Rear of tanker now underwater

■ The submersion of the rear section of a burning supertanker slightly increases fears the vessel will sink off the coast of Texas.

By Michael Graczyk
Associated Press Writer

GALVESTON — One end of a burning supertanker dipped to the water's surface in the Gulf of Mexico on Monday, slightly increasing chances the crippled vessel could sink, the Coast Guard said.

The rear section of the 853-foot Mega Borg remained above water but with waves occasionally washing over it, Coast Guard officials said.

"That increases the danger of sinking but only incrementally," said Coast Guard spokesman Todd Nelson. "We are not talking right now about sinking."

The Norwegian tanker was carrying 38 million gallons of oil when it was hit by a series of engine-room explosions Saturday. Two of the 41 crewmen died, two were missing and presumed dead and 17 were injured, none seriously.

A flotilla of six fireboats was shooting 14 streams of water on the vessel, 57 miles southeast of Galveston. Firefighters had hoped to use fire-choking foam but that effort was hampered by a new release of oil.

"What's happening now is more of the cargo crude oil is discharging," Nelson said. "That's not all bad. It means the fire is consuming more of the oil faster than we can."

Coast Guard Rear Adm. William Kime made an aerial inspection and said the Mega Borg's stern was listing to the left. "Every once in a while you have a wave that will come over the side," he said.

Officials said the dropping stern caused more oil to spill because the crude was going directly into the water.

The oil was flaring and occasionally shooting new balls of flame out the left side of the pumphouse, forcing fireboats to back off.

At midday, a pool of oil about 500 feet long was burning on the surface of the water trailing from the ship. Farther away, several boats with booms extending from their decks tried to collect some of the rusty brown oil on the water.

The Coast Guard said Monday there was a slick about one mile long north of

First Bankers Trust declared insolvent

■ The last of Midland's "oil boom banks" is declared insolvent and placed in the receivership of Resolution Trust Corp. of Dallas.

By John Paul Pitts
Business & Oil Editor

First Bankers Trust and Savings Association has become the last bank in Midland that was in existence prior to the oil bust of 1982 to be declared insolvent.

First Bankers was declared insolvent Friday by the U.S. Office of Thrift Supervision and was put under the receivership of the Resolution Trust Corp. (RTC), according to a statement issued Monday by RTC in Dallas.

Business will continue as usual for depositors and loans will continue to be serviced at the bank until action is taken on its disposition.

A spokesman for RTC said the options for the Midland financial institution were now to sell it or close it. No action, however, is expected for many weeks because of the unusually large inventory of Texas financial institutions under the supervision of RTC.

There are currently 90 financially insolvent institutions in the inventory of RTC, with 3-5 being closed each week, says Theresa McUsick, spokesman for RTC. "At the same time, we keep adding new institutions, so it could take many weeks before there is final action on First Bankers," she said.

While negotiations are under way to sell or close First Bankers, RTC will appoint a managing agent to oversee the operations of the bank. The appointed agent will be responsible for limiting growth, minimizing operating losses, conserving assets, servicing accounts and making certain that operations are conducted in a safe and sound manner, says Ms. McUsick.

She added that the troubled bank had $110.4 million in assets and $97 million in 10,972 deposit accounts.

News of the insolvency of First Bankers was not entirely unsuspected and followed severe restrictions put on the bank in March by the Office of Thrift Supervision (OTS).

At that time the bank was prohibited from making new loans without the prior approval of OTS, because it did not meet capital requirements of the new rules specified by the President Bush's bailout bill known as the Financial Institutions Reform and Recovery Act of 1989.

The denial of the plan, which had already been approved by OTS, was a dis-

Citizens collecting own water sample

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

Citizens unsatisfied with previous water well contamination tests banded together to draw water samples from at least 25 water wells in Midland and Odessa Monday.

Samples were split with representatives of the Texas Water Commission, who will be sending their tests to the Texas Department of Health laboratory in Austin.

Members of People United Against Contaminated Environment (PACE) and Texans United, an environmental organization with over 60,000 members, collected water samples from water wells in South Midland, West Odessa (Jonesville) and East Odessa (El Ranchito). Samples will be tested at E-3, an Environmental Protection Agency-certified lab in Boston, Mass.

The South Midland and Odessa residents are paying for their own private testing, according to information from PACE.

Samples taken Monday — some from previously tested wells — were collected in response to residents' concern with alleged inaccuracies in interpreting raw data from previous testing done by the Texas Department

Businessmen look at opening halfway house

A group of local businessmen wants to turn an defunct Midland motel into a halfway house for nonviolent convicted criminals, the group's chief executive officer said Monday.

The West Texas Inn, 2406 Commerce St., could become a part-time home for up to 92 men as early as Aug. 1, said Eugene Easly, also chairman of the association of investors known as The Otus Group.

Easly was scheduled to introduce the group's proposal to Midland City Council today.

"One of the requirements of the state is that we have the support of the elected officials," said Easly, a San Antonio resident who proposed the idea to the local businessmen. "We want them to be aware

Supreme Court strikes down new flag law

By Dan Freedman
Reporter-Telegram Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Supreme Court on Monday struck down the anti-flag burning law passed by Congress last year, ruling that the statute "suppresses expression" protected by the Constitution's First Amendment.

"We are aware that desecration of the flag is deeply offensive to many," Justice William Brennan wrote in the court's majority opinion. "(But) punishing desecration of the flag dilutes the very freedom that makes this emblem so revered, and worth revering."

The court's 5-4 ruling immediately rekindled the emotionally charged debate on whether the flag should get special constitutional protection.

President Bush urged a constitutional amendment that would get around the First Amendment, and congressional leaders set a hearing on such a proposal.

Weather may help contain spill

By James Cullen
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — State officials Monday afternoon were optimistic that fair weather would help emergency crews contain oil spilled from the crippled and burning supertanker Mega Borg before it causes major damage to Texas beaches and marine life.

A high-pressure "ridge" centered over Texas was contributing to fair weather conditions that were expected to keep the seas relatively calm for the next few days, said George Bomar of the Texas Water Commission, one of the lead state agencies monitoring the spill 57 miles southeast of Galveston.

Gov. Bill Clements issued a statement that state agencies have been put on alert and are taking every possible precaution to protect the environment. "Texas is hoping and praying that the worst doesn't happen. But if it does, we'll be ready," he said.

"Protecting our environment is paramount," he said. "We are pulling out all the stops to ensure that Texas is prepared to deal with any circumstance."

Marilyn Querejazu of the Water Commission's Emergency Response Unit said the U.S. Coast Guard, which is managing the spill response in an advisory capacity, has upgraded the incident to a "potentially major spill," because of the settling of the vessel and the continued discharge of oil.

But as of Monday afternoon the Coast Guard estimated only 40,000 gallons of the light crude oil had spilled of 42 million gallons aboard the tanker, she said.

The oil has formed two slicks, she said. One of them is 1.5 miles by three-quarters of a mile and the other is four miles by three-quarters of a mile, she said.

Under current projections, she said, the oil would reach land between Freeport and Corpus Christi in three to four days, but she added that much of the light crude oil is evaporating, burning or breaking up in the Gulf.

The Coast Guard has not taken over the cleanup, because the ship's Norwegian owner and the Houston-based owner of the oil have assumed responsibility for the spill, and are paying for private contractors to bring the fire and spill under control, she said.

"I guess there's always the potential there for (a massive spill) to happen, but we had spoken with the Coast Guard earlier and they felt (the ship) was fairly stable, even though it was tilted up," said Robert Lansford, coordinator of the Governor's Division of Emergency Management.

"It's 60 miles off and the currents are such that it's not moving very fast toward us and the weather is nice and good, so those are good for us right now," Lansford said.

Agencies involved in the spill response include the Texas Water Commission, the Parks and Wildlife Department, the General Land Office and the Governor's Division of Emergency Management.

Lansford said representatives of the affected state and federal agencies were able to run through the oil spill response process in an April 25 drill at Corpus Christi.

"So far it seems to be working pretty good," he said.

TANKER: Some oil burning on surface of Texas Gulf

the ship and one about 15 miles long to the south. A sheen on the water around the ship appeared to be covering an area about 5-by-7 miles Monday afternoon.

The spills were estimated to contain 10,000 to 100,000 gallons, according to Officer Mark Sedwick. A plane dropped 4,000 gallons of oil dispersant on one of the slicks late Sunday and it appeared to be working, he said. The larger slick had shrunk early Monday to 15 miles long from 21 miles, Coast Guard officials said.

The firefighting operation appeared to be having some effect, with the black smoke at times changing to white and gray.

Before it slipped to the surface, the rear of the tanker had dropped 58 feet since the first explosion, indicating either the cargo shifted or the ship was taking on water, officials said.

CENTER: Motel would house criminals

of our endeavor and make sure they do not oppose it."

The businessmen, whom Easly declined to name, have said they would invest $250,000 in the halfway house, he said.

Formally called a "community treatment center," the facility would house those convicted of non-violent offenses such as hot-check writing, vehicle theft, burglary, embezzlement and tax evasion, Easly said.

"These are the people that the state feels are better off being paroled to a community treatment center rather than release them to the circumstances that led to their incarceration in the first place," he said.

Although the halfway house would be monitored by state and federal prison officials, it would have its own intake policy, Easly said.

"We can accept or reject any applicant," he said. "We don't want a real troublemaker any more than the community wants him. We are only going to accept very low, low risk people."

Most of the program's clients either would be first-time offenders or convicted white-collar professionals such as doctors, bankers and lawyers, he said. Those with a history of violence, sex offense or sociopathic behavior would be rejected, he said.

In some cases, the criminals would be sent to the center in lieu of going to prison, Easly said. For others, the facility would be transitional tool for a prison inmate to re-enter society, he said.

"This is not a prison," he said. "The only thing keeping a person there is his word."

The center would be in the city's southwest corner and away from residential neighborhoods. Texas Department of Public Safety offices are located nearby.

Easly said that except for an executive director, the facility would be staffed by local residents. Counselor applicants would have to meet education and social service training criteria, he said.

He estimated that the facility would create 30 jobs and pump $1 million a year into the local economy.

Councilman J.D. Faircloth said he and other councilmen are amenable to the idea, although many questions are left to be answered.

"I don't find the idea terribly offensive," he said. "I would probably support it based on the information I've got. But we really don't have enough information yet."

However, Faircloth expressed concern over the center being overseen by locally hired employees who have little or no experience dealing with convicts.

"Although these are not hardened criminals, they have been convicted," he said.

But Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter said that other than creating jobs and providing a slight economic boost, the halfway house would not benefit area residents.

"I won't give support to it," Painter said. "We've got enough convicts in the community as it is. We've already got enough criminals running the streets.

"I can see the potential for adding to the criminal activity we already have here."

The sheriff, though, said he does not plan to formally protest the proposal. "I've already spoken my peace," he said.

Midland Police Department Chief Richard Czech could not be reached for comment.

Easly, though, said halfway house residents would be closely monitored and have to submit to up to three drug tests a week. Residents would not be allowed to consume alcohol, he said.

"Two dirty urines and they're gone," he said.

Program participants, whose stays would range from three to six months, also could be kicked out of the facility for displaying disruptive attitudes or failing to comply with house rules, Easly said.

They are free to make visits outside the center, but they risk being sent to prison if they fail to return, he said.

Residents would be required to take part in intensive counseling and would be taught living skills, he said. Facility counselors also would assist them in finding jobs and honing work skills, he said.

However, Easly admitted that the program will not be as effective for better-educated participants.

"There's little we can do with a doctor or lawyer," he said. "With them all you can do is provide living conditions as pleasant as possible."

Clients would be required to look for jobs, although they would not be required to have one to remain in the program, he said.

"We can't guarantee them a job when they arrive," Easly said, predicting that 90 percent of the residents would be employed. "They just need to make an honest effort. You can tell if they're making an honest effort."

He said he hopes that scholastic courses, guest speakers and more specialized counseling eventually would be introduced to the facility.

To help fund the center, the client would contribute 25 percent of his salary, Easly said. The program also would be paid for through contracts with the state and federal governments, he said.

Through a contract with the state, applicants would be referred to the program by the Texas Board of Pardons and Paroles.

Easly, a former English teacher and coin collecter, said he wanted to get into the halfway house business because he became bored with retirement. If opened, the Midland facility would be the first run by The Otus Group, which was created six months ago, he said.

"Our long-term goal is to build as many as 10 of these across the state of Texas," he said. "However, we'll always be Midland based."

The Otus Group, which has a Midland office at 3123 Roosevelt Ave., will be able to offer better salaries without having to face the red tape sometimes associated with a federal- or state-run program, he said.

However, state officials will inspect the center at least three times a year, he said.

Easly said he was still awaiting word on whether a Georgetown savings and loan will approve a loan to purchase the West Texas Inn.

"We're reviving something that is turning into an eyesore," he said of the motel.

FLAG: Court takes unpopular stand on issue of 'free speech'

(From 1A)

The law the court struck down Monday was hastily crafted last year by Congress after the court last year threw out a Texas statute making it a crime to burn the flag if the goal was to "seriously offend" anyone observing it.

Following the Texas decision, conservatives on Capitol Hill and the Bush administration urged a constitutional amendment carving out an exception to the First Amendment to enable prosecutors to go after flag burners. Supporters of such an amendment predicted that the high court would void any flag-protection statute because of the First Amendment.

The court confirmed their prediction Monday.

Supporters of an amendment on Monday lost no time in renewing their push. Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., said it's the only way to protect the flag as a symbol of "American tradition, American values."

Rep. Jack Brooks, chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, scheduled a June 19 committee vote on an amendment. Brooks, who backs an amendment, said a bill would reach the House floor by July 4.

Last year, House Speaker Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash., — who was urging support for the statutory solution — promised to bring an amendment proposal to a House vote within 30 days of any Supreme Court decision striking down the statute. A spokesman for Foley on Monday said the speaker intended to honor that commitment.

Bush said he will "continue to press for what I strongly believe is in the public interest" — a constitutional amendment. An amendment must be approved by a two-thirds vote in the House and Senate, as well as by 38 of the 50 states.

The court's majority opinion said that even though Congress sought to outlaw flag burning without punishing protesters for expressing an opinion, the statute failed to make the distinction.

"The government's interest (in protecting the flag) cannot justify its infringement of First Amendment rights," Brennan wrote. Opinion polls showing public support for a prohibition of flag burning do not matter, Brennan wrote, adding: "Any suggestion that the government's interest in suppressing speech becomes more weighty as popular opposition to that speech grows is foreign to the First Amendment."

Brennan was joined by Justices Thurgood Marshall, Harry Blackmun, Antonin Scalia and Anthony M. Kennedy.

appointment to managment.

Howard Jones, president of First Bankers, commented at that time: "I think we could have turned First Bankers around if we had been allowed to go forward with the capital requirements plan." Jones is a former FDIC employee, who had been brought in to turn the ailing bank around.

He said the plan was denied because under terms of the bailout bill the bank was not allowed to count a portion of its goodwill toward capital requirments.

According to RTC, First Bankers showed a negative capital of 3.05 percent at the end of 1989, and a loss of $2.8 million.

Founded in 1955 as First Savings, First Bankers was locally owned until April 1980, when it was purchased by Southern Union Gas Co. However, in 1988 Southern Union, in a move to divest itself of non-energy business, spun the bank off as an entity to its 6,800 stockholders.

WATER: Residents funding tests of Health.

Midge Erskine, a local environmentalist, said, "I think its a shame that people so mistrust state agencies that they are willing to shell out of their own pocket for testing to get peace of mind."

Ms. Erskine said screening by Jim Pritchard, owner of Caprock Petroleum Lab and a county landowner, showed "extremely high concentrations of nitrates" in some water wells. Pritchard was not available for comment at press time.

William Lockey, TWC district manager, said "Pritchard's test results are not the same as ours." Lockey said the TWC "would not use the type of nitrate-nitrogen testing Pritchard used."

Lockey said Pritchard has alleged that the TWC data results were erroneous. "One way to check this is to split the testing," he said.

Jon Crunk of Levelland, representative of Texans United, said splitting the test samples would operate on the basis of "You take yours, I'll take mine, we'll run them by the same standards and then we'll compare them."

Lockey, who has samples from three South Midland water wells and seven Odessa wells said it's not unusual for the TWC to split groundwater samples with industries. "It is unusual, however, to split samples for a routine groundwater investigation," he said.

Lockey said the samples, as drinking water, will be given priority at the Austin lab. He said the TWC will also be conducting a bacteria culture test overnight in its Odessa laboratory for fecal matter.

Lockey said the TWC agreed to split samples with PACE and Texas United when the organizations requested its help.

Lillian Wallis Smith, executive chairman of PACE, said, "We wrote to the Texas Water Commission in May to notify them of our testing plans." Ms. Smith said the organization wanted to operate in conjunction with the TWC in order for the tests to be valid. "We wanted the samples to be EPA approved as legitimate samples," she said.

According to Ms. Smith, water samples are being tested for pesticides, herbicides, metals, volatile organics and petroleum-based contaminates.

Lockey said chemists in Austin would be reviewing the alleged inaccuracies found in interpreting data from Midland County wells. "Our people in Austin will deal with that," he said. Lockey also said he considered the Odessa well water samples "entirely separate from what's going on in Midland."

Joyce Jezek, who resides on S. Midkiff Road., had her water sampled during the Monday testing. She said she suspected her water might be contaminated when the taste changed recently. "Suddenly, it tasted so good we suspected that ground water was getting into the well water," she said. Ms. Jezek said she has neighbors who have contaminated wells.

Ms. Smith also had her water sampled. "We've had problems with the water for the past 11 years," she said. "The water initially was very good, but has gotten progressively worse." Although Ms. Smith has a reverse osmosis system and a water softener, "They can't get rid of everything in the water," she said.

According to previous press reports, TWC tests showed trace amounts of volatile organics as well as some elevated chloride and sulphate levels in some area wells. Oil-field contamination was suspected as contributing to the high chloride level of some of the 29 Midland County wells sampled in March by the TWC.

One well showed chloride levels of 2,351 parts per million. Maximum state-recommended chloride level is 300 parts per million.

Pilot thanks crew that held him in plane

LONDON (AP) — A British Airways pilot on Monday praised the "magnificent" crew that saved him from being sucked out of a cockpit when the windshield was blown out in flight.

Tim Lancaster thanked crew members who clung to his ankles while co-pilot Alistair Atcheson made a rapid descent and emergency landing after the passenger jet's windshield blew out at 23,000 feet on Sunday.

"They were magnificent. If it was not for them I would not be here now," Lancaster said at Southampton General Hospital, where he was recovering from frostbite, bruises and a broken elbow, wrist and thumb.

He met for an hour with his rescuers — purser Nigel Ogden, steward Simon Rogers and stewardess Susan Prince — and posed with the trio, smiling and bare-chested in his hospital bed.

The airline and the government's Air Accidents Investigation Branch was trying to determine how the windshield broke loose. It had been installed two days earlier during routine maintenance.

The 21-year British Airways veteran, however, said the experience would not make him stop flying.

When the windshield blew out, purser Ogden, who was serving tea in the forward galley, ran into the cockpit and saw Lancaster being pulled through the hole. He grabbed the pilot's legs.

Rogers, the other steward, then strapped himself into the empty pilot's seat and, with Ms. Prince, took over from Ogden, whose arm had been gashed by broken windshield glass.

Several of the 81 passengers looked on in horror through the open cockpit door.

Atcheson, the co-pilot, put on an oxygen mask and made a steep descent, landing safely at Southampton on England's southern coast.

Lancaster's wife, Margaret, visited him Monday, along with his father, David, and Marshall, the airline chief.

Yitzhak Shamir begins fourth term as Israeli prime minister

JERUSALEM (AP) — Yitzhak Shamir, a former guerrilla and spy, has fought most of his life for one goal — a "greater Israel" in which Jews are safe from what he sees as a hostile world.

This vision will shape Shamir's agenda in his fourth term as prime minister and leader of Israel's new right-wing coalition government, sworn in Monday.

Shamir has said Israel must return "not an inch" of occupied Arab land and instead expand Jewish settlements in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, land won from the Arabs in the 1967 Middle East war.

His Likud bloc wants the territories as a security buffer, and as an intergral part of Israel.

