Turtle release

GALVESTON — The National Marine Fisheries Service will release nearly two thousand fledgling Kemp's ridley sea turtles into the Gulf of Mexico Wednesday. The release is part of a continuing program to save the endangered reptiles. The Sea Turtle Head Start program is a joint American-Mexican project. It is designed to encourage the ridleys to adopt new nesting grounds along the Texas Gulf Coast. Scientist retrieve eggs from a 14-mile stretch of beach near Rancho Nuevo, Mexico. The eggs are then packed in sand from Texas coastal area and shipped to the ridley hatchery in Galveston. After a year's growth, the hatchlings are released into the Gulf of Mexico. Scientists hope the hatchlings will return to Texas beaches when they begin nesting.

Madonna's daring

At the Cannes film festival, Madonna hosted a small dinner party where the guests played a real-life version of "Truth or Dare," the game that gave her new movie its title. According to an account in New York magazine, Madonna French-kissed "La Femma Nikita" star Anne Parillaud (on a dare from Jean-Paul Gaultier) and then dared Seymour Stein, president of Sire Records, to French-kiss actor Rupert Everett for 15 seconds. Everett reportedly wound up with a recording contract.

Court bans juror bias

Ruling eliminates race as selection issue

■ 6-3 decision applies to both sides in civil cases.

WASHINGTON (NYT) — In a significant expansion of earlier decisions, the Supreme Court ruled on Monday that jurors may not be excluded from civil cases on account of race.

The 6-3 ruling extended into the civil area a landmark 1986 decision that barred prosecutors in criminal trials from using peremptory challenges to exclude potential jurors on the basis of race.

The decision Monday, applying to both sides in civil cases, also makes it probable that the court will soon broaden the 1986 ruling to apply to defendants as well as prosecutors in criminal cases.

"Racial discrimination has no place in the courtroom, whether the proceeding is civil or criminal," Justice Anthony M. Kennedy said in his majority opinion. "The Constitution demands nothing less."

The court sided with a black man who sued his employer after he was injured at work. The company's lawyer used peremptory challenges to remove two blacks from the jury, which found that the plaintiff was 80 percent at fault in the accident. Each side in a trial has the right to peremptorily reject a given number of potential jurors without stating a reason.

Generally, the Constitution is binding only on the government, not on private individuals. Prosecutors are obviously "state actors," the phrase the court uses to denote those whose actions are subject to the Constitution's limits.

To decide the case Monday, the court had to answer the theoretically difficult question of whether the process of selecting a jury in a purely private lawsuit is also "state action," subject to the Constitution's guarantee of equal protection of the laws.

The majority decided that it is. A jury is "a quintessential governmental body," Kennedy said. The opinion was joined by Justices Byron R. White, Thurgood Marshall, Harry A. Blackmun, John Paul Stevens and David H. Souter.

Kennedy said that even when jury selection was conducted by private lawyers on both sides, the process

Bush waives Soviet trade restrictions

N.Y. Times News Service

President takes steps necessary to allow $1.5 billion in credits for additional food purchases to be granted to Moscow.

WASHINGTON — President Bush on Monday granted an extension of trade benefits for the Soviet Union and was said to be increasingly receptive to inviting President Mikhail S. Gorbachev to London at the time of the July summit meeting of seven leading industrial nations.

In a move intended to help Gorbachev, Bush took the technical steps necessary to allow $1.5 billion in credits for additional food purchases to be granted to Moscow. In December, the president, for the first time, approved measures allowing the Soviets $1 billion in credits.

At the same time, after recent contacts between Bush and Prime Minister John Major of Great Britain, officials said the president seemed increasingly inclined toward inviting Gorbachev to London in conjunction with the economic summit meeting July 15-17.

The current thinking, the officials said, was not to ask Gorbachev to take part in the discussions of the industrialized nations, known collectively as the Group of 7, but to be on hand in London either before or after the economic summit meeting.

He would then hold talks with the members of the Group of 7, either separately or in groups, about ways to promote liberalization of the Soviet economy and to make his case for large-scale economic aid from the West.

Although the White House reiterated on Monday that no decision on this matter has been made, Gorbachev's request, coupled with the wishes of Germany, Canada, Italy and France to satisfy him in some

'91 twisters set record in U.S.

A rain repeat? Naw

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

Long-awaited rain finally fell in the Permian Basin Monday morning, feeding the fields of farmers and causing the usual stalled cars on Midland streets.

Three-quarters of an inch of rainfall was reported at Midland International Airport, according to the National Weather Service.

But there is little-to-no chance of a repeat rain today, an NWS spokesman said.

Varying amounts of rain fell in the area of a thunderstorm that began in eastern New Mexico and by morning covered a portion of West Texas from just east of Fort Stockton to near Childress.

WASHINGTON (NYT) — By a wide margin, the number of tornadoes in the United States this spring has exceeded any previous spring on record.

A lopsided jet stream, which has been flowing from the Pacific Northwest to Arizona, then turning northeast, has pulled together cool air from the Rocky Mountains and warm, moist air from the Gulf of Mexico.

"And when you get a zone of conflict between a cold, dry air mass from the Rockies and warm, humid air from the Gulf underneath a jet stream, you have conditions that are perfect for severe weather," said William Heim, a meteorologist at the National Climatic Data Center in Ashville, N.C.

Preliminary tornado reports for the spring months, March, April and May, show that 884 twisters have been reported this year, Heim

Councilmen ready to roll up sleeves after taking oaths

By Brian Pearson

With budget cuts and redistricting looming, the oaths of office that four councilmen took Monday could be the easiest task they face for the next two years.

But the elaborate swearing-in ceremony, which drew more than 150 people to City Council chambers, may one of the more memorable events in their council careers.

"We unquestionably have a record crowd this morning," Mayor Carroll Thomas said. "We extend our personal thanks to you for being here."

Audience members filled the chairs and lined the walls to witness the formal ceremony. The Midland Police Department Color Guard presented the colors, while Ecce lei Mendoza, a Midland-based Mexican consul, gave the keynote speech.

The event took on a historic tone with the swearing in of the Rev. Michael De Vaughn, the city's first black councilman.

Single-engine plane crash near Colorado City kills 2

took place with the "overt, significant assistance of the court." He said, "If a government confers on a private body the power to choose the government's employees or officials, the private body will be bound by the constitutional mandate of race neutrality."

constitutional mandate of race neutrality."

Justice Sandra Day O'Connor dissented in an opinion joined by Chief Justice William H. Rehnquist and Justice Antonin Scalia. They said jury selection by private lawyers "is fundamentally a matter of private choice and not state action."

"As much as we would like to eliminate completely from the courtroom the specter of racial discrimination, the Constitution does not sweep that broadly," Justice O'Connor said.

Scalia also wrote a separate dissent warning that the ruling would put new strains on overburdened state and federal trial courts.

The decision, Edmonson vs. Leesville Concrete Co., No. 89-7743, overturned a 1990 ruling by the 5th Circuit U.S. Court of Appeals, in New Orleans.

That court rejected a black plaintiff's challenge to the way the jury was selected in a lawsuit he brought against his employer after he was injured on the job. The employer used peremptory challenges to remove two black jurors.

The jury, made up of 11 whites and one black, found that the plaintiff, Thaddeus D. Edmonson, was 80 percent at fault in the accident and awarded him only 20 percent of the damages he had sought. Edmonson can now try to invalidate the jury's findings.

Under the Supreme Court's 1986 ruling, Batson vs. Kentucky, a prosecutor who uses peremptory challenges in a way that suggests racial discrimination is required to provide a "race-neutral" explanation for removing the particular jurors.

In Edmonson's case, the trial judge ruled, and the appeals court agreed, that the Batson ruling did not apply to civil lawsuits.

As a general matter, peremptory challenges do not require any explanation, permitting lawyers to remove potential jurors on the hunch that the jurors will not be sympathetic. Before the Batson ruling, prosecutors commonly used peremptory challenges to prevent black jurors from sitting in judgment on black defendants.

Kennedy on Monday denounced the use of "race stereotypes" in jury selection.

"If our society is to continue to progress as a multiracial democracy," he said, "it must recognize that the automatic invocation of race stereotypes retards that progress and causes continued hurt and injury." There are no statistics on how often litigants in civil cases had used peremptory challenges based on race.

The decision Monday goes far toward completing a rapid evolution in the Supreme Court's approach to the role of race in jury selection.

Roger Myers, a Fort Worth-based public affairs officer for the FAA's southwest region, said air-traffic controllers lost radar contact with the Cessna after 7 a.m. when it was 15 miles southeast of Big Spring.

The plane had left Hicks Field in Fort Worth earlier that morning.

When the plane did not arrive as scheduled at Air Park at 7:32 a.m., the FAA contacted the CAP to begin a search-and-rescue mission from its Midland and Abilene stations, Myers said.

Department of Public Safety Highway Patrol Trooper David Wisniewski, who coordinated the search on the ground, blamed bad weather for the accident.

He said thunderstorms and lightning had been reported in the area at the time of the crash.

Mitchell County Sheriff Wendell Bryant said the wreckage covered a 150- to 200-yard area about 25 yards south of a rain-swollen creek bed.

"It's a muddy mess down in that field," he said.

Bryant said that if the plane had crashed any closer to the stream, the CAP would not have found it.

"If it had been 20 more yards to the north, it would be in the lake (Lake Champion) by now," he said.

Although the recently plowed cotton field was flooded from rains that dumped up to 3½ inches on Mitchell County Monday morning, the plane itself was not submerged, Wisniewski said.

National Transportation Safety Board and FAA investigators will examine the wreckage today, he said.

Terrell and Stokes' remains have been transported to Dallas Institute of Forensic Science to be autopsied, Wisniewski said.

STORMS: No repeat likely

(From 1A)

The downfall was substantial compared with the overall amount of rain this year but shy in comparison to the year-to-date average, the NWS spokesman said.

In May, usually the wettest month of the year, a mere 0.54 inches fell on Midland. The average is 2.05 inches.

But the end of May, Midland usually has 4.40 inches of rain. To date, rainfall has totaled 3.35 inches.

The average cumulative total through June is 5.84 inches, according to NWS reports.

In addition to boosting the rainfall table, Monday's storms brought hail ranging from pea-size in the Midland-Odessa area to marble-size in Big Spring.

Lightning was reported to have struck at least one house in Midland causing moderate damage, but details could not be confirmed.

Midland Fire Department officials said transformers and electrical poles were reported struck by lightning but incurred no major damage.

Some area farmers fared well from the rain, while others were left dry.

"North and west of Midland got some pretty good rain. (But) there's a bunch that didn't get much. It was pretty scattered," said Marc Traweek, gin superintendent for the Midland Farmers Gin Cooperative.

Land north of Interstate 20 between Stanton and Big Spring got up to four inches of welcome rain, while the Greenwood area got only a sprinkling.

The rain came at a time nearing the deadline for cotton farmers to get their crops planted.

"We hadn't had a planting rain at all" this year, Traweek said.

Cotton, a 120- to 150-day crop, needs to be planted by June 10 to qualify for government farming programs and to be ready for harvest by fall.

The June shower will reduce the anticipated $500 million revenue loss from cotton in the area this season, Traweek said.

One-quarter of U.S. cotton is grown in this area and in the high plains of Texas.

Farmers who didn't fare well by this storm are hoping for more rain to prevent a dry plant. For those whose soil was wettened, rain will be necessary by the end of June to keep the crop going through July.

"You're never going to hear a farmer complain about rain," Traweek said.

There's no chance of rain in today's forecast.

Today will be partly cloudy with a high in the mid-90s and southwest winds at 10 to 20 mph, according to the NWS.

Tonight is expected to be fair with a low in the mid-60s.

Wednesday should be partly cloudy with a high in the mid-90s.

After an overnight low of 62, Monday's high was 88 compared with the record high for that date of 103 in 1990. The record low for today's date was 50 set in 1970.

STATE

Heavy rains hit much of Central, Southwest and South Central Texas on Monday.

As much as 3 feet of water was reported in homes and businesses at Copperas Cove, in Coryell County, where numerous streets and roads were closed because they were under water.

A flash flood warning was in effect for Monday afternoon for both Coryell and Bell counties, near the sprawling Fort Hood army base.

Winds near 50 mph were reported in the College Station area in connection with a heavy thunderstorm. Torrents of rain fell from just north of College Station to five miles east of Hearne, near North Zulch, just northeast of Normangee and east of Buffalo.

NATION

Thunderstorms were scattered from the Rockies to the East Coast on Monday, with locally heavy rain in Texas and around Washington, D.C..

During the afternoon, showers and thunderstorms continued along the middle Atlantic Coast and were scattered across central New York state.

The Washington area was drenched during the morning. Dulles Airport got 4.33 inches of rain, including 4.25 inches between 1 a.m. and 7 a.m. CDT, more than normal for the entire month of June and the fourth heaviest for any 24-hour period.

AIDS: Official sees need for far more progress

fighting for a cure.

Mason, who herself is nearing the outer envelope of the life expectancy for an AIDS sufferer, passed up a chance to appear Wednesday on the nationally-syndicated television show, "Geraldo." She felt staying at home was more important.

"I really began to cherish the time I had left with my family," the 32-year-old Utica resident said during a recent telephone interview.

As of April, the Centers for Disease Control reported 171,876 diagnosed cases of AIDS in the United States, 108,731 of whom have died.

Mason became infected with HIV — the virus that causes AIDS — in January 1987, while receiving a blood transfusion during the birth of her second child. Her son was not infected, but she soon developed symptoms of AIDS and was diagnosed with the disease in October 1988.

At that time, Mason said the only way to get information about AIDS was to order it from the surgeon general's office. She said she lived in fear that the people at the post office would find out what she was receiving.

During a hospital stay in the fall of 1988, she recalls, she lay all day in a bloody sheet because nurses were afraid they might become infected. She also endured a registered nurse's petition to have her evicted from an apartment in Indiana.

The lot of AIDS sufferers has improved somewhat since then, she says.

The passage last year of the Americans With Disabilities Act made it illegal to discriminate against handicapped people, including those with AIDS.

Similar legislation, sponsored by Mason's father, state Rep. Paul Mason, was passed in Kentucky last year. That bill focused mainly on AIDS education at all levels in Kentucky and on extending AIDS counseling and services across the state.

But as far as things have come, Mason — and her father — see the need for far more progress.

"We are in an apathetic mode," her father said. "It seems that we as American people like to do things and put them behind us. We think we have done AIDS and put it behind us. ... I think the government is responding to that mood."

Belinda Mason was president of the National Association of People With AIDS in July 1989 when Bush appointed her to the commission created by the Reagan administration. Although she praised Bush for the appointment, Mason acknowledged that the move was not made without political considerations.

"I was perfect. I was Southern, I was white, I was articulate and I got AIDS in nice way," she said.

She complains that the Bush administration has treated the AIDS crisis as a moral issue instead of the public service issue she thinks it is.

"It seems they would think that a condom and a pamphlet on how to use it would be a good investment, compared to lifetime health care," she said bitterly.

Mason said the government has funded only a "microcosm" of the AIDS problem. The administration needs to look beyond AIDS to address the problems of drugs, prostitution and poverty, she said.

OATHS: Swearing-in ceremony draws about 150

(From 1A)

The first minority council member was Oralia "Lilly" Corrales, a Hispanic elected in 1985. Following Ms. Corrales were Jose Cuevas, John Castro and Tony Carrillo.

De Vaughn, fellow newcomer James Devenport and incumbents J.D. Faircloth and Castro won their respective races in the May 4 election.

De Vaughn defeated Jose Alfredo "Beau" Zertuche to capture the District 2 seat, while Devenport beat Steve Scott to win the District 1 post. Faircloth and Castro received more votes than Hugh White III to retain their at-large positions.

Carrillo, the former District 2 councilman who replaced Jose Cuevas last year, and former District 1 Councilman Bill Williams chose not to run.

"I'm going to catch up with my business," Carrillo said of his post-council plans. "I'm going to miss some of it. Some of it I won't miss. I might be back one of these days."

Williams did not attend Monday's ceremony.

After someone is appointed to replace District 3 Councilman Bob Monaghan, who is expected to resign next Tuesday, the council will have three new faces.

Faircloth said juggling a balanced budget without a tax increase next year is the council's biggest challenge.

"I think we'll be trying to maintain an adequate level of service without raising taxes," Faircloth said. "We'll trim some expenditures. The council is determined not to raise taxes."

Priorities on Castro's council work list includes the impending restructure of council election boundaries, the proper channeling of federal grant dollars and effluent farm improvements.

"I think those are the hottest issues right now," Castro said.

Devenport said his immediate goals are to work with city management toward a balanced budget and push for Midland International Airport renovations.

"I think right now the city is in good financial shape," Devenport said. "We've just got to tighten our belts and balance the budget."

De Vaughn said he hopes to see the continuation of the city's plans to pave dirt roads in east Midland, especially along sections of Washington Avenue.

Monaghan announced last week that he would resign next Tuesday because of health reasons. Faircloth said the council might find a replacement within two weeks.

TWISTERS: Record is 'an incredible increase'

said. That's an increase of 65 percent over the previous record, 537 tornadoes in the spring of 1982, and 2.7 times as high as the long-term average, 322, for springtime twisters, Heim said.

"It's an incredible increase," he said. "Even when we take out a percentage to compensate for the fact that these are still preliminary reports for May, this is a startling statistic."

He said that the number was "within the range of natural variability — but all the way to the high side of the range."

Meanwhile, this is also shaping up as one of the warmest years on record in the United States, Heim said.

The jet stream line swooping northwest across the country from Arizona forms a dividing line, with higher temperatures to the east and lower readings on the West Coast, Heim said.

However, a national average temperature from readings taken at weather stations all over the country was 62.9 degrees (Fahrenheit) in May, making this the seventh hottest May on record. The hottest May was in 1934, he said, with 65.1 degrees and the coldest was in 1917, 55.7 degrees.

Finally, a National Aeronautics and Space Administration scientist whose compilations of world temperature averages have documented unusually warm temperatures during the last decade said 1991 promises to be another warm year.

"Global temperatures for the first four months of 1991 are at about the same high level as the mean for the record year of 1990," said Dr. James Hansen, director of NASA's Goddard Institute for Space Studies in New York.

Although the average for 1991 is similar to the overall record for 1990, the first four months of this is year are somewhat cooler than the comparable period of 1990.

Ag commissioner touts processing

AUSTIN (AP) — Agriculture Commissioner Rick Perry started a 12-city Texas tour Monday to tout a drive toward in-state processing of state-grown crops and livestock.

"We can brag that we produce more cotton, cattle, goats, wool and mohair than any other state," Perry said. "But the bragging stops when it comes to processing those products and reaping the resulting profits."

For instance, he said, Texas boot makers currently import their leather from out of state.

"You'd give an A-plus to production agricultural, but you'd barely give a passing grade on our processing of agricultural products in the state of Texas," he said.

At a news conference, Perry launched the "Make it Texas" program designed to lure investors to build tanneries, fiber mills, packing facilities and processing plants.

Perry said the Agriculture Department will assist in marketing surveys, and the issuance of $25 million in low-interest loans for the development of new agribusinesses.

He said the processing drive will also include local chambers of commerce and other business groups.

"By exporting our raw commodities, we are, in effect, exporting jobs, opportunities and dollars that otherwise would go into Texans' pocketbooks," Perry said. "It's time we kept our jobs at home."

Texas consortium to build bullet train

N.Y. Times News Service

AUSTIN — After the last of marathon hearings in Austin, after some of the best attorneys in the state had argued that their clients should be the ones to build the state's first bullet train, it was easy to pick Ben Barnes out of the crowd.

He was the red-haired man towering over a sea of television cameras and reporters with tape recorders. He was wearing a smile as wide as the Pedernales River, and he was talking in grand terms of how Texas' future was about to change.

Less than five minutes had passed since the Texas High Speed Rail Authority picked Texas TGV, a consortium in which Barnes is a minority investor, to build the 200 mph train line connecting the state's largest cities.

And while his German consortium competitors slipped quietly out of the hotel ballroom last week, the 53-year-old former lieutenant governer and political wonderboy was enjoying the limelight.

In another room, William Agee — chairman of Morrison Knudsen Corp., the Idaho construction giant and lead partner in Texas TGV — was preparing to present the chairman of the Texas rail authority with a $2.5 million check.

It was a hefty deposit that will be forfeited if the promoters of the French bullet train don't fulfill their promise to build the $5 billion to $7 billion project without public money.

Agee was as jubilant as Barnes — but he was the first to acknowledge that the TGV consortium had just grabbed a Texas-size tiger by the tail.

"This is going to be a challenge," Agee said. "But I don't think there is a better team to build the bullet train in Texas."

They have an impressive lineup that includes the Mannai Corp., a Middle Eastern investment company with worldwide holdings, and Fort Worth businessman Brad Corbett, a minority investor. The team's day-to-day manager will be former Brig. Gen. Robert Ryan, who led major construction projects for the Army Corps of Engineers.

Whether TGV is the best team to build the most costly public works project in the nation's history is a question that won't be answered for some time, observers predict.

"I sure hope they can do it," said Lena Guerrero, head of the Texas Railroad Commission and member of the nine-member rail authority. "But there is a big difference between selling hope and creating a reality.

"The board is betting that TGV can create reality."

Texas TGV hopes to create that reality by whipping up a mixture of money, construction experience and good ol' boy political savvy.

The money will come from investors and the sale of tax-exempt bonds. The construction experience will be provided by Morrison Knudsen, which became internationally famous for its construction of Hoover Dam and for building thousands of miles of conventional railroad across the United States.

The political savvy: That's Ben Barnes' department, second office on the right at the end of the hall — the one with the view of the state Capitol.

"It's like I've been training my entire life for this job," Barnes said.

TRADE: Move is intended to help Gorbachev

way, have put Bush in a difficult position: to flatly reject the Soviet leader's appeal at this point would create simultaneous problems with Moscow and the Western allies.

"We're considering the matter, the White House spokesman, Marlin Fitzwater, said, "and looking at all the possibilities, talking to all the right people, but we don't want to broadcast. These things take time to work out. You have to go through all the channels, a lot of channels to go through."

Major, as host of the summit meeting, would have to issue the invitation, but everyone is waiting for approval from the White House.

A British government spokesman said on Monday that a decision on inviting Gorbachev to London "would be taken quite soon."

Bush has held similar private contacts on this subject with Chancellor Helmut Kohl of Germany, as well as with the leaders of the other members of the Group of 7 — Italy, Canada, France, and Japan.

Both Washington and the industrial nations appear eager to avoid embarrasing Gorbachev, even though they have serious doubts that he has yet produced a realistic economic-liberalization proposal that they could respond to in London.

American officials remain concerned that even an invitation to Gorbachev to be indirectly associated with the economic summit meeting is going to raise unrealistic expectations in Moscow.

A lot of the dicussions between the allies now are focused on how to satisfy Gorbachev's request to come to London to present his latest proposals — without raising expectations for grants that will not be met.

Nevertheless, the President's action on Monday, coming on the heels of Saturday's agreement in Lisbon between American and Soviet negotiators resolving differences on a conventional-arms-reduction treaty for Europe, provided fresh signs that Soviet-American relations are again warming, after a period of coolness last winter prompted by the Kremlin's crackdown in the Baltic republics and Gorbachev's tilt toward domestic hardliners.

