic Development Administration (EDA) University Center, an eligible participant can receive a professionally prepared study, with supporting data, at a reduced cost. The studies are useful not only in applying for government assistance but also in developing a comprehensive economic plan, said Brian Malone, regional marketing analyst for the center.

"We're here to help create jobs and business opportunities in West Texas. Whether it's overall economic development planning or specialized services such as community surveys or feasibility studies, we are a low-cost, professional resource for the area," Malone said.

Funded through a joint effort of the U.S. Department of Commerce and UTPB, most assistance and consultation is available for minimal or no charge.
