Current Events the World Over

By Edward W. Pickard

GEORGE H. TINKHAM, the bearded and sharp-tongued representative from Massachusetts, has revived the controversy over the League of Nations with an assertion that the United States is being slipped into the league through the back door. He says the joint resolution adopted in the last few days of the Seventy-third congress, making the United States a member of the international labor organization was the first of a contemplated series of moves designed to put the United States openly into the league, contrary to the wishes of the people and of congress, and Secreary of Labor Perkins was the especial object of his attack. Using such harsh words as "fraud" and "intrigue," Mr. Tinkham accused Secretary Perkins of employing "contemptible trickery" in advocating the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. Tinkham quoted the labor secretary as saying that the international labor organization "is not even now an integral part of the League of Naions, and membership in the organization does not imply affiliation with the league." He continued:

"This statement is the grossest perversion of the truth. It is squarely contrary to the facts—facts establishe' by an indelible record, the treaty of Versailles. The statement contained in the letter of the secretary of labor was intended to deceive. The secretary knew that the congress of the United States was opposed to entry into the League of Nations and would not vote for entry knowingly. Entry was therefore made surrepitiously and fraudulently.

"Article 392 of the treaty of Versailles states:

"'The international labor office shall be established at the seat of the League of Nations as part of the organization of he league'

"This audacious intrigue to have the United States enter the League of Nations by way of one of the organ of the league is to be followed by an attempt to have the United State enter another of its organs, the Permanent Court of International Justic of the League of Nations, this subsequently to be followed by a proposa' of full membership in the League of Nations. Thus, the independence of the United States shall be destroyed the will of he American people thwarted, and the United States inevitably involved in the next European conflict."

SENATOR JAMES HAMILTON LEWIS of Illinois, chairman of the senate committee on foreign relation and a veteran in international conferences, has set forth a view concerning treaties for disarmament o reduction of armaments that will meet with the approval of many of his fellow citizens, though they are sharply at variance with those of the administration. He evidently is glad th Washington naval pact is dying, owing to the action of Japan, and h says that in the future the United States must, for its own sake, remain aloof from all such agreements because they are almost certain t embroil us in war.

Addressing the National Forum in Washington, Senator Lewis declared the recent naval conversations in ndon succeeded only in designing a art of death to men, destruction nations," and he warned against renewal of the Washington treaty Plain it must be," Senator Lewis nted out, "that should we enter the l, and it is disobeyed by any of parties, the United States must be ed on by the nations involved to l ourselves to enforce the compact s means war upon the United tes by the nations we threaten t e to obedience, or war from the ons we refuse to aid in the enement.

To the United States nothing but and danger awaits our entrance any international contract with ign nations preparing for war on other."

nerica wants no war and wants aments only for self-defense, the tor said, and America does not gnize the right of any internaal conference to tell her what she needs for that purpose.

n this right of our own self-de- America stands sovereign in her ded isolation," he informed other ns. "We deny the privilege of any nation to dictate to the United States the quantity or quality of protection our nation shall adopt."

War can come to the United States only through her foreign entanglements, Senator Lewis explained, and because of the present warlike attitude of the world, America must stand isolated.

SPEAKING of war, it is interesting to learn that the senate mission to the Philippines were discovered after those islands "possess the most important source of war material under the American flag." Senator Tydings of Maryland sent the word from Manila that there are in Zambales province deposits of chromite so large that they have attracted the attention of other nations. John W. Haussermann, dean of the island's gold mining industry, told the senators these deposits may soon take their place as one of the most important ore bodies in the world, and he added significiently that chronium is the one war material which the United States does not have in ample quantities within its borders. These deposits in the Philippines were discoevred after the Tydings-McDuffie independence act was drafted. It is easy to see why this news will be of immens interest to Japan, which, in its plans for territorial expansion, is ever on the lookout for war material sources.

PROSECUTION and defense attorneys completed their preparations for the trial of Bruno Hauptmann on the charge of murdering the Lindbergh baby, and the little town of Flemington, N. J., was a busy place. The names of 48 veniremen were drawn for examination as jurors, and the sensation over the mailing of a satire on the Lindbergh case to 150 prospective jurors died down. C. Lloyd Fisher defense counsel, said he would not ask for a new panel.

