Gingrich reasserts that he's in charge; evening session set

Gingrich

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Speaker Newt Gingrich emphatically reasserted his authority today, telling a private Republican session there is "a single line of authority" in the House and he is it, participants said.

At the same time, House Republicans scheduled an evening session to demand a fuller accounting from GOP leaders about whether they played a role in an abortive coup attempt against Gingrich.

House Republicans scheduled an evening session to demand a fuller accounting from GOP leaders about whether they played a role in an abortive coup attempt against Gingrich.

Republicans emerging from today's closed-door session generally said they did not expect any further leadership changes now and described Gingrich as clearly in charge.

"While there may be some suspicions that linger...this is a battle that serves no purpose," said Rep. Mark Foley, R-Fla.

Foley said that the botched coup attempt was "an embarrassment to all of us," but that Gingrich "was very positive" in his remarks. "He was intent in dissolving any concern over who's been doing what to what."

Gingrich was applauded three or four times as he spoke, including thunderous applause when he finished his remarks.

Republicans met in their weekly closed-door caucus today, but the failed plot against Gingrich was expected to be dealt with at an evening session demanded by members who want a fuller accounting.

Gingrich signaled on Tuesday that he wants no further immediate changes in the GOP leadership, despite remaining questions over whether top lieutenants — Majority Leader Dick Armey of Texas, GOP Whip Tom DeLay also of Texas and GOP Conference Chairman John Boehner of Ohio — may have been implicated.

Neither Armey, DeLay or Boehner talked at today's session, participants said, although they were certain to get their turn at the evening session.

DeLay, who has maintained a public silence on the episode and is the prime target of Gingrich loyalists, told reporters as he left the caucus, "You might as well not follow me. I'm not going to talk. I talk to my colleagues, not the press."

UPR attains option to purchase 61.5 percent of Pennzoil's stock

HOUSTON (AP) — Union Pacific Resources Group Inc. said Tuesday it has attained the option to buy 61.5 percent of Pennzoil Co.'s common stock in an $84-per-share cash offer as part of a hostile takeover bid.

Although the offer, which was to have expired at midnight Monday, resulted in a majority stake of Houston-based Pennzoil, UPR still must deal with Pennzoil's shareholder rights takeover defense plan, often called a "poison pill," through which new shares are issued to make a hostile takeover too costly.

UPR said the tender offer was extended to midnight on Sept. 24. The Fort Worth-based company said it has acquired 28.89 million shares.

Pennzoil chairman and chief executive officer James L. Pate reiterated his board's belief that UPR's $4.2 billion offer was inadequate and not in the best interest of shareholders. The board rejected UPR's bid on July 1.

"We will continue to strongly resist UPR's inadequate offer and its effort to intercept the unrecognized emerging value of Pennzoil stock," Pate said.

"Shareholders representing an overwhelming majority of Pennzoil shares have sent a clear message of support for combining the two companies," Messman said.

"Pennzoil's board should now meet to respond to the powerful message the owners of the company have sent," he said. "We urge Pennzoil's board to listen to its shareholders and do the right thing by directing management to negotiate a combination with UPR."

Of numerous shareholders contacted by the Houston Chronicle Monday, only the State Teachers Retirement System of Ohio, which holds 688,770 shares of Pennzoil, confirmed it had tendered its shares.

Pennzoil's stock was trading for about $60 a share the day before Union Pacific Resources launched its $84-per-share bid.

Alleged victim takes stand

The 19-year-old victim of an alleged sexual assault was testifying this morning in the trial of the man charged with attacking her.

Third-day testimony of the trial for 20-year-old Torrance Leandrew Bean opened with Snyder Police Lt. Steve Warren taking the stand. He was followed by the alleged victim.

Tuesday afternoon, Snyder police officers Keith Ward and Luis Villereal testified, as did a Lubbock Department of Public Safety criminologist.

A six-man, six-woman jury is hearing the case. Bean, of 315 32nd St., has been free on bond since charges were brought against him on March 1. He is being defended by Isaac Castro of Snyder. Prosecuting the case is District Attorney Dana Cooley.

District Judge Ernie Armstrong is presiding.

THE SDN COLUMN

By Roy McQueen

The feller on Deep Creek says, "A born loser is one who opens a tall man's clothing shop in Japan."

Guess we'll just have to blame it on the hot weather.

Over in abilene, there's been a war of words going on over the opening of a new restaurant named after an upper portion of the female anatomy. The new eating establishment's name is a takeoff of a national chain that refers to the same female body parts.

The discussion has become so heated that it spilled over into a flood of letters dealing with appropriate dress at church.

Because of the military sex scandal, creator Mort Walker has sent General Halftrack to sensivity training. He has now apologized to Miss Buxley and Private Blips for his sexist behavior.

Said Walker, "Misbehavior is a lot more funny than good behavior. My idea is to entertain people, not offend them."

The cartoonist noted that he can still spoof the general's excessive drinking, ineptness and other less-than-exemplary qualities."

