MC, Texas community college enrollment drops

Decrease tied to economy; Odessa College finds way to gain more students

By Tessa Duvall
tduvall@mrt.com

With the city boasting the state's lowest unemployment rate, it came as no surprise to Midland College officials that fall enrollment numbers have remained stagnant for another year.

The college reports its total fall enrollment is 5,342 students, down 170 from last year and 1,221 fewer than in 2010, according to records provided by MC.

Rebecca Bell, MC dean of community relations and special events, said when the oilfield is booming, enrollment "always" decreases.

Midland College isn't alone.

Total community college enrollment across Texas is flat, if not down slightly from last year, said Steven Johnson, vice president of public affairs for the Texas Association of Community Colleges, in a phone interview.

"Community college, like all of higher ed, but particularly community colleges, are very counter-cyclical with the economy," Johnson said. "When we saw those problems in employment and the downturn in the market (around 2008-09), people came back to community colleges to get reskilled, retooled. Even the traditional students started with us because they're trying to manage costs."

Odessa College, however, implemented a "radical" new approach this fall and has reaped the rewards, Don Wood, vice president for institutional effectiveness, said in a phone interview.

SEEKING SPACE

Behind a model of the company's Lynx spacecraft, XCOR Aerospace CEO Jeff Greason chats with Midland officials before a "wall breaking" ceremony at Midland International Airport on Friday. The event marked the start of construction on renovations on the XCOR hangar that will become XCOR's Commercial Spaceflight Research and Development Center Headquarters.

From Silicon Valley to space: a new frontier

MOJAVE, Calif. — The old airplane hangar doors creaked, and then slowly began to roll open as Jeremy Voigt leaned into them. Stepping outside, he emerged into blazing sunshine.

Here, in California's Mojave desert, he's far from the home of the astronauts, Johnson Space Center. Yet Voigt, who has dreamed of reaching the stars his entire life, may be a lot closer to space than most NASA astronauts.

"Start it slow, and we'll work our way up," Voigt, 27, says.

He and a small team of engineers have braved the late summer heat to test a new fuel pump for a rocket engine built by XCOR, where Voigt works. The pump is crucial: too much fuel and the engine could melt. Too little and it won't reach space. The big concern today is making sure it doesn't leak.

Voigt has chosen to forge his own path to space, an ethos embodied by "new space" companies like XCOR, which have tired of waiting for NASA to unlock the final frontier.

The new space movement burns hottest in the Mojave desert, where long ago Chuck Yeager broke the sound barrier above its dry, desolate expanses and early NASA astronauts, including Neil Armstrong, flew the famed X-15 to the edge of space.

Popular West Texas sheriff ready for terrorists

By John MacCormack
San Antonio Express-News

Editor's note: Our Hearst sister paper sent a reporter to Midland to talk with Sheriff Gary Painter and other community members. They are sharing the story with the Reporter-Telegram.

When Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter warned recently on national morning television that Muslim terrorists were sneaking in from Mexico and that he was ready to send them to hell, most hometown folks took it in stride.

"I got a bunch of calls, across the full range of opinion, but the general reaction is, 'That's Gary being Gary,'" said County Judge Mike Bradford.

Now in his 30th year in office, Painter represents what outsiders may imagine as the prototypical West Texas lawman: A towering figure in boots and a white Tony Lama hat. He is folksy in conversation, polite to old ladies and pulls no punches with his opinions.

"He is West Texas. He states what he feels. He says things that some of us may not say publicly, but he'll stand up and say it," said Sheriff Mark Donaldson of neighboring Ector County.

Over the decades, Painter has regularly made headlines, beginning with the legal fight that preceded his first run for office in 1984 and his early clashes with other county officials, and extending to his candid opinions and unusual style of law enforcement.

During the 1980s, Painter routinely sent undercover agents posing as drug dealers across the country to make arrests set a bold goal: to open space to the floodgates of humanity. To survive, they feel, humanity must become a multi-planet species. They want to colonize the moon, Mars and beyond. And they believe they can do this by slashing the cost of spaceflight with smaller, reusable spacecraft.

SPACE

For decades new space has been science fiction, inspired by such authors as Robert Heinlein, and as tangible as words on a page. But that may finally be changing. There is innovation at places like XCOR and, increasingly, money.

A generation of tech moguls who made their fortunes during the dotcom boom — like PayPal's Elon Musk, Amazon's Jeff Bezos and Microsoft's Paul Allen — have come to new space. They're importing the culture of Silicon Valley and backing their ventures with deep pockets.

For half a century, of course, NASA has led America's forays into space. Its leaders view new space both warily, as a competitor, and hopefully, as a partner. Last week NASA chose two companies to bring its astronauts to the International Space Station. It gave Boeing, a long-time, traditional contractor, $4.2 billion. It gave considerably less, $2.6 billion, to SpaceX, the biggest of the new space kids on the block.

Regardless of NASA's support for new space, however, it's no longer the gatekeeper. In the minds of new space NASA had its chance in the 1970s, when building the space shuttle, to lower the cost of access to space.

"We're there again right now, where we were in the '70s," said Rick Tumlinson, an early acolyte of the new space movement who has founded a handful of companies, including the spacesuit maker, Orbital Outfitters.

The space shuttle, although it achieved much, proved far more expensive to fly than initial estimates.

"It was the Wizard of Oz," Tumlinson said. "There was nobody behind the curtain. But now it's moved outside the government. And frankly, it kind of saddens me, because no one is betting on the government to deliver the future any more."

Inspired by sci-fi, NASA

New space traces its roots to the heady days of the late 1960s and early 1970s, when Neil Armstrong landed on the moon and Capt. James T. Kirk explored the universe for Star Fleet.

An avid reader of science fiction, Tumlinson was muddling through Stephen F. Austin University, in the Piney Woods of East Texas, when he happened to meet Gene Roddenberry, the creator of "Star Trek."

Stay with your dream, Roddenberry advised, and never give up.

Decades later, Tumlinson is something of a godfather of new space, both entrepreneur and evangelist, preaching the gospel of new space icons like Musk and Bezos, whom he calls the dotcom cavalry.

"These guys grew up watching Apollo and 'Star Trek' and 'Star Wars,'" Tumlinson said. "Think about that time. We'd been to the moon, so we could do anything."

The tech moguls absorbed all of this as kids, says Tumlinson. "They became the geeks, and they founded the dotcoms, but inside of them there's still that little kid watching 'Star Trek' that has that dream."

XCOR's Jeremy Voigt has that dream, too. But as a twenty-something, he grew up watching "Star Trek: The Next Generation" instead of the original series.

Two years ago he'd been just another college kid, following the "astronaut blueprint" by working toward a master's degree in aerospace engineering from Purdue University, where Armstrong studied. Voigt would get the requisite credentials: a doctorate, some patents and publications, and then apply to NASA to become an astronaut.

But on the advice of a professor, he visited XCOR's cramped World War II-era hangar, with its vintage wooden rafters, in Mojave. He met the company's magnetic founder, Jeff Greason, and was offered an internship in 2012. A full-time job followed.

"I walked into XCOR, and after my first week I didn't see a need to do all of that stuff," he explained. "This place has everything I've ever wanted in a job. I get to fire rocket engines. I get to do hands-on, critical stuff for the vehicle. And oh yeah, I get to go into space."

In mid-August his boss, Greason, traveled from the California desert to Midland, a West Texas oil town that's nearly as arid. The next morning Greason, tall, bespectacled and balding, picked up a ceremonial sledgehammer. He and a handful of other Midland officials knocked out a wall at a hangar at the city's airport — purely cheeseball stuff, like groundbreakings with mayors and gold-plated shovels.

From Mojave to Midland

Although known for oil and being the boyhood home of George W. Bush, Midland decided during the last energy crunch to diversify its economy. It chose space, and two years ago struck a $10 million deal to lure XCOR from Mojave. Next year, after this hangar is renovated, the company will move into considerably larger digs in Texas. Greason likes the open air space above Midland for flight tests, and the state's less restrictive regulatory environment.

Less known than Musk or Bezos among the public at large, and certainly far less wealthy, within the new space community Greason is no less a celebrity.

A gifted engineer, he attended the California Institute of Technology and had the fortune to take a class taught by the legendary physicist Richard Feynman. Greason was at Caltech when the space shuttle Challenger broke apart in 1986. Feynman served on the panel investigating the disaster. Feynman savaged NASA in his findings, saying the agency's "safety culture" allowed management to overlook glaring problems and fly the shuttle anyway.

For a young electrical engineer learning how to find and fix problems in complex systems, NASA's failure mystified Greason.

"It really took away for me the belief that NASA was a superhuman organization of godlike beings," Greason said. "That doesn't make them not a special place. But it's part of the philosophical evolution I made to thinking: Maybe other people can do spaceflight."

Upon graduating, Greason didn't think "other people" included him. He figured there would eventually be lots of electrical things to work on in space so he took a job with Intel, where he helped invent the Pentium processor.

But the space bug never left, and in the early 1990s he stumbled onto an Internet group discussing space. That led to attending his first Space Access Conference, a hotbed of new space enthusiasts, in 1994.

"I was totally blown away," Greason recalled. "I said, 'That's it. That's what I want to do.' I really care if we get off this planet, and I don't really care if Intel has 85 or 90 percent market share next year."

He ordered $2,000 worth of rocketry books and read spacecraft journals. At the same space conference in 1997, a businessman named Gary Hudson looking for technical managers pulled Greason aside. Would he be interested in managing propulsion for Rotary Rocket, a company building a reusable orbital spacecraft?

Would he ever. Greason moved his family to Mojave. But like a lot of startups, Rotary Rocket soon ran out of money.

"We all got laid off together," he recalls of Rotary Rocket's end in 1999.

But the team didn't want to quit. They told Greason they would continue working for free until the company's next technical milestone.

"I was very moved by that, and I went and told Gary, and he turned me down," Greason continued. "He told me he wasn't interested in developing rocket engines any more. So I was not very happy to hear that, and I had to go back

Survivalist still on run 15 days after cop's death

Associated Press

CANADENSIS, Pa. — Authorities hunting for a survivalist suspected of killing a state trooper at a police barracks remained in the thick woods near his parents' house Saturday to further narrow down the search area more than two weeks after the ambush.

State Police Trooper Adam Reed said Saturday that investigators had no new details to release on the search for 31-year-old Eric Frein, who's charged with killing Cpl. Bryon Dickson on Sept. 12 and seriously wounding another trooper outside the Blooming Grove barracks.

Authorities said Friday that the hard drive of a computer used by Frein provides evidence he had been planning an attack for years. They said Frein's Internet searches included sites on how to avoid police manhunts.

Authorities believe they have Frein contained within a 5-square-mile area around his parents' home in Canadensis. He has been placed on the FBI's Most Wanted list.

Frein has managed to elude hundreds of law enforcement officials looking for him in the heavily wooded region of the Pocono Mountains, taking advantage of the difficult terrain to keep them at bay.

Associated Press

FBI along with various state police officers exit a wooded area at Buck Hill Falls in Barrett Township, Pa., where the search for Eric Frein continues Friday. Frein is suspected of fatally shooting a state trooper and wounding another at the Blooming Grove state police barracks two weeks ago.

He is believed to be armed with at least one high-powered rifle.

"I suspect he wants to have a fight with the state police, but I think that involves hiding and running since that seems to be the way he operates," State Police Lt. George Bivens said. "I expect that he'll be hiding and try to take a shot from some distance from a place of concealment, as he has done in the past."

Underscoring the danger they face as they pursue him, Bivens said Frein had experimented with explosives, citing materials that police found and interviews with people who knew him. Trackers are proceeding through the woods as though they are booby-trapped, he said. Police also think Frein might have a radio.

Help wanted: Free lawyers for immigrant children

By Amy Taxin
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — Most of the nearly 60,000 Central American children who have arrived on the U.S.-Mexico border in the last year still don't have lawyers to represent them in immigration court, and advocates are scrambling to train volunteer attorneys to help cope with the massive caseload.

With the number of unaccompanied immigrant children more than doubling this past fiscal year, the need for attorneys has surged, and it has been exacerbated by the immigration courts' decision to fast-track children's cases, holding initial hearings within a few weeks instead of months.

Immigrants can have counsel in immigration courts, but lawyers are not guaranteed or provided at government expense. Having an attorney can make a big difference: While almost half of children with attorneys were allowed to remain in the country, only 10 percent of those without representation were allowed to stay, according to an analysis of cases through June by the Transactional Records Access Clearinghouse at Syracuse University.

Efforts are underway from White Plains, New York, to New Orleans to train attorneys at private law firms on the country's byzantine immigration laws and how to work with traumatized, Spanish-speaking children, many of whom are fleeing violence — a far cry from the corporate clients most deal with on a daily basis.

"We're doing pretty well on finding willing lawyers. We've got to get them trained, we've got to get them matched to that child," said Reid Trautz, director of the American Immigration Lawyers Association's practice and professionalism center. "It just takes time."

Last month, Vice President Joe Biden urged lawyers to increase efforts to take on the children's cases. Since then, the cities of San Francisco and New York have each announced plans to allocate roughly $2 million to help provide more lawyers for unaccompanied minors. California has appropriated $3 million toward the effort.

About 800 immigration lawyers have signed up to volunteer on the cases, the immigration lawyers association said.

So have many other attorneys without any background in immigration law. They are being trained and paired with experienced immigration practitioners, who serve as mentors.

XCOR

and tell the crew the news. I went back to my office and continued packing up. And after about an hour I got called in by a slightly smaller group."

At this point Greason stops speaking, and when he starts again his voice is soft, breaking up. Jeff Greason, one of the most brilliant rocket scientists in the world, is trying very hard not to cry.

"They said, 'OK we're still not ready to quit, so what are you going to do, boss?' I said I didn't know, but if they all felt that way about it I would see what we could do."

Small companies, big plans

What he did was found XCOR and, for about a year, he and his small team used credit cards to buy parts. Eventually some small investors came on board.

Fifteen years later, shades of those difficult early days remain. In the corner of the company's conference room are four well-worn seats pulled from some old aircraft. Back when furniture was at a premium for the struggling company, Greason explains, the chairs were plucked from the boneyard, a final resting place for more than 1,000 abandoned aircraft on the north side of the Mojave flight line.

Since the company's beginning, XCOR has built a succession of rocket ships culminating with the Lynx, which is designed to reach space five minutes after taking off from a runway, provide a few minutes of weightlessness, and then glide back to Earth.

Just outside XCOR's conference room is the body of the 30-foot winged spacecraft. Engineers are working on it. Next to it, on the other side of the hangar, is the rocket, propelled by four main engines. More tinkering.

About 70 people now work for XCOR, up from two dozen a few years ago, as they get closer to the first flight in a year or two. Three-time NASA astronaut Rick Searfoss will be in the cockpit.

It may sound like a simple sub-orbital space plane, but the magic of the Lynx is that it would require almost no maintenance between flights, and could fly to space four times a day. Like a car, you put in gas and go. Its fuel cost is proprietary, but the liquid oxygen burned will probably cost a few thousand dollars per flight.

Larger companies with wealthier, more famous backers may get more publicity, but it is smaller ones like XCOR that embody the new space movement.

Greason envisions several versions of the Lynx, extending to orbital spaceflights and beyond. Most nights, at his home in the mountains above Mojave, he sits in his library until about midnight, thinking and planning about how to go cheaper, faster and farther.

He may not succeed, of course. The landscape of new space is littered with failures.

When workers at XCOR, Scaled Composites, Stratolaunch, Virgin Galactic or any of the dozen new space companies at Mojave drive to their offices, it's impossible to miss the symbolism at the heart of the spaceport.

There, a prototype of Rotary Rocket's spacecraft towers 62 feet above Legacy Park. Asked why he advises XCOR interns never to touch the spacecraft, Greason laughs heartily.

"That's a little bit of a local superstition," he said. "That everybody who has touched that thing has lost money."

It remains to be seen whether the dotcom cavalry, each with a different approach to cheaply reaching orbit, can succeed in space financially as they did in Silicon Valley.

TODAY IN MIDLAND

This day in Midland history

On Sept. 28, 1995, all five passengers on board a World War II twin-engine bomber died when the vintage CAF bomber crashed in far southeast Ector County (18 miles southwest of Midland International) during an air show practice run.

On Sept. 28, 2012, The National Weather Service reported 4.86 inches of rain — the third most in the city's history and the most in more than 44 years — fell at Midland International Airport. MISD called off school due to the weather.

The Midland Police Department will teach about bike safety, and firefighters will talk about emergency response and show off a Midland Fire Department truck. There will be a station that will make ID badges for kids, food, a face painter and the "Bike Blender."

The first 150 kids to complete the course will receive a free bike helmet.

Man who raised $55K for potato salad throws party

Associated Press

COLUMBUS, Ohio — An Ohio man who raised $55,000 in a joking crowd-funding appeal to pay for his first attempt at making potato salad threw a huge public party Saturday that promised "peace, love and potato salad."

PotatoStock 2014 was held in downtown Columbus and featured bands, food trucks, beer vendors and, yes, plenty of potato salad. With more than 3,000 pounds of potatoes, the charity-minded party was open to people of all ages.

Zack Brown had jokingly sought $10 on Kickstarter in July to buy potato salad ingredients, but his mission drew global attention and earned tens of thousands of dollars.

The Idaho Potato Commission and corporate sponsors donated potato salad supplies for the party.

Brown is partnering with the Columbus Foundation to support charities that fight hunger and homelessness. The account started with $20,000 in post-campaign corporate donations and will grow after proceeds from PotatoStock are added.

"His fund will have potential way after this potato salad is forgotten," Lisa Jolley, the foundation's director of donors and development, told The Columbus Dispatch.

Brown told the newspaper that he intends to "do the most good that I can."

Zack Brown, the man behind the potato salad Kickstarter campaign, smiles while covered in potatoes Sept. 18 in Columbus, Ohio. Brown is planning PotatoStock 2014, an all-ages, charity-minded party Saturday in downtown Columbus featuring bands, food trucks, beer vendors, potato-sack races and definitely potato salad. His effort on Kickstarter in early July to buy potato salad ingredients took on a life of its own and attracted worldwide attention as the amount grew. The 31-year-old eventually raised $55,492.

sessions per semester instead of one, 16-week session and an increased demand for dual-credit classes combined with a strong push for retention has led to Odessa College seeing a 192-student increase over last fall, or 62 students more than fall 2010.

Midland College

Bell said MC experienced a "huge" growth spurt in the 2000s. Though MC's enrollment tends to be higher in the spring, the college surpassed 6,000 students in a fall semester for the first time in 2009, according to Reporter-Telegram archives. Fall enrollment then peaked in 2010 with 6,563 students and has decreased steadily since then, according to records provided by the college.

Johnson with TACC said community college enrollment in 2011 increased statewide by 21 percent over the previous two-year period. The last few fall semesters have shown some decreases — about 12,000-students fewer in fall 2013 than fall 2012, according to the Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board — but remain 16 percent above the 2008-09 statewide total. Overall, he said, colleges aren't losing students at a huge rate, but instead are leveling off following the sharp increases a few years ago.

Enrollment trends are driven in part by the region and economy that a college operates in, Johnson said. The Permian Basin can be especially tough because so much of what community colleges do is workforce training.

"It's hard to imagine if you're 20 years old and you're looking at making $25 an hour in the oil patch as a starting employee with hardly any experience, why go back and get trained for something?" he said.

Bell said she believes with an increase in income, more families are choosing to send their teens directly to a four-year university instead. When times are tough, to save money high school graduates often attend MC for two years before transferring.

MC has also steadily lost dual-credit students from within local ISDs. There were 1,078 in fall 2010, compared to 848 this fall. Bell said the college is constantly addressing its recruitment strategies, including for dual credit.

"We're really working closely with the local high schools to try to make students and their parents aware of the benefits of dual credit," she said. "There are so many great advantages of dual credit in that students get college credit at the same time they get high school credit. It really helps save the parents money and it introduces the students to college."

MC has seen some areas of growth despite the overall decline. Bell said some career-oriented programs, such as energy technology, fire technology and cosmetology, continue to do well for the college.

Odessa College

Odessa College can count itself among the state's growing two-year institutions, according to OC records, joining those primarily located in major metropolitan areas.

Wood said the college has set records across the board, including total enrollment, first-time in college students and dual-credit students.

This fall, the college implemented two sessions of eight-week courses instead of the traditional one, 16-week session. Wood said this provides students more options than a traditional semester. Students can now take two classes per session and they're easier to schedule and manage than three or four courses during a 16-week semester, he said.

"It gave everybody more options. Or, at least that's what it was on paper," he said. "Until we did it, we didn't know whether anybody would come. ... It has proven to be just an enormous thing that the students want. We see it with this huge enrollment change."

Enrollment for the second session is underway, and the "numbers are growing every day," Wood said. OC could end up with a total of 6,000 students this fall.

OC also saw significant growth in its dual-credit program for Ector County ISD high school students, specifically in its career, technical and workforce education dual-credit courses. Enrollment spiked to 517 this fall, an increase of about 300 from last year.

"What's extraordinary about the career-tech skyrocket is this is attracting students who otherwise, in many cases — not every student, and I don't want to exaggerate — but in many cases these are students you would otherwise classify as being at-risk of dropping out of high school," Wood said. "They're finding in these programs — culinary arts, automotive, criminal justice — they're finding that these are extraordinary opportunities for them to stay in high school and get a certificate and create careers for themselves."

Wood said the growth comes from word-of-mouth as parents and students have told others about the program and from working with ECISD leaders.

OC also has the highest in-class retention rate in the nation. Wood said that when students begin a class at OC, there is a 95 percent chance they'll earn a grade for the course. Before the implementation of the retention program in 2011, in-class retention was about 80 or 85 percent.

"This is extraordinarily exciting for all of us at Odessa College," Wood said of OC's recent successes. "This is an effort we've dedicated ourselves to, and we are incredibly excited for the community, the students. Again, we are learning from our students as to what things we can do to help them gain an education. There's just no words to express how exciting this is."

Fast facts

■ Midland College enrollment grew from 6,338 students in fall 2009 to 6,563 in 2010, but has decreased every fall since for a total of 1,221 students fewer now than in 2010.

■ MC has 848 students in dual credit, down 230 from fall 2010.

■ Percentage-wise, MC has more full-time students now than it had in the last five years. The 1,628 students represent 30 percent of all students enrolled at MC. This is a decrease of 67 students since 2010, but an increase of 192 since 2013.

■ 80 percent of MC's students are 25 or younger, and 922 students are first-time in college students.

■ Odessa College enrollment is up 192 students from last fall, and 62 students since fall 2010. It could reach 6,000 students for the second session this fall.

■ OC's career, technical and workforce education dual-credit enrollment grew by more than 300 between fall 2013 and fall 2014. CTWE dual credit now makes up nearly 39 percent of all dual-credit students.

■ OC in-class retention has grown to 95 percent following the implementation of a new program in 2011, making it the highest in-class retention rate in the nation.

■ Community college enrollment statewide is about 18 percent above the 2008-09 enrollment level. In 2011, enrollment across Texas increased 21 percent over the previous two-year period.

■ Community colleges statewide account for 54 percent of all public higher education and 70 percent of all freshmen in Texas.

and seize cash and assets. While they collected more than $10 million, they also upset the county commissioners.

A decade later, he created a multi-county emergency response team, equipped with combat vehicles, which irked the Border Patrol and local elected officials in the Big Bend region.

Painter also headed a 17-county drug task force in the 1990s that ultimately was defunded and disbanded because of allegations of mismanagement and financial irregularities.

No one was ever charged, and Painter was not implicated in any wrongdoing.

His recent warning about Muslim terrorists lurking in Mexico was not the first.

In 1986, he announced that he had identified cells of terrorists in Chihuahua, Mexico.

When federal agencies seemed to ignore the information, Painter complained he was being treated "like an old country hick sheriff."

A year later, his undercover agents arranged a televised bust of a reputed Iranian arms dealer trying to buy stolen aviation parts at the Midland airport. The feds were again miffed, and the alleged dealer, Victor Manuel Fonseca, was never convicted of any offenses.

Despite his mixed track record, Painter defends his expansive style of law enforcement.

