PREDICTS NEW HIGH LIVE STOCK LEVEL

The livestock industry has set the pace for agricultural readjustment and indications are that "it will continue to exert a dominant influence in the return of business to normal conditions," according to a quarterly report issued by S. B. Stafford, President of the Chicago Live Stock Exchange.

Hog values are on a sound basis, said the report. Even the heralded over supply next winter will hardly materialize because of the enormous losses the spring pig crop has sustained, it said.

"A high sheep market all summer may be expected on account of meager supplies. The shortage is throughout the country, but most acute east of the Missouri River.

"Cattle should sell at higher levels. We are on the verge of a sacracity of beef producing animals that would have become acute before now had not the depression caused an increase in marketing at the same time it curtailed consumptive demands. The approach of warm weather improves the outlook for beef. The only liberal supply of cattle now apparent will come from Kansas and Oklahoma pastures. Texas and the range country are far short of their normal quota. Distillery feed steers will be missed for the first time this year. The East has been emptied of cattle by local slaughter houses during the period of high freight bills on shipped in supplies.

"The fath of the producers in the future of the live stock industry is shown by their active demand for breeding animals. Good cows have doubled n value since last year and now are bringing from $50. to $60. in the West.

"During the first quarter of this year the hog market established a record by advancing at the hight of the packing season a period usually attended by sagging values. Lambs have been selling at the highest prices realized since the war markets of 1920.

"The lower grades of cattle have moved up sharply in response to an active demand for feeder cattle. Hogs and sheep men have profited substantially by the upturn in values. Margins of $2.00 to $3.00 between bying and selling figures on feeding steers have netted the farmr more for his corn than he could have odtained from the elevator.

"Since the turn of the year live stock has been pulling the farmer out of his perdicament.

"The situation is full of promise, for a profitable future. Every indication points to an increasingly profitable livestock industry and with it is bound to come a gradual improvement in general trade conditions."
—San Angelo Standard.

Segovia School Closes.

On Friday, April 28, the school at Segovia closed a very successful term of school under the direction of Prof. A. J. ent. Segovia Community is very much alive in all matters and especially along educational lines, having nothing during the eight month term this year.

A large crowd attended the closing exercises at the school house. A basket ball game between Segovia and Noxville was played in the afternoon, resulting in a score of 18 to 2 in favor of Segovia. After the ball game those present enjoyed a fine supper prepared by the ladies of the community.

THE HOME TOWN.

This from the Abilene Times points a good moral:

"Human nature runs to two extremes. The finest type of men and women think but little of themselves, and they give their lives and their all to noble ideals. Others are more selfish, they concentrate their thought on personal acquisition, and cherish no interest broader than their own pleasure

"Human progress goes on only as people get away from this sordid line of thought, and acquire the higher ideals of life. Patriotism, the sentiment that makes one love his country and in time of peril leads the soldier to offer his life, is one of the most noble of these ideals. The majority of people entertain ths sentiment.

There ought to be room also in the normal heart, for a feeling of home town patriotism, a love of one's own community that shall be deep, and vigorous and sacrificial, much like the love for country. These scenes amid which people spend their daily lives, should have their pull on their heart strings

"They may have commonplace features and some ugly ones, like all communities. But they constitute home, just as much as the four wall in the dweling in which one lives his life. The old song, of "Home, Sweet Home" should apply not merely to the house in which a person lives, but to all the scenes of the home community.

"To the generous imagination, a feeling of some romatic attachment should grow up for one's home community. Their streets and buildings may not be more wonderful than others, but they are the scene of our struggles and efforts, of our joy and sorrow. They have seen our triumphs and our reverses We have built something of our hearts into them, and they have become part of our lives, that should never be forgotten no matter where life may take us. There is something lacking in the mentality that does not feel the touch of emotion on thinkng of his home town."

Bert M. Fleming's Body To be Burried Sunday.

The body of Bert M. Fleming arrived in Menard, Monday April 24. On account of rains and bad roads it was not posible to bring the body here until last Sunday. The rains this week have prevented the burrial of the body.

If weather conditions are favorable the funeral will be held Sunday May 7th at 2 o'clock p. m.