Fitzwater said Soviet and American officials were "looking at the end of June, or July period," to hold a Bush-Gorbachev summit in Moscow. But the date would depend in part on progress toward completion of a still-pending nuclear-arms-reduction treaty.

The warming in American-Soviet relations seems largely a result of Gorbachev's increasingly desperate economic plight, which is pushing him to adopt domestic and foreign policies more in tune with the West in the hope of gaining Western economic aid.

The Bush administration is trying to use its economic leverage over Gorbachev to wring concessions from him on arms control, or, as Fitzwater put it on Monday: "We are interested in pursuing our agenda and the things that are important to us, particularly in the arms-control area."

On the Soviet trade benefits, what Bush technically did on Monday was to notify Congress that he was using his discretionary authority to waive for 12 more months the requirements of the Jackson-Vanik amendment for four countries: the Soviet Union, Bulgaria, Czechoslovakia, and Mongolia. Monday was the deadline for extending the waiver, and Congress now has a month to consider it.

The Jackson-Vanik amendment is part of a 1974 law that requires countries to permit free emigration to qualify for American trade concessions.

"Numbers of Soviets emigrating rose from 2,000 in 1986 to over 370,000 in 1990," Fitzwater said in announcing Monday's waiver. "The administration believes that this positive trend will continue."

Waiving the Jackson-Vanik provision does two things. First, it enables American exporters who want to sell goods to the Soviet Union to obtain government-guaranteed bank credits to finance those exports and lets the Soviets obtain similar bank guarantees to finance the imports of American products.

Second, once the president waives the Jackson-Vanik requirement, he can, if he chooses, grant most-favored-nation treatment, to the Soviet Union, which allows the Soviets to export their products to the United States at the lowest possible tariffs.

For such trade to go ahead, though, the trade agreement signed by Bush and Gorbachev last June would have to be sent by the White House to Congress for approval.

The president has refrained from making such a move, and did so again on Monday, because he had tied most-favored-nation status to Soviet adoption of a free emigration law, codifying their recent, more liberal emigration policies.

The law was enacted by the Supreme Soviet on May 20, but it will not be put into effect until January 1993.

American officials are now in the process of trying to decide whether this law, with all its fine print, really will codify free emigration from the Soviet Union.

They appear to be convinced that it will, because the officials say they expect the trade bill to be sent to Congress before the end of June.

The Union of Councils for Soviet Jews, has called the law a "codification of the same arbitrary practices", particularly the practice of denying people the right to emigrate if they have had access to what the Soviets consider to be state secrets, with limited rights of appeal.

■ Obstruction probe continues in rape case

PALM BEACH, Fla. — Police said Monday they have new witnesses to interview before a decision can be made on possible obstruction of justice charges in connection with the alleged rape at the Kennedy estate.

"It's still going on," Police Chief Joseph Terlizzese said. "We keep coming up with names of people for us to talk to."

The chief wouldn't give specific numbers, but said police already have interviewed "quite a few" potential witnesses. Several more remain because they were only recently identified as potential witnesses, he said.

In a related case, lawyers for the Globe filed written pleas of innocent Monday to two second-degree misdemeanor counts of printing the alleged victim's name.

■ Trial to start for suspect in bombings

ATLANTA — A year and a half after a series of lethal mail bombs were delivered to judicial and civil rights targets in the South, a Georgia man with a longstanding obsession with the legal system goes on trial in Minneapolis on Tuesday, accused of killing a federal judge and a civil rights lawyer.

The man, Walter Leroy Moody Jr. of Rex, Ga., faces 71 federal counts, including murder and conspiracy, in connection with the mailing of four nail-studded mail bombs in December 1989. Two bombs sent through the mail exploded and killed Judge Robert S. Vance of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 11th Circuit in Birmingham, Ala., and Robert E. Robinson, a civil rights lawyer and a city alderman in Savannah, Ga.

Two other bombs, one sent to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in Jacksonville, Fla., and the other to the offices of the 11th Circuit in Atlanta, were defused.

Jury selection begins today in St. Paul, Minn.

■ Parade looms as grandest since WWII

WASHINGTON — The thunder of Desert Storm will echo upon the thronged avenues of the capital Saturday, as a mighty blur of air, naval and ground forces pass in review in the grandest celebration of military triumph since World War II.

Eight thousand men and women who took part in the briefest of American wars will parade before their commander-in-chief and perhaps 1.5 million of their fellow citizens. And their field commander, Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf, will — as the ads said — "lead his troops one more time."

■ More and more children in foster care

WASHINGTON — The number of children in foster care rose nearly 50 percent in the five years ending in June 1990, the American Public Welfare Association said Monday.

At the end of June 1986, an estimated 273,000 American children were in foster care, compared with 407,000 five years later, an increase of 49.1 percent, the APWA said.

"Our political rhetoric uses the word 'families' but too often we fail to provide the help troubled families need to get back on their feet and care for their children," said Sidney Johnson, executive director of the association.

"The sheer number of children meeing out-of-home care today demonstrates again that this nation needs policies, backed by resources, to strengthen families so children can stay in their own homes," Johnson said.

■ House panel vote kills space station

WASHINGTON — The House Appropriations Committee voted Monday to kill NASA's planned space station, ignoring a White House veto threat and prompting opponents to promise to fight to restore the funds.

Ratifying a decision made last month by the panel's subcommittee that oversees NASA, the committee decided to provide none of the $2 billion President Bush requested for next year for the space station Freedom.

There was no separate vote on the space station question. The committee simply omitted the funds from a measure providing $80.9 billion for the nation's space, housing and veterans programs in fiscal 1992, which starts Oct. 1. The overall bill was approved on a voice vote.

The bill did include $100 million to study alternatives for a smaller, less expensive orbiter where some experiments envisioned for the space station could be conducted.

■ Senate debates 'Baby Bells' legislation

WASHINGTON — The Senate on Monday began debate on a bill that would allow the regional Bell telephone companies to compete with AT&T in manufacturing phone equipment.

Both sides predicted the chamber would approve allowing the seven "Baby Bells" into manufacturing. The companies and their biggest union, the Communication Workers of America, have argued the measure would boost competition and create jobs.

But American Telephone & Telegraph, once parent company of the regionals, and consumer groups contend that an eventual rise effect would be to drive up local phone prices.

The manufacturing ban was imposed on the Baby Bells by a 1984 federal court decree that broke up the old Bell system. They were restricted to local and intrastate long-distance services, which have proven highly profitable.

Civil rights groups, Bush trade attacks

WASHINGTON (NYT) — Civil rights groups and the Bush administration traded increasingly hostile attacks Monday on the eve of House action on civil rights legislation intended to make it easier for victims of job discrimination to sue and collect damages.

John E. Jacob, president of the National Urban League, said the administration's argument that the bill would lead employers to use quotas showed that "cynical political leaders are trying to turn a civil rights issue into a political issue that plays on irrational fears and latent racism."

President Bush attacked "Beltway interest groups" that he said refused to compromise because "they wanted a political win, they wanted to grind me into the political dirt."

That was the tone of the day's talk. More privately, both sides struggled over a handful of votes they expected to make the difference in whether the bill backed by House Democratic leaders achieves or falls short of the two-thirds majority ultimately necessary to override Bush's threatened veto. Bush vetoed the bill last year and Congress failed to override the veto.

Bush brought a group of wavering Democrats to the White House Monday afternoon for last-minute missionary work. But civil rights groups and Democratic leaders were giving the same lawmakers, and a few Republicans, their best arguments, too.

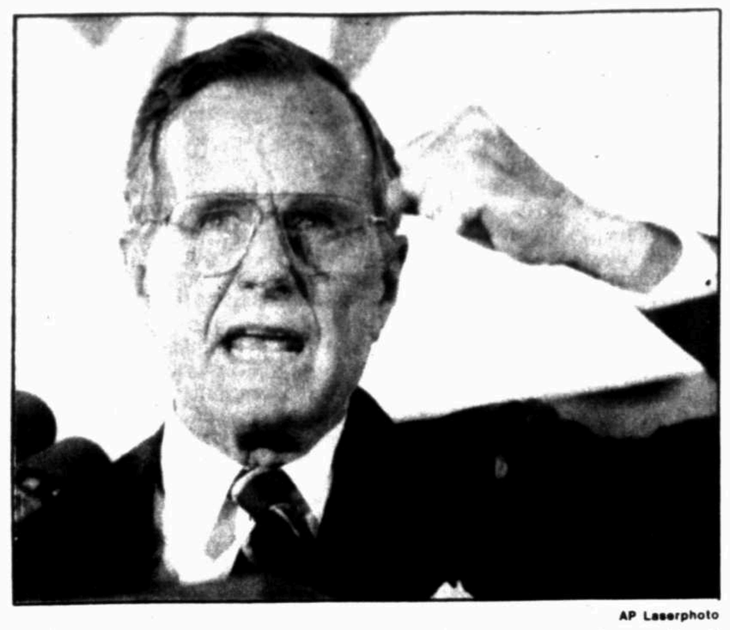
Last year the bill got 273 votes in the House, 17 short of a two-thirds majority when all members vote.

Democratic election victories last fall brought the bill some new votes, and recent changes in it, like a provision declaring employment quotas illegal, have also added votes, but no one is sure just how many.

Democratic leaders and spokesmen for civil rights groups say they have a serious chance of achieving a two-thirds majorty. Robert H. Michel of Illinois, the House Republican leader, said Mondayafternoon that he was just not sure how the vote would come out but that he had not lost any Republicans who voted against last year's bill.

The two-thirds majority, or something close to it, is regarded as important by supporters of the bill because they believe it would give the measure a lift in the Senate, which has been content to watch from the sidelines as the House struggled with the legislation all spring.

Indeed, the Senate is about to take its first tentative step toward action today when Sen. John C. Danforth, R-Mo., is to introduce three bills covering the same general areas as the bill expected to pass in the House. It more closely resembles the House Democrats' bill than the measure preferred by President Bush, and Danforth is expected to use the occasion to make it clear that not all Republicans share Bush's views on quotas. He said Monday that he feared the "national consensus on civil rights" was threatened, adding, "People do not want this to be a partisan issue."



AP Laserphoto

President Bush, speaking before independent business leaders in Washington, slams hiring quotas in the workplace.

Most of Monday's talk focused on the quota issue. C. Boyden Gray, White House counsel, defined a quota as "hiring by the numbers, in proportion to their presence in the labor pool, in a way that disregards merit."

The problem with the Democrats' bill, he said in an interview, was that "you're permitted to hire the less qualified."

Attorney General Dick Thornburgh termed the Democrats' anti-quota provision "a sham," and in a letter to Michel said it only barred quotas when they required hiring "completely unqualified" job candidates.

Jacob of the Urban League termed the argument that the bill would cause employers to use quotas to avoid lawsuits a "campaign of lies and fear waged against this moderate, necessary civil rights legislation."

Bush complained that no attention had been given to his civil rights bill, which Michel will offer today with no hope of its adoption.

Report: U.S. can learn from Canadian health plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. government could extend health care to all its citizens and still save money by adopting Canada's national system, according to a draft congressional report to be released Tuesday.

The General Accounting Office's study of Canada's 20-year-old health care program concluded that the United States has much to learn from its neighbor's government-run system, which streamlines administrative costs and reduces paperwork for physicians and hospitals.

"If the universal coverage and single-payer features of the Canadian system were applied in the United States, the savings in administrative costs alone would be more than enough to finance insurance coverage for the millions of Americans who are currently uninsured," the report said.

The savings might even be large enough to eliminate deductibles and co-payments insured citizens now pay, making health care free for everyone, said the GAO, a congressional investigative agency.

But the report said that on this point Americans might not want to replicate the Canadian system. Instead, the United States could combine the best of both systems, such as by continuing to require some cost-sharing for medical care but ensuring timely access to services.

Critics of the Canadian system often point to long waits in that country for some medical procedures and services. Some Canadians travel to U.S. hospitals for medical services so they don't have to wait months.

As the debate over the need for health-care reforms has accelerated in this country, some have focused on the Canadian system as a model with which the United States could provide health care for an estimated 35 million uninsured citizens and stem double-digit growth in medical costs.

"The economic rationing of health care under our current system could come to an end" under a Canadian-style system, said Rep. John Conyers, D-Mich. and chairman of the House Government Operations Committee.

"People wouldn't be refused insurance because they have a pre-existing condition such as cancer. Families wouldn't be impoverished to care for a sick loved one," he said.

Health-care spending in the United States is expected to exceed $650 billion this year, accounting for about 12 percent of the gross national product. With no changes in the system, it is heading for a 15 percent share of the GNP by the turn of the century.

Flag-waving Southern Baptists hail North as hero

ATLANTA (AP) — Oliver North, a former White House national security aide who fell from grace as the Iran-Contra scandal unraveled, was hailed as a prophet with honor Monday by thousands of flag-waving Southern Baptists.

Standing Pattonlike against a backdrop of a 40-by-60-foot American flag, North received a series of standing ovations as he compared his own travails to the crossing of the Red Sea. He urged some 15,000 Southern Baptists to become more politically active to fight back against "a veritable Sodom and Gomorrah on the banks of the Potomac."

At times holding a Bible aloft as he mixed a conservative political agenda with the mannerisms of a Baptist evangelist, North said there is "a desperate need for revival in this nation that we might turn back to him."

The former Marine lieutenant colonel spoke to the Southern Baptist Convention's Pastor's Conference that precedes the three-day denominational convention, scheduled to open Tuesday.

But North's talk provided a preview of the patriotic tenor of this year's convention, which will feature a revival Wednesday evening with the theme of a "Call to Prayer for Spiritual Awakening in America" and a talk Thursday by President Bush.

The convention is the first one since 1979 in which the denomination's so-called moderate faction is not expected to challenge the convention's fundamentalist majority. Thousands of moderates last month formed their own group, the Cooperative Baptist Fellowship, and have announced plans to bypass the denominational gathering.

A mile away from North's talk, the man who has been chief executive officer of the denomination throughout the fundamentalist-moderate controversy announced his intention to retire in 1992.

Harold C. Bennett, president of the Executive Committee of the Southern Baptist Convention since 1979, said Monday he planned to retire in October 1992.

"I'll be 68 by that time. It's time to retire," he said.

Soviet troops show force in Lithuania

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet troops in Lithuania set up checkpoints and arrested three people in a brief show of force late Monday, hours after the release of a report absolving troops of blame for the bloody January crackdown in the Baltic republic.

About 1,000 residents filtered into the square late Monday in front of the parliament in Vilnius, the Lithuanian capital, after President Vytautas Landsbergis appealed on live television for their support.

Around 9 p.m., soldiers set up between 10 and 15 checkpoints of about 20 men each around the city, including three at the parliament and others on bridges and roads leading to it, parliament spokesmen said.

The soldiers checked identity papers and arrested three people working for the pro-independence civilian defense force. They later relased two of them, officials said.

Soldiers set up between 10 and 15 checkpoints of about 20 men each around the city

But the troops began pulling back about 1 a.m. and the situation had "calmed down," said another spokesman, Darius Silas. It wasn't known whether the troops had all returned to their barracks.

The movement was the biggest show of force since soldiers attacked the Vilnius broadcast center Jan. 13, leaving 14 people dead. The troops have maintained a presence around the republic since then, and lightly armed Lithuanian nationalist militia remained stationed at the parliament and other government buildings, which are heavily barricaded.

The timing of Monday's troop movements seemed unfortunate for President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, who is involved in sensitive negotiations with Western political leaders as he seeks aid for the tottering Soviet economy.

President Bush has recently warmed toward Gorbachev's requests and notified Congress on Monday that he was waiving trade restrictions to the Soviets for another year and easing the way for them to buy American grain.

Ties between the two countries were deeply strained by the military crackdown in the Baltic states in January. Gorbachev had said he wasn't aware of that attack as it was happening.

The visible escalation in Vilnius on Monday followed a series of raids by Soviet troops on border checkpoints set up by the secessionist Baltic republics. Two people have been killed in the raids in the past two weeks.

In another blow to the Lithuanian cause earlier Monday, the chief Soviet prosecutor cleared Soviet troops of blame for most of the deaths in the January crackdown. His report instead said pro-independence Lithuanian nationalists were responsible.

The World

■ Pope angrily scolds Poles about abortion

KIELCE, Poland — In a voice rising in anger, Pope John Paul H on Monday delivered an impassioned sermon against abortion and demanded that his fellow Poles make an accounting of their sins.

His normally sonorous, pacific voice shaking with rage, the pope departed from his prepared text and assailed Poland's moral state as if it were a personal affront.

"All of you who lightheartedly approach these matters, you must understand that I cannot but be concerned with these matters, that I cannot but be hurt," he said during an open-air Mass. "You also should be hurt." John Paul's comments come two weeks after the Polish Parliament postponed action on a bill that would have outlawed abortion.

■ Volcano erupts in Japan; at least 2 dead

TOKYO — A volcano in southern Japan erupted late on Monday, setting houses and forests aflame and raining superheated rocks on small villages. Two people were confirmed dead, 31 people were missing, and more than 20 people were burned, many of them critically, the authorities said.

The eruption of Mount Unzen, about 30 miles from Nagasaki on the southern island of Kyushu, appeared to be among the largest volcanic eruptions in Japan in at least half a century. The volcano has been shaking and spewing on and off since Nov. 17.

The police said that at least 16 of those missing were reporters, photographers, and members of television crews that had approached the base of the mountain before the explosion shook the area around 4 p.m. on Monday.

■ Students mark anniversary of crackdown

BEIJING — In a bold protest against China's senior leader, Deng Xiaoping, students at Beijing University early on Tuesday morning smashed nearly 100 glass bottles to mark the second anniversary of the military crackdown here on the democracy movement.

Shortly after midnight, students began clapping, cheering and throwing bottles outside three graduate dormitories where policemen were patrolling, a witness said.

In Chinese, "xiaoping," meaning "little bottle," is also a homonym for Deng's given name, and protesters often express their feelings about Deng by shattering bottles.

U.S. struggles under NATO cost

With one million Soviet and other Warsaw Pact troops now being phased out of Eastern Europe, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization has agreed in principle to a major reorganization of its forces and to cut them in half. U.S. forces would be cut from 320,000 to about 160,000 troops. The reductions would begin at the end of 1994 and continue until 2000. The agreement is scheduled to be formally ratified in November.

The cuts are long overdue and should proceed more rapidly than outlined. While it is true that the Soviet Union is politically unstable, it is much less of a threat to Europe and the United States for many reasons. They include recent reductions in Soviet conventional forces and its nuclear arsenal and the strong likelihood that similar cuts will continue. The Soviets also need Western financial and other aid if they are to solve the country's greatest crisis since Nazi Germany invaded their land.

The United States should not only withdraw its forces more quickly, but it should ask Western Europe to share more of NATO's economic burden. In the 42 years of the alliance, the United States has spent hundreds of billions of dollars to support NATO. Western Europe's economic well being now allows it to pay more of the bill. The Germans insist that they must contribute huge sums to their country's unification and that the Americans should therefore continue a heavy load in NATO. But why should America carry part of Germany's load? It did so in blood against Iraq. The rest of the European countries certainly should increase their NATO financial contributions since the United States must face its own serious economic problems — from its massive national budget deficit to the need for more funds for social services.

Americans have argued unsuccessfully for years that Western Europe should pay a fairer share toward NATO. Our failure is a result of not being tough enough with our allies. U.S. leaders have done a major disservice to the American people by not taking a harder line. The history of the past four decades dictates that we start thinking more in terms of America's interests — not those of countries that have become well off, in part because of our financial sacrifices.

ANOTHER VIEW

Surplus property could help states

Surplus federal property was bought and paid for by U.S. taxpayers, and those taxpayers should get the full benefit of the property. However, an existing foreign policy program gives first dibs on the best surplus equipment to foreign countries, while cities and states here at home go begging.

States shop regularly for federal castoffs, frequently purchasing road equipment and other big-ticket items for less than 10 cents on the dollar. Road graders, fire trucks, barges, cranes ... there is a tremendous list of things that cities, counties and states need but cannot afford to buy new.

Since 1986, the very best of the highly prized material no longer needed by the Defense Department has been offered first to selected foreign countries under a congressionally established Humanitarian Assistance Program. For the cream of the crop, 39 other countries get first refusal. U.S. cities and states must get in line.

To add insult to the taxpayers who paid millions of dollars for this stuff in the first place, the foreign countries don't have to pay for the equipment, for shipping or for needed repairs. But U.S. cities and states do.

Example: A Louisiana parish needed some road scrapers, and found four, marked "surplus federal property," at a Naval Construction Battalion Center in neighboring Mississippi. But the machines were sent to Uruguay, at U.S. taxpayers' expense. Sabine Parish finally found two road scrapers at a U.S. military base in Germany. In addition to the purchase price, the shipping cost charged to the parish to bring them back to the States was $45,000....

In 1990, under a separate program administered by the Defense Department, we gave away surplus trucks and heavy equipment valued at $388 million to Egypt, Israel, Portugal and Turkey.

Legislation has been introduced in the House of Representatives that would give states first access to the surplus property, without skimming off the best equipment for foreign governments. Sponsor of the bill is Rep. Nick Rahall of West Virginia.

The Defense Department defends the program as a relatively inexpensive means of furthering U.S. foreign aid policy.

We say the program puts quite a chunk of foreign aid largesse in the hands of the Defense Department. And it puts much-needed equipment out of reach of the people who originally paid for it.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Tuesday, June 4, the 155th day of 1991. There are 210 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On June 4, 1940, the Allied military evacuation from Dunkirk, France, ended. British Prime Minister Winston Churchill told the House of Commons, "We shall fight on the beaches, we shall fight on the landing grounds, we shall fight in the fields and in the streets, we shall fight in the hills; we shall never surrender."

On this date:

In 1647, the English army seized King Charles I as a hostage.

In 1812, the Louisiana Territory was renamed the Missouri Territory.

In 1878, Turkey turned Cyprus over to the British.

In 1896, Henry Ford made a successful test run with his car in a nighttime drive through the streets of Detroit.

In 1939, in what became known as the "Voyage of the Damned," the SS St. Louis was turned away from the Florida coast and began heading back to Europe with more than 930 Jewish refugees, many of whom later died in Nazi concentration camps.

In 1944, Allied forces liberated Rome.

James Bay showdown is inevitable

WASHINGTON — At first glance, Canada's controversial James Bay power project appears to be a distant clash pitting Indians against a Quebec power company. In some surprising ways, however, this is a made-in-the-USA affair involving former White House and Cabinet officials.

Anderson

At last count, eight court cases had sprung from Hydro Quebec's intentions to continue damming and diverting rivers leading into James Bay. The next damming spree is expected to flood 382 more square miles of hunting and trapping land inhabited by some 10,000 Cree Indians. If the entire project is completed as planned it will be the world's largest hydro power complex.

The Grand Council of the Crees vows to take whatever measures necessary to save its sacred lands — even if it means lying down in front of bulldozers. Many believe an ugly showdown is practically inevitable. The battle lines couldn't be clearer: What to Quebec Premier Robert Bourassa is the "project of the century" is to the Sierra Club and other environmentalists wanton destruction of wilderness.

