Schmidt says allies left out of sanctions decision

WASHINGTON (AP) — West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt complained today that the United States did not consult with its European allies before announcing sanctions against the Soviet Union as a result of the Polish crisis.

Members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee said Schmidt raised the point repeatedly during a breakfast with them in advance of his meeting with President Reagan.

Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., said Schmidt made the "major point that he feels he has not been consulted."

Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., said the West German leader "cited the Kennedy administration's handling of the Cuban missile crisis in the 1960's where the consultation was excellent and there was uniform support."

"In this case, there was no consultation and lack of uniformity in support," Leahy added.

Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, said Schmidt "repeated several times during the meeting that he was not consulted in advance and was expected to fall in."

Schmidt has disputed Reagan's assertion that Moscow instigated the Dec. 13 decree of martial law in Poland and has shown no willingness to join the United States in imposing economic sanctions against Moscow.

Likewise, very few of the 15 member nations of NATO have expressed much enthusiasm for the American action.

U.S. officials cautioned against expecting any agreement from today's meeting, but made it clear that Washington is counting on its allies for support.

Said one senior official: "If we're not to receive support from our allies for the steps we've taken, obviously this would be a serious matter insofar as this alliance of ours is concerned. There's no question about that. I don't think that's what's going to happen."

Haig will join other NATO ministers in Brussels next Monday to discuss the Polish crisis and assess the possibility of developing an alliance-wide consensus.

The U.S. official, who briefed reporters on the understanding he would not be identified by name, said Washington hoped for "parallel action from our allies where possible" and "complementary steps" in other instances.

"But under any circumstances," the official stressed, "we believe our allies should not undercut the steps we have taken against the Soviet Union."

Looming in the background of the Reagan-Schmidt talks is the threat of a widening NATO rift over the sanctions.

"I think both we and the Germans are going to come into this meeting fully conscious of the fact that we have got to be careful not to let what has been an issue created in Poland by Poles and Soviets become an issue of major debate within the West," the official said. "I think we both approach it with that point in mind."

Trying to minimize differences between Washington and Bonn, U.S. officials noted that both countries have pressed for a lifting of martial law in Poland, the release of jailed Solidarity leaders and a resumption of the dialogue among the government, the church and the union.

The U.S. sanctions included a suspension of flights to the United States by the Soviet-airline Aeroflot and a ban on sales of equipment the Soviets need for construction of a natural gas pipeline to Western Europe.

The U.S. official who briefed reporters indicated that the United States would be displeased if a NATO ally offered to sell Russia pipeline equipment.

Little hope offered for reversing TEC closing

A meeting held Monday to discuss the recent closing of the Texas Employment Commission (TEC) office here was well attended, but the discussion provided no answers and little hope that the Pampa employment office would be reopened.

State Representative Foster Whaley called the meeting and rounded up Congressman Jack Hightower, TEC Executive Director of Field Services Pat Joiner, TEC Amarillo District Office representative Bill King, Chamber of Commerce President and County Judge Carl Kennedy, Pampa Mayor H.R. Thompson and several representatives of Pampa businesses to participate in the discussion.

But after two hours of discussion it was a quiet question from longtime TEC employee Bill Ragsdale that ended any hope of seeing the TEC office reopened.

"Even if there were enough funds to reopen the Pampa office, would it be reopened?" Ragsdale asked.

"No, I can't see it," replied Joiner.

Joiner, who flew to Pampa from Austin Monday, told the assembly that through the past two years 1,200 TEC employees had been laid off from the over-fattened TEC offices.

"But the President's new budget cuts are making us pare down even more. We did, through attrition, and thought we had done a good job," Joiner said.

"Subsequently Reagan asked for more cuts, and we had to eliminate more jobs and services. We lost 350 of our entry level personnel. Now we have been asked to pare down again," Joiner said.

"We will be closing 50 to 60 TEC offices in the state of Texas," Joiner said.

"Right now, the Amarillo TEC office and the Borger TEC office will remain open to take care of the services," Joiner said.

"We will also have a representative in the areas that lost their TEC offices, to process unemployment insurance, once a week," Joiner said.

Whaley tried to convince Joiner to rethink his decision about closing the Pampa office and leaving the Borger TEC office open.

"I am not even sure the Borger TEC office will be open 60 days from now," Joiner said.

Congressman Jack Hightower asked where the funds for the TEC came from.

"The Federal Unemployment Tax Act (FUTA) funds are collected from employers based on a proportion of their employees wages," Joiner said.

Texas employers have contributed $250 million to the TEC this year, but the funds are sent to Washington, D.C., where they are reappropriated to the states," Joiner said.

"But we are only getting back $125 million and will even lose more this year," Hightower said.

"Some of the Northeastern states have borrowed so extensively from the FUTA funds and have not paid back that the money had to come from somewhere," Hightower said.

"You could say it's the battle between the Sunbelt's high employment area and the Frostbelt's low employment area," Hightower said.

"Congress is trying to initiate a national budget cut program but it can't be done. We cannot cut the budget and balance the deficit because no one wants to suffer. We didn't deserve to get the additional TEC cuts, but we got them," Hightower said.

"And there will be more cuts this year, and I am very anxious to see how the TEC fares," Hightower said.

"How can they expect to cut the food stamp and welfare budgets, when they turn around and cut the programs that put people to work," Hightower said.

"Joiner and the TEC did a big job by cutting the 1,200 jobs. But now they are asked to cut more," Hightower said.

The question of the FUTA funds that are paid in Texas was brought up again by Whaley.

"They aren't cutting the FUTA taxes. They are just cutting the services," Whaley said.

"There are other services paid for out of the FUTA taxes," Hightower said.

A proposal made earlier by Carl Kennedy was shot down quickly.

Kennedy asked if the Borger office with five employees and the Pampa office with four employees could each be cut down to one or two employees and then each handle a portion of the TEC services.

"No way," Joiner answered.

"Even the central TEC offices in Austin will be losing 188 employees, but we cannot cut more in Austin because our employees there handle the unemployment insurance payments," Joiner said.

A question about letting the state of Texas handle the employment commission and get the federal government out of it altogether was raised.

"It sounds easy, but it cannot be done easily," Hightower said. "However, if you are serious about that, there are many organizations currently thinking along those lines."

"Write letters to the President, your congressman and the Office of Management and Budget. These agencies may take what you are saying about the FUTA funds appropriated to Texas and reorganize," Hightower said.

Hightower seemed to understand the inner workings of Washington, but his answers about the TEC only brought disappointment to the members of the Pampa business community.

Pampa man's injuries investigated

A seriously injured 75-year-old man Albert Lewis Wolfe of 532 S. Somerville remains in critical condition in High Plains Baptist Hospital in Amarillo today, after he was found Monday by his partially blind daughter.

According to Walter Johnson, spokesman for Coronado Community Hospital, Wolfe was transported by ambulance to the Coronado Community Hospital about 1:30 a.m. Monday, uncoherent, suffering from a fractured left leg, nose injuries and possible back injuries. Johnson said Wolfe was admitted with the leg injury and suffering from a possible stroke. Wolfe also was reported unshaven, unkempt and suffering from dehydration, thought to be a result of being unattended after receiving the injuries.

Wolfe was transported to High Plains Baptist Hospital Monday night after initial treatment in the Intensive Care Unit at Coronado Community Hospital.

A police report was filed by Wolfe's daughter, Dorothy Allen, of the same address, at 5:18 p.m. Monday, alleging that someone had beaten her father.

Pampa Police Chief J. J. Ryzman said today that the daughter told authorities she last saw her father on New Year's Eve and upon returning home Monday morning, she found him injured and helpless.

Chief Ryzman said the report and suspicious injuries are under investigation to ascertain whether or not the man fell and injured himself or if foul play was involved.

Allen resigns; Clark moves in WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, opting for a national security adviser with more authority than he gave deposed Richard V. Allen, is turning to a long-time confidante with little experience in foreign affairs.

The president carried out the first major personnel shakeup of his administration Monday by naming Deputy Secretary of State William P. Clark Jr. to replace Allen, whose resignation was mutually agreed upon.

At the same time, Reagan said Clark 50 would be given daily access to the Oval Office, something Allen lacked.

Allen had reported to Reagan through presidential counselor Edwin Meese III, who coordinates domestic and foreign policy.

Clark, a former California Supreme Court justice, was Reagan's chief of staff when Reagan was governor of California and is one of the most senior members of the president's inner circle. He planned to begin work today.

in the same White House basement office Allen used.

The president, in accepting Allen's resignation, said no evidence of wrongdoing had been found in Justice Department and White House probes of the former national security adviser's conduct.

"It's rather unusual that someone who had been the subject of a lot of rumors and allegations over a long period of time could go through a rigorous and meticulous examination and be substantiated in every detail and still find himself in a situation where his resignation would be submitted and accepted," Allen said.

Later in an appearance on ABC's "Nightline," Allen said he had asked Reagan to reinstate him Monday afternoon.

"It seemed that that was not possible, precisely because of the accumulation of what I considered to be political circumstances," he said. "Having been cleared, the best thing was to take whatever burden might have been caused by my inadvertence or oversight away from the president."

Dallas group buys Dr. Pepper plant

A Dallas corporation has acquired the Dr. Pepper Plant, 834 S. Hobart, for a $1.1 million price tag.

Chester Huff Jr., former owner of the Dr. Pepper Plant here, reported that the Amarillo Coca Cola Bottling Company, a part of the Coca Cola Bottling Group Southwest of Dallas, purchased the assets, including the franchise, name and rolling equipment of Dr. Pepper.

Huff will retain the real estate and will lease the building back to the Dallas corporation. Huff will operate under the name of Chester Huff Inc.

"Officials of the Coca Cola Bottling Group Southwest have agreed to make a place for all the 10 former Dr. Pepper employees. However, they may not all decide to go to Amarillo. The production at the Dr. Pepper plant here has been stopped, and the bottling will take place in Amarillo," Huff said.

"The Coca Cola Bottling Group Southwest took over the Dr. Pepper Plant on Monday. The production (bottling) has been stopped. We have previously done our own bottling, but now it will be done in Amarillo," Karen Keyes, Huff's daughter, said.

"Some of the people in the Dr. Pepper production department have been offered positions in Amarillo. The route drivers have been kept on here, as well as the route supervisors," Keyes said.

"There will be a more modern facility, and we want the people to know they can expect the same quality of service as in the past," Huff said.

"All franchise policies will continue to come from the parent company in Dallas," Huff said.

The ownership of the Pampa Coca Cola plant, according to plant officials, remains as before.

Officials for the Coca Cola Plant reported they are in negotiations with the Amarillo Coca Cola Bottling Company to handle the production of the product, but no sale of the plant has been completed.

Bell business office soon to be out of service

As of Jan. 22, the Southwestern Bell Telephone business and phone center office at 301 N. Ballard will be closed, the work center will remain open.

Offices in Borger, Hereford, and Canadian also will be closed for business and phone center services.

"What will be left will be a Bell System Service Center," according to Phil Bode, Southwestern Bell Telephone spokesman in Lubbock.

"We will have a payment agency, a phone display and a pickup point for equipment exchanges. There just won't be a business office where the customer can go in and discuss their bills and service," Bode said.

"However, we have set up a toll free number that will provide this service," Bode said.

He said residential customers can call 951-2141 for information on bills and service.

"The residential service group in Amarillo will answer any questions about the phone service, which will all be tied into a computer," Bode said.

"Of the 50 Southwestern Bell employees currently working in Pampa, we will keep 35 in the work center. The other 15 will be supervisory," Bode said.

"In other words, no one will lose their positions," Bode assured.

"We give everyone an option to transfer to another location or to work in another department in the same city," Bode said.

"There are always some people that do not want to relocate and, therefore, will retire early," Bode said.

"We are not anticipating any layoffs due to the change," Bode said.

"We have been phasing out the business office in Pampa for a few years now, so there weren't too many employees there," Bode said.

"The Amarillo office and the entire West Texas area will continue to grow. Therefore, we will be increasing our work force in these areas," Bode said.

Building spending up, so is money supply

By The Associated Press

American auto manufacturers, beset by a reluctant buying public and high interest rates, said they produced the fewest cars last year in 20 years.

The automakers said Monday that 1981 production fell about 1.5 percent from a year earlier to 6,083,170 cars, excluding Volkswagens of America's output. The final total, even with VW figures included, is expected to be the lowest for any year since 1961 when 5,516,317 cars were built.

But while the auto industry was reporting more gloom news, the government's latest report on construction spending offered a slightly brighter note.

The Commerce Department said spending for new construction rose 0.2 percent in November, after falling 0.5 percent in October and rising 0.5 percent in September.

After adjustment for inflation, however, new construction spending fell 0.1 percent in November, the 10th consecutive monthly decline, department officials said.

The value of construction put in place through November was $217.5 billion, 3.3 percent above the level for the same period of 1980, it said.

"It's an improvement in one of the most beleaguered sectors of the economy," said Lucy Hunt, chief economist of Fidelity Bank in Philadelphia.

The recession has forced business managers to reduce operations, thereby easing corporate loan demand and taking off upward pressure on interest rates.

But the prospects of an immediate sharp decline in interest rates was darkened somewhat Monday by the Federal Reserve Board's report of a larger-than-expected increase in the basic money supply measure for the week ended Dec. 23.

The Fed said M1B, a measure of money readily available for spending, rose $1.4 billion. For the latest four weeks,

Spadolini government comes under attack over jailbreak

ROME (AP) - A public outcry arose over the prison escape of four suspected left-wing terrorists and a government spokesman said 90 percent of Italy's prisons are just as vulnerable.

Police sources said they had found no evidence yet to indicate the daring, well-organized escape Sunday afternoon from the women's prison in Rovigo, in northern Italy, was an attempt by the Red Brigades terrorists to divert police forces from their hunt in the same area for kidnapped U.S. Brig. Gen. James L. Dozier.