A TRIBUTE TO BERT FLEMING.

His coming home to Kimble clime
Most breaks our heart today,
For we had pictured Burt, to come
In such a different way.
We dearly love our Soldier boys;
And during all the war
Were planing such a welcome
As was never seen before.

Each man, each woman, yea and child
Was proudly to have shared,
The honors in the welcome home
To those, who for us dared;
To even give their very lives,
That we might dwell in peace;
To take away the curse of War
So for us strife might cease.

Instead, we sadly take our steps
To Junction Cour'-house door,
With breaking hearts we see within
The casket, that which bore
The dear remains of this our boy
From battle-field to REST.
We cannot pay too great respect
THIS SOLDIER GAVE HIS BEST!

Our Savior, now we turn to Thee
Thy word a comfort sends,
For Thou has said "No greater love
Than lays down life for friends"
And we, Burt's friends, KNOW HE GAVE PROOF
OF GREATEST LOVE E'ER SHOWN:
So, lovingly, with grateful hearts
Our tribute is made known.

MORE HEAVY RAINS FALL OVER KIMBLE

Several more good rains fell in different parts of the county during the past week. Nearly an inch fell Sunday night causing the South Llano to rise about five feet, a good part of the water coming from Big Paint where the rain fall was heaviest.

Rains Monday night in the north part of the county brought a rise in Bear Creek that prevented the mail coming and the rains around Roosevelt put the North Llano up about five feet at town. The Kerrville mail did not come in Tuesday, and Johnson Fork of the Llano was reported to have risen about ten feet.

Rains in the direction of Mason prevented the mails coming from that way Monday or Tuesday.

A rain and electrical storm, with some hail, fell Tuesday, night. A half inch fell at Junction and several inches in the north and east parts of the county. Bear Creek was reported higher than for many years, estimated at fifteen feet at the Bannowsky ranch on the Menard road.

Since the beginning of the rains on March 25th. eleven and one-half inches have fallen at Junction. The question of a top and bottom season in the ground has been settled so far as the people in this part of the country are concerned and with reasonable rains through the early summer, Kimble county will produce the biggest crop in its history. From reports of every section of the county it seems that almost every available acre that is in cultivation is going to be planted in feed or cotton, and Kimble county will have more to sell from its farms this year than it will have to buy. The long drouth with the consequent long feeding period with extra ordinary high prices paid for feed has tought a good lesson that will not soon be forgotten.

Wednesday afternoon another hard rain fell, ammounting to one and one-half inches. This brings the total to 13 inches in the past 40 days, according to the Government guage kept by E. Holekamp. Rather careful records kept by others in different sections of the country show nearly 20 inches during this time.

GREAT FLOOD SPREADS OVER VAST STRETCHES OF RICH COTTON LANDS.

Loss In Louisana Will Amount to Millions of Dollars; 50,000 People Affected by Disaster

Natchez, Miss., April 29.—Approximately 50,000 persons are affected above Ferriday by flood waters of the Mississipi, Red, Black, Little, Tensas and Ouachita rivers, it was estimated to day.

About 750,000 acres, half of which are cultivatable, will be overrun, it was estimated, and the damage to crops, highways and fertile lands will run into millions of dollars.

All of Concordia parish, 423,525 acres, is inundated and 100,000 acres had been planted in cotton at an estimate cost of $8.00 an acre.

An area of about 250,000 acres in Catahoula parish is affected, and of this acreage about 75,000 had been planted in cotton and corn.

The flood is rushing into Tensas where there are 80,000 acres in cotton.

With the Mississppi two feet above the highest previous record and much more flood water expected to come down the waterway, it is believed a large section in this zone will remain covered until July.

New Orleans, La. April 29.—With three breaks in the levees of the Missippi River in Louisana, the swolen stream is rapidly receding in the lower reaches, and during the last twenty-four hours the river at New Orleans dropped six inches. The river has been falling continually since the levees began to give way.

The river is now emptying into the gulf through two of the breaks, one at Myrtle Grove on the West bank of the river, which carries the water across through the break at Poydras on the east bank of the river where the water is flowing in a stream more than six miles wide over St. Bernard parish into Lake Borgne.

