Alvin Riddle, U.S. Department of Agriculture's district conservationist for the U.S. Soil Conservation Service for Martin County, ponders what to do about the wide-spread flooding of farmland in his region.

Farmers pray 'rain, rain go away...'

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

STANTON — For now, there has been an ironic turnabout in how "precious water" is viewed in this farming community where rain usually is better than cash in the bank and sometimes is as rare as credit at the bank.

"They (farmers) used to lose sleep because it wouldn't rain," said Roy Lee Barnhill, a former Martin County cotton farmer who now is a professional photographer. "Now, they can't go to sleep because they fear it might rain."

The rare problem is too much water due to surprisingly high rainfalls since 1986 and a mysteriously rising water table that is causing the flooding of thousands of acres of farmland, eroding roads, and flooding about a half dozen farm houses in northeast Martin County.

Sulphur Springs Creek is flooding its brackish waters into cotton fields and is fueling salt-cedar shrubs, which thrives on salty soil and displaces cotton and grasses.

And runoff from summer rains from the Ackerly area north of here is flooding farmland in the Brown and Flower Grove farming areas of Martin County and the nearby Knott community area in Howard County.

Martin County Judge Bob Deavenport estimated that 5,000 acres of farmland in northeast Martin County are underwater. And approximately 50,000 acres have been taken out of cotton production due to the overland flooding and from water rising to the topsoil from the mysteriously-rising Ogallala Aquifer.

Damage to cropland, roads, houses, and other property is estimated at $25 million by Nestor Hernandez, Martin County executive director of the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service.

NCNB facility opens uneventfully

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

After a flurry of weekend activity, former First RepublicBank in Midland opened without a hitch for business as usual Monday with a new name — NCNB Texas National Bank.

It marks the third time in five years that a new name has appeared on the bank. But bank customers on Monday, showing no disturbance by the event, went about business as if nothing had happened, making deposits and withdrawals and loan payments. "We even had a number of new accounts opened," said Sam Baker, senior vice president and cashier, for the bank.

Baker said the bank customers nonchalant attitude toward the change was justified, because they had no reason to fear the change of ownership in the bank.

"Essentially it will be business as usual. Customers can continue to use their same checks — even if they have a three year supply. All accounts are still protected by the Federal Deposit Insurnce Corp., and lines of credit will continue to be honored," said Baker.

Baker added that management would also remain the same: "We have been assured by NCNB that local management will remain in tact, and that our jobs are secure. Except for the name change, customers will probably not see any difference at all."

Baker described the North Carolina bank as well-capitalized and extremely well-managed. He also said they were aggressive and focused toward the retail market in banking.

Matt Murphy, chairman of the former First RepublicBank in Midland, said he welcomed the opportunity to once again go out and solicit new business, saying that was something that was hard to do while First RepublicBank was in an unsettled position.

The march through various name changes — from First National Bank to RepublicBank First National Midland to First RepublicBank and finally to NCNB Texas National — has been an ordeal of ups and downs for the Midland bank that was once one of largest independent banks in the nation, the 10th largest bank in Texas.

The big bank status of First National was achieved by a huge influx of outside loans in 1980 that increased deposits 68 percent from $657 million to over $1.2 billion. There was jubilation in the ranks of First National Bank at its new found status, and in 1981 plans for a 40 story bank-office complex on 14 acres were announced.

But as energy and real estate loans began to sour in 1982 as a result of the downturn in the energy industry, the quiet withdrawal of these deposits by large despositers would finally lead to the downfall of the bank.

In September 1983 more than $300 million was withdrawn from the bank. Finally on October 14, 1983 (Black Friday), after repeated rumors of impending failure and runs on the bank, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. took control of First National, ending 93 years of hometown banking and resulting in the second largest bank failure in history.

The next week the bank opened as RepublicBank First National Midland, after RepublicBank Corp. beat out 14 other banks in bidding for the assets of First National. At the time RepublicBank Corp. had assets of $17.7 billion and deposits of $12.5 billion, and chairman James D. Berry made this statement: "We consider First National Bank to be a plum."

Then in May of 1987, the name on the bank was changed again when the stockholders of two Dallas-based bank holding companies, InterFirst Corp. and RepublicBank Corp. agreed to a merger. The new name for the merged banks was First RepublicBank, which became the largest banking corporation in the Southwest.

Then less than a year later First Republic announced that it was seeking assistance from the FDIC, efforts to prop up the bank with loans were unsuccessful leading to the purchase of the assets of the corporation by NCNB.

DALLAS (AP) — First RepublicBank Corp., once the largest bank holding company in Texas, filed for reorganization after being declared insolvent and being left with one out-of-state bank and its non-banking subsidiaries.

First RepublicBank officials said Monday that federal banking authorities had closed the holding company's 40 subsidiary banks in Texas after the close of business Friday, taking over their assets and assuming their liabilities.

On Saturday, First RepublicBank Corp. and IFRB Corp., its wholly owned subsidiary and intermediate holding company formed in last year's merger with InterFirst Corp., each filed a voluntary petition for Chapter 11 court protection from creditors.

County opts to keep its accounts open

By JULIE HILLRICHS

Midland County commissioners in emergency action Monday voted to retain all county funds in the new NCNB Texas National Bank of Midland, formerly First RepublicBank of Midland.

However, the vote hinges on NCNB's ability to honor a 1987 document signed between the county and the former Texas-owned institution.

Bill Mewhorter, who is retaining his vice president position at the new bank, assured commissioners that the NCNB would honor the county's contract in its present form.

Shultz joins ministers' call for democracy

GUATEMALA CITY (AP) — George P. Shultz and four Central American foreign ministers called for peace and democracy in the region in a watered-down declaration lacking the denunciation of Nicaragua the U.S. envoy had sought.

In fact, the document they issued Monday during the secretary of state's eight-hour stop did not even mention Nicaragua by name.

Only at a later news conference was the country named when Shultz expressed continued U.S. support for the Contra rebels, who after nearly 7 years of war reached a preliminary cease-fire accord in March with Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista government.

Shultz flew today to Buenos Aires, Argentina, the second stop of a nine-country tour of Latin America.

The final version of the declaration — signed by Shultz and the foreign ministers of El Salvador, Honduras, Guatemala and Costa Rica after a three-hour meeting — called for "peace, democracy, security, social justice and economic development" in the region.

In the statement, the parties "reaffirmed that authentic democracy require, among other requisites, political pluralism, freedom of association, freedom of the press, an impartial justice system that guarantees due process, an apolitical armed forces, an honest and open electoral system and respect for human and individual rights."

Sprinkler spews water on Wadley

By CHRIS VAN WAGENEN
Staff Writer

A freak accident at a residential home sent a flood of water down Wadley Avenue early today.

City officials said a frontyard sprinkling system had apparently malfunctioned during the night at 3615 W. Shandon Ave.

Bill Greathouse, the Wadley project engineer, said the water would not delay construction along the thoroughfare. "I'd say they (Texas Construction Co.) handled it pretty well from getting into the (center) base."

This morning Wadley construction workers built a small earthen levee at the intersection of Wadley Avenue and Whitney Drive to divert the water south from on-site construction.

Code Enforcement Administrator George Wolf said his department opted not to cite the owner under the city's nuisance water ordinance based on the fact that the runoff was accidental.

"You can't hold someone responsible for a broken pipe," said Wolf.

"This is going to happen occasionally. Anytime you have plumbing, lines are going to break," remarked Billy Tatsch, the city's manager of customer services.

Tatsch said he sent an employee out to the residence to determine how much water the sprinkler system emptied into the roadway.

Dallas policeman's killing fourth this year

■ Related story — 4B

DALLAS (AP) — A policeman gunned down in a shootout in which his suspected assailant was killed by other officers died this morning, bringing to four the number of Dallas policemen killed since January.

Officer Walter Williams, 47, was ambushed Monday night in the parking lot of an apartment complex as he investigated the wounding of a 17-year-old woman, said Capt. John Holt.

Williams, who was shot in the head, died at 8:06 a.m. CDT several hours after he was removed from life-support equipment, according to Lou Caudell, acting police chief. Two of his three children, his brother and his wife were with him, Caudell said.

Caudell said "to my understanding, all normal procedures were followed in the incident."

At a morning press conference at Methodist Hospital, Dr. Richard Dickerman said by the time the officer arrived at the hospital, "really, there was not much we could do. There was no surgery.

Crime banned on marshal's days off duty

HOTCHKISS, Colo. (AP) — Trustees of this tiny town, faced with a new state law that prohibits hiring part-time police officers, have ordered a ban on crime, accidents, emergencies and deaths on Mondays and Tuesdays.

Those are the marshal's days off.

"We are really a rather peaceful little town," Mayor John Neill said Monday, admitting that the ban is to call attention to the state law that took effect on July 1.

"One of the hardest things in the world is to get a bad law repealed, and we wanted to make the point that the new state law is kind of ridiculous."

The law prohibits communities from legally hiring part-time officers, as Hotchkiss has done for years to cover vacations and days off for full-time law officers.

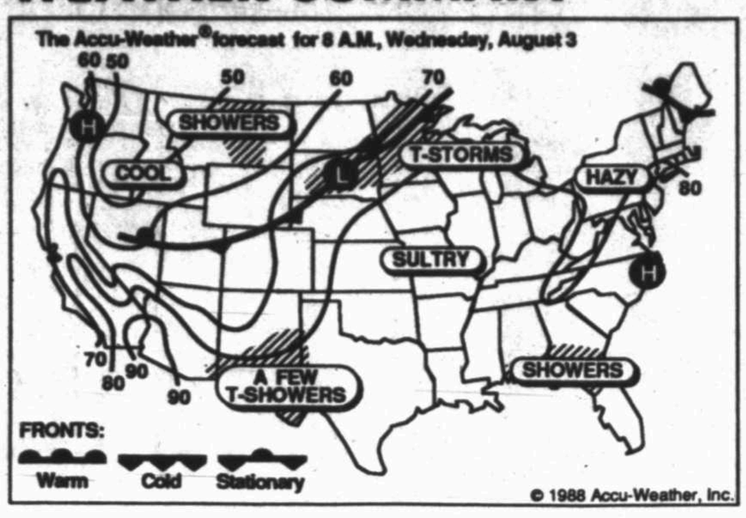
WEATHER SUMMARY



From Staff and Wire Reports

Midlanders can expect partly cloudy skies with a 30 percent chance of rain tonight. Locally heavy rain is possible, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport.

The low will be in the upper 60s and winds will be out of the southeast 5-15 mph.

Wednesday will see a continuation of partly cloudy skies and the chance of rain, mainly afternoon thunderstorms, decreasing to 20 percent. The high is expected to reach near 90 and winds will be southeasterly 10-15 mph.

Monday's high of 89 was 16 degrees cooler than the record high of 105 set for that date in 1944. The overnight low of 66 was five degrees warmer than the record low of 61 set for this date in 1973.

STATE

Thunderstorms are possible across all of Texas through tonight, but locally heavy storms are possible in Southwest Texas, forecasters say.

A combination of moist, unstable air from the Gulf of Mexico and an upper level disturbance over Southwest Texas combined to trigger showers and thunderstorms around the state.

Lows tonight will be mostly in the 70s, ranging from the 60s in the Big Bend mountains to the lower 80s along the coast.

Highs Wednesday will be mostly in the 90s, ranging upward to near or slightly above 100 degrees.

Widely scattered showers were reported at dawn today over the Edwards Plateau, Trans-Pecos and western portions of the Rio Grande plains.

And a few showers and thunderstorms are being report offshore in the coastal waters and along the upper Texas coast.

Early morning temperatures were mostly in the 70s, ranging from the 60s in the mountains of Southwest Texas to the lower 80s along the coast. Extremes ranged from 63 at Marfa in the Davis Mountains to 83 at Corpus Christi.

Other early morning temperatures around the state included 69 at Amarillo, 78 at Wichita Falls and Fort Worth, 77 at Waco, Austin and San Antonio, 76 at Houston, 79 at Brownsville, 73 at San Angelo, 72 at Lubbock, 66 at Midland and 71 at El Paso.

NATION

Strong thunderstorms swept from Michigan through South Dakota early today as other storms thundered through the South, bringing harsh winds and large hail. Temperatures remained high after a day in which numerous heat records were broken.

A tornado touched down briefly in a field just north of Nevis, Nev., Monday night. No damage or injuries were reported. Hail pummeled Holabird, S.D., and winds raced to 60 mph when thunderstorms moved through the area.

In northern Minnesota and southwest upper Michigan, strong winds accompanying thunderstorms damaged trees and power lines in many areas.

Thunderstorms were spotty early this morning over central and southeast Texas into parts of eastern Mississippi and western Alabama. Other isolated storms hit parts of northeast Colorado, northwest Arizona and southern Nevada, and from northern Georgia into south central South Carolina.

High temperatures continued to plague much of the nation early today, following Monday's scorcher in which heat records were broken in eight states.

"It's like a blast furnace out there," said Rich Naistat, a forecaster in Minneapolis.

FLOOD

"We've got an awful lot of cropland that's under water," Nestor said.

IN HINDSIGHT, an omen that forecast the flooding came in 1986, when Martin County and much of West Texas was virtually soaked with heavy rainfall — up to about 50 inches of annual rainfall in some areas where the norm is a third of that.

"I considered that was our 100-year (heavy) rain and that wouldn't come again," Deavenport said of the 1986 rains. "But we had more damage (by erosion to roads and croplands) in '87 than we did in '86, and now we are into our third year" of unseasonally heavy rains. Martin County has more than 122,000 acres of cotton on 302,000 acres of skip-row cotton cropland.

In September 1986, for example, more than 12 inches of rainfall was gauged at Lenorah in central Martin County. Seven inches of rain fell the next month.

And 1987, too, was a rainy year.

But 1988 looked like a drought year until late spring and in June and July, when the gully-washing rains came.

"We came into the drought pretty much from October 1987 through April of 1988," said Alvin Riddle, Martin County district conservationist for the USDA's Soil Conservation Service. "We had sandstorms day after day in the drought period."

Then came the rains, which farmers traditionally pray will fall at the right times according to their timetables. The rains fell but in quantities they didn't plan on.

"We've never had this high-intensity, short-duration rain," Riddle said. "And you can't control it. That's the same way with wind. When you've got wind blowing at 75 miles an hour, you're not going to control it."

Some county roads in northeast Martin County are under water.

"We've got houses under water. We've got fields that are highly eroded," he said. "There's water where it hasn't been in so many years."

Riddle said in cases that the water table has "risen to above the ground. And we don't know why."

BUT THERE ARE theories on why the water is rising.

"Some speculate that the decrease in irrigation in the High Plains (of Texas) has raised the water table," Riddle said. Irrigation has been cut back due to the high-energy cost of pumping the water. Martin County is at the "lower end" of the expansive Ogallala Aquifer.

Water percolates down the soil profile "until it hits impervious layers" of clay or rock. And the water seeks some place to go.

"When it hits the impervious layers, then the water flows laterally," Riddle said. "As it flows laterally, it rises to the surface. That's one theory."

Another theory is that the cotton land, which formerly was ranchland covered with grasses, weeds and mesquite, doesn't lose as much water by evaporation as does ranchland. Cotton is in season on plowed land from May to November, while rangeland is covered with vegetation year-round.

And just why Sulphur Springs Creek water is brackish, "We don't have any idea," Riddle said.

A now-flowing stream, Sulphur Springs Creek, which originates in New Mexico, is doing a rare thing — flooding. And historically, the creek has been mostly dry — until 1986 when the heavy rains started.

Ronnie Deatherage, a Martin County farmer and county commissioner, noted that the 1986 flooding of the creek washed out a man-made low-water crossing fitted with tin horns — metal culverts — about 25 miles northeast of Stanton.

"It just cleaned this plumb out in '86," said Deatherage. The crossing was rebuilt and was fitted with eight 60-inch tin horns to funnel creek water below the road. Despite that, rushing waters still flowed over the crossing this year.

Sulphur Springs Creek flows southeastwardly through Martin County, where it joins with Calf Creek and Buzzard Creek northeast of Stanton. From there, the stream feeds into Natural Dam Lake west of Big Spring. Along with waters from other tributaries, such as Mustang Draw, Midland Draw, Monahans Draw, Johnson Draw and Elbow Creek, the waters eventually flow into the Colorado River, which supplies water to the Spence Reservoir, which is operated by the Colorado River Municipal Water District. Midland is one of several West Texas cities and towns which buy water from the water district.

IN PONDERING what to do about the water problems, the Martin County Commissioners' Court is holding "brainstorming" sessions with commissioners from neighboring Howard and Dawson counties, with Colorado River Municipal Water District General Manager O.H. Ivie and staff, and with conservation and planning officials.

"It looks like rice paddies," Jerry Tschauner, planning director for the Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission at Midland International Airport, observed of flooded cotton fields in the Knott community.

"That's terrible," he said of the rising waters, which flooded some farm houses. "That's a shame."

Deavenport noted that Martin County officials and farmers "can't solve the problem by ourselves." But apparently no solution has been proposed except to let the waters subside if rains hold back and if the massive aquifer doesn't continue to rise on its south end.

So far, the waters are flowing their "natural" courses, which Deavenport noted have been altered somewhat by man's efforts to re-shape the Earth's surface with roads, farms, man-made water passes, terraces and retention dams.

"There's no easy solution," Deavenport said, "but if we don't get started, we're courting disaster."

POLICE

"There was no evidence of brain function" from the time Williams entered the emergency room at 10:30 p.m., Dickerman said, adding that the officer died of a single gunshot wound and there was no sign the bullet exited his skull.

"We explained to his wife that he had no brain function," said the doctor. "She was very appreciative of everything that was done. She was a very brave lady."

Dickerman said some members of Williams' church were also at the hospital this morning.

Newly appointed Dallas Police Chief Mack M. Vines was flying to Dallas from Cape Coral, Fla., this morning, a police spokesman said.

"It's a very emotional situation," Vines said today from Cape Coral, where he was police chief until last week.

"Unfortunately, I have had officers give the ultimate sacrifice in both cities where I've worked before. You just have to be with people and let them know you support them."

Vines said the message should be clear.

"If you assault or take the life of a police officer, there should be extremely severe punishment for that. It's just the way it goes," said Vines.

"There's tremendous sadness," said Caudell. "There's a real feeling for the family, for his friends, and for all the other officers, even those who didn't know him."

Caudell said there was "sadness, anger ... anger in generalized terms in a system that results in these kind of tragedies.

"I always thought he was a good police officer," he said of Williams, a five-year veteran of the department..

Williams joined the force at the age of 42, Caudell said.

"The younger guys called him 'grandpa' and stuff like that, but he liked it," Caudell said.

He said Williams had 20 years of experience in the U.S. Army, worked with a Dallas security force from 1980 to 1981 and with the security force at Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport from 1981 to 1983.

Caudell said Williams had a "relatively minor disciplinary action for technical type violations. He'd never had a complaint from a citizen that I'm aware of."

Caudell declined to elaborate on the disciplinary action.

The man shot numerous times by police at the apartment complex died at Parkland Memorial Hospital, Holt said. Police and hospital officials were not releasing his name.

The incident began around 10 p.m. Monday when police answered a second disturbance call at an apartment complex in a lower-income neighborhood in southwest Dallas, Holt said.

Williams and his partner, officer Terry Caldwell, had gone to the apartment where a man previously had complained of people "messing with" his cars, Holt said.

The man wasn't there, but his wife was, Holt said. While they were talking to the woman, the officers heard gunshots and started back downstairs to investigate, Holt said.

On the way, they encountered a wounded woman.

Willilams "continued downstairs to investigate the gunshots" while Caldwell "took the wounded woman and placed her in apartment 206 where she would be safe and he followed his partner downstairs," Holt said.

As Caldwell went downstairs, he heard more gunshots, Holt said.

Caldwell didn't see a suspect and called for more assistance.

COUNTY

"The documents that need to be executed will be done," he said.

County commissioners based Monday's emergency action on a 1969 Texas Attorney General's opinion, which states that local governments must seek a new depository if a bank holding public assets fails.

That opinion also prohibits public money from being deposited in a savings and loan institution or in an out-of-state bank.

County Attorney Mark Dettman said he expects the city of Midland, Midland Independent School District and Midland Junior College District to follow the county's lead in the next few days.

First RepublicBank Corp., formerly the state's largest bank-holding company, was declared insolvent Friday by the U.S. comptroller of the currency when the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. called in a $1 billion loan.

When the flagship bank in Dallas could not repay the obligation, authorities took over the bank and its subsidiaries across the state. The FDIC will contribute up to $4 billion in the changeover to NCNB of Charlotte, N.C.

As part of the bailout, the FDIC will have an 80 percent non-voting equity interest in the new bank. NCNB is contributing between $210 million and $240 million into the venture, accounting for the remaining 20 percent equity.

For five years, NCNB will have an exclusive option to buy the 80 percent of the bank owned by the FDIC.

"We didn't have a depository contract, and we didn't have an official depository," said Dettman, explaining his reasons for asking for the emergency meeting.

Changing depositories to another Midland bank would have cost the county in excess of $10,000, according to County Auditor Floyd Jarnagin.

"We wanted to continue to do business with the same bank," Dettman said. "We haven't, to my knowledge, had any problems with them at all. Besides, it's a real headache to change over all of our accounts, checks and everything else."

The county's $10 million cash and $2 million trust fund balance was backed by $14 million in U.S. securities pledged by First RepublicBank — a state requirement, according to Commissioner Win Brown.

The FDIC guarantees the county's deposits during the bank's transition period, which amounts to a minimum of 60 days, he said.

The county's depository contract with First RepublicBank was due to expire next February. Because the First RepublicBank contract is no longer valid, county commissioners weren't obligated to follow standard bidding procedures in selecting a new depository Monday, Dettman said.

However, commissioners will let bids next February in seeking a new long-term depository contract, he added.

BANK

"The bankruptcy filings by the holding companies do not affect their former banking operations in Texas," the statement said. "First Republic understands that such banking locations will open for business today as banking offices of a newly chartered bank named NCNB Texas National Bank."

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., which loaned Frist Republic $1 billion in March, called the note on Friday.

When the flagship bank could not repay the obligation, authorities took over the bank and its subsidiaries across the state and the FDIC, contributing up to $4 billion, awarded them to NCNB.

The Chapter 11 petitions, filed in a U.S. bankruptcy court for the Northern District of Texas, listed estimated assets of $535.7 million and liabilities of $788.2 million for First RepublicBank.

IFRB Corp. had estimated assets of $279.2 million and liabilities of $638.9 million, papers filed with the court said.

FirstRepublic Bank officials said estimated assets reflected in the petitions "may ultimately prove worthless, including certain intercompany accounts and sums receivable from former subsidiary banks."

Liabilities of the holding companies exclude liability to the FDIC for repayment of its $1 billion loan.

Other First RepublicBank subsidiaries — First RepublicBank Delaware, Republic Money Orders Inc. and First RepublicBank Services Corp. — will continue in business and serve customers without interruption, the statement said.

SHULTZ

The Sandinistas have been criticized for maintaining a political monopoly and suppressing dissent and talks with the Contras on forging a lasting peace have stalled.

Senate Republican leaders are working on legislation in Congress which would provide the Contras with $27 million in humanitarian aid and include an additional $20 million that would be set aside for possible new military assistance. President Reagan has indicated he supports such a bill.

The last congressional appropriation for military aid ran out in February. It has not been renewed, largely pending the outcome of a year-old regional peace plan that has so far proved ineffective.

Shultz said the Contras "are an important element, expressing a strong desire for freedom and democracy in Nicaragua and we continue to support them.

"I didn't come here basically to discuss that subject, and we didn't have very much discussion of it, although I certainly hope that we will extend funding for the Contras."

Monday's 10-paragraph document differed sharply from an initial, 10-page draft that harshly criticized Nicaragua as failing to live up to the peace plan the five Central American presidents signed Aug. 7, 1987.

The original draft, written shortly after Shultz's last visit to the four countries, was softened at the insistence of Guatemala and Costa Rica.

WATER

Wolf said a code enforcement officer who tracked the water at about 6 a.m. today, said it sounded like a bursting fire hydrant when she arrived on the scene to awaken the homeowner.

In recent weeks, the city has taken a tough posture on nuisance water, particularly among repeat offenders.

Although 300 residences, apartment complexes and shopping plazas have been cited under the ordinance, only seven cases have been brought before municipal court. Of that number, only three have requested a jury trial, according to Wolf.

Weather has been the primary culprit in construction delays. A total of 13 inches of rain has fell in the Wadley Watershed since the project began.

It is expected to be completed by Oct. 5.

U.S. sticks to Mideast peace talks, seeks explanation from king

NATION

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration is sticking to its formula for Arab-Israeli peace talks despite a decision by King Hussein of Jordan to cut his ties to the West Bank.

The U.S. plan calls for a mixed delegation of Jordanians and Palestinians to negotiate with Israel. Even before Hussein's statement Sunday abandoning the West Bank to the Palestine Liberation Organization, the United States had made little progress in trying to promote negotiations.

Assistant Secretary of State Richard W. Murphy, who was heading toward the Middle East, already was scheduled for talks in Egypt, Israel, Jordan and Syria. Now he has the added job of seeking an explanation from Hussein and to determine if prospects for peace talks are even dimmer.

In the meantime, the State Department asserted Monday there would be no immediate change in the U.S. approach to resolving the 40-year Arab-Israeli dispute.

"Our position on how to begin peace negotiations is unchanged, and we remain actively engaged," spokeswoman Phyllis Oakley said.

Hussein's declaration Sunday severed Jordan's "legislative and administrative links" to the Israeli-held West Bank that was ruled by Jordan between 1948 and 1967. Israel has controlled the territory and the Gaza Strip since winning a six-day war against an Egyptian-Jordanian-Syrian alliance in 1967. The population is predominantly Palestinian Arab.

The king's announcement apparently did not take U.S. officials by surprise.

"We had intimations," said one official, who spoke on condition of anonymity. "We did not have a text, but we had an idea in general."

Hussein made the speech after a series of moves in which Jordan seemed to be separating itself from the West Bank even though most of the Palestinians hold Jordanian citizenship and U.S. policy in the Mideast for 21 years has been based on the idea that the king wanted to recover the territory.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz, who made four trips to the region this year, pushed for an Israeli withdrawal while also informing Jordan that a total retreat was "not in the cards."

Murphy is due to fly to the Middle East after winding up talks today in Geneva, Switzerland, with Vladimir Polyakov, the senior Mideast expert in the Soviet Union's foreign ministry.

Department officials said last week that Murphy would like to talk to "responsible Palestinians" while he is in the Middle East, but that U.S. policy still prohibited any discussion with the PLO, whose covenant calls for the destruction of Israel as a Jewish state.

Hussein's detachment from the West Bank could be a blow to U.S. hopes to set up Arab-Israeli peace talks. The king long has supported publicly the unanimous decision of Arab governments that the PLO was the only legitimate representative of Palestinians. Still, the Reagan administration and its predecessors had tried to engage him in peace talks over the West Bank's future.

Shultz ran into a roadblock with both Hussein and Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir. Hussein insisted on a commitment in advance that Israel would give up the West Bank and Gaza. Shamir refused. The Israeli leader also opposed a peace conference in which the Soviet Union might have a chance to influence the outcome.

