Lebanese free Briton; Jews said abducted

By EILEEN ALT POWELL
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Kidnapped British business executive Brian Levick was released unharmed on Saturday, his 16th day of captivity, but police sources said two Lebanese Jews were abducted in the capital.

British Embassy officials said Levick, 59, managing director of the Coral Oil Co. Ltd. in Lebanon, was freed at about 10:15 a.m. by a little-known group called the Khaibar Brigades. The group has claimed several of the nine recent abductions or disappearances of foreigners in Lebanon.

"He is in good health," said embassy spokesman Francis Gallagher. "He was asked to say that he was held by the Khaibar Brigades."

The group's name apparently comes from a town in what is now Saudi Arabia that rejected the Islamic prophet Mohammed in the seventh century and later was overrun by Moslems. The group has not offered any explanation for the kidnappings.

The Khaibar Brigades had said earlier in a statement that it held and planned to release "very soon" Britons Geoffrey Nash and Levick, and French Embassy secretary Danielle Perez, 34.

Nash, 60, a metallurgist employed by the Lebanese government, was freed on Wednesday, a day after the statement was delivered to a Western news agency. He carried a statement from the Khaiber Brigades when released. The whereabouts of Mrs. Perez remained unknown Saturday.

Also unknown were the whereabouts of the other victims of the spate of kidnappings that began March 14 with the gunpoint abduction of Nash. They are Terry A. Anderson, 37, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press; three French citizens, a Dutch priest and a British U.N. employee.

Most were kidnapped in Beirut's mostly Moslem western sector, where police sources reported two more abductions Saturday.

Hobby reassuring on UTPB

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby paraphrased Mark Twain Saturday to reassure Permian Basin residents their branch of the University of Texas won't be cut from the state budget.

"Reports of the death of the University of Texas of the Permian Basin have been greatly exaggerated," said Hobby at a press conference at UTPB before joining Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland, and Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock, at a symposium on the Texas water plan.

The House Appropriations Committee last week deleted funds for UTPB in a budget-cutting move, but even if the full House fails to reverse that decision, the Senate will refuse to go along, according to Hobby.

"It would require the assent of the Senate, and that will not be forthcoming," he said. "The people of the Permian Basin need have no concern about the future of UTPB, save how fast it might grow."

The three politicians were in town to address a water-plan symposium sponsored by the Texas Lyceum, an association of young Texas business people which was holding its quarterly meeting at UTPB. Although the symposium was closed to the news media, Hobby, Craddick and Montford held a brief press conference at which they declared progress is being made on the water plan.

"We are working very well together," said Montford, who sponsored the Senate version of the plan.

A House-Senate conference committee is negotiating a compromise between Montford's $1.2 billion plan and the $800 million House version, which was sponsored by Craddick. The two West Texas legislators clashed over water during the last legislative session, but Montford predicted this time around a compromise will be reached.

Five seeking District 2 council seat

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the second of a seven-part series looking at local races and the candidates. This second part focuses on the five candidates running for the District 2 seat on Midland City Council.

Corrales

Salazar

Meekins

Carrillo

Aleman

ELECTION 85

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

The problems in south and east Midland are many, but foremost is the lack of communication, agree the candidates running for City Council in the District 2 race.

Although City Hall geographically is situated closer to District 2 than District 1, which takes in northwest Midland, candidates contend an invisible barrier has kept the minority citizens from understanding what the council has been doing.

The candidates said not only must they be able to communicate with the District 2 residents what the council is doing, but stressed that to accomplish goals whoever wins this race must be able to work with the rest of the council.

Seeking the District 2 seat are Oralia Corrales, Clarence Meekins, Patrick Aleman, Tony Carrillo and Jimenez Salazar. This is the first year for the single-member district plan, which was approved by the U.S. Justice Department in February.

Other than trying to set up better communication, candidates are listing street improvements, more code enforcement on the vacant lots and an attack on the crime rate in that area.

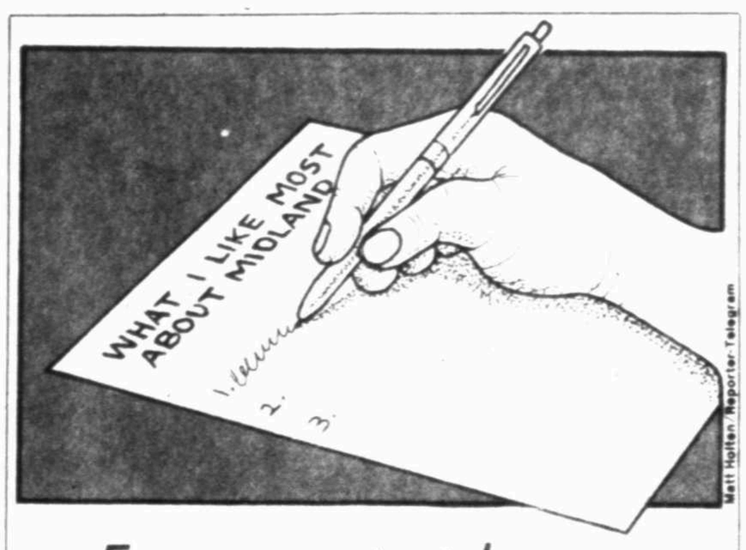

"We're all for improving the district," said Carrillo. "We want to fix our streets, clean up our lots, improve our houses, anything that makes the district a better place to live."

Meekins also suggested the present city codes need to be enforced to "accomplish a lot of what needs to be done on that side of town. They are probably not being enforced enough. Streets that aren't paved should be maintained more than they are."

Cleaning up the vacant lots might serve as a sign of encouragement to entice developers into the district, he said.

"We need to get the homeowners together and promote neighborhood pride," Meekins added.

Essay contest honors Tall City's centennial

In observance of Midland's centennial celebration, the Reporter-Telegram is sponsoring an essay contest on the subject "What I Like Most About Midland" with winners to receive almost $4,000 in cash prizes.

In announcing the contest, publisher Charles A. Spence said, "Midland has so much of which to be proud it probably will be difficult for many entrants to decide what they like most about our city. But that will only make the contest broader in scope and more interesting.

"We're happy to be able to provide a format for citizens to speak out on how much their community means to them and why and believe the Centennial year is an ideal time to do that."

Entries will be judged in three divisions: Students, grades 7, 8 and 9; students, grades 10, 11 and 12; and adults. In each of the divisions first place prizes of $500 will be awarded along with $300 for second, $150 for third, $75 for fourth, $50 for fifth and five honorable mention awards of $25.

The 30 winning essays will be published in a special section of the Reporter-Telegram's Centennial Edition July 4.

Essays must be no longer than 500 words, be signed with the writer's name, address, phone number where he or she can be reached during the day and stating the division in which the essay is entered.

The entry also should include a brief paragraph of biographical information about the writer. This could include how long the writer has lived in Midland, occupation, any civic affiliations and, if a student, the age, grade and name of school. This information will be published with the winning essays and pictures of the writers. Winners will be notified by phone at which time arrangements will be made for photographs.

Essays must follow the theme "What I Like Most About Midland" and subjects can include Midland's people, cultural diversity, weather, schools, opportunities that exist, attitudes that prevail or the city's image, personality, spirit or character.

Deadline for entries to be received at the newspaper is May 15 in order to allow sufficient time for judging. Winners will be notified about two weeks later.

Entrants must be residents of Midland County. Employees of the Reporter-Telegram and members of their immediate families are not eligible.

Entries that are mailed should be addressed to: Centennial Essay Contest, The Reporter-Telegram, P.O. Box 1650, Midland, Texas 7902. They also may be taken to the reception desk in the lobby of the newspaper's offices, 201 E. Illinois Ave.

'It's time to debunk the Vietnam myths'

NO MORE VIETNAMS
Part 1

By RICHARD NIXON

Those who parrot the slogan "No more Vietnams" in opposing American efforts to prevent communist conquests in the Third World base their case on four articles of faith:

The war in Vietnam was immoral.

The war in Vietnam was unwinnable.

Diplomacy without force is the best answer to communist "wars of liberation."

We were on the wrong side of history in Vietnam.

The time has come to debunk these myths.

MYTH I: The Vietnam War was immoral.

The assertion that Vietnam was an immoral war was heard more and more often as the years dragged on. This said less about the war than about the construction critics were putting on the idea of morality. Like all wars Vietnam was brutal, ugly, dangerous, painful, and sometimes inhumane. This was driven home to those who stayed home perhaps more forcefully than ever before because the war lasted so long and because they saw so much of it on television in living, and dying, color.

Bonds should be used to pay for treatment plant

AUSTIN (AP) — Hook-up fees paid by developers should not be increased to help pay for the cost of advanced wastewater treatment facilities, a city task force says.

City voters will be asked April 6 to authorize the water and wastewater utility to spend up to $54 million to install equipment in wastewater treatment plants.

The new equipment will enhance the ability of Austin plants to clean effluent before discharging it in the Colorado River.

Twenty-five percent of the multi-million-dollar program for water and wastewater construction in Septemeber 1984 was funded through hook-up fees.

Water and wastewater rates are expected to increase 7.6 percent from 1986 to 1990 because of the proposed bonds and related operating expenses, officials say.

The task force, made up of several members of the development community and two neighborhood activists, has recommended the city enact a new hook-up fee to take the place of a temporary fee imposed last summer.

The new fee would drop the charge to developers from $2,500 to $2,200 per home. The hook-up fee is paid by developers who buy water and sewer service from the city.

Texas National Guard arriving in Honduras

STATE

AUSTIN (AP) — About 280 Texas National Guard troops safely arrived in Honduras Saturday to find peaceful conditions but scorching temperatures for their planned training exercise, an official said.

Another 170 guard members were scheduled to leave Kelly Air Force Base shortly before 6 a.m. Sunday and join the first group at a base camp near Choluteca, Honduras, about 55 miles south of the capital, guard spokesman Maj. David Cottom said Saturday.

"All troops arrived safely. There are no security or safety problems," Cottom said. The troops departed Kelly AFB before dawn Saturday and arrived in Honduras about 8 a.m., he said.

They transferred to C-130 transport planes after landing northwest of the capital, Tegucigalpa, and flew to San Lorenzo, where they traveled overland in trucks to the base camp, Cottom said.

The report of their arrival came from Lt. Col. Frederico Lopez of Harlingen, commander of the Texas Task Force for the exercise, Cottom said from his Austin office.

The Big Pine III war exercises, conducted by U.S. Army and Honduran troops, are scheduled to begin April 8 and last about a week.

Meanwhile, Gov. Mark White's office has refused to confirm or deny a report that the governor will be traveling to that Central American nation.

Ann Arnold, White's spokeswoman, said Friday that White "has asked for a full briefing on the situation from the adjutant general and federal officials about whether there is any reason to suspend the National Guard's participation in the exercises."

State officials contacted the U.S. Embassy in Tegucigalpa on Friday and were told "there is no security problem" in the country at this time, Ms. Arnold said.

But on Saturday, government prosecutors filed treason charges against the five new Supreme Court judges installed by Congress in its political dispute with Honduras President Roberto Suazo Cordova.

The legislature Friday dismissed five of the nine Supreme Court judges for alleged corruption and appointed replacements. It named Ramon Valladares Soto, a former interior minister, to head the new court.

Hours later, police arrested Valladares Soto and jailed him. They also tried to arrest the four other new justices, but relatives said the men had fled into hiding.

Witness claims responsibility for robbery

DALLAS (AP) — A man has testified that he held up a suburban fast food restaurant in 1979 — a crime for which another man is now serving a 50-year prison term.

Robert Earl Wilkie, who told a special magistrate Friday that he robbed the restaurant, said he kept silent about his involvement until recently because he was afraid he would be prosecuted.

Wilkie's attorney, Robert Boydston, noted that the five-year statute of limitations on the robbery has expired.

Stephen Lynn Russell, 32, was convicted of robbing a Long John Silver's restaurant in suburban Garland on Sept. 20, 1979 despite testimony that he was with his mother applying for a bank loan when the robbery took place.

Russell has served two other prison terms for burglary and possession of marijuana.

Chris Reeves, who was the restaurant's manager at the time of the robbery, testified that four eyewitnesses were led to believe that "we were there to do the police department a favor and get rid of this person" at Russell's trial in March 1980.

Reeves told special magistrate Fred McDaniel that his now "99 percent" certain that Earl Wilkie was the bandit.

The hearing concerned an application by Russell's attorneys to grant a new trial on grounds that prosecutors violated Russell's constitutional rights by suppressing evidence that might have acquitted him.

But the former lead prosecutor in the case, Brad Lollar, testified that he did not withhold any information from Russell's defense.

Reeves said he picked a picture of Wilkie from a photograph lineup but changed his identification because he believed Garland police were dissatisfied with his choice.

The former manager also said he identified Russell during the trial after a man whom he thought was a Dallas County district attorney's investigator told him Russell had an extensive criminal history and had attempted to enter into a plea bargain on the robbery charge.

McDaniel said he will make recommendations to State District Judge Gary Stephens about the request for a new trial. Stephens will then refer the request to the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals, McDaniel said.

Ex-inmate sought for threatening to blow up dam

GROVETON (AP) — San Jacinto County authorities were searching Saturday for a former prison inmate accused of threatening to blow up the Lake Livingston dam.

Sheriff Robert Brumley said witnesses claimed that on Wednesday they overheard Wesley Gene Simpson, 26, say he would blow up the dam on Friday to flood his former roommates, who lived downstream.

Simpson was charged on Friday with making a terroristic threat, Brumley said.

In February 1983, Simpson was paroled from the Texas Department of Corrections after serving part of a five-year sentence for a Harrison County burglary conviction, Brumley said.

Simpson was involved in a dispute with his former roommates over some items he allegedly had taken from them, Brumley said. The former convict lived with several people in a subdivision directly below the dam, the sheriff said.

Brumley said names of Simpson's former roommates and the witnesses who overheard the alleged threats were being withheld until an arrest is made.

Simpson was last seen in the vicinity of Polk and San Jacinto counties, authorities said.

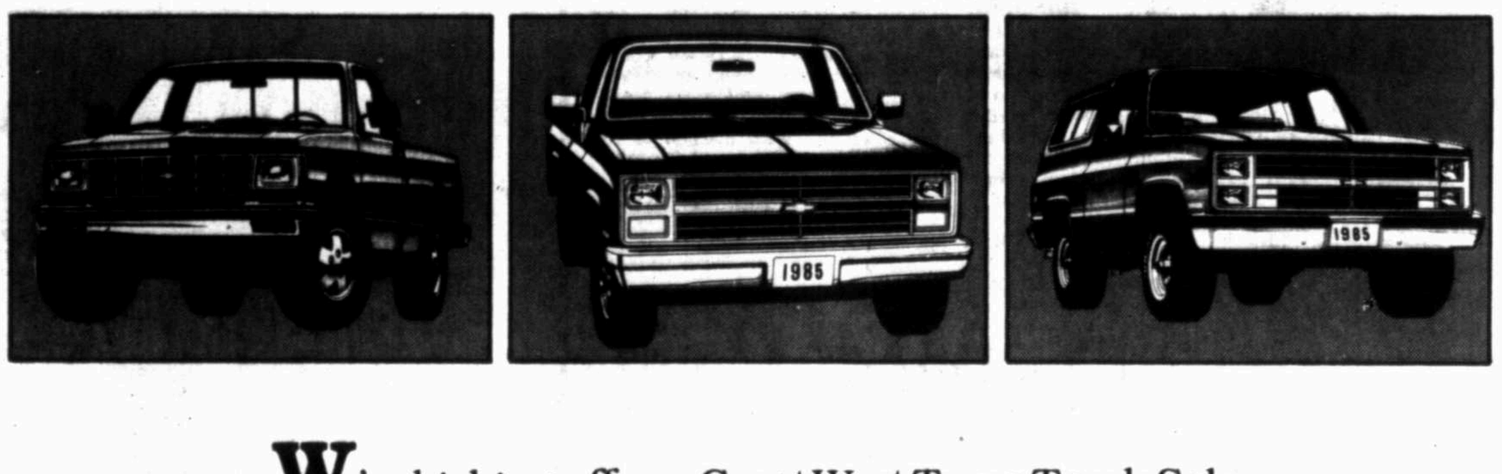

John Jadrosich, a spokesman with the Trinity River Authority, said security around the dam was increased Thursday night. But Jadrosich said it would take a large quantity of explosives to blow up the 2½-mile long dam, which is about 60 miles north of Houston.

Many who were seeing war for the first time were so shocked at what they saw that they said this war was immoral when they really meant that all war was terrible. They were right in saying that peace was better than war. But they were wrong in failing to ask themselves whether what was happening in Vietnam was substantively different from what had happened in other wars. Their horror at the fact of war prevented them from considering whether the facts of the war in Vietnam added up to a cause that was worth fighting for. Instead, many of these naive, well-meaning, instinctual opponents of the war raised their voices in protest.

Sadly, their voices were joined with those of others who did not like the war because they did not support its aims: resisting communist aggression in South Vietnam. It was not that the war was immoral. It was that their morals dictated that the United States should lose and the communists should win.

Except for a small minority, these critics were not communists. Some believed the Vietnamese would really be better off under the gentle rule of Ho Chi Minh and his successors. Others knew this was not true but didn't care that Ho was a totalitarian dictator. Their "immorality" thesis was that we were fighting an indigenous uprising in South Vietnam and therefore opposing the will of the Vietnamese people; that the people of Vietnam would be better off if we let the South Vietnamese government fall; and that our military tactics were so harsh that we needlessly and wantonly killed civilian Vietnamese.

This thesis was false on all counts.

Anti-war activists portrayed the National Liberation Front as the soul of the Vietnamese revolution, an indigenous nationalist movement that had risen spontaneously against the repressive Diem regime. In reality the National Liberation Front was a front for North Vietnam's effort to conquer the South and as such as just another weapon in Hanoi's arsenal. Many Viet Cong had infiltrated from the North, and all took their cues from the North. When the war was over and Hanoi had no further use for it, the National Liberation Front was immediately liquidated.

In fairness to some of the anti-war activists it could be contended that they could not have foreseen the reign of terror the communists have brought upon the people of Vietnam, Cambodia, and Laos. While they could be charged with naivete for overlooking Ho's murderous policies in North Vietnam, some deserve credit for condemning, however belatedly, the genocide in Cambodia. Certainly today the record is clear for all to see: A communist peace kills more than an anti-communist war.

The claim that United States tactics caused excessive casualties among civilians must have seemed bizarre to those who were actually doing the fighting. Our forces operated under strict rules of engagement, and as a result civilians accounted for about the same proportion of casualties as in World War II and a far smaller one than in the Korean War.

MYTH II: The Vietnam War was unwinnable.

This was a favorite argument of those who did everything in their power to prevent the United States from winning. They reasoned that if the Vietnam War was proved to be unwinnable, then all wars against totalitarian "wars of liberation" were unwinnable. If we concede their point, we are giving a green light to communist aggression throughout the Third World.

The Vietnam War was not unwinnable. A different military and political strategy could have assured victory in the 1960s. When we signed the Paris Peace Agreements in 1973, we had won the war. We then proceeded to lose the peace. The South Vietnamese successfully countered communist violations of the ceasefire for two years. Defeat came only when the Congress, ignoring the specific terms of the peace agreement, refused to provide military aid to Saigon equal to what the Soviet Union provided for Hanoi.

MYTH III: Diplomacy without force to back it up is the best answer to communist "wars of liberation.

As with all the myths about the Vietnam War, it is important to distinguish between those who believe them and those who use them in pursuit of their own ends. Some do not want the U.S. to help non-communist governments because they think it would be better if the communists took power. Others believe that the use of military power by the U.S. has become irrelevant in Third World conflicts because we used power so ineptly in Vietnam. After all, they argue, since we were defeated by a tiny country like North Vietnam, we must have forgotten how to win.

As a result, in the post-Vietnam 1970s, while rhetoric about the limits of power and the promise of creative diplomacy clouded the American political landscape, the Soviet Union and its proxies licked their chops and gobbled up South Yemen, Ethiopia, Angola, Mozambique, Afghanistan, and Nicaragua. Each of the 100 million people who were lost to the West during our five-year geopolitical sabbatical is a living symbol of the sterility of arguments about peaceful diplomacy. Any nation that decides the way to achieve peace is to use only peaceful means is a nation that will soon be a piece of another nation. Its enemies will quickly take advantage of its good intentions.

MYTH IV: We were on the wrong side of history in Vietnam.

British historian Paul Johnson has written that the essence of geopolitics is the ability to distinguish between different degrees of evil. He might have added that it is also the willingness to be objective enough to weigh the motives and actions of both sides in any conflict with an equally critical eye. Vietnam proved that, at least for many American intellectuals, this is virtually impossible. During the Vietnam era an astounding number of otherwise thoughtful people gave our side the white glove test while eagerly giving the other side the benefit of the doubt.

Often statements by American and South Vietnamese military authorities were assumed to be lies by the same reporters who printed North Vietnamese lies without question.

A hue and cry was raised against the United States when an isolated incident of mass murder by American forces at My Lai was revealed; yet when the West learned of the massacre by the communists at Hue, where 25 times as many civilians as at My Lai died in what was anything but an isolated incident, Amnesty International indulgently chalked the crime up to "the merciless tradition of the war" rather than to the merciless bestiality of the Viet Cong. Those who can always see the faults of our friends on the right are too often blind to the faults of our enemies on the left.

It was not that these critics necessarily disliked the United States. It was that they were sapped, as many before them had been, by the communist PR blitz, the intellectual dream machine which, ever since the Russian revolution in 1917, has been tricking Western intellectuals into looking at slavery and seeing utopia, looking at aggression and conquest and seeing liberation, looking at ruthless murderers and seeing "agrarian reformers," looking at idealized portraits of Ho Chi Minh gazing beneficently upon the children gathered around him and seeing a mythical national father-figure rather than the brutal dictator he really was.

Many who opposed the war sincerely believed, since the communists told them so, that South Vietnam would be happy and free under the communists and that the Americans were simply out of touch with the reality of life in Indochina. Events since 1975 have proved instead that the ones who were out of touch were the big-hearted, freedom-loving reporters, editorial writers, academics, and politicians who could not bring themselves to believe that the United States was doing exactly what it said it was doing in Vietnam from the beginning: trying to save the South from being conquered by forces that would enslave it.

The war against the Vietnam syndrome must be waged on two fronts. First, we must resist the laudable but often excessive idealism in the American character that prevents us from being as skeptical about the actions and motives of "forces of national liberation" as history teaches us we should be.

Second, we must recover our confidence in our ability to wield power effectively.

Examining the Vietnam experience can help us on both these fronts. It shows us the true nature of our adversaries and how effectively they can hide their intentions behind a dense screen of propaganda and shrewd political manipulation. And it teaches us that it is not wars such as Vietnam, but rather waging them ineffectively and losing, that lead inevitably to tragedy.

It is vital that we learn the right lessons from our tragic defeat in Indochina. The first, most important lesson is that in Vietnam we tried and failed in a just cause. "No more Vietnams," the battlecry of the new isolationists, can mean that we will not try again. It should mean that we will not fail again.

April Fool jokes nothing new

WASHINGTON (AP) — An annual rite of spring is at hand again — April Fool jokes played on the unsuspecting.

Seemingly a joyous, or disconcerting, new discovery for each generation, the April Fool tradition traces its roots back centuries, and it is popular in England and France as well as the United States.

"The tradition seems to be alive and well," said Jack Santino.

HOBBY

"I think it will be a well-balanced bill," he said.

The major differences between the two bills concern ground water (Montford's bill opts for stricter state controls than Craddick would like); agriculture (Montford's bill provides for $200 million in agricultural loans, which Craddick feels are unnecessary and unfair to other industries); and protection for coastal bays and estuaries (Montford's bill is closer to what environmentalists would prefer, while Craddick's is more congenial to upstream water-development interests).

Although earlier this month Craddick had refused to predict success for the water conference committee, he was more optimistic on Saturday, after two meetings with his Senate conferees.

"I think it's going real well," he said. "I feel like we'll get a real strong bill."

Montford declined to go into specifics, but said negotiations on ground water had been "productive."

"The Senate didn't get everything it wanted and the House didn't get everything it wanted. The compromise will have to be somewhere in-between."

Hobby, who along with Gov. Mark White and House Speaker Gib Lewis put the original water plan together, said he preferred Montford's version because it gave more protection to bays and estuaries and "more realistically recognized the agricultural needs of the state." But he predicted that a compromise will soon be reached.

"There are a great many differences between the bills," he said, "But good progress is being made."

Craddick said the conference committee should finish its work in a few weeks, and predicted voters will approve the results in a statewide referendum in November.

"I think it'll be the most broad-based plan the people have ever had a chance to vote on."

KIDNAP

The sources said six gunmen in two cars seized Elie Hallak at about 1 a.m. near the old hotel district. Three gunmen later seized Haim Cohen, 39, at about 7 a.m. as he walked near his home in the Jewish quarter of Wadi Abu Jamil, adjacent to the hotel district.

On Friday night, five gunmen kidnapped another Jew, Elie Srour, 68, in Wadi Abu Jamil, police said.

The kidnappings were the first in Lebanon's dwindling Jewish community since last July, when gunmen seized Raoul Sobhi Mizrachi, 54, a prominent businessman. He later was found murdered.

Gallagher declined to say where Levick was let go or to give details of his captivity, adding "He would prefer not to have contact with the press today."

But the release was described for the AP by a Lebanese resident of Levick's neighborhood, the Raouche section of west Beirut.

The man, who demanded anonymity, said that on Saturday morning he saw Levick emerge from a green car about 100 yards from the Briton's home.

The witness said Levick was told in Arabic "Walk straight and don't look back" and that Levick followed instructions as the car sped away.

Levick, who was abducted March 15, had several days' growth of beard, the neighbor said, adding "He looked composed."

"How are you?" the neighbor said he asked Levick in Arabic. "I am good," Levick responded in the same language. The neighbor said Levick then entered his apartment building and asked the concierge about his wife, Ann, who had stayed in Beirut.

Gallagher said Levick "was treated well and is grateful for the consideration shown to him while he was held."

In addition to Nash, Levick and Mrs. Perez, the Khaibar Brigades have said they hold French Vice Consul Marcel Fontaine, 45, and Marcel Carton, 62, the French embassy's protocol officer and father of Mrs. Perez. Fontaine was abducted on March 22 and Carton and Mrs. Perez vanished the same day.

The abductions of the two Britons and three French also were claimed by the Jihad Islami, or Islamic Holy War, organzation, as was the March 16 abduction of Anderson, whose hometown is Lorain, Ohio.

Jihad Islami is believed made up of Shiite Moslem fundamentalists loyal to Iran.

Ms. Corrales pointed out that city ordinances call for the vacant lots to be cleaned by the property owner. But that ordinance isn't being enforced, she said. "They (city officials) have it within their power to put a lien on that property" if the owner fails to do his job.

She suggested that youths who have no job could be employed to clean those lots and the city in turn could bill the landowner for the work. Under this plan, it would give jobs to some youths and the city wouldn't have to pay for it.

Protection from crime was cited by several candidates, all noting that the residents in District 2 have listed it as their priority.

"People are afraid when they leave in the morning to go to work. They don't know what they'll find when they get home," said Ms. Corrales.

The district is a high crime area, agreed Meekins, and may require more police patrols. "I've heard about the lack of police patrol."

Carrillo said that before the area can be developed economically, it must become an area where people feel safe to live. "A lot of the older people say they don't feel safe in their homes. That's not good. The young people say if we don't get rid of that stigma, then are we going to give up.

"I would like to see what the police department has to work with," Carrillo said, before he would recommend hiring more officers. "They may be doing a great job with what they have."

Aleman generalized his goals for the district. "We all know what we need. The things that work in other parts of town do not work in District 2. We go around town and we like what we see. But we wonder why it's not happening over here."

IN ZONING matters, Aleman said the council hasn't been successful in helping residents of District 2. "I have come to a conclusion that it's because they (council members) don't know what to do down there. They're trying to improve it, but don't know how.

"What I hope for is to help find ways to fulfill the needs of that district," said Aleman. "And if I'm successful, then all those specific issues of street paving and eyesores will be taken care of."

On a longterm basis, Ms. Corrales said the top objective is economic development and diversification on the east and south sides. "The figures show the economy there might be able to support a 5-and-10 or a grocery store. The Hispanic Chamber of Commerce is interested in a McDonald's. If you live in south Midland and you want a pizza delivered, there is no such thing."

Carrillo said he's heard complaints about the lack of street paving and the concern "about if we're getting a fair share of the tax monies on the east side. We need to see if we can bring in developers to help or if we can find some programs to relieve that street paving.

"We have to show a little pride in our districts and do some work ourselves while making sure we're getting a just portion of our tax) money."

Ms. Corrales also pointed out a desire to see the swimming pool at Hogan Park reopened. "The reason given (for closing it) is that Water Wonderland provided the needs. People are very concerned about their kids. These people don't have the money for memberships to the YMCA. If the pool at Hogan were reopened it would solve some problems."

MEEKINS SAID his overall goal is to "make east and southeast Midland a better place to live. This would be the end result. Some things have been done over there, but they're not really things that we notice right away," he said, citing the work to renovate Washington Park as an example.

"I would like to see a lot of visual improvement over there; get Hidalgo Park cleaned up and get the railroad to do something with their right of way along East Highway 80. We need to make a general visual improvement of that whole corridor," Meekins said of the city's highway entrance from the east.

Another point in Ms. Corrales' campaign is her interest in the hiring, firing and promoting of city employees. "People want to know why an officer has been there 17 years and has not been promoted. Is it that they are not qualified, and if not, how can they get qualified," she said.

Salazar could not be reached for an interview, but during a League of Women Voters candidate forum last week he told the audience, "I represent a very, very small segment and this is only the poor and working class." The audience, most of which were not from District 2, he described as "white, middle class people from the west side who are isolated and insulated from the rest of the world." He then began to relate an assassination attempt on his life while in a Big Spring hospital.

To a proposal about the city and county working together on a jail, Salazar said he was "completely and totally against it" because the two are different entities.

Concerning a question of property appraisals and taxes, Salazar said someone who owns a $300,000 house can afford to pay the taxes on it. "Someone who lives in a shack, even they can pay some taxes. Government is run on taxes."

TO BE AN effective person on the council, the winner must be able to work with the others and also communicate effectively with their people, according to the candidates.

"We have to be able to present ideas in a way the council will accept," said Aleman. "We need to know the procedures. I've got a positive attitude. Some of the people have lost that attitude. I want them to know we can do it, the needs can be fulfilled."

Ms. Corrales is suggesting a newsletter system of communication. It would be sent out to service organizations, businesses, churches and professional groups in District 2. "I would let them know what is going on. If they have any interest, it is their responsibility to show up at a council meeting," she said.

"My own main objective is to do everything within my power to be an effective, working council woman. I would do everything within my power to create good public relations with our council and city fathers. If I'm going to be effective, I need their support."

She expects to be a voice on the council for all the district and not special interest groups. "People know I don't sell out. What's right is right; what's fair is fair and what's just is just."

TO GET BETTER communication, Carrillo would establish a district council and appoint six to eight persons. This body would meet about every six weeks. It would help communicate to him the district's problems and also relate back to the citizens the council's actions.

"The more people you get participating in this, the better off we'll be," Carrillo said.

Meekins said he wants to establish a good relationship from the start with all the councilmen and "remember to consider Midland as a whole in all decisions made."

The change to single-member districts has stirred up more interest in the race among the residents of District 2, according to the candidates.

"This is the first time they think their vote counts," said Aleman.

Carrillo said he has registered people to vote in previous years and many times in south and east Midland the people wanted to be left alone. "With the change in city government, we have something positive to show these people to encourage them to participate."

Refugee camps hit by gunners

SIDON, Lebanon (AP) — Christian gunners hammered Palestinian refugee camps and Moslem militia positions at Sidon on Saturday, killing at least 40 people by official estimate.

Elsewhere in south Lebanon, Israeli troops raided a Shiite Moslem village outside their occupation zone and were reported to have killed five men.

The battle pitting Christian militiamen against Palestinian and Moslem fighters raged throughout the day. Shells crashed in residential areas at a rate of four at a minute by mid-afternoon.

Thousands of people fled their homes, fearing even worse night clashes. Some left in cars loaded with suitcases, others on foot clutching babies. Sidon Mayor Ahmed Kalash, who gave the estimate of deaths, reckoned that 40,000 people had fled by sundown.

Palestinian and Moslem fighters could be seen responding with automatic rifles and rocket-propelled grenades to artillery fire from Christian-occupied hillside villages up above. Lebanese army soldiers fired 106mm recoilless rifles at the Christian area.

The mayor said the battles erupted shortly before dawn, when Christian militiamen entrenched in the surrounding hills unleashed artillery and grenade barrages against two Palestinian refugee camps and adjacent neighborhoods.

But the Christian Voice of Lebanon radio station said the second day of fighting around Sidon began with "intensive sniper fire" by Palestinians on Christian villages.

Kalash said at least 40 people were killed and that most of the casualties were Palestinians from the refugee camps of Ein el-Hilweh and Mieh Mieh. There was no word on Christian casualties.

Reporters counted 26 bodies in Sidon's largest hospital. Officials said two other hospitals that reporters could not reach had received bodies of other victims. The main hospital's records showed more than 80 were treated for wounds Saturday.

The Lebanese army said in a statement two soldiers were killed and three wounded. Hospital officials said a woman and child were among the dead from Ein el-Hilweh.

"What has taken place today is a massacre," Kalash said.

"The Palestinians had nothing to do with the quarrel here," he said referring to the two-week-old fighting by Lebanese soldiers and Moslem militiamen against the Christian Lebanese Forces militia.

"It's all part of a plot, a big plot to create Moslem-Christian segregation," he said.

Officer slain in East Germany buried with full military honors

WASHINGTON (AP) — Army Maj. Arthur D. Nicholson Jr. was buried with full military honors under a somber gray sky Saturday at Arlington National Cemetery, a week after he was shot to death by a Soviet sentry in East Germany.

A burial service on a hillside near the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier was watched by Nicholson's wife Karen, his 8-year-old daughter Jennifer and his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur D. Nicholson Sr. A short distance away stood about 500 friends and military personnel who had attended the funeral at a nearby chapel.

Nicholson's wife and daughter followed the flag-draped coffin out of Fort Myer Memorial Chapel, where it was loaded onto a caisson drawn by six white horses and taken to the gravesite. Jennifer still clutched the yellow-haired doll she held when her father's body was flown back to Washington on Friday.

Legislators take on major effort overhauling Texas' prison system

By BILL KIDD

AUSTIN—In 1983, Texas legislators undertook a major effort at overhauling Texas' prison system—an overhaul prompted by a Federal lawsuit, and hampered by budget problems.

In 1985, legislators are again struggling with the question of prison reform, with U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice still looking over their shoulders, and the budget crunch worse than before.

And it's not because the Legislature hasn't tried to deal with the problem.

Lawmakers have tried to resolve the needs of the prison system, with 1983 seeing new programs established, appropriations increased, and changes in prison administration.

But the problems in the system haven't disappeared, and lawmakers again are facing some difficult choices.

For legislators in 1985, the central problem is how to fund the State's budget without increasing taxes or enacting new taxes.

Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby warned legislators in the last session that prison construction is a "bottomless pit" into which the State can pour hundreds of millions of dollars, and still not solve its problems.

The realization that simply building more prisons is an expensive proposition led to changes in 1983 such as restitution centers to keep non-violent offenders out of prison and working—to provide restitution to their victims, and to support their own families.

Rep. Ray Keller, R-Duncanville, chairman of the House Law Enforcement Committee, says he feels that overall, the reforms attempted by the previous session are working and "still very viable."

But, he says, "obviously, as the population grows in this state, we will have to have an increase in prison space."

Keller and his committee approved a $953.3 million budget for Texas Department of Corrections for the 1986-87 biennium, a budget Keller thinks would take care of the prison system's needs.

But, he notes, that budget is considerably more (at least some $137 million) than what was recommended by the Legislative Budget Board.

"The budget that the committee sent out...would accomplish our goals and meet the needs recognized by the Federal courts....But it's set on a collision course with a tax increase," Keller says.

Keller believes TDC must have more guards, both to meet the Federal court requirements and to assure security in the prisons.

"I'm convinced more guards are the answer," Keller says. "More guards, and better training of the guards you have now on how to deal wth inmates short of brutality."

Keller says that, along with the "seasoning of the administration," will help bring about a lessening in violence—adding that violence in prisons "has been diminishing from last year," although it's far from having disappeared.

Keller notes that the House Appropriations Committee has been trimming budgets for all agencies, including TDC, but says funding TDC inadequately won't solve any problems—and won't postpone them very long.

Legislators could find themselves back in Austin for a special session to look at prison reform again, Keller says.

Keller isn't alone in his concern over trying to find solutions to Texas' prison difficulties.

As the Senate Nominations Committee considered four new members to the Board of Corrections, Sen. Roy Blake, D-Nacogdoches, said he feels the members have "the most awesome responsibility of any board I know of."

And, he added, "I hope you realize that and can turn the situation around at our prisons."

Other committee members noted that with one more member, the four new board members will constitute a majority of the nine-member board.

At the moment, the major concern for legislators, and the board, is finding the money to provide additional facilities.

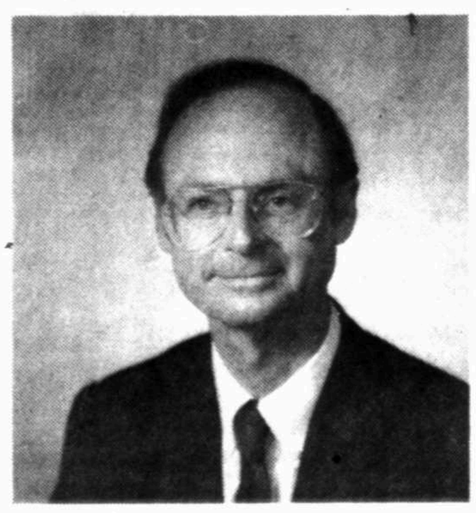

Bill Kidd is columnist for the Midland Reporter-Telegram's Austin Bureau.

Responsive:

"Yes, as a Director of Midland County Hospital District for the past two years, I have sought to be responsive to your interest in the affairs of Midland Memorial Hospital.

"We have an outstanding facility but it must continue to be managed wisely and efficiently if we are to cope with the rapidly rising cost of health care.

"I will appreciate your vote for my re-election on April 6, 1985."

Volcker warns against controlling U.S. imports

DALLAS (AP) — Paul Volcker, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, warned Saturday that controlling imports to cut the U.S. trade deficit would hurt the housing market and other sectors of the American economy that depend on capital flowing into the country.

"In the end, like inflationary policies, protectionism would only complicate the problem," Volcker told a meeting of the American Council on Germany.

Volcker said the Reagan administration intends to resist pressures for protectionism. But, he said, holding off the "sheer frustration" of American industries and labor union depends on Japan and other economically strong countries lowering their barriers to U.S. products.

He appealed to West Germany to maintain its support for free trade.

Volcker said there is an "enormous gap" between American savings and the capital needed for business investment and housing needs. So far, he said, about one-quarter of such domestic needs are met by drawing capital from abroad.

Jurors too lenient in verdict

DALLAS (AP) — Eleven of the 12 jurors who convicted parolee Kevin Donald Long of a misdemeanor homicide have apologized to the victim's family for being too lenient and compromising on a sentence that carries no prison sentence.

"We are insulted, we feel violated, and we are very humiliated and emotionally and mentally exhausted," the 11 jurors said in a statement released Friday during an unusual meeting with state District Judge Larry Baraka.

"We would like to make public this statement and apologize, from the depths of our being, for our ignorance of the law, especially to Jill (Fisher's) family."

Ms. Fisher, a 22-year-old topless dancer and Long's girlfriend, was shot to death at her Dallas apartment last November during what Long said was a struggle for a gun.

Long was charged with murder, a felony carrying a maximum sentence of life in prison.

The jurors said they had wanted to convict Long of felony manslaughter but compromised to appease a 12th juror — the wife of a Dallas defense attorney — who insisted that he be acquitted.

'Star Wars' debate ensues

DALLAS (AP) — The director of the "Star Wars" program assured anxious West Germans Saturday that American anti-missile research would not automatically lead to putting weapons in space.

Gen. James Abrahamson Jr. told German officials and others attending a meeting of the private U.S. Council on Germany that the object of the research is that "one day we have options."

He said it would be up to a future president, in the 1990s, to decide whether to proceed with deployment, depending on how much the program costs and if it is feasible.

But those attending the three-day meeting here are not all reassured. Karsten Voigt, a foreign policy specialist in West Germany's opposition Social Democratic Party, said the momentum of Star Wars — also known as the Strategic Defense Initiative — would lead to deployment.

Bass funds 'fraud' group

DALLAS (AP) — Former members of a group heavily funded by maverick millionaire Edward Bass say the group plans to use its international network of holdings to forge a new civilization in Australia, The Dallas Morning News reported Saturday.

The newspaper, in a copyright story, also quoted several people familiar with the group who say members have unethically used Bass' money for their projects and misrepresented themselves as academic and scientific experts.

The close-knit group of about 50 calls itself the Synergetic Civilization and has received millions of dollars from Bass, one of four brothers who operate the multibillion-dollar business empire based in Fort Worth, Texas, the News said.

Synergetic Civilization has used Edward Bass' money to fund ranches, an art gallery, scientific expeditions, a hotel, conference centers, construction projects and research facilities, the News said.

Former group members and an academician who studied the group's beginnings in Santa Fe, N.M., in the early 1970s told the newspaper it is made up of "intellectual elitists" led by a "charismatic leader," 55-year-old John Allen, and includes Edward Bass, 39.

Grand jury ends term

GALVESTON, Texas (AP) — A Galveston County grand jury ended its term without issuing any additional indictments in the Autumn Hills nursing home case, a prosecutor said.

The panel investigating the case was dismissed Friday when its six-month term ended, said District Attorney Mike Guarino.

"There will be no additional indictments," Guarino said.

On Nov. 9, the panel indicted Autumn Hills Convalescent Centers Inc. on murder charges in the 1978 deaths of two patients at the chain's Texas City facility.

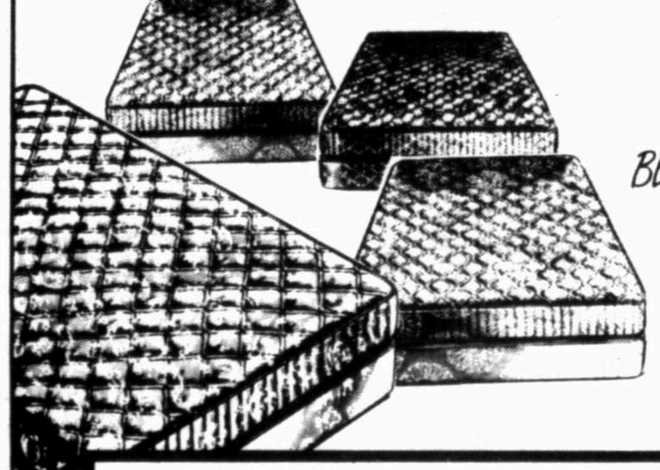

Also named in the indictments were three employees of the Houston-based chain and two former employees.

Two earlier sets of indictments against the firm were dismissed on technical grounds.

Bernhard Goetz faces year before court system

NEW YORK (AP) — Subway gunman Bernhard Goetz probably will spend the rest of 1985 enmeshed in a court system that he says he despises because it lets "criminals get out of jail before their victims get out of the hospital."

Goetz, indicted last week for attempted murder in the shootings of four youths he says threatened him on a subway train Dec. 22, apparently will have no early exit from the criminal justice system, legal experts say.

Most agree:

Because of the broad discretion afforded judges who supervise the resubmission of cases to grand juries, Goetz probably will fail to get the indictment dismissed on the grounds that his case never should have gone before a second grand jury. The first panel indicted him only on a weapons charge, raising a storm of protests.

Because of time-consuming pretial motions, Goetz's trial is not likely to begin for several months.

Because of the case's notoriety, with some praising him for protecting himself and others saying he should be prosecuted, jury selection is expected to be particularly difficult and protracted.

Goetz was indicted last week on four counts of attempted murder, four counts of assault and one count each of reckless endangerment and criminal possession of a firearm. Goetz says the youths surrounded and threatened him; two of the youths say one of them merely asked him for $5.

In January the first grand jury indicted Goetz only on comparatively minor gun charges, but District Attorney Robert Morgenthau resubmitted the case to a second grand jury, saying he had new evidence from a new witness.

NATION

Goetz's lawyers unsuccessfully tried to block Morgenthau's action, saying he had no new evidence and was resubmitting the case only because of political pressure.

When Goetz was indicted Wednesday, they promised a motion to dismiss the indictment for the same reason.

Criminal lawyers interviewed by The Associated Press said a defendant seeking to get an indictment dismissed before trial faces an uphill fight, particularly on the grounds Goetz asserts.

The law governing the resubmission of cases to grand juries is "very amorphous," according to Howard Stave, a former assistant district attorney in the borough of Queens who supervised grand juries in that county.

Under state law, "when a charge has been dismissed, it may not again be submitted to a grand jury unless court, in its discretion, authorizes ... the (prosecutor) to do so."

The official comment on the law says the prosecution "bears the burden of demonstrating some rational basis and justification for a resubmission order other than mere dissatisfaction with the original action of the grand jury."

Although the law commonly is interpreted to mean a prosecutor must have some new evidence to get a judge's permission to resubmit a case, "the statute doesn't say anything about requiring new evidence," said Irwin Rochman, chairman of the criminal courts committee of the New York City Bar Association.

A defendant trying to get an indictment dismissed "is unlikely to be successful when you have a statute like this that allows a judge discretion," he said.

Congress gets tired of MX missile battles

WASHINGTON (AP) — As the House debate on the MX missile wound down last week, Rep. Vic Fazio, D-Calif., said the decade-old fight over funding for the weapon "has torn this body apart as no issue has in the last decade."

"Yet we are like two tired fighters going through the motions in the late rounds," Fazio said. "We are saying our lines with less and less fervor, because I believe like those fighters hanging on kind of punch drunk, we want this all to end."

The MX battle did end with the Senate and House narrowly giving President Reagan authority to spend $1.5 billion for an additional 21 MXs, each designed to carry 10 powerful warheads against Soviet targets 6,000 miles away.

But Fazio's closing comment shortly before he cast a pro-MX vote echoed a belief held not only among Democrats, but many senior Republicans as well.

"Enough is enough," he said.

While the MX gave Reagan his first major national security victory of 1985 on Capitol Hill, there is a growing belief among those on both sides of the fight that it may also be his last.

"The president spent all of his political capital on the MX and he can't get it back," said Rep. Edward J. Markey, D-Mass., a vocal foe of the missile.

Many veteran senators and House members said Reagan's full-court lobbying effort was among the most intensive they had ever seen, from personal persuasion by the president to the emergency trip by Max Kampleman, the president's chief arms control negotiator in Geneva, to help attract a handful of undecided House members to vote for the MX.

Some Senate Democrats including Minority Leader Robert C. Byrd Jr. of West Virginia and defense specialist Sam Nunn of Georgia, both of whom voted for the 21 MXs, have already moved to cap the total missile force at 40.

"I believe there are programs much more important than the MX," said Nunn.

In the House, Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis., chairman of the Armed Services Committee, who argued that MX support was needed for success of the Geneva arms talks, said after Thursday's vote, "The Pentagon's budget position has shifted dramatically."

And House Republican Whip Rep. Trent Lott, R-Miss., a firm Reagan loyalist on almost all other issues, said from now on following the MX debate, the president's defense budget will be fair game.

Like a number of other Republicans, Lott said that once the focus has shifted away from the start of the Geneva arms control talks it is almost certain that Congress will refuse to approve the next batch of 48 MXs included in the president's 1986 defense budget proposal.

Similarly, Rep. William L. Dickenson, R-Ala., the senior Republican on the House Armed Services Committee, said if the administration "thinks it's going to get another 48 missiles to be manufactured in 1986 in one lump sum, they had better think again because it just ain't gonna happen."

One after the other, moderate Democrats and Republicans who voted for the MX this time say Reagan's 5.9 per cent proposed spending increase for the Pentagon next year will be cut to at least 3 per cent or less above inflation.

Kirkpatrick praises foreign policy meetings

New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — According to Jeane J. Kirkpatrick, who stepped down last week as chief representative to the United Nations, "they are the highest, frankest, most authoritative discussions of United States foreign policy." She was talking about the meetings of President Reagan's National Security Council that she regularly attended, but which her successor, Lt. Gen. Vernon A. Walters, will not, at least not on a regular basis. Secretary of State George P. Shultz, who wanted to limit the power of the U.N. representative, won the White House's agreement not to renew the NSC pass for Walters.

So upset was Walters at losing the privilege of attending all NSC sessions, that he reportedly came close last week to resigning even before the Senate had had a chance to approve his nomination.

It was the kind of story that could be understood only by those familiar with how power is perceived in Washington. Walters had already been assured that he would have full Cabinet status, carrying on the anachronistic tradition started by President Eisenhower, who decided to put his campaign adviser, Henry Cabot Lodge, in the Cabinet as well as at the United Nations.

Eisenhower had no grand strategy in suddenly elevating his U.N. ambassador to Cabinet status; he simply wanted to have Lodge around the White House. To outsiders, Cabinet status might seem the ultimate one could hope to achieve. That might have been true in 19th century Washington, but the reality of life in Washington these days is that Cabinet meetings, in the words of Zbigniew Brzezinski, the National Security Adviser to President Carter, are "almost useless." Brzezinski said they were so boring that he used to catch up surreptitiously on his light reading by placing magazines on his knees during the meetings. They are no more lively in this administration where President Reagan has been known to doze off at the meetings from time to time, according to his aide Michael Deaver.

Thus, being a Cabinet member, while symbolically important, may have less panache than meets the eye. Power in Washington is counted in terms of information. The more secret and restricted the information is, the more a person with access to it counts. Henry A. Kissinger, national security adviser to President Nixon, rose so quickly to prominence because Nixon and he closely hoarded the most important diplomatic and military secrets. Since NSC meetings, by their nature, are highly restricted, with the agenda of the sessions itself a classified secret, just being allowed to attend earns the participant additional standing. But beyond that, the council decides things. Often the decisions are worked out behind the scenes by the president and two or three of his key advisers, but nevertheless, the NSC does vote on critical matters of war and peace.

Under the law that created the NSC in 1947, the only statutory members are the president, the vice president, the secretary of state and the defense secretary. The director of central intelligence and the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff are statutory advisers.

Defense contract tells tale of sound, fury

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — To hear Navy Secretary John F. Lehman Jr. tell it, the story of the Tacoma Boatbuilding Co. is a tale of sound and fury, signifying a new hard-nosed Pentagon reluctance to rescue troubled contractors.

"If they went (bankrupt), we told them, that would be the consequence of the free-enterprise system," Lehman told Defense Week recently. "We must be prepared to see companies get into financial trouble."

A closer look at Tacoma Boat, however, yields a different moral. Far from unsheathing the terrible swift sword of free enterprise, the Navy had first bent backward to keep the shipyard afloat by approving delays and accelerating payments, showing just how misnamed a "firm fixed-price" contract can be.

With 2,000 workers in the Pacific Northwest, Tacoma Boat from 1980 to 1982 won contracts to build 12 submarine trackers with names such as Vindicator and Assertive and Dauntless. Tacoma's bid for the dozen ships was $146.9 million, $45 million less than the nearest competitor.

During the course of the contract, the Navy approved about 130 changes. For example, the shipyard schedule was allowed to slip. Then, it slipped again. And again. And again — five times by the spring of 1984, according to congressional testimony by Vice Adm. Earl B. Fowler, head of Naval Sea Systems Command.

The Navy also agreed to buy $1.4 million worth of spare parts for each ship instead of $300,000 as originally planned, Fowler said.

Then, Fowler said, the contract "was restructured to help the company financially," which helped swell the value of the "firm fixed-price contract" to $213 million. Fowler said the increase didn't change the value of the contract since it simply moved anticipated inflation costs from a special pot into the contract; but it provided a larger base on which to calculate Navy progress payments to Tacoma Boat.

That was an important consideration, since by April 1984, the Navy had paid Tacoma 71 percent of the total price of six ships that the shipyard hadn't begun to build.

In fact, when the progress payments failed to stave off the shipyard's creditors, the Navy dropped $26.5 million into a "Special Bank Account." Tacoma Boat used that money to pay local taxes and to finance work on non-Navy ships, including two patrol boats for Thailand, Fowler said.

Yarborough sentenced on weapons violations

Associated Press

Avowed white supremacist Gary Lee Yarbrough, who has been linked by authorities to a group called The Order, could be paroled in eight years from his 25-year prison term for 11 weapons violations.

Yarbrough, 29, was sentenced Friday in Boise, Idaho, by U.S. District Judge Harold Ryan, who also gave him five years' probation for assaulting FBI agents and fined him $600. The probation begins after the prison term.

"I don't want to go down into the cesspool with this country," Yarbrough, a self-described "frontline Aryan warrior," said before sentencing."I can't conform to a system that is totally anti-Christ. I'm sorry."

The former security chief of the Aryan Nations white supremacist group based in the Idaho Panhandle, has been linked by the FBI to the murder of Denver radio talk-show host Alan Berg but was not charged in that crime.

He was accused of being a felon in possession of firearms and faced other weapons charges after authorities seized automatic weapons, other firearms and explosives at his home near Sandpoint, Idaho. The weapons included the gun Denver police say was used to kill Berg.

A week after pleading guilty to the charges, Yarbrough was convicted of assaulting three FBI agents who had his home under surveillance last fall. He has said he will appeal the assault conviction.

Yarbrough faced 71 years in prison and $110,000 in fines on all counts.

His arrest in November after a Portland, Ore., motel shootout was early in a string of arrests involving members of The Order, a militant splinter group of the Aryan Nations.The Order has been tied to armored-car robberies last year in California and Washington and to the June machine-gun killing of Berg, a Jew who used his program to denounce extremists.