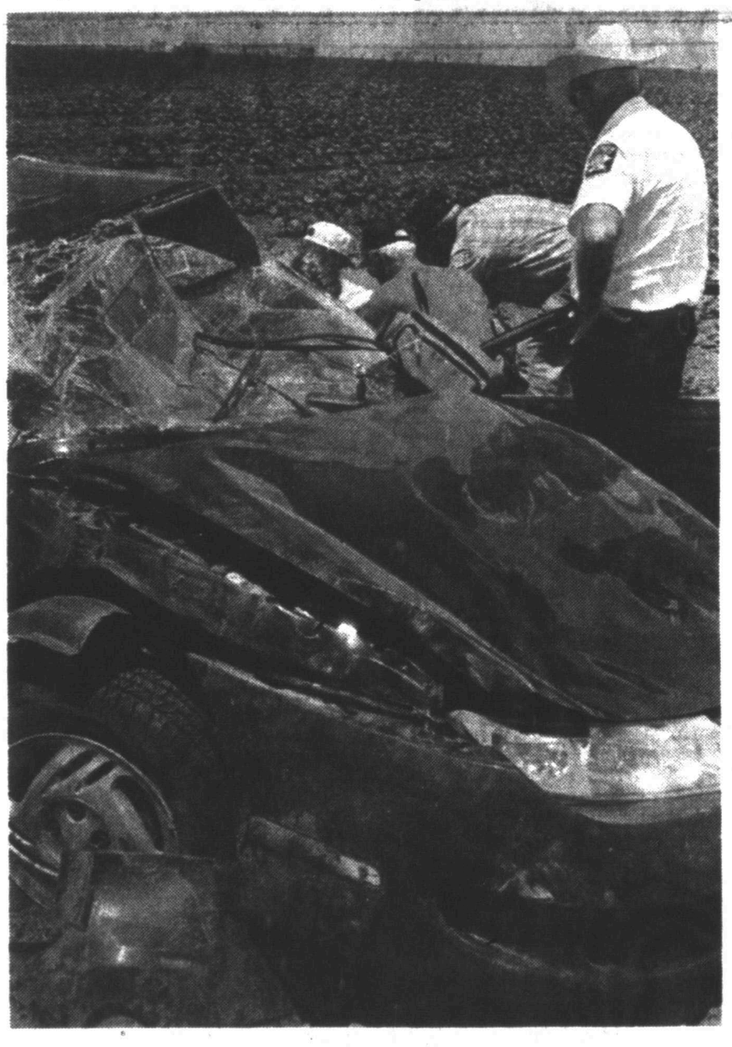

Still related, an over-endowed female caused one customer at a strip club to become so offended that he is taking the woman to court.

In a believe-it-or-not situation, a patron of an Illinois strip club has now filed suit against an exotic dancer with an 88-inch chest.

The alleged "victim" says the dancer owes him $200,000 from injuries when she slammed her 40-pound bosom into him. In addition, the customer claims the night club is negligent because it failed to warn customers to watch out.

In addition to injuries of bruising, contusions and lacerations, the man said he suffers "emotional distress, mental anguish and indignity," all done without his consent.

A rain may not help...it may take a blue norther.

ONE INJURED — Scurry County Deputy Jerry Cowin observes Snyder EMS personnel administer to 19-year-old Elizabeth Neel of Carrollton. She was injured in a one-vehicle accident shortly after 2 p.m. Tuesday, just north of the city limits on U.S. 84. The 1996 Saturn which she was driving overturned after leaving the north-bound lane. After being treated at Cogdell Hospital, Neel was transferred to Lubbock's University Medical Center by Snyder EMS where her condition this morning was listed as satisfactory. A passenger in the vehicle, 13-year-old Nathan Patton of Spur, was not injured. (SDN Staff Photo)

Democrats set to take offensive

WASHINGTON (AP) — Before turning their attention to foreign money to the Republican Party, Senate campaign finance investigators today rebuffed the Justice Department and voted to grant immunity to four Buddhist nuns involved in a controversial temple fund-raiser attended by Vice President Al Gore.

All nine Republicans on the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee as well as a handful of Democrats supported the action, opening the door for the four nuns to testify. The committee also granted immunity to a Democratic donor from Virginia.

The Justice Department had urged the committee not to grant immunity, citing its ongoing criminal investigation into fund-raising abuses.

Sen. Sam Brownback, R-Kan. echoed the sentiments of supporters, noting the Justice Department had "this case involving the Buddhist nuns for months" and had plenty of time to decide whether to prosecute.

The immunity vote opened a third week of hearings into campaign fund-raising abuses that will give Democrats their first chance to go on the offensive. The committee planned to hear testimony about Hong Kong businessman Ambrous Tung Young's relationship with the Republican Party, former party chairman Haley Barbour and the National Policy Forum think tank that Barbour formed.

In deposition testimony obtained by The Associated Press, Young described how, prior to November 1991, he wired $2.9 million to a U.S. subsidiary and used some of it make a $100,000 donation to the Republican Party. The GOP recently refunded the money. It is illegal for parties to accept foreign money.

Democrats contend that the policy forum and the RNC were linked so closely that the party itself benefited from donations sent through Taiwan's government; from contributions by an Indonesian businessman with strong ties to China, and by a loan secured by Young's company.

Young's contributions became a major source of embarrassment for Republicans in May, when the national party returned $122,400 of his 1991-93 donations.

And in 1994, his guarantee of a $2.1 million U.S. bank loan to the GOP think tank has become an embarrassment to Barbour. Most of the money went to the Republican Party to repay a loan, and the party sent it to state GOP organizations around the country, according to committee Democrats.

Barbour was expected to testify later this week.

Texas Lottery Commission scratches 'Scratchman' ads

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The Texas Lottery has scratched "Scratchman," the superhero-like character used since 1994 in instant lottery commercials, after complaints that the caped pitchman appealed too much to youngsters.

"Scratchman is flying off into the sunset," Austin-based lottery spokeswoman Leticia Vasquez told the San Antonio Express-News. "He's scratched."

The advertising campaign for scratch-off tickets began in January 1994. It was only this year that House Appropriations Committee Chairman Robert Junell, D-San Angelo, likened the masked character in red tights to Joe Camel, the hip cartoon animal used by R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. to sell cigarettes.

"I think the same correlation can be made between Joe Camel and enticing young people to smoke as can be made with Scratchman unduly influencing young kids to become gamblers," Junell said.

Junell's committee, in a unanimous vote, ordered the Texas Lottery Commission to spend less money on advertising. Committee members were particularly critical of Scratchman.

Members of the pro-Scratchman faction said that while the character might catch a child's eye, that wasn't their motivation. Lottery players must be 18 or older.

"It was never intended to appeal to kids," said Scratchman creator Tom Gilmore of Austin-based GSD&M ad agency. "He was just kind of a goofy, oddball Dudley Dooright, a klutzy buffoon."

Actor Bill Jenkins was midway through his fourth year as the Anglo version of Scratchman — Juan Cedillo played the Spanish-speaking version. Jenkins found the controversy amusing.