Betty Gow, the nurse who put the Lindbergh baby to bed the night he was kidnapped and killed, arrived from Scotland on the liner Aquitania and went at once to the Morrow home in Englewood, N. J., to await her call as one of the state's witnesses. She declined to talk to reporters, but posed for cameramen. There was a report that Miss Gow might remain in this country and take up her former job in the Lindbegh household. She had acted as nurse for Jon, second son born to the Lindberghs, until she returned to Scotland several months ago.

Hauptmann seemed calm as the time of his ordeal approached, and he ate a hearty Christmas dinner. Mrs. Hauptmann, who moved from the Bronx to Flemington to be near her husband, made a radio appeal "to the people of the country to wait until they hear every side of the story before they condemn him."

She reiterated her belief that Hauptmann had nothing to do with the kidnapping of Charles A. Lindbergh Jr. She repeated her story that Hauptmann had waited for her at a Bronx bakery where she worked the night of the kidnapping and had taken her home.

As for the ransom money found in the Hauptmann home and garage, she insisted on the truth of her husband's story that he got the money from Isidor Fish, who is dead. Mrs. Hauptmann told part of her story amid sobs.

ONE of the worst American railway wrecks of the year occurred at Dunlas, Ont., when a Christmas excursion train bound from London, Ont., to Toronto was telescoped by the Detroit-to-Toronto express on the Canadian National railways line as it stood on a siding. Apparently the express ran through the open switch. Two wooden coaches were demolished and fifteen persons were killed. More than a score of others were injured. A third coach was thrown on end close to the edge of a 150-foot cliff.

The alertness and quick thinking of Engineer B. Burrell of the speeding train from Detroit was credited by railway officials with having averted an even greater tragedy. Seeing no hope of preventing the locomotive from piling into the rear of the special train, Burrell ordered it cut loose from the coaches behind and prevented them from telescoping.

POPE PIUS XI is not optimistic concerning world peace. In his Christmas eve address delivered according to custom to the cardinals resident in Rome, he said that the clamor for war spreads even farther, and he urged the world to pray and work for peace. "We see a constant increase in warlike arms," the pope continued.

"This is a distracting element in which the spirit seems to have no part. We are on the eve of a day when the heavens resound with the hymns of angels calling for peace on earth. Never has the chant had more reason for being than today."

King George, in a radio address to all parts of the British empire, was a little more cheerful. He adjured his "peoples beyond the seas" to remember that they all belonged to one great family.

"My desire and hope is that the same spirit of brotherhood may become ever stronger in its hold and wider in its range," the kind said. "The world is still restless and troubled. The clouds are lifting, but we have still our anxieties to meet. I am convinced that if we meet them in the spirit of one family we shall overcome them, for then private and party interests will be controlled by care for the whole community."

He made a special effort to reach the restless multitudes in India, whose fate is now in the hands of parliament, by assuring them of his "constant care of them."

President Roosevelt's brief Christmas talk was addressed especially to the citizens of America, calling for "courage and unity," for greater happiness and the improvement of human welfare.

SOLDIERS from Great Britain, Sweden and Hoolland, to the number of 3,300, under command of Maj. J. E. S. Brind, a British veteran of several wars, marched into the Saar from north and south with flying colors, and were stationed at stragetic points throughout the area, prepared to maintain order until after the plebiscite of January 13 which will determine whether the Saar shall again become a part of Germany or remain under control of the League of Nations. The arrival of the troops was watched by the league authorities with considerable anxiety for there has been fears that Nazi enthusiasts there might cause trouble. But the inhabitants of the basin remained quiet, none of them showing either enmity or enthusiasm for the league's armed forces.

Under the terms of the treaty of Versailles any person living in the Saar at the time of the signing of the treaty is eligible to vote in the plebiscite, and the Nazis of Germany made great efforts to gather as many of their adherents as possible from other lands to which they had migrated From the United States 352 Saar Germans traveled back to their old home aboard the liner Bremen, and were welcomed with feasts, as was another large contingent from South America. The German government denied that it was paying the expenses of these voters from abroad, asserting that they were financed by private donations.

COL. CHARLES A. LINDGERGH by his flights across Arctic regions in 1933, has enabled the Department of Agriculture to demonstrate conclusively that the spores of plant disease can be borne on remote air currents.

With a spore trap of his own devising, which he called "the sky hook," Colonel Lindbergh obtained specimens which confirmed the previous theories of government experts that plant diseases may be carried even across continents by air currents.