Despite the setbacks, the United States pursued Hussein as a force for moderation.

Election shadows Contra aid

WASHINGTON (AP) — Democratic senators are struggling to reach agreement on a new aid package for Nicaragua's Contra rebels that will keep pressure on the leftist Sandinista government in Managua and bridge the fall political season at home.

"We're getting ready to go into a highly political period," said Sen. David Boren, D-Okla., who is among a dozen senators scheduled to resume discussions today on the issue.

"I think it's important to get an agreed-on policy everyone can live by until we get a new president," Boren said.

The group was trying to find the magic combination of humanitarian and military aid and the timing and conditions for its release that could muster broad support among Senate Democrats as well as among Republicans, and defuse the issue as a political weapon.

Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., said he hoped an aid package could be assembled by midweek, when it likely would be attached to either a supplemental spending bill or a Defense Department money bill.

He said he then would take the Democratic plan to Senate Republican leader Bob Dole of Kansas and seek a bipartisan agreement. But he added: "We're not quite there yet."

Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., said a final aid plan "might include the opportunity for people to be able to have a vote (on military aid) under some circumstances, at some point in time."

Kerry and other anti-Contra Democrats made clear, however, that they wanted a high threshold for triggering any new arms shipments to the rebels.

Dole has proposed his own Contra aid package, which would send $27 million in new humanitarian aid to the rebels after a current humanitarian aid program ends Sept. 30.

The Dole plan also would set aside $20 million for new weapons for the rebels, but would release that money only if Congress authorized it in a separate vote.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said the Reagan administration is encouraged that Democrats are working on an aid proposal, and would cooperate "to get an acceptable plan."

The congressional dilemma over how to treat Nicaragua has been exacerbated in recent weeks by growing tensions in the region.

The leftist Sandinista government has cracked down harshly on internal opposition, arresting protesters and shutting down dissenting media outlets. At the same time, the Contras have grown more intransigent, installing a new, more hard-line political directorate.

Democrats were searching for an aid formula that would keep the Contras alive as an opposition force and strengthen their hand in negotiations with President Daniel Ortega's government, but would not provoke renewed hostilities or be perceived as violating a regional peace accord.

Yet unanswered are questions of how much aid to provide, whether it should include new weapons, who would have authority to order resumption of any arms aid, what conditions would trigger the flow of weapons and how the aid would be delivered.

The Democrats also are seeking to defuse an issue that has divided their conservative wing from the party majority. The issue now divides presidential nominee Michael Dukakis, who opposes Contra aid, from his running mate, Sen. Lloyd Bentsen of Texas, who has supported it consistently.

Although the Senate seemed likely to approve some sort of aid package, prospects for House passage of anything including a military component remained clouded.

Speaker Jim Wright said the House would wait to see what senators agree on before taking any action.

Latin American debt crisis affects exports from U.S.

Traditional U.S. export markets have suffered due to Latin America's debt crisis, according to the Inter-American Development Bank. U.S. exports account for a thid of all goods purchased by the region.

Between 1981 and 1985, the region had to reduce its merchandise imports from $103 billion to $63 billion, as it tightened its belt to meet its debt service payments.

The inability of the Latin American countries to maintain the inflow of essential imports thus aggravated the U.S. trade deficit with the world.

Coxsackie prisoners release last of hostage guards

COXSACKIE, N.Y. (AP) — An uprising at a maximum-security prison ended peacefully early today after 14 hours with inmates, who had complained of being harassed by officers, releasing the last four of their five hostage guards.

One guard at the state's Coxsackie Correctional Facility was seriously injured and the others were hospitalized.

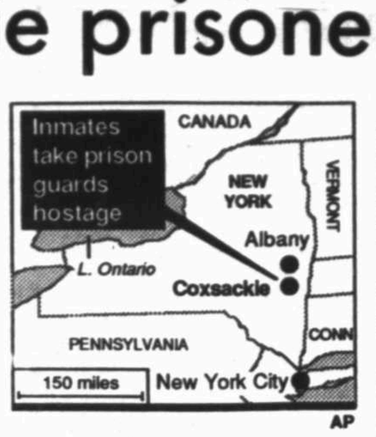
Officials wouldn't say if any of the inmates, who seized a housing unit for inmates with disciplinary problems, were hurt.

"The crisis has ended," Gov. Mario Cuomo said. "A potentially explosive confrontation has been defused without loss of life, or the surrender to any demands."

Inmates seized the guards in the housing unit at about 10:30 a.m. Monday during a recreation period, said James Flateau, a spokesman for the state Corrections Department.

The unit housed 32 inmates, but it was not known how man participated in the uprising, said Flateau.

Officials would not release details of the negotiations, which Flateau said were between about five inmates and prison Superintendent John Twomey, who was assisted by a department crisis intervention unit.



AP

They also refused to say what the inmates had demanded.

Earlier, Flateau had said that some of the inmates had complained about verbal harassment by guards. "Verbal harassment was the (complaint) they mentioned most often, food complaints, things like that," Flateau said. But he later said the harassment was not the major point being negotiated.

Outside the prison, which houses 951 inmates, guard Ralph Scott said inmates had been warning for weeks that there might be trouble. In the last two weeks, he said, prisoners' verbal and physical assaults on corrections officers had increased.

"Every so often you hear something might happen, and I had a feeling something was going to happen," Scott said.

At a news conference in Albany, 20 miles south of here, Cuomo said he did not think the generally crowded condition of New York state's prisons contributed to the disorder because "capacity is not a problem" at Coxsackie.

How the takeover occurred was being investigated, Flateau said.

He said the inmates controlled the console that operates their unit's gates and doors, but did not control the door to the rest of the prison.

Guard David Pratt, 31, of Coxsackie, was listed in serious condition with abdominal injuries, said Albany Medical Center spokeswoman Peggy Pitcher.

The three others released this morning — Lewis Bloom, 41, of Freehold; Douglas Roberts, 37, of Troy; and John Shipley, 32, of Scotia — were in good condition and were being treated for bruises, she said.

"They're banged up," she said.

A guard released Monday night, Warren Agostinoni, 28, of Cairo, was in fair condition with cuts and bruises, said Pitcher.

Earlier, the inmates had led the hostages to stand one at a time before a plexiglass window, giving prison officials their first look at the guards seized more than nine hours earlier.

Forty police officers, including some with rifles, blocked the entrance of the prison during the siege.

A 40-member force of specially trained guards known as the "Orange Crush" because of their bright orange uniforms, also was called to the scene.

During the uprising, all prisoners were confined to their cells, Flateau said. The lockdown continued this morning.

Windfall profits may prolong CFC production

WASHINGTON (AP) — The possibility of reaping $7 billion in windfall profits may lead chemical companies to prolong production of compounds that destroy the Earth's protective ozone shield, the Environmental Protection Agency fears.

To encourage those producers to find substitutes for ozone-destroying chlorofluorocarbon chemicals, the agency wants to charge fees equal to the windfall earnings the manufacturers could get as prices go up in the face of shortages of CFC compounds.

An international treaty calls for a 50 percent reduction in CFC production by 1998, and under EPA's expectations, the CFC shortages will enable producers to raise prices with no increase in production costs. The agency estimated the possible windfall at $1.8 billion to $7.2 billion. The quicker substitutes are adopted, the less the windfall.

The agency gave notice Monday it was considering other approaches: Auctions of the right to produce and direct regulation of certain manufacturing processes that might require other chemicals to be used instead.

An official of the Office of Management and Budget said OMB favored auctions and would press its view.

"We think the market ought to be allowed to do its work rather than a bunch of bureaucrats like me," said Robert K. Dawson, associate director of OMB. "What is the evidence that we as a federal government can allocate production equitably across firms?"

The notices accompanied the agency's final promulgation of quotas for CFC producers under the 1987 Montreal treaty requiring the cuts in CFC production.

EPA expects enough countries to ratify the Montreal treaty for it to take effect next Jan. 1. Eleven nations accounting for two-thirds of world production must ratify; six including the United States have done so.

The non-toxic, non-flammable and long-lived CFC compounds are used as refrigeration fluids, solvents and blowing agents to make plastic foams.

CFCs eventually reach the ozone layer 15 miles to 25 miles high that blocks the cancer-causing ultraviolet rays of the sun. There the CFCs destroy ozone.

Scientists blame CFCs for a roughly 2.5 percent decline in the ozone layer since about 1960. EPA says each percent means 43,000 more cases of skin cancer in the United States, currently about 500,000 a year, and the regulations should prevent 3.7 million early U.S. deaths among people living now and to be born before 2075.

The five U.S. companies producing CFC compounds are limited to their 1986 production during the 12 months starting next July 1, assuming the treaty takes effect Jan. 1. They will have to make a 20 percent cut in 1993, and an additional 30 percent cut in 1998.

Eileen Claussen, acting deputy assistant EPA administrator for air pollution, said EPA was not sure it had authority for either an auction or a fee. The agency concedes a fee might be considered a tax that Congress would have to enact.

"If (an auction) was judged to be illegal, we would have nothing. We wouldn't be in compliance with the Montreal protocol," she said.

Also, she said, "There is a concern about hoarding," with big companies like automakers able to outbid the thousands of small companies that use CFCs.

Dawson said OMB believed EPA had authority to conduct an auction. Neither agency disputes that in theory, an auction should capture all the windfall for the government because producers will bid for production rights up to the point where production doesn't meet their profit goals.

John Hoffman, project officer for the new regulations, said "our concern is the incentive producers might have for keeping an existing product in production," delaying the switch to harmless alternatives.

"While higher prices for CFCs and halons will stimulate some firms and industries to shift to alternate materials, institute or increase recycling, or produce other products, if substitutes are not readily available, many firms will have little choice but to continue to use these chemicals while paying a higher price," EPA's notice said.

The five U.S. manufacturers of CFCs are: Du Pont Co.; Allied-Signal Corp.; Pennwalt Corp.; Kaiser Chemicals Co.; and Racon Inc.

Ten other companies import the compounds.

The Du Pont Co. does not believe there will be a windfall because substitute compounds are being developed quickly, said Joe Steed, environmental manager for CFCs.

Burned house to be rebuilt for foster parents

CARBON HILL, Ala. (AP) — Will and Verba Maye Mayo escaped from a fire with their 11 foster children but their house was destroyed. Now, volunteers touched by the couple's open-door policy for foster children are coming to the family's aid.

They plan to start clearing land for a new house today.

Mrs. Mayo, the 65-year-old pastor of the Mecis Temple Church of God, and her husband, a retired coal miner in his 70s, have been foster parents to about 100 children over the years, including those who escaped from the burning house in this town about 45 miles northwest of Birmingham.

"So many people have been touched by their lives," said Joe Wood, who is helping coordinate plans for a new five-bedroom house for the Mayos and their foster children.

Mrs. Mayo and three other adults evacuated the children during Thursday's fire, but the heat and smoke kept her from going back to get her purse.

"They may catch me without a driver's license but that is all right," Mrs. Mayo said.

Russell Lyons, a Carbon Hill city council member and retired carpenter who will take part in the house-raising, said, "She deserves anything anybody can do for her."

On Monday, friends in this town of 2,500 people opened an account in the Bank of Carbon Hill with $65 to go toward building the house.

But Wood said a church has pledged the help of a dozen men for two weeks in the building work.

Wood said the Mayos had some insurance, "but not near enough."

Much labor and materials will be donated, but Wood said, "if we get out for $20,000 we'll be doing real good."

Unless the house can be put up in a month, the state Department of Human Resources might be forced to take the children away because of inadequate conditions of their temporary home in a nearby house of a relative of Mrs. Mayo.

"We're going to do our best to put it up in three weeks," said Wood.

He said he does not want to see the children — seven girls and four boys ranging from age six months to 11 years — taken from the Mayos.

"Six of those children are in one family and we don't want them to be separated," he said.

The Mayos, he said, have sent several foster children through college.

"They live a poor life in order to do it but they make something out of these children," Wood said.

Mrs. Mayo said the children are frightened at the prospect of leaving.

Technicians searching for shuttle fuel leak

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The launch team pressed ahead today with plans to test fire space shuttle Discovery's engines on Thursday while technicians searched for a fuel leak that could again delay the critical test.

The hydrogen leak developed in a launch pad service mast during a practice countdown Monday, but it was not until this morning that workers could gain access to the launch pad to try to isolate the source.

The pad was off limits for nearly a day until more than 400,000 gallons of liquid hydrogen and liquid oxygen propellant could be drained from Discovery's fuel tanks.

The leak is in the same ground support equipment where another hydrogen leak was discovered Friday. That leak halted the practice countdown for three days until it could be fixed.

When the second leak turned up Monday after the hydrogen tank had been filled to 67 percent of capacity, 254,000 gallons, the launch team bypassed the problem and concluded the countdown test.

Launch director Bob Sieck said that except for filling the hydrogen tank and running some tests on it, all test objectives were met and the team began a second countdown aimed at firing the shuttle's three main engines at 7:30 a.m. Thursday. Sieck said the countdown turned up no problems with the shuttle itself.

If the new leak cannot be repaired by Wednesday, NASA said it might have to again delay the test firing, which already has been postponed four times.

The 20-second ignition is to test modifications made to the engines and is considered crucial to certifying Discovery to make the first shuttle flight since Challenger exploded shortly after liftoff Jan. 28, 1986, killing the crew of seven.

Officials believe the practice countdown and firing delays, combined with an unresolved leak in the spaceship's steering thruster system, could slip the launch date from mid-September into October.

NASA has deferred action on the steering thruster leak until after the engine test. Then shuttle managers will determine whether to move Discovery from the launch pad to a hangar for repairs or if engineers should try to fix the leak on the pad by entering the shuttle's cargo bay and cutting a hole through the rear bulkhead to gain access.

Judge: Sunbathing in nude not covered in U.S. constitution

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Nude sunbathing on public beaches is not a constitutional right, according to a judge who refused to grant an injunction that would have reopened an environmentally protected area to naturists.

"While nudity is the privacy of one's own property and nudity in the context of artistic expression may be protected, it seems clear that nude sunbathing on a public beach is not a right of constitutional dimension," U.S. District Judge Ernest C. Torres wrote Monday.

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service closed a one-mile stretch of Moonstone Beach in South Kingstown from April 1 to Aug. 31. to protect two species of shore birds, the piping plover and the least tern.

The New England Naturist Association sued the federal government, claiming their constitutional rights were violated by the closure, which included a narrow strip of beach traditionally opened to nude sunbathers.

NOTICE OF PUBLIC HEARING ON TAX INCREASE

The Midland County Hospital District will hold a public hearing on a proposal to increase total tax revenues from properties on the tax roll in 1987 by 55.55 percent. Your individual taxes may increase or decrease, depending on the change in the taxable value of your property in relation to the change in the taxable value of all other property.

The public hearing will be held on August 11, 1988, 4:30 C.D.S.T., at Midland Memorial Hospital Board Room, 2200 W. Illinois, Midland, Texas 79701.

FORthe proposal: H. Eugene Abbott, Patricia Ann Estes, Margaret Purvis, Stephen L. Wiesenfeld, M.D.

AGAINST the proposal: None

PRESENT and not voting: None

ABSENT: Frank K. Cahoon, Sam Flores and James H. Ramsoure

(Names of all members of the governing body, showing how each voted on the proposal to consider the tax increase and, if one or more were absent, indicating the absences.)

The statement above shows the percentage increase the proposed rate represents over the effective tax rate that the unit published on July 29, 1988. The following table compares taxes on an average home in this taxing unit last year to taxes proposed on the average home this year. Again, your individual taxes may be higher or lower, depending on the taxable value of your property.

	Last Year	This Year
Average home value	$56,200	$52,900
General exemptions available (amount available on the average home, not including senior citizen's or disabled person's exemptions)	-0-	-0-
Average taxable value	$56,200	$52,900
Tax rate	$.0814	$.1358 (proposed)
Tax	$45.75	$71.84 (proposed)

Under this proposal taxes on the average home would increase by $26.09 or 57.02 percent compared with last year's taxes.

Comparing tax rates without adjusting for changes in property value, the tax rate would increase by $.0544 per $100 of taxable value or 66.8 percent compared to last year's tax rate. These tax rate figures are not adjusted for changes in the taxable value of property.

Dukakis calls for cycle of opportunity

Associated Press

Michael Dukakis continued efforts to win over former supporters of Jesse Jackson, affirming to a national civil-rights organization that government can help "transform the cycle of poverty into a ladder of opportunity."

President Reagan asserted the Democratic nominee for president would destroy that opportunity.

Reagan's remarks Monday on behalf of a Senate candidate provided the only Republican campaign salvo. Vice President George Bush, who remained at the White House while continuing to work on choosing a running mate, was making a foreign policy speech today in Chicago.

In a speech before the National Urban League in Detroit, Dukakis accused the Reagan administration of having "cramped ideals and limited ambitions" and spending huge amounts of money on wasteful projects rather than helping blacks and poor people.

"We have to transform the cycle of poverty into a ladder of opportunity, and that ladder must be sturdy and strong for all our citizens," he said.

"Some people say it can't be done," he said. "I say we haven't tried."

Reagan, speaking to a fund-raiser for Sen. William V. Roth, R-Del., took the Massachusetts governor to task for declaring in his nomination acceptance speech that "the Reagan era" is ending.

"Does he want to end the era of lower tax rates and higher real income for families, record numbers of jobs, low inflation and interest rates, steady growth and respect, not just lip-service for families?" Reagan asked.

He said that if the Democratic ticket is elected, "all of us may be picking up the pieces."

Dukakis reiterated his opposition to U.S. assistance to the Nicaraguan Contra rebels just as Democratic senators worked in Washington to draft a compromise package of new aid to the rebels.

"It's a failed and illegal policy and it ought to stop," Dukakis said before leaving Boston for Detroit.

But Dukakis insisted he wasn't bothered by running-mate Sen. Lloyd Bentsen's support of Contra aid.

The Texas senator spent most of Monday in private meetings in Washington in preparation for expected action this week on trade and plant-closing notification legislation.

Jackson on Monday remained in Chicago, where he spoke by telephone with New York Mayor Edward I. Koch as part of an effort to make peace at least long enough to help Dukakis win the election.

Koch criticized Jackson during the New York primary race, saying Jews would be "crazy" to vote for Jackson, who supports Palestinian self-determination.

"I hope to work in support of Dukakis and then we'll continue the ideological battle at another time," Koch said.

Jackson did his part locally for Dukakis, telling some 5,000 members of the American Postal Workers Union: "Bush believes government is a tool for private industry. Dukakis believes the government is a tool for public service."

In a continuation of a legal battle that flared last week, the Federal Election Commission asked an appeals court to side with its decision that the Dukakis-Bentsen campaign should get $46 million in funds despite Bentsen's re-election campaign for the Senate. Bentsen's challenger for the Senate seat and the Republican National Senatorial Committee contend the presidential and senatorial campaigns give Bentsen an unfair financial advantage.

Blazes still raging in Yellowstone

Associated Press

Fires fanned by gusty winds raged over thousands of acres in Yellowstone National Park, while firefighters mopped up a cigarette-ignited blaze in Idaho that officials said has cost $9 million.

Firefighters also were working to contain or control fires in Montana, Washington, Oregon and Utah.

Weather forecasters offered some hope by forecasting rain for today in Yellowstone. On Monday, winds estimated at 15 to 20 mph pushed the Shoshone fire closer to Yellowstone Lake, forest spokesman Larry Blade said. The fire grew by about 6,000 acres, to 19,100 acres.

The nearby south entrance to the park was closed again Monday, but officials hoped to reopen the gate today.

The Red fire, south of the Shoshone, grew Monday by about 5,000 acres, and Blade said it may soon merge with the Shoshone fire.

The wind helped instead of hindered firefighters at the 12,700-acre North Fork fire, as gusts pushed the blaze back into an already burned area and strengthened the line on the south flank.

"It was and still is putting up one big smoke column though," Blade said.

The Clover Mist fire in the northeast part of the park grew 5,700 acres since Saturday and has charred nearly 74,000 acres. Blade said strong winds pushed the fire closer to its eastern containment line

Throughout Yellowstone, the oldest national park, roughly 140,000 acres have been blackened since late June when lightning strikes opened the fire season a month earlier than usual.

East of Yellowstone, in the Bighorn National Forest, nearly 800 firefighters battled three fires. Fire Information Officer Dave Damron said the 1,800-acre Intermission fire was half-contained by Monday evening, with full containment expected by Thursday night and control by Friday evening.

The Wyoming Travel Commission opened a hot line Monday to answer tourists' questions about the fire at Yellowstone.

"The forest fires have certainly gained us national attention, but we are concerned that tourists planning to visit Yellowstone and the Cowboy State may change their plans," said commission director Gene Bryan.

In Idaho, firefighters in the Boise National Forest contained the 5,000-acre Willis Gulch fire Monday evening. But more than 1,100 firefighters continued mopping up. The blaze, which was started by a cigarette, has destroyed $7.5 million in timber and other resources and cost $1.5 milion to fight, officials said.

Forest officials said they expected to begin sending crews home today.

A beefed-up firefighting force worked through Monday night and nearly contained the pesky Rock Creek fire in southwestern Montana. Forest officials there also looked forward to a cooling trend and possible rains today.

About 200 firefighters joined another 630 people battling the blaze, which has burned about 3,200 acres in the Bitterroot National Forest and was more than 90 percent contained as of Monday night, said Jo Barnier, a fire information officer for the forest.

The additional manpower was used to add a night shift. Full containment was expected tonight. Winds 40 mph hampered firefighting efforts at Rock Creek on Monday, causing spot fires, she said.

A Texas man was charged Monday with failing to extinguish a campfire, which fire officials say ignited the blaze.

Firefighters contained a 1,500-acre brush fire in northern Utah.

City plans to stop sending homeless to hotels

Koch

NEW YORK (AP) — The city announced plans Monday to stop putting homeless families into hotels within two years, speeding up a previous five-year commitment.

The announcement by Mayor Edward I. Koch came during a congressional hearing to determine whether the city was living up to a promise to end the use of welfare hotels in exchange for Congress' continued funding for the hotels.

Congress is scheduled to vote Wednesday on whether to extend the program another year.

Some political leaders present at the hearing, including Rep. Bill Green, R-N.Y., said the proposal might be an effective political move but also might become an unkept promise.

William J. Grinker, commissioner of the city's Human Resources Administration, told the panel the "problem will not be solved, we will still have homelessness."

Under a plan developed earlier this year, the city said it would stop using the hotels by the end of fiscal year 1993. It was projected that 1,179 families would still be in hotels and 3,906 families would be in city operated transitional shelters by the end of fiscal year 1990.

Under the plan announced Monday, by the end of 1989, some 1991 families would be in hotels and 2,256 families in the transitional shelters. By the end of 1990, no families are expected to be in hotels and 3,534 would be in the shelters.

One of the plan's key components, Koch told the panel, is that "we will be providing 2,300 more Housing Authority and HPD (Department of Housing, Preservation and Development) apartments to homeless families over the next two years than we had anticipated under the original plan."

Koch noted that Congress had changed its regulations recently, allowing the city to give homeless families priority over families on waiting lists.

Survey: Some therapists sexually abused children

WASHINGTON (AP) — Children as young as 3 years old have been sexually abused by therapists, according to a survey by an American Psychological Association committee.

Kenneth S. Pope, a clinical psychologist in Los Angeles and chairman of the American Psychological Association's ethics committee, said Monday that the committee's recent survey of what he called "distinguished psychologists" nationwide disclosed 82 instances of sexual intimacy between therapists and minor patients.

"From the 90 who replied to the survey, 24 percent said they knew of instances where therapists abused minor patients," he said. "Five percent said they knew of hearsay accounts."

Of the 82 cases reported, he said, 56 percent of the victims were female and the rest were male.

The ages of the male victims ranged from 7 to 16, with a mean age of 12.5, he said. Among female victims, the ages ranged from 3 to 17, with a mean age of 13.75.

Pope said the survey results will be published next year.

The survey is the latest attempt by the mental health profession to examine itself and to purge its ranks of therapists who take advantage of their position to have sexual relations with patients.

A report published in the July issue of American Psychologist said studies have shown "therapist-patient sexual intimacy to be a major problem for all major mental health professions" despite the threat of multimillion-dollar malpractice suits, censure by the profession and, in some states, new laws that make such practices a felony.

"This practice (sexual intimacy with patients) causes deep and lasting harm both to the clients and to the integrity of the profession," said the report in the association journal. "The scope of the problem is extensive."

In a telephone interview, Pope said studies indicate that an average of one of every 10 male therapists has been involved in at least one incident of intimacy with a patient. He said a 1983 California study showed that of those therapists sexually intimate with patients, 80 percent are involved with more than one patient, indicating a pattern of exploitation.

Among female therapists, he said, the incidence of patient abuse is far less — about 1 percent to 3 percent.

It is not known how common such sexual exploitation is in other professions, said Pope, because no other professional group has made such an effort to study and correct the problem. But he said the APA has expanded its study to include the campuses and clinics where students are trained to become mental health workers and found that sexual abuse apparently is even more common there than in the patient-client arena.

He said anonymous surveys show 13 percent of psychology professors or clinical supervisors questioned admit to sexual intimacies with psychology students. Most of the victims are female, he said. One study showed that 25 percent of the women who have received doctorate of psychology degrees in the last six years admit to sleeping with their professors.

Pope said therapy patients are particularly vulnerable to sexual advances because during the course of treatment they often come to believe they are in love with their therapists.

"It is very frequently a normal part of therapy," he said. "But therapists are supposed to be trained to resist, no matter how seductive the patient becomes."

Are we becoming 'lost generation'?

Lost generation" is a term coined by Gertrude Stein during the 1920s, but it truly seems appropriate to today's Americans, who are oftentimes surprisingly ignorant of the world in which they live. Not long ago, without apology to Miss Stein, Gilbert M. Grosvenor, president of the National Geographic Society, whimsically pinned the label on those who scored so dismally on a geographical survey conducted by the society and the Gallup Organization.

While there certainly is nothing remotely funny about the fact Americans finished sixth among respondents from nine nations in a survey of geographical literacy, worse still is the sorry fact that Americans aged 18 to 24 finished dead last when their answers were compared to those of their counterparts.

The international survey queried 10,820 persons 18 or older in Canada, France, Great Britain, Italy, Japan, Mexico, Sweden, the United States, and West Germany. The respondents were asked to locate 13 countries, Central America, the Pacific Ocean, and the Persian Gulf on an unmarked world map. The Americans were wrong about half of the time. For example, 75 percent could not locate the Persian Gulf and 45 percent had no clue where Central America is. Only about 33 percent could find Vietnam and less than half were able to identify Great Britain, France, Japan, and South Africa. Some of them could not even pinpoint the United States.

A more comprehensive survey of Americans found that fewer than half of them know the Sandinistas and the Contras are fighting in Nicaragua; slightly more than half are aware of the Soviet Union's war with Afghanistan or that apartheid is the official policy of South Africa. A stunning 16 percent think the Soviet Union is a member of NATO while 10 percent believe the United States is in the Warsaw Pact.

Seventy percent of the Americans surveyed said the ability to read a map is absolutely essential in today's world, but more than a third of them are unable to do so.