The Polish-born Shamir's emphasis on security has its roots in the Holocaust, in which 6 million Jews were killed by the Nazis. Shamir's father was betrayed to the Nazis by residents of his village. Most of the rest of his family also perished.

Shamir, 74, has balked at attempts by the United States to prod him toward a more conciliatory approach with the Palestinians. His new government calls for "uprooting" the 30-month-old uprising in the occupied lands. The revolt has claimed 717 Palestinian lives; 45 Israelis also have died.

He was born Yitzhak Ysernitzky on Oct. 15, 1915, in Ruznoy, Poland.

Rebels delayed on trip to Liberian peace talks

MONROVIA, Liberia (AP) — Peace talks between government officials and rebels who control most of the country were delayed Monday, and insurgent leaders said they could not get their representatives to the site.

Meanwhile, authorities arrested three military officers in 12 grisly murders in the Liberian capital.

The peace talks were to have begun Monday at a U.S. Embassy facility in Freetown, capital of neighboring Sierra Leone.

Delegations from the government and Liberian Council of Churches — which is mediating the conflict between the forces of President Samuel Doe and Charles Taylor's insurgent National Patriotic Front — arrived Monday in Sierra Leone.

Rebel sources in Ivory Coast said their delegation would have to travel more than 600 miles overland to reach Abidjan and make flight connections to Freetown. The sources said the rebels are seeking assurances their flight will be safe while crossing Liberian airspace.

Even before the talks began, the negotiations threatened to stall over the rebel demand that Doe step down.

In Monrovia, the overnight slayings of 12 people — their hacked or bullet-ridden bodies were found Monday — heightened fears in this already tense city of 400,000 residents.

Many capital residents are terrified of the prospect of tribal warfare as the rebels close in on Monrovia.

A major and two lieutenants of the Liberian army were arrested in the killings and face court-martials, a Defense Ministry communique said.

It said those slain included the mayor of Clay Ashland township in western Monrovia, a Finance Ministry auditor and the relative of a politician hacked to death in January.

The victims, including a teenage girl, had been abducted last week by men in uniform.

Hostage's employer travels to Ecuador

QUITO, Ecuador (AP) — A ransom deadline set by leftist guerrillas threatening to kill their American hostage passed Monday, and the man's employer was said to have gone into the jungle to meet with the kidnappers.

Friends and family of kidnapped engineer Scott Heimdal, 27, of Peoria, Ill., have collected the $60,000 the guerrillas are demanding, but it was not immediately known if the payment would be made.

Jeffrey Fino, local manager of the Iminco mining company, flew to an airstrip near the San Miguel River, company sources said, speaking on condition of anonymity. The river runs along Ecuador's border with Colombia, 100 miles northeast of Quito.

The sources did not confirm that Fino was carrying the $60,000.

Heimdal's family in Peoria collected the money from friends and well-wishers and the cash was transferred to a Quito bank over the weekend.

Heimdal's parents plan to come to this Andean nation Wednesday or Thursday. Volunteers in Peoria have been raising money to pay for their flight.

Poindexter sentenced to 6 months in prison

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former National Security Adviser John M. Poindexter was sentenced to six months in prison Monday by a judge who accused him of usurping the power of Congress by lying about the Iran-Contra affair.

The sentence imposed by U.S. District Judge Harold H. Greene was the first prison term for any of the seven people convicted as a result of the affair.

Greene said letting Poindexter off without a prison term "would be tantamount to a statement that a scheme to lie to and obstruct Congress is of no great moment."

The judge delivered a stern lecture along with the sentence, saying Poindexter violated "a principle fundamental to this constitutional republic — that those elected by and responsible to the people shall make the important policy decisions."

"Their decisions may not be nullified by appointed officials who happen to be in positions that give them the ability to operate programs prohibited by law," the judge said.

He said Poindexter showed "no evidence of recognizing that principle and the seriousness of its violation."

Greene allowed Poindexter to remain free while he appeals five felony convictions of conspiracy, making false statements and obstruction.

And the judge did not impose a fine, noting that Poindexter had already incurred huge legal bills.

However, Greene said that allowing Poindexter to get off without a prison term "would be tantamount to a statement that to lie to and obstruct Congress was of no great moment."

"The Congress can't fulfill its constitutional duties if it is obstructed by high-ranking officials," the judge said.

Poindexter, 53, who served as President Reagan's national security adviser from late 1985 until revelations about the Iran-Contra affair forced his resignation in November 1986, is the highest-ranking Reagan administration official to be convicted of a felony.

He was found guilty of lying to Congress in 1986 by falsely assuring lawmakers that his staff was not secretly helping arm the Nicaraguan Contras and by giving false testimony and preparing an inaccurate chronology to conceal U.S. involvement in a 1985 shipment of missiles to Iran.

Six other men, including retired Marine Lt. Col. Oliver L. North, a former Poindexter aide, have been placed on probation after being convicted or pleading guilty to crimes in the Iran-Contra affair.

Poindexter showed little emotion, except to smile at his wife Linda, after the sentence was announced.

Hundreds of Americans escape Liberian fighting

CHARLESTON, S.C. (AP) — Hundreds of U.S. citizens returned to America on Monday after fleeing war-torn Liberia, where rebels are trying to topple the government of President Samuel K. Doe.

"It feels wonderful. It feels great" to be back in the United States, said the Rev. Henry Hungerpiller, a 69-year-old Orangeburg native who has served as a missionary in Liberia for 35 years.

The evacuees, urged by the U.S. government to leave the West African nation because of warfare, on Sunday flew from the capital of Monrovia, Liberia, to Abidjan, capital of neighboring Ivory Coast. They transferred to an American Trans Air chartered flight, and arrived at Charleston International Airport at 12:25 p.m. EDT.

At least 170 of the 349 passengers were children, many of whom received stuffed animals from Salvation Army workers at the Charleston airport.

Many evacuees declined to talk to reporters, apparently concerned about the effect on friends in Liberia or their chances to return. But those who did speak said fighting was intense, and many appeared thankful to be out of the country.

"Most of the people in Monrovia are very much afraid," Hungerpiller said.

Hungerpiller worked at a Bible school of about 600 students, 12 miles outside the capital.

Conditions in Liberia are "terrible. There is fighting all over," said Solon de Joachim, an educator and businessman en route to New York with two sons and two daughters to meet his wife and five other children.

Supreme Court decision moves flag burning to Congress

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court decision Monday on the flag protection law set up a head-butting political showdown in Congress on a constitutional amendment supported by President Bush to outlaw flag burning.

"There are no options left. It's either do nothing, or have a constitutional amendment. I think we ought to do something," said Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., the Senate minority leader.

"The issue is not the flag, the issue is whether we are going to amend the Bill of Rights," countered Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine., blasting Dole for suggesting that those against the amendment support flag-burners.

Battle lines formed almost instantly after the Supreme Court threw out the statute Congress passed last year to penalize flag burners without touching the constitution.

The law represented a middle ground between those, including Bush, who favor a limit on constitutional guarantees of free speech to make an exception for the flag and those, including Mitchell and House Speaker Thomas S. Foley, who view the First Amendment as paramount.

Bush said Monday he was ready to renew his quest. He and other Republicans, who have used the flag issue against liberal Democrats, told those who thought the statute would pass muster "I told you so."

"Some of us said ahead of time that the legislative approach would not be upheld," he said.

"We'll talk about it as we go around the country," said Bush's spokesman, Marlin Fitzwater. "We'll ask the Congress to pass it just as we did in the first case."

House Minority Leader Bob Michel, R-Ill., sponsor of the constitutional amendment, said, "Either we amend the Constitution — as grave and complicated an undertaking as that is — or else let the decision stand."

Foley, D-Wash., promised a House vote before Congress leaves for its Fourth of July recess. It could come as early as next week, when the House Judiciary Committee is scheduled to act.

The timing will make it more difficult to oppose the amendment, its supporters and opponents said.

"It doesn't help at all. It licenses the demagogues," said Rep. Don Edwards, D-Calif., an opponent who is chairman of the House Judiciary Committee's subcommittee on the Constitution. Still, he said, "I'm confident we're going to get enough members to stand up and say, 'No, I love the Bill of Rights.'"

Two given maximum sentences in racial slaying

NEW YORK (AP) — Two 19-year-old white men on Monday were dealt the longest possible prison terms for the mob-beating and death of a young black man who had come to their neighborhood to buy a car.

Justice Thaddeus Owens handed down the sentences after a prosecutor called the slaying "Neanderthal-type behavior" by the white mob.

The Aug. 23 shooting death of 16-year-old Yusuf Hawkins in Brooklyn's Bensonhurst section inflamed racial passions in the city.

"It's a small joy for myself but a great victory for black people all over the state," Hawkins' father, Moses Stewart, said after the sentencings.

Owens sentenced Joseph Fama, named by prosecutors as the triggerman, to 32 and two-thirds years to life in prison. He was convicted of second-degree murder, riot, unlawful imprisonment, weapons possession and other crimes.

Defense lawyer David DePetris said he would appeal and added that he wasn't surprised.

Earlier, Owens handed Keith Mondello five and one-third to 16 years in prison, plus a $2,000 fine. Mondello, identified as the ringleader, had been acquitted of murder and manslaughter charges, but convicted of riot, unlawful imprisonment and discrimination.

As Owens delivered Fama's sentence in the packed courtroom, Stewart watched intently and said: "Yes!"

While supporters of Hawkins' family applauded, members of Fama's family screamed in Italian and wept.

Computer crime offers puzzle

It's the computer world's Catch 22: Many users are upset over computer crime, while others complain their privacy rights are being violated by government agencies trying to nab the invaders.

For the past two years, with little publicity, federal and state agencies have been investigating computer operators who break into various government and business data systems. In raids across 14 cities, they have seized more than three dozen personal computer systems from homes and businesses and arrested seven people. Nearly 24,000 data disks have been confiscated.

The FBI, Secret Service, and state law enforcement agencies say that computer invaders are stealing information from secret government, research, and private business data systems. Under federal law, it's a crime to enter computers and take data from them without authorization.

Computer criminals steal information from all three systems and not only appropriate data gathered at great cost but use information to commit other crimes, such as credit card fraud. The list of such possibilities is almost endless.

However, in investigating such fraud, legitimate users maintain that government and state agencies have invaded their privacy in a bid to curb crime. Both civil liberties advocates and defenders of search operations admit that investigators are now operating in gray areas that need greater definition.

The computer privacy question will not be settled for a long time. The reason is the amazing leaps in speed, multiplication of data and changing methods of access in computer systems. No sooner is one advance made than another improves on it.

The ability to keep data private while allowing limited access shows that computer crime is more than a legal problem. It's also a technical one. Restraint is just as important as the law.

Has Annapolis chief won promotion?

WASHINGTON — The retiring chief of naval operations, Adm. C.A.H. Trost, is scrambling to find a good job for his friend, a two-star admiral who has presided over a series of scandals at the U.S. Naval Academy in Annapolis, Md.

Anderson

Trost wants to pin a third star on Rear Adm. Virgil L. Hill, the academy superintendent, and find Hill a job befitting a three-star admiral before Trost retires. The retirement ceremony is set for June 29 and our sources say Trost's plan is to sign new orders and promotion for Hill on June 28 or 29. But some top Navy officials are in an uproar over this bit of lame-duck back scratching.

The academy is a prestigious institution that has graduated luminaries of the Navy, public service and industry. But during Hill's two-year tenure as superintendent, the academy has been rocked with scandals and is now the subject of at least six different military and congressional investigations.

Critics say that the same experience that brought Hill and Trost together as friends — they were both nuclear submariners — has made Hill a washout as superintendent. Commanding a submarine does not necessarily prepare someone to be president of an academic institution or even commander of a fleet.

Hill's tenure at the academy has been a minefield, and our sources say not all the mines have been detonated yet. There have been allegations of unchecked cheating, uncontrolled hazing and a watering down of academic excellence. Knowledgeable sources told us another major scandal is about to break regarding the mistreatment of Hispanic midshipmen.

By now Hill should have his scandal response honed to perfection. One of the first occurred in the 1988-89 school year when a spoof magazine published by the middies, called "Playmid," printed photos of male and female midshipmen in scanty garb.

Hill overreacted to the joke, confiscating the magazines. But someone broke into the storage room and stole some back. Hill called in the heavy-handed Naval Investigative Service for a sledgehammer approach to killing a fly. The final straw was the publication in Playboy magazine of the photos.

Then the scandals grew more serious. One of Trost's assignments for Hill was to make the academy more oriented toward high-tech studies, but Hill has given the wrong signals. For instance, he removed a respected teacher, Ralph Santoro, as chairman of the electrical engineering department after Santoro refused to raise some grades.

This spring, Hill deliberately looked the other way when there was evidence that midshipmen copied engineering exams during a break-in of faculty offices. Faculty members asked Hill for a two-day delay in final exams so they could prepare other tests. But Hill naively insisted that his midshipmen had sworn to an honor code and could be trusted.

The school year ended with another scandal when midshipman Gwen Dreyer resigned, saying that upperclassmen had handcuffed her to a urinal and taken pictures. Another midshipman, Victor Vaca, resigned after he said he was forced by classmates to eat and drink until he vomited.

As if the bad press were not enough, the 990 graduating midshipmen this year were given diplomas which misspelled "Naval" as "Navel." Those memoirs of "Belly Button U" will be around long after Hill is gone.

Just where he will go is in Trost's hands. Technically, Trost could promote Hill to a three-star vice admiral and keep him at the helm of the academy. But our sources say Trost wants a more important command for his friend, maybe Atlantic naval operations.

City, chambers need soccer spirit

Rarely do I respond to articles I read in your paper — even rarer do I read sports articles. In this instance, however, an article written by Jimmy Patterson in the Monday, May 28, edition, the headline "Shootin' Stars Call Playground Home" caught my eye. I've been following this team for a couple of years.

My oldest son had wanted to play on this team, being very excited about the sport of soccer. You see, he's not built for football, but loves playing in a team atmosphere. Soccer fulfilled that need since the age of seven (he's now 10).

Presently, my son is a member of a semi-pro team in El Paso which recently traveled to Albuquerque for a tournament. He raves about the cooperation this team he's on has from the city and how well-supported the other cities are of the soccer enthusiasts.

I'm having a lot of difficulty understanding why Midland's team spirit can't support football and soccer. What better way to bring people from other towns to see Midland, to stay in our hotels, eat in our restaurants and buy at our local stores and other entertainment facilities.

Wake up, Midland! Here's a chance to support an upcoming means for sports scholarships for the kids who play. We have a large number of kids who play this sport and I agree the fields are in bad condition.

What happened with our new facility? I'm surprised our local Chambers of Commerce can't see this as a way of promoting our two communities.

Hopefully, my 12-year-old will have something better to play on in coming years. He's not built for football either, but he's a pretty terrific soccer player.

Thanks to Jimmy Patterson for bringing this dilemma out in the open. Come on, Midland, where's your team spirit for all sports?

Forced change leaves feelings of frustration

If your child attended school in Midland from kindergarten through sixth grade, and then you were told that he would have to go to Odessa to attend grades 7-12, how would you feel about that?

This is currently happening to hearing impaired students in Midland. It is difficult for any child to move away from his hometown, his friends, his siblings and adjust to a new school, a new town and new classmates.

Change is not always a good thing, especially if the change is not wanted. Maybe, in time, they'll adjust. But it will take time and teach them more about anger, insecurity and frustration.

It's a pity, really, that when it's all said and done, frustration will probably be the only lesson they or their families will really have learned or remember.

CHARLEY REESE

So why are we making the concessions?

Rather than bore you with the minutia of arms control debates, let me just remind you of what's at stake.

In a word, survival. The fallacy of arms control is that if the Soviet Union has no hostile intentions, then we don't need arms control. If the Soviet Union's intentions are hostile, then we cannot trust arms control treaties to protect us.

Reese

Words on pieces of paper are no protection against steel and fire and radiation. People intent on committing the sin of murder will not hesitate to commit the sin of lying.

If you lived through the 1930s, then this may be where you came in. George Bush and his buddy Jim Baker seem intent on repeating the sorry record of Neville Chamberlain, who thought he could trust the Nazis.

There has been no war between the United States and the Soviet Union, because of U.S. military power. During the Eisenhower administration, we wisely adopted the policy of deterrence.

Deterrence means that we would maintain sufficient nuclear forces to: (1) absorb a nuclear first strike from the Soviet Union; and (2) still have enough left to inflict an unacceptable level of damage on the Soviet Union.

Deterrence therefore is a two-part equation and won't work if either side of it is abandoned. The day we lose our deterrence is the day we become vulnerable to destruction or to Soviet diplomatic moves we dare not oppose. Military superiority is the backbone of diplomacy.

Steadily, since the Kennedy administration, our nuclear deterrent vis a vis the Soviet Union has been in decline. The Reagan administration's attempt to reverse the decline was only partially successful. Soviet military planners have had a great ally in the form of the U.S. Congress. After nearly 20 years of debate, we still do not have a deployed mobile missile. We have no civil defense system, no ballistic missile defense system, and no — this may surprise you — defense against bombers worthy of its name.

The bulk of our bomber force consists of 262 B-52s, an average of 28 years old. It took 20 years to get the 98 B-1s we have and as of today there is still only one B2 Stealth bomber running tests. So if the flag went up today, whatever number of these planes survived and got off the ground would have to fly into the world's most dense and sophisticated air defense system.

We have 36 submarines with ballistic missiles. Some of these are always in port and vulnerable to a first strike. We have about 1,000 fixed ICBMs. It's important to count silos, sub and bomber bases because these will be the targets of a first strike. Multiple warheads which never get launched are useless. Right now, the Soviet SSI8 alone can target our land-based missiles as well as our sub bases and bomber bases.

The asymmetry between U.S. and Soviet strategic forces is already dangerous and thus it is doubly dangerous for us to make further concessions. And this brings up several contradictions you ought to think about in evaluating the baloney that flies at you from the TV screen and the printing press.

If the Soviet Union is so weak, why are we making the concessions?

If the Soviet economy is in such a shambles, why do they have the nuclear and conventional superiority and not us?

If the Soviet Union is now on the way toward a new relationship, why did it reject the open skies proposal, cheat on the INF treaty, refuse to consider on-site inspections in the current proposals, insist on U.S. concessions, halt the withdrawal of troops from Eastern Europe, stall the conventional arms negotiations, and continue its high expenditures on strategic forces, both offensive and defensive?

Mikhail Gorbachev's sponsor and mentor, Yuri Andropov, said in 1979, "Imperialism accepted detente, not because it wished to but because it was forced to."

Chuckling maniacally, Richard Widmark in his first movie pushed an old lady in a wheelchair down a staircase. The 20 lonely House members who voted against the Americans With Disabilities Act will be accused in certain circles of sharing Widmark's attitude toward the handicapped. It's a bum rap.

Murchison

The easy vote, when the bill came to the House floor, would have been an uproarious "yes." After all the bill had passed the Senate, was certain to pass the House, and President Bush had cheerfully promised his autograph. The hard vote was the "no" vote, given the bill's spacious objectives.

The bill extends civil rights to the physically or mentally handicapped — including AIDS victims and recovering drug abusers and alcoholics.

In four years, businesses with as few as 15 workers must physically change their facilities to accommodate wheelchairs. Bus companies will have to install wheelchair lifts. New stores, restaurants, and hotels must be made fully accessible to the wheelchair-bound. The objective is to integrate the handicapped more fully into American life.

Who could object to such an objective? Nobody could. Nobody did. The only objection was to invoking the brute, undiscerning power of the federal government.

To begin with, the whole premise of rights-for-the-disabled is askew. "Civil rights," in the classic sense, means the right to vote, the right to hold office, the right to speak freely, worship openly, and so on.

The worst they can complain of, possibly, is official indifference to their plight. But how indifferent actually has society been? Wheelchair ramps are everywhere, as are handicapped-reserved parking spaces in shopping centers. A network of social services, generously funded by the private as well as the public sector, exists solely to accommodate the needs of the disabled.

Yes, of course, we should incorporate the disabled more fully into American life. What folly it is, nonetheless, to drag Congress into the picture.

For starters, what is all this going to cost? The private, not the public, sector will take the biggest hit. AT&T says mandated services for the hearing-impaired could cost $330 million. Greyhound Bus, already losing money, may have to spend up to $80 million a year on wheelchair lifts.

