Bodies of two girls found; Dad sought in other deaths

GLEN ELLEN, Calif. (AP) — Authorities searching Saturday for a winery worker accused of murdering his wife and four other people found the bodies of two of his daughters, and a third daughter was discovered alive with her throat cut.

The bodies were discovered at a landfill transfer station in California's wine country, not far from where Ramon Salcido, 28, fled Friday with his daughters, Teresa, 2; Carmina, 3; and Sofia, 4, authorities said.

"We do know in fact they are Salcido's children," Sonoma County Sheriff Richard Michaelsen said of the victims. Investigators could identify the youngsters from photographs, he said, but would not release the name of the survivor.

The child was taken to Petaluma Valley Hospital in serious condition and was to undergo surgery, said Sonoma County Sheriff's Lt. Gary Zanolini. Sheriff's Lt. Chuck Smith said the girl's throat apparently was cut.

Smith said the two slain girls appeared to have been at the dump "for some time" but that it was not known how they died.

The highway patrol made the discovery shortly before 3 p.m. when police were called to the landfill transfer station between Petaluma and Sonoma, said California Highway Patrol Sgt. Fred Blundell.

There was no immediate sign of Salcido, but Smith said authorities were searching for a brown 1967 Ford station wagon someone saw near the dump.

Friday's attacks on Salcido's two sisters-in-law, 8 and 12, in which both were sexually assaulted and one was nearly decapitated, had heightened fears for his daughters, who vanished from the house where his wife was slain. Salcido also allegedly slew his mother-in-law and a co-worker.

Police helicopters searched the pretty wine country north of San Francisco. Lawmen over most of this 1,000-mile-long state were on alert for Salcido, whose 10-year-old car was discovered abandoned 20 miles south in San Rafael.

Investigators received hundreds of calls from people who claimed to have seen the burly, black-haired Salcido everywhere from Sonoma County to Los Angeles, 400 miles to the south.

Authorities on Friday found the battered and slashed bodies of Salcido's mother-in-law, Marian Louise Richards, 47, and her children, Marie, 8, and Ruth, 12, inside their blood-splattered house in Cotati.

"It's a butcher shop in there," a policeman said after emerging from the neat, pale yellow home in a well-tended middle-class neighborhood.

At the ranch of a prominent grower, Salcido wounded Kenneth Butti in the shoulder, said Michaelsen. Butti, 33, worked with Salcido, a forklift operator, at Grand Cru Winery.

Sheriff's deputies went to the winery, where they found assistant winemaker Tracey Toovey alongside his car, dead of gunshot wounds.

Deputies went to Boyes Hot Springs and found Salcido's wife, Angela, 24, who apparently had been beaten and stabbed to death, Michaelsen said.

'Invisible' chase led to cult ranch

RANCHO SANTA ELENA, Mexico (AP) — Two weeks ago Elio Hernandez ran his pickup through a police drug checkpoint near the U.S. border and sped on. The young man didn't worry about police following him; he thought he was invisible.

"We located the place, waited a few days and then moved in," said federal police commander Juan Benitez Ayala.

Police expected to make a large marijuana bust, commonplace here.

Instead, they ripped the mask from a nightmarish world of black magic, sex, drug smuggling and human sacrifice.

Budget may not favor UTPB

By JAMES CULLEN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The University of Texas of the Permian Basin does fairly well in the Texas Senate's plan for state government spending, but another battle is ahead after the House of Representatives approves its version of the nearly $47 billion budget.

The House Appropriations Committee has worked up a $46.9 billion two-year budget proposal that is expected to reach the House floor April 24, but that budget gives relatively short shrift to higher education, while it puts more money into public schools.

The Senate on Wednesday unanimously approved a $46.75 billion two-year budget for state government that includes $27.9 billion in general revenue.

The House version calls for spending $28 billion in general revenue, which is primarily generated by state taxes, during the 1990-91 biennium.

While the differences in bottom lines are relatively small, the budgets reflect different priorities for public education, higher education and health and human services programs and different approaches in paying for prison construction and capitol restoration, said House Appropriations Chairman Jim Rudd, D-Brownfield.

When a conference committee of House and Senate representatives is named later this month to reconcile the two budgets, "That's where the nuts and bolts changes will be made," said Rep. Gary Watkins, D-Odessa, higher education budget chairman.

But Rudd said those differences are not insurmountable.

Education was the top spending item, taking $16.3 billion or 58 percent of general revenue funds in both plans. But the two panels differed on the split between public schools and higher education.

The Senate earmarked $400 million in equity aid for poor school districts while the House allocated $500 million as a first step towrd correcting inequities that prompted a state district judge in 1987 to declare the public school finance system unconstitutional.

Drug-free housing ideas adaptable?

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Housing and Urban Development Secretary Jack Kemp's proposal to rid Washington, D.C., housing projects of drug dealers is getting some attention in the Tall City.

Jerrie Westmoreland, spokeswoman for the Midland Public Housing Authority, which operates the community's public housing programs, said officials were eyeing Kemp's suggestions.

"We're very interested in continuing to provide a clean program free from drugs," she said, referring to the HUD secretary's proposals despite the fact that Midland has no public housing project per se.

Midlanders seeking permanent residences often are placed in Section 8 existing facilities with local apartment complexes providing a certain number of units to those in need of assistance.

Back at the ranch ...

By ED TODD

The Hereford momma cows and their calves were bellowing with the cacophony of a dozen string orchestras tuning up on different keys.

And the cowboys, who looked as if they had been riding the range for a fortnight, were sweaty, dusty and full of Bob Hedrick's sourdough biscuits, tenderly cooked beef and strong coffee. But they were having a rousingly good time in their day's work on the ranch.

The cattle, especially the bull calves, had cause to be upset. Even if their mothers had forewarned them, there was little they could do but struggle and complain. How does a little ol' 200-pound spring calf outwit, outrun and outpull a hefty 1,200-pound horse and seasoned cowboys who are wise to the ways of momma cows and their calves?

It was round-up time on Ralph Powell's ranch. And it was time for the bull calves to be branded with the fiery-hot branding iron with Powell's PL brand, cut, dehorned, and vaccinated.

With Bobby Matthews' deft cuts with his sharp pocketknife, the bull calves, one by one, in an instant became steers. Matthews is ranch foreman over at the neighboring Lazy Z Ranch.

Hillander student casts her spell on local bee

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

If you ask Melia Fitz-Gerald if the aforementioned premonition worked out, she'll likely give you a big grin then tell you about her upcoming trip.

Melia, representing the Hillander School, outdueled 30 other students to win the Second Regional Spelling Bee and earn a free ticket to the Scripps Howard National Spelling Bee in Washington, D.C. Public and private school students from Midland, Glasscock, Upton and Martin counties participated in the competition, held Saturday at the Midland College Allison Fine Arts Auditorium.

Melia and Suman Reddy, who represented Trinity School, were the last students left standing. They reeled off a dizzying array of multisyllabic brain twisters until Suman stumbled on the word "premonition."

Melia calmy spelled the word correctly, and the next one given to her by moderator Patricia Maurer: "aforementioned."

In the final round, the duo correctly spelled oximeter, rhinestone, terrarium, ricotta, flippant, heretical, pedagogist, mullion, plaustral, thighbone and sequester. They were not quizzed on the definitions.

The competition — attended by dozens of supportive parents, brothers, sisters and other family members — had its share of pensive moments and heartbreak.

Outside the auditorium, a young contestant in a pretty pink dress walked away, head bowed, hands clutching a soft drink can. Two women with her were heard muttering "You'll do better next year." The girl seemed shattered, then seemed to accept the consolation quickly and asked about lunch plans.

On the brightly lit stage, some of the students spelled rapidly and confidently, others sssssslowly, as if to mask the fact they had no idea how to spell this word.

Case against Wright to move to more public arena

WASHINGTON (AP) — The ethics case against House Speaker Jim Wright moves from behind closed doors into an open and far more political arena this week as the committee investigating him releases its final report and the Texas Democrat begins to return fire.

The House Committee on Standards of Official Conduct, better known as the ethics committee, is scheduled to make public on Monday the voluminous report on its 10-month inquiry, along with a formal charge that the speaker violated House rules in several dozen instances.

The report is expected to present in a detailed, prosecutorial style evidence that led the panel to believe Wright improperly took some $100,000 in gifts from a Fort Worth business associate who had a direct interest in legislation before Congress, and skirted limits on outside income by encouraging bulk sales of a book he wrote.

Wright has asked that he be allowed to appear before the committee quickly — perhaps within the week — to begin his defense. He is relying on committee rules that require a relatively low threshold of evidence to formally accuse a member of Congress, but a much higher level to conclude guilt.

On one level, the case then moves into a judicial-like process that could lead to a trial or sorts with the ethics panel sitting as the jury.

But the battle will be fought on the public stage as well, with Wright arguing his innocence before colleagues and on television.

Wright's primary constituency as speaker, the 260 members of the House Democratic Caucus, are split between those who seem to relish the certain political warfare to come and those who believe the battle is already lost and wish the speaker would bow out and save them the agony.

"I don't think Wright should stay as speaker," Rep. George Brown, D-Calif., told The Press-Enterprise of Riverside, Calif. The speaker's actions set a poor example for a leadership figure, he said, adding that resignation would "reduce the vulnerability of the Democratic Party on grounds of ethics violations."

Wright was in an upbeat and relaxed mood as he stood in the sunshine outside the Capitol and spoke to a colleague on Friday, declaring himself relieved after an emotional televised speech he delivered in his own defense a day earlier.

But the political storm clouds were building.

"We haven't hit bottom yet," said one member of the speaker's defense team, fellow Texas Rep. Charles Wilson. Wilson referred to the spate of news reports certain to be spurred by release of the committee's report this week.

Even Wright's defenders acknowledge that — whatever the technical outcome of the ethics process — the court of public opinion is likely to judge him harshly because that public forum allows little distinction between allegation and final disposition.

"The atmosphere is just terrible," said Rep. David Obey, D-Wis. "We are supposed to be maintaining a neutral view so we can judge the evidence and act as a jury. All the partisan pressures and other pressures are making that very difficult. Members are asking themselves, 'What are the political consequences of this?' That is not a legitimate question."

Legislators who ventured to voice concern about the speaker's ethics problems were under pressures of their own.

Fellow Democrats came down hard on Rep. Robert Mrazek, D-N.Y., after he told The New York Times that Wright was unlikely to survive the battle and added: "For the first time, a couple of Texans have said to me they think it's all over." A chastened Mrazek declined to talk about the comments a day later.

The National Weather Service reported winds were northerly in the Coastal Plains and much of the Piney Woods area of East Texas Saturday, while southerly winds breezed across the greater part of West Texas including the Low Rolling Plains. Winds were mostly 5 to 15 mph, except in the High Plains where some areas had wind gusts to 30 mph. Light and variable winds prevailed elsewhere.

Temperatures at 3 p.m. were mostly 70s in the eastern half of the state, while 70s to the 80s were common in the West. Readings ranged from 65 at Longview to 88 at Wink.

RANCH

The calves, whose fate is to be fattened on the range and feed-yards before they get carted off to the butcher's shop and to dinners as hamburger and steak, seemed no worse off. They were a bit bloody from the dehorning and the cutting and, in their bellowing, seemed to mewl and whine.

The cowboys, including neighborly ranchers and their hands, gathered Saturday on the Nail Ranch north of Midland to help Powell and his cowboys brand and cut calves.

Powell and his cowboys round up cattle the "old traditional way," noted Joe Carr, a cowboy by birthright and deputy sheriff for pay. "It's done on horseback.

"Mr. Powell pretty well sticks with the olden way of doing things as far as cattle are concerned," Carr said.

Out on this mesquite-infested flat-lands, there are no helicopters or those noisy little land-roving machines, including motorcycles, rounding up cattle.

Saddle-up cowboys and ranchers and their horses do the work.

"I just make living, living on what I make," said Bud Lea, who works the soil and cattle for a living. "It'll get better."

Both full-time and weekend cowboys helped Powell with the roundup, branding, doctoring, and cutting.

Jerry Lee, who was raised on a ranch but who now flies the helicopter for Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter, did his bit in heeling and heading — roping the calves and, with the pulling power of a horse, drag the stubborn calf to the hot branding iron and razor-sharp knife.

Last year, an anxious old cow in a frightened herd "attacked" Lee's helicopter and upset Lee and the aircraft. Lee survived. The helicopter took a rough tumble.

"I feel lucky," Lee said. "I think it was luck and the Good Lord flying with me."

Don Braly, an inspector for the Texas & Southwestern Cattle Raisers Association, also did his bit with the rope and horse. Martin County Deputy Sheriff Mike Welling got into on the branding act, as did J.L. Sawyers. Bobby Holt's ranch foreman, Cec Whatley, watched the goings-on with the perception of an old cowman who had seen many a roundup. And Stanton banker Joe Hodges dropped by the ranch, which is in Martin County, to check on his collateral — the cows and their calves.

"We work with Ralph in financing his cattle operation," said Hodges, who is president of Stanton National Bank.

In recent years, the weather and market have favored cattle ranchers, who earlier in the 1980s were beset by the drought, low beef prices and high interest rates. "Of course, right now, everybody is praying for rain — cotton farmers and ranchers," the banker said.

"Still (in good times)," said Hodges, "a man has to be a good operator and know what he's doing."

Powell does.

"He's a throw-back to the olden days," said Hodges. "Ralph learned it (ranching) from the ground up."

And the Midland rancher is a "natural" across the border. The 51-year-old Powell, who ranches in West and South Texas, is also a volume cattle buyer. He travels to Mexico to buy thousands of Mexican steers through Mexico rancher Pepe Mierles for Paul Engler's Dumas-based Cactus Feeders — the largest cattle operation in the United States.

Each year, the operation puts 800,000 beef steers on pastures and then fattens them up for market in seven feed yards in Texas and Colorado.

In and out of the branding arena, the cowboys and the ranchers, such as Powell, Bob Midkiff, and Lazy Z rancher George Glass, radiate a fast and sure camaraderie and obviously enjoy their work.

"They love it," Powell said of rancher helping rancher and cowboy helping cowboy at roundup time. "That's the only way you can get them to help you free."

Matthews said that Powell and his cowhands help out the Lazy Z's operation "if you can find him," he joked of Powell. "He's pretty good at hiding."

Powell said that roundup and branding times are among the few occasions neighboring cowboys and ranchers get together.

"It's the only time we get together lots of times," Powell said. "We see each other at funerals and fighting (range) fires."

Powell's penchant is cowboying and ranching.

BUDGET

The Senate would increase funding for higher education by $700 million, while the House recommended a $650 million increase over the budget board draft.

The Senate would give UT-Permian Basin $13.68 million in general funds from the state, a 6.9 percent increase from current funding levels, out of a $14.87 million total budget, which includes local tuition and fees. The House would give UTPB $12 million.

Both versions would fund the Center for Energy and Economic Diversification at UTPB, although the Senate would fund it at $87,500 per year while the House would allocate $100,000 per year.

The House plan would give faculty members a one-time 3.4 percent pay raise while the Senate would give faculty pay raises of 7.1 percent each year.

The Senate plan would give non-faculty state employees a $350 million wage and health benefits package, while the House plan earmarked $300 million for salary and insurance benefits for state employees.

In other budget areas the House spending plan would provide $153 million to pay for 5,000 new prison beds, but it opted to pay for the beds with general revenue instead of borrowing money to expand the system, as the Senate proposes.

The House would provide $22.5 million to fight AIDS, while the Senate has earmarked $33.4 million for AIDS services.

For the first time in memory the House budget came in $200 million more than the spending level the Senate called for. While both budgets would increase spending by more than $2.4 billion from the amount the Legislative Budget Board proposed in December, neither budget is supposed to require a tax increase.

But without a cigarette tax increase of 7 cents per pack, Sen. Kent Caperton, D-Bryan, Finance Committe chairman, said the state would lose $280 million in federal matching money for health and human services.

House Speaker Gib Lewis and Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby say there is no point in pushing the tax increase in the face of Gov. Bill Clements' adamant opposition.

While both budgets are higher than the amount of money currently certified as available, budget writers are expecting state Comptroller Bob Bullock to increase his revenue forecast, which sets the limit on how much lawmakers can spend without raising taxes.

HOUSING

But Ms. Westmoreland said many of Kemp's proposals might be given consideration in support of the anti-drug program.

Kemp proposed actions against drugs in the federally supported housing projects of the nation's capital, including more police patrols, installing security fences and guarded entrances and requiring photo identification cards for residents.

As part of the federal government's drug crackdown in the District of Columbia, Kemp said the proposals "are appropriate and will be suggested" to every public housing authority in the nation.

The HUD secretary outlined his plan at a news conference last Monday where national drug policy director William J. Bennett and Attorney General Dick Thornburgh announced a major new effort to combat drugs in the nation's capital.

Kemp said local police and public housing authorities should issue photo identification cards to residents of federally supported housing projects so that legitimate residents can be distinguished from outsiders.

In addition, he said security guards would be trained and "a better presence of public housing and city police" would be provided.

Kemp said HUD also will:

- Ask U.S. attorneys to seize the apartments of drug dealers and return them to the public housing authorities.
- Seek ways to terminate federal housing subsidies, such as HUD vouchers and housing certificates, for anyone convicted of using or selling drugs.
- Attempt to reclaim vacant units sometimes used by drug dealers and abusers, and enforce housing codes and standards.
- Encourage resident management of public housing projects.
- Establish an anti-drug hotline to encourage residents to make confidential reports on drug-related crimes.
- Encourage youth sports leagues in the projects to steer youngsters away from drugs.

Kemp acknowledged that many of the steps are things HUD should be doing anyway, and said many of the proposals were based on successful tests by local housing authorities at projects in Chicago, Omaha and elsewhere.

The Midland Public Housing Authority — unlike Dallas, Houston or even Odessa — went into business less than 10 years ago, concentrating on projects that offer assistance in areas other than housing.

"Because we're a very new PHA and we're conservative, we go after the programs that we feel are best for our community," Ms. Westmoreland said. "For that reason, I think we have a better program."

Although housing officials have acquired 325 apartment units in the past decade, they continue to face the dilemma of having to place more than 500 families in need of a permanent residence.

Ms. Westmoreland observed that crimes, such as drug trafficking, surmount the problem. And only a "good citizen" can change that, she said.

Lebanese Christian legislator killed during Syrian shelling

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A 72-year-old Christian parliamentarian died Saturday when a rocket hit his apartment building during shelling duels between Syrian and Christian gunners, police said.

A Lebanese navy gunboat ferried 14 badly wounded Christians to a French naval vessel anchored off Beirut as a French humanitarian aid mission got under way. It was unclear whether Moslems would participate.

Police said intermittent shelling duels intensified before sundown as gunners from both sides blasted Beirut and its surroundings, killing four people and wounding 31.

The casualties raised the overall toll to 219 dead and 758 wounded from the five-week battle between Gen. Michel Aoun's 20,000 mostly Christian troops and an alliance of Syrian and Druse forces.

An Italian tanker with a cargo of diesel oil, the Cochinella, was hit by a shell eight miles off Beirut on Saturday, an Italian Embassy official said.

The embassy's charge d'affaires, Attilo Iannucci, said the top deck was damaged but none of the 14 Italian crewmen was hurt.

CULT

Twelve bodies were found Tuesday and one more on Thursday, buried near a corral. Some had their hearts ripped out, their genitals cut off or their brains removed. Some died of machete blows to the head. Most died blindfolded and gagged.

Police said they had all been killed by smugglers who believed that human sacrifice would give them a "magical shield" that would protect them from the law.

Among the victims were a 16-year-old boy and Mark Kilroy, missing since March when he came here during spring break from the University of Texas.

Hernandez, David Serna, Serafin Martinez Garcia and Sergio Martinez were arrested. Police on Saturday sought the alleged ringleader, a Cuban-American "voodoo priest" Alfonso De Jesus Constanzo, and a "witch," Sara Aldrete.

All four defendants blamed Constanzo, whom they called the "padrino," for the murders. They claimed they had been lured into the cult by Miss Aldrete's sexual favors. Aldrete also lured some of the victims, they said.

Hernandez and Serna told newsmen that Constanzo, whom they had known for nine months, had initiated them into the occult, but they said they did not know much about it. "We believed sometimes and sometimes we did not," said Hernandez.

A federal agent who asked not to be identified said the group was "totally under the control of the Cuban. I don't think they even knew what they were getting into."

SPELL

"Sometimes the luck of the draw gets you," Ms. Maurer told one young man who walked off the stage when presented with the task of spelling "sepulchral." But she quickly invited him back when told she had mispronounced the word. Given another chance, he correctly spelled "hindquarter," only to drop out the next round.

Another young contestant, who misplaced a letter in "legitimacy," sighed loudly in distress. She walked off the stage telling herself she knew how to spell it.

And then there were two.

Melia was stumped by only two words, expressions that no one in the audience seemed to recognize: "simnel," a type of bread or fruitcake, and "tippee," which, oddly enough, designates the person who receives the tip.

Rudy Ramirez, who represented Alamo Junior High School and won the competition last year, finished third. Fourth place went to Jody Kuo of Sam Houston Elementary School. Vanessa O'Bryant of Word of Life Academy finished in fifth place.

Others in the order of finish were Tiffany Cauthen, DeZavala Elementary School; Elizabeth Terrill, Santa Rita Elementary; Pedrameh Manoochehri, Travis Elementary; James Tan, of Crockett Elementary; and Tracy Waldrep, who represented Anson Jones Elementary in the bee.

Four unidentified to be buried; Officials search second ranch

STATE

MATAMOROS, Mexico (AP) — Mexican officials Saturday began searching for signs of violence at a second ranch linked to an occult-driven group that allegedly performed human sacrifices at a rural location where 13 bodies were exhumed this week.

Officials on Saturday afternoon also buried four of the five mutilated corpses that remained unidentified, officials said. The bodies were laid to rest in a paupers' cemetery on the southern edge of Matamoros.

Police on Saturday also anounced that they believe the cult began performing human sacrifices after watching videotapes of a thriller called "The Believers."

Serafin Hernandez Garcia, a U.S. citizen and one of four men facing Mexican federal charges in the case, accompanied investigators Saturday to a ranch 30 miles south of this border city, said an agent of the Federal Judicial Police.

The ranch, known as Rancho Los Leones, belongs to the Brigido Hernandez family which also owns the Rancho Santa Elena 20 miles west of Matamoros where 13 mutilated bodies and grisly occult items were found this week, said the agent, who asked not to be identified.

Brigido Hernandez is the grandfather of Serafin Hernandez Garcia, but has not been linked to any of the crimes.

"They went out to see if there are other bodies or another altar," she said. "They (the suspects) are assuring us that there are no other bodies, but as police we have to look around that ranch."

Officials have said the men in custody have confessed to at least 14 slayings, including that of 21-year-old University of Texas student Mark Kilroy, whose funeral was observed Saturday in Santa Fe, Texas.

Including Kilroy, eight of the 13 cult victims had been identified by Saturday afternoon, with the eighth named victim listed as Ezequiel Rodriguez Luna, 27, of Matamoros.

Police said Rodriguez Luna was found buried with Ruben Vela Garza, 30, of Matamoros, and Ernesto Rivas Diaz, 23, of Monterrey, Mexico.

The three were drug traffickers reportedly machine-gunned by Adolfo de Jesus Constanzo, the 26-year-old "Godfather" of the violent cult, said Jose Piedad Silva Arroyo, chief of Mexican federal narcotics investigations for northeastern Tamaulipas state.

All three of the bodies were grotesquely mutilated, officials and relatives said, including removal of brains, hearts, genitals, eyes and ears.

Dr. Juan Jose Franco Salas, a physician who performed autopsies on the victims, said they were still alive when they were mutilated, according to the Excelsior news agency.

Silva Arroyo said the three were abducted by men posing as police Feb. 14 from Rancho Caracol about 50 miles southeast of Matamoros.

Members of the Constanzo organization "told (the three victims) they did not like the quality of the marijuana they had, but in reality they wanted to steal the 300 kilograms of marijuana."

Reymunda Nunez, godmother of Vela Garza, said Saturday her godson was last seen at the Rancho Caracol on Feb. 14, when armed men forced him into a vehicle with Florida license plates.

"He was a nice boy," Mrs. Nunez said Saturday at El Rosario Funeral home, where she viewed Vela Garza's mutilated body. "He never had bad friends."

"The Believers," a 1987 movie, starring Martin Sheen and directed by John Schlesinger, is about rich, influential families who protect their prominence with rites including human sacrifice.

"They keep bringing the movie up," Cameron County Sheriff's Lt. George Gavito said after interviewing two suspects. "They talk about it like that had something to do with changing them."

U.S. federal authorities videotaped interviews Friday with two of the suspects in custody in Matamoros, said Oran Neck, agent in charge of U.S. Customs in Brownsville.

In the interviews, suspects Serafin Hernandez Garcia and Elio Hernandez Rivera told U.S. authorities that the alleged "Godmother" Sra Maria Aldrete persuaded them to transform their relatively benign practice of Santeria into something more sinister about the same time she began encouraging them to watch the movie.

"Then they started practicing Palo Mayombe — practicing human sacrifices and other things," Neck said.

The cult apparently created its own perverted version of Palo Mayombe, using ideas drawn from the movie, Neck said.

Police in Mexico City raided Constanzo's apartment in the capital and found an altar similar to one found at the Matamoros apartment of Ms. Aldrete, who remained at large, as did Constanzo, Saturday.

Officials in Matamoros decided to bury all but one of the putrid, unidentified victims of the cult, because the decomposing bodies posed a health threat, said Joel Maldonado Nunez, a Tamaulipas State Judicial Police official working to identify the bodies.

Maldonado Nunez said Saturday that people from distant parts of Mexico as well as the United States continued to come to Matamoros to view the bodies of the unidentified cult victims, to learn if their missing loved ones are there.

"Photos were taken of all the bodies," he said. "They can come and see if it is their child."

Mexican officials said a total of 14 suspects are being sought on both sides of the border, including Ms. Aldrete and Constanzo.

Fired wildlife director claims he was libeled

AUSTIN (AP) — Fired Texas Parks and Wildlife Department Director Charles Allen was libeled and slandered by members of the department, Allen and a state legislator allege in a proposed House resolution.

"They were out to get him, and an opportunity arose" with the charges against Allen, Rep. Debra Danburg, D-Houston, said Friday.

"I don't think he did anything he didn't think he was supposed to be doing, and what his superiors would have wanted him to do," she added.

Allen was fired April 5 after newspaper accounts appeared concerning political favoritism in wildlife stockings, and after he was charged in New Mexico with three felonies and six misdemeanors alleging that he trapped three antelope in that state during an approved trapping operation in Texas.

Allen has told The Associated Press he is innocent and will "take the necessary steps to prove that."

If approved by the Legislature, the resolution, filed Friday, would allow Allen to sue the state and the commission over the firing. In most cases, legislative approval is required before a person can sue the state.

The resolution says Allen alleges his employment contract "was wrongfully breached without due process" and that "a civil conspiracy was engaged in to deprive him of due process and to have him discharged."

Allen also charges that "his privacy was invaded by publicity placing him in a false light."

The commissioners and department employees referred to in the resolution are not named.

The resolution is a prelude to a lawsuit that Allen Morrison, Allen's attorney, has said he would file on behalf of Allen.

Danburg said she supports the practice of allowing people to sue the state, and said she believes Allen "has been shafted" by the department.

She said Allen "has been creative" in managing the wildlife division for two years, and said his success was rubbing some in the agency the wrong way, and making others look bad because of their lack of creativity.

Morrison, of Houston, asked Danburg to file the resolution and provided the allegations that are included in the resolution, Danburg said. She said she is an acquaintance of Allen's.

Graham bank president still reported missing

GRAHAM (AP) — Friends and family members of a bank president have alerted law enforcement authorities to his disappearance but officers said a visit by auditors at the institution was only a coincidence.

Patrick Morton, 46, was last seen by his wife leaving his home in Graham about 6:45 a.m. Wednesday in a van. The former Roby resident is president of the First National Bank of Graham, said Police Chief Bill Paul.

"We don't know what happened," said Paul. "Right now, anything is possible. He left a little earlier than normal to get some stuff out for auditors who were coming to the bank that day.

"But no one ever saw him show up at the bank," he told the Abilene Reporter-News.

The police chief said the appearance of the auditors at the bank appears to be a coincidence.

"Nothing was missing from the bank as far we know," said Paul. "They gave it a clean bill of health."

Authorities have found no sign of the van or any clues to what happened, said the police chief.

David Collier, bank chairman and chief executive officer, said the disappearance doesn't appear to be bank related.

STATE IN BRIEF

Fiesta opens in San Antonio

SAN ANTONIO — Rainy skies that had shrouded this city for days departed as thousands of people poured through the gates of the refurbished fairgrounds for the start of Fiesta.

The fairgrounds, located on the northeast edge of recently overhauled HemisFair Park, contained all the usual amenities of the San Antonio Jaycees' annual nine-day eat, drink and music fest.

La Semana Alegre (The Happy Week) 1989 is a city-wide celebration of San Antonio's heritage marked by parades and revelry.

On Friday, in the center of the festival grounds stood the beer booths — about 110 in all — encircled like a wagon train ready to take on an onslaught.

As bands and sound crews put the finishing touches on two large stages on the grounds, the aromas of brisket tacos, fajitas and turkey legs enticed people along a row of colorful booths.

For sisters Gloria Caldbeck and Linda Jimenez, it offered the perfect chance for a fun dinner before they went to a Spurs pro basketball game.

College closing nursery

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A day-care center at Incarnate Word College that served faculty and employees and provided students with insights into child development is closing, leaving what parents described as a vacuum in the institution.

Incarnate Word College officials notified parents that it plans to shut down the 50-year-old Katherine Ryan Child Development Center to make way for campus growth.

Donna Fletcher, with a 4-year-old daughter, said Friday her life has become more complicated as a result of the closure. She took her daughter, Lydia, to the center for about a year.

"Right now, I really don't know what I'm going to do," said Ms. Fletcher. Beginning in June, she will have to find a new place to bring Lydia during the day.

Some parents in two-income families wait months, sometimes years, for the right day-care center. Working parents said Monday's announcement that the center will close has drawn attention to the aches and pains of child care and given parents fighting the move a rallying point.

Siltation problem studied

AUSTIN (AP) — From the town of Tow to the Alvin Wirtz Dam near Horseshoe Bay, siltation is silently strangling Lakes LBJ and Buchanan, according to experts with the Lower Colorado River Authority.

Siltation is destroying property values for scores of lakeshore residents, ruining recreational haunts for thousands of water sports enthusiasts and choking off critical feeding grounds for fish and waterfowl.

In a process unabated for a half-century, millions of cubic yards of sand and silt have rushed into these manmade lakes on the currents of swift-moving tributaries and settled out in vast sandbars, mudholes and, in some cases, entire islands.

LCRA officials say the situation is so bad in Lake Buchanan that, if all the silt deposits could be dredged from the bottom, it would take all of the water in Lake LBJ to keep Lake Buchanan full.

Next week, river authority directors, who are preparing their budget plans for 1990, will review the extent of the siltation problem and consider how much money it will take to get the problem under control.

Former mayor jailed

CONROE (AP) — An attorney for Louis Talley said the former Patton Village mayor's second arrest in connection with the deaths of his wife and a Splendora man stemmed from the illegal and "morally reprehensible" tactics of prosecutors.

Talley, who had been indicted on two counts of murder and released from Travis County Jail in December on bonds totaling $200,000, was arrested Friday, a few hours after a state district judge in Austin doubled the amount of his bail.

Defense attorney Dick DeGuerin said Talley, 44, was arrested at his work place in Montgomery County after prosecutors allegedly wired Talley's teen-age son for sound to gather incriminating evidence against him.

"What the prosecutors did, in sending this young boy, wired for sound, to talk to his father to try to get incriminating statements is not only illegal, it's also immoral to set a son against his father," DeGuerin said.

NCNB announces plans

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — NCNB Corp. is adding another element to its proposed $2.3 billion takeover of Citizens & Southern Corp. — a plan to move the firm's southeastern banking headquarters to Atlanta if the deal goes through.

The proposal to move a key NCNB plum to Atlanta is designed to encourage directors and management of C&S to enter friendly negotiations with the Charlotte bank, said James Thompson, vice chairman of NCNB and chairman of NCNB Southeastern Banking Co.

But Thompson said the move would not have a major impact on Charlotte.

"There's no question our presence in Charlotte will be very strong and not diluted by any structural change we go through," he said. "I can't conceive there would be any loss of jobs in Charlotte."

The plan for a restructuring of the headquarters is cloudy and details would have to be worked out with C&S.

Connallys hang on year after bankruptcy

HOUSTON (AP) — A year and a half after he was forced to part with most of his personal possessions to pay off creditors, former Texas Gov. John Connally remains unbowed by the financial humiliation.

Connally

The bankruptcy auction "wasn't the proudest moment for us. But we're doing alright. We've started all over again."

— John Connally, former governor

Connally, Navy secretary in the Kennedy administration and Treasury secretary for President Nixon, filed for bankruptcy protection in July 1987 after his real estate and oil ventures crashed with the downturn in Texas' economy.

To satisfy creditors, Connally and his wife, Nellie, had to sell most of their personal possessions, including artwork, china, furniture, saddles, jewelry and gun collections.

The four-day Houston auction last January "wasn't the proudest moment for us. But we're doing alright. We've started all over again," Connally said recently before a meeting of the Texas Associated Press Managing Editors in Houston.

The Connallys rent a Houston high-rise apartment, a drastic change from their former quarters in the city's exclusive River Oaks neighborhood and homes in Austin and Santa Fe, N.M.

Mrs. Connally said they have been through many ups and downs during their 48-year marriage, "but we have both always been everything to each other. So we have managed to hang in."

Between $3 million and $5 million in cash, raised mostly by the auction, was divided among secured creditors. The sale of a Wilson County ranch also went toward paying secured creditors, according to Connally bankruptcy attorney Mark Browning of Austin.

Another Wilson County ranch is still on the market. Browning said a third Wilson County ranch and one in Val Verde County were seized through foreclosures.

A federal bankruptcy judge in Austin last May approved the former governor's bankruptcy plan, which formed a liquidation trust to dispose of Connally's assets.

The judge's order freed Connally from any further claims by creditors, who also approved the plan.

In his initial bankruptcy filing, Connally listed debts of $93.3 million and assets of $13 million, including $850 in cash and $12.3 million in real property.

Under the bankruptcy plan, Connally kept his Picosa Ranch near Floresville and 200 of the 3,400 acres surrounding the property south of San Antonio. He was also able to keep $30,000 in personal property.

Connally is able to retain any money earned through personal services since his Chapter 11 filing, including TV ads for a troubled Houston savings and loan, and $24,000 for membership on The Coastal Corp. board of directors.

Connally traces his financial predicament to the real estate partnership he formed with former Lt. Gov. Ben Barnes in 1981 when Connally took mandatory retirement from Houston's Vinson & Elkins law firm.

"I needed to do something,..I wasn't going to retire because I don't believe in retirement," Connally said. "I believe in changing jobs but never retiring...So that was really the thought process that led to getting into the real estate business.

"Obviously, as it turned out, it was a great mistake," he said.

In 1981, oil was selling for $33 a barrel, Texas was booming, neighboring Mexico was spending wildly and money was to be made.

But then everything that could go wrong did. Oil prices plummeted, the Mexican peso was devalued and the partnership often got into a market just as others pulled out.

In the end, the partnership found it had borrowed millions, based largely on the reputations of Connally and Barnes, that it could not repay.

The boom went bust and took Connally, Barnes and many others in tow.

