Between 2 worlds

PEABODY, Mass. — Kristen Crowley was married, worked for a computer company and drove a sensible Ford Escort. Unbeknownst to most of her family, she also made extra money as an exotic dancer at private parties. Over the weekend, she was attacked and killed as she made her way between both worlds; she had stopped to buy groceries as she hurried home after performing at a party./3A

Russia vote fraud

Did you hear the one about who won Russia's presidential election? Gennady Zyuganov got 53 percent, but Boris Yeltsin did him one better, winning with 56 percent. With presidential elections looming on June 16, warnings of election fraud by both sides have fed an atmosphere of uncertainty — and inspired a wealth of jokes on the street./2A

Nursing felons

Gary Kleypas was 21 when he beat an elderly widow and left her to suffocate in her own blood. He was 36 when he finished half of his 30-year sentence, moved to Kansas and began to study nursing. Had he not been charged with and confessed to a second murder, Kleypas likely would have earned a registered nursing degree and could have been treating patients. With no national standards on licensure, Kansas and some other states consider and license convicted felons to practice nursing./3A

Agents cut power at Freemen ranch

Associated Press

JORDAN, Mont. — The FBI pulled the plug on the electricity at the Freemen ranch Monday and flew a helicopter around the property, passing over a sentry post where an American flag has been flying upside down.

A day earlier, the FBI had moved armored vehicles closer to the compound.

The power was cut during the afternoon in "another effort to persuade the Freemen to resume negotiations for a peaceful settlement" to the 71-day-old standoff, the FBI said in a statement.

The Freemen compound appeared quiet. Some neighbors have said they are sure the Freemen have their own generators. But it's not known how long the fugitives could hold out without outside power.

A fuel distributor said his company made a delivery to the ranch last fall, including 290 gallons of diesel that could be used to run generators.

The FBI switched on portable generators to supply power to 41 neighboring homes that are wired into the same circuit supplying the 960-acre Freemen grain and cattle ranch.

On Sunday, three FBI armored vehicles were moved to within a few miles of the ranch. The FBI has said it wants the equipment available for emergency rescues or a move onto the ranch.

However, a government source, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the arrival of the equipment does not mean the FBI plans to enter the compound.

"We haven't given up" trying to end the standoff peacefully, the source said.

Agents also established additional checkpoints Sunday along a rural road between Jordan and the ranch.

City Animal Control tags Rover with implant ID

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

Tammy — an 11-year-old Boston Terrier — recently was adopted from the city's animal control shelter. But she won't be forgotten by those at the shelter.

And it's not because she's so cute.

Tammy and all animals adopted since last week are required to have an identification microchip implanted under their skin between the shoulder blades.

The coded chip is embedded using a special syringe. On Monday afternoon, Tammy didn't even flinch when the chip, about the size of a grain of rice, was injected.

Now, if Tammy is lost, stolen or killed, she'll always be identifiable by waving a scanner over her shoulder and reading her assigned number, the shelter's Assistant Director Karen Hoffman said.

"This is just a backup identification that is there permanently," Ms. Hoffman said. "It's not meant to replace the city license tag ... but an additional way to identify your dog."

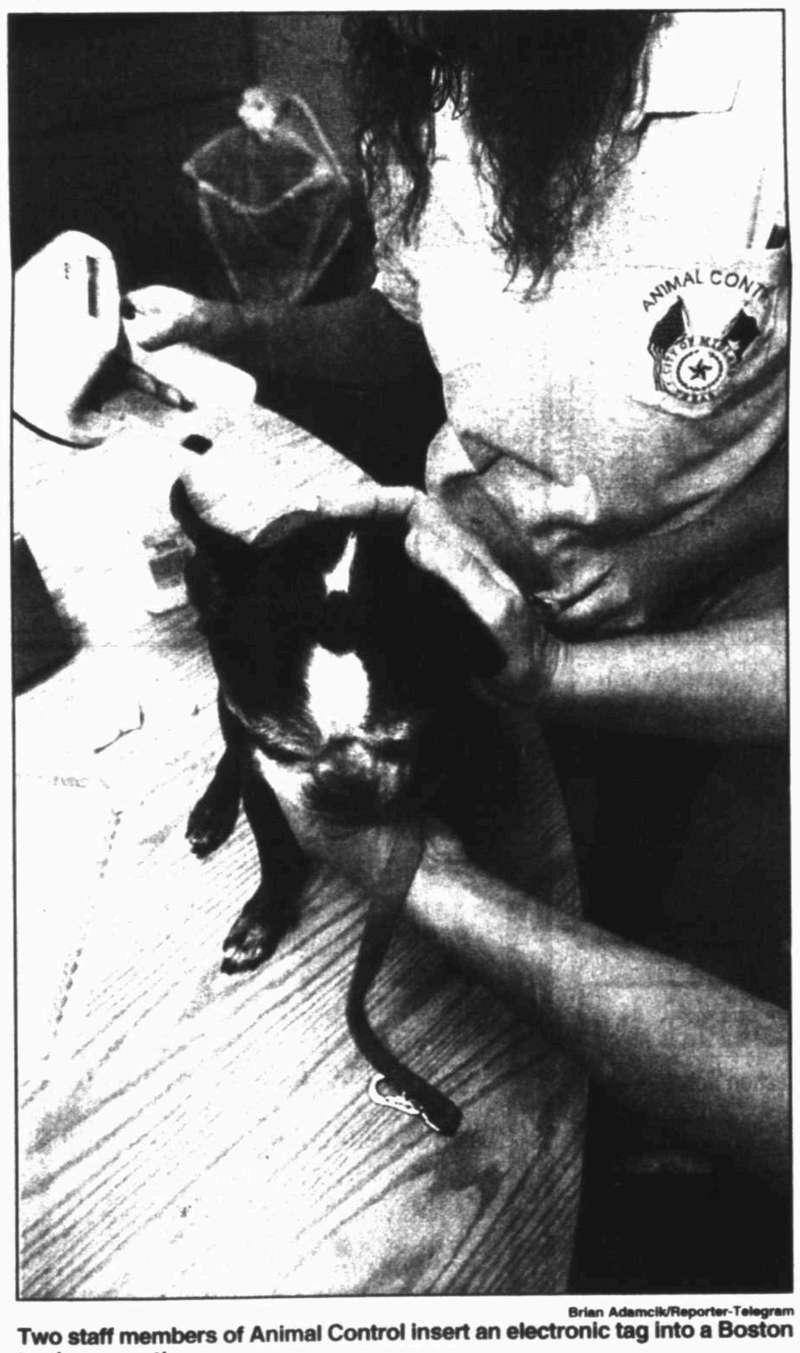

When a cat or dog without a tag is picked up and not claimed, the animal is kept for a minimum of three days before being adopted out or euthanized.

But if an animal has a microchip, it will be held for 10 days. The identification number will be compared to microchips implanted by the shelter and, if there's not a match, it will be checked with the databank used by the chip manufacturer.

"Always getting a dog back to the owner is the most important thing to us," Ms. Hoffman said.

Microchip identification also allows the shelter to track adopted

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A bank's credit card customers can be socked with late-payment fees even if they live in a state where such charges are banned, the Supreme Court ruled Monday.

The unanimous decision in a California case could net banks hundreds of millions of dollars a year and was denounced by consumer advocates.

"If you've got a credit card, this means you're going to get hit with one of these charges sooner or later," said Mark Chavez, a lawyer for the National Consumer Law Center. "It's a very disappointing decision — it allows one state to export its laws, pre-empting other states' consumer-protection laws."

■ Justices hear arguments on limiting death-row appeals./3A

There was no immediate reaction from the banking industry.

Nationally chartered banks that locate their credit-lending home base in friendly states such as South Dakota or Delaware are allowed to charge interest on credit card balances at rates permitted in the state they are located.

And the court ruled that late-payment fees are included in federal banking law's definition of "interest."

In other matters, the court:

■ Upheld the military death penalty by rejecting a constitutional challenge to it by an Army private prosecuted in Texas.

■ Heard arguments over a new federal law that limits most state death row inmates to one appeal in federal court. A ruling is expected within a month.

■ Agreed to hear the Clinton administration's challenge to a Louisiana school board's election system that includes no majority-black districts and was approved despite evidence it diluted minority voters' political clout.

■ Rejected an appeal by a former FBI agent who says he was fired in retaliation for successfully suing the agency over its discrimination against Hispanics.

New name appears on oil, gas horizon

By John Paul Pitts
Oil Editor

A new name has been introducted to the Permian Basin oil and gas scene.

Jim Posey, chief executive officer of the proposed limited partnership between units of Amoco Corp. and Shell Oil Co., announced Monday that the new official name for the partnership is Altura Energy Ltd.

"Altura, which is Spanish for height or altitude, provides a fitting description of the broad vision of this venture," Posey said. "I believe this partnership will reach new heights in terms of boldness, innovation, efficiency and versatility." The selection of the name comes after more than five months of intense study by a team of Amoco and Shell employees.

John Curry, a spokesman for Amoco, said the main criteria for the new name was that it reflect the aggressiveness, leadership and uniqueness of the Amoco-Shell partnership. He said a team of five worked hard, and did their homework by reviewing over 500 names, to come up with a final selection of 14.

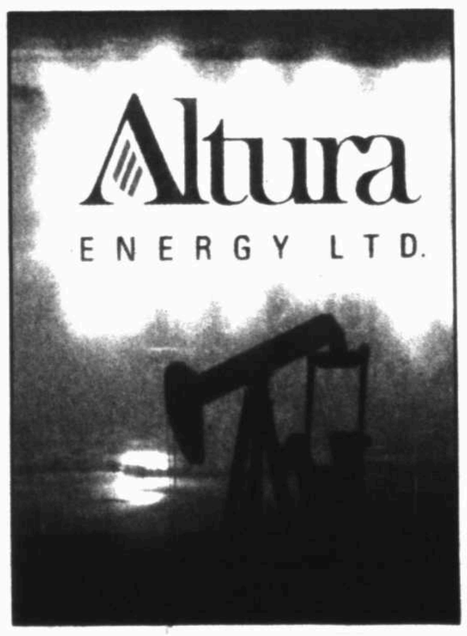

Following a final check of legal and trademarks, the choice was narrowed down to Altura, as the name that best characterized the new company.

"Once they came up with the name, a graphic designer was hired to come up with a logo to characterize the new name," Curry said, adding that the "A" of the logo was intended to reflect the pinnacle aspect of the new company, as reaching new heights in the industry. "The three slashes represent the three partners of the venture — Amoco, Shell and Altura." Curry said the companies were pleased with the logo, because "it was crisp, pleasing to look at, and had a good flow to the design."

"The logo stands as a reflection of the company's personality — bold, diverse, aggressive and a first mover in all aspects of our business," Posey said.

Despite the recent announcement that the new company that involves only Permian Basin assets would remain in Midland, the naming of Posey as CEO and now the introduction of the new name and logo, Curry said there are still many aspects to be dealt with in organizing the new com-

WORLD IN BRIEF

■ U.S., allies agree to revamp NATO

BERLIN — Easing France's re-entry into NATO, the United States and its allies approved historic changes in the 47-year-old European defense structure Monday to prepare for Bosnia-like crises in the next century.

Where once NATO was poised to attack should Russian tanks roll across the plains of Germany, the 16-member security alliance intends to reinvent itself to cope with unforeseen conflicts even beyond Europe.

"In the real world, there is no substitute for a real security alliance," said Secretary of State Warren Christopher, who credited President Clinton with inspiring the changes at a NATO summit in 1994. "NATO is the essential and most realistic foundation upon which to build a secure and undivided Europe."

■ Official: Only war will halt Bosnia vote

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Western powers are pressing ahead with plans to hold elections in Bosnia in September even though most Bosnians believe a vote will divide rather than unite their country.

Only a flare-up in the war could postpone the ballot, the U.S. official overseeing the election said Monday.

The remarks by Robert Frowick showed a widening gulf between the desire of Western powers to have the election proceed as scheduled under last year's Dayton peace accord and mounting evidence of obstacles to a free and fair vote.

Frowick, head of the Bosnia mission of the Organization for Security and Cooperation in Europe, acknowledged "monumental difficulties" in setting up what he called "the most complex elections in history."

"I don't expect very idyllic results," he told a news conference.

Despite those problems, Frowick said only a major disturbance would stop the vote.

■ Effort to beef up atomic agency snags

VIENNA — After the Persian Gulf war, when international inspectors got a better opportunity to look around a defeated Iraq, they discovered that Saddam Hussein had secretly been developing nuclear weapons. To deter such an ominous possibility from threatening the world again, Washington wants to strengthen the powers of the International Atomic Energy Agency, which is responsible for guarding against the diversion of nuclear material to bomb-making.

But the effort has run into determined resistance, not from rogue states bent on acquiring nuclear arsenals, but from two allies — Germany and Japan — that fear a new burden on their flourishing nuclear power industries. While expressing commitment to non-proliferation, diplomats from each country, in separate interviews on Monday, said that the expanded powers that Washington is seeking for the atomic energy agency would place unfair economic and financial burdens on the owners of nuclear power plants.

■ Summit signal: Urban woes affect all

ISTANBUL, Turkey — Across town from Istanbul's teeming slums, delegates opened a U.N. conference on urban problems Monday by promising bold steps to curb the misery caused by migration to the world's big cities.

Crime, squalor, homelessness and crumbling roads and bridges were among the issues raised at the Conference on Human Settlements, held some 5 miles away from Istanbul's slums in a plush new conference center.

Advocates for the poor were not impressed by the promises.

"It's just words," said Brazilian slum activist Jamie Silva. "I want to believe the U.N. will make a difference, but the problems are too big. Their speeches are just spit in the wind."

The urgency was amplified by U.N. predictions cited by the speakers: More than half the world's population will be city dwellers by the end of the century. By 2025, the number could rise to almost two-thirds, most of them in developing nations, including the enormous megalopolises of Asia and Latin America.

■ Victim's parents mark Tiananmen

BEIJING — The parents of a 17-year-old killed when the army attacked protesters in Tiananmen Square lit candles and incense and cooked his favorite meal on Monday to mourn the seventh anniversary of his death.

The brutality of the army assault in 1989 and a heavy police presence on Beijing's streets during subsequent anniversaries have effectively dissuaded Chinese from public commemorations.

Most Chinese dissidents are in jail, in exile or underground, unable to publicly mark the crackdown. Most ordinary Chinese prefer not to discuss it, and even victims' families are often afraid to speak out.

But Ding Zilin, a retired professor, is an exception. Despite warnings from the authorities against speaking to foreign reporters, she said she would commemorate her son's death at home, lighting candles and incense and cooking pork, shrimp and fish.

Ding said her son, Jiang Jielian, was shot late on June 3, 1989, as tanks and troops began shooting their way through Beijing to retake Tiananmen Square from student protesters. Hundreds, perhaps thousands, were killed.

OPEC grapples with Iraq's return to oil markets

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Either OPEC is keeping its mouth shut, or oil ministers just don't know what they're going to do about Iraq's return to the market after a six-year absence.

But the time has come for them to confront the delicate issue they have been able to avoid since the Persian Gulf War.

"We are here to study this," said oil minister Rakadh Bin Salem Bin Hamed Bin Rakadh of the United Arab Emirates after he arrived Monday. "We'll see what is best for the market and we'll go forward."

Others have sought to play down the significance of Iraq's return, saying markets will be able to accommodate the extra oil.

As OPEC Secretary-General Rilwanu Lukman of Nigeria emerged from a private meeting Monday afternoon, he was carrying a folder of background documents labeled with three topics that summed up the group's agenda: quotas, Iraq's return and oil markets.

"We will review first the return of Iraq," OPEC's president, the Algerian oil minister Ammar Makhloufi, told the influential Middle East Economic Survey for an article published Monday. "This will be our main objective."

Makhloufi called for a "credible" decision that "will have to consider seriously market realities and future reactions."

Analysts predict OPEC is heading for a drop in prices when Iraq comes online with limited oil sales that the United Nations has permitted — to provide food and medicine for the suffering Iraqi people. Iraq, with the world's second-largest oil supplies behind Saudi Arabia, has been shut out of the market by U.N. sanctions since it invaded fellow OPEC member Kuwait in August 1990.

But luckily for OPEC, Iraq's return comes at a time when prices have been relatively firm following a cold winter that depleted oil stockpiles.

The cartel has an official production ceiling of 24.52 million barrels a day, but cheating by some members is believed to bring the actual total to around 26 million barrels a day.

Iraq's deal with the United Nations would let it sell about 700,000 barrels a day, at current prices. Some analysts have suggested OPEC could increase its ceiling to 25.2 million barrels a day, raising Iraq's quota to 1.1 million barrels daily, up from the 400,000 barrels it can now produce for domestic consumption, and leaving other members' quotas unchanged.

If prices could withstand Iraq's return under that scenario, analysts say, OPEC will have again avoided any sticky internal politics until the day when Iraq can come back on a full scale.

Warnings of fraud cloud Russian elections, sap confidence

MOSCOW (AP) — Did you hear the one about who wins the Russian election? Communist Gennady Zyuganov gets 53 percent, but Boris Yeltsin wins — with 56 percent.

The joke, and others like it circulating in Moscow these days, put a thin veil of humor on a deep concern for Russians: the prospect of fraud in the June 16 election and uncertainty about what will follow.

The stakes are so high, and the democratic tradition so weak, that many Russians are worried less about whether someone will cheat than about who will be doing it, and by how much.

"As long as Yeltsin wins, it doesn't matter," said Yana Makovina, a 19-year-old language student and travel agent in Moscow. "As long as they do it quietly."

Aides to incumbent Yeltsin and Communist challenger Zyuganov, the top two contenders, accuse one another of plotting to steal the vote.

In a country known for huge distances and less-than-reliable communications, the possibilities for doctoring the vote count — at least in small ways — appear many.

The Communists have the edge at the grassroots level, dominating local election committees and many of the 93,000, far-flung polling stations — often with the same people who have run those places for decades.

"I'll tell you where fraud can happen: with the portable election boxes taken out to sick people and so forth," said Yakov Borovoi, a spokesman for Yeltsin's campaign. "And also in rural communities, where falsification is possible by former Communist officials still in power."

But Yeltsin has the edge once the vote tallies reach the regional election commissions, which are headed by his appointees, and the Central Election Commission.

"We expect fraud also in polling stations overseas, and faked absentee ballots," said a Communist Party spokesman.

Said Nikolai Petrov, an analyst at the Moscow Carnegie Center: "The party of power doesn't need to add ballots at each polling station if you control the Central Election Commission like Mr. Yeltsin controls Mr. Ryabov."

Netanyahu weighs politics, peace

JERUSALEM (AP) — Yasser Arafat declared that Israel has no right to backtrack on its peace deals with the Palestinians, and Israel's new leader affirmed his commitment Monday to moving peace ahead — once he sets his strategy.

Prime Minister-elect Benjamin Netanyahu began the delicate process of building a governing coalition that will help determine his policy toward the Palestinians and Israel's Arab neighbors.

Syria's president, Hafez Assad, said Monday that only when Netanyahu's position is clear can peace talks resume.

"The resumption of the negotiations is out of the question now," Assad, one of Israel's principal foes, said in Egypt. "Things are not going in a positive way. We have to be fully alert and on guard."

Netanyahu was courting hawkish and religious parties needed to give him a parliamentary majority — and a viable government. At the same time, he sternly commanded his hard-line backers to keep silent and let him set policy.

"I would ask colleagues to refrain from expressing their opinions or deviating from these lines now," he told lawmakers from his Likud party.

Netanyahu, 46, reminded party hawks that he was committed to peacemaking with the Arabs, and said a top aide had already contacted Yasser Arafat's Palestinian Authority. He said he also planned to meet soon with Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak and Jordan's King Hussein.

"The Arab countries, not to mention the West, understand that the Israeli public has made clear its will, that there will be a continuation of the peace process," Netanyahu said.

Millions of Chinese suffer lack of iodine

DAXIN, China — China, renowned for its success in fighting disease, is belatedly campaigning against an overlooked preventable medical catastrophe.

The public health ministry now estimates that more than 10 million cases of mental retardation in China — including hundreds of thousands with the overt handicaps of cretinism — are a result of iodine shortages.

But even more alarming is the recent evidence that for want of a simple chemical in their diets, much larger numbers of Chinese had their intelligence lowered to some degree, say Chinese and Western scientists.

NOTICE OF PROPOSED GAS RATE CHANGE

On May 31, 1996, Energas Company filed Statements of Intent to change its gas rates with each incorporated city listed below. The proposed changes will take effect no sooner than 35 days after filing. Each city may suspend the proposed effective date for an additional 90 days.

The company proposes to increase rates to General Service (residential and commercial), Small Industrial Service, Large Gas Air Conditioning and/or Electric Generating Gas Service, and the Air Conditioning Rate Rider. Additionally, the company is proposing to offer a new service, General Service-State Institutions, to state agencies. The company may implement a different rate design than proposed provided the increased revenue does not exceed that specified herein.

The proposed changes are expected to increase the company's annual revenues by approximately 7.6 percent or $7.7 million. The proposed changes could affect approximately 200,000 gas consumers in the following communities:

Abernathy, Amherst, Anton, Big Spring*, Bovina, Brownfield*, Buffalo Spring Lake, Canyon*, Coahoma, Crosbyton, Dimmitt, Earth, Edmonson, Floydada, Forsan, Friona, Hale Center, Happy, Hart, Hereford*, Idalou, Kress, Lake Ransom Canyon, Lake Tanglewood, Lamesa*, Levelland*, Littlefield, Lockney, Lorenzo, Los Ybanez, Lubbock*, Meadow, Midland*, Muleshoe, Nazareth, New Deal, New Home, Odessa*, O'Donnell, Olton, Opdyke West, Palisades, Pampa*, Panhandle, Petersburg, Plainview*, Post, Quitaque, Ralls, Ropesville, Seagraves, Seminole, Shallowater, Silverton, Slaton, Smyer, Springlake, Stanton, Sudan, Tahoka, Timbercreek Canyon, Tulia, Turkey, Vega, Wellman, Wilson, Wolfforth

*The level of revenue increase in these communities constitutes a "major change" as defined by state law.

Many states issue nursing licenses to convicted felons

By Beth Silver
Associated Press

TOPEKA, Kan. — Gary Kleypas was 21 when he beat a neighbor in southwest Missouri, leaving the elderly widow to suffocate in her own blood. He was 36 when he finished half of his 30-year sentence, moved to Kansas and enrolled in college.

His chosen profession: nursing.

Had he not been charged with and confessed to a second murder — that of a 20-year-old fellow student in March — Kleypas likely would have graduated from Pittsburg State University with a registered nursing degree in May.

And shortly thereafter, this convicted murderer could have been treating patients — administering injections, taking blood, all of the intimate and crucial work that nurses do.

With no national standards on licensure, Kansas and most other states consider convicted felons for nursing licenses.

Since 1990, the Kansas state nursing board has licensed 29 ex-convicts with criminal rap sheets ranging from second-degree murder, rape and aggravated arson to harvesting marijuana and embezzlement, according to records obtained by The Associated Press.

In fact, Kansas' only known convicted killer-licensed nurse now works as a supervisor in charge of a unit of a nursing home near Kansas City.

He speaks only on condition that his name will not be used. He has remained sober, he says, since the day he was imprisoned in 1978 for gunning down a man in a fight while in a drug-induced haze.

He took up this career, he says, because it was the only decent-paying job he thought he could get.

"I was black, I was going to be an ex-con and I needed to get into a field that really didn't pay attention to a person's past record but would pay more attention to what they were doing at the time," he says.

