DIRECTORS SHOULD DIRECT

It is interesting to read that the New York supreme court has ruled that corporate directors who neglect their duties can be held liable if their corporation goes on the rocks.

This ruling came in a $100,000,000 accounting suit brought against eight directors of the bankrupt International Match Co., which collapsed after the suicide of its guiding genius, Ivar Kreuger. The suit asked that the directors render an accounting of their official acts and be compelled to pay the amounts lost through their alleged negligence.

Directors, the court holds, must direct. If they are content to serve as figureheads, rubber-stamping the acts of corporation officials, they cannot escape responsibility. And a nation which has seen a number of firms go to the wall because their directors didn't take their duties seriously is apt to applaud this decision whole-heartedly.

Precontest comment on the Harvard-West Point mathematics clash seems to have been complicated by the fact that the scribes had to wait until the answers were in before determining how the teams looked on paper.

The Town Quack

(Reserve the right to "quack" about everything without taking a stand on anything.)
It is better to know than to talk.
People ride so much nowadays that it has become a long time since I saw anybody with tired legs.

A Midland woman, who will take a 20-mile trip tomorrow, will take 20 suitcases. Women insist on carrying lots of baggage. A man seldom bothers about taking a night shirt when he goes on a trip.

Some people grow with responsibilities. Others merely swell up.
Duty is disagreeable only in anticipation. After you start performing a duty, it is not very irksome or disagreeable.

We demand that the government economize. After you start economizing, it is not very irksome or disagreeable.
Midland suits me. I would not care to live in a larger town. Midland has all modern conveniences and enough gossip to keep me informed on all that is going on.

Some folks lie about the fish they catch. Others lie about the attendance at meetings. Reporters lie about everything, in the name of local patriotism.

We long for January in June. We long for June in January.

Hell Below

Adapted by
LEBBUS MITCHELL
From the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Picture

Yesterday's installment of "Hell Below" left the crew of the U. S. submarine, AL-14, imprisoned at the bottom of the Adriatic where it had taken refuge from the attack of several German destroyers. Its motors are out of commission, chlorine gas is spreading through its compartments, death is stalking in their midst.

CHAPTER XII
A WOMAN'S LOYALTY
Captain Toler got up from the manifold and went, swaying a little, towards the switchboard. He stretched out a hand to steady himself and it came into contact with a small rough wheel. The roughness awoke something in his mind. It was an emery wheel.

"Nelson! MacDougal!" he called. The two men approached him, their eyes staring, his footsteps halting. "Get a couple of wrenches," said Toler. "Pound this emery wheel into dust. Put it into the clutch and maybe it'll hold."

"Without a word in reply, the two men went to the wheel. Nelson tried to take it off the sprocket, but he was too weak; his hands trembled and faltered at the task until MacDougal gently pushed them aside and himself removed the emery wheel. He placed it on the bench, took up a wrench and began to pound it. Nelson slowly picked up a low stool beside the bench, sat down on it and started pounding the emery. His blows were weak and ineffectual. They became slower—light taps that did not crack the emery, which ceased altogether, and Nelson slipped off the stool. MacDougal continued pounding the emery. Captain Toler lifted Nelson's head.

"I'm so sleepy, Maw," Nelson smiled, then laughed gently. ". . . so sleepy."

Toler stooped and took Nelson up in his arms, and immediately the Lieutenant's body went limp. Toler looked at him a moment, gently lowered the body to the deck, straightened up, and spoke.

"Shake it up, MacDougal." MacDougal did not reply for half a minute. Then he stopped pounding and scooped the dust up in his hands.

"Go on—try it," urged the Commander. "Go on—try it," urged the Commander.

As he threw the dust into the clutch the men dragged themselves wearily about him to witness the fate, their aspects surprisingly inquisitive. MacDougal, at a nod from Toler, set his jaws grimly, shoved in the switch. There came a dull, grating sound from the clutch. He held! The pumps started, and a change came over the faces of the men; eyes gleamed, sagging spirits arose; hope was alive again. But when he spoke the pumps continued working steadily and the depth gauge to register ascent, Toler addressed his crew.

"We're going up. When we break surface, all hands on deck; man the gun. We'll fight."

