AIDS research to be done in space

■ Fuel leak doesn't stop shuttle countdown — 4A

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Astronauts on the first post-Challenger shuttle flight may grow crystals of a protein taken from the AIDS virus in an experiment that researchers hope will lead to drugs to fight the fatal disease.

The protein, reverse transcriptase, is an enzyme the AIDS virus uses to replicate its genetic material in order to reproduce and spread through the body, said Dr. Charles Bugg, a University of Alabama-Birmingham researcher.

"AIDS would never infect human cells without using this enzyme," said Bugg, coordinator for NASA of protein experiments that are to be conducted aboard Discovery. The shuttle is scheduled to fly later this year.

Researchers want to grow the crystals of reverse transcriptase to decipher its structure. Crystals grown in space are not distorted by gravity while they form.

Scientists hope to learn how the AIDS virus takes over the genetic machinery inside a cell and use that knowledge to develop a drug to conquer AIDS.

Dr. Tom Krenitsky at Burroughs Wellcome in Research Triangle Park, N.C., developed the experiment. NASA is making sure it meets safety guidelines.

"We want to make sure there is no danger of infection to the crew with just this protein," Bugg said.

Jim Ball, a NASA spokesman in Washington, said the review would take several weeks.

Krenitsky predicted that if the shuttle is launched in September and the experiment works well, researchers could have a model of the protein's structure by the end of the year. But he cautioned it could take 10 years to make a new AIDS drug.

"It's still very much an experimental program, but one that we feel is full of promise," he said.

NASA officials so far have found no evidence to suggest the experiment could infect any of the astronauts with AIDS. Krenitsky said Thursday that even if the protein somehow got into an astronaut's bloodstream it would not infect him.

"First of all, you only have one of 20 to 30 proteins the virus needs to be a viable organism," Krenitsky said. "It's such a small piece, it's not workable."

Discovery is in the middle of a simulated countdown leading up to a crucial test-firing of its main engines to test modifications. The countdown was interrupted Friday because of problems with ground fueling equipment, and the firing was postponed from Monday until Thursday.

Bank officials think state recovering

■ NCNB plans to emphasize smaller markets— 2A

DALLAS (AP) — Officials with the new NCNB Texas National Bank say they're convinced Texas has turned the corner on its recession and is on the road to economic recovery.

"We are excited that we can build unencumbered by the burdens of the past," said Francis "Buddy" Kemp, president of Charlotte, N.C.-based NCNB and chairman of NCNB Texas National Bank.

First RepublicBank Corp., Texas' largest bank holding company, was declared insolvent Friday by the U.S. comptroller of the currency, and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., which loaned First Republic $1 billion in March, called its note.

When the flagship bank could not repay the obligation, authorities took over the bank and its subsidiaries across the state and the FDIC, contributing up to $4 billion, awarded them to NCNB.

As a condition of the sale, NCNB agreed to use its corporate name as part of its new identity, company officials said.

The North Carolina company, with $28.6 billion in assets, will contribute $210 million to $240 million in new capital, which it said it expects to raise in a private placement.

Dallas billionaire Ross Perot guaranteed NCNB's contribution, although he said Saturday he doesn't believe he will be called upon to invest.

NCNB officials said Saturday they plan to rebuild the company by serving small- and middle-sized businesses, using an Internal Revenue Service provision for tax loss write-offs and Perot's backing.

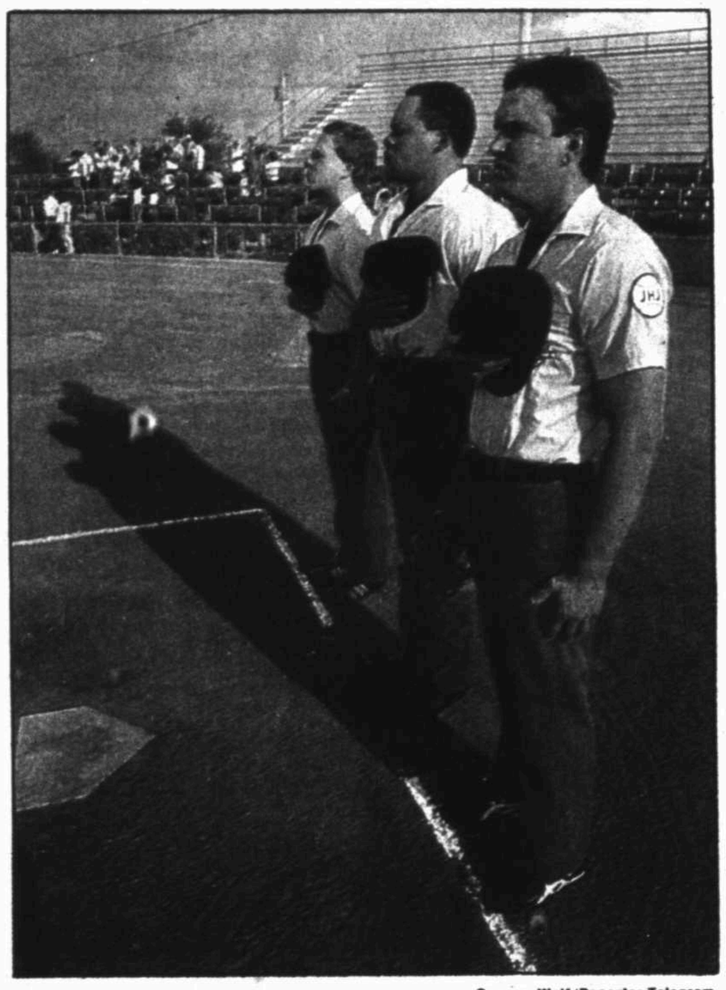

"The Texas marketplace holds good long-term potential," said Hugh McColl, NCNB chairman. "With the exception of real estate, corporate and middle markets are alive and well in Texas."

McColl said he first began considering a bid for First RepublicBank during the first week of April. "Our bid is essentially the bid we made early in the process," he said.

The North Carolina company, with assets of $28.6 billion, will pay $210 million to $240 million in new capital, which it expects to raise in a private placement.

Under terms of the transaction, the FDIC will initially hold a 20 percent stake in NCNB Texas National. Over the next five years, NCNB firm will have the option to buy 100 percent interest.

At least 31 people die in pier collapse

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia (AP) — Thousands of holiday travelers rushing to board a ferry caused a pier to collapse, leaving at least 31 people dead and injuring nearly 1,000, officials and news reports said today.

Survivors said the upper level of a two-tiered pier in Butterworth, 180 miles northwest of Kuala Lumpur, fell without warning Sunday afternoon.

The upper section full of waiting passengers crashed onto people in cars and motorcycles on the lower level waiting to board the ferry.

Victims were pinned beneath steel and timber while firefighters and port workers tried to free them and search for others.

Emergency officials said all of those killed were believed to be Malaysian.

About 300 people were on the pier and 3,000 were lined up behind them when the rush to the ferry began, port commission Chairman Syed Mohhamad Aidid told the national news agency Bernama.

He said the 40-foot section that collapsed normally holds about 200 people.

The travelers were waiting to make the three-mile trip to Penang island for the Kwan Yin (Goddess of Mercy) Chinese religious celebration, held once every 60 years.

"Everything happened so fast, I could only scream for help," Gee Swee Cain, 41, a supervisor of the passenger ferry at the pier, told Bernama.

As soon as the crowd rushed forward, the pier's wooden upper level gave way, sending hundreds of people plummeting to the lower level, said Mrs. Gee, who suffered chest and face injuries and a broken leg. Her husband and 5-year-old child were uninjured.

"I screamed for help and heard someone from above telling me to be patient because at that time nothing could be done to help me," Mrs. Gee told Bernama.

Cheong Ah Chey, 21, who saw the pier collapse, was quoted by the news agency as saying, "The crowd at the waiting area was moving toward the gate to get into the ferry, which had just berthed, when suddenly the platform below them gave way."

Three cars entering the ferry were crushed and a port commission office was destroyed, officials said.

The death toll from the collapse was considered likely to rise, as many of the injured were hospitalized in critical condition, Bernama quoted police and other officials as saying.

Hospitals and clinics in the area initially reported 969 people injured, with 502 admitted and 467 treated and released, Bernama said. Officials today said 417 people remained hospitalized.

Prime Minister Mahathir Mohamad visited the injured at a government hospital. He told reporters the government would give $800 immediately to the family of each victim and that he would consider further compensation.

The port commission halted ferry service between Butterworth and Penang pending an inquiry. Traffic jammed Penang Bridge, the only vehicle link to the island from the mainland after the closure of the ferry terminal.

Despite the accident, Penang was crowded with thousands of people watching the festive parades in the streets.

The pier was built in 1956 and repaired from time to time, Bernama reported. The platform that collapsed was last renovated in 1986, when its planks and bolts were replaced.

The structure was built with pillars only at the sides of the structure and not in the center, where the section failed.

Jordan stops providing services for West Bank

AMMAN, Jordan (AP) — In relinquishing any claim to the West Bank, King Hussein has also decided to abandon responsibility for all government services in the Israeli-occupied territory, a senior government official said today.

"It is a complete divorce of this kingdom from the West Bank," the official said, commenting on Hussein's address Sunday.

In a televised speech also seen in Israel and the occupied lands, the king challenged the PLO to try to make a Palestinian state of the territory his family ruled until it was seized by Israel 21 years ago.

It was the latest in a flurry of moves by Hussein that appeared to rule out the possibility of Jordan representing Palestinians in any peace talks.

The move also acknowledged that the 8-month-old uprising in Israel's occupied lands has largely looked for leadership to the PLO, reducing Jordanian influence in the West Bank.

Hussein said that since there "is a general conviction that the struggle to liberate the occupied Palestinian land could be enhanced by dismantling the legal and administrative links between the two banks, we have to fulfill our duty and do what is required of us."

The government official, who spoke on conditon of anonymity, said, "That means we will not be responsible for any services in the West Bank...That land is Palestine and this is a separate country."

He explained that Jordan "is no longer responsible for municipalities, health, social, educational, religious or cultural sectors in the West Bank."

Water restored to Big Spring homes

From Staff Reports

BIG SPRING — Homeowners in the Kentwood subdivision of Big Spring were receiving water this morning after city officials repaired a broken water main that flooded streets, impeding traffic all day Sunday.

Tom Decelle, director of public works for the city of Big Spring, said the water main, which broke about 4:15 p.m. Sunday, forced hundreds of residents to go without water until midnight Sunday.

Five houses along Phillips Road and several businesses along Birdwell Lane in the southeast quadrant of the city still were receiving temporary water supplies this morning, Decelle said.

The public works director said city workers detected the broken main after receiving reports of "inordinate losses in the reservoirs feeding that pressure plain."

The 18-inch transmission main — a concrete cylinder pipe with 95 pounds of pressure was buried about 15 feet under the Birdwell Lane Bridge. The main, which hadn't been repaired in years, burst under pressure, leaving an 18-inch by 9-inch hole, Decelle said.

Mother waiting for sign of life from son struck by lightning

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Marly West has been spending her nights at Brooke Army Medical Center, hoping her son will pull out of the coma he has been in since being struck by lightning during a sandlot baseball game.

"I get so desperate sometimes," she said. "I hold his hand and I see him lying there and helpless. I feel like a part of me is dead."

Hugo Enrique "Ricky" Arauz, 12, was one of 10 youngsters struck by lightning five days ago as they played baseball in a northeast San Antonio neighborhood. He remains comatose and in critical condition.

"The doctors aren't saying anything," his mother said last weekend. "They say they just have to wait and see how he responds."

The lightning struck Arauz in the neck and the charge exited through his legs, disintegrating his sneakers and burning his legs.

One other youth was hospitalized overnight after complaining of temporary blindness and minor burns. The eight others who were hit by lightning on Wednesday suffered minor electrical shock, but were treated either at the scene or at a hospital and were allowed to go home.

"The worst part of everything is we just moved here two weeks ago and my son was so happy he was making friends," she said.

Mrs. West moved to San Antonio with her son and two daughters from Andrews Air Force Base in Maryland to be near her sister while her husband, Staff Sgt. Bennie West, completed a 1-year tour of duty in Korea, she said.

Her husband, who was training in Mississippi at the time of the accident, may forego the transfer because doctors have told the boy's mother and stepfather his recuperation may be lengthy.

"When my husband went to Mississippi, he (Arauz) said he was going to take care of me and he was going to be the man of the house," Mrs. West said. "He was always happy," she said. "He was a good boy."

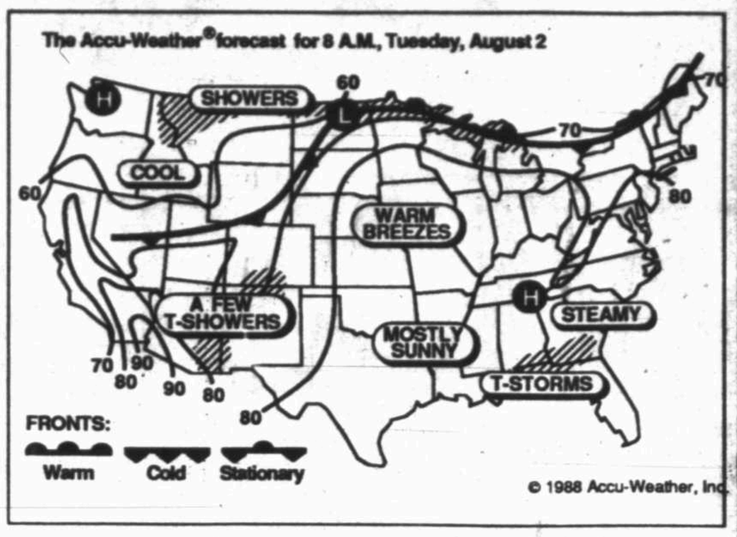

Mrs. West was to have started a new job at Randolph Air Force Base Thursday and had just returned home from the base Wednesday when her son came in from playing, she said.

Her son asked if he could go back out until dinner was ready, she said.

Arauz filled a large container with ice and water to take back to the baseball field for his new friends, and that was the last time she saw her son conscious, Mrs. West said.

"It's a miracle that my son is still alive today and I have to be thankful for that," she said.

Partly cloudy skies with a less than 20 percent chance of rain is in the forecast for tonight, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. The low is expected to dip into the upper 60s and winds will be southerly 10-15 mph.

The forecast for Tuesday is much the same with partly cloudy skies and a less than 20 percent chance of thundershowers. The high will be near 90 and winds will be out of the south at 10-15 mph.

Sunday's high of 88 was 17 degrees cooler than the record high of 105 set for that date in 1944. The overnight low of 65 was nine degrees warmer than the record low of 56 set for this date in 1936.

STATE

Scattered showers and thunderstorms dumped rain over the middle Rio Grande plains, sections of the Edwards Plateau, the eastern Trans-Pecos and the Hill Country today.

A few thunderstorms were over the southern coastal waters.

Clouds covered the over the western part of the Rio Grande plain and extended west to the Edwards Plateau. Fair to partly cloudy skies were common elsewhere.

NATION

August got off to a blistering start in many central and eastern states with unusually high temperatures early today, following a record-setting day of triple-digit heat in six Midwestern states.

A high pressure system was centered over southeast Missouri on Sunday night, keeping much of the warmer air across the central and eastern parts of the nation and bringing comparatively cooler temperatures to the Pacific Northwest and northern Plateau regions.

Showers and thunderstorms were developing early this morning across central and southern parts of North Dakota. Other showers and thunderstorms were moving across eastern parts of upper Michigan, as well as the Carolina coast and into northern parts of Florida.

In North Carolina, rain flooded low-lying roadways at Nags Head and Collington. More than 2 inches of rain drenched New Hanover, N.C., early this morning.

Thunderstorms abated late Sunday night and early this morning over the central and southern parts of the Rockies. But heavy rain was reported Sunday afternoon at Prescott, Ariz., where 2¼ inches of rain fell.

On Sunday, record-setting heat was recorded in Iowa, Wyoming, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Illinois and South Dakota.

In Illinois, several cities sizzled as temperatures climbed past the 100 degree mark on Sunday. It was 103 degrees in Quincy, and 102 degrees in Peoria, which tied the record for the day set in 1890.

Minnesota also sweltered. Temperatures reached 105 degrees in the Minneapolis-St. Paul area on Sunday, the hottest reading in 52 years. Record highs also were reported in St. Cloud and Rochester, both with 102 degrees. Redwood Falls topped the list with its reading of 107 degrees.

NCNB to emphasize smaller markets in reorganization

DALLAS (AP) — The new operators of Texas' largest bank holding company plan to emphasize smaller markets in their reorganization of First RepublicBank Corp.

"The Texas marketplace holds good long-term potential," said Hugh McColl, chairman of the Charlotte, N.C.-based NCNB, which on Friday began operating First RepublicBank as NCNB Texas National Bank. "With the exception of real estate, corporate and middle markets are alive and well in Texas."

NCNB officials said Saturday they plan to rebuild the company by serving small- and middle-sized businesses, by using an Internal Revenue Service provision for tax loss write-offs and with some help from businessman H. Ross Perot.

First RepublicBank Corp. was declared insolvent Friday by the U.S. comptroller of the currency, and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., which loaned First Republic $1 billion in March, called in its note.

When the flagship bank could not repay the obligation, authorities took over the bank and its subsidiaries across the state and the FDIC, contributing up to $4 billion, awarded them to NCNB.

As a condition of the sale, NCNB agreed to use its corporate name as part of its new identity, company officials said.

The North Carolina company, with $28.6 billion in assets, will contribute $210 million to $240 million in new capital.

Perot guaranteed NCNB's contribution, although he said Saturday he doesn't believe he will be called upon to invest.

The transaction states the FDIC will initially hold a 20 percent stake in NCNB Texas National. Over the next five years, NCNB firm will have the option to buy 100 percent interest.

As it gradually increases its position in NCNB Texas National, the corporation plans to sell public stock, said Timothy P. Hartman, NCNB chief financial officer.

Caffeine hidden in many common foods

An expert on the relationship between caffeine and anxiety says, "Most people don't realize how much caffeine they consume."

Dr. John Greden, psychiatry department chairman at the University of Michigan Medical Center, says caffeine is found in coffee, tea, chocolate, most soft drinks, baked goods, frozen dairy products, gelatins, puddings and over-the-counter drugs.

JORDAN

But he told The Associated Press "we will continue to pay pensions to civil servants and teachers who have been appointed by the Jordanian government and served our kingdom during the past 35 years."

The late King Abdullah, Hussein's grandfather, united both sides of the River Jordan and merged all institutions and services with the West Bank when he annexed the area after the 1948 Arab-Israel war.

Jordan administered the West Bank until Israel seized it in the 1967 Middle East War and set up a military government that shared services with local authorities.

Jordan has since been paying teachers, lawyers and other employees who work in Arab institutions in the territory.

On Saturday, Hussein dissolved the lower house of Parliament, half of whose members represented the West Bank. On Thursday, he canceled a $1.3 billion development project for Israel's occupied lands.

"Jordan is not Palestine," the king said Sunday in his 17-minute address. "The independent Palestinian state will be established on occupied Palestinian land after its liberation, God willing."

It was the first time Hussein, who has previously backed the idea of an independent Palestinian state, told Palestinians in the West Bank to take affairs into their own hands.

The move could make the PLO Israel's only potential negotiating partner in talks to resolve the issue, dashing hopes for Secretary of State George P. Shultz's peace initiative.

Under the Shultz plan, Jordan would have been partially responsible for representing the Palestinians in proposed Middle East peace talks. Israel refuses to talk to the PLO, calling it a terrorist organization.

Shultz, speaking Sunday on CBS-TV's "Face the Nation," denied Hussein's moves would pressure the United States and Israel to find a way to talk to the PLO.

"We will stay right where we are. We're ready to talk to them (PLO) when they take certain steps, which are very clear, and as far as I can see, not too onerous," he said.

Hussein said Sunday that Jordan's links to the West Bank "hamper the Palestinian struggle to gain international support for the Palestinian cause, as the national cause of a people struggling against foreign occupation."

The uprising in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, which has claimed the lives of 235 Arabs and four Israelis, has given greater international prominence to the Palestinian cause and increased calls for an independent state.

Climber says north face of Eiger has 'kind of charisma'

By BRENDA WATSON

GRINDELWALD, Switzerland (AP) — Gazing up at the sheer limestone north face of the Eiger, mountaineer Heinrich Harrer reminisced about the climb 50 years ago that changed his life.

In July 1938, he and three other climbers became the first to scale the daunting 5,940-foot wall in the heart of the Swiss Alps that is considered Europe's greatest challenge to mountaineers.

"We were never afraid. We never had any idea of returning or giving up" despite difficulties during the four-day adventure, the 76-year-old Harrer told The Associated Press in a recent interview.

Nine people had already died on the wall before Harrer and Fritz Kasparek, both Austrians, and Andreas Heckmair and Ludwig Voerg, both Germans, set out before dawn one morning to conquer the last virgin face of the Alps.

Because of the danger, authorities had outlawed attempts to climb the north face. But the four defied the ban.

"We climbed the wall secretly," said Harrer, sitting in an Alpine meadow with a dramatic view of the north face. "When we came down after four days, we were surprised to find out that the whole world knew about it."

It turned out that observers had spotted them.

Harrer recently returned to Grindelwald, a village at the base of the Eiger, for a weekend celebration with hundreds of other mountaineers and fans on the anniversary of the climb. Another guest of honor was 82-year-old Heckmair. Kasparek and Voerg are both dead.

The Eiger north face, which juts up almost vertically above Grindelwald, lived up to its reputation that celebration weekend. An English climber trying to scale it fell and sustained serious head injuries, but was rescued alive by helicopter.

Just Saturday, a 26-year-old South Korean was killed in a 3,300-foot fall as he tried to scale the Eiger's north face, the Swiss Air Rescue Service said.

The recent helicopter rescue recalled the most dramatic rescue from the Eiger, the first time a climber was rescued alive.

In 1957, before helicopters were used, Italian Claudio Corti was saved at an icy patch three-quarters of the way up the wall. But his countryman Stefano Longhi froze to death and his body hung from his rope, out of reach of rescuers, for two years.

It was only when winches were put in place in 1959 that the corpse could be retrieved.

Harrer said that after 50 years, public interest in the Eiger and the historic first climb has actually increased.

"This wall has developed a certain kind of charisma, a mythical attraction," he says.

Since the 1938 climb, about 700 mountaineers have successfully ascended the wall using various routes to get to the peak 13,101 feet above sea level.

Harrer said the fact that so many have climbed the north face does not diminish the challenge.

"Fifty people have died on that wall, which proves that the wall hasn't become easier," he said.

But he added, "it has become easier provided you are an expert, provided you are equipped properly, provided you have prepared this climb and chosen the proper time to do it."

In a book he wrote about his ascent, Harrer tells how he and his partners waited for days, watching the weather around the Eiger, before picking the best moment to begin their climb.

The climbers nourished themselves mostly with hot tea and cocoa. Harrer said his only solid food during the climb was a slice of bread and butter that his mother had given him 14 days earlier, as he left home after taking his university exams.

"I didn't tell her where I was going, just that I was going climbing," he said.

The most tense moments of the 1938 climb came on the third day, when the mountaineers clung to the nearly vertical face to withstand avalanches, hailstorms and snowstorms.

"This is part of the Eiger north wall," Harrer said.

He said he was not afraid. "Once you start action, you are on the wall, you never think of any danger."

Yet he said that before reaching the wall, one always has "some thoughts that you could return now, it is not too late."

"But it's very simple. If you don't overcome fear, you will never be prepared to do something exceptional."

As it gradually increases its position in NCNB Texas National, the corporation plans to sell public stock, said Timothy P. Hartman, NCNB chief financial officer.

"Success doesn't depend on quick recovery in Texas," Hartman said. But he said it was unlikely NCNB would walk away from the deal after five years, as is possible under the contract.

In a presentation for stock analysts scheduled for today, NCNB officials envision former First RepublicBank could contribute 38.5 percent of corporate earnings in 1994 — the first year of 100 percent NCNB ownership. That compares with 2.9 percent earnings expected in 1989.

Gorilla getting good grades in 'school'

DALLAS (AP) — It's an age-old remedy for a 5-year-old with behavior problems: Pack him up and ship him off to boarding school. Maybe he'll monkey around less — or more.

That's what the Dallas Zoo did in 1987 with Kanda, the lowland gorilla, who was having trouble after his mother died while giving birth to him.

Kanda was shipped off to the Cheyenne Mountain Zoo in Colorado Springs, Colo, to learn more gorilla-like behavior because he had been hand-raised.

"He integrated into that group especially well," said Karen Murray, marketing and development director for the Colorado zoo. "He used to walk up on his legs. Now he is not doing it as frequently."

But Kanda won't soon be coming home on holiday. Colorado officials expect to keep him until he reaches maturity at age 10.

WATER

Water engulfed a car, which drove over the broken pipe, forcing its occupants to flee to safety.

"The car was totally under water," Decelle observed. "But the occupants did get out in time."

Birdwell Lane remained closed until midnight, forcing motorists to use two other means of ingress and egress to the area, the public works director said.

First Republic banks have become NCNB Texas National Bank, a newly restructured bank managed by NCNB Corporation.

If you aren't familiar with NCNB Corporation, that's understandable. We're new to Texas (and proud to be here, we might add).

However, we're not new to the South. NCNB is the largest banking company in the South, serving more than two million customers from 700 branches.

And, with NCNB Texas National, we now manage over $50 billion in assets, which ranks us among the top ten banking companies in the U.S.

What we're bringing to Texas is an outstanding reputation for lending money and doing business.

And you'll be happy to know most things will be staying the same at the new bank. Your new bank will be operated by Texans-for Texans. Not only that, you'll be doing business with the same people you've been doing business with all along, who are now backed by one of the largest banks in the country.

We have a lot of confidence in Texas. And you can have a lot of confidence in us. In other words, let the eyes of Texas be upon us.

Congress likely to OK reparations bill for Japanese-Americans

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress is poised this week to give final approval to legislation providing more than $1 billion to Japanese-Americans who were forced from their homes and sent to internment camps during World War II.

The House is expected to approve the bill Wednesday, sending it to the White House, where President Reagan is likely to sign it into law.

If all goes according to that schedule, Japanese-Americans who qualify should start getting individual $20,000 tax-free payments in about a year. The most elderly will be given priority for the first payments.

Enactment of the reparations bill will help end the nearly half-century-old controversy over how the United States treated its Japanese-American population after Japan attacked Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, on Dec. 7, 1941.

About 120,000 U.S. citizens and resident aliens of Japanese descent were singled out — unlike Americans of German or Italian descent — and sent to internment camps for the duration of the war.

In addition to losing their freedom, some of the internees lost jobs and possessions and were forced to sell homes at below-market prices. In the years immediately after the war, some were reimbursed for direct losses, such as impounded property. But efforts to provide an across-the-board payment were delayed for decades.

In 1980, Congress authorized a federal Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians to study the issue. In December 1982 it released the results of its investigation, including a recommendation that each camp survivor be given a $20,000 tax-free payment, providing they agree to drop all related claims against the government.

Earlier this year, the House and Senate accepted the recommendations and passed separate but slightly different bills providing for the money. The differences were reconciled, and the Senate last week approved the compromise version without dissent. The House should do the same this week.

Once approved by the House, the reparations package will go to the president for his signature. B. Jay Cooper, deputy White House press secretary, said following Senate approval that, "They have improved the bill a lot. A lot of our concerns have been taken care of."

One of those concerns was over how many years the government would take to make the payments. The Senate approved a five-year payout; the White House objected, claiming it would cost too much, too soon. As part of the compromise, the government now can take up to 10 years to make the payments, starting in about a year.

The House-Senate proposal also authorizes payments of up to $12,000 for surviving members of the Aleut Indian tribes who were removed from the Aleutian Islands during the Japanese attack on those islands in 1942.

"It is most gratifying to me personally to see this long battle for personal justice come to an end at last," said Sen. Spark M. Matsunaga, D-Hawaii, sponsor of the Senate bill.

The internment camps arose from a 1942 order by President Franklin D. Roosevelt that said the War Department could designate military areas from which people could be excluded.

Later military orders resulted in the exclusion of all people of Japanese ancestry from California, Washington and Oregon, and some in Hawaii. The orders affected 77,000 U.S. citizens and 43,000 legal and illegal resident aliens. All were taken to prison camps in the Western states.

The last camp was closed in January 1946.

In all, about 120,000 people of Japanese ancestry were detained in the camps, including 77,000 American citizens.

Dukakis begins effort to win over blacks

FLINT, Mich. (AP) — Michael Dukakis begins an expanded effort this week to win over the black voters he largely ignored in the primaries and who have yet to respond in any big way to an endorsement by Jesse Jackson.

The Democratic presidential nominee travels to Detroit tonight to address an Urban League convention and, according to an aide, his campaign this week will begin distributing literature highlighting his gubernatorial record on issues such as affirmative action and judicial appointments.

"Michael Dukakis is not a known quantity to black Americans but this should help change that," said Donna Brazile, the Dukakis campaign's deputy national field director.

Dukakis also plans to invest in black media advertising and will schedule campaign events in inner city neighborhoods and other predominantly black areas, Brazile said. He rarely ventured into black communities during the primaries and still draws relatively few blacks to campaign events.

Brazile and other top Dukakis advisers conceded in interviews during last week's seven-state campaign trip that Jackson's endorsement of Dukakis at the Democratic National Convention in Atlanta has yet to translate into visible support for Dukakis among blacks.

One assessment of Dukakis' problem came from Sam Riddle, field director for Jackson's winning effort in the Michigan caucuses.

"All you got in Atlanta was that Jesse got a little prime time, a credit card and an airplane," he said. "Black America is still not sure what's in it for them and until that gap is bridged I don't think you'll see them being too enthusiastic about Dukakis."

Dukakis and his staff are trying to erase such sentiments.

In Newark, Cleveland, Milwaukee, Louisville, Ky., Raleigh, N.C., and here in Flint last week, he met with Jackson backers, all of whom, according to Dukakis aides, pledged their support.

Shortly after Riddle spoke to reporters during a Dukakis rally in Flint, he was approached by Boston attorney Fletcher Wiley, a senior Dukakis adviser who is among the campaign's ranking black officials.

