Area Hot Despite Showers

By BOB CAMPBELL

Rain returned to portions of the South Plains late Tuesday and early today, despite earlier gloomy weather forecasts that indicated no immediate break in the devastating heat wave, and forecasters said there is a 20 percent chance for more scattered precipitation through Thursday.

Although late-afternoon storm clouds covered the sun in the Lubbock area, there was no slump in water consumption and the city approached its maximum possible daily usage of 80 million gallons.

The faucets will be open today, too. The forecast calls for temperatures near 100 today and Thursday, as the latest chain of 100-degree days grows longer.

It was 101 Saturday and Sunday and 103 Monday and Tuesday, and the afternoon cloudiness gave no relief to heat-bedeviled Lubbock.

Sam Wahl, city director of public works, said today that the 77.9 million gallons used Tuesday, a new record, was close to the maximum that can be supplied in a day.

"If this rate of usage continues for a very extended period of time, it may become necessary that we have some voluntary curtailment," Wahl said. "But there's bound to be a break in the weather before long.

"Right now, we're still able to meet the demand."

Earlier water usage records of 70.3 million gallons on Saturday and 73.6 million Monday didn't stand up long under the fierce heat.

Wall said the storage tank at 50th and Joliet emptied before dark Tuesday and that water pressure dropped in southwest Lubbock.

The city is allowed to take up to 42 million gallons a day from Lake Meredith near Amarillo. It pulled 26 million from its wells in the Lamb and Bailey County sandhills Tuesday and the rest from wells here and at Shallowater.

Meredith remains at a higher level than it was a year ago, thanks to rainwater collected in early June, he said.

Some of the wells drop off after a few days of maximum use, however. "It's almost a day-to-day situation how much we can pump. I have some reservations as to whether we could pump 80 million in a day," Wahl added.

New Lubbock wells being added to the system this week will increase capacity by about 3 million gallons, Wahl said.

Bill Wood of Lubbock Power & Light Co. said Tuesday that the utility might bill its customers for more than $2 million, a record, for July consumption of electricity.

Postal Talks Stalled As Deadline Nears

WASHINGTON (AP) — Negotiations on a new labor agreement covering postal workers remained stalled today on th eve of the contract deadline and one union source called the outlook "grim."

"Nothing has changed and, frankly, I don't see any prospect of it changing," said the union source, who declined to be identified.

With the deadline at midnight Thursday, the main hangup is over management's efforts to eliminate a no-layoff clause. The unions are determined to retain the clause that prevents firings.

Federal mediators met separately with union representatives today. "There is no point in the two sides getting together as long as they are angry at each other," another source said.

But he said intensive efforts are continuing to reach a settlement. "They wouldn't have met until 1:30 this morning and been back at 9 if it was hopeless," the source said.

Postmaster General William F. Bolger is warning each of 554,000 postal employees that they could be fired if they strike when their contract expires.

In letters delivered to postal workers across the country Tuesday, Bolger warned that striking employees would also be committing a felony and could forfeit paid health and life insurance coverage.

Bolger, who has so far kept out of the negotiations with four employee unions, said, "I want you to be personally aware of the grave consequences of strike participation."

Regarding its efforts to remove the no-layoff clause, postal management says the it needs the right to improve worker productivity and shrink its work force faster than could be done through attrition.

But the unions say that without job security, thousands of people would be laid off. One union official, asking not to be named, said management had indicated it plans to eliminate more than 100,000 jobs by the early 1980s.

So bitter is the no-layoff issue, one source close to the negotiations said, that it may "blow this thing sky high.

"It might be the issue that one side will strike over and the other might take a strike over," said the source, who asked not to be identified.

President Emmett Andrews of the American Postal Workers Union said management refuses to budge on the no-layoff provision, creating a "stone wall" for the union negotiators.

Andrews notified the union's board members that the Postal Service "refuses to negotiate any of the remaining priority items unless the unions are willing to consider giving up the no-layoff clause."

In a separate message to his union's 299,000 members, Andrews charged the Postal Service strategy is "to keep the negotiations at a boil right up until the deadline."

But he added that the unions had told management "there would be no contract which did not contain" the no-layoff clause.

Postal Service spokesmen had no comment on the negotiations.

Both sides met separately with federal mediators Tuesday. The mediators, who asked for the separate sessions, commu-

Briscoe Asks Countywide Appraisals

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Dolph Briscoe broadened the scope of the special legislative session today by asking for property tax revision that would include countywide single appraisal of property for taxes.

The Senate, meanwhile, voted 24-5 today to place a provision in the state constitution giving Texas farmers, ranchers and timber owners a tax break.

The measure would allow open land to be valued at what it produces rather than speculative real estate prices. The bill, which now goes to the House, would be on the November ballot.

A proposed amendment to exclude large corporations from the tax benefits failed, 14-15.

Briscoe's enlargement of the special session call gave a green light to consideration of a property tax revision bill by Rep. Wayne Peveto, D-Orange, scheduled Thursday afternoon before a House committee.

Briscoe, who must say what subjects the special session considers, also opened the call to a proposed constitution amendment that would allow agriculture producers to form associations and make assessments on the sale of those products.

The Briscoe proclamation today on a proposed state constitution change concerning property tax administration included the requirement that such changes must call for "periodic uniform reappraisal of all taxable property, imposing a limitation on increases on local property taxes and taxpayer remedies."

The broadening of the session duties came as Briscoe and Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby appear to be digging in their heels for a political tug-of-war over tax cuts.

Hobby apparently has the Senate on his side, with Briscoe's support coming from Speaker Bill Clayton and some House members.

Hobby had predicted a "pretty good little fight" today over Senate proposals to give farmers, ranchers and timber owners a tax break by basing their property taxes on what their land can produce rather than on speculative real estate value.

The fight was over whether to exclude large corporations from the tax benefits.

Hobby noted, however, that the proposals do not include a provision requested by Briscoe to reimburse school districts for any tax money they might lose as a result of the change.

He also criticized the governor's proposal to reimburse school districts for money they would lose if the Legislature approves a measure granting a homestead exemption against school taxes of $10,000 — plus $10,000 more for persons over 65.

"That would be spending another $1 billion of state money," Hobby said of the reimbursement proposals, "and I wouldn't think that would be very popular" with Texans.

"I certainly haven't seen any hue and cry for more state spending," he added at an impromptu news conference Tuesday.

City Studies Request By Protesters

The Iranian Student Association continued to haggle with city officials today over the route of a march protesting the flight training of Crown Prince Reza Pahlavi of Iran at Reese Air Force Base.

The students obtained a permit to march Thursday from 10 a.m. until 6 p.m., with the demonstration beginning at the Civic Center fountain and ending at Broadway and University Avenue.

The association representatives had requested a permit to allow a march from the Civic Center to Slide Road, down 21st Street past a house bought for the crown prince and terminating with a rally on the Texas Tech University campus.

The students' plan calls for marchers to be accompanied by a truck containing two people holding toy machine guns. "The two men with the machine guns show the fascist nature of the regime of the shah," their request said.

However, association representatives today made a request for a different route and a different day for the march.

They asked the city for a permit for a march beginning at 10 a.m. Friday. The march would start at Higinbotham Park at 19th Street and Slide Road, proceed down 21st Street in front of the prince's house, then follow 19th Street to Boston Avenue, proceed through the Texas Tech campus on Boston to Broadway, circle a downtown block then return to the Tech campus by way of 19th Street.

City officials have not responded to the new request, but they have stated repeatedly no permit will be issued for a march

Suicide Rate For Youths Up Sharply

NEW YORK (AP) — At an age when they are supposed to have everything to live for, almost 5,000 teen-agers and young adults each year — about 13 a day — are so deep in despair that they commit suicide.

That's about twice as many as 10 years ago and three times as many as 20 years ago. Suicide is the No. 2 cause of death among young people — accidents are No. 1. There are more suicides in the 15-24 age group than in any other population group.

The phenomenal increase in suicides and attempts — only hinted at by the statistics — is frequently blamed on breakdown of the family. Other factors cited are parents' confusion over their roles, drugs and alcohol, economic insecurity, changing values, stress and alienation, and the population bulge in the 15-24 age group.

Whatever the reasons, says Dr. Calvin Frederick of the National Institute of Mental Health, they add up to a state of mind that is "hapless, helpless and hopeless. They don't believe in the future."

The victims range from the seemingly happy-go-lucky persons who give no clear clues, to the classic loners who scream silently for help:

— Last June 11 in Weymouth, Mass., an apparently well-adjusted 17-year-old shot himself at a graduation ceremony, saying, "There are too many issues in America. It's the American way." He survived.

— Last year in Glendale, Calif., a 13-year-old girl fatally shot herself on the day of comedian Freddie Prinze's funeral. She said in a note that his death and the deaths of a friend, a dog and a cat made it impossible for her to go on living.

They are but two of the statistics: Government figures for 1968 to 1976 show that the number of

Retired Phone Official Claimed Probe Target

DALLAS (AP) — The U.S. attorney's office here is investigating an alleged criminal fraud against Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. by one of its own executives who has since retired, the Dallas Morning News reported in a copyright story today.

The newspaper quoted a Texas Public Utility Commission source as saying the case could be a major scandal, with repercussions for the entire Southwestern Bell system.

The investigation reportedly concerns contracts, secured for the company through kickbacks and other illegal schemes, and involves a former Southwestern Bell vice president.

"My understanding is the guy worked at the corporate headquarters in St. Louis," a PUC official told the Morning News. "There's also the indication there's more money involved than it would appear one person can contract for. And if he's a vice president of Southwestern Bell, the contracts could involve the whole system."

John Dee Lawrence, Southwestern Bell general attorney, would not confirm or deny the person under investigation is a former company executive.

"I assume rumors are running rampant," Lawrence said. "I'm not going to feed any of them. We're trying to protect the rights of the individual involved, who is supposed to be innocent until proven guilty. I think that's still the law anyway."

Because the transactions involve expenses used by the company in its efforts to win a $214.3 million rate increase in Texas, Southwestern Bell last week asked the PUC to postpone action on the proposal.

Bell officials, according to the story, say they plan to give the PUC information within the next three days that would allow the PUC to reschedule its rate request. The new statement to the PUC reportedly will include a figure for the money involved in the probe and a general account of the situation. However, Bell reportedly will not identify the person under investigation.

In asking for the delay, Bell acknowledged that allegations of fraud could involve expenses claimed by the company during the test year for its rate case — Oct. 1, 1976 through Sept. 30, 1977.

Southwestern Bell said when it asked for the delay that the expenses in question, which could not be properly included in the company's rate base, are "minor when compared to total expenses."

"When your're talking about a company with a rate base of $3 billion, if you take a million dollars its overall effect is minimal. But you tell a million dollars to the public, and it sounds quite different. The most important thing is that the public be assured, and that's what we're waiting to hear from the Justice Department on," the PUC source said.

The Morning News said Southwestern Bell, which filed its rate request March 9, is checking its own records while the Justice Department continues its criminal investigation.

The deadline for the PUC's action on Bell's rate request was last Friday, but the company asked for a delay two days before then when it became clear the hearing could reveal that improper expenses had been included in its calculations.

Capote's Appearance Cut Short

NEW YORK (AP) — An appearance by writer Truman Capote on a local television talk show was cut short by host Stanley Siegel after Capote rambled on incoherently about his drinking and drug problems.

CAPOTE

Capote told Siegel Tuesday his problem was not drinking but "taking different kinds of drugs" and mixing them with alcohol.

"I put them together like some sort of cocktail," Capote said.

He blamed his problems on "anxiety, a free-floating anxiety, meaning, you know, it doesn't really leave, but it's always there, and you don't know what it is exactly."

Siegel said afterwards that he kept Capote on the air for about 30 minutes of a scheduled one-hour interview because "the function of television is to put as much reality on television as possible, and I thought that that interview was heartbreaking in many ways, and incredible."

James Brown Jailed

BALTIMORE (AP) — Soul singer James Brown, involved in a dispute over the payment of $170,000 for a Baltimore radio station, spent a second night in the city jail.

U.S. District Judge C. Stanley Blair, who ordered Brown's arrest Monday in New York on a contempt of court citation, said the singer could be set free on $100,000 bond, paid in full in cash.

Brown's attorney, Ellis J. Parker, said Tuesday he was prepared to put up the cash, but Brown refused to allow him to use his own money.

Parker said he would attempt to secure a corporate bond today.

Brown is said to owe the former owners of WEBB $170,000, which Parker said his client cannot afford to pay. The former owners are attempting to have the radio station placed in receivership under the bankruptcy laws.

Brown has been given until Thursday to produce financial documents which will prove he cannot pay off the debt, Parker said.

Landon Campaigns For Daughter

TOPEKA, Kan. (AP) — Alf M. Landon, former Kansas governor and the 1936 Republican presidential candidate, made what he said was his first personal appearance on behalf of a candidate in two decades by appearing at a rally for his daughter, who is campaigning for a U.S. Senate nomination.

The 90-year-old Landon said Tuesday it was a proud and special moment for him to appear with his daughter, Nancy Landon Kassebaum of Wichita, one of nine people seeking the GOP nomination to the Senate and a chance to replace retiring U.S. Sen. James B. Pearson.

"This is really something of an exciting moment to speak in behalf of my daughter," said Landon. "But I want you to know, and I want her to know, this is not my last hurrah by a long shot."

Early Citizenship Denied

WASHINGTON (AP) — Tennis star Martina Navratilova may have won the women's championship at Wimbledon this year but her victory was not enough to convince the House of Representatives to waive the legal waiting period for her to gain U.S. citizenship.

MISS NAVRATILOVA

Miss Navratilova, who defected from Czechoslovakia in 1974, was granted permanent resident status in 1975, making her eligible for citizenship in 1980.

Rep. James M. Collins, R-Texas, who represents the Dallas district where Miss Navratilova lives, had filed a bill to waive two years of the five-year waiting period for citizenship so that she would be eligible to represent the United States in international competition this year.

But the House did not concur and sent the bill back to the Judiciary Committee Tuesday, an action that effectively killed the proposal.

It Takes Two To Tango

AUSTIN (AP) — University of Texas officials told Washington bureaucrats a vital element was missing in efforts to establish a chimpanzee breeding laboratory at nearby Smithville.

The Lighter Side Of Today's News

"We were extremely proud of the fact that the park had been designated as the HEW resource center for chimpanzee breeding for the entire Southwest," Robert Hardesty, a UT system vice president, said in a letter to Joseph Califano, secretary of health, education and welfare.

"The only problem is that when HEW sent in the first contingent of 15 chimps, every one of them was a male."

Hardesty said Tuesday that Califano has not replied yet.

Scrap Sculpture To Be Dedicated

WASHINGTON (AP) — A 35-ton sculpture fabricated from scrap from a ship's bow, a locomotive cab and a submarine buoy is being dedicated at the Hirshhorn Museum and Sculpture Garden.

Secretary of the Interior Cecil D. Andrus, representing President Carter, arranged today to accept the gift to the nation from the Institute of Scrap Iron and Steel, Inc.

Also on the program were Secretary S. Dillon Ripley of the Smithsonian Institution, parent of the Hirshhorn; Sen. Daniel P. Moynihan, D-N.Y., chairman of the museum's trustees; Noah Liff, president of the scrap institute; and the sculptor, Mark di Suvero.

The main elements of the work have been mounted on a tripod of steel beams.

U.S., Canada Sign Treaty For Inmates

OTTAWA (AP) — Hundreds of Americans in Canadian jails will be affected by a prisoner exchange treaty being signed today, but many may stay because of better chances for parole.

The treaty covers 230 Americans in Canadian federal prisons, uncounted numbers in provincial and state institutions and 80 Canadians in U.S. federal prisons.

U.S. officials say about 25 percent of the Americans jailed in Canada are in for drug smuggling and may choose to stay here because their chances of parole are better north of the border.

Parole for drug offenders in the United States is tied to the amount and value of the drug seized. In Canada, it is tied to the individual's record and circumstances of the case.

However, Canada has instituted a mandatory minimum sentence of 25 years for convicted killers so the United States may be more attractive to them.

"Over half the people up here are in for crimes of violence," a U.S. official said. "There are a lot with long records.

"They know that prison conditions here aren't really that different than in the United States They are looking at the parole possibilities, what's in it for them."

To be eligible for transfer home, a prisoner must have at least six months left to serve, must apply for transfer and not be coerced into leaving. The receiving country, province and state must then agree to accept the prisoner.

If there are no hitches, 35 to 50 Americans will be flown late this summer from Kingston, Ontario, to Chicago to be moved to prisons near their homes across the United States.

At the same time, about 30 Canadians will be flown to Kingston for transfer to jails across Canada.

The United States concluded a similar treaty with Mexico last year. About 300 Americans have been flown to U.S. jails while some 80 Mexicans have been sent to prisons in their country.

Single Women Cause Rise In Condominium Sales

By LIDIA WASOWICZ

MENLO PARK, Calif. (UPI) — The condominium industry can thank singles, particularly single women, for its booming success.

Nationally, the incidence of purchasing by "non-traditional" buyers is reported as very high.

"Single people are buying as many as 20 percent of single family homes in some subdivisions, and in condominiums, you get three times that number," says Michael Sumichrast, director of economics and statistics for the National Association of Home Builders in Washington D.C.

L.B. Nelson Corp., a builder and developer constructing 3,000 condominiums along the Pacific Coast, has found 80 percent of the buyers in the first phase of the project in Seattle are singles, with 50 percent of them single women.

"Accordingly, we are redirecting our marketing approach," says company president Les B. Nelson. "From now on, we'll be aiming our low-price fourplex homes at singles in all of our markets and specifically at the single woman."

In another condominium development in Northern California, more than 50 percent of the buyers to date are single, says Ray Resler, owner of Promex Corp., a condominium management company. And there are very few instances of two or more single people pooling together to buy one unit, he says.

Why have singles taken to condominiums in such proportions?

While average new-house prices on the West Coast approach $100,000, condominiums are selling for about half that amount.

In the Seattle development, the average unit price was $36,000.

"That means people making $16,000 to $18,000 a year could easily qualify," says Robert Be Van, president of the Northwest subsidiarx of L.B. Nelson in Seattle.

And condominium owners have the added advantages of no outside maintenance responsibilities, security stemming from community living and proximity to transportation and city centers, "factors just as important to the young swinging single as to the elderly widow," Sumichrast says.

The owners themselves agree.

"I bought my condominium because it's a really good investment: there is no hassle with maintenance: there is a sense of community about living here," says Phyllis Betlem, an insurance underwriter.

"In a house, you're cut off, unless you are a couple. It's very hard these days for single people to find a sense of community. Everyone is so transient," she says.

"Yet, if you do have to move, a condominium is so much easier to dispose of than a house."

As to why more purchasers are single women than men, Miss Betlem says, "I think condominiums are too confining for men. They have no garage to tinker around in with their cars."

But Frank Cercone, 31, a single orthodontist, says condominium living "is ideal for me."

"Right after I got out of school, I had very little money, but I wanted to get into the housing market as soon as I could. I didn't need a big place, and I didn't need the worry of having to cut the grass on the weekends, so this was perfect."

Bill Carlile, 31, a bank vice president, says he too enjoys the convenience of condominium living.

"I don't want to have to spend a lot of time taking care of a place or maintaining a garden. It would be different if I were married. For two people it can be fun to fix a place up, but for one person, it's a drag."

For these and other reasons, the demand for condominiums has been rapidly rising.

"Seven or eight years ago, who even heard of a condominium," says Sumichrast. Yet, last year construction was started on 149,000 attached housing units nationwide, and this year there will be more than 160,000 starts.

"Compare this 6.5 percent increase in condominium construction to the 10 percent decrease in housing production, and that should tell you something," he says, adding the heaviest demand is in the West — home of 32 percent of the nation's condominiums.

The rate of turning apartments into condominium units has been so great, some cities have ordered moratoriums on such conversions, says Sumichrast.

Then, there is the problem of speculators.

"Last year was just terrible, especially in California where the speculative fever reached extreme proportions," says Sumichrast. But the problem seems to have leveled off.

"The speculator market was very heated from mid-1976 to mid-1977," says Resler. "During that time about 30 percent of the occupants were renters, but there were so many speculators either selling right away or first renting for awhile, then reaping windfalls, developers started placing restrictions on the number of owner-occupied units," says Clark Wells, vice president of marketing at L.B. Nelson Corp.

And the condominium owners themselves started voting for restrictions on renting and fast selling, he says.

"The turnover in condominium owners has now leveled off to a normal 10 percent from the 30 to 40 percent of a year ago," says Wells.

The problem of banks' distrust of condominiums has also been diminished.

None of the condominium owners surveyed by UPI had trouble obtaining loans. And lending institutions admit their attitude about condominiums has changed considerably.

Court Acts Rapped By Attorney

FORT WORTH (AP) — A reknowned Dallas attorney says lawyers and newsmen should join forces to combat an unlikely adversary: the U.S. Supreme Court.

His target, contends Emmett Colvin, is "law without reason."

Specifically, Colvin, president of the Texas Criminal Defense Lawyers Association, is disturbed over the high tribunal's "assault upon the Fourth and Fifth Amendments."

In one of the most provocative statements emerging from the recently concluded State Bar of Texas convention, Colvin criticized both the court and the press regarding the controversial Zurcher ruling.

He said "human freedom" is at stake in that case, citing the Fourth Amendment protection against search and seizure and the Fifth Amendment safeguard against self-incrimination.

The only expressed concern of the media was a selfish one dealing with the invasion of the newspaper office under a search warrant, Colvin asserted.

"The impact goes well beyond that," he argued. "Now law enforcement can execute an affidavit for a search warrant using an undisclosed informant (often ficticious) find a friendly justice of the peace, get a warrant, execute it on a lawyer's office, and rummage through every file he has, despite the wholesome attorney-client privilege.

"It takes little imagination to realize that this could extend to doctors, psychiatrists, accountants, and in fact, any representative or individual.

"Under Zurcher ... the representative, be he a lawyer or someone else, need not reasonably be suspected of any crime himself."

Colvin said the high court brushed this aside by saying the "hazards of such warrants can be avoided by a neutral magistrate carrying out his responsibilities ...."

This, the attorney contended, "is unmitigated hogwash."

He said police officers know that when they don't have good grounds for a search they must avoid the neutral magistrate and find one who will sign any search warrant presented, even a blank one that could be filled in later.

"Actually, the press has little to fear from this decision," he said. "For law enforcement is also political in nature, and those in power will not normally break down the door of many newspaper offices with a search warrant and still stay in power.

"The press has a political defense which is not available to the patient of a psychiatrist or the client of a lawyer. These persons are denied the effective assertion of any privilege, where normally applicable."

Calling the Zurcher decision a "weapon for political oppression," Colvin said the full impact is yet to be felt.

"How is the citizen to feel when he realizes that his private papers in his lawyer's office may be perused by a police officer under a search warrant even though he and his lawyer may be completely innocent of a crime and in fact, not even suspected of a crime?" Colvin said.

"It is high time the media face their responsibility to the public and vigorously attack the real impact of this horrible decision.

"We know as a historical fact that government agents will break into the office of a psychiatrist illegally to obtain and peruse private files. With this decision, the stamp of illegality has been removed.

"I fear the press has become so calloused, so sophisticated and so aloof to the rights of others that it can only be shocked when its own office door is opened. Even then, it would appear the shock extends only to that particular door."

Colvin said the Fourth and Fifth amendments are based not only on history and reason but were "filtered through the blood of our forefathers and the courage of the press."

He told the lawyers it is not their proper posture to stand aside and allow those freedoms to be destroyed.

"Yet we cannot, I fear, succeed by reason alone before a court devoid of a sense of history and reason," he said.

Passman's Ex-Aide Appeals Lawsuit

WASHINGTON (AP) — A woman who was fired by former Rep. Otto E. Passman, D-La., is asking the Supreme Court to review her sex discrimination complaint.

Shirley Davis, Passman's deputy administrative assistant for six months in 1974, told the court Monday that her case would affect "the constitutional rights of thousands of congressional employees."

She said that Passman praised her as "a hard worker" but said a man was needed because of the heavy workload.

Dove Or Hawk Talk?

A NEW CHAPTER in the Mideast Peace Book is about to be written.

Whether it will make any better reading to those seeking a permanent peace pact and a happy ending is somewhat doubtful at best.

In an effort to get things off dead center between Israel and Egypt, British and American officials have been meeting with leaders of the two nations near London.

Probably the best that can be hoped for is to get the two sides back in serious consultations.

IRONICALLY, THE so-called London Conference was almost overshadowed by one of the very problems which has hamstrung some negotiations in the past—terrorism.

The talks, which were to have been held in a nine-story luxury hotel in the center of London, were moved to historic Leeds Castle some 45 miles southeast of the British capital, in an effort to thwart international terrorists, including presumably the PLO.

The castle can be reached only by a drawbridge or with helicopters.

As for the talks themselves, they were at the highest level. Sec. of State Cyrus R. Vance, for the U.S.; Moshe Dayan, foreign minister of Israel; and Mohammed Ibrahim Kamel, who holds the same position in Egypt, were the chief negotiators.

The major problem, as it has been all along, is what to do about the occupied lands which Israel took primarily in the lightning 1967 war and added to in 1973.

This includes the volatile West Bank, once occupied by Jordan, the Golan Heights once held by Syria and the Sinai, once ruled and used as the staging ground for attacks on Israel by Egypt.

IN THE LATEST round of talks, it is reported that Sec. Vance is seeking a "guarantee" from Egypt against any new attacks on Israel.

The question is whether Egypt alone can make such a guarantee. Syria and the other Arab nations, as well as the PLO, must be a party to such a pact.

Also demands for return of any part of Jerusalem likely would not be approved by the Israelis.

The best to be hoped for perhaps is to move the parties back to the bargaining table. That would be progress.

The Egg And Thou

Yep. Just like ham and eggs. We're the hams who have sacrificed our all while the Guv'ment bureaucracy has laid the egg.

WE WERE HAVING dinner at Hogate's when Bob Nash noticed that the buildings across the Potomac had suddenly disappeared.

"Looks like a sandstorm moving in," said KFYO's master mouthpiece.

"Naw," Lubbock Chamber of Commerce Manager John Logan corrected. "That's rain. We sure need it back home."

We finished our meal, talking casually about the downpour outside and the wind that was whipping up waves on the river and lashing a small tree nearby.

Later, we learned that winds had gusted to 80 miles per hour, breaking tree limbs all over the city. Lightning had struck some trees and caused power blackouts over much of the city.

"It was the worst storm I've seen in my 19 years in Washington," a National Weather Service forecaster told newspapers.

He added: "For the first time in my life, I saw a greenish black cloud. High winds were accompanied by rains so heavy that visibility was near zero...It grew almost as dark as night."

It just goes to show that what's a casual dinner conversation in Lubbock is a major storm in Washington.

JERRY ROGERS, the ex-Lubbockite now making a name for himself in National Park Service circles in Washington, is a different sort from one man who once worked there.

Seems an Interior Department archaeologist saw a news story quoting President Carter as saying he used to pick up Indian arrowheads off his farm in Georgia.

Being a dedicated sort, the archaeologist wrote the President. As a private citizen. Told him it was a no-no to pick up arrows unscientifically.

The letter was opened in due course at the White House. Someone there connected arrowheads with the Interior Department. Sent the letter there with orders it be answered.

An Interior Department bureaucrat put arrowheads and archaeology together and forwarded the letter to the National Park Service for an appropriate reply.

At the NPS, someone looked down a list of departments, came right quick to archaeology, sent the letter there.

It wound up on the desk of the guy who had written it, with orders that he draft a reply within five days and send it back up through channels for mailing to the complainant, which was him.

This prompted the poor fellow to write another letter to the President. Telling him how to handle his mail.

When last heard from, the letter writer was "doing an outstanding job for us" on Saipan.

IN WASHINGTON the other day, a middle-level bureaucrat dropped dead after completing a three-mile run during his lunch hour.

The Washington Star story about the incident had some interesting points:

(1) The Health, Education and Welfare Department employe had recently "taken a free physical exam offered to HEW employes."

(2) He was one of 120 joggers taking part in a run "to protest sex discrimination."

(3) The protest was aimed at HEW, his employer, for alleged delays in enforcing Title 9, which forbids sex discrimination in schools, and he "was one of a number of HEW officials who joined the run" to accuse themselves of not doing their jobs.

Brooke Smears Pride Of Blood

WASHINGTON—Nobody here ever thinks of Sen. Ed Brooke as a black, but he is, and he has demeaned his race just as Spiro Agnew demeaned the Greeks and made them sorry for what he was.

This is a side of racism we seldom hear of and we ought to hear more because it relates to something that the minority elements in the great American melting pot need more of—I mean, pride of blood.

I have a pride in being a member of the Society of the Lees of Virginia and the Society of the Cincinnait, and I claim friendship with some Lodges of Massachusetts. The point is, I think I may be a little better behaved because of such connections.

I WOULDN'T WANT Lee kinsmen and descendants of General Washington's office corps to be shamed by my cut-ups. I know outsiders would visit my disgrace upon the whole clan and membership.

It is that way with Brooke, the only Negro in the Senate, as courtly a gentleman as you will ever meet, but an admitted liar about his public financing and in a lot of trouble with the Internal Revenue people, the Senate ethics committee and quite likely at the end of a political career which might have taken him to a place on the Republican national ticket.

THOUGH I HAVE only a nodding and handshake acquaintance with Brooke, I held him high, and for that reason held blacks in some automatic esteem because of him.

Brooke had a double responsibility to keep his head and his principles high, for himself and for his co-racials all the way from city hall, just off the Avenue, up the 14th street corridor of burnt-out black businesses to the ghettos of one-parent families, by which the race is known in Washington.

You always like to think some good can flow from evil that is exposed and punished, and maybe it's true.

Some black boy in the ghetto will remember that Ed Brooke went to high school here, lived clean, went North and made good as a Republican attorney genreal in Democratic Massachusetts, having an honored name until corrupted by too much money, too much power and prestige.

Maybe it will cause the gheto boy to go home and study instead of roaming the streets with a switchblade. Brooke's case may make him think of consequences to himself and his race before he gets his name on the police blotter.

For every immigrant race that comes here, including the Kennedys who ended up rich and mighty, there is that double responsibility, of a personal good name to keep and that of the bloodline as well.

When trouble takes place, it is natural enough for the vested interested to blame it on the changing micks, the dagos, the niggers and the kikes. This attitude is changing but it took many years for that to happen.

Today we have a special cause to hope for racial pride to make better Americans of the newer Americans. Not less than 12 million immigrants are here illegally, and with wars on every continent there are going to be many more refugees.

I hardly know whether the good examples of Jackie Robinson and Luis Tiant are better object lessons than the bad examples of Ed Brooke and Spiro Agnew.

All I'm sure of is that the minority peoples have no better inspiration than to cultivate a pride of race like the Lees and Lodges who got here first.

Don't Be Misdirected By Funeral Directors

(First in a series)

BEFORE THIS SUMMER of '78 ends, it is a virtual certainty that the owners of the nation's more than 20,000 funeral homes will be slapped with the toughest regulations ever imposed on their industry—rules directly aimed at outlawing the unscrupulous practices of the unethical fringe which cashes in on grief.

Despite the furious denials of the National Funeral Directors Association (it spent at least $600,000 in a vain effort to stop the FTC from issuing its sharply critical report) the existence of outrageous abuses in this industry simply cannot be denied.

Sure, the majority of funeral directors in the U.S. are, as the FTC says, courteous, ethical and effective.

BUT HOW CAN the funeral directors association defend those in its $6.4 billion industry who force the confused survivors to buy expensive caskets, even for cremation?

Or who proceed with a costly embalming process without permission? Or who refuse to provide vital information on prices and other relevant subjects to the bereaved survivors? Or who, in the FTC's own words, "have harassed and intimidated low-priced sellers...who aggressively compete or attempt to offer new services"?

But no matter what the outcome of the FTC's five-years-in-the-making 526-page report, you will remain an easy target for the unethical minority unless you yourself know the basic guides to protect yourself at a time of deep emotional turmoil.

ALL HUMAN CULTURES and some animal cultures as well have death ceremonies of one kind or another—and funeral directors correctly emphasize that these ceremonies do help meet the social and emotional needs of the survivors.

But the amount of money you spend on the death ceremonies bears little relationship to the effectiveness of those ceremonies in meeting your human needs.

A thoughtful memorial service, held in a church, private home or other meeting place at little or no expense to you, can actually be more helpful than a costly funeral service.

There are two basic forms of death ceremony:

(1) A FUNERAL service which is, by definition, a service held in the presence of the body. Before you order a funeral service, you must be sure you are fully aware of exactly what services will be included and what each will cost.

Do not simply accept a "package deal"! Insist on a written rundown on all costs and charges —no matter what the laws or regulations do or do not allow.

(2) A memorial service which is, also by definition, a service held after the body has been removed. Attention is focused on the life of the person rather than the dead body—and the service offers greater flexibility in choice of location, timing and programming.

The use of a memorial service often can slash the expenses of a death to a fraction of what would otherwise be involved. If well handled, it can in most cases serve the human needs just a well as or better than a funeral service.

You have many optional procedures for handling this defiantly difficult situation. Here are your options in ascending order of cost, as prepared for me by Ernest Morgan, author of "A Manual of Death Education and Simple Burial" ($2 postpaid, Celo Press, Burnsville, N.C. 28714).

* BEQUEATHAL TO medical school. Immediate removal of body with memorial services to be held later if desired. Usually no cost at all involved.

* Cremation. Immediate removal of body followed by memorial service if desired. Small cost, if properly planned.

* Bequeathal to medical school after a funeral service. Ususlly more expensive, depending on type of service.

* Burial. Immediate removal of body followed by memorial service if desired. May be either less or more expensive than above.

* Cremation, after a funeral service. Comparable to the above two methods.

* Burial after a funeral service. Most expensive of all.

James J. Kilpatrick:

The Adverb Is 'Faithfully'

WASHINGTON—It might seem, at first glance, that the argument over the legislative veto would be of academic interest only to scholars in the field of government.

In point of fact, the argument touches the everyday lives of all of use and it raises some deeply troubling concerns about whither our free country is drifting.

In pure theory, there could not be—or at least there should not be—any such thing as a legislative veto.

In the normal sequence of events, Congress passes a bill, subject to executive veto, and if the bill becomes law it is up to the executive branch to administer the act thereafter.

The ancient doctrine of separation of powers says that the legislative branch should not intrude on the executive prerogative; neither should the executive branch usurp the role of Congress.

THAT IS THE theory of the thing. But in recent years Congress has acted in self-defense against what it perceives as a continuing abuse of power by the executive.

The White House last month released a background statement saying that the legislative veto has been used "at least 48 times in the past four years—six times since President Carter took office."

The statement came in conjunction with Carter's stiff message to the Congress, warning that he may disregard such "unconstitutional" vetoes in the future.

The President's view—and he is plainly right in this matter—is that the legislative veto infringes upon the executive's constitutional duty "faithfully to execute the laws."

There is no question about it. But the operative adverb in that proposition is "faithfully." What is the Congress to do when it believes an executive agency has not acted in good fiath, but has acted in bad faith instead?

THE QUESTION HAS no satisfactory answer. It is said, in such an event, that Congress can rewrite a given law in order to correct what it perceives as a wrongful bureaucratic interpretation. Or Congress can wield its power of the purse.

But in practice, these remedies provide too little, too late. The bureaucracy has had its way, and the Congress can only fret and fume at executive actions that cannont be undone.

A long history of executive abuse led to the device of the legislative veto. Under this clumsy procedure, bureaucratic regulations are promulgated, but the become effective only if Congress fails to disapprove them in 60 or 90 days.

THE ARMS EXPORT Control Act, to cite an example, gives Congress 60 days in which to veto any such deal a president makes.

The device is indeed clumsy; it is most probably unconstitutional, just as Carter insists; but in the present state of hostility between the people and their federal government, it is an indispensable weapon. Congress cannot give it up.

This is because our government, in many aspects, is out of control. It no longer can be restrained through the normal system of executive restraints.

The Department of Health, Education and Welfare is so vast, it has so many billions of dollars to spend in so many discretionary ways, that no secretary—not even the indefatigable Joe Califano—can keep up with the myriad decisions made in his name.

THE INDEPENDENT agencies of government function in the fashion of autonomous principalities. The Food and Drug Administration maintains diplomatic relations with the United States, for which we may be properly grateful, and now and then Commissioner Donald Kennedy makes ambassadorial visits to the Hill.

The Federal Trade Commission, the various civil rights agencies, the health and safety agencies, the consumer agencies, all operate as feudal baronies.

Carter cannot effectively touch them. Nobody can effectively touch them.

But this frail posibility may succeed: If Congress learns of an especially idiotic or oppressive regulation in time to impose a legislative veto, perhaps that particular encroachment upon the liberties of the people can be stopped.

Such vetoes are bad in theory; in the real world of unrestrained bureaucratic power, they are about all the people have left.

Law Group Leader Favors Residencies

BOSTON (AP) — Trial lawyers should be required to gain experience through residencies similar to those required of medical specialists, says the president of the American Board of Professional Liability Attorneys.

Lawrence Charfoos of Detroit said going to trial with an inexperienced lawyer is like a man going into heart surgery and finding the doctor is six months out of medical school and performing his first operation.

"To try a major litigation is just as complicated as open heart surgery, or more so," Charfoos said in an interview.

"A trial lawyer's work is tremendously demanding," he said, and added that the surgeon usually has medical assistants.

A lawyer cannot interrupt a trial judge and ask for "time-out" to do more research, call in help or ponder his next move,he said.

"The clients can be thrust to the winds in 30 seconds," Charfoos said. "The failure to stand (to object) could theoretically change the momentum of the case."

Such a failure likely would leave the client with no grounds to appeal, he added, because those failures rarely show in court records.