In his statement to Ryan, Yarbrough denied he is a racist and said that although blacks and Indians "can stand up and say they're proud," a white man who does that is labeled a racist and bigot.

Chloramine causes no problems for patients

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The reintroduction of chloramine to purify public water supplies will cause no problems for kidney dialysis patients if the water is filtered properly, health officials say.

State health officials and operators of dialysis centers said they expect few problems in meeting new standards to filter out the chloramine. The chemical attacks patients' red blood cells if it gets into dialysis water and can weaken and eventually kill them.

Chloramine will be reintroduced begining May 1 to public water systems in several counties around Los Angeles, San Diego and San Jose.Use of the chemical was suspended in December when the Department of Health Services investigated filtration systems at several dialysis centers that had failed to trap the chloramine. Eighteeen dialysis patients became anemic when treated with improperly filtered water and required transfusions. All recovered.

Judge won't drop charges

FRESNO, Calif. (AP) — A judge has refused to drop murder charges against two men in connection with the heart-attack death of a priest one month after he and a fellow priest were beaten during a church robbery.

Municipal Court Judge John Gallagher ruled Friday that the murder count will stand against Johnny Lee Smith, 21, and Ronald Windfield, 19, the alleged robbers.

An autopsy report on the Rev. Bernard Tobin, who died March 11, concluded that an undiagnosed skull fracture apparently suffered in the Feb. 12 beating was sufficient to provoke a heart attack. He and another priest were injured when two men stole $1,300 in Sunday collections and bingo proceeds from St. Alphonsus Roman Catholic Church.

CDC to lay off workers

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (AP) — Control Data Corp., saying it cannot achieve its goal of earning $4 per share this year, plans to lay off workers, sell some businesses and real estate and restructure itself to improve profitability.

Robert M. Price, president and chief operating officer, said Friday the company's prospects have been hurt by cutbacks in orders for computer accessories that are sold to other computer firms. In addition, the company expects costs of up to $21.4 million related to Control Data's Ohio-based City Loan and Savings, which must help replenish a state insurance fund that was partly depleted in that state's savings-and-loan crisis.

Dick Reid, a Control Data spokesman, said no decision has been made on how many people will be laid off or when.

Gas customers refunded

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — Minnesotans who get gas through utilities supplied by Northern Natural Gas will receive $11.8 million in refunds, the state says.

In addition, future rate reductions should be worth at least $8.2 million, Ray Bohn, director of the Minnesota Public Service Department, said Friday.The settlement results from challenges to Northern Natural filed by three states and about 50 other parties including utilities.The rate challenge, filed with the Federal Regulatory Commission, resulted in a $65 million total settlement over the nine-state Northern Natural system, Bohn said.

Bohn estimated that the average residential customer of Minnesota Gas Co., for example, would receive a refund of about $8.70. Commercial customers would get an average $47. The amount would vary from utility to utility, he added.

Wind delays testing

LAS VEGAS (AP) — The Department of Energy postponed a major underground nuclear weapon test Saturday because of continued high wind at the Nevada Test Site.

The test, the third in two weeks, had been scheduled for Friday morning, then was postponed until Saturday because of the wind.

A department spokesman said Saturday that the test would not be conducted until Monday morning at the earliest because of the wind at the site 80 miles northwest of Las Vegas.

New deal whiz kids celebrate 50 years of Social Security

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Fifty years ago they were whiz kids, helping to carve the biggest monument of the New Deal: the Social Security Act. Today, in their 70s and 80s themselves, they remain staunch defenders of the system that has helped so many elderly and poor.

Four survivors of those New Deal days gathered this weekend at a symposium to celebrate their legacy and to defend Social Security against those who question its costs and doubt its future.

Among those at the University of New Mexico session were Thomas H. Eliot, 77, the lawyer who drafted the bill for Franklin D. Roosevelt's Cabinet-level Committee on Economic Security in 1934-35; Wilbur J. Cohen, 71, a key staff aide who became Social Security's first employee and ultimately secretary of health, education and welfare; Robert J. Myers, 72, the system's legendary actuary; and economist Eveline M. Burns, 85, another original staff member.

"I always find nowadays whenever I'm introduced, people are sort of amazed to discover I'm still alive," said the British-born Mrs. Burns, a professor-emeritus at Columbia University.

But Cohen, a University of Texas professor and leader of a Social Security lobby in Washington, asked the organizers to "please stop calling us 'the old-timers.'"

Eliot said many Americans do not realize that the original act created unemployment insurance and a wide range of state welfare grants for the poor, elderly and blind, not just old-age benefits.

It was the first "massive (federal) incursion into the whole field of welfare and of help for the needy," said Eliot, who later served in Congress and became chancellor of Washington University.

Somehow, he lamented, after World War II the old-age benefits began to "monopolize" the term Social Security.

Cohen agreed that the retirement program was "a rather minor part" of the 1935 bill, and that the framers were concerned about the young as well as the old.

Originally, the old-age program was to provide benefits only for retired workers. It was amended in 1939 before the first checks went out to add spouses' and survivors' benefits. In 1956 Congress added disability benefits and in 1965 Medicare. Then, in the most far-reaching change, it voted in 1972 to raise benefits each year to match inflation.

In fiscal 1984, Social Security paid out $180 billion in retirement and disability benefits to 36.3 million people, while Medicare spent $70 billion on health care for the elderly and disabled.

To do that, it collected payroll taxes from 119 million workers and employers. Medicare beneficiaries also pay premiums and deductibles.

Fifty years from now, the system is expected to have 80 million beneficiaries supported by 157 million workers, Myers said. The ratio of workers-to-beneficiaries will drop from 3.2-to-1 to 2-to-1.

But when asked at a news conference if Social Security would survive, Cohen replied testily: "Social Security is going to be there when you people get 65."

Doctors seek donor heart for critically ill teenager

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Doctors are seeking a donor human heart for transplantation into Michael C. Jones, the teen-ager who is being kept alive by two external pumps helping his diseased heart.

David Fleming, spokesman for Louisville Jewish Hospital, where the 16-year-old is being treated, said the boy's name had gone to the top of a nationwide waiting list for donor hearts because of his condition.

Michael, of the Madison, Ind. area, remained in critical condition Saturday, his blood circulation being helped by the two small pumps that are similar in function to the Jarvik-7 artificial heart. However, while the Jarvik-7 replaces most of the heart, these pumps remain outside the body.

The youth is believed to be only the second or third person to have two such devices operating simultaneously, hospital officials said.

Fleming said there is "... a minimal amount of heart donor activity at this time within this region," but he said doctors put Michael on the National Organs Donor Network waiting list as soon as they decided to seek a transplant.

The boy has been kept alive by the pumps — helping his stricken heart to move blood through his body — since Thursday night. His surgeon, Dr. Laman A. Gray Jr., said Michael suffered cardiac arrest several times before the pumps were attached.

The pumps, known as ventricular assist devices or VADs, are driven by pulses of compressed air and are intended to be used temporarily until the natural heart heals or until a donor heart is found.

Fleming said tests showed that Michael's heart cannot beat without help from the VADs.

Gray said the youth was just hours from death when the VADs were attached to his heart.

Jones became ill March 19 with what doctors say was an acute viral problem that weakened his heart. He deteriorated so rapidly that Gray chose to use the VADs on him because he didn't think a donor heart could be obtained quickly enough to save him.

Gray said Saturday he believed the problem that caused the teenager's heart to weaken had cleared, easing any viral threat to a transplanted heart.

Reagan defends support for rebels

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan on Saturday gave a stauch defense of his support for the rebels battling the leftist government of Nicaragua, saying such aid is "morally right and intimately linked to our own security."

The president, in his weekly radio address from the presidential retreat in Camp David, Md., warned of a "Soviet-Cuban-Nicaraguan plan to destroy the fragile flower of democracy and force communism on our small Central American neighbors."

Rep. Bill Alexander, D-Ark., giving the Democratic response to Reagan's address, accused the president of "supporting guerrilla groups intent on the violent overthrow" of the Nicaraguan government.

"Mr. Reagan's alliance with violence in Nicaragua is against the American way. It is contrary to the principles of our founding fathers. The real enemies in Central America are poverty, ignorance, hunger, social injustice and political corruption," Alexander said.

Reagan's promotion of his policy toward Nicaragua comes as the administration prepares to ask Congress to release $14 million in new aid for the rebels, despite the strong opposition on Capitol Hill to any continuation of the covert funds.

In the radio address, Reagan repeated his assertion that the Soviet expansion, through Nicaragua, "goes to the heart of American security."

"U.S. support for the freedom fighters is morally right and intimately linked to our own security," Reagan said.

"If we refuse to help their just cause, if we pull the plug and allow the freedom fighters to be wiped out by the same helicopter gunships the Soviets are using to murder thousand of Afghans, then our ultimate price to protect peace, freedom and our way of life will be dear indeed," Reagan said.

The president said that if the United States fails to meet this "obligation" to the rebels, "we will send an unmistakable signal that the greatest power in the world is unwilling and incapable of stopping communist agression in our own backyard."

"The key Soviet objective has long been to turn Central America into a beachhead for subversion," Reagan said, charging that the Soviets want to penetrate U.S. sea lanes in the area and cripple America's ability to aid its allies.

"We, who have the responsibility for governing, cannot afford to be ostriches with our heads in the sand," Reagan said.

The president said Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko had described Central America as "boiling like a cauldron" and had urged revolution there.

Reagan charged that the Soviets had provided more military aid to Cuba and Nicaragua in the last five years than the United States has given all of Latin America.

"The dictators of Nicaragua and Cuba have not only pledged to spread communism, they have been caught — forgive me — red-handed, trying to do just that," Reagan said.

Reagan has been persistent in recent weeks in his attacks against the leftist Nicaraguan government and in his support for the rebels.

Jet flight makes two emergency landings at night

CHICAGO (AP) — A Jet America DC-9 was forced to make two emergency landings during the night when a ground crew apparently failed to correct a problem in which the nose wheel failed to retract, passengers and airport police said.

Flight 121, to Long Beach, Calif., took off at 7:55 p.m. Friday with 136 passengers and crew aboard.

However, the landing gear would not retract, Jet America officials said, and the plane was forced to return to O'Hare International Airport after circling over Lake Michigan for nearly an hour while the pilot attempted to get the gear up.

It landed at 9:10 p.m. after a 15-minute "stand by" alert that mobilized fire engines and police, airport patrolman James Grimm said.

The plane landed without mishap, he said, and took off again at 10:35 p.m. with the problem supposedly solved.

But again, the landing gear refused to retract, and the plane began circling for a second emergency landing.

It landed without a problem at 12:30 a.m. today, the nose wheel still stuck in the open position, Grimm said.

Passengers were put aboard another plane, which took off at around 1:25 a.m., he said.

Jet America officials said after the first landing that the problem likely was human error. Ground workers may have failed to remove a pin that locks the nose wheel, a spokesman said.

But the airline refused to comment after the second incident early today.

Some passengers were angry that officials allowed the plane to take off after the first landing without having made certain the problem was solved.

"They said they could only test the landing gear in the air," said Bob Anderson, 48, of Los Angeles. "Why didn't they unload us?"

"The captain told us not to be alarmed," said Gordon Gacek, 27, of Huntington Beach, Calif., "but everyone was praying."

"The crew was wonderful, but they shouldn't have tested the plane on us," he added.

Two people die in accident

STATELINE, Nev. (AP) — A tractor-trailer rig slammed into the back of a Las Vegas-bound tour bus on Interstate 15, killing two people and injuring several others, authorities said today.

The two dead people were believed to have been thrown through the bus windshield in the collision shortly after 11 p.m. Friday, said California Highway Patrol dispatcher Vicki Jugenheimer in Barstow.

Ms. Jugenheimer said the bus was pushed off the side of the road near the Nipton exit, 10 miles southeast of the California-Nevada border and about 50 miles from Las Vegas.

The driver of the truck left the scene and was found a short time later by CHP officers at Whiskey Pete's casino in Stateline, said another CHP dispatcher.

"We don't know if he was in the process of calling in the crash or what," she said. He was interviewed, but had not been arrested.

Sixteen injured people were taken to Southern Nevada Memorial Hospital in Las Vegas, where 14 were treated for minor injuries and released, said nursing supervisor June Cox. She said the other two were being kept in the emergency room for observation.

CBS fight could become dirty battle

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

The fight for control of CBS Inc., shows signs of degenerating into a mudslinging contest between the company and Fairness In Media, the conservative group that wants to put an end to "liberal bias" in the news media.

In a lawsuit against Fairness in Media, CBS has pointedly cited the fact that FIM's attorney, Harry F. Weyher, is president of a foundation called The Pioneer Fund, and that Thomas F. Ellis, Helms' chief political strategist and a founder of FIM, served as a director of The Pioneer Fund through at least 1976.

The Pioneer Fund is a tax-exempt foundation created in 1937 for the purpose of funding research into the problems of "racial betterment," according to the group's certificate of incorporation. Pioneer has financed research that attempted to show that blacks are genetically less intelligent than whites.

R.E. Carter Wrenn, a co-founder of Fairness in Media with Ellis, denounced the CBS allegations concerning The Pioneer Fund: "That's pretty much old-fashioned mudslinging, that's what that is. And I'm really not familiar with The Pioneer Fund per se, but the basic illusion CBS made was that Tom Ellis is a racist. And that's just nothing but dirty, old-fashioned mudslinging."

Weyher, a partner of the Park Avenue law firm of Olwine, Connelly, Chase, O'Donnel & Weyher, has been president of The Pioneer Fund since at least 1973, according to the group's annual government filings, which were reviewed by The Washington Post. Ellis was a Pioneer Fund director from 1973 through 1976. In addition, Marion A. Parrot is a director of both the National Congressional Club and The Pioneer Fund.

In 1983, Ellis was nominated to be a member of the Board for International Broadcasting, which oversees certain U.S. government overseas broadcasting operations, including Radio Liberty and Radio Free Europe. Ellis withdrew his nomination after several senators opposed him because of his association with The Pioneer Fund and his previously publicized views on race, according to a review of the transcript of Ellis' nomination hearings and other government documents.

In 1983, The Pioneer Fund distributed $271,061 in grants to finance and publish research, including studies of eugenics, the scientific theory that the human species can be improved through the control of hereditary factors in mating. In 1982, The Pioneer Fund distributed $418,974 to finance and publish research including studies of dysgenics, which is the study of the deterioration, over time, of the hereditary qualities of various races.

The Pioneer Fund also gave $10,000 in 1983 to the Coalition for Freedom, a conservative organization controlled by political allies of Helms that tries to influence public opinion by producing television programs and films.

Ellis said in his senate cofirmation hearings in 1983 that he had served as a director of The Pioneer Fund at Weyher's request, and that all he did for the fund was routinely sign documents releasing money for research grants. Ellis testified: "I do not believe in my own heart that I am a racist."

Ellis resigned as a Pioneer director after accounts of his involvement appeared in several newspapers in 1977. Weyher, who is still president and a director of The Pioneer Fund, did not return a phone call from The Washington Post. Ellis also declined to comment.

James P. Cain, another co-founder of Fairness in Media, said Weyher was hired to represent FIM because: "He (Weyher) and Tom Ellis have been acquaintances for years and we were interested in legal counsel (Weyher) who was one, competent, and second, even more importantly, understood what our concerns were philosophically."

Controversy surrounding Ellis' views on race surfaced in the 1976 Republication presidential primary in North Carolina after Ellis, who was supporting then-Gov. Reagan for president, distributed leaflets suggesting that Gerald Ford might select a black running mate if he won the nomination.

Ellis confirmed that he put out the handbill, according to a transcript of his confirmation hearings. The transcripts say that Reagan campaign officials put a stop to the distribution of the leaflets once they learned about them.

Ellis also was criticized at the confirmation hearings for a recent trip to South Africa at the expense of the South African government.

At the hearing, Ellis said he no longer favors segregationist policies he advocated in the mid-1950s after the 1954 Brown vs. Board of Education Supreme Court decision ordering desegregation of public schools.

Official says CPSC not dealing promptly with hazards

New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Ever since he assumed the chairmanship of the Consumer Product Safety Commission earlier this year, Terrence M. Scanlon has tried to steer it away from what he considers a confrontational stance with industry, seeking voluntary agreements instead of commission orders and recalls.

And since Scanlon became chairman, criticism of him by another commissioner, Stuart M. Statler, has become more frequent, with Statler issuing his own news releases to call attention to safety hazards that he asserts Scanlon is not dealing with promptly.

In a way, the two commissioners symbolize the shift from regulatory action in the Carter administration to deregulation under President Reagan.

"For the life of me," Statler said the other day, "I don't see why anyone would want to be chairman of a health and safety agency and not take actions authorized by Congress to protect the public."

Scanlon, who has called some of Statler's safety warnings "inaccurate and misleading," says Statler seems not to have taken note of the two Reagan election victories since his appointment by President Carter in 1979. "He is still part of the Carter regulatory mind-set," the chairman said of Statler.

The ill feelings mark something of a departure for the commission, which in the past tried to iron out its differences in private and to present a collegial appearance in public. It also marks a shift in the position for Statler, a New York Republican.

In the Carter administration, he readily acknowledges, he was considered the most conservative member. Now he says he has become the most liberal, although he insists he has not changed his views but instead has seen the composition of the commission change in front of him.

The two commissioners have taken to issuing memorandums to each other and to staff members, with copies sent to the press. Statler's most recent is entitled "People Who Live in Glass Houses."

In it, he writes to Scanlon, "I take it that you didn't care for the fact sheet and accompanying cover memo that I sent out last week seeking to gather additional information from the general public on the use, handling and stability of all-terrain vehicles."

The chairman, indeed, seems not to have cared for the Statler statement, describing it in his reply memorandum as a "one-man consumer alert" and comparing it to an incident last year when Statler and some other commissioners issued what Scanlon called "inaccurate and misleading data on amusement ride deaths."

The chairman called for greater adherence to commission regulations relating to handing out information to the press, to which Statler replied, "As a self-confessed 'deregulator,' your new-found interest in issuing regulations of any kind comes as a shock."

Then Statler continued in his memorandum to Scanlon, "I only wish you were so moved to protect the public in the face of hazards that kill and maim people, and not merely wave the flag for an industry where the safety of its product is called into question."

Scanlon maintains that unsafe products can be removed from the market faster with voluntary standards of safety, than with recall actions.

"That's where we part ways," he said. "I feel the public ought to be protected from the risk of injury. Terry doesn't face up to the reality that there are companies unwilling to take the actions necessary."

Scanlon replied: "Not true. I voted for recalls when they were necessary."

Both commissioners were asked whether it was not appropriate for Scanlon, a Democrat who was appointed chairman of the agency by Reagan, to limit federal regulatory activities in view of Reagan's overwhelming re-election that was at least partly based on a campaign to reduce the role of government in everyday life.

Yes, Scanlon answered, saying it reflected the will of the electorate.

No, Statler answered, it is not appropriate.

Orders received later may not be honored due to volatile fluctuations in the precious metals market, and checks may be returned uncashed.

UNIQUE RARITY

President Kennedy's mournful passing in 1963 marked the beginning and end of a special issue 90% pure silver half dollar. These half dollars are the only silver issue with the official presidential seal represented on the reverse. President Kennedy, being a coin collector himself, was very fond of the presidential seal and the engravers used this device in creating a coin that lives on where this great leader has passed away. No other silver coin in the entire history of the United States was minted with this feature, creating a coin of instant uniqueness and rarity. Also, our history records show that this is the only silver issue of U.S. coinage to have two famous designers and their respective monograms stamped on either side. These unique features along with a limited one year mintage are the essence of profit and excitement in coin collecting and investing.

GOVERNMENT SILVER RELEASED

Our release to the American Public of 5000 Government Silver half dollars will only be through this notice! Government issued coins stored in guarded vaults are 20 years old and guaranteed to be brilliant uncirculated gems. U.S. Coin Reserve; a division of Verret Enterprises, a private corporation, has instructed its professional coin analysts to grade and select only the coins that qualify to be Flawless M.S. 67 Uncirculated Gems. Also all Government Silver sold by us is fully guaranteed by the United States as to silver content and is accompanied by a Certificate of Authenticity from the U.S. Coin Reserve. We can only guarantee this price for one week due to the volatility of the precious metals market.

STRICT LIMIT

Since our price of $18.90 is only half of our full market price we expect an avalanche of orders to come pouring in. Therefore, we advise you to get your order in early before the strictly limited supply at this price is sold. We offer a 4 day examination period for each order; orders returned within that time will receive a full refund. A limit of five hundred coins per order will be strictly adhered to! So, avoid disappointment. Act now!

AMERICAN HERO

Born in a large Irish Catholic family, John F. Kennedy was the youngest elected president in American History. As a young man he showed great courage in WWII while on an important torpedo mission. After a destroyer annihilated his torpedo boat, he physically saved the lives of his crew by swimming 19 hours for help. Not only did he fight well but with his keen mind he authored two best selling history books, one of which won the coveted and sought after Pulitzer Prize. After winning the office of the Presidency his spirit and accomplishments benefitted man and mankind in all walks of life. He put the first American in space, he increased wages for laborers, he fought for civil rights of minorities, he extended social security for the aged, and he also reduced tariffs for businessmen. When the Russians threatened world peace with nuclear missiles in Cuba, he swiftly and strategically crushed them with a naval blockade. Once again proving what a strong leader can do with this great contry to guard world peace. It is a sad fact that a man with the seeming powers of a god who touched the lives of everyone on this great planet had to suffer the fate of death by assasination. John F. Kennedy, perhaps the greatest leader in the history of the world died like a soldier — under fire.

Gorbachev's first weeks marked with discipline drive, less publicity

WORLD

MOSCOW (AP) — Mikhail S. Gorbachev's first three weeks as Communist Party chief have been marked by heavy publicity for a renewed discipline drive linked to his administration.

But in contrast to the publicity accorded his predecessors, photographs and films of the 54-year-old party general secretary have not been regular features in newspaper and television reports.

Gorbachev's name is rarely cited in editorials by the state-run dailies and his portrait has not appeared on Moscow streets.

Reasons for this restraint are hard to pinpoint, and it is still too early to determine whether it marks a permanent change of style.

A Soviet source said the Kremlin has ordered editors to avoid lionizing the new party chief — a policy that could simply be intended to paint Gorbachev as modest and hard-working.

The relatively low-key publicity may spring from a desire or need to promote the concept of collective leadership. Meanwhile, policies associated with Gorbachev are being vigorously publicized.

The party daily Pravda and regional papers have given prominent coverage over the past week to local party meetings at which warnings were made to dishonest, lax and unqualified officials.

On Friday, the official news agency Tass announced the removal from office of the third member of the party's powerful Central Committee in the past week.

In a dispatch from Minsk, capital of the Byelorussian republic, Tass said Vladimir A. Mikulich, local party chief since 1977, "was freed from responsibilities as first secretary of the regional party in connection with his transfer to other work."

Last Saturday, Tass reported that the Soviet minister of power and electrification and the head of the Kirov regional party committee had also been removed. It was not clear if the officials would keep their seats on the Central Committee.

Elsewhere, a district party boss retired in Turkmenistan without the usual note of thanks that would indicate an honorable departure, and a member of the Azerbaijan republic's Central Committee was kicked out of the party for misusing his position.

Over the past two years, Pravda said 44 party officials in the Perm region of central Russia had been relieved of all responsibilities on grounds of incompetence, and said another 312 town and district officials had been fired for "unseemly deeds."

The officials were removed before Gorbachev took office, but the Pravda report may have been intended to back the drive for tighter discipline.

Such a campaign is not new. Gorbachev's reputed mentor, Yuri V. Andropov, launched one during his 15 months as president and Communist Party leader.

But after apparently losing steam under Gorbachev's predecessor, Konstantin U. Chernenko, the discipline drive is again being prominently mentioned, and is constantly linked to the new leadership.

Speakers at local party meetings have borrowed phrases from Gorbachev's speech to the Central Committee plenum that made him general secretary on March 11, in which he called for stricter accountability by party and government officials.

These formulations, and others from Gorbachev's speech, can be found in virtually every press report on the party meetings.

But Gorbachev himself is rarely quoted or mentioned by name, and his activities are being given less attention than were those of past Soviet leaders.

This contrasts sharply with past practice.

Throughout the Soviet Union's 67-year history, the image of the party leader has always been closely linked with the administration. Portraits of each have adorned several prominent squares, and were removed quickly upon his death. The successor's image was then posted.

Chernenko became party chief in February 1984 following Andropov's death.

Pakistan has problems with heroin

PESAHWAR, Pakistan (AP) — Dr. Mohammed Shaffiq peered into the one-room clinic where 10 heroin addict patients sat listlessly on their beds.

"I have to force myself to show my face here anymore," he said. "What is 10 beds in a sea of addicts?"

Shaffiq's disillusionment is reflective of the alarming growth of heroin addiction in Pakistan, especially in this wild frontier region near the Afghan border where, he says, "getting heroin is like getting a pack of cigarettes or a cup or coffee."

Five years ago, not a single case of heroin addiction was recorded in this Moslem nation of 97 million. Today there are an estimated 300,000 or more addicts and the number is climbing. The United States, with three times the population, is estimated to have 500,000 addicts.

The domestic epidemic is an outgrowth of Pakistan's emergence in the 1980s as the world's major conduit and processing center for heroin. More than half the heroin reaching the veins of users in the United States and Europe comes from Pakistan, part of the so-called "Golden Crescent," which includes Afghanistan and Iran.

Drugs are not new in this autonomous tribal belt of the Khyber Pass, the historic passageway to Asia. The local tribesmen, the fiercely proud and independent Pathans, have made cultivation of opium, smuggling and arms manufacture their traditional livelihood.

But under pressure from the U.S. government, which has threatened to cut off economic and military aid, Pakistan has taken steps to crack down on the drug trade by entering tribal areas and smashing laboratories where opium is refined into heroin.

On March 13, 500 Pakistani troops with artillery and armored personnel carriers swooped into Jamrud, gateway to the Khyber Pass, and destroyed the headquarters of Wali Khan, a rebellious tribal chieftain and alleged heroin kingpin.

Five people were killed in a shootout between soldiers and tribesmen.

After Khan refused to surrender by the end of a two-day deadline and fled into the hills, troops pounded his mud-walled fortress with 155-mm artillery shells.

"We blew the house to smithereens," said Javed Alam Khanzada, the government's political agent in the Khyber. "I have also warned Wali Khan's cronies to surrender. The message is loud and clear: What happened to your chieftain can happen to you also."

The government says at least 40 heroin laboratories like Wali Khan's have been smashed or dismantled in the past two years — including one near Landi Kotal, a notorious drugs bazaar in the Khyber, that was processing an estimated 1,100 pounds of heroin in 21 drums with a capacity of 55 gallons each.

In 1982, Pakistan became the first country ever to intercept one ton of heroin in a year. Last year authorities reported they seized more than two tons of heroin destined for the West and say the figure could double this year.

Officials also are encouraged that Pakistan's opium production has declined from 800 tons in 1979 to a projected 45 tons in 1984-85.

But despite the crackdown on production and smuggling, Pakistan appears to be losing the war on heroin at home.

"The situation is out of hand," Dr. Shaffiq said in an interview at the Khyber Hospital. "There is no way of knowing for sure but there are definitely 200,000 addicts in the area, maybe much more. The problem may be even worse in other areas."

Heroin in Pakistan is smoked like a cigarette, not injected by needle as in the West. It costs as little as 10 rupees (about 70 cents) a gram.

Khan Ali, a 20-year-old farmer, said he was a regular hashish smoker until his friends have him a heroin cigarette 2½ years ago. Now he's back at the Peshawar clinic for his second round of treatment, and his parents are selling some of their property to send him to Saudi Arabia to work as a laborer and get away from heroin.

"I'm fed up," Ali said between detoxification treatments with antipsycotic drugs and decreasing doses of opium. "Heroin is making me weak. I can't work anymore."

Doctors say heroin is fast becoming fashionable among Pakistan's educated, middle classes.

While the average opium addict is illiterate and unemployed, a survey by the Mayo Hospital in Lahore shows the average heroin abuser is between 15 and 29 years old, has three to 10 years of schooling and works as a skilled manual laborer or shopkeeper.

"I am afraid this has now become a drug of fashion," said Professor Ijaz Ahmed Khan Tareen, head of the psychiatry department and project director of the drug clinic at Mayo hospital.

Those exposed to gas leak suffer health problems

NewYork Times News Service

BHOPAL, India — Thousands of people exposed to the poison gas that leaked from the Union Carbide pesticide factory here late last year are suffering from incurable problems with breathing, sleeping, digesting food and performing even light physical labor, doctors say.

Government health officials say 5,000 to 10,000 people will probably never be able to earn a living because of their injuries. But problems in counting the injured and keeping treatment records on them have led to angry assertions by independent health groups that there could actually be as many as 50,000 people seriously injured.

Moreover, confusion, inefficiency and haphazard record-keeping are plaguing the medical relief system created here for the victims, health experts said in interviews.

The health experts said there was random or casual prescribing of painkillers, sedatives, antacid tablets and many other drugs, some of which were potentially harmful.

In addition, health experts and some local and national government officials said there would probably never be a precise figure of how many people died from the leak of methyl isocyanate at the Union Carbide factory here Dec. 3. It was the worst industrial accident in history.

The state government of Madhya Pradesh, which has overseen the relief and counting efforts, reported last week that it had counted 1,431 deaths so far and that about 1,150 of the dead had been identified.

After the accident, Indian journalists in Bhopal made surveys of burial grounds, cremation areas and hospitals and from that estimated that 2,000 to 2,500 people had died. The Indian government, while sticking to its official toll of 1,400, has not refuted the higher figures. Government officials say that regardless of how many actually died in the accident, it appears unlikely that the official count will rise much beyond 1,700 or 1,800 because of the difficulty of tracking down and identifying all who died.

Some private groups have asserted that the number of deaths is from 3,000 to 15,000.

Those involved in the counting said their efforts were hampered by the difficulties in surveying a population of beggars, transient workers and other impoverished people who sleep in the ramshackle shantytowns that surround the huge Union Carbide factory in the old section of this city.

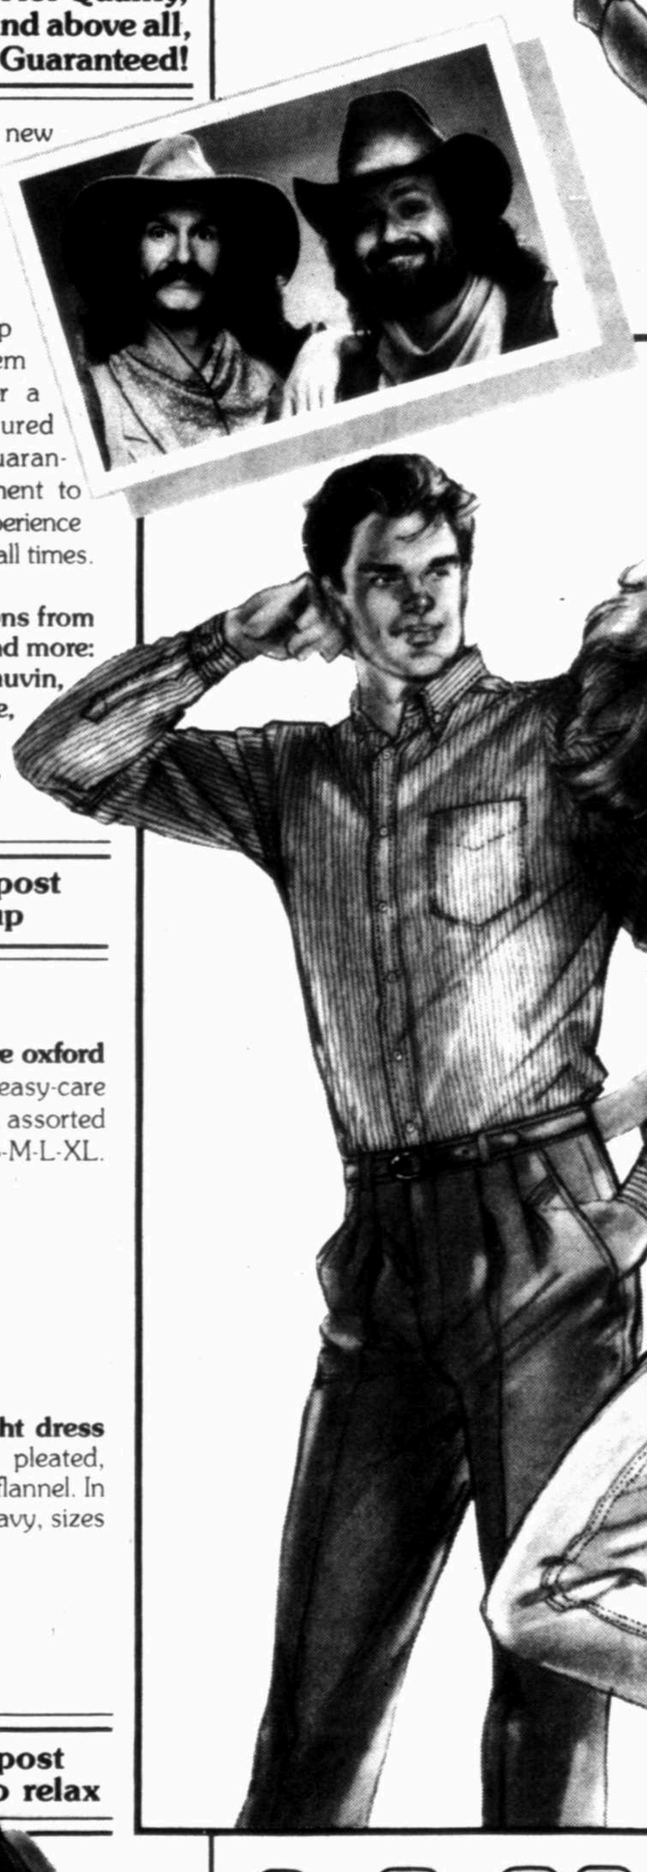

Those problems and the disagreements raise serious doubts about whether more than a fraction of the families who suffered in the accident will receive compensation even if Union Carbide decides to, or is forced to, pay. Lawsuits seeking compensation have been filed in the United States.

French media reveal alleged Soviet spy documents

PARIS (AP) — A French newspaper and a television station have made public the contents of what they say were secret Soviet documents that prompted France to expel 47 Soviet diplomats and officials in 1983.

The respected daily Le Monde said the documents provide a glimpse of the extent to which the Soviet Union relies on industrial espionage. It also published for the first time the identities of the 47, expelled April 5, 1983.

The Soviet Embassy immediately protested, calling the disclosure a "calumnious campaign of flagrant disinformation" and asked the French government to "cut (it) short."

A six-page synthesis of a 195-page report, said to have been photographed in Moscow and provided to the television station TF1 by sources in France's counterintelligence service, dealt with information allegedly obtained by Soviet agents over a period of three to four years.

Le Monde listed embassy officials, UNESCO representatives and the director of the official Soviet news agency Tass in Paris, O.A. Chirokov, as among the expelled Soviets.

The report convinced the Socialist government of President Francois Mitterrand to expel the Soviets "to make an example of the 47 diplomats," Le Monde said.

The report carried the signature of Leonid Smirnov, vice president of the Presidium of the Council of Ministers and head of the Commission for Military Industry, news reports said. They said the information enabled the Soviets to improve certain arms, missiles and combat planes.

TF1 claimed the document revealed to the United States that air-to-ground and ground-to-ground missiles developed by America's Hughes Aircraft and used by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization had been compromised.

In the protest note to the French Foreign Ministry, the Soviet Embassy spoke of "the new campaign of hostility started as if by command in the mass media of France" by the publication of "crude forgeries."

It said the aim of the "flagrant disinformation" is "from all evidence to awaken the suspicion of those French participating in a vast scientific and technological enterprise of cooperation with the Soviet Union."

It quoted the report as saying the information saved the Soviets up to $40 million in research expense.

WORLD IN BRIEF

French airbus makes belly landing at airport

PERPIGNAN, France (AP) — An Airbus carrying 270 people on a flight from Paris to Perpignan made a belly landing at the Perpignan airport Saturday, but no one was hurt, airport officials said.

The landing gear of the Air Inter plane apparently failed to fully extend, and the plane did a half-spin at the end of the runway, said the officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The plane was carryng 260 passengers and 10 crew.

The officials said the damaged aircraft blocked the runway, and the airport was closed to commercial flights for the rest of the day.

Air exercises to be held

KUWAIT (AP) — The six member countries of the Gulf Cooperation Council will hold joint air exercises in Kuwait next month, the Kuwait news agency reported Saturday.

The agency said the exercises were intended to "increase the defense capabilities of the air forces" of the nations — Saudi Arabia, Qatar, the United Arab Emirates, Bahrain, Oman and Kuwait.

The six countries stepped up their defense coordination last year after hostilities increased in the Persian Gulf between their northern neighbors, Iraq and Iran.

Military arrests priest

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — The military arrested a Roman Catholic priest Saturday on charges of helping the outlawed Communist New People's Army recruit new guerrillas, the official Philippine News Agency reported.

The report said the Rev. Teodoro Remigio was arrested in his parish in the town of Pidig, based on an arrest warrant issued by a local judge and an order from President Ferdinand E. Marcos.

The agency quoted the military as alleging that Remigio has "openly criticized government policies on peace and order, political, social and economic programs and the power of the president to issue presidential decrees."

Remigio was placed under the custody of the Catholic chaplain of a military camp in the northern Philippines.

Project agreement reached

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — The Soviet Union and Angola agreed Saturday on business deals worth $1 billion over the next five years, according to the Yugoslav news agency Tanjug.

Tanjug said in a report from the Angolan capital of Luanda that the agreement calls for work on 50 projects in the fields of energy, industry, fishing, vocational training, construction and engineering.

The arrangement includes deliveries of equipment for a 450-megawatt hydroelectric power station on the Kwanzi River, the report said.The dam is being built by Brazilian companies.

Minister ordered to move

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — An Indian Cabinet minister, who lives next door to Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi, has been ordered to move so that security can be tightened for his neighbor, a newspaper reported Saturday.

The independent Indian Express said that Information Minister V.N. Gadgil's house on Race Course Road in southern Delhi will be used as a security headquarters to monitor the area.

Piles of rocks fortified by huge embankments have been set up around Gandhi's residence, which occupies two houses. The road is sealed off and the neighborhood patrolled by police.

Gandhi recently moved to the new residence after living for years with his mother, Indira Gandhi. She was assassinated at her home on Oct. 31 — by Sikh bodyguards, according to the government.

Nakasone says Japan must 'adopt measures'

TOKYO (AP) — Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone, reacting to a U.S. Senate resolution urging the Reagan administration to impose tariffs or quotas on Japanese goods, said Saturday that Japan "must recognize the seriousness of such a resolution and adopt measures accordingly."

"It is the first time for the U.S. Senate to adopt a unanimous resolution asking us for restraint," Nakasone noted.

He also disclosed his intention to release a special statement on April 9 on frictions between Japan and its trading partners.

Gaston Sigur, a U.S. presidential adviser, will meet Nakasone and Foreign Minister Shintaro Abe in Tokyo on Sunday to convey Reagan's concern that Congress will enact protectionist measures if Japan does not remove barriers to American goods.

Japan's Kyodo news service said Sigur, an adviser on Asian and Pacific affairs for the National Security Council, will give Nakasone a personal letter from Reagan. It said the letter is believed to contain an appeal to Japan to open its domestic markets further to foreign competition.

The Senate approved a non-binding resolution on Thursday, 92-0, that called on the administration to impose tariffs or quotas unless Tokyo allows more American goods to be sold in Japan.

It followed Japan's announcement that it will increase auto exports to the United States 25 percent to 2.3 million vehicles in the year starting April 1.

Nakasone, speaking in a television interview with the Tokyo Broadcasting System that will be aired Sunday, announced he would issue "a prime minister's communique" on April 9 and "make an appeal to the world saying 'Japan will do this.'"

"I am thinking of appearing on television to explain the situation and ask the Japanese people for cooperation," he said.

He described the trade problems with the United States, the European Common Market and Southeast Asia as a "serious headache."

According to the dailies Yomiuri Shimbun and the Tokyo Shimbun, Nakasone's communique will be based on an official report to be submitted next week by the Advisory Council on External Economic Problems, headed by former Foreign Minister Saburo Okita.

The dailies said the report will recommend that the Japanese government announce a general policy to uphold "a totally open market" save for certain restrictions to guarantee food and energy security. Officials of the panel were not available for comment over the weekend.

To assure foreign firms of wider access to the Japanese market, the panel will propose that the government agree over a three-year period to lift tariffs, reduce import quotas to a bare minimum, and increase government purchases of foreign products, the news reports said.

Attacks feared after bombing of film festival

New York Times News Service

PARIS — Politicians and Jewish leaders warned on Saturday against an upsurge of racism and anti-Semitism in France after a bombing Friday night at a Jewish film festival that wounded 18 people.

Police said that the bomb was placed under a seat in the Rivoli Beaubourg cinema on the Rue de Rivoli during an annual Jewish film festival.

It dug a hole in the floor of the basement theater, set fire to chairs, and blasted away a false ceiling so that plaster and debris rained down on the 50 people in the audience.

Only one of those wounded remained in the hospital on Saturday.

No group has claimed responsibility for the attack, although the organizers of the festival received an anonymous letter two weeks ago threatening to "blow everything up, including the director" of the festival, the police said.

President Francois Mitterrand, in a statement on Saturday, expressed "my indignation at the crime committed at the Jewish film festival as well as my solidarity with the victims of the attack and with the Jewish community of France." Other politicians and groups, including the far-right National Front, also condemned the bombing.

The bombing Friday night followed recent attacks against other minority groups in France and thus provoked fears that the country might be entering a new phase of violence. In the last few weeks, two Arab residents of France were killed in the south of the country in what were apparently racially motivated attacks.

STATE

A late-season cold front continued its march across Texas Saturday after dropping light snow over the Panhandle, spawning tornadoes near Abilene and triggering heavy thunderstorms over wide sections of the state.

By late afternoon, the east-moving thunderstorms had moved into far East Texas, while a high-pressure system and much drier air pushed into the rest of the state.

Clear skies were common in the south, while scattered low clouds dotted North Central and West Texas, according to the National Weather Service.

A tornado watch was posted Saturday afternoon for 20 counties in far East Texas as forecasters warned of heavy storms that could trigger tornadoes.

Temperatures were hovering in the 50s and 60s over most of Texas during the afternoon Saturday, although readings had dipped into the 30s in the Panhandle.

Three tornadoes were confirmed Friday east of Abilene in Callahan County. A funnel that touched down about 3:30 p.m. in the Oplin community, 25 miles southeast of Abilene, damaged eight to 10 buildings.

CENTENNIAL CHRONICLES

McCormick name well remembered

By MARY J. GOODWIN

Mary J. Goodwin, now employed by Midland County Library, has written for magazines, newspapers and worked for several newspapers. She has lived in Midland since 1972 and was born in Azle. With her husband, Lemuel R. Goodwin, she has lived in foreign countries and New Jersey, Georgia and Tennessee.

A long-tressed, blonde, bright eyed, 4-year-old girl viewed the rhyme and rhythm of her Midland world from atop a square post of a pailing fence. Her brother whetted her curiosity with his own "older" knowledge, giving her words to quote. A poem supplied by him, without her knowing the meaning of the words and chanted at a passerby, strengthened her first memory of Midland.

Frightened by the person's chastisement and the spanking she received as a result of her chant, the poem was imprinted in her mind. She can still chant the four lines — with understanding, now. Years later, possibly with greater understanding, also, the recipient of the chant apologized.

That child was known by early Midlanders as Leona McCormick, and by later arrivals to Midland as Leona Bryant and then Leona Bryant Smith.

The McCormick and the Vest families, ancestors of Leona, were well known ranchers in Midland.

Leona's father, W.F. "Frank" McCormick, was 4 when he arrived in Midland with his father, George McCormick. George McCormick had made several trips earlier from Meridian, Miss., looking for buffalo hides. Water holes along Johnson and Scharbauer draws made the area seem a good place to settle. He brought his family and became a rancher on a spread south of Midland, the Rocker R Ranch.

McCORMICK GALLERY in the Allison Fine Arts Building at Midland College was named in memory of him; Leona's mother, Mary McIntire "Molly" Vest McCormick; and Leona's brother, George D. McComick.

Jasper Vest, Leona's grandfather, came from Alabama through the Hill Country, settling in Austin. The children of Nancy and Jasper Vest were born in the Austin area. Jasper Vest was a Texas Ranger and stayed often at the Ranger House in East Midland. Nancy once made a trip alone from San Saba accompanied by her children, five boys and one girl. As Jasper had been bitten by a snake and the doctor forbid travel, they were allowed to stay at the Ranger House before continuing their journey to White Oaks, N.M., to visit with the Rom Holt family. Indians were encountered along the trail, but they returned safely to Midland where they later settled on the Z Bar T Ranch south of Midland. The small girl making that memorable trip was Leona's mother, Mary McIntire Vest, better known as Molly Vest.

Eventually, Molly Vest and Frank McCormick met. They were married in the First Methodist Church in December of 1894.

Mary McIntire McCormick regaled Leona with many stories about early Midland life. Molly attended the first one room school in Midland. She and her friend, Mittie Draper, had long, long hair. One day in school Clarence Scharbauer, another early day Midlander, sat behind them in school and during class braided their long hair together. When they left their desks in opposite directions, their braided hair jerked them to a startled halt.

AS A SMALL child, Leona often went to the Mims grocery store on Missouri and Main and has a quaint nostalgic memory of it and the saloon next door. When she was about 5, she went to the grocery store. On leaving she wandered into the saloon. When the family realized that Leona was missing, a search was started. She was found sitting on the bar in the saloon entertaining the cowboys with her innocent chatter while they admired her long blonde hair.

She attended high school in the old Midland High School Building and was the only person to win the State Scholastic Intra State Declamation cup for three years. Offered in high school throughout the state when Governor Ferguson was in office, the Declamation continued through "Ma" Ferguson's governorship, she said. When the old high school was demolished, the new building had no space for the trophies. Leona asked the school for her trophy and was told, "If you can find it among all those stored trophies, you can have it." She found it and her beautiful silver loving cup is now on display in her home. Another beautiful souvenir that she has kept is a quilt made by her grandmother Vest with the area ranch brands on it.

Leona believes she is the one person left in Midland who attended the first Midland College. She graduated from the old junior college to go on to Mary Hardin Simmons University to become an outstanding graduate. Her brother, George, played football at the old Midland College, open from about 1909 to 1921, according to records. Injured in a football game with Texas Christian University, George was ill for a year, but recovered and served in both world wars. He was a major in the Air Force and taught at Texas Tech in Bombadier School.

A STORY TOLD to Leona by her mother has become famous in Midland. Molly Vest and Mame Jowell were chums. In 1890 they entered the annual Fourth of July dance where prizes were awarded to the prettiest and most graceful dancers. For weeks Granny Holt and Grandma Vest, the mothers of the girls, sewed dresses and drawers. The custom in those days was drawers made from bleached flour sacks. The method of bleaching the brand name from the flour sacks was not always successful and pale lettering remained. Mame was a most graceful dancer and could waltz with a glass on her head. Some cowboys scattered meal on the floor making it quite slick in spots. Mame made a last graceful twirl, hit a slick spot, slipped and both feet flew out. On the seat of Mame's drawers plain to read was THE PRIDE OF DENVER. Of course, Mame won the prize.

Other diversions were Cloverdale, where Henry M. Haiff built a bandstand and an area for picnics and a 'ground tank' where Leona learned to swim.

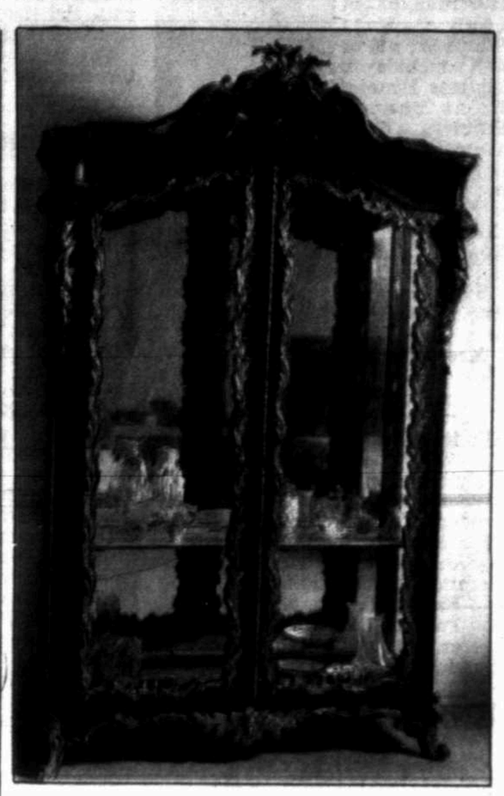

Daily the Sunshine train from New York to California came through Midland and the residents would go to the station to greet it. She remembers Old Geronimo, an old man who had a nearby truck garden, but no one knew where he came from or anything about him. He daily joined the Sunshine watchers with his dog. When Old Geronimo died, for years after the dog would join the daily crowd to watch for the Sunshine train.

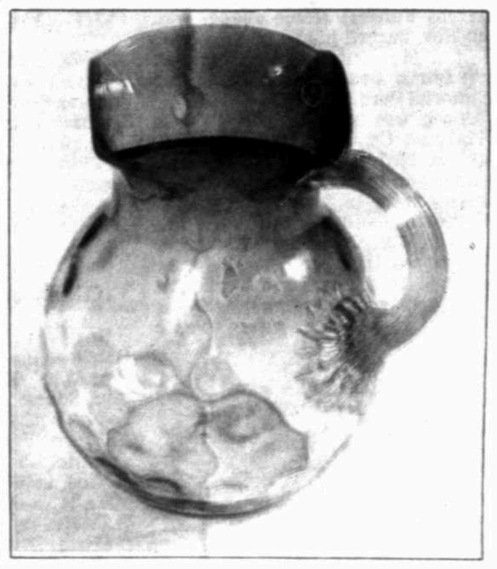

THE DUSTY, windy little town where Leona watched her youthful days pass grew as she grew into a mature young woman. She married Wilson "Billy" Bryant and moved to the Bryant ranch called THE THREE WELLS. After many hearty and interesting years on the ranch where she injured her hip in a fall from a horse, they returned to Midland. Although she rode after the pin was put into her hip, she penned a poem to her ranch life. She quotes with a merry gleam of memory in her eyes:

My riding days are over,
My glimmering lights are out.
What OLD THREE WELLS hasn't done to me,
the horses HAVE just about.

Centennial Chronicles will appear on this page each Sunday through July 7 in observance of Midland's Centennial. The columns were contributed by local writers in cooperation with the Midland Centennial Commission.

Antiques: Dealing an art in itself

By RON GILMORE

For some people, Grandma's old dining room cupboard may be just one more item for the Goodwill truck to haul away.

But for antique dealers, it's another sale on the cash register.

"People off the street will bring things into the shop and we buy some of it," said Joanna Yates, co-owner of Kathy's Collectibles. "We don't make a lot of money but we have fun."

While antique shops occasionally acquire the furnishings of yesteryear from unappreciative heirs — it's not the norm.

Mary Hoover used to go to Iowa.

"I started out buying just a little — maybe $750 on the first trip," said the former antique dealer who now appraises others' finds. "But after that I got a little bigger and went up to Iowa and brought back van loads full of real good buys and stored them in a warehouse.

"That was the last time we did that," she said. "It was kind of expensive."

Mrs. Hoover went on buying trips often.

"Sometimes we'd go every three weeks," she said. "We usually went to wholesale dealers."

She recalled one dealer who was particularly persistent.

"At one time there was a wholesale dealer up in Lubbock who operated out of her three-story house," she said. "Oh, she'd put you up and feed you and everything. There were a lot of dealers in Lubbock and she didn't want anyone to get away.

"And if we spent enough money, she'd haul it home for us for free," she said.

Mrs. Hoover had her share of antique dealers wandering into her South Florida Avenue shop.

"Once you know dealers, you can spot them a mile away," she said. "I remember once a woman came in and was asking about different things, and I said, 'Where's your shop?'"

"'Does it show?' she asked."

"You can tell by the way they talk and what they ask for," said Mrs. Hoover. "This woman was asking about Amberina and Rubena glass — things that your average antique shopper is not so familiar with."

Mrs. Hoover used to visit auctions occasionally to find a good buy.

"I don't much care for them because they are open to the public," she said. "It's not so bad now, but used to be. When I knew almost everyone in town, I'd go to the auction and buy something and then people would come into my shop and say, 'Ooh, Mary, how can you charge so much after what you paid for that?'"

While antique collecting can be an expensive hobby or business, collectors agree that no amount of money can overcome ignorance.

"I have a fairly good library on antiques," said Mrs. Hoover. "I read and study. You look and learn from other people.

Jeanie W. Parks, owner of J.W. Parks Gallery, agreed.

"You are in the books all the time," she said. "There are ways to tell if something is old or new — but it's something you learn and acquire."

Mrs. Parks, born in Scotland and raised in a 175-year-old house in New England, has a natural fondness for antiques.

And she tenaciously adheres to the generally accepted definition of what constitutes an antique — anything over 100 years.

"I don't think it holds true in West Texas, but being from Boston I have it ground into me," she said. Mrs. Parks categorizes anything newer as "collectibles."

"I don't like to sell anything past the 1930s," she said.

Nor does she like to buy or sell fake antiques.

"There are many ways to tell if something is old or new and just made to look old," she said.

For breakfronts and other furniture that has drawers, it is possible to tell the real thing from a fake by the way the drawers are constructed.

"See this?" she said, pointing to the inside corners of a breakfront drawer in her dining room. "This is called dovetailing and it is how drawers used to be pieced together."

Dovetailing takes its name from the shape of the fan-like wedges that protrude from one side of a drawer and fit snugly into another side.

"The older it is, the more crudely it is done," she said.

Other identifying elements of authentic antique furniture may be keyholes with ivory, wooden knobs, shape of cornices and on tables — the legs.

