OPEC leaders gather for talks

GENEVA (AP) — OPEC ministers are taking a new look at the world oil market this weekend and could decide whether they can increase production without sending crude prices tumbling.

On the eve of their talks, some ministers of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries seemed reluctant to tamper with the cartel's current output accord.

The meeting was to begin today, but there was no indication of how long it would last.

Algeria's oil minister, Sadek Boussena, insisted upon arriving Friday in Geneva, "There's no need to raise the (production) ceiling as long as the price objective is not met."

Rilwanu Lukman, president of OPEC, was the last to arrive in Geneva for the opening round of talks later in the day.

Lukman, the Nigerian oil minister, said the price of oil "could do a little bit more."

"We would like it to be 18 (dollars a barrel)," he told reporters at the hotel where the ministers are staying.

Iraq's oil chief, Issam Abdul Raheem al-Chalabi, said he favored a "reasonable increase" in the supply cap. He gave no specifics.

The 13-nation cartel agreed in June on a production ceiling of 19.5 million barrels a day in the last six months of the year. Its price target was set at $18 a 42-gallon barrel.

But analysts say heavy cheating by Kuwait and the United Arab Emirates has helped kick supply up to 22 million barrels a day or more.

Prices have remained fairly firm, but they are under OPEC's target.

"We still have to obtain the goal of $18 ... We should work on it," said Ecuador's oil minister, Diego Tamariz.

Shakshuki said, "Eighteen dollars is better than increasing the quota."

Prices haven't hit the $18 mark in the past three months.

A basket of seven major crudes monitored by OPEC averaged $17.04 a barrel last week. It went above $18 last spring.

West Texas Intermediate, the benchmark grade of American oil, has been trading in the range of $19.50 to $20 a barrel.

Fergus MacLeod, an analyst at Barclays de Zoete Wedd in London, predicted prices would slip from 50 cents to $1 a barrel if the cartel increased production without halting members' cheating.

OPEC ministers agreed in June to meet this month and decide whether to raise their output 500,000 barrels a day in the final three months of 1989.

MacLeod said such an increase probably would translate into total production of 22.5 million barrels a day.

The organization's secretary-general, Subroto of Indonesia, said that 22 million barrels a day "looks like the demand for OPEC oil in the fourth quarter" of the year.

In addition to the supply ceiling, the ministers' agenda included a discussion of the best way to set their quotas. Each country is assigned a daily quota.

Kuwait and the United Arab Emirates want bigger shares as do some other nations.

Prosecutor named to task force board

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

A prosecutor has been named to the board overseeing the Permian Basin Drug Task Force, a move backers say is designed to escalate West Texas' battle against narcotics trafficking.

Andrews County District Attorney Jim Rex, a former Midland County prosecutor, will "represent a prosecutor's perspective" at task force meetings, he said of the change in the board's makeup.

Rex, Midland County District Attorney Al Schorre, Big Spring District Attorney Rick Hamby, Winkler County District Attorney Michael Fostel and Task Force Commander Tom Finley were among those who decided on the appointment while at last week's statewide prosecutor's meeting in El Paso, Schorre said.

"We decided we would have a D.A. representative at most of the task force meetings," Schorre, one of the task force organizers, said. "There would be feedback from the prosecutors and a way of the prosecutors knowing, at least informally, the task force operations. We talked about prosecutors having more input into operations, and for the task force to give us more information back.

Hurricane damage could top $3 billion

CHARLESTON, S.C. (AP) — Tempers ran high Saturday as residents waited in long lines for ice and food amid damage from Hurricane Hugo that authorities said could top $3 billion statewide. Police arrested dozens of looters.

Confronted with reports of high-priced goods, the city later in the day enacted an emergency law to stop price-gouging at newly reopened stores.

In North Carolina, Gov. Jim Martin sent 200 National Guard and other security officers to Charlotte and asked President Bush to declare a federal disaster area in 51 North Carolina counties.

Hugo, meanwhile, wore itself out over Canada's St. Lawrence Valley after progressively weakening through Virginia, West Virginia, western Pennsylvania and western New York state.

The hurricane, which left at least 27 people dead in the Caribbean, was blamed for an additional 21 deaths in the Carolinas, Virginia and New York.

In Charleston, the hardest-hit city on the mainland, many residents remained without electricity or telephone service Saturday. Long lines formed at the few service stations that had generators to pump gas, which reportedly was being sold for up to $4.50 per gallon. The state already has requested federal relief.

At a Charlotte mall, a panicky crowd hoping to get ice in a parking lot started pushing and shoving and police were called. There were no injuries or arrests.

Red Cross will seek relief funds

From Staff Reports

Monday likely will find the National Red Cross in a massive fund-raising campaign, supported by its local chapters across the nation.

Less than half a million dollars of the $18.9 million total national resource budget will remain after an estimated $10 million is used to fund Puerto Rican relief efforts, according to local Red Cross Chairman Michael Courter.

Only through the voluntary support of the American public can the Red Cross meet the massive challenge of providing shelter, food, emergency medical and other humanitarian aid to thousands of disaster victims.

Financial contributions can be mailed to PO Box 1706, Midland, TX 79702. Checks or money orders should be made payable to the Red Cross Disaster Fund.

Telephone pledges can be called into the Red Cross at 800/453-9000, toll-free in English or 800/453-4487, toll-free for Spanish-speaking donors.

A special contribution program has been set up to allow an automatic $20 donation billed by the telephone company. The number for donors through the automatic giving program ONLY is 900/230-0202. Callers to the 900 number also can hear the latest details on Red Cross relief efforts.

Confederate Air Force officials reject Brownsville's 'incentives'

HARLINGEN (AP) — The Confederate Air Force has rejected a $9.6 million proposal from Brownsville that would keep the organization's headquarters in the Lower Rio Grande Valley.

The CAF's general staff voted unanimously Saturday to limit a referendum next month to a decision on whether to pursue Midland's proposal to move the organization's headquarters and a planned museum to the West Texas city.

The CAF, currently based in Harlingen, is an organization that restores and flies vintage military aircraft.

Brownsville Mayor Ygnacio Garza immediately called the General Staff's decision not to put the Valley's proposal on the ballot with Midland's a mistake.

"We said we'll match the cash that Midland is offering but on top of that, we'll give you the utilities and the land," Garza said.

Midland is offering 51 acres of land and buildings.

McAllen Mayor Othal Brand said Lower Valley officials will not try to convince the CAF's general membership that the Midland offer is not best for the group in the long term.

The group's bylaws require that 75 percent of the general membership must approve a move from its current headquarters at Valley International Airport.

Stanton finds its parents going back to school

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

STANTON — There is a move on here to send parents back to school.

There's nothing lacking in their own education; they are part of a VIP program — VIPS, actually, Volunteers in Public Schools.

"A few years ago, we made a mistake," said Morris Williamson, director of curriculum for Stanton public schools. "We told parents to get out (of the school's business of teaching), and we would do it."

Since then, things have backfired.

"We (educators) have had a dose of crow pie," Williamson said. "We got awfully conceited about our ability to teach. We thought we knew it all."

Not so, he admitted.

And so agreed Ann Prough, VIPS chairman.

"This was true throughout the nation," said Mrs. Prough. School officials thought "teachers didn't need parents" in school.

But the VIPS program's payoff comes in helping students to learn, to develop and to mature.

"If it just helps one student, it will be worth it," said Mrs. Prough, who was joined by teacher Linda Denton in coordinating Stanton's VIPS program test run last spring.

Even before the volunteers officially stepped into the classroom, Williamson knew that a communicative child with understanding of a subject often "can teach another child" when a teacher might fail.

"One child can teacher another," Williamson said. And "parents and other adults know how to communicate with children." Learn is enhanced.

The success of last spring's trial run persuaded school administrators and teachers to adopt the VIPS program.

"It's really hard to put a value on it," Williamson said. "It's been a rich experience for all of us."

As it turns out, there are "lots of talent, lots of ideas, and lots of ability" among the adult volunteers who offer their time, skills and talents to assist teachers in their various roles in and outside the classroom, he said.

Warm, sunny day expected

From Staff and Wire Reports

Today's forecast calls for sunny skies and warmer with a high in the mid-70s and 10 to 15 mph southeast winds, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Tonight will be clear with a low in the upper-40s, while Monday will be sunny with a high in the low-80s, NWS said.

Saturday's high of 69 was 30 degrees short of the record of 99 set on Sept. 23, 1933. The overnight low was expected to near the record set in 1975, when the mercury dipped to 49, NWS said.

STATE

A ridge of high pressure centered over the central plains continued to build across Texas late Saturday afternoon.

The high pressure system was helping to reinforce the cool dry air already in place over most of the state. The cold front was leading a cooler air mass over central Texas just north of a line from Lufkin to Austin to Del Rio.

Widely scattered showers had developed over parts of southeast Texas and along the upper Gulf coast. Other showers and thunderstorms were located off the upper Texas coast in the Gulf of Mexico. Skies were mostly cloudy over the eastern third of Texas while the rest of the state was fair.

Winds were blowing from the south over Far West Texas. Northerly winds prevailed over the rest of the state. Speeds were generally 15 to 25 mph. Some parts of the state had strong gusts and lake wind advisories were posted.

Temperatures were in the 50s over the Panhandle while readings had climbed into the 80s over extreme south Texas. The 60s and 70s were the rule over the rest of the state. Extremes ranged from 57 degrees at Amarillo to 87 degrees at Brownsville, Harlingen and McAllen.

The National Weather Service forecast mostly fair skies Sunday. Lows in the 40s and 50s and highs in the 70s and 80s.

NATION

Summer ended abruptly Saturday when temperatures plummeted more than 20 degrees in an hour in the Northeast and hit record lows on the northern Plains as a strong cold front rushed across the nation.

During the afternoon the cold front, accompanied by high wind and locally heavy rain, extended from New England into central Texas.

There was a striking difference in temperatures on either side of the front. Early in the afternoon the temperature at New York City's LaGuardia Airport was 82 degrees while Binghamton, N.Y., about 200 miles away, had a temperature of only 40 degrees. By 4 p.m. EDT, New York City had fallen to 54.

Baltimore had a temperature of 83 while Washington, 45 miles away, had a reading of 60. The temperature at Philadelphia dropped from 80 to 57 in two hours.

Behind the cold front, a large dome of high pressure centered over Nebraska produced record low temperatures during the morning over much of the Plains and Mississippi Valley. The temperature of 23 at North Platte, Neb., was the lowest temperature recorded there so early during the month of September. The previous record was 23 degrees on Sept. 25, 1926.

Saturday was the first day of autumn.

Is it the beginning of an energy policy?

By ALLAN R. GOLD
New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — As members of Congress and interest groups look more closely at President Bush's clean-air proposal, many are saying it is not just an anti-pollution plan but a national energy policy in the making.

The measure would dramatically reshape the nation's use of energy in the 1990s and into the next century, promoting greater reliance on natural gas and other clean-burning fuels at the expense of coal and gasoline.

And it has broad implications for energy conservation, fuel imports and regional economic development.

The president's legislation has such an important effect on energy policy that it could undercut the national energy strategy the administration is scheduled to complete in December 1990.

Linda G. Stuntz, the Energy Department's deputy under secretary for policy, called the clean-air measure "the most profound energy legislation Congress considers this session" and said it would have been better if the national energy plan had been in place first.

But the president, she said, was determined "to move now" on environmental legislation. In his campaign, Bush had promised to give the environment a high priority.

The Bush bill "is energy policy on a grand scale," said Rep. Philip R. Sharp, D-Ind., whose House Energy and Power Subcommittee is reviewing the effects of the legislation on energy.

And William G. Rosenberg, an Environmental Protection Agency official, said energy and environment are "two sides of the same coin," because the burning of oil and coal contributes so heavily to environmental damage.

Though cleaner fuels like natural gas and low-sulfur coal may seem a self-evident solution to such problems, Rosenberg said, the nation has not always followed that path.

In 1978, for example, Congress limited the use of natural gas to generate electricity because of fears of a gas shortage.

In 1977, to protect miners' jobs in regions that produced high-sulfur coal, the lawmakers passed an amendment to the Clean Air Act that took away the economic advantages of low-sulfur coal.

That is one reason many utilities are burning high-sulfur coal, a major cause of air pollution and acid rain.

Sharp noted that when the Clean Air Act was amended in 1977, the energy subcommittee did not even have hearings on it.

In Montreal last week, the 3,400 delegates to the World Energy Conference focused not on traditional concerns like oil and gas reserves, but on environmental problems associated with those fuels: urban smog, acid rain and global warming.

The president's bill, now under consideration in the House Health and Environment Subcommittee, addresses urban smog, acid rain and airborne toxic chemicals.

Other legislators are sponsoring a broad array of measures that would attack other problems and in some cases impose more stringent restrictions.

"It wasn't a riot, but it could have been," said police Lt. Mike Connolly. "There was some pushing and shoving, cursing, just some hot tempers."

At another mall, motorists turned one lane of a road into a parking lot when they jumped out of their cars to get ice that was being distributed.

Authorities reported 20 incidents of looting and 30 arrests in North Carolina since Hugo struck; 89 arrests were made in South Carolina, including 27 in Charleston, where the National Guard began patrolling Friday.

The troops will remain on the streets of Charleston "just as long as we need to to maintain the safety for people," South Carolina Gov. Carroll Campbell said.

Running water was restored to most places, although residents were warned to boil it before drinking it, and mail service could resume Monday, Mayor Joseph P. Riley Jr. said at a news conference. Banks of pay telephones were to be set up in city parks.

The Charleston City Council passed an emergency ordinance barring price-gouging later Saturday after learning of an incident in which 5-pound bags of ice were being sold for $10. Violators face $200 fines and 30 days in jail.

People waited as long as four hours to get into a supermarket that opened in Charleston and when they got inside they "bought anything they could get their hands on," said Food Lion manager, Robbie Roberts.

South Carolina Electric & Gas hoped to have power restored to hospitals, which had been operating on generators, by late Saturday, Riley said.

At least 960,000 people in the Carolinas remained without power and utility officials said it could be four weeks or more before power is restored everywhere, officials said.

"If you're a camper, you're going to be in good shape," said John E. Bourne Jr., mayor of North Charleston, in a wry observation about the primitive conditions.

VIPS

Volunteers grade papers, prepare teaching aids, photocopy materials, monitor tests, read to students, accompany students and teachers on field trips, run errands, and hand out materials in the elementary and secondary schools.

The teachers still do the teaching.

The parent volunteers "are becoming partners with the school," said Williamson.

Parents become an integral part of the learning process by encouraging children to learn, to stay in school, and to view school as an exciting and challenging adventure rather than "have-to" drudgery.

"We can't do it without parental support," said Williamson. And excluding parents from the classroom wasn't the "parents fault" but was "just part of the system."

In the VIPS program, the "teacher takes the leadership role" and sets guidelines for the volunteers. The students are the ones who benefit from the "learning experience."

"The teacher is really a manager — manager of activities," said Williamson. Teachers, who traditionally have felt overworked and burdened for the teaching tasks assigned them, now may have help by way of volunteers. However, the VIPS service is optional with the teachers.

"The teacher has always needed an extra pair of arms, extra pair of legs, and extra set of eyes," said Williamson.

Marilyn Wheeler, who teaches fifth grade, said she is excited about the VIPS program. "I love it."

She worked with a volunteer, Sharon Jones, in the trial run last school year.

"We worked real well together," Mrs. Wheeler said. "She wanted me again, and I wanted her again. She's so wonderful. She will do anything I ask her to do. And we are friends."

The volunteer is "to help the teacher and the students."

"The volunteers are not professionals," Mrs. Wheeler noted, "but they have a professional attitude."

"They don't do any teaching, and we don't leave them alone in the classroom," Mrs. Wheeler said. "We try to manage their time. It takes a lot of organizing to get ready for them. It's well worth the time."

Mrs. Jones said she volunteered for the VIPS program because "I have always wanted to know what goes on in school with the kids. I like to know what's going on."

Though curiosity got her into VIPS service, Mrs. Jones said she has no desire to be a teacher.

"I don't have the patience. I enjoy watching them learn things and see how the teachers are teaching them."

Mrs. Jones volunteered for Mrs. Wheeler's fifth-grade class since her daughter, Emily, now 11, was a fifth-grader last school term. This year, Mrs. Jones decided to stay with Mrs. Wheeler and the fifth-graders even though her daughter has advanced to the sixth grade.

"I would prefer not to help in the same grade that my daughter is in" mainly to avoid any impression of favoritism," Mrs. Jones said. "It works better for me, and it works better for my daughter. It's not fair to play favorites."

Mrs. Jones said she appreciates the devotion of teachers.

"The teachers have so much to do, so much red tape to take care of. I think they are wonderful people to be so dedicated."

The VIPS volunteer views Mrs. Wheeler as a "super person to help. She has everything organized and has written down what she wants you (the volunteer) to do" during the volunteer's optional hours at school.

Mrs. Wheeler said the VIPS program is "a wonderful program. It does free us (teachers) up to do other things."

In her role as VIPS chairman, Ann Prough said the "only thing wrong is we don't have enough volunteers."

"We could even use an old sorehead," mused Williamson. His reference was to Stanton's legendary "soreheads" who are good-hearted community workers and leaders but who have their quirks, peculiarities, and gripes.

Currently, about 70 volunteers lend their free time to assist 40 of the school system's 72 teachers who have asked for volunteers. Approximately 800 students are enrolled from kindergarten through high school in Stanton.

Brenda Kendall, VIPS co-chairman, said the "volunteer program is very beneficial to both the volunteers and the school.

"We volunteers get more from it than the teachers do ... by learning and by getting to know the teachers and the students," Mrs. Kendall said.

And school administrator Morris Williamson said the volunteers "come along and help us (educators) make the finished program" in the formal education of children and youth.

Williamson suggested that the VIPS program, which attracts volunteers from their 20s into their 90s, is a evidence of a community that is interested in its school children.

"A school," Williamson said, "is no stronger than its community."

TASK

"We think there would be a real advantage to the prosecutors and the task force coordinating and working together," Schorre said.

The appointment comes three weeks after a lack of coordination, disparate sentencing in different counties, and confusion about the task force mission was reported in a series of stories in the Midland Reporter-Telegram. The series examined 185 task force cases filed following an August 1988 roundup of suspected drug dealers.

Sentences for delivery of marijuana, cocaine, and heroin ranged from two years probation to 50 years in state prison, the newspaper found.

"We felt like some of the problems pointed out in the series of articles was due to a lack of communication," Rex said. "If we had a representative there we could answer questions. We could head problems off."

Rex gave an example of how the liasion might work.

"If they want to adopt particular procedure, we would say whether or not it was legal, whether or not we wanted to do it," the prosecutor said. "It would more or less give a prosecutor's perpsective to the task force."

The appointment was applauded by Rep. Lamar Smith, one of the task force's biggest backers and a member of the House Judiciary Committee.

"So often, as in this instance, you just needed to expose the problems," Smith said. "There was a willingness to say yes there is a problem, now let's find a solution. Instead of reacting and taking offense, positive steps were taken.

"It was a textbook example of the way local government is supposed to work," Smith said.

The chairman of the task force board, Big Spring Police Chief Joe Cook, was elated at the decision.

"We have been trying to get the prosecutors to do something like this for months, but they weren't interested until now," Cook said.

"As silly as it may sound, there is a certain amount of rhythm generated by coordination," he continued. "If the prosecutors are not attuned to what is going on and the background of the cases, I don't think they can appreciate what the task force is trying to do."

Cook said during his tenure as an FBI agent he met frequently with federal prosecutors. That kind of cooperation has been sorely lacking between task force officers and prosecutors, he complained.

"We would meet informally," Cook said. "It was a good place to talk about the direction of the cases, and what we were trying to accomplish. The thinking was we all have the same goal, now let's make sure it gets done. That hasn't happened with the task force."

Cook said there is built-in tension between prosecutors and officers.

"There is a tendency for each to think the other is keeping them from doing their job, and we get our nose out of joint," Cook said.

With a prosecutor on the board, Cook said he plans to be conciliatory.

"I probably will take the condescending approach, and ask (the prosecutors) what are we doing wrong, what can we do better in the future," Cook said.

Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter, whose agency sponsors the 17-county task force, reacted by saying, "If it will help bring the prosecutors close and assist in the coordination, I'm all for it."

Finley, whose seven investigators are responsible for 23,500 square miles in 17 counties, said the appointment was a necessary change.

"We would like to work closer with the district attorneys," Finley said. "They are going to be represented at our meetings, and it will promote a more unified approach. It will bring us all together."

Finley was one of the officers who complained bitterly about an April 11, 1989 plea bargain in Winkler County. The agreement, negotiated by Fostel, netted probated sentences for four men who admitted hauling almost 700 pounds of high-grade marijuana into the area.

Fostel and task force officers, including Finley and former commander Art Van Dorn, admitted there was a communications breakdown before the plea bargain was announced — the kind of breakdown task force members are trying to avoid with the appointment of Rex.

"They will know what we are doing, and we will know what they need from us," Finley said.

Schorre, a member of Gov. Bill Clements' Criminal Justice Task Force, credited the Reporter-Telegram for the decision to appoint Rex.

"The newspaper being involved certainly made the prosecutors take a good interest, a healthy interest in task force procedures and operations," he said.

But unlike the federal system, where strict sentencing guidelines are in place, Rex said citizens likely will have to accept different sentences for the same crime.

"I don't know if the system is designed to make the sentences consistent," Rex said. "If people in Andrews want to give someone 99 years in a drug case, and in another county that person might get probation, that is just because the people of Andrews are determined to clean up their community."

Congressman Smith said he was hopeful the task force would be able to operate more efficiently.

"This is a good exampe of local citizens taking the initiative to solve problems," he said. "The Reporter-Telegram, Al Schorre and the task force deserve credit for focusing on the problem, and coming up with a solution."

CAF

The proposal to keep the CAF in the valley calls for 20 acres of land now and 30 acres later at Brownsville-South Padre Island International Airport, financing for the museum and free utilities for 20 years. It also pledges $3 million in contributions over three years.

Brownsville was chosen as the site for the Valley's counter-proposal to the Midland offer because no land was available at Valley International, according to the Valley Morning Star newspaper in Harlingen.

The General Staff also heard relocation proposals Saturday from Longview, San Marcos and Victoria.

San Antonio officials asked the CAF to delay any relocation decision until after they've had a chance to prepare a firm proposal.

CAF Executive Director Ralph Royce said the Valley's proposal and those from Longview, San Marcos and Victoria all were rejected because they would require the CAF to retire bonded indebtedness necessary to finance the new facilities.

The General Staff decided that any proposal based on revenue projections for the museum and requiring debt service by the CAF "would not be a prudent action," Royce said.

The Midland offer has no debt service requirement, Royce said.

Girl who fell from vehicle dies

From Staff Reports

A 15-year-old Midland girl who fell from a moving vehicle died in Midland Memorial Hospital on Saturday, hospital officials said.

Jennifer Reynolds died at 5:38 p.m. from severe head injuries she suffered Thursday after falling from a car traveling in the 500 block of West Indiana Avenue, officials said.

Midland police said the girl was riding inside the car with her mother, Debra Norris Coombs, 32, when the incident occurred.

Quayle calls for return of islands held by Soviets

TOKYO (AP) — Vice President Dan Quayle on Saturday called for Moscow to return several islands claimed by Japan but occupied by the Soviets since the end of World War II.

Quayle

He also warned Japan's leading opposition party, the Socialists, that their desire to modify a mutual security treaty with the United States is wrong.

The Socialists, helped by scandals and a controversial tax reform that have eroded support for the long-governing conservatives, currently are riding a wave of popularity in Japan.

"Anybody that thinks you ought to tamper or rewrite or modify the security treaty is wrong," Quayle told reporters traveling with him on Air Force II. "It is not just a mere piece of paper. It is an alliance, security, deterrence."

More than 50,000 U.S. troopers are stationed throughout Japan under the treaty the Socialists want modified.

The Socialists also have urged strict checks to ensure U.S. Navy vessels calling on Japanese ports do not have nuclear weapons on board — a call in conflict with Washington's policy of refusing to say whether or not its ships carry nuclear arms.

During a visit to Japan's northernmost main island of Hokkaido, Quayle said America shares Japan's "heartfelt desire" for a return of several small islands off Hokkaido's northern shores, which Japan calls its "northern territories."

"We hope the idea of glasnost and perestroika will someday come to the northern territories and that they will be rightfully returned to Japan," Quayle said in a speech at the official residence of Hokkaido's Gov. Takahiro Yokomichi.

Soviet troops occupied the islands in the closing days of World War II in 1945, and Japanese civilians were evacuated.

The territorial dispute has stalled completion of a treaty formally ending the war and a visit to Japan by Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

Gorbachev's reforms are based on his policies of glasnost, or openness, and perestroika, the restructing of the government and economy.

Quayle traveled to the Japanese Air Self Defense Force base at Chitose, where he was briefed on Soviet military strength in the area.

Col. Minoru Hoso, flight group commander of the Second Air Wing, told Quayle the Soviets have stationed one army division, or about 10,000 troops, in the disputed islands. He said they also have 400,000 troops in the region, along with 800 ships and 2,400 aircraft.

Quayle later visited the American Misawa Air Base, on the northern tip of Honshu, Japan's main island, where he spoke to about 1,000 military personnel and their families before returning to Tokyo in the evening.

He was accompanied by his wife, Marilyn, and the U.S. ambassador to Japan, Michael Armacost, and his wife.

Quayle arrived in Tokyo on Thursday from South Korea on the second leg of an Asia tour that will take him to the Philippines and Malaysia.

Yeltsin tells Soviets about Americans

MOSCOW (AP) — After years in the thick of the Communist Party's struggle to build Soviet socialism, Boris N. Yeltsin says he knows a place where the average working man is happy and secure.

That place, he is telling his Soviet supporters, is the United States.

The silver-haired populist, who has spent the last two years irritating President Mikhail S. Gorbachev and the Soviet establishment, returned from a nine-city tour of the United States on Monday to face two pressing controversies.

One was resolved within days when the powerful Communist Party daily Pravda publicly apologized for reprinting an article alleging Yeltsin boozed and spent his way across the United States.

The other surrounds his comments about life in America, reminiscent of tales that have drawn immigrants to the New World for generations.

The comments were rosier than many Americans would venture. They are bound to be noticed by party officials who question Yeltsin's loyalty to Communist ideals, whether he has any firm program to cure the Soviet Union's economic ills, and wonder whether his long-term plan is to elbow out Gorbachev.

"Their supermarkets have 30,000 food items," Yeltsin told 20,000 supporters Friday in his first public appearance since returning. "You can't imagine it. It makes the people feel secure."

In order to understand what they're missing and therefore change their own society, Yeltsin said, "at least 100 million Soviets must pass through the American school of supermarkets. The leaders must be first."

The 58-year-old Siberian who came to Moscow in 1985 and was named by Gorbachev to run the capital's party organization, also cited U.S. bounty in the popular weekly Arguments and Facts.

The point is obvious for Soviets struggling through shortages of items such as cigarettes, meat, matches and soap in the fifth year of Gorbachev's reforms. Americans, Yeltsin told his supporters, "know how to work. They enjoy life, and they are humane. They live very well."

He pointed a finger at the Soviet approach to building a socialist society:

"Our decades-old slogan to 'Catch up with America and leave it behind' was of great damage to us because it exists for itself, for the sake of prestige, not for the people.

"We will never catch up with them and never leave them behind and we do not need to strive for this. We must strive for a better life for our people." In both his address to the crowd in Zelenograd, outside Moscow, and his newspaper interview, Yeltsin noted America too has its problems, primarily unemployment. But he glanced over them.

Yeltsin says he supports Gorbachev's restructuring program, but differs on tactics. He says conservatives are keeping Gorbachev from moving faster and warns Gorbachev's program is losing steam.

He told the crowd the Soviet Union should work for more favorable trade agreements with the United States, invite American farmers to till Soviet land on long-term leases and allow Americans to build 1 million apartments and sell them to whoever can afford them.

Yeltsin's barbed criticisms have not been lost on Gorbachev, who fired him as Moscow party chief in November 1987 after he questioned

Cease-fire violated hours after thousands head back to Beirut

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Syrian and Christian forces clashed with mortars and machine guns in the hills overlooking Beirut Saturday, shattering a truce that had brought thousands of hopeful refugees flooding back to their ravaged city.

Police reported three people were wounded in the Christian enclave north of Beirut when mortar rounds exploded in residential neighborhoods.

Officials said the clashes appeared to be limited. But residents who have seen several cease-fires collapse were anxious.

A newly formed committee made up of officials from the various factions met at a horse track on Beirut's dividing Green Line and announced that shipping blockades imposed by both sides would be lifted immediately.

The Arab League envoy, Lakhdar Ibrahimi, told reporters that the group agreed "to work immediately on consolidating a cease-fire" and to reopen Beirut airport, the country's only public airport which has been closed since March 12.

But three hours later, the fighting flared. Ibrahimi told the Christian Voice of Lebanon radio: "These are unnecessary setbacks. I'm getting in touch with the members of the committee to curb this deterioration."

The committee's next meeting was scheduled for Sunday.

The clashes were the first reported since 10 p.m. Friday. Sporadic bursts of automatic weapons fire and occasional rocket-propelled grenade explosions had been heard throughout the day along the Green Line.

After rejecting numerous other truce attempts by the Arab League, both Christians and Moslems agreed last week to adhere to the latest peace proposal.

The committee comprises representatives from Christian leader Gen. Michel Aoun's command, the rival Moslem army command of Maj. Gen. Sami Khatib and Syria's two militia allies, the Shiite Moslem Amal and the Druse Moslem Progressive Socialist Party.

But the Syrians were not represented. Although their army has been the main force fighting Aoun's troops, they claim they were not involved and that the committee is a matter for the Lebanese only.

All but 150,000 of Beirut's 1.5 million population had fled the shelling for safer areas.

Buoyed by the glimmer of hope that peace may be at hand, tens of thousands of people jammed the highways Saturday leading into the city from south Lebanon, where many Moslems stayed.

Khalil Hatab said that he, his wife and six children had lived in one room they rented in the south Lebanonese village of Barja for the last six months.

"Can you imagine the eight of us living in one room for half a year?" he said as he was caught in a traffic jam at Ouzai on Beirut's southern outskirts.

"Some of the time we even had relatives, neighbors and friends who escaped with nowhere to go."

At the Christian port of Jounieh, cars were bumper-to-bumper on highways leading into the Christian heartland from the north.

By police count, 929 people have been killed and 2,738 wounded, nearly all of them civilians, since the bombardments began March 8, two days after Aoun imposed a blockade on ports south of Beirut operated by Druse and Shiite militias.

The Syrians and their allies retaliated by shelling the Christians' 310-square-mile homeland enclave north of Beirut and blockading it.

Aoun initially rejected the Arab League plan because the security committee would not include the Syrians. But he changed his mind Friday after pressure from Christian leaders and Arab governments.

The Arab League plan seeks a political settlement of the civil war in which more than 150,000 have been killed.

It calls for the 73 surviving members of Lebanon's 99-seat parliament to meet outside Lebanon to formulate political reforms that would distribute power equally between Christians and Moslems.

The predominantly Maronite Catholic Christians have dominated the government, parliament, the judiciary and army since Lebanon's independence from France in 1943.

At that time they were considered the majority. Although there has been no census since 1932, Moslems now form an estimated 55 percent of the 4 million population.

Hardline Maronites, who are mostly pro-European, have resisted surrendering their traditional privileges, which include the presidency, for fear of being swamped by the Moslems.

Guerrillas seize Cambodian territory

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP) — Guerrilla forces have seized territory surrounding a gem-rich western town, taking advantage of Vietnam's troop withdrawal from Cambodia, the defense minister said Saturday.

It is the first government acknowledgment that the resistance has captured territory in a battle seen as a crucial test of the Cambodian army, which is fighting for once without Vietnamese troop support.

Gen. Tea Banh also said that less than 20,000 government soldiers have been killed or wounded since January 1979, when Vietnam invaded and installed Cambodia's present government.

"I am speaking to you frankly. We do not claim that we control all of Pailin," the general said of the ruby-rich town near the Thai border.

Cambodia's ruby mines are centered in a 16-square-mile area near Pailin. The general said Khmer Rouge troops have seized parts of the mining center.

A Soviet military observer said the Cambodian government and Khmer Rouge guerrillas have thrown their best troops into the battle for Pailin.

He said fighting was fierce and most residents had fled or been evacuated. The observer, who requested anonymity, spoke in Russian to an East European reporter who made his comments available to The Associated Press.

Tea Banh told a news conference that soldiers are exchanging mostly mortar and artillery shells.

But he said the fighting is not a serious security threat to the government, which has been supported by Vietnamese troops since the invasion that ended a bloody reign of terror by the communist Khmer Rouge.

"Only some parts of the forest have been captured and most of the district is in our hands," he said.

He indicated the government is willing to hold another round of peace talks with the guerrilla coalition it is battling.

In Bangkok on Saturday, Thai Prime Minister Chatichai Choonhavan announced his mediation had won agreement from Cambodian Prime Minister Hun Sen and leaders of the three guerrilla factions to resume peace talks some time in the future.

"We would like to continue with our national reconciliation," Tea Banh said. "It is very important for us to get peace — peace that is for the sake of the people of our country. ... If this peace comes along with the return of the genocidal regime (of the Khmer Rouge), it cannot be accepted."

The government refuses to allow the Khmer Rouge to take part in a transitional government. Non-Communist guerrilla leaders say they prefer to share power with the hard-line Communist Khmer Rouge than fight it.

The Khmer Rouge killed hundreds of thousands of people in attempts at an agrarian revolution in 1975-1978.

Also Saturday, Deputy Defense Minister Gen. Nhim Vanda told Vietnamese troops celebrating their withdrawal that Cambodian troops will be able to defend the country.

"During the 10 years our Vietnamese comrades have been in Cambodia, the Cambodian military has improved step-by-step," he told a Phnom Penh gathering of Vietnamese forces from three Cambodian provinces.

The guerrillas have their bases near the Thai border, both in Thailand and Cambodia, and receive the bulk of their arms via Thailand from China.

Vietnam says the last of 26,000 troops in Cambodia will depart Tuesday, ending involvement in a war that took lives of 25,000 Vietnamese troops. Guerrilla leaders say the pullout is a ploy and that Hanoi is hiding troops in Cambodia.

Many fear Khmer Rouge poised to strike again

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Less than two years after the United States withdrew from Cambodia, Khmer Rouge guerrillas swept in from the bush to unleash one of the most barbaric revolutions of modern times.

This month, as Vietnam withdraws troops that have propped up the Communist government, the Khmer Rouge again are poised to strike from the jungles. And many fear that Cambodia will again become the land of the killing fields.

Led by a ruthless Communist with the alias of Pol Pot, the Khmer Rouge withstood massive U.S. bombing and won the Cambodian war with probably no more than 60,000 fighters in 1975. Their opponents — the government of U.S.-backed Gen. Lon Nol — fielded 300,000 men.

The ratio is roughly the same today. Khmer Rouge strength is estimated at 30,000 to 40,000 and Phnom Penh's at about 150,000.

While there are new power brokers in Phnom Penh, the top Khmer Rouge leadership remains unchanged. Although the 61-year-old Pol Pot claimed he resigned from his last official post in June, he still is believed to be in firm command.

The secretive guerrilla chief, who has refused interviews for 10 years, spends his time along the Thai-Cambodian border and in China, the key Khmer Rouge arms supplier.

Other durable veterans are Pol Pot's right-hand man Ieng Sary and nominal Khmer Rouge head Khieu Samphan, whose doctoral thesis was the blueprint for a bloody agrarian revolution.

Heading the Khmer Rouge army is Son Sen, who approved the grisly tortures and executions of 20,000 alleged dissidents at Phnom Penh's Tuol Sleng prison during the 1975-78 reign of terror. Another key commander is Ta Mok, known as "The Butcher" for his murderous ways.

These men have admitted to only "some mistakes," and claim to have changed policies and methods.

After being driven from Phnom Penh by a Vietnamese invasion in January 1979, the Khmer Rouge operated from bases along the rugged Thai-Cambodian frontier. From there, its leaders announced they had shed radical Communism in favor of private property, freedom of religion, and a non-aligned foreign policy.

It was a dramatic shift — one met by instant skepticism. In their heydey, the Khmer Rouge had "cleansed the old society" by killing hundreds of thousands, driving Buddhist monks from their monasteries and turning Cambodia into a slave labor camp where even knives and forks were considered communal property.

No mass executions have been reported in Khmer Rouge-controlled areas since 1979. But defectors, international aid workers and human rights groups indicate life under the Khmer Rouge remains slave-like.

Beatings and occasional executions are meted out for violating decrees. Women and youngsters are conscripted as porters for the military and forced at times to trek through minefields. Religious worship is permitted only at showcase camps. Contact with foreigners is severely restricted — to the point of denying the gravely ill medical treatment offered by aid agencies.

Perhaps the most damning testimony comes from Prince Norodom Sihanouk, non-Communist leader of a three-party guerrilla resistance that includes the Khmer Rouge.

"One has to be either naive or an idiot to believe that the Khmer Rouge of the 80s can be different from the Khmer Rouge of the 70s," he has said.

The Khmer Rouge — a term coined by Sihanouk meaning "Red Cambodians" — emerged in the 1960s and began its armed struggle in 1968 as the war in neighboring Vietnam was reaching a climax.

With ideology borrowed from Mao Tse-tung and French leftists, and with support from Vietnam's Communists and a segment of Cambodia's rural population, the small, ragged band quickly grew into a movement. Its initial appeal sprang from real grievances of the peasantry and centuries of humiliation by Cambodia's more powerful neighbors.

On April 17, 1975, Phnom Penh fell and its more than 2 million people were forced at gunpoint to march into the countryside and plant rice under appalling conditions.

After 11 years of war and the breakdown of peace talks, the Khmer Rouge faces a new turning point.

With Hanoi's soldiers still on the way out, the Khmer Rouge and Phnom Penh forces already are testing each other in a major battle for the the gem-rich border town of Pailin.

Western analysts regard the Khmer Rouge as the strongest of the three guerrilla factions and probably tougher than the government's Soviet-supplied army.

Women protesting apartheid arrested

PRETORIA, South Africa (AP) — Police arrested more than 150 people, clashed with angry blacks and cordoned off a cathedral with barbed wire Saturday in a massive operation to stop a march by anti-apartheid women's groups.

Two blocks from the church, where thousands of women had planned to assemble, white extremists went ahead with two government-approved rallies. Fights broke out between the khaki-clad neo-Nazis and black onlookers. Police made several arrests and chased blacks away with batons.

Downtown Pretoria resembled a militarized zone, with major streets closed to civilian traffic throughout normally busy morning shopping hours. Hundreds of policemen and scores of riot-control vehicles were deployed to prevent the women's march and monitor the right-wing rallies.

The white extremists sought and received permission to demonstrate, but the women's planned march to government headquarters was banned because organizers refused to seek a permit.

Authorities also said they feared simultaneous protests by such diverse factions might spark violence.

Zeni Tshongweni, a spokeswoman for organizers of the women's march, said many would-be marchers were arrested when they tried to assemble near the Union Buildings, their intended destination. Other activists said several people, including children and elderly women, were injured when police used clubs and dogs to disperse the crowd.

Police said 154 people were arrested, all released after being told to appear in court Monday. Police headquarters said most of the arrests came when officers were pelted with stones and bottles while confronting scores of blacks, including well-known activist Winnie Mandela, at a trade union office after the march was canceled.

Protesters at a church square in Pretoria, South Africa, show their dismay after 150 people were arrested at an anti-apartheid rally.

Police said three people were injured, but gave no details.

Mrs. Mandela, wife of imprisoned African National Congress leader Nelson Mandela, and other blacks aboard two buses later were chased by a convoy of police vehicles and ordered to leave Pretoria.

"We came here peacefully but they are seeking violence," Mrs. Mandela said.

Some of the biggest marches in South Africa's history have taken place in the past two weeks, after new President F.W. de Klerk said his government would allow peaceful protests. Authorities announced Friday that leaders of such marches must obtain advance approval.

An authorized anti-apartheid march was held Saturday in Boksburg, near Johannesburg. An estimated 2,500 mixed-race residents paraded peacefully from their segregated neighborhood to the downtown area to protest the right-wing-controlled city council's reimposition of strict segregation ordinances.

In Pretoria, anti-apartheid lawyer Ismail Ayob was at St. Alban's Anglican Cathedral when it became apparent the women would be unable to assemble there.

"It's been a great success for the government," he said. "Roadblocks as far back as Soweto (a black township an hour's drive away), barbed wire, security vehicles. The government has made its point."

A notice tacked to a church door said the government had obtained a court order banning a pre-march service and the march itself. Two trucks mounted with tear gas cannons were parked beside the church.

"It is the same as any other country in the world. People can't break the law," said Law and Order Minister Adriaan Vlok, standing with riot police outside St. Alban's.

At Church Square, the heart of the capital, about 500 white extremists sang Afrikaans hymns and listened to Bible readings as hundreds of blacks watched from the plaza's perimeter.

Eugene TerreBlanche, leader of the neo-Nazi Afrikaner Resistance Movement, assailed de Klerk's proposals to give the black majority a share of political power. If the government capitulates, he said, his group would use force to regain white dominance.

One neo-Nazi banner said, "Apartheid: Solution for AIDS." Another demanded the hanging of Nelson Mandela and freedom for Barend Strydom, a white ex-policeman sentenced to death for killing seven blacks in a shooting spree in Pretoria last year.

Families of slain musicians criticize security at school

DEAL, England (AP) — Family members on Saturday grieved for their slain loved ones and criticized the security arrangements at the Royal Marines Music School, where an IRA terrorist attack killed 10 military musicians.

Jean Cleatheroe, whose son Andrew was killed, joined local residents and opposition politicians in denouncing the use of private security firms to protect the music school and 29 other military establishments in Britain.

"The security at those barracks was absolutely abysmal. We had seen it for ourselves. We have always said how easy it would be for anyone to get in ... What could ordinary security men do to stop terrorists?" she said.

British military installations are a frequent target of the IRA's campaign to end British rule in Northern Ireland and unite the predominantly Protestant province with the mainly Roman Catholic Republic of Ireland.

Friday's attack was the worst since July 1982, when 11 servicemen were fatally wounded in bombings in central London.

Shocked residents of Deal gathered outside the barracks to lay flowers in tribute to the young men they called the "Bandies."

An 11-year-old Royal Marines cadet in full dress uniform marched to the barracks and smartly saluted the Royal Marines sign.

"I'm proud of my uniform and I'm proud of all the Marines I knew. I hate the people who did this to them," said Scott Roberts.

Archbishop of Canterbury Robert Runcie, spiritual leader of the Church of England, visited the injured and said he was impressed "by their strength and determination that evil will not defeat them."

Runcie said one of the men's main concerns was that their hands would heal properly so they could continue playing their musical instruments.

Police investigating the attack were searching a nearby house that had been rented briefly by three men with Irish accents.

"We know when the men arrived and when they left," Cmdr. George Churchill-Coleman, head of Scotland Yard's anti-terrorist squad, said at a news conference. "It appears the men left several days before the explosion."

Army says men confess to killing candidate

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — Two men confessed to killing a popular presidential candidate, the army said, and a congressional leader said he was contacted by Colombia's two most notorious drug lords with a new offer to negotiate.

Bogota's half-dozen daily newspapers quoted an army general Saturday as saying the army now knows who hired the alleged assassins of Sen. Luis Carlos Galan, whose killing led the government to declare war on drug traffickers.

But Gen. Ramon Niebles did not disclose who ordered the killing, the newspapers said. Niebles made the claim Friday at a news conference.

Galan was leading the presidential race when he was shot down at a Bogota rally Aug. 18. The government responded with a crackdown on trafficking and drug lords retaliated with daily bombings and shootings.

Two more bombs exploded Friday night in Bogota, one at a classified advertising office of the anti-drug crusading newspaper El Espectador, and the other at a substation of the government-owned telephone company, police said.

No injuries were reported in the blasts.

Meanwhile, the president of Colombia's House of Representatives, Norberto Morales, told a news conference Friday in Medellin that he was telephoned by Pablo Escobar and Gonzalo Rodriguez Gacha, kingpins of the infamous Medellin cartel.

A tape recording of the news conference was broadcast Saturday by Bogota radio stations. There was no answer at Morales' office in Medellin.

The Medellin cartel is believed responsible for 80 percent of the cocaine that is smuggled into the United States.

Morales said Escobar and Rodriguez Gacha offered to invest millions of dollars in Colombian industry if a truce is reached. He said he had passed the information along to President Virgilio Barco.

This would not be the first time that Escobar, Rodriguez and other suspected members of the Medellin cartel have tried to buy amnesty.

In 1984, President Belisario Betancur even sent former President Alfonso Lopez Michelsen to Panama to meet with members of the cartel. The cartel offered to pay off Colombia's foreign debt, then about $10 billion, if Colombia would end the war declared on drug traffickers after Justice Minister Rodrigo Lara Bonilla was murdered.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Thatcher predicts Gorbachev's success

MOSCOW (AP) — British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher predicted Saturday that President Mikhail S. Gorbachev's sweeping reform agenda will ultimately triumph over the current wave of domestic unrest.

"I believe perestroika is now set on its course and will go through to success," the British leader told a news conference following four hours of meetings with Gorbachev.

Mrs. Thatcher was on a one-day stopover between Tokyo and London.

The meeting — which Mrs. Thatcher termed a "milestone" — was the fifth between the two leaders since Gorbachev was named Communist Party chief in 1985. Mrs. Thatcher also was guest at a luncheon hosted by Gorbachev and his wife, Raisa.

The British prime minister was the first major Western leader to see Gorbachev since this summer's wave of strikes by miners in the Ukraie and Siberia and deadly flareups of ethnic violence in Georgia, Uzbekistan and Kazakhstan.

In her remarks to reporters, she expressed great confidence in the 58-year-old Kremlin leader and his program for economic and social reform, saying it "opens up vistas and horizons not available to the people of the Soviet Union for some 70 years."

Communists lose program

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — A Solidarity journalist was named Saturday to run Poland's state-owned television and radio, removing Communist Party control of the powerful broadcast media for the first time since World War II.

Prime Minister Tadeusz Mazowiecki chose Andrzej Drawicz, 57, a specialist in Soviet affairs and a former political prsoner.

The choice to head radio and television was the major remaining question mark in Mazowiecki's government. The post will not retain its Cabinet rank, reflecting the new government's view that there should be nothing like an "information minister" trying to shape public opinion.

"TV is the mass medium that lied the most," said Krzysztof Kozlowski, a Solidarity senator who negotiated media reform with the Communists during their historic negotiations earlier this year.

Gaining control of the electronic media was a non-negotiable point for Solidarity during talks to form the East bloc's first government not led by Communists.

"The government wants to tell the truth and enable freedom of speech for all sections of public opinion," Mazowiecki told parliament Sept. 12.

Chest pains subsiding

CALCUTTA, India (AP) — Nobel laureate Mother Teresa was still in serious condition although the fever and the chest pains she suffered for more than two weeks had subsided, her doctor said today.

"But her condition is not critical," said Dr. Rajen Wats at the Woodlands Nursing Home, the hospital where the 79-year-old Roman Catholic nun was admitted Sept. 5 with a high fever and irregular heartbeat.

Mother Teresa's condition twice become critical after she suffered a heart attack in the hospital's intensive care unit Sept. 8 and occasional chest pains since then.

"We will have to observe her for two more weeks before we can say if she is out of danger or not," Wats said.

Doctors have said that after she leaves the hospital, Mother Teresa will have to give up the hectic schedule that is partly blamed for her illness.

Duarte's condition better

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Jose Napoleon Duarte slept well, breathing without difficulty, and rose without assistance today from what earlier this week seemed certain to be his death bed.

Fidelina Menjivar, a nurse attending to the former president, said in a telephone interview this morning that Duarte's condition remains stable, slightly improved from the previous night.

Dr. Jose Luis Saca, the former president's personal physician, reported on Friday that Duarte had made a dramatic and surprising recovery from a bout with pneumonia that very nearly killed him.

Miss Menjivar said X-rays taken last night showed that antibiotics were steadily shrinking the spot of pneumonia doctors had discovered in Duarte's right lung. The infection provoked a crisis that three times between Tuesday and Wednesday carried the cancer-ravaged Duarte to the verge of death from asphyxiation.

"The threat of imminent death has disappeared," Saca told the AP late Friday. "That man is some other kind of human being than yourself or myself."

Lynn, left, and Michelle Durrence sit on the foundation of their grandparents' house on Folly Beach, S.C., on Saturday, after it was struck by Hurricane Hugo.

Hurricane victims rely on lamps, candles

CHARLESTON, S.C. (AP) — Many victims of Hurricane Hugo are relying on flashlights, candles and antique kerosene lamps during the dark, eerie nights in a city deprived of electricity, running water and other basic services.

Thirty mobile feeding vans were to arrive Saturday to provide food for hurricane victims, said Glen Ellis, executive director of the Carolina-Low Countries chapter of the Red Cross.

"We're going to feed everybody that needs feeding and is hungry," he said. "Some people don't have any electricity. Some people don't have a house to cook in."

Since Hugo hit Thursday, the Red Cross has been passing out sandwiches and drinks at its damaged headquarters in North Charleston. On Saturday afternoon, 1,500 people remained in 14 shelters, Ellis said. Dozens of Red Cross volunteers with chain saws were helping homeowners remove trees and other debris.

Almost 200 Red Cross staff members have been dispatched to the Carolina coast to work with hundreds of volunteers, said Dave Langston, assistant director of Eastern Relief Operations for the Red Cross. He said the Red Cross expects to provide 5,000 cots and blankets and 9,000 cleanup kits for homes, as well as cash grants so families can buy emergency supplies.

Except for power provided by emergency generators at hospitals and other high-priority facilities, Charleston remained without electricity. Phone service was greatly reduced. Callers sometimes could not call around the block but could reach relatives across the continent.

Mayor Joseph P. Riley Jr. said Saturday morning that running water has been restored, but he advised residents to boil drinking water. Thousands of residents were unable to take showers, wash dishes or flush toilets for about 36 hours.

"I had a shower this morning. Don't I look beautiful?" said Loving Phillips. "I feel wonderful."

Her friend Myriam Buvinger said she was cooking on a gas stove, but had to use candles at night and, until water was restored, scooped dirty water from sinks to flush toilets.

Like many residents who have electric stoves, Mrs. Phillips has not been able to cook since the storm.

"I had cereal and my very last banana for breakfast," Mrs. Phillips noted Saturday morning. "I don't have any other breakfast plans. I had tuna fish salad with wilted lettuce last night."

Patsy Narth said the storm left her with useless credit cards and no cash. Without electricity, businesses could not run the usual credit checks.

"We have no water, no electricity and no phone," she said as she walked along Meeting Street with her son and daughter, trying to find a restaurant. The owner of the only open restaurant in the neighborhood refused to take a credit card.

At Aaron's Deli, customers lined up for a $3 breakfast of hot coffee, scrambled eggs, bacon and hashed brown potatoes cooked on a gas grill.

"We're the only place in town that's got it at that price," said co-owner Eli Hyman. "We're trying to help ourselves by getting rid of perishable items and help the people because they don't have anything to eat."

Hyman said he would offer shrimp and other seafood for lunch and dinner to lessen the risk that $12,000 worth of seafood in refrigerators and freezers will spoil.

Long lines formed at two gas stations that re-opened Saturday morning using generators for power.

C.B. Branan, surveying the uprooted trees and damaged historic homes in his downtown neighborhood, said he and his 17-year-old son were using kerosene lamps and a propane lantern for light. He is a hunter, he said, and is used to roughing it.

"We're not doing a lot of cooking," he added. "We have hard-boiled eggs. I guess everybody is so hyped up we don't feel like eating very much. The adrenalin is still in us."

NATION

Congressman pushing for new designs on coins

WASHINGTON (AP) — Reach into your pocket for a quarter two or three years from now and you may find a different portrait of George Washington on the front and a flag instead of an eagle on the back.

A majority of the nation's senators and representatives are bored with the nation's money — not how it's spent but how it looks. They're tired of the eagle, Thomas Jefferson's home and the Lincoln Memorial on the reverse — or "tails" — side of quarters, nickels and pennies and believe Americans want new coins not so "fixed in the past."

At least 260 of the 435 House members and 66 of the 100 senators have signed on as cosponsors of legislation originated by the U.S. Commission of Fine Arts calling for new coins.

Under a bill approved by the Senate in June without opposition and now working its way through the House, the Treasury Department would be required to modernize their designs, beginning with the quarter.

The weight, size and color of each coin would not change. And portraits — although not the same ones — of Abraham Lincoln, Jefferson, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Washington and John F. Kennedy — would still adorn the obverse or "heads" sides of the penny, nickel, dime, quarter and half dollar.

But the eagle now emblazoned on the reverse side of quarters and half dollars, Monticello on the nickel and the Lincoln Memorial on the penny would be replaced by themes celebrating the Constitution and the Bill of Rights.

Similar legislation was approved by the Senate last year with hopes of having the new coins in circulation for the 1989-91 Bicentennial celebration of the Constitution.

It never got anywhere in the House because of opposition from Rep. Frank Annunzio, D-Ill., then chairman of the House Banking Committee's subcommittee on coinage.

Annunzio, who now chairs another subcommittee, likes the present designs and looks upon efforts by coin collectors to change them as a low if not minuscule priority.

"Changes in our money make Americans very, very uneasy," he said. "We have plenty of serious issues confronting us that need our attention ... a trade imbalance, a budget deficit, a drug epidemic, an education crisis. On a scale of importance from one to 10, coin design change rates a zero."

His successor as the panel's chairman, Rep. Richard Lehman, D-Calif., has no strong views one way or the other. But after an emotional hearing this summer, he wants to proceed cautiously.

"There are some people who are very vocal about redesigning coins, but there's no public clamor out there for it," Lehman said in an interview.

The Treasury is not too keen on the idea, even though the department calculates it would raise an additional $250 million in sorely needed government revenues over the next six years.

The revenues would be in the form of "seniorage" — the difference between the face value of the coin and what it costs the U.S. Mint to produce it. For example it costs the Mint only three cents to strike a quarter, creating a "seniorage" of 22 cents.

Mint Director Donna Pope said officials anticipate that a new design would slightly increase the demand for coins in circulation — raising seniorage revenues — as some people hold on to either the old or new editions.

But the revenues are not great enough to alone justify a change, she maintains, a point echoed by some congressmen. "I think the public would be very cynical of our efforts if that's why we're doing it," said Rep. John Hiler, R-Ind.

"Missing from the coin redesign debate," said Ms. Pope, "is any evidence that the general American public — the non-collecting public — is dissatisfied with current coin designs, or even favors new ones."

Several lawmakers also remember what happened the last time Congress decided to order a change in coinage other than the special commemorative editions for collectors now produced by the U.S. Mint.

About 300 million Susan B. Anthony silver dollars that Congress ordered in 1978 now sit in government vaults because of an overwhelming rejection by the public.

Annunzio blames the Anthony dollar and its failure on the women's caucus in Congress.

"The women on the banking committee collared every male member of that committee, and the poor guys couldn't say no," he said. "They created an atmosphere of hysteria. That's the reason it passed."

Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez, D-Texas, now the banking committee's chairman and a vehement supporter for redesigning the nation's coins, questioned during a hearing last year how many people knew who Susan B. Anthony was.

"Maybe if we'd had Marilyn Monroe, there would have been more popularity," Gonzalez joked.

But to Annunzio's charge that the Anthony dollar was a poorly conceived product of the women's movement, Gonzalez said, "That's what happens when you don't have sex equality."

The Treasury now has the authority to redesign coins every 25 years. But except for the Susan Anthony dollar and special editions of the quarter, half dollar and silver dollar in 1975-76 commemorating the bicentennial of the American Revolution, the last design change was the adoption of the Kennedy half dollar in 1964.

President signs bill to free jailed Washington mother

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush on Saturday signed a bill designed to free a Washington mother jailed 25 months ago in a bitter child custody dispute and attorneys filed an emergency motion for her release.

Presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said Bush signed the bill to free Dr. Elizabeth Morgan "out of compassion for her plight."

The bill was approved by Congress amid growing national attention for the case. It applies retroactively to Morgan, who was jailed for failing to produce her 7-year-old daughter, Hilary, for court-ordered visits with the girl's father, Dr. Eric Foretich.

Morgan, a prominent plastic surgeon, hid her daughter and went to jail after alleging that Foretich had sexually abused the girl. Foretich has repeatedly denied those charges and at one point offered a $5,000 reward for information that would help find the girl.

The child's whereabouts, however, remain secret.

Hours after Bush signed the bill, Morgan's attorney, Adrian Roe, filed the papers with the District of Columbia Court of Appeals seeking her release.

Court Clerk Richard Hoffman then began telephoning each of the nine judges on the panel in hopes that one could come to the courthouse and review the request. Despite the new law, Morgan cannot be freed without a judge's order.

"I'm doing my best to transmit it to the judges, and that's all I can do," Hoffman said.

Roe said he was "hopeful the court will act promptly, but we have no guarantees," Roe said.

The bill takes advantage of Congress' authority to review district laws and among other things sets a 12-month cap for civil contempt child-custody jailings. It also contains a so-called sunset provision that means it automatically goes off the books in 18 months.

Americans buying bigger cars, industry says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Concern about the environment is prompting a new push for automakers to produce more fuel efficient cars, but the industry says with gasoline prices low their customers want performance and size over fuel economy.

According to Environmental Protection Agency figures, the auto industry's move toward higher mileage cars has all but come to a halt in recent years.

Average fleet-wide mileage jumped from 13.1 mpg in 1975 to 21.1 mpg in 1982. Since then it has been creeping and often standing still. The EPA mileage list announced last week reflected a fleet average of 24 mpg, the same as a year earlier.

But growing environmental concerns and the link between automobile pollution and global warming, has unleashed new calls for the industry to produce more fuel efficient vehicles.

Legislation by Sen. Richard Bryan, D-Nev., to require a 40 percent increase in average automobile fuel efficiency by the turn of the century, is given a good chance of passing the Senate.

That would put the average fleet-wide mileage for most manufacturers at about 40 mpg. Only some of the stingiest and smallest subcompacts are able to obtain those kinds of mileage figures today.

No similar proposal has emerged in the House where it would face the strong opposition of Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., chairman of the Energy and Commerce Committee.

But even serious discussion of such sharp increases in auto mileage is a far cry from only a year ago, when a Reagan administration proposal to scrap federal fuel efficiency standards altogether received considerable support on Capitol Hill. President Bush has made no such suggestion.

Past demands for higher auto mileage were prompted by oil shortages and high gasoline prices. Today there is neither.

So what is driving the renewed interest in fuel efficiency?

"The first and foremost reason is concern about global warming," says Robert Dewey an analyst for the Energy Conservation Coalition, a group that includes many of the largest environmental and conservation organizations.

Environmentalists also have argued that cutting the demand for gasoline is the best way to curb the need for oil — and, thereby, preserve pristine wilderness and environmentally delicate coastal areas that otherwise might be opened for drilling.

There also is continuing concern about the growing dependence on imported oil. "In 1985, oil imports accounted for 32 percent of all oil used in this country. Last July imports exceeded 50 percent," said Deborah Bleviss, executive director of the International Institute for Energy Conservation.

But it is the automobile's link to global warming that has given the issue a new spark.

Motor vehicles account for about a fourth of the releases in the United States of carbon dioxide, a major contributor to what many scientists believe is a warming of the earth because of manmade pollution.

Carbon dioxide combines with other chemicals to form a gaseous veil in the atmosphere that traps heat like a greenhouse. Many scientists believe this "greenhouse effect" — if left unchecked — will cause a dangerous warming of the earth by the middle of the next century.

"It's time Detroit stopped protecting their gas guzzlers and started protecting our planet by producing safe, efficient vehicles citizens want," Ruth Caplan, executive director of the Environmental Action Foundation, said recently as her group unveiled plans to distribute a series of 30-second television ads linking cars to global warming.

But the auto industry argues that it is being picked on unfairly.

A requirement for cars to achieve and average fuel economy of 40 mpg "does little to address the global warming problems" because carbon dioxide releases from U.S. cars account for only 2.5 percent of all the world's greenhouse gases, maintains Helen Petrauskas, vice president for environmental and safety engineering at Ford Motor Co.

And to achieve such mileage increases will require automakers to reduce the size of their cars, she and other auto executives insist.

There may be a lot of talk about higher mileage requirements, but market indicators are just the opposite, says Ronald Boltz, a vice president for Chrysler Corp. He said customers are "placing a premium on vehicle performance ... and less emphasis on fuel economy."

Cars such as the high-mileage Geo Metro — a Japanese-made subcompact sold by General Motors — account for only 1 percent of U.S. passenger car sales, echoed Marina Whitman, a GM vice president.

Officials vow action to halt dollar's rise

WASHINGTON (AP) — Finance officials of the world's seven largest economic powers Saturday expressed dismay at the persistent increase in the value of the dollar this year and pledged to take coordinated action if necessary to drive the U.S. currency lower.

In their first meeting since April, the finance ministers and central bank governors of the so-called Group of Seven — the United States, Japan, West Germany, Great Britain, France, Canada and Italy — stepped up their rhetoric aimed at curbing the buoyant dollar, a development threatening to derail improvement in the U.S. trade deficit.

The group had expressed a similar concern last spring, but the tone of the statement released Saturday was considerably stronger, holding out the threat that if the dollar rises any further the economic powers would intervene together in world currency markets.

"The ministers and governors considered the rise in recent months of the dollar inconsistent with longer run economic fundamentals," the group said in a two-page communique released after the eight-hour meeting.

"They agreed that a rise of the dollar above current levels ... could adversely affect prospects for the world economy ... (and) agreed to cooperate closely in exchange markets," the statement said.

Treasury Secretary Nicholas F. Brady emphasized this part of the communique in a briefing for reporters but he refused to say what specific actions the countries would be willing to take if the dollar goes higher.

In April, the officials used milder language and simply said they agreed that "a rise of the dollar which undermined adjustment efforts ... would be counterproductive," not any rise.

The group, meeting two hours longer than expected at Blair House, across the street from the White House, also addressed topics ranging from the Third World's crushing $1.3 trillion debt to Western efforts to aid economic reforms in Eastern Europe.

Officials told reporters the extra time was devoted to discussing events in Poland and Hungary, which the communique termed "historic."

"The whole meeting of the G-7 became electric when we started talking about the events going on in the Soviet Union and Poland," Brady said, adding that the finance ministers hoped the 152-nation International Monetary Fund would be able to reach quick agreement on a loan package for Poland.

On Third World debt, the communique praised Brady's latest initiative for achieving "substantial progress."

Since the Brady plan was announced in March, commercial banks have struck tentative agreements granting relief to Mexico and the Philippines.

Last week, however, three major U.S. banks added more than $4 billion to their loss reserves for developing country loans.

Bush, Gorbachev set next summit for 1990

JACKSON HOLE, Wyo. (AP) — President Bush and Soviet Leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev will hold their first summit meeting next year, officials announced Saturday as the two superpowers completed a half-dozen accords and cleared a major roadblock to a treaty on slashing long-range nuclear weapons.

Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze, who spent the weekend in talks with Secretary of State James A. Baker III, said the summit would be held in "spring or early summer." He announced a key concession from Moscow to move ahead toward a long-range weapons agreement despite its objections to the U.S. Star Wars program.

First official word of the summit plans came from Bush, who informed reporters on a golf course near his vacation home in Maine after taking a telephone call from Baker. "I think around the world people will be pleased," he said. Bush expressed pleasure with the outcome of the weekend talks and said he would meet Gorbachev in the United States, possibly in Washington.