Looking Forword

For several weeks we have been using this space to boost the planting of every available acre of Kimble County soil, and we find that most of the ranchmen have done this, but we still know of considerable land subject to cultivation that is not being cultivated. Now don't say, to yourself, "it has rained so much that I will not need to plant that vacant spot, as I will have plenty of grass." We say plant it if nothing other than chicken feed.

Let's forget the past and put our heads together, think a little and look forward. We are now assured that we will have a good road all the way to Kerrville, a good railroad point, and with this assurance, we ought to be ready to reap some of the benefits. The way to get those benefits is to b ready.

Th point we are trying to drive home to you is this: Plant plenty of feedstuff of all kinds and save it. With this feed you can raise more chickens and Turkeys, more Milk and butter. Don't say, "I have no market." We will have a market right at our door, if you do not believe what we are saying, we are prepared to prove our statement.

We can feed ourselves and sell something every week, and when w can do that w are getting ahead.

There is every indication of better prices for Kimble County products, for more money to be secured to handle live stock and to improve farms and ranches and of a general stabilizing of every kind of industry. Reports from the market centers show a good demand for wool mohair and live stock at prices that justify our efforts to produce.

W. P. Riley, representing the Feberal Land Board, says that for the first time in nearly three years, he has been "turned loose" so to speak, to make reasonable loans on land for the Land Bank, and where the title is good loans now go through in a short time. Our readers will notice an ad for loans at 6 per cent. The advantage of such a loan can readily be seen. $1000, at 6 per cent with 1 per cent added to apply on the principal in 33 years amounts to approximately $2,200. This seven per cent each year takes care of th interest and principal, so at the end of thirty-three years there is nothing futher to be paid. $1000, at 10 per cent amounts to $3,300 and with the original amounts to $4,300. Thus a saving of about $2,100 is possible. If you are in a position to take advantage of a Fereral farm loan, it will pay you to look into this matter.

Sutton County to Build Roads.

The Devil's River News in Reporting a special session of the Commissioners Court in that county, gave the following which will be of much interest:

J. W. Alger, county engineer, appeared before the court with th fnal plans of the highway to the Schleicher county line which is on the State Highway No. 4. He was instructed to go to Austin as quickly as possible to have the plans approved by the State Highway commission and by then deliver to the Federal Highway Commission in order to secure aid and for tho contracts for the building of the road to be let quicker.

Odd Fellows and Rebekahs Celebrate Anniversary.

On last Friday evening quite a crowd of Odd Fellows, Rebekahs and invited guests gathered at the court house for the purpose of commemorating the One Hundred and Third anniversary of Odd Fellowship in America, Past Grand, Earnest Wilson acting as Master of cere opened by the audience standing and singing "America," and while standing Rev. R. L. McIntyre, Pastor of the Methodist Church invoked the devine Blessings upon the assembly and the entire brotherhood. Fred E. Knetsch, imbued with the spirit of Odd Fellowship and radiating with the congenial and pleasing spirit that is characteristic of him, delivered in a few well chosen words, the Welcome address which was received by all in the full meaning it was intended.

This was followed by a reading, entitled "The Man from Jerico," by Miss Cora Middleton, in which was protrayed the ...n of Love as taught by our Savior in the story of the Good Samaritan.

We then listened to an interesting talk by Brother J. B. Randolph, in which he described the fraternal relations of the Brotherhood, and called attention to the principals and teachings of Jesus Christ, as the foundation of all Orders. Past Grand, Weaver H. Baker, Representative to the Grand Lodge held at San Antonio last March, delivered a very interesting talk by way of report of the last session of the Grand Lodge, calling attention to matters of legislation and the needs of I. O. O. F. Home. Next on the program was an address by A. G. Farmer, D. D. G. M. in which he gave a brief history of the Widows and Orphans Home at Corsicana, and the institution of the Rebekah Degree in Odd was a song rendered by Mrs. A. G. Farmer, Fred E. Knetsch, Miss Elizabeth Patterson and Norman Farmer, entitled, "You Have Been A Friend to Me," which was considered very appropriate on this occassion. This being the last of the entertainment program, Brother John S. Durst dismissed the audience with prayer.