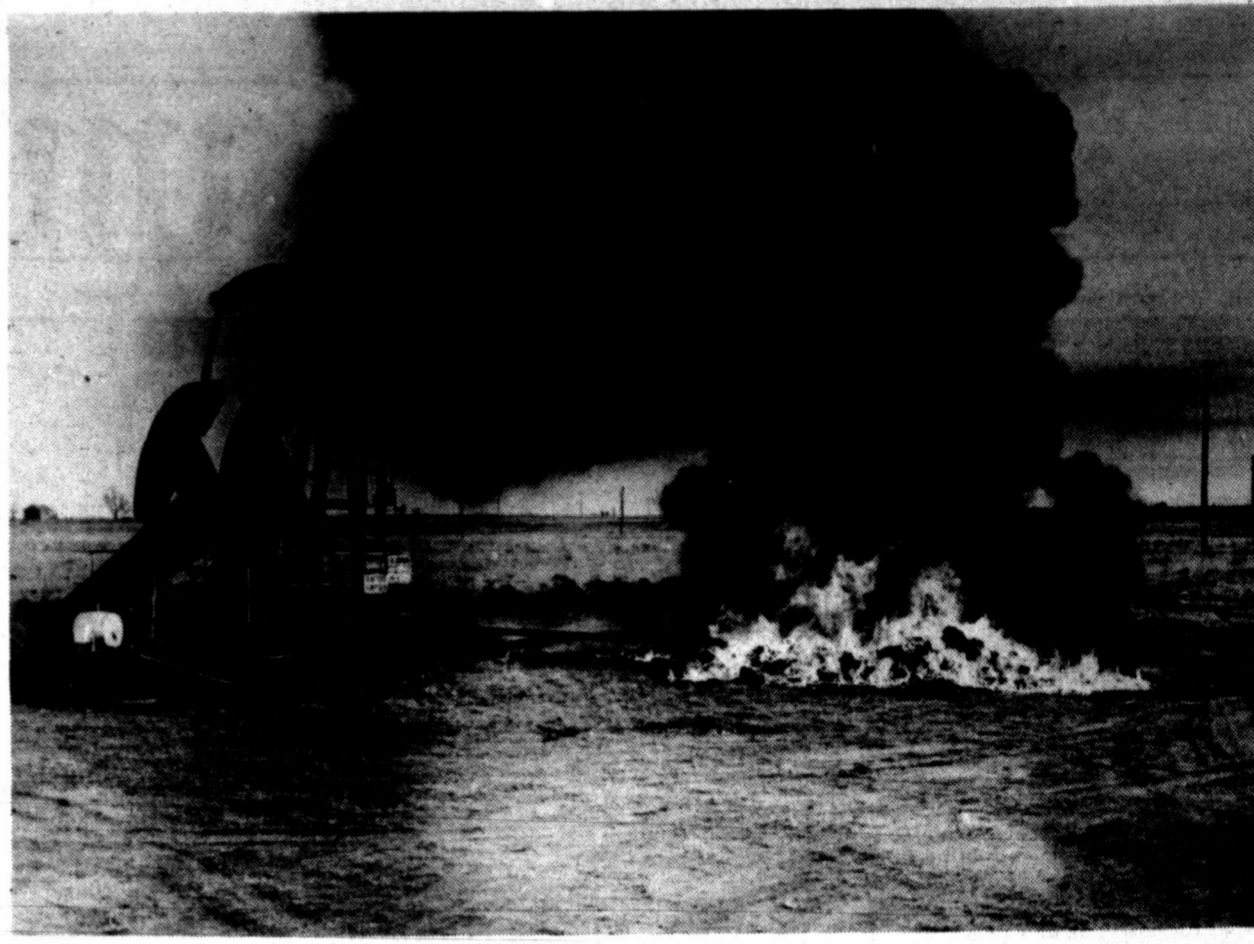

"It could have been a show of moral support by another terrorist group in support of the Red Brigades," a police official told the Italian news agency AGI.

In Rovigo, where at least four accomplices on the outside blew a hole in the prison wall and pinned down the guards with automatic fire while the four women prisoners escaped, all commercial activity was suspended for two hours Monday to protest the escape and to express sympathy for the passerby who was killed and the six people wounded by the terrorists' explosion.

Rovigo is 50 miles southeast of Verona, where the Red Brigades kidnapped Dozier on Dec. 17, and the area was already supposed to be under heavy security surveillance because of the kidnapping. Politicians and newspapers expressed astonishment that the jailbreak could have been engineered under such conditions.

Variety of weather plagues nation

By ANDY O'CONNELL
 Associated Press Writer

Mud hosed loose by an unrelenting rainstorm washed into California homes while sleet chattered on Northeastern rooftops, snow piled up in the Midwest, and the South crackled with thunderstorms and tornadoes.

At least 13 people died in weather-related accidents Monday. Up to 16 inches of snow fell on Wisconsin, smacking Milwaukee with its worst snowstorm in 35 years, rain pummeled Ohio, and snow forced schools to close in Illinois and Michigan.

Weathermen estimated that 12 inches of rain fell in a 24-hour period near San Francisco. Northbound traffic on the Golden Gate Bridge was halted for four hours because of the flooding.

Winds reached 90 mph at the top of the Cleveland Electric Illuminating Co. building in Cleveland, 85 mph on a mountain ridge at Park City ski resort west of Salt Lake City and 60 mph in parts of Illinois and Wisconsin.

Thousands of people were forced from their homes and officials closed schools and highways as record-breaking rain pelted northern California.

A six-car Amtrak passenger train derailed in heavy rain at San Pablo, Calif., north of Oakland, injuring 13 people, none seriously. Rescuers had to use rowboats and helicopters to reach the train, since roads in the area were under up to five feet of water, police said.

Skiers were stranded in Sierra Nevada lodges where up to 7 feet of snow accumulated.

In Seattle, where snow is rare, the steepest streets were closed Monday because of 2 inches of snow and a sheet of ice.

Three tornadoes touched down Monday in North Carolina and another hit Canton, Ga., destroying an airplane hangar.

At least eight tornadoes touched down in central and northern Alabama and rivers were running above flood level Monday in parts of Georgia, South Carolina and Kentucky.

Some parts of New York state were flooded near Lake Erie, which was pushed above flood stage by high winds during an ice storm Monday.

Roads in eastern and central New York were strewn with dented and abandoned cars Monday morning as freezing rain frosted roads.

At least five people died in storm-related incidents in California, authorities said, including a person who was killed when a house slid off its foundation in Tiburon.

Carey E. Anderson, 61, of Homedale, Idaho was found frozen near his pickup. Five Wisconsin men were reported to have collapsed and died during or after shoveling snow.

Homes were abandoned in wealthy parts of northern California, and mud and water churned at 30 mph through the streets of San Rafael.

National Guardsmen rescued stranded motorists and boats were used to reach 500 people in Vallejo, where the Lake Chabot reservoir rose menacingly within 2 feet of the rim.

"I'm from Chicago," Susan Rabin said as she phoned the Highway Patrol from a San Francisco bar to see whether she could get home to Mill Valley. "I moved to California for the weather."

Justice will appeal ERA ruling

WASHINGTON (AP) - A Justice Department decision to seek Supreme Court reversal of a lower court ruling that could doom the Equal Rights Amendment signals no change in Reagan administration policy, an official says.

The appeal to the high court "doesn't have anything to do with whether you support ERA," said Paul McGrath, assistant attorney general in charge of the civil division.

McGrath made the statement Monday when he asked how the Justice Department could appeal the case in light of President Reagan's long-held position that while he favors equality for women he opposes mandating it in the Constitution.

McGrath said department lawyers sometime next week would ask the Supreme Court to overturn last month's decision by U.S. District Judge Marion J. Callister of Boise, Idaho.

In the case, he ruled that Congress lacked authority to extend the deadline for ratification of the ERA and that five of the 35 states that have ratified it are legally free to rescind their action.

The proposed amendment needs approval by 38 states to become part of the Constitution. Congress originally set March 29, 1979, as a deadline but later extended it to June 30, 1982.

McGrath said the Justice Department had argued before Callister that federal judges should not interfere in the ratification process until it had run its course.

McGrath, who said the decision to appeal was made by Deputy Solicitor General Lawrence Wallace, declined to discuss what arguments lawyers would make to the Supreme Court.

U.S. would veto sanctions against Israel

WASHINGTON (AP) - The United States, although it considers Israel's annexation of the Golan Heights illegal, will veto any attempt by the U.N. Security Council to impose sanctions against Israel because of its action, informed sources said.

The sources said Monday that Ephraim Evron, Israel's ambassador to the United States, was advised of the U.S. position by Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr.

The Security Council members were to begin preliminary discussion of the Golan Heights issue today.

Evron had asked Haig what the United States would do if Syria, from which Israel captured the Golan Heights in the 1967 war, or its Arab allies pressed the Security Council to impose sanctions, the sources said.

State Department spokeswoman Anita Stockman confirmed only that Haig and Evron met Monday and that the U.N. situation was discussed.

Today, deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes refused to confirm that a veto was planned. "We will wait until we see the text of the resolution," he said.

Judge delays decision on moving police trial

BROWNSVILLE, Texas (AP) - A federal judge says he wants to see how hard it will be to select impartial jurors for a police brutality case before he decides whether to move the trial from South Texas.

"I'll acknowledge it," U.S. District Judge Filemon Vela said Monday of the publicity surrounding allegations of brutality by McAllen policemen. "But when we get to jury selection (on Wednesday) we need to take it up at that time."

Former McAllen police Sgt. Roberto Ramos wants his trial on a misdemeanor civil rights violation charge moved from Brownsville. He is charged with ordering other officers to beat a prisoner during an arrest Sept. 24, 1977.

His lawyer, Buck Pettitt of McAllen, entered as evidence the Friday edition of the McAllen newspaper which listed the police brutality case as the top story of 1981.

Ramos and four other officers were indicted in November after a seven-month investigation. The counts are punishable by up to one year in prison and a $1,000 fine. Ramos alone wants a change of venue.

The cases gained national attention when videotape recordings made at the McAllen police booking desk aired on national television, showing officers kicking and abusing prisoners.

The taping system was installed by the police department to protect officers from harassment suits.

Lawyers for the other four former officers indicted asked that their clients be tried before a federal magistrate instead of a district judge and a jury. A magistrate court's jury is made up of six people, while a district court jury has 12 members.

With the agreement of prosecutors, Vela allowed the trial of Isidro Ybanez, to be transferred to the magistrate's court. Ybanez is charged with assaulting a man on May 20, 1979.

However, Special Prosecutor Ross Connealy of Washington D.C. objected to trying the others before a magistrate.

The three other defendants - Tom Carter, Alfredo Saldana and Jaime Contreras - are accused of abusing Pedro Dennett Oct. 23, 1978, at the police booking desk.

The Dennett incident was seen on videotapes and shows several officers kicking Dennett, throwing him on the ground and slamming his head against the booking desk.

"It's a very novel and important case," Connealy said. "It is a complex case in that we do have a videotape that will be shown at the trial."

Nelson Sharpe of Kingsville, lawyer for Carter, argued that a defendant has a right to be tried before a magistrate on a misdemeanor charge.

Vela said he would rule later on the request after researching whether a defendant has an automatic right to trial before a magistrate. He said he initially saw no reason to deny the request.

"We're all attorneys," he said to magistrates and district judges.

From France to Fiji, Congress on wing

WASHINGTON (AP) - From far-off France to farther-off Fiji, members of Congress are taking advantage of a long winter recess to broaden their horizons through travel.

They will study everything from European highway safety to the communist threat in Latin America to earthquake damage in Italy to life among the natives in the Pacific.

And they will do it at taxpayer expense. They all say the trips are part of their official duties in Congress.

As a result, they will circle the globe, for the most part, in a fleet of Air Force planes maintained for VIP travel. They will rely on State Department and embassy officials for travel assistance, including the sightseeing that always seems to find its way into the most hectic official schedule.

In some cases, they will bring their wives and staff aides with them.

No official records will be available for months on the precise numbers of trips planned, the members of Congress making them, or the cost. But an Associated Press check turned up 51 members of the House and Senate traveling out of the country in December and January.

The largest delegation, 12 House members, was scheduled to arrive in Brussels, Belgium today to begin two days of discussions on trade issues. Then it's on to the Hague, capital of The Netherlands, for a meeting with members of the European Parliament.

In contrast, Sen. Charles Percy R-III., chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, is traveling only with aides on a tour of the Mideast.

Percy left Washington on Dec. 17 for planned stops in Israel, Egypt, Jordan and Saudi Arabia. His trip combined sightseeing with talks with several national leaders, including Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin and Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak, before a scheduled return to the United States on Jan. 20.

The longest trip includes a island-hopping excursion through the South Pacific, with stops in Yap, Majuro; Ebeye and elsewhere in U.S. Trust Territories.

Retired trooper seeks JP office

R.C. Parker of McLean has announced his candidacy for the position of Justice of the Peace Precinct 4 which includes McLean, Alanreed and a portion of Pampa.

Parker decided to run for the office of Justice of the Peace after retiring from Texas Department of Public Safety where he served as a trooper for 30 years.

He will run on the Democratic ticket. Parker said running for the office of Justice of the Peace seemed quite natural since he had worked closely with that office during his 29 years in McLean. He retired on New Year's Eve.

School song is none of feds' business, congressman contends

HOUSTON (AP) — A school song should concern no one but people in the school's district, says a Houston congressman fighting a lawsuit which contends the Aldine High School song violates a ruling against official school prayers.

Court forbid. The words of the song, which an attorney representing the district said is sung at pep rallies, athletic events and graduations, are: "Dear God, please bless our school and all it stands for. Help keep us free from sin, honest and true, with courage and faith to make our school the victor. In Jesus' name we pray."

application forms, said F. James Wunderlich, a lawyer representing Klein and Aldine in the separate suits.

In the Aldine case, Fields said the high school song is defensible under all three tests issued by the Supreme Court in its 1962 decision prohibiting schools from having official prayers.

"It has a secular purpose — to instill school spirit," the Republican congressman said. "There are also no excessive entanglements between the school and any religious body. The song does not advance or prohibit religion."

Van Middlesworth said he differed strongly with Fields' interpretation of the Constitution.

"I think that a prayer clearly furthers religion," he said. "Indeed, it's hard to think of many things that would further religion more than adopting a school song that is a prayer to Jesus."

"I'm surprised that 20 years after the major Supreme Court cases there is still such a prayer," Van Middlesworth said.

The brief was filed on the same day U.S. District Judge Norman W. Black declared unconstitutional, in a separate case, another suburban Houston school district's practice of asking job applicants about their religious beliefs.

Attorney Charles W. Water, representing the ACLU, said the district had been permitted to ask applicants if they believed in a supreme being. He said that permission came under two sections of the Texas Education Code and one section of the state constitution.