In states like Maryland, Nebraska, Pennsylvania and Georgia, the issue of a convicted murderer applying for a nursing license has never come up, according to their boards' directors.

In Texas, a woman who killed her husband after years of abuse was licensed as a registered nurse, says the board's executive director, Kathleen Thomas. But a recent Texas law prohibits anyone convicted of a felony from being licensed as a practical nurse.

Other states say they discourage serious offenders early on. Lanette Anderson, assistant executive secretary of the West Virginia state Board of Examiners, says nursing schools there warn applicants that criminal background checks will be conducted before they are admitted.

Most nursing boards, like the one in Kansas, review the applicants on a case-by-case basis. Whether they are approved depends on the crime, if the applicant has finished the sentence and what they have done since.

> "There's a lot of situations that the public could be endangered by a nurse ... "
> — Dr. James Winn, executive vice president of the Federation of State Medical Boards

In Minnesota, 79 licensed nurses have been convicted of felonies or gross misdemeanors, such as driving under the influence. One is a man who was convicted of rape in 1973, and is licensed as a registered nurse in Duluth.

The man originally answered that he had nothing on his record when he applied in 1993. When the board found out he lied, he was put on probation and required to submit progress reports.

After two years and no complaints, the board lifted his probation.

"Someone convicted of embezzling or child neglect, why would you want them to care for other people?" rejoins Mary Amdall-Thompson, program director for the board of nursing in Oregon, where no one convicted of a crime against persons can be licensed.

"There's a lot of situations that the public could be endangered by a nurse who has authority to administer medication, provide treatments and provide reports on certain things," says Dr. James Winn, executive vice president of the Federation of State Medical Boards in Fort Worth.

At the very least, patient advocates say if an ex-con is going to get a license, the patient should know about the nurse's background.

"The public really is very naive about a lot of this," said Linda DeBenedictis, president of the New England Patients' Rights Group.

Ultimately, DeBenedictis said, the hospitals, clinics and nursing homes should let their patients decide whether a nurse with a felonious background should treat them.

■ Justices focus on how new law could limit power, role of Supreme Court.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Openly concerned about its authority being curtailed by Congress, the Supreme Court held a rare late-term argument Monday over a new federal law limiting appeals by the nation's death row inmates.

Behind the 60-minute session's dry language was a potentially explosive election-year question: How far can Congress go in trying to speed up the pace of executing America's most heinous criminals?

Several justices also focused their questions on the possibility that an innocent person might be condemned to death.

Justice Stephen G. Breyer asked whether the Anti-Terrorism and Effective Death Penalty Act, signed by President Clinton in April, would let the Supreme Court step into such cases. Georgia prosecutor Susan Boleyn said it would not.

"We want extraordinary relief to be even more extraordinary," she said, adding that Congress intended claims of innocence to be handled by state courts or by governors.

But Henry Monaghan, representing Georgia death row inmate Ellis Wayne Felker, argued that the historic function of death row appeals "is to prevent execution of an innocent person."

He said the new law was "not the work of Attila the Hun" but would be "completely contrary" to historical practice.

The court had not held an argument this late in its term since it quickly reviewed a federal flag-burning law in 1990. That law was struck down as a free-speech violation.

The justices are expected to decide Felker's case before the current term ends later this month, but they have another option — scheduling a new round of arguments for next fall. The complexity of Monday's session appeared to make that option a distinct possibility.

He said Congress had not stripped away all the court's oversight authority.

The high court has appeared as frustrated as Congress in recent years with the pace of executions, and began chipping away in the early 1980s at what it believed to be prisoners' abuse of appeals, called petitions for writs of habeas corpus.

Then Congress went further this spring, saying that most state prisoners, even those on death row, must be limited to one appeal in federal court.

The law requires that state prison inmates who fail in their initial attempt for help from a federal court get a three-judge appellate panel's permission before filing another federal appeal.

That cuts out the Supreme Court's traditional role.

The justices could avoid the thorny separation-of-powers issue by finding that the new law preserves some of the court's authority — what lawyers call "original" habeas jurisdiction.

But such a ruling might invite a flood of appeals from prison cells directly to the Supreme Court, a result the justices likely would find unsatisfactory.

Led by Chief Justice William Rehnquist, the court questioned both sides in ways that appeared to challenge their arguments. But the toughest questions were aimed at Boleyn.

Under her interpretation of the new law, Justice David H. Souter said the high court's original jurisdiction appears to be "in fact, gone."

Questions from Justices Ruth Bader Ginsburg and Sandra Day O'Connor also focused on what Supreme Court role, if any, would be preserved by the new law.

Felker, convicted of killing college student Joy Ludlum in Warner Robins, Ga., in 1981, has been on death row for 13 years.

He was the first state prisoner ever denied permission to file an appeal under the new law.

Slain woman's other life, revealed in court, shocks family

PEABODY, Mass. (AP) — Kristen Crowley was married, worked for a computer company and drove a Ford. Unbeknownst to most of her family, she also worked as an exotic dancer, performing at private parties.

Crowley

Her other life came to light after she was stalked and killed by two men who encountered her at a mini-mart where she had stopped to buy groceries, a prosecutor said.

The prosecutor, Robert Weiner, stressed that the 27-year-old's work as a dancer had nothing to do with her murder, an apparently random act of violence outside her middle-class and usually safe condominium complex.

"To my knowledge, she was not an exotic dancer. But I'm her mother, how would I know," said Susan Gove, who owns the company in nearby Reading where her daughter worked as a personal computer trainer.

Crowley took the job working as an exotic dancer at bachelor parties and other private functions after graduating from high school in 1987, The Evening News of Salem reported.

The paper also reported that she had quit dancing to work for her mother's computer training company, but Weiner referred to Crowley as "an entertainer," and said she might have worked at a party earlier in the evening of her murder.

Mrs. Gove spoke after a raucous scene in court as the suspects, Timothy Dykens, 23, of Cambridge, and John P. Keegan, 25, of South Boston, were arraigned on murder charges and ordered held without bail. They pleaded innocent.

Several friends of the victim began shouting and cursing at the pair, and at least three men tried to jump across a cordoned-off area to get at them before Judge Santo Ruma ordered the courtroom cleared.

Friends denied that Crowley had danced at a party earlier Saturday night. They said she had joined them at a nightclub briefly to listen to a band before heading home around midnight.

On the way home, she stopped at a service station-minimart to buy groceries.

It was there, prosecutors allege, that she ran into her assailants. Keegan and Dykens were captured on the store's video camera, Weiner said Monday.

He said the store's clerk also reported seeing Keegan look at Crowley and say he "wanted a piece of that." He said the clerk quoted Dykens as saying repeatedly, "You know what we've got to do."

Authorities, who said the suspects did not know their alleged victim, had been drinking earlier in the night at a strip joint.

Weiner said the pair followed Crowley to her nearby condominium. She was found dead half an hour later in a wooded area off a parking lot of the complex.

Authorities determined she had been struck in the head and neck with a 35-pound rock.

Neighbors heard Crowley's cries for help, and one reported seeing a pair of women's underwear lying on a walkway. Weiner said tests to determine whether Crowley was raped will take several weeks to complete.

According to Weiner, a neighbor also saw a man he later identified as Keegan approach the door of Crowley's condominium and carry off a pair of women's shoes.

Dykens was taken into custody a couple hours after the crime as he walked along a road with his bloodied shirt in hand, police said. Keegan surrendered Sunday.

On Monday, Crowley's husband of 18 months mourned privately, while Crowley's mother cried as she told reporters about what a wonderful child she was.

Dole challenges Clinton on balanced budget amendment

WARREN, Mich. (AP) — Bob Dole bluntly challenged President Clinton on Monday to give Senate Democrats the go-ahead to support a balanced budget amendment, urging Clinton to "do it now. No winks. No nods."

The president countered that Dole, the outgoing Senate majority leader, should help negotiate the spending cuts needed for a real balanced budget instead of putting a generic requirement in the Constitution.

In a luncheon speech in suburban Detroit, ripe with blue-collar swing votes, Dole called the budget deficit a "stealth" tax increase that costs working Americans by driving up interest rates on home mortgages, student loans and car loans.

The Republican presidential candidate sought to cement his commitment to wiping out deficits by pledging one last vote on the balanced budget amendment by Tuesday of next week, his self-imposed deadline for resigning from the Senate.

"Mr. Clinton, we all know that your Democratic colleagues in the Senate will look to you for a thumbs up or thumbs down on this vote," Dole said. "Tell (them) to vote for the balanced budget amendment. Mr. President, do it in public, and do it now. No winks. No nods."

Then Dole pounded his fist on the lectern and lowered his voice. "As they say in the commercial, just do it. ... Tear down this wall of resistance to a balanced budget amendment," he said.

Clinton dismissed the amendment as a GOP stalling tactic.

"It puts off the decision," Clinton said. "We can balance the budget tomorrow. All he has to do is come back to the negotiations. They walked out months ago."

Speaking to reporters in the White House rose garden, Clinton said that over several months of negotiations, Republicans and Democrats already had reached agreement on enough spending cuts to pass a balanced budget. But Clinton last year vetoed a Republican balanced-budget plan that he said went too far in cutting education, health and environmental programs.

MIAMI (AP) — Divers recovering wreckage from ValuJet Flight 592 discovered a large hole Monday at the southern tip of the murky crater, raising the possibility that much more of the jet's wreckage may lie below.

Divers pulled sections of aircraft as big as five or six feet from the hole, along with the largest pieces yet of human remains and things like wallets and photo albums, said Joe Farrell, president of Resolve Towing and Salvage.

"Our divers can actually put their arms down through the edges of that opening," Farrell said. "We may very well find something of great interest within the southern tip of the crater."

Half the airplane is still missing, including the cockpit section. Nothing from that part of the plane has been recovered yet, Farrell said.

"All the stuff we haven't found, I think we're just about to find it," Farrell said.

The hole, 20-by-30 feet in diameter and filled with mud, is located at the southern tip of the crater ripped open by the jet's nosedive into the Everglades. The crater measures about 175 feet long and 60 feet wide.

Today, workers expected to remove mud from around the crater to keep it from spilling in. Farrell would not speculate on what else divers expected to find, but he said "something significant cracked the rock."

The DC-9 was traveling south when it crashed and disappeared into the River of Grass, he said. All 110 people aboard died in the May 11 crash.

Investigators with the National Transportation Safety Board did not immediately return a phone call Monday evening.

On Monday, divers also collected a "substantial amount of human remains," including a skull, Farrell said.

Earlier in the day, a trucker who worked for Farrell's company transporting the crash wreckage was charged with stealing parts of the aircraft, including a circuit breaker panel that could yield clues.

Michael E. Gadsden, 35, of Fort Lauderdale, said he took the parts as souvenirs, according to the FBI. He was jailed on $50,000 bail.

One piece was part of a circuit breaker panel, which apparently came from the cockpit, investigators said. The other was a 12-by-8-inch piece of the fuselage.

Investigators had been eager to inspect the circuit breaker panel to see if it played a role in the fire that burned aboard the plane before it crashed in the Everglades on May 11, killing all 110 people on board.

ValuJet said after the crash that the airplane's circuit-breaker boxes had been replaced before it took off that day.

WEATHER WATCH

20 percent chance of rain to stay

Staff Report

Today's forecast calls for partly cloudy skies with a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms and a high between 90-95 with winds out of the south 10-20 mph, according to a forecaster for the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport.

Tonight should be partly cloudy with a low between 65-70. Wednesday looks to be partly cloudy with a high near 100.

After a high of 90, compared to the record high of 103 set in 1990, the lows dipped to 63. The record low for the date was 47 set in 1947.

STATE

North Texas skies were partly cloudy, growing more so during the day. Average temperatures and humidities were in the 80s and 90s, with winds light and variable. On Wednesday North Texas will be partly cloudy and windy again, with highs in the 90s and a slight chance of thunderstorms.

South Texas was sultry with the mercury in the 80s and 90s and the promise of showers and thunderstorms. A severe thunderstorm moved across Sugar Land near Houston. Skies at 2 p.m. across the region were partly cloudy, although mostly cloudy conditions continued across southeast Texas.

It was another humid day in West Texas, where the morning hours saw a stationary front from the southern Panhandle through the South Plains and the low rolling plains. Thunderstorms and areas of mostly light rain had been reported earlier over the southern Panhandle and the northern portions of the South Plains. Temperatures at 11 a.m. ranged from 64 at Dalhart to 79 at Sanderson, El Paso and San Angelo.

The Panhandle saw mild temperatures and, by mid-afternoon, some fierce thunderstorms. The forecast called for partly to mostly cloudy skies with showers and thunderstorms possible in most areas through Tuesday. Highs were to range from the 80s in the north to near 104 in the extreme south.

NATION

Thunderstorms rumbled across Texas and the Midwest on Monday, and rain fell over the mid Atlantic states.

These storms broke out along a cold front that looped from eastern Wisconsin into Indiana and southern Illinois and back across the middle Mississippi Valley into Texas.

Afternoon thunderstorms also formed over the plains of southeastern Colorado, and the National Weather Service issued a tornado warning after one twister was spotted in Baca County.

In the West, there was a chance of light showers along the coast of Washington state.

Monday's temperatures around the Lower 48 states ranged from a morning low of 28 at Truckee, Calif., to an early afternoon reading of 104 at Palm Springs, Calif. The highest heat index, calculated from a combination of temperature and humidity, was 109 at Corpus Christi, Texas.

Factories scrap 5-day week in quest for efficiency

By Peter T. Kilborn
N.Y. Times News Service

ORLANDO, Fla. — Tony Moreno is an outgoing, churchgoing man and the father of three.

But for most of the last five years, Moreno put in 12-hour workdays, including all of his Sundays, as a machine operator here at Lucent Technologies.

Some of his colleagues at the immense, windowless microelectronics factory relish the schedule, in which they alternate three- and four-day weeks, because it gives them so much time off.

"But that didn't mean much to me," said Moreno, 45. "I missed going to church. Being a family man, weekends mean a great deal to me. All my friends are off on weekends."

Many of Moreno's co-workers like the nontraditional setup because, in addition to long stretches of time off, they also receive premium pay. Like it or hate it, however, more and more American factory workers are being assigned the short-week, extended-hour schedules.

Management experts call them compressed workweeks. At factories like Lucent's, the eight-hour-a-day, five-day workweek has all but vanished and given way to schedules that management deems efficient, even if they ignore the calendar's seven-day cycles and community patterns of work, sleep and play.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics found that from 1985 to 1991, the proportion of full-time production and service workers with conventional eight-hour-a-day schedules had declined to 81.8 percent from 84.1 percent. The bureau has no data for the years since 1991, but a private survey this year suggests that the trend is growing.

In a survey to be released this month of 800 companies that employ 1,000 or more workers in all types of businesses, the William M. Mercer management consulting firm in New York found that 34 percent used compressed weeks for some of their work force and that 14 percent were considering those schedules.

Abbreviated workweeks have been in effect for decades for some workers, particularly in police and fire departments, hospitals and utilities that run around the clock.

But they have been a growing trend in manufacturing. Nearly all automobile tire companies and most big semiconductor companies have shifted to the new schedules. The big General Motors plant in Tennessee that turns out Saturn automobiles has adopted one, too.

"I think employers are concerned about getting the most out of their employees," said Marc Vallario, the Mercer firm's health and welfare expert. "They also recognize there are other demands on employees' lives. So many are structuring the workweek to accommodate their productivity needs and their employees' life needs."

Efforts are being made in Congress to speed the shift to abbreviated workweeks. Many companies want Congress to change overtime provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 that require employers to pay time and a half for any work beyond 40 hours a week, with one proposal seeking a monthly ceiling instead.

"The week is getting redistributed toward work," said Jerome M. Rosow, president of the Work in America Institute, a research organization in White Plains financed by unions and corporations. Part of the price, he said, is the traditional weekend: "Leisure is getting squeezed out."

The impetus, experts say, is a redoubled emphasis on efficient production, the same pressure that has been driving the tides of corporate downsizing. It is another tactic to wrest additional profits and lower-cost production from factories.

The Lucent factory belongs to AT&T, which said this year that it would shed 40,000 workers and recast itself into three smaller companies that will soon become completely independent. One of the three, Lucent, combines AT&T's research laboratories and 14 manufacturing plants, including the factory here.

In Orlando, management is building a big addition and expanding the work force to 1,500, from 1,000. About 80 percent of the employees are refugees from AT&T shrinkage elsewhere.

Inside, the factory workers, in white suits that conceal everything but their eyes, bake tiny deposits of metal onto paper-thin six-inch-diameter wafers of silicon. Factories in Singapore and Bangkok slice the wafers into the integrated-circuit chips that form the brains of computer modems and cellular telephones.

Five years ago management decided that to hold its own in competition with wafer processors worldwide, it could not let its machinery sleep when people do. "The equipment has to keep running," said the plant manager, Robert B. Koch.

Before, the company had been running on a less-compressed week with four 10-hour days. But that meant that for several hours a day the machinery stood idle.

"The company eyeballed that quiet time," said Thomas S. Christian, president of Local 2000 of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, who helped negotiate the schedule with 12-hour shifts.

As Koch put it, "There were inefficiencies."

Now all but some office personnel work the long shifts, three consecutive days that total 34 1/2 hours one week and four days that total 46 hours the next. Time and a half overtime pay is incorporated into wages that start at $6.91 an hour and rise to nearly $18.19, very high for factory work south of the Rust Belt.

Everyone has one weekend day a week, Saturday or Sunday. To make the schedule work, employees also gave up two holidays, Memorial Day and Labor Day. Still, all the free days amount to half the year off.

Workers say they appreciate having jobs, enjoy the time off and relish the pay. They also talk of being extremely tired.

Booker T. Thomas, 47, who is married and has an 11-year-old daughter, came here from an AT&T plant in Shreveport, La. He worked 10-hour days and earned good wages, but he had watched the number of workers plummet, to 1,000 from 6,500.

"I asked myself, Should I stay here and watch it close?" Thomas said. "I didn't want to get caught in that situation. So I came to Florida."

FDA OKs 2 AIDS tests: 1 to diagnosis, 1 to predict sickening

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans got two new tests for the AIDS virus Monday: one to more easily detect infection and the other to predict how fast patients with the deadly disease will sicken.

The Food and Drug Administration called Epitope Inc.'s Orasure the first oral test that appears as reliable as the standard blood test to diagnose the HIV virus that causes AIDS.

Orasure uses a treated cotton pad to scrape a tissue sample from between the gum and cheek. The sample is tested for antibodies to HIV, and doctors predicted wide use by people at risk for HIV but who shunned blood tests.

Patients who already know they're infected can find out just how much HIV is floating in their blood with Hoffman-La Roche's Amplicor test, also approved Monday.

But the question is whether patients will want this test, said Dr. Curtis Scribner, FDA's deputy director of blood research. Studies do show that patients with high HIV blood levels are more likely to sicken fast — but nobody knows if drugs that lower those blood levels significantly reduce the risk of death or even if changes in HIV amounts signal it's time to change treatments, he said.

"We are at the cutting edge of science and medicine right here," Scribner said. "We just have not answered those questions yet."

Still, Roche will offer baseline Amplicor testing for free to any HIV-infected patient for 60 days starting June 17. Later, the test will cost $150 to $200.

Doctors now gauge AIDS progression by measuring levels of an immune cell called CD4 that is a main target of HIV. But some people have no AIDS symptoms despite very low CD4 levels.

Meanwhile, the first generation of Orasure was approved in 1994, but it used a less sensitive method to screen for HIV antibodies, called the ELISA test.

People who tested positive then had to undergo a more sensitive blood test, called the Western blot, to be sure they had the deadly virus.

But on Monday, the FDA approved a new version of Orasure that allows Western blot testing of the oral sample instead of blood.

Clinical trials showed the Orasure Western blot test was 99.9 percent as accurate as the traditional blood test.

"It's exactly the same," said FDA's Scribner. "Many people don't like to get stuck for a blood sample, so in this case they could use an oral fluid sample."

The FDA approved the original, less-sensitive Orasure because doctors needed a way to reach people at risk of HIV but who shunned blood tests, Scribner explained. The theory was that a positive oral test would persuade such patients to accept a little bloodletting for confirmation that they were infected.

"Now that confirmation can occur right on the oral fluids," he said.

An oral test is good for health workers, too, because they won't run the risk of sticking themselves with the needle they just used on a possibly infected patient, explained Donna Sturgess of SmithKline Beecham, which will sell the new Orasure.

It will cost about the same as a blood test, which averages about $50-60, and doctors will receive the results within three days, she said.

Orasure is supposed to be used only by health care providers, but SmithKline and Epitope are seeking FDA approval for a similar home test.

Door-latch injury jury awards $150 million; GM to appeal

HAYNEVILLE, Ala. (AP) — A man whose Chevrolet Blazer flipped after he fell asleep at the wheel was awarded $150 million Monday for injuries suffered in the 1991 accident.

Alex Hardy claimed General Motors knowingly sold Blazers with defective door latches that opened in wrecks such as the one that left him paralyzed.

GM denies the allegations, arguing Hardy was at fault because he had been drinking and fell asleep. Witnesses for the automaker testified during trial that Hardy flew through a window because he was not wearing a seat belt.

The Lowndes County, Ala., jury awarded Hardy $50 million in compensatory damages and $100 million in punitive damages.

Hardy's lawyer, Jim Butler, said about 30 million vehicles equipped with the latches are still in use.

"This jury's verdict reflects the awful fact that GM knew Americans would be killed and injured ... because of a substandard door latch which GM has known for at least 14 years was defective and failing in wrecks," Butler said in a statement.

The company maintains that the "Type III" door latch is safe and meets all federal safety standards, said GM general counsel Thomas A. Gottshalk.

"Today's decision is the crowning example of a state tort system gone berserk," he said.

GM will appeal.

Hardy, 37, was driving his 1987 Blazer through rural White Hall, about 25 miles west of Montgomery, when the accident happened about 3 a.m. on Aug. 3, 1991.

Hardy's lawsuit said the Blazer's rear axle broke, freeing the right wheel assembly and sending the vehicle into a roll. He said the door flew open, throwing him 30 to 40 feet through the air.

His lawyers also cited internal GM documents, including a 1982 study estimating such latches could fail about 18,000 times a year. GM lawyer Charles Fairfax said the study was "pure speculation."

Judge upholds fourth-grade ban on book by Rush Limbaugh

LYNCHBURG, Va. (AP) — A man who sued after a teacher confiscated a Rush Limbaugh book from his fourth-grade son had his day in court Monday, putting the boy on the stand to read from a chapter titled "Condom-Bungee Jumping."

U.S. District Judge James Turk denied a request by the father of 9-year-old Jason Gardner for a preliminary injunction against the school, saying there's no point with only four days left before summer break.

Jason was reading Limbaugh's "The Way Things Ought to Be" during the silent reading period at Montvale Elementary School when his teacher took away the book, saying it was inappropriate material for a fourth-grader.

Bruce Bays said he took the book after noticing a chapter titled "Condom-Bungee Jumping, The New Diploma." The school agreed and banned Jason from reading the book.

Thomas Gardner then sued, saying the school violated Jason's right to free speech and interfered with his right as a parent to determine what his child may read, as long as it's not obscene or vulgar. Limbaugh also accused the school of censorship on his nationally syndicated radio show.

In the chapter Jason had been reading, Limbaugh argues that abstinence from sex, not distributing condoms in school, is the best way to prevent sexually transmitted disease.

Asked by the judge if he knew what a condom was, Jason replied: "It's a way to keep from getting AIDS."

The teacher testified that such material is above Jason's comprehension level and could offend parents whose children might talk about it during class.