"Sure, it's a mistake in the sense I would be better off if I never had gotten into it, but that's life. You take gambles, and we made a big gamble," Connally continued. "When you make that big a gamble, you can suffer big losses, and that's what happened."

Family urges court to limit rancher's dealings

DENTON (AP) — The son and estranged wife of a former Denton rancher are urging a state district court to heavily restrict the rancher's attempts to recapture a portion of the family's $60 million empire, attorneys say.

In state district court Friday, attorneys for Josephine Cauble and Lewis Cauble filed a motion seeking an injunction against Rex Cauble. The former rancher convicted in 1982 of racketeering and bank fraud.

The motion urges that Cauble be forbidden from contacting, threatening, suing or interfering in any way with them or their companies, J&L Partners or L&J Management Corp.

"What we're saying is let's have one forum, and let's litigate all the issues in that forum, rather than having this multiplicity of lawsuits," Denton lawyer Richard Hayes, local counsel for Mrs. Cauble and her son, told The Dallas Morning News.

Cauble, since his release from federal prison in 1987, has filed suit in Denton County, trying to regain a share in his former Cauble Enterprises Inc., now J&L Partners.

The former rancher did not immediately return telephone calls from The Associated Press late Friday.

In papers filed with the suit, Cauble claimed he had an oral agreement that his wife and son would return to him a 31 percent interest in the company "when he could resume ownership without further involvement of the government."

Jurors who convicted Rex Cauble ordered his interest in Cauble Enterprises forfeited to the government. In an agreement to settle the government's claim, the property was divided between the government and Mrs. Cauble and her son.

The former rancher also staked a claim to a share of the family fortune after Josephine Cauble filed for divorce in Dallas County.

"We started off with the suit that Rex Cauble filed in Denton County in February 1988," said Hayes. "Then he tries to raise the same issues in the divorce suit in Dallas County, and then he intervened in a different lawsuit in Denton County and made the same claims. That's three lawsuits in the last 14 months."

Mrs. Cauble and her son, while admitting that asking for restrictions on Rex Cauble's "free, unfettered access" to the courts is unusual, argue that his actions merit extraordinary relief.

The pair have filed 19 sets of exhibits that exhaustively detail Rex Cauble's life, including records of six marriages and allegations of violence. "Records have not been found" of six divorces, the motion read.

The injunction request filed Friday is in response to a petition Rex Cauble filed March 21 accusing his wife, son, sister and others of conspiring to defraud him of an interest in the companies.

In the legal battle, each side also accused the other of mismanaging the multimillion-dollar empire.

Rex Cauble, in the suit filed in February 1988, alleged that J&L Partners and L&J Management were jeopardized by "gross mismanagement."

Mrs. Cauble and her son, in their motion filed Friday, accuse Rex Cauble of mismanaging the fortune they inherited and losing "staggering sums" — $2.9 million from 1957 through 1972 as shown on tax returns.

Pro-choice advocate claims 'God is on my side as well'

ST. LOUIS (AP) — B.J. Isaacson-Jones has days when she knows that dressing in red will provoke the ugly taunts again.

Isaacson-Jones

"B.J., you're wearing red," scream the protesters sometimes gathered outside her office. "Does that match the blood on your hands?"

The taunts have taken a toll on the director of Reproductive Health Services, the abortion clinic at the heart of an emotional and explosive debate before the U.S. Supreme Court.

"It's not unusual for me to close my office door and sob," she said. "I'm proud of the way I live my life. It's hard when you're standing close to people and you can feel the hatred. I don't hate people.

"The antis say God is on their side," she said. "I say God's on my side as well."

The intense feelings are likely to grow even stronger as April 26 draws nearer, the day the Supreme Court hears arguments over a Missouri statute that could chip away or overturn the 1973 ruling that legalized abortion.

"We are gravely concerned about this case," said Isaacson-Jones, whose non-profit clinic is the largest in the Midwest. "What's at stake here is women's lives. It's that complicated and that simple."

Missouri's pro-choice forces have grown from a small underground movement to a group of determined activists challenging a state whose Legislature has passed anti-abortion measures by 5-1 majorities.

Two veteran advocates are key players in this case: Frank Susman, a lawyer who will be arguing his fifth Missouri abortion case before the high court, and Judith Widdicombe, a former nurse at a Roman Catholic hospital and the founder of the clinic.

Together, with Isaacson-Jones, they've shared not only their convictions, but also death threats, pickets at home or outside the clinic, obscene phone calls and harassment of their families.

Susman, who represents the clinic, says someone once placed a bogus newspaper ad saying his house was for sale. A picket sued him for $250,000, claiming he'd assaulted her as he escorted a woman into another clinic where protesters were gathered. A jury cleared him.

Reproductive Health is only one of seven plaintiffs — Planned Parenthood of Greater Kansas City is another — but it has been the target of some of the most vicious attacks. Once, protesters stood on clinic desks and jumped through a reception window.

In 1986, five gallons of gas were poured under the waiting room door and ignited. The blaze caused more than $100,000 damage. No one was arrested.

"This is a very violent movement," said Widdicombe, now a consultant for Voters For Choice in Washington, D.C. "I think it has become a rapidly escalating war in the last 10 years."

Abortion opponents in Missouri, however, insist they repudiate violence and say verbal harassment is the wrong way to sway hearts and minds.

"If I have a sincere desire to point out the error of their ways, I'm not going to be able to accomplish that by screaming and hollering at them," said Sam Lee, a Missouri anti-abortion leader.

Anti-abortion forces encouraged

By SHARON COHEN

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Samuel Lee is consumed by a cause he likens to the great freedom struggles of the century. This decade, it has taken him from picket lines and jail cells to the halls of the U.S. Supreme Court.

Lee

For most of his adult life, Lee has crusaded against abortion. He has lobbied lawmakers, blocked clinic doors and pushed for the day when the law of the land is changed.

The day the Supreme Court hears arguments over the existing abortion statute is the "best sign of hope we've had in 16 years," said Lee, state legislative chairman of Missouri Citizens for Life. "Pro-life people are very excited. They're hopeful this will be the case that will reverse Roe."

"It could be the big one and everybody knows it," said attorney Andrew Puzder, who has defended Lee frequently in court and wrote a key provision of the state law that declares life begins at conception.

Puzder and Lee, along with Louis DeFeo, counsel for the Missouri Catholic Conference, are key architects of the bill before the court.

Missouri is a natural testing ground for the abortion issue with both a vocal right-to-life movement and the region's largest abortion clinic, Reproductive Health Services, which has challenged parts of the state law.

The state, with its mix of Roman Catholics, Southern Baptists and evangelicals, is friendly turf for abortion opponents. Missouri, too, is home of the national headquarters of the Assemblies of God. Its members include Gov. John Ashcroft, who calls abortion "an atrocity against the future."

"We didn't have to convince a lot of people abortion is wrong," said Lee. "There are states we couldn't imagine getting some of the stuff passed (that was approved here)."

Perhaps no one in Missouri better personifies the commitment of anti-abortion activists than the 31-year-old Lee. He has been arrested 50 times in protests and once served 7½ months in a work-release program.

For Lee, there's no room for dissent, no hope for compromise and no doubt who's right.

"I'm sort of a black-and-white person," he said. "There aren't too many gray areas I see. Abortion is one that's particularly black and white. ...It's just so clear. Abortion kills unborn babies. Abortion is wrong.

"What drives me is just gut belief, knowing what I'm doing is right. I have a personal responsibility to stop abortion."

Lee insists he's "not emotional," saying those who are "get burned out. They expect results soon. I don't have any plans to do anything else."

The Missouri measure before the court, dubbed the "kitchen sink bill," has sections that cover legal rights for the unborn, abortion restrictions and public funding, and involuntary manslaughter, which also relates to the unborn.

The 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals last summer rejected major parts of the law, including a ban on using public hospitals or other government-run facilities for abortions unless a woman's life is in danger. Other parts struck down include a ban prohibiting public employees from performing or assisting an abortion and the declaration that human life begins at conception.

Lee became involved in the late '70s when he was considering the priesthood. He attended a meeting of students planning an abortion clinic sit-in.

"Something inside of me snapped," he said. He abandoned his career plan and embarked on a campaign he compares to the history-making missions of Mohandas Gandhi and Martin Luther King Jr.

"Both were confronted with an injustice," he said. "They got the people themselves, those oppressed, to fight back. Here we have a minority, the unborn child, oppressed by law. Though they can't fight for themselves, others are acting in their interest."

Nearly 600 protesters against abortion arrested in four states

Associated Press

Police arrested nearly 600 demonstrators who blockaded women's clinics in four states Saturday, apparently as part of a national campaign to persuade the Supreme Court to make abortion illegal.

The protestors in Milwaukee; Ann Arbor, Mich.; Jackson, Miss.; and Tampa and Melbourne, Fla., were dragged off by police after blocking the entrances to clinics.

The protests appeared timed to sway the court, which is due April 26 to consider a challenge to the landmark Roe v. Wade decision legalizing abortion. A week ago, more than 300,000 abortion rights supporters marched in Washington.

The Tampa Women's Health Center was blocked for about three hours before officers moved in to make arrests, said Hillsborough County sheriff's spokesman Jack Espinosa. He said 187 of the estimated 1,000 demonstrations were detained.

Protesters temporarily blocked a section of the street in front of the clinic near the University of South Florida, Espinosa said, but police had "no problem" making the arrests. The detainees were transported to a nearby junior high school for booking on trespassing charges.

Robin Kennedy, administrator at the Aware Woman Clinic in Melbourne, said the clinic entrance was blocked in the morning, but patients "were not intimidated by the bullies on our doorstep."

Police made from 130 to 150 arrests. Ms. Kennedy estimated the crowd at 250 to 300 people but Operation Rescue, the national umbrella group that has been organizing the protests, said about 500 people showed up.

About 200 Milwaukee protesters lined up before 8 a.m. at a downtown building that houses the Affiliated Medical Services clinic, and kept workers and patients from entering.

Each time small groups of protesters crossed police lines and were arrested, another group would head for the entrance, where in turn they were handcuffed and taken away. Police said 130 demonstrators were cited for trespassing, which carries a $79 fine.

About 60 protesters were arrested in a protest Friday at the same building.

About 75 demonstrators were arrested in an anti-abortion protests in Ann Arbor, police said.

Most Americans approve of conditional abortion

NEW YORK (AP) — More than three-quarters of Americans approve of abortion under some circumstances, according to a Gallup poll released Saturday.

The poll, conducted for Newsweek magazine after last week's huge abortion rights rally in Washington, found 27 percent of those asked said abortion should be legal without conditions, the highest percentage since the Gallup Organization first asked the question in 1975.

Another 50 percent said they approved of abortion only under certain circumstances, which were not specified in the question. Only 18 percent of Americans surveyed believe abortion should be illegal without exceptions.

Fifty-one percent said they do not want the Supreme Court to overturn Roe v. Wade, the 1973 decision that legalized abortion.

The Gallup organization interviewed a national sample of 750 adults on April 12 and 13. The rally was held April 9. The margin of error is plus or minus 4 percentage points.

New budget pact already under fire

WASHINGTON (AP) — The fiscal 1990 budget pact between President Bush and Congress, produced in weeks of high-level bargaining and praised as a lofty success by its authors, is already coming under fire.

These critics see the plan as a failure that soothes a political headache for lawmakers and the president while taking only a faint-hearted whack at the government's fiscal malaise.

By its own reckoning, the deal whittles the troublesome federal deficit to $99.4 billion, just within the $100 billion target required by the Gramm-Rudman deficit reduction law.

And in the high-octane politics of the $1.2 trillion budget — in which protracted, pitched battles between Democrats and Republicans are waged over the tiniest fractions of overall spending — an agreement of any kind is indisputably a major plus.

"The most significant aspect of this agreement is its existence and that is no small accomplishment," Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, said at the Rose Garden ceremony at which Bush and congressional leaders announced the accord.

But it is the assumptions the agreement makes, the savings it claims, the work that remains to be done and the deficit problem it leaves unaddressed that have many people raising their eyebrows.

"If American corporations prepared their financial statements based on the way this proposal was put together, their officers would go to jail," said Carol Cox, president of the bipartisan Committee for a Responsible Federal Budget and a former Senate Budget Committee aide.

The White House says it expects the deficit for fiscal 1989 — which ends Sept. 30 — to be about $163 billion.

But administration and congressional leaders say they need only find about $28 billion in savings to shrink the red ink for next year to $99.4 billion.

Exxon cleanup plan due; Spill reaches second park

VALDEZ, Alaska (AP) — The tentacles of America's worst oil spill gripped the shore of a second national park today, raising fears that bears would join sea mammals, birds and deer as casualties of the Exxon Valdez wreck.

Oil washed up Friday at the Big River area along the northern coast of Katmai National Park, an undeveloped area beside the Shelikof Strait, more than 250 miles from where the tanker rammed a reef on March 24.

Observers from a plane saw a bear dig clams from the oil-tainted sand, said Park Service spokesman John Quinley.

"We've seen pictures of dead deer in Prince William Sound that ate oil-tainted kelp, and it looks like we could be seeing brown bear meeting the same fate," Quinley said.

Park officials said bears are just beginning to come out of hibernation and heading to beaches to feed.

The weather forecast held more bad news: winds from the southwest were expected to push more oil ashore in the area.

Exxon was to hand over a detailed shoreline cleanup plan today to the head of the Coast Guard, Adm. Paul Yost. The plan was to include the number of people and the amount of gear needed to begin scouring some of the 3,000 beaches blackened by the oil spill.

Oil has been washing ashore at Kenai Fjords National Park for a week, and residents of such fishing and tourist towns as Homer, Kodiak, Seldovia and Port Graham were preparing to try to block the spreading spill today.

Big River was No. 2 on a list of nine places at Katmai where park officials believe floating booms may be able to shield salmon spawning areas, brown bear habitat, bird nesting areas and native Alaskan sites from the ribbons of oil.

Exxon was to send ships with booms in today, but some residents of Kodiak, the nation's No. 1 port in terms of dollars earned, were unwilling to wait that long, Quinley said Friday night.

"Twelve fishing vessels set out for the Katmai coast tonight to try to control the oil," he said.

He had no details on how much oil had washed up, and Exxon's offices had closed for the night.

By Friday, the thick oil and sheen from the crash of the Exxon Valdez tanker had drifted down Prince William Sound, defiling thousands of boulder-strewn beaches, 225 miles southwest to the tip of the Kenai Peninsula, where sea currents divide.

Some oil then moved down the east side of the Kodiak Islands, with spottings reported at Afognak Island and as far south as the waters of the community of Kodiak, about 300 miles from the accident site.

The oil that was on the other side of the Kodiak archipelago and had threatened the Katmai park included a 40-square-mile patch of heavy oil and sheen in Shelikof Strait.

Congressmen say more at stake than money in minimum wage fight

WASHINGTON (AP) — The showdown between President Bush and Congress over the minimum wage is an eagerly contested battle many believe will set the course of the nation's domestic and political agenda for the 101st Congress if not the next four years.

With Democrats in Congress pushing an ambitious package of domestic programs the new administration opposes, both sides of the minimum-wage fight view this first confrontation as a major test of resolve.

"If the president gets rolled on the minimum wage then we will see a plethora of big and bigger spending programs at a time in our country's history when we can least afford it," said Republican Sen. Orrin Hatch of Utah.

"What George Bush has done here is he's chosen this issue to make a stand," Hatch said in an interview Friday. "This is a big stakes game."

Democrats see it that way was well.

"We're going to battle on this issue until we get it done, and we're going to be successful," said Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass. "The minimum wage has helped get a lot of Democrats elected over the years and contributed to the defeat of a lot of Republicans. This is a classic confrontation between Democrats as a party which cares for working people and Republicans who don't."

Republicans concede Democrats may win a political issue if the president vetos legislation raising the minimum wage.

Democrats and organized labor are preparing to promote the issue as one of fairness in the mold of their successful campaign last year to win public support for legislation giving workers advance notice of plant closings.

They also are quick to talk about Bush's support for reducing capital gains taxes, which would predominantly benefit the wealthy.

"The president wants thousands of dollars in capital gains taxes for the rich but he can't spare three dimes for the working poor," said Kennedy. "That will linger."

But Bush, who lost the John Tower nomination fight in the Senate, appears ready to ignore the potential political risk in order to notch a victory.

Thirty cents and four months separate the Democrats and Bush on the minimum wage, which has been $3.35 an hour since 1981. The legislation soon to reach the White House would raise the floor to $4.55 an hour by October 1991 and allow some workers to be paid a subminimum their first two months on the job. Bush has insisted he will go no higher then $4.25 an hour and only if employers can pay a subminimum for six months.

Bush himself has acknowledged the significance of the battle, ending a recent statement of his intention to veto the Democrats' minimum wage bill with the declaration: "I have too much at stake."

Democrats say Bush has picked the wrong time for a fight.

Illinoisans line up for shot at $68 million

CHICAGO (AP) — Illinoisans and anyone who could fly, drive, walk or hitchhike into the state lined up Saturday for a 13 million-to-1 shot at the world's biggest lottery jackpot, which swelled with last-minute sales to $68 million.

Sales of $1 tickets in the Lotto game were brought to a halt just two minutes before the televised drawing Saturday night. And dreams of ticket-holders across the state, nation and world hinged on matching the six numbers drawn — three, 14, 32, 40, 46 and 54.

Lottery officials said they wouldn't know until Sunday if there was a winner.

Lotto machines spit out 30,000 tickets a minute just hours before the drawing. Lines of would-be millionaires spilled out of lottery outlets. At O'Hare International Airport, travelers bought tickets between flights.

"I always wanted a pair of handmade Italian shoes," said Audrey Bullock, an airline reservation clerk who flew in from Detroit to buy tickets. "I would go to Italy and say, 'Measure my foot and make me some green shoes, the color of money.'"

The largest single winner in U.S. history was Sheelah Ryan of Winter Springs, Fla., who walked away with $55.16 million in the Florida lottery in September.

The jackpot, bolstered by a week of record sales, beat the old world record of $61.98 million set in October in California. That pot was split among three winning tickets, one bought by an individual and the others bought by groups of co-workers.

Before then, the world's record jackpot was $56 million in Spain's El Gordo lottery in 1983. But in Spain's lottery, players don't choose their numbers, which are already printed on tickets, and several winning entries are guaranteed in each of the five or six drawings held each year.

Lottery officials fielded calls all week from every state, the Netherlands, Britain, France, Italy, Canada and Mexico as foreigners sought a piece of the action.

Huck's convenience store in the southern Illinois town of Carmi had a Hoosiers and Kentuckians waiting in the parking lot before sales began at 6 a.m.

In Chicago, ticket vendors saw everyone from poor residents of the West Side drawing on their meager savings to professionals tossing away hundreds.

"I'd throw away $200 for $62 million any day," said Board of Trade broker Mark Roberts, before officials raised the jackpot twice during the day.

Renee Willis, 37, a secretary at Chicago's Malcom X College, bought $10 worth of tickets at $1 a shot. If she wins, she said, she'll buy a house somewhere warm. "Like Florida," she said.

In the drawing, six numbers between 1 and 54 are chosen, and the winner must match all six.

The jackpot began at $5 million, but the last winner was March 18, and unclaimed prizes and ticket sales boosted the total.

The jackpot guarantees a single winner 20 annual payments of $3.35 million, minus federal and state withholding taxes.

Trooper shot dead while serving warrant

TERRA ALTA, W.Va. (AP) — A state trooper serving an arrest warrant for an unpaid traffic ticket was shot dead Saturday by the violator, who was then killed by a gunshot.

The gunman, Ercil Layton, 62, fired at Trooper J.T. Brammer and his partner after they entered his house around noon to serve the warrant for three missed appearances in traffic court, police said.

Brammer, 42, was killed and his partner, R.J. Hicks, 35, was wounded in the upper arm, officials said. It was not immediately clear whether the troopers returned the fire or whether Layton shot himself.

"A traffic ticket," state police Lt. Perry Ferguson said. "It's a heck of a price to pay."

Hicks was in serious condition with a gunshot wound to the upper arm at Ruby Memorial Hospital in nearby Morgantown, a hospital supervisor said.

"It's my understanding that (Layton's) wife came to the door and let the officers in," state police Lt. Col. G.R. Young said at a news conference. "They went into the house and from then on, things got bad."

Brammer was found dead in a bedroom to the right of a hallway that leads from the front door of the house. Layton was found alive on the floor of a utility room at the end of the hallway. He died on the way to the hospital, Ferguson said.

Officers found a 30.06 high-powered rifle and a 32-caliber handgun in the Layton home. Young said he did not know if the weapons were used in the shootings.

NATION IN BRIEF

April 28 launch date for shuttle

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — NASA has selected April 28 for launching Atlantis on the first space shuttle planetary mission with the Magellan-Venus probe.

The decision was announced Friday following a comprehensive two-day review of all aspects of the flight by more than 200 shuttle managers and engineers. Liftoff of the shuttle Atlantis was set for 2:24 p.m. EDT.

"While we have much work to do, and little contingency time, we have established an April 28 launch date," NASA shuttle Director Richard Truly said.

That had been the unofficial launch target for several weeks.

During their four-day flight, Atlantis' five astronauts are to release the $378 million Magellan spacecraft from the cargo bay, starting it on a 466-day journey to Venus.

The spacecraft is to orbit the cloud-covered planet in August 1990 and map its surface over the next 243 days with a high-resolution radar system.

Magellan is the first new American planetary spacecraft since Pioneer 13 was launched in 1978, also to Venus. It also is the first planetary payload to be carried by a space shuttle.

Woman pleads guilty

REDWOOD CITY, Calif. (AP) — A woman accused of abandoning her baby under a jetliner's sink after giving birth in the restroom pleaded innocent Friday to a felony charge of child endangerment.

Christina LoCasto, 24, of New York City surrendered to San Mateo County Sheriff's investigators the day after the newborn, named Alyssa, was discovered under the sink by an airline worker.

San Mateo County Superior Court Judge Margaret Kemp set a June 5 trial date. LoCasto, who is free on $50,000 bail, faces up to six years in prison if convicted.

Alyssa was found July 13, shortly after a United Airlines jet arrived at San Francisco International Airport en route from Newark, N.J. and all passengers had left. The child is in the custody of relatives.

Feds seize solvent thrift

WASHINGTON (AP) — A large California savings and loan that allegedly had undue clout with politicians and regulators became the second thrift to be taken over recently by the government despite being technically solvent.

The Federal Home Loan Bank Board said Friday that the 29-branch Lincoln Savings and Loan Association in Irvine had dissipated its $5.4 billion in assets, had let its capital dwindle to $20 million and was operating in an unsafe and unsound manner.

Another large savings and loan, Gibraltar Savings of Beverly Hills, Calif., was seized March 31. Regulators stressed that Lincoln's branches would remain open as usual and that all deposits were guaranteed up to the $100,000 insurance limit.

Lincoln has been up for sale while its parent, American Continental Corp., a luxury resort developer based in Phoenix, Ariz., prepared to file for federal bankruptcy protection, which was done Thursday.

Special inspections end

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government is halting special inspections of fruit from Chile after coming up with no evidence of poisoning since traces of cyanide were found in two grapes a month ago.

But fruit from the South American country will still be subject to routine, random spot checks at U.S. ports of entry, the Food and Drug Administration said Friday in its announcement.

The FDA said it expects the Chilean government to continue inspecting 1 percent of its fruit shipments bound for the United States for the rest of its growing season, which is winding down.

FDA Commissioner Frank Young said the cooperation of Chilean officials as well as "greater consumer awareness, as well as laboratory studies, and the finding of no additional problems in Chilean fruit" combined to end the need for the enhanced inspections.

When the tainted grapes were found March 12 after a cyanide-poisoning threat telephoned to the U.S. embassy in the Chilean capital of Santiago, the FDA urged that all fruit from Chile be removed from store shelves and imposed a temporary detention on Chilean fruit shipments at the docks.

Five days later, the agency began a stepped-up inspection plan for fruit being held in warehouses and at the docks, but about 3.5 million cases of fruit, worth about $41 million, that was held by wholesalers and retailers had to be dumped.

Man says he has bomb

ELIZABETH, N.J. (AP) — A man who claimed he had a bomb and demanded to see President Bush has been charged with aggravated assault, making terroristic threats and obstruction of administration of law, police said Friday.

James Cecil, 36, of Lakewood, was before a judge Friday on firearms charges when he suddenly announced he had a bomb in his briefcase and demanded to speak to Bush, who was visiting a school about seven miles away, authorities said.

Cecil was tackled by a sheriff's deputy and another officer ran the briefcase into an empty jury room. Nobody was injured and no bombs were discovered, although Cecil allegedly claimed he had placed others in the building.

A woman who answered the phone at the Union County Prosecutor's Office, and who would identify herself only as a prosecutor, said Friday that most of the components to build a bomb were in the briefcase but that the device was not capable of exploding.

Union County Lt. Edward Reidy said Friday that Cecil was being held in the Union County Jail in lieu of $50,000 cash bail.

Vietnam pilot remembered 16 years after death

TISHOMINGO, Okla. (AP) — They say "Smokey" Tolbert had what it took, and was born to fly.

The remains of Clarence O. "Smokey" Tolbert were buried Friday with those words of remembrance, 16 years after he was shot down and killed over Vietnam.

"Smokey was born with the right stuff...," said retired U.S. Navy Adm. Walter Lewis Chathum, who served with Tolbert in Vietnam and delivered his eulogy before nearly 800 people during a memorial service in a Murray State College auditorium.

Years of denial took away much of the pain E.J. Tolbert felt about his brother's death, but it all came back Friday, as a Navy officer handed him the folded American flag from Smokey's silver casket.

"I never did really accept his death," Tolbert said several hours after the burial in Troy, 10 miles north of Tishomingo. "But when they handed me that flag..."

An honor guard gave a 15-gun salute and three F-14 jets flew over twice in the "missing man" formation, the second time as a Navy officer handed the flag to Tolbert. A bugler played Taps.

Tishomingo, a southern Oklahoma town of about 3,200, was decked out for the ceremony honoring its hero. Residents tied yellow ribbons to street lamps and trees, and hung American flags from porches and storefronts. Some stores were closed during the early afternoon.

The Rev. Joey Lansdale delivered a prayer focusing on sacrifice, saying "all of us owe a great debt to one who would lay down his life for his friends.

"We are debtors to this man and it's a debt we can never repay," Lansdale said. "A hero has come home to rest. God, we thank you for letting him come home to rest here."

Tolbert, who earned the nickname "Smokey" fighting fires from the air, was shot down Nov. 6, 1972. The Vietnamese government last year returned his remains to the United States.

"Anyone would be proud to have known Smokey," said Hal Loney, a retired lieutenant commander who flew with Tolbert in the elite Blue Angels during 1968.

Loney said the burial would "put to rest a fallen comrade who died defending this great country of ours."

During the memorial service, Chathum read from the words of an American prisoner in solitary confinement during the war.

"We toast our hearty comrades who have fallen from the skies, were gently caught by God's own hand to reign with him on high," Chathum read. "To dwell among the soaring clouds they knew so well before, from victory roll to tail chase at heaven's very door.

"And as we fly among them there, we hear their poignant plea: Take care my friend and watch your six, do one more roll for me.

"Welcome home, Smoke," Chathum then said. "Amen."

Doctors urged to watch for abuse of pregnant women

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A tearful woman told how she was brutalized during pregnancy as the March of Dimes Birth Defects Foundation urged doctors and nurses to watch for signs that expectant mothers have been beaten.

"One out of 12 pregnant women is a victim of battering," said Betsy Berkhemer-Credaire, head of the group's Southern California chapter. "She is not the only victim. Her unborn child is incredibly at risk because of this battering."

Nurses, a prosecutor and the operator of a battered women's shelter joined Berkhemer-Credaire on Friday at a March of Dimes news conference intended to increase awareness of abuse of pregnant women.

Also attending was 28-year-old Mary Siering, who choked back tears as she recounted how her boyfriend abused her while she was pregnant.

"He slapped me in the face, he threw a sneaker at my stomach when I was five months pregnant, and he put me in a headlock," she sobbed. "He held me hostage in the apartment against my will. When I tried to call 911, he ripped the cord out of the wall."

Siering, a social worker for Los Angeles County, said her boyfriend fled to the East Coast without being prosecuted, and her child, Rita Frances, now 2, "trusts the world because her mother cares enough to protect her."

Still, battered women are four times more likely to deliver babies with low birth weights, and twice as likely to miscarry compared with other mothers, Berkhemer-Credaire said.

"Low-birth-weight babies are more likely to be born with birth defects and more than 40 times more likely to die during the first month of life," she added.

She and others urged doctors and nurses to watch for signs of battering in their pregnant patients, and to help document injuries so the assailants can be prosecuted.

Battered women also should seek help and emergency shelter and leave those abusing them, said participants in the conference at Kaiser Permanente Los Angeles Medical Center.

Abuse against expectant mothers happens in all racial and socioeconomic groups, said Anne Stewart Helton, a community health nurse consultant at Texas Women's University.

Helton conducted a foundation-financed study of 290 pregnant women randomly selected from public and private prenatal clinics in Houston. She found 8 percent — or one in 12 — were beaten by their male partners during pregnancy, and another 15 percent reported being battered earlier.

Soldiers hit with rocks, bottles at curfew in Soviet Georgia

MOSCOW (AP) — Soldiers patrolling the Soviet Georgian capital where 19 pro-independence protesters were killed nearly a week ago were pelted with rocks and bottles, news reports said today.

The Communist Party daily Pravda and the Defense Ministry newspaper Red Star reported Tbilisi was calm during the day but that tensions still rose nightly as the 11 p.m. curfew approached.

However, Pravda suggested the 11 p.m.-6 a.m. curfew that was imposed after Sunday's clash could end soon.

The reports came after the southern republic's Communist Party and government leaders were replaced following the killings by Red Army troops who were trying to disperse nationalist protesters Sunday.

"Nobody and nothing can justify the deaths of absolutely innocent people," Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze, an ethnic Georgian, said in a speech Friday to Georgia's party plenum, which made the leadership changes.

At a meeting in Moscow, a group of prominent intellectuals, including human rights activist Andrei D. Sakharov, today blamed the clash in Tbilisi on Moscow bureaucrats who imposed stronger security measures last year.

Decrees approved at the end of July require advance permission for meetings and demonstrations and gave a special force attached to the Interior Ministry special power for keeping order at demonstrations.

Soviet officials are conducting an investigation to determine whether security forces who broke up the demonstration in Tbilisi killed people by beating them with shovels they had been issued to dig trenches.

The group said the killings in Georgia threaten President Mikhail Gorbachev's reforms, known as perestroika.

Huge crowds march through the Soviet Georgian capital Tbilisi Saturday for the funeral of victims killed during a demonstration the previous weekend after local leaders ordered troops to clear protesters.

"This is a knife pushed into the back of perestroika by high-ranking bureaucrats, first and foremost, I believe, by the Moscow ones," said one member of the group, economist Leonid Batkin.

Sakharov, a 1975 Nobel Peace Prize winner and Tribuna board member, sat near Batkin but did not speak.

Mourning Georgians continued piling fresh flowers at the site of the clash Sunday outside the local government headquarters in Tbilisi. More funerals in the Black Sea republic bordering Turkey were scheduled today.

Red Star reported new "calls for people to commit terrorist acts."

"In a few regions, rocks and bottles have been thrown at military vehicles during the night," the paper said.

Shevardnadze, party chief in the southern republic from 1972 to 1985 and now a member of the ruling Politburo in Moscow, was dispatched to Georgia after Sunday's bloodshed.

Givi G. Gumbaridze, Georgia's KGB chief for two months, was elected Friday by the party plenum to succeed Dzhumber I. Patiashvili as party first secretary. Gumbaridze, 45, previously served as party leader in Tbilisi, a city of 1.2 million people.

Patiashvili, 49, who held his post since replacing Shevardnadze, accepted responsibility for the clash and resigned.

Curfews put on occupied territories

JERUSALEM (AP) — The army clamped curfews on much of the occupied lands Saturday to prevent violence on the anniversary of the PLO military chief's assassination. Soldiers reportedly shot and killed one Palestinian.

Throughout the territories, residents observed a general strike to protest the killings of at least five Palestinians last week.

The military commander of the Palestine Liberation Organization, Khalil Wazir, was gunned down outside his home in Tunis, Tunisia, on April 16, 1988.

At the time, Israeli sources confirmed media reports that an Israeli commando carried out the assassination of Wazir, also known by his nom de guerre of Abu Jihad. The Israeli government has refused comment.

Underground leaders of the 16-month Palestinian uprising have called for a "day of mass rage" to mark Sunday's anniversary.

On the day of Wazir's death, 14 Palestinians were shot and killed by troops during protests, and three later died of wounds suffered that day. It was the highest one-day death toll in the uprising.

The death Saturday brought to 432 the number of Palestinians killed in the uprising. Eighteen Israelis have died.

The Palestinian protesters are trying to expel Israel from the West Bank and Gaza Strip, which Israel seized from neighboring Arab states during the Middle East War of 1967.

Ceremonies marking Wazir's death were expected to focus on Gaza City, where many of his relatives live.

Tamil rebels offer to meet with Sri Lankan government

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka (AP) — Tamil rebels offered Saturday to hold talks with the government on ending their war for independence, hours after an ambush blamed on the rebels left 21 soldiers dead.

The jungle ambush was the third attack blamed on the rebels in as many days. At least 79 people have died in the violence.

The Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eelam, the largest and most powerful Tamil rebel group, sent a letter to President Ranasinghe Premadasa offering to hold talks, a spokesman for the organization said. Copies of the letter, signed by the group's political committee, were sent to newspapers.

The offer was an apparent reponse to Premadasa's recent call for a cease-fire. A spokesman for the president called the Tamil statement a "major breakthrough."

The last talks between the Tigers and the government were held in 1985 in Thimpu, Bhutan. The negotiations ended in failure.

The presidential spokesman said the letter was delivered to Premadasa and the government would verify its authenticity before making arrangements for negotiations.

A leader of the Tamil Tigers said in Colombo that he would meet with Premadasa to discuss arrangements for the talks. The rebel leader spoke on condition of anonymity.

Saturday's jungle ambush occurred near Parakramapura in Weli Oya district, where soldiers were guarding Sinhalese laborers clearing the forest, military officials in Colombo said.

At least 21 soldiers were killed and four laborers were critically injured in the fighting, the officials said, speaking on condition of anonymity.

The village is about 150 miles northeast of Colombo.

On Friday, at least 12 people were killed and 18 others injured in the Tamil-dominated town of Jaffna, 180 miles north of Colombo, when a car bomb exploded near the town's university.

WORLD IN BRIEF

48 reported dead in Afghanistan

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — Afghan soldiers, jets and helicopter gunships battled Moslem insurgents on Saturday, one day after the anniversary of an accord aimed at bringing peace. The government said at least 48 people were killed.

President Najib accused the U.S.- and Pakistan-backed guerrillas, who have been fighting the pro-Soviet government for a decade, of stepping up attacks since the Geneva Accords were signed in 1988.

Intense fighting broke out along the Salang Highway, a key supply route running north to the Soviet border from Kabul.

Dozens of jet fighters and helicopter gunships were seen flying toward the surrounding mountains, and tanks and other military vehicles raced northward.

Government soldiers at a checkpoint about 10 miles north of Kabul said guerrillas hit an armored personnel carrier. They did not know whether anyone was killed

Foreign Ministry spokesman Mohammad Nabi Amani said fighting near Kabul killed 43 guerrillas, three government soldiers and two civilians. He said 19 civilians were injured.

Guerrillas have fired 12 rockets into the city of 2.25 million people since Friday, Amani said.

Courts convict officials

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Vietnamese courts have convicted several officials of corruption so widespread it forced the dissolution of a state-owned firm and created millions of dollars in foreign debt, Vietnamese radio reported.