"You cannot stick your head in the sand and stay within your own boundaries. We're a hub for narcotics and criminal activity," he said.

An avowed supporter, if not a member, of the John Birch Society, Painter is at home in a politically conservative part of Texas where big government is often suspect and federal partnerships can be uneasy.

"I think the federal government is pretty screwed up. The current administration is too far to the left. There is a socialist agenda," he said.

Just last year, Painter said he would refuse to enforce any directives coming from President Barack Obama to take privately owned guns, because in his opinion, such executive orders would be unconstitutional.

And while some have criticized the two bulking armored personnel carriers his department owns, they proved their worth recently.

Two years ago, after a deputy in a neighboring county was killed and a long standoff resulted, Painter and his heavy-duty hardware helped resolve the crisis, said Reagan County Sheriff Jeff Garner.

"Without anyone's request, he sent his personnel here along with their armored personnel carrier and it proved critical. They used the carrier to get us close to the house," Garner said. The suspect surrendered.

And, he said, when Painter speaks out about threats, he speaks for many.

"I don't think you could talk to a sheriff in West Texas who doesn't feel like he does. We all feel we're here to protect human life. When it comes to threats, whether its ISIS or home-grown terrorists, we've got our rifles loaded and we're ready to go," he said.

"You cannot stick your head in the sand and stay within your own boundaries."

Gary Painter,
Midland County sheriff

Military background

Born in a rural "co-op" hospital in Amherst and raised in the Panhandle cotton country, Painter graduated from Plainview High School in 1965. After a year in business college, he joined the Marines and served two tours in Vietnam.

After leaving the service in 1970, he worked as a state trooper and then as a deputy in Culberson and Presidio Counties, before coming to Midland first with the city police and later joining the sheriff department in 1982.

Two years later, while a lieutenant in the sheriff's department, he decided to quit his job and run in the Republican primary against his boss, Dallas Smith. However, because the party chairman was out of town that day, the last day to file, complications arose.

It took a lawsuit and a ruling by the Texas Supreme Court to get Painter's name on the ballot. Riding the publicity generated by his legal fight, Painter trounced Smith in the primary and again in the general election when Smith ran as a write-in candidate.

And despite the critical articles that sometimes appear in out-of-town newspapers, and past bitter feuds with other county officials, he has been winning elections against all comers for the past three decades. Now 67, he says he'll run at least once more before retiring.

Although Painter spent the early years wrangling with the county commissioners over money and control of his department, going so far to sue them over their alleged meddling, that acrimony ended long ago.

These days, it's well near impossible to hear a critical word about him in Midland. Or, in the case of local defense lawyers who reportedly detest him, any words at all.

Even the county's Democratic Party chairman says nice things about a Republican warhorse who trampled the few sacrificial Democrat lambs sent to face him in general elections.

"I can't fault him for how he has represented his office for as long as he's been in office," said David Rosen, an oilfield geologist.

"When George W. Bush ran for office, I spoke with a lot of newspapermen, and I was the only person here who was critical of him, but that's not the case with Gary Painter," he added.

Building an ark for the Anthropocene

By Jim Robbins
N.Y. Times News Service

We are barreling into the Anthropocene, the sixth mass extinction in the history of the planet. A recent study published in the journal Science concluded that the world's species are disappearing as much as 1,000 times faster than the rate at which species naturally go extinct. It's a one-two punch — on top of the ecosystems we've broken, extreme weather from a changing climate causes even more damage. By 2100, researchers say, one-third to one-half of all Earth's species could be wiped out.

As a result, efforts to protect species are ramping up as governments, scientists and nonprofit organizations try to build a modern version of Noah's Ark. The new ark certainly won't come in the form of a large boat, or even always a place set aside. Instead it is a patchwork quilt of approaches, including assisted migration, seed banks and new preserves and travel corridors based on where species are likely to migrate as seas rise or food sources die out.

The questions are complex. What species do you save? The ones most at risk? Charismatic animals, such as lions or bears or elephants? The ones most likely to survive? The species that hold the most value for us?

One initiative, the Intergovernmental Platform on Biodiversity and Ecosystem Services formed in 2012 by the governments of 121 countries, aims to protect and restore species in wild areas and to protect species like bees that carry out valuable ecosystem service functions in the places people live. Some three-quarters of the world's food production depends primarily on bees.

"We still know very little about what could or should be included in the ark and where," said Walter Jetz, an ecologist at Yale involved with the project. Species are being wiped out even before we know what they are.

Another project, the EDGE of Existence, run by the Zoological Society of London, seeks to protect the most unusual wildlife at highest risk. These are species that evolved on their own for so long that they are very different from other species. Among the species the project has helped to preserve are the tiny bumblebee bat and the golden-rumped elephant shrew.

While the traditional approach to protecting species is to buy land, preservation of the right habitat can be a moving target since it's not known how species will respond to a changing climate.

To complete the maps of where life lives, scientists have enlisted the crowd. A crowdsourcing effort called the Global Biodiversity Information Facility identifies and curates biodiversity data — such as photos of species taken with a smartphone — to show their distribution and then makes the information available online. That is especially helpful to researchers in developing countries with limited budgets. Another project, Lifemapper, at the University of Kansas Biodiversity Institute, uses the data to understand where a species might move as its world changes.

"We know that species don't persist long in fragmented areas, and so we try and reconnect those fragments," said Stuart L. Pimm, a professor of conservation at Duke University and head of a nonprofit organization called SavingSpecies. One of his group's projects in the Colombian Andes identified a forest that contains a carnivorous mammal that some have described as a cross between a house cat and a teddy bear, called an olinguito, new to science. Using crowd-sourced data, "we worked with local conservation groups and helped them buy land, reforest the land and reconnect pieces," Pimm said.

Group names candidates it supports

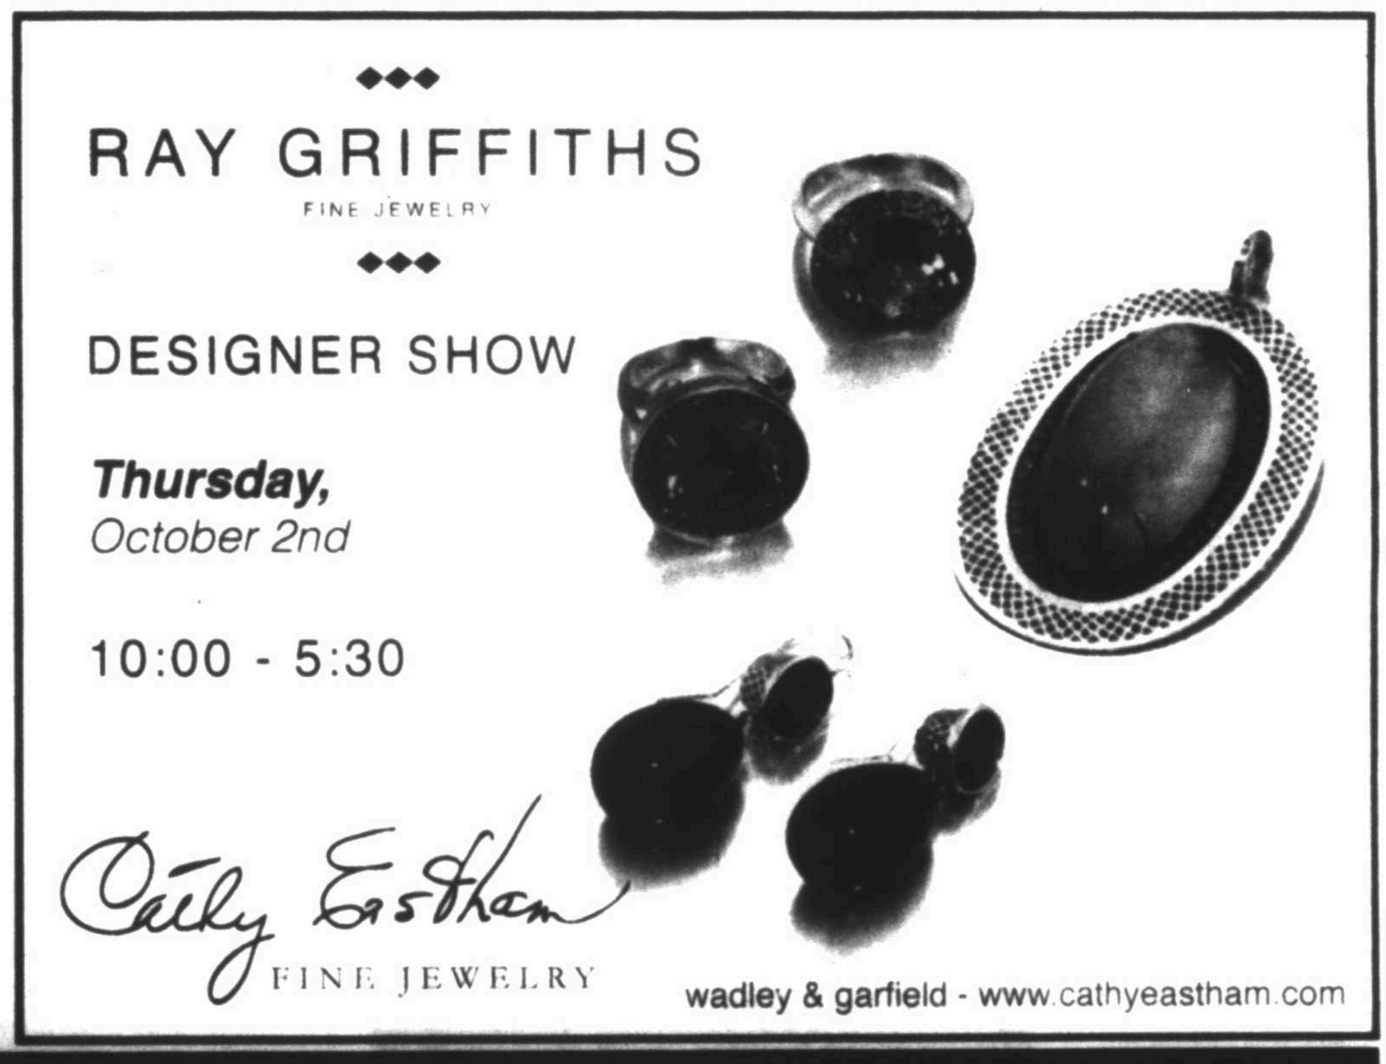

By Rachel La Corte
Associated Press

SEATTLE — A political action group formed by billionaire California environmentalist Tom Steyer announced Wednesday it will spend money to support Democratic candidates in at least two key legislative races in Washington state.

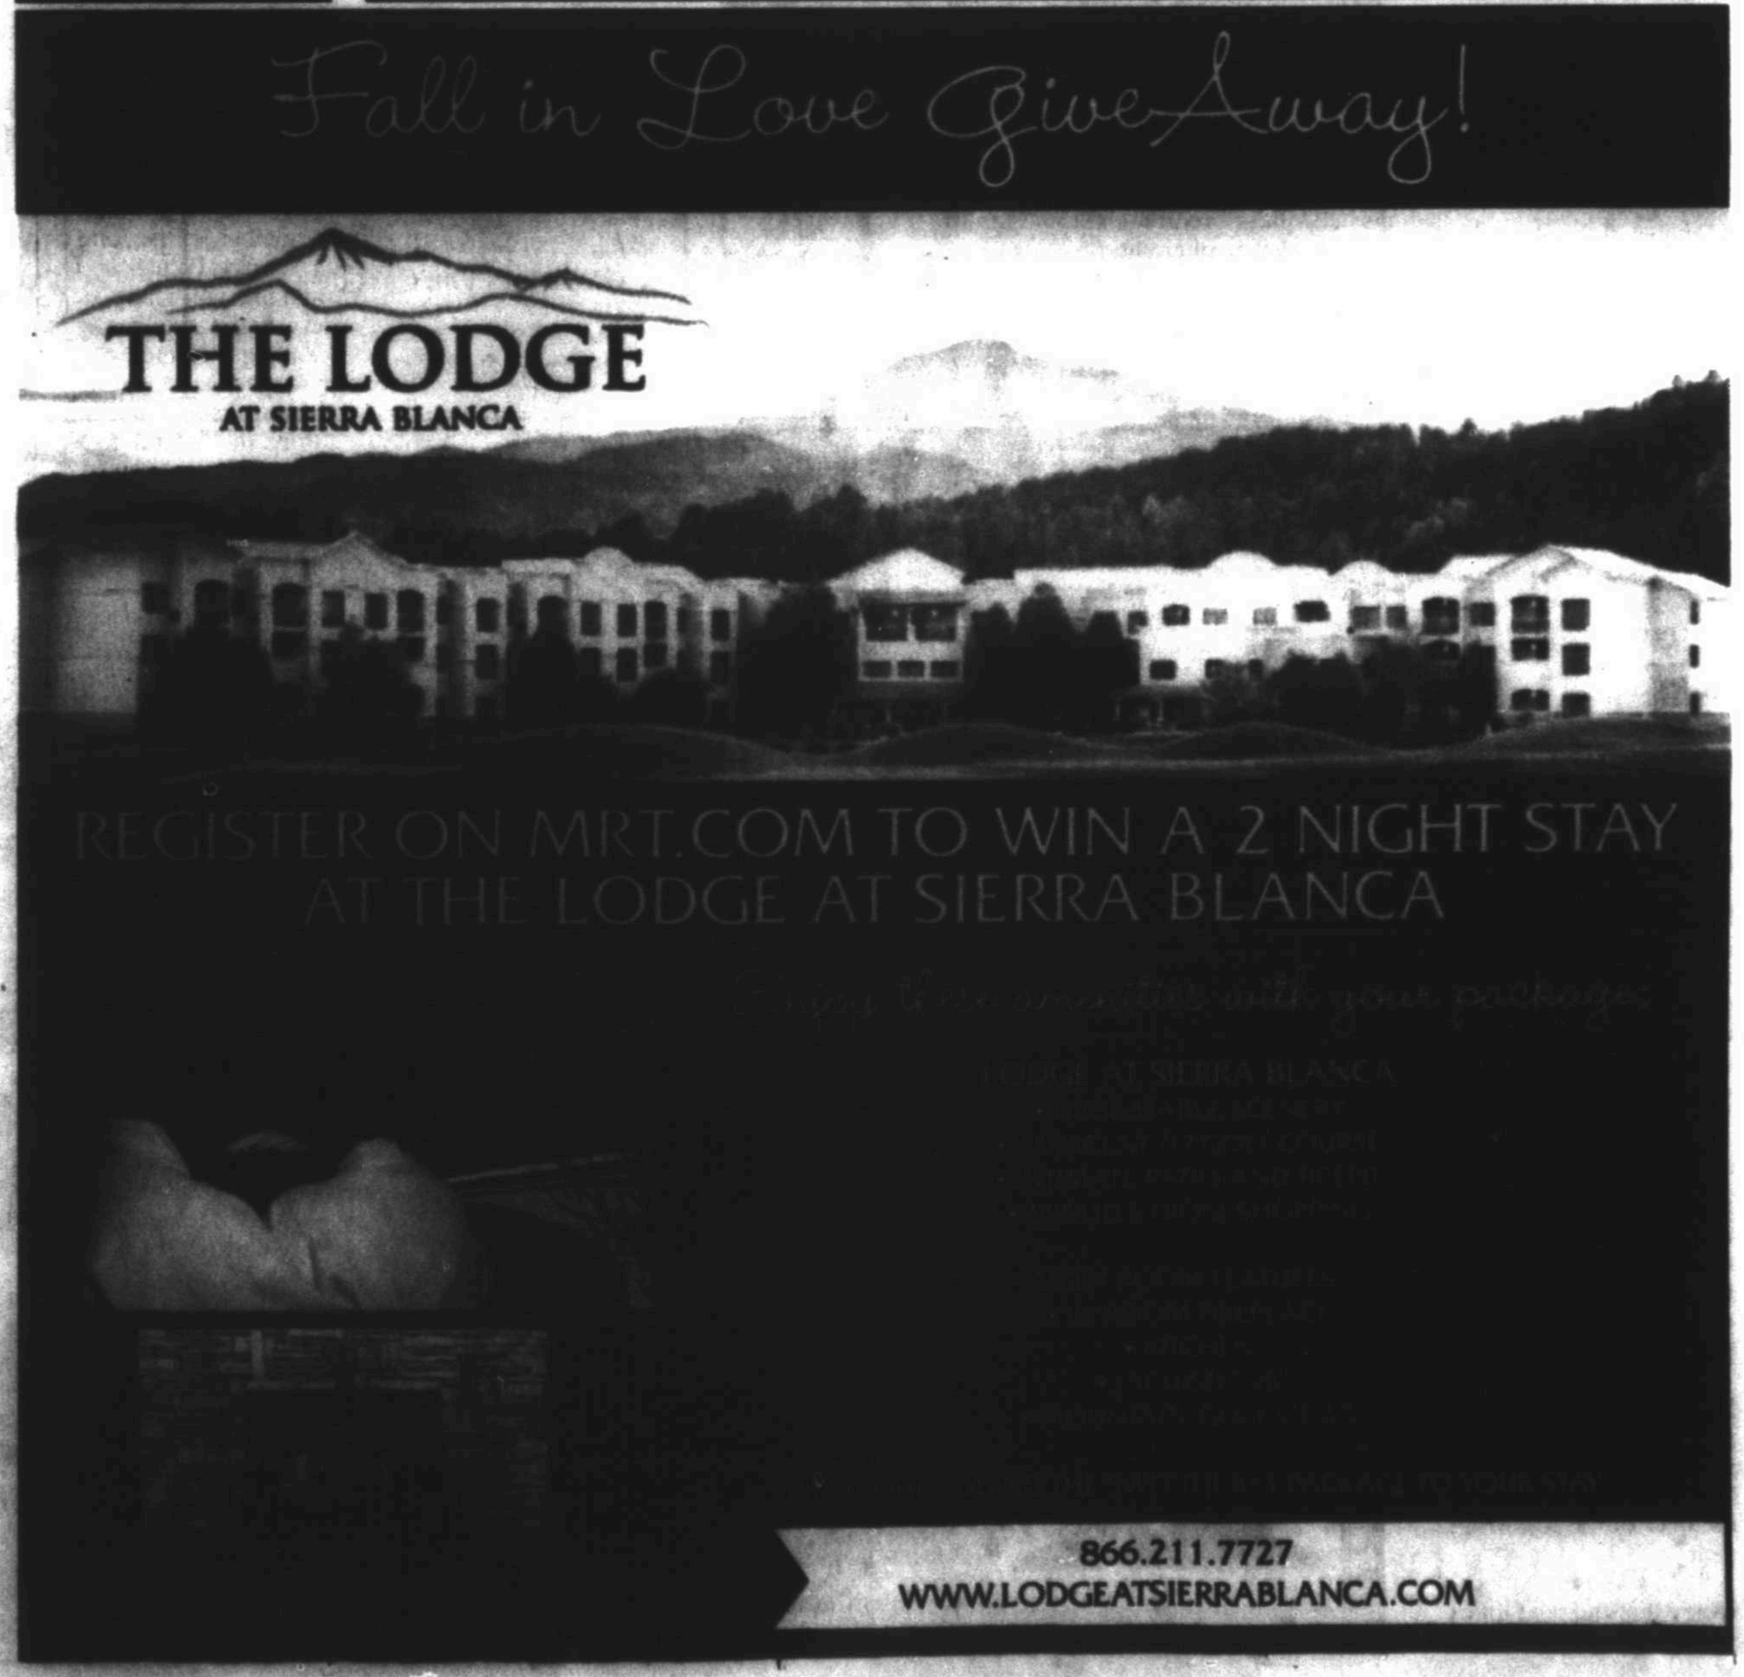

NextGen Climate said its support would be focused on two Senate contests: one in Pierce County between Democratic Rep. Tami Green and incumbent Republican Sen. Steve O'Ban, and the other in King County between the Senate's main Republican budget writer, Sen. Andy Hill, and Democratic challenger Matt Isenhower.

Those two races are among a handful that could decide control of the 49-member Senate, which is currently controlled by a coalition of 24 Republicans and two Democrats.

NextGen Climate did not rule out involvement in other races in Washington state, and the group also said it would be working in Oregon on get-out-the-vote efforts on two legislative races.

Why rate hikes are good news for stocks

By Steve Rothwell
Associated Press

NEW YORK — It's no surprise that the prospect of a Federal Reserve rate hike worries stock investors.

The Fed's unprecedented economic stimulus has in large part driven a surge in stock prices since 2009. The central bank has bought trillions of dollars of bonds and kept short-term interest rates close to zero. That's allowed businesses and consumers to refinance their debt at lower rates, freeing up cash to spend.

But if history is a guide, investors have nothing to fear.

In the nine instances since 1955 that the Fed has started raising rates after a recession, the Standard & Poor's 500 index has risen by an average of 58 percent between the first hike and the peak of the market, according to LPL Financial, an independent broker-dealer based in Boston.

The Fed is set to end its bond purchases in October and most economists expect the first short-term rate hike by mid-2015.

These early increases, analysts say, are unlikely to derail the current bull market for stocks, because the Fed would be raising rates in response to a growing economy.

"Rising interest rates are usually a symptom of the success of the economy, and companies are benefiting from it," said Seth Masters, chief investment officer for Bernstein Global Wealth Management. "Generally, that's pretty good if you're a stock investor."

Rising rates, rising stocks

Research from Burt White and Jason Nicastro at LPL shows that after an initial bout of volatility, stocks typically rise along with rates.

The last time the Fed raised rates was 2004. The market flinched at first, with the S&P 500 dropping 3.4 percent in July after rates rose from 1 percent to 1.25 percent. The index then climbed for another three years, gaining 37 percent between the first rate increase and the market's peak in October 2007.

Stocks rise when the Fed lifts rates enough to contain inflation, but not by so much that the hikes suffocate borrowing and lending. If the economy continues to expand, the benefits of stronger growth outweigh any headwind from higher borrowing costs.

A healthier economy also means stronger corporate earnings, which drive stock prices, said Jim McDonald, chief investment strategist at Northern Trust Asset Management.

Upcoming hikes are expected to be small and gradual, so they don't choke off growth, says Brad Sorensen, a director of market and sector research at Charles Schwab.

The median short-term rate supported by Fed policymakers at the end of next year is 1.38 percent, up from a range of zero to 0.25 percent currently.

Risks

Of course, the Fed won't always read the economy right, and that's what makes stock investors nervous.

Four of the five previous bull markets since 1970 ended as investors got spooked by a recession, or the anticipation of one, and sold stocks. And what causes recessions? In three of the past five, it was the Fed hiking interest rates to slow inflation.

Typically, though, the problems for the economy and stock market don't come until after the Fed has hiked rates a number of times, not early in the process.

The last cycle of rate hikes topped out at 5.25 percent, with the final increase coming in June 2006. Stocks peaked in October of the following year.

Still, some investors worry that the next hikes will defy historical patterns because of the Fed's unprecedented stimulus.

Once the central bank ends its third round of quantitative easing after its next meeting that starts Oct. 28, its balance sheet will stand at close to $4.5 trillion, about five times its size from before the financial crisis.

"A pessimist could say 'well, it's going to be different this time because the market's going to be inflated by all the stimulus from the Fed,'" Northern Trust's McDonald said.

Like Sorenson, though, he thinks the most likely scenario is that the Fed will raise rates gradually, the economy will continue expanding, and stocks will keep rising.

Some parts of the market are more vulnerable to rising rates:

■ Dividend-rich shares of utilities, phone and consumer staples companies could get hurt, says James Liu, Global Market Strategist for J.P. Morgan Funds. Investors typically buy these safe-and-steady stocks when they are worried about a slowing economy. This year, they have been buying them for income because interest rates are low. Utilities have gained 9.3 percent, compared with 6.8 percent for the S&P 500.

■ High-yield bonds, one of the riskiest parts of the debt market, are another worry for Liu. This debt is issued by companies that are more likely to default. If rates rise, the probability of companies defaulting also increases.

Investors will listen for more clues to the Fed's rate strategy at its next policy meeting in late October. Until more is known, investors may be in for a bumpy ride.

