TOKYO — As police and dozens of reporters looked on, a right-wing extremist on Sunday ambushed and fatally stabbed the top scientist in the doomsday cult suspected in the lethal nerve gas attack on Tokyo's subways. Anguished nation mourns

FBI agents seize Army deserter; investigation widens

■ The living offer prayers for bombing victims, struggle to understand; President Clinton unveils new anti-terrorism steps.

Associated Press

OKLAHOMA CITY — FBI agents seized an Army deserter and questioned him Sunday in the bombing of the federal building, as the nation expressed its grief for the lost children and other dead with the tolling of church bells and tearful moments of silence.

As the investigation widened, some 20,000 people overflowed the state fairgrounds, where President Clinton and the Rev. Billy Graham addressed a memorial service on what the president declared a national day of mourning.

"Today, our nation joins with you in grief," Clinton said. "We mourn with you. We share your hope against hope that some may still survive." And he promised every effort "to bring to justice those who did this evil."

One of those listening, Tamara Meadows, said, "I think we all feel paralyzed." The death toll in the worst terrorist bombing in U.S. history stood at 78, with 150 people unaccounted for. More than 400 were injured in Wednesday's blast, caused by thousands of pounds of homemade explosives packed into a Ryder rental truck.

The search for more bodies — and survivors, though a fire official said there was little hope — was stalled by safety fears.

A 37-year-old nurse, Rebecca Anderson, died Sunday of head injuries she suffered in a fall while helping on Wednesday shortly after the bombing.

Spc. 4 David Iniguez, 23, was picked up by the FBI in San Bernardino, Calif., on charges unrelated to the attack and was questioned in connection with the bombing. FBI agents in Los Angeles, speaking anonymously, said he was questioned partly because of his resemblance to the dark-haired, square-jawed young man in one of two "John Doe" sus-

Photographer's 1st clue: Clerks wept

OKLAHOMA CITY — Charles Porter IV didn't realize his snapshot of a bloody baby cradled in the arms of a firefighter was anything special until three clerks at Wal-Mart, where he developed the film, started weeping.

"I was only thinking that they came out clear, they're in focus," said Porter, a 25-year-old bank employee who had never photographed anything more dramatic than the Bullnanza Rodeo at the Lazy E Arena.

April 19 joins days of tragedy that sap American innocence

By Tim Madigan and Thomas Korosec
N.Y. Times News Service

In the split second it took to detonate a 1,200-pound bomb outside Oklahoma City's Alfred P. Murrah Federal Building, the morning of April 19, 1995, was added to a list of convulsive, man-made events that have sapped the reservoir of American innocence.

On another sunny day in the southwest, 32 years before, a young president was assassinated: the dead president's brother and Martin Luther King Jr., killed five years after that ... Vietnam and Watergate ... the World Trade Center bombing, the L.A. riots ... Waco cultists and their children, engulfed in a nationally televised inferno on another recent April 19.

Now this huge, horrible day in the heartland.

As a nation watched from a distance, overwhelmed by the enormity, captivated by the racing manhunt, it was easy to forget, perhaps, that the historic tragedy was composed of hundreds of individual pieces, hundreds of people, hundreds of stories.

It was easy to forget that at 5:30 a.m. that Wednesday, a doctor and a federal worker were not yet rescuer or survivor, but a couple of old friends chugging away at YMCA exercise bikes; that a pregnant woman who sent her husband to work near the explosion later could not recall if she kissed him

Howard Cosell's caustic personality made Monday Night Football a national institution. Cosell died Sunday at 77.

Howard Cosell, 'world's most celebrated sportscaster,' dies

NEW YORK (AP) — Howard Cosell, whose caustic "tell it like it is" personality made him the world's most celebrated sportscaster and turned "Monday Night Football" into a national institution, died Sunday. He was 77.

Cosell, who underwent cancer surgery in 1991, died of a heart embolism at New York University's Hospital for Joint Diseases, grandson Justin Cohane said.

He was the strident, colorful voice of ABC radio and television from 1953 to 1992. It was a period of phenomenal growth and change in America's pastimes, spurred by television's cascading millions and increased greed among athletes and promoters.

Cosell chronicled it that way, revolutionizing a broadcasting industry more used to parroting the party line.

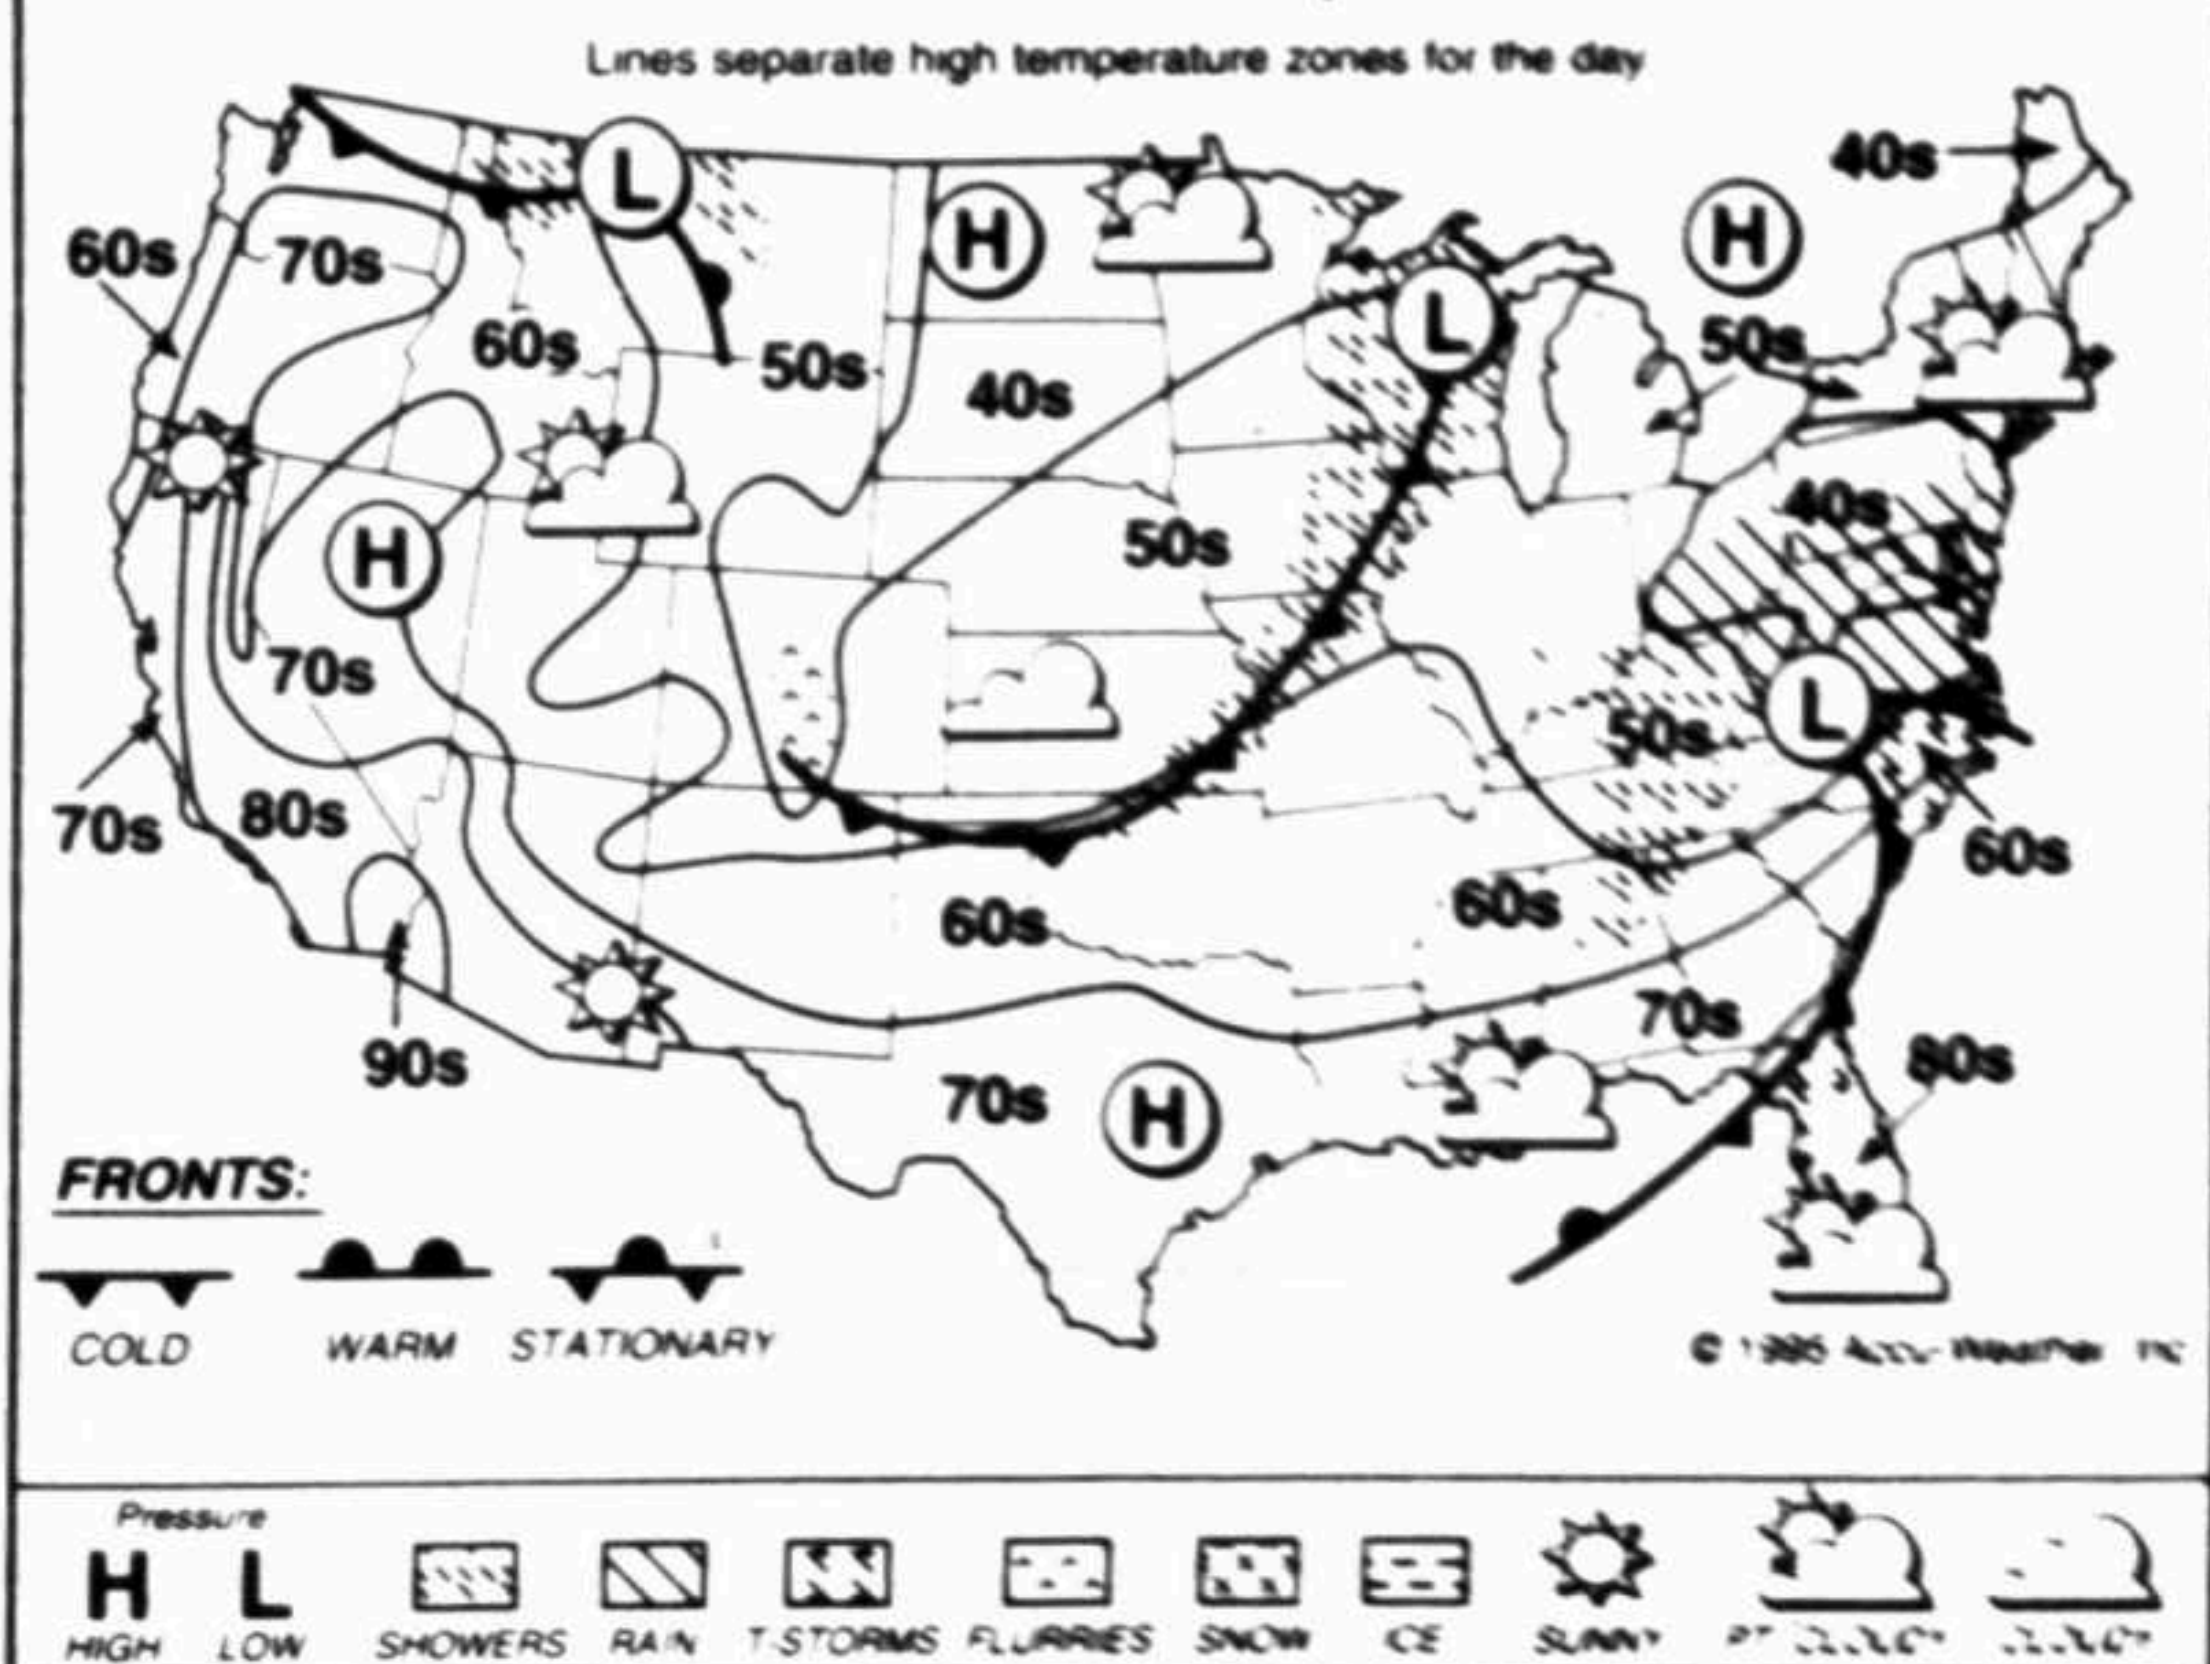

"Howard Cosell was one of the most original people ever to appear on American television," said ABC News President Roone Arledge, who was head of ABC Sports during Cosell's heyday.

SAP: April 19, 1995, was a monstrous day filled with slices of life, death goodbye, but remembered the pleasant scent of his cologne; that for so many, simple errands put them in harm's way.

It was easy to forget that a fate that seemed so cruel to some had amazingly spared others; easy to overlook the mounting evidence of human resiliency and the capacity of people to be touched by the suffering and heartbreak of strangers.

A tragedy of hundreds of individual pieces, hundreds of people, hundreds of stories. Here are just a few.

EMPTY SWINGS

Jim Hargrove tracked the passing of the workday by the ages of children romping below his office window. At 10 a.m., the youngest toddlers took over the outside playground of the federal building's day-care center. At 2 p.m., the older kids got their turn.

Observing them was a pleasant distraction from his job as a senior auditor at the Department of Health and Human Services.

"You couldn't help but watch them. They were so cute and cuddly," said Hargrove, 48, whose own daughters are 18 and 21. "You just kind of watched them grow up. You have your favorite redheaded one, your favorite blonde-headed one."

He got a special kick out of a pair of bouncy twin boys, about 2 years old, who liked to run up the slide instead of going down.

The explosion happened when the children were inside, probably seated around their morning snack, their playground swings and playhouse outside still empty. Hargrove, in his third-floor office that had such a splendid view of the children, was down and the dregs of his cup of coffee and winding up a phone call with some small talk about University of Oklahoma football.

Then the world crashed in.

His head on his desk, phone still in hand, Hargrove shook off the debris, listening to the first burst of sirens outside, but hearing no screams or human sounds, for a horrible moment thinking himself the only survivor. Then the familiar voices of all six co-workers reported through the rubble, those six voices plus an unfamiliar seventh voice, a man named Mike.

"I'm from the seventh floor," Mike said while being dug out from the third-floor rubble.

Hargrove and the others shimmied down to safety on ugly old office curtains tied into a rope, all of them uninjured. Later Hargrove spotted the twin boys from the day-care on the TV news, seemingly as feisty as ever. But one of Hargrove's employees had an 18-month-old son in the day-care center who remained missing as the week progressed.

So what should Hargrove feel now? Joy that he survived a holocaust? Grief for lost friends and the dead babies he used to watch play?

"It's really hard to reconcile that."

RACING TO HELP

From his office several blocks away, Tim Giblet worried first about a jetliner crash or a huge gas main explosion that might have caused the windows in the building across from his to shatter into a million bits.

Within minutes, the 43-year-old county worker was among the scores of volunteers who raced through the smoky morning that now smelled faintly of sulfur. Giblet entered the shattered federal building on the side opposite the bomb crater and joined a

WEPT: Image brought home tragedy powerfully

(From 1A)

The image brought home the tragedy powerfully. President Clinton mentioned it in a televised address.

Ever since, Porter's life has been in chaos. At times, he wishes he never took it. He can't even bring himself to pick up his camera.

But when he met with 1-year-old Baylee Almon's mother Saturday, he felt better.

"We never would have known she was treated so good if you didn't take those pictures," Aren Almon, 22, said during the tearful meeting.

"I'm relieved. I thought, 'What must they think of me?' I hope it didn't hurt you," Porter replied quietly, sitting with Ms. Almon at the family's dining room table.

"Of course it broke our hearts, but it let us see how much they did care," said the baby's grandmother, Debbie Almon.

Porter had been sitting at his computer in his office three blocks from the federal building when he heard the explosion Wednesday morning. He thought it might have been a planned demolition and he might get some interesting pictures.

Grabbing the camera he always keeps in the trunk of his car, he headed to the scene and was swept up in a tide of smoke, screams and sirens.

He looked through the zoom lens on his fully automatic Canon OES-A2 and started shooting. He had no idea what he had captured on film until he went to Wal-Mart about an hour later and waited 20 minutes for the prints.

"The only time I knew the pictures were dramatic, a little different, was when employees started looking at them and were weeping," he said.

Porter called a photography professor at his alma mater, the University of Central Oklahoma in Edmond, who suggested Porter take them to the AP. The professor is a personal friend; Porter said he has never taken a photography class in his life.

"I did not know that AP meant everywhere," Porter said.

He soon found out, when the calls started coming in from New York, London and around the world. His phone rang off the hook for two days with requests for interviews.

Overwhelmed by the attention, he asked a family friend, a lawyer, to help him screen calls.

In the hours after the bombing, he was so affected by the image of the child that he put the snapshot in his pocket and went to hospitals to try to find out her fate.

"Have you seen this baby? Have you seen this baby?" he asked nurses.

No one had. But by then, the Almons had found her at St. Anthony's Hospital. The baby had died before she reached the hospital.

Porter was raised in Stillwater, the son of an insurance salesman. He played baseball in high school and took pictures of sporting events. He graduated from college with a degree in accounting and finance. He and his wife, Sherilyn, were married 1 1/2 years ago.

With his short blond hair and round wire-framed glasses, he looks like the boy next door — a role much more to his liking than that of celebrity.

"I am not the focus of this whole thing, Mr. Fields and Mr. Averá did this," Porter said. "All I did was take a stupid photo."

pect sketches issued by the FBI.

But Justice Department spokesman John Russell said Iniguez was not "John Doe 2" and was not now a suspect.

Wearing a bulletproof vest as he was escorted by FBI agents into a federal building in Los Angeles, Iniguez was barraged with obscenities and shouts of "You coward!" and "I hope you die!" by a crowd outside.

Iniguez's sister, Silvia Flores, insisted he "would never have anything to do with the Oklahoma bombing."

Iniguez went AWOL from Fort Riley, Kan., on Aug. 23, and was declared a deserter a month later, said Air Force Lt. Col. Joan Ferguson, a Pentagon spokeswoman. She said Iniguez was awaiting court-martial for possession and distribution of marijuana when he deserted.

On Friday, the FBI arrested a man it said was one of the two "John Doe" suspects in the FBI sketches: Timothy McVeigh, a 27-year-old former GI with far-right political views. He was charged with taking part in the bombing.

McVeigh, like Iniguez, served at Fort Riley, as did Terry Nichols, one of two brothers being held as material witnesses.

The FBI said McVeigh had been infuriated at the government over the cult disaster at Waco, Texas, which occurred exactly two years before the bombing.

Clinton, in an interview with "60 Minutes" after the memorial service, angrily defended the government's actions against the Branch Davidian sect, which he said had killed federal agents before the raid and started the fire that left sect members and their children dead.

"To make those people heroes... is evidence of what is wrong," Clinton said.

While defending broad free speech, the president decried speech that inflames and divides. "You never know when there's some fragile person who's out there, about to tip over the edge, thinking they can make some statement against the system, and all of a sudden there's a bunch of babies at a day care center dead," he said.

At the bombing site, searches in the area where rescuers would most expect to find survivors were stalled because a 20-foot-square piece of concrete hung precariously from the ninth floor. Smaller pieces of debris fell on some workers in other areas.

Assistant Fire Chief Jon Hansen said it would be a miracle if anyone were found alive, but the delays nonetheless caused frustration.

Ray Blakeney of the medical examiner's office said the mood of his staff is "getting a lot worse. We know the work is going to have to be done, but it's frustrating not to be able to get on with it."

Hansen said rescue workers had cleared floors five through nine of bodies. But the second-floor day care center and the first-floor Social Security office, where more bodies were likely, had not yet been reached.

Hours before the ceremony at the state fairgrounds, spectators lined up for a mile.

Graham said that in their tragedy, Oklahomans had provided "a lesson of a community coming together."

A moment of silence in honor of the dead was observed across the nation. At a National Basketball Association game between the Charlotte Hornets and the Cleveland Cavaliers, play was halted, the teams retreated to their benches, and some in the stands buried heads in hands during a moment of silence.

Churchgoers remembered the victims and rescue workers in their prayers, and bells tolled around the country in the afternoon.

At Oklahoma City's Cathedral of Our Lady of Perpetual Help, the Rev. Peter Ashurst said the devastation had left Americans "confronted by the unanswerable." He urged them to seek answers in faith.

Parishioners at St. Eugene Church, where one member was among the missing, lined up to donate to a fund for her family. "The power of God will always exceed the power of evil," the Rev. Bill Pruett said.

JUDGE: Juror troubles overshadow business at hand group, along with problems with the deputies guarding them.

Also to be questioned today were three deputies, said Assistant Sheriff Michael Graham, whose department handles court security and guards jurors.

The troubles of the 18 jurors and alternates have overshadowed the business at hand: deciding whether Simpson murdered his ex-wife Nicole Brown Simpson and her friend Ronald Goldman on June 12, 1994.

It delayed this week's testimony until Tuesday, when criminalist Andrea Mazzola is scheduled to retake the stand for further cross-examination.

Last week, it halted testimony for part of Tuesday and all of Wednesday so he could talk to jurors one-on-one, then said he found no misconduct.

Mazzola's testimony began Thursday, but the trial was knocked off track again when most of the jurors and alternates balked Friday.

The judge then began the delicate task of questioning jurors again.

Legal experts said the jury's actions could be considered contempt of court and could provide the basis for a mistrial, but that was unlikely.

"The division of feeling among these jurors have to heal to some extent... or you'll end up having a mistrial by hung jury at the end," said Robert Pugsley, a professor at the Southwestern University School of Law.

COSELL: Celebrated sportscaster dies at 77

"He became a giant by the simple act of telling the truth in an industry that was not used to hearing it and considered it revolutionary."

Cosell was one of the first sportscasters to call Muhammad Ali by his new name after he changed it from Cassius Clay. He stood up for Ali when the heavyweight champion refused to enter military service during the Vietnam War and was stripped of his title.