The Criminal Court and the Supreme People's Court of Minh Hai, the country's southernmost province, convicted Duong Van Ba and his accomplices Friday, official Radio Hanoi reported. A text of the broadcast was seen in Bangkok today.

The broadcast said that after many years of working at SIMOSCON, the province's major trading firm, Ba and his accomplices "abused their power to violate the economic management policy, offered and took bribes and trafficked in contraband goods."

It said their crimes "disrupted such a large organization as the SIMOSCON corporation to the point where it had to be dissolved. His gang corrupted many cadres.

"More seriously, Duong Van Ba and his accomplices misappropriated or caused the loss of state property amounting to hundreds of millions of dong and creating a foreign debt totaling millions of U.S. dollars."

Vietnamese authorities have giving high priority to combating what they admit is widespread corruption among officials. The campaign has been spearheaded by Nguyen Van Linh, who became chief of the ruling Communist Party in late 1986 and immediately set out to reform a party and state bureaucracy corrupted by years of excessive centralized control and privilege.

Communist leader dies

BEIJING (AP) — Hu Yaobang, an outspoken reformer who led the world's largest Communist Party until a 1987 purge consigned him to political oblivion, died of heart failure Saturday. He was 73.

The protege of senior leader Deng Xiaoping died one week after he suffered a heart attack during a meeting of the Politburo, the ruling body that dismissed him as party general secretary two years before.

The Chinese Communist Party he led for seven years described Hu as a "great proletarian revolutionary" and "loyal communist fighter" who led a glorious life with "everlasting merits for the party and the people."

But Hu suffered from his party's swift ideological shifts.

He joined Mao Tse-tung on the 1934-35 Long March but was targeted by Mao's Red Guards during the 1966-76 Cultural Revolution, spending nearly the entire decade banished to the countryside or under house arrest.

Nine die in bus collisions

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — Two packed city buses collided in a suburb of Santiago on Saturday, killing nine people and injuring 50, many seriously, police said.

Causes of the collision were not immediately known, police said on condition of anonymity.

The accident occurred in Lo Espejo, a working class district 12 miles south of the city center.

Shortly after the accident, radio stations in Santiago appealed for blood donors for the injured, who were rushed to hospitals in the capital.

Five people died at the site of the crash and four others died after reaching hospitals, police said.

Nuclear plant opens

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The controversial Laguna Verde nuclear power plant, Mexico's first, has been connected to the national power grid and is operating at low capacity, the government announced.

Guillermo Guerrero Villalobos, director of the Federal Electricity Commission, said Unit I of the Laguna Verde plant 180 miles east of Mexico City began producing 40 megawatts of electricity on Thursday.

Environmental worries give Greens more sway in Europe

BONN, West Germany (AP) — With hardly a river anyone would swim in and forests dead or dying of acid rain, it seems Europeans have decided ecology is not just for leftists anymore.

Heightened awareness has pushed the issue from the fringe to the fore, lending more respectability and clout to the parties that first made Mother Earth a candidate.

Members of the once-radical Greens hold Parliament seats in West Germany, Belgium, Italy and Austria. Berlin's governing coalition includes Greens, and France's Greens, Les Verts, had surprising success in municipal elections last month.

Ecology parties hope to double their representation in the European Parliament in elections June 18, and unofficial sister parties of the Greens have sprung up in the Soviet bloc.

Little unity is evident among the dozens of parties born of concern for man's ravaging of the planet, but all benefit from growing worry about pollutants in the air, water and food supplies.

"Environmental consciousness has for years been coming to the forefront, and a number of environmental catastrophes have accelerated this," said Ruth Hammerbacher, a 36-year-old sociologist who is the moderate new leader of West Germany's Greens.

Rhine River chemical spills, North Sea oil slicks and radioactive fallout from the Chernobyl nuclear disaster finally have moved Europeans to action on recycling and restraint, she said.

A turn to the left among voters also has brightened the political fortunes of some European Greens.

But Greens parties differ widely by country and "the result is a painfully underdeveloped network of contacts and coordination," said Juergen Maier, who nurtures the Greens' fledgling international relations.

"We have no world development plan," said Maier, a pragmatist typical of today's mellower Greens. "In most cases we had little to do with the foundation of foreign Greens parties."

Ms. Hammerbacher attributes some of the environmentalist parties' new prominence to "the graying of the Greens," a moderating with age that helps attract West German voters. The party born in the student and anti-war groups of a generation ago now is dominated by people pushing 40.

The decision to play politics and build a more cohesive international network earns the scorn of such Old Guard party figures as Petra Kelly, who accuses the new leadership of abandoning principles in an "opportunist" quest for power.

Despite the new respectability, Greens parties still have limited influence, often getting less than 5 percent of the vote in national elections. They are strongest in West Germany, with 43,000 members and the support of 8-9 percent at the polls.

Inter-Green relations are too informal for a joint strategy in the European Parliament elections, but individual parties across the continent seem to smell the same opportunity.

British Greens secretary Sara Parkin told her party conference this month she was "wildly optimistic" about the chances. For the first time, Greens candidates are contesting all 78 British seats in the 518-member legislature based in Strasbourg, France, which determines policy and joint strategy on issues affecting the entire continent, such as the environment.

Getting into the British Parliament is tougher because of the winner-take-all electoral system, which contrasts with the more flexible proportional representation common on the continent.

Haloes square series

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Midland's Angels raked three El Paso pitchers for 17 hits, six for extra bases, to pound the Diablos 11-3 before 2,790 fans at Angels Stadium Saturday night, squaring the Texas League series at 2-2.

The rubber game, which will decide the TL West first place occupant, is scheduled for 6 p.m. tonight with Roberto Hernandez, 0-1, going for Midland against Randy Veres, 0-0.

Although it looked for a while as though El Paso might pop and chop him into little pieces, Dave Martinez took another steady step on the comeback trail, after missing all of last season with an injury, giving up just one earned run in 6 1/3 innings for his second win. It was 10-3 when he left with one out and one on in the seventh.

Lefthander Frank DeMichele closed out the Diablos in the seventh and submariner Luis Merejo torpedoed EP bats on one hit the final two innings.

THE WIN edged the Angels back ahead of Diablos into first place, but they won't leave town for a 10-game road trip in first place Monday, if they don't win tonight.

Martinez gave up eight hits, but three were either infield chops or outfield pops, so his performance was even more impressive than his stats.

Despite the awesome offense, Manager Max Oliveras noted, "We didn't hit any home runs either, but they will come," when some pointed out that this El Paso team lacks the fence-clearing power usually associated with Diablo teams.

It was the kind of night in which Gary DiSarcina, the silk-smooth fielding shortstop from the University of Massachusetts, turned a .192 average into a .300 average with three hits in four trips and three rbi.

Midland High discus thrower John Braun goes through his twirl during District 4-5A action.

Eight local stars Region I-bound

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

ODESSA — The District 4-5A track meet annually seems to have a little something for everyone and it wasn't any different here at Ratliff Stadium Saturday.

Odessa Permian became the first boys team to win four consecutive titles since Abilene High turned the trick from 1958 to 1961 with a 143-116 margin over San Angelo.

In fact it was rather a Mojo day as the Permian girls rolled to a 155-127 victory over second place surprise Abilene High.

But if it is the thrill of victory you like in sports, you can find eight Midlanders headed for future possible glory by qualifying for the Region I meet in Lubbock in two weeks.

And if you like to double your sports thrills you only have to look at the double winners. San Angelo's Joey Bonds swept the hurdles (13.57 in the highs and 38.01 in the intermediates) as expected and Odessa High sophomore sensation Dallas Cowan won both sprints (10.36 in the 100 and 21.23 in the 200) even though their times were only a little below human expectations.

The girls, too, had double winners with Midland High's Annette Glover winning both the 100 (12.23) and the 200 (25.75) and Estela Arroyo of Odessa High in both the 3200 and 1600.

"I really wanted the double victory and I knew I had to beat (Lee's) Jamelia (Lott) in the 200 to do it, but I felt I could," said Glover.

Lott placed second to Glover to win the other region berth in that event with a 26.02.

If you like records, you had fewer options, but there was the 47.39 by Permian's Lloyd Hill in the 400.

But some people like the more bizzare happenings and this meet had that, too.

Midland Lee's James Brown, who was long jumping for only the second time this year, produced leap of 23-2 on his last jump to win the event. That was two-feet better than his previous best.

"I came in hoping to just make the finals. I wasn't concerned about winning," said Brown. "It was a one jump meet for me. I just hit one at the right time."

You can also look at the boys discus. Many thought a toss of 150-feet would win a region berth, but San Angelo's Darrell Abbe and Darin Childs both went over 160-feet to make what has been a weak event into a strength affair. In fact, Midland High's John Braun had a career best 150-feet and placed fifth.

There was also tragedy for the more demented. Lee's Bill Swearingen won the 800, only to be disqualified, losing his trip to Lubbock in the process.

"All four corner judges had him running inside his lane, so we had to disqualify him," said meet marshall Frank Khout.

Swearingen had no comment on the outcome, a bitter moment that saw glory turn to ashes. He had switched from the 400 to the 800 and had proved it was the right move with the unexpected win, only to see his dreams dashed in the next 10 minutes.

There were other Tall City bright spots, however.

Tracy Parker, who went to state last year, won the shot put with a 41-5¼.

"I'm determined to go back to state, but I will need at least 44-feet at region to do it," said Parker. "It's going to take a lot of work and determination the next two weeks."

Lee's David Arehart won the high jump with a 6-7, one inch below the district record. Arehart was favored to win, but that didn't make it any easier.

"I have a cold and don't feel real well," said Arehart. "And this was a tremendous amount of pressure. People don't realize how much pressure there is when you get to this point."

Midland High's Albert Ray placed second behind Cowan in the 100 for a region berth with a 10.65.

Morrow-Essex duo nets district tennis title

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Luke Morrow and Harper Essex, Midland High's No. 1 boys' doubles team, won nine straight sets to lock up a regional berth Saturday in finals action at the District 4-5A tennis meet.

Elizabeth Ameel, MHS's No. 1 girls' singles player, also advanced and will be the No. 2 district seed at regionals, April 27, in Lubbock.

In the championship match against San Angelo's Craig Smith and Will Tankersley, Morrow-Essex fell behind quickly, 1-0, in the first set, prompting MHS head coach Steve Hoover to fear the competition was "coming out like a house afire."

Morrow-Essex, though, responded to the challenge, winning the next six games to claim the first set, 6-1, and then jumped out to a 3-0 lead in the second set for their nine straight games.

Smith-Tankersley then won a game, holding serve, then broke Essex's serve to even things at 3-3 in the final set.

"I told the guys to play solid and execute well," Hoover said. "We played a good game."

The last game of the match, with Morrow-Essex up 5-4, proved just how solid the team played to earn the right to advance.

Smith-Tankersley was up 40-0 after winning the first three points. Morrow-Essex, though, then broke Tankersley's serve five straight times to win on one match point.

"The first three points (of the final game)," Hoover said, "we played rather loosely. On the fourth point, Luke hit a beautiful return and they made a mistake on it. Harper came up with the same type of point, which put us behind 30-40. Then Luke came up with another return to put it at deuce and all we needed was one match point and we took advantage of it to win the point.

Prior to the championship match, Morrow-Essex defeated Abilene Cooper's Kyle Cannon and John Suttle, 6-3, 3-6, 6-4.

Morrow-Essex will likely be awarded the No. 1 seed in boys doubles at the regional round, according to Hoover.

Elizabeth Ameel was defeated by San Angelo's Allison Marsh, 7-5, 6-4, in the girls' championship, but advances as the district's runner-up.

Ameel defeated Jennifer Winter, also of San Angelo, 6-2, 2-6, 6-2, in the semifinal round earlier Saturday.

"Elizabeth was up 4-1 and ended up losing 7-5 in the first set of the finals," Hoover said. "In that second set, she could never really regain her composure and Allison got up on her really fast. Elizabeth fought for it but couldn't end up pulling it out.

"She's had a difficult time all year in the big matches she's played. The players who are weaker than she, she's put away with no problem. But players closer to her ability, she's having to learn how to play with them. We haven't learned how to put a match away when we're in control of it."

Soccer fans struggle to escape tragedy at a Football Association semifinal between Liverpool and Nottingham Forest Saturday. Ninety-three fans died and about 200 were injured.

93 dead, hundreds injured in British stadium tragedy

SHEFFIELD, England (AP) — Ninety-three soccer fans were crushed to death and at least 200 were injured Saturday when thousands of late comers surged into an already jammed area of a sold-out stadium.

Many of the victims were pushed against a steel mesh crowd-control fence in the standing-room section.

It was the worst sports disaster in British history and matched the second worst in soccer history. Nearly 300 fans were killed at a 1964 match in Lima, Peru, between Argentina and Peru.

Most of the dead were teen-agers and children, ambulance control officer Michael Boyce said.

"It seemed as if it was four deep in dead bodies with people climbing over them," said Stuart McGeagh, a 22-year-old survivor.

The deaths occured at Hillsborough stadium in Sheffield, 150 miles north of London, in the opening minutes of an English Football Association Cup semifinal between Liverpool and Nottingham Forest.

With the 54,000-capacity stadium already near full, police opened the gate to admit some 4,000 last-minute arrivals, fearing that otherwise there would be trouble outside, South Yorkshire Chief Constable Peter Wright said.

Inside the stadium, five minutes after kickoff, a massive surge of people pushed hundreds of spectators against the fence that soon collapsed.

"The purpose of opening the gate," Wright said, "was to save people's lives and to relieve the crush outside."

He said he was not aware of any connection between the gates opening and the surge inside.

Police and soccer authorities immediately announced investigations into the cause of the disaster.

Wright said he believed the tickets of the last-minute arrivals were checked, but fans said they weren't.

"It was crazy outside the ground before the kickoff," Gary Stanley, a computer operator, said. "There was complete madness. ... I've still got a full ticket. I didn't even have time to show it to get into the ground."

A gateman who requested anonymity was quoted by Press Association, the British news agency, as saying he saw the police open the stadium gate.

"It was a free-for-all. There were thousands coming in. I said to the police 'What are you doing that for?' and a policeman said 'Someone is going to die if we don't.'" the gateman said. "It's my opinion that opening those gates caused the tragedy."

The 10-foot-high fence has metal curved spikes facing the standing-room section to prevent people climbing over, and a stadium official said those who were pressed against it would have been lucky to survive.

For about 30 minutes, pressure had been mounting as people poured into the section reserved for Liverpool fans.

The fence behind the goalposts collapsed minutes after the kickoff and more spectators were trampled as the throng burst onto the field.

Many sprawled on the grass gasping for air. Police and first-aid workers pounded on the chests of suspected heart attack victims and gave mouth-to-mouth respiration. Weeping parents and children hunted for each other amid the carnage.

Frank Bice calls it quits after 345 wins at AHS

From Staff Reports

ANDREWS — Longtime Andrews High teacher and coach Frank Bice resigned Friday to pursue private business opportunities. Bice's resignation is effective at the end of the 1988-89 school year.

Bice won 345 games in only 14 years as head basketball coach at AHS, The Sul Ross State graduate had coached and taught in the AISD system since his college graduation in 1968.

In addition to coaching his AHS boy cagers to three state semifinal berths, Bice has coached the Andrews girls golf team to five straight district championships — and a state title in 1987.

Like so many educators before him, Bice said financial considerations prompted the career change.

"I've realized for several years that productivity is more proportionately rewarded in other endeavors," Bice said. He added that the opportunity to coach his son Gym, an all-state cager for AHS this past season, probably kept him coaching several additional years.

Bice plans to sell life insurance; operate his sports poster business; and manage his part-ownership in several Andrews County water stations. Nevertheless, he refused to rule out a return to coaching.

"Coaching has been pure enjoyment."

Rangers continue to rip it up in AL West

DETROIT (AP) — Texas and Detroit are off to surprising starts this season — surprisingly good for the Rangers and surprisingly bad for the Tigers.

Scott Fletcher went 3-for-3 and scored twice and rookie Kevin Brown pitched a seven-hitter Saturday as the Rangers won their seventh straight game, 4-1 over the Tigers.

The Rangers' 9-1 start is their best since the franchise moved to Texas 17 years ago. Detroit, 2-6, is off to its worst start since 1980.

"Walter Alston used to say the games now are just as important as the games in September," Texas manager Bobby Valentine said. "So I'm looking at this as a good time to win."

Detroit manager Sparky Anderson said it's too early to evaluate his team.

"Anything close to a 20-20 record after 40 games and I'll be happy," he said. "After 40 games, a team will give you a good idea how you will do in a year."

Brown, 1-0, walked one and struck out five.

"His ball really moves," Anderson said. "It looked like it had a lot on it. The kid looks like he could be a great pitcher."

Brown, the Rangers' No. 1 draft pick in 1986, lost his first three minor league games last year to extend his losing streak to 14. But he turned it around and finished 12-10 at Tulsa, then went 1-1 after joining the Rangers late in the season.

"If you go through the kind of seasons I've had, you either learn to accept pressure or you sink," Brown said.

Frank Tanana, 0-2, took the loss. Tanana, who had won his previous six decisions against Texas, allowed four runs on nine hits in seven innings.

The Rangers scored all their runs in the first two innings.

Cecil Espy started the game with a single, moved up on Fletcher's double and scored on a single by Rafael Palmiero. Ruben Sierra singled Fletcher home to give Texas a 2-0 lead.

With two outs in the Texas second, Espy and Fletcher both singled. Palmiero doubled Espy home and Fletcher scored on the play when Detroit right fielder Billy Bean booted the ball for an error.

Dave Bergman scored Detroit's only run in the third on a sacrifice fly by Kenny Williams.

"We feel we have the people to do the job now," Fletcher said. "We've got a lot of confidence in each other."

White Sox 7, Athletics 4

Dave Gallagher's three-run homer capped a five-run second inning for the Sox Saturday.

All five runs in the second inning off Bob Welch, 2-1, were unearned because of shortstop Mike Gallego's error. Gallego started in place of Walt Weiss, who has the flu.

Jerry Reuss, 2-1, allowed five hits in six-plus innings for the Sox. The 39-year-old left-hander walked two, did not strike out a batter and gave up a two-run homer to Dave Henderson.

Bobby Thigpen pitched 1 1-3 innings for his third save..He relieved Barry Jones, who left with an elbow injury.

With one out in the second, Welch walked Billy Jo Robidoux. After Daryl Boston grounded out, Steve Lyons reached when Gallego bobbled his grounder.

Eddie Williams blooped an RBI single and Ozzie Guillen beat out an infield topper, scoring Lyons. Gallagher then drove a 1-2 pitch into the left-field seats for his first homer as he extended his hitting streak to nine games.

The White Sox scored again in the thhird when Boston walked, stole second and scored on a single by Williams.

Henderson hit his second homer in the sixth after Tony Phillips walked.

Dave Parker opened the Oakland seventh with a single and Jones replaced Reuss. Pinch hitter Luis Polonia tripled to left and later scored on Ron Hassey's groundout.

Harold Baines doubled to open the Chicago seventh, extending his hitting streak to eight games. Pinch runner Jeff Schaefer moved to third on an infield out and scored on Boston's sacrifice fly.

Orioles 12, Red Sox 4

Larry Sheets and Brady Anderson hit three-run homers and the Baltimore Orioles took advantage of Mike Boddicker's early wildness to beat the Red Sox.

The Orioles broke open the game with seven runs in the ninth inning and moved to 5-5 while handing Boston its second loss in six games.

Boddicker, 1-1, allowed five runs on seven hits with three walks, a wild pitch and a hit batter in 5 1-3 innings. He lost for just the second time in eight starts at Fenway Park since being traded from Baltimore to Boston last July 29.

Jeff Ballard, 2-0, gave up two runs on six hits in 5 2-3 innings. Rookie Gregg Olson finished for his first major-league save.

Boston took a 1-0 lead in the second as Jim Rice extended his hitting streak to 10 games with a single and later scored on Rick Cerone's single.

Baltimore went ahead 3-1 in the third. Anderson, who was traded for Boddicker, beat out a hit off first baseman Nick Esasky's glove, took third on a single by Phil Bradley and scored on a wild pitch.

Boddicker walked Joe Orsulak and hit Cal Ripken with a pitch, loading the bases. Sheets hit a sacrifice fly and Jim Traber broke an 0-for-19 slump got an RBI single.

In the fourth, the Orioles made it 4-1 when Craig Worthington doubled and came home on Bradley's sacrifice fly.

Boston got that run back in its half of the inning on two walks and a single by Cerone.

The Orioles added a run in the sixth on a single by Rene Gonzales and a triple by Bradley. Dwight Evans homered in Boston ninth and Marty Barrett had a sacrifice fly.

Royals 10, Blue Jays 5

Pat Tabler did it again with the bases loaded, hitting a single that keyed a three-run rally in the seventh inning for the Royals.

Tabler, 38-for-66 with 90 RBI in his career with the bases loaded, singled home one run for a 6-5 lead. The Royals scored four times in the ninth on a three-run double by Danny Tartabull and an RBI single by Bo Jackson.

Reliever Luis Aquino, 2-0, pitched 6 1-3 scoreless innings. He gave up three hits. Duane Ward, 0-2, took the loss in relief of starter John Cerutti.

The Blue Jays scored five runs in the first inning and chased Bret Saberhagen.

Jackson's two-run homer, his third of the season, began the Royals' comeback in the second. Jackson doubled in the fifth and later scored on Frank White's single.

Bob Boone opened Kansas City's seventh with a single and two-out singles by Gary Thurman and Kevin Seitzer made it 5-4. David Wells relieved Ward and threw a wild pitch that allowed Thurman to score the tying run.

After walks to George Brett and Tartabull loaded the bases, Tabler met Todd Stottlemyre with his single to right field.

In the ninth, Jim Eisenreich singled and Thurman and Brett walked. Tartabull doubled to center and Jackson singled to left.

The Blue Jays jumped on Saberhagen as Lloyd Moseby, Kelly Gruber and Rance Mulliniks led off with singles for a 1-0 lead. George Bell followed with a two-run double, Fred McGriff walked and Nelson Liriano hit a two-out, two-run double that brought on Aquino.

Brewers 5, Indians 1

Rob Deer hit two home runs Saturday and the Brewers went on to end Tom Candiotti's eight-game winning streak over two seasons.

Deer hit a two-run homer in the sixth inning for a 4-1 lead. He connected for his fourth home run of the season in the eighth against Candiotti, who had not lost since last July 22.

Chris Bosio, 2-0, earned his second victory over Cleveland this season.

Hershiser out in 8th, but Bums still 'cure' struggling Astros

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Now that he is at the top of his game, Orel Hershiser hasn't got time for the pain.

Hershiser, the National League Cy Young Award winner, pitched seven shutout innings Saturday but left in the eighth after feeling a twinge in his right elbow. The discomfort was nothing serious and the Los Angeles Dodgers held off the Houston Astros 3-1.

"I feel like I can pitch right now," Hershiser said. "I did feel the pain, but it was a kind of pain that I've felt before because I've had elbow tenderness my whole career. So I'm not really that worried about it."

The injury occurred as Hershiser struck out Glenn Davis with runners on first and second for the second out. Hershiser left the mound after talking with pitching coach Ron Perranoski and assistant trainer Charlie Strasser.

"I'm starting to think about why it happened. I found that I had to overthrow a few balls in order to really go after certain hitters," Hershiser said. "And after pitching a whole lot of innings last year and not going all out in spring training, I may be stretching some things that were shut down over the winter."

Hershiser was examined by Dr. Ralph Gambardella in the clubhouse and nothing serious was found. He will checked again Sunday.

Hershiser, 2-1, allowed seven hits, struck out two and walked one before leaving in his 1989 home debut. He also hit a leadoff triple in the fifth inning.

Hershiser, whose record streak of 59 consecutive scoreless innings ended on opening day at Cincinnati, did not allow an Astro runner past second while he was in the game.

"I felt good today," he said. "I wasn't striking out a whole lot of people, but I threw the ball pretty well. I didn't have the dominating stuff I had in San Francisco, but I was making my pitches."

Alejandro Pena relieved Hershiser and faced Bill Doran, who hit a line drive to right that right fielder Mike Marshall dropped. Rafael Ramirez scored from second on the error to make it 3-1, but Kevin Bass grounded out to end the inning. Pena finished for his second save.

Giants 1, Braves 0

Don Robinson and Atlee Hammaker combined on a two-hitter and the Giants took advantage of Brave center fielder Dale Murphy's misplay to beat the Braves.

Robinson gave up two hits in five innings, but pulled a muscle in his left buttock while warming up to start the sixth. Hammaker, 1-0, took over and held the Braves hitless the rest f the game.

Kevin Mitchell led off the Giants' seventh with a high fly to shallow center. Murphy charged but wobbled as he chased the ball and it fell for a two-base error.

Terry Kennedy then sliced a low liner that bounced past diving left fielder Lonnie Smith for a double that scored Mitchell.

Cardinals 3, Mets 2

Pedro Guerrero singled home the winning run with one out in the 10th inning Saturday for the Cards.

Vince Coleman led off the 10th with a high bouncer to first baseman Keith Hernandez and beat it out for a single. Coleman then stole second, making him 45-for-45 lifetime in steal attempts against the Mets, and took third on a single by Ozzie Smith.

After Terry Pendleton flied out, Guerrero hit a line drive over the Mets' drawn-in outfield.

Pirates 6, Expos 4

Glenn Wilson hit a two-run homer and reliever Jeff Robinson struck out pinch-hitter Mike Aldrete with the tying runs on in the ninth inning to preserve the Buc win..

Soccer Tragedies

April 15, 1989 — Sheffield, England — A barrier collapsed under the crush of a crowd at the English F.A. Cup semifinal between Liverpool and Nottingham Forest, two of England's leading teams, at Hillsborough Stadium, 150 miles north of London, killing 95 people and injuring at least 180.

March 12, 1988 — Katmandu, Nepal — Soccer fans fleeing a violent hailstorm, stampeded into locked stadium exits killing at least 93 people and injuring more than 100 others.

March 10, 1967 — Tripoli, Libya — Panicked soccer fans fled knife-wielding ruffians and triggered the collapse of a wall in the sports stadium, killing at least 20 people. (N.B. — This report conflicted with those from the Libyan news agency JANA, which said two people were killed and 16 were hospitalized.)

May 29, 1985 — Brussels, Belgium — Soccer riots left 39 people dead at Heysel Stadium when British soccer fans went on a rampage against Italian fans. May 11, 1985 — Bradford, England — A fire engulfed the main stands at Bradford Stadium during a match and killed 55 fans.

Jan. 2, 1971 — Glasgow, Scotland — An overcrowded stairway collapsed during a local soccer match killing 66 people.

1969 — El Salvador and Honduras suffered thousands of casualties in the so-called "Soccer War," which began after a disputed soccer match between the two countries. The brief war was provoked by Honduras' decision to expel many Salvadorans who had settled in Honduras.

Rebels stay in 4-5A diamond race

From Staff Reports

SAN ANGELO — The Midland Lee Rebels made it three in a row Saturday, shutting out the San Angelo Central Bobcats, 7-0, behind the shutout pitching of Michael Pearson.

The Rebels, 10-8, move their district record to 5-4 and find themselves just one-half game behind Midland High for third place. In the last three contests, Lee has outscored its opponents, 32-11.

Pearson, 3-2 in district, held the Bobcats to just five hits while striking out a pair. It was Pearson who bested the Bobcats, 4-0, in the two teams' first meeting of the year.

Lee scored two runs in the third when B.J. Parrish singled, stole second and came home on an RBI single by Vinee Henderson, the district's No. 8 hitter. Henderson then came home on a single by J.J. Johnson.

In the fifth, the Rebels scored three more. Greg Garrett led off with a single; Jason Sever, in to run for Garrett, came in on a double by Pearson. Parrish, who reached on a walk, came in on J.J. Johnson's second RBI single. Pearson then scored on an error by shortstop Manuel Grimaldo.

The Rebels look to make it four in a row Tuesday at 4 p.m. when they host the Abilene High Eagles at Rebel Field. Midland High will travel to Abilene Cooper for a second-place showdown Tuesday.

TRACK

"My start wasn't that good," said Ray. "It took me four or five steps to catch up to the field, but I don't feel like I lost anything because I'm still going to the region meet."

Lee's Mary Ann Isom pulled off one of the biggest surprises by finishing second in the girls discus with a 123-11, some 10-feet better than her career best.

"I just had to do the best I could," said Isom. "It was a goal of mine to go to the region meet, so I had to do it somehow."

Lee's Troy Oliver fits into the near miss category in a big way. He finished third in both hurdles and ran a leg on Lee's third place 1600 relay. Third place is the worst an athlete can finish at district because it is just a step away from advancement.

. Some other stars fell. Lee's Melody Miller, a previous two-time qualifier in the 100, placed fourth. Myra Pina of Midland High failed to qualify in the 3200 for a repeat berth. Also, Midland High Dwane Roberts, a 100 qualifier last year, switched to the 200 and failed to get back to the region meet.

In short, it was a typical District 4-5A track meet.

ANGELS

His single in the second brought home catcher John Orton, who had tripled and his single in the fourth plated Otto Gonzalez, who had doubled, and John Orton, who had walked.

Orton doubled home two runs in the fifth to give the Angels a 10-3 lead after El Paso made threatening gestures with three in the third.

ORTON went 2-for-3 with two rbi and it's evident that the Angels will have to make a decision on his future, if he doesn't start running like a catcher.

Along with his two doubles this season, Orton has two triples, however, it just isn't seemly for catchers to go around hitting three baggers. Two! That's more than most catchers get in a season.

HALO HOPES— El Paso's Ty Dabny, felled by a double play relay Friday night, had 30 stitches taken in the resulting cut. That, and a fracture near the eye-socket will keep him out indefinitely.

....Mark Doran's two hits jumped his average to .400....Catch of the night, Tom Alfredson with a rolling slide to rob Joe Citari in the second.

TENNIS

Midland High's only casualty was the girls' doubles team of Krissy Hall and Susan Johnson. Hall-Johnson, although they will not advance to regionals, did win their third place match after falling in the semifinals to the No. 2 seed in the district.

"Krissy and Susan lost the first set 6-4 and were up 4-1 in second set of the semis," Hoover recalled. "The same problem that's plagued them all year hurt them again and that is they couldn't put the match away. They'll get up on somebody and can't close it off. It cost them this match and it could've gotten them into the regionals.

"They've come a long way in a very short time period. They've had an extremely successful year. They've done a tremendous job in coming this far so quickly.

"I was extremely pleased with the entire team," Hoover said. "We've come a long way in the two years I've been working with the kids. Its been difficult because they're not used to working as hard as they've been working. But now that they see the results, working hard will be a lot easier."

Hawks continue winning ways

ATLANTA (AP) — Dominique Wilkins scored 29 points Saturday night as the Atlanta Hawks won for the sixth consecutive time, 125-100 over the Milwaukee Bucks.

The victory gave Atlanta a 1½-game lead over the Bucks for fourth place in the NBA's Eastern Conference and homecourt advantage in the first round of the playoffs. The Hawks are 5-0 against Milwaukee this season.

Moses Malone added 23 points and Cliff Levingston 21 for the Hawks, who pulled away in the third quarter after leading only 53-49 at halftime.

Glenn Rivers, who sat out 20 minutes of the first half in foul trouble, scored nine points in a 16-2 burst at the start of the third quarter that gave the Hawks a 69-51 lead with 8:30 left in the period.

Milwaukee, losing for the ninth time in its last 10 road games, never got closer than 13 points the rest of the way.

Jon Koncak tied his career-high with 15 rebounds for the Hawks, and Malone and Wilkins had 11 each.

Jack Sikma and Sidney Moncrief scored 14 points apiece for the Bucks.

Terry Cummings, averaging 23.5 per game, scored only 10. He missed his first 11 shots in the game and hit only three of 19.

Pacers 115, Hornets 105

Chuck Person scored 19 of his 37 points in the first quarter for the Pacers.

The victory was the Pacers' fourth in their last five games and snapped Charlotte's two-game road winning streak, a season high.

The expansion Hornets got as close as five points in the fourth quarter, but the Pacers scored the next four points, and a rebound layup by rookie Rik Smits made it 97-88 with 6:11 remaining.

Smits matched his career-high with 27 points and added 12 rebounds. Reggie Miller had 17 and LaSalle Thompson added 13 points and 11 rebounds.

Rex Chapman led Charlotte with 21 points, Dell Curry added 15 and Kelly Tripucka 14.

Indiana led 64-58 at halftime, but Charlotte started the second half by scoring eight of the first 11 points to pull within one.

The Pacers responded with a 14-6 run for an 81-72 lead, and the Hornets got no closer than five after that.

A layin by Detlef Schrempf broke a 50-50 tie with 4:48 left in the second quarter and an 18-8 run helped Indiana take a six-point lead at halftime.

Heritage tourney hampered by rain

HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C. (AP) — Payne Stewart pulled into a three-stroke lead Saturday when darkness halted play in the rain-delayed and uncompleted third round of the $800,000 Heritage Classic.

Stewart, who shared the first and second round leads with Kenny Perry, moved one in front when Perry missed the green and bogeyed the ninth hole birdie on the rain-soaked Harbour Town Golf Links.

A two-stroke swing in Stewart's favor on the 11th — the last hole they completed before play was halted — expanded the lead to three.

Perry, not yet a winner in three seasons on the PGA Tour, drove into the woods on the left, could not reach the green and made bogey.

Stewart, playing with him, dropped a 10-foot birdie putt and headed to the clubhouse.

"It was important to me to make birdie," Stewart said. "There's too far to go to be thinking about winning. I'm just glad to be leading."

Stewart and Perry, along with 16 others, marked their positions on the course and are scheduled to return at 9 a.m. EDT Sunday to complete the third round. The final round is scheduled for Sunday afternoon.

The day's play was delayed 3½ hours by heavy rains that flooded portions of the course, backed up the final starting time to 5:36 p.m. EDT and made it impossible to finish the round before darkness.

"It's kind of hard standing around waiting for a starting time after 5 o'clock," Perry said.

When play was called, the leaderboard showed these standings:

— Payne Stewart, 13-under par through 11 holes.

— Kenny Perry, 10-under par through 11 holes.

— Mark McCumber, 9-under par through 11 holes.

— Bernhard Langer, 7-under par through 14 holes.

— Tom Kite, 5-under par through 14 holes.

— Kenny Knox, 5 under par through 14 holes.

Player leads trio in rich Senior meet

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. (AP) — Gary Player has the lead. It's his confidence that's in question.

Player shot an even-par 72 for a one-stroke lead over Gene Littler, Don Bies and late-charging Bob Erickson after Saturday's third round of The Tradition, a new $800,000 tournament on the Senior PGA Tour.

Player, seeking his 13th career Seniors title but first since winning five times last year, has an 8-under 208 total heading into Sunday's final round for the $90,000 top prize.

"I don't ooze with confidence. I don't feel particularly excited about leading going into the last round," said Player, a 53-year-old South African who is the tour's No. 2 all-time money-winner with $2.92 million. "I finished 6-4-3-6. The two 6s (for bogeys) really hurt me."

Littler, a 10-time Seniors' champion who won this season's Aetna Challenge on Feb. 28, started the day tied for the lead with Player at 8-under but shot a 1-over 73 Saturday.

Erickson, a 63-year-old non-winner on the tour, is cautious about his chances Sunday.

"I'm not going to say I can win it. There are too many good players out there," he said. "I've led a few of these things after 36 holes — even some last year — and didn't win. I'm not too far from the leaders, but I'm just trying to hold on."

