PAMPA — Gray County was honored by the Texas Association of Counties with the 1993 Safety Award. The association administers the workers' compensation self-insurance pool in which Gray County participates for worker's compensation coverage.

The county earned the award for maintaining an excellent record of controlling workers' comp claims, according to a press release from the association. To qualify for the award, a county must have an experience modifier of 0.7 or less and a manual loss ratio for 1993 of .25 or less.

The experience modifier was calculated using the frequency and severity of claims from 1990 to 1992. The modifier represents a type of coverage discount, or extra charge if losses have been bad. The loss ratio is the ratio of incurred losses to the manual worker's comp rates published by the state of Texas for 1992.

Gray County has an experience modifier of 0.63 and a manual loss ratio for 1993 of 0.01. The county will save about $151,938 in workers' compensation costs in 1994 compared to the manual rates for workers' comp published by the state of Texas and used by insurance companies. The savings are the result of good experience modifier and discounts received through participation in the self funded pool.

PAMPA — Anyone who would like to receive less advertising via the mail system can ask companies not to exchange their names with other mailers by contacting the Mail Preference Service of the Direct Marketing Association.

This service removes names from many of the national mailing lists. When calling provide your name and address, including zip code, and spelling variations you have notices on the mailing labels of the "junk mail."

Along with the reduction of unwanted mail, a reduction of paper used in the advertising is achieved, according to an official with the Clean Pampa Inc. organization.

In the future when ordering things to be delivered by mail, let the company know that you do not want your name and address shared with other businesses and organization if that's the case.

The Mail Preference Service can be reached by calling the Direct Marketing Association, 11 W. 42nd St., P.O. Box 3861, New York, N.Y. 10163.

PAMPA — A nurse's aide is credited with saving the life of a Pampa woman after performing the Heimlich maneuver on her Tuesday evening in a restaurant.

Mike Shook, 20, who recently received his nurse's aid certification, was eating in Sirloin Stockade when he noticed another patron choking.

According to the restaurant's manager on duty, Carolyn Shook, Mike's mother, the good Samaritan helped the woman dislodge a piece of meat from her throat.

Mrs. Shook said the woman was having difficulty breathing before Mike helped dislodge the blockage from her airway.

Mr. Shook works at Pampa Nursing Center.

PAMPA — The Pampa Economic Development Corporation board of directors will hold its monthly meeting Thursday at 4 p.m. in the PEDC building, 301 N. Ballard.

The board will consider hiring an audit firm to perform the annual audit for the corporation and will begin consideration of the fiscal year 1995 budget. The board will also look at scheduling a long range planning session to be attended by the PEDC director and board members.

Election of officers for the corporation for the next 12 months also will take place during the meeting.

PAMPA — A Tuesday evening fire destroyed a metal storage building and the contents inside one-eighth of a mile west of Lilly Street west of Price Road.

Four units and nine firefighters responded to the fire which was reported at 10:10 p.m.

A PFD official said the cause of the blaze is unknown and is under investigation.

The building is owned by Darrell Coffman. He said a three-wheeler, a riding lawn mower and tools were among the items lost in the blaze.

Coffman said the cause of the fire may have been electrical in nature.

Lilly Street is located west of Price Road and is in the Kentucky Acres development.

Clinton says he still wants universal coverage

By DAVID ESPO
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Clinton insisted today he still supports national health care for everybody and that his willingness to compromise may have been overstated. He said he would never accept a law that spells out coverage of 95 percent as equivalent to "universal coverage."

Clinton sought to clarify comments from Tuesday, when he told the nation's governors in Boston that coverage of "95 (percent) or upwards" might be satisfactory.

The remarks sowed confusion on Capitol Hill, with opponents of mandatory health coverage calling it a major concession to their side, liberal lawmakers expressing irritation and White House allies insisting nothing had changed.

A team of administration officials insisted Tuesday that Clinton had not really changed his position. Today, the administration stepped up what was turning into a major damage-control operation, with both Clinton and Vice President Al Gore weighing in.

"Nothing has changed when it comes to the commitment to ensure that all Americans have health care coverage that can never be taken away," Gore said today.

He appeared on network news shows this morning to insist that Clinton was only agreeing to compromise on the process. "What the president said yesterday was, if someone has a better idea about how to reach that goal, we are willing to talk about the best way to get to that goal. But every American must have health care coverage."

"What the debate is not about is whether all Americans will have health care coverage that can never be taken away," Gore said.

As Clinton began a meeting with congressional leaders at the White House today, he said: "I'm sorry that after all my skills and efforts at communicating, the point I really made yesterday somehow didn't get through."

That point, he said, was that alternative bills that do not require universal coverage "will not work. That is the issue. We must do something that works."

As to the 95 percent figure, "no one ever talked about a law which would set that as a goal," Clinton said.

Instead, he said he was using it in a statistical sense — suggesting that Social Security and mandatory school attendance laws also call for full coverage, but that some people fall through the cracks.

Legislation passed by the Senate Finance Committee does not require employers to furnish workers with insurance — but sets a goal of 95 percent coverage by the year 2,000.

White House aides said that Clinton used the 95 percent figure because it was the "trigger" in that bill, which the administration does not currently support.

"The only discussion of a figure (95 percent) was in connection with a trigger," said Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell after today's White House meeting. "It has never been suggested as the definition. He was reflecting a practical reality."

House Speaker Thomas Foley, D-Wash., also said Clinton was being unfairly criticized for changing his position. "There was a tendency to take what he had said and work it into something that suggested some abandonment of the basic proposal that he offered to the country. That's not true," Foley said.

But Rep. Bill Richardson, D-N.M., said Clinton's remarks in Boston "sent a good message that there's flexibility. We have a lot of moderate members in the caucus that want to make sure we have a bill on the floor that they can support. I don't think the president was sending a signal to compromise that weakens him. I think that, because of what he did, we've picked up more votes."

Clinton said he had always been flexible on how to get to universal coverage, and could accept some way of doing it other than requiring all employers to insure their workers — if someone could come up with a plan that would work.

"My goal is universal coverage. It is the only goal that works for ordinary Americans," he said. "I am willing to compromise on how to get that. ... Let's not do something that doesn't work," Clinton said.

He reiterated his support for a suggestion by Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole that Congress forego its August recess to complete work on health care legislation. "I would gladly accept," he said. "I think it's worth it for American people to get a good health bill."

There was no indication that Democratic leaders were willing to go along with such a move, however.

Clinton's words to the governors were hailed by proponents of alternative health care bills in Congress.

Adopt-A-Park group

By CHERYL BERZANSKIS
News Editor

A Gray County jury was deliberating at noon today the guilt or innocence of a 22-year-old man accused of assaulting a Pampa resident in the early hours of Christmas Eve, 1993.

Dewayne Rodney Hill is accused of attacking Ronald Gene Carr at Gateway NA Inc., 1300 Northcrest, after an altercation broke out between partying employees of the construction business and a trio of men who came to the party after hearing about it at a bar.

Also indicted for the attack on Carr are Terry Glen Honeycutt, 26, and Cutter Doy Hutchison, 19. Hutchison is incarcerated in Gray County Jail awaiting transport to a Texas prison after pleading guilty to a Potter County felony theft charge. Honeycutt is free on bond, charged with aggravated assault. They were indicted June 7.

Hill, taking the stand in his own defense, admitted Tuesday afternoon he struck Carr one time in the jaw, but claimed Carr approached him with raised fists as the three men were leaving Gateway after Carr ordered them off. In rebuttal testimony, Carr denied threatening Hill, repeating his only memory of the attack was seeing the three men get in their car as he turned around to re-enter Gateway. His next recollection, he said, was waking up bloody inside the house.

A former Gateway employee, Miguel

Marin, told the eight-man, four-woman jury he saw Hill hit Carr outside the business when Carr told the trio to leave the Christmas party. Marin admitted he was drinking during the evening, as did other Gateway employees and guests who testified.

According to witnesses, Hill, Honeycutt and Hutchison visited the Christmas party but were asked to leave by employee Tommy Price. A scuffle broke out between Hill and Price in the living room of the farmhouse which serves as Gateway headquarters. The scuffle continued into the unit yard when Carr came outside and told his employees and their guests to go inside, testimony showed.

Carr approached the vehicle, Hutchison and Hill said, with raised fists when Hill struck him, knocking him down. Hutchison testified Honeycutt kicked and struck Carr repeatedly with a toy firetruck after rushing Carr from the driver's side of the car. A Clarendon woman, Tiffany Dewitt, who traveled with the men to the party, testified Honeycutt struck Carr "a lot" with some object.

Testimony throughout Tuesday indicated that Gateway employees, their guests and those who crashed the party had consumed alcohol both at Gateway and Pampa bars. Carr admitted he was "possibly" impaired by the alcohol in his system. Others admitted drinking beer, whiskey, vodka and eating "Jello shots," a concoction of gelatin and vodka.

Testimony showed Hill, Honeycutt, Hutchison and Dewitt, who traveled with the men to the gathering, heard about the Gateway party from Derrick Club bartender Liz Castillo, who was invited to it by Carr's wife Sandy Carr. Mrs. Carr, her husband and friends came into the bar earlier Dec. 23, 1993 to drink beer, Castillo said. Castillo testified she asked Mrs. Carr if she could invite more friends and Mrs. Carr said yes. Castillo said she told Hill, Hutchison, Dewitt and Honeycutt, who came into the Derrick after the Carr's left, to go to the party where she would meet them after closing the club at midnight. Instead, the four returned just after midnight and told her about the fight, she said.

In closing arguments, District Attorney John Mann emphasized Carr's injuries, including unconsciousness, which he said meets the definition of aggravated assault. He pointed out Marin's testimony that Hill, Honeycutt and Hutchison all attacked Carr and denied Carr approached Hill with raised fists.

Court-appointed attorney Ken Fields told the panel terms of the indictment were not met by the state and called prosecution of the case shoddy. He also pointed out Hill may have struck Carr in self-defense. While Carr suffered injuries, Fields said, his extensive injuries could not have been the result of a single punch, but were instead the result of the attack by Honeycutt.

Congressman back from Haiti with concerns about invasion

By GEORGE GEDDA
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A Democratic congressman just back from Haiti said today the island's military ruler "is not totally intransigent" and that it would be a mistake for President Clinton to order an invasion now.

"I think invasion is not the right choice but it should be a last resort," Rep. Bill Richardson said after briefing Clinton and congressional leaders on his trip.

House Speaker Tom Foley, D-Wash., left the White House meeting saying he had no sense that an invasion was imminent. And Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, said Clinton's policy should be given a chance to work.

Richardson said he met for five hours Monday with Haiti's military leaders and told Lt. Gen. Raoul Cedras "he had to make the next move, that U.S. resolve was very strong, that Congress was backing the president, that he had to make the next move."

Clinton said the United States isn't interested in talking with Cedras unless he's willing to relinquish power.

"If he wants to talk about when he's going to leave, then I'm sure that somebody will talk to him," Clinton said during an Oval Office photo opportunity with Ernesto Perez Balladares, the president-elect of Panama.

Clinton thanked Balladares for his willingness to set up safe havens for Haitian refugees once he takes office Sept. 1.

Panama's current president, Guillermo Endara had agreed to take up to 10,000 Haitians, but later reneged on the deal.

Clinton, in an interview with The Boston Globe published today, said, "I don't think it is inevitable" that U.S. forces would invade Haiti. But, Clinton said of the Haitian dictators, "They've made me more determined than ever to see that we have a change in the leadership down there. ..."

Richardson said Clinton's policy "is working. I think the economic sanctions are biting. The refugee policy is also working. I think it's important that we be patient. I found Cedras to be a realistic individual."

Richardson, D-N.M., said he didn't go Haiti as a negotiator carrying a message from the Clinton administration. "I didn't issue any ultimatum," he said on NBC, and told Fox TV that Cedras "gave me a framework of concerns that he has, that I'm going to take back, and that maybe there's some flexibility." He declined to discuss them until he briefs the White House.

"This doesn't mean a negotiation where the terms of the administration's policy might change. But all I'm saying is, if he makes a move, we shouldn't totally close it off and say that the guy is totally inflexible, because I detected a little bit of opening. He's not totally intransigent," he said.

Shoes for school

Lt. Anthony Housley and his wife Robbye, corps commanding officers of the Salvation Army Post in Pampa, take Mariza Scott, 6, shopping for shoes Tuesday afternoon at Payless Shoe Source on Hobart. Applications are being taken to buy children new shoes for school. Dates to sign up will be July 25-July 29 from 9 a.m. to noon and 1-3 p.m. at the Salvation Army, 701 S. Cuyler. Each child will have up to $25 to spend on a new pair of shoes. To qualify, parents must bring a proof of income, rent, receipts, utility bills and other monthly payments in addition to a birth certificate, Social Security card and last year's report card. This includes children from kindergarten through fifth grade. Last year, the Salvation Army sent over 300 children to school with new shoes and socks, Lt. Anthony Housley said. All shoes and socks will be purchased at Payless Shoe Source. For more information on the program, parents should call Maggie Ivey at 665-7233. (Pampa News photo by Melinda Martinez)

PISD trustees to discuss school discipline

Discipline and how it will be distributed to disruptive students in the Pampa Independent School District will top the meeting of the school district's Board of Education meeting on Thursday.

Specifically, board members will discuss eliminating corporal discipline entirely within the school district.

The recommendation comes from the Texas Elementary Principals and Supervisors Association as well as other state and national organizations that have urged school districts for several years to closely examine its use.

Currently, corporal punishment is used at the middle school and elementary school levels within the district but not at Pampa High School.

Last year, high school officials did away the policy after several years of debate on the issue.

In a related matter, the board will also discuss an amendment of a policy that sets forth guidelines for student conduct and relates to alcohol and drug use.

Amended in July 1989, the policy makes references to some programs that are no longer in place or that are no longer accessible. With the new policy, the district would seek to provide appropriate counseling in addition to applying consequences when needed.

The policy would still allow school officials to refer matters to local law enforcement agencies and would still allow cars and lockers to be "searched for alcohol and drugs in accordance with board policy."

In other business, the board will consider the approval of a pledge authorization from the Federal Reserve Bank of Dallas, bids for food services and a Pampa Middle School sound system, an amendment for the 1993-1994 budget and the sale of delinquent tax property.

School board members will also hear from Dr. Dawson Orr, superintendent, who is scheduled to discuss discipline, the summer enrichment program, a TASB policy update, records management, the 1994-1995 budget and recent computer equipment purchases.