"Residency, like in medicine, should be required for any lawyer who wants to do something other than general practice, but especially for trial lawyers," he said.

Charfoos is certain this will come eventually. "Trial courts have the clout to make it happen," he said, adding that federal courts in New York require lawyers to have experience before trying cases in them.

"I think the public will demand it," and sentiment for it is growing, he said.

Opinions on the length of residency needed vary from six months to five years after completing three years of law school.

Residency programs could be established through the trial court system, law schools and law offices specializing in trial work, he said.

Basically, the law school graduate could work for a law firm, drawing a salary as resident doctors do from hospitals, and start out auditing trials with a trial lawyer from the firm.

Gradually the neophyte would be given more to do — examining and cross examining witnesses — until he is ready to handle a case from beginning to end on his own.

Charfoos ties the residency program in with establishing boards to certify lawyers in specialities, something the American Board of Professional Liability Attorneys was set up to do.

Salmon Fishing Makes Return To Maine City

BANGOR, Maine (AP) — There's a new attraction in downtown Bangor these days — salmon.

More than three decades after municipal and industrial pollution drove the prized game fish from local waters, sales clerks, secretaries, lawyers, bankers and children are lining the banks of the Kenduskeag Stream to fish for Atlantic salmon.

Local salmon specialists claim Bangor is the only place in North America where Atlantic salmon can be caught inside a city's limits. The Kenduskeag runs through Maine's third largest city on its way to union with the Penobscot River, which flows to the Atlantic 20 miles away.

Both the Penobscot and the Kenduskeag had been little more than open sewers since the 1940s, but last week the salmon run provided the most vivid evidence yet that recent aggressive clean-up programs have begun to work.

Children with blue jeans rolled up to the knees, holding dime store fishing rods in their fists, stood next to fly rod artists in business suits. Hundreds of spectators watched from above, some offering wise-cracking advice to their friends.

Old-timers recalled the days when Bangor was world famous for its salmon fishing and the first salmon taken from the Penobscot each year used to be sent to the president of the United States.

Colorado Woman Helps Injured Birds

DENVER (UPI) — Catherine Hurlbutt, a 65-year-old retired secretary, says the world is for the birds. At least, that's the way things are at her home.

She has 50 brightly colored and noisy birds, ranging from a rose-breasted cockatoo named Pickle Puss to a raven named Edgar. And if anyone finds a sick or injured bird, it inevitably finds its way to her house.

"I waste more money on gas going after birds," she said, explaining how she uses a big white taxicab in which to carry all the cages she needs. "I went to Canon City yesterday to get an ailing mapgpie.

Miss Hurlbutt is on call for several Denver veterinarians, the Denver Audubon Society and Denver Field Ornothology to take care of injured birds.

"I just house them and love them," she explained. "Most get over what they've got by themselves. They have enough smarts to have survived for the ages."

She also uses the birds to take care of her sick human friends. A few days ago, she was seen hurrying down the street with a goose under her arm.

"I have a friend who's under the weather," she explained. "I thought if I took her Donald Duck here, he might cheer her up."

Miss Hurlbutt, who first fell in love with birds at age 6 when she climbed a tree to rescue a great-horned owl that really didn't want rescuing, admits things get a little noisy around her home, but she wouldn't have it any other way.

Her loved ones include Miss America, a 10-year-old mapgpie; Peter Pan, a cockatiel; Henny Penny, a hen, and Hootin' Harriet, a great-horned owl.

Edgar, the raven, is the only one of the birds with his own room. She says he perches on a bedpost in his room, spreads his 40-inch wings and squawks, "Never more, never more."

Miss Hurlbutt said all of her birds talk and "that's the value of them."

"All birds talk better in their first year because that's when they're learning their own language," Miss Hurlbutt said.

Miss Hurlbutt, who was a government secretary for 41 years before retiring, is trying to teach a baby stellar jay named Sammy Jay to say, "Peek-a-boo, I see you."

"Nobody has ever tried to teach jays to talk," she said. "So far, I've gotten all my birds to say something.

"Birds talking is merely imitation. They don't put sentences together. They say what they hear. It means nothing to the bird if it talks. It doesn't help it at all, not even for survival value. But it's interesting. I like to hear the different sounds.

"It's a big thrill to hear Edgar say, 'Never more.' It's as much use as any other treatise on animal behavior."

There is plenty to hear when a person walks into Miss Hurlbutt's home. There is a cacaphony of sound with such words as, "You're a cupcake," "You're a stinkpot." There is a parakeet that says, "Pie plant cowcamp stops at Tincup," and still another that says, "Birds like phreatophytes. Hexadecanol stops evaporation."

Women Soldiers Oppose Sharing Tents With GIs

By GALE WILEY

DARMSTADT, West Germany (UPI) — Several women soldiers believe the Army carried equality of the sexes too far recently, when half a dozen of them had to share a tent for a week with male GIs.

The commander of the unit involved said he had to put the women in with the men when he ran short of tents.

At least one of the women involved doubts that excuse and believes they simply were being harassed by male non-coms. The husbands of two of the women, both of them soldiers in the same battalion but not assigned to their tent, also objected in vain.

Whatever the truth, with the Army aiming to have 12 percent of its force female by 1983, those involved think such incidents will recur.

This incident occurred during a six-day field exercise in May by Alpha company of the 440th Signal Batttalion.

"They told us our tent was being fixed," Sgt. Suzan Sawyer, 25, of Elizabeth City, N.C., recalled. "They divided off the tent with a haphazardly put-up liner. You couldn't change or clean up because the men could still peek around the edges."

Sawyer, the highest-ranking enlisted woman of the group, refused to sleep in the tent with men, opting instead for "a place that was private."

Spec. 4 Nancy Burciago, 20, of Stroudsburg, Pa., moved into the tent only after spending a first restless night in a supply van.

"As soon as I walked into the tent, even though there was a partition, I heard about five men call out my name," Burciago said. "I like to take what we call bird baths. But I felt uncomfortable in the tent. I wasn't really worried that the men would come over and harrass me in any way — I just didn't feel comfortable having them there, knowing they could see through the sides of the partition."

It was the husbands of Sawyer and Burciago who also objected to the coed tent arrangement.

A spokesman for the U. S. Army-Europe, said Army regulations call for separate sleeping and bathroom facilities for men and women soldiers both in garrison and in the field, but that "under unforeseen field conditions," men and women can be required to share a partitioned tent.

Lt. Col. Benjamin Donaldson, commander of the 440th, said he allowed Alpha company to establish its coed tent because it ran short of canvas covers.

"It was either in the tent or under the stars," Donaldson said. "And I don't think young ladies should sleep out under the stars."

Sawyer doubts there really was a tent shortage and suspects it may have been cooked up by male non-coms poking fun at women soldiers. She said many male non-coms abuse the equal opportunity regulation by requiring women to do unreasonable tasks.

Sawyer's assessment coincides with that of a study conducted by the Army Research Institute for the Behavioral and Social Sciences, which reported recently that male non-coms "in many cases were highly vocal in their opposition to women."

The other four women involved all slept in the coed tent but under protest.

"Men shouldn't be around when women have to do their personal hygiene," said Spec. 4 Varner Edwards, 21, of Alexander City, Ala. "I felt bad, terrible."

Pfc Karen Goode, 20, of Norfolk, Va., said she was angry and uncomforable.

"Like changing, when you go to bed and you pull off your clothes ... I felt like maybe somebody would be peeping under the partition. Everybody was upset about it, but you had to face it. We had no other place to sleep. But I don't trust men."

The men on the other side of the partition professed indifference.

"The guys didn't care one way or the other," said Spec. 4 Dennis Crider, 21, of Corinth, Miss. "We (men and women) were joking with each other through the whole field problem. It seemed like (sharing a tent) had been going on for a 100 years."

Major Heat Wave Blisters China

TOKYO (AP) — A heat wave blistering central and southern China since late June has forced factories and schools to arrange rest periods during the hottest part of the day, the official Hsinhua news agency reports.

The report said maximum temperatures ranged from 95 to 105 in Shanghai, Foochow, Nanchang and Nanking recently. Communist Party officials in Shanghai have set up cold-drink stands at bus stops to serve bus drivers and conductors, the agency said.

Political Fund Runs Pay Off In Portland

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Fund raisers foraging for dollars are finding it pays better in Portland to stage grueling fund runs than to pass the hat.

The runs are held every weekend, rain or shine. In Portland, it's often the former, but that doesn't stop hundreds of sweating, panting contributors from paying $5 entry fees to pound up and down hills in organized "fund runs."

One politician grossed $12,000 by holding campaign runs. A local YMCA raised $2,200 and another run raised more than $3,000 for a cardiac research program.

"It's a much less painless way to raise money," said Phillip Levy, 28, campaign manager for unsuccessful City Council candidate Stephen Kafoury. "Psychologically it's much easier to get the money than just going up to someone and asking for $5."

Levy, a jogger himself, said the Kafoury runs were based on pledges. Runners asked friends to sponsor them at any amount per mile, from one mile to 20. Portland Trail Blazers basketball star Bill Walton served as the starter.

"In grass-roots fund raising you always have to look for ways to reach people who normally aren't going to give you money," said Levy. "This was a good fun way to do it. Runners are eager to get into things rather than just watch them."

Dave Hicks, 28, who ran in the YMCA event, said the run was "kind of a social gathering."

"Everybody's mutually crazy. It'll be 40 degrees and sleeting or 85 degrees and sweltering and they'll be out there.

"I probably would have said 'no way' if they just asked me to toss $5 in the hat," he said. "Instead, I punish myself by running to give it to them."

About 3,500 runners participated in the Cascade Run Off last month. One dollar of each $4 entry fee went to the Cardiac Fitness Program at the University of Oregon Health Sciences Center.

Not all the fund runs have made money. The local chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union barely broke even when it held its "Run for a Healthy Constitution." The YMCA's first "fund run" last fall was a loser, but the second run in May, with 1,000 participants, brought in $2,200.

"We really think we raised more moneys this way," said YMCA spokeswoman Bonny McDonald. "It was rainy, terrible weather and we thought no one would show up. We were shocked at the response. People came ready to run with rainhats and umbrellas."

Begin, Opponent Loudly Debate Peace Strategy

Peres, who met with President Anwar Sadat of Egypt last week in Austria, accused Begin of "filling a prescription for Israel's isolation."

Responding with scathing sarcasm, the prime minister asked the Labor Party leader if his discussions with Sadat had included the idea of territorial compromise between Israel and the Arabs.

"You believe it is the high road, the only way to peace and there is no other," shouted Begin, who took the rostrum after Peres spoke. "What is the meaning of territorial compromise? Part for me and part for you," Begin asked, then ripped a piece of paper in half, apparently showing his belief that Sadat would not accept such a compromise.

The prime minister asked how Peres could have missed "the historic opportunity" to bring it up with Sadat, "and afterwards with the proud Jew, Bruno Kreisky?"

Kreisky, the Austrian chancellor who arranged the Peres-Sadat meeting, was born to Jewish parents but does not practice Judaism. He is often criticized by Israelis who dislike the fact that he does not support Israeli policy in the Mideast.

Peres complained that the government was withholding information from the Knesset, or parliament, and that Begin's peace plan, offering limited self-rule to Palestinians in the West bank of the Jordan River and the Gaza Strip held the seeds of a Palestinian state, which the large majority of Israelis oppose.

While Peres was speaking, Yigael Hurvitz, minister of commerce in Begin's Likud government, shouted, "You're trying to rise to power on Sadat's shoulders."

Peres yelled back: "The problem isn't who will be the prime minister — that will be decided by the Knesset's vote. The problem is, what will the political situation be — Israel isolated, or Israel enjoying the support of other nations, as it has in the past, Israel displaying political skill in working toward a settlement, or Israel entrenched in domestic conflict within the cabinet, within the Likud, within the Knesset, in imaginary games of prestige?"

Labor Party members of the Knesset leaped on Begin's gesture of tearing the paper, shouting: "It's not a peace poster." That was a reference to a poster saying "shalom," or peace, which Defense Minister Ezer Weizman tore from a wall in Begin's office building after a stormy cabinet meeting on Sunday.

The outburst in the Knesset was the latest sign of disunity in the Israeli government over the peace issue. Begin found it necessary Sunday night to defend himself against what he termed a worldwide "campaign for my resignation." He said he was being called "an obstacle to peace," but considered himself only "an obstacle to surrender."

The statement showed Begin was stung by Sadat's stated preference for talking to Israelis other than Begin.

After Weizman returned from a hastily arranged trip to Austria for talks with Sadat, the cabinet felt compelled to tell the Egyptian president that if he wanted to talk about Mideast peace, he should address himself to Begin.

Both the Peres and Weizman talks with Sadat were approved by Begin over the objections of Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan.

Peres had asked that the Knesset hold a political debate over the government's peace plan, but Begin refused, saying he had not had a report yet from Dayan, who is meeting in Britain with Egyptian Foreign Minister Mohammed Ibrahim Kamel and U.S. Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance.

Begin said the Knesset would have a debate on the Mideast situation after Sunday's cabinet session, where a decision is expected on Sadat's new proposals which Weizman brought back from Austria last week.

Convenience Store Target Of Robbers

By PAT CARLSON
Avalanche-Journal Staff

A Lubbock man may have overheard plans for an armed robbery, but by noon today, police still had made no arrests in the pre-dawn heist which netted a pair of robbers an estimated $300-$400 from a convenience store register.

The target of the city's first business robbery in three weeks was the 7-Eleven at 52nd Street and University Avenue which was hit shortly before 4:30 a.m.

A man later told police he may have seen the bandits about 3 a.m. He said he became suspicious of the duo when he heard one of them remark, "We ought to rob a 7-Eleven tonight."

According to the store's attendant, Leslie Bonneville, the two men had been in the store about 3 a.m. "acting suspiciously." After one of them bought a soft drink, they left and returned about an hour later.

The 18-year-old clerk said the two men played three games of pinball and asked her how to "beat" the machine. When the attendant replied that she was not allowed to play while on duty, the men reportedly went to other sections of the store and selected a few items.

As the men approached the register, the woman said, one of them told her the other would pay for the groceries and then left the store.

When the clerk turned toward the man who supposedly had the money, his companion re-entered the business — this time holding a small blue-steel revolver.

The armed man reportedly grabbed the clerk by the arm and ushered her into the back part of the store.

According to the woman, the robbers told her to stay in the small room for 20 minutes. However, she emerged in two or three minutes and found them gone.

She said they cleaned out the register, getting away with as much as $300-$400.

As officers were taking the report another man entered and, after hearing the descriptions of the bandits, said he had seen the pair about an hour and a half earlier outside a nearby apartment complex.

The witness said he noticed the men walking toward the apartments, drove by and heard one of them say, "Don't worry about him (the witness), that's not the police."

After overhearing the statement about the proposed robbery, the man reportedly stayed in the area until about 3:30 a.m. He said he did not call police.

The heist was the first in Lubbock since June 27. It was the 145th aggravated robbery reported to police this year.

County GOP Proposing Tax Relief For Elderly

A tax relief program for elderly persons has been developed by the Lubbock County Republican Party and will be presented to the Texas Legislature during the current special session, Ruth Schiermeyer, party chairman, announced at a news conference today.

Mrs. Schiermeyer said the proposal will be presented to the House Constitutional Amendment Committee by State Rep. Joe Robbins of Lubbock, a Republican and a member of the committee.

"I have just returned from Austin, where I testified before the House Constitutional Amendment Committee," she read from a prepared statement at the 10:30 a.m. meeting at party headquarters at 2606 Boston Ave.

"I recommended this for consideration. It was very strongly supported by the representative of the Senior Citizens of Texas (lobbyist Lyle Hammill).

"Rep. Joe Robbins is writing the bill and will introduce it as a constitutional amendment in this special session."

The proposal has eight points. It would:

—Freeze the appraisal of homesteads based on market value on Jan. 1 of the year the owners become 65 or retirement age as designated by the federal government.

—For persons now over 65, the appraisal would revert back to the Jan. 1, 1974, level or to that of the year they became 65, whichever is more recent.

—If a person bought a home after age 65, appraisal would be based on market value Jan. 1 of the year of sale.

—Improvements to the homestead would be added to the appraised value and remain at that value.

—If market value dropped below the set appraised value, the appraisal would be based on the market value but not rise above the original set appraisal.

—A duplex would continue to qualify as a homestead.

—An owner would have to render property yearly to qualify.

Mrs. Schiermeyer said the proposal purposely deletes any mention of an appraisal amount because "any set amount becomes obsolete over a period of time.

"Any time we're considering a constitutional amendment, I would prefer a permanent solution, not a stopgap solution," she said.

She said the Lubbock County party organization does not expect the amendment to approved during the special session but that it might be approved to be placed before the voters when the general session convenes next January.

The GOP executive committee approved the program at a July 11 meeting, she said.

Discrimination Complaints Taken In City

Persons who have been denied entrance to nightclubs, bars, theaters or restaurants because of race or ethnic background may now file complaints at city hall.

The complaints will be forwarded to the Federal Bureau of Investigation, city officials said.

The city council asked that Human Relations Director Luciano Perez work actively with the public in receiving and referring complaints of possible violations of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

Persons wishing to file complaints should call city hall at 762-6411, extension 2282, and arrange to give the information to Perez. Necessary information includes the date, time and location of the incident, along with a full description of what happened in as much detail as possible.

If there were witnesses to the incident, they should come to city hall also and make a corroborating statement.

FBI officials have said the best way to develop a case against any civil rights violator is to have enough complaints to show a pattern of discriminatory practices. This could prove difficult because of the different techniques used to avoid discrimination charges in the past, Perez said.

Probably the FBI will make its own investigation into any complaints referred to the bureau and will contact those filing complaints for interviews and further information.

Maritime Association Rejects Liner Bids

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — For the fourth time, the U.S. Maritime Association has turned down prospective buyers of the luxury liner United States.

Spokesman John Swank said the group rejected bids of $3.25 million, $5 million and $7.5 million for various reasons: one buyer could not come up with the required 10 percent down payment, one wanted too generous financing terms and the $3.25 million offer was too low.

LCC Creates Two New Positions

Two new administrative positions have been created at Lubbock Christian College.

Fred Knoll, 51, will serve as the school's first full-time comptroller, and Jim Spratlin, 36, will become the director of purchasing and campus facilities.

Knoll, who had served as office manager-comptroller, is a certified public accountant, and as comptroller will oversee the financial records of the college. He has been at LCC four years.

Spratlin, former head of the automotive department and coordinator of the motor pool, graduated from LCC in 1969 and then joined the staff in 1971.

Dr. Harvie Pruitt, LCC president, also announced position changes for Randy Talley, Jim "Butch" Walters and Charles Viney.

Talley, 26, has been named office manager and will supervise the operations of the business office. He is a Texas Tech accounting graduate and has worked for Litton Industries, Lubbock Manufacturing and Texas Instruments.

Walters, 31, is the new director of personnel and supervisor of auxiliary enterprises. A former Bakersfield, Calif., policeman, he will be in charge of LCC's security.

Viney, 40, has been promoted to supervisor of maintenance and will be responsible for the grounds and custodial personnel. He had been a director of building maintenance.

Pruitt also announced the appointment of Walt McAlexander as a staff writer in the public information and development office. He also is serving as acting director of public information. McAlexander, 33, had served as the school's sports information director since 1971.

Auction Set For Animals

Lubbock Animal Shelter authorities have got somebody's goat, and on Thursday they hope to give it back.

The city-operated shelter, located at 401 N. Ash Ave., will hold a public auction at 10 a.m. on two unclaimed animals — a brown-and-white goat and a brown gelding pony.

The horse was picked up by the city on July 3, wandering in the vicinity of East 50th Street and Loop 289. The goat was found in a backyard of a North Lubbock home on July 6.

Thomas Trombley, director of the shelter, said both are "good-looking animals. Normally someone would have come by to claim them."

Trombley said the animals have been grazing in a grassy, fenced-in area at the shelter.

President's Adviser Accused In Plot

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter's chief medical adviser wrote a prescription to an apparently fictitious person so a staff employee could obtain the drug Quaalude, but another person who later tried to pick up the drug was arrested, the Washington Post reported today.

The use of Quaalude, which produces sleep or sedation, has been tightly controlled under federal law because in recent years it has been widely abused by narcotics users.

Police in suburban Prince William County, Va., said they arrested a woman last week after she tried to purchase the drug using a prescription allegedly signed by Dr. Peter G. Bourne.

Bourne, the president's chief adviser on health and drug abuse, could not be reached for comment. A White House spokeswoman, Pat Bario, said Bourne would have a statement later.

Bourne's wife, Mary King, deputy director of the federal volunteer agency ACTION, was asked about the report. She replied in a note: "Peter is the finest physician I know and he will be answering all questions in due course."

The woman, Toby M. Long of Washington, D.C., was charged with "obtaining or attempting to obtain a controlled drug known as Quaalude by fraud, deceit or misrepresentation," court clerk Rita Wilkinson said. Trial has been set for Sept. 19. The offense charged is a felony.

The woman was arrested July 11 after, the Post said, she attempted to fill the prescription for 15 Quaalude tablets at a Woodbridge, Va., drug store.

The newspaper said police were treating the arrest as a routine investigation of prescription forgery, a crime that covers any prescription misrepresentation and carries a penalty of one to five years' imprisonment in Virginia.

The newspaper article, quoting unidentified informed sources, said Bourne, interviewed by law enforcement officials, had told them he had written the prescription to a fictitious person to avoid embarrassing the persons for whom the drug was intended.

The Post said Bourne told investigators the person seeking the drug was a woman who worked in his White House office, but she was not further identified.

The newspaper quoted one unidentified source as saying that the woman for whom the prescription was written apparently was too busy to fill it and gave it to the arrested woman to fill for her.

Bourne first told authorities that the woman named on the prescription was a patient of his, but later reportedly said the person did not exist, the Post reported. It did not identify the name on the prescription.

Jones Daniels Faces Charges In Shooting

Attempted murder charges were filed Tuesday against Jones Weldon Daniels, a former employee accused of walking into the Plains Co-op Oil Mill and gunning down the assistant office manager.

Daniels, 38, was taken into custody about 9 a.m. Tuesday at a small hotel not far from the shooting scene. The Criminal District Attorney's office recommended a $25,000 bond.

The suspect is accused of trying to kill Glenn Barbee, 48, of 1919 34th St.

Barbee remained in the intensive care unit at West Texas Hospital following surgery for a bullet wound in his lower back. A spokesman said his condition had improved to good today.

Barbee was shot at the firm's 2901 Ave. A offices about 10 a.m. Monday.

An officer said the victim, lying on his back in a northeast office, was conscious when police arrived and was able to name a suspect.

Witnesses said the gunshots began after a small, thin man walked through the double doors of the office.

One witness said she heard a loud noise and looked up to see an intruder pointing a gun in the direction of the victim. That witness said she scrambled to the floor.

Reports indicate that other persons took refuge in a vault.

Two employees told police they heard a shot that hit the vault door as a third person ran inside.

After the shooting, the gunman reportedly exited through the doors he had entered.

Several cartridges reportedly were found in an area adjacent to Barbee's office.

Circle Resurfacing Project Resumes

The state highway department has announced that resurfacing of the traffic circle at the intersection of U.S. Highways 84 and 87 will resume Saturday.

Traffic through the construction area may be temporarily delayed, officials said. Work will be suspended during peak traffic hours of 7 a.m. to 8:30 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. and 6 p.m. Monday through Friday. The project is expected to be completed by July 27.

Woman Claiming To Be Anastasia Avoids Visitors

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. (UPI) — Today she is a frail, white-haired gnome of a woman, eccentric and reclusive, who surrounds herself with 18 cats and seven dogs in a rundown house her husband cheerfully describes as "filthy."

Once, she claims, she was the Grand Duchess Anastasia of Russia — the youngest daughter of Czar Nicholas II and his wife Alexandra — a pampered child who grew up playing in ornate palaces surrounded by the riches of one of the world's wealthiest families.

No one has yet proved this 77-year-old woman, now the wife of a former history professor, is, in fact, Anastasia. But, as West Germany's highest court pointed out, no one has proved she isn't, either.

The imperial Romanov family — Nicholas, Alexandra, their four daughters and son — was last seen July 16, 1918 at the Ipatiev House in Ekaterinburg (now Sverdlovsk) where they were prisoners of the Bolsheviks. What happened after that day remains one of the most intriguing mysteries of modern history.

An "official" report by the White Army (the anti-Bolshevik faction of the Russian Revolution) of says the entire family was herded into a dank basement room sometime that night and massacred. Some historians believe only the czar and his son died at Ekaterinburg while his wife and daughters were secretly taken elsewhere. Some even theorize the entire family escaped.

On the one hand, no bodies ever were found. On the other, no member of the family is known — without dispute — to have been seen alive again.

At least until the woman who now is Mrs. John Manahan turned up in Berlin in 1920, some 18 months later, and said — after two years of silence about her past during a stay in a hospital — that she was Anastasia.

Although she told enough details of the Romanovs' private life to convince some but not all of her identity, she refused then, as she does today, to bolster her story by filling in the gaps in the Romanov mystery.

In fact, now she goes out of her way to avoid reporters and any other visitors who pick their way through the overgrown front yard to the door of her house on a pleasant, shaded street in this university town.

As her husband explains it, "She doesn't care what anyone thinks. She won't go out of her way to meet anyone. She knows who she is and doesn't feel she has to prove it."

To the visitor who arrives unannounced, the woman once known as "Anna Anderson" (a name friends once put on a hotel register to deceive searching reporters) is a hesitant, suspicious figure, wearing a woolen neck scarf despite the oppressive summer heat. She peers out from behind the torn screen door, speaks briefly and then flutters back again into the darkness of the kitchen and the safety of her animals.

She will come no closer, say no more and when her husband later arranges an interview she refuses to appear, staying resolutely in her bedroom despite Manaan's entreaties to come out.

"What can you do?" he shrugs.

At 58, Manahan is 19 years younger (if she is Anastasia) than his wife. A crewcut, rumpled figure with a creased face and staccato manner of speaking, he has devoted himself completely to his wife and her wishes, however eccentric.

He is mysterious about how they met, saying only it was through mutual Byelorussian friends in Bermuda in 1958. He brought her to Virginia from Germany in 1968 and they were married Dec. 23 of that year in Charlottesville to avoid a German order that she return to that country.

If Mrs. Manahan is, in fact, Anastasia, her lifestyle today could not be more different from that of a grand duchess.

"By her choice, everything is for the comfort of animals and discomfort of people," Manahan says, explaining this means the house is "a perfect shambles."

The seven dogs, which he says they need for protection, and 18 cats have free run and their evidence is everywhere.

Furniture stuffing as been ripped out by the cats and never repaired. Tins of dog and cat food and empty kitty litter bags are scattered about and a cat dozes in a pile of yellowing newspaper on the dining room table.

Flies are everywhere and so is dust. Manahan cheerfully acknowledges "We haven't used a vacuum in at least six years and now it's too late."

The rooms also are crammed with thousands of his books — often just stacked on the floor in piles so high the visitor has to forge a lane around them — knicknacks and incohgruous souvenirs finish the bizarre living arrangement.

Government Pressures Industry

By MICHAEL J. CONLON

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Three government agencies are putting pressure on the segment of the insulation industry that uses urea-formaldehyde foam to do something about consumer complaints of fumes from the product.

The pressure is coming from the Department of Energy, the Consumer Product Safety Commission and the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

Among the cases investigated by the CPSC are these:

—After the insulation was installed in one wall at a rented house in Omaha, Neb., a couple and their seven-year-old daughter showed symptoms of formaldehyde poisoning, the commission report says. They were treated at a hospital and released, but had to move to a new house because the fume problem was never corrected.

—In Pen Yan, N.Y., after UFF insulation was installed in several walls, a 63-year-old man noticed a smell for several days. He was later hospitalized and continued in the care of a doctor.

—A woman in Tucson, Ariz., developed symptoms of formaldehyde poisoning after living in a newly constructed house where foam was sprayed in the walls and attic. The woman and her husband had to move out of the house, an evaporative-type air conditioning system was later installed in the attic and eventually the foam had to be removed from the attic.

—In San Jose, Calif., "the 46-year-old victim and her husband suffered symptoms of formaldehyde poisoning," the commission said, "and a physician recommended the foam be removed from the home. Holes drilled in the walls for ventilation failed to reduce the fumes. The victims live with the windows open during the day and sleep in a trailer at night."

—At Milpitas, Calif., after foam was installed in the walls of a house, two children suffered poisoning. Their parents were unsuccessful in removing the fumes. The family later allowed the mortgage to be foreclosed and gave up the house.

These incidents occurred from 1975 to 1977. In addition, the commission has a long list of newspaper clippings and consumer complaints on the subject. Most symptoms involve eye and respiratory irritation, headaches and nausea.

One official said the agency has 50 complaints on file, many from Connecticut. He said it is not known whether this is representative of the actual situation because, among other things, the agency does not even know how many foam insulation jobs are done annually.

He also said large manufacturers think the problems arose from on-site installation errors. The official said some segments of the industry believe a few low quality operators may be using foam products not really intended for insulation.

The three agencies recently expressed their concern to industry representatives at a meeting in Washington. The agencies have not yet decided if regulations are needed.

Class Project Nears Million

ESCONDIDO, Calif. (UPI) — There was a time when Carol Waters' grade school students had a hard time grasping the meaning of large numbers, like a million.

"A million is a whole bunch," as one student explained it.

That was three years ago, and the students now have a better idea of just how big a bunch. They set out to collect one million beverage can pop tops.

"I would explain large numbers in math class," Mrs. Waters explained, "but the children couldn't really understand — they couldn't grasp the abstract. Most of them had never really seen a hundred of anything in the same place at the same time."

In the years since then, the class has learned that it takes 300 pop-tops to fill a one-pound coffee can, and 50,000 to fill a large trash bag.

When they get the last pop top, they plan to sell the aluminum, which should bring them $214.20 at the current scrap price, and buy some blind person a guide dog.

At last count they had 907,285, and they're still collecting.

Survey Says Businesses Duck Computer Crimes

NEW YORK (UPI) — Most American corporations know very little about protecting themselves against computer and white collar crime, several recent surveys indicate.

Further, the surveys show many firms are reluctant to face up to what has become a $40 billion a year problem.

One study was made by Marsh & McLennan, the large insurance holding and brokerage firm, which admittedly has two axes to grind. Marsh & McLennan is anxious to cut claims against the insurance policies it writes and it is alarmed that so many businesses don't have adequate insurance against the consequences of white collar crime.

Another study was made by the American Management Association under a grant from the federal Law Enforcement Assistance Administration. The AMA created a Crimes Against Business Council to carry out the study and this council came to the rueful conclusion that, with embarrassing fraquency, crimes against business are also crimes by business.

A third study by Saul D. Astor, who runs a New York security firm called Management Safeguards, Inc., concluded that business and worker morality in the United States now has fallen so low that Americans are becoming "a nation of thieves." Astor said unless the decline in business and white collar crime is halted "our civilization will be destroyed." He said our present legal system is totally incapable of dealing with white collar crime because too few people really want to deal with it.

Astor said the toll of business crime reached $44 billion in 1977, fully half the total business profits for the year!

The Commerce Department, the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, the American Mutual Insurance Alliance and the National Retail Merchants Association gave a $40 billion figure and said that could not be verified but that because a vast amount of white collar crime against and by business goes unreported, the figure could be much higher.

Employee pilferage: $10 billion.
Commercial bribery: $10 billion.
Securities thefts & fraud: $5 billion.
Embezzlement: $4 billion.
Burglary: 72.5 billion.
Vandalism: $2.5 billion.
Shoplifting: $2 billion.
Insurance fraud: $2 billion.
Arson: $1.3 billion.
Check fraud: $2 billion.
Credit card fraud: $0.5 billion.

The AMA also said that an average of 15 cents of every dollar you pay over the counter at any store is stolen or embezzled in one way or another and that in some businesses, this figure is as high as 30 cents.

"Moreover," the AMA said, "the total of these losses is growing by 10 percent a year."

This study also concluded that 20 percent of all the businesses that go broke each year do so mainly because of white collar crime.

Computer crime is the newest, most sophisticated and often the most difficult type of white collar crime to combat, Marsh & McLennan said in its study.

Recently a Federal Reserve bank received an order to transfer $16,255 from a bank in South Dakota to a bank in Georgia for a Michael Charles, who executed the transaction over the telephone by supplying the correct computer code number for the day. Six months later, Johnny Ray Johnson, alias Michael Charles, admitted manipulating the Federal Reserve data network and pleaded guilty to wire fraud.

A 18-year-old bank computer programmer on the West Coast found himself in a debt bind and discovered a cute way to get the $4,500 he needed. He ordered the computer to transfer $100 each from 41 different accounts into a new account set up for his wife under an assumed name. When depositors complained, the bank investigated and caught up with him.

But Marsh & McLennan says many computer frauds are not detected in time. "The age of computers has provided an accessible and sophisticated tool for white collar crime," it says. "Used for storing nearly all corporate records, performing various accounting procedures, maintaining inventory control, processing orders and payroll checks ... computers provide a method for white collar criminals to embezzle large amounts of money or illegally acquire confidential information."

Marsh & McLennan added that "businesses become most vulnerable to computer crime when they demonstrate a lack of interest in the problem, naive assumptions about computer invincibility and ignorance about how to take proper safeguards. Too often a company doesn't think about safeguards until it suffers a big uninsured loss.

The most important safeguards to take, Marsh & McLennan said, are:

— The computer department must be independent and no computer employees should be permitted to authorize expenditures or have access to cash or inventories.

— No one individual should have control over every phase of a significant computer transaction.

— Access to computer premises should be severely limited.

— Every unusual incident, every unauthorized attempt to enter the computer area, in brief, anything the least bit suspicious should be routinely but carefully investigated.

The AMA study added some other important points:

— The Uniform Crime Reports of the FBI don't really describe the magnitude of white collar crime involving business.

— Police and prosecutors are not well enough trained in dealing with sophisticated crimes against business or crimes by business.

— Sentencing patterns are arbitrary and inconsistent when persons are convicted of these crimes. For example, 91 percent of those convicted of bank robbery go to prison but only 17 percent of convicted embezzlers end up in prison.

— Some state laws on white collar crime are laughable. Until last July, Indiana law forbad commercial bribery only as it applied to "officers and employees of carriers" and the maximum penalty was a $100 fine.

— Business executives usually prefer not to report white collar crime if they can avoid it.

The most crying need, the AMA group decided, is a national "demotivation" campaign to persuade business people, parents and workers to abandon the rip-off psychology, and particularly, to "deglamorize" shoplifting and vandalism in the eyes of youngsters.

Forest, Energy Firms Merge

WEST MONROE, La. (AP) — Olinkraft Inc., a forest products company based here, says it has reached a tentative $460-million agreement to merge with Texas Eastern Corp. of Houston.

Texas Eastern is a diversified energy company with operations throughout the world, including extensive oil holdings in the North Sea.

The tentative agreement, which must be approved by stockholders of both companies, provides for the exchange of each share of Olinkraft common stock for either $51 or one share of new Texas Eastern preferred stock which would have a stated value of $51 and an annual dividend of $3.70.

Each share of the new issue would be convertible into 1.1 shares of Texas Eastern common, non-redeemable for 10 years, and have one vote per share, voting with Texas Eastern common on all matters.

The proposed merger follows a flurry of trading on the New York Stock Exchange which has sent Olinkraft's common stock climbing by 10 points since July 1. The stock gained 1 point Monday to close at 45½.

Olinkraft employes 3,000 persons here and has a total of 7,000 employees at its 29 plants in nine states and Brazil. The company had sales in 1977 of $381.2 million and net income of $34.6 million or $3.91 a share.

Texas Eastern had 1977 revenue of slightly more than $2 billion and net income of $123.7 million or $5.02 a share. In trading on the New York Stock Exchange Monday, the stock was unchanged at 40⅛.

Dozens Of Strikers Respond To Threat

By The Associated Press

About 600 striking prison guards and 180 sheriff's deputies facing a dismissal threat returned to work in Philadelphia today, but 19,000 other city workers carried their walkout over layoffs and wages into a sixth day.

Mayor Frank Rizzo had threatened to replace "every living one" of the deputies and the striking guards at the city's three prisons unless they were back on the job.

A federal mediator announced that negotiations were scheduled to resume this afternoon as most other employees — including sanitation, recreation and health workers — continued the strike that began Friday.

Meanwhile in New York, members of the Police Benevolent Association delayed delivery of today's editions of the Daily News — the nation's largest daily newspaper, with a circulation of 2 million copies — as they demonstrated Tuesday night near the News building. The association wants a $5,000 raise for police officers and better working conditions than the city has offered.

Association President Sam DeMilia threatened Tuesday to "close down the News" for alleged "anti-police editorials" if a contract settlement was not reached by tonight.

Mayor Edward I. Koch today denounced the demonstrators who held up delivery of the News as "a few thugs," but he said the city would removing two main obstacles blocking a contract with the policemen's union when negotiations resumed today at the Office of Collective Bargaining.

In New Orleans, some of the city's 328 garbagemen reported to work today after a one-day wildcat strike, but reports of vandalism and new demands over wages threatened to prolong the walkout.

The strike had been sparked by complaints that more than 70 of the city's 122 trucks did not work. The garbagemen earn an average of $29.72 per route, but are sent home without pay when trucks break down.

Repair crews worked all night to fix the trucks, but vandals slashed some tires and cut motor wires before garbagemen showed up today.

Mayor Ernest Morial today accused militant union members of prolonging the walkout and threatened garbagemen with disciplinary action if they didn't return to work by Thursday.

Strike's Impact To Be Delayed

By CANDY SAGON
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Local postal union officials expect a national mail strike to be called Friday, but they say Lubbock may not feel the effects of the walkout until the middle of next week.

Negotiations on a new contract remained deadlocked in Washington today, and union officials said the outlook is grim.