Gardner also testified that Montvale's principal told him that most teachers are liberals and dislike Limbaugh's views. But Turk said he doubted the teacher was motivated by an aversion to Limbaugh's conservative beliefs.

"The evidence has been that the book in question is above the reading level of Jason," Turk said. "If the teacher held up a book and said anything this author writes is trash and I disagree with his political beliefs, then you have a strong case."

Jason — visibly shy — read aloud from the book in court Monday. When he stumbled over the word "flawlessly," Turk asked him to spell it out.

The Gardners' lawyer, John Fishwick, argued that Jason should be allowed to push himself to comprehend something new.

ALTURA: New name arrives in basin

"This is a huge undertaking. It's not like a merger or acquisition. It's the creation of a whole new independent oil company comprised from the best of the two parents," Posey said.

Once Altura has been fully organized, and assets combined, it will result in a new company responsible for producing 12,000 greater Permian Basin area wells that gross 210,000 gross barrels of oil and 250 million gross cubic feet of natural gas. The plan calls for a 65 percent interest to Amoco and 35 percent interest to Shell, based on the value of combined assets.

FEES: Ruling gives banks more rein

(From 1A)

■ Agreed to decide whether the federal government can force growers and shippers of California peaches, plums and nectarines to help pay for generic advertising of those fruits.

The credit card decision focused on a dispute between Citibank's credit division, based in Sioux Falls, S.D., and Barbara Smiley, a Los Angeles credit card customer of Citibank's.

Smiley sued in 1992 after being assessed $15 late fees on her MasterCard and Visa accounts. California law limits such charges and some states ban them altogether.

About half the states limit or ban credit card late fees, and those laws also are pre-empted by Monday's interpretation of federal banking law.

Texas is a state that does restrict such fees, but it was uncertain Monday what the state could do about the new ruling.

Michelle Roberts, assistant general counsel at the Texas Bankers Association said she could not comment until she see's an opinion from the state attorney general.

The nation's highest court ruled in 1978 that a national bank can impose any credit rate allowed by the state in which it is located, and Monday the court said the term "interest" encompasses late-payment fees.

Some banks then chose to move to South Dakota, which has no limit on credit card interest.

The Comptroller of the Currency, the federal official in charge of regulating banks, previously had ruled that such late-payment fees are valid anywhere Citibank customers reside, and the justices deferred to that interpretation of federal banking law.

"Since we have concluded that the comptroller's regulation deserves deference, the question before us is not whether it represents the best interpretation of the statute, but whether it represents a reasonable one," Justice Antonin Scalia wrote for the court today.

"The answer is obviously yes," he said.

Because the court's ruling is based on its interpretation of a federal law, Congress is free to amend the law.

animals and make sure all are neutered as mandated by state and local laws. Sometimes adopted animals are not neutered as required and must be located; microchip identification ensures the right animal is found.

And if a pet strays from home and subsequently loses its tag, there's still a record of the animal and owner. "All of our officers have (microchip) readers they wear as part of their uniform," Ms. Hoffman said.

Sometimes when a cat can't be found, an owner waits a few days thinking the feline will return as in the past. Unknowingly, the cat might be at the shelter with the three-day holding period ticking down. Instead of the owner finding the cat, the chip would find the owner.

The chip also can help reunite a stolen pet with its rightful owner or notify owners if a runaway dog or cat has been in an accident or killed.

But a microchip only works if it's functioning properly and registered. Microchips, although highly reliable, should be scanned three to six months after implant for testing. And owners need to notify the shelter of an address or owner change.

Although the shelter only implants microchips in adopted animals, some local veterinarians offer the service to other pet owners, Ms. Hoffman said.

Owners should have pets with microchips registered with the chip manufacturer to allow widespread identification. Again, any changes in address or ownership should be updated.

Dogs and cats can be adopted from Midland's Animal Control for $35, which includes the cost of the microchip implant, plus a $10 deposit toward neutering the animal. So far this fiscal year, which began Oct. 1, the shelter has adopted out 205 dogs and 56 cats.

Good weather 'hangs ten' during Beach Ball Blast

The pina coladas were served in shells of fresh pineapple, adding to the tropical flair of the evening. The frozen drinks were very popular among guests who were trying to cool off from the hot, humid temperatures of the day.

With dark clouds looming overhead and most Texas residents begging for rain during this drought, it seemed as if Friday evening could be a dark and stormy night for the Beach Ball Blast. But instead, the weather turned quite pleasant with just a light breeze to offset the humidity, allowing the third annual Beach Ball Blast, benefitting Hillcrest School, to come off without a hitch.

"At midnight, I hope it rains buckets, but I just hope it waits until then," said Betty Starnes, executive director of Hillcrest School.

Beach casual was the dress for the $75 per couple event that began at 7:30 p.m. at Racquet Club, where approximately 200 guests were greeted at the gate and presented with plastic leis.

Decorations all around the Racquet Club grounds were in keeping with the beach theme, featuring plastic bow-up dolphins dancing in the pool, colorful crab and lobster pinatas hanging from the trees and blow-up inner tubes and beach balls scattered around, including beach balls outlining the dance floor.

Tables were bedecked in red, blue, green and white cloths decorated with fish bowls filled with shells and plastic ice cube fish, fish nets, shells, sand pails with spilling sand, treasure chests with spilling treasures, sun shades, visors and lighthouses (which were made from small, painted terra cotta flower pots).

Tiki torches and votive candles added to the festive beach scene.

Guests mingled as they looked over the 70 silent auction items. After bidders placed their bids, they watched closely to see if others would try to bid on their items. Beer and wine were served during the cocktail hour, along with freshly blended pina coladas served in cut pineapples.

The Beach Buffet opened about 8:30 p.m. serving freshly grilled hamburgers with all the fixings, potato salad, cole slaw, ranch beans and potato chips, with fudge brownies and chocolate chip cookies for dessert.

By 9 p.m. the Pulsations, a well-known local band, had taken the stage and had toes tapping, lips mouthing the words and even a few guests up on their feet dancing. The band played a variety of music, from country to pop, and soon had the dance floor filled with partygoers.

A horseshoe tournament was in progress throughout the evening, with trophies presented to the winners at the end of the evening.

In addition to the silent auction, a brief live auction of two airline tickets to anywhere within the continental United States from American Airlines was sold to the highest bidder for $950.

"What we raise (with the Beach Ball Blast) represents a big chunk of budget," Ms. Starnes said. "We started out this year trying for $30,000. We didn't have quite as many people attend this year, but we have more sponsors this year, so I think we will still make around $25,000 to $27,000. The silent auction raised $8,300 alone, and with the live auction of the two (American) Airlines tickets, we did pretty well."

Ms. Starnes said that expenses for the benefit were down some this year because the committees were able to reuse some decorations from previous years. "Every year you do something, you learn," she said.

Hillcrest School is an individualized learning environment designed to meet the needs of students with learning differences, focusing on students with attention deficit disorder or students who are dyslexic.

"Our goal is to help students with learning differences so that they can be mainstreamed back into typical learning environments," Ms. Starnes said, "so we are constantly meeting new students.

"Our enrollment is growing and it is way up for this fall," she said. "Our name is becoming more recognized and more people are aware of our reputation. We have several teachers going to Dallas to improve their skills in teaching reading and spelling."

The school plans to have an alum day this fall, asking former students to return to the school and speak of their experiences to the current students. A medical day also is in the plans for fall, to let persons in the medical field know what learning advantages are available at Hillcrest for students with learning difficulties.

A preschool also is planned for Hillcrest this fall, which will be headed by Jan McMillan and Sarah Mazur.

For more information about Hillcrest School, call 570-7444.

Big Kahuna sponsors were Jack and Frances Brown, F&M Oil and Gas, Wayne Kinsey (Benchmark Research), Loro Corporation, Joe and Jan O'Neill, Doss and Stephanie Rogers (Rogers Ford), Steve and Lisa Sell, and Scott and Marsha Sheffield.

Hang Ten Sponsors were Advance Title Company, Jim and Georgia Corwin, Henri and Mary de Compiegne, Discovery Operating Inc., Hillcrest Teachers, Rubilee Noble, Orion Pacific, Quantum Sales Inc., Jim and Jayne Reese, Mac and Betty Starnes and Steward Cable Repair.

There also were almost 50 Beach Bum Sponsors.

Beach Ball Blast committee members were Paula Coulter, Susan Foster and Julie LeMond, co-chairs; Sarah Mazur, treasurer; Kim Carleton and Stephanie Rogers, invitation co-chairs; Jan O'Neill, sponsor chair; Greta Rigney, silent auction chair; Lyn Dulaney, Greta Miers, Lyn Giesler, Sidney Scarborough, Betty Starnes, Debbie Sullivan, Ceci Westmoreland and Carla Futrell; Jo Dufo, T-shirt chair; Sherry Hunter, decoration chair; Melinda Musselman, food and facility chair; Gayla Mabee, publicity; and Richard Dulaney, Kerry Giesler and Mac Starnes, special events.

Family therapist offers tips on teaching values, manners to children

By Mia B. Moody
Associated Press

WACO — Parents who have tried instilling values in their children know how hard it is to follow through.

First, there is the issue of which values are important: Should you use the ones your parents emphasized or a modern version? Then there's the question of how to carry them out. Should you use a rigid system or let your children learn through observing others?

Once parents get these issues settled, there is the question of how much is enough. Parents who are too lax may find that their children don't adopt any values, while those who are overbearing may cause rebellion.

"Values are important because they bond people together and teach them how to live with other people," says the Rev. Robert "Hal" Ritter, a licensed and certified family therapist and executive director of the Samaritan Counseling Center of Central Texas.

"The world would be chaotic without some type of value system," he said. "They give people a basic sense of what connects them to others."

At the very least, Ritter said, parents teach their children the concepts of fairness and honesty and the importance of loving other people.

Parents should also practice what they preach, he said. The strongest way children learn values is by modeling others.

If parents conflict too much with the values they teach, their children may end up deciding that rules are not important because people make and break them at their own discretion. It's the old 'Do as I say, not as I do" principle, he said.

"Some parents talk about loving others, then turn around and make decisions based on race or religion," he said. "This teaches children to love people unless they are of a certain race or religion."

A positive way to teach love for other people is getting involved in the community, Ritter said..

When he was growing up, Ritter's family would adopt homebound people from their church and take care of them by doing their grocery shopping, yard work and spending time with them.

"This taught me the value of compassion and the importance of helping others," he said.

Ritter offers the following tips to help parents who want to build a solid value system in their homes:

■ Respect. Children should learn how to respect themselves, other people and personal property. When people devalue themselves, they usually end up devaluing others, he said.

Ritter's parents taught him this concept by giving him and his two sisters one toy a year that they had to share. They could not take it to their room or play with it alone.

"I knew that if I got mad and destroyed this toy, it would hurt me, too," he said. "This taught me respect for others and the importance of sharing."

■ Decide whether you are going to teach spiritual values based on religious beliefs, he said. This is a personal decision that will vary from family to family. Ritter said he uses the Bible as a foundation for the values he has taught his two children.

■ Law and grace rules. Children need to know there are rules, but there are also exceptions to these rules. People can be forgiven for making mistakes.

■ Decision-making. Children adopt certain values by watching their parents make decisions on certain issues. Let them participate in the decision-making process by watching and offering input on certain situations.

■ Teach the values you adopt through a combination of instructional and observational learning. Instructional learning involves telling children what is appropriate, while observation involves modeling this behavior.

'Values are important because they bond people together and teach them how to live with other people. The world would be chaotic without some type of value system. They give people a basic sense of what connects them to others.'

Trustees should present new plan

Now that a majority of Midland's voters who cast ballots in the $110 million school bond election have said "no" to the board's all-encompassing proposal, it's time for the trustees to shake off the defeat and devise an alternate and smaller plan.

Although the numbers in the defeat were not staggering — 7,974 votes against to 6,291 for — the message from the electorate was loud and clear: The $110 million bond proposal was too much and too sweeping.

The defeat, however, does not signal that Midland's voters would oppose a smaller bond proposal. Even a spokesman for one of the groups that opposed the bond, Citizens for Fiscal Responsibility, pointed out that the group would not be opposed to a smaller bond proposal.

With that in mind, trustees should be able to revise their proposal in short order to put another plan forward that will address the priority needs of the district at a cost the voters will find acceptable.

The needs facing the Midland Independent School District (MISD) have not changed as a result of the bond proposal's failure. What has changed is that voters have told school trustees to come up with a plan that realistically — and frugally — addresses the very real needs of the district.

If trustees will put together such a plan and present it to voters, we believe there will be overwhelming support for it. The needs really exist and the Midland public recognizes that. But voters have shown they prefer a prioritized, downscaled list of those needs, and to provide that is the new challenge facing the board and MISD administration.

Court decision wise in repainting verdict

The Supreme Court made a good decision in its recent 5-4 verdict to toss out a $2 million punitive damages award won by an Alabama doctor who became annoyed when he found out his new BMW had been partially repainted to repair shipping damage.

Without drawing a firm line, the court's majority said the award — roughly 100 times the cost of the supposed harm done to the doctor — was unconstitutionally excessive, and therefore denied the company its due process rights.

The doctor, it should be noted, suffered real damage so slight that he — a self-described nitpicker about his car — didn't even know his car's paint had been touched up until he'd been driving it for nine months.

The decision also gives courts some guidelines that are likely to make such silly and destructive awards a thing of the past.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today's highlight in history:

In the early hours of June 4, 1896, Henry Ford made a successful test run with his horseless carriage, called a "quadricycle," through the streets of Detroit.

On this date:

In 1812, the Louisiana Territory was renamed the Missouri Territory.

In 1878, Turkey turned Cyprus over to the British.

In 1892, the Sierra Club was incorporated in San Francisco.

WILLIAM MURCHISON

Whitewater casts dark clouds over Clintonites

So, Whitewater heats up. So, for the first time in months, clouds pass in front of the sun that's warming the Clintonites' political picnic. Are non-Clintonites ecstatic? Not necessarily.

Murchison

One reason is that they have seen this sort of thing before. It ain't pretty. This disqualification obtains no matter what president, or what party, becomes the object of official scrutiny. There's a country out there to be governed, and scandals can get in the way.

It is hard to know the dimensions of the Clintons' troubles by extrapolating from the Little Rock guilty verdicts. The verdicts are not the last that will involve Clinton confidantes. Whether the Clintons, Bill and Hillary, will become personally involved is unknowable, but it is not unreasonable to guess that they will.

Whitewater could certainly boost Republican chances in November. On the other hand, the boosting of Republican chances is not the be-all and end-all of political endeavor. The peace of the republic is an even larger priority.

Such a point cannot be unfamiliar. It was made 20 years ago by backers of President Richard M. Nixon, who argued that the fever to investigate and punish the Watergate break-in — "a third-rate burglary," it was called — distorted national priorities. This was disingenuous to a degree. The priorities in question were those that Nixon had set. His backers didn't want him sidetracked. His critics, who turned out to be a substantial majority, argued back that the main thing at stake was the punishment of wrongdoing.

Well, OK. Wrongdoing got duly punished. But so did the nation as a whole. The '70s turned out to be our most depressing decade since the Depression.

A related point: Watergate helped institutionalize distrust of politicians. We went on from there: the tribulations of Bert Lance, of Robert Bork, of Ollie North and Robert MacFarland, and now of Bill and Hillary Clinton. There is a certain proportionality here: Democrats as well as Republican are on the post office wall. You get us, we get you. What this mostly means is that the thirst to uncover scandal now rages everywhere. We're practically guaranteed a good scandal in every administration, and the scandal guarantees public entertainment and political discombobulation.

The question is: Do we really want it this way? How is it conducive to good government to have public figures fixated on attack and defense? Do we need all this scandal, in other words?

Probably not, but we have it — a function of the size of government in our times. Scandals center on the doing or receipt of favors. Modern behemoth government, with its unparalleled power and wealth, has endless favors to do; the selling and buying of those favors matters to thousands and thousands, some of whom are inevitably crooks. "Lead us not into temptation," goes the Lord's Prayer. Government leads us into temptation daily — the temptation to help or hurt a particular voting bloc, to enrich one ally as over against an enemy. None of these impulses is unnatural — they just encourage corruption, that's all.

CHARLEY REESE

Supreme Court's decision on Colorado is absurd

The Supreme Court's decision to delete part of the Colorado state constitution is absurd. The court itself is absurd.

Reese

I refer, of course, to the decision to nullify an amendment to the constitution, which the people of Colorado legally adopted, that states homosexuals may not be singled out as a privileged class.

No areas of American political life have become more muddled than the concepts of rights and discrimination. If we were wise, which we aren't, we'd repeal all laws about discrimination except those which apply to black Americans.

This exception is defensible. Black Americans, first as slaves, and later as nonslaves, have been systematically denied by law the rights to which all Americans are entitled. The historical record is clear. That record justifies the government treating black Americans as a special category likely to be denied their rights on racial grounds.

No other category of Americans can make that claim. There has, is and will be private discrimination, but no one except black Americans have been denied rights by law on such a long and consistent basis. Moreover, discrimination does not necessarily involve a violation of rights.

A right can be said to be that to which one has a just claim. The best summary of rights is the first 10 amendments to the Constitution, which we call the Bill of Rights. These rights, incidentally, apply to all Americans whatever their race, creed, ethnic background or sexual orientation.

But rights have nothing to do with economics, private association or social approval. That's where the confusion comes in. It is impossible to have a right that necessitates the violation of someone else's right. Most rights involve nothing more than being left alone. A right to free speech means nothing more than that -- a right to speak without someone restraining or preventing you. It does not imply that someone has to listen, provide you with a soapbox or agree with what you say.

If you say you have a right to a job, you are saying someone else is obligated to provide you with a job. That means someone else must be denied their right to choose his own employees. So a job cannot be a right. Neither is a house, medical care or social approval. All of these may be desirable, but they are not rights.

Homosexuals today have exactly the same rights as heterosexuals in every state in the union. What homosexuals want is privileged status. They want privileges heterosexuals don't have. They want the government to mandate social approval. They want the government to deny to others the freedom of association. They want the standing to sue if they don't get the job or promotion they want.

None of those are rights and, therefore, should not be the concern of the courts. There is a difference between courts and legislators. Courts rule, or they are supposed to anyway, on already existing law. They do not, or at least should not, have the power to make laws.

Legislators do that, and making laws is making moral and philosophical decisions about day-to-day affairs. If a state legislature wishes to legalize homosexual marriages, for example, it can do so, and the federal courts should not interfere. That is a moral and philosophical decision that, in our system, is made by the democratic process, citizens acting through their elected legislators. If a state legislature wishes to refuse to recognize homosexual marriages, the same applies.

No one has a right to have his marriage recognized as a legal contract by the state. That is simply a policy matter. Polygamous marriages are not recognized; marriages between adults and minors in most states are not recognized. More important, government should never force mere mores on people. That's what, however, the federal courts are doing.

MIKE ROYKO

Draft dodging doesn't hurt Clinton campaign

"As a veteran," said Slats Grobnik, "I am proud of my record at ducking KP, playing poker and the long hours I spent drinking beer in the enlisted men's club. But I got to say that I think the Republicans ought to stop whacking Bill Clinton for being a draft dodger."

Royko

Why? Do you believe it is a cheap shot, a low blow and distasteful negative campaigning?

"Nah, cheap shots and low blows are as much a part of politics as they are of pro wrestling. Who'd pay attention without 'em?"

Then why are you against Republicans reminding voters of Clinton's well-documented efforts to avoid the Vietnam war?

"Because it ain't smart. It won't get Republicans any votes, and it might even make Clinton more popular."

You're saying that having dodged the draft could help Clinton? That is amazingly silly.

"Uh-huh. I figured you'd say that. So tell me, what kind of guys got drafted and went to Vietnam?"

We all know that. Those who couldn't get deferments for being in college, teaching in inner-city schools or having enough clout to get into stay-home reserve units.

That's the way it worked out.

"So, all these Vietnam veterans grew up, right? A lot of them got gray hair, and chances are that the working-class kids are now working-class older guys. And the black kids from poor backgrounds are now middle-aged black guys from poor backgrounds."

That stands to reason.

"So you think all these middle-aged black veterans are going to vote for Bob Dole because Clinton managed to save his hide?"

No, because blacks vote overwhelmingly Democratic, I suppose Clinton will get their votes.

"And you think that most of these working-class white guys are going to vote for someone from a party they think is out to pick their pockets and give tax breaks to rich fat cats?"

If the issues are framed that way, probably no.

That's impossible to measure. My guess would be that those who found a way not to go far outnumber those who were stuck with the bloody job.

"Yeah. So you figure they got a guilty conscience and wake up crying because they didn't get a chance to get shot?"

No, I must admit that those I've talked to about it still believe it was a wasteful, unnecessary war and were smart to have found a way to avoid taking part.

"So there's a big draft-dodger vote out there, right? Not just the old long-hair, anti-war hippies and yippies but the suburban kids who were from well-off families that could afford to keep them in school and out of the Army."

I suppose you could say that.

"You figure that after all these years, they're going to hold it against Clinton because he did what they did?"

No, I would imagine that most will sympathize with Clinton on this issue.

"Then tell me where the advantage is for the Republicans if they make a big deal out of Clinton ducking the Army?"

Ah, you have forgotten about the many World War II and Korean vets for whom there is no more foul a word than draft dodger.

"Izzat so? Well, all these young guys who ducked the draft -- what were their fathers doing between 1941 and 1945?"

I suppose they did what most young men did during those years -- they went off and fought World War II.

"So are they gonna be mad at Clinton for doing what they helped their own kids do?"

I can't read their minds. There are all kinds of World War II vets and attitudes.

"Right. But what is the one thing they have in common besides being in the war?"

Their age?

"You got it. They're geezers. Even us Korean War vets are getting to be geezers. So what do geezers worry about more than anything else?"

I suppose it would be enduring old age -- medical care, pensions, Social Security, that sort of stuff.

"And who talks a better game on the geezer issues -- Clinton or Gingrich and the rest of the Republican crowd?"

I think we all know the answer to that. But we must not forget the vivid contrast between Clinton and a heroic war casualty such as Dole.

"Are you kidding? Dole ought to forget WW II."

How can you say that after what he went through?

"I'll tell you why -- because every time Dole talks about what he did in WW II, he reminds people that he ain't no kid. It's been over for 51 years, and most Americans don't even know who was on what side. All they know is that the vets are geezers. And in this society, being a geezer gets you a discount on a bus ride but that's the only good in it."

OK, you've convinced me. But who would have thought that in this patriotic country dodging the draft could be a badge of honor and work to a candidate's advantage?

"That's because you forgot one of the most popular slogans from the 1960s. But Clinton didn't."

What slogan?

"Make love, not war."

First peoples, last chances: Indigenous clans face fateful choices

Editor's note: The United Nations has declared 1995-2004 the International Decade of the World's Indigenous Peoples. The news may not have reached the Hunstein Forest, but the people who live there sense, nonetheless, that a new millennium is dawning.

By Charles J. Hanley
Associated Press

HUNSTEIN FOREST, Papua New Guinea — The forest spills down from Mount Hunstein in a Gauguin's palette of green, spreading over foothills, out to marshes and crocodile rivers, up to a cluster of stilt houses where a band of clansmen await a future that, for once, may not be their past.

The Bahinemo people have a choice to make.

"The Bitara have already decided. They want logging," village leader Andrew Wanumai said of the Bahinemo's neighbors, a two-day trek to the west.

Like the Bahinemo, the Bitara are forest-dwellers. Like their onetime enemies, they draw food, fuel, life's raw materials from the woodlands. But the Bitara have caught a touch of foreign fever. "Those people want quick money," Wanumai said.

And a quick exit from prehistory.