Later, in a written statement, Bush said: "I envision a broad discussion of the full agenda that the two sides have established — human rights, bilateral relations, arms control, regional issues and transnational issues,"

Bush spoke more than a thousand miles from the snow-capped Rocky Mountain resort where Shevardnadze and Baker — obviiously pleased with their diplomacy — reached agreement on a chemical weapons accord and several other points.

The agreements include:

■ Exchange of data on chemical weapons by the end of the year and visits by inspectors of the other side to stockpiles and plants by June 30. In a second phase, there would be more intensive on-site inspections of the submitted data.

■ An "umbrella agreement" in principle that there should be verification of missile plants and information exchanged even before a treaty to slash long-range nuclear weapons is completed.

■ Advance notification to the other side of exercises with long-range bombers and other strategic weapons.

■ A ceiling of 10 on launchers carrying mobile intercontinental ballistic missiles at any one base. Some of the launchers would be exposed for monitoring.

■ Cooperating to enhance the power of the International Court of Justice to settle disputes.

■ Two agreements to facilitate movement across the Bering Straits of Eskimos in Alaska and Eskimos in Siberia for visits.

■ Agreement on interpreting international rules for ship movements.

Baker and Shevardnadze flashed the thumbs-up sign as they broke away from their lodge and strolled in the woods in bright sunshine. They left behind U.S. and Soviet experts to put the finishing touches on the documents.

"It's a miracle," Shevardnadze said of the majestic Grand Teton mountains that loomed in the distance.

Baker later told reporters that the two sides "took a series of steps across the full arms control agenda to overcome old misconceptions and build trust."

In one of a pair of conciliatory gestures, Shevardnadze said the Soviets would dismantle their Krasnoyarsk radar facility. The United States has charged the Siberian radar was intended to be part of a space-based defense outlawed in a 1972 treaty.

Shevardnadze also told reporters that Moscow was making a major concession in arms control negotiations, announcing that his government would not let its objections to the U.S. Star Wars program block completion of a treaty to cut long range nuclear submarines, missiles and bombers by 30 to 50 percent.

"The preparation and signing of a treaty now appears to be quite in reach," he said.

Baker hailed the move but stressed "there are some difficult issues that still remain." He cited keeping track of cruise missiles aboard airplanes, submarines and combat surface ships.

"We have moved from confrontation to dialogue and now to cooperation," he said of the evolving superpower relationship.

The long-range weapons talks in Geneva have been deadlocked over the Soviet demand that the treaty depend on completion of a separate agreement on space-based defense. Since the United States declined to give ground on the search for a Star Wars defense in space against Soviet ballistic missiles, that made an arms reduction accord improbable.

Baker acknowledged the Soviet concession on Star Wars, stressed Bush's commitment to proceeding with the U.S. space-based defense program and said he had offered the Soviets the opportunity to visit research facilities associated with the program.

Panel suggests stronger warning on Halcion's label

WASHINGTON (AP) — A federal advisory committee says the world's leading sleep medication, Halcion, may put users at greater risk of temporary amnesia than other drugs of its kind.

The Food and Drug Administration panel recommended Friday that the warning be added to Halcion's label and that stronger warnings be given to consumers and doctors about all possible side effects for this drug and other sedative-hypnotics, which are sold only by prescription.

The Psychopharmacological Drugs Advisory Committee asked the FDA to work out the language of the warnings. Paul Leber, director of the FDA's division of neuropharmacological drug products, said it would be at least six months before the agency would complete work on the warnings.

"There's no sense of urgency on this," he said.

Godfrey Grant, a spokesman for the Upjohn Co., which makes Halcion, said the committee's review should put to rest many concerns that have been raised about the drug.

The recommendations resulted from the committee's review of a "relatively high" number of reports about side effects associated with the use of Halcion compared with other sedative-hypnotics. These included amnesia, anxiety, aggression and hallucinations, all of which are included in the warning label for Halcion.

Panel members said the high number of reactions reported may be overstated, since incomplete data on incidents was collected and it can be used only as a broad indicator.

"Given the limitations of the information, we did not sense there was a special problem" of side effects with Halcion, said Dr. Daniel E. Casey, panel chairman and chief of psychiatric research and psychopharmacology at the Veterans Administration Medical Center in Portland, Ore.

Halcion was approved for sale in the United States in 1983 and about 43 million prescriptions of the drug have been written since then. The FDA has received 1,693 reports of adverse side effects possibly associated with its use, ranging from amnesia to death, said Charles Anello, deputy director of the FDA's office of epidemiology and biostatistics.

By comparison, 35 million prescriptions have been written for Restoril, a sedative-hypnotic made by Sandoz Pharmaceuticals Corp., since 1981 and the FDA has received 266 reports of unwanted side-effects, he said.

Officials of The Upjohn Co., which makes Halcion, said the greater number of Halcion reports could be the result of a number of things, including media reports about the drug. These include reports about a Utah woman shot her mother last year after taking Halcion. Charges against the woman were dismissed.

Upjohn spokesman Grant said the company was "pleased the advisory committee has essentially come to the conclusion that there are few if any concerns that need to be addressed."

Besides agreeing to recommend relabeling for Halcion for temporary amnesia, the panel decided to address concerns for the entire class of sleeping pills. Three drugs are included in this class — Halcion, Restoril and Dalmane.

Panel members asked the FDA to "provide material to consumers to alert them to the possibility of side effects" of the drugs so the consumers could discuss them with their doctors.

Delegates look over a display of weapons Friday in Las Vegas at the 10th annual Soldiers of Fortune convention, sponsored by Soldier of Fortune magazine.

Estimated 10,000 load up for Soldiers of Fortune convention

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Platoons of would-be Rambos are shopping for exotic weaponry and fighting fashions, taking tutorials on world terrorism and swapping war stories at the 10th annual Soldiers of Fortune convention.

At the start of the three-day gathering Friday, conventioneers decked out in berets, flak jackets and camouflage pants sat around the pool of the Sahara Hotel amid bikini-clad sunbathers. Others rubbed shoulders with civilian gamblers at the bars and slot machines.

An estimated 10,000 delegates could choose from seminars on such hot spots as Central America and Afghanistan, manufacturers' displays and a shooting competition at a desert range.

As usual, the big hit was the annual display of weapons and apparel designed especially for those spoiling for a fight.

"It features a lot of things your mother probably didn't want you to play with when you were growing up," said Bill Brooks, exhibition director at the convention, which is put on by Soldier of Fortune magazine of Boulder, Colo.

The show, he said, is keyed to the interests of the "professional adventurer."

Elsewhere in the country, people are campaigning to rid the civilian populace of semiautomatic weapons. But in the hotel's main exhibition hall, convention-goers trooped to booths featuring the latest in rapid-fire armament.

Street Sweeper Sales of Atlanta touted a line of automatic weapons with a banner picturing an ominous looking weapon.

"The Street Sweeper — Delivers 12 rounds in less than 3 Seconds," the sign said. "Buy American — It matters."

Salesman Sherman Yarborough said the featured firearm is used mainly for police work and by Florida law agencies against drug smugglers and dealers.

Some Street Sweepers are used for "self protection," Yarborough said, adding it's "like any gun. Each person has a different use for them."

Yarborough said his company sells only to licensed gun dealers.

Several booths, including one set up by the National Rifle Association, urged attendees to fight efforts at gun control.

Posters, T-shirts and bumper stickers carried a similar theme.

One poster pictured a man with a cache of guns and a message: "Make all the laws you want — you ain't taking mine!"

Nearby was a stack of bumper stickers reading "WAR — Mankind's oldest contact sport."

'Ice' spreading across nation, police warn

HONOLULU (AP) — Hawaiian authorities besieged by epidemic use of a smokable crystalline form of the illegal drug methamphetamine have a warning for police on the mainland: Highly addictive "ice" is heading their way.

"We're not trying to glamorize this drug, nor are we proud that it's hit Hawaii first, but we need to alert law enforcement people everywhere and prepare them to handle it," said Maj. Mike Carvalho of the Honolulu Police Department's narcotics division.

Since 1985, there have been 32 deaths related to the crystal meth in Honolulu, including 12 in the first six months of 1989, according to Medical Examiner Mary Flynn. They included eight homicides and seven suicides in which the victims had crystal meth in their systems, she said.

The drug causes symptoms of psychosis and many users are misdiagnosed as mentally ill, especially schizophrenic.

"This drug makes people bananas. People become violent, they kill themselves, drive crazy, pick fights," she said. "And we just know about the victims; who knows what the assailants were on?"

Since Sept. 5, when drug czar William Bennett unveiled a national anti-drug plan, nearly 50 U.S. agencies have requested background on crystal meth, Carvalho said.

"Last week we had a video conference projected to 600 precincts in Texas during roll call," Carvalho said. "We had slides on what it looks like, the effects, what symptoms to look for and how it's being packaged and smoked."

Although labs making methamphetamine, also known as speed or crank, in its common powdered form are busted in California every year, the crystals smoked here come mainly from Asia, Carvalho said. Some mainland authorities familiar with meth don't even recognize the crystalline form, which looks like rock salt or candy, he said.

Crystal meth is already turning up all along the West Coast, as well as Arizona, Texas and Florida, he said.

The crystalline form also is known as "ice," "crystals" or "batu." It has been smoked here for at least a decade by a small number of Asian immigrants, but surged to widespread use about two years ago, he said.

So far this year, about 400 people have been investigated for the possession or sale of crystal meth, described as cheaper than cocaine, with a longer high than the smokable "crack" form of cocaine and more addictive than heroin.

"That's really the crux of the epidemic," said Dr. Joseph Giannasio, medical director of Castle Medical Center's Alcohol and Addictions Program. "Anytime you can get a drug that causes a very rapid high in a high dosage without having to use a needle, it's going to be a lot more popular."

Ice smokers get an energizing high than can last 14 hours, compared with about 15 minutes for crack. But the psychological crash is much worse and can last for days, or until the next smoke, Giannasio said.

A recent study by the National Institute on Drug Abuse called use here "epidemic."

Although no one can say for sure how many people here smoke ice, about 700 people required emergency treatment in the past six months after using it.

Ironically, many users switched from crack to crystal meth because they considered it safer; instead, they found themselves addicted from "practically the first smoke," Giannasio said.

"The typical user turns into a paranoid person who goes days without sleep, loses weight, is very suspicious that people are out to get him. They feel like they're going crazy," Giannasio said. "But that's not how it starts out. At first when they use the drug, they feel extremely alert, like they can accomplish anything."

The drug can also be fatal, leading to strokes, heart attacks and pulmonary edema, which means victims drown in their own bodily fluids, he said.

Police Maj. David Benson, head of the juvenile crime division, said Filipino youth gangs control distribution of ice here.

The gangs are heavily armed, and violence has escalated recently as rival gangs and even factions of the same group compete for control of the drug. It is commonly sold in "papers" containing one hit, or about a tenth of a gram, for $50.

HOW THEY VOTED

Congressional Quarterly

WASHINGTON — Votes of area members of Congress on key issues during the week ending Sept. 22, 1989.

KEY SENATE VOTES

Senate rejects new lower cap on FHA loans. The Senate Sept. 19 refused, 50-49, to adopt a Republican proposal that would have raised the limit available on Federal Housing Administration (FHA) mortgage loans from the current $101,250 to $118,125.

The proposed amendment was offered as an alternative to FHA loan-limit provisions incorporated the 1990 spending bill for the Departments of Veterans Affairs and Housing and Urban Development that called for the FHA-insured mortgage limit for first-time home buyers to be set at 95 percent of the median home price in each state — with no dollar cap.

After the vote, the Senate agreed by voice vote to a proposal that would limit FHA-insured mortgage loans at $125,000.

Supporters of the motion to kill the FHA-loan dollar cap amendment argued that unless the dollar limit on FHA-insured mortgage loans was lifted many middle-income Americans, particularly those in high-cost areas, would be unable to buy a home. "Raising the FHA limit (to 95 percent of the median home price) is not a boondoggle for the wealthy," claimed Joseph I. Lieberman, D-Conn., "it is an opportunity for the middle class ... to own their own homes in their own communities."

Opponents of the motion claimed that without the FHA-loan dollar limit upper-income families would benefit most, while focus on the more needy first-time home buyers would be reduced. "I want to help the first-time home buyer," said Alan J. Dixon, D-Ill, "but...why it is essential to guarantee the mortgages of home buyers with income higher than 90 percent of the people in this country."

Voting to kill the dollar-cap proposal on FHA loans: Bentsen (D).
Voting against: Gramm (R).

Senate retains funding for U.N. Population Fund. The Senate Sept. 20 narrowly killed, 52-48, an attempt by Republicans to remove from the $14.4 billion 1990 foreign operations bill a provision that gives $15 million to the United Nations Population Fund.

In voting to retain the funding provision, the Senate rebuffed opponents' arguments that China used money from the U.N. Fund to promote forced abortions and involuntary sterilization. For these reasons, President Reagan cut off U.S. contributions to the U.N. agency in 1985.

Voting to kill the proposal to eliminate the U.N. agency funding: Bentsen (D).
Voting against: Gramm (R).

Senate rejects El Salvadoran aid restrictions. The Senate Sept. 20 voted 68-32 against a proposal that would have placed certain restrictions on the release of military aid to El Salvador.

The proposal's restrictions would have required the Bush administration to consult with Congress on El Salvador policy prior to the release of $85 million in U.S. funding to El Salvador.

After voting down the restrictions, the Senate agreed to add $5 million to the $85 million earmarked for El Salvador in the 1990 foreign operations spending bill.

Voting to kill the proposed restrictions on aid to El Salvador: Bentsen (D), Gramm (R).
Voting against: None.

KEY HOUSE VOTE

House attacks arms control bill. The House Sept. 19 defeated legislation reauthorizing the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency (ACDA) for 1990-91. The 247-170 vote was taken under a legislative procedure called "suspension of the rules," which requires a two-thirds majority vote for a measure to pass.

Although members were united in their support for the ACDA and its role in arms-control policy, there was strong opposition to a provision in the bill that would have altered the administrative hierarchy and policy-making mechanism of the On-Site Inspection Agency (OSIA). The OSIA was established in 1988 to implement the on-site inspection provisions of the intermediate-range nuclear force (INF) treaty.

White House officials and their House supporters charged that the provision, giving the State Department greater policy guidance over the OSIA, would create a confusing chain of command and diminish the effectiveness of the agency.

The bill now goes to the House Rules Committee to be reconsidered under the normal legislative process before returning to the House floor.

Supporters of the bill with the OSIA provision claimed the provision would codify congressional oversight of the onsite inspection agency created to monitor compliance with the INF treaty. "If you want to strengthen compliance and onsite verification procedures, vote for this bill," said Gerald B.H. Solomon, R-N.Y.

But opponents agreed with the Bush administration's concerns that the the reauthorization bill's OSIA provision would just create unnecessary confusion and hurt its effectiveness. Alabama Republican Bill Dickinson charged that "it (the provision) would make its (OSIA's) operation unmanageable....If it ain't broke, don't fix it."

Voting for reauthorization of ACDA: Gonzalez (D), Sarpalius (D).
Voting against: Smith (R), Combest (R), Stenholm (D).

Investigators continue examining USAir wreckage

NEW YORK (AP) — An investigation into the crash of USAir Flight 5050 focused Saturday on the possibility of mechanical failure, although officials said the rookie co-pilot had punched the wrong cockpit button just before the craft plunged into the East River.

Investigators continued removing pieces of the plane's fuselage from the water off a runway at LaGuardia Airport, National Transportation Safety Board spokesman Ted Lopatkiewicz said. The parts will be examined to determine if there were any mechanical problems in addition to the pilot error, he said.

Speaking of the co-pilot's mistake, Lopatkiewicz said, "It may turn out that was unrelated to what happened."

Another factor under investigation was the plane's unexplained veer to the left, acting National Transportation Safety Board chairman James Kolstad said at a news conference Saturday night. He also said investigators found marks on the runway that showed the plane's three sets of wheels were skidding down the runway.

The flight's pilot and co-pilot had their flight licenses suspended for leaving the accident scene and were strongly criticized Friday by federal officials for failing to immediately submit to drug and alcohol testing.

"At a time when drug abuse has become a major national problem, we believe the American public has a right to know that its transportation system is alcohol and drug free," Kolstad said.

"The failure to promptly volunteer for alcohol and drug testing following a major accident is inexcusable," he said, echoing an angry statement by Federal Aviation Administration head James B. Busey.

The Air Line Pilots Association, the union that issued a statement defending the pilots Friday, offered no response Saturday to the testing comments or the suspensions. The pilots are not required by law to submit to testing after a crash.

Pilot Michael Martin, 36, and co-pilot Constantine Kleissas, 29, submitted to urinalysis Friday following five hours of questioning by federal investigators. The results of the tests were not available Saturday.

Flight 5050 crashed into the East River late Wednesday when its takeoff was aborted. Two people died and 59 others were rescued. The flight had been headed to Charlotte, N.C.

At a news conference late Friday, Kolstad revealed that Kleissas — attempting his first operational takeoff of a Boeing 737-400 — inadvertently pressed a button that caused the plane to decelerate.

Martin then accelerated the plane, but decided to abort the takeoff because the craft began drifting to the left and "the pilot felt and heard a vibration which concerned him," Kolstad said.

He said Saturday that two passengers — one of them a frequent flier — told investigators they also felt the vibrations.

Martin believed he had enough room on the runway to stop the plane, but it instead skidded off the runway and into the water, cracking the fuselage into three sections.

Kolstad also said that, as the plane accelerated down the runway, the captain, acting as co-pilot, did not call out the jet's speed as required.

"It was clearly a lack of proper procedure being followed in the cockpit," Kolstad said. Lopatkiewicz said investigators were trying to find out what made the plane drift to the left.

Flight data recordings that would indicate the plane's actual speed when it aborted were still being studied.

Murals clash with anti-graffiti campaign

DENVER (AP) — A mural project sponsored by an anti-AIDS group to remind drug users to avoid sharing needles has run into trouble with Denver's beautification campaign. The problem — the murals look a lot like graffiti.

Businesses and city officials are complaining about the University of Colorado Health Sciences Center effort called Project Safe. It involved asking local artists to paint murals in three drug-ridden neighborhoods to provide AIDS warnings such as, "Don't Share. Use Bleach."

To appeal to their intended audience, the state-funded artists spray painted their messages in bold colors — making it look like the graffiti the city is trying to wipe out in the same neighborhoods.

"(We are) looking at some other ways of getting that message across rather than using walls," said Valeria Purser of the Keep Denver Beautiful anti-graffiti campaign.

"To sanction any type of graffiti murals would be detrimental to the campaign," said Purser.

But the message has to reach those whose lifestyles make them susceptible to AIDS, said Jean Finn, a spokeswoman for the state Health Department's division for sexually transmitted diseases, which helped with the project.

"At this point, we're just trying to figure out the value and effectiveness of the murals, and take into consideration the concerns in the areas they have voiced," said Finn.

The mural campaign resulted from suggestions by prostitutes and intravenous drug abusers at the Denver jail, said Stephanie Marusich of the health department. The inmates were brought together in a "focus group," a sort of bull session of the type used by advertising people to learn about the preferences of average citizens.

"You've got to reach people on the street in a way they're going to respond and recognize," Ms. Marusich said. "We're trying to reach our audience first of all ... the appropriate audience with the appropriate message."

Information about AIDS transmission must reach people who live in a very different way, she said.

"We're talking about drug dens with blood sprayed on the ceiling, where people stay in the dark, shoot their drugs and really try and shut out the outside world," she said. "We've been inside shooting galleries to get a real good feel for what is happening."

Tom Gleason, an aide to Mayor Federico Pena, said the project's intentions are good, but the method is not.

"In our experience, anything that resembles graffiti attracts more graffiti," he said. "Obviously their goal is an important one."

The Five Points Business Association, in a lower middle-class neighborhood, is objecting to one of the murals.

"We're addressing a letter to the governor," said association president Sarah Foster. "We do not want that kind of a mural in our area. We are trying to clean it up."

Foster said the money for the murals, about $1,500 from a state health department grant, would have been spent better on other forms of education.

Purser said the money private landowners, businesses and the city have invested in such neighborhoods as Five Points could be jeopardized by the murals.

"We're trying to revitalize," she said. "Then you have this huge sign right there in the middle of it. As a developer, you're saying, 'Why is this graffiti-type drug message there?'"

Alternatives such as ordinary signs, plywood panels attached to buildings and bench advertisements are being considered, Purser said.

Marusich said the group hopes to produce several murals — in some form — every three or four months.

"The point is there is drugs in Five Points," she said. "There are people who are becoming infected and infecting others."

The most rapid spread of AIDS at this point in the epidemic involves the sharing of contaminated needles or syringes by drug abusers and subsequent sexual contact involving those infected through drug use. Federal officials said at the end of June that intravenous drug abusers made up 23 percent of the more than 100,000 cases of AIDS in the United States.

NATION IN BRIEF

Witness says Gabor gave her teddy bear

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — A defense witness admitted she received a teddy bear from Zsa Zsa Gabor before testifying that she saw a motorcycle policeman drag the actress from a car and kick her.

Miss Gabor explained she handed Rosa Perick a "Zsa Zsa G'Bear," replete with satin nightgown, as a gift for Ms. Perick's son.

Ms. Perick was the first witness in the cop-slapping trial to corroborate Miss Gabor's story about her arrest. She said Miss Gabor made other offers during her two visits to the actress' house this week.

Miss Gabor "offered me whatever I wanted," Ms. Perick said.

Miss Gabor faces a possible 18-month jail sentence if convicted of misdemeanor battery on a police officer, disobeying an officer's orders, driving with an expired license and having an open container of alcohol in her car.

Miss Gabor does not deny slapping Officer Paul Kramer. But she insists she lashed out in self-defense after he cursed her and dragged her from her Rolls-Royce on June 14 when he spotted expired registration tags on the car.

Deputy District Attorney Elden Fox cited Ms. Perick's remarks to imply that she stood to benefit by buttressing Miss Gabor's case.

Judge overturns ruling

NEW YORK (AP) — College students are smart enough to tell a spoof of Cliff's Notes from the real thing — especially because the parody publication is labeled "satire" five times on the cover — a court said.

The explanation, released Friday by the 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, gives the background for the court's Sept. 5 decision to let Spy magazine sell its send-up of Cliff's student guide to classic literature.

The ruling overturns a lower court order issued at the request of Cliff's Notes Inc., which sued the Spy Notes publisher, Bantam Doubleday Dell Publishing Group Inc., over the satire.

The publisher complained that Spy Notes — which pokes fun at two novels popular with the yuppie set — looks too much like the slender Cliff's pamphlets students have been using for years to crib comments for book reports.

Spy Notes gives humorous plot summaries, commentary and questions for review on the contemporary novel "Bright Lights, Big City" by Jay McInerney and "Slaves of New York," a short story collection by Tama Janowitz.

It includes the Novel-O-Matic, a slide rule-like device so readers can create their own 1980s novels.

Nude sunbather slain

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — A nude sunbather was gunned down at a secluded beach by an attacker demanding drugs, jolting this sleepy tourist area where random violence is rare.

Phillip Bogdanoff, 49, was lying on a beach blanket with his wife Thursday afternoon when two men approached the couple and demanded marijuana, Santa Barbara County sheriff's Sgt. Jan Bullard said.

When Bogdanoff said he had none, one of the men shot him twice in the head, killing him, Ms. Bullard said.

Both men fled and remain at large, police said. Bogdanoff's wife, Diana, 41, was not attacked.

Nudity did not appear to figure as a motive in the killing, Ms. Bullard said.

"There were no sexual overtones," she said. "Nothing more to it. Just a random, violent act."

Two killed in explosion

BINGHAM LAKE, Minn. (AP) — A grain elevator explosion in this southwestern Minnesota town Friday killed two people and injured three others, authorities said.

The bodies of two employees of Cargill Inc., which owns the elevator, were recovered about two hours after the 2:30 p.m. explosion, said to a dispatcher for the Cottonwood County Sheriff's Department.

The dead were identified as John William Gahler, 39, and Leonard Dunkelberger, 51, both of Bingham Lake.

Rescue workers had to empty the 75,000-bushel bin to recover the bodies, the sheriff's department said.

Three people were hospitalized at Windom Hospital with minor injuries suffered in the explosion, said nursing supervisor Carla Mitchell. All three were in stable condition and remained under observation Friday night, she said.

The cause of the explosion was not immediately known, Cargill spokesman Garland West said. He said there was no fire, although some materials were smoldering after the explosion.

NASA plans last unmanned rocket launch on Monday

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — For three decades, NASA has launched unmanned rockets from this spaceport — more than 400 of them. On Monday it plans to fire its last one here, closing an illustrious chapter in American space history.

The fiery finale will be staged by an Atlas-Centaur rocket which is to blast off at 4:12 a.m. with a military communications satellite to link land, sea and air forces around the world with the Joint Chiefs of Staff, the National Command Authority and the president.

Once the Atlas-Centaur is gone, NASA's only launch vehicle at Cape Canaveral will be the manned space shuttle. When the agency has a need for an expendable rocket, it will have to buy the launch services from private industry.

In the past, NASA has purchased unmanned boosters from companies such as General Dynamics and McDonnell Douglas and used its own crews to launch them. In the future, crews from private companies will conduct the countdowns at the Cape as the nation's budding commercial launch industry takes off.

The space agency stopped buying Atlas-Centaur, Delta and other space boosters early in the 1980s, opting instead to launch all its payloads from the space shuttle.

Officials admitted that was a mistake after the shuttle Challenger exploded in 1986. Following the explosion, then-President Reagan directed NASA to get out of the business of launching commercial payloads, opening the way for rocket companies to start a new enterprise.

A backlog of government payloads and a desire to keep space business from being sent abroad to France, China or even the Soviet Union spurred the policy change.

After the launch of the last Atlas-Centaur, the agency will have one large unmanned rocket left, a Delta that is to lift a scientific satellite from Vandenberg Air Force Base, Calif., in November. And the government will continue to launch military space rockets from Vandenberg and the Cape.

Still, Monday's launch is a milestone for Cape Canaveral, where NASA got its start and where it has launched more than 95 percent of its boosters.

"It's always sad to see the end of an era," said James L. Womack, NASA's director of expendable launch vehicles, who will be in the launch control center Monday.

"There's a certain element of sadness, but the things we have done have been fabulous," said Joseph Mahon, the agency's assistant administrator for space flight.

Among the achievements: The Mariner, Viking, Pioneer and Voyager missions to the planets; 42 weather satellites; the Ranger, Surveyor and Lunar Orbiter probes that scouted the moon in advance of American astronauts landing there; 94 communications satellites; scores of scientific payloads; dozens of unmanned test launches for the Mercury, Gemini and Apollo man-in-space projects.

NASA's first launch vehicle was a Thor Able that lifted off Oct. 11, 1958, propelling the Pioneer 1 probe toward a flyby of the moon. It failed, as did four more rockets before a Juno 2 hurled Pioneer 3 within 37,300 miles of the moon and into orbit around the sun on March 3, 1959.

Rockwell to end management of Rocky Flats Weapons Plant

DENVER (AP) — Rockwell International Corp. bowed out suddenly after 14 years as operator of the Rocky Flats nuclear weapons plant, marking the final breach between the company and the government over hazardous waste disposal.

The move was announced late Friday by the Department of Energy, one day after Rockwell sued the government over the dispute at the plant, which makes plutonium triggers for nuclear weapons. The contractor maintained it was impossible to follow both its contract with DOE and the waste disposal rules of the Environmental Protection Agency.

The DOE has identified Rocky Flats as the most environmentally hazardous site in the nuclear weapons industry because toxic chemicals contaminate an underground reservoir and threaten nearby city water supplies.

Adm. James Watkins, the energy secretary, said EG&G Inc., a Wellesley, Mass.-based scientific engineering firm, had been asked to replace Rockwell. EG&G officials will arrive at the plant Monday, the DOE said.

Watkins said he and Rockwell chairman Donald Beall had agreed to change Rocky Flats' management "in the best interest of both parties."

Colorado Gov. Roy Romer, a critic of safety practices at the plant, warned that a management change wouldn't end state efforts to track possible waste violations at the plant.

"I am going to continue to hold the feet of DOE and the operator to the fire to be sure that there is no endangerment to the citizens of Colorado from the operation of the Rocky Flats plant," Romer said. "I have been informed by DOE that EG&G is an experienced operator and that there will be an orderly transition in which the current Rocky Flats employees will retain their jobs."

The decision came so suddenly that plant employees were not notified of the change until after the 4 p.m. shift change Friday afternoon, Rockwell spokesman Pat Etchart said. It was announced over a public-address system late in the afternoon, Etchart said.

EG&G is the prime contractor for DOE's Idaho National Engineering Laboratory and is a contractor at the Nevada test site and government facilities in New Mexico.

Rockwell sued the government Thursday in U.S. District Court in Washington, claiming conflicting federal rules require it to violate hazardous waste disposal laws at the plant. The same day, the EPA cited Rockwell for violating hazardous waste storage laws at Rocky Flats.

HOW TO CHANGE YOUR NAME.

When you're a Texas bank that's merging with another Texas bank to form the largest Texas-run bank in Texas, how do you know what to call yourself?

After all, the name Texas American Bridge Bank doesn't mean that much to Deposit Guaranty Bank customers, and Deposit Guaranty doesn't mean that much to the Texas American folks.

So what do you do?

You think up a new name. One without any Federals, or Nationals, or firsts, seconds, or thirds in it.

One that stands for what your bank really is. And means something not only to the Texas American and Deposit Guaranty customers, but all the new customers we hope to attract.

That's why we've selected the name Team Bank.

To represent the team of Ron Steinhart and Terry Kelley, the two Texans who founded the bank.

To stand for the two banks that now form the team totalling over $5 billion in assets and $250 million in capital.

And to show the teamwork and team spirit of the employees of both banks, now working together.

With you.

We think the name kind of sums it up. Team Bank.

And it won't take up too much room on your checks.

Mother charged with murder of son left alone for 11 days

STATE

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A 20-year-old woman has been charged in the killing of her 10-month-old son, who was left unattended in his crib for 11 days, police said Friday.

Rosemary Almaraz Quintanilla is in the Bexar County Jail on a $100,000 bond after her arrest early Friday, authorities said. She is charged with murder in the first degree.

"Due to the decomposed state of the child, we were unable to see any trauma on the body," Lt. Albert Ortiz told the San Antonio Express-News. "We will have to wait for the autopsy to see if the baby died of starvation or neglect or was dead before it was abandoned."

The woman told police she left the baby, Robert Almarez, alone in her apartment because her current boyfriend's family did not like the infant.

Police said they allege Quintanilla spent the 11 days the baby was left alone with her boyfriend at his parents' home.

Quintanilla is pregnant, police said, and has a 2-year-old daughter, who has been placed in the custody of the Texas Department of Human Services.

An autopsy on the infant had not been completed Friday afternoon, officials said.

The woman gave police conflicting reports about her child's death.

Ortiz said the woman first told police that her baby had been abducted more than a week ago.

She said she did not call police but spent a week looking for the child in the neighborhood.

"Investigators could see right through her story. It just didn't hold water," Ortiz said.

The woman then changed her story and said she left the baby in its crib Sept. 10 while she went to stay at her boyfriend's house, police said.

The woman told police she returned home Thursday and was shocked when an acquaintance came to her apartment and brought the decomposed body wrapped in a blanket, investigators said.

Quintanilla claimed the baby had been found in a trash bin, Ortiz said.

Erica Almaraz, 15, the arrested woman's sister, said her sister started acting strangely about two months ago.

Woman seeks to help crash victims

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — A Radcliff woman says she believes her community, which lost 27 people in a fiery bus crash 16 months ago, may benefit by helping the families of victims of a Texas school bus crash that killed 20 children.

"I find that it helps people to accept their loss when they're reaching out to help others," said Carmen Krissinger, a psychiatric nurse who plans to send a donation to a memorial fund for victims of Thursday's crash in Alton, Texas.

"I've been thinking about contacting the Church of God to sponsor something" to help the victims, Mrs. Krissinger said Friday during a telephone interview.

She was referring to the First Assembly of God Church of Radcliff, which owned a bus that was hit head-on by a pickup truck on May 14, 1988, killing 24 children and three adults.

One of Mrs. Krissinger's neighbors, 9-year-old Patricia Nunnallee, was among the victims.

"Patty used to stand in my driveway to catch the bus and she played with my children," she said.

The Texas crash occurred when a delivery truck rammed a crowded school bus into a water-filled pit. At least 63 people were injured and several passengers, including the bus driver, remained in critical condition.

"When you send your children off to school, you don't think they're going to die before they get back home," Mrs. Krissinger said. "What the parents are going through is horrible."

In the northern Kentucky accident, Larry W. Mahoney of Worthville was driving the wrong way on Interstate 71 near Carrollton when his pickup struck the Radcliff bus head-on.

Mahoney, whose blood-alcohol level was reportedly more than twice the legal limit, is awaiting trial in Carroll Circuit Court in November on charges including murder, drunken driving, assault and wanton endangerment.

Texas Gov. Bill Clements on Friday assigned a four-person team to study whether the state should revise its bus safety laws and require guard rails around gravel pits and similar roadside hazards.

The bus had only one emergency exit — the back door — and rescuers said many of the students who died were trapped at the front of the vehicle.

"It goes back to the awareness that our buses need to have more safety exits," Mrs. Krissinger said.

A task force formed by Gov. Wallace Wilkinson after the Carrollton crash made sweeping recommendations, including roof escape hatches and fire-resistant interiors, which have been approved by the state school board.

Sematech tax bill may hit $1 million

AUSTIN (AP) — The Sematech computer consortium, which may face a $1 million property tax bill this year, is considering a lawsuit against the Travis County Central Appraisal District, officials say.

The district review board set the 1989 market value of Sematech's property at nearly $61 million Friday. That means Sematech could be hit with $1 million in property taxes, depending on rates set by local taxing entities.

"A million dollars is a lot of taxpayers' dollars that we could be using to spend on our mission," Sematech spokesman Miller Bonner said. "That money is a couple of more joint projects we could be doing to fight the Japanese."

The board last month decided the consortium must pay local property taxes, reversing a 1987 promise from city economic development officials. Permanent tax exemptions were part of an incentive package the city officials used to lure Sematech to Austin.

Sematech officials argue that the consortium operates for the public good and therefore should not pay taxes. They indicated they are likely to appeal the issue to state district court, once they get a formal notification from the appraisal district.

"If that's the only way we will be able to resolve the issue, then we are prepared to do it (sue)," Bonner told the Austin American-Statesman.

Review board members have suggested that Sematech is not a public agency but is in business to make money for its member companies.

Sematech was formed two years ago as a public-private venture to help the nation regain control of the worldwide computer memory chip business. About half of its $200 million annual budget comes from the Department of Defense, while the remainder comes from member companies.

The appraisal district staff initially valued Sematech's property at $124 million. However, Chief Appraiser Art Cory told the review board that figure erroneously included property that had been purchased after Jan. 1.

Property acquired after that date could not be considered for this year, but can be included when the consortium's property value is determined for next year, Cory said.

The city of Austin and Travis County recently have offered U.S. Memories Inc. property tax breaks similar to those proposed to Sematech in 1987, if it will locate in Austin. U.S. Memories is a collaboration of seven of the nation's largest electronics firms.

Moody convicted; Lawyer plans appeal

HOUSTON (AP) — An attorney for Galveston insurance heir Shearn Moody Jr. says he intends to appeal Moody's conviction on charges of hiding assets from a court-appointed trustee handling his $4 million personal bankruptcy estate.

A federal court jury deliberated less than three hours before finding Moody and his former aide Norman Revie guilty of two counts of bankruptcy fraud.

The charges stemmed from the sale of Seaside Lanes, a Galveston bowling center owned by Seaside Lanes Partnership, a real estate partnership controlled by the Moody family.

Despite notices that the $201,000 proceeds from the sale should be transferred to Moody's bankruptcy estate and used to pay creditors, Moody and Revie were charged with converting the money to their own use.

Birnberg and Michael Maness, Revie's attorney, admitted their clients used the proceeds from the sale, but claimed the money was not part of Moody's bankruptcy estate. They claimed the bowling center was owned by a trust set up by Moody.

The jury apparently did not accept that explanation of events.

In autobiography, Richards says opponent sought to scuttle speech

AUSTIN (AP) — In her new autobiography, state Treasurer Ann Richards suggests that her likely gubernatorial opponent sought to scuttle her keynote address to the Democratic National Convention, the speech that made her one of the party's rising stars.

Richards

The charge, which drew a "no comment" from Attorney General Jim Mattox's office, comes in the first chapter of "Straight from the Heart: My Life in Politics & Other Places."

The book tells her life story, from growing up near Waco to treatment for alcoholism to victory as the first woman elected statewide in half a century. But in the opening chapter, Ms. Richards tells about the speech that gave her a national political profile.

"It's a speaker's dream," she says of the address to the 1988 Atlanta convention.

"Everybody who cares even the slightest bit about politics can be counted on to watch, or at least will hear about what you have to say. I had never even considered giving it."

After then-party chairman Paul Kirk extended the surprise offer, Ms. Richards recounts what she says was Mattox's bid to keep her from giving the speech.

"Now, the talk of my making the governor's race was pretty much an open case, and the political tides never stop churning," she writes.

"... I was told that Jim Mattox, my likely primary opponent, had tried to dissuade Paul Kirk from extending the invitation to speak. The reply from the national office was, 'Well, the governor's race is a long way off, and we have no intention of getting involved in it, but the decision is made.'

"And so, on Monday morning, the announcement came from Paul Kirk that I would be the keynote speaker. And my life was completely overturned."

Mattox campaign manager Jim Cunningham said he knew nothing about any such effort. Elna Christopher, the attorney general's press secretary, said, "We have no comment."

> "... I was told that Jim Mattox, my likely primary opponent, had tried to dissuade Paul Kirk from extending the invitation to speak."
>
> — Ann Richards, gubernatorial candidate

The book, coauthored by New York writer Peter Knobler and published by Simon and Schuster, will take Ms. Richards on a 10-day national publicity tour beginning Monday in New York City.

Filled with anecdotes, the book leans on the same sense of humor that won her wide acclaim at the convention, where she explained that women are as able as men by saying, "After all, Ginger Rogers did everything that Fred Astair did. She just did it backwards and in high heels."

On her hometown: "I don't know why in the world it would be called Lakeview; there was no lake to view."

On her first date: "I was a nervous wreck, and the poor guy who asked me was not much better ... We got in line for punch. Remember, I was going to be new and likable and popular ... and I threw up all over the girl in front of me, my date, the borrowed dress, and the marble floor."

On the North Dallas Democratic Women in the 1960s: "(It) was basically formed to allow us to have something substantive to do; the regular Democratic Party and its organization was run by men who looked on women as little more than machine parts."

On her bid for Travis County commissioner: "I really thought it was pretty far out to think that a woman could run for county commissioner. It's perceived as a truck-driving, front-end-loader operation ..."

On running for treasurer: "The greatest thing was that the press really didn't know what the treasurer did any more than anyone else did. It had been one of those offices where old elephants went to die."

On Texans' voting habits: "People ask all the time, will Texas vote for a woman? Well, my Mama didn't call me Bubba."

But the story has serious sides, too, including her treatment for alcoholism and her 1984 divorce from lawyer David Richards after 30 years of marriage.

"I was terrified," she wrote of the treatment. "I thought that when I went into the hospital the world would be over for me. I was a public person, there was no way I could survive it."

But the breakup of her marriage was worse.

"Getting a divorce was the hardest thing I have ever done. Harder than alcoholism, harder than treatment, harder than politics. I had never lived alone in my life."

Politics is a theme throughout the book, from her first experiences on a school debating team to participation in Girls State. She tells of working on others' campaigns, including the successful legislative bid of abortion lawyer Sarah Weddington.

She also recounts a meeting with Democratic presidential candidate Michael Dukakis while his campaign was faltering.

"I began to tell him that I was really worried about the way the campaign was going. I told him I thought he needed to get angry. 'I don't know what it takes to make you mad,' I told him, 'but they are insulting your integrity, your patriotism, your wife. It's justified that you respond in anger.' He told me he would take it under advisement."

Publication of the book comes some five months before the 1990 Democratic gubernatorial primary — a coincidence, according to Ms. Richards' campaign manager, Glenn Smith.

"The book was the idea of a New York publishing firm that came to her," Smith said. But he added, "I'm not going to deny that there's public relations value to it."

Mattox campaign boss Cunningham said the book wouldn't be a factor in the governor's race.

STATE IN BRIEF

Suit filed against officer, Air Force

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The mother of a boy an Air Force officer said he molested filed suit against the officer and the Air Force for $16.7 million in damages and compensation.

A complaint the mother filed Friday in federal court accused the Air Force of failing to identify Lt. Col. Earl Jobson's alleged psychological problems and failing to follow through on earlier investigations into molestation charges against him.

Jobson, 42, was stationed at Randolph Air Force Base when he was convicted. He is now serving a 15-year jail sentence at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., where he was sent after he pleaded guilty during a court-martial at Randolph last year.

Jobson admitted he molested three youths, who were between the ages of 11 and 14 at the time they were molested. The incidents Jobson admitted to took place in 1986 and 1987.

Attorney Jefferey Anderson, who represents the mother, said families representing the other boys also have filed lawsuits against Jobson and the Air Force.

More than a year before Jobson's 1987 arrest on molestation charges, Air Force officials halted an investigation of the officer, according to a report obtained by the San Antonio Light after Jobson's conviction last year.

Mother arrested, charged

AUSTIN (AP) — A mother accused of severely beating her two children with a shoe has been charged with injury to a child, a first-degree felony.

Marie Belen Gutierrez was arrested late Thursday, after her live-in boyfriend called for emergency medical help to revive her unconscious 5-year-old son, said detective Gary Cutler of the Travis County Sheriff's Department.

The boy and his 7-year-old sister were in the intensive care unit at Children's Hospital of Austin at Brackenridge Friday. Hospital officials Saturday would not release the children's conditions.

The boy, who suffered head injuries, was comatose Friday. The child also had broken bones in both feet and may lose two left toes because of gangrene, Cutler said.

Doctors' examinations of both children revealed numerous bruises and sores, severe anemia and chronic malnutrition, as well as signs of possible sexual abuse, Cutler said.

If the boy dies, one of the two counts of injury to a child would be refiled as a murder charge, he said.

Ms. Gutierrez, 26, was in jail Friday night on two $5,000 bonds. Injury to a child is punishable by five years to life imprisonment and a maximum fine of $10,000.

27 arrested in roundups

PALESTINE (AP) — Authorities here plan to have all defendants in custody by Monday in a drug investigation that resulted from a special grand jury probe.

A special grand jury returned "about 60" indictments against 40 people on Friday, Palestine Police Sgt. Marvin Craig said. Twenty-seven were arrested by Friday evening by Anderson County sheriffs deputies, constables, and officers from the Department of Public Safety, Deep East Texas Task Force, the Highway Patrol and the Texas Rangers.

Crain said the major drugs involved in the arrests were cocaine and methamphetamines, with two instances of "other controlled substances."

"We expect by Monday to have most if not all of them in jail," he said.

Most of those indicted were charged with delivery of cocaine and methamphetamines.

Man killed in Friday crash

GIDDINGS (AP) — A McDade man was killed Friday afternoon when his single-engine plane crashed and burned in a field between the communities of Blue and Adina, investigators said.

The plane piloted by Hal Matheny, 53, was burned so badly that investigators could not read the identification numbers on the plane's tail, said Lee County sheriff's deputy Jim Clampitt.

Matheny was flying the plane from Hearne to a private air strip about a half-mile from the crash site when the plane went down, said Texas Department of Public Safety trooper Bruce Opperman.

Investigators said the 1956 Piper Tri Pacer plane has been worked on in Hearne.

A Federal Aviation Administration investigator from Houston was investigating the crash.

The site is about 13 miles west of Lexington, which is about 50 miles east of Austin.

U.S. Marshals day set

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements has proclaimed Sunday as United States Marshals Day in Texas.

"United States marshals have played a crucial role in most of the major episodes in America's history," says the proclamation, citing the Whiskey Rebellion of 1794, the Reconstruction era after the Civil War and enforcement of civil rights laws in the 1960s.

Today, U.S. marshals and deputies are charged with such responsibilities as providing security for federal courts and the pursuit of fugitives from justice.

"In Texas, we are proud of the individuals who have served our state and nation as United States marshals," the proclamation says.

Group says law not troubling PUC

By JAMES CULLEN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Everybody seems to agree there is something wrong with the Public Utility Commission, but consumer advocates this week told a state task force the law is not the problem.

Continuing controversy at the three-member commission, which regulates electrical and telephone utilities has invited comparisons to a "three-ring circus," and caused Gov. Bill Clements, Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and House Speaker Gib Lewis to name a nine-member task force to review public utility regulation.

Consumer advocates, fearing the task force was stacked more toward utility interests than ratepayers, moved to play down the need for sweeping changes in the Public Utility Regulatory Act, which was enacted in 1975 and revised in 1983.

Instead, they called for more careful selection of commissioners and separation of the administrative and judicial functions of the commission to avoid conflicts of interest.

Partisan feuding among the three commissioners frequently has disrupted commission meetings. The bickering hit a low point in August when Chairman Marta Greytok and Commissioner William Cassin, both Republican appointees of Clements, called for the resignation of Democratic Commissioner Jo Campbell, a holdover appointee of Gov. Mark White.

Clements later called the behavior of all three commissioners "deplorable." While he stopped short of calling for their resignations, he called on them to maintain a sense of dignity.

Campbell stayed on the commission but Cassin returned to his Houston law practice after his term expired Sept. 1. The governor's office reportedly is having trouble finding qualified people willing to take the post, which pays $71,400 a year for a six-year term.

James Huffines, Clements' appointments director, said candidates he has put on the "short list" have withdrawn their names from consideration after they learned more about the situation. But he said the search for a new commissioner was continuing.

"It's our number one priority," he said. "We're committed to finding the best possible individual. We have our sights set very high."

As the task force sought public comment with two days of hearings, one of its members, Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock, suggested an exemption from the Open Meetings Law that would allow commissioners to discuss rate cases in private, as judicial panels do.

"Maybe the same kind of bickering goes on at the Supreme Court, but we don't get to read about it ... because it goes on behind closed doors," said Montford, chairman of the Senate State Affairs Committee.

Moak Rollins, a former PUC member and chairman of the task force, said the opportunity to discuss the cases informally would be helpful, although he said that discussion would not necessarily have to be private.

Don Butler, whose Austin law firm represents cities in rate cases, said the main problem was the people on the commission. "We need to start treating these commissioners like judges and make them start acting like judges," he said.

Other problems include staff turnover in an agency that is chronically underfunded. The commission has pending three major electrical rate cases involving nuclear generating plants and it expects another nuclear utility case this fall as Texas Utilities prepares to justify the $9.1 billion it spent on Comanche Peak.

Jonathan Day, an attorney for Texas Industrial Energy Consumers, said the PUC has been hurt by the rapid turnover of senior PUC staff, which he attributed largely to the limited salary opportunities.

With a top staff salary of approximately $55,000, he said, mature professionals with the kind of self-confidence needed to challenge the high-priced consultants the utilities can hire end up being hired by those utilities or consulting firms.

William Avera, a former director of economic research at the PUC, now a consultant for the industrial consumers, joined Day in recommending that the Legislature address the mismatch in resources.

But Avera cautioned against making sweeping changes in the regulatory process that would unsettle the industry. "A period of uncertainty — a hiatus — could put us so far behind the development curve that it could be irreparable harm to our economic development efforts," he said.

The task force has scheduled more hearings in October. While it has a Dec. 1 deadline to report to the governor Rollins said he hopes to finish the task force's work before Nov. 14, when the next special session of the Legislature starts.

B-52 fire caused by negligence, Air Force says

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A fatal B-52 fire at Kelly Air Force Base in July was the third Air Force accident within 13 months caused by workers forgetting to remove vent plugs before fueling operations, an Air Force investigation has revealed.

On July 24, a B-52 explosion and fire at Kelly killed civilian worker Jesus Pedraza Jr., 38, and cost the Air Force more than $19 million in damages.

"I don't think there is any one answer," Lt. Ann Farmer of the Air Logistics Command headquarters told the San Antonio Light Friday. "We expect people to learn from other people's mistakes.

"We're going to do everything we can to ensure this doesn't happen again."

Air Force accident reports indicate the Kelly accident was almost identical to earlier mishaps at bases in Georgia and Oklahoma.

In June 1988, a fuel tank on a C-141 transport plane at Robins Air Force Base in Georgia ruptured because workers on an earlier shift forgot to remove the vent plugs. There were no injuries.

In May 1989, a fuel tank was ruptured on a B-1B bomber at Tinker Air Force Base. An investigation also determined workers had not removed vent plugs before fueling.

Prayer on campus not MISD's biggest 'issue'

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

From sex education to boundary changes, Midland Independent School District becomes a public wishbone at least once a year.

Emotional meetings, signature-loaded petitions, media spotlights, threats of lawsuits, angry telephone calls and poison-pen letters abound when MISD officials have heavy issues to weigh.

The district made it only a day into the 1989-90 school year when one of the biggest issues in the past decade sprang up and became a community maypole within days.

A week after 40 Midland High School students held hands and prayed in a park, 400 people filled the MHS auditorium to see if board members would alter policy to allow prayer meetings on campus.

The national prayer-in-schools controversy had hit home, and the school year's issue was off to the races.

"It's always something," Superintendent Joe Baressi said Friday. "The issue puts the school district and the school board in the middle. I get paid for leading the community through the issues each year."

Last year MISD administrators and board members faced changing stadium seating assignments for high school marching bands. Before that they wrestled with sex education and introducing AIDS awareness into curriculums.

Board meetings in 1986 saw angry groups opposing high school boundary changes, while the public came out in force to dispute a closed campus proposal in 1985.

"High school boundary change is the biggest issue by far," said Baressi, a 10-year MISD veteran. "There's no comparison."

Baressi would not go as far as calling the prayer controversy unique, but he said the dilemma differs in that it involves more than students, parents and school officials.

"We have a very religious community," he said. "There are parents who have children long out of school who have strong religious beliefs.

"Our task is to listen to everybody and consider everybody's position. I'm sure many people believe religious beliefs come before man's law."

But trustee Larry Rusk said he sensed that the students' cause has spawned more community interest than past school-related controversies.

"This issue seems to be more emotional," Rusk said. "It relates to personal conviction between individuals and their faith."

He said he has received "a significant quantity" of letters from people expressing their opinions.

Trustees may only have seen the dispute's iceberg tip when they decided Sept. 12 to table action on two high school Christian groups' requests for on-campus assembly.

Members of Midland High School's "7:14" and Lee High School's "Power Connection" prayer groups agreed to provide legal briefs for administrators and trustees to ponder.

Board members were to examine past and pending prayer-in-school court cases and render a verdict Tuesday, but the students' attorney failed to submit the briefs in time, Baressi said. Now the item will not make the board agenda until Oct. 10.

Meanwhile, the students have not exactly found themselves in the calm eye of the hurricane. MHS senior Shawn Jantzen, 7:14 co-leader, said Thursday that group leaders at both high schools have received death threats by telephone and had their cars vandalized.

The Midland County Sheriff's Office stepped in to provide the students protection, said Shawn, 17, who would not elaborate on details of the threats or police intervention. He only said the threats were "very serious."

Sheriff Gary Painter, who vocalized his personal support for the students at the Sept. 12 meeting, would not comment on the protection.

The 7:14 crusade has created its share of stir at the MHS campus, 906 W. Illinois Ave., students said Friday.

While a poll conducted Thursday by the MHS Press, the school newspaper, showed that 79.9 percent of 900 respondents supported 7:14, not all students think the effort is positive.

"It's not interfering with schoolwork, but I think there's too much unnecessary controversy about it," said Rosie DeLeon, 16, an MHS sophomore. "They (7:14 members) don't want anybody interfering with their cause.

"Most of the kids say they just want attention. A lot of kids couldn't care less about it."

MHS sophomore Prissy Munoz, 15, said 7:14's high visibility has been disruptive to the school's daily education process.

"People are trying to concentrate," she said. "Everywhere you turn somebody is talking about the prayer. I think they should be more discreet because everybody's all upset about it."

However, Principal Jimmie Kelly said it has been business as usual at the school.

"The principal's job is to make sure we provide a safe educational environment for kids to learn in and to provide an education opportunity that meets the needs of all kids," Kelly said. "Those other issues don't affect me and don't affect my job."

LHS students said the conflict has not been as evident at their campus, 3500 Neely Ave., although Power Connection members have been seen carrying Bibles and praying together in hallways.

"All I've heard is the people saying they want it (prayer meetings on campus)," said LHS sophomore Sheila Ward, 15. "No one who doesn't want it has said anything."

Youthful fun

Riding into the wind aboard a merry-go-round at the St. Ann's Family Fair Saturday are Jan Brooks, top, and two children, 4-year-old Nikki and 2-year-old Zach. Organizers estimated that 20,000 people attended the benefit featuring many sundry attractions, including this giant inflatible giraffe just right for bouncing children.

Families drawn to church fair

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

The timing couldn't have been better.

The 41st annual St. Ann's Family Fair opened here Saturday with autumn ushering in cooler temperatures for fairgoers on the grounds of St. Ann's School.

Despite brisk northeasterly winds blowing in an occasional dust cloud, it was a beautiful day for an estimated 20,000 people assembled at the benefit.

Considered a fall family tradition in Midland, the fair exhibited sundry attractions for the young and young at heart.

This year's midway, for instance, featured the ever popular ferris wheel and merry-go-round; and some rather unconventional rides, including the "Spider," "Round-up," "Side-winder," "Whizzler," and "Zipper."

Antsy youngsters had their hyperactive appetites whetted on a giant inflatible giraffe and cruised up and down two stories of ramps, chutes and ladders that made up the obstacle course.

And if that weren't enough excitement, the "ROCKet ROLL," a girating missile that gradually raises to a 40 degree angle, offered heavy metal addicts "a sensational video adventure."

In addition to the carnival, more than 40 game and refreshment booths were scattered across the playground to quench the thirst of the daring and hungry with baseball and ring tosses, a cake wheel, corn on the cob, hamburgers, egg rolls and sausage links.

Other specialty stands offered shoppers a choice of arts and crafts, books, jewelry, plants, sewing, baking and canning items for their money.

And an Odds & Ends booth, one of largest garage sales in the Permian Basin, could not go without a mention.

Organizers were unsure how much money the fair raised from morning to night. But they said all proceeds will go to the school.

Showing of 'cowboy memorabilia' spurs Midland's artistic interest

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

By BILL MODISETT
Editorial Page Editor

Gazing across the rows of spurs, finely crafted bridles and fancy silver gaucho stirrups, Byron Price observed, "They're truly objects of decorative art in my estimate."

Such has been the progression of "cowboy memorabilia," denoting a passing from the workday life of the American West to museums and libraries. It's a transformation that holds a riveting attraction for many who fondly recall those days of the cowboy. Those days came back to life this weekend at the Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library.

The library's exhibition of bits and spurs went on display Friday. The show will continue until Oct. 31. Once the exhibit is viewed, Price's comment can be appreciated.

Price possesses an eye trained to discern the extraordinary from what is not in this modern-day requiem to the Golden Age of the American West — and times long before. As executive director of the National Cowboy Hall of Fame in Oklahoma City, he moves in circles today which honor the cowboy, the Spanish conquistador, and those horsemen who came before, by recognizing the art inherent in their riding equipment.

Two of those most popular collectibles today are bits and spurs and in that capacity, Price was serving as one of three judges for a Bit and Spur Exhibition on display at the Haley Library. Also serving with him Friday and Saturday evenings were Houston book collector and Haley Library trustee J.P. Bryan and Amarillo saddlemaker Bob Marrs.

The exhibit features American spurs dating to the 19th century, European spurs dating to the 16th century, early jousting spurs, ornate silver gaucho stirrups and many others.

Clarification of ethics laws proposed

By JAMES CULLEN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The district attorney responsible for prosecuting state officials Friday said the Legislature should clarify existing state ethics laws to avoid turning into a "banana republic."

"The law has to address certain kinds of outrageous conduct, and if it doesn't, then we run the risk of turning into a banana republic," said Travis County District Attorney Ronald Earle, who proposed five immediate changes in state ethics laws as well as a long-term review of the codes.

"We have a remarkably honest and conscientious set of elected officials," he said. "There are some exceptions, however, and the law is intended to speak to those exceptions and the law does not do that right now."

Earle, testifying before the Senate State Affairs Committee, said current ethics laws are confusing, covering four separate statutes, and they offer vague and sometimes conflicting language on what constitutes bribery and what lawmakers and lobbyists must report.

He tried to clear up confusion over the laws covering gifts from lobbyists, after newspaper reports that lobbyists spent $1.8 million on gifts and entertainment of legislators this past spring, including ski and hunting trips.

Earle said he believes all lobbyists' gifts to lawmakers must be reported, but some trips must be reported only by the lobbyist while others must be reported by the legislator.

Thoughts ramble from seaside deaths to stadium burials

More rambling thoughts from a semi-tangled brain that keeps trying to figure out why some people, knowing that the police are monitoring the situation, continue to speed through school zones:

Ott

■ The following news item appeared on the Associated Press wire service Saturday morning. "A nude sunbather was gunned down at a secluded beach by an attacker demanding drugs, jolting this sleepy tourist area near Santa Barbara, Calif., where random violence is rare.

"Phillip Bogdanoff, 49, was lying on a beach blanket with his wife Thursday afternoon when two men approached the couple and demanded marijuana.

"When Bogdanoff said he had none, one of the men shot him twice in the head, killing him, a police spokesman said.

"Both men fled and remain at large.

"Nudity did not figure as a motive in the killing, police said."

Frankly, I must differ with the police on this matter. If a person is nude, how can he be expected to have marijuana to give to a couple of loonies on the beach?

■ There is something special about watching small children enjoy the rides at an amusement park, such as at the recently concluded St. Ann's Fair. The screams of delight are particularly amusing. It also makes one glad he is too old to engage in such foolish activities.

■ Somehow it is difficult to feel sorry for those former high school football players from Dallas Carter who were sentenced to prison terms for their roles in a string of armed robberies. They came from middle-class families and apparently committed the crimes for the "thrill of it" and not the "cash." A couple even had college scholarships waiting for them. Then poof, they threw it all way. As the judge so elquently put it at the sentencing, "If stupidity were a crime, you would all deserve life without parole." Enough said.

■ Maybe I'm terribly naive but it continues to bother me everytime I hear about a former hero of mine, like Willie Mays, for example, charging children for his autograph.

■ Does anyone really believe Jimmy Hoffa is buried under Giants Stadium in New Jersey? Of course not. However, there is an interesting rumor that Jerry Jones and Jimmy Johnson may find themselves in that predictament if the Cowboys don't get their act together.

■ Why do people park in driveways and drive on parkways? OK, it's a very old question but one that still demands an answer.

■ I pride myself on not being easily shocked but everytime I read about some deranged teen-ager involved in Satanism killing his parents, I can only shake my head in sad disbelief and wonder how their young minds got in that condition. What were they thinking when they pulled the trigger?

■ Whenever you see the destruction caused by a natural disaster such as Hurricane Hugo, it's hard to figure why more people aren't killed.

■ Nicest line from a novel I've read in a long time. "The old man finally succumbed to the pain and died. Three weeks later, his devoted wife of 48 years was dead of a broken heart."

■ Do married people still love each other that much?

■ I hope so.

Miss Reynolds died Saturday at a local hospital.

Punishment stuns families, friends

DALLAS (AP) — Friends and family members met with tears and cries of anguish the sentences handed down for a dozen teen-agers whose armed robbery ring struck 21 times, mostly for the thrill.

Ten of the 12 defendants, many of them members of last fall's Class 5A state champion football team, received prison sentences ranging from 2 to 25 years. Another got probation and one will go to boot camp.

The severity of the punishment shocked family and friends. But the judge said the defendants were lucky.

State District Judge Joe Kendall told the youths that if stupidity were against the law, they would "all deserve life without parole."

"You come, for the most part, from very good homes with loving parents who provided you with all your needs and many or your wants," the judge told the teens before sentencing them Friday. "And some of you have even been given by God athletic talent that would enable you to receive a free college education and, perhaps, both fame and fortune thereafter.

"When I compare you with a typical young offender who comes before me, you are especially without excuse."

The 12 youths pleaded guilty and tearfully pleaded for leniency over the past two months after police broke the robbery ring that struck businesses in Dallas and suburban Duncanville. Many of the youths said the robberies started as a way to have fun and acquire extra cash.

Some said they spent the money on prom night and at Six Flags Over Texas amusement park.

Each defendant faced a maximum 99-year sentence in the Texas Department of Corrections.

Derric Evans, 17, an All-America defensive back at state champion Dallas Carter High last year whose full scholarship to the University of Tennessee was revoked, received a 20-year term for his involvement in four robberies.

Three defendants attend Hillcrest High in Dallas. The others were students at Carter, and six played on the school's championship football team.

If a legislator goes on an expenses-paid trip and legislation is discussed, the lobbyist must report the trip. If legislation is not discussed, the lawmaker also must report the trip. But Earle advised legislators to disclose all such trips anyway, as "insurance."

Currently, most lobbyists report only total amounts spent monthly, without itemizing the expenditures.

Earle suggested that the Legislature amend the penal code to clarify that political contributions and expenses must be reported and that recipients of free trips must report them, and to require disclosure of "anything of value," instead of "money or property."

He also recommended that the Lobbyist Registration Act make it clear that lobbyists must report specific gifts to individual legislators and that the Legislature establish a consistent minimum value of benefits received before reporting is required.

The reporting threshold now varies from $50 for campaign contributions, $200 for lobbyist expenses and $250 for other financial statements.

Earle reviewed the state's ethics laws at the request of Common Cause of Texas after Lonnie "Bo" Pilgrim, an East Texas chicken magnate, gave $10,000 checks to senators in the Senate chamber while lobbying on behalf of workers compensation reforms.

"Officeholders can take money for doing anything, and as long as it's reported as a campaign contribution, it's legal," Earle said.

Sen. John Montford, D-Lubbock, State Affairs chairman, named a subcommittee to develop a bill, with Sen. Bob McFarland, R-Arlington, as chairman and including senators Kent Caperton, D-Bryan, Don Henderson, R-Houston, Bob Glasgow, D-Stephenville, and Chet Edwards, D-Duncanville.

Edwards introduced his own ethics bill, but he indicated he would work with Glasgow on a plan by Comptroller Bob Bullock, who is running against Edwards in the Democratic primary for lieutenant governor.

Edwards' bill would require lobbyists to report any gift worth more than $25 to any employee of the legislative or executive branch of government, and legislators would have to report whenever more than $25 was spent on them.

The bill also would prohibit lobbyists from paying for lawmakers' pleasure trips and it would set up a strong State Ethics Commission to overlook lobby registration and financial disclosure.

Bullock's proposal would require state officeholders to disclose their federal income tax returns to allow audits of their personal and campaign financial reports.

It also would put new limits on campaign contributions, require lobbyists to provide more detailed reports on their clients and their expenditures and limit the amount of money they could spend on any officeholder to $250 a year.

"I commend Comptroller Bullock for the comprehensive and detailed proposal he has made," said Edwards, who hopes Gov. Bill Clements will call a special session to reform the ethics laws before a statewide vote on a proposed legislative pay raise Nov. 7.

Montford asked for a bill to be ready by Oct. 30, in time for a joint meeting with the House State Affairs Committee Nov. 3, so the matter could be considered in a special session that will begin Nov. 14.