"I take it as a backhanded compliment that they think my performance was so persuasive that it would cause kids to gamble," Jenkins told the newspaper from his Dallas home.

Ex-banker suing state over lottery forgery conviction

HOUSTON (AP) — A former banker who says she wrongfully was convicted of forgery after she found a lottery ticket on a downtown street is suing the state, claiming the ordeal cost her her job, her husband and relationships with relatives.

Patsy Bolander, whose conviction was overturned last year, blames the state, lottery officials and the Harris County district attorney's office for negligence in her arrest and conviction.

She and her ex-husband are seeking $1 million in punitive damages and about $500,000 in actual damages for her lost wages and legal fees.

Ms. Bolander, 58, says her nightmare began June 4, 1992, when she found a scratch-off lottery ticket that revealed symbols indicating it was a $10,000 winner.

She says she took the ticket to the bank where she worked and showed it to at least two other bank officials, all of them trained to detect forged documents. No one saw signs of tampering, she said.

Ms. Bolander was arrested and jailed for forgery after presenting the ticket at a lottery claims center. Investigators said the second $10,000 symbol obviously was cut from another ticket and clumsily pasted over another symbol.

Ms. Bolander, a mother of three who had been married for 18 years, was convicted of lottery forgery and sentenced to 10 years' probation. She was fired from her job at BankOne and denied retirement and other benefits. She and her husband, Noel, were divorced last year.

Ms. Bolander's lawsuit accuses the state of negligence in the hiring and supervision of Lottery Commission investigator Tom Hedrick, who was accused of giving erroneous testimony as the state's only witness at Ms. Bolander's trial.

The lawsuit accuses prosecutors of violating Ms. Bolander's rights by failing to confirm Hedrick's information with other witnesses or conduct an independent investigation.

A judge granted Ms. Bolander a new trial after another Lottery Commission employee supported key points of her account. The district attorney's office dismissed the case for insufficient evidence.

Defendants in the lawsuit include the state, the state comptroller's office, former Lottery Commission Director Norma Linares, prosecutor Kim Whittington and supervisor Karen Morris.

Woman's Passion for Bingo Gives Husband Time to Cheat

by Abigail Van Buren

© 1997 Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: Bingo players, beware! What does your husband or wife do while you are playing bingo five nights a week?

My friend told me she saw my husband, who is 71, get into a car with a "hussy" who is about 50. I decided to see if there was any truth to her story, so after my husband and I had dinner one night, I had him drop me off at the bingo parlor. He said he was going home, so I said I would ride home with a friend.

I had hired a detective who waited in a parking lot nearby and we followed my husband. Soon he parked his car and got into hers. What we saw made me ill, but I have never confronted him with my knowledge. Our religion frowns on divorce, so I just pray the old goat wakes up before he kills himself. He has broken my heart and if I were younger, he would be following me in the dust.

Do you think I did the right thing to quit bingo?

B-9 IN TENNESSEE

DEAR B-9: Only if giving up your game forced your husband to give up the game he was playing.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: I agree with "Sally B." who finds exposed bra straps absolutely disgusting and tacky.

I wonder why women dress this way, especially in this day and age when you can walk into virtually any department store (even discount stores) and find bras of all shapes, styles and colors designed to function invisibly under almost any type of garment on the market. Many bras have convertible straps so they can be worn X-back, halter-style, one strap or strapless. They make bustiers to be worn under backless dresses, and when all else fails, they have ones like giant lace Band-Aids so one doesn't "jiggle." So the only excuse for exposed bra straps is plain laziness.

I'd like to add my pet peeve: white bras showing plainly through thin blouses. Don't these women know flesh tones exist? I hate seeing professional women who wear beautiful white blouses ruining the effect because their undergarments show through. Do they really want people looking at their bras all day?

D.B. IN COLUMBUS, OHIO

DEAR D.B.: I was caught off guard by the number of people who responded to that letter — there have been hundreds. Most of the writers agree with you and "Sally B.," but a few wrote to tell me they think exposed bra straps are sexy. Go figure. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: I'm in complete agreement with "Sally B.'s" disgust with exposed bra straps. Many women do this consciously, especially teen-age girls. For some reason, they think it is sexy or attractive for everyone to know what color or how lacy their bras are. It disgusts me. Not only is it incredibly tacky, it shows complete disregard for the fact that underwear is supposed to stay under the clothing. To top it off, the women who expose their most intimate apparel act as if they didn't know there was a solution.

I worked in lingerie for about a year, and I happen to know there are bras especially made for those revealing tops. There is absolutely no need to walk around displaying your undergarments. All it takes is one quick trip to a department or specialty store to correct this embarrassing problem. Ask the salesclerk for a convertible bra — she'll be happy to help.

Is it just me, Abby, or are panty lines equally disgusting?

REPULSED 19-YEAR-OLD IN SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

DEAR REPULSED: I suspect that teen-agers do it out of ignorance of the fact that there's a solution to the problem, or because they are imitating Madonna — who originated the underwear-as-outerwear fad. Or, perhaps, they're so proud of the fact that they finally need to wear a bra they can't resist drawing attention to it.

For Abby's favorite family recipes, send a long, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Cookbooklet No. 1, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054-0447. (Postage is included.)

Key informant in trial killed

McALLEN (AP) — A key U.S. government informant was slain to keep him from testifying in an ongoing drug trial, Mexican authorities say.

The body of Hector Salinas Guerra, 42, was found in Reynosa, Mexico, on Tuesday. He had been beaten and apparently suffocated with a plastic bag found near his body, police said.

Tamaulipas State Judicial Police reported finding the body. They said Salinas suffered fractures to his head and chest.

Salinas was outside his McAllen used clothing and appliance store in McAllen last Thursday when he was forced at gunpoint into a green Chevrolet Suburban by four men wearing hats bearing the insignia of Mexican federal police.

Fire officials refused comment Tuesday on whether a burned Chevrolet Suburban found a mile from Salinas' shop is linked to the case.

