NIGHT OF GROPING IN FOGGY AIR ENDS WHEN SHIP FALLS AFTER GAS SUPPLY EXHAUSTS

VER-SUR-MER, France, July 1.—Out of gasoline and groping blindly through fog and rain to find a safe haven, the trans-Atlantic plane America descended safely in the sea early this morning near this town on the coast of Normandy.

Successful in their valiant effort to span the Atlantic, but 175 miles west of their goal, Paris, the American aviators headed by Commander Richard E. Byrd made their way through the sea 200 yards to shore with the aid of a pneumatic raft which they had been able to inflate just before their plane struck the water.

Tired by their long air voyage that had carried them across the Atlantic and in a vain cruise in the fog and rain above France to find the flying field at LeBourget, the American fliers went to bed almost as soon as they had made their way to shore with the help of fishermen and the keeper of the lighthouse here.

Plane Crashes At 2:20. It was 2:20 a. m. French time that the American fliers seeking land and safety after their long voyage through the air, dropped into the sea about 200 yards from shore and were quickly into the water to their elbows.

Manning their rubber rowboat raft, which was part of the equipment of the plane, they made several trips to shore to get the most important equipment of their ship and then went to sleep at the homes of their French hosts who took them in with gracious hospitality.

Completely Lost In Dense Rain

LONDON, July 1 (AP)—Commander Richard E. Byrd was completely lost in continuous dense rain clouds from the moment he left the French coast at Breast last night in his effort to find Paris, says a vivid story quoting the American aviator directly cabled to the Evening News by his Cherbourg correspondent.

Tells of Night Battle

Telling of the all-night battle of the America in a rain storm which ended with a cold plunge at 5 o'clock this morning in the sea at Ver-Sur Mer, a tiny French bathing resort, Commander Byrd was quoted as saying:

Running Short of Gas

"We went on, hoping for a rift in the clouds through which we might see land when very short of gas, we were running terribly short of gas. At 5 o'clock this morning there was nothing left but to come down and trust to luck. We did so and had a cold sea bath."

Commander Byrd Also Quoted

Commander Byrd also was quoted as saying that his wireless apparatus failed to pick up land signals and that his compass was completely out of order.

EDDIE MORGAN

Here's the "handy-andy" man with New Orleans in the Southern League. He is Eddie Morgan, three-letter star of Tulane University, who has played seven different positions for the Pelicans this season.

Morgan's work—has hit consistently around 340—has drawn the attention of several big league scouts, but the New York Giants are rumored to have the inside track on this promising youngster.

National league clubs succeeded in getting exactly nowhere in the first two games of the season. The Giants and Braves broke even in a double header.

Eddie Farrell played brilliantly in the first game, hitting a home run and a double.

(By Associated Press)

PARIS, July 1.—Although the tennis rating of William T. Tilden, II, is hanging in the balance during his European tour, his status as a player is definitely determined—he will remain an amateur!

"I will not give up tennis, and as long as I can stand, I shall play in the American singles championship," he said during a busy afternoon at the Stade Francais at St. Cloud.

This should permanently dissuade the hopes of the isolated professional that the great master would join them and give their game the sort of needed aspect of respectability.

But the mind of "Big Bill" is clear on this point. There might have been a time when he listened to the tempting tones and terms of "Cash and Carry" but he can now turn a deaf ear with all composure.

In this respect Tilden's European trip has been very persuasive. In all the countries he has visited and displayed his art he has received as much respect and admiration as the outstanding figure of the tennis world. He has been honored and feted; Germany, Holland, Belgium and France have welcomed him with great cordiality and watched his play with the keenness of learning something.

These enthusiastic greetings have come from amateur circles. He has been able to see that everywhere in Europe the professional tennis player is an outsider. If he had been a professional all would have been different.

But "Big Bill" is not a professional and he is glad of it. If there were doubts, they are no longer entertained.

"I shall never give up the game in which I have meant something and which has meant so much to me," he said.

In Paris Tilden has heard a great deal about Lacosta, Borotra and Cochet, but practically nothing about Suzanne Lenglen. Things have changed since he was here last, a time when tennis could not be mentioned without being associated with Lenglen's name. The reason is that Lenglen is a professional.

His tennis destiny determined, Tilden is telling his friends about his stage career and how he intends to continue it in the fall. He says the stage will be his major interest, and he is considering an offer to produce a play in London.