"Sure we've got a problem right now," Wiley said later. "But we're meeting with the Jackson leaders this trip to start the process of taking care of it.

"We'll get to his people, at the grass-roots level, but you can't go to the people without first coming together with the leadership."

Leaders who met with Dukakis last week gave positive reviews. Others already have begun helping the nominee.

Dukakis was greeted at the Louisville airport by Georgia Davis Powers, a longtime state senator who was a Jackson backer.

Ernest James, a Jackson supporter in the primary who was at the airport to help with the greeting, said the area's black community "is ready to go for Dukakis. The Jackson people have been spreading the word, and I think blacks will go with Dukakis."

Complicating Dukakis' outreach efforts, aides concede, is Jackson's still unclear role in the fall campaign and uneasiness among senior Dukakis advisers over the outspoken Jackson.

Dukakis moved quickly to distance himself from Jackson's effort to get involved in talks to free American hostages believed to be held captive by pro-Iranian groups in Lebanon but was careful not to criticize Jackson himself.

"He's an American citizen," Dukakis said. "We agree on a lot of things and we don't agree on some things."

Paul Brountas, the Dukakis campaign chairman and its chief liaison with Jackson, said he expected Jackson to campaign with Dukakis soon but said no schedule has been made.

He promised greater black involvement in Dukakis campaign events once the Jackson backers who met with Dukakis spread the word in their communities.

"They're going to be in the crowds and they're going to working their tails off," Brountas said. "We'll be going into black communities and Jesse will be going with us."

Bush: Dukakis' fish remark stinks

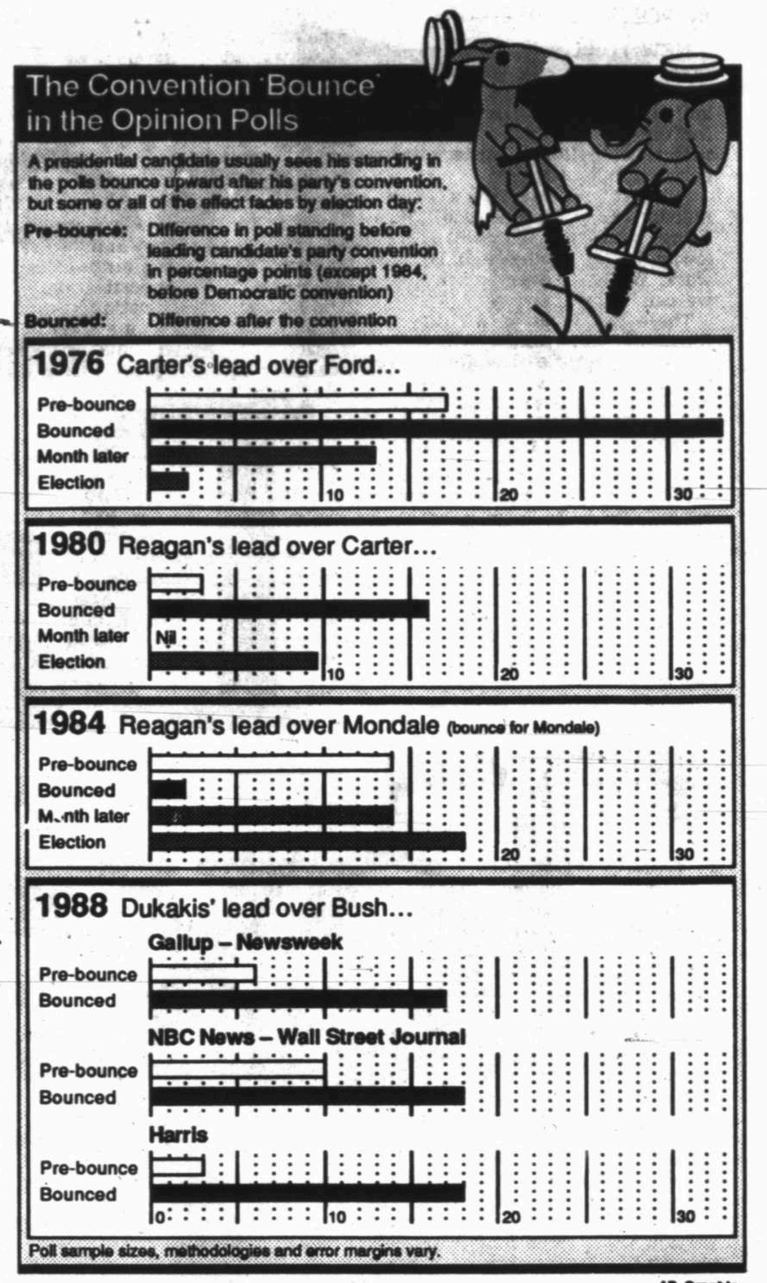

WASHINGTON (AP) — Vice President George Bush says Michael Dukakis' use of an old Greek saying about rotten fish to condemn the Reagan administration's record on ethics was "very tasteless and offensive."

"I'll tell you, what bothered me a little bit about what he said yesterday was that very offensive and very tasteless attack on the president where he made a comparison to a dead fish," Bush said. "And I think the American people will reject that kind of campaign tactic."

"You don't make tasteless, offensive analogies to the president of the United States, that's what I think," Bush told Cable News Network on Sunday.

Dukakis, appearing in Louisville, Ky., Saturday, used the saying when asked whether President Reagan or the vice president should be blamed personally for the alleged misdeeds of Pentagon contractors, consultants and administrators.

"There's an old Greek saying, and I suspect the Italians have the same one: 'You know, the fish rots from the head first.' It starts from the top," said Dukakis.

Candidates play to media with visits to child-care centers

SECAUCUS, N.J. (AP) — With a few minutes to spare in a long campaign day, Michael Dukakis stopped by the Harmony Early Learning Center to shake a few hands with preschoolers.

Looking to campaign on a tight preconvention budget, George Bush a day later rode out to Tysons Corner, Va., in the Washington suburbs to do the same thing, tossing a foam ball and pushing youngsters on a tire swing.

For both it was time well spent. Dukakis was rewarded with prominent photographs in newspapers and the television networks; and Bush reaped similar coverage.

The twin events on the presidential campaign trail last week underscored what already has become apparent to both campaigns: Child care is a hot issue in the 1988 race for the White House.

It's politics dictated by demographics. The Census Bureau says more than half of new mothers go back to work before their children are a year old.

Neither party wants to find itself outmaneuvered on the issue. Dukakis, the Democratic nominee, and Bush, who will become the Republican nominee in less than three weeks, have introduced competing proposals on day care.

The proposals reflect their differing philosophies on government involvement, yet, importantly, both candidates support in principle some form of government initiatives to assist parents in providing care for their young children.

"We can ignore the fact that most women with small children now hold jobs, or we can work to make quality, affordable child care available to every family that needs it," Dukakis said.

"You have to have choice, parental choice, family choice, and you have to have diversity," Bush said.

The vice president's plan is basically a $1,000-per-child tax break for low-income parents of children 4 and under.

It would cost an estimated $2.2 billion a year, and in its first stages would benefit only families earning less than $12,000 a year, according to Bush domestic affairs adviser Deborah Steelman. Eventually families earning up to $20,000 would benefit.

Bush's plan generally would exclude the middle-class families that pay $100 a week or so to put a child in the centers the two presidential candidates visited last week in New Jersey and Virginia.

Dukakis' plan, according to his aides, largely is embodied in legislation now before Congress that is similar to day care assistance being provided in his own state of Massachusetts. It is aimed at helping low- and moderate-income families afford child care, and would reserve 75 percent of its money for that aid.

Fuel leak fails to stop shuttle countdown

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The space shuttle launch team completed a practice countdown today despite a fuel leak that raised the possibility of another postponement of a critical test firing of Discovery's engines.

The leak halted fueling of the shuttle's hydrogen tank after it had been loaded with 254,000 gallons, 67 percent of capacity.

After assessing the situation, launch director Bob Sieck ordered the countdown to proceed to obtain data on other aspects of the count. The liquid oxygen tank received a full load of 143,000 gallons and other procedures were rehearsed.

The countdown was stopped as planned at 11 seconds before a mock liftoff by a simulated problem, and the launch team began practicing steps it would take to recover from a postponement — making the shuttle safe, draining the propellants and turning the vehicle around for another countdown and launch attempt.

A second countdown is to end with the test firing of Discovery's three main engines, with the shuttle bolted to the pad. The firing had been scheduled for Thursday, but NASA officials said it might have to be delayed another day or so because of the leak.

A decision on when to schedule the firing probably would not be made before Tuesday, Sieck said

He said the launch team had done "an excellent job" in completing the countdown despite the difficulty. "We must now evaluate the results and schedule the work that needs to be done before the firing," he added.

The firing already had been postponed four times in 10 days.

A three-day delay was announced Friday because of a hydrogen leak and a balky oxygen pump.

The newest leak was in the same launch pad service mast as the earlier one, but officials would not know if it was in the same line until technicians traced it. They will not have access to the pad until after the launch team completes draining the hydrogen and oxygen Tuesday.

NASA said that despite Sunday's leak, it was satisfied that most requirements of the first part of the countdown had been met. Objectives missed were to be picked up during a second fueling and countdown for the test firing.

Cops waste no time tracking down debris

By ROBERT DVORCHAK

NEW YORK (AP) — Lt. Tony Rossano, one of 13 city sanitation cops, sifts through syringes, blood vials and other disgusting debris, hunting for the culprit who's dumping the infectious medical waste tainting beaches in five states.

"It's like the detective work on a murder case," Rossano said. "We're doing interviews, surveillance, followup, just good old-fashioned police work. We trace every marked item we can."

These gumshoes of garbage look for names, dates and places so they can zero in on the offending source. But most of the seaborne slop, carried by the whims of tides, currents and winds, either has no markings or waterlogged labels are unreadable.

More than 1,000 items of medical waste, most of it syringes used to inject insulin or illegal drugs, have been bagged in an evidence trailer. Under particular scrutiny are people who were caught dumping before.

"There's reason to believe we can identify the bad actors who are illegally dumping," said Brendan Sexton, head of the city's Sanitation Department.

"It looks like repeated dumping by a smaller user," said Marlene Gold, who heads the Sanitation Department's enforcement team of five lawyers, 13 environmental sleuths and 10 extra officers.

"I don't think we're looking at large hospitals. There's no indication of wholesale dumping," she said. "It's just very hard to reconstruct what must have happened. It's very hard to trace this material. We're looking for people who have no regard for the way they handle waste."

State and federal authorities are also part of the investigation.

This summer's floating filth first came ashore July 6 on a Long Island beach. Also contaminated are beaches in New Jersey, Connecticut, Rhode Island and Massachusetts.

The refuse is mostly unmarked needles and vials, several of which tested positive for AIDS antibodies and hepatitis B virus.

Other items included stained bandages, catheter bags, colostomy bags, respirator parts, prescription bottles, plastic tubing for intravenous drugs, rubber gloves and nine dead rats.

Infectious medical wastes, treated like industrial trash, are supposed to be placed in red bags to alert handlers of the contents. No red bags have washed ashore.

State investigators believe the rubbish may have come from several sources: illegal dumpers, runoff from city storm sewers, wind-swept garbage barges or sloppy handling of trash at city landfills.

"The evidence does not point to a single incident or a single event as a 'smoking gun,'" said R.W. Groneman, spokesman for the state Department of Environmental Conservation, which has 10 environmental police on the case.

"It's a big ocean," Groneman said. "The midnight dumpers, the people who might deliberately dump this stuff, don't necessarily leave calling cards or identifying marks."

New York generates 1.8 million pounds of red bag waste each week, 45 percent of which comes from New York City. Most of it is incinerated on the spot or taken out of state for disposal.

Groneman said the items scoured from hundreds of miles of beaches would fill six shopping bags. "We're not talking about wave upon wave of red bag waste," he said.

Groneman says that needles flushed down toilets by diabetics and junkies may have been carried out to sea during a heavy rain that overloaded the city's sewers.

Other officials say beach debris may be inevitable.

"From this whole episode, we now understand that needles on the beach are part of the ecology of New York," said Dr. Stephen Joseph, the New York City Health Commissioner.

A prescription bottle was traced to an upstate New York man, and hopeful authorities thought they could find who handled his trash. But the man said he lost his pills on a fishing trip at sea.

"You get very excited when you see something with markings on it. You figure you can trace it and get to the bottom of this thing. But there are a lot of false leads," said Gold.

In New Jersey, James Lyko heads a team of 13 lawyers and 25 investigators who drive along back roads trailing garbage trucks, videotaping work at garbage transfer stations and combing through litter.

"We are going to nail people for deliberate dumping," said Lyko, head of the state's task force on environmental protection.

Ocean experts say the trash may have washed out to sea from any number of inlets, then sloshed back to a different shore.

"The tides along the Eastern Seaboard carry things in and out. Once it goes out, it mixes. You don't know which inlet it came from," said Coast Guard. Lt. Cmdr. Lawrence Brooks.

Mutilated rape victim marries

MODESTO, Calif. (AP) — The woman whose forearms were chopped off after she was raped 10 years ago by Lawrence Singleton and left for dead has gotten married.

Mary Vincent, 25, and landscaper Matthew Brockman, 23, were wed Saturday in the presence of 75 guests, including her 2-year-old son, Luke, the Modesto Bee reported.

The location of the wedding wasn't disclosed. It has been reported previously that after speaking out publicly about the rape, Miss Vincent sought privacy in the Pacific Northwest.

Singleton, 60, was convicted of raping Miss Vincent and hacking off her arms with an ax after picking up the 15-year-old hitchhiker in September 1978. She was found abandoned and left for dead in a rural area.

He repeatedly proclaimed his innocence and was released from prison in 1987. Singleton spent his parole in a trailer on the grounds of San Quentin State Prison after his planned parole to a town about 20 miles northeast of San Francisco was met with protests. He was freed in April.

Forest fires part of natural cycle, ecologist says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Forest fires, even the big ones that hit Yellowstone National Park last week, are an essential part of nature's cycle of death and renewal. Humans unwittingly rearranged a lot of nature's handiwork before realizing that.

"We almost lost the loblolly pine" in the Southeast in the 1920s and 1930s because of the insistence of the Forest Service in suppressing all fires, says Gene Wood, a wildlife ecologists at Auburn University.

Such a no-fire policy lets hardwood species get established, and once established the hardwoods can out-compete the pine, Wood said.

Traditionally, lightning or Indians, who set fires for hunting or farming, would always start enough fires to keep hardwoods down, he said.

When Wisconsin was settled around 1830, two-thirds of the state was prairie, one-third forest. Humans fought prairie fires. Now the state is two-thirds forest, with special organizations trying to save the prairie chicken — and setting fires to keep the prairie vigorous.

Though specifics differ according to soils, weather and species — fire has been far more important in forest evolution in the arid West than elsewhere — natural fires caused by lightning are usually small. Without harming trees very much they prevent litter from leaves, dead limbs, twigs and other organic matter from building up.

Fire "recycles the nutrients and you get a diversity of wildlife species," said Jim Gillette, deputy regional director of the Fish and Wildlife Service in Boston.

His agency probably sets 400 fires a year, ranging from 100 acres to 2,000, acres on its 443 refuges and other installations.

In some ecosystems, rigid suppression of natural fires means enormous amounts of fuel can accumulate on the forest floor. When the inevitable lightning does strike, the fire can be impossible to suppress and more destructive than anything that would have happened naturally.

In some areas like the Great Lakes, damp soils kept fires from getting started on the forest floor. When a fire would start in a dry cycle, maybe once a century, it would spread to the crowns and sweep all before it. "You have selection for species that can recover," said Wood. "It takes a long, long time."

A fire in California sequoia tree crowns in 1955, where the floor normally would burn every decade or so, prompted a re-examination of the "fight every fire" policy by the National Park Service.

By 1968 the service was igniting the undercover in the Sequoia National Park, trying to return the forest to its natural state. In 1972 it adopted what has been called a "let burn" policy.

"We were almost killing the trees with kindness," before that, said Chief Ranger Walt Dabney.

The new policy had been long germinating from research dating to the 1930s, said Wood, some of whose research helped spread the gospel. "A lot of the old foresters and game wardens could have tarred and feathered me," he said.

Strictly speaking, "let burn" is a misnomer. Dabney said the policy always contemplated case-by-case decisions. Fires that threaten structures are always fought. Fires that might be left alone would be fought if they could spread outside the park, into commercial timbering, for example.

The use of fire by humans is exactly analogous to the use of human hunters to replace a predator and maintain nature's balance, Gillette said.

Last week's fires in Yellowstone National Park, which involved about 5 percent of the park's acreage, were of a severity seen only once every 200 years to 400 years or so. Instead of fighting only blazes threatening park installations; firefighters turned to attacking almost every outbreak before waiting to see what it might threaten — it might be too late to put down the fire when its course became clear, and it takes far fewer fighters to do that early.

A big fire does more than clear the floor; it opens the forest. Sunlight reaches the ground. Creatures like owls appear, living in forest but doing their hunting in the open area.

Some tree species need fire to burst cones and scatter seeds. Seeds germinate into fledgling trees. In Yellowstone, elk have nothing to eat in the mature forest, but will graze on the growth in the open area.

Train fire still burning

ALTOONA, Iowa (AP) — Nearly 2,000 people were kept out of their homes a second night as alcohol-fueled flames from a head-on train collision that killed two crewmen kept the sky aglow early today.

Firefighters waited for the volatile cargo to burn off before moving on the blaze and resuming their search for clues to the crash involving two freight trains.

About 100 to 200 people who live near this suburban Des Moines town had decided to end their voluntary evacuation by early today, said Polk County Sheriff's Sgt. Brian Holtz. Others waited at schools and churches or with friends and relatives.

Police and fire officials were preparing firefighting equipment and heavy construction gear needed to begin clearing the tracks sometime today of the 86 derailed cars.

Leak sends 120 to hospitals

SAUGET, Ill. (AP) — The second leak of a noxious chemical in 3½ months from a Monsanto Chemical Co. plant sent more than 120 people to hospitals, and at least nine were admitted though none had serious injuries, officials said.

Less than three gallons of phosphorous trichloride, a component of the herbicide Lasso, escaped into the air when a "rupture disk," designed to break when pressure built up in the tank, gave way Sunday morning, said Diane Bartolanzo, a Monsanto spokeswoman.

The leak was plugged within five minutes, and no evacuation was ordered, she said.

Jackson, Koch to meet

CHICAGO (AP) — Jesse Jackson and New York Mayor Edward I. Koch said today they are willing to meet and try to heal or at least set aside the differences that have simmered since Koch's strong criticism of Jackson before the New York primary.

Jackson, who lost the April primary and later the Democratic presidential nomination to Michael Dukakis, said Koch called him at his Chicago home early today "and said he would like to meet."

Congress likely to OK reparations bill for Japanese-Americans

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress is poised this week to give final approval to legislation providing more than $1 billion to Japanese-Americans who were forced from their homes and sent to internment camps during World War II.

The House is expected to approve the bill Wednesday, sending it to the White House, where President Reagan is likely to sign it into law.

If all goes according to that schedule, Japanese-Americans who qualify should start getting individual $20,000 tax-free payments in about a year. The most elderly will be given priority for the first payments.

Enactment of the reparations bill will help end the nearly half-century-old controversy over how the United States treated its Japanese-American population after Japan attacked Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, on Dec. 7, 1941.

About 120,000 U.S. citizens and resident aliens of Japanese descent were singled out — unlike Americans of German or Italian descent — and sent to internment camps for the duration of the war.

In addition to losing their freedom, some of the internees lost jobs and possessions and were forced to sell homes at below-market prices. In the years immediately after the war, some were reimbursed for direct losses, such as impounded property. But efforts to provide an across-the-board payment were delayed for decades.

In 1980, Congress authorized a federal Commission on Wartime Relocation and Internment of Civilians to study the issue. In December 1982 it released the results of its investigation, including a recommendation that each camp survivor be given a $20,000 tax-free payment, providing they agree to drop all related claims against the government.

Earlier this year, the House and Senate accepted the recommendations and passed separate but slightly different bills providing for the money. The differences were reconciled, and the Senate last week approved the compromise version without dissent. The House should do the same this week.

Once approved by the House, the reparations package will go to the president for his signature. B. Jay Cooper, deputy White House press secretary, said following Senate approval that, "They have improved the bill a lot. A lot of our concerns have been taken care of."

One of those concerns was over how many years the government would take to make the payments. The Senate approved a five-year payout; the White House objected, claiming it would cost too much, too soon. As part of the compromise, the government now can take up to 10 years to make the payments, starting in about a year.

The House-Senate proposal also authorizes payments of up to $12,000 for surviving members of the Aleut Indian tribes who were removed from the Aleutian Islands during the Japanese attack on those islands in 1942.

"It is most gratifying to me personally to see this long battle for personal justice come to an end at last," said Sen. Spark M. Matsunaga, D-Hawaii, sponsor of the Senate bill.

The internment camps arose from a 1942 order by President Franklin D. Roosevelt that said the War Department could designate military areas from which people could be excluded.

Later military orders resulted in the exclusion of all people of Japanese ancestry from California, Washington and Oregon, and some in Hawaii. The orders affected 77,000 U.S. citizens and 43,000 legal and illegal resident aliens. All were taken to prison camps in the Western states.

The last camp was closed in January 1946.

In all, about 120,000 people of Japanese ancestry were detained in the camps, including 77,000 American citizens.

Dukakis begins effort to win over blacks

FLINT, Mich. (AP) — Michael Dukakis begins an expanded effort this week to win over the black voters he largely ignored in the primaries and who have yet to respond in any big way to an endorsement by Jesse Jackson.

The Democratic presidential nominee travels to Detroit tonight to address an Urban League convention and, according to an aide, his campaign this week will begin distributing literature highlighting his gubernatorial record on issues such as affirmative action and judicial appointments.

"Michael Dukakis is not a known quantity to black Americans but this should help change that," said Donna Brazile, the Dukakis campaign's deputy national field director.

Dukakis also plans to invest in black media advertising and will schedule campaign events in inner city neighborhoods and other predominantly black areas, Brazile said. He rarely ventured into black communities during the primaries and still draws relatively few blacks to campaign events.

Brazile and other top Dukakis advisers conceded in interviews during last week's seven-state campaign trip that Jackson's endorsement of Dukakis at the Democratic National Convention in Atlanta has yet to translate into visible support for Dukakis among blacks.

One assessment of Dukakis' problem came from Sam Riddle, field director for Jackson's winning effort in the Michigan caucuses.

"All you got in Atlanta was that Jesse got a little prime time, a credit card and an airplane," he said. "Black America is still not sure what's in it for them and until that gap is bridged I don't think you'll see them being too enthusiastic about Dukakis."

Dukakis and his staff are trying to erase such sentiments.

In Newark, Cleveland, Milwaukee, Louisville, Ky., Raleigh, N.C., and here in Flint last week, he met with Jackson backers, all of whom, according to Dukakis aides, pledged their support.

Shortly after Riddle spoke to reporters during a Dukakis rally in Flint, he was approached by Boston attorney Fletcher Wiley, a senior Dukakis adviser who is among the campaign's ranking black officials.

"Sure we've got a problem right now," Wiley said later. "But we're meeting with the Jackson leaders this trip to start the process of taking care of it.

"We'll get to his people, at the grass-roots level, but you can't go to the people without first coming together with the leadership."

Leaders who met with Dukakis last week gave positive reviews. Others already have begun helping the nominee.

Dukakis was greeted at the Louisville airport by Georgia Davis Powers, a longtime state senator who was a Jackson backer.

Ernest James, a Jackson supporter in the primary who was at the airport to help with the greeting, said the area's black community "is ready to go for Dukakis. The Jackson people have been spreading the word, and I think blacks will go with Dukakis."

Complicating Dukakis' outreach efforts, aides concede, is Jackson's still unclear role in the fall campaign and uneasiness among senior Dukakis advisers over the outspoken Jackson.

Dukakis moved quickly to distance himself from Jackson's effort to get involved in talks to free American hostages believed to be held captive by pro-Iranian groups in Lebanon but was careful not to criticize Jackson himself.

"He's an American citizen," Dukakis said. "We agree on a lot of things and we don't agree on some things."

Paul Brountas, the Dukakis campaign chairman and its chief liaison with Jackson, said he expected Jackson to campaign with Dukakis soon but said no schedule has been made.

He promised greater black involvement in Dukakis campaign events once the Jackson backers who met with Dukakis spread the word in their communities.

"They're going to be in the crowds and they're going to working their tails off," Brountas said. "We'll be going into black communities and Jesse will be going with us."

Bush: Dukakis' fish remark stinks

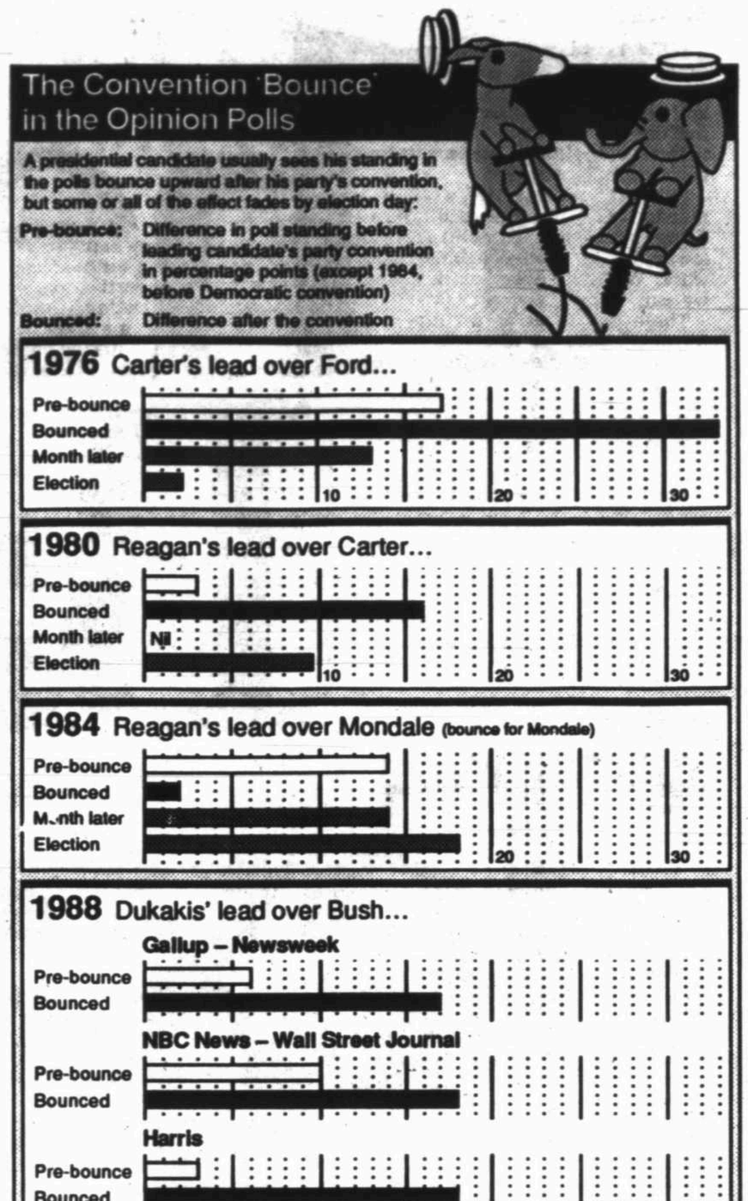

WASHINGTON (AP) — Vice President George Bush says Michael Dukakis' use of an old Greek saying about rotten fish to condemn the Reagan administration's record on ethics was "very tasteless and offensive."

"I'll tell you, what bothered me a little bit about what he said yesterday was that very offensive and very tasteless attack on the president where he made a comparison to a dead fish," Bush said. "And I think the American people will reject that kind of campaign tactic."

"You don't make tasteless, offensive analogies to the president of the United States, that's what I think," Bush told Cable News Network on Sunday.

Dukakis, appearing in Louisville, Ky., Saturday, used the saying when asked whether President Reagan or the vice president should be blamed personally for the alleged misdeeds of Pentagon contractors, consultants and administrators.

"There's an old Greek saying, and I suspect the Italians have the same one: 'You know, the fish rots from the head first.' It starts from the top," said Dukakis.

Candidates play to media with visits to child-care centers

SECAUCUS, N.J. (AP) — With a few minutes to spare in a long campaign day, Michael Dukakis stopped by the Harmony Early Learning Center to shake a few hands with preschoolers.

Looking to campaign on a tight preconvention budget, George Bush a day later rode out to Tysons Corner, Va., in the Washington suburbs to do the same thing, tossing a foam ball and pushing youngsters on a tire swing.

For both it was time well spent. Dukakis was rewarded with prominent photographs in newspapers and the television networks; and Bush reaped similar coverage.

The twin events on the presidential campaign trail last week underscored what already has become apparent to both campaigns: Child care is a hot issue in the 1988 race for the White House.

It's politics dictated by demographics. The Census Bureau says more than half of new mothers go back to work before their children are a year old.

Neither party wants to find itself outmaneuvered on the issue. Dukakis, the Democratic nominee, and Bush, who will become the Republican nominee in less than three weeks, have introduced competing proposals on day care.

The proposals reflect their differing philosophies on government involvement, yet, importantly, both candidates support in principle some form of government initiatives to assist parents in providing care for their young children.

"We can ignore the fact that most women with small children now hold jobs, or we can work to make quality, affordable child care available to every family that needs it," Dukakis said.

"You have to have choice, parental choice, family choice, and you have to have diversity," Bush said.

The vice president's plan is basically a $1,000-per-child tax break for low-income parents of children 4 and under.

It would cost an estimated $2.2 billion a year, and in its first stages would benefit only families earning less than $12,000 a year, according to Bush domestic affairs adviser Deborah Steelman. Eventually families earning up to $20,000 would benefit.

Bush's plan generally would exclude the middle-class families that pay $100 a week or so to put a child in the centers the two presidential candidates visited last week in New Jersey and Virginia.

Dukakis' plan, according to his aides, largely is embodied in legislation now before Congress that is similar to day care assistance being provided in his own state of Massachusetts. It is aimed at helping low- and moderate-income families afford child care, and would reserve 75 percent of its money for that aid.