Yet the Bit and Spur Exhibit was only one of three events at the Haley Library this weekend held to benefit the library's building fund.

Visitors to the events were pleasantly surprised Saturday evening when the library's founder, Midland author and historian J. Evetts Haley, arrived in time for the book auction. The 88-year-old Haley was honored a shortly after his arrival by the local Daughters of the Confederacy who presented him with the Jefferson Davis Medal for his "distinguished research, publication and preservation of Southern history."

Books offered for sale in the auction were by various noted authors such as J. Frank Dobie, Andy Adams, Jeff Dykes and others. Yet it was Haley's books that were the most popular with bidders. A first edition copy of Haley's "The XIT Ranch of Texas" sold for $1,325 and an extremely rare copy of his "Ode to Nita" brought $1,600. An early copy of "Charles Goodnight: Cowman and Plainsman," first published in 1936, sold for $450 and a rare set of four Christmas cards brought $600.

Held in conjunction with the Bit and Spur Exhibit and the book auction was the library's Fall Art Show, which featured works by artists Jessica McCain, Buck McCain, Dan McCaw, Mike Carroll, Blaine Rowe and others. The paintings bore a distinctive Southwestern flavor, for which the artists are known, and all works displayed in the show were for sale on a first-come, first-served basis.

All proceeds from the book auction and a portion of the proceeds from the art show were to benefit the library building fund. An expansion of the library is tentatively planned for this fall and will increase the space in the library by about 80 percent.

Winners in the Bit and Spur Exhibit were:

Crudest Serviceable Spur — Doyle Glass of Midland for a gal-leg spur.

Fanciest Spur Showing Wear in Service — A stamped J.O. Bass spur in the collection of L.F. Blake of Amarillo.

Spur Believed to be the Longest Record of Use by a Prominent Southwestern Horseman — Two winners: Ron Reed of Midland and Bill Jowell of Midland.

Midland Area Spur with Longest Known Use by a Working Cowboy — Bob Midkiff of Midland with a pair of "bottle opener" spurs that were owned and worn since the early 1900s.

Best Representative Modern or 20th century Ranch Spur — A pair of stamped Bayers gal-leg spurs belonging to Tom Ryan of Midland.

Oldest Spur — Bill Leftwich of Fort Davis with a cast steel spur, 15th century France or Spain.

Oldest Bit — Collection of Morgan R. Chaney owned by Bart and Nena Evans & Sons of Midland, a Mexican ring bit.

Most Unique Spur — Same as above, stamped Bayers bit owned by Bart Evans.

Best Representative Modern 20th century Spur Collection — James J. Wheat of Mentone.

Best Representative Antique Bit and Spur Collection — L.F. Blake of Amarillo.

Most Unique Bit — James J. Wheat of Mentone, a spade bit by G.S. Garcia of Elko, Nev. The owner states that it belonged to American newspaper publisher William Randolph Hearst, 1863-1951.

Junior Mike Bruner, 16, a Power Connection member, said he has seen more community than campus division over the issue.

"Most of the students are neutral," Mike said. "Most people who have heard about it are in support of it."

LHS Principal Jack Fryar said he sees the controversy as a positive one, where students have received a valuable lesson on the democratic process.

"What I see happening in the community is that it's a great moment of learning," Fryar said. "I don't sense any division here at the school, but our kids certainly have been talking about this.

"It isn't as if it's destructive altogether or anything that slows us down. We're still teaching biology and algebra like it was business as usual."

He said the division lies in the community, which has been drawn to the spotlight by extensive publicity.

"Issues are defined and solidified by the media," Fryar said. "If not for the media, the issue may have been unknown.

"I think that this issue was something that was a bit of a surprise to people, but I hear people saying this was a happy surprise."

State takes Travis County inmates

AUSTIN (AP) — The state has begun complying with a federal magistrate's order forcing it to take at least 29 inmates sentenced to prison from Travis County jail each week.

Thirty-three men and seven women were taken by bus to a state prison in Huntsville Friday.

U.S. Magistrate Stephen Capelle last week ordered the Texas Department of Criminal Justice to accept 29 convicted felons from the county jail every week or pay fines of $40 per day per inmate.

Capelle sided with county officials who have complained since 1987 that the backlog of prison-bound inmates in their jail was an expensive burden on county taxpayers.

The state, under a federal court order against prison crowding, set up a quota system in October 1987 for taking inmates sentenced to prison from counties.

The state has been taking prisoners regularly from Travis County, but it sometimes has fallen short of 29 inmates. It did not take any inmates from the county for eight weeks in the last year.

FILTER FACTS

Do not be fooled into thinking that a dark lens offers the best protection against the sun's rays. Lenses must have coatings which filter both ultraviolet (UV) and blue light in order to be effective sunglasses. Ultraviolet light extends from 290 to 400 nanometers on the spectrum. Exposure to these rays has been implicated in retina and cornea damage. It is necessary, therefore, when buying sunglasses, to ask how much of the UV portion of the spectrum is blocked out. As for blue light (400 to 510 nanometers), there is speculation that extended exposure to it can lead to degeneration of the macula (the central portion of the retina). To be safe, ask about a lens' ability to filter out blue light, as well as UV light, before buying sunglasses.

For your prescription or non-prescription sun shade requirements, have your needs assessed at TEXAS STATE OPTICAL, 4511 N. Midkiff. P.S.
Even a label that claims to have "100 percent UV" blocking ability may be talking about UV radiation up to 380 nanometers.

New round of short courses planned at MC

From Staff Reports

The Midland College Department of Continuing Education will offer nine short courses beginning the week of Oct. 2.

Courses are as follows:

Sheryl Holland will teach "Exploring Your Career Potential" on Monday from 7-9 p.m., Oct. 2. This one-day workshop will give you the opportunity to take the Kuder Interest Inventory and the Sixteen Personality Factor Test to help better match your life goals, interests, and skills to specific job areas. Individual appointments for test interpretation will be made. Course fee is $20.

"Speed Reading Clinic" will be taught by Barbara Stoltz in two different sections as follows: Monday and Wednesday from 2-4 p.m., Oct. 2 through Oct. 4 or on Tuesday and Thursday from 7-9 p.m., Oct. 3 through Oct. 5. As a follow-up to the Study Skills sessions, this course provides information on how to increase your reading speed in order to improve your effectiveness as a student. Class limited to 20 students. Course fee is $8.

Willis Brinson will be teaching "Homebuyer's Survival Guide" on Tuesdays from 7-9 p.m., Oct. 3 through Nov. 7. This course will provide prospective homebuyers with an overview of the appraisals and current value trends within the local market. At the conclusion of the course, students should have the necessary skills to evaluate an appraisal of their property and determine if it is correctly valued. If applying for a new loan, they should know where and how to obtain a copy of their appraisal, and should know their rights concerning the valuation of their property. Course fee is $22.

"Retirement Planning Strategies" will be taught by Sterling Welch on Tuesdays from 7-9 p.m., Oct. 3 through Oct. 24. Targeting individuals and couples contemplating retirement within the next ten years, as well as recently retired persons, this course will address the following topics: pre-retirement, goal setting; sources of retirement income and retirement funding strategies; taxation for retirees; and Social Security and Medicare benefits. While working with a certified financial planner, students will have the opportunity to complete a sample retirement plan and then apply the principles learned to their specific situations. Course fee is $15.

Jim Trolinder will be teaching "Tax-Wise Investing" on Tuesday, Oct. 3 from 7-9 p.m. The course will discuss various types of tax advantaged investments. How to allocate assets for long range financial independence, and the benefits of tax deferral in providing for future income. Course fee is $6.

"Figure Drawing" will be taught by Judy Morrison-Griffin on Thursdays from 6:30-9 p.m., Oct. 5 through Oct. 26. Instruction in developing basic proportions of the face and body for the beginner and developed techniques for the advanced artist. A model will be used during some class time. Supply information available the first night of class. Class limited to 16 students. Course fee is $19.

George Friday will be teaching "Real Estate Inspector Workshop: Structural Inspection" on Friday, Oct. 6 from 1-5 p.m., Saturday and Sunday, Oct. 7 and 8 from 8 a.m.-5 p.m. Course content will entail a review of essential inspection areas, to include roofs, insulation, frames, openings, fireplaces, foundations and floors. Course fee is $36.

"CPA Review Courses: Business Law" will be taught by Martha Lassetter on Saturday from 9 a.m.-1 p.m., Oct. 7 through Oct. 28. Review content will include contracts; commercial transactions and the UCC; debtor-creditor relationships; business organizations; government regulation of business; the CPA and the law; and property. Course fee is $29.

Inmate may have broken own neck

MADISONVILLE, Texas (AP) — A state prison inmate who died after a scuffle with guards may have broken his own neck during his violent struggle, authorities say.

William Corey Watt, 28, of Texas City, died Sept. 18 at the Ferguson Unit after battling guards who were moving him to a "control cell."

Prison officials initially told the inmate's family he had suffered a heart attack during a forced cell move, but a state legislator looking into the matter said prison deputy director Andy Collins told him Watt died of a broken neck.

"There was one time in the infirmary where he could have broken his neck," said Madison County Sheriff Travis Neeley, who reviewed videotapes of the incident. He said Watt was lying on his stomach on an examining table in the clinic, with his arms cuffed behind him, his legs restrained and five officers holding him down.

"He made a lunge on the table," Neeley said. "It looked like he used his head and neck to raise officers off of him."

Neeley said was moved after he refused to talk to a psychiatric nurse or be moved to a psychiatric unit. His mother requested an assistant warden talk to her son about going to the psychiatric unit after Watt became verbally abusive with her on a Sunday visit.

Watt had been serving a 10-year sentence for aggravated sexual assault. He had had 24 disciplinary cases filed against him in the two years he has been in prison, Neeley said.

ENDOMETRIOSIS

A COMMON CAUSE OF PELVIC PAIN and INFERTILITY

FREE TO THE PUBLIC

Tuesday, September 26th
7:30 P.M.

Women's and Children's Hospital Auditorium

Presented by

DAVID S. LIBSON, M.D.

Endometriosis is a disease which can occur in any woman of childbearing age. It may cause pelvic pain especially at the time of a woman's period.

Endometriosis is also a cause of infertility and can damage the reproductive organs. Many women can be effectively treated by means that are best adapted to this specific problem.

Dr. Libson practices in Odessa in the field of obstetrics, gynecology and infertility. He will be answering questions from the audience as well as presenting information on Endometriosis: What is the disease? How is it diagnosed? What options are available for treatment? Please call for reservations at 334-8297 as space as limited.

Students' request appears justified

Although the decision by Midland Independent School District trustees won't be made at Tuesday's board meeting, a couple of student groups wanting to hold religious meetings on campus have not only school officials, but students and the community talking about the issue of prayer as it relates to education.

After two student groups — called "7:14" and "Power Connection" asked to be allowed to hold meetings on campus, school superintendent Dr. Joseph Baressi said the district's attorney has been instructed to study information relating to past and pending court cases involving prayer in schools, but that students seeking permission to hold the religious meetings did not file a formal request and legal briefs in time to be placed on the agenda for Tuesday's meeting. So the decision by the school board is on hold another two weeks.

One of the primary concerns raised in such instances is the constitutional separation of church and state, but the request by the student groups apparently does not conflict with federal regulations concerning separation of church and state, according to information from U.S. Rep. Lamar Smith's office. The major objection to prayer in school appears to stem, at the Supreme Court level, from the fear that a particular denominational prayer or dogma would be required of all students or, in the extreme atheistic view, that a prayer — any prayer — actually implies belief in a Supreme Being when such an assertion could infringe on individual rights of non-belief.

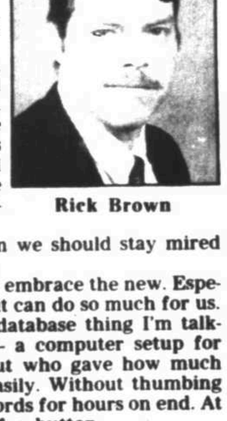
But there has never been a restriction, as far as we are aware, against a student praying silently and in private, without disrupting other students, at some point in the school day. It seems to be especially appropriate if the meetings are student-initiated. In fact, under the Equal Access Act of 1984 Congress mandated that student religious groups be permitted to meet on public secondary school premises if the school has in effect a limited open forum policy for other student groups as well.

Dr. Baressi noted that MISD may actually have student-initiated groups meeting on campus already and if that is the case, it would be difficult to justify not allowing these prayer groups to meet, as long as the meetings were before or after regular school hours or possibly during the lunch period. He also noted that the only ones who could attend the meetings would be willing students.

The superintendent noted that the district's main concerns are to base its ruling on as firm a legal ground as possible while being as cooperative with the student position as they can. That's an even-handed approach and, judging from the applicable case law we've seen, should favor the student request.

Database could answer contribution questions

AUSTIN — As long as everyone is making lists of things to assist our state lawmakers keep their gifts and contributions on the up and up, here's what's at the top of mine.



Rick Brown

It's a database.

Tut, tut, not to recoil in revulsion. Just because we're Texas and Old Times Here Are Not Forgotton doesn't mean we should stay mired in the past.

We should embrace the new. Especially when it can do so much for us.

Like this database thing I'm talking about — a computer setup for searching out who gave how much to whom. Easily. Without thumbing through records for hours on end. At the touch of a button.

The feds have one already, or at least have been in the process of putting one together for several years.

The Texas node (another example of fancy computer talk we're just going to have to get used to), will be up and running in the Secretary of State's Office in a week or so.

The Federal Election Commission actually started the service, which provides information only about federal officeholders, in 1984. I guess I'm not surprised it took five years to reach Texas.

John Surina, the staff director of the FEC in Washington, D.C., says one reason for the delay was Gramm-Rudman budget constraints, which set us back at least one of those years.

Surina calls the system "a common-sense extension of our disclosure program."

Surina also says a lot of things that probably make lawmakers wince, things like: "I'm sure some people are not terribly pleased about disclosure, be they large contributors or large recipients."

However, "The commission has always believed that getting campaign information out to the public in an intelligible manner is the best inducement to complience.

"Coming out against disclosure is like coming out against apple pie," he says. "The best enforcer is an informed voter."

So why can't we have a system just for Texas, one for our own state legislators?

Not because of the money, it seems.

The FEC keeps track of 7,000 political action committees and $1.6 billion to $1.75 billion in campaign transactions during each two-year election cycle.

Yet its database costs only about $1 million a year to maintain.

Compare that to the $4 billion-plus state budget the Legislature approved earlier this year. Will our state costs be less? Probably, since we have fewer lawmakers to keep track of. So will the system be cost effective? You bet.

Of the $1 million, Surina says most of the money goes toward data input costs — keeping on hand enough people at keyboards to type in information from 35,000 to 40,000 reports.

Retrieval costs — expenses for making the information available to you and me — are vastly less, he says.

If we could just convince county governments to ante up a couple of thousand each for hardware, we could have a node in every courthouse.

Just think: Wondering which big-money, statewide interests, if any, your state representative is beholden to? Just type in a few key strokes and get a list.

Or better yet: Your representative, knowing information is at your fingertips, has decided not to take contributions from big-money, statwide interests. You type in a few strokes and get a list only of hometown contributors.

Voila: Reform.

Well, maybe it's not all that simple. Like much of computer innovation when first introduced, there's probably a bug in there somewhere.

One very large bug at the moment is that the law isn't very explicit about what legislators have to report. Things like skiing trips to Utah seem to have a habit of slipping through the cracks.

Texans also have no agency like the FEC whose sole duty is to oversee contributions and other ethical concerns. A new State Ethics Commission would be a welcome addition.

But even supposing those reforms make it into law, we've got to be able to find out with some facility whether they're being followed.

A statewide database, like Surina says, is the common-sense extension.

Bush possible target for cartel's guns

WASHINGTON — The more President Bush sticks his neck out in the drug war, the more attractive a target he becomes for assassins. That means the Secret Service, which is accustomed to protecting the president from everyday lunatics, now has to worry about protecting him from trained drug cartel assassins — the same assassins who have been picking off Colombian officials with the ease of shooting fish in a pond.

Jack Anderson

As we reported recently, the Secret Service is taking seriously an alleged plot by the Medellin cocaine cartel to kill Bush by November. A reliable informant told the Secret Service that 10 cartel hit men are waiting on a ranch in the northern Mexico state of Chihuahua. They are reportedly trying to arrange safe transit to Wheeling, W. Va., from where they will stage the hit on Bush.

That report is not an isolated warning. A former cartel member told a Senate subcommittee two weeks ago that drug lords could be plotting to kill Bush. From behind a screen that protected his identity, the witness told the subcommittee, "Maybe the president of the United States would be the victim of drug traffickers."

The escalating U.S. role in Colombia has put Washington security on edge. A well-placed source told our associate Jim Lynch that the Justice Department doubled its protection of Attorney General Richard Thornburgh last week after hearing he was also considered a cartel target.

Protecting a president is no picnic — especially a president who golfs, jogs and visits Chinese restaurants when he isn't addressing unscreened audiences or waving at crowds. Voters in a democracy like to see the man who works for them, and they don't like going through metal detectors or background checks to do it.

The Secret Service is well-trained to protect the president against assassins, but most of their experience has been with garden variety psychopaths who just wake up one morning with a hankering to get their names in the paper — like John Hinckley and Squeaky Fromme.

The White House security system is ready for a frontal assault by commandos, but ill prepared for a bag lady who scales the fence with plastique in her panty hose.

Some 40 agents patrol the White House grounds at any time. Their weapons include Uzi submachine guns, .38 Smith and Wesson revolvers and a couple of shoulder-held rocket launchers. Two military jets patrol the eastern seaboard around the clock on alert for any air assault on Washington, and the air space over the White House is off limits.

The Secret Service claims its best people are on White House duty, but sources tell us the agents don't aspire to that job. "It's the most boring beat an agent could have," a former agent told us. "You sit in a booth and twiddle your thumbs for eight hours."

Here are some little-known intrusions that have broken that monotony.

■ One White House "tourist" put a gun to a tour guide's back and demanded to be taken to the Oval Office. The guide was an undercover Secret Service agent. He led the gunman down a hallway and grabbed his gun. Now there are metal detectors at the White House tour entrance.

■ A man dressed in martial arts clothing scrambled over the White House fence at night and put up a fight with his fists and feet alone. One Secret Service agent ran to the weapons shack to get hand axes. (The agents don't carry billy clubs on the theory that it wouldn't make for good public relations.) The karate kid was finally surrounded and subdued by about eight Secret Service men.

■ Repeated attempts by motorists to drive onto the White House grounds inspired concrete barriers that now make the White House look like a stretch of the New Jersey Turnpike under construction. The gates are backed up by metal plates that spring into place if the gates are struck hard enough. In 1981 an Illinois man dented the gates and smashed his car when he tried to ram through at 40 mph.

■ Also in 1981, a man jumped the White House fence and was arrested on his way to the front door. His duffle bag was jammed with his belongings and he said all he wanted was a job.

In the end, wits and preparation may be the best defense the Secret Service has against the high-tech weaponry in the hands of the multi-billion-dollar cocaine cartel.

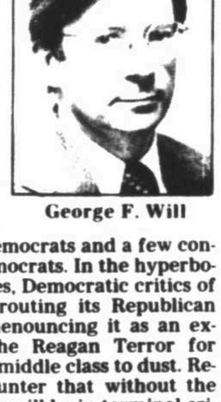
GEORGE F. WILL

Daggers drawn on capital-gains tax issue

WASHINGTON — Back when our communist adversaries were more adversarial, they predicted intensification of class conflict as capitalism entered its death throes. They were right, judging by the rhetoric boiling around the proposal to cut the capital-gains tax.



George F. Will

Democrats and Republicans are at daggers drawn. So are liberal Democrats and a few conservative Democrats. In the hyperbole sweepstakes, Democratic critics of the cut are routing its Republican supporters, denouncing it as an extension of the Reagan Terror for grinding the middle class to dust. Republicans counter that without the cut capitalism will be in terminal crisis. With the cut the middle class will swim in wealth, the result of reduced taxes on sales of stocks, bonds and houses, and from the acceleration of economic growth.

Actually, in the guise of serious moral strife we have the same old stuff — bipartisan consensus that the purpose of government is to rain benefits on the middle class. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, who once favored cutting the capital-gains tax, now vows to die in the last ditch opposing this sop to the plutocracy. He proposes instead restoring and expanding IRAs (Individual Retirement Accounts) which would please "a broad spectrum of middle America."

Economists (not that their opinions matter much in this political argument) differ about these measures.

"Economists," says George Stigler who is one (one with a Nobel Prize), "were first identified as a separate species toward the end of the 18th century." They have been deplored ever since because they are constantly talking about the costs of life and they supposedly are less sensitive than the rest of us to moral, rather than merely efficient, courses of action. But they do know things, including what it is that cannot be known.

There is a consensus that cutting the capital-gains rate would yield a modest spurt of revenues by advancing some investors' decisions to realize capital gains. The spurt would not matter much to the $1 trillion federal budget or the $5 trillion economy.

And there the economists' certainty (as opposed to certitude) ends. The long-term effects of a cut are unclear. However, no one here cares because in Washington "the long term" is measured in months. The spurt of revenues would help with this autumn's budget minuet. Similiarly, the possibility that the Medicare catastrophic-care program might produce a surplus this year (before becoming a sea of red ink) is the micro-reason some in Congress and the administration resist repealing it.

The micro-reason why many Democrats oppose the capital-gains cut is that Democrats voting for the cut blurs the distinction between the parties. So the party is (in the words of Chairman Ron Brown) drawing "a line in the sand" on capital gains. It is an unfortunate metaphor: Lines in the sand do not last.

Supporters of a capital-gains cut comprise an intense minority of voters whose intensity, manifested in pressure on Congress, derives from the prospect of immediate, concrete gains. Opponents of the cut have an abstract, ideological objection. In Washington, intensity and concreteness matter, as can be seen regarding the catastrophic-care program.

The fate of that program shows that raining benefits on the middle class can be dangerous. If, as seems probable, the program is repealed, that will be in large measure because the program incorporated a novel principle: Beneficiaries should finance their own benefits. That was enough of an affront to the elderly. Worse yet was the fact that many had adequate coverage already.

The collapse of the program, if it comes to that, will reflect its slipshod beginning. Ronald Reagan endorsed catastrophic care after a Cabinet meeting in which various colleagues offered anecdotes about the hardships suffered by elderly people they knew. The final remarks before Reagan left the room came from Otis Bowen, secretary of Health and Human Services, whose wife had died of cancer after a protracted illness and whose mother was in a nursing home.

In his message to Congress, Reagan boasted the catastrophic care would "give Americans the last full measure of security." That was nonsense but fascinating: Mr. Conservative blandly endorsed the ideal of government providing everyone with the last full measure of security.

As the Congress apologizes for the catastrophic-care surtax, and as the capital gains argument is presented as a battle of Armageddon between sharply divided parties, remember this: The class struggle is a struggle to corner credit for making the middle class purr contentedly.

WILLIAM SAFIRE

Whole nation seems hooked on drug lingo

In the crackdown on crack and other drugs, there may be no magic bullet, but drug kingpins, narco-terrorists and even casual users — not to mention carpers on the sidelines — can expect zero tolerance.

William Safire

This is the lingo of drug warfare. The nation is hooked on it (we are all linguistic junkies), and because there is no getting this particular monkey off our backs, let's at least dig up the derivations of the phrases being pushed in the discourse of drug dudgeon.

In the early days, about three generations back, we had hopheads ("hop" for opium) and dope fiends ("dope" from the Dutch doop for "sauce" or "dip," referring to the sticky opiate). The standard English covering these slang terms is user, in contrast to pusher.

"To the so-called 'casual user'" was the beginning of a warning by President Bush in March of 1989 to recreational users, a phrase chosen by some drug users to differentiate themselves from addictive users. Casual user is not rooted exclusively in the drug culture; the phrase can be found in a 1976 Business Week story about a computer system "not geared for the casual user"; other early citations also point to popularization by computer whizzes derogating those of us in the non-serious software crowd. Crossover use was natural: Mary Jane Hatcher, the widow of a murdered law officer, said, "We middle-class suburban Americans, we casual users ... must accept blame ...."

"American cocaine users need to understand that our nation has zero tolerance for casual drug use," said the president in his Sept. 5 speech outlining what he labeled his "drug strategy."

Zero is from the Arabic sifr; the first citation for zero tolerance in the Barnhart Books files is from a 1958 Science Newsletter: "A good example of the care taken to protect against pesticide poisoning is the minimum tolerance set for milk: zero. ... Recently, zero tolerance was set for methoxychlor and malathion." In the Nixon White House, H.R. (Bob) Haldeman was known for demanding zero mistakes, and the zero tolerance phrase was popularized in the drug world by William von Raab, then U.S. Customs chief, when he sought last year to impound yachts that had even a single marijuana cigarette aboard.

Lately, zero has become an emphatic way to say "no": margarine makers promise "zero cholesterol," and economists warn of "zero growth." The word has been booming ever since the atomic age's "ground zero," and one of these days I will zero in on it.

A narc was long the slang name for a narcotics law enforcement officer, rooted in the Greek narke, "numbness, stiffness, stupor," but now the first two syllables of "narcotics" are frequently found in longer terms. Like klepto- and crypto-, pseudo- and porno-, narco- is a combining form, which can now be applied to anything in the illicit drug trade.

Nestor K. Ikeda, reporting from Lima for The Associated Press in 1982, attributed the coinage of narco-terrorism to Fernando Belaunde Terry, at that time Peru's president, who was describing a union of drug dealers and political terrorists. In his Democratic response to Bush's message, Sen. Joseph R. Biden Jr. lashed out at narco-terrorism, which had been used on the cover of Newsweek that week.

Crack (originally, the word referred to a noise) is recent. The term for pellet-sized pieces of cocaine prepared for smoking was just becoming popular when the 1986 Slang and Jargon of Drugs and Drink was being printed, and was not included. The author, Richard A. Spears, professor of linguistics at Northwestern University, suggests a clue to the etymology in the entry for crystal.

"What is now called crack was known as crystallized cocaine in the early medical days, and that hard form is still known as rock. There's no definitive evidence," says Spears, "but it makes sense that crack comes from the physical cracking of those rocks and crystals — literally, the crackling sound of those rocks as they are broken up."

Bush addressing alarming situation in education

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

NEW YORK — With the deplorable situation that has existed far too long in the quality of education in our elementary and high schools, President Bush is to be commended for summoning an educational summit to be held in Charlottesville, Va., next Wednesday and Thursday.

Hearst

The governor of every state has been summoned to the meeting. It is only the third time in our history that a president has called all the governors together to consider a single national issue. During his campaign, President Bush said he hoped to be remembered as the "education President."

His aim is to secure cooperation of every governor in helping to set realistic educational goals for our nation's younger children because of the incredibly bad rating most of them have in comparison with foreign students. In practically every international comparison, American children perform at or near the bottom of the industrialized world in math, science, and writing.

A recent survey by the International Association for the Evaluation of Educational Achievement compared 9th grade general science students in 16 countries. In advanced chemistry, our young students finished 12th. In general, they have for years now been far behind England, Singapore, Australia, Hungary and Poland, although between 1945 and 1969 they were clearly leaders in science and the arts.

Another international comparison in mathematics and science skills earlier this year showed American 13-year-olds scoring at the bottom with South Korean students performing four times better. In science, 73 percent of South Korean students could use scientific procedures and analyze science data compared with 42 percent of American students. More than half of all high school students in a national survey could not define basic terms like profit and inflation. An incorrect definition of inflation was given by 75 percent, and 66 percent said profits equaled something other than revenue minus costs.

The National Association of Educational Performance, which conducts random tests of about 100,000 children, found only 12 percent of 17-year-olds could arrange a series of fractions in order of size, and only 5 percent could accurately read a bus schedule. According to the Wall Street Journal, 44 percent of 17-year-olds who applied for work at a New Jersey insurance office could not read at 9th grade level.

William B. Walstad, author of a report on the economic literacy of U.S. high school students, said: "Our schools are producing a nation of economic illiterates."

Many reasons have been given for the drastic decline in the quality of our education, especially for younger children. Some say it is lack of adequate funding, but President Bush's budget for the '89 fiscal year allotted nearly $12 billion to schools for kindergarten through grade 12, including $100 million for bilingual programs.

My own opinion is that it's not lack of money, although many teachers are underpaid, which makes it difficult to recruit highly motivated and competent educators.

I believe the main problems are the liberal influence in our educational system, the failure of parents to apply stronger pressure on children to pay more attention to homework and less to TV, and the lack of teacher authority to impose much stronger discipline in the schoolroom. We obviously need new criteria for improvements in our educational system.

One of the most shocking disclosures concerning the lack of appropriate education of our young children was a recent report by the American Federation of Teachers. It said the five most commonly used high school history textbooks barely touch on such paramount figures as George Washington and Abraham Lincoln. One textbook provided no biography on Lincoln and devoted 24 of 43 pages about the Civil War to pictures, maps and graphics which the book publishers think helps sell the books.

State Boards of Education are responsible for what textbooks are used in their public schools, but apparently they let the book publishers decide.

Since the federal government provides billions of dollars of taxpayers' money annually to the states for educational purposes, I believe a reputable commission composed of one representative each from the Department of Education, Congress, the National Governors' Association representing the states, and organizations such as the National League of Cities and the National Association of Counties representing local communities should be established to hold hearings and to recommend by majority vote what should be in our public school textbooks, especially concerning our history, traditions and culture. It would be up to the states and localities, of course, to accept or reject the recommendations although Congress could always threaten to withhold funds as pressure.

Media doesn't seem to understand issue

Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof: or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the Government for a redress of grievences." Amendments — Article I, The Constitution of the United States.

With respect to the petition of certain persons to the Midland Independent School District concerning their rights or not to have prayer on school property, I have quoted the First Amendment to the Constitution, inasmuch as many members of the news media either have never read this particular part of the Constitution in its entirety, or have elected to disregard those parts of it which do not suit their purposes — whatever they may be.

The news media are prompt to point out any and every attempt to limit their rights of free speech and freedom of the press as covered in this amendment. Do not you, the news media, think it appropriate when you point out that whereas "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion" should be as prompt to point out that "Congress shall make no law ... prohibiting the free exercise thereof:" would in effect guarantee that those of any and all religious persuasions are free to exercise their religious persuasions are free to exercise their religious beliefs? Many of you have implied that such assembly may be unconstitutional.

I am not a constitutional lawyer nor do I have an axe to grind, but I believe that I still have the capability to read and understand plain English. It seems to me that certain segments of our society have elected to observe some portions of the Constitution and ignore others, as it suits their fancy at any given time.

Let's be fair and may everyone enjoy the same protection under our Constitution.

Prayer might have stopped suicides

First of all I would like to commend this group of young Christians for their commitment and courage. They are not afraid to stand up for what they believe in.

As I was reflecting on this subject, for some reason the teen suicides that have occurred in Midland over the past couple of years came to mind. Perhaps, if they had had a group of supportive Christian friends to talk with and pray about their problems, this wouldn't have happened. Maybe it would have. However, when friends won't listen there is a God who will.

I do believe that our first amendment is being violated. The first amendment states, "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof or abridging the freedom of speech or of the press or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and to petition the government for a redress of grievances."

Our country was established on democracy, faith in God and hard work. Everyday, we lose a few more of our rights. I encourage all Christians to write their congressman and house of representatives to bring the issue of public prayer to the voters.

As to the separation of state and religion, I do not believe that there is.

The news media reports that the president attended church, and tells which church he attended. When there is something concerning the pope, whether appointment, visits, or death it is on the news. I am not of the Catholic religion and do not watch this coverage, which is my freedom. In swearing-ins for political offices, appointment of judges, and witnesses court cases, the Bible is used. On our monies, the words, "In God We Trust" is imprinted. There is not total separation of state and religion and I say "Amen."

What these young people are doing is not disruptive. Other groups use school property to meet on. If they are meeting before school hours, where does the jurisdiction come in? I don't see where this interferes with anyone. I hold cheerleading practices on school property after school hours. There are probably some that don't believe in cheerleading or like it, but does that mean I shouldn't be allowed to do so?

Some parents send their children to private school, but we all can't afford to do so and we all pay taxes for public education and expect our elected school officials to have a moral obligation toward our young people, who are the future of tomorrow.

Let's not inhibit godly alternative

I am writing concerning the controversy of not letting the teenagers pray on MHS campus ground.

I am sick and tired of the teenagers who are trying to save their generation through prayer being told, "no, that's not legal." And here we have other groups of teenagers involved in Satanic cults and the authorities could care less about what they say or do.

What the teenagers involved in Satanic cults need is Godly help and prayer, but how can they get it when the Christian teenagers can't pray in school?

So Midland, what will it be? Are we going to let God come in, or are we going to tell him, "You are not wanted here in our schools." And tell Satan, "Come on in, you are welcome here."
Julie Giles

What other answers can schools offer?

Please tell me, Midland school district officials, what answers do you have to the multiple bondages entrapping our teens today: drugs, alcohol, suicide, violence, sexual immorality. Is this going to help? To take a group of kids who are meeting to do something positive, pray, and deny them the right to do it. Oh, pardon me, I forgot that you're trying to protect our Constitution. Let our kids go to hell, but let's make sure no one violated our Constitution. You need to go back and read the writings of our founding fathers who believed in prayer to God so much that they made it a daily practice in Congress. Thanks for working hard to do away with what they wanted. Mr. Torres you are the one who is not upholding the Constitution or the laws of the land, for in 1984 Congress passed the Equal Access Act stating that a school must not ban a group of students from meeting just because they want to discuss the Bible or pray unless the school is ready to stop every other club and function that is not related to the school's curriculum, like pep club, chess club, photography club, or a service organization. I'm pretty sure one of those kinds of clubs can be found at your school. So in this hyperprotectionism of the laws of the land, you are in direct violation of the Equal Access Act, and what is that teaching our kids? This meeting for prayer should be condoned enthusiastically by the school officials because these students have enough love and concern to try and do something about the shape our land is in. Let's reinforce good actions for a while instead of bad, then something will change. I hope these kids don't back down on this. They have every right to do what they are doing.

MISD reminded of Equal Access

The Associated Press reported in an article published in the Wichita Falls Times-Record News on Thursday, September 7, that Midland Independent School District has barred a student prayer group from meeting on school property. This is being done for "Constitutional reasons," in other words, for "separation of church and state." I have written the district and reminded them of the Equal Access laws. I hope that the Christians of your city will stand up and be counted. If this is not taken care of it could set a precedent and then snowball into something our entire nation will regret.

To Brent Wetendorf I say, "Stand tall and proud for you have the Almighty and Most Powerful on your side." I admire you for what you are doing and my prayers go out for you and every member in your group. However, even more prayers are being said for the administrators of your school district. I just pray that soon they come to realize what the consequences of their decisions could be.
Ri Trotter

Let's commend youth who chose morality

The Wichita Falls Times-Record News picked up from the AP an article concerning the fact that your school district is barring prayer meetings from school grounds.

This is very disturbing considering the downward trend of the morality of our nation. There you obviously have a group of youth who care and desire to see a change for the better in our world, and that is so rare these days. They should be commended, not disbanded. Furthermore, they should be given all the support your administration could possibly give them.

Most youth (as well as adults) have a need to be bonded in some fashion with someone or something. If it isn't with a group of young Christians who are morally upright and who seek to better themselves and assist others in the process, then it is with an immoral group who seek to defeat, defame, and destroy themselves and anyone else.

By choosing the stand you have taken, you will be contributing to the moral decay of your own community and our nation as a whole. I realize I don't live in your community, but I believe that whatever happens in one area affects others. We must all work together harder than ever before to stop the degradation of our society, and the best possible way is to begin with our youth.

Therefore, I plead with you to reconsider your decision and support these youth in every way possible.

Teens show courage, need our acceptance

Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings, thou has perfected praise? (Matthew 21:16"

When I heard of the Midland High School students (7:14) taking a stand for what we all know is right, I was deeply touched by their courage to do what Christians neglected to do 25 years ago. These young people are not trying to teach or force any religious doctrine on their peers or the faculty. They are not trying to boost their church's membership. Their request is simple, but because of the lack of wisdom, it becomes a complicated matter.

Why is prayer acceptable to begin a ballgame at the stadium, which is also school property, and not at the beginning of a school day? Why is prayer acceptable to begin every Midland City Council meeting and not acceptable for a group of young people to start the course of their day? It seems to me that there is a way around what the school establishment has been quoted as saying is "unconstitutional."

I would rather these students be involved in prayer than drugs. As pointed out by President Bush, and acknowledged by millions of people, the war is against drugs, not prayer. Prayer is ammunition to defeat drugs, and if these students want to pray on the campus before they enter the school building, they have the right to do so. They attend school, we do not. They know what they are faced with every day, we do not. What would you choose for the next generation prayer or drugs?

Students are attending school with guns, knives, drugs and drug paraphernalia, which basically means your child is entering a combat zone on the school campuses. No matter how often it is denied or ignored, drugs are present in Midland's school system. The few students that are "busted" are but a drop in the bucket as to what is actually transpiring on a daily basis. When placing your child in an environment of this nature, it is unknown what will happen throughout the course of the day and if they want and need to pray before tackling these problems, then I see no reason why this request should be denied.

I support these young people 100% in their endeavor. Their sincerity in standing tall and strong for Jesus is encouraging to me. I also support them because, even though we know this is right, they had the guts to challenge the establishment and say "just because it's in the Constitution doesn't make it right."

I ask that the MISD board seriously consider their position in this matter and stand behind our youth as they take a stand for what we all know, as Christians, is right.

Readers' views on: MC, four-year plan

Maybe UT won't measure up here

I was shocked at the comment made in the Sept. 17th article entitled "Full-fledged university essential to area's recovery" and that the University of Texas system would grant a seven-year transition period to "allow current Midland College instructors to upgrade their teaching credentials to university standards." All full-time instructors at Midland College have their Masters and most their Doctorates. What standards do they have to meet?

Perhaps the university standards aren't high enough for some of the MC instructors. They may prefer a smaller system where they get to know the students and feel they contribute more to their education and they'd rather not be swallowed up by a monster system where they become "just a number."

Is being a part of the UT system something we want or need? According to the article the typical tax burden is $61.75 per year but by the graph on page 3B the cost could more than double in the number of hours in the UT system. The "Angelo plan" says it will keep the vocational-technical portion of MC but do we have a guarantee that a few years down the road these won't be dropped?

Will the college keep its Continuing Education programs? Where will the people of Midland go to get economical classes on such diverse subjects as conversational Spanish, quilting, bridge, Lotus 1-2-3? Who will work with the surrounding volunteer fire departments on instructional classes? Under the "Angelo plan" will the immensely popular Kid's College be available for the elementary-age children during the summer?

The people of Midland need to find out exactly what we will gain or lose if Midland College should be put under the UT system. The cost of becoming debt-free may be too high.
Gwyn Hill

Changing MC status sounds pretty naive

Attempting to blend Midland College into a four-year university status is one naive idea! Such hybrid institution would be like a mule trying to reproduce an offspring. Those civic leaders whom are touting this should investigate further the statement made by the former mayor in a recent Sunday edition that, "Nobody knows for sure how all the details would be worked out ..." I'm for looking at the little pictures that mean the most before jumping to the big one.

As a university graduate and senior citizen presently taking courses at MC, I find the college is well-equipped and organized, and is an excellent service to its community. The instructors are qualified as well. Additionally, the students I have encountered seem oriented and serious about their education.

Finally, my response is let's keep MC the way it is and not money around for the sake of some more tax money, and not opt for a "mule institution."

UT wouldn't meet vocational needs

As a long-time resident of Midland and having had direct working contact with Midland College and the powers in Austin, I feel I must address the present effort to destroy Midland College in favor of the University of Texas System.

In the few years prior to its starting in 1985, Dr. Parrish, Dr. Trotter, myself as technical director of radiology at Midland Memorial Hospital, many Midland physicians and interested citizens worked to establish a program for radiologic technologists in Midland. The Texas Higher Education Coordination Board was very resistant to this program as there was a program in Odessa (20 miles distant) and one in Big Spring (40 miles). The need was proven and MC was given approval for a RT program. There continues to be a shortage of radiologic technologists in area the area and the nation.

Mr. Angelo and Mr. Billingsley state that it can be written into the proposed plan that the UT system would maintain the vocational and technical programs presently offered at Midland College. To my knowledge, the University of Texas System has no vocational-technical programs offered in the state. I believe that when such a plan is proposed the University of Texas Board of Regents will say, you have these programs available within 20 to 40 miles. Let us not forget Midland residents had been in this position prior to Midland College.

It is stated that the UT system would assume $5 million of Midland's bond indebtedness, why not, how many millions of dollars in assets would the UT system receive? These are dollars the citizens of Midland gave or agreed to spend for a first-rate community college.

There are many other reasons, the history of the people of Midland striving for a community college, the cost to students, etc. I will just say that as past president of the Texas Society of Radiologic Technologists, former technical director of radiology at MMH and former student of Midland College, it would be a sad day if we lost Midland College.

Upper-level school would upgrade town

I am disgusted and dismayed with the hoopla over converting Midland College to a four-year institution via the University of Texas system (UTPB). I am aware that nearly everyone is wealthy beyond belief in this town and want to send their children off to school to broaden them. Go ahead. However, Midland should know how many people have to work at jobs in order to go to college. Some even have difficulty raising money for the daily drive to Odessa.

Surely the citizens of Midland will not turn down an upper-level college available to all locally. Do you not realize it can only upgrade our community, bring educated people here, make more money for us and, in general, make living here a little less bleak? Let us think of the number of jobs which have been created for people.

If you are unhappy with the school, why don't you get behind it and work to make it what you want? There are various boards you can work on and groups you can join to express your wants. I do. Request the courses you want, write letters to the regents. Are you aware of the superior educational level of the faculty of UTPB, or the number of published professors? You should be.

Go off to school if you want to, or send your children away. I do not mind. But please let us have a four-year school here so all can have an opportunity for a college education, too. It isn't where you get your degree; it is what you do with it.

I welcome a four-year school in Midland!

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, September 24, the 267th day of 1989. There are 98 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

Two hundred years ago, on September 24, 1789, Congress passed the First Judiciary Act, which provided for an Attorney General and a Supreme Court.

On this date:

In 1869, thousands of businessmen were ruined in a Wall Street panic after financiers Jay Gould and James Fisk attempted to corner the gold market.

In 1896, author F. Scott Fitzgerald was born in St. Paul, Minn.

In 1929, Lieutenant James H. Doolittle guided a Consolidated NY-2 Biplane over Mitchell Field in New York in the first all-instrument flight.

In 1934, Babe Ruth made his farewell appearance as a regular baseball player with the New York Yankees in a game against the Boston Red Sox. (The Sox won, 5-0.)

In 1948, Mildred Gillars, accused of being Nazi wartime radio propagandist "Axis Sally," pleaded innocent in a Washington, D.C., courtroom to charges of treason.

'College Classics' courses to begin Monday at MC

From Staff Reports

A series of classes designed especially for those 55 and over begins Monday at Midland College. Called "College Classics," the courses are being taught over a four-week period in the afternoons, usually on one day a week.

Session I ends Oct. 20, to be followed by Session II from Oct. 23-Nov. 17.

"There are still openings in virtually all class sections," said Jan Reed, coordinator of the programs. "We are registering now for both the first and second sessions in order to make it easy to get enrolled. It also helps the students plan their other fall activities."

A single registration fee of $25 allows unlimited class enrollment for both sessions. The low cost is possible because all the instructors have volunteered their time without pay. Some of the instructors are from the college faculty/staff, while others have been recruited from the community.

Courses offered during Session I include: art appreciation, basic automotive service, bookkeeping I, calligraphy, changing relationships, comprehensive financial planning, computerized dietary analysis, computers, financial planning for retirement, "55 Alive," golf, grief and recovery, "Help Parents Help Kids," history and folklore of native plants, "How to Get Barely Out of Town," "How to Record Your Life Story," Midland birds, beginning piano, potpourri workshop, spanish, tennis, tole painting, walk for fun, word processing, and world history continues.

Session II courses are: aerobics, aloneness vs. loneliness, bookkeeping II, computers, dealing with emergencies, drawing, economics of current events, fat busters, "55 Alive," holiday silk wreaths, "How Protestants Differ," "Increasing the Power of Your Mind," "Managing Your Health," memorable characters in history, needlepoint, oil industry, intermediate piano, potpourri workshop, retirement investments, shared adventures, taming the 35mm camera, tennis, understanding the stock market, walk for fun, and world history continues.

Registration is through the Continuing Education Office, Administration Building. For more information, call 685-4518.

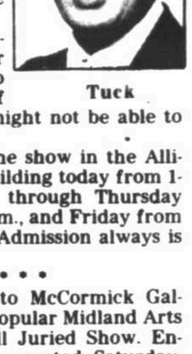
Display to close; Juried show to follow

By H.A. TUCK

Closing Friday is the photographic show about "The Gothic Churches of France," which has been on display in the McCormick Gallery during the month. These photos are wonderfully detailed, showing exteriors and interiors of some of the well-known French cathedrals. A number of the photos also give close-ups of details visitors might not be able to see.



Tuck

You can see the show in the Allison Fine Arts Building today from 1-5 p.m., Monday through Thursday from 8 a.m.-10 p.m., and Friday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Admission always is free.

• • •

Coming next to McCormick Gallery is the ever-popular Midland Arts Association's Fall Juried Show. Entries are being accepted Saturday, Sept. 30, from 10 a.m.-5 p.m. from both members and non-members. A reception for the juror is scheduled next Sunday, Oct. 1, and the show opens Thursday, Oct. 5, with a reception for artists and presentation of awards. The MAA show will be up through Friday, Nov. 3.

Juror for the 1989 show is Betsy Dillard Stroud, teaching fellow at the University of Virginia, art instructor at Francis Marion College in Florence, S.C., and a contributing writer to American Artist magazine.

Since the MAA show accepts ceramics, sculpture, glass, drawing, graphics, painting, fiber work, photography, and mixed media, the selected works normally include something for almost everyone.

First session of "College Classics" for the fall begins this week. Session I will have classes through Oct. 20, with another four-week session beginning Oct. 23.

There's good news and bad news about College Classics. The good news is that a single $25 fee will allow a person to take as many of the College Classics courses in both sessions as desired. The bad news is that if you haven't lived for 55 years, you can't enroll.

Each session will offer 25 classes, most of them meeting for one hour once a week for the four weeks. All the classes are taught by volunteers who are not receiving payment for their time and expertise...it's their contribution to the seniors of this community.

Classes beginning during Session I include: Art Appreciation, Basic Automotive Service, Bookkeeping I, Calligraphy, Changing Relationships, Comprehensive Financial Planning, Computerized Dietary Analysis, Computers, Financial Planning for Retirement, 55 Alive, Golf, Grief and Recovery, Help Parents Help Kids, History Folklore of Native Plants, How to Get Barely out of Town, How to Record Your Life Story, Midland Birds, Beginning Piano, Potpourri Workshop, Spanish, Tennis, Tole Painting, Walk For Fun, Word Processing, and World History Continues.

You can register in the Continuing Education Office, Administration Building. Registrations are being accepted for Session II as well as Session I right now. More information is available by calling 685-4518.

No, Midland doesn't have any mountains. Yes, Midland College is offering a class in Mountaineering! It's just one of the many varied subjects that are being offered for the community starting this week.

Mountaineering refers to climbing up and down mountains, but the basic techniques, terms, and training can best be taught on flat ground. So the class is taught occasionally in Midland, then the class usually makes an optional trip to the Davis Mountains to see if the lectures and demonstrations really work. If that doesn't appeal to you, there are a lot of other interesting classes starting this week.

You could enroll for Hunter Safety, Stained Glass I, Medicare Catastrophic Coverage, Real Estate Inspector: Heating & Cooling, Handgun Safety, or Child Care Provider Seminar.

There is another class that's free and is being offered both at night and in the afternoon. It's a Study Skills Clinic which can help students in public school or college. One session is being offered on Monday and Wednesday from 7-9 p.m. and the other session is Tuesday and Thursday from 2-4 p.m.

Enrollment for any of these classes is through the Continuing Education Office, Administration Building. Hours are 8 a.m.-8 p.m. Monday through Thursday and 8 a.m.-5 p.m. Friday.

Oh yes, the college offers Defensive Driving Classes virtually every week, quite a number of them on Saturdays. That allows the required eight hours to be taught on one day. For information about any of the Continuing Education courses, call 685-4518.

H.A. Tuck is public relations director at Midland College.

Most Christian churches remain divided along racial lines

By DAVID BRIGGS
Associated Press Writer

They worked together in the civil rights movement and share a faith that recognizes no racial boundaries, but Christ's flock in the United States remains largely divided into black and white sheep.

Gains in integration in business, government and education have not been matched in the church, which some observers say may be the nation's most segregated institution.

Why?

"Isn't it obvious? It's racism. That's what brought about the black church since its inception — slavery — and it hasn't changed," said the Rev. Amos Jones Jr., director of Christian education for the National Baptist Convention U.S.A. Inc.

More than seven in 10 black Americans say they are Methodists or Baptists, according to a 1988 Gallup Poll. Yet, in the nation's largest Protestant denomination, the 14.8 million-member Southern Baptist Convention, only an estimated 3 percent are black. In the 9 million-member United Methodist Church, an estimated 4 percent of members are black.

In the Roman Catholic Church, a black priest has started his own church in Washington, D.C., and the nation's black bishops have condemned racism within the U.S. church, although the 53 million-member body has more black members — an estimated 2 million — than any other predominantly white Christian group.

The segregation is even greater in the black churches.

"A fraction of a fraction of 1 percent" is the estimated number of whites in the National Baptist Convention U.S.A. Inc., according to Jones. Officials in the 3 million-member African Methodist Episcopal Church estimate one-tenth of 1 percent of its members are white.

"Sunday morning is the most segregated time in the country," said the Rev. Charles White, a white Presbyterian pastor who is co-chairman of the North American Interfaith Network.

White said there is a profound difference between the teachings of Christianity and the way it adapts to the society around it.

"Religion more often than not serves to bolster our own identities. If we are at heart racist, and I believe at heart both blacks and whites are racist, then we ought not to be surprised that religion bolsters that," he said.

The attempt by the Rev. George A. Stallings to form an unauthorized parish for black Catholics in Washington is full of historical precedent. Introduced to Christianity through slavery, black Americans have for centuries moved away from predominantly white churches into churches they had more control over and felt comfortable in.

Once criticized for serving as a barrier to blacks in their efforts to make gains in American society, the black church has enjoyed a resurgence since the late 1960s, when blacks and other ethnic groups began to question the value of assimilation and place greater reliance on institutions that preserved their heritage.

"In predominantly white groups, people of black heritage often feel like they're the invisible man. They're there, but not ever seen," said Bishop Cecil Bishop, president of the Board of Bishops of the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church.

Despite the solidarity many within predominantly white churches showed in the civil rights movement of a generation ago, the racism that caused the black church remains today, if in more subtle forms, according to black church leaders.

Jones said black churches address the needs of black Americans, while many predominantly white churches embrace the status quo.

For example, he said, "Southern Baptists are hard-pressed to say anything against apartheid, hunger in Mississippi, racism among elected officials."

Some officials in predominantly white churches contend black churches make exaggerated claims of racism because they are fearful of losing members to churches actively seeking to integrate their pews.

The Southern Baptist Convention is on record as condemning apartheid, hunger and racism, said the Rev. Sid Smith of that denomination's Black Church Development Board.

"I do not mean to imply we have arrived, for we have not," Smith said. "But we are not the old-school racist denomination of a generation ago."

The black church also is not without its own debates on prejudice. In the African Methodist Episcopal Church, for example, there is only one native bishop in the church's six episcopal districts in Africa. Last year, the church elected three bishops to serve West Africa, Central Africa and South Africa — all were from the United States.

Robert H. Reid, editor of the A.M.E. Christian Recorder, said church officials used to say African blacks were not qualified to be bishops. "That is no longer true, and that would have been no longer true for decades," he said.

Still, Jones said, unlike some white churches, the doors of the black church have always been open.

"We've never had a closed-door policy as white Southern Baptists, southern Methodists, Presbyterians have had. We've been the ones rejected and turned away," Jones said.

But officials at the nation's largest churches say there has been some movement toward integration.

In the Southern Baptist Convention, which split from northern Baptists in the 1840s because of its defense of slavery, six state conventions have elected black presidents, and among Protestant churches, "we put more money into the black community than any other denomination today, period," Smith said.

Barbara Ricks Thompson, the general secretary of the Commission on Religion and Race of the United Methodist Church, said her denomination is giving blacks greater leadership roles. For example, while approximately 4 percent of the church members are black, 10 of the church's 49 active bishops are black.

As the estimated number of black Catholics has more than doubled from 900,000 to 2 million in 20 years, the church has established a national Office for Black Catholics.

Deacon Ronald Walker, a black clergyman from Buffalo, N.Y., recalled his Baptist grandfather telling him, "Catholicism is the church that's going to take a mule to heaven."

But he stayed within the church, and eventually sought his vocation there.

"I was searching for something all my life. I love the church. The roots of the church go back to my grandmother and mother," Walker said.

When he was deciding whether to become a deacon, what impressed him was that "there was an openness, a reception, and my status as being black didn't matter."

Carmelite order expresses support for moving convent from Auschwitz

ROME (AP) — Leaders of the Roman Catholic Carmelite order said Saturday they support moving one of their convents from the former Auschwitz death camp in Poland as many Jewish groups have demanded.

The issue has strained relations between the Catholic Church and Jewish groups and opened a rift among some Catholic leaders. It also drew accusations of anti-Semitism against the leader of the Catholic Church in Poland.

The Rev. Anthony Morello, general counselor of the Carmeline order, said Saturday he gave his order's assurances it supported moving the convent away from the Nazi death camp during a meeting with Sir Sigmund Sternberg, head of the International Council of Christians and Jews.

In his statement, Morello said he affirmed that all along the position of the general of the order, the Rev. Philip Sainz de Baranda, "has been that agreements must be honored."

The statement did not say exactly when the meeting was held.

Sternberg helped moderate the Auschwitz dispute when he announced Friday that the Polish Catholic primate, Cardinal Jozef Glemp, had assured him in a letter that the convent must be moved away from the site of the death camp.

Catholic and Jewish leaders agreed in Geneva in 1987 to move the Carmelite convent. The nuns were to be transferred to a nearby prayer center last February, but it was not erected and the nuns remain at a building bside the Auschwitz camp.

Glemp and other Polish church leaders later opposed moving the nuns. In defending the current site, Glemp made statements that some Jewish groups viewed as anti-Semitic.

Many Polish Catholics have supported keeping the convent where it is. They argue that the nuns are not harming anyone and that many Polish Catholics were killed at Auschwitz.

Jewish groups complained that the convent and its religious symbols are offensive at a site where 2.5 million Jews were killed as part of Adolf Hitler's campaign to exterminate European Jews during World War II. A total of 4 million people were put to death at Auschwitz.

After a long silence on the issue, the Vatican said in a statement last week that it believed the nuns should be moved to an interfaith prayer center near Auschwitz as the Geneva agreement specified.

"NOTHING TASTES AS GOOD AS THIN FEELS"

For the last 8 years, the Metabolic Nutrition Pro-gram has helped over 10,000 patients in 16 centers to achieve their goal of weight loss. Thinness is more than just losing weight.
The MNP believes your long range goal must be weight maintanance. To accomplish this, we take food out of your life and then teach you how to put it back in. We provide indepthpsycho-logical counseling, hands on nutrition education, weekly physician and laboratory monitoring as you loose weight on a 605 calorie diet. Over 90% of our patients enroll in one year or more of maintenance after completing their weight loss.
Maintenance is weekly with medical, psycho-logical and dietary supervision.
If weight maintanance is your Number One priority and you are committed to making those changes necessary to become thin again, we can help you.

Bush urges Catholic group to stress community service

New York Times News Service

BOSTON — President Bush urged a group of Roman Catholic lawyers and judges Saturday to link hiring and promotions to community service and to step up their efforts against abortion.

"We challenge you to even greater efforts toward the protection of human life," Bush told several thousand guests attending a lunch at the annual meeting of the Catholic Lawyers' Guild of the Boston Archdiocese. "Use your talents, your energy and your professional resources to reaffirm the right to life as the most fundamental freedom."

As for community service, the president urged senior partners in law firms to consider it when hiring and promoting lawyers. He told the guests: "Somewhere, in your own community, there is a homeless family that needs food, clothing and shelter. And somewhere, in your own community, there is a scared little boy, tempted to buy crack or join a gang, who needs the love and guidance of a Big Brother."

Bush reiterated the altruistic "bottom line" that he hopes to make a cornerstone of his presidency: "From now on in America, any definition of a successful life must include service to others."

Exhorting the lawyers to "remember the unremembered" and "protect the unprotected," he added, "At the end of the day, let it be said about you that, more than your record in court or the hours you've billed, this was the way in which you touched the life of someone in need."

One of the Boston lawyers on the dais with Bush was his Democratic rival last year for the presidency, Gov. Michael S. Dukakis. The two shook men hands and exchanged a few words before the lunch began, and Dukakis also chatted with the president's wife, Barbara Bush.

Bush flew to Boston from his vacation home in Kennebunkport, Maine., where he is spending much of the weekend relaxing and preparing an address that he is to deliver at the United Nations on Monday.

He was invited to the luncheon by Cardinal Bernard Law, the Roman Catholic archbishop of Boston, with whom the president has developed a warm relationship in recent months.

RELIGION IN BRIEF

Condo-dweller can't hang 'bless this house'

HALLANDALE, Fla. (AP) — Frances Reiter can't figure out what's offensive about the heart-shaped "God bless this house" sign on the front door of her apartment, but her condominium board says it has to go.

Ms. Reiter, who has lived at the Fairways Riviera complex for 17 years, says she's been told to remove the sign by Monday.

"She is not supposed to put anything strange on her door," condo board member Theo Zeelander said Thursday.

Ms. Reiter can't see what's wrong with her sign because other residents decorate their doors with mezuzas — Biblical inscriptions in Hebrew meant to be hung on doorposts.

"Are we in America? I have every right to have that sign on my door," Ms. Reiter said. "I am a Christian. This is my religious symbol asking God to bless my home."

Condo President Sidney Jacobs wouldn't explain why the association found the sign offensive, but said it has to go.

"If the sign was somewhere else on another front door hidden from view, it wouldn't matter, but her door is very close to the condo's meeting room. A lot of people have to pass by her door, and it's offensive to everyone," he said.

Jacobs has sent a letter telling Ms. Reiter the condo association would remove the sign if she does not. He said she was in violation of a condo regulation that prohibits residents from decorating their front doors.

Ms. Reiter said she has called a lawyer and is ready to go to court.

"If they pull down that sign, there will be trouble," she said.

Papal talks possible

VATICAN CITY (AP) — The Vatican has confirmed that a Roman Catholic Church official met with the Soviet ambassador to Italy to discuss a possible meeting between Pope John Paul II and President Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

Such a meeting would be the first between the leader of the world's 850 million Roman Catholics and the head of the officially atheist Soviet Union.

Joaquin Navarro, the Vatican spokesman, Friday confirmed a newspaper report that Archbishop Angelo Sodano of the Vatican's Secretariat of State had gone to the Soviet Embassy in Rome about 10 days earlier to meet Ambassador Nikolai Lunkov.

The spokesman told reporters the meeting involved "preparation for a possible visit by President Gorbachev to the Vatican."

Navarro gave no dates for such a meeting. Gorbachev is expected to visit Italy sometime in November, however.

The spokesman did not comment on another part of the report in the Rome daily La Repubblica that said Sodano told Lunkov the Vatican was ready to consider establishing diplomatic relations with the Soviet Union.

Group 'walks' across sea

JERUSALEM (AP) — An annual swim across the biblical Sea of Galilee turned into a hike on Saturday after a drop in water level forced bathers to walk the final 400 yards.

About 6,000 youths began the traditional 4-mile swim from the sea's southern shore. They swam most of the way, but ended up trudging the last leg across the dried mud bottom, Israel radio said.

Last winter's low rainfall has caused the sea to drop nearly 3 feet below normal.

The swim took place 11 miles south of the site where many Christians believe Jesus walked on the sea.

Clinic ordered closed

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Gov. Bob Martinez is seeking emergency rules to protect women at private abortion clinics in Florida after ordering a Miami clinic closed because of reports of botched abortions.

"This is a pure pro-health issue," Martinez said at a Friday news conference. "This is for the health of individuals irregardless of philosophy on the substance of the abortion issue."

Martinez told Health and Rehabilitative Services Secretary Greg Coler to "take all steps necessary to remove the license of this clinic."

The action comes after reports of improper abortions by unlicensed physicians resulting in ruptured uteri and hysterectomies at the Dadeland Medical Center, now doing business as the Women's Service Center.

"There is no legal reason, no health reason, for this order," responded Susan Hoffman, director of the center. "We've done nothing against the law. We've helped thousands of women. I see this as totally ludicrous."

Peter Dunbar, the governor's general counsel, said any emergency regulations drawn up by HRS for abortion clinics would be in effect for 90 days. After that, the new rules would be subject to public hearings and HRS board approval to become permanent.

By that time, the Legislature will have decided whether to go along with Martinez's proposals to further restrict access to abortions. The session is scheduled for Oct. 10-13.

Martinez has denied he was trying to bypass the Legislature by using the Miami situation to enact emergency regulations.

Yet in his letter to Coler, the governor said conditions at the Miami clinic "are precisely why I have called for increased regulation of abortion clinics to protect the health of women."

Berlin's death called 'end of era'

By PAUL GEITNER

NEW YORK (AP) — Irving Berlin's death at age 101 marked the end of an era in American music, but his legacy lives on in his music, friends and admirers said Saturday.

"Just knowing he was there" was an inspiration, said John Wallowitch, a composer and cabaret performer who had organized Christmas Eve serenades outside Berlin's Manhattan town house for more than 20 years.

Upon hearing of Berlin's death, Wallowitch said, he and three friends went to the reclusive songwriter's home.

"We just stood there and cried a lot and sang, 'I'll be loving you, always,'" he said. He said he planned to organize a larger, candlelight vigil for Sunday night.

Berlin, who wrote "Always," "God Bless America," "White Christmas," and more than 1,000 other songs in his long career, died in his sleep at his home about 5:30 p.m. Friday.

A spokesman said the funeral would be private, but plans for a memorial service would be announced.

Broadway theaters planned to dim their lights Saturday night in honor of the man who wrote the scores for 19 shows, including "Annie Get Your Gun" and "Call Me Madam."

The American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, of which Berlin was a charter member, planned to take out a full-page testimonial in Monday's New York Times, said former president Stanley Adams. ASCAP, which organized an all-star Carnegie Hall salute to Berlin for his 100th birthday last year, also planned a memorial.

Irving Berlin is joined at the piano by actresses, from left, Ginger Rodgers, Rosalind Russell, Dina Shore and Yvette Mimieux when he received the Screen Producers Guild Milestone Award in 1963. He died Friday in New York at age 101.

"I think he's the greatest songwriter the world has ever had," Adams said.

Composer-conductor Morton Gould, the president of ASCAP, said Berlin's music has become "part of our language, part of our heartbeat, part of our soul."

Former President Reagan, who as an actor was featured along with Berlin's songs in the flag-waving 1943 movie musical "This is the Army," said in a statement: "Nancy and I are deeply saddened by the death of a wonderfully talented man whose musical genius delighted and stirred millions, and will live on forever."

Actress-dancer Ginger Rogers said working with Berlin and her longtime partner Fred Astaire in "Top Hat," was "like heaven," referring to the lyrics of Berlin's Oscar-nominated "Cheek to Cheek," which was featured in the classic 1935 film.