These pathetic results show that American schools still have a long way to go in teaching basics before they regain the public's confidence. As usual, Education Secretary William Bennett cut to the heart of the matter when he conceded that geography is being neglected in the nation's classrooms and told the schools to get cracking. Until they do, this country will continue threatening to become a truly "lost" generation.

Stirrings of peace

Suddenly, a season of peace seems to be warming the world. The last few months have seen five bitter and protracted conflicts brought suddenly closer to peaceful resolution. In the Middle East, Asia, Africa and Central America, populations stunned and bleeding by endless regional war look up and hope.

Rarely have so many such wars seemed to be drawing to a close at once. Is the world doing something right? Or is the coincidence of peace as uncontrollable as some favorable conjunction of the planets? Though each conflict has collapsed for its own reasons, two common threads can be discerned among them.

One is the new Soviet foreign policy. Mikhail Gorbachev has ceased issuing blank checks to revolutionary regimes. Thus, Vietnam, having mismanaged its economy, is now willing at least to talk about withdrawing its garrison from Cambodia. The Sandinistas have been driven into negotiations with the Contras. Fidel Castro seems ready to recall Cuba's expeditionary force from Angola. The Soviet Union itself is pulling back from its military adventure in Afghanistan. Thus four of the five wars are susceptible to changes in Moscow.

The second thread starts in Washington. From Tennessee mules to Stinger missiles, America has provided critical military support to the Afghan resistance movements. The policy began under President Carter and was continued by President Reagan, with Congress insisting on an increased flow of aid.

The administration also deserves some credit for the prospect of a cease-fire between Iran and Iraq. And in Angola, Cambodia and Nicaragua, peace processes have also begun on terms close to those that Washington has long sought.

Since the Carter administration, America has sought the withdrawal of Cuba's troops from Angola and South Africa's from Namibia. These two goals at last seem within reach. In Cambodia, both America and China have supported a rebel coalition that includes the Khmer Rouge army of the mass murderer, Pol Pot. A process begun last week at Jakarta may one day lead to an acceptable outcome — withdrawal of Vietnamese troops and a successor government that excludes the Khmer Rouge.

In Nicaragua, the Reagan administration has sought an impossible goal, overthrow of the Sandinista government, and has consistently failed to pursue a diplomatic alternative to warfare by the Contras. Initiative therefore passed to Congress; its reluctance to fund the Contras put steam in the peace plan of President Arias of Costa Rica.

There's a third thread that deserves note: cooperation between Moscow and Washington. Both sides have supported Iraq. Moscow apparently leaned on Cuba to attend the Angola talks and on Vietnam to loosen its position on Cambodia.

In none of the five wars has peace been attained, and each case remains fragile. The Iraqis are still trying to improve their bargaining position on the battlefield. Even when Soviet troops are gone, Afghanistan faces internal chaos. But in all five cases, a serious process of negotiation has at least begun.

In countries where for years poison gas left soldiers gasping to death, as in Iran and Iraq, and land mines left a generation of one-legged children, as in Angola, now there is, finally, hope.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Tuesday, August 2, the 215th day of 1988. There are 151 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On August 2, 1876, frontiersman "Wild Bill" Hickok was shot from behind and killed while playing poker at a saloon in Deadwood, S.D. The man who shot Hickok, Jack McCall, was later hanged. (When he died, Hickok was clutching two aces and two eights — a combination now known as the "Dead Man's Hand.")

On this date:

In 1776, members of the Continental Congress began to attach their signatures to the Declaration of Independence.

In 1921, opera singer Enrico Caruso died in Naples, Italy.

In 1923, the 29th U.S. president, Warren G. Harding, died in San Francisco.

In 1927, President Calvin Coolidge issued a statement to reporters: "I do not choose to run for president in 1928."

Forest still center of timber debate

WASHINGTON — When Florian Sever and his co-workers went on strike against an Alaskan pulp mill two years ago, Sever used his spare time to expose what he saw as waste and injustice in the Alaskan timber industry.

Jack Anderson

In letters to newspapers, on television talk shows and in a Capitol Hill hearing room, Sever told this story: that the Alaskan Pulp Corp. exploited its workers and broke the local union, all the while getting federal aid to help keep the state's timber business afloat.

The strike eventually ended and the employees went back to work — all but Sever. The Alaskan Pulp Corp. told him he no longer had a job.

Now, a congressional subcommittee chaired by Rep. Sam Gejdenson, D-Conn., is investigating the possibility that Sever lost his job because he exercised his right to testify before Congress. Officials at the Alaskan Pulp Corp. deny it.

Sever's case sounds a personal note in a larger controversy — the use of federal subsidies to prop up private timber cutting in the Tongass National Forest in Alaska. Two companies, Alaskan Pulp and Louisiana Pacific, dominate the industry in southeast Alaska.

In 1980, Congress declared a large part of the Tongass National Forest a wilderness area, putting it off limits to timber cutting. At the same time, Congress established the Tongass Timber Supply Fund to make sure the wilderness designation did not put the timber companies out of business and the workers out of jobs. The U.S. Forest Service uses the fund primarily to build access roads to legal cutting areas. Congress mandated that the Forest Service must spend at least $40 million a year to make 4.5 billion board feet of timber per decade available to the companies, regardless of the drop in market demand.

But Sever claimed the company shut out an intended beneficiary of the Tongass subsidy — the workers. In May 1987, testifying before the House Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, Sever charged that Alaskan Pulp had persuaded the union to accept wage and benefit concessions so that the company could stay competitive. But he said the company reneged on a promise to compensate the workers for their sacrifice when business picked up.

Sever, a negotiator for the United Paperworkers International Local 962, called for elimination of the federal subsidy in the Tongass National Forest.

Sever recently told congressional investigators that the union thought the federal subsidy created a monopoly for a few companies and that repeal of the subsidy "would be the key to unlocking an open job market in southeast Alaska."

By the time Sever testified before Congress last year, the striking Alaskan Pulp employees had voted to disband their union. Sever then sent a letter to Alaskan Pulp requesting his job back. The company told him no.

National Labor Relations Board examiner, Jeanette Leino, investigated charges of unfair labor practices at Alaskan Pulp. She recently told a house subcommittee that she believed Sever's congressional testimony cost him his job. "I was absolutely shocked," Leino said. "To me, it's incomprehensible that you could be fired for writing letters to the editor or testifying before Congress."

Frank Roppel, executive vice president of Alaskan Pulp, told our associate, Scott Sleek, that Sever was not rehired because the company thought he found another permanent job. But he added that the company did not want Sever back on the payroll because of statements he had made, particularly a scathing attack on the company in a letter to local newspapers. The letter was never published, but Sever sent a copy to the company.

Sever is not the only one critical of the Tongass subsidy. The General Accounting Office reported in April that the program grinds on in spite of the declining demand for timber. The GAO said the Forest Service spent millions of dollars to make timber available that no one wanted to cut. Environmentalists claim that the subsidy has led to unnecessary cutting. Supporters of the subsidy maintain that it guarantees jobs and that the timber market will rebound.

Rep. Robert Mrazek, D-N.Y., has introduced a reform bill which would make the subsidy pass annual scrutiny by Congress and would tie it to the market demand.

TOXIC TRASH — In its haste to get rid of 250,000 tons of incinerator ash, the city of Philadelphia stepped over the Environmental Protection Agency.

Philadelphia arranged to dump the ash in Panama for use as a road bed through a wetlands area. But the inspector general of the EPA decided that the ash contained high levels of lead and cadmium, as well as other heavy metals and toxic chemicals. The EPA feared that significant amounts of hazardous waste would wash into the wetlands and endanger the wildlife and perhaps end up in the food chain.

But Philadelphia officials overruled the EPA. They said the EPA tests conflicted with tests done by the city and that the ash was not originally subject to EPA regulations, so the shipment was legal. The EPA is so convinced of the danger of the ash that it has offered technical assistance to any country that accepts Philadelphia's ash.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

GOP has something to say about Demos

My sharp sense of fair play led me to the conclusion that the Republicans needed a forum after all the grief they caught from the Democrats in Atlanta.

Grizzard

So, I phoned some of my Republican friends and told them they could say anything they wanted to about the Democrats, and, if it made any sense whatsoever, I'd put it in the paper.

"Does it have to be true?" asked one of the individuals I phoned.

"Of course not," I answered. "Start mixing truth with politics and you've got a real mess on your hands."

What follows are a few of the conversations with Republican friends:

ARTHUR VAN LANDINGHAM III, advertising executive:

"Glad you called," he began. "I've been working on a campaign slogan for the Republicans."

"What do you have so far?" I asked.

"'We'll beat the do-do out of Ducar-cass.' What do you think?"

"Got anything else?" I asked.

"How 'bout, 'Our wimp can beat your shrimp'?"

"Keep working," I said, and continued my phone calls.

PATRICK OLDFELLOW, attorney:

"The Democrats will never learn to keep Ted Kennedy hidden."

"Why should they?" I asked.

"You remember his 'Where was George?' bit at the convention? Well, the easy comeback there is, 'Where was Teddy at Chappaquiddick?' "

"That's mean," I said.

"And so delicious," replied Mr. Oldfellow.

NORBERT SLACKHAMMER JR., millionaire playboy:

"The Democrats," he began, "are trying to tell us the economy is not as sound as it appears. That's silly. The price of caviar is as reasonable as it has been in years."

"Obviously, sir," I said, "you are a wealthy person. May I ask you how you made your fortune?"

"The old-fashioned way," said Mr. Slackhammer Jr. "I inherited it from my father."

BEATRICE CULPEPPER, self-described activist:

"What are you currently active about?" I asked.

"The Junior League summer bake sale," she replied. "We're trying to raise money for a station wagon for one of our members who lost hers in a divorce."

"Tragic," I said.

"Don't you just know it?" said Mrs. Culpepper. "All she has now is her husband's Maserati. Ever try to drive a car pool in one of those things?"

"By the way," I asked, "do you have any thoughts about the Democrats?"

"What Democrats?"

"The ones who held their convention in Atlanta."

"Those were Democrats?" asked Mrs. Culpepper. "I thought those dreadful Shriners were back in town."

RODNEY ELROD, mortician:

"All I know," said Mr. Elrod, "is, if I were a Democrat, I would encourage Lloyd Bentsen to move around occasionally."

"Why is that?" I wanted to know.

"As bad as he looks," explained Mr. Elrod, "if he stands still too long, somebody might try to embalm him."

F. FARLEY THISTLEWAITE, yacht person:

"I'd like to talk to you, ol' boy," said Mr. Thistlewaite, "but I'm off for a spin around the Mediterranean."

"Could I just ask what you named your yacht?" I asked.

"The 'Silverfoot,' " he answered.

RICHARD L. (LUCKY) MCDONALD, stockbroker:

"Know who was the first Democrat?" he asked me.

"I have no idea," I answered.

"It was Christopher Columbus."

"Please explain," I urged.

"When he left home, he didn't know where he was going. Right?"

"Right."

"And when he got there, he didn't know where he was."

"That's correct, too."

"And when he got back home, he didn't know where he had been."

"That's true, too. But how does that make him a Democrat?"

"Because," explained Mr. McDonald, "he did the whole thing on borrowed money."

On to New Orleans.

Demos, GOP appeal to different 'mobs'

Well, I didn't know the United States was a Third World country but to hear the Democrats in Atlanta tell it, that's what we are.

Charley Reese

Just listening to their speeches, you would think the majority of Americans are homeless, jobless, hopeless and gay or lesbian minorities. If there is a minority, there's got to be a majority somewhere. Maybe it will show up in New Orleans.

Of course at the Republican convention, we will learn how well off we are. Just listening to their speeches, I expect, you would think all Americans are prosperous, healthy, and ambitious not to mention white, straight and Christian.

Excessive rhetoric, wild charges, and wild claims are the stuff of modern American politics. I don't know about the green house effect raising the earth's temperature but the hot air effect has lowered the intellectual level of American political discussion about 100 points.

If sanity is defined as staying more or less in contact with the real world, then we have long since gone bonkers. We have reached the point where delegates, with an average income of about $50,000 a year, gather to weep emotional tears while millionaires read speeches they didn't write about their compassion for the poor. We have reached the point where an intellectual who studied at Columbia University, Texas Agricultural Commissioner Jim Hightower, affects the speaking style of a hick. Even our populists are fakes.

We have become a bizarre society indeed where socialists travel in private jets, wearing $600 suits and attended by servants, to harangue the working folks about the evils of capitalism. We have become a bizarre society indeed when 13,500 journalists converge on 4,000 delegates who have nothing to do but play their assigned parts in scripted charades.

And we have become a deeply cynical society when journalists and politicians openly and with straight faces discuss the fact that it is poor strategy to tell the people what you actually intend to do if elected because they then would not vote for you.

There is something deeply immoral about pronouncing Michael Dukakis as much smarter than Walter Mondale because Mondale told the truth about his intention to raise taxes while Dukakis refuses to commit himself. That is making the judgment that duplicity is better than honesty. It is profoundly sad to hear Mondale himself agree.

What's missing from all the rhetoric of these fake populists and Gucci samaritans is any mention of who's going to pay for their compassion. Those of us unfortunate enough to have to work for a living, that's who.

As an antidote to the unreality being televised from the political conventions, let us remember that in the real world government cannot give $1 to A without first taking $1.75 from B. Government has overhead, too.

Let us remember that in the real world money talks and talk walks. When Sen. Lloyd Bentsen told lobbyists they could have breakfast with him for a $10,000 contribution, he said all there is to be said about who has influence with these compassionate politicians in Washington and who doesn't. Who doesn't are those who can't kick in $10,000. Bentsen did not raise $1.5 million in 15 months from the little people. Michael Dukakis did not win the nomination because little people swarmed to his cause. He raised more money faster than the others and outspent them.

The Democrats are not practicing the politics of inclusion but rather the politics of plunder. Put us in power, they are saying, and we'll pay you off with what we plunder from the others — less our cut, of course. Food and games for the mob, as they used to say in Rome. And the mob, greasy with the sweat of envy, is shouting, "Hail, Caesar."

Unfortunately, the only difference between Democrats and Republicans is that they appeal to different mobs. In these times political enthusiasm can be created only out of amnesia and ignorance.

NATION in brief

Plant closing bill could be law without signature

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan likely will allow a plant-closing worker notification bill to become law without his signature, Senate Republican Leader Bob Dole said today.

Dole told reporters that in a meeting with Reagan, the president told Republican congressional leaders that "I may just keep my pen in my pocket" on the legislation.

Dole, R-Kan., said that Reagan indicated he is leaning toward allowing the plant-closing bill to become law at midnight Wednesday. Dole said he thought Reagan's intention was to prod Congress into action on other legislation, rather than to take some heat off likely Republican presidential candidate George Bush.

The plant-closing bill would require companies to give employees 60 days' advance notice of plant shutdowns.

Dole said Reagan is "swallowing something that he doesn't totally like in order to get us off the dime" on separate legislation overhauling the U.S. trade laws.

The senator noted that there are only 25 to 28 legislative days remaining in this session, and that several crucial issues remain, including new assistance to the Nicaraguan rebels and drought assistance to farmers.

Cardinal Dearden dies

DETROIT (AP) — Cardinal John Dearden, considered one of America's most influential Roman Catholic leaders for his role in modernizing church doctrines, left behind accomplishments that will stand for centuries, church officials said.

Dearden died from pancreatic cancer Monday. He was 80.

"As time goes by, Dearden's place becomes even greater," said the Rev. Richard McBrien, chairman of the theology department at the University of Notre Dame. "He was already perhaps the leading Catholic bishop when he retired. In the last several years, his reputation has only grown. He was a giant."

Dearden, who headed the Archdiocese of Detroit from 1959 to 1981, voted in the elections of two popes and played a major role in the Second Vatican Council, which from 1962 to 1965 launched extensive doctrine changes, including departure from the Latin Mass, greater emphasis on laypersons' roles and fostering greater unity among all Christians.

Dearden decided to become a priest when he was 16. He joined the priesthood in Cleveland in 1932 and was a bishop in Pittsburgh before coming to Detroit, where he worked to combat discrimination and develop programs to help inner-city blacks.

Duarte in U.S. hospital

WASHINGTON (AP) — Salvadorean President Jose Napoleon Duarte was "in excellent spirits" today in Walter Reed Army Medical Center where he is to undergo treatment for liver cancer, the hospital said.

"His condition will be re-evaluated and he is expected to be hospitalized for about 10 days," the hospital said in a statement the morning after Duarte re-entered Walter Reed. "Members of his family are with him and he is in excellent spirits."

Duarte will undergo a second round of chemotherapy in an attempt to slow the advance of his terminal liver cancer.

Duarte, 62, arrived in Washington Monday with his wife, Ines, and his son, Alejandro.

The president spent six weeks at Walter Reed in June and July undergoing diagnosis and treatment. Doctors removed most of his stomach, which had been affected by the cancer.

U.S. rejects proposal

WASHINGTON (AP) — A revised Soviet proposal to make a disputed Siberian radar station inoperable met with swift U.S. rejection, leaving the future of Krasnoyarsk and the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty cloudy.

Soviet negotiator Vladimir Kuznetsov presented the proposal to make the equipment at Krasnoyarsk inoperable to Henry Cooper, his U.S. counterpart, who rejected it outright, a U.S. official said Monday.

The exchange took place during arms control talks in Geneva, Switzerland, last month, said the official, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

This was the second Soviet attempt to settle the dispute over Krasnoyarsk, which President Reagan and even some of his American critics say is in violation of the 1972 treaty's constraints on defenses against missiles.

A few days earlier, Viktor P. Karpov, the Soviet foreign ministry's top arms control specialist, had offered to dismantle the facility if the two governments resolved their differences over the treaty.

The White House and State Department publicly rejected the offer.

Baby sperm whale dies

ORLANDO, Fla. (NYT) — Despite a desperate effort that included feeding tubes and an all-night vigil, a rare baby sperm has died two days after it was found stranded on a sandbar.

The results of a necropsy won't be known for several weeks, but the chief scientist handling the rescue effort said the 1,400-pound male calf, believed to be one to three weeks old, died of complications from malnutrition.

It apparently had became separated from its mother.

Some species of whales nurse their infants for a year or more, Pearson said.

Researchers have now shifted their attention to learning as much as they can from the dead mammal and reviewing their rescue efforts to see how they can improve their response next time.

Bear attacks outdoorsman

RENO, Nev. (AP) — An outdoorsman says an encounter with a seemingly friendly black bear that suddenly attacked him has taught him a lesson.

"I guess I learned that I'm not as smart as I thought I was," Louis Gallian said Monday, nursing nine long scratches on the left side of his face.

Gallian, 51, of Reno, got the scratches early Sunday when a 2-to 3-year-old bear took a swipe at him after the two had shared a half-hour of eating, petting and "generally good communication."

Yonkers council defies desegregation order

YONKERS, N.Y. (AP) — City Council members forced a showdown with a federal judge by ignoring his threat to bankrupt the city and send them to jail if they failed to approve a housing desegregation plan.

At a raucous hearing, the council voted 4-3 Monday night to defy U.S. District Judge Leonard Sand's order.

Sand was scheduled to hold a contempt-of-court hearing today.

"I hope the judge sees some good faith," said Mayor Nicholas Wasiscko after he voted in favor of the plan. He said he hoped Sand would delay action until the mayor could call another council meeting later this week.

"The rule of law has got to be respected," said the mayor, whose city has been struggling back from near-bankruptcy in 1984.

Sand has indicated that if he finds the city in contempt he will fine it $100 for the first day, with the fine doubling each day thereafter. By day 23, the fines would surpass the city's current $337 million operating budget.

Sand also said he would fine defiant councilmembers $500 per day and impose prison terms if the defiance continued until Aug. 10.

The hour-long council meeting was punctuated by shouts and jeers from the 150 people inside the chambers and about 300 outside.

One person was arrested for disorderly conduct and one was ejected.

At issue are 800 units of affordable housing to be built by private developers.

In 1980, the U.S. Justice Department charged that Yonkers, a city of 195,000 residents, had intentionally segregated its housing and schools for 40 years.

The east side of the state's fourth largest city is predominately white, middle to upper class. It borders the wealthy towns of Scarsdale and Bronxville. The west side is older, more industrial, and mostly black and Hispanic. It adjoins New York City's poorest borough, the Bronx.

In 1985, Sand found Yonkers liable. It was the first time school and housing segregation were linked.

The city's Board of Education began an integration plan in 1986. That year, Sand ordered the city to build 200 units of low-income housing on the east side and 800 others throughout the city — 160 low-income homes, the rest for moderate incomes.

Sand ordered the council to pass a resolution by Monday supporting the plan. It could not pass the actual plan because it must first hold a state-mandated public hearing before voting on a zoning matter.

The council has wavered in the face of public opinion.

Vice Mayor Henry Spallone, the judge's most vociferous critic, demanded an investigation into the city's low-income housing and into Sand's law practice.

Spallone charged that Sand was violating state law by forcing the vote before the public hearing.

"The judge feels above the law," he told a cheering crowd. "This judge can no longer address this case."

Councilmember Peter Chema said it was not "solely a black and white issue, but a green issue" that involves real estate development.

Chema said Sand, who lives in the exclusive Westchester enclave of Pound Ridge, was being "autocratic not democratic."

Councilmember Nicholas Longo called Sand's actions "a typical case of the hypocrisy of the rich and elitist looking down upon those who must work for everything they have."

Sand proposed creating an independent commission to build the housing to circumvent city politicians.

Scientists uncover force boosting gravity's pull

LOS ALAMOS, N.M. (AP) — An experiment beneath the Greenland ice sheet has fueled the debate over the existence of a "fifth force" in nature, and whether gravity might be more complex than Sir Isaac Newton thought.

Researchers last year lowered a gravity meter down a 1¼-mile hole and found that gravity diminished faster than expected, indicating a second pull at work and was being reduced as the meter descended, geophysicist Mark Ander reported Monday at a meeting at the Los Alamos National Laboratory.

The strength of the second pull is about one-fiftieth that conventionally assigned to gravity, said Ander. The force has been measured over distances ranging from 1,600 to 5,500 feet, enhancing gravity by up to 3.9 percent.

Other experiments have raised the possibility of a fifth or even a sixth that either attract or repel objects in contradiction to Newton's theories. The four known forces are gravity; electromagnetism, which holds atoms together; the strong nuclear force that holds atomic nuclei together; and the weak nuclear force, which causes radioactive decay.

Los Alamos scientists said their discovery may be the theoretical fifth force or a component of gravity.

"Either way, we're saying something pretty big, something you don't say every day in physics," Ander told The Washington Post. "We're saying we appear to have the cleanest evidence to date of something that cannot be explained by Newtonian gravity."

A change in the understanding of gravity may help physicists formulate a long-sought "unified field theory" to explain all the forces of the universe in a single equation. It also might lead to recalculation of the masses of the stars and planets, and new estimates of the universe's age.

"Gravity could be more complicated than Newton or even Einstein thought," said Richard Hughes, a physicist at Los Alamos.

Newton suggested in 1687 that gravity causes all bodies to attract each other and that the attraction increases as the weight of the objects increase and the distance between them decreases. He suggested that gravitational fields should decline slightly as a body moves down a shaft, but concluded that gravitational acceleration is always the same.

Australian scientist Frank Stacey said he found discrepancies when he measured gravitational fields in a mine shaft in 1981. He reported that the fields dropped off more rapidly than Newton's conclusions suggested.

Newtonian theory says gravity should change in a certain way because, as a meter goes down, there is less matter below it to exert a pull.

Paul Boynton, a University of Washington physicist-astronomer, reported last year that he had found evidence of a force that would make a feather fall ever so slightly faster than an iron ball.

Boynton suspended a 3-inch metal ring horizontally at the base of 400-foot granite cliff in the North Cascade mountains near Index, Wash. Half of the ring was aluminum, the other half beryllium. Both halves had the same mass, which is what gives an object weight when the object is pulled by gravity.

Newtonian theory says the two halves should have been pulled toward the cliff equally if only gravity was working. The aluminum half twisted slightly toward the cliff and the beryllium half rotated away, suggesting a force acting on the basis of the two halves' chemical composition.

Another experiment is under way in the Pacific Ocean a few hundred miles north of Hawaii, with gravity measurements two miles deep, Ander said.

Women, infants food program expanded

By DAVID PLESA
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — An additional 80,000 low-income pregnant women and children, including 1,250 in the Permian Basin, will receive assistance from the state's nutrition and health program, officials announced Monday.

The Special Supplemental Food Program for Women, Infants and Children is being expanded for the first time to all but seven Texas counties at no additional state cost, Health Commissioner Dr. Robert Bernstein said.

The WIC program, which offers health counseling and vouchers for infant formula and other foods, now will reach about 320,000 of the estimated 1.5 million people who are eligible statewide.

Locally, the program will serve an additional 1,250 needy women and children in Midland, Ector and 25 other area counties. The program currently helps 6,149 in the Permian Basin.

An unexpectedly high rebate to the state on cans of infant formulas Mead Johnson Laboratories supplies the WIC program is allowing the Health Department to expand the program. Mead Johnson signed an exclusive contract with the department after bidding the highest rebate, 99 cents per can, on infant formula bought with WIC vouchers.

The rebates will save the department an estimated $85 million over the 29-month contract, Bernstein said.

"Even more exciting than this cost savings is the vast difference these dollars will make in the lives of over 80,000 Texas women, infants and children who will now receive the WIC services," he said.

Just a few months ago, Bernstein said, the WIC program was unavailable in 40 Texas counties. By the end of August, services will have expanded into all but seven counties, he said.

The WIC program serves low-income pregnant women, and infants and children up to age 5 who are at a high risk of developing nutrition-related health problems. Participants must have an income not greater than 185 percent of the federal poverty level.

The program provides milk, cheese, iron-fortified cereal, juice, eggs, beans and peanut butter to adults and children, and juice, cereal and iron-fortified formula to infants. Just as important, Bernstein said, is the nutrition education and health care referrals the program also provides.

The nutrition and health program is not only cost-effective but serves those who most need the help, said Fort Worth Sen. Hugh Parmer, a human services advocate.

"Study after study have indicated that every dollar you spend in the WIC program saves society $3 in direct health-related costs," Parmer said. "If we don't supplement the diet of that pregnant mother, then we end up paying and paying and paying in terms of health costs, welfare costs, educational costs and criminal justice costs."

Extension agent will be receiving national award

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Earnest Kiker

Earnest Kiker grew up on the stock farm. He didn't stay but left to serve.

The farm boy of the 1950s and 1960s turned into manhood and left the toiling Rotan farming scene to learn how to "serve others" by way of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

And today at 40, Kiker has logged 16 years in agricultural-service work through the Extension Service of Texas A&M University. And for his efforts in serving farmers, ranchers and urban dwellers with educational programs to help better their lives, he is receiving the Distinguished Service Award — the highest recognition given by the National Association of County Agricultural Agents.

"God has blessed my life through the Extension Service," said Kiker, Midland County agricultural agent since 1982. Prior to that, he was county agent for the rural Briscoe and Borden counties, where cotton and cattle are the economic mainstays.

Kiker, who holds bachelor's and master's degrees from Texas Tech University, is a 1981 recipient of the Texas Agricultural Agents Association's Achievement Award.

Kiker is one of eight Texas county agents who will receive the award in mid-August at the NACAA annual meeting in Charlotte, N.C. He was nominated by his peers — county agents in a 22-county West Texas area which comprise District 6 of the Extension Service.