Fuel leak fails to stop shuttle countdown

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The space shuttle launch team completed a practice countdown today despite a fuel leak that raised the possibility of another postponement of a critical test firing of Discovery's engines.

The leak halted fueling of the shuttle's hydrogen tank after it had been loaded with 254,000 gallons, 67 percent of capacity.

After assessing the situation, launch director Bob Sieck ordered the countdown to proceed to obtain data on other aspects of the count. The liquid oxygen tank received a full load of 143,000 gallons and other procedures were rehearsed.

The countdown was stopped as planned at 11 seconds before a mock liftoff by a simulated problem, and the launch team began practicing steps it would take to recover from a postponement — making the shuttle safe, draining the propellants and turning the vehicle around for another countdown and launch attempt.

A second countdown is to end with the test firing of Discovery's three main engines, with the shuttle bolted to the pad. The firing had been scheduled for Thursday, but NASA officials said it might have to be delayed another day or so because of the leak.

A decision on when to schedule the firing probably would not be made before Tuesday, Sieck said

He said the launch team had done "an excellent job" in completing the countdown despite the difficulty. "We must now evaluate the results and schedule the work that needs to be done before the firing," he added.

The firing already had been postponed four times in 10 days.

A three-day delay was announced Friday because of a hydrogen leak and a balky oxygen pump.

The newest leak was in the same launch pad service mast as the earlier one, but officials would not know if it was in the same line until technicians traced it. They will not have access to the pad until after the launch team completes draining the hydrogen and oxygen Tuesday.

NASA said that despite Sunday's leak, it was satisfied that most requirements of the first part of the countdown had been met. Objectives missed were to be picked up during a second fueling and countdown for the test firing.

Cops waste no time tracking down debris

By ROBERT DVORCHAK

NEW YORK (AP) — Lt. Tony Rossano, one of 13 city sanitation cops, sifts through syringes, blood vials and other disgusting debris, hunting for the culprit who's dumping the infectious medical waste tainting beaches in five states.

"It's like the detective work on a murder case," Rossano said. "We're doing interviews, surveillance, followup, just good old-fashioned police work. We trace every marked item we can."

These gumshoes of garbage look for names, dates and places so they can zero in on the offending source. But most of the seaborne slop, carried by the whims of tides, currents and winds, either has no markings or waterlogged labels are unreadable.

More than 1,000 items of medical waste, most of it syringes used to inject insulin or illegal drugs, have been bagged in an evidence trailer. Under particular scrutiny are people who were caught dumping before.

"There's reason to believe we can identify the bad actors who are illegally dumping," said Brendan Sexton, head of the city's Sanitation Department.

"It looks like repeated dumping by a smaller user," said Marlene Gold, who heads the Sanitation Department's enforcement team of five lawyers, 13 environmental sleuths and 10 extra officers.

"I don't think we're looking at large hospitals. There's no indication of wholesale dumping," she said. "It's just very hard to reconstruct what must have happened. It's very hard to trace this material. We're looking for people who have no regard for the way they handle waste."

State and federal authorities are also part of the investigation.

This summer's floating filth first came ashore July 6 on a Long Island beach. Also contaminated are beaches in New Jersey, Connecticut, Rhode Island and Massachusetts.

The refuse is mostly unmarked needles and vials, several of which tested positive for AIDS antibodies and hepatitis B virus.

Other items included stained bandages, catheter bags, colostomy bags, respirator parts, prescription bottles, plastic tubing for intravenous drugs, rubber gloves and nine dead rats.

Infectious medical wastes, treated like industrial trash, are supposed to be placed in red bags to alert handlers of the contents. No red bags have washed ashore.

State investigators believe the rubbish may have come from several sources: illegal dumpers, runoff from city storm sewers, wind-swept garbage barges or sloppy handling of trash at city landfills.

"The evidence does not point to a single incident or a single event as a 'smoking gun,'" said R.W. Groneman, spokesman for the state Department of Environmental Conservation, which has 10 environmental police on the case.

"It's a big ocean," Groneman said. "The midnight dumpers, the people who might deliberately dump this stuff, don't necessarily leave calling cards or identifying marks."

New York generates 1.8 million pounds of red bag waste each week, 45 percent of which comes from New York City. Most of it is incinerated on the spot or taken out of state for disposal.

Groneman said the items scoured from hundreds of miles of beaches would fill six shopping bags. "We're not talking about wave upon wave of red bag waste," he said.

Groneman says that needles flushed down toilets by diabetics and junkies may have been carried out to sea during a heavy rain that overloaded the city's sewers.

Other officials say beach debris may be inevitable.

"From this whole episode, we now understand that needles on the beach are part of the ecology of New York," said Dr. Stephen Joseph, the New York City Health Commissioner.

A prescription bottle was traced to an upstate New York man, and hopeful authorities thought they could find who handled his trash. But the man said he lost his pills on a fishing trip at sea.

"You get very excited when you see something with markings on it. You figure you can trace it and get to the bottom of this thing. But there are a lot of false leads," said Gold.

In New Jersey, James Lyko heads a team of 13 lawyers and 25 investigators who drive along back roads trailing garbage trucks, videotaping work at garbage transfer stations and combing through litter.

"We are going to nail people for deliberate dumping," said Lyko, head of the state's task force on environmental protection.

Ocean experts say the trash may have washed out to sea from any number of inlets, then sloshed back to a different shore.

"The tides along the Eastern Seaboard carry things in and out. Once it goes out, it mixes. You don't know which inlet it came from," said Coast Guard. Lt. Cmdr. Lawrence Brooks.

Mutilated rape victim marries

MODESTO, Calif. (AP) — The woman whose forearms were chopped off after she was raped 10 years ago by Lawrence Singleton and left for dead has gotten married.

Mary Vincent, 25, and landscaper Matthew Brockman, 23, were wed Saturday in the presence of 75 guests, including her 2-year-old son, Luke, the Modesto Bee reported.

The location of the wedding wasn't disclosed. It has been reported previously that after speaking out publicly about the rape, Miss Vincent sought privacy in the Pacific Northwest.

Singleton, 60, was convicted of raping Miss Vincent and hacking off her arms with an ax after picking up the 15-year-old hitchhiker in September 1978. She was found abandoned and left for dead in a rural area.

He repeatedly proclaimed his innocence and was released from prison in 1987. Singleton spent his parole in a trailer on the grounds of San Quentin State Prison after his planned parole to a town about 20 miles northeast of San Francisco was met with protests. He was freed in April.

Forest fires part of natural cycle, ecologist says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Forest fires, even the big ones that hit Yellowstone National Park last week, are an essential part of nature's cycle of death and renewal. Humans unwittingly rearranged a lot of nature's handiwork before realizing that.

"We almost lost the loblolly pine" in the Southeast in the 1920s and 1930s because of the insistence of the Forest Service in suppressing all fires, says Gene Wood, a wildlife ecologists at Auburn University.

Such a no-fire policy lets hardwood species get established, and once established the hardwoods can out-compete the pine, Wood said.

Traditionally, lightning or Indians, who set fires for hunting or farming, would always start enough fires to keep hardwoods down, he said.

When Wisconsin was settled around 1830, two-thirds of the state was prairie, one-third forest. Humans fought prairie fires. Now the state is two-thirds forest, with special organizations trying to save the prairie chicken — and setting fires to keep the prairie vigorous.

Though specifics differ according to soils, weather and species — fire has been far more important in forest evolution in the arid West than elsewhere — natural fires caused by lightning are usually small. Without harming trees very much they prevent litter from leaves, dead limbs, twigs and other organic matter from building up.

Fire "recycles the nutrients and you get a diversity of wildlife species," said Jim Gillette, deputy regional director of the Fish and Wildlife Service in Boston.

His agency probably sets 400 fires a year, ranging from 100 acres to 2,000, acres on its 443 refuges and other installations.

In some ecosystems, rigid suppression of natural fires means enormous amounts of fuel can accumulate on the forest floor. When the inevitable lightning does strike, the fire can be impossible to suppress and more destructive than anything that would have happened naturally.

In some areas like the Great Lakes, damp soils kept fires from getting started on the forest floor. When a fire would start in a dry cycle, maybe once a century, it would spread to the crowns and sweep all before it. "You have selection for species that can recover," said Wood. "It takes a long, long time."

A fire in California sequoia tree crowns in 1955, where the floor normally would burn every decade or so, prompted a re-examination of the "fight every fire" policy by the National Park Service.

By 1968 the service was igniting the undercover in the Sequoia National Park, trying to return the forest to its natural state. In 1972 it adopted what has been called a "let burn" policy.

"We were almost killing the trees with kindness," before that, said Chief Ranger Walt Dabney.

The new policy had been long germinating from research dating to the 1930s, said Wood, some of whose research helped spread the gospel. "A lot of the old foresters and game wardens could have tarred and feathered me," he said.

Strictly speaking, "let burn" is a misnomer. Dabney said the policy always contemplated case-by-case decisions. Fires that threaten structures are always fought. Fires that might be left alone would be fought if they could spread outside the park, into commercial timbering, for example.

The use of fire by humans is exactly analogous to the use of human hunters to replace a predator and maintain nature's balance, Gillette said.

Last week's fires in Yellowstone National Park, which involved about 5 percent of the park's acreage, were of a severity seen only once every 200 years to 400 years or so. Instead of fighting only blazes threatening park installations, firefighters turned to attacking almost every outbreak before waiting to see what it might threaten — it might be too late to put down the fire when its course became clear, and it takes far fewer fighters to do that early.

A big fire does more than clear the floor; it opens the forest. Sunlight reaches the ground. Creatures like owls appear, living in forest but doing their hunting in the open area.

Some tree species need fire to burst cones and scatter seeds. Seeds germinate into fledgling trees. In Yellowstone, elk have nothing to eat in the mature forest, but will graze on the growth in the open area.

Dukakis should tell his policy plans

As the nation moves ever closer to the election of a new president, one of the foremost concerns on the minds of voters should be the direction the next administration will take in regard to foreign policy. Not least in that realm is this nation's relationship with Nicaragua and its communist leaders.

It's no secret that foreign policy is one of Democratic presidential nominee Michael Dukakis's weakest suits. That's troubling because without a doubt, Nicaragua — no, all of Central and even South America — will continue to be a concern to the next administration.

While it's true that relations between the United States and the Soviet Union have been upbeat of late, largely because of Mikhail Gorbachev's professed perestroika, it's also true that Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega has shown on more than a few occasions that he has a direct line to the Kremlin and to Cuban dictator Fidel Castro. He uses it frequently and has been a good Marxism student. Only weeks ago, he cracked down on opposition leaders, closed the newspaper La Prensa and the Catholic radio station, and expelled eight diplomats from the United States.

The United States had stopped its military support of the rebel Contras earlier this year, and Ortega probably felt such a move was justified to further drain the rebels.

Now that Ortega has made it known how he really feels about working toward democratic government in Nicaragua, the need for intelligent decisions regarding foreign policy is obvious. With Central America firmly in their grasps and Mexico as a questionable buffer state, the Rio Grande would be the next stop for the Marxists. This nation must not leave itself at their mercy.

Yet, while the Massachusetts governor has talked at length — although vaguely — of his domestic plans for the nation should he be elected president, he has been strangely silent about how he would counter — or if he would — the communist threat and how he would handle the foreign policy issues that are among the most important decisions a president has to make.

When he accepted the Democratic nomination, the governor said only that "we can do a lot more to bring peace in Central America."

Fine. But what specifically would he propose? Surely it's not another one of those big secrets that can only be revealed after the November election.

Gov. Dukakis should give the American voters his plans, and let them decide whether he's the best individual to entrust with this country's future.

JACK ANDERSON

Jackson-Dukakis truce still uneasy

WASHINGTON — As the Democrats settle down to the sober business of winning back the White House, Michael Dukakis urgently needs the support of Jesse Jackson, whose campaign style worries him.

Jack Anderson

Sources privy to the Dukakis strategy tell us that the Democratic presidential nominee is privately wary of Jackson. Dukakis needs Jackson to rally Jackson followers behind a ticket they don't really like. But Dukakis fears Jackson will attract most of the media and steal the spotlight.

What worries the Democratic nominee is that the flamboyant Jackson might be a loose cannon whose firing can't be controlled and coordinated. His colorful phrase-making, which arouses his liberal constituency, may turn off the middle-of-the-road majority.

These disparate men, despite their show of unity in Atlanta, never quite got on the same wave length. Dukakis is reserved and relaxed, deliberate and calculating, a master of details, who is guided by the head. Jackson is impulsive and emotional, a gut politician concerned about goals, not details, who is guided by the heart.

In their private conversations, Dukakis listened carefully. But he was laconic and noncommittal. When he had something to say, he simply said it, going straight to the point. Jackson, accustomed to political foreplay before confronting an issue squarely, relied more on his instincts and impulses.

Witnesses say the two men were uneasy around each other, each waiting for the other to take the initiative. They spent the Fourth of July together without getting beyond the small talk. Jackson came away offended, because Dukakis had not exchanged views with him as a political equal.

Dukakis didn't even bring up the question foremost on Jackson's mind: Who would be the running mate? Afterward, Jackson complained to a friend, "I was there all day. I kept waiting for him to say something about a running mate, but he never said a word. Why didn't he just say to me, 'We are looking for someone to balance the ticket, and Lloyd Bentsen has the best credentials?'"

To make matters worse, Dukakis' alter ego and campaign chairman, Paul Brountas, promised Jackson that he would be the first to know who the vice presidential nominee would be. Instead, Jackson learned about it from the media, because Dukakis' staff failed to connect with him.

The outraged Jackson went to Atlanta breathing fire and brimstone. This led to a three-hour showdown that could have been avoided. Afterward, Jackson confessed that he had seen Dukakis' "toughness and tenacity close up."

According to sources, Jackson characterized the closed-door meeting accurately. The blunt Dukakis, in effect, drew a line. He warned Jackson that if he stepped across the line, he couldn't step back. The choice was up to him: He could attack and divide, perhaps even destroy, the Democratic Party. Or he could unite the party and take his rightful place as a party leader, Dukakis told him.

Jackson would have to make up his mind, Dukakis said, before the curtain lifted on the Democratic convention. Jackson's decision to cooperate paid off on the second night of the convention. At that historic moment, Jackson was transformed from a black leader to a national leader. He chose to stay within the party structure. He pledged his cooperation to Dukakis — Mr. Outside joined forces with the establishment and became Mr. Inside.

MINI-EDITORIAL — In Nicaragua, the contras shot themselves in the foot with the election of Enrique Bermudez to be their political director. Bermudez brings baggage that the contras have tried to dump throughout the nine years of their slow-motion revolution. He was a colonel in the National Guard of dictator Anastasio Somoza. No amount of protestation to the contrary will wipe the stain of Somoza from the contras as long as Bermudez is in charge. His election complicates the already tenuous relationship between the contras and Congress. The contras desperately need U.S. aid now, but this is an election year and the contras' biggest supporter in Washington is a lame duck president who risks dragging down his chosen successor in an open fight over contra aid.

Austin ignoring 'killer bee' threat

WASHINGTON — Some time next year, the first swarm of "killer bees" is expected to enter Texas from Mexico and concerns are mounting that not enough money is being directed at controlling the dangerous insects.

Roberson

The bees, a type that developed when African queen bees accidentally were released from a Brazilian laboratory in 1957 and crossed with native species, carry a toxin that can kill people. Most other bees do not carry such toxins and the few human fatalities from bee stings that occur in this country each year usually result from allergic reactions.

Dr. Orley Taylor, a professor of entomology at the University of Kansas and a widely recognized expert on killer bees, said that the insects pose serious problems and that he is afraid that someone will die in the Rio Grande Valley before state or federal officials decide to become involved.

Frustrated by what he called a "don't care" attitude in Austin and Washington, Taylor said the killer bees, which have been migrating slowly northward through Central America and Mexico, could seriously lower honey production in the 400,000 to 600,000 managed bee colonies in Texas.

At the same time, he said, the killer bees will interfere with the pollination of fruit crops and kill animals as well as people.

Taylor said Texas should be the front line of defense against the killer bees. He also charged that the U.S. Department of Agriculture has made no plans to deal with the expected invasion and that Texas control efforts are bogged down because of "a political problem."

Taylor said that seeds of the political problem in Texas were sown decades ago when the state legislature took responsibility for bee regulation away from the Texas Department of Agriculture and gave it to Texas A&M University. The university reportedly is experiencing financial difficulties and a low priority apparently has been placed on bee research.

Max Woodfin, a spokesman for the Texas Department of Agriculture, said Taylor's assertion is true. "It's a fear of being given the responsibility without enough money to carry out that responsibility," Woodfin explained.

Taylor also complained that he has received no response from Rep. E. "Kika" de la Garza, chairman of the House Agriculture Committee whose district includes much of the Lower Rio Grande Valley, to letters he has sent outlining the problems the bees will pose and recommending research into control methods.

Meanwhile, Taylor said that he and a number of colleagues are frantically searching for new ideas and technologies to learn more about bees — particularly the domesticated European honey bee — so they can better deal with the anticipated influx of Africanized bees.

"I'm spending a lot of my own money, and others are, too," he said, "We're applying every idea that comes along, like working with radar in Arizona and designing new tracking methods."

One tracking method that Taylor considers promising is being developed at Oak Ridge National Laboratory in Tennessee with a grant from Marietta Corp.

A tiny nine-cell solar panel provides energy for two laser-emitting diodes that can be mounted on the killer bees, permitting scientists to track their movements.

According to Taylor, the tracking system may help entomologists understand differences in mating habits between bees so the killer bee species can be controlled.

The Oak Ridge scientists hope the system may have other applications. What spy wouldn't love to have such a device?

Adolfo Calero, a leader of the counter-revolutionaries (contras) fighting the Sandinista government in Nicaragua, said Thursday that 150 Nicaraguans are crossing the border between Texas and Mexico each day.

Speaking at the National Press Club, Calero made his estimate in the course of answering a question about how long it takes to drive from the Nicaraguan capital city of Managua to Brownsville, Texas.

"Many people don't drive; they walk," he said. "But, for those who might drive, the answer is: four days."

The question was inspired by a statement President Reagan made several years ago. He warned that if the leftist Sandinistas aren't stopped, they soon will be coming across "our border at Brownsville."

More than 100,000 Nicaraguans now are in the United States, Calero said. He said half a million — out of a population of 3.5 million — have left the country since the Sandinistas assumed power in 1979.

Now, the REAL Dukakis-Jackson meeting

Now it can be told what really went on during that historic meeting between Mike Dukakis and Jesse Jackson at the Democratic National Convention:

"Jesse, my main man, so nice of you to come," said Dukakis as his rival for the Democratic nomination for president, the Rev. Jesse Jackson, walked into the room.

Grizzard

This was the meeting the entire Democratic Convention, yea, the entire nation had been awaiting. It was time for Dukakis to find out just what Jackson wanted after being snubbed for the No. 2 spot on the ticket.

"Coffee?" asked Dukakis.

"Yes," said Jackson, "with cream. Also, I'd like to have some sweet rolls."

"What kind would you like?" asked Gov. Dukakis.

"I want the kind with lots of fruit in them, and I want them to have icing on top. I want them to be fresh, and I want them now."

"Hey, big guy," said Dukakis. "We aim to please."

The coffee and the sweet rolls were brought in a few moments later by Sen. Lloyd Bentsen of Texas, Dukakis's running mate.

Jackson took a bite out of a sweet roll and then took a sip of his coffee. A frown came over the Reverend's face.

"There's no cream in this coffee!" he screamed at the startled Bentsen. "I said I wanted cream. You deaf?"

"A thousand pardons, Your Reverendness," said Bentsen.

"Forget it, Larry. Why don't you go back to Texas and rope a steer."

"It's 'Lloyd,' sir," corrected Bentsen.

At that point, Dukakis interrupted.

"As you know, Jesse," he began, "we have asked you here to see if we can unify the convention. We want to know exactly what you want to make you happy and to satisfy your many followers."

"I want Floyd's job," said Jackson.

"It's 'Lloyd,'" said Bentsen.

"We've been over that, Jesse," said Dukakis. "Boyd here is my running mate, and that's final."

"It's 'Lloyd,'" Bentsen said to Dukakis.

"You still here, Leroy?" said Jackson.

"So," Dukakis continued, "second to being on the ticket yourself, what are your desires?"

"I want to help out on the campaign."

"Fine. Campaign all you like."

"I want my own plane," said Jackson.

"You got it," said Dukakis.

"Yeah, I want my own plane and I want big leather seats with a VCR, and I want my name spelled out in big letters on each side."

"Anything else?" asked Dukakis.

"I want to be able to take my close advisers with me on the plane," said Jackson.

"How many close advisers do you have?" asked Dukakis.

"Four hundred and three," answered Jackson.

"Make a note to look around for a loose 747, Lamar," Dukakis said to Bentsen.

"It's 'Lloyd,' sir," said the vice presidential candidate.

"What else, Jess?" said Dukakis.

"I want a limo wherever I go. I want a suite in all the hotels in which I stay, and I'll need 25 new suits and 10 new pairs of shoes."

"That's a limo, a suite, and a clothing allowance," said Dukakis as he wrote out the list. "Get in touch with somebody at Thom McAn on the shoes, Cloyd," he said to Sen. Bentsen, who had dozed off.

"On top of that," Jackson began again, "I want my own room at the White House for when I come to visit and help make key decisions, not only on domestic issues, but on matters of foreign policy as well.

"I want a color TV in my room with remote control. I want a silk robe with my initials on the back. I want milk and Oreo cookies before going to bed every night and I want a pony."

"Done," said Dukakis.

The two men did celebratory high and low fives, and Dukakis turned to Sen. Bentsen and said, "Why don't you take the rest of the week off, Earl. Jess and I have it from here."

"Know something, Shorty," said Jackson to Dukakis as they walked out of the room together, "I think this is the beginning of a beautiful relationship."

Efforts to feature Rep. Hyde may stretch

WASHINGTON — Efforts by anti-abortion forces to feature Rep. Henry Hyde in an alternative speech to pro-choice New Jersey Gov. Thomas Kean's keynote address yielded only four minutes for the conservative Illinois congressman at the Republican National Convention.

While Bush campaign operatives first led Hyde to believe he would be given substantial time to counteract anti-abortion outrage over Kean, he quickly learned he would get only two minutes to second George Bush's nomination for president. When he declined the honor, a second offer came through: a four-minute speech to introduce Jeane Kirkpatrick on the same prime-time night that Kean delivers the keynote address.

But that may well be stretched. Hyde's fellow Chicagoan, Democratic Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, informed him he was given five minutes to nominate Lloyd Bentsen for vice president in Atlanta but stretched it out to eight minutes. "They weren't going to give me the hook," Rostenkowski growled to Hyde.

GLENN IN THE FOLD

On the day in 1987 that Sen. John Glenn decided he would not become a Democratic presidential candidate, a friend asked whom he planned to support and was stunned to hear him say he might vote for Vice President George Bush because the Democratic field included no one with a strong pro-defense policy.

Rowland Evans and Robert Novak

Glenn flatly denied to us that he had made such a statement. He said he enthusiastically backs Michael Dukakis and his running mate, Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, who is a Senate pal of Glenn's and takes a moderately hardline position on national security.

Glenn was the No. 1 prospect to be Dukakis' choice for the vice-presidential nomination until the very last moment. Like Jesse Jackson, Glenn never did learn from Dukakis that he was being passed over. He heard it first on his car radio and only later got a telephone call from the governor.

DEBATES GAMES

Although Vice President George Bush's campaign has agreed only to a general commitment to debate this fall, senior operatives for Gov. Michael Dukakis are pressing for a fourth confrontation in addition to the three proposed by the bipartisan debate commission.

Dukakis campaign chairman Paul Brountas and campaign manager Susan Estrich told us they would be delighted to go along with the League of Women Voters' proposed fourth debate — or even more. Estrich's efforts last week to begin debate negotiations were met with silence from Bush campaign manager Lee Atwater.

Since polls show Bush running as far as 17 percentage points behind Dukakis, the candidates' attitudes on debates reverses the underdog's usual desire for head-to-head contests. Three is considered the absolute outside number of debates by the Bush campaign. Furthermore, Bush operatives who dealt with the League of Women Voters in 1984 are rock hard against any debate sponsored by an organization they consider anti-Republican.

BUSH'S ARAB

Gov. John Sununu of New Hampshire has been suggested to Vice President Bush as a conservative Catholic vice-presidential nominee who would attract Reagan Democrats, but forces inside the Republican Party want to lower his profile because he offends Jewish voters.

Sununu, whose ethnic background is Lebanese, has refused to sponsor anti-PLO resolutions and supports Palestinian self-determination. Afraid of Jewish anger, Bush managers have been urged to diminish his role as a chief surrogate and a designated Dukakis-basher in the presidential campaign.

According to Bush campaign insiders, prominent Republicans issuing a warning about Sununu include a fellow Northeastern governor: Tom Kean of New Jersey. Sununu in turn has been critical of Kean's selection as keynoter because of his liberal position on abortion and other issues.

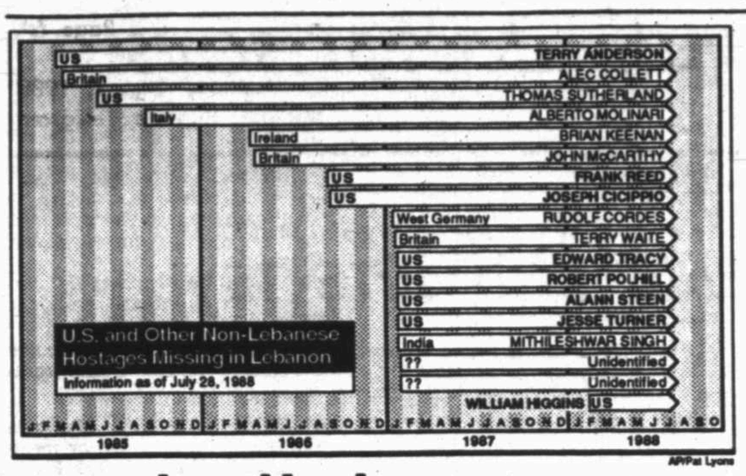

DANFORTH PLUGS BOND

Sen. John Danforth of Missouri, one of the names on George Bush's list of leading vice-presidential prospects, is pushing a distinctly dark-horse running mate for Bush in a campaign that has surprised many politicians, particularly Republicans: Sen. Christopher (Kit) Bond of Missouri.

Danforth, who is running for re-election to the Senate this year, argues that Bond was No. 1 in his University of Virginia law school class and served two terms as Missouri governor, giving him just the right experience mix for the job.

Danforth denies that he wants Bond on the ticket because it would help him in his re-election race.

Hezbollah rejects appeal for release of U.S. hostage

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Insisting Lt. Col. William Higgins used his United Nations post as a cover to spy for the United States, a pro-Iranian extremist group rejected a U.N. appeal for the American hostage's release.

Abbas Mousawi, a senior leader of the Shiite Moslem Hezbollah, or Party of God, said Sunday that the group considers the U.N. resolution "part of a plot against the Moslems and Mujahedeen (holy warriors) of this area."

"We consider the arrest of this agent by the sons of this nation as part of its defense of its dignity and existence," Mousawi said at a rally in the southeastern town of Mashgara.

Hezbollah is believed to be an umbrella group for Shiite factions holding most of the 18 foreign hostages, including nine Americans.

Mousawi's speech was the first Hezbollah reply to resolution passed unanimously Friday by the 15-nation Security Council condemning the U.S. Marine's abduction and pleading for his immediate release.

Higgins, 43, of Danville, Ky., was chief of a 76-member observer group attached to the U.N. Interim Force in Lebanon when he was abducted Feb. 17. The Vietnam veteran also served as an aide to former Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger.

Hezbollah has publicly defended the Organization of the Oppressed on Earth, which claimed responsibility for Higgins' abduction.

"Everyone knows that when Higgins was seized by the oppressed in south Lebanon he wasn't on a humanitarian mission, but, according to even the American press and President Reagan, he was engaged in a spying mission on Hezbollah in south Lebanon," said Mousawi.

There is no record of Reagan making such a statement.

"So it is within our right to say that the presence of Higgins under the Security Council umbrella in south Lebanon is part of a war waged by this arrogant body and America, the great Satan, against our oppressed people," Mousawi said.

His oration drew thunderous chants of "Death to the Great Satan!" and "No to the Security Council!" from thousands of fist-shaking Shiite Moslem zealots attending the rally.

> "We consider the arrest of this agent (U.S. Marine Lt. Col. William Higgins) by the sons of this nation as part of its defense of its dignity and existence."
>
> — Abbas Mousawi, Hezbollah leader

The Organization of the Oppressed on Earth has repeatedly charged that Higgins was a spy for the CIA, but U.S. and U.N. officials deny it.

Also Sunday, a Church of England bishop said he visited Lebanon last week to inquire into the fate of four missing Iranians in hopes his efforts might hasten the release of Western hostages, who include Anglican envoy Terry Waite.

Christian militiamen kidnapped the Iranians in July 1982 and there have been reports that they were killed.

After arriving in Britain on Sunday, the Rev. John Brown told reporters he hoped his mission to Lebanon had "made a contribution towards the overall picture, which I hope will lead toward the release of all the hostages."

Brown, Anglican bishop in Cyprus and the Persian Gulf region, went at the request of his church's head, Archbishop of Canterbury Robert Runcie.

He said he spoke in Lebanon to leaders of the Maronite Church and the Armenian church, who "promised to make inquiries.

"It's very important to us when we are talking to the Iranians...to show them that we are concerned about their missing people as well as ours," Brown told reporters.

Runcie aide John Lyttle said Brown was "well guarded" during his visit and did not venture out of the Christian part of Lebanon.

Waite disappeared Jan. 20, 1987, while seeking the release of American hostages in Lebanon. The longest-held hostage is Terry Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press, who was abducted March 16, 1985.

Carlucci to view Soviet weaponry

WORLD

MOSCOW (AP) — Defense Secretary Frank Carlucci began a visit today that will give him a close-up view of secret military hardware and bases, a privilege the Soviet chief of staff received in the United States last month.

"It's a unique experience for a U.S. defense secretary," Carlucci said.

"The American people through me can see what the Soviet military is doing and can learn about their attitudes and doctrine," he told reporters after reviewing Soviet troops at Sheremetyevo airport.