Jack Horvath, a salesman at Carl Fischer Music in Manhattan, said Berlin sheet music is still in demand. The nearly 50-year-old "White Christmas" is the store's No. 1 seller during the holidays, he said.

"I personally went up to his office last Christmas and picked up 500 copies because it had gone so fast," Horvath said.

"He wrote songs for the people," said opera singer Robert Merrill. "Irving Berlin was the greatest Tin Pan Alley songwriter. He was not a great musician but he had a great ear and he had a feeling for melody and words that was precious."

Berlin 'created' popular song

By MICHAEL KUCHWARA
AP Drama Writer

NEW YORK — Irving Berlin created the American popular song.

Until Berlin began writing after the turn of the century, American music was dominated by Europe — English music hall, Gilbert and Sullivan, Viennese operetta and Italian opera. Berlin took native American sounds, such as ragtime, and turned them into huge popular hits like "Alexander's Ragtime Band" and "Everybody's Doin' It Now." When Irving Berlin wrote, America listened — for more than 50 years.

"He caught the voices of the people early in this century and held them for longer than anyone else," Robert Kimball, musical theater historian, said Friday.

From his first song, "Marie of Sunny Italy," in 1907 to his last Broadway show, "Mr. President," in 1962, Berlin's presence was felt on the music scene in this country. No one today can look to such a long period of domination.

And Berlin was a winner in every medium he tried. He found success not only in Tin Pan Alley but on Broadway with musicals like "Annie Get Your Gun," "Call Me Madam" and his Music Box revues, and in Hollywood where he wrote the scores for Fred Astaire-Ginger Rogers movies like "Top Hat" and "Follow the Fleet" and other films like "Holiday Inn" and "Easter Parade."

His colleagues thought he was the best, particularly contemporaries like Jerome Kern. He had an enormous influence on the Broadway composers who followed him, especially George Gershwin and Harold Arlen who relished his inventive way with rhythm.

Berlin also had an incredible versatility, a great intelligence and perspective about the world.

Guitarist Summers touring alone

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. (AP) — Former Police guitarist Andy Summers considers the band's tunes "banal" and "boring" and said he is no longer interested in rock 'n' roll.

"I don't follow it. Most of it is terrible," he said.

Summers begins a seven-city tour Sunday in Scottsdale to promote his new instrumental album, "The Golden Wire." The album combines jazz, blues, rock, classical, Indian and New Age music, Summers said Thursday.

"I would call it new fusion," he said. "It's closer to jazz, but more exotic with modern production sound."

Summers said the album's lack of lyrics reflects his new taste in music.

"Most lyrics are not interesting to listen to. They say things you've heard a million times before," he said. "Instrumental music leaves you free to imagine your own scene. It's purer."

The Police, including singer-bassist Sting, sold more than 40 million albums before members of the trio went their separate ways several years ago.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Ronald and Nancy Reagan are inviting spouses and dependents of U.S. military personnel stationed in Japan to fly with them to Tokyo in October, the United Service Organization announced.

The former president and first lady have chartered a TWA Boeing 747 jetliner for the Oct. 19 flight from Los Angeles, returning Oct. 28, USO spokesman Kevin McCarthy said Friday.

The Reagans will be in Japan at the invitation of the Japanese government and the Fujisankei Communications Group to attend several charitable events and meet with the prime minister, emperor and other government figures.

At the Reagans' suggestion, Fujisankei will provide the jumbo jetliner to ferry military families to Japan free of charge, said Reagan spokesman Mark Weinberg.

"Nancy and I promised ourselves that if we ever had a chance to bring families together, we would," Reagan said in a statement.

"When we learned we would have so many extra seats on the airplane being provided to us, we knew immediately what to do," he said.

Seats on the plane have been allocated to individual services based on each branch's percentage of military population in Japan and Okinawa, the USO said.

Unit commanders in Japan were to explain to military personnel how to apply for the trip, McCarthy said.

"It's a free round-trip to Tokyo with the (former) president if you can get yourself to Los Angeles," he said, adding the USO was exploring ways to subsidize family members' travel to Los Angeles.

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP) — J. William Fulbright, former senator and university president, said warfare is a "disastrous, utterly irrational activity."

The 84-year-old Fulbright spoke to about 50 students at the University of Arkansas, which he headed between 1939 and 1941.

"It is absurd for us to contemplate a war," he said Friday. "I suppose you could call me in a sense a pacifist, but I don't think a foolish pacifist. I don't think warfare is a very productive activity."

Fulbright, who served in the Senate from 1944 to 1974, proposed legislation that created the Fulbright Scholarships. The awards allow U.S. scholars to study abroad and foreign scholars to come to the United States.

PHOENIX (AP) — Hungry? Just call the governor's office.

Gov. Rose Mofford hand-carried a pizza Friday to members of the Arizona Senate as legislators struggled to complete a three-day special session.

"She didn't make it within 30 minutes," joked Sen. Leo Corbet, chairman of the Judiciary Committee and one of Mrs. Mofford's chief opponents on a prison bill that had just passed when the governor showed up.

"I have a new job," Mrs. Mofford said as she entered the chamber with the large pizza. "I heard everybody in the Senate was starving."

NEW YORK (AP) — Just how Pablo Picasso and his lesser-known friend Georges Braque invented cubism eight decades ago is the topic of a major exhibit opening Sunday at the Museum of Modern Art.

The show, described by the museum as the first attempt to examine cubism "through an in-depth concentration on its core," deals with the artists' work between 1907 and 1914.

"During the cubist years both artists were at their best when they were closest to one another," exhibition organizer William Rubin writes in the catalog. "Cubism as we know it was a vision that neither artist could have realized alone."

A New York Times critic described the exhibit as "the show of the decade."

The exhibition consists of 390 works, including paintings, drawings, prints, sculptures and collages. They were borrowed from museums and collections all over the United States and Europe, and from the Soviet Union.

The French-born Braque lived from 1882 to 1963. Picasso, a native of Spain who spent most of his life in France, lived from 1881 to 1973. They were colleagues in Paris.

EPA pushes alternative farming techniques

By ROB REHG
Hearst News Service

AGRICULTURE

"Farmworkers are finding that not only are alternative practices environmentally sound, but they are less costly."

— Jim Hightower,
Texas Agriculture Commissioner

WASHINGTON — The Environmental Protection Agency is taking a leading role in encouraging the nation's farmers to rely more on organic farming methods and less on synthetic chemicals, a senior EPA official told a Senate subcommittee on Friday.

As part of its strategy, the EPA is seeking to persuade Congress to change federal agricultural policies to reduce pesticide use, said Linda J. Fisher, director of EPA's office of pesticides and toxic chemicals.

The EPA's decision follows the recent release of a National Academy of Sciences' study that found farmers who apply little or no pesticides can be as productive as those who do.

Fisher told the senate subcommittee on environmental oversight that the agency will become "an aggressive advocate" of alternative farming practices.

"(EPA director William) Reilly is committed to pollution prevention," Fisher said. "In the area of pesticide use, that translates into reducing the amounts of pesticides released into the environment."

As Congress this fall begins considering a new comprehensive farm bill, Fisher said the agency will be pushing for "adjusting the incentives that encourage unnecessary use of pesticides" and overhauling the government's agricultural subsidy programs.

The Academy and other critics of federal farm policy have argued that the subsidies — with their payment formulas based on a high yield of a crop per acre — encourage farmers who are skeptical about alternative techniques to use heavy doses of pesticides.

By offering subsidies for select crops, the nation's farm policy also discourages farmers from rotating their fields to grow crops that are not eligible for subsidies, the critics contend.

Crop rotation is one natural farming method used to provide nutrients and control weed growth. Other alternative farming practices can involve the use of mechanical cultivators to control weeds, wasps and other insects to kill destructive bugs and vacuum equipment to remove insects from plants.

Texas Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower, a leading proponent of alternative farming, told the panel that one of the biggest obstacles to reducing pesticide use is "an attitude in Congress that these techniques can't work."

Hightower noted that critics of natural farming often argue that crops not treated with pesticides "will be too ugly" for consumers to buy. He then gave the committee several organically grown tomatoes to show they can be "as handsome any tomatoes."

"And you'll find something about those tomatoes that are unique," Hightower said. "It's called flavor."

Red Raiders still perfect

Tech moves to 3-0 after 31-15 win in Stillwater

STILLWATER, Okla. (AP) — Quarterback Jamie Gill came off the bench to direct three second-half scoring drives, and backup tailback Anthony Lynn rushed for 100 yards and two touchdowns Saturday night in Texas Tech's 31-15 victory over winless Oklahoma State.

Second-string quarterback Jason Rattan started in place of Gill and led the Red Raiders to a 10-9 halftime lead. But Gill, who had injured his hip last week, came on and led three crisp drives that buried the Cowboys. Gill wound up completing 6 of 7 passes for 110 yards.

Oklahoma State forced four Red Raider turnovers but couldn't take advantage, settling for two of Cary Blanchard's three field goals. Quarterback Mike Gundy also scored on a 1-yard run when the game was out of reach.

Texas Tech is 3-0, while Oklahoma State dropped to 0-3 for the first time since 1980.

Gill gave the Red Raiders command of the game with a 1-yard sneak that made the score 17-9 late in the third quarter. It capped a 76-yard, 12-play drive that started after Blanchard missed a 31-yard field goal that would have given the Cowboys the lead.

The Red Raiders began their next drive on the Cowboy 45 after safety Doug Bonds intercepted a tipped Gundy pass. Four plays later, Lynn scored on a 2-yard dive to make it 24-9. Tech's final score came on a 1-yard dive by Lynn one play after Gill had hit split end Travis Price on a 43-yard completion.

Rattan, a sophomore who previously had taken one snap in his career, started and led the Red Raiders 59 yards on their first possession, capping it with a 35-yard scoring pass to split end Anthony Manyweather.

Oklahoma State moved inside Tech's 25-yard line six times and came away with only one touchdown, Gundy's 1-yard sneak with 2:27 remaining. Blanchard was good on field goals of 19, 20 and 40 yards, but also missed from 39 and 31.

Gundy completed 15 of 30 passes for 211 yards. Tailback Gerald Hudson had 157 yards on 29 carries, his third consecutive 100-yard game.

SWC

Texas 45, Southern Meth. 13

Mark Murdock's three touchdown passes helped Texas overcome early resistance from Southern Methodist's fiesty freshmen.

Texas evened its record at 1-1 and is 1-0 in SWC play. SMU is 1-2 and 0-2.

The Mustangs, who start 18 freshmen, stunned 40-point favorite Texas by grabbing a 7-0 lead after a scoreless first period in which the Longhorns' Wayne Clements missed field goal tries of 47 and 35 yards.

Quarterback Mike Romo, the hero of last week's 31-30 upset of Connecticut, hit passes of 16 and 12 yards to Mike Bowen to set up an 18-yard scoring pass to Jason Wolf for a 7-0 Mustang lead.

However, Wolf fumbled to linebacker Brian Jones at the SMU 28 on the Mustangs' next possession. Five plays later Murdock threw a 13-yard scoring pass to Johnny Walker to tie the game.

A 33-yard punt return by Chris Samuels positioned Texas for the go-ahead touchdown, a 13-yard Murdock pass to Kerry Cash.

Texas put the game away in the third period with 17 points against the tiring Mustangs, who were playing their third game since a two-year absence because of the NCAA "death penalty" for recruiting violations.

Keith Cash caught a 27-yard scoring pass from Murdock in the third period and snared a 16-yarder from Donovan Forbes in the fourth.

Tony Jones scored on a 45-yard run, Samuels scored from two yards away, and Clements kicked a 50-yard field goal for the Longhorns.

Wolf scored again for SMU on a one-yard plunge in the fourth period.

Texas had a school record 20 penalties for 136 yards.

A sellout crowd of 23,733 watched the first game between SMU and Texas in Ownby Stadium since 1945. The Mustangs moved all their home games to the campus stadium from suburban Texas Stadium.

SW Louisiana 18, Rice 3

Brian Mitchell rushed and passed over 100 yards for the sixth time in his career and scored twice, leading Southwestern Louisiana over Rice.

Mitchell gained 114 yards rushing on 22 carries and completed 12 of 25 passes for 143 yards. He threw two interceptions.

Mitchell gave the Ragin' Cajuns the go-ahead points with 8:12 left in the second quarter on a 4-yard touchdown run. Mitchell ran 11-yards for another touchdown with eight seconds left in the third quarter, extending USL's lead to 18-3.

Southwestern Louisiana improved to 2-1. The Owls fell to 1-2 and lost starting quarterback Donald Hollas, ranked eighth nationally in total offense, in the first quarter with a neck injury.

Mitchell plowed into two Rice defensive players at the goalline and left defensive end Tim Fitzpatrick temporarily stunned on his second quarter touchdown.

For a moment, SMU threw Texas for a scare, particularly after the Mustangs took a 7-0 second quarter lead at Ownby Stadium. Jason Wolf (33) celebrates with a teammate after hauling in the TD pass.

Rebels fail to advance

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

It was one step forward, two steps back for the Midland Lee volleyball team in a 15-11, 15-6 loss to Abilene High Saturday at the LHS gym.

The Rebels sank further into last place in District 4-5A with Saturday's loss, while Abilene High kept pace with district front-runner Midland High. The Eagles and Odessa Permian are tied for second at 2-1, one game behind 3-0 Midland High — a 15-5, 15-9 winner over Abilene Cooper Saturday.

The Odessa High-San Angelo result was unavailable at press time.

There were some bright spots for Midland Lee, 0-3 in district play and 4-11 overall, Coach Elise Wheat said.

"Our serving has been consistently good," she said. But the Rebels aresaddled with problems far beyond what even outstanding serving can combat.

"We just don't scare anybody on offense," Wheat said. "That means the other team can be a lot looser defensively."

The Rebels seem to lack a big hitter. In fact, senior Marcia del Llano has been one of the team's most consistent hitters and she would be most ideally used as a setter because of her relatively small stature.

Saturday, Abilene High's aggressive offense threw Lee off balance.

"They hit everything and it threw my girls for a loop," Wheat said.

After taking the first set in relatively easy fashion, Abilene High grabbed a 7-3 lead in the second set and never looked back. Thelma McDow particularly played insired volleyball in the second set, contributing three kills and a block in the Eagles' final rally.

Midland Lee hosts Seminole in non-district action Tuesday, while Midland High hosts San Angelo. Lee returns to district action Saturday against Odessa Permian, while MHS travels to Odessa High.

The Midland High junior varsity defeated Cooper JV, 15-1, 17-15.

Yet another tough task for Cowboys

By DENNE H. FREEMAN

IRVING, Texas (AP) — NFL education of Jimmy Johnson, Chapter Three: The Washington Redskins' rivalry.

The Dallas Cowboys rookie head coach is still looking for his first regular season victory. He couldn't have a more difficult foe on Sunday to earn it.

Not only do the 'Skins hate their division rivals, but they arrive in Texas Stadium for the noon clash without a victory.

Their 0-2 record ties the NFC Eastern division contenders with the cellar-dwelling Cowboys, who had the worst record in the NFL at 3-13 in coach Tom Landry's final campaign.

"We're very disappointed," said Washington coach Joe Gibbs. "We're down a little. We played hard in two games at home and still lost. We're in the same boat with Dallas. Both of us need a morale booster."

Gibbs said the Washington-Dallas rivalry isn't dead because Landry and former Cowboys club president

Tex Schramm are gone.

"It's still a very important rivalry," Gibbs said. "The Cowboys' new organization has a lot of excitement going. It's really a tough situation for us to try to rebound in."

Johnson said he kept up with the rivalry while he was a coach at Oklahoma State and the University of Miami.

Softer Oilers to meet an angry Buffalo herd

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston plays Buffalo in the Astrodome Sunday. It's still called the "House of Pain," but what's happening to the Oilers' roguish, tough-guy image?

The Oilers were called thugs and late-hit artists en route to two straight playoff appearances but now they are undergoing an image crisis.

After two years of success, are the Oilers considering turning in their blue collars for a more aesthetic approach to Sunday's NFL mayhem?

Coach Jerry Glanville still wears black and the Oilers are still receiving personal fouls at a rate that increases drastically when cornerback Cris Dishman is on the field.

But the total "kick 'em in the teeth while they're down" image may be giving way to "knock 'em into next Monday and walk away smugly."

"That's something we'll have to discuss among ourselves as a team to see where we want to go with this thing," quarterback Warren Moon said. "I've heard the players talking about it among themselves but I don't know if there's that big a split."

Dishman is a talented and talkative second-year cornerback from Purdue, whose aggression would have been totally appreciated the past two years.

JIMMY PATTERSON

The official, unofficial Cowboy program

It's just about to the point where you darn near need a program to keep up with those guys running around, masquerading as Dallas Cowboys.

Patterson

And with today's Texas Stadium opener against the Washington Redskins, maybe it's time you were properly introduced to the team. Just keep this piece by your chair, either for handy reference or as a coaster for your cold one.

■ The guy with the hair a Hurricane couldn't bother is the one who calls himself the coach — Jimmy Johnson. Johnson has the Cowboys off to a distinguished, memorable, 0-2 start, something that hasn't been done to the team since 1963, back when Lee Roy Jordan was a rookie and Troy Aikman's mama and daddy were mere high school sweethearts.

(Hysterical footnote: The '63 Cowboys lost their first four games that year and proceeded to finish the year at 4-10. Even that team scored 31 points in its first two losses, 10 more than the '89 Cowboys have scored through their first two.)

■ The guy with the rather large eyes and a smile that'll melt your heart is majority owner-president-general manager-general man about town-Boss Hog Jerry Jones. If Jer's smile looks a little on the forced side, well maybe it's because it's sorta always been that way, but at least with good reason these days. Ol' Jer has become a fixture on the sidelines lately, pretty much like Jim Bakker is an expected site on the evening news. And they sorta smile the same way, too, don't they?

■ The guy asleep on the sidelines is Vern Pittman, the man in charge of keeping all of the Cowboys' offensive statistics.

■ And that's Troy Aikman wearing No. 8. You can pretty well pick him out without a number, though. He's the guy who — thanks to his receivers — throws all the incomplete passes.

■ The guy on the sidelines with the big smirk on his face is Steve Walsh, the Cowboys' other million-dollar quarterback who has completed almost as many as Troy so far.

■ And the other millionaire on the team is Herschel Walker. You can recognize him by his number, 34, which coincidentally is the number of times Jimmy Johnson said he will let Herschel run with the ball this year.

■ The 5,000 people who happen to be awake in the stands are those who, I believe, make up just about the entire population of the state of Arkansas. Each week this season, the Razorbackers will hop aboard 50 chartered buses to come see their new adopted team play. Just hope they all remember to take I-30 east out of Dallas after each home game, else they'll all invade West Texas by mistake.

■ The guy running around on the sideline flailing his arms about wildly and screaming "Sooo-eee" is the Cowboys' new mascot, Earnest T. Bass.

MC falls in home opener

From Staff Reports

Harper scored 40 second half points to break open a close game with Midland Christian Saturday afternoon to take a 60-30 win over the Mustangs.

Harper, 2-1 on the season, got 392 yards rushing in the game and five touchdowns from Kelly Gabriel.

The Mustangs, off to an 0-3 start, was trailing only 20-14 at the half as both teams scored 14 second half points.

Alan Weaver caught two TD passes from Andy Bayley to highlight the Mustang attack.

Both MC and Harper had previously lost to Christoval, the No. 2 ranked team in the state.

MC travels to Balmorhea to play Agape Christian at 7:30 p.m. Friday.

Air Force sacks UTEP

By JOHN MOSSMAN

AIR FORCE ACADEMY, Colo. (AP) — Air Force raised its record to 4-0, generated 466 total yards and sacked Texas-El Paso quarterback Howard Gasser nine times.

The Falcons raced to a 25-0 lead and held a 33-7 advantage at the half. Then, committing two costly roughing-the-kicker penalties, getting fooled on a fake punt and giving up huge chunks of yardage through the air, they had to hold on for a 43-26 Western Athletic Conference victory Saturday over Texas-El Paso.

Dowis, who came into the game as the nation's second-leading rusher, ran for 92 yards on 13 carries and scored twice, establishing a school record for career touchdowns with 34. Ernie Jennings (1968-70) held the old mark of 33.

Fullback Rodney Lewis led all rushers with 141 yards on 19 carries as the fullback position produced 192 yards. Halfback Greg Johnson added 47 yards and two TDs.

The Falcon wishbone accounted for 425 yards on the ground as AFA raised its conference record to 3-0.

Alcorn St. 31, Abilene Christian 21

Alcorn State scored in the first quarter as Jarvis Jenkins completed a 79-yard drive by taking it in from the four and the Braves went on to chalk up a 31-21 win over visiting Abilene Christian in a non-conference football game Saturday.

Jenkins added another touchdown for Alcorn State later in the game, and Jerome Cleveland rushed for 58 yards and two touchdowns. Alcorn State quarterback Fred McNair passed for 201 yards, with Cedric Tillman catching five for 57 yards.

The win boosted the Braves to 2-1 overall. They are 1-1 in the Southwestern Athletic Conference. Abilene Christian's record fell to 0-3.

Shootin' Stars begin workouts

From Staff Reports

The Permian Basin Shootin' Stars will move indoors for the first time today with 30 candidates from the 75 hopefuls that have tried out for the team.

The Stars will practice at It's A Kick, located between Midland and Odessa. Stars' coach Doug Mello made the decision to move indoors to prepare for the upcoming preseason tournament.

The Ector County Coliseum has been selected as the site of the Western Conference Preseason Tournament on Nov. 11-12.

Regular season Western Conference play begins Nov. 18 and the Stars will have to cut down from the present 30 to 25 by the tournament.

The Stars open regular season play in Lubbock against the Lazers on Nov. 18 and will play the Waco Kickers for their first home game on Nov. 19.

Iraan Braves fall to Ozona, 28-14

From Staff Reports

OZONA — The Iraan Braves got on the scoreboard first, but the Ozona Lions erupted for 21 second-quarter points to forge a 28-14 come-from-behind victory in this non-conference football game here Friday night.

Iraan's Jay Kent scored in the first quarter on a two-yard run, but Ozona went on to get 102 yards rushing from George Ybarra and 97 from Lalo Rodriquez in a big one-two offensive punch.

Iraan will try to rebound at home against Wink this week.

Midland JH teams 1-1-1 on Saturday

From Staff Reports

Midland teams finished 1-1-1 in games reported from the eighth grade Midland-Odessa football conference Saturday.

Alamo got the victory with a 20-0 win over Odessa Ector while Goddard fell to Odessa Hood 28-22. San Jacinto tied Odessa Crockett 0-0 in a supreme defensive battle that neither team could win.

In the seventh grade American division, Goddard Red won 34-2 over Alamo Scarlet while Goddard White was a narrow 6-0 winner over San Jacinto White. San Jacinto Green took a 22-0 win over Alamo Gray.

In the National divison, Goddard again pulled a sweep with the Red getting past Alamo Scarlet 14-6 and the White gaining a 14-8 win over San Jacinto White. San Jacinto Green took a 22-6 victory over Alamo Gray.

Each week's games at the freshman and junior high level may be reported to the Reporter-Telegram between 4 and 6 p.m. on Saturdays.

Notre Dame's Ricky Watters flies into the end zone after a first quarter touchdown in South Bend.

Last-second FG leads Michigan by UCLA

Associated Press

J.D. Carlson's fourth field goal of the game, a 24-yarder with one second left, gave fifth-ranked Michigan a 24-23 victory over 24th-ranked UCLA.

Trailing 23-21 after missing a two-point conversion attempt with 1:35 remaining, the Wolverines got the ball when Vada Murray recovered an onside kick at the UCLA 46-yard line.

Quarterback Elvis Grbac completed a 9-yard pass to Chris Calloway and passes of 11 and 17 yards to Tony Boles, to put the Wolverines at the UCLA 8. Three plays later, Carlson kicked the game-winner.

The Wolverines appeared dead before J.J. Grant recovered a fumble by UCLA's Shawn Wills at the Bruins' 43-yard line with 3:41 remaining and the Bruins leading 23-15.

The Wolverines scored on a 3-yard pass from Grbac to Derrick Walker, but appeared dead again when UCLA's Brian Kelly deflected Grbac's two-point conversion pass attempt.

The Bruins, 1-2, had taken a 23-15 lead on Bret Johnson's 2-yard touchdown pass to Corwin Anthony with 5:42 to play. But Murray blocked Alfredo Velasco's conversion attempt to leave the Wolverines eight points behind.

The Bruins, who were 6-point underdogs, had gone ahead 17-15 on Velasco's 45-yard field goal with four seconds left in the third quarter.

UCLA had taken a 14-3 lead on a 1-yard touchdown run by Kevin Williams and a 6-yard scoring pass from Johnson to Scott Miller sandwiched around a 46-yard field goal by Carlson before the Wolverines rallied to go ahead.

No. 1 Notre Dame 21
Michigan St. 13

Michigan State coach George Perles called it a "game of mistakes." The team with the most mistakes wins.

Michigan State scored on three of Notre Dame's four turnovers, but the Irish (3-0) pulled out a 21-13 victory anyway, extending the nation's longest winning streak to 15 games.

"They made the mistakes, but they still won the game," said Perles, whose team is 1-1.

The defending national champions hadn't been so plagued by turnovers since their 1988 Cotton Bowl loss to Texas A&M.

"It just wasn't a very pretty thing, particularly the four turnovers," Notre Dame coach Lou Holtz said.

In fact, Notre Dame hadn't put the game away until, leading 14-13, the Irish got a touchdown run of 1 yard by Anthony Johnson at 8:16 of the fourth quarter.

"We felt that coming into the second half, we had them intimidated," Spartan linebacker Percy Snow said. "They just got a few big plays."

Irish defensive tackle Chris Zorich said Snow got it right. "The second half, I was getting kind of nervous," Zorich said. "Our offense kept giving up the ball, and I was standing on the sidelines praying."

Johnson said the Irish "played well enough to win, but we don't want to need a drive at the end of the game to win."

Notre Dame took a 14-0 lead on Ricky Watters' first-half rushing touchdowns of 2 and 53 yards. Michigan State then held the Irish scoreless for 33 minutes.

No. 2 Miami 38, Missouri 7

Craig Erickson threw for 357 yards, and Maurice Crum returned one of Miami's six interceptions 30 yards for a touchdown, sparking the second-ranked Hurricanes to a romp over Missouri.

After a slow start, Erickson hit 23 of 41 passes. He also scored on a 6-yard run and threw a 30-yard touchdown pass in the fourth period to tight end Rob Chudzinski. He was intercepted once.

So far this year the Hurricanes (3-0) have outscored Wisconsin, California and Missouri 120-13.

Missouri (1-2) became the first team to score a touchdown against them this season when Linzy Collins took advantage of an apparent defensive breakdown and hauled in a 67-yard scoring pass from Kent Kiefer for a short-lived 7-7 tie in the first quarter. It was the longest pass play surrendered by Miami since November 1984.

No. 7 Clemson 31, Maryland 7

Wesley McFadden scored on runs of 6 snd 12 yards, and Mitch Belton keyed a 21-point second quarter with a blocked punt as No. 7 Clemson ripped Maryland.

The game was the ACC opener for the Tigers (4-0) while Maryland dropped to 0-2 in the conference and is 1-3 overall.

The Tigers, who trailed for the first time this season at 7-3 late in the first quarter, scored touchdowns on drives of 50, 7 and 69 yards in the second quarter.

Clemson took a 10-7 lead when McFadden scored on a 6-yard trap play, capping a nine-play march that began at the 50 and was highlighted by the running of Terry Allen, who gained 34 yards.

No. 9 W. Virginia 30, Louisville 21

West Virginia trailed until Eugene Napoleon's two touchdowns in the final three minutes enabled the ninth-ranked Mountaineers to escape with a victory before a record Louisville crowd.

Napoleon's 1-yard TD run over left tackle gave West Virginia (4-0) a 22-21 lead with 2:54 remaining, and his 46-yard scoring run up the middle at the 1:26 mark put the game out of reach.

Louisville (2-1) had taken a 21-10 lead early in the third quarter on Browning Nagle's 16-yard touchdown pass to Anthony Cummings.

But West Virginia got field goals of 49 and 25 yards from junior Brad Carroll, the former a career-long effort, to pull within 21-16 10 seconds into the fourth quarter.

No. 13 Pittsburgh 30
No. 10 Syracuse 23

Derrick Lewis ran for three touchdowns and Alex Van Pelt completed 13 straight passes and threw for 306 yards and one touchdown as 13th-ranked Pittsburgh beat No. 10 Syracuse.

Lewis scored on runs of 2, 4 and 4 yards and Van Pelt completed 25 of 32 passes as the Panthers snapped a five-game losing streak against the Orangemen. Van Pelt, a redshirt freshman, entered the game as the country's sixth leading passer.

Pittsburgh improved to 3-0 for the first time since 1982, while Syracuse fell to 2-1. It was only the third loss in 27 games for Syracuse, which has the second best record in the country during that span.

No. 3 Nebraska 48, Minnesota 0

Ken Clark ran 18 times for 100 yards and two touchdowns as No. 3 Nebraska avoided a slow start for the first time this season and continued its 27-year domination of the Minnesota Gophers.

Clark has rushed for 398 yards in three games and now has 2,239 career yards, moving him from 11th to seventh on the Nebraska list. No. 6 is Jeff Kinney with 2,244.

Darrell Thompson, Minnesota's all-time leading rusher with 3,530 yards, was held to just 45 yards on 17 carries.

Although Minnesota (1-1) leads the series 29-19-2, the Cornhuskers (3-0) have won the last 13 contests dating back to 1960, including an 84-13 victory in 1983 in their only other visit to the Metrodome. In their last nine meetings, the Cornhuskers have outscored Minnesota 433-88.

Trojans demolish Buckeyes, 42-3

Associated Press

Redshirt freshman Todd Marinovich threw for four touchdowns, including a Southern Cal record 87-yard pass play, as the 12th-ranked Trojans whipped No. 25 Ohio State.

Marinovich, making his third collegiate start, completed 14 of 22 for 246 yards as the Trojans ran their record to 2-1 and evened the Buckeyes' mark at 1-1.

The young quarterback put the Trojans in command with two scoring passes in a 50-second span of the second quarter.

His first touchdown pass of the day, sailing 50 yards in the air, was caught by John Jackson behind the Ohio State coverage just beyond midfield.

Jackson sprinted untouched into the end zone, completing the 87-yard touchdown pass play that was the longest completion, by 7 yards, in Trojan history.

That staked Southern Cal to a 14-3 lead 6:39 into the second period, and the Trojans then took advantage of a Buckeye mistake for another quick touchdown.

On the next Ohio State possession, quarterback Greg Frey and flanker Bobby Olive bobbled a handoff, and Tim Ryan recovered for the Trojans at the Buckeyes 11. On the next play, Marinovich threw to Scott Galbraith for a touchdown to make it 21-3.

The other scoring throws by Marinovich were a 19-yarder and a 17-yarder, both to Gary Wellman in the third quarter, as Southern Cal pulled ahead 35-3.

Marinovich, who set a national high school career passing record of 9,194 yards at Capistrano Valley High in Mission Viejo, Calif., got the Trojan starting job when junior Pat O'Hara went down with a knee injury just before the start of the season.

His four touchdown passes against the Buckeyes, who were unable to pressure the quarterback and also had breakdowns in their pass coverage, came after his backup, Shane Foley, provided the Trojans their first touchdown.

Marinovich, a left-hander, left the game briefly when he suffered a mild sprain of his left wrist, and Foley came on and passed 3 yards to Galbraith to give Southern Cal a 7-3 lead 3:40 into the second quarter.

No. 15 Alabama 15, Kentucky 3

Philip Doyle kicked three field goals, and Martin Houston scored from the 1 as No. 15 Alabama continued its mastery over Kentucky in the Southeastern Conference opener for both teams.

Alabama (2-0) now holds a 30-1-1 series lead over the Wildcats (2-1), with Kentucky's lone victory coming in 1922.

Doyle kicked field goals of 22 and 35 yards before Kentucky's Ken Willis kicked one for 30 yards to make it 6-3 at halftime.

Doyle got a 23-yard field goal in the third period, and Houston, a second-string fullback, capped a 69-yard drive by going over middle for the touchdown in the final period. The conversion failed.

Alabama starting quarterback Jeff Dunn was hurt in the third quarter and Gary Hollingsworth, a senior with almost no playing experience, came in to direct the touchdown drive, completing passes of 20 and 9 yards along the way.

After the Crimson Tide went up 6-0, Freddie Maggard's passes and Alfred Rawls' run took the Wildcats to the Alabama 11. But Al Baker dropped a pass in the end zone and Kentucky settled for its only score.

Dunn hurt his knee on a quarterback keeper. First reports indicated he would be out four to six weeks.

No. 18 N. Carolina St. 40, North Carolina 6

Shane Montgomery threw three touchdown passes, two to Chris Corders, as 18th-ranked and unbeaten North Carolina State overpowered North Carolina.

All four Wolfpack victories this season have come against Atlantic Coast Conference opponents.

North Carolina (1-2) lost its second straight game in playing its ACC opener. Its offense sputtered after a first-quarter drive was stopped by a fumble, and the Tar Heels only reached Wolfpack territory twice more.

Four North Carolina turnovers were converted into 24 points by the Wolfpack. A first-quarter fumble turned into Damon Hartman's 37-yard field goal in the first quarter to extend the Wolfpack's lead to 10-0.

North Carolina reserve quarterback Chuckie Burnette had his three interceptions turned into touchdowns. He was also tackled in the end zone for a safety in the second quarter.

His first interception led to Montgomery's 12-yard scoring pass to Corders with 1:05 left before halftime.

No. 19 Washington St. 29, Wyoming 23

Paul Carr's 2-yard touchdown plunge with 49 seconds to play capped a furious Washington State comeback as the 19th-ranked Cougars beat Wyoming.

The victory kept Washington State perfect through four games, while Wyoming fell to 1-3.

Wyoming seemed in control late in the game, leading 23-21 with 2:47 to play at Washington State's 47-yard line. But quarterback Tom Corontzos fumbled on a vicious hit by Jeron Woodley, and Mark Ledbetter recovered for Washington State at Wyoming's 41.

Carr, filling in for injured Steve Broussard, then took over.

Although held for no gain on the Cougars' next play, two plays later Carr broke through the left side for 25 yards as Washington State moved down to Wyoming's 13. After an incomplete pass to slotback Tim Stallworth, Carr ran over right guard for 11 yards and a first down on Wyoming's 2-yard line.

No. 20 Illinois 41, Utah St. 2

Jeff George threw two touchdown passes Saturday, and Illinois held Utah State to just 24 yards offense in the first half.

George hit Dan Donovan with a 2-yard TD pass early in the second quarter, and two minutes later lofted a 27-yard scoring pass to Mike Bellamy.

Illinois led 31-0 at halftime and coasted to victory in its home opener before 61,553.

Illinois improved to 2-1, while Utah State suffered its third consecutive loss of the season.

Doug Higgins put the Illini on the scoreboard with a 21-yard field goal in the first quarter, and Ken Thomas ran 8 yards for a touchdown and a 10-0 lead before the period ended.

Victor Bowlay-Williams added a 1-yard touchdown run to George's two TD passes in the second quarter, and Wagner Lester raced 9 yards for a touchdown early in the third quarter for a 38-0 Illini margin.

Stanford 18, No. 22 Oregon 17

John Hopkins missed three field goal attempts but kicked a 27-yard beauty with time running out as Stanford scored all its points in a fourth-quarter rampage to shock 22nd-ranked Oregon.

Hopkins' kick gave Stanford its first victory in three Pacific-10 games and dropped Oregon to 2-1 overall and 1-1 in the conference.

Stanford's spectacular comeback from a 17-0 deficit began when Brian Johnson threw a 21-yard touchdown pass to Gary Taylor with 7:19 left.

After stopping Oregon, Stanford mounted a 61-yard touchdown drive despite a shoulder injury to Johnson that forced him to leave the game.

Johnson had taken the Cardinal to the Oregon 24 when he was hurt on a sack. But Steve Smith, who had lost his starting job to Johnson this week, came in, ran for 11 yards, completed three passes and leaped over from inside the one for a touchdown.

Smith then lofted a pass to Scott Eschelman for a 2-point conversion that cut Oregon's lead to 17-15.

A's lose once, but Angels fall twice

Associated Press

Randy Bush equaled his career-high of 14 home runs with a two-run shot that put Minnesota ahead in the fourth inning and Allan Anderson earned his career-high 17th victory with five shaky innings as the Twins beat first-place Oakland 5-3.

The loss snapped the Athletics' five-game winning streak and left them 3½ games ahead of California in the American League West pending the outcome of the Angels' double-header in Cleveland.

Anderson, 17-10, won for the eighth time in nine decisions dating back to July 25 despite yielding Jose Canseco's third-inning solo homer, the first home run surrendered by Anderson since July 30.

Anderson gave up three runs and six hits in five innings. Roy Smith gave up one hit over the last four innings for his first major-league save as Minnesota snapped a six-game losing streak.

Anderson was supposed to miss the start because of a back problem but the left-hander was put back into the rotation when he reported no pain Friday night.

Oakland's Mike Moore, 18-11, lost for the fifth time in his last seven starts. Moore, who entered the game with a 2-0 record against Minnesota this season, struck out seven in 6 1-3 innings but struggled with his control, walking three and throwing three costly wild pitches.

Indians 4, Angels 3
Indians 6, Angels 2

The California Angels, aware that Oakland had lost to Minnesota, squandered a chance to gain ground in the American League West by losing a doubleheader to the Cleveland Indians and falling 4½ games out.

AL Roundup

The Angels blew the opener 4-3 when reliever Greg Minton walked home the winning run to cap a two-run eighth-inning rally and dropped the nightcap 6-2 when Cleveland's Tom Candiotti held them to seven hits, retiring 14 consecutive batters from the second to the seventh inning.

Brook Jacoby walked to force home the winning run in the first game and tripled home the go-ahead run in the second game, which rookie Joey Belle broke open with a bases-loaded triple in the seventh inning.

Oakland's magic number for winning the division is four despite a 5-3 loss in Minnesota. California has lost three straight to Cleveland after Oakland beat the Indians three straight earlier in the week. The Angels have been swept in four of their five double-headers this year. Had they swept, they would have been 2½ games out.

Brewers 4, Blue Jays 1

Paul Molitor and B.J. Surhoff homered and Terry Francona drove in two runs as the Milwaukee Brewers staved off elimination in the American League East.

Toronto's lead over second-place Baltimore, which played at night, was reduced to 1½ games with seven games left. The third-place Brewers are 6½ out with eight games remaining. One Toronto victory or Milwaukee loss will eliminate the Brewers.

After Milwaukee's Don August, 12-11, pitched out of a bases-loaded situation in the first inning, Molitor hit his 10th homer in the bottom half to extend his hitting streak to 13 games and give the Brewers a 1-0 lead.

AP Laserphoto

Milwaukee's Gary Sheffield, formerly of the El Paso Diablos, flies head over heels over the dugout railing as he attempts to come up with a foul ball in Saturday's game against Toronto.

Red Sox 6, Tigers 1

Danny Heep's bases-loaded single in the first inning drove in two runs and the Boston Red Sox beat Detroit, extending their winning streak over the Tigers to seven games.

The loss left the Tigers, who have seven games remaining, two shy of losing 100 games for the third time in their history. Detroit has lost four straight and seven of its last eight.

Orioles 10, Yankees 2

Bob Milacki won his fourth consecutive decision and the Baltimore Orioles pulled back within one game of the American League East lead, beating the New York Yankees by creating runs out of a wild pitch, an error and some fancy footwork.

Mariners 8, Royals 0

Scott Bankhead pitched a two-hitter against his old team and the Seattle Mariners beat Kansas City, dimming the Royals' hopes in the American League West.

The Royals were shut out for the second straight day and league-leading 17th time this season. They failed to take advantage of a loss by Oakland and stayed 5½ games behind the Athletics with seven to play.

Rangers 6, White Sox 4

Thad Bosley's pinch-hit single in the eight inning keyed a three-run rally and lifted the Texas Rangers over the Chicago White Sox.

With Texas trailing 4-3, pinch-hitter Rick Leach led off with a walk against reliever Jose Segura (0-1) and moved to second on Cecil Espy's sacrifice bunt. Rafeal Palmeiro singled to score Leach.

Mitchell set up the touchdown with a six yard run and a 15-yard personal foul against Rice gave the Cajuns at first down at Rice's 15.

Rice's Sammy Hartman kicked a 24-yard field goal with 13:40 to go in the half to give the Owls a 3-0 lead.

No. 8 Arkansas 24, Mississippi 17

Freshman E.D. Jackson powered over twice from short yardage to spark No. 8 Arkansas to a hard-fought victory over Mississippi.

Jackson, who gained 80 yards on 22 attempts, pulled the Razorbacks even with Ole Miss at 7-7 early in the second quarter, then gave his team a 14-7 lead with a 2-yard burst at 12:54 in the second.

The victory in the non-conference game played before an estimated 53,000 fans at Mississippi Veterans Memorial Stadium in Jackson improved Arkansas' record to 2-0, while Ole Miss fell to 3-1.

Rebel quarterback John Darnell engineered a final-minutes drive only to have his pass into the end zone picked off by Anthony Cooney, his second interception of the night.

Baylor 46, Kansas 3

Tailback Eldwin Raphel scored on tackle-breaking runs of 19 and 7 yards, and linebacker James Francis blocked a punt for a safety as Baylor defeated Kansas.

Baylor of the Southwest Conference won its home opener after road losses to Oklahoma and Georgia. Kansas (2-2) of the Big Eight Conference was on the road for the first time after three home games.

Francis, one of 12 nominees for the Butkus Award as college football's best linebacker, blocked B.J. Lohsen's punt out of the end zone for a 2-0 Baylor lead with 6:07 left in the first quarter.

Baylor took the free kick and advanced to the Kansas 9, with Jeff Ireland kicking a 26-yard field goal.

A 37-yard Brad Goebel pass to fullback Jeffery Murray set up Raphel's 19-yard scoring run with 14:33 remaining in the half as Raphel slipped safety Jason Priest's attempted tackle.

Texas Christian 19
S. Mississippi 17

Ron Jiles passed for two touchdowns and Tommy Palmer rushed for 120 yards to lead Texas Christian over Southern Mississippi.

Jiles winged scoring tosses of 33 yards to Setrick Dickens and 20 yards to Darrell Johnson as TCU ended a six-game losing streak in the first meeting ever between the two schools.

Palmer posted his career-high rushing performance on 21 carries as the Frogs, 1-2, stung the Golden Eagles with their third straight loss after a stunning upset of Florida State in their season opener.

TCU had to overcome a flurry of second half turnovers and untimely penalties to offset a 14-13 halftime deficit and pull off one of its few upsets since its Cinderella 8-3 season of 1984.

Cubs' magic number now at four games

Associated Press

The Chicago Cubs reduced their magic number for winning the National League East to four when pinch hitter Mitch Webster singled home an unearned run in the ninth inning and beat the Pittsburgh Pirates.

The Cubs stayed four games ahead of St. Louis, which beat Philadelphia 11-5. Each team has seven games left, including three next weekend in St. Louis. Chicago's third straight victory eliminated Montreal from the race.

Curtis Wilkerson led off the ninth by reaching on second baseman Jose Lind's throwing error. Domingo Ramos sacrificed and Webster grounded a single to right field, with Wilkerson scoring ahead of Gary Redus' throw.

Les Lancaster, 4-2, got the victory and Doug Bair, 2-3, took the loss.

The Pirates played the game under protest following a balls-and-strikes controversy that caused a delay of some five minutes in the bottom of the sixth.

Dwight Smith opened the Cub sixth by drawing a walk. Smith stole second on a low pitch that Mark Grace appeared to swing at. However, plate umpire Eric Gregg called the pitch a ball and put the count at 2-1.

Third base umpire Jim Quick said the count should be 1-2. The Cubs argued the point. The umpires huddled, decided it was 2-1 and Pirates manager Jim Leyland announced he was protesting.

Cardinals 11, Phillies 5

Milt Thompson hit a three-run double during a seven-run third inning and the St. Louis Cardinals kept pace in the National League East, beating the Philadelphia Phillies.

Pedro Guerrero also drove in three runs for the second-place Cardinals, who began the day four games behind Chicago. Each team had four games remaining, including three next weekend in St. Louis.

Frank DiPino, 9-0, pitched 2 1-3 scoreless innings for the victory. Dennis Cook, 6-8, took the loss.

The Phillies scored in the third on a single by Darren Daulton and a double by Cook before the Cardinals bounced back.

Pitcher Cris Carpenter singled with one out, starting a string of seven straight hits. Guerrero, Todd Zeile, Tom Brunansky and Terry Pendleton hit RBI singles, finishing Cook, and reliever Don Carman walked Jose Oquendo to load the bases. Thompson followed with his double for a 7-1 lead.

Mets 13, Expos 6

Gary Carter drove in five runs and the New York Mets remained 5½ games behind in the National League East, defeating Montreal as the Expos were eliminated.

First-place Chicago beat Pittsburgh 3-2, and any combination of Cubs' victories and Mets' losses totaling three will eliminate third-place New York.

Hubie Brooks hit a grand slam and drove in five runs for Montreal. Gregg Jefferies, Tim Teufel and Mark Carreon each hit home runs for the Mets.

Carter got three hits, including two doubles, for his first five-RBI game since July 11, 1986.

NL Roundup

Giants 3, Astros 1

Rick Reuschel outdueled Mike Scott and the San Francisco Giants beat the Houston Astros 3-1 Saturday to maintain their five-game lead in the National League West.

The Giants won for the 17th time in 22 games. San Diego, which played in Los Angeles, began the day in second place. The third-place Astros were eliminated from NL West title contention with the defeat.

Padres 7, Dodgers 1

Calvin Schiraldi hit a three-run homer and combined with Greg Harris on a three-hitter as the San Diego Padres kept their slim National League West hopes alive by routing the Los Angeles Dodgers.

The Padres stayed five games behind San Francisco, which beat Houston 3-1. The Giants' magic number for clinching the division is three.

Schiraldi, 6-6, is 3-0 in four starts since being acquired from the Chicago Cubs. He pitched five innings and gave up two hits, including pinch-hitter Darrin Fletcher's first major-league home run.

Reds 11, Braves 5

Paul O'Neill drove in four runs and pinch hitter Barry Larkin singled home the tiebreaking run in the eighth inning as the Cincinnati Reds beat the Atlanta Braves.

The Reds won their second straight game following 10 consecutive losses.

With the score 5-all, Ron Oester opened the eighth with a double against Jay Aldrich, 1-1. With one out, Larkin's single off Dwayne Henry scored pinch runner Marty Brown.

Luis Quinones hit an RBI triple off Mike Stanton and O'Neill later hit a two-run single.

U.S. enters Ryder Cup final trailing Europe by 2 points

By GORDON WHITE Jr.
New York Times News Service

SUTTON COLDFIELD, England — With the Americans in good position to move up to a tie with the European team in the 28th Ryder Cup matches, two of the best U.S. pro golfers let the final four-ball match slip away over the last three holes Saturday.

This created a daylong standoff of 4 points a team that left the United States still 2 points behind the Europeans going into the 12 singles matches that close out the biennial competition Sunday.

Curtis Strange, winner of the last two U.S. Open titles, and Payne Stewart, who won the PGA Championship last month, were leading 1 up with three holes to play against Mark James and Howard Clark, two Englishmen not generally considered in the same class with those two Americans golfers.

But Clark birdied the par-4 16th to get even, and James won the 17th with birdie 4 when Strange and Stewart went wild with second shots. Then the Englishmen held to halve the 18th and win, 1 up.

Since the American duo of Chip Beck and Paul Azinger won their afternoon four-ball match against Nick Faldo of England and Ian Woosnam of Wales, 2 and 1, and the Tom Kite-Mark McCumber duo beat Bernhard Langer of West Germany and Jose-Maria Canizares of Spain, 2 and 1, the United States had earned 2 points in the four-ball.

The United States was on its way to getting 3 afternoon points when the Strange-Stewart pair was leading in the late going.

But instead of going into the final day at 8-8, the European team held its 2-point lead, gained in the 5-3 opening success Friday and is in front, 9-7.

The United States won two and lost two of the morning's foursome matches so it needed a winning effort in the majority of four-ball play to gain anything in the afternoon.

CAR TALK!

BY TOM AND RAY MAGLIOZZI

IS YOUR MECHANIC HONEST, COMPETENT OR ALL OF THE ABOVE?

Dear Tom and Ray:

Is there any way to learn, without spending a lot of money, whether your mechanic is competent and honest? — Karl

RAY: Well, you can test for dishonesty without spending any money. For instance, if your mechanic's valet answers the phone and says he'll call you when he gets back from the club, I'd go someplace else.

TOM: Actually, you can devise a simple test for honesty. It can't be anything too obvious. For example, if you drive in with a brand-new muffler and ask him to check your exhaust system, he's going to suspect something. A good test would be to ask him to check your brakes about three months after you've had new pads installed. If he tries to sell you brakes, go someplace else.

RAY: To test for incompetence, ask him to check your brakes three months after HE replaced your pads. But seriously, Karl, if you're suspicious of your mechanic, go find another one. You'll never be convinced that he's entirely honest, and he'll be insulted by your accusatory attitude. Look for a mechanic you like and trust instinctively. I'm sure you have better things to do with your time than running around getting your brakes checked.

Dear Tom and Ray:

I recently bought a used 1986 Corvette, and I have a question about oil. I looked at oil in the supermarket the other day and found that Pennzoil comes as 10W-30 with SG, SF, CC and CD ratings. What do they mean? — Fred

RAY: The American Petroleum Institute ratings you mention refer to the quality of the oil. The first letter "S" means the oil is for gasoline engines. The higher the second letter, the better the oil's ability to neutralize acids, hold contaminants in suspension, lubricate engine parts, etc. "SE" used to be the best rated oil you could buy. Then came "SF" and now there's "SG."

TOM: The "C" ratings are for diesel engines, so "CC" would be good and "CD" would be better. For the people who need the "CD," we recommend the 90-day, which is currently paying the best rates.

RAY: But as long as you're buying oil in the grocery store, Fred, why not pick up a bottle of extra-virgin olive oil? I think that's what GM recommends for the Corvette anyway.

• • •

Dear Tom and Ray:

I am considering buying a Lotus Super Seven. I understand this is a high-performance car that requires 93.5 octane gas. Unfortunately, I live in a very high elevation, where the highest octane gas available is 90. I would greatly appreciate your advice. — Ed

TOM: When I started reading your letter, I thought that you must have just turned 40. But by the time I finished, I was convinced it must be 50. If you had just hit 40, you'd probably go for something like a Mazda Miata or a Nissan 300 ZX. You're going for a "last chance" vehicle — and that smacks of the big 5-0.

RAY: If that's the case, why pussyfoot around? Go all the way! For $145,000 you can go to the convenience store in a brand new Lambourghini Countach. High octane gas? No problem. If you're spending that kind of money, buy yourself a Sunoco station, too.

A crystal chandelier is only one of the many elegant features in the formal living room which is highlighted by antique rosewood paneling and a marble fireplace.

COZY yet ELEGANT

Homeowners dream of boundless living space, areas for entertaining and a private haven for Mom and Dad. This week's featured home is a families dream come true. Located in Trinity Estates, this four-bedroom, four-bath, two-living area family home meets these requirements.

Walking up the circular drive, a person immediately notices the beautifully manicured tiff lawn, healthy landscaping and two elegant lamp posts which brighten the yard at night. Greek columns are aligned along the front porch and potted flowers greet visitors as they enter the front door.

THE ENTRY way has a parquet wood floor and a large leaded glass window that overlooks the front yard. To the right of the entry way lies the formal living room, which is surrounded in antique rosewood paneling. Sculptured moldings decorate the ceiling and an antique chandelier hangs overhead. The plush chocolate brown carpet, with its taupe border, is very inviting and would draw anyone in to view the marble fireplace and elegantly carved mantle or to peak through the large leaded glass front windows. French doors lead to a side concrete patio.

The formal dining room is located to the left of the entrance and features stucco walls painted a bright salmon. A dining table is situated below a large crystal chandelier.

THROUGH A swinging door in the dining room, access is made into the kitchen and breakfast room. This room is very bright due to the white cabinets, flooring and windows which view both the front and back yards. Brick walls surround the kitchen and enhance its brightness. The appliances include a built-in General Electric oven, microwave, stove top and dishwasher. A pantry also provides for additional storage.

Just off of the kitchen is a laundry room that is roomy enough to accommodate an additional refrigerator or freezer. A doorway leads to the two-car garage with automatic door openers.

Please see COZY, Page 2D

The dining room has a leaded glass window that frames the front yard. The walls are painted a bright salmon and a chandelier ascends from the vaulted ceiling.

The guest bath is highlighted by a floral paper which is identical to the porcelain sink. The sink has gold fixtures with inlaid porcelain that compliments the wallcovering.

George Wolf/Reporter-Telegram

The elegant features of this Trinity Estates home, above, can be seen by anyone who drives past. Outdoor lamp posts and leaded glass windows enhance the exterior of this four-bedroom and four-bath home.

The family room, left, is positioned between the kitchen and a hall which leads to the bedrooms. A brick fireplace serves as the focal point and French doors open onto the back patio.

COZY

A large family room is situated next to the kitchen and behind the formal dining room. This room also opens into the entry way. The size of this area is perfect for a sectional sofa, where a person can relax and watch TV, or enjoy a fire in the brick fireplace. A built-in bookcase stretches along one wall and on one side of the fireplace, the backyard can be seen through a floor-to-ceiling window.

French doors are located to the left of the fireplace and open onto an L-shaped back patio; which features a gas grill, lush flowers and shrubs and can easily accommodate a ping-pong table for active family fun.

A half-bath is located just a few steps from the front entryway. The floral print wallpaper is complimented by a matching sink, faucets and vanity knobs.

Heading down the hall, the master bedroom is the first room to the right. Navy blue and taupe striped wallpaper adorn the walls. Opposite the doorway, a wall of windows with plantation shutters and a patio door views the side patio; where a private, relaxing soak in the hot tub would be a perfect way to end the day.

The master suite features his and her bathrooms. The man's bath has two closets, a large marble shower and a matching marble vanity. The woman's bath also accommodates two closets, while one is a walk-in with customized drawers for additional storage. A linen closet is also provided for storing sheets and towels. A large sunken tub, marble top vanity with a built-in make up area are the other amenities in the lady's bath. Both baths feature elegant gold faucets and fixtures.

Through the master bedroom, access is made into the library. The focal point in this room is an exquisite marble fireplace. For a quick night cap, a small bar is located through a door in the library and, through a second door, adjoins the formal living room. As in the master bedroom, navy blue and taupe striped wallpaper cover the walls. The bar is equipped with a sink, cabinets and plenty of shelving for glassware.

Continuing down this long corridor, French doors are positioned on the left wall and provide a convenient access into the backyard from the master bedroom. A guest room is situated to the right and the walls are painted a deep shade of green and a window views the side patio. This room's private bath displays a tub surrounded with taupe-colored tile, a green and beige wallcovering and a window that also overlooks the side yard.

The children's play area is located further down the hall. A built-in bookcase stores favorite books and games for later enjoyment and has space for a television. The high ceiling can accommodate any games requiring more head room, possibly jump rope or inside basketball. A door opens into the backyard, allowing children their own private entry without having to go to the other end of the house when wanting to play outside in the play yard.

Two bedrooms are positioned off of the play area. The brightness of the first room is due to the white shutters and a blue and white wallpaper. A white desk and bookcase is inset along one wall and is opposite a wall of windows that frame the back play yard. Above the windows a shelf stretches the length of the wall and is perfect for showing off favorite toys. A closet with built-in drawers is situated within the room.

Around the corner, a hall-bath is located for the children. The bath features a porcelain tub, a marble-top vanity and tan-colored wallpaper. Both rooms have easy access to this bath.

The fourth bedroom is situated to the right of the bath and is the largest one. It can easily accommodate two twin beds and the walls are decorated in little red, green, and blue houses and a matching border is positioned along the ceiling. A shelf above the windows, which views the side yard, are perfect for displaying stuffed animals. This room also features a built-in desk with bookcase and a customized closet.

The other amenities in this home, which contains approximately 4,650 square feet, are ceiling fans, taupe carpeting, a divided backyard with room for a pool, and a sprinkler system.

Don Harvey, Realtors is offering this home for $399,000.

Don Harvey Realtors add new associates

Don Harvey, Realtors is pleased to announce the addition of two new sales associates. Peggy Strong and Toni Lowrance bring diversified backgrounds and experience to Don Harvey, Realtors.

These attributions have continuously characterized the quality and capability of Don Harvey associates and have consistently kept Don Harvey, Realtors, Midland's largest volume real estate company.

Peggy Strong is a native Texan from Amarillo, where she graduated Salutatorian from Palo Duro High School. She is married to Ron Strong and they have two children. Her husband is District Director for the Texas Railroad Commission and was transferred to Midland in 1985.

Ms. Strong graduated with honors from Midland College, received her designation from graduate real estate institute and has served on the Texas Association of Realtors (TAR) committee for computer technology as well as chairman for the Midland Board of Realtors on computer training.

Peggy Strong

Toni Lowrance

She is a member of the National Association of Realtors, Texas Association of Realtors and the Multiple Listing Service.

In addition, Ms. Strong has been especially active in her own sub-division, Fairmont Park. She has helped form the Home-Owner's Association and serves as the President.

Ms. Strong has once again strived to better serve her neighbors and community by raising funds for the newly constructed Essex Park, hosting neighborhood special activities and working with city officials for street signs, crossing guards and more.

Toni Lowrance was born in Dalhart, Texas and graduated from Dalhart High School in 1979. Her husband, Glenn Lowrance, is employed by Exxon Company U.S.A. and they have been Midland residents since 1985.

She is a member of the Exxon Wives Club and is active in the Juvenile Diabetes Foundation. The Lowrance's are members of the Golf Course Road Church of Christ and have three daughters; Mika, Meghan and Melisa. Their favorite family activities include back packing, camping and playing tennis.

Being a member of the Texas Association of Realtors, National Association of Realtors, the Midland Board of Realtors and Don Harvey's Continuous Education class enables Ms. Lowrance to remain abreast of the changing aspects in the real estate market; financing and new ideas in order to better serve her customers and clients.

Ms. Lowrance is proud to welcome new families to Midland as she strongly believes in the strength and growth of our community.

Agent, First Realty, Better Homes & Gardens share household moving tips

Brian Cooper and his associates at First Realty, Better Homes and Gardens are often asked questions about moving expenses. There is one question posed quite often. Can household moving costs be deducted from Federal income tax?

Cooper

Every year more than 50 million Americans move to a new residence. If a family itemizes its tax deductions and meets certain requirements, it may deduct all or part of the expenses for:

(1) hunting for housing before the move; (2) moving household belongings; (3) traveling to the new location; (4) living in a temporary residence (up to 30 days) before finding a more permanent residence; and, (5) selling the old residence and establishing a new one.

Also, meals bought while en route to the new location and meals bought during the first 30 days until a residence is established are 80 percent deductible.

Such deductions can mean savings of hundreds of dollars. Why don't more families take advantage of this tax benefit? Probably because they do not know how to qualify.

As real estate sales associates, we recommend that all our clients review Federal tax form 3903, titled "Moving Expenses," and discuss the instructions with an IRS representative and/ or their tax advisor.

To qualify for the moving cost tax deduction you must change both your job location and your residence. For example, according to the 1988 tax form 3903, the job-distance restriction requires that the new job location be at least 35 miles further away from the old residence than the old job site was.

If the old job were 15 miles from the old home, the new job must be at least 50 (35 + 15) miles from the old house for you to qualify for the moving expense deduction.

There also is a minimum employment time requirement so employees that move frequently may not qualify.

Selling a house and moving household belongings to a new location is an involved process, but becomes much simpler when all phases are planned in detail.

As your real estate agent, we can estimate the average time it takes to sell a house in your neighborhood. We also can discuss the various steps involved in selling your house, including preparations for moving your family and household belongings.

Most major moving companies can provide you with a checklist of things to be done. Listings often include these tips:

- If moving at employer's request, determine what expenses are theirs and which are yours.
- Determine if the move qualifies for a tax deduction.
- Have inventory session. Decide what to move and what not to move.
- Schedule garage sale for items you won't move; donate others to charitable organization.
- Arrange for packing. The mover will do it. If you do it yourself, get proper cartons, etc.
- Gather personal records (medical, dental, school, church, etc.)
- Discontinue house delivery services.
- Mail change of address cards to post office, social security office, insurance companies, national credit cards, magazines, friends and relatives, credit bureau, etc.
- Prepare appliances for moving.
- Transfer checking and savings accounts. Check safe deposit box.
- Throw away or give away all flammables (paints, paint removers, etc.)that will be impossible to move.
- Pack items to be moved in car. Label "Do Not Move."
- Send clothing, drapes, curtains, rugs out for cleaning. Leave in wrapping.
- Pack items you'll need first in your new home. Label "Load Last, Unload First."

An important part of selling a house is planning for the move once the house is sold. If you, your relatives, or your friends are planning to sell a house, please contact First Realty, Better Homes and Gardens to learn how we can help you sell the house and plan the move.

Fragrant cedar often derived from other trees

Associated Press

The historical roots of the cedar go back thousands of years and involve one of our earliest man-made ecological disasters.

The fragrant cedar of today that lines our closets, chests and drawers, according to an article in Country Living, is not really a cedar at all.

There are no true cedars that are native to North America.

Many species of pine bear that name and the most common of these, including most red cedars, white cedars and ground cedar, really belong to the juniper or cypress families.

They are prized for their ability to repel moths and other insects and often resemble true cedars in fragrance, durability and color, though rarely in size.

Among the most celebrated of all trees, the Cedar of Lebanon once wrapped mountain tops of the Near East with lush forests.

These majestic conifers sometimes exceeded 140 feet in height.

Cedar forests supplied timber for the elaborate palaces and temples constructed in the Near East during the third millennium B.C., when the oldest of Lebanon's cedars had already stood for roughly 4,000 years.

Later, Alexander the Great built his fleets of cedar of Lebanon and exported the wood to many lands.

So intense was demand that forests were transformed into vast deserts.

Today a few surviving cedar groves are protected against extinction, while the deserts are bleak reminders of ecological disaster.

Fortunately, a similar species grows plentifully in Asia, with Himalayan cedar forests growing at altitudes up to 4,500 feet and supplying timber for modern houses and bridges.

In North America, long before Europeans brought their woodworking crafts to the New World, native Americans in the Northwest used Western red cedar in totem poles, frame lodges and dugout war canoes carved and steamed into shape from single cedar logs.

From cedar bark they wove blankets and netting. They addressed the tree as "you great supernatural one" and called it "the tree of life."

Subsequent generations have found more mundane uses for cedar, in telephone poles, fences, cooperage and pencils.

The ancestors of today's cedar chests first appeared in 18th century England when furniture makers imported Eastern red cedar from North America to line boxes and traveling chests.

After a long sea voyage to the Colonies, such a chest was often a settler family's single piece of furniture, serving for storage, sitting and tabletop.

In prosperity, a blanket chest stood at the foot of every bed, while cedar hope chests protected and perfumed a bride's needlework.

The wood most familiar today as "cedar" is the Eastern red cedar (Juniperus virginiana), which varies from a low-lying shrub to stately evergreen throughout much of North America.

Easily cut into durable shingles or thin linings, red cedar's white edged russet wood guards house exteriors against weather and woolens against summer blight.