Houston Klein authorities have since removed the question from the

"I think it's a local issue that ought to be decided by local people," Rep. Jack Fields said Monday after filing a friend of the court brief backing the Aldine Independent School District in U.S. District Court Monday.

The American Civil Liberties Union filed suit in federal court in November 1980 on behalf of an unidentified woman and her son, saying that the song violated a 1962 Supreme Court ruling against official school prayers.

The Aldine High School band played the school prayer, on the steps of the Capitol in April after receiving an invitation from Fields.

Rex D. Van Middlesworth, representing the ACLU, said the song was "precisely the thing" the school praver cases tried in the Supreme

State GOP chairman Chester Utham and six Republican senators filed a class-action suit in state district court, contending the plan is unconstitutional. The plaintiffs asked the court to draw new Senate districts for 1982 elections.

Their suit was scheduled for trial today. The bipartisan House Study Group said the "best estimate" is that the plan would cost Republicans three of their eight Senate seats. The Legislative Redistricting Board of five Democratic officeholders approved the plan in late October, after Republican Gov. Bill Clements vetoed the plan adopted by the Legislature.

The petition states that the redistricting board based its plan on total population figures, which include convicted felons and people under 18, rather than "qualified electors."

"As used in the Texas Constitution, a 'qualified elector' for purposes of apportionment of senatorial districts is a citizen over 18 years of age who is not a convicted felon, a ward of the state or an idiot or lunatic," the petition says. It also says the board "failed to consider evidence of and take into account the pattern of explosive population growth occurring in certain areas of the state. By 1990, some districts will have twice as many people as others.

In his appearance before the board, Jim George, lawyer for the plaintiffs, said by 1990 there will be 889,203 people in Senate District 7 and only 450,964 in District 9.

"That plan simply cannot satisfy the requirement of one man, one vote. Indeed, a person's vote in District 9 will count nearly twice as much as a vote in District 7 in the 1990 election," George said.

Redistricting challenge goes to trial

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Republicans who claim they didn't get a fair shake from a new Texas Senate redistricting plan say the plan would make some people's votes count nearly twice as much as others.

Father dreads telling children mother dead

HOUSTON (AP) — The father of two children who survived a New Year's Eve plane crash is confident they will recover physically, but worries about an emotional trauma they have yet to face.

Stacey Sadler, 9, and her brother Jimmy, 5, were in stable condition Monday after being transferred to Hermann Hospital from a facility in Durango, Colo., near the site of the crash.

"They do not know about their mother," James E. Sadler said. Joyce Branham, 39, was one of four people killed when a Sun West Airlines plane crashed and burned in a snowstorm Thursday night.

Sadler said his children would be treated for burns and bruises and that his son might require plastic surgery. Sadler visited the site of the crash Sunday and said the wreckage "was nothing but a pile of rubbish. You can't even identify it as an airplane. How they ever lived through it is strictly a miracle. There is absolutely nothing left of the airplane."

Sadler credited rescue and medical teams as well as a woman and her four children who live near the crash scene with saving the pair.

Pat Seibert and her children were watching television when her husband Robert, a Frontier Airlines agent, called from the airport saying he thought a plane had crashed near their home.

The Seiberts hiked about a quarter-mile through the snow when they spotted flames from the wreckage.

"The plane was on fire," Mrs. Seibert said. "It was almost completely burned and there were two small children that we found."

"They were in pretty bad shape. We took off our coats and covered them up. They were whimpering but didn't seem aware of anything," Mrs. Seibert said.

Sadler said he spent an hour with the Seibert family Sunday, thanking them for their help.

Officials said the plane was en route from Albuquerque to Durango and was attempting an instrument-only landing when it missed its approach to the runway.

"The front of the plane took the impact," said assistant airport manager Leon Graham. "I assume the children were seated in the rear with their mother, and the tail section broke and threw them clear."

Mrs. Branham was thrown from the plane, but her body was found near the children. The bodies of the other victims, pilot Kelly Glendenning, 33, of Mesa, Ariz., and passengers Paul Bryant, 41, of Phoenix and Mary Peters, of Albuquerque, were found in the wreckage.

Company says no sign of fumes from burning barge over island

GALVESTON, Texas (AP) — Officials of a company which owns 400,000 gallons of a chemical burning aboard a barge say they are monitoring the air above Galveston Island but have detected no traces of the toxic fumes.

The barge carrying the toxic and corrosive chemical acrylonitrile, used in making a synthetic fiber called Acrylon, was still burning in Galveston Bay Monday night in a fire that began early Sunday.

The chemical, which was being shipped by the Monsanto Co., produces the poisonous gas hydrogen cyanide when it burns. Monsanto officials said tests showed no cyanide or acrylonitrile in the air above Galveston or in the air directly in the column of smoke coming from the barge.

The accident occurred when the barge, which was being pushed by a tugboat in a heavy fog, smashed into a drawbridge which had not been raised. Coast Guard officials said they were investigating the accident.

Traffic on the busy Gulf Intracoastal Waterway was stopped here for at least a week.

"An hour after it happened there was a big bottleneck on the inland waterway which skirts 1,300 miles of the Gulf Coast from Texas to Florida," said Coast Guard CWO Bill Miller.

Coast Guard officials said the barge could burn itself out within 24 hours, but Miller estimated it would be Saturday before the waterway is open to barge traffic again.

In the meantime, he said tugboat captains must line up and wait. They cannot take their shipments of grain, sulfur and other cargo into the Gulf of Mexico and around the burning barge because most of them are only licensed to operate in inland waterways, he said.

Six to 12 families asked to leave their homes Sunday for fear toxic fumes might drift over their neighborhood in nearby Virginia Point were allowed to return Monday.

The burning barge lay aground in about 10 feet of water in Galveston Bay several hundred feet from the bridge, while a Coast Guard vessel monitored the fire. An anchor was attached to the crippled barge to make sure it did not drift away.

Two small explosions gave the blaze new life Monday morning, throwing some of the acrylonitrile into the bay.

But Coast Guard spokesman Bob Berry said it all burned off and so far there has been no leakage.

An accompanying barge full of the chemical, which is used to make the synthetic fiber Acrylon, was not damaged and a Coast Guard crew managed to cut it from the burning vessel and tow it to safety.

The Coast Guard said the crash caused "considerable damage" to the drawbridge, which is used by five railroads and operated by Southern Pacific.

Southern Pacific spokesman Joe Bart said a crew was repairing it and should have it ready for train traffic by Thursday.

Simonis gets 20th life prison term

DeRIDDER, La. (AP) — Confessed ski mask rapist Jon B. Simonis has been sentenced to his 20th life term in prison after pleading guilty to additional rape and armed robbery charges.

Simonis, 30, of Lake Charles, appeared before state District Judge L.H. Coltharp Jr. to face charges stemming from the Oct. 8, 1981, holdup of a DeRidder family.

Two rape victims in that incident, a middle-aged woman and her daughter-in-law, sat in front seats as Simonis, in flannel shirt and faded jeans, faced the judge Monday and said he regretted what he had done.

"I would like to apologize to the victims for the psychological and physical pain that I have caused them," Simonis said in making his guilty plea.

"I feel that I am a menace to society," he said.

Since his arrest Nov. 28, Simonis has admitted to at least 80 crimes in a dozen states, all of them involving armed robberies, and most involving sexual attacks.

Judge Coltharp told Simonis that his apology was "admirable, but added, "These are vicious and cruel acts and I think you know that."

He sentenced Simonis to two consecutive life terms for the two rape charges, plus the maximum 14 years in prison on the other counts.

The sentences brought the total Simonis must serve to 20 consecutive life terms plus 2 1/2 years in prison.

Simonis pleaded guilty to two counts of aggravated rape, one count of aggravated crime against nature, one count of aggravated burglary, and one count of armed robbery.

His plea came against the advice of his court-appointed attorney, Dave Wallace of DeRidder.

Wallace said he felt the Beauregard Parish evidence against Simonis was "very weak" and could be acquitted in a jury trial.

"I talked to Simonis for about 1 1/2 hours," Wallace said. "In my opinion, he is one of the most intelligent clients I have ever defended. I think he is very competent and he did understand the nature of the proceedings. He expressed a desire that he just wanted to get the hearing over with."

Simonis was returned to Calcasieu Parish Jail in Lake Charles, where he faces an additional arraignment next week on three counts of armed robbery.

No date has been set for that arraignment, prosecutors said.

How are the mighty fallen

BY OSCAR COOLEY

General Motors, largest manufacturer in the United States is retrenching.

It has laid off thousands of employees including many subexecutives. Big and rich, it is nonetheless subject to economic law.

I remember when General Motors was a pup, or rather a litter of pups. While Ford Motor Company was the shadow of one man, Henry Ford, no one person was responsible for GM, though some oldtimers will recall Walter Durant, whose buggy company began making Buicks in the early 1900s.

There were many auto manufacturers in those days. In 1908, Durant herded several of them together and formed General Motors Company.

A little later, Louis Chevrolet came into the picture. His French-built car became a bellwether in the GM herd of which Durant was president.

General Motors waxed strong during World War I. But there was friction, and Durant was out by 1920.

After the war, hard roads were laid and automobiles swarmed. Model T and Chevrolet being most common. The price of a brand new car at one time was less than $400.

Mass production - introduced by Olds - became the rule, and many of the early makes of cars disappeared from the market. Remember the Stanley Steamer? The Maxwell? Closed cars (sedans and coupes) took the place of open cars (touring cars and roadsters).

Along about 1960, compacts entered the picture. GM, being big, could sell you any size car, little or big - so it prospered.

When the price of petroleum and hence of its derivative, gasoline, shot up, fuel economy became an important consideration, and the compacts multiplied. Now Japan got into the act.

Having little land but much labor, the Japanese had to depend on brawn and brain, of which they have both. They also have what we used to know as ambition and now is called the work ethic. Their people work to produce, not merely to get the maximum wages from an employer. And they are good engineers; they are inventive.

After the Japs were beaten in World War II, they concentrated on certain industries, one being automobiles. They made small ones, fitting their small islands. These consumed small amounts of fuel, which even Americans began to see as a desirable feature, especially in hard times. The Jap-made cars swarmed on our highways and quickly became serious competitors to ours.

During the last few years, even General Motors has felt the pinch. It has had plenty of difficulty in meeting Japanese competition. The present economic recession has increased this difficulty. This has not hurt the American people as a whole. On the contrary, the cheap Japanese cars, providing inexpensive transportation, have been a benefit to the consumers. It is the present limitation's on the imports that hurts the many.

If any of our Big Four car makers survive, GM will. Its common stock is now close to a longtime low and is probably a good buy in the '30s. Many people, rich and poor, have a stake in this great corporation's future. They are not likely to let it go down the drain.

The recession may serve the purpose of reminding GM stockholders and executives that even a mammoth firm can not afford to be heedless, extravagant, or mindless of the future. Even the mighty can fall.

Reason that most of us can't get an idea through our heads is that we have one-track minds where conflicting thoughts are bound to collide.

A true-blue American is one who suffers from oxygen deprivation when driving behind a diesel-powered truck.

Today in History

Today is Tuesday, Jan. 5, the fifth day of 1982. There are 360 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history: On Jan. 5, 1949, President Harry Truman labeled his administration the "Fair Deal" in his first State of the Union message.

On this date: In 1762, Czarina Elizabeth of Russia died and was succeeded by Peter II.

In 1973, U.S. airlines began routine scanning of passengers with electronic weapons detectors following a big increase in the number of hijacked planes.

In 1976, South Africa permitted television after years of resistance on grounds that TV might be morally corrupting or promote racial integration.

And in 1978, while visiting Normandy, France, President Jimmy Carter said the United States was determined that Europe's freedom never again would be endangered.

Ten years ago: President Nixon approved development of the space shuttle.

Five years ago: Syria said it would relax restrictions imposed on its 4,500 Jews.

One year ago: Despite the opposition of President-elect Ronald Reagan, the Selective Service began registering teen-agers born in 1962 for a military draft.

Today's birthdays: King Juan Carlos of Spain is 44.

Thought for Today: "Vanity plays lurid tricks with our memory." — Joseph Conrad, novelist, 1857-1924.

Coddling criminals not so popular

Americans everywhere are fed up with living in fear of violence brought on by hoodlums and thieves. They want to fight back and they want local law enforcement agencies, the courts and the federal government to help in the fight.

Their fear is well-grounded. The chance of becoming a crime victim has tripled since 1960. Such diverse cities as New York, Los Angeles, Miami and Dallas report record levels of murder, robbery and burglary. Rural districts — once believed a haven from crime — no longer provide sanctuary.

A National Crime Survey conducted by the Bureau of Justice statistics discloses that nearly one out of three households in the United States was struck by some kind of serious crime last year.

Americans are frightened. They are buying new locks, window bars, alarm systems, learning karate and judo, carrying Mace for self-defense. It is estimated that citizens are spending some $3 billion a year on security.

Suddenly neighborhood watch groups are popular. Some 8 million people already belong to such units. Most believe our justice system deals too lightly with criminals.

Now, 67 percent of the public favors capital punishment — up from 49 percent three years ago.

Most believe more police are needed. They want their elected officials to commit themselves to legislating against violent crime.

Public indignation is what it takes to make the nation a safer place. Representatives in government react to it. Since the beginning of the 97th Congress, several bills have been introduced specifically aimed at curbing street crime.

Out in California, support is sought for a Crime Victim's Bill of Rights Initiative on the June ballot, a measure that needs 553,000 signatures to qualify.

The initiative would require criminals to provide some form of restitution to their victims, provide longer sentences for habitual offenders, prohibit plea bargaining in many felony cases and make it easier to collect evidence against offenders.

If people feel it's time to give the break to the law-abiding citizenry and not the criminal, it's easy to see why.

It will be interesting to see what happens to the initiative in California.

Letter to the editor

Mr. Editor:

Inflation and Social Security cuts are not the only thing that is scaring the hell out of the poor and unfortunate people.

The very low income people with families of three or more and income under $500 per month are really being shoved against the wall.

The new insurance law (Russian type), which has just been shoved down our throats, without a vote or any say so and no power to prevent is worse than slavery.

Thousands even millions of drivers, single and with families with incomes of less than $500, will be rendered helpless and destitute by the passing of this law.

Literally thousands of children will starve and die from lack of food and medicines, while the state spends millions enforcing this new law, and still this will not solve their wreck problem.