Bourassa has built his economic agenda around hydroelectric power. His allies include more than just an eager power company and a pro-development prime minister. He's had influential support and advice from the United States.

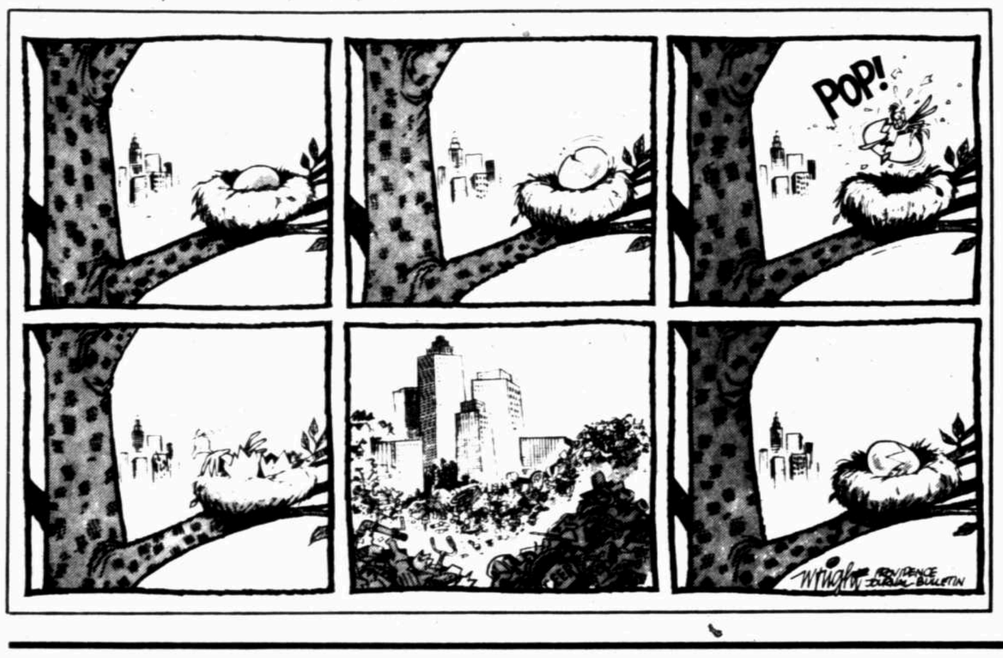
Former U.S. Energy Secretary James Schlesinger wrote the forward to Bourassa's book, "Power from the North." Schlesinger was but one of several prominent U.S. politicians who sat on an advisory panel that charted further expansion of the James Bay power project in the mid-1980s. Other members include former National Security Adviser William Clark, former Federal Energy Regulatory Commission chief Charles Curtis and former Treasury Secretary William Simon.

Even without these well-connected advisers, the current environmental clash has its roots in the United States. A Massachussetts-based energy consultant told our associate Jim Lynch that Hydro Quebec's damming plans could not be justified if New York and a consortium of New England states had not signed long-range contracts with Canada to purchase power created by the yet to be built dams. We are told the project also could not be justified if it weren't for a bevy of American-based aluminum and magnesium companies eager to relocate to the north to access the cheap electricity.

Hydro Quebec has struck such odd deals with aluminum firms that it has not revealed the contractual details to the public, a confidentiality the power company insists was requested by the aluminum firms. But we have learned that the deals break all the commonsense rules of business. The power company is offering the electricity at far below cost.

Hydro Quebec has suggested that it doesn't have time for an exhaustive environmental assessment of its upcoming dam work because of its pressing contractual obligations with New York and other states. This comment elicited a sharp reply from the New York Power Authority: Don't make our $17 billion contract with the Canadian firm a scapegoat for environmental shortcuts.

A Hydro Quebec spokeswoman told us the company will follow all required environmental procedures and assessments. She also said that Quebec's electricity demand alone, without the U.S. export contracts, warrants continued construction.



HUNG OUT TO DRY — Consumer groups are rallying around a proposal that would ban promotions of hard liquor in stadiums where professional sports are played. In a letter to National Hockey League President John Ziegler, the Center for Science in the Public Interest points out the many alcohol-related sports tragedies — including the drunk driving death of Philadelphia Flyer Pelle Lindbergh and Washington Capital John Kordic's battle with alcoholism.

MINI-EDITORIAL — President Bush has demonstrated again that he suffers from the China Syndrome. He plans to renew China's preferential trading status even though Beijing's record on human rights abuses is about as fat as the Manhattan telephone directory. Congress has 90 days to block the renewal — and send a message that will be heard from Pennsylvania Avenue to Peking.

CHARLEY REESE

All-powerful president is a grave situation

It's a heck of note but is it possible that a couple of hundred thousand Iraqis and several hundred Panamanians are victims of George Bush's hyperactive thyroid? Did we actually fight the Thyroid War in the Middle East?

Reese

Don't laugh. The president has been diagnosed as having Graves' disease. Here's what the Encyclopedia Britannica, 15th Edition, has to say:

"The increased levels of thyroid hormone result in increased cardiac output with tachycardia, palpitations, possible shortness of breath, fibrillation, and digitalis-resistant heart failure. Nervousness, hyperexcitability, restlessness, insomnia, and emotional instability are not unusual, nor are weight loss, muscular weakness and wasting, and diarrhea."

An emotionally unstable, hyperexcitable, restless insomniac is not my ideal of man to make decisions about war or peace. If you believe Bob Woodward's new book, "The Commanders," and that always requires an act of faith, then it was Mr. Bush, not Gen. Colin Powell or Gen. Norman Schwarzkopf who was pushing the war option.

If you will recall the time prior to the euphoria, Mr. Bush often acted angry, used harsh and intemperate language, and behaved in other ways not often associated with a statesman in the middle of managing an international crisis. It was certainly not the act of a reasonable and calm man to insist on playing golf and scooting about in a powerboat while dispatching American reservists and Guardsmen to distant shores. It wasn't even smart politics, and ordinarily Bush is a smart political tactician.

Of course whether Bush's thyroid disorder influenced his behavior and thinking and thus the course of history is not something we can ever know, which is why I put it in the form of a question. Not even Mr. Bush himself can answer that question, for when we are emotionally unstable, we don't realize we're emotionally unstable.

But it is worth reminding us of the danger of placing too much power in the hands of one man. All human beings are both fallible and vulnerable. Moreover the very kinds of illness that are most dangerous in a powerful figure are exactly those kinds most difficult for those around a leader to diagnose.

If the president develops a runny nose or breaks his leg, there's no problem, but if he's acting in an unstable manner, who's going to call that to his attention? Those maladies that affect our thinking and behavior are always difficult to spot except in cases where the behavior becomes bizarre.

The men who wrote our Constitution, most of them familiar with history and especially the history of the Roman Empire, were well aware of the danger of a single powerful individual, which, no doubt, is one of the reasons they chose to put the war-making power in the hands of Congress, not in the president's.

Congress itself is subject to the same human fallibilities and frailties as the rest of us, but it is unlikely that a majority of 535 people will lose their grasp on reality at the same time.

Suppose a president goes mad? And now, let me emphasize, I'm not even speculating about Mr. Bush, but simply raising a generic question. It's conceivable we might elect a man who, after taking office, would drift into insanity.

Over and over again, I rediscover how wise were the drafters of the Constitution — how what appears at first glance arbitrary is actually based on a wise reading of human history.

George Bush's illness should serve as warning to us not to disregard the constitutional safeguards and to follow rashly the sad path of others who placed blind faith in one man.

WILLIAM MURCHISON

How to clean up government in one sweep

We're going to limit spending, tra-la. Our congressmen now will be GOOD!

Murchison

They'll lust, steal and bloat,

But when comes time to vote —

They'll do just what Vox Pop thinks they should.

I offer the foregoing, free of charge, should Congress find itself in the market for a marching song.

Oh, my fellow taxpayers, our tribunes are at it again — dodging the question of responsibility for the sorry state of elective politics. They want to limit campaign spending. Well, the Senate does.

Actually, Senate Democrats do. Joined by five Republicans, the Democrats put across, 56-42, the other day a measure that would supposedly curb the power of the special interests. On to the House, where the bill's future is murky. Republicans argue plausibly that Democrats, by limiting campaign spending, want to institutionalize their control of Congress.

The passion to limit and stifle is catching, I hate to tell you. Florida the other day legislated a $500 ceiling on contributions to state political races. The Texas Legislature, with vast reluctance, passed an ethics bill that purports to regularize some of the ongoing contacts between legislators and lobbyists.

Measures such as these are supposed to help purify the political process — to remove lawmakers from fleshly temptations to which they might otherwise succumb.

Oh, my fellow taxpayers, what do our tribunes think they are about? Do they think we were born yesterday? No doubt they do.

Everybody and his dog is appalled at the exorbitant cost of political campaigns. What are we to do about all this? Four possibilities suggest themselves:

1. Shoot all lobbyists.
2. Shoot all lawmakers.
3. Sharply restrict the money and services lobbyists may donate to office seekers — as per the "reform" proposals.
4. Limit government.

As the first two remedies would disturb civil libertarians and gun-controllers, not to mention the victims' creditors, and as the fourth remedy is wholly logical, coherent and virtuous, legislators fall back on the third, hoping voters will think something useful is getting done. Well, it's not.

The nub of the ethics-campaign spending problem isn't the munificence of the special interests, it's the munificence of government itself. A government that spends way more than $1 trillion a year has enormous boons to grant — jobs, contracts, dams, bridges, military programs, government centers, to say nothing of grants, loans and subsidies to citizens.

My fellow taxpayers, we all want a piece of the action, don't we? — a favor here, a favor there. To procure those favors, people of means and influence hire lobbyists or dole out campaign contributions — sometimes to both sides.

Have I quoted Lord Acton lately? Let me do so: "Power tends to corrupt; absolute power corrupts absolutely."

Government has too much power. It has too much wealth. Government corrupts and is, in turn, corrupted as it passes out goodies to those with the most clamorous voices, the highest-cupped hands.

We need to take from government the power to do the vast number of favors it presently does. Legislating ethics, limiting campaign contributions — this gets us nowhere. What would get us somewhere is limiting government itself.

A decade of AIDS

After 10 years, AIDS is a fact of life — and death

EDITOR'S NOTE — It started with a scientific whisper, 10 years ago, on June 5, 1981. In the decade since, AIDS has grown from a rare affliction in gay men to a pandemic disease affecting millions worldwide.

By Fred Bayles
AP National writer

A decade ago this week, a Centers for Disease Control newsletter noted the puzzling cases of five gay men in Los Angeles suffering from Pneumocystis carinii, a rare pneumonia found in patients whose immune systems were failing.

The next month, another report: 36 young, homosexual men suffering from Kaposi's sarcoma, a rare cancer that normally afflicted only elderly men with weakened immune systems.

By now, the alarm bells were sounding.

"Physicians should be alert for Kaposi's sarcoma, P.C. pneumonia and other opportunistic infections associated with immunosuppression in homosexual men," the CDC warned.

Within months, it would become clear that a new peril — it would come to be known as acquired immune deficiency syndrome — had been unleashed on the world, and that there was no known cure.

Ten years later, there still is no cure — but there are treatments that have prolonged lives. There is no end in sight to suffering caused by AIDS — but the disease is not spreading as quickly as it once did. And fear of the disease persists — though the hysteria that once abounded has cooled.

In the ensuing decade, the obituaries have become almost routine, recounting the lives of hardy young men — thousand upon thousands of them — who wasted away, their bodies ravaged by infections.

THE TERM "safe sex" has entered the public lexicon, and the public consciousness. Blood transfusions and visits to doctors and dentists, once routine, raise nagging fears. And the gay community, decimated by death and disease, has mobilized with a stark rallying cry: "Silence is Death."

"So many people we know have died over the past years that I don't think anyone, except those who have been through a war, can understand that kind of death and destruction," said Mark Kostopoulos, 36, a Los Angeles activist who was diagnosed with AIDS 18 months ago.

Five years after that first mention in the CDC newsletter, the puzzlement over those first AIDS cases had long grown into deep concern. By then, 21,517 Americans had the disease; 11,713 had died.

The CDC was predicting AIDS would increase tenfold over the next five years: 270,000 would have AIDS by the end of 1991, and 179,000 would die.

The grim estimates have fallen uncomfortably close to the mark.

By year's end, CDC officials say AIDS deaths since 1981 will top 150,000 and that more than 41,000 additional cases will be diagnosed, bringing the total to about 250,000. It is estimated another 1 million to 1.5 million people carry the HIV virus, which festers into AIDS after an average 10-year incubation.

WORLDWIDE, the numbers are more stark. The World Health Organization estimates the total number of AIDS cases at 1.5 million, with another 8 million to 10 million people infected with the virus. By the end of the decade, WHO projects 40 million will be infected.

If there is a thin ray of hope, it is this: While the numbers aren't getting better in the United States, there is growing evidence they are getting worse at a slower pace than originally thought.

"The horizons are more sure," said Dr. James Curran, director of the CDC's HIV-AIDS division. "We're not talking about something that is going to affect 250,000 new people a year. But at the same time, it is not going to drop off from where it is now."

Health officials are seeing a "maturation," of the epidemic, away from the initial high risk group of homosexual men into other distinct segments of the population, Curran said.

While gay white men still are the largest affected group, transmission through intravenous drug use and heterosexual activity is increasing.

New York, Los Angeles and San Francisco still account for the bulk of cases, but AIDS is on the rise in 40 states.

"THE FACE OF the epidemic has changed and will continue to change," said Dr. Harold Jaffe, deputy director of science at the CDC's AIDS-HIV division. "Increasingly, it is an epidemic of poor blacks and Hispanics, particularly IV users, their sex partners and their children."

—In 1986, 66 percent of AIDS cases came from homosexual activity and 18 percent through intravenous drug use. Now, homosexual liaisons account for 55 percent and IV drug use is blamed for 24 percent.

—In 1986, 60 percent of AIDS patients were white, 25 percent black and 14 percent Hispanic. Only 7 percent were women. By this year, 52 percent were white, 30 percent black and 17 percent Hispanic. Twelve percent were women.

—Children under 13 still represent a tiny percentage, but the increase has been frightening. In 1986, 197 cases were reported. Last year, the number reported was 764, more than triple.

—Heterosexual transmission hovers around 7 percent to 8 percent, slightly lower than had been predicted in the 1980s. "Five years ago, people were worried that college kids and yuppies in singles bars were at high risk," said Jaffe. "The scenarios some people were suggesting that had the epidemic moving out into other groups just didn't happen."

In heterosexual transmission, a third to half the cases involved a sexual contact with a known IV drug user.

"IT POINTS out injecting drugs is at the root of the heterosexual epidemic," Curran said.

CDC epidemiologists say the rate of infection has slowed; the estimate that 1 million to 1.5 million people carry the AIDS virus in their blood has remained steady for several years.

But scientists caution that is far from good news.

"People get confused about it," Jaffe said. "They think AIDS is going away. It just means that it's not getting any worse."

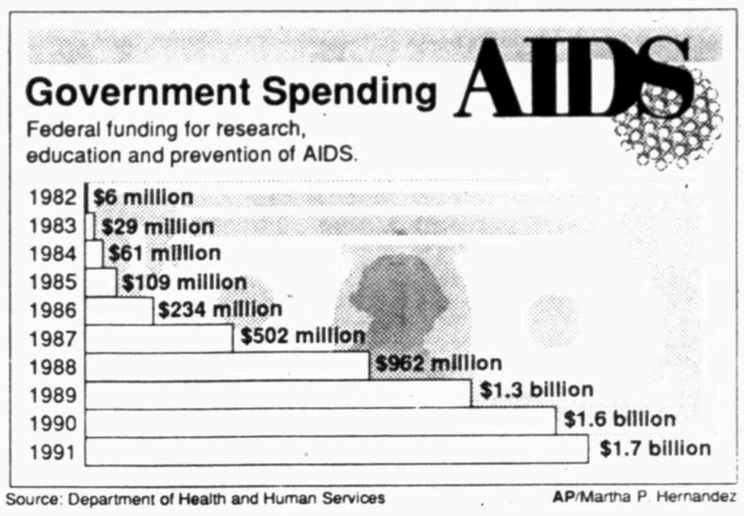
Evidence that the epidemic may be slowing has not surfaced in AIDS wards around the country.

"We're going to see increasing numbers of sick people. We have not reached the crest in human suffering," said Dr. David E. Rogers, vice chairman of the National AIDS Commission.

From 1985 to 1988 alone, AIDS admissions nearly tripled in the nation's public hospitals.

New York, which has the heaviest concentration of AIDS patients, has seen AIDS-related hospitalizations jump from 2,104 in 1983 to 34,538 in 1989. They grew an estimated 20 percent last year. Officials there expect to see more cases in the next five years than they saw in the last decade.

A PUBLIC HEALTH Service study estimated it costs an average of $90,000 to treat individual AIDS patients in the 18 months they are likely to live once the disease hits. More than half those bills are paid by Medicaid. The percentage is likely to grow as the epidemic spreads among the disadvantaged.



Teen-agers and AIDS: Learning to confront reality, handle risks

KOKOMO, Ind. (AP) — Here, as in so many other places, AIDS myths die hard.

This is the city where parents fought to keep Ryan White out of school, fearful that he would spread the disease that eventually killed him. And today, many of Kokomo's teen-agers seem to believe they are somehow immune from AIDS.

But just as Kokomo's fears about AIDS reflected a hysteria found everywhere in the epidemic's early days, the false sense of security harbored by its teen-agers mirrors a troubling bravado among the nation's young.

"It might be different if someone around here got AIDS through sex or drugs, but that hasn't happened so far," said Carrie Lewis, 16, a sophomore at Kokomo's Western High. "Kids think they're safe, that nothing will happen to them."

Adolescence is traditionally about testing limits, pressing luck, defying authority. But as AIDS continues spreading within the heterosexual community, such risk-taking has become an ever more dangerous game.

The Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta so far report 670 cases of adolescent AIDS, with the number logged annually rising from 36 in 1985 to 160 in 1990. Though still relatively rare, doctors say they're alarmed nonetheless.

While gay men drastically curbed their sexual activity to slow the HIV virus's spread during the 1980s, several national studies indicate teen-agers became more sexually active and at younger ages than ever.

The CDC, for example, reported this year that more than half of American females between 15 and 19 had had premarital sex — an increase of about 23 percent since 1980.

Researchers also warn that AIDS statistics may mask the actual risks to these teen-agers because symptoms of the disease, which has a 10-year incubation period, may not show up immediately.

Nearly 7,100 Americans from ages 20 to 24 have been diagnosed with AIDS, while more than 27,000 cases have been found in men and women ages 25 to 29, according to the CDC.

"The kids may be fooling themselves that they're safe because they don't see their peers coming down with the disease," said Dr. Martha Rogers, who heads the CDC's HIV epidemiology branch. "But the vast majority of 20- to 24-year-olds with AIDS were infected as adolescents."

Dawn Marcal, 25, discovered that fact under the most painful of circumstances. Years after reining in a reckless lifestyle that included dabbling in intravenous drugs and multiple sex partners, she unwittingly transmitted AIDS to a treasured daughter who died at 18 months.

"Most of America, especially middle America, still thinks AIDS is a gay disease," said Marcal, a San Franciscan who was diagnosed with the disease after her daughter's birth in 1987. "But I say to them, 'Look at me. I am AIDS.'"

AP Laserphoto

Dawn Marcal speaks about her struggle with AIDS to students at McAteer High School in San Francisco. Marcal unwittingly transmitted the virus to her daughter, who died at 18 months.

Though the disease most often is associated with blood transfusions, intraveneous drug use and gay sex, experts warn that the average American teen-ager living outside a metropolitan area still is at risk.

Half of all reported cases of AIDS in females from ages 13 to 21 were contracted from heterosexual sex, according to studies.

"Most teen-agers feel invulerable on the AIDS issue," said Lillian Rubin, a sociologist at the Institute for the Study of Social Change at the University of California-Berkeley. "They're saying, 'I only know straight people, who aren't needle users, who don't have AIDS. I know who I sleep with. I sleep with the guys and girls in my school.'"

"They may be from down the street, but who knows how many times they've been around the block," said Vice Principal Bill Narwald, who took Ryan White under his wing when the eighth-grader was at Western High in the mid-1980s.

The good news is that condom use, which can prevent transmission of the HIV virus, has more than doubled in recent years. Fifty-seven percent of sexually active 15- to 19-year-old males surveyed in 1988 used protection the last time they had intercourse, according to the Alan Guttmacher Institute in New York.

Meanwhile, 31 percent of unmarried 15- to 44-year-old women who have had sexual intercourse at least once said they had modified their behavior because of AIDS, according to a federal report released last month.

Experts attribute this progress to the introduction of AIDS education programs, which are now required for public school students in 33 states and recommended in 16 states.

"We've opened up dinner-table dialogue around a lot of taboo subjects, like sex and condoms," said Dr. Karen Hein, head of the adolescent AIDS program at Montefiore Hospital in New York. "It's a kind of revolution."

Many adults, however, still find sex and AIDS difficult topics to discuss with their teen-agers. It's a tacit admission that their children are or may soon become sexually active, a decision some parents might not sanction.

But AIDS activists say morality must become secondary to safety, with an estimated 1 million pregancies and 2.5 million cases of sexually transmitted diseases occuring among teen-agers annually.

"We have a pending disaster and some people are still debating whether we should discuss condom use openly," said Dr. Gary R. Strokash, director of adolescent medicine at Rush Presbyterian St. Luke's Medical Center in Chicago.

"We're seeing more and more cases of adolescent AIDS and we're just not prepared," he said. "We've got to find a way to reach young people."

But teen-agers, who sometimes imagine themselves immortal, are known for ignoring adult admonitions. The list of oft-defied "no-no's" includes not only sex, but also drugs, smoking, drinking and driving under the influence.

"They just keep getting the stuff repeated to us — the same old stuff, over and over," said Jay Plummer, 18, who has learned about AIDS prevention as part of Western High's comprehensive program. "It just starts to get real tired."

Activists are aware of the numbing results of repetition, but they're not willing to let up. Education, many say, must instead go further to deal with compelling issues not yet regularly raised in classrooms or at home.

"We have to go beyond the plumbing, the technical stuff, and help people learn to evaluate their behavior and talk about their decisions," said Jacqueline D. Forrest, vice president of research at the Guttmacher Institute.

Saying hello

Mark McHugh, supervisor of animal training at Sea World of Texas, gets aquainted with Kaleena, a 5-year-old killer whale that arrived in San Antonio last week from Sea World facilities in San Diego. Kaleena was the first whale to be born in captivity at Sea World and takes the place of whale that recently died.

'Terminal captivity' kills dolphin, activist says

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. (AP) — The tourists probably never noticed when Pollyanna died at Ocean World — peacefully, say the park's operators.

But peace is the last thing anti-captivity activists want to give Ocean World, target of numerous protests and a federal investigation into alleged violations and animal abuses.

Activists claim the 25-year-old marine-theme attraction near downtown Fort Lauderdale has one of the worst track records among the 16 such attractions in Florida, which has about 40 percent of the nation's captive dolphins.

George Boucher, president of the theme park, hired a full-time veterinarian and announced plans to improve water quality and build a 575,000-gallon dolphin pool after the U.S. Department of Agriculture began its probe. He said the critics are out of line.