First experimental automated highway makes its U.S. debut

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Drivers took the pedal off the metal and their hands off the wheel in a test that some say represents the future of commuting.

Computerized cars made their debut Tuesday on a 7.6-mile experimental stretch of Interstate 15. They aren't quite the hovercrafts that George Jetson took to work, but they are a giant leap from your father's Oldsmobile.

Researchers say automated highways and special vehicles — equipped with video cameras, magnets and radar — could reduce accidents, traffic jams and air pollution.

After a short ride, however, some drivers got bored.

"It's really exciting for about the first 15 seconds, then it gets really dull," said Jim Rillings of the National Automated Highway System Consortium. "It's like driving with a chauffeur. You just sit back and let your mind wander."

The test was purely a demonstration. The specially equipped cars necessary are not even available to the public. The prototype highway should be running by 2002, but the location has not yet been selected.

Tiny magnets embedded in the asphalt enable the magnetized vehicles to constantly stay within the lane's boundaries.

The dozen cars and buses in the demonstration are equipped with small video cameras on their rearview mirrors or windshields that follow visual aids along the road.

The cameras can function at night with headlights illuminating the barriers. A small television screen inside the car shows diagrams of the vehicle in relation to boundaries and other cars, as it maintains a safe distance.

The National Automated Highway System Consortium comprises private and public agencies and universities. Among the participants working to develop the technology are General Motors Corp., Lockheed Martin and Carnegie Mellon University.

There is no price tag for the project, but its supporters insist it will save millions of federal dollars because it relies on existing infrastructure and eliminates the need for building more highway lanes.

Its genesis was a 1991 federal law that empowered the Department of Transportation to develop "fully automated, intelligent vehicle-highway systems."

It would cost less than $10,000 to equip one mile of highway with the new technology, compared with $1 million to $100 million to build one mile of new highway, said Dick Bishop, a spokesman for the Transportation Department.

Sheriff to serve ostrich meat to inmates

PHOENIX (AP) — The sheriff who dresses inmates in pink underwear, houses some outdoors in Army tents and keeps them in check with cameras mounted on dog patrols, has a new treat for prisoners: Ostrich casserole.

Maricopa County Sheriff Joe Arpaio agreed to accept a donation on Wednesday of nearly 40 ostriches and emu from a Phoenix couple who operate an ostrich farm and want to reduce their inventory.

"I almost hate giving inmates such a fine quality meat product, but it least it's free," Arpaio said Tuesday.

The birds should provide enough meat to feed nearly 7,000 inmates two meals of ostrich casserole, Arpaio says. He has ordered his kitchen staff to begin experimenting with recipes for the meat.

"We've never served this stuff before and we want it to at least taste good," Arpaio said.

No one is predicting how the inmates will like the exotic meat, but Arpaio said they shouldn't complain because it has significantly less fat, calories and cholesterol than beef.

The sheriff has asked his food services manager to look into the possibility of starting a jail-house meat processing plant so the sheriff's office can accept and process meat donations of any kind.

"It makes sense and it may be a good vocational program for inmates," Arpaio said.

Since taking office in 1993, Arpaio, who revels in his reputation as the nation's toughest sheriff, has banned coffee and smoking, sex magazines and R-rated movies from the county's jails.

In addition, he's made national headlines for making inmates wear pink underwear to keep the garments from being stolen and for housing them in tents to ease overcrowding.

Another sign of the times

By Phillip Alder

The Long Island Rail Road waiting room in Penn Station has a sign that includes the following: "There is a three-hour waiting limit." Now, if only the trains would run more often ...

In bridge, though, taking one's time is often a good idea. There is an old saying that if you watch a beginner playing in three no-trump, he will win the first eight tricks and lose the last five, whereas an expert will lose the first four and win the last nine.

With that unsubtle hint, how would you play in three no-trump here? West leads the heart six: four, queen, king. Over to you.

West's two hearts showed a decent six-card suit and some 6-10 high-card points. Why do players use the weak two rather than the strong two? Because it comes up much more often. And it supplies a good balance between offensive and defensive bidding. The opponents are more likely to be inconvenienced than partner.

North was right to make a takeout double. His hand is playable in three suits, not the one that overcalling three clubs would suggest.

After grabbing the first trick with his heart king, South crossed to dummy with a spade and took the club finesse. However, West happily won with the king and cashed five heart tricks: two down.

North wasn't amused. "Why didn't you duck at trick one?" he asked. "From the bidding, you know East has played a singleton queen. Win whatever he returns and take the club finesse in safety, still having every suit under control."

"Sorry, partner. I will find a coach to train me to play more slowly."

Rose, Orange, Sugar, Fiesta form Super Alliance for '98

Alliance officials on Tuesday named the Orange, Fiesta and Sugar Bowls to join the Rose Bowl in the new coalition, beginning after the 1998 regular season.

The four-year deal with a three-year option came as little surprise. When Alliance officials made the new deal, they held open an exclusive negotiating period during which bowls other than the Orange, Fiesta and Sugar were not considered. The deal was signed before the exclusive period ended.

With the Pac-10 and Big 10 champions in the eight-team Alliance, the Super Alliance virtually guarantees a national title game.

Another part of the deal is an agreement that will take regional considerations into account when making the pairings. For instance, the Southeastern Conference champion will play in the Sugar Bowl in years when that bowl doesn't play host to the title game. The Rose Bowl is guaranteed the Pac-10 and Big Ten champions when it isn't the title game host.

The three bowls were expected to bid from $28 million to $30 million for the seven years. ABC was expected to pay more than $400 million over the same span for exclusive rights to televise all four Alliance games each year.

The rotation for the championship games will be determined at a later date. Earlier reports had all four bowls hosting one title game over the first four years, with the Sugar, Orange and Fiesta Bowls getting a second championship game in each of the option years.

Under the current deal, the Orange, Sugar and Fiesta Bowls rotated the title game. Champions of the SEC, Atlantic Coast Conference, Big 12 and Big East took four of the six Alliance slots with two others going to at-large teams.

But the absence of the Pac-10 and Big Ten champions meant there was no guarantee the two top-ranked teams would meet in a championship game.

