President Bush addresses airline employees at O'Hare International Airport in Chicago, as a plane flies overhead, Thursday. Bush, promising to secure America's airways from terrorist attacks, urged governors Thursday to call up National Guard units to protect U.S. airports while he implements a long-term security plan. The plan includes putting the federal government in charge of airport security.

Bush outlines steps to make air travel safer

Protection against terrorist attacks originating at Midland International Airport and the security of cockpit crews may be heightened even more by implementing national airline plans proposed on Thursday by President Bush.

"This is a nation that is determined to defend freedom from any terrorist, any place, in the world," Bush said in his broadcast speech at Chicago-O'Hare International Airport.

Marv Esterly, director of Midland International Airport and Midland Airpark, said he is encouraged by Bush's proposals that include:

■ Placing the federal government in charge of the screening of passengers and their luggage and "all safety inspection." Currently, the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) calls on airport's dominant airlines to take care of screening.

"We will make our standards tougher and better and consistent all around the country," Bush said.

■ "Having the nation's governors activate the National Guard and place guardsmen at inspection stations in airports as visual security measures" to ward off terrorists and to comfort travelers.

"Some airports already meet high standards," Bush said.

Airline security

President Bush announced an increase in security at airports and aboard airplanes Thursday. The President has asked governors of all 50 states to deploy National Guard troops in all airports for four to six months during the implementation of the plan.

Airplane modifications: A $500 million grant to modify planes.

Restricted opening of the cockpit door during flight. Fortified cockpit doors to deny access from the cabin.

Research and development into aircraft transponders that cannot be switched off. Transponders allow ground controllers to track aircraft.

Research and development into cameras that would alert cockpit crews of cabin activity.

Air marshals: Continued expansion of the air marshal program.

Airport security: Federal government to be in charge; supervising passenger and baggage security at commercial airports; background checks and training security personnel; control security equipment; overseeing security patrolling; and working with other law enforcement at all levels.

Local Muslim doctor treated victims of Sept. 11 attack in New York City

By Johnnye Montgomery
MRT Correspondent

Dr. Omar Rahman, a third-year resident of internal medicine who lives in Midland, contends the Sept. 11 attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon have nothing to do with religion.

Rahman, a Muslim, was in New York City at the time of the attack and saw the second plane hit the World Trade Center.

"I had gone to New Jersey for my marriage, which was scheduled for Sept. 14, and we were driving on the expressway when we saw it," said Rahman who practices through Texas Tech's Health Science Center. "Of course, watching it was horrible, and as soon as it happened, everything came to a halt, then suddenly, out of nowhere there came all these ambulances and firetrucks."

It took Rahman and his fiancee, Fyeza Haider, a first-year internal medicine resident in New Jersey, three hours to drive the 9 miles back to their apartment. Once there, they changed clothes and immediately volunteered to work in the emergency room of her hospital.

— Omar Rahman, third-year resident of internal medicine

"All the hospitals in New York caught the major casualties and the dying, and we were able to help with the minor injuries, and with people who were already in the hospital," he said.

Rahman and Ms. Haider went through with their scheduled wedding on Sept. 14, although they spent the morning of their wedding day working in the hospital before the ceremony — a very solemn and scaled down version of what they had planned — began.

Omar Rahman, a doctor at Midland Memorial Hospital, witnessed the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks in New York City. Rahman and his fiancee, Fyeza Haider, also a doctor, were traveling on the expressway when they saw the second plane hit the World Trade Center. Rahman and Ms. Haider immediately went to volunteer their services at a local hospital.

Midland United Way afraid local funds may be drained by New York relief efforts

By Emily Baker
MRT Correspondent

In the less than three weeks since the terrorist attacks in New York City, businesses, schools, civic groups and individuals across the country have organized all sorts of fundraisers to help the relief effort. The Midland United Way believes Americans are right to do this, but doesn't want Midlanders to forget about the local agencies in need of support.

"It is a very natural reaction (to want to send money to New York), and we want that to happen," United Way of Midland Executive Director Cindy Benson said. "But we need to remember that in the fabric of our great nation is the community.

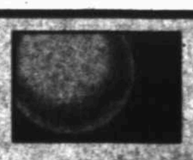

"A horrible, tragic thing has happened in our nation. We need to remain strong. We are, but in order to do that, we need to look at the components of our nation. Strong families build strong communities which build strong nations. If any building block in the nation is weak, we cannot respond (to a crisis)," she said.

Ms. Benson said the United Way acts as a fundamental means for keeping the community strong.

United Way provides funding for several area organizations such as American Red Cross of Southwest Texas,

Bush billboards unveiled during ceremony

By Emily Baker
MRT Correspondent

President Bush now greets passers-by on Interstate 20 before they enter Midland. A new billboard featuring a smiling George W. Bush was unveiled under sunny skies Thursday afternoon. The billboard is one of several marketing strategies being implemented by the Midland Convention and Visitors Bureau to attract potential visitors.

"We knew we wanted to market Midland as the home of the president and what better way than on the interstate where people pass by as they are traveling," said Shura Lindgren, director of the Midland Convention and Visitors Bureau.

The billboard is located east of town at FM 1208 on the way into town from Stanton. Another billboard is located at FM 1788.

"We hope that if we get enough sponsorship of these billboards that we can expand and put more up further out east and west of town," Ms. Lindgren said.

The tarp covering the one of the new billboards depicting President George W. Bush's visit to Midland in January gradually falls away. Officials hope the new billboards will serve as Midland's welcome mat to the world. Visitors can obtain information about the president's childhood from the Midland Convention and Visitors Bureau.

Ashcroft releases photos of 19 suspected hijackers

By Pete Yost
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Attorney General John Ashcroft on Thursday released photographs of the 19 suspected hijackers, saying it is part of "a national neighborhood watch" in which investigators hope Americans might recognize some of the hijackers.

Ashcroft and FBI Director Robert Mueller asked any Americans who might recognize the photos to contact authorities. They said there were still questions about the true identities of some of the men, and they hoped the public's help might assist in solving those questions.

"What we are currently doing is determining whether, when these individuals came to the United States, these were their real names or they changed their names for use with false identification in the United States," said Mueller.

The FBI director said there was evidence that one or more of the hijackers had had contacts with al-Qaida, the network associated with accused terrorist Osama bin Laden. He declined to be more specific.

Mueller said the FBI believes the names and photographs match those on the manifests of the hijacked planes.

Ashcroft said the total number of tips provided to investigators has passed 100,000. Mueller said the bureau has "over 200,000 leads we are investigating."

Some of the names have slightly different spellings and others have additional names added, compared to the list released by the FBI on Sept. 14. Mueller said the FBI is confident that the names and photos were the identities the hijackers had before entering the United States.

The identities of at least four of the hijackers released Sept. 14 by the FBI have been challenged by people with the same or similar names.

Saudi Arabia Embassy officials, for example, have said that a Saudi electrical engineer named Abdulaziz Alomari — the same name as one of the hijackers on the plane that crashed into the Pentagon — had his passport and other papers stolen in 1996 in Denver when he was a student, and reported the theft to police there at the time.

The FBI director said that there was some evidence that "one or more" of the hijackers were related to each other.

On another matter, Mueller said the FBI believes that arrests Wednesday of people allegedly involved in fraudulently getting commercial licenses to carry hazardous materials are not related to the terrorist hijackings.

On Wednesday, FBI agents investigating the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks assisted in the arrests of 10 Middle Eastern men in three states for fraudulently obtaining licenses to transport hazardous materials.

Wednesday's sweep in Missouri, Michigan and Washington followed FBI warnings that terrorists may try to strike next using chemical or biological weapons.

Another eight people who obtained bogus licenses were taken into custody Thursday and two were still at large, the Justice Department said. The locations of the eight arrested were not immediately available.

A total of 20 people from seven states have been charged with falsely obtaining hazardous material licenses from a Pennsylvania state examiner. The examiner told the FBI he took payoffs in exchange for the permits between July 1999 and February 2000, according to court papers. The drivers didn't take required tests and some had suspended licenses at the time they got the permits.

The concern about licenses to haul chemicals first surfaced last week when the FBI arrested Nabil Al-Marabh, 34, a former Boston cab driver. Al-Marabh holds a commercial driver's license and is certified to transport hazardous materials.

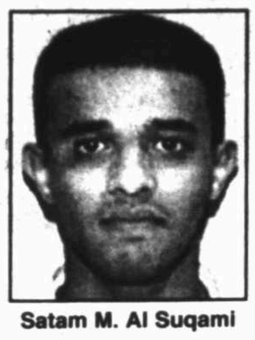

The FBI appeared to be zeroing in on people who — wittingly or unwittingly — helped the 19 men authorities say hijacked four airliners and crashed them in New York, Washington and Pennsylvania. Nearly 7,000 people were dead or missing.

Salvadoran national police director Mauricio Sandoval said the FBI had detained a man who allegedly helped the terrorists obtain false identification cards. Luis Martinez-Flores "may have moved" around "with the terrorists in New York, Boston or Florida," Sandoval told a news conference.

The name Luis Martinez-Flores turned up last week on a list of 21 people whose financial records the FBI had asked all U.S. banks to check. The 19 suspected hijackers were on the list, along with Martinez-Flores and one other person.

Martinez-Flores apparently was being held by the U.S. immigration officials in Virginia as an illegal immigrant, Sandoval said.

Pentagon officials assure public on possibility of shooting down hijacked civilian airliners

By Robert Burns
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Pentagon's top officials sought to reassure air travelers Thursday about procedures for deciding whether to shoot down a hijacked commercial jet.

Gen. Henry H. Shelton, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said of military fighter pilots, "Don't get the impression that anyone who's flying around out there has a loose trigger finger. That's not the case."

Shelton spoke at a Pentagon news conference with Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld at his side.

Rumsfeld said that for security reasons he could not reveal details of the procedures that have been established since the deadly hijackings on Sept. 11. In cases in which time allowed, the president would be consulted before military action was taken, he said.

If time was too short, the final decision on firing at a civilian airliner could be made by a general responsible for U.S. air defense. Rumsfeld and others stressed this would be rare, a last resort.

"Very, very senior people are able to address a matter in real time and ask the right questions and make the right judgments," Rumsfeld told a Pentagon news conference. He said he has been consulted a number of times since Sept. 11 about "concerns, questions about what various aircraft might be doing in various locations of the world." He provided no detailed examples.

Vice President Dick Cheney said earlier this month that President Bush had decided, following the hijackings Sept. 11, that airliners which clearly imperiled civilian populations should be shot down. Fighter jets were launched shortly before the second World Trade Center attack and shortly before the Pentagon attack, but in both cases the fighters did not reach the scene in time to act.

Rumsfeld said he was confident proper authorities would be consulted in future air emergencies.

"Americans have a high degree of certainty, it seems to me. The president, the secretary of defense and the combatant commanders are never more than a minute or two away from a secure phone," Rumsfeld said.

Shooting down a civilian airliner headed for a government building or other populated area would be costly — not only in passenger and crew lives lost but potentially also on the ground.

Responsibility for defense of U.S. and Canadian air space lies with the North American Aerospace Defense Command, or NORAD, whose headquarters is in a secure bunker inside Cheyenne Mountain near Colorado Springs, Colo. The commander in chief of NORAD is Air Force Gen. Ralph E. Eberhart.

Eberhart was quoted in Thursday's New York Times as saying that authority to shoot down a hijacked civilian airliner over the continental United States goes as low as the two-star general below him, Maj. Gen. Larry K. Arnold.

Ultimately, the person who would pull the trigger would be the pilot flying the jet.

Shelton, the Joint Chiefs chairman, said no one should fear that a fighter pilot would act imprudently or recklessly.

In fact, Shelton said, his concern is that a pilot would be so reluctant that he might not act in time.

"I don't think our American citizens have to be concerned about the things that we are doing right now to protect the American citizens," he said.

Anya Piazza, a spokeswoman for the Airline Pilots Association, said commercial pilots accept the fact that the decision to shoot down a hijacked civilian plane could, in rare cases, be made by a military officer.

"We certainly understand why (the president) has that authority and why he has passed it down," she said.

There is no precedent for shooting down an American commercial airliner in American skies, although lives have been lost in shootdowns elsewhere. A U.S. Navy warship, for example, shot down an Iranian commercial jet in the Persian Gulf in 1988 after mistaking it for a military plane. All 290 aboard died. In 1983, a Soviet fighter shot down a Korean Air Lines jet that strayed into Soviet airspace, killing all 269 aboard, including an American congressman, Larry McDonald of Georgia.

In other developments Thursday:

■ Rumsfeld declined to discuss the timing of a military response to the Sept. 11 attacks but stressed that speed was not the main goal. "We're not leaping into this. We're moving into it in a measured way," he said.

■ The Defense Department is creating the Defense of Freedom Medal to award all department civilians killed or wounded in the terrorist attacks at the Pentagon and the World Trade Center. It is the equivalent of the military's Purple Heart, which Rumsfeld said will be awarded to all military personnel killed or wounded in the attacks.

■ The Army Reserve called 607 citizen soldiers from 11 different units in 10 states to active duty. That brings the total number of Reserve and National Guard members called up to about 16,000.

TRAVEL: Flights may see marshals

(From 1A)

■ Dramatically "increase the number of federal air marshals on airplanes.

"When Americans fly, there needs to be more highly skilled and fully-equipped officers of law flying along side them ... in plain clothes."

■ Providing airlines with grants "for enhanced cockpit protection.

"We are looking forward to working with the pilots and airlines to fortify doors and provide stronger locks so our pilots will always be in command of the airplanes," Bush said. He also recommended "transponders that cannot be switched off from the cockpit" and "video monitors in the cockpit to alert pilots to trouble in the cabin."

■ The technology for air-traffic controllers "to take over distressed aircraft and land them by remote control."

Esterly said screening by federal agents instead of by private enterprise, such as airlines' contracting out screening, "would be welcomed by the airport.

"I know that the airlines see that as a burden off of their back," Esterly said.

Karen Esterly, Southwest Airlines' Midland-based customer-service supervisor, said Bush's plans for federal screening "would be a dream come true.

"I truly believe that we will have good-caliber people" conducting the screening, Ms. Esterly said. "I think we have good-caliber people now (working for Globe Security). But I think that (efficiency and thoroughness) would even increase with the federal government taking over those situations at the checkpoint.

"I welcome it," Esterly said. "I'm not sure how it will be funded. I don't know if it is going to happen for sure. But we would welcome it at the airport."

Of the National Guardsmen augmenting airport security, Esterly said, "It would sure help a lot of the airports.

"Like the airlines, we are suffering," Esterly said. "Our enplanements are suffering. Our revenue sources and streams are suffering. Guardsmen's working with the Midland Police Department in ensuring security would economically benefit the airport and its security. And we would also welcome that.

"President Bush is acting on the request of the airlines and on request of the (airport) industry. And I think that he is doing a great job in helping us," Esterly said

In his speech highlighted by repeated bipartisan cheers, Bush exhorted the nation's travelers to "get on the airlines — get about the business of America."

"Airline enplanements are sort of like the stock market right now," Esterly lamented. "They've been up on some flights — closer to normal. And then on other flights, we fall off again."

Enplanements need to be analyzed "over a period of time" to determine "what the total impact is."

September boarding, greatly reduced following the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks by hijacked airliners that were crashed into New York City's World Trade Center and the Pentagon, will be studied early next month after the airlines serving Midland give their boarding reports.

In 2000, total enplanements at Midland were 470,204 passengers — a fraction of 1 percent of the nation's 1.457 billion air-travelers in 2000, according to the Airports Council International — North America.

Despite the Sept. 11 hijacking of United States air carriers, American and United, "I truly think it (airline travel) is still, anyway you slice it, ... secure," Esterly said.

"It's the safest way to travel. It's as safe as sitting in your office. It's as safe as standing on any city street corner. Flying is safer than driving and safer than taking a train. I truly believe that," he said.

Esterly said he is "just glad" the federal and state governments are "acting on all this stuff" to prevent terrorism at airports and in the skies.

Staff Sgt. Robert Reese of the Texas National Guard's mechanized infantry unit in Midland noted that since "police departments and all are getting stretched out" in providing airport security, the president and the nation's governors "are thinking about bringing the Guard on to pick up that slack ... and using the Guard for temporary air marshals until they can get enough people hired up to do that ... as part of the upgrade of our airline-security system."

Though he is 67, retired U.S. Army Reserve Col. Jack Swan of Midland said, "If they need us, I'd gladly go."

Texas Air National Guardsman Lt. Col. Keith Laird of Austin noted there are about 20,000 Texas Army and Air National Guardsmen — "from cooks to pilots."

Immediately after the Sept. 11 attacks, the FAA's heightened security at airports included the following:

■ Non-ticketed persons will not be allowed into the concourse or through security-screening checkpoints to the passenger-waiting and enplanement areas.

■ There is a total ban on any type of knives or anything that resembles a knife. Pepper-spay items are prohibited.

■ Only loading and unloading will be permitted in front of the terminal building. There will be no waiting or parking there.

Previously existing FAA rules require:

■ Photograph identification of ticketed passengers prior to boarding.

■ Absence of any "joking" concerning bomb threats or hijacking.

■ No concealed weapons on passengers.

Harry Spannaus, chairman the of the Midland Airport (Advisory) Board to the Midland City Council, noted the efficacy of secure cockpit doors with a surveillance system for pilots to observe cabin activity and recommended hidden cameras for the pilots to observe cabin movements.

He recommended secured double cockpit doors. Russian airliners have a network of triple doors leading to the cockpit, he said.

Pilots perhaps could be armed with electric stun-guns to incapacitate terrorists if the federal government will not allow pilots to carry firearms, Spannaus said, and flight attendants could be fitted with Mace or a similar knock-out or knock-down gas to ward off assailants.

The government could set rigid standards for training civilian screeners, pay better wages and require physical prowess so that screening officers could overpower troublemakers.

Bush said America is "determined to find them (terrorists) and bring them to justice, and we will. We are not only united, we are determined" and "adjusting to a new type of war.

"The new war is not only against the evildoers of this world but those who harbor them ... and finance them," Bush said. "We're marching to do what's right.

"There are no longer islands to conquer or beachheads to storm (in winning a war)," he said. "We face a brand of evil the likes of which" the nation has not experienced "in a long time in the world."

Greg Stephen, executive director of the American Red Cross for Southwest Texas, said the heightened security measures "will make the American people feel safer when they get on a plane and more secure knowing the armed forces, or whoever President Bush decides to put in charge, are securing airports."

UNVEIL: Billboards on FM 1788, FM 1208

(From 1A)

The billboards cost $1,326 each for two months and are being paid for by sponsors.

First American Bank is one such sponsor and President Bobby Norman, who will be the chairman of the Midland Chamber of Commerce come October, said the Chamber and the bank believe the billboard is a good way to drive economic-development efforts.

The billboard "is part of the process of moving Midland forward," he said. "Many people outside of Texas don't know what Midland is about. They think it is a sleepy town with one stoplight.

"This billboard may have people opt to stop in and see what we have to offer. Midland has produced two presidents, and we should be noted for our accomplishments," Norman said.

Midland Mayor Mike Canon said the billboard acts as a welcome mat to visitors.

"It means that we have a symbol of our community and a symbol of welcome to those who pass by," he said. "It is a wonderful tribute to the president and to the relationship this community has with him and to his past. Midland, like many other American cities, has core values, and we want to offer that to the rest of the world."

Ms. Lindgren said another strategy to attract visitors to Midland includes exhibits in the visitors center dealing with President Bush's childhood. It will show where he lived and went to school. The organization also hopes to develop materials so visitors can take self-guided tours through Midland and visit attractions dealing with President Bush's childhood.

EFFORTS: Funding used for programs

(From 1A)

Big Brothers Big Sisters, Boys and Girls Club of Midland, Boy Scouts of America-Buffalo Trail Council, Camp Fire USA-West Texas Council, Casa de Amigos, Centers for Children and Families, Community and Senior Services, Freewill Foster Home, Girl Scouts of the Permian Basin, Midland Need to Read, Midland Rape Crisis and Children's Advocacy Center, Palmer Drug Abuse Program, Safe Place of the Permian Basin, Salvation Army and YMCA.

Ms. Benson said the Red Cross and the Salvation Army, both United Way-supported organizations, are helping in the New York City relief efforts.

"If we don't have the funding to pay for these programs, then they won't be there," Ms. Benson said. "If you really want to help our nation, invest in our community."

The United Way provides 8 to 40 percent of the budgets of the organizations they support, Ms. Benson said.

Sandy Tisdale, executive director of Big Brothers Big Sisters, said United Way provides about 35 percent of their annual budget of $250,000.

"The money we receive from the United Way is used for general operating support," Ms. Tisdale said. "We use it for the expenses incurred to screen volunteers, volunteer training, group activities and volunteer recruitment."

United Way provides 8 to 9 percent of the current $1.2 million budget of Community and Senior Services, according to Community and Senior Services executive director Kelly Ives.

"We use our funding primarily for Meals on Wheels," Ms. Ives said. "It is helping us serve about 450 people a day. The United Way funding helps us keep from having to implement a waiting list. We can put people on our list immediately if they qualify."

She said the funding also is used for home-bound services such as making minor house-hold repairs for the elderly and grocery shopping for the home-bound.

Ms. Ives said the budget soon will increase to $1.6 million because Community and Senior Services is adding a new program called Foster Grandparents. For this program, elderly volunteers will be paired up with children and will work one-on-one with the children "tutoring, mentoring and nurturing," Ms. Ives said.

Ms. Benson said the best way to help the United Way is to donate money. A pledge card can be obtained from the United Way, but money does not have to accompany a card, Ms. Benson said. The United Way is located at 1209 W. Wall St.

Ms. Benson said volunteers also can help by stuffing envelopes and other similar tasks. More information about how to donate or how to help is available by calling the United Way at 685-7700 or by visiting www.uwmidland.org.

Former President Bush takes flight to prove airline safety

By Pam Easton
Associated Press

HOUSTON — Former President George Bush, promoting the safety of the nation's airlines and airports, said his flight from Boston "couldn't have been better" as he arrived back home in Houston Thursday aboard a commercial airliner.

Bush, flying in first class aboard a Continental Airlines plane, said his ride was "nice and smooth" and even included "nice, clean washrooms."

He was greeted at a gate at Bush Intercontinental, an airport named for him, by Gordon Bethune, Continental's chairman and chief executive.

"One thing I wanted to demonstrate, and I realize it's just symbolic, is the safety of the airways and the confidence I have in Continental," Bush said, noting his son had made similar comments about the safety of air travel in an appearance Thursday in Chicago.

"I think people are ready to start living again," the elder Bush said. "People are going to take more precautions. There is going to be some inconvenience. But this is America and we're strong."

He said when he got to Logan Airport, the departure point for two of the four planes hijacked Sept. 11, he was met by a couple of state troopers, who talked about about what that city had experienced.

"You couldn't help but empathize with Logan and what went on through there with some of this beginning there," said Bush, whose carryon bag, adorned with the presidential seal, was scanned by security at Logan Airport.

Asked about his son's job performance, he would say only that the president was doing a good job.

"I'm trying to stay out of that," he said, adding that if he were to discuss issues, he would be asked by reporters how he would have responded as president and force his son to respond.

"People automatically would go: 'Here's what your nutty dad said. What do you think?' I'm not going to get into that and it's better not to," Bush said.

Bush described the war on terrorism as a different than the Gulf War, which he presided over.

"I had to mobilize public opinion," he said. "Now public opinion is solidly behind the president, but the objective is much more difficult."

DOCTOR: Couple went on with wedding

(From 1A)

"Usually a Muslim wedding is very festive, with a large gathering, but we were so sad and upset, and all of our friends from out of state had their flights canceled, so our wedding was very quiet and solemn."

Rahman will finish his residency in June, then he will go on to a critical care program at a hospital in Manhattan. He said he and his wife plan to return to West Texas after they have finished their medical training.

"I've traveled a good deal in the U.S., and I really love the environment and the people who are so kind and friendly here," he said. "The staff here and at Medical Center are always very cooperative and professional."

Rahman rotates in training between Midland Memorial and Medical Center Hospital in Odessa, and upon completion of his residency in June, he will be eligible to take his board certification examination.

He said his major concern during this time of stress and trouble is the racial backlash.

"I'm from Pakistan, and I'm a Muslim, the same religion that those terrorists are supposed to believe in," he said. "But our religion doesn't call for terrorism. It was a violent and horrible act that they committed, and it has nothing to do with Islam. There is no religious basis for this.

"As a physician, I volunteered to help the injured, and I hope people will realize they (the terrorists) didn't act as Muslims, they acted as terrorists."

Correction

It was reported in Thursday's Reporter-Telegram that there were 189 security incidents at Midland International Airport. That number was actually 136. The airport's ranking across the state and among metropolitan areas the size of Midland-Odessa did not change. The Reporter-Telegram regrets the error.

MISD officials meet with Craddick amid concerns about state funding

By Hillary S. Condon
Staff Writer

Midland Independent School District officials held a special meeting Thursday with State Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland, to let him know they are unhappy with the state's "Robin Hood" provision which they say has put MISD at a disadvantage.

Robin Hood takes funds from rich school districts and shares them among the poorer ones — and many larger districts have brought lawsuits against the state to change the law.

"Midland ISD is one of the districts in the state that falls through the cracks when it comes to making up," Nicks said. "Education is probably the biggest enterprise in this state, but the reality is that there aren't enough dollars in the budget for that enterprise. (The Robin Hood law) may just be rearranging deck chairs on the Titanic, because it's still going under," MISD Superintendent Robert Nicks told Craddick.

Tim Fischer/Reporter-Telegram
Rep. Tom Craddick talks with members of the MISD school board Thursday morning.

While the informal meeting between the school board and Craddick had no firm agenda, the conversation centered on budget woes suffered by mid-sized school districts, which do not qualify for certain programs. And the board told Craddick that the crunch is being felt all over the state.