"You can actually date a table by its legs," she said.

There are more scientific methods to identifying authentic antiques, she added.

Carbon dating, radiographic and spectographic analysis, ultraviolet light and the standard magnifying glass and flashlight are common tools used in detecting a fake, she said.

"But the eye, memory and knowledge are the most useful tools of all connoisseurs," she said. "But even the best eye can be fooled."

Leakey describes his long search

By ANNTOINETTE MOORE
Staff Writer

Richard E. Leakey is engaged in the ultimate genealogical quest — the search for "Adam's ancestors," as the Archbishop of Canterbury, Archbishop Runcie, once described it.

Leakey, 40, the son of noted fossil hunters Louis and Mary Leakey, has spent most of his life in Kenya. Born in Nairobi, he was accompanying his parents on their expeditions to fossil locations such as Olduvai Gorge before he was 1 year old.

In Lubbock Thursday at Texas Tech University, Leakey spoke to a responsive crowd of almost 1,000 people about humanity's place in the evolutionary scheme of things and his most recent work at Koobi Fora and other sites around Lake Turkana, in northern Kenya.

Leakey, director of the National Museum of Kenya, held that evolution, which he defined as change occurring in organisms through time, is a fact, although "how it happened is open to debate."

"There is not an inevitable conflict between Christianity and science. The apparent conflict between Christian and Islamic fundamentalists and scientists is just that. It is a conflict between (some of) the purveyors of science and religion," he said.

"I am not here as a missionary," he told the audience. "Life is far too complicated to take it all in in one evening.

"Let me be bold and provoke you slightly," he then said, and proceeded to list what he called "three prejudices" against evolution.

First, some react negatively because "Darwin tied us into the (evolutionary) process. As you take man back through time, (and back to earlier, pre-human forms) what happens to the anthropomorphic deity?"

Event creates 'special' feeling for handicapped, volunteers

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Thick, gray clouds hovered over the crowd who gathered in the stands and on the field of Midland Memorial Stadium early Friday morning.

But the threat of rain could dampen neither the spirits nor the enthusiasm that glowed from the more than 200 handicapped children and volunteers who took part in the sixth annual Special Olympics Field Day.

The expression on their faces told the story.

The determination, the laughter and the tears created a "special" feeling that everyone gets, though it defied definition.

What was so "special" about the track and field event was not so much the youngsters who competed. It was equally as special for those parents who watched their children take part and those volunteers who cheered and consoled and cried.

They all were champions — from those wearing the blue ribbons which meant first place to the green ribbons which signified the volunteers.

The businessmen, parents of athletes and other interested individuals who waited at the finish line with outstretched arms worked as timers, starters, coaches and "buddies."

MISD special education teachers acted as coaches for their class teams. The competitors also constructed colorful banners to decorate the stand in honor of their respective teams.

The hugs also were plentiful.

"If anything else, the hugs are important," Julia Roper, a volunteer with the Opportunity Center Auxiliary, said. "Everybody needs a hug.

"This is not a temporary thing," Mrs. Roper said. "These kids will always need help. I'm a mother and grandmother. That's why I'm here."

Patterned after the "other" games, the Special Olympics began in 1968 with a national meet for 1,000 children. Originally sponsored by the Kennedy Foundation and the Chicago Park District, it has since acquired other sponsors across the United States and several foreign countries.

As in the "other" Olympics, the youngsters started off the day with a parade of athletes. Then the races began as the competitors poured out every bit of physical strength and willpower he or she could muster.

This year the local spring track and field event, sponsored by the Midland Association of Retarded Citizens and the Midland Independent School District, featured running, relays, a softball throw, long jump and wheelchair races. Winners will go on to compete in meets at Monahans and Austin.

"If you've got a kid who needs an event, we'll find one for him, said Ray Unterbrink, MARC executive director.

"To coin an old cliche, even the most severely retarded kid is able to enjoy the thrill of victory or the agony of defeat," he said.

LEAKEY

Second, "some people were, and still are, deeply offended that there is Africa in all of us," i.e. that the earliest remains of proto-humans, or hominids, have been found in the so-called "Dark Continent." As Leakey put it, "Caucasians can be forgetful and arrogant."

Finally, most people would like to believe Homo sapiens is the pinnacle of the evolutionary process. But "we are the result of events and processes," Leakey said. "We too can become extinct."

Leakey stressed the importance of environment in shaping the development of humanity. Twenty million years ago a sea-level equatorial forest stretched across central Africa from coast to coast. Then, about 5 million years later, east Africa was pushed up by volcanic activity. Forests gave way to open savanna. Primates living in the forests had the opportunity to adapt to a new ecology.

One of the ways these primates adapted, according to Leakey, was by developing bipedal locomotion — they walked on two legs instead of four. This freed their hands for other activities, such as making and using tools. Also, it indirectly may have led to the development of larger brains.

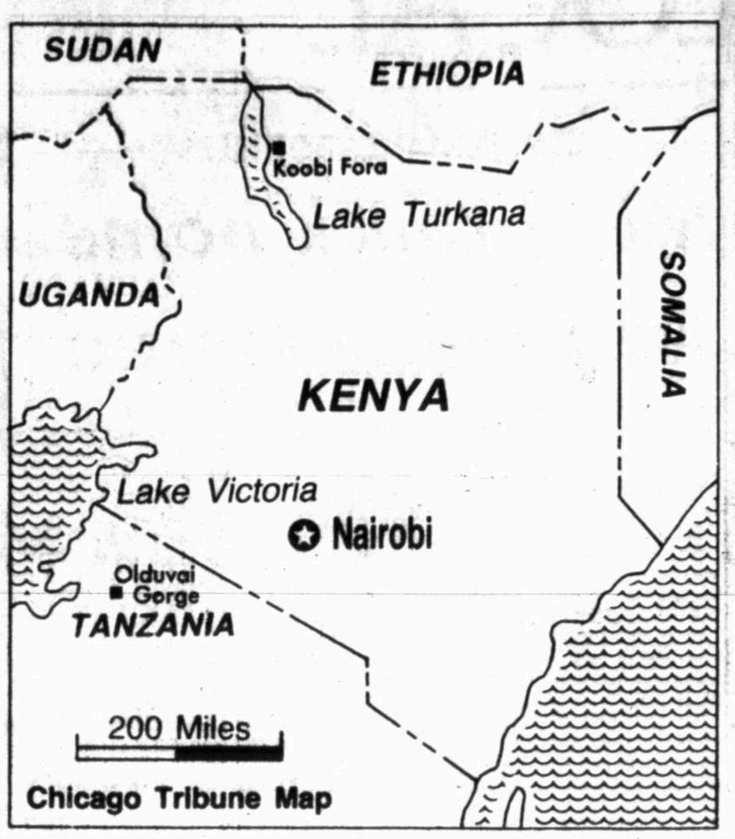

But bipedalism proved expensive in terms of the energy expended. It takes twice as much energy to walk about on two legs as it does on four. And food resources were more widely scattered in the savanna than in the forests.

The still-hairy primates were faced with the problem of regulating their bodies' temperatures, Leakey said. They were burning twice as much energy and covering perhaps five times as much ground in search of food as they had done in the forest.

Leakey speculated these protohumans may have lost their fur about this time. It was no longer needed to keep them warm. But it also left them relatively unprotected from the sun's ultraviolet rays.

To compensate for this, the primates may have built up the pigment in their skin. Leakey said it is likely that humanity began, to paraphrase Desmond Morris, as a "dark naked ape."

Leakey's most recent work, begun in 1982, has been on the western shore of Lake Turkana, across the lake from Koobi Fora, first excavated in 1968.

Last year, on the very day he was ready to move his camp to a new site, a Kenyan associate of Leakey's found a tiny piece of hominid skull. At first Leakey was inclined to ignore it, but as his associate said, "One hominid skull will excite people in America," especially for fund-raising purposes.

Further excavation revealed more pieces of skull, and resulted in the discovery of the first example of a Homo erectus face. Thus "prospects of fund raising were greatly improved."

Eventually Leakey and his crew recovered the first virtually complete Homo erectus skeleton ever found. Only the left arm and both feet and hands were missing. But the excavation is still incomplete and Leakey hopes to uncover the missing pieces this year.

The fossilized skeleton was not intentionally buried; it washed into the prehistoric lake and was covered by layers of sediment. Relatively recent erosion had exposed parts of it.

It has been identified as the skeleton of a young boy, perhaps 12 years old, who lived approximately 1.5 million years ago.

Leakey has expressed strong opinions on the importance of keeping African fossils in Africa, rather than allowing researchers to ship them off to other nations for study.

In January 1969, Leakey, who was working for the Kenyan government, placed a moratorium on fossil remains leaving the country. Initially many foreign scientists were miffed; they claimed the moratorium would only curtail research in Kenya.

But Leakey insisted that those who wanted to do research could build facilities in Kenya to analyze their data.

"Now people bring fossils (from other countries) to Kenya to be studied," he said proudly.

San Antonio sees hotel move from its home of 79 years

By SHEILA ALLEE
Associated Press Writer

SAN ANTONIO — Work crews Saturday muscled the 3.2 million pound Fairmount Hotel off its resting place for the past 79 years and heaved it 200 feet down the street.

"I let out a big holler," co-owner Tom Wright said of his reaction when the three-story hotel made its first move of about a foot.

"I just think it's the most exciting thing I've seen in ages," he said.

Wright and his two partners plan to make a luxury hotel out of the brick structure once it reaches its new home four blocks away.

City Public Works Director Frank Kiolbassa said the move is on schedule and should be completed in four days as planned.

Kiolbassa said the structure, resting on 36 hydraulic-powered dollies and layers of steel crossbeams, suffered no damage in the first day of the move and there were no injuries among the work crew. Streets and utility poles and lines also were unscathed, he said.

Workers used two cranes, seven gravel-laden dump trucks for dead weight, and giant pulleys and cables to wrestle the Fairmount off the corner of Commerce and Bowie streets.

Kiolbassa said he feels confident the hotel will be able to negotiate a turn Sunday and will successfully cross a bridge over the San Antonio River later in the day.

He said the bridge is being shored up and covered with steel plates to reinforce it.

The hotel, which must be moved to make room for a new downtown mall, was built in 1906. It was last occupied by a furniture company but has been vacant since 1968, Wright said.

Wright said he paid $10 for the building. The move, engineered by Emmert International of Portland, Ore., is expected to cost $1 million. An additional $4 million will be spent on refurbishment.

Bebe Inkley, president of the San Antonio Conservation Society, said the structure has never been altered inside since it was constructed.

"That's what makes it so wonderful," she said.

Police blocked off streets and held about 1,000 spectators at bay a block away all day.

When the hotel made its first move, the crowd cheered its approval.

Workers at first tried unsuccessfully four times to budge the hotel. After making some adjustments in the dollies and cables and adding two cranes, the structure inched off its resting place.

Kiolbassa said drivers raced the engines and held on the brakes on the dump trucks, weighing about 12,000 pounds each.

The trucks were lined up in two rows and were tied together with cable. Huge pulleys were attached to the trucks and to cables wrapped around the hotel. The cranes did the actual pulling.

Kiolbassa said officials are certain their engineering strategy is on target and the building, braced inside and out, will arrive at its new home intact.

Midland police investigating burglaries

From Staff Reports

A Midland man reported the loss of items worth more than $44,000 in a Friday burglary of his home, according to police reports.

Tino Quiroz, 1213 E. Hamby, told police someone entered his home and took a $25,000 diamond pendant, $10,000 in Mexican pesos, a $3,000 watch, a $3,000 necklace, $2,000 in U.S. currency, $1,000 in U.S. silver certificates, and various other items for a total loss of $44,670.

Tall City Fasteners, 2700 W. Front, reported the loss of $388.94 from its cash register during a Friday night burglary, reports said. An employee arrived at work about 8 a.m. Saturday and found the register on the floor and the money missing. Damage to the register was $200, according to reports.

Jill McDaniel, 2607 Mark, reported a burglary which took place between 6:50 and 9 p.m. Friday. Missing were a $200 tool box, a $100 television converter box and a $50 brass pot with a flower arrangement, for a total loss of $350, according to reports.

Two held in assaults on police officers

Two Midlanders were arrested for aggravated assault on a police officer in two separate incidents Saturday morning, both of which occurred about 2 a.m., according to police reports.

A 47-year-old Midland woman had been arrested for public intoxication at Harrigan's, 418 W. Wadley, and was being booked at the police station, 404 E. Texas, when she became violent, reports said. When two officers attempted to carry the woman upstairs to the jail, she bit one of them on the forearm, breaking his skin.

About the same time, a 26-year-old Midland man was arrested for public intoxication at the Front Wheel Tavern, 3305 W. Front. After being placed in a police car, the man became violent and began kicking the car radio, reports said. When an officer attempted to subdue the man, he repeatedly kicked the officer in the face.

People of our community who make a difference.

Anelle Mack

With over 210 working members and 144 contributing members, Midland Memorial Hospital Auxiliary is one of Midland's largest and most active volunteer organizations, according to auxiliary president Anelle Mack. Many hours of service are contributed and thousands of dollars are raised each year by dedicated volunteers like Mrs. Mack.

Like many auxilians Mrs. Mack says, "My week is not complete without spending time at the hospital helping other people." And so it has been since the Mack family was transferred to Midland in 1975. This former home economics teacher decided that it was time to become involved in volunteer work, and her interest in the medical field lead her to join the Midland Memorial Hospital Auxiliary.

This compassionate volunteer soon discovered that the auxiliary serves Midlanders in many ways. She explains that some volunteers operate the gift shop, while others are receptionists in the surgery and ICU waiting rooms. Still others help in physical therapy or at the Allison Cancer Center. A refreshment cart is taken around to all the patients twice a day by auxiliary members. Even pre-operative tours for children are lead by this group of volunteers. The list goes on and on, totaling to 30,000 hours of volunteer work in 1984. Mrs. Mack says she spends her volunteer hours in the surgery office, recording and delivering surgery schedules.

One year Mrs. Mack served as vice president of the organization and for two years she was the auxiliary's scholarship chairman. She points out that the awarding of four 4-year nursing scholarships each year is an important ongoing project.

As this year's president, Mrs. Mack is excited to be able to point out that the auxiliary was able to donate $96,000 in equipment last year and has already purchased a $40,000 piece of mammogram equipment this year. This is possible, she says, because "Midland is blessed with many people who can volunteer." In fact, at one time Midland Memorial Hospital Auxiliary had a waiting list of volunteers.

Though Mrs. Mack is deeply commited to the auxiliary, she still finds time for American Association of University Women, Hogan Park Golf Association, Midland Panhellenic, and Petroleum Engineers Wives Club. In addition, she is serving on the Board of Administration and the Steering Committee at the First Methodist Church.

Concern and day-to-day commitment are why Anelle Mack makes a difference in Midland.

Martin has served as a past trustee or director of: Museum of the Southwest, Salvation Army, United Wy and Petroleum Club of Midland. He serves as governor of the Midland Memorial Hospital Foundation, commissioner for Midland Centennial and trustee of the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum.

Martin earned his law degree from the University of Texas. He and his wife, Patricia, have raised three children.

Each week until July 4, two Centennial Citizens will be chosen from the people nominated. Selection is an on-going process. The two weekly winners will be announced on KCRS radio. The winners will receive a rare copy of the book "Land of the High Sky."

On July 4 at the CentennialFest, one of the 40 Centennial Citizens' names will be drawn from a hat and that person will win a trip from Midland to the Midlands of England.

The Centennial Commission is asking that people please get their nominees in early so those names will have the best chance to be honored as Midland's Centennial Citizen. Please send an entry blank with a list of the person's contributions to Centennial Citizen, P.O. Box 1985, Midland, Texas, 79702. Entries are available at the Centennial Office, 109 N. Main St., Chamber of Commerce building, ground level.

County Commissioners to gather Monday to discuss jail problems

Midland County Commissioners in their 9 a.m. Monday meeting in the courthouse will discuss how they will resolve jail problems and comply with mandates ordered last Wednesday in Austin by the Texas Commission on Jail Standards.

The state agency has ordered the county commissioners to correct Jail Commission-cited flaws within 60 days and to make long-range plans. Those plans could include the calling of a bond election to finance the renovation of the 1973-built jail and to build a new jail and courthouse facilities.

The Jail Commission's remedial order also limited the jail's population to 85 inmates. Any inmates beyond that number are to be jailed elsewhere at the county's expense.

Two years ago, the commissioners called a bond election to finance an $11.69 million courthouse addition, jail and courthouse renovation, but that issue was defeated at the voting polls by a vote of 4-to-1.

Earlier this year, the commissioners had planned to issue $9.9 million in certificates of obligation to finance a new jail east of town. But a citizens group, the Committee of Concerned Voters, petitioned that the proposal be submitted to a vote of the people. The commissioners ordered an election for Feb. 3. Subsequently, however, the commissioners called off the election after the committee requested a postponement to give time to inform the voters on issues affecting the jail.

Afterward, at the commissioners' request and that of the citizens group, the Midland Chamber of Commerce set up a Midland County Jail Task Force to study the jail issues.

The Task Force recommended the jail be brought up to standards, even if that temporary solution called for a bond election, and a long-range feasibility study be made on building a new jail and courthouse facilities at a common location. The 11-member Task Force, chaired by Midland banker Wayne Merritt, also encouraged a joint city-county venture due to "overlapping jail and other services."

The Midland County Courthouse was built in 1929-30 and was renovated in the early 1970s under a $1.95 million bond election. That renovation included the building of a new jail as the added fifth floor of the courthouse. The original fourth floor, formerly the old jail, was converted to space for the courts and district attorney's offices.

Guard relieved of duty after ordering sign

CONROE, Texas (AP) — A state prison guard was relieved of duty after authorities learned he asked the prison sign shop to make a sign with the name of an alleged house of prostitution, a prison spokesman said.

The guard, who was not identified, asked the shop to make a sign reading "Hot Tub Club," Texas Department of Corrections spokesman Phil Guthrie said Friday.

The officer was not charged, but was relieved of duty following an investigation into the club that resulted in seven indictments last week, Guthrie said.

Named in the indictments was former New Jersey mobster Raymond Carl Freda Sr., 51, who is accused of operating the a prostitution business from his prison cell.

House passes bill on FDIC bond exemption

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — A bill by Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland, to exempt the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. from having to file a bond in lawsuits has been passed by the Texas House of Representatives without debate.

Craddick's House Bill 685 provides that the FDIC isn't required to file a bond in actions "in its capacity as receiver or in its corporate capacity."

Current law exempts other state and federal agencies, including the Federal Housing Administration and National Mortgage Administration, from such requirements.

The measure had been approved on second reading Wednesday on voice vote. HB 865 now goes to the Texas Senate for consideration.

Craddick bill sent to House

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Legislation by Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland, relating to leasing land owned or controlled by the Department of Highways and Public Transportation has been approved by the House Energy Committee and sent to the House.

HB 918 amends current law regarding leasing of such land for oil and gas development, distinguishing between leases in producing and non-producing areas, and providing a preferential right for mineral owners in tracts adjoining state lands.

Such mineral owners would be given the first leasing opportunity.

Other provisions of the bill deal with pooling, royalties and leasing procedures.

The Midland Exchange Club selected Sharon Holman, co-founder of Hospice of Midland Inc., as the recipient of its annual Good Deeds Award Thursday evening, the club announced.

Ms. Holman became dedicated to starting a Hospice organization in Midland after hearing about the "hospice movement" during a church service at Episcopal Church of the Holy Trinity.

She traveled to Europe and visited two hospices in London in 1979. Upon returning to Midland, she wrote the National Hospice Organization for information.

In February 1980, Ms. Holman chaired a 12-member steering committee to help determine what kind of hospice would best suit Midland and to guide its development.

Hiring for the newly-planned organization which helps people suffering from a terminal illness cope with the final months of their lives, began in January 1981. By October of that year, Hospice of Midland Inc. was licensed as a home health care agency.

Ms. Holman served as president of the Hospice board for two years and then served on the Board of Directors for the Texas State Hospice Organization.

Closet Case or Closet Space

Avalanchephobia (av'a-lanch'a-fo-be-a): n. An acute fear of getting something into or out of the closet, caused by families who've outgrown their living space.

It's not an unusual disorder but it's easy to cure. The prescription is a Home Improvement loan from Petroplex Savings.

With a Petroplex Savings Home Improvement loan you can add more closets, an extra room or even convert existing space to something more usable. It can dramatically increase the value and versatility of your home, and prevent your closet space from turning you into a "closet case."

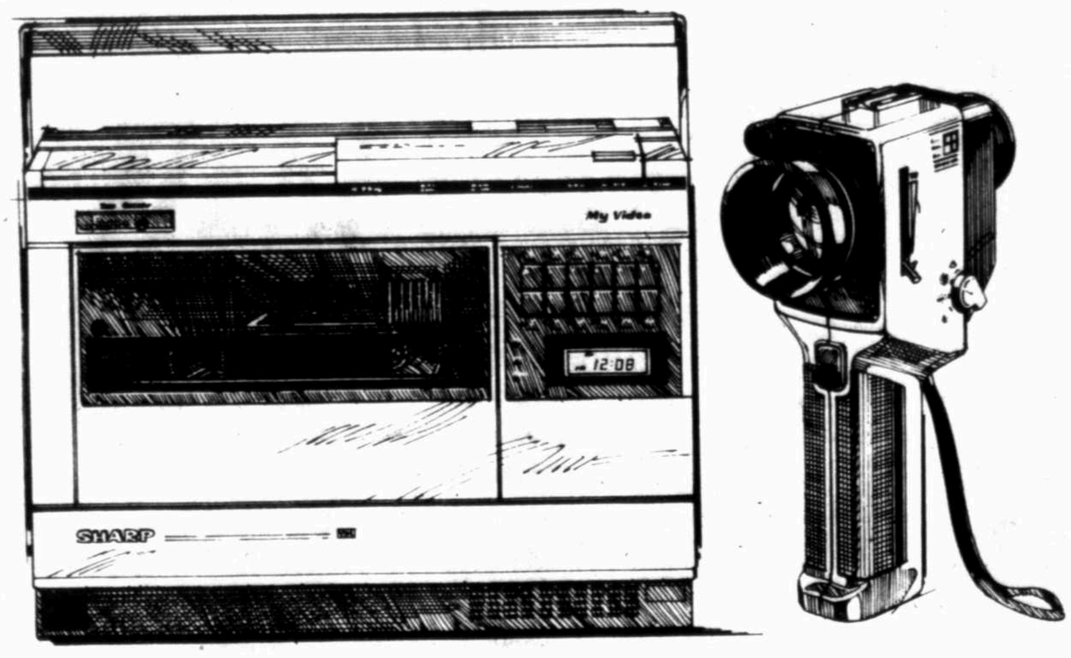

For understanding and expert guidance, call or come by the Personal Loan Department of Petroplex Savings.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

Fire Technology can see its effect in EMT tests

Sometimes it's hard to measure excellence, but some of the programs at Midland College are able to get immediate feedback on their effectiveness.

One such program is instructor John Davidson's Fire Technology program, which includes training firemen to become Emergency Medical Technicians. John's 1984 fall semester EMT students had a 100 percent pass rate on their December EMT Basic Test.

The college is looking for runners. No, we're not starting a varsity track program. These are runners to compete in the MC Roadrunner '85 event. Slated for Saturday, April 20, Roadrunner '85 will have a one-mile run for children 12 and under. For other folks, there are going to be both a two-miler and a 10-kilometer run.

Entry blanks are available at the MC athletic office in the PE building or you can call 684-7851, extension 160 or 127, and they'll send you entry forms. Entry fees are $7 in advance or $9 on race day.

Proceeds from the run go to the college cheerleaders' fund and the PE program.

If you like the "big band" sounds, you'll really enjoy the concert planned by the MC Community Jazz Ensemble. They are playing a free concert at 8 p.m. Wednsday in the Allison Fine Arts building auditorium that will include a wide assortment of tunes, as old as the "12th Street Rag" and as new as the theme from "New York, New York" and "A Tribute to Stevie Wonder."

Dr. Don Grant directs the Jazz Ensemble.

It's another busy week for the Chaparral tennis teams, who are playing two conference matches this week. They host Odessa College men's and women's teams at 2 p.m. Tuesday on the MC courts. Friday, the men's team will be in Roswell for matches with New Mexico Military Institute.

And the Chap men's golf team plays a conference tournament in Roswell Friday hosted by NMMI.

Midland College is going to be closed Friday, April 5, and Monday, April 8, for Easter. All offices will be closed those two days.

This is being written immediately after returning from Hutchinson, Kan., where the Chap Basketball team advanced to the NJCAA National Tournament semi-finals before losing to the eventual champions. MC finished the tourney by taking fourth place, which isn't too shabby for a team that wasn't ranked all year, but managed to win the conference and regional crowns, plus the bi-regional play-off game.

For the fourth time in five years, the Chaps won 30 games or more and that's quite an accomplishment.

Congratulations to the winners of the college's annual Creative Writing Contest, who received their awards last week. Mike McAlister won first in poetry, Rhonda Rigenhagen took first in essay, and Anne Swindig was first in short story. Anne also took the second place award in the same category.

The judges had their work cut out for them as there were 118 poetry entries, 19 in short story, and 16 in essay...and that's a lot of reading.

Don't wait too long to purchase your tickets for the "Sesame Street Live" presentation at Chaparral Center April 26, 27, and 28. Tickets may be purchased at the Chap center box office or Sears stores in Midland or Odessa. It should be a delightful occasion for the children, or those who have watched Sesame Street on television all these years.

"We believe you should vote for Manuel Carrasco for Councilman, at large... Here's a few good reasons why."

- He's a proven civic leader.
- He's an experienced administrator.
- He's a successful self employed businessman.
- He's lived most of his life in Midland.
- He's for getting the most out of our tax dollar and improving cooperation among taxing entities.

"We all have worked closely with Manuel Carrasco over the years . . . in our public schools, the United Way, Chamber of Commerce, Permian Basin Girl Scouts and many other community organizations. He has shown himself to be a man who thinks clearly, prepares for the business at hand, speaks his mind, and displays a welcome sense of humor.

"In short, he's the sort of person we believe should be allowed the privilege to serve on the Midland City Council."

"You will have two choices from among the candidates who are running at large. The two candidates receiving the most votes are elected by plurality — there will be no run-off. Also you will select a candidate from your single member district if that seat is up for election this year."

"Manuel tells us he has the keen interest and desire to serve all of Midland, and is willing to devote the time. We are confident of his honesty, fairness and good judgment, and urge you to join us in casting one of your 'At Large' votes for Manuel Carrasco."

Vote for Manuel Carrasco on Saturday, April 6.

Bus crash injures 23

AMARILLO (AP) — Authorities say a collision between two buses sent 23 students and a bus driver to Northwest Texas Hospital with apparently minor injuries.

All were treated at Amarillo Emergency Receiving Center, many for bruises and contusions, and released following Friday's accident, said Connie Mourer, a nursing supervisor at Northwest Texas Hospital.

The Texas Department of Public Safety said a Canyon Independent School District bus struck another CISD bus on the Claude Highway about eight miles south of Amarillo.

Officials said many students riding in the buses were from Southeast Amarillo and the Lake Tanglewood area near Canyon. The vehicles were traveling from Valley View Junior High and Sundown Lane Elementary schools when the acccident occurred at 3:45 p.m.

Most children suffered only bumps and bruises in the accident. Wayne Beighle, DPS information officer, said driver David Barrera, 18, was trailing a bus driven by James Scott.

Apply petal fall sprays now

AGRICULTURE

Most fruit trees in the area are either in bloom or through blooming, so fruit growers are reminded that they need to apply their petal fall sprays for insect and disease damage prevention. Diazinon, Zolone or Malathion should be used for the insects. Fungicides should be used for the disease problems which have occurred in past years.

• • •

Wheat acreage is increasing in our area and across the state. With this increase, we can expect to see more pest problems ocurring on wheat. Greenbugs are probably the major insect pest of wheat in Texas. Populations of greenbugs are building at the present time. Greenbugs are small green aphids that feed in the crowns, leaf blades and leaf collars of wheat. Greenbugs can be distinguished from other aphids in wheat by having a dark green stripe down the back. If wheat starts turning yellow, chances are good green bugs are involved. Normally, greenbug damage shows up in spots in fields. Parathion, Cygon and Di-Syston are effective in controlling greenbugs.

• • •

White grubs can be devastating to gardens. Look for white grubs when you prepare your garden soil for planting. If you find more than 1 grub per square foot, use Vapam soil fumigant prior to planting. Vapam will kill any living vegetation, so do not apply it under the drip lines of trees or shrubs. Vapam can be either water sealed or used and then covered with an airtight tarp. It will not only kill white grubs, but also nematodes, weed seeds, fungi and other insect pests.

• • •

The Euonymus plants are almost in full leaf again after loosing all their old winter damaged foliage. Powdery mildew infection is not yet evident on the leaves. Now is the time to start spraying to stay ahead of this fungus. The new material for powdery mildew control is funginex. The homeowner can find this material in Ortho's Funginex Rose Disease Control. There are other species on the label in addition to roses and euonymus is one of them.

It will not be long before many ranchers will begin to think about spraying mesquite. Due to excellent rain and snow received across the area this fall and winter, it appears 1985 will be a good year for mesquite control.

Due to the fact that 2,4,5-T is no longer manufactured in this country, many ranchers may have questions concerning the proper herbicide to use. If a rancher has 2,4,5-T stockpiled, he may use this herbicide as before. Unfortunately, most of our ranchers will not have access to 2,4,5-T.

For 1985, the herbicide options for mesquite control are as follows: Dicamba (Banvel) can be used at a rate of 0.5 pounds A.I./acre. This treatment will produce results generally equal to, or slightly better, than 2,4,5-T alone and will cost approximately $6.25 per acre for the chemical.

Farm commodity prices sagging to 17-month low

WASHINGTON (AP) — Farm commodity prices, which appeared frozen most of the winter, thawed in March and sagged to their lowest level in almost a year and a half.

The Agriculture Department said Friday that the farm price index in March averaged 0.7 percent below the February level. The index also was down 7.6 percent from a year ago.

According to department records, the March index was the lowest since October 1983. The index had last declined in December 1984 and then remained unchanged in January and February.

The index, bolstered by 1983's short crops and rising grain prices, rose to a record level in April 1984. But prices started to ease downward as prospects improved for last year's harvests. The index in August began a five-month slide, leveling off during the winter.

In March, the report said, lower prices for hogs, cattle, oranges, milk and wheat were mostly responsible for the decline in the index. Higher prices for tomatoes, eggs, cotton, potatoes and sorghum helped offset the drop of other commodities.

GENE ABBOTT for Director
Midland County Hospital
District

Qualifications:

- A resident of Midland for 33 years.
- A businessman for 30 years: Abbott Building Company and Abbott Development Company.
- Trustee of Midland Memorial Hospital Foundation for 8 years, two years as Chairman.
- Chairman of the Midland Housing Authority.
- Director of Western Bank.
- Licensed real estate broker.
- Previously active as a director in the Midland Chamber of Commerce, Junior Achievement of Midland and the American Heart Association.

To The Concerned Voter:

Midlanders are very fortunate to have a medical facility such as Midland Memorial Hospital; we can be justly proud of the caliber of health care available there. We are, however, being faced with many challenges brought about by rapidly-occuring changes in the industry, not the least of which are inflation, government influences and regulation.

If I am elected as a director of the Midland County Hospital District, I will continue to encourage and influence the fulfillment of the primary mission of Midland Memorial Hospital: to provide high quality medical and surgical care to the residents of Midland County at the lowest cost consistent with that quality.

I will be grateful for your vote and support in this endeavor.

Rainfall delaying spring planting in much of Texas

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Spring planting is continuing to make slow progress over Texas due to rain delays, says Dr. Zerle L. Carpenter, director of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

Planting of corn and sorghum is well behind schedule in coastal counties and in parts of central, south central and southeast Texas, Carpenter said in his weekly report on Texas crops.

Only 30 to 40 percent of the corn and sorghum acreage has been planted in the Coastal Bend area while plantings lag even further behind in the Upper Coast region. However, corn and sorghum planting is generally complete in South and Southwest Texas.

Fields in eastern counties also are soggy from continued rains, so spring planting of vegetables and field crops has been limited. Some seed potatoes have rotted after planting, noted Carpenter.

In western areas and in the plains, farmers are continuing with land preparations for spring planting although scattered rains have also caused some delays, particularly in the Rolling Plains.

Soil temperatures at the 4-inch depth averaged steady to lower the past week due to cooler weather. Readings from the National Weather Service's Agricultural Weather Service Center at Texas A&M University were as follows: Austin, 59 degrees F.; Beaumont, 65; Beeville, 65; Big Spring, 55; Bushland, 50; College Station, 61; Dell City, 59; Dilley, 69; Eagle Lake, 63; Haskell, 59; Lavon Dam (near Dallas), 59; Longview, 62; Lubbock, 54; Lufkin, 59; Pecos, 56; San Angelo, 59; Stephenville, 61; Uvalde, 66; and Waco, 58.

Minimum soil temperatures recommended by the Extension Service for planting to insure good seed germination are 50 degrees F. for corn, 55 for sorghum and 65 for cotton.

Carpenter noted that small grain crops are continuing to make good progress over the state, with wheat prospects excellent. However, leaf rust is threatening the crop in many areas, and some farmers have started spraying with a fungicide to prevent serious losses from the fungus disease.

Fruit trees are in various stages of bloom over the state, and buds are starting to break on pecan trees in southern and eastern counties, Carpenter

Reports from district Extension directors showed these conditions.

PANHANDLE: Rainy conditions have hampered spring land preparation, but the moisture has boosted dryland wheat. Most wheat is making excellent progress. The rains also caused some delays in planting sugar beets and potatoes. Cattle and range conditions are improving.

SOUTH PLAINS: Farmers are busy with preparations for spring planting although recent rains have caused some delays. Wheat continues to look good, with recent moisture helping the dryland crop. Sugar beets and potatoes are being planted as weather conditions permit.

ROLLING PLAINS: Wet fields are continuing to hamper land preparations in some locations, particularly in areas with heavier soils. Wheat is making rapid growth along with alfalfa. Livestock conditions continue to improve, with calving and lambing active.

NORTH CENTRAL: Corn planting is complete, with some fields up to good stands. Sorghum planting continues as weather conditions permit. Wheat and oats are making good growth. Cattle are getting good grazing on ryegrass and small grains. Calving is in full swing.

NORTHEAST: Soggy fields have kept land preparation and planting at a standstill. In some locations, seed potatoes have rotted after planting. Small grains are making good growth and permanent pastures are showing improved growth.

FAR WEST: Farmers are continuing with land preparations for spring planting. Most onions have been planted, and cantaloupe planting is about to start. Livestock conditions are continuing to improve although lice and hornflies are increasing.

WEST CENTRAL: Moisture conditions remain good wih recent rains. Field preparations continue for spring planting. Wheat and oats are looking good, and pastures and ranges are improving. Cattle and sheep markets are up considerably. Gardeners are planting early spring vegetables.

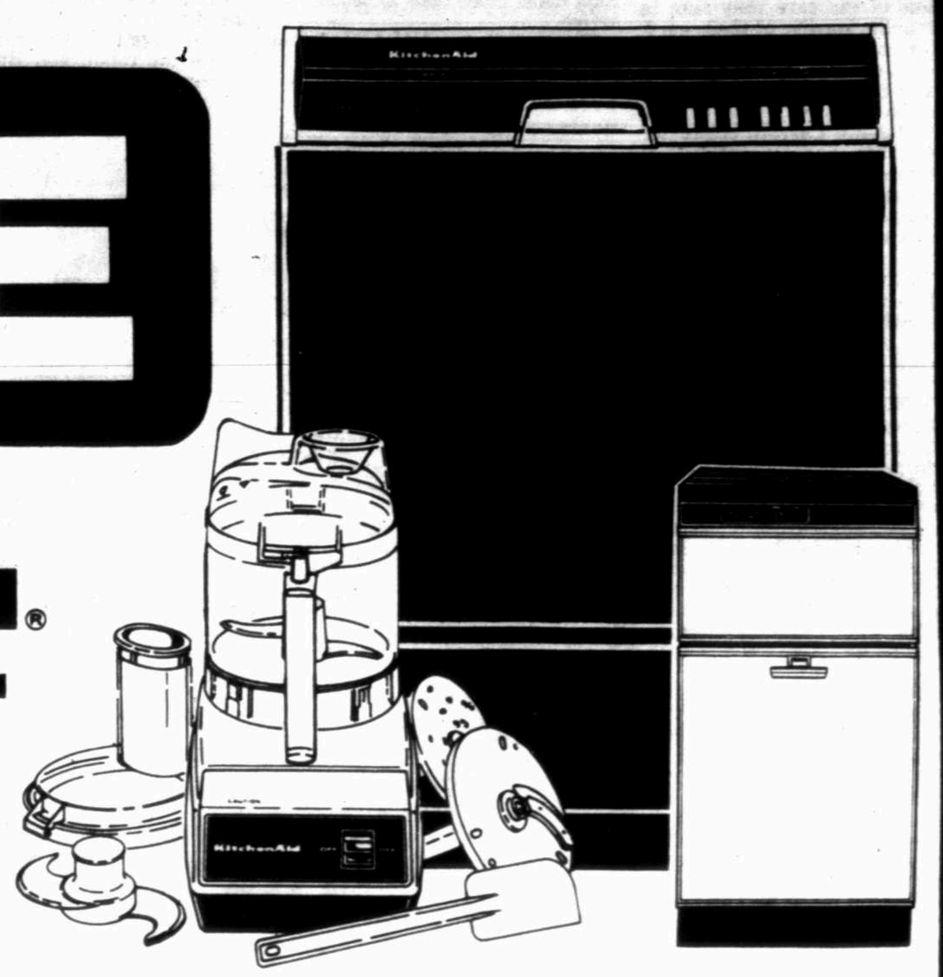

CENTRAL: Farmers are waiting for fields to dry to continue planting corn and sorghum. Some early planted fields are up to good stands. Wheat prospects remain good although leaf rust disease is posing a threat. Most wheat is in the boot stage. Buds are starting to break on pecan trees.

EAST: Some corn and vegetables have been planted, but wet fields are causing delays.

Reagans still among nation's best-groomed

NEW YORK (AP) — President Reagan and his wife Nancy and television star Johnny Carson made repeat appearances on the list of the nine best-groomed Americans released Saturday by the Neighborhood Cleaners' Association.

The nine on the second annual best-groomed list were chosen by a congress of dry cleaner operators on the basis of the care they take in choosing the "quality of their wardrobe," the organization said.

The six others on the list were actors Ricardo Montalban, Tom Selleck and Billy Dee Williams; singer Diahann Carroll, conductor Zubin Mehta, and journalist Barbara Walters.

The association is asking customers to come up with a 10th name for the list in a mail-in campaign.

LONDON (AP) — Gilbert O'Sullivan, the 1970s pop star, has won almost $2.5 million in a settlement with his former managers after a long court battle, the managers said.

Management Agency and Music said Friday that it settled with O'Sullivan because prolonging the dispute "could only have been damaging to the interests of the company and its shareholders."

O'Sullivan, 38, wrote and sang the hit songs "Claire" and "Alone Again." His career faded amid legal battles with MAM over royalty payments. The musician told the courts he signed "unreasonable" contracts when he was inexperienced in finance.

GLENS FALLS, N.Y. (AP) — Workers at a video store in this upstate city got a surprise when they realized that the customer in the high-heeled boots was rock star Prince.

Prince was on a chartered bus en route to Syracuse, N.Y., Friday for a concert appearance there on Saturday night when he and his entourage stopped at Audio Genesis Video Center, according to WGY radio in Schenectady.

"We sometimes get different-looking people in our store, and we really don't think much of it anymore," store employee Terry Ryan told the station. "And in walks this woman with a really nice fur coat on, and nice high-heeled boots, and then in comes a man with high-heeled boots.

"And the girl I work with said, 'Boy, look at those ugly boots.' And I worked my way up from the boots, and voila, it was Prince."

Prince purchased copies of the movie comedy "Top Secret" and the classic film "Mutiny on the Bounty."

NEW YORK (AP) — Playwright Arthur Miller, just back from a visit to Turkey, says continuing U.S. aid to that country without pushing for democracy risks the creation of another turbulent nation like Iran.

"I don't see why we should have to beg them to respect the most elemental human rights," he said. "We're coming to represent repression to the Turks, and that's not something we want at all.

"We'll be right back to where we were in Iran...we are playing with dynamite," the Pulitzer Prize-winner said in an interview Thursday night.

Miller spent five days in Turkey with British playwright Harold Pinter. The pair, visiting the country under the auspices of the international writers' group PEN, met with 70 writers, artists, academics and ex-politicians.

Miller, 69, said Americans are "the paymasters of that regime," with aid last year totalling $875 million.

NEW YORK (AP) — A state appeals court has rejected a $1.8 million lawsuit against ballet star Mikhail Baryshnikov by a former manager and ordered her to repay $11,000 he loaned her.

Remi Saunder claimed that Baryshnikov had promised to take care of her for the rest of her life when she was his general manager and consultant. She had sought $800,000 for the help she provided him and $1 million for future support.

But the Appellate Division of state Supreme Court ruled Friday there was no evidence he ever promised to take care of the woman, who Baryshnikov described as his "appointments and private secretary." She was fired in 1981.

The court said that regardless of her title, Baryshnikov had paid Ms. Saunder sufficiently with money, free loans, trips to Europe and South America and two cars.

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Dr. Luther L. Terry, who as U.S. surgeon general in 1964 issued the first federal report linking smoking to heart disease and cancer, has died of heart failure. He was 73.

Terry died at Pennsylvania Hospital on Friday, relatives said Saturday.

Terry, appointed surgeon general by President John F. Kennedy in 1961, once described the U.S. Surgeon General's Report on Smoking and Health he issued in 1964 as "probably having the greatest impact of any government report ever issued."

In 1965, at Terry's urging, Congress required tobacco companies to stamp each pack of cigarettes with a warning that reads, "The surgeon general has determined that cigarette smoking is dangerous to your health."

Robot will be programmed to 'hold the pickles'

By BARBARA MILFORD
Associated Press Writer

HUNT VALLEY, Md. — A hamburger chain has cooked up an idea that goes far beyond a new sandwich or shake — a six-armed robot that prepares meals to order, takes money and makes change, even sweeps the floor and clears tables.

The robot's voice-activated eyes will look at customers when they order. And, wearing the chain's uniform and a smile, it will sing if the food takes more than 15 seconds to arrive.

This marriage of fast food and high tech will come within a year at a major burger chain outlet in New York City, according to Peter Hughes, creator of the automated hamburger helper and president of Hughes International Inc., which has offices in this Baltimore suburb and in London.

Hughes won't reveal which international restaurant chain will debut his robot, but he said it will be sometime between December and February in one of the chain's current midtown Manhattan outlets.

Hughes has been sworn to secrecy under threat of losing the contract.

"It's a very big publicity stunt," he said.

Four full-time designers will spend the next two to three months piecing together the technology to create the robot, and Hughes will oversee every step of the project at his plant. The prototype should be ready within four months.

"We have the technology," Hughes said in an interview this week. "It's only a matter of applying it."

The robot will scurry around the U-shaped restaurant on a track. Its arms extend six to eight feet in all directions and function independently.

Market research is under way to determine whether the robot's plastic face and synthesized voice should be male or female, but it's fairly certain both black and white versions of the robot will be produced.

Its mind is a computer programmed to detect overcooked hamburgers (and throw them away), scan floors and countertops for spills (and wipe them away), make change and take instruction from customers (such as, "no pickles") in the order in which they sit on chairs equipped with electronic sensors.

If it's Christmas time, the robot will sing carols. On Independence Day, the national anthem. At other times, the hamburger chain's advertising jingle.

All-Big East feast

Villanova expels interloper

By ROY S. JOHNSON
New York Times News Service

LEXINGTON, Ky. — If it wasn't already a brassy celebration of Big East basketball, it certainly is now. For Villanova, which tied for third in the conference in the regular season, eliminated the lone interloper, Memphis State, 52-45, Saturday afternoon to earn a berth in the national collegiate basketball championship final.

The victory set up an all Big East final with the Wildcats facing Georgetown, last year's champion, Monday night.

The Wildcats raised their record to 24-10 by defeating the favored Tigers (31-4) on the strength of their deceptive array of zone defenses and their unwavering poise, which was exemplified by three of their seniors who guided them through this unlikely journey — the center Ed Pinckney, Dwayne McClain at forward and the fiery point guard, Gary McLain.

That defense — a zone influenced by the principles of the man-to-man — held the Tigers to their lowest point total of the season, allowing them to shoot only 38 percent from the field on 19 of 50 shots, and keeping them virtually off the free-throw line. The Tigers took only nine shots from the free-throw line and made seven, while the Wildcats, whose game-plan, in part, was to attempt to take advantage of their foul-prone opponents, hit 20 of 26 of their free throws.

The difference was critical not only because of the scoring edge the Wildcats gained, but also because the Tigers lost Keith Lee, their leading-scorer and four-time all-American, on fouls. Plagued by fouls throughout the tournament, Lee was forced to watch the final 10 minutes 21 seconds of his collegiate career from the bench. After scoring only 10 points and making none of his seven rebounds in the second half, the lanky 6-foot-10-inch forward drew his fifth personal foul as he attempted to recover a ball that had slipped out of his hand on an attempted shot. He hit only three of his nine field-goal attempts in 23 minutes. "We wanted to take the ball to him as much as we could because when he's in the game he's an offensive threat," said Pinckney. "We tried to keep him out as long as we could."

"IT WAS worse today," said the Tiger forward, Baskerville Holmes, who also fouled out after scoring eight points and grabbing two rebounds. "They wouldn't let him play basketball. You haven't seen the real Keith Lee. You'll see him in the NBA."

Basketball fans, however, are seeing the McClain, McLain, and Pinckney that they have expected to see in action since the heralded group entered Villanova four years ago.

McClain, the 6-6 forward, scored on six of nine field-goal attempts and on all seven of his free throws to lead all scorers with 19 points. He scored six in the final 3:04 of the game when the Wildcats maintained their poise by rallying from a seven-minute scoring drought in which their 41-33 lead disappeared as the Tigers ran off eight straight points to tie at 41-all. The tying goal was made by the point guard, Andre Turner, on a rattling a 16-footer with 3:37 remaining in the game. The Wildcats recovered and outscored the frustrated Tigers by 11-4 before the final buzzer. Nine of the points came from the free-throw line.

Hoyas 'saxa' Redmen

By WILLIAM C. RHODEN
New York Times News Service

LEXINGTON, Ky. — Georgetown came a step closer Saturday evening to proving what many have said all along: The Hoyas are easily the best college basketball team in the country.

The Hoyas overcame a ragged first half and devoured St. John's, 77-59, to earn a berth for the second consecutive season the National Collegiate Athletic Association championship game.

Georgetown (35-2), the defending national champion and the No. 1-ranked team in the news-agency polls, will face Villanova (24-10) Monday night in a final pairing of Big East Conference teams. Georgetown beat Villanova twice in the regular season, 52-50 in overtime in Philadelphia, and 57-50 in Landover, Md.

Georgetown will be playing in the title game for the third time in four seasons. The Hoyas beat Houston last year, 84-75, and lost to North Carolina, 63-62, in 1982. That was the freshman season for Patrick Ewing, Georgetown's dominating 7-foot center.

St. John's was trying to make it to the championship game for the first time since 1952, when its only appearance ended in an 80-63 loss to Kansas. St. John's finished the season with a 31-4 record, the most victories ever for a Redmen team.

This was Georgetown's third victory in four games against St. John's this season and was by the largest margin. Reggie Williams led the Hoyas with 20 points, and Ewing added 16.

Willie Glass had 13 for St. John's while Bill Wennington and Walter Berry added 12 each. Chris Mullin, the Redmen's all-America guard who was averaging more than 20, was limited to eight.

The first half ended with Georgetown leading by 32-28 but with St. John's closing. In fact, Georgetown, which was forced into a half-court offense when St. John's shut off the fast break, was content to hold the ball in its last three possessions of the half. The strategy was necessary for several reasons.

Ewing had picked up three fouls and spent the last five minutes on the bench. In his absence, the Hoyas, who had started out the game shooting as if they would seldom miss on way to leads of 10-2, 16-5 and 20-10, suddenly went from an extraordinary team on a tear to a very good team having problems.

When Ewing left Georgetown was ahead by 30-26. He had picked up an offensive foul with 6:46 remaining, then had his pride wounded during Georgetown's next trip down the floor when Wennington, the Redmen's 7-0 senior center, took the ball, spun without hesitation and dunked over him. Eager to retaliate, Ewing tried to force up a shot, but the ball slipped out of his hands. Mullin then hit a jumper to make tie the score at 26.

So, with Ewing out and St. John's hitting the boards, the Hoyas decided to slow the pace with their spread offense. Reggie Williams drove in for a basket to break the tie, and Wennington, too eager to work on Ralph Dalton, Ewing's replacement, was called for traveling.

Lee captures San Angelo Relays with blazing finish

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

SAN ANGELO — With Rebel backs all but nailed to the proverbial wall, Midland Lee scored 45 points in the last three events of the day here Saturday afternoon to win the San Angelo Relays by one point over Bryan.

The Rebels ripped off victories in the 200 meters, 1600 and 1600 relay to beat the day's final gun and Bryan by a 125-124 whisker thin margin.

Despite some troubles along the way, it was a sweet victory for Lee coach Sam Volpe, who is in his 24th and final year as the head track coach.

"The two big meets we have outside of district are the West Texas Relays and the San Angelo Relays. We've won them both," said Volpe. "The kids faced some problems in this one, but they seem to perform well when things are seemingly going against them."

The problems in this one were many for the Rebels. It seemed as if they had to climb another mountian after each passing event. And when the final event finally rolled around, Lee was down by three points to Bryan and needing a 1600 relay victory to insure the meet title.

Brad Cooper, Craig Swearingen, Walter Jones and Marq Brackens took the worry out of being close with a 3:22.70 and an easy victory.

But it was the hurdles that the Rebels had to climb that made this title special. The Rebs scored only 10 points in the field events to dig an early hole for themselves.

Rebs remain undefeated

A strong pitching performance from Mike Small, backed by a 12-hit attack and solid defense lifted the Midland Lee Rebels to a 13-2 District 4-5A victory over Odessa High Saturday at Lee Field.

Small, who went the distance for the victory and a 5-1 season record, ran into trouble in the first inning when he gave up two hits and committed a crucial throwing error to give the Bronchos an early 2-0 lead.

From then on, he pitched as well as any coach could ask, allowing only three more hits and two walks while striking out eight.

Hark! Campbell belabors Radford, 38-0

BUIES CREEK, N.C. (AP) — Freshman Henry Rochelle collected three college baseball records at the expense of a beleaguered Radford pitching staff Saturday and Campbell romped to a 38-0 victory.

Rochelle was eight for eight, including five home runs and 23 total bases, all of which are NCAA individual records as Campbell scored at least one run in each inning.

"I guess it's one of those once-in-a-lifetime things," Rochelle said. "It's kind of hard for me to believe.

"I was expecting a lot of breaking balls after I hit the first couple of homers. The last two I hit out were curves," Rochelle said in a phone interview from his home in Jacksonville, N.C. "I was just looking for a base hit on all of them though."

Three players — Bob Ritchie of Nichols in 1965, Doug Higgens of Shepherd in 1978 and Terry Becker of Aurora in 1981 — all hit four homers in a single game. The home runs were the first of Rochelle's college career.

Rochelle also broke the record for hits in a game, breaking the record of seven set by Pat Bone of Florida International in 1981.

The freshman also smashed the record for total bases by a player. He broke Ritchie's record of 17 set in 1965.

"I've been on both ends of some blowouts, but I've never seen anything like this one," said Campbell head coach Cal Koonce, a former major league pitcher with the 1969 world champion New York Mets.

The Camels fell three runs short of setting a team record for the most lopsided shutout in NCAA history. Georgia Tech crushed Earlham 41-0 in 1975.

Suddenly savage 'Dogs bury Permian

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

ODESSA — The Midland High baseball team continued its impression of a District 4-5A contender Saturday by destroying Odessa Permian, 11-1, to roll to its second consecutive lopsided win.

The Bulldogs, now 3-3 in district, 9-7 overall, banged out 12 hits and were aided by eight Panther errors, and a few more games like Saturday's and MHS' "imposter" label will be stripped away.

The win went to Michael Gonzales, his fifth and first complete game in district play. Gonzales (1-2 in district, 5-4 overall) held the light-hitting Panthers (1-5, 3-10) to just four hits while walking two and striking out six. The righthander showed goood control of his curveball and threw it repeatedly in curcial situations.

"I relied on my curve a lot today because we had heard from teams around the league that Permian was not a good curve ball hitting team," Gonzales said. "If I have confidence in it, I'll throw it even when I'm behind. It also really helps when we have eight others out there to help out."

BUT, AS in Thursday's 18-1 romp over Odessa High, no one was left out of the fun.

"It really helps for us to get the bat on the ball, if we do that we've got a chance to be good," MHS coach Tim Whalen said. "For a while we were in a slump, we were up there waiting for a perfect pitch. Now they're up there swinging. It also helps for Mike (Gonzales) to go out there and throw strikes and not walk people."

The Bulldogs did put the bat on the ball, and Permian refused to field it cleanly. The Panthers, now owners of a four-game district losing streak, booted four ground balls, threw four others away, threw three wild pitches and allowed one passed ball. Six MHS runs were unearned.

Regardless, MHS took advantage of nearly every scoring opportunity it had, despite leaving eight runners on board. Anthony Deande led the hitting surge with a pair of hits, three runs scored and two RBI. It was Deande's bases-loaded single in the fifth to greet Permian reliever Davey Wright that made the score 7-1 and turned the game into a rout.

Since being inserted into the lineup in time for the district season, Deande, a sometimes first baseman sometimes rightfielder, has hit .353, knocked in seven runs and scored six more.