"Kiker has conducted effective education programs in cotton, livestock and vegetable production," noted G.R. "Dick" McCarver, awards and recognition chairman for the Texas County Agricultural Agents Association.

The result of Kiker's educational role has been an "increase in management practices and marketing decisions that greatly enhance the economic stability" of agricultural producers in Midland County, according to McCarver, who is a county extension agent in Mount Pleasant.

For example, Kiker was a prime mover behind the Permian Basin Farmers Market, which provides an avenue for farmers to sell their home-grown fruits and vegetables.

"The market was developed to provide alternate income to agricultural producers, as well as to provide opportunities for urban people to purchase home-grown vegetables and to deal directly with the farmers," Kiker said.

In the summer of 1987, the market's three locations in Midland, Odessa and Big Spring generated $180,000. Kiker figured that every dollar the farmer generates will "change over seven times within a community" after he spends it.

In concert with cotton farmers, Kiker directed "result demonstrations" — research-like projects to determine optimum production on agricultural lands.

Different cotton varieties are planted in Midland County fields to determine the productivity of early-maturing cotton, higher-yielding cotton, and quality longer-staple cotton, which bring better prices than shorter-staple cotton.

Projects also are set up to gauge optimum irrigation and fertilization.

"We need maximum efficiency of water," Kiker said.

On the range, Kiker measures forage quality to determine the amount of protein in various grasses and needed supplemental feeding for livestock. In addition, he and ranchers link up to determine by "result demonstrations" effective ways to control mesquite and perennial broomweed, which absorb moisture ranchers had much rather see go to grasses for feeding cattle, sheep and goats.

In expressing gratitude for his recognition in Extension Service work, Kiker said that the "award would not have been possible without the support of county agents across the district and the support of volunteer leaders that run programs."

Those programs include 4-H Club projects for youth development, agricultural projects on the farm and ranch, horticultural programs on the urban scene, and the farmers market.

"This would not have been possible without the good people to work it," Kiker said. He cited the "support" of many rural and urban people who do volunteer work in making the Extension Service programs work. And he recognized the support of his wife, Vickie, and their 7-year-old daughter, Jessica.

"She (his wife) has to have character to put up with my (long and erratic work) hours and to put up with me," he said.

"I enjoy working with people," Kiker said. "I feel that the Extension Service has provided me opportunities to work with and to serve other people."

P&S gives discount to MISD

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

School district employees will receive a discount for purchasing healthcare services at Midland's Physicians and Surgeons Hospital, officials have announced.

Under terms of the agreement, Midland Independent School District's 1,900 employees and their insurance-covered dependents will get three benefits for staying in P & S hospital, the outline says.

Features include a 10 percent discount on the person's total hospital bill and a waiver of one-half of the co-insurance amount that would be paid after the deductible is met.

In addition, P & S will limit the out-of-pocket expenses of the hospital's portion of the bill to $1,050, the plan stated.

The discounts will be applicable only to hospital charges and not physician or other's fees, the plan stated.

The plan offered by Midland's private hospital was not formed to compete with Midland Memorial Hospital's Premier Health Plan, said P & S spokesman Lana Cunningham.

Under the terms of the PHP, users can receive discounts on healthcare services offered at MMH, Medical Center Hospital, Glenwood Psychiatric Hospital and Clearview Hospital, explained John Holt, director of the PHP.

The private hospital is offering discounts also to city of Midland employees who also may use the PHP, Ms. Cunningham said.

"Healthcare expenses are getting so high, we are just offering the taxing entities a break for their employees," Ms. Cunningham said.

The school district's health insurance plan is self-insured, explained Tony Timmons, MISD director of finance.

The plan, effective immediately, is "a good deal for everybody," Timmons said.

The hospital will make money if MISD employees and their dependents utilize the hospital, the district's self-insurance kitty will save money and employees will save money on their out-of-pocket expenses, the finance director said.

Currently, the school district pays all or a majority of its employees' premiums, Timmons said.

The employee pays for his dependents, he added.

Commissioners discuss coliseum project

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — A predicted "record turnout" for the November general election would give "the greatest number of voters" a chance to voice their opinions on what — if anything — they want done to Ector County's 33-year-old coliseum, according to County Judge Jan Fisher.

The judge's remarks came Monday evening during a specially called meeting of the Commissioners Court to refine a series of potential improvements suggested by members of the Citizens' Advisory Group on Coliseum Improvements.

As currently envisioned, the needed improvements, as well as expansion of the coliseum complex, would be submitted as a seven-part referendum with specific amounts of bond money earmarked for individual segments of the proposal.

Ector County voters in November would have the opportunity "of telling us what they want and we'll do whatever they want," said Ms. Fisher. "If they choose to do nothing, that's fine, too."

Total cost of the project could range as high as $22.9 million for the complete package of proposals to as little as $7.8 million needed to renovate the coliseum building itself.

The seven-part package suggests renovation of the coliseum ($7.81 million), parking, site utilities and drainage ($2.75 million), replacement of existing barns ($2.5 million), arena and stock pens ($1.4 million), a 2,500 seat auditorium ($5.34 million), exhibition building ($2.79 million), and an aesthetic package ($377,902).

A decision to handle the parking, site utilities and drainage segment "in-house," as part of county maintenance-capital improvement expenditures, would reduce the total to slightly more than $20.2 million.

Not building the new auditorium would further reduce proposed total expenditures to nearly $14.9 million.

In December 1987, Ector County voters overwhelmingly rejected a $18 million bond proposal that would have accomplished essentially the same goals as the current proposal. However, voters had no option but to vote for or against the entire proposal.

According to Citizen's Advisory Group members, after a series of public meetings it was ascertained that most people are aware the 33-year-old coliseum is in dire need of complete refurbishment.

However, what most people apparently objected to last December was, in effect, not being given a choice as to what improvements should be made.

Ms. Fisher observed that, as far as the coliseum has been concerned, the county has had a "real expensive" maintenance program and a "real skinny" capital improvements program.

She described what has been going on as "doing patchwork" so the complex can be used for the Oil Show every two years.

Advisory group member Jack Wood suggested that contractor and architectural fees appeared to be a little high. Ms. Fisher said expenditures would probably be reduced in these areas because competitive bids would be sought.

The competition to do the project probably would be "extremely competitive" and this should reduce total costs, she said.

Mattox: Account may be set up for funds from Ector airport sale

Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Ector County Commissioners Court may — but doesn't have to — set up a separate bank account to handle proceeds from the county airport, Attorney General Jim Mattox ruled in an opinion released Monday.

Responding to a question from County Attorney Gary Garrison, Mattox said state law allows the commissioners direct the county auditor to set up a separate fund to handle "proceeds from the sale of any airport or portion thereof or air navigation facility property."

Commissioners may keep airport proceeds in the same bank account with other county funds "if proper accounting procedures are adopted to insure the funds are utilized for the correct purposes," Mattox wrote.

Geter told he can't sue prosecutors

DALLAS (AP) — Lenell Geter, who spent 16 months in prison after being falsely convicted of armed robbery, has been told by a federal appeals court that the attorneys who prosecuted him are immune from damage suits.

Geter, an E-Systems engineer, was convicted in 1982 and remained in prison until charges were dropped following public questioning of the verdict.

"I believe that what we brought before the court was right, and the claims we raised were correct, and I'm very disappointed they ruled otherwise," Geter said Monday.

Geter and five other engineers — all black — were investigated for a series of armed robberies in Dallas and Hunt counties.

They filed an $8.2 million damage suit against former District Attorney Henry Wade, the prosecutor's office and four municipalities and their police departments: Greenville, Garland, Plano and Balch Springs.

The suit charged malicious, racially biased prosecution.

After the suit was filed in November 1985, judges dismissed the complaints involving Plano, Garland and now the Dallas County district attorney's office.

U.S. District Judge Barefoot Sanders dismissed a series of complaints against Dallas County and Balch Springs, except for three concerning Wade, former assistant prosecutor Randall Isenberg and Balch Springs police officer D.C. Kuhn.

The complaints alleged that Isenberg violated Geter's civil rights by giving his attorney too little notice of when the trial was to begin, that Wade "defamed" Geter by questioning his innocence even after charges were dropped, and that Kuhn distorted evidence to make Geter look guilty and concealed evidence of his innocence.

Veteran fighting to get medal for black sailor killed at Pearl Harbor

By JENNIFER DIXON

WASHINGTON (AP) — Historian Leroy Ramsey is on a one-man crusade to preserve the memory of a black sharecropper's son who became the first hero of Pearl Harbor.

"Dorrie Miller deserves a place in history, not just black history, but a place in history — period," says Ramsey, himself a black World War II veteran from Albany, N.Y., who has contacted congressmen and governors on behalf of the Navy seaman killed in a 1943 torpedo attack.

Ramsey is fighting on two fronts — to have the Navy recognize Miller's bravery with a Medal of Honor, the nation's highest military award, and to protect the Miller family's abandoned home in Waco from the wrecking ball.

"One is a matter of justice and one is a matter of honor," says Ramsey, who through his research found that the Navy used to refer to Miller as an "unidentified Negro messman" who manned a machine gun on the USS West Virginia when the Japanese attacked Pearl Harbor.

Miller shot down two enemy aircraft after dragging his mortally wounded captain to safety, Ramsey said.

Ramsey says he's now asking Texans to "Remember Pearl Harbor, the Alamo and Dorrie Miller."

A former associate professor of history at Hofstra University on Long Island, N.Y., Ramsey said he discovered while working on a book about black Americans in World War II that not one of the 1.5 million blacks who fought in the two World Wars was awarded the Medal of Honor.

Landfill decorated with 'rock art'

ARCHER CITY (AP) — Raymond and Angie Lee Harrelson have colored life at the Archer City Landfill with a few buckets of paint and natural sandstone rocks.

Neither is an "artist." Harrelson has been a landfill operator for the city for 14 years. After making a new road in August 1987, to the dump, he inadvertently piled rows of rocks in eerie formations that inspired him to carve a large cross above a set of three crosses in one rock. His initial carving lifted a curtain of ideas that eventually revealed a colorful, animated dump and paved the way to his new hobby as a "dump landscaper."

"Things just started coming to mind," Harrelson said.

After work he would spend an hour or two carving on the sandstone and his wife joined in, painting rocks with half-empty buckets of paint that had been thrown away. She found a 6-foot-tall rock that appeared to her to be formed in the shape of Texas, and she painted a yellow rose on it.

"It gives people something to look at instead of garbage and stinking trash," Mrs. Harrelson said.

The pile of smoking rubble and junk in the background of three patches of colored rock sculptures look out of place in the one place trash belongs.

A "littering prohibited" sign at the dump is just a touch of Harrelson's humor. A rock with the word "dump" painted in black and yellow is set in the ground toward the entrance. A "welcome rock" greets dumpers at the front gate.

In the daytime Harrelson buries and burns trash and crunches large metal objects with a front-end loader on a tractor. In the evening he decorates his work place. He has made a bowl of fruit, a whale and an owl.

Harrelson has lived in Archer City 32 years after moving from Dill City, Okla., to work in his brother's grocery store. He had never heard of anyone decorating a dump, but three miles east of Archer City the revelation came to him.

He transferred his vision to his wife and it came to her as clearly, once he explained to her what he wanted to do. She came up with the idea to paint his sandstone engravings.

"Everybody has a talent of some kind. You have to put it to use. I never thought about being an artist," Mrs. Harrelson said.

Out-of-state visitors admire his work and he has been interviewed by television and magazine reporters. When the fifth-grade class at Archer City went on a field trip to the dump, they were surprised to see splashes of color and rock creatures all around, Mrs. Harrelson said.

The hilltop landfill dotted with light blue rocks has had its problems from people with destructive intentions.

"You betcha there has been vandalism," Harrelson said. He said rocks painted to resemble fruit have had to be cemented into their bowls "because they disappeared quickly."

"They pushed E.T. and his girlfriend's heads off," Mrs. Harrelson added.

Harrelson spends no more than an hour or two after work at the dump.

Mrs. Harrelson said people in Archer City appreciate their work and the Archer City Senior Citizens Center has made more than one trip to see the dump. Harrelson said he expects to have more ideas for rocks, and his wife has plans for a rock she says looks an awful lot like a St. Bernard dog.

SAILOR

He has asked Congress to waive the statute of limitations so that the award can be given to Miller and Sgt. Henry Johnson, an Albany, N.Y., man who served in the Army during World War I.

Johnson fought with the French army, killed four German soldiers, rescued a wounded comrade and captured a stockpile of weapons, despite severe combat wounds. He earned the Croix de Guerre, France's highest military honor, and died in 1930.

Rep. Mickey Leland and Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, Texas Democrats, introduced bills on Miller's behalf, while Rep. Joseph DioGuardi, R-N.Y., is sponsoring legislation for Johnson to receive the award.

The legislation is stalled in the House Armed Services Committee because of a lack of Pentagon support, congressional officials say. The Army and Navy object because the statute of limitations has run out.

Ramsey says that while he's run across many a stubborn officer at the Pentagon, his luck in Texas has been much better as he tries to convert a boarded-up house frequented by vagrants into a museum honoring Miller and other blacks.

"I have found some big hearts in Texas," says Ramsey. "Texas people have been wonderful."

He won a reprieve from the city of Waco's plans to tear down the house until Sept. 6, when he hopes to have raised enough money to begin restoration work.

Ramsey says he'll need at least $100,000 to convert the house to the Dorrie Miller Black History Exhibition Center. He's counting on Lone Star State lore that a "silver dollar is a Texas penny."

Miller's only surviving brother, Arthur Miller of Midlothian, Texas, is a disabled World War II veteran who says he can't afford to fix up the house. The family moved out in the 1950s after a fire scorched the home.

Ramsey's plans would fulfill the dreams of their mother, Arthur Miller said Monday. She died a broken and despairing woman who wanted more than anything to have a small room added to their house so that Dorrie Miller's medals could be displayed.

"She could look down from wherever she is now and her face would just sparkle that people felt so much about him to build him a room at the home," Arther Miller said.

Ramsey said he settled on the house as a memorial because Miller's birthplace was flooded to make Lake Waco decades ago.

Although the Navy christened the USS Miller warship in the seaman's honor in 1971 and buildings have been named after him, Ramsey said the museum is still needed.

"If black people don't make an effort to preserve their own (history), they can't think badly of white people for not doing it for them," Ramsey said. "Whites have named a ship after him, and we want to do something for him on land."

Last week, the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans ordered Sanders to dismiss the complaints against Wade and Isenberg and to resolve a factual dispute over how Kuhn obtained eyewitness identification evidence against Geter.

If it is found Kuhn properly gathered the evidence, he too will be entitled to immunity, the opinion said.

Wade said he was not surprised by the ruling, noting that prosecutors are immune from damage suits because the threat of the suits could affect their public duties.

Justice to decide by Aug. 15 whether he will resign seat

Hearst News Service

AUSTIN — Justice Franklin Spears said that he will decide by Aug. 15 whether to retire from the Texas Supreme Court on Sept. 1 and put a seventh seat on the November election ballot.

"I'm still looking around, still seeing what my options are," he said Monday.

Spears, a Democrat, is nearing the completion of 20 years of state judicial service but is in the middle of a six-year term that doesn't expire until the end of 1990. A Sept. 1 resignation, he said, would allow the State Democratic Executive Committee and the State Republican Executive Committee to choose general election candidates for the seat.

A member of the Supreme Court since 1979, Spears said earlier this summer that money would be his main consideration in leaving the state post, which pays about $79,000 a year, for a higher paying job in private legal practice.

His departure would be the fourth from the nine-member court within the past year and would come while the court is at the center of a continuing political and philosophical controversy.

Former Democratic Chief Justice John Hill's resignation last January gave Gov. Bill Clements the opportunity to name the first Republican to the court in recent history, Tom Phillips.

Hill's resignation was quickly followed by that of former Justice Robert M. Campbell, who was replaced by the governor with another Republican, Barbara Culver. Then in June, Justice James Wallace, another Democrat, announced he would leave the court Sept. 1.

The pending resignation by Wallace will let party executive committees put candidates for that seat on the November ballot also.

Spears has written opinions and often sided with the majority in handing down controversial rulings favoring plaintiffs in personal injury lawsuits against large corporations and insurance companies.

ARE APOSTLES AND PROPHETS FOR TODAY?

Come and Find out at the LIVING WATER CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP, corner of FM 700 and 11th Place, Big Spring, TX. Wed. through Friday, August 3-5 at 7:30 p.m.and PETROPLEX COVENANT CHURCH, 601 W. Missouri, Midland, Saturday, August 6th, 7:30 p.m. There will be a meeting at each respective Fellowship on Sunday morning, 9:30 a.m

There are 23 Apostles and Prophets mentioned in the New Testament., It is clear that the Twelve were special appointments by Jesus. The Word of God calls them the twelve apostles of the Lamb (Rev. 21:14)

It is clear that He (Jesus) gave the Church five ministries to equip them when He ascended.

Each generation needs it's own equipping, and therefore must need it's own ascension ministries.

Check these apostles out in the Word. Paul AND Barnabas, Acts 14:14; Andronicus and Junius, Romans 16:7; Epaphroditus, Philippians 2:25 (see margin), just to name a few.

The apostle and prophet ministries are the ministries to whom the Lord has revealed the mystery of the Church (see Eph. 3:4-6).

God is restoring the recognition of these ministries today to prepare us for His return.

Yes, apostles and prophets are for today!

There will be ministry for everyone-the sick, the afflicted, the depressed, the lost, and any other needs present.

Leaking petroleum tanks may contaminate water

STATE

DALLAS (AP) — Environmentalists warn that seeping underground petroleum storage tanks are aging time bombs that if left unrepaired may contaminate the state's underground water supplies.

State and federal officials have intensified efforts to find leaking tanks and force their owners to repair or replace them but some leaks go undetected, the Dallas Times Herald reported Monday.

The substances that seep from the tanks may pose a threat to health and safety, and have done tens of millions of dollars in damage to telephone cables.

An estimated 14,000 tanks are believed stored beneath Dallas County soil. "There are just a huge number of tanks out there, a number of which have the potential to leak in the not-too-distant future," said a Washington Sierra Club representative.

Blake Early helped draft federal legislation governing underground tanks. "The damage they can do to groundwater is huge; it only takes a very small amount of gasoline to render a source of underground drinking water useless," he said.

About 50 cases have been documented in Texas of private wells tainted by leaking tanks, said Texas Water Commission spokesman Kevin Hamby.

"It's one of those issues that, in our view, is a sleeper in terms of its impact on public health and the environment."

Gasoline is highly flammable and contains benzene, a known carcinogen that can be harmful in small amounts.

Environmental Protection Agency officials estimate as many as 200,000 of the nation's 1.4 million underground gasoline and oil storage tanks may be leaking. The tanks weren't regulated by the federal government until 1984.

Last year, Southwestern Bell spent more than $2 million in the Dallas area to repair or replace cables last year after leaking tanks damaged the lines, said Wendel Ford, manager of personnel for Southwestern Bell Telephone Co.

Ford said the gasoline corrodes the cables' protective coating.

"Gasoline is our worst enemy," said Ford. "The cable gets wet, and we end up having to replace the whole thing."

In 1986, Congress established a trust fund derived from a 1-cent tax on motor vehicle and aviation fuels cials said. About 125,000 tanks have been registered with the water commission. But the EPA estimates that 30 percent of tanks nationwide go unregistered.

Officials said 9,819 tanks are registered in Dallas County. In the past two years, 166 leaks have been reported, 135 of which are still being cleaned up, said water commission spokesman Hamby.

He said those leaks "are just the ones that have been reported or that we've found." He said there's "almost no way to tell" how many more tanks might be leaking.

"The real question," he said, "is how to get at the tanks owned by independent operators — those not plugged into the large companies, who clearly see the liability potential (of a leaking tank) and are trying to reduce that liability."

to pay for leak detection and cleanup.

About $137 million had been collected in April, $2.9 million of which has been earmarked for Texas. The EPA's goal is to accumulate $500 million by 1992.

Proposed EPA tank regulations may be final by September. Owners will be required to check tanks regularly to ensure they aren't leaking and to repair any leaks they discover. Failure to do so could result in fines.

Tank owners also must carry at least $1 million in liability insurance to cover any damage from seepage.

Cleanup of leaks from tanks holding toxic chemicals and other nonpetroleum products falls under the government's Superfund program.

Jordan remains hospitalized due to possible complications

AUSTIN (AP) — Former U.S. Rep. Barbara Jordan, who nearly drowned Saturday, is doing as well as can be expected but remains hospitalized in serious condition because her doctor says there could be complications.

"At this point in time I don't think you could ask for her to be doing any better than she is," Dr. William Deaton, a pulmonary specialist, said Monday.

Deaton said Ms. Jordan, 52, can breathe on her own, "but there are potential risks and complications," such as pneumonia, as a result of the damage to her lungs. He emphasized that she did not have pneumonia.

Ms. Jordan was moved from the Intensive Care Unit to a coronary care room that overlooks the University of Texas campus, said Jamie Arnold, administrative secretary for nursing administration.

Ms. Jordan's nurse, Barbara Tucker, said, "She is doing very well. She is very tired. We've been letting her sleep most of the time. I think this ordeal is really beginning to wear on her, and that is to be expected."

The nurse said the hospital and family are asking people to limit their visits, because talking tires Ms. Jordan "tremendously."

Deaton also told a news conference Ms. Jordan had not gotten out of bed since she was admitted to Brackenridge Hospital in critical condition Saturday.

"Her outlook of returning to her previous ability to teach and be her active self is very good. I anticipate we will see her again, in public life," he said.

Barbara Jordan

He reminded reporters that a preexisting muscular condition, which he said was similar to multiple sclerosis, prevents Ms. Jordan from walking.

Ms. Jordan, who gained national attention during the 1974 Watergate impeachment hearings, was hospitalized after being found floating facedown in her backyard pool.

The hospital on Monday issued a statement correcting what it said was inaccurate information given by authorities at the accident scene. The hospital said Ms. Jordan's housemate, Nancy Earl, was not returning from the store when she found Ms. Jordan in the pool but had gone to turn on music and to the garage when she returned and found her.

When she is in the pool, Ms. Jordan holds on to a bar and exercises her legs, the hospital said.

Deaton said doctors still do not know what caused her to lose consciousness while in the pool.

But a heart attack while she was in the water has "pretty much" been ruled out, he said. Ms. Jordan did suffer cardiac arrest after the near-drowning, the hospital said.

"She has no evidence of any heart disease at all that we've been able to identify," Deaton said. However, that does not mean that she didn't have a heart rhythm disturbance, he said.

"I don't know if we'll ever be able to pinpoint it," he said.

Deaton described Ms. Jordan's mental status as normal and, in talking, "Sounds like Barbara Jordan to me."

He said she had a mild headache that was not out of the ordinary.

Deaton also said he still could not predict when she might leave the hospital.

"She remembers getting in the water now, and that's where it ends," Deaton said. "I doubt that she will regain any more memory of the event — it would be extremely unlikely."

Ms. Jordan in 1966 became the first black state senator in Texas history. In 1972, she was the first Southern black elected to Congress since Reconstruction, serving until 1978.

Pete Emmert, manager of the Chaparrosa Ranch near La Pryor, stands before a herd of Santa Gertrudis cattle. The drought that has gripped the Midwest is still threatening some parts of Texas.

Drought, its economic damage still persist, says TDA specialist

DALLAS (AP) — Although thunderstorms drenched sections of North, Central and West Texas recently, the drought that crippled Midwest farm regions still persists in pockets across the Lone Star State.

A month ago, Texas seemed destined for its worst dry spell since the 1930s, but now the drought has been reduced to a few parched areas.

Rainfall in Northeast Texas, between Paris and Texarkana, is as much as 15 inches below normal. Similar thirsty areas can be found in a triangular region of South Texas bounded by Corpus Christi, Laredo and Brownsville; and in East Central Texas, including Austin and Houston.

The Dallas-Fort Worth area has received 14.16 inches of rain this year, compared with an average rainfall through July of 18.49 inches.

"We're not about to declare the drought officially over," Kraig Gallimore, a farm program specialist with the Texas Department of Agriculture, told the Dallas Times Herald.

"Even though it's rained, there's still a lot of economic damage left behind," Gallimore said.

The drought hangover is expected to result in poor corn and grain sorghum crops, both major feed supplies for livestock.

Ranchers in 179 of Texas' 254 counties are being allowed to graze their hungry animals on "set-aside" acreage, land the federal government normally requires them to leave untouched as a condition for receiving farm subsidies.

Wayne Poteet, who grows soybeans and rice in Bowie County near the Arkansas border, said he believes the drought talk is real, no matter how much rain the rest of the state got.

Clements says Jackson supporters will go to polls and vote for Bush

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements, who previously predicted many Jesse Jackson supporters would "go fishing" rather than vote for Michael Dukakis, now says Jackson backers will vote for George Bush.

Clements' Election Day fishing forecasts began during the Democratic National Convention when he said Jackson backers upset by the Democrats' treatment of their candidate "will go fishing" instead of voting for Dukakis.

But Monday, baited by Jackson supporters who delivered cane fishing poles to his office, Clements issued an updated forecast.

"Instead of going fishing, I would think a lot of Texans who normally would have gone fishing are going to go to the polls, and they are going to vote for George Bush," the Republican governor said.

He said that group would include Jackson supporters.

But Rainbow Coalition members who filed into Clements' Capitol reception room Monday to donate wooden fishing poles said they will vote for Democratic presidential nominee Dukakis.

Bill Harris of Austin, a coalition official, said "we'll be much too busy" on Election Day to go fishing.

"However, we would not want the governor or any of his friends to miss out on this fishing trip for lack of the proper equipment, so we are donating these poles in the hopes that the governor and other Republicans will catch their limit on Nov. 8," Harris said.

A receptionist accepted them on behalf of the governor, who was in private meetings.

Later Monday, Clements told reporters that many Texans, including Jackson backers, would have a "violent reaction" to some Dukakis positions.

Hazel Obey of Austin, a Jackson supporter now active in the Dukakis campaign, avoided saying whether she thought Clements' initial fishing remark was a racial slur.

"I took it just like he gave it...I didn't try to interpret it. I never try to interpret what the governor says."

Group will be insulted if Dukakis doesn't speak

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — American GI Forum leaders say it will be a "tremendous insult" if Democratic presidential candidate Michael Dukakis turns down an invtitation to speak at the group's convention.

"This could well decide whether they carry the election in Texas," said GI Forum founder Dr. Hector Garcia, who said Monday he has twice personally invited Dukakis to the group's convention this week in Corpus Christi.

"We will not be too happy about it," Garcia told the Corpus Christi Caller. "His staff is really rocking things because they don't understand the importance of our organization in relation to elected officials."

"Any time you give your word, you should keep your word," said GI Forum Chairman Mario Diaz of Garden City, Kan. "It is a tremendous insult to, number one, our founder; it is a slight to GI Forum members, to Corpus Christi and to all Hispanics."

The 40th annual national convention of the GI Forum, a Hispanic veterans' and civil rights group, opened Monday in Corpus Christi and will continue through Sunday.

About 4,000 people, including 800 delegates from 37 states, are expected to attend the convention.