"Howard Cosell was a good man and he lived a good life," Ali said. "I have been interviewed by many people, but I enjoyed interviews with Howard the best. We always put on a good show. I hope to meet him one day in the hereafter. I can hear Howard now saying, 'Muhammad, you're not the man you used to be.' I pray that he is in God's hands. I will miss him."

Few, high or low, escaped Cosell's acid tongue and biting sarcasm, including the institutions that won him fame: boxing and the National Football League.

After covering a 1982 heavyweight title bout in which champion Larry Holmes pummeled Randall "Tex" Cobb for 15 rounds, he swore to never again broadcast a pro fight.

"I am tired of the hypocrisy and sleaziness of the boxing scene," he said, calling for reform or abolition.

He withdrew from "Monday Night Football" in 1983, after 13 years. While acknowledging his reasons were largely personal — he and his wife were tired of his constant traveling — he also complained that "pro football has become a stagnant bore."

He criticized the TV industry for bringing former coaches and players into broadcast booths, and deplored the transfer of football teams from city to city as "a travesty, an affront to fan loyalty."

"He brought a new dimension to sports reporting. He was a showman and a journalist and a person always sensitive to the underdog," said Shelby Whitfield, a longtime colleague at ABC Radio.

Cosell was a TV producer, author and lecturer as well as a sportscaster.

MISSING SIBLING

Michael Carrillo worked on the fourth floor as director of the U.S. Department of Transportation for the region that includes Oklahoma. After the explosion, his brother, Rick Carrillo, displayed a photograph of his missing sibling with Michael Carrillo's three children: Amber, 17, Jimmy, 15, and Michael, 14.

"It's just so pointless," Rick Carrillo said. "Why?"

He began to weep when someone inquired about the name of Mike Carrillo's wife.

"She died last year," the brother said.

Mexican peace talks recess until May

SAN ANDRES LARRAINZAR, Mexico — After two days of talks delayed by two days of squabbling, rebel and government negotiators recessed Sunday until May 12 to consider proposals to reduce tensions while they try to make peace.

The weekend talks were intended only to set the framework for further negotiations — indicating that substantive talks on social reforms, the key issue in the rebellion that erupted Jan. 1, 1994, could be very far off.

According to statements read by spokesmen, the government proposed pulling its soldiers back from rebel areas and having Zapatista forces gather in three areas, where the government would house them during the talks.

The rebels countered with a proposal to have the Mexican army withdraw to the positions it held before a Feb. 8 offensive and promise freedom of movement and safety for refugees during the talks.

Berlusconi takes lead in Italy elections

ROME — Silvio Berlusconi's center-right coalition took a slight lead in regional elections Sunday, falling short of a resounding victory in the media magnate's campaign to return to power, exit polls suggested.

The local races were seen as a prelude to national elections. They offered the first direct test of the two big alliances formed after Berlusconi's government collapsed in December.

Berlusconi said the outcome showed that voters wanted what he wants — general elections "as soon as possible."

His Forza Italia party emerged as the No. 1 party, as much as 2.5 percentage points ahead of the former Communists, exit polls showed. The votes are to be counted officially on Monday.

RAI state television gave six regions to Berlusconi's conservative alliance and five to a coalition dominated by the ex-Communists. It said four were too close to call.

French officials collect dead peacekeepers

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — For a second Sunday in a row, French officials flew to Sarajevo to collect the bodies of dead peacekeepers and return them home from Bosnia.

Just minutes after the chief of staff of the French army, Gen. Marc Monchal, arrived, another French soldier was injured when he stepped on a mine in the government-held suburb of Butmir, just south of the airport.

That soldier was in stable condition with minor leg injuries, said Capt. Myriam Sochacki, a U.N. spokeswoman.

Most of Bosnia appeared to be quiet, but artillery exchanges continued along a key corridor of land in northern Bosnia held by rebel Serbs.

In Sarajevo, hospital officials said two civilians were wounded by Serb sniper fire on the northern outskirts of the city.

Lt. Gen. Bernard Janvier, the commander of U.N. forces in the former Yugoslavia, also flew to Sarajevo to attend a private ceremony for the three French peacekeepers killed Saturday in a munitions accident.

Ambusher fatally wounds Japanese cult scientist

TOKYO (AP) — As police and dozens of reporters looked on, a right-wing extremist on Sunday ambushed and fatally stabbed the top scientist in the doomsday cult suspected in the lethal nerve gas attack on Tokyo's subways.

The stabbing was the latest chapter in a wave of violence that has deeply shaken the Japanese, who have long taken the safety of their streets as a matter of national pride.

The vigilante-style attack occurred as Hideo Murai, 36, head of the Aum Shinri Kyo (Supreme Truth) cult's "Science and Technology Ministry," was returning to the cult's Tokyo headquarters Sunday night. Murai was one of the five top leaders of the cult.

Murai underwent surgery, but died of blood loss and internal injuries several hours later. He was pronounced dead early this morning, police said. Television networks broke into regular programming to broadcast the attack nationwide, some repeatedly showing a knife plunging into Murai's side in slow motion.

Aum believers were shown crying hysterically as Murai was taken away semiconscious. Dozens gathered at the hospital to donate blood for transfusions.

"Why didn't the police protect him?" demanded Yoshinobu Aoyama, the cult's lawyer. "They could have predicted this kind of thing."

Murai, 36, was believed to be a focus of the investigation into whether the cult was involved in the March 20 subway attack, which killed 12 people and sickened 5,500.

An attacker who called himself a right-wing extremist got to him first, however, pushing his way through a throng of media people stalking out the cult's Tokyo headquarters and slashing repeatedly at Murai with a kitchen knife.

After Murai collapsed into the door of the Aum office in a pool of blood, the attacker dropped his bloodstained weapon and was arrested by police at the scene.

Police identified him as Hiroynuki Jo, 29, and said he claimed to be a member of a rightist organization.

Japan's state-run television network, NHK, said Jo told police he wanted to punish Murai because of trouble caused by the cult.

The cult has denied any connection with the Tokyo attack.

The cult's spokesman, Fumihiro Joyu, said Asahara, in hiding since the subway killings, had been informed of the murder and was meditating to console Murai's spirit.

At a news conference early today, Joyu also hinted that Jo may have been put up to the stabbing by a larger force. He criticized the police and the media for "creating the image that it would be alright to kill Murai, or to kill Asahara."

"We do not feel hatred for the person who did this, or the force that may be behind him," Joyu said, without explaining what that force might be. "Hatred never ends with hatred, but only with love."

The cult has been the focus of an intense police investigation since the March 20 subway killings. Police have conducted daily searches of cult compounds over the past month and discovered tons of chemicals and equipment that could have been used to produce sarin, the kind of nerve gas used in the subway attack.

Reports quoting anonymous police sources said that officials have also uncovered evidence of facilities to make rifles, biological warfare labs and even plans to purchase nuclear weapons from Russia.

The subway killings inaugurated a series of crimes that have deeply rattled the Japanese sense of security.

Ten days after the subway attack, Japan's top police official, who was responsible for the investigation, was shot and nearly killed as he left home for work.

And, as Parliament passed a law banning the possession of sarin last week, hundreds of people were sickened by toxic fumes released at a major train station just south of Tokyo.

Underdog candidate Jospin wins opening round in French presidential race

PARIS (AP) — In a startling upset, Socialist Lionel Jospin finished first Sunday in the opening round of France's presidential election. The favorite, conservative Paris Mayor Jacques Chirac, took the second runoff spot.

Jospin, a former education minister, benefited from infighting that divided the more powerful right. But he faces an uphill battle in the final round of voting May 7, since French voters have tended to lean right in recent elections.

Conservative Premier Edouard Balladur conceded he was eliminated from the race and urged conservatives to back Chirac.

For the 40.1 million registered voters, the election was the first step in choosing their first new president in 14 years. The 78-year-old incumbent, Socialist Francois Mitterrand, had given only lukewarm backing to Jospin, but this may have helped the candidate avoid being seen as a continuation of a now-uninspired administration.

"You have created conditions for hope," Jospin told cheering supporters at Socialist Party headquarters.

With nearly 90 percent of the votes counted, Jospin had 23 percent, Chirac about 20 percent, and Balladur 19 percent.

Far-right voters showed their strength, giving Jean-Marie Le Pen of anti-immigrant National Front, his best-ever showing of more than 15 percent, according to the projections.

France's presidency is among the most powerful in the West. The president controls foreign and defense policy, appoints the prime minister, presides over Cabinet meetings, influences judicial appointments and can dissolve Parliament.

Chirac and Jospin have few significant differences in foreign policy. Both also have promised to make unemployment their No. 1 target, but any overtly leftist remedies espoused by Jospin would be unlikely to clear the conservative-dominated Parliament.

Jospin, waging his first national campaign, had to scramble to ensure the Socialist Party was included in the second round.

Only once since the current electoral system was implemented 30 years ago — in 1969 — was the left excluded from a presidential runoff, and Jospin's lead was the smallest ever of a first-round winner.

AP Laserphoto
Socialist presidential candidate Lionel Jospin is cheered by supporters as he arrives for a press conference in Paris at the end of the election's first round Sunday.

The last polls published before the voting showed Chirac with a solid lead over Jospin and Balladur, who were locked in a close race for second.

Either conservative — Chirac or Balladur — would have been favorable in a runoff with Jospin because of a recent conservative swing among French voters.

Turnout in French presidential elections is usually above 80 percent, but estimates by major polling firms predicted Sunday's election could fall just under that mark.

The election was filled with suspense because polls found more than a third of voters were undecided a week ago. Those voters appeared to have spared France an all-conservative runoff.

If Balladur, 65, had faced Chirac, 62, in the second round, it would have deeply divided the governing conservative majority and humiliate Mitterrand's once-powerful party, which controlled Parliament as recently as March 1993.

Instead, a Jospin-Chirac runoff means an abrupt end to the political career of the patrician Balladur, who was the heavy favorite until February.

Unemployment, which grew from 10.5 percent when Balladur became premier in April 1993 to 12.6 percent in December, was a major campaign theme and is one reason that Balladur lost his considerable early lead.

Mitterrand, 78, is ailing with prostate cancer as he completes his 14-year presidency, the longest in French history.

He voted in the small southern town of Chateau-Chinon, the first time in 21 years he was not on the presidential ballot. He lost in 1974 before winning two seven-year terms.

Chirac, the runoff loser in the past two presidential campaigns, voted in the Correze region of southwest France, which he represents in Parliament in addition to being the mayor of Paris. He shook hands, kissed babies and signed autographs.

Jean-Marie Le Pen, leader of the far-right National Front, finished fourth with more than 15 percent, better than his previous best in 1988 when he campaigned on a platform calling for deportation of 3 million immigrants.

Le Pen, voting at a nursery school in Paris, claimed French radio tried to undermine him during election day newscasts by "repeating every five minutes that the culprits in the Oklahoma City bombing were from the extreme-right."

Nearly complete returns showed another right-wing nationalist, Philippe de Villiers, won 5 percent. Communist leader Robert Hue got 8.8 percent, far-leftist Arlette Laguiller had 5.4 percent and ecologist Dominique Voynet had 3.3 percent.

Ravensbrueck survivors return to concentration camp to remember

RAVENSBRUECK, Germany (AP) — Women from 20 nations returned Sunday to the place that robbed them of babies, friends and years, where they were tortured for making dolls for their children and whipped for praying.

Carrying roses and wreaths, some in wheelchairs or with canes, they passed through the gates of Ravensbrueck, the former Nazi concentration camp, renewing the sense of sisterhood and inner strength that helped them survive.

Elderly now, all were in better health than they were when the Red Army liberated the camp April 30, 1945.

"I feel like a ghost," said 69-year-old Bella Eisenberg, a Polish-born Jew who now owns an art gallery in Omaha, Neb. "Is it possible I am walking? I'm supposed to be dead."

About 1,300 women sat on benches at the roll call square, where the SS had carried out beatings and executions. Some had fans or umbrellas to ward off the heat during two hours of speeches and choir singing. A Jewish prayer for the dead was held in the evening.

From 1939 until 1945, more than 130,000 women and children were imprisoned at Ravensbrueck, plus 40,000 men in a separate section. At least 50,000 prisoners are thought to have died there from shootings, medical experiments, beatings, slave labor, disease, hunger, or in the gas chamber. Until 1943, babies were aborted or drowned at birth.

"Death was always before their eyes," said Manfred Stolpe, the governor of Brandenburg state, where Ravensbrueck is located. "But ... humanity in these women did not die."

Almost daily during the first four months of 1945, the SS chose prisoners to be sent to the gas chamber, the only one known to have operated on German soil. Millions of Jews and other people were killed in gas chambers built in German-occupied Poland.

Being sick, weak or elderly often meant going to the gas chamber, which was hidden in a wooden shed outside the camp wall. Some tried in vain to look healthier or younger by pinching their cheeks or putting soot in their hair.

Researchers at the Ravensbrueck memorial estimate that within that four-month period, 6,000 women died in the gas chamber until it was torn down by the SS a few days before the Soviets arrived.

Gloria H. Lyon, a 65-year-old Hungarian Jew who lives in San Francisco, recalled one morning roll call.

Women SS guards — who wore knee-high jackboots and carried horsewhips — ordered two prisoners to be tied to metal posts. Nurses punctured the victims' arms with syringes and drew blood from them until they died.

"They drained them dry," said Lyon.

Katarzyna Mateja, 75, of Poland survived more than three years at the camp, where she and other Polish Catholics had held secret prayer services. The punishment for religious ceremonies was 25 lashes at the whipping block.

"We prayed every day," said Mateja. "I believe that this saved me."

Maryla Melamed, 68, of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., remembered waking up one day and seeing a Gypsy girl had hung herself from her bunk during the night.

Despite bad weather, thousands flee stampedes, massacres by Rwandan soldiers in refugee camps

GIKONGORO, Rwanda (AP) — Tens of thousands of people, most wounded or sick, fled along muddy roads Sunday from the refugee camp where at least 2,000 people were killed by Rwandan soldiers or trampled in stampedes a day earlier.

Soldiers buried the bodies in shallow graves and pit latrines at the Kibeho camp, about 12 miles south of Gikongoro and 55 miles southwest of the capital, Kigali. Hillsides that had been strewn with corpses were cleared by the end of the day, aid workers said.

A 10-mile line of panicked refugees streamed out of Kibeho toward the provincial capital of Butare, 20 miles east, or the border with Burundi, which lies beyond.

Most were sick or wounded, according to a team from the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees that visited the camp. A U.N. relief agency set up medical treatment centers along the way.

"They have thrown away all of their belongings, sacks of maize, plastic sheeting, personal effects," the team said in a report. "The road was piled high with these abandoned goods."

Rain turned the road into a nearly impassable quagmire. Trucks and buses sent to help evacuate the refugees were stuck 10 miles away.

Rain also apparently touched off Saturday's massacre.

Most of the refugees are ethnic Hutu who fear Tutsi reprisals for the slayings of about 500,000 people — mostly Tutsis — that occurred a year ago. The refugees fled last July when Tutsi-led rebels overthrew the Hutu-dominated government.

Kibeho, with about 120,000 refugees, was the largest of the camps initially set up by the French in the area for some 250,000 displaced people.

The French withdrew last year and the new government sent soldiers to begin closing camps on Tuesday, claiming they sheltered militias loyal to the former government.

On Saturday, camp residents, apparently seeking cover from the rain, tried to run through a cordon of soldiers surrounding it.

"This spooked the soldiers, and they started firing into the crowd," said Ray Wilkinson, UNHCR spokesman in Nairobi, Kenya.

When Hutu militiamen in the camp apparently returned fire, the soldiers responded with heavy mortars, the United Nations said. Other U.N. reports said people were killed by machetes, bayonets and rocket-propelled grenades.

"As confusion then became total chaos and panic, a large number of people, mostly women and children, were trampled to death," Wilkinson said.

A Doctors Without Borders worker who was in the camp Saturday, Etienne Quetin, said refugees may have attacked each other with machetes, but much of the killing was done by soldiers from the Rwandan Patriotic Army.

"What we did see with our own eyes was that the RPA was shooting into the backs of people who were fleeing," he said Sunday in Gikongoro. "That was old people, women. We also saw many shooting into the crowd."

Francois Musoni, 25, lay in a hospital tent in Gikongoro, an intravenous drip in his arm and a bullet wound in his right foot. He claimed the soldiers were not provoked.

"The RPA came and told us that we had to go home," he said. "And we looked up and saw soldiers surrounding us on a hill and they fired."

So many corpses were strewn about the camp after the shooting that a Doctors Without Borders team could not drive out, Quetin said. "We had to go walking over the bodies."

However, aid workers said Sunday the bodies had been all but cleared.

The United Nations initially put the casualty toll at 5,000 dead and 2,000 wounded.

But Sunday night, Lt. Kent Page, the U.N. military spokesman in Kigali, sharply revised his estimate downward to about 2,000 killed, with an estimated 600 more injured.

Asked why some aid agencies were putting the toll as high as 8,000, Page said they may have assumed that, since there were reports of 3,000 or 4,000 dead in one part of the camp, "there had to be twice as many in the whole camp. But that proved not to be true."

U.N. and aid workers reported more gunfire at the camp Sunday, but details were sketchy.

"It's clear that there have been new casualties," said Christophe Wiser, a Red Cross spokesman in Geneva. "I think there were some more deaths but it will be difficult to know how many."

Many refugees, afraid to return home, have resisted the evictions for fear of being killed once back home.

Freaknik closes with rainy weather

ATLANTA — After a second night of looting and traffic jams, the huge Freaknik street party slowly dispersed Sunday as revelers made one last cruise around the rainy city before heading home.

Freaknik was expected to draw more than 200,000 black college students and other youths to downtown Atlanta, but students who attended said about half that number came this year. City officials refused to estimate the crowd size.

Corey Griffin, 25, of Dalton said Freaknik '95 didn't measure up to last year's festivities.

"They tried to stop it before it got started," he said. "I think it's nice to come down here and spend some money, but I felt I was unwanted."

Video captures youths' attack on Big Bird

BRAINTREE, Mass. — A man who dressed as Big Bird for a 4-year-old's birthday party was beaten by six youths with a bat just after he left, an attack videotaped by the child's family, police said Sunday.

Wayne Quinn, 26, was taken to the hospital with badly bruised ribs and large bruises on his head and arms.

The youths, ages 16 to 20, had yelled obscenities at Quinn as he arrived dressed as the "Sesame Street" character at a house in this Boston suburb, Sgt. Karen MacAleese said.

When Quinn left, he changed out of the suit in a van and approached the youths, who were hanging out across the street from the house.

"I went over to ... ask them to knock it off with the language because of the kids," said Quinn, who was hired for the party. "They were looking for a fight."

He was punched, kicked and hit with a baseball bat.

Ex-Mississippi senator Stennis dies at 93

JACKSON, Miss. — Former Sen. John C. Stennis, a courtly Mississippi Democrat who exercised vast influence over America's military during his four decades in the Senate, died Sunday. He was 93.

Stennis died about 3:30 p.m. at St. Dominic Hospital, where he had been taken several days ago for pneumonia, said his son John Hampton Stennis.

Stennis earned a reputation in Washington for fairness and finesse that landed him delicate committee assignments and close association with eight U.S. presidents. But his opposition to integration blotted his record.

Stennis joined the Senate in 1947. At the time of his retirement in 1988, he was its oldest member.

"He was a great senator in every way. He was effective, respected and deeply appreciated by the people in Mississippi," said U.S. Sen. Thad Cochran, R-Miss. "He was truly a man of great stature. We have suffered a great loss."

Bomber eludes law officers' best efforts for 2 decades

By Richard Cole
Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — At this moment, somewhere near San Francisco, he could be fashioning the next bomb in the unprecedented, two-decade campaign of terror called the Unabom case.

The United States has never seen a bomber like him.

No one in U.S. history has ever set off as many bombs — 15 — over a long period of time — 17 years. And still he eludes a federal task force.

"We don't know what his motivation is. We don't know what his demands are. It's so damned difficult," Rick Smith of the San Francisco FBI office says of the Unabomber, so called because he initially targeted university and airline officials.

For two years, a San Francisco-based task force of two dozen agents from the FBI, Treasury Department, and Post Office has pored over travel records, tips, interviews, lab results and case records searching for clues.

"We're trying things in this case that we've never tried before," says Robert C. Barnett, head of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms office in San Francisco.

The investigators know so much, yet not enough.

This white, male, 40ish, killer-from-afar is quiet, antisocial, and very meticulous. He could easily buy the electrical switches he has used to kill two people and injure 23. Instead, he painstakingly builds them himself.

"He likes to show us his expertise," Barnett says.

'We don't know what his motivation is. We don't know what his demands are. It's so damned difficult.'

— Rick Smith of the San Antonio FBI office

His explosives are not exotic. From match heads he moved up to powders, and now uses material that could be scraped out of firecrackers. But he likely mixes his own chemicals.

The longer an explosion is contained, the fiercer the blast. So he experiments with larger and stronger pipes to do more damage.

"The bombs have increased in sophistication," says Smith. "Today he's more able to do certain things than 17 years ago."

Sometimes, he carves bomb parts out of wood instead of buying easily available metal pieces. He also likes to box his videocassette-sized devices in wood — sometimes using four varieties. He seems fascinated with wood.

He used to autograph his bombs, putting a metal tab with his mysterious trademark "FC" where it would survive the explosion. Not now.

"He doesn't need the 'FC' anymore — we can look at the bomb and know that he did it," says Barnett.

When his work of hellish art is finally ready, he takes it apart. And he builds it again. And again. And perhaps again. But he's still not finished.

Before he mails it, he lovingly polishes the outside. Pride of authorship, agents say. If a clean car works better, then a bomb should too.

He may pick his target at the last moment, almost as an afterthought.

The victims have changed over the years. First universities and professors, particularly engineering. Then aviation, almost blowing up an American Airlines flight in 1979. Then computer stores. In 1993, it was back to professors, including a geneticist.

In the latest attack, it was advertising executive Thomas Mosser, killed at his New Jersey home in December.

There's the wood again. Mosser lived on Aspen Drive. A previous victim, then-United Airlines President Percy Wood, lived in Lake Forest. The phony return a addresses on the bombs included Ravenswood and Forest Glen Road.

One bomb was in a book with a leaf design on it. Another had tree twigs attached.

But some have no obvious connection to wood at all.

For the return address, he sometimes likes universities. In the Mosser bombing, a nonexistent economist at San Francisco State. Before that, a department at Northwestern University or Sacramento State.

In the beginning, he was casual about delivering his bombs. He mailed some, but placed a few personally in parking lots, classrooms and stores.

In 1987, he recorded his first death, leaving a bomb in the parking lot of a computer store in Sacramento that killed the owner, Hugh Scrutton. But when he tried the same approach in Salt Lake City four months later, he was spotted. A composite drawing flashed across the nation.

"He was seen, and he knows he was seen," says Donald Davis, a top postal inspector in San Francisco.

It apparently frightened the Unabomber. For six years, he was quiet. And when he finally resumed his bombings in 1993, no more personal deliveries. He stuck to the U.S. Postal Service.

Barry must prove he can govern capital

Two decades after winning limited home rule, the nation's capital has finally had to pay for years of mismanagement by yielding many of its budget powers to a new financial control board of outsiders. But in signing legislation to create the new board, President Clinton was right to say that the District of Columbia has an opportunity as well as a burden. An independent panel overseeing the city's books could give the district something it has not had for years — credibility. That, in turn, could actually strengthen the case for increased federal aid.

Like other cities, The District of Columbia is being strangled by crime, drugs and poverty. But unlike other cities, it has no state government to help care for the poor. Its most immediate concern is a deficit that could reach $800 million in the current fiscal year, or about a quarter of its revenues. Unable to borrow from private sources, the district must borrow from the federal Treasury, for which it has had to accept a control board modeled after the one created for New York City in its fiscal crisis two decades ago.

The board has the power to reject the mayor's and city council's budgets, impose spending plans, review labor agreements and other contracts, and approve the choice of financial officer. Its creation resulted from an impressive bipartisan effort in which Eleanor Holmes Norton, the district's delegate in Congress, persuaded both Republicans in Congress and her own colleagues in the district that compromise made sense.

For obvious political reasons, she and Mayor Marion Barry have been emphasizing that it does not necessarily mean a loss of home rule for the capital. They are right, but only if Barry and the city council do not shirk their responsibility to get the district's house in order. Its finances are in such disarray that no one knows for sure how many people are on the payroll. Controls over disbursements are weak or nonexistent. Only after reforming operations can the city properly turn to Capitol Hill for help.

Barry has his own credibility problems. He returned to office after serving time in jail and now faces new accusations of misusing campaign funds. In his previous term, he expanded the city's bureaucracy, turning it into a personal patronage mill. He needs to do more to cut and streamline its government. The board can provide him with benchmarks, but the leadership has to come first from him.

ANOTHER VIEW
McNamara's 'apology' isn't enough for victims' families

Former Defense Secretary Robert McNamara's "apology" about the Vietnam War is a shameful act for which he should offer a real apology.

Defense secretary for two presidents — John F. Kennedy and Lyndon B. Johnson — McNamara helped draft our nation's Vietnam policy.

Now he says: "We were terribly wrong."

Were "we" wrong because we allowed ourselves to lose or wrong in principle? Were "we" wrong in our original goals or wrong in how the Kennedy and Johnson administrations tried to put their own political spin on the effort?

From reading excerpts from McNamara's recently published memoirs and listening to his comments in an Associated Press Radio interview, it seems the former defense secretary is apologizing for form over substance.