Soph pro fires 67 for lead

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Danielle Ammaccapane, one of the most promising young players on the LPGA tour, shot her best professional round Saturday, a 5-under-par 67 that vaulted her into a tie for the lead in the $450,000 Ai Star-Centinela Hospital Classic.

Ammaccapane, in her second year on the tour, was at 5-under-par 139 through 36 holes of the 54-hole tournament at Rancho Park golf course.

Sherri Turner, who topped the LPGA money list last year and included the LPGA Championship among her two titles, shot a second-round 68 to share the lead with Ammaccapane and Martha Nause.

Nause, runnerup to Patti Rizzo in last week's tournament at San Diego, shot a second-round 71 at El Rancho.

Nancy Lopez, who headed into the second round as one of three leaders after an opening 67, had a second-round 73 to slip a shot off the pace.

Another first-day leader, Susan Sanders, slipped another stroke behind with a 74 that left her at 141.

Colleen Walker, the third leader going into the second day, dropped back even more, with a 75 that left her six shots behind the second-day leaders.

Arkansas keeps SWC lead

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP) — Greg D'Alexander powered out a homer in each game as Arkansas swept Baylor 9-1 and 10-3 in a Southwest Conference doubleheader on Saturday.

Arkansas, alone at the top of the SWC, moves to 37-5 and 12-0 in league play. Baylor dropped to 31-13 and 6-9.

D'Alexander smashed a two-run homer in the first game to give Arkansas a 2-1 lead. In the nightcap, D'Alexander had a solo homer in the sixth that broke a 3-all tie and opened the game for the Razorbacks.

Baylor tried to shut Arkansas down early in the first game with a run in the first. Starter Jeff Kilgore kept Arkansas hitless until the fourth.

In the fourth, Troy Eklund tripled and scored on D'Alexander's homer. Greyson Liles singled, scoring Bubba Carpenter. Liles and Haden Etheridge went on to score on a Rod Stillwell single to center.

In the fifth, Arkansas scored four to bring the final margin to 9-1. Starter Dennis Fletcher moves to 7-1 and 4-0 in the league.

The Bears leaped to an early lead in the nightcap, with a first-inning score on an Arkansas error. The Razorbacks countered with an RBI single by Greg D'Alexander in the first.

Baylor went ahead in the fourth on an RBI single by Trent Weaver which scored Mike Robison. A double play got Arkansas starter Peter Raether out of the jam.

Arkansas tied it at 3 in the sixth after scoring two in the fourth on a wild pitch and an error. D'Alexander's homer opened an Arkansas lead with other runs coming in the seventh and eighth.

Raether moved to 4-0 and 2-0 with the victory. Phillip Stidham finished the ninth but did not earn a save. Baylor starter Glenn Nevill lasted 5 2-3 innings and dropped to 6-1 and 1-1 with the loss.

The Razorbacks host Northeastern Oklahoma on Wednesday.

Hush pink walls span into the vaulted ceiling in the sunken living area.

One for the Money

Decorated in a Southwestern decor and designed with a livable floor plan for a large family, this week's featured home is also very affordable. The four bedroom and three bath home has approximately 3,100 square feet. The home has been updated during the last few years and the kitchen was totally remodeled — with all new appliances — three years ago.

Fabric walls in a feather motif in soft hues of rose, blue and teal adorn the walls of the entrance hall. The formal dining room is situated to the right of the entrance and this spacious room can accommodate a living area at one end. French blue walls highlight this room and two shuttered windows provide a view of the front yard.

THE MEXICAN tile entry flows into the sunken living area. Hush pink walls help add to the Southwestern feel of this light and airy room which also has a vaulted ceiling. A white brick fireplace is the focal point of the room and sunlight streams through a wall of windows. A wet bar with glass shelves is located to the left of the fireplace and is convenient for serving guests when entertaining.

A step from the living area leads to the kitchen and breakfast room. Three years ago, the kitchen was enlarged and totally remodeled with new appliances and cabinets. The open floor plan of the kitchen and breakfast room is very appealing for families and a bay window in the breakfast room provides a view of the backyard — great for Moms when watching small children while playing outside.

A central work island is perfect for preparing peanut butter sandwiches for kids or a gourmet meal for guests. The appliances include a Jenn-aire double convection oven, a cooktop with grille, a White Westinghouse microwave, and a Whirlpool dishwasher and trash compactor. A built-in spice rack and many storage cabinets are the other features in the kitchen. The utility room and a huge storage closet are also situated off this area.

TO THE left of the kitchen, the children's bedrooms are situated. Two of the rooms have shuttered windows that overlook the front yard. The third bedroom is highlighted by a wallpaper in a square pattern with bright, primary colors. Each of these rooms have ceiling fans and walk-in closets with built-ins.

A hall bath is located in this wing of the home. The bath has a long vanity and a bathtub.

From the breakfast room, a hall leads into a sequestered room that is currently being used as a playroom for children. However, with a private bath with a shower, this room could serve as a fifth bedroom for an older child or perhaps an elderly parent. Built-in cabinets and shelves line one wall of the room, with built-in toy boxes along the opposite wall. Above the toy boxes, children's art work can be displayed on the cork wall. This room also has a door that leads into the backyard and a walk-in closet with built-in shelves.

THE MASTER suite of the home is situated to the left of the entrance. This is one of the most appealing areas in the home because a cozy sitting area, complete with a fireplace, is placed by a bay window at the far end of the room. A Mom would love to relax in this quiet room with a favorite book in the afternoon or late at night.

Any homeowner would be delighted by the arrangement of the master bath. Each bath is separated from the other one and has a dressing area with a private bathing area. One side has a bathtub and the other a built-in shower. A Southwestern wallpaper adorns the walls of each of the bathrooms which also has a large walk-in closet with built-in shelves.

Located in the Kimberlea subdivision, this home is being offered by Langston Realtors for $129,000.

McGill of Don Harvey, Realtors helps father-to-be in shopping for home

Sharon Spears, left, of Permian Interiors and Bonnie Cox of Action Realty look at wallpaper that was considered to update a home that recently went on the market. Due to the updating and remodeling, the home sold in 10 days for the asking price.

Updating home pays off for Realtor

By JILL HANCOCK
Advertising Feature Writer

In today's competitive real estate market, sometimes older homes need to be updated in order to compete with newer homes. For over six years, Bonnie Cox of Action Realty has enlisted the help of Sharon Spears an interior designer with Permian Interiors.

"Homeowners do not always realize that investing in a fresh coat of paint, new carpeting and updated wallpaper will help an older home to sell much quicker and usually for the asking price," explained Cox. "Sharon's expertise in this area is invaluable because she knows how to 'neutralize' a home, while being very cost conscious in doing so."

In the house that Spears recently updated for Action Realty, a bookcase and paneling was removed along one wall in the family room and a doorway was constructed into the formal dining or living room. "This remodeling was necessary to make this front room more accessible. It can now be used as a formal dining room or a second living area. The open flow between these room also helps to brighten the family room," stated Spears.

A pale wallpaper was added into the hall that begins at the front door and extends to the home's three bedrooms. Tract lighting was also added in the hall by the bedrooms. Two of the bedrooms had paneled and cork board walls. "In both of the bedrooms the paneling was removed and the walls were painted a light color," said Spears. "But in the master bedroom, we re-wallpapered the walls in a soft paper because it was more cost efficient instead of retexturing and painting the walls."

Spears also noted that new carpeting is always a big expense, but was necessary in this home due to the many colors of carpeting that were present. "We used a light taupe carpeting that will compliment any potential buyer's furniture. The carpeting really helped eliminate the 'hodge-podge' feeling that this home had."

The total cost of the remodeling on this home — doorway, removing paneling, paint, wallpaper and light fixtures — was approximately $6,400. "The remodeling enabled this house to sell for $8,000 to $10,000 more that it would have before. But more importantly, the home sold in only 10 days for the asking price!" concluded Cox.

Todd and Sharon Holt, both graduates of Texas Tech University, met when Todd was a senior at Tech and married soon thereafter. Todd was born in Plainview and grew up in Olton. Sharon was born and raised in Bryan.

Following their graduation from Texas Tech, Sharon took a position as a teacher in Lubbock and Todd accepted a position with Texas Employers Insurance Association there. But just when things seemed like they were settling down for them, Sharon found out she was expecting their first child. And soon after that, Todd was told by his company that they would be transferred to another city. His company eventually decided that new city would be Midland.

Todd assumed his new job in Midland last December while Sharon remained in Lubbock preparing for their new arrival. Todd originally planned to find a place for them to rent but eventually decided to explore the possibility of buying a home instead.

Todd called Don Havey, Realtors and became acquainted with sales associate Sanbdra McGill. And Todd then began looking at homes with Sandra. He looked at the home that was eventually to be the one they would buy early on. But not wanting to commit before he had "looked the market over," Sandra continued showing him homes.

Still in Lubbock, Sharon could only receive information "second-hand" through phone calls from Todd and Sandra and sometimes from pictures they sent her. Todd narrowed it down to three possibilities and in late December Sharon was able to make a quick trip to Midland for a look at the final choice.

When the home purchased closed, Todd as still in Midland by himself and really roughing it. "When I moved into the house," Todd said, "All I had was a mattress, box springs and a sleeping bag. Sandra added, "The only utensils he had were one pan, a can opener and some plastic glasses."

Their son, Jonathan, was born in Lubbock in January and a healthy mother and son were soon able to make the trip to Midland to join Todd in their new home.

In the final analysis, Todd must have selected well. Todd, Sharon, Jonathan and their two labrador retrievers, Daisy and Zorro, are firmly and cozily settled in their new home. They've even planted a garden with quite a variety of vegtables.

Todd and Sharon are very pleased with the friendliness of the Midlanders they've met so far and are looking forward to becoming more involved in the community and their hobbies here. Sharon wants to eventually re-enter teaching. Todd said he would eventually like to teach some vocational trade classes at night for one of the junior colleges on a part-time basis.

Todd's hobby is restoring antique vehicles and he's currently looking for a 1930s coup. Sharon's hobbies are art and, now, making baby clothes.

If any of our readers find themselves in a situation similar to Todd's — transferred and home finding without your spouse — let Don Harvey, Realtors know and maybe we can get Todd to pass along some helpful hints for you.

Sandra McGill, right, of Don Harvey, Realtors assisted Todd Holt in finding a new home for his family in December. Sharon Holt was unable to accompany her husband because she was waiting for the arrival of their son, Jonathan, in Lubbock.

Julie Dostal of Lanham's Nursery and Landscape Supply moves plants into the warmth of the greenhouse to protect them from freezing temperatures.

April: Don't be cruel

April is the cruelest month ...
— "The Waste Land," T.S. Eliot

Bob Lanham covers plants with plastic to insulate them from cool temperatures.

Just when you thought it was safe to plant some young seedlings in the garden, the weather suddenly snaps with another unseasonal cold spell. Midland gardeners have had an exceptionally rough year due to extreme temperature changes in just a matter of hours.

And because this season's temperature drops and leaps have been so drastic, it isn't just the gardeners who are suffering. with shrubs, trees and plants in their yard can see the damage caused by Midland's recent temperature swings.

Many shrubs and trees, which are usually hardy in Midland (especially evergreens), may have leaves which have withered and turned brown.

Curtis Schmid, manager and grower for Lanham's Nursery and Landscape Supply, said, "Although the winter was warm going into January, we had one day where the temperature dropped from around 60 degrees to 11 degrees."

SCHMID SAID the sudden drops in temperature are worse when the air is dry and there is no precipitation. This condition causes shock, which Schmid said "freezes the fluid or sap in the plants' tissues."

When the weather gets cold gradually, it allows plants to adapt to the changing temperatures. But sudden changes from hot to cold, which are not unusual in West Texas, are a shocking experience for plants.

To prevent shock Schmid suggests "watering plants thoroughly going into and coming out of a freeze to prevent dehydration."

Worse than no precipitation during a freeze, is a frost, according to Schmid. "Snow insulates the plants, but a frost dries out the leaves, causing them to turn brown."

Parties in both Midland and Dallas preceded the April 8 wedding of Patty O'Neill and Dr. Ike Loose at St. Ann's Catholic Church.

Patty is the daughter of longtime Midlanders, Mitzi and Byrne O'Neill, and Ike is the son of Rose and Tom Loose of Dallas.

The festivities began here in January with an engagement announcement party hosted by Jan and Bob Fitting at their home. In March, Patty came out from Dallas for a coffee given by Ann (Mrs. Bill) Kleine, Joy (Mrs. Bill) Seltzer, Karen (Mrs. Bill) Martin and Edna (Mrs. Mack) Hibbitts.

Wedding week events included a welcoming party for the out-of-town guests given by Mary and Joe O'Neill Jr. and Jan and Joey O'Neill III at the latter couple's home; a bridal luncheon given by Mary (Mrs. Henri) de Compiegne and her daughter, Anne (Mrs. Jim) Lutz of Indianapolis, Ind., in the de Compiegne home, and the rehearsal dinner given by the groom's parents at the Petroleum Club.

The wedding day started off with a brunch at the Plaza Club hosted by Evelyn and Payton Anderson, Bettie and Dow Hamm, Frances and Jack Matthews, Rosalind Redfern and Zuma and Charles Renaud.

A light supper was served to the wedding party before the ceremony by Frances and Sam Terry and Donna and Mark Martin.

The wedding reception was held at Midland Country Club.

A special guest here for the occasion was the groom's grandmother, Mrs. Nell Loose of Illiopolis, Ill.

MIDLAND HIGH SCHOOL senior Sheri Sport has been honored at two recent graduation parties.

Her grandmother, Elva Stoltenberg, and her aunt and uncle, Sue Anne and Dick Campbell, hosted an Italian dinner party in Midland Country Club's Garden Room.

The 30 guests were seated at tables decorated with balloon bouquets in apricot, forest green and silver.

A luncheon was given at La Bodega Restaurant by Marilyn (Mrs. Robert) Spears, Jeanne (Mrs. Bill) Worley, Linda (Mrs. Rodney) Satterwhite, Sarilyn (Mrs. Bill) Black, Sherry (Mrs. Jerry) Hewett and Dee (Mrs. Paul) Morris.

Balloon bouquets in bright fiesta colors decorated the tables, where places were marked for 25 guests.

The daughter of Lynne and Charles Ray, Sheri plans to attend Baylor University.

IN VISITING with Mable (Mrs. Dave) Hewnderson, we were interested to learn that her granddaughter, Laura Henderson, was recently initiated into Kappa Kappa Gamma social sorority at St. Lawrence University in Canton, N.Y.

Laura is the daughter of Don Henderson and the late Shereata Bush Henderson, both Midland High School graduates. Don is now studying at the University of the South in Sewanee, Tenn., to enter the Episcopal priesthood. His son, Matt, will graduate from Sewanee in May.

Surprising Laura by being present for her initiation was her aunt, Tennie Bush Hopkins of St. Louis, Mo. She and Shereata were Kappas at UT-Austin.

THE RACQUET CLUB was the setting for a luncheon honoring Kristen Henry, a graduating senior at Midland High School and the daughter of Janice and Dr. Bobby Henry.

Hostesses were Lynda (Mrs. Carty) Beal and daughters, Cristina, Helana and Lauren, and Gayle (Mrs. Doc) Dodson and daughters, Kelly and Jamie.

An Easter theme was featured in the decorations. Guests included the honoree's mother, her sister, Carrie, and Meredith Secker, Mandy Thorpe, Cally Hunt, Kristine Kelly, Erika Cummings, Laura Soleher, Tammy Orseth and Heather Fergeson.

Kristen plans to attend the University of Texas-Austin.

BETTY AND CLARK MATTHEWS had as house guests recently their granddaughter, Pam Koenig, and her husband, Henry of Richardson. Pam is the daughter of former Midlanders Janice and Clark Matthews II of Dallas.

The men enjoyed golfing together, and Henry was fascinated with his first visit to the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum, Library and Hall of Fame.

THE 1989 Royal Court of the Waco Cotton Palace Pageant will include a young Midland man, as well as the grandchildren of two Midlanders.

Jeff LaForce, son of Patti and Watson LaForce Jr. and grandson of Laulie (Mrs. W.W.) LaForce, will be an escort to the royal court. He is a senior at Midland High School.

Kelly Barton, daughter of Barbara and Dr. Fritz Barton Jr. of Dallas and granddaughter of Annie Laurie (Mrs. A.L.) Attaway, will be presented as a Duchess of the Cotton Bowl. She is a senior at Highland Park High School.

Sloan Teeple, son of Mary and Charles Teeple of Austin and grandson of Ibby (Mrs. Thornton) Hardie, also will be an escort to the royal court. He is a senior at Austin High School.

The pageant on April 28 opens the Brazos River Festival, scheduled for April 29-30 and sponsored by Historic Waco Foundation to raise funds for the preservation of the city's places of historic and architectural interest.

This year's revival of the Texas Cotton Palace, a full-scale exposition founded in Waco in 1894, will feature a court of 72 young people representing cities from throughout Texas and several other states.

APRIL

Other than watering plants before and after a freeze, Schmid suggests covering them up with a sheet, plastic or newspaper for warmth and insulation.

Although many gardeners hope that the cold temperatures experienced in Midland this past week will be the last this season, Schmid said that according to weather reports, there may be one more cold spell.

Tom Manning, owner of Manning's Garden Center, said the record date for a late freeze in Midland is April 28. "I think it's relatively safe to go ahead and plant now," Manning said. "I've been recommending that customers plant new plants in pots. That way they can be moved to a warmer place at a moment's notice. Periwinkles and caladium bulbs are real sensitive to the cold and are better off planted in pots until we have consistently warm weather."

Manning said that although many shrubs and trees may appear to be dead, they should be given time to produce new growth, and not given up as lost right away.

R.H. Davis, owner of Davis Garden Center and Landscaping, said problems with shrubs and trees started in January. "It was too warm in early January, then we had three hard freezes after that. It makes it difficult for new plants in the tender stage to survive," he said.

Warm days and cool nights also encourage the proliferation of fungi, especially powdery mildew. In its early stages, powdery mildew may appear as white, feltlike spots, or as a thin, frosty coating on leaves and fruit, or as a slight darkening and curling of leaf edges. Its spread can be slowed with applications of a fungicide such as a sulfur spray. If unchecked, it will eventually spoil the appearance of the entire plant.

Davis said Dallas had freezing temperatures Monday night, so Midlanders may not be safe from a final frost, yet. He said that many plants which are crisp and brittle may appear to be dead. Even though some shrubs and trees may have lost their leaves or only have brown, brittle leaves, Davis said, "Cut them back as far as you can: Give them a few weeks to show new growth." Davis said even well-established trees and shrubs have done poorly this season, but even if the plants look disastrous, gardeners "shouldn't give up hope."

Gardeners are advised to wait until after the last freeze to begin planting flowers and plants sensitive to cold. The problem is in second-guessing Mother Nature and knowing just when any freeze is the final one.

In fact, Lanham's Nursery and Landscape is offering a $100 gift certificate to the customer who guesses the date of the last final freeze this year.

Even though all the spokespersons at local garden centers contacted agreed that it should be safe to plant now, and that our last freeze is probably behind us, Coby Farrow, greenhouse manager for La Casa Verde Garden Center, said, "No one can predict Mother Nature."

Etiquette needed for eating in office

Copley News Service

For the sake of co-workers, don't eat smelly foods at your desk.

That's the word from Florida etiquette consultant Audrey Kardon, who says dining at your office desk is fine if you remember certain rules. For example, use proper table manners — chew with your mouth closed, use napkins and don't talk on the telephone while eating.

And never eat in front of anyone who isn't eating. Meanwhile, Kardon has office dining-in rules, for eating with a client, as well. For instance, always serve your guest first.

Dream backyard beyond fence

By ROGER M. SHOWLEY
Copley News Service

CNS Graphic

Somewhere over the fence is the ultimate backyard.

It has self-mowing grass and a leakless sprinkling system.

In droughts, the lawn goes into hibernation, retaining its greenness indefinitely.

The soil is treated with an all-purpose, child-proof, guaranteed-to-have-absolutely-no-side-effects insecticide and fertilizer. Any bug that dares enter is instantly pulverized and turned into rabbit pellets.

Somewhere in a corner is a computer graphics video screen. Select a list of plants, indicate where they should be planted and next day the selection is automatically planted by Mr. Gard-N-Er, a solar-powered R2D2 robot.

No more notations on the calendar for planting tomatoes in May or squash in November.

And, best of all, weeds are as foreign as rain in Camelot.

The ultimate yard has a multilevel deck operated by a system of hydraulic lifts that change the levels as the mood — and sun angle — warrants. The redwood never needs staining, and curious termites are zapped by laser beams.

To enjoy this back yard, you don't need to lift a finger.

One clap of the hands unfurls a hammock that resists fading and raveling. Two claps exposes a subterranean spa, where the water never needs chlorination and a special vapor recovery system sucks in the steam and recycles it. Three claps reveals a 5-meter lap pool with a wave-making machine for surfing on or swimming against.

In one corner of the yard is a lovely fountain, powered by a perpetual pump.

In another is children's play equipment. An airbaglike contraption is activated the moment Junior takes a fall. Splinters and sharp edges are a thing of the past.

The barbecue is a self-cleaning, clean-fuel-burning, char-proof grill that delivers my steak, shish kebab and drumstick with a minimum of fat and a maximum of flavor.

The outdoor entertainment center includes a stereo system that plays the Top 40 at 80 decibels — but the neighbors can't hear a thing.

THERE IS A refrigerator always stocked with strawberry daiquiris and beer, just as they do in hotels. The outdoor furniture is equipped with tiny jets that spray-clean the evening dew. Birds are welcomed, but an invisible force shield repels their droppings.

While this vision of the ultimate yard is extreme, most home owners have their own dream of the perfect yard. Project after project, year after year, they whittle away at the imperfections to create their dream space.

There are two basic approaches — one for the newly built home where no trees, fences, grass or pergolas have been installed, and one for the older home, where the existing design needs some revitalization.

In complicated projects, experts recommend hiring a landscape architect, who can lay out a master plan for the yard. For many people, the services of a licensed landscape contractor are an appropriate choice.

In either case, be prepared to spend some money. You are probably not going to get a new yard for peanuts.

Of course, you can also do it yourself.

There are plenty of experts at local nurseries and home-improvement stores who can advise you on what rust-free nails to use on the deck or what flowers must be shaded. There are a variety of magazines and books available on the subject, and you can always ask the folks down the street to share their successes and horror stories.

The desires of the individual homeowner dramatically affect the cost of a project. Landscaping contractor Jerry Remmers cites two cases in the same housing subdivision to illustrate the point.

"One person wanted an instant forest as soon as he moved into his new unit. So, $17,800 later, we'd put in as many of the largest trees we could find," he said. In an identical yard in the same subdivision, Remmers said the bill was only $7,500 because more space was devoted to grass and smaller, less expensive shrubs were planted.

While many home owners start out wanting a deck outside the back door, Remmers said the cost can run upward of $10 per square foot. Cheaper alternatives are concrete (between $2.50 and $4.50 per square foot) and brick (around $6 and $8 per square foot).

IN ONE CASE, he said, a project would have cost $5,300, except that access was difficult. Because heavy equipment could not be used, all materials had to be moved by hand. The cost climbed to $10,000.

Remmers said landscape contractors usually charge the cost of labor and materials plus 15 percent.

Special expertise is needed if the decision is made to build a backyard pool. Most experts recommended that home owners seek two or three bids from reputable contractors before installing a pool.

Some new features available cost more but save on operational expenses. One device turns rock salt into chlorine at a cost $1 per month. Combined with an automatic pool-cleaning machine, owners can cut $75 off the usual $85 to $100 monthly cost of a pool maintenance service and materials.

Lawn care controversial

By PATRICK DENTON
Copley News Service

There is no feature of the home garden that receives more universal attention than the lawn. There is also no other part of the home garden whose care is more currently controversial.

It's only natural to value highly the beauty and usefulness of a lush, rich carpet of green framing with elegance our home and ornamental plantings. Still the strong, aesthetic appeal of a perfect lawn can carry with it a fairly steep price in terms of money, labor and environmental costs.

TRADITIONAL LAWN care encompasses spring, summer and autumn feedings with chemically treated fertilizers, along with treatments of the turf with weed killers, fungicides and insecticides, as needed. Then there are frequent mowings, usually with power equipment, and regular watering to keep the lawn impeccably gorgeous. All this adds up to a labor-intensive care program that uses substantial amounts of energy and natural resources.

Now a growing concern over the effects of this intensive chemical-based lawn-care tradition on soil and groundwater quality and on human health, is calling forth some interesting alternatives that are worthwhile considering.

To cut expenditures in time, money and environmental damage, some home gardeners are reducing the size of their lawns and are replacing the removed grass with shrubs or low-maintenance ground covers. Others are actively exploring alternative methods for managing a lawn.

What is emerging is a whole new approach to caring for a lawn that focuses on the feeding and nurturing of the soil and soil life so that these in turn can nurture a more naturally healthy and self-sustaining lawn. Proponents of this new-wave lawn care hold that bombarding lawn and soil with chemicals harms and limits microbial and other life in the soil, reducing that soil to a nearly lifeless medium almost entirely dependent upon further chemical inputs to sustain any growth at all.

COMPACTION, POOR root growth, thatch build-up, weeds and diseases — all these inevitable companions to a biologically inactive soil — demand yet further chemical treatments and expenditures of energy directed toward these symptoms.

Ways of getting off this chemical treadmill while still maintaining a healthy, pleasing lawn are subjects I see explored increasingly, not only in home gardening magazines and articles but also in landscaping journals. The garden industry has begun to respond to the demand for more life-sustaining types of lawn management programs, and we will no doubt be seeing products reflecting that response more commonly available.

The aim of the new long-term lawn-care programs is to treat the root causes of lawn problems rather than to "quick fix" them. This means feeding and nurturing the soil so that its texture is healthy and it is abundantly supplied with living creatures like earthworms and beneficial microbes, which keep the soil actively working as they quietly convert thatch and other organic materials into useful nutrients for lawn grasses.

Such an alternative lawn-care program would involve top-dressing the lawn yearly with some high-quality homemade or commercial compost or compost manure, and fertilizing with natural, slow-release materials such as seed, blood or fish meal for nitrogen, rock phosphate or bone meal for phosphorus; greensand or kelp meal for potassium.

I also have seen it suggested to water or spray the lawn at least once, in early spring, with a liquid seaweed fertilizer solution, whose many trace nutrients work to strengthen the grass plants generally and specifically against diseases. This is a practice already common among home gardeners with organic tendencies as part of the routine care of their fruit trees.

Other ecologically wholesome tips for long-term lawn care include watering infrequently but deeply to encourage deep-delving root systems on the grass plants, and mowing high and often to discourage weed growth and to feed soil organisms with a regular diet of short, easily digested grass tips.

Collectors caught in web of heirloom lace

By LINDA ROSENKRANTZ
Copley News Service

The word "lace" is surely among the most evocative in the English language.

Reaching far beyond the dictionary definition of "an ornamental openwork fabric," it suggest a delicate, elegant sensibility — a factor to which growing numbers of collectors in the category actively respond.

As any reader of society page accounts of weddings will know, there is an immense variety of styles and patterns, from Alencon to Vincennes to Venetian. There is a rich, anecdote-filled tradition of lace making, dating back to the early dynasties of ancient Egypt and depicted in exquisite detail in the portraits of Renaissance Italy.

In 16th to 18th century Europe, lace was a prized commodity, seen as a status symbol (and worn by aristocratic men as well as women) and widely used in churches, and was an economic force as well, as a unit of trade and as a major cottage industry in many communities.

The evolution of stylistic trends is also evident in lace. In the 16th century, there was an emphasis on geometric motifs, the 17th century saw the introduction of foliated scrolls with no backgrounds, while the next century saw both stylized and naturalistic floral forms, the development of mesh backgrounds and elaborate ornamental stitches, and the 19th century brought the introduction of machine net.

One way to classify lace is by method of construction. The four major groups are the looping method, which includes knitting, crochet and hairpin lace; knotting or tying two or more threads together, as in macrame netting, tatting and waffle work; crossing, or passing threads over and under by twisting, braiding and weaving, as in bobbin lace and, finally, needlework, meaning making stitches with a threaded needle, as in Battenberg and Tenerife lace.

There are also some strange but fascinating novelties in the history of lace, such as the caterpillar lace made in Munich. In this case, not only did the webs of insects provide inspiration, but the insects themselves were put to work in the production of man-made lace.

A flat surface would be covered with an edible paste, over which a design was traced in oil. The caterpillars would eat the paste but avoid the oiled areas as they spun their silky threads.

An interesting new book on this subject, "Legacy of Lace: Identfying, Collecting and Preserving American Lace" by Kathleen Warnick and Shirley Nilsson (Crown Publishers, New York, 192 pages, $24.95), provides a wealth of information and visual examples of American lace available to the collector.

Over 300 photographs succeed in describing a subject often too intricate to be fully explained with words. The history of lace the book offers encompasses the socioeconomic factors relevant to its manufacture and each subcategory treated, such as Needle Lace (a "stitches in air" lace made on a framework of threads rather than on fabric) is given a broad characterization, followed by details of construction and distinctive features.

A key factor in the collection of fragile lacework is its care and preservation and here the authors are particularly strong, offering copious advice on stabilizing fabrics, cleaning, repairing and restoring, storage and display.

This set of crystal stemware includes nine different styles from Cristalleries de Saint-Louis, ranging from water goblet to brandy snifter.

Stemware, wedding intrinsically linked

By BARBARA MAYER
Associated Press

Crystal stemware and weddings are intrinsically linked, whether in festive table settings or in wedding gifts. However, selecting the right stemware from the many sizes and shapes available can seem complicated.

Typically, a manufacturer might offer as many as nine different kinds of stemware in each of its patterns. They are (in descending order of size) the water goblet, burgundy, white wine, hock, sherry and cordial. In addition, the champagne flute or saucer-shaped champagne coupe and the brandy snifter are often also part of the set.

Only three sizes are necessary to complete a basic stemware place setting: a water goblet, an all-purpose wine glass and a champagne flute.

Nice additions to the basic three are the cordial glass and the brandy snifter. Since these latter two normally are used after the meal, they do not have to match the principal stemware pattern.

Don't think of the norms as rules, however, says Barbara Tober, editor of Bride's magazine, because almost any glass can be used for any occasion. She offers these guidelines: for maximum enjoyment of wine, choose a glass with a clear bowl generous enough to hold at last four ounces of wine. Select a gracefully-shaped glass to present a pleasing appearance on the table, that is comfortable to hold.

The key to getting maximum enjoyment from your crystal, however many pieces you may have, is to use it for a variety of beverages and food. For example, Claude Loisel, president of Cristalleries de Saint-Louis, says the water goblet can also be used for iced tea, soda and juice. It can even hold red wine, if a very large glass is desired.

Wine glasses are the most diverse of all crystal, since they vary in size and shape according to the type of wine to be served. When only one size is purchased, normally it will be the burgundy glass which can be used for red and white wines.

A purist (or one with a larger budget and bigger crystal cabinet) may choose two wine glasses: the burgundy and white wine.

The former is usually large enough to be filled only a third full to allow room for swirling the wine to enjoy its full flavor. The white wine glass typically has a smaller bowl and taller stem. The extended stem prevents the warmth of one's hand from reaching the wine and thereby destroying its crisp flavor.

The champagne glass is particularly useful, since champagne figures prominently at life's celebrations. Nowadays, the saucer-shaped bowl that used to be popular has been superseded by the flute (known as a tulip when the rim curves slightly inward). The elongated shape and narrow mouth prevent champagne bubbles from dissipating too rapidly.

Besides these essentials, other sizes are nice to have if you've got the inclination. Cordial glasses are characterized by small bowls and short stems. Brandy snifters, also known as balloon glasses, have wide bottomed bowls that narrow to a slightly inverted rim on a short stem. They are made to cradle in the hands so that the brandy within may be warmed and swirled to release its bouquet. Snifters are usually unornamented.

If you enjoy the fruity light wines of the Rhine, you may want to own hock glasses, which have elongated stems and, often, colored bowls. Another specialized wine glass is the sherry which can be used to serve madeira and port, as well. The long stem on this glass is to channel the pungent scent of the wine to the nostrils.

Alice Kolator, of Lenox China and Crystal, advises taking the dinnerware into consideration when choosing the crystal pattern. Look at the two patterns in a place setting to make sure they complement each other, she suggests.

The slightest trace of soap left in a glass will ruin a sparkling beverage because it will dissolve the bubbles. So rinse glasses thoroughly to remove any soap residue, says Ms. Kolator.

Spontaneous weekend rejuvenates couple

By PAMELA STERN SATRAN
Copley News Service

On the eve of our fifth anniversary, my husband and I got on the phone to find out where we could go that would be cheap, warm, exotic and accessible, say, the next day. Our planned trip to Barbados had fallen through at the last minute (erroneous information from the airlines on passport requirements), but we had a baby sitter in place for five days and we were determined to go somewhere, anywhere, for some rest and togetherness.

The only possible option — Puerto Rico — was not thrilling, but it fit all our requirements. We departed, hoping for, at best, a little sun. We returned feeling 10 years younger.

I don't credit Puerto Rico, in itself, for our rejuvenation. What made us feel like college sweethearts rather then overburdened working parents was taking off for parts unknown on the spur of the moment, renting a car and — map in hand — driving around the island as the spirit moved us.

Flying off on a spontaneous romantic adventure is something I had long fantasized about, but like most people — especially people with jobs, houses, children, responsibilities — had never acted upon. And if we hadn't been forced into the situation, we wouldn't have acted upon it this time, either. A vacation alone together was too precious and luxury money too short to gamble with.

On the plane we were nervous. What if we couldn't find a hotel room? What if the entire island was a pit? What if we ran out of money or our money was stolen? We hadn't been in such uncharted territory since our daughter was born, and it didn't feel comfortable.

The first happy surprise was the rental car — a Toyota for $20 per day — and the second was the airport bank that provided us with a cash advance on our credit card (my husband had signed the travelers' checks on the wrong line; another story). We pointed the car east and hoped for the best.

Our first stop was famous Loquillo Beach, which in many ways confirmed our darkest fears. The parador (government-sponsored guest house) where we stopped was noisy and uncomfortable, the town was a fortress of Dobermans and chain-link fences, the weather was overcast and the beach was spookily deserted. The water, however, was clear and warm, and we felt relieved just to have arrived.

The second day we had planned to head straight back to San Juan but the owner of the cafe where we stopped for morning coffee advised us to make a detour around the eastern tip of the island to avoid the rush-hour traffic. As we got further from San Juan, the scenery became more beautiful and towns more rural, and we decided to drive south along the coast and then head west along the southern side of the island — despite a void of any landmarks on our map or hotels in our guidebook.

In the middle of nowhere we found a wonderful hotel, nearly deserted, right on the ocean. There was no restaurant for miles around, but the rooms came equipped with refrigerators and the beach with barbeque pits. We spent the day lying in hammocks, drinking homemade pina coladas and cooking our own burgers for dinner. To check up on our daughter back in New York, we had to drive 10 miles to a roadside pay phone.

Emboldened (not to mention relaxed) by this experience, we headed to the southwest tip of the island the next day, where we stayed at Villa Parguera, another parador where $37 a night bought a water-view room, a swimming pool and access to the phosphorescent bay. We dined on lobster and hired a fisherman to motor us out to a swimming and snorkeling island.

We returned to San Juan late in the afternoon of our last day. The one place where we'd called ahead for hotel reservations, the single place where everything was safe, predictable — and, after the success of our adventure — boring. It cushioned the reality awaiting us back home, however. If it was easier than we thought to drop 10 years in four days, it was tougher to take them back on.