A strike is expected to be called by the three postal unions if no agreement is reached by midnight Thursday, when the current contract expires, says Allison Edwards, president of the Lubbock chapter of the National Association of Letter Carriers (NALC).

However, both Edwards and Starlie Pace, president of the local chapter of the American Postal Workers Union (APWU), doubt the strike will restrict local mail delivery, at least initially.

Pace said that even though the larger union locals in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles probably will go on strike immediately Friday, "we'll be slower to react here in Texas."

Edwards said he personally did not think too many of the 190 letter carriers in his local would go out on strike. "Many are afraid of losing their jobs," he said.

Pace had the same prediction for his approximately 200-member APWU chapter. "Every postal employe received a letter this morning from the Postmaster General reminding us that it is a felony to strike.

"That's enough to make quite a few have second thoughts about going out on strike," Pace said.

Even if a strike is called Friday, Pace said, Lubbock "probably won't feel anything for three or four days. It's doubtful we'd take any action Saturday or Monday," he added.

Lubbock Postmaster Elmer Reed said if a strike is called, the post office would "continue normal operations as long as we can. We hope there won't be any work stoppage."

Reed said contingency plans have been set up to handle the delivery of local mail, but he said the plans are "confidential."

Union officials say they expect National Guardsmen and college students will be called in as temporary postal workers, should the strike become widespread.

Those most affected by a postal strike here would be residents receiving monthly checks by mail, such as Social Security, welfare, annuity and paychecks.

Businesses with large monthly mailings, such as Southwestern Bell, also would be greatly affected by a postal strike.

Jim Goodwin, spokesman for the Lubbock office of Southwestern Bell, said his office handles all the phone company billing for West Texas — which translates to 355,000 bills mailed each month.

However, he said postal service officials had assured the phone company they had contingency plans for handling the mail in the event of a strike.

Postal Talks Deadlocked

nicated positions between the two sides.

Although about 20 secondary points have been resolved, said James LaPrenta of the Laborers' International Union, "the hard issues remain to be settled." He said these include mechanization, overtime and sick leave.

Other major sticking points include pay, work rules and health and safety issues.

The three unions bargaining together — the postal workers, the Laborers' mail handlers division, and the letter carriers union — have asked for a $1,965 wage increase per worker over two years. The average worker now makes $15,877. While neither side has said what management's counter proposal is, union sources have called it "ridiculous."

number of area towns and cities had showers.

Reports included .61 inch at Dimmitt, .35 at Olton, .09 at Muleshoe, .08 at Plainview and Friona, .03 at Abernathy and Crosbyton, .11 at Tulia, .02 at Silverton and Floydada and a trace at Morton and Littlefield.

The 103-degree reading in Lubbock broke the 1925 record of 102; the Hub City was a comparative cool spot in the South Plains, though.

It was a dizzying 109 at Paducah and 108 at Matador and Plainview.

Other readings were 107 at Jayton, 106 at Littlefield, Muleshoe and Spur and 105 at Brownfield, Friona, Morton, Olton, Seminole, Silverton and Tulia.

High temperatures and rain combined at even greater extremes in the Panhandle, where Pampa combined a 107-degree reading with 1.04 inches of rain, Dumas was 108 and had .03 and Amarillo was 105 and had .21 of rain.

The rain also extended into New Mexico, where Clovis got .38 and Clayton 1.48.

through a residential area.

Association members are predicting about 1,500 persons will come from throughout the country to participate in the protest march.

They have said the protest over the crown prince's presence may last the entire 50 weeks he is scheduled to be in training.

And they say the march will take place whether the city grants a parade permit or not.

Energy Administrator Says Cooperation Key

By ROBERT M. COCKRUM
Avalanche-Journal Staff

The state's energy administrator warned today that the nation's economy depends on action at a local level and cooperation instead of competition.

"What we need to do is stop trying to outrun each other," said Alvin C. Askew, referring to states fighting over what they see as their fair shares of energy resources. "What we need to do is stop and kill the bear that's chasing us."

The "bear" is a steady decline of those resources along with a constant increase in consumption.

Askew told more than 100 persons attending a two-day energy seminar that there is no way production can possibly keep up with demand. The answer lies in conservation.

Askew said the nation's economy is dependent on an energy plan which is administered largely at the state and local levels. He had no largely at the state and local levels. He had no kind words for energy edicts from Washington bureaucrats based on no economic growth.

"These are the same people who brought us Amtrak and the Postal Service. We cannot allow the federal government to control energy because it is the economic lifeblood," Askew said in an interview.

He said the government might believe the answer is to nationalize the energy industries, but that would not be smart.

"The law of supply and demand serves us best," he said, "but you can't jockey the market without upsetting the entire system."

Askew said he does philosophical battle frequently in his trips to Washington.

"I suppose 'no-growth' is a good philosophy if you make $40,000 a year, you're white and your job is stable," he said. "Most people aren't in that position and don't want things that structured."

Askew, conducting the 14th of 24 seminars scheduled this year, said the goal of his office — as handed down in federal legislation — often is misunderstood. The object is to reduce by 5 percent the amount of energy which would have been used in 1980 based on current growth levels.

"That's not the same as an plain cutback," said Askew. "Nobody is saying we will use less energy overall. We're talking about more efficient energy use — less energy input for greater economic output."

The Governor's Office of Energy Resources has divided the state into 24 planning regions because while the goal — conservation — is the same everywhere, the approach and method will vary.

"The person building an energy-efficient home in Brownsville is not going to have exactly the same problems as a builder on the South Plains," said Askew. "These planning areas allow us to individualize our programs."

The workshop topics are even more specialized to make sure the different interest groups get information concentrated in their fields.

The workshops at the Memorial Civic Center include local governments, utilities and lending institutions, public schools, new residential construction, office buildings, retail businesses, new commercial construction and hotels, motels and restaurants.

Askew said that conservation suppliers — those manufacturing such things as solar heating devices — are increasing. He said consumers should protect themselves by dealing with companies who stand behind their products rather than buying from a "street corner salesman" who will drive away in his pickup shortly after a sale is made.

Energy conservation information is available to the general public from the Home Energy Conservation Project in Lubbock, part of the state extension service through Texas A&M.

Youths Display Suicidal Trend

suicides by 15-to 24-year-olds rose from 2,357 to 4,747 — over 100 percent. That compares to about 25 percent for the total population.

Even among younger children — aged 10 to 14 — suicides increased from 116 to 158 during the 1968-1976 period.

Suicide affects the young of all races and socio-economic levels, but more young men than women take their own lives. The 1976 total for men 15-to-24 was 3,786, for women 961. But women attempt suicide at least twice as often, frequently with pills while men grab guns.

Statistics don't reflect the full problem because not every suicide is reported as such. Furthermore, for every suicide by a young person there are many more attempts — some think as many as 50.

"It is a striking phenomenon and tragic because they haven't had a chance to start to live," said Frederick, chief of emergency mental health and disaster assistance at NIMH.

Frederick believes that suicidal young persons often have ineffectual father-son, mother-daughter relationships and often suffer great pressure by trying to live up to parental expectations.

He cites breakdown of the family, increased use of drugs and alcohol and the difficulty of getting a job and getting ahead as factors.

"The cards seem stacked against them, everything turns out badly, they don't have the resources to lift themselves up and then they lose hope. That is a suicidal combination," Frederick said.

Michael Peck, director of youth services at the Los Angeles Suicide Prevention Center, studies young suicides in a county with a rate of 19 per 100,000 for 15-to 19-year-old males — highest in the country.

In the 1960s, he says, the classic suicidal youth was lonely and isolated — whose death brought the statement, "Gee, we never really knew him." Now Peck sees a new suicidal group, more aggressive, delinquent, troublesome, including users of drugs and alcohol.

Peck and others believe a big factor in their inability to cope is confused child rearing.

"Years ago, when parents were consistent in teaching values and discipline, children knew where they stood. Today, parents are confused about their own roles and don't know whether to be a disciplinarian or a best friend," he said.

"Yet kids need something not rigid but stable."

He cites two typical cases:

— A 17-year-old boy walks quietly into his bedroom and shoots himself in the head with his father's rifle.

Afterward his parents — both professionals with a stable marriage — couldn't name one of his friends. They said he loved school — he told friends he tolerated it. They said he loved to go hunting and fishing with his father — he told others he hated hunting.

"They didn't know their son," Peck said. "When he wanted to talk, they didn't want to listen and said he had no reason to be unhappy."

— A 15-year-old girl takes a fatal overdose of sleeping pills.

Her parents were fighting all the time and threatening divorce. She became more frightened, upset and insecure, but every time she tried to talk with them they pushed her away.

She started taking tranquilizers and gulped an overdose, hoping they would rush to her side and be reunited over her misery. It didn't work. She tried again and "succeeded."

Parents, say the experts, need to listen to their children and to ask them how they feel. Everyone is unhappy from time to time, but if the unhappiness doesn't abate, it is time to seek professional help.

New Rates Pondered By Insurance Board

AUSTIN (AP) — Insurance men and number crunchers for the State Insurance Board disagreed today over how big an increase there should be in the price of auto coverage.

Board statisticians recommended a 3.2 percent average statewide increase in personal car rates, while the Texas Automobile Insurance Service Office sought an 8.9 percent hike.

The data supporting each request was laid before the board at its annual car insurance hearing.

Overall, counting both personal and commercial policies, the staff recommended a 5.2 percent increase and the service office a 10.7 percent upward jump.

The board staff proposal would mean $63 million in added premiums over the coming year, while the industry's would mean about twice that.

Board members have not granted an auto rate change since October 1976. The 1977 hearing was recessed by then-chairman Joe Christie after major insurers told their stockholders they were having a good year.

President Shows Displeasure By Halting Sale

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter's unannounced decision to impose trade reprisals against the Russians serves to underscore both his displeasure over recent Soviet trials and his desire to avoid provoking a further deterioration in Soviet-American detente.

The president issued his order canceling a multimillion-dollar computer sale to the official Soviet news agency Tass without the rhetorical fanfare that usually accompanies a retaliatory move by the United States.

And in placing new controls on export of U.S. oil technology to the Soviet Union, Carter fell short of demands by a group of senators led by Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., that he specifically cancel a controversial $144 million deal to sell the Russians a modern plant for producing bits for oil well drilling.

But Jackson, on his way to a meeting with the president, praised Carter's decision.

"It clearly gives us real leverage," he said. "The president's is a strong bargaining position. I commend him for making the move."

"Of all the silly things: to allow Tass to get a computer so they can keep track of the dissidents while they impose censorship," the senator said.

Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho, said after meeting with Carter today at the White House that he doubts the Russians will respond to the actions on computers and oil technology.

"I must say that I doubt you can prick the paw of the Russian bear and turn him into a lamb," Church said. He is the second-ranking Democrat on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Rep. Barber Conable, R-N.Y., said the president's action represented "half-measures," but added: "I think they're appropriate."

Both moves were taken in retaliation for the harsh sentences given Jewish dissidents Anatoly Shcharansky and Alexander Ginzburg by Soviet courts last week, and for a Moscow judge's guilty ruling against two American journalists on Tuesday.

But in keeping with the low-key and unemotional tone of Carter's response, the White House and State Department steadfastly refused any comment Tuesday night on the president's decision. Word of his action was quietly leaked to selected reporters, and the decision was confirmed by Stanley Marcuss, a Commerce Department official.

And all available evidence suggests the president's move was known to only a few close White House advisers.

Robert S. Strauss, the chief U.S. trade negotiator, said in a telephone interview that "I know nothing about it." An aide said Deputy Secretary of State Warren Christopher had heard nothing about the president's decision.

Cancellation of the proposed sale of a sophisticated Sperry Univac computer to Tass, on orders from the president, came a few hours after a Moscow judge found two American journalists guilty of slandering Soviet television.

The two are Craig R. Whitney of the New York Times and Harold D. Piper of the Baltimore Sun, both of whom are vacationing in the United States.

Their newspapers said they would refuse the judge's order to print retractions of the stories that prompted the Soviet charges. The Sun agreed to pay court costs, the equivalent of $1,675. The Times said it had made no decision on whether to pay the fine.

Representatives of Tass, which had planned to use the Sperry Univac computer for test editing in connection with the 1980 Olympic Games in Moscow, were to be summoned to the State Department this week for a review of the fate of the news agency's San Francisco bureau.

Avital Shcharansky, wife of the dissident who faces 13 years' imprisonment on treason charges, was leaving Washington today for San Francisco, her next stop on a cross-country public relations tour in behalf of her husband.

During her two days in Washington, where she met ranking officials of the administration, Congress and the scientific community, Mrs. Shcharansky said words were not enough to change the course of Soviet policy.

She suggested such concrete action as moving the Olympic Games from Moscow to a Western city, or cutting off sales of sophisticated American technology to the Russians.

Marcuss, senior deputy assistant secretary of commerce, said in an interview that a key undecided portion of the drilling bit package, negotiated by Dresser Industries of Dallas, was still under review by the government.

But Carter's order, he said, means that all future sales of oil production equipment to the Soviet Union and other communist countries — including such previously exempt items as submersible drilling pumps — must be licensed by the Commerce Department.

Such sales technically were placed on the so-called commodities control list as being "sufficiently sophisticated to raise a national security concern," Marcuss said. It was on those grounds that the Sperry Univac sale presumably was canceled.

Jackson had charged that the Russians could use the advanced computer system to harass and monitor the movements of dissidents and for other purposes that have nothing to do with dissemination of the news.

Despite Election Year, Tax Reduction Not Easy

By WALTER R. MEARS

WASHINGTON (AP) — Cutting taxes in an election year is supposed to be a piece of cake.

It makes voters happy, which makes members of Congress happy as they head into the campaign season.

But it is not working that way this year. Congress still is struggling with the issue, and President Carter has threatened to veto a tax bill if it includes, as is likely, a sharp reduction in capital gains taxes.

Analysis

The House Ways and Means Committee resumes on Thursday its effort to come up with terms everybody can accept. The administration has indicated it might go along with a less drastic cut in the tax on capital gains, the profit realized from the sale of real estate, stock or other assets.

And Republicans are trying to make the most of the issue, figuring that no matter who loses, they win something. Rep. William A. Steiger of Wisconsin sponsored the capital gainst tax cut.

"And even though a compromise may be necessary to get final action through the Democrat-controlled Congress, the fact remains that his is a Republican initiative," says Ronald Reagan.

At the same time, the Republicans are pushing their version of a tax cut, a one-third reduction over a three-year period. They claim that would so spur the economy as to generate more revenue than it costs.

That idea has been around for a while, and although it has been rejected at least a dozen times, there is evidence now that the administration is taking the GOP challenge seriously.

The administration's two top economists bore down on the GOP tax bill in appearances before the House Budget Committee, calling it wasteful, inflationary and unrealistic.

"Whatever benefits might be envisioned would be quickly negated by the rise in prices and in interest rates," said Secretary of the Treasury W. Michael Blumenthal.

Charles L. Schultze, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, said to claim that such a tax cut would pay for itself is to look for a free lunch that does not exist. He called the Republican bill "a sure-fire recipe for inflation."

The Republicans, of course, dispute that.

Whatever the economics, the politics of it are clear. Republican National Chairman Bill Brock has said the big tax cut should be made the keystone of GOP campaigns this fall. Brock said the national committee will stage a series of seminars for candidates on the subject.

The White House wants a $15 billion tax cut, stripped of other features and open to administration reform amendments when it reaches the House floor.

It is more likely to get something along the lines of a compromise plan sponsored by Rep. James R. Jones, D-Okla., including capital gains reductions and a few of the changes Carter originally proposed as tax reforms.

When and if the bill gets through the Ways and Means Committee and the House and goes to the Senate, it would be open to any and all amendment attempts. The tactical problem for the administration is that what can be amended in the name of reform can also be amended with the kind of specialized tax breaks Carter has denounced.

Tax bills that reach the Senate late in a session have in the past become vehicles for assorted tax breaks for various groups and businesses. And those provisions are part of the tax code that Carter the campaigner called a national disgrace.

But presidents cannot veto selectively — they have to take the whole bill or send it back. There is no guarantee that if Carter rejected one tax bill he would get another more to his liking.

Unless some kind of tax bill is passed and becomes law, temporary tax reductions now in effect will expire on Jan. 1. That would increase taxes by $9 billion a year.

Court Gives Man Right To Visit Family Dog

OAKLAND (UPI) — Divorced and lonely, George Teebay had to go to court to win visitation rights to the family dog, Clyde.

His ex-wife, Susan, received custody of Clyde when the pair dissolved their marriage, but an agreement in their legal community property settlement gave George "reasonable visitation" rights to the golden retriever.

George complained in Alameda County Superior Court last week that his wife wasn't letting him visit with the animal. Once, said George, he found Clyde cold and whimpering in the yard next to Susan's house.

"Clyde was overjoyed to see me and needed me," George testified before Judge Richard A. Bancroft.

Clyde is happy, countered Susan, adding that she takes good care of him, that she lives alone and needs the protection of a dog.

The judge, who owns two golden retrievers himself, weighed the decision and rendered this judgement:

George "shall have visitation of the family dog, Clyde on the second and fourth weekends of each and every month from Friday at 7 p.m. until Sunday at 4 p.m., commencing ... forthwith.

"It is expected that the parties will cooperate with one another to effect the intent of this order."

Fuel Economy Tags To Get New Design

WASHINGTON (AP) — Those fuel economy labels on new cars will be taking on a different look under a rule invoked Monday by the Environmental Protection Agency.

Under the rule, only one mileage rating will be shown, the miles-per-gallon estimate for city driving.

In the past, three estimates have appeared — city, highway and combined — but the agency said the city rating only will now appear because it most accurately reflects in-use mileage.

State School Launches Fund Drive

By DEBBIE MITCHELL
Avalanche-Journal Staff

State House Speaker Bill Clayton praised the fund-raising efforts of area residents Tuesday night at the kick-off banquet for the Lubbock State School activities center.

Clayton honorary chairman of the activity center fund, told the 225 guests at the Civic Center banquet that the generosity which brought a swimming pool and television sets to the school would be needed to realize the goal of $314,000 designated for the activity center.

"I am proud to say that the people of the High Plains have always been more than generous in their gifts," said Clayton.

"I think it would be hard to find any area of the state where the people are more willling to give than those who live here."

The state provides the basics for the school, Clayton said.

But the state facility has a waiting list of 200 and has petitioned the legislature for two additional dormitories, so any extras for the school must be supplied by personal contributions and public fundraising.

"The state has only so much money to spend and I believe that we are currently doing as much possible in providing the basics," said Clayton. "It is the extras, however, provided by volunteers, that turn institutions into more livable places."

Volunteers already have pledged more than $91,000 toward the $314,000 goal. Clem Boverie, co-chairman of the Pattern Gift Division, announced.

General campaign chairman Alan Henry echoed Clayton's thoughts saying, "The government can't do everything."

Henry also praised other volunteer service council members Nora Dacus, Mrs. Stephens and Jim Bertram for their efforts in organizing the campaign.

"I want to thank everyone for the interest in helping the residents of the state school. Without personal support, so much would be impossible," Henry said. "I hope we can acquaint the community leadership with the urgent need to build an activity center."

The completed activity center will provide a recreation room for residents. A lounge, hanging fireplaces, kitchen, classroom and outdoor patio are designed by Lubbock architectural firm BGR, Inc. to give residents a chance to enjoy unstructured free time.

ACTIVITIES CENTER REVIEWED — Dr. John Gladden, superintendent of Lubbock State School, left, State House Speaker Bill Clayton and Mrs. Donny Kelsey, director of the school's Volunteer Services, look over an architect's sketch of the proposed activities center at the state school. The drawing was unveiled at a Tuesday night banquet to kick off fund raising efforts for the center. The campaign goal is $314,000, and $91,000 already has been deposited. Newspaper Claims Three Jury Witnesses Coerced

MIDLAND (AP) — Three witnesses to the jail death of Ector County inmate Larry Lozano claim county officials have tried to influence their courtroom testimony, according to a Dallas newspaper.

In its Wednesday editions, the Dallas Times Herald said all three were inmates in the county jail in Odessa Jan. 22, the day Lozano died.

The county's top law enforcement officials, Dist. Atty. John Green and Sheriff Elton Faught, both denied the allegations. Faught said claims that he offered a woman a "deal" to drop charges against her son is a "lie." Green said the reported claims by former Ector County jail inmates are attempts "to get back at me."

An inquest jury convened last April heard testimony from several witnesses and ruled Lozano's death was an accident. Faught claimed Lozano became enraged while in his isolation cell and committed suicide by beating his head against an inch-thick glass window in his cell door.

However, the Times Herald quoted inmate Orlando Molinar's mother as saying Faught offered to reduce an attempted murder charge against her son in return for favorable testimony before the federal grand jury now investigating the same case in Midland for possible civil rights violations.

Anita Molinar said the offer was made

Affidavit Withheld, Ector Official Says

ODESSA (AP) — Ector County District Attorney John Green claims an affidavit containing pertinent data about the jail death of Ector County inmate Larry Lozano was withheld by a state attorney general's investigator, according to a Dallas newspaper.

In its Wednesday editions, the Dallas Morning News quoted Green as saying certain material concerning a state investigation into Lozano's Jan. 22 death was withheld in violation of a subpoena on orders from Attorney General John Hill.

The state inquest jury ultimately ruled Lozano's death accidental. The ruling brought harsh outcries from Mexican-American leaders in Texas, who claim testimony showed Lozano was beaten to death by Ector County authorities.

Ector County Sheriff Elton Faught had claimed Lozano apparently became enraged and committed suicide by beating his head against an inch-thick glass window in the door of his isolation cell.

Green claimed Dan Maeso, formerly Hill's chief investigator on the case and now an assistant U.S. attorney, failed to provide the jury with a deposition given by jailer Gabriel Perez.

Maeso, who is now conducting a federal grand jury investigation into alleged civil rights violations in the same case, told the News Green had not required him to honor a subpoena for the deposition.

"I was investigating for John Hill," he said. "John Hill told me not to report to him."

Group Eyes Jury Probe

WASHINGTON (AP) — With two strikes against them, Mexican-American leaders are launching a last-ditch attempt to have civil rights indictments returned in the Santos Rodriguez case.

The 12-year-old boy was killed July 24, 1973, as he sat handcuffed in a patrol car. Former police officer Darrell Cain was convicted in state court of murder with malice for the slaying and was sentenced to a five-year prison term.

Friday, the Justice Department announced it had decided against a request by Mexican-Americans for dual prosecution of Cain and initiation of proceedings against Ray Arnold, Cain's partner at the time of the shooting.

The statute of limitations on the case runs out Monday.

But Ed Pena, the national League of United Latin American Citizens (LULAC) president, said Tuesday that the Justice Department had given "such strange, such feeble reasons," for not prosecuting Cain that other avenues had to be tried before the Monday expiration date.

The proposed legal avenue involves presenting the case to a federal grand jury in Dallas later this week, according to Pena and Ruben Sandoval, the Texas legal advisor for LULAC. Normally, a U.S. attorney presents cases to the grand jury.

"We're saying that a federal grand jury has the authority to initiate an investigation on its own accord and can return an indictment," Sandoval told The Associated Press in San Antonio on Tuesday. "That indictment is not active, of course, until the U.S. attorney signs it."

Tuesday, U.S. Attorney Ken Mighell in Dallas threw them another curve. He cannot sign it.

"The attorney general...denied me that right," Mighell said, when the Justice Department ruled that the case would not be prosecuted.

Mighell, acknowledging that anyone can petition to appear before a grand jury, said it would take a judge to call the body into session before Tuesday, which in itself "is not an easy thing to do."

"Some of these people live 100 miles away. We normally give them a month's notice" before they have to convene, Mighell said.

"We are not trying in anyway to influence the grand jury," stressed Sandoval who would be one of the LULAC lawyers to present a plea before the grand jury. "This is merely a request for an appearance for a plea. Whether or not the grand jury undertakes anything is strictly under their disgression."

Four members of the Texas House — Democrats Ben Reyes and Craig Washington, both of Houston, plus Matt Garcia and Joe Hernandez, both of San Antonio — are also backing the effort.

Reyes said Tuesday from Houston that the United Nation's Human Rights Commission will be asked in August to investigate "violations of human rights in Texas."

Pena said Tuesday that the Justice Department had already "made up its mind" concerning the Rodriguez case long before Hispanic leaders were able to meet with Carter and Bell. "The announcement Friday was just a defense of a decision it had already made rather than examining the facts.

"The reasons they gave (for not pursuing the case) were out of line," added Pena. "They said the case was too old for prosecution and that the state had already conducted an effective probe.

"Yet a case involving a New York City policeman is months older than the Rodriguez case and the Justice Department is pursuing that one...and whether a five-year prison term is effective is still up in the air. And the other officer, Ray Arnold, has never been brought before a grand jury."

Justice Department spokesman Terrence Adamson said Tuesday that the case of the New York City policeman is "a completely different matter...a state court acquitted him after he shot and killed a fleeing motorist." The federal civil rights case against the policeman is currently in the pre-trial stage, said Adamson.

Pena also said he hoped to meet with Bell before Monday but "that will be impossible," noted Adamson. "The attorney general is out of the country (in Australia) and isn't expected back until after the 28th of this month.

"Besides, I don't know what they could bring to his attention that hasn't already been presented," added Adamson.

At Wit's End...

By ERMA BOMBECK

A lot of mothers this summer are hiring their own children to do jobs around the house, and it's a revelation to find out what kind of a price is being put on things women have always done for nothing.

Babysitting: Toilet trained, 50 cents an hour; spitters and biters, 60 cents; climbers and travelers, 85 cents.

Diaper Changing: Liquids, 50 cents; solids, $1.50.

Cooking: Junk food, 35 cents a serving; opening cans and turning on stove, 50 cents.

Laundry: Machine, 50 cents. No hand washables.

Vacuuming and dusting: Minimum wage scale.

Taking phone messages: (see me).

"What do you mean, 'Out of the question'?" asked her mother.

"I mean, I cannot be expected to take care of the house, babysit, cook, change the hose, provide entertainment, make decisions, bind up wounds, close the windows when it rains, pick up and be a secretary at those prices."

The mother related the story to her husband that night and said, "Frankly, if you'd pay me that much I'd get my old job back."

He said, "Sorry, we're looking for a younger woman."

She ran away from home last week.

The Slim Gourmet

What's better than a flavorful, herb-scented meatloaf, hot from the oven? Answer: the same meatloaf, chilled from the refrigerator, served with a crisp salad, a frosty, light beer or chilled wine, and a fresh fruit dessert. Especially on days when it's too hot to cook...or you're too busy!

Our Slim Gourmet meatloaf recipes are particularly suited to serving cold, because we always make them with the leanest, least-fattening ground meats. Not only lower in calories and cholesterol...they're non-greasy! Fatty meatloaf is particularly unappetizing when cold; those white globules of hardened fat are as unappealing to the eye as they are to the palate.

Today, we've got a sophisticated trio of meatloaves, equally appealing hot or cold, so refrigerate or freeze the extras for another day's dinner. Reheat if the day is chilly, or enjoy cold if it's not. Remember, leftover sliced meatloaf also makes great homemade coldcuts for slimming sandwiches, picnics or luncheon plates.

SAVORY SUMMER BEEF LOAF

1 onion
half a green pepper
1 large carrot
2 tomatoes, fresh, ripe, peeled and diced
(or 8-oz. can stewed tomatoes, undrained)
2 or 3 sprigs parsley
2 tbsps. summer savory, fresh, minced, or 2 tsps. dried summer savory
1 clove garlic
2 tsps. salt (or garlic salt)
¼ tsp. pepper, fresh-ground
1 tsp. horse radish
1 tsp. prepared mustard
2 tsps. Worcestershire sauce
2 eggs (or 4 egg whites, or ½ cup liquid egg substitute)

Shred vegetables, using a hand shredder, or shredder disk of a mixer or food processor. Put shredded vegetables in a large mixing bowl. Stir in seasonings and eggs until well blended. Mix meat in last; blend well. Pack into a loafpan to shape into a loaf, then unmold on a shallow non-stick baking pan.

Bake, uncovered, in a preheated 350-degree oven for 1 hour or more, until a meat thermometer reads 170, well-done. Serve hot or cold, in slices. Or, shape into two smaller loaves and bake 45 to 50 minutes. Freeze the second one and defrost to serve chilled...excellent for sandwiches! Eight servings, about 195 calories each; 180 with egg whites.

SAGE PORK LOAF

2 lbs. pork, lean, fat-trimmed, ground
(or beef-veal-pork mixture, home-ground, fat-trimmed, lean)
2 eggs (or 4 egg whites, or ½ cup low-cholesterol egg substitute)
1 cup quick-cooking rolled oats
1 onion, grated
1 cup applesauce, unsweetened (homemade or canned) optional: 1 clove garlic, minced
2 tsps. salt or garlic salt)
¼ tsp. black pepper
1 tbsp. fresh sage, chopped (or ½ tsp. dried) optional: 2 tbsps. parsley, fresh, minced

Toss ingredients lightly to mix well. Shape into a loaf. Bake, uncovered, in a preheated 350-degree oven one hour and 15 minutes, or until a meat thermometer reads 185, well-done. Serve hot or chilled. Makes eight servings, 285 calories each; 275 with egg whites.

CARAWAY VEAL LOAF

3 slices rye bread, dry
2 lbs. veal, lean, ground
(or beef-veal mixture, home-ground, lean, fat-trimmed)
2 eggs (or 4 egg whites, or ½ cup liquid egg substitute)
¾ cup skim milk
1 onion, grated
¼ cup parsley, chopped
1 clove garlic, minced
2 tbsps. lemon juice
1 tbsp. caraway seeds
2 tsps. salt
(or garlic salt instead of garlic)

Bread must be dry and hard. Process into crumbs in a covered blender or food processor. (Or put the bread in a plastic bag and roll a rolling pin over it.) Combine with remaining ingredients and shape into a loaf. Bake uncovered in a preheated 350-degree oven until a meat thermometer reads 170 degrees, well-done, about 1 hour or 1 hour and 15 minutes. Serve hot or cold. Makes eight servings, 215 calories each; 205 with egg whites.

Opening lead: Ace of ♡.

One type of bridge player believes that he must make all the decisions by himself because his partner is a total idiot. But in successful partnerships, the players respect each other's ability and try to cooperate whenever possible.

At both tables, North-South reached four spades on identical auctions. After South made a game try in diamonds, North upgraded his holding in his partner's second suit and boldly bid the game.

The defense got off to the same start at the two tables. West led the ace of hearts and continued with a low heart to his partner's king. Both Easts found the best defense — they cashed the ace of clubs, on which West followed with the three.

The other East had more faith in his partner. When West followed with a low club, discouraging continuation of the suit, East decided that it was quite likely that West held six clubs for his overcall at the two-level since he was missing two of the top honors. Therefore, there were no more tricks to be had in the suit.

The bidding made it equally unlikely that the defenders could take a diamond trick. So the only hope was that the defenders could score a trump trick. Thus, after the ace of clubs, East reverted to a heart. Declarer was forced to ruff high to prevent West from ruffing, but that promoted a trump trick for the defenders — down one.

Note that East must cash the ace of clubs before leading a third heart. If he fails to do so, declarer simply discards a club on the third heart, and the defenders can get no more than two heart tricks and a ruff.

Your play to the first trick could decide the fate of the contract! A writer once remarked: "There's no such thing as a blind opening lead, only deaf opeining leaders!" ONE-PIECE DRESSING — This one-piece dress plus vest uses a polyester border print for the elasticized-waist dress and a twin print for the vest.

DEAR ABBY

DEAR ABBY: My husband died six years ago. He was a heavy drinker and habitual gambler, and our children knew their father for what he was. I worked all my married years to give our children the necessities. (I have four children — all married now.)

A year ago I married a good man who neither drinks nor gambles. He was divorced and walked out leaving his wife everything, so after our marriage, he moved into my home.

One of my daughters is giving me a hard time. She resents my new husband. She never got along with her father when he was living, but now she says she can't stand to see another man living in her father's house, sleeping in her father's bed, and sitting in her father's chair.

Abby, this husband treats me better than I've ever been treated in my life, and I'm lucky to have him. Why should we go into debt to refurnish the house so my married daughter will feel comfortable when she visits me? I can't take it anymore. What should I do?

SECOND TIME AROUNDER

Dear Second: Tell your daughter that if she can't stand to see another man using the same furniture formerly used by her father, she should spare herself the agony and stay away.

DEAR ABBY: What are some of the most common clues to look for if I already suspect (which I do) that my wife is meeting another man somewhere during the day?

I am not an overly suspicious man, so you will not be generating trouble where none exists.

In this case, asking her will not help.

HAROLD IN BUFFALO

Dear Harold: If a woman gets all dressed up to go "shopping," comes home slightly late and out of breath, has no packages and is wearing her pantyhose inside out, I'd wonder where she'd been.

DEAR ABBY: As a marriage and family counselor, I am disturbed by your response to MINNESOTA MOM, who complained because her 17-year-old daughter displayed "affection" for her boyfriend in public.

While I agree there are certain forms of affection that are inappropriate to demonstrate in public, holding hands and putting arms around each other's waists are not only appropriate to my view, they are warm, lovely sights to see.

An appropriate show of affection is essential to our physical and emotional well-being. I believe that one of the problems in our society today is that there is not enough touching. We are progressively alienating ourselves from each other, and that is why we marriage counselors are so busy seeing people who desperately want to know how to make contact with others.

L.A. MARRIAGE COUNSELOR

Dear Counselor: Minnesota Mom asked me to get the message across to her daughter that it is extremely poor taste for a girl to let a boy "put his hands all over her" in public.

I replied: "All the world may love a lover, but he doesn't have to act his role out in public. A boy who respects a girl will keep his hands OFF her in public, and a girl who respects herself will make sure he does."

Holding hands is a far cry from letting a boy put his hands all over her, which, I repeat, is highly inappropriate in public.

Woodcocks Adjust To China

By C. C. MINICLIER

PEKING (AP) — When U.S. Ambassador Leonard Woodcock and his bride went bike riding recently they had four flat tires. Even in this city of a million bicycle riders, they figure this to be some kind of record.

But the Woodcocks, Washington's representatives in the People's Republic of China, are used to making quick adjustments.

She was a nurse at the American liaison office here when Woodcock, former president of the United Auto Workers Union, arrived last July. They were married April 14, after hosting a lunch for the departing Yugoslav ambassador.

An hour after their wedding, a civil affair costing the equivalent of 10 cents at the local Chinese office, they hosted a Chinese trade delegation which was about to leave for the United States.

Asked where they went for their honeymoon, Woodcock smiled, pointed toward the family quarters in the spacious residence, and said "upstairs."

Sharon Woodcock is still the liaison office nurse, but a new one is coming out this month and she will be able to devote her full time to being the wife of the ambassador.

Although there are no formal relations between the United States and China, each country has a liaison office in the other's capital and some 5,000 American businessmen are expected to visit China this year.

Woodcock, a quiet, thoughtful, soft-spoken man who is 67 years old, headed an American commission to Hanoi in March of 1977 to recover the bodies of American servicemen killed in the Vietnam war. His appointment to Peking was announced two months later.

"I did not accept the post for the title, but I feel that our long-term strategic interests require a normalization of relations between our two countries and I hope to make some small contribution," he told an interviewer.

During each of the previous four evenings he had hosted a reception. But, he noted that receptions, like everything else in China, begin and end on time.

The number of American visitors to China is expected to triple this year, compared to last year, to 15,000 and the trade volume is expected to double, to around $650 million.

"It is amazing how uniformly they express a feeling of affirmative reaction to the Chinese people," he said.

New arrivals find that the ever-present smiles on tourist brochures are just as present on the Great Wall, in the communes, or on the sidewalks of Peking.

China, with a population in excess of 800 million, is "one of the poorest countries per capita in the world, but it is going to be a powrful country," Woodcock said.

"There are no antagonistic interests," he asserted, adding that better Chinese-American relations need not be based "on our concern about the Soviet Union."

When they are not working, Mrs. Woodcock, 35, and her husband rtire to the privacy of their family quarters for quiet reading or talk. Woodcock, who had never been to China before, says he devotes most of his reading to Chinese culture, history and philosophy.

Their formal reception room is decorated in imperial yellow, with bright blues, yellows, oranges and greens in the furniture. The colors are those of the Temple of Heaven Palace near Peking.

Woodcock jokingly says that when his wife moved in last April, "I thought for a while that I would not be able to stay because she brought so many things with her."

During their first month of marriage she not only moved in, but moved the nurse's office to new quarters during her "spare" time.

Woodcock had never seen his bride-to-be until the first Monday morning staff meeting after his arrival.

"She spoke of the passive aggression of Chinese riding bicycles and I thought it was a good phrase," he recalled.

In September, when he became ill, he called the nurse to his quarters for medication.

Lack Of Rail Cars Raises Steel Costs

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Steel industry operating costs are going up because the number of available rail cars is going down, an industry spokesman says. Thomas Church, vice president of Bethlehem Steel, said many producers have been forced to idle their mills because cars were unavailable.

The 70-ton gondola cars, which carry most scrap metal and about half of all finished products, numbered 177,000 in early 1968. But by this year, there were about 132,000 of the long, open cars rolling in the United States.