"The conditions here are better than good," Boucher said. "If I died and came back as a dolphin, I'd want to be right here at Ocean World."

Pollyanna, believed to be more than 45 years old, was captured near the Florida Keys in 1966. She spent the rest of her life confined in a space about the size of a backyard swimming pool.

Millions of park-goers have enjoyed seeing Pollyanna. She was fed regularly, had no fear of predators and died of old age, Boucher said. In the wild, scientists say, dolphins routinely live 20 years and some live more than 45 years.

"Pollyanna died of terminal captivity," said Russ Rector, a member of the anti-captivity Dolphin Project group and a former Ocean World trainer who cared for Pollyanna from 1968 to 1975. "That animal has been in the pool so long, she wasn't living. She was merely surviving."

Although scientists say dolphins routinely swim at depths of 100 to 150 feet, federal standards set in 1972 say only that tanks have to be at least six feet deep and 24 feet in diameter.

In December, the USDA said the petting pool failed even that standard and ordered it closed. But to avoid the stress of several moves, the USDA let the 3.5-acre park keep Pollyanna and another dolphin there until a new, 100-foot wide pool is built this summer.

"I think we all did our best under what authority we have," said Joseph Walker, USDA's supervisor for animal care in Tampa, adding that he didn't believe the small pool had anything to do with Pollyanna's death.

The USDA won't comment on its nine-month investigation. The USDA could revoke Ocean World's exhibition permit or fine it $2,500 a day for each violation. But Ocean World's owners don't expect any punishment.

"My clients don't really view themselves as being in an adversarial position with the department, both formally and informally," said J. Philip Landsman, an attorney for Ocean World.

Meanwhile, Ocean World is seeking an injunction against further protests by Dolphin Project. Pickets have harassed tourists, and Rector was hauled out by police after he came in wearing a T-shirt that showed a dolphin in a ball-and-chain, Landsman said.

Pollyanna was one of at least 12 dolphins to die at Ocean World since the National Marine Fisheries Service began requiring such records in 1973. Most of the others died of pneumonia, according to Ocean World. But Landsman praised the park's record.

"These animals represent a big investment. They're in the business of protecting them, not harming them," Landsman said.

Formation of sink holes may have doomed dinosaurs

By Keay Davidson
Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Something carved a monstrous hole in the ground on the Mexican coast millions of years ago — and in the process, it may have dug the dinosaurs' grave.

In recent years, scientists have suspected that 65 million years ago, a giant asteroid or comet fell onto the Yucatan, forming a crater more than 125 miles wide. The blast might have filled Earth's atmosphere with so much dust that the planet cooled. In turn, plants died off, along with the dinosaurs that nibbled them. That's the theory, anyway.

Now, the scientists have discovered the first evidence on Earth's surface that this cataclysm really happened. A ring of "sink holes" in the northwestern corner of the Yucatan exposes the largest known impact crater on Earth, they claim in the latest issue of Nature magazine.

The crater, dubbed the Cenote Ring, "cenote" being the local Spanish name for sink holes, is centered near the town of Chicxulub.

Previously, scientists had reported subterranean, not surface, evidence of the celestial fall, evidence in the form of odd patterns of magnetic and gravitational fields. Prior investigators also found quartz crystals, possibly formed by the impact of the asteroid or comet.

Charles Duller of NASA's Ames Research Center at Moffett Field found the ring formation while studying satellite images of the region. He had been looking for water sources that might have been used by inhabitants of ancient Mayan cities.

His colleagues were Kevin Pope, formerly of Ames, Calif., and now with Geo Eco Arc Research in La Canada, Los Angeles County, and Adriana Ocampo of the Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena, Calif.

"Hundreds of water-filled sink holes ... form an almost perfect semi-circle that marks the crater's buried rim," a NASA official said recently.

"The sink holes are found in clusters at some places along the rim and space up to a mile apart at others. They average 300 to 500 feet in diameter," the official said.

Pope explained how the sink wholes formed: "As the buried crater rim settles over millions of years, the rock on top slumps and cracks. Underground water flows through the cracks on its way to the ocean. As the water is forced around the unfractured rock in the center, the flow dissolves the limestone ... ."

The result, he said, is "cave-ins that create the sink holes."

He said the holes are a geological reminder of a catastrophe that — assuming it really happened — "would have had a devastating impact on the climate, animals and plant life of the Earth."

Sentencing to end 'flypaper' sting

■ Twelve people have been sentenced to prison.

By David Morris
Staff Writer

The last victim of Operation Flypaper, the reverse sting that targeted heroin users in east Midland nearly a year ago, is scheduled to be sentenced this week in 238th District Court.

Judge John Hyde is expected to assess 45-year-old Alexander Manuel's punishment on Wednesday.

The other 12 people convicted in connection with the Midland Police Department bust — which occurred in an alley in the 400 block of Lamesa Road last June — already have been sentenced to prison.

The sting was the first "street level" reverse heroin sting in Midland, Midland County Assistant District Attorney Robin Sams said Monday. In a reverse sting, undercover officers sell drugs to unsuspecting buyers and then arrest the buyers for drug possession.

Mainly because the district attorney's office and the police department planned the bust as a joint effort, Operation Flypaper turned out to be a prosecutor's dream, Ms. Sams said.

"We coordinated together on what we thought would be the most effective way to handle the evidence," she said.

Ms. Sams' account of the sting appears in this month's edition of the Texas Narcotics Officers Association's Narcotics Journal.

The article describes the sting as a three-step process: First, undercover officers spent two weeks making occasional drug buys in the Lamesa Road alley. About two weeks later, on June 20, police returned to arrest the dealers who'd been selling the dope. The final step was for an undercover officer — an Odessa Police Department narcotics detective "on loan" to Midland — to take over for the arrested dealers and begin selling heroin to users.

The buyers, recorded on videotape as they paid $18 to $20 for a dose of heroin, were arrested on the spot and then photographed at the scene.

Midland Police Department Lt. Jerry Morris said the operation was intended to shut down drug sales in the 400 block of Lamesa Road.

"Our problem with that particular place was that it's in close proximity to a school (DeZavala Elementary School, 705 N. Lee Street), and a lot of young children walk by that particular location," he said.

"We were pleased with the operation. It got some of the people who were dealing drugs in that neighborhood — some of these users are dealers as well."

Morris said Operation Flypaper was effective, but pointed out that undercover operations of all types are commonly used by the police department to nab drug buyers and sellers alike.

The buyers convicted in Operation Flypaper received sentences ranging from two to 50 years in

Vance James has returned to his home town of Odessa, having learned important lessons that he wants to share with West Texans through an eight-character play about AIDS, "Burned to White Ash."

Drama brings AIDS epidemic home

By Allen E. Howland
Assistant City Editor

ODESSA — As with wars since the times of the earliest Greek playwrights, the battle against AIDS has proven fertile ground for drama.

H. Vance James, a six-year veteran of AIDS volunteer work in Dallas come home to West Texas, hopes to tap the drama of storytelling to enlighten his friends and neighbors to the epidemic "in our midst."

Drawing on his personal experiences in the Oak Lawn Community Center's AIDS "buddy program" and on interviews with friends, family members and health care professionals, James has written the play, "Burned to White Ash."

More precisely a series of 33 vignettes, "Burned to White Ash" is James' way of "making AIDS personal for an audience.

"People have been bombarded by information and many are aware that AIDS is a social problem for all, but meeting a specific person has a much greater effect," said James, an Odessa native who graduated from Odessa High in 1974.

"Theater always has been a means of education," said the Teacher creates 'safe' environment

■ Midland Chamber of Commerce names educator Teacher of the Month.

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

Dear Chamber of Commerce:
Mr. Hickman is nice. He doesn't get mad at you if you crash a plane. He says, "Good landing!"
Trevor Wommack

Jack Hickman, Midland's resident "Mr. Wizard," has created a "safe" environment for youngsters to exercise their curiosity.

How comfortable children are in having a place to experiment — and even make mistakes — is best described in fourth grader Trevor Wommack's letter, a deciding factor in the chamber of commerce's decision to name Hickman teacher of the month.

But the teacher award is just one of many honors Hickman — a Christa McAuliffe fellowship recipient — has garnered during his teaching career.

Hickman funneled his McAuliffe award stipend into expanding the development of his Curiosity Shop at Trinity School.

The shop was built with a $26,000 federal grant he received in 1987. By February 1990, Hickman's shop received national attention when he and his shop were featured in "Instructor" magazine, an elementary school teachers publication.

"The Curiosity Shop is in transition now," he said. "It will soon be moved to give us more space."

"Moving the shop means we will have enough space in the Curiosity Shop to keep sawdust from flying into the art room and onto oil paintings," the science and art teacher said.

Hickman said his love for science has its roots in his father's workshop. "There was an era where dads worked out of shops. Now, some of my students get that experience with their grandfathers," he said.

The Trinity School teacher said he was always inquisitive about the mechanics of things and never hesitant to take things apart and attempt to put them back together.

"There was always that one part left, though," he said, and grinned.

Hickman sees his innate curiosity mirrored even in the "littlest of guys."

"The littlest of guys can be the most fun," he said. "They have a real sense of wonder about things. They are more alert and alive and when they don't understand how something works, it isn't a source of embarrassment like it is for older students."

The teacher said curiosity can be fueled into a source of entertainment for children and "keep them from sitting around watching T.V."

Curt Wilcott Reporter-Telegram

Jack Hickman, Trinity School teacher, explains the workings of a model airplane to fourth graders.

"Children are too dependent on being entertained," Hickman said. "Yet they have this wonderful curiosity about the way the world works and what's inside of things. They just need to be given the tools to develop it."

Hickman said the television generation also "doesn't realize that when something breaks — with the resources, knowledge and proper materials — you can repair it."

He said his goal is to establish an environment where children will feel free to drop in during the school day and work on a variety of projects.

Trevor's mother, Kathy Wommack, commended the environment Hickman has in place now. In her Teacher of the Month nomination letter, she wrote, "The role of a teacher is that of a catalyst in the learning process. His function is to excite the students to the point where they will seek to discover and learn on their own. Mr. Hickman is such a catalyst."

Hickman said everyone has the potential to learn from discovery.

"You don't have to be a nerd to have curious scientific interest about something," he said.

Sure enough, in Hickman's Curiosity Shop recently, youngsters of all ages sculpted clay, glued screws into an artistic collage and inspected oodles of gadgets including paper dolls — with strings of paper clips for arms and legs — dangling from wires.

"Those are electromagnetic dancing dolls," Hickman explained as he removed a model airplane's casing to show a cluster of fourth graders its inner workings.

"And say, did I tell you that we have a whole grocery bag full of wildflower seeds for our new garden?" Hickman asks, his blue eyes lighting up as he surveys a barren plot of land just waiting for some curious youngsters to take spades to it.

Club seeks people with breathing problems

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

People with breathing problems associated with asthma, stress, and lung diseases including emphysema, may sign up for the Midland Better Breathing Club (BBC) at 6:30 p.m. today at Physician and Surgeons Hospital.

The spirit behind the club is to help people with breathing problems to live their lives to the fullest, said Todd Mathis, P&S Hospital's cardiopulmonary department manager, who will lead the sessions.

When a person's breathing is inhibited or limited, and he is gasping for breath and reaching for his oxygen equipment, "so many of them think this is the end of the road," said Mathis.

He hopes the American Lung Association-sponsored sessions will show them that's not so.

The BBC is a self-help support group that will teach people "different ways to breathe to get the most efficiency out of the lungs' capacity," said Mathis.

In meetings on the first Tuesday of each month, sessions will deal with the factors that affect people and their lungs. Subjects will include breathing skills, managing stress, nutrition, allergies, pulmonary-function testing, medications, asthma, community resources, home care, vacation planning, travel tips, flu and colds, and loneliness and depression.

The sessions are designed to give people, particularly those with chronic lung diseases and asthma, more flexibility and freedom despite their lungs' condition.

"And this group will teach them to be more independent, to live more full lives, and help them get out of themselves — help them feel freer and to live a fuller life," said P&S President Bob Reid, who said he is "committed to wellness strategies."

People with breathing difficulties "often are afraid to even leave their home where they have oxygen" ready for immediate use, Reid said.

"It's frightening to have a lung disease or asthma," he said.

"You are frightened that you are not going to be able to breathe. You are afraid that you are going to be out somewhere and cannot breathe, and you are going to die."

The sessions will help people deal with their fears and apprehensions by teaching them "breathing techniques, how to relax in a crisis, and how to get more oxygen out of what breathing you are doing," Reid said.

The sessions are free, he added.

"Nobody has any hidden agenda to sell them anything."

Hale's attorney requests grand jury transcripts

■ Other motions filed Monday request that evidence not directly related to charges in the indictment be suppressed.

Staff Report

In a motion filed Monday in U.S. District Court, Bryan Allen Hale's attorney claimed that grand jury testimony in his client's case was "tainted," "prejudicial," and "highly inflammatory."

Hale, the former administrator of Glenwood Psychiatric Hospital, was arrested April 8 and subsequently indicted for receiving child pornography and sending obscene material through the mail.

Defense attorney Glen Aaron II claimed in Monday's motion that a U.S. Customs agent who testified before Midland's federal grand jury depicted Hale as a child molester.

The motion requests that Aaron be provided with transcripts of grand jury proceedings against Hale or that the grand jury's indictment of Hale be dismissed.

In other motions filed Monday, Aaron requested that evidence against Hale that is not directly related to charges in the indictment be suppressed.

Hale stands indicted for receiving a videotape entitled "Educating Valerie" that reportedly depicts a 10-year-old girl engaging in sexual activity with her father; for receiving excerpts of a magazine entitled "Lolita" that reportedly contains child pornography; and for allegedly sending obscene material — a book detailing Hale's sexual fantasies and exploits — through the mail.

The evidence Aaron wants suppressed includes computer disks, diaries and other videotapes seized during searches of Hale's 4415 Northcrest Drive apartment and Glenwood office.

Other motions filed Monday request that those searches be ruled invalid because the search warrants used to justify them were improper.

Federal trial for Hale, 47, tentatively has been set for July 16. He also faces burglary charges in Odessa.

If convicted on the Ector County charges, Hale could face up to 99 years or life in prison and up to a $10,000 fine.

Receiving child pornography carries a maximum punishment of 10 years in prison and a $250,000 fine. Sending obscene material through the mail carries a maximum penalty of five years and a $250,000 fine.

Hale is being held without bond at the Midland County Central Detention Facility.

LOCAL/AREA REPORTS

Wreck

Staff reports

One man remained in stable condition at Midland Memorial Hospital Monday following a one-car accident near Fairgrounds Road and Highway 80, according to the Department of Public Safety.

Pedro Puentes, 40, of Midland was injured about 2:07 a.m. when the 1978 Ford Bronco he was in with two other passengers, none who claimed to be driving, wrecked.

According to DPS, the vehicle, travelling south on Fairgrounds Road at a high rate of speed, attempted to pass another car, hit the railroad tracks and went airborne. It then went into a broadside skid, hitting a light pole.

Bank robbery

ODESSA — An Odessa bank was robbed of an undetermined amount of money by a man armed with a gun and a hoax bomb Monday morning, police and FBI officials said.

The robber apparently had been waiting outside the Am-West Savings bank, 4900 E. 42nd St., for an employee to open the bank.

When a female teller arrived at about 7:28 a.m., the man — wearing a ski mask and greenish jump suit — forced her at gunpoint to open the bank.

The teller then was forced to open the vault, from which the robber took money. He chained a device, which he described as a bomb, to the woman's wrist before fleeing.

Taking the teller's car keys, the robber escaped in her burnt-orange Chrevrolet hatch back, which was later discovered at an apartment complex at 42nd Street and Tanglewood Lane.

Police determined that the device was a hoax.

The robber was described as a white male in his mid-30s, about 6 feet tall, weighing about 165 pounds with dark brown or black hair.

Assault report

A 26-year-old woman reported to police that she was raped by an acquaintance about 1:30 a.m. Saturday at a residence in southeast Midland.

According to police reports, the woman said she was walking home when she stopped at the assailant's home to use the telephone.

The man, armed with a razor, sexually assaulted the woman.

The man was described as black, about 37 years old, 6 feet 1 inch tall and weighing about 175 pounds.

Robbery

Three men beat and robbed a 29-year-old man who was walking with a friend near Travis Avenue and Midkiff Road Saturday evening, police said.

Michael McAnally of Andrews was crossing a lot when three men, only described as black, called out and demanded money for allowing McAnally to pass.

After McAnally said he had no money, the three men beat him and took $60.

McAnally was transported to the hospital where he was treated for cuts and bruises to the head.

Boy enticed

A 5-year-old boy was the victim of an attempted sexual assault Sunday evening at a northwest apartment complex, police reported.

According to police reports, a man enticed the boy into a secluded area at the complex about 6:25 p.m.

The man attempted to remove the boy's clothes and have oral sex with him. At this point, the boy became upset, began crying and was released by the man.

The man was described as white, about 5 feet 8 inches tall with dark hair.

Boy inspires others after defeating cancer

By Lynn Bulmahn

WACO (AP) — When third-grader Leon Rodriguez was asked to come up with a description of himself using the letters of his first name, he immediately thought of the disease that once gripped him.

"L is for leukemia," it began. "E is for education," a top priority for the gifted and talented student, "O is for optimistic" and "N is for Never on time for school" because of his frequent trips to the doctor for blood tests or treatments when he was in the second grade.

Leon, now a bashful fourth-grader who is clear of cancer, read a letter about his experience during a seminar for children with cancer, held in April at Hillcrest Baptist Medical Center in Waco.

"It was scary most of the time," said Leon, who attended Cedar Ridge Elementary School but has since moved to McGregor with his family. "But I let the doctors do what they had to do."

The conference pointed out how families, schools and friends can help children cope with cancer — children who have it, and their siblings, friends and classmates.

Seminar attendance was light. Social worker Helen Harris said that may be because the subject is disturbing. "This is such a tough topic for us to think about at all," she said. "Unless we're actually dealing with a child with cancer, it's easier for us to look the other way."

Yet, knowing what to do can make the going easier for young patients.

His second-grade teacher, Ruby Lynn Gibson, recalled how the boy, one of her brightest students, suddenly could not perform routine schoolwork. His handwriting, once perfect, was so scrawled she knew something was wrong.

One day Ms. Gibson could not distinguish the labored letters Leon printed on a spelling test. She realized he could barely see and led him to the principal's office.

By then, Leon's eyes were bulging, Ms. Gibson said. Leon went to Hillcrest's emergency room and was treated at Hillcrest Children's Center before being transferred to the more specialized pediatric oncology unit at M.D. Anderson Cancer Center in Houston.

Theater cast members receive festival honors

Three members of the cast of Midland Community Theatre's "Home Fires" were honored in Ireland Sunday.

The original play was the United States' entry in the Dundalk International Theatre Festival, where Bobby Marshall was given an award of merit in the role of WWII airman Bill, and Pam Crawford and Patty Loftis received special recognition in the roles of Lilly and Jo, respectively.

The cast and crew also were asked to put on a cabaret performance of show tunes for celebrants at the festival.

Marshall, who now lives in San Antonio, was last seen at MCT in "Cabaret," co-starring with Ms. Crawford. He will be performing in "Man of La Mancha" and "Pirates of Penzance" at the Dallas Lyric Opera this summer.

Ms. Loftis is a member of MCT's board of directors and was last seen in "Pippin." Ms. Crawford was in "Les Miserables in Concert" at MCT before her lead role in "Cabaret."

Midlander Linda Thorsen Bond wrote "Home Fires," which was directed by Nancy Daugherty. It was first performed for the Arts Assembly of Midland at Gourmet Midland in February.

Jane Burgess, Jami Owen, Ken Dixon, Karen Weidmann, Steve Owen, Wanda Almon, Ted and Joan Noel, David Hunt and director Nancy Daugherty represented the United States at the festival.

Workshop to focus on behavior

Nichols

The Rev. Paul Nichols will present the workshop "Healing the Aloneness (Hurt) (Shame)" from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday.

The workshop will focus on healing compulsive, addictive or dysfunctional behavior.

"For the inner child to finish growing up and heal these inappropriate behaviors there must be a safe place," Nichols said. "This playshop will be a safe place to heal the inner hurt that binds us, to be able to hear our own inner voice and to empower ourselves for change — for spiritual transformation."

Reference material for the seminar will include "Homecoming" by John Bradshaw, "Healing Your Aloneness" by Chopich and Paul, and "Science of Mind" by Ernest Holmes.

Cost of the workshop is $25 per person. Drinks and snacks will be available.

AIDS: Volunteer writes about victims

first-time playwright, who hopes to continue that tradition.

James, who coordinates special events for the Permian Basin AIDS Coalition on a volunteer basis, is working toward a gala premiere performance of the play early this fall.

PBAC has applied for a grant to underwrite staging of the eight-player production. In the meantime, the group is planning a coffeehouse presentation of several vignettes, "to give people just a taste of the play," along with other readings and musical and variety preformances.

Details of the late June event are still being worked out, he said.

The play's structure of 33 personal sketches will make it flexible enough to be used as a teaching tool in a variety of settings, for church and civic groups as well as junior high and high school students.

"If we don't reach the generation currently in high school and junior high with AIDS education information, there just won't be a next generation to be affected," said James, who had taught business and speech communications in the Dallas Community College system since the early 1980s.

"The play may raise some eyebrows, just because we are doing it," he said of the work, which was edited by Carla Gray. "But the play itself is not controversial, it is built around a variety of compassionate characters.

"AIDS will not bypass West Texas because we don't talk about it."

James sees parallels between Midland-Odessa today and Dallas several years ago in the context of the AIDS epidemic, which passes its 10th anniversary this week. The relatively small number of people affected by the disease in West Texas, is reminiscent of Dallas in 1984-85.

In the years since he was first matched as a care-giving "buddy" to an AIDS patient in 1985, he has gained an education on several levels — about the disease and about himself.

"In dealing with the terminally ill, you have to draw a line at some point to take care of yourself; burnout is a problem" for volunteers and professionals, he explained.

Several poignant vignettes in his play came from the recollections of case workers, psychologists, nurses, doctors and other professionals who provided "some very, very powerful pieces," James said.

In penning the play, James has blended two of his main avocations: writing — he has published short stories, poetry and professional articles — and theater. James annually was involved in plays at the Globe Theater summers as a youngster and attended college on an International Thespian scholarship.

He traded the time-consuming theater life for speech communications when "I learned I got the same charge out of public speaking as acting."

Since his recent return to the Permian Basin for family reasons, James hasn't decided if he will resume his teaching career. "Right now I'm excited about being able to be used for volunteer service," with PBAC, he said.

Roughly 90 percent of all direct services to AIDS patients are provided by volunteers, a reflection of the low level of funding available for care, James said.

The Permian Basin coalition, which came into being only last fall, has even greater needs, typical for a new agency. Grant monies don't fill all the gaps, necessitating donations of both time and money to the fledgling organization.

James said grant monies are typically earmarked for patient care, leaving an agency like PBAC to cover rent, utilities and other overhead expenses from other donations.

state prison. All those receiving more than five years were repeat offenders.