The PISD School Board meeting begins at 6 p.m. in the conference room at the Carver Center, 321 W. Albert.

Triple whammy jolt on Jupiter starts today

WASHINGTON (AP) — A fragmented comet that has been plowing into Jupiter for days isn't finished yet: There's a triple whammy jolt yet to come for the giant planet.

Fragment Q2, thought to be more than 1.5 miles in diameter, is to smash into Jupiter at about 2:30 p.m. CDT today. It will drill approximately the same site as two following comet pieces are expected to hit on Thursday, creating what one astronomer called "one heck of a mess."

Meanwhile, new data adds to the picture of the extreme violence of each new comet impact.

Lucy McFadden, a University of Maryland astronomer, said astronomers in Chile report that fragment H, which hit on Monday, created an instant bubble of superheated gas that momentarily was 50 times brighter in infrared radiation than the whole of Jupiter.

"This suggests that the H impact was just as energetic as G," the fragment that is thought to be the largest, she said. G hit 12 hours before H.

Already the cloud tops of Jupiter's far southern hemisphere are littered with blackened patches left by almost a dozen impacts from the 21 pieces of comet Shoemaker-Levy 9.

Some of the points appear to still be hot from impacts as early as last Saturday. The Keck Observatory in Hawaii released infrared images of Jupiter that show five impact points still glowing from gases heated by collision.

In visible light, a dark mark that resembles a black eye has made a dramatic change in Jupiter's appearance.

Steve Maran, an astronomer at the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, said the black eye mark is the most easily seen spot in the nearly 400-year history of humans observing the planet with telescopes. The mark — larger than the diameter of Earth — is so easily seen, he said, that even amateurs with backyard telescopes may spot it.

"That's something that has never happened before," said Maran. Usually only professionals or advanced amateurs with sophisticated telescopes can see the details of Jupiter's face, which is some 480 million miles from Earth.

State toughens policies on foster care program

DALLAS (AP) — The Texas Department of Protective and Regulatory Services has toughened foster care policies as the result of a six-month internal review.

The review was prompted by the case of a 7-year-old boy who was beaten into a coma in November after social workers placed him with nine other children in a foster home in West Texas.

Social workers later said the 10 children were among 16 victims of a child-molesting satanic cult headed by a Gilmer family.

The policy changes are "designed to shore up checks and balances that didn't work" in Gilmer, said David Reilly, the department's chief of field operations.

"As much as we have racked our brains about how to prevent something like this from ever happening again, somebody has to recognize that they need help," Reilly said in Tuesday's editions of The Dallas Morning News.

Under the new rules, no more than two children can be placed in a home licensed as a "therapeutic foster home."

In addition, when foster families move to a new region, social workers in that region will assume responsibility for the case.

Authorities in the West Texas town of Colorado City believe James Lappe, the foster father of 7-year-old Danny Kerr Jr., beat the child into a coma Nov. 7, 1993.

The following day, Lappe killed himself. Two days after that, his wife, Marie Anna Lappe, overdosed on prescription drugs.

Danny remains in a coma in an East Texas nursing home. The nine other children have been placed in foster homes while the state pursues civil cases to terminate parental rights and put them up for adoption.

The 10 children were placed in the Lappes' custody following the May 1993 arrest of 10 members of the Kerr family on charges of sexual assault and indecency with a child.

Among those arrested were Danny's parents, paternal grandparents, an uncle and two aunts.

The suspects' children told investigators they were forced to have sex and watch ceremonies in the woods where people dressed as devils, according to one affidavit.

The case grew more bizarre in January when a Gilmer police officer and seven of the people charged with molestation were indicted for murder in the case of missing Gilmer teenager Kelly Wilson.

The murder indictments were dismissed in March after the state attorney general's office found the charges were unsubstantiated. State lawyers said prior investigators and social workers were "overzealous" in their work.

The attorney general's office is continuing its investigation into the molestation charges.

Other foster care policy changes announced Monday include:

- Identify experts inside and outside the agency who have the expertise to consult with local workers on unusually complex cases;

- Reinforce the necessity for effective supervision of caseworkers, especially in isolated areas;

- Expand training on both sexual abuse and proper techniques for interviewing purported child victims;

- Bring in experts to assess cases of suspected "ritualistic" abuse.

Researcher: Coyote baiting would halt spread of rabies in Texas areas

KINGSVILLE (AP) — A Texas A&M University researcher said Tuesday that a coyote baiting program could ultimately bring an end to the rabies crisis in south and west central Texas.

Gov. Ann Richards declared a state health emergency on Monday, citing an increase in rabies in the two regions.

"The program that we've developed here would actually be able to control the spread of rabies," said Scott Henke, a research scientist at Texas A&M University-Kingsville.

Henke is working with Texas A&M-College Station, the Centers for Disease Control, the Texas Department of Health and the Denver Wildlife Research Center on a coyote baiting program designed to stop the disease's northward spread.

The baiting program, began in March, air drops dog-food-like-bait with a rabies vaccine inside. Computer models estimate that rabies would eventually die out in rural South Texas if coyotes took 70 percent of the bait in a full-scale rabies eradication program.

"We found that where we dropped 150 baits-per-square mile, 75 percent were taken by coyotes," Henke said in a prepared statement. "Where we dropped 50 in a square mile, the coyotes took 68 percent of them."

The CDC in Atlanta is determining the effectiveness of the vaccine in the bait capsules, and if its report is positive, the state health department plans to initiate a full-scale baiting program for South Texas in January or February, Henke said.

According to health department information, there has been an increase in canine rabies in South Texas and gray fox rabies in west central Texas.

Autopsy: Blunt trauma caused toddler's death

LUBBOCK (AP) — A toddler found dead in a Lubbock County pasture suffered blunt trauma to the head and abdomen, autopsy results show.

Leon Rivera's death is considered a homicide, police Spokesman Bill Morgan said Tuesday. No arrests have been made.

Leon, who would have turned 2 this weekend, disappeared while playing Friday in the front yard of a family friend. A volunteer from the Civil Air Patrol found his body Monday evening in tall weeds about 8 miles north of Dalou.

He was wearing the clothes he wore when he disappeared: T-shirt, shorts and sandals decorated with Sesame Street characters.

Morgan said the toddler suffered trauma to the back of the skull and the abdomen, where major vessels were ruptured.

Greenspan: Interest rates may need to be higher

By DAVE SKIDMORE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan warned Congress today that interest rates may need to move higher to ensure that inflation remains in check.

In May, the last time the central bank pushed rates up, it said it had substantially finished its course of monetary tightening.

But, since then, it's become clear that the economy has grown at a pace appreciably faster than can be maintained without worsening inflation, Greenspan said in testimony prepared for the Senate Banking Committee.

And the dollar has fallen to a 50-year low against the Japanese yen and to near-record lows against the German mark, a development that could contribute to inflation down the road, he said.

"It is an open question whether our actions to date have been sufficient to head off inflationary pressures and thus maintain favorable trends in the economy," he said.

Reacting to the testimony, stock and bond prices both fell in early trading.

Greenspan carefully avoided saying rates definitely would rise, or when the move would occur, but he vowed to quash any "upsurge in inflationary instabilities."

"We are determined to prevent such an outcome, and currently are monitoring economic and financial data carefully to assess whether additional (interest rate) adjustments are appropriate," he said.

"The amount of slack in the economy, while difficult to judge, appears to have become relatively small," he said.

Private economists say such a move could come as soon as next month. The central bank's policy-making Federal Open Market Committee next meets on Aug. 16.

That would be an ideal time, politically, to increase interest rates, economists said. Both President Clinton and Congress are expected to be on vacation.

"There will be less political heat because everyone's away," said economist Mark Zandi of Regional Financial Associates in West Chester, Pa.

So far this year, the Fed has pushed up short-term interest rates by 1.25 percentage points, in four steps between February and May. In response, the prime rate at banks, which serves as a benchmark for many consumer rates, went from 6 percent to 7.25 percent.

Economists say the Fed's goal is to keep growth from getting out of hand and creating shortages in factory capacity and in labor markets, developments that eventually would worsen inflation.

In Greenspan's testimony today, part of the Fed's legally required twice-a-year report to Congress, he argued that allowing inflation to increase eventually would choke off growth, rather than enhance it.

"An increase in inflation would come at considerable cost: We would lose hard-won ground that would be difficult to recapture later (and) our long-run economic performance would be impaired," he said.

So far, consumers haven't seen any rise in inflation. The pace of price increases, excluding volatile food and energy, remains at about 3 percent.

However, Greenspan warned, "Price pressures have been manifest at earlier stages of processing."

What he called signs of "an incipient inflationary process" included reports of labor shortages for construction workers and truck drivers, an increase in prices paid by manufacturers for raw materials and a slowdown in business delivery times.

"As yet, these sorts of indications do not seem to be widespread across the economy. Nonetheless, we shall need to be particularly alert to these emerging signs in considering further adjustments to (interest rate) policy in the period ahead," he said.

The economic forecast issued by the Fed in conjunction with today's testimony underscored the central bank's determination to slow the pace of economic expansion and allow only a small increase in inflation.

It looks for growth in the gross domestic product, the sum of all goods and services produced within U.S. borders, to slow from between 3 percent and 3.25 percent this year to a range of 2.5 percent to 2.75 percent next year.

It sees inflation moving from at most 3 percent this year to between 2.75 percent and 3.5 percent in 1995.

Meanwhile, it says the unemployment rate, at 6 percent this year, should remain between 6 percent and 6.25 percent the rest of this year and through next year.

Greenspan told senators they should not look to monetary policy to produce further declines in unemployment.

"Improving education and training and facilitating better and more rapid matching of workers with jobs are essential elements in making more effective use of the U.S. labor force," he said.

Greenspan qualified the Fed's inflation forecast by warning that the recent decline in the dollar was pushing up import prices and allowing room for increased prices of U.S.-made goods that compete with imports.

"The recent depreciation in the dollar is likely to put upward pressure on inflation over the next year if not reversed," he said.

But, he said, if the Fed achieves its goals of solid economic growth and stable prices, that "will ensure that dollar-denominated assets remain attractive to global investors, which is essential to the dollar's continuing role as the world's principal ... currency."

Calling all women: Town has bumper crop of bachelors

By LAURA BAENEN
Associated Press Writer

HERMAN, Minn. (AP) — Betty Harrigill doesn't harbor illusions of bagging a bachelor during a short visit to the Minnesota prairie — but it can't hurt to look.

And Herman, population 474, is expecting plenty of women to start looking today at the Grant County Fair.

The town 150 miles northwest of Minneapolis is showcasing itself as a good place for female entrepreneurs — partly because of its bumper crop of bachelor farmers and agribusinessmen.

Herman has 78 single men between 20 to 50, and only about 10 eligible women in the same age range.

Women from every state and several countries have asked for information since the town's advertisement in a weekly paper got noticed by television talk shows. Nobody knows how many will make the trek here this week.

Some, like Ms. Harrigill, are coming on a lark.

"I'm just really going for the vacation, to get away," said Ms. Harrigill, a 40ish bookkeeper and divorced mother of two from the Fort Worth, Texas suburb of Hurst. "How can you build a relationship in two days, unless there's a miracle?"

Town leaders decided to take action after all 20 girls in the high school's class of 1995 said they would have to leave town to find jobs.

"We didn't from the beginning promote this as a dating service or matchmaking service," said Herman's housing director, Skip DeLong. "We're trying to create career opportunities for women."

The town could use a lawyer, an accountant, a construction contractor, a computer technician and a plumber, among other occupations. Officials say there's loan money available, and office space in the former hardware store.

The fair, which runs through Sunday, usually draws about 2,000 people each day.

But Jon Olson, who works for the Herman Development Corp., said the state tourism office said to expect up to 30,000 people a day.

A radio station more than 200 miles away in Hibbing helped some single women get a jump on the competition, bringing in a busload for a street dance last month and planning to return with "Love Bus II" this week.

Opinion

Federal mandates destroy incentives

The politicians are debating whether any kind of health-care reform is politically feasible this year. People in the administration and Congress are working feverishly to cobble enough compromises to make some sort of bill possible before the November election can reduce the Democratic majority.

With all the coverage of the politics of health-care reform, however, less than full attention is still paid to the substance of the Clinton plan and various alternatives.

Most reform proposals carry provisions for mandates of varying degrees of severity because most policy-makers believe the goal of universal health-care insurance coverage is feasible only if people are forced to buy or provide health insurance. The Clinton plan would mandate that all employers above a certain size provide health insurance for all employees and pay 80 percent of the cost.

Would mandates really lead to universal coverage? Probably not. At least 41 states and the District of Columbia mandate auto insurance, yet about one in seven drivers remains uninsured.

The question might seem archaic, but does the federal government have the constitutional authority to force people to buy health insurance? It does not force people to buy food or food insurance, nor does it force grocers to give food away (or sell at government-set prices) to people who can't afford it.

Business leaders — and state and local government leaders — have learned to their sorrow in the past 20 years that federal mandates contain the seeds of future mischief. Because they conceal costs — without eliminating them — they tend to proliferate and become more burdensome.

Mandates also tend to increase the price of the goods or services they force people to buy. One of the most important aspects of a competitive economy is the right not to buy something; that right forces businesses to approach customers as suitors.

That raises the fundamental problem with mandates in a free society. For some people, health insurance is not a justifiable expense or going without is an acceptable risk. About 3.8 million of the 38 million uninsured Americans live in households with annual incomes of $50,000 or more. About 3.5 million of the uninsured have a bachelor's degree and 100,000 have a doctorate. About 2.7 million of the uninsured are self-employed. (There is some overlap in these figures.)

Should all those who have made a conscious, informed decision not to buy health insurance, at least for the time being, be forced to do so to satisfy a politician's devotion to the rhetoric of universal coverage?

One important key to a civil society is people taking personal responsibility for their lives, their actions, and their health. Government mandates undermine that sense of responsibility and accountability.

Fired lawyer redeems principles

Until last year, Anthony Griffin was known in the Galveston area of Texas as a resourceful civil rights and civil liberties attorney — particularly in voting rights and First Amendment cases. He was also general counsel — without pay — for the Texas NAACP. In 1993, Griffin was named Citizen of the Year at the Black Heritage Festival in Galveston.

Suddenly, however, Griffin became a national figure when he accepted Michael Lowe — Grand Dragon of the Texas Knights of the Ku Klux Klan — as a client. The Texas Human Rights Commission issued a subpoena ordering Lowe to turn over the membership list of the Klan.