The only thing wrong with our Vietnam policy was our leaders — people like Robert S. McNamara and Lyndon Baines Johnson — left our troops out to dry, using them as political pawns in their game with the vocal, radical minority who protested.

If McNamara owes us something it is to be honorable and admit to the families of the 58,000 Americans killed in the Vietnam War that their loved ones died because of his own failure and weakness not because this nation was seeking to do something wrong.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, April 24, the 114th day of 1995. There are 251 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On April 24, 1800, Congress approved a bill establishing the Library of Congress in Washington, D.C., appropriating $5,000 "for the purchase of such books as may be necessary."

On this date:

In 1792, the national anthem of France, "La Marseillaise," was composed by Captain Claude Joseph Rouget de Lisle, an officer stationed in Strasbourg.

In 1877, federal troops were ordered out of New Orleans, ending the North's post-Civil War rule in the South.

In 1898, Spain declared war on the United States after rejecting America's ultimatum to withdraw from Cuba.

In 1915, the Ottoman Turkish Empire began the brutal mass deportation of Armenians during World War I.

In 1916, some 1,600 Irish nationalists launched the Easter Rising by seizing several key sites in Dublin, including the General Post Office. (The rising was put down by British forces several days later.)

In 1953, British statesman Winston Churchill was knighted by Queen Elizabeth II at Buckingham Palace.

Death threats aren't new to Boutros-Ghali

UNITED NATIONS — The Secretary General of the United Nations, Boutros Boutros-Ghali, understands what it's like to be in the cross-hairs of a terrorist. As he puts it, he's either been on terrorists' "black lists" or "waiting lists" for 18 years.

In one dramatic incident, Boutros-Ghali confidentially warned then-President George Bush about an alleged terrorist who was residing in the United States. Six months before the February 1993 World Trade Center bombing, Boutros-Ghali alerted Bush to the danger posed by Sheikh Omar Abdel Rahman. The Muslim cleric now stands accused of masterminding the bombing, which until last week's explosion in Oklahoma City was the costliest terrorist incident in American history.

After the FBI infiltrated Rahman's fundamentalist group, they learned that the organization also planned to blow up the United Nations — preferably while Boutros-Ghali occupied his 38th floor suite.

The "SG," as he is known at the U.N. building, takes the death threats and attempts in stride. "I am a fatalist," Boutros-Ghali told our associate Dale Van Atta during an exclusive interview. "I believe very much that the day of your death is known in advance."

Boutros-Ghali's fatalism may be derived from his family history. His grandfather, Boutros Ghali, was Egypt's only Coptic (Christian) prime minister. He was assassinated in 1910 by Muslim nationalists who believed he was a British puppet for allowing the Sudan to be carved out of Egypt.

By the time his grandson, Boutros, was born 12 years later, the family had added the slain ancestor's name to the family name so all would be named Boutros-Ghali thereafter. That's why the sixth secretary general of the United Nations has the much-stumbled over double name, Boutros Boutros-Ghali.

Boutros-Ghali's rise to power came amid turmoil. When Anwar Sadat made his historic visit to Jerusalem in 1977 to discuss peace with Menachem Begin, Sadat's foreign minister resigned in protest.

The deputy foreign minister, Boutros-Ghali, stepped forward and into history. He labored with diplomatic distinction to help craft what became the Camp David Accords, and peace between Egypt and Israel.

This earned him enmity from Palestinian terrorist groups. He explained: "I was on the blacklist of the Palestinians because they believed I was the mastermind behind the 1977 Sadat visit to Jerusalem. He is the mastermind," they charged, "and he has betrayed us." When I would enter a room (at an Arab League meeting, for instance), all of the Arabs would leave the room. They refused to shake hands."

Friends were assassinated during those days, and he poignantly remembered flying to Cyprus to collect the body of an Egyptian peace-negotiating comrade killed by Palestinian commandos. Or the time two Palestinians in 1978 tried to plant a bomb in his office, but were discovered.

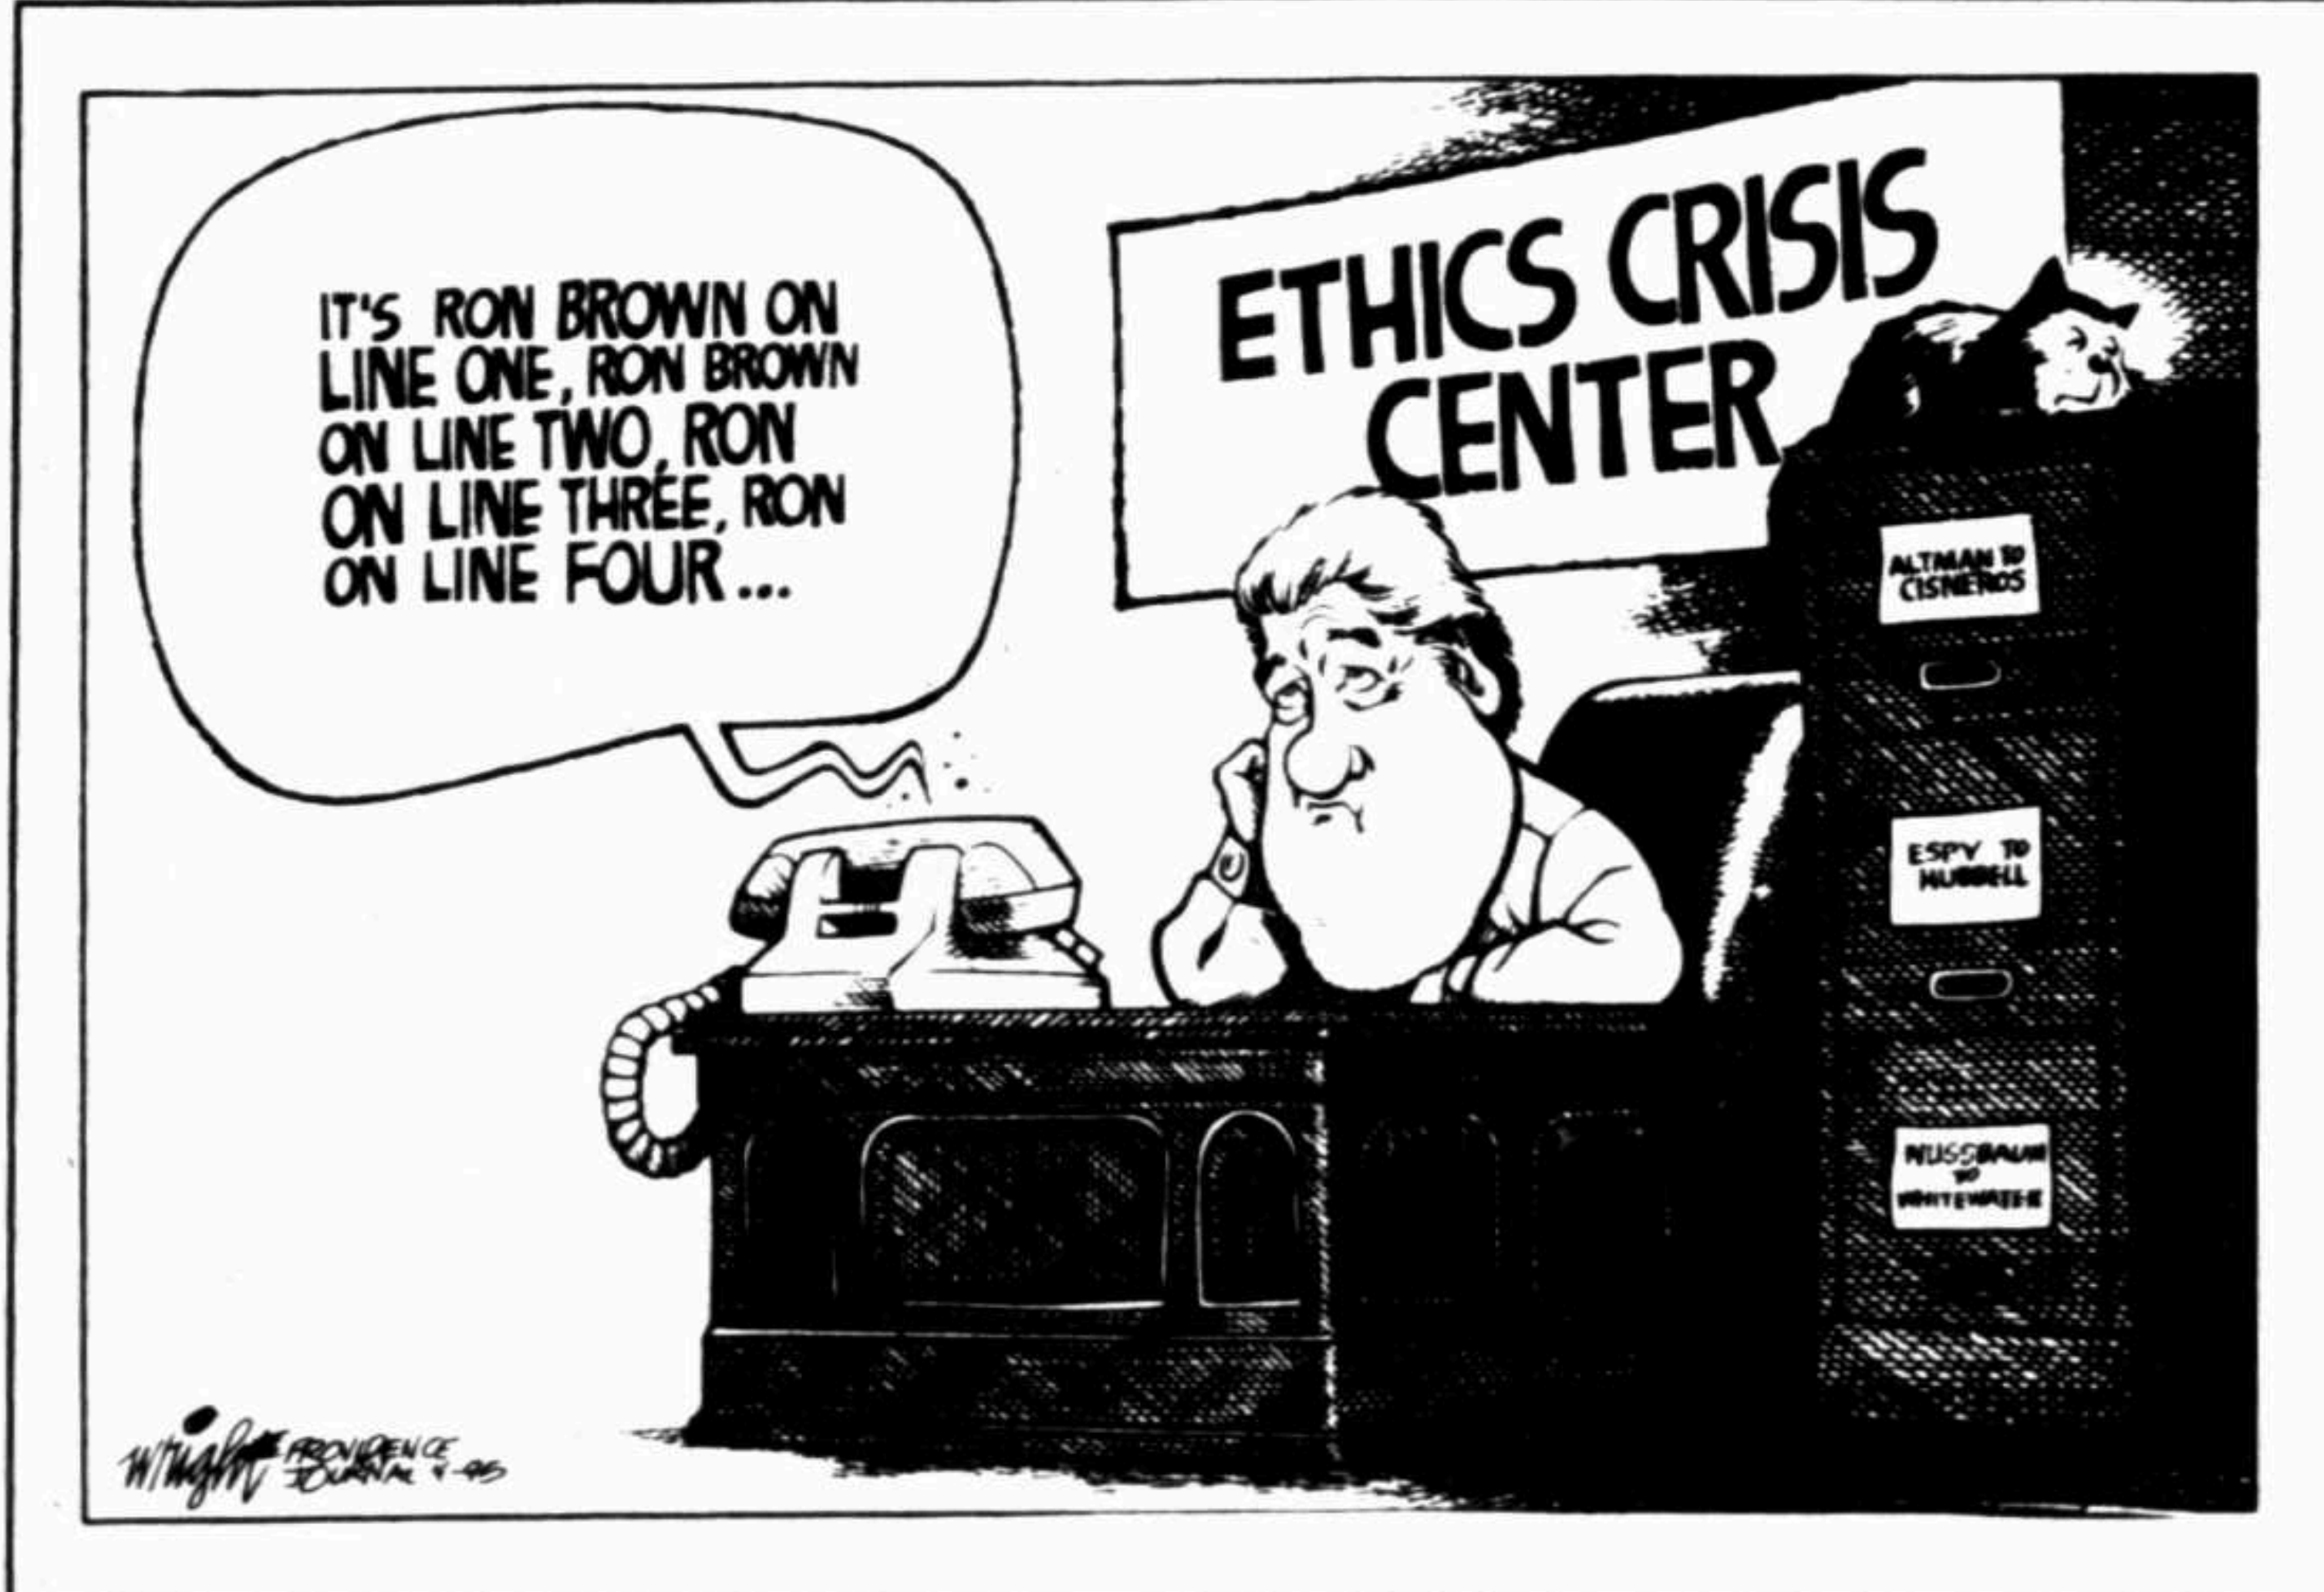

Is his life still in danger from the same groups? "The people who are on their blacklist change. Now perhaps I am not on it. But I am always on their waiting list," he quipped.

Threats against his life are many and varied. His life was in some peril from warring Somali clans, for instance, when he visited Mogadishu in late 1992. Security was so heavy that he had to skip a lunch planned in his honor and instead dined on army rations in the safety of an area secured by the U.S. military.

CHARLEY REESE

Iraq's treatment of prisoners is only expected

Someone suggested that I write about the two Americans sentenced to eight years in an Iraqi prison for illegally crossing the border.

OK. If I were working in Kuwait, I wouldn't go within 10 miles of the Kuwait-Iraqi border.

I'm sorry for them and their families, but why in the name of reason would any American expect Iraq to act differently than it has?

In case you have forgotten, the United States, intervening in a dispute between Iraq and Kuwait, bombed Iraq "back into the pre-industrial age," to use the phrase of the Bush administration, and killed an estimated 200,000 to 250,000 Iraqis.

Next, the United States bribed and bullied the U.N. Security Council to impose on Iraq conditions that clearly violate the country's sovereignty. Then the United States attempted to foment a rebellion which the Iraqis put down with another great loss of life. Then the United States, in further violation of Iraqi sovereignty, imposed no-fly zones in northern and southern Iraq.

But, wait, it doesn't stop there. For four years, the United States has adamantly insisted on a cruel economic embargo, which has killed additional hundreds of Iraqis from malnutrition and lack of medicines (mostly elderly and children), destroyed their economy and prevented their recovery from war damages.

And, no, that's not all. The U.S. government is still spending millions of taxpayers money to have the CIA conduct one of its famous covert operations to propagandize (read: distort and lie about) Iraq. All that done to a country whose government, regardless of what you think of it, had never even threatened to do any harm to the United States prior to going into Kuwait.

Now, do you seriously think that Iraqi border guards are going to be kind, considerate and understanding of Americans who wander across the border of their country? Could you possibly believe that the Iraqi government is going to say, "Oh, by Jove, by all means, let's be friendly and let these chaps go home. After all, Americans have been so kind and fair to us?"

Frankly, the guys are lucky to be alive.

I think one of the weirdest, strangest aspects of some contemporary Americans is their ability to become indignant when someone who has been cruelly treated by the United States doesn't respond by kissing our keisters.

Frankly, that's sick.

OK, if you want to make enemies, go ahead; but for heaven's sake, don't kill and brutalize people and then expect them to like you. Don't treat people unjustly and expect them to treat you fairly. Don't make a mockery of international law and then self-righteously proclaim it a defense when two of your citizens violate Iraqi law.

I'm willing to make enemies if people give me no choice in the matter, but once I do, if they are not all stone dead, I never trust them for the rest of my life. Human nature is immutable, and getting even is as integral to us as bone marrow.

We foolishly allowed the American elite, which has heavy financial ties to the dictator of Kuwait, make enemies of the Iraqi people for the elite's own financial and domestic political interests. And we're still allowing it.

Well, at least don't be childish. People we injure and wrong have a natural right to fight back, and they will if they get a chance. Do you think Iraqis who watched their children die in their arms because of our actions are going to say, "Oh, let bygones be bygones, after all, the jolly old Americans didn't like our president?"

Let me tell you an Arab story. A man killed another man to avenge a wrong that happened 40 years earlier. When he returned to his village and told his neighbors that he had finally killed the man, his best friend said, "Why were you in such a hurry?"

You may think the Gulf War is over. I doubt the Iraqis think so.

MIKE ROYKO

America's image of civilized society is false one

It was thoughtful of Margaret Richardson to comfort us while we endured the pain of paying taxes this week.

Richardson is the head of the Internal Revenue Service. And she offered us the words of the great Oliver Wendell Holmes.

"Taxes," Holmes said, "are what we pay for civilized society."

A simple sentence, yet it has such broad meaning.

If we look at taxation that way, we have little reason to grumble. Just the opposite. That check to IRS becomes a bargain, a sweet deal, a small price to pay for the benefits of living in a society that is civilized.

Now, don't you feel better? What, you don't? Then let me try to guess what still bothers you. It's the word "civilized," right? I thought so.

Yes, I have a problem with that word, too. My dictionary provides this definition: "1. Having an advanced or humane culture, society, etc. 2. polite, well-bred, refined."

There are those who might question how humane we are, as a society. How polite, well-bred and refined.

By coincidence, I was thinking about the words of Oliver Wendell Holmes when a call came in from the widow of Judge Jack Arnold Welfeld.

Judge Welfeld died a few days ago. He lived a long life, 82 years. And he had a satisfying career in law and as a Circuit Court judge in Cook County.

His family said he was a gentle, humorous man who treated others kindly and fairly. He liked helping people.

In other words, the sort of person who contributes to the civility found in a civilized society.

But his wife was unhappy. That he died, of course. But also about some of the circumstances.

The judge had a heart attack while he was driving his car. He collapsed, and his car rammed into the back of another.

Within moments, a witness said, as many as eight people rushed to Judge Welfeld's car.

To offer help? That would be the civilized thing to do when someone has an accident and is unconscious, possibly dead or dying.

That wasn't their motive, the witness said. Instead, they looted the car and the pockets of an old man who was dead or dying. Then they vanished.

It wasn't a very civilized thing to do. As the judge's widow said: "This is not the way we want to live."

No, but despite what IRS Commissioner Richardson said, that's the way it is, and we seem to be stuck with it.

The judge had his heart attack on the West Side of Chicago, the 4500 block of Madison Street.

That's a poor and dangerous neighborhood with the usual ingredients: high unemployment, crime, chronic welfare, narcotics, drunks, gangs, kids who don't know their fathers, fathers who don't care.

But it could have happened in many other neighborhoods in Chicago. Or in New York, Detroit, Philadelphia, L.A. and any number of cities.

There are those who would say that we shouldn't be shocked (which I'm not), because this is what happens when a society has so many people who are poor and lack motivation and hope.

And we've just been told that no other Western society has as great a gap between the rich and the poor as we do.

Which is probably true. But, then, most other Western societies aren't as multicultural and multiracial as we are, with all the historic baggage that carries.

So that would be excusing the actions of the looters: An unjust society made them do it.

But I don't buy it. I don't think anyone who lives in the neighborhood of the 4500 block of Madison Street is so desperately hungry that they have to mug an old guy who is dead or dying.

The hospitals serving that area treat more than their share of wounds from guns, knives, bats, fists and feet. But they get few cases of Somalia-like starvation.

As poor as the people in that neighborhood are — by the United States' standards of poverty — there are few households that don't have a check from welfare, food stamps, a TV set, radios, a stove, refrigerators, lamps, hot and cold running water, toilets that flush, roofs that don't leak, and doors that lock.

By the standards of much of the world — or this country in the Great Depression — the looters are far from poor. Millions would consider them well off.

What they lack is not the price of a square meal. They are lacking civility.

So IRS Commissioner Richardson might reconsider whether she wants to go around quoting Oliver Wendell Holmes on taxes being the price we pay for a civilized society.

A lot of people might start demanding a refund.

Vietnamese 'lost' commandos demand back pay for services

Associated Press

In 1959, the United States began a covert intelligence and sabotage campaign inside North Vietnam with young men recruited mostly in South Vietnam. In the next 10 years, many wound up as prisoners of war.

To help conceal the effort, U.S. officials eventually halted payment to the families of captured Vietnamese commandos, claiming they were dead, according to recently declassified documents.

Some of these POWs languished in prison for decades, then made their way to the United States only to discover the government they served refused to admit they exist.

Now a lawsuit to be filed in Washington today is demanding that recognition in the form of back pay for 281 surviving commandos.

"We left them. Then we swept it under the rug," says Miami lawyer John Mattes, who's filing the claim. "Everyone hoped they would die off."

The State Department has said it would help them obtain visas, but Mattes said the pleas for back pay — amounting to only $2,000 a year each — were ignored by the CIA and Defense Department. That led to the lawsuit.

Spokesmen for the two agencies did not return calls from The Associated Press.

Details of the operation — so sensitive it was financed first by the CIA and then secretly through the Joint Chiefs of Staff — have emerged from a recently declassified 1970 summary. The secret war was called OPLAN 34A under the CIA and changed to MACSOG (Military Assistance Command-Studies and Observations Group) when the military took over in 1964.

Beginning in 1959, long before the United States officially geared up for the Vietnam War, military authorities were recruiting Vietnamese citizens, many out of high school, for the secret operations.

Teams of commandos of up to 10 members were formed "to execute special operations or unconventional warfare missions" on enemy territory, according to the summary quoted in the lawsuit. Each team received a code name, such as Ares, Tellus or Swan.

Some sailed into North Vietnam in junks specially built to resemble native craft. Others parachuted from planes with special fuel tanks for long-range flights, or landed by helicopter.

"These aircraft operated all the way to vicinity of the NVN-Chinese border," according to the MACSOG summary.

But the results were disastrous. Not a single commando was recovered from North Vietnam, the summary says. The operation was finally terminated in 1969.

"It was a one-way street," Mattes said. "Send in another team, send in another team, send in another team — they never came out."

Mai Van Hoc and Ngo Phong Hai, who now live in the San Jose, Calif., area, were typical. Their team was dropped close to the Chinese border to gather intelligence, but was quickly spotted. They radioed in some troop movements while calling for an immediate pickup. North Vietnamese troops arrived first.

Four commandos were killed in the firefight. One was executed later. Hai and Hoc were taken prisoner.

When they were finally released and reached the United States, they were stunned to hear from the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service that no record of their wartime service existed.

"We had no name, no fame. We didn't expect that," said Hoc. "But when it was over, we were abandoned."

Other commandos filing claims include frogmen teams engaged in sabotage on islands in the Gulf of Tonkin.

Their secret activities — rather than unprovoked aggression — apparently led to the North Vietnamese attack on the U.S. destroyer Maddox in the 1965 incident that sparked a massive U.S. escalation of the war.

"We believe that present OPLAN 34A activities are beginning to rattle Hanoi, and Maddox incident is directly related to their efforts to resist these activities," then U.S. Secretary of State Dean Rusk cabled at the time.