Tomorrow's Horoscope

By Bernice Bede Osol

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Financial dealings containing elements of risk will not be your cup of tea tomorrow. You could show a tidy profit, however, by sticking to blue chip areas.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Your views and your mate's are not likely to coincide on an important issue tomorrow. If harmony is to be maintained, each must be prepared to compromise.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Where personal gain is the motive tomorrow you could do far better than you expect, even though you may make several foolish moves in the process.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Curb your extravagant impulses tomorrow. Buy only that which you know you can realistically afford. Above all, don't gamble — even for penny ante stakes.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) When it gets down to push and shove tomorrow you're the one who can be relied upon, yet your overt behavior will not lead others to believe it.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) On most occasions your hunches and instincts supply you with accurate feedback, but not tomorrow. Be wise. Depend solely upon your logic.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Where your resources are concerned, you will operate at extremes tomorrow. Some matters you'll manage with expertise, others you'll fumble like a novice.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Just because you're not apt to be successful on your first effort tomorrow is no excuse to toss in the towel. Regroup. Behave like the winner you are.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Tomorrow's experiences may be somewhat unusual. You could be disappointed where expectations are high, and yet benefit from a source you didn't count upon.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) In a joint venture where you have something of value at stake with a friend, try not to jump to conclusions tomorrow. It would cause unnecessary misunderstanding.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Guard against a tendency to rely upon persons who you know from experience can't deliver. Self-sufficiency is the answer.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Situations you personally manage tomorrow will be successfully executed. Matters left to inexperienced underlings could get fouled-up.

Your Birthday

July 20, 1978

Involvements in several joint ventures are likely for you this coming year. One may prove to be a real fizzle, but another shows exceptionally high promise.

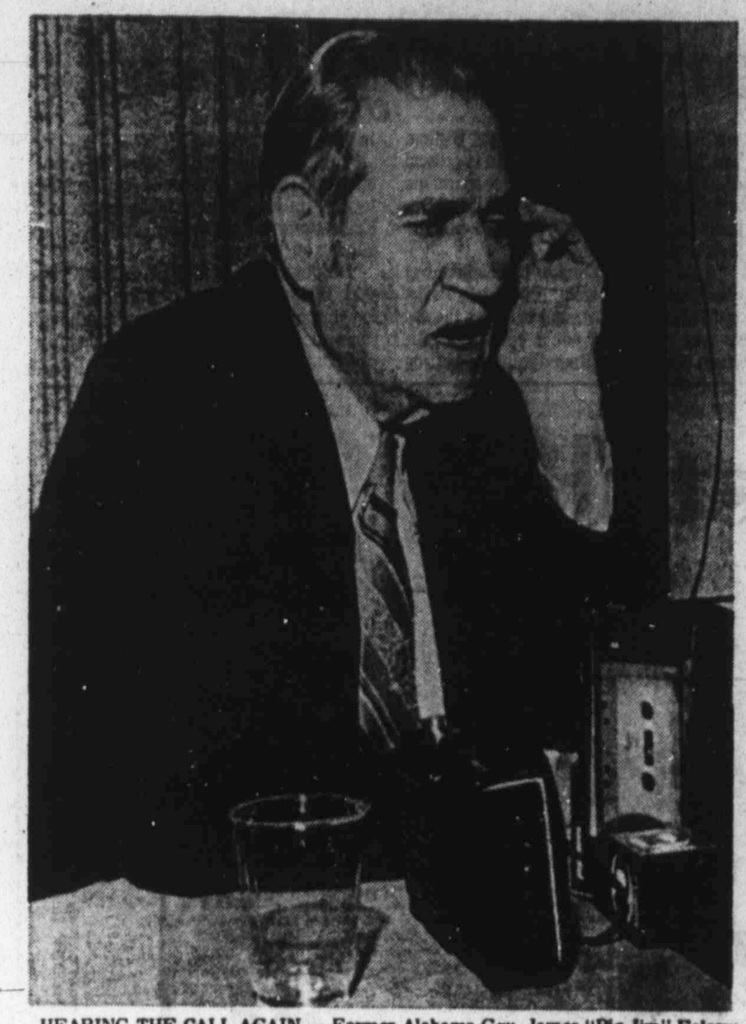
Folsom Eyes Governor's Seat



HEARING THE CALL AGAIN — Former Alabama Gov. James "Big Jim" Folsom announced his latest campaign for the office at a press conference in Mobile, Ala, this week. Folsom, now 69, is legally blind and nearly deaf. (AP Laserphoto)

MOBILE, Ala. (AP) — Former Gov. James "Big Jim" Folsom is legally blind and nearly deaf, but he still hears the calliope call of the political merry-go-round. And he's made it clear his latest campaign for governor is no "last hurrah."

The once gallumphing giant, whose mopbucket populism brought him two terms as Alabama governor in 1946 and 1954, raised his 6-foot-8 frame in front of a dozen reporters for his campaign kickoff here Monday.

He didn't promise to take that mop and clean out the scalawags in Montgomery, as he once did. Instead, he allowed that he had a few prize issues, the main one being to get the lawyers out of the legislature.

The reporters, mostly curious, dutifully listened.

It's been this way for Folsom during the past several election years — brief runs for president in 1976, for governor in 1974, for the Senate in 1972.

Now 69, Folsom appears as a looming, friendly legend.

With him are his "friend and neighbor," Ben Farrah, who serves as a kind of campaign press agent, and Folsom's wife, Jamelle, a beaming dark-eyed brunette. She happily recalls those days "when we drove down the highways in long black cars."

Folsom recalls them, too. His loudest chortle of pride at his kickoff came when a question — which Farrah whisperingly asked a reporter to ask — was tendered about "mail box roads."

Folsom said he wanted to "re-establish mail box roads," or roads to homes which now are reached on dirt trails. He also said his second administration led the nation in opening interstates.

"We were No. 1 on interstates," he said, "and now we're No. 51, if there is a 51, or 50 if there's not."

As for those legislator-lawyers, Folsom said it amounts to a person being in both the legislative and judicial branches of government and violates the constitution.

"For the past 175 years this nation has operated as a fraud dictatorship of the judicial branch," he said. "If we had had the separation of powers, we wouldn't have had the War of 1812, or the Civil War, or World War I or World War II, the Korean War or that recent mess down at Indochina. ... That's how important it is."

There were those at Monday's campaign kick-off who remember "Kissin' Jim," the name he got because of his habit of kissing the young ladies at campaign rallies.

Jim remembered, too, and asked, "Are there any ladies here? I can't see now. I believe they said there were some ladies here."

Ex-Spouse Policies Can Be Obtained

By LARGENT PARKS JR.

Insurance Adviser

QUESTION — I am divorced and have custody of three children who are 3, 7 and 9 years old. My ex-husband must pay child support of $400 a month until the youngest reaches age 18.

Can I buy life insurance to guarantee that I will continue to receive those payments for my children if my ex-husband dies?

ANSWER — You cannot take out insurance on your ex-husband's life unless he agrees and signs the application. If he cooperates, you might consider a 15-year decreasing term plan.

Such a policy will decrease in death benefits each year. After 15 years, the policy expires.

Let's assume you want $72,000 of protection (15 years times $400 a month) and that your ex-husband is 40 years old. The cost of the policy would be about $260 a year.

If you can pay the premiums, it is best that you be the owner of the policy. That will enable you to control the naming of the beneficiary; otherwise, you will have no assurance that the money will be payable to you in the event of his death.

If you can afford to put aside more money, you might consider a permanent form of life insurance that would build cash values. This way you not only have the protection if your ex-husband dies. Should he live out the 15 years, you would be able to cash in the policy when the children are grown.

Again assuming his age to be 40, you could buy $72,000 of permanent life insurance at an annual cost of about $1,400 a year.

Fifteen years later, the policy's cash value would be about $20,000 — very close to the total amount you would have paid in. Instead of going down each year, the amount of coverage would remain constant at $72,000.

Consider one more point: What if your ex-husband becomes disabled? You might consider a disability income policy that would pay $400 a month should he suffer a disabling sickness or accident.

This type of insurance, however, generally would not build cash values.

QUESTION — As a young working man with a family to support, I know I need a lot of life insurance. But I can't afford much right now. How can I get the most for the least money?

ANSWER — Buy term insurance that can be converted later. As time goes on, chances are you can afford to convert portions of the policy to permanent life insurance. As noted above, the advantage of a permanent plan is that it builds cash values — money that can help supplement your retirement.

Convertible term guarantees that you will be able to convert your policy no matter what your health.

If you are about 25 years old, you could buy $100,000 of 10-year renewable and convertible term for about $300 a year. A decreasing term policy costs even less, about $200 a year for $100,000 of 20-year decreasing term.

QUESTION — Do housewives and single people need life insurance?

ANSWER — Death usually brings large and unexpected cost: funeral and burial expenses, death taxes, and medical bills associated with the illness or accident causing the demise.

Deceased housewives (or househusbands) and singles incur these costs just as do breadwinners. Life insurance can provide their families or friends with cash to meet the death-related expenses.

The price of hiring outsiders to perform a homemaker's services is high. If there are young children, the surviving parent may have to pay for babysitters and nursery schools. Maid, gardeners and others may have to be hired, whether there are children or not.

Life insurance for both husband and wife should be a part of every family's financial plan.

Many single people will eventually marry. If they buy life insurance when they are young and healthy, they wind up dollars ahead.

Anthony Image Set For Coin

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Treasury Department has thrown in the towel, and no longer will oppose putting the image of suffragette Susan B. Anthony on a new $1 coin due for distribution within a year.

"We want the coin, no matter whose likeness is on it, and we don't think it is worthwhile to fight over it," Stella Hackel, director of the U.S. Mint, said after testifying in the Senate Banking Committee Monday.

The government had wanted the image of "Miss Liberty" on the new coin, but women's rights organizations fought for commemorating Susan B. Anthony instead.

Supporters of the Anthony dollar said authorizing legislation to replace the unpopular Eisenhower dollar could be approved by both Senate and House banking committees within the next month, and the coins could be jingling in American pockets — and coin machines — by mid-1979.

The new coin would weigh only 8.1 grams, compared with the Eisenhower dollar's 23 grams. It would be smaller than a half dollar and larger than a quarter, and would have an 11-sided inner border on both sides.

Lake Texoma Sandbass Face Shortage Of Food

DENISON (UPI) — Unlike many of his higher-horsepowered competitors, the dean of Texas fishing guides will never be caught up a creek without a paddle.

At 69, Max Eggleston is stubborn and successful enough to earn a living on Lake Texoma — the nation's 10th largest reservoir — with a 25-horsepower motor and a pair of oars, or "ignorant sticks" as he calls them, and without the trolling motors which other guides take for granted ("I had two and gave 'em away").

For 35 years Eggleston has ventured onto the windswept, 5.3 million surface acre impoundment an average of 250 days per year, often enough to know where to find fish and to know the Red River impoundment is changing.

"Biologists don't always agree with me, but I'm on that lake every day and I get to see it," he said. "We need a miracle and a couple of mild winters to get back in the threadfin shad business. We're in trouble. I'm sure it's a crisis, no doubt."

The crunch is in the sandbass population of the Texas-Oklahoma border lake, a population which attracted tourists from across the nation.

Sandbass depend upon young threadfins for food. Adult threadfins reach 4 inches in length and are too big for the sandies to eat. However, their spawn produces the young threadfins which millions of sandies chase to the surface in a feeding frenzy in all but the coldest months.

Recent winters have been harsh, causing many young threadfins to die. But the complicating element has been the successful introduction into Texoma of striped bass, a hearty species large enough to eat adult threadfins upon which the sandies depend for restocking their own diet.

Eggleston compares stripers to sharks.

"Nature designed him as a feeding machine," he said.

As a result, stripers prosper while sandies suffer and Eggleston's customers, who generally are on the lake at sunrise and back to the dock by 2 p.m. to evade the heat, request he guide them to the stripers which were not available until a few years ago.

"They (sandies) have to scrounge to get something to eat," he said. "They're skinny, not fat like they used to be. Now they surface in groups that won't cover this room."

Elsewhere the stripers, which have grown to the 30-pound range at Texoma, are disturbing the black bass which previously survived alongside the sandies.

"All last fall our black bass holes were full of stripers. They're not eating the blacks, they're just taking over their territory. Nothing is sacred anymore.

"I think the blacks will always be here. The stripers do not eat the blacks but they upset their routine, their habits. What was normal for so many years is not normal anymore.

"The sandies brought more fishermen to this lake than black bass did. There were times when you'd see 200, 300, 400 boats and all were catching sandies. Now everybody wants stripers. One day last August I counted 500 boats (in one striper area) and quit counting and there must have been that many more."

In addition to his admittedly hardheaded habits, some of Eggleston's independent ideas have brought him opposition, which he takes in stride.

He forsees the day when the Corps of Engineers lake will be drained — "I want 'em to drain it" — idled in the sun for a year and then replanted with vegetation capable of supporting a variety of species. Area reaction was not surprising.

"I thought they were going to tar and feather me!"

But still he is respected for his experience and views on conservation. Eggleston is against tournament bass fishing, which he considers tainted. He is critical of bass clubs which sponsor tournaments and of the Texas Parks and Wildlie Department, which he says often takes the path of least resistence.

"A lot of cover (brush) in this lake has disappeared," he said. "The Texas Parks and Wildlife Department is taking the easy way out. They could come up with much better ideas than dumping old tires in our lake."

From the time in 1943 when he gazed upon the rapidly filling lake and decided to give up his job as a flight instructor, Eggleston says he has only scratched out a living on Texoma.

"Guiding itself is a labor of love," he said. "If you want air conditioning and for your wife to have a little something, you better have something else going for you."

Sports Group Makes Offer

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — Sportsystems Corp., a diversified firm with interests in the sports world, has offered to buy Niagara Frontier Services Inc., owner of several food store chains, for almost $80 million.

The two companies said Monday that Sportsystems, a privately held, family-owned firm reorganized from the old Emprise Co., was offering $36 a share for the approximately 2.2 million shares of NFS stock. News of the acquisition sent Niagara stock soaring Monday on the American Stock Exchange, where it closed at $31.625 a share. The stock had closed Friday at slightly more than $21.

NFS, owner of Tops supermarkets as well as B-Kwik and Wilson Farms stores, had announced Friday that acquisition negotiations were under way but declined to name the other party.

Sportsystems is the successor company to Emprise, which was convicted in 1972 of concealing ownership of a Las Vegas casino. Several of the company's business associates, identified by federal authorities as organized crime figures, were also convicted in that case.

Because it is privately owned, Sportsystems earnings are not reported to the public, but a spokesman said the company's revenues would approximately double as a result of the acquisition. NFS reported a profit of $7.3 million on revenue of $350.9 million for the year ended June 25, 1977.

Communists Regain Power In San Marino

ROME (AP) — A Communist-Socialist coalition has taken over the government of San Marino, the tiny republic in the mountains of eastern Italy.

The Christian Democrats, which controlled the government in recent years, are still the largest party with 26 of the 60 seats in the Great and General Council. But they were unable to form a majority coalition.

The Communists and Socialists have 31 seats, a majority of two. The Communists were last in power from 1947 to 1957, also in coalition with the Socialists.

Young Says He Will Come Back To Political Prisoner Question

PARIS (AP) — Ambasssador Andrew Young says the timing of his remark about U.S. political prisoners may have been wrong but he'll have more to say about "what is a political prisoner in the United States."

"I didn't overstate the number of people," America's first black ambassador to the United Nations said in an interview in Geneva with the International Herald Tribune. "It was a casual statement which perhaps should not have been made, especially not at this time, and I'm reluctant to discuss it now. But I assure you that I'll come back to the question of what is a political prisoner in the United States."

Last week, as the Carter administration was severely criticizing the Soviet government for putting dissidents Anatoly Shcharansky and Alexander Ginzburg on trial, Young told the French Socialist newspaper Le Matin: "There are hundreds, perhaps thousands of political prisoners in the United States."

Young claimed he was quoted out of context, but President Carter and Secretary of State Cyrus Vance reprimanded him. There also were demands in Congress for his dismissal and an impeachment resolution in the House of Representatives which was voted down overwhelmingly.

"I accepted the rebuke," Young told Jonathan Power of the Herald Tribune. "I understood that it was upsetting to have that remark lifted out of an interview and left to give the impression that I did not understand the significance of the Shcharansky trial and that I was not in accord with the strong feelings that had been expressed by President Carter, Secretary Vance and others.

"But looked at in its full context, I was trying to address the trial of Shcharansky in such a way that it was not just an anti-Russian comment. Remember, I was communicating to a leftist French newspaper whose readership would tend to discredit any critique made by the Americans on the grounds that we are just playing domestic politics or that this is just another chapter in the cold war rhetoric.

Power told Young that "many people, including, of course, Carter, felt you overstated the case."

"The overstatement was there," Young replied, "and I guess it was particularly bad to equate the Soviet system of justice with the system of justice in the United States. I don't think those two can be equated.

"The point I was making in the interview was that the process of human rights development in societies can be similar even when the societies are different."

Asked if Carter's criticism hurt him, Young said:

"It hurts, only because I am anxious over the possibility of having hurt my country or President Carter. But I still believe that most of the things that I have been criticized for were right and in the long run one of these days, maybe a year from now or so, it might be nice to go back and recall some of the scandalous headlines. I think you will find that a lot of them were pretty inaccurate and at the time served some purpose."

Brokers' Short-Sale Gimmick Raises Questions On Ethics

By PHILLIP GREER
And MYRON KANDEL

We've reported in the past on how option markets are used by stock brokers to, in effect, create their own money — cash they can use almost as easily as the stuff printed by Uncle Sam. For the most part, these machinations can have an unnatural effect on the market, giving the appearance of active trading when nothing much is really happening, but they have little long-term effect on the investing public.

We've come across one technique, though, that's popular with a number of brokers — but could cause trouble for everybody else who can't take advantage of it. It's all strictly legal, but it raises some serious questions of ethics and propriety.

The gimmick centers on short-selling. Normally, that means selling stock that's borrowed from somebody else in the hope that it will go down and can be replaced at a cheaper price, with the difference going into the seller's pocket. It's usually a very risky business, but in this case it makes no difference whether the stock goes up or down because the options allow the broker to protect himself completely, with as much as nine months to use the money that's been generated.

Here's how it's done: Take a stock that has both put and call options trading in the listed option markets. When the stock is near a "strike price" — the price at which the option provides for the stock to be bought or sold — sell the stock short, buy a call and sell a put. The cost of the call and the amount received for the put should pretty much balance each other — any difference would be small. If the stock goes up, the call, which enables its owner to buy the stock at a given price, will go up enough to offset the loss on the short sale. If the stock goes down, the odds are the put will be exercised — the seller will have to buy the stock at the option (higher) price, which is OK with him because he just uses it to replace the shares sold short.

The net effect to the original seller is a washout — everything balances out — but look what happens in the meantime. The short sale itself brings in cash. If a public trader sells short, he can't use the cash because the broker will hold it as security against the short sale. But if the short-seller is the broker himself, the cash can be used just like any other money. It can pay for other securities, it can be loaned to customers or it can be invested to collect interest. When the options expire or are exercised, the whole process is just begun all over again (if the prices are favorable.)

If the stock is a high-priced one, like IBM, the process can generate a lot of cash with virtually no risk or cost (brokers don't pay themselves commission). There are charges made against brokers' accounts, but those are mostly bookkeeping entries that don't mean much because the whole position will be reduced to zero over a period of time.

For the public, though, the practice brings up some ticklish questions. For one thing, the short sales tend to hinder advances in stock prices (or declines for that matter, because it doesn't matter which way the stock is moving, although it's harder to make short sales in a down market). In the big market rally in April and in upswings since, stocks with both put and call options trading have run into heavy trading whenever they reach a strike price. That's largely because brokers jump in to sell short and build up those piles of cash. It's only when they get finished, or are overwhelmed by buying as some of them were in April, that the stock can continue on its way. In the meantime, the investor who owns the stock can do nothing but wait.

On a level that's probably a lot more significant, some brokers, we're told, use this technique in stocks that their own research departments are recommending for purchase. We've had calls from a couple of brokers who've complained of just that problem.

The brokers "justify" the seeming conflict with the claim that the short sales are only meant to take advantage of market conditions of the moment and have nothing to do with the investment merits of the stock (although the positions can last as long as nine months). But the fact is that brokers sometimes find themselves selling short the same stocks they are telling their customers to buy.

The next time the market takes off and your stock acts like it's glued down, take a look at the option market. If the stock has both puts and calls trading, it could be that some brokers are busy running their own little "printing presses."

Faubus Plans To Sell Home

HUNTSVILLE, Ark. (UPI) — Former Gov. Orval Faubus has quit his job as a bank teller and will begin working full-time to sell his hilltop mansion.

Faubus, 68, announced earlier this year he would sell the 11-room house and surrounding 70 acres because he was moving to another state for his health.

Monday he said he had left the Bank of Huntsville and he and his wife Elizabeth would try to sell the home through their contacts.

The house had been listed for $1.1 million with a real estate agency in Rogers, but the contract was canceled on the advice of Faubus' lawyer.

Faubus and real estate agent Jim Trosper both said the split was the result of a dispute about news articles quoting Trosper about his dealings with the Faubuses on price listings for the mansion.

Trosper said Monday there were no ill feelings, but that he was "just bitter and disappointed that we spent thousands of dollars in an attempt to sell the home."

Trio Influenced, Paper Claims

June 30 while she was visiting her son at the jail.

"He (Faught) propped his feet up on his desk and told me Orlando would have to testify before a federal grand jury since he was subpoenaed," she said. "...That's when he said 'I guess he wouldn't want to help me, would he?' I really didn't know what he was driving at, though."

She said Faught then told her that if her son didn't talk. "We might be able to drop the charges if he wanted." Mrs. Molinar said she realized then that Faught was offering a deal. Last week, she said she told the Justice Department of the conversation.

Faught called the story a "lie" and said, "She came in here mad because he (Orlando) got a subpoena and didn't want him to go over there (Midland) and testify. I told her I didn't have anything to do with his testifying, that he would have to answer the subpoena. And that was it."

Ted Abel — quoted by the newspaper through a female friend — said he was able to negotiate a 10-year cut in his sentence in return for testimony that would be favorable to law enforcement officials.

"The DA (Green) started bargaining at 15 years," Abel reportedly said. "He wouldn't come down until a week before the Lozano inquest. He then offered me 10 years and said that was his 'rock-bottom' deal."

A transcript of the inquest shows Abel, now serving five years, did not claim to have actually seen Lozano die. However, he disputed the testimony of other prisoners who said the Mexican-American was abused by jailers before his death.

The newspaper quoted sources as saying Abel's statements had been turned over to the U.S. Justice Department and he would be subpoenaed to testify before a federal grand jury now probing the same incident for possible civil rights violations.

Abel, contacted by the Times Herald Tuesday, said he would deny making any such statements.

Vickey Day, another inmate at the time Lozano died, said she was pressured by authorities to give testimony favorable to the sheriff's department.

However, she said she testified that she watched as one deputy pinned Lozano's knee behind his back. While the deputy bounced up and down on the struggling inmate's neck, she said she saw another kick him "in the area of the face."

Green Tuesday denied all allegations made by the inmates. He said no witnesses had been tampered with or pressured to his knowledge.

"They're ex-convicts trying to get back at me," he said. "It's not true. It's all a joke...The U.S. attorneys aren't investigating me..."

Ector DA

tin Tuesday, Hill said, "That is ridiculous. I haven't withheld anything from anybody." Hill said he did not receive Maeso's investigative material until after Lozano's inquest.

Green said he plans to subpoena Perez and Hill's records to allow the Ector County grand jury to prove further leads in determining if Lozano was actually abused by police.

The newsman, Paul Pryor, was ordered to appear at an Ector County grand jury to convene Monday morning. In a Monday evening newscast, Pryor reportedly claimed that sources close to the attorney general and the current grand jury have said several indictments have already been prepared in connection with the Lozano case, and that the indictments will name some Ector County officials. The report also claimed sources had told the station that Hill's office planned a close examination of the power structure in the county.

But District Judge R.L. McKim said he would take the request concerning Hill under advisement.

School Lunch Hike Sought

Superintendent Ed Irons has proposed a nickel increase in Lubbock Independent School District lunch prices for the 1978-79 year. The district's board of trustees will consider the proposal Thursday.

The board meets at 7:15 a.m. in the assembly room of the school system's administration building, 1628 19th St.

Irons said the five-cent hike in school cafeteria prices is needed "in order to offset the increased food and labor cost." In the past year alone, he said, the cost of most food items has gone up 15 percent to 40 percent.

The proposal would raise the price of an elementary lunch from 50 cents to 55 cents; of a secondary lunch, from 60 cents to 65 cents; of an elementary employee's lunch, from 75 cents to 80 cents; of a secondary employee's lunch, from 85 cents to 90 cents; and of a visiting adult's lunch, from $1 to $1.05.

Lubbock school lunch prices were last raised in August, 1976.

A DAILY MESSAGE FROM

The Newspaper Bible®

Mark 9:20-37, The Living Bible

20 So they brought the boy, but when he saw Jesus the demon convulsed the child horribly, and he fell to the ground writhing and foaming at the mouth.
21 "How long has he been this way?" Jesus asked the father. And he replied, "Since he was very small,
22 And the demon often makes him fall into the fire or into water to kill him. Oh, have mercy on us and do something if You can."
23 "If I can?" Jesus asked. "Anything is possible if you have faith."
24 The father instantly replied, "I do have faith; oh, help me to have more!"
25 When Jesus saw that the crowd was growing .He rebuked the demon. "O demon of deafness and dumbness," He said, "I command you to come out of this child and enter him no more!"
26 Then the demon screamed terribly and convulsed the boy again and left him; and the boy lay there limp and motionless, to all appearance dead. A murmur ran through the crowd—"He is dead."
27 But Jesus took him by the hand and helped him to his feet and he stood up and was all right!
28 Afterwards, when Jesus was alone in the house with His disciples, they asked Him, "Why couldn't we cast that demon out?"
29 Jesus replied, "Cases like this require prayer."
30,31 Leaving that region they traveled through Galilee where He tried to avoid all publicity in order to spend more time with His disciples, teaching them. He would say to them, "I, the Son of Mankind, am going to be betrayed and killed and three days later I will return to life again."
32 But they didn't understand and were afraid to ask Him what He meant.
33 And so they arrived at Capernaum. When they were settled in the house where they were to stay He asked them, "What were you discussing out on the road?"
34 But they were ashamed to answer, for they had been arguing about which of them was the greatest!
35 He sat down and called them around Him and said, "Anyone wanting to be the greatest must be the least—the servant of all!"
36 Then He placed a little child among them; and taking the child in His arms He said to them,
37 "Anyone who welcomes a little child like this in My name is welcoming Me, and anyone who welcomes Me is welcoming My Father who sent Me!"

Engineer Expects To Hit Well Near Crystal City

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Crystal City's odds of hitting a wildcat gas well are "50-50" — better than normal in the risky business of wildcatting, says the consulting engineer in the gas-starved city's proposal for a federally funded drilling project.

"I can't overemphasize the risk," said San Antonio petroleum engineer George Ozuna Jr. "Any well drilling operation is risky. But this is less risky than most.

"This is no pie in the sky proposal. This is a project supported and recommended by people who are specialists in their field. This is a virgin gas field and not too many people know about it. I'm very confident," he added.

Lo-Vaca Gathering Co. shut off the natural gas supply to the city-owned gas system last Sept. 23 because of an unpaid $800,000 debt.

Most of the town's 8,100 residents, many of them poor Mexican-American migrant workers, have been forced to use wood for heating and cooking. Others have turned to butane and propane.

Ironically, Crystal City sits in the middle of Zavala County's rich natural gas fields. That's why the city is seeking a $650,000 federal grant to acquire gas leases and drill six wells. Crystal City would provide another $318,000, borrowed against the producing wells, to build a pipeline.

The local office of the Department of Housing and Urban Development has approved the preliminary application. The Middle Rio Grande Development Council, which oversees disbursement of federal grants, has approved the full application. The final decision will be made in Washington.

Ozuna's geologists have pinpointed 17 sites in the county where geological formations indicate possible gas deposits. None is inside the city limits, the nearest being about five miles away.

Geologists estimate that a successful well would produce up to 15 million cubic feet of gas per month for 22-55 years. City officials hope to hit two wells in the six attempts, which they feel would make the city energy self-sufficient. That's considered vital in this Raza Unida Party-controlled county.

"A few inches either way could make all the difference. I didn't neglect to tell the city fathers they could drill six dry holes," said Ozuna. "But if they use seismic exploration, it should bring the odds to 50-50. I'm almost confident enough to say the odds are even better. One outfit has hit eight of nine wells in Zavala County by using seismic exploration."

A San Antonio oil and gas geologist said statistics have shown the odds of hitting a wildcat gas well are three out of 10.

The unique concept of federal dollars financing a city's risky search for natural gas might cause problems, said Frank Bowie, program manager for HUD's local community development division. Other officials say the Raza Unida connection will not help either.

"It's an unusual case from the standpoint that we've never had a city request something of this nature. Since it is the first one, I would suspect there would be some problems," said Bowie.

Bowie's office provides recommendations on the application before sending it to Washington.

Raul Flores, Crystal City's city manager, said city and county officials fear large utility and oil companies will attempt to kill the project to prevent a rash of towns from becoming energy self-sufficient. Officials also fear Raza Unida foes will hurt the grant.

Neighboring Carrizo Springs, a town of 8,500 only 11 miles away in gas-producing Dimmit County, is watching Crystal City's application with great interest, since it is also eligible for such a grant.

"We are very interested," said Carrizo Springs City Manager A.C. Gonzalez. "The whole area is attempting to find a way to lessen the load on the people. If they are going to use federal dollars to develop a cheap gas supply, we're very interested in that, as well."

Eagle Pass, which is about 45 miles southwest of Crystal City, is also eligible for one of the economic development grants.

Skylab Gets Closer To Normal Position

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — America's 85-ton Skylab, wobbling in a dangerous path around the earth since July 8, may be a step closer to getting back into a minimum drag attitude that will keep it from prematurely plunging back to the ground.

Scientists at Johnson Space Center were continuing a series of maneuvers today designed ultimately to return the huge satellite to the orbital attitude or position it held prior to July 8 when a power failure on board caused it to spin out of control.

Controllers have tried since then to stop the giant space lab from its erratic movement.

JSC spokesman Charles Redmond said an overheating problem aboard the craft caused one of two sets of batteries to lose power, shutting down the three gyroscopes.

Scientists hoped to complete starting up the gyros today and prepare for the first of several commands designed to return the craft to proper attitude.

When the gyros reach 80 per cent full power, Redmond said, and the space lab becomes properly aligned with all solar panels facing the sun, controllers will give the craft a command to hold its position.

Controllers then plan to study behavior of the craft before making the final adjustments to cut down the atmospheric drag that is forcing the Skylab toward a potentially hazardous return to earth.

JSC controllers changed Skylab's attitude on June 11 to put it in a more favorable drag position.

Returning it to that position is necessary if the satellite is to remain in space until a Space Shuttle crew can boost it into a higher orbit late next year.

NASA officials say if the maneuvers are not successful, more than 400 pieces of Skylab could plunge back to earth as early as next spring. Space officials say there is a remote possibility some of the wreckage could come down over inhabited areas.

A booster rocket would keep the space lab in orbit another five years, officials said.

Greek-Americans Lobby For Arms Embargo

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Carter administration, which overcame the influential Jewish lobby when it won the right to sell warplanes to Saudi Arabia, is heading for a confrontation with another ethnic group this week — the Greek-Americans.

And although this lobby is not as well-known as Israel's, some on Capitol Hill think the Greek-Americans may thwart Carter's push for Congress to end the three-year-old U.S. arms embargo against Turkey.

The Senate is set to consider lifting the embargo on Thursday as an amendment to next year's security assistance bill. If the Turks win in the upper chamber, the House would have to agree on the action.

Carter says lifting the embargo is a top foreign policy priority for the remainder of the 95th Congress and the small community of three million Greek-Americans has been working assiduously to block the move. They draw disproportionate strength from several factors.

One is that, unlike most Americans, they know and care passionately about the root of the embargo, the Turkish invasion of Cyprus in 1974. Another is their unity centered in the Greek Orthodox church.

Cyprus, until 1960, was a British colony. Its 600,000 residents were four-fifths Greek and one-fifth Turkish. The Turkish minority complained bitterly about discrimination by the Greek majority, particularly after the island became independent in 1960.

Turkey invaded in 1974 when a victorious Greek-Cypriot coup threatened to unite the island with Greece. Turkey said it had to protect Cyprus' independence and the rights of Turkish Cypriots. But when civilian rule returned to Greece and the Cypriot rebel government fell, Turkish troops pushed onward to control 40 percent of Cyprus' territory. They have not withdrawn.

Greek-Americans called on Congress to enforce the provisions of American arms export law that prohibited Turkey from using American-supplied weapons for an invasion. Congress imposed the embargo in 1975. Although it has been modified since to allow some sales to Turkey, it is still a major irritant between the United States and Turkey.

The Greeks, which spent 400 years under Turkish rule during the Ottoman Empire, are still angered by Turkish treatment of the Greek Orthodox church in its ancient headquarters, Istanbul.

The Turks repress the church, says George Charles, an active Greek Orthodox layman, Washington lawyer, and general counsel for the United Hellenic-American Congress. The organization recently has placed full-page advertisements in 28 large U.S. newspapers urging Congress to maintain the embargo.

Charles thinks the church is one of the key factors in making the Greek-American lobby potent and cohesive. The church — its leaders and clergy — are actively involved in lobbying on the Cyprus question.

There is no comparable Turkish lobby working on Congress. That job falls to the State Department, which has always resisted the arms embargo.

In the State Department view, which has become the administration position, the embargo ignores several realities.

One is the critical importance of Turkey as a NATO ally. Its army of 490,000 men is the second largest in the alliance, protecting the southern flank.

Secondly, the State Department says, the embargo has not worked. The Turks have insisted they will not respond to pressure. Instead, they have hinted about loosening ties to NATO and seeking arms elsewhere.

State Department counselor Matthew Nimetz says "we have won the intellectual battle on this issue," pointing to a sheaf of newspaper editorials favoring the administration position on lifting the embargo.

But in Congress support for the embargo is strong.

On Capitol Hill, leaders of the pro-embargo forces have become known as "The Gang of Four." Sens. Paul Sarbanes, D-Md., and Thomas Eagleton, D-Mo., and Reps. John Brademas, D-Ind., and Benjamin Rosenthal, D-N.Y.

Sarbanes and Brademas are leading Greek-American politicians. Brademas, as the House Majority Whip, exercises considerable influence in the chamber where the critical first vote on the embargo will occur.

Carter Energy Plan Awaits House Action

WASHINGTON (AP) — The first part of President Carter's 15-month-old energy plan, designed to conserve dwindling petroleum and natural gas supplies by forcing industries to burn more coal, awaits House action after winning lopsided Senate approval.

The bill has broad support in the House, but other, more controversial parts of Carter's plan remain in serious trouble — raising doubts that Congress will supply much help in meeting the energy conservation goals Carter promised in Bonn, West Germany, at the end of a seven-nation economic summit on Monday.

Both Carter's proposal for a domestic crude oil tax and a proposed compromise on natural gas pricing — the two major parts of the energy package — still face major opposition in Congress.

Tuesday's 92-6 Senate approval of the broadly supported coal conversion measure would prohibit most new power plants from burning natural gas or petroleum and give the government the power to order certain industries to switch to coal. The bill also would ban residential outdoor gaslights by Jan. 1, 1982.

House leaders say they don't plan to call a vote on the measure immediately. They will await the arrival of at least three other parts of the energy package — dealing with natural gas prices, energy conservation and electric rates — before acting.

The fifth section, which includes Carter's controversial proposal for a crude oil tax that would add about seven cents a gallon to the price of gasoline, remains stalled in a House-Senate conference committee.

Few observers expect that the tax portion can be revived before Congress recesses for the November congressional elections — although sources, asking to remain anonymous, said on Tuesday a "lame duck" session after the elections to deal with the tax measures is a growing possibility.

And the natural-gas compromise, calling for deregulation of gas prices in 1985, may never make it to the House if it can't survive a possible Senate filibuster expected to begin later this month.

"Natural gas will be a tough fight," said Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., chairman of the Senate Energy Committee. "And if you knock out natural gas, you've knocked out half of the president's program."

However, Jackson said that Tuesday's vote at least signals some long-awaited progress on the Carter energy plan. "At least we've found the tunnel. And there may even be some light," he said.

Carter, at the conclusion of the economic summit in Bonn, talked about raising U.S. oil prices to world-market levels — now about $13.50 a barrel — by late 1980, which would be accomplished by the crude oil tax. The president also promised to work toward reducing U.S. oil imports by 2.5 million barrels a day.

Administration officials said Tuesday that while certain direct steps were available to Carter to achieve these goals, such as import fees or quotas, he was still counting on Congress to pass the bulk of his energy program — including the crude oil tax.

Backers of the so-called "coal conversion" bill approved in the Senate said it could reduce oil imports — now at about 8 million barrels a day — by as much as 1.3 million barrels daily. But critics said they doubted the savings would exceed 250,000 barrels a day, citing numerous exemptions in the bill and claiming that many industries are switching to coal anyway. A barrel of oil holds 42 gallons. U.S. oil consumption now is supported at least 43 percent by foreign oil.

Newborn Tot Found Near Rural Road

FRESNO, Calif. (AP) — A month-premature baby was tossed naked into dry grass along a rural roadside, where hours later she was found bruised, scratched and covered by ant bites, authorities said.

But officials at Valley Children's Hospital said Tuesday that the little girl, dubbed Jane Doe, was recovering from her injuries and was in good condition.

"Whole bunches of people want to adopt her already," said Marilyn Hutchison, patient care coordinator at the hospital. "One nurse wants to adopt her, too. She's a cutie."

Tulare County's adoption agency received eight calls Tuesday after the baby's plight was publicized.

"Everybody's interested in that little baby," said Truth Rudd, adoption supervisor. "It's all concern for the baby, sympathetic calls."

Sheriff's deputies reported no success in efforts to find the mother, who they believe discarded the child Sunday shortly after birth.

The infant was born about a month prematurely and weighed 3 pounds, 13 ounces, nurse Margaret Casaburri said.

The baby was tossed into grass in the Sierra Nevada foothills south of Fresno, apparently from a car, sheriff's deputies said. Her umbilical cord had not been tied, officers said.