The commission was investigating alleged discrimination and illegal intimidation against blacks in a federally subsidized housing project in the city of Vidor. Affidavits and statements by witnesses indicated that some of those involved in the threats may have been members of Lowe's klavern.

The Grand Dragon, refusing to obey the subpoena, went to the Texas ACLU, which asked Anthony Griffin to take the case. The black Galveston lawyer made it clear to that his decision to represent him was based entirely on "the basic principle of your right to speak and organize. If your rights are taken away, so will mine be."

Griffin based his legal argument on a landmark 1958 Supreme Court decision, NAACP vs. Alabama. That state had demanded the NAACP turn over its membership list. Justice John Harlan, writing for the court, upheld the First Amendment associational rights of the NAACP, pointing out that if the identities of its members were exposed, they would be vulnerable to reprisals, including "the threat of physical coercion."

Anthony Griffin's decision to represent Lowe and the Klan subjected him to reprisals. He was harshly criticized by many members of the state NAACP. Its leadership tried to get the national office to decide whether he should be fired. But Ben Chavis and his colleagues ducked. Thereupon, the Texas NAACP dismissed Griffin.

Nat
Hentoff

But the national NAACP was not entirely out of the case. It actually filed a court brief supporting Texas' attempt to seize the list.

In June of this year, the Texas Supreme Court, citing NAACP vs. Alabama, ruled that the Klan did not have to obey the subpoena. If he state of Texas appeals this decision, the U.S. Supreme Court is not likely to find a reason to overturn NAACP vs. Alabama — a decision that protected the NAACP once again in the late 1970s when Texas commanded the NAACP to turn over its membership list.

I asked Anthony Griffin after the new decision came down whether his law practice had been affected by the controversy over his association with the Grand Dragon. "It was affected for about six months," he told me, "because I had to go on the road to defend my reputation and to attack the notion that the need to understand free speech does not apply to black people. So I didn't have much time to be a lawyer."

Griffin had been lauded by the ACLU and other national free-speech organizations but, he says, "to the people on the streets, I was this crazy black lawyer in Galveston who had lost his mind. I had to respond to that. So I went on radio, and I talked to black groups and to students at colleges. I challenged the racism of those black folks who told me I should have let a white lawyer take that case. And I challenged the racism of Anglos who regarded me as some kind of oddity because I was a black man who had represented the Klan."

I asked Griffin if he feels he has gotten his reputation back.

"After six months of talking," he said, "I got it back. For instance, there was an NAACP meeting in Texas. As soon as I got in front of that audience, I knew how hostile it was — 300 people who wouldn't even look at me. After 10 minutes, some of them, now and then, looked sideways at me. After half an hour, half of them sort of faced me. And after an hour some were laughing in agreement with what I was saying."

"Afterwards," Griffin noted, "200 people lined up to tell me, 'Now we understand, and we will tell others so that they will understand.'"

In the course of his travels, Griffin received the first annual William Brennan Award from the Thomas Jefferson Center for Freedom of Expression. Brennan told Griffin, "I didn't know who you were. But I've checked on you, and what I found makes me proud to have my name on this award."

He has yet to hear, however, from Ben Chavis, the NAACP's leader, on his Texas Supreme Court victory. But after all, Anthony Griffin was fired for being faithful to the principles of the NAACP — and to NAACP vs. Alabama.

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Wednesday, July 20, the 201st day of 1994. There are 164 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

Twenty-five years ago, on July 20, 1969, Apollo 11 astronauts Neil Armstrong and Edwin "Buzz" Aldrin became the first men to walk on the moon. At 9:56 p.m. CDT, Armstrong stepped onto the moon from Apollo's lunar module and declared, "That's one small step for (a) man, one giant leap for mankind."

On this date:

In 1810, Colombia declared independence from Spain.

In 1861, the Congress of the Confederate States began holding sessions in Richmond, Va.

In 1871, British Columbia entered Confederation as a Canadian province.

In 1881, Sioux Indian leader Sitting Bull, a fugitive since the Battle of the Little Big Horn, surrendered to federal troops.

In 1942, the first detachment of the Women's Army Auxiliary Corps — later known as "WACs" — began basic training at Fort Des Moines, Iowa.

Republicans accessories to sabotage

Congress is trying diligently to foul up the best health care system in the world and turn it over to the people who run the Post Office!

And Republicans on the Hill are accessories to the sabotage.

When Hillary seeks to rally support for the "Clinton Health Reform," Republicans should be responding with one voice: "First lady, you must be kidding!"

For Americans to surrender their choice of doctor, hospital and/or treatment ...

For America's retirees to allow cutbacks in Medicare ...

For government to be given authority to veto new technology for elderly patients ...

These surrenders of basic freedoms should be unconscionable.

Most Democrats understandably don't dare challenge the White House with an election upcoming, but Republicans certainly should.

Yet, instead of shouting down this Ponzi political panacea, what do the Republicans do?

They offer what they call "a compromise plan for universal health care."

Paul
Harvey

They are even letting Mrs. Clinton in recent days get away with calling her plan "private insurance." Incredible!

The typical 1994 Republican politician is a naive nincompoop. Instead of closing ranks, standing firm and administering in unison the knockout blow to this logistical and fiscal silliness, they pull their punches and back away.

Either they can't see or don't care that Democrats on the Hill could not care less which health care plan gets adopted. They realize what myopic Republicans can't seem to comprehend — that any plan is a victory for socialism, a blow to freedom and great vote bait for the Clintons — but it's bad medicine!

Most of the flaws in our present system are because of too much government!

Every other nation on earth that has sought to socialize medicine is backing away from it as "abjectly inefficient and prohibitively expensive."

Even the Canadians and the Danes have recognized that "free medicine" is not worth going bankrupt for.

Yet while we have a chance to learn from their experience, Congress on both sides of the aisle is debating "how much government medicine" the American people will pay for.

Milquetoast Republicans are celebrating curtailment of "employer-sponsored health care," claiming this as some sort of victory. Meanwhile, every other aspect of the administration's governmentalized health care is clearing committee and fast approaching a floor vote.

And in November, with Democrats claiming credit for "free medicine," Republicans are going to get precisely what they deserve.

When is it bigotry to call a bigot a bigot?

Some called it bigotry a few weeks ago when the president, several Democratic leaders and a sensible Republican or two said some unfriendly things about the radical religious right.

The chairman of the Republican Party, Haley Barbour, characterized one Democrat's remarks as "Christian bashing" and "religious bigotry." Forty-four Republican senators, including Minority Leader Bob Dole, signed a letter to President Clinton asking him to reject attacks on religious radicals as bigotry.

Bigotry, schmigotry. As someone who was born into a Christian home and baptized in a Christian church, I call it raw courage. It's about time someone in public life screwed up the guts to take on the ayatollahs of the far right — the "full mooners," as Bob Dole reportedly refers to them in private.

I say courage because politics and religion is an extremely volatile mixture, and the radical preachers claim to have God on their side. Criticism of them is tantamount to criticism of religion — and faith and morality and virtue.

This, of course, is claptrap. The ayatollahs have no exclusive claim to virtue, and they are demonstrably fraudulent conveyors of the word of God.

Oh, perhaps fraudulent is too strong a word. Maybe they are just maladroit operators of the communications equipment between here and heaven. Maybe there was static on the line when God discussed politics with Rev. Pat Robertson in 1988.

As the Rev. Pat reported it to a New Hampshire congregation on Feb. 14, 1988, the conversation went like this: "I heard the Lord saying, 'I have something else for you to do. I want you to run for president of the United States.'"

Joseph

And then Preacher Pat told his audience: "I assure you that I am going to be the next president of the United States."

Now God's chosen mouthpiece is implying he has some special insight on the death of White House deputy counsel Vincent Foster. The police, the independent counsel, all secular experts be damned. Foster was likely done in by a hand other than his own. The Rev. Pat says this, ergo God says this, ergo who dares dispute it?

The Rev. Jerry Falwell, founder of Liberty Alliance and the late Moral Majority, does the Rev. Pat one better. Falwell is hawking a video which implies that Bill Clinton is involved in a string of Arkansas murders. It is classic conspiratorial lunacy, not to say outrageous garbage. Rev. Jer, of course, draws no conclusions. The video, says a disclaimer, does "not necessarily reflect the opinions of Liberty Alliance, Inc."

Wonderful people, these self-appointed spokesmen for God. Glorious, charitable, compassionate people. How can anyone be so bigoted as to attack them?

Well, let's see...

In 1983, Jerry Falwell told an Old Time Gospel Hour audience that Christian wives are "submissive." The "wife whose head is right with God is submissive to her husband," he said.

In 1985, Falwell offered this opinion: "I listen to the feminists and all these radical gals — most of them are failures ... They married some Caspar Milquetoast who asked permission to go to the bathroom. These women just need a man in the house. That's all they need ... a man to tell them what time of day it is and to lead them home."

In 1988, Falwell railed against the Civil Rights Restoration Act in a "special memorandum to pastors." If it passed, he wrote, "our churches and religious leaders could be forced to hire a practicing active homosexual drug addict with AIDS to be a teacher or youth pastor."

In 1992, Pat Robertson said the "feminist agenda" is "about a socialist, anti-family political movement that encourages women to leave their husbands, kill their children, practice witchcraft, destroy capitalism and become lesbians."

So who are the stereotypers here? Who are the supremacists? Who are the haters? Who are the small minds?

Since when is it bigotry to call a bigot a bigot?

House panel endorses selling off helium reserve

WASHINGTON (AP) — Government agencies would be freed from their obligation to buy helium exclusively from a reserve in the Texas Panhandle under legislation approved by a House subcommittee.

The measure approved Tuesday by the House energy and mineral resources subcommittee would force the eventual sale of the 32 billion cubic feet of helium — valued at $1 billion or more — stored in an underground dome northwest of Amarillo.

The proposal of subcommittee chairman Richard Lehman of California, a reserve critic, would have mandated that the sale of the helium reserve begin in 2014, ending in 2024. But under an amendment approved by the panel, sales would begin in 2004 and end in 2014.

"This legislation stops the needless action of the federal government directly competing with the private helium industry, will save the taxpayers millions of dollars ... and puts an end to a wasteful government program that has long ceased its purpose once and for all," said Rep.

Barbara Vucanovich, R-Nev., the amendment's author.

A top aide to Rep. Bill Sarpalus, whose district includes the reserve, said the measure isn't likely to pass Congress this year because there isn't a companion version being considered in the Senate.

"This action here today is a long way from becoming law," said Phil Duncan, chief of staff for the Amarillo Democrat.

But, he added: "Certainly, there is an atmosphere here in the House today that a program not understood — as the helium program is — is in jeopardy."

The reserve, which traces its roots back to World War I when there was no private helium production, is annually attacked as a dinosaur lumbering on from year to year despite having long ago outlived its usefulness.

The National Taxpayers Union and others have suggested that the stockpile be sold and the proceeds returned to the Treasury.

But supporters contend the reserve, which receives no federal appropriations, doesn't cost taxpayers money. Instead, it returns an average $9 million to the Treasury each year, they argue.

They also suggest that savings from the shutdown and termination of 225 jobs could prove illusory. The General Accounting Office, Congressional Budget Office and others have concluded it would be more costly for government agencies to procure their helium elsewhere if the reserve is closed.

The government uses helium in the space shuttle program, in antimissile weaponry research, for cryogenics and magnetic resonance imaging.

Ninety percent of domestic production comes from the private sector, which sells the natural gas derivative cheaper than the reserve.

Astronaut wanted to duplicate Apollo 11 trip

By MIKE DRAGO
Associated Press Writer

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Columbia commander Robert Cabana dreamed of retracing Apollo 11's path to the moon, perhaps even piloting a spaceship to Mars, when he became an astronaut nine years ago.

Instead, the three-time space flier is stuck going around and around the Earth — some 220 times over two weeks — helping to conduct basic space research. If he's disappointed, Cabana doesn't show it.

"I'll be honest," Cabana said during a space-to-ground news conference today. "When I was selected back in 1985, we did have a vision that maybe in our careers at NASA we'd have a chance to go back to the moon and Mars."

"I'm sure we will. Maybe not in my career, but in the near future," Cabana, 45, said.

Columbia's seven-member crew is nearing the end of its marathon laboratory mission. The shuttle is set to land early Friday at Cape Canaveral, Fla.

The astronauts have worked around the clock since July 8, studying fish, newts, toad eggs and fruit flies to see how they do in weightlessness. The crew also has watched plants grow and wax melt, and made organisms spin in a centrifuge.

It's not exactly space exploration in terms of Apollo 11, which landed on the moon 25 years ago today, but Cabana said Columbia's work is important in its own right — as a foundation for the planned space station project.

"I don't find this frustrating. I think what we're doing is extremely important," Cabana said. "This is a mini space station, and what we need to do is build the international space station so we can do this on a continuing basis."

Richard Hieb, the astronaut in charge of Columbia's scientific payload, said the current mission can't be compared to the feat of Neil Armstrong, Edwin "Buzz" Aldrin and Michael Collins a quarter century ago.

"There isn't a single event impact with what we're doing like the first step of humans on the moon," Hieb said. "But the cumulative effect I think is a lot greater ... It's just the way things are now."

Most of Columbia's astronauts were just kids when Armstrong stepped on the lunar surface. They all say the feat inspired them to study harder, aim higher, fly in space.

Especially on this flight — it's the first shuttle mission to coincide with an Apollo 11 anniversary — crew members have been thinking about the moon and the men who went there.

"We've been watching it over the last two weeks just go from a thin crescent to almost a full moon," mission specialist Donald Thomas said. "We've been keeping a close eye on it every night."

Investigation results in 100 dropped DWI cases

DALLAS (AP) — Alleged misconduct by three police officers has resulted in prosecutors dropping drunken driving charges in 100 cases that have been called into question.

While Assistant District Attorney Mike Gillett said the charges could be refilled, he said prosecutors currently can't vouch for the officers' credibility or rely on their testimony.

"Simply put, the cases cannot be pursued," Gillett said.

An investigation is continuing into accusations that the three traffic officers falsified DWI arrest reports to increase their chances of testifying in court — and drawing overtime pay.

The officers, who have been assigned to restrictive duty, could face charges of felony theft or tampering with government records. Gillett said he expects police to charge the officers "relatively soon."

Officials with the Dallas County district attorney's office said Tuesday they have dismissed 100 DWI cases that would have required the officers' testimony.

Up to 50 more DWI cases could be called into question, prosecutors said.

The officers may have tainted DWI arrests by telling motorists to refuse a breath test to measure their blood-alcohol level, investigators have said. With no test results that might incriminate them, the defendants were more likely to wage court battles, requiring the officers' testimony.