Even those in the Capitol in Austin claim this law to be a total mess.

The solution to the wrecks and deaths is not the drunks, pill poppers or weed smokers. But that of the little rich kids and spoiled brats, ruffians, breakers of the law, disobedient, ruthless, power crazy young people. No one else has the money for these beautiful high powered toys of destruction Trans Ams and other souped up toys to kill with.

A slap on the wrist has never worked. But to slap the offender and the parent of children under 21 years old with a $500 fine each plus a one-year jail term would squash these kinds of drivers and murders.

Those 20 to 35 are the worst and the most dangerous. They have no one to control them.

These people are filled with rudeness, hatred. They are ruthless impossible citizens. They know the law can't catch them all, and you can't prove a thing on them.

Sometimes there is justice when one of these die also in a wreck but mostly the innocent die.

There is always heartbreak in all cases, families and children suffer.

The driver's test today means nothing. People overdrive, cut you off, speed up to block you, cut in front and make a turn, speed up while you are trying to pass, stop sign runners, light jumpers and those who will not yield to anyone.

The law breakers and the young dare devils who have not become men even at the age of 35 or older. It's the kids to explode their own time bomb inside of their own body to release energy.

This insurance law was passed by idiot's in Congress unplanned. A lobby to make billionaires out of millionaire insurance companies and line the pockets of many public men who hold an office.

We are hampered by law makers, judges, police and sheriff officers. They only stomp on those who cannot show cause, such as money, lawyers and political power.

This new insurance now gives the rich a permit to kill, murder, mangle and butcher all who gets in their way.

No sorrow or feeling of wrongdoing will be felt now because the dead will all be covered by insurance.

Who will pay this insurance for those who can't even now buy groceries, people without a job and need their car for emergencies and survival.

The idiots who compiled and passed this pile of manure are responsible. It is their duty to pass an emergency measure to provide state aid to pay for this - this same as emergency energy cost.

We have bought and paid for all legal rights to own, drive and operate our means of transportation anywhere and at any time.

You cannot get blood from a turnip and the jails and prisons will not hold those convicted. We cannot pay. Now who can write the bottom line.

Well to do people, parents and their children become bored with life and all the good things there is and look for kicks of any kind and excitement to them, it is just simple fun stuff, but their disobedience lets them go much too far and someone dies.

The truth hurts and the offender is never wrong. But death is always the result.

Our pen's are full of offenders but not the real criminals. They are still on the streets, fear grips our courts, juries and law enforcers.

If things continue at the present rate, in less than ten years every man will wear a firearm on his hip for him and his family's protection.

We are not going forward in time, but sliding backwards to the 1850s.

There is as much crime in our government, federal, state, county and cities as there is on the streets and in the alleys.

Everyone is breaking the law in one way or the other, because those who have had the money and lawyers come clean as a newborn baby out of the courts and pen's.

A man's word today is worth no more than as far as you can hear it. His name on paper or contracts is completely worthless. Nothing is sacred today. No hope, faith, trust or love, just sex, greed, lust, money.

The time is ripe for the Harvest.
Signed,
Lewis R. Stark

Women's work

A couple of State University of New York economists, Paul McGouldrick and Michael Tannen, have been doing some interesting work on why, in general, women make less money than men, even in jobs that might seem roughly comparable. Their findings, though still preliminary, are startling. If widely understood, they might cause a certain amount of rethinking in the women's movement.

Most recent studies of pay comparability cover the recent past, when a good deal of the regulatory and taxation structure associated with the welfare state was already in place. Most of these studies show that women earn less than men. Most students of the figures attribute this fact to discrimination against women in the job market.

McGouldrick and Tannen thought deeply enough to ask the unmentionable question: could this structure of taxation and regulation have helped to hold down women's pay? If so, a good bit of the conventional wisdom about how to help women achieve their rightful place in the job market would have to go out the window.

The best set of statistics they found was from the clothing and textile industries in 1909 and 1910. This was before the income tax, before Social Security, before minimum wage laws and before most of the health and safety regulations that limit work hours for women and children. The industry employed large numbers of both men and women in comparable jobs.

Guess what? Back in the Dark Ages, before all that legislation designed to protect workers women earned almost exactly the same as men for doing the same manufacturing job. Some categories of women earned more than men in the same categories (single, non-English-speaking).

In 1969, with all that government "protection," the picture in the same industries was dramatically different. No women in any category, earned more than men; most earned substantially less. Technical changes in the industry had been minimal; the types of skills required were about the same. Yet the condition of women in the industry, as regards pay levels for comparable work, had dramatically worsened.

Has sex discrimination increased dramatically since 1910? It would take a pretty fair stretch of the imagination to make such a contention. The main difference between now and then is more government intervention in the marketplace.

Actually, the major interventions that affect women are pretty clear, if you think about it. The progressive income tax and the requirement for filing joint returns means that wives who work pay a very high marginal tax rate; thus the incentive is against upgrading work skills and qualifying themselves for better-paying positions. The Social Security system also discriminates against most wives by limiting their benefits to what they would have received had they not worked at all, even though they pay payroll tax into the system at the same rate their husbands do. Laws designed to protect women from hazardous jobs and long hours have exerted subtle but pervasive pressure against upgrading skills. Some of them keep women out of jobs which technological changes have made less hazardous but antique laws are still in place.

Paul McGouldrick is forthright in his conclusion: "The true, ultimate cause of discrimination against individual women is not cultural attitudes of employers (or fellow-workers), but adverse government impacts on the work and skill motivations of the group."

Might the women's movement better serve women by seeking to dismantle the governmental apparatus that has grown to "protect" us in the last 70 years or so? Can it be that women will do better in the free market than under the wing of a government that means well but seems to produce discrimination-by-result?

Those questions are certainly worth some serious thought.

Who's next

"Who's next? What is your name?"

"Nineteen eighty one."

"Reason for leaving job?"

"I was replaced by a new year."

"And so you're applying for unemployment insurance?"

"I've tried to find work but no one will have me."

"Why not?"

"No one will tell me the real reason. They just say I'm too old and I can't keep up."

"What did you do before you were fired?"

"I was a crisis manager."

"Did you produce any great books or any outstanding works of art?"

"No, but I was a good year for wine. Not a great year, but they said I had a nice bouquet."

"Did you sell a lot of automobiles?"

"Not too many. As a matter of fact, they claim I was one of the worst years for automobiles in history."

"And how were you about housing?"

"I don't think I'll be remembered for housing. I either started a worldwide recession or inherited one — depending on which politician you talk to."

"You don't seem very enthusiastic about your accomplishments."

"At the moment, they don't look that good, but everyone kept telling everyone else, things had to get worse before they got better. I think when people have a chance to look back they may not think I was as bad as they thought I was."

"We'll be the judge of that. Do you have any references?"

"No, I was hoping to get one from President Reagan, but at the last moment he decided I wasn't his year. He keeps telling everyone we have to wait for another year before his plans work."

"Are there any movies you made that you're proud of?"

"No, I can't think of any. Most of them were bombs."

"Good grief, you really are a difficult case. What happened during your time that you can brag about?"

"I guess the best thing that happened was Prince Charles and Lady Diana got married while I was in charge. It was a lovely wedding, and if all goes well, there will be an heir to the throne of Britain."

"Well, that's something. At least we can say you know about weddings. How were you on crime?"

"Not too good. I think the rates went up. I also had a bad time with terrorism. But I did get the hostages out of Iran, and oil prices dropped. And the Rolling Stones made a very successful comeback."

"What about war?"

"I didn't start any. At least not any big ones. Then again I didn't stop any little ones either. War — wise, I maintained the status quo."

"What about hunger?"

"There was some drought, and the Soviets had another bad wheat crop. But I don't think I should be held responsible for that. They don't seem to know how to grow grain."

"Reading your resume I still don't understand why you were replaced."

"The man who gave me my pink slip muttered something about, 'Last one hired — first one fired.'"

"You only worked for twelve months. That entitles you to 13 unemployment checks."

"I'll take what I can get. Maybe there will be a nostalgia craze and I'll be in demand again. After all, no one dreamed a few years ago the big bands would come back."

"Well, we have no openings for an old year at this time, but if we do, you're going to have to take any job, whether it suits you or not."

"Oh, don't worry about that. I can do anything. But no one ever gave me a chance."

"Sign this. And have a Happy New Year."

"I wish you hadn't said that."

Scientists contend world is on verge of chemical arms race

WASHINGTON (AP) — The world is on the verge of a chemical arms race because of the potential U.S. response to reports of Soviet-backed use of chemical warfare in the Third World, some scientists say.

Speaking Monday at the annual meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, scientists said evidence on the nature and extent of the use of chemical or biological weapons in Afghanistan and Indochina remains inconclusive.

But whatever the evidence, the U.S. response to the perceived threat could trigger a race in these weapons unless they are included in new international arms limitation talks, they said.

Dr. Arthur H. Westing, professor of ecology at Hampshire College in Amherst, Mass., said that even the best U.S. evidence of the use of chemical weapons by the Soviet Union and its allies is indirect and inconclusive. Westing, who favors unilateral destruction of all chemical and biological weapons, said he questioned the motives of U.S. officials alleging possible use of these arms by the Soviets without hard evidence.

"To put the kindest light on this, one could say the U.S. is going off half-cocked and unprepared," Westing told a news briefing at the meeting.

"In a bad light, the U.S. may be trying to embarrass the Soviet Union and maybe looking for an excuse to put new chemical weapons in the U.S. arsenal," added Westing, formerly a researcher with the Stockholm International Peace Research Institute.

Robert P. Mikulak, a science officer with the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, agreed that evidence on the Soviet use of chemical weapons isn't hard. But he disagreed with Westing's conclusions about U.S. motives and actions.

"There have been serious concerns raised about compliance with existing treaties," Mikulak said. "Whatever one thinks about the evidence, it is important that these concerns be dealt with satisfactorily."

Mikulak did share the concern about an arms race with such weapons and noted that an arms control meeting beginning in Geneva next month will attempt to ban all biological and chemical weapons.

Based on eyewitness reports and indirect evidence, the U.S. says the Soviets have been using chemical weapons, including lethal nerve gas and knockout gas, against rebel tribesmen in Afghanistan. There even are reports that Soviet troops have been injured when air-dispersed chemicals accidentally blew back on them.

The United States also says the Soviet Union is supplying its allies in Southeast Asia with fungus toxins used in the so-called "yellow rain" against rebels in Laos and Kampuchea, formerly Cambodia.

Economy cuts hit space program

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States will stay in the space exploration business but will have to find more economical ways to do it because of federal budget cuts, says President Reagan's science adviser.

Dr. George A. Keyworth said Monday that the Reagan administration will continue unannounced planetary exploration and initiate major new space programs despite rumors it would cut such missions to save money.

But Keyworth said new missions to the other planets will be less complex and less expensive than recent billion-dollar projects such as Voyager, which returned spectacular data and pictures from Jupiter and Saturn.

The physicist said the administration is committed to major space science projects and will back building the Gamma Ray Observatory, a major astronomy spacecraft to be launched by the space shuttle.

Keyworth told the annual meeting of the Association for the Advancement of Science that the administration has begun a major reassessment of the space program.

This review will look at the future of the space shuttle, new earth-orbiting satellites and plans for another generation of planetary exploration craft, he said.

The study also will consider broadening the base of the U.S. space program to include more industry and university involvement, as well as more international cooperative projects to share the costs and responsibilities of space exploration, he added.

But looking for cheaper, more effective ways to explore space should not be construed as lack of support or commitment, he said.

The Reagan administration is supporting a strong initiative in planetary science, and this includes a number of new projects that will develop using the capabilities of the space shuttle," he said.

Keyworth offered few details on the new projects pending completion of the program review and finalization of the fiscal 1983 budget about to go to Congress. He did indicate, however, that they may not begin until the end of the decade.

The science adviser said there is no truth to rumors the administration is considering shutting off communications with the two Voyager spacecraft now on the way to explore Uranus and space outside the solar system.

The deep space network needed to receive data from Voyager still will receive support for data reception and analysis, he said.

"We'd throw away billions (of dollars) for want of a few million by not funding such activities," he said.

He said the Gamma Ray Observatory project would be a major one — on the scale of the Space Telescope, which will be launched by the shuttle in 1983.

Proposal rejected, longest strike continues

ASHTABULA, Ohio (AP) — Nurses who rejected a contract offer that would have ended their record 17-month strike say they are eager to return to the bargaining table, but hospital administrators say there is little to discuss.

About 100 unionized nurses striking Ashtabula General Hospital turned aside a package Monday that would have made them among the highest paid nurses in Ohio and returned them to their old jobs.

"A little money and the jobs we already had just wasn't enough after 17 months," Ashtabula General Nurses Association President Mary Runyon said after the secret vote.

"The bottom line of all this is that it's a union-busting situation," said Kathy Keller, past local president who led the strike.

Hospital administrator Floyd Farley said he was "appalled by the (union's) disregard for the well-being of this community."

The hospital has addressed in this proposal the one real issue that has separated the hospital and the nurses — the return of the nurses' jobs," Farley said.

The 535-day walkout already holds the record as the longest by nurses, according to the American Nurses Association.

Union bargainers said they would seek a return to negotiations "as soon as possible."

Farley said bargainers will meet with the nurses, but "we not agree to demands for a modified union shop and a voice in staffing levels of registered and licensed practical nurses."

Most of the striking nurses, who call themselves the "Ashtabula 100," have taken other jobs since the walkout began July 21, 1980. Only a few are experiencing financial difficulty, said Joan Kalhorn, a lawyer for the Ohio Nurses Association, parent group of the local union.

A national shortage of nurses that has made it easy for strikers to find work also has hurt the hospital's recruiting efforts.

Ashtabula General, the only hospital in this northeastern Ohio city of 23,000, will reopen 16 beds Wednesday, increasing to 115 the number of available spots at the 234-bed hospital. Eight of the hospital's 10 divisions will be operating, Farley said.

"You have to remember that we were closed down by this strike when it happened. We've slowly built back up and we will continue to do so," Farley said.

A proposal similar to the hospital's latest offer was put forth by a federal mediator in September. The nurses accepted it on a close vote but the hospital rejected it.

"Something is happening to make them (hospital administrators) change their minds," Mrs. Runyon said. "We have to go back to the table and find out what

Beginning in 1942, the library exercised its right to keep one copy of whatever films it chose from those submitted for copyright.