That was announced by Fred C Meier, the department expert who interested Colonel Lindbergh in the work.

Colonel Lindbergh devised his "sky hook," a light, strong contrivance, easy to operate and well adapted to protecting sterile glass slides from contamination except for the time they were exposed. Mr. Meier prepared the slides and has examined and photographed them.

CHRISTMAS in the White House was a season of jollity and noise, especial attention being given to the entertainment of the younger members of the large house party. First, on Christmas Eve, the President lighted he Community Christmas tree in Lafayette park, and then he read Dickens' "Christmas Carol" to the assembled families. Early next morning the children gathered in Mr. Roosevelt's room and opened their gifts, and then had a frolic around the tree in the upstair corridor.

S. S. LESSON

PETER'S CONVERSION AND CALL

Lesson text, John 1:35-42. Golden text, "And Jesus said unto them, come ye after me and I will make you to become fishers of men." Mark 1:17.

With this Sunday we begin a new series of lessons. For the coming three months our study will be concerning the life of Simon Peter. The lessons will constitute a sort of biography of the life of this "prince of apostles." The second quarter wil be spent in a study of Bible teachings on important relationships between God and men. The third quarter will be spent in studying a number of outstanding Biblical characters, and the last quarter will be spent in a study of the last of the great Old Testament prophets.

Simon the son of Jona or John, was a native of Bethsaida, a town probably located on the northeastern shores of the Sea of Galilee. It seems that Jona, the father, and his two sons, Andrew and Simon, were partners in a fishing business in Capernaum. Capernaum, the adopted home of these men, was a large city on the western shore of the Sea of Galilee One of the most profitable businesses in that particular section of the country was the catching and selling of fish. I would appear that possibly these three men comprised a wholesale firm. They were prosperous men because we find Peter a married man with a large home in the city of Capernaum. Only the "well to do" owned large homes in cities in those days.

We find Peter described as an ignorant and unlearned man, in the scriptures. Those who made that statement were comparing Peter as a teacher and knew that he had had no training in the temple school, and was not a doctor of learning such as themselves. It is almost certain that Peter spoke more than one language. It was necessary for a man to speak at least Aramaic and Greek if he carried on any business at all. Then the liklihood is, since Peter was a man of affairs, he also spoke Latin. Again, since he was reared a strict and devout Jew, it was more than likely that he read the Old Testament prophets in the Hebrew language. This, added to his business learning and training gave him a fair education, even though he was no expert in learning and education, and to the doctors of the synagogue an ignorant man.

In the spring of 27 A. D. (to the best of our knowledge) there appeared on the banks of the Jordan river near the Dead Sea, John the Baptist with a message of repentance. This message stirred all of Judaism. It had in it a power that changed the otherwise even course of the lives of many Jews, and especially the little group in which we are now interested. The two younger men, Andrew and Simon, left their work and made a visit to hear the message of the new messianic prophet. It is probable that they were not present when Jesus was baptized. But some six weeks later when Jesus passed by, Andrew and another, probably John, were with John the Baptist, possibly in conversation, or listening to him preach. Jesus passed some distance away. John recognized Him and said to the two near him, "Behold the Lamb of God." They followed Jesus.

Jesus recognized the fact that He was being followed. He questioned them. They went with Him to His place of abode and remained the rest the day. That was the tenth hour either at ten o'clock according to the Roman reading of time, or four according to the Jewish reading of time. They were convinced and converted as is evidenced by the fact that the first thing Andrew did the next morning was to seek his brother, Simon, to bring him to the Messiah.

Simon was skeptical, no doubt but when he saw Jesus there was within his inner soul a new conviction and surrender. He immediately became a believer in, and a follower of, the Christ. Jesus saw him not as he was but as he was to become. Jesus took Simon into His heart and gave him a new name and a new life. Simon was to be His follower, Cephas, a stone. A similar change was wrought at this time in the lives of several of those who were to later be His constant companions. Jesus spent some time in and about Jerusalem before He went north into Galilee and performed His first miracle. He then returned to Jerusalem for a feast, and again He went to Galilee before He definitely called His disciples into constant companionship.

Andrew and Peter, with their father, were fishing. They had taken nothing. Jesus brought with His magic words of power a net-breaking catch and then called the two boys away from their fishing with the promise that they were to become fishers of men. Jesus had said for them to cast their nets for the Interstate Commerce, but now they were filled ungrounded, so shall your lives be filled by my Spirit." It was a call from the regular duties of life to the continual companionship of the Master. Peter and his brother answered that call.