Vice President George Bush will be among political leaders to speak at the convention.

Garcia said he spoke with Dukakis earlier this year in Houston and again last week in McAllen, and personally extended an invitation to attend the convention.

"I got the impression that he was going to attend; I didn't get a firm commitment," Garcia said. "He said he would try to come."

State Sen. Carlos Truan, D-Corpus Christi, co-chairman of the Dukakis campaign of Texas, said no firm commitment was made by the candidate or his staff, and he should not be perceived as backing out.

Truan said he spoke Monday afternoon with Jose Villarreal, the Southwest coordinator for the Dukakis campaign, who told him a Corpus Christi appearance was unlikely.

"Every attempt has been made to change his schedule, but right now the chances of him coming are slim," Truan said. "This should not be used as an excuse to criticize him. He has an extremely busy schedule."

Dukakis appeared in South Texas earlier this month, and that his running mate, vice presidential candidate Lloyd Bentsen, would speak to convention delegates Saturday, Truan noted.

Ruben Bonilla, who appeared on stage with Dukakis at the League of United Latin American Citizens convention earlier this month in Dallas, said an appearance before the GI Forum should be top priority for any presidential candidate.

Declining the invitation was "a somewhat arrogant error that must be corrected," Bonilla said.

"There is no question that this is a bad move," Bonilla said. "The Dukakis campaign must make amends quickly if they want to expand their base with Hispanics."

Bush is slated to speak Friday.

Other political leaders expected to attend the convention are Gov. Bill Clements; U.S. House Speaker Jim Wright; state Treasurer Ann Richards; and state House Speaker Pro Tem Hugo Berlanga.

Man ordered to stay away from buses

HOUSTON (AP) — Patrick Carl Johnson is going to have to stay away from buses for the next 10 years if he wants to stay out of prison, a judge has ordered.

Johnson says he loves buses so much that he has stolen dozens, perhaps nearly 100, since 1986, Houston police say.

Johnson has donned uniforms and managed to convince officials at Trailways, Greyhound, Kerrville and Texas Bus Lines to let him drive buses away from their lots on numerous occasions, sometimes on jaunts that took him hundreds of miles.

Visiting District Judge Randy Stout ended Johnson's bus driving Monday when he banned Johnson from coming anywhere near a bus for the next decade.

"Next time you set your foot on a bus, or go around a bus, you can go to prison for 10 years," the judge warned Johnson in the sternest of terms.

Johnson pleaded guilty to stealing a 1983 Trailways Eagle bus worth $195,000 on June 11. His punishment was a 10-year probation, 30 days in Harris County Jail, 300 hours of community service and $200 restitution for a broken window.

Houston police Sgt. David J. Klinger said that, according to a confession, Johnson's love for buses stems from early childhood. His mother dated a bus driver, and Johnson, then 11, would sit in the bus for hours at a time.

Once Johnson's bus-swiping adventures began in 1986, Klinger said, he must have realized that stealing the huge vehicles was not really that hard.

Wear the right uniform to the right places, say the right things to the people in charge, and you can drive a bus off on a "test drive" without much effort, he told police.

Klinger said Johnson told him he never sped and one occasion his stolen bus broke down after he took a group of his relatives on an outing. Johnson called the same wrecker company that Kerrville Bus Co. uses.

"I didn't want just anybody towing that bus," Klinger quoted Johnson as saying. "They might have torn it up."

Johnson said he was particular about the buses he stole, saying he gave up on Texas Bus Lines because he said they kept poor maintenance records.

But Klinger said there's another explanation.

"Texas Bus Lines started using a padlock on their gate about that time, too," Klinger said.

Prosecutor Don Calvert said Johnson was careful about maintenance of the buses and washed and refueled them before they were returned or abandoned.

Johnson also was kind-hearted. On one occasion, he helped a woman with a group of children whose vehicle had broken down on the side of a highway, Klinger said.

Only when the woman later called the bus company concerning property the children had left behind on the vehicle was it learned they had been given a ride in a stolen bus.

Johnson was arrested June 11 after an eight-minute chase through narrow, congested streets in Houston.

"The officers said, 'This guy can really drive a bus,'" Klinger said. "Even on those narrow streets he didn't hit a thing except one street sign."

It was the sign that broke the bus window and Johnson has been ordered to have it repaired.

"He took all those buses, and the total damages were $200," Klinger marveled. "That's probably a better history of damages than most of their drivers have."

Killing of fifth officer chips away further at decreased morale

By SUSAN FAHLGREN-TORRES

DALLAS (AP) — The sight of police officers gathering at a hospital awaiting news on one of their ranks has become all too familiar in this city that has been divided by racial and police tensions.

Early today, Officer Walter Leon Williams, 47, became the fourth Dallas officer to be killed in the line of duty this year. The incident was the 12th shooting involving police. Williams died at 8:06 a.m. CDT, doctors said.

Early today, about 40 officers huddled outside the emergency room entrance at Methodist Medical Center to lend support to Williams' family.

Deputy Police Chief Marvin R. Bullard said the shooting, combined with the others this year, has hurt morale.

"It's reasonable to say that the shooting has an effect," he said. "It just adds to the apprehension officers feel when they carry out their duties."

Just before 1 a.m., doctors announced Williams was brain dead. He was later taken off life support systems and was breathing and his heart beating on its own before his death.

Meanwhile, Williams' alleged assailant was shot and killed by other policemen. The suspect's identity has not been made public.

The police department began pairing officers on patrols as a safety precaution after two policemen were killed in separate incidents in January.

Officer James A. Joe was killed Jan. 14 when he confronted burglary suspects in a northeast Dallas apartment complex, where he worked as a security guard in his off-duty hours. Two men were arrested in connection with the shooting. One has since been found guilty of capital murder.

On Jan. 23, a mentally ill black man gunned down Officer John Glenn Chase, 25, with the patrolman's service revolver before being shot and killed himself by pursuing officers. Police said witnesses claim some people standing nearby had urged the man to shoot Chase.

After the Chase shooting, then-Police Chief Billy Prince accused council members of fostering an anti-police sentiment that led to the shooting. Prince has since resigned from the force.

Over the past two years, minority leaders in the community and some city council members have criticized the department for being too trigger-happy when confronting suspects — especially blacks and Hispanics.

The Dallas Police Association and a police support group formed after the Chase shooting have traded barbs with some elected officials, including Councilwoman Diane Ragsdale, who has been critical of the police force.

Most of the seven civilians who were shot by officers this year were minorities. Both Williams and the assailant were black.

In February, Officer Gary D. McCarthy, 33, became the third officer in a six-week period to be killed when he tried to stop a robbery attempt at the grocery store where he worked part-time. McCarthy was wounded several times.

In May, Officer Steven L'Huillier, 28, was wounded when he was shot in the face with his own gun during a struggle with a burglary suspect outside a pawn shop.

STATE IN BRIEF

Safety belt coalition still looking for 'deathless day'

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas has not yet achieved the "one deathless day" set as a summer driving season goal by the Texas Coalition for Safety Belts.

"Since our last progress report on June 15, we've had four days when only three people were killed. All the other days have had higher fatality counts," George Gustafson, coalition spokesman, said Monday.

The deadliest summer day on Texas roads was June 25 when 20 people died, according to Gustafson.

The coalition hopes to achieve one deathless day between May 28 and Sept. 5. The last deathless day on Texas roads was Jan. 5, 1977.

Despite the failure so far, Gustafson said he is not discouraged.

"In a state the size of Texas, with 300,000 miles of roadways and more than 11 million licensed drivers, a day without a single traffic death is a tall order. We knew that from the beginning," he said.

Memorial behind schedule

DALLAS (AP) — A planned historical exhibit on the assassination of President John F. Kennedy may not be ready in time for the 25th anniversary of that tragedy.

The exhibit on he sixth floor of the former Texas School Book Depository, from which the fatal shots were fired, is being hampered by construction delays and other snags, organizers say.

Former Dallas County Judge Dave Fox, who is helping raise money for the exhibit, told the Dallas Times Herald that delays may push the scheduled opening date from the Nov. 22 anniversary to early 1989.

Fox also said private fund-raising efforts to underwrite the historical exhibit have produced about $600,000 less than the $1.5 million goal, he said.

Barnett files for bankruptcy

FORT WORTH (AP) — Billy Bob Barnett, former owner of a landmark nightclub and honky-tonk, has filed for personal bankruptcy, blaming a faltering economy and his own Texas-sized plans to develop the Fort Worth Stockyards.

Barnett, former owner of Billy Bob's Texas, and his wife, Patricia, filed a Chapter 7 bankruptcy petition Monday. If granted, Barnett would be allowed to keep his lakeside homes, automobiles and up to $30,000 in personal property.

Although the petition did not list Barnett's total indebtedness, it did list more than 1,200 creditors, including the Internal Revenue Service, a dozen Fort Worth and Dallas banks, two dozen radio and television stations, Texas Rangers baseball team, credit card companies and the U.S. Marine Corps.

"I personally committed all of my resources and those of my wife, Patti, to the expansion of Billy Bob's, as well as the festival marketplace (development in the Stockyards)," Barnett said in a prepared statement. "Unfortunately, the downturn in the economy and a number of factors have prevented me from continuing to build the tourism business that Fort Worth deserves.

Woman dies in Utah wreck

MONTICELLO, Utah (AP) — A 32-year-old Texas woman was killed when the car in which she was riding left a state highway and rolled down an embankment, the Utah Highway Patrol says.

A UHP dispatcher said Nancy Tanner of Leander, Texas, was a passenger Monday in a car driven by her husband Kirk Joseph Tanner. The car was west-bound on State Road 666 when the driver apparently fell asleep and lost control of the car, the patrol said.

A patrol spokeswoman said Mrs. Tanner was ejected when the car rolled down an embankment.

FBI arrests Texas man

ENFIELD, Conn. (AP) — A Texas man sought in the slaying of his wife was arrested Monday at a construction site where he was employed, the FBI said.

Edwin J. Keiley, 64, of Bryan, Texas, was charged with unlawful flight to avoid prosecution, Terry Shumard, an FBI spokesman, said.

Shumard said he didn't know any details of the Keiley case. He said Keiley was arrested on a warrant dated Aug. 22, 1986.

To Whom It May Concern,
It was not an easy task taking our camera & newspaper on a 4½ hour journey down the (Rio Frio) river on inner tubes! It was well worth it though... If it weren't for the contest, we would have left the camera at our campsite; this contest provided us with an excellent opportunity to take pictures of the beautiful Texas scenery while on our trip down the Rio Frio. Thanks!

Designer Christian Lacroix's created this mustard and burgundy brodade suit.

Not all designs are wearable

By ZENIA CLEIGH
Copley News Service

First for things the average woman probably wouldn't wear — such as the two large flowers perched directly on the breasts of the outrageously fluted white silk organza blouse that costs $1,010.

"Une jolie provocation," said a saleswoman about this particular piece of whimsy. "It's very sexy French."

"He's shipping the rosettes separately so the woman can — um — put them where she wants," explained the buyer.

Or the purple-and-yellow knit toreador jacket for $750, with the epaulets and rows of swinging yellow ping-pong-ball-sized pompons.

"Tres individuelle," said the saleswoman.

"Oh, that charming little outfit," said the buyer, sharply defending les pompons. "If one were to remove this or that and not do it in purple, we would not need Christian Lacroix."

Whether women with money to burn on clothes need creations by Lacroix, the youthful new star of Paris fashion, is the matter at hand.

Lacroix has been hailed as a hero in France, "the new king of couture" as an American news magazine put it, for the way he revived the extravagance and seduction of French couture with frivolous feminine designs derived from the Spanish influences and brilliant colors of his home in the South of France.

It was Lacroix who brought us the short pouf skirts, the mixed prints, the ethnic influences, the cabbage roses, adding youth to couture.

He has been such a success that members of New York society pelted him with carnations at a charity showing last October.

To put the matter in perspective, Lacroix has estimated that only a thousand women in the world can afford handmade French couture, where, for example, a blouse alone would cost $5,000.

Thus, less expensive, mass-marketed, machine-made clothes like those in Lacroix's new line are clearly the key to a fashion designer's success.

One 66-year-old woman said the designs weren't too youthful for her. "They look better on the young and size 6," she said. "But then, I'd like to be young and size 6.

"That's why I like them."

Summer skin care changing

To tan or not to tan is question of season

By ROBERT BRODY
New York Times News Service

In the wake of warnings that sun exposure damages skin, many beachgoers have suddenly turned sun-shy.

A survey last year by the American Academy of Dermatology found that 90 percent of all adults could name at least one negative effect of the sun — and 54 percent singled out skin cancer, the most serious danger.

As a result, the market for sunscreens — designed to protect skin against ultraviolet light — is heating up.

Sunscreens and sunblocks now represent about 35 percent of the $350 million market for sun care products, up from about 25 percent in 1980, far outpacing bronzers and so-called after-sun moisturizers and tanning agents.

In all, sales of sun care products rose 11 percent last year, and analysts predict a continuing 10 to 15 percent sales gain in the next five years.

"Ours will be a tanless society by the end of this century," said Steven Manenti, president of Eclipse Laboratories, maker of Cancer Guard sunscreens.

IN THE meantime, the American suntan is changing its complexion, growing lighter, and companies are turning out products with higher and higher "sun protection factors," or SPFs.

Dermatologists say these efforts could produce a major shift in American health.

"If people continue to wear high-SPF sunscreens — and to take other precautions — we expect to see a demonstrable decrease in the incidence of skin cancer in the next 20 years," said Dr. G. Thomas Jansen, president of the American Academy of Dermatology.

Within five years, as health concerns eclipse vanity, sunscreens will gain at least 50 percent of the market, said Diana Temple, a Salomon Brothers analyst. The shift has already started. "Straight tanning products are losing ground," said D. Perry Robins, president of the Skin Cancer Foundation, a consumer education group.

Seven out of 10 adults and teen-agers use sun care products, but that was not always the case.

Tanning products were not available until the 1940s, when a Miami Beach pharmacist, Benjamin Green, cooked up a cocoa butter cream on his stove and tested it on his bald head.

He got a suntan instead of a burn, and in 1944, he introduced the first commercial suntan product, Coppertone Suntan Creme.

While more Americans try to protect their skin, the tan has not gone out of style.

The Academy of Dermatology found that one-third of adults work on a tan, one-quarter take no precautions in the sun and fewer than half apply sunscreens.

WITH THAT untapped market and an already-strong business, more than 50 companies are fighting for market share.

Schering Inc. leads with Coppertone, followed by Tanning Research Laboratories, Johnson & Johnson and the Bristol-Myers Co.

"It's becoming a free-for-all," said Deborah S. Caldwell, marketing director at Westwood Pharmaceuticals, maker of PreSun sunscreen.

Until 1986, the highest SPF available was 20. Last year Eclipse Laboratories unveiled Cancer Guard with SPF 35. This year Westwood came out with PreSun SPF 39.

Marketers have even speculated on the possibility of an SPF 50.

Nobody knows how high SPFs will go — except perhaps the Food and Drug Administration.

The FDA is evaluating whether to endorse SPFs over 15. Makers of sun care products have told the FDA that high SPFs are more effective than lower ones in filtering out the sun. For now, said Jeanne Rippere, a spokeswoman, the FDA "has no official position on SPFs over 15."

What's happening? The controversy stems from a 1978 FDA monograph. It proposed that manufacturers designate sun care products with a code for "sun protection factors," to indicate how much a product will protect people from the sun.

An SPF 10, for example, enables a person who is likely to turn red after half an hour of exposure to sunbathe safely for five hours, or 10 times longer.

Sun care manufacturers cannot, according to federal regulations, claim that one sunscreen is more effective than another. So the SPF code helps marketers try to distinguish their products.

No sooner had the monograph appeared than high-SPF sunscreens emerged as the hottest segment in the sun care market. In 1987 four of the five top-selling sun care products had SPFs of 15 or more. Estee Lauder has eliminated all SPFs below 15, Eclipse all those under 10. The consumer perception of SPF, evidently, is "the more the better."

"The whole SPF deal is getting out of hand," said a buyer for a national drug chain. "It's harder for retailers to make room on the shelves for new products. Consumers are confused."

Manufacturers say SPFs above 15 are necessary, especially for children and those with sensitive skin.

"Studies show that most people apply about half the recommended amount," said Lincoln Krochmal, vice president of dermatological research at Bristol-Myers.

This argument suggests that consumers who need SPF 15 should apply SPF 30. Krochmal said consumers should get four applications from an average bottle of sunscreen; most get more because they use less than they should.

COSMETICS COMPANIES have long invested heavily in developing products that promise to moisturize, preserve and otherwise enhance the beauty of your skin. But until only about a decade ago, the industry largely avoided the sun care market.

Now, analysts say, sun care products represent about 10 to 15 percent of saes for major cosmetics companies, at least twice the level of five years ago.

"The high cost of chemical ingredients and the seasonal nature of the category kept many would-be players at bay," said Diana Temple, an analyst at Salomon Brothers.

"But as technology improved, more manufacturers of skin care lotions have formulated sun care products."

By capitalizing on technical expertise, cosmetics houses have already made significant inroads in the sun care field. "The cosmetics field now has about a 15 percent market share in sun care products as compared to about 5 percent in 1985," said Allan Mottus, a consultant to the cosmetics industry.

Competing against giants in the pharmaceutical industry, which have a fair amount of technical expertise themselves, Estee Lauder and Revlon broke through first, offering tan accelerators, self-tanning agents and protective sunscreens. "It's only natural that cosmetics companies would take great interest in protecting skin from sun damage," said Joseph Ronchetti, Elizabeth Arden's president.

From the start, cosmetics companies appealed to well-to-do, beauty-conscious buyers. A typical sunscreen from Avon or Clinique can run $12 to $15, about twice the cost of a mass-market item. Markups average 35 percent in drug and department stores. "People are more willing to pay higher prices for sun protection products now," Mottus said.

DEAR ABBY

Modern error margin is too wide for some

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: This is in response to the letter from the postal employee who thinks that a 2 percent error rate is not a bad record. That kind of attitude is ruining America. A 2 percent error rate is completely unacceptable!

How safe would you feel if 2 percent of the aluminum used to make our airplanes was flawed, or if one car in 50 was a lemon, or 2 percent of the answers in your column were wrong? No errors are acceptable!

I attended a conference recently at Stanford University titled "Manufacturing in the '90s." George Fisher, president and CEO of Motorola, stated in his keynote address that his company now counts defects a few per MILLION, and by 1992 hopes to be counting defects per BILLION. The goal is 99.997 percent defect-free product.

If America's manufacturing industry condoned even a fraction of a 2 percent error rate, it would have even more problems than it has today, and would soon cease to exist. I submit that the U.S. Postal Service should rethink its quality program or its future may be very tenuous.

Abby, this is what we can expect if 99 percent is "good enough":

- At least 200,000 wrong drug prescriptions each year.
- More than 30,000 newborn babies accidentally dropped by doctors/nurses each year.
- Unsafe drinking water almost four days each year.
- No electricity, water, heat for about 15 minutes each day.
- No telephone service or television transmission for nearly 15 minutes each day.
- Newspapers not delivered four times each year. — DON McNEILL, SEPULVEDA, CALIF.

DEAR DON McNEILL: What happened to your Breakfast Club? Thanks for some startling statistics. 'Tis said, "Figures don't lie, and liars don't figure." I say, always strive for perfection, but allow for human error.

DEAR ABBY: You have had several letters concerning the quality of mail service. Can you stand one more?

For 11 years, we lived in the small city of Palacios, Texas. About a year ago, I obtained the name and address of the postal department that Palacios station reported to. I wrote a letter commending them on their exceptionally good service, as well as the courtesy of their employees. Later on I asked one of the employees if she had ever heard of my commendation. She said she had not.

What a shame the employees have to answer to the criticism they receive, but rarely do they hear the compliments.

Thanks for letting me have my say. — BETTY FITCH, MESA, ARIZ.

DEAR BETTY: Orchids to you for wanting to compliment the employees of the Palacios, Texas, Postal Service. Although your message did not reach them through the route you intended, will this do?

DEAR ABBY: Re the U.S. Postal Service: Two weeks ago, I sent a birthday card from Oakland to San Francisco — first class mail. It arrived eight days later.

Abby, eight days to travel a distance that I can drive in 20 minutes! A 2 percent error rate out of 100 billion means every year 2 billion pieces of mail go astray. That's intolerable! — L.P. STEARNS, OAKLAND

CONFIDENTIAL TO GETTING INVOLVED IN GLOUCESTER, MASS.: Nobody said it better than Cheryl Lavin and Laura Kavesh, co-authors of a wonderful little book, "Tales From the Front": "Don't be the first one in a divorced man's post-divorce life. Midlander to compete in Miss West Texas Pageant

From Staff Reports

Tina Sanders, 21, will represent Midland in the 40th Annual Miss West Texas Pageant 7 p.m. Saturday at the Holiday Inn Convention Centre in Odessa. The winner of this pageant is eligiable to compete in the Miss Texas America Pageant scheduled for July 1989.

Miss Sanders won second runner-up in last year's Miss West Texas competition.

This year, she and the other contestants will be competing in interview, swimwear and evening gown competitions, in addition to the talent competition, which is 50 percent of each contestant's score. Miss Sanders will be performing a tap dance to "Crazy Rhythms" for the talent division.

A change in this year's festivities is that contestants also will have a short interview on stage in addition to private interviews with the judges.

"One fact that the Miss West Texas Pageant is very proud of is that we are tied with one other city for having the most winners at the Miss Texas Pageant," Miss Sanders said. The West Texas area is tied with Haltom-Richland with four state queens each. The last winner from this area was in 1976.

Miss Sanders, the daughter of Steve and Irene Sanders of Midland, is sponsored by News Center 7.

The winner of the pageant Saturday will receive numerous prizes including a scholarship to the college of her choice, a wardrobe, hair care and an all expense-paid trip to the Miss Texas Pageant.

Tickets for the Miss West Texas Pageant are $5. They can be purchased at the door or in advance from any Odessa Jaycees member.

PLO calls special session to discuss Jordan's 'divorce'

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — The PLO said today it is calling a special session of its parliament to discuss King Hussein's decision to cut Jordan's legal and administrative links with the Israeli-occupied West Bank.

Egypt, meanwhile, called for coordination between Jordan and the Palestine Liberation Organization in efforts to achieve Middle East peace.

A statement issued in Cairo by Foreign Minister Esmat Abdel-Meguid said Hussein's announcement Sunday did not mean Jordan was abandoning its role in the quest for a Palestinian settlement.

"The advancement of the peace process...requires a unified Arab front based primarily on effective Jordanian-Palestinian coordination," the statement said.

The director of the PLO's Baghdad office, Azzam al-Ahmad, said the organization's Central Council called for a meeting of the 400-plus member National Council within a month. The decision was made during two days of meetings in Baghdad.

The last National Council session, held in Algeria, came late last year before the Palestinian uprising began Dec. 8 in the West Bank and Gaza Strip. The Central Council is the upper branch of the bicameral National Council.

Monday, PLO foreign relations chief Farouk Kaddoumi called during a closed Central Council meeting for the maintenance of rights of Palestinians living in Jordan, PLO officials said, on condition they not be identified.

King Hussein, in a televised speech, said he was cutting ties with Palestinians in the West Bank because the PLO should be primarily responsible for them.

The PLO has been leading the uprising in Israel's occupied lands. Most of the 850,000 Palestinians in the West Bank have Jordanian passports, use Jordanian money and worship in Jordanian-supported mosques.

The Israelis do not recognize the PLO, but moderates among them have expressed a willingness to talk peace with a Jordanian-Palestinian delegation.

Saturday, Hussein dissolved Jordan's lower house of parliament. Half of the 60 members of the Chamber of Deputies were Palestinians from the West Bank. Three days earlier, he canceled a $1.3 billion development project for the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

In his speech Sunday, the king said, "Jordan is not Palestine. The independent Palestinian state will be established on occupied Palestinian land after its liberation, God willing."

The PLO sources said Kaddoumi praised Jordan's "distinguished" relations with the world's 5 million Palestinians and the PLO and said. "These relations will remain."

They said Kaddoumi emphasized the importance of maintaining "all the rights acquired by the Palestinian people in Jordan."

More than half of Jordan's residents are refugees or immigrants from Palestine and there are fears Hussein's action could lead to a loss of some of the rights they now have.

Israeli troops kill Palestinian teen

WORLD

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israeli troops shot and killed an 18-year-old Palestinian and wounded four others in clashes in the occupied West Bank today as Arabs closed businesses for a second day to protest deportations.

The clash occurred in the West Bank's largest city of Nablus, where soldiers opened fire after a military patrol was stoned, said an official at Nablus' Al Ittihad Hospital.

The victim, identified as Alla Edin Al Aghbar, was hit by a bullet in the stomach, the hospital official said.

Two other Palestinian teenagers were hit in the legs by bullets in the same clash today, the hospital official said. The army said it was checking the reports.

In a second incident, soldiers shot and wounded two Arabs in the legs in the town of Dura after masked Palestinians stoned a patrol and tried to prevent Arab laborers from boarding a bus to work in Israel, Arab news reports said.

The army confirmed the clash but said it had no further details.

The death raised to 236 the number of Arabs killed since the uprising broke out Dec. 8. Four Israelis also have died.

In a move prompted by eight months of Palestinian unrest, King Hussein of Jordan announced Sunday he was severing legal and administrative links with the West Bank that he ruled until Israel captured it in 1967.

Pro-Jordanian Palestinians in the territory were angered by the move, but a majority praised the monarch for ceding control over them to the PLO. The uprising has been led by underground leaders tied to the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Arabs shuttered their stores and halted public transportation today to protest the expulsions Monday of eight reputed leaders of the uprising in the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

Israeli soldiers and military police lead handcuffed Palestinians toward a waiting truck on the Lebanon-Israel border Monday after a judge ordered the Palestinians to be deported for "inciteful and subversive activities."

The Israeli army's chief prosecutor said the eight Palestinians were expelled to deter further violence in the territories.

Lt. Col. Amnon Strasnov said on Israel army radio that Israel had "no choice" but to expel the eight. Western countries, including the United States, say Israel's deportation policy violates human rights.

"This step of expulsion is definitely a deterrent. People fear it more than lengthy detentions," Strasnov said.

He added: "From a legal standpoint, they (the deportees) could not have been put on trial. There is no acceptable evidence for the court."

He did not elaborate, but a military official said the eight could not be taken to court because the evidence was either top-secret or sketchy. The official spoke on condition of anonymity.

Monday's expulsions brought to 29 the number of Palestinians deported since the uprising began Dec. 8.

The deportees, six from the West Bank and two from the Gaza Strip, were flown by helicopter to southern Lebanon and then placed in waiting taxis taking them further north.

Also Monday, Foreign Minister Shimon Peres acknowledged that no progress would be made in solving the Arab-Israeli conflict until after the November elections in Israel and the United States.

Hussein's decision was a setback for Peres' Labor Party which had campaigned for the so-called "Jordanian option" — resolving the dispute with the Palestinians by negotiating with Jordan.

But Peres suggested Jordan could be drawn back into the peace process if Labor formed the next government. "The elections will determine if the Jordanian option is dead or not," Peres said.