In some cases, investigators have said, officers who didn't participate in the arrests were named on arrest reports as being involved.

Police spokesman Sgt. Jim Chandler said the questionable cases represent a fraction of the more than 8,000 DWI arrests made by the department annually.

Spread on the fun with jams, preserves

Donna
Brauchi

The abundance of fresh fruits puts many of us in the jellied fruit product business. Jellies, jams and preserves and butters are favorites and easy to make.

With emphasis on diet and time saving, recipes have been developed for refrigerator and freezer products that give a new twist to old favorites.

There are four basic ingredients needed to make a good jelly: fruit/juice, sugar, acid and pectin. The fruit and/or juice is the primary ingredient. Be aware that under-ripe fruit has more pectin and is higher in acid content than ripe fruit. A good formula for each cup of fruit is 3/4 cup ripe and 1/4 cup underripe.

It is also good to know that one pound of prepared fruit equals one cup of juice.

If you are making your own juice, do not remove the skins, cores, or pits when cooking the fruit to make the juice. Those are the parts of the fruit especially rich in pectin. Do not refrigerate the juice longer than one day before making into jelly. If commercial or bottled juice is used, select the unsweetened juice only.

Sugar is the preservative in jellied products because it binds moisture so it is not available for microorganism growth. Do not cut back on the amount of sugar called for in a recipe.

This will cause an improper gel. Too much sugar will cause a weak gel and too little sugar will cause a tough gel.

Artificial sweeteners must only be used with specific recipes designed for their use. Products made with artificial sweeteners must be refrigerated or frozen.

Acid is needed both for gel formation and flavor. When fruits are low in acid, lemon juice or citric acid may be used. If a recipe calls for ascorbic acid, you can use crushed vitamin C tablets as a substitute.

Many fruits need added acid or pectin. For a list of fruits and their acid and pectin content, contact the County Extension Office.

Pectin is the substance that causes the fruit juice to gel. Some kinds of fruits have enough natural pectin to make high quality products. Others require added pectin to make high quality products. Others require added pectin, especially when they are used for making jelly.

The highest quality pectin is found in just-ripe fruit. Pectin from under-ripe or overripe fruit will not form a gel.

Commercial pectins are made from apples or citrus fruit and are available in both the powdered and liquid forms in regular formulations with added sugar and light varieties. Powdered and liquid pectin are not interchangeable. Commercial pectin can get old so be sure and check the date on the box or bottle.

When using one of the pectin products used to make jellied products with no added sugar or with less sugar, follow the directions on the package carefully.

In general, when making jellied products, do not double the recipe. It is recommended that all jellied products other than freezer or refrigerator types be processed for five minutes in a boiling water bath. Paraffin is not longer recommended. Also, it is recommended that jars for jellied products be sterilized.

When making the uncooked jams and jellies, you will need: fresh or frozen fruits or fruit juices, commercial pectin, sugar and sometimes lemon juice. Uncooked jams, and jellies must be stored in the refrigerator or freezer.

Do not store the products in the freezer until after the gel is formed. This could take up to 24 hours. Freezing too soon may prevent "setting" of the product.

After the gel is formed, the product can be kept up to three weeks in the refrigerator and up to a year in the freezer. Once opened, it should be used within a few days.

Do not store these products at room temperature; they may mold or ferment in a short time.

For more information about jellied products or for recipes for uncooked products or products without sugar, contact the Gray County Extension Office.

Served with your favorite bread and tea or make a batch of this delicious rosy Cherry-Apricot Freezer Jam and save some for the fall and winter (AP Photo)

By NANCY BYAL, Food Editor
Better Homes and Gardens Magazine
For AP Special Features

Biting into the season's juicy sweet cherries and golden apricots is hard to beat. Unless, of course, you put them together in this freezer jam. Stash a jar of this rosy spread in the refrigerator for your family to enjoy right now, then freeze the rest. Months from today, you can still savor sweet spoonfuls of summer.

Cherry-Apricot Freezer Jam
1 pound fully ripe apricots, halved and pitted (2 cups)
1/2 pound dark sweet cherries, pitted (1 1/4 cups)

4 cups sugar
2 tablespoons lemon juice
1/4 teaspoon almond extract
3/4 cup water

One 1 3/4-ounce package regular powdered fruit pectin

Wash apricot halves and cherries; drain thoroughly in a colander. Finely chop the fruit. (You should have a total of about 2 1/2 cups chopped fruit.)

In a medium mixing bowl stir together the chopped fruit, sugar, lemon juice and almond extract. Cover loosely; let the mixture stand for 10 minutes.

In a small saucepan stir together the water and powdered fruit pectin. Heat and stir over high heat until the mixture reaches a full rolling boil.

Boil, uncovered, for 1 minute. Immediately pour the hot pectin mixture over the fruit; stir constantly for 3 minutes.

Ladle the fruit mixture into hot, clean half-pint jars or freezer containers, leaving a half-inch headspace at the top of each container. Seal the containers tightly. Wipe the containers and the lids. Label each with the recipe name and the date. Let the containers stand at room temperature about 24 hours or until the jam is set. Store for up to 3 weeks in the refrigerator or for up to 1 year in the freezer. Makes 6 half-pints.

A delicious meal of lamb made quick, easy

For AP Special Features

For a meat that's a break from the routine, yet cooks on the double, pick up some lamb chops. A thin rib or loin chop sizzles to medium doneness in less than 10 minutes. After cooking the lamb for this Mediterranean-inspired dish, you can use the same skillet to simmer the spicy tomato sauce. That makes cleanup a breeze. Serve the lamb and sauce with hot cooked orzo, angel hair pasta or thin vermicelli.

Mediterranean Lamb Chops with Tomatoes

2/3 cup orzo or 4 ounces angel hair pasta
8 lamb rib chops, cut 3/4-inch thick
1/2 teaspoon spicy salt-free seasoning or salt-free seasoning
1 cup reduced-sodium stewed tomatoes
1 clove garlic, minced
1 tablespoon lemon juice
1/2 teaspoon sugar
1/2 teaspoon dried thyme, crushed
1/4 teaspoon dried oregano, crushed
1/4 teaspoon finely shredded orange peel
1/4 cup reduced-sodium chicken broth
2 teaspoons cornstarch

Prepare orzo or pasta according to package directions, except omit the margarine and salt. Meanwhile, season lamb with salt-free seasoning. Heat a large nonstick skillet over medium heat. Add lamb chops. Cook lamb for 6 to 8 minutes or to desired doneness, turning once. Transfer chops to platter; cover and keep warm.

Drain fat from skillet. In the same skillet combine stewed tomatoes, garlic, lemon juice, sugar, thyme, oregano and orange peel. Bring to boiling. Stir together broth and cornstarch. Stir into tomato mixture. Cook and stir until thickened and bubbly. Cook and stir for 2 minutes more. Serve the chops with the cooked orzo or pasta. Spoon sauce over all. Makes 4 main-dish servings.

It's all about dressing correctly . . .

Hot days mean cool salads

By DANA JACOBI
For AP Special Features

On days when it's so hot that a cool salad is all I want for dinner, I've discovered an unexpected way to turn a bowl of crisp greens into a full-flavored meal. The secret is in the dressing.

Using canned broth and little or no oil, it's possible to make intensely flavored, thick, creamy dressings by combining the ingredients in a blender or food processor.

Here are four zesty, reduced-fat dressings that prove how well this works. Plus ideas on how to make a nutritious mix of greens, with a balance of flavors and textures, that you can happily serve to your family as a main course or enjoy a big bowl when you dine solo.

First for the greens. I love the succulence of iceberg lettuce and think it's a perfect ingredient to include when making a refreshing summer salad. But I always combine it with two or three more kinds of lettuce, including assertively flavored romaine and soft-textured sweet lettuces such as Boston, red leaf or green leaf.

I also add other greens, such as arugula, escarole, spinach or radicchio. These various lettuces and darker greens provide more color and flavor; they are rich in nutrients, too. Romaine, for example, has 10 times as much vitamin A, seven times as much vitamin C and twice as much calcium as iceberg lettuce.

While I personally avoid putting sliced mushrooms, zucchini, carrots, tomatoes or croutons in a green salad, I always include one ingredient I can sink my teeth into. Depending on the dressing I plan to use, this "crunchy" might be diced cucumber, sliced onion, jicama, some other vegetable — or a bit of fruit.

When buying, storing and preparing greens, keep these points in mind:

—Select lively looking, bright greens. Avoid any that are wilted or have blemishes. Store lettuce in plastic bags in the vegetable bin of your refrigerator.

—Store lettuce away from ripening fruit such as apples and pears. The ethylene gas given off by these fruits can cause brown spots on the greens.

—Wash lettuce just before using it. Washed greens wilt more quickly unless they are thoroughly dried.
—Remove the grit from spinach, arugula and other greens grown in sandy soil by soaking them in several changes of cold water.

Recipes

Tonnato is an Italian sauce made from tuna. The sweetness of diced apple added to a salad goes well with this dressing.

Tonnato Dressing

6 1/2-ounce can water-packed tuna, drained
3 to 4 anchovy fillets, drained and rinsed
1/2 cup chicken broth
1 tablespoon Dijon mustard
1 tablespoon red-wine vinegar
1 tablespoon extra-virgin olive oil

1 clove garlic, chopped
Freshly ground pepper
1/2 cup Italian parsley leaves

In a blender, combine the tuna, anchovies, chicken broth, mustard, vinegar, olive oil and garlic. Blend until the mixture has the consistency of thin mayonnaise. Season to taste with freshly ground black pepper. Add the parsley and blend just until it is chopped. This dressing can be stored in the refrigerator up to 3 days.

Makes 1 1/2 cups.

Spicy Salsa Dressing combines the zing of a frosty Margarita with the sunny flavor of ripe tomatoes. Add diced cucumber, either from a firm Kirby or the European seedless variety, to your greens for a cooling contrast to this dressing.

Spicy Salsa Dressing

1 large, ripe tomato, seeded and chopped
1-3rd cup cilantro leaves
1/2 small white onion, coarsely chopped

1 clove garlic, chopped
1 small jalapeno pepper, seeded, or 1 canned green chili pepper
1 tablespoon freshly squeezed lime juice

1 tablespoon canola oil
1 tablespoon tequila (optional)

Combine all ingredients in a food processor; pulse until they are finely chopped. Season to taste with salt and pepper. This dressing should be used the day it is made, while the flavors are bright and fresh. Makes 1 cup.

Roasted Beet Dressing is an intensely-flavored dressing that contains virtually no fat. Romaine and escarole go especially well with this dressing. When using it, I also like thin slices of red onion scattered on top.

Roasted Beet Dressing

2-inch fresh beet, well scrubbed
2 tablespoons Dijon mustard
2 tablespoons apple cider vinegar
1/4 cup chicken or vegetable broth

Roast the beet in a 375-degree F oven for 1 hour. When cool enough to handle, trim off the ends of the beet. With your fingers, peel off the skin. (If it's too hot to use the oven, peel the beet, cut into 1/4-inch slices and steam until tender, 5 to 10 minutes. This method does not caramelize the sugar in the beet but you still get a flavorful dressing, and keep the kitchen cool.)

Coarsely chop the cooked beet. Place in a blender with the mustard and vinegar. With the blender running, gradually add the broth. Season to taste with salt and pepper. This dressing can be stored in the refrigerator up to three days. Makes about 1 cup.

Be sure to include spinach in the mix of greens you use with the following recipe for Creamy Sesame Dressing. And top each serving with a generous sprinkling of sesame seeds.

Creamy Sesame Dressing

1/4 cup tahini (roasted sesame paste)
1 tablespoon Dijon mustard
1 tablespoon fresh oregano, or 1 teaspoon dried oregano
1 clove garlic, chopped
Juice of half a lemon
1/2 cup water

In a blender, combine the tahini, mustard, oregano and garlic. With the blender running, gradually add the lemon juice and the water. Season to taste with salt and pepper.

When first made, this dressing is quite thin; it thickens on standing. To thin it out, add water or lemon juice, a tablespoon at a time, until you have the desired consistency.

This dressing keeps in the refrigerator for three or four days. Makes about 1 cup dressing.

Lifestyles

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR READERS: A few weeks ago, I published a letter from a reader who said he had received a positive result from an HIV test, and was advised to be retested in six months. The writer was so frightened that he decided he couldn't wait, so he sought a second opinion immediately.

The specialist he consulted told him that because he had no real risk factors, the HIV-positive result was probably a false positive — and repeated the tests. This time, the results were negative. His purpose in writing was to alert others to the fact that false positives on AIDS tests can be due to several factors, including flu shots and pregnancy.

His letter generated more responses — two of which I would like to share:

DEAR ABBY: Regarding the letter in which a reader urged you to alert people to the possibility of false positives on HIV tests:

The large number of false positives from the ELISA HIV screening test (the most commonly used test) caused the Florida Legislature in 1988 to specify that a positive result may not be disclosed until the more accurate Western Blot test has also been done.

You should be aware, however, that the ELISA screening test also generates a number of false negatives, some of which are a result of the so-called "window period" — the time shortly after infection when a person is capable of transmitting HIV, although tests cannot detect the antibodies.

The public needs to understand that a positive test result is not an immediate death sentence, nor is a negative result a license for reckless behavior.

ALAN H. TERL, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
FORT LAUDERDALE, FLA.

DEAR ABBY: From 1985 to 1987 I was director of the world's first and largest licensed laboratory for confirming HIV blood tests. We confirmed the ELISA tests by using the more accurate Western Blot test.

Those who are told that they have been tested positive for HIV should immediately ask if the Western Blot test was done, and if it wasn't, they should request it. If the Western Blot test is also positive, the patient should not panic because even this test can be in error. The patient should request that the test be repeated and interpreted at a different laboratory.

Abby, because our laboratory recognized the limitations of both tests, we coined the term "Western Blot Indeterminate" to indicate that some tests could not be interpreted as either positive or negative. Thus, healthy blood donors with initially positive ELISA tests are spared being confirmed HIV-positive until the results are definitely positive.

DONALD E. SENN, PH.D.,
LAGUNA NIGUEL, CALIF.

DEAR MR. TERL AND DR. SENN: Your letters underscore the fact that no laboratory test is 100 percent perfect, and that patients should not panic on initially learning that a test was interpreted as positive for HIV. By the same token, those whose test results are negative should not behave recklessly, because their tests could also be in error. In addition, as an extra precaution, those with negative tests who are in high-risk groups should be retested after the window period has elapsed.