Chapter 41 of the Robin Hood of the provision designates how each school district is classified. MISD does not qualify as a rich or a poor district under Chapter 41. It also does not qualify as a rapidly-growing district, or a district in a town with a smaller population, which also may make it eligible for some other exemptions.

Craddick agreed the law would soon have to change and asked for help from MISD to gauge public opinion. He did not sponsor any education bills in this last legislative session, but said he did not support the Robin Hood law.

Other board members had concerns about issues that could be remedied through legislation, like the student to teacher ratios in the upper levels. Currently, the law states that all classes from kindergarten through fourth grade have a 22-1 mandated ratio. But in every other grade, there is no cap in the number of students assigned to one teacher.

"I think if we weren't dealing with teachers who had a larger volume of students, we'd have better instruction," said Board Vice President James Fuller, who is also a professor at Midland College. "One teacher in a class with 30 or 35 kids just has a problem ... and as a result, I don't think we've seen the performance from some of our students because they've fallen through the cracks. I'm aware of the cost factor, but I think the cost factor would be offset with the success of the students."

NRA board member speaks to Young Republicans

By Stewart Doreen
Staff Writer

After Thursday's meeting of the Midland County Young Republicans, National Rifle Association national board member Susan Howard said the NRA has "a lot more sense than to do knee-jerk things" in response to the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks on the United States.

Ms. Howard favors the idea of allowing working pilots to carry firearms, although she said she has not heard of any comments coming from NRA headquarters in Washington, D.C.

"My personal opinion is that most of your pilots come out of the military, so being able to use a firearm or whatever would not be something inconsistent with their talents," Ms. Howard said.

When it came to allowing the public to carry firearms on aircraft, Ms. Howard said, "I don't know about carrying (weapons) on a plane. I think we are all, right now, in an emotional state that people say and want to do things on both sides that maybe we need to converse about."

She added, "Personally, and I would think for them (the NRA) too, never will we divert from the Constitution or the Bill of Rights — never, ever. But I think most of the NRA and their leadership there has got a lot more sense than to do knee-jerk things."

Ms. Howard — who may be known best for playing Donna Krebbs on the television show "Dallas" — addressed the audience at the monthly meeting of Midland's Young Republicans on numerous issues, including those concerning second amendment rights.

She claims others have twisted words to paint the NRA "as perpetrators of everything dastardly" which has happened in America from shootings in Columbine, Colo. to California. She also said by telling "the truth" about Second Amendment issues in a series of infomercials across the country, the NRA has not only been able to withstand its critics but grow from 2.2 million to 4 million members.

National Rifle Association board member, Susan Howard spoke to the Midland County Young Republicans Thursday. Ms. Howard said the NRA has "a lot more sense than to do knee-jerk things" in response to the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks on the United States.

Ms. Howard also wears the hat of treasurer of the Republican Party of Texas — a far cry from growing up right in the midst of the "Yellow Dog Democrat country," known as East Texas. Ms. Howard backed President George W. Bush and the job he did as Texas' governor and as the nation's president. She also mentioned to those in attendance the effort to strengthen the GOP must continue.

Ms. Howard said, "If the Republican Party of the state of Texas can unify itself to look out for the needs of others as well as itself and get back to the foundations that Abraham Lincoln believed in, we will then be the party not only of the people, but for the people."

Baby Expo slated at Midland Center

By Evan A. Pierce
MRT Correspondent

This Saturday will mark Midland's second annual Baby Expo. The Midland Center will be filled with exhibitions, games, and prizes from 10 a.m. until 3 p.m.

More than 31 companies and individuals will fill the Expo's 41 booths. Vendors such as Harlan the Balloon man and Lindy Bell Face Painting will be providing free entertainment for children. Other booths like the ones hosted by Midland Memorial Hospital will provide instruction on topics ranging from health and safety to financial planning.

Along with an opportunity to visit with vendors will be the chance to enter contests and win prizes.

Four contests will be featured, including a Diaper Dash, the Daddy Olympics, Moms Sticky Situation and the Granny Grand Prix. Van Pearcy of Raymond James also will be awarding a $2,000 college fund.

The Baby Show is being produced by NewsWest 9, Walgreens Drug Stores, Mega 106.7, the Midland Reporter-Telegram and Baby Biz.

For booth and advertising information call 687-8809.

Anderson, Caswell join board at charter school

By Hillary S. Condon
Staff Writer

'To the extent that the school district raises the bar, then we need to raise the bar. When they offer a higher level of academic programs, we need to raise the bar again and offer better programs.'

— Mike Krusee
MACS board member

The board of trustees for the Midland Academy Charter School has enlisted two new board members, Diane Anderson and Mona Caswell, and has chosen board member Paul St. Hiliare as its temporary chairman.

In addition, Blake Hansen has been hired as local legal counsel for the school and its governing board, as required by new stipulations in recently passed state legislation. Hansen is an attorney with Rush, Kelly, Morgan, Dennis, Corzin and Hansen in Odessa.

"I have been involved in representing government and school entities for 20 years, and I have done some work in representing school districts in West Texas on an individual, case-by-case basis," Hansen said. "I am also a past chairman of the school law section of the state bar and past chairman of the Council of School Attorneys for the Texas Association of School Boards."

The board also heard from MACS Director Greg Nelson, who reported on the school's enrollment. Despite concerns from parents about a decline in the school's enrollment from one year ago, Nelson reported enrollment is now at 552, and the student capacity of the building is 630. Nelson attributed the drop in enrollment to several issues, most notably improvements at Midland Independent School District. He said MISD offers better facilities, a new bilingual cluster program, neighborhood schools, free transportation and new magnet schools. Now that MISD has turned its only low-performing school into a magnet campus, MACS is the only low-performing school in Midland.

Board member Mike Krusee said MACS needs to work harder at maintaining valid competition with MISD.

"To the extent that the school district raises the bar, then we need to raise the bar," he said. "When they offer a higher level of academic programs, we need to raise the bar again and offer better programs."

Dallas officials declare they're prepared for bioterrorist attack

By Angela K. Brown
Associated Press

DALLAS — Medical and law enforcement authorities for several years have been preparing for an invisible war: bioterrorism.

"We have been working on a weapons of mass destruction plan long before Sept. 11," FBI Special Agent Don Borelli said Thursday at a meeting with doctors at the Dallas County Medical Society.

Borelli, who coordinates the Dallas FBI's weapons of mass destruction division, said authorities have not received any credible threats against Dallas or other U.S. cities.

Still, in the state's second-largest metropolitan area, the medical community has a "not if, but when" attitude about terrorist germ attacks, said Dr. David Vanderpool, a Dallas surgeon who is chairman of the Dallas County Medical Society's Board of Health.

Emergency room staffs have been trained to recognize symptoms of the two biggest threats — anthrax and smallpox — and treat patients as they notify other hospitals and police, said Paulette Standifer, executive vice president of the DFW Hospital Council, which represents 83 hospitals in North Texas.

The Texas Department of Health has urged doctors to be more suspicious of unusual events and be aware that bioterrorism is a possibility. The department sent that message after four commercial U.S. planes were hijacked and crashed into the World Trade Center and Pentagon on Sept. 11.

However, physicians nationwide have been concerned about the issue since 1995, when terrorists released nerve gas in a Tokyo subway.

In March 2000, the state's epidemiologist Dennis Perrotta wrote a column for Texas Medicine urging doctors to learn how to diagnose and treat illnesses caused by biological weapons.

"Just like the disaster plans that facilities have for hurricanes, floods, explosions and other natural or man-made disasters, hospitals need ... response plans for a large epidemic, whether it is natural or man-made," Perrotta wrote.

If terrorists were to release a dangerous chemical, a group of residents likely would be sickened immediately or killed in a certain area, Perrotta said Thursday.

But a bioterrorism attack is more covert because residents may not know they are infected and may not show symptoms for several days. That's why doctors are urged to be alert for an unusual number of patients with similar symptoms, an uncommon disease and large numbers of rapidly fatal cases, Perrotta said.

If a suspected case emerges in Dallas County, all doctors and hospitals will be notified and testing will be done quickly, said Dr. Robert Haley, professor of internal medicine and director of the Division of Epidemiology at UT Southwestern Medical Center at Dallas.

If a case is confirmed, doctors will find out where exposure occurred and who is at risk. Hospitals can access stockpiles of vaccinations or antibiotics now being stored for a catastrophe.

Dallas doctors say the public should not panic.

"Most likely, it would be a circumscribed thing we can put a lid on," Haley said.

World's third self-contained artificial heart implant performed in Houston

By Michel Graczyk
Associated Press

HOUSTON — A man described by his surgeon as "desperately ill" has become the world's third recipient of a self-contained mechanical heart.

The man, whose identity is being withheld, received the AbioCor device Wednesday in a six-hour operation at the Texas Heart Institute at St. Luke's Episcopal Hospital in Houston. The procedure follows the success of two implants of the device earlier this year at Jewish Hospital in Louisville, Ky.

"The procedure ... went as expected and the patient is resting comfortably," the hospital said in a brief statement.

Officials at Danvers, Mass.-based Abiomed Inc., maker of the device, declined to elaborate Thursday, citing their policy to withhold information until the medical team and the patient's family agree at a later time.

"This is consistent with the company's 'quiet period' policy intended to protect patient confidentiality and allow for the best possible medical care," AbioCor said.

"It is a man and that's all I can tell you," hospital spokeswoman Kathy Watson said.

A news briefing to discuss the procedure was scheduled for Friday at the hospital.

"It couldn't have gone better," Dr. O.H. Frazier, who spent more than a decade helping develop the AbioCor replacement heart at the Texas Heart Institute, told the Houston Chronicle. "Everything looks stable now. He's not having any problems. We have some hope for him."

Frazier said the man had been "desperately ill for a long time" with heart failure and was not an immediate candidate for a heart transplant because of complications involving his lungs. He said the goal, however, was to use the device to keep the patient alive for 60 days in the hope that the lung problem would improve, then reassess the possibility for a heart transplant.

The completely internal pump, made of plastic and titanium and weighing less than 2 pounds, is powered through the skin by an external battery pack.

University of Louisville surgeons implanted the first AbioCor hearts July 2 at Jewish Hospital in Kentucky. The first patient, Bob Tools, is gaining weight and making excursions outside the hospital. Doctors said his kidneys, liver and lungs are functioning normally.

The second, Tom Christerson, is still in the early stages of recovery following his Sept. 13 operation, but doctors said his condition is improving.

The heart is intended for patients with end-stage heart failure who have more than a 70 percent chance of dying within a month.

The AbioCor study is limited initially to five people nationwide. Other approved sites in addition to the Houston and Louisville hospitals include Brigham and Women's Hospital and Massachusetts General Hospital, both in Boston, and UCLA Medical Center in Los Angeles.

Research on the project at the Texas Heart Institute was set back earlier this summer when labs used in testing were lost during June floods from Tropical Storm Allison that inundated Houston and swamped the Texas Medical Center.

"Allison definitely had an impact," Watson said. "We were very fortunate with animals but the labs were destroyed."

The Texas Heart Institute has been involved in other groundbreaking procedures.

Founded in 1962 by heart surgeon Dr. Denton Cooley, it was the site of the first successful heart transplant in the United States, the first implantation of a total artificial heart, and has pioneered the use of mechanical devices as bridges to transplant and the development of new applications for stents and stent-like devices.

Judge grants request for injunction in gaming case

EL PASO (AP) — A federal judge on Thursday granted the state's request for a permanent injunction banning illegal casino gambling at the Tigua tribe's Speaking Rock Casino.

The summary judgment by U.S. District Judge G. Thomas Eisele, who conducted an Aug. 22 hearing, says the casino must bring itself into compliance with the law by Nov. 30.

"The law is simple," Attorney General John Cornyn said. "My responsibility as attorney general is to enforce the laws of the state. I am pleased that the court agreed with our position that casino gambling is illegal in Texas."

Tribe spokesman Marc Schwartz said the Tiguas plan to appeal the decision. He said the judge did not address the core issue of the debate, that the tribe has the right to manage its affairs on a federally recognized reservation.

"The state is attempting to narrow the focus on the penal code," Schwartz said. "The judge is limited to addressing the issue brought by the state."

He said the tribe's casino will remain open.

A lawyer for the Ysleta Del Sur Pueblo, which operates the casino, argued last month that gambling is big business in Texas and the tribe has a right to cash in.

However, lawyers for the state attorney general's office argued that casino-style gambling, with slot machines and poker tables, isn't legal in Texas. They said the Tiguas agreed not to gamble if the federal government would recognize them as a tribe.

Lawyers for the state are trying to shut down the casino, which started operating in 1993 and now makes between $50 million and $60 million each year for the tribe.

Details of the case have been laid out in different courts since 1999 when Cornyn filed a federal suit.

The state argued that the tribe wrote its own resolution prohibiting gambling on the reservation to convince Congress to pass the 1987 Restoration Act, which recognized the Tiguas as a sovereign Indian tribe.

Schwartz has said that only bingo was allowed in Texas at the time and the resolution stated that gambling wasn't the tribe's intent "at that time or in the near future."

A bill sponsored by Rep. Juan Hinojosa, D-McAllen, would have allowed the Tiguas and two other tribes, the Kickapoos at Eagle Pass and the Alabama-Coushatta in East Texas, to have gaming operations on existing reservations, but the bill never passed during the last legislative session.

The House approved the approved the measure, but it died in the Senate. Acting Lt. Gov. Bill Ratliff opposes gambling and said he opposed the measure. The lieutenant governor decides who will be recognized to bring up Senate bills.

Nation's top soldier takes on down-to-earth threat

By Nancy Benac
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — When President Bush chose Richard Myers to be the new chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, he saw the Air Force general as the man to help America meet "the changing threats of tomorrow."

No one knew tomorrow would come so soon.

Myers, now vice chairman of the Joint Chiefs, moves up to the top job on Monday facing a dramatically altered set of challenges from those envisioned when his nomination was announced on Aug. 24.

Although chosen to be the president's chief military adviser in large part because of his expertise in space-based defense, Myers still is an apt choice now that an all-out campaign against terrorism is the government's priority, say military analysts.

Many point to his fighter-pilot background as evidence he has the flexibility and creativity to grapple with an unconventional enemy.

"You don't last long in the fighter-pilot business if all you do is connect the dots," said retired Gen. Merrill McPeak, the Air Force chief in the early 1990s, when Myers was on his senior staff. "Myers' preparation from Day One has been to use his imagination, and that's what's required here."

"The stereotype of the military mind — by the book, read it out of the regulations — that's precisely what's not needed now."

Myers, 59, has a wide-ranging background that includes years as head of the U.S. Space Command, commander of U.S. forces in Japan, commander of U.S. forces in the Pacific, and vice chairman of the Joint Chiefs since the spring of 2000, a job in which he has helped conduct a sweeping reassessment of the armed forces. He has logged more than 4,000 flying hours, including 600 in combat in Vietnam.

"He's not coming out of an Air Force stovepipe," said William Taylor, a senior adviser at the Center for Strategic and International Studies. "He has a good, broad understanding of the role of the military to meet a number of threats worldwide."

Myers' tenure as vice chairman of the Joint Chiefs should help ensure a smooth transition from the current chairman, Army Gen. Hugh Shelton, who is retiring. As chairman, Myers will be the nation's top military officer, charged by Bush with helping bring about a transformation of the armed forces that balances conventional defense responsibilities with the ability to meet future threats.

Some find it an odd turn of events that the first chairman with a special operations background, Shelton, is being replaced with the first chairman with a space background precisely when the nation is heading into a conflict in which the clandestine warriors of "special ops" are expected to play a key role.

"Presumably, Myers is going to require a little Special Operations 101," said John Pike, director of GlobalSecurity.org, a think tank in Alexandria, Va. "Is he up to the job? We will let history judge."

Shelton said Thursday he felt like a quarterback taken from the game with his team one touchdown behind and ready to score. But he voiced confidence in Myers, saying, "I see an all-American quarterback suiting up."

McPeak says it would be a mistake to cast either Shelton or Myers as narrowly specialized.

"Myers is not a space weenie," McPeak said, pointing to his varied background. "What you need is mental flexibility and I don't see how we could have come up with a better candidate."

Myers' natural fit in Washington was evident when the terrorists struck on Sept. 11. He rushed from a meeting on Capitol Hill to the National Military Command Center inside the Pentagon even as most of the building was being evacuated.

"The air got a little acrid at times," he told his Senate confirmation hearing two days later. "The air filtration system shut down for moments. But we got it back up and were able to stay there throughout."

Looking to the job ahead, Myers already knows what will cost him sleep.

"What will keep me up at night in this job is those things that we haven't thought about," he told the senators. "There are probably more surprises out there. And my job and the job of the armed forces and everybody that supports us is to try to be as creative in our thinking as we can, to try to plug these seams and these gaps."

Even before the terrorist attacks, Myers had set the job of defining the military's role in "homeland defense" as one of his priorities.

"We've been tiptoeing around that issue for quite some time," he told senators. "My view is that this tragedy is going to help crystallize our thoughts."

Known for his easy manner and respectful treatment of service members in all branches of the armed forces, Myers is unlikely to match the rhetorical flourish of Colin Powell, the telegenic chairman of the Joint Chiefs during the Gulf War and now the secretary of state.

"Myers is the kind of guy who will give his advice in confidence," said McPeak. "He will be publicly on display and visible only when it's needed."

Frances Atwater has loyally served almuni of MHS

As Midland High School students and alumni gather this weekend to celebrate homecoming events, many won't take time to think about the woman who has acted for many, many years as the unofficial scrapbook-keeper for Midland High School.

A 1940 graduate of Midland High School, Frances Atwater has for decades served as the curator for her alma mater's memorabilia. She also has helped pull together the annual salute when another MHS graduate is added each year to the school's Hall of Honor.

After years of faithfully acting as Midland High School's most dedicated supporter and cheerleader, Ms. Atwater is grudgingly relinquishing some of those longtime duties. Recent illness has forced her into that decision.

A collector by nature and a meticulous record keeper, Ms. Atwater is cutting back on her habit of taking the scissors to newspapers, Xeroxing, laminating, framing and preserving.

But thanks to her efforts, Midland High School and our community have many records and photographs to treasure.

As time passes and so many families focus on the future in our go-go world, it's easy to take our roots and our traditions for granted. Frances Atwater has never let that happen.

For instance, this year Midland High School will add Col. Darrel G. Welch, a World War II era pilot who chased Germany's Field Marshal Rommel across North Africa, to its Hall of Honor. At a time when our nation is coping with terrorists who threaten our nation's security, it's heartening to look back and remember our nation has produced many quiet heroes. Our history reminds us our nation will continue to have the capacity to produce more heroes.

Ms. Atwater hasn't let her recent illness dampen her natural good cheer.

She remains upbeat and thankful for all the great memories she has been able to enjoy through the years.

And to Frances Atwater, the community can say, "Frances, thanks for the memories."

Today in History

Today is Friday, Sept. 28, the 271st day of 2001. There are 94 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Sept. 28, 1939, during World War II Germany and the Soviet Union agreed on a plan to partition Poland.

On this date:

In 1066, William the Conqueror invaded England to claim the English throne.

In 1542, Portuguese navigator Juan Rodriguez Cabrillo arrived at present-day San Diego.

In 1781, American forces in the Revolutionary War, backed by a French fleet, began their siege of Yorktown Heights, Va.

In 1787, Congress voted to send the just-completed Constitution of the United States to state legislatures for their approval.

In 1850, flogging was abolished as a form of punishment in the U.S. Navy.

In 1924, two U.S. Army planes landed in Seattle, Wash., having completed the first round-the-world flight in 175 days.

In 1961, "Dr. Kildare," starring Richard Chamberlain and Raymond Massey, and "Hazel," starring Shirley Booth, premiered on NBC TV.

In 1974, First Lady Betty Ford underwent a mastectomy at Bethesda Naval Medical Center in Maryland, following discovery of a cancerous lump in her breast.

In 1976, Muhammad Ali kept his world heavyweight boxing championship with a close 15-round decision over Ken Norton at New York's Yankee Stadium.

In 1989, deposed Philippine President Ferdinand E. Marcos died in exile in Hawaii at age 72.

Ten years ago: Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev praised President Bush's pledge to drastically reduce the U.S. nuclear arsenal, and promised to "reciprocate." U.N. weapons inspectors ended a five-day standoff with Iraq over documents relating to Iraq's nuclear weapons program. Jazz great Miles Davis died in Santa Monica, Calif., at age 65.

Five years ago: With the United States abstaining, the U.N. Security Council passed a resolution indirectly calling on Israel to close an archaeological tunnel in Jerusalem that had touched off fighting between Israelis and Palestinians. Landmark legislation to crack down on illegal immigrants in the United States won House passage as part of a giant federal spending bill.

One year ago: Capping a 12-year battle, the government approved use of the abortion pill RU-486. Ariel Sharon, leader of Israel's hard-line opposition, sparked new Israeli-Palestinian clashes by touring the Temple Mount. Former Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau died in Montreal at age 80. In Sydney, Australia, Venus Williams earned her second Olympic gold medal, teaming with sister Serena in the final of women's doubles to beat Miriam Oremans and Kristie Boogert of the Netherlands, 6-1, 6-1.

Legitimate information important in times of national crisis

WASHINGTON — Reporters will be walking a fine line in the days ahead as they try to keep the people informed about the nation's battle against terrorism and yet not jeopardize its wartime posture.

The difficulty lies in the question of what information is legitimately in the public domain during a national crisis, given the federal government's perpetual penchant for secrecy.

Thomas

In times like this, most Americans seem to be willing to give the government the benefit of the doubt. Many perhaps accept the extraordinary new Justice Department rules that let authorities detain immigrants suspected of ties to terrorists without probable cause or time limits. They may buy the department's proposal to make it easier for law enforcement agencies to eavesdrop on suspected terrorists — and others as well. But these measures mean the loss of a lot of personal freedom.

The Supreme Court would have given short shrift to such intrusions in another day. However, in the name of counter-terrorism there is the strong possibility that the individual rights we take for granted in our day-to-day lives will be out the window.

Fortunately, in a democracy, we are still privileged to take a second look at the new restraints on our civil liberties and to be wary. Members of Congress should refrain from rubber-stamping everything the administration seeks in the heat of the battle without considering the consequences.

The lawmakers should dare to oppose the denial of individual rights when they are prompted alone by fears and presumptions. In other words, they should be profiles in courage.

Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld has warned Pentagon officials against leaks of classified information. He also told reporters, "When classified information dealing with operations is provided to people who are not cleared for that classified information, the inevitable effect is that the lives of men and women in uniform are put at risk."

He also acknowledged, however, that things are often classified that should not be.

White House press secretary Ari Fleischer said that "the government needs to hold information closely" and added, "I think the American people get it."

Maybe so, but they also may not want to be led blindly without knowing the whys and wherefores.

Government officials may not see the need for explanations. They are saying, "Trust us." But the Vietnam War was certainly an example of how the U.S. government did not fully convince Americans that we had to be fighting 10,000 miles from home. The price was too high.

Granted, it is different this time around. The barbaric attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon were there for all to see. They shocked and galvanized the nation.

Still, I believe it would behoove the White House to share some of the facts — those, of course, that would not risk lives — to bolster confidence in the government.

The administration undoubtedly has assembled an iron-clad case against Osama bin Laden and his vast network of terrorists by now. But President Bush apparently has ruled out releasing most of the information that would pinpoint bin Laden's role and goals.

This is another example of how, when the chips are down, the hardliners, and not the few moderates in his administration, always win with the president.

Secretary of State Colin Powell made the rounds of the talk shows last Sunday and promised that the United States would issue a report on the Sept. 11 catastrophe "in the near future." He said that it would "clearly describe the evidence we have linking" bin Laden to the airliner bombings.

But on Monday in a joint Rose Garden appearance with Powell, Bush made the secretary backtrack, saying that much of the information the United States has is "classified."

Reporters knew then that they should not hold their breath on when the so-called "white paper" will be released.

Powell, who should be used to having his statements shot down by the White House, dutifully followed suit and agreed that most of the information was in the classified category.

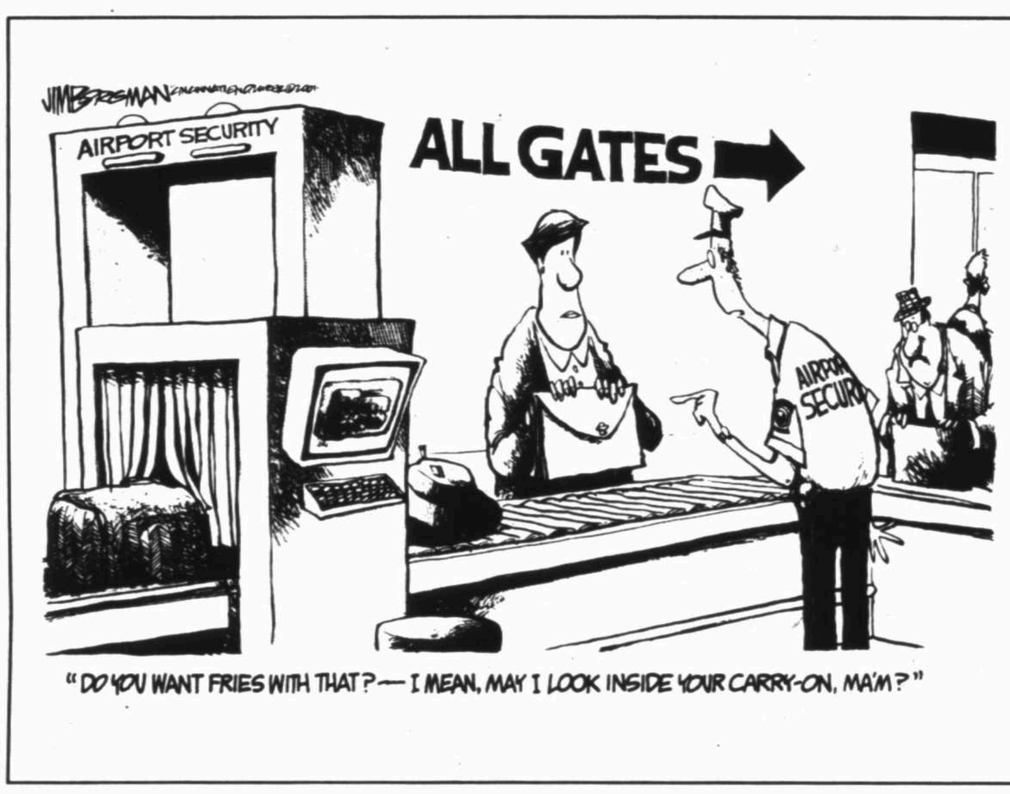

Bush added, "It's important as this war progresses that the American people will understand (that) we will not make the war more difficult to win by publicly disclosing classified information."