Tournament Play Of Harry Cooper Most Nonchalant

(By NEA Service)

PITTSBURGH, Pa. July 1.—Never can it be said that Harry Cooper lacked the confidence to win the national open at Oakland.

Cooper, who lost the title in the playoff with Tommy Armour, was one of the few entries in the meet that rapped the ball smartly at the hole when he putted.

He was taking a chance and fate was with him throughout the early stages. But say the wise ones, he might have played other than non-chalantly, he might have copped the title without a playoff.

But he did and Armour is king now!

WACO, Tex. July 1.—D. E. McGowan of Waco, has become a member of the "Hole-in-one" club. Playing his ball into a rather high wind with a three iron, it dropped in front of the cup at the number 5 hole and while L. C. Lacy, W. G. Harrett and Paul Wilson, the other members of a foursome watched, it ambled slowly to the rim and dropped overboard for a singleton.

OTTAWA, Ont., July 1.—Flags were unfurled and offices, shops and factories throughout Canada were deserted today for inauguration of the three-day celebration of the sixtieth anniversary of the birth of the Dominion.

No celebration in the history of the country has aroused such widespread interest. From Cape Breton Island, on the Atlantic, to Vancouver Island, on the Pacific, the country was a mass of color in honor of the anniversary of the adoption of the British North America act, the written constitution of the Dominion. Even the Indian and Eskimo settlements in the far north joined in the celebration.

Byrd And Party Safe After Forced Landing When Gas Tank Runs Dry

We were up to our breasts in water. We got ashore but had no idea where we were.

"Do you think you'll go to Paris?" I asked.

"To tell you the truth, I don't know what we will do," he replied.

Commander Byrd, reverting again to his landing, said:

"We sat on the beach until 4 a. m. and water until the deputy mayor and the fisherman Marius arrived."

Then while the commander and I were talking, assistant Prefect Bouvaux, came in, and with great solemnity and formality presented the congratulations of President Doumergue, Premier Poincaré and the French government.

Compass Goes Wrong

Commander Byrd, explaining the wandering of the Am-Deja in the fog over France for many hours and his final landing in the sea at Ver-Sur-Mer, said that his compass had gone wrong shortly after the America had reached the coast of France in the vicinity of Brest. Then the thick fog held the plane and they did not know where they were.

He said that they might have been near Paris at one time but that they could not be sure. When they ran into it, he said, they ran out, Commander Byrd said, the America was headed in the direction where the sea was thought to lie in the hope that a safer landing could be made there than on unknown terrain.

The commander said that the America was driven until the fuel was virtually used up. He went down a flare and then followed with the plane.

Landing Gear Wrecked

Commander Byrd said that the plane struck shallow water, and the landing gear was torn off. The plane quickly submerged. It is the wings to which the fliers clung until they succeeded in launching their rubber life boat.

As soon as this was done they took their instruments, personal effects and a sack of mail ashore where they waited two hours in the rain before they were discovered by the villagers and taken into their homes.

Commander Byrd estimated that he flew 4,200 miles from the time of leaving Roosevelt field until his landing at Ver-Sur-Mer.

Hope To Save Ship

The commander expressed hope that he would be able to save his ship but aviators who had seen the plane today expressed the opinion that the hopes of salvage are slight, as the plane was breaking up in the sea.

Commander Byrd said that he would like to fly to Paris from Ver-Sur-Mer, but that he had no idea of returning to New York by air even if the plane were in condition to make the journey.

The citizens of this little sea resort gave the aviators a reception in the town hall this afternoon and a great crowd was present in spite of the inclement weather.

Fliers Safe But Plane Wrecked

PARIS, July 1.—The trans-Atlantic flight of Commander Byrd after hard luck and tremendous difficulty ended just after dawn today in the sea 200 yards from the beach of the little seaside resort of Ver-Sur-Mer, 175 miles west of Paris.

The aviators swam ashore and immediately went to sleep in a little cottage to which they were taken. The monoplane America was badly damaged—how badly awaited determination till the worn out fliers should have a good sleep.

In Air 43 Hours, 21 Minutes

From the time the fliers left Roosevelt field, N. Y., with Paris as the goal, it is estimated that the plane came down at 5:45 o'clock, which would mean they were in the air 43 hours, 21 minutes from the time they left Roosevelt field, N. Y., with Paris as the goal.