"My name is Crystal and I'm in the sixth grade," wrote another youth from California. "I'm so sorry for what happened. I wouldn't like my kid to be in that and maybe die. I would try to take down the person that did it."

An El Paso, Texas, man, Edward Jaquez, sent a poem he had written.

"So many lives have been lost
And for what reason I'll never understand
How could this happen to so many innocent people.
How could this happen to our home land."

Jake Lowrey, a spokesman for Children's Hospital, said a Baptist minister's wife in Texas telephoned him Sunday to say she was taking donations from parishioners to help with the children's medical bills and would send the money to the hospital.

A South Carolina school teacher telephoned to say she was sending drawings and poems.

A Chicago woman said her prayer group had put all the children's names on a prayer list.

"Anytime children are injured, especially when it is an act of terrorism, the hearts of people just go out to them," Lowrey said. "Everyone deeply wants to do something to help, however small it might be, anything at all. It really helps the families to know other people are out there sharing their grief and praying for recovery."

The six children still hospitalized range in age from 20 months to 15. Their injuries range from burns of more than 55 per cent of their body to fractures. The most critical is a 4-year-old girl who has serious head injuries, Lowrey said.

Children living without fathers are more likely to be poor, study shows

WASHINGTON (AP) — The number of children living without fathers has quadrupled since 1950, and the number of young men earning salaries below the poverty line has risen even faster, said a private study released Monday.

Twenty-four percent of American children lived in mother-only families in 1994, according to the sixth annual Kids Count Data Book, produced by Annie E. Casey Foundation. That is a sharp increase from the 6 percent who were living without fathers 45 years ago, the foundation said.

Researchers, while not excusing fathers who abandoned their families, blamed the trend partly on unemployment and declining wages.

Since 1972, the median income of all men aged 25 to 34 has fallen by 26 percent in inflation-adjusted dollars, the study said.

The percentage of men 25 to 34 with incomes below the poverty level for a family of four more than doubled — increasing from 14 percent to 32 percent in 24 years, the foundation said.

In 1993, nearly half of all black and Latino men in that age group did not earn enough to lift a family of four out of poverty, the study said.

"The simple truth is that disadvantaged young men who do not have the education, skills or opportunity to succeed in today's economy are not prepared to contribute as providers, protectors and mentors to their children," said Douglas W. Nelson, the foundation's executive director.

Census Bureau data show that more 19 million youngsters live without fathers, the foundation said. One-quarter of those children live in neighborhoods where more than half of all families lack fathers.

Children growing up fatherless are five times more likely to be poor, the study said. They also are twice as likely to drop out of high school and significantly more likely to end up in foster care, group homes and juvenile justice facilities.

To reverse the trend, Nelson suggested putting a higher priority on improving education for poor and minority male students, reforming welfare, and redoubling efforts to reduce the unemployment rate.

Maverick County becomes focus of high-profile tort reform lawsuits

EAGLE PASS (AP) — Isolated, impoverished Maverick County on the Texas-Mexico border has found itself at the epicenter of the state's current tort reform temblor.

Two lawsuits in state district court here involving thousands of plaintiffs have raised questions about current Texas laws governing where court cases can be filed and who can file them.

"It's interesting that a small, poor county, which is what we're dealing with there, is becoming a magnet for litigation of that magnitude," said George Diaz-Arrastia, a corporate defense lawyer in one of the lawsuits.

Campaign contributions are also in the mix.

Several lawyers in the two cases contributed thousands of dollars to the presiding judge's campaign in 1993, the year before the lawsuits were filed, according to campaign finance reports reviewed by The Associated Press.

The lawsuits underscore last week's Texas Senate approval of a bill aimed at stopping venue, or forum, shopping. With a couple of exceptions, the measure strictly limits where a lawsuit can be filed to where the event occurred or where a defendant lives or has a principal office.

Gov. George W. Bush backs the bill, which now heads to the House.

The new law would not affect the pending Maverick County cases.

Plaintiffs' lawyers in the lawsuits say they have done nothing wrong and that they have diligently represented their clients.

"We have complied with the letter of the law.... Just give us the rules, we'll apply them," said attorney Rene Barrientos of Eagle Pass, a plaintiffs' lawyer in both cases.

One lawsuit pitting more than 2,000 plaintiffs against Prudential Securities Inc., Polaris Investment Management Co. and other defendants claims investment fraud in connection with the selling of Polaris funds.

Reuben Riskind is the only plaintiff who lives in Maverick County. Current Texas law permits venue to apply to all plaintiffs if it is established for one.

In recruiting plaintiffs from across the country, San Antonio attorney Pat Maloney Sr. and his associates held seminars that emphasized Maverick is a predominantly Hispanic, poor county with high unemployment and high-dollar jury verdicts.

The seminars also touted the advantages of filing in the court of state District Judge Amado Jose Abascal III.

"The judge understands things and we understand him and the jurors are, are bountiful and we just like it there," one plaintiffs' attorney was quoted as saying, according to court records.

Tom Rickhoff, a justice on the 4th Court of Appeals in San Antonio, sharply criticized the tactic, despite his and the court's ruling against Polaris on a venue challenge.

"Something is seriously amiss when plaintiffs or defendants are allowed to conduct such appalling forum shopping and tactical maneuvering," Rickhoff wrote last fall.

The Texas Supreme Court backed the 4th Court's ruling, saying it had no authority to overrule Abascal.

Abascal did not return telephone calls from The Associated Press.

Prudential defense attorney Richard L. Josephson of Houston said it's no secret Maverick County — with a per capita annual income of $5,063 — and other poor border counties often produce favorable plaintiffs' verdicts.

It also happens elsewhere in Texas, he said.

"You can probably list a 'Plaintiffs' Top 20,'" Josephson said, noting that plaintiffs' attorneys have filed a number of multi-plaintiff breast implant lawsuits in favorable counties across Texas.

Democrats can't win Texans, state GOP chairman says

DALLAS (AP) — Democrats can talk all they like about getting back in touch with Texans, but that won't happen, state GOP chairman Tom Pauken said Sunday.

"They're out of touch with mainstream Texans with their liberal philosophy," Pauken said in reaction to an address by Land Commissioner Garry Mauro.

Democrats must return to their grass roots and avoid kowtowing to "extremist" Republicans to win the hearts — and votes — of Texans in 1996, Mauro told Saturday's meeting of the State Democratic Executive Committee.

Pauken said that there was nothing the Democrats could do "unless there's a big change and movement back to the center."

Mauro told the SDEC the party was "under siege" from Republicans and warned fellow Democrats that appeasement is not the answer.

"The last thing we need to do is let those 'footsies' players call the shots," said Mauro, one of the few Democrats to win statewide election last fall as Republicans made big gains across the country. "We have to commit ourselves to re-elect Bill Clinton president."

Mauro, who will return to his post as Clinton's campaign coordinator in Texas, also chided Gov. George W. Bush over his decision to withdraw the state's request for federal approval of the Coastal Management Program.

Mauro drafted the program, which Texas must have in place by September to avoid losing about $2.4 million in federal funds next year for coastal protection projects. Bush has said he'll give the plan another look, but that didn't stop Mauro from attacking "radical" Republicans.

"We cannot allow Republicans to turn back the clock," he said, referring to the party's attempts to restrict affirmative action programs. "It's good for all Texans, and as a Democrat it's one of the things I'm proudest of."

Mauro, who has held his office since 1982, offered a history lesson to pundits who have written off Clinton in the 1996 presidential derby.

"They wrote off Harry Truman in 1948 when Congress was against him," he said. "But he didn't listen to experts, and he won."

The committee also was scheduled to discuss party organizational matters and the selection of delegates next year, Texas Democratic Party Chairman Bob Slagle said.

Citizens get taste of what life is like in mock Congress

FORT WORTH (AP) — Two North Texas congressmen decided to let several hundred private citizens drive for a while.

The substitutes couldn't eliminate the federal deficit, either.

A mock Congress organized by Reps. Pete Geren, D-Fort Worth, and Joe Barton, R-Ennis, allowed people a chance to face the dilemmas that confront the nation's lawmakers.

"The event is a full-scaled mock Congress charged with a goal of passing a balanced federal budget," said Barton, who played House Speaker Newt Gingrich.

Participants in the Saturday convocation at the American Airlines Training and Conference Center were directed to decide, under the rules of the U.S. House of Representatives, what to cut from the president's budget requests.

Despite a daylong struggle over Medicare, mass transit and foreign aid, the group of teachers, business executives, homemakers and political activists never escaped the red.

But some insisted they got much closer to ending the federal deficit than Washington will.

"I would venture to say our cuts will be more than achieved in the real Congress," said Tarrant County District Clerk Tom Wilder, a Republican.

The mock representatives — 172 Republicans and 161 Democrats — broke into committees like their namesakes to hash out cuts, and then went to the floor for amendments and a final vote.

House Budget Committee Chairman John Kasich, an Ohio Republican who traveled to Texas to play himself, told the mock lawmakers that their efforts might prove to Congress that a balanced budget is possible.

"The federal budget is controllable," he said. "It doesn't take a rocket scientist."

Geren, in his official role, voted for eight of 10 items in the GOP Contract with America. Nevertheless, on Saturday, he pushed more defense cuts in portraying House Minority Leader Richard Gephardt, D-Mo.

In the end, the mock Congress cut the fiscal 1995 budget by less than 5 percent and reduced the expected deficit from $193 billion to $158 billion, Wilder said.

Businessman Frank Snell said it was ultimately unrealistic because mock lawmakers didn't have to contend with powerful lobbyists or have to worry about re-election.

The Bayou City's on a lucky streak

By Roy Bragg

N.Y. Times News Service

HOUSTON — It certainly says something about Texas' largest city when the town map shows hospitals, schools and places to dump bodies.

Ah, the Bayou City. A town proud of its brown air and foot-long cockroaches.

I came here because Houston was on something of a lottery winning streak a few months back, and right now it stands about even — about 20 percent of the tickets sold and 20 percent of the lottery win-

And now maybe it's on its way back. A Baytown man won March 22, and Steve Levine, Texas Lottery Commission spokesman, says: "Houston is due."

Great.

What is it that makes Houston so special? Or to be more blunt, why is anyone living here, much less living here and buying lottery tickets?

It's uncomfortable. The humidity frizzes your hair, fogs your glasses and makes your clothes mildew as you wear them. On a positive note, the moisture-laden air does cause stray bullets to travel farther.

Folks here like to talk about being tough on crime. Well, nearly 25 percent of the state prison population and the same amount of death row inmates come from Harris County. That doesn't sound like a law-and-order town. Sounds to me like they've just got stupid crooks and a bunch of them.

Or maybe sending all those criminals up to Huntsville, where the major state

Most teachers can expect a small token of appreciation from their students and/or the students' parents during their careers.

Be it a gift certificate, a store-bought item or the proverbial apple, the gifts usually are reserved for special occasions, such as Christmas.

One Midland woman, however, is making sure her children's teachers are appreciated all school year long.

From crocheted baskets to baked goods to homemade ice packs, teachers who have either of Karen Cover's two boys in their classes have been the recipients of many gifts from a woman who thinks they are worth it.

"I like to make all kinds of crafts and this was a good outlet for it, aside from my family," said Mrs. Cover. "Plus, teachers do a lot and I want to make sure they feel appreciated for it."

"I have always liked art and paints. I like to create different items."

Mrs. Cover began making goodies when her older son, Aaron, was in kindergarten. Aaron is now in the second grade and his brother Christopher is in kindergarten — and the gifts keep coming.

"I try to remember the big occasions, like a teacher's birthday or Christmas or Valentine's Day," she said. "But, I'll also make things throughout the year."

She has made baskets, handmade toys and decorated sweatshirts. However, her most imaginative gift was originally the idea of a friend.

"I have a friend who lives in New Mexico who suffers from arthritis Mrs. Cover said. "She took two finger towels, sewed them together and filled them with rice. She can heat the rice to be used as a heating pad or it can be put in the freezer and used as an ice pack. That is by far the most popular item I have made."

Pulling together what Cowtown's 'Citizens on Patrol' does best

EDITOR'S NOTE — Texas lore has it that Fort Worth is where the Wild West begins. Well, something has tamed that town on the old Chisholm Trail. Not a quick-draw sheriff, but the people themselves and a scheme called Code Blue. It's a self-help movement that's spreading across the land.

FORT WORTH — Jennie Skidmore, a retired woman at home alone, discovered she needed a few things at the store. Be back in a jiffy, she said to no one, and hopped in her car.

As it disappeared down the street a nondescript auto with three men pulled up in front of her house. One got out. The car drove around to the back. The other two got out.

Just then a third car, with a blue emblem on the door, cruised by.

Spotting it, the two men jumped back in their auto, rushed around front to collect the third, and sped off.

When Mrs. Skidmore returned a police officer greeted her at the door.

"I wasn't gone 20 minutes," she recalled. "Can you imagine? I nearly got robbed."

Now Jennie Skidmore's own Toyota bears a blue emblem. It identifies members of COP — Citizens on Patrol. COP numbers about 3,000 Fort Worth citizen volunteers, a group three times the size of the city's police force.

They are trained at the city's police academy and equipped with police radios. And they are backed up by a specific neigh-

Thank You Note ...

Shortly before Christmas we received the sad news that one of our Parker Elementary students, Tyler Strickland, had been diagnosed with brain cancer. To add to the severity of the situation, Tyler was not covered by medical insurance. We immediately began a trust fund in Tyler's name to help the family with expenses incurred from the illness. We would like to thank Joe Andrews and Bank One for their help and support in establishing the fund. The fund remains open for contributions at any Bank One branch.

Tyler spent a couple of months in Dallas undergoing treatment. He has since returned to school between monthly treatments that require a couple of days in the hospital in Midland. At this time, Tyler is free of any sign of cancer; however, it will be five years before his family can be assured of no recurrence.

The purpose of this letter is to thank all the people who have contributed in any way to helping Tyler. Numerous Parker parents have donated to Tyler's fund. The children of the entire school collected cans every Friday to sell for Tyler. Commercial Metals has been very gracious and cooperative in redeeming the cans. Many of our moms at Parker have worked countless hours organizing a schoolwide garage sale to benefit the trust fund. A very special thank you to Paula Smallwood and Joni Fields for heading up that effort in which we raised over $4,000. We would also like to thank Service Merchandise, WalMart, Folgers, the Junior League's Next-To-New Shop, Ken's Rent-It Center and CiCi's Pizza for their donations to the garage sale, the Midland Reporter-Telegram, and local television stations for their publicity for the fund and garage sale. A Parker mom from another class helped Tyler's class make a quilt for him and she volunteered her time to sew it together. Mrs. Bernie Gibson's kindergarten class from Grady even made a book to send to Tyler after they had read about him in the paper.

The parents and students at Parker Elementary have done a tremendous job of working together to help out a young family in a time of crisis. We thank each of them as well as other nameless people who have been so kind and generous. We have all been so touched by watching this school and community pull together in an effort of goodwill. We are proud to be a part of the Parker staff and members of this community.

Differences between cats, dogs numerous

I thought I had read it all until I picked up the paper the other day and saw that a cat in Maine is being nursed back to health after suffering from anorexia.

How on earth can cats suffer anorexia? And why would they want to go to all that trouble just to look good for another cat? I suppose if any animal is going to suffer from a character flaw, it'd be cats.

Face it, cats are weird. But on the other hand, dogs don't possess a great deal upstairs, either.

We have a Basset Hound. In a recent national ranking of the 75 smartest dogs, Basset ranked about 339. Since we acquired our cat, we've noticed our dog's intelligence plummet to new depths. For instance, every time the cat walks into the back yard, it's as if the dog has never before seen the cat. The cat can walk inside, and two minutes later walk back outside and you can just see the dog thinking, "Hey, where'd that cat come from?" That thought is followed by the dog's two basic instincts: Bark and smell.

Owning both a cat and a dog, it has become crystal clear that there are distinct differences between the two species. For instance ...

A dog will happily eat the cow manure that you use for fertilizer in the garden. A cat will toil over her food endlessly before deciding if it's really worth the trouble to eat.

A dog has those big weepy eyes that always say, "COME PLAY WITH ME! COME PLAY WITH ME!" A cat would just as soon leave her the all the way alone so she can lay there and do absolutely nothing for as long as possible.

When you leave the house, a dog will sit and wait for you, worried sick that you'll never, ever show up again; a cat sits around and watches Garfield videos while munching on kitty potato chips.

When you return home, a dog is eternally grateful; a cat will wake from her nap momentarily, look up with much boredom, and then go back to sleep.

Cats are bored with everything. Dogs are captivated when you swat away a fly.

When dogs see other dogs, they bark and smell, bark and smell. When cats see other cats, they sit and stare for hours on end, apparently too lazy to fight or smell or even meow.

Cats have attitude. Dogs scratch their ears and gnaw on bones.

If they cared about such things, a cat's favorite movie would be "The Age of Innocence"; dogs would line up at the box office for "Dumb and Dumber."

Patterson

A dog, if given the chance, would lick the skin off your feet; a cat prefers you would just as soon keep your dirty, ugly feet to yourself.

Cats spend hours washing themselves. A dog isn't a real dog unless he stinks.

A cat's favorite moment in sports is a putt on the 18th green at Augusta; dogs prefer a rainy, muddy, cold football game in Cleveland.

Cats eat things called "Tender Vittles." Dogs have "Gravy Train."

Dogs drool after dinner. Cats wipe their whiskers with napkins. Preferably made of cloth.

Cats purr softly. Dogs pant.

Dogs will play in the street. Cats look both ways before crossing.

Dogs lope everywhere. Cats dart suddenly.

Cats are named things like Phoebe and Lovey.

Dogs like Waylon Jennings. Cats listen to Mozart.

Dogs come from dirty junkyards; cats from darkened alleys.

Dogs are "mean strays"; cats are "poor, lost kitties."

And, cats politely use litter boxes and cover up the evidence. Dogs will relieve themselves ungraciously on whatever neighbor's yard they happen to be walking by.

DAVE BARRY

Spinning his wheels, buying vowels and lovely Vanna

If I had to summarize, in one sentence, the major lesson I have learned in life, that sentence would be: "Sometimes, you have to buy a vowel."

I learned this lesson when I became a contestant on "Wheel of Fortune," the hugely popular game show in which contestants try to figure out the hidden phrase, aided by the lovely and talented Vanna White, who smiles radiantly while turning over the letters one at a time. (Vanna, a total professional, could smile radiantly while having her spleen removed by weasels.)

The way I got on the show was, a "Wheel" staff person named Gary O'Brien, whose title is Talent Executive, sent me a letter asking me to participate in a special Award Winners' Week to be broadcast in May.

"Famous actors, actresses, directors, writers, singers and sports stars will be spinning the famous Wheel for their favorite charities," Gary wrote.

Barry

I said I'd do it, and not just because I like to benefit charity by hanging around with famous actors and actresses. I also happen to be very good at word games, particularly the part where you cheat. You should see me play Scrabble.

ME (forming a word): There!

MY OPPONENT: "Doot?" There's no such word as "doot."

ME (offended): Of COURSE there is. It's an infamously gerund.

MY OPPONENT (skeptically): Use it in a sentence.

ME: "Look! A doot!"

MY OPPONENT: Oh, OK.

So I figured, how hard could "Wheel of Fortune" be? Whenever I've watched the show, the hidden phrase has always seemed pathetically easy to figure out. Some contestant will be staring at the big board, sweating bullets, trying to make sense of some letters and blanks arranged like this:

-- N - - - - - R - - - M -

I'll look at this for two seconds, then shout at the screen, "It's OBVIOUS, you moron! HUNCHBACK OF NOTRE DAME!"

I bet you do the same thing. We all do. Each day 24 million people watch "Wheel of Fortune," and every single one of them always figures out the hidden phrase before the actual contestants do.

But after I agreed to be on the show, I began to have second thoughts. I realized that it's probably WAY harder to solve the puzzle when you're under the hot studio lights, in front of cameras and a live studio audience, with Pat Sajak standing right there and Vanna beaming high-intensity smile rays right at you from close range.

So as the date of my taping approached, I worked on my "Wheel" strategy. I started asking everybody I talked to, including Directory Assistance, whether I should buy a vowel. Unfortunately, there was no consensus on this issue. Some people said yes, definitely; some said no, absolutely not, never buy a vowel. The only real expert I consulted was a United Airlines ticket agent named Rico, whom I met at Dulles airport when I was catching a flight to Los Angeles to be on the show. Rico told me that he had actually been a winning contestant on "Wheel of Fortune."

"Should I buy a vowel?" I asked him. "Not unless you really need it," replied Rico, helpfully.

In Los Angeles I was taken to the "Wheel" TV studio by an Iranian limousine driver named Max, who was deeply impressed by my enormous fame and celebrity.

"So, David," he said. "You are a singer?"

"No," I said. "Should I buy a vowel?"

"Yes," said Max. "You have to."

At the studio I met some of the other famous celebrities participating in Award Winners' Week, including rap artist and actor "L.L. Cool J." (That is not his real name, of course. His real name is "L.L. Cool M.") I also met the two celebrities I would be competing against, actresses Rita Moreno and Justine Miceli.

Gary, the Talent Executive, gave us a briefing on how to play the game; this briefing consisted almost entirely of detailed instructions on how to spin the wheel.

"Make sure your hand is dry," Gary said. "Reach as far to the right as you can, get a good grip on the upper part of the spoke, and then pull."

We all practiced spinning the wheel and calling out consonants, although some celebrities, unfamiliar with the rules, tried to call out vowels.

"You have to buy a vowel," Gary said, several times. "Once you spin, you're committed to calling a consonant."

When all of us celebrities were fairly confident that we didn't have a clue what was going on, the live studio audience was brought in, and we began taping.

In the interest of drama I am not going to reveal the outcome of my game, which has not aired yet, except to say, in all modesty, that I did get to the Bonus Round, where I had 10 seconds to try to solve the following phrase:

OME - O L - - E

You have no idea how truly stupid you can feel until you try to guess a hidden phrase in front of a live studio audience — every single member of which, you are convinced, knows the answer. For 10 seemingly endless seconds, sounding like a person with some kind of language-related brain malfunction, you blurt out random incorrect answers ("HOME TO LOVE!" "ROME TO LIVE!" "NOME NO LIKE!" "DOME SO...")

Of course I'm sure that you, or Ms. Smarty Pants Reader, immediately figured out the right answer, which is: "SOME DO DOOT."

No, really, I'm sure you solved it. If not, you should watch the show. Or you can contact me. If you play your cards right, maybe I'll sell you a vowel.

Dave Barry is scheduled to be on "Wheel of Fortune" Friday, May 5.

COPS: Similar movements across the country appear to be catching hold borhood patrol officer who, as in the abortive Skidmore break-in, can answer a call in minutes.

So COP is a far cry from simply well-meaning neighbors who take turns "keeping an eye on things." Indeed, COP is the linchpin in an approach to law enforcement that appears to be gathering steam in city after city across America.

The results in Fort Worth tell why. Since community policing began here four years ago:

- Burglaries have gone down by 51 percent.
- Grand theft by 38 percent.
- Auto theft by 60 percent.
- Robberies by 31 percent.
- Aggravated assaults by 56 percent.

cent. "I almost don't believe it myself," says Fort Worth Police Chief Thomas Windham. "But look at the figures. The city's overall crime rate has been reduced by 44 percent. It is the lowest it's been since 1978. Community policing is largely responsible for that. Not entirely, but largely."

That's because COP is just one aspect of a broader endeavor the city calls Code: Blue, a catchword borrowed from hospital jargon to signify an emergency.

What it signifies in Fort Worth is the city's priority at getting citizens involved in taking back their neighborhoods. In many American cities, Fort Worth among them, it has been a goal viewed as an emergency. Code: Blue enlists the support of local businesses as well as every city department — police, schools, parks, housing, sanitation, roads — the works.

"Code: Blue is more than a name and more than a program," says Chief Windham. "It's a philosophy. It's a concept that recognizes the critical difference between law enforcement and crime prevention."

According to Joseph Brann, director of Community Oriented Policing Services in Washington, D.C., an offspring of the Justice Department, "Fort Worth is one of the country's best models of this approach to policing."

"Five or six years ago you couldn't have found more than a dozen examples in the nation of community policing," Brann said. "Now literally hundreds of cities are adopting it."

The reason for the upswing, he says, is because the crime bill that Congress passed last year ties the money for 100,000 new cops by the year 2000 to community policing.

"Chiefs complain they favor the idea but don't have the resources," said Brann. "This gives them the resources. Once a city gets started it will stick to it, find the resources."

Chicago, as one example, instituted community policing in five pilot districts. Professor Wesley Slogon of Northwestern University's Center for Urban Affairs, after a yearlong study, found "significant, visible improvements in the quality of life. ... The single most impressive set of outcomes I've seen yet."

Chicago is now expanding the scheme to its 20 other police districts.

"I'll tell you what Fort Worth thinks of it," says Mayor Kay Granger.

"Can you imagine any city these days voting for a tax INCREASE? Well, last month we voted a sales tax increase to raise $120 million to fund Code: Blue over the next five years. That's what we think of it."

Local businesses have sponsored management training courses, donated rent-free units for storefront police and COP use, house trailers for mobile police miniations. "Park one in front of a dope house," says Chief Windham, "it has an immediate effect." One officer explained COP to a Lions Club meeting and left with a dozen pairs of donated binoculars.

Did someone mention traffic? Imagine the mall on Christmas Eve. Now imagine that much traffic on every block of every street at every hour of every day. Oh, and the streets are wet from the daily rain.