The civil rights angle plunges us into deep waters indeed. Why civil rights for AIDS victims, carriers of a deadly, infectious disease chiefly resulting from immoral, not to mention widely illegal, behavior? Aid for AIDS victims, yes; civil rights, no. The bill, with its stern penalties for noncompliance, will help lawyers — hardly a disabled class — more than anyone else.

At bottom, the Americans With Disabilities Act underestimates the good sense and good intentions of the American people. These the act treats like, well, the white Southerners of a generation ago. You, there, you miserable bigot, you wheelchairphobe — get in line! Essentially, that's Congress' message to us. The workings of the free marketplace are judged inadequate to the occasion. The creative solutions of private people are viewed with suspicion.

In this, the Compassionate Century, one species of American remains to be empowered. This is the taxpayer, the average Joe, sometimes known as the Great Woolly Lamb, standing mute and still while others shear him for the general good.

It is on the average Joe that the cost of Congress' compassion always falls: the higher prices, the circumscribed opportunities. Yes, chalk up another moral victory for Congress — one big enough to make Richard Widmark chuckle gleefully.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Tuesday, June 12, the 163rd day of 1990. There are 202 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On June 12, 1939, the National Baseball Hall of Fame and Museum was dedicated in Cooperstown, N.Y. — 100 years to the day on which Abner Doubleday supposedly invented the sport. (Most sports historians doubt, however, that Doubleday truly invented baseball.)

On this date:

In 1665, England installed a municipal government in New York, formerly the Dutch settlement of New Amsterdam.

In 1776, Virginia's colonial legislature became the first to adopt a Bill of Rights.

NATION IN BRIEF

Americans worry about privacy

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans are becoming more concerned that businesses and the government are invading their privacy by asking too many questions and sharing the information with others, a poll released Monday said.

Seventy-one percent of those surveyed by Louis Harris & Associates believe consumers "have lost all control" over how companies use information about them and circulate it to other firms, the poll said.

The poll was commissioned by Equifax, an Atlanta-based corporation that provides clients with credit, insurance and marketing information about potential customers.

The poll said that 79 percent of the public is either very concerned or somewhat concerned about threats to their personal privacy, compared with 77 percent in a 1983 Harris survey and 64 percent in 1978.

Time may change

CENTER, N.D. (AP) — People in this town of about 900 are never quite sure what time it is.

The map tells them they are in the Mountain time zone. Banks, schools and city offices operate on Mountain time. But many people who do business with companies in Bismarck and Mandan, about 45 miles to the southeast, find it easier to set their clocks on Central time.

On Tuesday, voters in Oliver and Mercer counties will decide whether they want to end the confusion and officially switch to Central time. Center, in Oliver County, is about 20 miles west of the dividing line between the Central and Mountain zones.

"Our town is totally in chaos, because different businesses have one time and a lot of working people have another time," said James Fagerland, a foreman at BNI Coal. Since the company goes by Central time, the clocks in Fagerland's house are set for Central time.

Firefighter accused

AZTEC, N.M. (AP) — An Aztec volunteer firefighter has been charged with setting a fire that destroyed one building and severely damaged another, police said Monday.

Brian M. Scott, 22, was arrested and charged with two counts of arson and two counts of criminal damage to property of more than $1,000, Police Chief LeRoy Cruz said.

Firefighters were called at 1:55 a.m. Saturday and found the building in flames. That building was destroyed and an adjacent house was damaged heavily.

Poll: Most feel pollution a threat

NEW YORK (AP) — Four in five Americans say pollution threatens the quality of their lives, and most favor a tough counteroffensive that would outlaw disposable diapers and cancer-causing pesticides, a poll has found.

Respondents to the national Media General-Associated Press survey favored an array of tough new restrictions, including bans on foam plastic fast-food containers and excessive packaging of consumer products.

Of those who live in neighborhoods where recycling is not mandatory, nine in 10 said they would support such a rule. And nearly seven in 10 supported creation of an elected statewide post to enforce environmental law.

The notion of a state environmental sheriff will come before California voters in November in a referendum dubbed "Big Green." Other steps in that measure also won wide backing in the national MG-AP survey.

For example, the California act would ban 19 widely used pesticides that cause cancer in laboratory animals; such a move was favored by 70 percent in the survey, "even if the risk to humans is very slight."

"Big Green" calls for a fee on oil shipping to fund spill prevention and cleanup; in the poll 80 percent supported such an effort, even if it raised oil prices. A separate proposal in California would restrict woodcutting in old forests; in the poll, 61 percent backed a ban on such timbering.

Overall, the survey found a continuing high level of concern about the environment. Three in four respondents said anti-pollution laws are too weak, and about as many gave local, state and federal government negative marks for protecting the environment.

Those numbers were essentially unchanged from a poll a year ago that asked the same questions. The new survey, conducted by telephone May 11-20 among a random sample of 1,143 adults, had a 3-point margin of error.

Strong support also continued for air pollution measures that have been suggested in California, including strict emission controls on power plants and bans on household aerosol products, charcoal lighter fluid and non-radial tires, which release rubber into the air.

Optimism for the future was restrained; just one-third of respondents expected pollution to decrease during the next 10 years, while 44 percent said it would increase. The rest expected little change.

Toxic waste disposal remained the greatest priority, with 65 percent saying it required "urgent government action no matter what the cost." The related matter of drinking water pollution got the next highest priority.

The poll found strong support for trash-reduction measures that proponents say could ease pressure on clogged landfills. Among those results:

—Eighty-eight percent favored "restrictions on product packaging to reduce trash."

—Eighty-four percent favored a ban on foam plastic containers such as the ones used in fast-food restaurants.

—Seventy-one percent supported a ban on disposable diapers.

The poll also found some participation in the ethical shopping movement. While a strong majority said they make purchases "mainly on the basis of price and quality," 19 percent said they consider the manufacturer's record on the environment.

Ethical shopping was particularly supported by those with post-graduate educations — 30 percent — and those who called themselves liberals, with 27 percent participating. Among conservatives, 15 percent participated.

There was little such division on other issues. Concern about the environment, criticism of government measures and support for strong new steps crossed boundaries of ideology, age, income, sex and political party.

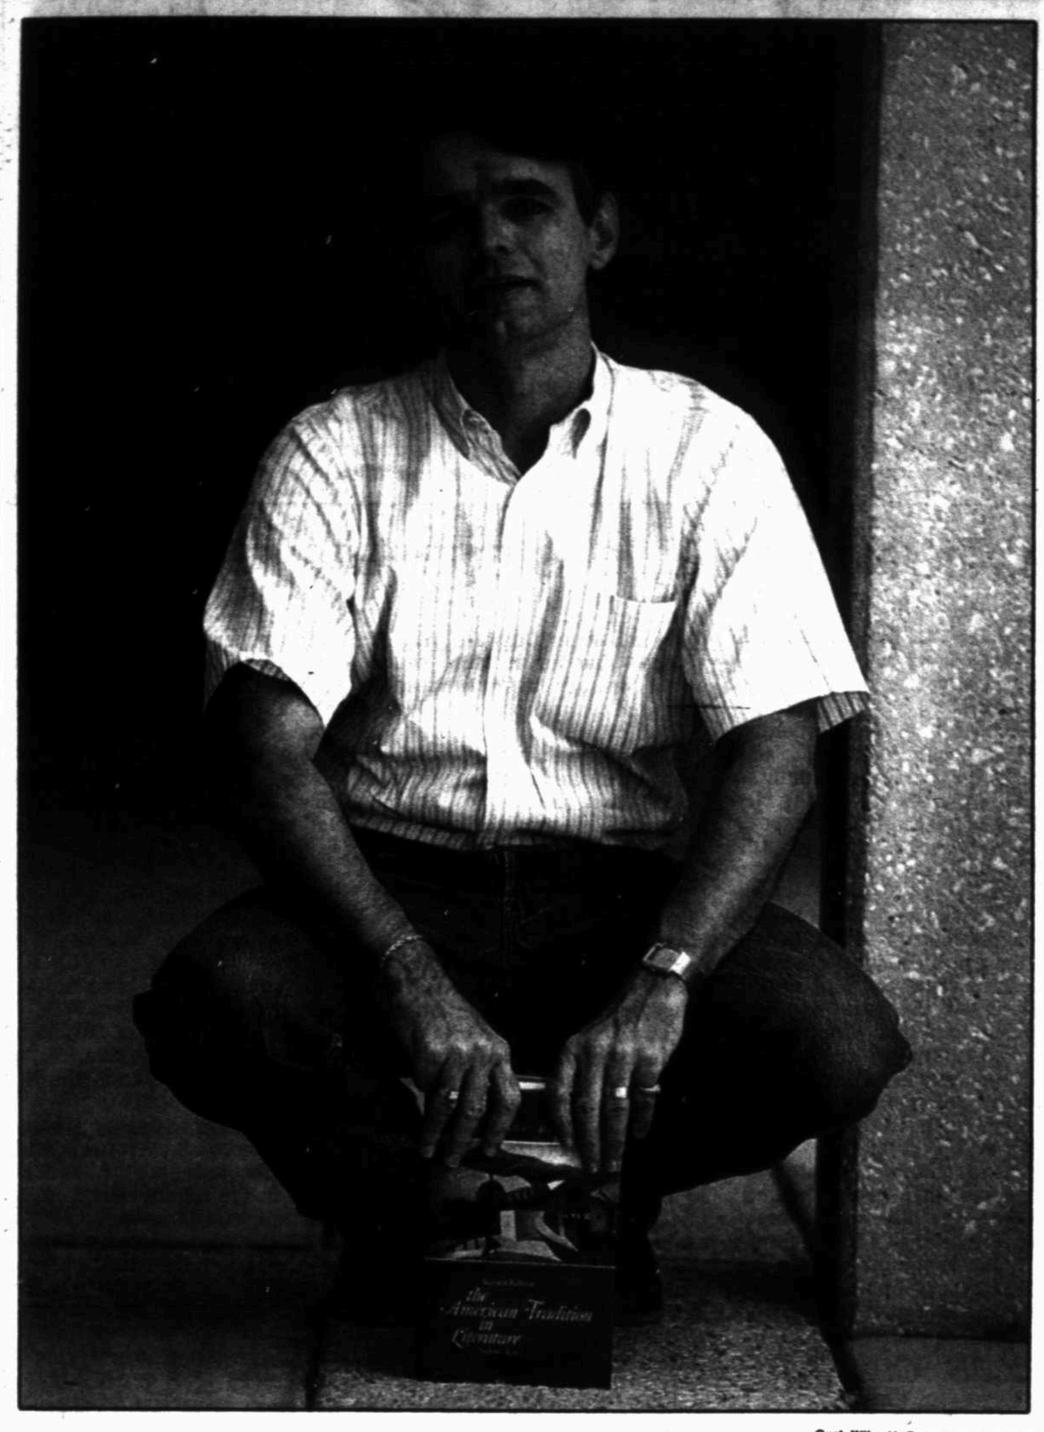
INTRODUCING ...



Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

Larry Griffin, Midland College English professor, has published three books of poetry and one of short stories. Since 1981, Griffin's poems have appeared in hundreds of literary magazines.

It might be hard to understand why anyone would decide to be a poet in late 20th century America — especially in West Texas.

Yet the difficulty of the poet's work is what drew Midlander Larry Griffin to it. The Midland College English instructor first became "serious" about poetry while studying for his master's degree at the University of Oklahoma, in Norman, Okla.

"I found poetry a lot more interesting to read than novels or plays," said Griffin, 38. "I liked poetry because it was more difficult than novels or plays or short fiction."

The native Oklahoman was attracted to poetry because it had a "higher intensity of expression, greater ambiguity" than most works of fiction.

"You can read a good poem 10 times and get it 10 different ways," he continued. "That doesn't mean that any one of those is right or wrong, it's just 10 different possibilities."

Griffin recognizes that what fascinates him about poetry — its multiple layers of meaning — is the same thing that keeps many people from reading it.

"As we have more and more leisure time, we expect to be more and more entertained" with less and less mental effort, said Griffin, who moved to the Tall City in 1981 to work at the college.

In graduate school he enjoyed book-length epic poems such as Homer's "Iliad" and "Odyssey," John Milton's "Paradise Lost" and William Carlos Williams' "Paterson." He liked them because they were "sustained lengths of work. To be able to have a vision of some sort to sustain a poem for that length of time-is an incredible thing."

According to Griffin, longer poems don't require as much intense concentration as shorter ones.

"If the poem is working, then it has those images that appeal to the five senses. ... The important part of the poem is highly imagistic. If it's not, you won't remember it. So the part of it that's not important, you won't remember," he said, laughing.

While Griffin was in graduate school at OU, poet Robert Bly came to Norman and Griffin was his chauffeur.

Bly, who recently was featured in a PBS series on modern American poets, "was kind of flamboyant.

"You don't have to hold up a sign for Robert Bly when he gets off the airplane," Griffin said. Instead, "there's this old Norwegian guy in a serape, he's got a book of poems open, he's coming down the ramp and reading to everybody.

"I asked him, 'How does somebody know if he's a poet, anyway?' He said, 'Well, people know they are poets because poets are namers and when they name themselves poets they are poets.'

"He asked me if I thought I was a poet. And I said, 'Well, yes, I guess I'm a poet.' "

Baptists to hear from self-nominating pastor

DALLAS (AP) — The Rev. Dan Bates, who heads a 135-member congregation in the South Central Texas community of Millican, said he plans to nominate himself for president of the Southern Baptist Convention to make a point.

Bates said smaller churches like his are being denied a voice in the almost 15-million member denomination.

"The smaller churches financially can't get (members) to the convention," said the 45-year-old minister. Bates said his church was allotted 10 slots for this year's convention in New Orleans, but can only afford to send him.

Convention honors woman/4B

Bates said he will run for president on the one-issue platform, the Dallas Times Herald reported.

He wants the convention to approve small-church participation through the use of regional meetings.

"Some churches might be able to send people 200 miles, but not 2,000," he said. "If we want smaller churches to participate — and we should want them to participate — we need to help them be part of the system."

'The smaller churches financially can't get to the convention.'

County officials set to collect old debts

■ The county constable will send deputies out beginning June 18 to locate the court's delinquent accounts.

By Erin Blair
Staff Writer

If you owe Midland County money for a misdemeanor fine, you'd better pay up now.

That's County Attorney Mark Dettman's message to the hundreds of people who have failed to pay Justice of the Peace- and county court-assessed fines for misdemeanors ranging from bad checks to drug possession.

Dettman estimates that the county is due almost $300,000 in delinquent fines. He said County Judge William Ahders has issued 890 warrants for the arrest of those whose court-established deadlines for payment have passed since 1988 or 1989.

"They've just been mounting up so we decided to make a concentrated effort to round these people up," Dettman said.

County Constable Ron Rice and his deputies will begin arresting delinquent fine-payers June 18. He said less than 890 individuals are involved in the sweep, since many have several outstanding warrants.

"The money assessed by the court is all that's standing in the way of them having clear accounts," Rice said.

He said hard times and unemployment were common excuses for failing to pay.

"Most of them realize they owe money but they figure the county can wait," Rice said.

But the county's tired of waiting and its coffers are rather dry, so the constable's office is getting tough. Besides the typical $200 to $1,000 fine owed, those arrested will also have to pay a $35 arrest fee.

"Plus there'll be the inconvenience of going to jail," Rice said.

"It's not like they didn't have the opportunity to take care of this during the time span the court gave them, then they get letters telling them they're delinquent, so we don't have to take them from their jobs or from their homes," he said.

The county does not accept partial payment of fines, but it will allow people to "lay out their fines" in jail. Each day served is worth $50, Rice said.

Dettman said the delinquent fine payers had a week to get their accounts in order. "This is their chance to pay up voluntarily. Next week we'll start herding them in jail and they can pay out or lay out," he said.

County tables census plea

By Erin Blair
Staff Writer

Despite a disappointing 52 percent county-wide response rate to the 1990 census, the Midland County Commissioners tabled a request by the Midland Complete Count Committee for matching funds at their Monday meeting.

The commissioners also passed three resolutions and awarded bids for land record indexing and county property and liability insurance in the session.

Rick Menchaca, Midland's city economic development coordinator, and Elvia Hernandez, a member of the Midland Complete Count Committee and executive director of the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, told the commissioners that the census was in its fourth phase, "the difficult part," Ms. Hernandez termed it, when census takers try to count residents who did not receive census forms.

They said the city had a 73 percent return rate on the forms, but the county had only a 52 percent showing, ten points under the national average.

"The problem is in the south part of the county," Menchaca said. "We'd like to have matching funds for promoting the census in the

Bunton rules Red Slipper club in Ector County may reopen

■ The judge's ruling apparently applies to all adult clubs and bookstores in the county that must be licensed to operate.

By David Morris
Staff Writer

The owner of a nude dance club was back in business Monday after U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton granted a temporary injunction allowing him to reopen in spite of an Ector County ordinance.

John Kruck's club, the Red Slipper, was raided by sheriff's deputies June 1 and closed down for operating without a license. Kruck said his license application was pending with the county at the time of the raid.

Kruck filed the injunction request in federal court June 7, records show. The injunction apparently applies to all businesses affected by the ordinance, Ector County sheriff's department spokesman Capt. Gene Kloss said.

The ordinance, approved by Ector County commissioners in February, requires licenses for sexually oriented businesses — including adult bookstores and theaters and massage parlors.

Business owners were given 90 days to obtain licenses after the ordinance was approved.

Kruck told Judge Bunton that he didn't learn of the ordinance until May 31, the day before enforcement was to begin. He said he applied for a license on June 1, the day his club was raided and he and some employees were arrested for violating the ordinance.

License applications take up to 30 days to process and Kruck said he could lose $6,800 in revenue if forced to remain closed until his license is approved.

"I meet the qualifications of the ordinance," Kruck said. "It's just that I couldn't afford to wait 30 days for them to approve (the license.)"

Assistant County Attorney Janet Drake said the ordinance was publicized in newspapers and on television and that Kruck should have filed his license application earlier. She said she didn't know of any attempt by the county to inform business owners of the ordinance either in person or by mail.

Violation of the ordinance is a misdemeanor punishable by fines ranging from $200 to $1,000.

Kruck said he would reopen the club, at 7121 Andrews Highway, Monday night.

"I'm elated, I'm happy," Kruck said said in response to Bunton's decision. "Eleven days being shut down — you can't believe how happy I am."

Kruck, who said he had been a manager at the Red Slipper since it opened last December, said he assumed ownership of the "bring your own bottle" club the day be-

City's emergency preparedness crews prepare for any type catastrophe today

By Brian Pearson
Staff Writer

Local emergency officials saved the day last year when terrorists held several Midland police officers and city administrators hostage.

What harrowing crisis Midland's Local Emergency Planning Committee will tackle this year will not erupt until 9 a.m. Wednesday.

Although disasters usually are unscheduled, some element of surprise will still exist during the annual LEPC practice catastrophe, Bill Shipman, emergency management coordinator for the city and county, said Monday.

Committee members will not know the scenario until the drill begins, Shipman said.

The LEPC, whose members include officials from area governmental agencies and utility companies, will gather in a room in the City Hall basement and scramble on an imaginary community cataclysm.

The group will be brushing up on disaster-handling skills so it will be prepared for a real airliner crash, toxic waste spill, killer tornado or flood among other potential disasters, Shipman said.

'We're doing this to put us in a state of preparedness so everyone will know when, where and what to do.'
— Bill Clanton, City Secretary, LEPC spokesman

"It tests who does what, when they do it and how they do it," he said. "The things they hope to exercise is mitigation, preparedness, response and recovery. The importance of it is to test it out and see whether we're doing anything wrong."

The yearly exercise also is required by the state and federal governments. Federal Emergency Management Agency officials monitor and evaluate the LEPC's response.

FEMA officials are scheduled to hold an hour-long critique session after this year's drill ends about 11 a.m.

The LEPC has been staging the drills since the mid-1970s. The crisis scenario varies from year to year.

During last year's imaginary practice, police officers stopped a car on Interstate 20. The occupants, who turned out to be terrorists, captured the officers and demanded flight transportation from Midland International Airport.

Through the LEPC's actions, Midland police and SWAT officers were able to arrest the terrorists and end the hostage situation.

"I think they've handled the last few drills real well," Shipman said.