After which they were directed towards the lawn near the I. O. O. F. Hall, from wence came the apetising odor of frying fish. Upon arrival at the scene they found pans of fried fish, pots of beans and chili. The table soon took on the appearance of wedding feast, and after about an hour of pleasant association around this table, partaking of all the good things pleasing to the eye and appeasing to the appetite, the crowd soon faded into the darkness, ... fragments were gathered, the tables disappeared and darkness settled over all, but memory will cheerish a lively recollection until crowded out by other anniversaries.

Indigestion

Many persons, otherwise vigorous and healthy, are bothered occasionally with indigestion. The effects of a disordered stomach on the system are dangerous, and prompt treatment of indigestion is important. "The only medicine I have needed has been something to aid digestion and clean the liver," writes Mr. Fred Ashby, a McKinney, Texas, farmer. "My medicine is for indigestion and stomach trouble of any kind. I have never found anything that touches the spot, like Black-Draught. I take it in broken doses after meals. MANDATE ISSUED FOR COMMITMENT OF J. D. COPELAND.

Appellate Court's Writ Also Directs That F. G. Reynolds Be Taken into Custody.

NEXT STEP UNCERTAIN

Sepuel of Klan Probe Mix-Up Is Not Expected Before Saturday Morning.

The mandate of the court of criminal appeals directed Sheriff W. D. Miller to take into J. D. Copeland and F. G. Reynolds, the two witnesses cited for contempt of court for refusing to answer questions of the Grand jury in regard to the Ku Klux Klan, has been issued by Clerk Olin Finger of the appellate court and was placed in the mail this afternoon. The instrument is expected to reach Sheriff Miller's office Saturday morning and will be exicuted by him immediately upon its receipt. Besides jail sentences to be in force until the men shall answer the questions fines of $100.00 each are to be collected by the Sheriff according to the mandate.

From D. A. Gregg, forman of grand jury, it was learned early Friday afternoon that the investigating body would complete its work today. When asked whether the grand jury had desided to adjorn today he stated that no action had been taken in that regard.

" Are you going to wait until the mandate in the Copeland-Reynolds case reaches the Sheriff Saturday before you adjourn? " he was asked.

"I can not answer that question, because the matter has not been acted upon by the grand jury," was the foreman's reply.

From attorneys for the two men cited for contempt it was learned early Friday afternoon that no announcement is to be made in regard to the carrying of the sase before the United States Supreme Court.

"The matter is still in status quo," one of the attorneys stated when questioned.

Fred S. Rogers Enters Against Gov Pat Neff.

A new aspirant for the political honor of adorning his stationery with the heraldic device, symbold or official insignia of Governor of the Lone Star State, has appeared in the person of Fred S. Rogers, of Bonham recently endorsed a convention of deligates representing the Farm Labor Union, Railway Brotherhoods, Texas State Fereration of Labor and the Non-Partisan League; held at Dallas.

In his discription of the various political planks comprising the flooring of his platform, without detailing the specifications of the various sizes of studding that entered into the said structure, Mr Rogers announces that he was born on April 19th 1887, and has never had any doubts as to the accuracy of this event despite the selective Service Act of 1917." Mr. Rogers was one of the millions that went to the front in the World War.

Among other things that Mr. Rogers, guarantees to the people of Texas if they will accord him gubernatorial plum, is the absolute cutting off of at least $2,000,000 each year of his occupancy of the Governor's office, from appropriation bills that may be passed by the legislature, regarless of the amount carried in such appropriation bills. Expressing a righteous indignation at the inadequacy of the appropriations for the free public schools of Texas, and expressing the most profound sympathy for the hardships under which the teachers of the public schools of Texas are laboring, because of inadequate compensation, and also because the schools in many rural communities are unable to continue for a full term.

Mr. Rogers declares that the legislature is not to blame on the present Governor who vetoed the $10,000,000 appropriation bills for public school purposes, which if such veto had not been exercised, would according to Mr. Rogers, have been sufficient, supplemented by appropriations from local revenues "to assure the runing of the schools for their full terms."