Yet in a world of instant global communications, it's going to be difficult to put a cap on information, which can come from many sources outside of Washington.

So while government officials may want to slap a top-secret label on most data, they should know that the word may leak out in other capitals.

Reporters, much as they may annoy the White House and the Pentagon, should keep asking questions. Government officials can always say "no comment." But in a free society I'm sure the American people will want to know more, and they should not have to wait for the history books to find out the answers.

Muslim faith is not at fault for terrorist attacks in America

I must disagree with the "facts" in John Pitts recent column on Islam. To suggest the terrorists who masterminded the bombing of the World Trade Center and Pentagon represent all Muslims is equivalent to saying David Koresh or Jim Jones represent all Christians. I am a devoted Christian, but I believe it serves no purpose to misrepresent Muslim beliefs or our own religious history.

You recommend your readers take time to read the Quran in order to understand the stark differences between Christianity and Islamic beliefs. I started reading the Quran last year in an effort to better understand the events happening in the Middle East. What I discovered truly shocked me. First, Muslims worship the exact same God as Jews and Christians — the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob. All three religions share the Old Testament, and the Quran references the Gospel of the New Testament. While Muslims do not believe Jesus was the son of God, they do believe he was a divinely inspired prophet of God and reference his teachings countless times throughout the Quran.

The reality is the differences between Christianity and Islam are dramatically less than those between Christianity and Hinduism, Buddhism or any of the "New Age" religious movements that are sweeping our country. History is the witness — but not just to atrocities by Muslims. Religious fundamentalists (of many faiths) have historically used their beliefs to justify violence and death. Christians used our beliefs to justify torturing and killing thousands throughout history in both the old and new world.

While I disagree with their beliefs, most Muslims I have met (both in the UnitedStates and in the Middle East) are incredibly good, devout people who place a personal commitment to God as a central element in their lives. Every religion has its fanatics, and I do not believe it's fair to judge the whole based on a fanatical fringe. I fully support a harsh response and the war our president has called for — but the target is clearly the terrorist groups that have planned and sponsored terrorist acts — not the Muslim faith.

Thanks to all the heroes who are helping in tragic time

Two weeks ago America was viciously attacked, resulting in more than twice as many deaths as the attack on Pearl Harbor. Both of my families, my wife and children and my family of firefighter brothers and sisters mourn for those who lost their lives. I want to say thank you to all the people who have shown their appreciation and compassion for America's bravest, the firefighters. The public's outpouring of support for all the rescue workers is truly moving. Every day since this horrible attack, the public is thanking us, the firefighters for what we do. I say thank you back and bless you all. The fire service and law enforcement have both suffered their largest single day losses ever. Every year, an average of 100 firefighters die in the line of duty and nearly as many law enforcement officers annually give their lives. America lost 27 firefighters in one day in 1947 in Texas City when two ships exploded. Until Sept. 11 that was the largest line of duty death toll for firefighters in one day. The fire service now in one day has more than 300 of America's bravest firefighters missing at the World Trade Center, more than three times the yearly average. Each passing day sees less hope for their survival. My firefighter family mourns for their lost brothers, all the innocent victims and their families. Law enforcement too, has more than 40 of America's finest missing from that terrible attack in New York. I say to the U.S.A., "Go forward and live on to keep alive the spirit of all those innocent people that gave their lives on September 11." My wife wrote, "They have a special gate in heaven for heroes." All those who defend and work to keep America free are heroes. God bless America and all its heroes.

A 'prophet' finds vindication after years of testifying

If there were such things as prophets in our day, as there were in ancient times, former (and perhaps future) Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu would be one.

Last week, Netanyahu, whose grandfather was a rabbi, was in Washington sounding vindicated. For years he has been prophesying about terrorism but few would listen. Now everybody is listening.

Netanyahu testified before the House Committee on Government Reform and later met in private with senators. What he said should be required reading for every person who loves liberty and wants to maintain it.

Thomas

"What is at stake today," he warned the committee, "is nothing less than the survival of our civilization." Three weeks ago, that would have sounded alarmist, even extreme. Not anymore. "Our values are hated with an unmatched fanaticism that seeks to destroy our societies and our way of life," he said soberly.

Echoing President Bush, Netanyahu told the House committee that terrorism is sustained by nations, such as Syria, Iran, Iraq and Libya. "Take away all this state support and the entire scaffolding of international terrorism will collapse into the dust," he said.

Terrorism is not an aberration, nor is it born primarily out of frustration to achieve economic parity with wealthier nations. Terrorism is a policy. It is embraced to achieve an objective its practitioners believe cannot be reached in any other way. It has nothing to do with the existence or non-existence of Israel; otherwise there would have been no terrorism in the Middle East for so long.

It matters little that a majority of Moslems have not pledged themselves to the forced implementation of radical Islam. They do not have the guns or the fanaticism of the radicals, who seek, according to Netanyahu, to "roll back the West and install an extremist form of Islam as the dominant power in the world." It makes one long for the good old days of communism.

In a telephone conversation before returning to Israel, Netanyahu told me he sees America's tardy recognition of the terrorist threat as "the beginning of the beginning." He worries, though, that not everyone has gotten the message, noting the continued "pressure on Israel" to meet with Yasser Arafat, an author and promoter of the very terrorism the United States opposes. Netanyahu wants us to know about a "terror museum" erected at Al-Najah University, in the Palestinian West Bank city of Nablus. The grisly exhibit glorified the recent suicide bombing of a Sbarro pizza restaurant in Jerusalem.

Natanyahu says he believes most of the American public now understands what he and Israel have experienced for decades. "The liberals are smashed," he says. "They must be quiet or join in the applause (for President Bush's policies)." Not exactly. The "peace at any price" crowd is beginning to stir but they are less likely to be taken seriously by the public, which gives President Bush a 90 percent approval rating.

In his appearance before the House committee, Netanyahu warned, "Some of you may find it hard to believe that Islamic militants truly cling to the mad fantasy of destroying America. Make no mistake, they do. Unless they are stopped now, their attacks will continue, and become even more lethal in the future."

That sounds like the warning of a prophet.

Some charities are hurting because of relief effort for terrorism victims

By Leon Drouin Keith
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — The $500 million-plus outpouring of donations for victims of the terrorist attacks is undercutting other charities and prompting some organizations to postpone fund drives and scale back programs.

"In three days, we haven't had a single direct-mail response come in," said Kendra Fox, a spokeswoman for World Neighbors, a development organization working with the rural poor. The Oklahoma City-based group, which has a $5.6 million annual budget, reported that donations have fallen 77 percent in the two weeks since the terrorist attacks.

Charities not playing a direct role in the relief efforts, such as those focused on AIDS or the environment, have delayed fund-raisers, stopped direct-mail programs and told their telemarketers to tone down their sales pitches.

They have done so out of concern that making their pleas in the wake of the attacks might anger would-be donors and that the relief efforts in New York and Washington should take precedence.

"At this point, we consider our needs to be incidental to theirs," said Marshall McNott, president of the Los Angeles Mission, which helps the homeless.

In addition, a plunging stock market has reduced the reserve funds that many charities rely on to sustain their operations.

The Los Angeles Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals said it will lay off eight of its 55 employees and close two pet-adoption centers.

"The donations have essentially dried up. Since the attack, there's almost no mail coming into the organization," president Madeline Bernstein said.

"If we get nothing this Christmas, if people forget about some of the local charities because they're all consumed with this issue, then we have to go to a more serious wave of layoffs and closings. So a lot of things could get nastier."

The Chronicle of Philanthropy estimated this week that more than $558 million had been raised for the terrorism victims, and the Foundation Center reported that contributions from corporations and foundations alone totaled more than $400 million. The American Red Cross alone has raised a record $200 million or so.

The Natural Resources Defense Council, an environmental group based in New York, pulled its direct-mail campaign and canceled an event connected with a movie premiere. The day after the stock market reopened, the group saw a major gift for climate-change research shrink from a multi-year, seven-figure promise to a smaller one-year gift, said Jack Murray, development director. The NRDC will be unable to expand such research as it had hoped to do, he said.

At the San Francisco chapter of the Salvation Army, one regular donor asked that his $1.7 million donation be sent to New York. Chapter officials worry they might not have enough money to buy toys for 33,000 families in December or fill 2,000 food bags.

The Elizabeth Glazer Pediatric AIDS Foundation postponed several events, including a Malibu triathlon bumped back two weeks from its original Sept. 15 date, and a Washington gala set for November that now will be held sometime next year.

Fund-raising for even something as urgent as AIDS in children is hard right now "when there's so much tragedy going on," said Janis Spire, the foundation's executive director.

Some organizations said it is too early to say what the long-term effect of the drop-off will be. Many said the poor economy could prove even more damaging.

Powell: Jackson's visit with Taliban probably wouldn't be good for nation

By Jennifer Loven
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State Colin Powell said Jesse Jackson would probably solve nothing by visiting Afghanistan's ruling Taliban militia because the United States has nothing to negotiate.

"He is free to travel," Powell said Thursday. "I don't know what purpose would be served right now, since the position of the United States and the international community is quite clear."

Jackson is considering whether to lead a delegation to Taliban officials to try to persuade them to hand over Osama bin Laden, the prime suspect in the Sept. 11 terrorism attacks on the United States. The Taliban, believed to be harboring bin Laden and his al-Qaida terrorist network, have refused to meet the Bush administration's demands.

The civil rights activist, minister and former presidential candidate said Thursday he does not know when he will decide on his plans.

Jackson said he does not want to go, but feels obligated, if he can, to try to free two American humanitarian workers, jailed by the Taliban along with six other foreign relief workers on charges of preaching Christianity.

Jackson said he received a telegram Wednesday from a Taliban spokesman inviting him to come to neighboring Pakistan to resolve the situation "in a way that preserves the dignity and integrity of all sides."

The Taliban ambassador to Pakistan reportedly said the request was not initiated by the ruling militia. The Afghan Islamic Press, a private news agency close to the Taliban, quoted Abdul Salam Zaeef as saying that Taliban leader Mullah Mohammed Omar "has accepted his offer to mediate."

Jackson said some Pakistani-Americans acted as go-betweens.

"It doesn't matter who initiated this, but that both of us are interested in talking," he said.

Jackson discussed the matter with Powell in two phone calls and spoke with Condoleezza Rice, President Bush's national security adviser.

Several Bush administration officials, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the White House would urge Jackson not to make the trip. They worry it would be viewed as a U.S. attempt to negotiate with the Taliban and could fracture the growing but fragile international coalition against terrorism.

Jackson said the White House has not attempted to discourage him but that they could not stop him if he eventually decides to go.

"My role is complementary and not contradictory," he said.

Jackson previously negotiated the freedom of American hostages in Syria, Cuba and Yugoslavia.

Man kills 14 people then himself in rampage in Swiss state parliament

By Peter Hody
Associated Press

ZUG, Switzerland — A man enraged with local officials opened fire with an assault rifle and tossed a grenade in a crowded state legislature before shooting himself Thursday. Switzerland's worst-ever shooting spree left 15 people dead, including the gunman.

The rampage by Friedrich Leibacher, a 57-year-old Zurich resident, killed three members of the canton of Zug's seven-member government, as well as 11 of its 80 lawmakers. Fourteen officials were seriously injured, including government chief Hanspeter Uster, who was shot through a lung.

The spree plunged Switzerland into mourning and prompted an immediate rethinking of security standards in a country where even the president has little police protection.

"It was like an execution," said lawmaker Hanspeter Hausherr, who was in the chamber when Leibacher stormed in, wearing a police vest and firing at least one magazine of 20 bullets from his 5.6 mm SIG "Sturmgewehr 90" in a five-minute frenzy.

He then detonated a grenade, which ripped doors off and shattered windows of the stately two-story building near Zug's quaint old town and glistening lake not far from Zurich. He then shot himself with a pistol.

As lawmakers hit the floor and the injured screamed in pain, journalists who were covering the parliamentary meeting took cover behind their press desks.

"Unbelievable, just unbelievable," said lawmaker Jo Lang, one lens of his glasses shattered and still in shock from the bullet that whizzed through his curly hair.

"I just remember the shout 'Get Down,' said another lawmaker, Jean-Pierre Prodolliet. "Then I heard bang, bang, bang, five or 10 times. Then there was silence until the next bang, bang, bang."

Zug's famously low taxes, proximity to Zurich airport and stunning Alpine views have made it a favorite base for numerous foreign firms, including all the world's major commodity traders. Marc Rich, a fugitive U.S. financier who caused a storm by being pardoned by former President Clinton, has long been based there.

Swiss President Moritz Leuenberger broke off a meeting with Senegalese President Abdoulaye Wade and headed to Zug upon learning of the attack. He ordered all state flags to fly at half-staff for the next three days.

"Our democracy and freedom has been put into question," a choked Leuenberger said. "I'm just so shocked I can find no more words."

At a news conference, police officials said Leibacher's grievances dated back to a row with a Zug bus driver two years ago. He subsequently insulted all public transport workers, leading the transport department to file a complaint against him.

Leibacher responded with counter-complaints against transport and justice department figures, alleging they were violating their public duties. He filed suits at every level of the Swiss legal system, including the Supreme Court. All his cases were dismissed — he was told of the most recent rejection shortly before he went berserk.

"He did this purely out of revenge and fury," said local investigator Kurt Bloechlinger.

Robert Bisig, a government official who survived the attack, said Leibacher had bombarded state officials with letters and pamphlets demanding his rights. But all the accusations were dismissed because "they were so far from reality," said Bisig.

A note found alongside a cache of weapons in Leibacher's car was entitled "Day of Rage against the Zug Mafia." In it, Leibacher accused authorities of being a "band of criminals," "pirates" and "alcoholics."

Even though Leibacher was wearing police clothing, authorities said he did not belong to the force. It was unclear whether he had served in the country's militia army when he was younger, entitling him to keep a weapon at home.

The town of Zug has a population of just 22,000, and 100,000 people live in the canton — or state — that bears the same name. The legislature has widespread powers over issues ranging from education to taxation and health care.

Part of Zug was cordoned off and locals left bouquets of flowers by the barricades or handed them to police.

Officials were at pains to stress that there was no link to the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks on the United States.

But, for the 7 million Swiss inhabitants used to living in a low-crime environment, the shock was profound.

New security measures were immediately announced for government and parliament buildings in the capital Bern, including metal detectors, baggage screening, identity controls and protective grills on windows — routine steps in most other countries.

"We were proud that until now politicians could move freely," said President Leuenberger. "That has been put into question by this attack."

'I just remember the shout 'Get Down.' Then I heard bang, bang, bang, five or 10 times. Then there was silence until the next bang, bang, bang.'

Midlanders flock to theaters to give movie money to Sept. 11 Fund

By Georgia Temple
Entertainment Editor

For Midland theaters on Tuesday, business was more than usual.

"We doubled our regular attendance," said Rick Morrison, a manager at Tall City 10. "We had a good 7 o'clock rush for a week night. The more money we make, the more support we can send."

Nearly 80 movie-theater chains donated every dollar they made on Tuesday from tickets sales and concessions to the Sept. 11 Fund of the United Way and the American Red Cross. Wallace Theatre Corporation, which owns both Midland theaters and all but one Odessa movie theater, participated in the fund-raising effort.

"We were busier than usual," said Monica Yoder who works at Cine 4. "And a lot of them said they knew. Either they had read it in the paper or heard it on our machine."

Tuesday is 50-cent night at the Cine 4, which shows movies after they have already been released in first-run theaters such as Tall City 10. The low admission is a draw for many including Betty Serrano, who said it allows parents to "bring the kids." Ms. Serrano added the donation was "one of the reasons" she was there.

Sylvia Velasquez, who worked the box office during the early evening showing, agreed with Ms. Yoder the crowd was larger than usual on Tuesday, which is ordinarily a busy night for the theater.

"We're usually done by 7:15, 7:20 with the rush," Ms. Velasquez said. "And we've had about a 15-minute more line of people."

The theater was showing "Planet of the Apes," "Shrek," "Jurassic Park" and "Fast & Furious," and theatergoers were buying tickets to "everything," Ms. Velasquez said, "We're pretty packed. I've seen people who have been here before coming to see the movie again. It's pretty amazing. They are doing it for this."

Naomi Rodriguez, who was standing in the concession line, said she usually comes on Tuesday and "would have come anyway." Johnnie Jewett, who was waiting in the ticket line, said she came because the money was going to charity.

"This is the first time I've been to this theater in a long time," Ms. Jewett said. "I think we ought to support facilities that are doing this. This is one way that we can donate to the relief effort and still have some entertainment. I applaud the businesses that do this."

As Ed Burger purchased tickets to "the gorilla movie," he said he'd not been to the theater "in some time.

"I thought it would be an opportunity to show our support." More than 6,000 died in the attacks. "To me that

NOW SHOWING

Three films to open today

By Georgia Temple
Entertainment Editor

The Sept. 11 terrorist attacks chilled the film industry, causing the release of some movies to be postponed for the time being, and made television network executives delay the official start of the new season a week. Although movie theaters did little business that day, by that Saturday and Sunday (Sept. 15 and 16) the top 12 films earn $52.2 million, about 37 percent higher than the $37.8 million garnered on the same weekend in 2000, reported The Associated Press.

Now, after several weeks of few releases, three new films come to the Tall City 10 today — "Hearts in Atlantis" starring Anthony Hopkins (PG-13), "Zoolander" starring Ben Stiller (PG-13) and "Don't Say a Word" starring Michael Douglas (R).

Already some critics are taking pot shots at Douglas' film, which centers around a young woman who knows a number she won't tell and a psychiatrist who must get her to do so or lose his kidnapped daughter.

"Whether the sense of menace that pervades the film would be as effective before Sept. 11 — or whether it would merely seem like more of the same old Hollywood manipulation — may be open for debate," said David Kronke of the Los Angeles Daily News. "But it has too many moments that unfortunately recall the recent tragedy, moments that will take audiences out of the film and plunge them into recent dire reality."

And Bob Strauss, also of the Los Angeles Daily News, is not encouraging about "Hearts in Atlantis," which is based on Stephen King's 1999 collection of interconnected stories by the same name.

"There's a lot of tedious set-up for a rather uninteresting series of climactic events," said Strauss. "Those longing to wallow in the Simpler Times ambience of the early 1960s and an 11-year-old's idea of profound life lessons — and at this moment in history, no one could be blamed for wanting to do that? — 'Atlantis' certainly provides a pleasant diversion. Those who could use a nice, two-hour snooze will also be rewarded."

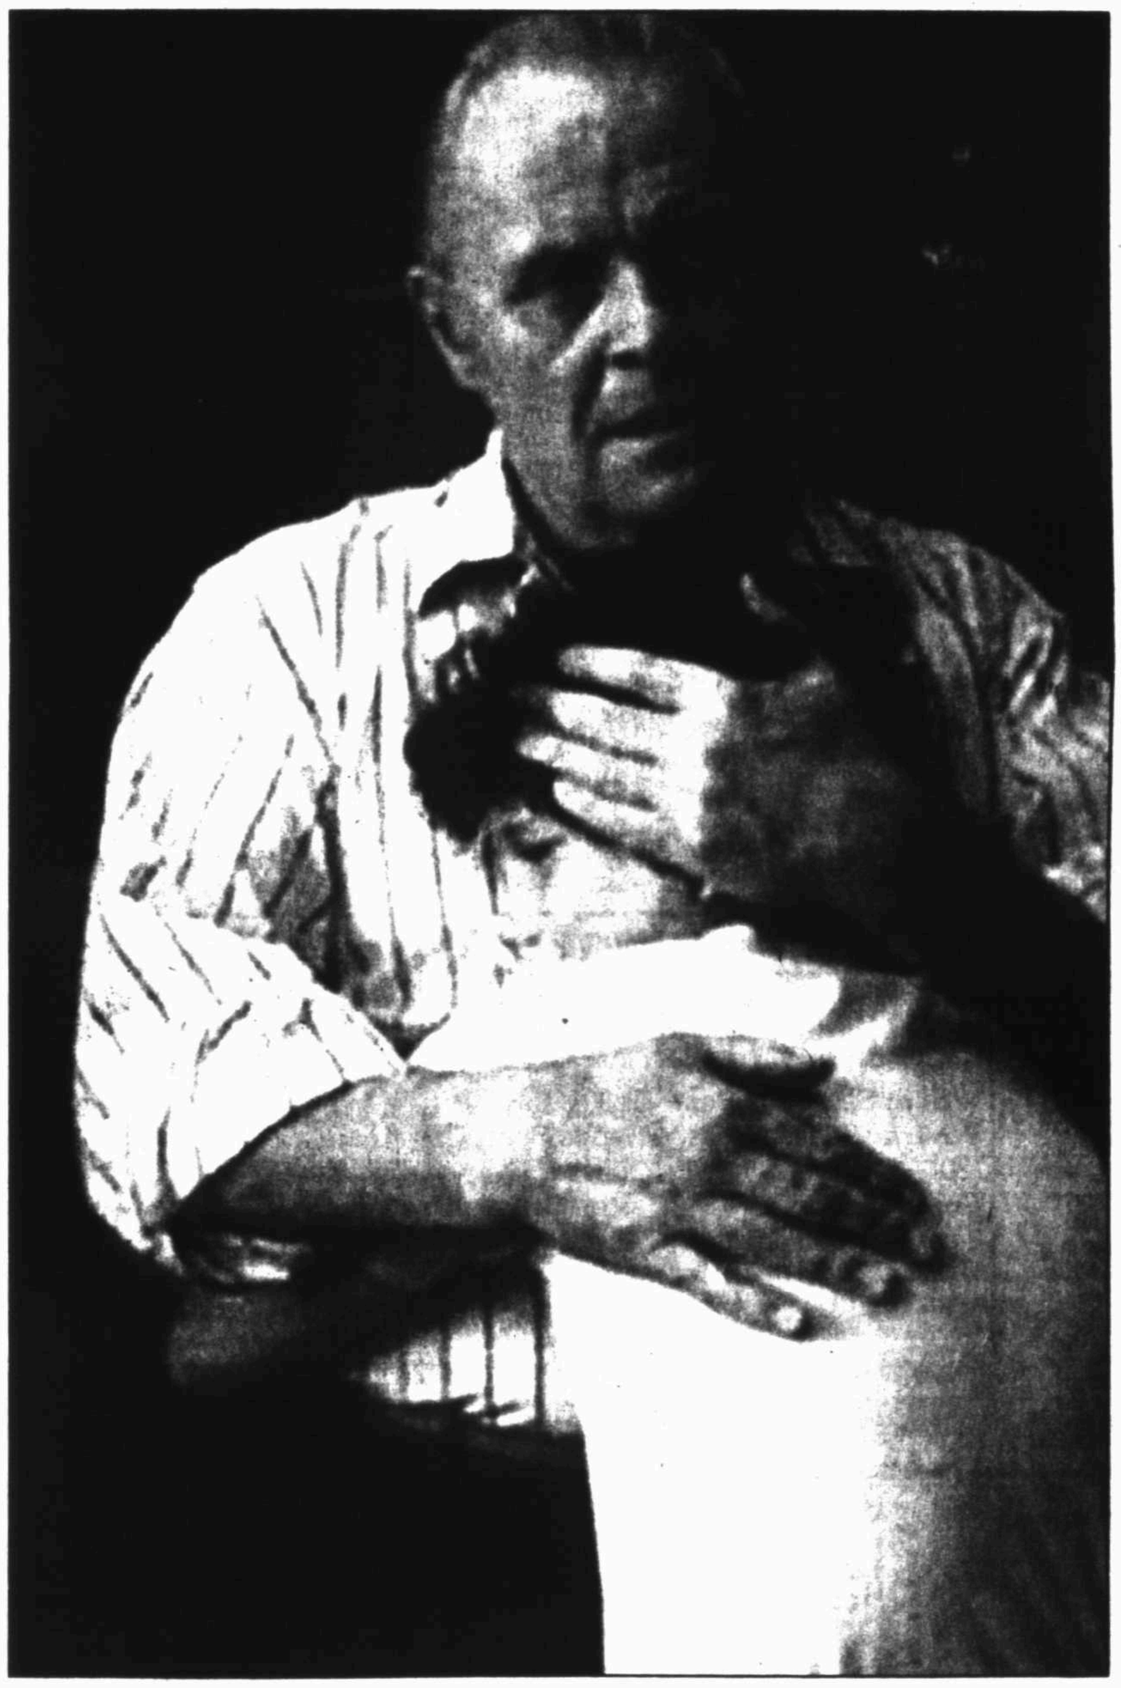

Which leaves Ben Stiller, who in his latest outing enters the world of high fashion as Derek Zoolander, the world's top male model.

Regarding this film, Strauss is more complimentary, saying, "'Zoolander is a rare, modern stupid comedy: one that's smart about half the time."

The film centers around Zoolander, who has kept his title as Male Model of the Year for three years running. He is upstaged by an upstart, causing him to ponder the following: "I'm pretty sure there's more to life than just being really, really good looking, and I plan on finding out what that is." In the process, he takes on the "evil fashion underworld." (Not to be mistaken for the bill that comes later for the clothes that are already worn out.)