Treatments can help older couples become parents

By DR. CECILIA SCHMIDT-SAROSI
New York University Medical Center
For AP Special Features

Fertility treatments for couples who have difficulty achieving pregnancy are more advanced than ever.

That's fortunate, because there has been a substantial increase in the number of couples seeking help in achieving pregnancy.

While there are other contributing factors, the major reason for fertility problems is that many couples are waiting longer to have their babies.

Fertility decreases with age. A woman of 23 has roughly a 30 percent chance of achieving pregnancy at each unprotected menstrual cycle. At 35, the chance is reduced to 15 percent to 20 percent. At 40, it is 5 percent to 10 percent.

A point to be stressed is that infertility treatment cannot currently improve on nature. Its goal is to achieve the optimal rate of pregnancy, 30 percent per cycle.

The reason fertility decreases with age is that the eggs in a woman's ovaries grow older and may contain abnormal chromosomes. All those eggs are present from birth and are released, usually one at a time, during each menstrual cycle.

Age does not seem to affect male fertility because a man's body constantly produces new sperm.

Nevertheless, one of the first steps in treating infertility is to evaluate the status of the male partner. In at least 25 percent of cases, failure to achieve pregnancy can be explained by a male's low sperm count or sperm that are insufficiently motile.

In such cases, the earliest

"Fertility decreases with age."

treatment is to concentrate the sperm and insert them into the woman's reproductive tract at the proper time in the menstrual cycle. Such a procedure is called intrauterine insemination.

Evaluation of a woman's fertility centers on three issues: Whether she ovulates regularly, releasing an egg every cycle; whether her fallopian tubes are open so that the egg and sperm can travel to the appropriate site for fertilization; and whether the mucus that coats the cervix has the normal consistency that allows sperm to travel through the uterus.

If irregular ovulation is the problem, the release of eggs can be stimulated by drug treatment.

When the cervical mucus is abnormal, sperm can be placed in the uterus near the point where the eggs enter, bypassing the cervix.

If the fallopian tubes are blocked, they can be opened surgically. Alternatively, eggs can be taken from the ovary and fertilized in the laboratory, a procedure called in vitro fertilization. The fertilized eggs or embryos are placed in the uterus for normal development.

In vitro fertilization is most effective for younger women. The overall success rate in achieving pregnancy by this method is about 22 percent per cycle, or about 60 percent over six cycles.

Treatment generally is limited to six cycles. One reason is cost. In vitro fertilization costs from $8,000 to $12,000 per cycle. Medical insurance usually does not cover these costs — or the costs of infertility treatment in general.

In theory, it is now possible to achieve pregnancy in an older woman by treating her with hormones and fertilizing an egg donated by a younger woman.

This technique in the postmenopausal woman over 52 is highly experimental, however, and the long-term medical consequences of geriatric pregnancy are unknown.

Reducing pollen exposure

By MATURE OUTLOOK
A Meredith Magazine

For many people, seasonal allergic reactions that last from early spring until the first hard frost are nothing to sneeze at, says Mature Outlook magazine.

"If you get congested when you're outdoors primarily in spring or summer, chances are you're allergic to pollen," says Dr. Richard Podell, allergist and clinical professor at the University of Medicine and Dentistry of New Jersey-Robert Wood Johnson Medical School.

From April through summer, grasses such as reedtop, vernal, timothy and bluegrass can give you grief. And, weeds such as ragweed, pigweed, sagebrush and sorrell cause problems from July through the first frost.

Short of sealing yourself into a glass bubble, try Podell's pointers to help reduce your pollen exposure:

— Keep your windows closed. Use air conditioning in your home, office and car. Recirculate interior air.

— Remain indoors when pollen counts are high — typically on hot, dry, breezy days and from 5 a.m. to 10 a.m. Exercise indoors or wear a mask outdoors.

— Rinse off pollen remains. Wash your hands and rinse your eyes with cool water after coming indoors to remove clinging pollen. "Wash your hair before bed so you aren't breathing in pollens all night," adds Podell.

Remove clothing and shoes outside your bedroom.

— Have someone else do your yardwork. Or wear a mask while gardening, mowing grass and raking leaves. Do not bring flowers into your home.

— Use a clothes dryer.

Clothing hung outdoors may smell fresh, but it picks up pollen.

— Protect your eyes. Sunglasses do double duty, soothing eyes made sore and sun-sensitive by allergic reactions.

Summer also is the high season for molds, which flourish in the warmth and humidity — although outdoor molds cause problems from spring through fall and year-round in warmer climates. Podell offers these suggestions for steering clear of outdoor molds:

— Don't shake hands with Mother Nature. People with severe mold allergies may have to give up gardening and avoid exposure to soil, compost piles, fertilizers and greenhouses.

— Unclutter your gutters. Drainage problems around your home can mean pooled water — a great breeding ground for molds. Repair all wall and roof leaks.

— Let the sun shine. Molds thrive in shady places. Find someone to keep trees and shrubs near your home trimmed back.

— Do your camping indoors — stick to hotels or motels. Avoid camping or hiking in the woods where vegetation is uncut and where mold grows on rotted logs and piles of fallen leaves.

— Store firewood outside until you use it.

— Warm weather brings an additional hazard for sensitive people. "Some people are allergic to the sting of yellow jackets, hornets, honeybees, wasps or fire ants," explains Podell.

"In severe cases, stings can be fatal if not treated immediately. Don't wear strong perfumes, scented lotions or bright clothing because they attract bugs. And don't go barefoot."

Foster parent training begins next week

The Texas Department of Protective and Regulatory Services will begin its next foster parent training at 6:30 p.m. on July 25.

The training will be located on the campus of Clarendon College in Clarendon and conducted in Room 103 of the Administration Building.

This foster parent training will be led by Kathy Mote Perkins, a Texas Department of Protective and Regulatory Services Foster Home Developer.

For additional information on how to become a foster parent, contact Perkins at the Texas Department of Protective and Regulatory Services at (806) 354-6204.

Apollo engineers look back with pride, disappointment

By JAY REEVES
Associated Press Writer

HUNTSVILLE, Ala. (AP) — Twenty-five years later, there is still pride in the voices of the engineers whose colossal rocket hurled Apollo 11 to the moon.

But there is also disappointment over unfulfilled dreams and a tinge of bitterness over the way history has remembered the role of the rocket builders in that greatest of adventures.

It was a Saturn 5 developed at NASA laboratories in Huntsville that carried Neil Armstrong, Buzz Aldrin and Michael Collins into space in 1969. Twenty-five years ago Wednesday, Armstrong and Aldrin became the first humans on the moon.

Back at the Marshall Space Flight Center, rocket designers had the next target in their sights before Apollo 11 had even returned to Earth.

"First, back to the moon on a permanent basis and then on to Mars," recalled Georg von Tiesenhausen. "We worked on that quite intensely. We figured out how to do it."

Five more trips to the moon were completed after Apollo 11, but no lunar base. No Mars.

"It's not only disappointing, I have the feeling we have actually stepped backward," said the 80-year-old von Tiesenhausen, whose work included developing the ground assembly that held down the rocket before launch.

The Apollo program gave way to Skylab and the space shuttle and seemingly endless work on a permanent space station.

Then the anniversaries began. New books and documentaries have accompanied each anniversary, focusing mainly on the men who flew the rockets.

Saturn 5 project manager Lee James gave an armchair review of a moon show that aired just last week. "It's always astronauts, astronauts, astronauts," he said. "I guess the only thing we ever clashed with the astronauts on was publicity. They had 99.99 percent of it, and everybody else had the rest."

James was bothered by the lack of attention paid to the white-shirted engineers who used slide rules, old-fashioned drawing tables and 60-hour work weeks to design a rocket capable of delivering 7.5 million pounds of thrust on liftoff.

"I'm still amazed by the size of the monster we created," said James, who retired from NASA shortly after the shuttle program began.

The only Marshall engineer usually given more than passing mention is Wernher von Braun. He led the team of German rocket scientists who developed not only the Saturn but the Mercury Redstone that made Alan Shepard the first American in space in 1961.

Everyone else at Marshall toiled in virtual anonymity, but that was the way Leland Belew liked it.

"The major spotlight was when there was a major problem," said Belew, who was in charge of the Saturn 5 engines.

There never was a major problem with the Saturn rocket during a launch, though. The huge white-and-black rocket with some 3 million parts never failed, not even during a test.

"I just wonder if the world realizes how amazing that is," James said.

James and the other retirees once stood at the middle of the universe when it came to rockets. Nowadays, they are at the fringes. The idea of astronauts circling the globe in a 13-year-old space shuttle containing technology from the 1960s is hard to swallow for men who built a moon rocket from scratch in less than a decade.

"I'm not as satisfied as I should be," Belew said, "but there have been great things done."

Voice of mission control recalls Apollo landing

By JIM HUTTON
San Antonio Express-News

SAN ANTONIO — Former astronaut Charles Duke Jr. wanted to be the first American to walk on the moon.

He came close: His voice linked the moon lander to Earth.

Now a New Braunfels businessman, Duke served as one of three capsule communicators (CAPCOMs) at Mission Control in Houston during Apollo 11's heroic lunar landing 25 years ago.

Requested by Mission Commander Neil Armstrong, the first man to walk on the moon, to be a CAPCOM, Duke also had worked in that role on Apollo 10.

"I was very excited and honored to be selected because we all knew it was the first landing on the moon," said Duke, a driver of the second Moon Rover vehicle across the lunar surface on Apollo 16 in April 1972.

"I was the most qualified of the astronauts not in training for a mission at that time. I think the (Apollo 11) crew looked at me as an experienced person not in training," added Duke, who owns Charlie Duke Enterprises, an investment company, and works in a Christian lay ministry.

He had been among 19 men chosen by NASA as astronauts in April 1966.

"It was a rigorous process from September 1965 to April 1966. I was told 3,500 people applied and out of them, 350 probably were contenders," Duke recalled.

"When we reported in, we were objective. We were rookies and qualified folks were above us," the 58-year-old former astronaut added.

Leading into the Apollo 11 mission, three teams, each with a CAPCOM, worked eight-hour shifts "in the trench," as Duke called the front row of consoles in the Mission Control Room.

"I was on the team for the landing and that's the way we trained," Duke said. "While the crew was training in Florida, we committed the Gold Team to training for the landing."

However, the landing turned into a nail-biting, suspense-packed ordeal for Duke at the CAPCOM console and other personnel monitoring Apollo 11 from Houston.

Duke remembered saying: "Eagle, (this is) Houston. If you read, you're 'go' for powered descent (to the lunar surface). Over."

But suddenly, during the descent, a program alarm on the Lunar Module Eagle's computer signaled a "Twelve-oh-two" (1202).

A 1202 was an "executive overflow on a fixed computer cycle that prioritized each job" on the lunar module, Duke said.

"The first job perhaps was the control of the vehicle (lunar module), then navigation and so on," he added.

"I was shocked when I heard a 1202," Duke admitted. "We had not seen it (1202) in simulation. We had trained on many computer overloads. We also ran all the tests of the software."

"Normally, a computer alarm was significant. In simulation, it always required abort or fly manually."

Duke said he was looking in a book for information on a 1202 when finally, officials agreed "it (1202) meant the vehicle still was in control and all systems were go," he remembered.

"Then the alarm went off again a 1201 this time just as I was listening to the debate about what to do," Duke said.

A 1201 was another type of "executive overflow."

Finally, Duke said: "Eagle, you're go for landing."

"Whether they responded to the call I gave was up to the crew (Armstrong and Lunar Module Pilot Edwin "Buzz" Aldrin Jr.), which could obey or disobey and abort," Duke added.

"They (Armstrong and Aldrin) had more display (information) on board and knew more about the workings of the spacecraft. It would be a lot easier being there seeing dust come up (from the lunar surface) than at Mission Control where we'd see numbers 1 seconds delayed."

Another problem was that the Eagle had little descent fuel remaining as the astronauts tried to find a suitable landing spot amid decreasing altitude and the possibility of crashing because the ascent engine couldn't be engaged in time, Duke recalled.

"I made a 30-second call (meaning only 30 seconds of fuel remained) and Neil still was flying over the surface."

"It's a trite phrase 'You could hear a pin drop' but it was dead silence (in Mission Control Room)," Duke said.

"They were running out of gas."

"When Buzz said they made contact, I said: 'We copy you down, Eagle.' Still, there was dead silence. Then when Neil said, 'Houston, (Sea of) Tranquility Base here. The Eagle has landed,' I said, 'Roger Tranquility, we copy you on the ground. You've got a bunch of guys about to turn blue. We're breathing again. Thanks a lot.'

"I've never experienced such suspense in my life," Duke said.

Immediately after the landing, a fresh team took over in the Mission Control Room.

Duke went home to sleep and later viewed the moonwalks on television.

"When I saw Neil step down on the surface I had pride in America, my friends and NASA," Duke said.

"Everyone had that desire to say, 'Gosh, I wish I could have done it.'"

"I was hoping to get to do it. Whether you're the first or the 10,000th person to do it, it's the experience that counts."

Senate panel looks into delayed prison openings

AUSTIN (AP) — A state Senate committee on Tuesday looked into delays in a new system of state jails, while prison officials canceled a party they had planned to celebrate completion of some new prison facilities.

Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock convened an emergency meeting of the Senate Criminal Justice Committee to look into reports that the first state jail, a 2,000-bed facility in Beaumont, won't be ready by a Sept. 1 deadline.

Bullock also was concerned that in 14 months since the state jail system was approved, no director for the program had been hired by the Texas Department of Criminal Justice.

State leaders say the launch of the state jail system is critical because it is a first-time approach to housing and rehabilitating nonviolent offenders through intensive educational and behavioral programs.

J.B. Cole, who oversees construction for the Texas Department of Criminal Justice, said rain delays had pushed the completion date for the Beaumont facility to Nov. 18.

Texas Board of Criminal Justice Chairman Carol Vance said enough of the facility would be completed to begin accepting prisoners in October.

The Senate committee and prison officials were to collaborate on ways to house the prisoners during the delay. State Sen. John Whitmire, D-Houston, chairman of the committee, said he hoped the prisoners would be placed in county correctional programs, such as local boot camps, until the state jails come on line.

Republican gubernatorial candidate George W. Bush blamed the delays on a lack of leadership by the nine-member criminal justice board, which includes several members appointed by Democratic Gov. Ann Richards.