After the ceremony, the official talks began with military punctuality and a jovial atmosphere in an ornate conference room of the Defense Ministry.

Carlucci told his host, Defense Minister Dmitri T. Yazov, that they could discuss their problems in "direct terms" and dispense with the diplomatic language that sometimes encumbers other such talks.

"Yes, we are soldiers," Yazov agreed, with a decisive nod of the head. The first session between the superpower defense chiefs included Soviet Chief of Staff Marshal Sergei F. Akhromeyev, who last month completed a tour of U.S. defense installations that set the tone of openness being accorded to Carlucci.

The U.S. defense chief said he was "totally satisfied" with the access he will be given to military bases and equipment during his four-day visit.

At the beginning of July, Akhromeyev saw flight operations on the aircraft carrier USS Theodore Roosevelt, the inside of a B-1 bomber and toured a Minuteman missile training facility.

In return, U.S. officials let it be known that they wanted to see the Soviets' top-secret Blackjack bomber and visit Soviet ships at sea.

Yazov said he believed Carlucci's program would include a look at the Blackjack bomber "among other military hardware."

The Moscow meetings will be the third session between the defense chiefs of the superpowers. Carlucci and Yazov first met in Berne, Switzerland, in March, and they also held talks during the Moscow summit in late May.

Carlucci is accompanied by Assistant Secretary of Defense Ron Lehman and representatives of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the State Department.

Soviet media have focused much attention on Carlucci's visit, promising a closeup look at the Kremlin's military installations and declaring the exchange a good chance to ease tensions between the superpowers.

"In the Soviet Union they attach much importance to contacts between the military of the Soviet Union and the U.S., since those contacts aim at improving mutual understanding of military aspects of Soviet-American relations, at solving the most important problem of today — the prevention of a nuclear war and cessation of the arms race," the official Soviet news agency Tass said today.

After an opening day of talks with Yazov and an address to the Voroshilov military academy in Moscow, Carlucci is to go Tuesday to the Taman base outside the capital and to the Kubinka airfield — both in closed zones normally off-limits to foreigners.

On Wednesday, the delegation flies to the Crimean peninsula for the American side's first official look at the Black Sea fleet headquartered in Sevastopol.

Carlucci leaves the Soviet Union on Thursday for Turkey.

Swaggart prays for smokers' deliverance from nicotine

JERUSALEM (AP) — Defrocked preacher Jimmy Swaggart prayed for cigarette-smoking followers to be delivered from nicotine Sunday, at a service on the biblical Mount of Olives overlooking Jerusalem.

The television evangelist told about 200 Christians visiting from the United States and Canada that Jesus would return to the mountain where they were seated.

"I don't know if I'm coming back to this hotel, and I don't know if you'll be coming back, but I know Jesus is coming back," he said. The Louisiana-based preacher was speaking after a dinner at the Intercontinental Hotel restaurant on the mount.

After a sermon on Jerusalem's history, Swaggart called sinners and nicotine addicts to gather around him so he could pray for their salvation.

"People bound by nicotine — you must be delivered from nicotine," Swaggart said. "There are worse things than nicotine, but this is a place to get free."

Dozens of listeners raised their hands hesitantly, then stood up and approached the restaurant's makeshift pulpit.

"I command the bondage to be broken...I am asking that Satan's hold be broken," Swaggart said in a special prayer for smokers. "These people belong to God...You are trespassing."

The evangelist said he has never smoked a cigarette in his life.

About 350 American followers joined him on a weeklong tour to Israel's biblical sites. The group arrived last Thursday.

According to the Bible, the Mount of Olives is the site where Jesus started his triumphal entry into Jerusalem and was later arrested.

Swaggart stepped down from the pulpit last February after confessing to an unspecified sin. A prostitute, Debra Murphee of Indiana, later said he paid her to pose naked for him in a New Orleans-area motel.

Explosion rips through British army barracks

LONDON (AP) — An explosion and fire ripped through a two-story army barracks in north London early today, killing a soldier and seriously injuring two people, auhtorities said. The IRA claimed reponsibility.

In a message to the Northern Ireland bureau of the British news agency, Press Association, the outlawed Irish Republican Army said its guerrillas laid the bomb in the Inglis barracks in the wooded Mill Hill neighborhood.

Ten people, including soldiers and civilians, were hospitalized with injuries and the dead man was a soldier, said London Ambulance spokesman Chris Webb.

One soldier was rescued alive after being trapped for more than 30 minutes in the rubble, saved by a radiator thrown across him in the blast. It acted as a shield from the falling bricks and debris, said Col. William Butt, commander of the postal section of the barracks.

Butt said most of the injured had burns or neck and back injuries.

The blaze was under control two hours after the explosion, although pockets of flames remained at late morning, said London Fire Brigade spokesman Michael Whitty.

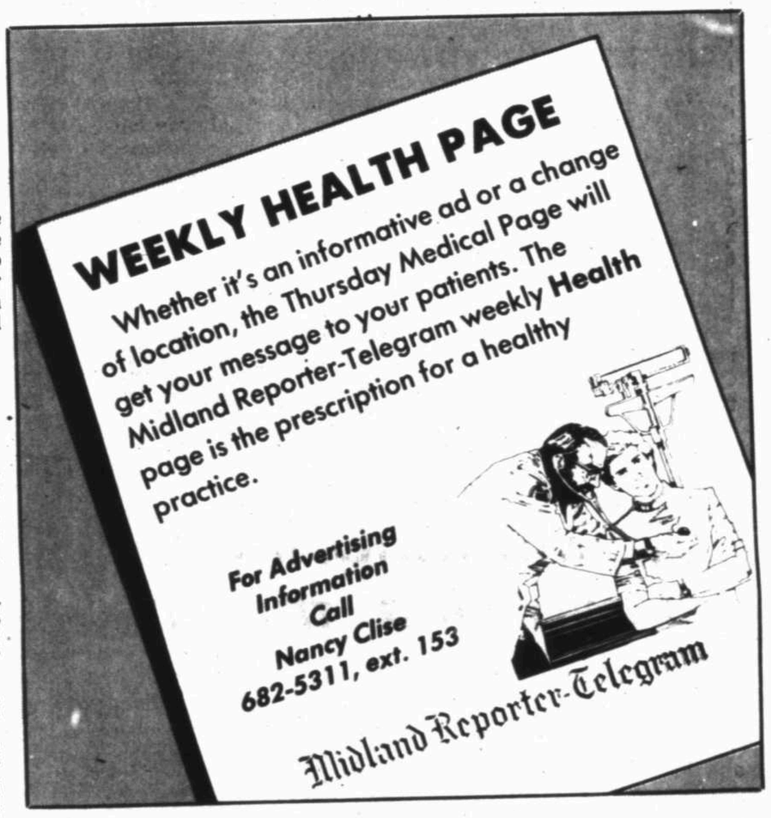

The Ministry of Defense said the barracks housed members of the Women's Royal Army Corps and also was used by the Postal and Courier Depot which is run by 250 staff from the corps, the Royal Engineers and the Royal Navy.

Scotland Yard Superintendent Anthony Robertson said 15 single men were housed in the barracks where the explosion occurred.

"There was an explosion at Inglis barracks in or near to the living quarters of army personnel," he said in a statement at the scene. "There is one fatality, two seriously injured and several other injuries."

The barracks border the Finchley parliamentary constituency of Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, a prime IRA target.

Mrs. Thatcher was "deeply distressed to hear of the explosion" when she arrived in Perth, Australia, on an official visit, her London office said. "She is anxiously waiting for news of the people concerned and she sends deep sympathy for all the relatives concerned."

Runaway well capped

VILLAHERMOSA, Mexico (AP) — Special repair crews finally managed to cap a runaway test well near here Sunday, the state petroleum monopoly Pemex said in a statement issued here.

The Puerto Ceiba 113 well, about 300 yards off the Tabasco state coast, blew up and caught fire on Thursday, but no one was injured. Drilling had reached 19,000 feet when the well went out of control.

Repair crews put out the fire late Friday, and Pemex said it was capped early Sunday. Pemex claimed there was very little spill and damage to the environment was minimal.

Mudslide destroys homes

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP) — Heavy weekend rains sent a river over its banks and triggered a mudslide that destroyed nearly 100 houses in a coastal resort and left two people dead and 12 missing, officials said.

The Chichiriviche river overflowed after a downpour Saturday night, causing a mudslide that covered several of the houses "up to their roofs," said civilian Defense Director Freddy Paris.

Paris said the houses belonged to people vacationing in the Caribbean resort 25 miles north of Caracas near La Guaira port.

1,639 Soviets emigrate

GENEVA (AP) — Jewish emigration from the Soviet Union reached a new eight-year-high in July with a total of 1,639 allowed to leave the country, the agency involved in their resettlement said today.

The total represented the seventh straight monthly rise in the number of arrivals at the Vienna, Austria, transit center, the Geneva-based Intergovermental Committee for Migration said. Only 930 people opted for new homes in Israel, well below the recent average, the committee said.

Last month's figure compared with 1,767 who left the Soviet Union in June 1980, and brought to 7,656 the number of Jews emigrating in the first seven months of the year, the committee said.

Appeals court to rule in double-jeopardy case

TYLER (AP) — An appeals court is set to hear arguments this week on claims of three white Sabine County lawmen that it would violate their constitutional right against double jeopardy to try them on murder charges for the jail death last Christmas of a black Louisiana truck driver.

Former Hemphill Police Chief Thomas Ladner, 41, and Sabine County deputies James "Bo" Hyden, 43, and Billy Ray Horton, 58, were acquitted July 15 in Hemphill of violating the civil rights of the inmate, Loyal Garner Jr., 34, of Florien, La.

Trying them for Garner's murder would be trying them twice for the same offense, they said.

Garner and two companions were arrested Christmas night. Garner died two days later at a Tyler hospital from injuries he suffered in the Sabine County Jail.

Ladner admitted to striking Garner on the head once with a stick but said he used only force necessary to subdue Garner after Garner struck him in the head and neck.

State District Judge Joe Tunnell of Tyler dismissed the defendants' claims last month that the murder trials amount to double jeopardy and ordered them to stand trial for murder in Garner's death. The trial is set for next Monday.

Although the three were tried together in Hemphill on the civil rights violation charges, they face separate murder trials, beginning with Ladner's.

Frank Henderson, an assistant district attorney for Smith County, said the trials could be consolidated at a later date. He said he doubts the trial will start on schedule.

Defense attorney John Seale of Jasper, who represents Ladner, said he is prepared to take the matter to the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals, if the 12th Court of Appeals in Tyler affirms Tunnell's ruling that prosecution under state civil rights statute does not preclude prosecution under any other criminal statute.

While attorneys are preparing for the legal battle in the courts, Sabine County residents are bracing themselves for a NAACP-sponsored rally Saturday in Hemphill.

Vollie Grace, president of the Sabine County chapter of the civil rights organization, said he is expecting 300 to 500 people at the rally, called to protest "the brand and type of justice we're getting in this area."

Grace said he is expecting no violence at Saturday's rally at the Macedonia Baptist Church, but has contacted officials with the U.S. Justice Department. They assured him they would have personnel in the area to monitor the situation, Grace said.

Regardless of what happens in the Tyler court, the lawmen's legal battles may not be over. John Hannah, who served as special prosecutor in the civil rights case, said he will seek federal indictments against the trio on conspiracy to violate civil rights.

Jordan recovering well, doctor says

AUSTIN (AP) — Former U.S. Rep. Barbara Jordan should remain hospitalized for about a week, but she is recovering from a near drowning in her backyard pool, doctors say.

"Right now, I think things look very good that she'll get totally back to normal," said Dr. James Little, a neurologist. "She's very close to normal right now. I think she will continue to improve. As best as I can tell right now, she probably will regain full mental functions."

Ms. Jordan's condition was upgraded Sunday afternoon from critical to serious but stable, and she continued to improve Sunday night.

"She started her liquid diet tonight. She is breathing on her own. She is receiving supplemental oxygen, though," hospital spokeswoman Kari Larsen said.

Ms. Jordan, 52, was giving the thumbs-up sign Sunday to her intensive care unit nurse and able to talk to doctors and nurses.

"She's in good spirits now because she knows she's going to get well," said Dr. William J. Deaton, a pulmonary specialist.

"She's emotional about that and a little bit teary-eyed some of the time, knowing what she's been through and how close she came to a real catastrophic event. But she still also has her jovial personality. She was joking a little bit this morning," Deaton said. "She is vastly improved."

Ms. Jordan, who gained national attention during the 1974 Watergate impeachment hearings, was flown by emergency helicopter to Brackenridge Hospital Saturday after being found floating face-down in her pool.

Former U.S. Rep. Barbara Jordan

Deaton said she came "within four to five minutes, 10 minutes at most" of suffering severe brain damage and possibly death.

Ms. Jordan's housemate, Nancy Earl, called paramedics, who restored her pulse and breathing.

"She does not know what happened and was clearly concerned about it and had indicated that she didn't think she would go swimming alone again," Deaton said.

Ms. Jordan was breathing Saturday night only with the help of a mechanical ventilator, but Sunday the device was gone and she was responding to questions and talking, doctors said.

Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, the Democratic vice presidential candidate, telephoned a message for Ms. Jordan, hospital spokeswoman Carolyn Hinckley Boyle said. Ms. Jordan made a seconding speech for Bentsen's nomination at the recent Democratic national convention.

Visitors to the intensive care unit included state Treasurer Ann Richards, who delivered the keynote address at the same convention; Walt Rostow, an aide to former President Lyndon Johnson; University of Texas women's basketball Coach Jody Conradt; Ms. Jordan's two sisters; and Ms. Earl.

Ms. Jordan is a fan of the Lady Longhorns basketball team, and ICU nurse Barbara Tucker said former UT star Fran Harris, a forward on their 1986 national championship team, visited before leaving for the Olympic trials.

"When I remember seeing Ms. Jordan on TV, I frequently remember the thumbs-up sign that things are OK. She's probably given me that about 20 times today," Ms. Tucker said.

Deaton and Little said it isn't known what caused Ms. Jordan to lose consciousness in the pool, but the lack of oxygen then caused cardiac arrest.

Deaton said he expected Ms. Jordan to remain in intensive care for 48 hours and to be hospitalized for about a week.

The doctors said Ms. Jordan, who has been confined to a wheelchair for several years, suffers from multiple sclerosis. She swims as therapy.

"She has muscle weakness, and it would be difficult for her to rescue herself from the swimming pool if she had any warning of any event...I doubt, though, based on the suddenness of the event, that she had any warning," Deaton said.

Doctors could not explain why she blacked out Saturday and were uncertain how long she was in the pool before being discovered. Her housemate said she returned from a short errand to find Ms. Jordan unconscious in the pool.

Little said possible causes for her losing consciousness were a sudden heartbeat irregularity or a seizure. But hospital tests showed "her cardiac status has been very stable. She's had no evidence of seizure activity," he said.

Was shooting of Dallas County worker random killing?

DALLAS (AP) — The shooting death of a Dallas County worker, who his wife says had no enemies, has left police baffled and family and friends devastated.

Steve Cartwright, 34, was shot in the back while washing a friend's boat near his home July 8.

Dallas police detective Rick Silva, who is investigating the case, believes a stranger without motive may have killed Cartwright, who supervised painters and carpenters for Dallas County.

"It could be a drive-by, senseless-type killing," Silva said, adding police have no leads in the case.

Cartwright's wallet and valuables were not taken. The Dallas County medical examiner said Cartwright appeared to be bending over when he was shot, apparently ruling out the possibility of a confrontation with an assailant.

Dallas police Lt. Ron Waldrop said random slayings are rare, but have increased in recent years, though exact figures are unavailable.

Cartwright's widow, Terry, said he had no enemies or anyone angry at him. She said she sometimes looks at strangers and thinks, "That could be him, or her."

"I don't want to live my life in paranoia, but I'm scared there is such a heartless person who in just a second could destroy someone's life," Mrs. Cartwright said. "Not only did they destroy his life, but mine and my daughter's and our friends'."

Pickup truck, van collision leaves 5 dead, 6 hurt

DALLAS (AP) — A pickup truck and van collided head-on near a west Dallas lake in a fiery crash that killed five and injured six, police say.

Two of the victims, who were all passengers in the van, were children. Four others in the van were injured in the accident Sunday afternoon along with two people in the pickup.

Police said the pickup, traveling west on the wrong side of the road, topped a hill near Mountain Creek Lake about 4:45 p.m. and hit the eastbound van. The pickup was pushed off the road by the impact, and both vehicles came to rest against a fence, where they caught fire.

Police credit Carl Tafalla of Garland, who was driving behind the van, with saving four people before flames engulfed the van.

"I see a little girl cut and bleeding and reached in and grabbed her. I hollered for my wife to come — she's a nurse," Tafalla said. "I ran back again and looked in and this other little face popped up, and I had to reach way in there to pull her out."

The van started filling with smoke, and Tafalla said he heard popping sounds but was able to grab two men from under the van and pull them away before the vehicle burst into flames.

"The two little girls wanted to go to sleep, they spoke nothing but Spanish. I just wiped the blood off their faces so I could see and held clean wet towels over their wounds," said Tafalla's wife, Lucille, a registered nurse who works at a Dallas hospital.

Passersby gave Mrs. Tafalla rags and handkerchiefs.

The victims were identified as Martin Becerra, 26, of Dallas; his daughter, Julia, no age available; Remundo Rodriguez and his wife, Erma Rodriguez, no ages available; and their son, Hermando Rodriguez, 10.

Those injured in the van and taken to Methodist Medical Center were Ovdullea Becerra, 27, fair; Jessica Becerra, 2, fair; Martin Becerra Jr., 1, fair; and Erica Rodriguez, 7, critical.

The occupants of the pickup were identified as Mario Hernandez, no age or address, the driver; and Elias Carapia, 20, of Dallas. Hernandez was reported in critical condition at Methodist and Carapia was reported in fair condition at Parkland Hospital.

South Texas crucial for Dukakis win, Sharp says

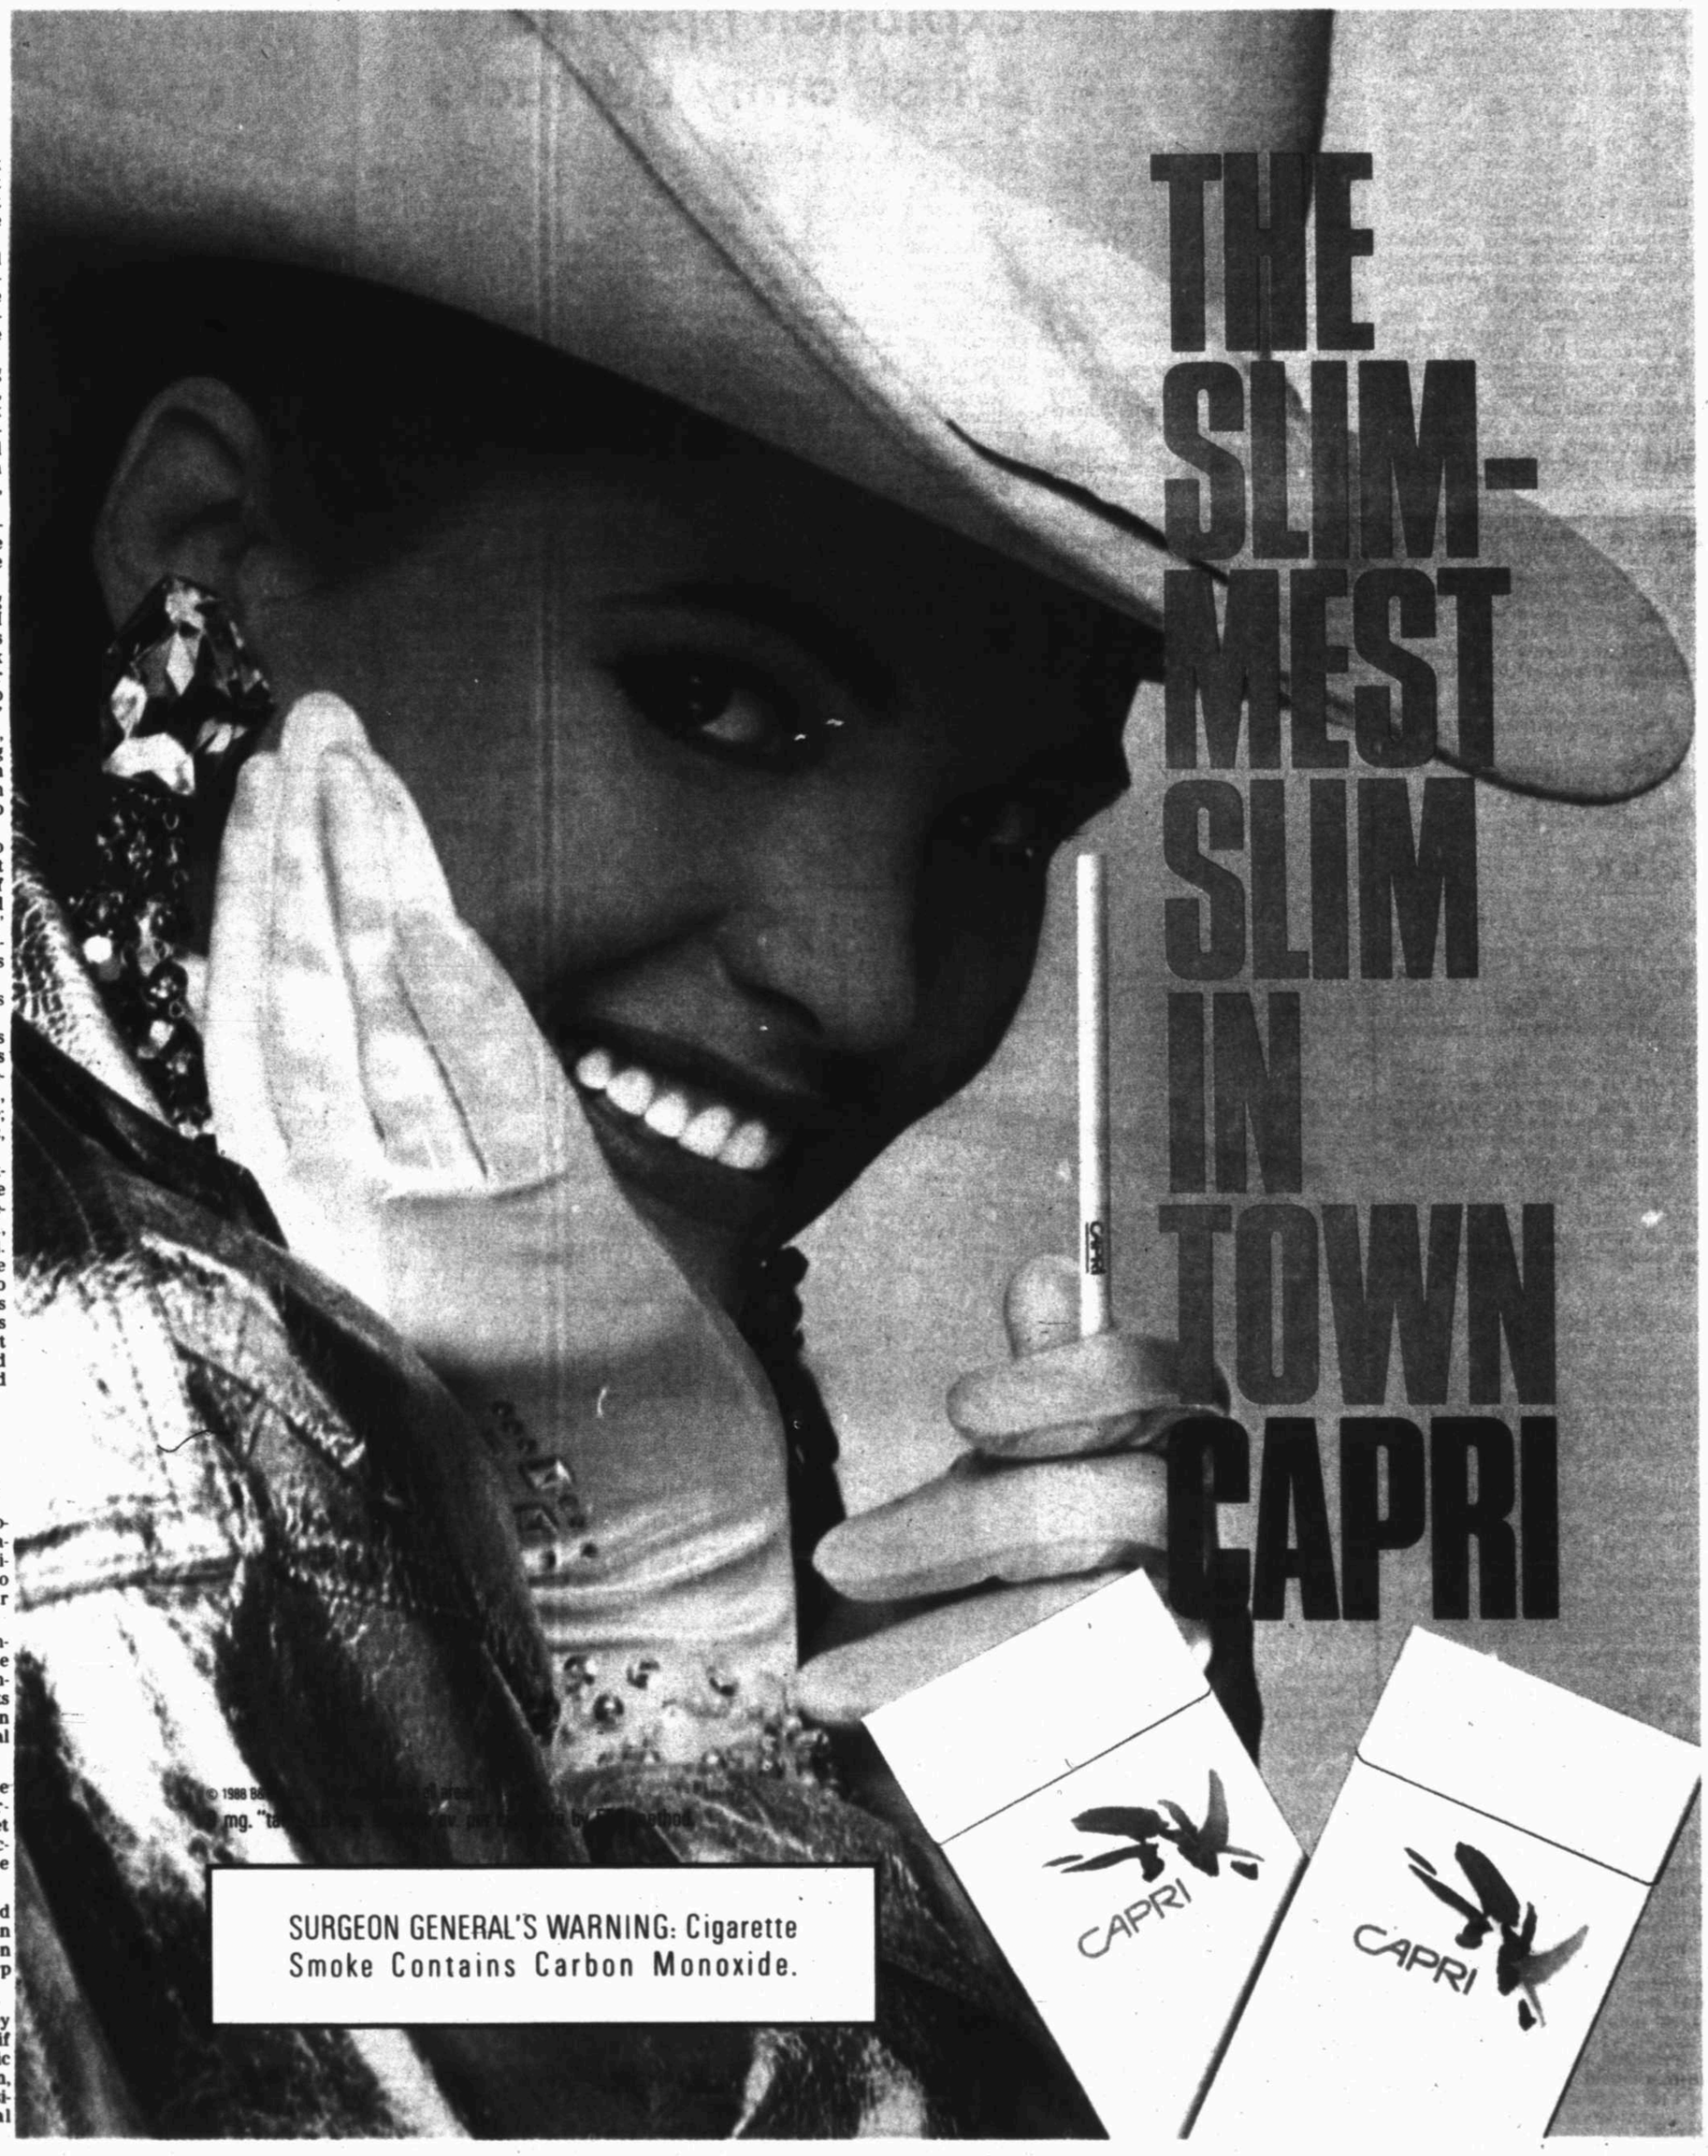

LARED (AP) — South Texas Democratic leaders met with representatives of presidential candidate Michael Dukakis to discuss how to swing the region's vote in their favor.