Spehr says the staff selects most of the 200 to 300 features films copyrighted each year, a more selective sample of television fare, and examples of educational films.

Many works have since been acquired to fill in the gap between 1912 and 1942, a rich 30-year period in the history of the movies.

Unusual theater operates in Washington

By W. DALE NELSON
Associated Press Writer
WASHINGTON (AP) —

One man is watching Gary Cooper as the World War I hero "Sergeant York."

Another sits in front of a screen showing Rudolph Valentino in "The Sheik."

They are part of a select audience, about 2,000 to 3,000 persons a year from many parts of the world, at an unusual movie theater across the street from the Capitol.

The theater is a viewing room of the motion picture division of the Library of Congress.

"We started out in the late 1960's with one or two machines, says Paul C. Spehr, acting division chief.

"We had 15 or 20 people a year. Now you may have to book three or more months in advance."

If you're thinking of making an appointment to see one of those hit musicals you missed, however, you can forget it.

Before you can arrange to use one of the six viewing machines, you have to satisfy the staff that you are engaged in a legitimate research project.

Spehr says most people who use the viewing rooms are studying the history or technique of filmmaking, but they are also being used increasingly by historians and social scientists seeking insights from old film.

Although scholarly interest in motion pictures is fairly recent, the library received its first film, made by Thomas A. Edison, as long ago as 1893. The trouble is that, although records indicate it was received, nobody has been able to find the Edison film, Spehr says.

The oldest film the library can find on hand is a 10-second segment showing Fred Ott, an assistant to Edison, sneezing.

The library also received a large collection of paper prints of films made before 1912. Since prints on paper

Fire chief is acquitted

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston's fire chief, acquitted in less than four minutes of a public intoxication charge, says his trial was political and a waste of money.

A six-member municipal court jury found V. E. Rogers innocent Monday of a charge stemming from an Oct. 12 incident in which a patrolman found Rogers' pickup parked, engine running, in the entrance ramp of a freeway.

Jury foreman Connie Cook, 34, said the jury agreed almost instantly that the prosecution had not proved Rogers was drunk. Rogers said he was really arrested because he was posting campaign signs for former Mayor Jim McConn.

Rogers paid a $50 fine after pleading guilty to a charge of leaving his pickup truck running and prosecutors agreed to drop charges that he illegally posted the signs.

Officer C. W. Trebesch said he saw Rogers and District Fire Chief Jerry E. Walker about 20 or 25 yards from the truck.

Suspect indicted in woman's death

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — Stephan Peter Morin, already indicted by a grand jury in San Antonio in the shootings of two young women, faced arraignment today in Nueces County on a separate charge.

Morin, 34, also is wanted for questioning in the slayings, kidnappings and rapes of young women in eight other states, authorities said.

He was flown Monday by helicopter under heavy guard to Nueces County Jail from San Antonio after he and Sara Clarke, a 32-year-old traveling companion, were indicted on capital murder and attempted capital murder charges.

A prosecutor said the Nueces County grand jury is expected to take up the case this week of a woman whose body was found on Padre Island last year. Morin is a suspect in that case also.

Morin was scheduled to be arraigned today by 105th State District Judge Vernon Harville in connection with the Nov. 30 abduction of Pamela Jackson, 25, a Corpus Christi dental assistant. Harville had issued a bench warrant charging Morin in the abduction.

Mrs. Jackson said Morin forced her to accompany him and Ms. Clarke to San Antonio.

On Monday, Morin and Ms. Clarke were indicted in San Antonio by a Bexar County grand jury on charges stemming from the slaying of Carrie Marie Scott, 21, and the wounding of Dru Valdez, 25, on Dec. 11. The two women were shot during an alleged abduction-robbery attempt in the parking lot of a San Antonio restaurant.

Later Monday, Morin was flown to Corpus Christi. Clad in leg irons and chains, Morin arrived at Nueces County Jail shortly after 7 p.m., accompanied by Sheriff Solomon Ortiz and three other officers. Morin asked for a Bible when he arrived at the jail.

Four arraigned on open meeting violation charge

GALVESTON, Texas (AP) — A March 1 trial date has been set for four League City City Council members after their arraignment on charges of violating the Texas Open Meeting Act.

County Judge Ronald Wilson set the trial date Monday on the misdemeanor charges against council members Allene "Rusty" Butler, A.C. Snow, Lloyd Wright and Victor Vaughn.

The charges, filed by the district attorney's office at the request of the state grand jury, say the council members intentionally met in a closed meeting to prepare the city's budget.

The four are also charged with meeting on Sept. 16 with less than a quorum to discuss the budget.

Mrs. Butler said the charges were politically motivated and stated before the arraignment, "I'm making up my mind whether I'm going to let them let me out or just go ahead and have them jail me."

The allegations are part of the latest chapter in a power struggle in League City, a north Galveston County community of 18,000. In August 1980 four amendments limiting taxing and spending, endorsed by the League City Taxpayers Association, were passed by voters. The four councilmen were active in the association which, eight months later, forced the recall of four council members who opposed the new spending limits.

Mrs. Butler criticized the charges because three of the councilmen's political opponents are on the grand jury.

"I already lost my faith in the judicial system. This is rigged up for next April's elections to try and get me out of office," she said.

Morin, a native of Providence, R.I., previously was charged with killing two young Las Vegas, Nev., women in Utah and with murdering a young woman in Golden, Colo.

During Morin's examining trial, Mrs. Jackson said Morin held her hostage for 12 days. She was later freed and Ms. Clarke was arrested at a San Antonio motel about three hours after the two women were shot.

Morin escaped out a bathroom window and was arrested the next day at an Austin bus station by police.

He and Ms. Clarke have been held without bond since their arrests while numerous law enforcement agencies seek to question Morin about similar killings of women in other states.

Bexar County District Attorney Bill White said Morin would be returned from Corpus Christi to San Antonio to await trial.

NOT A DINOSAUR. Large U.S. automobiles such as the 1982 Continental shown in this file photo may be remnants of a past era. But as 1982 begins, big cars are showing more sales strength than smaller classes.

Big ones buck sales slump trend

DETROIT (AP) — Despite years of talk about the auto industry's move toward smaller cars, the only Ford Motor Co. factory building cars this week is turning out full-sized, luxury models.

While Ford's 18 other assembly plants in North America are closed to reduce inventories spawned by a sales slump, the plant in suburban Wixom keeps building Continentals, Lincolns and Mark VIs to meet a strengthening consumer demand for big cars.

We have seen a strong surge in the large and luxury car segments of the car market, J.E. Cappy, general marketing manager of Ford's Lincoln Mercury division, said Monday.

Those cars have reflected a great strength right through the model year.

It's happening at other automakers, too. At the end of November, full-sized and luxury models generally were in shortest supply while the manufacturers had huge backlogs of many compacts and subcompacts.

Ward's Automotive Reports, an industry journal, listed 24 compact and subcompact models, of which 15 had inventories of 90 days or more on Nov. 30. Only three were in shorter than 60 days' supply. Automakers generally prefer to keep a 60-day supply of cars on hand.

Of 18 full-sized and luxury car lines, only three had backlogs of more than 90 days and eight had inventories of fewer than 60 days.

"One theory is only the affluent can buy cars right now," said David Healy, an analyst for Drexel Burnham Lambert in New York.

But another reason may be that the gap in prices between big and little cars is shrinking. At the same time, gasoline prices are holding steady and the manufacturers have been able to improve the mileage on the larger models, making them more attractive.

At General Motors Corp., only two of five divisions — Cadillac and Oldsmobile — sold more cars in the Jan. 1-Dec. 20 period of 1981 than they did in the same period a year earlier. For comparison, sales of Cadillacs increased 9.6 percent in 1981, while sales of compact Chevrolet Citations dropped 19.7.

At Oldsmobile, sales of Olds 98 and Olds 88 models rose 13.9 percent and 6.7 percent respectively, while compact Pontiac Phoenix and subcompact Chevrolet Chevette models slumped 16.7 percent and 7.1 percent.

At Ford, sales for full-size models did fall from 1980 figures, but still fared better than their compact and subcompact counterparts.

Industrywide, 1981 car sales are off 4.9 percent through Dec

Decision expected on creationism lawsuit

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Leading figures on both sides of the legal battle over Arkansas' creationism law say they remain optimistic about the outcome of the trial, which was expected to end today with a judge's ruling.

American Civil Liberties Union attorney Robert Cearley Jr. said Monday that a law clerk for U.S. District Judge William Overton advised him to expect the decision today.

Overton presided over the trial of the ACLU's lawsuit challenging the state law, which says public schools must provide balanced treatment to the creationism version of the origin of the universe whenever evolution is taught. The law would go into effect in September.

State Sen. Jim Holsted, D-North Little Rock, who sponsored the creationism legislation in the Senate early in 1981, said in a telephone interview Monday that he felt the length of time Overton was taking was a good sign. He said the judge apparently was giving the matter serious consideration.

The federal court trial of the ACLU's lawsuit ended Dec. 17.

"As soon as the trial was over, I was confident that the judge would rule in our favor," Cearley said. "I'm very optimistic."

The ACLU filed the lawsuit in May on behalf of 23 plaintiffs, including religious leaders, scientists and educators.

During the nine-day trial, ACLU attorneys argued that the law is too vague, violates the constitutional separation of church and state and infringes on academic freedom.

The Balanced Treatment for Creation-Science and Evolution-Science Act was approved with little debate during the final days of the 1981 legislative session. Gov. Frank White signed the bill into law in March and later said he had not read Evolutionists say life developed slowly over millions of years. Creationists say a supernatural force formed the world suddenly and relatively recently. The law forbids the use of religious writings in the classroom.

The ACLU says the law is an attempt by fundamentalists to force a literal interpretation of Genesis into the public schools as science. The state says there is scientific evidence to support creationism.

The ACLU has said it will appeal if Overton upholds the law. Clark has said that if the state loses, he probably would appeal to the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in St. Louis.

EPA reorganization may cripple it

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Environmental Protection Agency soon will go through a top-to-bottom reorganization that environmentalists say will cripple government efforts to fight pollution.

"This means the end of the agency," William Drayton, EPA's chief budget officer during the Carter administration, said Monday. "They have set out to tear EPA apart in order to get it off the backs of businesses."

Save EPA, a coalition of environmental groups fighting proposed budget cuts, said they have obtained internal documents showing that 50 percent of EPA's headquarters staff either will be fired or demoted in the reorganization, to be announced in a few weeks.

Drayton estimated that 80 percent of the people on the headquarters staff when Carter left office will have quit, been fired or demoted by next June.

EPA officials said the figure was greatly inflated. The officials confirmed, however, that EPA Administrator Anne Gorsuch is reorganizing the agency. Sources, who asked not to be identified, estimated that 700 to 800 people out of 4,385 in the Washington headquarters will lose their jobs.

These officials said similar cutbacks will occur in the EPA's regional offices, which employ about 6,000 persons. Drayton contended the figure could reach 1,500 fired in Washington headquarters. He said for every 100 positions eliminated at least 150 other people will be demoted to lower-paying jobs because of bumping rights in the government's civil service rules.

There were 5,298 EPA employees in Washington immediately after Reagan's inauguration but that already has declined by 913, mainly from people quitting at a rate three times what it was during the Carter administration, Drayton said.

He said the internal documents show Mrs. Gorsuch hopes to slash the headquarters staff to between 2,085 and 2,785 by June 30, as much as 53 percent below the level when Reagan took office.

"Unable to repeal the country's environmental laws because the public would never stand for it, the Reagan team is working determinedly towards the same end through the budgetary and personnel back doors," Drayton said.

But John R. Horton, an EPA assistant administrator, said the reorganization was an effort by Mrs. Gorsuch to carry out the Reagan election mandate to streamline government.

Horton called Drayton's estimates on layoffs and demotions "excessively high" and just a guess since the final plan has not been submitted to Mrs. Gorsuch.

Earthquake reported at Fort Stockton

FORT STOCKTON, Texas (AP) — An earthquake with a magnitude of 3.8 on the Richter scale was felt in the Fort Stockton area but no damage or injuries were reported, says the National Earthquake Information Service in Golden, Colo.

The earthquake occurred at 10:56 a.m. Monday, said geophysicist Joe Minsch of the NEIS, which is operated by the U.S. Geological Survey.

The agency received reports of the earthquake being felt as far as 20 miles to the north of Fort Stockton and 20 miles to the south, he said in a telephone interview. NEIS files show that an earthquake with a magnitude of 3.7 occurred in 1974 in the Fort Stockton area, but the agency received no reports of it being felt by residents, the geophysicist said.

The Richter scale is a gauge of the energy released by an earthquake, as measured by the ground motion recorded on a seismograph. An earthquake of 2 is the smallest normally felt by humans. A quake of magnitude 3.5 can cause slight damage.

Heavy vessel erected at Borger Refinery

BORGER — A 550-ton vessel has been erected at Phillips Petroleum Company's refinery here following a 700-mile rail journey from Houston. The reactor, 75 feet long and more than nine feet thick, is one of four of this size being installed by Fluor Corporation subsidiaries as part of a refinery modernization program that will cost in excess of $300 million.

The huge vessel necessitated unusual requirements for its journey to the Panhandle and subsequent erection upon arrival, according to Fluor Engineers and Constructors, Inc., the prime contractor. It was loaded onto two heavy-duty, 12-axle rail cars of 300-ton capacity each. The cars were connected by a specially designed skid with slide plates which cradled the vessel, distributed its weight between the cars and allowed it to accept motion, particularly around turns, on its 30-mile-per-hour trek to north Texas. Each slide plate measured four inches thick, six feet wide, and nine feet long, and weighed five tons.

A new, heavy-lift system, designed and manufactured to the specifications of Daniel Construction company, another Fluor subsidiary, was waiting for the vessel when it completed its seven-day trip to Borger. The system has a maximum lift capacity of more than 1,000 tons and employs 14-inch-diameter swivel balls to accommodate six different modes of operation. Monitoring devices on all support "guy line" cables insure accurate and uniform pretensioning, according to Daniel, and instrumentation on the hoist cable indicates tension pull during the lift within an accuracy of plus or minus one percent.