Dishonesty is best policy for divorcees

Copley News Service

Go ahead, lie a little. Dishonesty is the best policy when it comes to divorce. According to psychologist Janice Gray, people generally have distorted perceptions of their breakups and the role they play in them.

In her study of 45 former couples, almost all 90 of the ex-spouses saw themselves as less responsible for their divorces than their former mates perceived them to be. The distortion mechanism seems to be a necessary part of developing and maintaining a separate status. Gray says those who evaluated themselves as either total victims or villains experienced the most regret, distress and preoccupation with thoughts of the breakup.

AT WIT'S END

There'll be hell to pay in heaven for not recalling names

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

My husband and I watched an old movie the other night with a poignant farewell scene in it. "Imagine," said the man on his deathbed, "I'll soon be living with all the great presidents and statesmen of our time. I'll have the same address as movie stars and astronauts. All my sports heroes will be there. I'll be among friends."

As the credits rolled by, I wiped a tear from my cheek and said to my husband: 'Do you think that's really the way it is? You get to heaven and all the people you admired in your lifetime will be there? Can't you see me running up to Amelia Earhart or Fanny Brice or Montgomery ... oh, you know his name."

"General Montgomery?"

"Why would I run up to General Montgomery? I'm talking about the good-looking man who played opposite Elizabeth Taylor."

"Richard Burton."

"I'm not going to talk to you anymore if you don't make sense. Does his name begin with Montgomery? Think! He was in a movie once with Jimmy Dean."

"The guy who makes sausages?"

"No, no, the one who played with Marlon Whatshisname."

"Perkins."

"Marlin Perkins! I haven't thought about him in ages. Who was the guy who always wrestled the crocodiles while Marlin was selling insurance in the tent nearby?"

"Jim something or other. Give me a minute."

"Now you've got me off the subject. What was my question?"

"I don't remember."

We sat there for a while, and then I said, "Do you suppose they wear name tags?"

"Who?"

"All those people walking around heaven."

"Sure," he said, "like, 'Hi, I'm Abe Lincoln from Illinois.'"

"I'm serious. What if I'm talking to Humphrey Bogart and my cousin comes up ... you know, the one who married the guy whose name I never remember? Or what if William Shakespeare shaved off his beard and I don't know him? I CAN'T DIE. MY MEMORY'S SHOT!"

"Maybe it all comes back, like hair," he said absently. "Probably no one in heaven is bald either."

"I'll never recognize Gandhi," I groused. "It's probably just one big Jeopardy game in the sky where all day long you struggle to remember names."

"Then why do they call it heaven?" he said.

"Aggressive travel agent?" I ventured.

He brightened. "Clift ... Montgomery Clift, that's who you were thinking about."

I clutched his arm gratefully. "You know what this means, don't you? We go together ... or we don't go at all."

New Yorkers watering restricted

Spring drought threatens gardens in East

New York Times News Service

The drought that has come with spring threatens May's flowers. New York City has declared a water emergency and ordered strong curbs on water use. Many other parts of the East are also rationing water.

What can gardeners do? For one thing, try to think of beige as a pleasant color for lawns. Restrictions on watering will turn lawns brown because they require at least one inch of water each week — about 62 gallons of water per 100 square feet of lawn area.

IF YOU CANNOT accept brown grass as a thing of beauty, at least be consoled by the fact that the roots underground are alive.

Grass is a survivor and its roots grow deep. The less water near the surface, the deeper the roots reach; in a normal growing season, they may be six to eight inches deep. Lack of moisture may send them down to a foot to get what water they can.

There are two essentials for lawn care:

First, go easy on applications of fertilizer. If a heavy rainstorm is predicted, fertilizer can be applied before so the chemicals can be soaked into the soil.

WITHOUT RAINFALL, the chemicals just sit on the surface and may even burn the grass. If in doubt, leave the grass alone.

This also applies to starting a new lawn; it is best to wait until fall to plant seed or lay sod.

Second, mow high. Spring rains, even if they do not end the drought, will cause some sections of the lawn to turn green. These areas should be cut no lower than two inches. A high cut encourages deep roots and deep roots mean strong grass — all the better to survive a dry spell.

Chances are good that an established lawn will turn green again when normal rainfall returns.

Lawns with the highest percentage of fescue grasses will survive best; the weakest lawns will be those with a predominance of bluegrasses, a thirsty species that requires large quantities of water to stay green.

Mulches are an effective way to conserve soil moisture. These organic coverings on the surface of cultivated ground reduce evaporation, keep roots cool and discourage weed growth.

Mulches can be applied any time around established plants like shrubs, or they can be spread after setting plants out.

But before applying mulches, lightly cultivate the soil to remove weeds and to loosen the ground. Then apply the mulch two to four inches thick.

THE BEST MULCH is the least expensive; save your coffee grounds and spread them thinly around azaleas, rhododendrons and laurels.

Or if you have your trees pruned, ask the arborist to pile the chippings and then spread them around shrubs.

Garden-supply centers sell 50-pound bags of wood chips or bark chips in different grades, or you can obtain lightweight buckwheat hulls. Or perhaps use leaves that have been put through a mechanical chipper, or partly decomposed compost.

Finished compost should be worked into the soil.

Avoid using peat moss; it looks pretty after it is applied but absorbs moisture and becomes a dusty nuisance when it dries.

Although watering restrictions have been imposed for lawns, the garden does not have to be completely dry. Set priorities about which plants should be watered.

For some families, the vegetable garden will come first. The thirstiest will be shallow-rooted leafy crops like lettuce, spinach and chard, which can be planted any time as long as the soil can be worked. Their roots will be only about a foot deep and they will need about an inch of water a week to grow, even with mulches.

Tomatoes, melons, peppers and squash have deeper root systems — up to three feet — and can survive with less water. The critical time to water them will be between flowering and fruit formation.

PERENNIALS, shrubs and trees have deep root systems, too, and can survive on less water.

The plants that demand more water are the showy annuals with thin leaves, particularly impatiens, coleus, petunias and ageratum. Because of the current restrictions, these may be the plants to avoid.

More durable showy plants like geraniums, portulaca, strawflowers, ornamental grasses, gazanias and any of the sedums may be the ones to consider.

Where will the extra water come from? You'll have to save it.

One of the best sources is cooking water, which can be saved in a big bucket kept near the kitchen. Three gallons a week should be enough to keep each perennial and shrub alive.

IF YOU HAVE a dehumidifier, collect the water to use in the garden.

Much has been said about using "gray water," or water that has been used for showers, dishwashing and laundry. There is always a question about whether the dissolved cleaning agents and bleaches are harmful to plants. If water from the rinse cycle can be collected, this is by far the better choice.

Consider lawn care alternatives

Hearst News Service

MIDLAND, Mich. — Forget the calendar. Ignore the snow. Cold nights? So what? Spring is here!

It has to be spring — the lawn care companies are on the phone, soliciting business and promising images of horticultural paradise where dandelions and crabgrass are banished and only thick lawns and wholesome trees prevail.

After last summer's drought, tt's true that lawns, trees and shrubs everywhere are weak. And to think that a lawn service company can fix it for a few hundred dollars is enticing.

Should you resist? Should you invest in their services? Do they know what they're doing? The answers are not clear-cut. Consider these points when making an evaluation:

■ Things are seldom as bad as the phone solicitor or on-site inspection indicate. You probably have perennial weeds and zillions of crabgrass seeds anxious to sprout, and maybe mite or aphid damage on the yews. But chances are excellent that do-it-yourself care can eradicate these and other problems quickly and inexpensively. And there's plenty of sound, free advice at local nurseries.

■ You pay dearly for the convenience of their service. Results from a $200, four-application professional program by one of the national companies can be duplicated (although they will argue this point) for about $50 in materials and your own sweat. But only you can decide the value of your time and the satisfaction gained or agony endured by doing it yourself.

■ It's a cooperative effort. The service company will recommend certain mowing heights, watering schedules and so forth. The best results come when their instructions are followed. When weeds threaten or insects appear, in spite of treatments, it is your responsibility to alert the service company of the problem. It is their responsibility to respond before the problem worsens.

■ The national companies hire truly fine horticultural experts to develop lawn and landscape care programs. Their know-how is current and unmatched, but often the results on the local level are not good. There are several possible explanations.

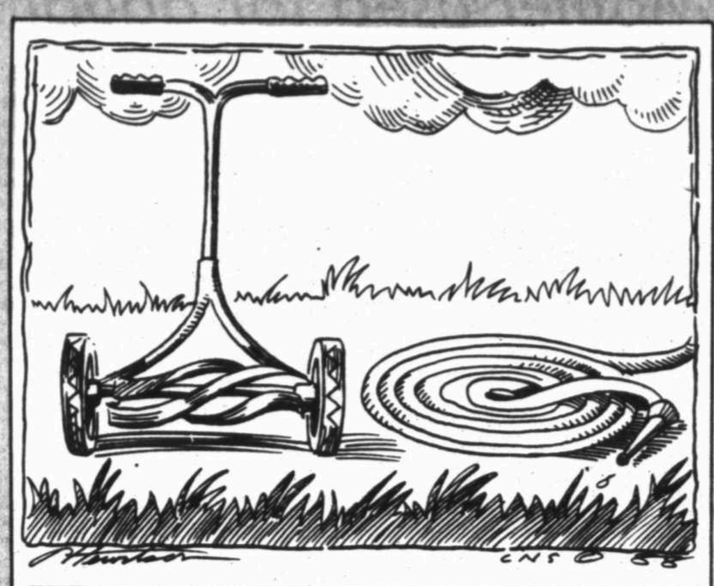
One is the customer doesn't give the company enough time to make a real difference. Anyone can get a lawn to green up quickly with a shot of fertilizer. But it takes sustained effort to eradicate weeds, fight off insects and disease and create a good growing environment that will cause grass to thicken naturally. A service needs at least one growing season, especially with a weak or mediocre lawn.

Another reason may be unreasonable expectations. Some lawns cannot be significantly improved because of the type of grass, soil structure, traffic pattern, indifference to mowing and watering and excess shade. Neither a professional service nor do-it-yourselfer will have lasting luck with such a lawn.

Too often, professional work is done when no one is home, so proper follow-up care is not explained to the homeowner. Instructions should detail what mowing, bagging, watering or restrictions are needed.

Ornamental grasses replace lawns

By ALLEN LACY
New York Times News Service



New-Wave Lawn Care

- Nurture the soil instead of treating lawn problems with chemical quick fixes.
- Top dress annually with compost.
- Fertilize annually with natural nutrients, such as rock phosphate, fish and kelp meal.
- Spray with liquid seaweed fertilizer.

CNS Graphic

Only now, after several months of magnificence, are the tall ornamental grasses in my garden becoming a sorry sight. It is their season of collapse and meltdown.

Nonetheless, unlike lawns, there are ornamental grasses which add beauty to the yard year-round. In fact, some people are digging up large sections of their lawns and replacing them with ornamental grasses for less maintenance.

The seed plumes of the miscanthus and Ravenna grass that stood up to the worst that the winds of January could offer by late February lie broken on the ground; the foliage also has a battered and weary look.

The time has come for the first chore that signals the near approach of summer: cutting back these grasses a few weeks before the fresh new growth sprouts any day now.

Two little ornamental grasses (technically sedges), however, remain beautiful throughout the year, and especially now, when little else competes for the gardener's attention.

One, which is fairly common, is Carex morrowii variegata.

A native of Japan, it is a little round mop of swirling golden foliage edged in green. It should be planted, I think, in a part of the garden where it can be seen every day, for it somehow asks to be visited.

I have mine next to the driveway, so I can pay my respects to it mornings when I go to work and late afternoons when I return. It is especially lovely when there has been a freezing rain, and the leaves are encased in glistening ice.

The other sedge, Carex buchananii, has a much more subtle beauty: so subtle, in fact, that I almost dug it up last summer and hauled it to the compost heap.

It came as a gift with a shipment of perennials from a mail-order nursery early last spring. Its leaves were a coppery shade of palomino, and I waited and waited for new green shoots to appear. They never did, and in late June, when a friend who is a demon gardener came visiting, I mentioned my intention to throw it away since it was so obviously dead.

"That's the way it's supposed to look," she said. "Look more closely and you'll see. It's alive, and it also happens to be a really wonderful plant."

I was dubious, but nevertheless looked more closely. I also felt the leaves. They were plump and resilient with life, not wizened and dry as they would have been if this Carex had been a goner.

It was alive, yes, but I wasn't so sure about its being really wonderful. What good is there in a plant that looks dead? This Carex inspired in me no affection whatsoever, especially against the background of a mulch of salt hay.

My friend suggested that when autumn arrived I should transplant it to a new location where it would get winter morning light. She added that she thought it would be fine in a bed near a sidewalk, where there was an evergreen cover of creeping golden-moss sedum to offer a contrast of color.

This Carex turns out to be everything my friend claimed, once I rid myself of the prejudice that basic brown is not the right color for a grasslike plant. It grows upright to about a foot high, then weeps down from the top, like a little fountain. The winter color is a strange metallic shade of beige, with an overlay of garnet and cranberry. In the morning light, it fairly gleams, as if waxed and polished.

Both of these Carexes are so highly satisfactory that I want to explore the genus further.

The Bluemel nursery's address is 2740 Green Lane, Baldwin, Md. 21013. The catalogue costs $2.

DEAR ABBY

Mother used for daughter's affair

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My daughter and her husband have come to visit for two weeks. They live in a distant state and have been married for two years.

They have been here for five days. During this time, my daughter has gone out with a former boyfriend three evenings — once from 9 p.m. until 4 a.m., the next two times from about 3 p.m. until 1 a.m.

My son-in-law is aware of this and doesn't seem troubled by it, which leads me to believe that they have some kind of an arrangement. He has also gone out — I don't know where or with whom, but he always gets in early.

I recognize that they are adults, but it bothers me. I can't stop my daughter from "seeing" anyone, but this doesn't seem proper, and I wonder what my legitimate rights are. Is it reasonable to expect her not to spend most of her time with an old boyfriend?

Perhaps they are just friends, but even if that's the case, it seems that she came here for room and board, brought her husband along for the trip, and she's doing what she wants to do — which is seeing her old boyfriend.

Should I speak to her about it? I don't want to jeopardize our relationship. Am I being an old-fashioned mother? Should I just keep quiet and stay out of it? What do other mothers of adult children do in a case like this? Am I reacting normally? — UNEASY MOTHER

DEAR MOTHER: You are reacting normally. Since you resent your daughter's using your home for room and board while she's spending most of her time seeing her old boyfriend, you have every right to speak to her about it. You are not "old-fashioned" — your daughter's behavior is inappropriate for a married woman.

DEAR ABBY: I have a question I hope you can answer. Unfortunately, two of the people my husband worked with, and the spouse of another co-worker, suddenly died in the last six months.

I did not attend any of their funerals because although I knew who they were, none of them were personal friends of mine. Also, I have a job, and I would have to justify missing work to attend these funerals.

My husband thought I should have gone to those funerals with him. Abby, what is the proper procedure on this? I'm sure other people would also like to know, but if you use this in your column, please don't use my name or location. Sign me ... NEEDS TO KNOW

DEAR NEEDS: Did your husband leave the decision up to you at the time of the funerals? Or did he ASK you to accompany him?

If he asked you to accompany him, I think you should have been by his side whether or not his co-workers were personal friends of yours.

Also, in my view, accompanying one's spouse to a funeral is legitimate justification for missing work.

DEAR ABBY: You wrote: "Confidential to all brides-to-be: Break in your wedding slippers before your wedding day. You'll be glad you did. Trust me!"

Abby, what kind of advice is that coming from a well-respected advice columnist? Premarital sex is done every day, but it should not be encouraged. Men still want a pure virgin when they marry for the first time.

You really shocked me. Where are you coming from, Abby? — CARL FROST, SACRAMENTO, CALIF.

DEAR CARL: My "confidential" message to all brides meant exactly what I intended it to mean: Brand-new shoes, when worn for the first time, tend to hurt the feet of the wearer, so I recommended that all brides "break in" (wear) their wedding slippers BEFORE their wedding day in order to avoid the pain and discomfort one could conceivably suffer from breaking in a brand-new pair of shoes.

Where are YOU coming from, Carl?

Don't put off writing thank-you notes, letters of sympathy, etc., because you don't know what to say. Get Abby's booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions." Send a check or money order for $2.89 ($3.39 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054 (postage is included).

IT'S YOUR LIFE

Plan early for successful retirement

By STEVE EDWARDS

Edwards

More than half the people who plan their retirement anticipate financial problems, usually caused by insufficient income and savings at the time of retirement. Many retirees realize that they will have to use some of their accumulated savings to live on during retirement years, and hope to supplement their income with part-time work.

Many of those who believe their finances will be inadequate have no sound basis for this conclusion, because they don't realize how much they will need in retirement and how much their retirement income will be.

Three major concerns facing future retirees who are planning for their future are: (1) They may not have the necessary information on what income benefits they can expect in retirement, (2) they may not be able to interpret information relating to their circumstances, and (3) their knowledge, both of potential income and expected expenses may be exaggerated or underestimated.

Most people don't know how long it takes money to double. A good measuring stick is the Rule of 72, which basically states that to find the length of time required to double money, divide 72 by the interest rate.

For example, if the interest rate is 10 percent, divide this number into 72. The answer: 7.2 years until your money is doubled. To find the interest rate when your money is doubled, divide 72 by the years involved.

This simple method is beneficial in financial planning, especially in determining the length of time necessary for money to double.

By planning early for retirement you will improve your chances of meeting retirement needs and objectives, and make it easier to make the necessary adjustments when personal circumstances or inflation change.

Calculate your anticipated expences and income needs for retirement to help determine the amounts needed.

Once you have determined whether or not additional funds will be required, you will then be able to decide how much you need, when you will need it and how you will meet those needs. How to get the funds is the question asked most often.

Many options are available, including opening a savings account, purchasing government bonds or investing in mutual funds. Which investment plans are best for you depends on your investigation of the alternatives.

Remember, a savings account provides safety of principle, but does not keep up with inflation. Government bonds are a safe investment and do a little better with inflation. Mutual funds come in many varieties, including common stocks, bond funds or a variety of growth and income funds. The rate of return varies with the risk involved.

The sale of your home could add additional cash to meet retirement living costs — but this is not counted as income because the probability of selling your home is too unpredictable.

Calculate your needs carefully, then plan using the most effective means available.

Early spring most difficult time for avid gardeners

Hearst News Service

MIDLAND, Mich. — Spring fever has reached epidemic proportions among gardeners, thanks to longer, warmer days and early-bird crocus poking through crusty soil.

The abundance of seed racks in gardening shops helps fuel the fever to dash outside and sow seeds of kale, parsnips and other hearty and hardy vegetables. Early spring is a truly difficult time to be an anxious gardener.

BUT THE WISE and successful gardener curbs the urge to plant seeds mere days after the snow has vanished. Here's why.

Seeds need a certain measure of soil warmth to sprout. Without it, they lie fallow and ultimately die. Lettuce and spinach will sprout in soil as chilly as 35 degrees. Most vegetables require soil temperatures 40 or more degrees, and few gardens have soil that warm right now.

What confuses many early-bird gardeners is the distinction between soil and air temperature. Day temperatures are well above freezing now and 50 and 60-degree days are at hand. Many vegetables would grow nicely in the day and can be protected from freezing at night but getting them to sprout is near-impossible now.

That's "near" impossible, not "impossible."

Let's assume the urge to plant now cannot be checked and something is going in the ground, chilly soil or not. How can the gardener and his seeds have at least a fighting chance?

ONE WAY IS to pick a protected spot for an early crop. This suggests planting against a building's south side to take advantage of the sun and the building's night time release of heat built up during the day.

Warming the soil also helps. A layer of heavy, clear plastic stretched over the garden will trap and magnify the sun's rays and the captured heat will gradually warm the soil during the day. In the evening, a sheet of black plastic or blanket of straw will help hold in warmth and keep the frost from repenetrating.

Many gardeners have gotten excellent results in early planting by installing electric soil-heating cables directly under the seeded area. This may seem extreme, but it greatly increases the likelihood of getting seeds sprouted. Cables with and without thermostats are available. Park Seed Co. (Cokesbury Road, Greenwood, S.C. 29647-0001) offers thermostatically- controlled cables in lengths varying from 12 to 48 feet and priced at about $9 to $14. A 36-foot cable (with 74-degree thermostat) heats a nine-square foot area and sells for $12.

THIS CABLE would use about $3.50 dollars worth of electricity if left on 24 hours a day for 15 days — plenty of time to get most vegetables up. Nine square feet will grow a lot of radishes, lettuce and other early season, quick-crops!

Other ways of hurrying the season include using seed that has been "pelletized" with a hard coating that makes it a bit more adaptable to cold, wet soil. Seed tapes in which seed is "glued" to a paper tape has the same advantage, and is also easier to space. Most mail-order seed companies sell seed treated this way.

Gardeners can also buy early greenhouse transplants and plant them in a sunny, warm, protected spot. These will require evening protection, as will seedlings that have sprouted from seed sown directly in the garden.

NOT ALL VEGETABLES are sold as transplants, especially this early in the season. When shopping or planting, keep in mind the plant's relative hardiness. The following vegetables are ranked from the MOST hardy to LEAST hardy:

Kale, parsnips, spinach, leeks, Brussel sprouts, parlsey, collards, endive, Swiss chard, radish, beets, turnips, mustard, cabbage, broccoli, carrots, lettuce, onions and cauliflower.

Crete offers beauty, history, art

By PHILIP SOUSA
Copley News Service

CRETE, Greece — Travelers have long been attracted by the rugged beauty of this, the southernmost of the country's major islands, and by its singular cultural characteristics.

The ancient treasures unearthed at Knossos, Phaestos, Kato Zakros, Malia and other Cretan archaeological sites continue to draw art, architecture and history buffs. The fine museums and churches in bustling Heraklion, the largest city, remain worthy of a visit. And the small towns of Matala, Lendas, Spili and Rethymnon are among those that still draw visitors seeking that romantic Greece of whitewashed houses, hilltop chapels, fishing villages, cloth-sheathed windmills, friendly tavernas, foot-stomping music and fine fare.

Recently, though, added notoriety has come by way of Hollywood.

One of modern Greece's famous and prolific writers, the late Nikos Kazantzakis, was a native of Crete.

Best known around the world for his 1953 novel "Zorba the Greek," he authored more than 30 books on a variety of subjects from drama to philosophy. And his literary output, the bulk of which has been translated into more than a score of languages, also includes the work that inspired Martin Scorsese's controversial film "The Last Temptation of Christ."

Until recently, Kazantzakis' reconstructed study, on view in the Heraklion Historical Museum, and his grave atop the Venetian Walls that gird the city's central section, were the only material links to the author for his devotees. But in 1983, the ancestral home in the village of Varvari where he had been born a century earlier opened as a museum devoted to Crete's famous native son.

THE ISLAND'S public transport system is very good, but no bus reaches the peaceful hilltop hamlet where his family once lived. You get to it by taxi after a vista-filled ride of 20-odd miles from busy Heraklion.

Even if you're barely acquainted with Kazantzakis' works, the trip is a worthwhile effort. Varvari, once also called Mirtia, is a microcosm of the best of Crete.

Fewer than 100 people, mostly farmers and wine makers, live in and around the village. Bright geraniums and other flowers crowd the windows and balconies of homes that are mostly simple, whitewashed structures. Scrubbed lanes, rather than streets, meander about the little town and down to the vine-draped fields around and below it. A couple of tavernas provide the breeze-cooled setting for that very Grecian pastime, practiced mostly by men — discussing everything from local issues to world affairs.

Located on a tiny square right in the center of the village, the two-story Kazantzakis Museum has a complete collection of the first Greek editions of his books as well as several hundred translations gathered from more than 40 countries. There are also neatly displayed manuscripts, letters and personal objects, along with posters, programs, photos, costumes and maquettes for sets of scenes from his plays. A very fine audio-visual presentation adds insight into the life of this iconoclastic literary giant who remains very popular — and controversial — 30-plus years after his death.

At one of the tavernas, seated at wooden tables on the 12-foot-wide lane that passes as one of Varvari's main streets, an American friend and I had small cups of strong coffee with two Cretans.

"The movie made from the Kazantzakis book also is controversial in Greece," said a cabdriver. "The (Greek Orthodox) Church tried to ban it, but the government said, 'Let the people judge.' "

A couple of farmers in a motorized tricycle drove by and waved at us as my companion moved her chair closer to the table to give them more berth.

The other Cretan conversationalist, a tour guide, shed light on the famous man whose beautifully maintained ancestral home we could see a few feet down the lane.

"He was one of us, all right — very independent, proud and more than a little stubborn. Above all, he had a zest for life. And I think that's what stands out in 'Zorba the Greek' — which he set on this island — and several of his other works."

When "The Last Temptation" — as the book was titled — was first published in 1954, the Greek church denounced it as heretical and nearly excommunicated Kazantzakis, the guide said. The proceedings already had started, but most Cretans were so incensed that the church dropped them.

When the author died three years later, he was denied the last rites and burial in a Christian cemetery. Instead, he was buried in the simple grave atop the Venetian Walls in the Martinengo Bastion overlooking much of Heraklion and the deep-blue Aegean Sea.

Doubtless, Zorba's father wouldn't have had it any other way.

FROM VENETIAN fortifications to the ruins of the amazingly sophisticated Minoan palaces, ancient relics are as abundant in Crete as hills carpeted with vineyards, olive groves and chestnut trees. And those links to the distant past are as ubiquitous as the tourist resorts along the north coast and the lush farms in the mostly unspoiled interior and the uncrowded south shore.

It was here that the Minoans of Asia Minor established a flourishing civilization, Europe's first, around 2600 B.C.

Greece's finest produce and some of its best wines hail from Crete. And the Cretans, a proud and spirited lot who stand apart from other Greeks, delight their guests with intricate folk dances and handsome handicrafts found nowhere else.

Palate treats include superb fresh yogurt that has set overnight, rather than the filtered and usually pasteurized version; oven-fresh pastries filled with cheese; beef braised with onions and spices; lamb shish-kebab; spicy goat stew; all manner of seafood dishes; veal with onions; and the best stuffed tomatoes in Greece.

By Greek standards, Crete is expensive. By and large, though, prices are among the more reasonable in Europe: West German, French, Swedish and other holiday-makers who camp or stay at one of the many pensions admit that it is cheaper for them to spend a week or more here than to stay home.

Most visitors are day-trippers on island-hopping cruises that arrive in Heraklion, the largest city, at dawn and leave with the sunset. We were among them this time, passengers aboard Sun Lines' delightful yachtlike ship Stella Maris on a four-day voyage from the Athens port of Piraeus. On previous visits, I had joined the many Europeans who typically take at least a week to explore this narrow and very scenic 160-mile-long isle.

First-timers, whether here for a day or longer, simply should not miss the famed Knossos complex, where ancient Cretans lived in strikingly modern fashion, nor Heraklion's usually crowded but nevertheless splendid Archeological Museum and the spectacular fruit market.

Located three miles southeast of the city, the elaborately re-created portions of the Palace of King Minos at Knossos dates to 1650 B.C., and stands as a monumental archaeological feat — but, like much of Kazantzakis' work, one wrapped in controversy.

Sir Arthur Evans, the British expert who in 1900 purchased the hilly site and spent the next 43 years excavating it, restored sections of the complex to what he believed were their original shapes and colors. In one of his most criticized moves, he replaced the magnificent original frescoes with copies.

HOWEVER, EVERY single Minoan artifact found at Knossos — from gorgeous vases to gold jewelry, ceramic ware and composites of the great frescoes — is housed in Heraklion's Archeological Museum, one of the outstanding museums in Greece. The collection also includes Hellenic, Roman and other finds from throughout the island.

While you are in town, make time for a look at the priceless icons in the splendid Cathedral of Agios Minas and the adjacent St. Catherine's Church. They are added treats that make Crete even more tempting as a vacation spot.

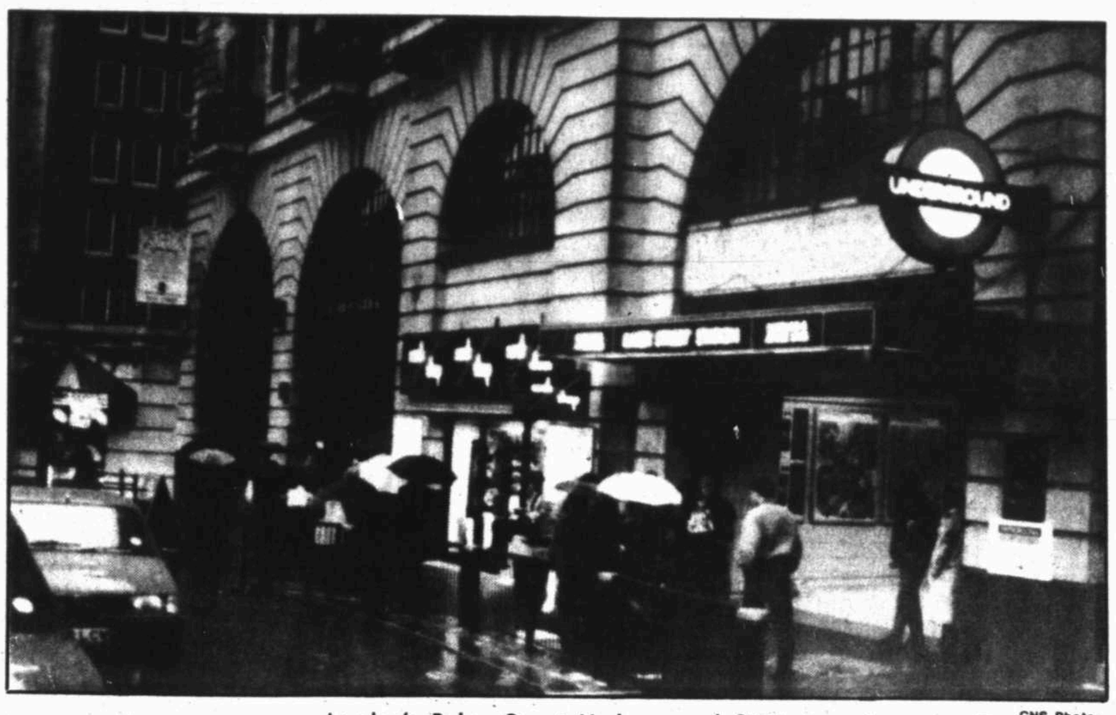
Best value may be independent tour

By CARL LARSEN
Copley News Service



London's Baker Street Underground Station. CNS Photo

"Value for money" — it's one of those peculiarly British expressions, and one that is spoken endlessly in England, although Americans may be more comfortable with their own concept of "a good bargain."

Still, the British phrase is a handy one to remember when planning a summer trip to Europe because Americans, faced with a weak dollar and strong currencies abroad, will need every advantage they can muster to beat the high costs of lodgings and meals.

With adequate preparation, it is possible to keep in line the costs of a trip to Europe. But those used to traveling independently may find themselves turning to package-tour operators as one way around this year's higher prices.

Increasingly, tour operators are offering travelers flexibility and independence with big breaks on prices and "value for money" discounts on meals, admissions and ground transport.

Operators point out that they have the buying power and clout with hotels, restaurants and attractions to beat prices that travelers who go on their own usually find. And that's particularly true in large cities, such as London and Paris, where a meal out or a night at the wrong hotel might take a considerable bite out of the wallet.

THE EXPERIENCE needn't conjure up images of busloads filled with camera-laden tourists or maddening schedules allowing 30 minutes to take in the Louvre. But there are considerations to ponder before booking one of the many plans available.

The airlines' and large ground operators' summer '89 tour books offer a wide array of packages for travel to Europe. Available through travel agents, the books are laced with alluring photos that may prove distracting to the task at hand: finding the most enjoyable "value for money" vacation.

Using London as an example, the operators offer a variety of similar packages that can range widely in price, accommodation and "extras" such as in-city transport and discounts to museums and other attractions.

Among those offering London packages, many of which can be coupled with other destinations in Europe, are American Express Vacations, American Airlines' Fly AAway Vacations, British Airways London Plus program, Pan Am Holidays, Trafalgar Tours Affordable Europe '89, and TWA's Super Saver Getaway program.

Airfare from the United States is extra on most of the packages.

There are important "behind the scenes" aspects to consider before booking.

For example, Trafalgar offers its customers free medical and baggage insurance, re-booking with no extra charge on return flights to the United States should they become sick while abroad, cash advances and personal liability coverage.

TWA charges each traveler $49.95 for a similar protection plan while British Airways advises travelers on its tours to secure insurance through their travel agent.

Most of the larger operators have airport desks and in-town reception centers for their clients, an important feature that can quickly help them sort through any problems that arise.

Those traveling with children may find some operators cater to young travelers, while others treat children as adults in their pricing. Some tour operators flatly refuse to take children under certain ages, usually 5 or 7 years old.

WITH TRAFALGAR, children 5 to 12 receive a 25 percent discount on tours when sharing a twin or triple room with at least one adult.

British Airways, on most of its plans, offers no discounts for children, while TWA says children can stay with parents in triple rooms at a cost that is slightly below the rate charged three adults sharing a room.

Other points to consider are whether prices are guaranteed upon booking and whether the operator stands behind the service and accommodations it is selling.

British Airways promises, "The price you see is the price you pay." And if the category of service booked is not provided, "We will substitute service of equal quality or better — or we will refund the difference between what you received and what was promised."

Other points to consider are cancellation fees should your plans change and you are unable to make your trip.

Booking early can save money. For those able to plan several months ahead, British Airways is offering $50 off per person on any of its London Plus programs that are booked by April 15. Trafalgar offers 5 percent discounts on tours booked six months ahead.

The packages themselves can offer many extras beyond hotel and breakfast. Or, operators increasingly will act solely as a hotel booking agent, allowing the traveler to take advantage of cheaper bulk-rate prices.

TWA's Getaway vacations offer six-night independent stays called the "Londoner" that are priced during the summer high season at $428 per person based on double occupancy. Hotels used are the Ambassador, Bayswater Inn, George, Harewood and Hyde Park West.

INCLUDED ARE a guided visit to Westminster Abbey, a seat to a top play or musical chosen from 20 shows, and a discount book allowing 10 percent off on bills at more than 200 shops around London. Two-for-one restaurant discounts and up to 20 percent reductions on bills at pubs and wine bars also are offered.

In addition, the airline has two-for-one plans or reduced admissions to 21 museums and attractions. Also a reduction on hairdressing and half-off on rental car rates.

Trafalgar Tours, in its Affordable Europe '89 brochure, offers six nights in London from $199 to $305 per person (based on two to a room) on a program that continues through Oct. 28. Travelers using this plan must fly British Airways from the United States.

Trafalgar, one of Europe's largest tour operators, uses the Ryan Hotel near King's Cross station as its "low cost leader." Other hotels available are the Ramada Inn, London International and the London Tara. Undergoing a renovation that will be completed before summer, the Tara is convenient to the trendy shops of Kensington and is only a short walk from an Underground station.

Offered in Trafalgar's "London Week" are six nights' accommodation with private bath or shower, continental breakfast, one ticket to a London show, a half-day sightseeing tour and three days' unlimited travel on London's buses and Underground. Also included are discounts to attractions and airport transfers.

At prices from $272 to $704 per person double occupancy, British Airways is offering six nights of lodging in London on the airline's "designer holidays" program. While more expensive than the Trafalgar one-week London program, the British Airways packages offer independent travelers significantly more in the way of cutting costs during their stay and a much wider selection of London hotels.

IN ADDITION to lodging with continental or full English breakfast, other features include round-trip airport transportation, seven days of unlimited travel on London's buses and Underground and 50 percent reductions on meal prices at more than 20 London restaurants.