Darren Thorpe, Greg Hatcher and Mark Torres all collected a pair of hits and al the starters except Gonzales and Thorpe, who stole two bases, scored at least one run.

IN THE past two games, the Bulldogs have cracked 30 hits, scored 29 runs and raised the team batting average twenty points to .311. The fact is, since being walloped by Cooper last Tuesday, MHS has been a different ballclub.

"Since the Cooper game, I've talked to 'em about being aggressive at the plate, and we've worked hours on our hitting," Whalen said. "And I was getting on 'em pretty bad for a while, so I backed off a little bit.

"But during pre-game infield they looked sloppy so I threw a tantrum and talked to a few of them one-on-one. You know the old saying, if you whip a mule, it'll balk, but if you whip a thoroughbred it will respond. They responded. I've found a few thoroughbreds out there."

MHS gets the chance to see just how far it has progressed in the past week when they host Midland Lee Tuesday at Zachery Field. Lee won its sixth straight district game in a 13-2 rout of OHS Saturday.

"To beat Lee we will have to all kinds of fundamental things," Gonzales said. "We'll have to hit, steal bases and field the ball. But I think these two wins have really helped us out."

And, lest anyone forget, MHS has managed to walk away with three of the past four district meetings between the two clubs.

Weibring squanders lead

Tumbles into tie for first

By BOB GREEN

PONTE VEDRA, Fla. (AP) — D.A. Weibring had a four-shot lead when he went off the 10th tee, and a two-shot advantage when television went off the air.

But a bogey-bogey finish dropped him into a three-way tie for the lead Saturday in the third round of the rich Tournament Players Championship.

"I was trying not to wake up the golf course," Weibring said after playing the front nine in a solid 32, "but the wind got up and the course kicked up its heels."

He was one victim, losing two shots on the last two holes — and nearly losing more. His second shot on the 18th flirted with a lake and forced Weibring to play his third shot "with my heels hanging over the aqua."

Calvin Peete was another casualty of the course that found its teeth in the afternoon winds. Peete, the game's most accurate player, had tied Weibring for the lead on the 16th, but then hit into the pond on the 17th when the wind let up as he was making his swing.

It led to a double bogey.

He and Hale Irwin, a two-time U.S. Open champion, playing in front of Weibring, each had a 69 and finished at 208, eight under par for three trips over the difficult Players Club at Sawgrass and two back of Weibring.

A few minutes later, Weibring limped home with a 72, including 40 on the back side, and all three were tied going into Sunday's final round of the chase for the $162,000 first prize.

"I can honestly say the money doesn't make any difference," said Weibring, whose only PGA Tour victory came six years ago.

"The money is wonderful, but I'm out to achieve something that I have worked hard for a long time. I consider the TPC a major tournament. It's something I want to win."

Irwin agreed.

"Money is just the obvious thing," he said. "The added things, the 10-year exemption and the ego trip, those things can't have a price put on them."

And the final 18 holes shapes up as much more than a three-man race, Irwin said.

"The only conclusion is that it's wide open," he said.

Gary Hallberg and Canadian Dan Halldorson shared fourth at 210, only two shots back. Hallberg closed up with a 67 and Halldorson shot a 72.

Larry Rinker was next at 71-211.

Not only did Weibring's struggling finish deprive him of sole possession of the top, it opened the way to a potential last-round challenge by Jack Nicklaus.

"Anybody within four shots has a chance," said Peete.

And Nicklaus, six strokes off the pace when he finished with a 71, suddenly found himself only four back at 212.

He was tied with Payne Stewart, Gary Twiggs and Dan Forsman. Twiggs had a 67, Forsman and Stewart 69s.

West German Bernhard Langer, near the lead for most of the first two rounds, fell victim to a triple bogey-six with two balls in the water on the 18th hole, also after television had finished. He finished with a 75 and was at 211.

Weibring, a 31-year-old who has only one title in nine years on the PGA Tour, owned a two-stroke advantage at the start of play. He hit a two-iron to within six feet and made eagle-three on the second hole. He reached the turn in 32 and was four in front.

Then the winds came up.

He bogeyed the 10th, misjudging the wind, and the 12th, misjudging a putt.

Peete, playing in front, caught him with a six-foot birdie putt on the 16th, then hit into the water for a double bogey.

That gave Weibring another two-stroke lead.

But he three-putted from long range on the 17th, cutting the lead to one, and surrendered that when he missed the green and failed to get up and down on the 18th.

"I'm satisfied with the way I pitched," said Small. "I was a little worried at first, I thought I was going to be in trouble but in the second inning I came in thinking 'just throw strikes, get them to pop up and keep the ball down.' I knew I had a good defense behind me. If I do my job, they'll do theirs."

From the second inning on, Small didn't allow a single Broncho beyond second base while his teammates posted at least one run in every inning.

"I thought we played well today," said Small, who collected the game winning RBI in the third inning, giving Lee a 3-2 lead.

"I felt good about the way we played as a team," added shortstop Keith McDonald, who led the Rebel attack with four singles in five at bats, scored two runs, drove in three and stole three bases. "We were all together."

McDonald, plagued with errors during pre-district, including a six-bobble game against Midland High in the Tournament of Champions, has settled down at shortstop since those early days. He has yet to commit an error in 4-5A games.

"I'm beginning to feel more comfortable," said McDonald, who improved his season average to .382.

About Odessa High's pitching, or lack thereof, McDonald said, "Larry (Segovia) is a good pitcher except everybody has an off day. He gave us a lot of trouble this summer."

Segovia got the start for the Bronchos and was shelled for 10 runs on nine hits, six walks and five strikeouts. Add five wild pitches to the OHS southpaw's total and two passed balls by catcher Toby Burkes and it was no contest. Reliever Danny Serabia gave up the final three Rebel hits and runs in one inning of duty.

"I thought this was a workman type game for us," added Johnson. "Nothing against Odessa High, Coach (Ronnie) White knows what I mean, but we had trouble getting up for them."

NBA Rookie of the Year...Jordan or Olajuwon

By WILLIAM R. BARNARD
AP Sports Writer

The Houston Rockets and Chicago Bulls have traded arguments and counter-arguments all season long.

Although the two teams have faced each other only twice on National Basketball Association courts, coaches and players from both sides have waged a war of words over whether Chicago's 6-foot-6 Michael Jordan or Houston's 7-0 Akeem Olajuwon should be the 1984-85 Rookie of the Year.

Debates over who is going to be the NBA champion or the Most Valuable Player have almost faded to insignificance in comparison to the Olajuwon-Jordan comparisons.

The questions started even before the season started. On the basis of Jordan's spectacular Olympic performance, everyone wondered if the Rockets and Portland Trail Blazers, who chose Sam Bowie second in the 1984 draft after Houston took Olajuwon, had made a mistake allowing Jordan to go to the Bulls with the No. 3 pick.

Portland steadfastly claims it wasn't wrong in taking the 7-0 Bowie, saying it needed a center and was stacked with players at Jordan's position.

But not even the Trail Blazers are claiming Bowie is in the race for Rookie of the Year. His statistics pale in comparison to Jordan's and Olajuwon's.

BUT ROCKETS Coach Bill Fitch bristles at the mere suggestion that Jordan is better.

"Never take a great little man when you can take a great big man," he says. "If we called Chicago tomorrow and offered Akeem for Jordan, they would make the trade in a minute. There's no doubt in my mind."

Not so, said Rod Thorn, before he was fired last week as Bulls general manager. "If we traded Michael Jordan, we might as well close the doors."

Statistically, there is little argument that either would make a deserving choice.

Olajuwon is averaging 21 points per game, is third in the league in rebounding with more than 12 per game, ranks first in offensive rebounding and fifth in blocked shots. The Rockets are third in the league in road attendance and fifth in home attendance, with a club-record 16 sellouts.

Jordan is fourth in the league in scoring with nearly 28 points per game and is fifth in steals. He leads the Bulls in scoring, rebounding, assists, steals and free-throw percentage, while the team has nearly doubled last season's home attendance and is fifth in road attendance.

SO WHO is the best choice for Rookie of the Year?

NBA Debate

A survey of recent top NBA rookies gives a slight edge to Jordan, although several believed that their value is equal.

"I think Akeem and Michael Jordan should share the award," said New Jersey forward Buck Williams, the 1982 Rookie of the Year. "Akeem is a very consistent player who rebounds and scores. He doesn't have the charisma or flashy game that Jordan has, but he gets the job done. Jordan is a great player who has done a lot for his team and himself."

"I pick Jordan, by his production," said Milwaukee's Terry Cummings, the Rookie of the Year in 1983 when he was with San Diego. "He is the best all-around player, and he can create more soul than anyone from anywhere on the court."

"It's a tough question," said Steve Stipanovich of Indiana, the No. 2 pick in the 1983 draft and an all-rookie team selection last year. "But I think Jordan does more things. He can handle the ball, shoot and jump, and I think he is more of a leader. He's already the main man on their team leadership-wise."

Stipanovich, like Olajuwon a 7-footer, said he generally believes that the NBA is a "game where a big man is more valuable, but Jordan is the exception. He's already so valuable to the Bulls."

"You almost have to have co-rookies of the year because they've both been so good and there are strong arguments for both," said the Pacers' Clark Kellogg, a 1983 all-rookie team player. "Akeem is a phenomenal offensive rebounder. For that reason alone, I like him because that was my strength when I was a rookie.

"But Michael is leading the Bulls in every statistical category, and he's also been great in the final minutes when the game is close. He's won five or six games for them at the end."

Darrell Walker of the Knicks, a top rookie last season, also believes Olajuwon and Jordan could be co-winners, "but if it comes down to one guy it's probably going to be Michael because he's had all the hype behind him."

"But both players are paying off for their team. I knew Akeem would make Houston better. In the years to come, I think he will be the greatest offensive rebounders to ever play the game, even better than Moses Malone because he's quicker."

"I THINK Michael Jordan should get it," said James Worthy, who finished behind Cummings for Rookie of the Year in 1983 for the Los Angeles Lakers. "He's put an extra dimension into the game. It is very unusual for a rookie to come into the league and, boom, dominate the game from Day 1.

"He's been dominating the league, something no other rookie has ever done. Olajuwon deserves it, too, but you can only give it to one player. Akeem has a greater cast around him. Michael's changed the Chicago team 360 degrees."

Byron Scott, Worthy's teammate and a top rookie last year, was unsure who he favored for Rookie of the Year.

"We only played Michael twice, and that's not enough to have a real good idea," Scott said. "They're two different players. Akeem gets rebounds and easy buckets. Jordan's a guard that plays bigger than 6-6. You have to double-team both of them. Chicago's made a drastic turnaround from last year. Akeem doesn't get the recognition he deserves."

Houston's Ralph Sampson, last season's Rookie of the Year, and the Bulls' Quintin Dailey, an all-rookie team pick two years ago, were not questioned because they are teammates of Olajuwon and Jordan.

Two 15-gamers head for Midland

By TED BATTLES

Midland's Angels, there, I didn't say Cubs, began their Cactus League schedule in Mesa, Ariz., last week and, according to reports, Don Timberlake, who drew starting honors for the first exhibition game, is scheduled to start for the Midland Texas League entry when it opens the season in El Paso early next month.

Last year Timberlake was 15-5 for Redwood, California League, with a 3.04 ERA. Others on Manager Joe Maddon's spring roster who are ticketed for Midland are shortstop Kevin Davis, .238; left fielder Reggie Montgomery, .291-14 homers-79 rbi; second baseman Mark McLemore, .295 45-rbi; centerfielder Devon White, .283-7-homers-55 rbi. All were with the Redwood team that posted a 91-48 record, best in the Cal State, last season...

Fred Wilburn, another 15-game winner at Redwood, picked up the win as the Angels squared their exhibition record with a 13-hit , 5-3 win over El Paso. Montgomery singled and hit a solo homer while Charlie Smith, Kevin Davis and Mark Doran all went 2-for-3...

The California Angels' top draft choice last spring was Erik Pappas, a catcher from Mount Carmel, Ill., high school, while the No. 3 pick was Sherman Corbett, a lefthanded pitcher from Texas A&M. Pappas batted .243 for Salem of the A Northwest League, but showed power with 15 homers. Corbett, with the same team, was 7-6 with a 3.14 in 15 starts, three of them complete games. His inning-strikeout-walk figures were 100-43-97 and he gave up only 75 hits. All of the numbers are good. At A&M last spring, Corbett was 6-5...

Mel Hall, the Midland Cub ex, still has his confidence. In spring camp with Cleveland at Tucson, he advises, "Right field is open, and I'm going to close it."...Indians' batting coach Bobby Bonds predicts "Andre Thornton will hit 40 homers and Joe Carter might match him."...Carter played two seasons for Midland after being named College Player of the Year at Wichita State...

Fritz Connally, the third baseman who came to Midland out of Baylor and was traded by Chicago to San Diego a year ago, is making a strong bid to stick with the Baltimore Orioles this spring. He was batting over .400 in early spring games.Last year, Fritz hit .319 with 16 homers and 76 rbi for Las Vegas while leading PCL third basemen in fielding...

Angels' GM Mike Port, back when Daryl Sconiers was supposed to report with the regulars and turned up missing for six days. "They'll probably find Amelia Earhart before we find Sconiers...

Ever wonder what happened to Rick Leach, the former Michigan quarterback who opted for baseball? He batted .340 in the Dominican Republic winter league and probably will play at Syracuse, International....

From the Dugout

When former Midland Cub shortstop Shawon Dunston was named as the starter for the National League opener, veteran Larry Bowa pounced on third-base coach Don Zimmer as if he were a bouncing bunt. Bowa told reporters, "I could have buried him (Zimmer), but why bother. He's not worth it." The day before, Zimmer called Bowa "the most selfish player I have ever known . . . the most negative man I've ever been around." Zimmer, a lifelong friend of Manager Jim Frey's, said he made his comment because Bowa constantly whined to reporters about his relationship with the manager rather than confronting Frey directly.

PINCKNEY, playing despite an upset stomach that made him ill during the second half, added 12 points and a game-high nine rebounds, which he earned despite playing against a Tiger front line anchored by the 7-foot center, William Bedford, the 6-7 Holmes, and 6-10 Lee.

The glue in this triad was McLain, the little cheerleader who held the Wildcats together just when it seemed they might succumb to pressure and the non-stop defensive play of Turner. In 39 minutes, McLain had two assists and scored nine points, the final four coming on free throws in the last 21 seconds and clinched the victory.

"Andre Turner is a great player," said McLain. "Defensively, he's a pain. But I have to keep my head because I'm the senior. Now, I have to pat myself on the back for keeping my head and not getting frustrated."

ROLLIE Massimino, Villanova's coach, said the drought, in which his team failed to score on eight consecutive possessions, was probably due to premature celebrating. "That happens," he said. "It's such a big game for the kids, maybe they looked up at the clock and just couldn't believe it was 41-33. They got a little complacent."

The first half ended in a 23-all deadlock, but the Tigers burst out to a 31-28 lead by scoring on four of thier first five possessions of the second half. That lead melted as the Wildcats — who had discovered a seam in the Tigers' forest-like defense that allowed Pinckney to get open near the basket — outscored the Tigers by 13-2 over the next 6:25 to build a 41-33 advantage.

"We had found an easy way to get the ball inside," said Pinckey, who had five of the points. "So, Harold Pressley and myself tried to make ourselves as available as we could." Pressley, a junior, finished with three points and six rebounds.

The Tigers were hampered by having Bedford in foul trouble. He was charged with his fourth personal with 12:52 remaining, making him a tentative-type player for the remainder of the game. "It's hard to play on defense and offense when you're in that situation," said Dana Kirk, the Memphis State coach. "It hurts you." Bedford, a freshman, finished with eight points and seven rebounds.

All told, however, the Tiger front line was outrebounded by 16-14 by the Wildcat front court, an accomplishment the Wildcats must match if they are to have a chance against Georgetown in the final. And, according to Kirk, they do have a chance. "If they're just a Cinderella team," he said, "then Cinderella wears boots."

HOYAS

Horace Broadnax hit a jumper to extend the Hoyas' lead to 30-26, then, after another St. John's turnover, Williams scored again to make it 32-26.

When Willie Glass, the Redmen forward, missed two free throws, Georgetown had a chance to open the lead to eight points. But Walter Berry stole Bill Martin's pass and moments later Wennington was fouled by Martin and he hit both free throws to cut the Redmen's deficit to 32-28.

Georgetown tried to run time off the clock, but Grady Mateen, the 6-11 freshman, was flustered by the Redmen's pressure and put up a half-hearted shot. Berry, coming from behind Mateen, swatted the ball so hard that it caromed off the glass and into Mullin's stomach.

Berry was called for traveling on the other end, and Georgetown ran the clock down before Broadnax missed the final shot at the buzzer.

Mullin, imprisoned in the box-and-one defense, scored six points in the half. Wennington led the Redmen with 10 points as St. John's shot 57 percent. Williams had 10 points and Ewing eight as Georgetown shot 53 percent.

The Redmen's late first-half surge went for naught. The Hoyas, going to the boards with abandon, outscored them by 7-0 to begin the second half for a 39-28 lead.

Martin hit a jumper to open the half. After Mullin's pass went off Glass's fingers, David Wingate hit a free throw to make it 35-28. After a St. John's miss, Williams made a jumper to make it 37-28. Williams then stole Mullin's pass and scored to make it 39-28.

That was all the cushion Georgetown needed. As the Hoyas had done in the second and third games against the Redmen this season, they were outrebounding and outscrapping St. John's on offense for second, third, and fourth shots.

RPI claims NCAA ice title, 2-1

DETROIT (AP) — Neil Hernberg scored a power-play goal and George Servinis added a shorthanded score Saturday and Rensselaer Polytechnic held off a third-period rally to post a 2-1 victory over Providence and capture its first NCAA hockey championship in 31 years.

RPI, a small engineering college from upstate New York, parlayed the special teams play with tight-checking to claim the title in its first trip to the NCAA Final Four since 1961.

Hernberg, a sophomore forward from Hingham, Mass., took advantage of a judgment error by Providence goaltender Chris Terreri to give the Engineers a 1-0 lead at 4:29 of the first period.Terreri dove out of his net and tried to poke a loose puck away from the goal crease, but Hernberg intervened and flipped a wrist shot over the sprawled netminder for his 18th goal of the season.

The Engineers increased their lead to 2-0 on Servinis' shorthanded tally — his third goal of the two-game tournament — at 3:49 of the second period.Servinis stole the puck from Peter Taglianetti at the RPI blueline, outraced the pursuing defenseman and pulled Terreri out of position for his 34th goal.

Cubs know Dunston can hit...but worry over errors

By DAVE ANDERSON
New York Times News Service

In the early days of spring training, Jim Frey, the Chicago Cubs' manager, was watching Shawon Dunston take grounders during batting practice. Now 22 years old, the rookie shortstop was scooping up the ball easily and tossing it back on one bounce near the batting cage to Ruben Amaro, the coach who was hitting the grounders. But every so often, in his eagerness, Shawon Dunston would momentarily bobble a grounder.

"That's how he made most of those 58 errors last year in the minors," Frey said. "Whenever he'd bobble the ball like that, he'd hurry and throw it wild. But sooner or later, he'll settle down."

IN THE weeks since then, Dunston, who played last year at Midland and Wichita, has settled down into emerging as the Cubs' new shortstop, succeeding Larry Bowa, who had several numbers going against him — .223 (his batting average last year), 17 (his runs batted) and 39 (his age). In trying to improve the Cubs to stay ahead of the Mets this season, Frey had a primary decision to make involving shortstop. And last Thursday he decided to go with the rookie.

"This was a classic case of the young kid going against the old veteran," the manager was saying from Mesa, Ariz., where the Cubs train. "And when that happens, the thing you look for is for that young kid to really open your eyes. Otherwise, you go with the older guy."

The Cubs know Shawon Dunston will hit. Although he skidded to .233 at Iowa of the American Association late last year, he hit .329 at Midland (Tex.) earlier in the season. Before that, he batted .310 at Quad City in 1983 and .321 at Sarasota in 1982, after he had been the No. 1 choice in the 1982 draft. He hit .790 as a senior at Thomas Jefferson High School in Brooklyn before the same draft, in which the Mets named Dwight Gooden with the third choice.

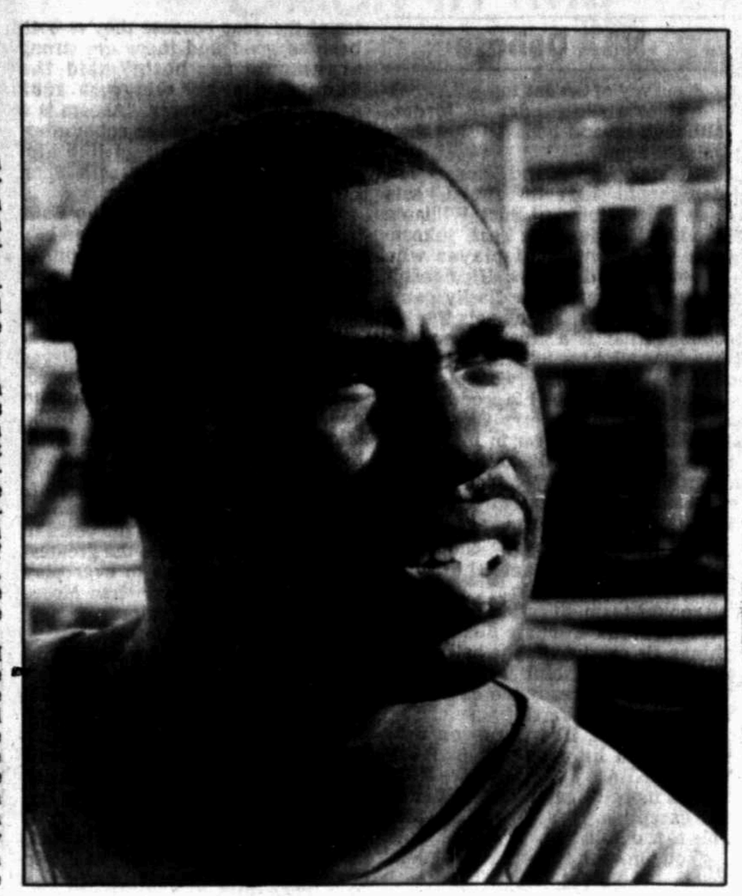

"I think Dunston can be an outstanding player," Frey had said early in spring training, "because he's a hitter at a defensive position."

IN TIME, the Cubs see Dunston joining the new wave of shortstops who can hit — Cal Ripken, Alan Trammell and Robin Yount (although Yount is opening the season in left field for the Milwaukee Brewers following shoulder surgery). Most shorstops make it with their glove more than their bat, so if a shortstop can hit, that's a bonus. But a shorstop still needs a sure glove. That's what the Cubs were waiting for Dunston to show them.

"But the last few games before I made my decision, he made three big-league plays," Jim Frey said, "He dove in the hole for a ball and had the ball to first base in time; in the dirt, but in time. On a ball hit to the left of the second baseman, he made a double play that few shortstop can make; he's got got a shotgun of an arm, maybe the best arm of any shorstop around. And he dove for a ball behind second base and made the play."

That was all Frey needed to see. In the dugout before last Thursday's exhibition game, he walked over to the 6-foot-1-inch, 175-pound rookie.

"I said, 'Shawon, I've just told the writers that you are my shortstop; you're going to open the season,'" the manager recalled. 'But you don't have to do anything now, other than just be Shawon Dunston. Don't let all of the attention get into your thinking. Don't worry about all the media, just be Shawon Dunston; just go out and play like Shawon Dunston can play.' He got up, shook my hand, smiled and said, 'Thank you very much.'"

Shawon Dunston....in days as a Midland Cub.

BUT BEFORE Frey publicly announced his decision, he had called Bowa into his office.

"I told Bowa that I was going with the kid," the manager said, "but that I expected him to work hard to be ready to play if we needed him, and he told me, 'At least now I know where I stand.'"

Bowa had been growling all spring that he was getting "no respect" this year, that the shortstop job was Dunston's to win or lose.

Perhaps it was. Early last week, Don Zimmer, a Cub coach and once a shorstop, was quoted as having called Bowa "the most selfish player" he had ever known. He mentioned how Bowa, even as the Cubs' captain, had not talked to Ryne Sandberg, the second baseman who was the National League's most valuable player last year, for a week to 10 days. Zimmer, who managed the Boston Red Sox, Texas Rangers and San Diego Padres for a total of nine seasons during his career, grew up with Frey in Cincinnati, where they played high school and amateur baseball together.

"I'm not going to ask Bowa to work out at second base or third base so he can be a utility infielder," Frey was saying now. "He's a shortstop."

Bowa has been one of baseball's best shorstops. His .980 career fielding percentage leads among shortstops who have played at least 1,000 games. He has 2,141 hits, and a World Series ring from the 1980 Phillies. He was obtained by the Cubs before the 1982 season, along with Sandberg, for the shorstop Ivan De Jesus in a trade made by Dallas Green, then the Cubs' new general manager who had been the Phillies' manager in 1980.

But now Bowa is 39 and fading, perhaps soon to be traded. Dunston is 22 and rising.

"He's got great ability," Frey said of his new shorstop, "and great energy. He can be outstanding."

Ruben Amaro, once a shorstop with the Phillies and the Yankees, has been the rookie's tutor.

"SHAWON'S just hyper, just overeager," Amaro said early in spring training. "He tends to overcharge balls, and if he bobbles the ball, then he tends to overthrow the ball to first base. Even if the grounder is routine, he wants to throw the ball so hard, he sometimes overthrows. But he doesn't have a scatter arm. His ball just takes off. Control is the key word for him. He just has to learn to control his eagerness, control himself. And he will. He likes to play, he likes to take instruction."

And when Dunston was asked then about his chances of being the Cub shorstop, he spoke easily and quietly.

"I'm taking it in stride," he said. "I think I can hit. But at shorstop, I'm trying to relax, trying to concentrate, trying to catch the ball. At shorstop, you have to catch the ball. If I go back to Triple A, I'll smile and have fun. I won't pout. Patience is a virtue. When I get there as the Cubs' shortstop, I want to stay there."

Shawon Dunston is there now. To stay.

Overpaid, loafing troublemakers...welcome Yanks

By JIM ABRAMS

Americans in Japan

TOKYO (AP) — Foreign players on Japanese professional baseball teams have a specific goal this year: to prove wrong the critics who say they are overpaid, underachieving troublemakers who should be banned from Japan's most popular sport.

After last season, when foreigners — mostly Americans — again provided stellar performances and headline-grabbing controversy, the owners of Japan's 12 pro teams informally agreed that they would begin to exclude non-Japanese players in the not too distant future.

That followed statements by outgoing Commissioner Takeso Shimoda, the former Japanese ambassador to the United States, that baseball should be purged of its foreign elements in preparation for a future U.S.-Japan championship, which some Japanese like to envision as a "real" World Series.

Peter Ueberroth, commissioner of baseball in the U.S., said in Tokyo this past week that "it's safe to say we're looking one day for champions of the World Series in our country to play the champions of your two leagues."

Asked about the move to ban foreign players from Japanese teams, Ueberroth said the Japanese are "free to do as they please," but he believes that the exchange of players "is a good thing."

UEBERROTH NOTED that a Japanese player — 36-year-old pitcher Yutaka Enatsu —now is trying out with the Milwaukee Brewers. Only one Japanese player, pitcher Masanori Murakami, has been on an American major league roster, seeing limited service with the San Francisco Giants in 1964 and 1965.

During the regular season, each Japanese team is allowed to carry two foreigners on its roster. Customarily, and especially in the past two decades, they have offered considerable sums to attract aging U.S. major leaguers or promising young hitters who can reach the short fences of Japanese ballparks.

An established Japanese starting player might earn about $70,000 a year. Salaries paid to foreigners vary widely, but the prominent sports daily Nikkan Sports says the average one-year contract in 1985 will run about $191,000 for the nearly two dozen or so Americans, and less for other outsiders.

Tokyo's Yomiuri Giants will pay former Montreal Expo Warren Cromartie an estimated $424,000 for his second year here, well above the $333,000 salary of the highest paid Japanese player, slugger Koji Yamamoto of the Hiroshima Toyo Carp.

DESPITE their readiness to pay high salaries, team owners have complained that the Americans demand special treatment, refuse to adjust to the Japanese style of play and disrupt team harmony based on group discipline and long hours of practice.

For their part, the Americans often complain privately about the same things and say they are sometimes victims of senseless dugout strategy, such as being yanked from the lineup so a local player can be the hero.

"Ban-the-gaijin (foreigner)" talk at the owners' meeting reportedly was initiated by Sakae Okada of the Pacific League champion Hankyu Braves, which paid ex-Chicago Cub Bump Wills some $392,000 in 1984 and then benched him for much of the season after he had several fights with the manager.

Other controversies erupted around Don Money, a major league veteran who quit the Kintetsu Buffaloes because his family couldn't adjust to Japanese life, and Jim Tracy of the Yokohama Taiyo Whales, who walked off the field and out of Japan after the manager pulled him out of a game early in the season.

Hiroshima, which captured the Central League pennant and the Japan Series last year with minimal help from its two foreigners, this year will be the first team in many years to field an all-Japanese team when the season opens April 12.

Carp Manager Takeshi Koba told a television interviewer that he preferred to concentrate on developing young players and said, "There's going to be a lot of interest in whether we can win again without foreigners."

Even all-time great home run hitter Sadaharu Oh, manager of the Yomiuri Giants, said in a news conference last fall that with the improvement of Japanese players, less reliance on foreigners was good for the game. Oh, whose father was Chinese, grew up in Japan.

DESPITE THE problems, however, 1984 was a good year for the foreign contingent.

Former Minnesota Twin Greg "Boomer" Wells led Hankyu to its pennant by batting .355 with 37 home runs and 130 runs batted in over the 130-game schedule, becoming the first foreigner ever to win the triple crown.

Among other stalwarts were Cromartie (.280, 35 home runs), Hanshin Tiger Randy Bass (.327, 27), Yokohama's Leon Lee (.321, 21), brother Leron Lee of the Lotte Orions (.309, 31), Seibu Lion Steve Ontiveros (.338, 20) and Nippon Ham Fighter Tommy Cruz (.348, 29).

The national newspaper Asahi Shimbun, in a survey taken earlier this year, reported 56 percent of the Japanese fans thought foreign players were vital to the game. In contrast, only four of the 12 owners and not one of the managers agreed with the fans.

The fans argued that the foreigners make the game more fun, improve the level of play and that no team can win without them.

"If a team wants to win, it needs someone like Wells or Ontiveros or Cromartie," said former Yomiuri pitching great Takehiko Bessho, now a commentator, in a telephone interview. "We need their power, but at the same time we don't need those who have too much pride to adjust to the game here."

Chap netters win big again

From Staff Reports

It is getting to be routine, these lopsided Midland College tennis victories.

Both the No. 1 ranked men's team and the No. 5 women's team rolled over Angelo State Saturday in non-conference action. The men won by an 8-1 score while the women went untouched in a 9-0 whitewash.

The Chaps now move to 16-4 on the men's side, and 9-2 on the women's side. Coach Joe Williams expects a new set of rankings to be out soon, and the second-year head coach is expecting some more good things.

"I feel like our women are going to pick up some in the team and individual rankings," Williams said. "I also look for the men's individual rankings to go up quite high. But we may not be ranked No. 1 as a team, not because we haven't been winning, but because maybe someone else has won some big matches."

The Chaparrals return to action Tuesday with a Western Junior College Athletic Association meet against Odessa College at 2 p.m. at the College Courts.

Owens shares medal as snow cancels golf

From Staff Reports

AMARILLO—A light snow and extreme cold weather canceled the second round of the Amarillo Golf Invitational at the Ross Rogers Golf Course Saturday.

The results from Friday's 18-hole first round will stand as final. That leaves Midland High's Tracy Owens part of a three-way tie for the medalist position. Owens shot a first-round 87 Friday to deadlock her with Chantell Brinkley of Amarillo High and Amy McDougal of Dumas for the top spot.

MHS remains in third place with a score of 397 behind team titlist Amarillo High with 365, and runner-up Odessa Permian at 395. Midland Lee finished last in the 12-team field with a 468 score.

Both Tall City teams begin District 4-5A action April 5 in a one-day, 18-hole tournament in Big Spring.

Braves blank Cardinals

Exhibition Baseball

Paul Zuvella, a rookie looking to break into the starting lineup at either second base or shortstop for the Braves, continued his hot hitting with three singles Saturday to lead Atlanta to a 4-0 victory over St. Louis.

Zuvella kept the pressure on regulars Rafael Ramirez and Glenn Hubbard. Playing at shortstop in place of Ramirez, Zuvella upped his batting average to .340 and has 12 hits in his last 27 at-bats.

The Braves scored in the first inning on Bob Horner's bases-loaded force play. Horner, returning after off-season surgery to repair his broken right wrist, was hitless in three at-bats. He is scheduled to tell Manager Eddie Haas after Sunday's game against Baltimore if he believes he can open the season.

Atlanta added two unearned runs in the eighth.Rick Mahler limited the Cardinals to three hits in six innings, walking one and striking out four. Steve Bedrosian, slowed earlier this spring by a sore right shoulder, worked the final three innings and allowed two hits and struck out two.

ROOKIE Jim Weaver stroked a double and a single and scored a run to back the combined seven-hit pitching of Milt Wilcox, Randy O'Neal and Aurelio Lopez as Detroit beat Cincinnati 4-0.

Frank White had three hits, including a home run, and Steve Balboni added a two-run homer as Kansas City took Baltimore 6-1.

Ken Griffey homered and Bobby Meacham added a two-run triple as the Yankees came from behind twice to defeat Texas 7-4.Pete O'Brien had a three-run blast for the Rangers.

The White Sox routed Pittsburgh 10-3 as Luis Salazar hit two homers, driving in five runs, and Tim Hulett and Jerry Dybzinski each punched solo home runs.All 10 runs came off Larry McWilliams in the first four innings.

Sid Bream's three-run home run capped a seven-run sixth inning as Los Angeles rallied for a 10-6 victory over Toronto.Toronto starter Doyle Alexander was reached for five consecutive hits and seven runs in the sixth.

OZZIE VIRGIL'S two-run homer and John Denny's six strong innings helped Philadelphia down Boston 4-2.

Right-hander Mike Krukow posted his fourth victory of the exhibition season as San Francisco beat Milwaukee 6-2 in a game between split squads.Krukow, 4-1 with a 1.44 earned run average, went six innings, yielding eight hits and two runs.

First-inning homers by Dan Gladden and Phil Ouelette helped the other portion of the Giants to a 10-5 decision over California.

Jack Perconte's RBI single in the bottom of the ninth gave Seattle a 4-3 decision over the Chicago Cubs.

MHS, Lee take thirds

From Staff Reports

They were two entirely different tournaments for the Midland Lee and Midland High tennis teams, but the results were the same.

At the Amarillo Tennis Invitational, MHS took third in the team competition, while at the Lakeview Invitational in San Angelo, Lee came away with a third place finish.

MHS placed both Jill Bramlett in girls 'A' singles, and the 'A' doubles pair of Chris Jauz and Tim Thomas in the finals, but both came up short to take runner-up honors.

At San Angelo Lakeview, the Lee boys' doubles team of Walter Hickman and Jimmy Walker took the title over the team of Welch and McDonaugh, 6-3, 6-2.

Bramlett fell in the finals to Julie Vaughan of Amarillo High, the girls individual winner in Amarillo Saturday. It was Bramlett's second loss of the year, both to Vaughan.

The Thomas-Jauz pair also fell in the finals to King-Martin of Amarillo High, 6-3, 6-4. Amarillo Tascosa took the team title followed by Amarillo High, then MHS.

San Angelo Central took the team title at the Lakeview tourney with 115 points, Lakeview placed second with 90 and Lee was third with 87 points.

Rebel girls take second at Seminole

From Staff Reports

The Midland Lee girls track squad gave its best showing of the season by capturing second place in the nine-team Indian Relays Saturday, while a disappointed Midland High took fourth.

Diane White in the long jump and Tami Woodberry in the high hurdles were the only first-place finishers for Lee, but its depth shined through. White set a new meet mark with a leap of 18-6.

Lee grabbed a pair of seconds in the 400 and 800 meter relays to help boost its point totals, and also marked seconds from Roz Eaden in the high jump (4-10) and Tangi Carter in the 100.

For MHS, sophomore distance runner Amy Cumings set the pace with titles in the 3,200 and 1,600 meter races and sophomore Ethel Edwards was second in the 200, Tina Knight runner up in the long jump and second in the 1,600 relay.

Shumate best of Wheelies

In Guiness Book of Records

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

Delivering the gospel from the back of a motorcycle can be a difficult task. Especially if the motorcycle spends most of its time with one wheel in the air and the other balancing on firm ground.

But that is what Tilson Shumate, World Champion Wheelie rider, has been doing the past three years.

"I couldn't get people to come to my house for bible study, so I decided to go out to where the people were," said Shumate, who is here Saturday and today for the first major motorcycle swap meet in the Tall City.

Shumate will perform his wheelie magic off-and-on during the day today at the Midland County Exhibit Building when he is not consumed with his first passion — preaching the Lord's way.

Doing a wheelie on a motorcycle, Shumate has no recorded equals. You can look it up.

It's right there in the Guinness Book of World Records publication, Motorcycles: Facts and Feats. Longest wheelie category, Tilson Shumate, 111 miles, 3 hours, 27 minutes.

"The reason I went for the records was for credibility," Shumate said. "People always ask 'Who are you and what are you doing this for?'Anybody could put a No. 1 on and say they were number one. But if you're doing it for Jesus, you want to do it right."

THESE DAYS, Shumate has confined his wheelie skills to twists and turns and acrobatic stunts in small areas rather than over long distances. Better suited to attract crowds that way.

It is not a common coupling, motorcycles and the ministry. But after many years, Shumate has learned to field criticism from believers and non-believers alike.

Shumate started motorcycling and doing wheelies as a child prodigy of sorts. In 1968, At the age of 15, Shumate began racing the motocross circuit and became fairly successful at it. But shortly after he began, in 1969 by his own recollection, Shumate "was saved at a Billy Graham Crusade." And while at motocross events, was spreading the Word from his bike.

"I got all kinds of criticism from worldly people that I couldn't race and be a Christian," Shumate said. "I kind of believed them at first, and I eventually got out of it after about five years on the circuit. But later, I found that Christians were regular people. God wants us to have joy and to be happy."

It wasn't until about three years ago that Shumate again looked at his motorcycle as a tool. Rather than wait for people to come to his house and hear him preach, Shumate took the thing that he knew best and took it to the people.

But still, some religious people have not seen his work in the best light. "How can God use a motorcycle," his critics say.

"I just tell them I can't sing," Shumate says. "I can't sing, can't play the guitar or play the piano. This is my talent, and the gospel says to use your talents to glorify God, no matter what it is.

"Motorcycles are just a sideline thing for me now. It's fun, but I'm not into it. If I was into it, I'd be standing around talking about motorcycles."

Reunion too small for event as big as Final Four

An AP Sports Analysis
By DENNE H. FREEMAN

DALLAS — The NCAA men's basketball Final Four comes back to Texas next year after an absence of more than a decade and it just might be the first and last appearance in Dallas' Reunion Arena.

The last Final Four in Texas was in Houston's Astrodome in the early 1970s and the UCLA Bruins of John Wooden were victorious.

There will be a special contigent of Dallas Chamber of Commerce types in Lexington, Ky., over the weekend for the NCAA's basketball showcase, which has become as big or bigger than the collegiate football bowl games.

Dallas got a solid test run during the recent NCAA Midwest Regionals.

The most lasting impression was that Reunion Arena is just too small and the accommodations too cramped for the Final Four circus.

You've got to have hotels, parking, and zillion little things that leave winners and losers alike in a buoyant mood when they leave here.

For example, the Hyatt Regency was the headquarters hotel for the NCAA Midwest Regional and you couldn't find a parking spot anywhere around it without a pistol.

I didn't have one, so I got two parking tickets — and I live here.

THE PARKING at the site of the Thursday night and Saturday afternoon games was in a much bigger snarl than you normally see at the Dallas Mavericks' National Basketball Association games.

There weren't enough police directing traffic and the ones there had to contend with people standing out in the street either trying to buy or sell tickets.

One woman from Oklahoma asked a police officer: "Is scalping (selling a ticket for higher than its face value) legal in Texas?"

The office answered, "Yes mam, unfortunately. But I'm not going to let you stop traffic to sell one."

There were other minor problems.

The Midwest Regional drew some 300 members of the press and credentials weren't handled smoothly. Multiply that number by three and have things go wrong and Dallas will get some bad publicity on a national scale, quickly.

There wasn't enough security, either, at Reunion Arena for the regionals. Fans roamed the floor at will after the games, bothering the players and the media; not to mention the poor official who had water thrown on him by an Oklahoma player.

IN 1981, Dallas beat out Kansas City for the right to the 1986 Final Four.

Reunion Arena got the event with its 17,001 seating capacity to Kemper Argna's 15,625.

Dallas may never have another chance because the trend in recent yecrs is to go to larger facilities such as the New Orleans Superdome.

Of course, landing the Final Four means millions in the pockets of local merchants. (In Austin, Chris Stone, director of convention sales for the Austin Convention and Visitors Council, estimates the Women's Final Four in Austin this week will bring the city some $800,000). Dallas stands to make much more.

John Scovell, chairman of the Executive Committee of the Final Four of Dallas, said what really is important is a chance to "show off to the world."

Deane Beman seeks 'World's Worst Golfer'

By BOB GREEN

PONTE VEDRA, Fla. (AP) — The aim, PGA Tour Commissioner Deane Beman said, in the Tournament Players Championship, now being held on the Players Club at Sawgrass, "is to identify the best golfer in the world."

In a couple of months, the same course — using the same tees the touring pros face this week — will be the testing ground to "determine the worst golfer in the world," Beman said.

The match will begin at noon, June 19. It is not known when it will end.

"To qualify for nomination," a magazine spokesman said, "a competitor must be a man between the ages of 25 and 55, with no physical handicaps, who holds an established USGA handicap of at least 36 (the maximum), plays more than 21 rounds a year, loves the game despite his adequacies and has a sense of humor."

Among the nominees:

—Michael Bush of Bellee Chasse, La., who, playing in an amateur tournament, failed to drive as far as the ladies' tee on 14 of 18 holes.

—Jerry Ryan, Bohemia, N.Y., who claims a working handicap of 76.

Canadian Hair Research Breakthrough

BALDNESS TREATMENT GROWS NEW HAIR!

NEW GROWTH CLAIM FOR HAIR RESTORER WINS CANADIAN GOVERNMENT APPROVAL!

Amazing Hair Receives Official "Notice of Compliance" as a TREATMENT FOR ARRESTING EXCESSIVE HAIR LOSS AND FOR INCREASING NEW TERMINAL HAIR GROWTH ON THE SCALPS OF MEN AND WOMEN WITH UNCOMPLICATED MALE PATTERN OR DIFFUSE HAIR LOSS

R.A. Armstrong, M.D., Assistant Director and Chief, Drug Evaluation Division, Bureau of Non-prescription Drugs

ANGLO-AMERICAN MARKET TESTING
NEW FORMULA IN THE U.S.

In Canada today, there is a remarkable treatment for baldness. Formula MJS, named by the Canadian government in an official NOTICE OF COMPLIANCE after reviewing independent clinical studies in which 9 out of 9 patients tested actually GREW NEW HAIR! These studies were supervised by two eminent Dermatologists from a leading Toronto hospital and a major Toronto university medical school. As significant as these results were, the study goes on to further state that MOST PATIENTS EXPERIENCED A SIGNIFICANT REDUCTION OF HAIR LOSS AND WITHIN 6 MONTHS, MORE THAN 3/4 BEGAN TO RE-GROW HAIR!

THE GALEA THEORY

We are all born with a thin membrane called the Galea. Its purpose at birth is to protect the "soft spot" at the top of the skull as the occipital bones grow together and form a one-piece skull. The galea covers the crown of the head — the first area of hair loss in typical cases of male pattern baldness. With many people, the galea thickens with age. Some researchers believe that this thickening chokes off the proper flow of oxygen and blood supply to the hair follicles, causing them to atrophy and die. This normally valid, evitable dormant hair follicle and the gradual thinning the galea membrane, renewing the circulation necessary for a normal pattern of hair growth.

U.S. GOVERNMENT POSITION

It is the unanimous position of the Food and Drug Administration, the U.S. Postal Service and the Federal Trade Commission that nothing can halt the process of male pattern baldness and grow new hair. Obviously Canadian Authorities disagree. To a point where they have approved the extraordinary claim of NEW HAIR GROWTH for Formula MJS.

Of course governments are not in the business of endorsing or promoting commercial products but in Canada, FORMULA MJS MAY BE SOLD AS A TRUE HAIR RESTORER THAT CAN GROW HAIR ON BALD HEADS!

ANGLO-AMERICAN CONDUCTING
LIMITED U.S. MARKET TEST

During the next few months, Anglo-American will be testing an American version of Formula MJS

Real action

The biggest drawback to politics at the national level is that members of Congress, while empowered to wield significant political muscle, can be so far removed from their home districts it's difficult for their constituencies to fairly assess the kind of job they are doing.

Fortunately that hasn't been the case where Midland is concerned. The last two U.S. Representatives who have served Midland have stayed in the limelight and, as a result, it has been easy to assess their job performance.

A few years back when Midland was included in the 19th Congressional District, prior to redistricting, Kent Hance ably served this area in the Congress. During redistricting in the early 1980s, Midland was reshuffled into the 21st Congressional District, which is represented by Congressman Tom Loeffler of Hunt. Even prior to this week's crucial MX missile vote in the House, we had been pleased with Loeffler's representation, but after this week there's no doubt: We're impressed!

The Congressman's efforts were instrumental in holding together a precarious margin on the missile, which was viewed as a necessary bargaining chip in the ongoing arms reduction talks in Geneva. The job wasn't an easy one because there was a move afoot to undercut the MX support. It was guided by none other than House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill and other liberal Democrats.

Loeffler, other Republican leaders and Democrats who supported the MX showed political dexterity by holding the vote together and even bringing in additional votes to gain the important 219-213 vote to release $1.5 billion for 21 additional missiles.

What that means, of course, is that U.S. arms control negotiators now have an additional bargaining measure to use in gaining realistic concessions from Soviet negotiators. If that comes about, it will mean a safer world for all — which is the aim of the arms reduction talks.

It was a tough week, but Loeffler and the other MX supporters met the test. Good job, Congressman!

Another View:

Troubled barricade

Contrary to Soviet claims, the sentry who killed Maj. Arthur D. Nicholson Jr. in an East German town on Sunday apparently never even fired a warning shot. Indisputably, he left the uniformed American bleeding for 30 minutes before medical aid arrived. When the American sergeant on this legal surveillance team tried to administer first aid, he was ordered away.

Sunday was a bad day on the forgotten East-West barricade. It was also an ominous reminder for Secretary General Gorbachev and President Reagan that their larger diplomatic purposes are always hostage to such bloody blunders.

The superpowers owe each other, and the rest of the world, a better insurance policy against dumb, cold-blooded zealotry. The Soviet government's failure to explain, or apologize for, the callous downing of a South Korean airliner in 1983 froze a budding diplomacy for more than a year.

Considering the proximity of their armies, the Soviet and American commanders in central Europe have a good record for averting trouble. Most flare-ups have been political. Still, when the generals fail, a mechanism is needed for prompt explanation, apology and reassurance. If relations are healthy, ambassadors can be trusted with their accounts of such events. When suspicions dominate, as now, special efforts are necessary.

The risks are especially acute in Germany because confrontations there were once a weapon of diplomacy. A 1947 accord assures the United States, Britain and France a military outpost with travel rights in East Germany. Reciprocally, the Soviet Union maintains three military missions in West Germany. The patrols monitor the opposing forces in clearly marked vehicles, seeking to assess their tactical capabilities.

Soviet and East German troops are said to have increased their harassment of these surveillance sorties in recent months. Last year, a French officer was killed in a head-on collision with an East German army truck. Other teams observing maneuvers have had their jeeps bumped or turned back with warning shots. On the claim that it wanted to prevent snooping, East Germany closed some of its air space during recent maneuvers.

American officials say they don't understand these provocations. They think one explanation may be that the crack Soviet divisions in East Germany have recently shaken off tight political controls. Idle armies can grow restless and their acts of harassment can become a dangerous sport. That is why United States guidelines forbid the use of force or life-endangering measures against Soviet teams that enter any restricted area. A Soviet officer who ventured off-bounds in Bavaria last week was detained, then escorted back to Frankfurt.

If such a rule applied in East Germany, Major Nicholson would be alive. Beyond expressing regrets, the new Soviet leadership needs to change the rules and attitudes that cause such a killing. And the United States needs to work with the Russians to reaffirm the rules wherever their forces come into contact.

Time running out for Gemayel

WASHINGTON — Probably no Arab leader except Yasir Arafat has been so often reported on his way into political oblivion as Amin Gemayel, the beleaguered president of Lebanon.

Jack Anderson

And yet, like the grubby PLO leader in desert robes and pistol belt, the dapper Christian president manages to hang onto at least the shreds of power by the tips of his well-manicured fingernails.

But Gemayel may have gone too far this time. His growing subservience to Syrian President Hafez Assad finally became too much for the Christian Lebanese Forces, which were organized and led by Amin's charismatic younger brother, Bashir, until his assassination in September 1982.

Their declaration of independence from Gemayel's government last week left the Lebanese president dependent for what little authority he still has on the Syrian occupation troops.

Gemayel has become, almost openly, Assad's puppet, with virtually no Lebanese constituency of his own. Once more the bankruptcy of American policy in Lebanon has been demonstrated to the world, as the man we accepted as savior of the country is being ground down by the bloody millstones of revenge and religious fanaticism that are destroying Lebanon.

Even if Gemayel survives his latest crisis alive, he will be politically dead, wielding such power as Syria allows him and no more, like a corrupt Ottoman pasha of old.

How did the Reagan administration come to pin its hopes on such an ineffectual dillettante? Like second marriages, it might be described as the triumph of hope over experience. We should have known better — or at least we should have known Amin Gemayel better.

Where his younger brother was a charismatic leader able to inspire fierce loyalty and confront his enemies with a toughness that commanded respect, Amin is a businessman at heart — soft and manipulative, willing to bargain, always ready to make a deal, inviting the contempt of the violent fanatics who dominate Lebanon today. Bashir was a diamond, brilliant and hard; Amin is a zircon, polished to a certain glitter, but with no real fire or depth.

I met Bashir in the summer of 1982, just a few weeks before he was murdered. He was a remarkable man, exuding sincerity and patriotism. He told me of his ambitious plans for his country — overcoming the corruption and cynicism that had, in his view, kept Lebanon from playing the leading role in the Middle East that he felt sure it could play some day.

Making Bashir's dream come true would have been a task to daunt any mere mortal, but if anyone could achieve it, I thought Bashir at least had a chance. But he never got the chance. An assassin, linked to Syrian intelligence, dynamited Bashir six days before he was to assume the presidency to which he had been elected.

And Amin Gemayel? Even Bashir held him in disdain as a trimmer with no convictions, trading on the family connections to become a millionaire businessman. Shortly before his death, Bashir told my colleague, Barbara Newman, he thought Amin had become "dangerous to the cause of Lebanon's freedom," and had done things for which Bashir would find it "difficult ever to forgive him."

Bashir did not elaborate on the bad blood between the two, but apparently Amin was insensitive to his younger brother's suspicions. Intelligence sources have told me that after Bashir's election, Amin tried to secure a high position for himself in the new government. Bashir flatly refused.

In fact, Amin, chagrined, was actually planning to leave Lebanon to avoid further embarrassment, when his brother was assassinated. Amin then won the power he had coveted, thanks to the good offices of the Israelis and the encouragement of the United States.

Intelligence sources are convinced that Bashir Gemayel was killed on the orders of Assad. Whether the Syrian president was betting that Amin would succeed his brother is not known, but Assad did nothing to discourage the takeover.

And in the two-and-a-half years since, Amin has done nothing to cause Assad to doubt that he did the correct thing in removing Bashir. The younger brother, in contrast, would have been strong enough to resist Syria's historic desire to make Lebanon simply a province of greater Syria.

Amin's increasing domination by Damascus was dismaying enough to Bashir's grieving followers. But they felt the new president also betrayed every principle that Bashir had stood for. As one high-ranking Israeli diplomat put it, "He began to root out all vestiges of 'Bashirism.'"

Whereas Bashir had close ties to Israel, Amin brought about a rapid deterioration of relations with the Israelis and a compensating dependence on Syria.

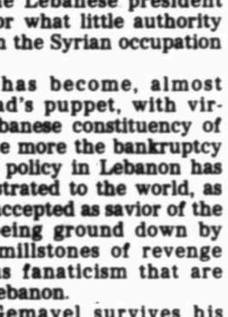

The Christian Lebanese Forces — Bashir's devoted elite guard — were appalled. Never enthusiastic about Amin, they had declined to transfer their allegiance to the new president.

GEORGE F. WILL

Thatcher leading way to future

LONDON — A paradox of modern politics is that some of the most effective leaders lead while looking backward. Churchill was a 19th-century romantic. De Gaulle, entrusted with authorship of the Fifth Republic, had his gaze fixed on the sweep of past grandeur. When Ronald Reagan said, "America is back," he was saying that greatness is traditional. Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, too, brings a retrospective cast of mind to an aggressive attempt to shape the future.

George F. Will

Asked, in an interview at No. 10 Downing St., whether Britain can have a commercial future as bright as its commercial past, Thatcher reacted in the vigorous manner characteristic of the very faithful when confronted by uncomprehending agnosticism. Her answer contained about two percent economics, two percent sociology and 96 percent nationalism.

This was the question: Is not your problem more complicated than the one Reagan saw for himself? Campaigning in the late 1970s, he said Americans are instinctive capitalists, bursting with entrepreneurial creativity, healthy people ready to remake the world if only government would get out of their way. But the British are not that way.