The primitive peoples of the Hunstein Mountains must decide whether to surrender their vast virgin rain forest to the timber companies, choosing between old and new worlds, between much to be gained and much to be lost.

For these remote tribes in New Guinea's wild heartlands, the new millennium may be their moment to plug into the global village, after 50 millennia tuned in to the rhythms of their forefathers' forest.

They're not alone. In patches of jungle and tundra and savannah around the world, history is accelerating for "first peoples." Groups considered indigenous — an area's earliest inhabitants — are under growing pressure from the global economy and their own national governments, from timbermen, oilmen and gold hunters, from disease, from their hard life, from the lure of cash:

■ On Papua New Guinea's Bougainville island, an Australian-operated copper mine delivered plenty of pollution but only limited revenues for indigenous people. Disputes over the mine exploded into an armed secessionist struggle.

■ The Cree and Inuit people of northern Quebec are losing hunting and fishing territory, and their traditional way of life, to the vast James Bay hydroelectric project.

■ Royal Dutch-Shell's oil production in southeastern Nigeria precipitated bloody confrontations between the central government and the local Ogoni people over pollution, revenue-sharing and autonomy.

■ In Ecuador's Amazon, Indians are divided over U.S. oil exploration. Some have seized wells or occupied offices to protest what they see as a threat to their culture, or to demand more benefits from development.

The U.S.-based organization Cultural Survival has identified dozens of other indigenous groups whose cultures — their languages, ways, world views — are slipping toward extinction.

To call attention to these groups, the United Nations declared 1995-2004 the International Decade of the World's Indigenous Peoples. A U.N. experts' seminar in March proposed ways to help, such as direct World Bank loans to indigenous peoples to help them preserve their communities.

To environmental activists, the threat is broader still, since the decline of such cultures often means the decline of natural environments, including the world's shrinking rain forests.

"Like a canary in a coal mine, the life or death of these peoples may indicate how well we will all fare in the next millennium," American environmental lawyer Robert F. Kennedy Jr. said.

But the agents of decline don't always wear pinstripe suits or miners' helmets. They sometimes come in bone necklaces and bare feet, as the Bitara-Bahinemo dilemma shows.

"Local groups are screaming, 'Take our forests!'," said American anthropologist Carol Jenkins, who works among New Guinea tribes. "They want roads, health care, schools for their kids, and they're trying to connect a resource and a buyer."

The resource here is 2,300 square miles of primeval woodland, half the size of Connecticut, probably the largest remaining undisturbed tract of rain forest on this huge western Pacific island.

And the Hunstein "canary" may be the 5-foot-tall, black-feathered cassowary, an ungainly flightless bird that thrives in the steamy underbrush. Its decline would be one of the first signs of the pristine forest's deterioration, ecologists say.

The red mud underfoot is crisscrossed with the tracks of cassowaries and wild pigs, quarry of Bahinemo bowmen. Iridescent butterflies rise and dip in the heavy air. Overhead, in the lofty green canopy, rare hornbills, kingfishers and neon-plumed birds of paradise forage noisily for forest fruit.

The forest's greatest resource floats high above — clouds that roll down from the mile-high mountains, unleashing rain almost every night, nourishing a universe of plant life.

Unique orchids and rhododendron, fragrant cinnamon trees, creepers and vines, coconut palms — a 1989 expedition recorded 1,237 types of flowering plants and 392 species of trees in the Hunstein.

For the Bahinemo, the prizes are such food plants as the sago palm, whose starchy pulp is a staple; 60 medicinal plants; and the hardwoods they use to frame sturdy homes and make dugout canoes.

For loggers, the prize would be the thick-trunked kauri pines that march down the mountain slopes.

The first outsiders to regularly contact the Bahinemo, in the 1950s, were traders looking for crocodile skins and carvings. After 50,000 years in a Stone Age culture, the tribesmen soon had steel tips for their spears, matches instead of rubbing sticks, shorts in place of loincloths.

After missionaries came in 1964, to translate the Bible into the Bahinemo tongue, the locals switched to Christian names as well.

Today the 500 Bahinemo live in four villages, the largest the lakeside cluster of 23 houses called Wagu, a place of dirt-encrusted children and wizened women, hunting dogs and pet baby cassowaries. The nearest rough road is 40 miles away, down the winding Sepik River.

Though settled now, the Bahinemo often retrace their old nomadic ways, going from camp to camp to hunt and gather the forest's abundance. They have given up some ancient practices — such as intertribal warfare — but maintain others, like their traditionally close-knit family life.

They also have the poor health endemic to New Guinea's lowlands, suffering from anemia, malaria, yaws and other skin infections. Four out of 10 children in this region don't survive infancy. And government efforts at schooling the Bahinemo young have been erratic.

Their window on the world showed the Bahinemo what they lacked. "What we need most here is health and education," said Solomon, a gray-bearded elder in Wagu.

Businessmen and politicians apparently promised to meet those needs when they journeyed to the Hunstein Forest in 1990 to collect clansmen's "X's" on a deal to sell their forest for royalty payments on timber shipments. Like 97 percent of Papua New Guinea, the Hunstein is communally owned by the clans that live here.

Papua New Guinea's tropical timber industry is booming, led by Malaysian and Indonesian companies. Between 1980 and 1995, log exports quadrupled.

Former African emperor laments his reputation

BANGUI, Central African Republic — Before a recent army mutiny and intervention by France to evacuate its citizens and restore order, the last time most of the world had heard from this sparsely populated country the news was as fantastic as it was sordid.

An African military leader, Col. Jean-Bedel Bokassa, who seized power on Jan. 1, 1966, from a repressive cousin to become "president for life," decided in 1977 that even that station was not exalted enough and crowned himself emperor of a realm in the heart of Africa.

For his Napoleonic coronation, celebrated to strains of Mozart, Bokassa I, as he decided he should be called, spent an estimated $30 million.

A Parisian jeweler was commissioned to design a $5 million crown, his throne was decorated with 20,000 pearls, and 450 pounds of rose petals were flown in from France and sprinkled along the route to the national stadium, where the new sovereign was enshrined with great fanfare.

As with all wild parties, the hangover was not long in coming. Two years later, with his country facing serious financial difficulties and his arbitrary rule enforced with growing brutality, Emperor Bokassa was overthrown by a France embarrassed that only a short time before, it had helped cover the expenses of his lavish coronation.

In many ways, the story of Bokassa is the story of this backwater territory's emergence as a country and its entangled relationship with France, its colonial master until 1960. In many of its broad outlines, it reflects the history of France's heavy postcolonial string-pulling throughout the continent.

What cemented the emperor's downfall was charges that he had eaten the bodies of schoolchildren arrested during the violent repression of demonstrations against his rule.

BASIN BRIEFING

911 abduction

FORT WORTH — Prosecutors made opening statements Monday in the federal death-penalty trial of Bruce Webster in the 1994 abduction-slaying of Arlington teen-ager Lisa Rene. Defense attorney chose to not make an opening statement Monday, making way for prosecution testimony to begin today. Prosecutors are seeking the death penalty for Webster, 22, of Pine Bluff, Ark., who is charged with kidnapping that leads to death. He is the second defendant in the case to go on trial for his life. Seven months ago, a federal jury in Fort Worth convicted Orlando Hall of El Dorado, Ark., and sentenced him to death for abducting the 16-year-old girl and burying her alive to punish her brothers for cheating them out of $5,000 on a drug deal. In court documents, Webster's defense lists retardation as a mitigating factor for the jury to consider. Miss Rene was dragged from her sister's Arlington apartment in September 1994 as she pleaded with a 911 operator for help.

Midland to keep Border Patrol agents

Combest, federal officials intervene to halt officers' transfer to Marfa

■ Absence would have hampered enforcement of immigration laws in area, Sheriff Gary Painter says.

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

Midland will keep its two uniformed U.S. Border Patrol officers, thanks in part to intervention by U.S. Rep. Larry Combest and other area federal officials.

Recent congressional action has led to a move to increase manpower along the U.S./Mexico border in the Marfa district, which runs from the border to Amarillo, explained Keith Williams, press secretary for Combest.

In March, Immigration and Naturalization Service officials discussed moving Midland's two uniformed officers to the border itself, leaving only the investigative personnel at the Midland Border Patrol office, Williams said.

That would have left the area without Border Patrol field agents and would have hampered the enforcement of immigration laws in the area, Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter said.

The investigative personnel that would have remained at the Midland office would not have had the authority to stop suspected vehicles and to interact with local law enforcement, Painter added.

Because of that, local law-enforcement officials sought assistance from Combest, Sen. Phil Gramm, Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison and others, who then met to discuss the fate of the Midland office with those making the decisions.

"The congressman was aware that this was a proposal — and it's a good idea, to move Border Patrol agents to the border, but we do need that second line," Williams said.

Changes in the U.S. Border Patrol are currently under way to beef up border security around the country. "They're readjusting all over the United States," he said.

Combest met with the INS and the congressional committee pushing for changes throughout the United States to help stem the tide of illegal immigration. "The congressman had discussions with the INS top people, as well as the house committee," Williams said.

Although many changes are being made in the Marfa district's Border Patrol offices, Combest managed to convince others in the federal government that the two Midland uniformed officers were most effective here — working side-by-side with local law enforcement, Williams said.

"It's important to have that second line of defense. As we know they get through, unfortunately," Williams said.

Midlander keeps busy with 2 jobs, many hobbies

By Georgia Temple
Staff Writer

Grace Gonzales arrives at the downtown post office long before the sun rises. Before noon, she's off to her second job.

"I work at the post office, five in the morning to 10," said Ms. Gonzales, the owner of La Margarita Flower Shop. "I will go to the flower show and spend the rest of the day there. If I'm not arranging flowers, then I will be dealing with customers and sales people — everything in general that has to do with the business."

Her passion doesn't lurk in the paperwork. "I like the designing part of it. Who likes to do bookkeeping? Yuk."

After work, Ms. Gonzales can be found at least one evening a week rehearsing traditional Mexican dances with the other members of the Las Adelitas dance troupe, a group she started around seven years ago.

"I always wanted to learn, but I was never at the right place, at the right time to get into it. Then I met Yolanda Belazi, one of the girls in the group. We both work in the post office. She had done it before. I said, 'I really want to do it. You start teaching me, and we'll use it for exercising purposes.'

"That's the reason that we really got started, We wanted to do some kind of exercise."

The troupe grew.

"Then other girls found out, and they wanted to do it. So we let anybody that wanted to learn come. And we decided to get a costume. And that's how we ended up volunteering to do performances for the nursing homes, Celebration of the Arts — we've been to the Museum of the Southwest before. Party for visually impaired brings back memories of youthful years

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

Just for a while, everybody — young and old — was youthful and full of romance and good memories.

"Oh, it's beautiful," Pearl Syler, who is pushing 87, said of the big-band, Swing Era music at the annual Visual Aids News-Mobile (VAN) party for visually handicapped people in Midland and environs. "When I was young, my husband and I used to dance all of the time."

While she was listening to the music played by saxophonist Carvel Mills, bass player Mark Lowe and guitarist David Watkins of the NASDAQ Three on Monday afternoon, Mrs. Syler was lovingly and cheerfully hand-fed by her daughter, VAN volunteer Winnie Pearl Kidd.

"I have a hard time with my hands; I have arthritis," Mrs. Syler explained.

The music, the food and the fellowship, like the care of her daughter, refreshed her.

"She was a dancing fool," Mrs. Kidd said of her mother. Mrs. Syler recalled her years in Fort Stockton ranching country before moving to Rankin and then to Midland with her first late husband, A.E. Ellis.

He cowboyed and rodeoed.

"Everybody called him 'Cyclone,' " Mrs. Syler said. "He lived up to that name. He broke horses — anything on a ranch. He was a good husband," who died at age 54 in 1957. "He was good to his family. Everybody liked him, and he loved everybody."

And as a father, he was "a mess," said Mrs. Kidd. "We loved him dearly. He was an old cowboy" who was "pretty colorful. He had a lot of (cowboy) stories to tell. My dad named me after his first girlfriend (Winnie) and his last girlfriend (Pearl)," who became his wife.

Mother and daughter, like father, were pleased with the Winnie Pearl name and background.

But Lucy Bethel, who was among the VAN clients at the outdoor party, said that she would have "been kicking somebody" had her husband named their child after an old girlfriend.

In that regard, she had no cause to kick.

First day gives summer camp successful start

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

Running relays, flopping in Fire Department foam, cheerleading, building an ice cream sundae on someone's head and swimming laps — it's all part of Super Summer Camp at Lee Youth Center.

The first session of the annual day camp began Monday with youngsters ready to hit the lawn running, and run they did in relay races. While Monday marked the first day of the camp, Thursday will be the first time Super Summer Camp goes to the pool.

"We did a kids' assessment last year and found out the kids wanted to swim," said Rene Ralston, executive director of Midland-Lee Youth Centers. She said campers will have general swimming time from 2-5 p.m. on Thursdays.

Daily sessions are from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Monday through Wednesday and on Friday. On Thursdays the session ends at 1 p.m. with lunch and reconvenes at 2 p.m. at Doug Russell Swimming Pool.

"We have all kinds of activities — soccer, football, tennis, arts and crafts," Ms. Ralston said, noting the hot weather makes "getting wet" appealing to the youngsters. "The kids also like 'freeze dancing,' " the youth center director said. "It's like cheerleading (moves). Then you stop the music and they have to freeze."

The camp is for students who have finished the first grade up to those who have finished the sixth grade. There are still openings for future sessions.

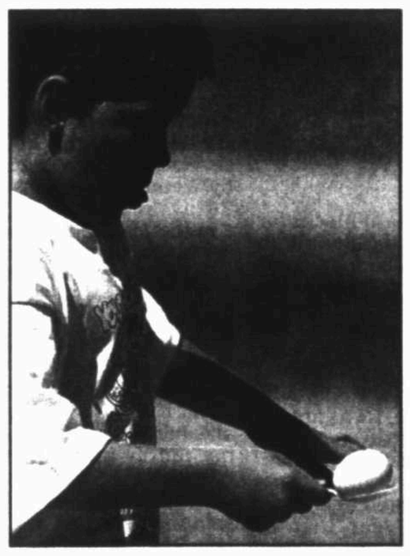

This session ends Friday. Other sessions are set for June 10-14, June 24-28 and July 8-12.

Cost of attending each week session is $35, which includes a T-shirt. Campers need to bring a sack lunch. Snacks and drinks are provided.

The camp's director is Barbara Phillip.

Ms. Ralston likened Monday's level of enthusiasm to hosting a cruise. "Now the counselors have cleaned up and we are ready for tomorrow," she said.

For more information on Super Summer Day Camp, call 689-1675.

C.J. Vest concentrates on carrying an egg in a spoon during a Lee Youth Camp activity. Youngsters had to carry an egg, blow up a balloon, sit on it and break it and then carry the egg to the start.

This synergy between state and local law enforcement and the Border Patrol is a benefit to the area and enhances the efficiency of the various departments. "They utilize (the Border Patrol officers) in a lot of ways," Williams said.

"Those who traffic in illegal activity are likely, unfortunately, to traffic in other things as well," he said.

"The Border Patrol agents are invaluable to us," Painter said.

Those agents are available immediately when a suspected illegal alien is detained by area law-enforcement officers. "They assist us tremendously," Painter said.

In addition, those agents regularly inspect places in the Midland area where illegal aliens are often found illegally employed.

POLICE REPORTS

Shooting

ODESSA — Odessa police arrested a 16-year-old in connection with the shooting of a 12-year-old girl May 27, according to police reports.

On Sunday, police arrested the 16-year-old on charges of injury to a child. A .25 caliber semiautomatic pistol was recovered.

An investigation showed that while Tavia was riding her bicycle, several teen-age boys in a pickup were involved in a verbal confrontation with some people in the 3100 block of North Hancock.

The teen in custody apparently emerged from a residence, walked into the street and fired several shots at the passing pickup. One shot hit the back of the vehicle.

Tavia, who wasn't involved in the confrontation, was riding her bicycle in the same vicinity when she was shot. No shots were fired from the pickup.

DAY: 2 jobs, dance troupe give Gonzales plenty to do

(From 1B)

Sept. 16, Mexico's Independence Day."

This Friday, Las Adelitas will help the Museum of the Southwest celebrate Western Heritage Week. Sponsored by the Ranch Rodeo Association, one of the many free activities will feature Las Adelitas from 7:00 to 7:20 p.m.

Currently, Las Adelitas includes Ms. Gonzales, Ms. Belazi and Kay Hernandez. "Others have come and gone, but the three of us have lasted all the years."

She well remembers the first time they performed publicly. "Oh, we were nervous. It was at a church fair. We made a few little errors here and there."

She laughed softly. "But the more that we did it, the more confident we got in it, and we just feel like pros now."

Las Adelitas has continued through the years because, she said, "It's fun and we enjoy it."

A native Midlander, Ms. Gonzales worked as a hair dresser the year following her graduation from Midland High School. She yearned to see distant horizons. Personally.

"That just was not exciting enough. A lot was missing. I'd always wanted to travel. The Army was my ticket out to go see the world."

She enlisted.

"I went to a couple of places for training — Fort McClellan in Alabama and Fort Dix in New Jersey. So I got to see those areas where I never would have before. I was assigned in Fort Hood here in Texas for a year, and then I went to Heidelberg, Germany for another year.

"When I was there, I was able to travel to all the little countries around — all of Western Europe. That's how I ended up going everywhere I always wanted to go."

When her three-year tour of duty was over, she returned to her hometown. But her traveling days weren't completely in her past. "Since then I've gone back to other countries that I wanted to go that I didn't catch the first time."

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Grace Gonzales, who also owns La Margarita Flower Shop, practices steps with members of Las Adelitas, a dance troupe she started about seven years ago.

This July, Ms. Gonzales will be among those honored at a commemorative program celebrating the 220th anniversary of the signing of the Declaration of Independence and honoring all veterans serving in all branches of the U.S. services. The program, sponsored by Women's Veterans of the West Texas area, is set for 2 p.m. July 2 in the Midland County Library, 301 W. Missouri Ave., second floor meeting room.

While overseas, she married. Her 19-year-old son, Vicente, was born in Germany. Today, her immediate family is small.

"My parents are both deceased. I just have two brothers — Jesse and Julio. Both live here. That's all my family now, and my son, of course."

An avid reader, Ms. Gonzales said she will read "anything that's available to me. I like to read educational material a lot. Of course, being in the flower shop I'm always keeping up with the latest trends."

Recently, she hired a manager at her business, giving her more time for herself. Her time for reading also increased when she discovered books on cassettes. "That's what I've been doing a lot lately. I was missing out on reading. I'm so glad that's available.'

Actually, her taste in hobbies is eclectic.

"I have a motorcycle that I've been riding since about 10 years ago. People always stare at me when I'm in it. It's not a usual thing to see a girl on a motorcycle.

"I'm looking forward to this summer and good weather. I only ride it in good weather. I like to feel the wind.

"A lot of people think riding a motorcycle is not that safe. 'Course I always take extra caution on it."

She rides a motorcycle for the same reason she dances. "It's a fun thing to do."

However, son Vicente is a different matter, Ms. Gonzales said.

"He likes to ride, but I don't let him too often. Not yet. He's so young still. He has his future before him. I'm already old. I can do this." She laughed. "I feel like I've done that, been there, and he's just barely getting started. So it's OK for me to do it, but not him."

At a Glance: Grace Gonzales

Birthplace: Midland.

Hobbies: There are so many. Reading, painting, floral designing.

Favorite movie: The one that I remember that I really liked a lot was "Nine Months."

Favorite food: Enchiladas.

Favorite vacation spot: I would love to go back to the island of Rhodos in Greece. It has spectacular scenery.

If I could visit any place in the world: "I don't know ... The problem is I've almost been everywhere I wanted to go.

If I won the lottery: I would do the usual — pay off debts and I'd like to contribute the bulk of it to worthy organizations because I don't want to change my lifestyle.

If I could change anything about myself: For the most part I'm quite content with the way I am. If I would change, then I would be somebody else. It wouldn't be me.

Drought forces several Texas counties to ban certain fireworks

Associated Press

Fourth of July celebrations from the Panhandle to the Mexico border may fizzle as the severe drought has compelled several counties — and even the Texas Pyrotechnic Association — to ban certain fireworks.

"We're as concerned about the drought as anyone else," Royce Trout, secretary-treasurer of the pyrotechnic association, said Monday. "We don't want there to be a lot of fires. It's bad publicity for us. We also want to protect our interests. This is our business."

The drought, forecast to be one of the worst natural disasters to hit Texas this century, has meant the land is parched and flammable.

Gray, Deaf Smith and Randall counties in the Panhandle have banned the sale, use and possession of all fireworks countywide. Other counties, such as Hartley, Potter and Roberts, have restricted the essential ingredient in Independence Day festivities. A number of counties were considering action.

The Panhandle Regional Planning Commission has asked Gov. George W. Bush to use his powers under the Texas Disaster Act of 1975 to suspend the sale and use of fireworks in the Panhandle.

"The cities and communities of the Texas Panhandle will no doubt be vulnerable to damage, injury and the loss of life and property if the sale and/or discharge of fireworks remain unchecked," the letter to Bush said.

Karen Hughes, a spokeswoman for Bush, said the governor had not received the letter as of Monday, but is willing to declare bans on fireworks in those counties where county commissioners request it.

"Gov. Bush is very concerned about the potential fire hazard because of the drought and dry conditions and he's also an advocate of local control," Hughes said. "He is willing to declare a ban on the sale and use of fireworks in the counties. If they believe it's necessary, he will respond."

Meanwhile, the pyrotechnic association, which represents a majority of the state's 25 or so fireworks manufacturers and distributors, filed a lawsuit against Gray County seeking an injunction against its complete ban and challenging its constitutionality.

Trout said organization members voted last week to institute a voluntary ban on aerial fireworks, meaning the manufacturers will not provide them to the thousands of Texas roadside vendors.

Aerial fireworks, which represent one quarter of their sales, generally are bottle rockets and other missile-type projectiles.

The aerial devices were banned because their landings cannot be controlled. Non-aerial fireworks such as fountains, fire crackers, sparklers and whistlers still will be available.

Professional displays will not be affected.

Mark Roughton, a spokesman for the Texas Commission on Fire Protection, said an already parched Texas and the destruction earlier this year of thousands of acres to wildfires has the agency concerned.

In 1994, the latest year for which complete data is available, fireworks caused 1,282 blazes — 873 in July — and $271,042 in damages. Last year, fireworks touched off approximately 800 fires, Roughton estimated.

A law passed three years ago allows counties to restrict fireworks during dry conditions by designating a "safe area" of either public or private land where residents can ignite fireworks.

Trout said he had a meeting Monday morning with Parker County, urging it to exercise its options under the legislation that was passed to protect the fireworks industry in the event of a drought. He said he would like to avoid filing another lawsuit.

PARTY: Event provides afternoon of song

But, at age 17 many years ago, Mrs. Bethel did have cause to leave home: the cotton farm.

She got married.

"Yes, I did (pick, pull and hoe cotton)," Mrs. Bethel said, "and I married, and I haven't had to do it (farm work) since."

Midway in the home-prepared meal for the VAN clients, Mills and his musicians moved aside after playing such swing numbers as "Don't Blame Me for Falling in Love With You," "Ain't Misbehavin'," "Stella by Starlight" and "Dancing on the Ceiling."

And there appeared on stage the singing foursome of a barbershop quartet: Sam Carter, lead, Bill Southerland, bass, Bill Shaner, tenor, and Thane Akins, bass, as the Mayor's Four-um.