Ruth Young Realtors, Inc. makes moving easier for two families

By SUE GUTIERREZ
Advertising Feature Writer

Communication is important between buyers, sellers and real estate agents whether moving in or out of a home. The associates at Ruth Young Realtors, Inc. are aware of this fact and work hard on a daily basis to keep those channels of communication open.

For the past nine years the Houston area has been home to Mike and Karen Walzel. Mike is a Reservoir Engineer for Texaco and has been transferred to Midland. Karen, a seventh and eighth grade reading teacher is now employed in Andrews. Billie Jean, their eight-year-old daughter, is very excited about the move.

The Walzel's were aware of the transfer Labor Day weekend and came to Midland soon after to purchase a home and find a job for Ms. Walzel. They had not listed their house in Richmond, near Houston, until the closing date and transfer were known.

Upon arrival in Midland they met with Ruth Young of Ruth Young Realtors, Inc. and spent approximately 1½ hours in her office in a qualifying interview, communicating their wants, needs and desires. After determining their desires they were shown a home very much like their house in Richmond. Ms. Young was quite sure of the type of home the Walzel's were searching for since they had given her a detailed list of their space and living requirements.

Although the couple was very comfortable with the first home Ms. Young scheduled for them to see (the home they are currently buying) they felt compelled to view a few other homes, just to be sure they had seen all that Midland had to offer.

"Once we had seen some other houses we came back to the first house." explained Ms. Walzel. "Ruth was able to zero in on exactly what we wanted and find the perfect home and neighborhood that met our needs with out very much looking."

"We are happy about the move to Midland. Everyone has been very friendly and we definitely won't miss the Houston traffic."

Bill and Sigrid Lamm are the sellers of the Saddle Club South home. Lamm is also employed by Texaco and has been transferred to Denver. The Lamm's have a daughter Katie, who is a senior at Midland High and a son, Billy, a sophomore also at Midland High School.

Although the Lamm's have accepted the transfer to Denver they are not happy about leaving Midland. Ms. Lamm is particularly unhappy about the move.

She explains, "Where else but Midland can you attend the Symphony and be home in 10 minutes. Midland is always offering concerts, plays, movies and art shows. We also have a wonderful community theatre. There are so many things to do with out the traffic of larger towns. I have loved living in Midland and I am very sad to leave."

While the Lamms are sad to leave Midland and the Walzels are happy to be moving here, they both agreed that Ruth Young Realtors, Inc. helped them make the transition a little easier. The Lamm's house was listed and sold within three weeks at full price. "Ruth was very efficient, she's there when you need her and she doesn't waste your time."

Ms. Young explained that the transaction was very quick. "Mike and Karen knew what they wanted in a home and they communicated it well. We try to spend time with our clients in the comfortable setting of our office just to be able to better represent them. Without this process, a lot of valuable time may be wasted riding around looking at houses our clients may not want."

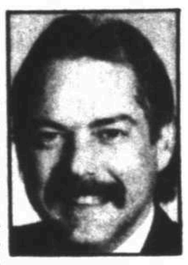
"I just put myself in their shoes and listened to their needs and requirements in a home. The Walzel's were easy to sell, because they bought the type of home they had explained to me."

"The Walzel's and the Lamm's made selling real estate a very gratifying experience. They were all very congenial in working out a closing date, etc. Bill and Segrid's assurance to Mike and Karen, that they would love Midland is what we like to hear our sellers express. The Lamm's will be missed in this community."

Carriage Company Realtors focus on local opportunities, challenges

Carriage Company, Realtors has been serving Midland with qualified real estate associates for many years.

Three of the agents that help make this an outstanding company are Paul Culver, Joan Ramey and Wanda Hines.



Culver

Paul Culver obtained his real estate license in 1987 and believes that Carriage Company Realtors has opened up a new world of opportunities and a challenge.

"Since becoming an associate here, I realize how much I have benefited by growing up in a real estate oriented family. My mother, Louise Culver, began her real estate career during the 1960's when I was in junior high school, so I have grown up observing all the aspects of this business."

Before entering the real estate profession, Culver attended Texas Tech and had a successful career as a professional musician.

He toured with many popular groups including ZZ Top, Joe Cocker, Hank Williams Jr. and Ronnie Milsap. He currently performs with The Shades, a popular Midland band.

Culver believes that real estate offers a creative outlet for home due to the many ways that properties are marketed. "This is a problem solving occupation and the opportunity is always there to approach a sale or a listing in a new and innovative manner."

Being a native Midlander gives Culver an advantage because her knows and understands the people and the community. "While there are constant changes because of the transfers, the people here are great. It has the conveniences of a large city but maintains the heart of a small town."

Culver is a member of TAR, NAR, MLS and the Midland Board of Realtors.

Ramey

Joan Ramey has been an associate with Carriage Company for 15 years and has been in real estate for 19 years. During her real estate career, she has been a past President of the Midland Board of Realtors and was named Realtor of the Year in 1979.

Ms. Ramey is very people oriented and doesn't like the confinement of an office. "Real estate offers me the opportunity to get out and be with people. I'd rather be working with people rather than typewriters."

She thrives on the problem solving challenges that real estate presents. "Each transaction has a different set of problems and challenges and it is up to me to work out all those problems. You can't get bored with the real estate profession because each transaction offers something new each and every day."

In addition, Ms. Ramey also has been involved in commercial real estate. Her first transaction was the first piece of land that is now Crestgate Addition.

She also sold and is currently managing the Woodhill Building. The commercial real estate side has also added different challenges.

Ms. Ramey has been active in the community as well as the real estate community. She has served as the President of the League of Women Voters, served as a director for the Midland Chamber of Commerce, President of Alpha Chi Omega Alumni Association and is also a member of TAR, NAR and MLS.

Hines

Wanda Hines has lived in Midland since 1948 and is familiar with the Midland economy and is aware that it is similar to a roller coaster. "Being in the real estate business, one has to know the ups and downs of this profession as well as the community's economy. It is amazing how we are still able to sell homes regardless of the state the oil or if interest rates are high."

Ms. Hines was encouraged by her husband to obtain her real estate license.

After years of volunteer work including being named a life member of the PTA, she was ready for a career. Keeping her three children in mind, real estate was a great option because of the flexibility it offers.

Ms. Hines started in real estate 12 years ago with Jack Mogle, who was an excellent teacher and has been invaluable in her real estate career.

She has served on various committees for the Midland Board of Realtors, is also a member of the Golf Course Church of Christ, a member of the NAR, TAR, MLS and the Midland Board of Realtors.

Ms. Hines is also a volunteer for the Christmas in April project every year.

Langston Realtors talks about...

A stronger real estate market; associates' cooperation

Q. In July you wrote that you were very optimistic about our real estate market because of strong May and June statistics. With the MLS figures for July and August now published, do you still feel this? C.P.

Langston

A. Very definitely! I base this mainly on current TRENDS as indicated by a compilation of statistics for recent months. This compilation is telling us that, even though the total number of sales is minimally down, homes are selling a shorter period of time and at a higher average sales price than they were earlier this year, AND, most importantly, than they were for the period in 1988. Therefore, it seems one can conclude that the "trend" is for at least a stable market with definite improvements in some sectors. The most significant improvement is found in the area of new construction: a 56 percent increase in the number of sales for June through August as compared with the same time period last year. Statistics on other improvements in the market over last year (June - August) are an increase in the average sales price from $73,977 to $76,080 and a decrease of 10 percent in average days on the market.

I have always hesitated to base conclusions on MLS statistics for individual months; these can be tremendously misleading when only a few closings (or the disbursement/ reporting thereof) are delayed due to the holidays, vacations, or the end of the month falling on a weekend. But rather I compile and analyze several months, with a great deal of importance given to the movement that shows up over two or three months.

Recent sales in the upper price ranges by our office also give me confidence in a "good" real estate market. In the past two months our associates Bea McGrath, Roberta Aldridge and Nona Orr have all been involved in sales of properties listed in the $385,000 to $500,000 range. I think this is very encouraging news, especially for a market that has seen no sales above $300,000 since November of 1988!

Q. No question, just a comment - in our many moves, I've never worked with a nicer firm! Every one of your agents seemed to really care about our family and were most supportive to the Realtor assisting us. They helped her make appointments, got information, watched the children while we talked and assisted her in selecting properties for us to look at. You've got a great group of people! Texaco transferree from Hobbs

When you say your agents work together, you mean it! We really liked the Langston Realtor. He was fun, knowledgable, knew the market and bent over backwards to help us find a super home. We were also impressed with the friendliness of everyone in your office, making us feel especially welcome to Midland; and with their eagerness to look for and suggest other homes for us to consider - your listing or not! Exxon transferree from New Orleans

It is always gratifying to hear again what I have always felt: that our associates are among the most friendly and cooperative in the city. We do work well together because we respect, appreciate and yes, like one another. As the Broker for the firm, I constantly am aware of just how much the agents assist one another, how they cooperate on planning open houses or promotions together, how they share information on the market, financing, properties, etc., and how they will really pull together to find a home for a customer or to get a property under contract for a desperate seller!

Maybe the key ingredient to this cooperative attitude is the fact that all of our associates like what they are doing and they are good at it! I respect the commitment, abilities and honesty of all of our agents. Every day I find another reason to appreciate one associate or another and to be glad they are in our office.

I think this cooperative spirit in Langston is why we remain at the top of the market! Sellers and buyers recognize that in working with Langston Realtors, more agents than any in any other office in the city are all working cooperatively to assist them, whatever their real estate needs!

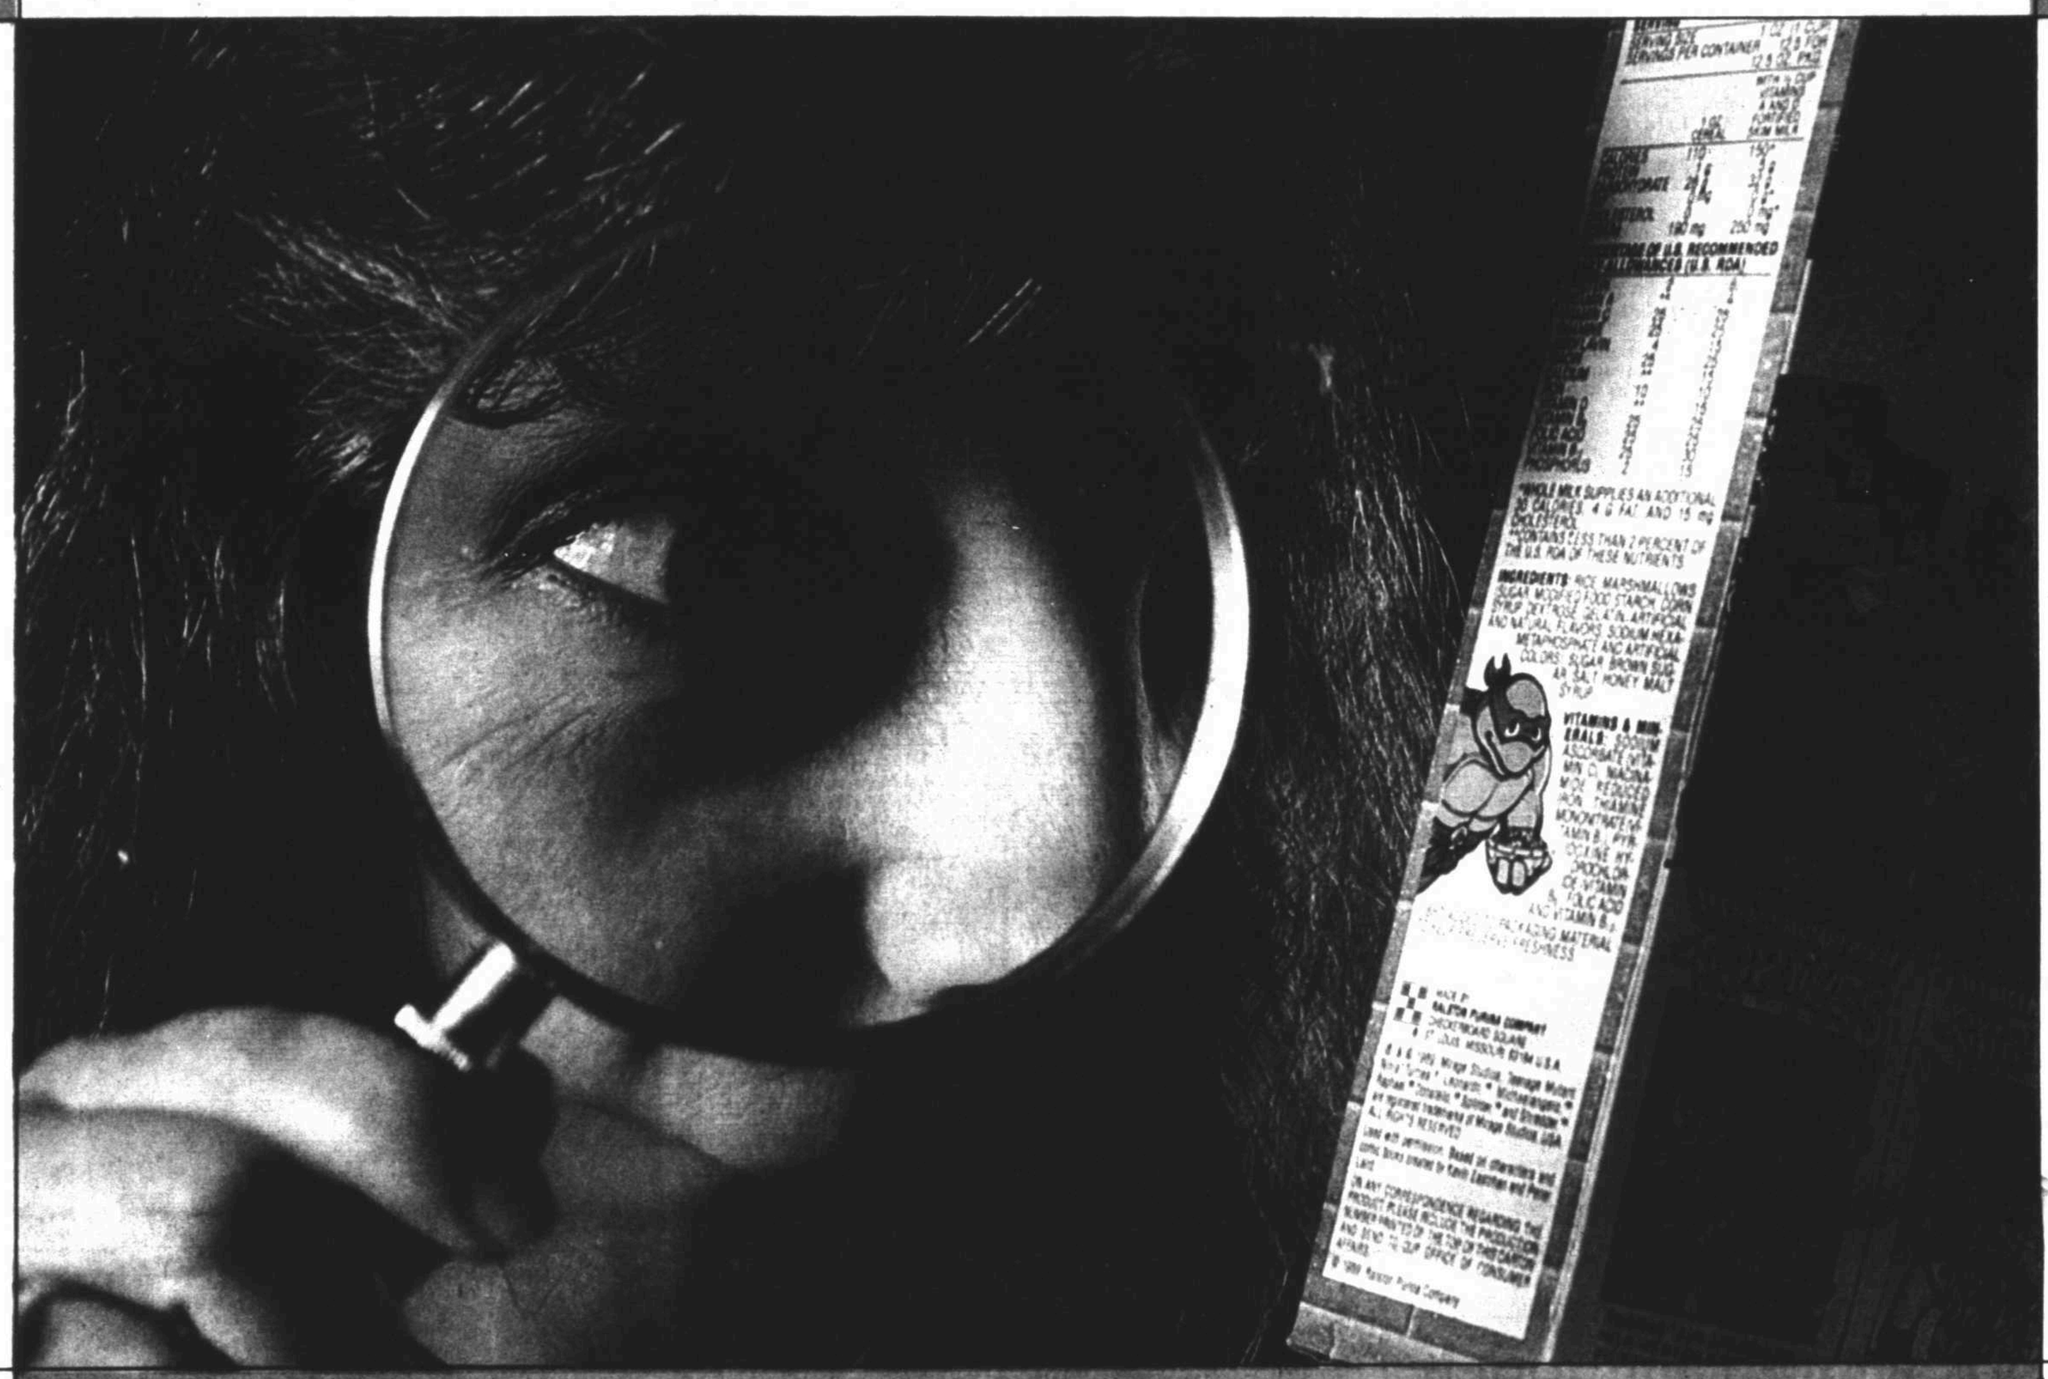
Eyeing the evidence



Text by LINDA ANDERSON

It is a paradox, but the more technology makes working easier, the more complicated life becomes.

A couple of generations ago, mothers and grandmothers grew produce for their families' uses and knew exactly what ingredients went into every dish they made.

Today, giant corporations produce "homemade" foods, and consumers need degrees in chemistry to figure out exactly what they are eating.

And with so much emphasis being put on healthy eating, more and more consumers are becoming concerned about what they are eating, and wondering if it is good for them.

Ceci Westmoreland, registered and licensed dietitian, stressed the importance of reading food labels.

"Remember, ingredients are listed in order," greater amounts listed first, she said. For example, if the first ingredient listed is sugar, then that product has more sugar in it than any other ingredient.

Labeling claims such as "lite" and "no salt added," and questions as to how much of certain ingredients are considered healthy have caused a lot of consumer confusion.

ACCORDING TO an article in "Cooking Light," written by Rebecca J. Pate, "... the Food and Drug Administration has given no legal definition of 'light' as of yet. You'll see this term used in a wide variety of ways, describing anything from number of calories (as in light process cream cheese products) to the color of the food (as in light olive oil)."

Ms. Pate listed labeling requirements for sodium:

"Sodium free: Less than 5 milligrams sodium per serving.

"Very low sodium: No more than 35 milligrams sodium per serving.

"Low sodium: No more than 140 milligrams sodium per serving.

"Reduced sodium: Processed to reduced the usual sodium level by 75 percent. Label must compare product's sodium content to that of the food being replaced.

"Unsalted, salt free, no salt added: These terms refer to products (normally processed with salt) that are processed without salt. But they still can contain sodium. Salt, which is 40 percent sodium, is only 1 of 70 sodium compounds used or found in foods."

But, Ms. Westmoreland said, since ingredients are listed on the label in descending order, "if salt is listed last, don't be too concerned" about salt content.

Ms. Pate defined other labeling terms:

Low calorie: Contains no more than 40 calories per serving. Foods that are naturally low-calorie cannot be labeled "low calorie."

Reduced calorie: Calorie content is at least a third less than it ordinarily is.

Diet, dietetic: Meets the same requirements as foods labeled "low calorie" or "reduced calorie," or is described as useful for dietary purposes other than losing weight.

Sugarless, sugar free: Has no table sugar (sucrose), but may be sweetened with other sweeteners including fructose, honey or corn syrup — which must be listed in the ingredients. (By the way, sorbitol and mannitol are defined by Ms. Pate as "sugar alcohols.")

Cholesterol free: Contains less than 2 milligrams cholesterol per serving.

Low cholesterol: Contains less than 20 milligrams cholesterol per serving.

Cholesterol reduced: Cholesterol reduced by at least 75 percent of that in the original product.

HEALTHIER DIETS are possible, but consumers must be willing to read and translate labels. Ms. Westmoreland said a healthy, well-balanced diet contains 50 percent to 55 percent complex carbohydrates, 15 percent to 20 percent protein and 30 percent fat. Low cholesterol is about 200 to 300 milligrams per day.

Eliminating unnecessary fat is essential for a healthy diet. To determine the fat content of a packaged food, Ms. Westmoreland said, multiply the number of grams of fat (as listed on the label) by nine. If this amount is more than 30 percent of the total calories per serving (also listed on the label), the food contains too much fat.

"Calories in fat are more concentrated than in other nutrients," Ms. Westmoreland said.

However, she said, "it takes fat to lose fat," and not all dietary fats are unnecessary — some are essential to good health. These "good" fats include polyunsaturated fats such as corn oil, soybean oil, safflower oil, sunflower oil and canola oil, and monounsaturated fats such as olive oil and peanut oil. Avocados are another source of healthy dietary fats.

But eliminating unnecessary fat is only part of the story. Maintaining a low-cholesterol diet is an important part of preventing heart disease. However, consumers should be aware that some low-cholesterol fats, such as coconut oil and palm oil, are saturated fats, and should be avoided because they can raise the body's cholesterol level.

"It's so important that if something says (on the label) 'no cholesterol,' don't stop there," Ms. Westmoreland said. "If it says 'partially hydrogenated' or 'hydrogenated,' you don't want it. Anything that is hydrogenated is solid at room temperature and is saturated fat."

But ingredients listed on food labels can read like a chemistry textbook. Some consumers find themselves just as concerned about food contents after reading labels as they were before.

MS. WESTMORELAND provided some general definitions for some common ingredients:

- Ingredients that end in 'ose' are some form of sugar, such as dextrose and fructose.
- Soy lechithin, modified food starch, guar and locust bean gum and xanthan gum are all emulsifiers which prevent the food from separating out.
- Potassium sorbate, mono- and diglycerides, propylene glycol monoesters and sodium hexametaphosphate are different preservatives.
- Annatto is a yellowish-red coloring agent.

"The best rule of thumb is, if the box has words you've never seen before, you're better off not buying it," Ms. Westmoreland said.

Have you heard...?

"Her blood is purple. Her heart is gold. One in a million." So went the tributes to educator Patty Smith, who was recently honored at Midland High School, where she has completed 10 years of service. Formerly the school's assistant principal of instructional services, she is now Social Studies Coordinator for MISD with offices in the Administration Building.

Sponsored by the MHS faculty, the Patty Smith Night also brought accolades and surprises from other school-related organizations.

The evening was patterned after the school's Catoico celebration, and Patty was escorted to the stage of the auditorium by Principal Jimmie Kelly and the three vice principals, Gene Isaacs, Rudy Carrasco and Kelly Jacobson. She was seated beneath a purple and gold balloon-covered arch, and Smiley Faces, which have become her trademark, were used to adorn the curtain.

One of the evening's highlights occurred when the MHS Ex-Students Association made her an honorary graduate of the school. She also was the recipient of gifts, plaques, original poems and a song composed especially for the occasion.

Master of ceremonies was Patty's longtime friend and former MHS choir director, Don McCartney.

A reception followed the program. Lavender cloths with balloon bouquets and Smiley Faces decorated the tables.

Patty later responded, "This evening and the expressed affection have filled me with a lifetime glow ... I consider this surprise my finest personal and professional accomplishment in 28 years."

A BEAUTIFULLY APPOINTED tea was given here last weekend to honor Michelle McFaddden, bride-elect of Scott Johnson. Both reside in Dallas.

The party was held in the home of Vina (Mrs. John) Rahlfs, with Jo (Mrs. Frank) Weber, Doris (Mrs. David) Watson, Sonja (Mrs. Karl) Painter and Cathy (Mrs. Lars) Erlandson as co-hostesses.

Special guests included the honoree's mother, Mary (Mrs. Ron) McFadden; her sisters, Melissa McFadden of Dallas and Melody McFadden of Austin, and Scott's mother, Margaret Anne (Mrs. Bill) Johnson of Dallas.

Miclelle also was honored recently with a kitchen display shower at the home of Betty (Mrs. Bill) Sumner.

Her chosen kitchen colors of peach and blue were featured in the decorations.

The co-hostesses with Betty were Sue (Mrs. Jim) Brusenhan, Cecelia (Mrs. Bob) Davis, Nieta (Mrs. Rod) Stephenson, Nell (Mrs. Bobby) Ellis, Clara (Mrs. Paul) King and Sandra (Mrs. Leroy) Wegner.

The wedding is planned for Nov. 18 in Midland's First United Methodist Church.

RUTH AND AUGUST WENCK are dividing their time between their new home at 2904 Cherry Creek Circle in Bryan, Texas, and their Midland home of 36 years. They are making some improvements on the Bryan house and expect to complete their move by the first of the year.

The couple were honored recently with a farewell reception at the Midland Senior Center. More than a hundred of their friends attended.

LOTTIE AND ED EUBANKS have returned from another interesting trip, this time an Alaskan cruise.

The pair flew to Seattle and then went on the Vancouver, where they boarded the Sagaford for a two-week cruise.

In addition to the now famous Valdez, ports of call included a number of fishing and mining towns, including Ketchikan, Juneau, Skagway, Sitka, Seward and Homer. They did not see any remains of the oil spill at Valdez, although pieces of equipment used in the cleanup efforts were still in evidence.

Their cruise ended at Anchorage, where they saw the sights before renting a car to drive to Mount McKinley. Returning to Seattle before heading home, they visited Mount Rainier, among other attractions of the area.

The spectacular scenery and the indescribable sights, including bears with their cubs, other wildlife and massive glaciers, will long be remembered by the couple as part of their unique vacation.

Studies find 20 percent adults too fat

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States may be land of the free and home of the brave, but it's also the country of the fat.

A researcher on obesity says that 33 million adult Americans, about 20 percent of the adult population, are significantly obese, giving the United States one of the highest populations of fat people in the world.

"It's clear that significant obesity appears to be more prevalent in the United States than elsewhere," Dr. George A. Bray, a professor of medicine at Louisiana State University, said Thursday.

"The greater the excess weight, the greater excess risk" of resulting health problems, he said.

Obesity is a public health concern only in Europe and North America, and the percentage of significantly overweight people is highest by far in the United States, Bray said.

The scientist said researchers don't know why there is a higher percentage of fat adults in America than elsewhere, though he suggests it could be because of the highly mechanized U.S. civilization that makes it easy to avoid walking or climbing stairs.

Bray says statistics suggest Americans are eating a better diet now — avoiding meats and other foods high in animal fats — but the number of significantly obese people "continues to creep up."

The effects of excess weight is showing up in health studies that show the obese are suffering more heart attacks, more high blood pressure, more diabetes and more gall bladder disease.

Being extremely fat, Bray said, is only slightly less of a health risk than smoking two packs of cigarettes a day.

Bray, president-elect of the North American Association for the Study of Obesity, said doctors consider significant obesity to be a weight about 30 percent above what would be ideal for a person's age, stature and gender.

Thus, a man whose ideal weight is 170 to 180 pounds becomes "significantly" obese if his weight balloons to 221 to 234. At that point, he becomes almost twice as likely to develop a life-shortening ailment, Bray said.

But numbers on the weight scale don't tell the full story.

"It's not just how fat you are, but where the fat is located, that will determine your risk," said Bray.

Researchers now believe that fat located within the abdominal cavity poses a greater health hazard than does fat located in the extremities or just under the skin.

"The reasons for this are not clear," said Bray. "The most widely accepted explanation is that when you've got more fat in your belly around your organs, it is that fat that is released when you eat fatty acids."

Because of its proximity, such fat is thought to go directly to the liver, where "it sets up risk factors that we associate with heart disease, diabetes, hypertension and gall bladder disease," he said.

Adult men, said Bray, seem most at risk of developing this unhealthy deposit of abdominal fat. Age also plays a factor, he added, because few children or young adults develop this type of fat deposit.

"For women, the visceral fat doesn't seem to increase until there is a lot of total fat," he said. "Women are protected against visceral fat to some degree, for some reason."

Smoking affects visceral, or central, fat, said Bray, and stopping smoking tends to cause this fat to disappear, even though the former smoker may gain fat in other areas. Again, why this is so is not well understood, but he said, "this is another good reason to stop smoking."

Another study elsewhere shows that American youth are becoming more muscular, but also more sedentary — a lifestyle that has made them fatter and triggered an "ominous" loss of cardiovascular health.

A report by the Chrysler Fund-Amateur Athletic Union testing program, which surveyed 12,000 youths from 1980 to 1989, said there is no perceptible increase in height for the various age groups studied and that weight gains can be attributed to poorer diet and physical habits.

Foods' ingredients labels sometimes are confusing

Associated Press

Packaged-food labels are there to be a help, aren't they? But sometimes they're more mystifying than useful.

Here's a beginner's guide to some of the terms.

Food labeling is mandatory only if food has been fortified, meaning that extra vitamins or minerals have been added, or if it is promoted as nutritionally beneficial. The label must display the name of the product, the contents or weight and the name and location of the company.

On most packaged foods, ingredients that make up 5 percent or more of the product's weight must be listed in descending order by weight. This means the main ingredient is first and the least substantial last.

The ingredient section usually states whether a food is artificially flavored or colored. To alert people who are allergic to colored dyes, it will say whether the product contains Yellow No. 5 or No. 6. For lab-concocted foods that have less-nutritious elements than their natural counterparts, rules require the label to read "imitation," as in "imitation" margarine.

Remember, the term "organic" doesn't necessarily mean food that was grown without synthetic pesticides, fungicides, preservatives or fertilizers, says Changing Times magazine. State rules vary widely and there is no federal rule restricting the use of "organic."

■ The Nutrients: When a company makes a nutritional claim or adds any nutrients, it must put nutritional information on the label. It must list the amount of protein, carbohydrates, fat, calories and sodium in a given serving, and at least five essential vitamins and two minerals. The protein, vitamins and minerals appear as percentages of the U.S. recommended daily allowance (U.S. RDA). Protein, fat, carbohydrates and sodium are listed as grams or milligrams in a portion.

■ Serving Size: Nutrition labeling also requires the maker to list the serving size, the unit on which calories and percentage of nutrients are based. Here confusion abounds.

MANY MANUFACTURERS choose common sense allowances. Others list exaggerated or stingy portions, depending on what claim they want to highlight. Take Diet Coke, which contains less than one calorie per serving. The serving size is six ounces, which is half a can, but few people drink half a can.

Food labels may or may not reveal the following about package contents:

■ Calories: Products with nutrition labeling must list calories per serving. But makers can try to grab your attention with descriptive words in bigger print — if they stick to the rules. Buy a "low-calorie" food and you get one that contains fewer than 40 calories per serving.

"Reduced calorie" is supposed to be a third fewer calories than the regular brand. "Salt free" can mean a product with up to 5 mg of sodium per serving. "Low sodium" means 140 mg or fewer. If the label says "unsalted," it must be a food normally salted that has been processed without it.

■ Cholesterol: This occurs only in animal products, such as meat, poultry, butter and eggs, not in grain or vegetable products. But it's actually the saturated fat in animal products — not the cholesterol — that's most closely linked to rises in your blood-cholesterol level.

THERE ARE currently no established standards for cholesterol labeling. "Cholesterol-free" can mean what it says, but the same product can be high in saturated fat.

■ Fat: The rule of thumb is that you should consume no more than 30 percent of your daily calories in fat. But labels give fat in grams — not exactly a handy guide. Some so-called light foods come up heavy on the fat when you count the unlabeled calories-in-fat percentage.

A typical gram of fat contains nine calories. Say a product contains 100 calories and 5 grams of fat per serving. Multiply 5 by 9 and you get 45. Divide this by 100 and you get 45 percent — the percentage of calories of fat in this food. The only easy way to figure it out is to take a calculator along when you shop, advises Changing Times magazine.

The thing to check if you are on a strict low-fat diet: Does the label clearly show that the vegetable oils contained in the food are polyunsaturates such as soybean and corn oil? You may be misled because tropical oils can hitch a ride on the vegetable heading if the wording says something like, "may contain one or more of the following: vegetable oils, and-or coconut and palm oils." This is particularly common in cookies and crackers.

To make your job harder still, some products containing vegetable oils are "partially hydrogenated," which makes them more saturated and hence less healthful. Check the ingredient list.

■ "Light" Claims: Manufacturers can add the words "light" or "lite" in big letters. You have to read the small print to discover whether the food is light in color, calories or sodium, or simply light in texture.

Children's help makes lunch-box meals easier to swallow

By NATALIE HAUGHTON
New York Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — "Yuk." "What a waste." "I won't eat that." These are the comments my children make about school lunches in which they have no input.

The best way to solve the lunch-box dilemma and to avoid having the food end up in the garbage can or in a trade is to let the kids make their own selections at the supermarket — within your guidelines, of course — and let them be involved in packing their lunches.

Often I'm inclined to tuck in little extras like yogurt or a piece of fruit when my children aren't watching — and guess what: They come back home in the lunch box or bag at the end of a long day. "I didn't ask for that," my 10-year-old son explains.

School lunches can be a constant source of frustration for the parents who pack them. We want to offer variety, as well as nutrition, but the children just aren't interested.

However, there are ways to make a school lunch festive and fun, according to a Los Angeles mother of two, Annie Gilbar, co-author of the recently released "The Penny Whistle Lunch Box Book," (Weidenfeld & Nicolson; $9.95). She wrote the book with Meredith Brokaw, mother of three girls ranging in age from 19 to 23 and wife of "NBC Nightly News" anchor Tom Brokaw.

The lunch-box-shaped book contains 100 fun-filled recipes ranging from breads and muffins to fruits, vegetables and treats, along with tips and clever anecdotes shared by family and friends. The book is charming and has many good hints that don't require lots of time and effort.

Some 40 of the recipes appeared in Gilbar's first effort (with the same cut-out shape), "The Lunch Box Book," which was released in 1984 but went out of print a couple of years later.

GILBAR'S SCHOOL-LUNCH philosophy is simple: Don't make yourself crazy, but make lunches fun, funny and unusual. "We're all too busy to make lunch into a real serious thing," she said.

Do your best when it comes to nutrition, she advises parents, but don't worry about a little sugar and salt here and there. Moderation is the key. The bottom line, Gilbar says, is that "lunch has to be attractive and tasty."

To make lunches fun, Gilbar suggests quick ideas like cutting sandwiches and other foods into the shapes of animals or toys using cookie cutters, forming foods in different and unusual shapes (rolling up ham, making a lollipop shape out of turkey and a bread stick, etc.). She also allows one "junk food" item in the lunch bag once a week.

Another of her tactics is including personalized messages or notes or a funny joke or riddle in the lunch — to make the child smile or remind him of mom or dad. Gilbar's messages have ranged from "I love you," to "Good luck with your exam," to "Don't even think of trading this lunch."

If your child carries lunch in paper bags, you can design your own by drawing silly cartoons on them or stamping them with rubber stamps (you can also stamp a napkin or your notes).

Stickers in all sizes and shapes are a clever way to seal plastic sandwich bags, or for bag designs as well.

ALL OF these things are quick and easy to do, contends Gilbar, who says she got tuned into the creative and fun lunch-box routine five years ago, after her husband cut a mundane tuna sandwich for their daughter into the letter "L," the first letter of her name.

"No matter what you pack, if it is cut into shapes or is fun, chances increase that children will eat it," she said.

If your lunch-packing concerns are on the nutrition side, the U.S. Department of Agriculture can help. As part of its new campaign called "Eating Right ... The Dietary Guidelines Way," the USDA has developed four new booklets, including one titled "Making Bag Lunches, Snacks and Desserts Using the Dietary Guidelines," devoted to snacks and school lunches.

To liven up lunches nutritionally, the booklet suggests trying different kinds of whole-grain bread, choosing a bread to suit your appetite, using water-packed instead of oil-packed tuna for less fat, using lean roast meats, poultry and fish for less sodium than cured or processed meats, using natural cheeses (swiss or cheddar) rather than processed for less sodium and going easy on condiments that are high in sodium (ketchup, mustard, pickles, olives and relish) or fat (mayonnaise, butter, cream cheese).

For a safe lunch, remember to carry your already-chilled foods in an insulated lunch box, bag or cooler. Or freeze your sandwich (not those with mayonnaise) the night before.

The booklet is loaded with practical tips and includes a sandwich-ingredient guide, information on hot and cold lunches, desserts and choosing lunch from a vending machine.

To order a copy of the USDA's "Making Bag Lunches, Snacks and Desserts Using the Dietary Guidelines," send a check or money order for $2.50 (payable to Superintendent of Documents) to Consumer Information Center, Department 70, Pueblo, Colo. 81009. Be sure to specify Item No. 173-V on your envelope.

Here are a few recipes from Gilbar and Brokaw's book and from the USDA booklet:

QUICK TUNA AND SPROUTS SANDWICH

A quick and easy sandwich, yet it's low in fat and sodium.
2 tablespoons salad dressing (mayonnaise-type)
¼ teaspoon celery seed
¼ teaspoon onion powder
1 can (6½ ounces) tuna, water-packed, unsalted, undrained
½ cup alfalfa sprouts
4 whole-wheat hamburger rolls

Mix salad dressing and seasonings in a bowl. Add tuna and sprouts; mix well.

Use about ¼ of filling per sandwich. Makes 4 servings, 1 sandwich each.

From "Making Bag Lunches, Snacks & Deserts," USDA Home & Garden Bulletin No. 232-9.

MEXICAN BEAN SANDWICH

Try combining beans with raw vegetables and seasonings to make a tasty sandwich that's high in fiber and low in fat.
1 teaspoon vinegar
¼ to 1 teaspoon chili powder
⅛ teaspoon onion powder
2 teaspoons salad dressing (mayonnaise-type)
¾ cup pinto or kidney beans, cooked, drained, unsalted, chopped (see Note)
3 tablespoons celery, chopped
2 flour tortillas
4 slices tomato
2 leaves lettuce

Mix vinegar, chili powder and onion powder with salad dressing in bowl. Add beans and celery; mix well.

Soften tortillas in heated skillet about 1½ minutes. Turn, if necessary.

Place ½ of bean filling onto each tortilla near one edge. Top with lettuce and tomato. Roll up. Makes 2 servings, 1 sandwich each.

NOTE: Canned, drained pinto or red kidney beans may be used in place of cooked beans.

From "Making Bag Lunches, Snacks & Desserts," USDA Home & Garden Bulletin No. 232-9.

OATMEAL APPLESAUCE COOKIES

Applesauce adds moistness to this low-calorie, low-fat, and low-sodium version of oatmeal cookies.
1 cup all-purpose flour
1 teaspoon baking powder
1 teaspoon ground allspice
¼ teaspoon salt
½ cup margarine
½ cup sugar
2 egg whites
2 cups quick cooking rolled oats
1 cup unsweetened applesauce
½ cup raisins, chopped

Mix flour, baking powder, allspice and salt. Beat margarine and sugar until creamy. Add egg whites, beat well. Add dry ingredients. Stir in oats, applesauce and raisins. Mix well.

Drop by level tablespoonfuls onto greased baking sheets. Bake in preheated 375-degree oven 11 minutes or until edges are lightly browned. Cool on rack. Makes about 5 dozen cookies.

From "Making Bag Lunches, Snacks & Desserts," USDA Home & Garden Bulletin No. 232-9.

JENNY'S PEANUT BUTTER NOODLES

This is a salad Jennifer Brokaw chose as her favorite lunchtime salad.
1 package (8 ounces) uncooked linguine
2 to 3 tablespoons peanut butter
½ teaspoon salt
2 tablespoons soy sauce
1 tablespoon Oriental sesame oil
1 teaspoon sugar
½ teaspoon white wine vinegar
2 garlic cloves, crushed
1 teaspoon chopped grated onion

Cook linguine according to directions on package. Drain.

Meanwhile, in a large bowl, mix all remaining ingredients together.

Add linguine to sauce and toss to coat well. When ready to pack the lunch, put a portion in a small container and cover.

From "The Penny Whistle Lunch Box Book," by Meredith Brokaw & Annie Gilbar (Weidenfeld & Nicolson).

CHICKEN FAJITA PITA

The Gilbar kids live for the lunch boxes holding this version of a Mexican taco.
1 boneless and skinless chicken breast, broiled or quick fried
Pinch bottled fajita seasoning
1 pita bread
Shredded lettuce
2 slices tomato
2 slices Cheddar cheese

You can use leftover chicken breast cut into strips, or, if you have the time in the morning, saute a few strips of fresh chicken with fajita seasoning. Slice 1 side of pita bread to form a pocket. Fill bread with chicken and all remaining ingredients. Makes 1 serving.

From "The Penny Whistle Lunch Box Book," by Meredith Brokaw & Annie Gilbar (Weidenfeld & Nicolson).

ALL-SEASON PUMPKIN BREAD
2 cups all-purpose flour
1 cup sugar
1 cup canned pumpkin puree
3 eggs
⅓ cup vegetable oil
2 teaspoons ground cinnamon
½ teaspoon ground cloves
Pinch ground nutmeg
½ cup raisins

In a large bowl, combine all ingredients, stirring with a wooden spoon until well mixed.

Pour batter into buttered 9x5-inch pan. Bake in preheated 350-degree oven 40 to 50 minutes or until a toothpick inserted in center comes out clean.

Cool bread on a rack before removing from pan. Wrap in a plastic bag and store at room temperature or in refrigerator.

When you are ready to make lunch, cut off as many slices as your child will eat. If you are serving a plain slice, cut a piece about 1 inch thick and wrap. It is very good plain, even better spread with cream cheese or jam. Cut thinner slices if you are making a sandwich. Makes 1 loaf.

Poached fish teamed with vegetables for low-fat dish

By NANCY BYAL
Associated Press

Poaching is a low-fat cooking method because the food cooks in simmering liquid — water, broth, wine, milk, fruit or tomato juice, or a combination of liquids — with no fat added. It's especially good for delicate-textured fish because there's no turning or stirring.

For best results, follow these poaching pointers: (1) Use a skillet large enough to hold the fish in a single layer; (2) Use enough liquid to come halfway to the top of the fish; (3) Bring the liquid to boiling before adding fish; (4) Don't overcook fish. Allow 4 to 6 minutes per half-inch of thickness; (5) Test for doneness by poking the tines of a fork into the fish at a 45-degree angle. Gently twist the fork and pull up some of the flesh; it should look opaque and separate into flakes.

VEGETABLE-TOPPED HALIBUT
1 small yellow summer squash
1 small zucchini
1 cup sliced fresh mushrooms
½ of a small onion, sliced and separated into rings
¼ cup water
1 clove garlic, minced
¼ teaspoon finely shredded lemon peel
⅛ teaspoon salt
6 halibut steaks, cut 1-inch thick (about 2 pounds)
1 14½-ounce can tomatoes
1 tablespoon cornstarch
¼ teaspoon dried basil, crushed
Dash bottled hot pepper sauce

For sauce, halve yellow squash and zucchini lengthwise; cut into ¼-inch-thick slices. In a medium saucepan combine squash, zucchini, mushrooms, onion, water, garlic, lemon peel and salt. Bring to boiling; reduce heat. Cover and simmer 4 minutes or until nearly tender. Drain and return vegetables to saucepan.

Meanwhile, in a large skillet bring 1 cup water to boiling; add halibut steaks. Add more water to half-cover fish, if needed. Return to boiling. Reduce heat; simmer, covered, just until fish flakes easily with a fork. Allow 4 to 6 minutes for each ½-inch thickness of fish.

To finish sauce, cut up tomatoes. Stir together undrained tomatoes, cornstarch, basil and pepper sauce. Add to vegetable mixture. Cook and stir gently over medium heat until thickened and bubbly. Cook and stir gently for 2 minutes more. To serve, spoon sauce over poached fish.

Breakfast provides important nutrition for adults, children

NEW YORK (AP) — Before sending the kids off to school, or rushing off to work yourself, take time for breakfast. Breakfast fuels your system and gets you off to a good start.

According to psychologist Keith Conners of George Washington University Medical School, kids really are less alert when they skip breakfast.

Sectioned oranges or grapefruit in a recloseable plastic bag, muffins or a container of yogurt are some of the foods that travel well if you are rushing for the bus or the car pool.

If you have time for breakfast at home, Microwave Breakfast Pudding is a quick and delicious breakfast. Another suggestion: French toast made with English muffins, flavored with zesty orange rind and then topped with ripe strawberries and orange sections.

MICROWAVE BREAKFAST PUDDING
3 eggs, lightly beaten
2 cups milk or half and half
¼ cup firmly packed brown sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla
¼ teaspoon salt
3 raisin English muffins, split

Butter six 6-ounce custard cups. In medium bowl combine eggs, milk, sugar, vanilla and salt.

Tear or cut one muffin half into ½-inch cubes; arrange in prepared custard cup. Repeat with remaining halves. Pour about ½ cup egg mixture over muffin pieces in each cup. Let stand 10 minutes.

Microwave on medium (50 percent power) 15 to 17 minutes or until custard is almost firm in the center. Rearrange cups twice during cooking time to allow for even cooking. Cool before serving. Makes 6 servings.

FRENCH TOAST MUFFINS
1 cup strawberries, sliced
1 orange, peeled and sectioned
2 tablespoons light corn syrup
1 egg, slightly beaten
¼ cup milk
1 tablespoon sugar
1 teaspoon grated orange peel
2 honey wheat English muffins, split
2 tablespoons margarine

In small bowl combine strawberries, orange sections and corn syrup. In 9-inch pie plate combine egg, milk, sugar and orange peel. Place muffins, cut-side down, in milk mixture; soak 5 minutes. Turn to coat other side.

In a large skillet melt margarine over medium heat. Fry muffins, cut-side down, until lightly browned. Turn and brown other side. Spoon fruit over muffins. Makes 2 servings.

Book helps women find themselves

By SUE REILLY
New York Times News Service

If it ain't broke, don't fix it.

If it is, you might want to pick up "Venus Unbound," which proposes to explain what is wrong with women and how to put it right.

The book, written in an accessible style by Dina von Zweck, 55, and psychologist Jaye Smith, 35, starts with the question: What do women really want?

And the answer is, everything and more.

Especially femininity, which the authors say is a necessity.

Said Smith, a New York University-educated therapist who gives career and fulfillment seminars for major corporations like Manufacturers Hanover Trust, "A lot of women are going around in a lot of pain because a portion of their personality is being smothered, surpressed — sometimes a very large portion."

Smith said there are certain aspects that are part of all women's psychic makeup, and each woman has each type to a lesser or greater degree.

She identifies them by name as:

- Eva: the seductress, enchantress, the alluring woman well-connected to her sexuality and her sensual side.
- Kendra: the goal setter, well-focused on things that need to get done.
- Nixa: the free spirit, creative, playful, with incredible luck. (The one who wins the lottery.)
- Belinda: the motherly nurturer who provides and protects.
- Diana: the independent, the loner who loves solitude.
- Erika: the wise woman with well-developed intuition, the one everyone comes to with their problems, very grounded.

The co-author von Zweck, said women are all of these people, although, in most cases, there is one very dominant personality.

Smith said the majority of women in today's society have lost a strong and important connection to their femininity, that femininity is the integration of all these personality types and the ability to tap into them.

She said femininity is not a product of our consumer culture, like a new perfume or dress, nor is it an attitude or state of mind.

von Zweck said femininity is a process, and being feminine means different things at different times.

Smith said her book is specific in explaining how to fix it yourself.

"I brought 10 years of experience of working with women to the book," Smith said in a phone interview. "My practice is open to men and women ... but women seem to be more open to self-exploration. They have a willingness to change and to try to understand why their life takes the course it does."

Smith said she is a great fan of women, in addition to being one herself, because women seem to expect a lot more of themselves than men do.

"They want to be everything to everyone — perfect wife, perfect mother, perfect professional, perfect homemaker. They forget to be aware of their responsibilities to themselves," she said.

By the time women get around to attending a career seminar or seeing a psychologist or buying a book like "Venus Unbound," Smith said they know there is something missing in their lives. "They just don't know it is a part of themselves."

Von Zweck — author of previous books that include "How to Organize Everything" and "A Perfect Mirror" — first came to Smith four years ago seeking counseling about the missing pieces of her life.

The book (Simon & Schuster; $9.95) grew out of the patient-counselor relationship and flowed into a creative partnership.

Smith is heavily into partnerships these days, having celebrated the completion of her book by getting married to New York filmmaker Michael Hunold.

One of the many ideas in the book is called "Messages speak to your condition."

It says, "When Quakers say, 'It speaks to my condition,' they mean that whatever has been said hits home. It rings a bell, it strikes the right note. Something within can respond deeply to a message that corresponds exactly to an issue you recently have been thinking about or are working on."

Although the verdict of the psychological community has yet to come in about the validity and usefulness of this book, there is a certainty that it will strike the right note, and speak to the condition of many women.

Unexciting love life blamed on so-called sexperts

Copley News Service

If your love life is unexciting, blame it on listening to so-called sexperts.

Because they don't know a thing about sex.

According to Detroit psychologist Paul Pearshall, the best way to put pizzazz into lovemaking is to disregard what sexperts say.

Based on a 15-year study, the author of "Super Marital Sex" says sexually happy couples create their own lovemaking style.

For example, satin sheets should be discarded. Water beds should be discarded. Even pictures of children and loved ones should be left out of the bedroom.

Pearshall says happy couples say their bedrooms are private domains in which TV, magazine and advertising stereotypes of sex are forbidden.

Close to home: Marrying young

By MARY CANTWELL
New York Times News Service

The restaurant we had planned on — cheap, decent food and Ella Fitzgerald on the stereo — was closed for August. So we wandered along a street near the waterfront. "Here," my friend said, stopping. "Here's the place I ate in last week. I hope we're too early for the jukebox."

We weren't.

Sound was cannonading off the walls of a long, narrow room. The jukebox was pounding, drowning out the voices of the newsmakers being interviewed on the television set mounted over the bar.

So we sat at a little Formica table and studied the menu and the specials chalked on the blackboard and the rest of the customers. They were somewhere over 21 and shy of 30, and they were knocking back drinks as colorful as Christmas wrappings.

The customers were louder than the jukebox, but it couldn't be said they were trying to talk over it. They were just as loud during the pauses between records.

"Was I ever that noisy?" I asked myself. "No, you weren't," the other Mary, to whom I have addressed so many questions, answered. "When you were their age, you were married."

Indeed I was, as were most of my college friends. The summer after graduation, in fact, I was forever getting lost on the back roads of Westchester County en route to wedding after wedding.

A few months later, I was married myself, and half the guests were the people with whom I had been playing bridge in my pajamas and testing acne creams less than a year before.

Ours was, it occurred to me during a 1984 interview with John Updike, the Domestic Generation; and he is our chronicler.

"I had no doubt of wanting to get married, and I did get married quite young, and there seemed to be no lack of like-minded people of both sexes," Updike said. "So anyway, we all woke up one day and found ourselves married with three children."

Not all of us married right away, of course.

I remember a few years of going to parties where the drinks were served from clever receptacles and the hors d'oeuvres were potato chips tumbled into Pyrex bowls and the singles buzzed the room.

I remember, too, how I never got to know the young unmarried women in my first office because while they were drinking their lunch in what passed for the neighborhood pub, I was in Bloomingdale's, looking for sheets.

I never drank much anyway, but had I had the urge, it would have been checked by the constant search for sheets, can openers, pots and pans.

A few months after my wedding, I rented a sewing machine and turned out a badly seamed pair of curtains for our living room's one window. I have never sewed since — I cannot do it at all — but it struck me as the thing to do at the time.

That same year, on a day when my husband was very long in the shower, I peeked around the curtain and found him washing his socks under the spray. I laughed, in a maternal mode, and said, "I'll do those now."

I, who had gone barelegged through four winters in New London, Conn., rather than wash my socks. In truth, I doubt I washed his either.

But marriage, for a while anyway, had softened my voice.

I could not imagine living alone.

Like all those brides for whose sake I got lost on the back roads of Westchester, I had gone from my parents' home to a dormitory full of Bermuda-shorted girls to an apartment shared with a young man in a J. Press suit, with never a solitary moment in between.

Leaving a dinner given by a man and woman who were not married, I paused to study the doorbell over which their two names were written — defiantly, it seemed to me — and marveled at her courage.

"Marrying young," another friend said, "is like getting to a sale on the first day."

"But was it fun?" someone asked recently, unable to imagine being immured, as she saw it, in one's early 20s.

I looked back. To myself and my husband and acquaintances run into at a cocktail party, little men and women all of us, sitting in an Italian restaurant and soberly sipping Chianti, the only wine we knew.

To a young woman polishing the silver candlesticks that were a wedding present, and putting them out proudly on an iron-legged table from the Door Store.

To that same young woman walking down a nighttime street with a bag of groceries she is not sure how to cook, going home to a young man who, as unskilled at carpentry as she is at sewing, is trying to construct a bookcase.

She is tired — she has been at work all day — and so is he.

No matter. Both are trying to build a nest as secure and stable as the nests out of which they came. In the end, they lacked the skill and the energy, but, yes, it was fun.

Anniversaries

Couple celebrates golden anniversary

Gerald and Beatrice Hyde will celebrate their golden wedding anniversary today with a reception in the parlor of Crestview Baptist Church. Hosts are their children, Jerry and Roberta Hyde of Midland and Guy Hyde of Bellevue, Wash.

The couple was married Sept. 24, 1939 in San Angelo. They have lived in Midland throughout their marriage.

Hyde has worked for various area ranches, and for Pylant Sign Co. for 32 years until he retired. His wife worked at Grammer-Murphey Department Store for 20 years. Both are members of Crestview Baptist Church.

Walkers celebrate silver anniversary

Earl and Patsy Walker of Midland celebrated their 25th wedding anniversary this week.

Walker and the former Patsy Ruth Cantrell were married Sept. 21, 1964 in Midland at the home of the bride's parents.

They have two children, Kimberly Walker, who is a senior at Baptist Bible College in Springfield, Mo., and Gregory Walker of Midland.

After a brief stay in Dallas, the couple returned to Midland shortly after their marriage. Walker has been associated with FWA Drilling and Wilson Energy, and is currently employed with TMBER/Sharp Drilling Inc. His wife is office manager with Jack Sherman Chevrolet Inc. Both are members of Kelview Heights Baptist Church, where Mrs. Walker was one of the first members.

West German sociologist developes color code for female attributes

Copley News Service

Gene Wilder knew what he was doing when he went after the "Woman in Red."

That's because women who wear red tend to be passionate, flirtatious and know how to have a good time.

At least that's the opinion of West German sociologist Eva Heller. She has developed what she calls a color code for female attributes. This code lists that certain colors are representative of certain personality traits of the person who likes, or is wearing, that color.

For instance, women who love yellow tend to be open-minded and very intelligent. Women wearing green are caring and anxious to help others. Ladies in blue usually are tender and trusting, but ladies in black are headstrong.

Finally, if you're looking for the perfect homebody, go for the woman in brown.

Lifestyle policies

Policies for publication of announcements in the Lifestyle sections of the Reporter-Telegram are:

Information for Sunday pages must be in our office by 5 p.m. the preceding Tuesday. For publication in a weekday paper, we must receive the information by noon two days before the information is to be published. For example, an item for Wednesday's paper must be received by noon Monday.

Engagement announcements must appear at least two weeks before the wedding date. Wedding announcements must appear within one month of the event. Anniversary announcements — 25th or higher — must be published within one month of the anniversary date.

Announcements of pageant winners will only be published for teenage pageants and older. Photographes will be published only for winners, not runner-ups. These announcements are published Tuesdays. Deadline is 5 p.m. Friday.

All articles must be submitted in writing. Forms for weddings, engagements and anniversaries, only published Sundays, are available in the Lifestyle office. All materials must include the signature and telephone number of the person submitting them.

We cannot mail forms to persons in Midland. Pictures must be picked up in the Lifestyle office within one month after publication. To have a photo returned by mail, include a self-addressed, stamped envelope. Unclaimed photos are discarded after a month.

Photographs may be submitted with wedding and engagement announcements, and anniversary announcements of 50 years or more, but are not required. A portrait of the bride-elect or of the future bride and bridegroom together may be submitted with engagement announcements. Portraits of the bride only or of the wedding couple may be submitted with wedding announcements. A different photo must be submitted for the engagement and wedding announcements.

Photos should be vertical, black and white, glossy finish, studio portraits. Studio color pictures may be submitted, but quality reproduction cannot be assured. Snapshots generally are not acceptable and Polaroid shots are not accepted. The MRT reserves the right to deny publication of any photo due to quality or content.

There is no charge for publication of photographs and stories.

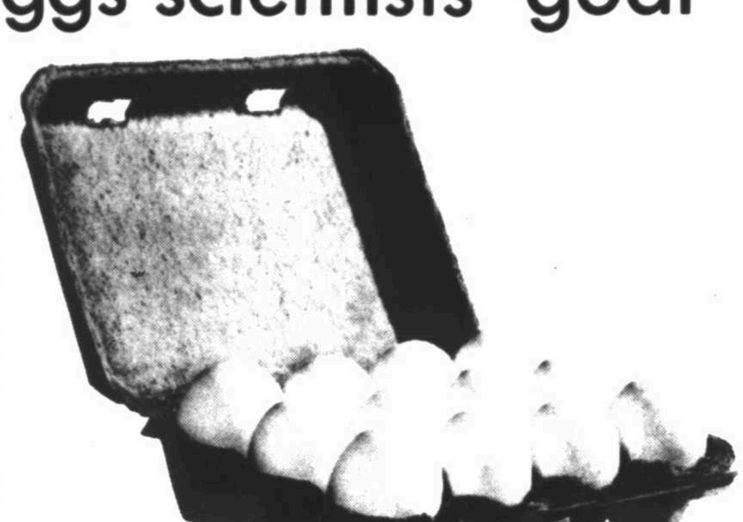
Lower-cholesterol eggs scientists' goal

By DENSIE WEBB
New York Times News Service



Though it's hard to recall now, eggs once had high status. They were thought of as a wholesome, natural and nutritious food. But no more.

That belief has been shattered by the national obsession with cholesterol. Eggs — egg yolks to be exact — are one of the most concentrated sources of cholesterol in the American diet.

Egg lovers who have wanted to eat less cholesterol but not eliminate eggs have generally turned to packaged egg substitutes to replace whole eggs in cooking. But the taste of several of these is, shall we say, different from real eggs.

Enter real eggs advertised as having "25 percent less cholesterol." The eggs, produced by R.W. Sauder Inc. of Lititz, Pa. and Rosemary Farm of Santa Maria, Calif., began appearing in supermarkets last year.

They were said to have 25 percent less than the 274 milligrams of cholesterol that then constituted the U.S. Department of Agriculture standard. But it was soon discovered that regular eggs actually had less cholesterol than the government standard.

"The 274 number was based on old data collected from the 1950s through the 1970s," said Cathy McCharen, the director of the Egg Nutrition Center in Washington, which represents the egg industry.

NEW ANALYSES by the USDA found that regular eggs had 213 milligrams of cholesterol. The lower number prompted the American Heart Association to adjust its longstanding recommendation that people eat no more than three egg yolks per week to no more than four. The association recommends total cholesterol consumption not exceed 300 milligrams a day.

Meanwhile producers have been working to develop eggs that will be significantly lower in cholesterol than even the new standard demands.

Michael Foods Inc. of Minneapolis has developed a technique to remove 70 to 90 percent of the cholesterol from egg yolks. The company said it could not predict when the product would be on the market.

Full Spectrum Farms of Lancaster, Pa., is currently producing eggs that the company said contain only 169 milligrams of cholesterol each, 20 percent less than regular eggs.

But Jeff Cramer, a chemist at the bureau of food and chemistry in the Pennsylvania department of agriculture who is testing the cholesterol claims of Full Spectrum Farms eggs, said the average cholesterol content is closer to 182 milligrams each.

The Full Spectrum eggs are produced by providing the chickens with special feed, controlled lighting and improved air circulation and quality, said John Albright, the president of Environmental Systems Inc., which owns Full Spectrum Farms.

They cost 25 to 30 cents more per dozen than regular eggs and are being distributed in northern New Jersey, Maryland, Delaware, Pennsylvania and Ohio. For consumers unable to buy Full Spectrum eggs, the best bet in the meantime may be egg substitutes, which, with a few exceptions, are cholesterol-free. Though each is advertised as the next best thing to eggs, they vary in taste, texture and color.

POWDERED EGG substitutes are the least expensive and the quickest to mix and prepare, but they also tend to be the least appetizing in appearance and taste.

Liquid substitutes, which generally cost about three and a half times as much per serving as real eggs, usually look and taste better than the powdered type. They are frozen in containers like small milk cartons and must be thawed before use, which can take up to one hour, depending on the size of the carton.

While real eggs can keep in the refrigerator for up to five weeks, manufacturers advise against storing thawed egg substitutes in the refrigerator for more than 7 to 10 days. Powdered products, on the other hand, keep indefinitely.

Egg substitutes can generally take the place of whole eggs in baking, with fair to excellent results depending on the recipe and on whether a liquid or powdered product is used.

Liquid egg substitutes work especially well in quick breads, cakes, coatings and batters, said Robyn Flipse, a registered dietitian in Ocean, N.J., who teaches classes on healthful cooking.

Though most ingredient lists on packages of egg substitutes begin with egg whites, indicating they are the predominant ingredient, corn oil is often added to replace the fat in egg yolks, and artificial flavors, colors and preservatives are included as well.

Egg substitutes are lower in total fat than real eggs, but few are fat-free.

Most package instructions call for the addition of one teaspoon of margarine during preparation. While this does not add cholesterol, it can raise the fat level to that of a whole egg or higher.

USING A nonstick pan or a vegetable spray eliminates the need for added fat. Nor are egg substitutes necessarily cholesterol-free. They may contain 15 to 120 milligrams of cholesterol, which is still less than the amount in whole eggs.

Unlike whole eggs — which are relatively low in sodium at 63 milligrams each, most of which is in the white, not the yolk — packaged substitutes contain as much as 220 milligrams in a serving equivalent to a single egg. People who are trying to cut down on cholesterol are likely to be watching their sodium intake as well.

An economical yet often overlooked egg option is to stay with the real thing and simply substitute two egg whites, which are cholesterol-free, for each large whole egg called for in a recipe. Or as a substitute for plain scrambled eggs, one whole egg beaten with one egg white per two-egg serving works well.

Manual can openers are handy

Sometimes the electric opener won't do.

Here's how to open stubborn cans:

1. Small sardine or anchovy cans sometimes come without keys. Turn the can upside-down.
2. Fit a manual can opener over the bottom rim and proceed to open the can.
3. Because of its greater flexibility, the manual opener can handle odd shapes and corners.