Van Brawley, Cleo Heasley, Noel Andrews, and Russell Killingsworth attended the basketball games at Hedley Tuesday night.

Mrs. O. C. Darnell, Mr. and Mrs. Bert Groves of Electra visited here last week end.

J. C. Corbin of New Mexico visited relatives here last week.

According to results in recent local option elections over the state, the trend seems to be away from beer saloons, and the Christmas debauchery has not made the open saloon more popular with a lot of people. Then, too, the bootlegger continues to flourish despite the pre-campaign promises of the wets.

TRUE DETECTIVE STORY by Vance Wynn © Public Ledger

The Man Who Fell Through the Earth

JOHN O'CONNOR, a gauger going to his place of employment was seen crossing London bridge one morning, but after that disappeared as completely as though he had fallen through the earth.

What added to the mystery was the fact that O'Connor was very well known along the London docks.

He was an expert in his line and never without a job.

That such a man could drop out of sight without leaving a single trace behind him seemed to be incredible.

Yet the records of the police department show that thousands of men and women disappear every year and are never heard of afterward.

The authorities in the course of their investigation made a tour of all the hospitals and morgues, but without success.

The case became famous, and it was generally referred to as the mystery of the man who fell through the earth.

Inspector Fox was designated by Scotland Yard to follow up the investigation, and he plunged into it with a great deal of enthusiasm.

His colleagues taunted him with the hopelessness of the quest, saying that nothing would ever come of it, but Fox was not discouraged in the least.

He determined to use his brains as well as his feet.

So, after reviewing the whole affair in his mind, he put to himself this query:

"Who was the woman in the case?"

Then he proceeded to answer it by personal investigations along this line.

He learned that in his younger days O'Connor was looked upon as a good "catch" among the ladies.

In the course of his inquiries, the detective found that O'Connor had been smitten with a pretty Swiss girl named Raux.

She had once been in the service of the Duchess of Sutherland and thought well of herself. O'Connor paid her constant attention and eventually asked her to marry him.

She did not positively refuse him, but postponed a definite answer.

In the meanwhile O'Connor discovered that she was also receiving attentions from Samuel Manning, an employee of the Great Western railway.

The rivalry continued for quite a while, and between the two men pretty Marie managed to have a pleasant time.

Eventually, however, the girl married Manning.

O'Connor was disappointed, but he took his defeat very philosophically. He was a good-natured man, with a happy disposition, and he continued his friendship with Mr. and Mrs. Manning.

At this stage of the investigation Detective Fox made an important discovery.

It was that on the August evening of the day he disappeared O'Connor had made an engagement to take dinner with the Manningas at their home in Minerva place, Bermondsey.

Two of his friends met him as he was crossing London bridge on his way to keep his appointment. They never afterward saw him alive.

The next move of the detective was to interview Mrs. Manning.

She expressed surprise when told of the disappearance of the gauger, but was quite willing to tell all she knew.

She said he had called at their house on the evening in question, had dined with them and left early.

"We came to the door to say goodby to him," she declared, "and his last words were, 'I will go home now and get a good night's sleep, for I have a hard day's work before me tomorrow.'"

A week later Fox returned to the Manning home and found that it was empty.

He made a thorough search of the premises, and in the cellar noticed that some of the tiling had been moved from the floor.

He dug down into it and found the dead body of Gauger O'Connor.

Then he made a search of O'Connor's rooms and found a package of love letters from Mrs. Manning.

Eventually Mr. and Mrs. Manning were arrested in Edinburgh.

A trial proved that they had jointly murdered O'Connor for his money and both of them were sentenced to death.

First Use of Shrapnel

The shrapnel shell was invented in 1784 by Lieut. Henry Shrapnel, R. A., and was originally called "the spherical case shot." After considerable delay this projectile was adopted by the British government and was apparently first used against the French at the Battle of Roliea, in 1808. In 1852 the British army adopted the name "shrapnel" in honor of its inventor. There have been some changes in shrapnel but the principle is the same.

Petticoat Lane

Petticoat lane, London, was so named in the Seventeenth century when a colony of French weavers was established there. Before that time it was known as Hog lane. From about 1830 it has been known as Middlesex street. It extended north from High street, Whitechapel, to Wide gate street, Bishopsgate. For many years it has been a Jewish quarter, and is known chiefly as a second-hand clothing market.—Literary Digest.