Steadily the ship climbed to the surface of the Adriatic, broke through the waves. The hatches were hurriedly flung open. Gaunt and determined men rushed, stumbling, from the hatches to the gun, some of them dragging a machine Nelson still weak and sleepy-eyed, and Radford took the bridge. They looked about for the German destroyers. Far away on the horizon they perceived three columns of smoke, momentarily growing more distant, fainter.

With the knowledge that the enemy had gone, strength seemed to seep from the men; they threw themselves gasping on the deck; they looked like crows, beginning to breathe and revive under the open air. They sucked the air into their lungs with quivering sighs. Hollow-eyed, too weary to talk, they lay like dead men, staring up into the sky.

It was gray morning when the AL-14, battered and rent, entered Taranto harbor and ranged alongside the submarine tender. Bushnell, Toler and Radford were on the bridge, white and gaunt-eyed. Some of the crew lay about in the deck. Others, dirty, oil-streaked, unshaven and wet, sat slumped at the

"Suppose you did lie!" cried Joan. "It would give him another chance—save him from ruining his life!"
"I'm sorry, Joan, but I wouldn't lie to protect anyone—not even myself."

"I suppose your precious duty makes it necessary for you to testify against him." There was anger as well as accusation in her look, in her voice.

"My duty to the Navy, yes," said her father.
"For once you've got to forget your duty," said Joan, a certain fervent urgency in her voice. "I love him."

"Yes, Dad, I do. We've loved each other from that first night—knowing it was hopeless. Now, don't you see, if you break him, I'll go to jail!"

Captain Toler looked at his daughter as though her words had sent his world crumbling about him. He struggled to collect himself as hot words of anger fought for utterance. When he spoke it was with a deadly calm in face and voice.

"It's for you to decide, Joan. Either you can kill Herbert and end everything for me, or you can stand your duty, because I'm not going to lie to save him."

Knowledge, confined in a cabin in the tender, stood at a porthole looking out. MacDougal entered, a suggestion of mystery in his bearing. "A visitor to see you, Sir?" Knowledge whirled. "A visitor?"

"But the door opened and Joan stepped quickly inside. MacDougal was hardly out of the cabin before Joan walked straight in. Knowledge's arms. She was agitated and trembling.

"Oh, my darling," she said, and hid silent.
"John, you shouldn't have come here, Joan," he said, after a time. "I had to when I learned what had happened."

Knowledge sought to reassure her. "It's not so bad, really. If the Navy accepts my resignation, I'll be a free citizen, with rights."

"But they won't!" exclaimed Joan, bitterly. "My father is going to make an example of you."

"You mean he intends to . . . kick me?"
"Of course. I know what it means to you," she burst out. "Humiliation, disgrace—the end of your military career! I implored him not to do it."

"I have the answer," he said, between his teeth; "he hasn't got a heart in his body. . . . Well, tomorrow I'll be a man without a uniform, without a country, with friends. I've lost everything."

"Oh, no!" said Joan quickly. "You haven't lost everything!"

"You mean . . . ?" Knowledge looked searchingly into her eyes. "I'm not lost to you. That is, if you still want me."

"You'll stand by me!" Knowledge put his hands on her shoulders. "Yes. Resolute loyalty was in her brief reply. "Share my disgrace?"

"Because you're sorry for me?" "No, because I love you."

Knowledge crushed her tight in his arms. "Oh, my darling, that's what I wanted to hear." After a moment he released her and dashed out with great determination.

"Tomorrow at this time, if your father has his way, I'll be dishonorably discharged from the Navy, when that happens I'm going to go a long way from this place. . . . Resolute loyalty was in her brief reply. "Share my disgrace?"

"Yes." "Because you're sorry for me?" "No, because I love you."

Knowledge crushed her tight in his arms. "Oh, my darling, that's what I wanted to hear." After a moment he released her and dashed out with great determination.

Bible Class Meets
"Old Testament Confirmed" was the subject of a talk by the Rev. J. A. McCall at the Church of Christ Bible class Tuesday afternoon.

Attendance of 21 members was registered at the church auditorium.

Dougal was waiting to take her off the tender.