Presumably the fliers faced death in their flight that lasted for almost two days. For hours over the Atlantic they were unable to see the ocean or determine with any accuracy, except with the aid of the radio, just where they were. On three occasions over the top of the wings were obscured from the anxious man in the pilot's seat.

But it was over land itself that the greatest peril came. In the darkness of a rainy and stormy night when their compass failed to work they literally wandered about high in the air, seeking a place to come down. The radio guided them over the sea, but somehow it failed on land. When their own signals were heard, as they were at frequent intervals, the receiving stations were unable to locate their position in the sky.

Believed Over Paris

The most critical time of all came when it seemed to all the observers that they must be over Paris searching through clouds and fog for the lights of the LeBourget field. Then their signals ceased. At last, at 1:25 o'clock in the morning, came an appeal for guidance. But no one knew where they were and help was impossible. Anxious watchers around, were forced to wait helplessly throughout the remaining hours of darkness, unable even to guess where the plane had gone.

The reports from Ver-Sur-Mer indicate that they actually were over Paris at 3 o'clock in the morning, and that for some reason as yet unexplained, they turned about and went westward again. The last place the plane was actually seen was a forest, about 200 miles west of the spot where it came down. That was at 8:33 p. m. when the French cable company announced it had clearly seen the distinguishing marks of the craft.

Many Incorrect Reports

After that the air was filled with all sorts of incorrect reports that the plane had been sighted, even that it had landed safely at Issy Les Mouligneux. The landing at Issy was announced by Commandant Revoise of LeBourget air field, and the prefect police, who later admitted that their information was erroneous.

The night was one of the worst in the season in Paris. Rains fell in torrents, the clouds hung low and so thickly that the sky was as completely hidden as the earth must have been to the men in the plane. Contrary winds whirled about and as hour after hour passed the watchers were sure the plane had either been forced down or crashed at some spot in the fields or forests that surround Paris.

Among those who anxiously awaited news were Sheldon Whitehouse, charge d'affaires of the American embassy in the absence of Ambassador Herrick; Captain Richard E. White, the naval attaché; H. A. Gibbons, personal representative of Rodman Wanamaker, banker of the flight, and government officials; Clarence D. Chamberlain and Charles A. Levine, who know the dangers of the trans-Atlantic voyage also were there.

Search Is Ordered

As the night wore on without definite news, the French ministry of interior issued instructions that a complete search be made immediately of all four departments to the south of Paris in the belief that the fliers had been forced to alight at some isolated spot. The search had hardly been under way, however, when the news came that the aviators were safe at Ver-Sur-Mer. First it was in a form like the false reports of the night and was received with skepticism, then details began to be sure, began arriving from point after point, and finally corroboration that made it true beyond a doubt.

Then Mr. Gibbons and Captain White left for the seaside resort, expecting to arrive there some time in the afternoon. They will bring the aviators to Paris.

Seek To Save Plane

Meanwhile it became known that the commander of the port of Caen with the co-operation of the Cherbourg naval authorities, had gone to Ver-Sur-Mer, in a naval tug to save the plane. They reported that the machine was badly damaged and that they found the landing gear broken. When they made the examination at 11 a. m. it was high tide, but they hoped the craft could be kept anchored until low water.

Message received here from Ver-Sur-Mer indicated that Commander Byrd and his three companions assisted themselves ashore from the America by a pneumatic life belt which they managed to inflate before their plane alighted on the sea.

on the coast of Normandy, after landing in the sea with his three trans-Atlantic companions out from an all night battle in the air to find a safe landing place.

Probe Of False Report Under Way

PARIS, July 1 (AP).—An investigation of the false report last night that Commander Byrd had landed at Issy Les Mouligneux, near Paris, disclosed that it apparently was accepted by the officials of LeBourget flying field through a telephone call made by the sub-prefect of police at LeBourget to the French surety-general, a police body corresponding to London's Scotland Yard.

Says Report True

Telephoning from the office of Commandant Revoise of the civil aviation field at LeBourget, the sub-prefect asked the surety-general if it was true, as he had heard, that the America had landed at Issy. Then he turned around and told the group in the room, which included newspaper men, that it was true.