Canned foods make meal preparation easy

CHICAGO (AP) — Keeping a supply of shelf-stable foods in the cupboard makes for quick and easy meals.

According to the Canned Food Information Council, there are more than 1,500 canned food items and combinations including vegetables, fruits and fruit juices, meat, seafoods, soup and infant foods, as well as a variety of specialties and combinations.

With quick cooking so popular today, many cookbooks recommend keeping pantries stocked with canned goods so that delicious meals can be prepared with the addition of just a few fresh ingredients.

The following is a checklist of items to keep on hand. Add pasta, rice and noodles to the shelf and you can have many different meals at a moment's notice:

■ Canned fruits: Stock pineapple, peaches, pears, plums, cherries and fruit cocktail. Consider blueberries, boysenberries and other more exotic fruits, too.

■ Canned meats, seafood and chicken: Canned chicken, packed in water or broth, is a versatile ingredient.

Check for low-sodium varieties.

■ Canned vegetables: Tomatoes, tomato sauce and tomato paste are important staples. Ready-to-serve vegetables include green beans, peas, corn, mixed vegetables, potatoes and zucchini. Artichokes, asparagus, beets, bean sprouts, carrots, garbanzos and mushrooms can be used for salads. Many vegetables are in low-sodium, no-salt varieties.

■ Soups: Keep a variety of soups for snacks, appetizers, sauces or gravy bases. Canned broth serves as a base for gravies and sauces.

■ Specialties: Specialty canned foods include main-dish ethnic foods like chow mein, or Mexican dishes, chili and sauces. Gravies, broths and cream soups can double as sauces.

■ Beverages: Stock fruit and vegetable juices, condensed (skim) or non-fat dry milk.

The Canned Food Information Council provides these answers to some commonly asked questions about canned foods:

■ Are canned foods nutritious?

Yes.

■ How long can canned foods be stored?

It is wise to have a regular turnover, about once a year. However, most canned foods remain at their advertised quality for 2 years or more.

Storage temperature is the primary factor affecting storage life. Other factors include humidity, the nature of the product, the type of container, vacuum and headspace volume. Canned food will be safe and wholesome as long as the container remains intact, the Canned Food Information Council says. Storage at temperatures above about 80 degrees should be avoided.

■ Are preservatives added to canned foods?

Canned foods are sterilized by heat and are protected from contamination by the container; they are not preserved by the addition of chemicals. However, some chemical substances are added to canned foods to prevent undesirable chemical reactions that might change color and flavor.

■ Is it safe to heat canned foods in the container?

To heat canned food in the container, remove the top to prevent pressure buildup. Cover the opened container loosely with a piece of aluminum foil, then place the can in hot water. Simmer. Do not put the can in the microwave!

■ Does damage to the outside of the can indicate damage to the food?

If the can is leaking, the ends are bulged, or the food has an off-odor, the food should not be used; these containers should be thrown away. Rust or dents do not affect the contents of the can unless the can is leaking.

■ Should cans make a hissing when they're opened?

Some cans may hiss because they are vacuum-packed. The noise is a result of air pressure, which is normal. However, if a can hisses loudly or spurts when opened, the food may be spoiled.

Lighten traditional recipes for tasty, healthier meals

NEW YORK (AP) — Many traditional recipes can be modified to be lower in calories, fat, cholesterol and sodium. The nutritionists for Dorman-Roth Foods offer these tips:

■ For grilling: select lighter, lower-in-calorie meats, poultry and seafood instead of hamburgers, hot dogs and steak.

■ Use marinades instead of rich, heavy sauces. Marinades of light wines, lemon juice, oil and herbs transform both meats and seafood into tender and succulent fare.

■ Substitute plain, low-fat yogurt for mayonnaise in your salad dressing. For a distinctive oil and vinegar dressing, select olive oil and a flavored vinegar. Use an assortment of fresh herbs for flavor.

■ Serve fresh fruit for dessert. Combine a colorful mixture of apples, oranges, grapefruits, melon, cherries and berries. Sorbets, ices and sherbets also make light desserts.

VEAL BURGERS

1 pound ground veal
2 tablespoons seasoned salt-free bread crumbs
1 tablespoon minced onion
1 tablespoon low-fat milk
1 large egg white
1 teaspoon dried parsley
⅛ teaspoon garlic powder
⅛ teaspoon dried savory
4 slices Swiss cheese
4 hamburger buns, preferably whole-wheat

In medium-size bowl, combine all ingredients except Swiss cheese and hamburger buns; mix well. Shape into 4 patties. Grill 3 to 4 inches from hot coals, about 3 minutes on each side. Top each burger with 1 slice of cheese. Continue grilling 1 to 2 minutes.

To broil: Preheat oven to broil. Place burgers on rack in broiler pan. Cook 3 to 4 inches from heat source, about 3 minutes on each side. Top each burger with 1 slice of cheese and continue broiling 30 seconds. Serve on buns. Makes 4 servings.

Note: For 8 patties, double all ingredients, except egg white.

MACARONI AND CHEESE SALAD

½ pound elbow macaroni
1 6-ounce package American cheese, diced
1 cup thinly sliced celery
½ cup thinly sliced radishes
½ cup grated carrots (2 small)
¼ cup diced green pepper
2 tablespoons plus 1 teaspoon olive oil
1 tablespoon plus 1 teaspoon red-wine vinegar
1½ teaspoons lemon juice
¼ teaspoon dried dillweed
¼ teaspoon grated lemon rind
¼ teaspoon celery seed
⅛ teaspoon garlic powder
⅛ teaspoon salt
Dash black pepper

Cook macaroni according to package directions but without salt. Drain and refrigerate until well chilled.

In large mixing bowl, combine macaroni, cheese, celery, radishes, carrots and green pepper.

In small bowl, whisk together remaining ingredients. Add macaroni and toss to coat. Refrigerate at least 1 hour before serving. Makes sixteen ½-cup servings.

BROCCOLI-CAULIFLOWER SALAD

½ cup plain non-fat yogurt
1 large head fresh broccoli, trimmed and cut into bite-size pieces
1 large head cauliflower, trimmed and cut into bite-size pieces
1 8-ounce package Muenster cheese, diced
¾ cup finely chopped red onion
¼ cup sliced black olives
2 tablespoons reduced-calorie mayonnaise
1 tablespoon red-wine vinegar
¼ teaspoon lemon rind
⅛ teaspoon black pepper

Place yogurt in small strainer and set over a bowl; set aside to drain.

In large pot of boiling water, blanch broccoli 2 minutes; drain and rinse in cold water. Repeat with cauliflower. Place vegetables in large bowl; add cheese, onion and olives.

In small bowl, combine drained yogurt, mayonnaise, vinegar, lemon rind and pepper; stir to blend. Pour over vegetables and toss to coat. Refrigerate until well chilled.

Lentils appealing to health-conscious

New York Times News Service

Lentils, ancient staples in Middle Eastern and Indian cooking, and widely used in Italian and French cuisine, have become commonplace in many fancy restaurants. But as a healthful food, lentils, like other legumes, have had to take a back seat to more popular foods like oat bran.

Slowly though, lentils are entering the mainstream in the United States as a versatile, cholesterol-free food high in fiber, protein and potassium and low in sodium and fat.

All varieties of lentils, from the bright coral-colored Persian to the dark-green French LePuy, offer the same good nutritional value. A half-cup serving of cooked lentils contains 106 calories, 8 grams of protein, 4 grams of fiber, no fat and 13 milligrams of sodium.

Lentils provide quite a bit more fiber than oats.

According to numbers compiled by D. James Anderson, professor of medicine and clinical nutrition at the University of Kentucky, a half-cup serving of cooked lentils contains 1 gram of water-soluble fiber (the kind that lowers cholesterol in the blood), and 3 grams of water-insoluble fiber, like that found in wheat bran, which passes through the digestive system quickly and is helpful in preventing constipation.

What's more, a recent study by the National Cancer Institute found compelling evidence that foods rich in insoluble fiber reduce the risk of colon and rectal cancer. A similar serving of oats contains only a half-gram of each kind of fiber.

But knowing that lentils are nutritious is not enough. People are frequently at a loss when it comes to preparing them.

For starters, red lentils work best in soups, purees or dips where the lentils need to be soft. Brown or green lentils, on the other hand, retain their shape if they are not overcooked, and can be used in salads, or any dish where you do not want the lentils reduced to mush.

Most varieties of lentils cook in 30 to 45 minutes, and none require soaking, as dried beans do. The Red Chief variety cooks in only 10 minutes. Be sure to wash lentils before cooking to remove any small stones or bits of soil.

Mark Erickson, director of education at the Culinary Institute of America in Hyde Park, N.Y., recommends hearty herb flavors like caraway, lemon and rosemary when cooking with lentils. "Tomato paste also works well to enhance the natural flavor of lentils," he said.

Color improves 'look' of foods

Associated Press

If margarine and sherbet were nearly white or colorless, people would have trouble identifying them. But that's how they'd look without food coloring.

Minus their expected colors, these foods might not even taste "right." That's because the way a food looks affects one's perception of its flavor.

According to Better Homes and Gardens magazine, food colors make some foods more appealing, and enhance acceptability of foods by matching a person's ideas of what foods should look like.

Color is added to:

■ Restore color when the natural color is destroyed by heating processing.

■ Ensure uniform color.

■ Enhance natural color that's weaker than people associate with a food.

■ Give a colorful identity to foods that are otherwise almost colorless.

There are several types of food colors:

■ Natural: Pigments and extracts from plants, animals and minerals. The most common natural colorings used commercially are paprika (from red peppers), turmeric (an herb extract), annatto (from seeds), beet powder, grape skin extract and caramel.

■ Natural-identical: Synthetic counterparts of natural colors in foods.

■ Synthetic: Compounds created in laboratories. They must be "certified" for purity and safety by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration. Current FDA regulations permit nine certified synthetic colors in foods. Other approved colors are natural pigments or extracts.

Although some individuals and consumer interest groups have raised questions about the safety of food colors, people needn't be alarmed about serving colored foods to their families. The FDA specifies that colors may not be used in foods if found to induce cancer in people or animals. Nor can color be used to cover food of poor quality.

A few colors are on a "provisional" list. A timetable has been established for industry to submit safety test results on these colors. The FDA believes these colors can be safely used during the interim.

Also, some people are allergic to FD&C Yellow No. 5 (tartrazine). For this reason, the FDA requires its listing by name on food labels. Reactions are usually minor (sniffles and rashes), but occasionally are more severe.

Some people appear to be allergic to FD&C Yellow No. 6 as well. The FDA has issued regulations requiring listing of FD&C Yellow No. 6 on food labels.

Beans, grains help lower cholesterol

NEW YORK (AP) — Oat bran is not alone in helping to lower cholesterol. Soon rice bran, barley, legumes — even carrots — may be the latest additions to the list of cholesterol-fighting foods.

There's nothing unique about oat bran's ability to lower cholesterol, says Robyn Flipse, a contributor to the Environmental Nutrition newsletter. "It's the soluble fiber in oat bran that works to reduce cholesterol, and soluble fiber is easy to find," she says.

■ Rice bran: Adding rice bran to the diet may help reduce cholesterol levels. Rice bran is unique in that it contains only one-half the soluble fiber of oat bran, yet lowers cholesterol just as much.

■ Bean cuisine: Eating dried beans, peas and lentils can help lower blood cholesterol levels. Scientists credit soluble fiber for the cholesterol reduction, but say other mechanisms may also be at work. Legumes are good sources of protein and minerals, are cholesterol-free and are virtually fat-free substitutes for meat.

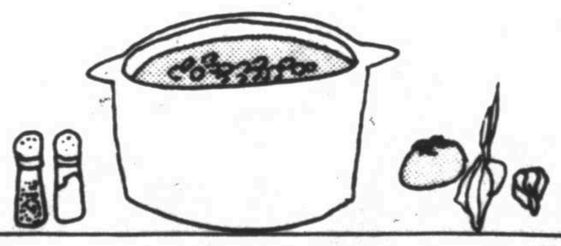
■ Barley bonus: Barley has been found to be as effective as oats in lowering cholesterol. The beta-glucan portion of its fiber is believed to be responsible for its cholesterol-reducing effect.

Dried beans should be eaten often

They are the base for many hearty dishes.

Here's how to keep them tender:

1. Soak beans, drain, cover with water and bring to a boil.
2. Add flavorings... tomatoes, onion, garlic and such. No salt and pepper... yet.
3. Salt toughens beans; pepper turns bitter in lengthy cooking. Add them for the last 5 to 10 minutes of cooking.



CNS Graphic

■ Carrot cure: Eating carrots and cabbage may also help reduce blood cholesterol. Researchers say calcium pectate is probably the cholesterol-lowering ingredient in these vegetables, although it's not known yet how it works.

■ Non-food alternative: Metamucil (psyllium), commonly used to relieve constipation, may have the added medicinal benefit of lowering cholesterol levels. Studies indicate that those with high cholesterol levels who take Metamucil regularly may see a drop in their cholesterol levels.

Fish part of healthy diet

By NANCY BYAL
Associated Press

"Eat more fish" advise health experts. Catch these seafood shopping and cooking tips for tasty results at home every time:

THE RIGHT CATCH

■ Fresh fish: follow your nose. Truly fresh fish has little odor; avoid buying fish with a strong or fishy smell. Look for shiny, bright skin. Colors fade as a fish begins to deteriorate. Eyes should be clear, bright, and bulging; gills should be red and not slippery.

■ Frozen fish should be frozen solid. Avoid packages with torn wrappers, or those that have frost or blood visible inside or out.

HOW MUCH TO BUY

For each serving, purchase:

■ 8 to 12 ounces of drawn or dressed fish

■ 4 to 8 ounces of fresh or frozen steaks or fillets

■ 1 to 2 pieces of frozen fish portions

HOW DONE IS DONE?

■ Overcooked fish becomes tough and dry.

■ When fish is done, it is opaque and will flake. To test, poke the tines of a fork into the thickest portion of the fish at a 45-degree angle. Gently twist the fork and pull up some of the flesh.

■ Plan on 4 to 6 minutes for each ½-inch thickness of fish when broiling, poaching or baking.

CRISPY COATINGS

■ Instead of cornmeal, use seasoned bread crumbs; finely crushed potato chips, saltine or wheat crackers, zwieback; or crushed croutons or shredded wheat wafers.

■ For a crispy coating on microwave-cooked fish, coat only one side of the fish and cook coated up side up.

EASY SAUCES

■ Herb-Butter Sauce: Melt 2 tablespoons margarine or butter. Stir in 1 tablespoon lemon juice; ½ teaspoon dried dillweed or dried basil, rosemary, or oregano, crushed; and a dash pepper. Brush over fillets or steaks during baking or broiling.

■ Tex-Mex Sauce: In a saucepan combine one 8-ounce can tomato sauce; one 4-ounce can diced green chili peppers, drained; ½ teaspon sugar; ¼ teaspoon ground coriander; and a dash bottled hot pepper sauce. Cook until heated through.

■ Sweet-Sour Sauce: In a saucepan combine one 10-ounce jar sweet-and-sour sauce; one 8-ounce can pineapple tidbits, drained; and half of a green or sweet red pepper, cut into strips. Cook until heated through.

Pasta salads make great buffet eating

Don't create an eating problem.

Here's how to pick the pasta:

1. Select small pastas, such as elbow macaroni, ziti or tiny shells.
2. If using long spaghetti, break it into one-inch pieces before cooking. Guests usually are holding only a fork and can't twirl pasta.
3. Smaller, manageable pieces can be speared with the fork tines.

Pasta dish provides taste, nutrition

By NANCY BYAL
Associated Press

Thank goodness we now recognize how good pasta is for us. It contains complex carbohydrates for the fuel our bodies need but no fat. Top pasta with a low-fat sauce like this one made with skim milk and a small amount of margarine for flavor.

SHRIMP FETTUCCINE

3 ounces fettuccine
1 8-ounce package frozen peeled and deveined shrimp
2 cups loose-pack frozen broccoli, carrots and onion
1 tablespoon margarine or butter
1 tablespoon cornstarch
½ teaspoon instant chicken bouillon granules
¼ teaspoon bottled minced garlic
⅛ teaspoon lemon-pepper seasoning
¾ cup skim milk
2 tablespoons dry white wine or skim milk
2 tablespoons grated Parmesan cheese

In a large saucepan cook pasta in 4 cups hot water for 8 minutes. Add shrimp and frozen vegetables. Return to boiling; reduce heat. Simmer gently for 1 to 3 minutes or until shrimp turn pink and pasta is tender. Drain and return to saucepan.

Meanwhile, in a small saucepan melt margarine. Stir in cornstarch, bouillon granules, garlic and lemon-pepper seasoning. Add ¾ cup milk. Cook and stir until thickened and bubbly. Cook and stir 2 minutes more. Stir in wine or 2 tablespoons milk. Pour over pasta mixture. Toss to combine. Top with Parmesan cheese. If desired, garnish with tomatoes and parsley. Makes 3 servings.

Black-eyed peas, pork combined

By NANCY BYAL
Associated Press

Eat black-eyed peas on New Year's Eve for good luck, says an old Southern tradition. Eat black-eyed peas and other dried beans often for good nutrition, we say. Beans are a good low-fat source of protein, iron and B vitamins and provide lots of soluble fiber, the kind that helps lower blood cholesterol.

PORK AND BLACK-EYED PEA SALAD

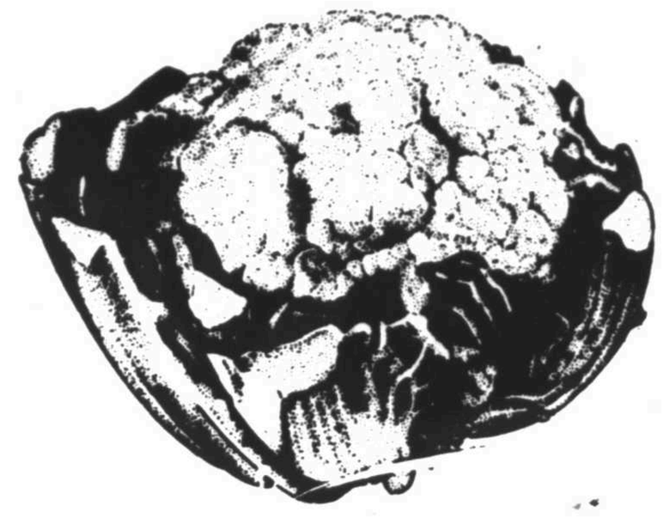
1 10-ounce package frozen black-eyed peas or one 15-ounce can black-eyed peas, drained
⅓ cup reduced-calorie Italian salad dressing
¼ cup sliced green onion
¼ cup sliced fresh mushrooms
¼ cup sliced celery
2 tablespoons chopped pimiento
2 tablespoons sliced pitted ripe olives
2 cloves garlic, minced
½ pound pork tenderloin, cut into thin strips
Spinach leaves (optional)

If using frozen peas, cook according to package directions; drain. In a medium mixing bowl combine drained peas, salad dressing, green onion, mushrooms, celery, pimiento and olives; set aside.

Spray a large skillet with non-stick spray coating. Heat over medium-high heat. Stir-fry garlic for 30 seconds. Add pork; stir-fry for 2 to 3 minutes or until no pink remains. Remove from heat. Add vegetable mixture to pork in skillet; mix well. Serve immediately on spinach-lined plates. Makes 3 main-dish servings.

Cauliflower: Handle with care

Copley News Service



Raw cauliflower is great for dieters. It's crunchy, low in calories (only 28 per cup), and provides good amounts of iron, and vitamins C and A. The vegetable has a very mild flavor when raw, so even those who don't like cooked cauliflower often enjoy the uncooked version.

For dieters, serve raw flowerets with a reduced-calorie French dressing for dipping — or add flowerets to a salad.

Though the vegetable is available year round, September through November are the peak months for fresh cauliflower.

Shop for heavy, compact heads, firm and creamy white in color. (If necessary, any brown spots can be shaved off with a sharp knife.) Avoid heads with spreading clusters. If stems are attached, they should be crisp-looking and green, indicating freshness.

One medium head, between one and two pounds, will serve four (a one-pound head yields about 3 cups flowerets). Use as soon as possible for best flavor.

Never overcook cauliflower, or it will develop a strong and unpleasant odor — cabbage, broccoli and brussels sprouts do the same thing.

These cruciferous vegetables (they are all members of the same family) have another thing in common, too: they have been linked to a lowered incidence of some kinds of cancer.

BREAK CAULIFLOWER into flowerets before microwaving, or steam the whole head until fork-tender. To steam a whole (about two-pound) head, remove leaves and core and rinse well.

Wrap tightly in a good-quality plastic wrap and place right-side up on a paper plate. Microwave three minutes. Turn cauliflower over and microwave five to 10 minutes longer, or until flowerets on underside are fork-tender. Let stand, covered, several minutes before serving.

To microwave frozen flowerets, place one 10-ounce package (about 1½ cups) in a 1-quart microwave-safe casserole with about 2 tablespoons water. Cover and microwave on HIGH (100 percent power) setting six to eight minutes, stirring halfway through cooking time.

Cauliflower is in its glory when smothered with a creamy cheese sauce, or hollandaise or mustard sauce — or serve simply with butter and lemon juice, and a dash of pepper.

The French know it by another name: chou-fleur (cabbage flour), and the English word, too, derives from an old word meaning flowering cabbage. Mark Twain called it "cabbage with a college education." You'll call it delicious once you have tried these recipes:

(Recipes in this column are tested in 625- to 700-watt microwave ovens.)

SUNDAY CAULIFLOWER

2 (10-ounce) packages frozen cauliflower
2 tablespoons water
1 tablespoon butter or margarine
1 tablespoon all-purpose flour
½ cup milk
1 cup creamy cottage cheese
½ cup shredded mild cheddar cheese
1 teaspoon curry powder (or to taste)
¼ teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon pepper
½ cup fine dry bread crumbs
½ teaspoon paprika
1 tablespoon melted butter or margarine

Oven setting: HIGH (100 percent power).

Combine cauliflower and water in 2-quart microwave-safe casserole. Cover and microwave 5 to 7 minutes, or until cauliflower is just tender. Turn into colander to drain.

Place 1 tablespoon butter in same casserole. Microwave about 30 seconds, to melt. Blend in flour, then slowly stir in milk. Stir in cottage cheese, cheddar cheese, curry powder, salt and pepper. Cover and microwave 4 to 6 minutes, stirring every 2 minutes, until cheese melts and mixture is heated through.

Fold cauliflower into cheese sauce. Cover surface evenly with bread crumbs, then dust with paprika. Drizzle melted butter over top and microwave, uncovered, 4 to 5 minutes longer, to heat through.

HAM AND CAULIFLOWER CASSEROLE FOR TWO

1 cup fresh cauliflowerets
2 tablespoons water
1 tablespoon butter or margarine
2 tablespoons each chopped onion and green pepper
1 tablespoon all-purpose flour
¼ teaspoon each dried dill weed and dried parsley flakes
Dash pepper
½ cup milk
⅓ cup shredded Swiss cheese
1 cup cubed cooked ham

Oven setting: HIGH (100 percent power).

Combine cauliflower and water in 1-quart microwave-safe casserole. Cover and microwave 3 to 5 minutes, or until cauliflower is almost tender. Turn into colander to drain and set aside.

Place butter in same casserole; add onion and green pepper. Microwave, uncovered, 2 minutes. Blend in flour and seasonings, then slowly stir in milk. Microwave, uncovered, 2 to 3 minutes, or until mixture thickens and bubbles, stirring halfway through cooking time. Fold in cauliflower, cheese and ham. Cover and microwave 1 to 2 minutes longer, or until heated through.

STEAMED CAULIFLOWER WITH CHEESE SAUCE

1 pound fresh cauliflowerets
2 tablespoons water
2 tablespoons butter or margarine
2 tablespoons all-purpose flour
1 cup milk
½ cup shredded Swiss or cheddar cheese
1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
¼ teaspoon dried mustard
⅛ teaspoon pepper

Oven setting: HIGH (100 percent power); MEDIUM-HIGH (70 percent power).

Place cauliflowerets and water in 1-quart microwave-safe casserole. Cover and microwave on HIGH setting 6 to 9 minutes, or until tender. Drain in colander, then return to casserole. Cover and set aside.

Place butter in 2-cup glass casserole and microwave about 1 minute, to melt. Blend in flour, then slowly stir in milk. Add all remaining ingredients and microwave on MEDIUM-HIGH setting 4 to 6 minutes, stirring halfway through cooking time, until sauce is thick. Pour sauce over cauliflower and serve immediately.

'Official' cookbook takes mystery out of preparing fish

By CAROL DEEGAN

NEW YORK (AP) — More than 150 recipes are arranged by technique according to contemporary standards in "The Official Fulton Fish Market Cookbook" by Bruce Beck (E.P. Dutton, $19.95).

Recipes are organized by cooking technique and feature a wide range of dishes including Baked Whole Fish au Poivre, Grilled Halibut Alla Cucina Nuova and Lobster Cassoulet Chez Josephine.

The cookbook includes careful instructions for choosing quality seafood and for handling it properly and safely, plus guidelines to seafood health and safety standards.

Beck, who is a food journalist, explains in the introduction, "With all the media and medical attention that seafood is generating — with health professionals urging people to eat at least two servings a week, and with shellfish back on low-cholesterol diets — many cooks remain confused and even fearful, still preferring to let professionals tackle fish cookery.

"This seemed like the perfect time to jump in and demystify the techniques consumers need to derive maximum enjoyment from their seafood purchases. And with those techniques we have offered a variety of dishes, both old and new, simple and elaborate, delicate and hearty."

The cookbook also includes a history of the Fulton Fish Market and an explanation of how the market works.

New York's Fulton Fish Market holds claim as the largest wholesale seafood market in the Western Hemisphere. The best-known and largest-selling fish include cod, flounder, fluke, halibut, salmon, mackerel, swordfish, lake whitefish, rainbow trout, red snapper, bluefish, whiting, shad, lobster, shrimp, scallops, oysters, clams, crabs.

The following, Alambres de Corvina Rosa Mexicano, is a sample recipe. Corvina is a Pacific fish highly prized in Central and South America for its fine texture and flavor. Weakfish or seatrout is a plentiful and relatively inexpensive substitute in the northeast section of the United States.

Josefina Howard makes excellent use of weakfish with her Alambres de Corvina Rosa Mexicano. Alambres (literally wires) are skewers. The texture of the lightly cooked bacon is very appealing to those who like it Otherwise, the bacon could be blanched in advance, but the results will be neither as authentic nor as tasty as the version given here.

ALAMBRES DE CORVINA ROSA MEXICANO

5 pounds whole seatrout (about 2 pounds of fillets)
½ cup light olive oil
1½ cups tomato puree (not tomato sauce)
½ cup water
1 tablespoon dried oregano, toasted in a skillet until fragrant, and crumbled
1 tablespoon finely minced parsley
2 cloves garlic, minced
2 tablespoons white vinegar, wine or distilled
⅓ to ½ pound bacon, cut into 1¼-inch lengths
Dash of cayenne
Coarse salt and freshly ground black pepper to taste
4 medium ripe tomatoes
16 medium slices of medium-small onion, preferably white
4 to 6 whole serrano chiles (optional)
4 cups cooked plain white rice (recipe follows)

Skin the seatrout and cut into 1¼-inch squares; the thin tail end should be cut long and later folded square to obtain pieces consistent in size.

In a non-reactive bowl, combine olive oil, tomato puree, water, herbs, vinegar, bacon, cayenne and salt and pepper to taste. Add fish, stir gently with the hands to coat, and marinate, stirring occasionally, for at least 1 hour at room temperature, or as long overnight if refrigerated.

Use a very sharp knife to slice sixteen 1½-inch discs from the walls of the tomatoes (reserving remaining tomato hearts for another purpose). Arrange fish on 4 to 6 heavy stainless steel skewers, alternating the fish pieces with bacon, onion and tomato slices, ending with an optional chile on each skewer. Simply calculate the number of fish pieces you have per skewer and alternate the elements as you wish. Be careful to recover as much of the marinade as possible to make the sauce.

At serving time, heat a grill to very hot. Place the marinade in a heavy non-reactive saucepan and bring to a boil. Simmer for about 5 minutes, adding a little water if it gets too thick. Grill fish until nicely browned and just cooked through, about 2 minutes on each of the four sides. Do not overcook.

Arrange a line of hot cooked rice along the center of each serving plate and present the skewers on top of the rice, with some sauce on each side.

BASIC WESTERN RICE

The rice is usually salted and also slightly buttered to help the grains stay separate. When cooking more than 2 cups of raw rice, begin to decrease slightly the proportion of water, salt and butter.

1 cup long-grain white rice
1½ cups water
½ teaspoon coarse salt
1 teaspoon butter

Wash rice thoroughly in a sieve until the rinse water runs clear. Leave it to drain, shaking a few times, until it is dry or nearly so. Allow at least a generous 30 minutes for drying. If you are in a rush and the rice is still wet, decrease the water by about 2 tablespoons.

Add the water, salt and butter to a small saucepan, cover, and bring to a boil. Add the rice and bring rapidly back to boiling. Stir once with a fork to be sure grains are separate. Cover closely. Reduce heat to very low and simmer gently exactly 15 minutes. Remove from heat. Let rice rest undisturbed for at least 5 minutes. Do not open lid! If rice is to rest more than 15 minutes, reheat it slightly over low heat. Uncover, fluff with a fork, and serve.

Use checklist when buying seafood

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Fisheries Institute offers the following recommendations for the safe handling of seafood.

■ Purchase seafood products from approved licensed stores and markets.

■ Allow ⅓ to ½ pound per person.

■ Fish steaks should look freshly cut and not appear dried around the edges. They should have a firm elastic texture, fresh and mild odor, and bright and shiny color.

■ Store steaks in the coldest part of the refrigerator and use within 1-2 days.

■ A moderately hot fire is best for cooking seafood; it sears the flesh of fish so that it retains its natural moisture.

■ Thoroughly clean the grill with a brush and wipe it down with cooking oil.

■ Line the interior of the grill for easy cleanup.

■ Start the fire about 30 minutes before you intend to start cooking. Let it burn until white hot. Make sure it is uniform in heat by spreading out the charcoal evenly. Or, preheat an outdoor gas grill or electric barbecue grill.

■ To protect the delicate flavor of fish, refrain from using strong fire-starters and self-lighting briquets. Instead, use an electric fire-starter or kindling.

■ Adjust the grill height to 4 to 6 inches above the heat.

■ Oil both the grill and the fish to prevent sticking.

■ Cook fish steaks directly over the heat source. Baste fish frequently to retain moisture.

■ Consider marinades to lend a different taste to fish steaks. Choose from bottled salad dressing or a homemade combination of oil with vinegar or fresh lime or lemon juice and your choice of seasonings. Reserve extra marinade to brush on fish as it cooks.

The general guideline for cooking fish is about 10 minutes per inch of thickness at 450 degrees.

Fish is done when it just begins to flake easily when tested with a fork and the watery, transluscent appearance of raw fish takes on an opaque cast throughout. However, the point between doneness and overdoneness occurs quickly. Therefore, it is important to keep a watchful eye on the fish, checking it frequently, and 2-3 minutes before expected cooking time is complete to prevent overcooking.

It is important to remember that not all species of fish cook in the same amount of time, and that the 10 minute rule is only a guideline to approximte cooking time.

Laughter not medicine

Copley News Service

Canadian physicians should quit trying to tickle their patients' funny bones and stick to doctoring instead, because their attempts at humor often are misinterpreted by patients as being flippant or cavalier.

Jill Hefley, spokeswoman for the College of Physicians and Surgeons in Toronto, says she has received complaints from patients who have gone in for medical advice and were treated to one-liners instead.

She says the problem may be one of timing more than anything else.

The doctor may think that laughter is the best medicine all the time, but patients aren't always in the mood for a physician who doubles as a stand-up comic.

KIM CORBITT

"It doesn't seem like a job, it's just fun."

By ELIZABETH EDWIN
Lifestyle Editor

Andy Warhol once said that everyone will have their 15 minutes of fame, but for Midlander Kim Corbitt, her fame in her home town may last quite a bit longer. Ms. Corbitt is one of four women in the United States featured in a Cosmopolitan article titled "Women Who Own Their Own Beauty Salons." It is on page 252 of the October issue of Cosmo.

Not only does the article feature Ms. Corbitt, it was written by free lance writer Beverly Forsyth of Odessa and the photo was taken by Midland photographer Lisa Frosch.

"When Beverly first called me about the article, I wasn't really paying attention. I was real busy that day and she said something about Odessa College, so I was thinking it (the phone call) was going to be asking for money. But then she said something about Cosmopolitan and I really perked up," Ms. Corbitt said.

October 1989 Cosmopolitan

As the story goes, about a year ago, Cosmopolitan had plans to publish some stories about women who owned their own successful beauty salons and wanted one of these women to be from West Texas. Someone from the magazine contacted Ms. Forsyth about writing the article, which she agreed to do. Ms. Forsyth then contacted Faye Morgan of the cosmetology department of Odessa College asking her for names of any local women who owned their own salons. From the names she gathered from Ms. Morgan and her other research, Ms. Forsyth conducted interviews and took snapshots of each woman she found in the area who fit Cosmopolitan's criteria. All of her interviews were sent to Cosmo for review.

The magazine wrote a letter to Ms. Forsyth (which Ms. Corbitt has framed and hanging on her salon wall) to inform her they had selected Ms. Corbitt and her "Loosends" salon as the featured beauty salon for this area, after which Ms. Forsyth conducted a more in-depth interview in October 1988.

MIDLAND SOCIETY, PARLIAMENTARIANS

Midland Society of Parliamentarians met in the home of Mrs. M.T. Franz with 11 members attending. Mrs. Robert A. Hobbs was co-hostess. Mrs. Vincent Scurry announced that yearbooks had been mailed to all members. Mrs. Hoy Harrison presented the program on "Duties of the Treasurer."

ALPHA PHI MU, BSP

Alpha Phi Mu of Beta Sigma Phi met in the home of Linda Gardner with Debra Hostas presiding. Attending were Judy Henson, Donna Smith, Patti Purser, Diann Choate, Millie Molina and Terri Morris.

Members presented a Ritual of Jewels for Ms. Choate and Ms. Molina. Ms. Choate was elected Sweetheart of the Year. Fall rush and upcoming projects were discussed. Leave of absence letters were read and approved. Ms. Henson presented the program on "Starting Your Own Home Based Business." Ms. Purser won the hostess gift.

AARP

American Association of Retired Persons met for a potluck supper at Midland Senior Center. Vernon Wilson presided. Hazel Cole gave the invocation and Wilson led the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag. Leona Stump announced that 63 members and 12 guests were attending. Chester Powers read the poem "Little Things," in memory of Bea Covert.

Leta Brown read the minutes. Linnie Elliot reported on the Community Services Committee. Ms. Brown discussed the finance committee's plans for an auction and cake walk.

Volunteers for food service for a three-month period are Lillian Lechwar, Margaret Powers, Christine Melvin and Lora Duke. Volunteers for kitchen duty are John and Leta Atchison, Norma Wilson and Ava Lee Fultz.

Mary Kee led the song "Happy Birthday to You," sung to birthday honorees. The Kitchenette Band presented the musical program.

ALTURUSA CLUB

Altrusa Club of Midland met at Ranchland Hills Country Club with 30 members attending. Paula Ritz presided. Francine Weaver led the Altrusa Grace and the Pledge of Allegiance to the Flag. Mary Vroman gave the Altrusa Accent. Rita Peterson read the minutes, which were approved. Jeannette Darrough gave the financial report. Ms. Ritz announced members would collect Christmas gifts for Big Spring State Hospital.

Bylaw changes were approved. Lois Carter discussed the spaghetti luncheon at Midland Center. Mary Lou Simpson was honored for her work on the yearbooks. Members discussed forming a committee on literacy. Lois Isbell will serve as chairman for the March 31 style show.

Delegates who will attend the district conference in Wichita Falls are Ms. Ritz and Myrtlene Bearden. Alternate delegates are Tup Ferguson and Mary Alice Tidwell. Ms. Bearden introduced her guest, Regena Neal.

JUNIOR WOMAN'S ASSOCIATION

Junior Woman's Association met in the home of Cathy Yates for a membership social. Linda Jones was hostess. Guests were Verna Burgess, Pam Hughes, Luanne Caudle, Teresa Clingman, Kelly Patterson, Molly Clark, Xandra Minnix, Lisa Ray and Sabrina Smith.

CORBITT

"When Beverly was first explaining what her first interview was all about, I thought it was really neat, but I didn't expect anything to come of it," Ms. Corbitt said. "When she called me back to tell me Cosmopolitan had selected me for the story, I couldn't believe it was really happening."

EARLY THIS summer, Cosmopolitan called Ms. Corbitt to ask if there was a local professional photographer she felt comfortable with who could take a photo for the magazine to accompany the article. She suggested Ms. Frosch because she had worked with her before.

Ms. Frosch was sent information and examples of what the magazine wanted via overnight mail, the photos were taken and a contact sheet was sent to back to Cosmopolitan. Once the magazine made their photo selection, Ms. Frosch sent them the photo which was published.

"They (Cosmopolitan) called me to check the spelling of all the names and things like that," Ms. Corbitt said, but added that she didn't receive a proof or tear sheet of the article prior to its publication in the magazine.

"I was just waiting for it to come out on the stands. The September issue had a page with what was coming for October and it said the magazine was to be on the newsstands by Sept. 19. So I was just waiting," Ms. Corbitt said. "Then Friday (Sept. 15), my mom comes flying in here (Loosends) yelling 'Look, look' with the magazine open to the page with my article on it. I got hot flashes and everything. I thought it would be a little bitty picture, and I had no idea what they would do with the article."

Ms. Corbitt was pleasantly surprised.

SO, IN a very short time, Ms. Corbitt has taken her hobby, turned it into her profession, opened her own business, and landed a story in Cosmopolitan magazine about her successful venture. But it wasn't as easy as it sounds.

Ms. Corbitt and her family moved to Midland when she was 5 years old. Her parents, JoAnn and Hartwell Martin, and one of her sisters, Robbie O'Donnell, still live here. Her other sister, Laura Martin, is attending Angelo State University. Ms. Corbitt attended schools in Midland and graduated from Midland High School in 1975. After graduation, she spent several years not really knowing what she wanted to do.

"I worked as a travel agent, a key punch operator — sick — in retail, and for oil companies," Ms. Corbitt said, but none of these jobs really captured her interest.

Then a couple of her friends suggested she go to school and get her license to cut hair since it was something she enjoyed doing. At the time, she was leasing apartments in Arlington, so she moved back to Midland and enrolled at OC in the cosmetology department. She graduated in 1985 and worked as a hair stylist for two Midland salons before deciding she did not want to work for someone else all her life.

"It took a long time to decide to do it," Ms. Corbitt said about opening her own salon. She began by asking a lot of questions about owning a salon while she was still working for someone else. Her questions covered everything from accounting to appointments to supplies to employees. Once she had gathered her research, she took the plunge and got a loan in order to get her business get started.

SHE OPENED her shop in November 1987. Now, almost two years later, she has a successful business where a chair is seldom empty. In fact, in early December, Ms. Corbitt is planning a combination Open House and Christmas party to celebrate.

Her salon is a no-smoking shop, which she said most of her clients appreciate. There are five hair stylists and one manicurist "manning" the shop. They are Ms. Corbitt, Shashi Singh, Sherry Lemley, Debbie Ragusa, Kathleen Crawford and manicurist Alina Wood, all graduates of OC's cosmetology department except Ms. Ragusa who went to school in El Paso. Customers can have just about anything done at Loosends, including perms, manicures, pedicures, facial waxing, color analysis, complete makeovers and tanning.

The salon also works closely with Phyllis Gonzales and P.S. Images Fashion and Modeling of Midland. "I've worked with Phyllis for about three years. She was using another guy at a salon I used to work at and I started going with him when he would do shows for her. After about six months, he quit and left town, and since I had been helping, it left me in a great position to take over," Ms. Corbitt said. "We do the models hair and make up for shows and for their photo sessions with Lisa (Ms. Frosch), and also do the hair, makeup, nails and skin care classes for them."

"It doesn't seem like a job, it's just fun," Ms. Corbitt said of owning her own shop. But in the beginning, she confesses that it did require a lot of hard work and time.

"When we first started, I had some friends and clients that came with me from the salon I was working at. I also went through my high school yearbook and the phone book and sent announcement cards to all my friends and my parents friends to tell them that I was opening the shop. That's how we started building a clientele.

"Initially, I worked over 60 hours a week, but now I have cut back. Sometimes I even try to leave by 2 p.m. Saturday," Ms. Corbitt said.

SHE AND her husband, James Corbitt — who thought of the shop's name — do all the cleaning themselves. "We use to have someone come and do it, but we really feel like we do a better job. We've got it down now, so it doesn't take us very long," Ms. Corbitt said.

Although the salon has regular hours, each of the stylists is free to keep their own hours as well. "They all have a key and can work when they need to. It's nice to work with people you can trust," Ms. Corbitt said. "Everyone gets along well. We're all buds."

And although Ms. Corbitt has definitely found what she enjoys doing, she says the job is anything but glamorous. "If you think going home with hair on you everywhere is glamorous, let me tell you..." Ms. Corbitt said.

Short hair long on style

By MARY HELLMAN
Copley News Service

From country days to cafe nights, from boardrooms to family rooms, this fall's beauties shine with good health and easy glamour.

Say goodbye to MTV hair — the permed, frosted, moussed and sprayed mane. And to heavy-handed makeup with slashes of bright blush and lipstick.

Hair is inching shorter and looks natural and healthy at any length. Makeup is deft, allowing healthy skin to shine.

When designers unveiled their fall collections last spring, the runways were dominated by boyish bobs — short-short in the back and fringed with long bangs. The cut is dubbed The Linda, after cover model Linda Evangelista, one of the first to wear it. For evening, the bangs are slicked back.

"The trend is short — short and geometric, short and soft, short and cropped, but definitely short," said Jackalynn Wilson, owner of a hair salon. "There's lots of movement, so a good cut is everything, and the hair must be very, very healthy."

If your hair is overprocessed, sun-damaged or just plain dull, Wilson recommends a vegetable pack conditioning treatment to protect hair from environmental damage and to add gloss and body. Fees for the treatment start at $50.

"Once hair is healthy, you're open to anything — coloring, highlights, perms," she said.

For fall, Wilson favors red hair or red highlights, but as a general rule recommends staying within a few shades of your natural hair color, so that your hair, skin and eye color will be compatible.

"Highlights are everything; they are to hair what accessories are to fashion," she said. "They add pizzazz. We generally add them only around the face."

She said new highlighting products are wonderful because they add color to the hair rather than bleaching it, so there is no risk of damage. She suggests blue-blacks for black hair, auburns for brown and shades of blond for blond.

The new, shorter hair is very feminine with some drama, Wilson said.

She updated client Rene's hair for fall by cutting her shoulder-length hair into a cheek-grazing bob with bangs and tinting her blond hair a skin-flattering shade of red.

The resulting look was professional and sleek, with a sporty ease — well-suited for Rene's lifestyle as a Realtor and her petite frame.

But before cutting or styling hair, Wilson insists on a consultation and offers one at no charge, by appointment. Haircuts, depending on the stylist, are $25 to $50.

"If you just go with the trend, and do not find your individualized style, you could wind up a fashion victim," she said. "In this salon, you won't be sent to the shampoo bowl before you talk to a stylist."

CNS Photo

This season' hairstyles are simple and short, with feminine bobs a favorite look.

Maralyn Salameh also likes to begin with a consultation when clients come to her hair salon. The emphasis there is on skin care.

"Careless skin care promotes aging," she said. "The ideal age to begin a consistent skin care regime is 15. European women are taught skin care at an early age. They don't smoke, avoid alcohol, watch their diet and get plenty of rest. As a result, they generally don't believe in face-lifts. They don't need them."

Salameh offers a line of products from West Germany that relies on herbal extracts and natural ingredients from the sea. Daytime moisturizers are important to protect the skin, while concentrated night creams nourish as the skin rests and is free of stress. Daily cleansing and toning are augmented by masks and exfoliants that remove bacteria and dead skin cells.

The latest addition to the line is a moisturizer for runners, Salameh said.

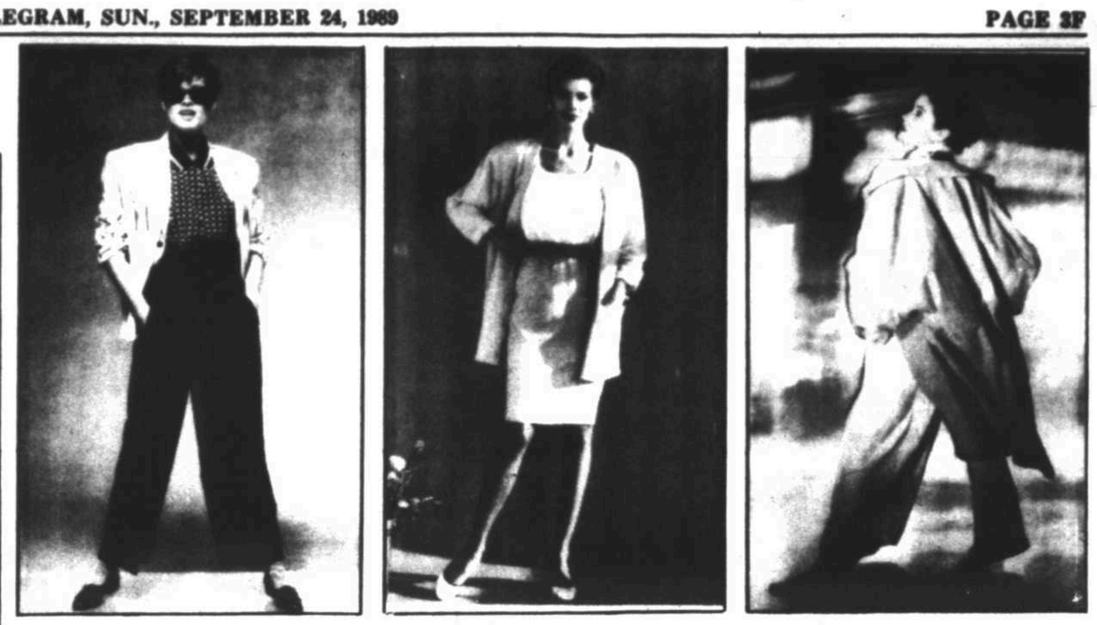
"During vigorous sports, the skin loses moisture, and sweat is drying. This is a rich cream that puts the moisture back."

Clear, healthy skin shines through, whether you emphasize a natural or smoky makeup for fall, Salameh said.

"Makeup hues are paler, softer, for a natural glow," she said. "It can be deceiving. People may ask if you have any makeup on."

The vintage natural look is perfect for busy fall schedules: The sheerest foundation and powder are topped by just a hint of blush. Eyes are lightly lined and shadowed in earth tones such as taupe, toast, nude beige, mauve and rose. Lips are soft and smudged — throw away those harsh lipliners — in muted pinks, mochas, roses and mauves.

A parallel look is suited for cafe society, jazz clubs and romantic dinners for two. The emphasis here, Salameh said, is on smoky espresso eyes that dominate a pale face and jewel-toned lips.



Cropped hairstyles can enhance sporty or classy looks. The accent is on lips and eyes, no matter what the fashion. Short hair looks clean and stylish.

Models sport cropped hair

By MARYLIN JOHNSON
New York Times News Service

ALTANTA — Short hair has become long on style. Just ask fashion model Michelle Murray, who recently had her shoulder-length bob cut into a sleek layered wedge, no more than 2 inches long on top.

"I was bored with my hair," said Murray, "and needed a change. Also, my new style, which my boyfriend, Kevin, loves, makes me look younger. As a 23-year-old model, I can pass for 16, which is great in my profession."

Another short-hair addict Dianne Whitmore finds her short do — a quarter of an inch all over her head — a snap to keep. "I simply wash it, brush it forward and I'm ready to go," said the Atlanta wardrobe consultant. "It's wash-and-wear hair."

FOR KIM PRIEST, a waitress at California Pizza Kitchen, her short style "is always presentable and neat for work," a real boon to the professional woman.

Whatever the reason for shearing tresses, less hair is suddenly the look everyone wants. The new short styles range from ultracropped heads to just-above-the-chin bobs. A good cut is essential, and a popular one features a short tapered back, full crown and sides pulled toward the face. Another cut is the asymmetrical — with a short back and hair longer on one side than the other. What you are not seeing is spiked, teased hair.

Last March, top fashion model Linda Evangelista's hair was cut by Paris stylist Julien d'Is into a boyish style with thick bangs and a cropped back. Soon the sound of scissors was heard on both sides of the Atlantic. Short hairstyles appeared on actresses Lauren Hutton, Glenn Close and Margaux Hemingway, also on New York fashion designers Carolyne Roehm and Donna Karan.

"Donna's had her hair cut four times since early summer," said her publicist Patti Cohen in New York City. "At first, her hair was shoulder-length and each time, she told stylist Christiaan to cut more off. Right now, it's chin-length, and Donna vows it's all coming off the next time."

LESTER STEVENS, owner of the Pasha salon in Atlanta, reports he and his staff have had calls for Evangelista's haircut. "After she appeared on the cover of the August Elle magazine," he said, "women came in and wanted her look.

"Linda's hair is very short, almost mannish looking, and not everyone can wear it. However, I think any woman can have short hair as long as the style fits her facial features and figure type."

Stylist Stan Milton calls Evangelista's hairstyle the "John John" cut after John Kennedy Jr., who, as a small boy, sported it in the 1960s. "Young women especially like this look," said Milton, who also is getting calls for actress Isabella Rossellini's hairstyle — a simple cut, very short at the nape with blunt sides.

At the L'Agence model agency, owner Mark Cook said clients — especially department stores and ready-to-wear catalogs — are requesting short-haired models. "They want a new clean look," he said. "Last year at this time, I had one or two short-haired models. Now I have 10. And the majority of long-haired models are wearing their hair right above the shoulders."

HAIRSTYLIST Tony Voorhees believes the timing is right for shorter hair. "When it comes to hair length, women no longer listen to the directives of husbands or boyfriends," he said. "And everyone is getting in shape by going to aerobics classes. Long, fluffy hair simply doesn't work with exercising."

Today's cuts are short on upkeep. If you have curly hair, simply towel-dry and presto, the style falls into place. A spritz of setting lotion or a slick of gel is all the help most cuts need. Straight, fine hair might require a light perm to get a look of fullness on the top. For a sleek style, blow-dry hair straight and smooth.

However, there is one drawback to short hair: frequent trims (every four to six weeks). This means dropping anywhere from $20 to $50 at your favorite salon. Note: A haircut at one of the chain salons, such as The Prime Cut and Great Clips, can cost as little as $10.

According to stylists, to wear short hair effectively, facial features should not be too prominent. Also, hair should be in good condition. Finally, when applying makeup, play up your lips and eyes — this might even call for false eyelashes — and always wear earrings.

DEAR ABBY

Reader puts a pox on those who shun pot use

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Your anti-marijuana column proves that there is still no shortage of hysterical, unreasonable busybodies who would impose their will on everyone else. Sorry, Abby, but what I put into my own body is not your business, not William Bennett's, not anyone's business but mine. If I drive while intoxicated, or show up at work intoxicated, then the government or my employer has legitimate reason for intervention — otherwise, forget it.

And, please, Abby, learn to separate fact from fantasy. Like any drug, marijuana can be abused, but it is certainly less harmful than alcohol or tobacco. As for being illegal, that is a situation which will in time be remedied.

The drug war will continue to tear our country apart until people understand that no one has the right, or the power, to tell others what they may consume. And until you accept this, you will be part of the problem. — JOHN deLAUBENFELS, DULUTH, GA.

DEAR JOHN: You rattled the wrong cage when you said that what you put into your own body is not my business. When what you put into your body alters your behavior so that you become a threat to MY body, then it becomes MY business.

DEAR ABBY: When my mother broke up her home 25 years ago, she gave me her sterling silver flatware and tea set. My mother, who is now 92 years old and in full command of all her mental faculties, recently told me that she wants her silver given to "Jennifer," my eldest daughter who was married last month.

This request came as a total surprise to me, as I had planned to enjoy using it for the rest of my life.

Jennifer never mentioned the silver to me. However, I thought it was rather odd that when she selected her china and crystal, she didn't select a silver pattern. Now I suspect that my mother must have promised Jennifer my silver, and is probably expecting me to give it to her now.

I don't want to cause my mother any embarrassment, but I now find myself in a very awkward position with my daughter. Kindly advise me. — DELAWARE DILEMMA

DEAR DILEMMA: The silver is yours; it was given to you 25 years ago with no strings attached. Since it's a family heirloom, you would probably want your eldest daughter to have it one day, but you, and you alone, should decide when. (You may prefer to leave it to her in your will.) Don't feel pressured to give it to Jennifer now because she neglected to select a silver pattern in anticipation of getting yours.

My advice: Enjoy using the silver. Tell your daughter that she's welcome to "borrow" it whenever she wishes, and "one day" it will probably be hers.

DEAR ABBY: I have read you for years, but this is my first time to write to you. Abby, why do people promise to write, to call, to send pictures and to visit, and never make good their promises? This is especially sad for older shut-ins. The mailbox is empty, the phone never rings, and their days are long and lonely.

It is so much better not to make promises to older people — then surprise them with your thoughtfulness.

My mother is 89. Four of her friends have promised to visit her "soon" — well, it's been a year since she's seen any of them. How can people be so unkind? Mom called today, asking me to pick up a birthday card for one of these forgetful friends.

I would love to see this in the paper. — NONA IN HAWAII

DEAR NONA: Some folks need a little nudge. Write again next week, and let me know if our nudge was effective.

DEAR ABBY: I am 77 and Nick is 80. We've been married for 60 years. Nick has always been a flashy dresser. I have a one-carat diamond ring I don't wear anymore because I am afraid of being robbed or killed. Nick said as long as I'm not wearing my diamond, he'd like to make it into a ring for himself.

Abby, it's not that I don't want him to have the diamond, it's just that I am afraid of what might happen to him.

Since I have refused him the ring, he is barely speaking to me. He also quit making love to me every Sunday afternoon, which he has done for 60 years. I suppose I could live without it, but I got so accustomed to it I feel deprived.

Should I give him the ring so he will be his old sweet and loving self again? — NICK'S WIFE

DEAR WIFE: If Nick doesn't realize that you don't want him to have the ring because you are concerned about his welfare, shame on him. (P.S. Someone should tell him if he doesn't use it, he'll lose it, and I don't mean the ring.)

Model more than just object of photos

By LAURA ACCINELLI
Copley News Service

She felt exposed, unbearably so. And it wasn't because she was working naked.

Modeling in 1974 for an international group of photographers gathered at Ansel Adams' Photography Workshop, Twinka Thiebaud had disrobed on the trail to Yosemite's Bridal Veil Falls. All of a sudden, they came after her, jockeying for position, yelling, aiming their cameras, firing.

"I was dumbfounded. Some sort of mob mentality had taken over. They had no sense of how to work with a live model," Thiebaud says today, safe in her Mar Vista, Calif., home.

Thiebaud saw San Francisco photographer Judy Dater near a tree trunk talking with the pioneering Imogen Cunningham, known for her work in nature. Dater, along with her then-husband, photographer Jack Welpott, had "discovered" Thiebaud at a party a couple of years earlier. Thiebaud joined the women, for respite.

"I was describing to Imogen how it felt to be in the midst of those — paparazzi," Thiebaud says with a slight sneer. "How incredibly vulnerable I felt."

Dater stepped back, directed the two and made the photograph that immortalized Thiebaud: a shy, nude, nymphlike Twinka in the sequoia forest with an aged, well-covered, worldly-wise Imogen, her camera slung round her neck, gazing at the young woman.

CNS Photo

The diminutive Twinka Thiebaud (five foot, seven inches), refuses to be simply the object of photographs. Her strong opinions about imgages has upset some top photographers.

IT WAS THE first photograph showing frontal nudity ever published by Life magazine, in its 1976 bicentennial issue.

"I was conveying what was going on inside of me, and Imogen understood. Judy understood," says Thiebaud. "All of this is definitely about connection."

That's the essence of the relationship between a fine-art photographer and his model, says Thiebaud. It's what makes for art.

"It's about relationships, about communion and building trust with another human being."

It's even more true these days as the renowned photographer's model, at 43, comes into her own, insisting on more participation, more collaboration, in the artistic process. She's not willing anymore to be just the subject — or the object — of a photograph, walking into someone's studio, getting undressed and asking for directions.

"I'm taking charge more," Thiebaud says, fiddling with photos of the face and body seen often in art books, magazines and exhibits.

At 5-foot-6, she is shorter than she photographs but as distinctively beautiful. She is even more interesting with age.

"As a model you give up power; you lose control over situations. Now I'm feeling much more into my own powers. It gives me a certain sense of strength and a confidence I never had."

Indeed, Thiebaud, who cared for writer Henry Miller ("Tropic of Cancer") in his last years and wrote a book on their dinner conversations, is seeking other, active avenues of expression.

CLEARLY A creative soul, she started a catering business several years ago. More recently, she stepped off the model's pedestal and onto the artist's stool, studying life-form drawing at Santa Monica College.

It's interesting, she says, to be on the other side, to recognize how certain models inspire by an energy they project and how others don't give any juice at all.

Yet, Thiebaud is not done with photography. She simply is approaching it more forthrightly, with a lawyer, written contracts, a say in the prints, a cut in the action and a clear vision of what Twinka wants.

"You feel bad when you don't ask for what you want and need. I don't want to feel bad anymore," says Thiebaud, who for years was naive, trusting and retiring.

She has worked with important photographers such as Cunningham, Dater, Lucien Clergue, Arnold Newman, Robert Heinecken. Photographs such as Heinecken's "Space/Time Metamorphosis No. 1," a collage of nude images of Thiebaud, brought her recognition.

Some photographers don't like the new, assertive Thiebaud — who built only a reputation as a model, not a nest egg — and won't work with her.

"They say, 'How dare she? Who does she think she is? Why should she have anything to say about my images?'

"But I'm giving more of myself, because I know who I am. I'm older. I've suffered. I have more empathy for people. I'm a much better model, because I'm concerned about the photographer, too. I'm not just thinking, 'Are they going to take a good picture of me?'"

LATELY SHE has been working with Los Angeles photographers John Williams and Steven Josefsberg.

It was serendipitous, says Williams, that Thiebaud entered his life. He has used her as an "object" for basic studies on space, time and light, yet Williams says he tries hard not to be a "heavy-handed photographer," pushing models into his design, molding them like clay to tell his story. Nowadays, his work is more about Thiebaud.

"Twinka's let me into the interior of her life," he says. "She has a strong will and a strong mind, and we really work together. The photographs have become a by-product of our relationship."

What distinguishes Thiebaud, says Josefsberg, is her ability to understand what the artist is attempting.

"She can get into my ideas and actually help me with them. With her, it's not a matter of a model simply posing."

In recognition of Thiebaud's valuable role in his endeavors, Josefsberg has signed a contract giving her a percentage of sales.

"She's setting a precedent for other artists' models. They are an integral part of the work, and should be treated as such. Certainly someone as astute as Twinka deserves just compensation."

But there isn't always a lot of money in art. Artists' models, unlike commercial and fashion models, usually earn about $10 an hour, says Thiebaud. As a photographer's model, she used to trade her time for prints. Similarly, fine-art photography generally doesn't generate the sort of income that commercial photography does.

Williams' and Josefsberg's photographs of Thiebaud will go into a book she is writing about her life in art. Titled "Twinka From Six to Sixty: Collected Images from the Life of an Artist's Model," it obviously won't be published for a while.

Raised in Northern California, Thiebaud began posing for her father, painter Wayne Thiebaud, at age 6. Each of her three sisters and two brothers had to take their turns sitting still, too.

TWINKA (her mother invented the name) disliked the work. It was hard to keep her dress clean day after day until a portrait was finished. Now she savors the experience.

"I feel proud and happy to have participated in my father's unfolding as an artist," Thiebaud says.

His first portrait of her hangs in her foyer, above the piano.

By 9 she was posing for pocket money in art schools. Eventually, the clothes came off, naturally and without inhibition, says Thiebaud. For that, she credits her background.

In 1972, Dater and Welpott saw her at a party and liked how she looked, liked how she dressed. She didn't know anything about fine-art photography, except that she thought it a stepchild of art.

Although she found herself in a new arena of expression, the work was just as strenuous, having to hold poses or expressions for 15 or 20 minutes while photographers set up shots on more sensitive, larger-format cameras.

A frustrated actress who had studied a bit with San Francisco's American Conservatory Theater, once in Los Angeles, Thiebaud tried acting, but quit after a few years.

"I met some of my great idols, and they all seemed unhappy and disillusioned, so it gave me a bitter taste."

After Thiebaud's first marriage ended, she moved in 1974 to Pacific Palisades to care for the dying Henry Miller, whom she had met at Big Sur when she was 17.

Her mother had been planning a documentary on one of his books and had brought her daughter along as a "chaperon." Instead of a rake, the two encountered a "grandfatherly man." Their relationship was one of family.

"Henry was my mentor and a wonderful friend. He always had a book to recommend. He unlocked the floodgates for me."

In 1980 she published "Reflections," written in Miller's voice, she says, from their many discussions.

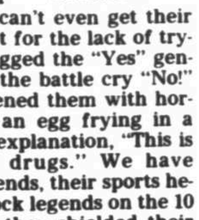
Kids who must take drugs have message for others

By ERMA BOMBECK



Bombeck

It's frustrating to declare a war and have no one show up for it. That's what has been happening in the war on drugs.

Forget the pride and the spirit of our young people marching off to battle to conquer the enemy. We can't even get their attention. It's not for the lack of trying. We have begged the "Yes" generation to form the battle cry "No!" We have threatened them with horror pictures of an egg frying in a skillet with the explanation, "This is your brain on drugs." We have flashed their friends, their sports heroes and their rock legends on the 10 o'clock news as they shielded their eyes from the shame of their addiction. They still consider it a big joke.

I don't know anymore what it would take to make just one child think twice about trying drugs, but I'm going to give it a shot:

A little over two years ago, I gathered a bunch of kids around me and put their stories between the covers of a new book due out this week called, "I Want to Grow Hair, I Want to Grow Up, I Want to Go to Boise." The title doesn't mean a lot unless you know that these are the three wishes of a 9-year-old girl in Washington state who is recovering from cancer.

In fact, all the kids in the book are recovering from cancer. You want to talk drugs? You're a civilian when it comes to their expertise. For more than 30 years they have been in the trenches and the front lines of cancer research trying out every experimental drug that comes down the pike to see if it kills or cures.

Although some of the kids are so little they can't pronounce or spell the drug they are taking, they're like a walking drugstore. What do these "goodies" do for them? Sometimes a drug curls feet and hands into positions that could be temporary or not. Others cause hair to fall out. Some create mood swings and sores in the mouth and down the esophagus. A few of the drugs render muscles useless and the users must have a wheelchair. Many have a genetic impact. Some drugs blow them up like an inflatable beach ball. Others make them lose weight and they become so weak they can barely hold on.

If I sound angry, count on it. You bet I'm sore. I'm angry because in a society where the drop-out rate from school is a national epidemic, I met a girl desperate to finish high school. In a world where people have every right and hope of becoming 70 or 80 years old, a little boy is fighting to be 8. Peer pressure, you say? You want to know what peer pressure is? It's a bald-headed 12-year-old girl at her first school dance!

One young man in remission said he tells his friends who do drugs, "You want to do drugs? Do chemotherapy for a year. It'll make you feel just as lousy."