Those convicted include: Julia Clifton, 28, five years; Warren Walker, age unavailable, 30 years; Tammy Booth, 23, two years; Joe Bradley, 33, seven years; James Sikes, 30, five years; Billy Salazar, 52, two years; Richard Johnson, 45, 50 years; Robert Lee O'Neal, 36, 50 years; and Herminio Carrasco, 33, 15 years.

O'Neal and Carrasco both opted for jury trials. Ms. Sams said that except for Johnson, who pleaded guilty and threw himself on the mercy of the court, the rest reached plea agreements with the district attorney's office.

Two others arrested for possession in the operation were not convicted.

Charges are still pending against Marvin Ray Walker, 29, who remains at large after jumping bail following his arrest. Another person arrested, 44-year-old James Posteal, was shot to death last Nov. 1.

No one has been arrested in connection with the shooting, which remains under investigation.

Meanwhile, three of the four alleged drug dealers arrested at the Lamesa location also have been convicted and sentenced.

Sentenced on heroin delivery charges were: Henry Sanchez, age unavailable, 15 years; Guadalupe Martinez, 42, 20 years; and Ernesto Carrasco, 39, 35 years. Charges against a fourth person arrested for selling drugs at the location were dismissed.

New DHS head takes over

AUSTIN (AP) — Burt Raiford, a 22-year employee at the Texas Department of Human Services, assumed his new duties as commissioner of the beleaguered agency.

"My goal as commissioner will be to provide stability this agency needs to continue serving people," Raiford said Monday.

Texas Tech plans two workshops

Staff Report

Texas Tech University in Lubbock will host two workshops on education issues.

The one-day workshop "Student Extremes: The Slow Learner and the Gifted and Talented" will be presented from 8:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday in Room 111 of the Tech Home Economics Building.

The workshop will focus on the learning styles of these students. Emphasis will be on effective teaching and counseling strategies for handling behavior.

The second workshop "Adolescents in Crises: Gangs, Guns, Ganos, Guardianship, Girl Parents" will be held from 8:15 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. July 20 in the Lubbock Plaza Hotel, 3201 S. Loop 289.

Workshop topics will focus on the psychosocial and physicological characteristics of adolescents in crisis; gang situations in public schools; legal procedures unique to at-risk adolescents and family counseling techniques.

The workshops are open to the public.

Advance registration is $59 per workshop or $110 for both workshops. Workshop fees include lunch. Registration at the door is $65 per workshop.

Participants may earn six hours of AAT, LPC, CEU and TAADAC credit.

To register or obtain more information call (806) 745-3300.

Prices stable

NEW YORK (AP) — Oil prices showed little change Monday in a market that seemed spooked by uncertainty a day before OPEC's summer meeting.

West Texas Intermediate for delivery in July settled at $21.13 per barrel, unchanged from Friday, at the New York Mercantile Exchange. Contracts for crude to be delivered later finished slightly lower.

Ministers of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries were to meet Tuesday in Vienna, Austria, to discuss how much oil the cartel will pump during the third quarter of 1991.

Analysts predicted OPEC will maintain current production quotas and ignore the politically sensitive issue of getting crude from Iraq and Kuwait back into the supply stream, since it appears unlikely they will be exporting much oil any time soon.

Natural gas futures were unchanged or slightly higher Monday, with contracts for delivery in July settling at $1.333 per 1,000 cubic feet, the same as Friday.

Supermarket

HOUSTON — First City, Texas has introduced full-service supermaket banking to consumers in El Pas, with branch offices in three Smith's supermarkets in the city.

The company inaugurated its supermarket banking program in late 1989 when it opened the first of five offices in Fiesta Mart supermarkets in the Houston area.

The Smith's locations, which will be open from 9 a.m. to 7 p.m. Monday through Friday and 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Saturdays, are staffed with trained qualified banking professions to assist customers with all their banking needs, including loans, CDs and IRAs as well as checking and savings accounts.

Dollar advances

NEW YORK (AP) — The dollar moved moderately higher Monday on expectations that U.S. interest rates would remain firm amid signs that the economy is recovering.

Gold prices also posted modest gains.

The British pound was little changed against the dollar. Sterling was unchanged at $1.6970 in New York.

The dollar rose to 139.15 Japanese yen in New York from late Friday's 138.30.

Other late dollar rates in New York, compared with late Friday's prices, included: 1.7485 German marks, up from 1.7430; 1.4900 Swiss francs, up from 1.4855; 5.9220 French francs, up from 5.9090; 1,294.00 Italian lire, up from 1,293.00.

OPEC enjoys calm after the storm

Members to have easy work when they gather today

By Anne Pearson
Hearst News Service

With U.S. oil prices cruising at a comfortable $21 to $22 a barrel and demand promising to rebound slightly in midsummer, OPEC members will have easy work when they gather Tuesday in Vienna.

The thorny tasks lie three to six months ahead, when Kuwait and Iraq are ready to resume some oil production and will ask their brethren in the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries to make room for them in the market.

"We're bullish on crude right now," said Ed Krapels, president of Washington-based Energy Security Analysis.

Krapels said the market can handle several hundred thousand more barrels of OPEC's oil in the third quarter — up to about 23 million barrels a day. Oil producers could then see prices jump $1.50 to $2 a barrel.

By the end of the year, Krapels says, oil supplies could even get a bit tight — tight enough to drive the price of U.S. crude as high as $25 a barrel if Iraq doesn't rush back into the export market.

Krapel is guessing the Saudis will have sold a lot of stored oil by the end of the third quarter.

"So there won't be much to play with by the end of the fourth quarter," he said. "The market should get pretty tight by the end of the year."

Ken Miller of Purvin & Gertz, a Houston consulting firm, is a little more reserved. OPEC probably can produce 23.5 million barrels a day in the fourth quarter, Miller said, but that should yield prices of only $21 to $23 for a barrel of U.S. crude.

Chevron Corp. economist Tom Burns agrees the fourth quarter will be strong but says the third quarter could get a little wobbly.

He notes that a few weeks ago, traders in the futures markets signaled they were skeptical that prices would remain strong in the third quarter. The oil futures market has gone into "contango," with the price of a contract for quickest delivery falling below that of contracts for delivery in later months. That usually signals that storage tanks are fairly full, and traders would like to sell crude sooner rather than later.

But the price difference between the nearest and furthest contract months is fairly narrow and suggests more of a flat market than a soft one, Burns said.

Moreover, demand is expected to pick up soon, as it does every summer. The OPEC Economic Commission Board estimates worldwide demand, excluding demand from communist countries, will grow by more than 1 million barrels of oil a day to 51.86 million barrels a day in the third quarter and to 53.34 million barrels in the fourth quarter.

The board expects demand for OPEC oil to reach 22.8 million barrels of oil a day in the third quarter and 23.7 million in the fourth.

Show displays next year's gadgetry

CHICAGO (AP) — A compact disc that navigates a driver through unfamiliar cities and a car radio that changes stations on voice command are among the high-tech gadgets manufacturers are hoping consumers can't live without.

For those who need information now, there is the electronic encylopedia, small enough to be held by hand. For those who don't want to leave their home unguarded, there is "Scoutabout," a robot that prowls the house in search of burglars.

Those items and much more are on display at the 1991 International Summer Consumer Electronics Show, which runs through today at McCormick Place.

About 55,000 people, mostly advertising representatives and potential buyers, are expected to attend the four-day show in which more than 1,000 companies are involved, said Electronic Industries Association spokeswoman Cynthia Upson.

'One of the things the industry does best is take large objects and transform them into small ones, things you can carry with you.'
spokeswoman Cynthia Upson

"What you see is electronics on the go," she said. "One of the things the industry does best is take large objects and transform them into small ones, things you can carry with you, use in your car."

Car-related items seem to be particularly popular this year.

There is the Travelpilot navigation system, designed to get a driver with a limited sense of direction from one point to another through the use of a compact disc, wheel-mounted sensors, a compass and maps.

The driver programs Travelpilot with his departure and destination points and then follows his progress on a map displayed on a 4½-inch dashboard-mounted screen.

"I think it's ideal for someone who's always getting lost, like me," said Ross Merel, owner of Slam Group Ltd., a Chicago company that sells audio equipment.

Survey finds positive trend in job market

WASHINGTON (NYT) — Recent graduates and other job seekers may soon find that jobs are not so scarce.

A survey of business hiring plans by Manpower Inc., the nation's largest temporary-employment agency, forecasts a notable upturn in the third quarter, which begins on July 1. Such a development is eagerly awaited by economists since a recovery cannot take hold as long as people are losing jobs and incomes.

"This is the first sign of a positive trend we've seen since the third quarter of 1989, when hiring projections began to slide," said Mitchell S. Fromstein, president of Manpower, based in Milwaukee, which conducted the survey.

The quarterly survey, published over the weekend, found that 22 percent of 15,000 businesses intended to expand their work forces during the summer while 10 percent planned to cut employment during the quarter, producing what Manpower called a net hiring strength factor of plus 12.

This is considerably ahead of the first two quarters of 1990, when the strength factors were the lowest since 1982, and exceeded the normal jump for this time of year.

When adjusted for seasonal variation, the latest figure of plus seven compares with plus one in the second quarter and represented what Manpower called the first trend reversal after nine straight quarters in which the strength factor either declined or remained unchanged.

Although employment itself is considered a coincident indicator of business conditions, shifting about the same time as the economy at large, the Manpower survey is regarded as a leading, or predictive, indicator since it deals with intentions. Fromstein said in an interview that these were usually carried out. "What was projected usually happens," he emphasized.

Another predictive labor market indicator, published each Thursday by the Labor Department, is the number of people who have filed initial claims for unemployment insurance. This series seems to have peaked in March, when claims soared above 500,000, well above the 450,000 level of recent weeks.

The government's monthly report on the labor market, covering May, is to be published Friday.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Banks decide on IRA withdrawal penalties

By Bill Doyle

Q. For the past several years, we have made annual contributions to our individual retirement accounts at a local bank. We were told there would be no penalty for withdrawals made after age 591/2. This was confirmed by the literature we received explaining the bank's rules and regulations on IRA deposits and withdrawals.

Recently, when we decided to move our IRAs out of that bank, we found this is not true. The woman who had repeatedly said there would be no penalty, emphatically told us we would be charged a 10 percent penalty if the certificates of deposit in our IRA had not reached their maturity dates. We are past 591/2.

May we have your comments on this? The public should be informed that false statements can be made.

A. You really fell into a trap. Technically, the banker did not lie. But the woman you dealt with and the bank's literature did lead you astray.

When you are 591/2 or older, most banks will not levy penalties on withdrawals from IRA CDs that have not matured. Note I wrote "most." Each bank sets its own early withdrawal penalty policy.

Typically, a bank waives the penalty on straight IRA CD withdrawals — meaning you remove money and walk out with check or currency in hand. Then you can put the money into an IRA elsewhere, without your previous bank being any the wiser.

Do that within 60 days and your money remains tax deferred in your new IRA. If you miss that deadline, you have to pay income tax on the money, plus a 10 percent Internal Revenue Service penalty. That's separate from a bank early withdrawal penalty.

However, if the bank from which you make the withdrawal knows you plan to put the money into another IRA at a different bank, it's very likely the bank will slap you with a penalty. Banks are allowed to do that.

In the hope you haven't made the move yet, here's a suggestion. Go to that bank and say you simply want to withdraw everything in your IRA.

Q. A couple of deposits we made in our bank account were never posted. We caught these mistakes when we received the bank auditor's report. What should we do?

A. Report those errors to the appropriate regulatory authority. If it's a national bank, one with the word "nation" in or the initials "N.A." after its name, write to the Office of Consumer Affairs, Comptroller of the Currency, 490 L'Enfant Plaza, S.W., Washington, D.C. 20219. If it's a state-chartered bank, contact regulators in your state capital. In either case, relate your problem to the Office of Consumer Affairs, Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., 550 17th Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20429.

Let's hope you kept your deposit slips as proof you put the money in your account. You really should have spotted the mistakes when you received your bank statements — long before the auditor's statement arrived.

Q. Many of us who reside in a 135-unit condominium for people 55 and older are thinking about purchasing bonds issued by large corporations operating in our area, all of which pay interest higher than is available on new CDs. I have enclosed clippings of advertisements about a number of such bonds.

But some brokerage firms seem reluctant to sell those bonds in "small" amounts, such as $10,000. Is there something wrong with switching money from matured CDs into high-interest bonds?

A. Not really, if the bonds have high ratings — triple-A, double-A or A — and if you folks realize the "market risk" involved. That means market prices of bonds fluctuate — going up when interest rates in general fall and down when interest rates rise. If you can afford to take that risk, fine. But most people in your age group can't.

The bonds in the clips you sent along all have long maturities, some as far out as 30 years. If, at some time before a bond matures, you need money, you would have to sell the bond in the open market. You might get more or less than you paid. The loss could be a great deal larger than a CD's early withdrawal penalty.

Brokers steering you away from those bonds might have your best interest at heart.

NEW YORK STOCK EXCHANGE

ANALYSIS

NEW YORK (AP) — A late round of buying pushed stock prices higher Monday, extending the rally that carried the market to a record high last week.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, up 113.59 points last week, rose another 7.83 to 3,035.33.

Advancing issues slightly outnumbered declines in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 808 up, 750 down and 508 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 173.99 million shares, down from 232.05 million in the previous session. Nationwide, consolidated volume in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 212.38 million shares.

On Friday the Dow Jones industrial average climbed 27.05 points to 3,027.50, surpassing the closing peak of 3,004.46 it reached on April 17.

Analysts said the hopes for economic recovery that spurred the market's advance last week were still in evidence.

A group of corporate purchasing executives helped keep the mood upbeat when it reported Monday morning that its index of business conditions rose sharply in May.

The National Association of Purchasing Managers' index remains at recession levels, but has risen for four consecutive months and now stands at its highest level since last August.

Still, brokers said an upturn in bond-market interest rates Monday was enough to slow down the market's advance.

Prices of long-term government bonds dropped about $7.50 for each $1,000 in face value, increasing their yields to the 8.34 percent-8.37 percent range.

Nintendo-Philips deal is slap at Sony Corp.

CHICAGO (NYT) — A day after Sony announced a deal with Nintendo to make electronic game players, Nintendo said it had struck a deal with Philips, one of Sony's principal rivals.

Nintendo Co. has evidently turned to Philips NV, the Dutch electronics giant, to try to maintain its domination of the $4.7 billion video game market after signing what is now viewed as an unfavorable deal with Sony Corp.

For consumers this means another confusing choice when the game players reach the market next year.

The two deals involve Nintendo, the leading maker of electronic games, with two of the world's largest consumer electronics companies. Sony and Philips compete in television sets, radios, video cassette recorders and cameras and compact disc players.

For all three companies, the stakes are large.

"The race has begun to see who is going to set the architecture for the home entertainment system for the second half of the 1990s," said Bing Gordon, senior vice president of marketing for Electronic Arts, a maker of software for video and computer games.

On Saturday, at the Consumer Electronics Show here, Nintendo created a stir when it said it was joining forces with Philips, which is based in the Netherlands, to develop the next generation of video games.

These would offer more complexity, better sound and rich graphics, taking advantage of the huge storage capacity of optical compact discs.

Philips will provide Nintendo with a device that attaches to its machines and plays compact discs containing games.

On Friday, Sony, of Japan, announced an arrangement with Nintendo under which Sony will introduce a machine called the Game Player that has two slots, one to play Nintendo's new game cartridges, the other for compact-disc games.

The Sony and Philips disc systems are not compatible.

Industry executives said Nintendo had linked up with Philips to negate the unfavorable impact of its arrangement with Sony. Under that deal, Sony has the right to sell and profit from the game discs. Nintendo, however, is disputing how broad that right is and the companies are expected to negotiate.

Sunday, Howard C. Lincoln, senior vice president of Nintendo of America, said rather that Nintendo had decided to work with Philips for technical reasons.

"Our engineers reached the conclusion that from a technical standpoint that it was better for Nintendo to work with Philips," he added.

Asked if the Philips agreement was more favorable to Nintendo then the deal with Sony, Lincoln said, "I would rather not comment on that or try to compare the two."

The Philips announcement and the ensuing confusion over Nintendo's relationship with Sony upstaged Nintendo's long-planned introduction Saturday of a more powerful version of its popular video game system. Basically Nintendo's new system is combined with a compact disc player.

Sony, which has supplied computer chips to Nintendo for several years, will makes its Game Player under license from Nintendo. But Nintendo and Sony are locked in a dispute over which company controls the rights to profit from games designed for the machine. In the past, Nintendo maintained strict control over the right to make game cartridges, which provide the bulk of its revenues and profits.

"The key to the video game industry is software, not the hardware," said Lincoln of Nintendo.

But Sony asserts that it alone controls the rights to profit from software made for the compact disc component of its Play Station.

"There is a dispute between Sony and Nintendo as to the terms of the agreement," Lincoln said. He declined to elaborate.

Olaf Olaffson, president of Sony Electronic Publishing, said, "We view this as a very serious matter." He added that it was not clear whether Nintendo violated its contract with Sony by entering into an agreement with Philips.

Industry executives said they were surprised that Nintendo had apparently ceded the right to profit from software on games sold on the Sony compact disc machines.

Nintendo has maintained such tight control over the distribution of games for its original machines that in 1988 it was sued by Tengen Inc., a game maker, which asserted that Nintendo unfairly monopolized the video game market in the United State.

Nintendo has countersued, and the case is pending in a federal court in California.

In its deal with Philips, Nintendo kept the right to buy compact disc players from a company other than Philips. One clear benefit to Philips is that the games designed for the system, which will carry Nintendo's name, could be played on the new Philips interactive compact disc player.

U.S. housing affordability slips in April

WASHINGTON (AP) — The typical American family's ability to buy an existing home slipped in April because of a substantial increase in prices, a real estate trade group reported on Monday.

The National Association of Realtors said its Housing Affordability Index dipped 1.9 percentage point to 111.4 following a $2,000 jump in the median price of a home.

The index means that a family earning the median income, of $36,057 had 111.4 percent of the income needed to qualify for conventional financing covering 80 percent of a home with the median price of $100,200.

The median means half of the incomes totaled more and half less, or that half of the homes cost more and half less.

Still, the Realtors said the index shows that home ownership remained affordable for the typical family. Indeed, a family earning $36,057 could purchase a home priced at $111,600 because its income exceeded the qualifying income for a median priced home.

Harley E. Rouda, the Realtors president, said price boost was "a natural occurrence with the onset of the spring home-buying season."

He noted a 3.4 percent gain in sales of existing homes in April and said buyers were taking advantage of mortgage interest rates averaging about 9.5 percent and an above-100 reading of the affordability index.

Rouda also said activity in the lower-price ranges has dominated many markets.

Company wins award to design pocket-sized computer for foot soldiers

HOUSTON (AP) — Foot soldiers entering future battlefields may be carrying computers the size of cigarette packs that could pinpoint the locations of enemy troops and weapons systems.

The Army has awarded Texas MicroSystems Inc. a $50,000 contract to study what it would take to produce the small, high-speed computer. The study, expected to be completed this fall, could lead to a $500,000 contract to develop a prototype.

"The superiority of high-tech systems was demonstrated vividly by the overwhelming success of U.S. forces in the Persian Gulf war," said Michael Stewart, Texas MicroSystems' president. "But the average foot solider still goes into battle with relatively low-tech weaponry."

The one-pound computer, which could be available as early as 1995, would have some of the advanced communications and graphics capabilities found in fighter aircraft, tanks and other sophisticated weapons systems.

High-tech weaponry became the hallmark of the U.S.-led forces in the Gulf War where forward units used simple desktop and laptop computers to help plan missions.

In addition, the military used new hand-held devices capable of picking up signals from a launched satellite network. By timing the signals from three or more satellites, the devices could pinpoint locations to within about 30 feet.

The small computers Texas MicroSystems wants to develop could include a pocket-size, battery-operated processing unit; a radio capable of transmitting voice and data messages; a 'heads-up' display that could be mounted to a helmet or worn like glasses to project an image; a microphone for voice messaging; a hand held device that could work like a computer mouse; and an integrated system allowing soldiers to pinpoint their exact location.

The computers would allow soldiers to send and receive messages through a wireless network between squad members and other command posts. Soldiers also would have voice-controlled access to remote data bases.

Besides modernizing the battlefield for the average foot soldier, the computer also could have many commercial uses, company officials said.

"Just as important are the wide number of commercial applications for this machine," Stewart said. "Depending on the job, the Soldier's Computer could become 'The Automobile Mechanic's Computer,' 'The Policeman's PC,' or 'The Emergency Medical Technician's Computer.'"

Texas MicroSystems of Houston is a manufacturer of "mission-critical" and industrial microcomputers designed for harsh computing environments. The company has more than 100 employees and had revenues of $31 million last year.

Housing fairs part of government sales campaign

DUNCANVILLE (AP) — Like car dealers at the end of a model year, the government this month is dealing hard on hundreds of homes it obtained from failed savings and loans.

The Resolution Trust Corp. has stepped up its fairs, auctions and advertising to sell 2,800 homes in its affordable housing program by the end of June.

After concentrating on the metropolitan areas, the RTC is expanding into smaller communities, including Midland, Abilene, Bryan and Longview. The RTC will hold an auction in Midland June 24 at 7 p.m. at the Midland Hilton, auctioning off 94 properties under $100,000.

The auction will be conducted by Kennedy-Wilson of Santa Monica, Calif. Interested bidders can get details on auction procedures and property catalogues through the company's information office by calling its toll-free number, 1-800-522-6664.

"We have a goal by June 30 to sell all the assets we can under $100,000 in value," said RTC spokeswoman Teresa McUsic.

Agency director William Seidman set the goal earlier this year for the properties, which are among the RTC's most difficult assets to sell and most costly to hold.

'We have a goal by June 30 to sell all the assets we can under $100,000 in value.'

RTC spokeswoman Teresa McUsic

Newspaper and radio ads that proclaimed "If you're paying $250 a month or more in rent, the RTC wants to help you own your own home" lured 2,000 potential homebuyers to a housing fair at a motel in this Dallas suburb Saturday.

Thousands more attended similar fairs in Austin, Houston and San Antonio. They were given lists of available homes and advice from agency officials, mortgage brokers and credit specialists.

In Duncanville, a vast majority signed up to participate in the program.

"If we find a house that fits our budget and our needs, we certainly would go forward," said Dan Goodwin of Grand Prairie, who, with his wife Nerae, has been in the home market for several weeks.

"They seem to be very intent on learning. They've got their antennas all the way out," Mark Wassenich, affordable housing specialist for the agency's North Texas office, said of the crowd.

The RTC's affordable housing program requires purchasers to live in the homes they buy, discouraging big-money investors, and will not accept buyers whose income exceeds 115 percent of the area's median income.

In Dallas, that means a single person who earns less than $35,300 a year qualifies. A family of four with income below $50,450 qualifies. To qualify in El Paso, which has the lowest median income of Texas' big cities, a single person's maximum income is $21,900 while a four-member family's is $31,250.

Construction spending grows 0.8 percent in April

WASHINGTON (AP) — Construction spending grew 0.8 percent in April, the government said Monday in a report that contained new evidence the housing industry has seen the worst of its hard times.

But government spending, which represents more than 25 percent of all construction projects, fell for the second straight month as the recession trimmed tax receipts and boosted federal and state budget deficits.