PATRIOTISM

Every parent who has a child in school is proud of that child because it is about the finest child there is:

Practically every parent in McLean is proud of our schools—why? Because McLean schools are far above average and are worthy of pride.

SO WHAT?

So, then, the children and the schools are worthy of every sacrifice you can make for them. Determine to keep this good work going at all costs. Help your school board and your teachers to help your children—and you!

There isn't a better investment on the fact of the earth.

This year, as you never have before, try to pay your school taxes!

WE APPEAL TO YOUR PATRIOTISM!

THE STORY

Mary Brown, daughter of David Brown, self-made multi-millionaire, obsessed with the idea that her personality is obscured by the fact that she is the child of the "rich David Brown," determines to make her way in life, discarding her father's wealth, and her own. She has a million dollars, legacy from her mother, which she insists her father invest in the "wildest dream" imaginable, and about which she must know nothing. She is a graduate of a college of engineering. Her father, secretly admiring her courage, humors her.

As "M" Brown Mary secures a job on the Paradise Valley project, near the village of Foggy Gulch. She antagonizes Hank Johnson, wealthy and eccentric citizen, by suggesting that he build a gymnasium and swimming pool for the little town.

At the risk of her life, Mary saves valuable instrument when the surveying party is overturned in a swollen stream, and is ordered to headquarters to be taken care of, much to her chagrin. Craig is given orders to discharge her.

...ness was to Denis Craig's ...unshine to icicle. They ...gether through the next ...p the side of a second ... mountain. A mile, two miles, ... covered. Conversation lagged; Craig gradually discovered, Mary ...n did, too.

Every step became more excruciating to Mary. She was in absolute torture as to her feet, cold, and nastily wet all over, nervous from the day's harrowing work and accident, apprehensive of what lay ahead.

Before she realized it, she was feeling overwhelmingly sorry for herself. It was hard sledding, this life! That's what it was! She thouhgt of her sheltered home back east—her own home—with a great wave of homesickness. Two big tears rolled down her cheeks. In just a little while now John Stark would make quick work of her!

Denis Craig, looking down, differentiated tears from raindrops.

"See here, now, girl! Suppose you use the sense you were born with." He put a steady arm about her. "Now put your hand across up onto my shoulder. That's the way. Helps somewhat, doesn't it?"

"Oh, a lot!" as she gratefully shift...t of the weight from her feet ...l. In fact it would have been ...r nice—if it hadn't been for her ...

"...wasn't crying about my heels," ...assured him presently.

"...hat, then?"

"...l, just sort of—sort of—crying ...cting about my father—"

"...omesick. I don't wonder. My hat's ...off to you. You're a good little ..., Mary Brown. But I don't like ...dea of the stiff fight you're hav... to put up—"

"...m having—just what I want!" she ...e in hastily. "I wouldn't change ...ing if I could!"

...t presently she made an amend...t. "Yes, I would change one ...g. My shoes." She stopped. "...no use, Mr. Craig. I can't ...l this even with you practically ...ding me. I'm going to take off ...oots and go barefoot."

"...t me." He removed the soggy ... Through the chewed-out holes ...er socks together they looked ... the great blisters on the heels ...r red slim feet.

...g whistled. "Ever go barefoot, ... lady?"

"...ll, if you were no horny-handed ...footed—son of toil, I was."

He began unlacing his own boots. "I beg of you—"

"And I of you," he interrupted quietly. "Im aching to feel the squash of mud through my toes again—and the rest of our journey is through the bottoms. Here, stick a foot in. Now—how's that?"

Mary experimented. "They're heaven to my heels! They don't touch them, and yet aren't loose enough to rub!"

"Let's go, then, pilgrim!"

So they came to the headquarters house. But Mary's mirth petered out suddenly at the sight of John Stark in the doorway. It was no longer to laugh! It was—on to the slaughter!

And then, miracle of miracles! She noticed that John Stark was laughing, too!

He Removed the Soggy Boots.

CHAPTER 7

Mary Steps into Denis Craig's Shoes—and Other Things

The shock grew the more severe as Mary dripped her way down a wide hall behind her soldierly host.