Her tiny body covered with ants, she sweltered in the hot sun and dry grass for more than three hours before some young people heard her cries while walking back to their car after fishing nearby.

"We were looking to see if we could find who was crying," said Maria Leal, 19, of Delano. "I never expected to see a little baby there on the ground. She was very small and she didn't have any clothes on at all."

Miss Leal and her companions flagged down a man who used a citizens band radio in his truck to call for an ambulance. Then he took some blankets from the pickup and wrapped the baby, she said.

Miss Leal and her friends first heard the infant cry 3½ hours earlier when they arrived to fish at a creek.

"We didn't pay any attention then," she said. "We thought she was with her mother."

Miss Leal, a night student at a community college, was delighted to hear the baby was all right. She asked for the name of the hospital because "I want to see her again."

Inflation, Tax Policy Hurt Incentives To Invest

By JOHN CUNNIFF

NEW YORK (AP) — "The Disincentivization of America" is the label J. Peter Grace affixes to the economic attitude that accepts government-generated inflation and seeks to pay for it by taxing investors.

"In the last 10 years, the combination of inflation and tax policy has all but destroyed the incentive to invest in the American economy," says Grace, the chief of W. R. Grace & Co. He's worried.

Too little money, he says, is going into research and development, into new technology, into new enterprises, into plant and equipment, into the stock and bond markets — into building the economy.

Why? It doesn't pay, says Grace. Why? Because of inflation and taxes.

W. R. Grace sells about $4 billion worth of goods a year and, so far as is known, J. Peter is not permitted to label any of them, having demonstrated little skill in creating simple, catchy brand names.

Still, a 49-page report carrying the tongue-twisting title referred to earlier is selling — selling in the sense that it is being talked about and circulated widely, and perhaps most importantly, in Washington.

It is a tossup whether the word "disincentivization" is more difficult to pronounce than to spell, but there is no misunderstanding the meaning. It is when investors are penalized rather than rewarded.

"Investors who bought stocks and bonds in 1968 — and paid taxes on the gain — were left at the end of 1977 with 33 cents to 76 cents of the purchasing power of their original dollar," he writes.

A better return woould have been "earned" had the dollar been invested in the Dow Jones industrial average, Grace concedes. Yes, he says, 65 cents would have come back, leaving only a 35-cent loss.

If investment is discouraged, says Grace, how can the economy expand and become more efficient, providing jobs and relieving the pressures of inflation? It cannot, he says, and we had better recognize it.

Matched against Japan, West Germany, France, the Netherlands and Belgium, the United States during the years 1962-1977 invested the smallest amount of its gross national product in business.

Analysis

In Japan, average business investment was 32 percent of GNP. In the United States it was 17.5. In Japan, the average annual productivity increase was 8.4 percent. In the United States it was 2.7.

Grace's immediate goal, as you might have guessed, is to get the capital gains tax, now 49 percent, cut back to 25 percent maximum. In none of the other countries, he observes, is there a tax at all.

Under the administration's tax reform proposal, however, the tax would rise to more than 52 percent, or more than double the 25 percent rate that existed in 1968, when the stock market fell into a rut.

Rather than raising money, says Grace, such taxes actually cut into the government's revenue-raising ability by slowing economic growth, creating the context for deficit spending and the resulting inflation.

If the combination is not destroyed, Grace seems to suggest, it will destroy the country by undermining private efforts and eroding the tax base and, ironically, encouraging big government into more taxflation.

The combination of taxes and inflation has nearly destroyed the incentive to produce and invest, states Grace. It is a felony, he declares. It borders on "confiscation."

Grace's disincentivization study has been sent to legislators and to the media with the suggestion they spread the word. And the word is being spread, but not before the spreader pauses for a deep breath.

DR. LAMB

Sodium, Weight Loss

By LAWRENCE E. LAMB, M.D.

DEAR DR. LAMB — What is the role of sodium in preventing weight loss?

DEAR READER — Unless the body hangs on to sodium it won't have any influence on weight loss. Unfortunately, in many people the body tends to retain sodium because sodium salt has to be diluted with water for the body to retain it, that also means the body retains water.

In a number of medical problems, if we stimulate the body to eliminate sodium we know that will cause water to be flushed out with it. That's the way most of the water pills work.

Sodium or sodium chloride, as in normal table salt, contains no calories. It has nothing to do with retention of body fat or the formation of fat tissues. It simply contributes to the retention of water which affects the reading in pounds on the bathroom scales. This can sometimes be a factor in the plateaus that people experience because their body is retaining sodium salt and with it water.

To give you a plan for sensible weight control I'm sending you The Health Letter number 4-7, Weight Losing Diet. Others who want this issue can send 50 cents with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for it to me in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 1551, Radio City Station, New York, N.Y., 10019.

DEAR DR. LAMB — I would appreciate any information you can give me on Osgood Schlatter disease. After my doctor X-rayed my son's knees he informed me that he had this disease and that there was no cure for it. My son is 13 years old. He said by the time he is 26 the disease would disappear. I would like to know what causes this disease and if there is anything we can do to help him get better.

DEAR READER — The problem involves the bony area where the tendon around the kneecap inserts into the shin bone. This is near the area of bone growth during the growing years. During the period while the cartilage is still converting to bone and individuals are very active there may be a local injury. Some people think it is a minute fracture where the bony area is literally pulled loose from the rest of the shin bone.

If you think about it a minute you can see that the large muscle over the thigh that does down into the tendon to encase the kneecap actually inserts onto the shin bone. This is the largest muscle in the whole body and it moves on very large levers — the thigh bones and the leg bones. As a result, an enormous amount of force can be placed at this particular area where the kneecap tendon attaches.

There really isn't too much that can be done about the problem in most cases. Doctors advice about it varies but most feel it's important to rest the knee without seriously limiting the person's activities. That means that such a person might avoid climbing stairs and might avoid competitive sports and things that involve movements like kicking or straightening up from a bent knee position. Some doctors go so far as to put such an individual in a straight leg cast so they don't bend the knees; thereby they don't pull on the tendon that attaches to the shin bone.

Most cases do well with moderate limitation of activity and in some instances the whole problem lasts only months or a few years. Rarely the problem is sufficiently severe as to require surgery.

Doctor Says More Precision Needed In Saccharin Study

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The head of the National Center for Toxicological research says scientists must determine with greater precision the cancer risk posed by saccharin before the public will accept a ban of the artificial sweetener.

Without improved risk estimates, Dr. Morris Cranmer said, the government might act needlessly in an effort to eliminate a cancer-causing substance which "could prove less significant than a lifetime exposure from a package of cigarettes."

"I think most of us are unprepared, in the absence of persuasive evidence, to replace all those items of human convenience, even though an ultra-conservative mathematical hypothesis may imply a relatively high level or risk."

Cranmer discussed the saccharin situation in a 700-page report prepared at the request of Food and Drug Administration commissioner Donald Kennedy. The FDA raised concern about saccharin last year after Canadian animal tests showed it could cause bladder cancer.

The FDA proposed a ban of saccharin. But the outcry from industry and some consumers prompted Congress to hold off on the decision until more research is conducted.

Congress, however, did order warning labels placed on food products containing saccharin, saying, "Use of this product may be hazardous to your health. This product contains saccharin, which has been determined to cause cancer in laboratory animals."

In the meantime, the FDA and the Nationul Cancer Institute are conducting a study on the use of saccharin by bladder cancer patients to see if an association is apparent between the sweetener and cancer. And the National Academy of Sciences is reviewing health risks of food additives at the request of the FDA.

Science Today

The agency said Cranmer's report will be evaluated by the FDA and other government agencies in the effort to develop a coordinated government testing program on saccharin.

Cranmer, whose center is located in Jefferson, Ark., reviewed the results of 19 animal studies of saccharin and looked at the results of 36 human studies from around the world.

He said in conclusion that it was his opinion that there is insufficient evidence "either to accept or reject the hypothesis that the use of artificial sweeteners increares the risk of bladder cancer in human beings.

"Even if the studies of laboratogy animals had produced reproducible unambiguous results with a clear mechanistic explanation, one would exercise great caution in extrapolating the results to human beings."

The key question, Cranmer said, is to determine how much exposure of a suspect substance is too much.

He cited the estimated risks posed by consumption of sugar and carbohydrates as examples "to dramatize our current inability to extrapolate from high to low doses" of suspect substances.

"The cancer risk of the carbohydrates that saccharin replaces are several hundred times greater than the cancer risk from saccharin," Cranmer said.

16th Century Robot Shown

WASHINGTON (AP) — A late 16th Century automaton of a monk, a rare direct ancestor to today's robots, was put on public display today at the Smithsonian's Museum of History and Technology.

He bows, waves and turns with the aid of a spring-powered mechanism similar to those used in Renaissance clocks. He is attributed by oral tradition to Juanelo Turriano, an Italian who was mechanician to Emperor Charles V.

Dressed in a Franciscan's robe and carrying a cross and beads, the animated wooden figure represents the origin of modern automation and cybernetics, the Smithsonian announcement said.

Only one other figure of similar age and sophistication is known to exist, in Vienna, the announcement said.

"Despite his years, the automaton is in fine working order," the Smithsonian said. "Visitors will see the monk in an exhibit case and, when they press a button, will see him spring to life on a small screen built into the lower portion of the case.

"The short film shows all his lifelike movements. His head turns and bows, eyes move side to side, lower jaw opens and closes and the right hand beats his chest.

"His feet move up and down imitating a walking movement, but the monk actually rolls on three wheels. He advances two feet, turns nearly 90 degrees and repeats the movement until the spring has wound down."

The Smithsonian did not say from whom the monk was acquired or give a purchase price. He is on display in the hall of timekeeping on the museum's first floor.

Iowa Family Stages Tax Revolt

FOR YOUR WANT ADS CALL 762-8821

LA PORTE CITY, Iowa (UPI) — Gene Mullen's family has farmed in southeast Black Hawk County for more than 120 years.

Mullen and his wife, Peg, gained national attention in the early 1970s when they were in the forefront of the anti-war movement, fighting the U.S. military to uncover the truth about their son's death in 1970 from U.S. artillery fire in Vietnam.

Now the Mullens are taking on another government establishment — the Black Hawk County Board of Supervisors.

In their own taxpayers' revolt, they are attempting to recover taxes they contend were collected illegally on their property for the last 100 years. And with compound interest they are seeking, officials say their claim easily could exceed $1 million.

At the heart of the matter put before startled supervisors last week is land grant No. 186, signed June 15, 1855, by President Franklin Pierce. It gave Mullen's great-grandfather, John Dobshire, title to a 40-acre parcel as a reward for his service to the country in the Mexican Wars.

The deed — rooted in an 1820 Land Grant Act passed by Congress — gave Dobshire and all his heirs "immunity and appurtenances of whatever nature" on the land forever.

"There's one word in here that's shaken everybody up and that's 'immunity,'" Mullen said in a telephone interview. "The definition of immunity in Webster's dictionary is freedom from public service and exemptions from taxes and military service. If the government accepts Webster's definition, I've got Black Hawk County over a barrel."

Mullen probably would not have pursued the tax exemption issue had it not been for his growing anger about the way the supervisors allocated tax dollars for road construction.

His quarrel was that secondary road expenditures from rural property tax levies were being used to finance blacktopped roads on the outskirts of cities and towns. The final straw, he said, was when the supervisors refused to install a culvert that would allow him to widen his driveway just enough to accommodate his farm machinery.

Mullen threatens court action to press his tax case against the county.

But his claim is predicated on a single word and Mullen's efforts to pinpoint the legal definition of "immunity," as used in 1855, were fruitless, despite calls to Sen. John Culver, D-Iowa, and research by his daughter, an attorney. An attempt by UPI to trace the legal meaning of the 123-year-old deed took the case through a myriad of government agencies and legal scholars, most of whom echoed the sentiments of an attorney in the American Law Division of the Congressional Research Service in the Library of Congress, specializing — more or less — in public land law.

"It's a question I couldn't answer," he admitted. "And I don't think any other lawyer in Washington could answer it either."

But Mullen intends to proceed, hopeful he can win the case in court, where a judge or jury would have to rule on his interpretation of the deed.

Proposition Reduces Deductions

Analysis

By STEVE GERSTEL

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Largely overlooked in the euphoria which enveloped the good citizens of California when they voted to drastically cut their property taxes was the increase in federal income taxes that went with it.

The happy homeowner can still deduct the local property taxes from the federal income tax. But, of course, the reduction will be smaller.

Not that the property owner in California doesn't come out ahead as the result of the Proposition 13 tax rebellion. The savings in property taxes is estimated at around $5 billion and the increase in federal taxes is $2 billion.

So much for the property-owning individuals and their finances.

Californians have accepted that, as a result of Proposition 13, they are going to lose some services and local budgets all over the state have been cut back despite some forthcoming help from the state's surplus of about $5 billion.

What has some of the state's leaders worried, however, is that California communities — lacking money — will not qualify for programs under which the federal government provides money only if the state or local community puts up matching funds.

An initial proposal to return the $2 billion federal "windfall" to the state was quickly shot down. In effect, it was vetoed even before it was drafted.

Now, Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., the assistant Senate Democratic leader, has come up with a novel solution which even his administrative assistant, who put it together, Roy Greenaway, admits is revolutionary.

Cranston estimates that of the $21 billion in individual federal income taxes paid by Californians April 15, around $5 billion would go for programs which are jointly supported through federal-state matching funds.

But if California doesn't have enough money to pay for its share — which varies from program to program — the state may have to forfeit participation in those programs.

To get around this, Cranston has proposed legislation under which the added $2 billion in federal income taxes — generated by Proposition 13 — could count as as part of California's matching share rather than going into the Treasury.

"My bill would not give California any extra dollars from the Treasury," he said recently. "It is not a bailout. California doesn't need — and doesn't want a bailout."

Cranston said the legislation would just make sure that Californians get the federal amount to which they would be entitled and would have had the money to get except for the tax revolt.

"There is an assumption among some people in Washington that federal programs are a form of largesse from the benevolent Big Brother," Cranston said. "That's not so.

"We in California paid for those programs and, in fairness, we are entitled to retain the maximum benefits possible," he added.

Cranston's bill, which would apply to any state which imposes a constitutional limitation on property taxes, has been sent to committee and its future is now uncertain.

But it is sure to provoke considerable controversy.

Senate Ending CIA Inquiry About Angola

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Intelligence Committee is wrapping up a secret year-long study into whether former Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger and one-time CIA Director William E. Colby misled Congress about CIA activities in the 1975 Angolan civil war.

Committee spokesman Spencer Davis said Sunday that the committee expects to conclude its study shortly. He acknowledged that a draft version of the study had been sent to the White House and the CIA for comment.

However, he refused to confirm a report in the New York Times that the committee had concluded that Kissinger and Colby had misled Congress on the matter.

The Times said the committee's compilation of CIA documents indicated that, contrary to assertions by Kissinger and Colby, more than $1 million was allocated to recruit mercenaries and an undetermined number of CIA agents helped train military units inside Angola.

It quoted unidentified sources as saying the study triggered a dispute among senators and committee staff members over whether Kissinger and Colby deliberately lied in testimony before Congress.

The newspaper quoted a "government official" as saying that the Senate study did accuse the CIA specifically of having misled Congress.

In congressional testimony in 1976, Kissinger and Colby both denied that any CIA agents were acting as military advisers to the CIA-supported factions in Angola, the Times said.

However, the newspaper quoted unidentified sources as saying that file documents included as an appendix to the study show that at least 12 and possibly as many as 24 CIA agents did help train military units inside Angola.

TODAY'S STOCK PRICES

Dow Jones Average Up 3.47

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market turned upward today, responding to hopes for a break in the interest-rate spiral.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, which fell 10.05 points Tuesday, rebounded 3.47 to 832.47 by noontime today.

Gainers outpaced losers by about a 2-1 margin among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

The Federal Reserve's Open Market Committee, which sets credit policy for the central bank, held its monthly meeting on Tuesday. Most analysts have been expecting the Fed to continue pushing interest rates higher in its effort to control inflation by limiting the growth of the money supply.

The committee doesn't make its decisions public until about a month after they are made. But the Fed's actions in the money markets Tuesday reflected no immediate effort to encourage rates to rise.

Analysts said it was too soon to draw any definite conclusions, but some investors seemed to be speculating that the Fed might have decided to follow a steady course for a while.

Airline issues dominated the active list amid enthusiasm over exceptionally strong second-quarter earnings reports from several companies in the industry.

Pan American World Airways was up ⅜ at 7⅛; Eastern ⅛ at 13¾; Braniff 1 at 14¾, and Allegheny ⅝ at 12⅛.

UAL, which jumped 3¾ Tuesday when the company reported a tripling of quarterly profits, pulled back ¾ to 34 today.

Ozark Airlines gained ½ to 7 on the American Stock Exchange.

The NYSE's composite index rose .28 to 54.73, and the Amex market value index added .50 to 150.67.

Volume on the Big Board reached 12.71 million shares by noontime, up from 9.65 million at the same point Tuesday.

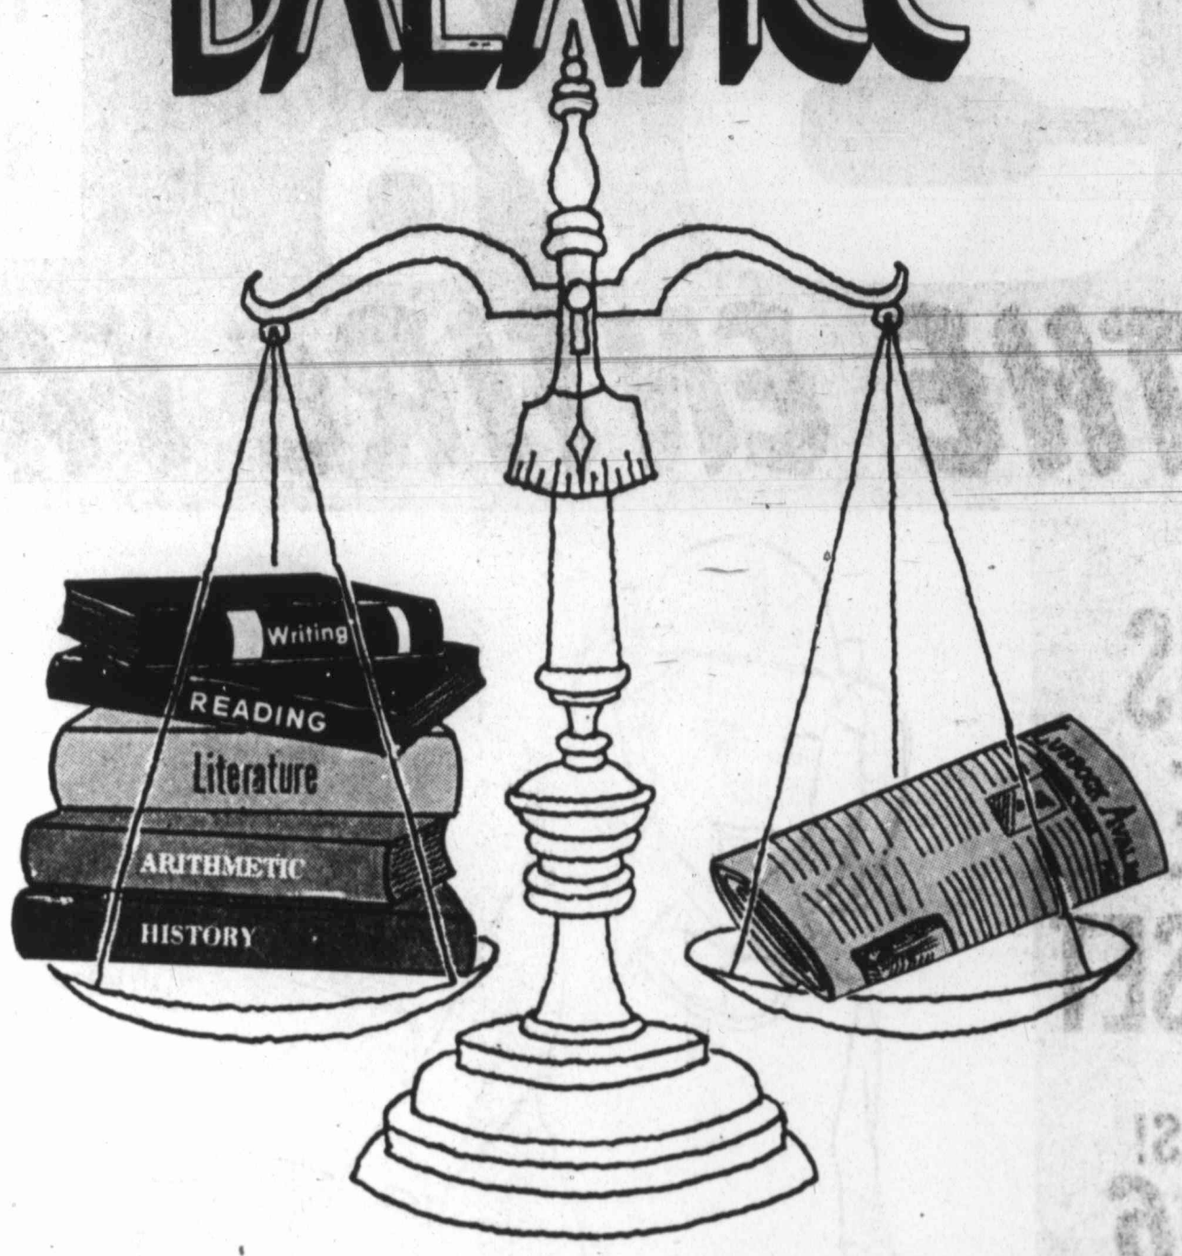
BALANCE



A textbook is a necessary part of classroom instruction, but it can't possibly cover an event or discovery that has developed in the past 24 hours.

Many teachers have found they can utilize a newspaper as a source for information not yet available in the textbook, thus providing a balance between yesterday and today.

If you're a teacher, you can find out how to put balance in your classroom, by attending Avalanche-Journal's 7th Annual "Living Textbook Conference", to be held August 8th, on the campus of Texas Tech University.

ERA Proponents Facing Tough Battle In Senate

By W. DALE NELSON

WASHINGTON (AP) — Backers of a new lease on life for the proposed Equal Rights Amendment, victorious in the House Judiciary Committee, say they expect approval by the full House but that they could run into trouble in the Senate.

That was the consensus after Tuesday's 19-15 committee vote to put off the deadline for ratification of the ERA to June 30, 1982 — an extension of three years, three months and eight days.

The ERA, which would outlaw discrimination based on sex, has been ratified by 35 states, although four legislatures later rescinded their actions. Unless the extension is approved by Congress, the amendment must have the approval of 38 states by next March 22 to become part of the Constitution.

Rep. Don Edwards, D-Calif., the leader of the pro-extension forces on the committee, predicted the measure would win approval in the House, where it is expected to be put to a vote next month.

But other ERA supporters said the Senate subcommittee on the Constitution, to which it will be referred, could present an obstacle.

The subcommittee was believed to be divided 3-3 on the extension issue when Sen. James B. Allen, D-Ala., an opponent, died. His seat on the parent Judiciary Committee has been filled by his widow, Maryon, but his post on the subcommittee is still vacant. A committee source said it was not known whether she would also fill the subcommittee seat.

The four legislatures that rescinded earlier approval of the amendment are Kentucky, Tennessee, Idaho and Nebraska. The validity of their moves will ultimately be up to Congress. Kentucky's action was vetoed by its acting governor, however.

Before Tuesday's final committee vote on the extension, the panel rejected an amendment to permit states that have ratified the ERA to withdraw their approval during the additional time period.

There has been no previous request for a time extension on ratification of a constitutional amendment. And until several amendments early in this century, Congress put no time limit on the ratification process, although the Constitution gives Congress the power to set such a limit.

The committee vote was met with wild cheering and applause from the capacity audience, in which ERA supporters predominated. Midge Costanza, an aide to President Carter, jumped to her feet and joined in the handclapping.

Carter's wife, Rosalynn, and former first lady Betty Ford, both ERA supporters, played what might have been key roles in the intensive lobbying that preceded the vote.

Mrs. Ford called Rep. Harold Sawyer, R-Mich., and Mrs. Carter phoned Rep. Lamar Gudger, D-N.C., on behalf of the extension.

Both votes were needed. Sawyer was against the extension but agreed to vote for it if his vote was needed to send the proposal to the full House. Gudger remained publicly uncommitted until shortly before the vote. Both men voted for the extension.

ERA backers originally sought a seven-year extension, but scaled this down because they were two votes short of committee approval.

Sixteen Democrats and three Republicans voted for the extension. Seven Democrats and eight Republicans voted against it.

For the supporters, Rep. John Conyers Jr., D-Mich., said it would be "the fault and responsibility of Congress" if ERA failed because the deadline was not extended.

But for the opponents, Rep. Sam B. Hall Jr., D-Texas, said, "The rights of women are secondary, in my opinion, to the rights of the amending process of the Constitution of the United States."

Texas Educators Receive Warning

AUSTIN (AP) — If Texas school districts adopt competency testing in the future, local educators must be wary of malpractice education suits, a California official said Tuesday.

The best defense against such suits is establishment of an efficient, well-managed curriculum, Glenn Davis of the California state education department told a Texas superintendents workshop.

California has a competency-based education program, in which students must pass competency tests in order to be graduated.

School principals must meet the parents of any student failing the tests to develop an individual education plan, Davis said.

Crew Members Demanding Back Pay

NEW YORK (AP) — More than 80 crew members aboard the cruise ship SS America are refusing to leave the docked boat until they are paid thousands of dollars in back wages.

In the latest wave of trouble to hit the ship since passengers forced a "Cruise to Nowhere" to turn back on July 1, the crewmen — many of them Jamaicans who paid their own way here to get the jobs — vowed to stay aboard until they get their money.

A spokesman for Venture Cruise Lines, Inc., which owns the ship, reportedly told the crew Tuesday that they had to leave by today so the ship could be moved to dry dock for repairs.

"We told him we want the money before we go," said one waiter who said he had been paid only $55 since starting work about three weeks ago. "We don't trust them."

Venture reportedly offered to fly crew members back to Jamaica and settle accounts there later. Capt. John Tourvas said, "The company has made all the arrangements to send all the crewmen back to their countries."

CLEANING UP — Vickie Meyer, 10, of Austin, Minn., gives a helping hand to other church members as they begin the task of cleaning up St. Paul's Lutheran Church in Southeast Austin today after Monday's flood. It was the second record-breaking flood to hit Austin in two weeks. Water in the church rose to a level above the top of the pews. (AP Laserphoto)

Floods Close Highways In Midwest

By The Associated Press

Floods closed roads in scattered areas of the Midwest today as a series of slow-moving thunderstorms dumped heavy amounts of rain.

In the hour and 15-minutes just before midnight, Dewitt, Neb., received 3½ inches.

The storms also reached across Iowa, but the rain was not as heavy.

There were strong thunderstorms Tuesday night over western North Dakota, eastern Montana, central Kansas and northwestern Oklahoma.

Light thunderstorms dotted the south and central Rockies today. The Texas Panhandle, northeast Utah, and northeastern Wisconsin also had rain.

In Austin, Minn., about 90 miles south of Minneapolis, residents began returning to their flood-damaged homes Tuesday as the Red Cedar River continued to drop within its banks.

Unofficial damage estimates of Monday's flood, the second in 10 days, have been put at more than $5C million.

The surging Cedar, which runs through Austin, forced 200 families to evacuate.

Monday's flood also damaged several dozen businesses in Austin, a city of 27,000. Many had no flood insusrance.

Carter's Sister Upset At Story

DENVER (AP) — Ruth Carter Stapleton, the evangelist sister of President Carter, says reading a quote attributed to her in the current Newsweek magazine which said Jesus was just a man was "the most devastating experience of my life."

She is featured in the magazine's latest issue and is quoted as saying "Jesus was just a man" ordained by God to carry mankind's burdens.

"And I believe that through the Holy Spirit, God can be in me just as he was in Jesus," the president's sister is quoted as saying.

Here for a Christian Booksellers Association meeting, Mrs. Stapleton distributed a written statement saying she is an "orthodox Christian" who believes in Christ as "the living, bodily-resurrected Son of God who died for my sins upon the cross."

Mrs. Stapleton said the Newsweek article contained 21 errors, including claims that she keeps in almost daily contact with Hustler magazine publisher Larry Flynt.

She said she calls Flynt every two weeks or so and conceded that she had asked him to shut down Hustler magazine.

Mrs. Stapleton said a Newsweek writer called her before the magazine came out and warned her the article would contain some things "that are going to make your hair stand on end."

Water Crisis Hits Small Valley Town

By KEN HERMAN

SANTA ROSA (AP) — The faltering water system in this Rio Grande Valley town is operating only 23 hours a day and may be getting worse.

"It could cave in any day, any minute," water board member George Cavazos said of the 216-foot deep well that supplies the water.

The long simmering water problem reached crisis stage this week. There is not enough water and officials are closing down the system every day for an hour at 2 p.m.

"If there's a major house fire, all our volunteer fire department could do would be to sit there and watch it," Cavazos said.

City Manager Fermin Aguirre said officials here have known for several years that the 16-year-old system is inadequate for the 1,700 residents.

But there is not enough city money for a new system.

Three months ago the city applied, under an "imminent threat to public safety" heading, for a Housing and Urban Development grant. The $660,000 was sought to build a pipeline connecting into the Harlingen water system.

But now Harlingen officials say the plan is not feasible.

The water crunch here is being complicated by the recent opening of a 53-family housing project. Officials from HUD, which subsidized the project, were eager to have families move into the new facilities. About eight families have moved in.

"We just don't have the water for them or us," Aguirre said.

The hour shutdown each afternoon is aimed at allowing the tanks to fill in time for the evening demand. On a recent blistering summer day the water pressure was down to 10 pounds by 7:30 p.m., Cavazos said.

A HUD official in San Antonio said Harlingen's decision may delay federal aid. Frank Buie, program manager for community programs and development, said Santa Rosa's pending application is largely obsolete now.

"We've asked their engineer to estimate the cost for their own treatment plant and another source of water," Buie said.

The HUD official added that his department has yet to decide whether the situation here poses an "imminent threat."

"But the state health department has told us it's 'imminent' that the well is going to quit producing," Buie said.

Cavazos agreed. He fears the town is going to the well once too often.

"It's going to get worse," he said.

'HUSH PUPPIES'

The South's "hush puppies," served with fried fish dinners, traditionally originated at a fish fry when someone dropped the corn bread bater into the kettle of heated fat and tossed the fried cakes to the hungry dogs to quiet their whining.

Gay Parents Seek Equal Custody Rights

By DOLORES BARCLAY

NEW YORK (AP) — They were, after all, only four words.

But for Frank, they carried the weight of a hundred. They could cause tears, rejection, confusion. But no, there were just four simple words of reply.

"I am a homosexual," he told his 11-year-old daughter.

"Oh, that's OK, Dad," she answered.

Would she live with him after he divorces her mother, the elated father asked. Yes, the daughter said.

But for Frank — not his real name — the happiness does not last. He knows he now faces months and perhaps years of a court custody fight. His sexuality will be a big issue.

Frank, who lives in Denver, is not alone in performing this painful, second coming out of the closet to seek custody of his child. No one knows how many homosexuals are doing it, but there is agreement that with the opening of that first closet, an increase is inevitable.

How many have been successful is not certain either. Linda Guthrie of the New York Lesbian Mothers Legal Custody Center estimates 98 percent of the cases involving a parent's sexuality are lost.

For those unsuccessful, the loss can be double. Certain visitation rights can be taken away. Stipulations can be imposed, conditions that would not be instituted for heterosexuals — such as not being able to kiss the child near the mouth or always having a third party of the opposite sex present during visits.

For that reason, homosexual and civil liberty groups have been fighting to bar information about sexuality from being used in custody cases. The New York Legislature has before it a measure to do that, and Washington, D.C., already has such a provision.

But advocates of homosexual rights do not see much progress.

"The continued non-action by the Supreme Court to uphold the rights of gays has left the lower courts at best indecisive and at worst willing to allow continual denial of the constitutional rights of gays," says David Harrison, an American Civil Liberties Union attorney in Seattle. He represented two lesbian mothers who won custody of their children in a case the fathers are appealing.

Superior Court Judge Norman B. Ackley, who presided in the case, said the mothers' sexuality did not figure in his ruling. "If I were to decide the case solely on homosexuality, it would show a prejudice that doesn't have any place in judicial institutions," he said.

"I determined that the mothers were good mothers and they should remain with the children and could live together," he said. "There were six children between the two mothers. They were very happy and healthy children in every way."

James, a homosexual parent who lives with a lover in New York, plans to tell his son Terry about his sexuality when the 8-year-old spends a month with him this summer.

"When I tell him, I will try to explain to him that there are infinite choices in the universe and that's what distinguishes human beings from animals — the ability to choose," James said. "I'll tell him there are people who are afraid of choices because they don't know any other way and are afraid to take chances."

And if Terry rejects him? James' eyes cloud, and he says:

"I would have to accept part of the responsibility that he doesn't understand me. If he rejects me and decides he never wants to see me again, I will have to accept it — sadly."

In all custody cases involving a homosexual parent, a court-appointed psychiatrist testifies. In the Seattle case, Ackley said, the psychiatrist noted the children had more sexual knowledge than other children but "were not adversely affected" by it.

Nor, he said, were they unduly affected by negative reaction from peers. "When teased in school with the taunt, 'Your mother is a lessie,' they would say, 'So what!'" he said.

"The parenting relationship is the key," says Dr. Edward Futterman, director of the Clifford W. Beers Guidance Clinic in New Haven, Conn. "I would look more to the quality of the child-parent relationship than sexual orientation. But I would have to weigh how that attribute affected the child-parent relationship and how the child reacted to the relationship."

Adds another psychiatrist, Dr. Robert J. Campbell of Gracie Square Hospital in New York: "We don't have any evidence that children of homosexual parents fare any better or worse than children of heterosexual parents. The relatively new approach of people coming out of the closet and admitting their homosexuality to children is new and we need time to see the effects of role modeling. The degree to which there will be problems depends a great deal upon the community and what peer acceptance is."

Bruce Voeller of the National Gay Task Force worries about community and peer pressure. "Gay parents spend a considerable amount of time dealing with how the kids' peers handle homosexuality," he said.

"The thing that tears us is that we're immediately vulnerable once we tell our children. But I wanted my children to see me as caring and open, and as affectionate with the man in my life as I was with the woman in my life."

Voeller, whose three children live with their mother, is also concerned about the homosexual role model for children. He said he grew up "in isolation," knowing he liked men, but lacking a model.

"I want my children, should they be gay, to have a good role model of a caring and responsible person," he said. "On the other hand, if the kids are not gay, which is the case with mine, I want them to know some competent, caring gay people so they can have respect for people and are not taught hatred."

Civilians Join Police Search For Escapees

LISBON, Portugal (UPI) — Armed civilians joined police in one of the biggest manhunts in Portuguese history Tuesday for 82 "very dangerous" convicts who tunneled their way out of a maximum security prison while guards watched television.

Police spokesman said 42 of the 124 prisoners — more than half the total inmates — who escaped from Alcoentre prison had been recaptured.

Police warned that some of the fugitives could be considered "very dangerous" and urged residents to take precautions.

The fugitives tunneled out of the maximum security prison 50 miles north of Lisbon on Sunday night while their guards watched television.

Hundreds of policemen aided by armed civilians and air force helicopters searched the wine growing region north of Lisbon amid mounting fears that many fugitives had already slipped through the security net.

The spectacular escape — the second mass break-out in Portugal since the 1974 revolution — was made through a 150-foot tunnel that officials said took several weeks to dig.

They said most of the prison's anti-escape devices, such as spotlights and infra-red television cameras, were either turned off or out of order.

Justice Minister Santos Pais ordered an investigation but noted the mass escape "is a normal case within an abnormality."

The escapees, who represented more than half of the 223 inmates in the prison, made their getaway after knifing a prisoner who threatened to give away their plans.

Officials said the prisoners distracted prison authorities while they were digging the tunnel beneath the prison wall by staging a hunger strike to protest against conditions.

The authorities responded to this action by appointing a new warden at the prison and transfering some of the guards to other detention centers.

The breakout was reminiscent of a mass escape by 89 former secret policemen from the prison in the summer of 1975. They fled the Alcoentre by cutting through the bars of a window and descending to the ground over a four-hour period during the night.

Approval Seen For New Panel

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate, amid flourishing rhetoric and behind-the-scenes maneuvering, is debating a change in the law that helped the snail darter, a three-inch fish, make headlines.

Congressional sources, asking to remain anonymous, say the Senate appears ready to approve establishment of a top-level federal committee authorized to grant exemptions under the Endangered Species Act, although a final vote may not come until today.

Current law prohibits federal agencies from taking an action that would harm an endangered plant or animal species or its habitat.

The commission could grant an exemption if five of its seven members believe that an "irresolvable" conflict exists between a project and a species, and the benefits of the project "clearly outweigh" the value of alternatives designed to save the species.

The act led to a recent U.S. Supreme Court ruling that the Tennessee Valley Authority could not close the floodgates of its newly constructed Tellico Dam, part of a $119 million project on the Little Tennessee River. The court said closing the floodgates would wipe out the habitat of the snail darter, an endangered species, and thus violate the law.

"It's time Congress began thinking first of the people it represents, instead of snail darters and ivory-billed woodpeckers," Sen. William Scott, R-Va., said as the Senate began debating the measure.

Sen. John Culver, D-Iowa, and Republican Leader Howard Baker of Tennessee are sponsoring the proposal.

Culver said more flexibility is needed to prevent Tellico-like conflicts of the future.

"It appears likely that a growing number of other projects will not be completed" if the law remains as it is, he warned.