Last season, No. 1 Florida State met No. 3 Florida in the Sugar Bowl and No. 2 Arizona State met No. 4 Ohio State in the Rose Bowl. When the two higher-ranked teams lost, Florida was voted national champion.

The new arrangement and a recent deal struck with Conference USA and the Western Athletic Conference nearly assures a true national title game. Beginning in 1998, the winners of those conferences are guaranteed a spot in the Alliance if they are ranked fifth or higher.

The biggest wild card could be Notre Dame, which was reportedly unhappy it was not consulted after the deals with the other conferences were closed.

Media predicts Texas, Nebraska in title game

DALLAS (AP) — Texas and Nebraska, who met in last year's first Big 12 championship, were picked by the media to square off again in this year's title game.

Longhorns tailback Ricky Williams was picked the offensive player of the year and Cornhuskers defensive lineman-linebacker Grant Wistrom was chosen the defensive player of the year in the preseason poll of reporters.

The poll was released Tuesday in anticipation of the league's head coaches coming to Dallas for their annual two-day gathering with the media.

Nebraska had a conference-best seven players on the preseason All-Big 12 squad. Texas had the next most with five.

The predicted order of finish in the North Division was Nebraska, Colorado, Kansas State, Missouri, Kansas and Iowa State.

In the South, the media predicted the finish to be Texas, Texas A&M, Texas Tech, Oklahoma, Oklahoma State and Baylor.

The Big 12 championship game is scheduled for Dec. 6 in San Antonio. Texas won last year's game 37-27.

Texas' other picks are quarterback James Brown, place-kicker Phil Dawson, defensive lineman Chris Akins and defensive lineman-linebacker Aaron Humphrey.

The all-conference receivers are Colorado's Phil Savoy and Iowa State's Ed Williams. The tight end is Alonzo Mayes of Oklahoma State and the other linemen are Mike Morris of Missouri, Melvin Thomas of Colorado and Todd Weiner of Kansas State.

Ryan Olson of Colorado was picked on the defensive line and the other linebackers are Dat Nguyen of Texas A&M and Mark Simoneau of Kansas State.

The remaining defensive backs are Ryan Black of Colorado, R.W. McQuarters of Oklahoma State and Tony Blevins of Kansas.

Selig appoints Beeston to major league office

NEW YORK (AP) — Even as teams try to pressure him into accepting a permanent term as commissioner, Bud Selig says he doesn't want the job.

"All I'll say is I haven't changed my mind since Sept. 9, 1992," Selig said Tuesday after announcing Paul Beeston's appointment as major league baseball's president and chief operating officer.

Beeston, who resigned Tuesday as president and chief executive officer of the Toronto Blue Jays, will move to New York and head the staff in the commissioner's office starting Aug. 1.

"If we fell after the strike, and nobody would deny that we fell, we've now bottomed out and we're on the way back up," Beeston said. "It takes a long time to build it back up. But the building up is a lot of fun. It's a great challenge. It's the greatest game in the world. I know it's almost sacrilegious for a Canadian to say it."

Beeston, the first employee hired by the Blue Jays in 1976, has the advantage of knowing all the people who wield power in baseball, where the corporate culture of many is to shun outsiders who are brought in.

"He'll be able to hit the ground running," said New York Mets owner Fred Wilpon, a member of the executive council. "He has energy, loyalty, intelligence."

Beeston, 52, often is kidded by owners when he attends meetings in loafers with no socks. He is regarded as one of the boys, smoking cigars and laughing as stories are told into the early morning at and after meetings.

Many think Selig will use him to seek compromises among the clubs, who often disagree on matters large and small and sometimes take months and years to solve problems. Beeston said he hopes to get the teams working like rowers.

Selig, who has run baseball as chairman of the owners' executive council since Fay Vincent was forced to resign as commissioner nearly five years ago, says the commissioner search committee headed by Colorado Rockies chairman Jerry McMorris will continue its work.

But many teams want Selig to become commissioner, and officials said some owners have increased their pressure in recent weeks. While he says he doesn't want the job, Selig refuses to say unconditionally that he won't accept it.

Sales pitch: a baseball that registers speed

By JIM SALTER
Associated Press Writer

ST. LOUIS (AP) — The next time the neighborhood blowhard pops off about the 90 mph fastball he threw in high school, tell him to prove it.

By February, Rawlings Sporting Goods Co. expects to have on the market the Radar Ball, a baseball that features a small digital display between the seams showing how fast it was thrown.

Analysts say the baseball could make millions of dollars for Rawlings. It may also break millions of hearts of would-be and couldabeen major leaguers.

"There's going to be a lot of fathers who have blown egos when they throw in front of their sons," Randy Black, vice president of marketing for St. Louis-based Rawlings, said Tuesday.

The Radar Ball was invented by 25-year-old Dave Zakutin, who experimented with the idea of a speed-sensing baseball as his senior project at the University of Waterloo in Canada.

Zakutin contacted Rawlings, maker of major league baseballs for 20 years, then brought down a couple of friends to play catch with the ball in front of Rawlings executives.

The ball has the size and feel of a regulation baseball. To use it, the catcher stands (or squats) 60 feet, 6 inches from the pitcher, the standard distance from pitching rubber to home plate.

A sensor is built into the baseball that measures time from the moment the ball is released until it is caught, Black said. A microprocessor inside the ball then divides the distance by the time and displays a reading in mph.

"You grip it like any of your pitches, you throw it, and you get immediate feedback," Black said.

Rawlings also plans a Little League version that calculates the speed from 45 feet. And the company plans to market a similar softball, due in stores by April.

A fastball's velocity has been a source of fascination long before technology was up to speed. In the 1940s, Cleveland Indians ace Bob Feller snapped off his best fastball while a motorcycle zipped by at 100 mph. The fastball won.

Black said the Radar Ball will retail for $34.99 to $39.99, making it affordable for high school and American Legion teams, or even for use in the back yard. It's durable enough to take the pounding of errant pitches in the dirt and off backstops, but because of the technology inside, it can't be hit with a bat.