He admitted her to a large room with a great many windows and a very little furniture, but with bright flames in a fireplace, the most cordial reception committee Mary ever faced.

"Sketchily furnished, you see," Stark went on, waving a hand at a cot and an array of dry-goods boxes. "I've decided," dictatorially, "to keep you over night. It's sheer nonsense to send you forth on what would be a two-hour ride in the rain with the roads as heavy as they are. Ah, here comes the flunky with my first prescription."

It was the cook's helper from the nearby camp, bearing a cup of steaming bullion. "Drink this while it's hot, and then get into dry clothes. By the way," chuckling, "I made a raid on Denny's wardrobe. His things not only will fit you better than mine but they seemed, well—more modish."

Without giving her time even to gasp a "Thank you," he left her.

Mary flew to the bathroom. There was a tense moment as she turned the spigot above the new tub, then a fervent "Glory be!"

The water was hot. It was the one thing her soul and body craved. Hot water and plenty of it, to warm her to the bone! Submerged to the neck, she sipped the steaming soup luxuriously and emerged, warmed and rested. She discovered comb and mirror (monogrammed C) on a shelf—beside a box of powder. Spreading her kinking light hair to dry, she ran into the bedroom, somewhat shyly to investigate the clothing laid out on the cot: a man's underthings, long-legged soft and warm; soft woolen socks, slippers, a dark-blue quilted satin robe. Denis Craig's. Mary giggled a little as she put them on; it seemed so shockingly intimate!

She had spread her own clothing to dry when a knock came on her door. Again she opened to John Stark. "Quite warm, Miss Mary? Feeling all right?" he asked. "Then come down to the living room. I've had our dinner sent over."

"The—the living room! But—I'm not dressed, Mr. Stark!"

Kindly—actually kindly—eyes beamed at her in amusement. "Now I'll wager you're more thoroughly dressed than you've been in many a day. I went through drawer after drawer before I found wool. Formalities are waived tonight." He laughed genially as he surveyed her. "Lucky Denny had that million-dollar lounging garment. You'd have looked like somebody's stepchild in my old bathrobe. Now you make me think of my daughter Nancy on Christmas morning, parading around camp in what she bullied from Santa."

"Your—family has lived with you?" This was a new conception of him—with a family.

"I usually have dragged them about with me. They claim they like it."

Yes, with him like this, she could imagine him the center of an adoring family. And just a few hours ago she had been quite sure that he wasn't even human!

The living room was enormous. Fireplaces at either side made it homelike and snug. A small table was set before oen of them, invitingly. Set for three.

"I'll put you on this side, where it is warmest, Miss Mary."

This solicitude! Mary looked up to thank him, but the words somehow didn't come out, her chin got slightly out of control, and she turned quickly away to hide the mist in her eyes.

"What's this?" came Stark's quick demand.

Mary smiled up at him frankly. "Don't pay any attention to me. You see, I had a sudden spasm of homesickness this afternoon, and a little fathering was the one thing I was needing. But having it descend upon me out of a clear sky is—so overwhelmingly like food to the starving."

He patted her shoulder understandingly. "You'll be all right with a night's sleep. What's become of Denis? That boy never would stop to eat if I didn't drag him to meals.' He stepped to the door. "Denny? Chow!"

"He is—so busy?" Mary was curious for John Stark's slant on a baffling subject.

"Too wrapped up in his game ever to relax. Of course he doesn't have much chance, carrying the load he is. But he's too strenuous. You did him a good turn when you made him a barefoot boy this afternoon. Knocked his worries for a while."

"Who says anything about worries?"

Craig entered the room briskly, looking more than ever scrubbed and tubbed in his fresh flannel suit.

"I've just knocked a serious one in the head, but I had to raid the camp to do it. Miss Brown," eloquently, entreatingly, dramatically, as he drew a small box from his pocket, "will you wear these in remembrance of me?"

Curiously, diffidently, Mary peeped into the box; laughed; reached for it eagerly.

"You touch my very soul, Mr. Craig! You have guessed my heart's most fervent longing!"

They were not orchids which met Mary's entranced gaze, nor pearls, they were circlets, to be sure, but not of gold nor platinum for her fingers. They were—bunion plasters!

"For my poor heels!" peaned Mary. "Indeed I'll wear them! And I've a sneaking suspicion I'll wear your shoes too, if I can make off with them. From previous experiences I'll have to coddle these heels a long time."