The LEPC hasn't had to respond to a real crisis in recent years, although it met years ago to react to a flood, he said.

City Secretary Bill Clanton, official LEPC spokesman for the past three years, said preparedness is the key to minimizing a crisis.

Bucy died Saturday at his home.

He was born Nov. 25, 1898 in Rising Star where he was raised. He entered the military at the end of World War I and served for a brief time.

He returned to Rising Star and began a career in the oilfields in 1919 near Ranger. He moved to Wink in 1929. He then moved to East Texas before returning to Wink in 1934. He joined Lion Oil Co., as their drilling superintendent.

While in Wink he was active in the local Lion's Club and served on the Wink school board for a number of years. He engineered the concept of canals and bridges to allow excess wellwater to flow to a large evaporation pit. That pit became known as the Monument Draw and is still being used today.

In 1949 he was transferred to Snyder, and while there he worked on one of the first discovery wells in Scurry County.

Moving to Denver, Colo., in 1952, he became the regional superintendent. While in Denver the company was acquired by Monsanto Oil Co. He retired from Monsanto in 1962 and moved to Midland and became associated with Cactus Drilling Co. He retired several years later due to an oilfield accident.

Bucy married Willie Ann Davidson in Fort Worth on Oct. 15, 1921.

He was a member of Memorial Christian Church.

Survivors include his wife; one son, Billy Bucy of Austin; two daughters, Donella Owen of Farmington, N.M., and Ann Shinn of Odessa; two sisters, Edelweiss Grewell of Andrews and Anita Groves of Breckenridge; 10 grandchildren; nine great-grandchildren and several nieces and nephews.

The family requests memorials be directed to Hospice of Midland, P.O. Box 2621, Midland, Texas, 79702.

CLUB: Ruling affects others

fore the raid. Court records indicate he is leasing club facilities from an organization called Falcon Trust.

The injunction will allow Kruck to operate the Red Slipper without a license for 30 days. If Kruck receives his operating license within that time the issue will become "moot," Bunton said, because Kruck would be able to continue operating without a court order.

Kruck's attorney, Tom Morgan of Midland, said he was not sure whether he would attempt to have the ordinance permanently struck down. He had argued that the ordinance violated First Amendment free speech protection.

Morgan said the injunction would apply to all businesses affected by the ordinance.

Capt. Kloss said four county bookstores and two "cabarets" — including the Red Slipper — had been shut down for operating without licenses since the ordinance went into effect.

Kloss said all six businesses had license applications on file. He said he had been told by the Ector County Attorney's office to "interfere with none of these businesses until this thing is straightened out."

County Attorney Tracey Bright said she did not believe the injunction would protect Kruck from prosecution in his earlier arrest for operating his club without a license.

Judge Bunton was in court Monday afternoon and unavailable for comment.

Injured Odessa girl flown to Lubbock hospital

Staff Report

ODESSA — A 5-year-old girl was transported by helicopter Monday to a Lubbock hospital after she was struck by a car in front of her home, Medical Center Hospital officials said.

Heather Connally apparently walked out from behind an ice cream truck and into the path of an oncoming car, officials said.

The girl was in critical condition at MCH when she arrived there about 6 p.m., officials said.

south county, which is a rural area where you're not able to go door-to-door."

Menchaca and Ms. Hernandez asked the county for $2,500 to supplement the $5,000 the committee has left from the $20,000 the city donated to the project. The money would go toward advertising, utility bill mail-outs and possibly a community get-together where census forms would be available.

Commissioner Winfree Brown told the pair a county donation to the census count could be illegal.

"State law precludes us from contributing to this. We're barred from contributing to churches or civic organizations. When it comes to county government, we have to conform with the state law," Brown said.

He and the commissioners agreed that they needed a decision from the attorney general's office before they could commit any funds to the project.

"That census number will be with us for the rest of the decade," Menchaca said.

Commissioner Durward Wright aggreed that an accurate count was necessary but was candid about the county's use of the legality issue.

"On the one hand we need to count everyone in the county, but on the other hand our county auditor says we have hardly any money in the till," Wright said.

The commissioners heard from Mike Strotheide of the Midland Chamber of Commerce, who discussed the Midland Industrial Development Corporation's plan to conduct an airline service market study for Midland International Airport.

The commissioners approved the $22,000 study, funded by MID, with little comment.

They also passed a resolution favoring tax abatement for enterprise zones, a second issue presented by Strotheide.

A third resolution directed to the federal government expressed the county's interest in a local government postage rate to take effect when postage rates rise from 25 to 30 cents.

The resolution, which originated with an organization of Texas counties, said the postal increase was a form of double taxation upon local taxpayers because they would have to pay the additional postage for required government services, including jury summons, voters' registration, tax notices and payments.

Wright led the motion for the resolution, explaining, "It's probably an exercise in futility but you never know until you ask," he said.

In other county business, the commissioners:

- Accepted a bid of $63,739 by Johnny Johnson Insurance for county property and liability insurance.
- Accepted a bid by Government Records Service to provide computer indexing of land records in the county clerk's office.
- Made a final payment of $69,278.90 to the contractor for construction of the Law Enforcement Building, which will open in mid-July.

Texas' civil witnesses still must be 'paid' a dollar

DALLAS (AP) — A dollar won't buy what it used to — and it sure doesn't have the power it had in 1846. But that's the amount Texas lawyers still have to pay witnesses who appear in civil trials.

The state's first Legislature enacted the law requiring lawyers to pay subpoenaed witnesses in 1846, when a buck bought $14.29 worth of goods in today's money.

The law — so old that reference librarians in Austin could not find the original bill in their records, according to Monday's Dallas Times Herald — applies only to civil trials in state courts.

Federal witnesses get at least $30 attached to their subpoenas, plus mileage, meals and any other costs associated with their participation in civil trials.

But if you're summoned to court tomorrow to testify in a lawsuit in state court, you'll still find a $1 bill attached to your subpoena.

The girls will spend 11 days at Texas Lutheran College in Seguin as citizens of the mythical 51st state "Girls State." The citizens organize their own city, county and state governments; elect officials according to regular procedures; debate new laws in their legislature and administer justice through law enforcement agencies and courts.

Up to 580 Texas high school juniors will be accepted for the program whose purpose is "to educate young women in the duties, privileges, rights and responsibilities of American citizenship," the organization says.

Midland's alternate delegate is Lee High Student Lana McGee, daughter of Jacqueline Yunginger.

The girls' $200 fee, roundtrip airfare and $25 spending money each was provided by the local auxiliary, according to program coordinator Shirley Ott.

DRILL: To take place at City Hall

(From 1B)

"To me, you can compare it to insurance," Clanton said. "Like insurance on your car or home, you hope you never need it. We're doing this to put us in a state of preparedness so everyone will know when, where and what to do."

Shipman said that although past drills have included actually dispatching fire, police and ambulance personnel to the site of an imaginary disaster, this year's practice will take place solely in the City Hall basement.

Midland Memorial Hospital, Midland Independent School District, Midland County, TU Electric, Southwestern Bell and Energas will be included in entities represented at the drill, he said.

POET: Writing is influenced by western environment

(From 1B)

Since that conversation, Griffin — who received his Ph.D. in English from OU last year — has published three books of poetry, as well as one book of short stories. More than 100 of his poems have appeared in literary magazines, most since his move to Midland in 1981.

Living in West Texas has affected his poetry.

"One of the significant things that I have noticed is the disappearance of trees in my poems," Griffin said. "Other things which go along with trees have disappeared, too: flowers, birds.

"That's not to say that there aren't flowers here, there aren't birds here, there aren't trees here," he stressed. But since "they aren't the overwhelming presence on the landscape" neither are they the overwhelming presence "in the mindset."

Griffin cited "a greater sense of openness" because of the abundant uninterrupted space here.

"I'm not sure what that does," he continued. "It should open up some things."

One effect of such openness may be the title of Griffin's latest book, "Airspace."

Although Griffin has been successfully published, he does not support himself by writing poetry.

"In a capitalist culture, you're defined by the activities that you do to accrue capital," or make money, he said. "No American in the 20th century has accrued enough capital to support himself through his endeavors as a poet."

Only Robert Frost and Erica Jong have had books of poetry that were Book of the Month Club selections, Griffin said.

American poets write poetry but earn their living in other ways, many as college English professors.

However, this doesn't mean there's no audience for poetry.

"More poems are being published than ever before in the history of the world," Griffin claimed. "A lot of people are reading and writing poetry," even in Midland.

Just look at the books of "contemporary poetry at the county library in Midland," he said. "Somebody in Midland must be reading poetry. The books are there, so somebody must be reading them."

Griffin thinks poets and poetry will be around a long time.

The futurists say this. They say, given the acceleration of change in the world, you cannot prepare yourself for the future by studying specific information that is suitable for the present.

As for his own future, Griffin would like to write a novel, specifically a murder mystery.

Odds favor Gulf Coast oil spills

STATE

DALLAS (AP) — Almost half of the tanker oil spills occurring in U.S. waters in recent years have taken place in the Gulf of Mexico, according to a publication that tracks the oil industry.

Richard Golob, publisher of the Cambridge-Mass.-based Oil Pollution Bulletin, said that of the 78 tanker spills in U.S. waters during 1978-89 involving at least 10,000 gallons of oil, 34 occurred in the Gulf.

A study released earlier this year by the publication showed the Atlantic coast had 30 incidents, followed by 14 along the Pacific Coast, he said.

Two states, Texas and Louisiana, accounted for 30 of the 78 spills.

Golob said if some of the fire-ravaged supertanker Mega Borg's 38 million gallons of light crude spills into the waters where it is anchored, 57 miles southeast of Galveston, the chances of it being recovered are slim.

"Based on historical incidents whenever there has been a major open ocean oil spill, containment efforts at sea have proved largely ineffective," he said.

On the plus side, he added, "Often the resulting environmental damage is minimal simply because the fire tends to burn off the oil rather than allow it to escape onto the ocean surface."

The Gulf's worst oil spill occurred in 1979 when the Burmah Agate collided with a freighter five miles off Galveston, releasing almost 11 million gallons of crude oil, according to the Oil Pollution Bulletin, which has kept records since 1976.

AP Laserphoto

Fire boats battle the Mega Borg oil tanker fire Monday. According to a new industry study, the Gulf Coast was home to nearly half of all major oil spills from 1978-1989.

The Burmah Agate spill came on the heels of the world's largest oil spill, when the marine well Ixtoc 1, drilled in the Bay of Campeche near Veracruz, Mexico, spewed 130 million gallons of light crude into the Gulf from June of 1979 to March 1980.

Texas General Land Office spokesman Ron Calhoun said over 3 million gallons of the Mexican oil reached Texas coastal areas from Brownsville to San Jose Island. Ixtoc 1 was owned by Gov. Bill Clements' SEDCO drilling company.

Oil appeared at Padre Island in mid-August, but most hit open beaches. Strenuous efforts kept most of the oil out of environmentally sensitive Laguna Madre and marshes.

However, the spill killed birds and marine life and hurt the tourism economy of South Texas, officials said.

"The impact on the birds along South Padre was bad," Houston Audubon Society president Gary Clark said Monday. "It's hard to calculate."

In contrast, much of the 10.7 million gallons spilled from the Burmah Agate burned off before reaching shores.

But the ship, the length of two football fields, continued to burn for two months after the initial blast, which killed 33 people, Golob said.

Also damaging to the Texas coastal areas was a 1984 accident off the Louisiana coast when the tanker Alvenus ran aground and spilled 2.8 million gallons of oil, Calhoun said Monday.

The heavy crude coated Galveston's sea walls and also lightly hit several coastal areas, he said.

"They apparently did a pretty good job of cleaning it up but it still caused a mess," Calhoun said.

The Mega Borg incident and the grounding of a cruise ship off Cape Cod Sunday likely would put renewed pressure on Congress to approve oil spill containment and liability legislation languishing in committee, Golob said.

When the Exxon Valdez ran aground in Prince William Sound, Alaska, last year, spilling almost 11 million gallons of crude oil, Golob said the pressure increased for Congress to approve the legislation.

Environmentalists laud Houston pollution plan

Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — The city of Houston, at the heart of the biggest petrochemical complex in the nation, is about to begin a pioneering program to track toxic chemicals in the air.

City health officials expect approval for up to $500,000 worth of sophisticated machinery allowing them, for the first time, to answer a broad range of questions about individual toxic chemicals and pollution sources.

"We'll be able to know – specifically, scientifically and tangibly – who to put the finger on," said Enrique Quevedo, acting environmental control chief in the city health department.

The federally funded proposal has already earned strong praise from environmentalists.

The Sierra Club, a frequent critic of Mayor Kathy Whitmire's administration on environmental matters, issued a statement praising Whitmire, Quevedo and Dr. John Arradondo, the city health director.

"Toxic air pollution is a serious concern for the people of Houston, and we are pleased that the city is taking this innovative step in public health protection," said Mary Van Kerrebrook, an attorney who chairs the Sierra Club's Houston chapter.

George Smith, a Houston resident and air quality chairman of the state Sierra Club, said the monitoring program is "overdue" in an area where the petrochemical complex emits huge volumes of toxic chemicals, but industries have performed most of the measurements of such pollutants in a "private and confidential" program.

Gene McMullen, a meteorologist who supervises air quality analysis for the city, said if the monitoring program is implemented as intended, it will be the most "exciting" development in air quality control in his 20 years with the health department.

Federal funds totaling $400,000 to $500,000 would be used to purchase the necessary analytical devices and equipment for air sampling, McMullen said. A $240,000 requisition has already been sent to City Hall for two key pieces: a mass spectrometer, used to measure the abundance of chemical compounds, and a gas chromatograph, which tells the separate constituents of a mixture.

Air samples will initially be taken at the city's environmental control offices in southeast Houston, where the analytical equipment will be maintained, Quevedo said.

If the initial sampling and analysis go as well as hoped this year, officials plan to start sampling at other sites around the city in 1991, McMullen said.

Texas unprepared for big spill

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas isn't prepared to handle millions of gallons of oil that could be spilled in the Gulf of Mexico by a supertanker blazing offshore, the state land commissioner says.

"This is our worst nightmare," said Commissioner Garry Mauro, who serves on the Governor's Oil Spill Advisory Committee. "We're not ready to deal with a catastrophic oil spill off the coast."

As of midday Monday, the Coast Guard estimated the tanker Mega Borg had spilled up to 100,000 gallons of her 38 million-gallon cargo of light crude oil.

A new oil release kept firefighters from smothering the blaze with foam Monday, and the ship's stern began to slide beneath the waves. The Norwegian ship has been on fire since an explosion on board while it transferred cargo Saturday 57 miles southeast of Galveston.

Mauro criticized the state for failing to have a written plan for dealing with such disasters.

"There is no plan to deal with 38 million gallons of oil on the water," Mauro said. "Anything that happens to deal with this crisis is going to be a make-do emergency plan. And the chances of a major catastrophe occurring are much higher as a result of no plan."

Gov. Bill Clements said Monday that putting more equipment along the Texas coast has been debated.

Baptists honor pioneering lady

By Elizabeth Campbell

FORT WORTH (AP) — Taking early morning walks through the seminary campus and bringing happiness and inspiration to people in need are ways Essie May Maston enriches the lives of those around her.

Mrs. Maston, 91, is one of six alumni of Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary who will be honored this week during the Southern Baptist Convention in New Orleans.

While she is flattered to receive recognition, Essie Mae Maston prefers to live her life away from the limelight, quietly helping others.

"I am truly humbled by all this," she says. "The other five are preachers of great prominence and I'm merely a homemaker mixed in with them. I have done nothing great to be honored for. These preachers have been pastors for 20 years or more and hold such high positions in the Baptist world," she said.

While Mrs. Maston is not a well-known pastor, her generosity of spirit and her desire to help people in need are firm in the memories of friends and family.

"Essie Mae Maston does not want notoriety, but she definitely deserves it," says the Rev. Frank Page, senior pastor at Gambrell Street Baptist Church in south Fort Worth where Mrs. Maston has been a member for more than 70 years.

Mrs. Maston misses few worship services. She often walks to church, which is less than two blocks from her home.

She teaches a Sunday school class for women in their 70s and 80s. While the class has dwindled in size, everyone shares in the Bible study and camaraderie. When women in the class are ill or if they have difficulty in getting to church, Mrs. Maston calls them regularly and brings them flowers and cassette tapes of sermons and other church programs, Page said.

"I think Mrs. Maston is a servant in the best sense of the word. She is a very unassuming woman who's lived her life helping others and serving people in the neighborhood and in this church," he said.

Mrs. Maston is a pioneer in many ways in that she was one of a handful of women who studied at the seminary during the early 1920s, and she cared for a son with cerebral palsy when many urged her to place him in an institution.

She and her husband, T.B. Maston, who died in 1988, met and married in Tennessee. They moved to Fort Worth while Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary was in its infancy.

Her husband was a well-known professor of Christian ethics who was ahead of his time in encouraging racial integration among Southern Baptists. He taught at the seminary for more than 40 years.

She recalled that there were about 300 students when she was studying compared with 4,500 today.

"When I first got here, (to Fort Worth) I though it was the flattest, most forsaken place I'd ever seen," she recalled, laughing. "The campus was just a prairie — only two buildings then."

After she graduated from the seminary, Mrs. Maston taught elementary education there for two years until her oldest son, Tom Mac, was born in 1925.

Although her son was severely handicapped, he added joy and friendship to the family, Mrs. Maston said.

Tom Mac had cerebral palsy. He spent his life in a wheelchair and could not speak.

When the Mastons learned of their son's disability, there was little help available to the family. No one knew anything about cerebral palsy in the 1920s and 1930s, she said.

"The only answer we got was 'take your son home and take care of his physical needs.' We tried to make his life as normal as we could."

She described how many people tried to give her advice on caring for her son.

"They thought I was wasting my talents by staying home and taking care of my family. They thought I could use my speaking and teaching talents more effectively if I let others take care of my son."

She cared for her son for 62 years until his death in 1987.

Eugene Maston, a younger son who is a professor of religion and interdisciplinary studies at the College of New Rochelle in New York City, admires his mother's strength.

"She has both physical strength and strength of character. At 91, she still gets out in the garden and digs. In the winter at the crack of dawn, she has already walked a mile. I think she has the grit to do what has to be done," Maston said.

He described how his mother helped the family get through the Depression by keeping cows and chickens, making the family clothes and by growing vegetables.

"I am really proud that Mother continues to grow. She not only has friends from her generation, but she keeps up with young adults, people in their 20s. She writes to them, and they come to see her."

A friend of the Maston family, Earleen Vestal of Dunwoody, Ga., who grew up in an apartment at the Maston home while her mother attended the seminary, says it is difficult to adequately describe Essie Mae Maston.

"She is a brilliant, amazing woman," Ms. Vestal said.

While spending time in the Maston home, Ms. Vestal remembers Mrs. Maston sewing clothes for needy families and giving them food. "I don't know how she kept up with everything. She always found out about families in the community who were in need. She was always very quiet about what she did."

STATE IN BRIEF

Valley driver sues company

EDINBURG (AP) — The truck driver in the state's worst school bus accident is suing his employer — saying he was "hung out to dry" after the accident that killed 21 children last fall.

Ruben Perez, 25, drove the Valley Coca-Cola Bottling Co. truck that collided with a school bus at an intersection last Sept. 21. The impact forced the bus into a water-filled pit near Alton in South Texas. Sixty junior and senior high school students were hurt.

Perez had said that the brakes on his truck failed.

His lawsuit, filed Friday in 93rd District Court in Edinburg alleges Valley Coca-Cola and other Coca-Cola companies, "knowingly and intentionally had no brake maintenance program," and that a collision caused by brake failure was, "substantially certain."

The lawsuit also accuses the companies, their lawyers and an insurance company of withholding information that could have prevented Perez's indictment on 21 involuntary manslaughter charges.

Hutchinson endorsed

SAN SABA (AP) — San Saba County Judge Tom Bowden, who lost in a Democratic runoff for state treasurer, on Monday endorsed Republican candidate Kay Bailey Hutchison in the November general election.

Ms. Hutchison said in Houston that Bowden's endorsement is historic in that it is the first time a Democratic primary runoff candidate has supported the GOP candidate in the general election.