The following afternoon, the court martial being over, the crew was lined up in general muster on the quarter deck of the submarine tender. All the officers of the flotilla were massed in front of them, facing the flotilla Commander, Captain Manning. Between the officers and Manning stood Knowlton, his eyes lowered. The atmosphere was tense and tragic as Manning read from the paper in his hand.

"The sentence of the court as approved by the Secretary of the Navy and the President of the United States: Is that Lieut. Thomas R. Knowlton be dismissed from the United States Navy, and the Naval Service."

A Chief Master at Arms then stepped up to Knowlton's right side and began stripping him of his insignia.

As Knowlton, discharged from the Navy, was packing his gear in the cabin aboard the tender, Toler came to him. MacDougal, who had been helping, withdrew discreetly.

"Well, you bilged me out of the Navy, didn't you, Toler?"

"No, you bilged yourself out. I came to tell you that I'm sorry."

"Sorry! You're never sorry for anything!"

"Sometimes it takes courage not to show pity."

Knowlton became sarcastic. "In that case, your life must be one long battle with yourself!"

"I didn't come here to bandy words with you, Knowlton."

"Listen, Toler; thanks to you, I'm no longer obligated to be an officer and a gentleman. I can talk to you as man to man. I can talk to you as man to man. What are you going to do now?"

"I'm going to put a lot of geography between me and you. What about Joan?" Toler looked steadily in his eyes. Knowlton's gaze, with something flaunting in it, did not waver.

Socio-Economic Hop Is Success

Juvenile dance promoters Tuesday night once more proved Midland people want to dance—and are willing to pay the piper.

Under the direction of Elwood McAdams and Joe Beane, high school students, Frenchy's negro orchestra played several hours, and 75 couples danced on the cool concrete tennis court on West Wall.

The dance was the second to be given at the tennis court. The first was designed for the entertainment of the younger social group, but proved so popular before the night was over that attendants began charging admission and turning the customers through the turnstiles wholesale.

The promoters have decided to make the dances a regular weekly feature.

LINDY'S LOSE BY SCORE OF 14 TO SEVEN

By JESS RODGERS

"Too Tall" Newton's "team ball" —he throws and ducks, the batter swings, and the whole team looks for it—worked nicely for the opposing club last night, and Fred Wemple's Magnolia Blossoms manufactured 14 runs on 13 hits and five error contributions by Lindy's well-cleaned establishment.

The Magnolia club didn't wait to start the run making, chalking up four in the first and an equal number in the second. Varner, Hedges, Long, and Northington hit home runs.

Long, hurler for Magnolia, gave up but four hits, but issued eight walks.

Proving the Reservation With the Indians

By R. C. Hankins

Senores Lupe Lopez y Bennie Bizzell and their Caballos Rojas will be guests of George Elliott's baseball team this afternoon at 4 o'clock, when an old fashioned American game of horsehide wallpopping will result.

The Mexican quarter's ball team gets so much support from its own people that the sidelines raise a merry din that can be heard for blocks. They are the original people to put the ball in baseball, we understand.

Lupe, the manager, talked with this department this morning, and will allow himself to be quoted to the effect that in Mexico, first you run for president, then you run for your life. In fact, a bill for political campaign expenses in Mexico would, no doubt, include principally ammunition.

Lupe says the reason he is in this country is because of the good old American sport of baseball, in spite of pop bottles, being safer than one's fellow countrymen doing a Wm. Tell at you with a carbine. Then, too, Mexico is going palpitant over pictures. Mexicans are spending four times as much on movies as on bull-fights. But, of course, there's much more built in a movie than in a bull fight.

If we were a Mexican, speaking hypothetically, we wouldn't choose to run for president, either. We understand from talking with Lupe that a Mexican wife has one advantage over her white skin sister north of the Rio: when she tires of her man, she can persuade him to be a candidate.

Lupe says the growing pains of the Mexican republic are, more accurately, shooting pains. In fact, the major domo de los caballos says just when everybody is thinking about world peace along comes the mournful news that things are once more normal in Mexico.

Judging from a wise crack from Doc Ellis, Indian skipper, he is not so "wrapped up" in baseball as he might be. He was leaning against a post, we understand, and made the assertion that modern girls are fond of nice clothes, but are not entirely wrapped up in them.