The rail cars that carried the vessels to Borger are also being used as the tailing device to erect the vessels. As the 80-ton-pull hoist inches the top of the vessel upward, the bottom end of the vessel, sitting on a swivel and supported by the rail car, is powered slowly forward by a locomotive. The pulling and forward movements of the hoist and locomotive are coordinated carefully to keep the huge weight centered and the delicate assembly in balance and within tolerances. Aided by four-way remote communication, the first of the heavy lifts at Phillips took less than 75 minutes. Such lifts typically take an hour or less but are months in the planning. Daniel rigging specialists began planning the Borger lifts nearly two years ago.

The future of sign marking assassination site uncertain

DALLAS (AP) — It sits in dust-covered pieces in the basement of the former Texas School Book Depository, left there by county officials who say they don't want to make a dollar off the assassination of President John F. Kennedy.

The 100-foot-wide Hertz billboard, was removed from the depository roof on May 22, 1979 — about 15½ years after the former president was shot in Dallas.

"It probably was one of the most photographed billboards in the history of America," said John Briton, chief of the Hertz public affairs department.

Dallas County Historical Commission officials say they don't know what to do with the eye-catching billboard.

But they do say that they won't sell the oversized advertisement — which formerly lit up Dallas' downtown with as many as 800 light bulbs — to the enterprising souls who want to sell small fragments of the billboard to assassination buffs.

"It would have shown zero class," said Judson Shook, who was Dallas County Public Works director at the time of the assassination.

He said the county "bent over backwards in not wanting to make any profit from the assassination."

The billboard was disassembled because its weight was causing structural damage to the six-story depository building, which now has been refurbished and opened as the Dallas County Administration Building.

"You could jump up and down on the roof, and the sign would shake," Shook said. "It acted as a wind sail, and would sway back and forth whenever there was a gust of wind."

Kennedy was shot Nov. 22, 1963, as his motorcade wound through the streets of downtown Dallas. Authorities have said the fatal shot came from the book depository building.

EASY DOES IT — A 550-ton vessel begins its upward ascent at Phillips Petroleum Company's Borger refinery following a 700-mile rail journey from Houston. The reactor, 75 feet long and more than nine feet thick, is one of four of this size being installed by Daniel Construction Co.

Whale strandings scientists' enigma

WOODS HOLE, Mass. (AP) — For a veterinarian, it is the ultimate frustration. Dozens of suffocating whales lie stranded on a beach. They are so bulky they cannot be moved and so sick they cannot be saved. Sometimes they are so big they cannot even be killed.

This strange ritual of the sea has been going on throughout history. The giant underwater mammals swim onto the sand and wait to die.

No one knows why, but theories range from ear parasites to blind loyalty to a dying leader.

Mass strandings happen around the world. On the East Coast, groups of whales or porpoises will commit what seems like suicide about once every three years.

A specialized corps of veterinarians goes to their aid. But almost invariably, they can do little but put the animals to death.

"Efforts have been made to save these animals," says John Prescott, director of the New England Aquarium in Boston. "Our success rate is virtually zero the world around."

The aquarium helps coordinate the New England marine mammal stranding network, which oversees the rescue and care of these animals. When a whale goes aground, the network contacts one of a half dozen veterinarians who specialize in whales.

Among them is Dr. Richard Lambertsen, who is also a whale biologist at the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution. He has spent a career looking at beached whales, including the victims of New England's latest mass stranding early last month.

"You can treat these animals following your best medical judgment and fail nonetheless," Lambertsen said. "And generally you do fail. No stranded animals have lived for very long after one of these events. Some might live for a month, but for some unexplainable reason, they go downhill and die."

Hanging gardens brighten any room

Hanging baskets overflowing with tropical vines and creepers bring a special vitality and grace to windows, skylights and interiors.

Attractive containers, hangers and brackets come in countless shapes, sizes and materials. Combine them with the natural beauty of cascading plants, and your hanging garden will be a resplendent jewel.

Hanging plants are available for every location and decorating need. Dimly lit windows and offices will be brightened by colorful coleus and English ivy.

In sunny windows, grow the velvety purple passion vine or the fascinating burro's tail with its overlapping tear-drop leaves that form pendulous blue-tinted braids.

Dozens of beautiful plants thrive where light is moderately bright. The grass-like spider plant sends out miniature replicas of itself that dangle at the end of two-foot stems.

Grape ivy steadily climbs up an indoor trellis, and purple and silver wandering Jews produce delicate pink blossoms.

Swedish ivy, heart-shaped philodendron, marbled-leaved pothos and the curious piggyback plant all grow profusely.

Fern lovers will find that the elegant Boston fern is shown to best advantage in a container that allows the arching fronds to hang freely.

The golden polypody fern and all the plants commonly called rabbit's or hare's foot fern — so named because of their fuzzy creeping stems — also look best suspended in air.

Even one variety of cactus is right for hanging. Called the rattail cactus, it bears narrow cylindrical green stems of up to three feet that are densely covered with short yellow spines.

The interior decorator in you may demand more than plastic or clay flower pots and wire suspenders. Unique containers and fancy hangers abound.

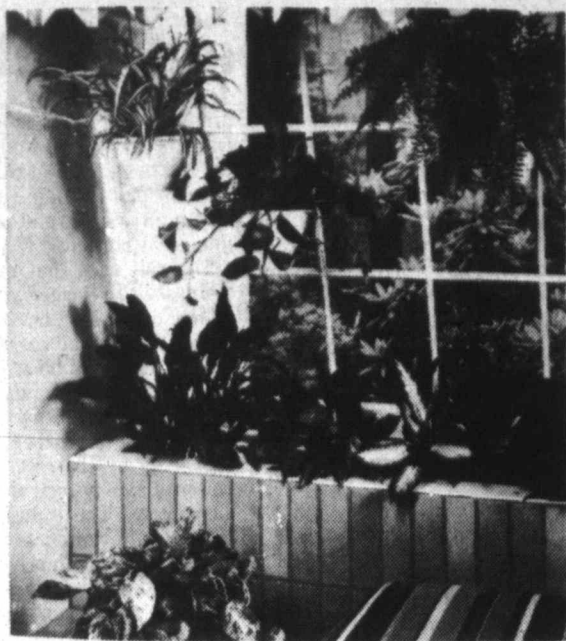

Many people prefer growing hanging plants in ordinary pots that are placed inside stoneware, wicker or wood containers. Definitely do so if the decorative piece affords no drainage.

Plant sling made of macramé, chain, rope, fishnet, or leather are attractive and strong. Suspend these hangers from screw hooks, L-brackets, curtain rods or plants poles.

Whatever methods and materials you choose, be sure the hardware is sturdy and the installation secure. After water is added to the soil, hanging containers can be surprisingly weighty.

Supplying water and essential plant nutrients is most important for keeping your hanging garden lush and colorful. Frequency of watering varies with type of plant, location, size and kind of container.

Ferns need watering more often than cacti. A large plastic container holds moisture longer than small clay container. Of course, the sunnier the location, the quicker any soil will dry. Keep the soil of water-loving plants such as ferns, coleus and piggyback moist at all times. The majority of hanging plants, including Swedish ivy, wandering Jew and philodendron, need to dry moderately between waterings. Allow a thorough drying for cacti and succulents.

A monthly dose of a nitrogen supplement is generally all the food your houseplants need if they are occasionally repotted in fresh soil, which provides potassium and phosphorus.

A convenient source of nitrogen is Knox Unflavored Gelatine — the same gelatine used in recipes and for healthy fingernails.

Dissolve an envelope of the gelatine with a cup of hot water in a large mixing bowl. Then add three cups cold water to make a quart. Thoroughly water your plants with this mixture once a month.

Hanging plants can quickly outgrow their containers. Repot them into one or two inch larger containers any time you notice roots protruding through the drainage hole or the top of the soil.

Fill in the new container with an all-purpose potting mix made of equal parts potting soil, peat moss and perlite.

Keep your hanging plants full and brush by periodically pinching back stem tips. With straggly plants, severely prune stems to where foliage is thick or to near the container rim.

Dear Abby

Funeral need not be grave affair

DEAR ABBY: "Confused in Indiana" wrote to say she was "shocked" to learn that a friend went dancing the night she buried her husband. You agreed, saying you thought it was "inappropriate" for mourners to dance so soon after burying a loved one.

Who do you think you are to pass judgment in the first place? That woman has the right to mourn her husband any way she wants to!

After my father was buried, we went to my cousin's house where my father had spent many happy hours. He particularly loved the clubroom. Right after the funeral I went down there and found the jukebox playing and all the relatives dancing and enjoying refreshments. On the chair where my father had always sat was a baseball cap made of flowers. (Dad loved baseball.) That was the only floral arrangement that was not left at the cemetery. It was as though my father was there watching everybody do what he loved to do in life.

After all, Abby, haven't you ever heard of an Irish wake? My family is not Irish, but not everyone sits "shivah."

MERRY IN MARYLAND

DEAR MERRY: I've had many surprises in my mail, but one of the biggest was the number of readers who wrote to disagree with me. You're right — everyone has the right to deal with his grief in his own way, but somehow, dancing the day of the funeral seemed inappropriate to me. And it still does.

DEAR ABBY: A very close friend of mine, who is a successful management consultant, has the worst case of halitosis I have ever encountered! Being a professional myself, I am worried that my friend's problem may cost him professionally and socially. He's single as well.

I have polled my friends, and no one has come up with a suitable solution. He is such a lovely person and he must be told. But how? And by whom?

HIS FRIEND

DEAR FRIEND: He must be made aware of his problem by someone who cares a great deal about him. I nominate you! If you can't find the words to tell him that he needs to see a dentist and/or a physician about his offensive breath, send him this column. It would be an act of kindness. Trust me.

DEAR ABBY: I'm a married woman (early 20s) and this

Review: Empire Brass Quintet

The Empire Brass Quintet, winner of the prestigious Naumberg award in chamber music (1976) was the first 1982 offering by the Pampa Community Concert Association. Sunday afternoon in M. K. Brown Auditorium.

All members of the group are professionals who perform regularly with the Boston Symphony, the New York Philharmonic, the Metropolitan Opera and other important organizations.

The quintet's instrumentation consists of two trumpets, tuba, trombone and French horn. Those of us who have watched the weekly PBS concerts by the Boston Pops have seen one of its members, trumpeter Rolf Smedvig, many times on the television screen as the camera's eye roamed about through the various sections of the orchestra.

Repertoire performed spanned the baroque, the English Renaissance, the Romantic (Schumann) and the modern periods (Gershwin). At the end of the program there was a touch of jazz and ragtime.

Although the ensemble played with admirable ease, technique and rhythm, its most striking resource was the luxurious smoothness and beauty of tone which it produced. This was particularly true in the case of the trumpets.

Of all the works performed, my favorite was the Quintet No. 3 by Ewald.

As everybody in the audience was well aware, the "Empire Brass" is a young and very handsome group. Nevertheless, nothing becomes a musician like playing well and this they all certainly did.

BILL HALEY

problem concerns my best friend. (I'll call her Lila.) We are like sisters. Lila has been going with the same fellow (I'll call him George) for three years and they are practically engaged. George's grandmother was sick in the hospital, so Lila went to see her and they wouldn't let her in because "family members only" were allowed to visit. It has caused a terrible rift between George and his family. George sides with Lila and so do I.

Abby, don't you think they should have considered this girl "family"? George's family say that as long as they are not married, she is not family. George's grandmother died a week later, and he is still on the outs with them.

LILA'S FRIEND

DEAR FRIEND: Since George's grandmother was seriously ill, it is understandable that only family members were allowed to visit. Lila should have checked before going to the hospital.

CONFIDENTIAL TO NAMELESS IN ATLANTA: If you're convinced you are hopelessly impotent, you are.

Frame it right

CHICAGO (AP) — Although most people know what kind of art they like, they sometimes have difficulty choosing the right frame for a particular picture, says an expert in the field.

"A frame should be in proportion to the size and characteristics of the art — not overpowering it, yet strong enough to contain it," says Dave Klitzky, president of a chain of do-it-yourself framing stores.

"In many cases a picture's tonality will suggest the best frame," says Klitzky, who heads the Great Frame Up. "If you're working with warm tones, try a warm wood frame; cool tones would suggest a darker wood frame or metal frame."

Klitzky suggests that the visual weight of a picture can sometimes be a guide to how wide the frame should be. If the picture has strong lines and dark colors, the frame should be wider than if the picture has fine lines and light colors.

A picture with three-dimensional qualities can be enhanced by using a frame that slants into the picture, adding to the feeling of depth, he says. An action-oriented subject usually needs a larger frame to contain its motion.

A two-dimensional graphic poster seems to frame better in a flat-faced molding," he adds.

A couple of don'ts, according to Klitzky, don't trim the picture to fit an existing frame's size; remember, the frame is subordinate to the picture and should follow its dimensions. Avoid choosing the frame to match furniture or wall coverings in the room. "You will lose the picture in a sea of harmony," he warns.

NUMB ARMS, LEGS Danger Signals

There may be misalignment of vertebrae in the spine causing pressure on nerves, yet the patient experiences no pain in the back. Instead, a variety of sensations may be felt in other parts of the body. These include tingling, tightness, hot spots, cold spots, crawling sensations, electric shock sensations, stinging, burning, and others. Here are nine critical symptoms involving back pain or strange sensations which are usually the forerunners of more serious conditions. Any one of these usually spells back trouble.

- (1) Paresthesias (see above)
- (2) Headaches
- (3) Painful joints
- (4) Numbness in the arms or hands
- (5) Loss of sleep
- (6) Stiffness in the neck
- (7) Pain between the shoulders
- (8) Stiffness of pain in lower back
- (9) Numbness or pain in the legs.

These signals indicate that your body is being robbed of normal nerve function. Until this function is restored, you will, in some degree, be incapacitated. The longer you wait to seek help, the worse the condition will become. Don't wait! Should you experience any of these danger signals, call for in-Depth consultation in Layman's terms.

It isn't just stress

By Lawrence Lamb, M.D.

DEAR DR. LAMB — You often stress the importance of diet, not smoking and exercise as ways to prevent heart attacks. I have read that the real cause of heart attacks is stress. If you have the right personality factors and escape stress you are not likely to have heart attacks. One reason the people in some underdeveloped countries don't have heart attacks is because they don't have the same amount of stress as we have in a modern society.

Wouldn't it be better to encourage more people to assume a "laid back" position and stop their frantic pace rather than stressing diet and exercise all the time? And what is wrong with a cigarette while you are relaxing? The relaxation might outweigh any harmful effects of the cigarette.