Feats of Blind and Deaf Girl Startle Science.

Chicago, April 24.— Members of the Chicago Medical Society were marveling today over the feats performed here last night by Willeta Huggins, 17-year-old girl, blind and deaf and who is said to be "even more marvelous than Hellen Keller."

The young woman who was brought to Chicago from the home for the blind at Janesville, Wis., although totally blind and totally deaf, can distinguish colors with great rapidity and read news paper head lines, talk over the telephone, enjoy music and carry on a conversation.

She can hear a lecture or orchestra concert by holding a paper in the air and hears over the telephone by putting her finger over the receiver By fingering newspaper headlines she is able to read.

RAMSEY MILHOLLAND. A STORY WHICH WILL BE CONTINUED IN NEXT WEEKS ISSUE OF THE EAGLE.

CHAPTER IV.

With Wesley Bender, Ramsey was again upon fair terms before the winter had run its course; the two were neighbors and moreover, were drawn together by a community of interests which made their reconciliation a necessity. Ramsey played the guitar and Wesley played the mandolin.

All ill feeling between them died with the first duet of spring, yet the tinkling they made had no charm to soothe the savage breast of Ramsey whenever the Teacher's Pet came into his thoughts. He day-dreamed a thousand ways of putting her in her place, but was unable to carry out any of them, and had but a cobwebby satisfaction in imagining discomfitures for her which remained imaginary. "Just once!" he said to Fred Mitchell. "That's all I ask, just once. Just gimme one chance to show that girl what she really is. I guess if I ever get the chance she'll find out what's the matter with her, for once in her life, anyway." Thus it came to be talked about and understood and expected in Ramsey's circle of male, that Dora Yocum's day was coming. "You'll see!" said Ramsey. "The time'll come when that ole girl'll wish she'd moved out o' this town before she ever got appointed monitor of our class! Just you wait!"

They waited, but conditions appeared to remain unfavorable indefinitely. Perhaps the great opportunity might have arrived if Ramsey had been able to achieve a startling importance in any of the "various divergent yet parallel lines of school endeavor"—one of the phrases by means of which teachers and principal clogged the minds of their unwilled auditors. But though he was far from being the dumb driven beast of misfortune that he seemed in the schoolroom, and, in fact, lived a double life, exhibiting in his out-of-school hours a remarkable example of "secondary personality"—a creature loving nothing and capable of laughter, blue eyed, fairly robust, and anything but dumb—he was nevertheless without endowment or attainment great enough to get him distinction.

He "tried for" the high school eleven, and "tried for" the nine, but the experts were not long in eliminating him from either of these competitions, and he had to content himself with cheering instead of getting cheered. He was by no manner of means athletic, or enough of anything else, to put Dora Yocum in her place, and so he and the great opportunity were still waiting in May, at the end of the second year of high school, when the class, now the "10 A," reverted to an old fashion and decided to entertain itself with a woodland picnic.

They gathered upon the sandy banks of a creek in the blue shade of big, patchy-barked sycamores, with a dancing sky on top of everything and gold dust atwinkle over the water. Hither the napkin-covered baskets were brought from the wagons and assembled in the shade, where they appeared as an attractive little meadow of white papery, and gave both surprise and pleasure to communities of ants and to other original settlers of the neighborhood.

From this nucleus or headquarters of the picnic, various expeditions set forth up and down the creek and through the woods that bordered it. Two envied boy fishermen established themselves upon a bank up-stream, with hooks and lines thoughtfully brought with them, and poles which they fashioned from young saplings. They took mussels from the shallows, for bait, and having gone to all this trouble, declined to share with friends less energetic and provident the perquisites and pleasures secured to themselves.