The film, which was co-written and directed by Stiller, features a posse of his family members: his wife, Christine Tayler, who plays Matilda, a Time magazine journalist; his mother, Anna Meara, who plays a protester at the VH1/Vogue Fashion Awards; his sister,

Hollywood to open hopeful movie just in time

By Glenn Whipp
N.Y. Times News Service

Last week, director Scott Hicks stood up before a cast-and-crew screening of his new film, "Hearts in Atlantis," and made a speech that differed greatly from the rah-rah introductions usually given before such events. Hicks admitted it wasn't a great time to be releasing a movie. But then, he added, he didn't feel like he had to apologize, either.

"If people want to go to the cinema now, they may as well see something that is, hopefully, tender and emotional," says Hicks, an Australian director known best for making the uplifting 1996 indie hit "Shine."

"I think movies have been dreaming too long these terrible dreams of violence, and they've suddenly become true. I don't want to get too spooky about it, but cinema is in some ways a representation of the public's subconscious. Maybe it's not a bad thing that we turn our minds to telling some more-positive stories."

Adds "Hearts" star Anthony Hopkins: "Actors have a million and one opinions about everything, and I don't know how much mine are worth. But I think entertainment has a role in recovering from this horror. It's hard to tell at the moment. But I think so. I do, indeed."

A TRUSTED 'STAND BY'

You wouldn't necessarily think a movie based on a couple of Stephen King stories would be an ideal choice to escape the grim news and horrible memories of the recent terrorist attacks. But then, "Hearts in Atlantis" is "Stand by Me" King, not the King of such gruesome fare as "Carrie," "Cujo" and "Children of the Corn." And its Eisenhower-era setting couldn't be friendlier to boomers rattled by recent events.

"Hearts in Atlantis" follows an 11-year-old boy's friendship with a mysterious stranger, Ted (Hopkins), who rents a room in his boarding house. The boy, Bobby (Sherman Oaks youngster Anton Yelchin), has a distant mother and a long-dead father, and immediately bonds with Ted, a man possessing a world of wisdom and perhaps some psychic abilities. Others — shadowy figures whom Ted calls the "low men" — want to utilize Ted's gift, and he enlists Bobby's help to hide from them. Bobby, in turn, gets a father figure.

Like "Stand by Me," the movie trades heavily on nostalgia with plenty of period music (Chubby Checker, the Platters, Fats Domino), first kisses, first bikes, first fights — all seen through the gauze of memory by a world-weary boomer adult (David Morse, in the type of role Richard Dreyfuss handled in "Stand by Me").

Hicks is all too aware of the similarities between his movie and "Stand by Me." In fact, he changed the occupation of the Morse character from a writer to a photographer because, he says, "it cut too close to the bone. Richard Dreyfuss was a writer in 'Stand by Me.' "

"You do almost expect to see the kids from 'Stand by Me' make an appearance, walking along the railroad tracks," Hicks continues. "It's King. It's the same domain. Obviously, he has unfinished business with childhood."

DEALING WITH HUMANITY

Veteran screenwriter William Goldman ("Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid," "All the President's Men") adapted "Hearts" from mostly one story ("Low Men in Yellow Coats") from King's 1999 collection of loosely connected pieces, "Hearts of Atlantis." (Parts of another story, "Heavenly Shades of Night Are Falling," were also used.) Goldman had adapted King's work before with "Misery" and, in fact, has written the screenplay for another King novel, "Dreamcatcher," due next year.

"I love King most when he's not dealing with monsters but dealing with human monsters," Goldman says.

Hicks took Goldman's partialities a step further, excising the few supernatural elements remaining in Goldman's screenplay.

"In King's story, Ted is an alien and the low men are aliens," Hicks says. "William Goldman had stripped a lot of that out, and I decided to remove it completely and keep Ted as a human being that had some psychic ability. And even the psychic element can be explained as something that was heightened because it was seen through a child's memory of things."

Hopkins liked the story's psychic elements, perhaps because of the manner in which he heard about the movie in the first place. Hopkins was in Florence, Italy, filming "Hannibal." During a break in the shoot, he relaxed by the pool, reading Goldman's memoir "Which Lie Did I Tell." Hopkins had worked with Goldman before on "A Bridge Too Far" and "Magic," and enjoyed reading the screenwriter's comments about those movies as well as his accounts of adapting King's "Misery" for Kathy Bates.

"And I found myself thinking, 'I'd like to do a Stephen King novel myself. And I'd like to work with William Goldman again,' " Hopkins remembers.

Two days later, "Hannibal" producer Dino De Laurentiis was throwing a party in his Florence villa. In walked Hopkins' agent, who told the actor, "By the way, I've got a script on the way to you. It's a Stephen King story by William Goldman." Hopkins' reaction: "I'll do it."

"My agent laughed and asked, 'Don't you want to read the script first?' " Hopkins says. "But I didn't really need to. It was one of those moments of synchronicity where the coincidences are so startling and dramatic that you have no recourse but to just go with it."

Hopkins is quick to add that he doesn't want to be misquoted. He's a normal person and doesn't buy wholeheartedly into psychic phenomena.

"But I'm open-minded; I think anything is possible," he says. "I have a saying: Nothing is too good to be true, nothing is too wonderful to happen, and nothing is too wonderful to last. And that's gotten me through life."

PAINT YOUR WAGON

Permian Playhouse in Odessa opened its season Sept. 22 with PAINT YOUR WAGON, the Lerner and Lowe musical about those adventurous folks who went west in the 1800's to seek their fortunes in the gold fields. The stage version bears only a slim resemblance to the movie. And this cutting of the script is rather disjointed, creating a lack of dialog to pull it all together.

This play is about a dreamer — Ben Rumson, played by Bill Kersh — who sets down his claim over the grave of a fellow seeker of gold and a boom town is born. His daughter Jennifer lives with him. As much as he has to sing, Kersh needs to do no talking during the week to conserve his voice for performances. Kersh is believable as the dreamer and he plays Rumson with his usual bombastic flair.

Stephanie Rivas plays his "tomboy" daughter Jennifer. She is supposed to be in love with the character Julio, played by Jaime Sotelo, however I never felt like there was a real spark between them. But it was worth going just to hear him sing, "I Talk To The Trees" and 'Carina Mio." Rivas' pleasant voice lends itself to the romance of this music.

The problems with this production didn't have anything to do with the cast. They worked hard with that which they were given and the beautiful Lerner and Lowe score helps you get past the rough spots. What I didn't care for was the cartoony set and the "stand in a line and sing" direction. The production looked as if it could have used another week of nightly work to get to opening night. I know that PPH is capable of a more polished look.

It was good to see there were many Midlanders sharing the stage and the backstage with the Odessa volunteers. Working together is the only way to keep all the theaters moving forward.

If you are going to see PAINT YOUR WAGON this weekend call the friendly box office people at PPH, 550-5456.

Opening the weekend of October 5th at the Globe of the Great Southwest is Richard III, call 332-1586 or 580-3177. At Midland Community Theatre, THE MYSTERY OF IRMA VEP, call 682-4111 or 550-4111. If you think about it, say thank you to all the box office people. They are volunteers, too, and they don't get applause!

BENEFIT: Many go to movies to support Sept. 11 fund-raiser directly affects about 25,000 people plus all the" extended family "and friends. We're talking about a city pretty much close to Midland."

Alec Byrne had heard about the donation the theater was making, but that was "not necessarily" the reason he came to the theater on Tuesday night.

"I wanted to see 'Planet of the Apes,'" Byrne said. "But it's nice that they are doing that."

At Tall City 10, Ruth Thon was buying concessions a little after 9 p.m. on Tuesday. The evening was not a regular one for her family to be at the movies.

"We don't go at 9:30 with our children on a school night," Ms. Thon said. "And we don't get popcorn and Cokes on a school night at 9:30 p.m. But this is all going for a good cause. I even bought Emily an adult ticket because the child's ticket was cheaper."

Dennis and Marilyn Cunningham also stopped at the concession line on their way into the movies on Tuesday.

"We don't usually come on Tuesday," Cunningham said. "We come on weekends." He pointed to his wife and added, "She said they were donating to the fund. We wanted to see this movie and thought it might be a good night to see it and contribute to a good cause."

The Thon family and the Cunninghams had come to see the film that topped the box office across the country on the lowest-grossing weekend in nearly a year — "Hardball." Nationwide, the Keanu Reeves Little League drama earned $8 million in its second weekend while the ghost story "The Others" came in second with $5 million in its seventh week, reported The Associated Press.

At Tall City 10 on Tuesday, Morrison said the three most popular films were "Hardball," "The Glass House" and "The Others."

"'Hardball' probably did the most," Morrison said. "'Hardball' is a really good movie.

"We had come to the theater with no clear decision as to which film we would see. We just knew that on Tuesday we were going to the movies, and we were going to buy concessions.

"On the advice of others, we had also purchased tickets for "Hardball." And we weren't disappointed. The film is rated PG 13 because of language (which is vividly off-color and spoken freely by the kids on the team) and violence (the death of a child)."

A realistic tale and a tear-jerker, it is worth the price of admission whether the money is going to aid the victims of the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks on New York City and Washington, D.C., or not. But how much more rewarding it is to have paid to see this movie on Tuesday than on any other day.

OPENING: Fashion industry ponders question of relevancy

(From 1B)

Amy Stiller, who plays one of the upstart's aides; and his father, Jerry Stiller, who plays longtime agent.

Zoolander" is peppered with cameos — Gary Shandling, Gwen Stefani, David Bowie and Donald Trump — and leading models and fashionistas who spoofed themselves — Claudia Schiffer, Veronica Webb, Tommy Hilfiger, Tom Ford and Tyson Beckford.

"There was some discussion about delaying 'Zoolander's' release in the wake of recent terrorist attacks," Strauss said in his review. "It has murderous secret plots, one explosion and shots of the Manhattan skyline — World Trade Center free. But the dark aspects of the story, which Stiller co-wrote with Drake Sather and John Hamburg, are comically exaggerated enough to be beside the point. Only the most hypersensitive are likely to be upset by them."

Although some scenes in "Zoolander" were filmed in Los Angeles, the bulk of the movie was made in New York City, which is the fashion capital of the United States. On Sept. 11, the fashion industry in real life was two days into its runway presentation for the spring collections.

The presentations stopped. The terrorist attacks left some in the fashion industry to ponder questions of relevancy similar to those being considered by the entertainment world. A week later, when the runway productions resumed, big-budget productions had been replaced with intimate presentations for a handful of stores and publications.

Editor's Note: The information in this story comes from wire service reports and the production notes for "Zoolander," "Hearts in Atlantis" and "Don't Say a Word."

PARENT TO PARENT

a family guide to current movies

By Tom Laney

This column rates current movies for parents and others who want help in choosing films that reflect traditional values and are suitable for family viewing. Films are rated in two categories: Entertainment (rated 0 to +4) and Acceptability (rated -4 to +4). I'll add brief comments to clarify the reasons for the ratings. Movies listed are currently playing in Midland and/or Odessa as of this writing.

HARDBALL (PG-13; 3 1/2, -3) STRONG PARENTAL WARNING: I reviewed this film last time and warned you this is NOT A FAMILY FILM, but in case you missed that column, I owe it to your kids to warn you again. It has been advertised as a cute, lightweight film for and about kids. WRONG! This film contains very strong profanity, including f-words (yes, they can get away with a handful of f-words nowadays in a PG-13 film). More importantly, it contains (warning: spoiler ahead) a shocking scene in which a major character, a cute little boy whom we have grown to love throughout the movie, is killed by a stray bullet in a ghetto shootout. His death and emotional funeral ARE (not "might be") too strong for younger elementary school kids. I generally avoid printing "spoilers," or giveaways of major plot surprises, but in this case it's necessary to demonstrate to you this movie could easily traumatize your younger children, especially in this "post-Columbine" era. All of that having been said, it's a great movie for adults. Although it's very sad, and very reminiscent of last year's great "Pay It Forward," it's also inspiring and thematically similar to "Remember the Titans." So, go see it, but for Heaven's sake, leave the kids with a sitter, and hug them tightly when you get back home.

THE GLASS HOUSE (PG-13; 3, -1 1/2) "Helen Hunt's younger sister" (not really) Leelee Sobieski stars in this intense thriller about a teen-age girl and her younger brother who are orphaned in a suspicious car crash and sent to live with a seemingly nice couple who were friends of their parents. Unfortunately, the friends are after the kids' $4 million trust fund. And the kids, at least the troublesome daughter, are expendable. Violence and language make it a film for older teens to adults, but if you enjoy thrillers, this one's for you.

WHAT'S GOING ON IN HOLLYWOOD? In the wake of the recent terrorist attack on our nation, Hollywood has understandably reacted by postponing the release of some films, altering others and even pulling some advertisements that "hit too close to home." Arnold Schwartzenegger's new film, "Collateral Damage," deals with terrorism, and has been shelved indefinitely. "Men in Black 2," currently in production, is being delayed because it will contain scenes of many buildings being blown up. The great "Spiderman" trailer, which contained a scene of a helicopter caught in a web spun between the twin towers, has been pulled from theaters nationwide. And in a case of misplaced and misinformed patriotism, theaters have been asked to remove posters for what will undoubtedly be one of this fall's two best films, "The Last Castle" (Oct. 19), because of the presence of an upside-down American flag. Some folks who were apparently ignorant of this international distress signal were offended by the poster. Other films that had nothing whatever to do with the 9/11 attack were delayed as Americans huddled in front of the TV news and struggled to recover. Denzel Washington's "Training Day" is now scheduled for Oct. 5th. No new films started last Friday, except a re-release of the disgusting bestiality comedy, "The Animal." So, yes, it's been a rough couple of weeks at local theaters, but nothing compared to what the folks in New York and Washington have gone through. As our thoughts and prayers are with the families of those who were killed and injured, our hearts also will go with our armed forces personnel who are being sent overseas to avenge them. And still, life goes on, however changed it may be. The human need for entertainment as catharsis and escape will remain, maybe stronger than before because of the depth of our nation's wounds. Let me suggest you sit back down in front of that TV and watch a good patriotic film with the whole family. Maybe something with John Wayne. Have your kids ever seen his movies? Or how about some recent films like Mel Gibson's "The Patriot," or "Independence Day," "Deep Impact," "Armageddon," or even "Apollo 13," which all celebrate the strength and resiliency of the American spirit in times of crisis. God bless you and yours, and God bless America, and we'll have some more new films for you next time.

FILMS TO AVOID ENTIRELY: Scary Movie 2; American Pie 2; Jay and Silent Bob Strike Back; Bubble Boy. These are raunchy, sex-filled, tasteless, filthy movies that are just flat morally toxic. Protect your kids from this kind of trash.

FILMS FOR THE WHOLE FAMILY: The Princess Diaries; Shrek; Spy Kids Special Edition.

FILMS FOR THE SLIGHTLY MORE MATURE: The Glass House; Curse of the Jade Scorpion; The Musketeer; Rat Race; American Outlaws; Summer Catch; Jurassic Park III; Planet of the Apes; Dr. Dolittle 2; Tomb Raider; The Fast and the Furious; Legally Blonde; Rush Hour 2; The Others.

FILMS FOR ADULTS ONLY: Hardball; The Glass House; Two Can Play That Game; O; Captain Corelli's Mandolin; America's Sweethearts; Baby Boy; Rock Star; Jeepers Creepers; The Animal; The Score.

FAMILY FILM STATISTICS: Of the 32 films currently playing in Odessa, 10 are rated "R," 17 are rated "PG-13," four are rated "PG," and one is rated "G." The 15 Midland films include: 4 "R," 10 "PG-13," one "PG," and no "G" films. It's getting worse. Almost all the films playing are rated "PG-13" or "R," and I strongly caution you to see any of them first before taking your kids. Please re-read the following explanations of what you should know about the ratings BEFORE taking your kids to the movies.

COMMENTARY ON FILM RATINGS: As I've said before, I'm alarmed most parents don't really understand the different ratings and what they mean. I'm often asked to print again this simpler and more accurate explanation of the ratings as follows:

G:NO objectionable content.

PG:SOME mildly objectionable content WILL be present.

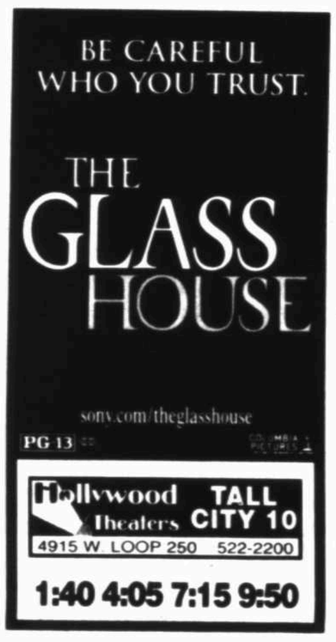

PG-13: STRONG objectionable content WILL be present.

R: EXTREME objectionable content WILL be present; anyone under 17 MUST be accompanied THROUGHOUT THE MOVIE by a parent or a court-appointed legal guardian. You may NOT simply purchase your child's ticket; you must watch what you are exposing them to.

NC-17 Patently adult content. NO ONE UNDER 17 WILL BE ADMITTED UNDER ANY CIRCUMSTANCES, EVEN WITH A PARENT.

Please don't assume that PG or PG-13 films are OK for all ages just because kids can legally buy tickets to them. My purpose in reviewing these films for you is to help you protect our precious kids from the harmful content of the majority of today's films.

Next time, we'll look at some more new releases, including the new Michael Douglas thriller "Don't Say a Word," the utterly stupid (and not-for-kids) "Zoolander," and my personal prediction for best movie of the fall season, Stephen King's "Hearts in Atlantis," starring Anthony Hopkins. Don't let the Stephen King authorship fool you — this one will be short on horror and long on drama. There may be a sneak preview this weekend of "Serendipity," but if so, consider it a romance for adults only. Nothing's coming out for kids until the October 5th release of "Max Keeble's Big Move." As always, I recommend three good Web sites for information on new movies: www.screenit.com, www.gospelcom.net/ preview, and www.upcomingmovies.com. Don't hesitate to check out any of these sites for further information, or e-mail me with your comments and questions at: tlaney@apex2000.net. Thank you for all the positive comments I've received so far — it's a pleasure to be of service to you.

Taliban, opposition exchange fire near Afghanistan capital

By Alexander Merkushev
Associated Press

NORTH OF KABUL, Afghanistan — In a no-man's-land between two high mountains, Taliban tanks kicked up dust and the roar of multiple rocket launchers echoed through the gorge Thursday as opposition forces tried to get closer to the Afghan capital.

It will be no easy task for the patchwork forces of the opposition, despite mounting hopes that possible American strikes against the Taliban might help their cause.

Taliban forces control the heights on one mountain and the capital, Kabul, beyond. The opposition northern alliance controls a peak across a desolate valley, where women sit near flat-topped tents and camels forage for food.

Over the past day, both sides traded fire.

The opposition fighters here have four-barreled Shilka anti-aircraft guns, multiple rocket launchers and some tanks. Except for scattered exchanges of fire like this one, no major military activity was reported in Afghanistan on Thursday.

The members of the opposition unit say this forward position, a place with no name, is a mere four miles from Kabul — but that's a long way with a mountain in between.

Reportedly, refugees from Kabul are headed this way, seeking safety behind the northern alliance's main line of defense near the Afghan capital.

The alliance's ragtag forces, based in the northern Panjshir Valley, have been battling for years against the Taliban — who control more than 90 percent of Afghanistan — with little change in the balance of power.

But now the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks in the United States have sparked an upsurge in fighting and raised hopes within the opposition that the anti-terror coalition being put together by Washington will help their cause. Already, Russia has said it will provide more arms and military equipment to the alliance.

And opposition fighters are hopeful that possible U.S. military strikes against the Taliban will tip the war in their favor. The Bush administration has threatened punishment against the Taliban unless its hands over Osama bin Laden, the prime suspect in the attacks on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon.

The opposition forces say taking Kabul is not their primary objective and that they are waiting for the Americans.

"We are waiting for American strikes and once they begin we will decide whether we should launch our offense on Kabul," said Rakhmat Ramazan, an official in the alliance's foreign ministry.

The front line north of Kabul generally lies about 12 miles north of the city, though opposition patrols sometimes push even closer. Western and Pakistani sources estimate that the Taliban can field about 40,000 fighters, while the opposition numbers up to 20,000.

For years, the two sides have been battling, mainly with heavy rocket exchanges in the mountainous terrain, with changes on the battlefield determined as much by shifting alliances as by military might.

Although the men of the northern alliance are determined to fight, they also are ready for the war with the Taliban to end.

Sober, a 23-year-old who like many Afghans uses one name, has been battling the Taliban for the past five years, taking up arms shortly after marrying his first wife, with whom he has a 4-year-old son. He married his second wife four months ago and dearly misses her. He visits them a couple of times a week, taking time out from his duties at the front.

The opposition fighters cook, clean and fend for themselves, and their supplies are meager.

"After the war, I want to remove all the mines all over Afghanistan," said Sober, who in the meantime is busy putting mines around opposition positions.

Amid the shooting, the nomads who live in this no-man's-land appear almost oblivious to the fighting, tending to their children and their camels and looking at the sky from time to time, their ears and eyes following the rumble of gunfire.

AP Photo

A Northern Alliance fighter carries a shell to fire at the Taliban position at the front line some 19 miles north of Kabul, Thursday. In Afghanistan's rugged north, where the opposition alliance has been fighting Taliban troops for key territory, no major battles were reported early Thursday, although scattered exchanges of fire continued. The opposition alliance, which holds between 5 to 10 percent of Afghanistan's territory, has been trying to seize areas north of Kabul.

Taliban delivers message to bin Laden asking him to leave

By Laura King
Associated Press

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan — After days of saying it couldn't locate Osama bin Laden, Afghanistan's Taliban government said Thursday it had delivered a week-old message to America's prime suspect in the terror attacks on New York and Washington, asking him to leave the country voluntarily.

The nation's top clerics recommended Sept. 20 that bin Laden be asked to leave Afghanistan, where he has sheltered for the past five years. The United States says he has used Afghanistan as his headquarters for a far-flung, loosely linked international terror network known as al-Qaida, or "the base."

President Bush has demanded the Taliban surrender bin Laden or share his fate, raising expectations of an American-led military action against Afghanistan, though none has yet materialized.

"Osama has now received the (clerics') recommendations" that he depart Afghanistan, the Taliban's ambassador in neighboring Pakistan, Abdul Salam Zaeef, said Thursday. It marked the first time since the Sept. 11 terror attacks that the Taliban, the hard-line Islamic movement that rules Afghanistan, indicated they knew bin Laden's location or how to communicate with him.

As the confrontation over bin Laden has hardened, fears have grown over the safety of eight foreign aid workers, including two Americans, accused last month of preaching Christianity in Afghanistan. On Thursday, diplomats were notified that their trial, halted in the wake of the terror strikes, would resume Saturday.

John Mercer, the father of American defendant Heather Mercer, said the planned resumption was an "encouraging" development. The aid workers' Pakistani lawyer Asif Ali, who is schooled in sharia, or Islamic law, said he would "do my best to defend the accused."

The eight — two Americans, four Germans, and two Australians — are employed by German-based Shelter Now International, a Christian aid organization. They were arrested along with 16 Afghan workers on charges of proselytizing, a serious offense in a country under Islamic rule.

While the United States has sought to marshal support for a coalition targeting bin Laden, new attention has focused on a ragtag opposition alliance that has struggled for years to wrest key territory from Taliban troops.

The anti-government guerrillas have reported no major battlefield gains, but in the rugged valleys of northern Afghanistan, fighting has grown fiercer in recent days. One forward patrol, accompanied by an Associated Press Television News crew, pushed to within four miles of Kabul before falling back, exchanging fire with Taliban fighters.

The Taliban leader, Mullah Mohammed Omar, warned the rebels not to look to the United States to help them topple his government.

"Those Afghans who want to seize power with the help of America are just like those fools who tried to stay in power with the help of the Russian army," he said in a message distributed Thursday by the Afghan Islamic Press. "If America interferes in Afghanistan, then it will be no different from Russia."

Even while it keeps up fiery calls for a jihad, or holy war, if America attacks, the Taliban opened the door Thursday to the possibility of outside mediation, saying they would be willing to receive civil rights leader Jesse Jackson as an envoy.

Jackson said he was invited by the Taliban; the Taliban said it was Jackson who approached them, but they were willing to accept his offer to "mediate between the Taliban and America."

In any event, Bush administration officials indicated they would discourage such a trip. And Francesc Vendrell, head of the U.N. special mission for Afghanistan, told reporters in Islamabad: "I'm afraid that when it comes to the issue of bin Laden and the al-Qaida network, the time for negotiations with the Taliban on this issue is past."

In Pakistan, the only country that recognizes the Taliban as Afghanistan's legitimate rulers, the government's decision to side with the United States has drawn angry protests, mainly organized by hard-line Islamic parties in Pakistan.

On Thursday, pro-government rallies were staged in several cities, but they were considerably smaller than anti-government rallies have been, and many demonstrators were students who were let out of school to take part. The foreign minister, Abdul Sattar, addressed the Islamabad gathering, telling the crowd the quarrel was not with the Afghan people.

In a new sign of opposition to the government's stance, six prominent Islamic scholars in the border city of Peshawar issued a fatwa, or religious ruling, saying jihad is the duty of every Muslim if the United States attacks Afghanistan.

"Anybody who dies in the war on the American side will not go to heaven," the ruling said. "But any Muslim who dies on the side of Afghanistan will die as a martyr and go to paradise."

Inside Afghanistan, a humanitarian crisis is in the making. The United Nations has warned of dwindling food stocks after political turmoil and a crippling drought, and the start of the harsh Afghan winter is only six weeks away.

Several planeloads of food were to be flown over the next few days to Afghanistan's neighbors in preparation for an expected flood of refugees who manage to make it across the porous borders, U.N. officials said Thursday.

Kabul radio denied reports of food shortages in the capital and major provinces. A broadcast monitored Thursday in Islamabad quoted senior municipal officials as saying there was enough food in markets and assuring residents "we have sufficient stocks available in Kabul and other provinces."

European crackdown on terror suspects yields arrests

PARIS (AP) — In a coordinated effort to crack down on terror cells, police across Europe have arrested at least 20 people and shadowed dozens of others, piecing together the first clues of what may be a network of terror stretching across the continent and beyond.