Ms. Hutchison later said in Dallas on Monday that she was starting her summer campaign, with trips by van to Greenville, Texarkana, Wichita Falls, Abilene and the Hill Country, ending in Brownwood.

Bowden said as a lifelong Democrat his decision to support Ms. Hutchison, of Dallas, over Democratic nominee Nikki Van Hightower of Houston "was not an easy one."

But he said he would join others in forming an organization of Democrats and independents for Ms. Hutchison, whose record as a state legislator, federal government executive, businesswoman and lawyer is "well known and solid."

Ms. Van Hightower said she did not place much importance on the endorsement because Bowden only received 34 percent of the vote in the runoff.

Unveiling scheduled

AUSTIN (AP) — The unveiling of a bronze sculpture of the late Texas and U.S. House Speaker Sam Rayburn is planned Tuesday in the House Chamber at the Capitol.

The sculpture by Blaine Gibson of Arizona is being presented to the state by Perry Bass and Dee Kelly of Fort Worth.

Rayburn served three 2-year terms in the Texas House of Representatives, starting in 1906.

He was then elected to Congress, where he served for 48 years.

Zubiate's Furniture Restoration now open at Antiques Etc.

Zubiate's Furniture Restoration has now opened a space at Antiques Etc., 15 Plaza Center. Come in and see Richard Zubiate's varied selection of period furniture pieces as well as custom made furniture.

The selection of antique pieces include a tilt top round table, small work table and a Victorian bookcase from the 1800s and an early 1900s desk. The stock is constantly changing, so drop by often.

Custom made furniture by Zubiate's Furniture Restoration adds a showpiece centerpiece to any room in your home or office. Hand crafted furniture has the advantage that you can adapt it to your decorating ideas. When you buy a factory production piece, on the other hand, is is difficult, if not impossible, to change its appearance.

One of the best things about custom made furniture is that it is made to your own specifications, in whatever fine, durable hardwood you choose. Solid woods such as walnut, mesquite, maple and mahogany hardwoods can be bookmatched for a beautiful, classic look you just can't get with most factory pieces.

Custom built solid wood furniture and restored antiques by Zubiate's Furniture Restoration, will be a showpiece for your home or office. Shown are some examples of the fine work of Richard Zubiate and his staff. This furniture is on display now at Antiques Etc., located at 15 Plaza Center.

One of the lovely looks of custom built furniture is the natural burls and figures of hard woods.

Every piece of wood is cut and fit individually. Drawers have to be fit just right. Each piece is chosen for the special purpose it is intended for.

Zubiate's uses the craft of frame and panel construction, which allows for wood movement during changes in humidity.

Custom veneers for doors and tops are cut to 3/16 of an inch, instead of 1/28 or 1/32, as in factory made pieces.

Choose a custom crafted piece from Zubiate's for a unique display case, a high boy entertainment center or a reproduction of an antique. Zubiate's can construct the popular Shaker period furniture. Whatever your special needs, the professionals at Zubiate's can come with a beautiful, lasting work of art.

Besides building and designing furniture, Zubiate's also works with faux marble and custom finishes.

Richard Zubiate is a meticulous worker who, in addition to building new furniture, can restore your damaged furniture to its original beauty.

"In restoration work what you should try to do is leave the work as much like the original as possible," Zubiate explained.

Hidden treasures found in that old attic need not stay hidden any longer. Bring that piece of history into Zubiate's and receive in return a piece of furniture any homeowner would be proud of.

Call Zubiate's Furniture Restoration today and let Richard consult with you on a new work of art or a restoration piece. Call 682-5773 for more details or an estimate.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Big career changes lie just ahead. Be willing to update your skills. Relatives will provide both happy and troublesome moments in August. Opening new lines of communication will help you get a promotion in October. In romance, be careful not to mistake sympathy for love. Control your temper when dealing with those who oppose you. A new alliance or partnership will give you cause for celebration by May 1991.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: President George Bush, jazz musician Chick Corea, singer Vic Damone, actor Jim Nabors.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A conflict could arise between your work and social obligations. Any financial problems require careful handling. Consult experts. Develop new strategies for staying within your budget. Entertain simply.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): "A penny saved is a penny earned" should be your credo today. Complete old projects before starting new ones. Resist an urge to go on a buying binge. Recycle favorite wardrobe items.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Tact and patience will help you deal with moody higher-ups. Do not be intimidated by someone who is aggressive. Their bark is worse than their bite. Be helpful to your siblings and parents.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Make a special effort to be a better listener. A friend will let fall several clues to an old mystery. Protect loved one's secret as if it were your own. Try new things.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Slow down and relax! Familiar faces are the best company. Putter around your home or garden. A social engagement is postponed at the last minute. Get in touch with faraway loved ones.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Catch up on household chores. Check for fire hazards — and put fresh batteries in smoke alarms. A conversation with an old friend could provide you with a new sense of direction. Forge ahead.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Put your best foot forward. Someone who has not commanded much attention in the past is now a source of interest. Help the person who shoulders most of the household chores.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Set aside some quiet time for studying or reading. A friendship may develop when you least expect it. Pursue a romantic interest to a happy conclusion. Some couples decide to set the date.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Take the initiative when it comes to planning social activities. Be honest when talking with young people. A relative who is quick to accuse others of hypocrisy may be guilty of self-deception.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A big contract depends on how good a case you make for the people or products you represent. Be wary of promises made by a former lover; this person may have hidden motives.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Community service is rewarding now. A business deal shows new promise. Flirting could lead to trouble. Reacting too quickly to an offer could spoil things. Give it some thought. Romance blossoms.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Travel if you can for business or pleasure. Salespeople should make fine profits. Good organization is the secret to success. A friend proves to be a fabulous matchmaker. Show your appreciation.

TODAY'S CHILDREN have tremendous curiosity and enthusiasm. They are eager to go everywhere and try everything. Highly affectionate, they often claim numerous "best" friends! Urge these Geminis to curb their possessive streak. Jealousy can cause real problems in both romance and family life. Dawdlers, these youngsters may be late to dinner, school and church. They have minds of their own and refuse to listen to advice. It will take them a long time to find the right romantic partner.

The first Omar Sharif World Individual Championship, held last month at the Showboat Hotel and Casino in Atlantic City, N.J, attracted players from 13 countries. The winner was Pakistan's globe-trotting internationalist, Zia Mahmood, with U.S former world champion Fred Hamilton second and Swedish star P.O Sundelin third.

The great French expert Paul Chemla had a chance to demonstrate his technique on this hand from the event. East-West took advantage of the vulnerability to push North-South to a precarious five-heart contract, which could have been defeated had West found the inspired lead of a low club away from the ace.

However, West made the more normal opening salvo of his fourth-best diamond, and Chemla wasted no time on the play. He won the king of diamonds and then discarded one of dummy's clubs on the ace of diamonds. A trump to the king revealed the bad news that declarer needed to take two trump finesses in addition to discarding a club from hand on one of dummy's spades, and entries were at a premium.

Chemla continued with the five of trumps off the board and East carefully covered with the eight. After the nine won, declarer led the king of spades and overtook it with the table's ace! Another trump finesse allowed declarer to draw East's remaining trumps, and since the auction had made the hand an open book, declarer had no problem finding the right way to handle the spade suit. He confidently finessed for the jack and one club discard on the queen of spades was enough to land the contract.

Brando's son gets new lawyer, postponement of murder case

Robert Shapiro and Christian Brando

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Marlon Brando's son made a brief court appearance Monday and his new lawyer got a postponement in his murder case.

Christian Brando's new lawyer, Los Angeles attorney Robert L. Shapiro, is taking over from attorney William Kunstler.

Brando, 32, is charged with murdering his sister's boyfriend, Dag Drollet, 26, at the elder Brando's home May 16.

Shapiro indicated during the hearing that attempts will be made to resolve the case without a trial. A preliminary hearing was postponed until June 25.

"We try to settle every criminal case in as fair, just and equitable means possible," he told reporters.

Drollet's parents attended the hearing. The elder Brando was not present.

The actor's son, who has pleaded innocent to killing Drollet, told police a .45-caliber handgun went off accidentally during a scuffle over the weapon.

Prosecutors said there was no evidence of a struggle, and that Drollet was shot while sitting on a sofa, holding a cigarette lighter in one hand and a television remote control in the other.

Brando, who has worked as a welder and tree-trimmer, has been in custody since the shooting. Bail was denied.

"He's very sad, very depressed, very emotional and very scared," Shapiro said outside court.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A story that said Elizabeth Taylor was romantically involved with a 23-year-old man and had undergone surgery over the weekend was a hoax, the star's publicist said today.

The hoaxer used an elaborate scheme including a public relations firm's answering service to trick the news media into the phony story about Miss Taylor, who has been hospitalized for two months.

The story said Miss Taylor was expected to be released from the hospital within two weeks and would leave on the arm of her 23-year-old boyfriend Julian Lee Hobbs of Lake Orion, a suburb of Detroit.

The story also said doctors over the weekend performed an abdominal biopsy on Miss Taylor that detected no sign of infection.

The source for the Associated Press story was a woman who gave her name as Lisa Flowers and who was reached through the answering service at Miss Taylor's public relations firm Chen Sam and Associates in New York City.

The story also quoted a woman who identified herself as Chen Sam as confirming the report, saying "It's a very romantic story."

But today Ms. Sam said from her New York office that the whole report was a fabrication.

"This isn't true. It is a hoax," Ms. Sam said this morning. "I have contacted Miss Taylor's attorneys and we are going to conduct an investigation.

"It is apparently somebody using my (telephone) service. This woman is impersonating me." Ms. Sam declined to give the name of the answering service.

The hoaxer also confirmed the information for United Press International, which also gave the story wide distribution.

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Oscar-winning actress Shirley MacLaine says her recent knee operation probably added 15 years to her dancing career.

"I had a video taken of the operation. The doctor said it was the best movie I ever made," said Miss MacLaine, who is in town preparing for Tuesday's opening of a national performance tour.

The surgery to repair torn ligaments and a dislocated knee cap came after she was hurt while rehearsing a dance number earlier this spring.

Miss MacLaine, 56, says she lifted weights and exercised the knee underwater to rebuild her strength.

NEW YORK (AP) — Reports that the marriage of Andrew Cuomo and Kerry Kennedy was engineered to merge two political dynasties are "really a lot of baloney," says the father of the groom, Gov. Mario Cuomo.

Comparing the Kennedys and Cuomos politically is like "comparing an elephant and a squirrel," Cumo said in a TV interview Monday.

"They are a profound institution politically," Cuomo said of the Kennedy clan. "They've had a long line of successes and power and influence. We have one guy, who lost three times in the same year to Ed Koch, was a lousy candidate in '74, got lucky in '82 and now I'm the governor."

The real story, the governor said, was that "these are two, good solid kids who love one another and want to share things."

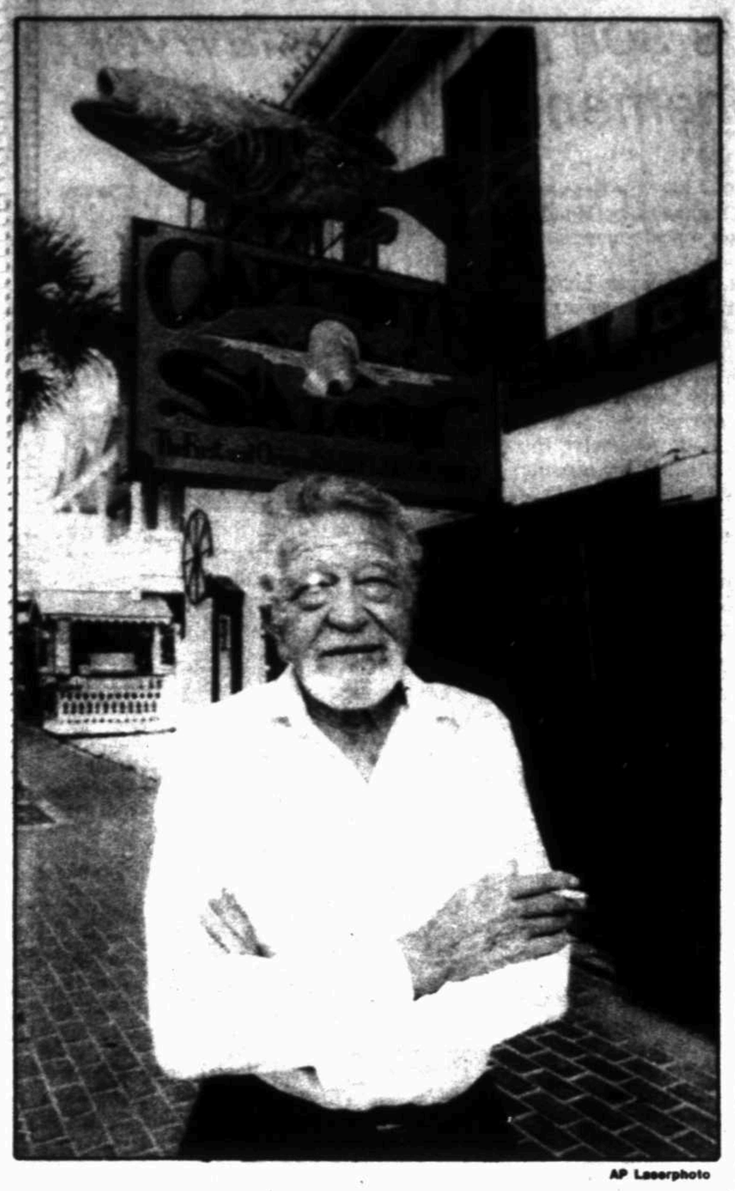
'Capt. Tony' keeps high profile as Key West mayor



AP Laserphoto

Key West Mayor Anthony Tarracino, a 73-year-old former saloonkeeper and boat skipper better known as "Capt. Tony", stands outside his former saloon in Key West, Fla. earlier this month.

KEY WEST, Fla. (AP) — Anthony Tarracino, a 73-year-old former saloonkeeper and boat skipper better known as "Capt. Tony," says this island city is "not your normal town in the U.S."

That could be an explanation of his qualifications to lead it.

Tarracino has fathered 13 children with five women, been portrayed in a Hollywood movie and claims to have spent much of his life flouting the Mafia, Fidel Castro, various neutrality laws and the establishment in general.

Since last November, he's been mayor of Key West. And by many accounts, he's not doing badly at it.

"I tell you what he ain't doing — he ain't doing anything crazy," says Pritam Singh, the young multimillionaire developer transforming the former Navy base here into a $250 million upscale community.

That might sound like an unusual way of grading a mayor's performance, but people weren't quite sure what to expect after Tarracino's slim runoff election victory last November. His unofficial campaign slogan: "All you need is a tremendous sex drive."

Over three decades as the proprietor of Capt. Tony's Saloon, a former hangout of Ernest Hemingway, Tarracino's reputation was not for municipal acumen but for being a character who stood out on an island full of them.

No one knows for sure how much of Tarracino's self-recited history is true, possibly not even he, after nearly 30 years of retelling that began with his desire to give visiting journalists a colorful feature story. They often came away describing Tarracino as "a character out of a Hemingway novel."

The story goes something like this:

He was born in Elizabeth, N.J., became a Teamsters organizer, then fled when mobsters discovered he was placing bets with their bookies on horse races that already had been run.

He came to Key West, and became a boat captain in 1948. Besides charter fishing, he skippered gun-running and mercenary expeditions and sneaked refugees out of Cuba and CIA agents back in.

He bought his bar in 1962 and began perfecting his stories, some of which were depicted with Stuart Whitman playing Capt. Tony in a 1980 low-budget dud called "Cuba Crossing."

He ran for mayor four to seven times — he doesn't count some of them because he wasn't running seriously, he says. Along the way, he fathered children ranging in age today from 53 to 4 years by three wives and two other of the 10 women he's lived with.

He lost a 1985 runoff election for mayor, then came back to win last year in a rematch with banker Tom Sawyer, 3,049 votes to 3,017.

Opinions vary on why Tarracino was elected. His opponents grumble that people felt sorry for him after so many defeats. Supporters say Tarracino represents a reaction against the direction Key West is heading.

The 27,000 people of the southernmost city in the continental United States face costly problems stemming from living on an island in an era when Florida is enforcing environmental protection.

Sewage treatment costs residents $600 a year, and garbage nearly $300, property taxes are six mills, and other costs, from rent to the water that must be piped in from the mainland, also are skyrocketing.

Tensions are high among developers who see demand for more condominiums, businesspeople who say the city must increase its tax base, and "the little people" for whom Tarracino claims a mandate.

As expected, Tarracino has focused his mayorship on fighting developers.

He's helped the city commission overcome business interests to slash rents for vendors who ply their trades at the popular nightly sunset festival on Mallory Square docks, and has led protests against Navy plans to build military housing on Peary Court, a 27-acre green space in the island's middle popular for picnics, softball and Frisbee-tossing.

Tarracino admits getting confused sometimes by statistics and procedures, but he relies on a broad range of friendly advisers.

In the mayor's office early one day after a commission meeting the night before that lasted to 11 p.m., Tarracino expounds on the struggle he sees going on in Key West.

"People came here looking for their utopia," he says. "They're dreamers, artists, people with high IQs. Whether it's making beads or painting or fishing, they came here for their little paradise in the sun.

"Then look at all these big hotels. It's all built on paper. And when they stop making money, they'll pull out and leave the stake holes.

"These are the people who are going to tell us what the rules are, how to live here? They're strangers."

Although one of his campaign selling points was the news media attention he would attract as mayor, Tarracino has no intention of being a laughable figurehead. He got a copy of Robert's Rules of Order after his election and rehearsed commission meetings with friends.

He dons a navy blue blazer for meetings and usually restrains himself from injecting his own rhetoric into debates.

Although the $10,000-a-year post is meant to be only part time, Tarracino usually spends six to eight hours a day in his office. He sold his bar, but goes there regularly to chat and sign posters for tourists.

Many other times, the mayor is available at the dog track.

"I'm like Ann Landers," he says. "People know they can come in and I'll listen to them."

Tarracino, who says he "loves every minute" of his job, already is talking about running for reelection in 1991.

But Richard Heyman, a two-time mayor who runs an art gallery, expects people concerned about the tax base problems and other such issues to be more active behind their own candidates in the next election.

"I think Tony's intentions are good, but he's totally off-base in his directions," Heyman says, noting, "He only won by 32 votes."

Ryan no-hitter

OAKLAND (AP) — Nolan Ryan recorded his sixth career no-hitter Monday night in a 5-0 victory for the Texas Rangers over the Oakland A's.

Ryan thrust his right arm into the air when the final out was made and then was mobbed by his teammates, who carried him off the field. A few fans jumped over the fence to join in. The rest of the crowd continued to chant, "Nolan! Nolan!" as they had over the last innings.

Ryan's no-hitter was the third this year, all in the American League. Mark Langston and Mike Witt combined to no-hit Seattle on April 11 and Randy Johnson of Seattle beat Detroit on June 2.

Ryan, who no-hit Kansas City and Detroit in 1973, Minnesota in 1974 and Baltimore in 1975, was making his first start at the Oakland Coliseum since April 11, 1977. Mike Norris, who pitched three innings in relief for Oakland on Monday night, opposed him that night and had no decision as the Athletics beat the Angels 3-2.

Ryan pitched his 12th career one-hitter earlier this season in a 1-0 victory over the Chicago White Sox on April 26. He struck out a season-high 16 in that game.

The no-hitter extended his combination of no-hit and one-hit games to 18, another major-league record. The 13 strikeouts extended his all-time major-league mark to 5,151.

Dunleavy replaces Riley

■ The dominate Los Angeles Lakers enters a new NBA era as coach Pat Riley bids a tearful farewell.

Associated Press

INGLEWOOD, Calif. — Pat Riley bade a tearful farewell to the Los Angeles Lakers on Monday, saying that after nine years and four NBA championships "there are other things I want to do with my life."

Mike Dunleavy, an assistant coach for the Milwaukee Bucks, succeeds Riley, and at age 36 becomes the second youngest head coach in the NBA.

Riley, who was 36 when the Lakers hired him as head coach on Nov. 19, 1981, spoke to a packed news conference at the Forum. He is leaving with two years left on his contract.

It is believed Riley will become a commentator for NBC, which becomes the NBA's prime network next season.

"It's just time for me at age 45 to move on," he said. "There are other things to do. There isn't anything specific I can say right now. I had a choice to make, a decision to make, as a person."