The quartet delighted the hundred VAN clients and volunteers with such old-time sentimental songs as "Sweet and Lovely," "Heart of My Hearts," "I Want a Good Old-Fashioned Girl Just Like the Girl that Married Dear Old Dad," "The Irish Blessing" — "May the wind be always at your back; may the rain fall softly upon your fields" — and a good, old down-home song about "Trying to make a living out of blackland dirt" and "Singing seems to help our troubles so."

"Good music feeds the soul," Mills said after the music and partying were over.

By that time, the VAN volunteers had passed out complimentary gifts, including notepads, pencils, soap, balloons and perfume, to the VAN clients.

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

Among the gifts were sample vials of Elizabeth Taylor's White Diamonds eau de parfum, which apparently didn't entirely catch Mrs. Kidd's fancy.

"How can she sell her White Diamonds and Black Pearls," Mrs. Kidd said of the movie star, "when she is so big and fat?"

And as the sun changed the shadows of the shade trees, 10-year-old Joanna Westmoreland picked up a hand fan and waved it to cool her 94-year-old great grandmother, Crystal Webb.

And Mrs. Syler, who sweetly recalled the charm of her late cowboy-husband, left the VAN party in good spirits. "They say 'live one day at a time,'" she said. "That's what I do."

Associated Press

The Libertarian Party of Texas, which wants voters to decide the question of independence or statehood, has invited Republic of Texas officials to discuss their call for independence at a forum accompanying the party's convention in Lubbock this weekend.

"Libertarians believe in letting people present their ideas," convention chairman Richard H. King said Monday.

"We don't run from ideas; we love to debate and argue them. We wanted there to be a place where they (the Republic) could state for the record what they're all about," King said.

The Republic of Texas group's members believe the U.S. annexation of Texas in 1845 was illegal and, therefore, do not recognize Texas statehood.

In recent months, members of the group have staged demonstrations, convened their own "common law" courts and filed hundreds of nuisance lawsuits and liens.

Last month, one a Republic of Texas leader, Rick L. McLaren, was ordered to jail by U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton until he promised to stop his group from serving landholders with bogus liens.

"There's so much on the Internet about what the Republic of Texas guys are doing. And also, an issue with Libertarians is property rights and personal freedoms," King said.

He said the Friday night forum would be open to the public. "We're inviting everyone in Lubbock who is interested in this question to attend the public forum."

Wesley W. Burnett of Post, another Libertarian official, said the party's platform long has called on the Texas Legislature to place a binding referendum on the question of statehood or independence on the ballot for voters to decide.

"It's been in the platform for a number of years," Burnett said. "It goes back to the earliest days (of the party)."

Burnett also said he expected the issue to be discussed by Libertarian candidates before the November general election. "I know it will be when Libertarian candidates go out this fall and do their campaigning," he said.

Gov. George W. Bush said Monday there's no reason for a referendum and that history is on his side.

"We are a state. We ought to remain a state," he said. "My predecessor Sam Houston resigned office as a result of Texas making this decision (to secede). He felt Texas ought to remain a state and I agree with him."

The convention itself will feature a number of speakers, including Libertarian presidential candidates and Gun Owners of America president Larry Pratt.

A Sign Of The Security You Have With Farmers

There's probably no investment more important than your home. For its value and for the security it gives your family. But what if you aren't there to make sure the mortgage is paid in full?

Farmers has a solution you can trust...mortgage insurance that pays off your home loan should you pass away. It costs so little. And you can go on with your life knowing such a small sum is paying big dividends for your family's security.

After 17-year cycle, cicada insect emerges for ritual of sex, death

By James Barron
N.Y. Times News Service

HAMDEN, Conn. — It was a most unusual coming-out party. The host wore a tan plastic raincoat, not a dinner jacket. There was no bubbly music by the likes of the band leader Lester Lanin. And the swarms of gawky 17-year-olds? They were fashionably late.

For this was a gathering to celebrate cicadas, the inch-long insects that play out a three-week ritual of sex and death in the spring. The old generation crawls out from little tunnels in the ground and mates while flitting about. The new generation, the one Dr. Charles L. Remington had hoped to meet and greet as he tramped through the woods in the rain this morning, fall from their hatching-places in the trees, bounce like tiny Ping-Pong balls on the forest floor and burrow in again.

Unseasonably wet and cold weather seems to have delayed their once-in-a-lifetime entrance from Connecticut to North Carolina. Not to worry. Remington, a 74-year-old entomologist at Yale University, is a patient person. He has only been waiting for this party since 1979.

Yes, it has been 17 years since this batch of cicadas made their last appearance, 17 years since their parents droned all day in a conversation-stopping chorus — a synchronized love song. It has been 17 years since people complained that they sounded like a jet engine revving up for takeoff, 17 years since they crunched underfoot after dying, 17 years since they sent panicky gardeners diving for the encyclopedia.

Remington is in a minority: he loves cicadas. Farmers in the 17th and 18th centuries did not. "They thought a locust plague had been visited upon them," said Dr. Louis M. Vasvary of the Rutgers Cooperative Extension in New Brunswick, N.J. And in 1970, cicadas so unnerved Bob Dylan that he wrote a song called "Day of the Locust." The inspiration was a sleepless June night of trilling and wing-flapping in Princeton, N.J.

He was not troubled by the tuh-MAY-toe/tuh-MAH-toe problem that bedeviled the Gershwins: cicada is pronounced with a long a, sih-KAY-duh. But Dylan confused cicadas with locusts, which are chewing insects that can wreak havoc on crops.

Cicadas are suckers. They spend most of their lives as a kind of underground parasite, drawing in fluids from tree roots. True, female cicadas jab at tree leaves when laying their eggs, but the trees sustain no permanent damage. And the new generation of cicadas soon falls to the ground and burrows in, out of sight and out of mind for 17 years.

—Dr. Charles Remington, entomologist, on the cicada

Cicadas have been documented since the days of the Pilgrims. But Remington points out that scientists still know relatively little about why cicadas are the way they are. Among the unknowns: Exactly why do they emerge every 17 years? Why do they live longer than virtually any other insect? How many cicadas inhabit a single colony? How many eggs can a female cicada lay? And are starlings threatening them with extinction?

Remington maintains that their life cycle is regulated by what are essentially two body clocks. One, which he believes is on the cicada's subesophageal ganglion, ticks off years. When it hits 17, the second clock takes over. It tells the cicadas to withdraw their beaks from the tree roots and start crawling upward.

Remington speculates that the second clock is a "photomeasurement device" that can sense light. But he cannot explain how it is activated while the cicadas are still underground. Nor can he explain how it could be timed precisely enough to send thousands of cicadas pouring out of their tunnels by the millions almost simultaneously.

Dr. Chris Simon, an evolutionary biologist at the University of Connecticut at Storrs, suggests that seasonal changes in plant hormones or amino acids in the cicadas' tree-root diet may affect the countdown. In a paper in Annual Review of Entomology, she wrote that some entomologists believed that the trigger was soil temperature — when it warms up and the cicadas' bodies reach a certain temperature, they are programmed to emerge.

Some gardeners think the ground-temperature threshold is 64 degrees. But Remington discounts that idea. "If the soil temperature is the critical factor that lets them out, that's terrible for cicadas," he said. "Even in one little valley, there are cool places and warm places. That could bring them out raggedly instead of in overwhelmingly large numbers, and the predators would wipe them out."

Simon has found that the nymphs, as the cicadas are called when they are underground, do not all grow at the same rate. Yet they are all ready to emerge at almost the same moment when the 17 years end. Some have been waiting in exit tunnels for as long as a year.

Dr. Carolyn Klass, an extension entomologist at Cornell University, said they apparently traveled up and down in the tunnels. On 95-degree days last month, gardeners in Rockland County found them almost at the surface. But on cooler days they retreated to about four inches below the surface and waited another week before emerging.

What is not in dispute is that cicadas have the longest juvenile period and one of the longest life cycles of any any insect discovered. Some termites live 10 to 12 years, but they whiz through adolescence and settle into a long adulthood. Hellgrammites, aquatic insects with sickle-shaped mandibles found in the eastern United States, spend three years in an underwater phase that Remington said is roughly comparable to the cicada's near-hibernation. At the opposite end of the spectrum, the shortest known life cycle is in the fruit fly, which lives only 21 days.

The cicadas in the eastern U.S. are on a 17-year schedule; cicadas in the South and Southwest are on a 13-year schedule.

Women who lose weight after 50 at risk for fracture

N.Y. Times News Service

It is taken as an article of faith that a leaner body is a healthier body. But for some people, losing weight appears to be a health hazard.

A study by the National Institute on Aging has found that women who lose a lot of weight beginning at the age of 50 significantly increase their risk of hip fractures.

The increase is so pronounced that the researchers are recommending that doctors take the weight history of postmenopausal women into account when assessing their hip-fracture risks and prescribing preventive measures.

The research is among the first to identify characteristics of healthy people that predispose them to debilitating hip fractures years later.

"A lot of what we know about hip fractures comes from studies of what happens to people when they get osteoporosis and from case studies of people with hip fractures," said Dr. Tamara Harris, one of the researchers, who is chief of the office of geriatric epidemiology at the institute. "We looked at what happens to people before they get sick."

Each year 250,000 Americans suffer hip fractures, studies show. In most cases, the immediate cause is a fall. But what makes the fall likely to cause the fracture is osteoporosis, an appreciable loss of bone mass that often comes with age.

Seventeen percent of all 50-year-old white women will fracture a hip during their remaining years, as will 6 percent of men. White women are at especially high risk because they are among those most likely to develop osteoporosis.

Ten percent to 20 percent of them die within a year of the injury, and half of those who survive remain disabled, living out their years in nursing homes or dependent on the care of relatives and friends, said Dr. Steven Cummings, chief of general internal medicine at the University of California at San Francisco.

Survey: Cut taxes or deficit, not both

WASHINGTON (AP) — As Sen. Bob Dole campaigned as a candidate who could cut taxes and balance the budget, a new poll Monday showed the American people are split over whether that's possible.

The survey, conducted for CBS News and The New York Times, found 46 percent of Americans saying it is not possible to do both and 46 percent saying it is.

Asked to choose, 49 percent said they would prefer reducing the deficit, while 47 percent prefer tax cuts.

Deficit reduction was favored most strongly by Republicans. Fifty-eight percent of them said the deficit should come first, compared with 45 percent of Democrats and independents.

Campaigning in Michigan on Monday, Dole said, "I believe we can cut taxes, reform the tax code and balance the budget."

Dole, the all-but-certain Republican presidential nominee, hopes to campaign on a tax reduction plan. But the survey finds that more people predict taxes would increase under his administration than under a Clinton second term.

Thirty-two percent said taxes would increase under Clinton, 2 percent said they would decrease and 58 percent said they would stay the same.

With Dole as president, 39 percent predicted an increase, 10 percent saw a decrease and 42 percent predicted they would remain steady.

Prices steady

NEW YORK — Energy prices gained on Monday in quiet trading ahead of an OPEC ministers' meeting Wednesday in Vienna.

Oil rose even though traders believe OPEC ministers will not agree to cut production after Iraq begins releasing 700,000 barrels of crude a day into oil markets. The United Nations agreed last month to allow Iraq to resume oil sales on a limited basis, to raise money for humanitarian needs.

On Monday, July crude rose 9 cents to $19.85 a barrel on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Crude prices had been slipping in anticipation that Iraq's sales would add to supply enough to depress prices. But Jerry Samuels, managing director of ARB Oil Inc. in Los Angeles, said that on Monday, consensus was that Iraq's extra production will not affect prices for several months, if at all.

Natural gas prices were unchanged, with the July contract settling at $2.41 per 1,000 cubic feet.

An investment seminar will be held by Smith Barney on Thursday at the Garden Room of the Midland Country Club beginning at 6:30 p.m.

"Invest for Success" will be presented by Smith Barney financial consultants Kenneth Smith and Daniel Watts. They will discuss how the location of assets can be as important as the underlying investment.

There is no charge but reservations are recommended and can be made by calling 685-1234.

Dollar advances

NEW YORK — The dollar rose Monday on signs of moderate U.S. economic growth, but gains were restrained ahead of more significant figures due at week's end from Washington and Tokyo.

In New York, the dollar traded at 1.5279 German marks, up from 1.5233 Friday. The dollar also traded at 108.37 yen, up from 108.05 yen.

The pound traded at $1.5505, down from $1.5507 Friday, when it hit its highest level against the dollar since mid-February.

Other late dollar rates in New York, compared with Friday: 1.2526 Swiss francs, up from 1.2490; 5.1720 French francs, up from 5.1570; 1,542 Italian lire, up from 1,538.29; and 1.3681 Canadian dollars, down from 1.3686.

Stocks sag

NEW YORK — Stocks sank with bonds Monday as a report showing strong demand for automobiles aggravated worries about inflation.

Trading was light with investors bracing for clearer signals on the economy in this week's key report on May employment and wages.

The Dow Jones industrial average fell 18.47 to 5,624.71 after meandering in a narrow range. The blue-chip barometer, which shed about 120 points last week, was off nearly 37 late in Monday's session.

Declining issues outnumbered advancers by nearly 4-to-3 on the New York Stock Exchange, where volume totaled 314.96 million shares.

The NYSE's composite index fell 0.56 to 358.27 and the Standard & Poor's 500-stock index fell 1.44 to 667.68.

The Nasdaq composite index fell 4.70 to 1,238.73 and the American Stock Exchange's market value index fell 2.22 to 608.71.

Economy signals continued growth

■ Reports indicate steady growth isn't promoting higher inflation.

By Farrell Kramer
Associated Press

NEW YORK — A key gauge of future economic activity rose in April for the third straight month, combining with other figures Monday to suggest the economy is rolling at a steady pace without promoting higher inflation.

"It's not a boom, but it's growing quite well," said Peter Jaquette, a senior economist at the Wefa Group, a consulting firm in Eddystone, Pa.

The news comes as the stock market's 5 1/2-year rally shows signs of wear and the presidential campaign heats up, heightening the importance of even the smallest clues to the economy's direction.

The Conference Board, a private research group, reported that its Index of Leading Economic Indicators rose 0.3 percent in April, following a revised increase of 0.3 percent in March and 1.3 percent in February.

The index, which tracks 11 areas, including the stock market, money supply and consumer expectations, is designed to forecast economic activity six to nine months in advance. Three consecutive moves in the same direction historically have proved accurate.

The April results therefore suggest the economy will still be expanding by Election Day, which is good news for President Clinton.

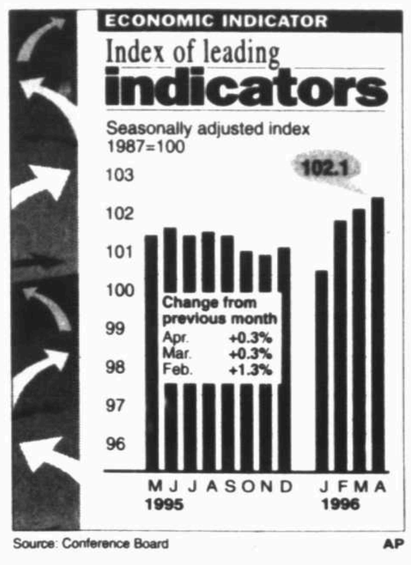

In a second economic report Monday, the government announced construction spending rose 1.4 percent in April, its second straight advance. That came despite rising mortgage rates.

"The economy's continuing to grow at a pace that should not reignite inflation," said Marilyn Schaja, an economist at Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette Securities Corp. in New York. "In terms of the general outlook, people should feel OK. People will not feel great — there's still this concern about job security."

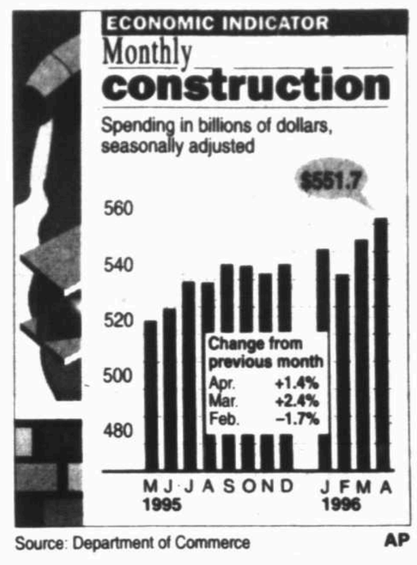

One piece of mixed news emerged: The National Association of Purchasing Management's index, a forecast of manufacturing activity based on a survey of purchasing executives, fell to 49.3 percent in May from 50.1 percent in April.

By falling below 50 percent, the index suggested a slowdown in manufacturing. But by staying above 44.5 percent, it indicated growth in the economy at large.

Generally, the new reports contained no great surprises. The government reported last week that the economy grew at a 2.3 percent annual rate in the first three months of the year. Many economists expect the rate to increase to 3 percent or more in the second quarter.

Bush warns federal officials not to threaten natural gas

By Chip Brown
Associated Press

AUSTIN — Gov. George W. Bush says the future is looking brighter for natural gas. Now, he wants to make sure the federal government doesn't do anything to change his feeling.

In a Monday speech to the Texas Independent Producers and Royalty Owners Association, Bush praised oil and gas producers for "surviving 10 of the toughest years any industry has ever gone through."

Bush, a former oil and gas producer in Midland, said he would fight to keep the federal government from setting regulations that would slow the growth of natural gas. Texas is the country's leading producer and consumer of the clean-burning fuel.

He said policies set in the late 1970s and early 1980s, such as the Fuel Use Act and Natural Gas Pricing Act, "destroyed the natural gas business" in favor of coal producers.

"The federal government decided how to price the product ... and also in its infinite wisdom, who could use natural gas," Bush said.

"We must never let that happen again in our country. The natural gas business has never yet fully recovered because of those rules and regulations, and yet our environment is worse because of it.

'One of the roles I will play is to say to the federal government that when the natural gas business gets good...Leave Texas alone.'
— George W. Bush, Texas Governor

"One of the roles I will play is to say to the federal government when the natural gas business gets good, and I'm convinced it's about to get good again, 'Leave Texas alone.'"

Bush said any time demand has increased for natural gas "there is a temptation by East Coast-type senators and members of the House to confiscate cash flow and overregulate the business.

"My job as governor is to raise the political stakes for any attempt to do that."

Bush said Mexican government officials have indicated a desire to use natural gas in the country's industrial plants.

"That's good news for Texas in two ways," Bush said. "One, it will help Mexico clean up its air, and secondly, it provides demands for natural gas."

■ Midland restaurant among 23 company owns in Texas, New Mexico and California.

Staff Reports

She was selected from among Denny's 350 franchise operators across America and is owner of Den-Tex West Inc., Den-Cal North Inc. and Den-Tex Central, operating 23 Denny's restaurants in Texas, New Mexico and California.

Barreras

She has been a Denny's franchisee since 1986, operating Denny's restaurants in Midland, Odessa, San Angelo, Big Spring, San Antonio, Kerrville, Amarillo, Lubbock, Wichita Falls and Shertz, Texas; Albuquerque, Tucumcari and Santa Fe, N.M. and Novato and Susanville, Calif.

Barreras was recognized for outstanding operating performance and community involvement. Her performance was judged on such criteria as fast, friendly and efficient service; cleanliness; employee training; safety standards; restaurant maintenance; food quality; plate presentation; food safety and sanitation practices; and financial results.

"Judy is committed to providing outstanding guest service and has demonstrated excellence in every aspect of restaurant operations with outstanding sales results," said Gaylon Smith, vice president of Denny's franchising. "She has gone far beyond her primary focus on employees and the communities she serves. Her involvement in creating our first advertising co-op and other initiatives have a positive impact on the entire Denny's system."

Barreras began her career in restaurant operations as an hourly employee at McDonald's at the age of 17. She also worked as a waitress at Sambo's and held management positions at Denny's prior to becoming a franchise owner.

She has been actively involved in Denny's direction nationally. She helped establish Denny's Franchise Advisory Board, which advises Denny's corporate on areas of franchise interest and was recently elected to an 18-month term on that board.

Compaq, Digital unveil PCs, Hewlett-Packard cuts prices

NEW YORK (AP) — Digital Equipment Corp. and Compaq Computer Corp. rolled out new personal computers for businesses Monday while Hewlett-Packard Co. cut prices on its commercial line.

The moves timed for the beginning of the Spring Comdex trade show in Chicago, marked a routine advance in system performance and features.

Earlier this year, PC makers accelerated their price cuts, denting their profit margins, as growth slowed. But the more recent cuts, capped with those by Hewlett-Packard, have been part of a standard pattern in the PC industry as products age and new models come along. Hewlett-Packard's cuts ranged from 4 percent to 26 percent.

"What we saw in February and March were more price actions and deeper than we or anybody had planned," said Bruce Claflin, vice president and general manager of Digital's PC business. "So far this quarter, it's back to normalcy."

Digital changed its main line of desktop models, being renamed from Venturis to Venturis FX, to make the machines easier to service, a move designed to appeal to technicians within companies.

For instance, the main circuit board, or motherboard, has been placed on a rail to slide out in a few seconds and most of the components that are routinely upgraded have been placed at the front of that circuitry.

Its lowest-cost Venturis FX, which has a 100 MHz Pentium chip, 8 megabytes of main memory and 845 megabyte hard drive, will be $1,695.

The company also introduced higher-priced PCs that act as so-called "servers," feeding and manipulating data among a network of PCs.

Houston-based Compaq, the biggest PC maker, introduced an advanced line of servers called the ProLiant 5000, starting at $11,900. The most powerful versions, with up to four microprocessors running, will cost around $200,000.

Hewlett-Packard also introduced two new PC servers run by the Pentium Pro chip. On Tuesday, the company will introduce new models of a more powerful group of computers known as workstations.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Even 'joint tenants' should have separate wills

By Bill Doyle

Q: I am married, and we don't have any kids. My wife and I hold everything we own as joint tenants. She will get my share of everything if I die before she does, and I will get her share if she dies before I do. Considering that we hold everything as joint tenants, do we really need a will?

Doyle

A: Just about everyone should have a will, including you and your wife.

Believing that everything the two of you own will automatically pass to the surviving spouse when one of you joins the choir silent is a risky proposition.

Suppose that you and your wife bought a house or opened a brokerage account as joint tenants several years ago, but the lender or brokerage firm fouled up and mistakenly listed you as tenants in common. If you stop breathing Earth's air before the mistake is discovered, your interest in the property would not automatically pass to your wife. Instead, it likely would become the subject of lengthy probate proceedings, and your creditors could ask that the property be liquidated to pay any debts that you left behind.

Or, suppose you were killed in an auto accident and the other driver's insurance company issued a big check to your estate. If you expired without a will, the cash would be distributed according to the state's inheritance laws instead of going directly to your widow.

Those same inheritance laws would kick in if you and your wife died at the same time in a car crash or other accident — which would mean your combined assets might pass to relatives you don't even like.

Holding property as joint tenants is no substitute for a will. Both you and your spouse should have separate wills that specifically state how you want your assets distributed when the two of you go to the great beyond.

Q: I had an attorney draw up my will four years ago, but I have since moved to another state. Do I have to make an entirely new will, or will the old one suffice?

A: That's a question you need to ask your attorney.

Each state sets its own requirements for a will to be valid. You probably won't have to tear up your current will and start from scratch, but some fine-tuning undoubtedly is needed.

The attorney who prepared your will four years ago either can research the laws of your new state himself or refer you to a lawyer in your new neighborhood.

One key question that must be answered is whether the executor — the person you chose to administer your will — can still fulfill his duties now that you have moved.

Trying to administer a will from another state can be a logistical nightmare, for one thing, and some states nullify a will if the executor does not live in the same state.