Overall, the Commerce Department said residential, non-residential and government spending totaled a seasonally adjusted annual rate of $392.6 billion, up from $389.3 billion in March. It was just the second advance in a year.

The report also said March outlays, originally estimated to have slumped 1.5 percent, fell 2.1 percent.

And although the April increase was the largest since a 2.2 percent gain in February 1990, spending in April was down 11.7 percent from the same month in 1990.

"We have a very deep hole to pull ourselves out of," said Daryl Delano of Cahners Economics in Newton, Mass. "The numbers are encouraging, but we have to look at the April '90 figures and all of the ground we've lost since then."

Residential spending fell 0.5 percent in April, to a $153.4 billion annual rate. It was the twelfth consecutive drop, including a 0.4 percent decline in March.

Still, spending on single-family homes rose 1.2 percent, to $86.3 billion at an annual rate, after sliding 3.1 percent a month earlier. Both new home sales and housing starts have risen for three straight months, signalling continued advances in this sector.

"In the single-family area, we saw the bottom in January," said economist Martin Regalia.

Texas takes Gil

NEW YORK (AP) — The Texas Rangers used their first pick in baseball's amateur draft Monday to take shortstop-pitcher Benji Gil from Castle Park High in Chula Vista, Calif.

Gil has a strong arm and good range, and the Rangers were one of few teams that wanted him as a shortstop. Gil also plays the outfield.

Gil was projected as the top choice of the Rangers, who picked 19th.

The New York Yankees used the No. 1 overall pick to take Brien Taylor, a hard-throwing 19-year-old lefthander from Beaufort, N.C. Taylor became the first high school pitcher selected No. 1 since Texas chose David Clyde in 1973.

Only the first-round selections were announced. The remainder of the draft will be announced June 12 to prevent colleges from using the draft list as a basis for offering scholarships.

NJCAA golf tags Flippen for Hall

By Bill Price
Staff Writer

For Paris Junior College golf coach Mickey Flippen, it was a bit of a homecoming.

Flippen was one four inductees to the National Junior College Athletic Association's Golf Hall of Fame in Monday night's banquet at the Chaparral Center, and was back in the city where he lived for five years.

Flippen

"Being inducted in Midland, Texas, feels just like doing it at home," said Flippen, who was an assistant football coach at Midland High from 1967 through 1971.

"I came here in the fall of '67 when Tugboat Jones took over as athletic director. It was a grand time and we won some football games, but I had an opportunity to become a head football coach back east. I went to that job, but two weeks later I took the golf job at Paris Junior College and have been there ever since," he said.

The banquet honoring Flippen, P.D. Highsmith, Floyd Horgen, Gene Sauers and Buddy Alexander served as the official kickoff to the NJCAA national golf tournament that begins today at Green Tree Country Club and the Club at Mission Dorado.

While Flippen, Highsmith and Horgen were present to be recognized for the coaching successes, Sauers and Alexander were honored in absentia for their days as JUCO golfers. Sauers was unable to attend because he is a current touring professional, while Alexander was coaching his University of Florida team at the NCAA Division I golf tournament.

Flippen's list of accomplishments as a coach in golf, where he says he "no longer has to sweat the fourth-and-ones, but the four-inch putts," all came at Paris.

In his 17 years there, his teams have won 115 tournaments, produced 30 all-conference players and 14 All-Americans. Flippen-coached Paris teams have been to 11 national tournaments, with a third-place being their top finish.

Highsmith, coach at Lincoln Trail, Ill., for 21 years, has been the junior college coach of the year five times and has

The Midland Angels return home to meet the San Antonio Missions tonight at Angels Stadium after a 7-3 road trip. Here Jackson's Trent Hubbard tags out Midland's Kevin Flora in a game played on the Angels' last homestand, which also produced a 7-3 record.

The Angels are back

■ After two weeks on the road, the Midland Angels begin a 12-game homestand tonight, but it may be without Fernandomania.

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

The good news is that the Midland Angels are back in town for their longest homestand of the year, beginning tonight.

The bad news is that the return home may be without Fernandomania.

Fernando Valenzuela, who is seeking his return to the major leagues with the California Angels, pitched two victories and 12 innings of shutout ball on the Angels' just completed road trip to Jackson, Miss., and Little Rock, Ark.

A decision is to be made today on whether Valenzuela will make a fourth minor league start before landing back in the big time or return immediately to California.

Monty Hoppel, Midland Angel general manager, isn't too optimistic about having Valenzuela take another turn in the pitching rotation in Midland, even though his eyes gleam at the thought.

"They still haven't made a firm decision on whether Fernando will take a fourth start in the minors or not. He has not been cut from our roster as of yet," Hoppel says, "but there is speculation that California will be offering him a contract Tuesday. They are to let me know tomorrow (Tuesday) morning."

Valenzuela drew over 18,000 fans in his two starts away from Midland.

"That's pretty awesome, and we would like nothing better than to have the opportunity to have Fernando pitch in Midland," Hoppel said.

It seems only fitting that Valenzuela would complete his comeback in Midland. After all, it was from Midland that he made his first jump to the major leagues and the Los Angeles Dodgers in 1980.

Valenzuela was then pitching with the San Antonio Missions and defeated the Midland Cubs by a 2-0 score when called to Los Angeles. Ironically, Valenzuela would be facing the Missions if he were to stay for another start.

But whether or not Valenzuela is with the club, the M-Angels are red hot. They followed the last 7-3 homestand with an identical 7-3 road trip for a 14-6 record in the last month of play. It marked the first time this year that the Angels had a winning homestand and a winning road trip.

Things started turning around for the Angels just about the time Don Vidmar joined the club from Palm Springs. Vidmar has won all four of his starts over that period, and is the hottest thing in the Texas League right now. Vidmar will pitch either tonight or Wednesday.

Mark Howie still continues to hit around a .360 clip for the Angels' offense.

New Expos manager Tom Runnells ...replaces the fired Buck Rodgers

Expos fire Rodgers, give call to Runnells

MONTREAL (AP) — Buck Rodgers' phone rang at 6:30 a.m. and Dave Dombrowski made it short and sweet.

"He said, 'We've decided to make a change and we have to let you go,' " Rodgers said Monday after he was fired as manager of the Montreal Expos.

"I said, 'OK, that's fine,' and I hung up and went back to sleep."

The seven-year reign of Rodgers, the most successful manager in Expos history, ended when Dombrowski, the team's general manager, replaced him with Tom Runnells. The 52-year-old Rodgers was in the final year of a contract that will pay him about $500,000. His record with the Expos was 520-499.

But victories were hard to come by this season. When Rodgers was fired, the Expos had lost 10 of their last 11 games and dropped to 20-29 — last in the NL East and 13 games behind first-place Pittsburgh.

Rodgers was the fifth manager fired this season and the third in the NL East. In April, Philadelphia fired Nick Leyva and on consecutive days late last month, the Cubs fired Don Zimmer, the Royals canned John Wathan and the Orioles dropped Frank Robinson. Al five teams were in last place at the time of the firings.

Dombrowski decided Saturday night to replace Rodgers and offered the job to third-base coach Runnells on Sunday. Dombrowski said the main reason for the move was because "I want to get the focus back where it should be, which is winning ballgames. I didn't see us going into Houston and Atlanta this week playing with a spark."

The 36-year-old Runnells, now the youngest manager in the majors, joined the Expos last season after guiding Class AAA Indianapolis to a title. Runnells signed a contract through the 1992 season.

"I think he'll have a total commitment to build a championship team," Dombrowski said. "I think you'll see that he has a burning desire to

Edberg swings into quarterfinals

■ Stefan Edberg continues to dominate the French Open, tightening his grip on that No. 1 tennis ranking.

PARIS (AP) — It was just another day at the office for Stefan Edberg — a lopsided victory, a place in the French Open quarterfinals and a tightening of his grip on the No. 1 ranking.

But, as usual, nothing to brag about.

Edberg, to whom pretention is as ugly as a double fault, calmly overcame a slow start to defeat Andrei Cherkasov 7-6, 6-4, 6-3 on a wind-swept center court Monday.

The top-seeded Swede, who reached the quarterfinals at Roland Garros for only the third time in eight attempts, will face ninth seeded Jim Courier in the next round. Courier eased past practice partner and friend Todd Martin in straight sets 6-2, 6-3, 6-3.

Also reaching the final eight were 12th seeded Michael Stich of Germany and unseeded Franco Davin of Argentina.

Edberg, a serve-and-volleyer who has never been comfortable on clay, now has lost only one set in four victories — a tie-breaker to Horst Skoff in the second round.

"I feel in this tournament I am playing the same way I played back in 1989, when I got to the final," he said. "I feel comfortable at the moment playing on clay."

Edberg became the world's top-ranked player last August and has held it for all but three weeks since. Boris Becker captured the top spot with his Australian Open title in January, but Edberg quickly took it back.

Unlike Becker, who tossed his racket into the stands and fled the court to jog by himself in an adjacent park when he captured the No. 1 ranking, Edberg did little celebrating when he dethroned Ivan Lendl last summer.

Though he has won $9.2 million and four Grand Slam titles, Edberg has never sought the special treatment that other top players demand. He is easy-going and uncontroversial, not the kind of guy who wears hot pink outfits on court.

"I think ordinary people are much more happy than the jet-set and celebrity people," he said. "My parents, whom I respect as my greatest friends, taught me early that happiness is often a modest thing. It has nothing to do with money or fame."

Stefan Edberg

Edberg is a tabloid newspaper's nightmare. Badgered by British journalists after his Wimbledon victory last year about whether he would marry longtime girlfriend Annette Olsen, he calmly replied, "Perhaps. Perhaps not."

Edberg trailed 5-2 in the first set of his victory over Cherkasov, who ousted serve-and-volleyers John McEnroe and Pat Cash in the opening two rounds. The top seed fought off a set point, then won a 7-4 tie-breaker to take control.

Courier needed less than two hours to beat Martin, a qualifier ranked 243rd. Though he overwhelmed his American compatriot, it was a good-natured match between friends.

A's, Chisox split series

Associated Press

CHICAGO — No one in the new Comiskey Park was very surprised that old friend Harold Baines beat the Chicago White Sox with a home run.

Baines broke out of a slump with four hits against his former team, including a three-run homer, as the Oakland Athletics beat the White Sox 5-3 Monday night.

"How many fans were out there tonight," Oakland manager Tony La Russa asked. Told, a crowd of 36,341 saw the game, La Russa said, "I guarantee it, 36,000 have seen him do it many, many times."

The Athletics and White Sox split a four-game series, which included a bench-clearing brawl on Saturday when A's catcher Terry Steinbach was hit in the head by a Bobby Thigpen pitch.

Two months does not make a season said La Russa, "but I hope I can be in first come September. That's what we're shooting for."

Joe Slusarski (2-2) won for the first time since April 11, allowing two runs and three hits in six innings. Joe Klink pitched two innings and Dennis Eckersley finished for his 15th save.

Blue Jays 5, Yankees 3

NEW YORK — Joe Carter hit his third home run in three days in a two-run fifth inning to lead Toronto and Jimmy Key past New York.

The game was stopped with the Blue Jays batting in the top of the sixth and play didn't resume for 2 hours, 8 minutes.

Carter opened the fifth inning with his ninth homer, snapping a 3-3 tie, after the Blue Jays had erased a 3-1 deficit with two runs in the fourth inning off Tim Leary (3-5).

Key (8-2) became the American League's third eight-game winner despite allowing eight hits and a walk in five innings. Mike Timlin worked three hitless innings.

AL Roundup

Indians 2, Tigers 0

CLEVELAND — Charles Nagy pitched seven strong innings and Beau Allred drew a bases-loaded walk from Walt Terrell in the sixth as Cleveland beat Detroit to complete a four-game sweep.

It was Cleveland's first four-game sweep of the Tigers since June 1977. The Tigers have lost six straight, all on the road. They are 1-12 in their last 13 road games.

Nagy (2-5) got his first win since April 22, gave up eight hits, striking out six and walking one. Shawn Hillegas pitched two innings for his fourth save, allowing one hit.

Terrell (2-6) was not seriously threatened until the sixth inning, when the Indians loaded the bases on a fielder's choice, Chris James' single and a two-out walk to Carlos Baerga. Allred then walked on a 3-2 pitch, forcing home the go-ahead run.

Cleveland added a run in the seventh on a double by Joel Skinner, a sacrifice bunt and Alex Cole's two-out RBI single.

The Tigers wasted two early scoring opportunities, stranding runners at third base in the first and third innings.

The Indians didn't have a baserunner until Cole led off the fourth with a single, and they didn't get a runner past first until Allred singled and went to third on Skinner's two-out single in the fifth.

Twins 3, Orioles 2

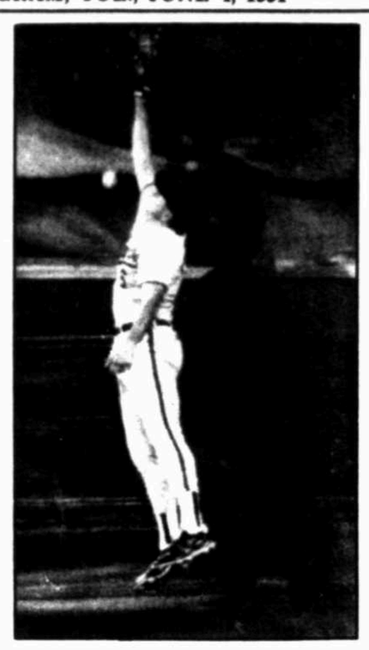
MINNEAPOLIS — Jack Morris gave up two runs in eight-plus innings and Kent Hrbek snapped a scoreless tie with a fourth-inning homer as Minnesota won for the sixth time in seven games.

After an 0-3 start, Morris has improved to 6-5 — his first winning record since he was 2-1 on April 18, 1990. The 36-year-old right-hander, who left Detroit via free agency during the offseason, gave up seven hits, walked one and struck out five before Rick Aguilera got the last three outs for his 12th save.

Cal Ripken led off the ninth with a single off Morris and Sam Horn delivered an RBI double off Aguilera.

Jeff Robinson (3-5) allowed eight hits in 4⅔ innings for Baltimore, which lost for just the second time in seven games. He is 0-3 with a 9.22 ERA in road games.

With one out in the fourth, Hrbek complained after umpire Greg Kosc called a strike. Hrbek sent Robinson's next pitch 444 feet into the right-field upper deck for his fifth homer.



AP Laserphoto

Orioles' Joe Orsalak ...he tried and missed

After Greg Gagne scored all the way from first on Kirby Puckett's hit-and-run single in the fifth, Hrbek followed with an RBI double to make it 3-0.

Hrbek has a six-game hitting streak and has 33 hits in his last 113 at-bats to raise his average from a season-low .122 to .247.

Morris' bid for his first Minnesota shutout — and the 25th of his career — ended in the sixth, when he walked Tim Hulett with two outs and Cal Ripken followed with an RBI double.

Minnesota is 24-16 since a 2-9 start.

Under Horgen, Brevard has claimed six national championships, two second-place finishes and three thirds while sending players such as Paul Azinger on to bigger and better things.

Sauers played at Alexander City Community College (now Central Alabama) in 1981-82 and was a two-time All-American. After two years at Georgia Southern, Sauers moved to the PGA Tour, where he has won two titles.

Alexander played at St. Petersburg (Fla.) Junior College in 1971-72, and was later an All-American at Florida State. After stints as assistant then head coach at Georgia Southern, Alexander took the head golf job at Louisiana State and was named Southeastern Conference coach of the year in 1986. Following a hiatus from coaching, he took the Florida job, where his Gators placed second in the nation a year ago.

NOTE — In Monday's East vs. West practice round, Paul Manko of Bossier Parrish, La., and amateur partner Rick Gasser won at Green Tree, while Midland College's Steve Armstrong and amateur Chuck Kuehn were second. At Mission Dorado Jamie Freel of Laramie County Junior College won and MC's J.C. Hernandez was second.

Greyhound investors buy land

HOUSTON (AP) — Investors in La Marque's first dog racing track have purchased two properties totaling more than 90 acres for the $40 million Gulf Greyhound Park.

Gulf Greyhound Partners Ltd. on Monday announced it had completed two transactions to acquire 90.3 acres and exercised an option on a third 20-acre parcel to allow for additional parking. The third transaction is expected to be completed next week.

The group plans a June 13 ground breaking for the track to be a block off Interstate 45 at the intersections of Farm to Market roads 2004 and 1764 in La Marque, about 40 miles southeast of Houston.

The track is expected to open in June 1992 and provide 1,400 permanent jobs, Gulf Greyhound Partners said.

Gulf Greyhound Partners Ltd. includes 14 Texas partners with the general partner, Texas Pari-Mutuel Management Inc., developing the facility. Paul W. Bryant Jr., one of the nation's leading developers in greyhound racing facilities, is president of Texas Pari-Mutuel Management Inc.

Yankees tag Brien Taylor as baseball's No. 1

■ New York takes youth over experience in baseball's amateur draft.

NEW YORK (AP) — The New York Yankees went for youth over experience Monday, making 19-year-old Brien Taylor of Beaufort, N.C., the top pick in baseball's amateur draft.

New York had considered taking Arizona State outfielder Mike Kelly, who went to Atlanta on the second pick. Instead, they made Taylor the first high school pitcher to go No. 1 since the Texas Rangers took David Clyde in 1973.

Taylor was in a final exam at East Carteret High School when the Yankees took him during a conference call of the 26 clubs.

"When I came out of the classroom, I knew something was going on," Taylor said. "My parents were there and they were smiling, so I knew something right then. I knew it was real good news."

TAYLOR IS 8-2 this season with an 0.86 ERA. He has allowed 18 hits in 84 innings, walking 24 and striking out 203. He also pitched consecutive no-hitters.

"Eveyrbody dreams of playing for the New York Yankees," said Taylor, who was wearing a Yankees cap. "It's real special to be a part of the New York Yankees. It's been a tradition as a winning team. Recently, that hasn't been the case, but you know in the past they were."

East Carteret coach Gary Chadwick said he knew by last fall that Taylor would be the first or second pick.

"He has good stamina. He was clocked in the mid-90s at one time in the seventh inning," Chadwick said. "Not just one game, but just about every game he's pitched. His curveball has a lot of work to be done on it. So does his change."

It was the first No. 1 overall pick for the Yankees since they selected Ron Blomberg in 1967. General manager Gene Michael saw Taylor pitch twice before making the final decision.

"Brien is a special athlete and young man," said Brian Sabaen, the Yankees vice-president of player development and scouting. "Being a hard-throwing left-handed pitcher makes this selection even more exciting. We are sure that Brien and the Yankees will have a long and successful relationship."

Taylor was the third pitcher taken No. 1 in the last four years. San Diego selected Andy Benes in 1988 and Baltimore took Ben McDonald in 1989.

KELLY, 21, batted .373 with 15 home runs, 56 RBIs and 23 stolen bases in 62 games as a junior for the Sun Devils. He was Baseball America's player of the year in 1990 when he hit .376 with 21 home runs, 82 RBIs and 20 stolen bases in 68 games.

"We've always leaned toward high school kids," said Chuck LaMar, the Braves' director of scouting and player development. "However, this is a unique individual. Mike is still improving. Usually in college, what you see is what you get. But in Mike Kelly's case, he's a collegiate player who has not reached his potential."

California used the 17th pick for Florida State first baseman Eduardo Perez, the son of former major leaguer Tony Perez.

Perez, 21, hit .377 with 11 homers, 58 RBIs and 30 steals. The Angels plan on making him an outfielder.

"As long as I play, I really don't care," Perez said. "I moved to first base just so I could play. I'm just a player who likes to play. I'm out there to have fun and whatever happens, happens."

Perez said he spoke with his father after learning he had been drafted by the Angels.

"He was pumped up, too," the younger Perez said. "He was real happy for me. When he gets happy, he gets real quiet, so he's real happy."

Minnesota, picking third, took Stanford first baseman David McCarty, who hit .420 this season with 24 homers and 66 RBIs. He was selected as Baseball America's player of the year this season.

"McCarty has good athletic ability and is one of the best hitters I've seen this year," Twins scouting director Terry Ryan said. "He is a smart ballplayer who will give full effort every game."

There were 14 college players taken on the first round and 11 pitchers. It also was the last 26-team draft; the two National League expansion franchises will participate next year.

St. Louis, which had three first-round picks, used the fourth choice for Dmitri Young, a 17-year-old shortstop-outfielder from Rio Mesa High School in Oxnard, Calif. Young, considered the best high school hitter in the draft, batted .425 with 11 homers and 31 RBIs.

MILWAUKEE THEN took Kenny Henderson, an 18-year-old from Ringgold High School in Ringgold, Ga. The 6-foot-7 right-hander was 10-1 this season with an 0.13 ERA and 128 strikeouts in 55 innings.

Houston took Florida right-hander John Burke, who was 7-4 with 2.33 ERA and 131 strikeouts in 85 innings. Kansas City picked Alabama first baseman Joe Vitiello, who batted .402 with 15 homers and 66 RBIs.

San Diego took Georgia Southern right-hander Joey Hamilton, who was 12-6 with a 3.85 ERA and 125 strikeouts in 131 innings, and Baltimore took Mark Smith, an outfielder from Southern Cal who hit .338 with 15 homers and 75 RBIs.

Philadelphia used the 10th pick to take Tyler Green, a 6-5 right-hander from Wichita State who was 10-1 this season with a 4.66 ERA and 110 strikeouts in 97 innings.

SWC presidents nix Tulane expansion bid

DALLAS (AP) — Southwest Conference presidents voted Monday against expansion, but left open the possibility of eventually adding Tulane to the 77-year-old league.

The SWC had been looking at the Green Wave as a possible ninth member to replace Arkansas, which becomes a member of the Southeastern Conference after the 1991 football season.

"The Southwest Conference has decided that it will not pursue the addition of any institutions to the conference at this time," said A. Kenneth Pye, president of Southern Methodist University and new chairman of the SWC presidents council.

"What that means in practical terms is that Tulane will not be added to this conference ... nor will merger considerations be continued at this time," Pye said.

He said the conference will continue to pursue "creative scheduling arrangements with the Big Eight, Big East or with other universities."

Pye said the presidents felt it was more important to deal with issues confronting the SWC, such as the need for greater attendance at athletic events and general upgrades of programs.

To that end, Pye announced that the presidents had agreed to a budget to create a new position of director of men's and women's basketball operations. The job would consist of marketing the SWC tournament and television as well as supervising the league's officials.

Pye said a search for that person, who would hold the title of assistant conference commissioner, would begin by the end of the month.

"I think it was the general feeling of the presidents that the immediate task in front of us is to make this conference as strong as we can, while obviously remaining open to changes in conditions," Pye said.

Approval from six of the eight schools was needed to add Tulane. Pye refused to say what the tally was, although he indicated it wasn't close.

"What the conference is trying to do is proceed by consensus and we are not recording votes unless it is a very close matter," he said.

SWC commissioner Fred Jacoby was a strong advocate of adding Tulane, but said he wasn't disappointed with the vote.

"Tulane is a strong university, with an extremely strong athletic program," he said. "At some time in the future it may be an appropriate school for ... inclusion into the conference.