This place stinks, too. Or maybe that's just the naphtha fumes talking.

Oops. Another refinery just blew up.

San Antonio and Houston might as well be on different planets.

San Antonio is a plain but well-kept house with a neatly trimmed yard, off-white walls and plastic-draped furniture in the living room.

Houston is a double-wide on an overgrown corner lot, sandwiched between the Gucci boutique and a machine shop. There are handprints on the outside walls. In the living room, there's a fake waterfall that spits out brackish water.

Put another way, San Antonio is an egg-salad sandwich with the crust trimmed and chips on the side. Houston is a foot-long boudin, smothered in tabasco and onions and sitting on stale Texas toast. For breakfast.

This is a funky place, and that's why I like it. I think I'll nose around and see what I can find.

Meanwhile, back in the Alamo City: No surprise here, except that it doesn't involve politicians, developers, barges or buses. Instead, it's the lottery, to wit: Joel Williams, San Antonio Express-News government reporter and Houston native, picked 4-of-6 in Wednesday's drawing and won $115. Meanwhile, I'm down $61. He called me to rub it in. So I called the IRS. Congratulations, Joel!

HOT NUMBER: Not to gloat, but among the numbers I suggested last Saturday was "46." Guess what? It came up that night, the third time in a row it was picked.

HOT FOOD: Not to gloat, but I suggested you eat more Chinese food. Guess what? All three winners in last Saturday night's drawing got their winning numbers from fortune cookies.

Two tickets went to the same couple, who accidentally got the same numbers from the same store. It was the first time a husband-wife team each won, the first time one store sold two winners in the same contest and, according to Keith Elkins of the Texas Lottery Commission, it's the first "Fortune Cookie Bonanza."

Not only that, but one of the winners, someone from Mesquite who has yet to claim the prize, told lottery officials the winning number came with this now-crystal clear message: "You will have good luck today."

I'm telling you, if you ain't eating dim sum and won ton, you'd better start.

Alpha Phi Omega members Jason Arthur, left, Bridgette Cook, center, and Paul Colik try to entice passers-by across the Kyle Field Sunday, during the APO/Twin City Mission Clothes and Fund drive in College Station, Texas. The trio was not actually naked, but hid the fact with their posters and created the illusion with an extra pair of trousers worn about the ankles. The clothing and funds will be used to help the needy who visit the Twin City Mission in Bryan looking for assistance.

Nudist resort provides release of tension, visitors say

By Karin Shaw

The Lasso
(Texas Woman's University)

DECATUR — The clicking of a pool cue against a ball was heard just before the loud crash of one ball hitting several others. As the sunlight filtered through the screen door of the clubhouse, silhouettes of several men could be seen. When the door opened, it became clear that they were all naked.

This is typical behavior at the Bluebonnet Nudist Resort in Decatur, and they don't just play pool here.

Men and women throughout Texas and surrounding states leave their jobs as school teachers, librarians, technical engineers and other ordinary occupations to come here on the weekends and in the summer to frolic in the woods wearing only what nature gave them.

Members of the resort say it's not only their clothes they leave at the gate.

"When you go through the gate, you leave all your tensions behind. It doesn't matter what you do for a living or what kind of car you drive,"

All visitors are required to check in at the office and get permission to enter the grounds.

People here don't care about that. We just come here to have a good time," one woman said.

Bluebonnet sits at the top of a rise at the end of an obscure gravel road off Highway 287.

First-time visitors to the resort are greeted by a formidable security gate and an electronic key pad. From there, they can talk to the office and get permission to enter the grounds.

All visitors are required to check in at the office and go through a brief orientation before they can use the facilities of the resort.

Charles Moss, director of Bluebonnet, goes through a brief review of what the resort is about and what can be expected there.

"We have no major philosophical outlook," he said. "We have no dogma. This is not a cult."

Rather, Moss said the resort is more like a cross between a country club and a campground.

"There is a real community spirit here," he said. "Part of that is because of the membership requirement."

People who go to the resort usually go on a regular basis. They see each other almost every weekend.

They can either bring their own travel trailer, rent one, sleep in a tent or just visit for the day.

Because of the private membership requirement, anyone who is disturbing other members or is caught breaking the rules can be forced to leave.

Moss said one of the most strongly enforced rules concerns the display of inappropriate sexual behavior. It is not tolerated.

One woman who is a member said that is one of the biggest misconceptions of nudist resorts.

"This is not about sex," she said. "We don't come here to look at naked people, and you won't see orgies or anything perverted going on."

She said the reason most people go is to shed the outward images that society forces people to take.

"No one judges you for what color you are, what size you are or what you look like. You can just come here and really be you. You get the chance to really get to know what people are like beyond their job descriptions. We don't hide behind our clothes," she said.

However, most of the women can be seen wearing makeup.

There is even someone there who is willing to give a complete manicure, including nail polish, upon request.

The idea though is not to impress members of the opposite sex.

Moss said 85 percent of the members are married couples who just enjoy being able to go there and completely relax together.

The median age is 40, but children and elderly people can be seen swimming in the heated pool or walking along the nature trail just as often as anyone else.

Another woman who is a member said she really enjoys the family atmosphere of the resort.

DEAR ABBY

Daughter's big weight loss may take tragic turn

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My daughter, who will soon turn 18, was a heavy child from the time she was 7 or 8. In the last nine months, she has lost 145 pounds! (She weighed 260, but now she weighs about 115.)

She doesn't need to lose any more weight, but she won't stop. All she will eat is a half-cup of rice and a half-cup of steamed broccoli — once a day! She takes a daily prenatal vitamin (although she isn't pregnant). She stopped menstruating last fall. Her mood swings are so bad that she frequently bursts into tears.

Van Buren

My questions are: What are my legal rights in getting her professional help? What kind of help can I get before she turns 18? — AT MY WIT'S END

DEAR WIT'S END: Your daughter is a minor, so of course you have a right to seek help for her. After she turns 18, you should consult an attorney.

Your daughter appears to suffer from anorexia nervosa. It is urgent that she be evaluated by a doctor or therapist who specializes in eating disorders. Anorexia can be fatal — so don't delay.

You can obtain information and emotional support by contacting: The National Association of Anorexia Nervosa and Associated Disorders Inc. ANAD has 400 chapters nationwide, and overseas services. For a free packet of information and referral to a therapist in your area, write to: ANAD, P.O. Box 7, Highland Park, Ill. 60035. Please include a long (business-size), self-addressed, stamped (55 cents) envelope. The organization's hotline is (708) 831-3438.

DEAR ABBY: I own two beautiful boxer dogs. I named them Max and Shadow.

A few weeks ago, I was walking my dogs when I noticed a man walking his rottweiler. I immediately crossed the street and shorted the leashes on both my dogs.

At the moment we passed each other, this man's dog started to growl and bark at my dogs; then to my amazement, the man deliberately let his dog go. The dog jumped on Max and bit him severely on the chest. How I got the two dogs separated, I'll never know, but the visit to the vet cost me $104.

My questions are: Do I have the right to ask the owner of the rottweiler to pay for Max's vet bill? And should I have called the police on that man for deliberately letting his dog go?

My husband says "No" to calling the police. — ELIZABETH N. IN TAMPA, FLA.

DEAR ELIZABETH: I agree with your husband. You would have a difficult time proving that the owner of the rottweiler deliberately released his dog in order to attack your dog.

However, the owner of the rottweiler should pay the vet's bill.

DEAR ABBY: Just yesterday I buried my father. I feel so empty. If I never accomplish anything else in my life, I would like the world to know that, with a little practice, it's easy to say, "I love you."

I realized during my dad's critical illness that sometimes it's very hard for people to say what's in their hearts. So I beg of you: Start today. Those three little words get easier every time you say them. — A GRIEVING DAUGHTER, BETHEL PARK, PA.

DEAR DAUGHTER: My sympathy on the loss of your beloved father. Your letter carries an important message. Sometimes words that are the most difficult to say are the ones that the listener most needs to hear. Among the phrases that come to mind are: "I'm sorry," "I was wrong," and of course, "I love you."

To receive a collection of Abby's most memorable — and most frequently requested — poems and essays, send a business-sized, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby's "Keepers," P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054-0447. (Postage is included.)

Mayor's murder shocks small town

By Harry King
Associated Press

COVE, Ark. — The big man with the wine-colored cap on his head and can of tobacco in his shirt pocket sat at the small table drinking coffee.

Just like Fred Neblick, Bo Davis is a regular at The Hungry Hound — hard by the flashing yellow light that stamps Cove on U.S. 71.

"That was the last chair he set in, right there," Davis said gesturing with his left hand to a brown-plastic covered seat a few steps away.

Davis looked over his right shoulder at the clock that hangs over the coffee pot where regulars grab a brown mug and pour.

It had been only 25 hours earlier, he said, fumbling with some of the words. "Shortly after that, it changed forever," he said.

Normally, lunch for Neblick, the 58-year-old mayor of this Polk County town of 391, would be a cheeseburger with mayo, no onions, an order of fries and a glass of tea at the cafe. But on the day he died, he opted for the apple pie and coffee and left shortly after 1 p.m. A half-hour later, he was dead, shot in the chest with a .38-caliber revolver.

Police say Neblick was killed by a man who lived alone and drove his lawn mower to and from town along the shoulder of U.S. 71, pulling a wagon to load groceries or gas. Orville Miller, 78, was irate about a $15.55 water bill.

"I'm the marshal of this town now," a witness recalled Miller saying as he left Neblick's office and climbed aboard his grey lawn mower with a black seat. "Everything's under control. Everything will be all right."

Mechanic Tim Dixon said Miller still had a gun in his pocket when he came to his service station after the shooting. "He had this kind of blank look but he was kinda like that all the time," Dixon said.

A day after the shooting, Miller's lawn mower with the 42-inch cut and the six gears was still in a bay at Wayne's Service Center.

At the Hungry Hound, Davis shook his head. "I hope to goodness that this damned country ain't coming to the fact... I hope that we need some other kind of reason," he said. "I spend more than that ($15.55 water bill) a month on cigarettes and I ain't even supposed to be smoking."

Neblick usually stopped by his car wash, next to Wayne's, shortly after 8 a.m. each day. He'd have coffee with Dixon.

"I was sitting there, kinda waiting on him... somebody drove by in his pickup," Dixon said. "It was a weird feeling."

Miller never frequented the Hungry Hound, Davis said. A recluse, someone in the mayor's office called him. Last year, after nobody saw Miller for a couple of weeks, Neblick stopped by to check on him. Neblick did that for many elderly residents.

Less than a half-mile south on U.S. 71, Miller's frame-and-brick home sits back from the highway on a grassy, sloping, pine-studded lot. A post-hole digger leaned against a wall on the front porch.

Through a kitchen window, a single chair was visible, drawn up to a table on which a notebook, some envelopes, and a couple of pens rested. A pair of eyeglasses were folded on a book, possibly a Bible.

Gonzalez out

ARLINGTON — The Texas Rangers placed slugger Juan Gonzalez on the 15-day disabled list, retroactive to April 16, because of a herniated disk in his back.
Gonzalez, who will miss up to three weeks, was re-examined by the team's spine consultant in Dallas on Friday. Dr. Drew Dosssett reported that Gonzalez made improvement but rotation in his lower back remains a problem.
Gonzalez has been sidelined since aggravating the injury last Sunday. He returned to Texas on Monday, when the diagnosis was made.

In other moves to trim the Rangers roster to the 28-player limit, pitcher Dan Smith was placed on the 15-day disabled list, retroactive to April 16. Pitcher Steve Dyer was also placed on the 15-day disabled list, retroactive to April 16.
Infielder Luis Ortiz was optioned to Oklahoma City, the Rangers' Class AAA club in the American Association. Pitcher Chris Nix was accepted his outright assignment to Oklahoma City.
Pitchers Kerry Lacy and Jerry Martin were assigned outright to Tulsa in the Class AA Texas League.

Holcomb signs

Sean Holcomb, a former Greenwood star, signed a free agent contract with the New England Patriots Sunday.
Holcomb, a small college All-America selection as a junior at Texas A&M Kingsville and an All Lone Star Conference pick as a senior, graduated from Greenwood in 1988.
The defensive end helped lead the Javelinas to the NCAA Division II national title this past football season. He was also the team captain for the Javelinas.
Holcomb graduated from A&M Kingsville last Christmas as a business major.
Holcomb is 6-foot-4 and weighs 260 pounds.

No umpires

NEW YORK — Negotiators for locked out umpires and major league owners talked throughout the weekend with no progress.
"I remain pessimistic but hopeful," management negotiator Robert Kheel said.
In 1991, the sides didn't reach an agreement until less than 12 hours remained before the first regular-season game. The 1995 season is scheduled to start Tuesday night.
"There are no meetings scheduled, but I wouldn't be surprised if we had one," Kheel said.

Baseball closes in as owners worry

By Skip Wollenberg
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK — Teams are slashing early-season ticket prices, letting kids in some ballparks for free and putting budget-priced meals on the menu. They might even deploy players near the concession stands to autograph scorecards.

Baseball owners are clearly worried whether fans will embrace the game again.

The bitter 232-day strike snuffed out what was shaping up as a potentially classic season last August. It ended a home run record chase, wiped out the World Series and delayed the start of this season by three weeks.

Players ended their strike March 31 only after a court order forced owners to adhere to the terms of the expired collective bargaining agreement.

With opening games slated to begin Tuesday night, the commissioner's office unveiled a new national advertising campaign last week in an attempt to reclaim fans' affection.

Baltimore's Cal Ripken Jr. ... signs that baseball's return is near affection. "Welcome to the Show" is the theme.

But the 28 teams will have to demonstrate why the sport that left its followers stranded last summer deserves another look.

Many teams are discounting prices for opening day, some for the opening weekend and others for selected dates through May.

Diving competition has 'difficult' finish

By Stewart Doreen

In simple terms, degree of difficulty is the number system that serves as the as a representation for the complexity of the dive being completed.

Fittipaldi has fuel for victory

■ Eddie Cheever's engine runs dry in Bosch Grand Prix, giving the race to Emerson Fittipaldi.

By Mike Harris
AP Motorsports Writer

NAZARETH, Pa. — Eddie Cheever's engine ran dry with less than two laps remaining in Sunday's Bosch Spark Plug Grand Prix, making Emerson Fittipaldi the recipient of a victory that had looked nearly impossible only moments earlier.

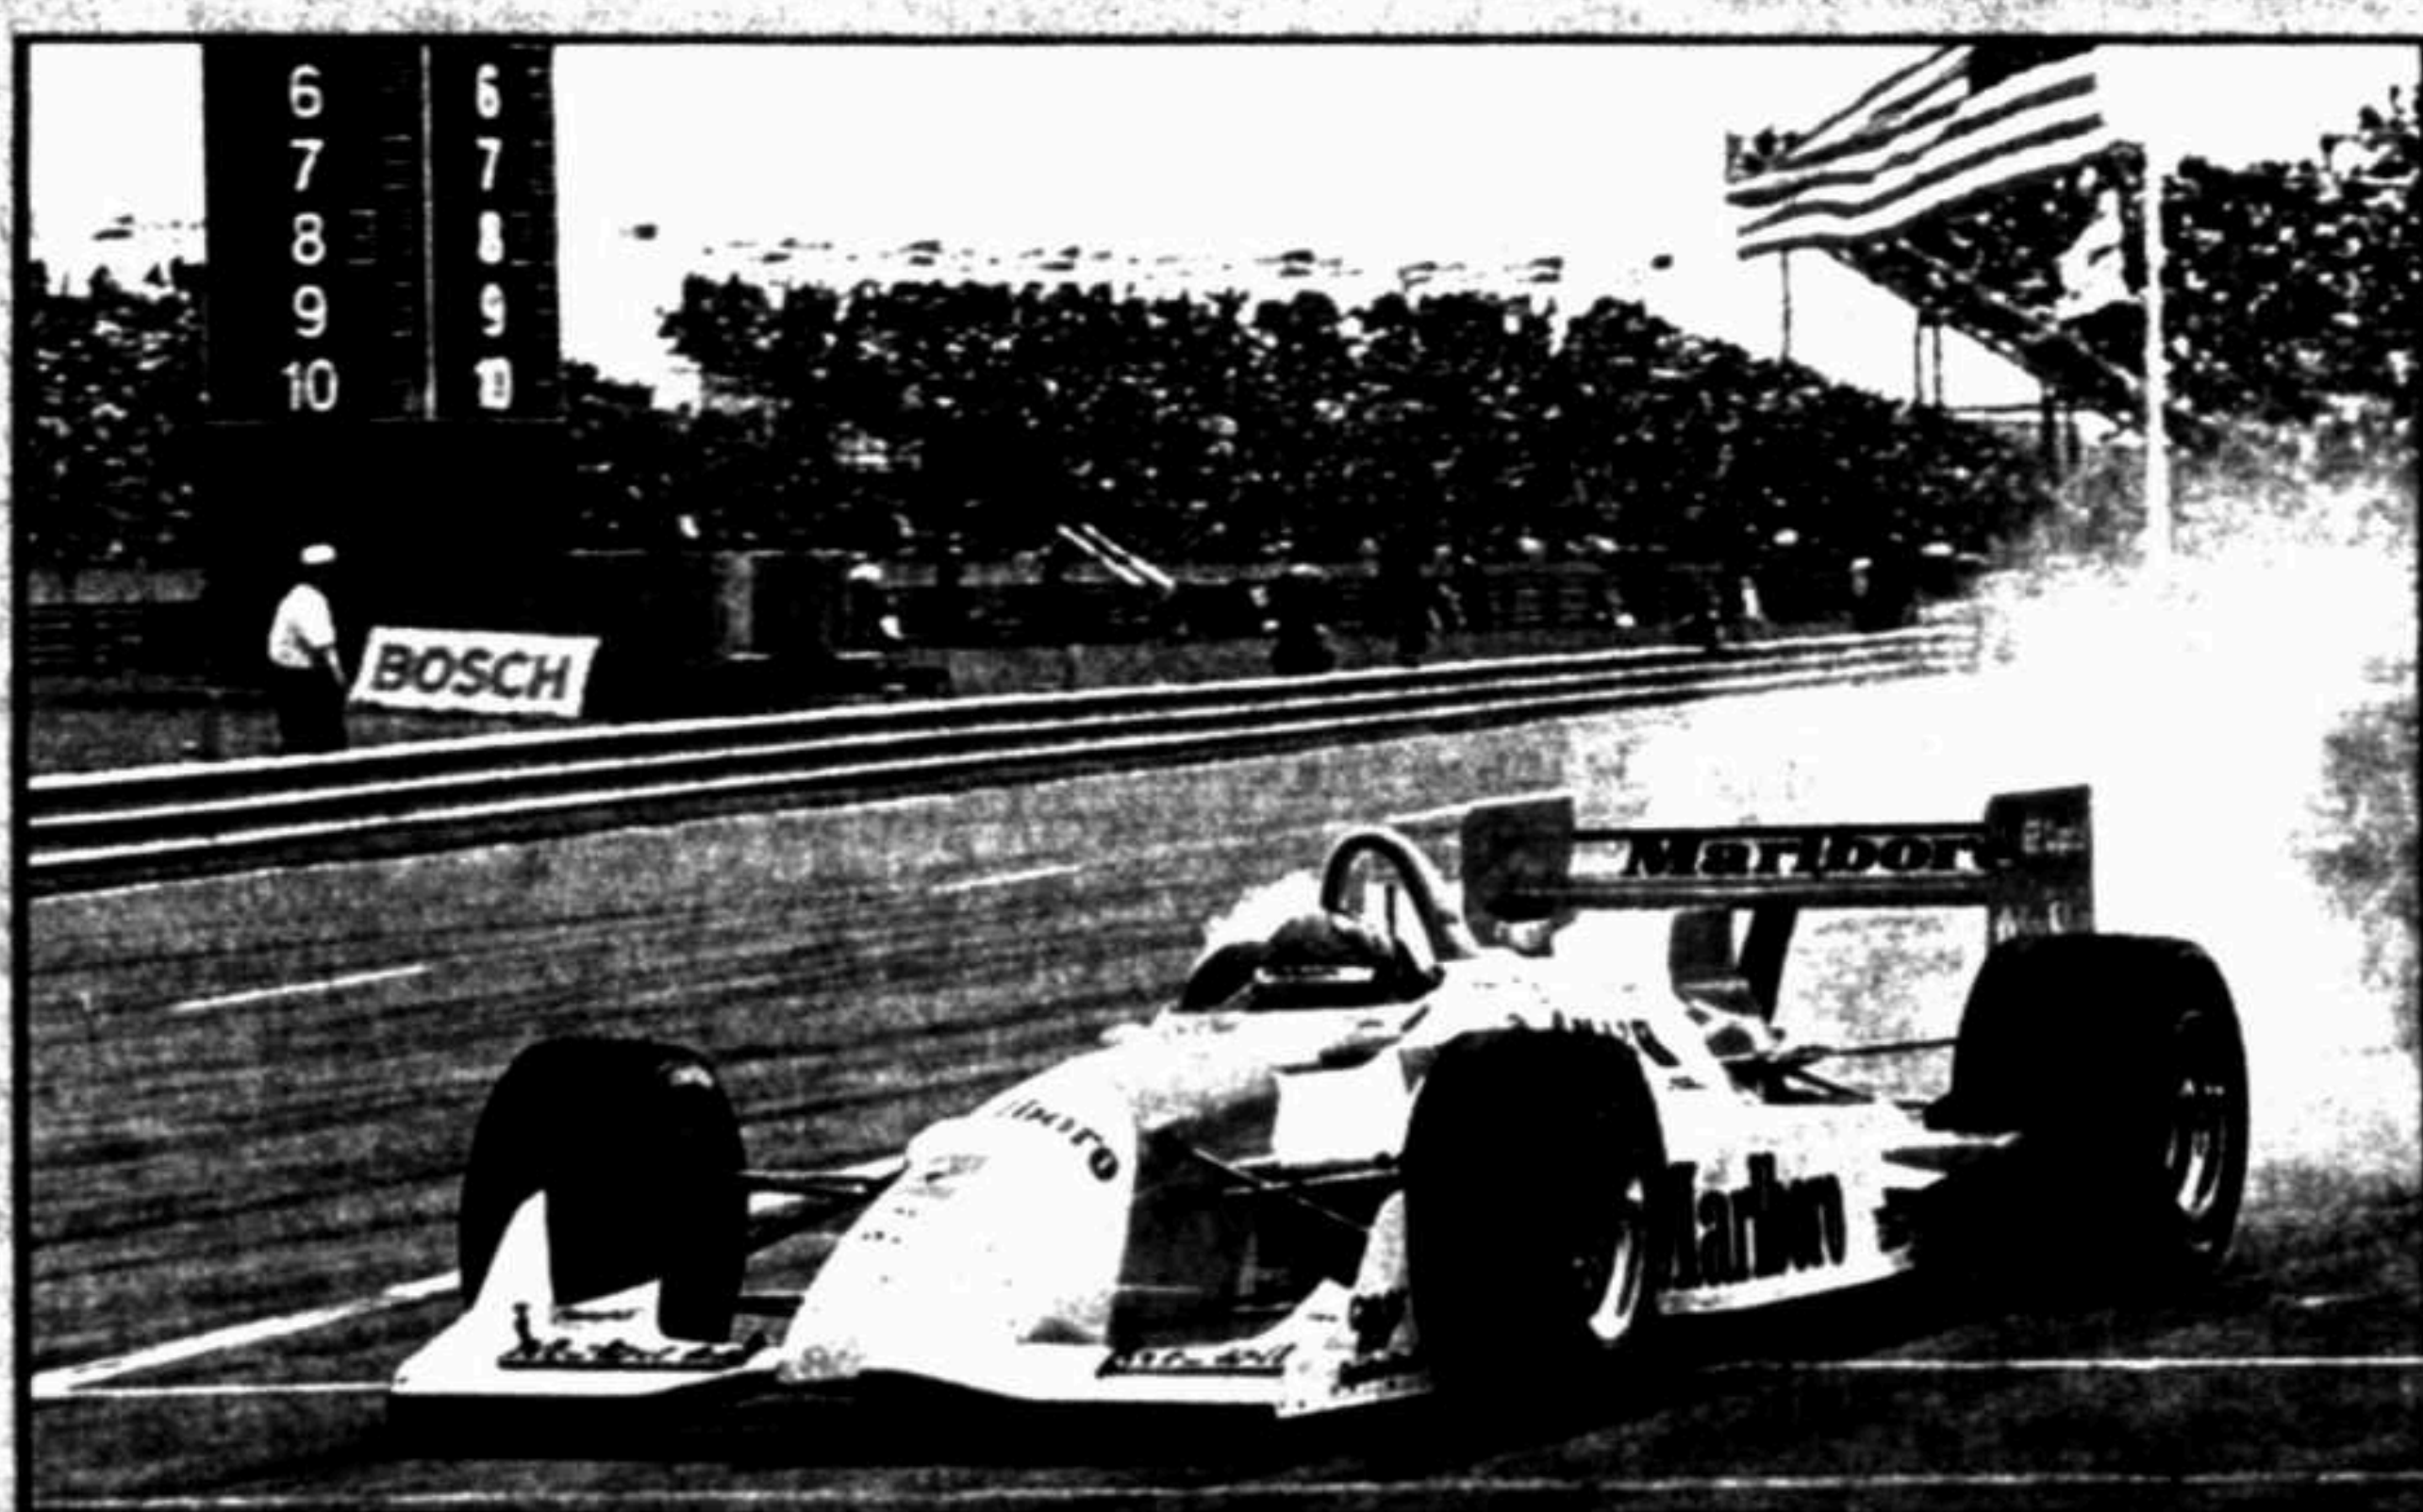

Cheever, apparently on the way to giving A.J. Foyt his first victory as a team owner since 1981, tried to squeeze the final 94 laps out of one tank of fuel and came up nearly two miles short on Nazareth Speedway's one-mile oval.