Q: I am a widow and have a large certificate of deposit that is held in joint tenancy with my two children. When I die, how will the CD be divided?

A: Your interest in the CD would automatically be split between your two children, who would continue to hold the certificate as joint tenants.

However, the siblings should then close the account and split the proceeds so that upon their own death, their half-shares would pass to their own families. If they instead keep the CD as joint tenants and one leaves this vale of tears, the entire account would become the property of the remaining child, and the deceased's family would get nothing.

Bill Doyle had a number of columns prepared prior to his death. The Reporter-Telegram will continue publishing them for the next several weeks.

STORM TRACKER FACTS

Some welcome rains were seen across the basin over the weekend with some areas seeing almost a half an inch of rain. More thunderstorms may be in the forecast this afternoon as some moisture remains in place, but hotter and drier weather is on the way. High pressure will build, putting temperatures back into triple-digit territory by late in the week.

Fed critic: L.A. employees were ordered to falsify reports

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal Reserve employees in Los Angeles, which operates one of the biggest currency processing centers in the country, were ordered to falsify reports to cover up $178 million in discrepancies, a longtime Fed congressional critic alleged Monday.

Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez, the senior Democrat on the House Banking Committee, said that he had asked the General Accounting Office to conduct an investigation. His allegations are the latest in a string of reports about sloppy management at the Fed.

"We cannot allow the central bank of the United States, the main custodian of the nation's currency and coin, to commit continual and serious errors in reporting its currency and coin operations," Gonzalez, D-Texas, said in a letter to Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan.

Gonzalez said he had been informed by sources, whom he did not identify, that Fed personnel in Los Angeles had been instructed to eliminate discrepancies in currency flows at the Los Angeles vault that in the last three months of 1995 totaled $178 million.

These accounting gimmicks covered up shortages of $5.8 million in October and $111.1 million in December between two different reports. In November, the report that was changed actually came in $61.8 million higher than the other report. That left a net shortfall of $55 million for the three months.

"The information I have received is that the falsification of the errors in the currency reports were known to personnel at the Los Angeles branch for a long period of time and were explicitly ordered by the management," Gonzalez said.

In addition to doctoring the cash balance reports, Gonzalez said he had received information about $45 million in other reporting errors.

Responding to the charges, John F. Moore, chief operating officer of the San Francisco Fed, which oversees the Los Angeles currency operations, said in a letter to Gonzalez that "in January of this year, department management discovered during a periodic review that inaccuracies existed in our data gathering techniques for some of the cash series reports."

He said new procedures had been implemented to correct the problems. Fed officials said the reporting discrepancies in no way suggested that money was missing, only that internal bookkeeping records did not match up.

In a statement issued late Monday, Moore said that the discrepancy problem "in no way suggests any wider problem." He also disputed Gonzalez' allegation that Fed employees had been ordered to alter the reports to cover up the discrepancies.

But Gonzalez said the latest incident underscored his longstanding belief that the central bank needed closer scrutiny of its operations from the General Accounting Office, Congress' auditing arm.

The Fed has more than 25,000 employees and an annual operating budget of $2 billion. Unlike other government agencies, the Fed is allowed by law to set its own budget as a way to protect the Fed's political independence as it makes it interest-rate decisions.

Earlier this year, the GAO issued a 200-page critical report charging that Fed expenses have surged by 50 percent since 1988 at a time when the rest of government was cutting back.

Moon contract

MINNEAPOLIS — Despite spousal abuse charges against him last season and the passage of his 39th birthday, Warren Moon became the highest paid player in Vikings history Monday when he agreed to a three-year, $15 million contract extension.

"He's a marvel," Vikings vice president Jeff Diamond said. "Here's a guy that over the last eight games last year had 23 touchdown passes and five interceptions. We had the No. 4 offense in the league. You can talk about age all you want, but we prefer to talk about productivity."

The deal includes a $2 million signing bonus and a $2 million reporting bonus. Moon, who will be 40 in November, was to earn $3.2 million next season in the final year of his previous three-year deal with the Vikings.

Dykes surgery

DALLAS — Texas Tech football coach and former Midland Lee coach Spike Dykes was in stable condition in a Lubbock hospital after undergoing surgery, officials said. Tech athletic director Bob Bockrath told The Dallas Morning News that the surgery should not impair Dykes' ability to coach the Red Raiders in its first Big 12 Conference football season this fall.

Dykes' surgery comes less than a year after he dropped 50 pounds during the 1994 off-season. He said he lost the weight by altering his diet and increasing his exercise.

Bockrath would not disclose the nature of the surgery.

"He asked that the nature of his surgery be kept private, and we are agreeing with his wishes until he is ready to address it," Bockrath said. "I believe he is doing fine and will be back in the saddle soon."

Dykes, 56, is expected to be in Methodist Hospital for a few days before going home. The surgery was not considered a medical emergency, Tech athletic spokesman Richard Kilwien told the newspaper.

Miami signs Kosar

MIAMI — Miami offensive tackle Ron Heller announced his retirement Monday, and the Dolphins signed linebacker Jack Del Rio and quarterback Bernie Kosar. Heller, a 12-year veteran, started seven games at right tackle in 1995. He went on the injured reserve list after having arthroscopic surgery on both knees Oct. 27. Del Rio was the starting middle linebacker the past four seasons for the Minnesota Vikings. He started in nine games in 1995 and finished as the team's fourth-leading tackler with 70. Kosar played in nine games and started two for the Dolphins last season.

Brewers, AL get revenge on Belle

■ Cleveland left fielder among three suspended for five games for brawl during weekend series.

By Arnie Stapleton
Associated Press

MILWAUKEE — Fernando Vina got his revenge on Albert Belle, after all. And a day later, the American League did, too.

The Milwaukee Brewers' 5-foot-9 second baseman didn't retaliate Friday night when Cleveland's tempestuous 6-2, 220-pound left fielder decked him with a forearm to the face.

But before the weekend was over, vengeance certainly belonged to Vina — and not by way of another ugly brawl like the one that followed Belle's baseline collision.

Vina's vindication came from robbing Belle of four hits.

On Monday, Belle was suspended for five games along with teammate Julian Tavarez and Brewers catcher Mike Matheny for their parts in the brawl.

AL president Gene Budig said Belle was suspended "since his action not only threatened injury to an individual but also led to the later disruption of the game."

Vina said: "It's a shame if Belle's not suspended, too. He started everything and everybody else has to pay for it?"

While Vina was coming back to his senses after being slammed in the nose and knocked to the ground Friday night, he heard Belle say: "Get out of my way then, and you won't get hurt."

Vina got in his way big time Saturday and Sunday — and might have started something that could hinder Belle and haunt the Indians all summer.

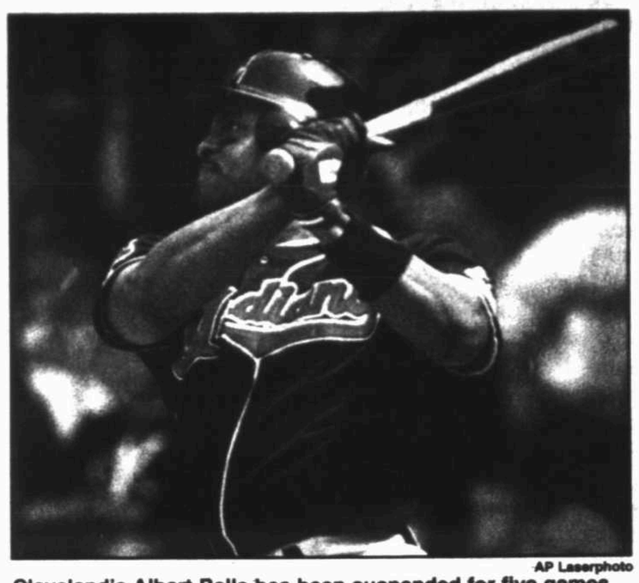

Belle, who has 21 homers and 54 RBIs, was victimized by an infield shift that moved Vina directly behind second base, where he robbed Belle of four hits up the middle.

Stich Musters win over last year's champ

■ German accomplishes what only three others have managed to do in last two years Monday at the French Open: beat Thomas Muster on clay.

By Stephen Wilson
Associated Press

PARIS — Thomas Muster's reign as French Open champion was cut short by a serve-and-volleyer with a gimpy ankle and few expectations.

Michael Stich, who nearly skipped the tournament following recent surgery on his left ankle, accomplished Monday what only three others have managed to do in the last two years: beat Muster on clay.

Controlling points with his serve (23 aces) and outplaying Muster from the baseline, the 15th-seeded German won 4-6, 6-4, 6-1, 7-6 (7-1) to reach the quarterfinals and continue the surprising run of attacking players at Roland Garros.

"There was a lot of pressure on him to defend his title," Stich said. "I had nothing to lose. He had a lot to lose ... He definitely was not on top of his game."

The second-seeded Muster, usually so relentless and tenacious, seemed to run out of steam after a grueling, 10-week European clay court season.

"I'm normally up for the big matches," he said, "but I just wasn't today."

The tournament also lost its sentimental favorite Monday. Stefan Edberg, playing for the 13th and final time in the one Grand Slam event he has never won, bowed out in straight sets to 14th-seeded Marc Rosset.

"It's just a pity I couldn't play better than I did today," said Edberg, who blew farewell kisses to the crowd following the 7-6 (7-4), 6-3, 6-3 defeat. "It's the first day I didn't feel as good as the other days."

Two unseeded players advanced to the quarterfinals in straight sets. Bernd Karbacher knocked off No. 5 Goran Ivanisevic 6-3, 6-1, 6-2, and Cedric Pioline took out No. 9 Marcelo Rios 6-4, 6-1, 6-2.

The women's quarterfinals are set for Tuesday, with Steffi Graf vs. Iva Majoli, Monica Seles vs. Jana Novotna, Conchita Martinez vs. Lindsay Davenport and Arantxa Sanchez Vicario vs. Karina Habsudova.

Jordan hopes to complete picture for Bulls

■ NBA MVP surprises some by saying he doesn't need to win NBA title to validate career.

By Mike Nadel
Associated Press

CHICAGO — Michael Jordan doesn't need to win the NBA title to validate his career.

Yes, he wants to win. But if his Chicago Bulls don't beat the Seattle SuperSonics in the NBA Finals, Jordan said Monday, "I wouldn't say I would be demoralized."

The statement, made two days before the best-of-7 championship series starts, was somewhat surprising because Jordan's "will to win" often is cited as the intangible that has separated him from other great players.

"I'd be disappointed, yes," Jordan said. "But I think I've proven my point even before we win."

The point being?

"That I can get back to the point that I left," said Jordan, who retired as basketball's top player in October 1993 after leading the Bulls to three-straight titles. He returned 15 months ago only to lose to Orlando in the second round of last season's playoffs.

"For all the people that said I may have lost a step or can't jump as high ... I've compensated by mental knowledge about this game and shown ways of still winning."

OK, so it does come back to winning. And Jordan certainly has done plenty of that this year.

He led the Bulls to an NBA-record 72 victories, winning his eighth league scoring title and his fourth MVP trophy in the process. And Chicago takes an 11-1 playoff record, including a vengeful sweep of Orlando, into Wednesday night's game at the United Center.

Winning the championship, Jordan said, "completes the picture."

"It would be half-tainted if we can't accomplish this last step," he said. "Nine-tenths of the picture is done. We need this tenth to complete the picture so everyone can see what was in store, what happened in the course of the year from the day we got knocked out of the playoffs last year up until now when we win the championship."

Not if. When.

It was a theme repeated often Monday by the confident Bulls.

As Scottie Pippen said: "A seven-game series is a long series — whether you beat them in four or five or whatev-

Baseball draft likely to pick Benson first

He's got size, a live fastball and control, making him one of the most highly rated college pitchers ever, and putting him in line to be the overall No. 1 pick by the Pittsburgh Pirates in the baseball draft today.

Yet, except for the fans who happened to watch ESPN and see him strike out 15 in only 7 1-3 innings at the College World Series, not many people know about the Clemson pitcher. Certainly not compared to the exposure Allen Iverson and Marcus Camby have gotten in basketball, or Keyshawn Johnson and Eddie George in football.

Which is part of the reason why, aside from the scouts and major league executives and others who have much at stake, the baseball draft does not attract nearly the kind of attention that the NBA and NFL drafts generate.

Draper cries foul over Lemieux suspension on eve of finals

By Patricia J. Mays
Associated Press

DETROIT — Kris Draper, speaking through teeth that have been wired shut, said Monday that Claude Lemieux's two-day suspension by the NHL is insufficient.

"I'm very disappointed about it," Draper, a Detroit Red Wings center, said Monday. "I thought there was going to be a suspension of a lot longer length."

Lemieux, a right wing for the Colorado Avalanche, was suspended for the first two games of the Stanley Cup finals and fined $1,000, the maximum allowed for his blind-side check on Draper.

He sustained a broken nose, severe facial lacerations and a fractured jaw that required surgery. His jaw is expected to remain wired shut for two to three weeks and he will be unable to eat solid foods for four to six weeks.

On Monday, the left side of a his face remained swollen and discolored.

"Claude Lemieux didn't take anything into account. He knew exactly where I was, he knew where he was," Draper said. "He knew the position I was in. He knew I was helpless."

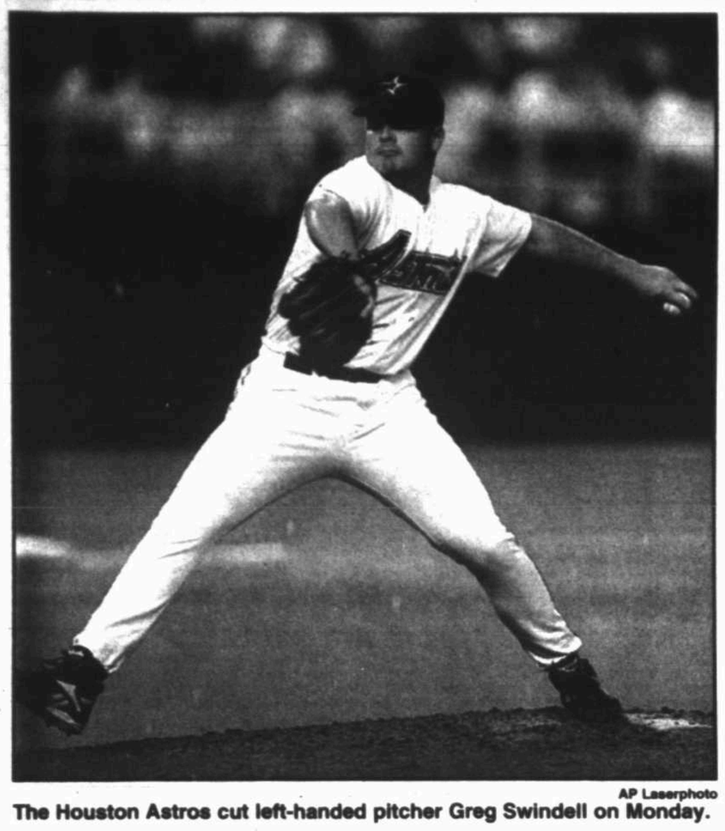

The NHL termed Lemieux's hit a "cheap shot" and "premeditated" in a decision released Sunday. The suspension is the first for a player in the Stanley Cup finals in the 19 years the league's supplementary discipline system has been in place.

Brian Burke, the NHL's director of hockey operations, said in the decision that Lemieux had "ample opportunity to avoid the cheap shot."

Lemieux will miss games Tuesday and Thursday nights in Denver against the Florida Panthers.

Rangers use Witt to rout Brewers

Associated Press

MILWAUKEE — Dean Palmer's 437-foot homer helped power Bobby Witt's first victory in five starts Monday night as the Texas Rangers routed the Milwaukee Brewers 9-6.

Rangers All-Star catcher Ivan Rodriguez left the game in the first inning after getting hit on his right wrist by a wild pitch and was replaced by Dave Valle. X-rays were negative and he's listed day-to-day. Witt (5-4) gave up two earned runs and five hits with four walks and seven strikeouts in six innings for his first win since May 8 against Toronto.

Twins 9, Angels 3

MINNEAPOLIS — Chuck Knoblauch continued his torrid hitting with three hits and three RBIs and Roberto Kelly added two key doubles as surging Minnesota beat California. Knoblauch, batting .514 in his last 10 games, drove in two runs in the Twins' three-run second inning and another in a four-run eighth as the Twins won their third straight and their fifth in the last six games.

Athletics 2, Royals 1

OAKLAND, Calif. — John Wasdin and three relievers combined on a seven-hitter as Oakland snapped a three-game losing streak by defeating Kansas City.

Wasdin (2-0), making his fourth career start, allowed one run and five hits in 6 1-3 innings. He walked Jose Offerman twice, the only walks he has given up in games he has started.

NATIONAL LEAGUE

Braves 5, Mets 4

ATLANTA — John Smoltz didn't win for the first time in nearly two months, but his Atlanta teammates kept him from getting the loss by rallying for a victory over New York. Smoltz's 11-game winning was in jeopardy when he left the game after the sixth inning trailing 4-1. But the Braves scored three runs in the seventh, then won it in the eighth on Ryan Klesko's two-out, run-scoring triple.

Pirates 7, Rockies 2

PITTSBURGH — Matt Ruebel pitched seven solid innings to get his first major-league win as Pittsburgh ruined Colorado starter Bill Swift's first appearance of the season with a victory over the Rockies. In only his third start, Ruebel (1-0) allowed two runs on five hits and two walks. He struck out four and allowed one single over his last five innings.

Giants 6, Reds 3

CINCINNATI — Matt Williams ended San Francisco's home-run drought with a two-run homer and added a two-run double, leading the Giants to a victory over fading Cincinnati. The Giants scored three runs in the first inning, highlighted by Williams' 13th homer, and Williams added a two-run double in the ninth off Jeff Brantley. Williams' homer ended a streak of eight homerless games by the Giants.

Cardinals 3, Padres 0

SAN DIEGO — Rookie Alan Benes atoned for his worst outing of the season by pitching a six-hitter for his first shutout, and St. Louis won its fifth straight game.

Benes (5-3) had lasted only two innings in a 10-4 loss here on May 5, allowing eight runs and six hits with three walks.

Cubs 4, Phillies 3

Houston cuts Swindell, promotes rookie Wagner

Swindell, 31, lost back-to-back games and had an 11.37 ERA in a pair of relief appearances for the Astros last week after returning from a groin injury. He had been dismal in four starts before the injury, going 0-1 with 13 earned runs in 7 1-3 innings.

"This has never happened to me," a choked-up Swindell told reporters after he was cut. "It's hard to take."

Swindell signed as a free agent with the Astros before the 1993 season after spending the previous year in Cincinnati. He posted a 30-34 record with a 4.48 ERA in three seasons with Houston.

"Greg came here 3 1/2 years ago with high expectations," said Astros general manager Gerry Hunsicker. "I guess it's safe to say that his career here was laced with many difficulties and frustrations on everyone's part."

Swindell may negotiate with other teams as a free agent when he clears waivers on Thursday.

In releasing the pitcher, the Astros resigned themselves to swallowing the rest of his $4.45 million salary for this season and getting nothing in return.

Hunsicker said he tried trading Swindell this season but found no takers.

"Obviously, the contract was a major issue," he said.

Swindell split time between the starting rotation and bullpen last season, going 8-9 with a 4.44 ERA in 26 starts. After starring at the University of Texas, Swindell was selected by the Cleveland Indians in the first round of the 1986 draft. He spent six seasons with the Indians, and won 18 games in 1988 — his most successful major-league season.

Hunsicker said the Astros would recall left-hander Billy Wagner, 24, from Triple-A Tucson, where he was 6-2 with a 3.28 ERA in 12 starts. Wagner struck out 86 batters in 74 innings for Tucson this season.

Wadkins, Stadler withdraw from U.S. Open qualifying

Associated Press

Inclement weather suspended play Monday at both U.S. Open qualifying sites in Ohio, and two of golf's more notable names — Lanny Wadkins and Craig Stadler — withdrew from the field at Columbus, while two-time Open champion Andy North failed to qualify at Chicago.

The nine sectional sites determine the final spots in the field for next week's Open to be held at Oakland Hills Country Club in Birmingham, Mich. Wadkins, who tied for second in the 1986 Open and has had three other top 10 finishes, and Stadler, who has had two top 10 Open finishes, were among the 137 players trying for the 32 spots available at the Lakes Golf and Country Club.

North, whose last Open win was in 1985 at Birmingham Hills, had to qualify for the first time since then as his 10-year ran out. North's 154 total was 10 strokes off what qualified for the Open field and Chip Beck, one of two golfers to shoot a competitive 59, missed by one shot and is an alternate. Andrew Morse, Charles Rauerson and Ty Armstrong were the players who did qualify from the Chicago sectional.

Joey Guillon, who finished last in the field at Shinnecock, had an 8-under-par 64 to lead those who finished the first of two rounds at Columbus, while weather also halted play at Cleveland, where John Cook's 5-under 67 was tops among those who completed one round. The players will complete the 36 holes by playing the opposite course when play is resumed.

John Huston, who shot a course-record 61 in the Memorial, led seven qualifers from Orlando, Fla. Also making the Open field were Blaine McCallister, Steve Lowery and Grant Waite.

Olin Browne, winner of last weekend's Dominion Open on the Nike Tour, led six qualifiers, including Billy Andrade and Dan Forsman, at Rockville, Md. At Canton, Ohio, Jack O'Keefe and Gary Trivisonno earned spots, but lightning and rain suspended a playoff between Bob Ford and Craig Kanada for the third and final spot.

At Houston, three first-time qualifiers advanced, including David Toms, who finished sixth at Kemper two weeks ago. At Denver, Steve Gotsche and Brandt Jobe earned the two available berths.

At Vancouver, Wash., Tad Holloway and Brian Henninger captured the two available spots. At Daly City, Calif., Kent Wiese led five qualifiers, all from California.

Angels end six-game loss streak with 12th-inning win

Staff Report

WICHITA, Kan. — It took 12 long innings, but it was worth the wait since Midland defeated the Wichita Wranglers 6-5 to end a woeful six-game losing streak by the Angels.

Angel first baseman Leon Glenn played a huge role in the victory. Glenn hit a sacrifice fly in the top of the 12th to score Keith Luuloa from third base with the game winning run. Luuloa had doubled to lead off the 12th.

Mike Freehill, one of Midland's four Texas League All-Stars, got the victory in relief to climb to 4-0 this season. Rafael Novoa earned his second save by holding Wichita scoreless in the bottom of the 12th. Novoa's only other save was also in relief of Freehill.

Ben Molina hit a solo home run for the second night in a row in the Angels four-run fifth inning. Glenn tied the game at 1-1 in the second with a run scoring single and scored on a single by Ralph Bryant in the fifth.

The Angels held that 5-3 lead until the seventh until the Wranglers tied it and it stayed that way until the 12th.

The Angels had fallen six straight times in a short homestand at Christensen Stadium against the San Antonio Missions, the last place team in the Texas League West.

The last time the Angels won was May 25.

This road trip is six games, all against Wichita. The Angels return home Sunday when Midland will host the Bill Williams Tire Center Texas League All-Star Game at Christensen Stadium at 6 p.m. The Angels are then open next Monday and will then entertain the El Paso Diablos for six games to end the first half of the Texas League season.

LSU, Florida State get victories

Associated Press

■ College World Series

OMAHA, Neb. — Chad Cooley, Justin Bowles and Mike Koerner homered Monday as Louisiana State beat Florida 9-4 despite committing five errors and allowing three unearned runs in the College World Series.