"Im grateful to serve even in so lowly a way."

It was a jolly, chummy, leisurely meal. John Stark was in a reminiscent mood. By adroit questioning Denis Craig kept him monopolizing the conversation. Mary noticed. She listened, with little thrills going down her back, to his adventures.

At an early hour she rolled into the blankets on her cot. Outside the rain drizzled pleasantly; the clatter of dishes in the mess house was still audible. Off in the hills a coyote howled, and a young fox barked in a canyon. Above the thud of rain-drops and the roaring of a madcap stream, something sounded like "Plucky little idiot."

This conglomeration of questions in her head: Was John Stark a lion or a lamb? Was Denis Craig a slicker or the adorable, impersonal comrade of the trail? She could see the concern on his face, the look in his eyes, as she came back to consciousness there on the mountainside. He had called her dear—without any apology. Brazenly. Openly. But not flirtatiously. Why? Was that his "line" with women? Had he a habit of calling girls dear?

Hang the questions.

Next week—"If I had a million dollars—"

FOR the first time the RFC has undertaken the management of a railroad. John W. Barriger, chief examiner for the Interstate Commerce Commission announced that nominees of the RFC would be placed in charge of the operation of the Denver & Salt Lake railway, which has received large loans from the government agency.

"If it hadn't been for his wife, Sourbrash would have squandered his entire fortune."

"What did she do?"

"She beat him to it."

Visitor to Asylum—"How do your patients manage to keep busy?"

Keeper—"They're all writing scenarios for the movies."

THE NEW FORD V-8 FOR 1935

NOW ON DISPLAY

A New Ford V-8 That Brings New Beauty, New Safety, and a New Kind of Riding Comfort Within Reach of Millions of People

The New Ford V-8 for 1935 is the biggest and roomiest Ford car ever built. It is a strikingly handsome car, with modern lines and new, luxurious appointments.

But most important of all it is especially designed to give you smooth, easy riding over all kinds of roads—"a front-seat ride for back-seat riders."

This ease of riding is achieved by the use of three basic principles never before combined in a low-price car.

1. Correct distribution of car weight by moving engine and body forward eight and a half inches.

2. New location of seats by which the rear seat is moved forward, toward the center of the car—away from the rear axle and away from the bumps.

3. New spring suspension which permits the use of longer, more flexible springs and increases the springbase to 123 inches.

The result is Center-Poise—which not only gives you a new riding comfort but adds to the stability of the car and its ease of handling. You can take curves with greater safety.

There are many new features in the Ford V-8 for 1935 which make the car still easier to drive. New brakes give more power for stopping quickly with far less foot pressure on the pedal.

A new type of easy-pressure clutch employs centrifugal force to increase efficiency at higher speeds. New steering mechanism makes the car still easier to handle. New, wider, roomier seats.

The New Ford V-8 for 1935 retains the V-8 engine which has demonstrated its dependability and economy in the service of more than a million owners. There are refinements, but no change in basic design. You buy premium performance when you buy this Ford V-8—full 85 horsepower and capable of 80 miles an hour. All Ford V-8 cars for 1935 come equipped with Safety Glass throughout at no additional cost.

We invite you to see this New Ford V-8 for 1935 at the showrooms of Ford dealers. You will want to ride in it—to drive it yourself. You will find it a new experience in motoring.

FORD V-8 PRICES ARE LOW

ASSEMBLY

The first assembly of the new year was held at nine o'clock on Tuesday morning. The speaker of the occasion was Rev. W. A. Erwin.

After the singing of America, Supt. Cryer made a short talk to the student body. He announced that there would be no conditional grades given on the mid-term grades. Grades will not be held up for late work any longer than Wednesday of the week following examinations. Teachers were charged to grade pupils conscientiously and to give the pupils all the grade they deserved, but no more. He urged the pupils to take report cards home promptly and to bring them back just as promptly. Grade cards are distributed on Wednesday following the completion of each six weeks work, and if pupils are not taking them home, parents are not being able to check on the work of their children.

Rev. Erwin made a short but very interesting talk charging the boys and girls to "start where you are standing and face the future with a face set like flint and the victory shall be yours." He very forcibly brought out the difference between rock and water, which he plainly illustrated. He showed that water is unstable and adjusts itself to every vessel and that rocks smash things in their way. He concluded by asking, "Are you going to be rock or water during the coming year?"