The gathering in the room which included Commandant Revoise, a colonel and half dozen other French officials, accepted the report. Announcement of the landing was made by Commandant Revoise and other officers. It was circulated by the semi-official Havas news agency and was spread over Paris and was not disproved until newspaper men could make the difficult journey to Issy.

Gibbons Accepts Report

H. C. Gibbons, personal representative of Rodman Wanamaker, sponsor of the flight, also accepted the report and hastened to Issy.

Meanwhile the welcoming crowds at LeBourget scattered in the belief that Byrd had landed and the lulling lights were darkened. An official communication also was sent to the naval signal station at Havre stating that the plane had landed at Issy and therefore it would not be necessary to keep flares burning any longer in the flying field at Havre.

Coolidge Sends Congratulations

WASHINGTON, July 1 (AP).—The congratulations of President Coolidge were cabled to Commander Byrd today by the state department.

"I send you my sincere congratulations on your successful flight across the Atlantic," the message said. "I have followed your distinguished and courageous career in aerial navigation with interest and admiration. Your flight to the north pole proved the effectiveness of the aeroplane in adding to the scientific knowledge of the unexplored surface of the world, and I am sure that your present flight will notably advance our knowledge of the conditions which must be met and conquered to make trans-Atlantic air navigation commercially practicable and safe."

PLEA IS MADE FOR LOYALTY HALE CITIZENS VOTE MILLION FOR HIGHWAYS

FULL CO-OPERATION IS NEEDED, CHAUTAUQUA SPEAKER SAYS

Loyalty and co-operation of citizenship were urged last evening at the Lubbock Chautauqua by Charles H. Plattenburg, traveler and lecturer, whose address on "A Modern Tale of Two Cities" was replete with philosophy, satire, sarcasm, and humor.

Mr. Plattenburg speaks interestingly of "Your City," the other city, the nation and the world. Observations gleaned from globe-trotting and the civic interest he has developed by years of citizenship in a mid-western city, have given Mr. Plattenburg a sparkling source for his colorful lecture.

Speaks of Lubbock
Giving local atmosphere to his subject, he spoke at length of Lubbock, lauding the civic spirit and enterprise of the city. He emphasized the elimination of selfishness and friction from the building program of any city, and urged a close watch for the possibilities of new enterprises.

The Premier Male Quartet, a group of rollicking collegians, evoked considerable laughter and applause with their songs of gaiety. An hilarious foursome, the boys performed and delightedly.

Miss Gaston Reads Today
Miss Evelyn Gaston entertained the chautauqua guests this afternoon at 2:15 o'clock with a dramatic reading, "My Lady's Dress." Miss Gaston also plays in the evening's performance, "The Patsy," a three-act comedy. The comedy for tonight is another Barry Connors humor of America's Home Life.

The children of the city met this morning with Mrs. Vera Marice in charge of the hour, and Mrs. Gus Niblick told stories. Mrs. Glen Hess will supervise the story hour tomorrow morning.

Mrs. Engart To Be Buried In Claremore

The body of Mrs. C. R. Engart was sent for burial to Claremore, Okla., this morning at 10:50.

Dr. R. C. Meloy, of Claremore, father of Mrs. Engart, arrived last night. Mrs. Engart is survived by her husband, by father, three sisters, Mrs. Frank Eaton, of Claremore, Mrs. L. J. Von Tungen, of Lubbock, and Elsie Fay, age 9. Burial will be in Claremore, Oklahoma, Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

GOOD ROADS ELECTION CARRIES BY VOTE OF 934 AGAINST 418

(Special To The Journal)
PLAINVIEW, July 1.—Hale county voted a million dollar bond issue Wednesday for the purpose of hard surfacing the two state highways through the county, highway number twenty-eight, east and west across the county, and number nine north and south, the vote being 934 for and 418 against with two small county boxes yet to be heard from that do not have sufficient votes to materially change the results.

Light Vote Cast
An exceptionally light vote was recorded at the election due largely, according to several people who worked on the proposition, to the farmers being busy in the harvest, and the attention of people in general to the recent oil developments taking place in this section following the finding of oil in the Mullican No. 1 oil well southwest of Plainview in Hale county.

The vote at Plainview was 149 in favor of the issue. The bond issue was opposed largely by communities which will not be on the paved roads when built.