Riley, accompanied by his wife Chris, who also teared up, said he was neither "fed up" nor "burned out" — just ready for a change.

"The last 10 years have been the greatest experience of my life," he said. "It was a wonderful decade of memorable experiences I've had. Basketball has been my life. I've been 20 years in this game.

"There are other things I want to do in my life. I don't want to be an old timer before I do them," he said.

AP Laserphoto

Pat Riley, right, who has won four NBA championships with the Los Angeles Lakers, stepped down Monday as coach for successor Mike Dunleavy, left. The new era begins.

Riley guided the Lakers to an NBA-best 63-19 record this season and was named NBA Coach of the Year for the first time in his career. But Los Angeles was eliminated by Phoenix in five games in the Western Conference semifinals — the first time the Lakers didn't reach the conference finals since 1981, their final season under Paul Westhead.

Under Riley, the Lakers went 533-194, a .733 winning percentage. They also went 102-47 in playoff games, the most playoff wins by one coach in NBA history.

But following the Lakers' early playoff exit, reports surfaced of rifts between Riley and General Manager Jerry West, and between Riley and some of his players.

Riley, however, denied there were problems.

"I never felt any separation" from the players, he said at the news conference.

"The reason why this team won five championships during the '80s and 63 games this season is that the team was together."

He said he made his final decision to leave about 10 days ago, but kept it quiet so the Lakers could look for a replacement without a lot of fanfare and then make just one announcement.

"He's a tough act to follow," said Dunleavy, who has never been a head coach. "I respect Pat Riley. I look up to Pat Riley. If I can be half as good a coach as Pat Riley I'll be very successful."

Asked why he thought the Lakers hired him, Dunleavy said: "I think I'm a lucky guy. I've been very lucky all my life and this is no different."

Neither Dunleavy, West nor Lakers owner Jerry Buss would be specific

Missions show no mercy to Angels

■ The San Antonio Missions continue to slug Midland Angel pitching, winning Monday, 17-6.

By Jimmy Patterson
Assistant Sports Editor

Just as the Midland-San Antonio game entered the top of the ninth Monday evening — and with the Angels hopelessly behind once again — a disgruntled fan got up out of his seat behind home plate, turned to leave and threw his ticket stubs high in the air in disgust.

Another day, another offensive circus at three-ringed Angels Stadium.

If you were keeping score Monday, maybe you lost track. Read that final score San Antonio 17, Midland 6.

Ugly. Really, really ugly.

"That's what it comes down to," Angel manager Eddie Rodriguez said. "Real ugly."

Mired in last place all season thanks to a 1-11 start, the Angels seem to have returned to their 1990 roots. Since their latest slump began back on May 30, the Angels are 2-11.

During the current homestand against San Antonio, the Angels have lost four straight and have been outscored 53-26. After the Missions' 23 hit attack Monday, the visitors have collected 67 hits in the four-game series.

These are not good times in the summertime.

In Monday's comedy of errors, San Antonio's Henry Rodriguez and Steve Finken — the No. 3 and 6 hitters in the Missions' lineup — combined for 11 RBIs. Every San Antonio batter got at least one hit and all but two had at least a pair of hits.

The Angels, kept from the basepaths during the first three innings, broke out of their early slump with a four-run fourth. Centerfielder Reed Peters tagged San Antone starter Mike Pitz with a solo shot, his first round-tripper of the year. But it was Luis Aguayo's monstrous blast later in the inning — a three-run homer that the Missions' left fielder just stood and stared at — that brought the house down. At least for the moment.

With the double-homer fourth inning, Midland jumped ahead 4-2.

Both the Angels and the Missions scored a pair in their respective fifth frames and, entering the San Antonio eighth, the Angels hung on to what would eventually be false hopes, trailing 8-6.

The Midland roof caved in in the eighth as the Missions sent 12 men to the plate in a seven run inning.

After Homar Rojas, Tom Goodwin and Luis Martinez reached on singles, Henry Rodriguez stepped up and slapped a grand slam over the deepest part of centerfield to put the game out of reach, 12-6. Three more runs scored for San Anto-

TERRY WILLIAMSON

Jerry Jones wants 'second chance'

A year ago, Jerry Jones rode in from Arkansas, bought a pro football franchise, declared a winner and made the Dallas Cowboys "America's Team to Hate."

Williamson

He fired the legend, Tom Landry; fired the semi-legend, Tex Schramm; made the Dallas Cowboy Cheerleaders hopping mad; and hired himself a new p.r. man, Greg Aiello, to whom he paid very little attention.

To call Jerry's first year with the Cowboys a disaster is the kindest comment one can make. Jerry knows it.

"There were times last year that I needed a sock in my mouth," now says Jones as he prepares for Year 2. "It did it all at the cost of change. We didn't have experience with the media. But I can tell you after 15 months, I've learned a little about that, too.

"Nothing came out right last year. I blame myself. My days haven't just been filled with harsh criticism, however deserved; they've been filled with being treated fairly by the media. Going through change is difficult, and my enthusiasm was interpreted as being brash and insensitive. I do regret that."

You see, Jerry wants a second chance. We all know that in this world, that second chance will have to be earned. At least, he's on the right track this time around.

In fact, he's come a long way, baby!

Jones is still enthusiastic about his Cowboys, but he isn't making any brash playoff predictions after a one-victory season a year ago.

"Last year I did learn one or two things. One of the things was not to open my mouth and put my foot in with my predictions," Jones now says.

"I don't think there's anyone involved in the Dallas Cowboys that wouldn't be excited and pleased if we won half our football games. I don't think we have to win half our games to be successful. I do think that whatever team we make that record with, that our fans can see that with the little more experience and continuity that another year will bring, that the team ultimately has the ability to go to the Super Bowl."

Still, Jones does believe with all his heart that the Cowboys will be better than a year ago. Of course that leaves a lot of room for improvement, and yes, most would be excited to see any improvement over last year's 1-15 record.

"Of the 80 players we had in our first camp, we now have 51 who were not on that roster a year ago," notes Jones, who can now increase that number to 52 with the recent retirement of Ed "Too Tall" Jones. "Obviously, we made changes that we feel will help the team. So, we do feel we are better."

Jones easily rattles off why he thinks the Cowboys are better in 1990.

He thinks the trade with the 49ers will produce a 1,200-yard rusher in Terrance Flagler and fierce pass rusher in Danny Stubbs. He also says the Cowboys got three solid starters in the Herschel Walker trade with linebackers Jesse Solomon and David Howard and cornerback Isiac Holt.

Jones also points out that the Cowboys were really active in the NFL's Plan B this year and feels they picked up possibly three more "real" players in wide receiver Dennis McKinnon, tight end Jay Novacek and center Tony Slaton.

Jones also says that a key need was filled in the recent NFL draft with Florida running back Emmitt Smith, a player the Cowboys feel can step in right away and produce good results.

So, after one year of NFL exposure, Jerry Jones is apologetic, enthusiastic and even cautious.

One writer asked, "Can we stand the new Jerry?" And the resounding answer is a qualified "yes." Victories will have more to do with Jerry Jones' image than his apologetic attitude. Everybody eventually learns to love a winner — or so we have been told. Let's hope we can find out.

ANGELS: Woes mount

nio in the inning, one of which came as a result of a balk by Angel pitcher David Martinez. Rodriguez had already hit a two-run home run in the second which put the Missions ahead 2-0 in the early going.

Just for good measure, the Missions tacked on another couple in the ninth when Finken singled to bring in Rodriguez and Eric Karros.

"The last time San Antonio was here, we won four out of five," the Angels' Rodriguez noted. "Now we can't do anything right.

"There's been some flash, but it just fades away. It's hard to understand. It's hard to pinpoint any one thing. We've got to prepare ourselves mentally and physically in the manner of winning some ball games. As it is right now, we're in a regression mode."

El Paso having stadium delays

EL PASO (AP) — Frustration emanated from Jim Paul's face Monday as the minor league baseball team owner told reporters once again that a new stadium for the El Paso Diablos wouldn't be ready on schedule.

Making weekly forecasts, taking the media on inspection tours and listing what's finished and what's not has become a ritual for Paul during the past three months as the stadium's opening day has been pushed farther and farther back from its original April 15 target.

AL Roundup

Tom Brookens lined a two-out single to score Jerry Browne from second base in the 12th inning, giving the Cleveland Indians a 4-3 victory Monday night over the Boston Red Sox, who couldn't get a key hit in the ninth.

Rudy Seanez, a 21-year-old rookie reliever, earned his first major league victory and Doug Jones got his 20th save.

Browne began the 12th with a ground single to center against Dennis Lamp (0-2) and took second on Mitch Webster's sacrifice. Chris James grounded out before Brookens, who entered the game in the 10th, lined a 1-2 pitch to left field.

The game went to extra innings when the Red Sox loaded the bases with none out in the ninth but failed to score against reliever Jesse Orosco. Dwight Evans and Tony Pena forced runners at the plate and Carlos Quintana struck out.

The Red Sox had won seven in a row before the Indians snapped a six-game losing streak by beating them 4-0 Sunday.

Boston went ahead 3-2 on Evans' two-run single in the seventh, but the Indians tied the score with an unearned run in the eighth.

Trailing 2-0, the Red Sox struck back after Cleveland starter Greg Swindell was forced to leave with a pulled left groin muscle in the sixth.

Cecilio Guante replaced Swindell with the count 2-2 on Evans at the start of the sixth. Swindell scattered six hits and struck out a season-high eight batters before limping off.

Mike Boddicker lost a bid for a career-high seventh consecutive victory when he gave way to Jeff Reardon at the start of the eighth.

Brewers 4, Blue Jays 1

Bill Krueger pitched 5⅓ hitless innings in a rare start as Milwaukee broke a five-game losing streak with a victory over Toronto, who had pounded them in the first three games of the series.

Krueger (3-3) allowed two hits, walked one and struck out five in eight innings against a Toronto team that had scored 31 runs in the first three games. Dan Plesac pitched the ninth, allowing one hit, to collect his 11th save while ending the Blue Jays' winning streak at four games.

The Brewers scored four runs in the fourth, driving out Toronto starter Willie Blair (0-3).

Candaele hot as Astros rise

Associated Press

NL Roundup

Casey Candaele delivered the game-winning hit for the second straight game with the third homer of his career, leading the Houston Astros past the Los Angeles Dodgers 5-3 Monday for their fourth straight victory.

Candaele's seventh-inning RBI triple on Sunday rallied the Astros to a 4-2 victory over Cincinnati. Three of Candaele's five RBIs this season have come in the last two games.

Rafael Ramirez singled to start the Astros seventh inning off starter Mike Morgan (6-5) and after Rich Gedman sacrificed Ramirez to second, Candaele homered over the right-field fence.

Larry Andersen (3-1) got the victory in relief and Dave Smith pitched one inning for his 12th save.

The Astros tied the score 3-3 with three runs in the fourth inning on consecutive doubles by Ken Caminiti and Eric Anthony.

Bill Doran singled to start the inning and Glenn Davis walked with one out. Caminiti doubled to the center field wall, scoring two runs. Anthony's double scored Caminiti.

Kal Daniels walked with one out in the Dodgers' three-run fourth off Mark Portugal and scored on Eddie Murray's eighth homer. Hubie Brooks followed with a double and scored on Mike Scioscia's single.

Expos 5-3, Phillies 0-2

Lenny Dykstra, leading the major leagues in batting, went hitless in consecutive games for the first time this season and had his hitting streak stopped at 23 as Montreal swept a doubleheader from Philadelphia.

Dykstra went 0-for-3 with a walk against Kevin Gross in the first game and 0-for-5 in the second, popping up with a runner on second to end the game. His average dipped from .407 to .392, and he finished tied for the fourth-longest streak in modern Phillies' history.

Mike Fitzgerald homered and drove in three runs in the opener, then hit an RBI single as Montreal won for the 11th time in 16 games. Philadelphia has lost five in a row.

The Expos broke a 2-all tie in the eighth inning of the nightcap on a wild pitch by Jeff Parrett (2-5). Andres Galarraga led off with a single, pinch-runner Otis Nixon took third on Parrett's wild pickoff and scored as ball four to Mike Aldrete bounced to the backstop.

Cubs 8, Mets 5

Ryne Sandberg had four hits, including a home run, and red-hot Mark Grace added three hits as Chicago beat New York for its fourth straight victory.

In his last 11 games, Grace has reached base safely 22 times in 39 plate appearances (16 hits and six walks) to raise his average from .258 to .292.

The Mets, who had their three-game winning streak snapped, fell to 7-15 on the road. They have three more games with the Cubs at Wrigley Field before going to Pittsburgh for four games.

Greg Maddux had retired 15 in a row entering the seventh when the Mets rallied for three runs to tie the score 4-4.

Maddux has not won since May 5, and has failed in seven straight starts to gain his 50th career victory.

Viola allowed 11 hits in six innings and Chicago finished with 15 hits.

Pirates 8, Cardinals 7

Doug Drabek failed to protect a six-run lead, but Jeff King snapped an eighth-inning tie with a run-scoring single as Pittsburgh broke a three-game losing streak.

Jose Lind doubled leading off the eighth against reliever Tom Niedenfuer (0-1) and advanced on a groundout before King drove him in with his third hit of the game to make it 7-6. Jay Bell followed with his second RBI triple of the night as the Pirates sent St. Louis to its fourth loss in five games.

Pedro Guerrero got his 200th career homer and had three RBIs for the Cardinals, who fell into last place in the National League East, 10½ games behind the division-leading Pirates. Guerrero's seventh homer was his first since May 1.

Giants 8, Braves 3

San Francisco won for the ninth time in 10 games as Brett Butler's run-scoring double snapped a seventh-inning tie.

Arkansas board just watching SEC lure

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP) — The University of Arkansas Board of Trustees will have little to do with the decision on whether the Razorbacks should move to the Southeastern Conference, the board chairman says.

"Unless an individual campus is making a big, big mistake, we try not to interfere," Chairman Jim Blair of Springdale said. "However, the board will want to review any decisions the university makes in this matter."

The board trusts Chancellor Dan Ferritor and Athletic Director Frank Broyles, Blair said in an interview Sunday.

"I approach it from a business standpoint," he said. "You have 200 bad deals for every one good deal. You have to look at each opportunity."

Arkansas is a member of the Southwest Conference. The 10-team SEC, considering an expansion, recently asked Arkansas if it was interested in discussing a move.

The next UA Board meeting is set for Friday in Pine Bluff, but board member Sykes Harris of Warren said there are no indications that the board will discuss the move.

"I think it's something we have to seriously consider," said Harris, who chairs the athletic committee. "I'm in favor of them considering the offer, but as for now, we don't have enough information to have a concrete opinion."

Bart Lindsey of Helena said there may be no official discussion, but board members will be talking about it during meeting breaks.

"It is certainly going to be on everyone's mind," Lindsey said. "I'm sure this will be discussed and we'll be made privy to some of those numbers."

He was referring to the potential increase in television revenues that would result from a change in conference affiliation.

The SWC has a five-year, $12 million contract with Raycom Sports and Entertainment.

Futures mixed

NEW YORK (AP) — Energy futures prices ended mixed Monday, with crude oil posting modest gains and unleaded gasoline and heating oil declining.

They said the market virtually ignored the continued burning of a supertanker in the Gulf Coast — the biggest oil news of the day — since shipping into Southern ports isn't expected to be affected.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, the July contract for West Texas Intermediate rose 4 cents to settle at $16.82 a 42-gallon barrel. The contract gained 11 cents Friday.

Dollar lower

NEW YORK (AP) — A lack of fresh economic news led to a slow day for currency traders Monday as the dollar was lower against most major currencies except the Japanese yen. Gold prices were mixed.

In Tokyo, the dollar rose 1.45 yen to a closing 154.10 yen. One trader, Linda McLaughlin of Chemical Bank, attributed the dollar's strength against the yen to money from individual investors in Japan who have just received semi-annual bonuses.

In London, the British pound was quoted at $1.6858. The pound traded at $1.6860 late Monday in New York.

Rates late Monday: 1.6927 West German marks; 1.4430 Swiss francs; 5.6965 French francs; 1.1710 Canadian dollars; and 1,243.25 Italian lire.

Gold bullion for current delivery rose 70 cents to $356.40 a troy ounce on the New York Commodity Exchange.

Silver fell in London to a bid price of $5.01 a troy ounce.

Pipeline down

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — The trans-Alaska oil pipeline will be shut down for about 12 hours Tuesday to replace corroded lines at several pump stations, officials said.

The lines could begin leaking if left unrepaired, said Marnie Isaacs, spokeswoman for the Alyeska Pipeline Service Co.

The affected steel pipes are not buried and are smaller than the 48-inch diameter line that links Prudhoe Bay with the marine terminal at Valdez about 800 miles to the south, she said

The corrosion apparently was caused by bacteria in water mixed with the North Slope crude oil.

Steep tax proposed for oil, natural gas

■ Stiff opposition is being waged against a proposed carbon tax that could heavily peanalize hydrocarbon fuels.

By John Paul Pitts
Business & Oil Editor

The Permian Basin Petroleum Association has gone on record as being solidly against a proposed "carbon" tax that would impose a tax of up to 40 cents per Mcf of natural gas.

In a statement of opposition sent to Sen. Phil Gramm (R-Tx), Harry Spannaus, executive vice president of PBPA, says he is alarmed at news that Chief of Staff John H. Sununu supports a carbon tax to reduce the federal defecit.

"It is not difficult for us to believe that guys like Rep. Stark of California would come up with such a sham, but it is inconceivable that Sununu, a member of Bush's Cabinet, would support such garbage," said Spannaus.

Spannaus said the proposed carbon tax, which would be imposed on all hydrocarbon fuels, was just one of many that constituted "nothing more than a rape of the oil industry." He listed the Superfund Tax, Oil Spill Tax, and a proposed 15-20 cent federal gasoline tax, as real threats to health of the petroleum industry.

He said the carbon tax threat was unfortunate and should be stopped immediately.

The carbon tax which would be phased in over a four-year period form 1991-1995 would be used strictly to reduce the budget deficit.

The carbon tax concept is based on a bill introduced in May by Rep. Fortney H. (Pete) Stark (D-Calif.) that proposed a phase-in of taxes on oil, natural gas and coal. It would put an 8 cent gax on natural gas in 1991 that would go to 40 cents per Mcf in 1995. The tax on oil would start at 65 cents per barrel in 1991 and escalate to $3.25 in 1995. Coal would be

Bush faces decision on offshore oil

■ As President Bush prepares to make a decision on banning offshore drilling off California and Florida, he hears from those warning of America's dependency on foreign oil, and from those concerned about the environment.

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Despite warnings from energy experts that America's dependency on foreign oil is increasing toward unprecedented levels, President Bush is expected to decide within days whether to impose bans on drilling off the oil-rich coasts of California and Florida.

The decision is a tough one for Bush, who became successful 35 years ago as a venturous, high-risk offshore driller in Texas, "when no one doubted that offshore drilling represented the future of the business," he has said.

But today that future is uncertain in America.

"Our society is undergoing vital changes. Life is not what it was," said Barry Williamson, a Texan installed by the Bush administration as director of the Interior Department's Minerals Management Service — the federal agency that oversees all offshore drilling.

"By the year 2000 we'll have greater need for energy resources and for protection of the environment," said Williamson. "And we need to set in place a process that will balance both needs for many years to come."

Offshore oil drilling bans by Bush, the "environmental president," would be a radical departure from the all-out offshore oi' exploration policy of the early Reagan administration.

But the bans would not affect long-established production under way in the Gulf of Mexico, off Texas and Louisiana shores.

Yet Texans associated with the oil industry complain that if Bush yields to emotional pressures from politicians and environmentalists to shut down explorations along America's outer continental shelf, almost everywhere but in the Gulf, an uneven burden will be placed on Texas and Louisiana resources.

"Once oil is drained for all practical purposes from the Gulf in the next century, then recovery will resume off Southern California at much higher prices at the refinery and greater royalty profits for the state of California,"

Trump, banks reportedly reach accord

■ Sources say Donald Trump and his bank creditors have reached a tentative agreement restructuring his debt.

By Vivian Marino

NEW YORK (AP) — Donald Trump has reached a tentative debt restructuring agreement with his bank creditors that would provide him with both money and time to mend his troubled empire, a source familiar with the deal confirmed Monday.