DEAR READER — Stress is an important factor in heart disease but usually because it increases the risk factors we have positively identified as related to fatty-cholesterol deposits in the arteries that cause heart attacks and strokes.

Personality typing is hard to do. There is one school of thought that people who are type A personalities are much more likely to have heart attacks than type B personalities. Supposedly the type A person is a go-getter, with his engines at full throttle while the type B person is, to use your term, "laid back."

The obvious error in that thinking is that heart attacks in living people were not even diagnosed until 1908. Now, we did have a few achievers before then. Certainly the type A personality is not something that has just developed in the past 100 years.

I am sending you The Health Letter number 4-1, Behavior Patterns, Psychological Factors, Stress and Heart Disease, to give you more information. Others who want this issue can send 75 cents with a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope for it to me, in care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 1551, Radio City Station, New York, NY 10019.

tures with low rates of heart attacks also eat less, eat far less saturated fat and are lean and active people. As a group they do not smoke cigarettes. As they develop our habits they also develop heart disease. Things are just not as simple as whether one is relaxed or stressed.

DEAR DR. LAMB — In one of your columns you spoke of niacin as one of the B vitamins. You said it can cause flushing. My question is how do you ask for niacin? Is it known as B-6 or B anything? Or is it just called niacin?

DEAR READER — Niacin belongs to the B complex vitamin group but it is not called B anything. Niacin is really a general term that includes both nicotinic acid and nicotinamide which may be regarded as having the same action. This vitamin is essential to health. It is part of a co-enzyme system that enables normal metabolism within your cells, really part of the energy system that runs your cells.

If you don't have enough you can develop pellagra. This is a serious disease that includes a skin rash and in severe forms can even cause nervous system disorders, including personality changes. I hasten to add that in our modern society mental disorders are seldom due to niacin deficiency.

In large amounts nicotinic acid, but not nicotinamide, can cause flushing and even liver damage. No one should take large amounts of nicotinic acid without a doctor's supervision.

Conserving energy with a fireplace

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

A roaring fire doesn't have to mean a soaring heating bill. You can enjoy the benefits of a fireplace without wasting energy if you take a few simple steps to save.

A consumer guide from the Department of Energy notes that under normal circumstances, a good-sized fire will burn from 10 to 12 pounds of wood an hour, giving off about the same amount of heat as the average furnace.

The problem is that 95 percent of the heat from the fireplace is lost; it doesn't warm the house. Here's why:

Heat travels in three ways — by radiation, conduction and convection.

Radiant heat from the fire warms the surfaces of a room like the walls and the furniture. It does not heat the air. Nearly all of the useful heat from an open fire comes in the form of radiant energy and warms only those objects in direct view of the fire.

Conduction is the transfer of heat through a material or from one material to another. Through conduction, the fire will warm the wall behind the fireplace; the heat will be transferred through the wall to the outside.

Convection is the transfer of heat by air movement. Since warm air rises, most of the heat from the fire will move, by convection, up the chimney. The upward draft of air in the chimney draws air from the room where the fireplace is located. If you leave the doors open, air from the rest of the house will be drawn towards the fireplace as well. Most of the heat the fire produces will be used to warm the cold air it is drawing towards it.

There are several ways to make a fireplace more energy efficient:

Glass doors, with air intakes at the bottom, control the flow of air from the room into the fireplace. The doors also will block much of the radiant energy produced by the fire, but they make up for the loss by preventing warm room air from going up the chimney.

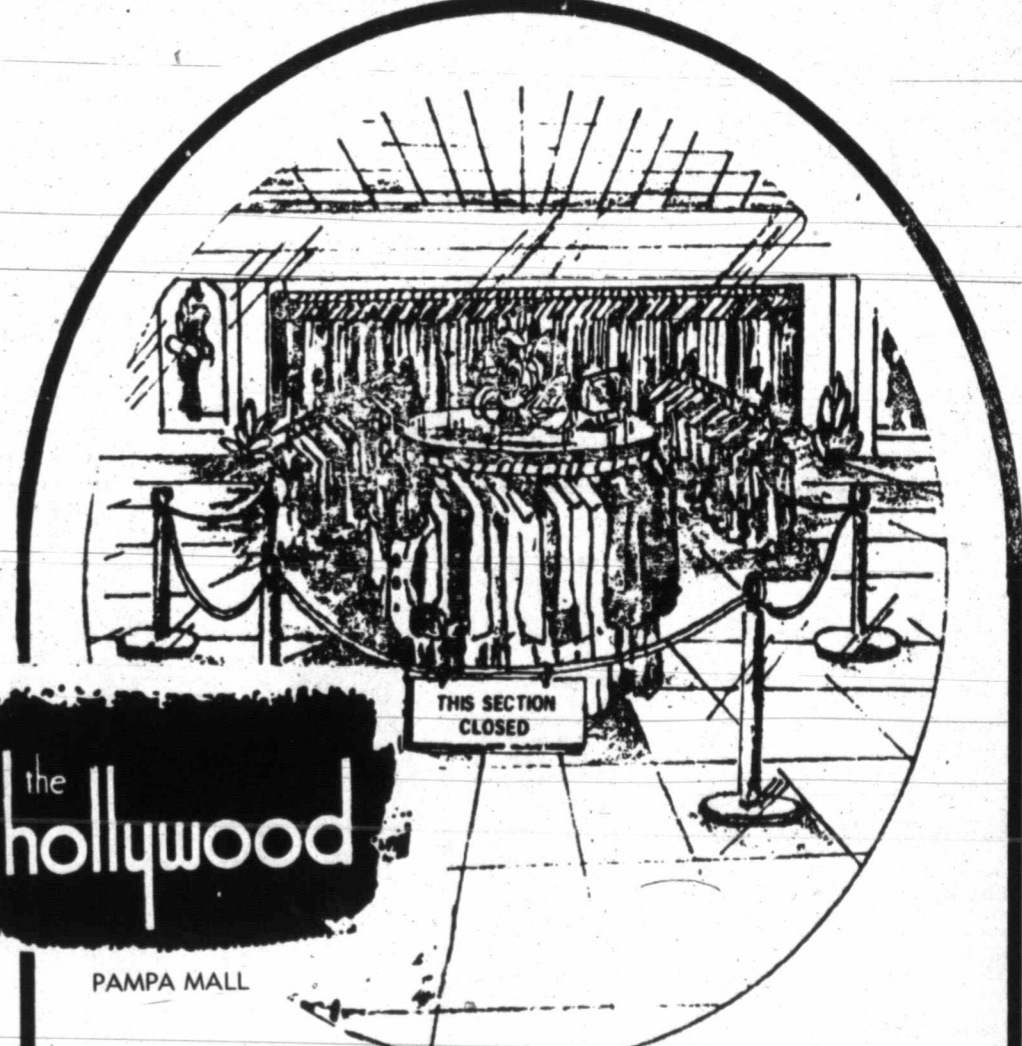

Convective grates — sometimes sold in combination with glass doors — are designed to send the air heated by the fire back into the room instead of letting it escape up the chimney. The grates may rely on natural convection or may include fans to circulate the air.

When the fireplace is not in use, it should be sealed off. Most fireplaces include a damper to prevent air loss. Make sure the damper is not cracked, warped or chipped and always keep it closed when you do not have a fire going.

To decide whether you can save money by using your fireplace, you will have to take into account factors like the price of conventional fuel versus firewood and the cost of fireplace improvements. A fireplace information guide issued by the Department of Energy explains how to make the calculations and includes worksheets and charts you can use. The pamphlet, "What About Fireplaces?," costs $2.25 and is available from the Consumer Information Center, Dept. 172K, Pueblo, Colo. 81009.

Pampa opens new year against Canyon

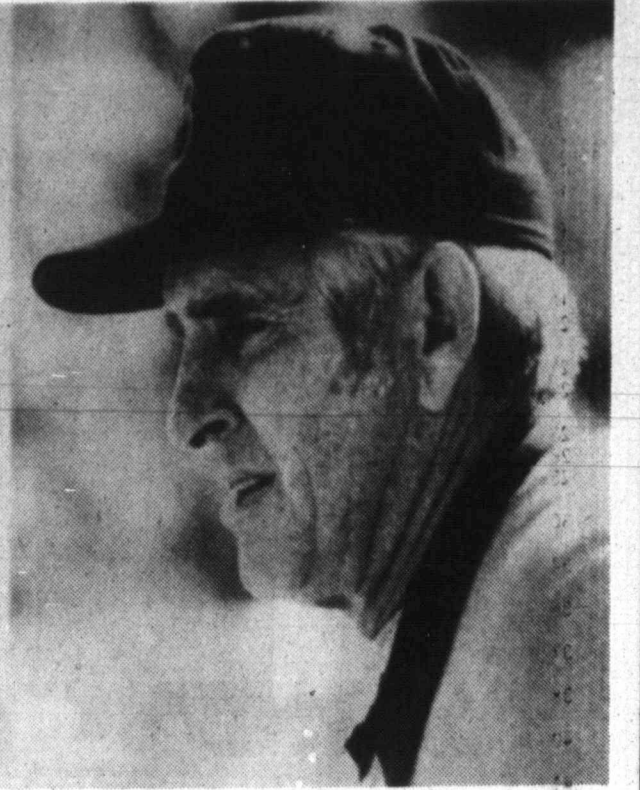

Pampa opens the '82 portion of the basketball season against the same team it tipped off with to begin the season.

The Harvesters are hoping the results will be the same after rolling over Canyon, 76-46, in the season opener.

Led by Mike Nelson's 25 points, Pampa led by as much as 32 points. Harvester coach Garland Nichols plans to experiment with different lineups as the countdown to the District 3-5A opener (Amarillo) Caprock, Jan.

22) draws closer. "Right now we're gearing everything we do toward district," Nichols said. "Although we've got some non-district games left, we'll be executing like we would be against district teams." Nichols will go with a taller lineup—Mike Nelson, Charles Nelson, Terry Faggins, Coyle Winborn and Jimmy Barker—against Canyon at 7:30 p.m. tonight in the Eagle Fieldhouse. "In the next two weeks I'll be looking at a lot of kids and try to find the best lineup I can," Nichols said. "But then again I may not ever have a set lineup. I might go with a bigger lineup or a quicker lineup, depending on who the opponent is." Pampa, 11-3 overall, edged Borger, 52-51, in overtime to win the Borger Holiday Tournament New Year's eve. "We've had a couple of real good workouts since then," Nichols said. "We feel like we got a lot of things accomplished. We went back and worked a lot on fundamentals to get ready for district." Phil Jeffrey, a 6-4 junior, twisted an ankle in yesterday's practice and may not see action tonight, Nichols said.

Walsh named AP coach of the year

NEW YORK (AP) — Bill Walsh, who in just three seasons changed the San Francisco 49ers from the National Football League's losingest team to its winningest, was named today The Associated Press Coach of the Year. Walsh was the overwhelming choice of a nationwide panel of sports writers and broadcasters, named on 61 1/2 of the 84 ballots cast. Forrest Gregg, who performed a "worst-to-first" feat with the Cincinnati Bengals, was a distant second with 15 1/2 votes. Don Shula of the Miami Dolphins received three votes, Tom Landry of the Dallas Cowboys got two and Dan Reeves of the Denver Broncos and Walt Michaels of the New York Jets received one vote apiece. The 50-year-old Walsh, who doubles as general manager of the 49ers, piloted the team to a 13-3 record, the best in the NFL, in 1981. When he took control of the club before the 1979 season, it had won just 31 of its previous 86 games and was coming off a 2-14 season. San Francisco went 2-14 again in '79, then improved to 6-10 the following year before storming to its first winning season since 1976 and its first National Conference Western Division championship since 1972.

The redevelopment of the 49ers into an NFL power was achieved in two basic steps. First Walsh put together a potent pass-oriented offense, but one which often couldn't survive the team's defense. Then, in the 1981 draft and in major acquisitions after that, he built a defense into the second best in the conference. Among the players he drafted his first year were Joe Montana and Dwight Clark, the NFC's leading passer and receiver this year. And in 1981 he used three of his first four selections to draft Ronnie Lott, Eric Wright and Carlton Williamson.

SWC roundup Houston holds off Rice, 63-61

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ AP Sports Writer They call him Akeem "The Dream" Olajuwon and Houston coach Guy Lewis' dream came true in Houston's Southwest Conference basketball opener. Olajuwon came off the bench in the second half to dominate rebounding on both ends of the court, score 10 points and lead the 18th-ranked Cougars to a 63-61 victory over the determined Rice Owls Monday night in the SWC opener for both teams. "It wasn't easy and it wasn't beautiful but it was one victory in the SWC," Lewis said. "I was just glad to see the clock run down." Olajuwon, a freshman from Nigeria, got six rebounds on each end of the court and led an early second-half surge that put Houston ahead for good at 42-41 with 7:37 left in the game. The victory put Houston in a tie for first place in the SWC with Texas Tech, which upset fifth-ranked Arkansas over the weekend. In the only other SWC action Monday night, Baylor defeated Southwestern, 68-59, in a non-conference game at Waco. Houston sophomore Clyde Drexler scored all nine of his points during the stretch when the Cougars took the lead and Rob Williams, slowed by a wrist injury, contributed 15 crucial points. "I was nervous all through the first half but in the second half, I felt much more comfortable," Olajuwon said. "The other guys told me the SWC schedule would be tougher and it is — much more physical." The surprising Owls, who upset sixth-ranked San Francisco and 20th-ranked North Carolina State in their last two games, took a 27-21 halftime lead, paced by high-scoring Ricky Pierce, who scored 37 points in the game.

COULD YOU USE AN EXTRA $540,585 WHEN YOU RETIRE?

THE NEW TAX-DEFERRED INDIVIDUAL RETIREMENT ACCOUNTS—IRAs.

That's a ridiculous question, of course. Because everyone could use an extra $540,585 toward their retirement.

And now, with a tax-deferred Individual Retirement Account (IRA) from our FULL SERVICE BANK, almost everyone can have an extra $540,585. Even if you're already covered by a company pension plan.

To build such an impressive nest egg, you'll need to salt away $2,000 a year—for 30 years—into your own high-yield retirement account.

Or, as demonstrated in the box at right, you can deposit less than $2,000 a year and still end up with a sizeable amount of cash.

You can even set up a convenient payment schedule. Making deposits by the week, by the month or whatever suits you best.