It was the fifth meeting of the Southeastern Conference teams, but the first time LSU (50-15) won. The second-seeded Gators, who rallied past LSU three times this season and won 25 games in come-from-behind fashion, didn't have the muscle to stay with the top home run hitting team in the CWS.

The No. 6 Tigers advanced to the Bracket Two semifinals against an undetermined opponent. LSU entered the tournament with 125 homers and picked up two more in its win over Wichita State.

Florida State 8, Wichita State 4

OMAHA, Neb. — Florida State battered one of the nation's top relief pitchers for five runs over two innings to stay alive with awin over Wichita State in an elimination game.

The Shockers went to star reliever Braden Looper in the sixth inning to protect a two-run lead. But the right-hander with the 96 mph fastball and 1.16 ERA gave up a two-run single to J.D. Drew to tie the game at 3 in the seventh, and three runs were credited to him in a five-run Seminoles eighth. Looper (4-1) had given up seven earned runs all season. In the eighth, Looper allowed a walk and two bunt singles to load the bases and he walked Scooby Morgan to bring in the go-ahead run with no outs. Travis Wyckoff relieved and his first pitch was rifled to center for a two-run single.

San Diego's Joyner out for six weeks

SAN DIEGO (AP) — The first-place San Diego Padres were dealt their first big setback Monday when they learned that smooth-fielding first baseman Wally Joyner will be out 6-to-8 weeks with a fractured left thumb.

The left-handed Joyner, who was hitting .321 with five homers and 33 RBIs, sustained a fracture at the base of his thumb while sliding into second base in the fourth inning of Sunday's loss at Philadelphia. His thumb was placed in a cast then, and he was examined Monday morning at Scripps Medical Clinic by team doctor Jan Fronek and hand specialist Dr. Merlin Hamer.

Fronek said Joyner will be in a cast for four weeks, and will then require 2-to-4 weeks of rehabilitation.

A Better Letter now offers Baby Gift Registry

With a baby on the way, you need so many things. Registering your needs and wants for the baby shower lets your friends and family know how best to help you prepare.

But at this special time, don't forget those items that are both personal and practical.

Gifts that are so personal they are meant to become immediate heirlooms, to be kept for a lifetime.

Nothing is more personal than something with your baby's name or initials on it. The newly established baby registry at A Better Letter lets you include items they have in stock that can be personalized in this special way.

When you register your selections at A Better Letter, they will post your requests at the store. They will also provide you with insert cards that say," Baby and Me are registered at A Better Letter," to be put inside your shower invitations.

Owner Libby Sharp says bibs stitched with a name, initials or one of 200 designs are a favorite to be used as keepsakes in a baby book or in a shadow box. "These bibs, with monogramming, start at $12," she says, "so they're surprisingly affordable."

One maker, House of Hatten, makes bibs with matching rattles. Another, "Mess Kats," has a flap that tucks in under the collar to keep baby's outfit dry at eating time.

Monogrammed baby throw pillows are very popular. Also, many people use a cloth diaper to put over their shoulder when holding baby—another item that can be made very special.

Keep baby warm in a monogrammed thermal knit receiving blanket. A Better Letter has nine popular colors to choose from.

Feel for yourself the amazing softness of the baby blankets at A Better Letter. Imported from Austria, they're made of cotton and other natural fibers.

Of course, not all blankets are just for comfort. Linus's "security blanket" in the comic strip Peanuts is a reality for many children. Researchers are realizing that these can be good for children, developmentally. The Comfort Silkies at A Better Letter are sized just right for cuddling, and would become extra special with a monogram or a child's graphic.

Many times these days, parents know the baby's name at the time of the shower; sonograms can inform us if it's a boy or a girl, and some showers happen after the child is born. But for those that happen before the baby is named, A Better Letter can supply the chosen items with a certificate for monogramming to be redeemed later.

The store also carries other gift items, including frames, banks, growth charts and more.

A Better Letter has some personalizable items for older children too, including back packs by Stephen Joseph, hooded bathrobes by Silly Phillie, and garment bags with matching totes by Howdy Rowdy.

Most families have, among their heirlooms, something owned by a great grandparent...and often that item is monogrammed. A Better Letter can help you with a new set of heirlooms.

A Better Letter, in business since 1990, is located at 1602 North Big Spring. They do embroidery of monograms and other designs on a variety of fabrics, many of which are available in the store. Hours are 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday. They accept Visa, Master Card, Discover and cash or checks. Call them at 687-2437.

VAN PEARCY of Edward Jones & Co.

By Van Pearcy

Building financial security means wearing a lot of different hats. You have to know how to juggle family finances, figure out how to pay for the kids' education, plan for retirement and build a nest egg for emergencies. Not many West Texans can do all that, and do it successfully. Most need help.

Van Pearcy

To help you decide whether you can manage your financial affairs yourself or could benefit from professional guidance, the Mutual Fund Forum offers a simple financial quiz. The Mutual Fund Forum is a national trade group dedicated to educating investors about working with financial advisers. Its member firms include more than 106,000 investment professionals who serve more than 12.5 million households. These financial advisers manage $1 trillion of investors' money, representing 41 percent of total mutual fund assets.

Stay cool with Aire Serv

We've already had plenty of hot weather, and your air conditioner seems to be working fine. So far. Does that mean it will be a trouble-free summer? Not necessarily.

First of all, the comfort specialist from Aire Serv can spot any potential trouble areas before they cause a system breakdown. A small coolant leak or a worn wire or bearing might not be apparent without a close inspection. This is simply good preventive maintenance.

Second, regular maintenance will keep the unit functioning at full capacity. A recent Louisiana State University study showed that regular maintenance on a cooling and heating system can save up to 25 percent of the system's operating cost. At Aire Serv's low rate, the Comfort Protection Plan can more than pay for itself in energy savings.

For example, by cleaning the condensing coil, Aire Serv makes your unit more efficient at getting rid of the heat from your house. Condensers collect dirt and dust, just like their cooling coil counterparts indoors. And the condensers also can trap leaves and trash, causing real problems if not rectified.

And by cleaning or replacing your filters inside, more air can flow over the cooling coils, reducing your costs by letting the unit run less. Clean filters also help you breathe easier.

When they calibrate your thermostat, Aire Serv makes sure your house is the exact temperature you can afford and be comfortable with.

Third, this regular check can help your system last longer. "Just like you get your car serviced regularly, your air conditioner needs the same care," said office manager Diane Hart.

Fourth, the Comfort Protection Plan also protects you from overtime charges, no matter how big a job you have.

You can enroll for one, two or three years. Comfort Checks are performed twice a year (once for the cooling season and once for the heating season).

This summer is shaping up to be one of the hottest and driest on record. Don't trust your comfort to "Hope so" and "Maybe." Trust it to the comfort specialists at Lee Thompson's Aire Serv.

Aire Serve is locally owned and operated by Lee Thompson, who has been in the heating and air conditioning business in West Texas for 23 years, ten of those with his own business. The company sells Carrier and other units, and offers complete service on all brands. Call them at 570-7405.

The comfort specialists at Aire Serv are ready to help you keep cool this summer. Call for information about their Comfort Protection Plan and its 24 point checkup.

Metro rents heavy equipment

For more than 10 years now, construction and industrial companies have relied on Metro Equipment and Rental for their light equipment rentals and purchases. Customers have found the wide selection of equipment and the first class service to be reason to rely on Metro for whatever they need.

Metro's equipment list includes pumps, generators, air compressors and tools, concrete/mortar mixers, electric tools and portable lighting equipment.

They also carry loaders, trenchers, fork lifts, compaction equipment and trailers, as well as highway barricades and hard hats and other personal safety equipment.

Brand names include Kubota, Chicago Pneumatic, John Deere, Black and Decker, Bosch and Milwaukee, among many others.

As for service, owner Glen Howle says, "We know our customers' time is a valuable asset. We try to work from their side of the counter—whatever they need is what we'll provide."

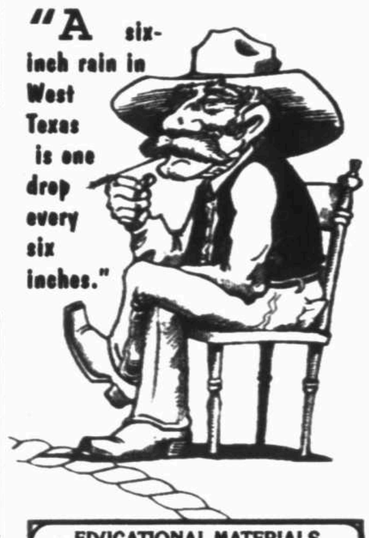

Metro can deliver and pick up equipment to your job site from radio dispatched trucks. They have a 24 hour emergency number. Parts and service are available when needed.

Metro Equipment and Rental Co., Inc., is located at 1400 West Front, next to the bus station in Midland, and at 12718 W. I-20 East in Odessa. The Midland number is 686-7368 and in Odessa call 563-5780. The company rents and sells a wide variety of light industrial equipment.

Since 1982 Metro Equipment has been making work easier with equipment such as this. Dial 686-7368 to hear what they can do for your company.

Joyners' Olympic dreams die

MISSION VIEJO, Calif. (AP) — Injuries will prevent a disappointed Florence Griffith Joyner and her husband, Al, from realizing their dream of an Olympic track and field comeback next month.

Griffith Joyner, who sprinted to Olympic glory and world records in the 100- and 200-meter dashes in the Seoul Games eight years ago, has tendinitis in her right leg. Al Joyner's hope of competing in the triple jump has been dashed by an injured quadriceps muscle in his right leg.

"It's heartbreaking, it's heartbreaking for Florence because she was really busting her tail," he said Monday. "I told her, 'Honey, if you're not 100 percent, don't do it.'

"Mine just came up unexpectedly. On my last jump in a meet at Occidental (two weeks ago), I pulled a quad muscle in my right leg, my takeoff leg.

"It's depressing, but at the same time, it's comes with the wins and comes with the losses. It just won't be the same, not competing in the Olympic Trials."

The Trials start June 14 in Atlanta.

Both Joyners are 36 and were hoping to compete in one final Olympic Games, although Joyner said, "I'm not giving up. I'm too stubborn. I'm going to probably compete in Europe."

Joyner served as his wife's coach.

In an Associated Press interview last week, Griffith Joyner, also known as Flo Jo, said age wouldn't stop her from making a comeback in the 400-meter dash. The way it worked out, it was the tendinitis that caught up with her.

"I don't have a doubt I could have run a qualifying time if I was healthy and ready," she said.

Griffith Joyner began training for the Olympics in October, but developed tendinitis in her right leg in late March, prompting her to halt workouts for most of April. In May, her workouts were cut to one a week.

"It's been hard for me. All the training I've done. I've never had problems with my Achilles," she said with a sigh. "My husband tells me I'm getting older, I tell him to shut up."

Such injuries to the Achilles tendon are usually the result of over-training, said Dr. Tony Daly, an orthopedic sports medicine surgeon who was the medical director of the 1984 Olympics in Los Angeles.

"I think it's a combination of a lot of things," Griffith Joyner said. "Me not resting like I should have in between training, traveling, pushing my body to the limit too soon."

First woman to pitch for major league farm team

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) — Pamela Davis thought she had realized her dream of playing professional baseball when she earned a spot on the Colorado Silver Bullets' women's team.

It's not about to stop there.

Davis is scheduled to pitch Tuesday night for the Double-A Jacksonville Suns in an exhibition game against the Australian Olympic team, becoming the first woman to play for a major league farm club.

"I'm trying not to put my mind on that," said Davis, a 21-year-old right-hander with a fastball that approaches 80 mph. "I'll try to stay relaxed and throw strikes because I'll have a good defense behind me. I just want to go out there and make it another ball game."

It won't be easy. A woman has never played for a sanctioned men's professional team. Davis has been told this from the time she played for the baseball team at Lake Mary High School near Orlando.

"I'll be living a dream out there," she said.

Davis will be following other women who have tried to make it to the top of a men's professional league — Ann Meyers, who tried out in the NBA with the Indiana Pacers in 1979, and Manon Rheaume, who played one period in goal for the Tampa Bay Lightning in an NHL preseason game in 1992.

The Southern League, which announced the promotion in March before the season began, couldn't have found a better candidate than Davis.

She played for an Orlando team in 1988 and became the first girl to pitch in the Junior League World Series, a 7-3 victory over Canada.

"It would be nice if she does well," said Arnold Fielkow, president of the Southern League. "But just her appearance in the game, quite honestly, is a very good beginning. It shows that a woman can get an opportunity. Hopefully, she'll showcase her talents."

The opportunity is part of the Southern League's "Give the Girl a Chance" program, which involves clinics for girls at various cities. The league agreed with the Silver Bullets to allow one of its players to join a pro team for a game.

Davis, who played softball for the University of South Florida and plans to go to medical school, is the best starter for the Silver Bullets. She has a 2-2 record with a 1.88 ERA, striking out 22 in 28 and two-thirds innings.

In her last start, May 25 against the Fort Bragg Marine Base All-Stars, she went seven innings without allowing an earned run in a 5-2 victory.

Suns manager Bill Plummer, who has never seen Davis play, says she will pitch one or two innings of middle relief.

"I think because it's an exhibition game it'll be fine," Plummer said. "She wants to see what it's like. I don't know what kind of competition she'll be facing. It's not like she's facing a Double-A offensive club. It's more for publicity, and it's good for the Silver Bullets."

Davis couldn't have picked a better team — the Suns are the Double-A affiliate of the Detroit Tigers, who have the worst ERA in the majors at 7.00.

But this isn't about showing she can play in the majors. Davis is interested mainly in showing Little League girls that they should never give up on their dreams.

"This isn't just for me," she said. "It's for all the little girls that are playing baseball now. If they see me getting a chance, they'll realize it's not impossible. Maybe I can help some girl that's 8 or 9 right now get to the major leagues someday.

FRENCH: Edberg run ends

(From 1C)

Muster came into the French Open with five clay court titles this year and an aura of invincibility. He got through the first three rounds without dropping a set, extending his record on clay to 100-3 over the last two years.

Stich, meanwhile, said three weeks ago that his chances of playing in Paris were "very, very slim." He had undergone surgery March 7 to remove bone splinters in his left ankle, which he first injured in Vienna last October and again in a locker-room accident early this year.

Recalling a discussion with his coach, Sven Groenveld, Stich said, "I don't know if I should go to France and look like an idiot playing on the clay."

Groenveld responded, "Just go there and use it as a practice, one or two matches, to get ready for the grass court tournaments."

Despite Stich's success on grass — he was the 1991 Wimbledon champion — the German is also an accomplished player on clay.

"Normally guys start moving back one or two meters behind the baseline," he said. "I tried to stay on the baseline and take his balls early. That started to work out in the second set. I think that caused him a lot of trouble because he was not able to move me around. It was going the other way. I was moving him around. I know he does not like that."

Muster said he wasn't aggressive enough.

"I just didn't my game together as I usually do," he said. "I played too short and I gave him too many chances to come back."

Muster suggested the clay court grind may have taken its toll.

"The clay court players have 10 weeks and they have to play all the 10 weeks," he said. "Some of them have burnout, some are tired. They have to play an awful lot in two months."

After Muster won the first set and went up a break in the second, Stich turned the match in his favor when he broke back in the sixth game.

From 4-4, Stich won eight of the next nine games to take the second and third sets. Muster went up 5-2 and served for the fourth set, but Stich won four of the next five games to force a tiebreaker.

On the first point, Stich hit a forehand that clipped the top of the net and dropped over. Muster won the next with a vicious return, but Stich then won six straight points — ending the match with a forehand volley into the open court.

Stich dropped his racket, threw up his arms and went over to the stands to kiss his wife, Jessica. Then he did a little knee-pumping dance.

"I have to create a new name for this dance," he said. "It was just like sheer joy."

Muster took the defeat stoically.

"It's a disappointment," he said, "but winning last year hasn't changed my life (and) this is not going to change it either. "I don't think they're going to take my name away (from the champions' trophy) because I lost."

Later on the same court, Edberg was unable to replicate the magic of his third-round victory over Michael Chang.

With the crowd chanting "Stefan! Ste-fan!," he made a last-ditch run after Rosset went ahead 5-1 in the third set. Edberg saved four match points, one at 5-1, and three others at 5-2. He had another break point in the eighth game but Rosset held firm and finished the match with his ninth ace.

"Wanted: Sonics Bettors," the sign reads.

Bettors paid scant attention to the tongue-in-cheek message Monday, however, flocking to place their money on the heavily favored Chicago Bulls to win the championship series over the Seattle Supersonics.

"All they want to know is how much they can bet on the Bulls," sports book manager Jimmy Vaccaro said. "It's been a one-way attack."

Despite opening the Bulls as 9 1/2-point favorites in Wednesday's opening game and 8-1 favorites to win the best-of-seven playoff series, sports books were drawing little action on the underdog.

Report: Camby accepted gifts

HARTFORD, Conn. (AP) — Marcus Camby, the national player of the year, accepted money and gifts, including expensive jewelry, from agents while playing for the University of Masschusetts, The Hartford Courant reported Tuesday.

Camby, who entered the NBA draft after his junior season, told the Courant he accepted cash from one agent and jewelry from friends that another agent bought.

"I know that's wrong," he said. "I really wasn't thinking. The opportunity was just there and I took it."

However, Camby's representative, James Bryant of ProServ, said Monday night the 6-foot-11 center "alleged that he never received any such benefits and any reports to the contrary are false."

Bryant said Camby did receive $1,000 after the season from an attorney, but categorically denied receiving anything from any agent or representative before then.

Accepting such inducements from prospective agents is against NCAA rules and could result in penalties against Massachusetts, which reached the Final Four this season for the first time. NCAA enforcement officials could not be reached for comment.

Camby, a Hartford native, said two friends also accepted money, merchandise and rental cars from one of the agents during the 1995-96 season with Camby's knowledge. This also violates NCAA rules.

He detailed his dealings with agents when questioned by the Courant, which obtained documents and information provided by a source.

Camby, 22, said the agents were trying to get him to sign a contract for representation before he made himself eligible for the draft, the newspaper reported.

The first player taken will sign a contract worth $9.1 million over three years.

A Connecticut law passed in 1995 forbids agents from "giving, offering or promising anything of value to an athlete before the athlete's eligibility expires." Violations of the law could lead to the revocation of the agent's license.

Massachusetts coach John Calipari told The Associated Press on Monday night that he had not spoken with Camby, but he was certainly aware of the problems surrounding college players and agents.

Vines, Lewis all-conference

Two former Midland High softball players, Shelia Vines and Joye Lewis, have been named to the all-conference teams at Cisco Junior College.

Vines was named to the second team for Cisco. The catcher was also selected as the team's MVP.

Lewis was an honorable mention selection as the second baseman for coach Susan Moore's ball club.

"They played really well," Moore said. "Their hitting and all-around play was excellent."

Cowboys hold 2nd mini-camp

IRVING (AP) — Emmitt Smith was talking about the Texas Rangers, Michael Irvin wasn't talking, and Charles Haley didn't show as the Super Bowl champion Dallas Cowboys held their second mini-camp on Monday.

"Where'd the summer go?" asked Smith. "We're going to training camp in five weeks and I can't believe it. It seems like we just played Pittsburgh in the Super Bowl. I blinked and now it's time to play again."

Smith, who graduated from the University of Florida several weeks ago, said he was pulling for the Rangers to make the playoffs for the first time.

"It wouldn't steal my thunder for them to be playing in October," he said. "I'd like to see it. But it won't happen if their bullpen doesn't get better."

The Rangers took a 5-3 lead into the ninth inning of games with Minnesotathis weekend, but lost both games when relievers couldn't hold off the Twins. Smith, who has one year left on his contract, said he still hasn't heard from owner Jerry Jones about renegotiating.

Haley didn't show for the first day of camp, but the Cowboys say he had an excused absence. Backup defensive lineman Darren Benson also was absent. Benson said several weeks ago he was retiring to become a roofer. Benson then said he had changed his mind. He was a no-show Monday.

"I'm disappointed about Darren," said coach Barry Switzer. "I hope he can fight through whatever is bothering him."

Eight rookies also didn't appear because of an NFL rule regulating appearances at training camps based on the dates of their college class graduations. The Cowboys work the next two days. They will start training camp on July 17 in Austin.

Olympic flame begins relay through Indiana

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — The Olympic flame, continuing its 15,000-mile journey, headed from Chicago to Gary, Ind., on Monday and will leave Tuesday morning for Indianapolis, which has long billed itself as the nation's amateur sports capital.

"The purpose of the torch run is to show off the best of the United States," said Jack Hensley of Indianapolis, one of the runners carrying the flame through Indiana. "This is a great country. Winding from the West Coast to the East Coast and back down to Atlanta, it's a great opportunity to show off just what America is made of, and that's people that give of themselves."

Nationwide, 10,000 torchbearers are taking part in the 84-day relay, which began April 27 in Los Angeles and ends July 19 in Atlanta, the site of the Olympic Games.

"More than anything else, it's to recognize community heroes," said Jerry Harkness, co-chairman of the local torch committee. "Obviously, it's got a history going back to Greece. But I'd like to think of it modernly as people of everyday life of all nationalities being recognized for giving back to the community.

"There's been so much negative regarding our country and in some cases rightfully so. But there's some good parts of our country," said Harkness, a former Indiana Pacers player who works for the United Way charities. "All are excited about being Americans, being a part of this tradition, the Olympics. It's a good feeling. And it brings back that opportunity for people to say 'I am glad to be an American.'"

The relay is scheduled to pass through cities including Merrillville, Rensselaer, Lafayette and Frankfort before reaching the northwest side of Indianapolis about 6:30 p.m. Among the runners shortly after that will be Notre Dame football coach Lou Holtz.

The relay will continue through Indianapolis, make a stop at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway about 9 p.m. and head downtown for a rally at Monument Circle about 10 p.m. The Pacers' Reggie Miller is scheduled to participate in the Circle celebration, although he is not listed as a runner.

This is the first time for David Owens, 36.

"I called myself an athlete when I was in college," said Owens, who played football at Howard University and now is a compliance monitor for federal contracts for the city of Indianapolis.

"As an older person who will see no more glory days as an athlete, here's some way that I can touch the Olympics," Owens said. "It's a chance to represent the country. We're all from the community, we do things for the community and here's a chance to share in a once-in-a-lifetime event. It gives everybody a chance to see what the Olympics are about, the tradition ... And then share that with the community."

Among the other torch-carriers will be Owens' 75-year-old grandmother, Tracy Ford.

Tech's Carr on U-22 team

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. (AP) — Led by All-American Tim Duncan, 16 finalists have been selected for the 1996 USA Men's Under-22 World Championship qualifying team.

Chosen as finalists Sunday were Duncan, Wake Forest; Toby Bailey, UCLA; Chauncey Billups, Colorado; Louis Bullock and Maurice Taylor, Michigan; Geno Carlisle, Northwestern; Cory Carr, Texas Tech; Austin Croshere, Providence; Brevin Knight and Tim Young, Stanford; Pete Lisicky, Penn State; Sam Okey, Wisconsin; Anthony Parker, Bradley; Paul Pierce, Kansas; Shea Seals, Tulsa; and Brian Skinner, Baylor.

"I think there is some versatility here, but I also think there is some real hunger and some pride and that was something we were looking for," USA head coach Mike Montgomery said after the two-day trials.

Sonics plan to set Jordan trap

■ Seattle, bothered by Utah's Jeff Hornacek, will have to find a new plan to deal with the rested most valuable player.

By Tom Friend
N.Y. Times News Service

SEATTLE — Now for the bad news.

If the Seattle SuperSonics thought Jeff Hornacek was elusive, wait until they get a load of a rested Michael Jordan. The scent of the Utah Jazz wore off Monday the moment Sonic Coach George Karl popped in a videotape of jersey No.23 — and asked for volunteers.