The source, who asked to remain anonymous, said the banks agreed over the weekend to lend Trump an additional $60 million and to suspend interest payments on $2 billion in debt.

In exchange, Trump would pledge some of the remaining real estate or casino assets that aren't completely collateralized, including the Trump Plaza Hotel in Atlantic City, N.J., and the Trump Tower building in Manhattan, the source said.

Norma Foerderer, an executive assistant for Trump, said the Trump Organization would have no comment on the report of an agreemnt, which first appeared in today's Wall Street Journal. "We have nothing to say about it," she said.

The flamboyant developer, whose marital as well as financial troubles have made headlines in recent months, confirmed last week that he was negotiating with major banks to restructure his debt.

Mid-Tex gets contract for Hilton renovations

Staff Report

Mid-Tex of Midland has been chosen to participate in the Midland Hilton's $2 million renovation, announced back in April.

Mid-Tex will renovate 240 of the hotel's guest rooms, replacing all furniture, carpet, wall coverings, lamps and art. Renovations will begin July 16, and will be completed in November. To meet this deadline, approximately 50 guest rooms will be completely renovated every three weeks.

Barry Smith, general manager of the Hilton, said no interruptions in guest service will occur during the refurbishment.

The Hilton's renovations will include adding new amenities to each room that include an armoire housing a remote-control television, an "honor" snack bar, a new desk and work lamp, and an overstuffed lounge chair and ottoman.

The Midland Chamber of Commerce estimates the total project will generate more than $6 million in added revenues, including additional jobs created as a result of the hotel refurbishment.

Mid-Tex has been involved in such renovation projects as the 1987 renovation of Dinero Plaza, and of Saint Luke's Methodist Church this year. The company has also worked for such companies as Landmark Management, Mike Lewis & Associates, Mobil Oil, Texaco U.S.A. and ClayDesta Corp.

Bus ridership up despite bankruptcy

DALLAS (AP) — Greyhound Lines Inc. said Monday that it carried more passengers last weekend than for any weekend of 1990, despite filing for reorganization under federal bankruptcy laws last week.

"It was a vote of confidence by our passengers," Greyhound president Frank J. Schmieder said.

The company said 341,380 people boarded buses from Friday morning to Sunday midnight, equal to 72.1 percent of the number carried the same weekend last year.

Socially concerned can invest in causes

By Jane Bryant Quinn

Quinn

NEW YORK–The 1990s will be the decade when "purpose" investing comes into its own. The social activists among the baby boomers have reached the age of saving and investing–and they'll support their causes financially.

Let me count the number of ways that you can put your money where your mouth is:

(1) Socially conscious investing is the main event. After a slow start in the late 1970s, white-hat mutual funds now control in excess of $500 billion, according to the Social Investment Forum (SIF) in Minneapolis.

Some mutual funds deliberately seek out companies thought to be socially benign–for example, firms that develop alternative energy sources or new methods of pollution control. Other funds merely avoid the black hats, usually defined as companies with ties to South Africa (Nelson Mandela wants the boycott continued), tobacco stocks, defense contractors, utilities dependent on nuclear power, major polluters and companies with a history of employment discrimination or bad labor relations.

(I don't know of any funds for smokers who love nuclear power, support defense spending and oppose disinvesting in South Africa. Is there an uptapped market here?)

Be sure you read the prospectus. Just because a fund has "environment" in its name doesn't mean it really looks for progressive companies. The following stock and bond funds belong to the SIF: the Calvert Group in Maryland (800-368-2748); Pax World in Washington, D.C. (800-767-1729); Parnassus in California (800-999-3505); and New Alternatives in New York (516-466-0808). For money-market funds, try Calvert, Working Assets (800-699-7725), or the South Shore Bank Fund (800-669-7725).

(2) A bright idea that's likely to be copied by many other organizations is "affinity" long-distance telephone service, pioneered by Working Assets (WA) in San Francisco (800-522-7759). When you sign up through WA, you become a customer of US Sprint, paying exactly the same rates as any other customer. Sprint returns around 2 percent of the value of your calls to the WA organization.

One percent of the value of your calls goes into a donation pool. It's distributed once a year to nonprofit organizations in four different fields: environment, peace, human rights and hunger. Last year, WA gave out $365,415, to 32 organizations nominated and voted on by its members. Among the leading vote-getters: Greenpeace, National Abortion Rights Action League, National Gay & Lesbian Task Force, the Environmental Defense Fund, Amnesty International and Habitat for Humanity.

In 1988, the top three recipients were the Rainforest Action Network, Amnesty International and the Natural Resources Defense Council.

All telephone proceeds over 1 percent are used to defray Working Assets' costs, says chief executive officer Laura Scher. The service isn't breaking even yet for WA, but Scher hopes that eventually it will be in the black.

(3) Affinity credit cards were also pioneered by Working Assets, followed by the Sierra Club. Every time you use a nonprofit's Visa or MasterCard, it earns a small fee from the sponsoring bank. At WA, $2 per card goes into the donation pool, plus five cents for each transaction you make. The cost of the card: $20 a year (waived for the first six months), plus 17.5 percent interest on revolving credit.

Working Assets also offers a Women's Card. The proceeds go to the cardholder's local women's foundation. If

INVESTORS' GUIDE

New thrifts permitted to reduce CD rates

By Bill Doyle

Q. I'm mad. Last year, I opened three small certificates of deposit totaling $15,000 at interest rates of 9.5, 9.75 and 10.5 percent at the same bank. The rates were supposed to be good through 1991. This year, the bank changed hands and the rates on all three CDs were slashed to 8 percent.

In a recent column, you wrote, "CDs are contracts and rates can't be cut until the CDs mature." When I confronted the bank with a copy of that column, I was told: "The government authorized the cut." Is this possible? I'm still mad.

Doyle

A. It's more than possible. It's probable — if there is more to the story than the sparse information in your letter. "Changed hands" indicates ownership was sold. I'll bet what you call a "bank" was a financially troubled thrift institution — savings and loan association or savings bank — which failed, was closed by federal regulators and then either reopened as a new thrift or merged into an existing institution.

In situations such as that, the new thrift or merged institution gets assistance from federal regulators. That's less costly to the government than paying off the failed thrift's depositors with federal deposit insurance.

As part of the bailout deal, the new thrift or merged institution is permitted to reduce interest rates on CDs and other accounts it received from the busted thrift — after giving depositors two weeks' notice. Actually, reductions from 9.5, 9.75 and 10.5 percent to 8 percent aren't terribly severe. In some similar situations, CD rates have been cut as low as 4 percent.

Q. Interest rates on CDs issued by failed S&Ls can be reduced by the S&Ls and banks that succeed the failed thrifts only because of a provision in the S&L bailout law enacted last August. I feel you and other writers should have alerted the public to this before the legislation was passed.

Then, we could have written to our congressmen, congresswomen and senators to prevent passage, rather than letting the banking industry have everything its way.

This CD rate "rollback" is hurting many, many people, especially the elderly who depend on high interest rates to supplement their Social Security benefits and/or pensions. Shouldn't it be challenged all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court?

A. Let's take the three points in your letter one at a time.

Newspapers carried multitudinous stories about the S&L bailout law and its various parts while it was being written — then rewritten over and over again. But there was no way of knowing, for sure, every provision of that law until it was agreed upon by a congressional conference committee and a final revised version was passed by both houses of Congress.

Letters from unhappy constituents might have caused some members of Congress to vote against the bailout bill. But cynics suggest campaign contributions from political action committees carry more weight. Anyway, the rollbacks can be defended because high CD rates were contributing factors to failures of many S&Ls.

There is no getting around the unhappy fact that CD interest rate reductions have devastated many folk's finances. The rollback could very well be subject to court challenges, where the outcome is anybody's guess.

Red Adair called to well fire

CREOLA, Ala. (AP) — Texaco officials called in a firefighting team from Red Adair's company to battle a blaze that continued to burn Monday at one of the company's natural gas wells in south Alabama.

Three families were evacuated after the fire ignited Friday night, but Texaco spokesman Max Hebert said the blaze at Four Star Oil and Gas Co. presented "no danger to any of the surrounding community."

Adair, of Houston, Texas, is well known for capping such gas fires. Hebert said a team from Adair's company was at the site Monday to put the blaze out when wind and weather conditions permit.

Hebert said no other people live close by and no further evaucations were required other than the three families. He also said the fire was clean-burning and not a pollution problem.

Readings for potentially harmful gas at the north Mobile County site have been "well within the safe zone," he said. If there was a problem with a dangerous gas release at the time the fire is put out, the fire would be re-ignited to consume the gas.

"We have not been able to determine the cause of the leak and we may never know exactly what caused the well to ignite," Hebert said.

He said a drop in the pressure of a gas well at the plant prompted two operators to go to the well about 11:45 p.m. Friday to investigate. He said they heard a loud hissing noise, then the well ignited but no one was injured.

"We tried to put the fire out with water but it was too intense," Hebert said. "Now we're spraying a continuous flow of water on the well-head to keep it cool. The Creola and Satsuma fire departments have been very cooperative and they came over to assist the people from Red Adair.

"The fire is burning in a remote area of Hatters Pond and we have to build a huge water tower so there will be enough water out here to do the job," Hebert said.

TAX: Proposed tax draws fire

the most heavily taxed, starting with a $3 per ton tax in 1991 and finishing with $15 per ton in 1995.

A review of the proposed tax by an industry publication reports that carbon tax on natural gas would apply to all domestic gas sold and gas delivered to a U.S. natural gas facility, which would include Canadian gas. It would not include gas delivered to enhanced oil recovery projects.

Spannaus said if the intent of the tax on hydrocarbons was to somehow clean up the environment that it would not work, because people that must drive, drive and people that must heat their homes, heat their homes regardless of the cost.

"It clearly will not discourage the use of hydrocarbons, but it could spell disaster for the producers of hydrocarbons," he said.

According to an estimate by the Joint Tax Committee, the tax on hydrocarbons would raise $30 billion over a five year period.

TRUMP: Trying to restructure debt

(From 4C)

Purchases such as the Plaza Hotel and Trump Shuttle airline have added to Trump's financial woes because neither is reported to be making money.

Trump's biggest bank creditors — including Citicorp, Chase Manhattan Corp., Bankers Trust New York Corp. and Manufacturers Hanvover Corp. — planned to discuss the weekend debt restructuring deal today with about 10 smaller creditors, according to the source.

"If any one of the other banks do not go along, then the deal does not work," the Journal quoted on unidentified banker as saying.

Bankers Trust spokesman Thomas Parisi said he couldn't comment on the reported deal, adding, "When an agreement is reached we'll probably release a statement."

Other banks contacted had no immediate comment.

The source familiar with the negotiations said the major banks' contributions toward the $60 million will be porportionate to the amount they previously lent, with Citicorp and Bankers Trust making up around two-thirds of the new loan.

BUSH: Decision expected very soon said Arthur Wiese, an American Petroleum Institute official.

(From 4C)

Meanwhile, the United States imported more than 52 percent of its oil last month from foreign sources — much of it from the Persian Gulf, figures to be released in a few days by the API will show. That's a steep increase from the 47.1 percent level of imports in April.

"Our reliance on foreign oil is going straight up, in the face of domestic cutbacks," said API president Charles DiBona. "We expect America's dependency on foreign oil could reach 66 percent by the middle or late-middle part of this decade."

DiBona said that while domestic production is "falling at the rate of a half-million barrels a day each year, consumption continues to grow and so we're heading for some real trouble.

"We could slow down the rate of decline in U.S. production if we're permitted to drill where oil and gas can be found, and that includes offshore."

DiBona is particularly upset about the hangup at Point Arguella, the massive underwater oil field off the Santa Barbara, Calif., coast. Chevron, Texaco and several other partners are involved in a huge development effort there. But because of widespread fears of a potential spill, local and state regulators have held up all the production.

"Every environmental requirement has been met at Point Arguella," said DiBona. "The field has been found, it has been drilled, a platform put up, several billion dollars spent and there's a capability of producing 50,000 barrels a day, which is worth about $1 million a day, there.

"That's about $1 million a day that we in this country now must import from places like the Middle East — oil that we could be producing from an environmentally safe, carefully constructed well, for which all the federal permits have been granted. It's an outrage for the country."

The offshore industry boasts that since 95 percent of its product is moved from platform rigs to refineries through pipelines, there have been only infinitesimal oil spills in the past 20 years. And DiBona produces statistical evidence of high safety and ecological rates of success for the industry.

But critics complain that the API made similar safety claims for oil tankers before the shocking Exxon Valdez disaster in Prince William Sound, Alaska, March 24, 1989.

Critics also complain that the inspector general's office in the Interior Department found more than 16,000 known offshore drilling violations had occurred during a recent four-year period but that federal enforcement officers had not assessed a single penalty against the industry.

"Corporate America needs to have a better environment ethic," says Barry Williamson, who was rushed into Interior's offshore oversight post by the White House less than two weeks after the Exxon Valdez spill.

Since taking over, Williamson has instituted surprise safety inspection visits by his agency to oil rigs. He has ordered unannounced, spot oil-spill drills for platform crews.

Williamson, 32, a lawyer-oilman from Midland in West Texas (son-in-law of influential First Family friend Bobby Holt, rancher, oilman and co-chairman of Bush's 1989 inauguration), pushes policy views compatible with the president's thinking.

"In terms of a national offshore oil policy, we need to move at a more prudent pace, to protect the environment," said Williamson. "I have been telling the industry that area-wide leasing no longer is going to be the rule of the day. There is going to have to be a lot more flexibility."

But Williamson talks with more than just industry executives. He has been meeting steadily with environmentalists, members of Congress, state and local officials, residents of coastal communities, chamber of commerce officers, fishermen and even with groups in America's midwest.

"People want to be part of the decision-making process on offshore oil policy right from the beginning," Williamson said. "They want to be listened to, and we're listening."

That's a far cry from President Reagan's controversial Interior Secretary James Watt, who intended to open all 1.4 billion acres of America's available outer continental shelf to oil exploration.

Angered members of Congress began amending annual appropriations bills with temporary moratoriums against exploration in many offshore areas.

Growing in size each year, there now are moratoriums against development of 84 million offshore acres. Most are along the Atlantic and Pacific coasts.

In the present Congress, tired of protecting certain offshore areas 12 months at a time, a number of House and Senate members — especially those from Florida and California, Republicans and Democrats alike — began to think in terms of legislation that would create permanent bans.

The most far-reaching of those bills is one by Rep. Barbara Boxer, D-Calif. It would outlaw offshore development on a vast scale and create additional buffer zones around the United States. The Boxer bill has drawn major support from environmental groups.

Acting immediately after becoming president last year, Bush called for a standstill in plans for development of oil fields off the entire California coast and off the southwest Florida coast, from Naples to the island keys.

Bush called for formation of an expert government task force that would assess the environmental and economic impact on those critical coastal areas.

Communications field changing rapidly

EDITOR'S NOTE: Alfred C. Sikes, who became chairman of the Federal Communications Commission last August, was recently interviewed by members of The San Diego Union's editorial board.

Copley News Service

Q: Broadly speaking, is the Federal Communications Commission under the Bush administration headed toward more regulation or less?

A: I think it's headed toward adaptive regulation, which is going to mean probably less regulation in some areas and perhaps in a few areas a bit more. Communications technology is changing rapidly — they are talking about 18-month life cycles in high-tech products. Markets are changing rapidly, and not just domestically, as we have seen in telecommunications. Cable is a part of the video market, but also we have gone from a domestic to an international marketplace. With those kinds of developments, I think we've got to be very adaptive.

Q: What can the FCC do to promote more competition in the cable television industry?

A: First of all, I think we've got a kind of persuasive opportunity. We also can promote competition through alteration of our rules. I'd simply like to persuade mayors, for example, and people who elect mayors, that cities have made a bad bargain to the extent that they've allowed monopolization.

Officials of many cities have told cable companies, in effect, "Give us 5 percent of your revenue and we'll let you monopolize our market." Mayors, I think, increasingly are finding that the complaints they get, and the difficulty they have dealing with them, perhaps cost them more than they anticipated. So we're trying to persuade city governments at least to allow competitive franchises. Sometimes even the threat of competition can be a powerful discipline.

Q: Does the technology here remain a barrier to competition? For example, is it feasible to have two or more cable companies' services available in the same neighborhood?

A: I think it is feasible, technologically. The economics are another question. For example, there is some competition from satellite broadcasting, and that's due to advances in technology. Secondly, microwave technology is advancing. One of the things we're doing at the commission is changing rules in an effort to expedite entry by microwave distributors of video signals. So we think technology is working in favor of competition.

Q: When you have these franchise monopolies for several years and no rate regulation, don't cable companies charge whatever the traffic will bear?

A: In the Cable Act of 1984, the federal government pre-empted local government rate regulation unless there was no effective competition. Congress delegated to the FCC the task of defining what is or isn't effective competition. The FCC in 1985 defined it as three over-the-air signals. So, if cable subscribers could get three over-the-air signals using an outdoor antenna or, for that matter, rabbit ears, then there was effective competition and the municipality could not regulate rates. I believe that definition is obsolete, and we are readdressing it. The result of that might have the practical consequence of allowing more municipalities to engage in rate regulation. On the other hand, I'm trying not to encourage monopolization with attendant rate regulation. My preference in an area where you have such a dynamic technology, and also where you are talking about an information choke point, is for competition.

Q: Is microwave transmission the wave of the future, and will this technology leap over the need to wire homes for cable?

A: I don't know, to be perfectly candid. I think there is the potential of quality microwave delivery of a number of channels, therefore filling a competitive void. Whether it's the wave of the future is an altogether different question. You also have the future prospect of fiber optics into the home. That would provide, essentially, a very large pipe, accommodating a lot of different uses, one of which certainly would be a number of full-motion video channels. In that, you potentially have video switching.

Q: What might be a practical example of video switching?

A: Right now, you are restricted by the number of channels brought in by coaxial cable to your home, assuming that you're on cable. So, if you're on a 30-channel system, it's predetermined that one channel is for ESPN, another for the local ABC affiliate, and so on. There are an extraordinary number of sources of video programming. I don't know the exact number, but there certainly are a 100-plus video programs that could be brought into your home, but you have a 30-channel limitation. However, there is nothing wrong with someone pooling Hollywood films, for example, and you then, through a vendor, ordering which film you want to watch through your home terminal, rather than depending on what HBO schedules or having to go to the videocassette store.

Q: Isn't the implication of that wiring your home to any information in the world, potentially, for all kinds of services?

A: One of the things I have been stressing is that we have to look beyond the United States as we legislate or regulate. A little-known fact is that the 5 millionth Mini-Tel was installed by France Telecom in February. They forcefed that — meaning they said they were going to subsidize the distribution of these Mini-Tel terminals. We think if we do that, a huge information-services market will develop, so, for example, you could access all the stamp collectors in France if you want, or if you have some illness and you want to exchange information with people who have a similar illness in France, you can.

Now, where we are going with that in this country is one of the more interesting questions because that can be used in an extremely constructive way. That's particularly true if you begin to talk about an interactive, full-motion video link where, for example, your children could be tutored at night in their home or where schools, without having to be a part of private networks, could order important educational resources that otherwise wouldn't be available.

Q: But to get this kind of information, don't you need a keyboard, a kind of computer arrangement? Why aren't we combining that technology with the television screen?

A: There is a view in Washington that that's going to happen in the future — that the future TV-makers are, perhaps, going to be Digital, IBM and what have you. I don't know if that is true or not. You asked me earlier whether I would predict wireless as the wave of the future in video distribution.

CNS Photo

Alfred C. Sikes, chairman of the Federal Communications Commission, believes communications technology is changing rapidly.

Appropriately, in the United State we don't amass technologists and economists and seers to tell us what the future is going to look like. First they're often wrong, as you know, and second, since we are not in a determinist sort of government, we shy away from that. But if you go over to the Defense Advance Research Projects Agency, otherwise known as DARPA, that you will find a lot of people believing that that's exactly where we're going and that maybe in 10 to 15 years you're going to be buying these as combined units or, as an option, in combination with stand-alone units that might be used just for passive activity.

Q: What do you see as the future of network television? Is it going the way of the dinosaur?