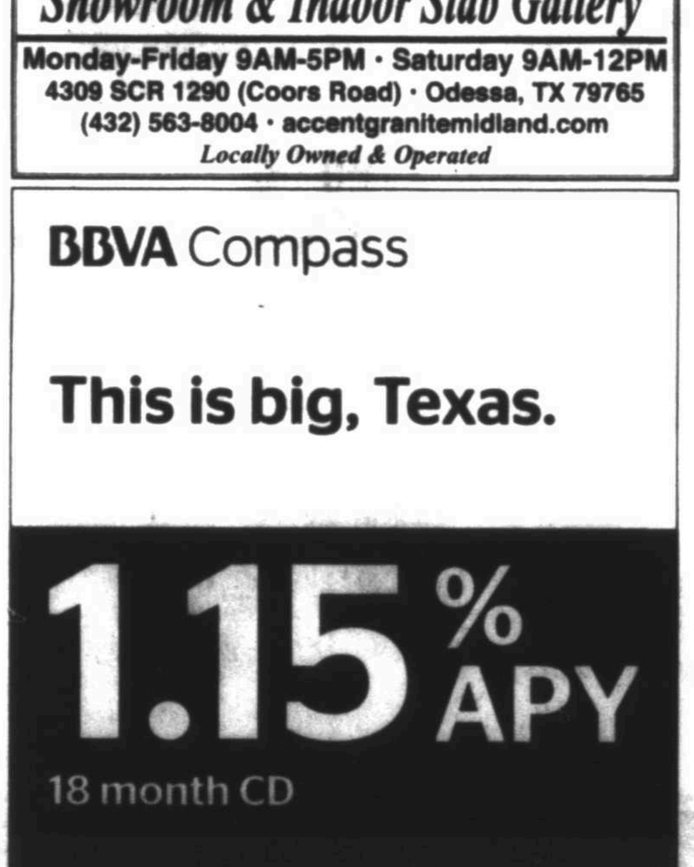

"We're going to be right back where we started in six weeks," Liu said. "So, it's not over yet."

Specialist Jay Woods is reflected in a screen at his post that shows five years of the Dow Jones industrial average, on the floor of the New York Stock Exchange, July 3. History shows higher interest rates don't always upend stocks. The Fed is set to end its bond purchases in October and most economists expect the first short-term rate hike by mid-2015. These early increases, analysts say, are unlikely to derail the current bull market for stocks, because the Fed is raising rates in response to a growing economy.

Judge refuses to halt fracturing in Nevada

By Scott Sonner
Associated Press

RENO, Nev. — A federal judge has refused to block the release of oil and gas leases in Nevada that critics say will be used for hydraulic fracturing that could harm sage grouse and cause more environmental damage than the Bureau of Land Management admits.

U.S. District Judge Miranda Du ruled she has no authority to grant opponents' request for an emergency order that would prevent the BLM from formally issuing the leases in an area stretching across about 270 square miles of central Nevada.

Glade Hall, a lawyer representing the Reese River Basin Citizens Against Fracking, said this week they are considering refiling their complaint.

The coalition of ranchers, farmers and others says the BLM has abused its authority by limiting public comment and failing to conduct an adequate review of the potential impacts of the fracturing.

Fracturing involves blasting water, sand and chemicals deep into underground rock formations to free oil and gas.

Some of the drilling could occur near key habitat for the sage grouse, which the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service currently is considering protecting under the Endangered Species Act.

"The new fracturing threat in Nevada further imperils the greater sage grouse, making ESA listing even more needed and likely," said Dan Patterson, a Nevada-based ecologist for the Center for Biological Diversity, which petitioned for the listing and is protesting the development.

The citizens group based in Battle Mountain says that besides wildlife threats, the fracturing could suck millions of gallons of water from Nevada's high desert and undermine the region's seismic stability about 160 miles northeast of Reno.

Hall said BLM's assumptions there will be little impact are based almost exclusively on unrealistic expectations that the little interest shown in Nevada's oil and gas historically will continue. He said the government is ignoring a recently discovered shale deposit running from southeast Nevada into Utah that some believe could become one of the nation's most valuable.

BLM argues that while it completed the sale of the leases in July, it retains discretion as to whether it will actually issue any of them.

"There currently is no proposal to engage in hydraulic fracturing," Justice Department lawyer Dominika Tarczynska told Du in federal court in Reno earlier this month. She said the agency is still considering protests challenging the leases and could place additional stipulations on any development.

"Until that is completed, there is no final agency action," she said.

Hall insisted BLM's argument that it may not actually follow through with issuing the leases is a legal smoke screen. He said BLM has supplemented some of the flawed environmental assessment with additional information that was never subject to public comment.

"It is simply a prop for a decision that already has been made," Hall said.

Du acknowledged in her Sept. 8 ruling the claim that BLM's actions to date suggest "it is prepared to defend its inevitable decision to issue the leases."

But "until BLM completes its decision-making process, its decision is not subject to judicial review," the judge wrote.

Hall told The Associated Press that Du was "correct in her ruling."

"But the game the BLM played in this case does not serve the public interest in being informed about environmental consequences of federal actions at a point in time when the public can intelligently participate in the decision-making process," he said.

US consumer sentiment index reaches 14-month high

By Christopher S. Rugabar

Associated Press

A shopper checks out an item for sale at a Costco in Plano, June 4. The University of Michigan issued its monthly index of consumer sentiment for September on Friday.

WASHINGTON — A measure of U.S. consumer confidence reached its highest level since July 2013, led by greater optimism that the economy will grow and incomes will rise.

The University of Michigan said Friday that its index of consumer sentiment rose to 84.6 in September from 82.5 in August. That's the second highest level in the past seven years, although the index has rarely topped 85 since the Great Recession. Before the downturn, it typically stood above 90.

Still, the sunnier outlook could spur consumers to spend more, which would accelerate economic growth. Consumer spending accounts for about 70 percent of economic activity. But spending growth has been subdued since the recession ended in 2009, averaging at an annual rate of 2 percent. It usually rises above 3 percent in a healthy economy.

Other measures also indicate that consumers' outlook is brightening.

The Conference Board's consumer confidence index increased to a seven-year high last month.

A big reason Americans have been spending less is that their paychecks have barely kept up with inflation over the past five years. Consumers are now starting to anticipate larger raises: More households expect their incomes to rise in the coming year than at any other time in the past six years.

The typical household expects its incomes to increase 1.1 percent, the most since late 2008, the Michigan survey found. More optimism about wage gains could also drive more spending. Before the recession, Americans generally expected pay gains at about 2 percent to 3 percent a year.

Faster growth may be fueling the more bullish outlook. The economy expanded at a 4.6 percent annual rate in the April-June quarter, the government says, the fastest pace in more than two years.

Economy's Q2 rebound was even faster than thought

By Martin Crutsinger
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The U.S. economy's bounce-back last quarter from a dismal winter was even faster than previously thought, a sign that growth will likely remain solid for rest of the year.

The economy as measured by gross domestic product grew at a 4.6 percent annual rate in the April-June quarter, the Commerce Department said Friday. It was the fastest pace in more than two years and higher than the government's previous estimate of 4.2 percent.

The upward revision reflected stronger-than-expected business investment and exports last quarter.

The healthy second-quarter growth marked a sharp rebound from the January-March quarter, when the economy shrank at a 2.1 percent rate in the midst of a brutal winter that idled factories and kept consumers at home.

Wall Street cheered the upbeat economic report, which helped spur the Dow Jones industrial average to a 1 percent gain.

As the third quarter nears an end, economists envision a strengthening economy through the end of 2014 and into 2015. Many think the economy is growing in the current July-September quarter at a rate of around 3 percent.

Sal Guatieri, senior economist at BMO Capital Markets, is slightly more optimistic than most. He said a brighter outlook for business investment spending and other good economic reports had led him to revise his GDP forecast to 3.2 percent growth for the July-September period, up from 2.8 percent earlier.

"The American economy is firing on virtually all cylinders and cruising at a decidedly stronger rate than in recent years," Guatieri said.

Friday's report on GDP — the economy's total output of goods and services — was the government's third and final estimate for the second quarter.

The final upward revision was driven by new-found strength in business investment, which grew at an annual rate of 9.7 percent last quarter thanks to higher spending on structures and equipment. The government's previous such estimate had been 8.1 percent

Exports also helped boost the economy. The data showed that exports grew at an 11.1 percent rate in the second quarter, stronger than 10.1 percent in its earlier estimate.

Consumer spending, which accounts for more than two-thirds of economic activity, grew at a 2.5 percent annual rate. That figure was unchanged from the previous estimate. But it represents twice the 1.2 percent growth in consumer spending in the first quarter.

The surge of activity this spring was in part a turnaround from the harsh winter, which disrupted factory production and kept consumers away from stores.

Challengers low on ballot find their influence rising in several states

By Jonathan Martin
New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — In an election year shaped by voter anger toward the political establishment, the outcome of an unusually large number of close Senate and governor's races could be determined by the outside role of third-party candidates.

The potential spoilers include a quixotic former three-term senator, a pizza delivery man and an Alaskan whose name, Fish, summons a favored native food. They represent independents, Libertarians and other parties that have suddenly become relevant — and could affect the balance of power in Congress and decide who runs the governor's offices in several states.

"If people don't like their choices with the Republican candidate or the Democratic candidate, then you're going to see a spurt in third-party candidates, so they can definitely affect outcomes," said Sen. John Cornyn, R-Texas.

To mitigate the impact of Libertarian candidates in North Carolina and other states, Republicans are enlisting Sen. Rand Paul of Kentucky to appeal to Libertarian-leaning voters. The U.S. Chamber of Commerce last week recorded commercials featuring Paul, which will air in closely contested states.

Democrats are sending the first lady, Michelle Obama, to Maine to rally support among liberal-leaning voters for Mike Michaud, the Democratic nominee for governor. Michaud is concerned about losing votes to an independent candidate in his race to unseat Gov. Paul R. LePage, a Republican.

"It's much more a part of our strategic decisions now versus four years ago or 10 years ago because they're going to get some of the vote," said Fred Yang, a Democratic pollster. "The environment out there is more conducive to another option because of record-high disapproval ratings of Congress."

Polls have a history of overstating the percentage that minor-party candidates eventually win on Election Day. But strategists in both parties are not counting on that, taking procedural steps designed to include or bar third-party candidates from debates, and even pursuing legal action to address who will be on the ballot.

With millions being spent on TV advertising in states with tight races, and much of it harshly negative, consultants say a sour electorate may respond by turning to a third-party alternative.

In a New York Times/CBS News poll conducted Sept. 12-15, just 5 percent of voters said most members of Congress deserved re-election while 87 percent said it was time for new people.

Overall, the contempt for Congress is likely to benefit Republicans because the president's party historically loses seats in midterm elections. But in states with some of the closest races, hard-line conservatives could register their unhappiness with establishment-aligned Republicans by supporting Libertarians.

In North Carolina, for example, Sean Haugh, the Libertarian nominee for the Senate, who works as a pizza delivery man, has been drawing 6 percent in recent polls. That could be enough to hurt the chances of Thom Tillis, the Republican who is challenging the Democratic incumbent, Kay Hagan. Despite President Barack Obama's declining popularity in the state, Hagan has retained a narrow lead over Tillis.

Tillis suggested that Haugh's support was a result of lingering feelings from the Republican primary this year, which included a Libertarian-leaning candidate whom Paul had endorsed.

"At the end of the primary, you have that transition period," said Tillis, the state House speaker, predicting that Haugh would draw 4 percent to 5 percent of the vote "at the very most."

But Republicans recognize that Haugh's candidacy could siphon votes from the right. In addition to the ad he recorded in support of Tillis, Paul will campaign with him this week in Raleigh.

"He can send a signal to that community that you don't want to waste your vote," Rob Collins, the executive director of the National Republican Senatorial Committee, said of Paul.

Paul is also heading to Iowa and Kansas, two other states where Senate races could be close on Election Day.

In Iowa, a Fox News Poll conducted Sept. 14-16 indicated that 6 percent of voters would back a candidate other than the Republican or Democrat.

In Kansas, Sen. Pat Roberts, a Republican, is facing his most difficult challenge, from Greg Orman, an independent who has not said which party he would caucus with should he win.

The Democratic nominee withdrew from the race, but a Libertarian candidate remains on the ballot, adding to the uncertainty.

Larry Pressler, a former Republican senator from South Dakota, is trying to reclaim a Senate seat by running as an independent in a race that has received little national attention. The Republican nominee, Mike Rounds, a former governor, is the frontrunner. The Democrat, Rick Weiland, is running a populist campaign, and a fourth candidate on the ballot could take some of Rounds' votes. But Democrats fear that Pressler, who endorsed Obama in 2008, is chiefly taking votes from Weiland.

A third-party candidate is also complicating the Senate race in Georgia, one of the few states where Democrats have a chance to win a seat held by Republicans.

To win there, a candidate needs to receive more than 50 percent of the vote, and if the Libertarian on the ballot takes enough support from the Republican candidate, David Perdue, it would force a runoff. Similarly, a Libertarian candidate in the Georgia governor's race could push that contest beyond Election Day. Runoffs for the two races could be held on different days, complicating turnout efforts.

In one of the most-watched races in the country, in Florida, polls essentially show a tie between Gov. Rick Scott, a Republican, and Charlie Crist, the former governor running as a Democrat. That race is made murky by the showing of Adrian Wyllie, the Libertarian candidate, who received support from 8 percent of those surveyed in a Quinnipiac University poll conducted Sept. 17-22. If Wyllie were out of the race, it would still be a virtual tie, the poll found.

Religious conservatives opposed to Hillary Clinton

By Ken Thomas & Steve Peoples
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Hillary Rodham Clinton is the one figure uniting religious conservatives frustrated by a leaderless Republican Party that's divided over foreign policy, immigration and social issues.

The prospect of another Clinton White House stirred anguish at the Voters Value Summit this weekend where hundreds of conservative activists debated the GOP's future and warned that the acknowledged but unannounced 2016 Democratic front-runner would cement what they see as President Barack Obama's attack on religious freedom.

"Never forget she will be Barack Obama's third and fourth term as president of the United States," Minnesota Rep. Michele Bachmann, an unsuccessful GOP presidential candidate in 2012, said Friday night.

She was among the high-profile Republicans, including past and prospective White House contenders, at the annual conference attended by some of the most prominent social conservatives and hosted by the Family Research Council, well known for its opposition to abortion and same-sex marriage.

This year's gathering expanded its focus to religious freedom — or the persecution of Christians and their values at home and abroad. It was a message that GOP officials hope will help unify a fractured party and appeal to new voters ahead of November's elections and the next presidential contest.

But it was Clinton's name that was as much a rallying cry as the theme of religious liberty.

Sen. Ted Cruz, a prospective presidential candidate, challenged Clinton to "spend a day debating" the Denver nuns who run nursing homes for the poor, called the Little Sisters of the Poor Home for the Aged, and have challenged the Obama health law's requirement that some religious-affiliated organizations provide insurance that includes birth control.

Former Arkansas Gov. Mike Huckabee, a once and perhaps future contender, described Clinton as "tenacious."

"She's got all the skills and would be an incredibly formidable candidate," Huckabee told reporters, suggesting that Clinton is politically vulnerable. "She's got to go out and defend Barack Obama and her record in the first four years she was secretary of state."

Clinton would be the overwhelming favorite to win the Democratic presidential nomination, while the GOP's field is large and lacks a clear front-runner. Two GOP establishment favorites, New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie and former Florida Gov. Jeb Bush, were not invited to the conference.

As he did last year, Cruz won the summit's symbolic presidential preference straw poll with 25 percent of the vote, followed by conservative firebrand Ben Carson and Huckabee. Clinton earned one vote among more than 900 cast, although Family Research Council president Tony Perkins joked that even Mickey Mouse would have gotten a vote if listed on the ballot.

He said religious liberty "slipped as a priority" under Clinton's leadership at the State Department as she pursued a liberal agenda "in complete contrast to what values voters care about."

"She's going to have a more difficult time this go around than she did last time," Perkins said.

A CNN poll this summer found that four different would-be Republican candidates earned between 10 percent and 15 percent of support from self-identified conservatives: Gov. Rick Perry, Kentucky Sen. Rand Paul, Cruz and Huckabee. The same poll found that 73 percent of conservatives said Clinton doesn't generally agree with them on issues they care about.

Republicans contend that Obama and Clinton, as secretary of state, misled the public about the nature of the attack and could have saved lives if they had quickly mobilized the U.S. military.

"Mrs. Clinton, you're not going to get a free ride on this," said Gary Bauer, founder of the Campaign for Working Families and a presidential candidate in 2000. "You can't implement the policies and then run as if you were opposed to the policies. We're going to call you out."

Democrats have branded a special House panel investigating Benghazi as a right-wing effort to harm a potential Clinton presidential campaign. They reject notions that U.S. forces were ordered to "stand down" during the attack or that Clinton played a direct role in security decisions.