As Cheever suddenly slowed, Fittipaldi dove past with Jacques Villeneuve right in his slipstream.

Fittipaldi, the oldest driver on the circuit at 48, barely held off Villeneuve, the youngest at 23, by 0.309-seconds — about two car-lengths — to earn the 22nd Indy-car victory of his career and his third win at the track owned by Roger Penske, his car owner.

Gil de Ferran, driving for Midland's Hall Racing Team, placed 10th after starting 18th, suffering a crash that ended his day.

Cheever took the lead for the first time since 1992 on lap 161 by passing Villeneuve shortly after Fittipaldi had made his final pit stop. The last of five caution flags in the 200-lap race ended with just six laps remaining and Cheever seemingly about to cruise to his first Indy-car win.

Emerson Fittipaldi pulls out of his final pit stop Sunday on his way to winning the Bosch Spark Plug Grand Prix.

Cheever, brokenhearted after riding back to the pits in a safety vehicle, said, "During that last caution, the (on-board) computer said we had about 4.5 gallons (of fuel) left. That should have been plenty."

"I don't think Emerson could have caught me. But, with five laps to go, coming out of (turn) two, (the engine) stuttered. I thought it might be vapor lock, but when it stuttered again, I knew I was in trouble."

It was a familiar feeling. Two weeks earlier, in the street race at Long Beach, Calif., Cheever appeared to run out of fuel on the last lap and fell from third to fourth. His team found the tank still held fuel.

"Apparently, we have a fuel pickup problem or some other problem inside the tank," the somber driver said. "We thought we had the problem solved. Obviously we didn't. It's one more lost opportunity."

Fittipaldi was as elated by the unexpected win as Cheever was deflated.

"During that last caution, I had seven cars ahead of me with seven laps to go," Fittipaldi noted. "I said it was virtually hopeless. When (Cheever) slowed, it happened so fast, I couldn't believe it."

Texas Tech baserunner Jason Totman (6) scores over Texas A&M catcher William Shiflett, who tries to find the loose ball Sunday in a SWC game, but the Aggies won.

Aggies 'slam' Raiders in 10th

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Jeff Bailey hit a two-out grand slam in the bottom of the 10th inning to give the Texas A&M Aggies a 9-8 Southwest Conference victory over Texas Tech Sunday.

Bailey, a junior from Deer Park, Texas, hit a two-run home run earlier in the game and ended the game with six RBIs. His grand slam curled just inside the right field foul pole in the 10th.

The No. 8 Red Raiders (39-10, 10-7 SWC) scored four runs in the top of the 10th. After Tech loaded the bases, David Lindstrom and Brandon Welch each walked in a run off of winning pitcher Paul Barber (4-0) before Dion Ruecker singled in two more for an 8-4 lead.

In the bottom of the inning, Ryan Huffman singled off the right field wall to score Robert Harris and put runners on the corners. Two batters later, Chad Alexander walked to load the bases for Bailey, who ended the game off of a 2-0 fastball.

Foreman turns thoughts to Germany

By Ed Schuyler Jr.
AP Boxing Writer

LAS VEGAS — George Foreman wants to fight in Germany, but not against a German named Axel Schulz.

"I won't fight that kid again," Foreman said from behind a large pair of sunglasses hiding the closed left eye he got in retaining his IBF heavyweight title on a majority decision over Schulz on Saturday night.

"Forget it! He can go right back where he came from."

Foreman could be headed to Germany, too, for a match against an opponent to be determined in July or August. "George wants to fight in Germany," promoter Bob Arum said. "A rematch would be huge over there." Arum added, however, that the Germans might not want Foreman in any fight except a rematch with Schulz.

Foreman also wants to fight Mike Tyson, but there appears to be too many obstacles in the path of such a fight.

"I think if he is the champion I think he is, he will give me a rematch," said the 26-year-old Schulz, who went into the fight unheralded and unranked. "I scored points. I also had to fight against the referee and the judges."

A lot of ringsiders thought the German beat the 46-year-old Foreman, fighting as champion for the first time in the United States. His four title bouts in the 1970s were out of the country. He had become champion again when, needing a knock-out to win, he floored Michael Moorer in the 10th round last Nov. 5.

In one of the later rounds Saturday night at the MGM Grand Garden, some of the estimated crowd of 11,000 started chanting, "USA."

"When I heard that 'USA, USA' I thought I'd thought I'd die rather than let them down," said Foreman, who won the 1968 Olympic heavyweight title in Mexico City and then carried a small American flag around the ring. "USA" pulled me through, and I was able to do it for them."

What pulled Foreman through was his punishing left jab and Schulz' lack of punching power.

It has been a slow start for Midland Angel utility player Leon Glenn. The seven-year veteran, who played last season in El Paso, was hit by a pitch during the opening series in San Antonio which forced him to miss multiple games. As Glenn's time on the bench added up, his timing with a bat began to slip.

Saturday, Glenn and Midland batting coach Jeff Barnes looked at some film of the slugger in action. Glenn turned a few small adjustments into a 2-for-4 night, including and grand slam in the first inning and double as Midland pounded Wichita 8-2 at Christensen Stadium on the annual migration of the famous San Diego Chicken through Midland.

Midland has now taken two of three games in the series that continues today at 7 p.m. at Christensen Stadium, but the Angels have turned up the intensity over the past two games, thanks to some stellar pitching and a heart-to-heart meeting with manager Mario Mendoza.

"We have had a lot of meetings lately and Mario stressed for us to be more emotional," said winning pitcher Willard Brown. "You can attribute it to Mario, playing some different guys to keep everybody sharp."

Quarterbacks become hit as NFL ends 1995 draft

AP Football Writer

NEW YORK — It's not exactly 1983, when six quarterbacks were taken in the first round. But the 1995 draft is becoming the year of the quarterback in its own way.

Four more quarterbacks — Rob Johnson of Southern Cal, Chad May of Kansas State, Dave Barr of California and Steve Stenstrom of Stanford — were taken in the fourth round as the draft resumed Sunday.

Jay Barker of Alabama went in the fifth. Jerry Colquitt of Tennessee and Craig Whelihan of Pacific went in the sixth. And John Walsh of Brigham Young was taken in the seventh and final round, one that ended with Carolina taking Michael Reed, a defensive back from Boston College.

With six quarterbacks chosen in the first three rounds on Saturday, Sunday's calls brought the total for the draft to 14, compared to nine in seven rounds last year and eight in eight rounds two years ago, the first time the draft was trimmed from 12 rounds.

That wasn't unexpected — this was supposed to be a year when there were more quarterbacks available than in the past. In fact, Johnson, May and Walsh were considered possible late first-rounders at some point.

That left them wondering. "I thought something was wrong with me," said Johnson, who completed 67 percent of his passes for 2,210 yards at Southern Cal last season and thought he would be the third quarterback chosen. Instead he was the seventh, by Jacksonville with the first pick of the fourth round, and pulled out a book by Bill Walsh to discover why.

"I needed answers," Johnson said. "No one was giving me any answers."

The same went for May, the 11th overall pick by Minnesota.

"I didn't sleep last night, I was tossing and turning," he said.

"I just wanted an explanation. I wish somebody would have called me and told me why I fell so far. It was a shock. It was the worst day of my life."

The quarterbacks weren't the only players chosen in the fourth round who tumbled.

Two wide receivers, Lovell Pinkney of Texas and Jack Jackson of Florida, both considered possible first-rounders, went on consecutive picks to St. Louis and Chicago. Their problems? Squabbles with coaches and teammates that lowered their value in the eyes of scouts.

"A pain in the butt to my teammates and a bigger pain to the opposition," Joel Buchsbaum, one of the leading professional draftniks, wrote of Jackson.

Among the other notables to go in the first round of the second day were guard Rich Zatechka of Nebraska, chosen by the New York Giants, and Pete Mitchell.

Spurs finish atop NBA with 62 wins

The Associated Press

MINNEAPOLIS — Even with David Robinson playing less than half the game Sunday, the San Antonio Spurs rolled into the playoffs with their sixth straight victory, 97-91 over the Minnesota Timberwolves.

The Spurs, who with 62 wins, finished atop the NBA for the first time in team history, will play either Denver or Sacramento in a first-round playoff game Friday. The Nuggets and Kings played Sunday night at Denver for the final postseason spot.

Already guaranteed the best record in franchise history and the top seed in the Western Conference, the Spurs rested Robinson most of the game. Chuck Person came off the bench to score 20 points against his former team.

Averaging 27.8 points and 10.9 rebounds, Robinson sat out the entire second and fourth quarters.

Clippers 124, Mavericks 102
LOS ANGELES — Loy Vaught scored 26 points and equaled his career-high with 21 rebounds as the Los Angeles Clippers snapped a six-game losing streak with a rout of Dallas but still finished the season as the NBA's worst team.

The Clippers' 17-65 record equaled the second-worst mark in franchise history. They also had the same record in 1987-88 and 1981-82 when the team was in San Diego.

The game had no playoff implications since the Clippers started the season at the bottom and stayed there, while Dallas was eliminated three games ago.

Jazz 103, Rockets 97
HOUSTON — Karl Malone scored 23 points and pulled down 15 rebounds as Utah beat Houston in a playoff preview that wrapped up the regular season.

The victory was the seventh straight for the Jazz, who finish with a franchise record 60 wins against 22 losses.

The Rockets, the defending NBA champions, lost their last three games, including two to the Jazz, who they face Thursday in Salt Lake City in the first of a best-of-five series.

Knicks 113, Magic 99
NEW YORK — New York hit 12 3-pointers, including four in a row by Hubert Davis in the fourth quarter, as the Knicks beat Orlando, sending the Magic into the playoffs with a seven-game road losing streak.

With starters Patrick Ewing and Derek Harper sitting out a second straight game for New York, the Knicks turned to their outside game, stretching a six-point lead to 98-85 with 8:06 left when Davis hit four treys in a 2:15 span.

Bullets 106, 76ers 90
LANDOVER, Md. — Mitchell Butler tied a career-high with 26 points as Washington beat Philadelphia for its most lopsided victory of the season.

Gheorghe Muresan had 15 points and 11 rebounds as the Bullets avoided tying a franchise record with their 62nd loss of the season and claimed their third straight home victory, a season high.

Bucks 104, Bulls 100
MILWAUKEE — Glenn Robinson scored 36 points to overcome a 33-point performance by Michael Jordan as Milwaukee survived a fourth quarter Chicago comeback.

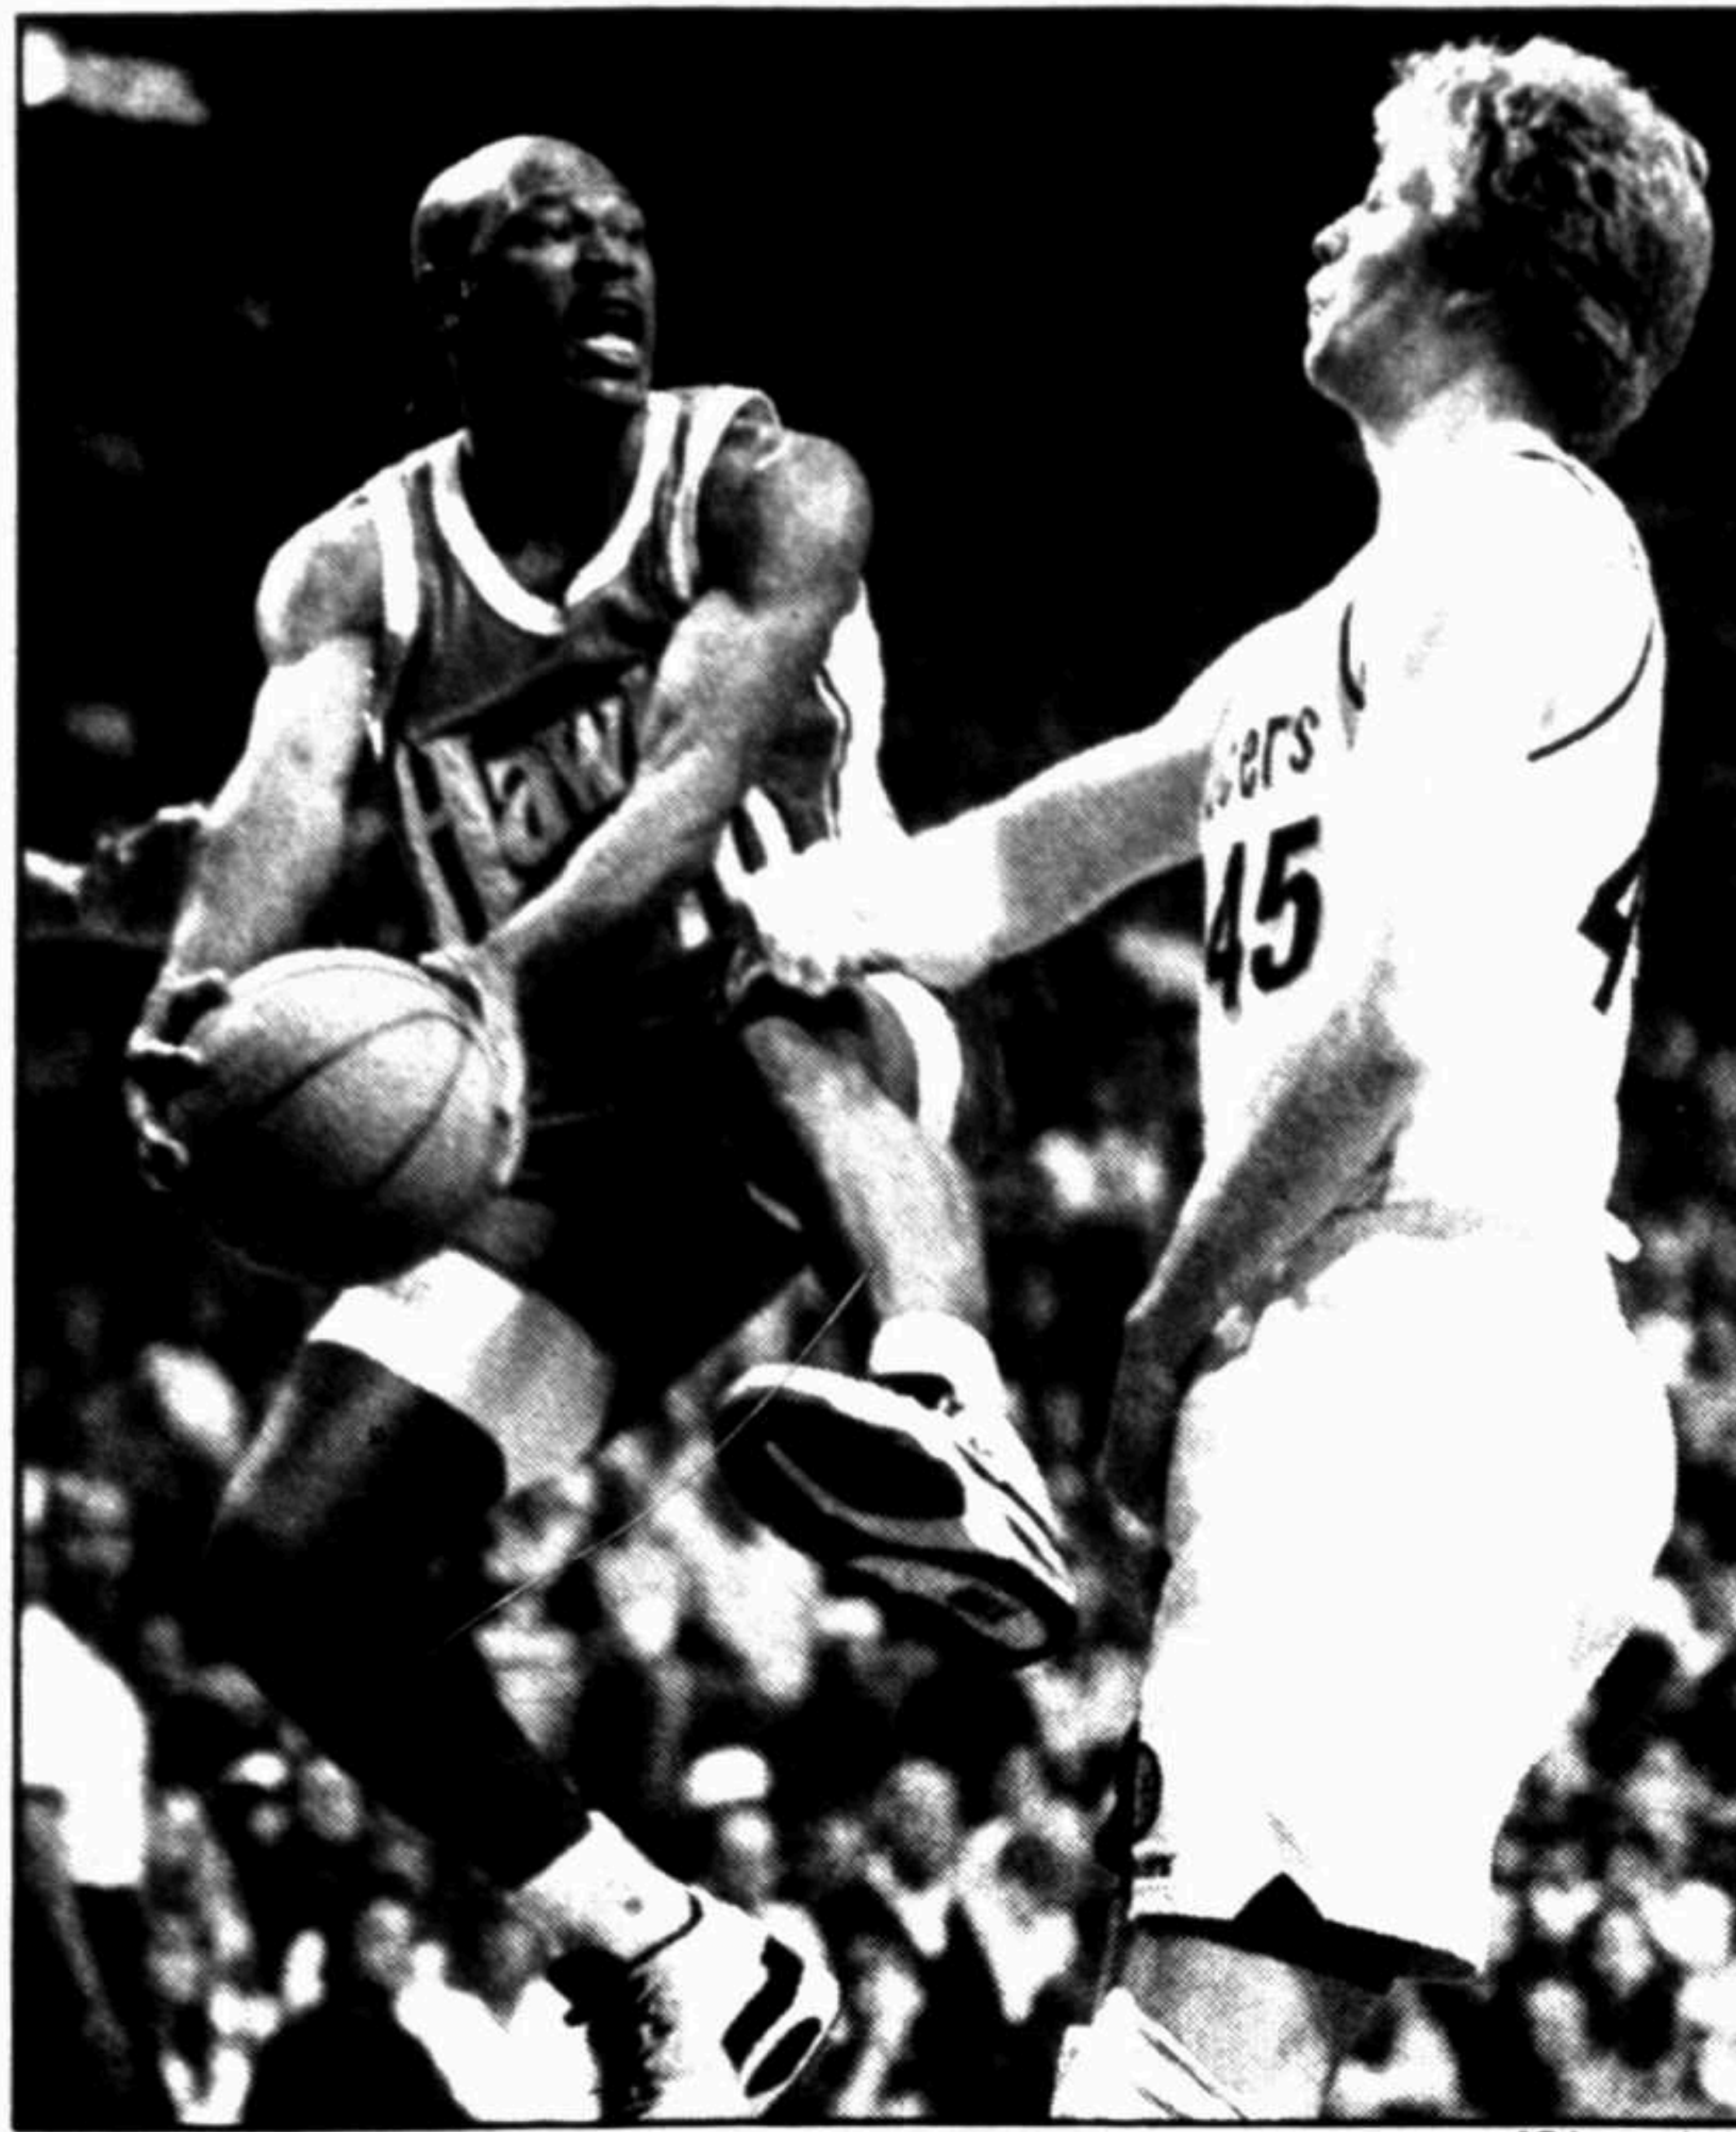

Eric Murdock's two free throws with 9.1 seconds remaining sealed the victory, which snapped the Bulls' six-game winning streak.

Hornets 97, Cavaliers 72
CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Darrin Hancock scored nine points in leading Charlotte's 26-0 third-quarter run on the way to a victory over Cleveland.

The Hornets won 50 games for the first time in their seven-year history and with it a huge boost of confidence heading into their first-round playoff showdown with the Chicago Bulls beginning Friday.

Pacers 103, Hawks 87
INDIANAPOLIS — Sam Mitchell scored six straight points in a crucial third-quarter spurt as Indiana defeated Atlanta in game that often resembled a meaningless exhibition rather than a post-season preview.

PHOENIX — Charles Barkley led Phoenix into the playoffs with their eighth win in nine games as the Suns beat Seattle.

Barkley played only the first three quarters, finishing with 23 points, 13 rebounds and nine assists in 30 minutes. But the Pacific Division champions didn't need any more from him as they led by as many as 21 points.

Heat 129, Pistons 105
MIAMI — Glen Rice scored 32 points and Kevin Gamble came off the bench to add a season-high 23 as Miami Detroit, putting an end to a disappointing season for both.

Nets 102, Celtics 99
EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Chris Morris converted a three-point play off an alley-oop with 5.9 seconds to play to give New Jersey a win over Boston, sending the Celtics into the playoffs with a three-game losing streak.

Boston opens a best-of-5 first-round playoff series with Orlando on Friday. The Magic won three of five regular-season meetings.

Nuggets 102, Kings 89
DENVER — Denver beat out Sacramento for the final Western Conference playoff spot with a win fueled by Brian Williams' 13 fourth-quarter points.

In what amounted to a one-game playoff, Denver gained the No. 8 seed in the West for the second year in a row and will meet San Antonio on Friday.

Trail Blazers 116, Warriors 83
PORTLAND, Ore. — Clifford Robinson scored 17 points, 15 in the first half, as Portland brought the NBA's regular season to an end with a rout of Golden State.

Harvey Grant scored nine of his 15 points and Rod Strickland had nine of his 14 assists in the third quarter as the Blazers blew open a 37-point lead.

Gallagher stages rally; Adams places fourth

The Associated Press

GREENSBORO, N.C. — Jim Gallagher Jr. shot a 6-under-par 66 in cold, rainy and blustery conditions Sunday to pull off the biggest final-round comeback on the PGA Tour in four years, winning the $1.5 million Greater Greensboro Open.

Gallagher, who won for the fourth time in his career, made up seven shots on second-round leader Jeff Sluman and the rest of the field, mostly with a 5-under 31 on the back side to win the $270,000 first-place prize with a 14-under 274. Former Midlander John Adams placed fourth, winning a $72,000 paycheck.

Mark Brooks came back from seven shots to win the 1991 GGO, while Fulton Allem also rallied that same year for victory in Houston.

It turned out that a par-saving 6-foot putt out of a green-side sand bunker on No. 18 was just as key for Gallagher as his eight birdies. He posted his score and then watched as Sluman and playing partner Peter Jacobsen stumbled down the stretch.