A: What's going the way the dinosaur is having your asset value and your profit-making potential based in scarcity. That's what used to work so well for the networks and their affiliates because they controlled the few channels of distribution. That is no longer true. We are in a day of rapidly expanding channels of distribution. As a consequence, the people who thrive in the future are going to be those who are good at the creating side, the production side, the marketing side. My view is that the networks and their affiliates have a bright future if they don't worry so much about the distribution part of it, but are prepared to be good regardless of whether they get into the home by over-the-air broadcasting, by cable, or by fiber-optic link.

New hair care products leave a lot to be desired

By Linda Anderson

Judging the quality of any new soap or other kind of cleaning product is difficult in this area, because of the "quality" of the water here.

Anderson

Remember that fact while I tell you about Clean and Clear shampoo and conditioner from Revlon, which we recently checked out for performance, price and advertising accuracy.

Both the conditioner and the shampoo are logically named, because both are as clear and as colorless as water. In fact, you have to memorize which is which by the color of the bottles' caps — the ones we tried had a purple cap for the shampoo and an aqua cap for the conditioner.

Label advertising claimed the products were "dermatologist tested," whatever that means (just one dermatologist did the testing?) The shampoo bottle's back label claimed the product is "The crystal clear shampoo for hair that needs extra body. Rich, deep cleansing lather gently lifts out dirt, excess oils, even build-up from styling products. Use it every time you shampoo — this balanced formula is so gentle it won't dry out your hair or scalp. ..."

On the back of the conditioner bottle, the advertising claims read: "This unique 100 percent oil free conditioner for hair that needs extra body is crystal clear as you pour it on, instantly foamy as you work it in (your signal that it's working) — and clean as you rinse it out.

"The advanced formula won't leave a cloudy film or heavy residue on your hair. ..."

Each bottle cost $2.18. And products are as clear, which, I suppose, at least makes them look unique.

I'm not sure about the uniqueness of their formulas, but in performance, the shampoo was no better and no worse than any other — pour it on, lather it up, rinse it out. End of story.

The conditioner, on the other hand, was not what I expected. Yes, you massage it through the already-shampooed hair, just like any other conditioner. Yes, it does foam up some (not too much), just like it says on the label. But then the problems start — its "advanced formula" won't rinse out. You can stand under the shower for a full minute, just like you're supposed to do, and then discover that some of the conditioner is still in your hair. Every time I used the conditioner, I had to rinse twice. The first time it happened, I thought I just hadn't rinsed long enough. The second time, I figured I was in too much of a hurry. The third time I made sure I rinsed longer than enough, and the conditioner still didn't rinse totally out with the first rinse.

Enough was enough — I just quit using the conditioner.

The products aren't terrible, but they aren't great either. They are clear, but that's not enough to make me want to buy them again.

Price listed is from a local discount store. Prices at other locations may vary.

Part of the Solution not the Pollution

Pest controls alternatives to pesticides

By Susan E. Tomer
Hearst News Service

Remember the old days? Spot some bugs, reach for the spray, blast the critters into oblivion. Ah, the smell of diazinon in the morning!

Now that Americans are supposed to be Earth-friendly, they're also becoming aware of natural predators and botanical insecticides as alternatives to chemical pest controls. Caution still must be used with both, however. And do they work?

"In the last two years there's been a marked increase, and especially in the last year, in organic gardening. Over the course of the spring we were running 10 to 15 percent over projections," says Paul Conrad, the "company communicator" at Gardener's Supply.

The Burlington, Vt., mail order company sells natural pest controls and composting and recycling equipment.

Conrad said orders for composting equipment doubled in 1989.

Mail order seed companies such as Burpee and Park for many years have sold biological controls in the form of "beneficial" insects.

Ladybugs are voracious eaters of aphids — one ladybug can eat 40 to 50 aphids a day — along with mealybugs, thrips, leafhoppers and the eggs and larvae of many other plant enemies. Other beneficials are praying mantis, green lacewings, fly parasites, trichogramma wasps, braconid wasps, tachinid flies and spiders.

Tim McCabe, an entomologist with the State Museum of New York, says he doubts there's a rise in mail-order bugs. He gets more calls about chemical insecticides, particularly for house pests such as carpenter ants and cluster flies.

People do want to attract butterflies, he says; in addition to looking nice, they pollinate flowers and some butterfly larvae do keep down weeds. And, McCabe says, their susceptibility to pollution makes them valuable environmental barometers.

If you do choose to try using natural predators, "You'd want to time the arrival of insects to when you have established plants, not when you're sowing the seed," advises Carolyn Klass, an entomologist at Cornell University in Ithaca, N.Y.

If your garden has a history of infestation by, say, aphids, then you may want to order biological controls ahead of time, Klass says.

But even good-guy bugs don't ensure an end to the problem. There must be an adequate food supply to keep them around. If you have too many praying mantis and not enough pests the mantis will begin devouring each other; 10 in an average-sized yard is probably too many mantis, Klass says.

Getting the good bugs to stick around is another problem.

"Ladybugs are sort of biologically programmed to live off stored fat," says Klass. By the time they reach you from the Sierra Mountains of eastern California where they have overwintered, "they're still living off stored fat. They're not hungry right away." One study found that "only about 5 percent hung around" after being released in backyards, Klass says.

McCabe says the ladybugs migrate 200 or so miles west after overwintering, perhaps because they're hungry.

And, with ladybugs, "You always have to have some aphids available for them to eat. It's tricky," says Klass.

As for having too many beneficial insects — aside from the cannibalizing amongst mantids — Klass says, "I've never seen anything that indicates they tip the balance."

Klass also says she hasn't seen "a whole lot of evidence one way or another" that trichogramma wasps, another mail order favorite, are effective in controlling certain worms and moths that destroy vegetables and fruit trees.

Gardeners may turn to "natural" pesticides made of plant or animal products thinking they won't harm people, the environment or beneficial insects.

"Contrary to belief, some of the botanical or so-called organic pesticides can be just as toxic as chemical pesticides," says Carolyn Ormsbee, horticultural resource manager at Gardener's Supply. "The most popular organic insecticide is rotenone and rotenone is toxic. You shouldn't get it into your drinking water or your stream. It should be used with caution." Rotenone is derived from the roots of several tropical plants.

"People should realize that rotenone can be toxic to you and it also can be toxic to beneficials. ... Rotenone will also kill your ladybugs, all the good guys in your garden as well as your bad guys."

Wear gloves and a mask when using all insecticides and don't spray on a windy day.

The experts also advise knowing your insect; every insect doesn't respond to every treatment.

Pest controls

- Set sticky traps to immobilize pests forever – Tanglefoot, double-sided caterpillar tape. These can also trap ants, which defend aphids by fighting off their predators.
- Use sex attractants (pheremones) to draw and trap pests, such as coddling moths in apple orchards.
- Select resistant plant varieties – plant more than one type of favorite flowers and vegetables and note varieties that are least effected by insects and diseases.
- Use natural pest controls such as pesticidal soaps, bacterial spores, rotenone and pyrethrum.

DEAR ABBY

Boys taught to play piano win applause

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Please tell "Piano Lover" that one of the great joys of my life is that, at 81, I can still sit down at the piano and play "Dizzy Fingers" and dozens of other popular numbers as well as classical.

Van Buren

My parents forced me to take piano lessons when I was 10 years old. I had very little talent and I hated to practice, but I had to whether I liked it or not, so eventually I learned how to play. I didn't realize it at the time, but they did me a tremendous favor when they wouldn't let me quit.

Now that I am retired, playing the piano is my most rewarding hobby. I see many retired folks who are bored to death, with nothing to do but sit in a chair and rock endlessly. I love to walk, but due to a knee injury I got playing four years of college football, I can't walk as much as I'd like to.

Now, piano is my love. What a joy to play Broadway show tunes. I also love Strauss waltzes, Chopin, Debussy, Wagner, as well as those fast, showy novelty numbers.

I agree with you, Abby. Let the boy take piano lessons. It's a wonderful way to learn the basics of music. And by the way, nobody who knew me when I was young would ever take me for a sissy. — B. MORGAN SCHERER, JOHNSON CITY, TENN.

DEAR MORGAN: Read on for a couple of other male pianists who are anything but feminine:

DEAR ABBY: I had to write in response to "Piano Lover," who wrote to say that her husband wouldn't allow their son to take piano lessons because he was afraid he'd become a sissy.

My son, Steve, now 18, started taking piano lessons when he was 8. He has such a passion for music, along with his God-given talent, and has entertained people for hours with his piano playing. It never once crossed our mind — or his — that a pianist might be considered feminine.

By the way, Steve is also a varsity letter recipient in soccer and track. He lifts weights and is also in the top 5 percent of his class scholastically. He has a steady girlfriend, but other girls call him anyway. Believe me, Abby, this kid is no sissy. — STEVE'S MOM, SELLERSVILLE, PA.

DEAR ABBY: I'm usually pretty quiet concerning people's opinions, but when they make brash and erroneous statements about guys who take piano lessons, that's something I won't stand for.

I am 16 years old, stand 5 foot 10 and weight 200 pounds. I played first-string linebacker and fullback in football, and I'm a first-degree black belt. I've been taking piano lessons for eight years, which has enabled me to learn how to play nine other instruments, and I'm definitely no sissy.

I'm not saying this to brag on myself; I just want to let that father know that his son can take piano lessons without threatening his masculinity. Sign me ... MUSICAL BUT MACHO IN BLOOMINGTON

Latest fashions not for weak-at-heart

By Erma Bombeck

I miss hats. I never wore them, but whenever my girlfriend and I were drowning in a sea of leftovers, laundry and Looney Tunes, we'd drive to the nearest shopping center and try them on. Sometimes it would be the only laugh we'd had in months. In two or three hours, when our "convent wish" had gone away, we'd return to suburbia to do it all over again.

Bombeck

Recently we decided to try and recapture the mirth we once knew by spending an afternoon trying on dresses. Keep in mind a couple of decades have passed by.

After hours of pawing through racks, panic set in. Where had all the dresses gone — the ones that cleared the fanny and didn't cling to you like ugly wallpaper?

We asked the salesperson where the "real" dresses were. She said, "They're here." We said: "You don't understand. We don't want a prom dress that comes with a wrist corsage and a boy with sweaty palms. We want a going-to-dinner-sitting-down dress."

She assured us this was the current style. We looked at each other and said the same thing: "Who wears these dresses?" This is what we figured out.

■ KNITTED TUBE DRESS: This bit of elastic is the size of a surgical arm bandage and covers an area from just under the arms to just below the buttocks. It is a dress for sufferers who never sit on a wicker chair, climb stairs or have a run in their underwear. If the wearer should drop her purse on the floor, she must have the courage to walk away from it and not even think of bending over.

■ CHICKEN OF THE SEA: A mermaid strapless dress that hugs the body to just above the knee, where it breaks out into an epidemic of ruffles. This is worn by young girls who, when they sneeze, pray their 30 pounds of hair will cascade over their chests and save them from exposure.

■ FLORAL MADNESS: A dress of large, splashy flowers that is worn by girls weighing no more than 36 pounds. They must be young enough to have bone development, but no muscles. When worn by older women with extra pounds, these prints tend to come to full bloom and often the petals fall off.

■ MIDRIFF CRISIS: The key word in buying one of these creations is "childless." These are two-piecers that do not tolerate bulges, liver spots or breathing.

My girlfriend and I thought it would be fun to sack ourselves into these current styles and have a good laugh. It wasn't and we didn't. At least with hats, it was simple. You didn't have to have them surgically removed.

President George Bush takes questions from students during a visit to Farnsworth Elementary School Thursday afternoon in Chicago. Bush read to the students and told them afterward, "If you want to be president, learn to read." Bush was in Chicago to boost state Republican candidates.

Bush encourages children to read

CHICAGO (AP) — President Bush, here to boost Republican candidates, stopped at Farnsworth Elementary School, where he read to a group of children and told them afterward, "If you want to be president, learn to read."

As for his time in the White House, Bush told the children:

"I like it a lot. They've got good food there,"

He said being president is "not all hard work" and told the students he and his wife, Barbara, like to play with their dog, Millie, after he finishes work.

One child asked how many rooms are in the White House.

"That's a good question," Bush answered, guessing that the Executive Mansion has about 10 bedrooms.

He told the children to have their parents and grandparents read to them. After he read to the youngsters, they applauded. Bush then asked:

"You really like it or are you just saying that?"

Sweets in art exhibit good enough to eat

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Please don't eat the art exhibit.

Museum-goers may feel like kids in a candy store when viewing an exhibit on the history of using sugar, chocolate and other sweets to create works of art.

Highlights of the show at the California Museum of Science and Industry are a jelly-bean rendition of the Statue of Liberty, a house of chocolate chip cookies and a chocolate bust of Albert Einstein.

On display are "more than 200 culinary masterpieces," curators said.

"It's not a superscientific exhibit, but it's kind of frothy for summer," museum spokeswoman Sue Glad said.

"The Confectioner's Art" exhibit opened June 4 for an eight-week run.

Political convention panel recommends parties shorten national presentations

Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON – A panel of political experts concerned about declining public interest in presidential conventions recommended Thursday that the two major parties shorten their quadrennial extravaganzas.

The Commission on National Political Conventions also called on the major television networks, CNN and C-SPAN to give the parties three hours of free airtime in the fall of a presidential year when interest in the race traditionally is at its highest.

Former Republican Party Chairman Frank J. Fahrenkopf said the parties need to make changes in the convention structure to attract television viewers and keep them from switching the channel "to wrestling matches."

Former Democratic Party Chairman Charles T. Manatt said the convention could be compressed by getting away from "the custom of giving unknown mayors national exposure and massaging the egos of defeated presidential candidates."

The commission, made up of former campaign managers, political consultants, party leaders and media representatives, suggested that convention activities be compressed from four nights and days to three nights and four days.

A spokesman for the Democratic National Committee said party chairman Ronald Brown is considering "several options to change the convention format for 1992, including the commission's proposal."

A spokeswoman for the Republican National Committee said the commission's proposal "will be taken under advisement."

Members of the commission, appointed by the non-partisan Center for Democracy, a Washington-based think-tank, told reporters that American contributions to presidential campaigns have decreased dramatically. They said that unless more Americans contribute, the fund used to finance the campaigns will be $88 million in the red by 1996.

Individuals can contribute $1 each to the fund by checking a box on income tax returns. The fund is the only direct form of financing for presidential campaigns, although independent groups can make contributions through such means as political advertising that expresses support for a candidate.

Fahrenkopf complained that the number of Americans participating in the checkoff has been steadily declining.

Supporters of Bulgarian opposition protest likely Communist victories

SOFIA, Bulgaria (AP) — About 60,000 supporters of the opposition alliance took to the streets Monday to protest the projected victory of the Socialist Party, heir to the Communists who have controlled the Balkan nation since 1944.

Crowds rallied outside election headquarters shouting "Down with the red mafia!" after unofficial returns from Sunday's parliamentary vote showed the 16-party Union of Democratic Forces in second place.

Hundreds of cars and taxis, most of them displaying UDF flags, later crisscrossed downtown Sofia honking their horns. Passers-by cheered and waved UDF flags.

Small groups of UDF supporters walked through the city shouting anti-communist slogans or cheering the alliance.

The opposition alliance had predicted victory in the nation's first free balloting in 58 years, and its leaders claimed election irregularities affected the outcome of voting for the 400 parliamentary seats.

Official election results were not expected until Tuesday.

If their victory is confirmed, the Socialists would be the only ruling party in Eastern Europe to be returned to power in a multiparty election. The Communists changed their name to Socialists in April.

The party has said it would proceedly slowly with reforms. The opposition alliance favors swift change to a Western-style market economy to tackle growing inflation, a $10 billion foreign debt and consumer shortages.

Plamen Darakchiev, an alliance member and deputy editor in chief of the party's daily, Demokratsiya, predicted the new political lineup "will leave our people polarized in parliament."

Opposition chairman Zhelyu Zhelev told the rally the group would not form a coalition with the ruling party.

"In the National Assembly we will be a powerful opposition faction," he said.

In a nationwide televisiou broadcast Premier Andrei Lukanov urged "all public and political forces" to work together, the state news agency BTA reported.

"There are no losers in the present elections because in the final reckoning, the victory of democracy is a victory for all," he was quoted as saying.

Only in Sofia, the capital, did the alliance top the Socialists, according to a forecast by the West German polling group Infas.

The Infas projections showed the Socialists with 47 percent of the vote, the opposition alliance with 36 percent and the mainstream Agrarian Party, once a docile Communist ally, with 8 percent.

According to Infas, the mainly ethnic Turkish Movement for Rights and Freedoms will get 5.7 percent and the remaining 38 parties the rest.

The projections were based on the vote in 250 polling districts.

Of the 400 parliament seats, 200 will be allocated according to the percentage of votes each party receives. The remainder will go to candidates who receive more than 50 percent of the vote.

A second round of voting is scheduled for Sunday for races in which no candidate received more than 50 percent of the vote.

Western observers said the voting was generally free and fair, although there were scattered incidents of apparent manipulation.

Michel Aliot-Marie, who headed the European Democratic Union delegation, said any irregularities did not appear to have affected the results substantially, the state BTA news agency reported.

Georgi Spasov, spokesman for the opposition coalition, said alleged irregularities included illegal campaigning in front of polling stations.

"We are not trying to reject totally the results, but we will call the attention of the Central Electoral Committee and we shall seek re-election in some places," said Petar Beron, an opposition official.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Gorbachev agrees to talks

MOSCOW (AP) — President Mikhail S. Gorbachev has agreed to meet with the presidents of the three Baltic republics for the first time since he branded their independence moves unconstitutional, spokesmen said Monday.

Tuesday's scheduled meeting comes amid other new contacts between the Kremlin and Lithuania — the Baltic republic that has taken the boldest moves toward independence and has suffered most. Moscow's economic blockade against Lithuania enters its third month next week.

It also comes one week after Gorbachev returned from the United States, where congressional leaders made clear they would hold up approval of a U.S.-Soviet trade deal that Gorbachev wants until the embargo on Lithuania is lifted.

Captive pilot turns 76

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Monday marked the 76th birthday of British pilot Jack Mann — missing for 13 months now in Lebanon — and his wife lamented the "dead silence" surrounding his fate.

"I am not very bright today. There's so little to say," said Sunnie Mann, who spent her husband's birthday in their modest apartment in a seaside residential district of Moslem west Beirut.

"I don't know how he is or how he is surviving. I am doing nothing today. I haven't gone out. I don't have the courage."

She told The Associated Press she hoped her husband could find the courage to get through his ordeal.

Havel keeps minister

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (AP) — President Vaclav Havel will probably retain a former Communist as prime minister and ask him to form the nation's next government, Havel's spokesman said Monday.

Prime Minister Marian Calfa turned in his Communist Party card after last winter's revolution, and his continued role as prime minster for the next two years could draw criticism from Havel's allies and the Christian Democrats Havel hopes to include in a coalition government.

Many of his allies helped in the fight to smash Communist rule last winter.

The Civic Forum movement Havel founded to lead the revolution and its Slovak ally Public Against Violence easily won weekend parliamentary elections, the first free balloting in 44 years. Together the parties received about 46 percent of the vote for the new national legislature.

The final seat allocation is to be announced Wednesday, but projections showed they would receive about 170 of the 300 seats.

PLO condemns attack

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — The Palestine Liberation Organization, in a bid to salvage its dialogue with the United States, on Monday condemned attacks on civilians. But it did not specifically denounce a guerrilla raid on an Israeli beach.

Washington criticized the PLO for failing to explicitly condemn the raid, implying that the statement failed to meet U.S. anti-terrorism conditions. However, the PLO news agency WAFA reported another U.S.-PLO meeting took place Monday in Tunisia.

The United States has threatened to cut off its 18-month-old dialogue with the PLO over its refusal to condemn the foiled May 30 attack by a PLO faction. PLO chief Yasser Arafat has disassociated the organization from the raid but has not personally condemned it.

Mandela credits ANC

BONN, West Germany (AP) — Nelson Mandela told thousands of cheering supporters Monday that the African National Congress, not the South African government, deserves sole credit for initiating peace talks.

He also urged continued pressure for economic sanctions as long as apartheid exists in South Africa.

"Sanctions were introduced at the insistence of the African National Congress for the purpose of removing apartheid in all its forms," Mandela said.