Many of the suspects are believed to have links to Osama bin Laden, the suspected mastermind of the Sept. 11 terror attacks in the United States, authorities said. Some allegedly trained in camps in Afghanistan. Others are believed to have plotted attacks on American interests in Europe — including the U.S. Embassy in Paris.

No one has tied any of the suspects in Europe to the Sept. 11 attacks, but some were linked to one another. Spanish officials announced Wednesday that six Algerians with connections to other suspects had been detained.

Spanish Interior Minister Mariano Rajoy said the arrests marked "the collaboration against terrorism between all countries, particularly in this case between the countries of the European Union."

Spanish authorities said some of the Algerians had been in contact with one of the first terror suspects rounded up in Europe after the U.S. attacks — Nizar Trabelsi, a Tunisian arrested Sept. 13 in Belgium.

"We contacted Belgium and said, 'Hey, the guy you arrested was in Spain on such and such a date and met with these guys," Madrid Police Chief Juan Cotino said. "That's how the link emerged."

Trabelsi was planning a suicide attack against U.S. targets on the continent, Cotino said.

Other arrests have taken place in Britain and France. But just how much information they have provided about the larger European terror network is still unclear and it will take more time to piece together a fuller picture, terrorism experts say.

French judicial officials say Djamel Begal, a French-Algerian man arrested in Dubai in July, has been key to rounding-up suspects and thwarting attacks.

France's top anti-terrorism judge, Jean-Louis Bruguiere, traveled last week to the United Arab Emirates to question Begal, who authorities have now tied to other individuals arrested in the Netherlands and Belgium since the attacks.

French police and judicial authorities, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said it was Begal who tipped them off to plots against the U.S. Embassy in Paris. The information led to the arrests of seven people in France on Sept 21.

An eighth member of the group who eluded capture was arrested later in Britain, as were several other suspects.

In London Thursday, Home Secretary David Blunkett told the British Broadcasting Corp. that as many as 11 of the 19 hijackers may have been in Britain in the months leading up to the attacks.

"Some of them will have passed through, some will have stayed over," he said. "What we do now know is, having identified these people — because we do actually now have the line back to where they were — we can track not only their movements, but those who associated with them. That is the crucial issue," Blunkett said.

British police say they have received more than 100 requests from the FBI in the United States to trace suspects, witnesses and other people connected with the case.

Events & Entertainment Schedule

10am-3pm	Face Painting, Lindy Bell	1:00pm	Daddy Olympics
10am-3pm	Harlan the Balloon Man	1:30pm	Diaper Dash
12 Noon	Diaper Dash	2:00pm	Granny Grand Prix
12:30pm	Mom's Sticky Situation	2:30-3pm	Grand Prize Giveaways

Diaper Dash:
On your mark, get set, GO! Crawlers will compete in this adorable race (on a soft surface) to see whom is the best crawler this side of the Rio Grande. The first baby to cross the finish line will win a $250 gift certificate. Babies must be registered prior to the race. Four names will be drawn prior to race.

Daddy Olympics:
Calling all Dad's . . . It's time to show off your parental prowess! Dads will compete in an obstacle course filled with surprises. The lucky contestants will showcase their baby skills by mixing formula, bathing, diapering and dressing a life-like doll. First "super dad" to cross the finish line with his bundle of joy wins the grand prize! Interested daddies must pre-register at the Baby Expo prior to the event. Four names will be drawn for the competition.

Mom's Sticky Situation:
Mom, it's a hectic morning. The phone is ringing, the baby's crying and you just remembered that this is your week to make sandwiches for your kindergartner's class! The trick is that you have to assemble as many peanut butter and jelly sandwiches as you can before noon and it's 11:59! Your juggling skills will be put to the test in this exciting and fun race. The mom with the most sandwiches assembled within the allotted time is the winner. Interested moms must pre-register prior to the event. Four names will be drawn for the competition.

Granny Grand Prix:
It's Granny's day with her precious grandbaby. It's been a long day filled with laughter and lots of food (mostly sweets) and you're little angel is a mess! Mom calls to inform you that she has to work late, dad's out of town and the baby is scheduled to take his first baby picture, and she needs you to take him! The race is on! You have to finish feeding, clean-up, dress, assemble diaper bag and transport junior in record time. Mario An-Granny to the rescue! This is a timed event. The granny with the best time wins the grand prize. Interested grandmas must register prior to the event. Four names will be drawn for the competition.

Scientists say diabetes can be prevented by healthy living

By Ira Dreyfuss
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Most cases of the most common form of diabetes can be prevented by moderate exercise and a healthy diet, studies show.

One study indicates that such lifestyle changes could head off over 90 percent of type 2 diabetes. Another says the changes could reduce the risk of getting the disease by 58 percent even among people who already show signs of developing it.

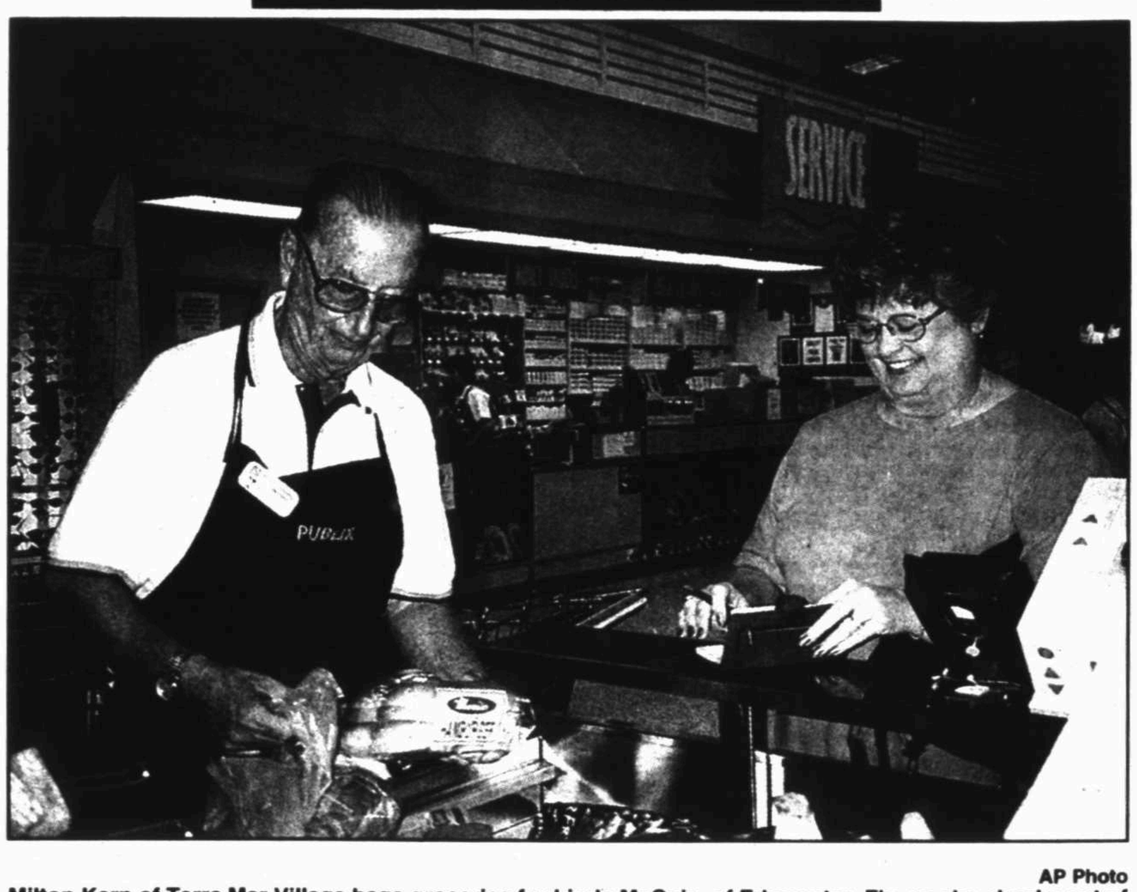

"There is no question that diabetes is a lifestyle disease, and can be prevented by lifestyle modifications," said Dr. Frank B. Hu of the Harvard School of Public Health, lead author of a major study in the Sept. 13 issue of the New England Journal of Medicine.

Hu and his colleagues looked at data on 84,941 women in the Nurses' Health Study, a database that Harvard researchers began to track in 1976. None of the women had diabetes at the start of the study; 3,300 had it after 16 years.

Type 2 diabetes, the class that accounts for 90 percent or more of all diabetes cases, occurs when the body can't properly utilize insulin in getting nutrients to cells. The number of diabetes cases has been growing sharply, and federal data say about 16 million Americans have some form of the disease.

Some retirees aren't interested in working, once they're done with the workaday world. They glory in their golf games or tennis matches. And traveling fills the months for many of them, too. But there are others who need at least part-time jobs, as much for their sanity as anything else.

FAMILY MATTERS

Mother not sure what to do after discovering daughter's sexual activity

By Jim May

DEAR FAMILY: I was cleaning up my 15-year-old daughter's room and found some notes she had written to boyfriends. In one of them, she talked about them having oral sex with that boyfriend. The notes weren't dated or named, so I don't know when all of this occurred. She has had several boyfriends, so I'm not sure which boyfriend it was. If she's doing that, then how long will it be before that's not enough, and she starts having sex? All of this goes against everything we believe in and have taught her.

May

What I want to know is how to talk to her about this. I know she's going to attack me for violating her privacy and reading her notes. Was I wrong to do that? What is a parent supposed to do when their child is having sex?

I made sure that she went to the sex education course at our church, but I guess it didn't work, or she didn't get it. I don't want to tell her father because he would really be upset with her and would probably attack the boy.

I know I need to do something, but what? What did we do wrong? Maybe she's stopped and my confronting her will just make it worse. Help! — DAUGHTER IN TROUBLE

DEAR TROUBLE: It does not follow that because your daughter is making bad sexual decisions that you did anything wrong. You certainly did the basics right in enrolling her in the sex education course at your church. Since it was conducted in a church setting, I would assume that in addition to the sex education part they also stressed abstinence and morality. You may want to consider contacting CLEAR Ministries at 684-8600, to see what additional sex education courses they might offer. One aspect of this problem is that your daughter needs additional education on this subject. Oral sex is sex, and as Dr. Nathalie Bartle points out in her book, "Venus in Blue Jeans," most teens believe there is no danger in unprotected oral sex. WRONG!!! Boys will often push girls for oral sex with the argument that it's not really sex, it's safe, and the girl remains a virgin. WRONG!!! Your daughter needs the facts.

In terms of your reading her notes, you now have knowledge that I believe you need to act on. It is wrong for 15-year-old males and females to be having sexual relations. They do not have the emotional maturity to understand the long-term ramifications of their decisions. My general belief is if the notes were lying around in clear sight, then that often is a subconscious request for help. They may protest, but they did leave the notes out and available. I also believe parents should not "search" a teen's room for notes or other items unless the parent has some reason to believe there is a problem. In that case, no excuse is necessary — parents are to protect their children. Conversely, I do not believe random searches of the rooms of performing teens is appropriate — they have earned our trust.

In addition to checking on possible sex education courses, I would encourage you to set aside some time to have a calm discussion with your daughter about this matter. It is important she know why she is making a sexual decision at her age — for example, is it "love?" or "everyone is doing it?" or a boyfriend is pushing her? or her insecurities?, etc. If she agrees, she may well need to discuss this with a professional counselor, her youth minister, or minister. Knowing the reason for her decision is an important first step in helping her to decide to "just say later." That is "later" when she is married. She needs help in forming a different perspective of sex and its meaning in her life. The tone of this discussion is compassionate and supportive, not confrontational and accusatory. Be certain to point out to her the position that her choices place you in relative to her father/your husband.

Pray before you meet with your daughter, pray together before and after you talk. Ask God to be present in this uncomfortable situation. Your daughter is fortunate to have a mother like you.

DEAR ABBY

Woman's supervisor duty conflicts with friendship

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am a female supervisor of a staff of 30. My friend "Diane," who is also the office manager, is my problem. She constantly entertains personal calls and is very loud. She's a smart lady, but her work isn't up to par. (She knows her job, but does it "at her convenience.") Diane is also very bitter because she hasn't received a promotion. She had been told many times by the head of the department and by me to curtail her personal calls and to be more careful with her work.

Pauline & Jeanne Phillips

Recently I was forced to take a lengthy medical leave. Diane was wonderful, calling and coming to visit. But I have recently returned to work, and my boss has asked me to talk to her again about the antics I mentioned. I'm afraid if I do so, I'll damage our friendship. Please tell me how to diplomatically approach her. — BETWEEN A ROCK AND A HARD PLACE, BRONX, N.Y.

DEAR BETWEEN: As a supervisor, your first responsibility must be to handle the problems with the staff you supervise. While you are on duty, that responsibility must take priority over personal friendships, which are after-hours relationships.

Explain to your co-worker/friend that while you don't want to jeopardize the friendship, counseling your staff is part of your job. Tell Diane that you are calling her unacceptable practices to her attention so that she can meet company standards necessary for her to be successful. If you are tactful, she should be able to distinguish between your work relationship and your personal one.

DEAR ABBY: With the end of summer comes the time of year I dread the most — the holiday season.

It isn't the holidays that get me down, it's the prospect of visiting my husband's family with our new baby girl. They are all lifelong smokers who think nothing of holding a baby and a lighted cigarette at the same time.

My sister-in-law's kids have allergies and asthma, but she smokes around them anyway. Parties at my in-laws' are literally a cloud of smoke. When my husband's family are guests in our smoke-free home, they smoke outside. These folks think that as long as the baby is away from the smoke, it won't affect her. They don't realize the smell lingers on them — whether they're smoking in or outside.

With the colder weather approaching, all our visits will be indoors. Our daughter's pediatrician says no one is to smoke around her. My husband refuses to say anything to his parents about the smoke and insists we take our baby to their house. What can I do? Our daughter is only 6 months old, and exposing her to all that smoke scares me.

I should add that I get along well with my in-laws except for this one issue. Please tell me how to handle this. — SMOKELESS BUT OUTNUMBERED IN PENNSYLVANIA

DEAR SMOKELESS: Schedule a session with your baby's pediatrician and take your husband. He needs to be told by a professional that a smoke-free environment for your infant is "doctor's orders." Once he understands the importance of a smoke-free environment for the baby's health, the two of you can restrict the family visits at his parents' house and do it with a clear conscience.

Dear Abby is written by Pauline Phillips, aka Abigail Van Buren, and daughter Jeanne Phillips. Their column is distributed by Universal Press Syndicate.

HEALTH: Exercise can help reduce risk

(From 6B)

The Harvard researchers concluded 91 percent of cases among the people they studied could have been prevented by avoiding overweight, being active, eating right, not drinking and not smoking.

Being overweight was the single strongest predictor of the metabolic disorder — 61 percent of cases could be attributed to weight problems.

But other factors had powerful effects, even among the overweight. Overweight women cut their risk 24 percent simply by at least walking regularly and favoring foods that were high in fiber but low in partially hydrogenated oils. Such foods include french fries and commercial baked goods.

Benefits of physical activity went up with the amount of exercise. Those who did seven or more hours a week had almost a 30 percent lower risk than did women who put in less than one half hour a week.

Benefits of healthy eating followed a similar pattern. Researchers created a diet scorecard to account for variations in eating, and found those who scored best had about half the diabetes risk of those who ate worst.

A separate study, the Diabetes Prevention Program, considered the effect of eating and exercise patterns on 3,234 people who already had a strong indication they were progressing toward diabetes. These people had high levels of sugar in the blood.

A moderate intensity program of walking 30 minutes a day, coupled with a low-fat diet that shaved off 5 percent to 7 percent of their body weight, reduced their risk of progressing to diabetes by 58 percent.

Participants had been followed for 3 years when the study was stopped a year ahead of schedule because outside experts who were monitoring the program felt the results were conclusive. Results of the National Institutes of Health study were announced Aug. 8.

Lifestyle changes caused the reduced risk, said the Diabetes Prevention Program's chair, Dr. David Nathan of Massachusetts General Hospital in Boston.

The changes are within the capacity of the average American, Nathan said. "We were able to take a high-risk group, and they were able to accomplish what we asked of them," he said. "It worked wonderfully."

Even people who don't have high blood sugar should be able to summon the motivation, Nathan said. The people in his study could not have known that exercise and diet would work so well, but people now should know, he said.

The next step is to find ways to encourage a healthier lifestyle among those who most need it — those who are genetically at risk of developing diabetes, said Dr. Francine Kaufman, head of endocrinology at Childrens Hospital Los Angeles. "This is a disease in which the underlying genetic background is critical, and if you have these genes, the impact of lifestyle turns these genes on or keeps them suppressed," Kaufman said.

Type 2 diabetes, once a disease of the old, has been working its way to young and younger patients, and now is showing an alarming increase among young people, Kaufman said.

Workplaces and communities should make it easier to exercise, by creating safe areas in which to exercise and encouraging such things as "walk at lunch programs," Kaufman said. And the food industry should do better at spelling out the nutritional risks in products, as well as cutting back on the portion sizes, she said.

COMMUNITY CONNECTIONS

AARP members need to be role models for community

By Alex Rose

There is no doubt our senior population in Midland is growing.

Rose

Midland's senior citizens have significant strength in numbers to influence the voting on the economic development tax bond issue — which will be on the November ballot. They need transportation and need Congress to enact a Medicare prescription drug coverage plan. But most importantly, they are grieving over the recent national tragedy. We have all been shaken to our very souls.

Because of our age and experience, I think we stand as the role model in how we cope and move forward. Those things we are able to do — such as donating blood, giving money, sending needed items, offering our prayers individually and in groups, paying more attention to our families and friends and reaching out to our neighbors — all are visible signs that we care about each other as fellow human beings regardless of our race or creed.

Congress has its hands full at the moment with our horrific crisis, but when they have time to devote to matters other than our national safety, it is hoped they can continue their work on enacting a Medicare prescription drug coverage plan. Only a day before the Senate adjourned for their August break, a group of Senate moderates on the Finance Committee, led by Sen. Chuck Grassley, outlined a framework for Medicare reform and prescription drug legislation they said they would draft during this recess. Similarly, Max Baucus, chairman of the Finance Committee, has stated he plans to have a bipartisan proposal ready for committee mark-up this month.

Another issue will be the resolution of the key differences between the House and Senate-passed versions of the Patients' Bill of Rights. AARP will intensify its efforts to enact a prescription drug benefit in Medicare that is available and affordable to all beneficiaries. We also will continue to push for enactment of a strong Patients' Bill of Rights. As always, the work of AARP volunteer leaders will be crucial to the success in both areas. Please continue to stay abreast of happenings.

Earlier this year, legislation designed to make long-term care and long-term care insurance more affordable was introduced. Americans spent $33 billion on long-term care in 2000, and they are expected to spend five times that amount over the next 30 years. The House and Senate bills begin to help defray long-term care costs by providing a $3,000 tax credit for long-term care recipients or their caregivers. The tax credit — which begins at $1,000 — is phased in over four years. The bill introduced this year contain stronger consumer protection standards.

Enacting legislation to ease the caregiver's burden and help consumers afford long-term care is high priority for AARP. AARP volunteers are encouraged to write or call their U.S. representatives and their senators and urge them to co-sponsor S. 627 or H.R. 831, the long-term Care and Retirement Security Act of 2001.

Coming down to our local happenings, we all received in the mail the brochure on the economic development tax bond issue. Again, we need to be a role model. Read this information, call and ask questions, make up your mind as to how you want to vote, and then, or course, go and vote in November. Don't let us be caught shirking our duty.

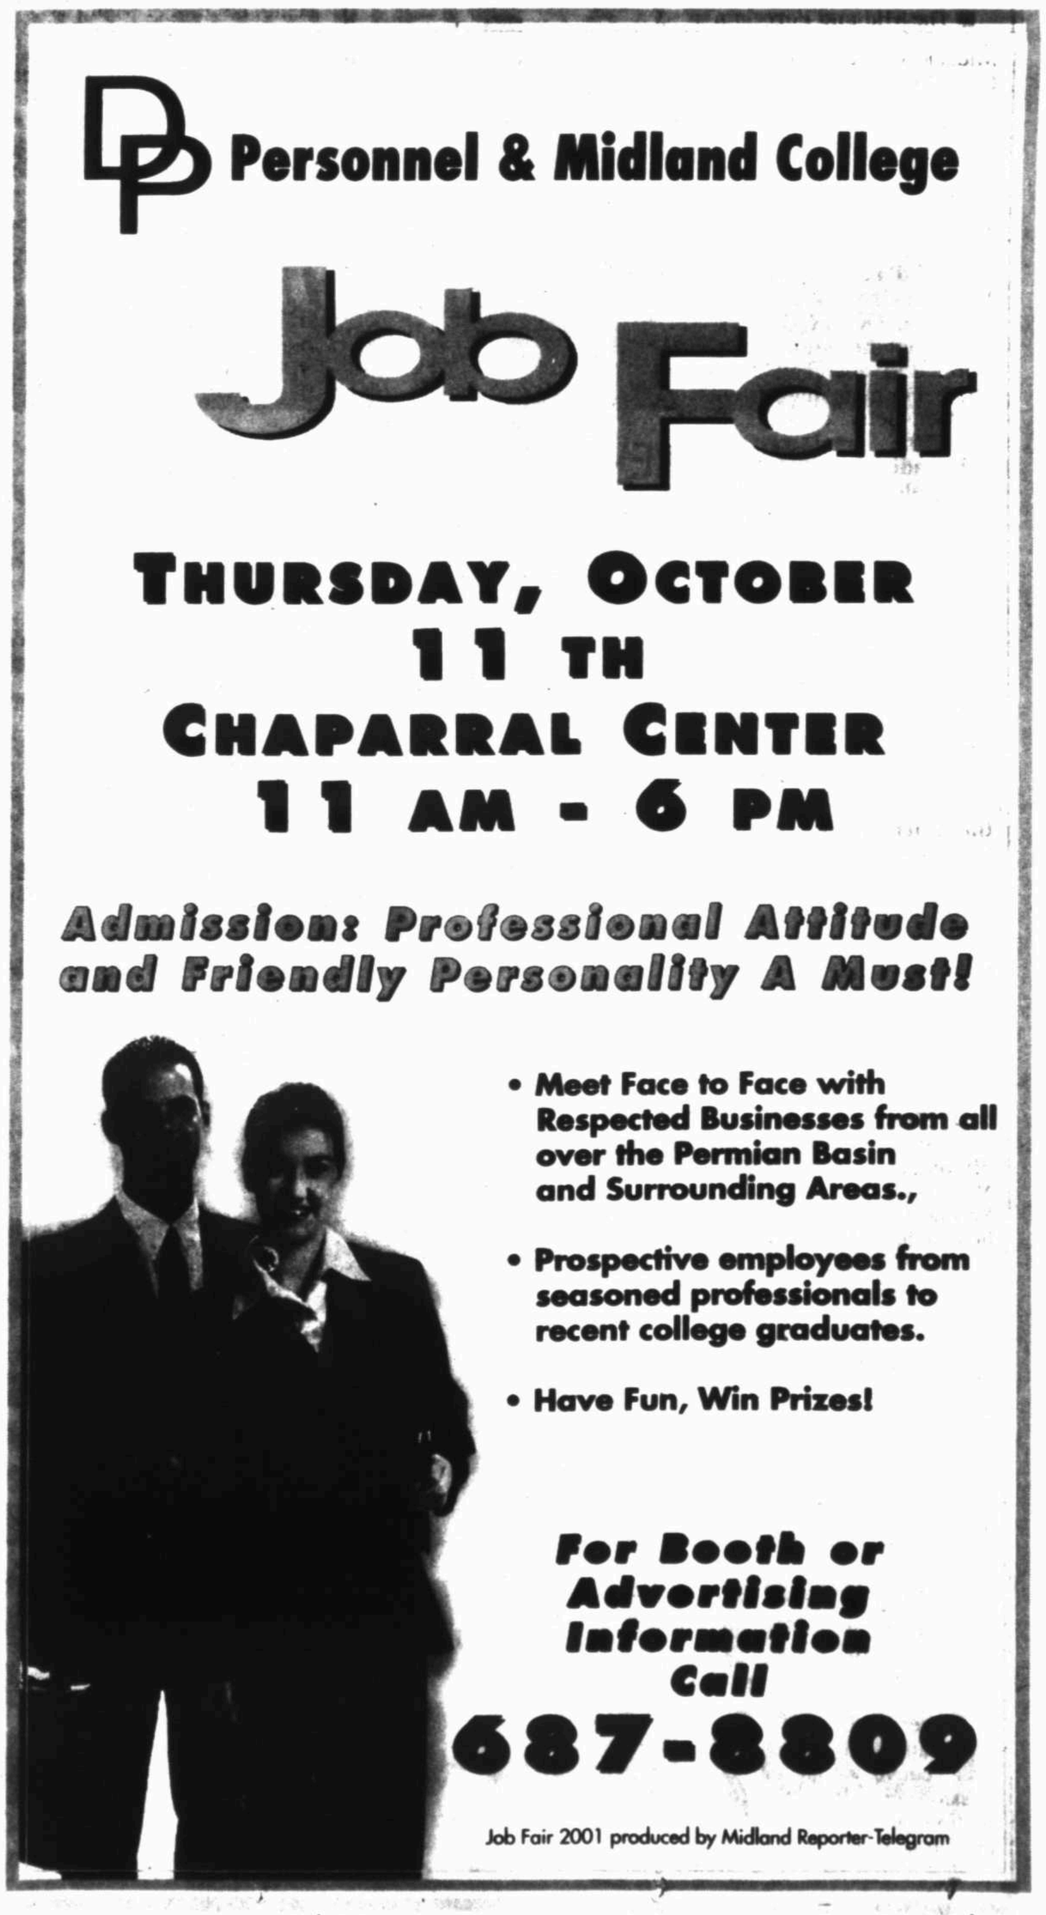

This was not an easy column to write, as like most of us I have been glued to the TV since Sept. 11, and the news has not been about any of the subjects above. Somehow I felt I had to interweave what we still need even in the light of the new happenings. May God bless all of you and God bless America.