"It is an unfortunate commentary on the lack of leadership and initiative by Gov. Richards that her fellow Democrats are forced to call an emergency legislative hearings to address problems her criminal justice board should be handling especially in an area so critical to the safety of the citizens of Texas," Bush said.

Richards said, "Here are the facts. We are building 75,000 prison beds. We are doubling the size of the prison system. We have stopped the early release of prisoners, cutting the parole rate by two-thirds. I commend the Senate Criminal Justice Committee and TDCJ for making sure the state jail program stays on track."

Governors face anti-incumbent tide with 36 races in November

By JOHN KING
AP Political Writer

BOSTON (AP) — President Clinton was talking about state health care reform and California's efforts to lower insurance costs when he peered around the roomful of governors and asked: "Is Governor Wilson here?"

No, sir. Absent also: Texas Gov. Ann Richards, Florida Gov. Lawton Chiles and New York Gov. Mario Cuomo. "The big four," as a White House official put it, "have a lot more to worry about than this." Like getting re-elected.

There are 36 gubernatorial elections this fall, 23 of them featuring incumbents seeking re-election. So, as the National Governors Association held its summer meeting over the past four days, the official business might have been health care and welfare reform and how to improve schools, but much of the corridor talk was about who might be involuntarily retired by the time the governors convene their winter meeting next year.

"Any incumbent has got trouble this year," said Colorado Gov. Roy Romer, who is seeking a third term and, while favored, finds himself in a tough contest. "Democrats have got a series of events out there that combine to create a not very favorable environment."

On that point, he gets no argument from the Republicans, who currently control 20 of the 50 statehouses, thanks to Alaska Gov. Walter Hickel's recent switch from independent back to the GOP.

"We have all sorts of wonderful opportunities," said Maine Gov. John McKernan, the Republican Governors Association chairman. "It's a combination of things but mostly that Clinton had a tough 1993 and that helped us get great candidates."

McKernan predicted a year ago that Republicans would control the majority of the governors' jobs come January. For the record, he's sticking to his prediction, although he wishes he hadn't made it, because it makes it easier for the Democrats to brush aside questions about how they expect to fare in the statehouse contests this fall.

"I think we will prove Governor McKernan wrong," was about as far as Indiana Gov. Evan Bayh, chairman of the Democratic Governors Association, would venture.

Still, it was clear from participants in the private caucuses held by each party that the Republicans are a bit more optimistic about what November will bring.

More bodies pulled from site of explosion; toll rises to 32

By IAN KATZ
Associated Press Writer

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — More bodies were pulled from the rubble today as rescuers searched with diminishing hopes for dozens believed buried by a deadly blast that flattened the offices of two Jewish groups.

Dr. Alberto Crescenti, a spokesman for the rescue crew, said 32 deaths had been confirmed. At least 127 people were injured.

Workers no longer heard voices under the pile of jagged glass, steel and concrete, but were continuing the search anyway, Crescenti said. Israeli experts arrived late Tuesday and immediately began going over the debris with sophisticated listening devices and German shepherds.

Federal police, who have cordoned off the scene since the explosion Monday, demanded silence from onlookers to aid the Israelis.

Earlier Tuesday, a man trapped for 31 hours was pulled from the shambles of the building that once housed the Delegation of Argentine Israeli Associations and the Argentine Israelite Mutual Association.

Jacobo Echemanuel, 56, opened his eyes and smiled as he was carried out on a stretcher to the cheers of doctors and rescue workers. He had been trapped beneath a steel beam and masonry.

He was given intravenous fluids, painkillers and oxygen while rescuers applied liquid vaseline to slip his legs loose, Crescenti said.

Rescuers who pulled out Echemanuel told the Noticias Argentinas news agency they saw bodies in the rubble.

At least nine people have been taken from the rubble alive.

Police kept silent on leads in the investigation, but officials from President Carlos Menem on down called the explosion an attack. Menem said it was planned "from abroad and helped by people here."

Israel blamed Muslim fundamentalists backed by Iran for the attack, but Iran denied the charge.

Authorities speculated the explosion may have been caused by a car bomb similar to one that destroyed the Israeli Embassy in Buenos Aires in 1992, killing at least 28 people. Israel blamed Muslim fundamentalists for that attack.

An Iraqi man carrying an expired Brazilian passport was detained Monday night while trying to cross the border to Brazil in Paso de los Libres, 620 miles north of Buenos Aires, Menem said. He was identified in news reports as Mohammed Yousif, 31.

A Moroccan man, identified as Kabir Palkan, 33, also was detained in the neighborhood of the explosion, Menem said.

Laborers renovating the building could have smuggled in explosives, Menem suggested. "There were bricklayers working, and someone could have brought in explosives in a wheelbarrow ... or could have entered the basement and placed bombs," he said.

In Jerusalem on Tuesday, Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin blamed Islamic extremists sponsored by Iran for the attack and called on the international community to "to strike at this viper and crush its skull."

Iran's spiritual leader, Ayatollah Ali Khamenei, today sharply attacked Israel for blaming the explosion on Tehran.

"The Zionist regime is the clearest example of state terrorism in the world," Khamenei said on Tehran radio. "Because of their filthy nature, the Zionists have no right to adjudicate on Islamic Iran."

Alberto Krupnicoff, president of the mutual association, said many employees working on the first and second floors were able to escape but several construction workers and waiters were trapped in the basement.

Elderly people were on the building's fourth floor collecting their monthly pensions when the blast occurred, he said.

At 250,000, Argentina's Jewish population is the largest in Latin America.

"I wouldn't be surprised if all of our incumbents seeking re-election held their seats," said McKernan.

That's a bold prediction. GOP Govs. Terry Branstad of Iowa, Arne Carlson of Minnesota, Fife Symington of Arizona, Pete Wilson of California and Jim Edgar of Illinois are engaged in competitive races.

But because of their success in years past, Democrats face tougher odds as they try to maintain their statehouse edge.

Chiles, Cuomo, Richards, Bruce King of New Mexico, Jim Folsom of Alabama and Romer head a list of Democratic incumbents viewed as vulnerable. A couple of other Democratic incumbents have potentially competitive races too, and nine of the seats with no incumbent running are now held by Democrats, adding to the party's burden.

At the Democratic Governors Association breakfast Monday, White House officials pledged that Clinton would do as much as he can to raise money for the governors. Clinton has done 10 such fund-raisers so far, and has one for Cuomo later this month. Vice President Al Gore and Hillary Rodham Clinton plan several more.

One White House political aide, speaking on condition of anonymity, said Iowa, California, Arizona, Maine, South Carolina and Michigan were viewed as the best Democratic targets at this point. California, is seen as most critical, because the state is imperative to Clinton's re-election formula.

But Wilson recently has pulled ahead of state Treasurer Kathleen Brown in opinion polls. "And I have no intention of falling back," he said confidently last week.

Chris Henick, executive director of the Republican governors' group, said he believed the GOP was competitive in Florida, New York and Texas, the three biggest challenge races for Republicans this year. "If we take those three, or even two of these three and hold California, Clinton's re-election scheme crumbles," Henick said.

Whether or not the GOP will be that successful, McKernan predicted this fall's gubernatorial elections would shake up the prospective 1996 Republican presidential field, now dominated by Washington figures such as Senate GOP leader Bob Dole, Sen. Phil Gramm of Texas and former Cabinet members Dick Cheney, Jack Kemp and Lamar Alexander.

The GOP governors of Michigan, Wisconsin, Ohio and Massachusetts are heavy favorites for re-election and all are mentioned from time to time as potential presidential or vice presidential prospects.

Three recent mountain lion attacks in Arizona

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Wildlife officials say fires and hot, dry weather in southern Arizona may be why people have been seeing more mountain lions, including one that attacked and nearly dragged off a 2-year-old.

Another mountain lion wandered through a Tucson neighborhood Tuesday and pawed at the window of a home before heading back into the desert.

And a lion seized a pet goat from within a few feet of its 5-year-old owner last week at Fort Huachuca, about 80 miles southeast of Tucson.

The child was unharmed. Military police scared off the cougar with a shotgun. The goat had to be killed.

The 2-year-old, Jesse Humphreys, was attacked Sunday as he camped with his parents in the Tonto National Forest about 60 miles east of Phoenix. Joey Day said he grabbed his son as the cat tried to drag off the mat where the boy was sleeping.

Jesse's only injuries were scratches and a gash in his ear that required 10 stitches. The mountain lion continued to stalk the family for 20 minutes until it disappeared.

"I thought he was going to be breakfast," said Jesse's mother, Suzi Humphreys.

Rory Aikens of the Arizona Game and Fish Department said the boy was lucky to be alive.

"Mountain lion attacks are rare," Aikens said. "But quite often, when they do happen, they attack small kids. A small critter moving in a bush is a critter moving in a bush. Just because it's dinner on two legs rather than four doesn't matter."

There is no charge, but the physicals will be administered to athletes only.

BASEBALL

SEATTLE (AP) — A game between Baltimore and Seattle was postponed after insulating tiles fell from the Kingdome ceiling and today's makeup doubleheader remained in doubt until the roof could be closely checked.

A 32-by-48-inch tile that weighed about 15 pounds fell nearly 180 feet into the stands behind home plate about 4:30 p.m. Three more fell an hour later, two into the third tier of stands and one onto a walkway in the first tier. No one was injured and players continued batting practice until the postponement was announced less than an hour before the scheduled 7:05 p.m. start.

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Florida real estate magnate Norton Herrick said he has an exclusive negotiating agreement with the San Diego Padres and has given the team's attorneys $2 million to be held in escrow.

The investment banking firm handling the deal for the Padres has applied to Major League Baseball to enter into detailed negotiations with full financial disclosure.

Herrick said he would pay between $75 million and $80 million for the team. The Padres' 15-man ownership group, headed by Tom Werner, bought the team from Joan Kroc in 1990 for $75 million.

NEW YORK (AP) — Kansas City infielder Bob Hamelin was suspended for five games by the AL for charging Detroit pitcher Greg Cadaret on July 15.

Chicago catcher Ron Karkovice and Detroit infielder Tony Phillips also received three-game suspensions for making physical contact with umpires. All three players have appealed.

NEW YORK (AP) — Baseball's labor struggles forced the cancellation of a postseason all-star tour of Japan and the Seattle Mariners' plan to open the 1995 season in Japan.

HOOVER, Ala. (AP) — Michael Jordan had a bunt single in four at-bats in Birmingham's 3-2 victory over Huntsville in the Southern League to raise his average to .191.

TENNIS

FRANKFURT, Germany (AP) — Mary-Joe Fernandez beat Petra Langrova 6-2, 6-4 and Lindsay Davenport defeated Ludmila Richterova 4-6, 6-1, 6-4 as the United States swept the Czech Republic 3-0 in the first round of the Federation Cup.

Gigi Fernandez and Zina Garrison-Jackson beat Petra Langrova and Eva Martincova 6-4, 7-5 in doubles. The second-seeded United States will face No. 13 Canada, which beat Switzerland 3-0, in the second round. Top-seeded defending champion Spain, No. 6 Bulgaria, No. 8 Austria, No. 10 Australia, No. 12 Italy and No. 15 Indonesia also advanced.

MAHWAH, N.J. (AP) — Tracy Austin said she is quitting tennis for good after retiring from her opening match in the Pathmark Classic because of a groin injury. The 31-year-old Austin, who won the U.S. Open at 16 in 1979, trailed Manuela Maleeva-Fragniere 6-4, 2-0 when she retired.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Andre Agassi beat Maurice Ruah of Venezuela 6-2, 7-5 and ninth-seeded Mali'Vai Washington defeated Roberto Jabali of Brazil 6-7 (5-7), 6-2, 6-3 in the first round of the Tour Legg Mason Classic.

FOOTBALL

ASHBURN, Va. (AP) — Joe Jacoby, the biggest member of the Washington Redskins' famed "Hogs," announced his retirement after 13 years.

The 6-foot-6, 320-pound offensive tackle, a four-time Pro Bowl selection, played on three Super Bowl championship teams. Jacoby, 35, joined the Redskins as a rookie free agent in 1981.

HEMPSTEAD, N.Y. (AP) — Tony Meola, the starting goalkeeper on the U.S. national soccer team since 1989, signed with the New York Jets. Meola, 25, reportedly agreed to the NFL-minimum of $108,000, plus a four-figure signing bonus.

OXNARD, Calif. (AP) — The Los Angeles Raiders signed former Michigan State linebacker Rob Fredrickson, selected 22nd overall in the NFL draft, to a five-year contract.

The Raiders, who released defensive end Greg Townsend to make room under the salary cap, did not disclose financial details.

LA CROSSE, Wis. (AP) — The New Orleans Saints terminated four-time All-Pro linebacker Vaughan Johnson's contract. Johnson, 32, was in the final year of a three-year deal.

HOCKEY

NEW YORK (AP) — The New York Rangers lashed back at Mike Keenan, calling him a greedy, faithless employee and accusing him of purposely trying to get out of his contract to coach the Stanley Cup champions.

The Rangers countered Keenan's claims of breach of contract by accusing him of the same thing and filing suit in U.S. District Court. The suit asks that the final four years of his five-year, $5 million contract be upheld. The Rangers also asked for a temporary injunction against Keenan signing with any other team.

Heisman Trophy loses its luster in NFL

By The Associated Press

How important is the Heisman Trophy? In the NFL, not very.

Consider the plight of Andre Ware, the Heisman winner in 1989, and Gino Torretta, the 1992 winner. They're in a quarterback battle on the Minnesota Vikings — for a spot as a backup.

Warren Moon, late of the Houston Oilers, is the solid No. 1 man with the Vikings, and that leaves Ware, formerly of Detroit, and Torretta, last year a Minnesota rookie, to fight for the right to hold a clipboard on the sidelines.

"With last season under my belt," Torretta said, "I think I have a little advantage having been in the system."

Torretta played briefly in only one game in his rookie season. Still, he said he was still able to learn a lot from the sidelines.

"I feel comfortable enough with the offense that I can get the job done," he said.

Ware has more game experience to his credit, but he was never able to take the No. 1 job with Detroit. His challenge is to learn the pro offense, a far cry from the run 'n shoot he handled in college and with the Lions.

"I'm just trying to get better each and every practice," he said. "You need all the reps possible, and a lot of it's mental, so you have to take advantage of the mental repetitions as well."

Training camp report

The two Heisman Trophy winners don't have it all to themselves, either. Brad Johnson has actually been with the Vikings longer than any of the quarterbacks, three years, although he has yet to throw a regular-season pass.

"I want to prove to my coaches and myself that they can depend on me to be the No. 2 guy," Johnson said. "I've worked hard for it, and I hope the decision is made on the field."