Sluman was another hard-luck loser, shooting a 2-over 74 to finish in a second-place tie with Jacobsen, who shot par, at 13-under 275. Sluman, who bogeyed the par-3 17th to fall out of a tie with Jacobsen and Gallagher, hasn't won since his 1988 PGA Championship title at Oak Tree.

Meanwhile, Jacobsen missed a 12-footer by inches on No. 16, and lipped out a 25-footer on the next hole that Sluman ended up bogeying.

Jacobsen hit a good drive on the 435-yard 18th, but landed his approach shot in the same bunker as Gallagher. Jacobsen's stance in the trap was horrible, the ball sitting well below his feet. He skidded his sand shot over the green and his pitch to save par and force a playoff sailed past the hole. Gallagher's earnings leave him about $22,000 short of the $4 million mark for his 12-year career.

Legends of Golf
LA QUINTA, Calif. — Lee Trevino and Mike Hill combined for a 7-under-par 64 in Sunday's final round and a two-stroke victory over Gibby Gilbert and J.C. Snead in the PGA Seniors Liberty Mutual Legends team tournament.

Trevino and Hill had eight birdies in their final round and finished the 54-hole event at 21-under 195, each earning $100,000 from $1,105,000 purse.

Gilbert's 20-foot birdie putt on 18 pulled he and Snead, the second-round leaders, from a five-way tie from second.

LPGA Chick-fil-A Classic
STOCKBRIDGE, Ga. — Laura Davies had an eagle and three birdies on the front nine Sunday and pulled away to a record-breaking four-stroke victory over Kelly Robbins in the LPGA Chick-fil-A Charity Classic.

Davies, the longest hitter on the women's tour with a driving average of 268 yards, had her third consecutive 5-under-par 67 and finished the rain-plagued tournament at 15 under, four shots better than Dottie Mochrie's 1992 54-hole record.

Robbins, the tour's second-longest hitter at 262 yards, had a final-round 66 which featured an eagle and five birdies.

Wallace wins with a Ford

Hanes 500

MARTINSVILLE, Va. (AP) — Rusty Wallace ended one streak and extended two others Sunday by holding off Ted Musgrave as darkness fell to win the rain-plagued Hanes 500 at Martinsville Speedway.

Wallace's victory in a Ford Thunderbird released the stranglehold of Chevrolet's new Monte Carlo, which had won the first seven events of the season.

Wallace led three times for 175 laps, including the final 50, and finished three car-lengths ahead of Musgrave, a fellow Ford driver. It was career victory No. 40 for Wallace and his fourth in a row on Martinsville's .526-mile, low-banked oval.

The race on the circuit's shortest and slowest track featured the usual hot tempers and bumping and banging, including an early seven-car pileup that ruined any chance of victory for Winston Cup points leader Dale Earnhardt.

After the race ended, Musgrave was punched in the face by Billy Ingle, Ricky Rudd's crew chief. Ingle apparently was upset that Musgrave had tapped Rudd to get by him with less than 50 laps left, sending Rudd into a spin.

Musgrave wasn't seriously injured. NASCAR officials said they were reviewing the matter.

Wallace's victory came in a race that began more than two hours late because of rain, was halted for more than two hours before the midway point for the same reason, and ended after 356 of its scheduled 500 laps because of darkness.

Wallace's victory also meant Darrell Waltrip once again came up short in a bid to end a winless streak that has reached 77 races dating to September 1992.

Waltrip, winner of 84 Winston Cup races, including 11 at Martinsville, dominated the first half of the race before gambling — and losing — by staying on the track when the rest of the leaders pitted. Waltrip ended up racing 162 laps on the same set of tires, and when he finally had to pit to change them on lap 292, he went a lap down. Waltrip got his lap back and charged to fourth before dusk ended his rally.

Jeff Gordon was third and Mark Martin rounded out the top five.

Cowboys hope they have found a tight end

By Denne H. Freeman
AP Sports Writer

IRVING — The Dallas Cowboys shored up their special teams Sunday and found someone they think could be the eventual successor to tight end Jay Novacek.

With their first pick in the fourth round, the Cowboys took 6-4, 215-pound wide receiver Eric Bjornson of Washington.

"He's an excellent athlete and we'll move him to tight end," said offensive coordinator Ernie Zampese. "He's smart and tough. He's got good speed and we think he can block, too."

Bjornson, who also played quarterback at Washington his junior year, said, "I'm going to put on more weight. I would love to play tight end. It would be great backing up somebody like Jay. I'd learn a lot from him. Dallas called and said they wanted me as a tight end. Nobody showed as much interest as they did."

Bjornson, who caught 49 passes for 770 yards last year, said he was timed at 4.49 seconds in the 40 at the NFL combine which is swift for a big man.

"My speed has improved and I certainly don't mind blocking," he said. "I think the Dallas offense will be perfect for me."

The Cowboys took a tight end blocking prospect in Kendall Watkins of Mississippi State in the second round. The 300-pound Watkins is projected to move along the Cowboys offensive line more than he is as a receiver.

Also in the fourth round the Cowboys made some moves to help their special teams. Alundis Brice, a cornerback from Mississippi, and outside linebacker Linc Hardin of Oklahoma State, were drafted so they could help Joe Avezzano on his special teams.

Brice has overcome being shot in the chest at a party at Ole Miss.

"I probably would have been a second or third round pick if that hadn't happened," Brice said. "I lost a lot of weight but I have most of it back now. I'm ready to go and think I can really help the team on special teams."

"With Brice and Hardin we have a pair of guys who can really fly downfield and make the tackles," Avezzano said.

Dallas also took a special teamer, Charlie Williams of Bowling Green, in the third round.

The Cowboys' top pick, Alabama running back Sherman Williams, visited Valley Ranch on Sunday and got to meet the man he is going to be backing up, Emmitt Smith.

"Emmitt was great to me, saying he had heard I was a good player and was really looking forward to me backing him up and giving him some rest," Williams said.

"I know this, the Cowboys offense is perfect for me. I love making moves in the open field. I can help the passing game, too. I caught the ball in the college. I think I could always be a wide receiver," Williams said.

In the fifth round, the Cowboys took wide receiver Ed Hervey of Southern California and linebacker Dana Howard of Illinois.

"I'll play the special teams or whatever it takes to help the team get to the Super Bowl," Howard said.

"He better be on the special teams or he can't make our team," Avezzano said. "He has showed he could be a top producer on the special teams. We're darn happy to have him."

Hervey said he hoped he make the Cowboys squad.

"I'm glad I got picked by a team I love," Hervey said. "We ran a pro-style offense in college and learned a lot of our stuff from the Cowboys. I've got 4.3 speed and I can fly by the defensive backs."

DRAFT: Permian grad goes to Arizona

the Boston College tight end taken by Miami. Mitchell, considered too small and too slow, catches everything in sight and may turn out to be like a Dan Marino target of a decade ago, Joe Rose, who used to catch the crucial 9-yard pass on third-and-8.

Illinois linebacker Dana Howard, an All-America the last two years, was taken late in the fifth round by Dallas, probably because he's only 6-foot and Chad Cota, Oregon's star safety, was taken on the first pick of the seventh round by Carolina.

But the most interesting development in a league where coaches have been bemoaning the lack of quarterback was the slow but steady run on signal-callers.

After Steve McNair and Kerry Collins went to Houston and Carolina with the third and fifth picks of the third round, there were two more in each of the next two rounds. In order, they were Todd Collins of Michigan to Buffalo, Kordell Stewart of Colorado to Pittsburgh, former Odessa Permian star Stoney Case of New Mexico to Arizona and Eric Zeier of Georgia to Cleveland.

Then came the fourth-round run — Johnson to Jacksonville, May to Minnesota, Barr to Philadelphia and Stenstrom to Kansas City. Stenstrom will play in the same "California offense" he played under Bill Walsh at Stanford — it was installed for Joe Montana with the Chiefs.

Then Barker went to Green Bay on the fifth round, Colquitt to Carolina and Whelihan to San Diego in the sixth and Walsh to Cincinnati in the seventh. Walsh had been projected in a few mock drafts as a first-round choice.

A few were left out, notably Danny O'Neil of Oregon, Wayne Cook of UCLA, Terry Dean of Florida and John Sacca of Eastern Kentucky, who started for a while ahead of Collins at Penn State, then transferred when he lost his job.

All the quarterbacks are considered prospects to be long-term backups — Barker has been compared by scouts to Jeff Rutledge, another Alabama quarterback who spent 14 years as an NFL backup.

And Stewart is thought to be a good enough athlete to be tried at running back, defensive back or wide receiver. Nor would anybody be surprised if he's used to return kicks while he apprentices as a quarterback behind Neil O'Donnell and Mike Tomczak.

BASEBALL: Fans will find discounts

(From 1C)

But even with discounted prices as low as $2 for some seats, only about 24,000 tickets had been sold in the 50,000-capacity Houston Astrodome with only days remaining before the Astros opener.

"No doubt it is going to require some special effort to get the fans back," team spokesman Tyler Barnes said.

The Kansas City Royals are giving away 5,000 general admission tickets to their first four home games and as many as 35,000 meal coupons to reserved ticket holders at those games. It planned an open house this weekend so fans could see the newly sodded field — replacing the old artificial turf — the clubhouse and the dugouts.

"We understand the fans have gone through a lot of pain over the past eight months," Royals spokesman Steven Fink said.

The Pittsburgh Pirates cut ticket prices in half for games through May 11, and is offering discounts on parking and concessions.

"We want to create an atmosphere at the ballpark that is more fun than it has ever been in the past — a situation where families can feel more a part of the game," said Steve Greenberg, the Pirates' head of marketing.

Pirates players will be more accessible at the park and make more appearances in the community such as at Little League games, Greenberg said.

The Boston Red Sox cut prices in half to its first four games and marketing chief Lawrence Cancro said fans will find Fenway Park "more family friendly" with baby changing tables and lower-priced kid's meals.

The Los Angeles Dodgers rolled prices back to 1988 levels — their first year in Los Angeles — for opening night. That means tickets will go for $1.50 to $3.50 a seat.

MONEY MATTERS

YOUR PERSONAL FINANCES

A yes vote for diversification

By Chet Currier
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK — For all its reputation as one of the great virtues in personal money management, diversification is sometimes criticized as a sure road to mediocrity.

There's no question, the detractors acknowledge, that spreading your assets among a variety of investments with different characteristics is one of the best ways available to protect yourself from nasty surprises.

But they argue that diversification, especially when it is carried to extremes, also compromises your chances for the truly exceptional returns that make the whole game worthwhile.

Instead of dividing your eggs among many baskets, they suggest you consider the opposite precept: Put all your eggs in one basket, and watch the basket.

This argument has a logical ring to it. It appeals strongly to professionals who are trying to make a mark for themselves, or speculators taking a fling with money they are able and willing to lose.

In the case of the typical individual or family money manager, however, most advisers say the importance of preservation of capital can't be overstated. These people seldom get into any trouble caused by taking diversification too far.

"You can decrease your overall risk by efficiently diversifying your resources among different investment vehicles," says Phyllis Bernstein, director of the personal financial planning division of the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants.

"The way you allocate your assets is a very important aspect of a successful investment strategy," Ms. Bernstein writes in a pamphlet on accumulating wealth published by the AICPA.

"For example, real estate values increase or decrease in the same direction as inflation. A bond, on the other hand, responds in the opposite way. If you own real estate and bonds, you may be protected from losing too much, because one decreases in value while the other increases."

As old and well known as these ideas may be, advisers say they are all too commonly forgotten.

"Most mutual fund investors, like most common stock investors, fail to adequately diversify," argues editor Norman Fosback in the current issue of Mutual Funds magazine. "It is wise to err on the side of too much diversification among different funds rather than too little."

"Watching the basket" doesn't work," asserts Sheldon Jacobs, who publishes the newsletter The No-Load Fund Investor in Irvington-on-Hudson, N.Y.

"Look what's happened in recent months. First, we had the Mexican peso crisis, which was unanticipated by virtually every layman and professional. Next there was the Orange County derivative fiasco.

"Another reason is the possibility of fraud. Fraud is Real road maps from the Information Highway

By Vivian Marino
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK — Derailed in Des Moines? Befuddled in Buffalo? Lost in L.A.? Just a few clicks — on a computer pointing device — and you could be back in Kansas again, or anywhere else you'd care to travel to. A growing category of personal computer software products promises to take the drudgery and confusion out of trip planning by providing aids like printable maps and customized driving directions, lodging and restaurant tips, travel budgets and guides to attractions. Some also venture overseas.

That's welcome news for anyone, business traveler and vacationer alike, who's ever struggled to refold a map, decipher scribbled-down directions or wandered aimlessly on lonely back roads in the middle of nowhere.

These are real road maps routed from the information highway. Already there's a gridlock of products developing.

"There's been a tremendous growth in this category," said Nicole Field, who runs the software tracking firm PC Data in Reston, Va., "and I think it will continue in the same vein."

PC Data said 30 million travel software programs were sold in retail stores in 1994, up from the 12 million the previous year and the thousands bought in 1991, when the first program became available to consumers.

Although only 5 percent of all PC users owned travel software by the end of 1994, according to PC Data, sales are expected to rise substantially this year as more people buy computers and retailers stock offer new and updated programs.

"People are already going ahead and scheduling summer vacations. Many will spend some of their time on the road," said Bill Demas, product manager for Autopap Road Atlas, the pioneer in travel software purchased by Microsoft Corp. last year.

To be sure, the U.S. Travel Data Center expects Americans to take 237 million domestic pleasure trips of 100 miles or more this summer, about 3 percent higher than last year's record 230 million trips. Eighty percent will be via automobile.

Travel software programs get to show off what PCs do best — maintain extensive databases and perform multiple calculations at finger-snapping speed.

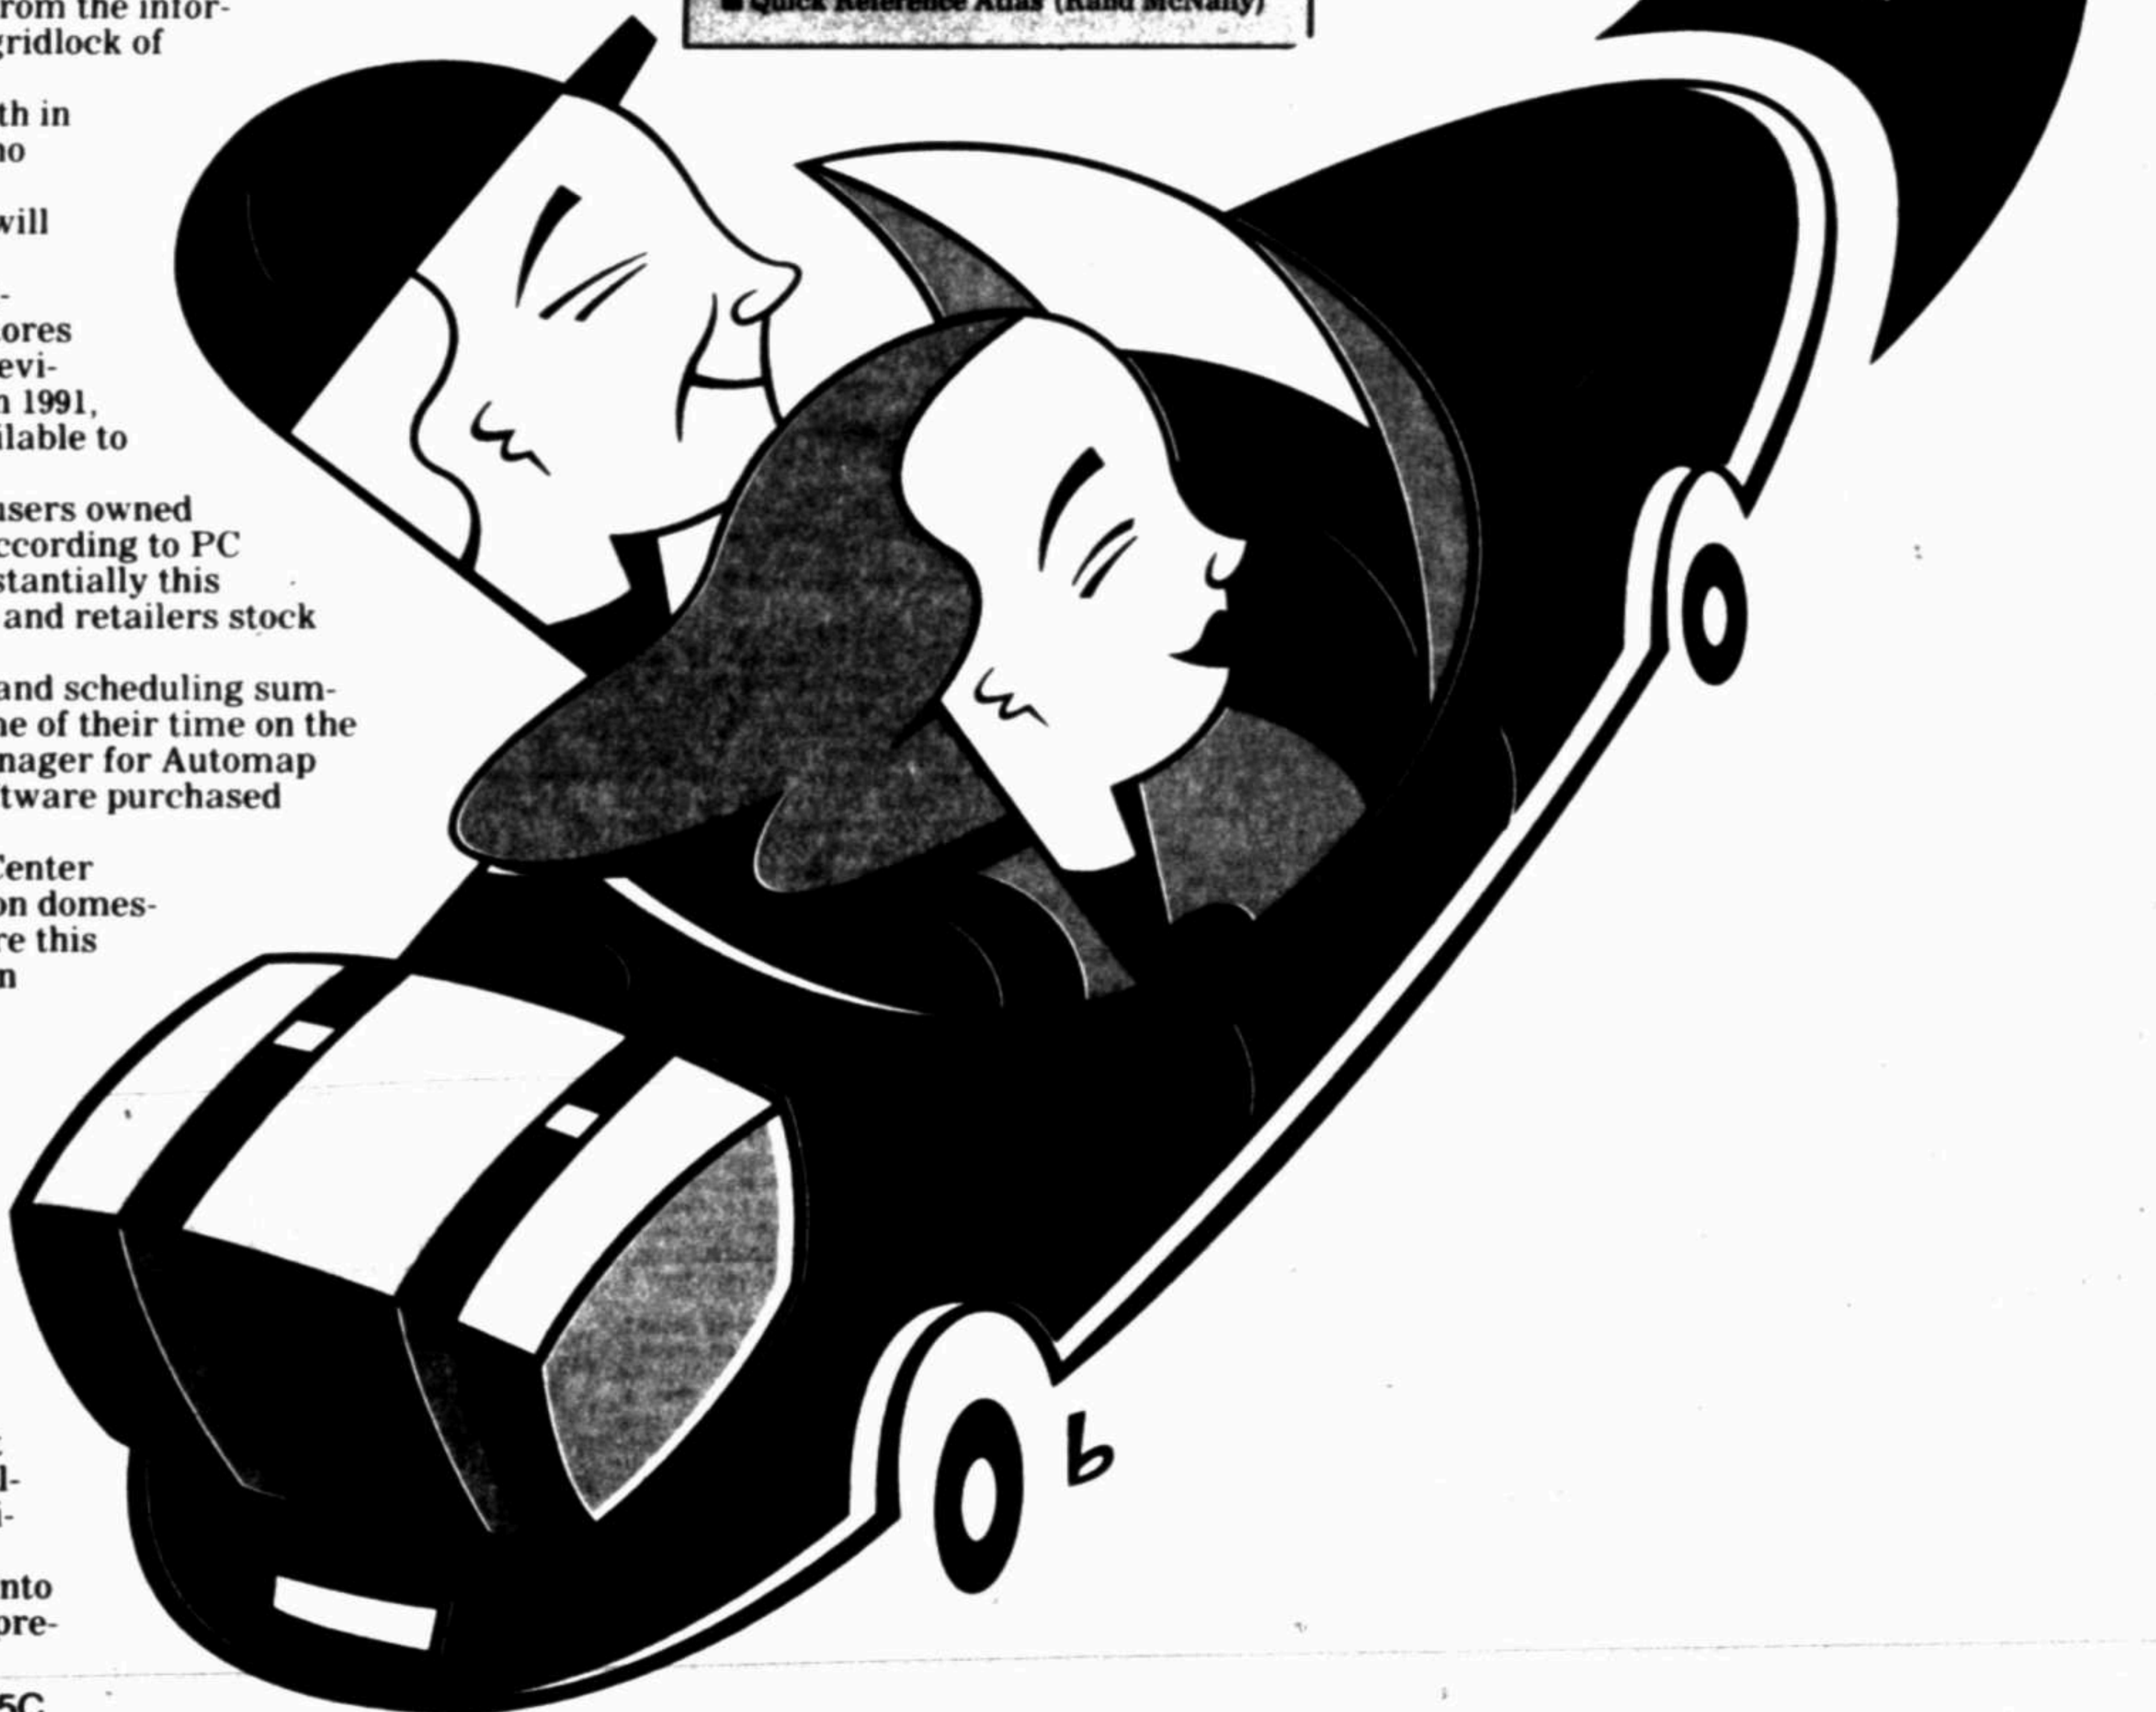

There are more than a dozen programs on the market, ranging in price from around $20 to $100. Some, however, are available only on CD-ROM disks due to the amount of information they hold and the multimedia features they offer, like digitized videos or slide shows.