The Carter administration is opposing the proposal, saying the law has worked well since it was passed in 1973.

And Sen. Gaylord Nelson, D-Wis., is backing an amendment to drop the idea of an exemption-granting committee and leave the law unchanged.

Sources said Monday that Nelson is considering withdrawing his plan without a vote, in effect using it as a means of winning changes in Culver's proposal that would make it tougher to get an exemption.

Meanwhile, at least one environmental group has changed its position about the proposal.

Until recently, environmental organizations have been unanimous in opposing the measure. But sources said National Audobon Society President Elvis J. Stahr wrote Culver this week in support of the proposal and commending him for his "statesmanlike" approach to the issue.

Culver, who regards himself one of the Senate's strongest environmentalists, has said several times he would prefer not to amend the law but believes it is necessary to protect it from all-out attack. His position has drawn criticism in the past from environmental organizations.

Sen. John Stennis, D-Miss., is backing a proposal designed to allow wholesale exemptions under the law.

His proposal says no project that was "underway" in 1973 would be affected by the Endangered Species Act. Also exempt would be any project of which any segment was 50 percent complete at the time an endangered species was discovered in its area.

Califano Says Hospital Bill Sham

By CHRIS CONNELL

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Carter administration is nursing the wounds in its hospital cost containment plan and trying to decide if the damage inflicted by a House committee can be repaired or if it should wait until next year.

The bill, watered down previously from mandatory to stand-by controls on hospitals costs, was gutted Tuesday when the House Commerce Committee voted 22-21 to eliminate entirely the threat of controls on the hospital industry.

Instead, a powerless national commission would be set up to monitor the voluntary effort by hospitals and physicians to hold down cost increases.

After removing the teeth, the panel approved the bill 15-12.

The nation's hospital bill jumped 15.6 percent last year to $53 billion. The hospitals and the American Medical Association say their voluntary effort has held the inflation to 12.7 percent in the first four months of this year.

The Commerce Committee's disgusted chairman, Rep. Paul G. Rogers, D-Fla., said the only hope for the administration's plan now is now with the House Ways and Means Committee, where a subcommittee narrowly has approved a bill with standby controls after two years.

Health, Education and Welfare Secretary Joseph A. Califano Jr. called the amended Commerce bill "a sham" and declared "it belongs in the world of George Orwell to be even charaterized as hospital cost containment."

He said the administration will decide in the next few days whether "the damage can be repaired" and "meaningful" legislation passed this year, or whether to "take our case to the people and simply come back next year" with new legislative proposals.

The administration began its effort to clamp controls on hospitals in April 1977, and repeatedly has lost ground.

President Carter appealed to the Commerce Committee on June 7 to approve the bill, calling it "their most important anti-inflation decision of this congressional session."

If the legislation had taken effect last October as planned, Carter said, "our country would already have saved $2 billion in hospital costs by now."

Carter originally proposed a 9 percent lid on the rate of increase in hospital costs. The compromises offered by Rogers and by Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., in the Ways and Means Committee were for controls after two years only if the hospitals did not cut their inflation rate by 2 percent each year.

Two separate committees deal with the legislation in both houses since it involves both health and fiscal matters.

Rostenkowski said he planned to wait a few days "to see what pressures build up" before deciding whether to fight for passage of his bill by the full Ways and Means Committee.

"I will not take two or three weeks and get a nothing bill," he said.

In Chicago, AMA board chairman Robert B. Hunter said Tuesday's action was a vote of confidence by Congress in the voluntary program. "This kind of coordinated and cooperative effort by physicians and hospitals to cut the rise in the escalation of health care costs is the only responsible approach to the continued delivery of quality health care," he said.

Califano said the amended bill "bows to the wishes of the hospital industry. It is an affront to the American people and the administration's attempt to combat inflation, our nation's No. 1 domestic problem."

He accused the father of the amendment, Rep. James T. Broyhill, R-N.C., of imposing a $56 billion tax on the American people — the amount the original Carter bill would have saved over five years. The standby version would have saved $30 billion, Califano said.

Broyhill's amendment also made mincemeat of a proposed $2.5 billion annual cap on hospital construction. It raised the lid to $4 billion and applied it only to hospital beds.

Hospital beds account for only $1.2 billion in hospitals' annual construction costs, Califano said.

Rogers and Califano said a change of heart by Rep. Marty Russo, D-Ill., cost the administration the crucial 22-21 vote.

"Russo has been with us. He switched his vote in the dead of night last night," charged Califano. "He's certainly an aider and abettor and seconder of the Broyhill tax . ..."

Illinois hospital officials joined other medical and hospital leaders here in the successful lobbying effort to kill the Rogers plan.

LILLIAN CARTER IN PARIS — Mrs. Lillian Carter, mother of President Carter, listens to Anne-Aymon Giscard d'Estaing, wife of the French president, who invited her for tea at the Elysee Palace Tuesday after Mrs. Carter's arrival in Paris on a 16-day trip to Europe and drought-stricken western Africa. Judge Rules For Texas Law Firm

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (UPI) — District Judge Charles Thompson ruled Tuesday there is "not even the appearance of impropriety" in the Texas law firm of Andrews, Kurth, Campbell and Jones participating in a court action over whether Howard Hughes ever made out a "lost will."

The Texas law firm will not be disqualified, the judge told attorneys representing the Howard Hughes Medical Institute.

Reno attorney Frank Fahrenkopf and the Washington, D.C., law firm of Hogan and Hartson represent the Howard Hughes Medical Institute in the "lost will" probate case.

They asked that the Texas firm be disqualified from representing opponents of the "lost will" because its attorneys had represented Hughes interests in the past and served as legal counsel a number of years for the Howard Hughes Medical Institute.

"In my view, there is not even the appearance of impropriety," Thompson wrote. "I am satisfied that there is no relationship between the matters embraced within the pending action and the matters wherein Andrews, Kurth previously represented HHMI (Howard Hughes Medical Institute)."

Ousted Hughes officials Chester Davis, a New York lawyer, and Frank William Gay, former president of Summa Corp., are directors of the Hughes Medical Institute.

Longtime Hughes employe Nadine Henley, secretary of the Hughes Medical Institute, signed an affidavit supporting the lost will concept. Miss Henley was Hughes' personal secretary for several decades and currently is a senior vice president of Summa Corp.

The "lost will" probate case has been pending for more than two years, awaiting settlement of the "Mormon will" case. A jury ruled that "will" a forgery, with the Texas firm successfully opposing it, on behalf of Hughes' aunt, his closest living relative, Annette Gano Lummis of Houston.

Mrs. Carter Gets Report On Drought

PARIS (UPI) — President Carter's mother Lillian was briefed today on drought and famine in the Sahel region of West and Central Africa in preparation for her trip there as a White House emissary.

Mrs. Carter, who discussed women's rights over tea Tuesday with the wife of French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing, was visiting the headquarters of the 24-nation Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development to meet officials of the Club du Sahel.

The informal, voluntary group of aid donors and Sahel countries was formed to promote development of the region. Mrs. Carter will tour Gambia, Senegal, Upper Volta and Mali with a rest stop in Morocco at the invitation of Gambian President Sir Dawda Jawara.

She will hold talks with French Minister of Cooperation Robert Galley before leaving Thursday for Rome. There she will receive the Ceres medal issued in her honor by the U.N. Food and Agriculture Organization.

Her trip is aimed at dramatizing President Carter's concern about global food shortages, the gap between the rich and poor nations and the role of women in developing nations, U.S. Embassy officials said.

Mrs. Carter declined comment on her meeting with Anne-Aymone Giscard d'Estaing Tuesday but officials at the Elysee Presidential Palace said the conversation centered on women's rights and African affairs.

The late afternoon meeting lasted 45 minutes and tea was served. Those present included Nicole Pasquier, French minister of women's affairs; and Jeanne Le Clerc de Hautecloque Galley, daughter of a World War II Free French marshal and wife of Robert Galley, French minister of overseas aid.

Seeing Eye Dog Grant Approved

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — The legislature has approved a special grant to feed Seeing Eye dogs whose owners are receiving welfare funds.

The state Assembly gave final passage to a bill Tuesday that would provide special grants to blind people getting federal aid under the aged, blind and disabled program to use to buy food for their guide dogs.

The federal program provides funds for a blind person to buy food, but nothing extra to feed the dog.

Supporters of the state grant said that in some instances, owners of guide dogs had deprived themselves to buy food for their dogs.

Jenkins Assessed 12-Year Sentence

By FRANK PATRICK
Avalanche-Journal Staff

Alan Joe Jenkins, 28, was assessed a 12-year prison term Tuesday after being found guilty of murder.

Jenkins was convicted in connection with the April 23 shooting death of Robert Humphreys, 33.

In finding the defendant guilty, a nine-man, three-woman jury in Judge William R. Shaver's 140th District Court rejected the defense claim that Jenkins was acting in self-defense.

Jurors deliberated more than two hours before returning the guilty verdict. Shaver then assessed punishment.

Humphreys was shot about 1:20 a.m. at a club in the 3000-block of E. Main Street. He died about seven hours later at a local hospital.

Sections on self-defense and voluntary manslaughter were included in the court's charge to jurors.

In the punishment phase of proceedings, prosecutors introduced evidence indicating Jenkins had received a two-year prison term in 1973 for a theft conviction.

The defendant had taken the witness stand earlier Tuesday to claim he had feared for his life when he fired at Humphreys.

Responding to questions from defense attorney Floyd Holder, Jenkins, of 1608 Zenith Ave., said trouble started in the crowded club after he noticed Humphreys arguing with Jenkins' wife.

The defendant said he then exchanged words with Humpreys, who, according to the defendant, threatened to shoot him.

Jenkins said he saw that Humphreys had a hand in his pocket. He said that he turned and walked away, toward the front door of the place.

The defendant testified that his wife got a pistol from her purse and handed it to him. Jenkins said he turned back around and began firing.

Holder asked him why he had turned his back if he thought Humphreys was about to shoot him. Jenkins indicated he had expected to be shot, but that he did not want to "see it."

Jenkins cited the location of Humphreys' hand in saying he had felt the deceased was serious about the shooting threat.

Jenkins testified he had not known his wife had the pistol in her purse until it was handed to him.

Sue Mayes, who testified she lived with the defendant but was not legally married to him, had earlier told jurors virtually the same story.

Jenkins said he had not left the club and returned before the shots were fired, a point in direct contradiction with testimony from some state witnesses.

Witness Jackie Mathis identified Jenkins as the man who shot Humphreys. He said he had seen Jenkins go to his car before returning to fire the shots.

Witness Willie James Hunter also said Jenkins had just returned from outside when the episode took place.

On cross-examination, Jenkins said he was about two steps from the door when he turned and fired.

In final summation, prosecutor Cindy Miller stressed that testimony, saying a reasonable person could easily have retreated from the situation.

She also alluded to testimony by the state witnesses.

"If you have left a place and come back armed, you're not acting in self-defense. You're acting in cold-blooded murder," Mrs. Miller said.

The prosecutor also argued that it did not make sense for Jenkins to have turned his back if he actually were in imminent fear of being shot.

Holder said Jenkins' account — in which he indicated he had turned his back and braced himself for the possible impact of a bullet — had "the ring of truth."

Citing testimony indicating Jenkins did not know Humphreys and had met him only a few minutes before the shooting, the defense attorney said jurors would have to opt for either a self-defense acquittal or voluntary manslaughter.

"I don't see how you can have anything less than a reasonable doubt that he acted in self-defense," Holder said.

There was no testimony indicating that Humphreys ever exhibited a weapon. There was also no testimony indicating a weapon was found in Humphreys' possession after the shooting.

AMC Reports Quarter Gains

DETROIT (AP) — American Motors Corp., the poor cousin in the U.S. auto industry, has recorded its seventh straight profitable quarter.

Thanks to record-setting sales of Jeep vehicles, the smallest of the four major U.S. automakers managed operating profits of $3.1 million or 10 cents a share in its third quarter, nearly double its earnings of a year ago.

As AMC slowly nears the point where Jeep sales outpace its car sales, the company's share of the market for U.S.-built cars has shrunk to about 2 percent.

But it leads all other manufacturers in the burgeoning, profitable four-wheel-drive market and expects next year to sell one Jeep for every car.

So far in 1978, AMC has sold 98,628 cars — off 7.2 percent from last year — and 79,013 Jeeps, up 35 percent.

The relatively strong three-month period that ended June 30 also reflected AMC's share of the domestic auto industry's dramatic spring recovery from a winter sales slump.

With a one-time tax credit because of earlier losses, earnings came to $6.1 million or 20 cents a share for the three months ended June 30, almost four times the $1.6 million or 6 cents a share in the same period of 1977.

Key Committee Supports New Department

WASHINGTON (AP) — A bill establishing a Department of Education faces clear sailing in the Senate where it now has a sizable majority supporting it and has received tentative approval by a key committee.

The Senate governmental affairs committee on Tuesday voted 14-0 in favor of the measure. The vote was tentative because it gave another committee a week to propose any further amendments.

Meanwhile, three senators joined the list of sponsors of the bill Tuesday, bringing the total to 61 sponsors. The House Government Operations Committee opens hearings on the bill on Monday.

The measure would bring under one department 172 education programs costing $17 billion. Most of the programs are now in the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

The bill's approval in the Senate committee came after the panel adopted amendments designed to assure that the federal government would not undercut control from states and local school districts.

"The temptation is going to be irresistable for the new department to start flexing its muscles and try to be the source of all decision-making in education," said Sen. John C. Danforth, R-Mo.

Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill., said he would join the sponsors of the measure with the understanding that the school lunch program and other child nutrition programs would remain under the Agriculture Department.

Last week the Senate committee voted also to keep the Head Start program in the Department of Health Education and Welfare.

The other two who joined those sponsoring the bill were Sens. Bill Roth, R-Del., and John Glenn, D-Ohio.

Television May Aid Businesses

By LeROY POPE

NEW YORK (UPI) — Before too long it will be possible for big companies to conduct business at reasonale cost by means of global closed circuit television, suys Hubert Wilke, audio-visual consultant.

"There are no real technological barriers now but the cost still is prohibitive," Wilke said. "However, either by means of fiber optics, laser beams, satellite communications or something still in the laboratory stage now, the cost is bound to come down to a feasible level."

Big companies like Exxon and Sears, Roebuck will make use of global closed circuit TV to do a lot of business, he believes. Many smaller companies will use it to some extent.

Curiously, though, Wilke doesn't think this will cut down greatly on business travel.

Theoretically, business would have a big incentive to use closed circuit TV as a replacement for large-scale travel by executives and technical people. Even if transmission isn't any cheaper than actual travel cost, there would be an enormous saving in the time of the people involved, which often amounts to more in money than travel costs. But Wilke pointed out that business travel keeps growing by leaps and bounds even as satellite communications and closed circuit TV standards improve.

"I just don't see the TV conference making any huge dent in travel," he said. "The humun factor is too great. Business people like to travel even though it takes up an awful lot of their lives. There can be no ultimate substitute for sitting down at table or playing golf or tennis with your customers or associates, or even with your competitors."

Even if it isn't going to let him stay at home (or induce him to) the value of adequate built-in audio-visual corporate communications facilities to the head of a sizable corporation already is so great that Wilke's firm has provided them to an impressive list of customers.

His client list of several hundred includes many banks, universities and colleges both in the United States and abroad, scores of the world's biggest industrial and financial concerns, plus many architects and other professional firms.

Wilke's firm tailors audiovisual conference rooms for its clients.

He was brought in to design the A-V complex on the 27th floor of the Sears Tower in Chicago by Saphier, Lerner, Uchindler Environetics, Inc., architectural engineers.

The Sears installation is fully capable of being utilized for a world-wide conference now. Exxon Corp., the world's largest oil company, and Merrill Lynch, the country's biggest securities and investment house, have facilities with similar capabilities.

Much of Wilke's work, however, is not so much concerned with long-distance communications as with extremely flexible multi-media facilities for boardrooms and the large conference halls of big companies.

Justice Blackmun In For Checkup

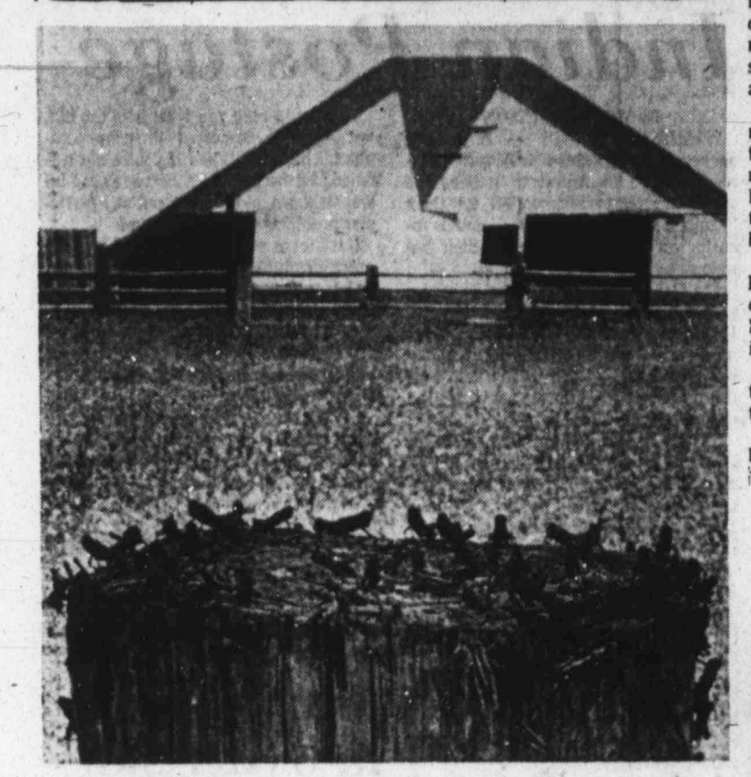
Blackmun, 69, was a member of the clinic's legal staff before he was appointed to the Supreme Court.

Mayo Clinic surgeons successfully removed a cancerous prostate gland from Blackmun last November.



GRASSHOPPERS AT REST? — Over fifty grasshoppers take a rest from munching on crops on the Clinton Evans farm near Sheridan Lake, Colo., and perch on a fence post in front of Evans' barn. The southeast corner of Colorado is under a grasshopper infestation which threatens many crops, including corn, oats and wheat, and caused the state legislature to go into special session to appropriate $2 million to help farmers spray their farm and ranch lands against the hoppers. Labor Not Helping In Inflation Fight

By STEPHEN M. BROWN

NEW YORK (AP) — The Carter administration is trying to enlist organized labor into the fight against inflation, but the number of recruits so far is nil.

The White House has asked that wage settlements be held to one-half percent less than the previously negotiated increase. But last winter the administration agreed to a 39 percent pay increase over three years for miners to end a lengthy coal strike.

Since then, several building trades unions in the West have won large settlements, one with a 25 percent increase in the first year. Retail clerks in Philadelphia settled with a 10 percent raise this year, Western pulp and paper workers have demanded a 14 percent boost, as did federal postal workers. Railroad workers have been negotiating a raise of 31 percent over three years.

Barry Bosworth, who as director of the Council on Wage and Price Stability is a leader of Carter's battle against inflation, admitted last week to the House Budget Committee that the administration has failed to get labor's cooperation.

And the worst may be yet to come. The powerful Teamsters, United Auto Workers and United Steelworkers unions will negotiate next year. The government plans to try to influence bargaining in these industries to prevent large wage increases. But Bosworth is worried that those industries believe they easily can raise prices to cover higher labor costs. In that situation, firms may resist wage demands less strenuously than would companies that must keep prices down.

The problem the White House faces is that workers don't want to be the first to give up something in the name of the war on inflation. Union leaders say they're under pressure from the rank and file to keep wages at least even with the Consumer Price Index, which has been climbing at an annual rate of about 10 percent so far this year. Unions also claim that business has not shown much restraint on price hikes.

The federal Bureau of Labor Statistics says that during the first three months of 1978 the average wage increase in major bargaining units, those with at least 1,000 employees, was 9.9 percent for the first year of the contracts. Over the life of multiyear contracts, the average annual increase was 7.3 percent. Multiyear contracts typically provide the largest increase in the first year.

Statistics for the second three months of the year will be released July 27 and are expected to be about the same.

Union officials contend that they can't hold back on wage demands without proof that employers will hold back on price increases. Douglas Fraser, president of the United Auto Workers, has said that the UAW will "seriously consider" exercising restraint at the bargaining table in September 1979 if between now and then the auto manufacturers show their anti-inflation intentions by holding back price increases. Fraser blasted manufacturers when they announced there would be series of small price increases during the 1979 model year.

But businessmen point to shrinking profit margins and rising labor costs as justifications for raising prices.

Bosworth told the Budget Committee that inflation probably would run "about 7 percent" this year, but he admitted that his estimate was a hopeful one in light of the recent inflation rate. The director of the Congressional Budget Office, Alice Rivlin, told the committee, she expected prices to rise an average of 6.2 percent to 7.2 percent in 1979. She added that that labor costs would be the "principal impetus" behind inflation next year.

Bosworth singled out "workers in the central industrial core of our society" as candidates for voluntary wage restraint. He said major industrial unions have been getting annual increases of about 10 percent in recent years and that they "must begin to moderate their gains and bring them in line with the 7 percent average of the rest of the economy."

Another problem could be the drop in the unemployment rate to 5.7 percent in June. Some businesses are reporting shortages of skilled labor, pushing up wages in some areas. Tight labor markets and increases in the federal minimum wage have speeded a rise in nonunion wages.

Agency Probes Indian Postage

By MIKE ROBINSON

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal agency wants to know if it illegally provided postage to American Indians for mailings used to ask support for their "Longest Walk" protest which now is focusing on alleged violations of their human rights.

The Indians, from more than 80 tribes, planned to meet today in LaFayette Park across from the White House. They have criticized President Carter for being out of the country when their protest march from California arrived in the capital on Saturday.

Russell Means of the American Indian Movement that helped stage the 3,000-mile trek said Tuesday that Carter "has met with women's groups, Chicano groups, Appalachian groups and others. He refuses to meet with Indians."

Meanwhile, Sam Brown, director of ACTION, the federal volunteer agency, ordered an investigation into whether his staff broke the law by using government-paid postage to help the Indians.

A July 5 letter asked 1,000 VISTA and Peace Corps volunteers to help provide food, housing and transportation for the Indians. Enclosed in a government-printed envelope marked "Penalty for private use $300," the letter said the request for support for the demonstrators "is not an official agency function."

The author of the letter was Lynn Miller, coordinator of ACTION's former volunteer project. The letter said a number of ACTION staffers would work on their own time over the weekend to help the Indians.

ACTION spokesman John Pennington said it was possible the letter violated no laws or rules, even though he acknowledged that the activity was not official business.

Pennington cited a previous statement of purpose of the agency's special volunteer programs, saying they should support human, social and environmental needs by encouraging volunteer service in "agencies, institutions and situations where the application of human talent and dedication may help to meet such needs."

Earlier Tuesday Means had gotten into a loud disagreement at the Washington Monument grounds with Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., over a Kennedy-sponsored bill.

During the dispute, Kennedy took the microphone to denounce an Indian pamphlet that said his bill would deprive the tribes of their treaty rights.

"I want to read you what is in the bill, not what is suggested in your pamphlet," he said. "Then if you're not satisfied, I'll be glad to have you come up and sit down and ... work out any particular problems you have in mind."

But Means said the bill would turn reservations into state or national parks in which Indians would be subject to state and local rather than tribal laws established by treaty. He said Indians were "being sacrificed to the state court system, with large bonds and long jail sentences."

On Tuesday, the Indians rallied at the Washington Monument, showed up an hour late for a meeting with Vice President Walter F. Mondale and scheduled a march to the Supreme Court but instead went to the FBI Building.

On Capitol Hill, the House adopted 337-81 a resoution declaring that national policy is to protect the rights of Indians and other native peoples "to believe, express and exercise the traditional religions. ..."

Carter's Pledge Will Boost Gas Prices

NEW YORK (UPI) — President Carter's pledge at the Bonn economic summit to boost U.S. oil prices to world levels could cost the American consumer 7 cents more for a gallon of gasoline, but this and other promises have been made before.

Nor did U.S. summit commitments to restrain oil imports and curb inflation hold any unpleasant surprises for Americans.

"The summit will have no impact on the American consumer," said Alan Greenspan, former head of the Council of Economic Advisers under President Ford and president of Townsend-Greenspan & Co.

"The purpose of these summits is merely to have a forum in which heads of government can converse with each other on economic issues."

The pledges by leaders of the seven major industrial democracies in the cautiously worded summit communique "had been pre-negotiated," said Greenspan. "It was a mistake to expect anything new from the summit."

Under Carter's plan to raise U.S. oil prices to the world level, Americans would pay more and presumably use less energy. Gasoline prices would be affected more than home heating oil because more gasoline is produced from domestic crude now below the world price level.

The petroleum Industry Research Foundation Inc. (PIRFI), an independent study group, estimated lifting U.S. oil prices to world levels today would add 7 cents to the cost of a gallon of gasoline. Since the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries is expected to hike oil prices in 1979, gas prices in 1980 and beyond are likely to rise even more, depending on such factors as inflation.

More fuel-efficient cars mandated by Congress will partially offset the higher cost. Better mileage coupled with higher prices should produce a peak in gas consumption in 1980 and then a decline in gas usage through 1990, PIRFI said.

The summit package held out the promise of increased U.S. exports to Japan and Germany to reduce the massive U.S. trade deficit that could reach $30 billion this year.

The already record U.S. trade deficit is a direct result of America's oil hunger. Carter's renewed pledge at the summit to pare U.S. oil imports by 2.5 million barrels a day by 1985 is aimed at taking a sizable bite out of the deficit.

But some U.S. petroleum experts think Carter's goal to lessen U.S. dependence on foreign oil is unrealistic and predict the United States will become a heavier importer by 1985.

To implement his summit promise on energy, Carter resolved to obtain passage of his energy plan that has been stalled in Congress for 18 months.

"President Carter has clothed his energy proposals with the trappings of an international agreement that remains unsigned," said Charles T. Maxwell, senior vice president of Cyrus J. Lawrence Inc. investment firm. "He has made Congress' failure to pass the energy bill an apparent faux pas in the international litany."

Maxwell predicted Congress would pass the bill in truncated form and eliminate the key crude equalilation tax. "Carter, therefore, can say he got something, but without the tax he will get perhaps only half of the effective cutback in oil demand he had hoped for."

Reducing the U.S. trade deficit — or at least moves in that direction — would bolster the sagging dollar on foreign monetary exchanges. The dollar's decline theoretically makes U.S. exports more attractive aboard, but the direct effect has been a sharp jump in the prices of appliance and auto imports that have added to inflationary pressures at home.

Solon Claims Proposal Will Insure Equality

By PEGGY SIMPSON

WASHINGTON (AP) — A key sponsor is claiming House approval of legislation to prohibit job discrimination based on pregnancy will help insure equality in the workforce.

The provision would greatly strengthen protections of working women who now make up more than half of the job market.

The House voted 376-43 for the bill Tuesday and then used special procedures to send it directly to a conference between Senate and House managers to reconcile differences between the similar proposals.

The major difference is an amendment by Rep. Edward Beard, D-R.I., to let anti-abortion employers stop benefits for their workers who have abortions. A similar provision was defeated in the Senate.

Passage "is a major step in insuring that equality in the labor force is more than an illusion and that pregnancy will no longer be the basis for unfavorable treatment of working women," said Rep. Augustus F. Hawkins, D-Calif., chairman of the subcommittee that handled the bill.

A coalition of labor, civil rights, church and women's groups — with the strong backing of the Carter administration — had worked for the bill to overturn a 1977 Supreme Court decision.

The court held that pregnancy does not meet the tests of the 1964 Civil Rights Act ban on sex discrimination and, therefore, companies could deny sick leave and disability benefits to pregnant workers.

Congress is moving toward adding a new section to the 1964 act to clarify that pregnancy-related discrimination would violate the act.

The measure would include provisions against refusing to hire or promote pregnant workers, firing them or requiring mandatory unpaid leaves and refusing to extend sick leave, medical or disability leave benefits if available to other workers.

Currently, many employers require pregnant women to take unpaid leaves for months before childbirth — even if they need to work and their doctor certifies they are able.

Sherrie O'Steen, one of five women who filed the suit against General Electric that prompted the Supreme Court decision, suffered severe economic consequences when GE forced her to take an unpaid leave of absence when she was six months pregnant, Hawkins told the House.

Her husband had left her and without her job she was nearly destitute, he said. The state of Virginia refused to grant her welfare payments — and she and her infant and 2-year-old daughter subsisted in an unheated, unlighted house in rural Virginia for the winter of 1972 before conditions improved, Hawkins said.

The bill would not require employers to establish a disability or medical plan if they do not have one. It would only require employers who currently provide such benefits to cover pregnancy on the same basis as other conditions.

Ex-Stockbroker Stole Bonds To 'Get Even'

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — A former stockbroker, accused of skipping the country with $2 million of his customers' cash and bonds, says he took the bonds to "get even" with the investment firm that fired him.

James Doyle pleaded guilty Tuesday to securities fraud and other charges arising from the incident. U.S. District Judge Miles Lord delayed sentencing until the conclusion of state charges.

Doyle, 47, told Lord that he had intended to return the bonds to their rightful owners last April but was arrested before he could do so.

Doyle said he took the bonds to get even with the John G. Kinnard and Co., a Minneapolis-based firm that fired him in December 1976. Doyle ran the company's office in Blue Earth for 10 years and was a vice president with the firm.

"It was a grudge deal against Kinnard," Doyle said. "They put me out of business and this was one way of getting even."

Kinnard officials say they discovered irregularities in Doyle's method of handling bearer bonds for customers in October 1976 and fired him later that year.

The state Securities Division then began its own investigation and suspended Doyle's securities license for four years in June 1977.

Doyle was arrested Dec. 20 in the Panama Canal Zone with a cocktail waitress he allegedly married in Las Vagas after leaving his wife and children in Blue Earth.

Doyle originally was charged on 52 federal criminal counts. Under a plea bargaining agreement, he plead guilty to one count each of fraud, interstate transportation of stolen securities, illegal transportation of bonds out of the country, and falsely advertising investors.

Under the agreement, Doyle would receive a maximum sentence of nine years in prison, and the sentence could be served at the same time as any sentence resulting from the state charges against him.

Doyle, who destroyed all his records before he fled, also agreed to help authorities try to determine the owners of the bonds.

Senator Repaid For Expenses Of Campaign

ATLANTA (AP) — Sen. Herman Talmadge was reimbursed by his campaign committee for nearly $27,000 in 1974 campaign expenses paid from his own pocket, according to an amended financial disclosure report.

Talmadge aides said the Georgia Democrat filed the amendments Monday with the secretary of the Senate in Washington and with the Georgia secretary of state in Atlanta.

"What it boils down to is the candidate's reports were not filed properly and they have now been corrected," Rogers Wade, Talmadge's administrative assistant, said Tuesday.

In his original report, Talmadge said he had spent no money on his own behalf. But Wade said Talmadge's 1974 campaign committee had been uncertain what Federal Election Commission disclosure rules required.

"There was monumental confusion about what you could or couldn't do under the FEC rules," he said. "We were relying on the FEC as a safety check, and even they never did catch it."

Talmadge's accountants have identified the expenses listed in the amendments as legitimate campaign disbursements, Wade said. He said Talmadge paid the money from his pocket as the expenses were incurred in dealing with the public.

"You can't believe how many requests we get for donations or wedding invitations to the granddaughter of someone he knew years ago. It's just endless," Wade said.

"These were out-of-pocket expenditures which were to be reimbursed when the rules were clarified."

The Senate Ethics Committee is investigating questions about Talmadge's finances, including the reimbursements.

Talmadge's office said last week the Internal Revenue Service plans to review the senator's income tax returns for 1975 and 1977 after the Ethics Committee's investigation is complete.

Texaco May Scrub Test

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — An electronic instrument accidentally dropped into an offshore well may prevent Texaco from testing for oil and gas to the bottom of its 15,025-foot exploratory hole, company officials say.

Texaco spokesman Vernon R. Shorter said Tuesday that the company will test the seabed geological formations above the well's 14,800-foot level "to determine if hydrocarbons are present."

A "logging tool," an electronic instrument used to measure the presence of hydrocarbons, accidentally was dropped into the well July 7. Shorter said efforts to recover the tool, which is lodged at 14,800 feet, have failed so far.

Texaco sparked a flurry of activity last week when it implied in a cryptic statement that it had found oil or gas, or both, in its first exploratory well 106 miles offshore.

The company said last Thursday said it would test the well "to determine whether hydrocarbons exist in commerical quanities." Company spokesmen would elaborate.

The statement came after two other firms, Continental and Shell, announced their first wells in the Baltimore Canyon Trough were dry. Exxon, Mobil, Houston Oil & Minerals and Gulf also are drilling exploratory wells offshore.

New Trial Set In Oyster Suit

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — A young woman who shattered three teeth because she had a yen for oyster soup had no reason to "gingerly graze through each oyster hunting for a pearl," the Oklahoma Court of Appeals ruled in ordering a new trial of her damage suit.

Sylvia O'Dell, a 30-year-old Oklahoma City graduate student and part-time secretary, had sued DeJean's Packing Co. Inc. over injuries she claimed she suffered from a pearl in an oyster.

She lost the suit in Oklahoma County District Court, but the appellate court said she is entitled to a new trial because "the average, ordinary, reasonably prudent person eating processed oysters ... would not nibble her way through each oyster because of the possibility of finding a pearl."

The court cited the history of similar lawsuits, saying a case should be judged on whether a consumer should "reasonably expect" to find harmful materials in food. Someone buying oysters in a shell, for instance, would be more inclined to watch for pearls, the court said.

Miss O'Dell says she purchased a can of oysters July 22, 1976, and shattered three teeth when she ate them in a soup she made two weeks later.

Railroad Town No Longer Enjoys Lively Days

By RICHARD H. GROWALD

BLUESTEM, Wash. (UPI) — A dog named Trouble stands sentry on the last of an American dream.

Trouble is a tan, husky and loud and bites and Bill Warwick, keeper of the dream, keeps the dog neck-tied to a rope long enough to give pause to strangers coming up the asphalt road, but short enough to make it safe to go to and from the Warwick house under the locust trees.

The Warwick house, red flowers, green shrubs and white metal siding, is the last inhabited dwelling of Bluestem. A grain company still keeps two wheat storage elevators — they rise 125 and 145 feet above the fruited plain and are the Empire State and Chrysler Buildings of this flat land — but except for the Warwick house, Bluestem is a ghost town of collapsing buildings and a Grange hall the farmers use more out of nostalgia than need.

"The post office and the grocery store went right after World War II," Bill Warwick said. "The school went earlier and the neighbors moved to Davenport or they died."

Trouble barked. Warwick, a 6-foot-2 grandfather, told the dog to shut up.

"It's quiet here," he said. "The noise is over."

The noise came in 1892. The Great Northern Railroad tracked west from Spokane into Lincoln County, where a quirk of Mother Nature had formed an Iowa-like wheat plain below the timber vineyards. Pioneer farmers followed.

So rich was the topsoil that Sam Vow, one of the railroad coolies, opted for the plow instead of the rail hammer. The melting pot was working. It was a brave time.

The railroad dropped off pioneers at stations it placed so that farmers would have no more than half a day's wagon ride to get their wheat to the trains. The railroad and the pioneers made up town names for the stations.

One was called Odessa. Its settlers were Germans whose ancestors had been recruited to Russia by Catherine the Great but who, in the dying decades of czardom, opted for America and came and named their town for Russia's great 19th century wheat port. Odessa still stands.

But gone from the maps are Egypt and Larene and Peach and other all-day-ride wheat towns. The coming of the internal combustion engine, allowing a farmer to truck his wheat, killed towns. Depression times did in others. At first Bluestem dreamed big and it seemed to be coming true.

Davenport, the county seat, sits seven miles north but Bluestem was a railroad stop and the school grew to four rooms and 100 pupils and a bank opened and a bandit named Harry Tracy came to threaten it.

Tracy died speedily, hunted by a posse and shooting himself to death in a wheat field as the law approached, but living in the dying lore of Bluestem, a sandman figure to frighten small children and recorded in Lincoln County archives as explaining he preferred suicide to being burned at the stake.

there was Thomas Denson, for a time in 1894 the Mister Big in Bluestem because he was the rail agent and post master. His reign was brief; Denson took an interest in town social life and sometimes was not on hand when the train dropped mail pouches and this irked Washington.

Denson defended himself against the charges of letting mail bags lie untouched in the dust by saying the train crews did not keep to schedule and tossed the bags carelessly. But in those days the moving train was mighty and Denson was dismissed.

A 1903 archive reported the opening of the hardware store and the erection of the lumber yard and the town had a live-in population of 175, not counting the farmers down the wagon paths.

It was not Bluestem then. Sam Vow's railroad crew had named the station Moscow. The town had no more Russian connection than nearby Egypt had Nile River roots.

Moscow it remained until in World War I, Czarist Russia collapsed, it dropped out of the Allied side and the Bolsheviks took over. The citizenry wanted no link with Lenin and changed the town name to Bluestem, a type of wheat.

World War I made wheat men richer. But mini-depression followed and, with jobs amd indoor plumbing a reality up in Davenport, Bluestem began to slide.

By the end of World War II only four houses still had inhabitants. Now there is only the Warwicks. Thier presence keeps Bluestem on the maps, printed in the tiniest letters.

Evidence of a busier past exists. The road into town bears a sign saying "Sharp Shod Animals Prohibited;" the pointed hooves might rupture the road ashpalt. But the only town nameplate is handlettered and affixed at his fence gate by Bill Warwick, 60, keeper of the dream.

The silence reigns. Even the Warwick telephone is gone.

"I have four sons and four daughters. But any call from Bluestem is long distance and the charges mounted so out went the phone," Bill Warwick said.