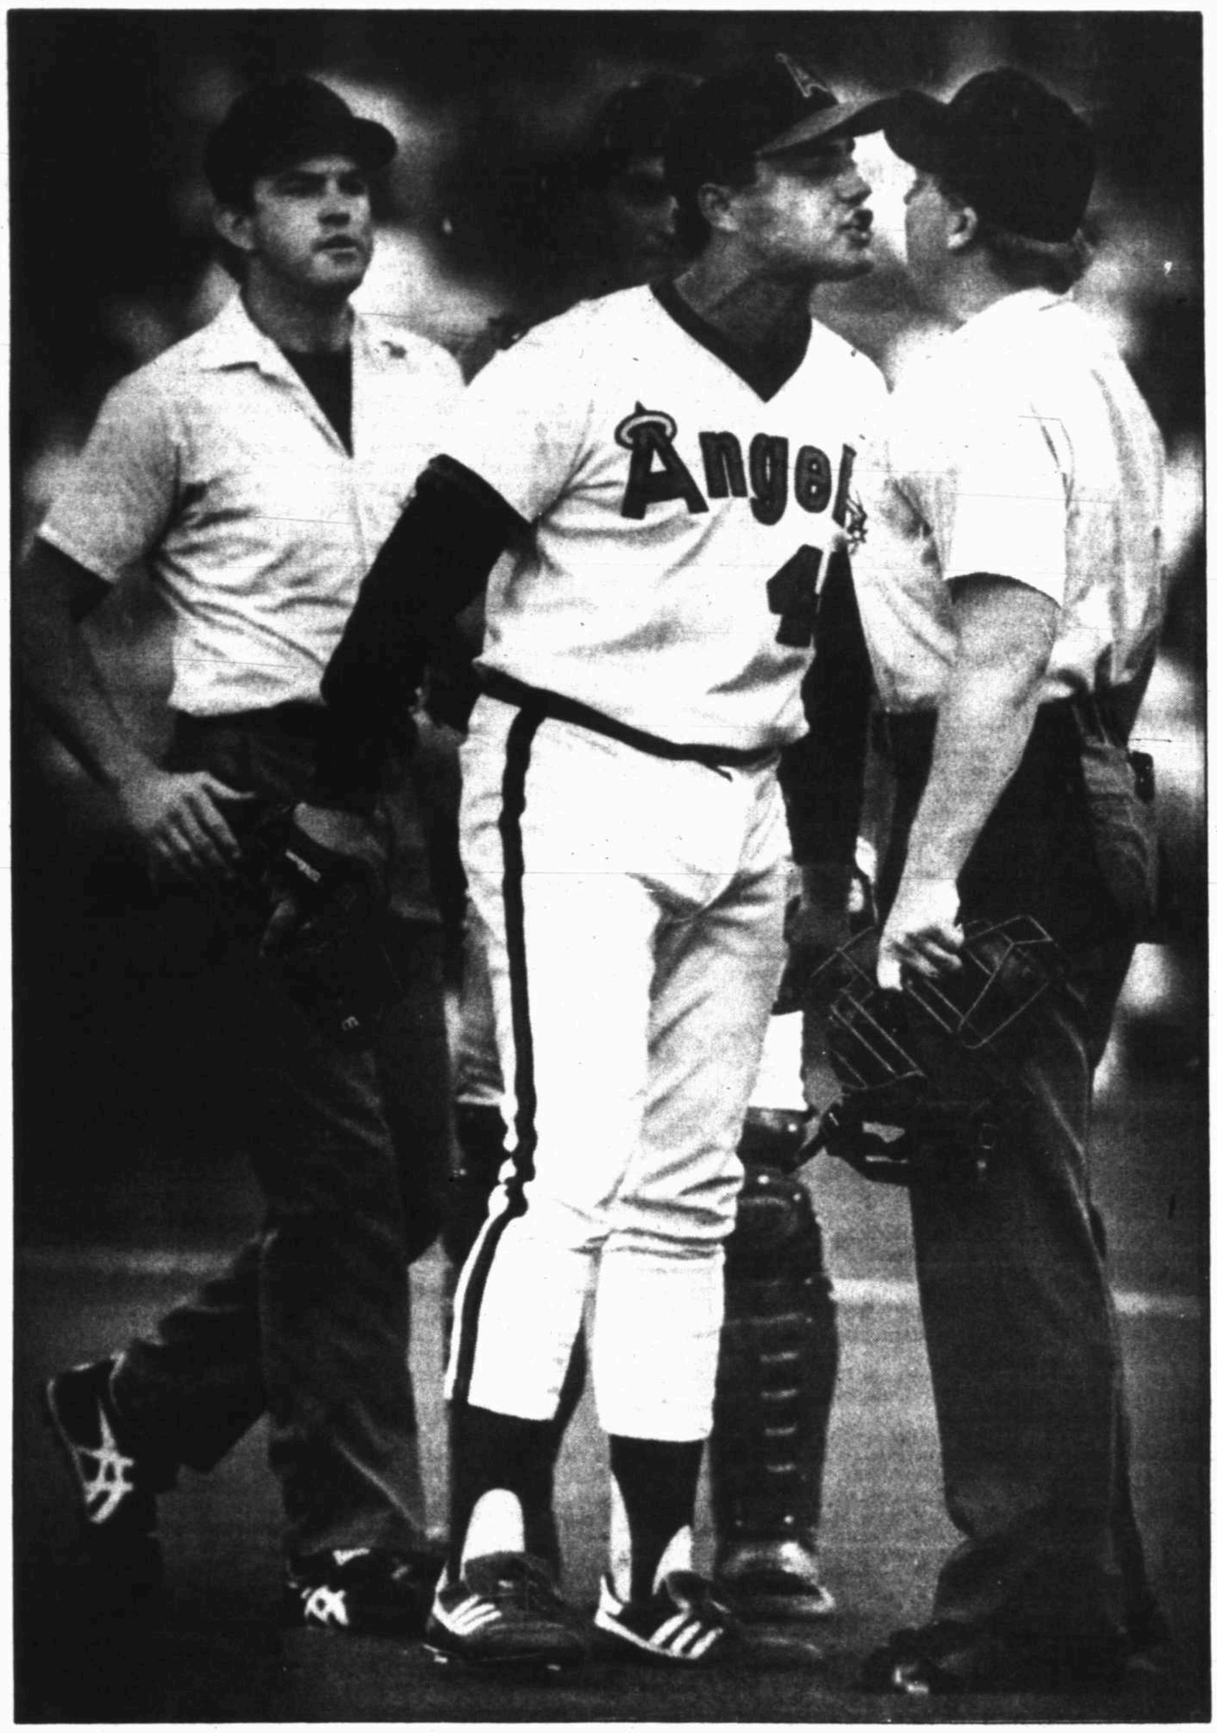

About 50 county judges and commissioners met with Dukakis' state campaign chief John Sharp on Sunday. Sharp said the Massachusetts governor must have a strong win in South Texas or lose the national race.

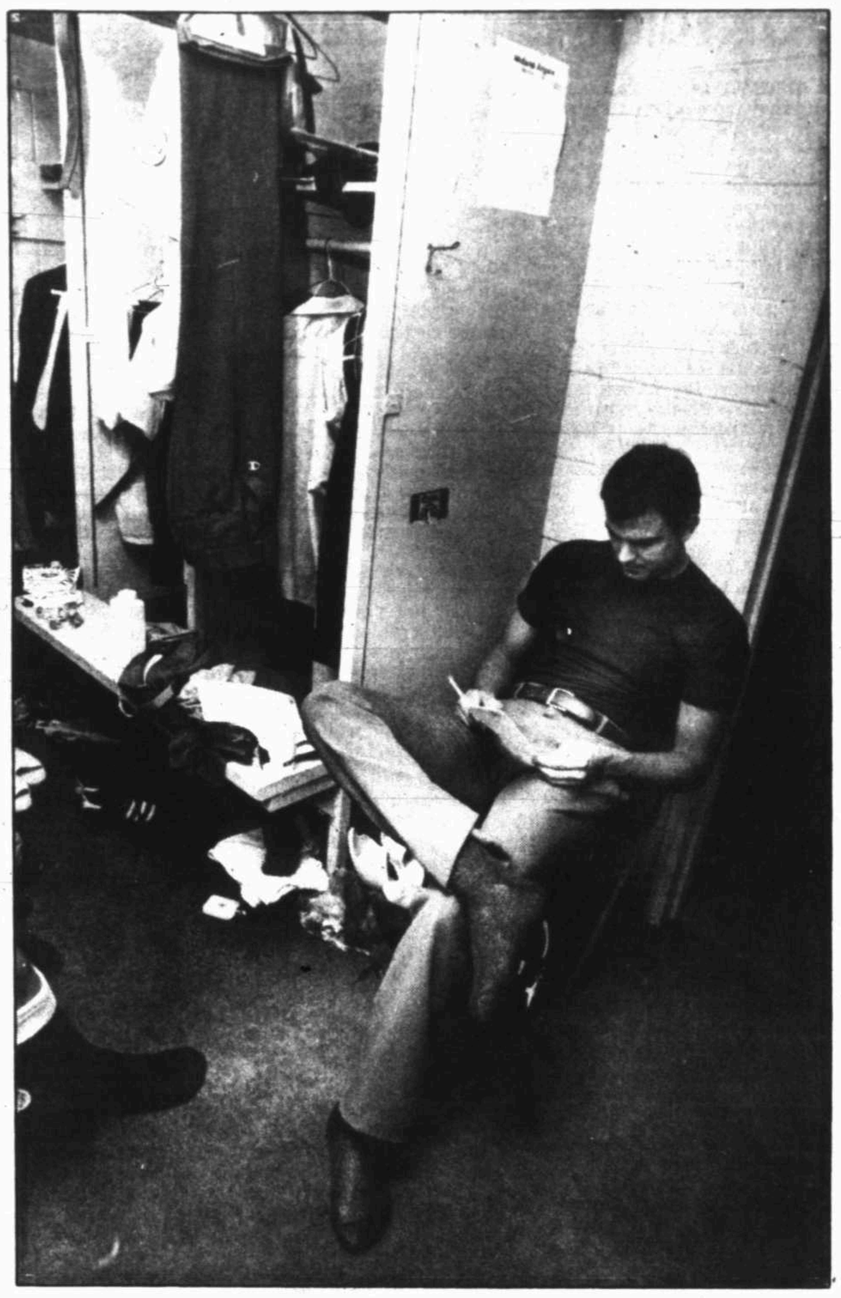

Sharp said Texas is the key state and Democrats must win overwhelmingly in South Texas to offset Republican strength in northern sections of the state, particularly in the Dallas area.

To achieve that win, Dukakis and running mate Sen. Lloyd Bentsen will spend more time in the region than any previous candidates, Sharp said.

South Texans attending said they wanted assurances that Dukakis, if elected, will attack serious economic problems in the area. In addition, South Texans want high-level positions in the state and national campaigns.

LIFE IN THE MINORS:

An UMPIRE'S Story

Somebody, somewhere, at some point in time, decided that baseball was our national pasttime and that same person was probably the first to split a gut yelling at an umpire.

Verbally abusing umpires is as much a part of baseball as is the home run trot. People love it. There seems to be no greater joy than spewing forth continual, nonsensical, irritating verbage towards those men in blue.

"Kill the ump!" and "Hey, buddy, clean your glasses!" have been heard for years. Umpire John Lipsey, 27, of Midvale, Utah, playing the part of the psychologist, states, "I would like to know why people yell at umpires. I know they're not yelling at me personally, they're yelling at the guy in the blue suit. It's not an easy job. It's trying. Somebody's going to yell at you every night."

When an umpire makes it to the big leagues he has become a hardened veteran. He hears less and concentrates better. Plus, it doesn't hurt that the fans are further away. But when an umpire is floating around the minor leagues things can be much worse. The green can still be spotted in an ump, the working conditions are fair at best, and the fans are much closer.

In the Texas League, of which the Class AA Midland Angels are a part, there are 12 umpires which are grouped into threesomes. These are men who must live on the road for six months a year, driving up to 10 hours to get to a stadium, and sleeping three to a room in what sometimes can be less than desirable accommadations.

"We're happy doing what we're doing even if we have to go to some towns that people don't particularly want to go to," states Lipsey, who was just recently promoted from Class AA to AAA. "We're just trying to make it to the big leagues, so we'll umpire wherever we have to to make it."

Lipsey, in his jump to AAA ball, has improved his lot in life by quite a bit. He now flies to his assignments, travels to nicer towns, gets to sleep in his own room and gets considerably more money.

But it wasn't always like that.

An umpire begins his life in blue at one of two schools in Florida that are designed specifically to train people to be professional umpires. There is the Harry Wendlestedt Umpiring School in Daytona and the Joe Brinkman Umpiring School in Coco Beach.

These schools hold six week courses that teach 150 to 200 students each year. There are 10 to 20 students that are then given the opportunity to umpire professionally.

"They look for certain things," Lipsey says. "They want a guy that's not too cocky, but someone who can handle situations. They also look at a person's judgment and how well they know the rules."

And when a person is deemed ready by the Umpire Development department of the National Association of Professional Baseball, he gets the privilege of visiting such wonderful places as Medicine Hat, Alberta; Butte and Billings, Mont.; and Modesto and Visalia, Calif.

While traveling through such garden spots of Rookie and Class A leagues, they are constantly being evaluated by supervisors.

"A supervisor comes in and watches you for three nights, probably four or five times a season and then turns in a report to the NAPB," states Texas League umpire Michael DuMont, 25, of Lansing, Mich.

And just like the players, there is always the chance that you may be deemed unqualified to continue in your chosen occupation.

"Everybody knows that you could be released," says DuMont, "but you don't think about it. There's a lot of turnover in rookie ball."

So why does someone get involved in a profession that pays very little and puts one through such anxiety and hardship?

"I just loved the game," says DuMont. "I played in high school and I just wanted to be involved in the game somehow."

And for an umpire, being involved in the game often means being yelled at all night long by just about anybody and everybody. But, at least an umpire holds absolute authority and power.

"If someone curses at me and I warn them to stop, and they keep going, well they're gone," DuMont says. "If they direct it at you, saying, 'you're a...whatever,' then they're gone...no warning, no nothing."

There was even an instance this year in El Paso where the umpire found it necessary to eject the public address announcer for playing the Linda Rondstat song, "I've Been Cheated," one too many times.

And the abuse can come in many forms.

"There was a guy in Salinas (California) who would whistle 'three blind mice' whenever we would walk on the field, so we would try and sneak on the field before he saw us," Lipsey said.

San Antonio police cracking down on look-alike guards

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Police officials said they have ordered a crackdown on security guards wearing look-alike police uniforms, but said they apparently can't do anything about recycled police cars being used by one security firm.

"Some of the uniforms are almost identical," said Anton Michalec, police Intelligence Unit detective. "They're (security guards) going to the police uniform to get that professional look," Michalec said.

Beginning today, he said, a series of notices would be placed in the police bulletin to familiarize rank-and-file officers with the terms of a city ordinance passed more than 30 years ago.

Under the ordinance, wearing a uniform that resembles a policeman's uniform is a class C misdemeanor carrying a fine of up to $200, Michalec said.

Police also have received citizen complaints about Advance Security Services' use of 16 retired San Antonio Police Department squad cars to patrol their clients' properties, he said.

"There is no ordinance against it (recycled cars)," he told the San Antonio Light. "We've had people call in to complain but there is nothing we can do."

He said the look-alike uniforms and patrol cars create confusion for the public as to who is doing what.

"The problem is that they (security guards) look like policemen," he said. "They get in trouble and rough somebody up. A policeman gets blamed for something they did."

Michalec said letters were sent to the 66 local security firms registered with the Texas Board of Private Investigators and Private Security Agencies announcing the crackdown.

"We wanted blanket coverage," he said. "We sent the notices out 2½ months ago. We wanted to give them 60 days to comply. This affects several firms. One (security firm) has about $7,000 worth of police uniforms."

David Diaz, the president of a San Antonio security firm, said his company's use of recycled police cars is partially responsible for the 70 percent increase in business over the past four years.

"They're very effective as a deterrent," Diaz said. "They (criminals) fear blue and white. The general public is not alarmed by them."

The only noticeable difference between the cars is the front door insignia. The SAPD insignia is replaced with a gold star with Advance Security Patrol Services on it.

"We're not policemen," he said. "We don't pretend to be policemen. We're not rivals."

Diaz said state transportation law regulates the color of bar lights on emergency vehicles but said he is unaware of any ordinances regulating the colors of non-emergency vehicles.

"You cannot have the red and blue bar lights," Diaz said. "We use amber bar lights. But, there is no state statute except for emergency equipment. We're non-emergency vehicles."

The city sells its police cars at around the 60,000-mile mark for about $3,500, Diaz said.

WEST TEXAS IN BRIEF

No charges expected in stabbings, police say

From Staff Reports

Midland Police made no arrests and no charges were expected to be filed against a man who allegedly stabbed three others in a southside nightclub early Sunday morning, a spokeswoman said.

Police Roundup

The suspect in the case was also stabbed when the fight broke out in the bathroom of the Club Jamaica at 610 E. Industrial Ave., police spokeswoman Tanna Rice said.

Carl Sims, 3407 Travis, was released this morning from Medical Center Hospital in Odessa where he had been taken Sunday morning for a stab wound to the chest, said a nursing supervisor there.

Marty Sims, 1505 E. Butternut, and his cousin, Charles Berry, 2501 Elizabeth, received hand lacerations in the incident, Mrs. Rice said.

The suspect received a stab wound in the neck, but was treated and released locally, she said.

The fight traveled from the bathroom into the nightclub and then outside, Mrs. Rice said.

She did not know why the men were not going to file charges against the suspect, she said.

Police are also investigating two burglaries that occurred Sunday.

A southeast Midland woman reported items valued at $1,000 were stolen Sunday morning.

Police are investigating the theft of an air conditioner, a television, video games and a .22-caliber rifle were taken in the burglary in the 1400 block of Camp Street, reports said.

The burglars entered the home through a bedroom window, police said.

A northwest Midland apartment complex was the scene of another burglary that took place Sunday afternoon, reports said.

Two pistols and two videocassette recorders valued at $1,850 were stolen in the burglary that took place in the Lakewood Apartments, reports said.

Autopsy results expected

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Ector County sheriff's deputies expect the results of an autopsy in Dallas today to determine the identity of a woman whose body was found in West Odessa early Saturday night.

According to Sheriff's Inspector Herbert Gibson, the body of the woman was found at about 7:25 p.m. by horseback riders in the vicinity of West 42nd Street and Comanche.

The exact location, Gibson said, was about 50 yards south of the intersection of West 42nd Street and Comanche. The body was found about 14 feet west of the edge of the road on Comanche.

Gibson said the body of the woman was fully clothed. He declined to speculate on the cause of death.

The body was sent to a Dallas forensic laboratory for autopsy and identification.

Odessan in stable condition

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — A 30-year-old man who was injured when he fell from a mobile home park water tower late Saturday afternoon was in stable condition today at Medical Center Hospital.

Police Cpl. John McAhon said officers responded to a call of a man on a tower threatening to jump about 4:42 p.m. Saturday.

McAhon said officers found Harvey Hugh Holcomb on the tower and talked him into coming down from the tower. Holcomb was descending when he apparently slipped and fell about 30 feet to the ground. He suffered head injuries and was transported to MCH for treatment.

MCH personnel this morning said Holcomb was "doing fine" and was in stable condition.

Probe of jet crash begun

PERRIS, Calif. (AP) — Federal investigators examined the wreckage of a small private jet owned by an El Paso company for clues to the cause of a fiery weekend crash that killed two people.

The Riverside County Coroner's Office had not positively identified the bodies Sunday evening, one day after the eight-passenger plane smashed upside down into a grass field two miles south of March Air Force Base.

Identification belonging to a pilot from McQueeny, Texas, was found amid the sprawling wreckage, but investigators weren't able to determine if he was aboard the aircraft.

No injuries were reported on the ground.

The plane, owned by Jet Management Inc., of El Paso, was en route from Tucson, Ariz., to the Chino Airport, about 30 miles west of the crash site, said Chuck Burge, an Federal Aviation Administration specialist at Ontario International Airport, which controls air traffic in the area.

The jet crashed less than half a mile south of the Ramona Expressway near Interstate 215, about 70 miles southeast of Los Angeles, and sparked an eight-acre brushfire, said California Department of Forestry Capt. Dan Proctor.

The aircraft exploded "just like a piece of napalm," said Perris resident Kenneth Crane, who witnessed the crash from his car.

The pilot apparently experienced an undetermined flight problem and requested help finding a closer airstrip, said Jim Manson, another FAA specialist at Ontario.

Zoos to get black rhinos

FORT WORTH (AP) — Zoos in Fort Worth and Dallas will each receive a pair of black rhinoceroses from Zimbabwe in early September as part of a massive effort to save the endangered animals.

The central African nation has agreed to loan 10 black rhinoceroses to zoos and conservationists in the United States. Three of the animals will go to ranches in South Texas, where conditions best approximate those in Africa.

There are nearly 1,900 black rhinoceroses, the world's third-largest land animal, in Zimbabwe, nearly half of the total subspecies' population. Poachers and hunters have depleted the number of animals from 65,000 in 1970.

"They are being poached at a rate of one a day," Fort Worth Zoo director Elvie Turner said.

In Zimbabwe, authorities often shoot poachers on sight, but "while they are shooting the poacher, the poachers are shooting them," Turner said.

At one time this century, there were only 20 black rhinoceroses. Conservation efforts, especially in southern Africa, brought them up to their current level.

Game Conservation International, a Fort Worth-based non-profit wildlife organization, is paying part of the estimated $25,000 each to transport the animals to the United States.

The group's founder, Fort Worth businessman Harry Tennison, has worked for 20 years to set up the loan.

"We have been granted (a) caretaker role," Tennison said. "If it becomes safe to take them back, they (African nations) can have offspring."

Time running out for Dr Pepper's 40-year-old headquarters

By SCOTT SUNDE

DALLAS (AP) — Forget the Red River, the longhorn steer or even the Alamo. Sue Sterling figures that the northwest corner of Greenville Avenue and Mockingbird Lane — home of the Dr Pepper Co. for 40 years — embodies Texas.

"It's a friendly looking building. It just means Dallas," she said. "It's a Texas product and a good drink. That's part of being a Texan: drinking Dr Pepper."

You'll have to forgive Mrs. Sterling. After all, she met her husband when both worked in the building more than 30 years ago, and she is vice president of the 10, 2 and 4 club, a 200-member organization devoted to Dr Pepper memorabilia. Then, too, she knows that the clock atop the company's headquarters is about to reach 10, 2 and 4 one last time.

The company and its 500 employees have started to move out of their art moderne headquarters. By Aug. 8, the home of Dr Pepper and the Seven-Up Co. will be the top six floors of Walnut Glen Tower near Presbyterian Hospital.

Gone from Mockingbird Lane will be the clock from the building's roof, the turn-of-century soda fountain inside and the lobby's four murals, which explain the history of carbonated beverages.

"You have a lot of nostalgic feelings about it," said W.W. "Foots" Clements, Dr Pepper's chairman emeritus and a 53-year employee. "It's such a part of your life and the company's life. I suppose I'll leave one morning, and the first thing I know I'll be halfway down here by mistake."

More distressing for many is that the corner of Mockingbird and Greenville is about to change forever. Dr Pepper will leave a few employees in the building for as long as two years. Then the building will be in the hands of the Dallas-based Harbord Cos., which bought the property in 1985. Its industrial zoning would allow a 20-story office building to be built there, and Harbord once seemed likely to demolish the old headquarters.

It seems doubtful at the very least that the site — 27 acres of lawn with an office and industrial building at the center — will remain unchanged. Even Andrew Stephenson, the 26-year-old businessman who has spent much of the summer trying to save the building, acknowledged that.

"I've been taking lots of pictures of it," said Stephenson, owner of Wholesale Coffee Service in North Dallas.

Quite simply, the building has fallen victim to a business decision. The recent acquisition of Seven-Up crowded 200 more employees into it.

Workers have known for almost two years that they would have to move, which has given Dr Pepper traditionalists such as Harry Ellis time to adjust.

Ellis, 80, is a 57-year employee. The company archivist, he has written the Dr Pepper history and is in charge of the treasure trove of memorabilia. The exhibit soon will split time between the new headquarters and a Waco Dr Pepper museum being developed in a 1906 company bottling plant.

For much of his career, Ellis also has been responsible for the slogans seen on the Greenville Avenue side of the headquarters; "Drink a bite to eat at 10, 2 and 4" was the most popular.

But he also understands the bottom line.

"I learned a long time ago that in business, just like in everything else in life, you've got to expect change. Things just don't stay the same," Ellis said.

Then again, Ellis has a long enough memory to know that Dr Pepper has had itchy corporate feet before. The company began with a drink introduced in a Waco drug store in 1885. It moved to Dallas in 1923, with headquarters near what is now Dealey Plaza and later near Fair Park.

In 1946, the company broke ground in "a rabbit patch" at Mockingbird and Greenville, Ellis said.

"We were pioneering," Clements said. The site was Far North Dallas, with only a barbecue shack and a few other businesses nearby. Neighbors to the south were worried about a factory in their midst, he said.

Dr Pepper syrup was made at the site until a year ago.

In 1948, the company had its grand opening. Plenty of important decisions were made there, as well as some odd ones, including the removal of the period from the "Dr" in 1950 and the introduction of a Dr Pepper-flavored ice cream topping in the 1960s.

"It's an emotional focal point in the area, just like the flying red horse is downtown," said Al Cox, a local architect and interim director of Historic Preservation League.

"Dr Pepper has been a good neighbor. Just the setting of the building has been pleasant to look at," said Martin Klein, president of the Greenland Hills Neighborhood Association, whose members live south of the headquarters. His group fears that the site could be turned into a major development.

So does Stephenson. "I'd hate to see that lot covered with a strip shopping center, a 20-story office building and an apartment complex," he said.

Stephenson has been meeting with preservationists, city officials and Sidney Steiner, whose company owns the headquarters, to see whether the building can be saved. Steiner was unavailable for comment.

One option is to get a historic designation for the building. That's not likely because the City Council probably would have to impose that designation over the objections of Harbord.

Stephenson said he hopes he can organize a non-profit corporation, attract grants and hire an architect to suggest ways the building could be saved and incorporated into development plans.

"Time is ticking away, and once it's gone, it's gone," he said of the building. "You can never bring it back."

Wright's district cleans up on federal funds

FORT WORTH (AP) — More federal money per capita went to the district of House Speaker Jim Wright in 1986 than to any other urban area in the United States, The Dallas Morning News reported in a copyright story.

The newspaper reported Sunday that it tracked federal spending for the 1986 and 1987 fiscal years through 50 states and 3,041 counties.

Tarrant County, which includes Wright's hometown of Fort Worth, achieved its top ranking primarily through multibillion-dollar defense contracts, the survey showed.

The federal government spent more than $5.5 billion, or $5,481 per person, in Tarrant County in 1986. The next year, amid a steep decline in defense spending, the county dropped to the No. 4 spot with $4.4 billion, or $4,030 per person, the News reported.

No other county in Texas came close to Tarrant County's total of $9.9 billion, or $9,511 per capita rate, during the 1986 fiscal year. Bexar County, home to six military installations, was second with $5,160.

The per capita rate is even greater within the city limits of Fort Worth, where the government spent $19,337 per capita during 1986-87.

The average U.S. county studied received a two-year total of $3,577 per person for 1986 and 1987, the News said.

Wright has represented Tarrant County residents for more than three decades, and the county's high ranking in part is considered a reflection of Wright's increasing influence in how tax dollars are spent.

Wright, who two weeks ago presided over the Democratic National Convention in Atlanta, faces an investigation by the House ethics committee into allegations that he improperly interceded on behalf of troubled savings and loan executives in Texas and that he wrongly profited from royalties on a book.

Wright's supporters said the ranking demonstrates his ability to "get things done" in Washington for his Fort Worth constituents.

"What's the point in having the speaker of the House come from Texas if he doesn't do the people any good?" asked Boston University President John R. Silber, a longtime Wright friend.

Political foes said the ranking reinforces Wright's image as a provincial, pork-barrel politician.

"Jim Wright generates more pork than is hanging in a Kansas slaughterhouse," said Don McNiel, the Alvarado, Texas, Republican who tried to unseat Wright in 1986. "It's the pork barrel capital of America."

"Pork barrel is an abused and grotesquely overused word," Wright said. "I think it's a sloppy word used indiscriminately to belittle projects that one doesn't understand and from which one doesn't benefit."

Tarrant County projects funded by the federal treasury could have sold themselves, Wright says.

Military spending comprises the greatest slice of Tarrant County's federal pie, with 83 percent of the $9.9 billion in funds received coming from defense contracts.

The bulk of Tarrant County's $8.2 billion in defense contracts went to General Dynamics, maker of the F-16 jet fighter and the county's largest employer with 28,000 workers. General Dynamics, the nation's second-largest defense contractor, reported $5.8 billion in military aircraft sales from its Fort Worth Division in 1986-87.

INS staff works overtime processing applications

HOUSTON (AP) — Immigration and Naturalization Service workers in Houston have begun working overtime to process as many as 700 amnesty applications a day and begin the second phase of the amnesty program.

The aliens are being asked to come in earlier than expected for follow-up interviews so immigration officials can finish with legalization before embarking on the phase of the program that grants aliens permanent residency in the United States.

Officials said they were forced to postpone about 50,000 applicant interviews because the Houston legalization office was swamped by a deluge of applicants in the last month of the 1-year amnesty offer, which ended May 4.

More than 118,400 aliens applied for amnesty in the Houston area.

To make a clean break between the first and second phases, Houston immigration officials decided to work overtime and push up thousands of interviews so that all applicants for amnesty will be processed before Nov. 7, when immigration workers will shift their attention to permanent residency.

Richard Rios, legalization director for the Houston district of INS, said beginning Aug. 13 his office will put on additional staff and begin opening on Saturdays to process the 700 applications a day — a pace that comes close to the frenzy of the last weeks of the amnesty period.

The postponed interviews were scheduled through the end of the year at a rate of about 450 a day, and about 34,000 remain to be done, Rios said.

But now, immigration officials now are burdened with getting the second phase of the amnesty program under way.

In the second phase, legalized aliens must apply and be approved for permanent residency or face losing their legal status. To be approved for permanent residency, an alien must learn English and U.S. history, or have completed at least half a 60-hour course of study.

The Immigration Reform and Control Act, which provided for amnesty, requires that an amnesty-approved alien wait 18 months before applying for permanent residency. They are then given one year to apply.

If an alien applied for amnesty the first day of the offer, May 5, 1987, then the first day he can apply for permanent residency is next Nov. 7.

In the second phase, immigration officials expect to find the same pattern that emerged during the first phase: a busy summer, a slow winter, and a stampede at the end. With the 18-month delay and yearlong application window, the permanent residency phase will stretch through October 1990.