The doc reverts to his profession long enough, however, to inform that the reason women's feet are getting wider is because they're trying to fill men's shoes.

There are about 150 ways a horse can lose a race, and a member of the tin horn fraternity here says he knows a horse that knows all of them.

Man Combined His Golf with Fishing

WAXAHACHIE, Tex. (UP)—J. Massie Webb set a new precedent here by combining fishing with golf—at least, that's the way the story goes.

Webb was playing on the country golf course here when he noticed a large bass swimming in the reeds, near the shore of a lake, at the fairway's edge, he said. Using one of his irons for a bludgeon he killed the fish with a single blow.

But Dr. C. A. Danke and Bill Hines, with whom Webb was playing, have a different version of the incident.

They charge that Webb's ball was near the water's edge, he swung at the ball and killed the fish in mid-lake.

FREE SHOW TONIGHT

"Thru Traffic," the talking picture announced by Scruggs Buick company for Tuesday night was moved up tonight, at 8 o'clock at the sales room of the company, on account of confusion in dates, R. D. Scruggs, proprietor, said today. The public is invited to see the moving picture free. Those interested in motors and mechanical details of automobiles are especially invited.

Horses dislike some riders, and sometimes we get the idea they get to feeling the same way about some bettors.

Oh, well! Suction, some say, holds airplanes up. That's something like horse-racing, which is supported by suckers, according to Mr. Rodgers, this department's stool pigeon.

The crack was not intended as a poke at those about to stage July 4 races here, but merely to call attention to the races will be held—and that one can have fun before them, during them, and afterward. That is, unless they are run off so fast that the bookmaker starts paying off the bets before your horse has finished running.

Back to golf. Most of us have given up hope of ever finding a diamond in the rough. We'd be content, as Bill Moran fondly says, to find a new and unmarked golf ball.

Russell Lloyd says the stress laid on keeping one's eye on the ball is probably the best proof of the Scotch origin of the game.

Statisticians, Harry Adams read, say there are more than 300 games played with balls. Ellis Cowden was sitting across the lobby and rose to the occasion with the assertion he'd seen more than 300 kinds of games played with golf balls.

We are glad to report that the condition of Mr. Rodgers, convalescing from illness induced by an hour's work last week, is slightly improved. He will be back to conduct this column when his fan mail drops off.

Robert Montgomery And Sally Eilers In Yucca Showing

Two of the most popular players in pictures are co-starred in "Made on Broadway," which comes to the Yucca screen Thursday and Friday as a filmization of the Courtney Bennett story, "Public Relations," account of the metropolitan "wise guy." They are Robert Montgomery, affable expert at flip humor, and Sally Eilers, who skyrocketed to stardom after her outstanding hit in "Bad Girl."

Montgomery, who was brought from the Broadway stage to play the part of an undergraduate in "So, This Is College" has since achieved a meteoric career in which he has played opposite such screen headliners as Greta Garbo, Norma Shearer, Joan Crawford and Tallulah Bankhead. In this newest picture he is given the greatest opportunity to put over the rapid-fire good humor which has endeared him to millions of theatregoers.

"Man-About-Town," Montgomery has the role of a debonaire man-about-town who is actually the power behind the city's political scene. He prevents Miss Eilers from committing suicide as a result of poverty and transforms her into a dazzling Broadway personality.

When an unanticipated murder takes place Montgomery is forced to strain his resources to the limit in order to save his "synthetic mistress" from the death penalty.

The attractive Madge Evans has an important role in the picture as Montgomery's ex-wife who, still loving him, tries to bring some reason and order into her husband's mad Manhattan existence. The amusing Eugene Pallette is seen as a confidential butler and C. Henry Gordon, who recently scored as the gangster's head in "Gabriel Over the White House," enacts the town's mayor.

Boy Accidentally Ate Fishing Worm

WABASH, Ind. (UP)—Albert H. Wigner accidentally ate a fishing worm while practicing deception on his playmates.

Other boys looked on with horror as Wigner pretended to eat the worms, which really were being dropped into his sleeve. Suddenly Wigner became as horrified as his boy friends when one of the worms slipped from his fingers and fell wiggling down his throat.