One recent traveler on a British Airways London tour was presented with a "City Saver" coupon book nearly a half-inch thick that included not only discounts on meals, but 25 percent discounts on sightseeing trips to tourist meccas such as Stratford-upon-Avon. It also included reductions on admission prices to attractions such as Charles Dickens' home and museum, nearby manor homes and a cruise on the Thames River.

Also provided in this package are a guidebook, recorded guides to walks around London for use in personal tape players, a shopping discount book and admissions to Madame Tussaud's and The London Experience — a video presentation of the city's history.

Heading up the program is Bob Wraight, who is managing director of British Airways Holidays, the package-tour service of the airline.

Perhaps tighter than those who were held in the Tower of London, Wraight has the city locked up.

Although he doesn't like to put it in these terms, Wraight is the largest buyer of bed nights at London hotels and is the single largest renter of cars and one of the largest block bookers of theater tickets in the city.

"We pass our bulk savings on to the passenger," Wraight said. And there is no question that he buys in bulk. On a given day, his employees may have arranged for 4,000 London hotel rooms and 1,500 car rentals.

The "value for money" concept doesn't always mean cheap.

FOR EXAMPLE, British Airways offers a selection of hotels that range from tourist-quality to first-class lodgings. Wraight has developed a listing of more than 60 London hotels, including the high-end Park Lane, Churchill and Royal Horseguards.

The savings given travelers over standard rates can be significant.

For example, a double at the Rembrandt — a first-class accommodation within walking distance of Harrod's and across the street from the Victoria and Albert Museum — will cost about $165 per night for those who would walk in "off the street." Under a British Airways plan where travelers pick their lodging through the airline, a night at the same hotel for two costs $138.

For theater-goers, one of the handiest of the British Airways tour services is the ability to buy London theater tickets before leaving home.

The airline, Wraight said, buys large blocks of tickets, frequently taking gambles on how successful a show may be. As a result, while the theater box offices for such hits as "Les Miserables" or "Phantom of the Opera" may report the shows to be sold out for months, tickets may still be available through British Airways for its passengers.

Tailoring a trip to your own interests and tastes is the best part of such package plans, and the flexibility factor is a growing element geared toward independent travelers.

But some travelers, especially those going abroad for the first time, sometimes may feel more comfortable in groups, a fact Wraight acknowledges.

"If you want extra hand-holding, you can use our program to sit on a bus ... if that's what you want to do," he said.

Europe: Variety of destinations appeal to variety of tastes

By PHILIP SOUSA
Copley News Service

From Ireland to Turkey and from Finland to Spain, Europe beckons with an unmatched bounty of treasures that spans the centuries. Above all, the Old World is packed with diversity.

For most Americans, it is a familiar world, yet we relish the mosaic of unique features, architecture, languages, lifestyles and scenery that make it such a special place.

Mental postcards of happy encounters, memorable sights and rewarding culinary discoveries usually are part of our baggage when we head for home after a European vacation.

The experiences can be as fun-filled as a day in Copenhagen's magical Tivoli Gardens or as touching as a funeral in a Greek village. They can be wrapped in pomp and pageantry, such as Queen Elizabeth's birthday parade in London, or they can be as simple as a picnic at the edge of a mighty Norwegian fiord.

What follows are thumbnail sketches of some personal favorites.

■ AUSTRIA, to many of us, fulfills all expectations of a great Old World vacation. Also, everything works, schedules are reliable, tourist facilities are clean and comfortable.

The traditional lures of the land that inspired "The Sound of Music" include music festivals the year around, historic cities, the beauty and fitness programs of the spas, the great outdoor experience of the Alps, and outstanding skiing. But there are other options.

Danube River cruises, for example. Floating past 1,000-year-old abbeys, picturesque villages, grand castles and tidy towns — that's part of it; you can land here and there to feel and explore, living in luxury on the boat and being spoiled with food and service for a few days or a week.

I'm not a golfer, but golfing friends praise Austria's new courses, which they say are easily accessible throughout the country.

I do bicycle, though, and can say it is a delight to pedal a two-wheeler on trips that range from easy cruising along the Danube — with a van taking care of bags and tired cyclists — to challenging mountain treks in the Alps.

■ DENMARK, a most popular destination with American travelers, this year awaits with a packed calendar of celebrations, festivals, cultural bashes, fun and excitement.

The kingdom's very helpful tourist board suggests the most inexpensive time to visit is in the spring, fall and winter. That is when some hotel rates drop substantially and independent vacation packages sold by travel agents are priced at less than $600 per person per week — including trans-Atlantic air fare and hotel. This also is the time of year when the theaters, concert halls, cabarets and clubs of Copenhagen are alive with music, drama, comedy, opera and ballet.

The Royal Danish Ballet dances at home in Copenhagen from October through May. Highlight of the season is the Ballet Festival in May, which culminates in the presentation of the Hans Christian Andersen awards for excellence in dance.

The music continues into summer with such fare as the Copenhagen Jazz Festival in July, the Hans Christian Andersen Festival in August and the Aarhus Festival Week in September. And on the Fourth of July, the largest celebration of America's Independence Day held outside the United States is staged annually in the Rebild Hills of Jutland.

Tivoli Gardens' season of whimsy this year will run from April 26 through Sept. 10. Within this park in the heart of Copenhagen are various rides and attractions, plus a pantomime theater and concert hall. More than 100 separate concerts fill the season and many are free. There are several dining options within the complex — from inexpensive Danish open-face sandwiches to the superb haute cuisine and matching service at La Belle Terrasse, one of the city's fine restaurants.

■ WEST GERMANY this year is celebrating two events that serve well to illustrate that when traveling around Europe we often encounter links with the dawn of our civilization — and even earlier times.

Bonn, the city on the Rhine founded by the Romans and the nation's capital, is celebrating its 2,000th birthday with exhibitions, concerts and festivals. This is not fun-around-the-clock Munich, which I thoroughly like despite the high cost of everything you may need or want. Bonn is a sedate town, but it promises to be much more festive as it enters its third millennium; it also serves as a convenient base for exploring the glorious Rhine River region.

Farther north, and decidedly far from sedate, the handsome city of Hamburg will toast its 800th anniversary with a long list of festivities, including a parade of tall ships.

"Sail '89" will take place July 12 to 23 and will feature a parade of vessels, from historic tall ships to tiny freighters and pleasure craft. Other attractions in the "City of Bridges" during this milestone year will be a three-day port festival May 5 to 7, along the "Port Mile" between Landungsbrucken and Fischmarkt; a major art exhibition in September; and a months-long "Theatre of the World" festival that will showcase international performers in more than 50 events.

To soften the bite on our weak-dollar budgets, consider the German National Tourist Office's very successful "WunderCheck" program. It is a solid bargain, and it is very convenient. Through your travel agent, you buy "WunderCheck" hotel vouchers for the number of nights you require at the same time that you book transportation. The prepaid vouchers are accepted as payment at more than 90 participating hotels throughout the Federal Republic of Germany. The average cost is around $50 per person, double occupancy, including breakfast and taxes.

■ FRANCE: In a nutshell, a yearlong party not to be missed.

Never at a loss for reasons to celebrate, our French cousins this year have come up with several — the 200th anniversary of their revolution; the centennial of the Eiffel Tower; the 45th anniversary of the Normandy landing on D-day; and the centennial of the painter Vincent van Gogh's residence in Arles.

From opera to fireworks, the calendar is filled with special events taking place in Paris as well as in cities and towns throughout the country. The French National Tourist Office has counted more than 4,000 special events.

Also abundant are the money-saving packages available from Air France and other airlines serving France. A list of these programs and a 24-page guide to the Bicentennial celebration are available from the tourist office. For travel beyond Paris, consider the "France Pass" offered by the domestic carrier Air Inter and the rail pass available from the French National Railroads.

■ THE NETHERLANDS is another favorite with an abundance of attractions beyond its popular capital, Amsterdam. In this compact land, roaming around the countryside by rented car, train and even bicycle is not only very easy but also economical.

The many options include the eastern province of Gelderland, with its former Royal Palace Het Loo in Apeldoorn; the famous Kroller-Muller Museum in Otterlo, which has a large collection of works by Vincent van Gogh and an international sculpture garden; and the National Open Air Museum in Arnhem.

Also the attractive city of Maastricht in Limburg, a southern province noted for its sophistication and castles; a new all-weather spa in Valkenburg; and a recently opened estate garden in Arcen.

Other places worth exploring are Zaanse Schans, a restored 17th century village of wooden houses and working windmills just north of Amsterdam; the open-air museum in Enkhuizen; and the city of Haarlem, with its popular Frans Hals Museum and the renowned organ concerts at the St. Bavo Church.

Known worldwide, the Keukenhof Gardens in Lisse are a spring mecca for tulip lovers; nearby, the Aalsmeer Flower Auction is open year-round.

For us, some prices are high. But you can keep costs reasonable by taking advantage of such travel bargains as the national tourism board's "Holland Leisure Card/Plus Museum Pass" and a similar program for rail travel. To save even more, look for restaurants with a "Holland Tourist Menu" decal on the door; there are more than 400 of them around the country serving a substantial three-course meal for about $10 per person.

I REALIZE I'm leaving out a number of great destinations — small gems such as Belgium and Ireland as well as larger countries such as Sweden and Yugoslavia. We'll throw the spotlight on those and other rewarding corners of the Old World in future reports.

Wherever you travel in Europe, allow plenty of time, for there is much to discover. To me Europe is a feast to savor, not a quick bite to grab on the run.

CASHING IN ON THE

BIG BIRD BUSINESS

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

Before oil was discovered in the Permian Basin, the area was filled with herds of cows and horses and flocks of sheep raised by local ranchers.

Now a new breed of local ranchers are hoping to replace the sound of hoofbeats with the sound of flapping ostrich wings to bring new diversification to Midland and the Permian Basin.

U.S. sanctions against South Africa — supplier of most ostrich products to this country — in 1986 have sent ostrich products such as feathers, hide and meat into short supply and their prices skyrocketing. As a result, Americans across the country are jumping into ostrich breeding.

People in the Southwest in particular have flocked to the industry in the last two years, with Texans and Oklahomans taking a particularly strong interest in the bird. While the exact number of breeders is difficult to determine, it is known Texas has the largest number, followed by Oklahoma.

Angelo Picerrello, financial marketing analyst with the Texas Department of Agriculture in Austin, estimates the ostrich-breeding industry in Texas is a $7 to $15 million industry right now. "Within four to five years, though, it could be a $100 million industry," he adds.

The TDA feels the industry has great potential and is assisting in the preparation of information on breeding problems, and other needs such as pen size and diet recommendations and marketing strategies for ostrich breeders.

A number of Midlanders have plunged into the industry, which they see as a chance to diversify the local economy — by introducing a new product — and because they see a chance at getting an excellent return on an investment.

One of the first, and largest, ostrich-breeding farms in the area is the Yellow Rose Ranch south of Odessa, owned by Dr. John Sheets and wife Rachel. The ranch currently houses 70 birds and has incubating facilities to handle 600 to 700 chicks.

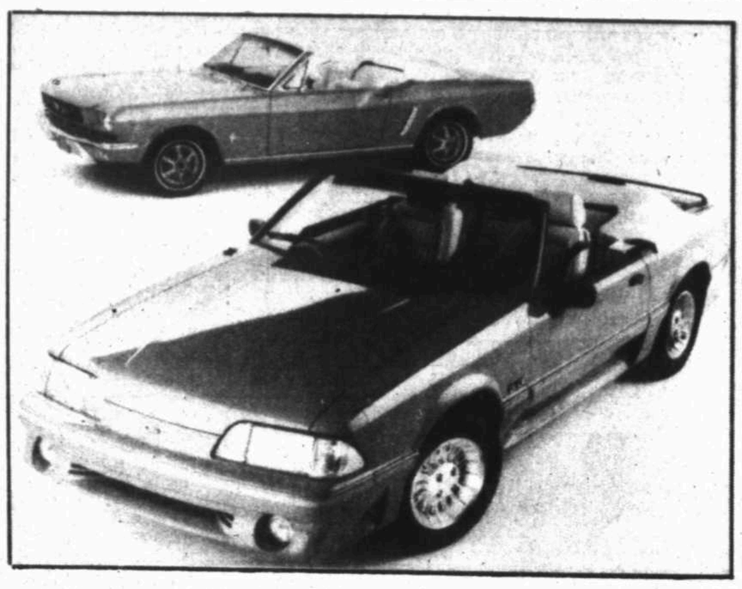
AUTO REPORT



Ford's Mustang celebrates its 25th anniversary Monday. The original 1965 model, which has become a collectors item, is shown here with a 1989 GT.

Original horse car celebrates 25 years

DETROIT (AP) — It was the car cool Baby Boomers grooved on.

The Mustang, Ford Motor Co.'s breakthrough into lightweight, affordable sports cars, turns 25 this month with an immortalized place in auto history, making its mark the same way the Beatles reshaped rock'n'roll.

Teen-agers dreamed of cruising drive-ins in their new Mustangs which, like the dreamers themselves, grow older by the year. Some original Mustang drivers say they don't feel a day older than when they slid behind the wheel for the first time.

"It felt great," Stanley Tucker of Montreal remembered about the day 25 years ago when he drove the first Mustang ever made at Ford's Dearborn, Mich., assembly plant, where 52 of the cars an hour still roll off the line.

Ruby Hummel of East Detroit got into the Mustang love affair late. But she got her driver's license late, too. She bought a used '68 Mustang when she got her license in 1973 at age 46.

"It makes you feel young," she said at a suburban Detroit Jeep-Eagle dealership where she and her husband were shopping for a new car. They pulled up in a '66 light blue and white Mustang — a car she says she won't trade.

The nation is dotted with Mustang clubs and Mustang collectors. About 75 percent of the members in the Performance Ford Club of America are Mustang owners, said club chairman Charles Crites of Ashville, Ohio.

Mustang lovers praise what they call the simplicity of the early model, promoting an exuberance and free spirit that captivated young consumers and made Ford's rivals rethink and redesign their own sporty models.

The original Mustang, unveiled when Lee Iacocca was president of Ford, had a base a price of $2,368 and featured a 170-cubic-inch, six-cylinder engine.

"It could be fixed by a general novice person in the back yard," in the early years, Crites said. "Simplicity has gone out with cheap gas."

Crites said he's owned about 15 Mustangs over the years, and has three in his collection of 25 cars. His favorite Mustang is the 1969 Mustang Shelby GT 500.

Like other Mustang buyers, Crites is proud of how he found his pride and joy. "In 1970, I went in (to a dealership) to buy a truck," he said. "I saw the Mustang sitting there for $3,700. I went back two weeks later and they dropped the price by about $500."

Crites drove it away that day.

TEXAS BUSINESS

All American pipeliner back in gas transmission business

HOUSTON (AP) — Gale D. Galloway can't seem to stay retired.

In the past 2¼ years, the 35-year veteran of the oil and gas business has tried twice to withdraw from the corporate world. Neither retirement lasted even six months.

Each time, he has been lured out of his home west of Austin by opportunities he said were too good to let pass.

The most recent inducement was the chance to return to the part of the business he knows and likes best — natural gas pipelines — and to regain control of the company he made into a major force in the Louisiana intrastate market during the 1970s.

Last month, Galloway, 59, and his investment partners completed the acquisition of Louisiana Intrastate Gas Corp. (LIG) and affiliated operations from Tenneco Inc. for about $120 million.

"It's great to be back in the natural gas transmission business," Galloway said after the sale. "We are anxious to put this system back together."

As chairman of Celeron Corp., Galloway sold LIG, another Louisiana pipeline and related properties to Tenneco for $456 million in 1985.

Celeron grew from a small Louisiana electric utility into a billion-dollar-a year organization under Galloway's leadership. When it was acquired by Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. in 1983 in a $827 million transaction, Celeron was no longer in the electric utility business, but it had a major regional natural gas pipeline system, a successful oil and gas exploration and production program and a natural gas distribution company.

Galloway stayed with the Goodyear organization for a little over three years. By then, he was able to see another dream nearing reality. Construction was almost compoleted on the first phase of All American Pipeline, a crude oil carrier that eventually will stretch 1,800 miles from near Santa Barbara, Calif., to the Houston area.

Celeron was planning All American before Goodyear bought the company. The system was needed to transport oil from newly discovered fields offshore California to refineries in the midcontinent and Gulf Coast areas, Galloway said. Some of those discoveries were made by Celeron Oil & Gas Co.

Several paintings depicting All American construction scenes hang on the walls of Galloway's Houston office. He talks about the project with obvious pride.

"That project had been needed for decades," he said. "It is the first cross-country crude line built in many years."

Not even Exxon can promise a perfect world

Pitts

The Alaskan oil spill, like all sickening disasters, has resulted in the usual round of finger-pointing, blame-finding and brain-storming — "to make sure it doesn't happen again."

But, sadly, it will happen again. This may come as a startling revelation to some. But it really is "an imperfect world."

The potential for tragedy is built into every human endeavor, and despite the best laid plans of mice and men — "it happens." And it will continue to happen as long as imperfect men and breakable machines are mixed.

Buses fly off mountain roads, trains derail, bridges collapse, automobiles collide, rocketships explode, ships sink, dams break, tankers spill oil and nobody in this life seems able to stop it.

Despite experienced pilots, extensive training, through planning, detailed maintenance, highest quality equipment, double check-lists, backup systems for backup systems, computers and by-the-book rules and procedures loaded jet airliners still fall from the sky, killing hundreds of innocent people each year.

But even if every known safety precaution were doubled, airplanes would still fall out of the sky. Because whenever men control of machines, sooner or later, someone: forgets, miscalculates, misjudges, terrorizes, fails to see, falls asleep, gets drunk, goes berserk, misunderstands or otherwise slips.

Despite an open check book and the top minds in the nation behind it, Challenger exploded on national TV, sickening all of us. It was "O" rings this time. The next time it may be something else.

Extensive finger pointing followed the Challenger tragedy. Everyone from contractors to NASA and the President were singled out for a portion of blame. Such fault-finding rituals are typical, and not necessarily bad if they serve as a catalyst for critical reevaluation of procedures. But there are no perfect plans, and in the end fault-finding can only minimize danger — never eliminate it.

There is simply more to go wrong with a ten story, computer-operated, rocket than is humanly possible to master. And as long as flesh and bone men choose to ride giant rockets into space, more disasters are bound to happen. That's not fatalism — just reality.

Like Challenger critics, the Valdez fault-finders have cast an irrational net of blame so wide that it now encircles everyone from a drunk captain to Exxon Corp., the Coast Guard, the President of the United States and the oil industry in general. At the same time, the press has been quick to home in on all the stupid rhetoric such as: "Do we really need the oil in Alaska? Should the Trans-Alaskan pipeline be shut down? Should we stop drilling for oil offshore, in environmentally sensitive areas?"

I find much irrationality, hypocrisy and irresponsibility in such an attitude.

Certainly, hurt and outrage over such environmental disasters is to be expected, and blame-finding for the sake of fixing something is to be welcomed, but unrealistic ranting should be recognized for what it is.

After all, in a sense, we must all share the blame for the mess in Prince Edward Sound. Everyone of us who drives an automobile, flies on an airplane or eats food delivered by truck, long ago gave our implied consent to the risks inherent in transporting 25 percent of U.S. oil production from one side of the nation to the other.

It takes little effort to see the risks in pumping 2 million barrels of oil daily across across the tundra, rivers and mountains of Alaska; loading it into tankers, transporting it to Panama, through storms, fog and busy shipping lanes, where it is off-loaded into another pipeline, pumped across the mountains of Panama, loaded into more tankers on the Atlantic side then delivered to refineries on the East and Gulf coasts. I can list at least a 100 ways an accident could happen on such a voyage without even thinking up a sweat.

The U.S. count ended a two-week increase, slipping one to 778.

At the same time, the Basin total fell by one a second week, dipping to 99.

Lea County, N.M. continues to be the most active in the Basin with 20 rigs running this week. Andrews County was second with nine rigs.

No county lost activity, and Crockett, Runnels and Crane counties saw renewed drilling activity.

Among major oil producing states, Pennsylyania showed the biggest decline with seven fewer rigs, followed by Texas, five; Michigan, four; and North Dakota, two.

Oklahoma showed the largest gain with eight additional rigs, followed by Kansas, three; Louisiana and Ohio, two each; and California and Colorado; one each. New Mexico and Wyoming were unchanged from the previous week.

U. S. Petroleum Imports

Petroleum imports

As shown in the Texas Railroad Commission graphics above, U.S. petroleum imports slipped from January to February, averaging 5.1 million barrels daily as compared to 5.5 million barrels in January. Petroleum products, however, were up, averaging 2.8 million barrels daily compared to 2.5 million in January. For the year to date, imports of both crude oil and products averages eight million barrels daily. Imports from all three sources, non-OPEC, Arab OPEC and other OPEC, continues to climb.

PI: First quarter activity down

From Staff Reports

DENVER — Drilling for oil and gas through the first three months of 1989 declined 30.3 percent from the same period in 1988, Petroleum Information reports. The first quarter total was 2,976 wells officially completed, compared to 4,265 at the end of 1988's first quarter.

Oil well completions were down more than 44 percent as the three-month total was 1,120, down from 2,007 a year ago. Gas well completions were up slightly as 678 were counted, up from 668, PI said.

New field exploration for the period was down sharply. Wells in search of new fields totaled 406, down 30.2 percent from the 581 such completions during last year's first three months. The success rate for new field exploration also declined, with only 8.4 percent of the first quarter's new field wildcats being successful. The success rate for the same quarter in 1988 was 10.8 percent.

Other exploration, for new reserves in and near existing fields, was comparable to a year ago. The first quarter total of 381 "other exploratory" wells represented a decline of 15 from the year before. Discoveries totaled 125, up from 120 at the end of March 1988.

Permits to drill, also traced nationwide by PI, declined 13.9 percent for the period. The first quarter 1989 total was 7,132, compared to 8,276 one year ago.

Well starts followed the pattern of other activity indicators. They dropped form 4,919 a year ago to 3,855 at the end of the first quarter of 1989. The decline equaled 21.7 percent.

Texas was again the leading state in wells completed. Through the first quarter, the state had 1,183 completions. Other leaders were Kansas with 312, Oklahoma with 229, California with 188, New Mexico with 157, and Louisiana with 149.

Toreador Royalty forms joint venture to explore Arkoma

DALLAS Toreador Royalty Corporation announced today that it had formed a joint venture to generate gas prospects in the Arkoma Basin. Toreador Chairman, Peter Vig, stated that the Venture was designed to provide Toreador and its joint venturers with exposure to potentially large reserves in the Arbuckle formation at depths of approximately 12,000 feet to 18,000 feet. The Venture's intent is to generate prospects and turn them to industry partners for a combination of cash and retained interest.

PITTS

Frequency plays a major role in determining the degree of risk — the more times you take a risk the riskier it becomes. The Alaska-California-Panama-East Coast pipeline tanker circuit operates operates 24 hours a day, seven days a week, year after year.

Major oil companies knew the risks of a spill before the first barrel of oil moved out of Valdez. You simply cannot move that much oil for that long without expecting something or someone to eventually "slip." Experts estimated it would be 10 years before a major oil spill occurred on the circuit. It was nine.

The blame-finders will be happy to know that there is a way, perhaps, to prevent future oil spills like Valdez. It requires double hulls on tankers, extension of Coast Guard traffic control, and having containment equipment on 24 hour call. The only problem is: it would up the price of a gallon of gasoline to $15.

Given the choice between $15 gasoline, and perhaps parkng the car, or having to approve a potentially disasterous process in which 240,000 barrels of oil could be spilled into the ocean, I think even the most ardent environmentalist would vote for the potential spill — dead birds, otters and all. Want a real villain? Look no further than your driveway.

For all the anti-oil rhetoric, Americans — including oil haters — are hopelessly addicted to the automobile. Californians are choking to death on their own exhaust fumes, but to date there are no laws prohibiting automobiles in Southern California.

Let us mourn for the polluted beaches, dead birds and poor fishermen of Prince Edward Sound, but let's also be realistic and honest in our appraisal of such accidents. They are bound to happen.

Exxon may have promised that the Valdez spill would never happen. They may even promise that it will never happen again, but they won't be telling the truth. Not even Exxon can promise a perfect world.

The giant size of ostriches are demonstrated by the proximity of Brian Traweek, 6, and brother Ryan, 3, who admire an ostrich from a safe distance behind the fence.

BIRDS

Cooper Campbell, manager of the ranch, says that when Sheets decided to get out of the horse-breeding business a couple of years ago, he did some research into exotic animals, and found that the ostrich was the only exotic with a viable market.

"South Africa's had an established market in ostrich products such as meat and hide for 100 years," Campbell points out. "Due to our sanctions against the country, it gave U.S. breeders a chance to get our foot in the door and develop an industry in the U.S."

He notes a three-month-old chick will bring $3,000 while a three-year-old pair of breeding ostriches can fetch $45,000. The eggs themselves can bring as much as $500.

The average hen begins laying at about 3 years, and lays an average of 60 eggs a year until the age of 40 or 45 years. The only red-meated, two-toed bird in the world, an ostrich will grow to stand an average 8 ft. tall and weigh as much as 345 pounds.

The ultimate goal of U.S. breeders is to increase the herd enough to support a U.S. products industry, processing U.S.-grown ostrich hide, feathers and meat, which is a delicacy in Europe, but in short supply in the U.S. Currently South Africa slaughters 85,000 birds annually, while estimates put the number of birds in the U.S. at around 8,000. Campbell figures it will be another five to six years before the U.S. has the number of ostriches needed to make a processing industry viable.

He offers this example of what kind of production ostriches are capable of: Fourteen-month-old chicks (the age most South African ostriches are sent to market) would average 80 lbs. when slaughtered. If one pair produced at least 30 chicks a year, Campbell says that would equal 2,400 lbs. meat annually from that one pair.

For Midlander Roy Kimsey, one pair of birds will outdo a typical West Texas oilwell. "If a hen lays 50 eggs a year for 40 years, that's 2,000 eggs. If current prices hold, those chicks would sell for $3,000 a piece. That's $600,000 — what one pair would return over its laying life. Even if the price falls 50 percent, that's still $300,000."

He houses his pair — purchased from the Yellow Rose — behind his home, and finds it an ideal situation. "I can put a pair on a half-acre, and that's all the room they need," he says. Because they feed primarily on alfalfa, some breeders let them graze in alfalfa patches. Kimsey estimates it will cost him $250 a year to feed his pair.

He got into the business because, to him, it's the country's hottest commodity. And "It's an exciting and new industry. I relate it to the U.S. cattle industry 220 years ago. That's where I feel we are right now."

Faye Lehenbauer is boarding her ostriches at The Yellow Rose, and visits several times a week, weighing and candling the eggs her hen lays. Laying season begins in early spring and lasts through early fall.

"You start candling the eggs after 18 days, then you have to check them at least once a week. The older the embryo gets, the closer you have to watch to make sure the air sac won't shrink and suffocate it." The eggs hatch after 42 to 45 days.

As she watches over her eggs, Lehenbauer is confident she's made a good investment. "I'm upbeat because I feel we have an excellent group that's invested in ostriches. I expect to be making a profit in a year to a year and a half." Breeders like Tony Traweek of Greenwood find entry into the business easy, and the birds easy to raise — after a fashion.

"Once they're hatched, you have to watch them carefully until they're about three months old," he says. "They'll eat anything, and you have to watch them to make sure they don't eat anything that could hurt or kill them. Once they make it past that stage, though, they're easy to raise."

He recently formed Texas Star Ostriches with some partners, buying a pair of two-year-old breeding ostriches for $27,500. His two ostriches, along with two emus named Ringo and Tammy, have been housed in a pen behind his home for the last month, while he completes construction on a hatchery-incubator. Once the hatchery is complete, he plans to buy some ostrich eggs and hatch them. "I hope by the end of the year to have 12 to 15 birds out here," he says.

He acknowledges that the birds are still more a novelty than a business — his wife, Shawna, says "you wouldn't believe the number of people who have stopped by just to see them" — but he hopes that will change as the industry establishes itself.

The booming ostrich breeding industry has been viewed with both extreme optimism and extreme pessimism. Traweek says some have compared it to the chinchilla craze of a few years ago. For his part, he's upbeat, but cautious. "I don't expect to get filthy rich, but I do expect to make a reasonable living out of this. If I didn't, I wouldn't spend all this money trying," he laughs.

"I can't see the current price level lasting 10 years as some have predicted," he continues. "I'd like to sell every bird I have for $20,000, but even if these prices last two or three more years, I still think there's a good chance ostrich breeding is here to stay — it won't fade and be gone."

He adds: "What I and the other breeders hope to see is that the ostrich doesn't stay an exotic, strange foreign bird but becomes as common as driving down the road and seeing cows. And there's no reason that can't happen unless people aren't serious about the business."

Continental contemplates raising fares

HOUSTON (AP) — Continental Airlines announced Thursday it is increasing its popular max saver fares by up to $20 on some flights beginning May 26.

The increase applies to excursion stays, or those which require an overnight stay, Continental spokesman Ned Walker said.

"I think the adjustment is typical for this time of year," Walker said. "Summer is the busiest time and this modest increase relects that demand."

The adjustment on the max savers range from zero to $20 each way depending on the market, Walker said. The fare increases do not apply to first class and full-fare coach tickets.

For tickets purchased after May 26, passengers will see Continental's Newark to Los Angeles round trip fare increase from $358 off peak and $398 peak to $298 off peak and $438 peak.

He was one of hundreds of thousands who bought Mustangs during the early years. Ford formally introduced the car on April 17, 1964, about five weeks after Mustang's Job 1 rolled out of Ford's Dearborn plant.

Some purists call the first editions 1964½ models. Ford calls them '65s.

The first-year sales projection of 100,000 cars was passed in four months. Sales increased to its best year in 1966, when 549,400 Mustangs were driven off Ford dealership lots.

The second generation of Mustangs, called the Mustang II, was introduced for the 1974 model year. It was a smaller than the '73, reflecting the need for better fuel efficiency during the oil crunch of the mid-1970s.

Mustang sales bottomed out in 1983 at about 117,000 cars, raising predictions that the car, like an aging television sit-com, had finally run out of gas. But last year, Ford sold 170,100 Mustangs.

The 1989 Mustang, which has a four-cylinder engine, has a base price $9,450. An optional beefed-up 5.0-liter engine capable of 223 horsepower compared with 90 horsepower in the basic engine, is a popular seller.

Ford has said it plans to commemorate the Mustang birthday this April 17 with a low-key event at its Dearborn headquarters but doesn't plan a special edition of the car and is leaving the hoopla to others.

A caravan of 37 Mustangs owned by Europeans is tooling around the country on what's been billed as the "American Pony Drive." The caravan started March 24 in Jacksonville, Fla., and winds up May 9 in Baltimore.

But whether in the United States or overseas, Mustang's design has been what's attracted buyers.

"I just like the way it looks," Mrs. Hummel said. "It's sporty looking."

Until All American was constructed, no oil pipeline existed between the West Coast and the rest of the nation, Galloway explained. Oil production in Alaska and California surpassed the area's refining capacity. Excess volumes had to be transported by tanker to Panama, then either through the Panama Canal or the Trans-Panama Pipeline to another tanker for delivery to refiners or other pipelines on the Gulf Coast.

The recent political unrest in Panama demonstrated the importance of All American, he said. Shipments through the Trans-Panama line were disrupted for several days. "We need this pipeline to ensure the security of those oil supplies," he said.

Galloway attempted retirement the first time in late 1986, when he left Celeron. It lasted for only a few months.

Entex Inc., the Houston-based natural gas utility, was in serious trouble. The company had diversified into oil and gas exploration and production and contract drilling. It also had acquired a savings and loan, University Savings Association.

The diversification efforts were financially disastrous. For 1986 and 1987 combined, Entex lost $162 million. An attempt to merge with Enserch Corp. of Dallas in the summer of 1986 was unsuccessful. Former Entex chairman Jackson C. Hinds recruited Galloway in early 1987 to lead the company's recovery. Until Hinds offered him the job of president and chief executive officer, Galloway said at the time, he had never planned to head a large gas utility.

Galloway immediately implemented a "de-diversification" program. The oil and gas company, the drilling unit and the savings and loan were sold to their managements within six months.

Entex's recovery also required growth, but residential and small commerical gas consumption in the company's service areas in East and South Texas, Louisiana and Mississippi was not increasing.

The best opportunities were in the large industrial market — manufacturing plants, refineries and petrochemical facilities. To lead this effort, Galloway brought in Jimmie Terrill and several key executives who had been part of the Celeron team.

Terrill was a veteran of the less-regulated intrastate pipeline business. As executive vice president, he led Entex's industrial marketing efforts, which included acquisition of or participation in several small pipelines.

Galloway was admired by Wall Street for the way he took care of Celeron's stockholders. He did at least as well for owners of Entex stock.

In October 1987, Galloway agreed to merge Entex with Arkla Inc. of Little Rock, Ark., in a stock swap valued at $580 million. The merger created the nation's third largest natural gas utility.

Galloway became vice chairman of Arkla after the merger. He stayed with the company until last August, when he retired for the second time.

Again, it was hardly more than a long vacation. In November, Tenneco disclosed plans to sell LIG. In January, Galloway and a group of investors led by Wasserstein Perella Partners L.P. announced they were buying LIG from Tenneco.

As happy as he is to be back in the gas pipeline industry, Galloway recognizes that the natural gas business has changed dramatically during the four years since he last ran LIG. Nevertheless, he believes the fundamental elements are no different than they were 35 years ago.

"It's a basic fact that you can't carry natural gas in a bucket like you can crude oil or other liquids," he said. "The movement of natural gas requires fixed facilities such as pipelines."

The biggest change has been the demise of long-term contracts between gas suppliers and consumers, he said. More and more gas is being sold on terms as short as 30 days, and often by people who own neither production nor pipelines.

Galloway views this development as a major threat to the industry, particularly as demand is growing in areas of the nation without adequate pipeline capacity.

Airlines making effort to entertain air-bored passengers

Movies being replaced by VCRs, televisions, phones

By Chris Barnett
Copley News Service

MIAMI — It sounds like pie in the sky, but British Airways has tested personal VCRs installed in armrests where passengers can watch 20 to 30 video channels as easily as listening to 10 stereo channels now.

Japan Air Lines already has experimented with satellite telephones that let you call anybody anywhere in the world right from your seat. British Airways also is testing what is called Satfone that claims to relay messages from caller via Earth stations and space satellites.

Qantas and Northwest Airlines are now evaluating passenger reaction to test installations of "seatback video" developed by Airvision of Valencia, Calif. The 4-inch screen shows videotapes from six VCRs located in the cabin.

Coming as soon as the political and jurisdictional hassles can be resolved: the air-to-ground global fax.

What were deemed ideas straight out of "Star Wars" a year ago are either in the testing stage or visible on the horizon, says Judy Oldham, chairman of World Airline Entertainment Association.