"It is simply that we don't think the conference would best be served at this particular time by including Tulane."

Pye did say Tulane could enhance its chances of joining the league by improving its basketball attendance.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

TUESDAY, JUNE 4, 1991

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Look forward to a year of great productivity and happiness. Climactic career developments will make September a red-letter month. Personal relationships will come under review in December. You decide to either end a romance or make a permanent commitment. Draw closer to your family and friends over the Christmas holidays. Business travel in February and March of 1992 will produce many lucrative contacts. There will be much to celebrate next spring! Simplify your lifestyle.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actor Bruce Dern, actress Rosalind Russell, tennis' Andrea Jaeger, opera singer Robert Merrill.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Call on your energy reserves to get you through this busy day. Be more organized. Return important telephone calls and write timely letters. Tone down your rhetoric with loved ones.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Stick to routine tasks during the morning. Creative ventures will dominate later in the day. A new romantic attachment brings happiness. Family approval will add to your sense of well-being.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Turn your attention to projects you can complete on your own. A get-together with an old friend brings back happy memories. Do not be overly extravagant. Set aside cash for your bills.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Going to work may be a pleasant change from the hectic domestic scene. Family becomes more demanding due to last-minute chores. Give children and parents extra encouragement.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Romance is real but a little confusing. You feel a need to perfect certain routines. Work at improving communication with your loved ones. Discuss any financial woes with a trusted family friend.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Career matters progress smoothly now. Keep your own counsel and refuse to be pressured into acting against your instincts. Strive for cooperation over confrontation.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): The work scene is quieter now. Consult experts before signing business agreements. Use your imagination and charm to work around a difficult person's whims. Learn more about finance.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov.21): Those of you with jobs outside the home will have to be diligent. Other people will try to distract you. Exercise self-discipline. Social activities will keep you stepping lively this evening.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A personal sacrifice may be called for. Although friends try to influence you, the final decision is yours. Choose wisely. It is time for a show of independence in romance.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Financial matters benefit from a bit of good luck. Your loved ones continue to be cooperative. Be appreciative. Romance is more fulfilling than in the recent pst.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Your ideas are very practical, especially where your career and finances are concerned. Do not rely on promises from outsiders. Travel is favored for business, pleasure.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Continue to lie low until the remaining clouds have vanished. Optimism is reborn this evening, reviving joint expectations. Do not be ashamed to say what you are feeling.

TODAY'S CHILDREN have lots of charisma. Born leaders, they tend to take over and organize everything in sight. Although easily disciplined as youngsters, these Geminis can cause their parents some sleepless nights once they reach adolescence. Sentimental and generous, they never forget a birthday or anniversary. Encourage them to develop good health habits at an early age. Regular exercise will counter a tendency to be overweight.

Opening lead: Two of ◇

One of the great arts of defensive play is to conceal the whereabouts of key cards from declarer. How well this can succeed is demonstrated by this hand from a major national pair championship more than a quarter of a century ago. Sitting East-West, respectively, were Eddie Taylor and Lew Mathe.

The auction was routine. With a combined point-count of 28 in two balanced hands, three no trump should have been an easy game. Indeed, looking at all four hands the only question would seem to be whether the defenders can scrounge a third trick on defense. But watch what happened.

Mathe's lead of a low diamond was based on one of his pet beliefs that it is rarely right to lead from a four-card suit headed by the jack. Declarer played low from dummy and captured East's ten with the ace. South immediately returned the nine of diamonds, West covered with the queen and the table's king won as East dropped the eight.

A low spade to the king was permitted to win and the four of diamonds was led. Convinced that West had led from a four-card suit, declarer finessed dummy's six, and East was on lead with the seven. Back came a heart, West played the ten and the board's queen won the trick.

Another spade to the queen was gobbled up with the ace and Mathe returned the five of hearts. Sure that the ace was with East, declarer played low from dummy. For a brief moment declarer thought the contract was going to be defeated when Taylor produced the ten, but the defense had run out of steam. A heart to the ace was the defense's fourth and final trick.

Nevertheless, just holding declarer to nine tricks was enough to earn an absolute top for East-West.

L.A. police allege Ice pulled 'heater,' arrest rap singer

LOS ANGELES — Vanilla Ice was arrested Monday after a man complained that the rap singer brandished a pistol outside a North Hollywood supermarket.

Van Winkle

Ice, whose legal name is Robert Van Winkle, was booked and released on his own recognizance following the incident about 2:15 a.m., said police Lt. Michael Ranshaw.

A 9mm pistol found in Ice's car was confiscated, as was another handgun taken from one of his companions. The companion, identified as Aaron Martin, was booked for investigation of carrying a concealed weapon, Ranshaw said.

Two other men in the performer's car were released without charges.

Ice was not immediately available for comment. A call to his publicist was not immediately returned.

Ice, dogged by questions of his authenticity as a white performer in a black music form, was winner of the favorite new pop-rock artist and rap artist awards at the American Music Awards in January.

Ranshaw said Ice and the three men were sitting in the car outside a supermarket when a man approached them and offered to sell a piece of jewelry.

The man later told police that Ice pulled out a gun and ordered him to leave. The man, whose name was not released, telephoned police.

The case was turned over to the city attorney's office to determine whether charges will be filed. Brandishing a firearm, a misdemeanor offense, carries a maximum offense of one year in jail or an unspecified fine.

NOBLESVILLE, Ind. — It wasn't just that Guns N' Roses played past an 11 p.m. curfew. What really bugged the authorities was the defiant attitude of Axl Rose, the loose-lipped leader of the heavy metal band.

Result: a $5,000 fine.

Rose, who grew up in Indiana, delivered a profane five-minute tirade on the Deer Creek Music Center stage last week when he discussed Hamilton County's 11 p.m. curfew.

The band played 55 minutes past the curfew on Tuesday and 25 minutes past the next night.

"That in and of itself wasn't so significant," prosecutor Steve Nation said Saturday in announcing the charges.

"What makes this different is that Axl Rose said on stage that he knew about the curfew and thought it was stupid. And he said a few things about our county and about our state."

Rose berated the "scared old people" who live in Indiana and compared the state to a Nazi concentration camp.

BALTIMORE — Actor and former prison inmate Charles Dutton told inmates graduating from college that the value of their education was the "discovery of one's own humanity."

Dutton

Dutton, 40, who stars in the upcoming Fox situation comedy "Roc," once served prison terms for manslaughter, possessing deadly weapons and assaulting a prison guard.

In a commencement address Sunday to inmates at the maximum-security Maryland State Penitentiary, he recalled his "defiant attitude" as a youth growing up in a public housing project in Baltimore.

He told the 29 inmate-graduates that his turnaround began when he attended Hagerstown Junior College as an inmate. He later graduated from Towson State University and Yale University's School of Drama.

The inmates were receiving degrees from Coppin State College in Baltimore.

Valedictorian John Woodland, a management science major, said "that when we see him in a movie or hear about him in a play, we know that we, too, can do great things."

Woodland is serving a 30-year sentence for murder and a handgun violation.

LOS ANGELES — The "Star Wars" trilogy may become a sextet.

George Lucas, the producer of the popular space adventures, has plans for another three films in the series — "prequels" that take place before the first three movies.

While "everything at this stage is speculative," the next series is expected to follow the early adventures of Ben "Obi-Wan" Kenobi, Darth Vader and the child Luke Skywalker, said Lynne Hale, a spokeswoman for Lucasfilm Ltd.

"George Lucas has an idea of what he wants to do, but we are not even pre-production at this stage," she said.

Hale stressed there is no completion date for the first film, but said the three would be finished over the next five to seven years.

The three original movies — the 1977 "Star Wars"; "The Empire Strikes Back," released in 1980; and 1983's "Return of the Jedi" — are among the most popular films of all time, netting more than $700 million among them.

Hearns becomes a world champ

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Thomas Hearns, possibly stung by taunts that he was a shot fighter, became a world champion for the sixth time Monday night.

The "Hit Man" from Detroit won a unanimous 12-round decision over Virgil Hill and took the World Boxing Association light-heavyweight championship outdoors at Caesars Palace.

"Shot," Hearns said about the taunts before the fight. "See me Monday night, June 3 and you'll see."

The 32-year-old Hearns mixed boxing ability with power punching and threw in a good dose of heart in upsetting his 27-year-old, previously unbeaten opponent.

Hearns fought on wobbly legs in the last few rounds, but he kept punching and controlled the fight in those crucial rounds.

Hill, sometimes irritated before the fight because he felt Hearns was being treated like the champion, said, "This is not the Thomas Hearns Show."

It was, however.

The match was a beautiful exhibition of boxing. Both men feinted with their shoulders, their heads, their arms. They tried to make one another counter and they jabbed and jabbed.

Hearns had the power, however, and that made the difference.

In the sixth round, Hearns, who had looked like his name was Sugar Ray in the first five stanzas, really became the Hit Man. He hit Hill with a right to the body and then a right to the head at 2:28 of the round. He hurt him with a body shot and then landed another right and then another right and then a jarring left hook.

Hearns outboxed Hill in the seventh round, then Hill came back with body shots to take the eighth.

Then in the ninth, the Hit Man struck again. He landed a jab and hard right to the head, then had Hill reeeling with a right, a hook and another right. At the end of the fight, Hill said he thought he broke his nose and also hurt a hand.

"I just didn't do the things I should have," Hill said. "The hype of the fight got to me. I couldn't get untracked."

Hill's disappointed trainer, Freddie Roach, said, "I don't think Hearns did enough to take the title."

Most of the crowd of 8,125 seemed to agree with the judges.

Two-point loss doesn't shake Jordan, Bulls

CHICAGO (AP) — A two-point loss in the opener of the NBA Finals didn't shake Michael Jordan's confidence. He still believes his teammates will support him enough for the Chicago Bulls to beat the Los Angeles Lakers.

"Our mood is still very positive," Jordan said Monday. "The situation can overwhelm you in the NBA Finals. I've been through this in the Olympics and the NCAAs. The guys need to relax and try to have more ups than downs."

Despite missing a shot in the final seconds that would have put the Bulls ahead Sunday, Jordan was brilliant despite a 93-91 loss in Game 1.

He scored 36 points and his 12 assists provides proof that he tried to keep his teammates involved. But the unavoidable truth is they didn't do enough to support him. The other Bulls starters totaled 37 points on 38.1 percent shooting.

Jordan said he isn't surprised that the media are saying the Bulls reverted to their style of the 1980s when he often carried the offensive burden alone.

"It appeared to be that way because offensively I was contributing more than the other guys," Jordan said. "They weren't hitting their shots and I was. I was trying to distribute the ball, but we didn't knock the shots down. I'm sure they will start falling for us."

If the shots don't start falling, the Bulls could become the first team ever to lose the opening two games of the NBA Finals at home. Game 2 of the best-of-7 series is Wednesday night at Chicago Stadium.

Jordan said he prefers to "lay back until my time comes," but he decided he had to be more aggressive offensively when his teammates didn't provide any support.

"We had some nervousness out, there, so I felt it was my place to step up and relieve some of the tension by becoming more assertive," Jordan said.

Magic Johnson, who quarterbacked the Lakers' balanced offense and finished with 19 points, 11 assists and 10 rebounds, said the Bulls' nervousness probably wasn't the deciding factor.

"I didn't really see it as a situation where it was inexperience versus experience," Johnson said.

Long Beach State eliminates Clemson

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Willy Speakman homered leading off the bottom of the ninth inning Monday to give Long Beach State a 12-11 victory over Clemson, elminating the highest remaining seed in the College World Series.

Top-ranked Florida State, sent home Sunday night, and No. 2 Clemson (60-10) were each eliminated from the series without winning a game.

Sixth-seeded Long Beach State (45-21), advances to Tuesday's elimination game against the loser of Monday night's other contest, matching hometown favorite Creighton and third-seeded Wichita State.

Scott Talanoa hit a two-run homer to spark Long Beach State's three-run first inning, drove in another run with a grounder in the four-run third and broke a 7-7 tie with a bases-loaded, fielder's choice grounder in the fourth. Eddie Christian hit a two-run homer in the third and his two-out single in the eighth tied the game 11-11.

Speakman then finished it at the expense of Clemson reliever Eric Bradford (4-1).

Wichita St. 3, Creighton 2

Scot McCloughan's infield single scored Mike Audley with the winning run as Wichita State edged Missouri Valley Conference rival Creighton in a 12-inning pitching duel.

CWS

Two of the hottest teams in college baseball had their bats taken away by the efforts of Creighton freshman Andy Benes and Wichita State's first-round draft pick Tyler Green in the first nine innings.

The victory was the seventh without loss for third-seeded Wichita State (65-12) against seventh-seeded Creighton (50-21). The Shockers now to to Thursday's winners bracket game to await the winner of Creighton and Long Beach State, a 12-11 winner over Clemson earlier Monday.

Creighton brought the record CWS crowd of 18,206 to its feet early when Dax Jones led off with a bunt that Shocker third baseman Mike Jones fielded, then threw into right field. Dax rolled around to third on he play and came home one out later on Scott Stahoviak's single to left. Steve Hinton followed with a double to move Stahoviak to third. He scored the second run on Chad McConnell's sacrifice fly.

Bluejay freshman right-hander Benes retired the first 10 Wichita State batters before Chris Wimmer reached first when his high hopper was fielded by Stahoviak at third.

Steinbrenner has strike

NEW YORK (AP) — One of the three lawsuits filed by George Steinbrenner and Yankees officials following baseball's investigation of the New York owner was thrown out of court Monday.

U.S. District Judge Robert Sweet said Steinbrenner had been unable to prove a stenographic firm that transcribed interviews in baseball's investigation tampered with transcripts illegally or that changes affected commissioner Fay Vincent's findings.

Vincent ruled last July that Steinbrenner's dealings with admitted gambler Howard Spira were not in the best interests of baseball and Steinbrenner agreed to give up control of the team.

"He has failed to present evidence indicating that any of the changes materially altered the substance or tone of the transcripts or that the alterations might reasonably be considered to have affected the commissioner's decision," the judge said in dismissing the suit against Esquire Reporting Co.

Steinbrenner agreed last summer not to sue Vincent, so he filed the complaint against Esquire, which was hired by baseball.

There are two suits remaining. Yankees executive vice president Leonard Kleinman is suing the commissioner in New York because he was blocked from succeeding Steinbrenner as managing general partner. Two limited Yankees owners are suing Vincent in Cleveland.

"How sweet it is," Vincent said, making a pun with the judge's name. "I like the trend."

In the lawsuit, Steinbrenner accused Esquire of doctoring transcripts at the direction of John Dowd, the lawyer who headed Vincent's investigation. Sweet said changes ordered by Dowd ranged from typographical corrections to deletions of questions and answers.

"At most, Dowd's changes appear to have been motivated by a desire to clean up the less-refined language in the interviews and to clarify some of the more confusing and repetitive exchanges," the judge said.

Steinbrenner's lawyer, Paul Curran, said he would not comment on the ruling.

Lewellen Construction recommends economical vinyl siding

If you are tired of painting and repainting the outside of your home, Bill Lewellen of Lewellen Construction Company asks you to consider the advantages of lifetime warrantied vinyl siding. Vinyl siding is an economical alternative to steel siding.

"While we recommend steel siding as probably the best type for this area," Lewellen said, "vinyl should be considered as a viable alternative for several reasons."

Vinyl will not dent like aluminum siding tends to, and it is colorfast clear through the product, as opposed to a painted-on finish.

You can beautify and protect your home with a variety of different styles of Alside premium siding, including the traditional clapboard. The rich, embossed texture of deep wood-grain plus a durable, permanent finish will keep your home new-looking, even under nature's most punishing weather conditions.

Just forget about painting with Alside vinyl siding. It will save you thousands of dollars on exterior painting and repairs. Just an occasional rinse with your garden hose keeps it fresh and new looking.

When you choose to make your home more attractive, more durable and less costly to maintain, you're putting your dollars into the wisest investment possible.

Consider, too, the alternative to painting your eaves, overhangs, gables and outside trim with vinyl soffit and fascia from Lewellen Construction. It can provide proper ventilation for your home in both summer and winter.

Call Lewellen Construction at 686-8007 or 563-4520 for a free estimate or for more information.

Whether it is vinyl or steel siding, soffit or fascia, doors or storm windows, Lewellen Construction Company enjoys a reputation for quality work and for earning repeat business. Many satisfied customers return to Bill Lewellen to work on their additional in-town and out-of-town properties because they can depend on his experience and fair pricing.

Since 1982, when Bill opened his business in Midland, Lewellen Construction has professionally administered some 1280 remodeling jobs. Lewellen Construction just finished a third job for O.C. Collins, who accepted Bill's bid to add fascia and steel siding to a lake house near San Angelo.

It's quality at a fair price that Bill can offer to Lewellen Construction clients. It's also experience and longevity from a company which has served the Permian Basin for nearly a decade. "Our value is built on your satisfaction," said Bill. "You have our personal pledge that we will stand behind the quality of our materials and the integrity of our workmanship."

Bill will be pleased to tell you about Lewellen Construction's 10 year written warranty on workmanship. "It's as good as the company that stands behind it," he said.

You can depend on Lewellen Construction for custom built replacement windows, offering ease of operation, and a variety of styles, in vinyl or aluminum. Another Lewellen specialty, custom built storm windows, are energy efficient, offer noise reduction and come in a variety of colors.

A recent Lewellen customer is Bill Rasavage. He and his wife, Mary, contracted Lewellen Construction to improve the front of their home with the addition of two beautiful fluted aluminum columns. Lewellen Construction surrounded the wooden posts that the Rasavages said they had to repaint every year.

"We shopped around for several quotes," recalled Mr. Rasavage, "but Lewellen Construction was the lowest. Bill also encouraged us to look at examples of his work. We were very impressed with what we saw."

"We had also heard some good reports on Bill from a friend," added Mrs. Rasavage. "We plan to use him again in the very near future and we recommend him to our friends."

Bill and Mary Rasavage, with grandson Keal Thomas Rasavage, are extremely pleased with the beautiful fluted steel columns installed by Lewellen Construction Co.

Another Midland couple, Mr. and Mrs. Ray Wall, contracted Lewellen Construciton Company for steel soffit and fascia as well as the installation of a storm door. "Lewellen Construciton is very good and we are very pleased," noted Mrs. Wall.

"We took several bids. He was the lowest priced and he offered the fairest deal."

Make an important phone call to Lewellen Construction Co. at 563-4520 or 686-8007 for a free estimate on vinyl or steel siding or storm windows. Bill Lewellen can readily answer any questions you may have.

Make an important investment in your family's good health with quality reverse osmosis drinking water from your own faucet and a system from Supreme Water Treatment. Enjoy the convenience of conditioned water, certified equipment and professional service from a company which has served Midland homes and businesses since 1981.

Choose Supreme Water Treatment for your reverse osmosis system for improved taste because it removes up to 95 percent of minerals and hazardous contaminants which give water a bad taste. Dissolved mineral salts, dead bacteria, chlorine and foreign material all contribute to bad taste. All are removed by the Reo-Pure 10 system, which is sold and serviced by Supreme Water Treatment.

This system also protects your family's health by providing water appropriate for low sodium diets. It saves money as it replaces expensive bottled water and it is energy efficient since it uses only water line pressure. Reo-Pure 10 is the most economical system available at a reasonable price.

The company does not have to pay a franchise fee, therefore it can offer the highest quality products to you and can save you hundreds of dollars on the purchase of new water equipment.

A Supreme Water Treatment reverse osmosis system gives you finger tip convenience by eliminating waiting for deliveries, lifting heavy bottles, storing bottles and the worry and the inconvenience of running out. Just turn to the faucet and you have clean, clear, healthy water for the entire family. Other benefits include: Computerized technology, Spring fresh flavor, More flavorful beverages,* More flavorful foods — cooked in water, Water for low sodium diets, Better tasting, clearer ice cubes, Mineral free water for steam irons, car batteries, humidifiers and other home appliances.

Brad Hamilton, a spokesman for Supreme Water Treatment, explained how his company's system can make a difference for you. "Midland water contains 1800 to 3000 parts per million of total dissolved solids. With our system, it drops the solids to 200 parts per million. Some other systems water, after treatment, contains 1200 parts per million. Texas requirements for bottled water are under 500 parts per million, so our system drops it well under state standards."

"We also use an auto shut off valve on our reverse osmosis systems. When the tank is full, the system shuts down. Most systems on the market use a check valve system that allows good and bad water to pass down the drain when the tank is full. Our system saves about 1000 gallons of water a month."

Supreme Water Treatment specializes in service. In fact, the factory trained, qualified technicians service all brands of water equipment. This company, a member of the Water Quality Association, services 90 percent of the restaurants in the Midland/Odessa area which have reverse osmosis systems. It has this market because of the company's emphasis on service.

Furr's, Cattleman's, Taco Villa, Fuddruckers and approximately 40 other businesses are serviced by Supreme Water Treatment. Reverse osmosis water from Supreme Water Treatment is coming soon to Texas Burger, Dairy Queen, Mr. Gatti's and Short Stop.

If you are tired of dry skin, spotty or white glassware, clothes that turn yellow after one washing, higher energy costs because of scaling in your water heater or heavy bottles, choose the easy solution of having reverse osmosis water at your finger tips.

Supreme Water Treatment, in addition to water system sales and service, sells parts, filters and salt. Feel free to stop by the shop at 1207 S. Garfield. You can also benefit from a salt delivery service. For the price of buying salt for your water softener at a grocery store, Supreme Water Treatment will deliver and install it.

Supreme Water Treatment offers free estimates, a 24-hour answering service and honest, dependable service.

Be sure to clip the coupon in today's Business and Industry ad for a $5.00 savings on a filter change. This special applies to any reverse osmosis system. For more information on a reverse osmosis system for your home, stop by Supreme Water Treatment at 1207 S. Garfield Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 12 noon or 1 p.m. to 5 p.m., or call 689-8868.

Lila Cockrell ends trailblazing political career

AP Laserphoto

San Antonio's first female mayor, Lila Cockrell, discusses her plans for the future at her city hall office recently. Mrs. Cockrell endured her first defeat May 4, finishing third in a re-election bid.

By Kelley Shannon
Associated Press writer

SAN ANTONIO — Four decades ago, Lila Cockrell recalls with a giggle, she sat around talking politics with other young mothers in the League of Women Voters.

"We would all chip in a quarter or something and hire a baby sitter to look after the children," she said, remembering she once brought along her 4-week-old daughter. "It was kind of fun."

From those casual beginnings emerged a trailblazing politician who became the first woman mayor of San Antonio and led the city through turbulent times to its current single-member-district government.

Now the 69-year-old Mrs. Cockrell says she is ending her long political career. She endured her first defeat May 4, finishing third in a re-election bid behind city council members Maria Berriozabal and Nelson Wolff. Wolff defeated Ms. Berriozabal in a runoff; his term began last Saturday.

Mrs. Cockrell attributes her loss to her support of a controversial water reservoir and an "anti-government" protest vote that drew support away from her and to a minor mayoral candidate. Mrs. Cockrell also backed tax increases the past two years in the face of a city budget deficit.

Mrs. Cockrell said she doesn't take the loss personally and is looking forward to new adventures.

"My life has never depended on my winning a particular election. So I can look ahead and know that there will be good things out there for me," she said. "I feel very happy and comfortable."