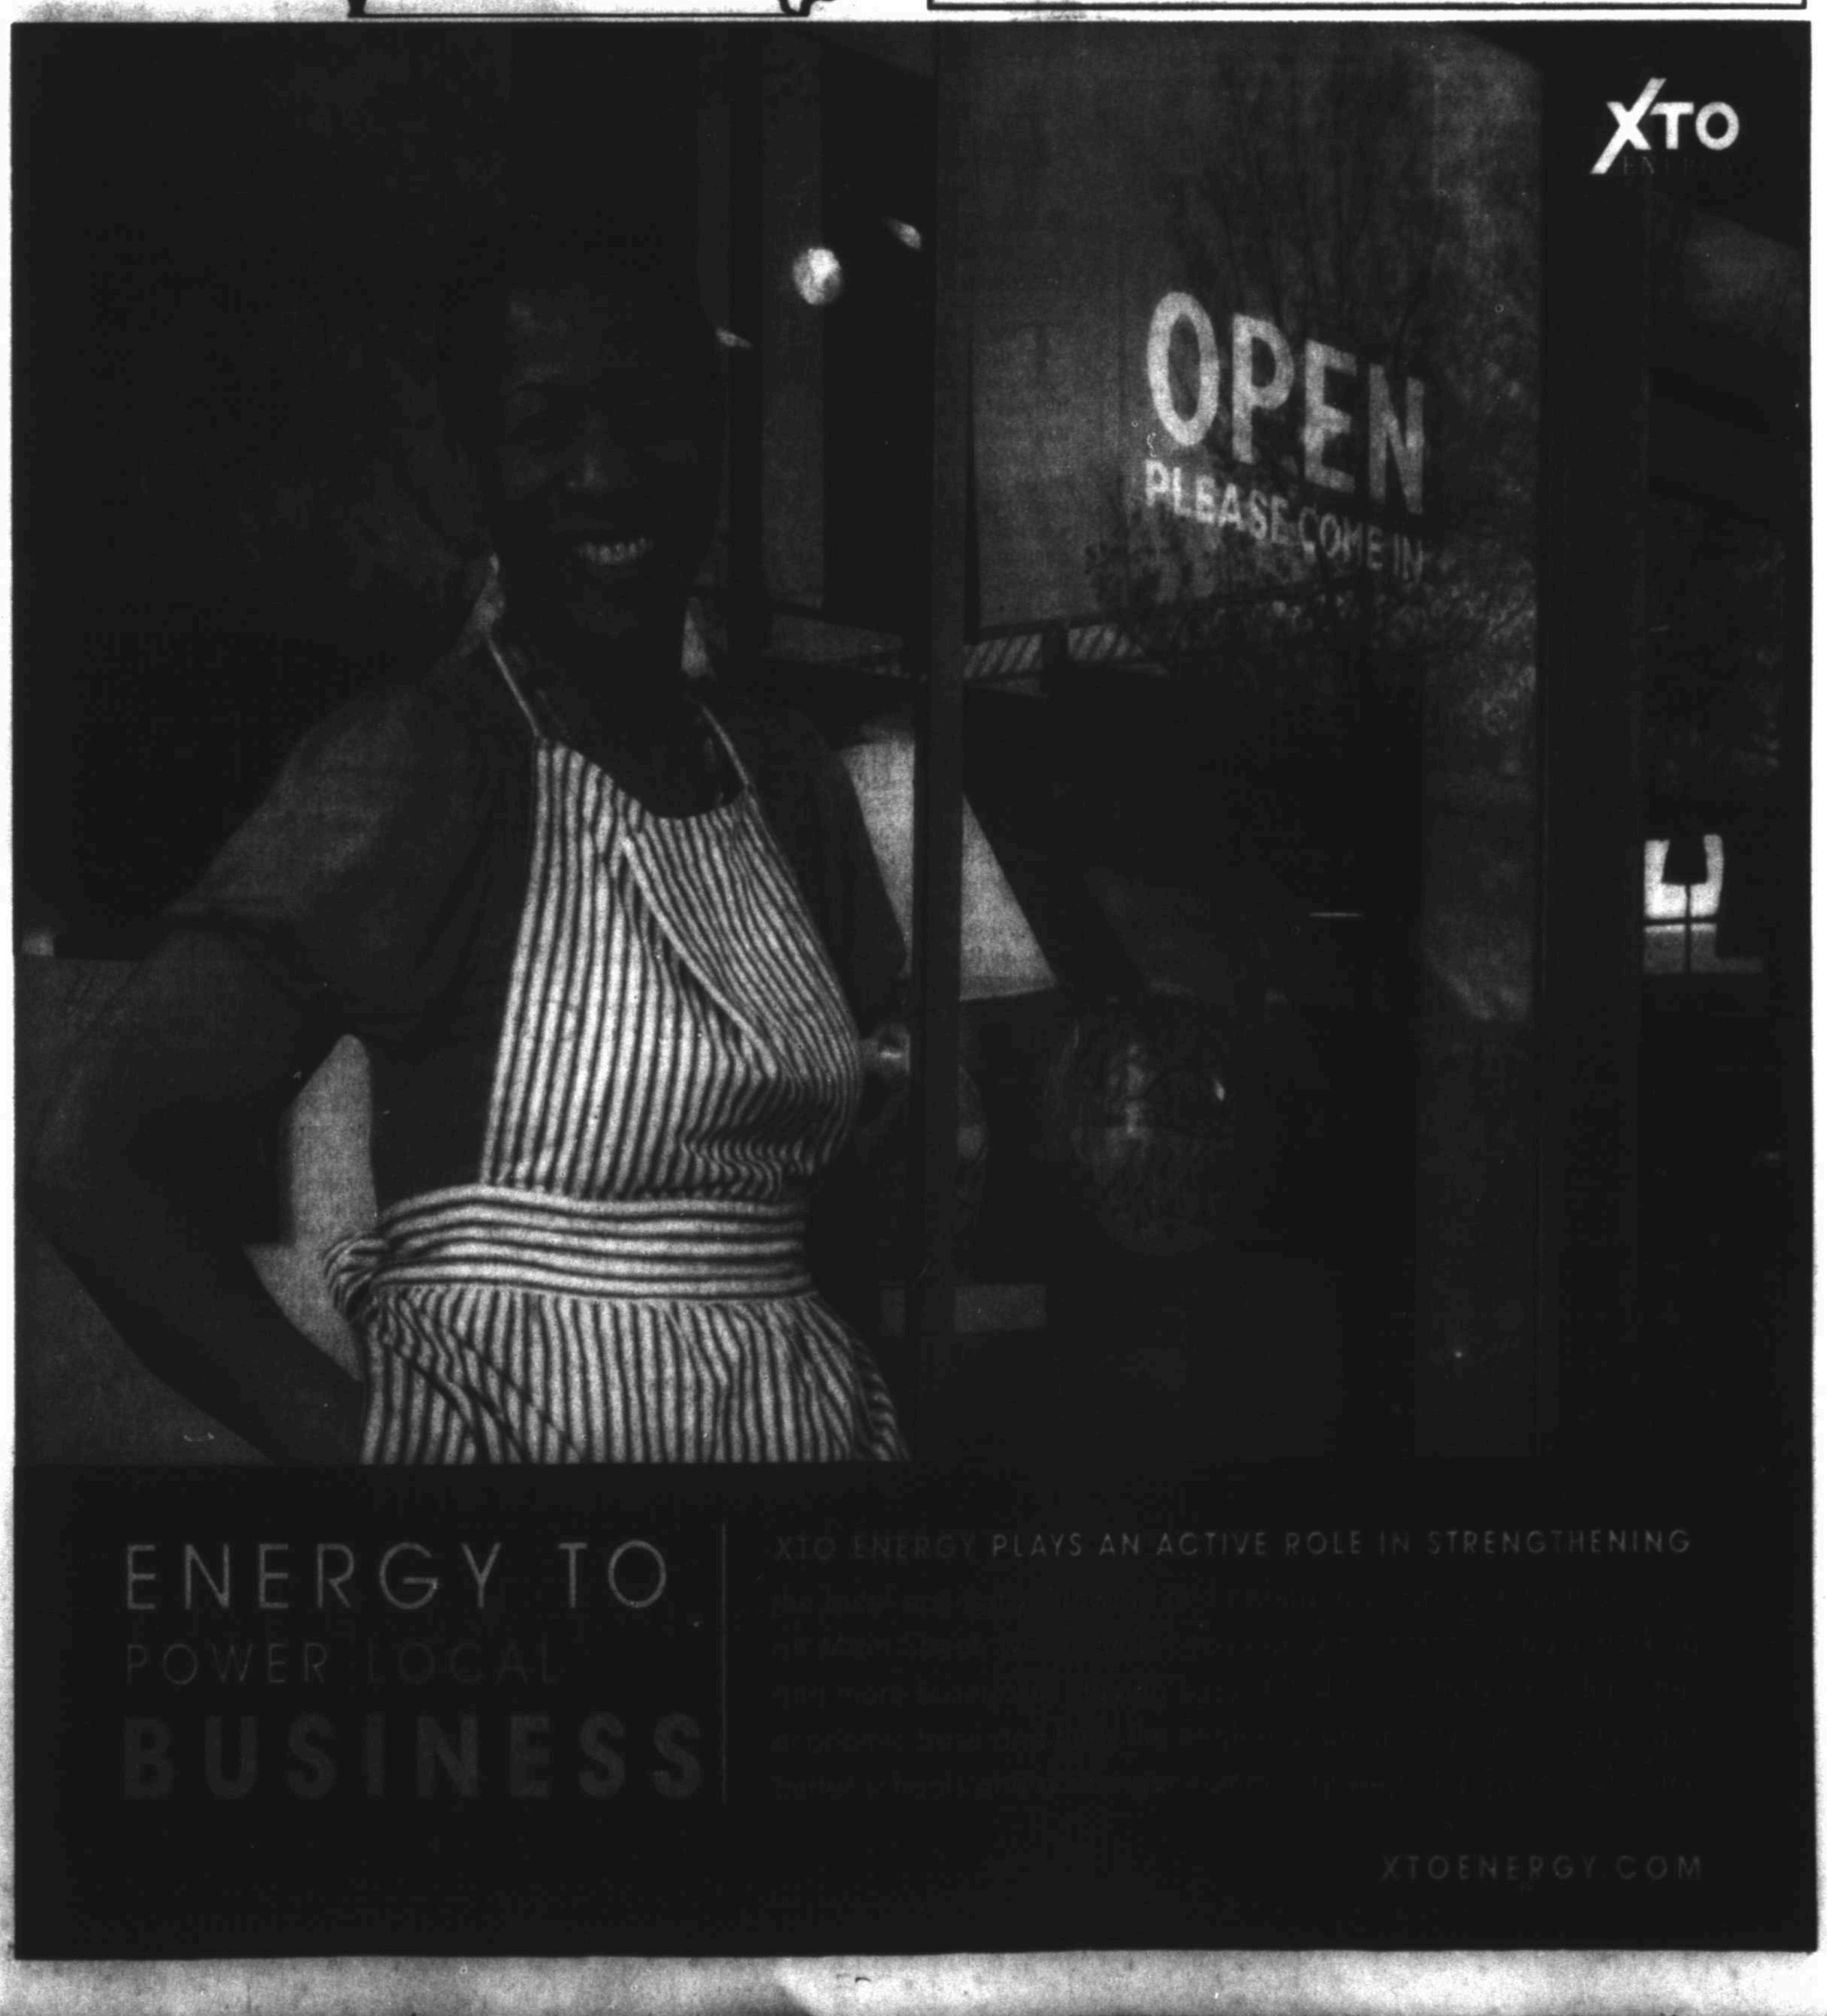

Lillian Kjellman, a freshman at Liberty University who attended the conference, said there was too much controversy surrounding Clinton and questioned whether she could to present a fresh message to the public after more than two decades in the public eye.

"I don't think she could win," she said.

Conservative evangelicals require introspection

■ Millennials see less value in religious socialization when they have 'more homogeneous networks,' according to recent study

MICHAEL GERSON
Washington Post Writers Group

Christian conservatives are often the subject of study by academics, who seem to find their culture as foreign as that of Borneo tribesmen. And this is a particularly interesting time for brave social scientists to put on their pith helmets and head to Wheaton, Ill., Colorado Springs or unexplored regions of the South. They will find a community under external and internal cultural stress.

It is fair to say that some cultural views traditionally held by evangelicals are in retreat. Whatever the (likely dim) future of political libertarianism, moral libertarianism has been on the rise. This is perhaps the natural outworking of an enlightenment political philosophy that puts individual rights at its center. Supreme Court Justice Anthony Kennedy described this view as the "right to define one's own concept of existence."

Whatever else traditional religious views may entail, they involve a belief that existence comes pre-defined. Purpose is discovered, not exerted. And Scripture and institutions — a community of believers extended back in time — are essential to that discovery. This is not, to put it mildly, the spirit of the age.

It was not, as far as I can tell, really the spirit of any age. But many evangelicals believe it was, subscribing to the myth of a lost American Eden. There has certainly been a cultural shift in America on religion and public life. But it has largely been from congenial contradiction to less-sympathetic contradiction. There is more criticism of the (thin) veneer of Protestant spirituality in public places. There is also a growing belief that individual rights need to be protected, not only from the state but from religious institutions that don't share public values. In the extreme case, this means that nuns who don't want to participate in the provision of contraceptives are interfering with conceptual self-definition.

The reaction of evangelicals to these trends can (and does) vary widely. They can accommodate to the prevailing culture, as many evangelicals have already done on issues such as contraception, divorce and the role of women (without talking much about it). Or they can try to fight for their political and cultural place at the table, as other interest groups do.

A recent study, "Sowing the Seeds of Discord," by a group of scholars associated with the Public Religion Research Institute, describes a mix of reactions. There is some evidence that younger evangelicals are more socially accepting of social "outgroups," including gays and lesbians. A higher proportion of evangelical millennials (more than 40 percent) support gay marriage than do evangelicals overall. But there is no evidence this shift is changing political allegiances. White evangelicals remain reliably and monolithically Republican.

My interpretation: Even as some evangelical cultural views change along with broader norms, the Democratic Party is still viewed as a hostile instrument of secularization — a perception reinforced by the health care mandates of the Obama era.

But the most interesting finding of the study concerns where disaffection with conservative politics is developing among evangelicals. On a number of questions — Should "under God" be removed from the Pledge of Allegiance? Does religion solve more social problems than it creates? — evangelical millennials expressed more negative views on the social role of religion according to an unexpected pattern. Those who lack friends and ties outside evangelicalism are more critical of traditional evangelical views. "Millennials," according to the study, "react more negatively and see less value in religious socialization when they have more homogeneous networks." The authors believe this small but significant shift represents a rejection of "the embattled, political subculture of their parents."

My interpretation: A desperate, angry, apocalyptic tone of social engagement alienates many people, including some of the children of those who practice it.

Conservative evangelicals, like other religious people before them, are responding to a culture that does not always share their values. But a purely reactive model of politics is not attractive, even internally. And the problem is not only strategic but theological. A Christian vision of social engagement that is defined by resentment for lost social position and a scramble for group advantage is not particularly Christian.

There is an alternative: A commitment to civility, rooted in respect for universal human dignity. A passion for the common good, defined by inclusion of the most vulnerable. A belief in institutional religious freedom and pluralism for the benefit of everyone, including non-Christian faiths.

This type of religious engagement will not always prevail, but it would, at least, be distinctly religious.

OUR VIEW

Tell us what you want, what we can do for you

During the last school year, we asked for your input. We said the Reporter-Telegram would make itself available to your group. Some of you took us up on our request. We appreciate the opportunity to talk about what we are doing, where Midland is going, about the things taking place in our community and what you wanted from us.

With a new school year well underway, we are putting the same offer on the table. Does your group need a speaker or a listener? We want the opportunity to come before you and hear what you have to say. We want to know what you want as our city grows and what you want from your newspaper.

We do have an ulterior motive. Midland is changing, and we want to know all about the changes. So if you are a new Midlander or your group is relatively new to Midland's scene, don't hesitate to connect with us. You might have a story to tell and a message to offer, and we want to be as relevant to you as we have been to groups that have stood the test of time in the Tall City.

As we make this offer to our community, we remind you how much this community has changed since the last time we came before you. The Energy Tower project has been canceled, thousands of more Midlanders have come into our workforce, hundreds of more students have entered Midland's public schools, and it is hard to think of a time when business was better.

Are there still problems? Absolutely. Rents are still not affordable for too many, our streets are still not up to par for what this community is and what Midland will be, and we worry about our leaders not always being in touch with what their constituents need.

The Reporter-Telegram and MRT Media Group will continue to work hard. Whether through mrt.com, our e-edition and MRT Magazine, no local media group can match our ability to reach more Midlanders. And, of course, through the Reporter-Telegram, no news outlet in the Permian Basin can match our history and offer the resources we can to tell the stories Midlanders need to hear.

You have a chance to help produce what we will do in the future. Just send a request to news@mrt.com.

This war on women is just as tasteless

■ The only war on women actually taking place in in misrepresentation of GOP comments

RICH LOWRY
King Features Syndicate

The "war on women" is back, and more tendentious than ever. Democrats are replaying one of their greatest hits of 2012 in their furious battle to minimize their midterm losses in a political environment defined by an unpopular president and general unease.

And why not? The war on women has a proven record of success — in mobilizing Democratic women and trumping what would otherwise seem much more important issues — and it is so simple that any idiot can run on it.

The recipe is one part taking offense where clearly none was intended, and one part discerning new nefarious schemes to deny women access to birth control. If War on Women 1.0 was strained and unconvincing, the new version lacks all self-respect. To paraphrase Karl Marx, it is history repeating itself, first as farce, then as self-parody.

Every word spoken by a Republican is mined for its latent sexism. When a spokesman for the National Republican Senatorial Committee last year called Alison Lundergan Grimes, the Democratic Senate candidate in Kentucky, an "empty dress," it seemed an innocuous play on words — unless you were familiar with the insidiously subtle ways Republicans wage their war on women.

A Grimes spokesman called the comment offensive, degrading and appalling, and then must have run out of adjectives. A spokeswoman for the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee, Regan Page, found the remark "despicably offensive." Grimes integrated the remark into her stump speech.

During their first debate in North Carolina, Republican candidate Thom Tillis referred to Sen. Kay Hagan by her first name, offending her supporters with his undue familiarity. He compounded the sin by saying Hagan's "math just doesn't add up," a hoary cliche in politics for decades.

Hagan pronounced herself (what else?) "insulted," and Page brought out more of her double-barreled plaints. She accused Tillis of "ugly condescension," "outrageous mansplaining" and "condescending patronization," which is always to be distinguished from "patronizing condescension."

It's as if the faculty of the women's and gender studies department at Wellesley runs the Democratic Party. The assumption is that women are strong and independent — just don't say the wrong word around them or they will get the vapors.

This is all so silly that it is especially off-key in current circumstances. The implied Democrat message is that, yes, the president is broadly unpopular, the economy is middling and the world is falling apart — but someone called me "ma'am"!

To the extent that the war on women has any substance, it centers on minor but flawed pieces of federal legislation like the Violence Against Women Act and the Equal Pay Act. And contraception. Always contraception.

The Democrats deserve credit for managing to portray a position supported by no one serious in public life — that women should be denied birth control — as the default position of the Republican Party.

The Colorado Senate race has been so focused on abortion and contraception, it could be mistaken for a leadership election of the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists. Playing defense, Republican Cory Gardner is one of a handful of GOP candidates who have come out in favor of over-the-counter birth control. It is a testament to the endless malleability of the war on women that this innocuous proposal to provide more ready access to birth control is itself taken as a dastardly plot against women.

The wonder of the war on women is that it works, or at least it has. Republicans have a better chance of deflecting it this year. They have more deft candidates, and while the over-the-counter contraception proposal is small beer, it is a compelling way to demonstrate comfort with the very access to contraception that Democrats allege Republicans want to take away.

More importantly, the Republican Party should realize that its fate with all voters depends on having a concrete agenda to address the nation's challenges here and abroad. That is the ultimate insulation from the insipid politics of the ever-more-tenuous war on women.

COMMUNITY EDITORIAL BOARD

What is Midland today? To find out, We must clarify questions

With great accuracy, we can look back and see what Midland was a few years ago. However, presently people are more interested in where Midland will be a few years from now. To address this concern, we first need to answer a few questions related to where Midland is today.

The demographics of the community of Midland are rapidly changing; of this there is no doubt. The most recent workforce estimate for just the city of Midland of 100,000-plus implies a current population of more than 150,000. Since the official population of the city of Midland was, according to the 2010 census, more than 110,000, we seem to have accumulated at least an additional 40,000 residents during the past four years. How are these "new" people similar to and different from the "old" residents of Midland? More specifically, in terms of measurable traits, might they compare in terms of age, race, and socioeconomic identity (the "color of their collars")? Further, how might these new Midlanders be aided in understanding the totality of this thing called Midland?

More importantly and more interestingly, from where do these new residents come? What do they bring with them in terms of their ideas and opinions regarding politics, religion, values and goals? It is the similarities and differences in these areas that will drive changes in the identity of Midland.

Of these new Midlanders, how many of them will become seriously committed to or invested in Midland? In other words, what percentage will decide to stay for a significant time? This greatly depends on the permanence of the conditions that brought them to Midland in the first place. Here clarification is required — this "boom" is not a boom in the historical sense of the concept. The explosive growth of the local economy is not based on economic spikes in supply and demand that have driven past economic upturns. The growth of the past few years is primarily the result of improved technology and thus is not nearly as fragile and transitory as has been the case in the past, allowing for a much longer time horizon to be used in planning for the future. Recent decisions by energy-related firms and other businesses in Midland definitely reflect this greater confidence and sustainability in the area's economy. Therefore, could it be the case that a larger percentage of these new Midlanders may actually end up staying in Midland much longer than did many of the newcomers during the booms of the past? How might this commitment be measured in the short run and projected into the long run? Could percentage changes in population be compared to percentage changes in home ownership, church membership, voter registration, PTA membership, levels of charitable donations, etc.?

The level of commitment to Midland on the part of these newcomers constitutes perhaps the most important question we face. Related to this is the idea that as the local business community has accepted and embraced these new conditions and realities in the Midland area, might it not be time for other decision-making entities, such as city and county government, along with the educational community, to do the same?

What is Midland today? Before this can be answered, a host of other questions must be addressed. Whatever the ultimate answer might be, it is clear that Midland today is not the same as Midland of the past. What Midland becomes in the future will depend on how well we answer these questions of today.

Born from our community's position is a call to stewardship

Brian Fairchild
Colonial Bible Church pastor

Stewardship. A word defined by the dictionary as, "the activity or job of protecting and being responsible for something." Sadly, it is not a word with which we are familiar in our narcissistic culture today. It is, however, a word with which we must reckon. The principle of stewardship brings with it a mandate of accountability and an understanding that an answer must be given at the end of our charge for how well we protected and exercised that responsibility. The concept of stewardship bears further weight upon us, when we understand that it is given by, and ultimately accountable to, the Creator of all things. It is more than mere temporal guardianship; it is a temporal reality with eternal consequence. In Luke 12:48, Jesus lays out the principle, "to whom much is given, from him much will be required."

It was not all that long ago that we in Midland seemed to prosper or lack at the hands of the world's energy superpowers. Our hopes of a boom were tied to the frail realities that other nations could open a valve and destroy any progress that had been made here. Now we face a situation where it would appear those powers are less able to control us and are, instead, being made our equal. By advances in technology and a willingness to lead, the world is now coming to us. We are being asked to lead, and we are reaping the windfalls of that position. That is a stewardship.

In light of the recent economic gains of our city and region, it is imperative for all of us to consider our own stewardship for what we have been given. A complete view of stewardship extends far beyond mere monetary gains. We have a mighty responsibility for new relationships, influence and giving, even a responsibility for our own souls and those of our families because of what we have been given.

So, how are we investing the vast benefits that we have been given? It is easy to become blinded by the pleasure of the present, to view what we are experiencing in our own advancement as an end, not a means to a greater end. While it seems that our present enjoyment and prosperity knows no limits, buried within our soul is the constant reminder that even our own life is limited. Those realizations of accountability and limitation should cause us to reflect. How will we answer for that time and those resources bestowed between now and that accounting? In other words, how will we discharge our stewardship?

In many ways, the world is turning to us. Our demographics show it, our influence proves it, but how will our sense of stewardship make use of it? That is a question that we must answer individually. It will not be determined by city councils or county commissioners, it is our individual stewardships and our blessings for which we will answer. It is no secret that Midland and the surrounding area are a rich base for fundraising and support, be it business, political or nonprofit. We have a rich legacy of supporting worthy causes through manpower and resources. The world is coming to us. From our neighbors to the farthest point on the globe, there is a clarion call to make use of what we have been given. It is no longer an option. We have been blessed, and we are being called. It is time to shed the weight of being consumed with ourselves in this moment and answer the call to make a difference that will change the eternal. Stewardship occurs when each of us take our responsibility seriously and act upon our conviction. With our resources, let us give. With our lives, let us labor. With our freedoms, let us pursue truth and the worship of God. With our families, let us raise a new generation of servant-leaders.

For me, there is nothing more sobering than knowing I will give an answer, to my God, my family, my church, my community. Stewardship. Let it change the way we think and live today.

Freely flowing money shouldn't be squandered

I read where The Lofts project costing $17.4 million is nearing completion. Of that amount, Midland, MDC and TIRZ contributed land and money totaling $5.75 million.

The contribution is almost a third of the project cost. Why would Midland give away that much money to a private investment to get something built? Just because money is flowing freely right now, you don't have to squander it. Does Midland see any income from the project? I think I can answer my own question. Who is responsible for such idiotic actions?

Is there any conflict of interest involved? It might be a good project for MRT to pursue.

Unexpected birthday gift is appreciated

A table of six girlfriends celebrating the 60th birthday of one of them had dinner at Ajuua's Mexican Restaurant on the evening of Sept. 20. Toward the end of the meal, the waitress informed us that the entire tab for the table had been paid, including tip. We were totally surprised, and after checking with significant others it appears that it was a stranger or someone that one of us may have known but didn't see.

At any rate, the birthday party was covered. I hope whoever did this will see this note of thanks and appreciation for your generous unexpected gift. Thank you so much.

Fans give appearance of condoning behavior

Why do people who watch sports condone the unacceptable off-the-field behavior of athletes? If an athlete is guilty of abusing his wife or his child or if they are abusing drugs and you continue to watch their games or buy their merchandise, you are condoning their behavior.

The only way to stop this behavior is to stop watching the games, stop buying tickets and stop buying the merchandise they promote. If you do not care about their abominable behavior and the example they set for our children, then by all means, continue to watch and buy.

Just remember that makes you as guilty as they are.

Lots of glue needed to fix situation in Iraq

Many will deny Bush-Cheney didn't do anything wrong attacking Iraq. Bush-Cheney invaded Iraq on a lie from an unnamed source. The CIA told White House leader Cheney, "Iraq has no Weapons of Mass Destruction." Cheney refused to listen to our CIA and chose to attack Iraq. Cheney skillfully sold Bush that sources say, "Iraq has yellow to make a bomb and Iraq has WMD." I guess it was an easy sale after Cheney and FOX News (FOX News where the truth doesn't really matter) convinced the American people and Bush that not only did Saddam have WMD but he was behind the attacks on 9/11. Well, we all found out that Saddam was not behind 9/11, and there was no yellow cake, no aluminum rod for the enrichment of uranium, and there was no WMD.

I wish this had enraged the Republican Congress enough to investigate who told Cheney this lie.

Colin Powell famously told Bush-Cheney before the Iraq invasion, "If you break it, you own it." Well, I guess it's safe to say, "Bush-Cheney broke Iraq." USA Today reported that, "Bush-Cheney broke Iraq and created a living hell for the Iraqi people."

Sarah Ahmed, a director for a Foundation for Relief and Reconciliation in the Middle East, was born and raised in Iraq. Today Ahmed said, "We are 5,000 times worse off than before. We have gained nothing, literally nothing. We may have had an evil dictator, but now we have total terrorism. We had one Saddam and now we have thousands." Ahmed added, "When the war happened it was based on a wrong decision by Bush-Cheney. The U.S. shouldn't have intervened, but whatever happened and today it is a different situation."

Today the biggest situation is the children. The slave market would have never operated under Saddam. Today, kidnapped children are bought and sold. Boys are forced to become jihadi and the girls are sold as brides or sex slaves.

America created the current crisis in Iraq. If we need to fix it we're going to need lots of glue.

No courage coming from the kitchen tables

■ Being in the same boat can help us thwart despair

Ben Carson
Creators Syndicate

We have heard much about the tragic events in Ferguson, Mo., during which a young man lost his life, a community became enraged and many differing definitions of justice emerged. All human life is precious, and we should be concerned when any life is prematurely terminated, regardless of the circumstances. If we as a society could focus the same kind of attention on the everyday murderous carnage that threatens the vitality of many of our cities, perhaps some meaningful solutions could be found.

Growing up in inner-city America, I witnessed many instances of premature death, usually inflicted by other inner-city residents. I also witnessed many stories of triumph that produced successful individuals out of the same environment. Perhaps it would be worthwhile to study the factors that led to success instead of tragedy in the same environment. Obviously, volumes have been written about this topic, on which many consider themselves experts. In many cases, the observations and analyses are accurate and thought-provoking, and in many cases, they are cowardly and pandering.

There is a long list of factors highly correlated with success regardless of the environment. They include strong supportive families, a sense of personal responsibility, good role models, faith that produces a sense of purpose and values, hard work, confidence, courage, an emphasis on education, and caring neighbors. As many who have read some of my books know, I have written volumes on all of these topics, and all are deserving of much attention, but in this limited article, I will focus on the last three.

We live in an increasingly technical world, where knowledge is power. Even in an economy that is stagnant, it is still relatively easy to obtain a good job when one has acquired the requisite knowledge and skills. Many sophisticated jobs go begging or have to be filled by foreigners because we are not producing technical graduates in sufficient numbers. We must also look at successful educational models, including charter schools, and insist that they be made available to inner-city students. There are a number of excellent reading-room programs throughout the country that incentivize students, particularly from Title I schools, to learn to enjoy reading, which profoundly decreases the dropout rate later on. Lack of education in this country is a major barrier between the haves and the have-nots, and we must concentrate on it.

I remember as a child referring to some of the older neighbors as crotchety and mean because they never let us get away with wrongdoing. We thought they should mind their own business, and I even remember some instances where their windows would be purposely broken. In retrospect, they were the very ones who kept us out of trouble, and obviously, they usually cared deeply about our welfare. The me-first mentality that has infected our society, along with the fear of retribution, has largely extinguished these kinds of neighbors in many cities today. Given the level of violence, one can hardly blame people for keeping their mouths shut, but we must also realize that if we don't nip bad behavior in the bud, it only grows, creating more intimidation, and the vicious cycle continues.

Courage from the kitchen table, the pulpit, the classroom and the streets was prevalent when I was a child. Many people had no problem publicly denouncing deleterious behavior even if it made them temporarily unpopular. Fear of being called names or being proclaimed out of touch has paralyzed many in our inner cities, just as it has throughout the nation. We must realize that we are all in the same boat, and we can sink together in the quagmire of fractious accusations and hatred, or we can rise together to previously unexperienced heights if we learn from past mistakes and embrace the principles that created, in record time, the greatest nation in history.

Poll: Confused by issues of the day? Join the club

By Connie Cass
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Confused by President Barack Obama's health care law? How about the debate over government surveillance? The way the Federal Reserve affects interest rates?