U.N. leader says he'll set cease-fire date

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The U.N. secretary-general says he will alone set a deadline for halting the bloodshed in the Persian Gulf, pressuring Iraq to return to the bargaining table and end its raids on Iran.

Javier Perez de Cuellar said late Monday that he expects to set a cease-fire date once his fact-finding team returns from the warring countries this week and he has consulted with the Security Council.

■ Related story, Page 1D

Iran said it would honor an immediate cease-fire in the 8-year-old war. Iraq had no immediate comment on Perez de Cuellar's statement.

Iran's announcement on July 18 that it was finally accepting a year-old U.N. cease-fire resolution came after it suffered a string of battlefield defeats, and was followed by a series of Iraqi raids into Iran.

Iraq accepted the cease-fire resolution last year, but now has been demanding face-to-face talks with Iran before a truce takes effect.

The announcement of a cease-fire date would put pressure on Iraq to compromise and drop its insistence on direct talks, which have hampered a week of U.N.-mediated negotiations between the belligerents.

After a three-hour meeting with Iranian Foreign Minister Ali Akbar Velayati, Perez de Cuellar indicated he would set a cease-fire date without Iraqi assent.

"The D-Day doesn't depend on the parties," the U.N. chief said.

Velayati and Iran's U.N. ambassador, Mohammad Ja'afar Mahallati, told reporters earlier Monday that Iran wants the secretary-general to go ahead and name the cease-fire date, with or without Iraq's agreement.

"Iran is immediately ready to implement (a U.N. peace) resolution by a cease-fire," said Mahallati.

Velayati told reporters all major issues have been covered in their meetings "and there is no substantial point (of disagreement) between us and the secretary-general."

Sadoun Hamadi, Iraqi minister of state for foreign affairs, earlier Monday repeated his country's insistence on direct talks. He made his comments during an appearance on state television in Baghdad.

The Security Council resolution provides for a cease-fire, withdrawal to recognized borders, a prisoner exchange, peace negotiations and an investigation to determine which side started the war.

Perez de Cuellar said a U.N. military team is now in Amman, Jordan, preparing its report. He said he is to receive it on Wednesday.

"I will be in touch with members of the (Security) Council and then I will decide on a D-Day," the Peruvian said.

The secretary-general said once a date is decided, he will begin consulting nations that could provide about 250 military observers to monitor the truce and troop withdrawal.

Perez de Cuellar Monday held his sixth meeting with Velayati since talks began last week.

He has met three times with Iraqi Foreign Minister Tariq Aziz, but Iraq said it was not prepared to enter into substantive talks with Perez de Cuellar until direct talks take place.

Hussein's cutting of ties with West Bank reshapes Arab-Israeli dispute

By JONATHAN BRODER
Hearst News Service

An Analysis

JERUSALEM — King Hussein's decision to sever Jordan's ties with the West Bank is a bold attempt to redraw the political map of the Arab-Israeli dispute — one which makes traditional Israeli peace formulas increasingly obsolete, analysts here say.

Though analysts are waiting to see how Hussein implements his announcement, most agree he has dramatically lowered Jordan's profile, given the green light for an independent Palestinian state and thrust the PLO forward as the party to be dealt with in any future negotiations.

Such assessments do not appear to be shared by either side of Israel's national unity government.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir of the rightwing Likud Party, renewing his offer to negotiate limited West Bank "autonomy" with Jordan, labeled Hussein's landmark address Sunday night a "propaganda stunt" to win Palestinian sympathies.

Foreign Minister Shimon Peres and Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin, the leaders of the more moderate Labor Party, declared in separate remarks that peace talks with Jordan remained the only viable path toward solving the Palestinian problem.

"It's amazing," said Moshe Amirav, a former Likud politician. "They still think they can deal with Hussein. They don't think anything has changed."

Israeli observers viewed Jordan's initial move, canceling a $1.3 billion development fund for the West Bank, as Hussein's reminder to restive Palestinians of how dependent they are on Jordan.

In the wake of his speech, announcing the end of Jordanian administrative and legal responsibility for the administered terrritory, they are no longer so sure.

"We have underestimated Hussein's intentions in the last few days," a senior government official said. "It seems he is really serious and he means business."

A Western diplomat, citing eight months of Palestinian unrest in the occupied territories during which the PLO has gained influence at the expense of Jordan, said: "The king is just reading the writing on the wall. He's bowing to the inevitable. Sooner or later, it's going to be Israel's turn."

But, said Amirav, who was expelled from the Likud last year after holding secret talks with Palestinian figures, the PLO has been so demonized in Israel that the mere suggestion of negotiations with the guerrilla organization by either of the major parties would mean political suicide — especially three months before an election.

"Hussein's speech is an embarrassment to Labor because it has built its entire political strategy on the Jordanian option," Amirav said. "It also embarrasses Likud because it torpedoes any chance of their strategy for negotiations with Jordan for West Bank autonomy."

Israel has seemed stuck in its reaction to signs of other Arab changes, said Matti Steinberg, a Middle East expert at Jerusalem's Hebrew University.

He cited Labor and Likud's refusal to consider the recent document by PLO spokesman Bassam Abu Sharif, which called for mutual recognition between Israel and the PLO, and direct negotiations, based on a two-state solution to the Israeli-Palestinian dispute.

Although the document was not signed by PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat and was later criticized by several of his senior aides, it has not been withdrawn. Several respected Israeli experts now agree with those Palestinians who view it as a genuine reflection of the PLO's willingness to reach a compromise with Israel.

"This is an important document and should be taken seriously," said Steinberg, who also serves as an adviser to defense minister Rabin.

Significantly, the Committee for the Uprising in the Occupied Territories, the shadowy underground leadership of the revolt, issued a new leaflet Monday, endorsing the Abu Sharif document for the first time. Palestinian sources close to the leadership said the endorsement was important because it reflects agreement among the four principle factions of the PLO — Arafat's dominant Fatah wing, the Marxist Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, the Democratic Front and the Palestine Communist Party.

Last Wednesday, Faisal Husseini, director of Jerusalem's Arab Studies Center and a prominent pro-PLO figure, addressed an Israeli peace rally here and told his Jewish audience the PLO had abandoned its dream of eliminating Israel and replacing it with a Palestinian state in all of Palestine.

"There has to be...recognition by both sides," Husseini said. "I am not prepared to impose my dream on others, just as they cannot impose theirs on me. We see a Palestinian state beside Israel, with secure and recognized bounderies for both, as a realistic solution."

Sunday, just a few hours before the Jordanian monarch made his speech, Israeli security forces closed the Arab Studies Center for a year and jailed Husseini for six months without charge.

"The irony is he's the guy that we've been praying for — a Palestinian who is willing to sit and talk peace with us," Amirav said. "He's an authentic leader. We didn't create him. Now he's sitting in jail. What can be more stupid than that?"

Thompson upset with logistical problems

NEW YORK (AP) — U.S. men's basketball coach John Thompson has already had some Olympic logistics problems and it is his own government that has him upset.

Thompson told a telephone news conference on Monday that he has had problems with American military officials concerning use of a gymnasium at an Army base in Korea as a back-up facility.

"It appears to me that I have to get an act from the President in order to use a United States facility and I kind of resent that," Thompson said from Washington. "I always get a kick out of people telling me this is our team, America's team.

Olympics

"It is, until you're ready to use some facilities. We've had more problems with the U.S. Army and that facility than anything I've made a trip over to Korea for."

Thompson has expressed concern over the starting times of the games in the Olympics because they will be played in a time zone 13 hours from television prime time on the East Coast of the United States. That means for the game to start at 9 p.m. in the eastern United States, it would have to start at 8 a.m. in Seoul.

He has made trips to Seoul to make sure everything would go smoothly and securing practice facilities was a big part of those trips.

"The gym was a backup; it was not the primary place we would practice," Thompson said, his voice starting to rise. "What we wanted to do was know what we could do if the main practice facility that had been assigned to us had fallen apart. At least we would have had somewhere to go — and it was a U.S. military base for 45 minutes a day — without an act of Congress."

Thompson gave no further details of which military base was involved or how the situation was being resolved.

Thompson on Monday also confirmed published reports that Florida center Dwayne Schintzius was interviewed by agents from the Drug Enforcement Administration on the day he was released from the Olympic team.

Thompson emphasized the meeting came after he had decided to release the 7-foot sophomore and had nothing to do with his being sent home from the camp being conducted at Georgetown.

"What happened is that those gentlemen did come to Georgetown University and requested to see Dwayne," Thompson said. "They were able to see Dwayne and talk to Dwayne after we did practice. It was not during practice.

"They were informed just as Dwayne was informed after practice that we had made some decisions to release some people."

University of Florida president Marshall M. Criser announced last week an investigation of possible illegal drug use on campus that may involve current and former Gator athletes.

Criser said the probe was sparked by a criminal investigation in Gainesville, Fla., of drug sales and use in the area. He did not name the law enforcement agency conducting the probe.

Schintzius, along with Randolph Keys of Southern Mississippi and Dyron Nix of Tennessee, was released after being among the final 20 players in quest of the 12 berths on the team, which will defend the gold medal in Seoul in September.

Cotton Bowl game may add sponsor

DALLAS (AP) — The Cotton Bowl Athletic Association was expected to announce today that Mobil Corp. will be the corporate sponsor for the Cotton Bowl, sources close to the bowl have told Dallas newspapers.

Neither Cotton Bowl nor Mobil officials would comment on the oil company's sponsorship of the New Year's Day football game, but both the Dallas Morning News and Dallas Times Herald reported today that Mobil Copr. will be announced as the corporate sponsor at a news conference today.

A source familiar with the Cotton Bowl's executive board of directors told the Dallas Times Herald. "If the Cotton Bowl has called a press conference, it's Mobil."

Jim Brock, executive vice president of the Cotton Bowl, declined Monday night to confirm or deny the report.

"I'll only say that what we will announce will have a major impact on the association and conference," Brock told the Dallas Morning News.

Cotton Bowl officials also plan to make other announcements concerning the future of the game, said Jim Williams, first vice president of the board of directors.

Williams declined to give specifics.

"We're trying to be pace setters and not sit back on our laurels," he said. "After 53 years, we've had our success but there are a lot of other goals to achieve."

Mobil Corp., the nation's fifth-largest corporation as ranked by Fortune 500 magazine, employs nearly 4,000 people in the Dallas-Fort Worth area.

Mobil conducts research, has exploration and production units based in the area and has an accounting center and the regional marketing headquarters here.

Bowl officials began talking about corporate sponsorship more than a year ago and hired SMTI, a Greenwich, Conn., based sports consulting company, in March to help acquire a name-in-title sponsor and assist in the coordination of television activities with CBS Sports, which has broadcast the game for 31 years.

The Cotton Bowl had a long list of potential sponsors, including GTE, which sponsors the Byron Nelson Golf Classic and All-America men's and women's academic teams; the Southland Corp.; Dr Pepper; American Airlines; and Kodak, which sponsors the Kodak All-America team and the Cotton Bowl Trophy, presented to the winner of the game.

Dorsett describes benching

DALLAS (AP) — Tony Dorsett told a television station that he became a bitter sitter, watching from the bench as newcomer Herschel Walker, without warning, took over his starting Dallas Cowboys tailback spot.

"The only thing I didn't like about all this stuff is the way I was treated. I was never told they were going to start Herschel. Never," Dorsett said in an interview Sunday with television station WFAA. "No one ever came to me and told me that. I learned through the media."

Dorsett, who went to the Denver Broncos, thought the deserved more consideration in Dallas.

"I played 11 years, gave a lot of blood, sweat and tears," said Dorsett, who was traded to the Broncos before NFL training camps opened.

"There (were) broken bones in my back, cracked ribs — you name it. I had every injury that you could have, yet I went out there."

But Dorsett said he was told the Cowboys wanted to establish a "youth movement" and had to make changes.

" ... That's another reason why I said this place is not for me," he said. "You just don't treat me like that ... .

Rafferty seeks longer game streak

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — Tom Rafferty can barely hold his head up after another grueling training camp practice.

"This is what 13 years as a center in the NFL will do to you," Rafferty says. "You can barely look up."

Rafferty is one of the oldtimers of the 1988 Dallas Cowboys.

He has played in every regular season game since 1976, a string of 177 consecutive games. Of course, the strike replacement games of 1987 are excluded.

Rafferty is only 19 games short of Bob Lilly's club record streak of 195, which includes post-season games.

Every year he comes to camp, he hears about somebody beating him out. Rafferty is 34 years old.

Cowboys

"The pro scouts always said I was too small at Penn State and that's probably why I wasn't drafted until the fourth round," he said.

Now Rafferty is 6-foot-3 and 270 pounds.

George Lilja, a 290-pounder, was giving Rafferty a heated run for the starting position until Lilja fractured a finger which will keep him out of the lineup for two months.

Second-year center Bob White also was making a strong run until he suffered a severe thigh bruise.

"I just keep hanging in there," Rafferty said. "I could still improve my run blocking but I think I do a good overall job. I'm not the quickest person in the world but I'm not the slowest, either."

Offensive line Coach Jim Erkenbeck said Rafferty "is a 100 per cent guy. He just doesn't cruise around. When he plays, he goes all out. He's the kind of guy you like on your team. He'll get down in the ditch and battle for you."

Rafferty is the answer to one of the NFL's best trivia questions: Who sprang the pivotal block on Tony Dorsett's record 99-yard touchdown run against Minnesota in 1983?

"Centers don't normally get a lot of publicity but maybe I'll be remembered for that one," he said.

Givins tags receiver mates 'Untouchable'

SAN MARCOS (AP) — Houston Oiler Ernest Givins adopted "The Untouchables" nickname for the club's wide receivers hoping to bring them recognition this season, but he may have to do a little explaining first.

Givins said Monday the nickname will portray the receivers as unstoppable, like Al Capone and his gang.

"I saw the movie and Al Capone was a bad man so we feel our coach (Jerry Glanville) will be Al Capone and we'll be the bad guys," Givins said.

But Eliott Ness and his G-men, called "The Untouchables" by mobsters who couldn't bribe them as they bribed other officers, were good guys who finally jailed Capone for tax evasion.

Although it appears he has his good guys and bad guys confused, Givins says he doesn't.

"A lot of people misinterpreted what we were trying to do," he said. "We're a combination of both (Capone and The Untouchables). Al Capone was a man who the only way they caught up with him is he didn't pay his taxes.

Oilers

"The only way they can stop us is if they get rid of us ... We're not one of The Untouchables, but an untouchable."

Givins and Drew Hill did quite well without a nickname last season when they caught passees for a combined 1,922 yards, the most of any starting duo in the NFL.

Givins caught 53 passes for 933 yards and narrowly missed becoming the fourth receiver in NFL history to have 1,000 yards in each of his first two years.

Last season, Givins did his "Cabbage Patch" dance in the end zone after each of his six touchdowns.

The idea of "The Untouchables" came from teammate wide receiver Willie Drewrey, who thought it would help the group get recognition.

"By being 'The Untouchables,' I feel like it will give us more recognition, not for a showboat type deal," Givins said. "It's just to build confidence in the receiving corps."

When the Oilers decide on the five or six receivers who make the team, the group plans to don their gangster suits and pose for a poster.

"The idea is we don't just have one or two receivers that can hurt you, we've got five or six," he said. "It's not one person doing something, it's all five or six."

They also plan to have the nickname printed on the back of receiver's shoes.

"I don't care what kind of attitude it brings from other teams," Givins said. "Cleveland has the "Dogs" out there, Denver has the "Three Amigos."

"In Houston we have 'The Untouchables.' It's all in fun, mainly for the kids and the entertainment part of the game."

Because the Oilers, who reached the playoffs last season, will again receive national television exposure this season, Givins is takng the fun seriously.

"We've got a chance to go to the playoffs again and to the Super Bowl," he said. "We have to realize when we get in the playoffs, that it's business."

Givins would like to get back on the 1,000-yard track this season and earn a spot in the Pro Bowl.

"My only personal goal this year is to make the Pro Bowl because that's the only thing I haven't done," Givins said.

The new nickname will give the Oiler receivers exposure just as reaching the playoffs did last year, Givins says.

"Drew and I have been doing well as receivers but we haven't gotten any reocgnition," Givins said. "The team makes the playoffs and suddenly everyone looks at the Oilers like they have a lot of talent.

"The talent was already here while we were rebuilding."

From Staff Reports

WICHITA, Kan. — The Midland Angels dropped both ends of a doubleheader to the Wichita Pilots here Monday, but Manager Max Oliveras' nine still remained a half-game behind the Texas League West-leading ...San Antonio Missions. The Missions forged ahead in the red-hot race by besting the El Paso Diablos Monday night.

The Angels lost the first game 4-3, before Wichita righthander Jim Austin blanked the Haloes on six hits in a 7-0 nightcap.

Todd Eggertsen, 6-8, takes the mound for the Angels in tonight's series finale against Wichita's Brian Wood, 3-1. The Haloes return home Friday for a homestand against El Paso.

First Game

The Angels drew first blood on a double by Jesus Alfaro and Dan Grunhard's fifth home run of the year in the second inning. But the Pilots touched Midland starter Tim Burcham, 6-6, for two runs in their half of the inning on a walk to Craig Cooper, singles by Carlos Baerga and Mike Basso and a safety squeeze bunt by Jim Tatum.

Wichita got to Burcham for two more in the sixth on a triple by Jeff Yurtin, an RBI double by Bill Stevenson, an intentional walk to Carlos Baerga and a successful double steak coupled with a throwing error by Midland catcher Mike Knapp.

Canseco continues power surge for hot A's

Associated Press

Jose Canseco hit 31 home runs for the Oakland Athletics last year, but his accomplishment was generally overshadowed by the extraordinary rookie year of teammate Mark McGwire, who had 49.

This year, Canseco is making some bigger news for himself with 31 homers so far — including five in the last four games. Homering in his fourth straight game Monday night, Canseco led the Athletics to a 10-2 victory over the Chicago White Sox.

"Basically, you get in a groove, instead of hitting line drives, you hit them out," Canseco said. "They come in bunches. Sometimes you go a week without hitting a home run."

Canseco's 31 homers lead the major leagues. His two-run homer in the first inning Monday night, incidentally, was the 100th of his career.

Canseco's homer against the White Sox not only matched his total for all of last year, but moved him within two of his 33-homer rookie year in 1986.

Dave Henderson also had a big night for Oakland by driving in four runs with a homer and a single.

Henderson singled home two runs in a four-run second inning in which Canseco also singled in a run, giving him the major league lead with 86 RBI. Henderson hit his 16th homer in the fourth inning after Walt Weiss singled.

The victory was the third in the last four games and, coupled with Minnesota's 3-1 loss to Toronto, improved the A's lead in the AL West to 6½ games. The loss was the fifth straight for the White Sox.

Rookie Todd Burns, 4-0, left after six innings, giving up six hits, no walks and striking out three. Melido Perez, 10-6, took the loss.

"All the guys are hitting," Henderson said. "Everytime I went up, there were guys on base."

Blue Jays 3, Twins 1

George Bell hit a three-run homer in the eighth inning, leading Toronto over Minnesota and spoiling Frank Viola's bid to become the majors' first 17-game winner.

Viola, 16-4, was lifted with two outs in the eighth after giving up consecutive singles to Tony Fernandez and Manny Lee. Bell then greeted reliever Jeff Reardon with his 15th homer of the season.

The game featured a pitching duel between Viola and Toronto starter Dave Stieb, 11-7.

Viola allowed seven hits, struck out three and didn't walk a batter, while Stieb limited the Twins to three hits, struck out six and walked one in eight innings. Tom Henke pitched the ninth for Toronto to pick up his 19th save.

The Twins scored in the fifth on an RBI single by Steve Lombardozzi.

Royals 5, Tigers 3

Bo Jackson hit his third home run in three games and fueled another rally with a double, leading Kansas City over Detroit.

The loss trimmed the Tigers' lead in the AL East to one-half game over New York and one game over Boston. Both were idle.

Mark Gubicza, who lost 3-1 to the Tigers last week in Detroit, improved his record to 13-6 with relief help in the eighth inning.

Steve Farr recorded his 12th save after the Tigers scored three times in the eighth on a bases-loaded walk by Lou Whitaker and two-run single by Alan Trammell.

Doyle Alexander, 10-6, was the loser.

Jackson doubled and scored in the the fifth to give Gubicza a 2-0 lead. In the seventh, he led off with his 16th home run. Jackson sat out Saturday night but homered against Baltimore on Friday and Sunday.

Angels 8, Mariners 4

Devon White, Bob Boone and Tony Armas hit home runs as California won a club-record 10th straight road game.

White's ninth home run, a two-run shot off Bill Swift, 6-9, gave the Angels a 3-1 lead in the fifth inning and they never looked back.

Boone hit his fourth home run of the season in the seventh, a two-run shot, and Armas hit a three-run shot as a pinch hitter in the eighth.

Terry Clark, 4-0, scattered 10 hits for the victory.

The victory was the sixth straight for the Angels.

The victory lifted the Angels' road record to 31-23 this year. They are 23-28 at home.

Bosox can't fathom luck

BOSTON (AP) — Amazing ... unbelievable ... incredible. Those are a few of the adjectives the Boston Red Sox are using to describe their current state of affairs.

With 20 consecutive home victories, the Red Sox can tie the club record with another tonight against the Texas Rangers.

"It's incredible. It's hard to believe," said Joe Morgan, who has a 17-1 record since being promoted from coach to manager with the firing of John McNamara on July 14. "When are we going to lose? I don't know. It's unbelievable, isn't it?"

The Red Sox are a relaxed, confident group. They're not worried that the streak has to end eventually and don't appear to be feeling any pressure.

"We've got some young people here who don't even know what pressure is," veteran catcher Rich Gedman said, alluding to the likes of Todd Benzinger, Ellis Burks, Jody Reed and Kevin Romine.

"The winning streak may end," outfielder Benzinger said. "But the winning ways will be here for the rest of the season."

Veteran second baseman Marty Barrett jokingly agreed.

"It's like my wife's cooking — it doesn't get much better," he said.

The Red Sox, who start bullpen refugee Wes Gardner, 4-1, against Jeff Russell, 8-3, have not lost a game at home since June 24, when ace right-hander Roger Clemens was beaten by lowly Baltimore.

Since that surprise, the team has won 20 in a row at Fenway Park.

In completing a four-game sweep of Milwaukee with a 5-0 victory behind newcomer Mike Boddicker on Sunday, the Red Sox moved to within one victory of the club's 1949 winning streak.

Fame game is deja vu for Zimmer

COOPERSTOWN, N.Y. (AP) — Being around greatness is nothing new for Chicago Cubs manager Don Zimmer.

Zimmer and his Cubs played a 1-1 tie with Cleveland on Monday in the annual Hall of Fame game at Doubleday Field.

The score didn't matter. More than 9,000 packed the historic park to see players such as Andre Dawson, Ryne Sandberg and Joe Carter.

Prior to the game, several Hall of Famers walked onto the field, including Ted Williams, Stan Musial, Ernie Banks and the newest member, Willie Stargell.

As Zimmer looked at the various stars on the diamond, he couldn't help but reminisce about his days with the Brooklyn Dodgers.

"On the bus over here today I was thinking about the players in the Hall of Fame that I have played with," Zimmer said.

Hammaker stops Astros in rare start

Associated Press

The San Francisco Giants have lost four starters but rediscovered another.

With Dave Dravecky, Mike Krukow, Mike LaCoss and Terry Mulholland on the disabled list, the Giants turned to former All-Star Atlee Hammaker for help. Hammaker, who began the season in the bullpen, pitched a five-hitter Monday night for his first victory in six starts as the Giants defeated the Houston Astros 4-1.

The Giants have won six straight and moved past Houston into second place in the National League West, 3½ games behind the Los Angeles Dodgers, who lost 4-3 to Cincinnati.

"I feel good about going the distance. It's been a while," said Hammaker, 5-3, who pitched his first complete game since August of last season. "I was battling the whole game. I had to have good concentration."

Will Clark led the Giants' offense with two doubles and his 23rd homer and drove in two runs to give him a league-leading 81 RBI. But the first baseman preferred to talk about Hammaker.

"Atlee pitched an excellent game. Even the mistake pitches he threw up there were outs. That's what happens when you're going well," Clark said.

The Astros, who took two out of three at Los Angeles last weekend, now trail the Dodgers by 4½ games.

"It's a very important series. We're fighting for second place and the next couple of weeks we all (Dodgers, Astros, Giants) play each other, so it's a good opportunity to do something," Houston manager Hal Lanier said.

Hammaker's outing was perfectly timed. Not only has the Giants' staff been hit by injuries, the team played a doubleheader Sunday and used relief ace Scott Garrelts in both games.

"When you have only an eight-man pitching staff, you need complete games," Manager Roger Craig said.

Nolan Ryan, 8-8, had 11 strikeouts in seven innings, the 179th time in his career he's struck out 10 or more in a game, and raised his major league-record career strikeout total to 4,703.

Reds 4, Dodgers 3

Chris Sabo's two-run single capped a four-run rally in the eighth inning and Danny Jackson won for the seventh time in eight starts to lead Cincinnati.

Jackson, 14-5, allowed seven hits in seven innings, struck out four and walked one in his first appearance ever against Los Angeles.

The Dodgers led 3-0 after seven innings behind the three-hit pitching of rookie Tim Belcher, but Jeff Treadway singled with one out in the top of the eighth and pinch-hitter Dave Collins walked.

Jesse Orosco walked Kal Daniels to load the bases and was replaced by Alejandro Pena, 4-4, whose two-base throwing error on Barry Larkin's chopper allowed two runs to score.

Pirates 7, Mets 2

Doug Drabek pitched six shutout innings and Mike LaValliere hit a two-run homer as Pittsburgh averted a four-game sweep at Shea Stadium.

The Pirates snapped New York's five-game winning streak and pulled to within four of the first-place Mets in the NL East. The teams play a four-game series in Pittsburgh starting Friday night.

LaValliere's homer broke a scoreless tie in the sixth. R.J. Reynolds had four hits and three stolen bases.

Drabek, 10-5, permitted six hits and won his fifth consecutive start. Dwight Gooden, 13-6, went 6 1-3 innings and gave up four runs on 11 hits, matching the most he has allowed in his career.

Padres 6, Braves 3

Pinch-hitter John Kruk's two-run double highlighted a five-run sixth inning as San Diego handed Atlanta it seventh straight loss.

Ed Whitson, 10-6, scattered seven hits in six innings and won for the seventh time in his last eight decisions. Dave Leiper allowed two hits and struck out five in three innings for his first save.

Tom Glavine, 3-12, lost his sixth straight decision and is winless since June 5 when he defeated the Padres.

The Padres trailed 2-1 through five innings but batted around in the bottom of the sixth.

Summer brings variety to sport

By ED SCHUYLER, Jr.

Associated Press

A mural of the American summer sporting scene would be done in rich hues. Put it to music, and it would be a jazz suite for orchestra.

There's the crack of ball against bat in stadiums, playgrounds and parks as big boys and little boys play for glory and for fun.

There's the thud of leather against bone as Saturday's — and Sunday's — heroes get ready to impress a high school sweetheart or win a Super Bowl.

There's tennis and golf and racing by horses and men and machines. And there's so much more.