These kids don't have a choice. You do.

Palm Beach 'a trip through society's playground'

By SHARON ACHATZ
Copley News Service

Sure, Palm Beach, Fla., is polo. And posh resorts. But it's also palmy beaches with nearly white sand, balmy breezes blowing off the green-blue Atlantic and down-home fun.

Palm Beach is not society's exclusive playground anymore.

Since the late 1880s, when railroad tycoon Henry Morrison Flagler opened a resort in Palm Beach — a sliver of an island between the Atlantic Ocean and the Intracoastal Waterway — the site has been considered a winter retreat for the rich.

Characterized by exclusive private clubs, polo grounds, posh boutiques, century-old mansions and lavish resorts, Palm Beach is the central gem in the sparkling necklace that is Palm Beach County.

But the county holds not so many pretenses as Palm Beach proper. Ranging 47 miles from Jupiter in the north to Boca Raton in the south, Palm Beach County is not so much a winter vacation site for the nation's wealthy as it is a year-round diversionary delight for everyman, a breezy haven crisscrossed with championship golf courses and croquet lawns, breathtaking beaches and an array of attractions ranging from sport to museums and theater.

You'll still pay top dollar for in-season travel there, and it may be worth it if you want to sneak a peek at the societied and celebs. If you're simply in search of fun in the sun and a taste of pampered life at discount prices, consider off-season travel. Beginning in May and extending to January, the rates are reduced at most resorts by as much as 55 percent — even the five-diamond variety.

AH, THE BEACHES. Or, more accurately, the water. Warm, soothing, gentle. No 60 degree F, 5-foot waves to shock your sunbathing soul. During an early May visit, the water registered 75 F with glistening, lapping waves that lured you into the ocean for swimming, snorkeling, scuba.

Most of the beaches are public, and many of those are associated with beachfront hotels. Rent a cabana or pastel-hued umbrella by the hour or for the day, as well as snorkeling gear, from small enterprises set up on the beaches in conjunction with hotels.

If sugary sand underfoot doesn't tickle your fancy or your toes, poolside options at beachfront hotels are palm paradise, too.

Holiday Inn on Singer Island, for example, has a 50-foot walkway that takes you from pool to ocean. Poolside offers the benefits of a refreshment bar and grill that bakes your lunch while you bake your skin to a golden glow and shallow pools for kiddie fun.

Since the ocean isn't cold enough to shock your senses, go window-shopping along Palm Beach's Worth Avenue. The pricey items in these boutiques offer all the luxuries of life, from paintings by masters to $8 million necklaces to collectible quail eggs to outrageous fashion.

For a glimpse into what made Palm Beach what it is today, stop by the Henry Morrison Flagler museum in Palm Beach. Built as a wedding gift for Flagler's third wife, this 50-room mansion, called Whitehall and billed as a palace for an American prince, cost $2.5 million to build and $1.5 million to furnish and was completed in 1901. It became the Flaglers' seasonal home from January to April each year, helping to define the social season and serving as the social center for the most prestigious gatherings of the place and time.

RESTORED TO ITS original Victorian splendor, complete with lush landscaping and elegant period furnishings, Whitehall became a museum in 1960. From the majestic ballroom, to the music room with its Baccarat crystal chandeliers, to the dining room where Vanderbilts and Rockefellers dined, you can see the opulence of a bygone era and practically feel society surround you.

Or get a sense of what the region was prior to its development as a playground for the rich and famous. Near Delray Beach at the southern end of the county is the Loxahatchee Wildlife Reserve, where you can take an airboat tour of the Everglades, that marshy wilderness that covers nearly 4,000 square miles of Florida.

The boats make an unbelievable racket, but your tour guide issues earplugs for all. Once he has taken you out a distance into the marshes — setting herons and ducks in flight and alligators in motion — he'll stop the motor.

You're initially engulfed by what seems to be silence, but then you hear the sounds of birds, water and wildlife surrounding you. Living in this extraordinary environment — where the water is never more than 6 inches deep and the saw grass can grow as tall as 15 feet — are more than 300 species of birds alone. As you hear their calls and see the water ripple next to the boat as an alligator glides by, you can't help but get a vision of the Indians who used to travel quietly through the Everglades in dugout canoes.

OTHER COUNTY options: world-class polo at Palm Beach Polo and Country Club, Lion Country Safari, baseball spring training for Atlanta Braves and Montreal Expos, deep sea fishing in Gulf Stream waters, freshwater fishing in lakes, streams.

NIGHTTIME

Bridging the gap from day to night, if you time your visit right, is SunFest. Each spring, West Palm Beach hosts Florida's largest jazz festival outdoors along the Intracoastal Waterway.

Enjoy four days and nights of flashy waterskiing, fireworks, street performers, jazzy rhythm (last year's performers included Lee Ritenour and Spyro Gyra), ethnic Food Fest booths and showcases of both fine art and folk crafts.

The year-round traditional night spot of Palm Beach proper is Bradley's Saloon. According to natives, anyone seeking nightlife in Palm Beach goes to Bradley's, so you're likely to run into all kinds of folks, from celebs to Worth Avenue shop owners to beach bums. No live music, but full of lively folks.

An up-and-coming Palm Beach location is Alligator Joe, with sportfishing and hunting memorabilia adorning its walls. The drink of favor seems to be Gator Beer, brewed and bottled in Orlando, Fla. — and don't miss deep-fried gator nuggets as a touristy snack. When the band's not playing, a juke box offers everything from '60s Motown to classic country Cline.

And there are scores of down-home beach bars the length of the county — Fathoms on Singer Island was a favorite. Bands fill the salty air with lilting Caribbean-style music, and drink menus are heavy on the fruit-rum variety with names such as Shark Attack and Planter's Punch, considered the Palm Beach drink by some.

If you're looking for action that will raise your blood pressure a little rather than promote island serenity, go to the dogs at the Palm Beach Kennel Club in West Palm Beach for fast-paced greyhound racing.

If you've never been, be prepared for breathtaking sights as these graceful creatures sprint around the track at speeds up to 37 miles per hour. The races are over in seconds, but are paced at intervals that give a full night of betting and entertainment — especially if you opt for an elegant dinner in the Paddock Dining Room instead of a seat in the stands.

BACK TO THE beaches, ever at the beaches, don't forget a moonlight stroll — where the sensuous water, caressing breezes and sparkling lights comfort your soul.

Towering palms, gentle Atlantic breezes, waters warmed by the Gulf Stream, white sand and ocean-front hotels make the beaches of Palm Beach, Fla. a sunseeker's delight.

Other options: Jai Alai Fronton, Burt Reynolds' Jupiter Theater, Viking Princess' Friday night casino cruise.

Boca Raton Resort in Boca Raton. This five-diamond resort is uniquely positioned to offer a variety of vacation experiences, depending upon which of the resort's facilities you choose to visit.

The Cloister, built in 1926, is Old World charm in a rosy sort of way. The exterior walls are positively pink, and its secret sculptured gardens, sparkling fountains, tiled courtyards and hundreds of antiques whisper classicism. The gracious rooms have a European feel and decor, and all have views to either a golf course or courtyard.

The 27-story Tower offers a more sophisticated, cosmopolitan feel. Its first two floors are made up of meeting rooms, but the private rooms above have stunning vacation views — 180 degrees of either golf courses or the Intracoastal Waterway.

Mizner's Dream is a paneled boat that shuttles you along the Intracoastal between the Cloister/Tower and the Boca Beach Club, which fronts the ocean and the waterway.

With its Mediterranean styling of white stucco and terra-cotta tile, the Boca Beach Club's rooms have either ocean or waterway views. Many rooms have ocean-view lanais, or guests can rent private cabanas along the ocean — a popular option for Cloister guests who want to move from Old World luxury to California fun for a day.

Recreational features include: 22 tennis courts, 2 golf courses, croquet, 4 pools, private ocean beach, marina, health club.

THE BREAKERS in Palm Beach. Built in 1926 and inspired by the Italian Renaissance, this five-diamond resort is unabashed European elegance, offering the feel of an overseas vacation.

Throughout the resort, the decor of the public rooms reflects Renaissance artistry. Ceilings are adorned with magnificent frescoes. On the walls are several fine 15th-century Flemish tapestries. The lobby, with its vaulted ceiling and collection of antiques, overlooks a colorful, tranquil central courtyard. Its ballrooms, often used by Fortune 500 companies for board meetings, have impressive ocean views.

The guest rooms, overlooking the ocean and courtyard, are furnished in an eclectic fusion of influences considered typically Breakers: the Renaissance, the Roaring '20s (when the hotel was built) and the tropical climate of Palm Beach.

Sunday brunch at The Beach Club is a legend you must not miss. The sumptuous selections range from traditional breakfast fare to seafood to pasta to prime rib, all in a casually elegant ocean-view setting.

Recreational features include: private ocean beach, 19 tennis courts, 2 golf courses, croquet, swimming pool, fitness center.

PGA Sheraton in Palm Beach Gardens. Think golf, golf, golf. National headquarters for the PGA of America, this four-diamond resort has four championship courses kept in tournament condition year-round — and a fifth course a short ride away.

The recently renovated resort's lobby and lounge areas ooze Palm Beach panache with a peachy pink, mint and jade contemporary decor overlooking gardens and golf courses.

THE LUXURIOUS rooms feature private balcony or terrace with views to the courses or a crystal-blue 26-acre lake used for sailing, canoeing, kayaking and sunbathing.

In addition to its world-class golf and instruction, PGA is one of the best locations to get a taste of up-and-coming croquet. The same attention given to the meticulously manicured golf greens goes into the care of its croquet lawns.

Whether you're sports-minded or not, you'll gladly ease into the lifestyle as you stroll on the green, dressed in white with mallet in hand for a refined afternoon of conquering foes. Strategy (as explained by resort personnel, if desired) is engaging, the atmosphere inviting.

Recreational features include: 5 golf courses, 19 tennis courts, 5 croquet courts, 6 racquetball courts, swimming pool, health club.

Residential. Along the Intracoastal Waterway, the average cost of residences is $3 million to $4 million. Oceanfront estates in Palm Beach proper are valued along the lines of $18 million.

The best ways to get glimpses of these mansions is to rent bicycles and pedal along a pathway adjacent to the waterway or along the beach. Or, you can take a trip down the waterway on the Island Queen, an authentic paddle wheeler that departs from Riviera Beach.

Don't worry about Palm Beach residents being disturbed by your gazing — they probably won't even be there. Seventy-five percent of Palm Beach residents are seasonal, living there only 3 to 4 months out of each year. Personally, I don't understand why they — or anyone — would ever want to leave Palm Beach County.

Crab Pot, Riviera Beach. Facing the Intracoastal Waterway, this inexpensive find seats you at green wooden picnic tables and offers a menu loaded with fresh fish specialties and a lobster aquarium from which you can pick your dinner.

OUR WAITRESS told us not to order the crab, saying it wasn't particularly good that day. It takes confidence to admit that when you're called the Crab Pot, so we followed her advice and sampled grilled flounder, blackened swordfish and crab cakes. All excellent, with the swordfish's delicate but flavorful spiciness a favorite.

Prices range from $8 to $15; the atmosphere is casual fun. But buy Key lime pie someplace else. This regional specialty was pretty average here.

Charley's Crab in Jupiter. Dress ranges from casual to dressy, but the food is definitely dressy. Smoked bluefish pate, Seafood Pasta Pagliara (sauteed shrimp, salmon, scallops, mussels and fresh spinach in a rich sauce of garlic and herbs), cracked oatmeal bread (warm, homey flavor).

Also exquisite were roast rack of lamb with mint vinaigrette and paella (fresh fish, mussels and clams simmered in a light clam broth with Italian sausage, chicken, fresh vegetables and saffron rice).

Overlooking the Intracoastal, this location is noisy and energetic, with live entertainment. Service is first-class, with knowledgeable and eager waiters.

Even if you're completely full — which you probably will be after the generous portions — don't pass up the cafe bianca (Kahlua and milk processed through a capuccino machine). It's superb, smooth, relaxation in a glass.

Dinner entrees range from $15 to $25; lunch and brunch menus as well.

Beach Club Brunch at Breakers in Palm Beach. Held each Sunday, this is decadent dining in a casual atmosphere made elegant by a sweeping view of the crystalline ocean and a harpist circulating among the tables.

This food fantasy has such an enormous selection of foods that you must organize your sampling — I found it easiest to do so by beginning with traditional breakfast items, followed by fresh fruits and cheeses, pasta and seafood, luncheon items and then desserts.

BREAKFAST FOODS begin with individual omelets that are made to order, blintzes served in a sweet, creamy sauce and a full assortment of breakfast meats, eggs and pastries.

Breakers' chefs each week create edible charcuterie masterpieces almost too eye-appealing to eat. Glazed loaves of pates, smoked salmon, imported cheeses and fruit are displayed with tallow and ice sculptures.

The pasta was disappointing, but the seafood — including raw oysters and clams, chilled shrimp and delicate salads — was stunning.

Daytona Beach visitors literally experience life in fast lane

By JAMES V. GILL
Copley News Service

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. — On race day, the Daytona International Speedway vibrates with sound and color.

The high-tech engines of the race cars speak a variety of languages — a high whine from one, a guttural growl from another.

Whatever the language, the race cars are doing what automobiles have been doing in Daytona Beach for almost 90 years — going fast.

That's how Daytona Beach got its nickname, "World's Most Famous Beach." Early automobile pioneers first raced on the beach here in 1902.

Why the beach? It was straight and it was smooth, the gently sloping sand packed firm by the caressing surf. Between 1902 and 1935, 13 land auto speed records were set on the beach. The last was by Sir Malcolm Campbell, when he drove his famous car, "Bluebird," at 276.820 mph.

In addition to the man-against-the-clock runs, an oval track was set up on the beach near Ponce Inlet for bender-banging, man-against-man racing.

When growth along the beach finally made racing there impractical, William "Bill" France built the Daytona International Speedway and opened it in February 1959 with the first Daytona 500.

Even if there's no racing when you visit Daytona Beach, it doesn't mean you can't visit the speedway. Tours are available from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. every day, except on race days and days when the track is rented for testing. The 15- to 20-minute tour uses a minibus to circle the track and drive along the pit road while a tour guide explains the operation of the 455-acre facility. Cost is $1 for adults and 50 cents for children.

When cars are testing on the track, mostly in December and January, visitors can watch from the grandstands at no charge.

Although cars may not be racing on the beach any more, they're still allowed to drive — at 10 mph — on 18 miles of them. Motorists are charged a $3 per vehicle access fee to cruise the beach or find parking places in the up-slope sand. The tradition is so popular that it's near bumper-to-bumper, stereo-blasting traffic on weekends.

Despite its popularity and status as a unique tradition, city and business leaders are starting to talk about putting an end to the beach driving. It's part of an ongoing Daytona Beach renaissance effort to erase the city's image as a honky-tonk party town.

A major step in the city's master plan was the opening of the Daytona Beach Marriott. The 17-story, pyramid-shape convention and vacation resort is visible for miles. All of the 402 rooms, with their pastel, Florida-inspired decor, have a view of the beach.

The Marriott is across the street from the white, futuristic Ocean Center Convention Complex, completed in 1985, which features trade shows and expositions plus entertainment events ranging from Lawrence Welk to heavy metal.

A block away is the 2,500-seat Peabody Auditorium, a more traditional performing arts center. In late July the auditorium will host the London Symphony Orchestra and other visiting artists for the weeklong Florida International Festival.

Although a theme park is part of the renaissance master plan, Daytona Beach officials know they can't compete with the likes of Walt Disney World. They also know they have something Walt Disney World can never build — 23 miles of Atlantic Ocean beach. They're hoping travelers will get their surf and sun in Daytona Beach before, after or while commuting to the other attractions: Marineland (30 miles), Kennedy Space Center (55 miles), St. Augustine (55 miles), Silver Springs (70 miles), Sea World (70 miles), Walt Disney World and Epcot (75 miles) or Busch Gardens (120 miles).

The Marriott is sure to make a Daytona Beach stay a pleasant one. Among its amenities are a concierge floor with upgraded rooms, security key access and private lounge; a heated indoor-outdoor pool; a health club; 33,000 square feet of retail shops; and 13,000 square feet of convention space.

Dining "on property" can be a never-ending adventure. The family-style Parkside Seafood Grille has seating both indoors and on the terrace. Breakfast, lunch and dinner are served with evening entrees ranging from $7 to $16. For dessert, don't miss the macadamia nut pie, a whipped chocolate confection made crunchy by the chopped macadamia nuts.

Coquina's is the hotel's gourmet restaurant. The food and the turn-of-the-century Florida motif and waiters' uniforms are delightful. Entrees range from $19.50 to $29. The brandy dessert tray features a variety of Remy Martin brandies, including Louis XIII. Very good, a brandy taster reported. It should be at $65 a glass.

Splash, a pool bar and grill, is for those who don't want to change out of their swimsuits. The burgers are generous and the drinks refreshing, either indoors or by the pool.

Bernkastel Festhaus, named for the German town famous for its wines, is not a Marriott eatery but is housed in the hotel's Clock Tower Shops. The Festhaus specialty is a Reuben sandwich with a glass of Hacker-Pschorr beer imported from Munich. For evening fun, the Marriott's Clock Tower Lounge features easy-listening music and, for more high-energy excitement, the 450-seat high-tech Waves lounge offers live or disc jockey-selected music.

How did it "used to be" in this Atlantic Coast resort area? Several Daytona Beach parks and museums give visitors an insight into the past.

The Museum of Arts and Sciences, which opened in 1986, has the oldest relic — a 13-foot-tall skeleton of a Giant Ground Sloth believed to have lived 50,000 to 100,000 years ago. It was found not far from the museum.

Among the museum's permanent collections is one of Cuban art, believed to be the largest outside Cuba, and "Arts in America: 1750-1900," which displays furniture, paintings, silver, glass and miniatures.

The museum, which also has traveling exhibits, a planetarium and a sculpture garden, is open 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Tuesday through Friday and noon to 4 p.m. Saturday. Admission is free on Wednesday afternoons.

The 17-story, pyramid-shaped Marriott towers above other hotels along the Daytona Beach Boardwalk. It is just many attractions, on the beach made popular by motorists cruising along the sand.

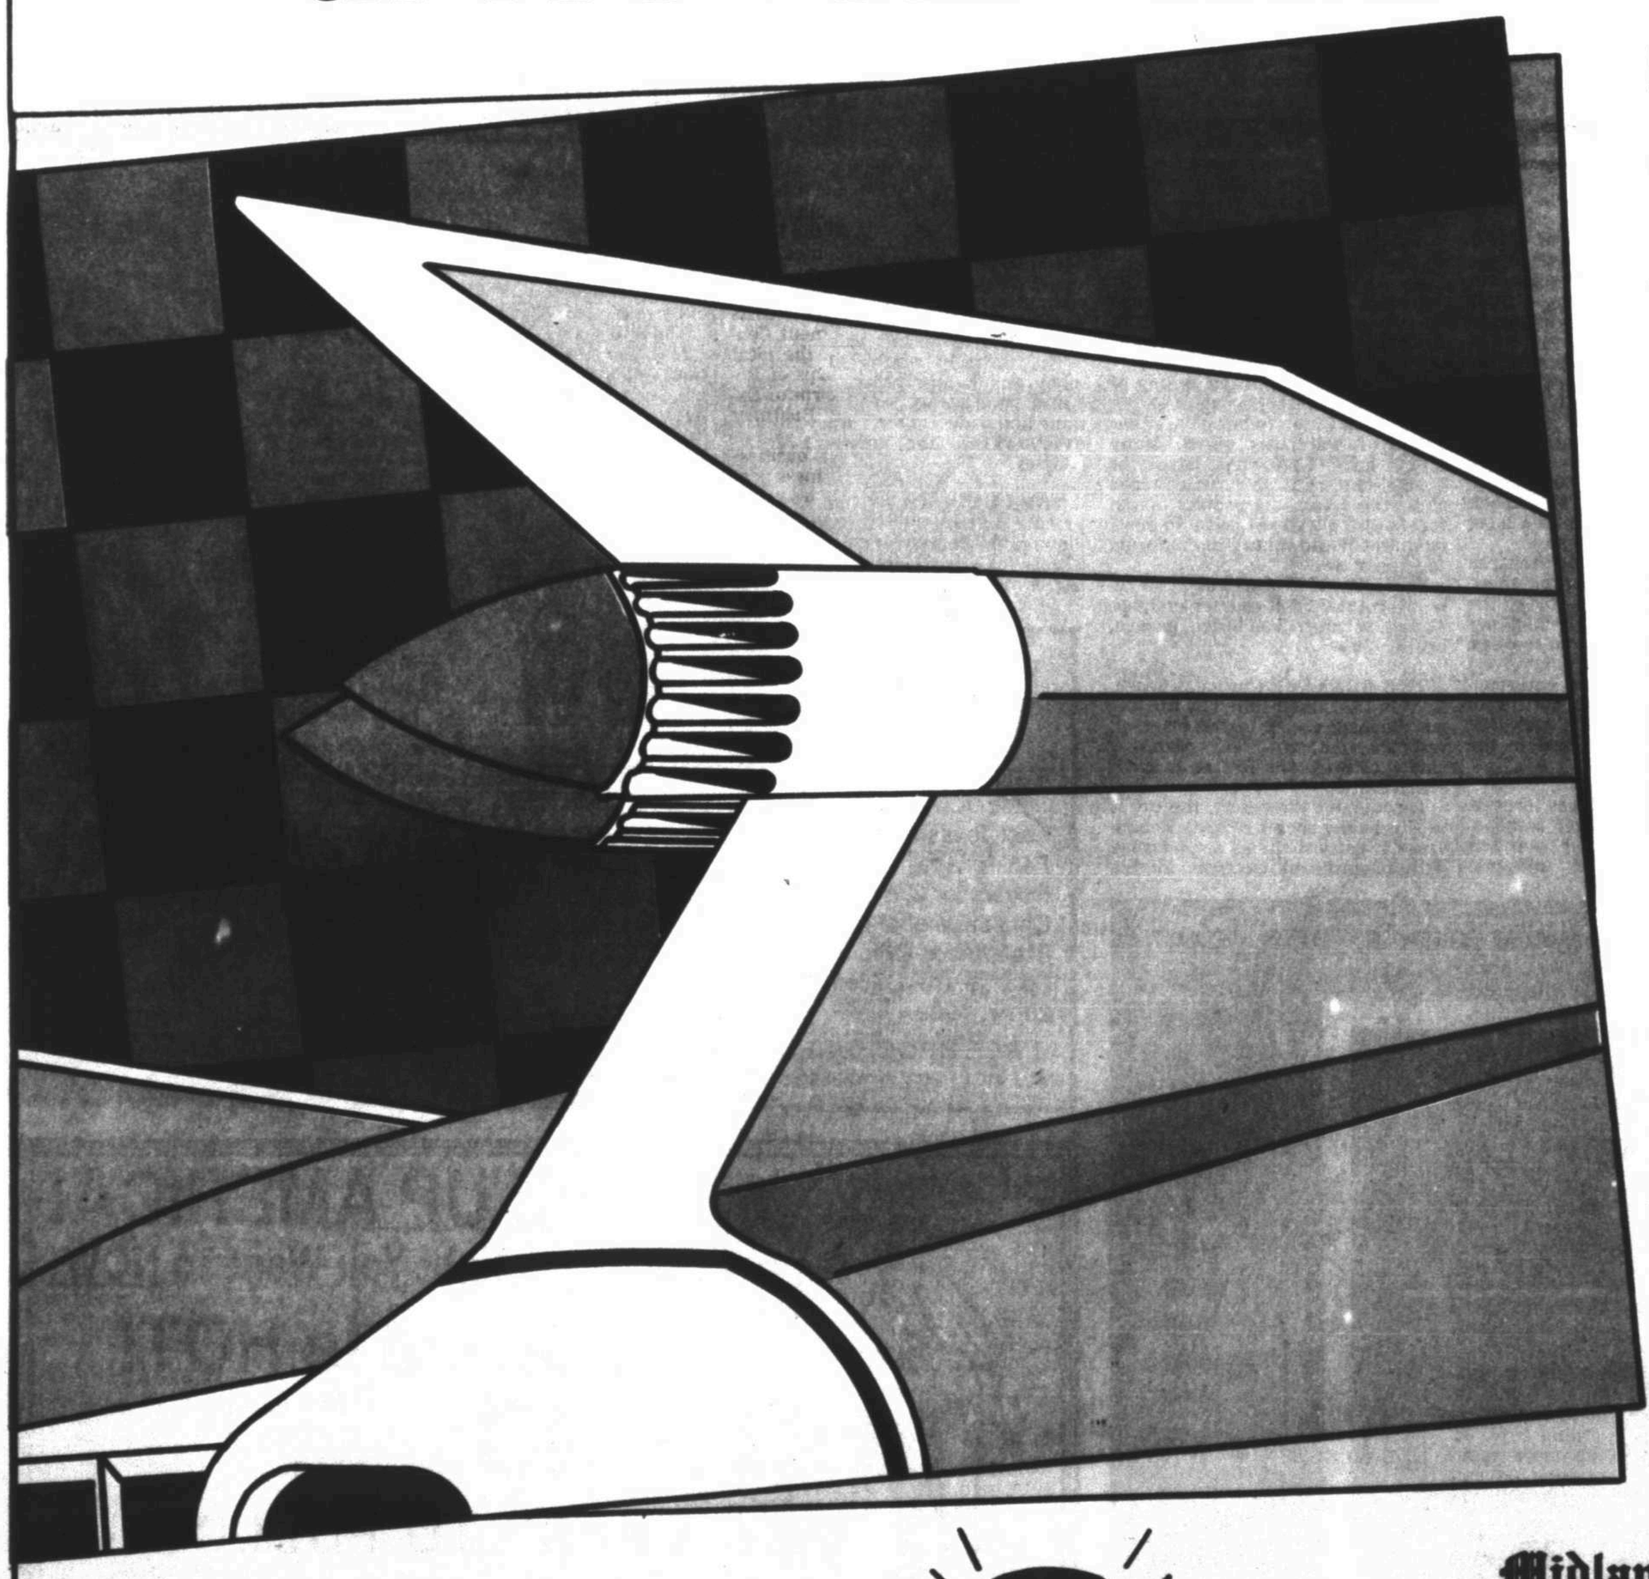
This September you can drive 'em wild



September 1989 may be the best time ever to buy a new car, truck or van. Several factors including prices, inventories, and the economy all contribute to creating the most significant buyers' market in years.

Here's Why:

PRICES-Sticker prices on the 1990 models will jump 6%-8% higher than last year. Increased raw material and promotional costs have reduced car makers' profits and forced them to raise prices for the new model year.

INVENTORIES-Dealers anticipated better sales this year, and inventories are much higher than expected. When dealers say they are overstocked and have to move cars out, it isn't hype. Many cars on the lots came in before price hikes last May. Since dealers paid less for these cars, you can bargain harder, and save. You'll find excellent automotive values on your dealer's lot.

THE ECONOMY-The Permian Basin is getting stronger every day. The Midland auto dealers are wanting to make it even better by offering better selections and better prices. And since interest rates have been fluctuating, you'll probably find financing rates in your favor.

NEW REGULATIONS-The new federal fuel economy regulations require cars to be more fuel efficient. If you're looking for luxury, power and roominess in a large car, you'll save money by buying now.

DEALER COSTS-Dealers pay expensive interest charges for every day a car sits on their lot. Current large inventories hurt the dealers' pocketbooks, and make them more eager to sell.

TIMING-The new 1990 models begin to arrive in September and October to take delivery on new models off the books and off the lots.

NEW MODELS-1990 models introduced in 1989 are priced to sell now, and will keep blue book value as current models all the way to 1991.

If you're thinking about buying a car anytime in the next year, you can't afford to wait. Visit your favorite dealer, during September and take advantage of Drive 'Em Wild Sale savings.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Consumer spending rose 0.9 percent in August, its biggest advance in four months, while personal incomes edged up 0.4 percent for their ninth consecutive advance, the Commerce Department reports.

The rise in consumer spending followed a 0.6 percent gain in July and was the largest increase since a 1.1 percent advance last April. The August spending rate was driven in part by strong auto sales. Since then, however, auto sales have slowed.

Nevertheless, today's report showed that consumer spending continued to be strong at the midpoint of the July-September quarter.

Consumer spending is watched closely as a barometer of economic health since it accounts for about two-thirds of the nation's economic activity.

The advance in personal incomes followed a 0.7 percent increase in July. The slower pace was attributed to strikes against several major telephone companies. Personal incomes have risen steadily since a 0.3 percent decline in November 1988.

The statistics on Americans' income growth and spending habits provided fresh evidence that the economy is not in danger of toppling into a recession.

The report also showed that Americans' disposable, or after-tax income rose 0.4 percent in August, down slightly from a 0.7 percent after-tax increase in July.

Americans' savings rate, savings as a percent of disposable income, fell 6.7 percent, down from July's 1.7 percent increase.

Gas sales down

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas marketed gas production fell from May to June, Railroad Commission Chairman Kent Hance said Thursday.

Production in June totaled 335,506,655 mcf, or thousand cubic feet, compared to May production of 355,520,722 mcf. In June 1988, production was 346,265,755 mcf.

Marketed gas production is the gas left after liquid hydrocarbons have been separated on the lease from the "wet" gas that is usually produced at the wellhead.

It does not include gas that is used to fuel production-related equipment on the lease site, or gas that is otherwise not marketed.

Total gas production in Texas in June was 443,694,396 mcf.

Local company looks to double operation

Hy-Bon acquires NATCO division

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

Changing times, characterized by more enhanced oil recovery projects, a need to produce wells more effeciently, and growing environmental problems involving volatile hydrocarbons has helped a Midland compressor company turn hard times into good times.

Hy-Bon Engineering Co. Inc., a Midland compressor company which markets worldwide, announced this week that it had acquired the assets and inventory of the NATCO (National Tank Co.) compressor division in an ambitious expansion move that makes it possibly the largest manufacturer and distributer of low horsepower compressors in the nation. The move is also expected to eventually double Hy-Bon's sales, local workforce and manufacturing facilities.

"The NATCO purchase was a perfect fit to our operation, which has focused on the low horsepower needs of the oil industry," says Jim Woodcock, president of the closely-held Hy-Bon, which was founded in Midland in 1952 by Ralph Nelson, a mechanical engineer.

"NATCO offers four compressor models — 10,14,20 and 32 horsepower — that will fit perfectly in our inventory. When NATCO's inventory of 100 rental units is added to Hy-Bon's we will have over 350 rental packages which should be the largest in the nation," Woodcock said.

He said the company would almost double its Midland employees from 35 to 65 and that he was now in the process of locating new manufacturing facilities in Midland. He expects sales, which will get an assist from a national advertising campaign, to eventually bump $10 million annually.

Also adding to the effort will be a sales force and network of distributors which came with the NATCO purchase. "We will use the NATCO distributors for sales and service, and in some places will have to install new distributors," he added.

Schools assist local businessmen

Provide computer programs, data, planning

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

Government statistics indicate 70 percent of new employment recently has come from the expansion of existing businesses, or start-up of new businesses. Dr. Jerry Jones, division chairman, business studies at Midland College, points out that 98 percent of all non-farm businesses are considered small by government standards.

However, government statistics also show that a majority of small businesses fail in their first year of existence.

To help lower the failure rate — and at the same time expand the Permian Basin's economic base — Midland College, Odessa College and the University of Texas of the Permian Basin have implemented programs made to improve an entrepreneur's chances for success.

Among Midland College's efforts are its Economic Development Center, run by Dr. Jones and the local chapter of the Service Corps of Retired Executives/Active Corps of Executives and the Small Business Institute.

Jones, his staff in the business studies division, and business students at Midland College all work with would-be entrepreneurs or those wanting to expand or strengthen their current business. Among the tools they use is a room full of computers that runs software assisting businesspersons with everything from writing a business plan to getting a loan and marketing strategies.

The University of Texas of the Permian Basin operates the Small Business Development Center, directed by Lily Tercero. She has recently begun holding sessions in Midland at the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce offices, 1410 Lamesa. She comes the second and fourth Tuesdays of the month.

"The Small Business Development Center was set up to offer counselling to the entrepreneur wanting to start a business, or who has an existing company," she explains, adding that she and her co-workers try to tailor their assistance to the needs of the individual and stressing that the counseling is free. Tercero's center is responsible for helping businesses in 16 counties.

Along with counseling, the SBDC can refer the businessperson to other sources of assistance in related fields, low-cost workshops and seminars. In addition, the center can arrange for UTPB business students to analyze the client business and point out needs and suggest changes.

The SBDC is a joint effort between UTPB, the Small Business Association, and the Private Industry Council, according to Tercero, who has been with SBCD 14 months. A graduate of UTPB, she holds a master's degree in business administration and a bachelor's degree in marketing.

Odessa College took a different approach when it established the Business Training Center, a part of the college's Continuing Education department.

The center concentrates on training a client business's employees. As Martha Kunkel, the center's director explains, "We can take instructors to the business's site to work with the employees on a schedule the employer helps establish."

She said she networks with businesses to determine their needs and find ways to set up and implement training programs — on everything from microcomputers to accounting to welding — at minimal cost to the business.

Not only does the center train employees, it helps employers meet state and federal legal requirements and provide worksite safety training.

Kunkel added that "Government regulations have grown sufficiently complex that small to medium-size busineses are bewildered. Large companies have the money to establish in-house training to meet all these regulations; small businesses don't."

Karen Johnson, director of OC's Continuing Education division, says that while Odessa College is not allowed to establish a center in Midland, she works closely with Dr. Jones and others at Midland College. "If we identify a need in Midland County, we'll refer them to Midland College."

The training center was established, according to Johnson, in response to the continuing education's continued growth, which she attributed to the educational needs of local businesses.

The center and other efforts by Odessa College, Midland College and UTPB are designed to improve the bottom line for area businesses. As Johnson put it, "We think (our center) helps businesses and as their businesses grow, it will have an impact on the local economy."

Capital gains plan studied

Little impact predicted for oilpatch

By JULIE JEROME
Business/Oil Writer

A proposal to reduce the tax paid on capital gains would impact Wall Street more than the local oil man, according to local accountants and independent oil industry representatives.

Two weeks ago, the House Ways and Means Committee sent to the House a plan that would cut the effective capital gains rate to 19.6 percent for the next two years and then protect such income from taxes caused by inflationary increases in the property's value.

According to Congressional Budget Office estimates, that would increase tax collections by $2.9 billion in the fiscal year ending Sept. 30, 1990, by encouraging more rapid turnover of assets like securities and real estate, although the incentive to trade would be relatively short-lived.

President Bush supports the House Ways and Means proposal, and said he would veto a tax rate increase. This was in reaction to a plan by House Democratic leaders that would raise taxes for the richest 600,000 couples and individuals to pay for new tax deductions for Individual Retirement Accounts. Their plan also includes a scaled-down version of the capital gains tax cut sought by Bush.

Proponents say cutting the capital gains tax would benefit capital formation and make American industry more competitive with foreign countries, many of which have no tax on capital gains.

But three Permian Basin oil industry representatives say the oil man needs a tax break on risk capital, and that a reprieve from taxes on intangible drilling costs and depletion allowances is much more important than a break on capital gains.

The rise and fall of the IRA

"Deductions for intangible drilling costs and depletion allowances would be more effective in making oil and gas investments," according to Charles Perry, chairman of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association (PBPA). "The PBPA is not going to expend resources for voting for it (reduction in capital gains). We support it. We're always for lower taxes."

Ted Collins, president elect of the PBPA agreed.

A break in the capital gains tax would not spur more drilling, he said. It would cause oil properties to sell, which is positive for the oil business, but drillers and production companies need "other tax incentives more," he said.

"A lower tax rate would facilitate the sale of properties," he said.

And Glenn Brant, president of the PBPA, said due to the complete restructuring of the oil industry after the plummet of the price of oil, "problems with the oil and gas industry will not be solved by capital formation.

"We need risk capital," he continued. "We've got an alternative minimum tax, which (should be reduced or repealed because it) is a detriment to raising capital. We need incentives to raise capital, not decreases in the capital gains tax."

Two Midland accountants said the proposal to decrease the capital gains tax would impact Wall Street investors, particularly long-term investors.

Environment tops energy concerns

By MATTHEW L. WALD
New York Times News Service

MONTREAL — In a striking shift of focus, the 3,400 delegates gathered here from 91 countries to discuss the world energy picture have one dominant concern: the environment.

Price and supply, the traditional focus of energy suppliers, have almost been squeezed off the agenda.

The delegates represent some of the world's most prominent experts on oil, coal, natural gas, shale oil, hydroelectricity, nuclear power, photovoltaic power, solar thermal power and even peat moss.

But in most of the 160 technical papers presented here, the dozens of panel discussions and the major addresses, the worry at this triennial event has shifted from oil embargoes and declining reserves of fossil fuels to urban smog, acid rain and, above all, global warming.

The question, clearly, is no longer where the fuel will come from — one study released here noted a 30 percent increase in estimated oil reserves in the last three years — but how to use it safely.

The producers clearly have cause for worry.

Industrial emissions of carbon dioxide, which scientists believe must be limited to slow global warming, could be 70 percent higher than current levels by 2020, assuming moderate economic growth, according to a major study released Wednesday by the World Energy Conference.

"It is unambiguous and beyond doubt that we are changing the composition of the atmosphere by a measurable and important amount," said Lord Marshall of Goring, chairman of Britain's Central Electric Generating Board, in a keynote address.

The program includes an outline for a panel discussion on global warming, listing topics for discussion, but begins by saying, "The existence of a greenhouse effect is not to be debated."

For such a huge group of energy suppliers to put price, supply and production technology in second place is surprising, many of those present said.

John Wakeham, Britain's secretary of state for energy, contrasted the concern now with the belief by Western nations in the 1970s that oil and other fuels were dwindling.

That, he said, "has been revealed as a gloomy fantasy and one of the most spectacularly mistaken forecasts of recent history."

But even after the oil glut of 1986 drowned the talk of shortage, the talk did not shift to the environment.

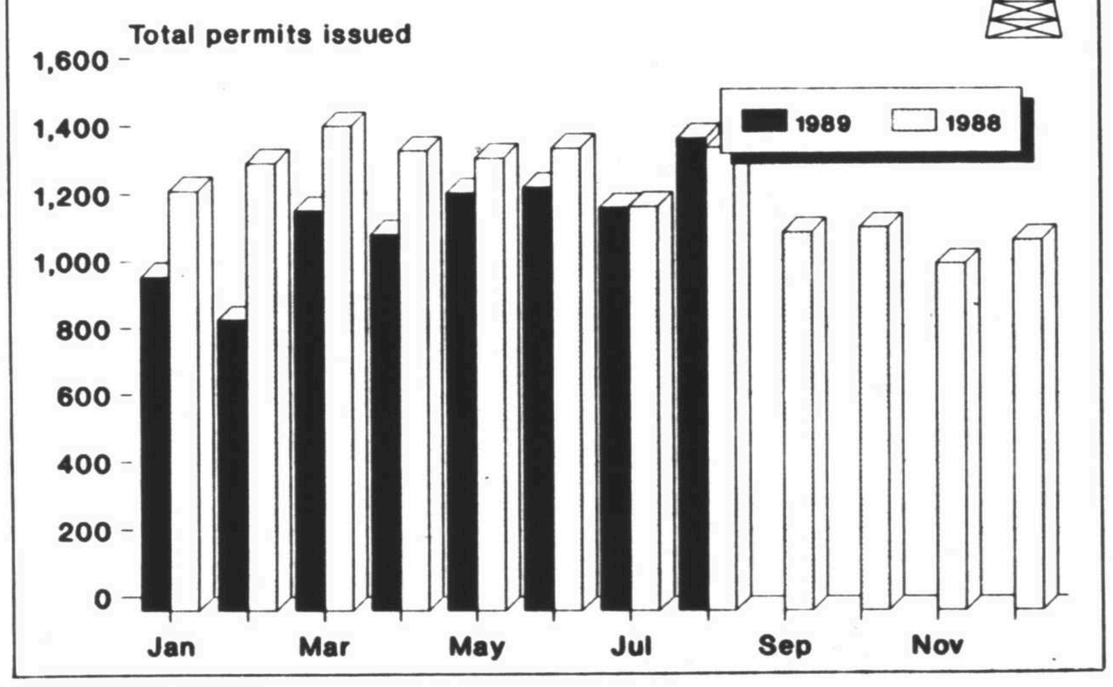
Texas Permits to Drill
Monthly Totals, 1988-1989



Source: Texas Railroad Commission

Drilling permits increase

The Texas Railroad Commission issued a total of 1,403 drilling permits in August, up from 1,200 issued in July, and up from August 1988's total of 1,376. The total included 887 permits to drill new oil and gas tests, 46 to reenter existing wellbores, 88 to deepen existing holes, 206 to plugback existing holes, and 14 for other wells. There were also 162 amended permits issued. The Midland area, District 8, received 158 permits. In the first eight months of 1989, the commission has issued 9,281 drilling permits, down 13 percent from the 10,690 issued during the same period in 1988.

More wells completed

Texas oil and gas operators reported 266 gas and 523 oil completions in August, the Texas Railroad Commission reports. The July total was 196 gas and 324 oil completions. In August 1988, there were 217 gas and 581 oil completions. The Midland area, District 8, had five gas completions and 98 oil completions. In the first eight months of 1989, the commision has recorded a total of 5,601 well completions, down 20 percent from the 7,066 completions recorded in the same time period of 1988. There were 907 holes plugged and 250 dry holes.

Basin, U.S. counts rise

From Staff Reports

Both the U.S. and Permian Basin rig counts headed higher.

Baker Hughes Inc. reports that the U.S. total jumped 15 to 965, remaining above year-ago levels a third week.

The Permian Basin tally rose one to 104 after rising 10 the previous week.

Eddy County, N.M. was the most active in the Basin with 13 rigs working, followed by Andrews County with 12 rigs.

Irion and Howard counties were left with no drilling activity while Pecos County gained a new rig.

Among major oil producing states, Wyoming posted the largest increase, up six. North Dakota was up four, while New Mexico gained three, Kansas and Texas each were up two and Colorado was up by one.

Louisiana, Oklahoma and Michigan each declined by two while Ohio and Pennsylvania were off one. California was unchanged.

Hance calls for more gas storage

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas Railroad Commissioner Kent Hance has urged the state's natural gas industry to increase the amount of natural gas storage as a precaution against harsh winter weather.

Such action, Hance said, would enhance consumer confidence in natural gas as a cost-efficient and dependable energy source.

"Although Texas has a bountiful and dependable supply of natural gas, the industry would be wise to prepare for the worst possible weather imaginable," Hance said.

Pride gets expansion funds

From Staff Reports

Pride Pipeline Limited Partnership of Abilene, the crude oil gathering affiliate of Pride Refining Inc. announced today a credit expansion with a three-year term facility and a three-year letter of credit.

According to Pride, the $45 million letter of credit represents a 50 percent increase. The expanded credit was arranged by NCNB Dallas.

Pride says the increased credit will allow the company to expand its operations in the Texas, Oklahoma and New Mexico markets. Currently the company employs 450 in the West Texas area and gathers approximately 45,000 barrels of crude oil daily.

The Pride refinery in Abilene is connected to Dyess Air Force Base in Abilene and Carswell Air Force Base in Fort Worth, making it one of the largest suppliers of military fuel to the U.S. government.

MEETINGS

Petroleum accounants to host Tom Craddick

State Representative Tom Craddick of Midland will be the guest speaker at Tuesday's meeting of the Petroleum Accountants Society of the Permian Basin. The meeting will be at 8 p.m. at Ranchland Hills Country Club.

The meeting will be preceded by a technical session at 5:30 p.m., featuring J.D. Faircloth, chief financial officer of Colony Energy Corp. and member of the Midland City Council. Faircloth will discuss "Explanation of the City of Midland Budget."

Craddick

Craddick will discuss "The 71st Legislative Session." He has served as State Representative from District 76 since 1968. In the legislature, he serves as vice chairman of the Energy Committee and is a member of the House Ways and Means committee. He attended Midland public schools and is a graduate of Texas Tech University. When he's not in Austin, he is a sales representative for Mustang Mud Inc. and owner of Craddick Properties and president of Craddick Inc.

WTGS guest to discuss geology of SSC site

Dr. D.F. Reaser, professor at the University of Texas at Arlington will be the guest speaker at Tuesday's luncheon meeting of the West Texas Geological Society. The meeting will be at 11:30 a.m. at the Midland Center.

Reaser, who is also a member of a special geotechnical group directing the site analysis for the Superconducting Super Collider project for the Texas National Research Laboratory Commission, will discuss "Geology of the Texas site for the Superconducting Super Collider."

Construction of the SSC and support bodies will involve three Upper Cretaceous rock bodies, according to Reaser. They are the Eagle Ford, Austin and Taylor groups.

Cost of the meeting is $7 per person, and reservations should be made by calling the WTGS office by noon Monday.

American attracts subcontractor to Tulsa

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — A two-year-old American Airlines program to bring far-flung contractors closer to its doorstep at Tulsa International Airport has landed another corporate citizen for Tulsa.

Pyromet Industries of Indiana formally opened a Tulsa division last week.

"We are here because of American Airlines," said Jerry Frederick, general manager of Pyromet Industries.

"We have long-term commitments with American, refurbishing, repairing and remanufacturing jet engine components. They are one of the reasons we are here."

Ade Hale, American's managing director of base maintenance in 1987, began the program to urge American's subcontractors and suppliers to move their operations to northeastern Oklahoma.

The program has brought more than 200 aerospace jobs to the Tulsa area in the past two years, American officials said. More employment is expected during the next few years as more suppliers relocate.

Hale said the rationale for the program was that the ailing local economy would benefit from new jobs, American would benefit by reducing the time required to fill its parts orders and the relocating company would gain by the higher productivity of the local workforce.

"It's a win-win situation for everybody," Hale said.

"Workers here are the most productive in the country — much higher than either the East or West coasts — so the company is going to win by getting higher productivity and American Airlines is going to win because I'm going to have better response time in the pipeline of parts in float to support aircraft."

Hale said when suppliers like Pyromet were located hundreds or thousands of miles from Tulsa's Maintenance & Engineering Center, it typically took 45 days from the time an order was placed until the part arrived at the center.

"If they are within one hour of the airport, the time is cut by less than half," Hale said.

American has been able to lure businesses to Tulsa because the businesses themselves saw the benefits, Hale said.

"With them close by, we are willing to sign five-year agreements with them instead of one-year agreements. It's a long-term customer base and that's money in the bank. Plus, we also entertain working relationships (with suppliers), which allows us to jointly do things together," he said.

Adobe set to unveil type style technology

New York Times News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — In a dramatic effort to preserve its business, Adobe Systems Inc. said that it would reveal its closely guarded corporate crown jewel — its technology for generating different styles of type on computer screens and drawing them on laser printers.

The action comes a day after Apple Computer and Microsoft Corp. said they would join to develop an alternative computer-type technology.

Adobe's move essentially invites competitors to "clone" its technology, and compete with it, a move that will help Adobe's technology retain its status as an industry standard.

Industry executives and analysts said Adobe, based in Mountain View, Calif., had little choice if it did not want to see much of the industry turn to the Apple-Microsoft system.

John E. Warnock, Adobe's chairman and chief executive, said the move would have no effect on the company in the short term, and the analysts said it was difficult to predict the long term.

"Hopefully, the higher volume more than makes up for the wider diversity and availability of the technology," said David Nelson of Shearson Lehman Hutton Inc. in New York.

For the third quarter that ended on Sept. 1, Adobe earned $9.1 million, or 41 cents a share, up by 44 percent from the $6.3 million, or 29 cents a share, earned in the comparable period last year. Its revenues rose by 19 percent, to $30 million from $25.2 million.

Adobe's shift is the latest sign of a move toward standards, or "open systems," that is sweeping the computer industry.

In the past, computer companies competed by having proprietary technology.

But recently, some companies have competed by allowing competitors to sell compatible machines or software, as IBM has done with personal computers and Sun Microsystems Inc. with work stations.

An individual company's share of the market shrinks, but the overall market can grow if a certain design becomes a standard.

Adobe's announcement came in an emotional speech Wednesday by Warnock at the Seybold Computer Publishing Conference and Exposition here.

His voice cracking and his face looking as if he was about to break into tears, Warnock said Adobe would publish the specifications for Postscript's typeface technology rather than see the industry splinter into different groups supporting different standards.

"The goal is to be able to ship documents around the world in completely electronic form," he said. "It simply won't do to have different imaging models and different font formats."

Adobe prospered by developing the technology to display type styles, known as fonts, on computer screens and transfer them to paper on laser printers.

Its Postscript software made possible the birth of desktop publishing, in which documents are designed on computer screens and printed on laser printers.

But Adobe has kept secret its technology for making typefaces that work with Postscript, charging typeface designers a royalty for putting their typefaces into the Postscript format.

The secrecy also made it difficult for printer makers to make Postscript-compatible printers.

The industry executives say Adobe brought about its own competition by refusing to license its font technology to Apple and Microsoft and others for reasonable royalties.

"A lot of that is a result of Adobe not having been open until today," said William H. Gates, Microsoft's chairman.

Once Adobe's specifications are published, the typeface designers will no longer have to pay royalties if they use their own computerized tools to put fonts in the Adobe format.

But they will still have to pay royalties if they use Adobe's computerized tools.

GAINS

Currently, capital gains are taxed like any other income — 15 percent for income up to $30,000, and 28 percent for income above that. High income brackets pay 33 percent tax.

The proposal would drop the tax rate for capital gains to nearly 20 percent, over a two-year period. After the two years, it would have to be renewed or it would be ineffective.

However, the contention that only "rich" people would benefit from a decline in the capital gains tax is false, according to Lawrence Prucka, with Rhea Prucka & Morrison in Midland. He said a broad spectrum of investors would benefit from the proposal, because many individuals take advantage of capital gains.

On the short term, taxes would be lowered, creating initially a large increase in investment funds, Prucka said.

"Long-term it would be hard to say," he said.

Another accountant, who asked not to be identified, said the proposal would stimulate the Stock Market, particularly the "little guy" — wage earners who obtain stocks through profit-sharing and who tend to invest on a long-term basis.

The Democrats' still-emerging plan is intended as a substitute for the capital-gains tax cut, which is part of the House Ways and Means Committee's deficit-reduction plan.

According to Associated Press, Democratic leaders note estimates that 80 percent of the benefit of the capital-gains reduction would go to those with annual incomes over $200,000. After briefly accelerating revenues, they contend, it would deepen the budget deficit in 1992 and beyond.

As an alternative, Democratic leaders proposed:

■ Expanding IRAs so all workers, regardless of income, could have a deductible plan. The money could be withdrawn without penalty to finance the down payment on a first home or for college education. The IRA savings account became popular with taxpayers from 1982 through 1986, but declined in popularity in 1987 as a result of restrictions in the Tax Reform Act of 1986.

■ Eliminating a quirk in the 1986 tax overhaul in a way that would raise taxes on the richest 600,000 couples and individuals. The quirk requires some upper-middle-income Americans to pay a higher rate of tax on part of their earnings than applies to the wealthiest taxpayers.

Under that law, for example, a single person with $75,000 taxable income pays a top rate of 33 percent on a $10,000 pay raise or investment windfall. But a $250,000-a-year earner pays only 28 percent tax on a similar increase in income.

The Democratic plan would apply the 33 percent rate to all taxable income above $44,900 for a single person and to all above $74,850 for a couple.

■ Assuring that the 33 percent rate would not apply to any capital-gains income. Thus, the maximum tax on capital gains, which for some upper-middle-income people is 33 percent, would be cut to 28 percent.

HY-BON

Hy-Bon, which purchased the design and engineering for NATCO compressors, makes a variety of compressors for oil field applications that include: field gas boosters, wellhead depletion, casinghead gas, refrigeration compression, vapor recovery, field gas gathering, gas lift, flare gas elimination, process compression, LPG liquid transfer and oil production enhancement. The oil field remains its largest customer, but in recent months the company has found widespread applications for its compressors outside the oil field.

Explained Woodcock: "We have compressors in landfill projects around the country where methane is being pumped off municipal garbage dumps for commercial use. We have compressors at one California canning factory where peach peelings are fermented in large cement vats and the methane gas pumped off for use as a fuel. Our compressors are also used on fuel storage tanks at various industrial and municipal facilities around the nation to recover vapor."

He noted that new strict environmental rules regarding volatile chemicals and petrochemicals, especially in California, were having an impact upon the bottom line.

The company has developed computerized equipment capable of recovering vapors from tanks when pressures reaches as low as one-sixteenth pound per square inch. Hy-Bon has also developed compressors made of ductil iron for use in hydrogen sulfide environments.

Woodcock, who entered Hy-Bon as a principal and president in 1981 after a stint with a rig-manufacturing company, says he sees even greater promise for low-horsepower compression with the revival of the natural gas industry and the promise of compressed natural gas being used as a fuel in vehicles.

"Low-horsepower is our specialty and we intend to stay with it," he said. "By offering a wide variety of compressor packages we can fill a wide spectrum of the market and make certain that no one has to put too much horse power on a job."

He said the company became involved in low-horsepower compression (below 100 hp) in 1985 because he found too many companies were having to use elephant-sized compressors to do an ant-sized job.

ENERGY

"You would never have heard this three years ago," said Elihu Bergman, executive director of Americans for Energy Independence, a conservation organization based in Washington.

"This conference is symbolically legitimizing what we have known in the States: environmental policy is driving energy policy."

A speech by Lee M. Thomas, the former administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, reinforced the point.

Thomas detailed decisions ranging from handling of the wastes from oil drilling to requiring anti-pollution equipment on power plants that cast his agency in the role of making energy policy.

In another speech, Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney made a similar point.

"Environmental sensitivity and economic growth, fueled by energy, go hand in hand," he said.

"We no longer have the luxury of trying to have one without the other."

The carbon dioxide study, assembled by 30 experts from 18 countries and nine international organizations, assumed only a small increase in each person's energy use over the period, but a near-doubling of the population in the Third World, from 3.6 billion in 1985 to 6.3 billion in 2020.

The conference also released a separate study hinting that the reserves of fossil fuels are plentiful.

A triennial study of resources found that global recoverable reserves of hard coal are up 80 percent since 1986, oil reserves are up 30 percent and natural gas is up 14 percent.

What was less clear than supply was where energy policy was being driven.

Lord Marshall's prescription was nuclear power, a view that did not create a clear consensus here.

Another conflict was between delegates from the Third World and the developed countries over who would have to improve energy efficiency to minimize releases of carbon dioxide and other gases.

Chauncey Starr, the founder and former president of the Electric Power Research Institute of Palo Alto, Calif., pointed out that each North American uses, on average, seven times as much energy as people of the Third World.

For "a huge portion of the world population," he said, the primary concerns are "food supply and enough fuel for cooking and warmth."

If that population increases its energy consumption only modestly — 2.3 percent a year, Starr said — the combination of population growth and higher consumption would quadruple world energy demand in 75 years.

Starr and others suggested investing in efficiency, especially in the Third World; for example, Starr said, the efficiency of cooking over an open stove is 3 percent, versus 20 percent in a clay oven, a percentage increase far greater than that available in the industrial world.

But that focus may be wrong, said another delegate, Jassim al-Gumer, director of the economics department at the Organization of Arab Petroleum Exporting Counties, in Kuwait.

"They have such little to spend on pollution, or energy," he said of the non-industrial countries.

India, he said, uses a barrel of oil a year for each person, Brazil three and the United States 45.

"How much pollution is coming from the 45 barrels versus the one barrel?"

FAIRMONT PARK CENTER PROVIDES THE IDEAL RETAIL ENVIRONMENT FOR SUCCESS

Located in Midland's major northern growth corridor, Fairmont Park Center offers the retailer high visibility and easy access to the nation's highest effective buying income group.
Contiguous to Fairmont Park Center, Albertson's Retail Center provides one of the largest middle and upper-middle income group markets available. This influx of traffic is created 24 hours daily, satisfying the exposure element important to the success of any retailer. The 40,000 sq. ft. area insures the retailer will not get lost or hidden. No other retail development in this area combines these attributes as does Fairmont Park Center.

J.P. Adams shows a computer program he developed that unites the technology of personal computers with that of still videos. Applications include drilling rig logs or real estate sales.

Engineer weds computer, still videos

By JOHN GERDEL Jr.

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — A Southeast Texas entrepreneur is uniting some technological possibilities to give a new twist to the basic petroleum industry drilling log.

"The only way for a small business to succeed in this area is to be on the cutting edge of technology," said Jackson Parker Adams III.

Adams, known as J.P., is balancing on two knife edges and making it work. Adams' concepts, including the programs he has written and copyrighted, unite the technologically exploding arenas of personal computers and still videos.

Applications of the technology range through such diverse fields as drilling rig logs to real estate sales to building management to community development, Adams said.

"Advanced Logging Technologies (Adams firm) produces full color well-logging systems for the petroleum industry as well as full color electronic catalogs, manuals and training programs for general business purposes," Adams explained.

Drillers keep records several different data while drilling a well, including speed of descent, hardness of rock and materials encountered below the surface, Adams said.

This information is recorded on graphs and by a well-logging engineer on the drilling rig. Adams' system keeps track of all of the numerical data from the drilling and allows the logging engineer to include color photographs of the material returned with the mud.

Under the present system, the logging engineer takes samples from the returning drilling mud and puts those samples in a plastic bag, which is available for a geologist at later date.

Using Adams' system, geologists would be able to study the rock sample photos next to other drilling data showing the depth at which the samples were found, all on a MacIntosh II screen.

In addition, the pictures and information could be transmitted by satellite from a drilling rig in Saudi Arabia to a geologist in Houston, Adams said.

"This makes better use of a high-priced executive's time, not having to send him into the field as often," Adams said. Included in the program for the logging system is a variety of color and black and white samples of different types of rock for comparison along with several ways of measuring sizes and features of rock samples.

Developing a well-logging system was a natural first-step for Adams, a self-taught computer expert and former well-logging engineer.

A native of Wichita, Kan., Adams, 37, studied chemical engineering at Wichita State University and came to Beaumont in 1981 after living in Houston for two years while working for a well-logging company.

"We were drilling a lot of wells around here and I decided to move to Beaumont," he said. "I was laid off in 1986 and began looking for a new job, but the opportunities for a well-logging engineer were very slim," Adams said.

"The next alternative was to a way to apply my expertise to some type of business activity." In January 1988, Adams saw the potential for merging video and computer data, but technology for process was still being developed.

Adams began developing the system and made his first presentation at a meeting of the Society of Petroleum Engineers in Houston in the fall of 1988.

"We had this little booth back in the corner, but people kept flocking around it all the time," he said. "It was well received."

That demonstration led to a contract with Mobil this spring and Adams is in the process of delivering the system now. Another recent product is an electronic catalog for Reed Tool Company in Houston, a firm that makes oil well drilling bits.

"Their salesmen pass out 3.5-inch (computer) disks along with the paper catalog," Adams said.

Not only does the electronic catalog show color pictures of the products, it also shows the different capabilities of similar drill bits, Adams said.

Technology for electronic real estate catalogs and the color photos of rocks, called a "frame grabber," was not released until June 1, on a program called a "Super Card." It allows a computer to "grab" electronic still photographs and produce the color images on a computer screen, disk or video tape.

"The on-screen quality matches the print quality," Adams said.

Adams is presently using a simple Canon still video camera to photograph his work, but he hopes to add a camera with interchangeable lenses to equipment in the near future. With a better camera, Adams will be able to improve his still videos in for a real estate catalog on computer disk or video tape.

"With this system, a real estate agent could tailor a video tape for an executive in New York, showing the exterior and interior of houses available in Beaumont," Adams said. "This could also be used by a building manager to show office space to a mid-management person looking for space for a regional office."

"The building manager could show the mid-management person the space available with stills and put all of the discussion and pictures on video tape.

"The video stills would show the office space in its best light and the mid-management person would be able to show it to the executive who makes the final decision," Adams said. "The executive would be able hear all of the discussion about the office space."

The same process could be used by economic development commissions for cities to tailor presentations for industries, Adams said. Specific sites could be shown along with the basic presentation and all put on a video tape. Adams said the advantage to the system is that is does not require specially-trained personnel and lot of equipment to operate it.

"A secretary could make the additions and deletions to the system," he said. "Anybody familiar with a 35-mm camera could take the pictures."

With the proper printer capabilities hooked into the system, the program is capable of making color separations for offset printing, expanding the capabilities of desktop publishing, Adams said.

Phone pitch for credit cards criticized

AUSTIN (AP) — A business that directs consumers to dial a "900" number for a list of credit card lenders has come under fire from the Austin Better Business Bureau.

In an alert issued Wednesday, the bureau cautioned consumers that they will have $30 added to their telephone bills for making the call. The fee does not ensure they will get a credit card.

A spokesman for the company, Creditmaster, said there was no attempt to mislead customers.

Among those who have received the company's sales pitch in recent weeks are the Better Business Bureau office and the Austin American-Statesman, the newspaper reported. The company uses automatic phone-calling equipment, with recorded messages, to contact prospective customers.

The bureau, which has received inquiries and complaints from Austin residents, is asking Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox to investigate the marketing project to see if it complies with state law on consumer credit.

"There is nothing misleading about it. The message clearly states that there is a charge," said Nick DeStefano, manager of Creditmaster's parent company, the Royal Frontier photography studio in Houston.

Consumers who call the 900 number receive information that took a great amount of research and is well worth the $30 phone call, DeStefano said.

K mart, CBS both reap benefits from ad tie-ins

New York Times News Service

CBS is scoring ratings successes that the network believes are attributable, in part at least, to extra attention from K Mart shoppers.

Two new Monday night series attracted better ratings for CBS than any new show since 1986, and a new CBS series starring Richard Chamberlain staged a major upset Tuesday night.

A CBS research executive gave credit to the network's extensive promotional campaign, dominated by a contest held in conjunction with K Mart stores.

In the CBS/K Mart campaign, viewers were invited to match numbers on the air with those they received in a K Mart insert in Sunday newspapers in order to win prizes.

CBS has said that the K Mart inserts reached more than 70 million homes.

David Poltrack, senior vice president of research for CBS, said the network conducted special so-called sampling studies, based on telephone calls to 600 homes, to measure the level of public awareness created by the K Mart campaign.

He said that on Saturday night, before the K Mart promotional insert arrived in Sunday newspapers, awareness of three new Monday-night CBS shows was measured at 39 percent of those sampled for "Major Dad," 22 percent for "The Famous Teddy Z" and 19 percent for "People Next Door."

After the K Mart information arrived, a second group of calls was made and the awareness level for all three shows increased, Poltrack said, to 52 percent for "Major Dad," 31 percent for "The Famous Teddy Z" and 30 percent for "People Next Door."

"Major Dad" and "Teddy Z" both fared better than any new CBS series since "Designing Women" in 1986. "Dad" scored a 16.2 rating, the highest for a new CBS series running at 8:00 p.m. since 1983. "Teddy Z." had a 15.9 rating.

While "The People Next Door" had a lower 14.6 rating, it was rated higher than shows on the other networks at the same time.

Tuesday night, "Island Son," a new series in which Richard Chamberlain stars as a doctor in Hawaii, won its time period against two established hits, "Thirtysomething," and "Midnight Caller."

Another new CBS show, "Rescue 911," improved the ratings CBS was getting in the time period by more than 60 percent from last year.

Poltrack added that the recognition for Richard Chamberlain among those intending to play the K Mart game was extremely high.

Darlene Park, a spokeswoman for K Mart, said it was too early in the campaign for the company to assess if the association with CBS had improved store sales.