As for its accuracy, Rawlings claims the ball consistently registers within 1 mph of radar guns. The Los Angeles Dodgers and Toronto Blue Jays have tried it and liked it, Black said. In fact, the Dodgers kept a prototype long after it was due back during spring training.

First chaplain school is now open on South Carolina base

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — American military chaplains have been ministering since before there was a United States, yet the Army has shuttled its chaplain training program around like a spare part for nearly eight decades.

The first facility designed specifically for the Army Chaplain Center and School formally opened today with dedication a ceremony at Fort Jackson, the Army's largest training post.

"This is home," said Chaplain George Pejakovich, the school's commandant. "We're in a building that's made for us. Jokingly, I tell people I poured these foundations real deep."

The $8 million, 58,000-square-foot school represents a quantum leap from hand-me-down buildings often on some remote corner of an Army post. There are 20,000 volumes in the library on topics from military science to world religions, and there is Internet access.

Thirty personal computers are set up in one classroom. And as many as four sites worldwide will be able to sit in on classes via video-conferencing.

"The chaplain in Karlsruhe, Germany, could call up the schedule and see what time a class is being taught on marriage counseling," Pejakovich said. "Then he can call us and say he'd like to have his chaplain's assistants sit in on the class."

The move to Fort Jackson also fills a more basic need: It puts prospective chaplains back among the soldiers they are trained to serve. Fort Jackson has nearly a fourth of the Army's 2,000 drill sergeants, who train about 40,000 recruits a year.

At Fort Monmouth, N.J., where the school previously was housed, trainees had to be trucked to Fort Dix to do their work. Now it's just a matter of packing a knapsack.

"We had always been isolated in a place where most of the green-shirted personnel belonged to the chaplain's school," Pejakovich said. "Here we're surrounded by the sights and sounds of the Army.

"The chaplaincy was born in the field and belongs in the field."

As long as there have been armies, there have been men of the cloth — the chaplains — following them into battle.

Chaplains have been a part of the American military since the battles of Lexington and Concord. The Second Continental Congress set their pay equal to that of captains in July 1775, a full year before the Declaration of Independence was signed.

It wasn't until 1918 that the Army Chaplain School was established to train large numbers of chaplains for World War I troops. It began at Fort Monroe, Va., but soon moved to Camp Zachary Taylor, Ky.

That started a cycle in which the school never stayed in one place for long. Its longest stay was 16 years at Fort Monmouth before the 1993 Base Realignment and Closure Act transferred operations to Fort Jackson.

The new school was named in honor of Charlie Watters.

Arrests, thefts keep peace officers busy

Five people were arrested Tuesday and one other subject was taken into custody early this morning.

Adult probation officers transported a 25-year-old male to the Law Enforcement Center at 8:59 a.m. Tuesday in reference to an outstanding warrant for misdemeanor theft out of county court.

Deputies arrested a 17-year-old male at the courthouse at 10:04 a.m. on an outstanding warrant from county court for driving while license suspended.

Deputies arrested a 19-year-old male at 5:28 p.m. at the justice of the peace office in the courthouse on outstanding warrants for speeding, failure to display a driver's license and failure to appear.

At 10:50 p.m., officers arrested a 30-year-old female in the 2000 block of Houston Avenue for misdemeanor driving while intoxicated. A 36-year-old female passenger was arrested for public intoxication.

At 12:15 this morning, officers arrested a 45-year-old male in the 2200 block of Avenue M for public intoxication.

In other activity, officers located a 1995 Ford F250 extended cab pickup in the 400 block of 24th Street. Gary McWilliams had reported the truck stolen from 121 34th St. at 5:59 a.m. Tuesday.

Glenn Griffith requested to speak to an officer at 1:05 p.m. from the 3200 block of Irving in reference to someone stealing cash from his vehicle. An offense report for burglary of a vehicle was submitted.

An offense report for burglary of a vehicle was also submitted at 2:58 p.m. from the 1800 block of 38th Street as Troy Burton reported the theft of a checkbook.

Dr. Gott

By Peter Gott, M.D.

Can you halt damage of osteoporosis?

DEAR DR. GOTT: I am quite stooped because of osteoporosis. Three months ago, I began taking Fosomax. To date, I have not noticed any improvement in my posture. Considering the expense of the medicine, should I continue to take it?

DEAR READER: Osteoporosis, the age-related loss of calcium from bones, is associated in many cases with vertebral fractures: One or more of the spinal bones may virtually collapse, leading to a stooped posture ("dowager's hump"). These changes are permanent and cannot be reversed by any current therapy.

The degree of osteoporosis is defined by a bone density measurement, which is determined by means of an X-ray examination.

Fosomax is a prescription drug that causes bones to absorb more calcium. The process is a lengthy one, however, and may take several months, even years.

I agree with your doctor's decision to prescribe Fosomax. Nonetheless, you will probably feel no beneficial effects from it, nor will your posture improve significantly. The purpose of therapy is to arrest (or even reverse) calcium loss from bones. You will continue to be stooped; yet, the drug will in all likelihood prevent further damage and may prevent future fractures (in hips and spine) from occurring. Such fractures could severely hamper your independence.

The only reliable way to judge the beneficial effects of Fosomax is to repeat a bone density test in about a year's time. The new test should prove that your bones are gaining calcium — or, at least, not losing it as rapidly as before.

Meanwhile, you might be helped by physical therapy and special exercises. Follow your physician's instructions with respect to your condition.

To give you more information, I am sending you a copy of my Health Report "Osteoporosis." Other readers who would like a copy should send $2 plus a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope to P.O. Box 2017, Murray Hill Station, New York, NY 10156. Be sure to mention the title.

DEAR DR. GOTT: As the community outreach coordinator for the University of Florida Women's Health Initiative, sponsored by the National Institutes of Health, my job is to find 4500 women between the ages of 60 and 79 who would be willing to participate in a study that examines ways to prevent osteoporosis, breast and colon cancer, heart disease and Alzheimer's disease.