Last weekend, a sellout crowd of 15,018 got in out of the heat to watch a football game at Rosemont, Ill., men and women challenged Big Sandy on bicycles at Spokane, Wash., others swam, peddled and ran in the Chicago, women twirled hoops and ribbons at Salt Lake City and men threw the bull at Laramie, Wyo.

In the Horizon Arena at Rosemont, the Detroit Drive won the Arena Indoor Football League championship by beating the Chicago Bruisers 24-13.

No parade was scheduled in Detroit.

Jokes aside, Arena Football has a chance of becoming a permanent item on the summer sport's menu. Detroit averaged 14,096 for the 12-game season, while the other five clubs averaged 7,396.

"It's a shot-and-a-beer crowd," said Roger Twibell, the play-by-play man for AIFL games on ESPN. "People are here to have fun. ... They don't take it all that serious. It's a serious game, but it's entertainment first, football second."

A lot of other television-inspired sports are entertainment first, although their promoters are not honest enough to admit they're selling brass, not gold.

Analysis

While the Drive was in high gear indoors in the Chicago suburb, about 3,500 contestants sweated it out for $15,000 in prize money in the Chicago edition of the U.S. Triathlon Series, made up of a 1.5-kilometer swim, 40-kilometer bicycle race and a 10-kilometer run.

Sounds like a wonderful way to spend a sweltering day.

The cyclists challenging each other, Big Sandy and some other hills around Spokane were competing in the Olympic Road-Racing Trials.

Hoops whirled and ribbons twirled at the Olympic trials for rhythmic gymnastics, an event that was an exhibition at the Los Angeles Games, but will be a medal sport at Seoul.

The sport features aerobic dance while competitors perform in four areas — rope, clubs, hoops and ribbons. Their routines are done to the accompaniment of one instrument, usually a piano. Oh, well, it's got to be as much a sport as synchronized swimming and ice dancing.

"I feel joy — I feel everything," said Irina Vdovets, after Diane Simpson and Michelle Berube, both of whom she coaches, finished in a tie for first place in the all-round competition at Salt Lake City.

A lot of cowboys were feeling good, and bruised, out at Cheynnne, where the 92nd Frontier Days Rodeo was held.

"If we (cowboys) were all rich, probably nobody would be doing this," Sam Poutous said after winning $3,447 for finishing second in the bull ride.

COTTON

Jim Ray Smith, chairman of the board of the Cotton Bowl, said officials wanted to find a corporate sponsor who would mesh with the Cotton Bowl.

"Being competitive is the word in the bowl business," Smith said. "None of us can compete with the Rose Bowl, but the other three (Cotton, Sugar and Orange bowls) can be (competitive) as far as payoffs are concerned."

SWC commissioner Fred Jacoby said the conference hopes to tie season promotions into the Cotton Bowl sponsorship. Jacoby, however, said the SWC has not had talks with any potential sponsors, but will seek a meeting with the Cotton Bowl's sponsor.

Bowl games already under corporate sponsorship include the Sunkist Fiesta Bowl, the John Hancock Sun Bowl and the USF&G Sugar Bowl.

ANGELS

Knapp kept the Angels in the game, however, with a solo homer in the Midland seventh, his third of the season, and C.L. Penigar walked.

Penigar reached second on a wild pitch by Pilot reliever Mike Mills, but pinch-hitter Jeff Manto and Jim McCollom grounded out to end the game.

Midland pitching coach Tim Kelly was ejected in the third inning by home plate umpire Hank Schwarz for arguing a ball-strike call.

Second Game

Austin blanked the Angels, walking none and getting ahead of the hitters with regularity.

Red-hot Bill Stevenson gave the Pilots the only run they needed with a solo homer in the first inning, his 14th of the season. Pat Jelks capped the Pilot scoring with a three-run homer in the sixth, his third of the season.

ANGEL NOTES: Despite the double loss, Alfaro and McCollom continued to feast on Wichita pitching. Alfaro was three-for-six in the twinbill to raise his season batting average to .309.

The yeteran Venezuelan has batted .411 with 27 RBI since his return from Class AAA Edmonton last month, and is nine-for-14 with five doubles in the current Wichita series.

Hog coach gets outlets for show

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP) — The Ken Hatfield Show, a football program starring the University of Arkansas coach, has been picked up by a Little Rock independent station and the NBC affiliate in Fort Smith-Fayetteville, a promoter says.

The football coach's show, spurned by Little Rock network affiliates, will be carried in Arkansas by KLRT in Little Rock and KPOM in Fort Smith-Fayetteville, according to Larry Shank of Midwestern Media, the marketing firm which is producing the program in the first year of a three-year contract.

Hatfield said KLRT will carry the show from 7-8 p.m. on Sundays and will also send the show to 120 communities via a cable network. KPOM plans to air the program from 5-6 p.m. on Sundays except on days when NBC carries an NFL doubleheader. A station spokesman said on those Sundays the program tentatively is set for 10:30 p.m.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 3, 1988

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: You will take special pleasure in frequent family outings. Changes at work will benefit you — both emotionally and financially. Spiritual growth helps you handle your personal relationships better. Leave more time for major projects by reducing your everyday workload. Teamwork is the key to success. Long-distance travel is possible. Do not be afraid to stike out on your own when others resist a good idea.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actor Martin Sheen, composer Richard Adler, singer Tony Bennett, historian James MacGregor Burns, actress Dolores Del Rio, author Leon Uris.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Giving someone the silent treatment will not solve anything. More communication, not less, is the answer. Ignore people who clearly do not want to be on the winning team. Seek allies elsewhere.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You may have to scale down your expectations until the fall. Store your ideas away until you know the climate is right to present them. Money is probably the source of a relationship dispute.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Words are more important than actions today. Seeing more than one side of a situation will bring the solution you want. Fresh air and exercise keep you feeling fit. Avoid temptation.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your intuition is right on target. Go for the brass ring! Work around an individual who has been impeding your progress. Romance and this evening's events put you in a more mellow mood.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Manage what money you have, instead of moaning about what you don't have. You have done quite well and should be proud of your accomplishments. Your happy-go-lucky ways cheer your friends.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You are more creative working on your own. A communications mix-up could cause problems for those at a distance. A phone call or quick trips will work to your financial advantage. Move swiftly.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Make certain you know what is expected of you before beginning a pet project. Sloppy record-keeping could damage your reputation. The outlook for romance is excellent. Protect your good name.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Foreign events are likely to have a profound effect on your business dealings. Concentration is the key to accomplishing all that needs to be done. Musical talent brings you pleasure.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Avoid direct confrontations. Gather the resources you need to solve a financial problem. Give free rein to your imagination and you will find a quick solution. Put romance on hold for now.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): The emphasis today is on short trips. You can pick up important information at a social event. Your ability to handle sensitive people or situations is highlighted. Offer to play the role of peacemaker.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Work conditions continue to improve, boosting teamwork. Branching out in new directions requires courage, but you have plenty. Your intuition is correct where a relationship is concerned.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Anxiety could stem from seeing too many loose ends. Get better organized and stick to your priorites. A candid chat with mate or business partner leads to greater happiness. Show consideration.

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
Pass	Pass	4 ♠	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Five of ♠

There are two ways to make today's contract. One is to take a lucky guess in the club suit when it comes to finessing for the jack. The other is to remove all elements of chance. In that case, you will succeed regardless of who holds the jack of clubs!

South's opening bid of four spades is acceptable in third- or fourth-seat only. In first- or second-position, you should open with one spade—avoid making a preemptive bid on a hand that contains two aces.

Since he did not like the idea of leading from any of his plain-suit holdings, West selected his singleton trump for the opening salvo—not that it mattered, but a poor choice in our opinion. There were three obvious losers, two hearts and a club. The road to success lay in not losing a second trick in the club suit. Declarer found a way of getting home regardless of which defender sheltered the knave.

He won the first trick with dummy's king, underplaying the queen from hand. Next came a diamond ruffed high, followed by the eight of trumps overtaken with dummy's nine and a second diamond again ruffed high. Declarer's carefully preserved two of trumps now served as an entry for another diamond ruff, and the groundwork for the upcoming strip and endplay had been accomplished.

South simply cashed the ace of hearts and exited with a heart, and sat back to enjoy the fruits of his labor. The defenders could take a second heart trick with impunity, but that's where the free ride ended.

Whichever defender was then on lead would have the choice of losing plays. A club return would obviate declarer's need to guess the location of the jack. A red-suit return would permit declarer to ruff in one hand while discarding a club from the other. Either way, the ace of clubs was going to be the third and last trick for the defense.

'Last Temptation of Christ' to appear in Venice Film Festival despite protests

ROME (AP) — Martin Scorsese's film "The Last Temptation of Christ" will appear in the Venice Film Festival, despite being branded by some church leaders as blasphemous and condemned by Italy's leading political party.

"Why not show it?" asked Genny Fiorin, head of the Cinema Office, in a telephone interview Monday from Venice.

Scorsese

The Christian Democrats denounced the movie in which Jesus must endure the "last temptation" — making love to Mary Magdalene.

The Italian Roman Catholic organization Reagire (React) also sent the festival's director a telegram criticizing the film as blasphemous. The festival begins Aug. 28.

Fundamentalist church groups also have protested the movie in the United States. The movie, which stars Willem Dafoe as Jesus and Barbara Hershey as Mary, is to be released next month.

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — Police from four states have canceled plans to protest at a performance by Willie Nelson after the country singer decided to give a concert that will partially benefit law enforcement officers.

Nelson

"If everything goes as planned, we probably won't have any demonstration," said Al Leavitt, president of the state Fraternal Order of Police, of Nelson's concert scheduled for Aug. 27.

Police nationwide criticized his appearance last October at a benefit for Leonard Peltier, an American Indian activist serving two life sentences for the 1975 slayings of two FBI agents.

Peltier's supporters are raising money to pay for an appeal.

The West Virginia FOP made plans to protest at Nelson's Aug. 27 concert in Charleston after Rhode Island police said they would picket the singer concerts last weekend in Warwick, R.I.

About 800 officers from West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Ohio and Virginia demonstrated at a Nelson concert Friday in Warwick, R.I., but canceled plans for a demonstration Saturday after Nelson agreed to the new benefit concert.

Proceeds will go to the American Indian Relief Fund and the National Police Memorial Fund.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "La Bamba" star Lou Diamond Phillips says he's a shoo-in for most ethnic roles, thanks to his multiracial heritage — mostly Filipino with a little Chinese, Hawaiian and Spanish mixed in.

"There are a lot of blond-haired, blue-eyed actors out there, and good ones at that," Phillips said recently. "But in my category there aren't that many actors in the running."

Phillips made his film debut portraying Ritchie Valens in last summer's hit "La Bamba." Now he's joining other young Hollywood actors in "Young Guns."

The Billy the Kid movie starring Emilio Estevez, Charlie Sheen, Kiefer Sutherland and Phillips will be released Aug. 12. Phillips stars as Jose Chavez y Chavez of Mexican and Navajo Indian heritage.

"I know that for a role like that I'm a shoo-in," he said. "It's something I can do automatically."

• • •

NEW YORK (AP) — A fractured vertebra has forced Elizabeth Taylor into a hospital for rest and therapy, her physician says.

Taylor

The 56-year-old actress was admitted to St. John's Hospital in Santa Monica, Calif., last Thursday. She will require strict bed rest and physiotherapy, her physician, William Skinner, said in a brief statement Monday.

He said X-rays showed a compression fracture of the first lumbar vertebra had produced lower back muscular spasm that required the hospitalization.

• • •

LONDON (AP) — Ballet fan Princess Diana was the guest of honor at a performance by the Dance Theater of Harlem in a benefit to raise money for AIDS victims.

Diana, 27, attended Monday's performance in London's West End theater district to support Britain's AIDS Crisis Trust and the dance company's scholarship program.

She was greeted by the American dance company's founder, Arthur Mitchell, and principal dancer, Yvonne Hall, to kick off the troupe's three-week visit to Britain.

Diana is married to Charles, Prince of Wales and heir to the British throne.

• • •

WASHINGTON (AP) — Composer and pianist Marvin Hamlisch, a frequent performer at the White House, has been named by President Reagan to be a member of the National Council on the Arts.

Hamlisch has written numerous scores for movies and Broadway musicals, including "They're Playing our Song" and "Chorus Line," which won a Pulitzer Prize and a Tony Award. He often is host of a broadcast concert series presented at the White House and is a favorite of Nancy Reagan's.

If Monday's nomination is confirmed by the Senate, Hamlisch would succeed novelist Allen Drury on the arts council. The council is the chief advisory arm of the National Endowment for the Arts, the independent federal agency that underwrites a wide variety of artists and arts institutions.

• • •

NEW YORK (AP) — Actor Cleavon Little put his money where his mouth is at a star-studded benefit to support black theater.

Little, star of Mel Brook's riotous film "Blazing Saddles," and the Broadway play "I'm not Rappaport," drew the winning raffle tickets Monday night at a midtown Manhattan restaurant, then pulled out a check for $200.

"It's just something important that I think needs to be done, hopefully to encourage other people," said Little. He added that too often people enjoy themselves at benefits without thinking about how they can help others.

"I was overwhelmed. People just don't pull out checks," said South African trumpeter Hugh Masekela, co-author of "Sarafina!"

The benefit was staged to help the Roger Furman Theater, which bills itself as the city's oldest black not-for-profit theater.

The cast of "Sarafina!", which was nominated for five Tonys this year, performed at the gathering. They were joined by Anna Maria Horsford, one of the stars of the NBC sit-com, "Amen" and Rosalind Cash, a movie and theater actress with a recurring role on "The Cosby Show" spinoff, "A Different World."

Economic gauge leaps 1.4 percent

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government said today its chief forecasting gauge of future economic activity shot up 1.4 percent in June, the biggest increase in 18 months.

The big advance in the Commerce Department's Index of Leading Indicators provided fresh evidence that the current recovery, which has already lasted a peacetime record of 69 months, is in no danger of collapsing.

Economists said they were not concerned that the huge jump in June's figure was a signal that the economy was in danger of overheating.

They said the increase was in large part a rebound from May, when the index had dropped by a sharp 0.8 percent.

The June advance was the biggest one-month gain since the index rose by 2.2 percent in December 1986. It was the latest in a string of reports reflecting better-than-expected economic growth this year.

The government said last week that the economy, as measured by the gross national product, expanded at a 3.1 percent annual rate from April through June. This robust growth helped to push the unemployment rate down to a 14-year low of 5.3 percent in June.

This performance was a far cry from the recession that many analysts were predicting in the wake of last October's stock market crash.

In June, the strength in the leading index was widespread, with seven of the available nine components registering advances.

The biggest source of strength came from a 5.7 percent rise in stock prices in June. The increase in the Standard & Poor's index of 500 stocks was followed by a slowdown in business deliveries, considered a sign of increasing demand; an increase in plant and equipment orders; a drop in unemployment claims; an increase in building permits; a change in raw materials prices and a rise in the money supply.

One indicator, orders for consumer goods, was a negative factor on the index and one other indicator, the length of the average workweek, was unchanged in June.

The 1.4 percent rise left the overall index at 194.0 percent of its 1967 base of 100.

The economy has been bolstered this year by a boom in U.S. export sales and heavy business investemnt. The GNP, the total output of goods and services, grew at an annual rate of 3.4 percent in the first quarter and 3.1 percent in the second quarter.

The Reagan administration, which began the year forecasting GNP growth for all of 1988 at a lackluster 2.4 percent, is now forecasting growth of around 3 percent, when measured from the fourth quarter of 1987.

This is in line with the view of many private analysts, who see the economy slowing from the 3.3 percent average rate in the first six months of the year.

David Wyss, an economist with Data Resources Inc., a Lexington, Mass., forecasting firm, said he expected the GNP would grow about 2.8 percent this year, about the same as DRI was predicting before last October's stock market crash.

"We still expect the second half to be a little slower than the first, but the first half was very good," he said. "We will have a much better year than everyone assumed right after the market crash."

Sending team to First Republic took planning

DALLAS (AP) — Although they had planned meticulously how to take over Texas' largest bank holding company, NCNB Corp. officials say they were nervous about whether they would succeed until the end.

With military-like precision and secrecy to match, 250 North Carolina bankers set up camp at a Dallas hotel and waited for the announcement that finally brought the failing First RepublicBank Corp. into their fold last Friday.

Rumors circulated earlier in the week that NCNB had a lock on a takeover and that the press conference would be a mere formality, one local bank analyst said.

But Brad Iverson, NCNB's senior vice president for marketing, said Monday the team heard no such rumors. When the site of the press conference to announce the acquiring corporation shifted to Washington, D.C., near-panic set in.

"It wasn't a done deal as far as we were concerned," Iversen said. "We were on pins and needles."

Iversen and others breathed a collective sigh of relief when news came that the North Carolina bank holding company had indeed won the bidding, conducted by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

NCNB employees were flown into Dallas late Thursday and early Friday morning, awaiting the announcement that would mark the end of First RepublicBank's Texas banking presence and the birth of NCNB Texas National Bank.

"We were all real pleased," said Iversen said. "There haven't been any hitches at all."

"We had done ads for newspapers and radio, tons of posters and customer letters," he said. "If the deal hadn't been done, we wouldn't have been able to use that for anything but scrap paper."

All of the posters, letters and advertising was secretly produced in North Carolina and then quietly shipped to Dallas on Thursday via Federal Express. There was so much material that NCNB had to rent a separate hotel room just to store it, Iversen said.

Course on buying U.S. firms draws complaints

TOKYO (AP) — Should Americans be advising the Japanese on how to take over American companies?

The issue raised a rumpus among Americans in Tokyo recently after the American Chamber of Commerce in Japan and the American State Offices Association sponsored well-attended courses for Japanese businessmen on how to acquire U.S. companies.

Representatives of several state offices complained that such seminars were against the rules of the Chamber of Commerce, and both of the sponsors had to defend the seminars.

"To have a seminar here in Tokyo, a three-hour seminar, and not touch on the subject of hostile takeovers would be incomplete," answered William Franklin, president of the Chamber of Commerce in Japan, adding that the Chamber was not promoting hostile takeovers.

The debate over Japanese takeovers is gaining momentum both here and in the United States as Japanese investors expand their American interests beyond government securities and real estate. Just last week, Nomura Securities Co., Japan's biggest securities house, bought a 20 percent stake in Wasserstein, Perella & Co., one of America's hottest merger-and-acquisition firms.

Speakers at the Japanese seminars described how to target U.S. companies for acquisition, how to prepare proxy statements for the Securities and Exchange Commission, and ways to avoid antagonizing American employees and customers of the companies they are taking over.

Also covered were such subjects as how to conduct friendly, neutral or hostile takeovers.

Black chamber vows to keep program alive

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

Almost a week after being rebuffed by the City Council, members of the Midland Black Chamber of Entrepreneurs vow that their Excel Youth program will continue.

"This program will continue if we don't have a dime," promised Robbyne Fuller, president and chief executive officer of the MBCE. She added that "we have a big job ahead of us to convince the council that we need this program."

The chamber is seeking $100,000 in federal Community Development Block Grant funds to permanently establish Excel Youth. The program, operated in cooperation with the Job Training Partnership Act, recently completed what Fuller termed a successful eight week run.

Members appeared before the City Council last week during hearings on spending the CDBG funds. The Council turned down their request, but decided to wait two weeks before making a final decision.

James Fuller, the chamber's vice president for education and the project's director, noted that the council had two main objections to the funding. First, the council said it's not in the business of education. "This hasn't a leg to stand on, because the Council funded the Black Advisory Council's word processing classes. They say that was a mistake. If it's not for the council to have a hand in this or that program to ensure they have a pool of employees, then that's contrary to everything they've said about Midland spirit."

The second objection is that the program is a duplication of the Junior Achievement program, and others. Fuller stated: "If there are so many programs like this in Midland, why are there so many people unemployed?"

Robert Smith, director of Midland's Junior Achievement, explained that his program is classroom-oriented, taught as part of a class. Excel Youth, he said, leans more toward business outside the classroom. "Whenever you teach kids, no matter what, there's going to be similarities. Why have Junior Achievement when you have instructors? There's a lot of differences between the two programs."

In other business, chamber members are preparing to host the quarterly meeting of the newly-formed Texas Association of Black Chambers of Commerce Aug. 19-21 at the Midland Hilton. There will be a series of seminars, exhibits and guest speakers. Among the guest speakers will be Walter Sutton, manager of Texas Instruments' corporate legal manager for state and local affairs and president of the National Bar Association, and Richard Knight, Dallas city manager.

First Interstate seeking to establish branch banks

HOUSTON (AP) — First Interstate Bank of Texas, N.A. applied Monday to branch all of its Texas banks in a move that would create a new combined bank with 57 offices throughout the state and assets of more than $7.5 billion, officials said.

"We anticipate prompt regulatory approval and would expect statewide branching at all First Interstate Bank of Texas facilities to be implemented by the end of the year," said Tim Hickey, executive vice president and chief financial officer.

Statewide branch banking became permissable in Texas under a court ruling earlier this summer.

"In general, customers will be able to complete any financial transaction relating to deposits, loans, wire transfers and pre-approved lines of credit at any First Interstate office in Texas," Hickey said in a prepared statement.

The bank's automated teller machines, which already accept withdrawals and transfers, will also be changed to accept deposits at any location, he said.

Officials said the change will be of particular benefit to companies that maintain separate accounts in several unit banks because of laws restricting acceptance of deposits.

Sears to sell brand name appliances

CHICAGO (AP) — Sears, Roebuck and Co., the nation's largest retailer, said it will start selling appliances and home electronics made by other companies.

Sixty national brands, including Sears' Kenmore appliances, will be available Thursday at 13 Indiana stores, the company said.

That is a first step in a plan to sell other brands at its stores nationwide, said Michael Bozic, chairman and chief executive officer of Sears Merchandise Group.

Lockheed announces new chairman

New York Times News Service

Tellep

NEW YORK — Daniel M. Tellep, a mechanical engineer who has led the Lockheed Corp.'s missiles and space systems group, Monday was named chairman and chief executive of the nation's fourth-largest military contractor.

Tellep, 56 years old, will succeed Lawrence O. Kitchen when he retires at year-end from Lockheed, which is based in Calabasas, Calif.

Kitchen, who is 65, has held the company's top posts since January 1986. Industry analysts said they expected Tellep's appointment to last nearly a decade and to reflect the company's long-term direction. Lockheed's aircraft business has been hurt by a slowdown in contracts while the missiles and space group has continued to grow.

The missiles and space group, based in Sunnyvale, Calif., has 39,000 employees whose projects include work on Strategic Defense Initiative contracts. Tellep has been president of the group of four companies, which have generated about 46 percent of Lockheed's total revenue since 1986.

"The future of Lockheed lies with the missiles and space operation," said John Simon, of Seidler Amdec Securities Inc. in Los Angeles.

Tellep said in a telephone interview Monday that he had no plans to de-emphasize the company's aircraft business. "I feel great excitement and a bit of awe," he said of his new job.

Two longtime Lockheed executives had also been in the running for the top job, analysts said. Robert A. Fuhrman, who is 63 and had been president and chief operating officer, will continue in the latter post and become vice chairman. Vincent N. Marafino, 58, was promoted to vice chairman and will keep his post as chief financial officer.

Oil prices dip below $16

From Staff and Wire Reports

Crude oil futures fell below $16 this morning, dropping 10 cents to stand at $15.98 at midmorning.

Prices had fallen slightly Monday in quiet dealings as traders looked ahead to Wednesday's scheduled meeting of OPEC's price monitoring committee.

The contract for September delivery of West Texas Intermediate, the benchmark grade of U.S. crude oil, fell 23 cents to $16.08 a barrel on the New York Mercantile Exchange.

Prices of some refined products rose slightly because of short-term imbalances of supply and demand, analysts said.

The September contract for No. 2 heating oil rose .02 cent a gallon to 45.12 cents a gallon and the September contract for unleaded gasoline rose .32 cent to 48.45 cents a gallon.

William Byers, an analyst for Bear, Stearns & Co., said the absence of news about the likelihood of a price accord by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries left traders cautious.

"If there's an incentive to do anything, it's to limit exposure," Byers said.

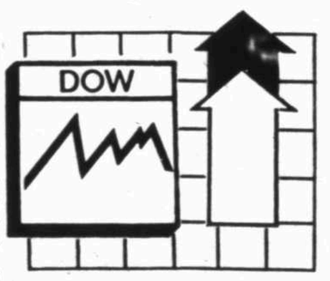
Stocks inch up 1.78 points



NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market finished mixed Monday but largely resisted traders' sporadic efforts to cash in on last week's sharp gains.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, which surged 68 points last week, inched up 1.78 to close at 2,130.51.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by about 11-to-9 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 830 issues up, 672 down and 481 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the NYSE came to 138.17 million shares, down from 192.34 million in the previous session. Nationwide, consolidated volume in NYSE-listed issues, including trading at regional exchanges and on the over-the-counter market, totaled 157.84 million shares.

UTPB professor invited to China

From Staff Reports

Midland resident Dr. David M. Eggleston, an engineering professor at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin, has been invited to present a short course, "Wind Turbine Engineering Design," in Shanghai, People's Republic of China, Aug. 5-9.

The short course, sponsored jointly by the China Wind Energy Development Center in Beijing and the Shanghai Solar Energy Assocation, will present the latest engineering techniques and data for wind turbine design.

Dr. Eggleston has been involved with wind turbine research and design for several years.

Construction spending up in June

WASHINGTON (AP) — Construction spending inched up 0.1 percent in June, reflecting a big increase in investment for new factories that helped offset declines in housing and government projects, the government says.

Building activity rose to a seasonally adjusted, but not inflation-adjusted, annual rate of $402.8 billion in June, following a 0.8 percent increase in May, the Commerce Department said Monday.

Heat wave heats up commodity prices

Associated Press

Drought paranoia has returned to the commodity pits.

Soybean, corn and oat futures prices shot up their permitted daily limits Monday on the Chicago Board of Trade amid fears that the latest heat wave in the Midwest will do further damage to drought-stressed crops. Wheat futures also closed sharply higher.

Gillette, Coniston settle lawsuits

BOSTON (AP) — Gillette Co. and the investment firm Coniston Partners have ended a six-month power struggle with settlement of lawsuits over their proxy fight earlier this year.

As part of the settlement announced Monday, Gillette will buy back an estimated 16 million shares at $45 each, or a total of $720 million, and Coniston will not buy any more shares or take other action to acquire the toiletries giant for three years, both sides said.

Enron earnings increase 10-fold

HOUSTON (AP) — Enron Corp., a Houston-based energy company, increased net earnings by over 10 times for the second quarter compared with the same period a year ago because the sale of half its cogeneration business.

For the three months ending June 30, Enron had a net income of $31.2 million, or 46 cents per share, compared with $2.8 million, or a loss of 20 cents per share, during the same quarter in 1987.

During the quarter, the company sold a half-interest of its cogeneration business, resulting in a one-time after-tax gain of $40.3 million.

For the first six months of the year, Enron had earnings of $100.6 million, or $1.74 per share, compared with $65.5 million, or 94 cents per share, for the first half of 1987.

Enron officials said Monday that results for the second quarter were in line with their expectations, and noted that second- and third-quarter results are almost always lower than first and fourth quarters due to seasonal weather factors.