UMPIRE

There was even an instance this year in El Paso where the umpire found it necessary to eject the public address announcer for playing the Linda Ronstadt song, "I've Been Cheated," one too many times.

And the abuse can come in many forms.

"There was a guy in Salinas (California) who would whistle 'three blind mice' whenever we would walk on the field, so we would try and sneak on the field before he saw us," Lipsey said.

There was also the guy in Class A ball in San Jose, Calif., the umpires call "the howler" who would yell, "hey, ump, even a broken clock strikes twice a day."

Visalia, another team in the California League, had "the droner" who was so nicknamed because his voice would drone out into the night..."heeey uuump...your mother called...She called you a bum!"

Lipsey recalls his encounter with the Booster President of the Class A Modesto A's. "He would sit right behind home plate every night and yell 'You're going to die in this league. I don't know how you made it this far."

But according to Lipsey, nothing was as bad as 5-cent beer night in Butte. "It was something else. The fans would load up the beer and then start calling you every name in the book."

But things are not all bad for the umpires.

"You get to meet a lot of really nice people," DuMont says, and "you'd be surprised how many people really like umpires," Lipsey adds.

One person who does would certainly be a surprise to some people, and that is the Famous Chicken, that notorious abuser of umpires.

"He sends all the umpires a Christmas card every year," DuMont said. "He knows he needs us for his act, so he takes care of us."

And how do the umpires get along with the players?

"The players are on one side and we're on the other, so we don't associate much," Lipsey said.

Mike Knapp, the catcher for the Angels, states, "You've got to try and get on the umps' good side. You make life a whole lot easier when you're nice to them. If you try and show them up in any way, then they're going to get you back. That's a fact. But when it comes right down to it, they've got a tough job...but somebody's got to do it."

And what do the local fans of the Midland Angels have to say about the beloved men in blue?

"I recognize that they are at the same level of development as the players, which can sometimes be pretty ragged," says die-hard fan Jim Brimer.

Brimer, who spends every home game situated behind the Angel dugout, continues, "There was one night we were riding the umps pretty hard and I think the umpire ejected a player for something I said."

But, when it comes right down to it, the umpire is the Rodney Dangerfield of athletics, and Angel fan Charles Chambers sums it up..."As my mother would say, 'They're just not our kind.'"

'Scratch-and-Snif' book is latest gimmick creation

By SUSAN CHRISTIAN
Copley News Service

Sooner or later, somebody had to think of a scratch-and-sniff "diet" book. So it may as well have been Jim Becker and Andy Mayer.

"When we hit upon our best ideas, we go, 'How come nobody thought of this before?'" Becker says. "Or, 'Surely somebody has thought of this and just never got it off the ground.'"

The inventive duo's latest gimmick is a tongue-in-cheek, and nose-in-illustration, booklet titled "Zero Calorie Desserts: The Seven-Day Scratch and Sniff Diet" (Workman Publishing, $4.95).

Inside are a week's worth of glorious desserts — from Chocolate Fudge Cake Supreme to Luscious Lemon Chiffon Meringue — scrumptiously portrayed, with tantalizing scent included.

"Treat yourself to this unparalleled ice cream delight," the text reads for Friday's entree — Butterscotch Banana Split Dreamboat. "Twin scoops of vanilla-fudge ice cream nestle on fresh banana halves under a topping of hot, gooey butterscotch, mounds of whipped cream. ..."

You get the picture — and you also get the aroma.

But you don't get the calories. "Theirs: 1,040 calorie. Ours: 0 calories," the book boasts.

"When we were working on this thing, we had all these fancy dessert books to come up with ideas about how the text should be written and what kinds of desserts to use," Becker says. "And we got really hungry looking at the pictures. This probably isn't a great diet book, because after looking at these illustrations, you go, 'Gawd, I'm starved.'"

"We always wanted to do a parody related to dieting, because so many people talk constantly about dieting," Mayer says. "We'd also thought about doing some sort of scratch-and-sniff children's book. So we said, 'Why not put the two together?'"

"Zero Calorie Desserts" is far from the first innovation struck upon by Becker and Mayer — longtime friends, business partners and Santa Monica, Calif., neighbors. Their "Official Book of Thumb Wrestling" has sold more than 200,000 copies in its five-year life span and continues to pop up in bookstores every holiday season.

That — er, thumb-in-cheek? — novelty features a cardboard spiral notebook with a handful of "games," such as "Power Thumb," played on a football field of sorts. Two cut-out holes allow for the insertion of dueling thumbs.

"Sometimes books like these will only last a year (on the market), sometimes a few years," Becker says. "'Thumb Wrestling' will probably last forever. They're impulse items; stores put them next to the cash register."

Becker and Mayer graduated together from their Riverdale, N.Y., high school in 1973, went their separate ways during college, then hooked up again four years later.

"I was living in New Hampshire and Jim came to go skiing and never left," Mayer says.

Somehow or other, the recent college grads — typically directionless — started brainstorming about humor and children's book possibilities. They managed to wrangle this publisher for that idea and that publisher for this idea, and eventually, what began as a few free-lance projects evolved into a full-time business.

The two moved to California in 1979 and set up shop in a Santa Monica office building. Today they are both married and — just in case they don't see enough of one another at work — live on the same street in Santa Monica.

"We even both have dogs — our company mascots," Mayer remarks.

However, their lives do differ in at least one aspect — aside from the fact that Becker sports a beard and Mayer does not, as their press release points out. Becker and his wife, Barbara, who helps out at Becker & Mayer, have a 1-year-old daughter, Samantha.

Mayer's wife, Michele Roberts, a noted artist, designed the T-shirts for this year's Venice Art Walk.

Among the pair's offbeat inventions is their "10 Classics in 10 Minutes," a high-speed rendition of acclaimed novels that was inspired by books on tape. John "Mighty Mouth" Moschitta, the fast talker on the Federal Express and Minute Rice commercials, frenetically narrates ultra-condensed versions of "Moby Dick," "The Grapes of Wrath," "Oliver Twist," et al.

For instance, there's "Gone With the Wind":

"Scarlette O'Hara loves Ashley Wilkes but Ashley decides to marry Miss Melanie which is announced at the party where Scarlette O'Hara meets Rhett Butler but she marries Charles Hamilton in stead who goes to war — and DIES — along with just about every body else. ..."

"We started out saying that we would read all these classics before writing the script," Becker recalls. "I said, 'I'll take "Gone With the Wind"; Andy, you take "Moby Dick."' We both came in the next day and had each read three pages, and said, 'Forget it, let's buy the Cliff Notes.'" Old college habits never die.

"10 Classics in 10 Minutes" proved such a success that its creators followed it up last year with "10-Minute University," taught by "Professor" Moschitta. Classes begin at 9 a.m. with The Theory of Evolution and — after quick spins through Introduction to Psychology, Conversational Latin and Film Appreciation — end at 9:10 a.m. with commencement. The tape comes complete with a diploma.

"Those we had to read textbooks for — there were no Cliff Notes," Mayer complains.

In a slightly more serious vein, Becker and Mayer also design children's books and toys. They have a series of "Fast Rolling Books" — sturdy storybooks in the shape of their subjects, such as "Santa's Sleigh," with wheels attached.

Their "Chatterbox Book" series features tales about ducks, cows or lambs that "quack," "moo" or "baa." Most of their children's books are published by Grosset & Dunlap, while their humorous books and tapes are released by Workman Publishing.

The partners' toys include Baby Hush-a-Bye, a doll that whispers secrets, and Turn It Up, a hand-size electronic game.

Having a child of his own, Becker says, provides him with concepts for his books and toys.

"You realize what a parent goes through when they're trying to decide which book or toy to buy," he says. "Especially with your first child — you go into a store and think, 'I know what kind of toy she just outgrew, but how do I know what the next one should be?'"

"Sam ought to be a tax-deductible child," Mayer adds. "Jim could write her off as research."

For Becker and Mayer, the ideas just keep on coming.

"We're never at a loss," Becker says.

And their joint job suits their personalities perfectly; they would rather sell ideas than products.

"We realized a long time ago that we didn't want to own a business where you do the manufacturing, distributing, collecting on accounts," Mayer says. "We just wanted to create."

"Besides, Becker & Mayer has a great vacation plan, which we adhere to very strictly," Becker says. "When we want to go, we just take off."

Baltimore scientists find key protein in detecting aromas

By PAUL RECER
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A complex protein produced in a nasal gland has been identified by researchers as the chemical messenger that carries aromas to the odor-sensing nerves of the nose.

Dr. Solomon Snyder of Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine in Baltimore said Friday he and three other researchers have cloned the gene that gives instructions for the creation of the protein and may one day be able to use the protein to sharpen the sense of smell.

The protein, called the odorant binding protein or OBP, is secreted by the lateral nasal gland and then carried by a duct to the tip of the nose, Snyder said.

When air is inhaled, the OBP is sprayed as fine mist into the air that flows into the nose, he said.

Snyder said the protein binds with airborne molecules as they are inhaled and is then carried past a nerve bundle that picks up the chemical message of the odor.

"The nerve endings are way back, high in the nose," Snyder said in a telephone interview. "Only a small portion of the nose has these receptors."

When the OBP comes in contact with the receptors, the nerves interpret the chemistry of the OBP as a particular smell.

Snyder said the precise mechanism of how the nerves can distinguish between different smells, such as sweet and sour, is not yet understood.

He said what is detected as a fragrance may actually be caused by the chemical reaction of the OBP mixed with the fragrance molecule.

By cloning the gene that produces the OBP, Snyder said his team should be able to produce large quantities of the protein and conduct further studies into the sense of smell, one of the least understood of the senses.

Use of OBP may be of medical significance in restoring lost appetite or helping patients who have totally lost the sense of smell.

"This could help the elderly regain their appetite," said Snyder.

"As people age, they lose their sense of smell" and this often is the reason that older people stop eating as they should.

By spraying OBP into the nose, he said, it may help restore some of the sense of smell.

Snyder said much more research must be conducted before specific, clinical uses for the OBP are found.

A report on the study was published Friday in Science, the journal of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Others on the OBP research team are Jonathan Pevsner, also of Johns Hopkins, and Randall R. Reed and Paul G. Feinstein of the Howard Hughes Medical Institute.

Market experts want to make smell sell

By MICHAEL deCOURCY HINDS
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — It may not be good shopping manners to stand in the supermarket and sniff the packages. But if America's marketing experts have anything to say about it, that's what people will be doing.

Smell sells, and new ways of marketing it are being devised. Advertisers have loaded magazines with perfume, leather and chocolate fragrances. Now makers of packaged goods are bringing fragrances to the marketplace. Procter & Gamble, for example, is test-marketing a scratch-and-sniff sticker for Gain detergent. Gain contains a synthetic fragrance to make clothes smell sundried, and the company wants to make sure shoppers take a whiff.

"We hope it gets people to pick the box up and smell it," said Peter Nalen, a spokesman for Procter & Gamble in Cincinnati. "And then buy it." Still ahead: plastic containers with the scent of the product inside.

International Flavors and Fragrances in New York, the world's largest supplier of flavors and fragrances, expects major growth. European companies are already scenting packaging. Frank P. Davis, a vice president, said, "It's just a matter of time before it comes to the American market."

In an age of tamper-proof seals, scented packaging may make it easier for shoppers to compare shampoos or mouthwashes. But the compelling thing about smell, from a marketing perspective, is that for physiological reasons fragrances are extraordinarily memorable and evocative. Odor is also inescapable — you can't close your nose — and technology makes it easy to transmit. Rolls-Royce put the aroma of its leather upholstery on a scent strip in Architectural Digest last July, and now 3 million readers know what $150,000 smells like.

Some people worry about nasal bombardment. "One more assault on our senses will lead to a diminution of our sensory awareness," said Howard Kogan, a psychoanalyst in New York. "My nose is already out of joint."

Magazine readers have been grumbling about the particularly intense perfume campaigns of recent issues. But others are exhilarated by the potential. Some of that stems from the revival of interest in folk medicine. It has long been thought that lavender, for example, is soothing and that peppermint is stimulating.

Now the non-profit Fragrance Research Fund in New York is sponsoring seven clinical studies, and, so far, early results suggest that fragrance affects sleep and anxiety, said Annette Green, the administrator of the research fund and the executive director of the Fragrance Foundation, both in New York.

She and her researchers are intrigued by the mood-altering possibilities of odors and what this might mean for, say, household cleaners. Does the consumer want a product with invigorating aromas to relieve the tedium of the job? Or would they prefer a relaxing aroma?

Skeptics may turn up their noses, but there is no question that the human smelling apparatus has a lot to offer the basic process of shopping. "Man hasn't relied on his sense of smell for hunting and gathering for several thousand years, but it still means a great deal to him," said Dr. Harry L. Shapiro, the chairman emeritus of the department of anthropology at the American Museum of Natural History in New York.

Most companies in the highly competitive world of consumer products are unwilling to discuss their plans for fragrance-based marketing. But Andrew D. Fraser, a marketing manager at the Minnesota Mining and Manufacturing Co. in Minneapolis, predicts that odor promotions will capture supermarket aisles as quickly as they did magazine pages. In just five years, the use of scent strips went from nearly zero to over one billion a year.

Pleasure of a hot tub satisfying

By CHRISTOPHER McCOOEY
Copley News Service

Probably the first thing that happened to you, after you wailed your way into this world, was to be plopped into a bath. What a way to start life!

And what a way to continue it. Few things are quite so satisfying as a soak in a hot bath. After a full day of "you-will-enjoy" sightseeing, after a harried day at the office, after a strenuous hike or when the kids are at last in bed, you can slip into the tub and float your cares away. And more and more people are getting into hot water. The national Spa and Pool Institute thinks it can easily sell a quarter of a million hot tubs and spas annually if it can spread the word that the products enhance both lifestyles and property values.

The household hip baths, deck hot tubs, portable spas, whirlpools and all manner of appliances fitted with jets and bubbles are just the 20th century manifestation of an ancient pastime. The healing qualities of water were recorded in Sanskrit writings as early as 4000 B.C. A built-in bathtub and drainage system more than 3,000 years old lies in the ruins of King Nestor's palace near Pylos, in Greece.

It was the later Greeks, and in particular the Romans, who popularized bathing. Hippocrates, who lived 400 years before Christ, prescribed a good soak for muscle and joint diseases. The Romans used natural mineral springs for hot baths near Naples and Thermopolis and in the far-flung corners of their empire — such as Bath in England. They also built bath emporiums with water heated to varying temperatures.

The most opulent of these bathhouses had libraries, galleries and entertainment for the immersed. The thermal baths of the Emperor Diocletian could accommodate 6,000 people. Roman women often had North African slaves who anointed them with oils, massaged them and scraped them clean with a strigil — a bone or metal instrument sort of like a squeegee, except it was used on the skin, not on the windshield.

Some people can't relax anywhere, of course. There were workaholics even among the ancients. The mathematician Archimedes was as obsessed with his work as a Silicon Valley engineer, as Plutarch notes in his "Lives": "Ofttimes his servants got him against his will to the baths, to wash and anoint him: and yet being there, he would ever be drawing out of the geometrical figures, even in the very embers of the chimney. And while they were anointing of him with oils and sweet savours, with his fingers he did draw lines upon his naked body: so far was he taken from himself, and brought into an extasy or trance, with the delight he had in the study of geometry."

Using oils to cleanse the body persisted through the Middle Ages and was still common, at least among the nobility, in Elizabethan England. Sir Francis Bacon describes the procedure in his book "Sylva Sylvarum":

"First, before bathing, rub and anoint the Body with Oyle, and Salves, that the Bath's moistening heat and virtue may penetrate into the Body, and not the liquor's watery part; after Bathing wrap the Body in a seare-cloth made of Masticke, Myrrh, Pomander and Saffron, for staying the perspiration or breathing of the pores, until the softening of the Body, having layne thus in seare-cloth 24 houres, bee growne solid and hard. Lastly, with an anointment of Oyle, Salt and Saffron, the seare-cloth being taken off, anoint the body."

CNS Graphic

It was said, with considerable pride, that Queen Elizabeth I bathed once a month, "whether she needed it or not." But for the next 200 years most people in Europe did not bathe at all. The problem of body odor was solved by using scent. Then, early in the 19th century, a complete change came about in the European middle classes. Bathing was considered healthful, and bodies were anointed, no longer with oil, but with soap, which for the first time became readily available. Soap washed away dirt, which harbored germs.

Soap had been around a long time. Legend has it that soap-making began by accident about 3,000 years ago on Sapo Hill near Rome, where peasants offered animals as burnt sacrifices to their gods. Fat from the animals bubbled, trickled down the pyre and soaked through the wood ashes into the underlying clay. Women discovered this soapy clay was a boon for washing clothes, but nobody seems to have thought about bathing with it.

A rough kind of soap was used in France about A.D. 100, and by about 700, soap-making had become a craft in Italy. Spain was a leading soapmaker by 800, and the craft was taken up in England in 1200.

In the late 18th century, Nicholas Leblanc, a French scientist, found that caustic soda, an essential element in the soap-making process, could be manufactured from common table salt. The discovery made soap available at prices most people could afford. Now that soap was plentiful and cheap, people could wash themselves with it.

In some cultures, bathing has always been less a chore than a pleasurable experience. In the communal hot baths of Turkey, there was an ancient tradition of sitting in steam and then cooling off. "Turkish baths" were a "must" for every 19th-century European and American tourist. Not everyone was impressed. Mark Twain had been told of "the celebrated Turkish bath, and ... of the bliss the mortal revels in who passes through it." He tried one and reported in "Innocents Abroad": "It is a malignant swindle. The man who enjoys it is qualified to enjoy anything that is repulsive to sight or sense."

But the culture that developed bathing to the highest art form is the Japanese. There are some who think the country's industriousness and national equanimity result from the psychotherapeutic effect of the evening o-furo, the bath. Even the tiniest apartment in Japan has a rectangular tub in which the occupant hugs his knees in hot water and drifts off deliciously. The bathtub is a safety valve, a pressure release for the daily frustrations and inhibitions of a tightly controlled, conformist economic and social system. The factory worker, safely enwombed in hot water, can tell his master, the Riveting Robot, to go to hell in the company handcart.

Recent studies by Leonard Syme of the School of Public Health at the University of California at Berkeley seem to support the more-bath-less-stress theory. Syme reports that regular soaking in hot water is one of several cultural factors that may account for Japan's low mortality rate from coronary heart disease. (The United States has one of the world's highest coronary heart disease rates.)

When nature dealt out her favors, she was rather mean when it came to giving Japan such things as crude oil and iron ore. But she made up for it with an abundance of hot water. Mountains, covering two-thirds of the country, straddle an arc of volcanic activity that produces numerous geothermal springs, which serve many spas called onsen. These onsen may be outdoor rock pools where both sexes bathe together, or the water may be piped to specially constructed bathhouses, inns and hotels with the bathing areas elaborately landscaped to enhance or improve nature in a quintessentially Japanese way.

The sign for an onsen looks like an upside-down jellyfish; it's actually steam rising from a pool of hot water. The waters of many of the onsen are highly mineralized, and extravagant claims are often made regarding their recuperative properties. The same is true, of course, of the spas of Europe and North America — at Baden-Baden in Germany, Aix-les-Bains in France, Hot Springs in Arkansas, you'll find plenty of people who claim that bathing in, not to mention drinking, mineral-rich water is a cure for anything that ails you.

More likely, unless you have some obviously heat-treatable complaint, such as rheumatism, a spell at a spa or an onsen probably provides psychosomatic relief — the result of a change of air, a relaxing regimen in a scenic spot and a healthful diet and exercise program. Doctors still doubt that the minerals in the water — sulfur, chlorides, bicarbonates and radioactive radon — can be absorbed through the skin or that they have any particular therapeutic effects.

And that brings us back home to the present and to the hot-tub craze. Wooden hot tubs became popular in California more than a decade ago. (Old wine vats were used for some of the first.) But sales began to increase nationally with the development of acrylic portable spas that were made to accommodate the contours of the body and were painted in bold and bright colors.

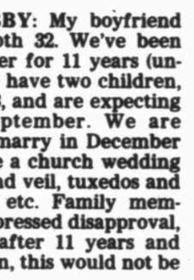

Of course, anyone with common sense will consult a doctor before embarking on any exercise, heat or hydrotherapy program. But the psychological benefits of soaking seem evident enough. Some people who have spas and use them regularly say they buy less aspirin.

DEAR ABBY

Court says one good turn deserves another

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Grandma created quite a stir among your readers concerning her usual $50 birthday gift to her selfish descendants who, after a while, thought they had it coming.

Did you know that it is a legally established fact that the practice of voluntarily giving gifts over a period of time implies an obligation to continue that practice?

Several years ago, when the mills of the American Rolling Mill Co. in Middletown, Ohio, were really rolling, the company, out of the goodness of its corporate heart, began giving free turkeys to its employees at Thanksgiving.

Then the company fell on hard times, and in the early 1980s it decided to discontinue the distribution of some 15,000 turkeys as an economy measure.

The Steelworkers Union set up a howl and took the company to court. Believe it or not, the court took the position that through the company's generous practice over a period of years, it did indeed owe the employees their Thanksgiving turkeys! Small wonder they call them "gobblers"? — JIM GRIFFITH, PORT RICHEY, FLA.

DEAR JIM: Thanks for an interesting story. It serves to reinforce the fact that that which is legal is not necessarily moral or even fair.

DEAR ABBY: My boyfriend and I are both 32. We've been living together for 11 years (unmarried). We have two children, ages 10 and 3, and are expecting again in September. We are planning to marry in December and we'd like a church wedding with gown and veil, tuxedos and bridesmaids, etc. Family members have expressed disapproval, stating that after 11 years and three children, this would not be appropriate.

My question: What, in your opinion, would be an appropriate ceremony for two people in our situation? We would be handling the entire expense ourselves. Your immediate reply would be greatly appreciated. Thank you. — MAKING IT LEGAL

DEAR MAKING: I agree with your family. A quiet, less formal wedding with close friends and family members, followed by a luncheon or dinner for those who attended, would be my recommendation. Congratulations.

DEAR READERS: With summer here, and a record-breaking heat wave across the nation, this bulletin published by the Animal Protection Institute in Sacramento, Calif., is well worth space in my column:

On a hot summer day, the inside of a car heats very quickly. For example: On an 85-degree day, the temperature inside your car — with the windows slightly opened — will reach 120 degrees. On warmer days it will go even higher.

A dog's normal body temperature is 101.5 to 102.2 degrees Fahrenheit. A dog can withstand a body temperature of 107-108 degrees Fahrenheit for only a very short time before suffering irreparable brain damage — or even death. The closed car interferes with the dog's normal cooling process; that is, evaporation through panting.

Should your dog be overcome by heat exhaustion, immediate first aid can be given by immersing him or her in cold water until the body temperature is lowered.

DEAR ABBY: My grown son also forgets me on my birthday and Mother's Day. He started to forget right after he got married.

I came up with a good idea. I am going to send him a calendar around Christmas time with big red circles around Mother's Day, my birthday, and other important family dates such as his sister's birthday and the grandparents', too. I'll bet it works. — SENTIMENTAL MAMA IN NEW JERSEY

DEAR SENTIMENTAL: I hope so, but it wouldn't hurt to back your bet with a telephone call.

Hershiser gives Dodgers lift, cools Astros

From Wire Reports

LOS ANGELES — Orel Hershiser, 15-5, pitched a five-hitter to become the National League's second 15-game winner as Los Angeles defeated Houston 6-1. Before the game, Valenzuela, who injured his pitching shoulder Saturday, was placed on the 21-day disabled list.

"We're all just hoping and praying that Fernando will be back with us for the stretch and hopefully the playoffs," said Hershiser, who snapped the Astros' four-game winning streak.

Hershiser has seven complete games and is 3-0 against Houston this year. He lost his bid for a shutout when Buddy Bell hit an RBI single with two outs in the ninth. Chicago's Greg Maddux is the league's other 15-game winner.

Los Angeles ended a three-game losing streak and moved 4½ games in front of the Astros in the NL West. The San Francisco Giants started the day five games back.

The Dodgers scored three times in the third against Jim Deshaies, 7-8.

With one out, Mickey Hatcher singled and Kirk Gibson and Mike Marshall walked to load the bases. John Shelby singled home two runs and after a walk to Tracy Woodson, Rick Dempsey hit a sacrifice fly.

"I didn't want to give Kirk Gibson or Mike Marshall anything they could drive for a big homer early in the game," Deshaies said, "Going against Hershiser, you know it's probably going to be a low-scoring game. I just didn't make good pitches when I needed them."

Los Angeles made it 4-0 in the sixth on a throwing error by catcher Alex Trevino and added a run in the seventh when Hatcher's single scored Steve Sax.

Dempsey had an RBI double in the eighth.

Expos 2, Cards 0

MONTREAL — Dennis Martinez, 12-7, pitched a three-hitter for his fifth victory without a loss in July, not allowing a hit after Terry Pendleton's infield single with one out in the fourth. The Cardinals have been shut out 12 times this season, the most in the National League.

The right-hander, who pitched his fifth complete game and second shutout, has won eight times in his last nine decisions and had an earned run average of 1.63 in July.

Mets 2, Pirates 1

NEW YORK — Darryl Strawberry hit a two-run homer and Ron Darling pitched a six-hitter as New York its fifth straight and moved five games ahead of Pittsburgh.

Darling, 11-7, improved to 9-2 lifetime versus Pittsburgh and helped the Mets win for the seventh time in nine games against the Pirates this season.

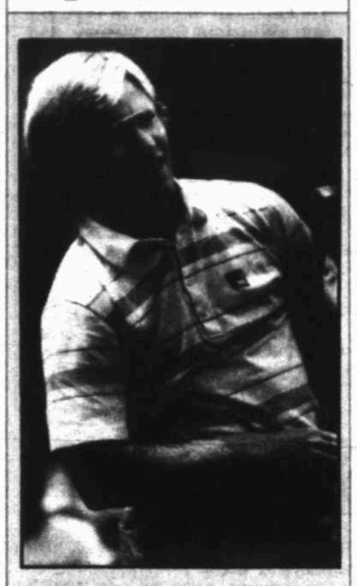

With two outs in the bottom of the first, Dave Magadan drew a two-out walk from Bob Walk, 11-6, and Strawberry followed with his league-leading 27th home run.

Phillies 6, Cubs 3

PHILADELPHIA — Mike Maddux, 3-1, allowed six hits in seven-plus innings and drove in a run while defeating his brother Greg as Philadelphia beat Chicago, although he needed relief help from Bruce Ruffin after allowing a pair of singles to start the eighth. Ruffin allowed Rafael Palmeiro's RBI single but finished up to earn his third save.

Scott Verplank
....a winner, at last

Scott Verplank ends 3 years of just hoping

From Wire Reports

GRAND BLANC, Mich. — Scott Verplank, breaking the stranglehold that hampered his game for three years, shot a final-round 66 Sunday to win the $700,000 Buick Open by two strokes over Doug Tewell.

Verplank, 24, finished at 20-under-par 268 to earn $126,000 for his first pro victory. It marked the fifth week in a row that a tournament was won by a previously winless pro.

The string started with Jim Benepe in the Western Open and continued when Tom Sieckmann won the Busch Classic, Blain McCallister won the Hardee's Classic and Mark Brooks captured last week's Greater Hartford Open.

Fred Couples had a final-round 65 to finish at 17-under 271 and Tim Norris had a 66 for 272.

Verplank started the final round tied for the lead with Steve Elkington and Howard Twitty and birdied the second, fifth and eighth holes, a pair of par-4s and a par-3, to turn at 17 under.

Verplank had two birdies and two clutch saves for par on the back nine. He was on the 490-yard, par-5 13th in two and lagged his 70-foot eagle try to within two feet. He made a 15-foot putt for birdie on the 322-yard, par-4 14th to go 20 under.

Verplank saved par with a 12-foot putt at No. 12, a short par-4, and blasted out of a bunker to within two feet of the cup to save par at the par-3 17th.

Verplank, a former NCAA and U.S. Amateur champion, joined the Tour after winning the Western Open. The Western Open victory earned him a two-year exemption, but he had to return to qualifying school last fall after finishing 173rd on the money list and losing his playing privileges.

Verplank hadn't finished higher than a tie for 15th this season and entered the Buick Open ranked 107th on the money list with $76,502.

Chi Chi sets mark

CONCORD, Mass. — Chi Chi Rodriguez survived a double bogey on the next-to-last hole to win the $300,000 Digital Senior PGA and set a senior tour record by taking the event for the third straight year.

Rodriguez, who had led by three or four strokes through most of the final round, finished with rounds of 68-65-69 for a 202 total, one stroke ahead of Bob Charles.

The left-handed Charles had two chances to tie or win the tournament on the final two holes. He missed a 15-foot birdie putt on the 17th and a 10-foot birdie try on the 18th.

Charles finished second with a final-round 67 for 203 and collected $26,000, making him the leading money-maker on the tour this year, ahead of Orville Moody, who did not play this week.

"He opened the door on 17," Charles said of Rodriguez's tee shot that landed in a water hazard. "I was surprised that he hit such a bad shot. I could have tied it up on 17 and again on 18.

"I pulled the 15-footer on 17 and pushed a 10-footer on 18. I had felt like I was playing for second place all day until that point."

WICHITA, Kan.— Midland pitcher Kurt Walker retired Wichita's last batter with a runner on third for an 11-10 Texas League victory over Wichita to earn his 11th save of the year.

Elsewhere, Arkansas beat Shreveport 8-5, San Antonio beat El Paso 2-1 and Tulsa beat Jackson 4-3.

Midland's C. L. Penigar scored three runs, had one RBI and three stolen bases to lead the Angels' effort. Penigar was 2-for-5 scored the game's first run on Lee Stevens' sacrifice fly in the first inning.

Midland starter Steve McGuire went 6 2-3 innings to get his sixth win against 12 losses. Wichita starter Terry Gilmore fell to 9-7 with the loss.

In Tulsa, Kevin Reimer's solo homer in the seventh inning snapped a 3-3 tie and was all the Drillers needed to beat Jackson.

Kevin Brown boosted his record to 9-9 with the win and recorded his third complete game of the season. Brian Givens, 5-11, took the loss.

The Arkansas Travelers had 14 hits in their 8-5 win over Shreveport, but had to fend off a ninth inning rally.