The study is being run through 40 clinics across the country, and many more women are needed to participate. I would like to invite all of your female readers between the ages of 60 and 79 to learn more about the study by calling 1-800-54-WOMEN. I hope your readers decide that they want to give a gift of good health for future generations of women.

DEAR READER: Sounds good to me. Done.

Greenspan says...

No reason to raise interest rates

WASHINGTON (AP) — Top Federal Reserve officials said today they share Alan Greenspan's upbeat views about the economy but made clear that, like him, they wouldn't hesitate to squelch inflation with higher interest rates.

"The economy as a whole is functioning amazingly well," Fed Vice Chairwoman Alice Rivlin told the House Banking Committee.

"At the moment," she said, "there seems to be little risk of the economy slowing down too much in the near term and sliding into recession."

Federal Reserve board member Laurence H. Meyer agreed, calling the economy's recent performance "extraordinarily favorable." He said he did not foresee "any obstacles to the continuation of the expansion ... through 1998."

Fed Chairman Greenspan repeated to the Senate Banking Committee testimony he delivered to the House on Tuesday. "The recent performance of the economy, characterized by strong growth and low inflation, has been exceptional," he said.

Wall Street sent stock prices soaring in response to Greenspan's testimony Tuesday and heard nothing from the early part of today's hearings to cause it to give up its gain.

The Dow Jones industrial average jumped 154.93 points Tuesday to close at a record 8,061.65. At midday today, the Dow was up another 37.16 points.

Higher than the risk of recession, Rivlin said, is the risk that "many of the factors holding down inflation will prove temporary." And, she said, waiting too long to increase interest rates "may increase the possibility of overheating followed by recession."

Meyer said, "The history of business cycles has repeatedly taught us that the greatest risk to an expansion comes from failing to prevent an overheated economy."

"The best way to insure the durablity of this expansion is, therefore, to be vigilant that we do not allow the economy to overheat and produce the inevitable rise in inflation," he said.

Bombers, census remain issues as Congress moves on spending bills

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress is forging ahead with fiscal 1998 spending bills, skirting most controversial matters but differing with President Clinton on such issues as the B-2 bomber and census sampling.

On Tuesday, the Senate voted 99-0 to approve a $25 billion bill to fund the Treasury Department, the U.S. Postal Service, the executive office of the president and some independent agencies. The House was finishing work on a $49.6 billion farm bill, taking up such contentious topics as subsidies for tobacco, sugar and peanuts.

The House Appropriations Committee, in an all-day session, sent to the full House three more spending bills — a $248 billion defense bill, an $80 billion bill to fund labor, health and education programs and a $25 billion bill to fund the departments of Commerce, Justice and State.

With the proposed five-year plan to balance the budget in place, work on the 13 spending bills to finance the federal government in the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1 has gone smoother than in the past two years.

But problems do remain before the bills get through both chambers and to the president's desk in a form he will sign:

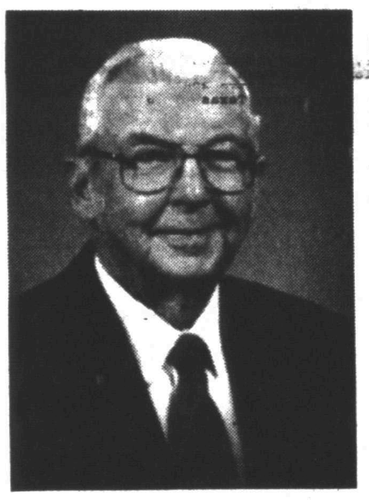

—On the defense bill, the White House has threatened to veto a House provision that cuts off funding for the U.S. peacekeeping mission in Bosnia after June of next year. The administration is also unhappy about the House decision to spend $331 million more than the Pentagon requested to buy nine more B-2 bombers.

—The labor-education-health bill avoids past confrontations by funding the president's request for the Job Corps, Head Start and a low-income energy program. It also increases funds for Pell Grants for lower income students, the National Institutes of Health and the Centers for Disease Control.

But it cuts the administration's request for the Goals 2000 education program by $145 million, to $475 million.

—The Commerce-Justice-State bill funds the president's cops-on-the-street program at $1.4 billion, provides $7.3 billion for the war on drugs and allows for the hiring of 1,000 new border control agents, double what the administration requested.

North Carolina hit with more flooding

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — A sudden storm spawned by remnants of Hurricane Danny dumped up to 10 inches of rain on south-central North Carolina, sending creeks surging out of their banks and forcing evacuation of dozens of homes.

Rescue workers used boats to rescue 22 people from flooded homes in a small residential area along Sugar Creek overnight, said Capt. Tim Rogers of the city's fire department.

"Everyone in these homes was in peril at one point. The water started to come up real fast, but fortunately we were ahead of the game."

The slow-moving Danny first hit land late Thursday in Louisiana and caused widespread flooding as it crossed into southern Mississippi and Alabama. Rainfall totals topped 30 inches in some areas — as much rainfall in a few days as the area normally gets in months.

Damage in Alabama's Mobile and Baldwin counties alone were expected to hit $60 million and $80 million, not counting crop losses.

As the storm slowly moved eastward, up to 6 inches of rain fell this morning in parts of northern Georgia, where flash flood warnings were posted.

Twelve residents were evacuated from an apartment building in Canton, northwest of Atlanta, and a roof collapsed at an envelope plant in Chamblee, north of Atlanta, but elsewhere most of the damage reported was minor.

The rain that inundated the Charlotte area was technically not part of Danny, but was caused by tropical moisture stirred up by Danny that came into contact with cooler air, forecasters said.

More than 4,500 homes and businesses in the Charlotte area had no electricity before daybreak. Nonessential city employees were told to stay home today, the city's year-round schools were closed for the day, and two schools were being used as shelters.

Ansley Stephens and her two roommates decided to leave their home before 5 a.m., although she said they did not feel they were in danger.

"When you live in a flood plain, you have to have a sense of humor," Ms. Stephens said.

There were no reports of injuries, but rescue teams were trying to free motorists from several vehicles reported flooded up to the windows.