Bulldogs out to avenge loss to Monterey

By Lee Passmore
Sports Writer

For the first time this season, the Midland High football team has to deal with the baggage of a loss from the previous week in preparing for a game.

The Bulldogs saw the perfect beginning to their season come to an end last week at Lubbock Monterey, and tonight they'll try to right the ship when they host another Lubbock school, Lubbock Coronado, at 7:30 p.m. at Memorial Stadium.

This would be an appropriate week for the Bulldogs to show improvement, not only because they're coming off a 24-14 loss to Monterey, but since this is also Homecoming. The combination of those factors should be motivation enough for the 2-1 Bulldogs according to MHS coach David Browning.

"You correct the mistakes from the week before and get the kids focused up," said Browning of this week's practice regimen. "That's probably easier to do after a loss."

The young Bulldogs were flying high after a 2-0 start with wins over Irving Nimitz and San Angelo Central. They may or may not have needed to come down to earth, but the loss to Monterey certainly provided some perspective.

Rebels, Cougars meet in El Paso

EL PASO — After a no contest win against a team from Mexico and an open date, the three-time defending state champion Midland Lee Rebels are ready to rejoin the West Texas football fray tonight.

LEE
Midland Lee at El Paso Franklin

The Rebels travel to El Paso for an 8:30 p.m. contest against the Franklin Cougars today, hoping some major cobwebs don't make the trip. The game is being held at Bowie High School since the Cougars' home field will be hosting El Paso Coronado and Odessa High tonight.

After all, it seems like Lee has been idle for three weeks since a loss to Longview. Lee's 63-0 win over Tamaulipas of Tampico, Mex., was almost like an over-matched regular season scrimmage, pawned off as a regular season game.

Lee and Franklin are no strangers. Lee has beaten the Cougars foå°V4Äúõ37ò£‡the last two years, but the Cougars haven't always been a pushover for Lee. The Rebels fell to Franklin by a 21-14 mar-

'Dogs, Rebels own series against tonight's opponents

Walking again through the land of District 4-5A football.

Homecoming Omen: Midland High has a 5-3 advantage in its football series with Lubbock Coronado, but the best news is that the Bulldogs have never lost to the Mustangs when playing at home. MHS is 3-0 vs. Coronado at Memorial Stadium. Coronado has won three games in a row since losing 23-0 to Cooper to open the season.

Williamson

The Other Omen: Midland Lee is 46-3-1 in games against El Paso teams, but the three losses and the lone tie were all in games played in El Paso. Lee faces Franklin tonight and the Rebels lost to the Cougars, 21-14, in 1997, of course, in El Paso. Franklin has dropped four games to Lee in the past two years, but are 16-4 in other games over that span of time.

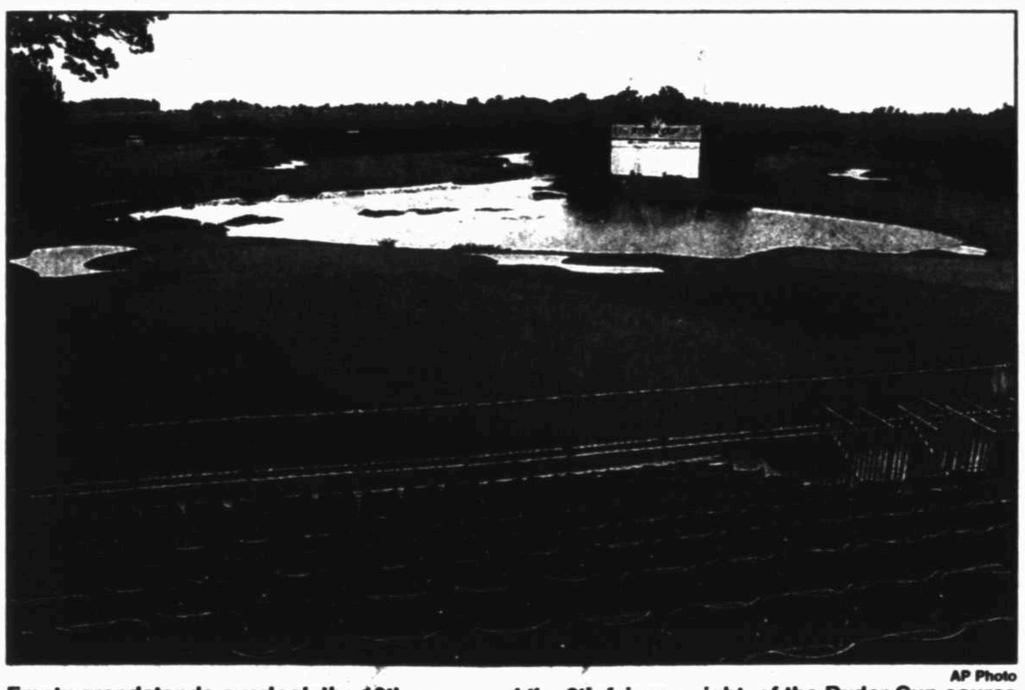

Where's the Stadium: The Lee-Franklin game is being played at Bowie High School's stadium tonight. Franklin and Coronado share a stadium and Coronado is hosting Odessa High, getting the home field. Lee fans will have to make a border run to see this one.

Cooper's Pace: Abilene Cooper has the longest current streak among 4-5A teams of making the state playoffs at nine. However, during that span, Cooper has gone undefeated only once in non-conference play. That came in 1994 when Cooper was 3-0 in non-conference games. Cooper is now 4-0 and needs a win over lowly Amarillo Tascosa tonight to finish perfect in the non-conference run.

More Streaks: Abilene High has won only 14 of 40 games with San Angelo Central since 1961, but the Eagles have won six in a row over the Bobcats. AHS had an eight-game winning streak over San Angelo from 1951 to 1958.

Pendergrass Goes Home: Midland Lee quarterback/punter/kicker Fletcher Pendergrass is going home tonight. He played at El Paso Franklin as a freshman

SUTTON COLDFIELD, England — Eerie silence from the bleachers greeted the players as they walked onto the 18th green at The Belfry.

Instead of Tiger Woods and Colin Montgomerie, two recreational golfers carrying their own bags prepared to putt before 2,000 empty seats.

The Ryder Cup had been scheduled to start Friday. Instead, it has been postponed for a year by acts of terrorism 3,000 miles away, and the deserted stands and hospitality tents reflect the gloom.

While workers prepared to dismantle the stands and tents, the Brabazon course where the cup was to have been contested opened for business on Wednesday, giving some of the 480 season members a surprise chance to play.

"I had tickets to come on Friday to watch the Ryder Cup and never expected to be playing," said Bob Woodley, a financial consultant from nearby Lichfield. "We heard on Tuesday that the course would be open again and didn't want to miss this opportunity.

"I've played here many times but never with all these stands. They look really weird with no one sitting in them."

Greenskeepers, cup organizers and staff at the nearby De Vere Belfry hotel had been working around the clock to prepare for the 34th edition of the biennial event between the United States and Europe, a competition that has become one of golf's top events.

Woods, David Duval, David Toms and the rest of Curtis Strange's U.S. team were supposed to come to this course in central England to defend the title the Americans won so dramatically at Brookline, Mass., two years ago.

NASCAR changes rules after another torn seat belt case

By Jenna Fryer
AP Sports Writer

Reacting to the discovery of a partially torn seat belt in Jeremy Mayfield's car, NASCAR announced new rules Thursday regarding the placement of belts and manufacturer labels.

The changes were recommended by Dr. James Raddin and Dr. John Melvin, two experts NASCAR commissioned to investigate the death of Dale Earnhardt and conduct an additional study on occupant-restraint systems.

NASCAR sent them Mayfield's belt after it was found to be partially torn following an accident in Dover, Del., on Sunday.

Effective immediately, manufacturer labels cannot be located under the adjusting mechanism when the driver is buckled in the seat and has tightened the seat belts and shoulder harness.

If the label is under the adjusting mechanism, the label must be removed or relocated "in a manner that does not affect the integrity of the belt material." The date of manufacture must still remain visible on the belts at all times.

Earnhardt was killed in an accident on the final lap of the Daytona 500 on Feb. 18. An inspection of his car found a broken lap belt and investigators later attributed the break to the phenomenon known as "dumping."

Dumping occurs when the webbing is pulled or moved to one side of the adjustment device through which the belt webbing travels. When a dumped belt is under stress, it can separate and tear across the entire webbing.

Although Mayfield's partial tear is still under investigation, NASCAR believes the belt broke because of dumping.

"In talking with our people it became a common denominator that we wanted to address," said Winston Cup series director Gary Nelson. "We decided to take that out of the equation — that there is no label that is being asked to be 'loaded' by the adjuster."

By moving the manufacturer label out from under the adjuster, there is less material that could be affected or dumped.

"The way the seats belts are manufactured, some of them have the manufacturing date and the manufacturers logo right where the buckle is, right where the driver adjusts it," said Chad Knaus, crew chief for Stacy Compton.

"When that gets up in there, it's easy for the seat belt to actually slip in that buckle. When there's force applied to it, it can actually twist. That's what they're trying to avoid."

Nelson said teams can remove the manufacture labels if they find them located in the adjuster areas, but need permission from a NASCAR official before removing a date off the manufacture label if it is also in an adjuster.

NASCAR requires the manufacture dates to be visible on belts at all time to assure the belts are not too old to be used.

The modifications, distributed to all teams as a technical bulletin before the Thursday test sessions

Cowboys having tough time stopping teams on third down

By Stephen Hawkins
AP Sports Writer

IRVING — For the Dallas Cowboys, it never seems as easy as 1-2-3. They're having a hard time stopping teams on third downs.

"It's something we have to get better at and we're going to be working at," said coach Dave Campo. "I feel if we can get third downs more manageable, to where we start getting into the 30 percent, 28 percent range, then we'll have a chance to play pretty good defense."

Right now, the Cowboys aren't even close to what Campo considers an acceptable range.

In their first two games, the Cowboys allowed Tampa Bay and San Diego to convert more than half of their third-down conversions — 17-of-33. Dallas lost both games.

The problem was evident on San Diego's first two possessions Sunday, when the Chargers took a 14-0 lead and went on to beat

Hurricanes pound Pittsburgh, 43-21

Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — Clinton Portis scored on three short runs set up by Ken Dorsey's precision passing and No. 1 Miami, showing no rust from a nearly three-week layoff, came out with its accustomed first-quarter flurry to beat Pittsburgh 43-21 Thursday night.

Miami's second trip to Pennsylvania in less than a month ended just as its first, when an overwhelmed Penn State couldn't keep up with the Hurricanes' speed and size in a 33-7 victory Sept. 1.

This victory — Miami's 12th in its last 13 meetings with Pittsburgh — came just as fast and just as furious during a 20-point first quarter, with Portis scoring twice and Dorsey throwing an 18-yard TD pass to Andre Johnson on a fade pattern one play after a Pitt fumble.

Portis, constantly eluding defenders with his cutback running, ran for a career-high 131 yards on 24 carries, with two touchdown runs of 1 yard and another of 4 yards. Dorsey failed to throw for 300 yards for the first time in three games and missed a few open receivers, but still was 18-of-32 for 208 yards and a touchdown.

Miami led 43-7 in the fourth quarter before Pitt backup quarterback Rod Rutherford, who accounted for all three Panthers scores, threw for a touchdown and ran for another in the closing minutes.

Pittsburgh (1-2, 0-1 Big East) actually led for a brief few minutes, something it didn't do in its 35-26 upset loss to South Florida on Sept. 8, the last day either Miami (3-0, 2-0) or Pitt played before Thursday.

Portis had scored from the 4 with 2:14 gone as Miami needed just seven plays to drive 62 yards on its opening drive, started by Dorsey's 23-yard swing pass to Najeh Davenport and highlighted by Portis' 22-yard run to the 6.

Dorsey then had completions of 11, 16 and 15 yards during a 62-yard, 13-play drive, including an 11-yard throw to Portis on a third-and-9, to set up Portis' 1-yard scoring run that made it 13-7.

From that point, the rout was on as Pittsburgh stayed winless for the last half-century against No. 1 teams. The Panthers are 0-10-1 against top-ranked teams since 1950, tying Army 14-14 in 1958. Miami also beat Pitt as a No. 1 team in 1986, winning 37-10 in Pittsburgh.

LEE: Kendrick only player to miss game

gin in 1997.

According to Lee coach John Parchman, the long wait between games hasn't been a big factor.

"Actually, the time has passed rather quickly," Parchman says. "I think we have done some things that were fun and some things that has drawn the team closer together. I really think we will be a better football team this Friday."

Franklin comes into the game with a perfect 2-0 mark, but hasn't really put opponents away, winning against Americas and Bel Air by eight points or less.

"We've scored all our points in the first half this season except for one touchdown in the fourth quarter against Americas," said Franklin coach Tony Grijalva. "We just need to put two halves together and play a complete game. Our defense is definitely ahead of our offense right now."

Parchman also says that the Franklin defense has been solid.

"Their safety (Chris Marrow) is a two-way starter. He had an interception against us last year and he's back. Their two defensive tackles (Luis Camacho, 225 pounds and Austin Davies, 250) are both back and they really run to the ball well," Parchman said. "They are about 50-50 pass and run."

The new threat for Franklin, however, is tailback Josh Quinn, who had 120 yards rushing last week against Bel Air. He also returned an interception for a touchdown, but is not a starter on defense.

As far as Lee is concerned, Grijalva doesn't expect anything different from past Lee teams except the fact that Cedric Benson is missing from the lineup.

"Cedric is gone and I know there are a lot of teams glad to see that," Grijalva said. "But Lee is doing the same things. They are just spreading the ball around a little more to more people.

"We know one thing. They are going to line up and run behind that big tight end Eric Winston. He's a great blocker and we're going to have to do some things in that area."

In Lee's win against Tamaulipas, Parchman used four quarterbacks and they set a Lee record as all four of them threw at least one touchdown pass. Fletcher Pendergrass threw two TD passes.

"We'll probably use three quarterbacks (Cole Sampson, Aaron Timmerman and Pendergrass) in this game," Parchman said. "Nick Hand probably won't play at quarterback in this game. We've been working on some things defensively and Nick has been playing at linebacker, so he hasn't had as many reps as he probably needs."

This is an important game for Pendergrass since he attended Franklin as a freshman.

"I would really like to see Fletcher get some time at quarterback since he went to Franklin," Parchman said. "I know this is a big game for him."

Parchman says that only tailback Jacobe Kendrick will miss this game due to injury. Kendrick was received a leg injury against Stephenville in the first game of the season and hasn't played since.

"Jacobe should be back with us next week," Parchman said. "He may not play next week, but he should be back in workouts. The important thing is to get him back by district play, and that should happen."

Parchman has issued a couple of challenges this year to his offensive line.

"First, we challenged our offensive line to step up this year, obviously, because we don't have Cedric Benson back there," Parchman said. "Then we challenged them again when Jacobe went down and I think they have really come along. We feel pretty good in that area right now."

Grijalva says that playing at Bowie really doesn't make a difference to his team.

"We played at Bowie three years ago, but we share the stadium we use with Coronado and they happen to be at home this week and Bowie was the only site available," Grijalva said. "We looked into trying to play at UTEP, but they have a home game with Tulsa and Tulsa has the Sun Bowl for a workout on Friday night.

"We originally set this game with Lee for a Thursday night, but that presents a lot of problems when you have to travel so far. Since we really don't have a home stadium and have to get on the bus every Friday night, this doesn't make much difference to us."

Notes: Lee will have consecutive home games after this road trip against El Paso Coronado and Odessa High to open District 4-5A play, but the Rebels still have two trips to Abilene to look forward to... Tonight's game can be heard on KCRS (550 AM) radio at 8:30 p.m. (CDT)... The Bowie stadium is on Border Highway, near downtown El Paso...

gaining Midland High by almost a 2-1 margin. The Bulldogs didn't get untracked offensively until late in the game either, picking up only nine first downs and scoring their only offensive touchdown in the fourth quarter.

Browning thinks that improved efficiency by his offense will help out the defense tremendously.

"We need to convert our third downs better so we can keep our defense off the field longer," said Browning. "You've got to credit Monterey for having good schemes against our defense, though."

Whatever Monterey did against the Bulldogs obviously worked, since the Plainsmen rolled up 310 yards on the ground, almost what MHS gave up to Nimitz and Central combined. While linebackers Casey Zachry and James Smith had solid games, combining for 32 tackles, it wasn't a great night for the rest of the defense, as according to statistics kept by the MHS staff, the Bulldog defenders missed a total of 25 tackles.

"That's pretty much unheard of around here," said Browning. "Our guys need to use that as a self-motivating factor."

Monterey figured to be a major test for the Bulldogs since the Plainsmen went 11-2 last season and figure to make the playoffs again this season. But Coronado should also provide a formidable challenge for Midland High.

Coronado, a District 3-5A school like Monterey, went 2-8 under veteran coach Butch Henderson last season and started this season by losing to Midland High's fellow District 4-5A team Abilene Cooper 23-0. Since then, though, Coronado has won three straight games, and doesn't figure to be a pushover for many teams.

"I think there's no question they're a lot better than they were a year ago," said Browning. "They've already won more games than they did all last year."

Midland High played Coronado last season and won certainly one of the more defensive-oriented contests in school history. James Gripp kicked a 44-yard field goal in the third quarter for all the scoring in a 3-0 MHS win.

The two teams combined for only 320 yards of offense and punted 17 times between them, including 10 for Coronado. Browning isn't predicting a game as low-scoring this year, but expects it to be every bit as hard-fought.

"Coach Henderson's been there a long time and I just look at it as we're going up against a good program," said Browning. "They're very aggressive defensively and they've diversified much more offensively. In the past if you stopped the run, you stopped them."

Offensively, the Mustangs aren't that predictable, even to the point of not letting the defense know who their quarterback is until the next play.

Junior Brian Keefner and senior Brandt Stravlo alternate at quarterback, sometimes on each play during a series. Both have been effective, although Keefner might be a slightly better passer. Stravlo doesn't get as many reps since he is also the starting middle linebacker and needs a breather now and again.

Henderson thinks that's as good an example as any of why his team has shown so much improvement.

"We have a group of young men who have a great deal of chemistry and really play hard for each other," said Henderson.

The Mustangs might actually be stronger throwing the ball this season than running it. Shaun Scott-Jones has been a big play receiver with 15 catches for 349 yards and three scores. Ben Bratcher leads the ground attack with 218 yards on 54 carries.

Midland High tailback T.J. Barber, who had 148 yards and three touchdowns in the win over Central, is suffering from turf toe, but should still play. The good news offensively for the Bulldogs against Monterey was the performance of Zack Sledge, who had eight catches for 105 yards.

"If you look at Midland's ability to move the ball they are one of the more efficient teams in the area," said Henderson. "We're going to have to play well defensively to stay with them."

The Bulldogs are playing their third straight game in a string of four against 3-5A opponents. Browning thinks all four of those teams have at least one thing in common.

"When you're playing that kind of schedule you're going to have physical games," said Browning. "That's what we're going to face in district."

Martin to miss four weeks with broken collarbone

Associated Press

FLOWERY BRANCH, Ga. — Atlanta Falcons receiver Tony Martin learned Thursday he will be sidelined for almost a month with a broken right collarbone.

The 12-year veteran was injured in last week's 24-16 victory over Carolina, and had still insisted as late as Wednesday that he would play at Arizona on Sunday.

Martin, who leads the Falcons with six catches, was hurt when his shoulder slammed against the knee of a Panthers defender. He said the injury occurred on the third play of the game, nearly six minutes before he caught a 12-yard touchdown pass from Chris Chandler that gave Atlanta a 7-0 lead. Martin played the rest of the game.

During his first stint with the Falcons in 1998, Martin caught a team-high 66 passes for 1,181 yards. His 17.9 yards per catch established a career high. Martin, who spent the last two seasons in Miami, returned to Atlanta after signing a one-year contract on June 20.

Texas' McClintock not ready for game action

AUSTIN — Texas defensive end O.J. McClintock won't play in the fifth-ranked Longhorns' game Saturday against Texas Tech because of a lingering injury to his left big toe.

"O.J. has been struggling with a recurring turf toe injury he originally suffered during preseason workouts," said Tom McVan, the team's trainer. "He has tried to practice on it, but he just hasn't been able to move the way he needs to and continues to re-aggravate the injury."

McVan said McClintock will be evaluated again next week.

McClintock missed preseason workouts and the first two games after suffering a serious cut on his left forearm in an off-field accident. He returned to practice before last week's game at Houston but has been limited this week because of the recurring turf toe.

Marichal wants to sponsor Almonte

SANTO DOMINGO, Dominican Republic — Hall of Famer Juan Marichal hopes to help develop Little League pitcher Danny Almonte, whose team was stripped of its third-place World Series finish after officials determined his family lied about his age.

Almonte made headlines last month when Dominican officials confirmed suspicions that the star pitcher was too old for New York's Rolando Paulino team. Almonte's family and team said he was 12, but Dominican officials said he was actually 14.

Marichal, who became vice president of the Dominican league team Pollos del Cibao on Wednesday, said he would like the team to sponsor Almonte — covering the costs for his meals and schooling and providing baseball coaching — without requiring anything of the Almonte family.

"Danny is a boy that needs protection," Marichal said. "We're disposed to bringing him home and taking care of all his needs and expenses."

Almonte's Bronx team was banned from Little League and Almonte's perfect game — the first in 44 years of the tournament — was erased. His father faces charges in the Dominican Republic of filing a false birth certificate to make his son appear younger. The boy is now attending school in New York, where his father brought him last year.

Marichal's team is located in the north-central city of San Francisco de Macoris, about 25 miles from the home of Almonte's mother in Moca.

Marichal pitched in the majors for 16 seasons, mostly with the San Francisco Giants. He was inducted into the Hall of Fame him in 1983.

Police investigate alleged threat against McLemore

ARLINGTON — Police are investigating an alleged threat made to the Seattle Mariners' Mark McLemore during a game at The Ballpark in Arlington.

The former Texas Rangers infielder, playing center field, claims several spectators in the bleachers Tuesday night shouted that they'd "blow up" his home in the Fort Worth suburb of Southlake.

McLemore said he was troubled that the spectators knew his address. He alerted umpires during the eighth inning of Seattle's 13-2 victory over the Rangers, and two spectators were removed from the stadium.

Ballpark security alerted Arlington police, who filed a terroristic threat report.

Sgt. James Hawthorne said police planned to speak with McLemore about the incident and with two fans who were involved.

"At this point, it's going to follow the normal investigative process," Hawthorne said Thursday. "We'll make decisions down the road as to the legitimacy of the events as they may have occurred."

Seattle manager Lou Piniella removed McLemore from the game after the eighth inning. Major league baseball security escorted him home and searched his property, but found nothing unusual.

Mariners spokesman Jason Carr said the team had no comment on the matter.

"I don't take that stuff lightly," McLemore told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram. "I've played for 15 years, and I'm used to heckling. But that wasn't about baseball. That was about my family, and they're the most important thing to me."

Kim pursues fourth LPGA Tour victory

Associated Press

MOBILE, Ala. — Mi Hyun Kim, seeking her fourth LPGA Tour victory, shot a 7-under-par 65 Thursday to take a two-stroke lead after the first round of the AFLAC Champions.

"I was able to go for a lot of birdies," the South Korean player said through an interpreter. "I had birdie chances on every hole. I hit all 18 greens."

Dottie Pepper was second after a 67. Pepper, who lost on the first hole of a playoff with Australia's Karrie Webb last year, bogeyed the final hole on Magnolia Grove's Crossings Course.

The elite 40-player field is made up of tournament winners from 1999-01 and active Hall of Famers. Annika Sorenstam, the tour leader with six victories and $1,666,306, is skipping the event.

Webb was four strokes back along with Grace Park, Charlotta Sorenstam and 1998 winner Kelly Robbins. South Korea's Se Ri Pak, making her first start after a five-week break, was another stroke back at 70 along with Emilee Klein, Carin Koch and Rachel Teske.

Kim birdied Nos. 2 and 3, but three-putted from 12 feet for a bogey on the par-5 4th hole. She got right back on track with a birdie at No. 5, and also birdied Nos. 8, 11, 14, 15 and 17.

"I thought I could actually get a couple more birdies," Kim said. "I had three 3-foot birdie chances that just missed. This is a tough course."

Pepper took the early lead with six birdies, including one at the par-3 8th when she holed a bunker shot. She was 6 under through 17 before a drive in the edge of the rough led to a bogey on the finishing hole.

"I was a smidge in the rough and I was between clubs," Pepper said. "I hit it a little thin and actually ended up making a good 5. You have to take advantage of the par-5s out here and I think I did that. I got almost all of them."

Journeyman Dawson leading Texas Open

Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO — With the season running short and facing the prospect of returning to qualifying school yet again, Marco Dawson shot a 7-under-par 64 Thursday to grab the first-round lead at the Texas Open.

Dawson, who has fought back from surgery last year to repair a ruptured disc in his back, had a bogey-free round at the La Cantera Golf Club.

Defending champion Justin Leonard and Jay Williamson were a shot off the lead, while Scott McCarron, Carl Paulson, Bob Burns and Brandel Chamblee were at 5-under.

Even with the Ryder Cup matches postponed until next year, the tournament drew just a handful of the game's biggest names and only three Ryder Cup players: Sweden's Jesper Parnevik and Americans David Toms and Hal Sutton.

The Texas Open is typically a late-season stop for players vying for position on the money list, a scenario Leonard and Dawson know well.

"I was there seven years ago," Leonard said of his 15th place finish here in 1994 that earned him a money-list exemption for the next year. "I know exactly what those guys are going through."

Guys like Dawson.

Dawson was given a medical extension for the tour this year after his surgery in May 2000. The extension required him to earn $346,785 in his first 20 tournaments this year.

Through 14 events this season, he's about $200,000 short. His best finish was a tie for 16th at the Shell Houston Open in April.