Her terse reply was: "They were." Her expanded reply, delivered with quiet vehemence as she edged forward in her chair, was:

"Most of the major industrial inventions were ours. The steam engine, Brunel's bridges, the spinning jenny, Arkwright and so on, you name it." With her first word, "most," she was gilding the lilly a bit. But gilding lillies in ways that stir confidence is an act of leadership. She continued: Britain has been more creative more recently than all the talk about "the British disease" would suggest. Britain created radar, the jet engine, vertical take-off aircraft, penicillins.

But what happened to that vigor? She says there has been failure, especially in universities, to adapt to Britain's role after empire. The universities were brilliant at producing colonial administrators, but have never adapted to the need to train people for trade and industry. This reflects a "basic snobbery," the prejudice "that trade and industry aren't quite the thing as professions."

About that snobbery, she says icily, "We are getting rid of it." One way she tries to do that is by evoking memories of Britain's proud achievements and by laying waste, rhetorically, to what she sees as institutionalized snobbery.

Recently Oxford University, proving that academic folly knows no nationality, voted against giving Thatcher what it has given other recent prime ministers — an honorary degree. In a speech last weekend she noted that many of Britain's best entrepreneurs came from modest backgrounds, "didn't speak with Oxford accents" and "hadn't got what people call the right connections." What critics "can't stomach is that wealth creators have a tendency to acquire wealth in the process of creating it for others."

Various bishops of the established church have been mixing, as modern bishops everywhere are wont to do, theology and macroeconomics. And they have been criticizing her. So she said, "Some reverend and right reverend prelates have been heard in the land. I make no complaint about that. After all, it wouldn't be spring, would it, without the voice of the occasional cuckoo?" The next morning the headline was:

Dons, clerics
are 'cuckoo'
says Thatcher

A few years ago some protesters were gathered at a hall when Thatcher arrived to deliver a speech. A television reporter asked her reaction to the protest. At first she seemed puzzled. Then she said "Oh, you mean this. Why should I care? These people don't belong to my supporters. And I thank God they don't."

Her political success derives in no small measure from a second paradox: Democracy is government by consent. But one way to get consent from a majority is to be seen to care little for consensus. It has made her a success — soon, an unprecedented success.

A constant complaint about democracy is that electoral cycles overrun the cycles of problems. By the time a government formulates and begins implementing policies, the pendular movement of opinion rearranges the governmental furniture, and the policies do not have time to be tested. In 1979 Thatcher said she would need two full terms — 10 years — to change Britain's course, which meant combatting snobbery and making other attitudinal changes. She may get more than 10 years.

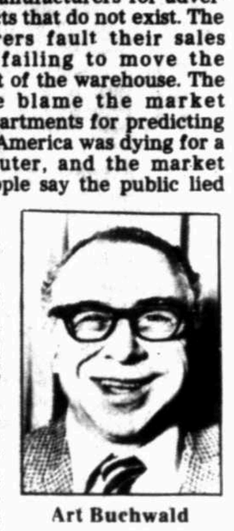

In May 1987, she will break Asquith's (1908-16) record for the longest consecutive residence in No. 10. In 1987 or 1988, she probably will become Britain's Franklin Roosevelt, the only leader since the early emergence of democracy — since, say, the 1832 Reform Bill — to win three consecutive elections.

Computers don't make a home

The boom in home computers hasn't materialized, and one of America's most glamorous industries is running out of steam. There is a lot of finger-pointing as to who is responsible. The retailers blame the manufacturers for advertising products that do not exist. The manufacturers fault their sales forces for failing to move the machines out of the warehouse. The salespeople blame the market research departments for predicting everyone in America was dying for a home computer, and the market research people say the public lied to them.

Art Buchwald

Applegate, a market researcher, showed me a printout of the survey his firm had taken 12 months ago.

"We asked 50,000 people if they would buy a home computer in the next year and 49,910 said they would. Then we asked them why and 67 percent said to balance their checkbooks, and 38 percent said so their kids could someday go to the moon.

"On the basis of these figures we predicted that there would soon be a computer in every home. When our forecasts proved too optimistic we decided to find out why.

"We discovered some interesting things. For example, we found the people who couldn't balance their checkbooks were too stupid to learn how to use a computer to do it for them.

"And it turned out the ones who said they were going to get them for their kids decided to use the money to buy a video recording machine for themselves instead."

"Too bad they didn't say that the first time around."

"We also discovered consumers who had owned a machine were telling everyone that computers were not 'user friendly.' When we asked exactly what they meant by that, they said every time they did their taxes on one it always resolved a dispute in favor of the IRS. They felt since they owned the computer, the least it could do is be on their side."

"Didn't they feel a computer's graphics capability made it a valuable tool in the home?"

"We asked people about that and they said for the first week they enjoyed cutting up a pie into equal shares, but by the second week the thrill was gone. As for charts — it's amazing how little they mean to most households. I interviewed one man who kept putting them up in the kitchen to illustrate his wife's productivity, or lack of it, and she sued him and his computer for mental cruelty."

I asked Applegate if he thought the home market for computers had been saturated.

"It has until we come up with new uses for them. We must prove to the consumer that a computer can do the job easier than he can. For instance, one father we talked to said he would buy a computer if it had the ability to call every house in the neighborhood on Friday night and locate his high school-age daughter when she was supposed to be home. Another person said she would buy a computer if it were programmed to answer all 'junk telephone calls' and short-circuit the machines making them.

"Another person said he wanted a computer that could cripple the department store computer which was dunning him for a bill. The biggest reason people want computers now is to incapacitate and kill other computers that are threatening people's lives. I have recommended that home computer companies in their new advertising campaigns stress the 'hate' factor that people feel for the big machines. If we can persuade Americans they need computers in the home to defend themselves against corporate computers, we'll be back in business."

Applegate's research revealed that one of the reasons home computer sales had fallen off is that they had no sex appeal. Women hated the look of them in the room. So after a month, the majority of machines wound up in a closet, usually covered with someone's Nehru jacket.

"How do you propose to get women to accept a computer in the home?" I asked.

"By getting Geraldine Ferraro to do a TV commercial saying it's the only thing that keeps her family together."

Club's parade supports PDAP, women's center

By CHERI HILL

Cheri Hill moved to Midland 15 years ago from Albuquerque, N.M. She is a past chairwoman of the Parade of Homes and is current president of the Midland Junior Woman's Club.

April 21st marks a parade with all the color, the beauty and the excitement you can imagine! You and your friends may participate in Midland's finest parade, the 1985 Parade of Homes, sponsored by the Midland Junior Woman's Club. This unique parade is coming our way to support two of Midland's most important organizations, the Palmer Drug Abuse Program and the Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and Their Children.

The 1985 Parade of Homes is Midland's 16th annual parade, and the Junior Woman's Club unanimously voted to direct ticket proceeds to these two local organizations dealing with tremendous problems facing our community today — substance abuse and domestic violence.

The Midland Palmer Drug Abuse Program (PDAP) was established in 1979 through the efforts of the Midland Junior Woman's Club and the Junior League of Midland, Inc. Today, PDAP maintains a local office manned by two administrators and six counselors. As of Jan. 1, 1985, PDAP relocated its national office in Midland, and office space at the Petroleum Center has been donated by Sun Exploration Co. for a two-year period. The national office, managed by a director, a training coordinator, and two assistants, serves as a training program center for counselors who will transfer to areas throughout the nation following intensive training.

The primary purpose of PDAP is to focus on companionship while providing private counseling and group therapy for four age groups: Younger group, ages 10-14; senior high group, ages 15-17; older group, ages 18-25; and others, ages 26 up.

The program currently serves over 100 individuals who regularly attend weekly meetings, individuals who are suffering from the devastating effects of mind-changing chemicals and substances. Counselors work with abusers, encouraging them to "stay straight one-day-at-a-time" in a "get high" society. Over 60 concerned parents are involved in the local PDAP Parents Support Group, which was established in an effort to deal with the problems encountered in living with an addictive personality.

Midland's drug scene is indeed a reality! According to Bob Savage, PDAP director, Midland's availability of mind-changing chemicals, greater social acceptance of alcohol and drug use, and peer pressure to "fit in" are resulting in increasing levels of substance abuse in our community. PDAP is a vital alternative for the abuser in our community, and the primary requirement for membership in PDAP is the desire to live a chemical/substance-free life. The untreated abusers may be characterized by low self-esteem, depression, isolation, rebellion, feelings of hopelessness and rejection.

In observing and talking with individuals involved in PDAP's treatment, I see a surge of hope in their goal of one-day-at-a-time sobriety. Those who seek treatment through organizations such as PDAP have a 60 to 80 percent chance of recovery; the abusers who do not establish a recovery process risk institutionalization or violent death due to car accidents, overdose or suicide. Drug abuse is the third leading killer in the United States; the main cause of death among 15-19-year-olds is a direct or indirect result of alcohol or drugs.

PDAP strives to treat the entire family in an atmosphere of love, understanding and fellowship, and hundreds of young people are reaping the benefits of PDAP.

The history of the Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and Their Children dates back to 1979, when one small trailer housed a few victims of domestic violence. Today, the Midland shelter for hundreds of physically and emotionally abused women and their children is a reality. The center is meeting fundamental needs as well as providing counseling and referral for the residents and outpatients.

Because domestic violence is not often reported, it is referred to as the "Unreported Epidemic." This ugly epidemic strikes without consideration to age, race or socio-economic and educational levels. The FBI estimates that one out of every two women will, at some point in their lives, be physically abused by their spouse or partner. The FBI further reports that a beating occurs every 15 seconds, and 20 percent of all women seeking emergency room treatment are victims of wife-beating.

Our local abuse center maintains a staff of four full-time and two part-time administrators. At present, the center's capacity is 36 women and children; however, future plans include additional dormitory space. Nearly 500 women and children sought shelter from physical abuse in the Midland center during 1984.

Many researchers feel that the creation of shelters like our local center is the only immediate solution to the urgent reality of battering. According to the Executive Director, Debra Pockat, the center exists to offer an atmosphere for change and rehabilitation for victims of domestic violence. Hundreds of battered and beaten human beings are being restored in our community because of the Permian Basin Center for Battered Women and Their Children.

The Midland Junior Woman's Club, a group of 65 concerned and community-oriented young women, marches in support of these two organizations. Please come "march" along with us in our parade and rally 'round PDAP and the Center for Battered Women and Their Children. Here comes the parade, and you may purchase your $7.50 Parade of Homes tickets in advance from any Junior Woman's Club member. For further ticket information, call 684-9641.

The exciting parade will take place Sunday, April 21, from 1:30 to 5:30 p.m. We will present four exquisite homes offering various moods, colors, architectural designs, and all the beauty you can imagine! The four generous, gracious 1985 homeowners are Mrs. Lola Graham, 4501 Robin Lane; Mr. and Mrs. J.C. Henry, 3 Santa Anita Lane; Mr. and Mrs. W.E. Tally, 9 Saddle Club Drive; and Mr. and Mrs. J.A. Walton, 3903 Godfrey.

Midlanders, thank you for your tremendous support in the Junior Woman's Club's past 15 Parade of Homes. Thank you as you "march" in the 1985 parade on April 21, to benefit two worthy community organizations!

"Speaking Out" columnists are invited to submit articles on subjects of their choice. They should be limited to 850 words or less.

Violence isn't way to fight crime

Bill Modisett

Remember when childhood was an innocent time?

I think it was 1962. Or maybe 1965. Those were the days when kids didn't dream of anything except baseball or fishing or a weekend at the lake or a visit from favorite cousins. It was, well ... innocent.

Something changed. Along about 1970, the world took a quantum leap into the present and fishing, baseball and all those other "innocent" things have suddenly been pushed aside for pursuits of consequence such as "hacking" into the Pentagon's computers and, you guessed it, starting World War III: The Final Confrontation. (Of course, it will look as though they started it.)

Oh, for those days of innocence again.

Now, the "in" thing for still-wet-behind-the-ears youngsters is gang warfare. And they're not the old-style gangs, made up of leather-jacketed, blue-jeaned toughies sporting duck-tail haircuts. That isn't "cool" — or whatever the slang term is today for acceptability.

In Fort Worth a group calling itself the "Legion of Doom" has pipe-bombed a student's car, killed a cat to put in another student's car and continues to wage what police are labeling a good-intentioned campaign of violence against drug use and crime at their high school. The students involved aren't your standard troublemakers. Police say they're honor students and athletes who apparently believe they're doing the right thing by taking the law into their own hands.

Good-intentioned? Twisted shades of Bernhard Goetz, maybe, but not your typical masked man riding to the rescue.

The Fort Worth escapades are the best example of the worst in society — no-holds-barred vigilante justice, which is no more than runaway injustice. They're the start of anarchy, a society without rules.

How can I, on the one hand, stand up for Bernhard Goetz, the New York subway gunman, and on the other condemn honor students for coming down on drug use and crime?

Simple. It's the perspective. Goetz has now been indicted by a grand jury for his shootings. If the evidence presented in court proves he was wrong in responding with gunfire to thugs on the subway, I'll be the first to publicly castigate him and hail his prosecution.

One matter has not changed, however. New York City authorities have not responded to the lawless acts that plague subway riders and because of that fact, no citizen should face prosecution for defending himself against attackers.

It has to be proven, of course, that Goetz was defending himself and did not become the attacker.

The situation in Fort Worth is different. The students have taken the law into their own hands and are carrying out punitive actions. No judge, no jury, no accountability. Simple vigilante justice.

Somebody innocent is going to get hurt and that isn't the way to overcome drug use or crime, although the objective of conquering both is commendable.

The students should be involved in cleaning out their high school. They're the only ones who can truly bring the pressure to effect a change. But violence isn't the way.

If they believe it is, I dread tomorrow.

'Goon Busters' article irresponsible reporting

As a fan of the Midland College Chaparrals basketball team and coaches, I protest Terry Williamson's insulting "Goon Busters" column that appeared in your sports section on March 13. If that article reflects Mr. Williamson's true opinion of our 1984-85 Conference and Regional Championship Team, then he doesn't know enough about basketball to be writing about it, and the Chaps do not need his brand of publicity.

To imply that these fine young athletes (he called them "mad gorillas") are intent on injuring their opponents is the ultimate in irresponsible reporting — in fact, such vicious accusations could be interpreted as libel and slander! Equally outrageous was his description of Coach Jerry Stone as a "Dr. Frankenstein" who creates monsters of his players!

Jerry Stone is an excellent teacher/coach of major college quality and we are fortunate to have him at Midland College. He and his assistant coach have recruited a fine group of talented freshmen players (including Tony Wright and Eddie Frazier, who were badly maligned in Williamson's article) and we want these young men to come back next year. I hope this type of negative press does not discourage them.

I don't know how many Chap games Mr. Williamson has attended, but my husband and I have witnessed every home game and many out-of-town games for the past five seasons and we've never seen a Chap player deliberately attempt to injure an opponent. And to state that the Chaps "never get cheated on a foul" is the height of basketball ignorance.

That article was a malicious and totally unwarranted attack that demeans the team, the coaches and the fans. The timing couldn't have been worse, coming just two days prior to national qualifying competition. This type of sports "journalism" is a discredit to the Midland Reporter-Telegram and to its sports editor.

Alternatives do exist to MX missile

The President argues that Congress has the alternatives of either voting for the MX missile regardless of its merits, or undermining the Geneva negotiations by unilaterally giving up a major U.S. weapon.

There is a better alternative: First, the House should vote down the highly destabilizing MX. It is both a vulnerable and tempting target and a first-strike threat. It would lessen both our security and our ability to deter nuclear war, and surely would handicap our negotiators.

Then Congress should pass a verifiable bilateral moratorium, subject to reciprocal action by the Soviets, banning the testing and deployment of nuclear or space weapons.

A ban on testing and deployment would immediately halt the arms race. That would increase security on both sides and greatly simplify and facilitate negotiations toward deep reductions in both our nuclear arsenals, the stated immediate goal of both the U.S. and the Soviets.

Reckless spending by government 'ludicrous'

For the past several months the Governor has been calling on all state agencies to "tighten the belt" in light of the state's current fiscal crisis. And while the Governor may talk about cutting the cost of state government, little or no action has been taken.

Early in February, I noted with outrage a report which stated that the Texas Employment Commissioners are spending "almost $1 million to expand personal staffs and hire more agency administrators." In addition, Commissioners Ed Grisham and Ronnie Luna, White appointees who make close to $60,000 annually, are asking for $26,836 to renovate a conference room. To make matters worse, the Governor has already approved half of the staff additions.

This type of government spending during a budget crunch is ludicrous. The Governor should immediately end the reckless spending and reread the study which called the TEC "top-heavy and inefficient." The taxpayers need a break!

Midland volunteers need compliment

"Citizens Cited for Their Efforts."

Earlier this month, your editorial page carried the kind words of Judy Morris, Director of Education, Casa de Amigos, under the headline, "Woman Cited for her Efforts" in regard to Adult Literacy. I prefer the above caption for the following reasons.

Midland is a city with a mind and a heart. I wouldn't trade it for any other city in the world. In it I have found unequalled challenges and rewards. If there is a "debt of gratitude," I accept this compliment in behalf of the wonderful Midland volunteers who have for years helped, silently but with dedication, mostly anonymously, through "Literacy and English as a Second Language." The program couldn't exist without the unpaid but determined volunteers.

I am excited and delighted to see other efforts made, such as "Need to Read" because we all should work towards eradicating the consequences of having illiterates in our population. Different approaches will benefit all.

I miss the guidance and cooperation of my co-worker, Emma Vandeventer, in retirement now due to failing health. I thank God for her, for Judy Morris and the volunteers who help us set goals and programs which enrich our lives and our community.

Local school board involvement advised

As a parent and teacher in Midland I am concerned about the future of our schools. There are many people in Midland who have worked hard to improve the quality of education for our children. There are many others who can contribute but for whatever reasons have not gotten themselves involved.

This letter is to encourage anyone who has a love for children and a desire to see our schools reach their potential to run for our school board in future elections. I think it is a poor reflection of our community to see two of the three available positions unopposed in the coming April 6 election.

Our schools will not improve without dedicated leadership. As a teacher I understand the importance of my profession in the education of our children.

I also understand the importance of people like Betsy Robinson who is not afraid of the task of becoming informed and involved and looking for the best that we can offer the children that make their path through our schools.

Reagan deserves credit for victory of MX missile

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — President Reagan's double win for the MX missile in the House of Representatives this past week was a narrow but major victory for him.

With the previous double win in the Senate, the House vote served notice on the new Soviet leadership that a bipartisan majority in Congress supports our negotiators in the Geneva arms talks. Now our team can negotiate from a position of strength.

The president deserves great credit for achieving on two different occasions this past week approval of the Democrat-controlled House for $1.5 billion to purchase 21 more MX missiles. The first vote Tuesday was to appropriate the funds. The second vote Thursday was to release the money. This unique procedure was established last year because of the controversial nature of the missile issue.

Opponents contend the weapon would give the U.S. first strike capability. Proponents say it will deprive the Soviets of their existing capability to knock out our land-based missiles in a surprise first strike.

Although it was a squeak-through vote on both occasions in the House, it was nevertheless a triumph for the persuasive leadership of the president. The day before the first House vote, 100 Democrats were brought to the White House in U.S. Army buses for a meeting with him. By the time he finished his personal appeal to them to "vote for peace" by strengthening the bargaining position of our negotiators, he had won the day for the weapons system. Even Speaker "Tip" O'Neill, who led the Democratic fight against the MX, paid tribute to the president. "Make no mistake about it," the Boston political "pro" said. "The power and popularity of the president is awesome — as awesome as the weapon itself."

Now I will share with you an encouraging report on the professional competance of our negotiating team in Geneva which Bernard Kaplan, my friend and our chief European correspondent, has sent me:

"I've just recently returned from the look-in on the Geneva nuclear negotiations which we recently discussed.

"First of all, one is struck by the calm professionalism of the Americans taking part in what will almost certainly prove to be the most complex and arduous set of negotiations U.S. officials have undertaken in living memory, if not ever. This isn't merely a question of expertise, but of an ability to take a perceptive, overall view, neither over-stating the possibilities of concrete achievement nor the reverse.

"More than half of the 50-odd members of the American negotiating team have taken part in previous U.S.-Soviet nuclear negotiations. So this helps account for the professionalism. It may be that, for the first time, the American negotiators are a match or more than a match for their Soviet opposite numbers. It's refreshing to be able to say this when, so often in the past, American diplomats have been invidiously compared to the Soviets in terms of toughness, patience and a grasp of the political realities.

"The consensus view among those carrying out the negotiations for our government is that, if matters are handled right, a successful negotiation isn't to be despaired of. No one places excessive reliances on the Gorbachev factor as necessarily improving the chances. Instead, confidence was expressed that, if we are hardheaded and pertinacious, the Russians may finally accept the value of reaching agreement on something other than strictly their own terms. This will be especially so, it's felt in Geneva, if they recognize they can't use the negotiations further to divide the U.S. from their NATO allies over such matters as the space defense program and intermediate missile balance in Europe.

"There's a widespread feeling in Geneva that the U.S. team is extraordinarily well-balanced at the top. In particular, the professional diplomats feel the choice of former Senator John Tower to head the American side in strategic arms reduction talks was a stroke of genius. Tower is appreciated for his intelligence, his political grasp and military knowledge drawn from his Senate armed services committee duty. Max Kampelman, as a man who came out of the East-West security conference with his own reputation as a Russian-handler enhanced, is also highly rated. So is the third senior negotiator, Maynard Glitman, who was Paul Nitze's deputy at the previous talks in Geneva and therefore is a man who knows his way around the Russians. If the quality of the personnel is anything to go by, we'll do well."

WEST TEXAS OUTDOORS

Midland anglers break records

Good fishing? It really isn't that far away. Midland's Jeff Lynde caught a record 10-pound walleye at Moss Creek Lake, just outside of Big Spring, but it was a record that was short lived. A few days later, an 11 pounder was reeled in.

Another Midlander found success at Moss Creek when Jim Rodgers took a 6½ pound black bass.

Moss Creek is located five miles east of Big Spring off Interstate 20 and seven miles south. Park Supervisor Ronald Robey informs overnight camping, covered shelters, a designated swimming area, boat ramps, fishing docks, groceries and bait and a newly-built model-airplane airport are available. the charge is a $1 entrance permit fee for those six to 65. Gates close at 6 a.m...

STRIPED BASS suddenly became aggressively active at Lake Spence last weekend with Ballinger's Eddie Lewis taking a record 30-pound, four ounce striper. White bass are also biting with Tommy Blewitt, Shallowater, reporting a 9 1/4 pound drum.

Lewis' record topped the record set by Jerry Stanaford, Midland, last June by three ounces. Lewis used a rod and reel and gold fish bait.

Other catches included: Dennis Tilley, Midland, 9-9½ striper, and Robbye Wilmut, Midland, a 10-5 striper, out of Paint Creek Marina. Kenneth Burns, Odessa, pair of 16-pound stripers, out of Circle R; Joe Weber, San Angelo, four stripers totaling 36 pounds out of Gas and Grub No. 2...

At Circle R, Don Manley, Midland, and party, landed six stripers to 17 pounds.

Ivy Bowers, Midland, took a 7½ pound drum at Spence...

JERRY DON BRYAN, Midland, took a six-pound, one-ounce lake record small mouth bass out of Lake Amistad. It was one ounce short of the state record. The 85-mile lake just north of Del Rio is fed by the Rio Grande, Pecos and Devil rivers and is reporting many good catches this spring...

SIX MAJOR petrochemical companies will preserve 8,580 acres of prime waterfowl habitat in Brazoria County's Peach Point Marsh and convey its management to the Texas Parks and Wildlife Dept. The land is valued at $5 million, but the TPWD's cost is only $1.5 million.

Peach Point Marsh winters more white-fronted and Canada geese than any other marsh in Brazoria County. The goose flock of the San Bernard National Wildlife Refuge to the west makes heavy use of the area in the fall and winter. And the Jones Creek ridge, to the east, winters over 500 sandhill cranes...

ONE OF the changes in fishing regulations for 1985-86 regarding cleaning or filleting of fish in fresh water may be causing some concern among Texas anglers.

The TPWD is proposing to extend the "final destination" rule now in effect for salt water to include all waters of the state. "The proposal simply means that it would be illegal for a fisherman to remove the head or tail, or to fillet, any fish while still in his boat," said Ernest Simmons, inland fisheries chief.

"This does not mean they have to keep the fish whole until arriving back home."

If adopted, it still would allow fishermen to process fish at the fish-cleaning stations or other shoreline facilities. "They would be prohibited from cleaning fish on jetties or fishing piers, however," Simmons advised...

SOME OF the best crappie fishing in Texas is to be found on Lake Wright Patman, just southwest of Texarkana, says TWPD biologist Mike Ryan. "March has always been a productive month for crappie fishermen on Patman reservoir, even during inclement weather."

Ryan recommends anglers with boats try to fish the three hotspots: the old river channel near midlake; from Kelley Creek boat road to Gatlin Slough across from Ramp No. 1; and near the south end of the dam.

"Fishing the side of the river channel at depths of 16-20 feet, near snags or inundated under brush, tends to be most productive," Ryan noted...

Sampson paces Rockets with 36

From Wire Reports

HOUSTON — Ralph Sampson scored 22 second-half points and finished with a game-high 36 to lead Houston to a 106-96 win over Utah in NBA action Saturday night.

Houston, now 43-30, led by as much as 21 points in the first quarter, but Utah battled back to lead 54-48 at the half. Behind Sampson's 10 points, Houston regained the advantage, 77-72, after the third quarter. Sampson added 12 fourth-quarter points to secure the Houston win.

Lewis Lloyd added had 20 for the Rockets. Thurl Bailey and Darrell Griffith led Utah with 20 and 17 points, respectively.

The loss gives Utah a 37-39 record, and drops them to fifth place in the NBA's Midwest Division — a half-game behind San Antonio.

Kings 137, Warriors 121

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Rookie Otis Thorpe scored 28 points and Reggie Theus added 26 as Kansas City rolled over Golden State. The Kings, who won for the eighth straight time at home, snapped a two-game losing streak with the victory and raised their record to 30-45.

Nets 123, Knicks 114

NEW YORK — Albert King hit 10 of 11 shots and scored 22 of his season-high 28 points in the second half.

King, who has been limited to 35 games this season because of shoulder, groin and back injuries, was seven for seven from the field and scored 16 points in the fourth quarter as the Nets stayed at least three points ahead of their cross-river rivals after starting the quarter with a 92-84 lead.

The victory gave the Nets a 37-38 record and virtually tied them with Washington, 36-37, for fifth place in the Eastern Conference. The sixth-place finisher in the conference must play powerful Philadelphia in the first round of the playoffs.

NBA

Cleveland 117, Indiana 94

RICHFIELD, Ohio — World B. Free scored 27 points as the Cleveland Cavaliers beat Indiana Pacers.

The Cavs, 31-43, with their third consecutive victory, lead the Atlanta Hawks by 1½ games in the battle for the final playoff berth in the Eastern Conference. Indiana, 20-54, suffered its ninth consecutive defeat.

Bucks 106, Hawks 95

MILWAUKEE — Kevin Grevey scored 18 points and Paul Mokeski added 17 to lead the Milwaukee Bucks.

Sixers 122, Bulls 117

CHICAGHO — Moses Malone erupted for 10 of his team-high 31 points in a torrid fourth quarter to lift the Philadelphia 76ers Chicago. Charles Barkley added seven of his 22 points for the 76ers in the final period as well.

Malone, who was called for a critical technical foul late in the fourth quarter, hit a clutch slam dunk and free throw with 2:11 left in the contest to put the Sixers ahead 116-109.

Laughlin power-play goals spark Capitals

From Wire Reports

LANDOVER, Md. — Craig Laughlin scored two power-play goals in the first period as the Washington Capitals defeated the New York Islanders, 4-3.

Washington's Alan Haworth also scored on a power play in the second period against a penalty-killing unit that entered the game as the best in the NHL. All three New York goals also came on extra-man plays.

The Caps took the season series from the Islanders by a 4-3 margin, the first time they have topped the Islanders in 11 NHL seasons. The same two teams will meet in the Patrick Divison semifinals when the Stanley Cup playoffs begin in the Capital Centre on April 10.

Montreal 7, Bruins 3

MONTREAL— Mats Naslund's power-play goal at 13:20 of the second period broke a 3-3 tie, and Mark Hunter added a goal for Montreal 28 seconds later to spark the Canadiens to a 7-3 NHL win over the Boston.

Naslund and Bobby Smith had two goals each for Montreal, which extended its winning streak to three games.

Naslund gave Montreal its first lead with his 40th goal of the season. Tom Kurvers' slap shot from the blue line went to the left corner of the crease from where Naslund deflected it past Peeters, who is 0-3-1 in his last four games.

Devils 6, Penguins 4

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — John MacLean scored midway through the third period and Rich Preston added an insurance goal for New Jersey.

The triumph enabled the Devils, 22-45-9, to tie Pittsburgh, 24-46-5, for fifth place in the Patrick Division, five points behind the New York Rangers, who hold fourth place and the last playoff spot. The Devils also took the season series from the Penguins, 5-2.

Pittsburgh scored twice in the third period, tying the score 4-4 and setting up MacLean's game-winning goal, a 30-foot slap shot from the circle past Penguins' goalie Dennis Herron at 7:55. Preston scored his 100th career goal at 15:34.

Nordiques 3, Blues 1

QUEBEC — Michel Goulet scored his 51st and 52nd goals of the season and assisted on Quebec's other goal as the Nordiques remained in a first-place Adams Division deadlock with the Montreal Canadiens. They've won five of their last six games. Quebec has five games remaining, including a crucial showdown against the Canadiens in Montreal next Thursday. Montreal has four games to play.

Sabres 2, Whalers 1

HARTFORD, Conn. — Lindy Ruff and Gates Orlando scored goals in the final seven minutes as Buffalo ended Hartford's seven-game winning streak.

NHL

They finished second to Bryan in the sprint relay in a rare loss without regular Chris Kenny. Brackens, expected to bring home 10 points in the 400, jumped the gun and wasn't even allowed to race. It's been that kind of season for Brackens, who started the season with a leg injury. And just as he is looking to regain his form that won him Region I honors a year ago, he scratches in a meet, giving the Rebs a swing of eight points in the wrong direction.

"I just couldn't hold my position," said Brackens after the faulty start in the 400 in a race that was restarted three times. However, Brackens came back to insure the Lee victory with an anchor leg romp in the 1600 relay. "It feels good," he said after that one. "We won the meet, didn't we?"

But in any team victory, there are highlights and Lee had plenty — mostly at the end. Jones won the 200 with a 22.04 in a fight with the wind.

"The wind was killing me," said Jones. "I felt like I was running pretty good after coming off the curve, but the wind was rough at the start of the race."

For the most part, the times were pretty blaze since a stiff wind ripped at San Angelo Stadium all day.

Lee sophomore Mike Garza was a double winner for the third week in a row by winning both the 3200 (9:39.73) and the 1600 (4:34.60). He is unbeaten in the 3200 in three races and has lost only once in the 1600. His feat is even more remarkable since he ran an 800 meter leg in the special two-mile relay where the Rebels were second.

"I really didn't feel like running this last one (1600 meters)," said Garza. "I was really tired. It's tough to run the two long races and then 800 meters on a relay too. But I think it will help me in the long run because I won't be running any more relays for the rest of the season. This shows you how far you can push yourself."

Jones led Lee with 23 points, winning the 200, running a leg on both relay teams and a fourth in the long jump with career best 22-4. "We should have won the sprint relay, but we got too far behind. Still, I think we can win the district meet."

Lee was second in two other events when Quintus Hampton ran a 39.29 in the intermediate hurdles and Brad Cooper posted a 49.0 in the 400, the event Brackens experienced his problem.

Cleveland Tolver gave Lee a big third place in the shot put with a 50-10 as the meet was coming to a close and Harold Woods had a third place 15.33 in the 110 hurdles.

The big event was the 1600 where Lee got 15 points and a chance to win the meet with an experienced relay team. Garza won it, but Phillip Scott placed fourth and Derek Westbrook sixth.

San Angelo was a surprising third with 92 points and led most of the day until the final three events. Odessa Permian was a distant fifth with 66, five points behind Amarillo Palo Duro.

Permian has been Lee's main antagonist this season, but Mojo was hampered since hurdle ace Gerry Guster sat out this week to nurse a sore knee. He is one of the top hurdlers in the nation this year.

San Angelo got a victories in the 3200 relay, long jump with a record setting 23-10½, 100 meters with an 11.15 from Mike Ellington and a 48.95 in the 400 from Ottoway Perryman. The only other record on this windy day was a 6-9 in the high jump by Amarillo High's Robert Richardson. Jeff Crockett of Palo Duro also had 6-9, but was second on more misses.

The Green Wave of Monahans easily won Division II with 142 points while Kerrville Tivy was second with 96. Monahans won four events. Andrews' Randy Friemel won the high jump with a big jump of 6-10 while teammate Kurt Willems won the pole vault with a 13.0.

Division III was won by Vernon's 102 points while Frenship was second with 70.

Munday, who also won a state football championship last fall, won Division IV with 80 points while Anson was second with 63.

Cooper, Big Spring posts 4-5A victories

From Staff Reports

Abilene Cooper pitcher Terry Suggs gave up a two-run homer to San Angelo's Larry Guerrero in the bottom of the sixth inning Saturday to lose his bid for a no-hit shutout.

No matter, The Cougars held on to post an 8-2 victory to remain one game behind Midland Lee in District 4-5A standings at 5-1.

Cooper got home runs from Nathan Jones, an inside the park solo shot to the left-center gap, and a two-run blast by Doug Hadley over the left field fence.

In other 4-5A action Saturday, Big Spring won only its second 4-5A game out of the last 20, snapping a three-game losing streak with a 4-1 victory over Abilene High.

The Steers jumped out to a 2-0 lead in the first inning and added their final runs in the fifth for a 4-0 lead. The Eagles managed only one run in the top of the seventh frame to avoid the shutout.

Big Spring pitcher Mike Dodd went the distance to improve his record to 2-3 on the year, allowing only three hits. Eagle Mike Keith took the loss.

Stanford wins NCAA

AUSTIN (AP) - The Pablo Morales-led Stanford Cardinal stormed to the school's first NCAA Men's Swimming and Diving Championships in 18 years Saturday.

Olympian Morales won three events and swam on a winning relay during the three-day competition as Stanford surprised the two-times defending champion Florida Gators.

Stanford finished with 403.5 points to 329 for Florida. Texas was third with 306.

Morales, a Stanford sophomore, closed with an American record in the 200 yards butterfly Saturday night as the Cardinal squad finished on a high note, leading the competition wire-to-wire starting on Thursday.

Morales clocked a 1:42.85 which bested the old American record of 1:43.81 by Craig Beardsley of Florida.

The Cardinal victory overshadowed California's Matt Biondi, who knocked Rowdy Gaines' last American record out of the books.

ICE ART

Text by David Lee Forrest

Sculpture has traditionally been one of the most durable, permanent art forms, but some sculptors' soaring eagles, graceful swans and proud dragons turn into mere puddles of water within hours.

"Almost any ice carving will last for five to six hours," said Robert Vervynch, executive chef of Mission Country Club.

Ice carvings are often used as chilly but grandiose centerpieces adorning banquet tables for parties.

While primarily decorative, ice sculptures originally had a very utilitarian purpose.

"Ice carving was founded in the late 1800s by Auguste Escoffier for the purpose of preserving ice cream bombes, which are best presented when placed upon an ice base," according to Vervynch.

Vervynch still sometimes makes ice carvings intended as much to keep food chilled as to look pretty, such as small ice boats to keep shrimp cool.

Vervynch and his staff members carve at least 40 ice sculptures a month, he said.

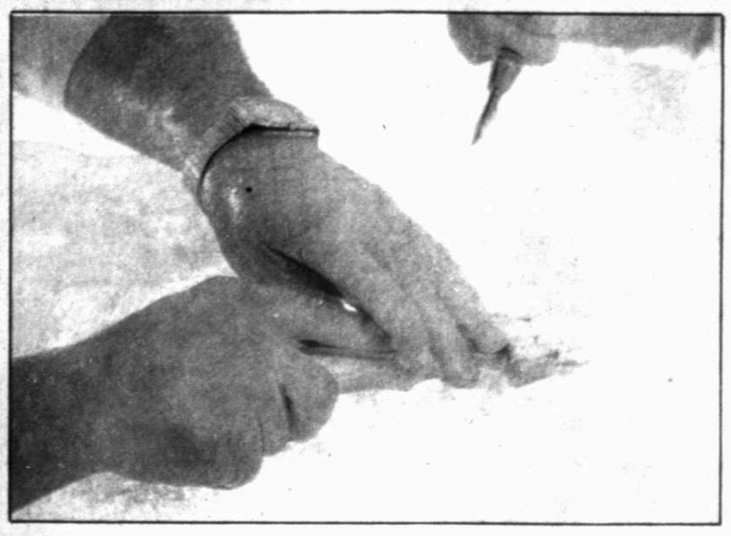

One of Mission Country Club's ice carvers, Mike McDonald, recently won third place in the ice carving category at the Texas Chef Association's Culinary Salon statewide competition in Dallas.

Like most Midland ice carvers, McDonald uses an ice pick to scratch a rough outline of his sculpture on one face of a large ice block. The standard block of ice weighs 300 pounds and is 22 inches wide, 42 inches tall and 11 inches thick.

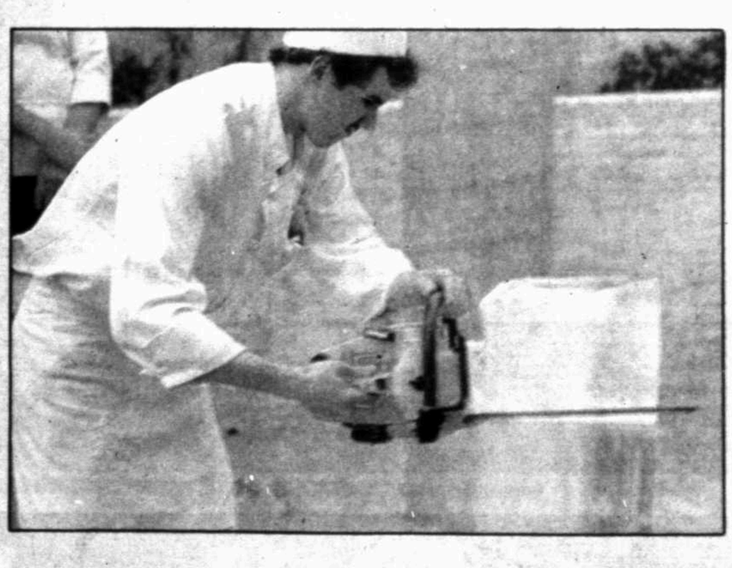

Please see ICE, Page 2E

First invented as a method of serving ice cream bombes in the late 1800s, ice sculptures, such as the eagle carving from the Masters Club shown in the top photo, are now used primarily to decorate elaborate banquet tables. Each chef has his own preferred method of carving ice. In the photo above, Masters Club's Jean Pierre Thevenaz, executive chef, left, and chef Inzo Russo, work with handtools. The eagle sculpture in the photo in the far left, was carved with a chainsaw from a 300-pound block of ice at Mission Country Club. Mike McDonald, an ice carver at Mission, left, starts by scratching a rough outline on the face of the ice, then transforms it into a statue.

Artists often throw away their own pictures more powerful than words

By BARBARA MAYER
Associated Press

Illustrations communicate ideas, convey feelings and sell products.

Yet, despite the fact that a single picture is said to be more powerful than a thousand words, they are tossed out casually in last month's magazine, yesterday's newspaper. And the originals of the images are often thrown away by the artists who created them.

That used to be the scenario where illustrations were concerned. But lately, the illustrator's art has been treated with more respect by a growing number of enthusiasts and collectors.

Recently in New York, for example, there were two large illustration exhibitions at the same time. One, at the Society of Illustrators' headquarters, traced the history of American illustration between 1880 and 1980 and featured hundreds of framed originals.

Another, at the Smithsonian Institution's Cooper-Hewitt Museum of Design, revealed the art of contemporary European illustration.

ACCORDING TO Edward Booth-Clibborn, chairman of the Designers & Art Directors Association of London, who selected the 150 examples in the Cooper-Hewitt show, some of the most imaginative and creative art work in Europe appears in the mass media.

Although some of the world's most talented artists have been illustrators, Clibborn says they have not been given the recognition and acclaim they deserve from the public or from art critics.

The annual juried exhibitions he arranges are designed to remedy this omission.

Despite some neglect, illustrators are gaining more recognition in the United States, says Walt Reed, co-author of "The Illustrator in America 1880-1980," recently published by Madison House. Reed finds there has been a dramatic increase of interest in original illustrations as collectible art works. The work of older artists and those now deceased has appreciated most in value. But living illustrators are also finding there is a market for their originals among collectors, he says.

In the 10 years since he began publishing a collector's newsletter, adds Reed, the number of collectors has grown from a handful — mainly illustrators themselves — to encompass collectors among the general public. Auction houses, investors and decorators have also supported the development of the market which periodically booms and languishes.

ONE TEST of the viability of a medium as an art form is if museums choose to collect and show it. By this measure, illustrations are becoming more acceptable. Several museums with illustration collections, such as the Corner House Museum in West Stockbridge, Mass., the New Britain (Conn.) Museum of American Art, the Delaware Art Museum in Wilmington, and the Brandywine River Museum in Chadds Ford, Pa., are expanding.

According to Reed, today's interest in illustration merely returns it to the position of importance it formerly occupied. This position was toppled when television usurped the role of magazines, in the mid-'60s and when photography began to dominate as an advertising and illustration technique.

Reasons for the popularity of illustrations as an item of home decor include their lower price, high decorative value and the appeal of their subject matter.

The older examples are especially appealing because of their nostalgic recreations of the past. Furthermore, the requirements of the illustrator's art for attractive and clear communication of a feeling, idea or situation make this work easier to understand and relate to than some "fine" art is.

THOSE WHO shop for illustrations to use as decorative art in the home often find they are relatively inexpensive measured against other types of art. Though prices may go up to $100,000 for the important work of a very well-known illustrator, such as the late Norman Rockwell, several hundred dollars is usually enough to get started.

Besides a handful of galleries, collectors or incipient collectors may find examples of current or past illustrations at auction houses, rare and second-hand book outlets, antique shops and even at garage sales and second-hand shops.

ICE

Then he fires up a small chainsaw and starts carefully — but noisily — lobbing off chunks of ice until he has transformed the block into a rough statue.

Asked how he knows where to cut and how deeply, McDonald gave a classic sculptor's reply, "I just eliminate what doesn't belong there."

HE ALSO ADDS most of his detailing with delicate applications of the chainsaw to the ice. McDonald prefers using the chainsaw to handtools because it is faster and the powersaw's fast-moving blade is able to cut into ice without his having to bear down and risk shattering the carving.

"Pressure is what kills the ice," he said.

Not all ice sculptors use the same techniques.

"Everybody does it a little differently," said Bill Chambers, executive chef of the Petroleum Club of Midland. "I base out on a chainsaw. Then I do the actual sculpting with a chisel. I use a little pocket saw to finish with."

JEAN PIERRE THEVENAZ of the Master's Club does his ice carvings entirely by hand, but not because he's an artistic ascetic. He used a chainsaw, he said, until "I burned it out."

Rather than replace the saw, he now simply uses handtools.

While McDonald carves a simple sculpture in a half an hour and Chambers said it doesn't take him more than an hour to carve a sculpture, Thevenaz said, "It takes me an hour and 20 minutes or so" doing it all by hand.

The chefs say they learned the esoteric art in a variety of ways.

Vervynch said he was taught by an Austrian chef; McDonald learned it from attending a culinary school in New York.

THEY HAVE TAUGHT four people in six months at Mission Country Club to carve ice. "We just give them the ice and let them make mistakes. It takes lots, lots of practice," said Vervynch.

Chambers, who has been an executive chef for 35 years, said, "I picked it up from the ice carvers I worked with. They didn't have schools to go to then."

He first practiced by carving bars of soap, he said, before seriously tackling the ice. "Once you get the fundamentals of them, you can do them by eye."

"I just learned to do it by myself," said Thavanez. "I saw someone else do it and I thought, 'That's not too tough.'

"I MADE MY mistakes," he conceded.

Brad Evers and Jeff Zimmerman of the Plaza Club are also both self-taught. "We just learned by doing it," Evers said.

The chefs said the ephemeral nature of carefully-crafted ice carvings doesn't bother them.

"It's the same thing with food," said Thavanez. "You spend maybe three or four hours and it's gone in 10 minutes. It's our job. There's still satisfaction in it."

Vervynch said, "Just one well-presented ice carving is worth it."

Almost 60 persons from Midland and surrounding towns participated in a "Classic Highlights of Greece" tour recently. The trip was sponsored by the University of Texas of the Permian Basin and led by UTPB professor Dr. Frank Samponaro and his wife, Marsha.

Among the Midlanders on the trip were Francine Weaver, Mary Lou Simpson, Snooky and Raymond Howard, Sandy and Jim Alsup, Marion and Ken Nordeman and son, Chris, Sheila and Bill Morrow, Vannah and David Kleinbeck, Keller Stamy and Sandra and Smith Ray and sons, Ted and Andrew.

While in Athens, the group took an exciting sightseeing tour which included the Acropolis, Royal Palace, the Stadium and National Archaeological Museum, among many other interesting and historic plces. They also enjoyed a sightseeing tour in Herakleion, a seaport on the island of Crete, and a visit to the fascinating Knossos museum. From the city of Piraeus, they took a day's cruise to the islands of Aegina, Poros and Hydra.

The Classical Greece portion of their trip included the ancient cities of Corinth, Mycenae, Epidaurus, Nauplia, Olympia and Delphi.

TWENTY-TWO SENIORS from Midland High School and several boarding schools entertained with a "Luau '85" party last weekend at the Britton Industries warehouse.

Hosting were Jennifer Atlee, Laura Black, Carolyn Britton, Randy Bosworth, Camille Cain, Charla Carter, Mary Darlington, Elise de Compiegne, Mab Fitz-Gerald, Susan Fry, Samantha Holman, Bitsy Hopper, Sully Hunt, Kelly Munn, Kristie Raney, Ted Ray, Leigh Ann Runyan, Kathy Scott, Beth Stanley, Darren Thorpe, Michael Tucker and Betsy Woodruff. They were identifiable by their matching attire, purple shirts imprinted to match the invitation, and shorts featuring various Hawaiian scenes.

Decorations carried out the party's theme of "Splash." A false ceiling was created with multicolored crepe paper streamers, and a large beach scene mural adorned one wall. The 22 popcorn tins, which were later presented to the hosts and hostesses as favors, decorated the tables, along with helium filled balloons and ribbons.

A TRIP TO LONDON was enjoyed by Edna (Mrs. W.H.) Pryor, her daughter, Fifi (Mrs. Rebel) Blackwell of Dallas and Fifi's daughter, Frances. The week's outing took place during Frances' Spring Break from Texas Tech, where she is a freshman student and a new initiate of Kappa Kappa Gamma social sorority.

Headquartered at the Cumberland Hotel, the threesome enjoyed the city's many tourist attractions, but also had delightful day trips to the English countryside with a driver/guide, who had escorted Edna and other family members on a previous trip. They visited Windsor Castle and a remarkable new wax museum located there, Stonehenge and Bath, as well as Shakespeare country.

In addition to sightseeing in London, they dined in the numerous excellent restaurants, shopped and saw two shows, the hit musical, "Starlight Express" and Neil Simon's latest, "Little Me." They also attended Sunday services at Westminster Abbey. Edna reports they were blessed with beautiful weather during their entire stay, leaving just as a snowstorm hit the city.

MARJORIE AND DAN KOZAK recently enjoyed a ten-day skiing holiday in Sun Valley, Idaho, where they celebrated Marjorie's 61st birthday, along with an early celebration of Dan's 60th. Marjorie reports their daily skiing was exceptional, with a 200 inch snow base and perfectly groomed runs three times as wide as Wadley.

The Kozaks were house guests of George Weston, headmaster and founder of the Mountain School, which is located near Sun Valley at Ketchum. Having met George 19 years ago on a trip through Europe when he was a college sophomore, they have enjoyed watching his outstanding career in education unfold.

Marjorie, who is on the board of the Mountain School as a foreign language advisor, presented a model French program to the Board of Trustees and also did some demonstration teaching for the faculty. She and Dan were honored with a cocktail buffet at the headmaster's home for parents, faculty and board members of the school.

Dan's birthday was celebrated on THE day two weekends later in Houston at the home of their son, orthopedic resident, Dr. Jeffrey Kozak and his wife, Lee Ann. They were joined by Dan's father, Frank Kozak of Oklahoma City, and the three generations enjoyed a boat trip to Galveston Bay, where they fished for gulf trout.

PLAYLAND SKATING CENTER was the setting Monday evening for a fun party honoring four graduating seniors. The honorees were Carolyn Britton, daughter of Susan and Ron Britton and a student at Choate-Rosemary Hall in Connecticut; Midland High student Leigh Ann Runyan, daughter of Marilee and Ed Runyan, and Lee High students, Kim Granberry, daughter of Susan and Bill Granberry, and Andrea Neisig, daughter of Sarah and Russell Neisig.

The host couples were Kay and Don Bishop, Elizabeth and Byron Greaves, Anne and Jack Herbig, Kay and George Smith and Diana and Ed Weyman.

The guests of honor were presented large popcorn tins, personalized with their names.

Neutral colors can make positive interior decorating statements

Copley News Service

Decorating a room in neutral colors can be anything but dull and boring.

Long gone are the days when neutrals were viewed as the safe way to go by doubt-filled, do-it-yourself decorators. In fact, with all the shades of colors, patterns and textures we've got to work with today, neutral no longer is neutral at all.

It's a statement with as much impact as crayon colors or the mix-and-match, busy-busy approach of country. The neutral look can be urbane, sophisticated and — surprise, surprise — easy to work with.

You've got two basic choices if you decide to go with neutrals. You might want to use the entire palette of what some designers call "the uncolors" — white, beige, brown, gray and taupe — none of which clashes with any of the others.

On the other hand, you might want to select a single neutral and use it everywhere, adding depth and interest through the use of textures and by varying the color's intensity.

On the face of it all, neutrals seem most at home with contemporary decor. But that doesn't have to be the case. Antiques and period furnishings, many of them featuring natural, neutral wood, show beautifully against a neutral background.

For the living room, light and airy wicker furniture is a good selection to complement neutral tones.

Indian dodges charging horns

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Raleigh Bonnaha, a Yavapai and Hopi Indian, has his sights set high — but he keeps a close eye at ground level — watching out for swinging horns.

Bonnaha, 28, is one of the 12 top bullfighters on the professional rodeo tour, and his aim is to become No. 1 by the end of this year.

"There are times I've wondered myself, 'What am I doing?' But the high I get, there's nothing else I can do that would do it for me," he said in a telephone interview from Prescott. "It's a natural high — being totally tuned in to yourself, spiritually, physically and emotionally."

Rodeo has been in his blood a long time. His father, Bert, was a professional bronc rider.

Bonnaha rode bulls for six or seven years on the All-Indian Rodeo circuit and in amateur rodeos before joining the Professional Rodeo Cowboys Association tour last year and moving from atop the ornery critters to take an eye-to-eye stance.

"I felt I had more control on the ground," said Bonnaha, a bachelor and the only Indian bullfighter on the pro tour.

The bullfighter, who first must distract the bull from unseated cowboys, then work the animal and perform for the crowd, works without a matador's cape or any weaponry, and the fight is bloodless — "unless they get a hold of you," he said.

He was gored in Prescott and suffered broken ribs, a punctured lung and liver and spleen contusions, and was laid up for seven weeks.

That experience, he admits, made him think about taking up another line of work. But, he added, "I have so much overwhelming desire to continue."

Yet, each minute-to-70 seconds in the arena trying to elude a charging bull is an eternity.

Bonnaha said dodging horns on 1,800 pounds of fast-charging beef can be "a pretty heavy head game" but the fear and danger can be eliminated by knowing what to do — noting, for instance, that a bull cannot pivot on its back feet.

Scientists study room lighting

Associated Press

Life on Earth would be impossible to sustain without light. Yet, an understanding of how to employ lighting for optimum visual clarity is at rather a low level in which untested observations and prejudices are the rule.

The days of guess work appear to be numbered, however, since lighting designers are beginning to systematically test their practices in the lighting laboratory. Though there are only a few such laboratories, their use is expected to grow.

One of the newest lighting laboratories is at the Fashion Institute of Technology in New York City. The lab was designed by Douglas Baker and opened in 1983. Installed in a ceiling grid in the 1,800-square-foot room are examples of many of the lighting fixtures now available. The lights are run by a computer program (also developed by Baker) and can be turned on and off by computer to demonstrate the differences between incandescent, fluorescent, and high intensity discharge lights.

A lighting laboratory is a far cry from a home or office. A stark room whose ceiling is open to reveal the type of electrical connections and mounting necessary for the various fixtures, the laboratory is an almost disturbingly ugly room. Along the sides of the large barn-like room lean panels of various textures and colors.

In one area, small boxes line a wall; each is covered with an identical piece of printed fabric, and a different type of light can be shone into each box. This makes it possible to demonstrate the effects of light on colors.

Despite its lack of visual appeal, this room helps professional designers study the effect of light, which will in turn lead to more comfortable, efficient and beautiful living and working spaces.

The lab is used to train design students at the school. It is also the setting for seminars for working professionals. Recently, for example, it accommodated working designers and architects in a two-day course presented by Alexander F. Styne, an industrial designer who is currently an instructor at the University of Miami on the subject of lighting.

Styne and the designers considered how to enlist what is currently known about the ways in which human beings see to improve the lighting in public and private spaces. He told the designers fluorescent lights and high intensity discharge lights (such as metal halide and high pressure sodium lamps) are likely to become the workhorses of design in the future. Incandescent light with which we are most comfortable in the home is too inefficient to continue as the lighting of choice as energy costs continue to rise.