The rules in Seattle are usually that there are no rules, but Karl actually laid down a specific three today.

The first: Gary Payton guards Jordan.

The third: No one buys him a caffe latte.

"I thought when I came here four years ago, when Jordan was playing, Gary was the only guy who had any guts to play him," Karl said the other day of the 6-foot-4-inch Payton. "Everybody else was in awe of him. So, for me, my basic theory is you can say hello to Michael the first game, but from there on, no one's his friend. I don't want anyone to go to dinner with him, including me. I don't want anyone talking to him at shoot-arounds. Because I think he abuses that.

"Jordan, man, Jordan abuses the younger guys. They're 'Ah, you're my friend.' Everybody wants to be his friend. But you've got to kick his rear end, man. And he knows the game he's playing a lot better than you know the game. Michael Jordan's biggest talent is his heart; it's not his skills. It's his competitive, ticked off, 'You're never going to beat me, and if you do, you're not going to do it again' attitude. And we're playing in the NBA, where you've got to beat him four times."

Payton, on the other hand, is the reigning defensive player of the year and has never met a player he could not pickpocket.

"Gary, he's always challenged him," Karl said. "Gary's always never backed off of him, mentally. I can't deny that Michael might have beaten Gary, but Gary was not afraid."

Payton, his cap crooked on his head, said with his usual pretentiousness: "I think Michael Jordan is a big part of their offense. Oh, you knew that, huh? If we can contain him to 25, 27 points, we'll be doing a great job."

So, the ink was not even dry Monday on Seattle's Western Conference championship, and Chicago Bull matchups were dancing all over Karl's yellow steno pad.

Against Utah, the Sonics double-teamed Karl Malone at their own risk, considering Hornacek was waiting with his hot hand behind the three-point stripe. As a result, the Sonics had to bag their borderline-illegal, trapping defense in their 90-86 victory over the Jazz in Game 7 on Sunday.

But it is back out of the bag now.

"This Utah series was probably a non-Sonic defensive series," Karl said. "Put it this way: Michael will see a lot of double-teams. We won't play him straight up."

Elsewhere, Scottie Pippen — nearly acquired for Shawn Kemp two years ago — is the matchup that has the Sonics up at night. Pippen is too quick for Sam Perkins and Frank Brickowski and too tall for Nate McMillan and Vincent Askew. That leaves Detlef Schrempf, not known for his barrel chest.

Pippen scored 18 and 29 points in the two Sonic-Bull regular-season games (Seattle won by 5 at home, lost by 26 in Chicago), and Pippen could end up seeing as many waving double-teams as Jordan (who scored 22 and 35 in the two Seattle games this season). At the off guard, Hersey Hawkins and Ron Harper are a push; at center, Ervin Johnson and Luc Longley are a push; in the sixth-man department, Perkins and Toni Kukoc are a push.

Hot goalies highlight Stanley Cup Finals

By John Mossman
Associated Press

DENVER — Colorado has the potent offense, Florida has the stingy defense, and both have superstar goaltenders. The focus of the Stanley Cup finals has fallen on Florida's John Vanbiesbrouck and Colorado's Patrick Roy.

Vanbiesbrouck played down the matchup on Monday.

"I don't have to face Patrick Roy," he said. "I don't think he can score on me. It's the Florida Panthers against the Colorado Avalanche. I don't look at it as John Vanbiesbrouck against Patrick Roy."

In the Eastern Conference finals against Pittsburgh, Vanbiesbrouck and Co. shut down the NHL's two most prolific scorers during the regular season. Mario Lemieux and Jaromir Jagr had just one goal apiece and none in the last five games of the seven-game series.

Roy, 30, has the more impressive credentials. He owns two Stanley Cup rings, two Conn Smythe Trophies as the playoff MVP and three Vezina Trophies as the league's best goalie.

Vanbiesbrouck, 32, won the Vezina Trophy in 1986, but his New York Rangers lost to Roy and the eventual Stanley Cup champion Montreal Canadiens in the conference finals that year. This is Vanbiesbrouck's first appearance in the finals.

"I remember we beat him in 1986," Roy said. "It was my rookie year. I'm not sure, but I think he won the Vezina Trophy that year. He had a very good year — the same kind of year he's having now.

"He's playing really solid, he's really focused on the puck. Basically, our style is about the same. John uses a little more stick than I do.

"He's a great goaltender. And every time a goalie is hot, that team is always dangerous. We have to make it tougher for him, we have to put some traffic in front of him, we have to make sure he doesn't get many easy saves."

Vanbiesbrouck returned the compliment.

"Patrick is going to play well, there's no question about that," he said. "You know he's a fighter. You don't get to the Stanley Cup finals four times without being one."

Vanbiesbrouck was exposed to the expansion draft by Vancouver and was the Panthers' first selection in 1993. Roy, a fixture in Montreal, had a blowup with the coaching staff after being shelled for nine goals in a game against Detroit last December and was traded to the Avalanche.

"Vanbiesbrouck has been outstanding the whole playoffs," Colorado center Joe Sakic said. "He's on top of his game. He plays his angles really well and he doesn't give you a lot of room. We have to get some rebounds off him. The first shot is not going to get by him."

Panthers center Brian Skrudland said Roy is "obviously an elite goaltender who is very experienced in these situations. He has two Stanley Cup rings — one for each ear as I remember from the Chicago series — and he probably wants a third one really bad to go somewhere else, I don't know.

"We've got to get a lot of shots on him and create some traffic. Patrick is very much like our goaltender — anything he sees he's going to stop. He makes saves even on some shots he doesn't see."

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Karl Malone and John Stockton insist they have more playoffs to go before they rest. Whether their supporting cast remains is unclear.

Not even Jazz owner Larry Miller knows for sure. However, he does rule out wholesale changes despite having nearly half his roster, including Stockton, in free agent or option years.

"Emotionally, I'd like to keep the whole team intact, but this game has taught me ... that basketball teams don't stay the same from year to year," Miller said Monday, the day after Seattle beat the Jazz 90-86 to win the Western Conference finals 4-3.

The exception: Stockton.

The 34-year-old career NBA assist leader, a free agent the day after he and Malone report on June 30 for a second tour with the U.S. Olympic Dream Team, confirmed plans for a 12th season with Utah.

Bryon Russell, who came off the end of the bench to average 11.3 points per game against Seattle, is in his option year. He also expects to be in Jazz training camp this fall.

"Generally speaking, we'd like to have all three back," Miller said.

Belle finished the series 2-for-16 with two singles, dropping his batting average 18 points to .333. He lined out to Vina in the seventh inning Saturday, preserving Milwaukee's 2-1 win.

On Sunday, he hit three sharp grounders that would have scooted into center field had Vina not been there waiting, positioned so perfectly that all he had to do was bend and field the ball.

Trying to hit the hole on the right side, Belle flied out to right field twice, finishing 0-for-5 and failing to reach base via a hit or walk for the first time in 37 games.

"That's the first time anyone's done that to Albert all year," he said. "Obviously it paid off."

But Indians pitcher Orel Hershiser said Belle would make teams pay if they try to replicate Milwaukee's maneuver.

"They might erase a few points off his average, but he's too good a hitter for that to affect him," Hershiser said. "Albert Belle can make adjustments, too."

"One of our objectives was to make him hit the ball the other way. We don't want him pulling it out of the ballpark," Rowe said. "He can hit it out all around, but what we tried to do was show him the defense, he tried to go the other way but he was hitting the ball up the middle."

"The basic thing is the scheme. If you can't execute it, then you've got a problem," Rowe said. "We pitched him both sides of the plate. He got confused. He's a good hitter in that he studies what people do to him, if you try to keep doing it. We tried not to pitch him the same way twice."

Still, the Brewers, and especially Vina, felt good about shutting down Belle, who added no homers and just one RBI to his totals while in town.

Pippen and Jordan are the only players remaining from Chicago's 1991, 1992 and 1993 title teams. Coach Phil Jackson was there, too.

"Every time I've thought back about the championship teams, I've thought that we had nine, 10, 11 guys who were the same so we could draw on, 'Remember how we played this series? Remember how we played that series?' " Jackson said. "This team has no history like that. We don't have something to rely on to bring us back into focus.

"But this team is more versatile and a little more experienced. What I like about this club is that they're very confident they can go into this series and dominate individually and as a team."

Jackson is concerned about how the Bulls will stay with Shawn Kemp because lumbering Chicago center Luc Longley often will be matched up against the much quicker, much more athletic forward. And Jackson is concerned that the referees will let the Sonics get away with playing illegal zone defenses all series long.

But one thing doesn't concern the coach: that Jordan suddenly has softened his stance on the importance of winning.

"Michael has never been a bridesmaid," Jackson said. "When he comes this far, the direction is straightforward to the championship."

DRAFT: There have been few success stories for No. 1s

(From 1C)

Most people haven't heard of Travis Lee, Braden Looper or the other baseball prospects, and there's no guarantee that any of them will be in the big leagues anytime soon.

"Some of these guys are so far away from playing at the major league level, if they get hurt or don't have the desire or makeup, it makes it difficult," St. Louis Cardinals scouting director Marty Meier said.

Ken Griffey Jr. was the No. 1 pick in 1987, Chipper Jones was the top choice in 1990 and Alex Rodriguez was No. 1 in 1993. Paul Wilson, the No. 1 pick in 1994, is already pitching for the New York Mets and outfielder Darin Erstad, chosen No. 1 last June by California, is hitting .300 in Triple-A.

But Brien Taylor, taken first by the New York Yankees in 1991, is a long way from the majors after hurting his shoulder in a fight a few years ago. Phil Nevin, taken No. 1 by Houston in 1992, showed little and was traded away.

"Earlier, when the money wasn't as big, the draft wasn't as noticeable as it is now," Philadelphia general manager Lee Thomas said. "I think it's very important, and I think it ought to be publicized as much as the other sports."

Last year, a total of 1,666 players were picked in 87 rounds. This year, Pittsburgh will choose first, followed by Minnesota and St. Louis in a draft that will last through Thursday.

The two expansion teams, which start play in 1998, will participate for the first time. The Tampa Bay Devil Rays will pick 29th, followed by the Arizona Diamondbacks.

"It might not be a player who has received a lot of notoriety, but there still are good players all around the country," Diamondbacks director of scouting Don Mitchell said. "We fully expect to get a good one at No. 30."

Travis Fryman of Detroit and Brian Jordan of St. Louis both were picked No. 30 overall in previous drafts. Then there's Kenny Lofton, not taken until the 17th round by Houston in 1988, and Jose Canseco, selected in the 15th round by Oakland in 1982.

Benson, however, shouldn't have to wait long. He was 14-0 with a 1.40 ERA in the regular season for Clemson.

Lee, a first baseman, hit .355 with 14 home runs and 33 stolen bases for San Diego State. Looper had 12 saves and a 1.17 ERA for Wichita State in the regular season.

Pirates general manager Cam Bonifay visited the College World Series during the weekend, but didn't say which way he was leaning. Benson could be expensive, perhaps costing more than the record $1.6 million that the Florida Marlins paid shortstop Josh Booty a couple of years ago.

As always, there's the debate about whether it's better to take a college player or someone in high school. Third baseman Eric Chavez, who hit .457 as a prep star in San Diego, and John Patterson, who struck out 142 in 72 innings in Texas, are among the top-rated high school prospects.

The Mets, with the first pick, selected high school catcher Steve Chilcott. Slowed by injuries, he languished in the minors and, until recently, remained the only No. 1 pick never to make it to the majors.

The Oakland Athletics, with the second pick, then decided to take a college player. They took Reggie Jackson.

NHL: Spokesman defends suspension

(From 1C)

NHL spokesman Arthur Pincus on Monday defended Lemieux's punishment.

"I can understand (Draper's) disappointment and we feel very bad for what happened to Kris, and feel this is a very severe punishment for an act that deserved it," Pincus said.

Avalanche general manager Pierre Lacroix has denied that Lemieux intended to injure Draper.

"There was no cheap shot as far as we're concerned. There was just a natural, physical incident," he said. "We are 100 percent convinced that he had no intent to injure."

But Draper said Burke and NHL commissioner Gary Bettman should have been more aggressive.

"Bettman and Burke didn't have enough courage to step up and give Lemieux what was justified," Draper said. "What's it going to take, for him to break somebody's neck or something before they step in and do something?"

The hit on Draper was the third supplementary discipline incident involving Lemieux in the last 15 months. Under league disciplinary rules, a player's prior record is considered from the previous 18 months.

Lemieux was suspended for Game 4 against Detroit after sucker-punching Vyacheslav Kozlov in the previous game. Last season, he sat out three games for punching the New York Islanders' Brett Lindros from the bench.

"It's incredible that somebody could maim somebody like Claude Lemieux has done to Kris Draper and get away with the type of thing that he's done," Red Wings vice president Jim Devellano said. "I've been in the league for 29 years and to me, the way we handle discipline in our league is worst than it was years ago."

YOUR HOROSCOPE

TUESDAY, JUNE 4, 1996

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: A key relationship could undergo a mystifying change. Perhaps you are growing spiritually and the other person is not. Fall will find you up to your ears in business projects. Make investments only after consulting experts. Someone from your past could reenter your life as 1997 begins. Let go of unfounded fears. Next spring, you will enjoy a new independence at work. A real estate deal could put you on easy street! Find out as much as you can.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A business proposal coming your way deserves careful consideration. Guard private funds by limiting spending. A longtime relationship gets a welcome shot in the arm. Give credit to the deserving.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Keep on top of your financial obligations. A new agreement should allow for progress and expansion. Listen carefully to a troubled teen and you will make headway. Your social plans for the week look promising.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): An unexpected but favorable report regarding an overseas investment will lessen financial worries. Group activities are favored tonight. Discussing family members with an outsider could jeopardize domestic harmony.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Listening to gossip could strain a relationship. Do not let stubborn pride stand in your way when it comes to accepting help from your loved ones.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You get full cooperation from influential people where your career is concerned. A romantic relationship begins to intensify when least expected.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A red-letter day for those involved in sales! Real estate deals prove particularly lucrative. A friend offers a sincere apology. Accept it with good grace and let bygones be bygones.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): If you are irritated with a friend, bring the problem out into the open before your resentment escalates. The cooperative attitude displayed by a co-worker lifts your spirits.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A secret project will bring you good luck. An unexpected travel opportunity comes your way. Someone you meet today strikes your romantic fancy. Go slow — this person could be your complete opposite in temperament.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Clear up paperwork before starting a new project. Take "hot" financial tips with a huge grain of salt. Rely on the expertise of accountants and financial planners.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A promising relationship has long-term possibilities. Someone may question your value system. Respond in a mature manner. Buying prime real estate is a great idea if you can afford it.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You may be thinking about earlier loves, whether you want to or not. A close friend is the best confidant. You will have more fun being your own decorator.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Avoid acting overly possessive of your loved ones. Respect their friendships. Your business instincts are right on target. Do not let a tentative agreement fall apart. Team effort can help save the day.

Study the diagram above. Can you see any way by which a contract of four spades can be defeated? A former world champion, playing for France in an international match against Poland, accomplished that feat, and we fear we, too, would have gone down under the same circumstances.

North's response of two hearts was a transfer to spades. The subsequent jump to game in the major denied any serious slam interest.

Since the lead was either from king-queen or ace-king, it was easy for East to see that the king of clubs was unlikely to score a trick — the ace was certainly with South and if West held the queen of clubs, the defender could not have more than the king-queen of hearts. Therefore, one heart, one club and the ace of diamonds were all the defenders were due.

East decided to base the defense on the possibility of West holding ace-king of hearts and four spades, so the defender signaled vigorously for a heart continuation. West obliged with ace and another.

The threat is as powerful as the reality. Convinced that East was going to trump the third heart, declarer elected to ruff high and hope that spades would break 3-2. That was not the case, as declarer began to suspect when East followed to the third round of hearts. East had conned declarer into promoting a trump trick for West, and a one-trick set could not be avoided.

The Return Of The Borrowers

The Borrowers, the tiny people who "borrow" from their unwitting human neighbors, are back in an all-new adventure. This sequel reunites Pod, the head of the little clock family, with his wife, Homily, and their daughter, Arrietty.

MANITOWOC, Wis. — On screen, he parted the Red Sea and raced chariots. But Charlton Heston was a mere supporting player at an exhibit of his wife's photographs.

"The show is dedicated to my husband, who has carried my Hasselblads (cameras) over five continents," said Lydia Clarke Heston, a native of nearby Two Rivers.

More than 100 friends and fans paid $350 a couple to dine with the Hestons on Saturday at the Rahr-West Art Museum for a preview of a show of 41 of her photos. The event was a benefit for a YMCA college scholarship program.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Former gospel singer Michael English has been charged with assault and theft in what he claims is part of an ex-girlfriend's campaign to embarrass him.

English, who dropped out of Christian music in 1994 after acknowledging an extramarital affair, turned himself in to face the charges Sunday. He was freed on $1,000 bail and faces a June 24 hearing.

The former girlfriend, Tina Wilmurth, who was not involved in the extramarital affair, claimed English shoved her and a friend at a club Friday. The theft charge accuses English of preventing Wilmurth from retrieving possessions from his home by changing his locks.

"When Mr. English decided to dissolve the relationship, Ms. Wilmurth threatened that if he carried through with his intention she would cause him a great deal of embarrassment and harm," said the singer's lawyer, Rose Palermo.

Wilmurth later indicated she wanted to drop the charges, but that decision is up to prosecutors, police said Monday.

English has a new pop album, "Freedom," set for release in July.

• • •

KENNETT, Mo. — Three-time Grammy winner Sheryl Crow is coming home to the Missouri Bootheel to be true to her school.

Crow, a 1980 graduate of Kennett High School, plans a concert July 6 to raise money for Kennett's school system.

Her debut album, "Tuesday Night Music Club," earned three Grammys, including record of the year for her single "All I Wanna Do."

Three thousand tickets will be available for the show in the town of 10,000 people in Missouri's southeastern corner.

WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass. — George Bush tried that impression thing. Did his impression of Dana Carvey imitating George Bush.

The former president fell back on Carvey's "Saturday Night Live" routine to explain why he won't say what he really thinks of the news media.

"As my good friend Dana Carvey would say: 'Not gonna do it. Wouldn't be prudent,'" Bush told Williams College graduates on Sunday.

"Incidentally, I made that guy rich," said Bush, who was given an honorary law degree at the school's 207th commencement.

Lehigh University student Tucker Quayle, son of former Vice President Dan Quayle, has two tattoos and four earrings, says Washingtonian magazine.

His arm bears a Boris Badenov (of "Rocky and Bullwinkle") image; a creature he calls "Adolphus," described by the magazine as "camel-like," is on his back. He has two earrings in each ear.

Who said what: "Producing isn't fun. It's about 'We need pizzas.'"

"The Hollywood reasoning then, like now, was that if a stinker like 'Cocktail' could take off at the ticket counter, then (Tom) Cruise was truly bad-movieproof. ... No fuss. No risk. No thinking. Well, folks, I'm here to tell you that 'Mission: Impossible' makes 'Cocktail' look and sound like Anton Chekhov."

— Andrew Sarris in the New York Observer.

Rate & Credit Policies

Rate charges are determined at the time of placement. All ads accepted are subject to credit approval. Some classified categories require payment in advance. Credit applications are also required for business accounts. Yearly contract agreements are available. The Midland Reporter-Telegram reserves the right to correctly classify and edit all copy or to reject or cancel any advertisement at any time.

Cancellations

The price of your ad will be based on the number of days published according to our rate structure. Call (915) 682-6222 - ask for your cancellation number. This is your record of cancellation and it is important that you have it in the event of any misunderstanding or adjustment. "Super Seller" and "Real Wheel Deal" ads may be cancelled, but are non-adjustable and non-refundable.

Errors and Adjustments

Please check your ad the first day that it appears to be sure that all of the information is correct. This will ensure that your ad is exactly what you want readers to see. Call us the first day if you find an error at 915-682-6222. To report an error in Saturday's edition call Saturday morning between 8a.m. and 10a.m. Errors in Sunday's edition should be reported on Monday morning after 8:00 a.m. We must limit our financial responsiblity, if any, to the charge for the word or space, and cannot be held responsible for incorrect ads after the first day of publication.

Omissions of Ads

The Midland Reporter-Telegram assumes no financial responsiblity in an ad beyond the cost of the ad itself, and no responsiblity for the omission of an ad.

201020734

If you see your CashBack Card account number here, you've won a $10 CashBack Card rebate check from the Midland Reporter-Telegram. Use it just like cash at any participating CashBack Card merchant. To find out how to claim your prize, call 688-2700, Monday- Friday, 8 a.m. - 5 p.m., within seven days of publication. There are $5,550 in prizes, 456 winners - five every day. With a little luck, you could be one of them. Enter the Second Chance Sweepstakes for unclaimed prizes. See the rules below for details.

Midland Reporter-Telegram CashBack Game Rules

No purchase is required to play or win a prize in the Midland Reporter-Telegram CashBack Game. There are 456 winners, $5,550 in prizes including a $1,000 grand prize. Any U.S. resident, 18 years of age or older can enter except employees of The Hearst Newspapers and CashBack Card Inc., their promotion agencies and members of employees' immediate families.

How to play. If your CashBack Card number matches the number in the Midland Reporter-Telegram Classified pages, you win a $10 CashBack Card rebate check. Use it to buy anything you wish at any participating CashBack Card merchant. If you don't have a CashBack Card, you can get one by subscribing for 13 weeks or more to the Midland Reporter-Telegram. Call 688-2700 to subscribe.

If you have misplaced your CashBack Card, call 688-2700. We will send a replacement card without cost.

But you don't need a CashBack Card to enter the CashBack Card Second Chance Sweepstakes and by entering you could win one of the unclaimed daily prizes for the CashBack Card Game grand prize, a $1,000 CashBack Card rebate check. Use them to buy anything you wish at any participating CashBack Card merchant.

Here is how to enter the CashBack Card Game Second Chance Sweepstakes: Hand print your complete name and address and a daytime phone number on the CashBack Card Game Second Chance Sweepstakes entry form or on a 3" x 5" plain piece of paper and mail to: CashBack Card, Second Chance Sweepstakes, P.O. Box 1650, Midland, TX 79702-1650, so that the entry arrives before the deadline, June 16, 1996. Enter as often as you wish but mail only one entry per envelope.

How to claim a prize: Each day, March 18-June 16, 1996, five different randomly-selected CashBack Card numbers will appear in Midland Reporter-Telegram Classified Ads. If the number on your CashBack Card matches the one in the newspaper, you win that prize provided you claim the prize within one week of publication. Claim your prize Monday-Friday, 9 a.m.- 4 p.m. at the Midland Reporter-Telegram office, 201 East Illinois, Midland, or call 688-2700.

Winners may be required to sign and return an affidavit of Eligibility/ Release of Liability/ Prize Acceptance. The acceptance of a prize constitutes permission to use the winner's name or likeness or both for the purpose of advertising, promotion and trade without further compensation to the winner.

All prizes will be awarded. Except for the grand prize, winners can collect only one prize. No responsibility is accepted for any lost, delayed, illegible, incomplete, mutilated, postage due or misdirected entries. Entries become the property of the Midland Reporter-Telegram. None will be returned. Federal, state, and local taxes, if any, are the responsibility of prize winners. Decisions of the judges in all matters pertaining to the CashBack Game are final and binding on all participants and the sponsors reserve the right to modify the rules at any time. Odds of winning depend on the number of entries received. Void where prohibited. ©1996 Midland Reporter-Telegram. All rights reserved.