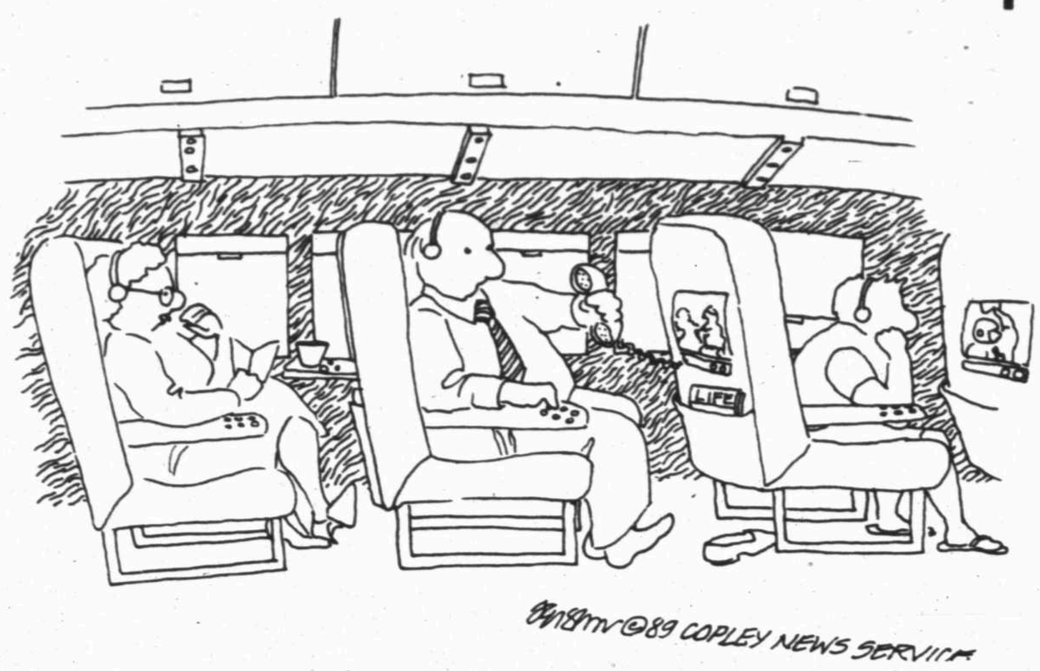
Most are aimed directly at the business traveler and are designed to either break up the boredom of flying or put the dead time to productive use, she says. To date, motion pictures have been the "mainstay" of in-flight entertainment, but technical triumphs are opening the cabin to brainstorms that would boggle Buck Rogers' mind.

Oldham says businesspeople — flyers who generally pay full fares and travel plenty — will get showered with attention and ideas first. A former flight attendant who also is unit manager of in-flight entertainment for Pan Am, Oldham knows exactly what the business traveler faces — a grind.

"He has three to four hours' worth of work in his briefcase, and by the time he gets through the airport, down the jetway and into his seat, he's exhausted, frustrated and at his wits end. Then someone offers him a drink, he accepts and then the motivation to do four hours' work disappears."

To keep the "Type-A personalities" happy, airlines are searching for ways to let the laptop computer crowd "do their spreadsheets, write their contracts and fax or telecommunicate it," says Oldham. Pan Am's shuttle service along the East Coast is experimenting with fax transmissions from planes to U.S. companies. "Wherever you have a plane with a phone onboard, you can have a fax," she says.

So far, air-to-ground telephones have been limited to calls within the United States. British Airways and JAL's tests involve satellites that give passengers telephonic access to the world.



"Once that's perfected, you can hook up your fax or computer modem to the satellite phone," says Oldham, "and transmit data anywhere — there are no geographical limits."

Oldham claims the "second generation" of seatback video also is ready for testing.

"This will have an interactive capability and allow you to, say, play a video game. Imagine trying to play Pong on a 4-inch screen," she says.

The ultimate in in-flight entertainment, she contends, will come when passengers can receive their hometown local news, sports team, favorite shows, via satellite, and watch from their seats as conveniently as from their living room sofa.

"Actually, all of this is technically possible right this minute," maintains Oldham, "but it's not cost-effective for the airlines. You're talking a cost of $500,000 to $2 million to equip each airplane, and headset revenues won't cover that."

To get a fix on how much passengers are willing to pay to be entertained at 39,000 feet, Oldham says carriers experimenting with different systems are charging anywhere from $4 to $12 per person or giving it free in first class and business class as a marketing lure.

Many airlines have been testing the waters with special programming. Pan Am has shown the day's news aloft since 1985, and American Air also beams news throughout its cabins. NBC, ABC and PBS produce special news programming for airlines. British Airways shows BBC news and news from Tokyo in Japanese on select flights.

Oldham says United's news reports on the '80 Olympic Games from Seoul were a "big hit" and revealed a huge appetite for up-to-the-minute programming among business travelers who either get their TV news at 6:30 a.m., when they're scrambling to catch the plane or at 11 p.m., when they're too bushed to absorb it.

The newest in-flight entertainment trends: old sitcoms, useful information such as how to navigate around the airport where you'll soon be landing, some cartoons and, on Virgin Atlantic, the hip, lower-fare London-based upstart carrier — music videos.

Along with more televisionlike programming, you'll see more TV-like commercials.

"There are commercials all over the place up there," confirms Oldham. "Most airlines contract with (entertainment suppliers) who give them sponsor-supported visual short subjects."

Companies such as Sheraton Hotels and Federal Express simply buy commercial time to rifle in on a captive business traveler audience.

Oldham says so far only two airlines — Swissair and Delta — have refused to subject their passengers to ad pitches.

"We get contacted by them all the time," the candid Oldham replies.

JOBLESS BENEFITS

From Staff Reports

The U.S. Department of Labor has begun approving petitions from oil and gas-related companies applying for expanded employment benefits under the Trade Adjustment Assistance section of the 1974 Trade Act.

Certification allows all company workers laid off due to a lack of work to apply for enhanced unemployment assistance including: weekly trade adjustment allowances, job placement; employment counseling; vocational training; and financial assistance for retraining, job search and job relocation.

According to the Texas Employment Commission, petitions have been approved for workers separated from the following companies during the specified period:

- McNeese Logging Service Inc., Midland location, petition No. 21203; Oct. 1, 1985 to June 30, 1988.
- D.L. Ray Inc., petition No. 22346; Dec. 1, 1988 to March 15, 1989.

Affected workers should contact Gay Honneywell at the Midland TEC office, 915/682-9421.

Soviet shipbuilders could earn, Pepsi, pizza

OSLO, Norway (AP) — Norwegian ship brokers have cooked up a deal in which Soviet shipyards may build up to 85 new vessels worth nearly $2.6 billion that will be partly paid for in Pepsi, pizza and fried chicken.

Ole-Jacob Libaek, who helped broker the deal, said Wednesday that the U.S. soft drink giant Pepsi Cola Co. wants to replace vodka as the medium of payment for millions of dollars in products it exports annually to the Soviet Union.

Libaek said "Pepsi Cola is very big in the Soviet Union and the Russians also want Pizza Huts and Kentucky Fried Chicken," both owned by Pepsi.

The Soviets "prefer to trade goods for goods because of their deficit of foreign currency," he told The Associated Press.

Pepsi markets Soviet vodka but wants to replace the liquor in the bartering arrangement because vodka sales plummeted following a U.S. boycott over the 1979 Soviet intervention in Afghanistan.

Sweden's Absolut vodka picked up much of the market, and Pepsi "ended up being paid with a product it couldn't sell," Libaek said.

He said Pepsi will get 25 percent of the ships' sale price to help cover Pepsi imports.

The Norwegian business magazine Economic Report reported today that Pepsi's business in the Soviet Union will reach $600 million in 1990.

The letter of intent to buy the ships was signed by Fram Shipping, the Bermuda-based operation of Norwegian shipowner Per A. Arneberg, a close friend of Pepsi head Don Kendall, the magazine said.

Fram, Pepsi, Libaek and the Soviet government also formed the joint venture Nor-Sov Ship to supply Norwegian technology to the five Soviet yards chosen to build the vessels, Libaek said.

Under the barter arrangement, the Soviet shipyards will supply vessels including tankers and freighters. Contracts have been signed for two ships, nine more are pending and a letter of intent covers the rest.

"You don't sign contracts for 85 ships in one day. It will take time," Libaek said.

New vending machine sells sun protection

DOVER, Del. (AP) — Sun worshipers from Delaware to California heading to beaches this summer will find a new ally in the war on skin cancer: vending machines dispensing tanning oil at 50 cents a spritz.

Beachgoers insert the change in the slot of a Polynesian-looking bamboo-and-grass hut, choose a sunscreen with a factor of zero, eight or 15, then move a wand over themselves as the machine squirts out a mist of suntan lotion.

"Each application is 40 seconds, which is ample time to spray the whole body," said Brian Darby, a 32-year-old Wilmington businessman who holds the franchise for the machines for Delaware and Worcester County, Md., which includes the resort area of Ocean City.

By the time the beach season begins, eight of the machines should be scattered throughout those areas, he said.

If he gets more investors, he hopes to have an additional eight machines in place before the summer's out.

"Over a five-year period, our goal is to have 500 units in our franchised territory," said Darby, who owns Small Wonder Advertising Specialties Inc.

The units cost $3,500 each and each machine holds about 3,000 applications of tanning oil. Darby said a conservative estimate would be a gross of $5,000 per machine per season.

Darby purchased the franchise from Memphis, Tenn.-based K-Sun Inc.

K-Sun founder Charles C. King III came up with the idea in 1984. After spending $2 million to develop the machines, the first suntan oil vending machines hit resort areas on the East and West coasts last August, his spokeswoman said.

Health warnings that skin cancer can develop from exposure to the sun's ultraviolet rays add to the sunscreen's marketability.

"It's something new. It's different. It's a quicker, neater, easier way to do something everyone has to do and with the publicity about skin cancer, I don't think people go out in the sun anymore without protection."
K-Sun spokeswoman Caryl D. Beaty

"It's something new. It's different. It's a quicker, neater, easier way to do something everyone has to do and with the publicity about skin cancer, I don't think people go out in the sun anymore without protection," K-Sun spokeswoman Caryl D. Beaty said in a telephone interview from Memphis.

"But we're a convenience-oriented society and that's what we're offering — a convenience."

In addition to Darby's franchise for Delaware and Maryland, Miss Beaty said, the vending machines have been installed in Las Vegas and in coastal areas of California, Florida, New Jersey and South Carolina.

Darby is negotiating with hotels and condominium complexes along Delaware's coastline and with two hotels in Ocean City,. He hopes to have the machines in place before Memorial Day weekend.

He said the reaction to the machines in market tests was positive, especially from mothers who wanted to make sure their children were protected from the sun.

Citibank settles discrimination allegations

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Department announced last week that it has settled allegations that Citibank violated the antidiscrimination of the 1986 reform bill after the bank agreed to treat all workers and job applicants equally.

The issue was raised by the Center for Immigrants' Rights, which brought the charges on behalf of a job applicant who wished to remain anonymous, said Lawrence Siskind of the department's Office of Special Counsel.

The center alleged that Citibank was requiring foreign-born applicants to show "green cards," known formally as alien registration cards, upon hire as tellers, even if they had already provided adequate documentation to satisfy the requirements of the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986.

That act, among other things, required employers to ensure that they did not hire illegal aliens, and threatened them with fines if they failed to do so.

Siskind said that although employers might feel caught between those requirements and the provision prohibiting discrimination in carrying out the law.

Weed could become new feed

VEGA, Texas (AP) — Kochia is a weed to farmers, a livestock feed to ranchers and a marketable natural resource to Adam Neito.

Neito is working with Spain, Saudi Arabia, Japan, Italy and Africa to introduce kochia as a livestock feed in those countries.

"It's all in the experimental stages," he said. "They're buying small quantities to see if it does what we tell them it's going to do."

Scientifically tagged Kochia Scoparia, kochia is a leafy, bushy plant that grows native in the semi-arid states from Texas to Canada.

"Farmers call it a weed because when they go out to plant in the spring, it's there growing, and anything growing in their fields then is a weed to them," Neito said.

"I hate to call it a weed because technically a weed is a plant that has no economic use, and the cattle and horses have educated us to the fact that it has a use — they eat it."

He said research at many universities has shown that kochia is a very good, palatable, high protein feed.

Neito moved to Vega 11 years ago from El Paso. Formerly a high school science teacher and weekend farmer, Neito had a desire to be in the country and live off the land.

Like many farmers, Neito said he first spent thousands of dollars spraying to kill the kochia. He credits his county extension agent, Jimmy Walker, for suggesting he raise the kochia for grazing.

"I was also raising all the other conventional crops and about three years later I started to realize that this was the most productive crop I had," he said.

His discovery prompted him to begin researching the crop. Neito traveled throughout the United States talking with kochia producers and followed research on the plant. Today, he says he probably has the largest library on kochia around.

Neito said kochia is very similar to alfalfa, but has several advantages over it.

Kochia is a drought resistant, dryland crop that won't burn up, he said. The plant will grow in the desert with as little as 8 inches of rainfall. He attributes the plant's hardiness to a tremendous root system.

Neito said kochia is non-toxic at all stages, will grow in all types of soils and can be fed to sheep, goats, cattle, horses, poultry, rabbits and fish.

And Neito believes research is just breaking the ice on uses for the plant. He said he's heard the Chinese are using kochia seed on bread, like sesame seed.

"People have forced me to do more research, because they call me from all over the world," he said. "They've motivated me to learn more about it."

Neito said he got involved with the Texas Department of Agriculture about six years ago, and TDA helped him make connections in Washington.

Today, he gets most of his foreign leads from "Export Briefs," a bulletin published by the United States Department of Agriculture, listing products sought by foreign buyers. Neito said foreign buyers usually want large quantities he can't handle. But he does what he can by buying kochia seed and hay from other farmers.

Walker and Neito have discussed forming a Panhandle kochia hay producers association. Neito said this would enable he and others to fill more foreign orders.

Auto sales up 28.3 percent

New York Times News Service

DETROIT — Sales of domestic cars and light trucks rose 28.3 percent in early April, compared with a year earlier, as buyers took advantage of large discounts.

But analysts said that the increase was far less than expected, given the size of the car makers' incentives. They also said that some auto plants are likely to be shut down later this year because inventories of unsold vehicles remain high.

Anticipating that the manufacturers' profits will be squeezed by shutdowns, analysts have been downgrading their recommendations on the companies' common stocks.

Detroit may face a prolonged weakening of sales, rather than a temporary downturn, they say.

"In their gut, the Big Three have to be disappointed, because this was a major increase in incentives, the equivalent of $300 a car," said Ronald A. Glantz, analyst for Montgomery Securities, in San Francisco.

"We can count on major production cuts in the third quarter."

Ann Knight, an analyst for Paine Webber Inc., said production could be sustained only by piling still more incentives on cars, which would cut deeply into profits.

In any case, the yen has stopped appreciating against the dollar, renewing the pressures on the domestic manufacturers as import prices stabilize, she said.

"They'll have to pay the piper in the second half," no matter what actions they take now, she said.

The eight domestic manufacturers reported Thursday that car sales rose 30.1 percent, to 188,608, and light-truck sales rose 25.3 percent, to 107,127.

The Ford Motor Co., the first car maker to introduce the new incentives, was the only Big Three company to widen its share of the domestic market for cars and light trucks.

Ford has been producing cars at capacity but has the Big Three's lowest inventory.

One reason is that several Ford vehicles have been very popular with buyers.

In recent months, the company has had substantial success with its redesigned Thunderbird and Cougar models, as well as its sporty new Probe car and its light trucks.

Domestic cars were sold in early April at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 7.5 million, according to a formula devised by the Department of Commerce, compared with the lower-than-usual rate of 6.8 million in middle and late March.

But, because incentives typically produce the most sales just after they are introduced, auto sales are expected to slow, said Jack V. Kirnan, analyst for Kidder, Peabody & Co. in New York.

"If this is the best the industry can do, then the motor-vehicle industry is fundamentally weaker than we had anticipated," he said.

Based on that view, Kidder Thursday downgraded its ratings on the common stocks of the General Motors Corp. and the Chrysler Corp.

GM's rating was dropped to neutral from attractive and Chrysler's rating fell to unattractive from attractive. Kidder maintained its attractive rating for Ford.

A week earlier, Ms. Knight of Paine Webber had downgraded GM and Chrysler to neutral, and kept Ford at neutral. Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc. downgraded Ford and Chrysler to market underperformers, while GM continued to be rated as an underperformer.

Ford held a 34.4 percent share of the auto market in early April, up 2.7 percentage points from the comparable 10 days in 1988. GM lost 2.1 percentage points to take a 43.4 percent share. Chrysler lost 2 percentage points, for a 16.7 percent share.

The incentives offered by the three companies, which include rebates and reduced-interest loans, are roughly comparable, although Chrysler alone is offering no-interest loans.

Chrysler's discounts took effect only one-third of the way into the 10-day period.

A page from the annual report of Southwest Airlines outlines a paper airplane cutout. The promotion resembles a whale.

Southwest Airlines gets back to basics

DALLAS (AP) — In addition to the facts and figures formally found in a firm's annual report, Southwest Airlines Co. 1988 features fun in the form of a paper airplane.

"This was one of those wonderful years when we made a lot of money and it seemed to be we made a lot of money by getting back to the basics. ... and we translated that to what we thought was the most basic of all airplanes, the paper airplane," said Tim McClure, executive creative director of Austin ad agency GSD&M, which designed the report.

The booklet, besides reporting on Southwest's record $57.95 million in profit, traces the construction of a paper airplane from the first folding of the paper to the final painting to resemble Shamu One, Southwest's "flying whale" jet rolled out last year during the airline's promotion of Sea World theme parks in Texas and California.

"You think every pre-schooler and first grader in Dallas will want one?" asked Southwest spokeswoman Charlotte Goddard. "Or all the CEOs?"

On the back page, there's the punch-out version of the unusually painted plane, with assembly instructions and this "helpful hint:"

"Herb attaches a paper clip to the nose for longer flights (Shamu One's, not his)."

Even though Southwest previously has taken a light approach to its reports, McClure said it was a little difficult this year to sell the idea of a punch-out airplane because, "once someone punches it out, you have an annual report with holes in the back."

He said he persuaded Southwest that the unusual idea would become enticing. "Everybody's going to pick it up ... and call up for one."

"I think it's a delightful brochure and something that really shows the personality that Southwest is," McClure said.

Southwest, a regional airline that employs almost 6,500 people, is based at Love Field near downtown Dallas and operates a distinctive fleet of gold, rust and orange jets.

Except for Shamu One, that is.

Japanese firm breaks into top chip ranks

By KATHLEEN SULLIVAN
Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — A Japanese company has broken into the ranks of the top five suppliers of memory chips in the United States, heightening concerns that American chip makers are losing ground on their home turf.

Toshiba Corp. was the fifth largest supplier of chips to U.S. customers in 1988, with $810 million in sales — a 50 percent jump over the previous year, In-Stat Inc., an Arizona semiconductor research firm, reported Monday.

In 1987, Toshiba ranked seventh, with sales of $540 million.

In the top-ranked position was Motorola Inc., with $1.3 billion in sales, followed by Texas Instruments Inc. ($1.29 billion), Intel Corp. ($1.1 billion) and National Semiconductor Corp. ($890 million). Toshiba displaced Advanced Micro Devices Inc. of Sunnyvale, which fell to sixth place in 1988 ($648 million).

Mike Feibus, a senior analyst at In-Stat, attributed Toshiba's gains to sales of dynamic random access memory chips — key components of computers and other electronic products. Toshiba is world's largest producer of these chips, which were in short supply in 1988.

Feibus said the report shows that U.S. companies are faltering in the only market they now dominate: the United States.

"This is a milestone in worldwide competition," Feibus said.

Sandi Patti sings to her heart's desire

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Sandi Patti recently took a fall she won't forget.

"I usually bring kids on stage and have them do a song with me, and a lot of times will keep a little one afterwards and talk with him a little bit," says the contemporary Christian singer during a telephone interview.

"This particular night, I asked him if I could have a big hug from him, and he said, 'Yes.' And he hugged me so hard that we both went flying on the ground."

She laughs as she recalls the episode.

"He, like, tackled me. Here are 7,000 people, and I'm on the ground with my legs in the air."

Miss Patti brings her "Praise Glorious" World Tour to Midland's Chaparral Center Monday for a 7:30 p.m. concert. Tickets, priced at $12.50, may be purchased at the center's box office.

In nine years, the 32-year-old singer has been honored with 19 Dove Awards, four gold albums and four Grammy Awards. Her heart's desire is the same today as it was when she began her career.

"My heart's desire is to be all that God would have me to be, which includes being the kind of Mom that he would have me to be to my three kids, the kind of wife that he would have me to be and the kind of artist that he would have me to be. It's all really wrapped up in wanting to be all that God would want me to be."

Confirmations along the way have helped Miss Patti determine she's on the right path.

"There are just some confirmations that come along from time to time as I study God's word. There might be a particular scripture that will have to do with 'I have called you to proclaim my message to the people.' Something like that in a time when I'm asking 'Lord, am I still where you want me to be?' is a real good confirmation to me.

"All of us long to be at peace with ourselves and to be at rest within ourselves and the confirmation comes along when I feel a real peace inside, when I don't have that restlessness. That's also good confirmation.

"And as people write letters or make comments after the concert and say, "I really needed what you had to say. I'm at a time in my life when I thought there was no hope. Thank you for the song.' Or 'Thank you for the words in that song.' That's also real confirmation for me, too."

It's important to Miss Patti that her fans realize she has other dimensions to her than her career.

"Although music and performing is a part of what I do, that doesn't make me who I am. Family is vitally important to me. I see the highest commitment, the highest calling in my life, being a wife and a mother, which is why we take our kids with us everywhere we go."

Miss Patti is the mother of a soon-to-be 5-year-old daughter, Anna Elizabeth, and 16-month-old twins, Jennifer Lynn and John Leonard "Jonathan" Helvering III. Husband John is her manager who handles the business side of her career.

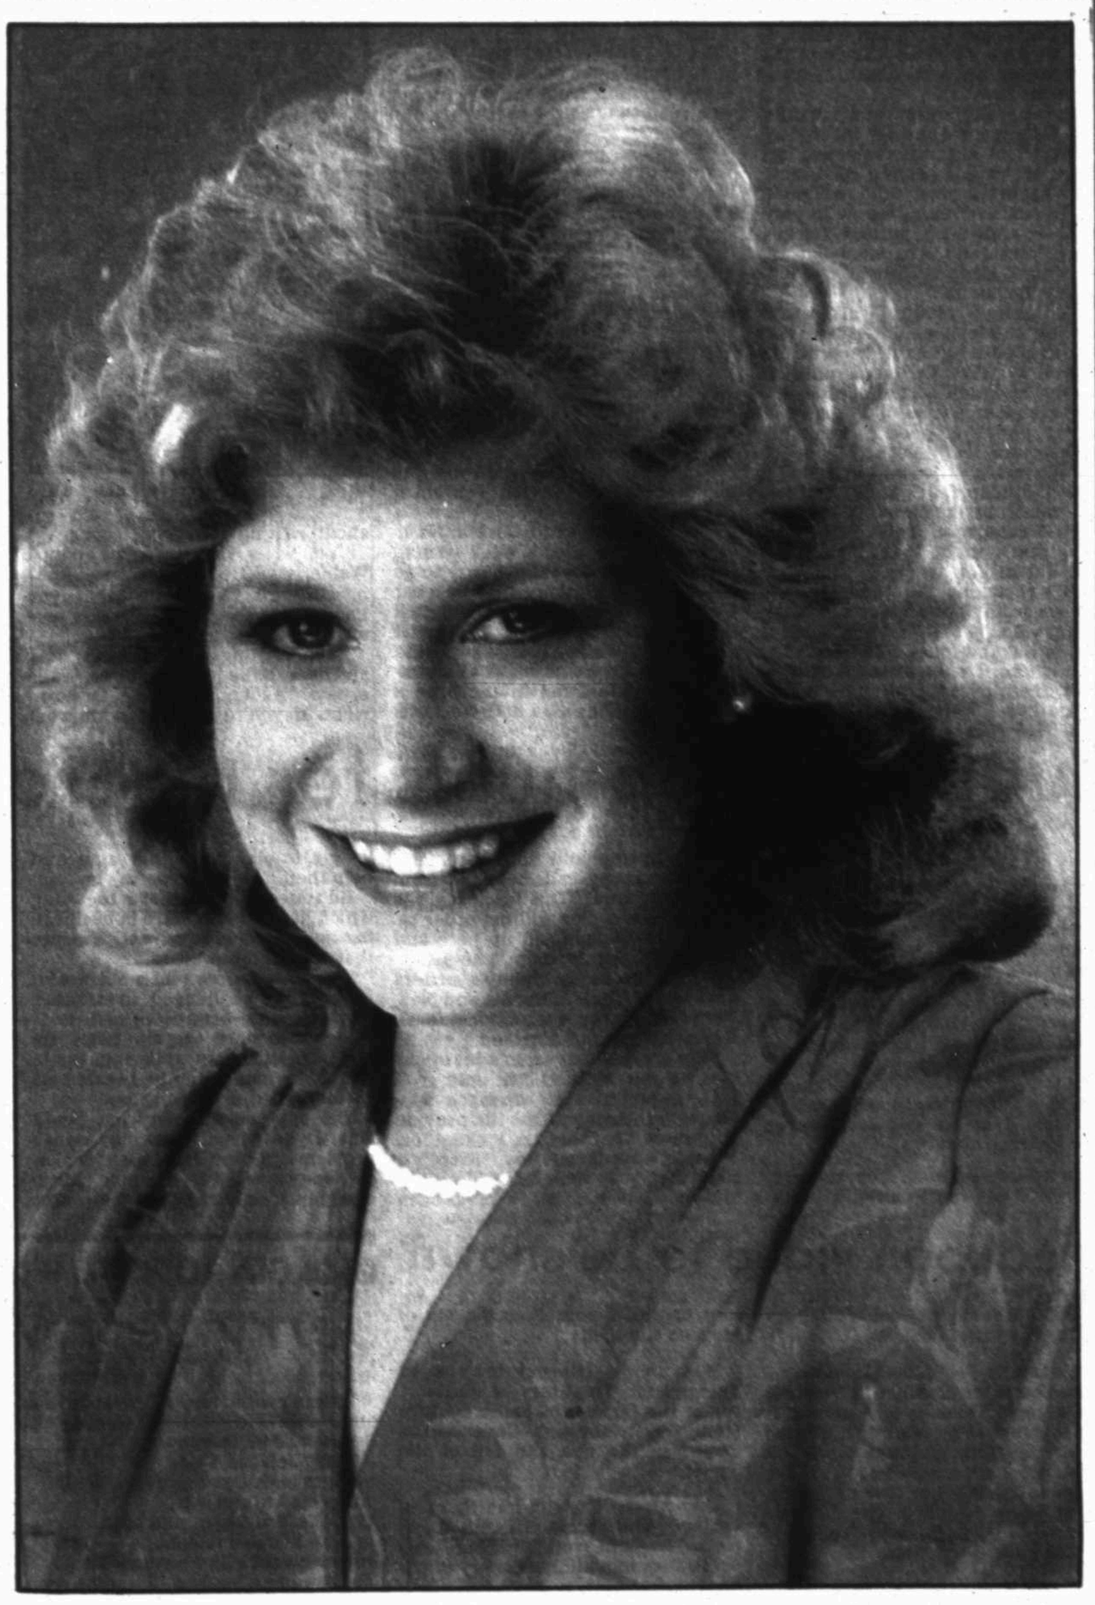
"All I do is sing, John does everything else," Miss Patti says.

She credits the twins with teaching her "how to organize my time." She recalls when the twins were "very, very young," and she discovered no human being has enough hands to reach two crying babies and a whining toddler at the same time.

"You just decide, 'I'm either going to go crazy.' Or 'I'll just work as fast as I can.' I remember thinking, 'Let's just all sit down on the floor, and let's just all cry together.' And I did. Before you knew it, we were all laughing because it was just so funny to picture us all sitting on the floor crying."

The Anderson, Ind., native made her debut at the age of 2 singing "Jesus Loves Me" in church. She sang with her family's traveling gospel group and recorded Juicy Fruit jingles in a studio. She graduated in 1979 with a bachelor of arts degree from Indiana University with plans to pursue a career as a high school music teacher.

Today, what Miss Patti most enjoys about her work is "getting to be a part of something that I love so much and that is music. To be able to travel and see places across the country and meet wonderful people and still be involved in music, that's very exciting for me."



Sandi Patti

Her advice to talented young artists is "give that desire to the Lord.

"Continue to be involved where you are now. If that's in your church music program, then just be as involved as you possibly can be.

Collins: 'Trust Your Heart'

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

A 20th century troubadour, Judy Collins grew up in a world of music. Her musical legacy dates back to her father, Chuck Collins, an accomplished musician with his own radio show.

He was also blind.

In her autobiography, "Trust Your Heart," she recalls when she was quite young watching him crawl along the bathroom floor, picking up pieces of his glass eyes which had shattered when they slipped from his fingers.

"I know he cannot see me with or without glasses," she writes. "I often felt not that he was blind, but that I was invisible."

The oldest of five children, Ms. Collins remembers the pleasure she felt in her childhood days in Seattle, Wash., harmonizing with him as he learned new tunes, or singing as he accompanied her on the piano.

"I sang with the radio, I sang to put myself to sleep, I sang to anyone who would listen!" Ms. Collins told the Daily News Magazine.

She knew how to read music before she learned how to read words. When she was 11, the Collins family moved to Denver, and Ms. Collins continued her piano lessons, this time studying classical music under conductor Antonia Brico.

Then, in her mid-teens, Ms. Collins left invisibility behind. She traded the piano for a guitar and established herself as a folk singer in Colorado and New York.

In 1961 she began recording for Elektra Records. Her first two albums, "Maid of Constant Sorrow" and "The Golden Apples of the Sun" contained, for the most part, traditional songs.

By her third album in 1963, she was interpreting and recording the songs of writers in the vanguard of the folk movement: Pete Seeger, Tom Paxton, Bob Dylan, Mike Settle, David Blue and Eric Anderson.

The next few years would find her recording songs by soon-to-be-discovered artists like Joni Mitchell, Leonard Cohen and Randy Newman.

Since breaking out of the folk mold in 1966, Ms. Collins has embraced almost all significant American vernacular styles. During her career, she has recorded 22 albums, six of them gold.

She is perhaps best known for her recordings of "Both Sides Now," "Amazing Grace," "Send in the Clowns" and "Suzanne."

Unlike so many singers with long careers and numerous hits behind them, she resists sticking to nostalgia works in her albums and live performances.

Judy Collins

She brings her multi-dimensional talents to Midland Friday for a performance at the Holiday Inn Convention Center. The performance, sponsored by Las Manos, is a benefit for the Museum of the Southwest's Fredda Turner Durham Children's Museum. Las Manos is the museum's auxiliary organization.

Tickets are priced at $37.50 per person and include light hors d'oeuvres. For more information, call 699-4671 or 682-6319.

In her autobiography, which is also the name of her latest album, her first for Gold Castle Records, Ms. Collins describes her battle with polio when she was 10; being hospitalized as a "charity case" with tuberculosis when she was 21; her fight with alcohol, which "threatened everything" in her life; her '60s exploration with LSD; and the trauma of losing a custody battle for her son, Clark, now in his mid-20s.

"My life is not uninteresting, but sometimes I wish it happened to someone else," she told the New York Daily News.

Of the '60s, Ms. Collins says, "I loathed the '60s...I was so unhappy then. I think one has to congratulate oneself for living through them, but the '60s holds no glamour for me."

Ms. Collins feels the time is right for a retrospective of the '60s.

"But our lives didn't stop them. While mine's gotten richer, I'll never stop looking, searching and investigating. To understand where we are going, we must know where we have been."

Today, her health is "fantastic."

"When I was younger, I was either completely obsessed and going full speed ahead or I was paralyzed. There's a lot more balance in my life today. I don't have to get sick to rest."

Country music star to perform today at Dos Amigos

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Jerry Jeff Walker brings his recording band, "One Shot Deal," along with his Texas charm to Odessa's Dos Amigos, 47th and Golder, today as part of a Lone Star State tour promoting his new album, "Live at Gruene Hall."

"We're not desperate," Walker says in a telephone interview. "We're not seeking fame and fortune. We're just playing good music and having a good time in Texas."

His last live recording — 15 years ago — ended up putting Luckenbach, Texas, on the national map and earning Walker his first gold album, "Viva Terlingua."

Of his new album, Walker says, during a telephone interview, "It's got 10 good songs on it. It's probably closest to 'Viva Terlingua' only it's better. The same sort of approach — a live audience in an old dance hall and a bunch of good pickers. The pickers are really good.

"We released a single from it called 'Pickup Truck Song,' that was the music to the 'Don't Mess With Texas' campaign. This is the real song that went to that about why I like old pickup trucks.

"We're taking the band that did the recording out on tour and we're going to tour Texas and play some of the music and let people hear what is was like. The band is called 'One Shot Deal' because we don't intend to do this for the rest of our lives. We're just going to do it for a while."

Walker is the composer of literally hundreds of ballads including "Mr. Bojangles." His music career has eclipsed from folk to rock and country during two decades of tours, bands and record releases to produce a richly varied and well-seasoned performer adept at imparting every emotion from the wry humor of a road song to the sensitivity of a love song.

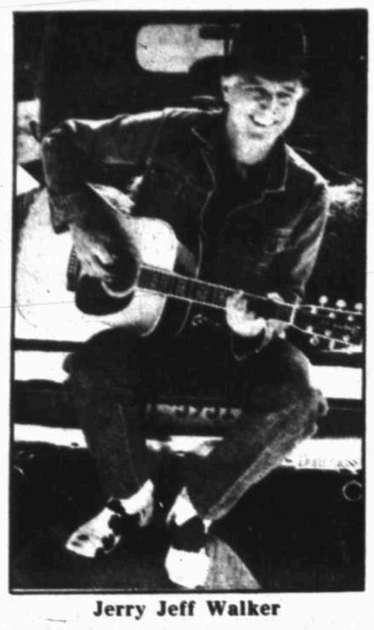
"I've done pretty much what I've wanted to do," Walker says. "I try to sing my songs and record them in situations where I'll sing them the best. And, I've met my own standards, which is kind of what I wanted to do."

Walker describes himself as not just a musician.

"I write to do the things that I do, and I use music to help me express myself. I came up on the streets of New Orleans with old blues singers who said that the blues was a chance for you to get your feelings out. Blues ain't nothing but a good man feeling bad. And then when you sing about it, you feel better. You got it out.

"I wouldn't want to work in Nashville and make $200 a week writing songs just like I wouldn't care to go down here and change tires on a car for $200 a week. I just could not do it day after day for 10 or 15 years."

Although Walker has no sweeping statements he would make to talented artists interested in pursuing a music career, he has definite ideas about writing songs.



Jerry Jeff Walker

"You write what you know about," Walker says. He recalls a "good line" of Guy Clark's "Write what you know about and use an eraser, a pencil with an eraser."

Even writing on a subject near and dear to the heart requires, Walker says, "A lot of effort to get it down right. If you're working with what you know about and care about, I think you can stay on course.

"I write to do the things that I do, and I use music to help me express myself..."

— Jerry Jeff Walker

"If you write stuff that you think is going to be a commercial hit and all that stuff, you'll find yourself with a great big pile of useless junk because it won't mean anything to you. If you luck out and it means something to someone else, then you don't have as much to fall back on as you would if you worked on some emotions and feelings that you really cared about.

"I wish everybody would do that more often. I think we'd have more information on how people really feel inside than what we do have. Most people write what they think people feel about."

He cites as an example of what he was talking about — making movies about Texas.

"...It always amazes me that something like 'Lonesome Dove' can come along and was probably a lot closer to the truth so many years after millions of movies were made. 'Urban Cowboy' is not what mostly Texas is about."

A true sense of Texas keeps eluding movie makers, Walker says, "Because it's somebody from Hollywood telling people what they think Texas is.

"That kind of thing goes on I think in a Nashville kind of situation. People sit around and write what they think people think about love. I'm always amazed how many guys write the songs up there that are all divorced and living all by themselves, writing these love songs to tell the rest of the world what it is all about."

Walker's discography includes 17 major label albums. His last released, "Gypsy Songman," is on his own record label, Tried & True Music. He has released "Live At Gruene Hall" on his own label again, with national distribution by RYKO, who will issue the album on Compact Disc mid-May. The cassette, "Live At Gruene Hall," is only available at live venues like Dos Amigos until the May release.