In Shreveport, the Captains got three runs in the ninth.

Ken Hill, 6-7, went 8 1-3 innings for the win. The loser was Dean Freeland, 8-9, who allowed 10 hits in just over six innings.

San Antonio edged El Paso 2-1 with two unearned eighth-inning runs that came home on consecutive squeeze bunts by Juan Bustabad and Miguel Santana.

It was the Missions' third straight victory.

Buddy McGirt is all gums as he celebrates one-round kayo victory over Howard Davis to retain his IBF title. NHL scouts were in the audience for the quickie kayo at New York.

McGirt turns out Davis' lights

NEW YORK (AP) — Buddy McGirt knocked out Howard Davis in the first round, retaining his International Boxing Federation junior welterweight title Sunday and almost certainly ending Davis' quest to turn Olympic gold into a world professional title.

McGirt, in his first title defense since winning the belt last February, set Davis up with a left hand, then finished him with a right 2 minutes, 45 seconds into the fight.

Davis failed in a third attempt to win a professional title, a feat accomplished by the other four 1976 U.S. Olympic boxing gold medalists.

"This is probably my last fight," the 32-year-old Davis said afterward.

For the 24-year-old McGirt, it is just the beginning.

Now McGirt takes on another Olympic gold medalist, 1984 featherweight champion Meldrick Taylor, on Sept. 3 at a site to be determined.

Davis came out in characteristic style, dancing to his left and throwing jabs. But Davis' punches were short of the mark as McGirt circled and stalked his opponent.

McGirt landed several punishing left hands to Davis' body before the finish. McGirt hit Davis with a right to the head that knocked him into the ropes near McGirt's corner, and the champion sent him to the canvas with a left.

Referee Joe Santarpia reached the count of 10 as Davis was rolling to his knees and trying to use the ropes to stand up.

McGirt jumped on the lower strand of the ropes facing the crowd at Madison Square Garden's Felt Forum and raised his hands in triumph as fans shouted "Buddy, Buddy, Buddy."

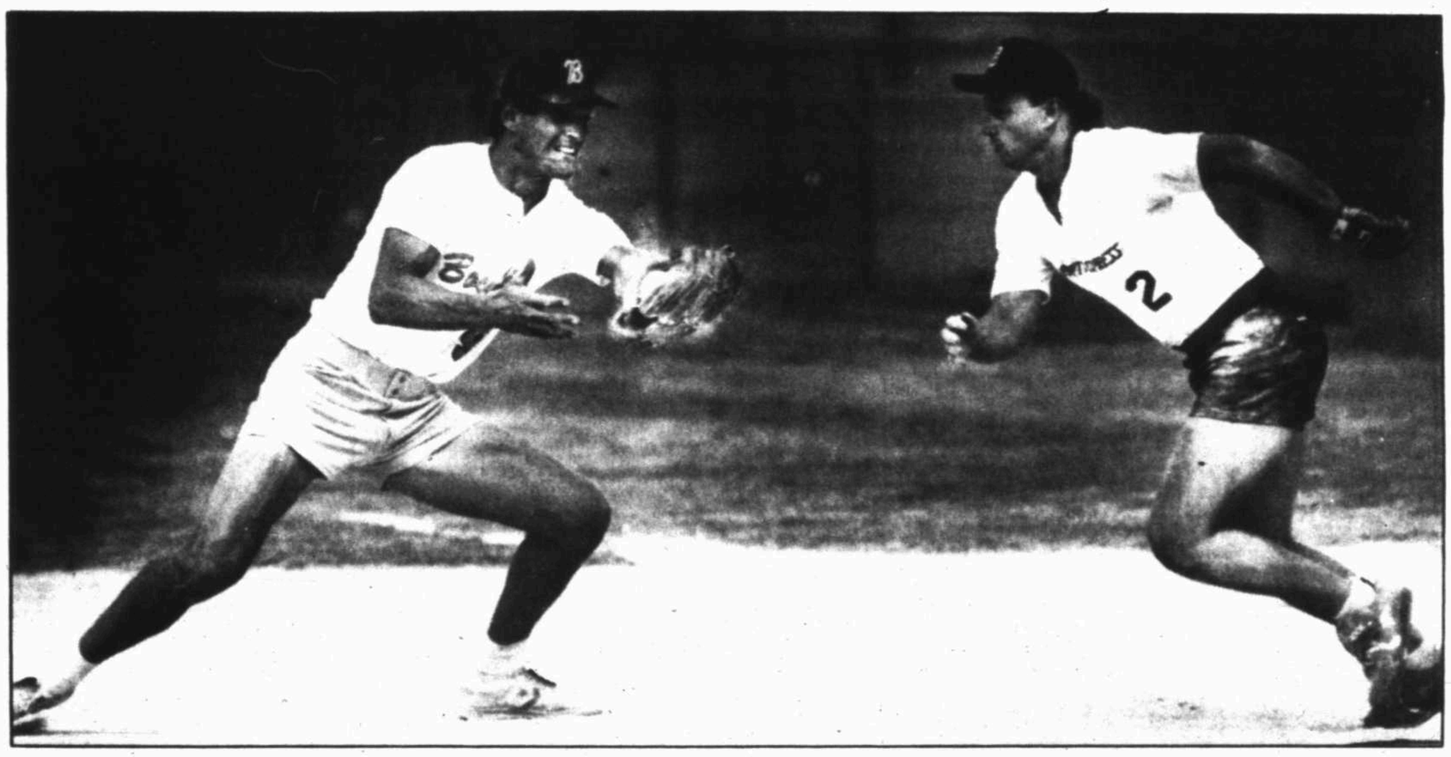

McGirt, of Brentwood, N.Y., was the crowd favorite although Davis also is from nearby Glen Cove, N.Y.

McGirt now faces Taylor, whom he was supposed to have fought last June 12.

McGirt won the IBF title when he stopped Frankie Warren in the 12th round in Corpus Christi, Texas, on Feb. 14.

McGirt then came down with tendonitis in his elbow and was unable to fight Taylor in June. When the fight was reset for Sunday, Taylor's handlers backed out because of a scheduling conflict.

"McGirt looked very strong," said Taylor, who was at ringside. "He's a counterpuncher. I'll be ready."

Boddicker helps Bosox stretch win streak

Associated Press

Mike Boddicker, 7-12, left a club streaking in one direction and joined one streaking in the other.

Boddicker, traded from Baltimore to Boston Friday, allowed eight hits over 7 1-3 innings to win his first game with Red Sox as Boston stretched its Fenway Park winning streak to 20 games Sunday with a 5-0 victory over the Milwaukee Brewers.

"It was great, I'm glad to be part of this family," Boddicker said.

Boston swept its fifth consecutive home series and improved to 17-1 since Joe Morgan was named manager after the All-Star break. Milwaukee, which has lost nine of its last 10, did not get a runner past second.

"It's great to watch Boddicker pitch," Boston manager Joe Morgan said. "I wouldn't want to be hitting against him. He has great control and can really mix them up."

Don August, 5-5, gave up six hits and three earned runs in seven innings.

Rich Gedman drove in three runs with a sacrifice fly and his third homer of the year.

Tigers 5, Rangers 1

DETROIT — Jack Morris won for the first time in five starts since June 27 and Dwayne Murphy had two hits and scored the winning run on his first day with the Tigers as Detroit won for the sixth time in seven games.

Morris, 8-11, allowed seven hits, struck out eight and walked two in his sixth complete game.

Matt Nokes snapped a 1-1 tie with an RBI double off Ed Vande Berg, 0-1, that scored Murphy, who had singled. Murphy earlier got his 1,000th major-league hit.

Yankees 6, Blue Jays 3

TORONTO — Rickey Henderson led off with a single to reach base in the first inning for the 13th consecutive game and had two other hits.

Rick Rhoden, 7-6, beat Toronto for the first time in five career starts. Dave Righetti got the final five outs for his 16th save.

New York scored four runs in the fourth on Don Mattingly's RBI double, run-scoring singles by Dave Winfield and Jack Clark and Joel Skinner's squeeze bunt. Clark made it 5-0 with another RBI single in the fifth.

Trophy Den C state winner

From Staff Reports

Led by Fred and Sammy Rodriquez, Odessa Trophy Den defeated Del Rio, 11-8, in the finals of the Amateur Softball Association's Men's State Class C tournament at Hogan Park Sunday.

Trophy Den emerged from a field of 114 teams and 225 games in competition that began Friday and ran non-stop until 2 a.m. Sunday before a respite was declared before the final games.

The tournament, drawing teams from 50 Texas cities, was the largest in state ASA history. Among the entries were 16 Midland teams.

Staubach same old Jolly Roger

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Former Dallas quarterback Roger Staubach said he liked being back on the field, and it showed.

Staubach completed 26 of 38 passes for 431 yards and three touchdowns Saturday night to lead his team of retired Cowboys to a 24-22 flag football victory over former Pittsburgh Steelers.

"It was a typical Pittsburgh and Dallas game," he said.

The game recalled the teams' matchups in Super Bowl X and XIII. Pittsburgh defeated the Cowboys 21-17 in January 1976 for the championship and again in January 1979 by a score of 35-31.

Pops soloes at Shrine

COOPERSTOWN, N.Y. (AP) — The Pittsburgh Pops appeared at the Hall of Fame on Sunday for a solo performance.

Willie "Pops" Stargell, the epitome of a team player and community leader, became the 200th player in baseball history to be enshrined in the Hall.

Surrounded by family, friends and fans, Stargell's golden plaque was unveiled on the steps of the National Baseball Library.

This was a day, however, for reading emotions instead of baseball history.

For Stargell and his family, it was all smiles and a few tears in the celebration of a gentleman who hit monster home runs.

AP Laserphoto

Willie Stargell ....joins the greats

ALSO taking part in the ceremonies were Commissioner Peter Ueberroth and several members of the Hall of Fame, including Ted Williams, Stan Musial, Ernie Banks, Willie McCovey and Ralph Kiner.

Prior to Stargell's induction, sportscaster Lindsey Nelson and sports columnist Jim Murray of the Los Angeles Times were given awards for their contributions to baseball.

"You are looking at one very proud individual," Stargell said, as the crowd, many wearing Pirate caps, cheered.

"There are so many people who have inspired me," Stargell said. "Baseball has afforded me the opportunity to rub shoulders with so many fine people. That has always been my bottom line. I am eternally grateful for these types of people in my life.

"This ball player here did not get to Cooperstown without a network of family, special friends, coaches, managers, teaches, you name."

IN 21 years with Pittsburgh, Stargell hit 475 home runs, had 1,540 runs batted in, hit .282 and helped the Pirates win the World Series title in 1971 and '79. In the '79 Series, Stargell hit .400 with three homers and was the MVP.

Last January, Stargell became the 17th player to be elected in the first year of eligibility. He was named on 352 of the 427 ballots returned to the Baseball Writers' Association. In order to be elected, a player must be named on 75 percent of the ballots, which this year was 321.

Jim Bunning, who won 100 games in each league and pitched a perfect game, fell four votes short with 317.

For the first time since 1956, the Veterans Committee failed to elect any of its candidates, passing up such names as Phil Rizzuto, Leo Durocher and Gil Hodges last March.

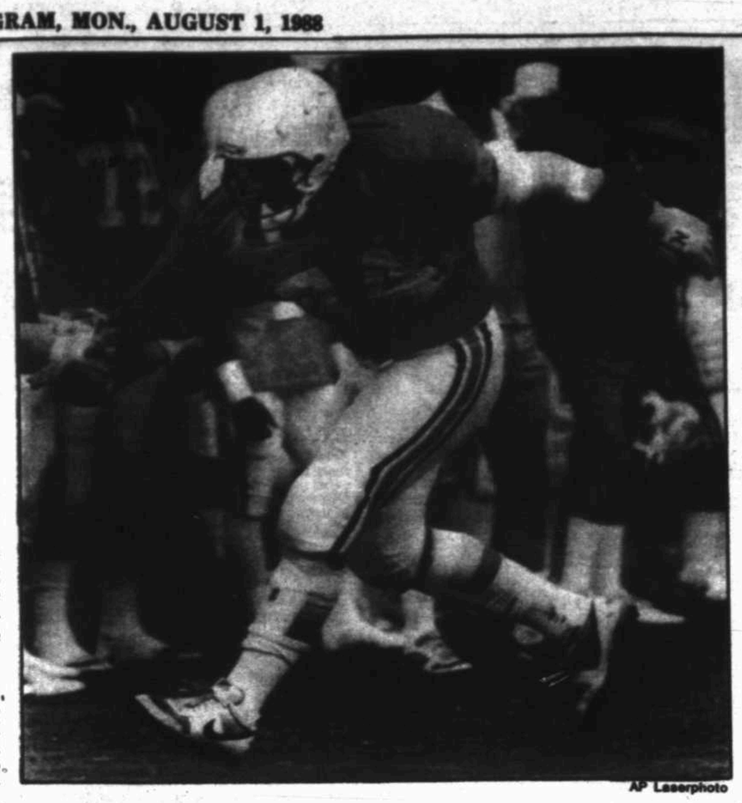

Next January, Johnny Bench and Carl Yastrzemski seem certain to follow Stargell into the Hall. It will be their first year of eligibility, too.

This year, nine members of the BBWAA returned signed but blank ballots. Several of the nine felt none of the candidates — including Stargell — had numbers worthy of the Hall of Fame.

But it seems Stargell's induction had more to do than with just homers, runs batted in and batting average. He was equally regarded for his qualities as a leader on the field and off, and was affectionately known as "Pops" to his younger Pirate teammates in the 1970s and early '80s.

AS A player, the powerful 6-foot-3 Stargell had a big bat and a big heart.

He is the only player to hit a ball out of Dodger Stadium, and he did it twice. Stargell cleared the right-field roof at the old, cavernous Forbes Field seven times and hit four balls into the upper deck in right field at Pittsburgh's Three Rivers Stadium.

Schrader started the final trip around the 2.66-mile Alabama International Motor Speedway oval trailing leader Dale Earnhardt, Geoff Bodine and Sterling Marlin.

Schrader, 33, finished about one car-length ahead of second-place Bodine, a teammate on the Hendrick Motorsports team. Earnhardt held on for third, followed by Rick Wilson, series point leader Rusty Wallace and Marlin.

Matthews labeled 'Best'

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ

SAN MARCOS, Texas (AP) — No one appreciates Houston Oilers offensive lineman Bruce Matthews more than assistant coach Kim Helton.

"Bruce Matthews is the best offensive lineman in the NFL, period," Helton said. "He can start also at left tackle, center, right guard and right tackle.

"He's big, smart and tough. He's wide open" full speed.

Yet, Matthews, who has survived two contract holdouts, four losing seasons and played every position on the line, never has made it to the Pro Bowl.

But after last season's breakthrough to a 9-6 season and playoff berth, Matthews is no longer disappointed at being ignored in Pro Bowl voting.

He'd rather go to the Super Bowl with his team than to the Pro Bowl alone.

"When I was younger, I always wanted to go to the Pro Bowl and I was disappointed when I didn't make it," Matthews said. "My first few years had a lot to do with just trying to survive. I had to do my job."

And it was a different job almost every year. Matthews settled in at left guard last season after ending his contract holdout on Nov. 6.

When the winning finally came, it surprised Matthews.

"I used to think that winning wouldn't be that big a deal," Matthews said. "But when we won last year, it really made a difference. The whole city got excited.

"Before, losing wasn't accepted but you didn't lose much sleep over it. The first few years more people (players) believed we were going to lose than that we'd win."

Matthews, the most versatile of the Oiler linemen, has been a Pro Bowl alternate twice but has never made the team.

He's never been at one position long enough to gain elite status, although he's performed well at each stop along with line.

"If I'd been at one position for five years, I'd be pretty good there," Matthews said. "But I've enjoyed the challenge of working out the kinks in my game at each position and seeing the hard work pay off.

"I feel kind of proud that that I've played all the different positions and I've done decently at all of them," he said.

"That's something to hang my hat on, but as time goes by I'd like to become a little more settled."

Matthews' severest test of versatility came in 1985 when he started at center, right guard and right tackle on successive weeks.

"If he's not in the Pro Bowl this year, he'll have to get hurt or it'll be an injustice," Helton said.

Dolphins blimey 49ers

Associated Press

The site was strange, but the game was typical.

Miami's 27-21 NFL exhibition victory over San Francisco at London had all the earmarks of an early preseason game — lots of penalties, erratic play and cameo performances by the stars.

Reserve quarterback Dave Archer scored on a 4-yard bootleg with 1:28 left Sunday to give the Dolphins the victory in the third annual "American Bowl" in rain-soaked Wembley Stadium.

Despite a driving rainstorm, the capacity crowd of 70,500 was in a festive mood. They cheered both teams and even applauded loudly for the cheerleaders.

Starting quarterbacks Dan Marino of Miami and Joe Montana of San Francisco each played the first quarter before being replaced.

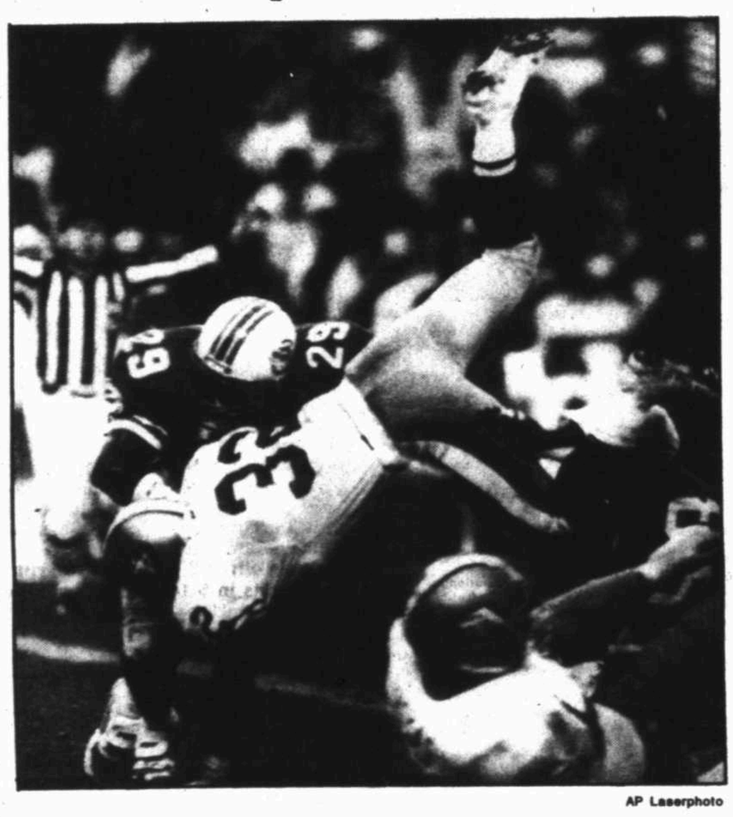

The exhibition season began Saturday with Cincinnati's 14-7 victory over the Los Angeles Rams in the Hall of Fame game at Canton, Ohio.

Backup quarterback Turk Schonert ran for one touchdown and passed for another. David Fulcher set up both scores with interceptions for the Bengals.

Rams coach John Robinson said he wasn't worried about losing an exhibition game. But the Bengals, coming off a 4-11 season, felt the win was important.

"Some people say it's only a preseason game," said Fulcher, a third-year safety from Arizona State. "But for us, it's the first game on the road back."

Schonert, who relieved starter Boomer Esiason in the second quarter, completed seven of 11 passes for 77 yards and one touchdown.

VIKINGS POLL

Minnesota coach Jerry Burns hasn't decided who should start at quarterback this season, but Vikings fans apparently have.

More than 89 percent of those surveyed by the St. Paul Pioneer Press Dispatch said Wade Wilson should be the starter.

Wilson, who has been a backup to Tommy Kramer the past eight years, received 1,870 votes to Kramer's 135, while third-stringer Rich Gannon was the top choice of 50 fans.

"Either the fans love me or I have a lot of relatives that I didn't know about," Wilson said.

"It's definitely flattering that the fans are behind me. But it really doesn't mean much because the final decision is up to the coaches. And I know that if I don't produce, the fans will want somebody else."

Kramer said the poll is meaningless.

"Everybody has favorites, and I guess I'm not one of them," he said. "But they don't make the decisions on the football team, so I'm not going to worry about it."

MOVING UP

An impressive performance in a recent scrimmage moved quarterback Tom Tupa up to No. 3 on the Phoenix Cardinals' depth chart.

Tupa, a third-round draft choice from Ohio State, completed six of 10 passes for 155 yards and two touchdowns in a Friday scrimmage against the Denver Broncos.

Cardinals coaches were particularly impressed with his last three completions — a 70-yard touchdown to free-agent Anthony Hardy, a 42-yarder to rookie Ernie Jones and a 26-yard scoring toss to Jones.

"He has a strong arm," offensive coordinator Jim Shofner said. "Tupa can throw the ball in the right place and hit receivers. That's what a good quarterback can do."

Shofner said Tupa has moved past second-year pro Sammy Garza on the team's depth chart. Two-time All-Pro Neil Lomax is the starter and 10-year veteran Cliff Stoudt is the backup.

INJURED COWBOYS

Starting right cornerback Ron Francis and reserve wide receiver Rod Barksdale may miss the Dallas Cowboys' regular-season opener because of injuries suffered in Saturday's intrasquad scrimmage.

Francis, a second-year player from Baylor, could be out six weeks because of a dislocated left shoulder he sustained while making a tackle on the goal line. Barksdale tore a ligament in his right leg and may need surgery.

The Cowboys open Sept. 4 at Pittsburgh.

SAN DIEGO — Dennis Rasmussen, 9-7, won for the seventh time in eight decisions for San Diego and Keith Moreland, Carmelo Martinez and Roberto Alomar each drove in two runs.

The Padres knocked out Tim Birtsas, 0-2, with a three-run first inning.

SAN FRANCISCO — Will Clark beat out an infield hit with the bases loaded and two outs in the 10th inning as San Francisco won its fifth straight game and swept a doubleheader.

In the first game, Kevin Mitchell hit a tie-breaking homer in the seventh inning for his third game-winning RBI in four games and Butler added a run-scoring double.

The Giants rallied with two outs in the 10th against Paul Assenmacher, 5-6, the Braves' third pitcher. Scott Garrelts, 3-5, who saved the first game, was the winner.

In the first game, Mitchell's 15th homer came off reliever Jose Alvarez, 3-5. Ernest Riles then singled, took second on a walk to Harry Spilman and scored on Butler's double.

TUESDAY, AUGUST 2, 1988

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Do things on a large scale and you could earn a big payoff. Remind those who count of your worth. This is an exciting time for love relationships and romance. Try to reduce parent-child tensions. Show your appreciation for someone who has always been there when you needed him. You must be both assertive and cooperative at work. Your interest in the exotic will grow.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: architect Pierre Charles L'Enfant, writer James Baldwin, actors Peter O'Toole and Carroll O'Connor, Nevada Sen. Paul Laxalt, movie star Myrna Loy.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Reassess an agreement before you sign it. A phone call could shed new light on an important matter. Lady Luck moves to your side of the bargaining table. A relationship changes.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Avoid becoming the victim of your own generosity. The time is right for you to undertake something you have been wanting to do for years. Mate and children offer their full support.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): There could be fireworks at your place of employment today. Adopt a low profile and you will emerge unscathed. A misunderstanding can be cleared up by checking certain notes. A financial situation improves.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You have the edge in a competition. Be confident, but do your homework, too. A good day to get better organized. Your productivity is up, along with your energy.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Be willing to go halfway to reach a business agreement. Your financial resources need to be beefed up. A second job is one idea. More important, do what you can to cut expenses.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Morning rumors are unreliable. Stick to facts and figures. Mate or close ally has the inside track on travel ideas. Work completed behind closed doors will prove profitable. Choose allies with care.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Do some comparison shopping before making a major purchase. Community activities will keep you on the go, possibly to the detriment of domestic harmony. Be sure to spend quality time with mate.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Financial backing comes from unexpected sources. Go slow; there could be strings attached. Invitations will result from the contacts you make today. Delays give you second thoughts about a relationship. Be candid.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): An unorthodox financial arrangement catches you completely off-guard. Consult experts to protect your reputation. People you meet through mate will court your favor.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Adopt a conservative approach to handling finances. Correct mistakes made in the recent past. Procrastination could prove expensive. You will be more efficient at work once you know where you stand.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Confusion reigns early today. Seek the details you must know to straighten things out. Be willing to admit mistakes. Expect news about a creative project. Your earning power grows. Plan ahead.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A flash of insight helps you make a decision about forming an important alliance. A close friend offers invaluable advice on this matter and a legal question.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A954 ♡763 ◇Q74 ♣KJ5
Partner opens the bidding with one heart. What do you respond?
A.—Playing five-card majors, you have an easy raise to two hearts—you have a maximum for that bid. If you are a four-card major addict, you have somewhat of a problem. We suggest you respond one spade, and wait to hear from partner.

Q.2—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A954 ♡763 ◇Q74 ♣KJ5
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 ♡	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—This is close. Partner has promised a six-card suit, and you have three-card support and prime values. However, you do not have a ruffing value. Still, we think your hand is just worth a raise to three hearts.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠874 ♡K8 ◇AQJ65 ♣K93
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♠	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—Don't raise partner's response with weak three-card support unless you have no other bid available. Here, a rebid of one no trump describes your hand exactly—a minimum with stoppers in the unbid suits and little support.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠874 ♡K8 ◇AQJ65 ♣K93
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
1 NT	Pass	2 ♡	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—Even though you have a known 5-3 spade fit on this auction, you still have a minimum opening bid with only one high card in partner's suits. For the moment, you can do no more than give preference to his first suit. Bid two spades.

Q.5—East-West vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠J3 ♡Void ◇QJ109754 ♣J842
As dealer, what action do you take?
A.—According to the Rule of Two and Three, for a non-vulnerable preempt you should expect to take within three tricks of your bid in your own hand, with your long suit as trumps. Your diamond suit almost surely will take five tricks, and you can count your four-card side suit as an additional trick. Bid three diamonds.

Q.6—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠K10632 ♡76 ◇KJ92 ♣62
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ◇	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 ♠	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—You have a minimum response, albeit a very good one because of your fit for partner's suit. Nevertheless, partner has shown a minimum opening bid and there is no reason to suppose that your combined holding will stretch to game. Pass.

CBS-TV introduces new logo

AP Laserphoto

The traditional CBS logo, left, was introduced in its latest form on "60 Minutes" Sunday night. The video logo appears with a swirling image, center, which evolves into the final logo, right.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — In an attempt to catch more viewers' eyes, CBS has put color, movement and depth in its own eye after nearly four decades.

The new eye logo, which made its debut during Sunday's "60 Minutes" broadcast, is blue and three-dimensional. Computer animation moves it's upper and lower crescents, and the logo is accompanied by a seven-note theme.

It still looks like the original, full-screen, black and white eye, which had been the network's symbol since the early 1950s.

"The eye is sacrosanct," Jerry Goldberg, West Coast vice president of advertising and promotion for the CBS Broadcast Group, said during the planning stages.

"We don't tamper with the shape of the eye. This has in its feeling and its final resolve a classic dignity. But that doesn't mean stodgy."

In the 1987-88 season ratings, CBS finished last behind NBC and ABC for the first time. The network has begun an aggressive advertising campaign in the hopes of boosting fall ratings using the theme of TV "you can feel."

NEW YORK (AP) — Eddie Murphy says his life is missing something, despite his tremendous success.

"I feel a void. There's not a total emptiness, but I feel something's missing," Murphy said in an interview published in this week's People magazine.

"No matter how much you accomplish, how much money you make, or how many cars or houses you have or how many people you make happy, life isn't perfect for anybody."

Is it romance that's missing?

"I'm in a cool place right now. I don't have someone who is my woman," said Murphy, 27. "I have a couple of friends. That's where I'm at right now."

He finds that he and another movie star, Sylvester Stallone, face similar problems.

"When I sit back with people like Stallone, we can trade stories," he said. "It's like the same identical things happen: the way power isolates you, and everybody tries to get close to you, and the weight of being the patriarch in your family. It's just a bunch of stuff."

NEW YORK (AP) — Martin Scorsese says he is troubled by the stir his forthcoming film, "The Last Temptation of Christ," is creating.

An alliance of conservative church groups has objected to the movie's release, with pickets, organized phone and mail protests, demonstrations and threats of a boycott.

"This film for me is like a prayer. It is my way of worshiping," Scorsese, whose films include "Raging Bull" and "The Color of Money," said, according to this week's People magazine.

The director told the magazine the idea of making the film touched the roots of his own spirituality and became an obsession that has dogged him throughout his career.

In response to the backlash, Scorsese offers his view of the movie's message: "It's about the last battle between God and Satan, and God wins."

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — The rumpled raincoat is coming back — not as a fashion trend, just the one worn by that tenacious detective from the 1970s series, "Colombo."

But like most of Hollywood, actor Peter Falk is awaiting the end of the scriptwriters' strike so work can resume on six new episodes.

"I don't know why people liked (that character) so much," Falk said during a recent interview at his home.

Falk

"I like people that are abstracted, that are preoccupied with something, so they're unaware what they look like," he said, referring to the character whose exploits endeared him to millions of TV viewers. "Without affectation, he's genuinely absorbed by what it is that makes the elevator light go on when you push the button."

While awaiting the resumption of production, Falk is co-starring as an amiable con man opposite Cyndi Lauper and Jeff Goldblum in the comedy movie "Vibes," which opens Friday.

• • •

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — Singer-songwriter John Stewart is still making money off the Monkees hit, "Daydream Believer," which he wrote two decades ago.

"It has kept me alive," Stewart said prior to a weekend engagement here.

Stewart's song sold 5 million copies and became his signature tune. It also inspired a popular remake by Anne Murray in 1980.

Survey finds economic slowdown

By KURT EICHENWALD
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The growth rate of the nation's economy slowed slightly in July, the National Association of Purchasing Management said in its monthly report, which is scheduled to be released Monday.

Growth in new orders remained healthy, expanding at its second-greatest seasonally adjusted rate since last October. The July growth was fueled by a torrid pace of export orders. However, the month's production rate was slightly below that of June, and vendor deliveries remained slow, but the rate of slowing abated somewhat.