Army Quarantine On Fcraze Lifted

EL PASO, Tex. (UP)—Lifting of an army quarantine placed on forage grown in the Rio Grande valley will return the Fort Bliss market which, until last year, brought $50,000 to $100,000 worth of hay annually for its stock.

The surgeon-general of the army removed the ban after experiments proved a strange disease fatal to horses was caused by a germ-carrying mosquito and not by the valley-grown hay.

Residents Refuse to Buy at Sheriff's Sales

FILLMORE, Idaho. (UP)—One hundred and nineteen tax paying residents of Millard county have mutually agreed to refrain from buying anything offered at sheriff's sales.

It was explained that things sold under a foreclosure were invariably valuable only to neighbors and that boycotting such sales would protect the interest of all.

An effort to extend the list of "boycotters" is being made.

Archery Popular in Utah

SALT LAKE CITY, Utah (UP)—Bow and arrow marksmanship has suddenly become a popular sport among youngsters in this part of Utah, with the result that high schools have formed archery clubs, with prizes and championships for the best teams.

James Henry Price and Monroe Price of Los Angeles, Calif., stopped over to visit Mr. and Mrs. Jake Price a few days en route to Salt Lake to visit their father and mother.

Radio Network For Big Armada

The flight of the 24 Italian sea-planes under command of General Italo Balbo, air minister with General Aldo Pellegrino as chief of staff, from Italy to the Century of Progress exposition at Chicago and return, not only will be the greatest expedition of the kind ever made, but will also be served by the most complete and exclusive organization ever put together for communicating with airplanes in flight and for collecting and reporting to them the weather data upon which the success of any flight depends.

The squadron of 24 planes will be in constant two-way communication with one or the other of the flights to communication headquarters. The Italian government in Rome and the other in the International Telephone Telegraph building in New York, where Col. Mario Infante, in charge of the American end of the air ministry, has taken office with his staff, working in collaboration with Ellery W. Stone, vice president of Postal Telegraph and Mackay Radio of the International Telegraph system. The government has appointed the International Telephone and Telegraph corporation, whose facilities include the powerful Atlantic coastal station at Mackay radio, the undersea commercial cables and the land lines of the Postal Telegraph company, to handle communications with the air squadron from this side of the Atlantic.

In addition, Postal Telegraph will have the cooperation of the Canadian Pacific railway, whose telegraph lines connect with the Postal Telegraph system. Each of the sea-planes is equipped with radio sending and receiving apparatus and more than 30 radio stations in Italy, Germany, England, Iceland, Greenland, Labrador, Canada and the United States and on 12 Italian vessels spaced along the sea route, are cooperating to keep them informed of weather conditions and other necessary information. What is believed to be the most complete weather report service ever attempted on an air squadron in flight has been established. Hundreds of reports from the Canadian and United States weather bureaus, from ships at sea, from points along the sea coast, from airports about the country and from other sources will be added, coded and telegraphed into the operation room in New York where Colonel Infante will be stationed during the entire flight.

These reports will be analyzed by Dr. James H. Kimball, weather expert of the United States weather bureau who has figured prominently in the supplying of weather data for virtually all of the trans-Atlantic flights and Prof. D. Montari, weather expert of the Italian air ministry, who has been stationed in Dr. Kimball's office. The reports will be flashed to the armada from the powerful Mackay radio station at Sayville, Long Island. A similar organization has been set up for the European stage of the flight and the weather information will be radiated to the seaplanes from the Italian government's station near Rome, which also will communicate with New York through the Sayville station and by the Commercial Cable company with the officials on this side of the Atlantic.

Picture Builds Action Around Love-Rackets

Everyone wants love and "Strictly Personal," E. P. Schulberg's new Paramount picture that opens today at the Riz theatre, tells the inside story of those who join the "get-acquainted clubs" to find the romance life has denied them.

You'll brush a tear away at the appealing pictures of the sex-starved loneliness of these spinsters, widows, widowers and bachelors whose need for love has made a business of cupid's game.

Marjorie Rambeau and Edward Ellis, as the proprietors of the Lonely Hearts club, seek to fulfill the need of the club's members. With them is Dorothy Jordan, as their wayward Eastern gangster, played by Louis Calhern, tries to "muscle in" on the club and convert the legitimate business into a blackmailing racket. He kills a wealthy widow for her jewels, tries to commit the crime on Ellis, and attempts to abduct Mary. But, through the efforts of Eddie Quillan, a wisecracking newspaper reporter in love with Mary, he is foiled in his attempt, in time, and the story is brought to a tremendous climax culminating in Calhern's death and the return of the club to its former legitimate status.