Above, the sky is poetry blue and dotted with cotton puff clouds. This is Washington but the climate is mild and it was 1950 the last time Warwick's automobile was lost in snow.

For years Warwick managed the local grain elevators. He was promoted to supervise the larger elevator operation in Harrington, five miles south and another stepchild of the Great Northern. But in 1964 Warwick fell 30 feet in an elevator.

From ankle to knee in his right leg there is only manmade bone and he guards it even from being nudged by the nameless family cats who keep the gophers out of the potato and corn garden.

"The doctors told me that if something goes wrong with it, it gets thumped or something, they'll cut off the leg at the knee," Warwick said. Since 1964 he's devoted himself to his children.

One son went as a teacher to the Marshall Islands and then to Oklahoma. One keeps a store in Spokane. Mrs. Warwick, her hair ungray and her face unlined, said, "Two of the girls married ones they shouldn't have. Their husbands beat them. But the girls got divorces and then new husbands and are happy now."

"You see the town dying but it is a slow death and you really don't notice. It's so peaceful," Mrs. Warwick said. "Only real trouble is that I had this tumor last year. The doctors took it out; it was as big as my head."

"Don't forget the raccoons," he husband said. "They'd come up from Crab Creek and get at the chickens. Had to shoot one. Didn't like doing that."

Warwick wants life, human or else, preserved in Bluestem. He even sheltered a dozen coyotes.

"I remember one night the coyotes got to the chicken coop and began dragging the dumb chickens out, head first, through the wire. Bill and I ran out there and started jerking the chickens from the coyotes and my sons (Floyd, Bill and Jim) came running out and helped, but Floyd had the rifle and was going to shoot the coyotes.

"We were all shouting under the moon and the chickens were cackling and the coyotes sounding off and Trouble barking and Floyd was so excited he just swumng the rifle at a coyote but he missed and knocked the butt off the rifle when it hit the side of the coop," Mrs. Warwick said.

The Warwicks looked at each other and smiled.

"You can swim in the creek and the grandchildren come out for my rolls, too," Mrs. Warwick said.

"We have 14 grandchildren," said Warwick.

"Thirteen," said his wife.

"Just wait," said her husband.

The couple laughed.

"I wonder if any of them will settle here," Mrs. Warwick said.

Traveling By Bus Offers Adventure

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN
Associated Press Writer

DANBURY, Conn. — A big over-the-road bus with a toilet in the back rolls by on Interstate 84, and in the glint of its stainless steel my mind flashes back to sunny summers long gone when there were no interstates and the toilets were at the next rest stop.

Mulligan's Stew

I am a small boy peering out a bus window at America rolling by in a breathless panorama of small towns, tilled fields of corn and then wheat, large ranches, dark green mountains and desert nights filled with stars. My father is by my side, a bundle of Chamber of Commerce literature and the Sporting News on his lap.

I don't suppose he ever made more than $3,000 a year in his life. Probably much less. He had an unusual but wearying warehouse job in the government assay office in New York City, weighing and stamping gold bars worth millions from 8 to 5 every day, but he never let dull routine tie him down. His mind's eye was always trained on the horizon of next summer's dream, planing the big bus trip.

There were three of us kids, all boys, and starting at the age of about 7, each of us got to go in a different year. The whole family couldn't go on account of the financial considerations. Besides, Mom didn't like to travel, but she was in on the planning sessions which lasted all winter long. After the supper dishes were cleared from the dining room table, it was like Eisenhower and Bradley planning the D-day invasion, maps and schedules and pertinent literature spread out all over the place.

Then, usually late in April, came the big night when Dad and who's ever turn it was to go went down to the bus terminal on 34th Street to buy the tickets. Pittsburgh, Columbus, Cincinnati, Evansville, Memphis ... each overnight stop required a separate stub, but attached to the rest of the ticket by perforation and stretching on endlessly across the country like a roll of pink toilet paper.

The poor guy in line behind us probably only wanted to go to Asbury Park, N.J., or Danbury, Conn., and maybe had only 10 minutes to spare to catch his bus, and here he was hopelessly trapped behind Pop's annual American dream.

Dad's claim to fame, and it was a proud one, was that he never had learned to drive but had been in every state in the Union three times by Greyhound or Trailways, which was no mean feat for an unskilled laborer in the Depression years. Of course, Hawaii hadn't entered the Union yet, and the Alcan Highway hadn't been built, or we'd have gotten to Anchorage in those pre-statehood days just to see if they had a semi-pro baseball team that the Sporting News had missed.

Dad wasn't big on museums or art galleries, but five-and-dime stores, zoos, state capitols and the local baseball diamond were a fixed part of every itinerary. I'm still the only guy in my crowd who has been in every ballpark in the Three "I" League and watched the Toledo Mudhens, the Baton Rouge Red Sticks and the Lancaster Red Roses play on their home turf under lights affixed to telegraph poles. Satch Paige, pitching for the Jersey Black Giants one Sunday afternoon in Sandusky, Ohio, gave me his autograph long before Bill Veeck ever thought of signing him for the major leagues, where in my hero-worshipping heart he always dwelled.

We stayed in $2 a night YMCA rooms, with the bathroom down the hall, and did our laundry in the sink, this being in the days before launderamats and drip-dry fabrics. On long hauls, San Antone to El Paso, or maybe L.A. to Frisco (experienced travelers always talked like that), we rode the bus all night to save time and money. The driver sitting up there enthroned in his gray uniform, peaked cap, leather leggings and big sunglasses looms out of my boyhood memories as a heroic authority figure on a par with an airline pilot or a pigboat commander.

Postcards from Missoula, Great Falls, Bismarck, Fargo, Minneapolis marked our passage through the land, as certain as banked Indian campfires and the great golden dome of another state house or the crossing of another famous bridge. Dad was big on bridges: Roebling's suspension bridge over the Ohio at Cincinnati, Eads Bridge at St. Louis, the first to span the Mississippi, and the Golden Gate, just being completed then at the entrance to San Francisco Bay. Rodeos, tent circuses, carnivals, vaudeville's straw hat circuit, even once a hobo convention in Union Pacific freight yards at Omaha were our excursions into native culture. I also recall a dance marathon, a raft race on the Colorado, a frog jumping contest, a Mennonite buggy beauty pageant, a man on stilts wading across the Rio Grande and a whole panorama of church suppers, volunteer firemen's picnics, pancake festivals, fifty cents-a-head clambakes and participation in similar civic events that were invariably colorful, satisfying and economic.

Everyone, aunts and uncles and neighbors, was down at the depot for the big homecoming, but the four-or five-week trip was never over. And isn't yet. Fall nights, after homework was done, were spent arguing with my brothers over whether the Mills cafeteria in Dayton had better fried chicken than the Piccadilly in Baton Rouge, and whether the House of David any day of the week could beat the New Orleans Pelicans. Then the snow fell and it was time to plan the next dream, send away for the maps and travel folders.

Since my father first taught me to pack a cardboard suitcase in that uncomplicated un-air-conditioned long ago, the great open road of life has taken me to 106 countries on every continent. Flaps out, wheels down over a new city — Bangkok, Peking, Calcutta, Papeete — I always look out at the buildings and streets and bridges hurrying into focus with the wonder and excitement and feeling of adventure of a small boy peering out a bus window. Out there's a ball park. Cricket in Auckland, New Zealand, rugby and soccer in Taiwan helped pass many a Sunday afternoon, but what bliss to find a real baseball diamond in Manila, in Kyoto, in Cristobal, Panama, and outside the huge automobile plant in Turin, Italy.

The House of David, on a good night under the arc lights, could have taken any of them.

Government Study Says Crime Labs Understaffed

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A study prepared for the government says many crime laboratories are understaffed, undertrained, underequipped, and unable to make some of the required basic tests such as matching blood samples.

About 250 crime laboratories — 90 percent of the nation's total — took part in at least some of the tests in the three-year study conducted by Forensic Sciences Foundation, Inc., under a $330,000 grant from the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration.

With laboratory evidence becoming more and more important in criminal prosecutions, an advisory committee recommended the labs be tested on a regular basis in the future.

It also asked the government to create regional workshops to provide more technical training.

The report said many of the laboratories failed to use test methods available to them, or use them correctly, and some made careless errors. Others lacked needed training and equipment.

The study listed these deficiencies:

—In one test, 71.2 percent of the laboratories — 94 of 132 — got "unacceptable" blood-typing results. This was the project's highest error rate. In tests to identify drugs and fibers, the unacceptable rate was 1.7 percent each.

—Thirty-four percent could not match paint samples; 22 percent could not spot differences among three metal samples, 50 percent could not identify dog hair and 18 percent failed to analyze and document specimens correctly.

—Eighty-eight laboratories tried to match .25 caliber bullets with two different weapons from which they had been fired. Nine laboratories were "clearly in error" and four had inconclusive results, the report said.

Individual laboratory scores varied widely. While there were some low-scorers, the report said, "many ... displayed excellence."

The report said about 57 percent of participants were state and regional laboratories, 40 percent were local and 2 percent federal — plus a private laboratory and a Canadian government laboratory.

Home Wine Fad Loses Popularity

OSKALOOSA, Iowa (UPI) — Home wine making has gone the way of other fads, a Central Iowa wine supplier says.

"They just aren't there like they once were. It was a fad thing. And now there are fewer people doing it themselves," according to Betty Walker, owner of the Red Apple. "But, that's not to say there still aren't some who are making wine."

Mrs. Walker said the popularity of homemade wine crested several years ago. Many stores opened to cater to the new hobby. But now, she said, many have closed and others are having a rough time staying in business.

One problem for the would-be wine maker is that the production of the beverage is not a quick process.

"You really can't get it ready fast. It needs to age from one to two years to be really ready," Mrs. Walker said. "That's something many people don't understand. They try to drink the wine too quickly, and then wonder why it's not very good."

She said another problem driving some people out of the amateur wine-making business is the need for extensive storage. An average five-gallon batch can make from 10 to 12 bottles of wine or beer at a time.

"And this means you've got to have some place to put the wine while it's aging," she said.

Mrs. Walker said there is nothing to stories traditionally attached to the production of beer and wine.

"The beer just sits there and ages for up to three weeks. The bottles don't blow up, like it shows in the movies," she said. "And it's not like a still."

Mrs. Walker said an individual can make wine and beer legally for home consumption without a permit.

"But he can't sell any of it commercially," she said.

Mrs. Walker said blackberry wine and rose wines are always popular for her customers. This doesn't mean that once you've mastered the tricks of wine making, you can't get a little creative.

"We have one man who makes potato wine," Mrs. Walker said. "And suprisingly enough, it's good."

Atheist Group Opposed To Teaching Plan

MADISON, Wis. (UPI) — An atheists' foundation headquartered in Madison but born in southern Indiana is challenging a proposed religion teaching project to begin in 16 Indiana high schools this fall as a violation of the constitutional church-state separation.

Anne Gaylor, president of the Freedom from Religion Foundation in Madison wrote to Ardis G. Sanders, West Lafayette, director of the Indiana Religions Project suggesting that "at least one freethought lecture be incorporated into this program for each of the schools ..."

She said press reports indicate the classes will be taught unobjectively, in at least one case by a former minister, John S. May, Bloomington.

Miss Gaylor said in a news release accompanying the letter that her foundation has been successful in Wisconsin in ending religious ceremonies that formerly opened and closed commencements at the University of Wisconsin and has stopped prayers in the Janesville, Wis., schools.

"Students ... have every right to hear other opinions," her letter said. "They have every right to know that a large segment of our population views the bible (her spelling) as a book of myths and legends."

The foundation's directors include an Indiana physician, Dr. Roger L. Buck, Spencer, who said Sunday he might be one of the lecturers if the foundation's suggestion is accepted.

He said the Wisconsin group was founded in 1976. A meeting of 16 people in his home in Spencer "right in the midst of the Bible belt," was the beginning of the national foundation a year later, he said.

The group claims members in 23 states and the District of Columbia.

Buck described himself and the group as humanistic atheists, who believe there is no God and, therefore, humanity is what's important: "We've got to get out and do the work ourselves."

He said they are not allied with Madalyn Murray O'Hair's group, because they believe her methods counterproductive.

Buck said if the foundation's suggestion is ignored, there is a possibility the group will seek court action.

CDI Studies Hotel Offer

NEW YORK (AP) — Walter R. Garrison, chairman and president of CDI Corp., is looking into an offer to invest in an Atlantic City hotel that could become a gambling casino, the company has reported.

CDI directors declined an offer received last week to acquire a 35 percent interest in a contract to buy the Ritz Hotel, but Garrison decided to pursue the investment on his own, the company announced Monday.

CDI said Garrison intends to offer the investment to CDI at his cost at a future date, when the board of directors would make another decision on the deal.

The price of the hotel is $11 million, CDI said, and substantial further investment would be needed to realize "tenative" plans for turning the Ritz into a casino.

Scars Remain In Terror-Ridden Addis Ababa

BY CHARLES P. WALLACE

ADDIS ABABA, Ethiopia (UPI)—The bloody terror appears to be over. The guns have fallen silent in Ethiopia's capital city, and residents now hasten through the streets before dawn to join the growing breadlines.

During a brief stopover in this increasingly insular east African nation, western diplomatic sources reported that the violent skirmishes which daily shattered the evening calm in Addis Ababa have been absent for two months.

The fighting, between forces loyal to Ethiopia's military government and the underground Ethiopian Peoples Revolutionary party, has ended with the virtual extermination of the EPRP. Its adherents, who tried to force the military to surrender power to a civilian Marxist government, have been killed, have fled or are in hiding.

In what authorities called a campaign against assassinations by the EPRP, the fighting left hundreds of dead in the capital over nine months. Many of the victims were found sprawled in gutters, a placard with an admonishment left dangling from the neck.

The diplomats also said:

—Reports circulating in Addis Ababa suggest that cuban forces, whofe strength was steadily increased to 17,000 combat soldiers during Ethiopia's war with Somalia over the disputed Ogaden, have now been reduced to between 12,000 and 13,000 men.

While the Soviet Union is said to be acting as peacemaker between the Ethiopians and secessionist guerrillas in the northern province of Eritrea, new shipments of Soviet arms for the government war effort in Eritrea continue to pour into the port of Assab. The weapons include sophisticated jet fighters, tanks and artillery.

Ethiopia's economy has been devastated by wars and natural disasters, and the situation is now worse than at any time since Emperor Haile Selassie was overthrown in 1974.

The most serious crisis confronting the Ethiopian authorities is a drought which wiped out the entire harvest of the northeastern province of Wollo.

The diplomats said more than 1.5 million people in Wollo are facing starvation, far more than in a similiar catastrophe in 1973 and also a far higher figure than the government admits.

While the government has begun moving food supplies into Wollo on an emergency basis, the diplomats said the full scope of the crisis was known as early as last September but the government had committed its resources to the war against Somalia in the Ogaden.

There are indications, according to the diplomats, that Addis Ababa and other towns are being made to starve a little, as one of them put it, in order to provide food to the drought victims.

Agriculture was given a low priority during the Ogaden war, and consequentlq transportation and such critically needed items as fertilizer were kept from the farming sector.

A regular fixture in Addis Ababa, unknown in recent years, has become the long breadlines which begin forming at bakeries at 5 a.m., the end of the nighttime curfew. The bread is gone by 8 a.m.

In addition to the immediate costs of the Ogaden war, there are numerous indications eastern bloc assistance to the Ethiopians will cost the government dearly for years to come.

According to the diplomats, the Addis Ababa government has been obliged to sell to East Germany a portion of its valuable coffee crop for the next 10 years as repayment for equipment supplies during the Ogaden conflict.

Estimates vary from 10 percent to 90 percent of the crop, which is Ethiopia's main earner of foreign currency. The East Germans are reportedly receiving the coffee at below world prices, and then reselling it at a profit in western Europe.

As a consequence to such deals, Ethiopia's foreign exchange reserves have fallen by an estimated 20 percent and are rapidly dwindling. Factories are unable to buy raw materials to keep operating at anything approaching their capacity.

Prices are going up and will probably go a lot higher, one diplomat said. The economic situation is deteriorating and will probably get a lot worse. It could take years to sort out.

On the positive side, the end of the Ogaden war enabled the government to reopen the railroad line linking Addis Ababa with the tiny neighboring state of Djibouti, which has been Ethiopia's traditional access route to the sea, carrying 60 per cent of the nation's exports.

The railroad, which was cut by Somali sympathizers last August, was reopened two weeks ago. Cans of food which rusted lying on the docks in djibouti have beren appearing in Addis Ababa's food stores.

Politically, the military government headed by Lt. Col. Mengistu Haile Mariam appears entrenched and unified, with no demonstrable indications that it is willing to permit the creation of a civilian successor.

Two months ago, the Ethiopians expelled nine Cuban diplomats, including the ambassador, for providing sanctuary to the deputy leader of a civilian Marxist party, the All-Ethiopian Socialist Union. The party has since replaced the EPRP as the bogey man of the ruling Dergue.

The diplomats said that the Ethiopians have now given their approval to the Cuban government for a new ambassador to be sent to Addis Ababa, and the incident does not seem to have affected the more important military relations between the two countrces.

The Cubans have heretofore resisted involvament in Ethiopia's behalf against the Eritrean guerrillas whom they once supported. But diplomatic analysts believe that their involvement is inevitable, particularly if the Ethiopians suffer a disastrous defeat by the insurgents.

Although criticism of the United States and the west has increased in stridency over the past few months, the diplomats see indications that the Ethiopians may be willing to pursue a more non-aligned course in the future.

The signs include acceptance by Addis Ababa of a new U.S. ambassador, Frederic Chapin, and a new French envoy as well. The Ethiopians are also ueeking, and receiving considerable economic ausistance from the European Common Market.

Mexican Chief Seeks Help From Chinese

MEXICO CITY (AP) — President Jose Lopez Portillo plans to visit China in October and one of his goals will be to see if Chinese agricultural technology can help Mexico with its food crisis.

A source close to the president said Lopez Portillo wants to inspect Chinese communal farms to see if their methods can be adapted to Mexican communal farms, which have very low production rates.

Experts say the low production rates are one of the reasons Mexico has to import basic grains. Even corn, the basis of the Mexican diet for centuries, has to be imported now because farmers cannot meet the demand.

"We will be in China next October to learn from your ancient wisdom and your new experiences all that you can teach us," Lopez Portillo told a group of visiting Chinese legislators last month.

The 10-man Chinese delegation visited Mexican farming cooperatives, irrigation projects and industrial plants.

Lopez Portillo said he accepted the Chinese government's invitation to "meet and deal with all the members of the Chinese government, renew the principles that are common to both of us, talk about that which identifies us, discuss our differences, strengthen our trade..."

Trade between the two nations is negligible.

Lopez Portillo also will visit Japan on the same trip. The dates have not been announced.

The president visited the Soviet Union and Bulgaria in May seeking increased trade, Russian offshore oil drilling techniques and assistance in development of nuclear power. He also observed Bulgarian agricultural and irrigation techniques.

Lopez Portillo has said he forsees "root" changes in cooperative farming in Mexico, but the issue is politically explosive. He recently declared there is no more land to distribute to peasants under land reform. Thousands of landless, jobless Mexican peasants cross the border into the United States seeking work.

Harvesting Aid Plant To Open

DIMMITT (Special) — The Corn Saver Manufacturing Co., makers of a unique combine attachment that aids in the harvesting of corn, will hold ribbon cutting ceremonies at 2 p.m. today.

The firm manufactures pick up attachments for corn headers; the attachments are used to pick up corn that has fallen in the field.

The new manufacturing plant will build "Corn Savers" in sizes ranging from two-row to eight-row models. Prices for the devices, which are built to fit any combine corn header, start at $900.

Ernest Sammann, owner of the firm, claims that the harvesting device can save more than two thousand pounds of corn per acre under some conditions.

He added that spider mites and southwestern corn borers often damage corn stalks to the extent that the corn falls down in the field. Under such conditions, thousands of pounds of corn can be lost if some special pickup method is not used in harvesting the crop.

Broyles Serious On Big Eight Talk

HERSKOWITZ

By MICKEY HERSKOWITZ
And STEVE PERKINS

Q. What is behind the threat by Frank Broyles to leave the Southwest Conference and place Arkansas in the Big Eight? Is Broyles just trying to gain some concessions from the SWC? What are the chances of Arkansas actually going to the Big Eight?

—Cary Henderson, Memphis, Tenn.

A. Broyles is sincere in wanting to move Arkansas into the Big Eight and, in fact, it makes a great deal of sense both geographically and financially. As a football coach, Broyles wasn't fully aware of all the drawbacks of being in the SWC. From his new chair as athletic director, he sees them clearly.

Our man on the inside of the situation says that had Kansas State dropped out of the Big Eight, Broyles would have applied for that spot immediately.

Eventually, there will have to be a massive rearrangement of the Southwest Conference anyway, with TCU, SMU, Baylor and Rice ousted into a new partnership with Vanderbilt and Tulane, none of which can keep up with modern day football.

Q. How did Richie Zisk feel about leaving the Chicago White Sox after his success in 1977? Did the White Sox make a serious bid attempt to keep him?

—Danny Salzberg, Miami Beach, Fla.

A. The onetime Polish Prince of the South Side is now a happy Texas Redneck. "It's a short life," Zisk says. "I'm just a businessman — with a bat."

Bill Veeck is committed to keeping the White Sox out of the free agent market. The Texas Rangers' deal with Zisk would have nearly bankrupted Veeck's personnel fund: $2,950,000 spread out over 10 years.

• • •

Q. How many amateur fights did world champion Harry Jeffra lose in a row? Is it a world record? How many pro fights did he win and lose? How many titles did the hold?

—Mickey Lamday, Baltimore, Md.

A. Jeffa was born in your town just after the start of World War, I, and baptized as Ignacius Pasquali Guiffi. As a teen-ager, Guiffi once lost 11 amateur fights in succession, but no records are kept on the amateurs.

From 1933 through 1947, he won 92, lost 18, had seven draws and one "no contest." He had 27 kayos among his 92 wins and was only stopped twice. Along the way he won both the bantamweight and featherweight titles. After three years away from boxing, the tried a comeback in 1950, lost two fights and retired for good.

Q. Now that there is sudden death overtime in the NFL, why do newspapers show a slot for tie games?

—P.P., Atlanta, Mich.

A. Though there was no tie game planned in the NFL last season, there was one the year before (LA-Minnesota when neither team was abe to score during extra 15-minute period). It's only in playoff games that a second extra overtime is decreed.

A tie game counts as a half game won and half game lost in figuring the winning percentage. Until eight years ago, the NFL tossed out tie games as if they had never been played. The Chicago Bears won the 1932 championship with a record of seven wins, one loss and SIX ties (.875 percentage) over Green Bay, which was 10-3-1 that year (.769 percentage).

NE, Dixie 'Stars' Triumph

By SCOTT SUDDUTH
Avalanche-Journal Sports Staff

Kevin Short had his name written all over the Rawlings Official baseball used during the championship tilt between Dixie all-stars and Southwest all-stars Tuesday night, only the nombre was spelled l-o-n-g.

Short came up on the long end of a double and a home run to give Dixie a 4-2 victory in the Area II tournament at the Southern ball park. Championships were decided in three other area tourneys too, with Northwest, Post and Wolfforth qualifying.

Across town, Northwest LL defeated host Eastern All-Stars for the Area I championship 18-12. In the consolation game, Northeast whipped Midwest 6-1.

In the opening frame of the Dixie-Southwest game, Short connected with the baseball on his first at-bat, drilling the pitch over the fence in left-center-field and collected RBIs.

Both teams settled down to some stingy pitching and defense for the next 3½ innings before Short made another successful trip to the plate for the Dixie all-stars. This time he drove in another run with a stand-up double and gave Dixie a 3-0 lead.

Southwest counterattacked in the bottom of the fifth with 2 runs as Chad Boykin, the winning pitcher, began to tire. Robby James stole home on a passed ball and Curtis Smith smacked an RBI single to bring Southwest within 1 run.

Relief pitcher Kyle Gayler retired the side and Dixie returned in the top of the sixth to add a cushion run to their lead.

UIL Rule Attacked By Cager

HOUSTON (AP) — Greg Kite is all set to attend a basketball camp in California next month, but the Madison High School star won't know until next Wednesday whether he can do so without affecting his senior year eligibility.

U.S. District Judge Finis Cowan heard testimony all day Tuesday in a suit filed by the 16-year-old's father against a 15-year-old ruling by the University Interscholastic League that prohibits high school football and basketball players from attending such camps.

Kite's suit seeks a temporary restraining order that would allow his 6-foot-11 son to attend the Super Stars camp in San Diego without losing his last year of high school eligibility.

The ban does not apply to individual sports like tennis and golf.

Cowan called for final citations from attorneys next Tuesday and said he would hear final arguments the following afternoon.

In a companion suit, Boston Celtics star Dave Cowens is seeking an injunction against the league, claiming restraint of trade because the UIL rule restricts the possibility of attracting young athletes of all ages to his summer camp in Brenham, Texas.

Dr. Rhea Williams, retired director of the UIL, testified the reasons for the rule — which applies only to football and basketball— was intended to ensure equalized competition in the face of what he termed overemphasis by some schools on football and basketball.

"If you haven't lived in Texas then you

Raiders Upgrade Facilities With Funds From Option Sales

Work continues on the lettermen's lounge-ticket office on the north rim of Jones Stadium, with Tech athletic officials pointing to the improvements already completed or under way as part of the most recent expansion program.

Tech's new athletic director Dick Tamburo Tuesday issued an accounting of the work either completed or under way and how the school has fared the past two years in its sale of option areas in the football stadium. The option sales have enabled Tech to make the improvements in the arena.

"I am extremely pleased with the improvements that have been made in the athletic plant," Tamburo said in a statement accompanying the improvement figures. "The option money already has allowed some excellent improvements to be made, and the money is encumbered to upgrade facilities in several other areas.

"Undoubtedly, the option program has benefitted Tech athletics greatly."

Tamburo arrived on campus earlier this month after being hired in June. The option sales program and the completed or under-construction projects were begun by J T King, who is retiring as athletic director Aug. 31.

The lettermen's lounge-ticket office complex is the third major step in the school's renovation program. Already completed were the installation of new seating throughout the stadium, new AstroTurf on the stadium floor, installation of an elevator to serve the press box and VIP sections, and renovation of the press and VIP areas.

Monies to finance these projects came from sales of stadium options last year and again last spring. These sales totaled more than $2 million, and of this total, more than $1.7 million has been expended or earmarked for athletic facilities.

Through July 10, the option program had brought in $2,290,250.65, Tamburo reported, including almost $2.2 million from actual sale of option seats. Interest from that money and sale of the old AstroTurf, old seats and a mobile home used as option-sales office account for the remainder of the total amount, Tamburo reported.

Remainder of the option money on account ($500,752.79) also is earmarked for use in renovating athletic facilities. According to priorities established by the athletic department and approved by the Board of Regents in 1976, there are several projects which the department still plans to develop.

Tamburo said that list includes remodeling of the offices in the athletic building at the south end of Jones Stadium, amortization of an existing stadium debt, upgrading facilities such as restrooms in Jones Stadium and further improvements in the existing baseball, tennis, golf and track facilities.

"Obviously, we will not be able to do everything we would like to do, because there just isn't enough money," Tamburo said. "But, there already have been some great improvements made. In the last two years, the athletic plant has been improved through the installation of new seats throughout the stadium, the new AstroTurf and, this fall, the completion of a beautiful new building on the north end of the stadium. These three things alone are improvements of more than $1.5 million.

"The option program here has been a tremendous success and already has accomplished that it was designed to do —improve facilities. Those are improvements we can all be proud of."

One of the major upgrading projects in the department came as a result of donations. The Bob Fuller and Rex Fuller families contributed more than $115,000 to renovate the track stadium. The track facility was named for them in ceremonies last year.

UCLA Graduate Named Tech Women's SID

Women's Athletics at Texas Tech University has hired Craig Pletenik to be the department's first sports information director.

Pletenik, a graduate of the University of California, Los Angeles, will begin his duties in late August.

In 1977-78, more than 100 athletes competed in the women's sports program at Texas Tech. Funding for the department has been increased and a full-time coaching staff for seven sports has been employed.

In the past, some of the coaches helped out as information directors for the department. But Women's Athletics Director Jeannine McHaney said the rapid growth of the program has made it necessary to hire someone to work with the news media full-time.

"With Pletenik as our SID, our dissemination of information should be much more consistent and effective," Miss McHaney said.

"I'm not locked into a traditional men's sports role where guidelines already have been established," Pletenik said. "In women's sports information, innovations are still possible. I think that to gain public awareness of women's sports I will have to experiment, maybe go out on a limb and certainly be creative with my approach."

Pletenik received his bachelor's degree in communication from UCLA in 1977. At the university he did play-by-play announcing, was a sports writer and conducted interviews for both men and women's sports.

He was most recently an announcer with KRMR in Ketchum, Idaho.

Babe Ruth Team Falls At Canyon

Lubbock's Babe Ruth team in the 13-year-old tournament at Canyon dropped an 11-8 verdict to Lamesa Tuesday night.

The game followed a Lubbock victory on Monday and Lubbock plays again tonight in the loser's bracket.

Also in Babe Ruth play, Lubbock will play tonight at 6 in the Babe Ruth senior tournament at Pampa. It lost to Wichita Falls 5-3 in Monday's opening round.

Still's Tackle, Remark Stop Campbell

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Art Still delivered his best quip and his hardest hit just minutes after he and his buddy Earl Campbell launched their professional careers.

"For a fee," said Kansas City's towering defensive lineman, "I'll set you free."

Campbell, flat on his back after Still had halted him for no gain, laughed loud enough to be heard on the sidelines.

Then Campbell, last year's No. 1 selection in the National Football League draft, and Still, the No. 2, resumed what proved a dull contest between rookies and free agents of the Chiefs and Houston Oilers, Tuesday night.

The game was locally advertised as a confrontation between Campbell and Still. But Campbell, after gaining 37 yards on 10 carries, sat out the entire second half as the Chiefs newcomers fashioned a 9-0 victory on three field goals.

"We already knew some things about Earl," explained Houston coach Bum Phillips. "We had to find out things about people we weren't so sure about."

"Earl and I got to be good friends playing together in the all-star games," said Still, a 6-foot-7, 250-pound blithe spirit. "And we ran into each other a lot at banquets, too. I guess it was good public relations to say this was a Campbell-Still battle, but it really wasn't. But after I put that good hit on him early, I just had to jive him a little."

After Still stopped him at the line early, Campbell managed gains of six, five and five yards on successive chugs into the line. Later he went wide and gained eleven.

"I'll probably get better," Campbell said. "I didn't know how much I would play before the game. I don't call the shots, but it's good that everybody gets a chance."

Dave Reeve, a free agent place kicker from Notre Dame, booted second-quarter field goals of 25 and 41 yards following interceptions of Oiler passes. Zenon Andrusyshyn, acquired by the Chiefs from the Canadian Football League, added a 25-yarder with 8:56 elapsed in the fourth period.

The Oilers, after having six passes intercepted, could generate little offense.

"It's only one very small piece in the whole building process," said Marv Levy, who also made his debut as the Chiefs' head coach. "Tomorrow it will be all but forgotten. It's a positive piece in the process and I feel good about it, but let's go on now. The only time you can get really ecstatic is after you've won the Super Bowl.

Still and Campbell met briefly after the game.

"We just congratulated each other," said Still, "and said, 'See you next time around.'"

Pitchers—Including Sutton—Dominate NL Games

By The Associated Press

Don Sutton thanked the umpires. J.R. Richard thanked his natural ability and Eric Rasmussen thanked his lucky stars in a night that saw some outstanding pitching performances in the National League.

Los Angeles right-hander Sutton, in uniform only by the grace of league president Chub Feeney, made a six-hitter stand up for a 7-2 win over Pittsburgh and his 200th career victory.

Richard, Houston's strikeout king, fanned 10 and gave up three hits to beat Philadelphia 9-1.

And Rasmussen, acquired by San Diego in May from St. Louis, hurled a five-hitter in his first start against his former club as the Padres beat the Cards 3-2.

Sutton, Richard and Rasmussen weren't the only pitchers in the league with live arms Tuesday night. Phil Niekro handcuffed the New York Mets on six hits in Atlanta's 4-3 victory and Hal Dues of Montreal yielded only four hits to Cincinnati in 6 2/3 innings for a 3-1 win. Jerry Koosman of the Mets also threw a six-hitter, but lost to Niekro.

Chicago edged San Francisco 7-6 in 11 innings in the other NL game Tuesday night. The boxscore from that game, by the way, showed 10 pitchers.

Sutton, now 10-8, picked up his 200th victory only one day after Feeney decided not to suspend him for allegedly defacing baseballs last Friday night in St. Louis. Sutton was ejected from the St. Louis game after home plate umpire Doug Harvey said he had scuffed the balls intentionally.

"I think the umpired did a very good job," Sutton said of Tuesday night's victory. "I appreciate the way the umpires didn't make a big deal of it. I appreciate the fact that they realized that the fans come to the park to watch 18 guys play ball, not the umpire and myself climb all over each other."

Joe Ferguson's three-run homer highlighted Los Angeles' five-run outburst in the fourth inning off Pirates starter Don Robinson, 5-4.

Sutton walked one and struck out six in his seventh complete game of the season. "I looked at quite a few balls tonight," said plate umpire Paul Pryor, "and I saw nothing out of the ordinary."

Astros 9, Phils 1

Richard's 10 strikeouts raised his league-leading total to 177 and his record to 9-9. He walked six.

Houston tagged three Philadelphia pitchers, including loser Jim Lonborg, 7-7, for 18 hits, the most this season by the Astros. Art Howe and Julio Cruz each drove in two runs.

Padres 3, Cards 2

Rasmussen, 9-7, whom the Cards traded to the Padres for outfielder George Hendrick, won his seventh in a row, allowing a run in the second on losing pitcher Pete Vuckovich's RBI single and a ninth-inning solo homer by Keith Hernandez.

Braves 4, Mets 3

Niekro, 11-9, struck out seven with his knuckleball and didn't walk a batter in his winning performance, but he did hit a batter, costing him a run. Leading 3-1, Niekro hit Willie Montanez, then allowed John Stearns' two-run homer.

Expos 3, Reds 1

Andre Dawson drove in two runs with a double and solo homer, his 15th of the season, to make a winner of Dues, 4-4, who left in the seventh with two out and the bases loaded.

Cubs 7, Giants 6

Greg Gross drove in two runs without an official appearance at the plate, including an 11th-inning sacrifice fly that made a winner of relief ace Bruce Sutter, 7-3, the fifth Cubs pitcher.

Wolfforth defeated host Crosbyton 16-14 in the Area III finals. Grady Sanders and Kelly Hastings had two homers each for Wolfforth, with one of Grady's being a grand slam.

In the third-place game, Shallowater blanked Cooper 13-0. Tracy Cobb was the winning pitcher, and he and Joe Don Alvarado had homers for Shallowater.

UIL Ruling

have no idea of what went on in football," Williams said. "There was wholesale recruiting between towns and as a result of the overemphasis, the rule came about. It helped put the emphasis back on education."

UIL director Bailey Marshall testified that allowing high school basketball and football players to attend such camps would be unfair to those who could not afford the cost.

Kite's attorney, Dean Steffey, argued that the ruling has hampered the development of basketball in Texas.

Sonny Allen of SMU testified that he had considered testing the rule himself on behalf of his son, Billy.

Robert L. Kite said sending his son to camp was simply "an attempt to further his career development."

"I don't see that it's any different than my daughter going to band camp," he said.

Brewers Surprising Even Selves, Says Manager

By The Associated Press

Nobody expected the Milwaukee Brewers to be where they are at this point of the American League season. Not even the Milwaukee Brewers.

"I didn't really believe our pitching would be this good," says manager George Bamberger.

"What makes this unbelievable," adds third baseman Sal Bando, "is coming from next-to-last place to second place."

The Brewers, whose best previous finish ever was a 76-86 record in 1974, are rolling along in high gear this season with a solid chance to create some unique club history.

Now 17 games over the .500 mark with a 53-36 record after Tuesday night's 7-2 victory over the Chicago White Sox, the revitalized Brewers finally find themselves in the role of a contender in the AL East, eight games behind Boston.

"Our depth has been a big factor with all our injuries," said Bamberger. "Maybe the biggest thing is the way everybody keeps picking everybody else up. Larry Hisle or somebody goes a little cold for a while, and somebody else picks up the club.

"And our defense has been excellent. And Paul Molitor at second base has been a big reason for that. Whoever thought Molitor would do all these things? But with his hitting, running and fielding, he's been a big part of this club."

The Brewers' latest victory gave them a four-game sweep of the White Sox and provided them with their eighth triumph in the last nine games. Tonight, they start a two-game series with the AL East leaders.

"I'm still conservative, because you've got to finish a season in the first division to be picked as a contender," said Bando. "Not a club finishing in second-to-last place like we did last year. But still, you have to give us credit for what we've done so far."

Money and Gorman Thomas belted bases-empty homers and Jerry Augustine scattered 10 hits to lead the hot Brewers past Chicago. Sixto Lezcano knocked in two runs with a single and double for the winners.

Augustine, 10-9, carried a five-hitter into the eighth, when the White Sox tagged him for five singles and both their runs.

Indians 8, Angels 3

Rick Manning tripled home a pair of runners and Duane Kuiper drove in two more with a double, pacing Cleveland over California.

Rick Waits, with relief help in the sixth inning from Jim Kern, won his seventh game against 10 losses. California starter Don Aase, 7-5, who was knocked out in the fourth inning, took the loss.

A's 6, Tigers 3

Mitchell Page hit a three-run homer as Oakland scored five runs in the second inning and went on to defeat Detroit. It was the fourth straight victory for the A's.