As a special treat at Dos Amigos, Walker is bringing Chris Wall to open his show. Wall wrote three songs on Walker's new release, "I Feel Like Hank Williams Tonight," "Rodeo Wind" and "Trashy Women."

Also included on the new live recording is a duet performed by Walker and Willie Nelson, "Man In The Big Hat," and a Walker version of his old friend Gary B. White's classic "Long, Long Time," which was a hit years ago for Linda Ronstadt.

The rest of the songs on the LP are Walker originals — "Lovin' Makes Living' Worthwhile," "Pickup Truck Song," "Little Bird" and "Woman in Texas."

"I haven't picked out a large, faceless crowd and tried to figure out something that they'll all say, 'Yeah,'" Walker says. "What I've tried to do is say something that I think is true to me and my thing and then look up and see who says 'Yeah.'"

Showtime is 6 p.m. with doors opening at noon and pre-show activities starting at 4 p.m. Tickets are $12.50 at the door. Dinner is available at Dos Amigos. For more information call Dos Amigos, 368-7556.

Walker will perform old favorites like "Home with the Armadillo" and "Red Neck Mother" as well as his new songs.

Today, Walker's life revolves around his wife, Susan, their two children, 7-year-old Django and 11-year-old Jessie Jane, and music.

His heart's desire includes a characteristic common to many people.

"To wake up to realize how good I have it already and not forget that very often — as much as I do — and enjoy it while I'm having it. I think too many people bitch and complain about what they think they don't have in the world, not counting what they do have. And I sometimes am guilty of that, too. So I try to make sure I realize how good I do have it."

Lubbock shop hunts for recordings not available elsewhere

By RAY WESTBROOK

LUBBOCK (AP) — Roger Dykes has parlayed his lifelong fascination for records and tapes into a one-of-a-kind retail store that lists sales to music lovers as far away as London.

Although the U.V. Blake Record Center — which Dykes acquired in 1984 — carries all the current recorded products from vinyl singles to compact discs, it is really known for its ability to locate and order recordings that are not available on the general market.

Dykes gets requests from throughout the Southwest to locate a particular recording, and finds it remarkable that many calls come in from the Dallas area. "This fascinates me that the metroplex will not order records, that people call up here and we can ship it to them," he said.

Some of the company's orders have come from California and New York, and on the international level, from Canada and England.

"We are well-known in a lot of circles for our abilities," he said.

Dykes and his staff are often challenged in their efforts to provide customers what they are looking for. "People walk in and say, 'There's a song that goes something like this,' and they will hum a few bars. Then we get to play name that tune, and help them find the record," he said.

He added, "I think that is the thing which has kept this store in business, because the chains can sell cheaper that we are allowed to."

Dykes, as operator of a successful business, is challenged in another way. He has been confined to a wheelchair since the mid-1960s. He had been unable to walk since birth, and it was something he became accustomed to in growing up.

The physical disability has posed what Dykes classifies as only minor problems. "I am very dependent on my employees, for example. More dependent on employees than most business owners would be. For that reason I am very concerned about getting honest, dependable employees. If they don't show up, I don't open — I am that dependent on them."

Kaye Crawford, who works in the store most of the time, said the wheelchair is the only difference from a typical business operation.

Dykes keeps a catalog of titles and artists, which requires a shelf to contain.

"He also has a tremendous memory," she said. "When a record is located, he always remembers it after that."

Dykes has placed an emphasis on technology in his business. When a record is ordered, the information regarding the order is placed into a computer so it is accessible, rather than relying upon random scraps of paper, which tend to disappear.

He has had rare situations in which the research and ordering process took a year to produce the item. "The customer," he said, "was amazed that we were persistent enough to get it and that we had not lost track of them in the process."

He said, "My people are well-trained, they know a lot about what they are here for, and if they don't know the answer, they will take down the information and do the research necessary to find what you need."

For now, Dykes does not plan to open other stores.

"The possibility exists of doing something like that, and as opportunity and situation should develop, I would not be opposed to that. But at this point, we are maintaining this one and we want to keep it at the highest quality we possibly can. If I were to expand, I would dilute the ability I have here. And we have as near perfect a record of doing what we do as is humanly possible," he said.

"If you need to take lessons and learn to read music, do that. If it would be helpful to you to learn how to play the piano — which I personally believe it would — take some lessons, got to college, get an education. That's so very, very important.

"Be all that you can be in the little things as they come to you now, because that's God's way of kind of grooming you for what's going to happen tomorrow or the next day. If you don't do God's will today, then you won't know what his will is for tomorrow. It's only in doing his will on a consistent basis that it leads you further and further into what he wants you to do."

Miss Patti's life has not been all sunshine and mountain peaks. It's contained its share of valleys.

"There are times when I just feel like, 'Lord, surely you're not unaware of what's happening to me. Why don't you come down and fix it?' And, yet, it's in the valleys that we grow. And, I've been in enough valleys to know that now the valleys don't last forever, that there are mountains on the other side of those valleys.

"So now I kind of feel like, 'Well, OK. I don't like this valley, but I know enough about you Lord to know that there is joy on the other side. I'm going to wait it out."

Her voice drops slightly and she adds, "I have been in many, many valleys and am going through a real change in my life even right now. I'm being called to make some decisions about certain things, and it's very scary, very hard."

She will say no more, except, "Having been in the Lord's service enough now to know that he is going to be with me does make it easier. Although at the time, the feelings of being alone are very real."

A major disappointment in Miss Patti's life, one which she has worked through, occurred about 12 years ago when she auditioned to sing at Disneyland.

"I wanted to be a singer there more than anything else. I didn't make it. That was just a major, major disappointment to me."

That summer found her attending a college she would not have gone to had she made the Disneyland team.

"I ended up meeting my husband, and my life took a completely different turn for the good, I know. So I look back on that and I know how disappointed I was and how that hurt, and yet I can also look back on it and see God's hand in that. That door was closing because some other doors were opening."

She quickly adds, "I don't mean for it to sound like I have all the answers or anything, but I do try not to carry these hurts and disappointments with me. I really do try to work through them."

Recalling the high points in her life requires no memory search.

"People say, 'You have 19 Dove Awards, you have four Grammy's. Can you pick a best out of them?' I say, 'Yeah. Easy. Three kids.' The thing which has given me the most joy is being a wife and a mom. That's the thing I consider the biggest blessing in my life."

Jerry Jeff Walker: Philosopher, storyteller

Talking with Jerry Jeff Walker is like taking a walk into a world of comedy, poetry, storytelling and philosophy.

Temple

Jerry Jeff plays Dos Amigos in Odessa this evening (show starts with Chris Wall at 6 p.m.) and I did an unscheduled telephone interview with him Wednesday. I wrote a feature about him, but in addition, I wanted to take my readers into Jerry Jeff's world by printing the following excerpt from the interview.

I'd just asked him how it feels when people tell him after a performance that he's touched their hearts.

The next voice you hear is Jerry Jeff Walker.

"I say, 'Thank you. I'm glad you were listening.'

"They say, 'Thank you. I'm glad you said it.'

"That's usually about it. It makes me feel glad somebody felt good about it. Yeah.

"The thing about it is I would feel the same way if a guy comes up and says, 'I didn't enjoy anything you did tonight. I had a terrible time.'

"I'd just blow him off and say, 'Well, I wasn't really talking to you, I guess.'

"I still stay pretty steady right in the middle of what I'm doing. I don't get too excited because someone went nuts on one side, and I don't get too upset if somebody doesn't like it at all. I just say, 'It's not your cup of tea.'

"I have a lot of people come up to me and say, 'I wasn't really particularly fond of country music at all, but I like what you did.'

"And I don't even know what that means, but I think I do because I'm not particularly a big country fan, it's like pop country music.

"A guy said to me — I went over to the Masters last week — golf tournament — and a guy said that to me.

"And I said, 'Well, I play country music, I just don't know what country it is.'

"And he laughed, and he said, 'You know other stuff's just kind of whiney, where they just kind of whine about everything.'

"I said, 'Yeah. I kind of get that. I'm not a whiner. I'm more of a positive person. I saw a bumper sticker today that said, 'Magic happens.' I kind of like that as opposed to S— happens.' "

The upbeat way his thoughts bounce is delightful. I can't imagine doing an interview with him without laughing. I certainly felt uplifted when I hung up the phone.

I felt much the same way when I left three recent performances — Casa de Amigos' Children's Performing Arts Series, featuring Mimewock's "Cirkus Bezerkus,' Midland Community Concerts final show of the year, featuring the Harvey Pittel Saxophone Quartet, and the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale's final subscription concert of the season.

All were good concerts, with the saxophone quartet taking the star for excellence.

The saxophone players were masters at their craft and elicited sounds from their instruments that I didn't know a saxophone could make. Their playing and their conversation created a most memorable evening. I think the bumper sticker Jerry Jeff saw says it well — "Magic happens."

Baseball movie major fun to watch

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO

"Major League" is major fun, and you don't even have to be a baseball fan to enjoy it. The team in question is the Cleveland Indians, a baseball team which hasn't won a pennant in 35 years. As if that fact doesn't scream UNDERDOG enough, the new team owner, Rachel Phelps (Margaret Whitton) selects a bunch of misfits to fill the Indians ranks. Ms. Phelps inherits the team following the death of her husband. Her intent is for the Indians to finish "dead last." If the bargain basement athletes play badly enough, attendance will take a dive allowing Ms. Phelps to move the franchise to Miami, where tropical weather and country clubs beckon.

Salcedo

Ms. Phelps doesn't count on the determination of the men to make the most of their once-in-a-lifetime opportunities, however.

The film, which features an ensemble cast, has plenty of wit and energy, thanks to the talents of many of the actors. Charlie Sheen, introduced as "a juvenile delinquent in the off-season," is properly moody as the character "Wild Thing" (so named for his induction into "The Hall of Shame" after his record-breaking number of wild pitches thrown in one inning). Tom "Platoon" Berenger has some good moments as a has-been catcher with bad knees, and Wesley Snipes as outfielder Willie Mays Hayes steals scenes and bases with equal aplomb.

The beguiling Ms. Whitten (Michael J. Fox's seducer in "The Secret of My Success") is a wonderfully convincing self-centered witch. She makes you root even more for the downtrodden players.

Like the rah-rah basketball film "Hoosiers," "Major League" moves toward a predictable conclusion. But it is so much fun getting there, you don't care. Although "Major League" indulges in the fantasy of the underdog playing in the big leagues, it's nice to suspend your belief for a few hours and "enjoy the game." But the rousing big finish deserves most of the cheers.

"Major League" rates 3½ rigs.

"Major League," rated R for language, is playing at the UA Cine 4 on Cuthbert.

'Fletch' still alive, funnier first time around

A sequel to the 1985 hit comedy, "Fletch Lives" again stars Chevy Chase as Fletch, the investigative reporter prone to disguises and, was again directed by Michael Ritchie.

This time Fletch inherits "Belle Isle," a southern mansion in Louisiana. He quits his newspaper job and heads south where he has run-ins with the Ku Klux Klan, television evangelists and toxic wastes.

Fletch immediately meets up with a black character (Cleavon "Blazing Saddles" Little), who introduces himself with "Your great grandparents owned my great grandparents." Fletch also gets involved with his gorgeous real estate agent (Julianne Phillips), who has a laughable (probably unintended) southern accent.

There are some fun touches, such as the yellow tape across Fletch's newspaper office which says "Police line, do not cross," and Fletch's perplexity at a computer system. "All I needed now was a computer and a 10-year-old kid to show me how to work it," he says.

Chase's appearance at "Guest Healer Night" on a Christian television show is humorous and has one of the best Jim-Bob jokes around.

There are some forays into stupidity, such as a "Zip-a-Dee-Doo-Dah" production number featuring Chase dressed as a Colonel Sanders lookalike and dozens of extras. Still the sheer silliness of some of the gags are laugh-out-loud funny.

Yes, Fletch is still alive and watchable, but he was funnier the first time around.

"Fletch Lives" gets 2¾ rigs.

MOVIE RIG COUNT

- DRY HOLE — a complete and total loss
- STRIPPER — barely worth the time
- PRODUCER — a good investment
- GUSHER — not to be missed

"Fletch Lives," which has been rated PG ("Parental Guidance Suggested"), contains some mildly vulgar language and situations.

Texas Girls' Choir performs

Close to 40 girls from the North Texas area concertized and went sightseeing as they left on tour this past week with the Texas Girls' Choir.

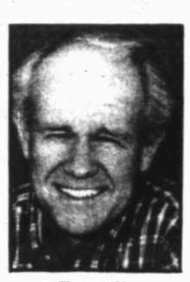
Farrell puts some of himself in role of real-life attorney

By JERRY BUCK

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Mike Farrell knew when he took on the role of Paul Gianelli, the attorney who defended a New York teen-ager accused of arranging her father's murder, that he wanted to put some of himself into the character.



Farrell

"I saw some video tape of him being interviewed," said Farrell, best remembered for his "M*A*S*H" role as B.J. Hunnicut. "I decided I wasn't going to do an imitation of him. I was going to create my own character. He was very real within the script."

In tonight's ABC movie "A Deadly Silence," as in actual events on Long Island, N.Y., Gianelli defends teen-ager Cheryl Pierson on a charge that she hired a schoolmate to kill her father. She contended that she had him killed to stop his sexual abuse.

"I met the reporter who wrote the book," he said, referring to Dena Kleiman of The New York Times. "She was a terrific source of information. Gianelli was a straightforward lawyer whose practice was mostly domestic but he had done some corporate work.

"The thing that interested me was that on a human level he really connected with this girl and became very committed to her welfare. The more he found about what her life had been like, the more passionate he became about her case."

Kleiman's book related Cheryl's story of her years-long entrapment in an incestuous relationship with her father, James Pierson. It probes deeper, however, to reveal a conspiracy of silence by friends and relatives.

Pierson was shot to death on Feb. 5, 1986, at his home in Selden. Cheryl, then 16, was accused of paying a classmate $1,000 to kill him. She served 3½ months of her 6-month sentence.

"A Deadly Silence" also stars Charles Haid as James Pierson, a robust electrician who clung to such trappings of youth as fast cars and motorcycles; Sally Struthers as social worker Marilyn Adams; Bruce Weitz as Detective James McCready, and Heather Fairfield as Cheryl. John Patterson directed from a screenplay by Jennifer Miller for executive producer Robert Greenwald.

"Because of the circumstances" of Cheryl's case, Farrell said, "some people felt she should not serve any time at all but should be put on some form of probation. She was a person who was trying to extricate herself, albeit violently, from a terrible situation.

"She hired a classmate to kill her father. Her class had discussed a story about an abused wife who had hired someone to kill her husband. She said, 'Who would do a thing like that?' and her classmate said he would."

Farrell has not been in a series since "M*A*S*H" left the air in 1983. He had been a journeyman actor before that, appearing in two other series, but it was "M*A*S*H" that gave him star power. He has starred in several unsuccessful pilots, however, including the 1985 movie-pilot "Private Sessions" in which he played a psychologist.

He said he would now prefer to devote his time to movies, as he has done for the past several years. He produces feature and television movies and appears in some TV films. His production partner is Marvin Minoff. They produced the feature film "Dominick and Eugene," and Farrell also directed the TV movie "Run Till You Fall." He starred in "Memorial Day" and "Choices of the Heart."

If many of Farrell's films seem to have messages, it's no accident. He is passionately committed to causes.

One is fighting pollution, and his next movie, "The Smell of Money," deals with toxic waste. He co-wrote the story with David Reiss, and Albert Rubin wrote the screenplay. Farrell will produce and star in the movie for Turner Network Television.

"The movie's about a man against the system," said Farrell. "His daughter becomes ill and dies from what he learns is toxic waste dumped into a stream by a factory. It's a one-factory town, and when he takes on the factory everyone turns on him rather than the polluter. We'll shoot it on location in Utah."

Since 1984, Farrell has been married to actress Shelley Fabares, who is currently co-starring in the ABC series "Coach."

Carter sings at cafe when she's not on 'Desiging Women'

By CHARLES AUSTIN
Hearst News Service

NEW YORK — Julia Sugarbaker sings!

Dixie Carter, the sometimes uptight and always opinionated Ms. Sugarbaker on televison's "Designing Women" sitcom does more than sing when she takes the stage at the elegant Cafe Carlyle.

With a crystalline voice and come-hither smile, she styles the songs, blending southern belle flirtatiousness with sexy chanteuse soul. Nobody from Michigan could sing "Honeysuckle Rose" the way the Tennessee-born Carter does; and while Jacque Brel's "Chanson des Vieux Amants" (Song of Old Lovers) is a stretch for her, the maturity and passion she brings to the number make it sizzle.

Where some cabaret singers would get by belting out old favorites, Carter has a lot more fun with her varied repertoire. In "Come a Little Closer," by her one-time voice coach John Wallowitch, she seduces the audience. Singing the satirical "I'm 27," she tweaks her own 40-something sensuality. After the Jacques Brel intensity, she shifts to the light foolishness of Shel Silverstein's "Beans Taste Fine."

And by the time she purrs Gershwin's little-known "Do It Again" and sings Cole Porter's "Let's Fall in Love," we want to and we have.

She never resorts to theatrics or razzle-dazzle jazziness to bring the audience under her spell. This lady's too smooth for that. She enchants completely, but she does it with the personality and passion that create the song stylings.

All this hot stuff might come as a surprise to Carter's television fans, who know her as the prim and sensible Ms. Sugarbaker. But before her television success, she set out to become an opera singer, switched to musicals, sang repetory at Lincoln Center for two seasons, and then did comedy cabaret with Lily Tomlin and Madelaine Kahn. She knows her way around a stage.

She's backed by a quartet — piano, bull fiddle, violin and drums — that gives good support but never gets in her way.

And the Cafe Carlyle setting is perfect for her intimate performance. Just off the classy lobby of one of New York's fine old hotels, The Carlyle, it's several cuts above the bistros that frequently host even the best cabaret singers. Murals in soft pastels, decent lighting and comfortable tables, a real rarity in such places, mean you don't have to squirm through dinner and the show.

Ex-baseball player caddy for his wife

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The caddy lugging Nancy Lopez's golf bag might look familiar to baseball fans. He's retired baseball player Ray Knight, who just happens to be Lopez's husband.

"It's something I've always wanted to do. I can be with her out here and the family more. I've enjoyed it," said Knight, 33, recently retired after an 18-year career, the last 13 in the major leagues.

"I know a lot of people tease him about carrying my bag, but he's my best friend, not just my husband," said Lopez, a Ladies Professional Golf Association Hall of Famer.

Knight, the Most Valuable Player of the 1986 World Series when he was with the New York Mets, said his new job, "is not as easy as it looks."

"He knows what he's doing out there," said Lopez, who will be among the favorites in the $450,000 Ai Star-Centinela Hospital Classic that started Friday at Rancho Park in Los Angeles.

"I've been in baseball 18 years, so I know about competition, understanding pressures, failures and successes," said Knight. "So I can relate to what Nancy's feeling. I know when to say something and when not to."

And Knight's advice should carry a certain amount of weight — he did, after all, beat his wife at golf once, some three years ago. He shot a par 72 to beat her by one shot.

"He got lucky," Lopez said.

Even NCAA basketball finals couldn't put CBS in first place

By KATHRYN BAKER

NEW YORK (AP) — Last year, the NCAA championship basketball game gave CBS a rare first place for the week in the A.C. Nielsen Co. television ratings.

This year's game, in which Michigan defeated Seton Hall by one point in overtime, was in the top 10. But it wasn't enough to knock NBC out of first place, where it has been for 42 straight weeks.

NBC won the week that ended Sunday with a 15.4 rating. CBS had a 13.0 and ABC 12.5. For the season, NBC has a 16.0 rating, ABC 12.9 and CBS 12.6.

The week was fairly typical, except that the onset of daylight saving time seemed to affect the earlier shows since viewers tend to be less eager to plop in front of the tube when it's still light outside.

Therefore, "The Cosby Show," which starts off the night for NBC on Thursday, found itself in second place behind ABC's "Roseanne," which is broadcast an hour later on Tuesday night, even though "Cosby" had a bigger share of the audience.

"Roseanne" had the highest rating — 23.3, but a 35 share. "Cosby" had a 22.4 rating, but a 38 share. The rating is a percentage of the nation's 9.4 million homes with television. The share is a percentage of sets actually in use.

Daylight saving time also affected the news ratings, all were down somewhat. "ABC World News Tonight" was first with a 10.1 rating and a 20 share, slightly ahead of the "CBS Evening News" with a 9.9 and 20 share. "NBC Nightly News" had an 8.9 and 18 share.

The top 10 prime-time shows last week were: "Roseanne" ABC, "The Cosby Show" NBC, "Cheers" NBC, "A Different World" NBC, "60 Minutes" CBS, "NCAA Championship — Michigan vs. Seton Hall" CBS, "Golden Girls" NBC, "Empty Nest" NBC, "L.A. Law" NBC and "Murder, She Wrote" CBS.

ABC's "Columbo" came in 12th for the week, a good showing. The bad news for ABC is "Moonlighting," which was in the bottom 10. "Moonlighting" went on hiatus earlier this year, then moved to Sunday night where it had a 6.2 and 10 share last week. Only two other prime-time shows, both on ABC, rank lower: "HeartBeat" and "Men." Even Fox had three shows with higher ratings than "Moonlighting."

CBS got a so-so performance out of the premiere of "The Robert Guillaume Show" which finished 46th.

ABC won the Sunday movie battle with a repeat of "Romancing the Stone." It was 15th, out-rating NBC's Perry Mason movie, at 18th. CBS' "Bridge to Silence," starring Marlee Matlin in her first speaking role, ranked 35th. CBS' Sunday schedule was pushed back because of an overrun of the Masters golf tournament.

'Echo of Lions' tells story of American slave rebellion

By GENEVA COLLINS

NEW YORK (AP) — Historical novelist Barbara Chase-Riboud, whose first book dusted the cobwebs from the obscure tale of Thomas Jefferson's slave mistress Sally Hemings, has a new work reviving another of what she calls history's "invisible men."

"Echo of Lions" (William Morrow, $19.95) tells the story of what is believed to be the only successful slave rebellion in American history.

Joseph Cinque, a Mende warrior, is brought to Cuba in 1839 to be sold as a slave in the New World. After he and more than four dozen other men are purchased and put aboard the Spanish schooner Amistad to be taken to their owners' homes, he masterminds an uprising, kills the captain and orders the surviving crew to sail them back to Africa.

For two months the ship zig-zags up the coast of the United States as the men think they are heading home. When the vessel, its sails in tatters and those aboard nearly dead from lack of food and water, finally lands at New York's Long Island, the men are taken into custody.

The young nation's court system must decide whether the Africans are property belonging to the Spaniards who bought them or free men who had been abducted and illegally taken to Cuba. Abolitionists push the case to the U.S. Supreme Court, with former President John Quincy Adams arguing the men's cause before the justices. The high court, in issuing one of its earliest civil rights opinions, upholds a lower court's ruling that the men are free.

In a recent interview, Chase-Riboud (pronounced Ri-BOO), is asked, "Why isn't this story taught in every high school American history class?"

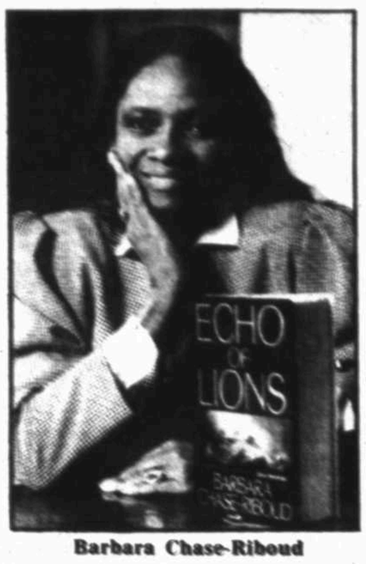
"I think that's a common reaction — how, why, hasn't it become a part of American history," she said. "And I can just say that he (Joseph Cinque) is one of those invisible men of history — he's not the only one — that have for one reason or another been eliminated or forgotten, because of race, because of status or simply by accident."

Chase-Riboud is a Philadelphia-born sculptor, novelist and poet who has lived in Paris since the early 1960s. She is a striking woman with exquisite cheekbones and a pleasing voice who frames her words carefully when she speaks. She will not give her age; reference works say she was born in either 1936 or 1939.

Her first work of fiction, "Sally Hemings," created a sensation in 1979 with its imaginative depiction of the affair that Thomas Jefferson is believed to have had with one of his slaves for 38 years, fathering her seven children. After its publication, Jefferson historians insisted anew that there has never been any substantiation of the affair. The book earned Chase-Riboud the Janet Heidinger Kafka Prize for Excellence in Fiction by an American woman.

Chase-Riboud said one of her most surprising finds in researching the saga of Joseph Cinque was discovering that the 19th-century Mende society of the Guinea coast had a judicial system "amazingly similar to the American one. They had a Supreme Court, a district court, a circuit court. They had appeal, witness cross-examination and bail.

"That allowed me to present Cinque not as a kind of dumb savage in a situation he doesn't understand, but as a man, a very perplexed man, stuck in a situation that he does understand."



Barbara Chase-Riboud

Chase-Riboud spent three years working on "Echo of Lions," poring over court transcripts recorded in longhand at the archives of the U.S. Supreme Court, the Library of Congress and elsewhere.

But why use the novel form after such painstaking historical research?

"To dramatize a historical personage who has not entered into the mainstream, you have to find his personality, imagine one for him," she said, then recited a favorite quotation by Voltaire: "There is no history, only fictions of varying degrees of plausibility."

"You have only to read two books on the same historical person to know that there's a lot of interpretation, even in history," she said.

Chase-Riboud, who studied fine arts at Temple and Yale universities, was already a recognized sculptor before she began writing novels. Her bronze-and-textile pieces are in the permanent collections of the Museum of Modern Art and Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York, and the Centre Pompidou in Paris, among other places. She has also published two volumes of poetry.

She began writing historical novels when she couldn't persuade her writer friends to take on these little-known tales she found so fascinating. "Valide," her novel published two years ago, is in the same spirit; it is about white slavery in the Ottoman empire.

The author sees "Sally Hemings" and "Echo of Lions" as the first two books of a thematic trilogy of forgotten episodes in American history.

The third book, which she is working on now, is based on a Civil War battle in which a Union general, Benjamin Franklin Butler, wanted to prove that blacks were brave enough to be used in combat. He sent a black regiment up against Confederate artillery with rifles that had been sealed so as not to slow the troops' assault. The soldiers captured the hill using only bayonets and their bare hands, suffering overwhelming casualties.

Returning to "Echo of Lions," Chase-Riboud said the specialness of Joseph Cinque is that he was a "natural hero."

"There are so few black heroes in American literature that are true heroes," she said, "in the sense that they are neither particularly enraged or oppressed but have a destiny that is historical and that they can follow it as free men, without having all kinds of other burdens."

Caunitz's books convey 'stink and hustle' of police work

NEW YORK (AP) — Policeman-turned-author William J. Caunitz is going great guns writing about the "stink and hustle" of police work.

His first novel, "One Police Plaza," was a national best seller in 1984 and later made into a TV movie. His second, "Suspect," also became a best seller. Altogether, they have been translated into 10 languages. Now, he is out with his third, "Black Sand" (Crown $18.95), and his publisher is launching a major promotional campaign.

Caunitz, who says he is always trying to grow as a writer, gives each novel different dimensions, but they all involve the New York City Police Department, where he served 30 years, starting as a foot patrolman in 1955 and retiring in 1984 as detective-lieutenant in command of a squad.

Naturally, all his books convey, as the late mystery writer, John D. MacDonald said, "the authentic stink and hustle of precinct police work in New York city, the politics, the stress and a glimpse at that mysterious quality that keeps a good cop dedicated."

Caunitz, 56, is proud of his books' authenticity.

"A non-policeman writes a book about policemen, and it doesn't make it," Caunitz said in an interview. "You have to be there to know it...There are...things that in my judgment make a cop book work. Because they are real..."

He said it is difficult for an outsider to understand what it is really like to be a policeman.

"The public has some sense of it, but it's hard for people to imagine other people killing, and getting pleasure from killing. It's hard for people to imagine dismembered corpses. And these are things policemen deal with every day."

Writing about police work does not limit his horizons, he said. On the contrary, it has endless possibilities.

"I mean I could write about a cop being involved in the crucifixion of Christ," he said. "I don't want to tie myself down to writing about payroll robberies, muggings and stick-ups. After all, policemen are involved in other things. We have policemen who work on art thefts. We have policemen who work in intelligence operations with various agencies of the federal government. I want to make the public aware that policemen do many, many, many things."

"Black Sand," for example, provides a fictitious answer to one of history's mysteries: What happened to a very valuable copy of Homer's Iliad — the one Aristotle personally made for Alexander the Great? The copy was last seen on Alexander's funeral chariot.

In "Black Sand," the ancient volume is found buried in the ruins on the Greek island of Santorini, stolen and smuggled out to the United States. An NYPD detective and a Greek detective join forces to get it back to the rightful owners — the people of Greece.

In writing the novel, Caunitz had to enter and extensively research the art history world. It is just fine with Caunitz who is no stranger to academic discipline. He joined the police department as a high school graduate but managed to attend college in off-duty hours and received a master's degree in American history from Hofstra University.

"I had to do a lot of term papers in graduate school, and if you come away with nothing else from these studies, you have the ability to use a library," he said.

Caunitz, who enjoyed his police career because he likes to help people and loves the thrill of detective work, had not given a thought to writing most of his life. He decided to write only when a publishing editor he met at a party encouraged him to do so, because the editor was greatly impressed with Caunitz' story-telling ability. It was 1974. It took him almost a decade to write and get his first novel published.

Caunitz, standing a fit and trim 6-foot-1 and sporting the inevitable policeman's mustache, was born in Brooklyn. He is divorced and lives in Manhattan with "Boo," a black mutt. He has two daughters: Beth is a dentist and Katherine is a New York City police officer.

He is already into his fourth book, which he says will be different from any of the previous ones, but will have cops as the main characters.

'Black Sand' imaginative, authentic suspense novel

"The Black Sand," by William J. Caunitz. Crown. 339 Pages. $18.95.

With his latest novel, policeman-turned-author William J. Caunitz proves once again that the New York Police Department's loss is the book world's gain.

"The Black Sand" is a story of international suspense that sparkles with intelligence, soaring imagination, and the authenticity that could come only from someone who has spent 30 years in law enforcement in one of the world's most dangerous cities.

A Review

The story begins brutally in Voula, a seaside village near Athens. Two Americans pull up in a car in the village square and kill two Greek policemen and several bystanders with machine gun fire. Among the dead are the wife and child of Maj. Andreas Vassos of the Hellenic police, who was in the village on vacation. Vassos returns fire, killing one assailant and wounding the other.

Upon learning that the crime was arranged by an Athens art dealer, Vassos goes to the dealer's shop, but it is too late; the man is murdered. He finds an amphora containing black sand, which apparently contains a priceless copy of Homer's epic poem, the "Iliad," personally copied by Aristotle for Alexander the Great.

The search for the thief and the "Iliad" moves to New York, where Vassos joins forces with Lt. Teddy Lucas of the New York police.

Like his previous best sellers, "One Police Plaza" and "Suspect," "Black Sand" transcends the mystery genre and becomes a thought-provoking piece of literature that captures life.

3 NT	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Six of ◇

Before committing yourself to a line, see if there is any way to develop an alternative. This hand is a typical case.

TRY A LITTLE TEMPTATION

South had a difficult decision. You normally don't suppress three-card support headed by an honor in partner's major, yet he had a sure diamond stopper, soft values and an absolutely square hand. We accept his choice of three no trump, especially since four spades would have been no bargain, anyway.

West led his fourth-best diamond, and the percentage play is clear. Take the spade finesse. If it wins, you have nine tricks; if it loses, move on to the next hand.

However, before you actually tackle the spade suit, lead the queen of hearts from hand. A good defender in the West suit will play low in tempo, and you go up with the ace, return to hand with the king of spades and take the finesse. That means down an extra trick, as the cards lie.

Where you gain is when an unthinking West, who learned to "cover an honor with an honor," puts up the king of hearts at trick two. Now you have eight fast tricks, and can combine your chances for a ninth.

Cash the king-ace of spades to see if the queen drops, planning to take the club finesse if her majesty does not appear. If she does, you can be real greedy. Take your heart tricks and the ace of clubs, then get to the table with a spade and run that suit. That gives you ten tricks, and you can hook the club to score at least one additional overtrick.

Group wants filmmakers to reveal when they pay to use products

By JAY ARNOLD

WASHINGTON (AP) — That beer your favorite movie star quaffed in his most recent film may be part of an "insidious" advertising scheme, according to an advocacy group that wants to require moviemakers to reveal when they're being paid to show commercial products.

The Center for Science in the Public Interest says the movie "Bull Durham" included 21 shots of Miller Lite beer, "Superman II" featured the Marlboro cigarette logo, and "E.T. the Extra-Terrestrial" prominently displayed Reese's Pieces and Coors beer.

While the center didn't know if money changed hands between filmmakers and manufacturers on all these movies, it said Philip Morris paid $42,500 to get its Marlboro logo into the Superman film.

On the coming James Bond movie, "Licensed to Kill," Philip Morris paid $350,000 to have Lark cigarettes shown on screen, center staff attorney Charles Mitchell said.

The center is asking state attorneys general to determine whether the undisclosed placement of commercial products in films constitutes deceptive advertising that violates state laws.

It also said broadcasting movies on television in which there are paid placements of cigarettes violates a 1971 law that prohibits advertising of cigarettes on TV.

Mitchell said the center urged states to require filmmakers to state at the beginning of a movie, for example: "Notice. This film contains paid advertising for Marlboro cigarettes."

The center also said it would ask state officials to determine whether the placement of alcoholic beverages and cigarettes in youth-oriented films should be prohibited because youths cannot legally buy such products.

The group said it was petitioning the Federal Communications Commission to rescind a rule that exempts theatrical films from the general requirement for television programs that paid product placements be disclosed.

"The paid placement of junk foods, alcoholic beverages and cigarettes in movies is one of the most insidious forms of advertising," said Michael Jacobson, the center's executive director. "Advertising in movies is blatantly unfair to audiences who go to be entertained, not advertised to."

Elizabeth Barnes, a spokeswoman for the Motion Picture Association of America, said the association had no comment.

Rep. Tom Luken, D-Ohio, on March 17 asked Attorney General Dick Thornburgh to investigate whether paid placement of cigarettes in movies made for theaters and then shown on television violates the 1971 Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act that prohibits cigarette ads on TV.

A senior aide to Luken, who spoke only on condition he not be identified, said the $350,000 and $42,500 payments from Philip Morris were made directly to the producers of the films. Liggett & Meyers also paid $30,000 to have its Eve cigarettes appear in "Supergirl," the aide said.

"Our position is that if you show 'Superman' or 'Supergirl'...on TV you violated that law," the aide said.

Violating the act is punishable by a fine of up to $10,000.

Steven Weiss, a spokesman for Philip Morris U.S.A., said the $350,000 payment was the total for a six-month promotional campaign that was to coincide with the Bond film's premiere in Japan, where Philip Morris markets Lark. He said the product placement portion was only a "small amount" of the $350,000.

He said Philip Morris' policy is not to pay for use of its products or logos in movies but that it will provide such materials free.

"When requests are made of us...we will do so only if there is a smoking scene already in the film. But we don't pay to have our products placed in films," Weiss said.

Weiss said Liggett & Myers markets Lark in the United States and that Philip Morris could not benefit from Lark appearing in the U.S. showings of the Bond film.