You're far from alone.

Most people in the United States say the issues facing the country are getting harder to fathom.

It's not just those tuning out politics who feel perplexed.

People who vote regularly, follow news about November's election or simply feel a civic duty to stay informed are most likely to say that issues have become "much more complicated" over the past decade, an Associated Press-GfK poll shows.

David Stewart blames the deluge from social media, partisan blogs and 24-hour news sites for complicating things.

At one time, people would only see a news story about a violent organization such as the Islamic State group, he said, but now they watch the militants' videos of beheadings online.

"People get a little overwhelmed by all the information about what's going on in the world," said Stewart, 40, a salesman at a home improvement store in Georgetown, Kentucky. The father of three said it takes time from an already busy life to go online and sort out "what's fluff, what's been engineered, and what's actually true and believable."

The issue that stumps Stewart most? The health care overhaul.

Nearly three-fourths of Americans find it difficult, according to the AP-GfK poll, and about 4 in 10 say it's very hard to understand.

The law is complex; politicians even say so.

Republicans were condemning it as a regulatory morass even before it passed. When the federal website enrolling people crashed last year, Obama himself pointed to the enormous size of the undertaking. "It's complicated," he said. "It's hard."

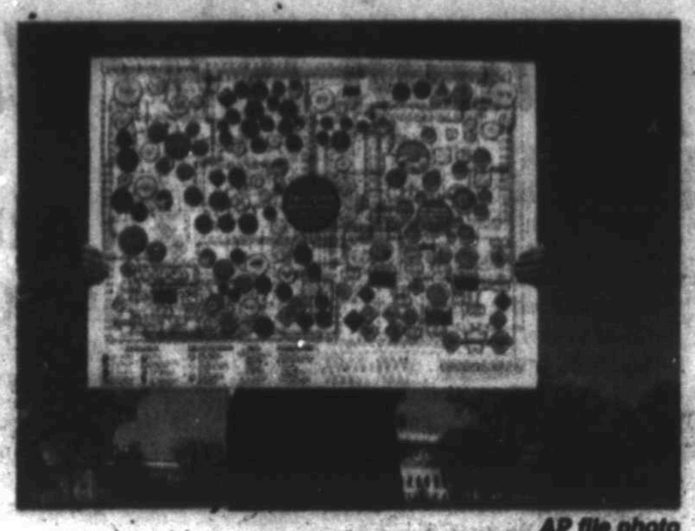

Politicians do try to make issues sound simpler. They like to invoke your own family budget when talking about the national debt.

But in the poll, confidence in dealing with household problems didn't offer much help in understanding national matters.

For example, most under age 30 said it's easy to protect your privacy and financial information online. But most young adults think it's hard to understand the National Security Agency's data collection programs. Americans older than 50 find both personal computer security and the NSA issue difficult.

Interest rates? Wealthier people are more likely to find rates on personal loans easy to understand. But the poll shows no difference by income in comprehending the Fed's interest rate policy.

Then there are international issues.

Glynn McGehee, an aide of Republican Rep. Tom Price of Georgia, holds up a poster that mocks the organizational complexity of the health care law being argued in the Supreme Court in Washington in 2012. Most Americans say the issues facing the country are getting harder to fathom, an Associated Press-GfK poll shows. Nearly three-fourths of Americans find the health care law hard to understand.

In his speech to the United Nations last week, Obama spoke of terrorists in Iraq and Syria as the type of danger that threatens a faster-paced, interconnected world.

What began 13 years ago as a U.S. campaign to destroy al-Qaida has evolved into battles against numerous offshoots.

"Right now, in my estimation, the problems are much more variegated and much more complex and diffuse than they've ever been," said Bruce Hoffman, a Georgetown University historian who has studied terrorism for four decades.

Among Americans strongly interested in political news, nearly 6 in 10 say political issues facing the United States are "much more complicated" than a decade ago.

Of course, creating Medicare and fighting the Cold War weren't easy.

Perhaps nostalgia blurs people's judgment of current troubles?

Sheila Suess Kennedy, director of the Indiana University Center for Civic Literacy, thinks there's more to it.

"Not only are we dealing with a more complex environment, we are dealing with a more ambiguous environment," Kennedy said. "People want 'this is good and this is bad.' Increasingly we live with 'there's black and there's white and there's a whole lot of gray.'"

The AP-GfK Poll was conducted July 24-28 using KnowledgePanel, GfK's probability-based online panel designed to be representative of the U.S. population. Results from online interviews with 1,044 adults have a margin of sampling error of plus or minus 3.4 percentage points.

Respondents were first selected randomly using phone or mail survey methods, and later interviewed online. Some question wording used in this survey comes from the General Social Survey, conducted by NORC at the University of Chicago. People selected for KnowledgePanel who didn't otherwise have access to the Internet were provided with the ability to access the Internet at no cost.

Small towns rescuing, restoring movie theaters

By Barbara Rodriguez
Associated Press

Associated Press

Work is done on the marquis of the Webster Theater, on Aug. 21 in Webster City, Iowa. When the historic downtown movie theater in Webster City, went bankrupt and shut down last year, some wondered whether it was further proof of the small towns demise after a factory closure put hundreds out of work. Instead, residents rallied. They held public meetings, hashed out volunteer work and launched a fundraising campaign. More than $200,000 later, the theater reopened.

WEBSTER CITY, Iowa — When the historic downtown movie theater in Webster City, Iowa, went bankrupt and shut down last year, some wondered whether it was further proof of the small town's demise after a factory closure put hundreds out of work.

"This community, not more than a year ago, was labeled as done. Shut the lights off — we're done," said theater volunteer Jake Pulis, recalling concerns after the appliance plant closed in the central Iowa town.

Instead, residents rallied around the theater. They held public meetings, hashed out volunteer work and launched a fundraising campaign. More than $200,000 later, the theater reopened Saturday with a newly renovated marquee, an ode to its appearance in the 1940s.

"We're just getting started," said Deb Brown, another theater volunteer.

Webster City's story is playing out across the country, as residents of small communities work to save their historic downtown movie theaters. To many, the hope is that a theater's revival could aid a community's revival, too.

When the Egyptian Theatre in Coos Bay, Oregon, closed in 2011, a nonprofit group that had already been refurbishing the concession area and marquee managed to raise more money needed to fix the building's shaky foundation.

It reopened in June, a move that's led to more people visiting nearby restaurants after movies, said Kara Long, executive director of the theater's preservation association. She noted a local brewery had recently partnered with them for a beer and movie night.

"They said, 'This theater being open and this kind of event is why we wanted to open our brewery here,'" she said.

Such positive effects are common when small town theaters are revived, said Patrice Frey, president and CEO of the National Main Street Center, a group that offers tools for revitalizing main street areas.

"Renovations become a real rallying cry for the community. It provides a sense of focus," she said. "That community focus can bring entrepreneurs out of the woodwork."

In Spencer, Indiana, about an hour outside Indianapolis, volunteers, a nonprofit group and private donors reopened the 86-year-old Tivoli Theatre in 2013, more than a decade after it was shuttered. Besides movies, the venue now is used for plays, meetings and classroom field trips.

"It's a sign of hope that the downtown square can be saved," said Robert White, board president of the county preservation group that bought the building in 2005. "The atmosphere and the energy that's coming off the theater, it's spreading."

No one tracks how many historic movie theaters are being restored, but Richard Fosbrink, executive director of the Elmhurst, Illinois-based Theatre Historical Society of America, said he's seen more projects recently.

He credits the connections people have with their local movie theaters.

"It could be the theater that you went on your first date. Or it could be the theater that your grandparents met in. Or your great aunt was the candy counter girl," he said.

Dylan Morse, president of a nonprofit aimed at restoring the Grand Theater in Knoxville, Iowa, southeast of Des Moines, echoed that idea.

"These are wonderful pieces of history," he said. "They are essential to a community's identity and fabric and the experience of living in a small town."

People also appear to be rallying around theaters because the push by movie studios to switch from 35 mm film to digital has created an obstacle for smaller theaters that can't afford the $70,000 investment. Patrick Corcoran, a spokesman for the National Association of Theater Owners, said about 750 theaters out of more than 5,800 commercial theaters have yet to make the conversion.

Recently at the Webster Theater, which is nestled within a long row of downtown storefronts in the community of about 8,000, the air smelled of new carpeting as volunteers pointed out the nearly completed ticket booth. The digital projector was set to be installed later that day.

"I really think what happened with the theater was quite simply, we drew a line in the sand," Pulis said. "We had lost and lost and lost and lost, and this was the point where I think the community decided we've lost enough."

Daughter for Chelsea Clinton and granddaughter for a certain couple

Former President Bill Clinton and former Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton finally have the titles they have long wanted: Grandpa and Grandma.

Their daughter, Chelsea, gave birth to her first child — with her husband, Marc Mezvinsky — on Friday and posted the news on Twitter early Saturday. "Marc and I are full of love, awe and gratitude as we celebrate the birth of our daughter, Charlotte Clinton Mezvinsky," Clinton said.

Bill Clinton, in a statement on Saturday afternoon, said that "Charlotte's life is off to a good start."

"Chelsea is well and glowing," he said. "Marc is bursting with pride."

As late as Wednesday afternoon, Clinton was on stage delivering speeches and moderating panels at the Clinton Global Initiative gathering in New York.

The Clintons' soon-to-arrive grandbaby was a constant topic of conversation at the meeting. When asked by CNN if he would "baby-proof" the White House — the implication being that Hillary Clinton would not only run for president in 2016 but also win — Bill Clinton replied, "One thing at a time."

Both Bill and Hillary Clinton have a packed schedule this fall to raise money and campaign for Democrats in the midterm elections, although by Saturday morning Bill Clinton had canceled an evening fundraising event in Denver for Sen. Mark Udall and Gov. John W. Hickenlooper.

Chelsea Clinton, 34, announced her pregnancy in April at an event on the Lower East Side of Manhattan, her mother at her side and her husband watching from the back of the room.

The baby arrives as the family, never out of the spotlight since Bill Clinton was elected president in 1992, has moved center stage amid speculation that Hillary Clinton will run for president, a decision that is considered likely but that she has remained coy about. She has said the baby's arrival could be a factor in her decision.

"I'm about to have my first grandchild, which I'm thrilled about," Hillary Clinton told Charlie Rose on PBS in July. "I want to see what that feels like," she added. "I'm not going to skip over it."

Chelsea Clinton, the vice chairwoman of the Bill, Hillary & Chelsea Clinton Foundation, married Mezvinsky in 2010, and they live in New York.

What kind of grandparents will Bill and Hillary Clinton be? Just days before the baby was born, the former president said he had to remind himself every day whose child this is. "Do not interfere! Be there when you're welcome. Be loving, but not judgmental."

Western Muslims, troubled, rally against extremism

By Lori Hinnant
Associated Press

PARIS — In tweets, in street gatherings and in open letters, moderate Muslims around the world are insisting that Islamic State extremists don't speak for their religion. Many are also frustrated that anyone might think they do, and a backlash has already begun.

This week's videotaped beheading of a French mountaineer by militants linked to the Islamic State group prompted heartsick fury among Muslims in France and elsewhere in Europe, torn between anger at the atrocities committed in the name of Islam and frustration that they have to defend themselves at all.

Herve Gourdel was the fifth Western hostage decapitated in recent weeks by Islamic extremists — this time, the militants said, as revenge for France's decision to join airstrikes against the Islamic State group.

The head of France's largest mosque called for Muslims to rally Friday in Paris to condemn Gourdel's slaying and show unity against terrorism, saying Islamic State's "deadly ideology" had nothing to do with Islam. Within hours of the call, the rector of the Bordeaux mosque, Tareq Oubrou, said French Muslims need not demonstrate in the name of Islam — but should be joined by everyone.

"They are doubly affected, because this crime touched one of our countrymen and because this crime was carried out in the name of our religion," Oubrou told RTL radio.

The same debate played out elsewhere. The hashtag campaign #notinmyname — or #pasenmonnom in French — initiated by British Muslims who wanted to show their opposition to extremist violence, spawned a #MuslimApologies backlash by those who thought the sense of regret was overwrought. Tweets "apologized" for algebra, soap and coffee.

"Nowhere does the Quran say other religions or nations must be attacked. Cutting people's heads off is really the most despicable. If airstrikes can stop these fundamentalist, aggressive ideas from spreading, I am all for it," said 65-year-old Enes Mustafic.

Another congregant, Omer Jamak, questioned the devotion and even sanity of anyone who thought otherwise.

"According to Islam, nobody is allowed to be evil to others. Nobody has the right to do such a thing. I am against everything they do down there like every sane person is," Jamak said.

An online poll posted by France's Le Figaro newspaper, asking whether people thought the country's Muslim community had sufficiently denounced Gourdel's death, drew an infuriated response. Rachida Dati, the mayor of Paris' 7th arrondissement and the daughter of Algerian immigrants, called for an end to the "confounding of Islam and fundamentalism, as the French political class has done for too long." The paper on Friday apologized for what it called a "clumsy" question.

Dawud Walid, director of the Michigan chapter of the Council on American-Islamic Relations, said headlines about the Islamic State were often frustrating in his work. Walid said he's been speaking out against excessive force by police after the fatal shooting of a young black man in Ferguson, Missouri.

"I received calls and emails from fellow Americans who say, 'Why are you worried about what's going in Ferguson? Stop ISIS.' That is ridiculous," said Walid, a black Muslim.

"My primary responsibility as an American citizen is to try to make America more of a just place," Walid said. "People in Iraq and Syria can't even fix their own problems. What am I supposed to be doing from Detroit?"

Still, the banner at Friday's gathering in Paris honoring Gourdel was emblazoned with "Not in My Name" and many in the crowd of about 500 said they were dismayed and appalled.

"We all gathered today ... to tell people, you want to convert, that's very good, but do it for your faith, because you want to convert and because you appreciate this religion. Don't do it to go fight, to go kill people because it is not what Islam says," said Nadir M'Sallaoui, a 27-year-old Parisian.

U.S. Muslim leaders and scholars issued an open letter Wednesday denouncing Islamic State militants point by point, notably on "the killing of innocents" and jihad.

Muqtedar Khan, professor of political science at the University of Delaware and author of "American Muslims, Bridging Faith and Freedom," said Muslim condemnations after the 9/11 attacks failed to dent the reach of extremists.

"They are beginning to react the way they should have on Sept. 12, 2001," Khan said. "Muslims have gotten really tired of these groups that bring nothing, that have no positive impact at all among their societies."

Khan said whether the protests take root will depend upon what happens when the beheadings have subsided, and Islamic State is no longer considered an immediate threat. Muslim leaders will have difficulty coming up with a message as attractive as the extremists' sermons to young people disillusioned with life in countries where they feel under constant suspicion. France's ban on face-covering veils and prohibitions on wearing headscarves in schools, for example, are often cited as proof the country is hostile to Muslims.

Cuellar: From migrant family to increasing clout in Congress

By David McCumber
Hearst Newspapers

It's a humble little white house perched on one of the hills that give Laredo's Las Lomas neighborhood its name.

From the crest of that little hill on Reynolds Street, you can see a world of opportunity.

Martín and Odilia Cuellar reared eight children in this house. Three are in law enforcement, two are lawyers. Of those, one is a Laredo municipal judge, one is the Webb County Sheriff.

Their eldest, Henry Roberto Cuellar, looked out from the hill and saw the farthest.

His vista extended to five college degrees. A law practice and customs brokerage. Fourteen years in the Texas Legislature. A year as Texas Secretary of State, and another decade as the United States Representative from the 28th District of Texas.

In the crucible of this year's immigration crisis, which has thrown a spotlight on the polarization and dysfunction of Congress, Cuellar has remained firmly on middle ground — irritating many other Democrats, but surprising no one who knows him well. He was the only Democrat to vote for a House bill that would have made it easier to deport unaccompanied minors from Central America.

"We have to send a signal," he said.

For the brother of a sheriff, that "signal" is letting the citizens of other countries know that the rule of law means something here. At the same time, when the surge threatened to overwhelm Border Patrol and ICE resources, he was the first to call for a FEMA-like humanitarian response.

Suddenly this summer, Cuellar was a media must-have. One day in mid-surge, he did nine national interviews. He will remain a go-to voice on immigration policy. For some, it's just another issue. For Cuellar, it's literally where he lives.

Cuellar is a conservative Democrat. These days in Congress, conservative Democrats are like whooping cranes.

Cuellar is not shy about reminding his colleagues about this. In a recent Democratic strategy session, he raised a hand and said, "So, let's focus on all the remaining liberal districts out there that we can win to regain the majority." After the ensuing uncomfortable silence, an aide confides: "When you raise your hand at these things, I wince."

"This was my first campaign headquarters," Cuellar says, pulling up to a tiny, bedraggled building on Clark Street now serving as Alondra's Beauty Salon. "I was in my early 30s but my nickname was 'grandfather' because all of my campaign workers were high school and college kids."

From the beginning as a state representative in 1987, Cuellar was laser-focused on improving educational opportunity. He was a key player in enabling the Texas Grant program, which guarantees college funding for needy students with strong academic records.

"Whatever else he does, that's a huge part of his legacy in Texas," said Juan Maldonado, president of Laredo Community College.

Ray Keck, president of Cuellar's other hometown alma mater, Texas A&M International University, says, "Henry ... has been vital to the growth of this institution."

Cuellar is proud as he drives past TAMIU's sparkling campus, past the Dr. Henry Cuellar Elementary School, past the airport. "We've gotten $100 million for this airport in the last 10 years," he says. "I'm about to announce $5 million more."

In 2002, Cuellar's political ambition aimed him toward Washington. He took on popular five-term incumbent Republican Rep. Henry Bonilla of San Antonio, and lost — though only by about two percentage points. Cuellar and Bonilla braced for a rematch.

But a GOP-led redistricting in 2003 split the city of Laredo, making Bonilla's seat safer and pushing much of Laredo into the 28th District, held by San Antonio Democrat Ciro Rodriguez.

"I didn't go looking for a fight with Ciro," Cuellar said, "but that's the way it worked out."

The primary was bitterly fought. After the initial tally, Rodriguez led by a scant 145 votes, but a recount flipped the result, giving Cuellar a 58-vote margin.

District 28 would be changed again after a court challenge, and it became largely Laredo, solidifying Cuellar's power base. He now receives only token opposition.

In January 2005, Cuellar flew his parents to Washington for his swearing-in. It was the first time Odilia and Martín had been on a plane. They didn't understand all the words that were being spoken as they watched the ceremony. But they certainly understood that their eldest son was now also their Congressman.

Now, Odilia is 86 and Martín is 88. "We are blessed," Odilia says simply. "Blessed with good children."

Cuellar's reception from his own party in Washington was decidedly frosty. He had endorsed fellow Texan George W. Bush for president in 2000, and he had beaten a popular Democrat.

But in time, tensions within the caucus eased. Cuellar's skill at relationship-building helped — and so did his talent at fundraising.

He is always among the first in each Congress to give his "tithe" to the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee. And he raises much more for other Democrats, in a variety of ways.

Cuellar came out early and strong for Hillary Clinton in 2007, hosting a fundraiser for her that raised more than $200,000.

Webb County GOP Chairman Randy Blair of Laredo admits it's hard to run anybody against Cuellar. "He's reaching across the aisle, working with Republicans like Sen. (John) Cornyn, and he's even standing up to President Obama a lot of the time."

Blair was critical of Cuellar for supporting Obamacare, but admitted, "He's been in office a long time and he's popular."

"Am I a good Democrat? Check out the DCCC totals," Cuellar says. "Some of the Democrats who talk the loudest don't put up the money when it counts."

Cuellar is enormously well-connected in Mexico. He befriended Mexican President Enrique Pena Nieto while the Mexican politician was still governor of the state of Mexico. Cuellar was with the charismatic young leader in Mexico City on the night he was elected president.

Last year, Cuellar was mortified when Pena Nieto came to Washington before being sworn in, and was given the cold shoulder by some. Cuellar said House Speaker John Boehner declined to see Pena Nieto, referring Cuellar instead to then-Majority Leader Eric Cantor. After waiting for 10 minutes outside Cantor's office, Pena Nieto left.

Cuellar is equally critical of the White House for lack of engagement with Mexico.