Rick Langford won his second game of the season, allowing seven hits before leaving the game after five innings. Bob Lacey took over for Langford in the sixth inning and blanked the Tigers on three hits over the final four innings, gaining his fourth save of the season.

Blue Jays 13, Mariners 12

Otto Velez's RBI single with two out in the 10th inning led Toronto over Seattle. After Toronto loaded the bases with two out in the 10th, Velez dribbled a grounder down the third base line off Seattle's seventh pitcher, John Montague, who replaced loser Dick Pole, 4-11, with one out and a runner on second.

Bill Stein's throw to first was not in time, and Rick Bosetti scored the winning run. Toronto's fifth pitcher, Tom Murphy, 3-7, picked up the victory.

Belanger, McGregor Too Much For Texas

BALTIMORE (AP) — It took awhile, but Mark Belanger and Scott McGregor have reached the rarified air of double figures, Belanger in runs batted in and McGregor in victories.

"Double figures already?" Belanger cracked after his two RBI helped the Baltimore Orioles defeat the Texas Rangers 5-1 Tuesday night. "Let's see. . .July 18. . .I'm right on schedule."

The 10th victory for McGregor, who has lost eight, presented a different kind of problem. "I don't know if I'm on schedule," he said. "I've never been here before."

Belanger, who only twice in 11 years has topped 40 RBI, is on a binge with four in his last four games. His total reached 41 when he singled off first baseman Mike Hargrove's glove in the second inning.

Hargrove, playing drawn-in following a one-out single by Andres Mora and a double by Rich Dauer, couldn't handle the hard grounder. Dauer, who had three hits after ending an 0-for-17 slump, also drove in a sixth inning run.

Ken Singleton had the other two Baltimore RBI, on a first inning double and a fourth inning single off Dock Ellis, 8-5, and Doug DeCinces had three hits.

McGregor, who won three games last year in his first full season with the Orioles, allowed seven hits and walked three.

But the 24-year-old lefty was tough in the clutch, and also helped his cause immensely by picking Campy Campaneris off third base with two outs in the fifth and Bobby Thompson off first base in the eighth.

"The third base pickoff," McGregor said, "was a reaction play, even though it looked like we had practiced it all spring. I saw Campy out of the corner of my eye. Then I saw DeCinces there, so I threw."

Campaneris had just doubled and stolen third, and was further embarrassed because Texas manager Billy Hunter was on the coaching line in that inning.

"It's not heads-up baseball when you're down three runs," Hunter said. "There was no reason for even suggesting he was far enough away to be picked off. He had plenty of warning to get back."

While the Rangers were being picked off, the Orioles had four runners thrown out trying to steal by catcher Jim Sundberg. The American League record of six in one game was set by Wally Schang of the Philadelphia A's back in 1915.

Only one of the Baltimore runners cut down was actually tying to steal. The others were victims of botched hit-and-run plays, or as manager Earl Weaver called them: "Miss-and-run plays."

"It's not one of my favorite plays," Weaver said, "but it's not bad with a guy like Sundberg catching. You don't steal on him."

"Without a doubt, he's No. 1," Hunter said of Sundberg, who has thrown out 43 of 88 would-be base stealers. "And, I'm not talking about this league—I mean No. 1, period."

Avalanche-Journal News Services

From Waukesha, Wis., where she is conducting a basketball clinic, Ann Meyers, UCLA basketball star and sister of Milwaukee Bucks forward Dave Meyers, says she's not ready to join the fledgling women's pro basketball ranks.

And she is not the only one, as it could be that Wayland Baptist College's Marie Kocurek, drafted in the third round, will be starting a coaching career at the University of South Carolina. At least, that is the opinion of WBC coach Dean Weese when contacted Tuesday night about Miss Kocurek's pro plans.

Miss Kocurek helped Wayland to the AIAW's Final Four last winter, but she has accepted a position as assistant women's basketball coach at South Carolina, and Weese said he felt that was where she would go. Efforts to reach Miss Kocurek at her home at Corpus Christi Tuesday night were unsuccessful.

Cowboys Set Scrimmage

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP)— Dallas Cowboys rookies and young veterans are expecting a rough test today at Irvine, when the final rookie scrimmage of the 1978 training camp will take place.

The Dallas group will face a squad of San Diego Chargers, Since the Chargers have only 20 rookies in camp this summer, a number of veterans will be in action.

One of the Cowboys' own young veterans, second-year offensive tackle Jim Eidson, was ruled out of the scrimmage after he jammed his neck in practice Monday.

Two of the Cowboys' top draft choices also will miss the scrimmage. Larry Bethea of Michigan State, the No. 1 selection, has missed several workouts this week with an ankle injury, and the Cowboys' third pick, David Hudgens of Oklahoma, has a knee injury.

The No. 2 pick, Todd Christensen, a runningback from Brigham Young, is expected to take part in the scrimmage. He did not practice Tuesday because of a bruised shoulder.

LA Poised To Drop Olympics

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Los Angeles stood on the brink today of becoming the second American city in six years to reject the Olympic Games.

This latest crisis took shape Tuesday when Mayor Tom Bradley, long a proponent of bringing the Games here, recommended that Los Angeles withdraw its bid for the 1984 Summer Olympics.

In 1972, Denver voters spurned the Winter Games by a 178,000-vote margin in a referendum that was hailed as a victory for environmentalists. In this case, the battle is drawn over money.

Bradley's announcement comes after months of battling first with other city officias and then with the International Olympic Committee over terms that would safeguard the city against incurring massive debts for holding the Games, such as those piled up in Montreal in 1976.

Bradley said his decision came after he received a letter from IOC president Lord Killanin terming Los Angeles' latest take-it-or-leave-it offer unacceptable. Under the offer, the city would turn over financial responsiblity for the Games to a private businessmen's group, the Los Angeles Olympics Organizing Committee.

While Killanin said the IOC respected the city's desire to be free of financial risk, he concluded, "The IOC must protect itself for the future and not compromise itself with other cities."

"That proposal having been declined by the IOC," Bradley wrote to the City Council, "I am therefore recommending that the council withdraw the city's bid for the 1984 Olympic Games."

Asked whether the council would approve Bradley's recommendation, council president John Ferraro said, "I'm sure it's certain. I don't think there's any possibility the mayor's recommendation will not be accepted."

However, there still was hope that this city, which was the last U.S. city to hold the Summer Olympics—in 1932—would still find some way to work out its problems with the IOC.

Attorney John Argue, head of the private Olympics group appointed by the mayor, said he and Howard Allen, another member of the seven-person committee, may fly to Europe to make a final plea to the IOC this week.

Ferraro said the council might delay action on Bradley's recommendation until Argue and Allen return.

In addition, Ferraro said, the council may even postpone final action until after the July 31 deadline set by the IOC for the city to make an acceptable bid, thus forcing the IOC to reject the city.

"If we withdraw, the IOC can then turn to the rest of the world and say, 'Los Angeles withdrew its bid,'" Ferraro said.

Bean Tries Phillie After Expensive Trip

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Andy Bean's trip to the shrine of golf at St. Andrews in Scotland last week turned out to be an artistic and financial bust.

But the U.S. pro golf tour's leading money winner says he wouldn't have missed the experience for anything.

"I learned the way they play over there — the hard way," said Bean, who is here for this week's $250,000 Philadelphia Golf Classic.

Bean, who has won $240,058 on the tour this year, picked up a paltry $663 for his effort in last week's British Open.

"Oh man, I can still see those bunkers," groaned Bean as he spread out on a bench in the clubhouse of the Whitemarsh Valley County Club. "I hit 'em all in one day, shot 43 on one nine. I'd have been even par (for the tournament) if it wasn't for those nine holes."

The 25-year-old Bean said he discovered an entirely different game in Scotland.

"They pitch and run," Bean explained. "I fly the ball at the pin. I guess I learned the hard way, but it will stick a little longer."

Bean said it was an expensive lesson and one that should make people think about the other side of golf's financial picture. He said the fans only hear about the big purses.

"It cost me close to $5,000 for the trip, and I won $663," he said. "Of course, I took my father. The (airfare) tickets were $2,600, the hotel $1,200, food $400. Hell, I only wanted to rent the rooms, not buy them."

Bean, however, laughed at his expensive trip.

"I at least had a free caddy," he said.

Bean's father, Tom, a working pro from Lakeland, Fla., toted his son's bag.

"All I know is, I was first out of the box Saturday and didn't pass anyone," said Bean, who has won three times on the PGA tour this year.

"I love the golf courses in this country," Bean said, waving at the 6,615-yard Whitemarsh 18.

"You hit on the green here, the ball stops, doesn't go into the next county," he said. "This course demands golf-course management. It doesn't require a long drive. You have to hit it in the right spot. It's a good golf course."

His experience in England apparently hasn't nicked Bean's confidence. He admits to still flying high on his three tour wins. And he feels he has a real shot at walking off with $50,000 first prize on the par 36-35-71 Whitemarsh course starting with Thursday's first round.

Bean's effort at Whitemarsh will have to be a strong one if he expects to win. This is a designated tournament, which means all the tour stars have to play, including British Open champ Jack Nicklaus, Tom Watson, Hubert Green, Bill Rogers, Tom Kite, Ben Crenshaw, Lee Trevino, Ray Floyd, U.S. Open champ Andy North, Hale Irwin, Bill Kratzert and Lon Hinkle.

Deeds Captures LCC Golf Honors

Sis Deeds shot a 70 to grab first place in the championship flight at the Lubbock Country Club Handicap Tournament Tuesday.

Mrs. Deeds edged Katie Quest by 1 stroke in the handicap play. Lera Ohnemus was third with a 72.

In the first flight, Emma Neal had a low net of 67 to win over Sherrie Goodwin by 6 strokes. Carole Hall and Bobbie Rains tied for third with 80s.

Kathryn O'Hair grabbed top honors in the second flight with a 69 low net. She was followed by Chris Hayter, Sydnee Butler and Ann Ahlenius, all at 78.

HOLE-IN-ONE

The Women's Open: And Nancy Lopez

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — There's an added dimension to the United States Women's Open Golf Championship this year.

It's the Nancy Lopez factor.

And it figures to be around for some time, quite possibly as the dominant force in women's golf.

"My overall goal is to break as many records as I can," said the 21-year-old Miss Lopez, who has hit the women's tour with the greatest impact in its history.

"Because of my age I feel I can do this, and if God is willing, I will have many years to accomplish this goal."

Her immediate challenge, of course, is the Open Championship, which begins Thursday on the hilly 6,115-yard, par-71 Country Club of Indianapolis course.

She is, of course, the favorite — an overwhelming favorite — in an international field of 153. Her presence in the field has produced a larger press corps and a greater general interest that this event has ever seen.

Many observers feel that in the short time Miss Lopez has been on the women's tour she has done for the LPGA what Arnold Palmer did for the men's game in the late 50's and early 60's — singlehandedly produced a surge to prominence.

In her rookie season, which will be completed this week, she has won seven tournaments, including a record five in a row. Her money winnings of $135,564 are the most ever by a first year player.

Grasshoppers Threaten Farmers In Four States

By DONALD C. BROWN JR.
United Press International

In the flatlands of southeastern Colorado, along the fringes of the Great Plains, farmer Ralph Hallock is battling the grasshoppers stalk by stalk as they ravage his grain crop.

The hoppers are getting the best of it on Hullock's farm and the farms of his neighbors in Colorado and three other states — Kansas, Oklahoma and Nebraska.

"They took a third of my barley, they had taken 15 to 20 percent of wheat before we cut it and they are working on the milo," a sorghum grain, said Hallock, who along with his father farms about 5,000 acres near Sheridan Lake, Colo.

"They are really moving in. Only this morning, I counted 25 hoppers per milo stalk. They have eaten 2- to 4-foot plants into the ground."

Hallock and other farmers in the region are battling the worst grasshopper infestation since 1958 when the grasshoppers caused more than $60 million damage in Colorado.

The plague already has prompted the retelling of legendary stories about monstrous grasshoppers eating up pitchforks, except for the metal tines, and swarms of grasshoppers blocking out the sun.

Missouri Agriculture Director Juck Runyan said the current plague is not yet as bad as those of the 1950s, but he said the grasshoppers already have done heavy damage in neighboring states.

"They ate some crops plumb to the ground," Runyan said of the situation in Kansas, Nebraska and Colorado.

"You get a grasshopper that's over halfway to maturity and you can't kill him. Killing a mature grasshopper is about like trying to kill a snake."

Farmers naturally like to cuss the federal government and the weather and they can spare some of their choicest barnyard phrases for both in their current plight.

Last year's drought, followed by a moist winter and then a mild spring, created perfect conditions for the present huge hatch of hoppers, estimated at more than 60 grasshoppers a square yard in some areas. Infestations of more than 10 grasshoppers a square yard are considered potentially disastrous.

Besides the weather, the farmers also have some epithets for the federal government because of the Environmental Protection Agency's ban of chlorodane, heptachlor and DDT, some of the pesticides used successfully in the past against grasshoppers.

Last week agriculture officials from Kansas, Oklahoma, Colorado and Nebraska met in Topeka, Kan., to plead with EPA officials for release of the restricted pesticides in an emergency basis to deal with the grasshoppers.

The EPA told the agriculture officials applicants for the banned pesticides would have to comply with all procedural requirements —and that takes a minimum of 30 days. Farmers said by that time there might not be much left to save.

Farmers and agriculture officials complain the approved pesticides don't have the killing power or the residual effect to deal successfully with the current heavy levels of infestation.

"The approved chemicals work to some extent, but with 60 per square yard, even if you kill 50 percent of them, you haven't helped yourself," said Roger Sandman of the Nebraska Department of Agriculture.

There also has been some bureaucratic wrangling in Colorado where legislators, who said they were not convinced there was a crisis, grudgingly approved a $2 million appropriation for a spraying program to fight the grasshoppers.

"It seems strange to me we haven't been besieged with people down here asking us to come to their aid. I haven't had a single person tell us they need this kind of help," said state Rep. A.J. Spano, R-Arvada, who also delivered a speech on the protein value of grasshoppers and the possibility of Colorado researching a wingless and hopless grasshopper.

But while the bureaucrats argue, the farmers fret that grasshoppers are gaining.

"The grasshoppers are so thick you open the door and they're liable to come right in," said Leta Lindauer, who lives on a farm near Ogallala in the Nebraska Panhandle.

"I just can't recall when it's been this bad, and I've lived here 20 years. You walk out into the yard and they're hopping all around you."

"We have to spray once a week," he said. "There aren't any bodies because they eat one another. If you have the right chemical, one dead hopper will kill seven others, but the EPA won't allow it. If this was 10 years ago, we could have sprayed last week and taken care of it.

"These hoppers have already mated and they are laying eggs and they will hatch before fall. That means a lot of babies and the adults. We can plant a winter wheat crop, but it won't do any good. They will eat the winter wheat as fast it comes up. They love that tender wheat."

Grain Futures

CHICAGO (AP) — Grain futures dropped sharply on the Chicago Board of Trade today, while soybeans also lost more ground.

State crop bulletins rated spring crops in generally good shape. Nearly half of Iowa's corn was in excellent condition, for example, and the rest was in good shape.

Even the states that mentioned problems with insects and crop diseases put their overall rating at fair to good.

The Department of Agriculture's weekly export report was interpreted as negative for soybeans and positive for corn futures.

More than 47 million bushels of corn were exported last week, according to the report. But soybean shipments dwindled to 7.3 million bushels. Still, that was more than a million bushels higher than a year ago.

But farmers were selling good amounts of corn and a bit more wheat in cash markets, exerting hedge pressure on futures prices.

An industry group said that soybean oil stocks increased during June, while meal stocks showed a significant decline.

Some traders expressed concern over rumblings in Congress about using U.S. grain sales to the Soviet Union as a form of retaliation.

At the close, soybeans were 1¾ to 9¼ cents lower, with July contracts quoted at $6.32¼ a bushel; wheat was 4 to 6¼ cents higher, July $3.04¼; corn was 4¾ to 7 cents higher, July $2.22¼; and oats were 5¼ to 6 cents lower, July $1.14.

LUBBOCK SPOT COTTON

Quotations are the approximate prices reported to the Agricultural Marketing Service for qualities equal to the U.S. Official Grade and Staple Standards. Prices are for micronaire (mike) readings of 3.5 through 4.9, in mixed lots, uncompressed, free of all charges in the warehouse in the market.

Fired Waitress Wins Unemployment Fight

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) — A waitress who was fired for talking too much to her customers has won a round in her effort to collect unemployment compensation from the state.

The Maine Supreme Court upheld the appeal of Marie Moore, who was fired from Dunkin' Donuts because she spent too much time talking and failed to collect payment from customers as soon as they were served. The Employment Security Division had denied Mrs. Moore unemployment compensation on the ground she was fired for "misconduct."

By DON KENDALL

WASHINGTON (AP) — A delegation of livestock producers will meet with President Carter soon, perhaps as early as July 25, to talk over problems affecting their industry.

An aide to Sen. Dick Clark, D-Iowa, said late Tuesday that he had heard the meeting was tentatively set for next Tuesday but that he was unable to get confirmation from the White House.

Last Friday Vice President Walter F. Mondale said in Topeka, Kan., that Clark met recently with Carter and Agriculture Secretary Bob Bergland. Mondale said that, as a result of Clark's urging, a meeting between the president and livestock producers would be held soon.

Mondale said the meeting would be set up so that Carter could "hear their concerns and to discuss ways that we can work more closely together" in the future.

After Carter announced June 8 that more foreign beef would be allowed to enter the United States to help dampen rising meat prices this year, many cattle producers objected strongly to his action.

The National Cattlemen's Association, a leader in the anti-import protest, demanded a meeting with Carter to air its side of the problem.

Cattle prices, which soared to more than $60 per hundredweight by early June, tumbled sharply after Carter's action, but since have recovered part of that loss.

Mondale said in Topeka that "livestock markets over-reacted" to the import announcement and to reports that cattle inventories in feedlots were larger than had been anticipated.

Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., said in a speech Monday in Lincoln, Neb., that Mondale's statement in Topeka showed that the administration "still does not understand the cattle market or the cattle industry."

Many cattle producers were angry about the enlarged imports because the action was at least a psychological blow to them. After being depressed for three or four years, cattle prices in recent months have risen so that producers once more are just beginning to make money.

The National Cattlemen's Association also is interested in trying to persuade Carter to accept legislation now in Congress which would provide a "countercyclical" formula for adjusting beef imports. Basically, it would allow more foreign beef into the United States when domestic supplies are smaller and less when the domestic supply is larger.

Bennett Gets Interim Post At Tech

Dr. William F. Bennett has taken over new duties as interim dean of the College of Agricutural Sciences at Texas Tech University.

Bennett joined the faculty in 1968 as professor of agronomy, was named assistant dean of the college in 1970 and associate dean in 1974.

His appointment as interim dean became effective following the resignation earlier this month of Dr. Anson R. Bertrand, who left to become director of the newly organized Science and Education Administration of the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

Dr. Charles S. Hardwick, vice president for academic affairs, said Bennett will serve until a search committee has completed its work and a new dean is named.

"I am confident," Hardwick said, Hardwick said, "that program begun under Dr. Bertrand's administration will move forward under the leadership of Dr. Bennett. His enthusiasm for the programs within the college will contribute significantly to their continued development.

Hardwick referred specifically to the development of facilities at the Lubbock County Field Laboratory near New Deal, the renovation of facilities at the Texas Tech University Center at Amarillo, the building of a new Agriculture Pavilion on the Lubbock campus and curriculum development and teaching improvement.

Bennett's primary concerns as associate dean have been with curriculum development and review, teaching improvement and student counseling.

Student member of the committee is David Booth, 1978-79 president of the Aggie Council.

Industry representatives are George B. Babcock of Lubbock, general manager of Growers Seed Association, and O.J. Barron Jr. of Spur, rancher and former president of the Texas Cattle Feeders Association.

Serving with them are Dr. Lewis Eggenberger, department of entomology; Horn Professor of Range and Wildlife Management Henry A. Wright; Dean Robert H. Anderson, College of Education; and Dr. Raymond C. Jackson, chairman of the department of biological sciences.

HY GARDNER HAS THE ANSWER:

Glad You Asked That!

Q: We saw Jerry Lester recently on Tom Snyder's show, and since he pioneered the live late-night variety-talk show ("Broadway Open House"), we wonder how he rates the present crop of talk show hosts. — Mrs. Len B., Syracuse, N.Y.

A: We called Jerry, threw your question and got these answers. (Always outspoken, Jerry pulls punchlines more than he pulls punches.)

About Dinah Shore he said: "Wonderful. I would rate her very high ... I have the same opinion of her as Burt Reynolds ... And she has an advantage as host (pardon me, these days I must say hostess) of such a show; if there's a lull she can always sing up a storm. She is one of our all-time great song stars."

What about Burt Reynolds? "He's bright and authoritative in that role — and has the humor to carry it. As he proves pinch-hitting for Carson."

Barbara Walters: "Would she be as effective a talk-show hostess as she is a peerless interviewer? Let's face it, Barbara is a talk show wherever she appears and wherever she sits. Like they said about Jimmy Walker, 'Wherever he sits it's the dais!'"

Steve Allen: "He's excellent. He's changed over the years to where he's much hokier than he ever was. I preferred him the other way. But he's funny. He's got a good mind and unusual talents. He has a cult that loves him, you know, like Joe E. Lewis had — people who are crazy about him."

Jack Paar: "I think he's smart, great, fearless, good-looking and very agile pulling the strings on a more or less ad lib program. We've got some good ones since Jack retired, but I think he was the best of them."

Merv Griffin: "I always thought he looked well, sang well talked pretty good for a singer ... gets impressive guests and knows what to do with them. Also he's a helluva smart business man. And if you don't believe me ask his accountants. He's even learned how to interview people without being awed by their importance.

Dick Cavett: "He's pedantic!"

Jim Nabors: "He's a good, amiable ol' Southern boy — but not quite Roy Clark!"

Phil Donahue: "Phil is great because he has a point of view and a big platform from which to make viewers aware of it. He stays in one bag, and he's very smart. What he does is great and he's hip enough to stay with it."

Mike Douglas: "He's a staple who wears well. He's come a long way since an agent asked me to listen to a record he'd made. I played the record, and being a musician you know, I hear eight or 12 bars of the song, turn it off and say to the agent 'I sure hope this guy looks like something because he sings great.' Mike says he was worried when he heard me (in the anteroom) stop his record so quickly. Years later I got a call from him asking if I'd fly to Cleveland to do one show. I said I'd come but one show won't knock out the opposition — so let's figure out something for a week. That's how we started the co-host shtick, and it hasn't stopped since.

Joey Bishop: "He's a great guest. But when he's sitting in the host's chair he doesn't fit."

Don Rickles: "One of the best guests in the world also. You put him in the other chair and he's too subdued, too self-conscious. There's a big difference in those two seats."

Jerry Lewis: "He had a short run doing a talk show because he tried to be someone else. (Don't you love that — when people make 800 million, zillion bucks doing what they do, and they want to be someone else?) I know and like Jerry very much. He's a warm, wonderfully versatile pro. But he has an insatiable desire (due to the fact that he didn't have a formal education) of trying to express himself like he'd like to. And it doesn't quite come off. But recently Jerry was fast and funny co-hosting the Mike Douglas Show.

David Frost: "When he first came on he was a thunderbolt because he had an English look and accent. Looked more dignified and different than the other talk guys and knew what he was talking about. What he's done since, like that Nixon series, he's proven he can be a successful one-man industry. Frost is really cool."

Johnny Carson: "He out-distanced everybody else and continues to do so. And he was smart to cut down the number of nights he's on the air. He'll go on as long as he wants to with fans almost hypnotized by him. They're sincere and when Ed McMahon intones 'Now — here's Johnny,' their response is overwhelming."

Jon Voight Wins Praise For Portrayal Of Boxer

By VERNON SCOTT

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — Jon Voight, wearing a sweatsuit, his hair matted with perspiration, needing a shave and his right fist taped, did indeed resemble a prizefighter when he took a noonday break from "The Champ" at MGM.

He affected the hoarse voice and gruff mannerisms of Billy Flynn, the broken down fighter he portrays in the modernization of the old 1931 film classic that won an Oscar for Wallace Beery and made a child star of Jackie Cooper.

Voight himself stands to be nominated for an Academy Award for his electric performance as the paraplegic in "Coming Home."

An actor who believes in preparation, Voight spent many weeks in a wheelchair with paraplegic war veterans before playing the part. He endured three weeks of intensive physical training and sparring for "The Champ."

It helped that Voight, who wanted to be a football player in his youth, played a boxer in "The All-American Boy" in 1971.

"For that picture I worked hard in the gym for two months to get into shape," Voight said. "This time I had only three weeks warning. It's a good thing I had the first experience."

Voight was an 11th hour replacement in "The Champ." Shortly before production began Ryan O'Neal told director Franco Zeffirelli he wanted out.

With the help of trainer Jimmy Gambina, whom Voight praises unstintingly, the actor may be the most convincing prizefighter in screen history. Among other stars who played fighters were Kirk Douglas, Tony Curtis, John Garfield, Bill Holden, Wayne Morris, Robert Ryan and Sylvester Stallone.

"We shot the bulk of the fight in one day," Voight said. "We shot each of the six rounds with four cameras without stopping. That was two weeks ago and I'm still exhausted. I don't know how we did it."

Voight has been too tired to look at any of the rushes. But trainer Gambina says unhesitatingly, "Jon is the best actor I've seen in the ring. I've seen some of the footage and it looks better than a real prize fight."

"It was one of those times when there is a lot of pressure on everyone connected with a movie to do something almost impossible," Voight continued.

"I was in the ring with Randy Cobb, an undefeated heavyweight. He's had seven fights and won them all by knockouts. We rehearsed the rounds carefully, using combinations and sparring.

"We knew we could spar realistically and sometimes hit one another. Of course, Randy held a lot back. He pulled his punches. Randy let me hit him a lot and encouraged me to play the part of Billy Flynn as realistically as possible.

"Randy can take a real punch, harder than anything I can throw. We had a lot of fun in the ring and he let me sting him a few times. He never lost control for a second. And he's such a good fighter he wasn't worried about his ego.

"But when the script called for me to get knocked down the first time, I wasn't acting when I hit the canvas. Randy really connected, even though he pulled the punch. And as I went down I said to myself, 'This is how it is.' Suddenly I knew how it felt when a fighter gets tagged.

"I'm lucky I didn't get my nose broken. Later Randy said, 'I was afraid I took your head off.'

"There's no question in my mind Randy could have knocked me out in five seconds anytime he wanted. The difference between an actor playing a fighter and a professional is tremendous."

Throughout lunch Voight never wavered from his Billy Flynn vocal and visual characteristics. It was eerie seeing a man submerge himself so fully in a fictional personality.

"I'm really in trouble if I play a character and don't like him," Voight explained in Billy's rasping voice. "He's a weak man, jealous and short-tempered. Characteristics that are troublesome to me.

"So what I'm doing is unconsciously calling on my own instincts trying to become a certain kind of person. In this case it's made real trouble with my family and best friends. I've turned into a certain kind of me I've never been.

"I've put four holes in the walls of my home since I started this picture. Every time I get in trouble I smash the wall because I can't hit a person. That's not like Jon Voight at all. It's crazy. It's Billy Flynn.

"One day on the set the lighting director, a great guy, called for quiet. But four big extras continued to make a lot of noise.

"I walked over and said, 'That's it, let's have it quiet.' One of the huge, tough guys got sarcastic and I said, 'Stop it or you'll have a lot of trouble on your hands.'

"I never talk like that. I'd say, 'Please don't do that.' But I came on strong. And everyone on the set was scared — for me.

"You got to be a little crazy to do that. All of a sudden I'm a big tough guy. I should have said, 'Excuse me, I'm an actor. I have a card that says, I'm an actor, don't take anything I say seriously.' I could use that in bars."

LEAA Revamping To Be Scrutinized

WASHINGTON (AP) — The senator who will preside over hearings on President Carter's bill revamping the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration says he will submit it to "intense scrutiny."

Sen. Joseph Biden Jr., D-Del., said "more than slight modifications" are needed in LEAA.

Biden, one of two senators to vote against re-authorization of LEAA in 1976, is chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee's subcommittee on criminal laws and procedures.

Hugh Downs To Continue On Two Shows

By JAY SHARBUTT

LOS ANGELES (AP) — It's a bit odd for someone to appear each week both on public and commercial TV. But Hugh Downs, 57, the urbane former "Today" host, is doing just that these days.

Not only that, he's laboring for PBS and ABC at opposite ends of America.

In San Francisco, where he lives, he's hosted a nightly series on aging, KQED's "Over Easy," since last fall. He'll resume that show, now in repeats, when its second season starts next November.

Since June, he's flown to New York each week to anchor ABC's new Tuesday newsmagazine show, "20-20." He says he plans to continue doing that as well as his 'Over Easy" chores.

True, it seems unusual to work in public and commercial TV simultaneously, but ABC brass didn't regard his PBS work as a conflict when they talked with him about hosting "20-20," he says.

"They seemed very supportive of PBS ideas, and it wasn't as if I were working for CBS or NBC," added the man hastily installed as the sole anchor of "20-20" on June 13.

It happened a week after the show — now serious in tone — made its flashy, critically assailed debut with hosts Harold Hayes and Robert Hughes, two ex-magazine editors who now are ex-hosts.

The day after the disastrous debut, Downs, then subbing for David Hartman on ABC's "AM America," was called by ABC News chief Roone Arledge regarding a permanent berth on "20-20."

"I'll say this for him," he said of Arledge. "He took the rap for the premiere, but he's somewhat like Churchill: He doesn't stubbornly cling to something just to vindicate his ego.

The first "20-20" mixed sad, serious and silly news segments in rapid-fire style. Downs' theory on what went wrong: "They put things together that just didn't emulsify.

"And maybe there was just too much for an audience to assimilate."

They obviously were trying not to imitate CBS' "60 Minutes," he added, "but I said to them, 'Don't be so afraid of imitating.'

"It's like saying, 'This magazine uses paper and ink, so let's do something different.' You've got to do a lot that '60 Minutes' does, but we should do it our way and do it well."

Downs, who spoke by phone from his KQED office in San Francisco, won't have to constantly jet back and forth from "Over Easy" there to "20-20" in New York, as might be expected.

He said the ABC show will air each week until mid-September, then just once a month from October through December, before resuming a weekly run in January.

And he won't start work on a new 10-week batch of "Over Easy" shows for next season until mid-September.

He could become a serious jet-setter if KQED lands an underwriter for still more "Over Easy" shows on which work would start in January, the same month "20-20" returns to weekly status.

The "20-20" ratings haven't been high. Has ABC talked about dropping the show if the program's Nielsens don't improve?

"Oh, no," Downs said. Before he took the anchor job, "I wanted to know if they were committed to the show. I told them I had no intention of coming aboard just to preside over its demise."

TODAY IN HISTORY

By United Press International

Today is Wednesday, July 19, the 200th day of 1978 with 165 to follow.

The morning star is Jupiter.

The evening stars are Mercury, Mars, Venus and Saturn.

Those born on this date are under the sign of Cancer.

Samuel Colt, American inventor of automatic firearms, was born July 19, 1814.

On this day in history:

In 1848, "bloomers," a radical departure in women's underwear, were introduced to the delegates of the first woman's rights convention in Seneca Falls, N.Y. They were named after Mrs. Amelia Jenks Bloomer.

In 1918, the end of World War I approached as German armies began retreating across the Marne River in France.

In 1974, Turkish troops invaded the Mediterranean island of Cyprus, dropping paratroopers in the Nicosia sector to engage Greek forces, which had toppled the Cypriot government four days earlier.

A thought for the day:

American writer Ernest Hemingway said: "I know only that what is moral is what you feel good after and what is immoral is what you feel bad after."

POLITICAL PRISONER

JAKARTA, Indonesia (AP) — A Java mystic who said he had received a divine message that he would become a national leader was sentenced to eight years in prison Tuesday on charges of subversion. Government officials charged that Satiwo Kartowibowo, 46, had used deceit to obtain the signatures of six government officials on documents aimed at overthrowing the government.

Storied Washington Landmark Scheduled To Be Demolished

By ALICE Z. CUNEO

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The beat up old building currently houses a souvenir shop and a newsstand, but it has had a part in more history than almost any other in Washington. And now Rhodes Tavern may be ticketed for the wrecker's ball.

The three-story building, across the street from the Treasury Department, has been in continual commercial use since it was uilt in 1800. Recently it was scheduled for demolition to make room for a new downtown Washington shopping center and office complex.

It is one of only two buildings remaining in downtown Washington from the city's founding days. Only the Octogon House, where Dolley Madison moved after the British burned the White House in 1814, still remains.

The tavern was built by Bennett Fenwick who obtained a permit in the summer of 1799 and leased the completed building to William Rhodes, an established Washington innkeeper.

George Washington never slept there. But the first president did record in his diary of Dec. 1, 1798, that he dined at another establishment run by Rhodes on one of his last trips to the capital.

For several years, owner Joseph Semmes operated a hotel there under the sign of the Indian King. Thanks to the tavern's strategic corner location near the White House, it served Washington as the site of an early court, a polling place and an auction house.

The handy location also led British troops to the tavern on the night of Aug. 24, 1814.

Mrs. Barbara Suter, who then ran the tavern as a boarding house, reported that she mistook some soldiers outside for Americans. She tried to convince the soldiers there was nothing in the houue to eat, and recommended another tavern down the road. But only her tavern had a view of the burning White House.

Mrs. Suter killed and cooked some chickens in her yard, warmed some bread and hastily provided a supper for the 11 soldiers. After the soldiers "visited" the Treasury across the street and set it afire, Admiral George Cockburn, commander of the British force, arrived on muleback.

Later, the tavern became the home of the Bank of the Metropolis, with General John Van Ness as president and Andrew Jackson an original stockholder.

Publisher Of Sensational Books Has Strong Sense Of Idealism

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (UPI) — Lyle Stuart is a high-roller at the gambling tables in Las Vegas and Europe and in the often stodgy publishing world where he is a champion promoter of best sellers.

Stuart is a one-man publishing house, an opportunist, a tough businessman, who runs a relatively small company based in Secaucus, N.J., a few minutes from Manhattan. He wheels and deals in the United States, Europe and the Caribbean, developing book ideas on timely subjects such as sex, anti-Nazism, the CIA, health, gambling, Cuba and celebrities such as Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis, Elizabeth Taylor and Robert Redford, among others.

Despite his flair for the sensational book that other publishers won't touch, he has a strong element of idealism in his make-up. He sometimes chooses to lose money on a book if he thinks it's one that should be printed.

About every two years, he publishes a book about the Nazi treatment of Jews in Germany "so people won't forget." (He was way ahead of TV's "Holocaust"). His current offering is "Gallery of Nazis."

He claims to have started the sexual revolution, at least in reading matter, with books by Dr. Albert Ellis and then the smash best-seller, "The Sensuous Woman," followed by "The Sensuous Man," followed by "Where Did I Come From?" (for kids).

Years ago he was statehouse correspondent for the old International News Service at Columbus, Ohio, worked for the show biz paper Variety in New York and learned how to be a crackerjack purveyor of publicity and promotion.

At 55, a heavy-set bearded man, he exudes energy and will talk endlessly about his publishing exploits.

He faces stiff competition from the big publishing houses, many of which are owned by conglomerates. He said he does about $8 million a year in sales compared to $75 million and up by such major publishers as Harcourt Brace.

He puts out 30 to 40 new titles each year among the 48,000 published in the United States.

Here are a few items that show how different Lyle Stuart is from your run-of-press publisher:

— Each year Stuart shuts down his plant and takes his entire staff of about 45 employees on a vacation trip — Europe, Las Vegas, etc.

— He would not have published former President Nixon's memoirs, even if he had the chance, because "I really don't feel these people who virtually, I think, destroyed the fabric of this country should be rewarded and permitted to live in luxury while we have slums. I think he should be published, but I don't want to be someone who gives him the piece of cake."

— He writes books himself, including his current "Casino Gambling For the Winner," based on his own penchant for betting thousands on the turn of a card. It is doing very well, he said, particularly in Atlantic City, N.J., where gambling was just legalized.

— When he went into publishing in 1951, he had only $8,000 in capital and confounded the experts who claim you must invest $100,000 in each of the first two years to get a publishing house started.

— He makes all the decisions "good or bad" in his company, whereas most other publishers are run by committees and must answer to acronymic conglomerates such as IBM, ITT, CBS, and RCA.

— He is challenging the Central Intelligence Agency to try to stop publication of his forthcoming "Dirty Work," subtitled "The CIA In Western Europe," an anthology by ex-agent Philip Agee and Louis Wolf ($24.95 a copy).

New National Smoker Study:

Tar/Taste Gap Bridged.

Smokers rate taste of low tar MERIT equal to—or better than—leading high tar brands.

Low tar MERIT, with 'Enriched Flavor'™ tobacco, has shattered the myth of "low tar, low taste."

Results Endorse MERIT Breakthrough

Confirmed: Majority of high tar smokers rate MERIT taste equal to—or better than—leading high tar cigarettes tested! Cigarettes having up to twice the tar.

Confirmed: Majority of high tar smokers confirm taste satisfaction of low tar MERIT.

Detailed interviews were also conducted with current MERIT smokers.

Confirmed: 85% of MERIT smokers say it was an "easy switch" from high tar brands.

Confirmed: 9 out of 10 MERIT smokers not considering other brands.

First Major Alternative To High Tar Smoking

MERIT has proven conclusively that it not only delivers the flavor of high tar brands—but continues to satisfy!

This ability to satisfy over long periods of time could be the most important evidence to date that MERIT is what it claims to be: The first major alternative to high tar smoking.

Kings: 8 mg "tar," 0.6 mg nicotine—
100's: 11 mg "tar," 0.7 mg nicotine av. per cigarette, FTC Report May '78