This two-year mayoral stint was not her first. She also held the job from 1975-81, before the eight-year tenure of Henry Cisneros. And she was a city council member for 10 years in the 1960s and 1970s.

Mrs. Cockrell said she got interested in government as a child and at Southern Methodist University, where she debated and was involved in campus organizations.

Many say her greatest political accomplishment was leading the city in 1977 from its old at-large election system to single-member-district system. Strong personalities on the new city council often clashed.

After graduation she married Sid Cockrell. When he went overseas in the Army during World War II, she joined the WAVES and worked in Washington, D.C.

In the 1950s and early 1960s came the League of Women Voters in Dallas and later San Antonio, from which she was tapped by political players to run for council and eventually mayor.

In 1975 Mrs. Cockrell became the first woman mayor of a major Texas city. At the time, San Antonio was the largest U.S. city ever to have elected a female mayor.

"It was very precedent-setting, certainly," Mrs. Cockrell said. "Of course, now it has become almost commonplace."

Although she encouraged other women politicians through various programs and a women's political group affiliated with the National League of Cities, Mrs. Cockrell said she doesn't necessarily consider herself a women's rights activist.

"I don't think I would qualify in every way as a feminist. I was more trying to open doors of opportunity for women," she said. "I certainly would have to have been thought to have been something of a trailblazer, because I was the first in doing a number of things."

Many say her greatest political accomplishment was leading the city in 1977 from its old at-large election system to single-member-district system. Strong personalities on the new city council often clashed.

"It was a time of turmoil. It was a time when I felt it was very important to work through that period and to show that the districting plan could work," Mrs. Cockrell said. "I think we did that."

After leaving politics in 1981 because of her husband's ill health — he died in 1986 — she was urged to run for mayor in 1989 when Cisneros had personal problems and did not seek re-election.

At one point Cisneros appeared to be reconsidering his decision. Mrs. Cockrell, who already had been campaigning and fund-raising for months, declared she was in the race to stay.

Cisneros never entered the contest.

These days the two are cordial, but not the allies they once were.

Those who know Mrs. Cockrell say she is sweet, yet tough and determined. Always, they say, she does what she believes is right.

"She's a very caring person. She cared for the city," said businessman Al Aleman, who headed Mrs. Cockrell's recent campaign. "She's a gal who could roll up her sleeves and say, 'Let's go to work.' "

Bob Coleman, chairman of the San Antonio Sports Foundation, worked with Mrs. Cockrell to land the 1993 Olympic Festival.

Coleman said it was Mrs. Cockrell who persuaded Olympic Committee members to finally choose San Antonio. The committee had asked whether a new domed stadium would be ready on time.

"She stood up and said, 'I'll answer that question.' She walked to the podium and pounded her fist and said, 'It will be ready — on time and on budget.' Then she turned around and sat down," said Coleman.

Construction has begun, and although still early, officials say the promise will be kept.

During her recent mayoral term, a World League of American Football franchise came to town, the Houston Oilers decided to hold training camp here, construction on the domed stadium commenced and Mrs. Cockrell made several trips to Mexico to try to boost trade.

Mrs. Cockrell inherited a $31 million budget deficit in 1989. Trimming the deficit resulted in the unpopular decision of raising taxes. An anti-tax group later launched a successful rollback campaign.

Budget cuts and tax increases have shrunk the deficit, which now is about $10 million.

The anti-tax group and environmentalists also campaigned successfully during her term for abandoning the controversial $180 million Applewhite water reservoir, which already was under construction and which Mrs. Cockrell backed.

Despite her election loss, Mrs. Cockrell's admirers have bombarded her with adulation.

"I have just been overwhelmed with flowers and letters. You'd think I had won," she laughed.

Mrs. Cockrell said she won't run for office again and said at her age she is flattered anyone asks the question. She will return to being president of Atkins Travel By Design, which she headed before her recent mayoral term.

Shortly after leaving office she will take a Caribbean cruise and plans to spend time with her two daughters, Carol Gulley and Cathy Kazsuk, and four grandchildren.

"There were no worries in the family when I didn't win," she said. "I think they were hoping they would have me come home again."

Texans recall Carla as hurricane season begins

By Robert G. Wieland
Associated Press writer

It's been 30 years since Hurricane Carla tore through Texas, killing 34 people, but emergency officials hope the lessons learned in 1961 are remembered in 1991 as the hurricane season opened Saturday.

"It was a hell of a hurricane, no two ways about it," recalls CBS-TV anchorman Dan Rather, whose coverage of Carla earned him a network news job.

Carla also injured 465 people in Texas after sweeping ashore Sept. 11.

Although Carla was classified as a storm of extreme intensity, officials attribute the relatively low death toll to the evacuation of 250,000 people from the middle and upper coast, many of whom left after seeing the televised radar image of the awesome storm.

"They hauled out," Rather said. The picture of the storm, filling the Gulf of Mexico, still haunts him.

Jack Eisenlohr of Kemah was among those who heeded the warnings.

"Dan Rather did a real good job. He got us out of here," Eisenlohr said.

Eisenlohr had planned to ride out the storm in his two-story house. But Rather and the predictions of a 17-foot tide in Galveston Bay scared him away.

"He run a lot of people out of this Gulf coast back inland where they were safe. He made the people listen," he said.

"The wind would just tear at your eyeballs," recalls Eisenlohr, now 64, who left behind a cat and parakeet and rode out the storm with friends in Houston.

Rather and his KHOU-TV crew were at the weather bureau on Galveston Island, cut off from the mainland by high winds and rising water.

"This is not a movie, this is real," Rather recalls thinking. "Maybe I'd better say my prayers as I've been taught."

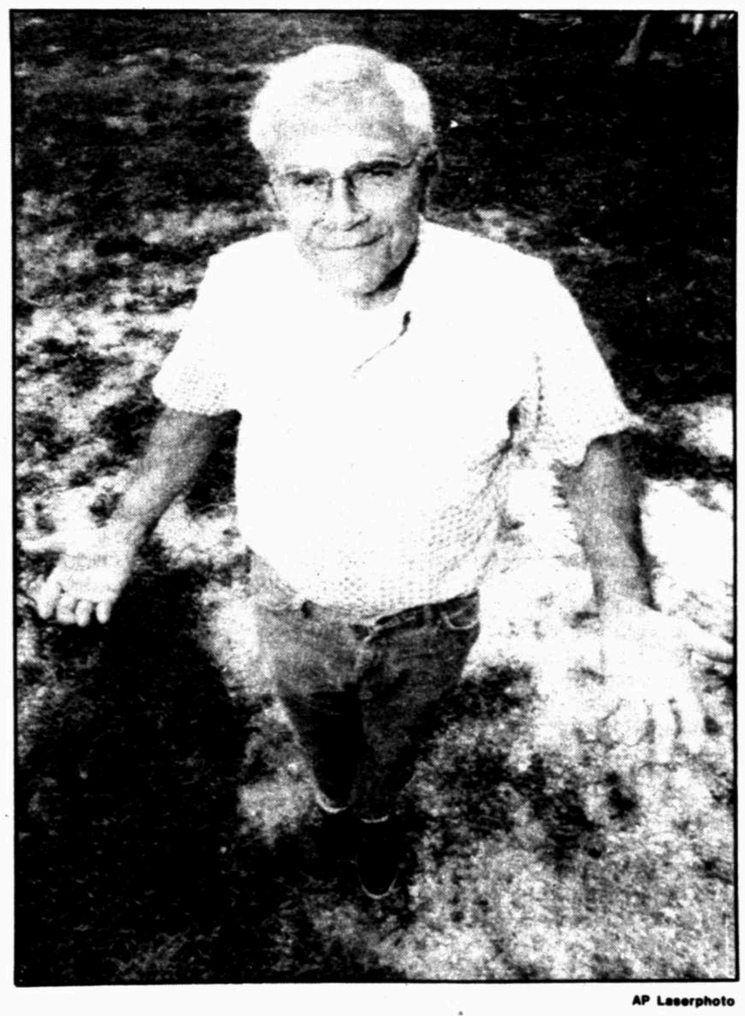
At one point, Rather went outside and considered tying himself and a camera to a tree so he could provide dramatic, albeit foolhardy, coverage of Carla's landfall.

"I was green as money and didn't have any," Rather said in a recent telephone interview from New York.

He quickly determined that winds were not the only threat.

"With the water rising you wouldn't want to lash yourself to a tree, so I went inside. It was not a good idea and I don't recommend it to anybody," he said.

The "eye" of the hurricane, about 30 miles in diameter, slammed into the coast at Port O'Connor, nearly destroying the city.



AP Laserphoto

Jack Eisenlohr stands in the spot where his house once stood in Kemah, Texas, when Hurricane Carla slammed into the Texas coast.

A storm tide of 18.5 feet was measured at Port Lavaca and Carla's peak wind gusts were estimated at 175 miles an hour.

"That darned hurricane just laid out there and rolled over and rolled over and the water got higher and higher and higher," said Eisenlohr. "The water was tremendous."

When Eisenlohr returned home after the storm, his cat was on the roof, the parakeet hungry and his house was full of silt.

"We had debris. We had two dead cows in our yard," he said. The county health department could not use its heavy equipment because of the muck, so officials told Eisenlohr to pile debris on top of the cows and burn them.

"It smelled real good; like a big barbecue," he said. "You couldn't eat them because they were bloated but it sure did smell good."

Property damage from Carla was estimated at $200 million and crop losses at $100 million, mostly damage to unharvested cotton and rice.

Carla moved inland over Inez, Yoakum and Waelder before weakening and turning northerly over Austin, Waco and Fort Worth, leaving devastation, carnage and indelible memories in its wake.

"I was in a typhoon over in Pusan, Korea," said Eisenlohr, a former seaman who now owns a bicycle store in Webster. "I'm used to rough weather in the North Atlantic. But I've just never been in a hurricane like Carla."

Among the arsenal unleashed by Carla was a barrage of tornadoes aimed at Galveston Island.

Five of Carla's 11 tornadoes raked Galveston, killing seven people and injuring 49.

According to storm experts, twisters spun off by hurricanes are almost as dangerous as the wall of water shoved ashore by the storms.

"They're definitely a threat," said Frederic P. Ostby, director of the National Severe Storms Forecast Center in Kansas City. He was in Houston Friday for a hurricane seminar with a special emphasis on tornadoes.

"Harris County has had more tornadoes in the last 40 years than any other county in the United States — 130," Ostby said. The total included waterspouts that move ashore as well as tornadoes related to hurricanes.

The 1990 Atlantic hurricane season produced 14 named storms, eight of them hurricanes. At least 120 people were killed, including nearly 100 when Hurricane Diana hit Mexico in early August.

The average number of storms is nine, with about six becoming hurricanes.

Dr. William M. Gray, a professor of atmospheric science at Colorado State University, has predicted a below-average hurricane season for 1991.

Weather conditions point to a relatively mild season, with less than 10 tropical storms forming and fewer than six of those becoming hurricanes, Gray said.

Since 1984, Gray has been predicting the number of hurricanes and tropical storms likely to develop during the hurricane season, which runs from June 1 to Nov. 30. With the exception of 1989, Gray's forecasts have been 80 to 90 percent accurate.

DEAR ABBY

Special gifts can be delivered in person

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: About 12 years ago, I gave a beautiful handmade quilt to my nephew and his wife as their wedding gift. I made it myself, and everyone who saw it said it was a work of art.

Van Buren

I did not deliver it myself. Another relative carried it to my nephew's home. I got a thank-you for the gift, but it was not said that the gift was a handmade quilt.

To make a long story short, a few months ago I was at this nephew's home and I saw the quilt hanging on a quilt stand in their bedroom. I asked who made the stand and my nephew's wife said, "My brother made the stand, and my grandmother made the quilt."

I asked, "Where is the one I gave you?" She said, "This is the only one we have."

Now, the grandmother has lived with that lie on her conscience all these years — letting people believe that she made it when she knows perfectly well that I made it.

My advice to anyone who has a nice gift to give: Deliver it yourself! And, Abby, don't you think somebody owes me an apology? — STILL HURT IN OHIO

DEAR STILL HURT: Good advice! But it wouldn't hurt to have enclosed a gift card with the quilt with a brief message: "Made with love from Aunt ( ) to ( )."

Since this is irritating you, why don't you set the record straight and tell your nephew and his wife that you made the quilt that was delivered to them by another relative, who took the credit for having made it?

DEAR ABBY: The copy of "Please God, I'm Only 17" appeared in today's Chicago Tribune, and its appearance was very timely. Just yesterday, I confiscated my 17-year-old son's driver's license after overhearing a conversation with a friend in which he boasted of doing 60 in a 45-mile zone on a small residential country road. (I didn't know yet how long I would keep it or what else I might have him do in order to make an impression.)

I decided upon the following course of action after reading your column. I clipped it and gave it to him with the following:

"Dear John: When you copy this little piece, 'Please God, I'm Only 17,' 25 times in your neatest writing and on good paper, and prominently display all 25 copies in your bedroom (nope, make an extra two copies, one for each car), you may have your license back. John, this is called tough love. Remember it. You may have to use it some day with one of your own children. I love you. Mom"

Thanks, Abby. — TONI WEAVER, McHENRY, ILL.

AT WIT'S END

Kids with muscles used to have thick heads

By Erma Bombeck

I don't know my grown kids anymore. They eat sensibly, exercise and get plenty of rest. They never used to be that way.

The other day I visited my daughter's apartment and fell over a stair climber. I couldn't believe my eyes.

"It gives me a lot of muscular work on my legs and buttocks," she said.

"I wanted to give you a lot of muscular work on your legs and buttocks when we lived in that two-story house in Bellbrook," I said, "but you'd have no part in it. Remember when I used to put laundry, toilet paper and the sweeper at the foot of the stairs and say, 'The next one who goes upstairs take a load with him'? You'd sleep in the laundry tubs before you'd go up those stairs."

"That was different."

Right. Like the stationary bicycle my son bought a few years ago for his bedroom. He gets up an hour early to pedal to nowhere and takes the same route before he goes to bed. This from a guy who claimed to be the only senior in a public high school in North America who was not permitted to drive his parents' car to school. You may have seen him being interviewed by Mike Wallace on "60 Minutes" accusing his parents of cruel and inhumane treatment.

I don't get it. The kids who walk around today with weights on their arms and ankles are the same kids who couldn't pick up the garbage or a towel because they might pull a muscle. They're the same ones who run on treadmills to oblivion, yet would organize a car pool to take them from home plate to first base.

My daughter acts as if she is seeing broccoli for the first time in her life. I told her, "It's the same stuff you used to mash up with a fork and slip into your shoe when no one at the table was looking."

They take vitamins willingly, drink water they can't pronounce, and use sunscreen with a number higher than their IQ.

In a way, it's sort of rewarding. All that wonderful advice I gave them, which has been dormant all these years, is suddenly beginning to surface and make sense. It's as if they are finally realizing that all the nagging and the rules were given in the name of love because I cared for their well-being.

I said to my daughter, "While you're up, would you walk your muscular legs to the car and get my glasses?"

She sighed, "What am I? Your slave?"

Then again, maybe they still need work.

Psychiatrists make calls on people trapped by illness

By Elisabeth Rosenthal
New York Times News Service

A retired teacher became so depressed when illness left her weakened that she drew the blinds, stopped eating and refused to leave her apartment. Once proud and independent, she was headed for a nursing home. Though she needed therapy, she could not get to a therapist.

So Dr. Darwin Buschman came to her.

With an old car, a medical bag and a cellular phone, Dr. Buschman moves about Manhattan, one a of growing number of psychiatrists who make house calls. Sitting across from the patient in her well-kept den, he asked a series of questions designed to assess her mental acuity and emotional state. Her confusion, flat expression and poor appetite suggested serious depression, and he left some medicine, an antidepressant.

Two weeks later, he returned for a follow-up visit. His patient was eating, somewhat brighter and, although nearly mute initially, she piped up.

'Why are you here?' she said.

'I'M A PSYCHIATRIST,' Dr. Buschman said. 'I think you're depressed.'

'Can you help me?' she asked, a note of hope in her voice.

'Yes. I think I can.'

At a time when medical home visits have all but vanished, psychiatrists are reviving the house call. Itinerant psychiatrists like Dr. Buschman dispense therapy to thousands of patients trapped in their homes by physical or mental impairment.

They respond to pleas from mental health departments, families or colleagues. Their visits vary from therapy sessions to virtual stakeouts of violent patients escaped from hospitals. 'I think of my job as a combination of psychiatrist, detective and lawyer,' said Dr. Buschman, who is psychiatrist for the Manhattan Mobile Crisis Unit of the New York City Department of Mental Health and the Visiting Nurse Service of New York.

Home visits have proved particularly useful for certain situations: schizophrenics with delusions, who often decide they no longer need the medicine that keeps their symptoms under control; the elderly, AIDS patients and others who may be depressed but are too frail to make trips to an office, and patients with a disorder called agoraphobia in which people can develop a morbid fear of open spaces, leading to overwhelming fear, palpitations and nausea with the slightest sojourn from home.

PAULINE B. of Boston was trapped in her home for more than 20 years with agoraphobia, unable to shop or even attend her children's weddings. When her husband had a heart attack, she could not visit him at the hospital.

Paradoxically, she lives across the street from Massachusetts General Hospital.

'I'd gaze out the window thinking I'm sure they can help me, but it looks so far away,' said Mrs. B. 'Each year my world got smaller and smaller. People stopped asking me out, because they knew I wouldn't come.'

Two years ago at the age of 60, Mrs. B. read about a pilot project across the street where therapists made home visits to treat people held prisoner by their fear. With the help of some house calls and medicine, Mrs. B. now shops for groceries, has worked part time and can eat in restaurants for the first time in 20 years. She now walks to see her psychiatrist, Dr. Mark Pollack, in his office. Averting Hospitalization

'I missed a lot,' Mrs. B said. 'Now I'm calling in all those invitations. Now my husband gets a break from the errands.'

EXPERTS SAY that a timely house call can bring a deteriorating patient back under the wing of medical care and avert the need for hospitalization or a nursing home. They say the need for house calls is growing, fueled in part by an aging population and in part by the tendency to care for people with mental disabilities in the community, rather than in institutions.

'There is a great need for psychiatric house calls,' said Dr. Alan Z. A. Manevitz, a psychiatrist at Cornell Medical College's Payne Whitney Clinic, who addressed the American Psychiatric Association meeting in New Orleans on the subject last week. 'I have seen many patients who, without a house call, would have been brought in sicker, later or, tragically, not at all.'

No one knows how many pscyhiatrists currently offer the service.

As in Mrs. B's case, house calls are generally a temporary arrangement, designed to overcome the barriers that separate patients from the doctor's office. House calls are not a long-term solution, 'but a step towards introducing the patient into mainstream medical care,' said Dr. Manevitz, who has been doing about one house call a week since 1985. After one or two visits, doctors generally refer patients to a more conventional setting: a hospital, clinic or office practice. If the patient does not keep the appointment, the doctor will make another house call.

'IT'S LIKE BEING a troubleshooter for the system, not a maverick or a lone gun at all,' Dr. Manevitz said. Different Adventures

Each house call is a new adventure and the doctors who gravitate to this corner of psychiatry seem to have a tiny taste for danger. Schizophrenic patients who fail to take their medicines, for example, can be extremely paranoid, agitated and even violent.

Before undertaking a house call, psychiatrists will gather information about the patient from a patient's doctors, social workers, or even the police.

Recently, Dr. Buschman went to evaluate a middle-aged woman with paranoid schizophrenia. She was convinced that someone was poisoning her with bug spray and so was threatening her family, who had called the Mobile Crisis Unit. Approaching the apartment in lower Manhattan, the doctor was visibly tense. 'I hope I stop doing this before I get killed,' he said.

Inside, he found a disheveled woman with a sweater wrapped around her head to ward off fumes. Although she had ripped the phone wires from the wall, she insisted she was fine and said she had stopped taking her medicines only because she was waiting for a new insurance card. He talked to her for 45 minutes, trying to probe the severity of her delusions and ultimately offered her a supply of pills, which she promised to take. Comfort of Home

Despite the drawbacks, psychiatrists who make house calls say that they gain invaluable insights about some patients by a visit to the home.

FOR EXAMPLE, the disheveled women in lower Manhattan had managed to pull herself together when she had visited her psychiatrist's office, an artifice Dr. Buschman discovered when he saw her in her home.

Also, patients who have a tenuous hold on reality or who are hostile to treatment may be more forthcoming in the comfort of their homes. Dr. Manevitz recalls seeing a professional in his office who had the delusion that his apartment was infested with parasites. Dr. Manevitz agreed to visit the apartment, and there the man admitted to a serious drug habit.

'Our clients can be very fearful so it's more comfortable and less invasive for patients to be seen in a home setting,' said Catherine Johnson of the New York Foundation for Senior Citizens Guardian Services.

If a patient at home appears dangerous to others or to himself, the psychiatrist may call the police or an ambulance to take the patient to the hospital for further evaluation.

But in some cases, psychiatrists are unwelcome and a patient refuses to let them in. Dr. Buschman was asked by a colleague to check up on a patient with manic depression who had stopped taking her medicines and would not answer the phone. When he called her on her apartment lobby intercom, she hung up after only a few words. Dr. Buschman shrugged. 'At least she's coherent,' he said. 'It sometimes takes a few tries.'

Fax greetings: New office fad?

SCHENECTADY, N.Y. (AP) — Could it be a candidate for office fad of the decade?

"Faxable Greeting Cards" have arrived, courtesy of cartoonist John Caldwell. They come in book form — 101 page-sized cards ready to be ripped out, filled in and faxed to friends, lovers or anyone else with a fax machine.

"This is not a gag. This is something you can utilize," Caldwell said.

The greetings range from "Happy Birthday" to "It's A Stag Party." A card featuring a cartoon Moses over the slogan "Holy Moses! I Forgot Your Birthday" is typical of the book's humor.

"It's mostly for the office in that that's where the fax machines are," Caldwell said. " ... Maybe you have a colleague in Denver you haven't communicated with in a while. You can fax them something from this book."

PART-TIME INCOME AVAILABLE
The Midland Reporter-Telegram has several distributorships which need to be filled with qualified, responsible individuals.
OFTEN ASKED QUESTIONS:

Is it worthwhile for adults also?
Yes! Our current carrier force is already 90% adult and 10% youth. Morning newspaper routes are attractive for:
- ADULTS who have full-time jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job.
- MOTHERS who can't justify a small job and daycare, because as a carrier, you do not need daycare!
- COLLEGE STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
- SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added income, or just want to work with people, neighbors, and friends.

How much money can I make as a carrier?
Depending on the size of the distributorship from $300 to $700 monthly! Some make even more!

How long does it take?
The actually delivery takes 1 - 2 hours Monday - Saturday, and 2 - 3 hours on Sunday, again depending on the size of the distributorship. Also, a few hours a month are needed to collect from subscribers. Many carrier's choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in subscribers' papers. Collecting in person will be necessary though!

When do papers have to be delivered by?
6 a.m. Monday - Friday and 7 a.m. on Saturday, Sunday and holidays.

Do I ever get a day off?
The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, carriers do take days off by finding a friend or family member to substitute for them!