Plan Good System
The proceeds of the bond issue will be used in matching state and federal aid in building a first-class hard-surfaced road on highway number nine through the county from north to south, going through Plainview, Hale Center, and Abernathy, and on the west and east highway number twenty-eight. The east and west highway through Hale county is on the celebrated Lee highway and bonds have already been voted in Wilbarger, Poard, Cottle and Motley counties to pave this road through Texas.

County is the only county east of Hale county that does not now have bonds for this purpose.

El Paso Capitalist Accidentally Shot

WINFLOW, Ariz., July 1 (AP)—James G. McNary, El Paso capitalist, was accidentally shot in the leg yesterday while enroute to the Texas city in an automobile from McNary, Ariz. Reports of the shooting lacked details as to how it occurred.

McNary, who at one time was nominated by the late President Harding for the appointment as comptroller of currency, was returning to El Paso from a visit in the McNary lumber corporation's logging camps in northeastern Arizona when the accident occurred. He is president of that corporation.

THIS HAS HAPPENED. Attempts have been made on the life of ELISE MARRBERRY, an American girl who owns and lives on property adjoining the queer little jungle bordered town of PORTO VERDE, in west central Brazil.

Several mysterious deaths have occurred, including that of one of her foremen. Her two-year-old orphaned nephew is kidnapped but is found again, largely through the efforts of VILAK, her cousin and protector, who is known in Porto Verde as ATTORNEY DAVIS. Elise's lawyer, VILAK has sent for LINCOLN NUNNALLY, elderly American, chemist, to help him get at the bottom of the mystery.

They are ignorant of the cause of this hostility toward Elise but suspect that a man named GAY-LORD PRENTISS, a reticent and forbidding character, is somehow involved.

Word is brought to Elise that the manager of her property at VILLAGA is desperately ill and must see her at once. VILAK suspects a trick and insists that Nunnally accompany her.

On the road to Villaga they are ambushed by a band of ruffians in the uniforms of soldiers. They tell VILAK that he and his companions are wanted for murder. The charge is obviously a fake. VILAK is convinced their captors are in the employ of Elise's enemies and that they will be shot. VILAK and Nunnally are trussed up and thrown into a damp room crawling with termites. Elise is made prisoner in another room.

NOW BEGIN THE STORY

CHAPTER XXIII
"After all, they are only ants," VILAK replied, his lips barely moving. "They're not interested in us. They're merely looking for a meal—sugar, leather, or a leaf they can use in their houses. Intriguing little brutes. They could tear down this house in a day or two if it were made of wood they fancied. Lucky for us they are not tarantulas, which are thick in so many of these old deserted houses. Look out for that corner over there near the window. I think I saw the hairy foot of one of them a minute ago. Maybe a nest of them there, but I don't think they'll bother us, unless we bother them."

He stopped short as he heard Elise's voice in the other room, but the wooden door effectually kept out most of the sound; he could not distinguish what she said.

The two men became silent again, meditating except for their regular crushing of the inquisitive crawling visitors. There was a crackling noise in a hole near the bed. A small rat-like animal, with bristling whiskers and bright bulging eyes, emerged from the crevice, looked at the two men curiously, then retreated to his black home. A swarm of brilliant purple butterflies swept down through the broken roof and settling on tables, walls, bed and men for an instant, left nothing to be seen but their vivid flaming wings. Then they flew away.

Vilak shot a glance at a shallow pool of water formed in the middle of the room where the ground was lowest. "I have an idea," he whispered to the old man beside him. "To escape?" Nunnally's eyes were eager.

"Yes. But don't be too hopeful. It's just an idea. It may not work, but I hope it will. These ropes with which we are tied are hide, like most of the ropes in this part of the country. They ought to expand considerably in water if they haven't been cured too much and allow us to squirm out of them. You remember the story in your primer of the girl who was captured because a heavy rain fell and swelled the cords of deer hide that bound her? This is the same principle."

He rolled to the edge of the pool, then into it, the water coming up almost to the buttons of his coat. Here he lay, without stirring for half an hour, while to the old man seemed interminable. Then he rolled out again and began manipulating his long wrists, purplish now from the pressure of the cords upon the veins.

The old man watched him breathlessly. For ten minutes VILAK pulled, tugged, twisted, writhed. Now it was his wrists he was attempting to free, now it was his knees, now it was his bony ankles.