Raiders First-round draft choice Rob Fredrickson signed a contract and went right to work. To make room for him under the NFL salary cap, the Raiders released 11-year defensive end Greg Townsend. Fredrickson played outside linebacker at Michigan

State, but will work at middle linebacker with the Raiders.

Rams Tight end Travis McNeal signed a contract, leaving first-round pick Wayne Gandy and third-year tackle Darryl Ashmore as the Rams' only unsigned play-tion Anthony Phillips, a cornerback from Texas A&M Kingsville, approved a one-year contract. Veteran wide receiver Ricky Sanders, who played with Washington last season, also signed a one-year deal.

The Falcons cut offensive tackle Louis Age, a free agent, and linebacker Howard Dinkins, a 1992 third-round draft pick from Florida State, to get down to the mandatory 80-man training roster.

Saints New Orleans, feeling the constraints of the salary cap, released injured four-time All-Pro linebacker Vaughan Johnson.

"We had to free up the money under the salary cap," team spokesman Rusty Kasmiersky said. "Whenever he gets healthy, we'd certainly consider attempting to sign him" although for less money.

With free-agent veteran Sam Mills still unsigned, the move left the Saints with just one veteran inside linebacker under contract — James Williams, who just signed a three-year deal.

Redskins

Washington signed quarterback Gus Frerotte, a seventh-round draft pick, but made no progress in trying to ink No. 1 pick Heath Shuler. Indications are the quarterback, who left Tennessee a year early, will be a holdout.

The team said goodbye to Joe Jacoby, the last of the so-called Hogs who manned the offensive line during Washington's glory days. Jacoby, 35, retired Tuesday after 13 seasons.

Broncos

Running back Rod Bernstine came back to work, but cornerback Randy Fuller, a fourth-round pick from Tennessee State, remained the only player not in camp. Fuller has refused to sign because the Broncos won't give him a $150,000 signing bonus, which his agent says is commensurate with other fourth-round picks. Too bad, say the Broncos, who have only $60,000 left under the salary cap. Bernstine had missed the first three practices with a strained right hamstring. He was anxious to get in there, and it looked like he did well," coach Wade Phillips said.

Alfonsi holds his own against nation's best prep wrestlers

By RANDAL K. MCGAVOCK

While other Pampa youth were spending their summer catching up on classes or at work or out and about doing their best to recover from the last school year, one young man was competing in the biggest competition of his life.

Corey Alfonsi, a 17-year-old, soon-to-be senior at Pampa High School, recently returned from the AAU Grand National Wrestling Championships with three medals, recognition of his hard work and determination in training over the past few months.

Alfonsi was one of four Maverick Club wrestlers who returned from Battle Creek, Mich., last week after competing in four days of events with some of the best high-school-aged wrestlers in the nation.

It was only the second time he had wrestled in official competition at this level.

"I only been to one other national tournament and at the time we weren't drilling for sharp, a lot of people were out of shape — I was out of shape — and it kind of sneaked up on us... I didn't place, I won two (matches) and lost two."

Despite his lack of experience, which he seems to make up for in enthusiasm, Alfonsi placed second, fourth and fifth in the three types of wrestling categories; Somo, Freestyle and Greco-Roman, respectively.

Although he placed highest in the Somo portion of the competition, Alfonsi said he enjoys freestyle. In freestyle, competitor can use a variety of maneuvers and holds to achieve a pin while in Somo, the action is a combination of wrestling and jujitsu. In Greco-Roman wrestling competitors are limited to only using their upper bodies to pin other wrestlers.

To prepare for the nationals, Alfonsi attended three week-long camps given by respected wrestling coaches and competitors through the Maverick Clubs in Amarillo after school in Pampa dismissed for the summer. Prior to that, he trained two days a week during the school semester for more than two months.

Despite having to commute back and forth to Amarillo, Alfonsi never missed a practice, evidence of his commitment to training.

As might be expected, wrestling has taken hold of Alfonsi who is planning to attend college on a wrestling scholarship and major in business administration.

While he shops around for a school with strong academic and athletic programs, he plans to stay in shape by running cross country and track when school begins.

"Corey was a very hard worker," said Henry Harmony of the Maverick Club, who helped coach Alfonsi this summer. "Technique-wise, he was the most improved wrestler on the team."

One thing that allowed Alfonsi to compete in the nationals was the strong support from various people and organizations in Pampa including the National Bank of Commerce, Freeman's Flowers, Barber and Merriman Consulting Engineers, the Sports Center, Holmes Gift Shoppe and Mr. and Mrs. Don Babcock.

For their support and kind words, he said he was forever grateful.

Pampa blanks Tulia in West Texas 9-10 Bambino state tourney action

Kyle Francis did it all in Pampa's 10-0 win over the Tulia 9-10 year-old All-Stars in the West Texas Minor Bambino State Tournament Tuesday.

Francis allowed only three baserunners in pitching a no-hit shutout. He struck out nine batters in four innings and walked two. Francis had two hits, including a double to lead Pampa in hitting. His two runs tied with Randy Tice for the team high. Luis Gonzales also had two hits for Pampa.

Tice led off the bottom of the first inning for the Pampa All-Stars with a bloop to center that dropped in when the center fielder fell down. He came around to score on a hit by Nathaniel Hill, which got away from the left fielder.

Pampa sent 11 batters to the plate in the second inning, scoring seven runs. Gonzales had two hits in the inning and a run scored. Chase Babcock and Tice had a double and a run scored each. Ryan Nash and Matt Driscoll both walked and scored.

Francis scored Pampa's ninth run in the third inning after leading off with a double.

In the fourth, Michael Galloway reached first on an error, stole second and scored the game-ending run on a double by Matt Driscoll. The game was halted by the 10-run rule.

The Pampa All-Stars are coached by Randall Tice and Doug Youree and managed by Robert Dixon.

The two teams square off again

Thursday at 6 p.m. in Pampa in the double-elimination tournament. A Tulia win would force a final game at 8 p.m. Thursday. At stake is a spot in the Bambino Minor League Southwest Regional Tournament to be held in Pampa later this month. State champions in the 9-10 year-old age group from Arkansas, Louisiana, Oklahoma and other regions of Texas will compete for the right to go to the Minor Bambino World Series in August.

PLAINVIEW — The Pampa Major Bambino All-Stars unleashed a home run barrage in a 12-2 win over Plainview Tuesday night in the West Texas Major Bambino State Tournament.

Greg Lindsey led the long-ball attack with a pair of home runs. Tommy Lozano, Russell Robbins and Jonathan Waggoner added one home run each. Lozano and Jesse Francis each had a double while Trey Rogers and Gil Solano each had a base hit.

The game ended after four innings due to the 10-run rule.

Lozano pitched the first three innings and yielded only one hit. Robbins went one inning and gave up one hit.

Defensively, Robbins and Kaleb Snelgrooves turned in a double play. Trey Rogers and Travis Lancaster also played well defensively.

Pampa plays Thursday at 6 p.m. for the championship.

Kids and the great outdoors

MAXDALE — Kids who spend a week at the Texas Game Warden Association summer camp here quickly learn that the wild life on city streets can't hold a candle to the real wildlife of the great outdoors.

Teen-agers who wouldn't bat an eye over walking alone late at night in their own downtown may start crying when confronted with sleeping under the stars at a Lampasas River campsite.

When they survive the overnight camp, they usually find something strange has happened: they have actually learned something and matured a little at the same time.

"We want to give these kids an option a good option," said Alton Anderson, camp director and one of the leaders in the effort to develop the unique summer camp. "The things that they have been learning (on the streets) are all bad."

"At least three-fourths of these kids never caught a fish in their life, never spent a night camping out and don't know there are fun things you can do with a shotgun," Anderson said. "We are losing these kids by not letting them experience the outdoors. We've got to get them back."

The camp is in its first full year of operation, although members of the game warden's association have been working on the concept for more than 12 years and operated a test camp last year.

Anderson, a 25-year game warden who works out of Brazoria County, explained that the group of about 6,000 game wardens and associates wanted to do something for the children of the state.

In addition to helping educate the youngsters by drawing on the outdoor skills they use every day on the job, the wardens can provide the campers with a non-confrontational, one-on-one relationship with law enforcement officers.

Figures from the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department indicate that 90 percent of the youngsters who have not hunted or fished by the time they are 12 years old will never purchase a hunting or fishing license.

It is this lost generation of potential outdoor stewards that the game wardens are hoping to reach through the summer camp, Anderson said, adding that officials in other states are watching their efforts to determine if similar programs can be developed.

After years of searching for the right location for a camp, the 4,400-acre Allen and Parrie Haynes Ranch deeded to the state in 1957 surfaced as a possible site.

The Haynes ranch is in southwestern Bell County, about 10 miles south of Killeen.

Indians' Belle uncorks homer, triple against Rangers

By ADAM NAZIMOWITZ
AP Sports Writer

Cork or no cork, Albert Belle can still hit.

Belle, facing a 10-day suspension for using a corked bat, homered and tripled Tuesday night as the Cleveland Indians beat the Texas Rangers 12-3.

Paul Sorrento homered twice and drove in a career-high five runs, and Jim Thome and Wayne Kirby also homered for Cleveland, which improved to 25-5 in its last 30 games at Jacobs Field.

"It's nice to see Albert hit the ball hard," Cleveland manager Mike Hargrove said. "Albert's pretty strong mentally."

When he gets to the ballpark, he focuses on what he has to do. He is really able to have tunnel vision and not have outside things bother him."

That's especially important these days because of the corked bat controversy that began last weekend in Chicago. Belle was suspended Monday, but he is appealing and can keep playing pending a hearing.

"I think it bothered Albert, but I think he's been able to get through that," Hargrove said.

Charles Nagy (8-6) allowed seven hits, walked one and struck out six in eight innings before leaving when a ball hit his left knee.

Rangers rookie Hector Fajardo (5-6) gave up seven runs and seven hits in five innings for the loss.

"They hit the pitches out that they should have hit out," Texas manager Kevin Kennedy said. "We made a lot of bad pitches, and they didn't miss them. He (Fajardo) got the ball up and didn't have good arm speed."

Belle's fifth-inning home run, his 27th, was his first homer and only his fourth hit in 19 at-bats since his bat was seized Friday night.

"I don't think that's been a distraction for us," Thome said. "We're a good enough team that we can bounce back from it."

Elsewhere in the American League, it was Toronto 4, Minnesota 2; Chicago 10, Detroit 5; Milwaukee 4, Kansas City 3 in 14 innings; California 6, Boston 4, and Oakland 6, New York 2.

The game between Baltimore and Seattle was postponed because of falling ceiling tiles at the Kingdome.

Blue Jays 4, Twins 2

At Toronto, Paul Molitor tripled in the go-ahead run in the eighth as the Blue Jays handed the Twins their ninth straight road loss.

Roberto Alomar reached on a one-out walk and scored on Molitor's single to lead the Blue Jays to their third straight win. Joe Carter followed with a run-scoring single. His two RBIs tied him with Minnesota's Kirby Puckett for the AL lead with 87.

Tony Castillo (5-1) won with two innings of scoreless relief. Darren Hall pitched the ninth for his 11th save. Kevin Tapani (9-6) gave up four runs on five hits over 7 1-3 innings as the Twins lost for the 13th time in 16 games.

White Sox 10, Tigers 5

At Chicago, Julio Franco went 4-for-5 and drove in three runs, and Alex Fernandez struck out 11 in seven innings for the White Sox, who won for the 21st time in 26 games and collected 17 hits.

Fernandez (9-7) walked four and scattered five hits for his fourth straight victory. Tim Belcher (7-11) worked into the fourth inning, giving up eight runs, 11 hits and two walks.

Lance Johnson had three hits and Tim Raines scored three runs and drove in two.

Brewers 4, Royals 3, 14 innings

At Milwaukee, Jeff Cirillo hit his second major-league homer in the 12th inning and scored the winning run on Kevin Seitzer's bases-loaded single in the 14th for Milwaukee.

Cirillo was hit by a pitch from Hipolito Pichardo (3-3) leading off the 14th, advanced on a wild pitch and sacrifice and scored as Seitzer bounced a single up the middle off second baseman Jose Lind's glove.

Brewers pitcher, pitched one inning for the win.

Angels 6, Red Sox 4

At Anaheim, Calif., Mark Langston out-pitched Roger Clemens for the first time in his career and Chad Curtis drove in three runs for California.

Curtis and Chili Davis each hit two-run homers to power the Angels to their fourth straight victory over the Red Sox after they lost their first seven meetings with Boston this season.

Langston (6-6) allowed three runs and four hits over seven innings. Joe Grahe pitched the ninth for his 13th save.

Clemens (8-5) allowed five runs and seven hits over 6 2-3 innings, struck out eight and walked five. His ERA rose from 2.73 to 2.86 to put him behind Kansas City's David Cone for the top mark in the AL.

Athletics 6, Yankees 2

At Oakland, Calif., Mark McGwire's three-run homer in the fifth inning helped end the Yankees' five-game winning streak.

The Athletics, who had dropped four of their previous five games, scored four in the fifth off Jim Abbott (7-7), who has won only once since May 25. He allowed seven hits in six innings.

The Yankees out-hit the Athletics 13-8 but stranded 13 runners.

Pitching for the first time in 11 days, Bobby Witt (8-8) threw five scoreless innings, allowing seven hits. The right-hander, who had been sidelined with a strained rib cage muscle, struck out five and walked three.

Phillies put an end to Giants' nine-game win streak

By BEN WALKER
AP Baseball Writer

Barry Bonds had just singled home a run and Matt Williams and Darryl Strawberry were due up after him. The San Francisco Giants were ahead 2-0 in the first inning and looked ready to roll again.

That's when Danny Jackson and the Philadelphia Phillies got in the way.

Jackson allowed only one hit after the opening inning and pitched the Phillies to a 5-2 victory Tuesday night that ended the Giants' nine-game winning streak.

The Giants had been 9-0 since Strawberry joined them. But a day after he left the game early because of a sore left hamstring, he went 0-for-4 with two strikeouts.

"We were bound to lose one game. We'll just have to start another one tomorrow," Giants manager Dusty Baker said.

Strawberry would not start this afternoon's game in Philadelphia so he could rest, Baker said.

In other games, St. Louis stopped Houston 10-0, Pittsburgh outlasted Atlanta 13-10, New York beat Los Angeles 7-4, Cincinnati trounced Florida 13-5, Montreal defeated San Diego 4-3 and Chicago beat Colorado 6-1.