Local Mormons to observe 150th anniversary of pioneers' arrival

On Thursday, The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints will celebrate the 150-year anniversary of the arrival of the first company of pioneers, led by Brigham Young, into the Salt Lake Valley in Utah.

Members in Snyder will join with other congregations in Goldsmith Park in Midland on Saturday for an afternoon of games, a county fair, dinner and a square dance. Everyone is invited to the festivities, which will be held from 1-8 p.m.

On Sunday, Snyder will have a celebration dinner at 11:30 a.m., and the movie "Legacy" will be shown to the community. The production shows the trials that pioneers went through on their journey west.

Everyone is invited to attend at the new Snyder branch location, 3414 Ave. T, next to McLeod's Jewelry.

In July of 1847, the first wave of Mormon pioneers entered the valley of the Great Salt Lake after a 1,300 mile journey from the Midwest. Over the next 22 years, another 60,000 to 70,000 followed. Elder Melvin R. Nielsen, Snyder branch president, shares this pioneer heritage.

Pathfinder crew looks to future

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — With the Mars Pathfinder rover continuing ahead to its next rock, scientists back on Earth were planning visits to other curiosities on the Red Planet.

Sojourner was to begin analyzing some dark soil near a rock named Lamb tonight, then head to small, angular rocks dubbed Souffle and Cradle. Its next stop is to be the so-called Rock Garden, which includes a number of rocks of interest to scientists.

The mission was back on track Tuesday after NASA solved the communications problems that have bedeviled the mission in recent days. Weather data and pictures were flowing well again as the mission headed into its 18th day on Mars, scientists said.

"The lander and rover are healthy," mission manager Richard Cook said.

Project scientist Matthew Golombek said the long-term plan for the days and weeks ahead will send Sojourner out to explore dozens more rock targets.

During the martian day that began Monday night and ended Tuesday morning, controllers retrieved a chemical analysis of the rock Scooby Doo, more of a 12-color panoramic view of the landscape and new images of the rover's tracks.

Henry Moore, a retired U.S. Geological Survey scientist working with NASA, described the kind of soil the rover's cleated wheels rolled through as "very, very fine ... kind of like a silt in Nebraska."

Not enough money spent on preventing teen pregnancies

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — States should offer more sex education classes and family planning services for teen-agers and target male as well as female teens, said a study on teen pregnancy in the South released Tuesday.

Southern states spend far less preventing teen pregnancy than they do supporting families started by teen-agers, said the report on adolescent pregnancy in the South by the Southern Regional Project on Infant Mortality in Washington, D.C.

Twenty southern states spent $13.6 billion in state and federal money to support families started by teen-agers but only $121.9 million on teen pregnancy prevention programs in the 1994-1995 fiscal year, said the report released at the Southern Legislative Conference.

The $13.6 billion included Aid to Families with Dependent Children, food stamps, Medicaid and Women, Infants and Children programs.

About 47 percent of the Aid to Families with Dependent Children caseload in the 1994-1995 fiscal year was made up of recipients who had their first child when they were teen-agers. About 7 percent of the caseload that year was made up of families headed by those then ages 15 to 19.

States spent an average $23.73 per state teen-ager on prevention programs. South Carolina spent the most, $62.38 per teen-ager, Mississippi the least, $11.89 cent per teen-ager and West Virginia $16.61 per teen-ager.

The average was $23.73. South Carolina spent $62.38, Mississippi $11.89 and West Virginia $16.61.

"We have a lot of room for improvement. Investing even more in pregnancy prevention is really our best hope," said Elizabeth Morgan, an aide to Gov. Cecil Underwood who attended the press conference where the report was released.

Age-appropriate family life and sex education classes can emphasize that abstinence is one way to prevent teen pregnancies and reduce sexually transmitted diseases, the report said. But contraceptive education and counseling are necessary to make sure sexually active teens are fully informed about reproductive and psychological health, the report said.

States should improve teen-agers' access to family planning services by lowering the cost of the services, improving transportation to them, locating them in areas frequented by teen-agers and addressing teen-agers confidentiality concerns.

Teen-agers also should be told they have a legal right to family planning services, the report recommends.

A Missouri senator said his state's efforts to prevent teen pregnancy have been opposed by the Catholic Church and "do-gooders" who oppose family planning.

"There's so much interference," said Sen. Jerry Howard, D-Dexter, chairman of the Missouri Senate's Aging, Children and Mental Health Committee.

In 1994-1995, Missouri spent $613.3 million on welfare programs for families in which mothers were teen-agers when they had their first child. The state invested about $4.9 million on prevention programs in the same year.

The report also recommended states establish grants for community programs to reduce early sexual activity and pregnancy and support school-based and school-linked health centers.

Girls who drop out of school are at higher risk of becoming pregnant, the report said. And most teen mothers report having been sexually abused before their first pregnancy.

Encouraging teen-agers to complete high school, offering job training and opportunities, expanding early childhood education, establishing child abuse and neglect prevention policies and media campaigns also can reduce teen-age pregnancy, the report said.

The teen-age birth rate in the United States and the South declined from 1991 to 1994, but the United States rate was still the highest among industrialized nations and the rate in the South was higher than the national rate, the report said.

The national rate declined from 62.1 births per 1,000 female teen-agers in 1991 to 58.9 in 1994, while the rate in the South declined from 72.5 in 1991 to 69 in 1994.

The report did not discuss reasons for the higher birth rate in the South, but author Tracy Kreutzer said previous research has shown it may be due to lack of access to health care in rural areas.

Information on the amount spent supporting families compared to the amount spent on pregnancy prevention programs is not available for other states, so it is not possible to say whether the South is spending less than the rest of the nation on prevention, Kreutzer said.

Sen. Diane Bajoie, D-New Orleans, said she agreed with the report that states the need to spend more on prevention.

The report covered Alabama, Arkansas, Delaware, Washington, D.C., Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Missouri, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Puerto Rico, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, the U.S. Virgin Islands, Virginia and West Virginia.