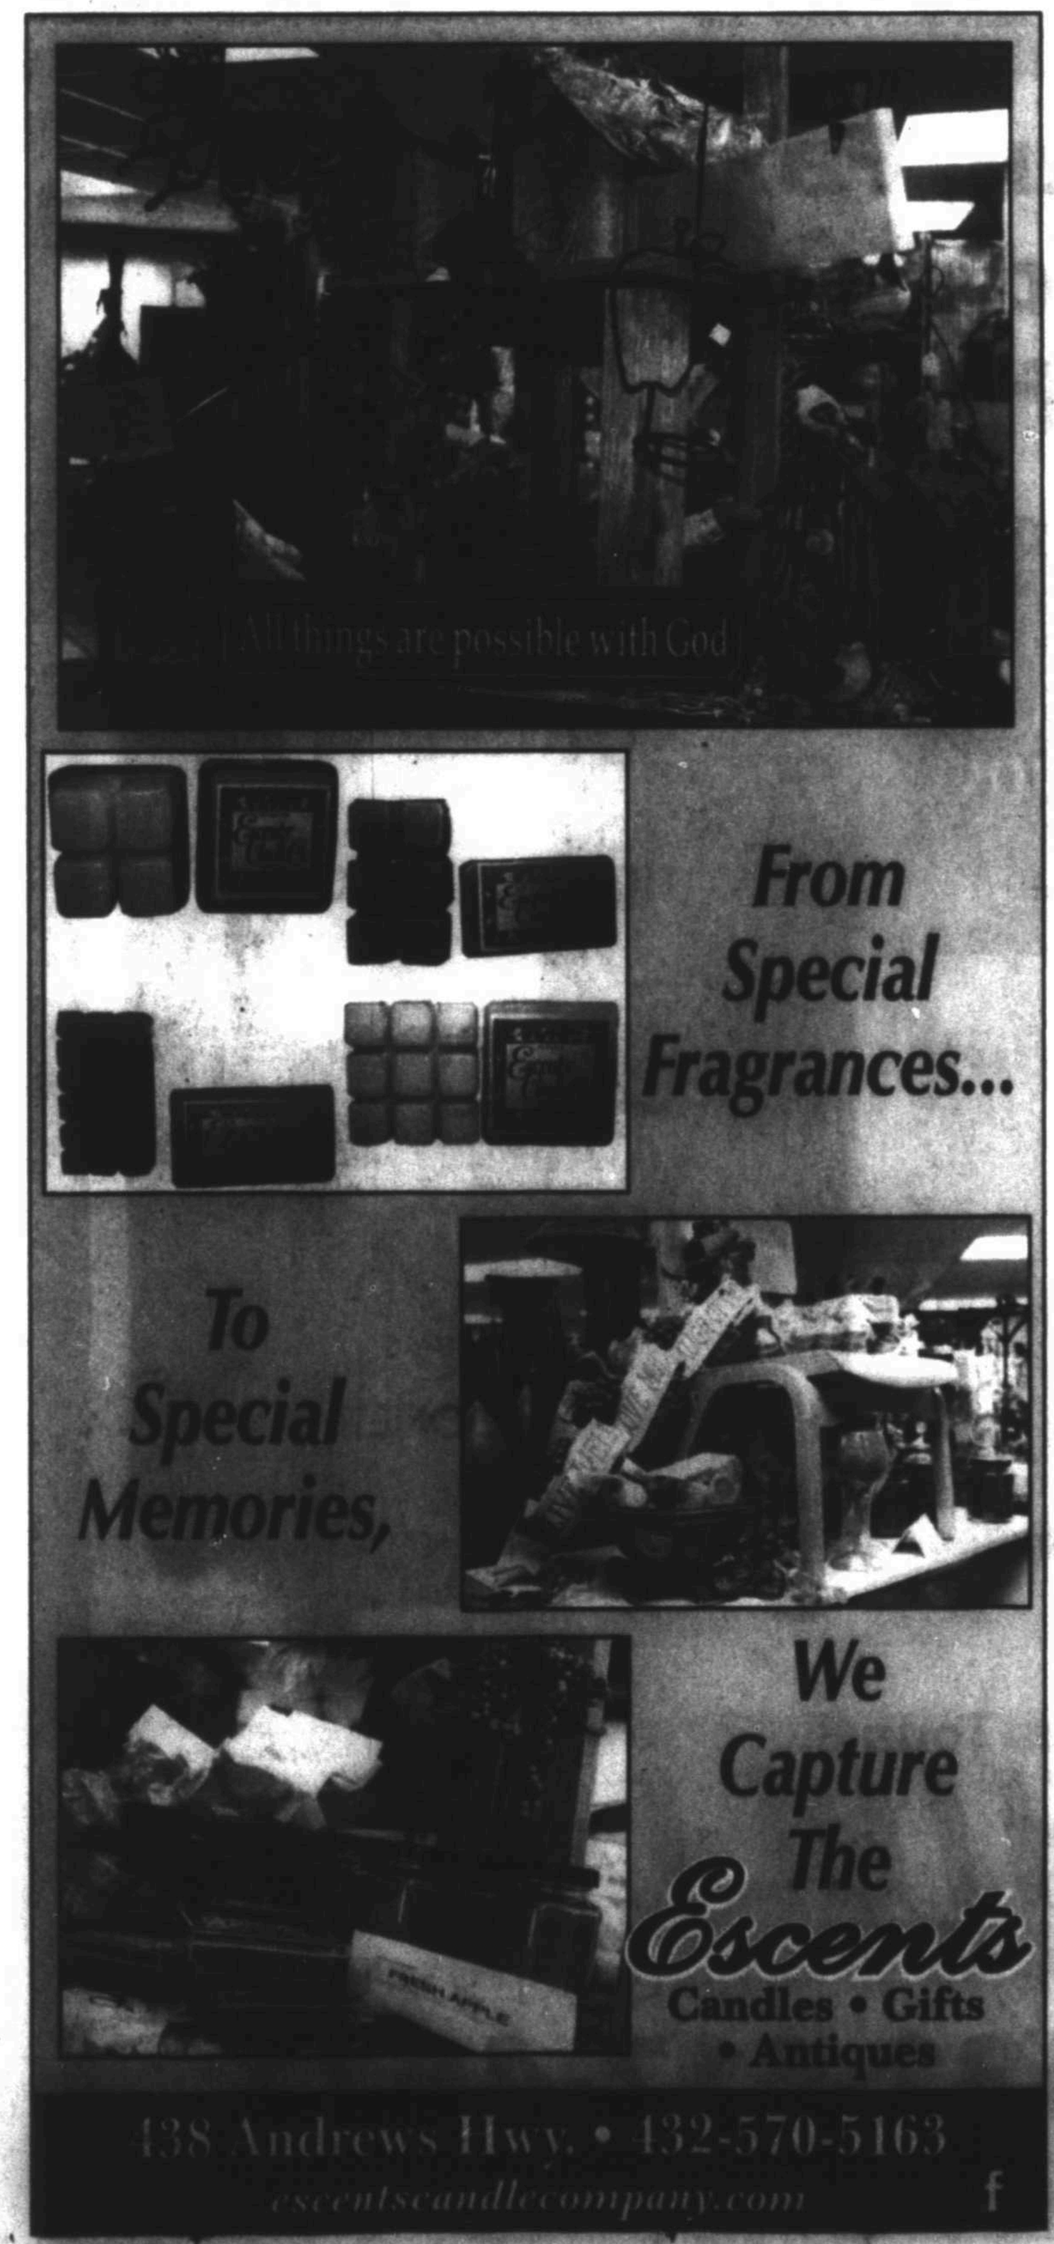

A counterpart in Mexico's equivalent of the House, Diputado Marco Gonzalez of Nuevo Leon, said Cuellar "is one of the best promoters of the U.S.-Mexico relationship in Washington. We need more congressmen to see Mexico as a friend, not a troublemaker."

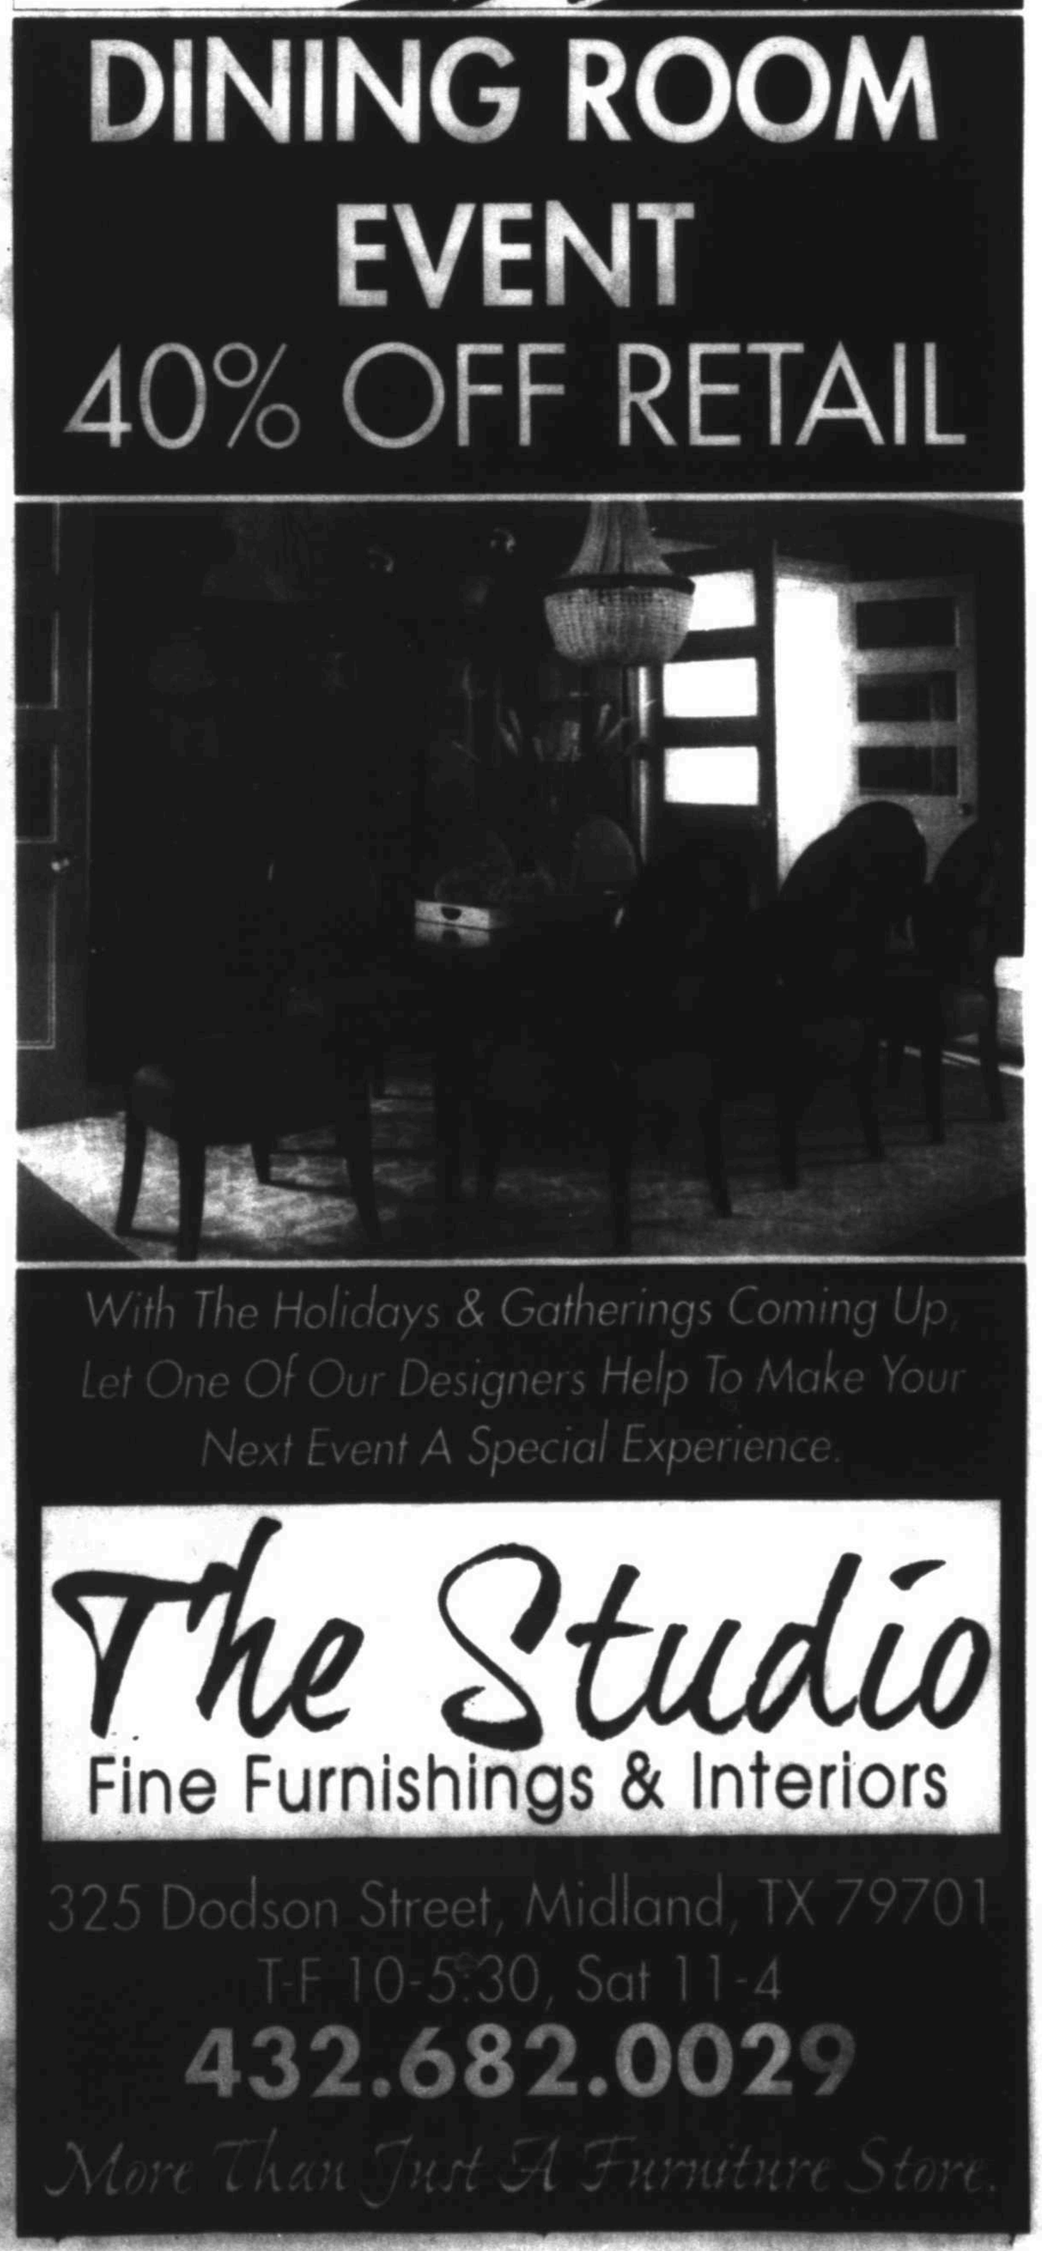

What's next for Cuellar politically?

As Texas turns purple and then blue, Cuellar may be the kind of Democrat — a moderate Latino gun-rights supporter — who would do well in a statewide race. He thinks 2018 might be the time when a Democrat could win statewide. There's both the governorship and a Senate race up that year.

"I love Texas and someday I'd like to go home and run statewide," Cuellar said. But for now, he is enjoying the clout his increasing seniority, added visibility and safe seat give him. "I still have work to do here," he said, which sounds a lot like something his father would say.

Researchers working to regenerate heart, nerve cells

By Anna Kuchment
The Dallas Morning News

DALLAS — Under a microscope inside a lab at UT Southwestern Medical Center, a dish of cells pulsates with the rhythm of a human heart.

Days ago, these building blocks of heart muscle had a different identity altogether: They were scar-forming cells that proliferate in the wake of a heart attack and weaken the organ's ability to pump blood.

Researchers at UT Southwestern and other institutions may have found a way to reverse the damage that patients sustain from heart attacks, traumatic brain injuries and other conditions.

They accomplish this by converting a less desirable type of cell, such as a scar-forming cell, into a highly desirable one, such as a nerve cell, using a process known as direct reprogramming.

Most recent efforts to convert one cell type into another have relied on stem cells — immature versions of adult cells. But stem cells can be difficult to manipulate and have caused controversy because they are sometimes derived from embryos donated by fertility clinics.

Many scientists say direct reprogramming is a promising new approach to regenerative medicine — a field dedicated to curing disease by helping the body repair and regrow its own tissues.

In recent years, scientists have used the method to grow new brain cells, liver cells, pancreatic tissue and parts of the inner ear responsible for hearing loss.

Researchers hope to one day develop drugs that will enable patients' bodies to repair their own damaged organs, much the way a salamander can regrow its own heart and a python can double the size of its liver.

At UT Southwestern's new Hamon Center for Regenerative Science and Medicine, researchers are focused on cultivating heart and nerve cells.

The center, led by biologist Eric Olson, opened in May with a $10 million gift from the Hamon Charitable Foundation. Its areas of research include stem cells as well as direct reprogramming.

Olson hopes the center will help UT Southwestern attract top college graduates from around the U.S.

"Regenerative biology is one of the most popular majors," he says. "The center will give us a new tool to recruit some of the best students to Dallas."

Olson's career-long interest in how a single cell develops into the trillions that make up the human body led to his lab's current work.

"I wanted to understand how specialized cells were formed and how large sets of genes turned on and off during development," he said.

After pondering what cell type to focus on, Olson settled on muscle cells, because muscles make up 40 percent of our body mass and turn on thousands of genes as they develop.

The idea was that a deep understanding of one particular system could be applied more widely. It could also help scientists gain insight into how diseases develop when errors creep into the process.

Over the years, Olson's lab has uncovered several of the major genes that control muscle development.

Recent work from his lab has led to a promising approach to treating Duchenne muscular dystrophy, a congenital disease that causes muscles to progressively weaken and degenerate.

In the center's inaugural publication this month in the journal Science, Olson and his colleagues outlined a way to "edit" the gene abnormalities responsible for the disorder in a mouse and rectify the body's ability to grow healthy muscle.

Olson's lab extended its work into heart muscle cells in the early 1990s. At the time, Deepak Srivastava, then a postdoctoral researcher, was working in the lab.

"I was trained as a pediatric cardiologist and was interested in how the heart forms in the embryo and how that goes awry in human disease," says Srivastava, who now directs cardiac and stem cell research at the Gladstone Institutes and is a professor at the University of California San Francisco. The two went on to discover many of the genes that control heart development.

Using some of that research, Srivastava pioneered cardiac reprogramming several years later.

"We took the years of knowledge that our lab and other labs had developed about how nature normally makes a heart in the embryo and essentially redeployed those same methods in the adult heart," he says.

In a 2010 paper in the journal Cell, Srivastava showed that scar-forming cells known as fibroblasts could be converted into beating heart cells by adding just three ingredients. Those ingredients, proteins known as transcription factors, are master regulators that flip genes on and off. The genes involved are the same ones that direct heart formation in the womb.

In 2012, Srivastava and Olson, writing separate papers in the same issue of the journal Nature, showed that the process could be performed successfully in living mice.

Each group used a different combination of transcription factors to reprogram the cells, but both found that the technique improved heart function in the animals following a heart attack.

For the last two decades, stem cells have been virtually synonymous with regenerative medicine.

Scientists use them in many different ways. In one approach, researchers take a sample of skin, fat or bone marrow from a patient, convert the mature cells into their previous immature states, then reprogram them to form a new type of tissue.

In a second approach, scientists can extract stem cells from embryos and then convert them.

In clinical trials, researchers have also used a third approach: They have taken so-called adult stem cells from bone marrow and injected them into the heart, hoping the stem cells take on the properties of muscle cells.

Adult stem cells have had mixed results. "The reality is this has shown limited benefits after a decade of clinical trials," says Olson.

So far, researchers have tried direct reprogramming in mice and in human cells in a lab dish.

Chun-Li Zhang, a colleague of Olson's at the Hamon Institute, is using direct reprogramming to rebuild nerve cells, or neurons. He starts with glial cells, which reproduce in the brain and spinal cord following an injury and can form scars.

"Basically, these are the fibroblasts of the brain," he says.

In a series of papers published over the last year, Zhang and his colleagues reported generating new neurons from glial cells in mice following a traumatic brain or spinal cord injury. The lab is now investigating how much the new cells can contribute to the animals' recovery.

Tribune Festival speakers clash on border policy

US Rep. O'Rourke, Lt. Gov. Dewhurst exchange heated words on topic

By Joseph Basco
jbasco@mrt.com

Immigration, once just about citizenship policy, has shifted into the much bipartisan issue about security at the Texas and Mexico border.

The right argues that border security is a priority and needs to be intensified, while the left decries the militarization of the border and focuses on improving the citizenship process.

A Texas Tribune Festival panel discussion on Sept. 20 addressed this issue and others related to the border, offering insight as to why the border is a nuanced issue that spurs endless debate and myriad realistic and idealistic solutions.

U.S. Rep. Beto O'Rourke, D-El Paso, and Republican Lt. Gov. David Dewhurst challenged each other multiple times during the discussion, the first clash being the safety of El Paso and border towns.

O'Rourke talked about how the border, on average, is safer than the rest of the country. He said that people come into the U.S. to live the American Dream, not to commit crime.

Texas Agriculture Commissioner Todd Staples thinks that violence does exist, but that not everyone who crosses the border from Mexico into the U.S. commits a crime.

"I think what we really have is a tale of two borders," Staples said. "We have the very robust and dynamic economy of Mexico that makes the state of Texas their No. 1 trading partner. ... And then we have a very dangerous situation. It is not conducive to solving the drug problems, the crimes and the unlawful entry if we say it (the border) is better than ever because the (U.S. Customs and Border Patrol) stats show apprehensions in Texas increased by 100 percent from 2011 to 2013."

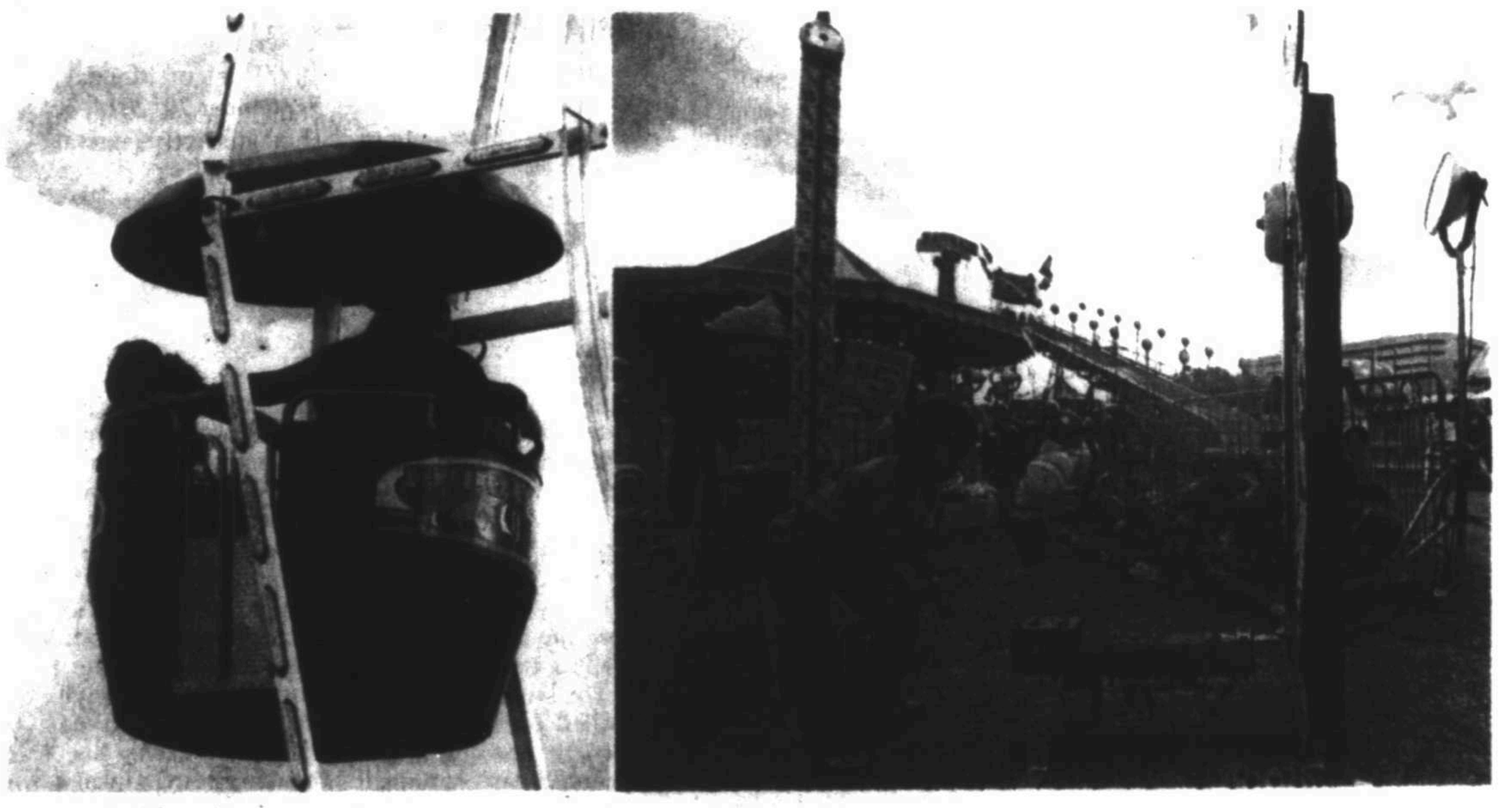

In response to O'Rourke's claim, Dewhurst said it is delusional to say the border is safer than the rest of the country, adding that the border is at greater risk for incidents such as shootings, and the

Trans-Pecos Dispatch: Time to batter up

By Rich Lopez
jrlopez@mrt.com

MARFA — The Trans-Pecos Festival in Marfa continued to display its homey feel — despite major music names on the bill — with a baseball game, of all things.

With a manufactured rivalry between Austin and Marfa, the eighth annual Trans-Pecos Sandlot Baseball Showdown pit the Austin Texas Playboys against the Los Yonke Gallos de Marfa. But it was less a fierce competition than a social event punctuated by bargain hot dogs and between-inning antics.

The "rivalry" is based on the hipness of both cities; each has a reputation for having a laid-back attitude. Austin won 8-3, but ponder this: with fewer runs, couldn't we question if Marfa won?

Austin-based Frank sold hot dogs for $3; the sale benefited Marfa Public Radio. Before thinking that the business just sold "hot dogs," Frank kept up its reputation by grilling quality frankfurters on the premises.

During a break in the baseball game, each team's mascots and drill team performed. They won't win dance competitions anytime soon.

On the final day of the festival, the crowds at El Cosmico and in Marfa have been reportedly larger this year. Friday night's opening act, Ross Cashiola — who has performed in the last seven festivals — said this year's crowds have been notably larger.

"You can see how the campgrounds are just more full," he said. "The festival has grown every year since, but this just feels like it."

Cashiola said that last year, more than 300 tickets were sold. This year, organizers estimated that they are over the 400 mark, and tickets were still being sold at the gate on Saturday.

The live music ended Saturday with a line-up that included David Garza, Girl in a Coma and Meshell Ndegeocello.

Reunion takeaway: People don't change who they are

I never really know how far I can go in this column before I offend somebody because the people I write about always seem to find a copy even if they are not regular readers.

That's the predicament I find myself in this week. You see, I went to my 50-year high school class reunion a couple of weeks ago, and I just have to write about that.

Yet, most of those in my graduating class of 1964 at Snyder High School never read my column. But I somehow feel like many of them will read this one. There are a few classmates living here in Midland that are really good in "spreading" the word.