Jackson (12-4) gave up four hits in eight innings, striking out five and walking three. Doug Jones worked the ninth for his 24th save.

The Giants put Jackson in trouble quickly as Darren Lewis led off the game with a triple, Steve Scarsone doubled and

NL roundup

Bonds singled. Bonds has 10 RBIs in his last six games.

The Phillies started the sixth inning with three straight singles, chasing Bud Black (3-1). Dave Burba relieved and Pete Incaviglia hit his 13th home run, and his second three-run homer in two days.

"It's a game of adjustments," Incaviglia said. "I haven't been doing as well as I'm capable of doing."

"I was swinging at a lot of pitches I should have been taking. Now I'm not going to be chasing balls out of the zone," he said.

Cardinals 10, Astros 0

Vicente Palacios pitched a one-hitter, retiring the final 21 batters after Andujar Cedeno's leadoff single in the third inning at Houston.

The Cardinals stopped a five-game losing streak and became the last team in the majors to win since the All-Star break.

Palacios (2-7), pitching on his 31st birthday, struck out eight and walked one. He pitched his second career shutout, with the other coming in 1991 for Pittsburgh.

Mark Whiten homered and doubled drove in three runs and scored three. Darryl Kile (6-5) lasted only 4 1-3 innings.

Pirates 13, Braves 10

Jay Bell hit a three-run double in the seventh inning and Pittsburgh seasawed past Atlanta at Three Rivers Stadium.

The Pirates blew a five-run lead, then rallied to beat the Braves for the eighth time in 11 games this year. Three errors by Atlanta fueled the comeback.

Lance Parrish homered and Midre Cummings went 3-for-5 with two doubles for the Pirates. Rookie Jose Oliva hit his 10th home run for the Braves.

Dan Miceli (1-0) pitched two hitless innings for his first win in the majors. Reliever Gregg Olson (0-2) gave up three runs in one inning.

Mets 7, Dodgers 4

Ryan Thompson grounded a three-run double, capping a five-run rally in the eighth inning that led New York over Los Angeles.

Relievers Jim Gott (5-3), Omar Daal and Roger McDowell could not hold a 4-2 lead. The Dodgers' bullpen has blown 19 of 36 save chances.

Kevin McReynolds hit a two-run single that tied it at 4 in the eighth. He later slid home on a forceout to break up a possible double play, then Thompson followed with his hit down the third-base line.

Josias Manzanillo (3-1) retired the only batter he faced, getting Mike Piazza on a grounder with the bases loaded to end the eighth. John Franco worked the ninth for his 21st save.

Reds 13, Marlins 5

Eddie Taubensee hit a two-run single that highlighted Cincinnati's six-run first inning at Riverfront Stadium. Florida lost its fifth in a row.

Jacob Brumfield and Hal Morris later homered for the Reds. Gary Sheffield hit his 20th homer for the Marlins.

John Smiley (10-9) went 6 1-3 innings for the win. Mark Gardner (3-3) has beaten every NL team except the Reds, going 0-4 in eight career starts against them.

The first six Cincinnati batters scored. Taubensee broke an 0-for-15 slump with his bases-loaded single.

Expos 4, Padres 3

Montreal improved to 11-0 this season against San Diego, taking advantage of four errors to win at Olympic Stadium.

Shortstop Luis Lopez made a throwing error that set up two unearned runs, and a wild throw by first baseman Eddie Williams enabled another run to score. The Padres lead the majors with 90 errors.

Pedro Martinez (7-5) won for the first time in six starts and John Wetteland got his 15th save in 23 tries.

Andy Ashby (4-9) got little support as San Diego dropped to 2-21 against the Expos since the start of last season.

Cubs 6, Rockies 1

Rookie Steve Trachsel improved to 8-0 on the road, winning for the second time this season in Colorado.

Trachsel (9-6) gave up five hits in eight innings. He left because of a blister on the middle finger of his right hand.

Sammy Sosa had three hits and drove in two runs. He connected off David Nied (9-5) for his 21st homer.

Kidd lands in Mavs' doghouse

DALLAS (AP) — First-round draft pick Jason Kidd is already in the doghouse of Dallas Mavericks coach Dick Motta, who is upset that the second pick overall in this year's NBA draft is sitting out the team's mini-camp this week.

"Jason looked me in the eye after the draft and said, 'If I have to crawl on my belly for free to get there (mini-camp), I'll be there. I took it as a point guard's word. I don't want this to affect our relationship, but I'm very upset,'" Motta said before a team dinner Tuesday night.

Kidd is still unsigned, but the Mavericks offered him a $36 million insurance policy to attend the four-day camp. But Aaron Goodwin, Kidd's agent, said the Mavericks' offer was unacceptable.

Every other Mavericks' rookie, veteran and free agent, with the exception of forward Lorenzo Williams, who had an illness in the family, reported to the voluntary camp. Two-a-days began today.

"We had talked about this. We told Kidd if he was really interested in polishing up his tarnished image, he should do blank and blank and blank. One of those things was to come to mini-camp. That idea was endorsed by him, his family and his agent," Motta said.

"I can honestly look anyone in the eye and say him not being here will have no bearing on how he's treated once he does get here. But what a great opportunity to get a jump start on next season. Now, he's deprived himself of that."

"But I'm not going to let Jason not being here tarnish that everyone else is here. Jason is just going to miss some great coaching," Motta said.

With mortgage rates rising, it pays to lock in now

By VIVIAN MARINO
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Last summer, shopping for a mortgage was like strolling through a crowded bazaar. At no time before had there been so many loan options with such attractive interest rates from which to choose.

This year, the task is more akin to visiting a toy store on Christmas Eve.

Although the market remains largely competitive, a precipitous rise in interest rates due to inflation fears has forced most borrowers to grab the best rate available as soon as possible. Some are securing a mortgage even before they've located a home.

"Last year, if people didn't lock in right away, they often benefited ... because they probably saw rates decline before they closed on their mortgage," said Gregory Samp, president and chief operating officer for Sibley Corp., a mortgage banker based in Rochester, N.Y.

"This year, market volatility continues to inch rates upwards, so there's a lot more urgency on the part of the home buyer to lock in," Samp said. "Chances are in the next 60 days it (the rate) could be worse than now."

Depending on the lender, borrowers can lock in the prevailing interest rate and certain loan terms for a few days to a few months and usually at any time during the application process. They must, however, close on the mortgage before the lock-in expires or lose the preset rate.

Lenders say most lock-ins these days are secured at the start of the application process and many are for longer durations, often around 90 days.

Some lenders charge a lock-in fee — usually up to a point, or 1 percent of the loan amount, which is often credited toward closing costs. However, increased competition for fewer customers this year has forced most lenders to provide the service free.

Sibley is one of them. It allows certain customers to lock in a mortgage rate for up to 150 days — far beyond the average 30- to 60-day lock-in time.

Many lenders are also offering 30-day lock-ins before borrowers have located a home to finance. The lock-and-shop program, which started in California about a year ago, is being done as customers are prequalified for a loan.

"It's a very competitive world," said Samp. "There are 30 percent more people in the business now than in 1991 ... because of the '92-'93 business boom."

At the same time, business is down substantially from a year ago.

Brian Chappelle, a vice president at the Mortgage Bankers Association in Washington, said this summer's mortgage activity is off by about 50 percent because of the higher rates.

Mortgage volume had reached a record high of $1.1 trillion in 1993, buoyed by heavy demand from homeowners wanting to refinance their old mortgages with loans carrying lower rates. Volume this year is expected to total $700 billion, said Chappelle.

"The refinancing market was the force behind last year's business boom. It has virtually dried up this year," he said.

The Federal Reserve has been pushing rates higher to help control inflation. Lenders have followed suit by increasing a variety of consumer loans, including mortgages.

Some economists predict 30-year fixed-rate mortgages will hit 9 percent before the end of the year. They're now at a two-year high.

Anniversary of Hitler plot marred by partisan politics

BERLIN (AP) — In a Germany striving to become whole after its Cold War division, the 50th anniversary of the failed attempt to assassinate Hitler offered a chance to revel in one shining moment of a troubled history.

Instead, the July 20th observance has become darkened by controversy.

Politicians were still arguing Tuesday over whether to honor the communists who sought Adolf Hitler's overthrow long before German officers who, considering the war lost and their Fuehrer gone mad, tried to kill him.

Also controversial was Chancellor Helmut Kohl's decision to monopolize the main commemoration Wednesday, to be held in the courtyard where the five chief military plotters were executed.

The main opposition Social Democrats wanted their candidate for chancellor in October elections, Rudolf Scharping, also to be given a chance to speak at Berlin's Bendlerblock, World War II seat of the army high command.

A better alternative, some argued, would be to have President Roman Herzog give the address, thus allowing a poignant date in German history to transcend the politics of the day.

But Kohl, as chancellor, will have his way.

"The 50th anniversary has become the high point of a long-running argument over who is the rightful political heir to the anti-Hitler resistance," said Regina Holler, a historian and author of the book, "July 20, 1944 — Legacy or Alibi."

The resistance was in fact broadly based and included such Social Democrats as Julius Leber, who would likely have been interior minister had the assassination plot not failed.

For years, Kohl's Christian Democratic Union has focused on the military plotters led by Col. Claus Schenk Graf von Stauffenberg, who attempted on July 20, 1944, to blow Hitler to pieces at Wolf's Lair, his headquarters in occupied Poland.

"They neglected the Communists. They neglected the Social Democrats and they are still not being democratic about it," said Adolf von Hofacker, who was 9 years old that day.

His father, Lt. Col. Caesar von Hofacker, was the conspiracy's lead man in Paris and was among more than 3,000 people executed for roles in it. The bomb von Stauffenberg planted tore up Hitler's pants but left the Fuehrer unharmed.

Von Hofacker said his father held anti-Semitic beliefs as a young man and was a fervent early believer in Hitler.

But that should not diminish their role in the resistance, he said, just as the resistance of captured German officers whose Soviet-sponsored National Committee for a Free Germany should neither be diminished nor forgotten.

Von Stauffenberg's son, Franz, recently made headlines by demanding that photos of Wilhelm Pieck and Walter Ulbricht, founders of the East German communist state, be removed from the Bendlerblock museum dedicated to the anti-Hitler resistance. Museum officials refused.

Attempts to focus the public's attention on the military heroes of July 20th continued Tuesday with a speech by Defense Minister Volker Ruehe at the Bendlerblock, where he opened a new exhibit called "Revolt of Conscience: Military Resistance to Hitler and the Nazi Regime."

BALTIMORE (AP) — Forty percent of all medical specialists in the United States could be unnecessary by the end of the decade, whether the government enacts health care reform or not, researchers reported.

With the nation moving toward more managed care networks built around primary care doctors, there will be a surplus of as many as 165,000 doctors by the year 2000, according to a Johns Hopkins School of Public Health study.

Of those, 151,000 will be specialists. The country will need only 225,000 specialists but will have 376,000, according to the study, to be published in Wednesday's edition of the Journal of the American Medical Association.

By the end of the century there will be 550,000 doctors, it said.

The study underscores the need to push medical students into such areas as family and community medicine rather than the more prestigious and lucrative specialties, said the study's author, Jonathan Weiner, associate professor of health policy and management at Johns Hopkins.

"Many medical students, given the choice of high-paying specialties with salaries two to three times that of primary care, make the obvious choice," Weiner said. Medical schools should "train future generations of physicians to meet society's needs," he said.

The study was commissioned by the federal Bureau of Health Professions. It based its predictions on the assumption that 40 percent to 65 percent of Americans will get their care from health maintenance organizations or other managed care programs by the end of century, up from the current 30 percent.

It also assumed the existence of universal coverage, which means the surplus could be even greater if health care reform does not result in guaranteed health insurance for everyone, Weiner said.

"People with health insurance make about twice as many visits to doctors as patients without insurance," he said.

At the University of Washington in Seattle, students are already being prodded to take a serious look at general practice.

"Family medicine is respected here," said Dr. Thomas Greer. "We're not trying to put down the subspecialists, we just don't need as many of them as we have produced as a country."

In their third year, all medical students at the university are required to take part in a six-week family medicine program, often working at clinics in rural areas in the Northwest and Alaska. But even then, it remains an uphill battle.

"What we're reduced to is trying to persuade young medical students that primary care is a good area," Greer said.

In an editorial in the same issue of the AMA journal, Dr. Steven Schroeder, president of the Robert Wood Johnson Foundation, which deals with health care issues, said managing the supply of doctors should be a national priority.

"Faced with surpluses of the magnitude projected by Weiner and others, the nation is faced with two choices: It can look to the market to recalibrate the work force, or we can attempt to manage it more directly," he wrote.

No metric road signs —for now

WASHINGTON (AP) — Put away those plastic cards converting miles to kilometers. Stop trying to figure out how fast 100 kph really is. The nation's highway signs aren't going metric any time soon.

In another setback for the 200-year-old effort to make the decimal measurement system a reality in the United States, the Clinton administration has quietly backed off plans to convert the signs by 1996.

As part of a 1988 law to move government away from the English system of gallons, pounds and feet, the Federal Highway Administration had told the states it might withhold their share of $18 billion in road money if the signs weren't changed to metric by Sept. 30, 1996.

But more than 2,200 people wrote the highway administration opposing the plan. Several members of Congress introduced bills to abolish the sign change. Most cited the cost, estimated at some $200 million nationally.

"A majority of the negative responses stated the funds to convert the signs could be better used for repair of roads and bridges or for charitable purposes," Administrator Rodney Slater said in announcing the decision in the Federal Register late last month.

There is now no timetable for converting the highway signs, although Slater said the decision should be considered only a postponement.

Congress earlier this year prohibited use of federal money to help in converting highway signs to metric. Beyond the cost, Slater said it was clear most Americans are unwilling to stop using the familiar English measurements, even as more and more products appear on store shelves in liters and grams.

"Before any nationally directed conversion to metric highway signs is implemented, the agency will conduct a strong public education program," Slater said.

The United States remains the only industrialized nation that still officially uses the English system of miles, gallons and pounds. Resistance to the metric system dates to the nation's infancy, when Thomas Jefferson was unable in 1790 to persuade Congress to adopt the French decimal system.

Advocates of the metric system say the United States risks harming trade with other nations if it continues to produce goods, such as spare parts, that don't fit in overseas. Opponents say massive change would be a nightmare for taxpayers.

The 1988 law initially required highway sign changes by the end of 1992, but that deadline was put off under President Bush to allow the highway administration and state road departments time to figure out how to do it.