Aided by temporary summer jobs, the employment rate increased for the second conseutive month. Rises in inventories and prices were also reported.

The report is a result of a survey of managers at more than 250 companies representing 21 industries. Economists consider its findings to be a preliminary indicator of the previous month's economic performance.

The association's composite index, reflecting July business conditions, declined to 59 percent, down from 59.3 percent in June, but still up significantly from 55.1 percent in May. An index above 50 percent indicates that the economy is expanding, while a reading below 50 percent implies a contraction.

July was the 24th consecutive month that the index, which is seasonally adjusted, exceeded 50 percent. The latest figures bring the year-to-date growth rate to 56.3 percent.

Robert J. Bretz, chairman of the association's business survey committee and director of materials management at Pitney Bowes Inc., said the latest results were encouraging.

"The economy entered the third quarter at the same strong pace as it left the second," he added. "The vigorous increase in new orders, undoubtedly fueled by the surge in export orders, is impressive and signals continued robust economic growth for the balance of the third quarter."

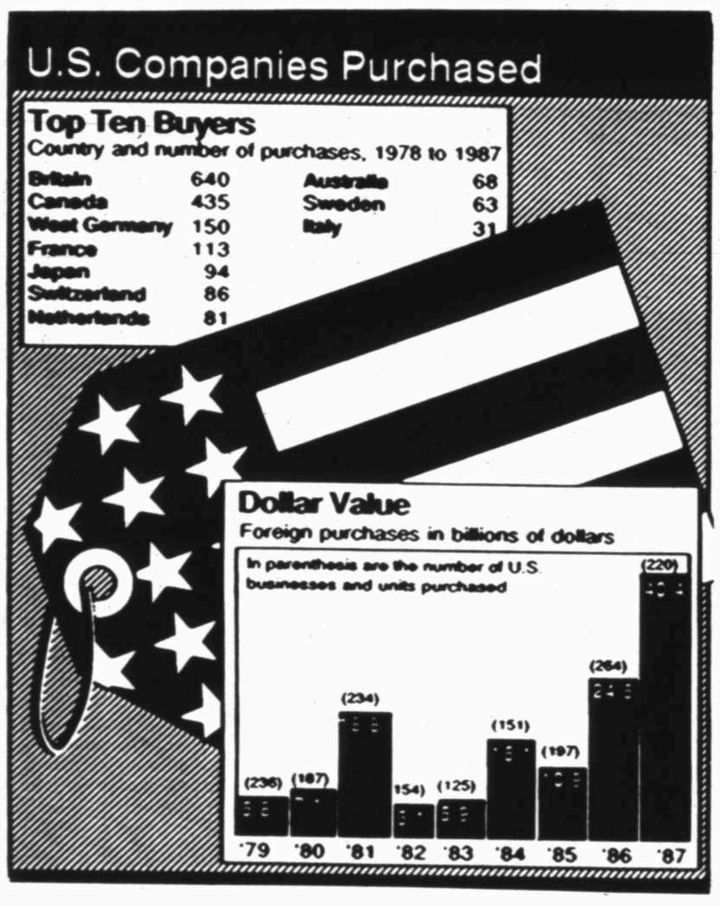

New orders expanded in July for the 19th consecutive month, but at a slightly lower rate than in the previous month, making it the second greatest seasonally adjusted rate since October. Thirty-one percent of the purchasers reported a jump in new orders, and 12 percent reported a decline while the rest reported that there was no change.

According to the report,. 39 percent of the purchasers cited higher exports, up from 38 percent in June, bringing the average for 1988 to 37.8 percent.

July also marked the 19th consecutive month in growth of production, but also at a lower rate than in June. Twenty-five percent of the purchasers reported better production for the month, 13 percent reported worse, and the rest said that production remained the same.

July vendor deliveries slowed, a sign of economic growth, for the 22d consecutive month. However, the slowing was significantly less than in June. Only 21 percent of the purchasers reported that their deliveries were slower in July, compared with 32 percent in June.

A Texas congressman seeks more disclosure of foreign ownership following a study that shows Great Britain to be the most prolific buyer of U.S. companies.

Legislator seeks to lift veil on foreign owners

WASHINGTON (AP) — Foreign investment in the United States is expected to accelerate dramatically this year, yet the true scope of that overseas ownership is hidden from public view, says a Texas congressman who is trying to lift the veil.

But Rep. John Bryant says the Reagan administration opposes his legislation because "they don't want to look like the folks that give away the store."

Bryant says a private study released last week showing foreign ownership in the United States more than tripled since 1980 adds weight to his argument that those holdings must be systematically cataloged.

The Dallas Democrat has legislation pending in the House that would require foreign owners to register their major U.S. assets with the Commerce Department, including business and industrial holdings, real estate and farm land.

Foreign ownership in the United States is "the most dramatic new phenomena" in the economy, yet policy makers remain in the dark about its extent, Bryant said.

He bolsters his argument with a few facts uncovered by the Congressional Economic Leadership Institute report — that the Justice Department and Federal Communications Commission are housed in buildings owned by foreign investors; that they own about 33 percent of prime commercial real estate in Washington, D.C., 46 percent in Los Angeles, and 39 percent in Houston.

The study said foreign investors own 10 percent of the U.S. manufacturing base, hold a majority interest in concrete and consumer electronics industries, and a significant portions in machine tools, chemicals and auto parts.

Nearly 3 million Americans are employed full or part-time as a result of foreign investment, with California, New York and Texas accounting for 26 percent of that employment, the study said.

"We need to know if foreign ownership is concentrating itself in key areas of our economy — energy, steel, banking; whether foreign ownership is gaining control of key sectors of the American economy," said Bryant, who believes data collection efforts now are haphazard.

He said it is "foolhardy" to believe foreign investors will avoid the United States if they must register their holdings because "every other country collects careful data" and it doesn't scare away business.

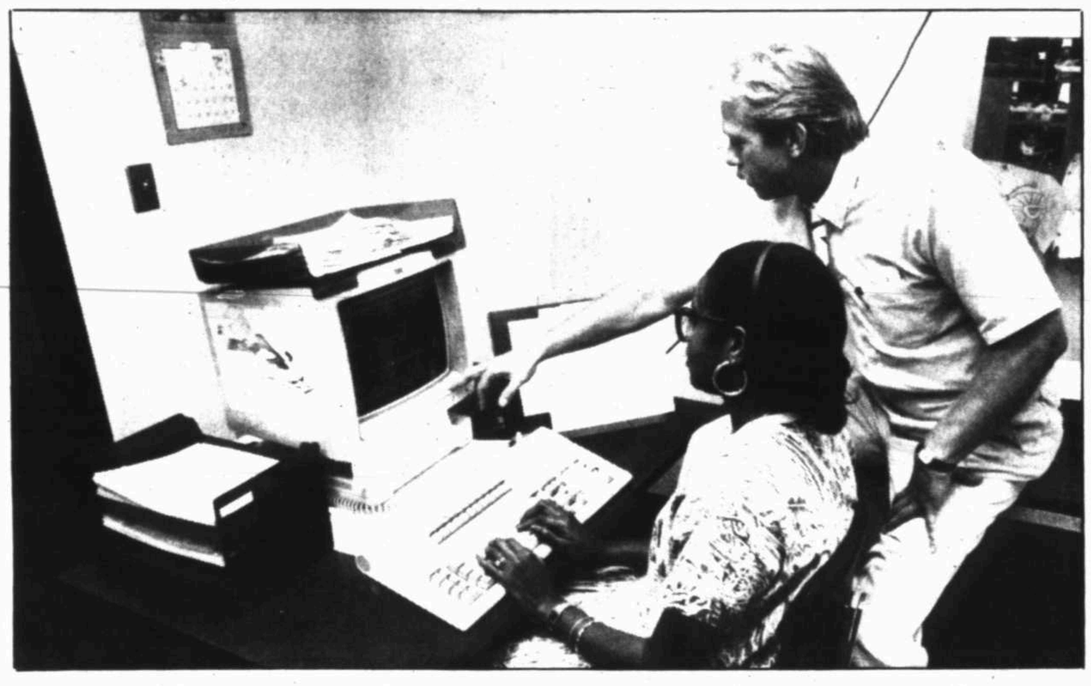

Nancy LeaMond, president of the institute, said: "In our innermost circle of trading partners, we are the only nation that swings the door open unconditionally to virtually every investment."

PI manager offers public databases, concerts

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant Business/Oil Editor

Doug Sehres/Reporter-Telegram

Andy Austin of Petroleum Information provides customers more than 30 information productions. Now he's also providing music lovers a concert by one of rock's hottest newcomers, Richard Marx.

Andy Austin has moved up quickly in the ranks of Petroleum Information Inc. starting as a reporter in Abilene and now serving as regional manager of data services for PI.

He says his job has given him an education in providing what the public wants in timely and accurate information and now he is endeavoring to bring the public what it wants in the form of timely entertainment.

He devotes much of his evenings and weekends to music: playing, singing and promoting concerts. Austin and his partner Terry Cunningham have formed StarCast Productions, which is bringing rock singer Richard Marx to Midland's Chaparral Center on Aug. 19.

The key to establishing a reputation as a promoter, Austin said, is to put on a good show, but something that is a little different based on the local market.

StarCast attracts local investors in promoting its concerts, so "the ticket proceeds stay in the local market and don't go to Houston, Dallas or somewhere," Austin said.

Austin's involvement in music dates back to his days in Abilene, where he got his start with PI as a reporter. Along with several of his friends in the oil business, Austin put together a small band who played "just to have a good time."

After several years in Abilene, where he rose to the position of district manager, Austin moved to Midland to work as assistant to pioneer oil scout Woody Adams. When Adams passed away in December 1984, Austin assumed his position as Midland regional manager.

To provide data on more than 300,000 wells on file in the Permian Basin, the Midland region of Petroleum Information, a Denver-based subsidiary of Dun & Bradstreet, relies on its network of reporters and stringers covering regulatory agencies throughout the Texas and New Mexico.

The regional staff numbers 25 today, compared to more than 60 during the boom, Austin said.

The Midland region cranks out more than 30 different information productions in various forms: hard copy, microfiche, magnetic tape and computer disks.

The product selection pales in comparison to the more than 1,500 different products and services offered by PI nationally, Austin said.

The company's massive national computer system enables an operator at any of PI's offices to access the records of any well or location in the country within seconds.

In addition, PI maintains internal proprietary data bases for most of the major oil companies and many larger independents.

"Many of the new product enhancements introduced by the company have been developed here because of the high standards the Permian Basin industry demands," Austin said.

Music is not only a hobby and avocation for the 37-year-old former Marine, but is great therapy as well. A songwriter with several compositions currently under consideration by Nashville publishing houses, Austin says sitting down and putting the day into words and music is the "best release" he has found.

Concert promotion, while an enjoyable hobby "isn't as glamorous as people think," he said. Putting together a show is a lot of detail work, spending evenings talking to road managers and weekends haggling with agents.

"What we have to do is get more performers and their people used to coming through West Texas when they tour," Austin said.

Oil off 10 cents in early trading

Crude oil futures were off slightly in early trading today, down 10 cents from Friday's close of $16.31. The lower prices are a marked contrast to this time last year when futures prices stood at $21.35 and the posted price of West Texas Intermediate at $20.00.

Oil industry attention will be focused on five leading OPEC oil ministers, meeting this week in Lausanne, Switzerland, but little change is expected in oil prices as a result of the oil price monitoring meeting.

Analyst say, however, that the fact of the meeting will tend to stabilize oil prices. The priority on the agenda of the oil price monitoring committee will be to study violations of OPEC production quotas. The United Arab Emirates the chief violator of those quotas, said last week that it fully supports production quotas.

The five-member committee cannot take official action on violations but will refer recommendations to the 13 members of OPEC. A strong recommendation to curb violations could push oil prices upward.

Dollar edges upward; Gold steady

LONDON (AP) — The dollar edged up against most major currencies in thin late-morning European trading today. Gold prices steadied.

Foreign exchange traders said good commercial orders and signs that central bank coordination was less cohesive than in recent months were helping to boost the dollar.

"Last week's central bank intervention was more haphazard than concerted," said one trader with a major Italian commercial bank in Rome.

Traders predicted the dollar would maintain its recent gains.

In London, the British pound rose to $1.7115, compared with $1.7105 Friday.

Other dollar rates at midmorning, compared with late Friday:
— 1.8780 West German marks, up from 1.8750
— 1.5645 Swiss francs, up from 1.5615
— 6.3258 French francs, up from 6.3202
— 2.1235 Dutch guilders, up from 2.1185
— 1,386.05 Italian lire, up from 1,377.75
— 1.2095 Canadian dollars, down from 1.2105

In Tokyo, where the business day ends as Europe's begins, the dollar rose 0.72 yen to a closing 133.25 yen. Later, in London, it was quoted at 133.05 yen.

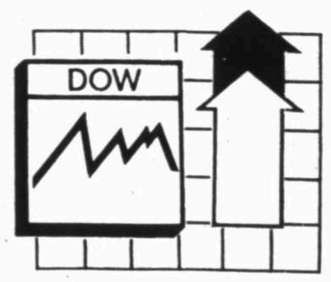

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $434.90 a troy ounce, compared with late Friday's $435.25. At midmorning Monday, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $436.40.

Zurich was closed for a Swiss national holiday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold fell 87 cents to close at a bid $436.70.

Silver was quoted in London Monday at a bid price of $6.88 a troy ounce, up from Friday's $6.81.

Stocks climb sharply in robust rally

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market climbed sharply Friday in a robust rally that surprised traders and lured institutional investors from the sidelines.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials closed at 2,128.73, up 46.40 points in its largest one-day advance since June 8, when the index rose 48.36. The Dow average's gain on the week totaled 67.74 points.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by about 15 to 4 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 1,178 issues up, 329 down and 470 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the NYSE came to 192.34 million shares, up from 154.57 million in the previous session. Nationwide, consolidated volume in NYSE-listed issues, including trading at regional exchanges and on the over-the-counter market, totaled 217.91 million shares.

As measured by Wilshire Associates' index of more than 5,000 actively traded stocks, the market gained $47.7 billion, or 1.80 percent, in value.

The NYSE index climbed 2.95 to 153.35.

Standard & Poor's index of 400 industrials gained 6.68 to 313.98, and S&P's 500-stock composite index was up 6.00 at 272.02.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Sun establishes Houston regional office

HOUSTON (AP) — Sun Exploration & Production Co. is establishing a regional headquarters in Houston for 220 employees to be moved from existing local offices and from offices in Corpus Christi, Longview and Lafayette, La.

Sun has leased 75,000-square-feet of office space in north Houston for the new headquarters to be opened in September. Company officials said only a few of the people to be moved into the facility are now based in Houston.

The Dallas company is being sold to its shareholders by the parent Sun Co., a Radnor, Pa., firm that plans to get out of the oil exploration and production business and concentrate on refining and marketing of petroleum products.

McMillian opposes bid from Bass group

NEW YORK (AP) — Macmillan Inc., the target of a pair of unsolicited takeover proposals, says its board has authorized management to evaluate the possibility of selling all or parts of the company and other options.

The publishing company said Friday that the board gave those instructions as it voted to oppose a tender offer from a group led by Texas investor Robert M. Bass that values the company at $1.9 billion. The board called the bid inadequate.

FCC must reconsider ruling on indeceny

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Communications Commission must reconsider an order that broadcasters can only air programs with "indecent" content from midnight to 6 a.m., a federal appeals court ruled.

The ruling Friday said the FCC failed to make a case for those specific hours, but — in a victory for the agency — affirmed its right to regulate programming to protect children.

The unanimous ruling by a three-judge panel of the U.S. Court of Appeals also upheld the commission's definition of indecent material on radio and television.

Texas firm fined for laundering money

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Treasury Department has fined a Texas currency dealer $3.01 million in the first civil penalty imposed in the department's efforts to crack down on money laundering along the border with Mexico.

The fine announced Friday, for violations of the Bank Secrecy Act, was levied on Oscar's Money Exchange of Hidalgo, Texas, and its owner, Oscar Ortiz Alvarez, and another man, Antonio Franco.

Franco's organization was accused of laundering $5.56 million through Oscar's Money Exchange.

Post-Eastern Kansas City turns to Braniff

By WILLIAM ROBBINS
New York Times News Service

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — To Robert Morris, the outlook seemed bleak, despite the hustle and bustle surrounding him on a ramp at the Kansas City International Airport.

On Aug. 31 much of that activity will be ended by sharp service cuts announced by Eastern Airlines.

Morris's job as a baggage handler will go, too.

"I've got a wife and four children to take care of," the 43-year-old worker said last week. "I'll be looking for another job, but it's going to be hard to find something equal to this."

Morris's depressed mood extended from the ramp to the airline's regional offices upstairs in terminal A, to some of the travelers lined up at ticket counters and even to independently employed Skycaps and taxi drivers.

Elsewhere in town, however, the mood was upbeat, although Kansas City will be hard hit by Eastern's service cuts.

The mood was brightened partly by an announcement last Monday from a competitor, Braniff Airlines, of plans for sharp service expansions here and by predictions of city officials and travel agents that the cutbacks, announced July 22, would be quickly offset by other airlines.

Braniff's move stirred optimism among several Kansas City officials and transportation experts, though several said that the end of the fare war between Braniff and Eastern would eventually mean increased costs.

"I think we are going to wind up with more flights than we ever had before," said Mayor Richard Berkley. "I think there will be others that will also help fill the void. And the employment gap will be virtually zero."

James Gentry, senior vice president of Creative Travel Consultants, a former Eastern sales executive, said: "I don't see the traveling public being inconvenienced except for the very short term. But in the longer term, travel is going to cost more."

The Eastern move will essentially pull the airline "back to its roots" in the East, said its president, Phil Bakes.

It will eliminate 4,000 jobs and reduce the line's daily flights to 1,085 from 1,225.

A key move was the elimination of Kansas City as a Western hub.

The Kansas City airport will lose 350 of its 400 Eastern jobs, second only to the company's Miami headquarters, which will lose 500 jobs.

The service cuts will hit this city the hardest of all, reducing daily Eastern flights serving Kansas City to 6 from 53.

Even Miami, which now has 99 flights, will lose only five.

The gloom at Terminal A was in sharp contrast to the ebullience of five years ago when Eastern established Kansas City as its Western hub and expanded its daily flights here to 34 from 3.

At one point it reached 67.

But last week, Joey O'Neill, the airline's manager of employment and selection, was here leading a mission of several counselors and outside consultants to explain the move and its effects to displaced workers and to help them find jobs elsewhere in the Eastern system or with other companies.

She said the impact would be softened by severance pay equaling 2 to 16 weeks' wages, depending on length of service, and by extensions of travel benefits that would provide air passes for trips in search of new jobs.

"Most of them are taking it pretty well," she said. "The overall attitude is quite good."

Ms. O'Neill said some workers displaced here would be able to fill Eastern jobs in other cities and some might displace workers with less seniority.

But those with low seniority, like Morris, who has been with Eastern for three and a half years, will not benefit from this.

Another official, David A. Fielding, regional vice president, reflected some of the frustration the cutback is generating.

"We worked very hard, and I think we succeeded in making the Western region the best-run and the most customer-oriented part of the system," he said.

"After that it's hard to look up and see Braniff poised to move in and pick up the benefits."

Though Kansas City, as a net result of the moves by its two most active airlines, will lose a total of 21 departures, flights added by Braniff will actually increase service to five cities: Cleveland, Dallas, Denver, Houston and Minneapolis.

Braniff has said it would add 350 jobs here, equaling Eastern's cut, but that first choice would got to former Braniff employees and there was no assurance any jobs would go to Eastern workers.

In any event, Morris said that a job with Braniff would offer no solution to losing his as a baggage handler.

The difference between $6.25 an hour for an equivalent job at Braniff and his own pay of more than $15 an hour was too great, he said.

SURVEY

Many members reported that their plants were closed for maintenance and employee vacations, which the report said could have contributed to the easing in the slowing of deliveries.

For the second consecutive month, employment also increased, although some of the rise could be explained by the large numbers of purchasers hiring temporary employees during summer vacations, the report said. Nineteen percent of the members reported higher employment, while 12 percent said that it was lower.

The seasonally adjusted rate of increase in July for inventories was the greatest since July 1984. Twenty-two percent of the purchasing managers said their inventories were higher, while 18 percent reported that they were lower.

Houston rebound draws home builders, investors

HOUSTON (AP) — Home builders and investors are moving into Houston's market, sweeping up lots for new subdivisions and bidding on apartment and condomimum complexes to establish themselves before business rebounds, industry observers say.

"The opportunities are always best at the start of the trend," said Ken Lokey, president of the Lokey Cos., a Houston firm that will start building houses in two to four Houston subdivisions in the next two to three months.

Although the company has built homes and apartments throughout the United States, this will be the first entry for the Lokey Cos. into its hometown market, Lokey said.

Many out-of-state investors are taking part in the market by buying up foreclosed property.

The investors have begun bidding for apartment projects and condominiums in the past three to six months, said Patrick O'Connor, editor of Houston Real Estate Trends.

A recent example was a savings and loan that put a property on the market for $10 million and received 35 offers within 10 days. The highest bid exceeded the asking price by 15 percent, O'Connor said.

Analysts expect a number of other home builders to join Lokey.

"We're working with three or four companies that are taking semi-serious looks at the market," said Houston housing analyst Mike Inselmann of American Metro Study. "But they are still skittish."

Inselmann declined to say what firms are considering coming to Houston, but sources in the real estate community say among considering a major presence are McKinney Homes, Ray Ellison Homes, Trendmaker, Fox and Jacobs, MDC Holdings, Doyle Wilson & Co. and a new company started by a former Nash Phillips/Copus executive.

Houston housing starts dropped from a high of about 31,000 in 1982 to about about 9,300 in 1985, 8,300 in 1986 and 7,700 last year, said Pam Minich of CDS Research.

"The decline in sales was devastating for home builders. About 150 companies operate in Houston today, compared to more than 1,000 five years ago.

"A lot of them went out of business," Ms. Minich said.

Most of the new builders entering the market indicate they plan to build houses costing more than $80,000 — an upscale market that has not been devastated by competition from the resale of foreclosed homes.

City benefits from better times for Halliburton

DUNCAN, Okla. (AP) — Halliburton Services officials say an improved oil field business environment is also having a positive impact on the local economy.

Gates McPhail III, Halliburton personnel manager in Duncan, said more than 500 full-time employees have been added to the company's manufacturing facilities in Duncan and Davis during the past year, increasing the total to more than 1,600.

McPhail said that along with about 175 temporary employees, "many of whom may eventually become full time," and another 100 college students who are working through the summer, that sets the total near 1,880 employees.

At the same time, "the shop load combined for both the Duncan and Davis manufacturing operations has nearly doubled since the first of the 1988 calendar year. Going back approximately one year, we find the shop load has in essence tripled in the last 12 months," he said.

"We're pleased with the way the year has gone," said A.A. "Al" Baker, president of Halliburton Services. "We will be thankful if the year continues on the same level as it is right now, with a slight increase of rigs toward the end of the year."

If the number of rigs in operation does increase, as is hoped, "we'll be well positioned for next year," Baker said.

A number of factors have affected the shop load and the increased employment at Halliburton's two manufacturing operations, both officials said.

"Even though the oil field service business is considerably better than at this time last year," McPhail said, "it has not taken any drastic upturn, nor has the increase in field activities been as much as many of us had hoped for.

"A great deal of the recent increased shop activity can be attributed to the fact that in the last four or five years our field locations have depleted their inventories to a great extent, so in essence what is occurring is that we are meeting those field and customer needs ... directly from the shop floor in many instances," he said.

Caution is the key word, and has been for months. Halliburton officials have said all along that they have viewed the improvements in the industry with "cautious optimism," and that caution is continuing.

Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III and a group headed by Elliot Richardson, the Association of Foreign Investors in America, claim Bryant's bill is anti-competitive.

Richardson testified before the Senate Commerce Committee that it would discourage foreign investment in the United States, resulting in higher U.S. interest rates and an economic slowdown.

Richardson, a former attorney general and commerce secretary, called the reporting requirements onerous. He believes sufficient data is already collected by 16 federal agencies and that investors would have to reveal business secrets.

The government would also be forced to set up a "substantial bureaucracy" to monitor, analyze and enforce the reporting requirements, Richardson testified.

In its study, the institute said an "unprecented transfer of American assets to foreign control is under way."

Since 1980, foreign direct investment in the United States expanded by more than 215 percent, while American investment abroad jumped by one-fifth that rate, the study said.

Foreign buyouts are expected to make up as much as 20 percent of U.S. acquisitions this year, up from 5 percent in 1987, said the study, which based its findings on the latest available data from the Commerce Department and other sources.

Pool of 'anti-Mafia' judges resigns

By MARY BETH SHERIDAN

ROME (AP) — As the nation's top Mafia investigator, Giovanni Falcone symbolized a new generation of brave, activist judges dedicated to ending the reign of organized crime in Sicily.

Now, he and eight fellow investigating magistrates have resigned, spurring questions about the depth of the government's commitment to fighting the Mafia. All nine had played a prominent role in Italy's largest Mafia trial.

In stepping down with the others on Saturday, Falcone said he wanted to be able to freely testify before a judicial panel looking into the government's anti-Mafia effort. He also suggested there was something profoundly wrong with the war on organized crime.

Following reports that members of Italy's dominant political party had in an unrelated case arranged payment of a ransom to underworld figures, the resignations shocked Italians and prompted criticism of the government.

"The judges and all the others that have risked their lives fighting the Mafia have felt increasingly abandoned by the state," the newspaper Corriere della Sera said in a front-page editorial on Sunday.

Falcone, 48, and the other eight resigning investigators had together comprised a special "anti-Mafia pool," which was formed after the 1983 assassination of the chief investigating magistrate in Palermo, Sicily's capital.

The team, led by Falcone, pushed Italian law to its limit, examining bank records of alleged Mafiosi and ordering sweeping arrests.

It was the dapper, mustachioed Falcone who persuaded mob figure Tommaso Buscetta to detail the structure of the Mafia and how it shipped heroin from Sicily to the United States, a breakthrough that led to the nation's huge organized crime trial.

The so-called maxi-trial ended in December with convictions of 338 Mafiosi, including 19 reputed members of the Cosa Nostra's leadership commission.

Since the trial, however, the anti-Mafia pool has been stymied by its new director, chaos in the police force and government indifference, according to prominent Sicilian prosecutor Paolo Borsellino.

Borsellino's declarations to journalists two weeks ago prompted President Francesco Cossiga to order investigations by the ministries of Justice and Interior and the Superior Council of Magistrates, which oversees judges.

As the judges' body began hearings in Rome on Saturday, Falcone and his colleagues submitted their resignations and asked for transfers.

"That which I had feared could happen unfortunately happened," Falcone wrote. "The investigations into the Mafia have been obstructed and (the anti-Mafia pool)...is now stalled."

Another investigator who resigned, Giuseppe Di Lello, charged: "The inattention of the government is palpable in the disorganization of the investigating offices."

Falcone did not elaborate on how or why the investigations may have slowed. But he said his views on prosecuting the Mafia "diverge radically" from those of the chief investigating magistrate, Antonino Meli.

Meli was appointed in February over the objections of Falcone and others, who said he had no experience in Mafia probes.

Borsellino, a former member of the anti-Mafia pool, told reporters that Meli had removed Falcone as chief of major anti-Mafia cases.

Meli also divided the anti-Mafia work load among all investigators, regardless of whether they were specialists, Borsellino said, reverting to the system followed before the pool was created.

"There have been serious attempts by the office of investigations and the prosecutor of the republic of Palermo to definitively dismantle the anti-Mafia pool," he said.

Meli responded: "The pool has not been destroyed, as Borsellino says, and if anything it has been enlarged with the addition of other judges."

Saturday's resignations prompted expressions of concern from Italian politicians about the state of the war on the Mafia.

"There is a problem of management and administration of men; of the types of judges; and it is more than a guess to think that the difficulties have been exacerbated by the inopportune handling of this government," said Virginio Rognoni of the dominant Christian Democratic party who heads the justice commission in the Chamber of Deputies.

Last Thursday, an investigating judge released a report saying some Christian Democrats helped gain the release of a kidnapped colleague in 1981 by arranging ransoms for the Neopolitan Mafia and Red Brigade leftist terrorists.

Among those who may have been involved was Antonio Gava, the current interior minister, the report said. Gava denied the charge.

"Today, we expected the resignation of Interior Minister Antonio Gava," the Communist newspaper L'Unita said in a front-page editorial Sunday headlined "Honest Men and an Arrogant Government."

Two more men arrested in shooting of journalist

CIUDAD JUAREZ, Mexico (AP) — Authorities have arrested two more men in connection with the shooting deaths of a Juarez journalist, her mother-in-law and friend.

Six men have now been arrested in the incident and charges have been filed against four.

Juarez Chief of Police Fernando Mota Allen said two men were arrested Friday in Reynosa, Mexico, across the border from McAllen. They have not been formally charged with the killings, but have been transferred to a Juarez jail.

XHLJ-TV anchorwoman Linda Bejarano, 28, her mother-in-law, Lucrecia Martinez de Gomez, and a family friend Carlos Alfonso Garcia were gunned down July 23 after men identifying themselves as federal police stopped their car east of downtown Juarez, across the border from El Paso.

Charged with murder are federal agent Joaquin Garcia Mendez and three men allegedly working for him as free-lance policemen, or madrinas: Roberto Gomez Silgueiro, Santos Robles and Noe Librado Zavala.

Besides murder, other charges include abuse of power, using maching guns permitted only in the army and acting without authority.

Federal District Judge Jose Librado Fuerte Chavez formally charged the four officers Friday. A trial date has not been set.

Charges remain pending against the additional two men arrested Friday. They have been identified as Felipe Garcia Martinez, 26, and Raul Salinas Garcia, 25. Mota said both men were carrying cards identifying them as Juarez city police, but said they weren't on his payroll.

The men's cards bore the signature of Juarez mayor Jaime Bermudez. Handwriting experts will be asked to determine the authenticity of the signature.

There is no death penalty in Mexico. Each man could be sentenced to 40 years in prison if convicted, authorities said.

Police said they shot into the car at least 47 times because they had mistaken the Chrysler New Yorker for another car allegedly carrying drug dealers.