Albert Paxton was one person who proved his enterprise. Having visited the spot some days before, he had hired for his exclusive use throughout the duration of the picnic an old rowboat belonging to a shanty squatter; it was the only rowboat within a mile or two and Albert had his own uses for it. Albert was the class lover and, after first taking the three chaperon teachers "out for a row," an excursion concluded in about ten minutes, he disembarked them. Sadie Clews stepped into the boat, a pocket camera in one hand, a tennis racket in the other; and the two spent the rest of the day, except for the luncheon interval, solemnly drifting along the banks or grounded on a shoal. Now and then Albert would row a few strokes, and at almost any time when the populated shore glanced toward them, Sadie would be seen photographing Albert or Albert would be seen photographing Sadie, but the tennis racket remained an enigma. They were sixteen, and had been "engaged" more than two years.

On the borders of the little meadow of baskets there had been deposited two black shapes, which remained undisturbed throughout the day, a closed guitar case and a closed mandolin case, no doubt containing each its proper instrument. So far as any use of these went they seemed to be of the same leisure class to which Sadie's tennis racket belonged, for when one of the teachers suggested music, the musicians proved shy. Wesley Bender said they hadn't learned to play anything much and, besides, he had a couple o' broken strings he didn't know as he could fix up; and Ramsey said he guessed it seemed kind o' too hot to play much. Joining friends, they organized a contest in marksmanship, the target being a floating can which they assailed with pebbles, and after that they "skipped" flat stones upon the surface of the water, then went to join a group gathered about Willis Parker and Heinie Krusemeyer.

No fish had been caught, a lack of luck crossly attributed by the fishermen to the noise made by constant advice on the part of their attendant gallery. Messrs. Milholland, Bender, and the other rock throwers came up shouting, and were ill received.

"For heaven's sakes," Heinie Krusemeyer demanded, "can't you shut up? Here we just first got the girls to keep their mouths shut a minute and I almost had a big pickerel or something on my hook, and here you got to up and yell so he chases himself away!

"For Heaven's Sakes," Heinie Krusemeyer Demanded, "Can't You Shut Up?"

Why can't nobody show a little sense sometimes when they'd ought to? A fish isn't goin' to bite when he can't even hear himself think! Anybody ought to know that much!"

But the new arrivals hooted. "Fish!" Ramsey vociferated. "I'll bet a hundred dollars there hasn't been even a minnow in this creek for the last sixty years!"

"There is, too!" said Heinie, bitterly. "But I wouldn't be surprised there wouldn't be no fish for if you got to keep up this noise. If you'd shut up just a minute you could see yourself there's fish here."

Ramsey leaned forth over the edge of the overhanging bank, a dirt precipice five feet above the water, and peered into the indeterminable depths below. The pool had been stirred, partly by the inexpert pokings of the fishermen and partly by small clods and bits of dirt dislodged from above by the feet of the audience. The water, consequently, was but brownly translucent and revealed its secrets reluctantly; nevertheless certain dim little shapes had been observed to move within it, and were still there. Ramsey failed to see them at first.

"Where's any ole fish?" he inquired, scornfully.

"Look!" whispered the girl who stood nearest to Ramsey. She pointed. "There's one. Right down there by Willis' hook. Don't you see him?"

Ramsey was impressed enough to whisper. "Is there? I don't see him. I can't—"

The girl came closer to him and, the better to show him, leaned out over the edge of the bank and, for safety in maintaining her balance, rested her left hand upon his shoulder while she pointed with her right. Thereupon something happened to Ramsey. This touch upon his shoulder was almost nothing, and he had never taken the slightest interest in Milla Rust (to whom that small warm hand belonged) though she was the class beauty, and long established in the office. Now, all at once, a peculiar and heretofore entirely unfamiliar sensation suddenly became important in the upper part of his chest. For a moment he held his breath; an involuntary action—he seemed to be standing in a shower of flowers.

"Don't you see it, Ramsey? Milla whispered. "It's a great big one. Why, it must be as long as—as your shoe! Look!"

Ramsey saw nothing but the thick round curl on Milla's shoulder. That curl was shot with dazzling fibers of sunshine. He seemed to be trembling.

"I don't see it," he murmured huskily, afraid that she might remove her hand. "I can't see any fish, Milla."

She leaned farther out over the bank. "Why, there, goosie!" she whispered. "Right there."

"I can't see it."

She leaned still further, bending down to point. "Why, right th—"

At this moment she removed her hand from his shoulder, though unwillingly. She clutched at him, in fact, but without avail. She had been too humble.