LOCALS AND PERSONALS

The following students and faculty members were away from McLean during the holidays:

Faculty

Supt. Cryer spent Christmas day in Amarillo and the remaining days in McLean.

Volume 2 No. 1

Text: "And the Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising."—Isaiah 60:3.

EPIPHANY

The sixth of January is the date for the festival of Epiphany. The term 'Epiphany" is derived from the Greek language and means "revelation, or appearance." This is the day set aside for the festival of Christ's revelation or appearance to the Gentiles represented by the wise men of the East, also known as the kings of the Orient. Epiphany is also known as the "Gentiles' Christmas."

The wise men of the East knew of the Old Testament Scriptures which contain prophecies of the coming of the Messiah. They set out on a long journey. They were earnest and persevering. They left their work, duties, families and friends. Lacking modern facilities and comforts, their journey was quite wearisome and very dangerous. They followed the special star and arrived in the metropolis Jerusalem. The residents of Jerusalem seemed to be quite ignorant of the birth of the Savior. But the wise men were not discouraged. They followed the course they took originally and traveled about six more miles and finally found their Savior in Bethlehem.

These wise men, also known as the Magi, are so prominently set before us because they were Gentiles. These Gentiles came to the light of the Gospel. "And the Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising."

The coming of the Gentiles is very significant because at Christmas time everything has a Jewish aspect: the parents of Jesus were Jews of the lineage of King David, the town of Bethlehem Ephratah, the shepherds, the Jewish rite of circumcision in the temple, the aged Simeon who spoke the wonderful words of the "Nunc Dimittis," and the prohpetess Anna. Jesus was born for the Jewish nation, but not for that nation exclusively. He was born for ALL nations in which all Gentile nations were included.

The wise men were the "first fruits" of the spacious harvest-field of the heathen nations. God the Father sent His only begotten Son, Jesus, into the world because He loved ALL the people in the world. The festival of Epiphany is celebrated especially to bring out this significant fact. Everyone who believes in this child of Bethlehem, the Savior of the whole world, will be saved eternally. Wonderful glad tidings for all nations! Christians are to go forth and teach, make disciples of, all nations, regardless of race or age. Christ wants everyone to inherit the mansions of the heavenly home and live with Him in all bliss and glory into all eternity. What a comforting thought for all of us at the beginning of this new and hopeful year of our Lord 1935! If God is on our side, who can dare to be against us and subdue us?

Let us remain firm in our Christian conviction and remain loyal to the Christ Who humbled Himself and died for us in order that we may live eternally with Him in heaven. Amen.

SURE, THEY LIKE CLEAN MOVIES

The success of "Treasure Island" is the answer to doubtful moving picture producers, who questioned that screen stories free of sex and modern crime could succeed. Now that they know, there is no reason why a hundred other stories that were read by everybody should not be given to the screen; as something delightfully new to the very young, and something welcomed in revival by the old.

Most of us, of the older division, can remember story upon story that kept our eyes to a book until we grew ashamed of the hour after midnight; or made us impatient for the next week's installment in a magazine. We may not remember the title or the author's name—but we remember the thrill of many good stories.

We can all remember ten such stories for each moving picture that made the same lasting impression.

Today, many good stories that prove "hits" in type, become pictures. But such good stories are rare. Twenty and thirty years ago fiction "hits" were not being watched, like they are today, for something good enough to warrant a chance on the screen. And we suggest that the movie magnates dig back through the old files of the Saturday Evening Post and some others, where many treasures of fiction lie buried.

We wonder if the truly clean and lovable, if sometimes "swearable" characters of Thomas Beer's unusual stories could be made as likable in "reel" life. They would probably open up a field for a new type of actor and the men might prove to be an improvement on some they give us in the pictures we see.—Community News Merchantville, N. J.

LET US NOT BE FORGOTTEN

By Theoda Hart Stackhouse,
TB Patient

Let us not be forgotten, we who wait
Sad-eyed and wistful, chained to a lonely bed.
Exiles from life by this mad jest of Fate,
Weary with lost dreams, we the living-dead.

Send us then some small token, only say
We are remembered, that somewhere hearts still yearn
At our absence, as day by weary day
Grow into months and years ere we return.

We will fight on then smiling, knowing life.
If we be not fogotten in the end
Is worth the lonely hours of pain and strife
While love abides, and we have yet a friend.