In the second quarter of 1988, the company experienced a 12 percent gain in net natural gas throughput for its pipeline group, which is consistent with Enron's goal of continuing to gain national share of gas delivered to consumers.

The earnings for 1987 have been restated from amounts previously reported for the adoption of new financial accounting standards.

Transco halts offshore exploration

HOUSTON (AP) — Transco Exploration Partners, Ltd. will halt onshore exploration and sell all interests in deep-water exploratory leases in a plan designed to concentrate exploration on the Outer Continental Shelf in the Gulf of Mexico, officials said.

TXP's onshore operations include about 120 employees in regional offices in Houston, New Orleans and Denver. Assets include approximately 278,000 undeveloped acres located primarily in Texas, Louisiana, California and in parts of the Rocky Mountains region.

The company said Monday it expects to save about $10 million annually by discontinuing onshore activities.

How many layoffs will result has not yet been determined, said spokeswoman Gretchen W. Weis.

The company also will pursue the sale of about 50 blocks of deep-water leases acquired between 1983 and 1988, officials said.

Jubilee files to build transmission system

HOUSTON (SWN) — Jubilee Pipeline Co. has asked the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) for approval to build an open-access, 81.6-mile natural gas transmission system in the Mobile Bay area offshore Alabama.

The system, with a design capacity of 315 million cubic feet of gas per day, will consist of 35.4 miles of 24-inch, 10.1 miles of 20-inch, 25.9 miles of 16-inch, 7.8 miles of 12-inch, and 2.4 miles of 8-inch pipeline. Other equipment will include platform-based metering facilities offshore, and an onshore 6,000-horsepower compressor plant plus metering, dehydration and liquid separation facilities.

COURSE

An accountant told the businessmen how to spot companies in trouble, a businessman told them how to recognize and avoid bluffs by American companies, and another participant advised the Japanese that they often paid more for American companies than necessary.

Billy Cody, director of Oregon's representative office in Japan, said the state offices association "has no business teaching Japanese how to take over an American company, whether or not it wants to be taken over."

The American State Offices Association, which represents the 39 U.S. states with offices in Japan to promote trade and investment in their states, sent out a letter saying it does not censor speeches of experts who appear at such seminars.

The association does not "in any way promote hostile takeovers by Japanese companies in the U.S., and data substantiates that this is not even a primary or common form of Japanese investment in the United States," the letter said.

The course was first offered in Osaka, attended by more than 100 persons, many of them Japanese businessmen. Following objections over a portion of the course that dwelt on hostile takeovers, the course was modified and offered again in early July in Tokyo, drawing more than 150 businessmen, most of them Japanese.

Franklin said mergers and acquisitions are a fact of life in American business, and the seminars were designed to make the Japanese better informed.

The controversy placed the Chamber in an awkward situation, because it wants to guide the Japanese in investing their surplus cash in the United States, and thus to stave off protectionist sentiment in Congress.

The U.S. government and many American companies have welcomed Japanese investment, as long as U.S. management is left intact, and American consultants are active in Tokyo advising the Japanese on takeover prospects.

So far, Japanese companies have been content to play the role of "white knights" who rescue companies from unwanted invaders. However, participants at the seminars urged the Japanese to be more aggressive and seek out companies that might be ripe for mergers.

Mie Teno, chairman of the Invest in U.S.A. Committee of the Chamber of Commerce, told the Tokyo seminar that mergers and acquisitions are a good way to get into business in the United States quickly.

Compared with the United States, where takeovers are commonplace and even the biggest corporations are targets, there are few takeovers in Japan. Japanese companies tend to hold large blocks of each other's stock permanently, creating alliances and making it difficult to mount a hostile takeover attempt.

Cody said Japanese companies have a paternalistic feeling toward their employees and believe that selling part of their company is like selling a member of the family.

"Not only would this not happen in Japan, government and businesses would work together to prevent it," the Oregon representative said.

According to Yamaichi Securities Co., Japanese companies concluded 469 mergers and acquisitions in 1987, and 451 in 1986. Of those mergers, more than 200 each year were outside Japan. Last year, for the first time, foreign takeovers by Japanese companies exceeded domestic takeovers.

Only about 22 foreign companies in 1986 and 25 in 1987 were able to acquire Japanese companies, according to an investment broker who asked that he not be identified.

The first foreign hostile takeover bid against a major Japanese firm ended in failure last year when Trafalgar Holdings Ltd. of the United States and Glen International of Britain sold the shares they had acquired in the Japanese Minebea Co. The Japanese government had decided that much of Minebea's business was defense-related and should not be sold to an outsider.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Figuring how much to withdraw after age 70-1/2

By BILL DOYLE

Q. Having been born Nov. 11, 1917, I reached age 70 1/2 May 18, 1988. My wife was born May 17, 1925. At my bank, I was told I will have to start taking distributions from my individual retirement account by Dec. 31, 1988, and that my first required IRA withdrawal will be $271. Can this be correct?

Doyle

A. That depends what the value of your IRA was on Dec. 31, 1987. However, there is something wrong with what you say you were told. Perhaps you misunderstood.

You are required to make the first withdrawal from your IRA by April 1 following the year in which you reach 70 1/2 — not Dec. 31 of that year.

In your case, you must make your first IRA withdrawal by April 1, 1989. That will be your 1988 distribution. Then, you'll have to make another withdrawal by Dec. 31, 1989 — your 1989 distribution. In every future year you will be required to make an annual withdrawal by Dec. 31.

Past age 70 1/2, your minimum IRA distributions must be taken based on your life expectancy or the joint life expectancy of you and your IRA beneficiary. You can withdraw more if you like, but most people opt to take out the minimum required. We'll assume that's your choice and your wife is your IRA beneficiary.

On April 1, you will be 71 and your wife will be 63 — making your joint life expectancy 24 years. Divide the Dec. 31, 1987, balance in your IRA by 24 and you know exactly how much you must take out by April 1, 1989. According to my handy little calculator, this means the Dec. 31, 1987, value of your IRA was $6,504 — 24 times $271.

Figuring the Dec. 31, 1989, distribution gets more complicated. That will be calculated by using the Dec. 31, 1988, IRA balance less the April distribution and dividing by your joint life expectance, which then will be 23.1 years.

In each future year, your required withdrawal will be your IRA balance on the previous Dec. 31 divided by your joint life expectancy, which keeps going down — but not by exactly one year annually.

Q. When I asked an officer at our bank about my and my wife's joint life expectancy and how much I will have to withdraw from my IRA, he referred to a booklet printed by a private statistical firm. I wanted a copy, but he said he had only the one.

Isn't this data available from the government?

A. Of course. Life expectancy tables and just about everything else you would want to know about IRAs are contained in Internal Revenue Service Publication 590, "Individual Retirement Arrangements." Copies are available from the IRS forms distribution service, whose number you'll find in your phone book.

However, there is one serious error in IRS Pub. 590. A paragraph on Page 10 says, "If you have more than one IRA, the minimum distribution rules must be determined separately for each IRA and the minimum amount so determined must be distributed from that IRA."

That very bad rule was overturned last March 30 by IRS Notice 88-38. Now, if you have two or more IRAs, you can take the total amount you are required to withdraw annually from the IRA you choose.

That's a break for anyone with multiple IRAs paying different rates of interest and who naturally wants to take a distribution from a low-interest account and leave the others intact.

Q. My bank has a special representative on duty one evening a week advising on investments and recommending long-term certificates of deposit at 8 percent. Since that is higher than the rate on some of my IRA CDs, it makes me wonder. What's the catch?

A. No catch. Lots of banks and savings and loan associations now are offering CDs with interest rates of 8 percent and higher. An old rule of thumb is the longer the maturity term of a CD, bond or other debt security, the higher the interest rate.

By shopping around, you can get 8 percent or better on five-year or even two-and-a-half-year CDs. A few years ago, rates were even higher. I suspect you did little or no comparative shopping before getting your IRA CDs.

Britain orders security review after bombing of barracks

LONDON (AP) — The government ordered a security review of all military bases after an IRA bomb killed one soldier and injured nine at a north London army barracks considered an easy target for a terrorist attack.

Security was reported so lax at Inglis Barracks in suburban Mill Hill that the perimeter fence was riddled with holes and broken traffic barriers were still unrepaired after two months.

The barracks houses the Directorate of Defense Postal and Courier Services, where a staff of 250 handles mail for British armed services personnel around the world. It also houses some personnel from the Royal Engineers, the Royal Navy and the Women's Royal Army Corps.

"This was a soft target and this makes it an extremely cowardly attack," Archie Hamilton, minister of state for the armed forces, said of Monday's blast. "We don't keep the military apart from the community but we will obviously now have to review our security arrangements."

Conservative Party legislator John Gorst, whose parliamentary constituency includes the barracks, said security was appalling.

"With the benefit of hindsight, I think it would be crystal clear that it would be possible to move into this place with impunity and to move around without being challenged," he said.

Monday's 7 a.m. blast, the fifth IRA attack since May against British military targets outside Northern Ireland, knocked down most of a two-story brick dormitory and started a fire.

The Irish Republican Army claimed responsibility in a message to the bureau of the British domestic news agency Press Association in Belfast, Northern Ireland.

The 15 men living in the dormitory were in bed when the explosion tore out the first floor, an army spokesman said. The building can accommodate up to 70 people.

Soldiers clean up the Inglis Barracks in North London Monday following an explosion which ripped through the building early Monday morning, killing one soldier and injuring a number of others.

The mainly Roman Catholic IRA is fighting to end British rule in Northern Ireland and unite the Protestant-dominated province with the Republic of Ireland.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, who is on a trip to Australia, today condemned the attack, describing it as "a negation of democracy."

"It is again another lesson why no one, but no one, should support the IRA or any form of terrorism," she said. "They don't like the results at the ballot box, so they turn to bombing, maiming and killing."

The blast in London raised new fears for British armed forces personnel at home and abroad, because Inglis is only one of hundreds of small, lightly guarded British bases.

Reporters who went to the barracks after the blast found the 5-foot-high, wire mesh perimeter fence riddled with holes. One section had a 50-foot gap.

Monday's explosion was the first fatal attack by the IRA in mainland Britain since guerrillas blew up Mrs. Thatcher's hotel during a political convention in Brighton in October 1984. She narrowly escaped injury, but five other people were killed in the assassination attempt.

On March 6 in Gibraltar, British commandos killed three unarmed IRA guerrillas who were said to have been on a bombing mission.

Shiite spiritual leader says hostages may be freed before U.S. election

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — The spiritual leader of Lebanon's most radical pro-Iranian Shiite Moslem group was quoted today as saying American hostages may be freed before the U.S. presidential election.

Sheik Mohammed Hussein Fadlallah previously has predicted that the fate of the nine American hostages would be determined during or after the Nov. 8 election.

Today, an Arab-language weekly quoted him as suggesting for the first time that freedom for the hostages may come sooner.

"I do not have any detailed information on the hostages issue within the context of U.S.-Iranian relations," Fadlallah was quoted as saying in an interview published by the Paris-based Mostakbal magazine.

"But I have a feeling that the problem of the hostages is an essential factor in the American presidential election because their card will be of no importance after the elections," he was quoted as saying.

Fadlallah is spiritual leader of Hezbollah, or Party of God. The group is believed to be the umbrella organization for Shiite militants holding most of the 18 foreign hostages in Lebanon.

"My feeling is that the American hostages issue will be completely resolved just as the issue of the French hostages was," he was quoted as saying.

The last three French hostages in Lebanon were freed May 4.

Fadlallah was quoted as saying the United States and Iran were bound to normalize relations now that the 8-year-old Iran-Iraq war is nearing an end.

Millions reportedly rally for Khomeini

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iranian media reports said millions of people rallied across Iran today in support of Ayatollah Ruholiah Khomeini and the Islamic revolution that brought him to power.

The official Islamic Republic News Agency compared the gatherings to the demonstrations that swept Iran when Khomeini returned from exile on Feb. 1, 1979, after the overthrow of the Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi.

"History is once again repeated to mark another occasion — 'To renew allegiance to the Imam,'" IRNA said.

The rally in Tehran was organized by Ayatollah Hussein Ali Montazeri in support of Khomeini's decision, announced July 18, to accept a year-old U.N. resolution calling for a cease-fire in the 8-year-old Iran-Iraq war, the press reports said.

Blast injures six soldiers near Belfast

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — A suspected land mine blew up near an army Land Rover patrolling an area west of Belfast early today, slightly injuring six part-time soldiers, police said.

The attack in the County Tyrone village of Carland came a day after a bomb planted by the outlawed Irish Republican Army destroyed part of an army barracks in north London, killing one British soldier and injured nine.

No group claimed responsibility for today's explosion, but suspicion fell on the IRA, which has targeted members of Britain's security forces in its campaign to end British rule in Northern Ireland.

A spokesman for the Royal Ulster Constabulary, the province's police force, said the six members of the locally recruited Ulster Defense Regiment were treated for minor injuries at South Tyrone Hospital in Dungannon and released. One suffered a broken arm.

The spokesman, who by custom was not identified, said the explosion occurred at 9:30 a.m. (4:30 a.m. EDT) on the Cookstown Road in Carland, 4 miles from Dungannon and about 35 miles west of Belfast.

The area was immediately sealed off and security forces were investigating, the spokesman said.

Police said they could not confirm an initial report that shots were fired at the patrol.

Last month near Coalisland, a few miles away, security forces found an 800-pound bomb the IRA twice tried to detonate. The IRA had to abandon the planned attack because cattle had eaten their way through the command wires.

Carlucci gets look at top-secret Soviet bomber

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet military unveiled its new top-secret Blackjack bomber to U.S. Defense Secretary Frank Carlucci today and staged thundering aerial and artillery displays at two bases normally off-limits to foreigners.

Carlucci spent about 10 minutes in the cockpit of the strategic bomber while foreign reporters were allowed within about 50 yards of the sleek white jet. Soviet military brass were clearly uncomfortable with the access accorded the visitors and refused to tell reporters anything about the plane.

"Why do you want to know about the bomber? Why frighten people?" asked Col. Gen. Boris F. Korolkov.

He refused to identify the aircraft, whose only markings were a red star and a No. 12 on the tail.

The Pentagon's reference book Soviet Military Power says the plane is the world's heaviest and largest bomber, but does not give exact dimensions.

Jane's All The World's Aircraft, a respected British reference book, says the plane, code-named Blackjack by NATO, is known in the Soviet Union as the Tupolev strategic bomber. It says the jet is 177 feet long, has a wingspan of 182 feet and weighs 550,000 pounds.

The aircraft has been under development for 10 years, can travel twice the speed of sound, has a flying range of 4,500 miles and can be armed with bombs and cruise missiles, according to Jane's.

No Western official had been shown the plane before Carlucci's visit to the Kubinka airfield 30 miles west of Moscow.

Jane's and the U.S. Defense Department predicted the Blackjacks would be deployed this year. Korolkov said they became operational "recently."

Carlucci first inspected a MiG-29 Fulcrum fighter jet before turning to the nearby Blackjack. As he did, two Blackjack bombers flew overhead in formation in the partly cloudy blue sky, and the roar of their engines broke the silence of the largely deserted airfield.

Carlucci inspected the underbelly of the four-engine Blackjack and then climbed orange stairs into the open bomb-bay doors and entered the cockpit. He told reporters later he could not give technical details of the plane, but compared it to the B-1 bomber of the United States in that it can fly at low altitudes and carry heavy payloads.

"I'm not a qualified intelligence officer," said Carlucci, a former senior official with the CIA. "I'm not a qualified observer. They let me sit in the cockpit but I couldn't tell one instrument from another."

The American defense chief, who arrived in the Soviet Union on Monday for a four-day visit, said the tour was largely symbolic.

"It's a way of continuing the dialogue between our two military establishments," Carlucci said.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Soviet police quell protest

MOSCOW (AP) — Police in Leningrad broke up a demonstration by about 1,000 people who displayed placards and banners critical of the Kremlin's handling of ethnic disputes, a Moscow activist reported today.

Police detained 27 of the participants and filed criminal charges against 10 in the Monday night demonstration at Nevsky Square, said Yevgenia Debryanskaya of the unofficial Democratic Union political group.

She said she was informed of the incident by telephone by Valery Terekhov, a Democratic Union activist in Leningrad.

The demonstrators displayed signs critical of the leadership's handling of a dispute between Armenians and Azerbaijanis over control of the Nagorno-Karabakh region, as well as other aspects of relations among the Soviet Union's more than 100 nationalities, Ms. Debryanskaya said.

Those arrested in the Leningrad demonstration face fines of $80, Ms. Debryanskaya said.

The Democratic Union was formed by activists in the spring to serve as a rival political force to the Communist Party.

Iran claims rebels crushed

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — Iran said seven rebels were publicly hanged and their group's attack crushed, but the rebels claimed they had killed or wounded thousands of Iranian soldiers.

Some fighting and air strikes were reported Monday along the Iran-Iraq border while U.N.-mediated peace talks pressed on in New York.

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency said the seven "counter-revolutionaries" of the Mujahedeen Khalq, or People's Holy Warriors, were hanged Monday in Bakhtaran, the provincial capital of a western region the rebels attacked last week.

Official news reports described the seven as the remnants of a 4,800-member Iranian rebel force "destroyed" in western Iran last week.

Massoud Rajavi, leader of the Mujahedeen Khalq, said in a statement released in Baghdad, the Iraqi capital, that the rebel attack caused "havoc" in Iran. He repeated the claim that the rebels reached 95 miles into western Iran and killed or wounded 40,000 soldiers.

Neither side's claims could be verified because neutral observers were not allowed into the area.

Kidnappers release boy

LOCRI, Italy (AP) — An 8-year-old Italian boy was released by his abductors today in the mountains of Calabria after a 17-month kidnapping that prompted appeals for his release by Pope John Paul II.

Marco Fiora, kidnapped in Turin on March 2, 1987, walked to a forest ranger's station in the Aspromonte mountains after being freed at about 8 a.m., police said.

The boy was immediately taken to a police barracks in this southern Italian town, where he was examined by a doctor and pronounced in fair condition, according to Lt. Col. Sabato Palazzo.

Italian news agencies reported the boy looked exhausted and there were rope marks on his wrists. Wearing a dirty white shirt and pants held up by a string, Marco was given a bath and clean clothes by the wife of a police officer.

SonSilks expands gift, fashion ideas in new, larger location

SonSilks, now located at 2505 W. Ohio, offers you an expanded variety of gifts, jewelry, decorating items and designer fashions. It's not too soon to start thinking about Christmas gift shopping, which is easier than ever! Son Silks has expanded its inventory to fill up three times more space than its previous location.

Owners Bob and Ellen West have carefully chosen items which will add flavor to your home, or they will delight those for whom you are gift shopping, be it for a birthday or a special occasion.

Ellen is especially pleased to announce an August 17th trunk showing of Flo-Ree's casualwear. This designer line includes appliqued denim and silk screen motifs. In conjunction with the Flo-Ree show, Midland artist Janabeth Cook will present her prisma color original and custom designed artwork. She also specializes in portraits, and you will be able to place orders with her on the 17th.

SonSilks also carries Originals by Sharon, a line of gorgeous, comfortable patio dresses and caftans, just perfect for entertaining. Also popular are the Bubbles modular knits, in striking fall and winter colors.

If you need to further define your special look, SonSilks has Clings shoulder pads. These non slip pads come in two colors and two sizes for a real fashion update.

Additionally, SonSilks has a large selection of jewelry — casual or dressy — classic or trendy. Ask to see the tennis bracelets and the pieces made of bone, horn, or wood. SonSilks has a large stock of Whiting and Davis bags and accessories. These designer items carry a lifetime guarantee. Remember when you were a little girl and someone special gave you your first Whiting and Davis bag? Well, you can relive those happy moments with updated Whiting and Davis jewelry and accessories, all found at SonSilks.

Something especially popular now are the Designs by Shirley fashion wrist and finger watches. They come encircled or semi-encircled with lovely Austrian crystals, and are guaranteed for one year. If you lose the crystals, they can be replaced for just $5.00.

SonSilks has a rainbow of flowering bushes, plants, and trees that will bring the great outdoors indoors. You can choose from waxed magnolias, roses, azaleas, camellias, iris, bouganvilla, geranium, vinca, peonies, etc., or have an arrangement made to complement your decorating scheme.

However, SonSilks is much, much more than a floral shop. You'll enjoy browsing through this unique store. A casual glimpse might cause you to miss seeing the "Celebrate San Antonio Cookbook" or the "Southern Sideboards Cookbook" from the Junior League of Jackson, Mississippi. Don't miss out on the Brown Bag cookie molds, baskets in all colors, kinds and sizes, the many kinds of potpourri, the German milled soaps, the English bath cubes, the Italian stationary, or the paper mache trays and coasters in bright, bold, patio colors.

Catch the summer winds with designer wind socks of many colors and varieties. Looking for a baby gift? New parents will like the "It's a boy" and "It's a girl" mini-windsocks. Also, look up SonSilks' Paddington Bears. Astronomy buffs will thrill with the Stargazer by Cosmic (Serut, Inc.) The Stargazer, kaleidoscopes and the VanCort multiprism dioptic scopes would make perfect gifts for that special man in your life.

Son Silks has an excellent collection of Ancient Sands ceramics by Evans. This ancient looking pottery is achieved by a unique firing process. Natural elements are used to create it. It recalls relics from the desert, sea and ancient civilizations. Subtle pastels are added to soft clean colors to complement the natural and casual look of today's interiors. The organic and crusty surface continues to flake, adding to the natural charm.

Pilgrim Glass in green, cobalt blue and cranberry with gold make perfect decorating tools. Don't overlook the Whites "Whachamacallits" animals, which can be custom designed to match your needs. Fitz and Floyd specialty pieces such as Santa Claus are also in stock at SonSilks.

There's free gift wrapping at SonSilks, and Visa and MasterCard are welcomed. Stop by the new location at 2505 W. Ohio from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Saturday.

Rent-A-Dent manager Robert C. Ogg shows off just one of the small cars you can rent for just $15.95 per day. Rent-A-Dent, the used car rental birds with a "small bill", is conveniently located close to downtown at 211 W. Florida. Call 682-0877 for more information.

Rent-A-Dent: Clean, quality used cars

"We rent good, clean, quality used cars from $15.95 per day and up," said Robert C. Ogg, manager of Rent-A-Dent, Midland's budget-priced used car rental company. Rent-A-Dent is conveniently located close to downtown Midland at 211 W. Florida.

While the name Rent-A-Dent is not indicative of the condition of the vehicles, it is a humorous reminder that you can rent dependable transportation at the most competitive prices. The "no dents" cars are quality 2 to 8 year old used cars, which are rotated on a continuous maintenance program.

Most of the Rent-A-Dent customers are budget-conscious people who need a rent car while their own car is being repaired. Others call Rent-A-Dent first instead of the major car rental agencies because of the savings, which can total between 30 and 50 percent.

Convenience is another trademark of Rent-A-Dent, because it is the only agency in Midland/Odessa which takes a cash deposit. With Rent-A-Dent, you don't have to go through the hassle of getting someone to take you out to the airport to pick up your rental car. It is the only agency which will deliver your car to you for just a small charge. An free airport shuttle is also available to customers who fly in from out of town.

Compacts, subcompacts, luxury cars, vans and pickup trucks are all available at Rent-A-Dent, with prices starting at $15.95 per day. All cars are four door automatic, with air conditioning and stereo units.

Small cars available for this $15.95 include Chevrolet Citations. Mid-sized cars, priced at $24.95 daily include Ford LTD's and Buick Regals. Full-sized Chevrolet Caprices are just $29.95 daily. The first 100 miles are free, and additional miles are 18¢ each.

Pickups and vans, fully equipped to pull trailers or boats, are priced at $35.00 per day, with the same daily mileage guidelines.

Weekly rates, based on seven consecutive days, are: small-$100, mid-size-$135, and large/pickups-$175. The first 1000 miles are free, and additional miles are 18¢ each.

Monthly rates, based on four consecutive weeks, are: small-$400, mid-size-$450, and large/pickups-$500. The first 3000 miles are free, and additional miles are 18¢ each.

Personal accident insurance and a collision damage waiver are available at Rent-A-Dent, starting at $6.95 daily.

Rent-A-Dent has liberal rental qualifications, which will suit nearly everyone:

- Valid drivers license
- 21 years of age
- Visa, Mastercharge, American Express and Discover accepted
- Cash deposits are accepted with verification of employment, address and phone number in renter's name

A national franchise company, Rent-A-Dent has been dedicated to growth and service since 1977. Chuck Scherbaum, founder and president, opened the first Rent-A-Dent in Seattle, when he saw a growing need to serve business people and vacationing families trying to reduce expenses.

Midland franchise owner Robert Ogg hand-picks the vehicles, which are all in excellent mechanical condition.

Call or stop by Rent-A-Dent at 211 W. Florida or call 682-0877 for more information. If you would like to reserve a car at any of the 65 locations scattered throughout the nation, call 1-800-522-3009.

Betty's Boutique ready for school, rush

It's not too early to start thinking about back to school fashions, and you'll find the most up to date styles now at Betty's Boutique.

Betty's, located in San Miguel Square, is making room for all of the new fall back to school fashions, which are arriving daily.

If you are planning on sorority rush this fall, Betty's has many dresses perfeectly suited for those special parties where you will want to make your best impression.

Find out exactly what is hot this season at Betty's back to school fashion show. Mark your calendars for Sunday afternoon, September 11th! The show will feature Betty's Teen Board members. Details will be announced later.

Just back from market, owner Betty Smith says that fall clothing promises to be bold and bright.

You'll look your best in fall fashions splashed with colors, such as royal blue and magenta. Or, go with black and white, which is the trend-setter for fall.

Accenting the fall color schemes, Betty says, are fashion coordinates with a flair for patterns, such as plaids, checks and zigzags. Skirt lengths will vary this fall, and Betty's will carry them all, from long to knee toppers to minis.

Betty also expects knits to be popular this fall. For school and casual wear, Betty's is the place to shop for knit tops, pants and skirts in flattering, coordinated fall colors.

Accessories are always important in putting together a coordinated look. Accent your wardrobe with belts, barrettes, fashion earrings and necklaces. Socks in Midland junior high and high school colors are a great way to show your school loyalty and support! Betty's also has a big selection of socks by OP, Guess and Coca Cola.

Included in Betty's fall lineup are fashions by Minna, Hang Ten, Ocean Pacific, Act I, Organically Grown and Beverly Hills Polo. You'll find the latest by Tangiers, Bee Wear and dresses by Lanz. Always popular, Guess jeans and Soon jeans in your junior size are on the racks.

Shopping hours are 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Friday and Saturday 10 a.m. to 6 p.m.

Visa, American Express, Discover and MasterCard are welcome at Betty's Boutique in San Miguel Square, and don't forget that layaway is available.

PUBLIC NOTICE

Panda Energy Corporation (Panda) and Cap Rock Electric Cooperative, Inc. (Cap Rock) hereby give notice that they have filed a joint application with the Public Utility Commission of Texas (the Commission) for certification of a cogeneration agreement entered into by Panda and Cap Rock on April 28, 1988, which provides for the purchase by Cap Rock of approximately 35 MW of capacity and associated energy from a cogeneration facility to be constructed by Panda at the Oscar Meyer Plant near Sherman, Texas or a location in Cap Rock's retail electric service area.