Dawson turned pro in 1986. He's never won on the PGA Tour and had to go through qualifying school in '91, '92 and '94.

"I've been there too many times," he said.

But it was the back injury that discouraged him the most.

"I couldn't walk. I couldn't sit down. All I could do was lie down," before he finally decided to have surgery, Dawson said.

He didn't stay down long. He was on his feet a day after the operation and walking around the golf course within 72 hours.

"From that point on, I was working to get back out here," Dawson said.

Walking the hills and valleys of the 7,001-yard La Cantera course didn't bother him Thursday. Starting on the front nine, Dawson did the most damage in the middle of his round, with birdies on Nos. 8, 9, 10 in his best round of the year.

"I drove the ball well today and putted well. That's pretty much what it comes down to every week," Dawson said.

A Dallas native and former player at the University of Texas, Leonard enjoyed the biggest gallery of the day. He made the turn in 4-under. He followed a bogey on No. 11 with a 25-foot eagle putt on the 490-yard par-5 14th to challenge for the lead.

"It probably helped that I played in the afternoon. I had some scores to shoot for," said Leonard, who held a share of the first-round lead last year before cruising to a five-shot victory.

"All that defending champion stuff, that's Tuesday and Wednesday," Leonard said. "I got into the round today and just basically left last year's tournament behind."

Drexler takes front office job with Nuggets

Associated Press

DENVER — Former NBA great Clyde Drexler will join the Denver Nuggets as an aide to general manager Kiki Vandeweghe.

The team also announced Thursday that former Utah Jazz scouting director and assistant coach David Fredman and former Los Angeles Clippers director of player personnel Jeff Weltman would be assistant general managers.

Former Dallas Mavericks, New York Knicks and Phoenix Suns head coach John MacLeod will be a basketball consultant, the team said.

Team officials said Drexler will perform various front office duties and help with player development.

Drexler and Vandeweghe were teammates on the Portland Trail Blazers from 1984 to 1989.

"He wants to get back around basketball, and he has a lot to share," Vandeweghe said. "For a long time, I've been an admirer of his work ethic and how he comes to play."

Drexler was the coach at the University of Houston from 1998 to 2000 but has no previous coaching or front office experience in the NBA. He retired from the league in 1998.

Fredman, 48, who was with the Jazz before the team moved from New Orleans to Salt Lake City in 1980, helped lead the franchise to the playoffs 18 straight seasons.

Weltman, 36, started as video coordinator for the Clippers in 1988 and quickly moved into the front office.

MacLeod, a special assistant coach for the Suns since 1999, also coached Notre Dame from 1991 to 1999, compiling a 112-126 record.

'BOYS: Dallas ranked 28th in defense

the Cowboys 32-21.

After Dallas fumbled at the 38 on the second play of the game, the Chargers were initially held without a first down and kicked a field goal. But a defensive holding call during the kick provided a first down.

The Chargers took the three points off the board, and on third-and-6, Doug Flutie hit Tim Dwight for 10 yards and first down to the 11. After two incompletions, Flutie threw an 11-yard TD pass to Freddie Jones on third-and-10.

San Diego got the ball back after a punt. On third-and-8 from the Dallas 19, Flutie had an 11-yard completion and a couple of plays later his 7-yard TD pass to Curtis Conway came on third-and-goal.

"We were playing good on first and second down. Third down was real bad for one reason or another," said defensive tackle Brandon Noble.

"We weren't getting a whole lot of pressure," he said. "When we were just rushing four guys, I think everybody was worried about him scrambling. I don't know."

The Cowboys better figure something out soon. Next up is Philadelphia and Donovan McNabb, a quarterback more mobile than Flutie.

San Diego converted 9-of-18 third downs and was on the field for 38 minutes.

"When you're on the field that long, it's your own fault because you're not getting out on third down," Noble said. "There is no reason to point fingers. We've just got to play better."

Safety George Teague said there is a simple explanation: not making plays when they're needed.

"It's pretty simple. There's no hidden agendas or anything like that," Teague said. "We've just got to figure out how to make a play. We're not getting caught in a lot of third-and-1s or third-and-2s. That's good."

Extra points: The Cowboys offense has converted just 5-of-20 third downs (25 percent). ... Rookie QB Quincy Carter may not be healthy enough to start for the Cowboys, but he was on the scout team Thursday trying to emulate some of the scrambling moves the Cowboys expect to see from McNabb this weekend. ... Carter is hampered for a thumb injury on his throwing hand. ... The Cowboys are ranked 28th in the NFL in total defense (371.5 ypg).

CUP: Businesses not going to recoup losses

gles matches, 8 1/2-2 1/2, and recapture the title by one point. But the Americans riled the Europeans by running across the 17th green to celebrate Justin Leonard's 45-foot putt, with Jose Maria Olazabal still waiting to play his shot.

Fired up by that acrimonious ending, Europe was determined to regain the trophy it last won at Valderrama, Spain, in 1997. Captain Sam Torrance's team included Montgomerie, Sergio Garcia, Jesper Parnevik, Lee Westwood and Darren Clarke.

The scoreboards and bleachers were in place. Huge white tents were awaiting merchandise as well as tons of food and gallons of drinks.

Then terrorists struck on Sept. 11, killing thousands in New York and Washington. The Ryder Cup, like many sports events, was put on hold.

The same 24 players, led by the same two captains, are back on their regular tours and are now due to face each other at the Belfry on Sept. 27-29, 2002.

But the hotels that had been fully booked for months now have scores of empty rooms, and this part of central England estimates it has lost $24 million in revenue.

Some 30,000 spectators a day were expected to visit the Belfry, not just on the three days of the match but in the three days leading up to it.

Hotels in central Birmingham, 10 miles away, have slashed the cost of rooms to try to make up for the losses.

"Ryder Cup business was booked a couple of years ago and we are not going to recoup those losses fully," said Clifford Grauers, managing director of the Hyatt Regency, where the cost of a double room has been cut from $238 to $140.

Five finalists picked for Golden Spikes

Associated Press

TUCSON, Ariz. — Mark Prior, the Southern California right-hander taken by the Chicago Cubs with the second pick in June's amateur draft, was among five players selected as finalists Thursday for the Golden Spikes Award.

Middle Tennessee State right-hander Dewon Brazelton, Tennessee shortstop Chris Burke, Florida State outfielder John Ford-Griffin and Kent State outfielder John Vanbenschoten also were picked as finalists for the award, presented annually by the U.S. Baseball Federation to the top amateur player in the United States.

All five were taken on the first round of the draft. Brazelton (13-2, 1.42 ERA) went to Tampa Bay on the third pick, Vanbenschoten (.440, NCAA-leading 31 homers, 84 RBIs) to Pittsburgh on the eighth pick, Burke (.435, 49 steals) to Houston on the 10th pick and Ford-Griffin (.450, 19 homers, 75 RBIs) to the New York Yankees on the 23rd pick.

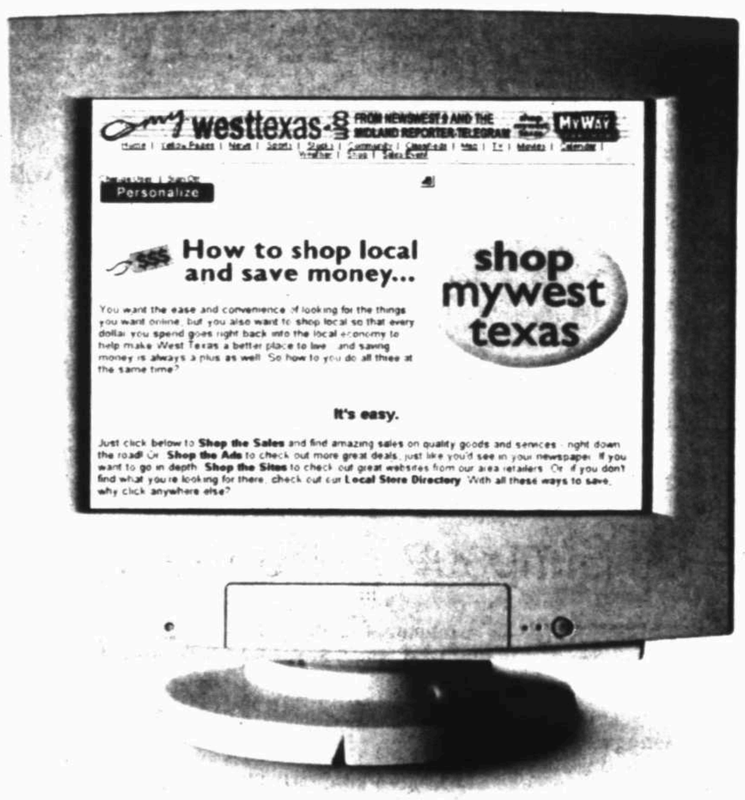

Prior was 15-1 with a 1.69 ERA.

The winner will be announced in December.

A-Rod has MVP-like stats in first year of contract

Associated Press

ARLINGTON — Alex Rodriguez won't be the AL MVP, even though the Texas shortstop has put up the kind of numbers worthy of the award.

The Rangers have spent the entire season in last place, thus eliminating Rodriguez from realistic consideration of the being the league's MVP.

Rodriguez leads the AL with 49 homers — breaking Hall of Famer Ernie Banks' 43-year record for homers by a shortstop — and ranks third with 130 RBIs, just two short of his career high and trailing only Juan Gonzalez (140) and Bret Boone (135). His .322 average is seventh in the league.

"That's what I expected from him. That's the kind of player he's been in baseball," said teammate Rafael Palmeiro, who has 45 homers this season. "I didn't expect anything less than what he's done. He's gone out and played everyday and been productive. He's all that's been advertised."

While the Rangers had hopes of being better as a team when they signed Rodriguez to a record $252 million, 10-year contract last December, the 26-year-old shortstop hasn't disappointed.

Rodriguez is the only Rangers player to start all 153 games, all but one of them at shortstop and the other as designated hitter. He was an All-Star again, has his fourth straight 40-homer season and is just seven hits shy of another 200-hit season.

With those numbers, it's easy to ignore the career-high 124 strikeouts and 17 errors — nine of which came in the first 52 games.

"He's having the best season of any shortstop in the history of the game," said Rangers manager Jerry Narron. "I don't think there's any player that's done more for his team."

The Rangers, whose 39-game deficit behind AL West champion Seattle is the largest in team history, struggled from the start.

They have been in last place since the first month of the season, then went underwent a managerial change when Johnny Oates resigned under pressure after an 11-17 start.

The team with the most expensive player in baseball went into a rebuilding mode. A commitment was made to give younger players, like rookie second baseman Michael Young and several pitchers, extended opportunities.

Rodriguez never complained publicly.

Instead, he continued being productive on the field. And he made himself more available to younger players that could be his teammates for years to come.

"He's really stressed to the younger guys how to play a team game. He's gotten guys aware of any little thing that can give you an edge," Narron said. "The thing that really set him apart from other players is the way he's tried to get other guys involved, tried to get other players better ... and put our club in a position where we can win in the future."

And A-Rod keeps saying the right things.

"We're going to win here, I'm extremely confident of that," Rodriguez said. "We have an incredible core, we have a great manager at the helm. We're going to win. it's just a matter of time."

When he broke Banks' home run record of 47, Rodriguez deflected the praise and called the record a team accomplishment.

Palmeiro is impressed with how Rodriguez has handled himself, especially with the younger players.

"It surprised me a little bit that he was more of a teacher to them," Palmeiro said. "At the same time, when you have a player that's got a 10-year contract, and you know you are going to be here that long, you want to make sure that these guys start off on the right foot."

Castilla homers as Astros defeat division rival Cubs

Associated Press

CHICAGO — Sammy Sosa carried a small American flag as he rounded the bases following his 59th home run but he wasn't enough to carry the fading Chicago Cubs, who lost to the Houston Astros 6-5 Thursday night.

In the first game at Wrigley Field since the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks, Shane Reynolds improved to 5-0 against the Cubs this season and Vinny Castilla hit a three-run homer for the first-place Astros.

Houston increased its lead in the NL Central to four games over idle St. Louis and to nine games over the third-place Cubs. Chicago has lost five of six and dropped five games behind the Cardinals in the wild card race with nine games left — all at Wrigley.

After Sosa homered to right in the first, he stopped after crossing the first base bag and took a flag from first base coach Billy Williams. Sosa waved the flag as he circled the bases, after he crossed the plate and again after coming out of the dugout for a curtain call.

Sosa also carried a flag out to right field when he made his customary pregame dash to his position to salute the bleacher fans.

Sosa also hit into a fielder's choice and then had three straight singles, the third off Billy Wagner with one out in the ninth. Wagner then got Fred McGriff to hit into a game-ending double play for his 38th save in 40 chances.

In the sixth, Richard Hidalgo singled, Orlando Merced walked and Castilla hit his 23rd homer for a 6-2 lead against Kevin Tapani (9-14).

Rondell White walked to finish Jackson and Michael Tucker singled off Mike Williams with no outs. A sacrifice moved the runners up and pinch-hitter Roosevelt Brown hit an RBI grounder to make it 6-5. Pinch-hitter Matt Stairs walked before Octavio Dotel fanned Eric Young to end the inning.

Tapani, 1-13 in his last 19 starts, gave up six runs and seven hits in six innings.

Reynolds (13-10) improved to 9-0 in his last 10 starts against the Cubs and tied the franchise record for most wins against an opponent in one season.

He gave up two runs and four hits in 6 1-3 innings, and also hit a two-run single in the second after Tapani intentionally walked Eusebio to load the bases.

Chicago tied it at 2-2 on White's two-out, RBI bloop single in the third.

Rice will try to stop Hawaii's quarterback

HONOLULU — Rice knows the key to beating Hawaii on Saturday: Slow down the Warriors' run-and-shoot attack led by quarterback Timmy Chang.

Chang leads the nation in total offense with 348 yards. He has thrown for 738 yards and four touchdowns in two games this season.

"There's no doubt we've got a short time to try to get adjusted to what Hawaii does and they do it so well," said Rice coach Ken Hatfield. "They do it as well as anybody in the country, so it's going to be a real challenge for our defensive players and our coaches."

The Owls (2-1, 0-0 Western Athletic Conference) successfully stopped Chang last season when he was a freshman, forcing him into five interceptions, including three that were picked off by linebacker Dan Dawson.

"Last year, they bumped us a lot," said Warriors receiver and captain Craig Stutzmann. "They were physical. We expect to see the same thing."

Rice ran for 315 yards last year and beat the Warriors 38-13 in Houston.

But the Owls are facing a stronger and improved Chang, who has beefed up by 15 pounds and gained a year of experience.

"Chang has just been throwing the ball and doing everything that I think June (Jones) would like for him to do," Hatfield said. "He's just been such an explosive guy that you got to be ready each and every play."

Chang's main targets are Stutzmann, Justin Colbert and Ashley Lelie. Lelie leads the trio with 16 catches for 256 yards.

"We have big play receivers and we've got to be on our 'A game,'" Stutzmann said.

Hawaii and Rice are spending more time this week on defense in preparation for Saturday's game.

The Warriors (1-1, 0-1) are working on slowing down the Owls' spread option offense after giving up 220 rushing yards in last week's loss to Nevada.

Coach Jones said Rice has been showing different offensive looks this season compared with last year's wishbone attack, which caused havoc on the Warriors' defense.

"If I'm them right now, I'd probably jump right back in the wishbone and start running it," he said.

Jones said his team hasn't been getting the job done stopping the run in its first two games, giving up an average of 192.5 yards.

"And now we got a team that's one of the better teams in the country running the football, so we better bone up and do it right," he said.

Rice is ranked 15th in nation in rushing, averaging 234.7 yards per contest.

The Owls used two quarterbacks in their 48-3 loss to fourth-ranked Nebraska. Greg Henderson was 5-for-13 for 108 yards and two interceptions. He relieved starter Kyle Herm, a Stanton product, who was 3-for-12 for 61 yards.

Herm leads the team in rushing with 173 yards.

Kournikova ousted from Cup

Associated Press

LEIPZIG, Germany — Anna Kournikova had a setback in her slow comeback from a foot injury when she lost Thursday night to Russian compatriot Anastasia Myskina in the $565,000 Sparkassen Cup.

Myskina, a "lucky loser" who lost in the qualifying round but got into the main draw after the withdrawal of Serena Williams and several other high-ranked players, won 6-4, 3-6, 6-3 to reach the quarterfinals.

Defending champion Kim Clijsters of Belgium cruised into the quarterfinals, but third-seeded Jelena Dokic lost to a qualifier.

Clijsters, the top-seeded player, had no problems dismissing Francesca Schiavona of Italy 6-3, 6-3.

Dokic, a Yugoslav who won the Tokyo tournament last week, was upset 4-6, 7-6 (6), 6-0 by Daniela Hantuchova of Slovakia.

Kournikova has been sidelined most of the year after a stress fracture of her left foot in February. This is only her sixth tournament this year, and she hadn't played since late July.

"I wanted to win but the important thing for me is that I have no problems with my foot in the next few weeks," Kournikova said. "Then I'll be able to play better tennis soon."

In the quarterfinals, Myskina plays Magdalena Maleeva of Bulgaria. Hantuchova faces Elena Dementieva of Russia, and Clijsters battles Slivia Farina Elia of Italy.

WILLAMSON: Pendergrass returns to El Paso

before transferring to Lee. On the Franklin freshman team, Pendergrass split time with Franklin's current quarterback Travis Magden, according to Franklin coach Tony Grijalva.

Last week we were 4-1 in the District 4-5A picking game, bringing the overall mark to 16-7 (.696). Here's how the games go down tonight.

Midland High 20, Lubbock Coronado 13: Last year, the Bulldogs won by a meager 3-0 margin. Expect another tight battle like this tonight. This is, however, Homecoming for MHS and the Bulldogs would like to make up for a loss with a win at home.

Midland Lee 36, El Paso Franklin 7: Lee owns a 6-1 edge in this series and won 44-7 and 45-14 last year in two meetings with the Cougars. But this one is in El Paso and that makes things a little tougher, but not by much.

Lubbock Monterey 28, Odessa Permian 18: Permian has a 9-5 lead in the series, but Monterey won last year by a 31-13 margin. Monterey is a team that Permian won't be able to beat with a fourth quarter blitz.

Odessa High 16, El Paso Coronado 14: This series is tied at 2-2-1 and OHS won last year 21-14. This year OHS is actually the underdog, and just about everyone is advising me to go with Coronado. I've just got this feeling that the Red Hosses will pull out a win.

Abilene High 24, San Angelo Central 10: Central owns a 24-14-2 lead in the series since 1961, but times are bad for the Bobcats right now.

Abilene Cooper 44, Amarillo Tascosa 7: Cooper owns a meager 3-1 lead in the overall series, but the Cougars won 51-0 last year. There won't be much difference this time around.

NASCAR: Mayfield's, Earnhardt's belts made by Simpson Performance Products

at the new Kansas Speedway, are not seen as an answer to why the belts are tearing but as a preventive measure to hopefully stop it from happening again.

"What happened to Jeremey has given us more insight to what needs to be done to make our cars safer," driver Jeff Burton said. "Safety is a big deal to me, so when I am told to do something I do and don't question it. With these new rules, I'll do it because they are trying to learn from what happened to Jeremy."

Mayfield's torn belt differed slightly from Earnhardt's, which was completely separated. Both belts were made by Simpson Performance Products.

Company founder Bill Simpson, who resigned as president this summer citing stress from Earnhardt's death, did not return a call for comment from The Associated Press.

But he told the Orlando Sentinel earlier this week that Mayfield's belt was part of a "dog and pony show" and indicated he was considering suing the sanctioning body.

"They can put on all the dog-and-pony shows they want," Simpson told The Sentinel. "I hope they just keep going with it. It's just more food for the lawsuit.

"It looks to me like they're up to their old games. And that looks like character assassination to that company — I don't even work for them anymore."

Meanwhile, drivers are concerned about Mayfield's torn belt but most are sticking by Simpson products.

Ken Schrader, who went with Simpson to look at Earnhardt's car and belt following the February accident, said he also wanted to see Mayfield's car and belt.

"Obviously, it is very much a concern but until I look at it myself, I'm not going to form an opinion," Schrader said. "I've still got all Simpson products in my vehicles as we speak, and I don't question Bill's products at all."

VH1 schedules concert to benefit victims of trade center attack

LONDON — Paul McCartney, John Mellencamp, Macy Gray and Gwyneth Paltrow are among the stars who will participate in "The Concert for New York," a benefit for those affected by the World Trade Center attacks.

The four-hour concert, scheduled for Oct. 20 at Madison Square Garden, will be broadcast live on VH1 and simulcast on radio stations across the country, VH1 said in a statement. AOL will also provide a live Webcast.

A phone number will be featured so viewers and listeners can make a donation. All the money will go to aid the victims of the attacks and their families, said the network.

Among the performers lined up for the concert include Bon Jovi, the Goo Goo Dolls, India.Arie, The Who, James Taylor, and Melissa Etheridge. Jim Carrey, John Cusack and Jerry Seinfeld have also agreed to participate, the network said.

Organizers also plan to invite 5,000 members of the New York fire, police and rescue crews, as well as their families.

Tickets go on sale Oct. 7.

GENEVA — Angelina Jolie has donated $1 million to the U.N. refugee agency to help Afghan refugees.

Jolie, who is a goodwill ambassador for the U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees, has given the money as part of the agency's appeal for $268 million to meet the humanitarian needs in and around Afghanistan.

"This significant contribution from a concerned young American reinforces my belief that, despite the trauma of recent events in her country, a strong sense of humanitarian responsibility toward innocent civilians suffering in far-off places continues to animate the spirit of caring individuals everywhere," High Commissioner Ruud Lubbers said in a statement Wednesday.

Jolie, 26, went to Pakistan in August to visit some of the more than 3.5 million Afghans living in camps there and in Iran.

With the threat of U.S. retaliation attacks following the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks in New York and Washington, refugee officials are preparing for the arrival of up to 1.5 million more people.

LONDON — Members of Britain's royal family squabbled Thursday after a camera crew that tried to film Prince William at his university turned out to be working for his uncle, Prince Edward.

Royal officials said the filming, which happened just two days after the 19-year-old William arrived at St. Andrews University in Scotland to begin a degree in art history, was "disappointing." His father, Prince Charles, was "incandescent" with anger, the British Broadcasting Corp. said.

William, who is second in line to the British throne, complained to his father after he noticed the camera crew as he emerged from a lecture.

Members of the crew initially said they were free-lancers, but later admitted they were from Ardent Productions — the television company his uncle, Prince Edward, the Earl of Wessex, established in 1993.

Ardent later said in a statement that the film crew worked for the company, but claimed it was not trying to film Prince William, even though the crew was working on a program about royalty. The company also said it had permission to film at the university.

Ardent said Prince William "was completely unaware of the entire incident," despite strenuous denials by royal and university officials. The company also said Prince Edward knew nothing about the incident.

The crew was working on Ardent's current production, "The A to Z of Royalty," which reportedly has been sold to the U.S. cable channel E! Entertainment Television.

MONTREAL — Celine Dion will join other entertainers at a benefit concert Friday for victims of the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks.

Dion stopped performing live on Jan. 1, 2000, to have a child, a boy born a year later.

The 33-year-old singer appeared on last week's TV celebrity telethon, singing "God Bless America." There was no live audience for the show, broadcast live in the United States and Canada, which generated more than $150 million in pledges to benefit families of the World Trade Center and Pentagon attack victims.

British singer Peter Gabriel and Quebec artists Bruno Pelletier, Les Respectables, Offenbach, Luck Merville and Pierre Flynn also were expected to take part in the Montreal show, organizers said, with proceeds going to the American Red Cross.

Earlier this year, Dion announced plans to headline a show at Caesars Palace in Las Vegas beginning in March 2003.

COLUMBIA, S.C. — Olivia Newton-John says she made it through her battle with breast cancer with the help of family and friends and by writing music, which helped give her peace of mind.

"I never thought, 'Why me?'" she said. "I've been exposed to a lot of things. I've spent most of my life traveling, and I've had a very stressful life. That takes a toll, so I think all of that played a part."

Diagnosed with the disease in 1992, Newton-John went through extensive treatment before making a full recovery.

Money from a benefit that the 53-year-old singer attended Tuesday will go to the South Carolina Comprehensive Breast Center of Palmetto Health to help fund education programs, patient and family support, and research.