Basically, travel software falls into three categories: nationwide compre-

For stocks, calendar says both 'go' and 'no'

By Chet Currier
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK — People who watch the stock market for calendar patterns are simultaneously delighted and worried over the way things have been going lately on Wall Street.

The market's rise through the first quarter of 1995 buttressed their hopes based on the historical guidepost known as the "political stock market cycle."

At the same time, however, analysts warn that the market now is heading into the season of the year that has often been its most difficult.

The strong start for stock prices so far fits well with the market's past penchant for enjoying some of its greatest prosperity in the years leading up to and coinciding with presidential elections.

In the last pre-election year, 1991, the market had its best showing so far in this decade, rolling up a 26.3 percent gain in the Standard & Poor's 500-stock composite index. Analysts argue that this sort of pre-election behavior makes sense, if you assume that investors anticipate measures to stimulate the economy, and similar policy goodies, before the voters go to the polls.

Indeed, it can easily be argued that today's stock buyers have had their appetites whetted by politics — proposals to cut capital gains taxes and otherwise stimulate investment.

A more tenuous pattern also gets support from the market's good showing so far this year: An interrupted string, widely noted on the Street, of gains in all recent years ending with the numeral 5. For the S&P 500, 1985 was up 26 percent; 1975 31 percent, 1965 9 percent, and 1955 26 percent.

"Maybe we should have been prepared for good times," suggests Byron Wien at the investment firm of Morgan Stanley & Co. "Years ending in 5 have been up throughout the century without exception."

"But just about everyone, including myself, is suspicious of mechanical correlations," Wien adds. "We need sound fundamental reasons for being optimistic."

The logical underpinning for the early-1995 rally has been provided by rising prices and falling interest rates in the bond market, which suffered through a rocky 1994.

Now, quite a few observers wonder if bonds aren't due for a period of retrenchment, or at least a rest, after their recent burst of strength.

If that induced a leveling off or pullback in the stock market too, well, that would tend to fit with a calendar pattern as well.

Yale Hirsch, publisher of the annual Stock Trader's Almanac, reports that the stock market has done much of its climbing since 1950 in the six months from November through April, and very little of it in the other half of the year, running with fear and uncertainty over how she would get by.

DIVORCE: Think twice about fighting for the house

"I didn't know what investments we had. ... I didn't know what the electric bill or gas bill was. ... I had no idea where the money was going to come from," she says.

Ms. Bryson, who is 47 years old and lives in a Denver suburb, got help. She sat down with a financial planner and figured out her long-term needs before agreeing to a settlement. Ms. Bryson, who now works in an art gallery, believes that planning helped her get a better deal.

Financial planners and accountants say they see many women like Ms. Bryson — after it's too late to be of real help. Many women "come to me with their divorce settlement, and I feel like saying, 'Why didn't you come to me before this was finalized,'" says Peggy Ruhlman, a financial planner in Columbus, Ohio.

Predivorce financial planning probably makes sense for just about anybody. While a good attorney will know about many of the tax and other financial aspects of a settlement, lawyers often suggest that clients sit down with a financial pro to map out their long-term needs.

"I'll say to someone, 'Do you really think this is going to make it 10 years from now?' But I'm not going to sit down and plan their future with them," says Susan Reach Winters, a divorce lawyer in Short Hills, N.J.

Couples who have done such planning often take less time to reach a settlement, thereby cutting down on legal fees. "Insecurity is probably the biggest roadblock to divorce," says Evan Bell, a CPA in New York City whose clients have included Ivana Trump and the designer Carolynne Roehm, former wife of takeover king Henry Kravis.

But predivorce financial advice can be especially important for homemakers confronting a midlife divorce without a coterie of attorneys, accountants, planners and brokers from years in the business world.

These women — often people in their 40s, 50s and 60s who left the work force to raise families and relied on their husbands to be breadwinners — frequently have a weak grasp of their financial situation and can end up with the short end of a settlement, divorce specialists say. Men who stay home and leave financial matters to their wives are similarly vulnerable.

Here are some tips that can help "traditional" wives — and others who feel lost in a financial maze — even the odds:

■ Think Twice About the House: Perhaps the most common mistake women make is insisting they get the house. Many husbands are only too happy to give it up while hanging onto some other valuable asset such as their pension plans.

"The house is familiar, it's security," Ms. Ruhlman says. But even if the mortgage has been paid off, a house can generate thousands of dollars in property-tax bills and maintenance costs, and it generates zero income. And if you end up having to sell and move to a less expensive home, you can be hit with a whopping capital-gains tax.

Many financial planners recommend spouses agree to sell the house as part of the settlement. They can share the proceeds and the tax liability. Folks age 55 and older will have additional tax issues and should consult their accountant or planner.

■ Beware of Second-Rate Investments: Suppose your estranged spouse offers you a 50 percent, or greater share, of the investment portfolio. Sounds fair, right?

Not necessarily. That's because, to paraphrase George Orwell, some investments are more equal than others. "Often, men use settlements to dump assets they don't want," says Janet Briaud, a financial planner in Bryan, Texas.

Topping the list of investments to avoid: limited partnerships. They're difficult to value accurately, hard to sell, and often saddled with tax liabilities. Many are nearly worthless.

Real estate is also tricky. While rental property can produce valuable income, it may be subject to stiff taxes in the event you need to sell.

Before accepting real estate as part of any settlement, get an outside appraisal and have your CPA or financial planner check out tax issues. Also, ask yourself if you're prepared to be a landlord.

In general, the best investments are the most liquid: stocks, bonds and mutual funds. And, of course, "cash is king," says Kaycee Krysty, a CPA and financial planner in Seattle.

Whatever the settlement, you'll probably need to reshape your portfolio to make sure it's properly diversified. Diannah Lassus, a CPA and financial planner in New Providence, N.J., says one client's post-settlement portfolio consisted entirely of 1,000 shares of Bristol-Myers Squibb Co. stock.

■ Don't Overlook Retirement Plans: Pensions, 401(k)s and individual retirement accounts can be among the most valuable assets a homemaker spouse can have. These tax-deferred savings vehicles are especially important for spouses who have no retirement investments of their own and may be hard pressed to save in the years following a divorce, says Robert Stephan Cohen, a New York divorce attorney.

"Most people in the divorce process think about what they're getting now," Mr. Cohen says. "How are they going to survive in their senior years?"

In order to get a piece of a spouse's "qualified" plan, such as a pension or 401(k), you'll need a Qualified Domestic Relations Order issued by a court. If your spouse has a defined-benefit plan, you'd be entitled to payments once he hits retirement age.

If your spouse has a defined-contribution plan, you could get your share distributed to you, even if you're under age 59 1/2, without having to pay the 10 percent early-withdrawal penalty; but you'd owe ordinary income tax on the sum. A direct transfer of the money to an IRA would allow you to defer those taxes, plus keep the 20 percent that otherwise would be withheld for taxes, says Violet Woodhouse, a divorce attorney in Anaheim Hills, Calif.

Alton L. Abramowitz, a New York divorce attorney, offers this warning: "Don't tie up too much of the settlement in retirement assets if you need the money to live on."

■ Family Business? Ask for a Buyout: If you have a stake in a spouse's business, it's usually smart to negotiate for a cash buyout.

Think about it. Would you rather have the money in hand or have to rely on your ex's business savvy and good faith in running a concern over which you have no control?

Be sure to get the business independently appraised. "Businessmen who are very astute with numbers are able to hide money," says Carol Ann Wilson, a financial planner in Boulder, Colo.

■ Plan for Training and Child-Rearing Expenses: Many women who have been homemakers will need to go back to school or get other training to re-enter the work force. Be sure to include a provision for such costs in the settlement.

If there are children staying with you, you'll need to plan for those costs as well. Child support will pay for some of those expenses, but typically won't be enough to pay for child-care if you return to work, private school, summer camp, after-school activities, college and graduate school.

If you want your former spouse to cover these expenses, get it written into the settlement.

■ Other Considerations: In general a lump-sum settlement is preferable to alimony because you don't have to rely for continued payments from your ex. But few people have the financial resources to provide for an equitable settlement in a lump-sum.

Be sure your former spouse has life insurance to cover any payments he's supposed to make to you in future years. If you're covered by your spouse's employer-based health plan, and his company has 20 or more employees, you should be able to keep that coverage for up to 36 months under "Cobra" — the Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985. But premiums could run several thousand dollars a year; you may want to get your spouse to agree to cover those costs.

If you need to establish a personal credit history, you might get your spouse to agree to co-sign applications for credit cards and loans for several years.

If you think divorce is in the air, it's wise to make copies of as many financial records as you can find. They often have a way of disappearing when proceedings get underway.

Finally, be prepared for a stinging reality of divorce: You'll probably have to get by on less, says Marty Deutsch, a CPA in New York City.

"Unless the guy is extraordinarily wealthy, the two of you can't continue to maintain the lifestyle you did," Mr. Deutsch says.

Don't count on Social Security or a pension for 'Golden Years'

By Teresa McUsic
N.Y. Times News Service

If you're planning on your company and the government rewarding you with a lifetime of income after all the hard work you've put in, think again.

No matter what's been promised, the pension system in this country is, in one writer's terms, "exploding."

"The finances of the pension system are shaky — one pension plan out of five does not have the money to pay promised benefits," writes Barron's financial writer Thomas G. Donlan in his book "Don't Count On It! Why Your Pension May Be in Jeopardy — And How to Protect Yourself" (Simon & Schuster publishers, 300 pages, $23).

Not only is the current system underfunded to the tune of more than $51 billion, but the 21st century is bringing with it a demographic nightmare, Donlan says, with 80 million baby boomers set to retire.

"The nation faces a demographic crisis when the retiring baby-boom generation (those born between 1945 and 1970) must depend for the sustenance of its pensions on the economic productivity of much less numerous younger generations," Donlan writes.

"The most numerous generation in American history will also be the longest-lived."

As if this wasn't enough, the Social Security system also faces the same financial and demographic problems. The idea that the government is saving what they take out of our paychecks for our golden years is a myth, Donlan says. It's really paying to keep the current group of seniors afloat.

Donlan calls it nothing more than a "Ponzi" scheme. Currently, a typical 65-year-old retiree recoups all he or she paid into the system in less than two years, yet on average has 14 more years to live, he writes. But in large part because of the baby boom, those born after 1965 will have to pay huge Social Security taxes, only to find their benefits cut when they retire.

Donlan provides readers with an excellent overview of the private and public pension systems and the largely untold story of the gloomy future they face.

Included is a topsy-turvy world of legal raiding of the system by companies when their systems appear overfunded, inept government regulation and workers faced with accepting terms not in their best interest in order to save their jobs.

On a more positive note, the author also provides chapters on how to determine the health of your own company's pension system, as well as ways to protect yourself from becoming a victim of the pension mess.

Bottom line: Don't count on any company or government supporting you during your retirement.

"There is nothing and nobody that will guarantee people a comfortable retirement except their own determined action now to save and invest wisely and aggressively," Donlan writes.

To that end, Donlan spends the last third of the book discussing 401(k) plans, annuities, individual retirement accounts and other investment choices that are controlled for the most part by the individual. He also says studies suggest that working seniors, even in part-time employment, are more fulfilled than the average retiree.

For an excellent look at a fundamentally important aspect of American society, I would recommend reading Donlan's book — and checking out the outlook for your own "golden" years.

TRAVEL: Cars may soon become equipped hensive trip planning, street-specific mapping and worldwide reference sources. A few overlap.

(From 4C)

Software manufacturers claim just about any locale, even the smallest town, can be found.

"We've listed all the routes," said Neil J. Vill, vice president and general manager for the New Media division of Rand McNally, which publishes TripMaker and Quick Reference.

"We'll route you to the front door of all the (tourist) attractions ... customize an itinerary based on driving habits ... even allow you to type in a note to yourself to see Uncle Joe on vacation," he said, noting that TripMaker's databases hold more than 640,900 miles of roads and more than 125,000 towns and cities in North America.

But can TripMaker and similar products deliver? Most users will find they do, and with accuracy and speed, although even the software manufacturers admit they have some limitations.

Indeed, two top-selling programs — TripMaker and DeLorme Mapping's Map'n Go — come with printed road atlases that cross-reference the computerized information.

"The age of the computer is here; there's no question about it. But that doesn't mean that the days of the paper maps are limited," said Jerry Cheske, spokesman for the American Automobile Association, which provides data for AAA Trip Planner, published by Compton's NewMedia.

"It's very difficult to take all this (computerized) stuff in your car ... unless you have a laptop computer."

Still, while travel software may never supplant the low-tech products, they remain king of road in ready resources. It would take dozens of printed maps, atlases and guide books to match the information found in most programs. And many users will find the software more fun.

"You can sit in front of TripMaker for hours. ... You can dream about a trip to the Pacific Northwest," said Vill.

Most trip-planning software is easy to navigate, providing colorful interfaces and simple point-and-click directions for Windows or Macintosh systems. (A few still offer DOS programs.)

Users can either type in destination requests or "drag" on-screen push-pins or flags with their computer's pointing device to come up with customized maps and directions that specify roads to use and supply mileage and estimated travel time. Most programs allow users to choose among the quickest, shortest or most scenic routes.

The latest CD-ROM version of Automap contains more than 400,000 miles of highways and 1,100 pictures of points of interest in North America. The program also provides a map that can help travelers avoid mountainous regions in winter or when driving recreational vehicles.

Its most notable feature is its ability to break down a long journey into days, offering suggestions on when to refuel or rest. The Automap Streets program can zoom in on local streets in a particular city.

TripMaker provides the "Trip Guide Wizard," which, among other things, lets users take notes about trips and suggests destinations or stopovers. The program includes 88 pre-planned scenic tours and has "Attraction Pack" databases for things like beaches; outdoor adventuring; downhill skiing; tennis and golf; and gambling destinations. It also has information on border crossings, toll roads and phone numbers for airlines, car rentals and hotels.

Map'n Go also provides picture and audio presentations of points of interest. Its Street Atlas USA is an excellent companion program for those wanting to pinpoint local neighborhoods just about anywhere in the country.

The best feature for AAA Trip Planner is its AAA-rated lists of lodgings and restaurants nationwide, although one noticeable shortfall is that it doesn't automatically include maps along with its printable driving directions.

For those traveling abroad, there are programs like Broderbund Software Inc.'s PC Globe Maps 'N' Facts, Rand McNally's Quick Reference, DeLorme's Global Explorer and Compton's Let's Go: The Budget Guide to Europe.

Demas said future travel software will be linked more with on-line services for updates on weather or traffic.

James Costantino, executive director of the Intelligent Transportation Society of America, thinks all that electronic information, and more, eventually will become available in most new cars. Computerized navigational systems already are present in some rental vehicles as well as a few new models made by the major automakers, he noted.

"Technology could help ease our traffic congestion ... by helping people avoid certain roads," he said. "We use up $100 billion a year in lost production due to traffic."

Report shows money funds fell in latest week

NEW YORK (AP) — Assets of the nation's 685 retail money market mutual funds fell by $239.7 million in the latest week to $466.47 billion, the Investment Company Institute said Thursday.

Assets of the 422 taxable money market funds in the retail category rose by $1.16 billion to $370.79 billion for the week ended Wednesday, the Washington-based mutual fund trade group said. The 263 tax-exempt fund assets fell by $1.40 billion to $95.68 billion.

Assets of the 300 institutional money market funds fell by $2 billion to $191.19 billion for the same period. Among institutional funds, the 236 taxable money market fund assets fell by $566.7 million to $168.37 billion; assets of the 64 tax-exempt funds fell by $1.43 billion to $22.82 billion.

Total money market assets stood at $657.66 billion for the week.

Assets of money market mutual funds for the week ended April 12 were revised to $659.90 billion. The revisions reflect reporting errors and a change in the number of funds reporting.

The seven-day average yield on money market mutual funds rose in the week ended Tuesday to 5.54 percent from 5.53 percent the previous week, said Money Fund Report, a trade journal published in Ashland, Mass., by IBC-Donoghue. The 30-day average yield was unchanged at 5.54 percent.

The seven-day compounded yield rose to 5.69 percent from 5.68 percent the previous week, and the 30-day compounded yield rose to 5.70 percent from 5.69 percent, IBC-Donoghue said.

The average maturity of the portfolios held by money funds was 45 days, up from 44 days, IBC-Donoghue said.

The newsletter Bank Rate Monitor said its survey of 100 leading commercial banks, savings and loan associations and savings banks in the nation's 10 largest markets showed the annual percentage yield available on money market accounts as of Wednesday was unchanged from a week earlier at 2.89 percent.

The North Palm Beach, Fla.-based newsletter said the annual percentage yield available on interest-bearing checking accounts fell to 1.54 percent from 1.55 percent.

Bank Rate Monitor said the annual percentage yield was 5.11 percent on six-month certificates of deposit, unchanged from the previous week. Yields were 5.78 percent on 1-year CDs, down from 5.79 percent; 6.22 percent on 2 1/2-year CDs, down from 6.25 percent; and 6.57 percent on 5-year CDs, down from 6.61 percent.

from May through October.

"We are almost through the most favorable half of the year," Hirsch says in his newsletter Ground Floor. "Not that the market has to follow our schedule," he adds, but "it's time for a pause in the advance."

Says Wien, "It is my view that the market will settle down and consolidate for a while. I don't expect a sharp selloff, although clearly one is possible, and I also don't expect a bear market to begin, although the chances of that happening are at least one in five."

He adds, "equity returns have been compounding near 15 percent since the early 1980s, and that's a long time for things to have been going so well."

"All of this doesn't mean the market has to go down, but it does suggest the buying power to drive equities to my 1995 target of Dow Jones 4,500 may not be present."

there is really no protection — other than diversification.

"If we could foretell the future, there would be no need for diversification," Jacobs says. "We would simply invest in those securities or asset classes that promised the greatest return."

"But since that's obviously not possible, we buy stock or bond funds to diversify away the specific stock or bond risk. We diversify between asset classes to avoid steep losses in individual asset classes, such as the October 1987 stock market crash."

"We diversify between types of stock funds, such as growth and value, large and small-cap, domestic and international. We also believe in diversifying among managers. In fact, we think it's hard to be too diversified."

"Any strategy has a downside,"

Jacobs concludes. "In this case you forgo the supergains. We think that's a small price to pay for the comfort of knowing that catastrophic losses are unlikely."

WEEKLY BRIDGE ANSWERS

Q. 1 - Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:

AKJ1063 OKQJ9 OA8 473

The bidding has proceeded:
SOUTH WEST NORTH EAST
1A Pass 20 Pass
20 Pass 34 Pass

What do you bid now?

A - You are a whit good for a mere four spades, especially with such a fine four-card side suit and quality trumps. Therefore, we suggest you show your ace of diamonds by bidding four diamonds. Since you've done nothing to suggest a powerful hand up to now, partner won't go overboard after this mild encouragement.

Q. 2 - As South, vulnerable, you hold:

AKQ1054 OAQ75 Ovoid 4973

The bidding has proceeded:
NORTH EAST SOUTH WEST
1A Pass 14 Pass
2A Pass 20 Pass
3NT Pass ?
What do you bid now?

A - Partner must have a source of tricks to jump to three no trump, and that can only be a long and near-solid holding in clubs. That means a slam is by no means out of the question, and your first move should be to bid four clubs. A rebid of four spades is a close second choice.

Q. 3 - As South, vulnerable, you hold:

4985 OJ9762 OA10 AKJ9

The bidding has proceeded:
WEST NORTH EAST SOUTH
1A Dbl Pass ?
What do you bid now?

A - Facing a partner who has at least the equivalent of an opening bid and shortness in spades, this is a fine hand indeed. You have a five-card major-suit, a ruffing value and nine points in high cards. You can describe this holding to a tee by jumping to three hearts.

Q. 4 - Both vulnerable, as South you hold:

AAQ83 OK93 OKJ9 4QJ4

Your right-hand opponent opens the bidding with one no trump. What action do you take?

A - In the good old days, the expert consensus was to double — for penalties, of course. However, your opening lead usually gave away either a tempo or a trick, and the opponents usually ended up making the hand, often with an overtrick or two. Nowadays you double only if you are sure of defeating the contract — when you hold a long, easily-established suit and some quick entries on the side. With this type of hand, pass.

Q. 5 - Both vulnerable, you have 80 on score. As South you hold:

AKQ93 OK106 OA8 4AK76

The bidding has proceeded:
SOUTH WEST NORTH EAST
1A Pass 24 Pass

What action do you take?

A - You have 14 points in high cards, albeit a very good 14. Nevertheless, partner could have as little as 6-7 points, so where do you want to go? Even if partner has a super-maximum of 10 points, game is doubtful. Pass.

Partner opens the bidding with one diamond. What do you respond?

A - The partscore makes this hand more difficult to bid, not easier. We suggest you jump to three no trump which, without the partial, would show a hand of 16-18 points. In view of the score, partner should place you with a maximum to justify a slam try.

Q. 6 - As South, vulnerable, you hold:

AA1092 OJ10 OAK 4Q8762

The bidding has proceeded:
SOUTH WEST NORTH EAST
1A Pass 24 Pass

What action do you take?

A - You have 14 points in high cards, albeit a very good 14. Nevertheless, partner could have as little as 6-7 points, so where do you want to go? Even if partner has a super-maximum of 10 points, game is doubtful. Pass.

CBS pulls Tonya Harding segment after disgraced skater's accusation RADNOR, Pa. — CBS dropped Tonya Harding from a "Where Are They Now?" entertainment special after the disgraced Olympic skater accused the network of paying her mother to tape their conversations with a hidden microphone.

CBS drops Tonya Harding from a special after accusation.

The network conceded that it wired Harding's mother, LaVona Golden, during the skater's Olympic training last year, but denied paying her, TV Guide reported in its April 29 issue that comes out Monday. CBS also said it instructed Golden to tell Harding she was wired.

"My mother doesn't do anything without being paid," Harding said in the segment that was pulled from the special scheduled to air May 4.

Harding alleged the newsmagazine "Eye to Eye With Connie Chung" paid Golden to wear a microphone around Harding. Chung said she didn't know Golden had been wired and said the network would never pay for information.

CBS producers later deemed Harding's comments "inappropriate" and pulled her segment. "It wouldn't be right to air such accusations without equal time for an answer," said executive producer Dan Funk.

Harding pleaded guilty to covering up the attack on rival Nancy Kerrigan and got a fine and probation. Her ex-husband was sentenced in the attack.

RADNOR, Pa. — Her latest leading man got raves from Anjelica Huston before the cameras even started rolling.

Elliott, says Huston, "has the voice to match."

Anjelica Huston

Elliott, says Huston, "has the voice to match."

Huston, who's married to sculptor Robert Graham and was a longtime love of Jack Nicholson's, says she likes "strong" men.

"I like to be paid attention to, but I don't necessarily like to dominate," she said. "And it's a difficult thing, obviously, finding a man who is not threatened or intimidated by a woman who is also strong and has opinions."

RADNOR, Pa. — Neil Simon is turning to the small screen.

The playwright struck a deal with producer Robert Halmi to bring at least six projects — including one original — to television.

Simon says he's tired of dealing with the bureaucracy of filmmaking.

"It's such a headache to get a film off the ground. Everyone from the star to the director wants a rewrite," he says.

He says he had a great experience with the TV remake of "The Sunshine Boys," due on CBS next season with Woody Allen and Peter Falk.

Simon and Halmi will next work on "Jake's Women" for CBS, with Alan Alda reprising his Broadway role. Halmi also wants to do Simon's "Barefoot in the Park."

"This is what TV needs — quality family entertainment," Halmi said.

The magazine didn't name the other projects.

LOS ANGELES — Look for Randy Newman at a theater near you.

The singer-songwriter has movie soundtracks, including two Disney films, lined up through 1997.

"Soundtracks give you no control over your life in that you have to work all the time to do them," he says. "It gives you more structure, which I need. If I don't have it I don't do anything."

For Disney, he will be writing soundtracks for "Toy Story" and "James and the Giant Peach."

"It's a pretty good forum for songwriters, in a way. I liked 'The Little Mermaid' and those Disney pictures," he said. "I thought I might like to do that. It's been fun."

Rate & Credit Policies

Rate charges are determined at the time of placement. All ads accepted are subject to credit approval. Some classified categories require payment in advance. Credit applications are also required for business accounts. Yearly contract agreements are available. The Midland Reporter-Telegram reserves the right to correctly classify and edit all copy or to reject or cancel any advertisement at any time.

Cancellations
The price of your ad will be based on the number of days published according to our rate structure. Call (915) 682-6222 - ask for your cancellation number. This is your record of cancellation and it is important that you have it in the event of any misunderstanding or adjustment. "Super Seller" and "Real Wheel Deal" ads may be cancelled, but are non-adjustable and non-refundable.

Errors and Adjustments

Please check your ad the first day that it appears to be sure that all of the information is correct. This will ensure that your ad is exactly what you want readers to see. Call us the first day if you find an error at 915-682-6222. To report an error in Saturday's edition call Saturday morning between 8 a.m. and 10 a.m. Errors in Sunday's edition should be reported on Monday morning after 8:00 a.m. We must limit our financial responsibility, if any, to the charge for the word or space, and cannot be held responsible for incorrect ads after the first day of publication.

Omissions of Ads

The Midland Reporter-Telegram assumes no financial responsibility in an ad beyond the cost of the ad itself, and no responsibility for the omission of an ad.