A loud shriek was uttered by throats able to vocalize just then than Milla's, for in her great surprise she said nothing whatever—the shriek came from the other girls as Milla left the crest of the overhanging bank and almost horizontally disappeared into the brown water. There was a tumultuous splash, and then, of Milla Rust and her well-known beautifulness there was nothing visible in the superficial world, nor upon the surface of that creek. The vanishment was total.

"Save her!"

Several girls afterward admitted having used this expression, and little Miss Floy Williams, the youngest and smallest member of the class, was unable to deny that she had said, "Oh, God!" Nothing could have been more natural, and the matter need not have been brought before her with such insistence and frequency, during the two remaining years of her undergraduate career.

Ramsey was one of those who heard this exclamation, later so famous, and perhaps it was what roused him to heroism. He dived from the bank, headlong, and the strange thought in his mind was "I guess this'll show Dora Yocum!" He should have been thinking of Milla, of course, at such a time, particularly after the little enchantment just laid upon him by Milla's touch and Milla's curls; and he knew well enough that Miss Yocum was not among the spectators. She was half a mile away, as it happened, gathering "botanical specimens" with one of the teachers—which was her idea of what to do at a picnic!

Ramsey struck the water hard, and in the same instant struck something else harder. Wesley Bender's bundle of books had given him no such shock as he received now, and if the creek bottom had not been of mud, just there, the top of his young head might have dented the strain. Half stunned, choking, spluttering, he somehow floundered to his feet; and when he could get his eyes a little cleared of water he found himself wavering face to face with a blurred vision of Milla Rust. She had risen up out of the pool and stood knee deep, like a lovely drenched figure in a fountain.

Upon the bank above them, Willis Parker was jumping up and down, gesticulating and shouting fiercely. "Now I guess you're satisfied our fishin' is spoilt! Why'n't you listen me? I told you it wasn't more'n three foot deep! I and Heinie waded all over this creek gettin' our bait. You're a pretty sight!"

Of Milla he spoke unwittingly the literal truth. Even with her hair thus wild and sodden, Milla rose from immersion blushing and prettier than ever, and she was prettiest of all when she stretched out her hand helplessly to Ramsey and he led her up out of the waters. They had plenty of assistance to scramble to the top of the bank, and there Milla was surrounded and borne away with a great clackering and tumult. Ramsey sat upon the grass in the sun, rubbed his head, and experimented with his neck to see if it would "work." The sunshine was strong and hot; in half an hour he and his clothes were dry—or at least "dry enough," as he said, and except for some sogginess of head and neck, and the general crumpledness of his apparel, he seemed to be in all ways much as usual, when shouts and whistlings summoned all the party to luncheon at the rendezvous. The change that made him different was invisible.

Yet something must have been seen, for everyone appeared to take it for granted that he was to sit next to Milla at the pastoral meal. She herself understood it, evidently, for she drew in her puckered skirts and without any words made a place for him beside her as he driftingly approached her, affecting to whistle and keeping his eyes on the foliage overhead. He still looked upward, even in the act of sitting down.

"Squirrel or something," he said feebly, as if in explanation.

"Where?" Milla asked.

"Up there on a branch." He accepted a plate from her (she had provided herself with an extra one), but he did not look at it or at her. He continued to keep his eyes aloft, because he imagined that all of the class were looking at him and Milla, and he felt unable to meet such publicity. It was to him as if the whole United States had been scandalized to attention by this act of his in going to sit beside Milla; he gazed upward so long that his eyeballs became sensitive under the strain. He began to blink. "I can't make out whether it's a squirrel or just some leaves that kind o' got fixed like one," he said. "I can't make out yet which it is, but I guess when there's a breeze, if it's a squirrel he'll prob'ly hop around some then, if he's alive or anything."

It had begun to seem that his eyes must remain fixed in that upward stare forever; he wanted to bring them down, but could not face the glare of the world. But finally the brightness of the sky between the leaves settled matters for him; he sneezed, wept, and for a little moment again faced his fellowmen. No one was looking at him; everybody except Milla had other things to do.

Having sneezed involuntarily, he