But I have to tell you, time wasn't good to some of us. We were sagging a bit here and there. Some of the guys had replaced hair on their head with hair on their face.

The women seemed to fare a bit better than us men. Some had aged gracefully and some ... well, you get the idea. There is no real reason here to go into harm's way over a few added pounds.

The reunion organizers made it even worse for us. We had name tags that had our high school picture on it. I had to walk around the whole reunion thinking I was this other person. I was so skinny in high school I could have dated Twiggy.

Of course, one classmate reminded me that dating was not my best asset in high school. I would have been lucky to have a Twiggy wrapped around my arm — or any other girl, for that matter.

And I'm going to have to quit referring to my female classmates as girls. They no longer fit that bill. Let's just say they have matured since those girly days and "deserve" to be called women now. They still seemed like the girls to me, however.

Another classmate of mine did notice my high school picture, and he bluntly stated, "Oh no, you've turned into two."

Well, as I looked around the room, I decided it was OK because I think our class has literally doubled in size.

When I first arrived at the reunion, I was wondering why I had come.

There were just a bunch of old people here. I didn't graduate with a bunch of old people. We were young and vibrant back then. It certainly didn't take any of us 10 minutes to walk across the room.

But I want to remind you that these were the first impressions. It all changed for me in a matter of minutes. I would hear a voice or see a smile, and I instantly knew who they were.

Many still had some of their old mannerisms that I picked up on, and nearly everyone's unique personality was a light that broke the darkness of change.

People may change through the years

Larry Bailey

"Well done, good and faithful servant!" Larry Bailey entered the Kingdom of Heaven on September 25, 2014 at the age of 74. His diagnosis of melanoma was treated at MD Anderson in Houston, TX. Several blessed years followed.

Larry was born in 1940 to Harvey and Mary Bailey in San Antonio, TX. Larry is survived by his wife of 49 years, Roberta Ann Bailey of Midland; daughters, Kathryn Lynn Bailey and Karen Bailey Guerra of Midland; grandchildren, Chase Carl Locke and Cole Perrin Locke of Midland.

Larry graduated from Breckenridge High School in San Antonio, TX then attended SMU University on a band scholarship. Larry learned at an early age work ethics peddling fruits and vegetables with his father. As the only helper, Larry made as much money as two grown men. Hearing the Lord's call for service, he entered the SMU Perkins School of Theology to prepare for ministry. Larry served in the Southwest Texas Methodist Conference for 35 years. Nancy Raisch Stephens

A memorial service for Nancy Raisch Stephens will be celebrated on Saturday, Oct. 4, 4 p.m., at St. Barnabas' Episcopal Church, 4141 Tanglewood Lane, Odessa.

Nancy Raisch Stephens passed away peacefully in August at Gentiva Odyssey Hospice in San Antonio, and was interred at Capital Parks Cemetery in Pflugerville.

She and her husband of 60 years, Dr. Charles Anthon Stephens, lived in Odessa for 56 years. There they raised five children: Debbie, Claudia, Charles, Barbara and Jerry. Nancy was an active member of several local groups, including St. Barnabas' Episcopal Church, Permian Basin Mental Health and Mental Retardation, Special Olympics, Boy Scouts and Permian High School music programs.

It was a common occurrence to find Nancy belting out opera arias in the house and a day didn't go by that Nancy didn't have a book in her hand and many handmade bookmarks sticking out of the book every 20 pages. She famously said: "I'm spending all my children's inheritance on books."

James Traficant, convicted ex-congressman, dies

James Traficant, the colorful Ohio politician whose conviction for taking bribes and kickbacks made him only the second person to be expelled from Congress since the Civil War, died Saturday. He was 73.

Traficant was seriously injured Tuesday after a vintage tractor flipped over on him as he tried to park it inside a barn on the family farm near Youngstown. He died four days later in a Youngstown hospital, said Dave Betras, chairman of the Mahoning County Democratic Party.

The Democrat's expulsion from Congress in 2002 came three months after a federal jury in Cleveland convicted him. Prosecutors said he used his office to extract bribes from businesspeople and coerced staffers to work on his farm and his house boat on the Potomac River in Washington. He also was charged with witness tampering, destroying evidence and filing false tax returns. He spent seven years in prison.

Traficant's notoriety was rivaled only by his eccentricity.

He loved to play the buffoon during his 17 years in Congress. He got plenty of notice within the staid, buttoned-down Capitol and airtime on C-SPAN for his messy mop of hair — revealed to be a wig when he went to prison — his typical wardrobe of cowboy boots, denim or polyester suits, and his bombastic speaking style.

His made-for-TV rants on the House floor invariably ended with the signoff "Beam me up," which Traficant borrowed from "Star Trek" to show his disgust or bemusement at whatever he found particularly outrageous.

"Mr. Traficant was a complex man," Betras said. "He gave voice to the frustrations and anxieties of the common man. The public felt he was one of them and because of that connection, they supported him in good times and in bad. He was a larger than life character who will long be remembered."

Traficant was born May 8, 1941, in Youngstown and was a quarterback for the University of Pittsburgh, where he played with future NFL coaches Mike Ditka and Marty Schottenheimer.

He worked as a drug counselor for 10 years before running for Mahoning County sheriff at a colleague's suggestion.

He endeared himself to voters in the early 1980s by defying the courts and going to jail for three nights rather than foreclose on the homes of workers laid off from the city's dying steel industry.

The antagonism between Traficant and federal law enforcement authorities lasted throughout his public career, with Traficant trumpeting it as proof that he was on the side of "the little guy" against powerful government interests.

He faced his first federal bribery and corruption trial in 1983, when he was Mahoning County sheriff. Prosecutors accused Traficant of taking bribes to protect mobsters' criminal activity. He defended himself in court, although he was not a lawyer, and won. He argued that he was conducting a one-person sting.

He was elected to Congress the following year and was easily re-elected eight times.

He championed "Buy American" requirements on virtually every spending bill and prided himself on landing federal grants for hometown prospects, including highways, a sports arena and Youngstown's airport.

Yet he often exasperated fellow Democrats by breaking ranks, such as his decision to vote for Republican Dennis Hastert as speaker and his differences with President Bill Clinton on trade and other issues. He denounced Justice Department tactics and belittled Clinton's attorney general, Janet Reno, as a good prospect to run for governor of Beijing.

In 2000, as he geared up for re-election, Traficant was indicted in a grand jury investigation that targeted corruption and organized crime in the Youngstown area and led to the convictions of scores of people, including judges, a prosecutor and a sheriff.

But Traficant was the biggest prize, and he was not as lucky in his second trial as in his first.

He claimed the government had tried to frame him because of his criticism of the FBI, CIA and Internal Revenue Service.

During the two-month trial, he did a curbside interview on live network TV outside the courthouse each morning and then went inside to challenge U.S. District Judge Lesley Brooks Wells, who tried to dissuade Traficant from representing himself.

He often slumped alone at the defense table preparing handwritten motions as a team of prosecutors and investigators pressed the government's case under the eye of Justice Department attorneys.

He was expelled from Congress in a 420-1 vote by the U.S. House on July 24, 2002, three months after being convicted on 10 corruption-related counts. He was the second person to be expelled from Congress since the Civil War, the first being U.S. Rep. Michael "Ozzie" Myers of Pennsylvania over the Abscam scandal. Traficant could have avoided the indignity of expulsion by choosing to resign, but he remained defiant to the end.

"I'm prepared to lose everything. I'm prepared to go to jail," Traficant told colleagues as they debated his political fate. "You go ahead and expel me."

Six days later, at his sentencing, he abruptly fired his attorney.

"Take your things and move," he told the lawyer, who then switched seats with Traficant.

He was sentenced to eight years in prison and led from the federal courtroom in handcuffs.

Traficant called life in prison "tough."

"Most political figures go to some camps in country clubs," he said. "I didn't."

His case over, Traficant ran for re-election from prison as an independent in 2002 and lost to former aide Tim Ryan. Traficant got 15 percent of the vote in a three-way race.

He was released from prison in September 2009 and the following year ran for the Youngstown-area congressional seat as an independent. He received 16 percent of the vote, again losing to Tim Ryan, and then faded from the spotlight.

From then on, he lived a quiet life on his farm, doting on his grandchildren.

The barn where his tractor tipped over played a key role in his criminal case.

A Youngstown businessman had the barn built for Traficant in return for a favor. The businessman later billed Traficant for the full construction cost after the congressman continued asking for favors. Traficant ended up paying him far less than what the barn was worth, and the businessman testified against him.

Don Keefer, 98, dies; had bad thoughts on 'Twilight Zone'

Don Keefer played many distinctive roles in a long acting career. He was the son of Willy Loman's neighbor in the original Broadway cast of "Death of a Salesman," which opened in 1949, and for the next half-century he was a sought-after character actor onstage and in films, including "The Caine Mutiny," Woody Allen's "Sleeper" and "Liar, Liar," starring Jim Carrey.

But Keefer, who was 98 when he died Sept. 7 in Sherman Oaks, California, may be best remembered for his role in a classic 1959 episode of "The Twilight Zone."

The episode, "It's a Good Life," is set in fictional Peaksville, Ohio, a small town that has been paralyzed by the strange powers of an otherwise unremarkable 6-year-old boy named Anthony, played by Billy Mumy. Anthony is able to transform people and animals that bother him into objects, or make them disappear, simply by concentrating. What sets him off more than anything are people who think "bad thoughts" about him.

Anthony's tortured family and most of their terrified town have become practiced in humoring Anthony, but one neighbor, Dan Hollis, played by Keefer, reaches his breaking point. Given a Perry Como record at his birthday party, hosted by Anthony's parents, Hollis is urged not to play it, for fear it could anger Anthony. Hollis agrees but is frustrated and begins drinking. The alcohol soon overcomes him.

"You monster, you," he says, staring at Anthony. "You dirty little monster! You murderer! You think about me. Go ahead, Anthony. You think bad thoughts about me, and maybe some man in this room, some man with guts, somebody who's so sick to death of living in this kind of place and willing to take a chance, will sneak up behind you and lay something heavy across your skull and end this once and for all."

No one does, and Anthony, as always, has his way.

"You're a bad man," Anthony says. "You're a very bad man, and you keep thinking bad thoughts about me."

With that, he points at Hollis and turns him into a jack-in-the-box, his cone-capped head bobbing on a spring.

Everyone is aghast but too afraid to challenge the boy. Anthony's anguished father urges his son to do with the jack-in-the-box what he does with many of his creations — think it away to the cornfield outside.

Midland man arrested on aggravated assault charges

A Midland man was arrested Monday afternoon on a charge of aggravated assault causing bodily injury with a deadly weapon, according to court documents.

Saucedo

A deputy was dispatched to South County Road 1190 and noticed a man — Jose Angel Saucedo, 54 — walking in the area. The deputy noticed that Saucedo had a bloody face and cut lip and asked him what happened. Saucedo said he had gotten in a fight with a family member who punched him in the mouth and then he pulled out a knife to protect himself, according to the arrest affidavit.

The deputy then made contact with the family member, who had a laceration on his upper left arm above the elbow and three cuts on his abdomen, according to the affidavit.

Neither man wanted to press charges, but Saucedo was arrested on the aggravated assault charge. He was being held Saturday night on a $40,000 bond.

If convicted, Saucedo faces up to 99 years in prison for the felony charge.

Man arrested on possession charge

An 18-year-old Midland man was arrested Wednesday night for alleged drug possession, according to court documents.

Nunez

Jose Nunez, driving west on Thomason Drive, was pulled over by a Midland police officer for a defective license plate light. When the officer began asking Nunez questions, he became nervous and agitated, according to the arrest affidavit.

The officer asked Nunez if there was anything illegal in the vehicle and Nunez said there was a marijuana pipe hidden between the driver's seat and center seat, according to the affidavit.

The officer asked Nunez to get out of the vehicle, and during a search the officer found a small baggie with powder that Nunez confirmed was cocaine, according to the affidavit. The officer then arrested Nunez and placed him in his patrol car.

The officer also found a large marijuana pipe, two narcotics scales and a marijuana grinder, according to the affidavit.

When the officer returned with Nunez to the Midland County Detention Center, he weighed the baggie and found that it contained 0.5 grams of cocaine, according to the affidavit.

If convicted, Nunez faces up to two years on the felony charge.

Teen arrested for allegedly assaulting public servant

A 17-year-old Midland student was arrested Thursday morning for allegedly assaulting a public servant and tampering with evidence, according to court documents.

Ochoa

A Coleman High School administrator observed Caleb Ochoa smelling like marijuana, according to the arrest affidavit. Ochoa was detained by a campus officer and brought to the principal's office. The campus officer found five baggies of marijuana in one of the pockets of Ochoa shorts, according to the affidavit.

The campus officer stepped out of the office to make a call, leaving Ochoa and the administrator in the office. Ochoa tried to leave the office, and the administrator blocked the door but was forced away by Ochoa, who grabbed the marijuana and left, according to the affidavit.

Another administrator tried to prevent Ochoa from leaving through the front doors, but the teen forced his way out, according to the affidavit.

Four Midland police officers responded to the school and began searching the area. They found Ochoa lying face down in a back yard on the 1700 block of East Golf Course Road and found the marijuana, according to the affidavit.

One of the administrators suffered injuries in the incident — a left arm injury, scratched right wrist and lower back pain, according to the affidavit.

Ochoa was charged with assault of a public servant and tampering with or fabricating physical evidence. Ochoa was being held Saturday night on a $35,000 bond.

If convicted, he faces up to 20 years in jail for the felony charges.

Officers find drugs, 9 mm gun in car

Two Odessa women were arrested during a traffic stop on Wednesday for allegedly possessing various drugs and a 9 mm semi-automatic handgun.

Miller

Janaya Ann Miller, 19, and Brianna Barriga, 21, were arrested with five total drug possession charges; three for Barriga and two for Miller. Miller received the unlawful carry of a weapon charge, as well.

Barriga

On Wednesday night, officers stopped a white Chevrolet Tahoe on State Highway 349 south of Interstate 20. The vehicle had a license plate that was unreadable and not fully illuminated by the vehicle's license plate light.

The officers smelled marijuana and found a black tray with marijuana residue in the vehicle. Miller and Barriga were taken out of the vehicle, and officers conducted a search.

Inside the vehicle, officers found a bag of meth, a bag of cocaine, a 9 mm semi-automatic handgun and a pill bottle with meth, cocaine and Xanax inside.

Both were then transported to the county jail.

Miller remained in jail Friday with a $10,000 bond for a meth possession charge, a $15,000 bond for the cocaine possession charge and a $1,000 bond for the unlawful carry of a weapon charge.

If convicted, Miller faces up to 20 years in prison.

Barriga remained in jail Friday with a $1,000 bond for the possession of Xanax charge and two $15,000 bonds for the possession of cocaine and possession of meth charges.

If convicted, Barriga faces up to 10 years in prison.

Officers find drugs on suspect with burglary warrant

A Midland man is in jail for allegedly possessing cigarettes stuffed with marijuana and bringing meth into the county jail.

Belloc

Pedro Belloc, 29, was arrested on Wednesday and charged with possession of marijuana and having a prohibited substance in a correctional facility. Belloc also had outstanding warrants for burglary of a habitation and theft of a firearm prior to his arrest.

According to the affidavit, an officer stopped a black Pontiac car with an expired vehicle registration in the 4400 block of Thomason Drive. Inside the vehicle was a woman and Belloc.

After conducting a check on Belloc, the officer found Belloc had warrants related to burglary and theft. The officer also discovered in the check that Belloc is known to carry firearms.

The officer waited for more officers to arrive, who then all proceeded to get Belloc out of the car at gunpoint and place him under arrest. The woman was relieved from the scene.

When the officers searched the vehicle, two half-smoked cigarettes filled with marijuana were found in the center console.

At the jail, the officer asked Belloc if he had any drugs, knives or guns, to which Belloc said no. The officer found meth inside Belloc's wallet.

Belloc remained in jail Friday on a $75,000 bond for the burglary charge, $20,000 for the theft charge, $500 for the marijuana possession charge and $15,000 for the prohibited substance in a correctional facility charge.

If convicted of the first-degree felony burglary offense, Belloc faces between five and 99 years in state prison.

Crime of the week

Midland Crime Stoppers and the Midland Police Department need help identifying theft suspects.

Three women with a small child entered Carter's Furniture on Sept. 5 and made their way to a handbags and wallets display. They then began acting like they were shopping. They hid behind a display case with a large sunflower on it and concealed in their large handbags the items they were stealing.

Glen Canyon Dam marks 50 years as power source

Associated Press

PHOENIX — U.S. Interior Secretary Sally Jewell and other officials on Saturday marked the 50th anniversary of power generation by Glen Canyon Dam, a structure that helped usher in a new era in the Southwest.

"Now, it's not without its controversy. But there's no question that this engineering feat was incredibly valuable to the economic future of this country," Jewell said.

Glen Canyon Dam, situated near the Arizona-Utah border, is a source of water and power for seven states in a region prone to drought.

The dam is a key part of the Colorado River Storage Project and at 710 feet, is the second highest concrete-arch dam in the U.S. According to Jewell, the dam can store 27 million acre-feet of water — or the equivalent of two years' worth of the Colorado River's flow.

"This power plant produces enough electricity during the year to not use 2 1/2 million tons of coal or 11 million barrels of oil," Jewell said.

Farmington smoke shop clerk wounds shoplifter

Associated Press

FARMINGTON, N.M. — San Juan County deputies say a smoke shop clerk shot and injured a man who allegedly tried to steal spice.

The San Juan County Sheriff's Office said deputies responded to reports of a robbery at the Still Smokn' Smoke Shop in Farmington on Friday night.

Deputies said a 21-year-old man was loitering and waited until the clerk went to a back office before he allegedly tried to shoplift synthetic marijuana.

Authorities said the clerk obtained a pistol and demanded the man stop. The clerk then allegedly followed him outside and shot him in the leg.

Deputies say the injured man has been hospitalized with injuries that were not life threatening.

Charges are pending and the investigation is ongoing.

The American Dream...plentiful jobs, safe, clean living conditions, accessible health care, freedom of speech and religion. Can you imagine living in a country where these basic rights are not a given?

Angela and her husband, Victor, came to this country about a year ago on a work visa. Both only spoke a little English but they were hard workers and they quickly secured jobs with area businesses. They enrolled their 2 older children in school and took shifts watching the youngest. They rented a small house on a month-to-month basis. Money was tight but they got by. Unfortunately, several months ago, Victor was accused of unlawful behavior and he was deported back to his home country, leaving Angela here with their 3 children. She was able to work during the summer because her older children could watch the little one. Then school started and Angela had to quit her job because she could not afford child care. She has been baking and selling food plus selling almost all of her furniture to come up with September rent. She was just asking for the few hundred dollars that she lacked for the month. Through an interpreter, I asked Angela to bring me a copy of her lease. She brought me a letter from her landlord saying Angela and her children needed to leave ASAP because she sold the house! Angela had no idea this was happening. She was destroyed. The weight on her shoulders just got a thousand times heavier.

We contacted an agency in town that could possibly help Angela with a place to live and get assistance with her many needs but they would need a few weeks to do interviews, background checks and drug testing. They also needed some time before an opening was available in their program. We quickly paid to move Angela and her children into a motel while this process moved forward.

We see so many people in month-to-month leases who get the rug pulled out from under them leaving them with only days to find somewhere else to live. Thankfully, your generous financial donations helps us help these worthy people transition to safe, secure housing. God bless you.

Update: Several weeks ago we ran an article about a young lady named Sonja whose husband left her with two small children to raise on her own. Soon after this article ran, we were approached by a gentleman who was moved to make a generous donation of $1,000 to further help Sonja and her children. We contacted Sonja with the joyful news and she decided to use this gift to pay for another month and a half's rent. What a blessing! We wish to extend a huge Thank You on her behalf to this kind donor. Although you wish to remain anonymous, please know your generous donation was greatly appreciated.

College grieves after 4 athletes killed in bus crash

Associated Press

A North Texas community college brought in counselors to comfort grieving students Saturday and canceled athletic competitions after four women's softball players were killed when a tractor-trailer veered into oncoming traffic on a major interstate highway and crashed into the side of their team bus.

The collision near Davis, Oklahoma, late Friday badly damaged the driver's side of the North Central Texas College team bus driven by a coach with 15 players aboard as they returned from a scrimmage against Southern Nazarene University in Bethany, Oklahoma.

Deckard

Pelton

Richardson

Woodlee

In addition to the deaths, two team members remained in hospitals Saturday, one in critical condition. The other nine players were treated and released, along with the coach.

"This is the most traumatic event that NCTC has had in its 90 years of history," North Central Texas College President Brent Wallace said at an emotional news conference Saturday in Gainesville, about 60 miles south of the crash site on Interstate 35.

The four players killed were identified by the Oklahoma Highway Patrol as Meagan Richardson, 19, Brooke Deckard, 20, Katelynn Woodlee, 18, and Jaiden Pelton 20. The women all were from small North Texas towns near the campus.

Three of the players died at the scene, and a fourth died at a hospital in nearby Sulphur, Oklahoma Highway Patrol Capt. Ronnie Hampton said.

Oklahoma University Medical Center clinical coordinator Darina Shellman said 18-year-old Bailey Buchanan was in critical condition Saturday. Kelly Wells, spokeswoman for Norman Regional Hospital, said 19-year-old Rachel Hitt was listed in fair condition.

The tragedy shocked the close-knit Texas community college of about 10,000 students. Rich Raymond, father of freshman player Emily Kuser, who survived the crash, said many of the girls had been playing together on regional softball travel teams since they were six or seven years old.

"It's just an amazing family of girls and athletes and coaches," Raymond said. "Just such a tight community. And even if your girl isn't going to the school, there's a lot of pain right now."

It was not clear why the northbound tractor-trailer lurched across the median into the southbound lanes. Police said they would investigate the accident as if it were a homicide.

Highway Patrol identified the driver as Russell Staley, 53, of Saginaw. He was treated in hospital and released. Capt. George Brown, spokesman for the Oklahoma Highway Patrol, said there are no charges pending Saturday against Staley.

The college's police chief James Fitch described the crash scene as "chaos." He said 11 ambulances and several helicopters responded.

The front end of the team bus was virtually untouched, but the sides of the vehicle were heavily damaged. The initial report listed the weather as clear and the highway as dry at the time of the crash.

Hampton said the truck kept going and went off the side of the road after it hit the bus.

"It took about an hour before we found the semi," he said. I-35 is a major trucking artery running between Oklahoma City and Dallas. Its lanes reopened early Saturday morning.

The National Transportation Safety Board said Saturday that it was sending a team of investigators to the site and scheduled a news conference for later Saturday afternoon.

Hampton said the Highway Patrol's investigation would take several weeks.

"Right now, it's being investigated like a homicide," Hampton said, adding that both drivers will undergo standard toxicology tests. Hampton said details of the crash were still not known but "something happened to cause (the tractor-trailer driver) to depart the roadway and impact the other vehicle."

A posting on the North Central Texas College Facebook page reads: "We ask for your prayers at this time for our softball team." The school scheduled a prayer vigil on campus for Sunday evening.

federal government has failed in addressing the border.

Dewhurst thinks people are overlooking the basic problem of the border, which is that only about 10 percent of the border is secure.

O'Rourke then questioned Dewhurst on how to achieve 100 percent border security.

"We could literally place a border patrol agent one foot apart from the next one, line up tanks, put a wall, or, as Stephen Colbert said, put a moat with alligators," O'Rourke said. "How much do you want to spend, how many people do you want to put out? It's an unrealistic goal to get to 100 percent security."

U.S. Rep. Henry Cuellar, D-Laredo, used football metaphors to speak about transnational efforts to resolve the issue of border security.

"We can keep playing defense on the 1-yard line, which is called the U.S.-Mexico border, and spend over $18 billion," Cuellar said. "Or, do we look at playing defense at the 20-yard line, working with Mexico and Central American countries?"

And with Islamic State comments from conservatives, such as Midland Sheriff Gary Painter, still fresh in peoples' minds, parts of the discussion shifted to the hot topic that is just as bipartisan as other border issues.