"It's no go," he said. "They've oiled stretched an infinitesimal fraction, if at all. They're oily, and take up practically no water. Sorry. Wish I could smoke a cigarette." He rolled out onto the dry ground again. The old man gazed at him dejectedly and let his head slump back to the mud.

A bizarre colored toucan flitted onto the window sill, cocked his huge billed head grotesquely, then flew away. The sound of a horse's hoofs sloughing through the road drifted through the paneless window. VILAK rolled to a crack in the wall and peered outside. "Another one of our soldier comrades," he announced. "Looks as if he were bringing a message. We ought to know what they are going to do with us pretty quickly now."

They heard the newcomer tramp into the other room. There was a long excited conversation which they could not hear. Then the door into their room opened and the baying mustached captain entered.

"We have pondered well what is to be done with you, roosting peewee who call yourselves men," he grumbled, glancing down disgustedly at the two mud covered prisoners and bestowing on them a well directed kick. "And we have decided. Your woman goes with us. For she is beautiful. Yourselves shall hang like the fowls dogs that you are. My men now get ready their fowls and touching for they have seen little because they watch for you, and they have long to travel."

"They are hungry. When they have eaten, then they will rest. For it is not good to travel quickly after eating. Then they will take away your woman. And then you will hang. We do not hang you now for this might make sick the woman, and a sick woman is a burden—As are all women."

He glanced outside the window where two soldiers were toiling over a steaming black pot. "By the way the touching boils I will say you have perhaps one, maybe two hours in which to live and please your foul souls. If this is not enough, so will it be the better. Inform Senior the Devil that it is the fault of Capataz Jose Imperial Chapada. Until an hour, goodbye." He kicked them painfully again and slammed the door.

The sudden darkness of the quadrilateral regions began to clutch house, field and forest in its spongy embrace. Peering outside again through the crack in the wall, VILAK saw Elise led to a log on which two soldiers were sitting. A third who was guarding her ordered her to sit down between them. She was slow in obeying. She struck violently against the wood, then started up at her captors, helpless but defiant.

Vilak bit his lip fiercely. He watched a moment longer, then rolled back to the edge of the pool and once more immersing himself in an instant, rolled out and began writhing at his shackles. It was useless. Though his powerful muscles strained until it seemed they must burst, the leathern sinews held. He ceased his futile efforts and lay on the ground, breathing heavily, too exhausted for the moment to protect himself from the greenish mites crawling in swarms all over his long body.

Suddenly he began to laugh, a low chuckling laugh. The old man looked at him in amazement, unwilling to believe that the sound had come from between his friend's lips. But there could be no doubt. VILAK was still chuckling. He turned his head smilingly to the old man then began rubbing his forehead against the wall. "No, I'm not crazy, Nanny," he murmured. "I'm merely chuckling because I have been crazy ever since we've been in here. Or stupid, whichever you prefer to call it. We've had a lot of people here all the time."

The old man squinted wonderingly around the darkening room. "I don't see anything. Really—er—nothing."

"These termites," he lay upon the ground again, and let the insects swarm over him. "They're wild about leather and hides of any sort. I've had the soles of my feet too many shoes eaten up over eight days were not to know that. They want to eat these hide ropes with which we're tied. That's undoubtedly what's drawn them to us. The ropes have probably been soaked in oil besides, and there's mud between them. They're back trying to give us and we wouldn't let them."

"Don't beat them off any longer. At the expense of a few stray nips they'll have us cut loose in half an hour or less."

He put his eye to the crack in the wall again and watched, while the insects, finding themselves unloosened, crawled upon him in increasing numbers until his body seemed a trembling greenish carpet. Some hurried themselves upon his leather gaiters and shoes and, digging their razor-like pincers deep into the fiber, began carrying off tiny morsels to their unseen hill not far off in the jungle. Others began to attack the thick, squarish ropes that bound his limbs.

It had now become completely dark and by the fire light he could see the soldiers gather round their steaming meal. Elise still sat on the log patient, immobile. Each moment VILAK's fingers reached along the hide for a few inches they could reach to see how the work of destruction was progressing. At length he felt a notch where the insects had bitten more deeply than the rest. Concentrating all his energies in one tremendous impulse, he thrust his arms forward from his chest. Half the effort would have sufficed, for the cord, almost severed, snapped as though it had been a thread. He was free.

Vilak's plan is successful. In the next chapter he and his captors escape, though still in ignorance of the reasons for their capture.