But an executive familiar with the company's sales figures said, "So far, the promotion is just as successful for K-Mart as it has been for CBS."

George Schweitzer, senior vice president of communications who is in charge of the K Mart campaign for CBS, said: "Clearly the promotional campaign is working. We're getting the shows sampled."

Sampling has become critical for the networks, as they try to introduce new programs into an increasingly cluttered television environment.

Last year, all three networks noted quick killings: shows that went on the air, never received sampling and disappeared without ever being seen in most American homes.

CBS devised the K Mart campaign, and NBC a similar promotional campaign in conjunction with Sears, Roebuck, to stimulate sampling.

"If the shows are never seen, they can never be a success," Schweitzer said.

The idea is only to induce viewers to give a show one chance.

"After that," he said, "It's up to the program."

CBS got a good initial sampling for another new series, an action drama called "Wolf," during a special broadcast two weeks ago.

But when the show went into its regular time period Tuesday night at 9:00, it slumped badly. It faces the heavy competition of ABC's "Roseanne," television's most popular program.

Tokyo unveils plan to cut trade surplus

New York Times News Service

TOKYO — The Japanese government came up with a new proposal Wednesday to close its $50 billion trade surplus with the United States: offer businesses in this country a reduction in their taxes for importing goods. But the idea appears to have little chance of approval.

The plan was floated by senior officials of the Ministry of International Trade and Industry, which has primary responsibility for settling trade disputes, in a session with foreign correspondents.

The proposal is likely to be carefully studied by American officials, who have been examining what steps the Japanese ministry will take to signal a new attack on the trade gap.

The issue is becoming particularly urgent because of statistics showing that the growth in Japan's demand for imported goods, which had soared in the last two years, is slowing again. Officials in Tokyo attribute that to the dollar's strength.

But the proposal seems to be largely a trial balloon, aimed not only at Washington but also at rival ministries in Tokyo.

Offer for American Medical under review

WASHINGTON (NYT) — IMA Holding Corp., which has made an offer for American Medical International Inc., said Wednesday that is was talking with American Medical officials to resolve uncertainties created by pending federal legislation that would eliminate the tax deductibility of interest on certain debt instruments.

In a filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission, IMA, which is led by the Pritzker family of Chicago and First Boston Corp., said that "there can be no assurances as to the resolution of any such uncertainty."

Banks join Visa to fight card fraud

SEATTLE (AP) — Spendthrifts beware: Washington's largest financial institutions have joined a program launched by Visa U.S.A. to catch more personal bankruptcy frauds and abusers and drag them into court.

Seafirst Bank and Security Pacific Bank Washington, No.1 and No.2 in the state respectively, have signed on the plan, launched last February by Visa in Southern California and now spreading to Colorado, Illinois, Texas, and Oregon as well as Washington.

Under the program, organizations issuing Visa cards share information about creditors, including account information, and then split the legal fees needed to contest more bankruptcy filings in court.

The organizations hope the program will reduce the estimated $600 million the industry loses from personal bankruptcies each year, possibly yielding a payback to the public.

"Bankruptcies are something we live with and people obviously need relief from catastrophic financial situations ... But there's always areas for abuse, and heretofore that hasn't been addressed," said Terry Potter, vice president in charge of risk management for Security Pacific Bank Washington.

"We're really looking for the major abusers: it's the individual that goes out and gets 20 credit cards and runs up a balance, then runs down to see his lawyer," said Potter.

Other institutions that have joined the network include Key Bank of Puget Sound, Puget Sound National Bank and Boeing Employees Credit Union, the largest credit union in the state.

Visa spokesman Gregory Holmes said the program encourages the financial institutions to work together to screen for fraud and abuse of the federal bankruptcy law and challenge suspect filings in court.

Members review the accounts of customers for fraud or abuse upon notification of bankruptcy filings, Holmes said.

If fraud or abuse is suspected, all other member financial institutions serving that customer will be notified to conduct a similar search, allowing the banks to build a case using a single local law firm to represent them, he said.

Visa hopes to have abusive cases denied the protection of bankruptcy, while criminal prosecution may be sought in other cases, he said.

"About half of everyone's annual fees for bank cards comes from bankruptcy," Visa President Jon Cristofferson said. "Even if we're able to deal with even 20 to 30 percent of the fraud, the payback to the public will be substantial."

Personal bankruptcy filings have doubled since 1980 to about 600,000 last year, and as many as one in three of those filings was fraudulent, according to Visa.

Bankruptcy frauds include those who don't declare all their assets when filing for bankruptcy or those who transfer them to a third party or relative. Abusers include those who have the ability to pay back their debts but choose not to.

The bank card industry had total losses from bankruptcies, legitimate or otherwise, of $1.5 billion in 1988.

Fraud is suspected when an individual runs up large debts, often using several credit cards, shortly before filing for bankruptcy.

Most frauds are successful because banks have found the costs of fighting the filings in court are often higher than the debts they want to collect. A key to the program is selecting a single law firm to handle all cases for member banks, and splitting the legal fees, Poter said.

A law firm has not yet been selected to handle the Washington cases.

Holmes said Visa hopes the program will deter fraud, although Potter said he did not expect the number of contested cases in Washington to increase greatly.

He estimated that no more than one in 20 persons abuses the credit card system.

Elgie Holstein, director of Bankcard Holders of America, applauded Visa's plan while expressing caution about invading the privacy of credit card holders.

"Clearly, the ultimate costs of bankruptcy and credit card fraud are borne by people who pay their bills on time," Holstein said.

But Holstein also blamed the bankruptcy problem partly on the credit card industry for aggressively soliciting consumers and giving credit liberally.

FCC waivers cutting radio officers from oil tankers criticized

BOSTON (AP) — Oil companies have obtained waivers from the Federal Communications Commission to eliminate radio officers on many tankers, a cost-cutting move that critics contend will increase the chances of oil spills.

The FCC requirement that all large ships carry at least one trained radio officer originated in the 1930s, when ships needed someone skilled in the pit-pat-pit of Morse code, says Exxon Shipping Co. spokesman Leslie C. Rogers.

"Since that kind of radio telegraphy is obsolete, there's no longer a need for a job category like this on these merchant ships," Rogers said in a telephone interview Monday.

But two unions — the American Radio Officers Association and the Radio Officers Union, which represent about 600 sea-going officers — are objecting to the waivers on safety grounds.

With support from some ship captains, they contend that every large merchant ship should carry someone trained to repair radio equipment and handle communications during an emergency, leaving the captain and mates free to supervise other operations, such as firefighting and damage control.

The FCC's critics point to the case of the Exxon Philadelphia, which in April suffered an apparent breakdown of an electronic fuel sensor that left it drifting aimlessly off the West Coast for nearly seven hours with 22 million gallons of oil aboard.

The ship's radio officer, who had been eliminated under an FCC waiver just a few weeks earlier, might have quickly solved the problem because of the officer's expertise in electronics, they claim.

Exxon, however, says it is doubtful that a radio officer would have made a difference in the case. The company also maintains it has ensured safe communications on its tankers by installing duplicate radio systems and training various crewmembers to operate them.

"This is just a false issue raised by certain unions trying to capitalize on the unfortunate Alaskan oil spill," said Rogers.

William Luther, an adviser to the FCC on international shipping, said the government began granting waivers in 1982 to eliminate radio operators on U.S.-registered oil tankers and large cargo vessels operating along the U.S. coast.

Despite objections by more than a dozen environmental groups, those coastal waivers have continued and additional waivers have been extended this year on a ship-by-ship basis to 30 to 40 other vessels plying the waters from Alaska to Panama, Luther said.

Luther said the simplicity and sophistication of automated and satellite communications "eliminate the need for the intermediate operator any more."

Some companies, including Arco Marine, the shipping arm of Atlantic Richfield Corp., have decided to retain radio specialists, primarily because of their ability to make repairs. But more than half a dozen major shippers, including Mobil, Texaco, Sunoco and Chevron, have applied for and received new waivers, the FCC said.

Mobil Shipping Co. spokesman John Lord contended that technological improvements, including ship-to-satellite transmitters and snap-in circuit boards, have made communications more reliable than ever.

"It's far safer now, when the guy in charge on the bridge can just pick up a phone and have instantaneous, voice-to-voice contact with points all over the globe," he said. "Morse code and all that is just not necessary any more."

But a ship's captain, speaking to The Boston Globe on condition of anonymity, said the added responsibility for communications could be a problem in an emergency.

Magazinge lists best firms for working moms

By RICK GLADSTONE

NEW YORK (AP) — Sixty companies have taken extraordinary steps to accommodate working mothers, with benefits and other inducements such as child care centers and generous parental leave, Working Mother magazine reports.

Its survey on "The Best Companies for Working Mothers," published in the October issue on sale today, includes corporate giants such as International Business Machines Corp., DuPont and Merck & Co. Inc., as well as smaller concerns such as regional banks and hospitals.

"The pity is there aren't more companies. It's too bad it's not the 600 best companies," said editor Judsen Culbreth. "But we do want to credit these companies as being forward-thinking."

The working mother is the fastest-growing category of the labor force. More than half of all women with children younger than age 6 work outside the home, vs. 12 percent in 1950, the Labor Department says.

By the year 2000, the department estimates 84 percent of all women of childbearing age will be working. Nonetheless, less than 1 percent of all U.S. companies provide child care aid to employees.

Culbreth said the 60 companies listed recognize "there's a labor shortage and they see family benefit packages as a real recruiting tool."

Deputy editor Susan Seliger said the list was based on questionnaires mailed to hundreds of businesses, as well as follow-up interviews with managers and employees. She said the company did not attempt to rank the finalists from best to worst.

"It's not like the Fortune 500, which is cut and dried," she said. "This is something subtler, more difficult to quantify."

The magazine said the finalists were chosen based on salary, advancement opportunity, support for child care, and a benefits package that included maternity leave, parental leave, adoption aid, flexible schedules, part-time work, job sharing and support for care of elderly dependents.

It said the top 10 companies were selected based on their superior showing in these categories.

Among the top 10, for example, is Apple Computer Inc., which provides one of the most competitive pay and benefit packages of any U.S. company. It offers a child care center at its Cupertino, Calif., headquarters that is open until 7 p.m. Apple also bestows $500 on all new babies of its employees and provides up to $3,000 in adoption aid.

At Armonk, N.Y.-based IBM, where 20 percent of managers are women, mothers get three years of unpaid leave with benefits and employees have a two-hour window within which to arrive and leave work.

Merck, the world's largest producer of prescription drugs, is breaking ground for a new child-care center at its Rahway, N.J., headquarters, provides part-time hours for new mothers returning to work and allows employees to work at home.

Other entries include Cary, N.C.-based SAS Institute, a computer software maker where nearly half the managers are women and the company provies a free on-site child care center; and Beth Israel Hospital in Boston, where nurses can earn up to $63,000 a year, and nursing mothers can use breast-pump stations so they don't have to abandon breast feeding when they return to work.

Building a bison business

Panhandle ranch finds market for buffalo

By KAY LEDBETTER

DARROUZETT, Texas (AP) — Bob and Sharon McIlhattan of Darouzett are returning to the days when the bison, not domestic cattle, roamed the plains.

The McIlhattans began with two buffalo cows and a bull eight years ago, building the herd to more than 300 head this past winter. The herd, located north and east of the small Texas/Oklahoma border town, is down to 220 head now.

"Our problem now is we don't have enough pasture here to run any more than that," McIlhattan said. "But we buy additional buffalo and feed them out for meat animals."

The buffalo feedlot they've constructed will hold as many as 150 head, but only has 40 head now. It's constructed out of telephone poles and guardrails.

"The demand for breeding stock is unbelievable," McIlhattan said. "We're getting calls for 200 head at a time. People are trying to enlarge for expand their herds, so they're all wanting females to breed."

He said they will keep a few heifers and sell all the rest, but they haven't butchered a female in about the last four years.

From a breeding standpoint, buffalo females last a lot longer than domestic cattle. They can breed until they're 30 to 40 years old. Ten to 12 years is a maximum for beef cattle.

The bulls have about the same staying power as domestics. McIlhattan said. So his program uses only 2-, 3- and 4-year-old bulls. After that, they're considered meat animals.

The market demand, McIlhattan said, centers on buffalo meat's nutritional value. Buffalo meat is high in protein, low in cholesterol and fat.

"There are a lot of areas that are much more health conscious than we are here in the Texas Panhandle," he said. "They're concerned about what they're eating. They don't want steroids, hormones or cholesterol or any of that stuff."

The McIlhattans shipped 50 big bulls early this month to a California man who butchers them for U.S. Navy commissaries and he's a promising repeat customer, McIlhattan said.

They've also sold loads of meat animals to Oklahoma and Pennsylvania in the past month.

"Instead of killing and processing, we've found it a whole lot better market for us to ship live," he said, adding that they still have animals slaughtered at Edes' Custom Meats in Amarillo and sell quarters and halves.

The local market expands from Woodward, Okla., to Plainview and all parts in between, McIlhattan said. A lot of the meat is sold to doctors and their patients who have been put on low cholesterol diets, he said.

Buffalo meat sells for a little more than beef, McIlhattan said, but "it's not really higher for what you get — a quarter pound doesn't cook down as in beef."

Most buffalo are butchered out at 2 to 3 years old, weighing 1,000 to 1,450 pounds with a carcass weight of 400 to 800 pounds, McIlhattan said.

It costs about $1.25 to $1.30 a pound liveweight to buy a good grain-fed meat animal, he said.

In building a herd, one can expect to pay about $700 to $800 for a weaned calf; $1,200 to $1,800 for a bred cow and $2,000 and up for breeding bulls, McIlhattan said.

Even after the animals are slaughtered, little goes to waste and the market is still high.

A growing demand is from people who want to shoot a trophy bull because they want the head to mount and the skin. That can bring from $3,000 to $5,000, he said.

There's a tremendous demand for skulls, McIlhattan said, and he could sell 100 a week if he wanted to make knickknacks, pen holders, match holders for fireplaces or a number of other decorative items, he said.

"There's even a market for the buffalo chips," McIlhattan said. The chips are bronzed and decorated. One man is making glue from the feet and others are making ashtrays from the hooves, he said.

McIlhattan said that in season some heads will be mounted and sold for about $900, but the same heads can be taken to resort areas such as Taos, N.M., and sold for as much as $2,500 to $3,500.

The latest market talk centers around all-buffalo-meat restaurants, McIlhattan said. But there's not a large enough supply of buffalo meat available yet.

"I think that will happen somewhere in the not-too-distant future," he said.

Penney home for sale

DALLAS (AP) — An office building that serves as the temporary home of J.C. Penney Co. is for sale, says its owner, Sunbelt Savings F.S.B.

A spokesman for Sunbelt declined Thursday to reveal the building's asking price.

But the nine-story, 330,000-square-foot Aberdeen building, which is 100 percent leased by Penney until 1994, should sell within the next six months, according to Richard Michaels, Sunbelt executive vice president.

Songs from 'Les Miserables'

"Will the future ever arrive? ... Should we continue to look upwards? Is the light we can see in the sky one of those which will presently be extinguished? The ideal is terrifying to behold, lost as it is in the depths, small, isolated, a pin-point, brilliant but threatened on all sides by the dark forces that surround it; nevertheless, no more in danger than a star in the jaws of the clouds."

— Victor Hugo

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Darryl Knapp, musical director for "Les Miserables in Concert," rehearses the presentation's youngest singers, Caitlin Durham, left, and Michael James. Midland Community Theatre's presentation of "Les Miserables in Concert" runs Sept. 29 through Oct. 8 at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Victor Hugo's classic masterpiece "Les Miserables" has been termed one of the best sellers of all time.

Its first printing of 7,000 copies in 1862 sold out in 24 hours. Published simultaneously in Paris, London, Brussels, Madrid, Rotterdam, Leipzig, Budapest, Warsaw and Rio de Janeiro, "Les Miserables" was carried by Yankees and Rebels alike during the American Civil War. Today, more than 100 years after its first printing, 50,000 copies are sold in Great Britain alone every year.

The storyline has to its credit somewhere between an official 20 and an unofficial 51 movie versions and provided the inspiration for television's "The Fugitive" and "Kung Fu."

The late Alfred Hitchcock knew a story when he saw one. He saw a potential for the classic tale which had not been pursued and told a friend, "That book would make a wonderful musical."

He wasn't the only one who had that thought.

The story behind the musical version of "Les Miserables," which garnered eight Tony awards, dates back to 1972 when Alain Boublil, a fairly successful French songwriter, saw "Jesus Christ Superstar" on Broadway.

"What he saw onstage kept him awake more surely than a full moon. A door had opened in his mind as if all the dreams we had made together since we first met in 1967 about writing more than entertaining three minute songs, like a real story which would mix our love for opera and pop songs, had suddenly materialized. Alain only went to bed on the morning after he had found an idea which became our first musical," says composer Claude-Michel Schonberg, Boublil's musical collaborator on "La Revolution Francaise."

The show was "a success in a country where the musical theater hardly exists," Schonberg says. "We became terminally addicted to the musical theater."

The two searched for another project.

" 'Les Miserables came as the answer, as a book which develops itself into your mind like a natural opera," Schonberg says in a souvenir program of "Les Miserables" produced in London by Dewynters, Ltd. for an American touring company production.

It took, Schonberg says, "nine months to contract its 1,200 pages of epic literature and nearly as many characters and to capture the essence of the story into three acts, six tableaux and an epilogue, all music and songs with no spoken words."

The musical opened in 1980 in Paris. After a sold-out run, it closed, and its creators returned to songwriting. In 1981, English producer Cameron Mackintosh, who had just produced "Cats," was handed a copy of the French album of "Les Miserables." He put it aside and didn't listen to it until 1982.

"The moment when I heard it, with its exciting and evocative orchestrations by John Cameron, I knew I wanted to present the show," Mackintosh says in the souvenir program. "It was that rare thing, totally theatrical music."

The result of this French and English collaboration opened in London at the Barbican Theatre Oct. 8, 1985.

" 'Les Miserables' was greeted by a violently mixed critical reception from the British press and immediate and overwhelming public acclaim," Mackintosh says.

"The rest is a fairy tale for us," Schonberg says in the program. "Since 1985, our life has totally changed; instead of being successful but marginal creators of an art that does not exist in France, we are now creating what we love most in countries where this art is also a respected profession, and we have met a family of people who share the same dreams about the musical theater as we do. This is a great feeling when you felt, for so long, a shoemaker in a country where everyone goes barefoot."

" 'Les Miserables' has since gone on to international success around the world and on both sides of the Iron Curtain," Mackintosh says. "Echoing the show's belief that 'somewhere beyond the barricade there is a world you long to see,' 'Les Miserables' continues to cross the barricades to see that world."

A presentation of selected songs from this musical is coming here Sept. 29 when Midland Community Theatre's special production of "Les Miserables in Concert" opens at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave. The special presentation, co-produced by Nancy and Buddy Anguish, runs through Oct. 8. For reservations call 692-4111.

"You won't believe the cast of people," says Darryl Knapp, musical director for the local presentation and minister of music at the Episcopal Church of the Holy Trinity. "It's like having three of the best top musicals MCT has had talent-wise and putting all those people in the same room. It's really incredible. It's things like this that make life worth it, making music with this kind of talent."

Since Knapp also was musical director for MCT's concert version of "Cats," he's familiar with the kind of practical difficulties inherent in recreating the score for local singers.

"It's the same thing as 'Cats,' but there's even less to go by," Knapp says. "This is much more of what we call a skelton score. We had to put it together from listening to the orchestral parts because there's not a complete score, yet."

Despite the technical problems, Knapp is enjoying the experience.

"Because it is in concert form, the singing really has to be splendidly done. There's no relying on costumes and theatrical sets, which tend to cover up a multitude of sins.

Van Cliburn medal 'dream come true'

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Brazilian-born pianist Jose Carlos Cocarelli, Silver Medalist of the eighth Van Cliburn International Piano Competition, is guest artist this week with the Midland-Odessa Symphony for the opening concert of the 1989-90 season.

Held every four years, the Van Cliburn is one of the most prestigious piano competitions in the world. Cocarelli's win last June marked the second time he had competed in the Van Cliburn. The first time, he was 18.

"I'm extremely happy that 12 years ago I came to the first competition, that I tried, that I tried to be someone, and now that I have the opportunity of getting somewhere in this country. I'm very happy for this opportunity," Cocarelli says in a telephone interview from airport in Dallas.

He had just arrived in the United States from Paris, where he now lives, and was on his way to El Paso to perform with the symphony there.

"It's kind of a dream come true with 12 years of hard work and improvement and maturity. I feel very good about it."

Richard Rodzinski, executive director of the Van Cliburn Foundation, remembers his first impression of Cocarelli.

"I was at the screening audition in Paris when he was videotaped, and it was a very impressive first audition. He's a very vibrant person, very alive. The moment he walked into the theater, we felt right away a spark of energy, a great vitality, which was very impressive."

In addition to performing Rachmaninoff's Concerto No. 2 with the symphony at 8 p.m. Tuesday at Lee High School in Midland and at 8 p.m. Thursday at Bonham Junior High in Odessa, Cocarelli will participate in the symphony's "Prelude Party," held prior to each performance.

Both parties, which begin at 6:30 p.m., include a light dinner. Don Th. Jaeger, the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale's music director and conductor, and Cocarelli, will make presentations.

Reservations for the prelude party are required and may be made by calling 563-5269. Tickets for the performances may be purchased at the door.

The Van Cliburn Foundation makes no distinction between the three medalists.

"By the time you got to be a medalist in a competition which has had so many hundreds of applications who have been so carefully screened and tested in the process of the competition, very often the difference between the three top people is just a matter of taste and personal preference," Rodzinski says.

"It's impossible to say that one is better than the other by any objective criteria. Really, the awarding of the medals at that point is the result of the collective subjectivity of the jury at that moment in time.

Please see COCARELLI, Page 2H

Jose Carlos Cocarelli

COCARELLI

"For that reason, we really like to view the gold, silver and bronze as virtually interchangeable as far as the presenter is concerned. We basically prearrange concerts or performing opportunities for the medalists, and the letters we have with all the presenters include the gold, silver and bronze medalists."

If a presenter prefers one medalist over another, he may request that prize winner, Rodzinski says.

He says the main function of the Van Cliburn is to "act as a giant multi-national screening agency in which, with the help of a large and highly professional jury, the finest young musicians from all over the world are gleaned."

He points out that the Van Cliburn Competition is the "only one who makes a tremendous effort to provide performing opportunities for the winners and help launch careers."

For this last competition, the Van Cliburn Foundation printed, due to requests, 8,000 applications. Since the competition looks for "young professionals ready to embark on a career," the applicants have to list performances they already have played with orchestras.

The foundation received 250 applications back in the mail. Prior to sending out the video crew, another 50 fell by the wayside. The remaining 200 applicants were videotaped in small concert settings which were open to the public.

Next, a screening jury of five people studied the videos for a week. This jury selected 38 to come to Fort Worth for the competition.

The first round of competition, which has participants performing two half-hour concerts each, cut the number down to 12. The second round, which includes an hour recital and close to an hour's performance with a string quartet, took the number down to six.

For the finals, the chosen six performed two concertos with an orchestra. A television special on the competition will be shown on PBS Oct. 18 at 8 p.m.

For Cocarelli, his first opportunity to enter the Van Cliburn represented a turning point in his life.

"It was extremely important," he says. "I was a very gifted young man, almost a child at the time when I left Brazil, and I came. And I did very well. I had a special prize from the jury."

Cocarelli is the younger son of two musicians. His older brother, who studied piano when he was young, is a doctor.

"My mother was my teacher, and she was a piano teacher, and I heard the piano at home since I was born. And my father was the first oboe in the main orchestra in Rio for 40 years, so I was actually born in music."

Born in Rio de Janeiro, Cocarelli gave his first public performances when he was 9. Prior to coming to the United States when he was 18, he studied at the Rio de Janeiro Music School University.

When the Van Cliburn competition was over, Cocarelli studied in New York for six months under a scholarship from the Brazilian government. This offered him the opportunity to study with Adele Marcus.

"All that was definitely a turning point in my life," he says of the competition and his time in New York.

Cocarelli has performed concerts throughout Europe, where he has appeared with, among others, the Salzburg Mozarteum Orchestra, the Netherlands Chamber Orchestra and the Emilia Romagna Symphony Orchestra in Salso Maggiore.

In 1984, he won second prize at the Paloma O'Shea International Piano Competition in Santander, Spain, and has won first prizes at the 1985 Busoni International Piano Competition and the 1986 Marguerite Long-Jacques Thibaud International Competition in Paris.

Cocarelli also was awarded the Steven De Groote Memorial Chamber Music Award for his performance with the Tokoyo String Quartet in the semifinal round of the eighth Van Cliburn International Piano Competition.

He speaks five languages — Portuguese, Italian, French, Spanish and English — and particularly enjoys opera. He partly traces his love of opera to his Italian blood, which comes to him through his father. His father was born in Brazil, but his father's parents were from Italy. His mother's parents were from Portugal.

"I love opera because of my Italian blood. And, my parents always talked (of opera) and I heard opera at home, and I went to the opera in Rio and everywhere. I am a real fan of opera. I like that very much."

He has no favorite composer, he says, then he begins naming the ones who come to his mind.

"Maybe especially Mozart and Strauss, Wagner and Verdi. So many. I love Puccini also. I love most of the Italians. So, I mean I just love singing."

Winning a medal in the Van Cliburn this June felt "great."

When asked if he was surprised, he said, without hesitation, "No. Not at all."

He isn't alone in his assessment of his ability.

After hearing him in the competition this year, Rodzinski says of his playing, "One of the most overriding impressions, I think, would be of his being a musician of great substance. His work is carefully thought through. He delivers the genuine article, and it's thoroughly musical, thoroughly professional and extremely expressive: the hallmarks of great musicians."

SONGS

"I get a musical high every night with this set of people. The singing is just glorious. This is Broadway talent that just happens to be here in Midland because of their professions or their husbands' or wives' jobs."

Singing the principal roles locally are Dale Jenkins, Valjean; Bob Fennell, Thenardier; John Haupert, Jacert; Rogers Tilley, Enjolras; Bobby Marshall, Marius; Dawn Lester, Eponine; Dana Harlow, Cosette; Cathy Horn, Fantine; Mona Gale Gibson, Mrs. Thenardier; Caitlin Durham, young Cosette; and Michael James, Gavroche.

Members of the men's chorus are Jim Bartlett, Joe Craig, Bob Gibson, Larry Koeninger, Ken Golden, Brian Schwanitz, Scott Fleming, John Cristiani, Bryan Patterson, Ronnie Williams and Mark Skrabacz.

Members of the women's chorus include Sheila Pruitt, Marcy Faris, Jeannine Sorensen, Marilyn Anders, Paula Shipp, Dacia Lust, Darla Thompson, Kristen Koehl, Carmen Golden, Pam Crawford, Emily Brenner, Dana Cristiani, Janet Considine, Leighana Thornton, Karen Weidmann and Marilynn Schwanitz.

"Les Miserables" is set in the France of Hugo's time. Born in 1802, Hugo, who was France's greatest writer when he was 30, lived into his 80s. A symbol of freedom to Frenchmen during his almost 20 years of exile, he returned to France in triumph after the overthrow of Napoleon III and spent his final years honored by his fellow countrymen as the champion of democracy and of the common people.

The musical, which covers 17 years, begins with a prologue set in 1815. The hero, Jean Valjean, has been released on parole after 19 years in the chain gang. His crime was stealing a loaf of bread to feed his family. The yellow ticket-of-leave the law declares he must wear marks him as an outcast.

The saintly Bishop of Digne is the only man who treats him kindly, and Valjean steals from him. However, when he is caught and brought back, the bishop covers for him. He also gives him two precious candlesticks and, in the musical, tells him, "I have bought your soul for God" and requests that Valjean become an honest man.

Valjean reveals in his song, "I had come to hate the world, this world that always hated me." The experience causes him to re-evaluate his life and to vow to start anew.

Knapp calls "Les Miserables" a classic story to use in studying good verses evil, with Valjean representing that which is good in man and the police spy who stays on Valjean's trail, Javert, representing that which is evil in man even though Javert believes himself to be a justified and righteous man of God.

"One of the best lines in it is, 'To love someone else is to truly see the face of God,'" Knapp says.

"'Les Miserables' has a universal appeal in all languages. As Jesus said there will always be the poor. This musical takes place in one of the worst times in French history. Workers couldn't make enough as workers to even get by week after week.

"The recent China incident is much like the war in 'Les Miserables,' where a group of students decided to really show their disgust with the state of society.

"The hero (Marius) goes to support his fellow students and leaves the girl (Cosette) behind. The older man (Valjean) doesn't want him to go because he knows he's really meant for this girl so he prays to God on high to bring him home.

"The themes are those with which all people can identify. In the end, there is hope, and you go away from the theater feeling uplifted."

'Significant' films listed by Library of Congress

By BOB THOMAS

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Director Billy Wilder, actor James Stewart and other members of the film industry joined in praise of the Library of Congress list of 25 films deemed "culturally, historically or esthetically significant."

"I'm delighted," responded Wilder last week. His "Some Like It Hot" and "Sunset Boulevard" appeared on the list.

"I wish things would go forward to reconstruct those films as they were, not colorized and not butchered by cuts."

Also on the list was Frank Capra's "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington," which starred Stewart.

"The first thing that crossed my mind, is that I'm glad that Frank is still with us and can enjoy his vindication," Stewart said. Capra has been in failing health at his home in La Quinta.

Stewart made his comments in Washington, D.C., before a visit to the Senate to campaign for film preservation. He recalled the premiere of the movie at Constitution Hall in 1939. Senators became restive at the film's depiction of political corruption.

The film broke during the screening, Stewart recalled, and by the time Capra returned to his seat after climbing to the booth to repair it, "half his audience was gone ... The press was completely against the picture, too."

The aim of the list, said Librarian of Congress James H. Billington in announcing the first 25, was to promote movies as an American art form and generate public interest in preservation.

"I think it's as good a list as we can expect the first time out," said Dave Kehr, a member of the National Film Preservation Board and chairman of the National Society of Film Critics. A board of 13 film figures made the final selection, drawing from a thousand nominations from the public.

The major surprise among the selections for the National Film Registry was "The Learning Tree," a semi-autobiographical film of a black boy's rural childhood by Gordon Parks, famed Life magazine photographer.

"I'm surprised, pleasantly so," said Parks at his New York residence. "I'm very happy. The film was very well received in its release, and it's still playing in Europe and on television here."

The National Film Registry is the outgrowth of protests by filmmakers over colorization and editing for television of classic films. Congress last year passed the National Film Preservation Act, which called for the naming of 25 classic films annually for three years.

"I'm delighted to be one of the 25, but I'm horrified at the necessity of the act," said Stanley Donen, the director of the musical "Singin' in the Rain."

Donen said that the act will do nothing to keep broadcasters from editing movies for length or duplicating them with poor quality control onto videocassettes.

Wilder was his usual acerbic self in calling for greater protection for films: "The television people call in a butcher, who has failed at the Ralphs grocery store, to supervise the cutting of pictures so they can slip in the Noxema commercials. Frankly, nobody gives a —."

There were other surprises besides "The Learning Tree."

D.W. Griffith's mishmash of history, "Intolerance," was selected, but not his classic, "The Birth of a Nation," perhaps because of its sympathetic portrayal of the Ku Klux Klan.

King Vidor's "The Crowd" was included but not his more impressive "The Big Parade." John Ford Westerns are represented by "The Searchers" but not his landmark "Stagecoach."

Among the missing: "The Treasure of the Sierra Madre"; "It's a Wonderful Life"; "It Happened One Night"; "All about Eve"; "Shane"; "Top Hat"; "The African Queen"; "Rebecca"; "From Here to Eternity."

The top movies, listed alphabetically, were:

"The Best Years of Our Lives," 1946; "Casablanca," 1942; "Citizen Kane," 1941; "The Crowd," 1928; "Dr. Strangelove; or, How I Learned to Stop Worrying and Love the Bomb," 1964; "The General," 1927; "Gone With the Wind," 1939; "The Grapes of Wrath," 1940; "High Noon," 1952; "Intolerance," 1916; "The Learning Tree," 1969, and "The Maltese Falcon," 1941.

Also, "Mr. Smith Goes to Washington," 1939; "Modern Times," 1936; "Nanook of the North," 1922; "On the Waterfront," 1954; "The Searchers," 1956; "Singin' in the Rain," 1952; "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," 1937; "Some Like it Hot," 1959; "Star Wars," 1977; "Sunrise," 1927; "Sunset Boulevard," 1950; "Vertigo," 1958, and "The Wizard of Oz," 1939.

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

Ceramics at gallery

Gallery 1114's new show features the ceramics of Carol Bailey and the drawings and paintings of Christi Branum.

A public reception for the artists will be held from 6 to 9 p.m. Saturday.

The show will be up through Nov. 2. Currently on display through Thursday is the third annual Open Show.

Most of Ms. Bailey's work in this show is high-fire salt-glazed porcelain and stoneware.

"In my clay work I seek the dynamic of living forms caught in midmovement as in the spiraling growth of seashells, plant life and galaxies. the work in this was inspired by Voyager II's recent grand tour of the planets, with images both real and imaginary; volcanic moons, planetary rings and crated surface textures."

Ms. Bailey holds a bachelor of arts degree in art from Texas Tech and has done graduate work at the University of New Mexico. One of her watercolors was selected to tour with the Texas Watercolor Society's 40th annual exhibition organized by the McNay Art Museum, San Antonio.

Ms. Branum received her masters of fine art from the University of Dallas. Her recent group exhibitions include those at Edith Baker gallery, Dallas, and Mostra 1989 at Loggia Gallery, Assisi, Italy.

Gallery 1114, 1114 Big Spring St., is a cooperative gallery of contemporary artists. Hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Wednesday through Saturday and 1 to 5 p.m. Sunday. For more information call 685-9944.

Textiles display to end

ODESSA — "The Textiles of Robert McKenzie" exhibit closes Tuesday at the Art Institute for the Permian Basin.

Included in the exhibit are two of McKensie's principle wall hangings entitled "War" and "Peace."

"War" is crimson with black and other somber colors whose design gives the impression that it is still smoldering from combat.

"Peace" is cleaner and more chaste and contains the symbols people have come to appreciate because they contribute to a feeling of security in an otherwise volatile world.

Of himself and his work McKenzie says, "I was born Feb. 27, 1919, in a one-room house in the middle of a small wheat farm midway between Panhandle, White Deer and Groom. My father and Aunt Lillian delivered me. They were both doctors. So was my mother. There was a dust storm at the time.

"What a wonderful way to physically become part of this Creation. I think like a farmer. But since the age of 3 my interest has been centered around something called art. Actually, I don't know what art is, or what an artist is, or how a farmer thinks."

The Art Institute is located at 4909 East University and is open free to the public Tuesday through Saturday, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday, 2 to 5 p.m.

MAA exhibit at MC

The Midland Arts Association fall exhibition will be held at the McCormick Gallery, Allison Fine Arts Building, Midland College, Oct. 5 through Nov. 3.

Entries will be received Saturday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Juror for the show is Betsy Dillard Stroud, art instroctor at Francis Marion College, Florence, S.C.

The opening reception and awards presentation will be from 7 to 9 p.m. Oct. 5. the public is invited to attend.

For more information call 683-8980 or 694-1078.

Museum has special exhibit

PECOS — The West of the Pecos Museum, Highway 285 and First Street, is hosting a special exhibit on Mexican-American history this month.

On display will be an exhibit of the Trans-Pecos area, particularly Reeves County, prepared by local people; Hispanic West Texas exhibit, produced by Southwest Collection at Texas Tech University; and a colorful exhibit of 14 pinatas from the Institute of Texas Cultures at San Antonio.

In Focus to close at OC

ODESSA — An exhibition by 15 members of a Permian Basin fine arts photographic society, In Focus, closes Friday in the Options Gallery at Odessa College's Learning Resource Center.

The exhibit, "In Focus: A Group Exhibit," includes 25 photographs ranging in subject matter from portraits to landscapes. The show may be viewed from 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. Monday through Friday and 2 to 5 p.m. Sunday.

For more information about the exhibit, reception or lectures, call Steve Goff, assistant professor of photography, 1-335-6497.

Fiddlers contest slated

RULE — A fiddlers contest will start the Rule Jubilee Oct. 7 in Slim Sorrells Park. Fiddlers of all ages are eligible and invited to enter.

No entry fee will be charged.

The event begins at 9:30 a.m. Registrationbegins at 9 a.m. Three age groups will compete:

- 50 years and over, first place $100, second place $75 and third place, $50;
- 18 through 49, first place $75, second place $50 and third place $25;

'Sea of Love' has potential to be intense

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO

Despite the powerful previews, "Sea of Love" is not this year's "Fatal Attraction." Not even the steamy teaming of Ellen "The Big Easy" Barkin and Al Pacino can keep the waterlogged script afloat.

Salcedo

The suspense thriller stars Pacino as Frank Keller, a veteran New York Police detective, wallowing in booze and a mid-life crisis. Part of his misery stems from the fact that his ex-wife has married his partner. Keller risks his reputation and possibly his life when he falls madly in love with a suspect (Barkin) in a serial killer case. He meets her while trying to solve a case involving victims who all answer singles ads. He is aided by his sidekick from the Queens (the zany John Goodman, who makes his singing debut).

Pacino, in his best role since "Serpico," has lost much of his charm. He seems tired, and it's hard to discern why Barkin would be attracted to him, especially since she thrives on "animal magnetism."

Ms. Barkin fares well as a sultry, and dangerous sexual liaison. Goodman brightens up every scene that he is in, and newcomer Helen Cruger, as the bimbo who answers one ad after her date is deceased, adds realism to the mystery.

One victim is found near a revolving turntable holding the Phil Phillip's 1959 hit "Sea of Love." The song basically turns out to be a red herring and many of the other plot threads get lost at sea. The film has plenty of potential for intensity, but falters in the pay-off.

"Sea of Love" also has a ho-hum script, with characters delivering such lines as "There are very few mistakes in life that cannot be corrected if you've got the guts." Like much of the tension, the philosophy gets lost at sea.

"Sea of Love" rates 2½ rigs.

MOVIE RIG COUNT

DRY HOLE — a complete and total loss

STRIPPER — barely worth the time

PRODUCER — a good investment

GUSHER — not to be missed

"Sea of Love," rated R for nudity, sex and profanity, is playing at Midland Park Mall Cinemas.

Raul Julia as Oscar Romero

Raul Julia says 'Romero' labor of love

By BOB THOMAS

MONTREAL (AP) — Raul Julia laughs at the suggestion that on his new film "Romero" he wasn't able to yell at his producer.

"Oh, I yelled at him," the actor replies. "We had arguments, some good ones, but we're friends."

The producer of "Romero," which depicts the 1980 assassination of Archbishop Oscar Romero in El Salvador, is the Rev. Ellwood E. Kieser, a Roman Catholic priest. He is no stranger to films, having produced the "Insight" TV series for 23 years before turning to feature movies in 1984.

"Despite I'm a priest and despite I'm a producer, Raul still likes me," Kieser chuckled. "And despite the fact that he's an actor, I like him."

They are an interesting pair: Julia the lean, brooding, bearded veteran of theater ("The Threepenny Opera," "Nine") and films ("The Kiss of the Spider Woman," "Tequila Sunrise"), Kieser the tall, hearty, show-wise churchman. They gathered at the Montreal World Film Festival recently to show the $4 million movie and talk about it.

"'Romero' was really a labor of love," said Julia. "Everybody was very united, thanks to Father Kieser. On Sundays we would get together, and Father Kieser would say Mass. That got everybody together in a loving atmosphere. We would have a barbecue afterward, a little party. That kept everybody together and united."

The film was shot in the state of Morelos, Mexico, with a part-Australian, part-Mexican crew and American producers and star.

"Putting these three ethnic groups together was a challenge, but it really worked," said Kieser. "After that first Mass, we were brothers."

"Romero" is destined for controversy. It shows how the mild-mannered church leader was turned into a crusader against the death squads supported by the military and the landowners, and how he was shot down as a troublemaker. A postscript on the film declares that 60,000 Salvadorans have been the victims of death squads.

"The civil war continues, the economy's a shambles, and the death squads are still active," Kieser remarked. "The number of people being killed is not as great now, but it is not a good situation. Jesus continues to be crucified in El Salvador."

The film project dates back to the assassination, when writer John Sacret Young suggested to Kieser that it would make a television movie. In 1983, both traveled to El Salvador to research the story, interviewing Romero's friends and foes. The three TV networks declined the project as "too controversial, too depressing, no love interest," Kieser said.

The major studios liked the script, he said, but thought it not commercial.

"Now I was hooked: I had to make this picture," he said. "So we went out and raised the money in the form of donations. The American Catholic Bishops gave us $288,000; my own outfit, the Paulist Fathers, gave us $100,000. Neither group had put real money into a theatrical motion picture before. I have a very good board of directors of Los Angeles businesspeople, well-heeled."

Having worked in Hollywood for 29 years, Kieser sees no conflict in his roles as producer and priest.

"Jesus was a storyteller," he reasoned. "He told stories in order to challenge people and illumine the meaning of their live and motivate them to love. I would like to think that I make movies for the same purpose."

'Roseanne,' 'Chicken Soup,' tops ratings

By JERRY BUCK

LOS ANGELES (AP) — ABC's new Tuesday night comedy combo, "Roseanne" and "Chicken Soup," led the A.C. Nielsen Co. ratings last week.

"Roseanne" won big with its early season premiere and took the new comedy series "Chicken Soup" along for the ride. "Roseanne" show was five ratings points ahead and captured 40 percent of the audience. ABC also had two other shows in the Top 10 last week, according to the A.C. Nielsen Co.

NBC became the first network in television history to sweep every week of a broadcast year from one season premiere to another. ABC was second last week, followed by CBS. NBC won every week except for a tie the week CBS telecast the miniseries "Lonesome Dove." In all, NBC was first for the last 65 weeks.

ABC's "Chicken Soup" stars comedian Jackie Mason as a former pajama salesman who takes a new job at a community center. Preseason forecasts were that "Chicken Soup" would be the biggest hit of the new season.

The three networks previewed some shows this past week, but the season officially began Monday.

NBC's highest-ranked show was its coverage of "The Miss America Pageant," which was third. A rerun of NBC's "Golden Girls" was fourth and a preview of the network's new comedy "Sister Kate" was fifth. CBS' "60 Minutes," back with new shows, was sixth.

ABC's "Monday Night Football" game between the New York Giants and the Washington Redskins was seventh. Reruns of NBC's "The Cosby Show" and "Cheers" were eighth and ninth. ABC's Tuesday preview of the new fall drama "Life Goes On" was 10th. Its Friday preview of the same episode tied for 28th place.

"The Emmy Awards Show" on Fox Broadcasting was in 37th place. Only 19 percent of the audience watched the Sunday night show. The pre-awards show on the arrival of the stars was 68th.

NBC won the week with an average prime-time rating of 12.4. ABC had 11.8 and CBS 11.0.

The ratings is the percentage of the nation's estimated 90.4 million homes with televisions.

The CBS preview of "Wolf" tied for 17th place with the rerun of an NBC "Perry Mason" movie. ABC's "Just the 10 of Us" season preview tied for 26th place with a rerun of NBC's "L.A. Law." The premiere of ABC's new comedy series "Homeroom" was 64th.

Book describes life as 'Oil Field Child'

From Staff Reports

"At long last, a report from the distaff side on life in the Texas oil boomtowns and camps. Estha Stowe brings a child's wonder to her tale of growing up in a warm, hard-working family, unafraid of the hardships and challenges of the boomer life. A quietly inspirational story," Larry King says of Estha Stowe's book "Oil Field Child."

The Permian Basin Petroleum Museum is extending an invitation to a free presentation by Ms. Stowe from noon to 1 p.m. Thursday.

Mexia, Santa Rita, McCamey, Crane and Wink were the oil fields of West Texas in the 1920s and 1930s, places that boomed overnight and often disappeared as quickly. Most accounts of those towns feature the roughneck, the driller, the pipeliner, the working man and those who followed in his wake, the gambler, the bootlegger, the prostitute and the highjacker.

"There are stories of violence and spectacular oil field disasters but none of ordinary working men and their families," says a release from the museum.

"Yet, countless families with children lived in those boomtowns before schools, churches, sometimes even post offices, were established. Estha Briscoe Stowe knew many of those children, for she was a pioneer oil field child, growing up with the westward progress of the Texas oil industry, moving with her parents from one boomtown to the next. She was grown before she realized that her life was different from that of most children."

"Oil Field Child" presents a clear picture of the life of a normal, early-day oil field family: schools she attended, tents and shacks she lived in, friends she made and had to leave behind at the next move, a brief and bitter try at city life and the devastating illness of her mother.

"It was an undeniably hard life, but it had compensations — a sense of fellowship and generosity among the people of the oil fields, a pride in being what some outsiders called 'oil field trash,'" the release says.

Ms. Stowe will detail some of the accounts that are written in "Oil Field Child." She also will be available to autograph copies of the book.

Betty Orbeck, museum archivist, will display relevant photographs for close inspection.

The Brown Bag Lunch is open to the public. The lecture/presentation is free. Tea, coffee and dessert will be provided.

The Petroleum Museum, 1500 Interstate 20 West, is open 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Saturday and 2 to 5 p.m. Sunday. For more information call 683-4403.

Bobby Mack and Night Train to perform

Rhythm and blues singer Bobby Mack and his band, Night Train, will perform at The Bar, 606 W. Missouri Ave., Friday and Saturday from 9:30 p.m. to 1:30 a.m.

"Mack will be bringing his 'Texas Pelvic Rock' style of rockin' blues back to Midland by popular demand," says a release.

Mack says his momentum has grown in the past year since he returned from a musical goodwill tour of the Soviet Union with other Texas musicians. He re-formed Night Train, "got serious about playing on a regular basis," and has a second album, which includes three cuts done with the Neville Brothers, ready for release in Spain, England and Scandinavia.

"Europeans are really excited about Texas music," Mack says. "They like the American genre of blues and jazz. They don't get the 'real stuff' over there, and I guess this is what you would call the 'real stuff.'"

Mack has had several different bands playing under the name of Night Train over the past 10 years, however, the current configuration of the band has been the tightest, he says.

"I like this band bettern than any I've had. The band has played together enough in nine months to be so spontaneous on stage that it's magical," Mack says. "It takes a special feel to do that.

"It's rare to get players that can play this kind of music," Mack says. "Blues is simple to go through the motions, but it's hard to live the lifestyle. You have to live the kind of lifestyle of this music before you can put the emotion into it."

Night Train members are five-year member Jimmy Pate on drums, Larry Lutz on bass guitar and Richard Klein on keyboards. Lutz and Klein have been with Night Train since January of 1989.

Bobby Mack and Night Train have performed Texas dates in Austin, Dallas, Houston, Galveston, Surfside, College Station and Corpus Christi.

Bluegrass bands to jam at Oakdale Park

GLEN ROSE — Oakdale Park will host its 15th annual Bluegrass Reunion in Glen Rose Friday through Oct. 1.

The show begins at 7 p.m. Friday, and the final strains of music will float from the stage at 6 p.m. Oct. 1.

Bluegrass music originated from deep within the hills of Kentucky and Tennessee and has been passed down from generations. Bands on the Oakdale stage perform true traditional bluegrass music, all using acoustical instruments. Featured are the flat-top guitar, banjo, mandolin, fiddle and upright bass.

Headlining the fall show are the Lewis Family, Georgia; Hook and Beans, West virginia; and The DelMcCoury Band, Tennessee.

Other out of state bands include Wayne Lewis Band, Tennessee; Parker Mountain Bluegrass, Arkansas; Perfet Tyming, Mississippi; and Goldwing Band, Oklahoma.

Jim Atchley of Austin and Joe Holstead of WBAP Radio will be the emcees for the program.

Saturday morning, non-professional musicians will vie for over $1,000 in prize money. Individual competition will be held in mandolin, flat-top guitar and banjo divisions. Also, a band contest will be held, with the winning band to be offered a contract to play in Oakdale Park's 1990 Bluegrass reunion.

Oakdale hosts three bluegrass events each year and the very first festival was held almost two decades ago.

In addition to the scheduled stage performances, many spontaneous bluegrass jam sessions are held throughout the weekend. Festival guests enjoy moving from group to group to listen to these informal gatherings.

Oakdale Park is open year round and offers, among other amenities, cabins, camping facilities, snack bar, playground and store. For more information, write P.O. Box 548, Glen Rose, Texas 76043, or call 1-817-897-2321.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1989

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Exciting changes and new skills increase your earning potential. A promotion or raise is likely. Business or career moves are less risky.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actor Michael Douglas, dancer Juliet Prowse, interviewer Barbara Walters, author William Faulkner, baseball great Phil Rizzuto.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Be careful about business matters and conferences. Do not abuse special privileges when handling other people's money. Others will respect you more if you address any problems head-on. End a go-nowhere relationship.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Someone at the office may try to upset your applecart. Play it cool. Decide what would deter you from doing things to the best of your ability and what would crowd you needlessly.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Recycle an old idea or project to swell profits. Authority figure asks a special favor. It could entail your putting in overtime. Expect to be paid for your work. Romance is a delight.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Guard against extravagance and double-dealing. Getting in touch with someone far away closes a gap. Tighten the reins at work to reduce wasted effort. A loyal associate should be taken into your confidence.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Work tasks could be harder than you anticipated. Try to choose projects you can handle on your own. You might prefer going Dutch on a date tonight. Be candid about financial restraints.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A relationship will withstand the test of time. Give free rein to your emotions. Children will respond favorably if allowed more responsibility. Cultivate the friendship side of your marriage. Emphasize shared interests.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You may not know exactly what is in jeopardy now. Continue to do your work to the best of your ability. See friends who wish you well and provide a happy balance. Share secrets.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your work is cut out for you today. Seek advice from experts to minimize the possibility of making expensive mistakes. An authority figure will admire you for owning up to an error. Defend your turf.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Joint financial matters could be a bone of contention. Use a positive approach to reach workable solutions. Buying a piece of real estate could prove very lucky. Put romance on hold.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You have plenty to give. Foreign connections, especially from Europe, are starred. You had better keep your passport handy! Romance blossoms with an older person. Follow your heart.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Do not act rebellious if someone tries to hold you back. Listen attentively but rely on your instincts. Schedules are subject to far-reaching changes. You gain both professionally and personally from a partnership.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A row could be brewing at your workplace. Give in to your fashion-conscious streak: spring for a new outfit. Changes on the job are in your favor. Your partner is a source of inspiration.

Like "Wide World of Sports," each week we comb the globe for the unusual. There is not much to the play of today's hand, but it does feature one of our favorite characters, the peripatetic Zia Mahmood of Pakistan, London, New York and various places in between.

The hand is from a tournament in Toronto and, as you can see from the diagram, the bidding sequence was rather strange, almost surrealistic. Sitting South, Zia managed to bid all four suits and no trump—something we have not seen for quite a while. At favorable vulnerability, he was trying to muddy the waters and confuse the opponents, who almost surely could make game once North passed the opening bid.

He scored only a partial success. At four diamonds, doubled, he went down 300 after a spade lead—the defenders took two spade tricks, a spade ruff, a heart and a club. As the cards lie, the opponents can make four hearts with an overtrick by taking the spade finesse, ruffing out the suit and conceding two club tricks.

After a diamond lead, declarer (West or East) ruffs, cashes the ace and king of hearts and takes the spade finesse. Ace of spades and a ruff sets up the suit, and the queen of hearts is still available as an entry to the good spades. But some declarers guessed the hand wrongly to rob Zia of complete success.

Cajun writes book defining his heritage

By MARY FOSTER

LAFAYETTE, La. (AP) — Lunchtime at Mulates: The friendly waitress serves up fried catfish, stuffed peppers and jambalaya to the tourist while the fiddle and accordion wail another chorus of "Jolie Blonde."

Angers

It may make the tourist commission here in the heart of Acadiana happy, but it has Trent Angers hotter than a cayenne pepper.

"That's exactly how a lot of people got their image of Cajuns. A reporter comes to town and he is sent to Mulates and on a swamp tour and then he heads off to write his story. Most people think we're a bunch of laid-back, drunken hedonists who eat too much and dance all night."

Fun, food and music may be part of the Cajun heritage, but it's not the whole story, said Angers, author of "The Truth About Cajuns."

"That doesn't define who we are. Cajuns are a people with a strong work ethic, strong family ties and a fidelity to the land."

In his book, Angers traces the history of the French exiles who moved from Nova Scotia in the mid-1700s and whose descendants kept many of their native customs, including the language, and became known as Acadians or Cajuns.

Angers, 41, whose mother is Cajun, blames the media, tourism, counterfeit Cajun products and humorist Justin Wilson, whose "Cajun Chef" cooking show is nationally syndicated, for the Cajun stereotype.

"He speaks in broken English and with a lot of malaprops. To hear him you'd think all Cajuns are barely literate and not very bright. He is not a Cajun, but this is the only image of a Cajun many people have.

"His contrived accent and the demeaning nature of many of his jokes are embarrassing to many people in south Louisiana. They just wish Mr. Wilson would go home and do his cooking instead of ridiculing them."

Wilson and his manager-wife Jeannine refused to even discuss the issue. "I don't want to talk about that," Wilson said.

Paul Edward Joubert, a Cajun and a sociologist at the University of Southwestern Louisiana, said Angers' book makes some valid points.

"To see some of it you would think we all have pirogues still and are barefoot and are living in a swamp. There's the implication that these people don't know any better but they're happy because they dance a lot," he said.

Working from national publications, Angers compiled a list of stereotypes. For example:

■ "What lives in the swamps, plays an accordion, eats crawfish, speaks French and rocks your socks off?"

■ "In these parts, if you don't dance and drink beer, people think you're a communist!"

■ S"Cajun country (is) a land of fiddles and etouffee, squeeze boxes and two-steps ... where everybody's a cousin and everything's cooked in cayenne by a people whose religion is hospitality."

Alice Ferguson, a spokeswoman for the Lafayette Parish Convention and Visitors Commission, denied tourism officials have helped to generate such stereotypes. "When a writer or film crew comes in, they sometimes only want to see a swamp or Cajun dancing or one part of the culture," she said.

"We try to make sure they get what they want. If they don't have a specific request, we try to show them some of everything — the museums, the city, the university, as well as the swamp and the dancing."

Even Cajun food has been slandered, Angers said, accusing national writers and cooks for erroneously labeling it hot and peppery. "To read about Cajun food or taste so-called Cajun food like Cajun potato chips, or Cajun Whalers at Burger King, or the Cajun Pizza at Pizza Hut, you'd think Cajuns had to drink a lot of beer just to preserve their taste buds. Cajun food is about the only thing that has been more maligned here than the people."

His definition of Cajun food is good home cooking made with fresh ingredients and skill. Some may be spicy, but it's not hot or peppery.

While Cajuns have managed to maintain a cultural identity, they are not a group of simple people living in the past, Angers said. "It may be good for tourism, but it undermines the dignity of the Cajun people."

And it is good for tourism. Although Ferguson has no figures on how many people visit the area annually, she said the four major festivals in Lafayette each draw 200,000 to 300,000 people.

Although 8 percent to 10 percent of the Cajuns still hunt, trap and live in the swamps, Angers said the majority are mainstream Americans these days.

"Because of the fact we're projected as good-time Charlies, people who are in a position to bring industry into this state don't even give this area a thought. They assume we are so busy playing that we don't ever work."

Angers, who also is the editor and publisher of the magazine Acadiana Profile, said, "I don't want to go overboard in the other direction and make Cajuns seem like boring, humorless people who never have fun. But come on, you couldn't do to another minority what people have done to Cajuns and get away with it.

"All I'm saying is there is more to us than a group of dull-witted, beer drinking musicians. Let's have a little balance from now on."

Collector finds letters, photos by Hemingway

By JULIE LEW
New York Times News Service

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — Ernest Hemingway may be the most picked over American writer of the 20th century, but any new revelation illuminating a dim corner of his life is still cause for interest.

A cache of Hemingway memorabilia — including a carbon typescript of the autobiographical novel "Green Hills of Africa," which had been sitting in a closet for more than 50 years — has been acquired by a Sacramento collector who stumbled on a fragment of the material two years ago and traced it to its source.

"My mouth dropped open, and my heartbeat increased rapidly," said the collector, David R. Meeker, describing his reaction when he learned of the existence of the typescript.

Meeker, an administrative law judge, has been an avid Hemingway collector for the last 23 years.

The collection was begun by Richard and Jane Armstrong, friends of Hemingway.

Armstrong was a journalist with the International News Service in Cuba, and his wife, a State Department employee, typed the manuscript of "Green Hills of Africa." The couple's daughter, Phyllis Gardner, later typed "For Whom the Bell Tolls."

The earliest item in the collection is a 1934 telegram sent to Hemingway by his second wife, Pauline. The latest is a 1945 letter to the author from Jane Armstrong. The bulk of the material dates from 1941 to 1942.

The collection, for which Meeker paid "six figures," also includes a typescript of the first draft of a short story, "The Capital of the World," 25 letters written by Martha Gellhorn, Hemingway's third wife, dated from 1939 to 1942 and letters written by Hemingway from 1936 to 1940, referring variously to "For Whom the Bell Tolls," "Green Hills of Africa" and "To Have and Have Not."

There are also photographs, inscribed magazine pieces, a wedding invitation announcing the Gellhorn-Hemingway marriage and letters by Arnold Gingrich, then publisher of Esquire, and Katie Dos Passos, wife of writer John Dos Passos.

Robert Gajdusek, professor of English at San Francisco State University and the only Hemingway scholar to have looked at the collection so far, said, "It's amazing that this family had not discovered its value, or that it had not surfaced before this."

While the typescript to "Green Hills of Africa" is valuable, the letters hold more scholarly interest, he said.

Gajdusek is the author of "Hemingway in Paris" and is working on a book called "Hemingway's Key West and Cuba."

Meeker found out about the collection two years ago when a rare-book dealer in St. Petersburg, Fla., sent him a copy of the typescript of "The Capital of the World," asking him to verify its authenticity and whether a penciled insert for the short story, written on yellowed paper, was really in Hemingway's hand.

"I looked at it, realized it was, told him what short story it was from and asked him if there was more," Meeker said.

When the book dealer informed him that there were also six inscribed magazine pieces, Meeker negotiated with the owner of the typescript and the magazine, who turned out to be Phyllis Gardner's son, Alan Danielson.

Meeker said Danielson's mother had been moving from Washington to North Carolina when she found the material in a closet. Danielson told Meeker that his mother had given half the material to him and half to his sister, Lynne Oliver.

The only other existing typescript, also a carbon copy of "Green Hills of Africa," Meeker said, is in two places — 80 pages at the University of Delaware and the remaining 243 pages at the John F. Kennedy Library in Massachusetts.

"I don't know of any other Hemingway typescript in a private collection," he said.

After eight months of negotiations with Mrs. Oliver, he acquired the remaining trove.

Meeker, who has amassed almost 2,000 items relating to and by Hemingway, including many first editions, estimated the typescript to be worth about $50,000.

But he said he valued the items more for the light they shed on the writer's life.

For example, in a letter to Armstrong, Hemingway revealed a bit of his original plans to write a series of short stories in what eventually became the novel "To Have and Have Not":

"Richard, I have something I need for this damn book I'm working on but don't know whether you can get or not. What I need is contemporary newspaper //(eyewitness accounts//) that I can rewrite or steal from what facts I want ... //(here Hemingway lists many events in Cuban politics.//)...Don't wait to get everything. Send everything you get as soon as you get it and check it off the list. Have postponed the book of stories because I want to use 'The One Trip Across,' 'Tradesman's Return' and three others that have to do with the same people plus the one I was telling you about about Cuba and need this stuff for background. They all link up and I want to have the Cuban stuff in between, sort of like the chapters in between the stories in 'In Our Time'... Key West, July 25, 1936."

In answer, Armstrong sent two letters describing the intricacies of politics in Havana, which Hemingway incorporated into the book almost unchanged, Meeker said.

"That's the beauty of the letters from Ernest," he said.

"They almost all deal with some specific creative problem he's working on."

Hemingway's Paris shown in guidebook

NEW YORK (AP) — Ernest Hemingway slept here.

So can you.

Go to the Hotel d'Angleterre in Paris. Hemingway and Hadley, his first wife, stayed there on their arrival in Paris in December 1921. Their room cost 12 francs a day for two.

Today, observes John Leland in his "A Guide to Hemingway's Paris" (Algonquin Books), "the hotel has three stars and the Hemingways' room — number 14 — costs 690 francs a night. Call ahead; the desk clerk says the room is nearly always booked."

According to Leland, Hemingway chose that hotel because "he had first planned to take Hadley to the Italy he knew from World War I, but Sherwood Anderson convinced him that Paris was the place to be. And Paris, for the writers and artists, meant the Left Bank."

Also, the American dollar went a long way in Paris then and France didn't have Prohibition.

Paris was Hemingway's home, off and on, for about eight years. In addition to telling you where the noted writer slept, Leland provides a wealth of other information, including the places in which he ate and drank.

One bar was "The Hole in the Wall Bar," which is "a narrow bar with a red-painted facade that looks today much as it must have in Hemingway's day ... A hangout for deserters during World War I, the bar supposedly had an exit into the sewers of Paris."

In compiling this guide, Leland says he tried to visit all the places he lists "attempting to discover how much — if any — they have changed since Hemingway knew them. The places associated with Hemingway — the cafes of the Carrefour Vavin, La Closerie des Lilas, the Ritz — all remember him.

"Some trade on his name — you can drink in the Hemingway Bar at the Ritz, sit at Hemingway's favorite spot at the Closerie ..."

For true Hemingway aficionados, the guide contains three walking tours "designed to pass by the more prominent Hemingway sites in selected quarters."

Author links beer and olives

NEW YORK (AP) — At first taste, beer and olives don't seem to have much in common.

But the two come together, indirectly, in Reay Tannahill's comprehensive book "Food in History" (Crown), an absorbing as well as entertaining "world history of food, from prehistoric times to today."

Of beer, Tannahill writes:

"It seems the discovery of ale was stimulated by the process of breadmaking. At some stage in the Neolithic era people had learned that if, instead of using ordinary grain, they used grain that had been sprouted and then dried, it made a bread that kept unusually well. Something very like this was used in brewing.

"The Egyptian process was to sprout the grain, dry it, crush it, mix it to a dough and partially bake it. The loaves were then broken up and put to soak in water, where they were allowed to ferment for about a day before the liquor was strained off and considered ready for drinking."

Egyptian ales ranged from "fairly weak" to those having an alcohol content of about 12 percent. Some of them, says Tannahill, "certainly must have been potent or it would not have been necessary to warn drinkers, as an Egyptian papyrus of 1400 B.C. did: 'Do not get drunk in the taverns in which they drink ale, for fear that people repeat words that may have gone out of your mouth, without you being aware of having uttered them.' "

As for olives, they're a symbol of Greece and have been for a very long time. In fact, Tannahill claims they are responsible for changing the Greek landscape.

"At the beginning of the 6th century B.C., Solon forbade the export of any agricultural produce other than olive oil. It was a wisely intended policy, but it struck the final and fatal blow at the Greek landscape.

"The few remaining fibrous-rooted trees were felled for the sake of the olive, whose long tap root struck deep down into the limestone and did nothing to knit, conserve or feed the topsoil.

"By the 4th century B.C., Plato was gloomily contrasting the bare white rock of the Attic countryside he knew with the green meadows, woods and springs of the not-too-distant past. In effect, the pure and brilliant light that is so startling a characteristic of Greece today had been bought at the expense of the trees that had once kept the land fertile."