WHAT A TAX-DEFERRED IRA COULD MEAN TO YOU

(Based on 12% interest, compounded annually)

	$500 INVESTMENT at start of each year	$1,000 INVESTMENT at start of each year	$2,000 INVESTMENT at start of each year
Total Investment After 30 Years	$ 15,000	$ 30,000	$ 60,000
Total Value of Investment After 30 Years	$135,146	$270,292	$540,585

Note: This chart is intended to be an example of how regular deposits into an IRA can grow into a substantial sum. This is not a guarantee of interest rates or end financial results.

And because our retirement accounts are tax-deferred, you deduct your annual investment from your taxable income. So you'll pay no federal tax on an IRA until you start withdrawing funds (minimum age: 59 1/2).

Then, when you retire, you'll probably be in a lower tax bracket, paying lower taxes.

If you're intrigued with the thought of reducing your tax load while increasing your security, call or visit the professionals at our FULL SERVICE BANK for all the details.

They could help make your retirement much more enjoyable. About $540,585 more enjoyable.

WE'VE GOT THE ANSWERS.

Pampa ninth graders down Dumas in girls basketball

Pampa ninth-grade girls' basketball team is now 1-1 in district play after defeating Dumas Orange, 35-30, on the homecourt last night.

Karrie Richardson and Stephanie Smith paced Pampa's scoring attack with 14 and 13 points respectively.

The victory avenged a 38-28 loss to Dumas Orange in the opening round of the Dumas Tournament two weeks ago.

Richardson scored 11 points and Teresa Perkins eight for Pampa in that game.

Pampa bounced back to win the consolation title. Smith was high scorer with 14 points as Pampa edged Hereford LaPlata, 42-41, in the first round of the loser's bracket. Perkins followed with 10. Pampa then slipped by Spearman, 24-23, to claim the consolation trophy. Richardson had 15 points and Perkins had five.

"According to coach Mike Duncan, it was the first trophy the Pampa ninth-grade girls have ever won."

"They were pretty happy about it," Duncan said. "I feel like we can build a good girls' program here if we can get more girls and parents interested."

The Pampa ninth-graders were coming off a 29-25 loss to Lefors varsity Saturday night.

Smith tossed in 12 points for Pampa while Richardson had seven. Pampa, now 5-6 in overall play, travels to Borger for a 5 p.m. game Monday.

North Carolina stays No. One

By TOM CANAVAN Associated Press Writer

Preseason favorite North Carolina is the near-unanimous choice today as the No. 1 team in The Associated Press college basketball poll following a week in which nine of the nation's Top 20 teams lost at least one game.

This week's poll, in which Virginia replaced previously unbeaten Wichita State as the country's No. 2 team, sets up a matchup of the nation's two top-ranked teams Saturday when North Carolina hosts the Cavaliers in a nationally televised game. It will mark the second time this season that teams ranked 1-2 in the country have met. Earlier this season, North Carolina retained the nation's bragging rights by downing then No. 2 Kentucky 82-69.

North Carolina, which raised its record to 9-0 with a victory over William and Mary last night, collected 56 of 58 first-place votes and 1,158 points — two shy of perfection. The Tar Heels also posted a thrilling 56-50 overtime decision over Penn State and downed Santa Clara 63-50 in winning the Cable Car Classic last week.

Virginia, 11-0 following a pair of victories over James Madison and one over Richmond, was tabbed No. 1.

News in Briefs

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — After more than two years of fighting Afghan rebels, Soviet forces have only secured Kabul, the capital, and are nearly doubling their strength to 150,000 men by spring, a report from Afghanistan says. The report, from a source who has been accurate in the past, quoted an Afghan military source. He said outside Kabul, the Soviets are constantly exposed to guerrilla ambushes, and the Kremlin has ordered 20,000 more troops into the country in recent weeks. The report supported other Western diplomatic accounts that the Soviets are bogged down in attempts to crush resistance to the Afghan Communist government.

The value of construction put in place through last November was $217.5 billion, 3.3 percent above the level for the same period of 1980, the department said Monday. Economists disagreed on whether the figures indicated the economy is pulling out of the recession. The construction industry has been in a slump since early in 1981. The November report showed that the spending to build new private homes fell 0.8 percent to an annual rate of $77.6 billion.

six-month bills were sold Monday at an average discount rate of 12.282 percent, down from the 12.448 percent of the previous week. The government also sold about $4.9 billion in three-month bills at an average rate of 11.658 percent, off the 11.69 percent of last week.

The yields were the lowest since the Dec. 21 levels of 11.838 percent for six-month bills and 11.037 percent for three-month bills. Beginning today, banks and savings and loans may pay as much as 12.532 percent interest on six-month money market certificates, down from the previous 12.698 percent.

Names in the news

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Actor Walter Matthau and comedian Norm Crosby will get their wish upon a star this week, according to the Hollywood Chamber of Commerce. Matthau will receive a star on the "Walk of Fame" next to Jack Lemmon's Crosby's will go according to Red Skelton's and Jack Benny's. Chamber publicist Therese Wells said it's not unusual for celebrities to pick the spot they want for the sidewalk stars along Hollywood Boulevard and Vine Street, and the chamber tries to cooperate when possible. "We'll be putting Walter Matthau next to Jack Lemmon" on March 10 in the 6300 block of Hollywood Boulevard, she said. Lemmon and Matthau have co-starred in such films as "The Fortune Cookie," "The Odd Couple" and "The Last Tango in Paris."

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Joe Hamilton, comedian Carol Burnett's husband, is recovering from a "moderate" heart attack suffered at his son's wedding last week. "The prognosis is good," a spokesman says. Hamilton, a television producer, was stricken Thursday at the wedding of his son by a previous marriage, John, to Marion McCarter, said Miss Burnett's publicist, Rick Ingersoll. Miss Burnett postponed a scheduled Jan. 8 week-long guest appearance on ABC's daytime soap opera "All My Children," Ingersoll said.

PEKING (AP) — China's Foreign Ministry today denied a Japanese newspaper report that the United States built a communications base in northwest China last summer to monitor Soviet missile tests and other military activities. The newspaper Yomiuri Shimbun said Sunday that the base is near Lop Nor, the Chinese nuclear center in a sparsely populated area of the Xinjiang region. The New York Times and NBC News reported last June that two U.S.-equipped listening posts had been set up in northwest China, and the Chinese government said then it knew nothing of them. Yomiuri also reported that the United States has asked China to let ships of the U.S. 7th Fleet call in at Dalian, in northeast China, to take on food and water, and secret negotiations are in progress. "These two pieces of news are sheer rumor mongering," a spokesman for the Foreign Ministry said.

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Producer Norman Lear and his partner Jerry Perenchio have closed a deal to buy Arco Embassy Pictures, reportedly for about $25 million. Perenchio and Lear, creator of TV series such as "All in the Family," "Maude" and "Diff'rent Strokes," are partners in TAT Communications, TAT Communications spokeswoman Barbara Brogliatti said Monday the price of the movie company was not officially disclosed but the $25 million figure "seems to be the one most often mentioned" in industry publications. Mrs. Brogliatti said Lear was devoting his time to producing a special called "I Love Liberty," set to be telecast on the 250th anniversary of George Washington's birthday Feb. 22.

NEW YORK (AP) — Television news anchors would rather read or listen to music than watch the tube in their spare time, but they view enough to say that Jessica Savitch and Dan Rather are the sexiest network broadcasters, a new survey says. The survey, prepared as part of a promotional program for the Scotch Whisky Information Center, was released Monday and questioned 100 anchors at 85 television stations in 24 metropolitan areas. Rather anchors the "CBS Evening News" and Miss Savitch is a weekend anchor for "NBC Nightly News."

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Joe Hamilton, comedian Carol Burnett's husband, is recovering from a "moderate" heart attack suffered at his son's wedding last week. "The prognosis is good," a spokesman says. Hamilton, a television producer, was stricken Thursday at the wedding of his son by a previous marriage, John, to Marion McCarter, said Miss Burnett's publicist, Rick Ingersoll. Miss Burnett postponed a scheduled Jan. 8 week-long guest appearance on ABC's daytime soap opera "All My Children," Ingersoll said.

Learning to cope with fear

By EILEEN PUTMAN
Associated Press Writer

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. (AP) — Doug felt so trapped when he got into an elevator that he began ripping at his clothes. Judy's hands shook when she served food. Marleen could not drive across a bridge or shop in a crowded store.

They are phobics — people whose lives are hampered by terrifying fears generated in their own minds.

Now Doug, Judy and Marleen are learning to change by doing the very things they fear most. It begins at a phobia clinic like the one at the White Plains Hospital Medical Center.

"I had to deliver some papers at school. I got up there and handed them to the woman and I got red. My tongue was tied. I got these weird physical feelings," Marleen said at a recent session where participants spoke to a reporter with the understanding that their real names not be used.

Her fellow phobics nodded as the woman continued: "You never know when it's going to happen."

Marleen has a form of agoraphobia, commonly called "housewife's disease," but authorities say it affects men and women alike. It encompasses many fears — traveling away from home, being in crowded places, being alone in an elevator, riding a train or subway.

It can prevent phobics from living normal lives.

Doug lives in the suburbs but works in New York City. His fear of being closed in will not let him take a commuter train to work. Instead, he opts for the headaches of bumper-to-bumper driving.

He is afraid of elevators, so psychiatrists at the phobia clinic sent him out with a trained aide to conquer the fear.

An aide stood outside the elevator as Doug went in alone. The doors closed and a maintenance man stopped the elevator between floors.

"I pressed the 'on' button to make it work again. It didn't work. I don't remember what happened next," Doug told the group, twisting the end of his shirt in his hands.

What happened is that Doug felt himself trapped and began removing his clothes. He was barechested when the aide and maintenance man freed him from the elevator.

Psychiatrists say that Doug is getting better by doing the thing that scares him, at first with the aide and then alone. The clinic teaches phobics that they can control their panic if they just let it happen and monitor the fear as it rises and falls.

"You go through a couple of terrible experiences and it goes away," Dr. Frederic J. Neuman, leader of the group, told Doug. "You say to yourself, 'If I didn't go crazy then, I won't.'"

Phobics are not crazy, psychiatrists say. They are afraid of fear, afraid of losing control, afraid of embarrassing themselves. They have taken a natural, healthy emotion — fear — and let it run their lives.

Ordinary events such as entering a new store for the first time set off alarm bells of panic, sweating, rapid breathing, a feeling of impending death or collapse and dizziness, all for reasons the phobic cannot understand.

"If you imagine the most terrible thing in the world happening, a phobic person feels that in an ordinary, everyday circumstance," said Jo Ann Antonelli, an aide and former phobic who for 12 years was afraid to leave her house.

Dr. Manuel D. Zane, who founded the clinic 10 years ago, said that phobias develop because of stress, usually in the early 20s as young adults confront for the first time emotional upheavals like death, sickness, graduation, childbirth, marriage or divorce.

"They get into life a little bit and start getting some of the real pressures and that's when it starts to happen, when the stresses begin," Zane said.

The feelings are increased by the fact that the phobic feels alone with the fear, he said.

"No one talks about it. You grow up in a society where you don't ordinarily disclose what we're feeling," Zane said. "You finally feel you can't stand it and it just bursts out in a panic."

Phobics sometimes mistake the reaction for high blood pressure, heart disease or some physical illness.

"All I knew was there was something wrong with my body and I didn't know what it was," said Bill, another phobic. "All I knew was that I reacted under certain conditions and the reaction couldn't be controlled."

In the eight-week clinics, phobics pay $480 to learn how to control the reaction and to recognize that their fears are not coming from reality but from their imaginations.

A six-month follow-up on one group showed 76 percent felt they had been helped by the clinics and progressed even further afterwards. The figures were similar on a four-year follow-up.

Most of those in Dr. Neuman's group showed progress by their third week.

Judy, whose hands shake when she serves guests, still has not stopped the fear or the shaking. Ruth, married and in her early 20s, said she had terrible dreams about being crushed in an elevator that shrinks like a tight box around her.

By KRISTIN GAZLAY
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS (AP) — What hairy-chested movie star has worked with Omar Sharif and Chevy Chase, has plans for Broadway musicals and a Saturday morning television show and exudes a kind of, well, animal magnetism?

No, it's not Rin Tin Tin or Lassie. It's Benji, canine lead of his own comic strip, television specials and films such as "Benji," "For the Love of Benji" and "Oh, Heavenly Dog."

The lovable mutt's career is mapped out by Joe Camp, the founder and head of Mulberry Square Productions, the decade-old Dallas studio behind the Benji pictures.

Camp's company operates leagues from the Los Angeles-New York axis that controls filmdom, but Camp said he wouldn't have it any other way.

Letters in children's handwriting pour into Mulberry's office daily. Sent in return are photos, pins, and iron-on transfers. Benji's expressive face adorns purses, shirts, a multitude of merchandise.

"People knew Lassie," Camp said, "but people love Benji." Camp penned the story for the first Benji picture in 1968. But it wasn't until 1974 that the picture was completed and premiered.

"I kept trying to sell it," he said, "but the reaction was always, 'Oh, that's cute.'"

That first film now has earned $45 million worldwide.

The nucleus of the Benji phenomenon germinated from a Disney film, whose mentor — Walt Disney — Camp said he would like to emulate.

"I saw a clip from 'The Lady and the Tramp,' and thought, 'I wonder if it would be possible to do with real dogs what Disney did with animation?' Then I thought, 'No, our dog couldn't talk.'"

"I played with our dog and suddenly thought, 'You know, dogs can talk to us — with their eyes, their actions.'"

Naturally, Benji doesn't interpolate great hunks of dialogue. But those who have seen his pictures swear that the dog outacts his two-legged co-stars.

Critics have dubbed the mutt the Laurence Olivier of the dog world and called his emoting reminiscent of such silent-screen stars as Charles Chaplin.

Camp agreed with all the critic's dogma.

"The people are progs in a Benji movie," he said. "The dog is three-dimensional."

Collaring the perfect Benji to go with his initial script almost stymied Camp in the early 1970s.

"I talked to all the major animal trainers in Hollywood. They all said it was impossible," he said.

Then Camp met veteran trainer Frank Inn, who happened to have a dog named Higgins who was perfect — a dog he originally had picked up in a Burbank, Calif., animal shelter.

The dog had compiled quite a resume as a thespian, too, on the television show, "Petticoat Junction." Higgins became the first Benji.