BAER SEEN AS NEXT CHAMPION OF THE WORLD

BY BILL BRAUCHER

NEA Service Sports Writer

NEW YORK—The new world champion has appeared. He is Max Baer, the brawny butcher boy from Livermore, Calif., and he begins where Jack Dempsey left off.

The outcome of the Sharkey-Carnera fight June 26 now begins to lose its significance. After the tenth round of the battle of the two Maxes here, and after Max Baer's splendid exhibition of sheer punching power, the heavyweight championship battle this month somehow lost its glamour.

The fight itself brought back memories of Dempsey-Baer came out fighting, and by the force of Baer's assault, won the first two rounds from Schmeling.

After that he began to slow up. It appeared in the third and fourth rounds that the superior defense of Schmeling would win the fight. Schmeling slid from under punches and backed up from swinging uppercuts. Baer hit the German repeatedly on the arms and elbows.

Baer was up against a fine defensive fighter. As round followed round this became more and more apparent. Schmeling was making Baer miss. But the westerner was right. Several times he held Schmeling over against throwing long stabs. He cuffed time after time with left and right. Several times he held Schmeling's head with his left and brought down cruel rabbit punches on the back of Schmeling's neck.

Schmeling did not seem to mind. Once he laughed at Baer's inability to hit him solidly. That was in the fourth round, the first round that Schmeling won, and on the strength of his showing in that round, supporters of the German took hope that he would come on to win.

Baer kept tenaciously pumping away with both hands. He was not during the first eight rounds, Schmeling ducked the full force of the blows—and kept coming in. A right hand in the tenth did the business. Schmeling was against the ropes, and doing his best to avoid Baer's furious attack. He ducked a left, and a right hand caught him flush on the chin. For the first time he wavered.

Schmeling backed up. He covered as best he could against the swift fusillade of lefts and rights. Another right caught him and he went down. Down he began his drop and he had reached six before Schmeling knew what it was all about. Max started to get up, thought better of it, and waited for nine.

He managed as well as he stayed down, for Baer rushed in from post to post, raining stiff, short punches to his body and head. Schmeling was on his feet, trying vainly to cover up from the gloves that were pounding upon him.

As his hand was raised in victory—with Schmeling slumped helplessly on the ropes—Baer was recog-

Everybody is Talking Pontiac

"BALANCED VALUE"

EVERYBODY is talking Pontiac this year. Why? We should like to tell you what we believe are some of the reasons.

Different people like it for different qualities. The artist, for example, stresses its appearance. The business man is impressed by its durability and economy. Others especially like its roomy comfort and its safety. A boy or a girl is thrilled by nothing so much as its performance.

Yet none of these people would be satisfied with a car that had only the one feature they talk about.

Even the man who talks most about his car's pick-up and speed, also wants durability, comfort, safety, appearance and economy.

That's Balanced Value—and that is why everybody is talking Pontiac this year.

Ask any Pontiac owner. Any Pontiac dealer will gladly give you a demonstration. Drive it yourself. Try it out in any way you can think of.

"I like it because its weight and strength make me feel safe and it is so comfortable and easy-riding."

"I like my new Pontiac because I use it in business every day, and I need a car that's got durability enough to 'take it.'"

"I'm strong for Pontiac because it's so economical on a trip—and our new Pontiac is so comfortable, thanks to Fisher No Draft Ventilation."

Commandments for New Homemakers

SALT LAKE CITY, (UP)—Ten "commandments" of marriage were given to delegates attending the Homemakers' Conference in Salt Lake City by Mrs. E. T. Erickson.

Though men were not in attendance, the "commandments" also were proposed to govern their matrimonial duties.

Some of the laws follow:
Do not disparage your husband. Do not spend too much time with your mother. Husbands should not scold their wives. Live as far from relatives on both sides as possible. Husbands must make love to their wives; constantly be her sweetheart. Do not smoke in the living room. Welcome each other's friends into the home.