With the resources of the laboratory, the students were able to compare the effect of incandescent light with various formulations of fluorescent lighting within the same room. The demonstration indicated that deluxe warm-white fluorescent light comes closest to reproducing the effects of incandescent light among the widely available types of fluorescent bulbs.

An even better type of fluorescent is what Styne called a triphosphor bulb. It has been manufactured under different trade names, such as "Ultralume." The bulb is widely used in Western Europe, but is not well-known in the United States, according to Styne. It is quite costly compared to other fluorescent bulbs.

PLANTS IN THE HOME

Window box provides sunny outlook

By ELVIN MCDONALD

Although I live by the dictum of judge not lest ye be judged, my work requires judging gardens in all kinds of competitions. In order to be fair, I try to be as knowledgeable as possible, by growing and grooming my own plants, then mock judging them as objectively as possible.

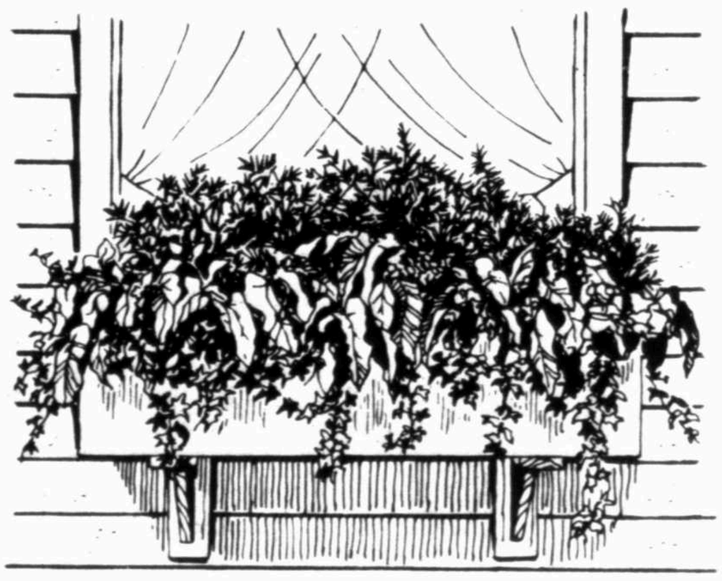

A couple of seasons back I helped judge a window box contest sponsored by New York City's Green Guerrillas. There were finalists in the Bronx, Brooklyn and, of course, Manhattan.

As a highrise apartment dweller without a speck of ground outdoors to call my own, what impressed me the most was how few people who could have window box gardens did. And of those who went so far as to enter the contest and proceed to the finals, how tentative the plantings seemed.

In retrospect I see the need for more generosity: A richer growing medium, with well-rotted compost or manure worked into the bottom 2 inches of growing medium in the window boxes; many more plants set out initially; much more water and fertilizer applied throughout the season; more time spent picking off dead flowers and leaves.

Another opportunity lost, or so it appeared to those of us judging as well as the sponsors, was being friendly and neighborly. Many of the window box and doorway container plantings were apparently lost at vacation time.

It is one thing to arrange for unknown neighbors to come into your home and water house plants when you are away — but how easy it would be to arrange for watering of plants on the street side that are accessible without any special arrangements.

For window box gardens, generosity is the best rule to go by.

Hardly any garden is as adept at saying welcome home as a window box, or wall baskets hung on either side of the entry. Even if everything is low-maintenance and mostly green, here is the chance to have spot gardens that can be stuffed with colorful seasonal plants.

Some individuals will in a perfunctory manner wish to execute such plantings once in the spring and be done with it. What a waste.

The joy comes when you think of each window or planter box, a space that can be magical, changing every day, from the dawn of spring until the chill dusk of winter. Be generous — that's the most direct way I can tell you to succeed with a garden in limited space.

The plant once and be done with it crowd will settle for geraniums or petunias or impatiens. The rest of us will start with spring primroses, cinerarias, calceolarias, pansies, followed by summer flowers and herbs that can take the heat, these in turn replaced by fall's chrysanthemums, asters, ornamental cabbage and kale.

When in doubt, add whatever it is to the container — the more the merrier is the rule here. Minimalists caught up in "less is more" will never understand — but most of the world will thank you for being generous.

Q. Do I need special fluorescent tubes to start seeds under lights?

A. No; a combination of one Cool White to one Warm White works well and the cost is half or less that of special agricultural lamps.

There is an important rule to keep in mind when starting seeds indoors, and it applies as well to most plant growing: Cool temperatures combined with high light intensities produce short, stocky, strong growth. High temperatures in combination with low light levels will result in tall, spindly, weak seedlings.

Most seeds germinate well at 70-72F. Then if night temperatures can drop to about 50F., rising 10 to 20 degrees or so by day, the results will be promising and sturdy seedlings.

There is no better time than spring to start seeds under lights of a host of trees and shrubs. Precise instructions are in my notebook sheets: For your set send $1.00 and a long SASE with Tree-Shrub written on the back flap to Elvin McDonald Reader Service, 225 E. 57th St., New York, N.Y. 10022.

Arrangement of furniture makes big difference

Copley News Service

No matter how wonderful, sleek, stylish or eye-catching your furniture might be, it simply isn't going to look as smashing as it should if it isn't arranged properly.

To be quite frank, having lovely furniture but paying no mind to its arrangement is like spending $40,000 on a Mercedes and littering it with gooey hamburger wrappers from weeks of quickie lunches at fast-food factories.

When getting ready to arrange rooms, Better Homes and Gardens' "New Decorating Book" recommends that you pay special attention to three things: convenience, comfort and composition.

Ask yourself some basic questions before you get started. If you're working with the living room, for instance, how do you want it to work for family and guests? Do you do a lot of entertaining? Plan to serve dinner in the living room? How much seating is required and how much open floor space? Need a spot for music or hobbies? Will the television have to go in the living room?

Take into consideration the height of walls, architectural features, size of windows and doors, fireplaces and built-ins. They all have an impact on what you can do and how the room eventually will look.

A room qualifies as being convenient if its arrangement promotes easy flow of traffic. For example, don't block a shelf, built-in, window or closet you need to get to from time to time. Keep traffic lanes at least 3 feet wide. Allow double a door's width for its clearance.

It's a great help to design a room around a focal point. In a living room, the focal point might be a fireplace, a large window with a view or, perhaps, the television.

If the room doesn't have a natural focal point, create one. Hang a dramatic painting or lay a stunner of an Oriental carpet, then arrange the furniture around it.

Business wear needn't be dull

DALLAS (AP) — While the "dressing-for-success" theory has long been the credo for business executives, men's fashion expert Joe Haggar III doesn't believe it means you must be dull to be effective.

"There are many different ways to dress according to your work," said the executive vice president of marketing for the Dallas-based Haggar Co. "You select clothing that is right for you, your age, occupation and personal taste. Naturally, there are certain occupations that require a more conservative look, but that doesn't mean bankers and accountants can't add a little color and flair to their wardrobes."

"What's important," he says, "is to dress comfortably. Comfort builds confidence, and confidence increases your productivity — at and away from the job. Now, that's dressing for success!"

Proper illumination can set variety of moods at home

Copley News Service

Proper lighting is a primary factor in making any room work. Lighting sets a mood, and you definitely want that mood to be the right mood.

For years, theater technicians have been creating illusions with lights.

Discos play the same game with lights. For all practical purposes, no lights means no flashy disco.

In the home, the best approach is to go with a variety of lighting, paying special attention to the mood you want to create. Make the most of furnishings and architectural details by showing them in the most flattering light.

Down lights, for example, shoot light onto rooms and objects, just as the name implies. They can be recessed directly into the ceiling or installed on tracks — either in the ceiling or running around the top of walls. Depending on the fixture and bulb, recessed lights can create the illusion of spaciousness or can be narrowed to a small circle.

Up lights do basically the same things down lights do, only they do them from the floor. Most come in cylindrical or square canisters in various sizes. Place them behind a piece of furniture or an arrangement of large plants. The light will cast interesting patterns of shadow and light across walls. Or use them to light a special piece of art.

Spotlights and floodlights are used to throw circles of light around an object or onto a wall. They can be mounted on the ceiling in a track, can be attached to a wall or can stand by themselves.

Use floods to wash entire walls with light. They're especially good for displaying a grouping of art.

Spots are the choice for highlighting specific objects. Some varieties come with adjustable shutters that allow you to cut the light to the exact shape of the object to be spotlighted. Spots also can be used to create shadows.

Shielding lights behind cornices is a slick way to bring indirect lighting to any room. The cornices generally run from wall to wall and are attached at the ceiling. Light flows down the wall only. On the other hand, cove lighting — also attached to the ceiling — is open at the top and shoots the light onto the ceiling.

WOVEN WOOD SHADES

Regardless of the type of treatment used, the impact of a woven wood comes largely from its pattern. When a pattern has very little yarn running through the slats, it is called an open weave. Almost lacey, these designs let in light and soften the view to your rooms. However, because they have so many open spaces, they are not ideal for privacy, nor are they the best selection for energy efficiency. The reverse, a closed weave, is a pattern filled with yarn. This material offers privacy and has a good insulation factor. On a single pane window, the combination of wood and yarn in a closely woven shade may have an R-value up to 1.7.

Our staff offers you help in selecting all types of window coverings. For all your needs stop by WINDOW DECOR, 30 West Industrial Loop, 685-0875. Woven woods, vertical and mini blinds, custom made draperies and all kinds of top treatments are handled. We're even happy to provide the do it yourselfer with all the drapery hardware necessary. Open: Mon. thru Fri. 8am-4:30pm, and by appointment.

HINT:
A metalized energy liner can hike the R-value of woven shade up to 5.7.

Peace Corps still going strong after almost quarter-century

Hearst News Service

With increasing numbers of older people leading the parade, Americans are giving the Peace Corps — John F. Kennedy's nearly 25-year-old experiment in self-sacrifice — a new lease on life.

The Peace Corps' unprecedented nationwide call in January for 10,000 volunteers with agricultural skills to work in 12 of Africa's 18 drought- and famine-stricken countries has revitalized public interest in the program, corps officials report.

The appeal, made in public-service radio, television and newspaper announcements, drew more than 15,000 responses in three weeks. The number had climbed to 18,000 by the end of last week. And the calls — from retired ranchers in California, dirt farmers in Mississippi and greenhouse operators in New York — are still coming.

"It's great for the Peace Corps because these are the people with the type of hands-on technical know-how that we really need," corps Director Loret Ruppe said.

"We really have never been able to recruit sufficient people with really strong agricultural skills to fill all the slots that we're asked to. We knew we had 600 slots that needed to be filled in Africa, and we need thousands of people calling to get enough to fill out what is an intensive application and to really commit themselves."

Ruppe, 49, was appointed by President Reagan to head the Peace Corps in 1981. She likens the renewed interest to the program's "golden years" and sees it as a unique chance to show the public how the Peace Corps has changed and matured.

Under Ruppe's leadership, the corps' budget has climbed from $95 million in fiscal year 1982 to $128.6 million this year.

The readjustment allowance, which volunteers receive upon their return to the United States, has been boosted by $50 to $175 for every month of service. Until 1976, returning volunteers received only $75 for each month.

Changes have been made in training, too. Once conducted on college campuses, sessions in language and adjusting to a new culture are now handled in the countries to which volunteers are assigned.

Ruppe said the corps has learned from its mistakes and now teaches its recruits to adhere to appropriate dress codes and avoid the politics of host nations.

The change in the political winds at home has helped the corps' recruiting effort, she said.

"A lot of education had to be done on people," Ruppe said. "The Peace Corps of the '60s had all of this public awareness.

"Then, suddenly, Vietnam came. We were put into another agency (ACTION). We lost our name identity. We had seven directors in 10 years. And there became an unfortunate trend of saying, 'Well, this was started by a Democrat and no Republican should support it.'

"I felt that that was absolutely wrong and that the Peace Corps should be supported by every administration. Fortunately, President Reagan has been a strong proponent of volunteerism."

Officials point to the volunteers' maturity as the most important change in the corps. The average volunteer now is 28½, and the figure is rising. Two decades ago, the typical recruit was 24.

The late Lillian Carter, mother of former President Jimmy Carter, was for some time the "lonely representative" of older volunteers, Ruppe said. But now the situation has changed.

"Did you know that after the appeal there was a tremendous number of people who called in who were well over 30?" Ruppe asked.

"There were nine people over 81. One person was 99. It's a breakthrough for the Peace Corps.

"Now, there are hundreds of older Americans volunteering, and what most people don't know is that in the (24) countries the Peace Corps serves in, age is highly respected and an older person has a greater automatic acceptance than a younger person."

Star gazers look forward to Halley's Comet's visit

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — When Halley's Comet returns late this year, star gazers will have several weeks to view the show — and a second chance in spring 1986.

"Many people mistakenly think comets streak across the sky," according to Dr. Mark Littman, an astronomer with the University of Utah and a consultant with Jason Empire Inc., a telescope maker here.

"Unlike meteors, which burn up as they streak through our atmosphere, Halley's Comet is far out in space," he explained. "Although moving rapidly, it is millions of miles away, and so will appear to inch slowly across the sky."

CPR study conducted

Hearst News Service

Physician apathy may be to blame for the low rate of life-saving CPR training among family members of heart patients, according to a new Massachusetts study.

The study shows that while most doctors believe a heart patient's family could save his life if they learn cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR), few of them bother to encourage training or give the family any information that would help them get it.

Because victims of one heart attack are more likely than others to have a second attack, the family members of such patients are a logical high priority group for CPR education.

Ironically, however, these families have a very low rate of CPR training and team of scientists at the University of Massachusetts Medical School has been trying to find out why.

According to results of their survey of 482 physicians in central and western Massachusetts, one reason is probably physician apathy.

When asked, 79 percent of the doctors "thought it was important" to recommend CPR training.

But "despite their attitudes regarding CPR training, only 6 percent of the physicians regularly recommend CPR training," the team said.

Dance group special

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) — Men in green and white Western shirts and women in frilly skirts to match swing their partners and promenade to fast-stepping fiddle music and a caller's cadence.

Such scenes are played out on a daily basis across the country as square dancers practice and perform.

But the group that swirls around the Bayview Community Center every Monday night is special, from its name to its membership. It's called the Pensacola Special Steppers, and the dancers are mentally retarded.

"The group's purpose is to show members of the community that the mentally retarded are capable of socializing and performing with them," said Frank Cherry, who with his wife, Nancy, founded the Special Steppers.

"The community has accepted them more after seeing what they can do and knowing they can socialize," added Helen Chapman, the group's president.

The Special Steppers have performed for congressmen in Washington, for state officials in Tallahassee, for tourists at the New Orleans World's Fair, for a national television audience on the "PM Magazine" program and for and with 30,000 other dancers at the National Square Dance Convention two years ago in Louisville, Ky.

Cherry knew of only one other square dance club for the mentally retarded — in California — before the Special Steppers were organized. A search for others through ads in a national square dance publication failed get any responses. The Pensacola group, however, since has helped get another club started in Saraland, Ala.

Cherry, who is handicapped coordinator for the Naval Air Rework Facility at the Pensacola Naval Air Station, took up square dancing with his wife about 13 years ago.

"I didn't even know anybody who square danced before we decided to go down and take lessons," said Cherry, 41.

The couple's daughter, Janet, now 20, is mentally retarded and they thought she, too, would enjoy dancing. With 15 other clients from the Escambia County Association for Retarded Citizens, they fashioned an informal group to perform at the association's annual banquet in 1978.

That performance spurred requests for additional appearances. The next year the Special Steppers formally organized with membership in the West Florida Square Dance Council and a helping hand from a local club called the Seaside Squares.

There now are 84 Special Steppers from 16 to 60 years old, grouped according to ability, starting with the Fun Bunch, then the Promenaders and then up to the Exhibition Squares. Each group practices once a week and Cherry does the calling for two of them.

"I just picked up a manual and studied it — 50 basic calls," Cherry said.

Now an expert caller, Cherry at first was so unsure of himself that he said the calls rather than sang them. He also had to adjust to the abilities of the dancers.

"You have to slow the beat of the music because their retention time is not as fast," Cherry said.

Yet, he has been able to teach calls to the highest-level group that most non-handicapped dancers cannot do.

The dancing also has been a catharsis. Cherry said those who once were shy and withdrawn are now more outgoing.

Rooms kept super-clean

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — How clean are the clean rooms in computer-chip factories?

At one company here, the fabrication area clean room has air that contains fewer than 10 particles of 0.5 micron or larger per cubic foot.

By comparison, a hospital operating room usually contains 10,000 to 100,000 particles per cubic foot.

homes parade

Jim and Ann Walton's home is featured in the second of a four-part series about the Midland Junior Woman's Club's 16th Annual Parade of Homes benefit for the Palmer Drug Abuse Program and the Permian Basin Center for Battered Women. The Parade will be presented from 1:30-5:30 p.m. on April 21. Tickets are $7.50 and are available from club members or by calling 697-1814 or 684-9641. Children 12 years of age and younger will not be admitted and tickets will not be sold at the door.

THE WALTON'S

Though the Walton's contemporary home in Trinity Estates at 3902 Godfrey was built only a year and a half ago, years of thought went into its planning.

"It has everything we had talked about for 15 years," said Mrs. Walton.

Avid travelers, the Waltons use collections from places they have visited during their 23-year marriage to decorate their new patio home.

The color scheme of the entire house is taken from an Oriental painting of a dancer — one of Mrs. Walton's favorites. The painting hangs inside the bookcase of the living room.

Jim is a native Midlander and grandson of a pioneer ranching family which homesteaded its property in the early 1900s. He and Ann lived at the family ranch until 1974.

Traces of that heritage also are used to decorate the patio home. A Navajo saddle blanket which was used by Jim's grandfather has been laminated in acrylic and hangs in the den. Other family treasures used to decorate the room include his grandfather's spurs and old photographs and writings.

The house is built around a swimming pool and patio — and area visible from all the rooms except for three bedrooms. Rather than enclosing the back of the lot area with a fence, the Waltons wanted a 12-foot wall extended from the house. This concept eliminated the need for drapes. The only window dressings in rooms which face the pool are used to control lighting and block light.

Dan Dalton Custom Homes was the builder, but the home's design and decoration was a family project.

The 4,500 square-foot home has four bedrooms and four baths, a large kitchen, a den, a living and dining room and a double-car garage.

The patio area has been a great pleasure for the Waltons, particularly during the summer where they "eat all three meals" and frequently entertain guests and host small dinner parties.

LIVING ROOM

The Walton's living room, in colors taken from a favorite Oriental painting of a dancer, features an Imari print sofa and book shelves filled with 20-years worth of collections from visits throughout the world.

DINING ROOM

The chairs in this dining room have been with the Waltons since they were first married. Mrs. Walton had them reupholstered to fit their new home.

MASTER BEDROOM

The master bedroom is filled with treasures from the Walton's international travels, including a painting from Venice, china figurines from England, a statue from Haiti, a ceramic elephant table lighter from Mexico, Lalique crystal from France and a tea set from Portugal.

KITCHEN

Mrs. Walton enjoys hosting dinner parties and does all of her own cooking — so this large kitchen comes into great use for such occasions. The 18-by-24 foot room is illuminated by a skylight above the center island and is lined with ample counter space. A large double-oven and an ice maker (and another one in the bar area) enables the Waltons the convenience to entertain guests as they frequently do.

AT WIT'S END

TV romance blooms

By ERMA BOMBECK

Something is happening on television that is so Walton-ish ... so Little House on the Prairie-ish ... that I can't believe it myself.

It's the "Nothing Happened" sitcom.

It's the ones where eyes meet, but nothing happens. Hands touch, but nothing happens. Lips come close, but nothing happens. It's downright provocative.

Believe it or not, sparring and flirting among couples are coming back to prime time. Frankly, I had almost forgotten what the ritual dance of courtship looked like. It seems forever that instant sex (add a bed and stir) was all we ever saw. Occasionally, we'd see a scene where a couple of strangers would wake up in a bed and he'd say, "How do you spell your name again? Is it Polish?" but that's as personal as it got. They never had a dating period or a time when they discovered how they felt about broccoli, the Dolphins, or sticky children.

"Cheers" was the first sitcom to introduce a hero and a heroine who did not wake up after the first date under the sheets. Then the producers chickened out and Sam and Diane had a "relationship." It almost cost them the series. So now they are back to sparring and flirting.

Others have been more adventurous. The only time Scarecrow touches the hand of Mrs. King is when she is dangling from a helicopter in his grip.

The closest Judge Harold Stone ever got to having his public defender, Billie, in his arms was one night when a robber tied both of them up while he ransacked her apartment.

The Laura and Remington Steele relationship brings back the electricity of Scarlett fighting off Rhett with everyone knowing that someday he'll win, and it'll be Fourth of July.

And the propriety between Tony and Angela on "Who's the Boss?" is reminiscent of Doris Day sleeping in Rock Hudson's pajama tops in his bed with a chair propped against the door while he sleeps on the sofa.

I have to believe it's a trend and that it will only be a matter of time before a couple comes to the captain of the Love Boat at the end of the cruise and says, "Guess what? Nothing happened." Or miracle of miracles, J.R. will come home from the office and when Sue Ellen asks, "How was your day?" he'll answer, "Nothing happened."

In the meantime, my imagination is coming to life once more after being dormant for years. Since I'm no longer being hit over the head with sex, I'm looking for it.

The other afternoon as I was watching "All My Children," I could have sworn I saw Erica blush.

My mother said I should adjust the color on my set.

She's probably right.

Erma Bombeck is a columnist for News America Syndicate.

Fleas' great leaps 'unbelievable'

RACINE, Wis. (AP) —"The flea, while no bigger than a pinhead, has almost unbelievable jumping power," says Dr. Roger H. Grothaus.

Grothaus, manager at Johnson Wax's Raid Biology Center, where they keep 10,000 fleas for testing, says that according to the "Guinness Book of World Records" one flea jumped 13 inches high while covering a distance of 7¾ inches.

This is the equivalent of a human jumping over the Empire State Building in a single bound.

Women's deeds told in songs

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — Move over, Paul Revere. Sybil Ludington is charging through.

The 16-year-old Ludington is one of the historical figures featured in an educational reading-listening series called "Women of Courage" being produced by the Eclectic Co. in St. Paul.

The series, aimed at giving children a better perspective of women's contributions to history, is beginning its second year atop a wave of success that has far exceeded anybody's expectations.

"When we started this series, we planned for regional distribution," said Jeanne Junge, executive director of the non-profit organization dedicated to the preservation of folk arts. "But we sent a preview issue to Ms. magazine, a small article ran and — wham! — we had a national market."

The endorsements started coming — from Ed Asner and Marlo Thomas, from the National Library Association and the United Nations School in New York City. And the orders started coming, from Maine and Florida, from Bermuda and Alaska, more orders than the tiny St. Paul office was ready to handle.

"I didn't know anything about purchase orders or packing slips or any of that stuff," admitted Ms. Junge, a folk singer. "We were literally downstairs, taking cardboard out of the garbage and cutting it up for our mailings."

Each "Women of Courage" issue consists of a record and a booklet. On one side of the record a storyteller describes the subject's courageous deeds, while on the other side is a song about the woman and her achievements.

The booklet provides background information about why the contributions were so important and has a list of "things to do" to better understand the magnitude of the accomplishments.

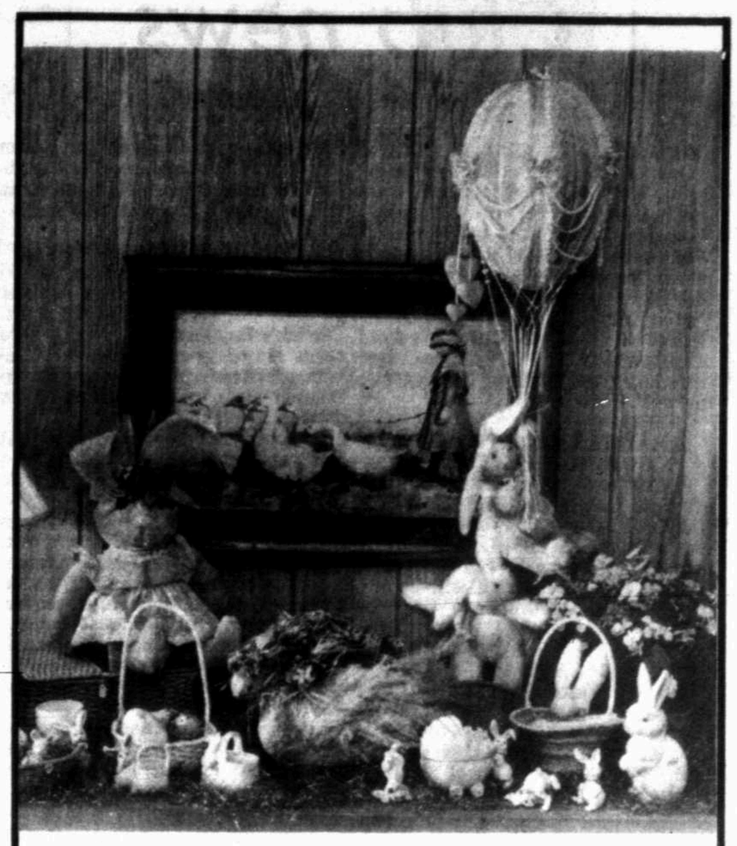

In the case of Sybil Ludington — the daughter of a Revolutionary War commander who rode 40 miles on horseback to alert her father's troops that British soldiers were attacking Danbury, Conn. — the children are supposed to use a map to plot a 40-mile round trip from their home through neighboring communities.

The idea for the program crystallized while Ms. Junge and Paula Brandes, the organization's director of educational services and outreach, were creatively kicking around the lyrics of a song that became "Ride, Sybil, Ride." At the time they were thinking of producing a series of songs tentatively titled "Women's Notes."

"I couldn't help but notice that there were no songs about special women," she said. "I had to conclude that either the women involved in history had never been written about or they had been forgotten. That's when we decided to do this as an educational series. We decided to put women back in their place in history.

"I love making history come alive for kids, especially dealing with the folk arts in such a wonderful way," Ms. Junge said. "We wanted to make the kids understand that these were real people — they were not cardboard cutouts. And we wanted them to recognize the courage in themselves, to make them realize that they are as capable of making history as anyone else.

"We also did not want boys to grow up believing that women's accomplishments are important just to women."

DENTAL HEALTH UPDATE

Philip O. Warlick D.D.S.

DRY SOCKET

QUESTION: What is meant by a dry socket?

ANSWER: Normally, the wound from a tooth extraction heals without complication within a few days. However, on rare occasions, the clot that normally forms shortly after extraction fails to develop or is lost, hence the name "dry socket". This leaves a bare, unprotected area exposed to bacteria, saliva and food debris which can develop a degree of pain.

About all that can be done is to keep the area clean and the patient comfortable with medication and an anesthetic dressing in the open socket until nature develops a protective covering. Some believe the dry socket results from rapid bacterial action, others because of a fault in the clotting mechanism.

Southwestern Bell Telephone introduces five new TELE-HELP booklets.

TELE-HELP is a special information program created by the employees at Southwestern Bell Telephone. We've designed it to provide answers to our customers' questions as well as reaffirm our company's commitment to the community.

Home security is something that concerns us all. But, in reality, many people don't know how to prepare for an emergency in advance. This booklet gives you tips on how to do just that.

Annoying phone calls can happen to anyone at anytime. But you don't always have to be a victim because there are a few steps you can take to deal with this nuisance. We developed this booklet to tell you about them.

Home wiring tells you how you can save money by installing new wiring or changing existing wiring in your own home. It also tells you about the options available if you would rather have someone else do the work.

A Guide to Establishing New Service tells you about all the steps involved, and what to expect, when setting up your new phone service.

Local Service Options tells you about the range of services that can enhance the value of your phone, including Custom Calling Services, Easy Access Dialing and Touch-tone service.

DEAR ABBY

Daughter worries mom

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Recently I found a letter my 10-year-old daughter had written to a boy at school. Giving in to sudden impulse, I read the letter, and was shocked to find that it was a love letter! When I told her that I had read it and thought we should have a talk, she was angry at me for "sticking my nose in her business." I apologized for violating her privacy, and explained that I felt that she WAS my business. I also told her that she was much too young for a sexual relationship, but apparently she is already sexually active.

I am worried sick! My daughter — my "baby" — may be only 10, but she could easily pass for 14.

How can I prevent her from becoming promiscuous? Her letter to that boy was unbelievable, Abby. I was an unwed mother at 16, and I don't want history to repeat itself with my daughter.

Please tell me what to do. — CONCERNED IN SACRAMENTO

DEAR CONCERNED: Now is the time to build a solid bridge instead of a fence between you and your daughter. She's angry now — and has a right to be — but she needs to know that you are prepared to answer every question (including birth control) that she asks. Share with her your own experiences — the mistakes that came from innocence, ignorance and human weakness. Don't judge her; love her enough to be there for her — no matter what.

DEAR ABBY: My doctor is always late. I have tried taking his first appointment of the day, but invariably he is at least 45 minutes late getting started.

I've tried making later appointments, but it's even worse; in addition to starting late, he falls behind. I'm a working person, and time off costs me money. Where does he get off wasting my time and costing me money?

He's a very good doctor and I like him, but I am fed up. Don't tell me he's out saving lives; he's a dermatologist! What should I do? — MAD IN MINNEAPOLIS

DEAR MAD: Knowing that the doctor is chronically late, telephone his office and ask his nurse how far behind he is before you leave for his office. If his nurse isn't cooperative, scratch this dermatologist. It appears that you're itching to change doctors, and I don't blame you.

DEAR ABBY: Two years ago my niece (by marriage) sold me a ring with a tiny diamond in it for $400. She said she "needed" the money, and although I had no use for the ring, I bought it just to help her out.

Last summer, my 17-year-old granddaughter who lives out of state came to visit me. I had not seen her in four years, and was so delighted with the way she had matured, I gave her the ring.

When my nephew and his wife found out about it, they hit the ceiling. You would think I had committed some kind of crime. They said it was a family heirloom — I had no right to give it, and they demanded that I get the ring back "in case" they wanted to buy it back from me someday.

When I bought the ring, I wasn't told it was an heirloom, and I have no intention of asking my granddaughter to return it. Am I right or not?

Please settle this. — FAMILY FEUD

DEAR FEUD: When you bought the ring, it became yours to sell, give away or wear in your nose if you so chose. And since nothing was mentioned about its being a "family heirloom," you cannot be faulted for your actions.

Tell your nephew and his wife if they want to "buy" it back someday, they can make your granddaughter an offer. It's her ring now.

(Do you hate to write letters because you don't know what to say? Thank-you notes, sympathy letters, congratulations, how to decline and accept invitations and how to write an interesting letter are included in Abby's booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions." Send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 (this includes postage) to: Dear Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

AT WORK

Brainstorming sessions useful

By ADELE SCHEELE, Ph.D.

Q. I'm an architect and would like to find a group of creative people, i.e., developers, investors, etc., to work on developing some significant projects to assist people. The problem is I don't who to choose nor how to proceed. I would appreciate any of your advice.

A. Set up some brainstorming sessions and start by inviting a few architects you know. Then search the area for the developers and investors who sit on local boards, or are well-known for community interests, or are recommended by newspaper reporters, architectural professors, city councilmen and other politicians. Also consider the head of urban planning, a real estate writer, or a realty board member, president of a cement or concrete company.

In these sessions pose one particular dilemma, like combining low-cost housing and commercial property in one development. Then flip it to high-cost combined living and commercial development. If you can find one project that people can agree to work on, then contact your local public service television and radio station and interest them in talking about these issues publicly with you. You might have a shot of getting something done.

Q. My dilemma is whether to remain in my current position as a pastor. After 15 years I am burned out due to stress and sameness, yet I have two children in college and a wife to support.

A. Why don't you reorganize your position? Find members of your congregation to serve as a brain trust for you, ask them their opinion on how to get more volunteer help to set up committees so that you can be freer to do that part of pastoring that you yearn to do. It may be that you want to write more or package your sermons; it may be that you want to go back to school for an advanced degree in counseling. Pay attention to your own heart to find your calling within the calling.

Q. I work as an administrator for a small organization. I am very well paid but I am bored because the organization is too small. I doubt that I could earn the same salary some place else but I am responsible financially for my family. I don't know what to do.

A. Don't assume that you have to take a cut in pay. Instead, go out on a search for larger organizations, perhaps in the same field and present yourself as a strong administrator.

Dr. Scheele answers questions from readers in her column. Write to her in care of this newspaper.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Does running cause arthritis?

Dr. Solomon

Dear Dr. Solomon: One of the disadvantages of running that has been called to my attention is that it may cause arthritis. I've been running for a few years and don't even have a hint of arthritis. But if this is a possibility, it seems that I might be better off rocking on my front porch and watching other people run by. Is arthritis really a risk for people who run? — Sam, Topeka, Kan.

Dear Sam: Physicians are not all in agreement on the role of running in the development of arthritis. Dr. Douglas Jackson, director of the Southern California Center for Spots Medicine in Long Beach, says that runners who develop arthritis already had an underlying condition, and the running simply made it apparent a little sooner.

However, Dr. Roger Johnson, of the Medical College of Wisconsin, believes that the very act of running can lead to arthritis. He notes that any form of training that causes wear and tear on the joints increases the possibility that arthritis will develop at some point along the way.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Strictly from a medical standpoint, which drug would you consider to be more harmful — heroin or cocaine? — Kip, Detroit

Dear Kip: I would consider the drugs to be equally harmful in any patient I was treating. According to one study, the two drugs affect the same brain circuit that leads to the same pleasurable feeling.

Anyone thinking of using cocaine as an alternative to heroin because it is supposed to be safer would do well to think about it a little more.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I would greatly appreciate it if you would recommend a preparation that would help fade liver spots. — Mrs. W.I., Orlando, Fla.

Dear Mrs. I.: Over-the-counter preparations will not cause liver spots to disappear. If you are very concerned about these spots, I suggest you ask a dermatologist about the use of liquid nitrogen.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My daugher has asthma and she says that some odors seem to make it worse. Is this possible or does she have an active imagination? Thanks for all your help in the past. — Mrs. C.K., Warren, Mich.

Dear Mrs. K.: Some odors do seem to aggravate asthma. Among those implicated are fresh paint, automobile fumes, and even odors from cooking.

For Clarence, Newark, Dela.: Walking is an excellent form of exercise for everyone and particularly for the older individual since it places a minimal stress on the heart. If your local high school has a track, you can start by walking one or two laps and gradually extend the distance. Later you might try walking the same distance but at a faster pace.

Walking is of benefit to the musculoskeletal and cardiovascular systems, as well as to one's emotional well-being.

Neil Solomon, M.D., is a columnist for Los Angeles Times Syndicate. If you have a medical question, write Dr. Solomon at 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon will not give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.

Sanitation can prevent deaths

WASHINGTON (AP) — Simple diarrhea will kill more people in the world during this decade than bubonic plague did throughout the entire Middle Ages, according to Pediatric News.

Thirteen million deaths — one-fourth of the world's total each year — occur among children under the age of 5, says the medical journal, reporting on a survey by the Worldwatch Institute. Ninety-seven percent of these deaths take place in Third World countries, most of them attributable to common diseases such as diarrhea and pneumonia.

The journal notes that clean water supplies, adequate sanitation, primary health care and family planning would eliminate half of all diarrhea, including 90 percent of cholera.

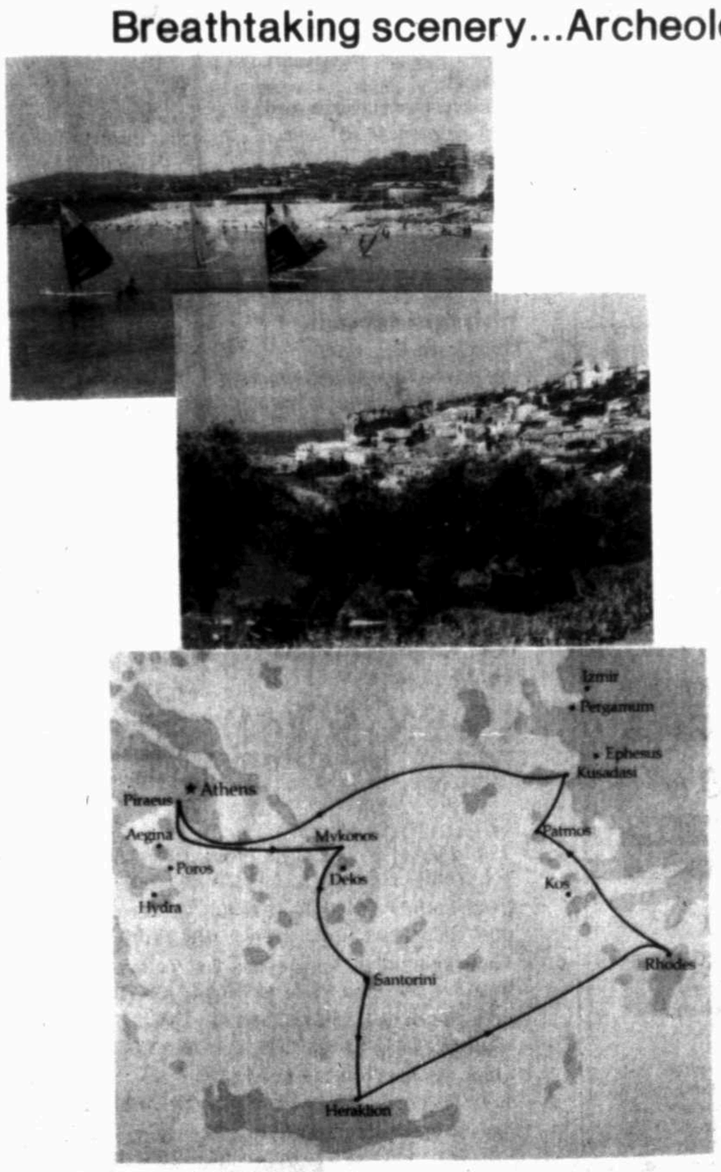

The World Bank estimates that indoor water and sanitation for the Third World would cost $800 billion to construct and $10 billion annually to operate and maintain.

Several technologies have been developed, however, to provide low-cost drinking water and sanitation services with wells and pumps for as little as $25 per person.

Plantagenets: English royalty has roots in France

By NANCY ANDERSON
Copley News Service

The handsome and hot-tempered Plantagenets were the worst and the best kings of England. Their wives, who also were handsome, in other ways also were as good or as bad as their regal husbands.

Isabella, wife of Edward II, was one of the worst Plantagenets, since she connived with her lover to have her husband murdered. The beautiful Eleanor, wife of Edward I, was one of the best Plantagenets, while Eleanor of Aquitain was somewhere in between good, bad and altogether fascinating.

The tourist in London can see remnants of the Plantagenet reign: the spot in the Tower of London where the bones of two little Plantagenet princes were found; Windsor Castle from which bad King John rode to sign under duress the Magna Charta, and in the British Museum the signet ring of Coeur de Leon.

But since most of the Plantagenets basically were Frenchmen, it's to France the tourist must go to find the roots of this beautiful, brawling family.

THE ANGEVIN COUNTRY, beginning at Normandy and sprawling through Maine and Anjou, was the Plantagenet seedbed, and it is littered with their castles, churches and battlefields. These can be visited most conveniently by car, and at reasonable cost since rooms in out-of-the-way French hotels in small towns of the Angevin country still are reasonable.

For instance, in Narbonne, a town once sacked by the legendary Black Prince, a clean but modestly equipped double room with bath can be had for only $15 when the tourist season is over. In Chinon, where Henry II died after a fatal pounding by his resplendent son, The Lion Hearted, a double room with bath in a respectable second-class hotel costs $25.

A swing from south-central to northern France will take one through scenes of assorted Plantagenet triumphs and tragedies, beginning with the city of Carcassonne near Narbonne.

STILL SURROUNDED by walls, some dating from Roman times, Carcassonne looks very much as it did when Simon de Montfort, an uncle of the Plantagenets and a great warrior, came there under the Sign of the Cross to wipe out heretics.

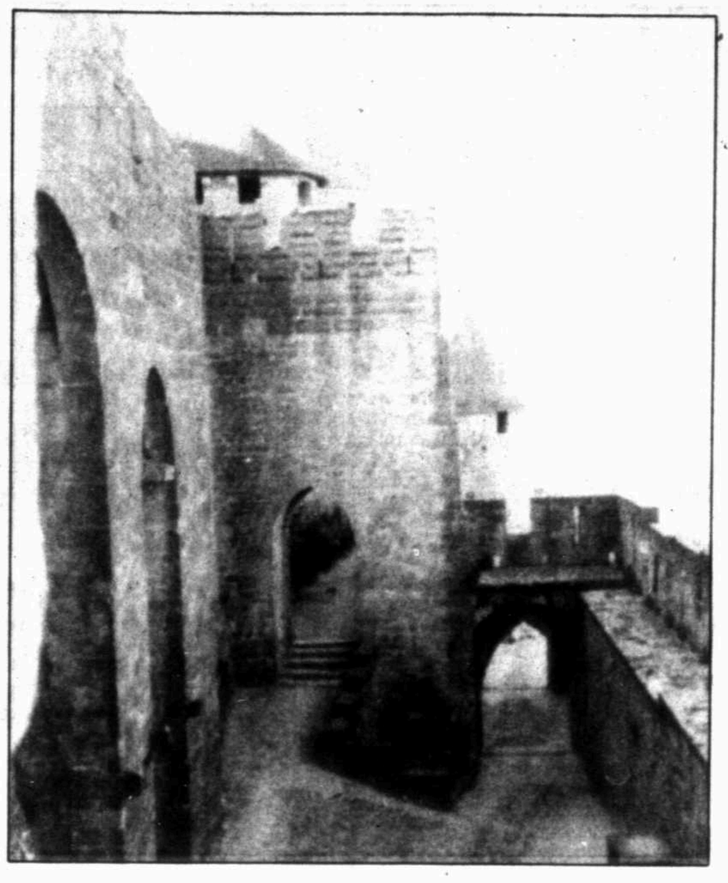

Later, when the Black Prince rode up to the very walls we see today, he considered them too formidable to assault, so he contented himself with burning everything outside them.

Buildings inside Carcassonne's medieval exterior are as old as the ramparts, but the Frenchmen within are busy with 20th century enterprises, selling antiques, pastries, postcards and guidebooks.

Slightly north of Carcassonne, the traveler can visit the de Montfort Castle in the Dordogne. The Dordogne is a scenic area containing one-tenth of all the castles in France, plus a scattering of ancient villages. These villages suffered heavily during World War II, as attested by monuments that not only bear the names of men killed in conflict but of "martyrs" executed by the Germans and of those deported to work camps.

NOT MANY MILES north of the Dordogne is Angouleme, where industrial development almost has eradicated traces of the gorgeous Isabella, who was the second wife of King John.

He literally snatched her away from her fiance, a handsome and gallant knight named Hugh of Lusigno, and divorced his own wife in order to claim her. The marriage wasn't particularly happy, especially after John, suspecting that she had a lover, hanged the man he suspected by Isabella's bed cords.

This walled city is the first stop on a tour through France that highlights the historic Plantagenet family.

Between Angouleme and Poitiers, the next city of interest, clean, comfortable and inexpensive lodgings may be had at the Hotel Charentais, which isn't in a town, so one has to be alert for its sign.

Poitiers, like Angouleme, is a big city with traffic congestion. But it's worth a stop, because it was here that Eleanor of Aquitaine held court.

Her daughter by French King Louis (her husband prior to Henry II of England) visited her in Poitiers bringing with her the poet Chretien de Troyes, whose works set the tone for Eleanor's Court of Love.

Bombing during World War II destroyed most of the ducal palace wherein the Plantagenets reigned, but a part of it still is standing, incorporated into a new city hall, while the church the Plantagenets attended is nearby.

AFTER POITIERS, the traveler quickly can drive to the storied Valley of the Loire, which is most famous for its palaces that were built by later French monarchs.

South of Tours rises the donjon of Loche, with its notorious cages in which captives were kept like canary birds. According to legend, when Richard Coeur de Leon rode up with his army, the keeper of the castle was so frightened that he dropped dead of a heart attack.

Not far beyond Loche, the traveler finds two of the most provocative sites associated with the Plantagenets. The first is Chinon, with its castle walls stretching along a ridge above the town.

Since Joan of Arc was French and Henry II (Plantagenet) was an English king, guides make much of the fact that it was here where Joan first met the dauphin and declared that he was to be king of France. They also point out the tower in which Templars were held before they were burned in great assault by the king of France upon their order.

And guides will show you the little that's left of the room in which Henry died, heartbroken upon learning that his beloved youngest son, John, had joined his brothers in rebellion.

IT WAS TO CHINON that Richard galloped to look at his dead defeated father. As the new king stared at the old, Henry's nose bled — or so the story goes. Richard, chroniclers say, fell to his knees and wept. Though Henry was one of the great Plantagenets, his body was left without clothing except for a cloak someone threw across him — another legend clinging to Chinon.

The second is close at hand. Fontevraud is a school and abbey, wherein Henry II, Eleanor of Aquitaine, Richard the Lion Hearted and King John's Eleanor are buried. Effigies grace their tombs so that one may study the face of Richard and consider the one who was called the most handsome man in Europe.

In the chapel one can feel the presence of Eleanor of Aquitaine who always called her Crusader son "my Richard." She loved him above and beyond all measure, and not long after his death, she retired to Fontevraud to spend what was left of her life among the nuns.

Moving north from Fontevraud, the traveler comes to Angers where Henry II held his famous Christmas court. The many-towered castle has been remodeled, but a part of the old building remains, including a massive fireplace.

THE PLANTAGENETS long have been interred but the romance surrounding the lively line can't be buried.

You can become acquainted with the family in England where Plantagenets were kings, but to get to the root of their matter travel by car from the south to the north of France.

After 200 years, 'Bonnie Prince Charlie' still remembered in Skye

By DICK ALEXANDER
Hearst News Service

ORTREE, Isle of Skye — Dressed as a woman, Bonnie Prince Charlie fled to this ruggedly beautiful island in the summer of 1746 to escape his enemies. Disguised as a travel writer, I came here because the name Skye — like Kathmandu and Titicaca — entrances me.

Skye, or Eilean a' Cheo — the Island of Mist — is the largest of the Inner Hebrides. Call it what you will, it's one of the more fascinating isles on this jet-shrunken planet, but only 50 miles long and 7 to 25 miles across.

The earliest archeological evidence of habitation on Skye dates from about 3000 B.C. Celtic settlements began to establish themselves during the first millenium B.C., and signs of their culture can still be seen today, including brochs (Scottish defense structures) and castles.

"Where did Bonnie Prince Charlie stop on the island?" I asked Douglas Ross, the middle-age taxi driver who met me at the small airstrip.

"You name it," he said. "Every place on the island claims he stopped there."

Ross was driving me to the Royal York Hotel in Portree, Skye's largest town, when I engaged him for an afternoon's drive around the island. We struck a deal at 35 pounds sterling and he proved to be an excellent guide.

WE TURNED SOUTH toward the Sleat Peninsula on A851, a single-lane paved road with turnouts spaced several hundred yards apart to enable the motorist to pull over and allow larger vehicles by.

The peninsula, Ross said, is called the "Garden of Skye" because of its woods and green pastures, a stark contrast to the rock and wild moorlands farther north.

"This is basically MacDonald country," he continued. "Actually, practically the whole of Skye belonged to the MacDonalds."

We drove through the countryside where the movie "Ring of Bright Water" was filmed, past the old Free Church of Scotland and the village of Isleornsay and Knock Castle — and on by the port of the ferry to Mallaigh on the mainland.

"There's a Dr. Donald Duck in Mallaigh," Ross said. "You Americans took his name. He's 63 years old and your Donald Duck is only 50."

"Is he still practicing?" I asked.

"Ay."

I couldn't resist my next question.

"He's not a quack, is he?"

"Not a quack," Ross replied with not even a hint of a smile.

IN MOMENTS, we were at the Clan MacDonald Center and ancient Armadale Castle, the center of MacDonalds the world over. Part of the castle has deteriorated so much that the late Lord MacDonald, father of the present chief of the clan, decided they should take up residence in nearby Ostaig House. A section of the ruins still claims the magnificent stairway that at one time led to the second floor ballroom but now is a stairway to nowhere.

It was here at Armadale that the lovely Flora MacDonald was chosen as the "young Highland lady" to help rescue the fleeing Bonnie Prince Charlie.

In 1745, Prince Charles landed on the Isle of Eriskay with a few supporters to try to reclaim the throne of Scotland and England for his father, the Chevalier de St. George, also known as the Old Pretender. With an army of 1,200 men and a 30,000-pound price on his head, he set out on a series of successful skirmishes that enlarged his army to about 5,000 men. But in 1746, he retreated north after being crushed in battle by the superior forces of the Duke of Cumberland. Then the prince's party reached Lochnan Uamh on the mainland just south of Skye, and after three weeks of hiding out in caves he received a a message from Hugh MacDonald of Armadale who suggested that he should be escorted to Skye by Hugh's stepdaughter, Flora.

DEREK COOPER, author and TV-radio writer, continues the narrative in his definitive guide, "Skye":

"Clad in a flowered calico gown sprigged with purple, a quilted petticoat, a muslin cap, a hood, apron, dun colored mantle and a pair of cotton gloves, Charles, with a passport describing him as Betty Burke, an Irish maidservant, set out with Flora and a trusted follower to Skye.

"The following day they were off Waternish point, and two sentries of the MacLeod militia challenged them. They rowed off as fast as they could out of musket range and later in the day landed slightly north of Kilbride point. Here Sir Alexander MacDonald's factor, Alexander of Kingsburgh, agreed to take Charles to Kingsburgh House."

At Kingsburgh, Charles, still in drag, was wined and dined and set off the next day in a drenching rain for Portree. At MacNab's Inn, the site of what is now the Royal Hotel, he said his goodbyes to Flora MacDonald and left for the nearby isle of Raasay.

Realizing the island was too small for safety, he and his party returned to Skye. On the morning of July 4, 1746, he left Skye for good.

BEYOND ARMADALE, the single-lane roadway diminishes, so Ross and I retraced our route northward, back toward Broadford. On the way he pointed to a spot on the peak of a hill called Beinnna Cailligh.

"A Norwegian princess of long ago didn't like Skye," he said, "and she used to climb up there and when she became an old woman they carried her up. When she died she was buried standing up, facing Norway. Beinnna Caillach is Gaelic for 'The hill of the woman.'"

We drove past the tiny lakeside village of Waterloo where, Ross said, they used to build their toilets on the water's edge.

"There was a high tide one day," he said seriously, "and they had waterloos."

We stopped for a sandwich in Broadford and continued in a northwesterly direction over the Black Cuillin Hills and on A863 past the Talisker distillery where, Ross said, the 160-proof whisky "brings tears to the eyes of a Skyeman" (when the bottle's empty).

DUNVEGAN CASTLE, said to be the oldest inhabited castle in Britain and the ancestral home of the MacLeods, who used to battle with the MacDonalds, stands on a loch in the Waternish section of the island and is inhabited by John MacLeod, the opera singer, and his concert-pianist wife. Then Ross delivered me to the Royal Hotel on the site of Prince Charlie's farewell to Flora.

What happened to the former "Betty Burke" and Flora MacDonald is told in Cooper's words:

"Charles never saw Flora again, never, as far as we know, even tried to communicate with her and there is still a little residual resentment in Skye at the offhand way in which he treated a woman who had done him a great service and suffered much subsequent inconvenience for her loyalty to the Stuart cause. Charles spent the remainder of his life in Europe and died as an alcoholic in Rome."

For her role in the plot, Flora was imprisoned in the Tower of London. After her release, she returned to her mother's home at Armadale. She married three years later and eventually moved with the family to North Carolina, returning to Scotland in 1779. She died in Peinduin in 1790 and her funeral is said to have been the largest ever witnessed in the Highlands. A monument to her has been erected near Duntulm Castle at the northern tip of Skye.

Wide variety of water sports available in Kansas

SKOKIE, Ill. (AP) — Florida, California, and Hawaii have the reputation, but the state of Kansas also offers many opportunities for a wide range of water sports.

According to Rand McNally's new edition of "Lodgings for Less," there are 23 federal reservoirs with more than 12,000 miles of shoreline in Kansas.

The guidebook says many of these reservoirs are new. But, it reports, that most offer pleasant, uncrowded conditions and facilities for swimming, water-skiing, sailing, fishing, rowing and canoeing throughout the state.

Overseas travel expected to boom

By JERRY HULSE
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

There may never be a better year for Americans to travel overseas.

Or a busier one.

This opinion was expressed by scores of industry figures recently in a nationwide poll by the Los Angeles Times' travel section. As forecast in 1984, they predict another bullish year for international travel.

The explanation is simple: A strong dollar is expected to lure U.S. visitors to every continent on earth during 1985. Europe in particular is being targeted by Americans. Already hotels across the continent report heavy bookings. Some are full into the fall months.

The boom in travel extends around the world — to the South Seas, South America, Africa and Asia as well as Europe.

So while the strong dollar indicates huge bargains for Americans, the major obstacle will be crowded conditions, particularly in Europe.

One industry leader repeated his forecast of a year ago: The "sold out" sign almost certainly will appear in many European destinations by early summer.

OTHER INDUSTRY leaders made these points:

— South America is experiencing a comeback, particularly Brazil, Peru and Equador.

— Canada can expect heavier traffic from the United States due to Heritage '85, which is being celebrated nationwide this year.

— Mexico, despite its recent adverse publicity, is looking for 5 million visitors and will be competing with Hawaii for the tourist dollar. (Area director Alberto Abdo of the Mexican Government Tourism Office said the number of foreign visitors to his country increased in 1984 by 27 percent).

— More and more Americans will be combining visits to China with trips to other countries in the Orient.

— The South Pacific will boom (especially Tahiti, Fiji, Australia and New Zealand).

— Cruising from the West Coast is expected to break all previous records in 1985.

— Movement to the Caribbean will be on the increase.

In New York, Eric Friedheim, publisher of Travel Agent Magazine, told The Times that Europe will be overrun by tourists even if the dollar weakens.