JACQUELINE BIGAR'S STARS

The Stars Show the Kind of Day You'll Have: 5-Dynamic; 4-Positive; 3-Average; 2-So-so; 1-Difficult

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Friday, Sept. 28, 2001:
You might not know how to handle the unexpected in your life this year, but you will manage. You express unusual creativity and ingenuity. Write down some of your many ideas, even if they first appear senseless. If you are single, you will not be able to complain of boredom. Excitement surrounds your relationships, though you might not be able to stabilize before August. AQUARIUS makes your imagination run wild.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) ★★★★★ After such an enthusiastic few days, you're still gung-ho. Greet work and those in your life in your upbeat and happy style. Meetings and groups point to the right path. Still, as astute as you might be, you could be stunned by another. Tonight: Follow your friends out the door.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) ★★★ Don't make the dangerous assumption that everything is under control. You will find that the unexpected can easily toss the status quo. Deal with an authority figure by using kid gloves. Meanwhile, toy with the idea of going on your own. Tonight: In the limelight.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) ★★★★★ Others often take your flexibility for granted. You might change directions or opt to go in a different direction, but only because you want to. At the moment, you still choose to flex. Let others know your limits; meanwhile, think "weekend." Tonight: Take off ASAP.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) ★★★★★ An associate surprises you one more time. The need to become less financially vulnerable emerges. You can do nothing wrong by declaring that it is time for more independence. Greater security is the result. Keep discussions low-key. Tonight: With your best friend.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) ★★★★ The Lion needs to adjust to others. You might not agree with them or like what they do. Still, follow the "correct" path, knowing what works. Allow others to reveal what is on their minds. Stunned, you could decide to withhold judgment. Tonight: Accept an invitation.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) ★★★★ You approach your work and errands in an atypical manner. Your erratic behavior might toss others into chaos, but at the moment, it reflects your energy levels. Realize another's expectations; be moderate in your conversations. Tonight: Clear out excess work.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22) ★★★★★ Recognize another's independence and spirit. On some level, this trait endears this person to you, even if sometimes you find that this kind of individuality tests you. Why not partake in the same spirit? Allow your playfulness to come out. Tonight: Start your weekend with a bang.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21) ★★★★ Once more, something secure falls apart. You have learned to deal with the unexpected at home, but you need to continually adjust. Learn to roll with the punches. You need to give up rigidity. Tonight: Take your time deciding.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21) ★★★★★ If you don't think you've heard someone correctly, ask this person to repeat himself. This person's sharing surprises you. You also might not agree with him, but you have a lot to gain by at least understanding the point. Tonight: Favorite spot, favorite people.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) ★★★ Financial swings, be they in the stock market or your personal checkbook, can trigger you as nothing else can. Share your confusion with others, seeking out answers. Be willing to do the unexpected in response. Trust your knowledge. Tonight: You don't need to spend and spend more.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18) ★★★★ Allow yourself to be free. Be yourself. Many see you as unusual, but what they recognize is the spark that makes you an Aquarian. With the moon in your sign, forge ahead on your key, heartfelt projects. Your magnetism has the power to draw many to you. Tonight: Whatever would make you happy.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20) ★★ An unusual insight flusters you early on. You might be in another world as a result. Let others in, if you can. A different perspective could help you digest information. Close your door and clear out work. You don't need any additional distraction at this time. Tonight: Do what you want.

The bidding:

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
1NT	2◇	3◇	Pass
3NT	Pass	4♣	Pass
4♠	Pass	6NT	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Queen of ♠

It looks as if bad breaks will sink South's six-no-trump contract. But a key discard at the right time permitted declarer to bring home the bacon.

Few will let a five-card major dissuade them from opening one no-trump if the hand qualifies in all other respects. West's overcall showed both majors, North's three diamonds was natural and forcing and, after South signed off with three no-trump, North continued with four clubs. At the table, South interpreted this as Gerber, asking for aces, and so showed two, but a strong case can be made for North's rebid to be natural and forcing. No matter. When no fit in a minor could be located, North would have placed the contract in the no-trump slam.

Declarer won the opening lead in dummy with the ace and immediately led a diamond to the jack. When the finesse won, South cashed the ace of diamonds and discovered the bad news when West discarded a heart. The ace and queen of hearts were unblocked, and declarer came to hand with the king of spades, on which East parted with a heart. Next, declarer cashed the king of hearts. What would you discard from the table?

If you selected a diamond, East can let go a diamond, and there are only 11 tricks to be made. Correct is to sluff a club. East must hold all the diamonds to prevent dummy's long diamond from being established, so is also forced to part with a club. Now declarer cashed out the clubs, ending on the table, and exited with the seven of diamonds. East won with the nine but was forced to yield the last two tricks by leading away from Q-6 of diamonds into the board's K-8 tenace.

Oil rises

NEW YORK — Crude oil and petroleum products futures rose for a second straight session at the New York Mercantile Exchange Thursday. The petroleum complex got a psychological boost from the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries' decision to keep oil production unchanged, while defiantly promising to defend oil prices.

Recognizing the "far-reaching" consequences of terrorist attacks in New York and Washington earlier this month, OPEC kept crude oil supplies unchanged at its meeting Thursday in Vienna.

The producers, while dismissing the impact of oil prices on global economic growth, promised to defend the price of their reference basket of crudes.

Nearby crude oil futures were up 36 cents to finish at $22.74 a barrel, on news of OPEC's decision. October gasoline was 1.37 cent to 63.76 cents a barrel.

But persistent worries over a global recession in the wake of the terrorist attacks in the United States are seen capping large gains in the petroleum complex, as market players forecast that demand for oil will slump.

Crude oil prices had fallen nearly 30 percent in the last two weeks to a two-year low near $20 a barrel Wednesday on fears of a serious recession.

Elsewhere, October heating oil was up .13 cent to 64.92 cents, while natural gas remained steady at $1.830 per 1,000 square feet.

Brent crude from the North Sea dropped 21 cents to close at $22.79 a barrel on the International Petroleum Exchange in London.

In other commodities:

A tidal wave of commodity fund buying boosted cocoa futures on New York's Coffee, Sugar & Cocoa Exchange to a four-month high Thursday.

While the surge came just three days prior to the official start of the 2001-02 crop in Ivory Coast — the world's largest cocoa producer — when producers' hedging might pressure prices, traders were more swayed by estimates for another hefty supply deficit in the new season.

Dollar up

LONDON — The U.S. dollar rose against most other major currencies in European trading Thursday.

The euro was quoted at 92.05 cents in late European trading Thursday, down from 92.09 cents Wednesday. Later, in midday trading in New York, the euro traded at 91.94 cents.

Other dollar rates in Europe, compared with late Wednesday, included 119.65 Japanese yen, up from 117.87; 1.6085 Swiss francs, up from 1.6037; and 1.5777 Canadian dollars, up from 1.5715.

In midday trading in New York, the dollar bought 119.79 yen, and the pound was worth $1.4735.

Based on late European euro rates, the dollar was worth 2.1238 German marks, up from 2.1234; 7.1230 French francs, up from 7.1215; 2.3940 Dutch guilders, up from 2.3925; and 2,103.50 Italian lire, up from 2,102.13.

Gold down

Gold dealers in London closed at a price of $291.40 bid per troy ounce, down from $292.10 Wednesday. In Zurich the bid price was $290.30, down from $291.60. Gold fell 50 cents in Hong Kong to $291.25.

Silver closed in London at $4.60 bid per troy ounce, up from $4.56.

OPEC to keep oil at current levels

By Bruce Stanley
Associated Press

VIENNA, Austria — OPEC members have decided to continue pumping at current levels of production despite a dramatic drop in oil prices since the terror attacks on the United States.

Representatives of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries announced their decision Thursday after a final round of talks at the cartel's headquarters in Vienna, Austria.

Confronted by shrinking demand for oil and uncertainty over U.S.-led military action against terrorism, OPEC delegates plan to reconvene on Nov. 14 to review market conditions. They said they would cut output at that time if necessary.

OPEC's official output target is 23.2 million barrels a day. The group supplies almost 40 percent of the world's oil, including overproduction estimated at between 700,000 and 1.5 million barrels a day.

It has cut back its official production three times this year already, most recently by 1 million barrels a day on Sept. 1.

The delegates agreed Wednesday to stick with their current production quotas but postponed announcing their decision until Thursday because they needed to wrangle over the precise wording of their official communique.

The one-day delay reflected the difficulty OPEC's 11 member nations have had in reaching a consensus amid the intense economic and political unease prevailing since the Sept. 11 attacks on the United States.

"The deteriorating global economic outlook, exacerbated by the recent tragic events in the USA, is expected to have a dampening effect on world oil demand," OPEC said in its communique. In order to maintain stability in oil markets, the group decided it wouldn't change its official output.

OPEC president Chakib Khelil told a news conference the group would use "any measures," including holding telephone conferences as it did when it cut output in July, to try to defend that target.

"We still have as a target to stabilize prices between $22 and $28 (a barrel)," he said.

Under an existing arrangement, OPEC has said it will cut its daily production by 500,000 barrels if its benchmark price for crude falls below $22 a barrel for 10 consecutive trading days. The OPEC benchmark price stood at $20.11 on Wednesday, the most recent day for which the information was compiled. It was the third consecutive day on which the OPEC benchmark was below $22.

Several delegates said they believed the slide in prices would be temporary.

"Prices will in the coming weeks return, I am sure, to an acceptable level," OPEC Secretary-general Ali Rodriguez told reporters.

Still, Kuwaiti Oil Minister Adel al-Subeih said he would not be concerned if the price stayed at or even slightly below $22 a barrel. "We would be satisfied with that," he said.

Energy analyst Raad Alkadiri seemed to agree.

Prices ranging from $20 to $22 a barrel are "not a nightmare" for OPEC, said Alkadiri of The Petroleum Finance Co., a Washington consultancy. "They can still balance their budgets. This is not asking OPEC to tighten their belts too much."

Although oil prices have plunged several dollars since the attacks, OPEC's 11 members are constrained from cutting output to bolster prices because such a step could shove the fragile world economy decisively into recession.

OPEC's maneuvering room is limited further by the reluctance of key members to antagonize the United States, the No. 1 importer of OPEC crude, as it leads a military alliance against Afghanistan's Taliban regime and the forces loyal to Osama bin Laden, the prime suspect in the terror attacks.

Group members are also wary of being perceived as greedy if they try, so soon after the attacks, to push prices higher by cutting production now.

"You would be seen as trying to gain from the misfortune of others," said Leo Drollas, chief economist of the Center for Global Energy Studies in London.

On Thursday, November contracts of North Sea Brent crude slipped 10 cents to $22.90 a barrel in trading on the International Petroleum Exchange in London. Contracts of light, sweet crude for November delivery moved higher on the New York Mercantile Exchange, up 36 cents to $22.74 a barrel.

Toy makers respond by de-emphasizing violence

By Anne D'Innocenzio
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Patty Gonzales is keeping toy soldiers and other military playthings in the closet, hidden from her 5- and 6-year-old sons. Instead, she has bought them rescue-hero figures, like firefighters and policemen.

In the aftermath of the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks, Gonzales and other parents are trying to rid their children's lives of violent toys.

"We just need a break," said Lisa Eastman, a 38-year-old New Yorker who bought Lego blocks and puzzles for her 6-year-old girl and 3-year-old boy. "My kids now have nightmares about fires and about all those bad guys."

The industry also has been doing some soul-searching, pulling toys off shelves, rethinking products and putting off the release of items that might be seen as too violent.

Chris Byrne, an independent toy analyst, predicted "nasty toys that destroy enemies for the sake of unspecified violent play" will be replaced by heroes who restore order.

"All of this destruction and combat play has been possible because it is so abstract," he said. "Now 'the threat' is real."

Retailers such as Wal-Mart have noticed more sales of rescue vehicles and firefighter and police figures. One hot seller has been Mattel's Fisher-Price "Rescue Heroes," a line-up of 7-inch characters unveiled in 1998.

Analysts also believe that Hasbro's newly relaunched GI Joe could be attractive to parents who want to help children act out their fears. For others, like Eastman and Gonzales, military action figures are just too much.

"It's bad enough that they see the Army in the airports," said Gonzales, a 24-year-old from New York.

Mattel, the world's largest toy manufacturer, has withdrawn its Heli-Jet vehicle, which contains a mission card with a specific goal: save New York from a villain called Vitriol, who stands atop the World Trade Center, ready to blast the city with deadly energy waves.

Bandai America plans to play down the fighting aspect of its Power Rangers action figures and push "teamwork and friendship," said Colleen Sherfey, director of marketing. She said the company has redesigned some of its advertising.

This re-evaluation couldn't come at a more critical time for retailers and manufacturers, which have already shipped their products to stores for the Oct. 1 holiday deadline. How long consumers' increased sensitivity will last is anyone's guess, but many experts see a new climate favoring less violent types of toys.

Ann Brown, chairwoman of the Consumer Products Safety Commission, said she is against any toys that glorify violence. What's appropriate for children, she said, are toys that help them "deal with violence," such as Army toys and GI Joes.

"Kids need to really re-enact their fears as heroes," she said, recommending toys that emphasize rescue workers like nurses and firefighters.

The video game industry is drawing close scrutiny from Brown and other consumer advocates.

Video game makers have already delayed some new games containing images of the World Trade Center to remove the graphics. Sega of North America indefinitely postponed "Propeller Arena," involving planes in combat in various cities, and Ubi Soft Entertainment has delayed a PC game in which players participate in counterterrorist games.

"Video game makers are buying more time right now," said Dan Hsu, editor in chief of Electronic Gaming Monthly. "I think they are going to take a safer approach to content for 2002 and 2003."

Merchants said they see no reason to remove existing violent games, even if they involve terrorism. They are leaving it up to the customer.

The Zany Brainy toy store chain, which avoids violent video games and toys, expects parents this holiday season to look for things like Legos, trains and board games, said Tom Vellios, president and chief executive.

Natasha Spring, 38, of Petaluma, Calif., does not plan to buy her two boys, ages 9 and 5, and 2-year-old daughter a game console.

"I think they are going to be sticking to Disney cartoons," she said.

Shock from attacks sends joblessness in U.S. skyrocketing

WASHINGTON (AP) — New claims for unemployment benefits rocketed to a nine-year high last week as the terror attacks started showing up in national economic statistics.

The claims are certain to go higher yet, analysts say, as the effects of layoffs and lost business spread.

Separately, the Conference Board in New York said Thursday that newspaper want-ads, a key barometer of the job market and the economy, had sunk to an 18-year low in August, even before the attacks.

In Washington, the Labor Department reported that for the work week ending Sept. 22, new jobless claims jumped by a seasonally adjusted 58,000, to 450,000, the highest level since July 25, 1992.

Economists believe the increase shows only the first wave of layoffs stemming from the Sept. 11 attacks against the World Trade Center and the Pentagon. For the work week ending Sept. 15, claims actually fell because stunned workers, trying to get their bearings, didn't get around to filing for jobless benefits, analysts said.

"We will soon see the second wave of layoffs coming from the severely impacted travel and tourism industries," said Lynn Reaser, chief economist for Banc of America Capital Management Inc.

Since the attacks, more than 100,000 layoffs have been announced in the airlines and related industries.

Stan Shipley, economist at Merrill Lynch, predicted that jobless claims will soar to more than 500,000 in the next few months.

The four-week moving average of jobless claims, which smoothes out week-to-week fluctuations, rose last week by 11,750, to 422,000.

On Wall Street, investors seeking safer havens bought up blue chips but sold off riskier technology shares amid worries about how long and how much the slumping economy will suffer from the terror attacks. The Dow Jones industrial average gained 114.03 points to close at 8,681.42.

With new uncertainties raised by the attacks and growing prospects the U.S. economy could fall into recession, businesses will be reluctant to hire new workers in the months ahead, economists said.

The nation's unemployment rate shot up to 4.9 percent in August from 4.5 percent, the biggest one-month jump in more than six years. Economists predict the jobless rate will climb to 6 percent by year's end.

"Continued deterioration in the labor market is very likely over the next few months," said Ken Goldstein, an economist with the Conference Board, a private research group.

With consumer confidence being dealt a blow by the attacks, people may feel less inclined to spend on big-ticket items, economists said. That would add to the woes of manufacturers, which have been hardest hit by the more than yearlong economic slowdown, and is likely to slow home sales, one of the economy's few bright spots.

New orders to American factories for big-ticket manufactured goods edged down in August by just 0.3 percent, after even bigger drops of 2.5 percent and 1.1 percent in June and July, respectively, the Commerce Department said.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

A 'bypass trust' allows spouse to leave behind money free of estate taxes

By Eric Tyson

Q: I read one of your recent columns on estate taxes, and it was a very good article. Can you recommend any simple books that explain trusts and how to guard against estate taxes? Are trusts a way of protecting against estate taxes?

Tyson

A: Yes, certain trusts can be used to reduce estate taxes. One example is a "bypass trust." Normally, a couple can leave to their heirs up to $675,000 free of estate taxes. A bypass trust allows each spouse to pass on $675,000 free of estate taxes.

Here's how it works. Upon the death of the first spouse, that spouse's assets go into the bypass trust. If desired, the surviving spouse can live off the income from the trust assets and can even use a small portion of the principal each year. When the surviving spouse dies, his or her remaining assets plus the assets of the bypass trust pass on to the designated beneficiaries.

"Living trusts," by contrast, do nothing about saving on estate taxes but instead keep your assets out of probate upon your passing. The reason some people with significant nonretirement account assets establish living trusts is to save their heirs the hassles and potentially significant costs of attorney probate fees.

Thanks to the 2001 tax bill, the $675,000 estate-tax-free exemption will rise tremendously in the years ahead. While higher-income earners are precluded from using some of the new tax benefits, a number of estate tax law changes will benefit more affluent taxpayers.

The amount that can be passed to heirs free of federal estate tax will increase in 2002 to $1,000,000, in 2004 to $1,500,000, in 2006 to $2,000,000 and in 2009 to $3,500,000. Thus, use of a bypass trust in the future will allow even more significant amounts to be passed on to one's heirs.

In 2010, believe it or not, the estate tax disappears completely, but then it comes back the next year (2011) with the old limit of $1,000,000 that can be passed on free of estate tax! I don't believe this series of absurd changes will come to be, but you never know with Congress — after all, they are the ones who crafted and passed this bill in the first place!

I think it's best to plan assuming that most of the significant increase in the estate-tax-free limit will stick, but you should not assume that the complete elimination of the estate tax in 2010 will become permanent.

Among my favorite resources for explaining trusts and other aspects of estate planning is a book called "Plan Your Estate" by Denis Clifford and Cora Jordan (Nolo Press).

Jazz extend Stockton's contract for two more years

Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — John Stockton was willing to take a pay cut. He's fairly certain he'll be able to make ends meet with a salary of $8 million for each of the next two seasons.

The future Hall-of-Famer announced Thursday that he has signed a two-year contract extension with the Utah Jazz, the only team he's ever played for.

Stockton made $11 million last season, but agreed to take about $3 million less so that the Jazz would not exceed the estimated luxury tax threshold of $54 million.

"I just look at myself mostly as fortunate," Stockton said. "It's not like we'll be at the soup kitchen. This is a very good job. There's not a guy in the league who doesn't have one of the best jobs in the world."

He begins his 18th season with the Jazz next week, when training camp opens.

Stockton, the NBA's all-time leader in assists and steals, said he wasn't sure if he would play out the contract, and that team owner Larry Miller was the one who asked him to sign for two years instead of one.

"We may really need you two years from now," Miller recalled telling Stockton.

Stockton has missed just 22 out of 1,362 regular season games. He averaged 11.5 points and 8.7 assists in 29.2 minutes a game last season.

Utah tied for the fourth-best record in the Western Conference, but was eliminated in the first round by the Dallas Mavericks.

"It's uncommon in today's world to see someone stay with one employer for 17 years, let alone one basketball team for 17 years," said Jazz president Dennis Haslam. "It's a credit to John's integrity and his interest in loyalty to the Utah Jazz and we're really excited to have him back this year."

The emotional Miller barely got one sentence out at the news conference before his voice started cracking, often stopping to gather his thoughts and explain the nuances of his nearly two-decade relationship with Stockton.

"There is truly no way to quantify or accurately measure what John has done for this franchise," Miller said.

Miller said he's often asked what the unassuming, private Stockton is really like.

"My standard answer is: He's exactly how you hope he is. What you see is what you get. There's no pretenses."

Stockton, dressed in a white polo shirt, white shorts and sneakers, seemed relaxed and more candid than usual. At the prodding of Miller, Stockton told of his first year in the NBA, living in a furnished apartment, thinking that every paycheck could be his last.

"Everything after that's been gravy," Stockton said.

No talk of Stockton seems complete without mentioning partner Karl Malone, another future Hall-of-Famer, whose career in Utah began one year after Stockton's. Malone's contract, coincidentally or not, also expires at the end of the 2002-03 season.

When asked if they had discussed contract situations with one another this summer or in the past, Stockton said no, but acknowledged the significance of each man's tenure with the team.

"Clearly, neither one of us, I don't think, could have played this long without the other," Stockton said.

Boaters prepare to snag historic baseball from Bay

Associated Press

SAN FRANCISCO — Joseph Figone will be crouched in his kayak just beyond the right-field fence at Pacific Bell Park this weekend, armed with a paddle and a fishing net in hopes of grabbing a pricey bit of history.

He'll be among the hundreds of boaters, canoeists and surfers waiting for the hush, then the roar of a packed Giants crowd. He'll watch the sky, hoping a record-breaking Barry Bonds homer splashes down in San Francisco Bay.

As the Giants begin a three-game series Friday night against the San Diego Padres, Bonds is within four homers of breaking Mark McGwire's season record of 70 set in 1998. Several of his homers this year have landed in the body of water nicknamed McCovey Cove, in honor of former Giants slugger Willie McCovey.

Figone, a former Candlestick Park groundskeeper, snagged the first ball hit out of Pacific Bell Park into the bay during the regular season and also captured Bonds' 500th career homer from the murky water earlier year.

"I don't know what's going to happen. I'm not going to jinx myself — only God knows where it's going to go," Figone says. "A lot of people expect me to get it, and hope I'll get it."

If Bonds breaks the record, auction house officials say No. 71 may not even be the most valuable ball to catch. As with McGwire's 70th, it's the final home run ball of the season that could fetch the most money.

Regardless of who retrieves Bonds' final homer of the season, sports memorabilia experts say its value will be far less than the $3.05 million paid by collector Todd McFarlane for the ball from McGwire's 70th homer.

Some estimates have placed the value of Bonds' final record-setter as high as $4 million. But auction house officials estimate the ball from Bonds' final homer this season will be worth $400,000 to $1 million. The biggest reason it will bring less than McGwire's ball is because it's just too soon.

Baseball fans had waited 37 years for McGwire to shatter Roger Maris' record of 61 homers set in 1961. The record could be broken again just three years later.

But that's doing little to dock the boaters who hope to grab Bonds' 71st.

In the spirit of fairness and safety, no motorized craft will be allowed within 50 feet of the right-field wall. And all craft will be limited to 6 mph.

The San Francisco Port Commission voted to impose such restrictions earlier this season after Figone's motorized inflatable boat nearly collided with a surfer going after No. 500.

"Boaters are more unscrupulous. They may be safe boaters as a rule on the weekend, but if they're going for something worth a million bucks, they may cut a couple of corners," says Michael Nerney, Port of San Francisco spokesman. "It gives the guy on the surfboard as equal a chance as the guy in a motor boat."

Tom Hoynes has missed only about a half-dozen Giants' home games since Pac Bell Park opened two years ago, and says he's practicing maneuvering his kayak as the stakes get higher.

He has the first ball ever hit out of Pac Bell Park into McCovey Cove, but it's worth less because it was hit during an exhibition game. He also has seven other splashdown balls, six of which were smacked into the bay by Bonds.

He says the McCovey Cove crew, including a team of Portuguese water dogs, are as much a part of the game as the thousands seated inside. Fans in the stands sometimes throw "dork" balls into the water just to watch the television cameras zoom in on the action in the water as fans dive in after them.

To avoid later controversy, balls pitched to Bonds starting this week are marked with special symbols that are invisible to the naked eye and do not come off in water.

"I've got a strategy, but I can't give it away," Hoynes says, laughing. "It's largely going to be luck and how physically capable you are. I haven't gone in the water. I'm proud of that."

Fighting Irish take on Aggies as friends coach against each other

Associated Press

COLLEGE STATION — Sometimes, a football schedule gets in the way of friendships.

Notre Dame coach Bob Davie and Texas A&M coach R.C. Slocum will set aside their former working relationship Saturday when the Fighting Irish visit Kyle Field trying to avoid opening the season 0-3 for the first time.

"I'll be glad when we don't have to play again so we can talk a little more detailed about football," Slocum said. "We have so many shared memories. I spent nine years of my life, almost every day, with him."

Davie, a former Aggie assistant, will be going with a new quarterback in an effort to break the Fighting Irish out of their 0-2 start in losses to Nebraska and Michigan State.

"I think we have a special friendship that goes beyond football," Davie said. "We realize that one of us is going to win and one of us is going to lose. To be honest, I kind of enjoyed it. I like the competition of it.

"It makes for a unique emotion, especially to come back to Texas A&M and play."

While the Aggies are off to a 3-0 start, Slocum and Davie both have felt fan criticism for not taking their programs farther. Slocum chats with Davie often and knows what he's experiencing.

"As far as the heat he is catching, it is not any worse than what goes on around here or any other college football arena," Slocum said. "It is no more than the heat Joe Paterno is catching right now or Bobby Bowden. No coach is immune to that, and most coaches understand that ."

Davie is hoping to turn things around with sophomore Carlyle Holiday, who played high school football at San Antonio Roosevelt, will replace Matt LoVecchio as the starting quarterback against the Aggies.

The Irish have scored just two touchdowns in two games under LoVecchio in losses to Nebraska and Michigan State.

"Matt has done some great things for us over the past two years and he'll continue to do some great things for us this year," Davie said. "But we all see we need a spark, and we need points on the board.

"Carlyle is a guy that deserves the opportunity to provide that spark. He only played two series Saturday (against Michigan State). He probably didn't have as much opportunity as maybe we would have liked. So I think we're all anxious to just see him in the game."

Slocum knows of Holiday's talents. He tried hard to sign him for the Aggies.

"He is a guy that I looked at when he was in high school," Slocum said. "I thought he was the best quarterback in Texas. I went in his home and went to his school and recruited him hard."

Holiday played briefly in the 17-10 loss to Michigan State and will get more of a chance against the Aggies.

"I've improved dramatically in my passing game, I've gotten a lot more accurate," Holiday said. "I don't tend to run out of the pocket like I did in high school. My arm's gotten a lot stronger from our weight program."

"I'm very confident I can pass the ball. The receivers are confident in me, my teammates are, I just need to go out and do it."

Bledsoe released from hospital

Associated Press

BOSTON — New England Patriots quarterback Drew Bledsoe was released from the hospital Thursday after being treated for a hit that caused internal bleeding.

Bledsoe was knocked out of the game Sunday when New York Jets linebacker Mo Lewis hit him in the fourth quarter of New England's 10-3 loss. Bledsoe was hospitalized later Sunday,

A chest tube Bledsoe was given to alleviate the bleeding was removed Wednesday. He was held until Thursday at Massachusetts General Hospital for observation.

Coach Bill Belichick said Bledsoe will be out for at least two weeks, during which time the team will further evaluate his condition.

Bledsoe has missed only six of 130 games in nine years in the NFL. Tom Brady, the Patriots' sixth-round pick in the 2000 draft, will replace him.