"Thousands of travelers have already paid for their trips," he said. "They are ready to go."

FRIEDHEIM REMINDED an interviewer that many Americans will visit Europe merely to take advantage of shopping bargains. Only last winter London's leading department store, Harrods, placed ads in the United States advising Americans that they could pay for their trips with the dollars saved on shopping sprees.

Besides the strong U.S. dollar, Friedheim attributes the European travel boom to lower air fares as well as dozens of low-cost travel packages.

"Americans," he said, "should have confirmed hotel reservations in Europe before leaving home. They probably won't sleep in the streets, but getting a room will be difficult."

This will extend even into the fall, Friedheim forecasts.

James Murphy, president of Brendan Tours, told of a two-week journey through Ireland during peak months that includes first-class hotels, most meals, sightseeing and entertainment for $728, which is $60 under the figure for 1983.

The same company is spotlighting a 10-day tour that takes in Belgium, Holland, Germany, Luxembourg and France for $448, and a 14-day escorted tour of Yugoslavia for $588. In both cases, air fare is extra.

At the low end of the scale, Brendan is promoting B&B tours of Britain for $29 a day that include a car. Another package features five nights in a hotel on Lake Lucerne in Switzerland with breakfast and dinner for $240.

FOR TRAVELERS starting early, CIF Tours International is bannering a one-week Ireland self-drive package for only $99. The offer, good until mid-April, features a car with unlimited mileage and accommodations in country homes and farmhouses.

Other attractive packages:

— A tour of Ireland, Wales, England and Scotland (15 days) for $698.

— A 20-day swing through England, France, Switzerland, Liechtenstein, Austria, Italy and Greece for $1,148.

— An eight-day London Theater week, $259.

— A four-day Rhine cruise, $400.

— Seventeen days featuring Spain and Morocco, $798.

Japan is anticipating a record turnout with the unveiling of its Expo '85 World's Fair in Tsukuba, the nation's so-called "science city" about 40 miles outside of Tokyo. The $600 million exhibition, which runs through Sept. 16, is expected to attract 20 million visitors. The focal point: an eight-story-high TV screen costing $17 million that is visible for miles beyond the fairgrounds.

The theme of the fair involves futuristic electronics products being produced by Japan and other industrialized nations.

MEANWHILE OTHER nations in Asia report big increases, with Thailand alone betting on a 20 percent hike in tourism over 1984 and Korea figuring on a 10 percent increase.

It is also the year that Europe is observing the tricentennial of the birth of composers Johann Sebastian Bach, George Frederick Handel and Domenico Scarlatti, with musical programs being planned across the Continent.

Ex-servicemen will be returning to Europe for the 40th anniversary (May 8) of VE day. Observances will be conducted both in Britain and on the Continent.

Cruise lines, airlines and tour operators are locked in a struggle for the dollar that promises the greatest array of bargain holidays yet announced by an industry that's fired up with competition.

Continued price wars seem a certainty among the airlines, while cruise lines will continue to offer free and discounted air fares to ports of embarkation. Three new liners made their debut on the West Coast in 1984: Princess Cruises' Royal Princess, Sitmar's Fairsky and Holland America's Noordam. With the new ships joining the lineup, cruise lines this year will be competing vigorously for passengers as hundreds of cabins become available on sailings from the West Coast.

While most industry leaders believe that international travel will outdistance figures set last year, some conservatives feel that '85 could lag by a small percentage point.

MICHAEL ALFORD, of Alford Leisure Enterprises, is predicting that '85 will be "nearly as good as last year.

"Certainly, traffic to Europe will be very strong."

Island to celebrate composer's 300th birthday

New York Times News Service

By now, probably nobody needs to be told that 1985 marks the 300th anniversary of the birth of Johann Sebastian Bach. All that remains to be said is where the next tercentenary tribute is taking place.

In this instance, it is the Portuguese island of Madeira, where the Sixth Madeira Bach Festival will be held June 15 to June 23.

Besides the music to be heard at 25 concerts during the nine-day festivities, there will be formal English tea parties, late evening receptions, informal midafternoon brass performances in wine cellars and sightseeing trips.

Among the prominent artists scheduled to take part in the Bach Festival are Maureen Forrester, Rosalyn Tureck, Anthony Newman and Alvaro Cassuto.

Among the choral groups will be the Amor Artis Chorale and the Canticum Novum Singers.

Package tours, including subscriptions to the concerts, as well as individual arrangements for lodging and attendance at the festival are available.

More information and reservations may be obtained from the Madeira Bach Festival (437 Madison Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10022; 212-750-9232).

Warren purchases Treanor Equipment

Johnny R. Warren has purchased Treanor Equipment Co., West Texas' Caterpillar dealership for the past 27 years, from John Treanor effective April 1, 1985. Warren will assume duties of president and chief executive officer immediately. Additionally, Warren has been appointed the Caterpillar dealership for the 40-county area of West Texas.

Treanor Equipment Co. carries the full line of Caterpillar products, parts and services for the drilling production segments of the oil and gas industry, and the construction and heavy equipment needs of government and private industry. Treanor now employs over 150 people and boasts a general office in Abilene, Texas in addition to offices in Odessa, Texas.

"It is my intention to be highly involved with Treanor," stated Warren. "We want to build upon the excellent reputation for quality goods and service begun by Jack Treanor 27 years ago." Only 84 Caterpillar dealerships have been awarded in the U. S., and the average terms of a dealership exceeds 38 years. "I am extremely pleased to have been awarded this opportunity by Caterpillar."

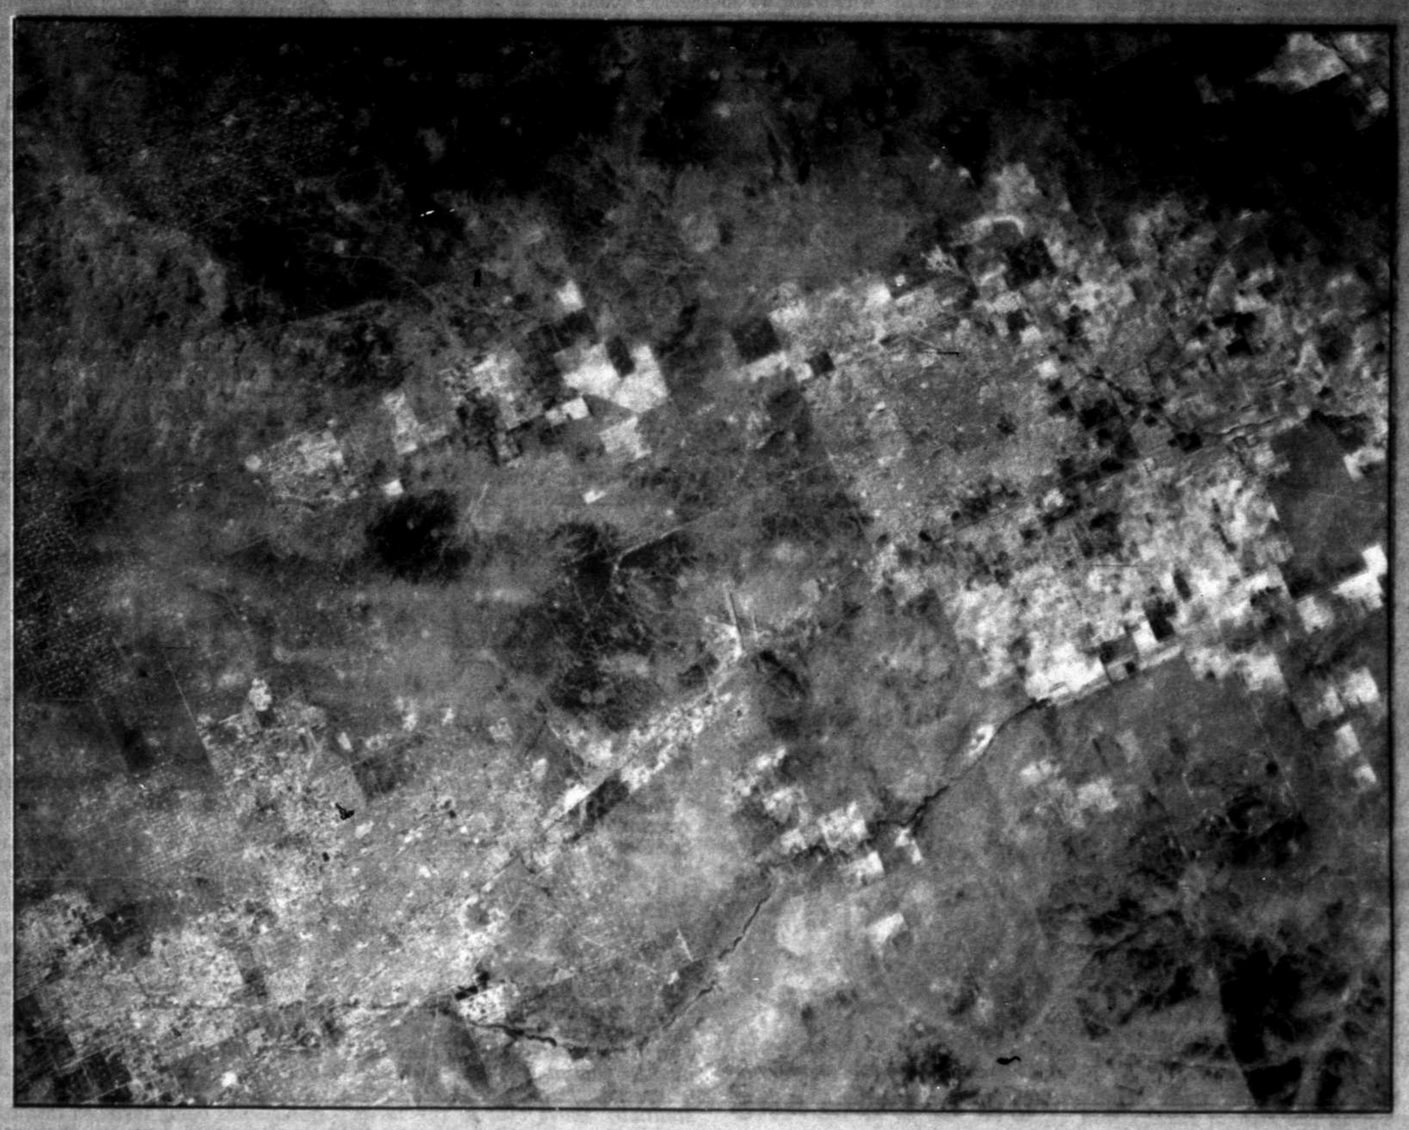

No immediate changes are planned under the new leadership, and current employment and its associated benefits will remain intact. Dwain McMillian will continue as vice president of sales. Jerry Arther, vice president/parts and service and Johnny Mathis, vice president/secretary-treasurer will play intricate roles in the new company as they continue in their respective positions.

In 1971, Warren joined Treanor Equipment Co. as vice president and general manager of Compressor Systems, Inc., a wholly-owned subsidiary. By 1972, the company was "spun-off" and Warren assumed the duties of president. CSI was then purchased by Warren and Vineyard Ranch, Inc. in November of 1975. Under his leadership, CSI has grown to be one of the largest gas compressor companies in the world, and an employer of over 600 people. Warren has relinquished his role as CSI Chief Executive Officer, although he continues to be the majority stockholder and chairman of the board, as he assumes the leadership of his new company, Treanor Equipment Co.

Warren, 48, graduated from the University of Texas at Austin, Texas with a petroleum engineering degree as well as business administration degree in 1959. A registered professional engineer, he has resided in Midland for the last twenty-two years.

Ingram to head CSI

James W. Ingram has been named chief executive officer of Compressor Systems, Inc. effective April 1, 1985, announced CSI's retiring CEO, Johnny Warren.

"Jim has been a tremendous asset to CSI since he joined the company in 1972," stated Warren. "Although he is officially gaining the title of CEO, he as basically been performing in this function for the last two years as president of the company." I am leaving CSI in excellent hands," Warren went on to say.

Warren will remain CSI's majority stockholder and chairman of the board, but will pass all active management responsibilities to Ingram. Warren leaves VSI to assume management of his newly acquired Treanor Equipment Co.

Under the management of Warren and Ingram, Compressor Systems, Inc. has grown to be a diversified energy-related holding company active in both national and international trade with approximately 610 employees.

The holding company is comprised of five wholly-owned divisions and subsidiary companies. CSI Compressor Division, one of the largest gas compressor companies in the world, is headquartered in Midland, Texas. The company fabricates, rents, sells and services oilfield gas compressors.

Other CSI divisions include: Hydrocarbon Systems, Inc. Midland, Texas, specializing in small refrigeration gas plants; Ignition Systems and Controls, Midland, Texas, specializing in oilfield electrical and lubrication systems; Hydro-Tech Systems, Inc., Lafayette, Louisiana, specializing in pumps and generators; and McKenzie Corp., Houston, Pennsylvania, specializing in engines, drilling packages, generators, soap pumps, and gas comoressors.

Although the oil and gas industry as a whole has faced hard times during the recent economic downturn, CSI continues to enjoy a strong and profitable position in the industry.

Satellite exploration firm opens here

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business-Oil Editor

A new exploration tool has been added to Midland's oil-finding services that promises to help oilmen qualify prospects faster and cheaper, while increasing this city's status as a world-class exploration center.

Midland now joins Houston, Dallas, Denver and other major exploration centers of the world in having its own Landsat computer firm, capable of receiving raw data directly from NASA and enhancing or "massaging" it locally with computers.

It is a new exploration service that should prove particularly valuable to the independent sector, since most major oil companies already have in-house computer capability and photo geologists to quickly evaluate large areas with Landsat imagery, and direct attention to further definition of possible features with magnetics or seismic.

However, Satellite Exploration Consultants Inc., which recently opened in Atrium Center, 110 E. Louisiana, is the only firm in West Texas capable of enhancing raw magnetic data from NASA and is one of less than a dozen firms in the U.S. enhancing NASA data for the independent oil and gas sector.

The firm was founded in Abilene, but made the move to Midland after realizing that over 75 percent of its clients were located here.

Jerry Mennenaga/Reporter-Telegram

Rich Franzen, seated, and Randy Anderson, loading tape, prepare to enhance Landsat satellite data that will be used to assist Midland oil firms in exploration.

"Landsat is probably one of the cheapest exploration tools available to the independent today," said Jim Cosner, general manager Satellite Exploration Consultants.

"One can evaluate a five mile square area for slightly less than $6,000, enlarging and enhancing any number of possible structures within the area of interest."

Cosner said that the attractiveness of Landsat exploration had increased substantially in the last last year as a result of thematic mapping (TM). Utilizing new sensors which were launched with Landsat V, the new process dramatically increases the detail and resolution of the imagery, detecting objects as small as 30 meters in size. The minimum with the former scanning method was 80 meters, according to Cosner. He said it was now possible to detect geological structures as small as one-quarter section with TM enhanced images.

The exploration executive pointed out that the thematic mapping system was also detailed enough to assist in development

Shell wins in Overthrust test bid

IDAHO FALLS, Idaho (AP) — Shell Oil Co. has won a preliminary battle in its bid to sink another test well in the Idaho portion of the Overthrust Belt.

An environmental assessment of the project, conducted by the Targhee National Forest and the Bureau of Land Management, has recommended that the Houston company be permitted to sink the test well at the head of West Indian Creek about 15 miles west of Spencer.

The company has proposed drilling down to 17,000 feet in the same region where it sunk a 13,400-foot test well on private land just last winter. It is in the process of capping and plugging that well.

The site for the new well, which should be under construction by June, is only a few miles from an 18,500-foot well drilled by Exxon in 1982. That well, the deepest ever sunk in the Idaho Overthrust Belt region, came up dry.

Single-family homes sales up following previous decline

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sales of single-family homes climbed 6.2 percent in February following a slight drop the month before, the government has reported.

The increase put sales at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 638,000 in February, compared to a rate of 601,000 in January.

The report by the Commerce Department and the Department of Housing and Urban Development represented a downward revision for sales in January. Originally, the government said sales that month had increased 2.6 percent.

The housing industry experienced a sharp slowdown last spring as interest rates began climbing. Rates peaked in July and have fallen for seven consecutive months, leading to a pickup in home sales.

Fixed-rate conventional mortgages averaged 13.47 percent in early February, down from a high of 15.2 percent in July.

The median price of a home was $83,100 in February.

How about special treatment for stress?

All the type A's of this world can take heart — and maybe take stock — in a recent court ruling.

According to a recent AP news story, workers in stressful jobs should be compensated for stress-related disabilities, the Rhode Island Supreme Court has ruled.

In a unanimous decision the court upheld a decision by the state Workers' Compensation Commission to grant benefits to the widow of the sports editor of The Evening Times of Pawtucket.

Edward F. "Ted" Mulcahey died in 1978 of a cerebral hemorrhage after covering a football game.

The commission ruled Mulcahey's death was spurred by his job. It said the odd working hours and pressure of filing stories on deadline aggravated his high-blood pressure and diabetes.

"An employer takes its workers as it finds them ... and when the employee aggravates an existing condition and the result is an incapacity for work, the employee is entitled to compensation for such incapacity," Justice Thomas F. Kelleher said in the court's decision.

The commission awarded Helen F. Mulcahey $55,000 in retroactive benefits and weekly payments of $200 for the rest of her life.

New England Newspapers Inc., owner of The Evening Times, appealed the commission's award to the state Supreme Court.

Commission [illegible]inistrator William A. Castro[illegible] the decision "precedent sett[illegible]cause no one has ever collected compensation because of stress.

So there! We finally have it. A legal decision in black and white, making law what some of us have known for a long time — that some jobs can really kill you.

No doubt about it, some professions are loaded with stress. There are airline controllers who guide planes through the night and fog...doctors who cut on people...farmers who put seeds in the ground and wait for rain...oilmen who drill multi-million dollar dry holes — repeatedly...bankers who lend them money to do it. Even journalists are considered at high risk for stress-related diseases.

So do you suppose the Rhode Island precedent could open up a whole new can of worms where employment and stress are concerned?

Will certain job applications now have big, red warnings printed across the front of them: Caution: The Surgeon General has determined that this job could be hazardous to your health?

Would OSHA routinely monitor certain job places for stress hazards, checking blood pressure in certain individuals?

We know that some workers in hazardous environments are allowed to tolerate only certain levels of toxins and radiation for certain lengths of time. Could it be that when certain jobs become too stressful an OSHA inspector could send those in stress home to take a nap and calm down?

And could stressed employees file a grievence with their union? "Yes, Boss Mafianoelli, they make me think about too many things at once. It's confusing and stressful. And sometimes they hollar at me."

And what about stress pay? Air Force pilots get combat pay. Why can't some of us in stressful jobs earn stress pay? When it comes to measuring out pay for stress there seems to be no justice. For some top executives, who make three times more than the President, supposedly for the stress they bear, their biggest stress seems only to be where to spend their two-month vacation and what to do when the afternoon golf game is rained out.

In other jobs, however, like newspapering, it's not so much a matter of how you're going to die — unless you're a Beirut correspondent — but when.

There really is a reason why newspaper editors tend to chain smoke, get fat, age fast and die prematurely, griping and grouching all the while. In this business, unless you retire early or get hit by a car, some form of stress-related disease is most likely to claim you. It's the unending deadlines and continual fear of making a fool of yourself in print (no difficult task for some of us).

I wonder if there is any chance of finding a judge somewhere in South Texas that could get us journalists a precedent for stress pay?

Boomtown's citizens say they are playing 'catch-up'

By MICHAEL G. MURPHY
Cox News Service

MESA, Ariz. — Fifteen or so years ago, sun-baked folks in the Phoenix area drove around slowly — by their own choice — and smiled at how they weren't becoming another Los Angeles.

They still motor around slowly, but cursing and grumbling now, at how a fender-bender can turn either of the metro area's two freeways into a three-lane parking lot.

"We have a deplorable freeway system," says Maricopa County Supervisor Tom Freestone of Mesa. "We're 20 years behind in keeping up freeway construction."

It's time something was done, now that the Valley of the Sun — with Phoenix in the center — is 20 years behind.

Those traffic snarls, like those in a host of other Sun Belt cities, are an unmistakeable sign of explosive growth.

From slow-motion planning, the transition is in high gear. For the most part though, it has been reacting rather than planning.

It is a game of Sun Belt boom-town catch-up.

"Perhaps one always plays catch-up in a growing market like this. But I think they (politicians and public) think that they're really behind now," said Earl de Berge, director of Behavior Research, Inc., which conducts the Rocky Mountain Poll.

The fact that state lawmakers, dominated by anti-tax Republicans, are considering which of three tax hikes to back to generate $3.5 billion to solve transportation problems for the next 20 years signals a significant philosophical change.

THE NEW OUTLOOK is most evident in the East Valley cities of Mesa, Tempe and Chandler, all of which border southeast Phoenix. From the East Valley philosophy of "let's think twice about growth" to boom-town battle cries of "bigger is better," the metamorphosis of suburb into city has begun.

"I think there's much more of a pro-growth attitude in the outlying areas than there used to be," said de Berge, who's spent 43 years in the Valley.

Mesa, once a "bedroom community;" Tempe, known as a university town; and Chandler, a farm town crossroads, all have switched to fast-track growth — landing high-tech companies, manufacturing and a multitude of high-rise, corporate and shopping mall developments.

Consider: high-rises stretching skyward in what used to be almost a totally flat skyline.

Tempe is home to the $400 million Corporate Lakes, a massive project at the Superstition and Interstate 10 freeways that will bring 3.6 million square feet of office, hotel and entertainment space. It will feature 11 high-rise buildings circling a waterway and retail shops, including a 15-story office tower and a 20-story building that will be the tallest in the East Valley.

Consider: Hughes Helicopter, a subsidiary of the McDonnell Douglas Corp., makes the Apache AH-64 attack helicopter in Mesa for the U.S. Army. It now employs about 1,500 people. Last July, Hughes officials announced plans to move the corporate headquarters to Mesa from Culver City, Calif., and said they should employ about 9,400 people here by 1990.

Consider: the making of the "Silicon Desert." Since 1975, the East Valley's number of high-tech manufacturing firms employing 100 or more people has nearly doubled to 17, according to a study released by Southwest Savings and Loan Association.

NATIONAL COMPANIES like Intel, Motorola, GTE, Garrett, Digital, ITT, Micro-Rel, Litton and Hughes have located around the Hohokam Expressway and University Drive in Tempe and along the "Silicon Strip" of Williams Field Road in Chandler. Arizona State University's Bureau of Economic Research estimates that high-tech industries have a $2 billion effect on Arizona's economy.

Naturally, with the booming population and sprawling corporate development, come the accompanying problems of water supply and quality, traffic snafus and air pollution.

Since June, Chandler residents have been asked, with the added incentive of fines, to conserve water. The city found itself behind schedule in building new storage tanks and pumping stations. And at times last summer, it had only a few hours' water supply.

Chandler also has had serious problems with overflowing sewer systems in older neighborhoods because a new sewage treatment plant has not been completed.

Al Pfahl, acting public works director, said the problems are under control, and Chandler soon will start building to prepare for growth rather than playing catch-up.

STATE AND CITY planners believe future water supplies will be adequate to serve an East Valley population projected to triple to about 1 million by the year 2000.

But water quality is an entirely different question.

"We are starting to look for the problem and, not to anyone's surprise, we're finding it wherever we look," said Chuck Anders, director of the environmental division of the Arizona Department of Health Services.

Citing a recent study to learn how much of Arizona's ground water has been contaminated in the past 30 years, he said DHS has found volatile chemicals, mostly industrial solvents and pesticides, in 114 of 800 test wells drilled throughout the state. More than 80 of the wells are in Maricopa County.

Compounding the problem is widespread public ignorance about the hazards, Ander said.

"One of the phone calls we got was from a small machine shop. They indicated they didn't need to fill out the questionnaire because they didn't dispose of anything to be concerned about. They said they use TCE and some other chemicals. They said, 'We don't throw them down the drain. We just take them out back and dump them.'"

MANY SMALL- AND medium-sized high-tech companies — run by the type of entrepreneur who made the Silicon Valley what it is — use the same chemicals as the Motorolas and Intels.

"All of these issues are coming to the fore and we're trying to deal with them as they come up," Anders says. "But we're in a reactive mode, not pro-active."

And what would medium-sized cities roaring toward big-city status be without their share of air pollution?

Oil prices cannot be predicted accurately

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business-Oil Editor

Editor's Note: This is the fourth and last in a series of interviews with Waylon Griffin, PhD., professor of marketing at University of Texas Permian Basin on the subject of energy prices.

Can the price of oil be predicted?

The price of oil cannot be predicted with any measure of accuracy. In fact, most all forecasts are wrong. All the forecasts that missed the bust of 1982 were wrong.

Were there any indications revealing the bust of 1982? Could we have seen it coming?

Keep in mind that forecasting is something like looking out the rear view mirror of an automobile and trying to tell the driver which way to go, based on where he has been. It's that difficult.

But yes, there were indicators that the bust of 1982 was coming. One analyst, Arlan Tussing, warned the industry in writing.

What were the indicators?

An inordinate high interest rate was one. When interest rates were paying a higher return than a return on an investment, and rates jumped to 21-22 percent, we should have seen a flashing red light.

Full employment in all sectors of production was another sign. When it was impossible to buy or lease a rig or find enough people to run them, and when practically everything needed was on backorder, that normally foretells the peakof the boom.

Also, the spot market began to grow soft at the peak of the boom. They began to soften in late 1981, and in early 1982 the spot fell below the OPEC offical price. That was a sure sign of surplus, and indicated a new trendline.

Why did the industry not react more quickly to this new trendline?

Some did and were spared, but the worldwide oil distribution system is so large that it takes a lag time of months before all the factors are in the hands of the decision makers. In the case of OPEC it took them one year from the time of the forming of the new trendline to the time it lowered the price of crude oil.

When major oil companies know they have a surplus and start to liquidate inventories and stop buying oil, it sometimes takes 18 months for a full inventory adjustment.

Are we seeing another bust in the lastest round of oil price cuts?

Nobody knows if this is just another step down or the bottom of the trough. If I had the answer to that question, I could retire. The fact is: until we have a better system of measuring what supplies are going into the system and coming out of the system, we are going to have a great deal of error in predicting the price of oil. The best we can do is rely on a few educated noses.

That's the deceptive part of the system. We all thought the market had leveled out at $29 per barrel.

We hear a lot about the substitution effect in relation to energy. Can you explain what this is and how it works?

The substitution effect takes place when one energy commodity rises substantially above others in price and it is substituted by another energy commodity. For instance, when natural gas prices rose substantially above coal in the 1970s, coal began to substitute for natural gas as a power supply.

Engineers, keep in mind, do not buy a particular fuel. They don't care what the source is, they buy btus at an evaluated price. In the evaluated price is the cost to switch boiler fuels, the cost of delivery, the cost of burining it.

Isn't natural gas a premium fuel?

That's one of the great myths of the industry that natural gas is a premium fuel. It's not. Arlon Tussing, consultant for ARTA Inc., a Seattle energy consulting firm, says that because energy sources compete no one source can be called a premium fuel. The cost of burning natural gas cannot rise much above the evaluated price of burning coal.

How does the substitution effect play upon the oil market and the economy of the Permian Basin.?

The substitution effect is worldwide. Each time a geothermal plant is built in Japan oil is backed out of the market. That is a market share that will never be regained. Oil removed from the market on a permanent basis shrinks demand and affects prices in the Permian Basin.

How extensive is the substitution effect worldwide?

Very! Besides using geothermal energy, the Japanese are now producing 50 percent of their energy from nuclear. France is producing 40 percent of its electricity from nuclear and is going for 75 percent. Germany is also moving full steam ahead on nuclear power. In the U.S., only 13 percent is nuclear.

Giant windmill systems are being used in Holland and California to produce electricity, replacing fuel oil in some cases. Capital intensive systems are being installed throughout the world, because once paid back the cost of the energy commodity is practically free. The conservation mood continues throughout the world.

What does this do for the immediate oil market?

It puts oil on a continuing demand decline trend, that has been in the market snce 1978. Oil will continue to be backed out of the market by other energy sources, but in the process it will not go straight down. There will be supply considerations, temporary shortages that will temporarily cause oil prices to escalate dramatically. The market will be erratic, with plateaus and peaks and valleys until the backout or substitution process has worked its way through the market.

In a commodity market a new equilibrium point is always evolving. There is no such thing as perfect balance between supply and demand. That is what we are seeing here the substitution effect in a commodity market and the continual adjutment and readjustment of supply and demand that goes with it.

Judge strikes down statute allowing mining in parks

WASHINGTON (AP) — An Interior Department rule that could have opened more than 3.7 million acres in national parks to strip mining has been struck down by a federal judge.

U.S. District Judge Thomas A. Tierney said the department acted illegally in September 1983 when it issued a new definition of "valid existing rights."

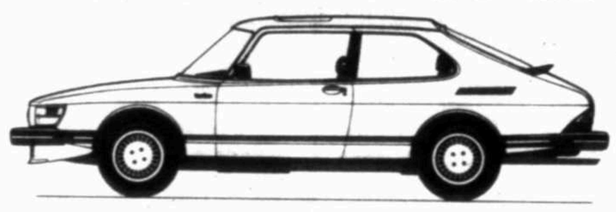

The new definition, issued under former Interior Secretary James G. Watt, would have made it easier for companies to mine privately owned coal deposits in federal parks, forests, wildlife refuges and other protected areas.

Tierney's ruling, issued Friday and not made public until Monday, was based on the process by which the new definition was reached, rather than the legality of it. He ruled that the department failed to provide adequate notice and comment before adopting it.

The rule was opposed by conservation groups and state officials.

"We're back to square one, but hopefully with an Interior secretary who is more sensitive to the need to protect national parks," said Norman Dean, attorney for the National Wildlife Federation, one of the conservation groups that challenged the rule.

A SPORTS CAR FOR GROWN-UPS.

Sooner or later, almost every car enthusiast comes up against a classic dilemma: performance or practicality?

Growing family responsibilities and tightening financial limitations force most to give up the high-performance machinery that they love. Instead, they buy plain-vanilla sedans or station wagons and daydream about how much fun driving used to be.

There's another choice. There's the Saab 900.

Its power and road manners make it one of Europe's most desirable sports sedans. Yet it can accommodate four adults very comfortably and carry their luggage in a generous, expandable cargo compartment. Saab's prices make it easy to get your family into one, too.

Phelps Dodge to close copper smelter

AJO, Ariz. (AP) — Phelps Dodge Corp. says low copper prices, the $5 million cost of fitting pollution-control equipment and Ajo's distance from sources of copper concentrates added up to a decision to close the company's smelter here.

About 200 workers will be laid off and another 35 either will retire or transfer to other Phelps Dodge operations, company officials announced Wednesday in Phoenix.

The decision to close the smelter April 4 was not a surprise in this Pima County community in southwestern Arizona because there had been rumors since 600 people lost their jobs in August when Phelps Dodge closed its mine and millhere, said the Chamber of Commerce president.

Most residents knew the smelter's continued operation "was just a matter of time," said Gabrille David-Barton, who also is editor of the community newspaper.

Ajo is trying to broaden its economic base by serving as a permanent and seasonal home for retirees and winter visitors, and residents will just have to "cut back, tighten our belts," she said.

"It's a hard blow, but we'll take it," Ms. David-Barton said. "A lot of us are kind of hard-nosed. We like it here and we don't want to leave."

Phelps Dodge spokesmen in Phoenix said 40 workers would be retained for security and powerhouse duties. The company employed 1,300 in Ajo in 1981.

Senior Vice President Leonard R. Judd, said the decision to close the smelter was made because the "inherent handicaps of operating a small smelter located a long distance from the sources of concentrates were just too great to be overcome."

Judd said Phelps Dodge also could not justify spending $5 million to bring it in line with emissions limits by Dec. 31, when the smelter operating permit expires.

Vice President Pat Scanlon said Phelps Dodge will cancel a $4.2 million contract with State West Inc., of Tempe, for installation of a new dry gas scrubbing system, Scanlon said. He could not say whether PD will have to pay State West more than the $75,000 already spent under the contract.

The Ajo plant probably would be reopened if copper prices rise, Scanlon said.

Since the August closings of the mine and concentrator, the Ajo smelter has processed concentrates from the company's Morenci mine.

Those concentrates will be processed at Douglas or Hidalgo, N.M., Scanlon said.

Some Morenci concentrates may be sold to foreign producers, but those producers will not include Mexico operations along the U.S.-Mexico border, he said.

Permian Basig rig count falls

The U.S. rig count rose again this week, while the Permian Basin rig count fell.

Midland County lost six rigs, leaving three rigs at work within county lines this week. Ector County added three rigs, raising the count to 22 this week. Four rigs moved into Martin County, raising the total to 12 for the week. One rig left Andrews County, leaving 31 within county lines.

Andrews is no the most active county in the Permian Basin. Four rigs left Lea County, which had 32 last week, leaving 28 this week. Glasscock County, also very popular, lost two rigs, lowering the total to seven this week. Coke County picked up a rig this week, after a week of no activity.

For the week, the rig count is 302. A week ago the count was 317. A year ago the count was 307.

The state of Texas dropped 21 rigs this week, leaving 714 working throughout the state. New Mexico held steady with 63 rigs. Oklahoma gained 10 rigs, raising the tally to 259 this week. Twelve rigs moved out of Louisiana, leaving 280 rigs working.

Four rigs left New York, leaving no rigs at work in the state. North Dakota added fourteen rigs, raising the total to 37. Alaska added a rig, making the total 21 this week. California added five rigs, lifting the count to 75 for the state this week. Canada dropped 54 rigs, leaving the count at 346 this week.

The rig count this week is 1,939. A week ago the count was 1,937. A year ago the count was 2,206.

Analysts say ESM collapse costly lesson for managers

NEW YORK (AP) — The failure of a small Florida securities dealer this month provided a heavy-handed lesson to city finance managers eager to wring an extra dollar out of idle municipal funds.

Analysts say the failure of ESM Government Securities Inc. should teach municipal officials nationwide that it's dangerous not to take possession of government securities posted as collateral in transactions with bond dealers.

Consider the quite different results experienced by two ESM customers — Tempe, Ariz., and Beaumont, Texas.

In both cases, the cities had municipal funds that were not going to be needed for several months and they decided to put them to work earning interest.

They decided on short-term "repurchase agreements," which generally pay up to a full percentage point more than such investments as bank certificates of deposit.

The cities each selected the Fort Lauderdale, Fla.-based ESM for the transactions. In the "repo" arrangements, ESM agreed to sell top-grade government securities to each city temporarily and to repurchase them later at the original price plus interest.

In exchange, the cities gave the dealer their surplus funds.

ESM was shut down March 4 after the federal Securities and Exchange Commission said it had discovered the dealer had apparently left its customers, mostly banks and small governments, with $300 million in losses.

In the wake of the closing, it appeared Tempe had done well. The securities that ESM posted as collateral for Tempe's $6.7 million in transactions was sent to a bank the city had hired as its custodian.

Officials in Beaumont, however, said the securities that ESM had said it would post as collateral for Beaumont's $20 million were never actually transferred to the city's account. Their investment may be lost.

Girard Miller, director of technical services for the Government Finance Officers Association, said the reason some cities forgo actual possession of collateral is that securities dealers frequently offer a slightly higher interest rate — usually a few hundredths of a percentage point — if they do so. The dealers avoid expenses and paperwork.

In some cases, it may be impractical to take physical delivery of collateral, such as when the repurchase agreement lasts only overnight, Miller said. "But for 'repos' that are appreciably longer than that, there is no excuse for not getting confirmation of custody of collateral," he said.

Jerry Geiger, director of management services for the city of Tempe, said his city routinely insisted on physical delivery of collateral.

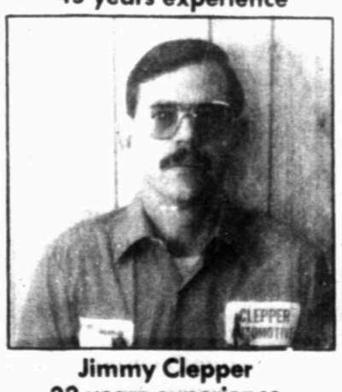

"We don't mind the extra administrative burden," he said in a telephone interview. "I don't know how much we lost by insisting on delivery, but I know it costs us something."

The city had ESM deliver its collateral to Chase Manhattan Bank in New York and has been told the securities are being held in an account in its name. Geiger said the city plans to wait until the repurchase agreement with ESM expires before it will make any move in regard to the securities.

Officials in Beaumont wish they had taken that approach.

City Manager Karl Nollenberger said the city had dealt successfully with ESM in the past. He said Beaumont had invested nearly $62.5 million through repurchase agreements last year.

Committee considering worker's compensation changes

By BILL KIDD

AUSTIN — Worker's compensation insurance continues to come in for regulatory and legislative attention, including proposals to require all employers to carry worker's compensation, and for dealing with insurer insolvencies.

The Worker's Compensation Subcommittee of the Senate Jurisprudence Committee is considering a package of bills by subcommittee Chairman Oscar Mauzy, D-Dallas, including a measure to make worker's compensation coverage mandatory in Texas.

Austin attorney Tony Korioth, a specialist in worker's compensation matters, argues that change in the current system would reduce costs for employers overall.

But the Texas Association of Business opposed the requirement — at last until employers have the option of self-insurance.

Mauzy also is proposing to change the law to include "repetitious menta trauma" as a compensable injury — a proposal opposed by insurers, and supported by trial lawyers and organized labor.

In addition to the legislative proposals, Texas Worker's Compensation Assigned Risk Pool directors are asking member companies to consider how to deal with claims arising from company insolvencies — with that matter to be considered at a May 14 session.

The pool and the Texas Property and Casualty Insurance Guaranty Association are considering how to handle any such claims because of an apparent conflict in the law on the amount of claims which are to be covered to the two entitites.

The 100 largest State-chartered credit unions in Texas showed an increase of 13.5 per cent in their combined assets in 1984, the Texas Credit Union Department reports. Commissioner John Parsons reports the 100 credit unions showed an increase exceeding $393 million.

While the 100 represent 22 per cent of the total number, but 85 per cent of the total assets, for State-chartered credit unions, Parson says, "the total assets of all State-chartered credit unions is estimated to be $3.84 billion."

Largest State-chartered credit union in 1984, as in 1983, was Government Employees Credit Union, San Antonio, with $558.8 million in assets at the end of the year (compared to $526.3 million at the end of 1983.)

The first eight credit unions for 1983 retained their rankings in 1984: Texins, Richardson; Dallas Teachers; Government Employees, El Paso; Richardson, Richardson; Texas Dow, Lake Jackson; Exxon Baytown; and Educational, Fort Worth.

Gulf Employees, Houston, moved from No. 12 to No. 9, while Houston Area Teachers, which had been No. 9, fell to No. 11. Public Employees, Austin, stayed at No. 10.

Legislation setting out preferred methods for disposal of hazardous materials has been introduced by Sen. Ray Farabee, D-Wichita Falls, as SB 1217.

Preferred methods, to the "maximum extent economically and technologically feasible," would be "minimization" of waste production, reuse or recycling of waste, treatment to destroy the hazardous characteristics, treatment to reduce the hazardous characteristics, underground injection, and land disposal.

On-site destruction of wastes would be preferred — but would be considered in view of other factors, including transportation hazard, site suitability, and "quality of destruction."

An interagency council would be established, including the Department of Water Resources, Texas Department of Health, Air Control and Railroad Commission — with duties including developing a clearinghouse for information on hazardous waste management, and to assist in a "waste exchange program," intended to allow recycling or reuse of hazardous wastes.

The bill also provides for Department of Water Resources to compile and publish a registry of hazardous waste facilities which have been abandoned and are in need of clean-up.

Clean-up would rely first on "private parties," then Federal aid and "if necessary" State funds, with the State authorized to take legal action to recover its costs where possible.

Auto industry maintaining health

DETROIT (AP) — Mid-March domestic auto sales figures show the industry maintaining its health, but analysts say a close look at market shares show a below par performance by General Motors Corp.

Figures released this week by the six major manufacturers put sales for March 11-20 at 5 percent above the rate of the comparable period a year ago, with Chrysler Corp. and Ford Motor Co. continuing to grab market share from GM.

Chrysler sales in the March 11-20 period up 39 percent from a year earlier and Ford's up 22.4 percent. GM's were down 7.7 percent.

GM's share of the U.S. market has been generally depressed since it suffered strikes last year.

It was 52.9 percent from March 11-20 compared with 60.3 a year earlier. Ford was at 27.5 percent this time compared with 23.6 percent in 1984 and Chrysler had 16.1 percent compared with 12.2 percent a year earlier.

"GM's getting clobbered," said David Bloom, an industry analyst at First Boston Corp. in New York.

"Chrysler and Ford are scooping up their sales," said Harvey Heinbach of Merrill Lynch.

Chrysler and Ford have been offering cut-rate financing and incentives offered to consumers and dealers. GM has just begun cut-rate financing on its subcompact J-cars and the results of the catch-up program may show up in the next period's sales.

The seasonally adjusted annual rate of sales was 8.1 million, which is considered a healthy showing. The six major U.S. carmakers sold 7.9 million cars last year.

"It looks like things are holding steady" for the industry, said "But it has taken longer than we expected for GM's sales to come back."

Among the three small producers, American Honda Motor Co. Inc., the No. 4 U.S. carmaker, scored a 47.1 percent increase in Accord sales over last year. American Motors Corp. suffered a 43.9 percent decline of its Renault Alliance and Encore subcompact cars. Sales of U.S.-made Golf subcompacts by Volkswagen of America Inc. were up 2.5 percent over last year's sales of the discontinued VW Rabbit.

In all, the U.S. automakers sold 273,451 cars in the March 11-20 period in nine official selling days, or 30,383 a day, compared with 231,481 sales in eight days, or 28,935 a day, a year earlier.

Here are the tallies for the major U.S. carmakers.

Sales for the year to date were figured as straight percentages because both periods had 67 official selling days.

GM
March 11-20: 144,851 vs. 139,503, down 7.7 percent.
Year: 957,851 vs. 984,900, down 2.7 percent

Ford
March 11-20: 75,332 vs. 54,710, up 22.4 percent.
Year: 446,391 vs. 410,108, up 8.9 percent

Chrysler
March 11-20: 44,030 vs. 28,162, up 39.0 percent.
Year: 256,935 vs. 202,850, up 26.7 percent.

drilling: "After the wildcat, we can sometimes help the operator determine where to spot the second well by using Landsat imagery to look for a linement system in the area and study the system in relationship to the well," said Cosner.

But this is not a stand-alone tool, and we don't want to present it that way," he said. "It is merely a qualifying tool to be used with other exploration tools."

Besides enhancing and interpreting areas of interest for oil companies, Satellite Exploration Consultants also plans to avail other photo geological consultants of its facilities, computers and personnel to assist them in interpretations for their clients.

"We don't take overrides," said Cosner. "There is not an oilman in our group, and we plan to stay that way. We want to be able to work with everyone on a confidential basis."

Glastron to close its Austin plant

AUSTIN (AP) — Glastron Boat Co., one of the early makers of fiberglass, all-purpose runabouts, has announced it will close its Austin plant by the end of July.

Keith Orme, president of Glastron-Conroy Ltd., the parent company, said few if any of the 200 present employees would be transferred to other company plants in New Braunfels and North Carolina.

Glastron began in Austin in 1956 and at its peak in the 1970s employed nearly 1,000 workers in Austin and reported sales of more than $40 million.

Glastron sold its 30.5 acre plant in north Austin early last year during a liquidation of its parent company, Conroy Inc.

Orme said the company shopped for a new plant site near Austin but found it could not afford to buy land in the area because of real estate speculation.

The new owner of the north Austin land has given notice he wants to take possession of the site.

Small Business Administration helps form global 'old girls' network

Copley News Service

On May 24, 16 women, all owners of small service businesses throughout the country, will embark on a trade mission that will take them to Frankfurt, London and Madrid.

There they will meet with prospective clients, many of whom also will be women.

It's sort of the first step toward forming a global "old girls" network, with the sponsorship of the Small Business Administration and the blessings and help of the U.S. Department of Commerce and the State Department.

It's the most ambitious undertaking so far by the 2,083-member, 11-year-old National Association of Women Business Owners.

"Getting our share of the pie," is how Tommie Cohen Tarsell of Baltimore expresses it. Tarsell organized the mission along with NAWBO member Janel Landon of Chicago, who owns a travel business. Tarsell owns a number of businesses, including Tomco Money Management Corp. and Tomco Insurance Corp. as well as a chain of shops for shoe repair and such services as key making. Her latest venture is the first in a chain of shoe-repair training schools.

"Competition is growing in the service industry (tourism, high technology, robotics, training, consulting and recruiting, franchising, health care, retail business, insurance, money management), and the new markets for service expertise are in other countries," she said.

"We want to be sure that women know that entrepreneurism isn't confined to their own back yards. We want to help them gain access to markets beyond the oceans."

NAWBO has carefully handpicked those invited to be delegates, looking for women whose businesses are in good shape financially, Tarsell said.

The entrepreneurial spirit is high among NAWBO members, many of whom have taken their expertise in such fields as personnel, public relations or counseling and blended them with high-technology systems to develop sophisticated businesses.

The group's president, Virginia Littlejohn, for example, was originally in public relations in San Francisco. Her interest in women entrepreneurs took her to Washington, D.C., to lobby for funding for a program for women in small businesses. She got Potomac fever and stayed.

Because the bulk of new small businesses are in the service industry, generally involving the use of new technology, she developed a new business — collecting and classifying economic information about the new industries for government agencies.

Although her work involves both men and women in business, as president of NAWBO, Littlejohn's concern is to help women business owners become a more effective force in the business community.

An immediate goal, she said, is to get women business owners to participate as delegates in the White House Conference on Small Business in August 1986, and in the state conferences on small businesses being held over the next year.

A constant goal, she said, is in developing the members' leadership skills, specifically to help them get appointed to trade boards, corporate boards and business task forces, and such groups as economic development commissions.

"Women are now one-quarter of all small-business owners — there are about 3 million of them in the United States — but they are represented in a vastly lower percentage on boards," she said. "Most boards still have just a token woman or two."

Businesswomen owners still have problems to overcome, she said.

"They need better access to capital," she said. "They still have trouble with credit barriers. Legislation on equal credit for women did not extend to businesses. There are all kinds of horror stories like one true story about a woman who had to have her 17-year-old son co-sign her loan."

Littlejohn said she has been working to promote a change of Federal Reserve Board regulations that would eliminate the discrepancy in loan policies.

She said women need more federal procurement business.

"Right now they get only one-quarter of 1 percent of government procurement dollars. So we are working with the White House Inter Agency Committee on Women's Business Ownership on this problem, and also with senior women in departments and agencies."

She said there has been no great difference between presidential administrations as to improving opportunities for women in business.

"We get good reception, we have noticed, within 18 months of elections."

Littlejohn said that NAWBO sticks to business and does not get involved in most traditional women's issues.

"We don't take stands on things like abortion, or the Equal Rights Amendment, but I'm sure if you polled the group most would support ERA."

With its members on the paying end of salaries, the group has not yet been able to come to an agreement on the subject of comparable worth.

Littlejohn said the group is split almost evenly between membership in Republic and Democratic parties. "For the most part, we are economic conservatives but social moderates," she said.

"That gives us a unique set of lenses to look at issues," she said.

It's free.

And it comes without any obligation on your part.

In the first half of "Personal Tax Survival," you'll learn about investments that can: a) increase current tax deductions, b) provide tax-free income, c) provide tax-deferred income, d) provide tax-free cash in the future to meet preplanned expenses (like college tuition), and e) provide more money at retirement.

The brochure unfolds like a road map. That way you can study the investments side by side. You can see how they're alike, and how they're different.

Then, to show how you might use the investments to meet your own situation, your brochure's flip side will present six case histories.

2. Your free copy of "The Tax Laws And Your Tax Survival."

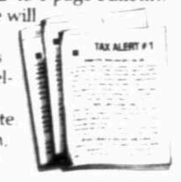

This part of your Kit was prepared with the help of Coopers & Lybrand, one of America's top accounting firms.

The brochure takes the existing tax laws, translates them into plain English and then focuses them as they relate to securities transactions, small businesses, people considering retirement and people who are retired.

But how can you start preparing for the new tax laws that are being proposed? That's where part 3 comes in.

Dow Chemical develops 'artificial' lung

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The air we breathe is largely useless. Seventy-eight percent of the mixture of gases we know as air consists of nitrogen, with the essential oxygen only about 21 percent and various compounds and trace elements such as carbon dioxide and argon accounting for the balance.

When we breathe, we bring these gases into contact with a semipermeable membrane, which is the lining of our lungs. The oxygen selectively passes through the membrane to enrich depleted blood cells, while the more abundant nitrogen is, for the most part, simply inhaled and exhaled.

The Dow Chemical Co. has recently developed a device that uses a form of artificial lung to separate nitrogen from oxygen for commercial use. It has no moving parts, but can, in effect, filter 95 percent pure nitrogen out of a stream of compressed air. Dow says this is the first industrial use of the membrane technique for air separation, although it has been used in other applications, such as removing carbon dioxide from methane.

The standard means of splitting air into its constituent parts is cryogenic; the air is compressed and cooled until liquefied and then allowed to warm again. Since oxygen and nitrogen have slightly different boiling points, by carefully controlling the temperature, one element can be boiled off while the other remains. The resulting products are transferred by pipeline to nearby users, or by insulated tanker to more distant locations.

Another method, called inert gas generation, simply consumes all the oxygen in an airstream by burning a fuel, but the output is contaminated by combustion byproducts.

Nitrogen has a variety of applications in the chemical and metal processing industries. It also has important uses in the food industry where, by displacing oxygen, it can prolong the shelf life of packaged foods such as coffee and potato chips. It can also be used as a protective atmosphere in transporting and storing fresh produce such as apples and pears, and flowers, extending the storage life of apples by up to nine months.

The heart of the Dow device is a hollow fiber finer than a human hair. The fiber is made of a polyolefinic plastic material, chosen because it permits the passage of oxygen, water vapor and carbon dioxide at several times the rate of nitrogen. Almost 10,000 miles of this fiber is packed into a tube that is 4 feet long and about 10 inches in diameter. The large number of fibers presents a very large surface to the incoming air, so the permeation can take place. The hollow cores of the fibers are connected to a waste pipe.

Air compressed to 75 to 90 pounds per square inch — standard in most plants — is both the raw material and the driving force of the system.

Former publisher joins Dallas firm

DALLAS (AP) — Thomas R. McCartin, former publisher and president of the Dallas Times Herald, has joined Criswell Development Co. as senior vice president, officials announced Tuesday.

McCartin, who left Dallas in 1984 to become president and chief executive officer of Times Mirror National Marketing in New York, also has been named president and chief executive officer of Criswell Marketing Co., a division of Criswell Development.

McCartin, 50, joined the Times Herald in 1976 as executive vice president-marketing, became president in 1980 and had the title of publisher added in 1981.

He also worked nine years in the advertising department of the Los Angeles Times, leaving his job as assistant director of display advertising in 1974 to join the Washington Post as vice president-sales.

Criswell develops commercial real estate and hotels. Its largest project has been Fountain Place in downtown Dallas, and it has also developed Hyatt-Regency hotels in Austin, Houston and Denver.

Fort Worth, Houston air service begins

FORT WORTH (SWN) — The first air service between Houston Intercontinental Airport and Fort Worth's Meacham Field will begin today.

Fort Worth Airlines said today that it has initially scheduled four daily flights from Intercontinental in addition to its seven daily flights from Hobby to Meacham Field which is five miles from downtown Fort Worth and serves the western half of the Dallas-Fort Worth area.

Flights between Intercontinental and Houston Hobby Airports twice daily morning and evening also will be part of Fort Worth Airlines' expanded service in Houston.

The airline also announced the appointment of Bill Robertson, who was manager of customer service for Braniff in Houston for 14 years, as its manager at Intercontinental. United Airlines will provide ticket counter and ground handling services at Intercontinental Terminal A.

Fort Worth Airlines re-opened Meacham Field to commercial airline traffic last December 14 with flights to Hobby, Austin and San Antonio.

"The early response to our Hobby-Meacham Field service encouraged us to move ahead on plans for Intercontinental," said Fort Worth Airlines President Thomas B. King.

"Saving time is what we are all about," King said. "Why fly to Dallas first when you are headed for the western half of the Fort Worth-Dallas metroplex."

The new Fort Worth Airlines flights will depart Houston Intercontinental at 7 a.m., 7:50 a.m., 1:35 p.m. and 7:30 p.m. Return flights from Meacham Field are at 6:25 a.m., 12:05 p.m., 5:15 p.m. and 7:20 p.m.

Air Fares are $47 Monday-Friday 7 a.m. - 7 p.m. and $32 at all other times.

Houston Intercontinental to Hobby service will be at 7:50 a.m. and 8:45 p.m., and from Hobby to Intercontinental at 6:25 a.m. and 7 p.m. Fare between the two Houston airports will be $20.

The airline flies 60-passenger, Rolls-Royce powered YS-11 Turboliners featuring two-abreast seating with more than normal legroom. The crew of four includes two flight attendants who offer a complete beverage service.

Firm changes price program

HOUSTON — Tenngasco Exchange has modified its monthly natural gas posted price program to provide a more market-responsive price to producers and purchasers.

Beginning this month, the Exchange will post its monthly price on the 25th of the month, and accept tendered volumes by the last working day of the month. Prices previously were posted on the 15th of each month.

"Flexibility is essential to the posted price program, and moving our posting date 10 days closer to the new month will improve our flexibility and allow us to better respond to a constantly-changing marketplace," says Tenngasco President Jerry McLeod.

"During the six months that the Exchange has been in operation, we have continued to refine the program each month, seeking to determine an equitable price for both producers and customers. This change is a result of that effort," he said.

The program's gas volumes continue to exceed projection, McLeod added. Since March 1, Tenngasco Exchange has averaged 90 million cubic feet per day with peak volumes exceeding 100 million cubic feet per day.

Tenngasco Exchange, the nation's first posted price program for natural gas, commenced operation in November 1984. Each month, the Exchange posts the prices it will pay for natural gas delivered to a specific location.

Connie Chung...

Connie Chung is anchor on NBC-TV's "News at Sunrise."

...sunshine in the morning

By JACK CARROLL
King Features Syndicate

When you meet Connie Chung for lunch, you show up at 9 a.m. Most of America is just settling in behind their desks, waiting for the coffee wagon to bring around their much needed go-juice. But for Ms. Chung it's already mid-workday, she's operating on full throttle and it's time for a diet soda and chicken salad.

"Would you like some orange juice?" she'll ask. Obviously, she knows that she's not completely in synch with the rest of the world.

Nor does she wish to be. Well into her second year as anchor of NBC's "News at Sunrise," Ms. Chung has adjusted to the upside-down, inside-out routine of broadcast journalism's dawn patrol. One of the network news' division's rising stars, she rises at 3:30 for the daily "feed" at 6:00 EST.

Her authoritative presence combined with her gentle, feminine style has made her the dean of the early morning reports, the new hour which all three networks initiated only several years ago. Although she is viewed by only a fraction of the audience that tunes in for the "Today" show or for the nightly news, her work on the respected "Sunrise" show has provided her with a solid base of operation within the competitive ranks of on-air newshounds. It's her outpost that allows her to build a following and a reputation without exposing herself to the crossfire of egos and ambitions that characterize making it to the top.

As a result, Ms. Chung has evolved into a unique animal: the truly engaging, completely candid, charming and disarming newswoman. Alternately giddy, gossipy and girlish, she demonstrates none of the brittleness or false toughness that some of her peers have developed in her male-dominated profession.

Her hunger for reporting and her desire to excel haven't warped her into a mike-hogging virago. She's a thorough pro who's as excited talking about her new marriage as she is about political issues of the day or the key to successful news anchoring.

"One of the nice things about doing the news is you are who you are," she says. "There's nothing I can do to make somebody like me. If you're on every day, you can't hide yourself. Your personality comes seeping out. If you're cold and hard, that comes through. If you're a warm person, friendly, I think that comes through too."

Her ability to communicate has placed her among the top ranks of TV news; however, she says anchoring is a double-edged sword: It's a plum position that both giveth and taketh away. "I feel like a bum. What I'm doing really isn't that hard. I've done this before," she says. (She was wooed to her current network position after devoting seven years anchoring the local news in Los Angeles.) "But when you anchor the newscast, you're not really getting your teeth into anything. I really miss just doing the reporting."

Although her topsy-turvy schedule prevents her from doing much field work, Ms. Chung did cover both the Republican and Democratic nominating conventions in 1984.

BETWEEN THE LINES

Q. I saw the movie "Runaway" and thought Cynthia Rhodes was excellent. Could you tell me about her?

Danny Castillo
Mission, Texas

A. She's 28, a Nashville native, the youngest of three children of a master sargeant in the Tennessee National Guard. She won beauty contests as a child, fantasized about becoming a movie star along the lines of Marilyn Monroe, but spent her adolescence training to be a gymnast.

It paid off: She won 30 gold medals in statewide competitions; but in high school, she decided to switch to dancing and singing and got a job at Opryland USA. That led to TV appearances including a stint on the syndicated series "Music Hall America."

In 1980, she moved to Los Angeles for good — she'd moved twice earlier but had gotten homesick and returned to Nashville. A choreographer friend got her a bit part in the film "Xanadu," and she worked as an assistant choreographer and dancer in Francis Coppola's epic disaster "One From the Heart."

She was more visible on tour with The Tubes as a dancer/backup singer, in the rock video of the song "Rosanna" as Rosanna, and as "Tina Tech," the punked-out, acrobatic dancer in "Flashdance."

Cynthia Rhodes

While Sylvester Stallone was researching choreographers in preparation for "Staying Alive," he saw the "Rosanna" video and cast her as John Travolta's long-suffering girlfriend Jackie. The movie bombed, but she came out of it with good reviews and a contract with Paramount. Now, according to her agent, nothing definite is set for her to do next, but a few things are in discussion.

Q. I'm a fan of Tony Randall and he hasn't done enough television to make me happy. Has he plans for any other series?

B.P.
Scranton, Pa.

A. "Not likely," according to an aide, "but then, after he did 'The Tony Randall Show' (in which he played a judge) he said he'd never do a series again but he did 'Love, Sidney.' So you never know.

"Right now, though, his main thrust is putting together a national classical theater. That's one of the reasons, in fact, that he did 'Love, Sidney.' Warner Brothers gave him the seed money for the theater. So, while he is still doing some TV — he did the recent 'Hitler's SS: Portrait in Evil.' But he's devoting most of his time to the theater."

Tony Randall

Ann Miller

Q. Ann Miller, the dancer, has been married three times. Can you tell me the names of her husbands and wasn't one annulled?

W.W. Evans
Colorado Springs, Colo.

A. Her first husband was Reese Llewellyn Milner, a steel tycoon whom she called "Mr. 20 Million," and it was fortunate that he had money — he had to pay Columbia Pictures $150,000 because she decided to get married instead of making a picture for the studio as scheduled. The marriage was stormy.

Her second and third husbands were both Texas oilmen: William Moss and Arthur Cameron, respectively. It was the marriage to Cameron that was annulled. He was 20 years her senior and "Mother," she said, "thought he was too old."

Q. I just finished reading Anne Baxter's book "Intermission" and since it ends in March, 1963 with her return to the U.S., I was wondering what happened afterward. Did she return to Australia? Is she still married to Randolph Galt?

Mrs. P.
Ontario, Calif.

A. No to both. As she explained afterward, the experience in Australia was an alienating one for her and her new husband; they had two separate lives — his, outdoors, hers, indoors. Moreover, when they left Australia after 3½ years, they moved to a deserted mining camp in New Mexico — Galt had bought the camp — and she found it more difficult there than down under. She began to realize that the marriage was in serious trouble; they were divorced in 1970.

In 1971, she returned to her career in full force — replacing Lauren Bacall in the musical "Applause" on Broadway and appearing in several films and TV series. In 1977, she married financier David Klee but he died within a year following a triple bypass operation.

In 1980, she filmed a special "Jane Austen in Manhattan" for British TV. And, when her friend Bette Davis was forced to withdraw from "Hotel" due to illness, she stepped in. That brings you up to the present. Possible in the future is a filmed based on "Intermission."

A. According to an associate, "he's hanging around the house, at his home studio, writing and rehearsing songs for the band's next album, which should happen within the next few months. Despite rumors to the contrary, the band is still together and planning to record another album."

And occasionally, she says, she insists that her already crowded work day accommodate some actual reporting. "If you don't do it, you lose the skills. You forget the phone number, you lose the speed. Plus viewers don't know when you're anchoring if you're just reading. You might have just sat down there. So if you don't go out and report, you lose something with the viewers."

Ms. Chung's ties to hard-line reporting stem from the earliest days of her career. With a bachleor's degree in journalism from the University of Maryland, the Washington-born go-getter landed her first, far from glorious, job as a copygirl in her hometown's WTTG. Soon, she moved to an on-air position, one of the first women in the country with a regular broadcast news job. She made a name for herself and eventually CBS hired her as a correspondent, and she spent much of the 1970s covering politics and the White House.

"I feel I was at my best when I worked a beat. When I covered Nelson Rockefeller when he was vice president, I knew everything he had ever said. I knew all his aides. I was plugged in. I can't do that now. When I cover a story now, I've got to sort of wing it." The infrequency of reporting opportunities makes those that exist all the more precious to the action-stared newswoman. "Each story becomes your little baby," she says.

Still, after being on the beat for so long, she can "wing it" with the best of them. For instance, during the campaign last year, NBC frequently shuttled her around the country on a day-to-day basis to file a candidate report. "The thing that's fortunate in this process is these characters are the same old guys from '72 to '76, '80. They just creep right out of their holes every four years."

Although she punishes herself psychologically for not doing more actual reporting, she realizes she has constructed herself a timetable that virtually precludes it. In addition to the daily "Sunrise" show, she anchors the prime time news updates twice a week. And then for good measure she anchors the Saturday night news half hour. It's a killing pace that requires a crazy quilt of catnaps and daytime sleep.

"I'M THE one who wanted all this; I asked for it. They said 'you're crazy. You can't do all this.'" Now she's beginning to agree and doesn't try to cop the "superwoman" attitude. "This isn't something I could do for the next 10 years. I feel tired all the time and there are bags under my eyes. In Los Angeles, I used to get up at the crack of noon and go to sleep at four in the morning. I really liked that; that's what my body likes to do. But I'm like everybody else, really. I want to be like the other grown-ups who live in New York and don't even go out until 12 at night."

Connie Chung

Despite the legitimate gripes, Ms. Chung is quick to acknowledge the superior career satisfaction her current job affords after so many years behind the local desk. She may borrow a joke from "Today" weatherman Willard Scott to describe the luxuries of network news: "He says we're all fancy hookers. A limo picks us up to get us here, but we've got to get home on our own." But she's far from disparaging about the overall clout she now gets to wield.

"At the local level you feel a great deal closer to the community. That's the charm of local news. The drawback is the daily fires and murders. It's the body count one after another. Nationally, I get to do more historically significant stories. That's more gratifying. I think as I'm getting older I want less to be a speck, without any kind of impact. It's nice having the influence in reporting something big."

It's also nice playing in the big leagues because it actually spares her some of the self-involved coworkers she says all too often gravitate to the local newsrooms. "There are many who are just not normal," she says, laughing, remembering some of the stereotypical actor-newsmen she had to work with. "It must be all of the attention; some just can't take it. They should realize as soon as they get out of their market, they're just another Joe Blow."

One local newsman she insists isn't just another Joe Blow is Maury Povich, the Washingon, D.C., anchor Ms. Chung married in December. A bride at 37, she now wears a smashing diamond chip wedding band she picked out herself and gladly talks about her new husband and life as a commuter newlywed.

Through well-choregraphed maneuvers using taxi, shuttle and determination, the two manage to get together weekends either in Ms. Chung's New York apartment or Povich's D.C. flat. "There are advantages to being the visiting team and to being the home team," says Ms. Chung of her two-city existence. "The visiting team doesn't have to worry about the food and about stocking the refrigerator. And since I worry, worry, worry about such things, I'd rather be the visiting team. Another reason I prefer to go there: I'm so neat, I drive myself crazy. At his apartment, since I don't know where things go, I don't shuffle around putting things away constantly. I feel like a free person."

In the professional sphere, she insists their shared status as major news figures doesn't prompt any competitiveness. "I think it's nicer that we are in the same business. He understand what I'm doing. He's very secure and well balanced.

"I don'tknow how come I waited so long to get married, but since I did, it must indicate it takes me a long time to make decisions. With this one, I obviously have to do it soon. I have a great deal of difficulty taking care of myself. It's all I can do to get myself fed. So I have some steps to go before I can get to that one."

In general, Ms. Chung doesn't like to look too far into the future, preferring to get on with the tasks at hand. She does like the occasional stints she gets to do as replacement host on the "Today" show.

Calamity Creek's Boondoggle begins this week

ALPINE — Boondoggle, annually held on Calamity Creek at the Woodward Ranch, was established in 1978 to promote Texas music, old-time Texas culture and provide an outdoor camping adventure for those who would come to the site located south of Alpine.

Persons attending have become accustomed to the beautiful countryside, the tradition of live music on an outdoor stage and the smell of chili cooking.

The event will be held Friday through April 7 this year. Saturday events include a horseshoe tourney, chili cook-off, lemon rolls, and cow chip throwing competition. April 7 will feature an old-fashioned musician jam and an amateur comedian competition with cash prizes.

Commercial booths include arts and crafts, some food and traditional Boondoggle T-shirts, which have new designs each year.

Performers this year include Cody Hubach and Alvin Crow from Austin, Longview's Dennis Ross and the Axberg Brothers, The Moon Pie Dainee from El Paso, Odessa's Wayne Sterling and from Lubbock, Ron Riley, Mike Pritchard and Jesse "Guitar" Taylor. Taylor will also conduct a guitar seminar Saturday. The camp site has an outdoor concrete dance floor.

An auction, a portion of the gate proceeds and the money raised from the Chili Cook-off will go to benefit the local chapter of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society, which provides services for 48 counties throughout West Texas.

"For the first six years, we were barely able to provide the event and it is a pleasure to reach a point that we can assist a local charity in providing for the care of West Texas people with Multiple Sclerosis," says Boondoggle founder Bruce Riley. "Last year, we were able to contribute over $1,500 for the society and, of course, we hope to increase the amount each year."

The National Multiple Sclerosis Society is the oldest national voluntary health organization in the United States supporting discovering the cause, prevention, care and treatment of this disease. It is estimated that 200 Americans are diagnosed with the chronic, often disabling, disease of the nervous system each week, Riley says.

The Society is solely funded through voluntary contributions in its fight to find a cure for Multiple Sclerosis.

The camp site is rustic, but for those preferring to camp at a motel, Alpine is a 15-minute drive from Calamity Creek.

Registration or ticket information is available through Bruce Riley, 686-7205, or the Permian Basin Multiple Sclerosis Society, 699-4944.

Ely's energy bursts out at Yucca

By GEORGIA TEMPLE

Georgia Temple

When Joe Ely came on at the Yucca Theatre Friday shortly after 10:30 p.m., the crowd was revved up, raring to go.

Jesse "Mr. Guitar" Taylor and Toronado Alley were partly responsible for the enthusiasm. Onstage for over an hour, they had wound up the eager crowd.

However, there were other factors.

By 10 p.m., 10 kegs of beer had been downed by the capacity crowd (not to mention the harder stuff) during the two hours the doors had been open.

Packed with bodies, most of them belonging to those under 35 years old, the inside of the Yucca looked as if it would explode if one more person bought a ticket. This type of turnout adds to the enthusiasm; people like to be where the action is. One way of validating the decision to go and pay the ticket price, in this case $12, is to have a full house turnout.

Many had seen Ely before, either in Lubbock, where he was raised, in Austin, where he now lives, in Odessa or on tour. They hadn't heard him in Midland because Friday was his first Midland show. Those who had were past ready to have him play here. Others who had never heard him had nonetheless heard positive comments about his music.

When he finished his hour and 20 minute set, I knew Ely was not what I had read he was, nor was his music. A subtler, more delicate Ely was lost somewhere on the road. And, on closer observation during the show, he was not what he appeared to be from a distance.

From the balcony, he looked young, fresh and enthusiatic. After weaving across the dance floor immediately in front of the stage, I had an entirely different impression.

Ely left home at 16 to pursue a career in music. He traveled, often alone with his guitar, from coast to coast across this country. He has recorded six albums, toured England, had his earlier band break up and lost a friend, his former drummer Robert Marquam whose death in 1983 he felt responsible for because he was the one who took Marquam out of Lubbock clubs and put him on the stage in bigger houses. He felt it was too much, too fast for Marquam.

The miles show. His face is etched with the scars of endless nights, countless highway miles, neverending truck stops, second class motels, making him look older than his 34 years. His smile flashes and vanishes, his true feelings obscured behind dark brown eyes. Perhaps this accounts for the feeling of bursts of energy rather than consistent energy coming from the stage.

Part of the appeal of his presence onstage is his relationship with his microphone. For Ted Nugent it's his guitar, for Ely, his mike.

He croons into it, leans on it, both hands grasping it, carries it with him, pushes it aside, brings it back, dances with it, runs to the front of the stage and leans off, mike and stand up in the air behind him. At times, stiff-legged, he shakes his body, using the mike as a crutch. His guitar is not his constant companion, he uses it when he chooses, then discards it.

His music Friday was hard hitting, rockability inspired, Tex-Mex rock'n'roll. The words carried few pleas. Most were statements of his observations of what is.

Among his creations he played were "Dallas," "Hard Livin'," written by David Halley, "Cool Rockin' Loretta," "I Had My Hopes Up High," Fingernails" and "Road Hawg." All were enthusiatically received by the crowd. He certainly proved he can sing, he can play, he can write songs.

However, after six albums on MCA, scoring the big hit has eluded him.

Ely's dress set him apart from his band. He was the only one who had on a coat; the only one who had a style to his clothes. The others could have been oil field workers or day laborers.

The discrepancy made Ely stand out onstage; however, it made the ensemble, including Ely, look like pieces of a puzzle rather than a completed work. It would further his career, if he wants to break into the big time, to video his show and look for the flaws.

The dance floor became packed with bodies standing, moving in time with the music, when he closed his show with a song by "his all time favorite West Texas singer and songwriter."

His playing of Buddy Holly's "Not Fade Away," co-written by Norman Petty and Charles Hardin, almost brought the house down. Had he done this earlier, his show would have had more variety.

A man of few words onstage, Ely said in closing, "Next time, we're going to come back to Midland a little quicker." By the applause, it was apparent the audience agreed.

'Mask' has credibility problems

By DAVID LEE FORREST

David Forrest

"Mask" is supposedly based on the true story of a young man named Rocky Dennis who was born with a disfiguring — and eventually fatal — bone disease that caused his face to enlarge until it took on the appearance of a grotesque mask.

"Supposedly" is an important adverb to use when describing this film since it often has some serious credibility problems.

The teen-aged Rocky — depicted as being almost a 16-year-old saint by Eric Stoltz — is shown, for example, as having considerably fewer problems getting along with his peers than the equally believable, but much less troubled, youth in "The Karate Kid." Given the slightly cruel streak of typical adolescents and Rocky's bizarre appearance and weird lifestyle, this doesn't quite ring true.

Rocky's mother hiring a prostitute for him also seems like unlikely behavior for any mother, even such an offbeat mom as Rusty Dennis, played with great elan by Cher.

In comparison, Rocky's heart-warming talk with the hooker (who, of course, has the inevitable heart of gold) seems virtually believable.

The poor, disfigured, motorcycle-riding Rocky's romance later in the film with a rich, beautiful horseback-riding blind girl may be based on fact, but is so absolutely pat and so thematically perfect that it's almost impossible to believe that director Peter Bogdanovich didn't take some liberties with the truth.

Rocky and his mother run around with a motorcycle gang, which makes perfect sense — outcasts banding together is hardly surprising — but the depiction of the bikers as just a bunch of big, harmless, sweet, fun-loving guys is a little hard to swallow.

If one can suspend one's disbelief adequately, however, "Mask" does have some touching moments and truly memorable characters.

The film is very deliberately constructed to be a tear-jerker, and since most people deeply fear the sort of terrible social isolation that Rocky has to face, the audience's sympathy is quickly won over by his character.

Stoltz performs well in an obviously difficult role, but the real star turns out to be Cher. As Rocky's drug addict mother, she successfully treads a fine line between acting bravely independent and pathetically inept.

While Cher's performance isn't quite as good as in "Silkwood," she once again demonstrates impressive acting skill.

The film may occasionally seem too much like a carefully built machine grinding out obligatory scenes, but it often does manage to hit deep emotional cords.

While Rocky's romance may be hard to buy, it's worth purchasing simply for the extremely moving scene when Rocky meets — and is snubbed by — his girlfriend's wealthy parents.

The scene in which Rocky gives up on a long-planned, much-desired motorcycle tour of Europe and slowly pulls out the pins marking the places on a map that he was going to visit is also devastatingly effective.

While "Mask" has to suffer by comparison to "The Elephant Man" — "The Elephant Man" was infinitely more subtle, complex and graceful — both films share an important theme: that physical beauty may be just skin-deep, but that society rarely recognizes it.

"Mask," rated PG-13 for strong language and adult themes, is now showing at Midland Park Mall Cinemas.

'Baby' low-quality flop for Disney

When one thinks of Disney's movies, the high-quality, well-crafted animated films such as "Pinocchio" and "Fantasia" are usually the first to come to mind.

It's can be easy to forget that Disney's catalog has included some thoroughly awful films, primarily among its live-action movies such as "Lt. Robin Crusoe — USN" and "Condorman."

Virtually the only thing some of these films had going for them was their highly sanitary G-rating.

Some of Disney's more recent live films, 1983's "Never Cry Wolf" and last year's "Splash," were outstanding and seemed to signal great things to come. But now, with the studio's latest release, "Baby — The Secret of the Lost Legend," Disney has slipped once again into low-quality live-action doldrums.

This time, however, Disney has not only made a lousy movie, but a lousy PG-rated movie sprinkled with profanity, violence, mild sexual innuendo and even some very brief partial nudity.

"Baby" is about a young American paleontologist, played by Sean Young, and her sportswriter husband, played by William Katt, who stumble across a family of dinosaurs still alive in a remote part of the African jungle.

Patrick McGoohan plays an evil scientist who will stop at nothing to steal the young couple's discovery. McGoohan enlists the help of a ruthless local army colonel, played by Olu Jacobs, and his troops to capture the brontosaurus family.

The bad guys succeed in capturing the mother dinosaur and killing the father dinosaur, but Ms. Young and Katt escape into the rain forest with the 10-foot-long baby brontosaurus, which they nickname Baby.

A story about dinosaurs being discovered alive in the modern world is far from original, but the idea does have an almost mystical fascination for mankind. Even though it's far from new territory for a film to cover, there's still a lot of potential creativity and fun to the notion.

Sadly, "Baby" exploits almost none of this potential.

The film's special effects are exceptionally disappointing. Isidoro Raponi, who worked with special effects design wizard Carlos Rimbaldi on "Close Encounters of the Third Kind" and "Alien," doesn't show much talent working without Rimbaldi on "Baby." His brontosaurs look suspiciously as though they might have been constructed from Hefty plastic trash bags.

The animated dinosaurs in "Fantasia" are infinitely more interesting and believable. "Baby" comes closer to old "Godzilla" movies.

Another weak point — although it's not quite as disconcerting as the shoddy special effects — is the film's attempt to seem "contemporary."

Ms. Young is depicted as an ambitious woman who isn't ready to postpone her career to have children. In fact, she is rather gratuitously shown popping birth control pills in one scene.

In what seems to be a subtle criticism of career women, her character becomes a better person after her maternal instincts are aroused by the wrinkled little dinosaur hatchling.

"Baby" is also sprinkled with a substantial amount of violence, but this isn't really anything new for Disney. Traditionally, the studio has never really avoided violence the way it has sex.

There is also a bit of mild profanity (which is unusual for a Disney film), some clearly implied sex between Ms. Young and Katt (even more unusual for Disney) and some National Geographic-style bare-breasted African women. Interestingly, however, the movie is careful to keep at least a brassiere on Ms. Young, the only Caucasian female in the cast.

In all fairness, the children at the screening of "Baby" this reviewer attended did seem to genuinely enjoy the film. Most of them even applauded the ending.

Leaving the theater, one child commented that "It was a good show, but a little sad."

Adults, though, will probably find the saddest thing about "Baby" is that it has to join the ranks of Disney's flops rather than the studio's past glories.

"Baby," rated PG for some violence, strong language and brief nudity, is now showing at Midland Park Mall Cinemas.

'Dragon' satire of kung fu films

"The Last Dragon" is, believe it or not, a Motown kung fu musical comedy satire.

The only thing harder to believe than the idea that someone would attempt such a wild combination is that this weird combo actually works well. The result is the funniest parody of kung fu films since the "Fistful of Yen" segment in 1977's "Kentucky Fried Movie."

The film centers around a young black New Yorker named Leroy, who is nicknamed "Bruce Lee-roy" by his friends because of his kung fu prowess.

Beginning with the film's title, which is a reference to "Enter the Dragon," the movie is packed with Bruce Lee inside jokes and even includes footage from a number of Bruce Lee films.

In one scene, Leroy is in a theater watching Lee in "Enter the Dragon" and eating popcorn with chopsticks when a brawl breaks out among audience members. This fight is hilariously synchronized with the Bruce Lee's fight scene on the big screen.

Leroy, played by Taimak (a new actor who has just one name for some reason), dresses in Chinese garb, delivers his lines as though he learned to speak English as a second language in Hong Kong and tries to imitate many of Lee's mannerisms.

This satire manages to be sharply funny without insulting the late Lee, but one negative aspect of the film's approach is that if one has never seen a Bruce Lee movie, much of "Last Dragon" probably won't seem all that terribly humorous.

The relationship between Leroy and his smart-aleck elderly instructor is also a fairly deft parody of "The Karate Kid."

Leroy's teacher sends him on a quest to find an even greater kung fu master. Instead, Leroy ends up accidentally thwarting the kidnapping of beautiful Laura Charles, played by Vanity (a singer who also has just one name for some reason), who is a former protege of rock star Prince. Laura is the hostess of a popular music video television program called "Laura's Video Hot Pix."

Eddie Arkadian, a sadistic gangster played by Christopher Murney, is trying to force Laura to air a video made by his singularly untalented girlfriend, played by Faith Prince. Ms. Prince is a minor character but her bizarre imitation of Cyndi Lauper is quite memorable, to say the least.

Angered at the way Leroy foiled Laura's kidnapping, Eddie hires a gang of vicious thugs to assassinate him, including Leroy's arch-rival "Sho'Nuff — the Shogun of Harlem," played by Julius J. Carry III.

Carry's evil character is a gaudy, cruel, loud-mouthed martial arts expert, who also happens to be the most interesting person in the movie, even slightly eclipsing the heroic Leroy.

The movie fools around with racial stereotypes in a dizzying manner. Besides the neo-Oriental Leroy, there are also some Chinese hustlers who speak in a grossly overblown parody of black jive and Leroy's father, a black man who is an Italian chef.

This pop-culture mishmash is further leavened with Motown music. The video clips are undoubtedly the film's real reason for existing. The film's producer, Motown record executive Berry Gordy, notably uses only Motown musical artists in the film.

While the musical numbers often have nothing to do with the plot, they're brief and energetic enough that they don't interrupt the movie's surprisingly smooth flow.

"The Last Dragon" is a long way — light years, in fact — from being a serious film, but its clever juxtaposition of cult film icons provides a lot of fun, if rather mindless, entertainment.

"The Last Dragon," rated PG-13 for strong language and violence, is now showing at the UA Cine IV.

SOS Band

The SOS Band will perform April 10 at the Crown Royal Club. Originally an eight-piece outfit called Santa Monica, the SOS Band was formed in Atlanta, Ga., during the late '70s. The group sold more than 800,000 copies of its debut album and more than 2 million copies of its No. 1 pop, rhythm and blues dance single, "Take Your Time (Do It Right)." Albums to date include "Just the Way You Like It," 1984; "On the Rise," 1983; "SOS Band III," 1982; "Too," 1981; and "SOS," 1980. All were recorded on the Tabu/CBS label. Writers workshop to be conducting four seminars

The Professional Writers Workshop is conducting four workshops in April.

The workshops include: "How to Write the Non-Fiction Book," evenings April 8-12; "Writing to Sell the Juvenile and Young Adult Market," April 13-14; "How to Write the Magazine Article," mornings April 8-12; and "How to Get Free Publicity," April 15-16.

Writer and teacher P.M. Fielding of Tulsa, Okla., will return to teach the classes in writing non-fiction and for the juvenile market. Jheri Fleet, a public relations consultant with more than 100 bylined articles, will teach magazine writing and free publicity.

"Magazine articles give the writer a training ground," Ms. Fielding says. "The non-fiction book is only 20 articles, if you think about it. That makes a book less awesome and puts it into perspective."

Ms. Fielding says anyone who has worked at a job or hobby for five years has some area of expertise and could turn that knowledge into a non-fiction book and write articles.

"People learn on a job and enjoy on a hobby," she says. "Some people think of writing as a way to share that information."

In the non-fiction area of publishing, one out of every two proposals are selling, Ms. Fielding says. "That's the kind of market every writer is looking for, and the juvenile and young adult market is growing fast. If you know what you are doing in these markets it makes getting published easier. But, like other businesses, professionalism counts."

For more information call Ginger Rawlings, 685-3568. Seating for the four workshops is limited.

Texas Fine Arts works to be on display at MC

The Texas Fine Arts Association's traveling exhibition plus a biennial display of works from Midland College faculty members are on display through April 19 in the McCormick Gallery, Allison Fine Arts Building.

The TFAA exhibition includes works by 15 artists, part of the original TFAA show last spring at Laguana Gloria Art Museum, Austin.

Henry Hopkins, director for the San Francisco Museum of Modern Art, selected the paintings, drawings and prints from over 1,600 slide entries nationwide. Viewers will find works that range from abstraction to realism in drawings, paintings, photography and fibers.

Founded in 1911 to foster the advancement, appreciation and practice of the fine arts in Texas, TFAA is the state's largest and oldest visual arts organization. Long affiliated with Laguna Gloria Art Museum, its activities include organizing a variety of juried competitions, a visual arts touring program and numerous informational and educational services for artists and supporters of the arts.

The biennial art exhibition of full-time and part-time MC faculty members contains works by sculptor John Harmon, watercolors by Dr. Charles Stewart, photography by Ken Foster, photography by Sherrie Bassett Miles, fibers by Julie Rogers and paintings and drawings by Warren Tavlor.

The exhibits are open free to the public Monday through Thursday 8 a.m. to 10 p.m., Fridays 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., Saturdays 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sundays 1 to 5 p.m.

CHECKING OUT THE LIBRARY

Magazines can be helpful for planning trips

By BARBARA TILLMAN

Often magazines which are thought to have little or no educational value turn out to be quite acceptable and useful. One such group, sometimes overlooked, is that of city and regional periodicals. They document ethnic and geographic differences and foster current awareness and a sense of history. Also, people who are planning a trip to a certain area will likely find much needed information. Many cities, and virtually all states, have a publication depicting and extolling the virtues of their particular locale. Naturally, libraries cannot subscribe to each and every one. Usually those magazines which have special appeal to one's own area are the most sought after. Therefore, the following reviews will offer an insight into a few of the regional publications to which we subscribe.

The first one to be discussed has a simple enough title. It is merely called "D" and it is about Dallas. The creative graphics give this magazine a flashy outward appearance and a definite highbrow quality. There are hints on designer discount shopping, exclusive eating clubs, luxury hotel weekend accommodations and faraway vacation planning. There is also an emphasis on business and politics. The magazine is thick and attractive and appeals to many West Texans who like to run over to Dallas for a shopping or business.

By contrast, the magazine DALLAS takes an entirely different approach. Published by the chamber of commerce, it is a business-oriented periodical reporting economic indicators, indiviudual company profiles, management tips, and the merits of the community. Its purpose is to inform and the editors use a no-nonsense and polished style. The magazine has been popular since 1922 and it's success has been aided by business executives, investors and civic-minded citizens.

The editors of TEXAS MONTHLY have taken on quite a task. As we well know, Texas is large and very diversified. Every effort is made to create the same effect in this magazine. There are long articles on almost anything that might have made news in the state. Also included are excerpts from recent books, photo-essays, and short newsy and witty bits. Within the more than 200 pages, one can find a monthly guide to events occurring in major Texas cities and regional centers. Camping guides are not left out, and there are special sections on other activities. In short, this is a professionally written publication and its usefulness cannot be denied.

To leave Texas for a change of pace, we find NEW MEXICO MAGAZINE. The land itself is unique and this publication reflects its beauty and difference. The main highlights include events, people, places and cultural traditions and natural resources. It is perhaps the color photographs which lend such charm to the magazine. The illustrations accompanying the articles serve to show prospective travelers what to expect in the state.

SUNSET: THE MAGAZINE FOR WESTERN LIVING is a regional periodical directed specifically to readers in 13 western states (including Hawaii). However, it also has great general appeal. There are four editions published and are divided into : Central, Desert, Pacific Northwest, and Southern California-Hawaii. This means that such things as travel and gardening are geared to readers in those areas. The home is a primary focus in this magazine. Anything from remodeling to food and entertainment is included. Practical advice for those in the middle to upper-middle icome areas is offered and the articles are usually short and well written. Our library subscribes to the Southern California-Hawaii edition as there seems to be quite a demand for a publication devoted to this particular area.

Other regional periodicals to which we subcribe include ARIZONA HIGHWAYS, OKLAHOMA TODAY, YANKEE and TEXAS HIGHWAYS.

Barbara Tillman is periodicals librarian at Midland County Library.

Book paints post-Civil War picture

"The Spoils of War," by Thomas Fleming. G.P. Putnam's Sons: 525 pages; $18.95.

By GUS STEVENS
Copley News Service

After the stillness descended over Appomattox, drawing the curtain on four years of bloody division and war, events in the newly recemented United States over the next three decades are not awfully clear to a lot of people.

It's a murky time in history for most of us. Ulysses S. Grant moved into the White House before long. That we know. But who was next? Rutherford B. Hayes? Hm. Well, if you say so. After Hayes? Golly, we'd have to look it up. Which party held the power? Well...

Thomas Fleming has made himself a specialist in the byways of history, his writings over the years reflecting his passion for out-of-the-spotlight events in America. Now he has opened the door on the period between the Civil War and the dawn of the 20th century.

Fleming has written 14 books that have U.S. history as their base. With rare skill, he has mixed fiction and history with success, penning seven non-fiction books and seven novels.

He has been able to paint clear, informative and entertaining pictures of life in America before our times and "The Spoils of War" does not fail to deliver another pageant of Americana.

It is a year after the forces of Robert E. Lee at last were cornered and forced to surrender by Grant. The South still is in ruins and Bralston Plantation in Louisiana is typical. Its fields are unplanted, its grand house is crumbling, its former slaves are near revolt and carpetbaggers are waiting to seize Bralston from the descendants of its Southern founders.

Jonathan Stapleton, a mustered-out Union general, heads for Bralston on a Mississippi riverboat, determined to patch up broken relations with his family remnants in Dixie, including his brother's widow, Bralston's Cynthia Legrand.

Jonathan and Cynthia meet, eventually marry and he plucks his bride from the ruins of the South to New York, where his financial empire is headquartered. Jonathan is worth millions and Cynthia is, in effect, one of his spoils of war. If Cynthia is a trophy, at least she is a willing one.

So Fleming has set up the premise of his book — how often, how thoroughly and how long did Northern greed rape the impoverished South? What follows is a fact-and-fiction primer on life after the War Between the States.

The stock market booms as America forges ahead with its delayed Western expansion. The young nation is on the threshold of becoming a world power.

A Review

New York is fat, sassy and burgeoning with energy, flexing its muscles in commerce, politics and high society.

The Stapletons are cornerstones of all three with their growing wealth, his involvement in the young Republican party and their exclusive list of prominent (and famous) friends.

Such friends.

Some are Fleming's creations, others are very real. Fleming had done his research on these people. He knows how they thought about the issues of their times, he knows something about their personal lives and he even knows how some of them looked (at least to others).

Thus we learn that Theodore Roosevelt's father (Theodore Sr.) flitted around New York as a dilettante for years with nothing much to do except dabble in charity work.

And John Reid, managing editor of the New York Times, moved heaven and earth when it was necessary to keep a favorable story about the Democratic party out of his newspaper.

And Gen. Phil Sheridan was forced to abandon his nickname of "Little Phil" by the time he was chief of staff of the Army. Fleming informs us he had become "corpulent."

Other characters plucked from life: Susan B. Anthony, Jay Gould, the Vanderbilts, William R. Hearst, Joseph Pulitzer, Mark Twain and Herman Melville. Fleming brings them all back to life.

There are many pictures of their lives and times: how Hayes stole the election of 1876; the bloody railroad-worker riots in Pittsburgh and other large cities; the battle between feminists and anti-suffragists; the excessive (and legal) use of cocaine; and the spawning of the Spanish-American War.

However, at the center of the story, "The Spoils of War" keeps its focus on the Stapletons and their offspring, following them through two generations until the 19th century grows old and its lights flicker out.

Fleming's novel can appeal to two kinds of readers: those fans of history who want their information delivered couched in color and fantasy, and those who want a good novel complete with scads of wealthy and spoiled people, hot-blooded youth, financial and political scalawags and occasional dollops of sex.

'Knight in History' mediocre

"The Knight in History"; by Frances Gies; Harper & Row, $16.95, 207 pp.

By BOB MACKLE
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Fact is supposed to be stranger than fiction and, therefore, more interesting.

However, neither fact nor fiction can survive poor, disorganized writing.

Unfortunately, that is the fate of some fascinating facts in "The Knight in History," by Frances Gies. The legends of King Arthur, Sir Lancelot and the Round Table easily survive this joust with historical fact.

It didn't have to be so. Even within the confines of a purely historical study there is no excuse.

The story of real knights such as William Marshal, Bertrand Du Guesclin (who probably fought in more battles than Arthur, Lancelot and Galahad combined) and Sir John Fastolf is a match for any legend — at least when presented well.

That's why "The Knight in History" is so disappointing. Instead of being a major contribution to the literature on knights and knighthood, it's simply another mediocre work on a popular topic.

The author's style is boring and uneven. She spends a great deal of time on areas of little interest and not much greater historical significance, while seeming to hurry through areas deserving of more development. Extensive passages from medieval songs, which don't translate well into modern English, need hardly take precedence over the knight's role in the Crusades. "The Knight in History" is a rare example of a book that probably would have been better had it been longer.

A Review

Ms. Gies tries to enliven her work with two lengthy chapters on specific knights. Even though this is some of the most fascinating material she presents, the author's disjointed, convoluted style of writing dampens the effect.

One topic, the role of the knight in feudal society and the major changes he brought about in warfare, is adequately addressed. Another redeeming feature of "The Knight in History" is the section on the daily life of knights and the rules of their orders. But the section's too short.

As for the end of the book, it comes as nothing less than a surprise. It's as though Ms. Gies simply decided she had written enough, tacked on a closing sentence and quit.

Capote talks

Copley News Service

"Conversations with Capote: by Lawrence Grobel; New American Library; 244 pages; $14.95. Candid, sometimes searing comments on many things and people by author Truman Capote in extensive interviews before his death. Capote, for instance, attended a Park Avenue gathering at which then Sen. John F. Kennedy and others were entranced by a man describing the talents of various Las Vegas prostitutes: "Oh, it was just disgusting, absolutely a stomach-turner. And the future president... was doing everything but jotting down notes in his notebook...This person used to pimp for him all the time. He was the one who used to get all these high-priced call girls which Kennedy had..."

Reader can feel character's experiences

A Review

"Do Lord Remember Me," by Julius Lester. Holt, Rinehart & Winston. 210 Pages. $13.95.

By LARRY BLASKO
Associated Press

When next you watch a fire's embers light a husk of a log before fading into darkness, think of Julius Lester's book, "Do Lord Remember Me."

It's the story of one old man's last day. The man, the Rev. Joshua Smith, is black. So is the author. But the book is an excellent piece of writing that recalls and defines a life in terms so universal that race and bigotry become incidental to larger questions.

Which, it should be mentioned, will surprise a casual reader who notes that the author's other credits include "Look Out, Whitey! Black Power's Gon' Get Your Mama."

But these are pleasant surprises. Consider living with a woman so long that you know her every thought — or think you do — and discovering only after 50 years and your stroke that she's three years older than you are and think it funny that you never knew. Then see again the bride and a young wife and discover that the people haven't changed, only the wrappings have wrinkled.

Consider making peace with the notion that your sons will chart their own lives, even — perhaps necessarily — at odds with the course of your own. And then remember and miss your father, decades dead, discovering that no matter how weak the father, how old and distinguished the son, that bond of first absolute security never completely breaks.

All this is told with great skill so that the reader feels it as much as reads it. It brings the experiences you have had into tighter focus and gives you a foretaste of those that await.

Receiving obscene phone calls can be disconcerting

By MOLLIE FERMAGLICH
King Features Syndicate

On a Friday evening, the telephone rings. The caller wants to know if I want a slave. "Do I have to supply carfare and lunch?" I ask. He is angry that I haven't given him a straight answer. I am confused, so I hang up, wondering if I have just passed up a golden opportunity to have my apartment cleaned, my grapes peeled and my every wish someone's command.

The phone rings 24 hours later, but this time the caller doesn't speak. I hang up. He calls back, and nothing is said beyond my futile "Hello, who is this? Is somebody there?"

When the phone rings for the eighth or ninth time I threaten him, but we both know my options are limited to putting up with another call or taking the phone off the hook. Though the latter seems more logical, my curiosity to discover his identity wins out. After a dozen or so calls, I hear a very creepy voice say, "Mollie."

I know know that I haven't been "chosen at random" from the white pages. He knows me, or knows of me.

Rather quickly, he drops the silent treatment, describing and then offering something of his that is 11 inches. I hang up — he's not giving me the dimensions of his stereo speaker.

However, he does not let up; the phone keeps ringing. So he's just entertaining himself, or does he want to annoy, frighten, unnerve me? He succeeds in doing all of the above, and when I do take the phone off the hook, he refuses to hang up. Thus, the connection isn't broken, and I cannot make an outside call. I rush over to the couple next door to call a friend.

THOUGH MY friend thinks I'm overreacting, she agrees to come over. As the phone rings incessantly, we giggle, try to talk to the caller and let our imaginations run. It is hard to do any serious thinking because the phone continues to ring.

It is harder still to explain why I don't just take the phone off the hook. Maybe it's the same reason I close only one eye during a particularly gory scene of a movie.

But I don't want to be alone that night, so my friend suggests we spend the night at her place. I realize that the probability of the caller's showing up at my front door as he's threatened, is very unlikely.

On the other hand, 24 hours prior to this evening, the possibility of getting obscene phone calls seemed just as unlikely. We leave, the phone ringing behind us.

AFTER DISCUSSING the issue we narrow down the candidates to: former dates, current dates, my bank teller, former co-workers, former professors, the cashier at Macy's, lovers' brothers, friends' brothers and lovers' fathers.

Two weeks later, my caller is back. I am now prepared to deal with him: I reach for the "foolproof" deterrent, a police whistle given to me by a friend. I blow the whistle into the phone, but the caller doesn't seem to mind.

In the background I hear a faint, whirring noise from his end and demand to know what it is. I say I suspect it's a tape recorder, and he doesn't argue. A severe case of the willies sets in, and this time I do take the phone off the hook, willingly accepting the fact that no one else can reach me and that I can't make any calls.

I begin to accept the calls as part of my life and I learn something about myself that I had previously only suspected: I have an insatiable thirst for vengeance.

I want this guy caught. I want to upset his daily routine, embarrass and humiliate him, even if I have to speak to him another 50 times. I don't know who he is or what he does for a living, but once I find out I plan not only to prosecute but to tell all his friends and colleagues what a nut he is.

I find myself talking about the calls to anyone who'll listen and demanding detailed explanations from any man who asks for my phone number, including prospective employers. I have lunch with my friend Doug and I am too busy listening to his voice tone to hear what he is saying.

I HEAD for the nearest ponce station, and when I explain the nature of my visit to the officer on duty, he actually asks me: "Were the calls any good?" I promise, the very next time I hear from the caller, to give him the phone number of the officer's wife. The way, he can judge for himself the quality of the calls.

I am quickly passed on to a detective, and we take it from the top.

I worry about pointing an accusatory finger at the innocent, but I part with the phone numbers of five men whom I would not put obscene phone calls past. What the police will do with these numbers is never made clear, but in God and the police we trust.

It is now time for me to touch base with the phone company: For years I've been paying a "service charge" and it's time to cash in. The kind lady at the telephone business office tells me there is a special department called the Annoyance Complaint Bureau.

She cannot, however, give me that phone number. Perhaps she does not even know that phone number, because this special department, specifically designed to handle obscene phone call complaints, has an unlisted number.

A representative does get back to me later that day and makes me feel like a rape victim is sometimes made to feel — like maybe, just maybe, I did something to encourage the caller. Finally she runs through some helpful suggestions to discourage the caller, like tapping a spoon on the mouthpiece.

I BEG, I cajole, I threaten, I cry, and finally, the phone company agrees to put a tracer on my line for seven days. My caller does not make a return engagement during the next seven days.

I simultaneously want and don't want to know who the caller is. I haven't been really relaxed with any man since the calls began.

Always, I wonder if he is him, unless he happens to be a man I'm meeting for the first time, in which case I practically demand to see his driver's license and three references before parting with my precious seven digits.

A few weeks ago I had drinks with a male friend I hadn't seen for a while. He is suspect because I haven't seen him in months; he is the owner of a push-button phone; as a working journalist he has a tape recorder with a device to pick up phone conversations; and he, like most men I've had the pleasure of knowing, is a little strange.

We meet at the appointed bar. As I sit down I casually mention that I am writing an article on obscene phone calls. He changes the subject. Admission of guilt? Perhaps.

Half an hour later I bring up the calls again and he yawns. Am I boring him? Perhaps. We return to his apartment and I see a push-button phone and a tape recorder alongside it. Is that the phone? Perhaps. But I really don't want to know.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

Monday, April 1, 1985

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Use caution when making new employment or partnership agreements. Someone may be withholding vital information. The financial picture shows continued improvement. Stick with a regular savings plan. Mate is a source of inspiration and encouragement. Romance becomes more exciting. Travel is favored. Plan a special trip for two! Your hand is strengthened by new developments at work. Play your best cards. Devote more time and effort to public relations. CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: Debbie Reynolds, Ali MacGraw, the Yankees' knuckle-baller Phil Niekro, the Mets' pinch-hitting specialist Rusty Staub, Japanese actor-director Toshiro Mifune, Congresswoman Sala Burton (D-Calif.), Eddy Duchin, Wallace Beery.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Look to the pros for career or financial advice. Romance is sweet for the young at heart. Question something a loved one says; he/she could be making an April Fool's Day joke!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Sudden career developments could prompt a permanent change. A newcomer makes an intriguing suggestion -- you are unable to resist. A late-afternoon encounter with an old love rekindles romance.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Avoid making hasty or emotional decisions today; acting on impulse could jeopardize your career or reputation. Mate or partner is your strongest ally. Put your intellectual powers to good use.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Be conservative now and you win big in your business or personal life. A little extra effort will help you launch a lucrative project. Romance requires careful handling.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A seminar, trip or new job could mean greater financial security. Get set, too, for an unexpected social opportunity. If single, you could get lucky in love. Dress attractively!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You get a lucky break today, perhaps a tip from an unusually reliable source. Put this information to good use, even if you must dig into your savings. Your ambition affects romance.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Mix and mingle with the get-ahead types you meet at business or financial meetings. A revised budget will reduce domestic tension. A sibling needs more individual attention.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A college-bound student receives great news! A scholarship or financial aid is part of the picture. An older person plays a major role in a business or personal triumph. Be loyal.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A higher-up makes unusually heavy demands. Luckily, you perform quite well when under pressure. Better money management helps a dream become reality. Spend a quiet evening at home.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Further education could help you reach your career goals. Revise a travel schedule, if you can, to include a visit with a loved one. Romance flourishes when both partners are considerate.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Your versatility counts for a lot with the powers-that-be. Develop a latent talent and you make new gains. Romance begins to lose momentum. Watch your step.

THE TALE OF THE FOUR OF SPADES

DEAR READERS: We have had many requests over the years for those hands we consider to be our favorites. That makes quite a list. For the time being, therefore, we are devoting the Sunday column to a series of famous hands. At the end of the series we will go back to our weekly question and answer column.

North-South vulnerable. West deals.

NORTH
♠ 9
♡ Q 9 5 3 2
◇ K Q 6

WEST
♠ Q J 3
♡ K
◇ A 7 5 4 3
♣ A 7 4 2

EAST
♠ 10 2
♡ A J 6
◇ J 10 9 8 2

SOUTH
♠ A K 8 7 6 5 4
♡ 10 8 7 4
◇ Void
♣ K 3

The bidding:

West	North	East	South
1 ◇	Dble	3 ◇	4 ♠
Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Ace of ◇.

"It just isn't fair," wailed the Four of Spades. "All my life I have wanted to win a trick through sheer power, and now, when I finally accomplish that, no one wants to speak to me. I am condemned to purgatory though no fault of my own!"

The hand that caused this anguish for the Four of Spades occurred in the trials to select his national team. We have no explanation for North's rather strange-looking takeout double. As to South's four spades, we know of many who would consider it a gross underbid. Quite probably he was used to his partner's eccentricities.

"Against our spade game West led the ace of diamonds and East followed with the jack, a suit preference signal for hearts. Declarer ruffed with the eight and, had he simply drawn two rounds of trumps and then led the king of clubs, West would have been end played and the game would have rolled home.

"Unfortunately for me, South had a larcenous streak in him, and the lure of those two high diamonds was more than he could resist. He tried to sneak an entry to the table by leading a low club from the king.

"West was not born yesterday. He hopped up with the ace of clubs, cashed the king of hearts and got off lead with a club to declarer's king. The kibitzers thought the defense was finished. Declarer would throw West in with the third trump, and West would have to put declarer on the table, thereby allowing him to get three heart discards for his contract.

"They reckoned without West. On the ace-king of trumps he unblocked the queen-jack! Now when declarer tried to end play him by leading me, West could underplay the three. South did not lose a trump trick, but he was still saddled with the lead. There was no way that he could avoid losing two heart tricks to go down one.

"I had been preparing myself for being the center of attention. Instead, I found everyone laughing at me even though I had won the trick. There's no justice!"

Parents must support children's goals, expert says

By ANNE LORIMER
King Features Syndicate

When Harvard psychologist David McClellend's twin sons saved their money to buy a tiny television, McClellend didn't make them return it even though he heartily disapproved of television. Instead, he pitched in a few dollars for a better set and regulated the shows they watched.

McClellend, an authority on human motivation and author of "The Achieving Society," was raising his children to become achievers. With this as a goal, a parent must let go and support his children's goals — as long as they aren't dangerous — even when he doesn't approve, he says.

Achievement motivation is learned through how we are treated, what is expected of us and whether we are squelched by strict obedience or encouraged to think for ourselves.

In his book, "Raising Children to Achieve — A Guide for Motivating Success in Life and School," Eric Johnson has adapted McClellend's techniques of achievement motivation for integration into family life. While he says it may be harder to live with an achiever going his own way independently, it will be more satisfying than the "I don't care" child.

As a teacher, administrator and writer, Johnson has been guiding parents and children for the past 30 years. He advocates goal setting, understanding, enthusiasm and praise at home and school. Achievers are children and adults who feel respected and supported for being themselves and who are given a chance to make mistakes and to set goals with reasonable limits.

Parents of achieving children have similar characteristics.

— They set high but appropriate standards in which achievements are challenging but not impossible. For example, a 3-year-old would be expected to pick up her toys but not to make her bed.

— They are willing to help, but not too soon. Children must learn the hard way to try hard and to try in a variety of ways. "I'll do it for you" is the kind of help that weakens.

— They stress competition with past performance or an internally held standard of excellence rather than competing with another person. The latter makes a winner — and a loser. Beating your own time in a race is more important than beating another person.

— They give a lot of praise and encouragement and positive feedback when goals are reached, but the evaluation is on the job and not the person.

It is not uncommon, however, for parents, schools and television to become achievement squelchers rather than motivators. The vivid jumpy format for television overwhelms rather than stimulates the imagination. It gives vast amounts of information without the necessary time to process it.

Instead of encouraging initiative, some teachers stress obedience, rule following and thinking on the teacher's terms. As a result, children become bored and either docilely obedient or rebellious. Johnson believes that many schools are stuck on subjects rather than motivating children to learn subjects.

Parents squelch a child's motivation by dominating, insisting on "do it my way" and praising conformity and niceness rather than independence and initiative. Often standards of achievements are set so high that a child fails. It is equally hard to achieve, says Johnson, in a school or home where there is no structure and blanket praise.

According to Johnson, behavioral scientists say that achievers tend to set medium-risk goals that they have a 30 to 50 percent chance of achieving and which will become a springboard for more goals. For example, a child might set a goal of selling $25 of lemonade with a $7 profit one week and $35 the next. He would not be satisfied by repeating the previous week's goal.

Not only does Johnson suggest getting to know yourself by making lists of your own strengths and weaknesses, but also those strengths of other family members, friends and relatives. He recommends goal brainstorming sessions between parents and children. People who think about their goals have a sense of the future, while goalless people or those for whom goals are unimportant are stuck in the present and accept the status quo.

Take a child who is good at running, spelling and making maps. He might brainstorm such long-range goals as going into the travel business, winning the Olympic distance running, organizing a shuttle trip to Mars or doing research for a TV station.

Achievers set a time limit or date for their short-term goals. While a non-achiever might set the goal of learning to play the guitar, making a model car collection or doing an ecology project and actually do nothing, the achiever would set the goal of borrowing a guitar and mastering 25 lessons, collecting 25 cars made of metal and getting five people organized to weed the corner of the park.

Achievers plan to reach their goals by considering personal and world obstacles such as shyness or lack of funds and by knowing that they can't do everything alone. They know who and when to ask for help. A child making a wooden box for a Christmas present would borrow tools from a neighbor and get advice from his shop teacher. Parents who explain too much too soon may retard their child's progress as achiever.

Instead, they may guide their children to develop the striving systems and achievement thinking that will help them achieve their goals. Achievers divide the goal into manageable pieces so that they can see progress, and set a specific time to work.

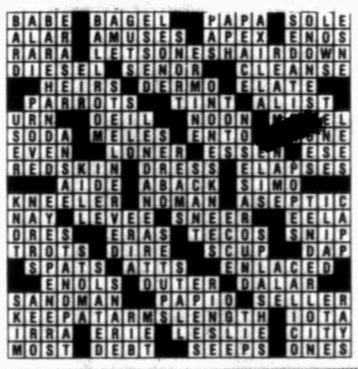

They keep going on the hard parts by giving themselves rewards like lemonade or cookies for an hour's work. After a long morning at the typewriter in his little office set among mock orange trees, Johnson rewards himself by sitting on a bench underneath a weeping beech.

"The lights, shadows and spaces made the branches nature's Rorschach test," he says. Finally they keep energized by crossing tasks off a checklist.

Johnson suggests the following steps for achievement thinking: Encourage yourself by remembering past performance; keep stimulated to continue striving by a sense of competition; imagine how good you will feel when you have achieved your goal and how bad you will feel when you don't; get pep talks from experts in the field.

Finally, achievers evaluate their performance. Ask yourself whether the goal is a responsible one and responsible methods were used to achieve it and what it would do to other people.