Dewhurst added fuel to the fire by saying Muslim prayer rugs have been found in the brush near the border. On Friday, the Texas Tribune reported that Dewhurst, speaking at an event in Washington, D.C., again said that Muslim prayer rugs have been found near the border.

In his comments about ISIS and the border, O'Rourke said top federal-law enforcement officials denied any credible intelligence of ISIS near the border. He said that communication about terrorist presence near the border is not a new idea, referencing a newspaper headline from 1981 that warned of a Libyan hit squad near the border.

"Whenever we're scared of something in this country, we project that fear to the border," O'Rourke said.

physically, but I quickly discovered that most people don't change much as far as who they are.

That makes them as recognizable as one of your own family members.

It wasn't long before we were "embellishing" old stories from our past. The wife got home and told our kids that mostly, "they did a lot of stretching the truth. In some circles it's known as flat out lying."

I felt like an underachiever in my class. We had doctors, lawyers, architects, engineers, college professors, teachers, interior designers, coaches and bankers to name a few. One even played a little professional football.

I could hardly talk to some of these people. All I could say was that I had watched a lot of sports for the past 50 years. I'm sure they were all impressed.

But I never had so much fun. It was like being back in high school for a few brief moments.

I heard one class member didn't come because they failed to lose the weight they wanted to lose before the reunion. Well, don't be one of those when your next reunion comes around. It's a time to enjoy and embrace.

Yes, we've all changed over the years, but our experiences are bountiful and meaningful — and enough time has passed that you can "embellish" to your heart's content.

Valles Caldera preserve to ask for more funding

Associated Press

SANTA FE, N.M. — The Valles Caldera National Preserve decided this week to ask Congress for more federal funding to manage operations for another five years.

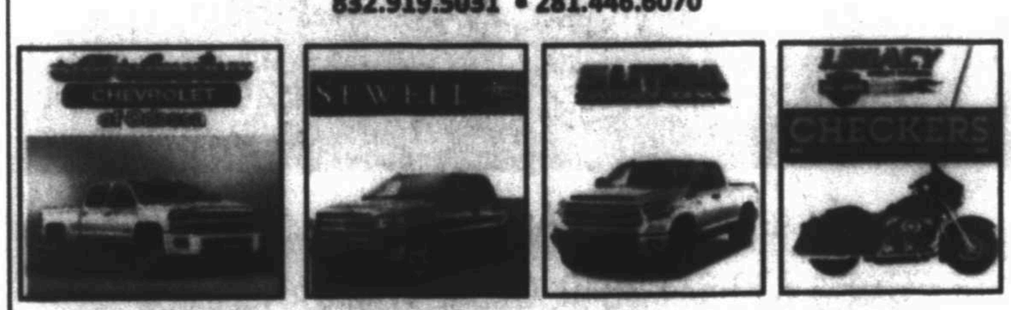

The preserve's board of trustees voted at its quarterly meeting Wednesday to submit a recommendation for extending federal appropriations through 2020. There are inherent government functions that will likely require aid on the federal level, Valles Caldera Trust Board chairman Kent Salazar said.

Those functions include compliance with historic-preservation and environmental laws, forest restoration and infrastructure repairs. More than 60 percent of the preserve was affected by recent wildfires and post-fire flooding, officials said.

The 90,000-acre preserve in the Jemez Mountains was a private ranch with grazing and logging operations before the federal government bought it in 2000.

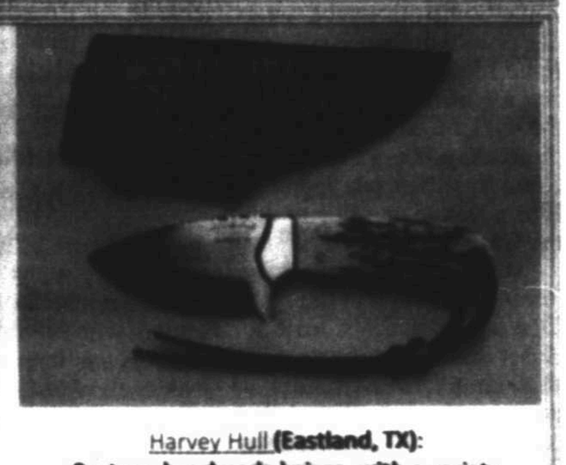

If the trust is not financially self-sufficient by the end of this fiscal year, the board can request Congress for more funding under the Valles Caldera Preservation Act. Under the act, the trust can also be dissolved and the preserve would be transferred to the U.S. Forest Service, the Albuquerque Journal reported.

FROM WIRE REPORTS

AMARILLO

Woman faces stiffer charge in husband's ex's death

Deputies recovered a damaged pink handgun from the home of a woman charged in the April beating and shooting death of her husband's ex-wife, whose body was found in a ditch.

Katie Spielbauer, 29, of Amarillo was being held Saturday on a capital murder charge with bond set at $400,000.

A Randall County grand jury indicted her Wednesday on the upgraded charge in the death of Robin Spielbauer, 32, the Amarillo Globe-News reported. Katie Spielbauer, who was arrested on a murder charge two days after the April 8 slaying, believed her husband and the victim were having an affair, according to a warrant.

A search of the dead woman's cellphone showed text messages indicating she was to meet her ex-husband, Jeremy Spielbauer, the night before her body was found near her SUV just west of Amarillo, according to a criminal complaint. His mother, Ava Marie Spielbauer, said Jeremy Spielbauer told her he didn't meet his ex-wife and his current wife didn't come home that night.

Robin Spielbauer suffered blunt-force trauma and a gunshot wound to the back of the head. The indictment alleges that Katie Spielbauer killed Robin Spielbauer during the course of a robbery.

"We believe certain items were taken at the time of the victim's death, and it was in the course of the homicide that these items were taken. That legally qualifies as robbery," Randall County Criminal District Attorney James Farren said Friday. He did not elaborate.

T.D. Hammons, Katie Spielbauer's attorney, declined to comment.

The deputies found the .22-caliber pink handgun on top of a gun cabinet in the defendant's master bedroom while executing a search warrant, according to court documents. Damage to the weapon led deputies to search the crime scene further, where they found metal pieces that matched the damaged areas, a criminal complaint said.

Prosecutors are not seeking the death penalty. Katie Spielbauer faces life in prison without parole if convicted of capital murder.

SAN ELIZARIO

West Texas woman charged with killing husband

Investigators say a West Texas woman has been charged with killing her husband of nearly 25 years by allegedly using an apron to strangle him.

El Paso County jail records show 61-year-old Martha Acevedo of San Elizario was being held Saturday on a murder charge.

Online jail records do not list an attorney for Acevedo, whose bond was set at $100,000 in the slaying of Jose Acevedo.

Sheriff's deputies were dispatched to the couple's home Thursday morning on a report of an unresponsive person. Authorities did not immediately say who summoned officers or what allegedly led to the death.

A complaint affidavit said the couple had a history of family violence.

HOUSTON

Police say girl fatally shot brother in accident

Houston police say a 13-year-old girl has fatally shot her older brother in an apparent accident at the family's home.

The shooting happened Friday night as the siblings were with a family friend.

Authorities say the 22-year-old brother died at a Houston hospital. His name wasn't immediately released.

Police are trying to determine who owns the gun and how the girl happened to fire the weapon.

Police are also investigating whether alcohol played a role in the accident.

HOUSTON

2 violent sex offenders from Texas back in prison

Two violent sex offenders who served time in Texas and later moved elsewhere while under state oversight are back behind bars for committing similar crimes.

Both men were in a civil commitment program meant to keep high-risk sex offenders in Texas custody after they finish serving their prison terms, the Houston Chronicle reported Friday.

But Texas officials never alerted other states about Lloyd Wilson, who moved to Virginia, and Melvin Cody Whipple, who moved to Utah, both in 2004 the newspaper reported. The two men were later convicted of sex-related crimes in their new states and sent to prison, where they remained Saturday.

Marsha McLane, director of the Texas Office of Violent Sex Offender Management, said the agency was not aware of the two out-of-state convicts until last week.

"It's true we didn't know about those two offenders, until we found a discrepancy in the number we showed were on civil commitment and number (the prison system) showed," McLane told the newspaper. "We should have known about them."

Details on Wilson and Whipple came to light as the newspaper attempted to determine the exact number of offenders currently in the state's civil commitment program, which began in 1999.

Officials with the Special Prosecutions Unit, the agency that was listed in court documents as responsible for monitoring the two men's whereabouts, did not immediately comment.

Separate judges, after Wilson and Whipple completed their sentences and left Texas prisons in 2004, signed court orders allowing the men to move out of state.

Wilson, 44, had just finished serving 12 years for indecency with a child in Fort Worth and aggravated sexual assault of a child in Dallas. Whipple, 58, was completing nine years in prison for aggravated kidnapping involving sexual intent and indecency with a child in the Amarillo area.

Judge Lee Alworth ordered Whipple to move to Bluff, Utah. Judge Putnam Reiter ordered Wilson to live in Virginia. Alworth and Reiter said Friday that they could not recall the cases.

Wilson was arrested in 2005 in Fairfax County, Virginia, on charges of rape, abduction and producing child pornography after he allegedly agreed to drive a 16-year-old girl home from work, and instead raped her. He received a 30-year sentence.

Whipple was arrested in 2008 in Utah, accused of fondling an 11-year-old boy after showing him pornography. He was given a one-to-15-year sentence for attempted aggravated sexual abuse of a child.

HOUSTON

Office manager gets prison for theft

The former manager of a Houston-area plastics company has been sentenced to more than three years in prison for stealing nearly $1.6 million from the business.

Carol Mack of Humble was also ordered Friday to repay the money.

Mack, who was executive assistant to the company's CEO, pleaded guilty in February to wire fraud.

Federal prosecutors in Houston say Mack from 2005 through 2012 wired corporate funds to her bank account and used a credit card terminal to hide the bogus transactions. Investigators say Mack, who must serve 39 months behind bars, processed sham customer refunds more than 500 times.

Further details on the plastics company weren't immediately available.

EL PASO

Man gets 50 years for killing wife

A West Texas man has been sentenced to 50 years in prison for strangling his wife as they argued about whether she had been unfaithful.

Manuel Torres of El Paso was sentenced Friday.

El Paso County jurors on Thursday found the 50-year-old Torres guilty of murder in the April 2013 death of his spouse, Lilia Torres.

The El Paso Times reported attorneys for Torres say he was acting in self-defense as his wife allegedly punched and kicked him. She was found dead on a sofa in the couple's home.

Torres will be eligible for parole in 25 years.

AUSTIN

Barton Springs Pool reopens after storms

Storm debris has been cleaned from a popular swimming hole in Central Texas so visitors can once again go for a dip.

Austin Parks and Recreation Department officials say Barton Springs Pool reopens Saturday after being closed since deadly Sept. 18 storms.

A Travis County sheriff's deputy who was on patrol died after being swept away by flooding after the Austin area received more than 7 inches of rain.

Services were held Wednesday for Senior Deputy Jessica Hollis. Her body was recovered Sept. 19 in Lake Austin.

Governor puts Texas' natural trade links with Mexico at risk

By Chris Tomlinson
Houston Chronicle

■ COMMENTARY

Texas is losing its competitive advantage in doing business with Mexico to, of all places, California.

That's a shame, because Mexico is Texas' largest trading partner and over the next few years the government will open the energy industry to foreign investment, creating an opportunity for companies of all kinds to make billions as our southern neighbor's economy grows.

California Gov. Jerry Brown understands the potential. He spent the first half of the year negotiating new trade agreements with Mexico's Ministry of Economy to spur investment in advanced manufacturing, alternative energy, health and biotechnology, education, agricultural technology and tourism.

The Democrat led a 90-member delegation of public officials and private-sector executives to Mexico City in July to promote more trade and better relations.

"For California business, Mexico represents incredible opportunity," Brown said at a signing ceremony with Mexican President Enrique Peqa Nieto.

Before that, University of California System President Janet Napolitano went to Mexico City to promote stronger links with Mexican higher education institutions and to extend an advanced research agreement with the Mexican National Council of Science and Technology. She also discussed plans with Mexican Secretary of Public Education Emilio Chuayffet to exchange 1,000 university students.

"I am excited by the new agreement we entered into this week and energized by the eagerness of so many institutions in Mexico to work with the UC," Napolitano said in a statement.

What has Texas done to promote more trade and closer ties with Mexico this year? Nada.

Instead, Gov. Rick Perry has deployed National Guard troops to the border. Whether they are needed or doing anything useful is a matter of intense debate, but Peqa Nieto responded the way any government would if troops suddenly appeared on its border.

"Not only is it displeasing, but I think it's reprehensible," Peqa Nieto told the Mexican daily El Universal in an interview published Sept. 12. "It is an attack on good relations and neighborliness."

Another dose of criticism

Perry doubled down on his criticism of Texas' best customer in a letter to Peqa Nieto recently.

"Our challenges today are partly a consequence of the failure of the Mexican government to secure its southern border from illegal immigration by unaccompanied children and other individuals from Central America, or to deploy adequate resources to control the criminal element in Mexico," Perry wrote, adding an invitation for Peqa Nieto to tour the border with him. He didn't mention the broken U.S. immigration system or the huge U.S. demand for illicit drugs that fuel Mexico's problems.

'It's bad for Texas'

Jorge Piqon, the interim director at the University of Texas Center for International Energy and Environmental Policy and a former president of Amoco Oil Latin America, told me Mexican officials will find the letter insulting.

"It's bad for Texas, it's bad for business, and it's bad for the industry," he said.

I asked Perry's spokeswoman, Lucy Nashed, whether the governor was concerned about hurting trade with Mexico by taking such a hard line.

"Safe communities attract tourism and allow businesses to thrive. That's why, not just for the immediate safety of Texans, but also for the prosperity of our communities, Gov. Perry deployed members of the Texas National Guard," she said.

Here's a tough fact that Perry won't share and some readers won't accept: The border will never be 100 percent secure. I was a soldier during the Cold War posted in Germany, and even the Berlin Wall was never secure. People sneak across Korea's Demilitarized Zone, and anyone who has stood post with a rifle knows that unless you have thousands of people standing shoulder to shoulder, no border can be secured.

FBI crime statistics also routinely rate border communities as safer than most major cities, which is why critics complain the deployment is only intended to boost Perry's national profile.

Different message this time

Perry once ran for governor on the motto of "Texas, Open for Business," but now he's preparing another run for president with the message, "Perry, Tough on the Border." That's because he knows Republican primary voters consistently rank border security and immigration as their top concerns, higher than the economy or unemployment.

While some major oil and gas corporations will not suffer from Perry's attitude, small and medium-size enterprises that compete with California companies may end up paying the price for Perry's political opportunism. California's Brown is looking to steal a chunk of Texas' $100 billion in exports to Mexico, which represented 36.1 percent of the state's merchandise exports in 2013.

Perry likes to brag that his policies are responsible for Texas' economic success, and he travels the world trying to attract businesses to Texas. But when it comes to Texas' closest neighbor, which is looking to dramatically expand trade, the governor's politics are instead hurting the state's reputation and business climate.

Perry's archrival on the West Coast is ready to step in and take advantage of his missteps.

Here's how a Wendy Davis loss could help Texas Democrats

By Will Weissert
Associated Press

■ COMMENTARY

AUSTIN — Wendy Davis may well lose the Texas governor's race, but that could still be a win for the Democrats.

The state senator from Fort Worth has shattered Texas Democratic fundraising records and breathed new life into a state party mired in the nation's longest political losing streak. Her underdog campaign has also given Democrats the impetus and opportunity to assemble a political bench that could face future elections with greater ease.

"We initially thought it would take years for Texas to become a battleground, but thanks to Senator Davis' candidacy and the grassroots movement we've been building on the ground, we have catapulted into being a competitive state," said Jenn Brown, executive director of Battleground Texas and the former field director for President Barack Obama's 2012 re-election campaign in the swing state of Ohio.

Battleground Texas is a multi-million dollar group not officially affiliated, but still closely aligned, with Texas and national Democratic Party efforts. It's seeking to turn one of America's most-conservative red states blue.

Texas' demographics may help.

Since 2000, roughly two out of every three new Texans are Hispanic, a voting bloc typically friendly to Democrats. Obama carried 71 percent of the Hispanic vote nationwide in 2012, and without Texas' 38 electoral votes, future presidential races get very tough for GOP White House nominees.

Independent polls show Davis trailing her opponent, Republican Texas Attorney General Greg Abbott, by double-digits. Davis scoffs at the notion her odds are too long; She has raised $27 million, exceeding all other Democratic candidates in state history. But her campaign reports having barely a third of the $36 million that Abbott had left to spend as of July.

Battleground Texas, meanwhile, has raised nearly $6 million since its founding last year and collected nearly $10 million for Davis' joint victory committee, which is counted as part of her total campaign haul. It says it has enlisted a little more than 30,000 active volunteers and offers training for voter registration drives, block-walks and phone banks.

The Democratic National Committee also reports giving the Texas state party more than any other state this election cycle, except Virginia, Iowa and Ohio — around $430,000 since August 2013. That's already nearly as much as the $600,000 the Texas Democratic Party got from its national counterpart in the last gubernatorial election in 2010. Because much of that goes to fixed and logistical costs, the spending could have long-term benefits.

Meanwhile, the Texas Democratic Party has increased its staff to around 115 and plans to hire around 300 people to canvass neighborhoods before Election Day. Party officials also say they've compiled voter data that's consistent across all Texas counties to make community organizing easier. And, for the first time in at least 12 years, there's at least one Democrat running in each of Texas' 254 counties.

"We got our act together in a way that wasn't there in 2010," said JD Gins, Texas Democratic Party executive director for Travis County, which includes Austin. Gins helped run the campaign of Bill White, who lost to Gov. Rick Perry that year.

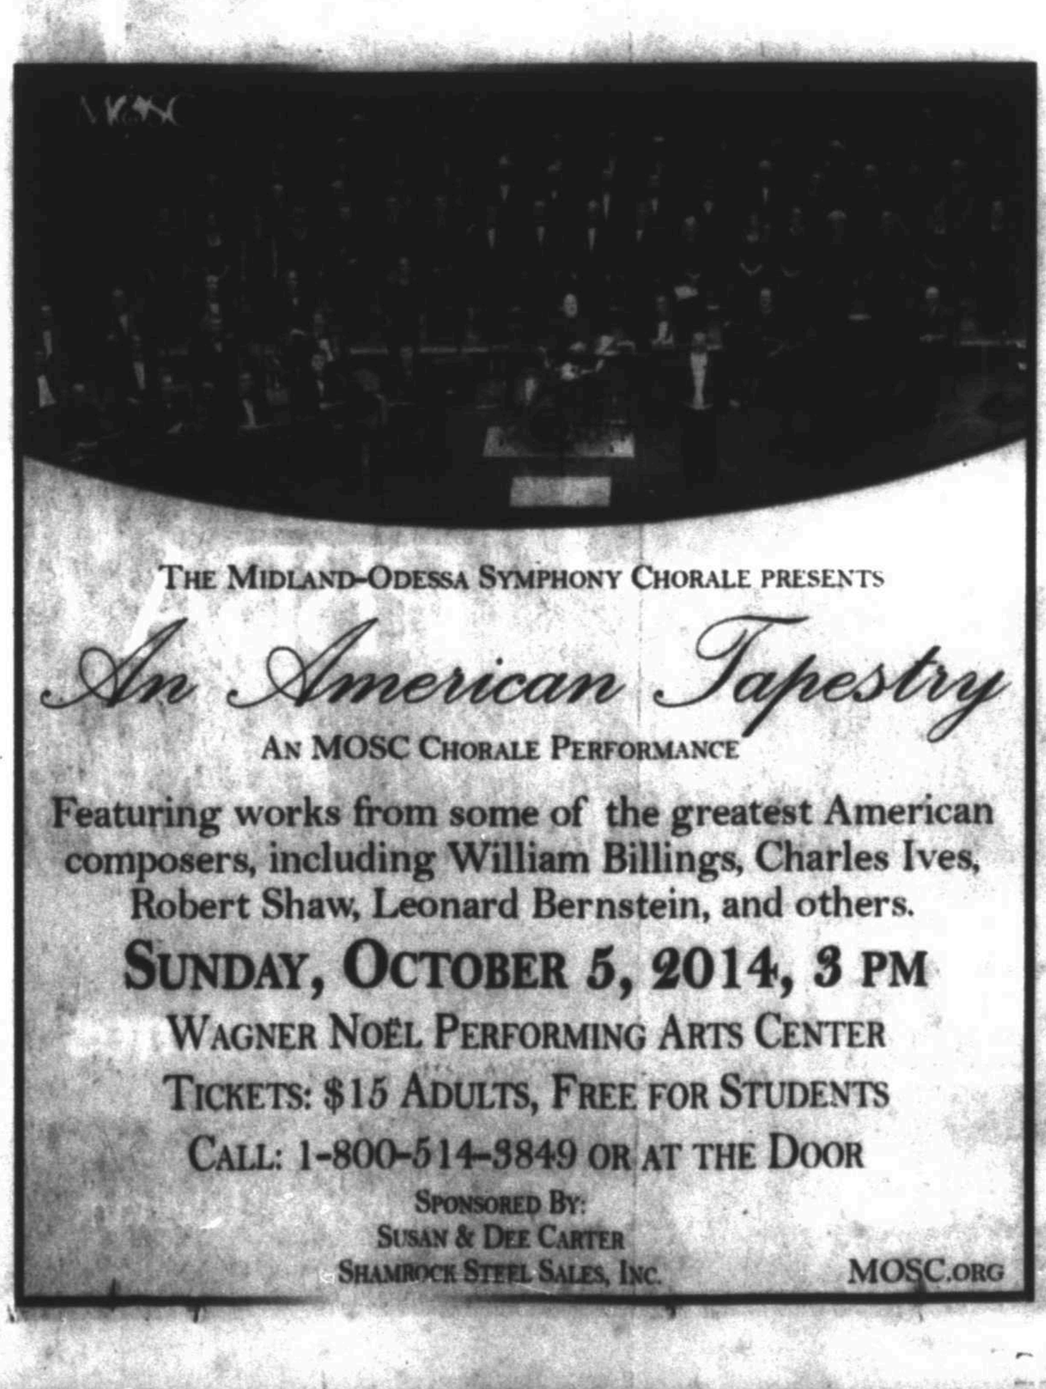

Only 38 percent of registered Texas voters cast ballots during the 2010 governor's race. So, if Democratic outreach efforts can increase future participation from sympathetic voters by just 5 percent in non-presidential years, races that long looked like Republican slam-dunks could get closer.

"We're not shooting for the moon here," Gins added.

Democrats have lost all of Texas' 29 statewide offices for the last 20 years. While that streak looks likely to endure this November, the state Democratic bench is growing.

Stars include former San Antonio Mayor Julian Castro, who Obama tapped as the nation's housing secretary and who is frequently mentioned as a possible Democratic vice presidential hopeful in 2016 or a gubernatorial candidate two years later. Castro's twin brother Joaquin is a congressman who may eventually run for U.S. Senate. They are joined by Houston Mayor Annise Parker and Freshman U.S. Reps. Marc Veasey of Fort Worth, El Paso's Beto O'Rourke and Pete Gallego, though he could be in for a November dogfight in his district stretching from San Antonio to the El Paso outskirts.

"It's a deep bench," said Democratic National Committee spokeswoman Lily Adams, the granddaughter of Ann Richards, the last Democrat to win the Texas governorship in 1990.

Saints visit Cowboys looking for yet another win

By Schuyler Dixon
Associated Press

ARLINGTON — Jason Witten and the Dallas Cowboys can tell better than just about anyone the difference between the New Orleans Saints with and without coach Sean Payton.

The Saints hung on for a 34-31 overtime win in Texas two years ago on the same day they were eliminated from playoff contention in a lost season without their suspended coach.

Last year they became the first team in NFL history to get 40 first downs in a 49-17 blowout that was easily the worst for the Cowboys since coach Jason Garrett took over midway through the 2010 season.

"I think anytime you're humbled like that, there's a respect factor you have," Witten said of a game that propelled the Saints back to the postseason with Payton in charge while Dallas missed for the fourth straight year.

"It was good for our team to watch that tape and to see it, see what they did to us. I'm sure they watched that tape as well."

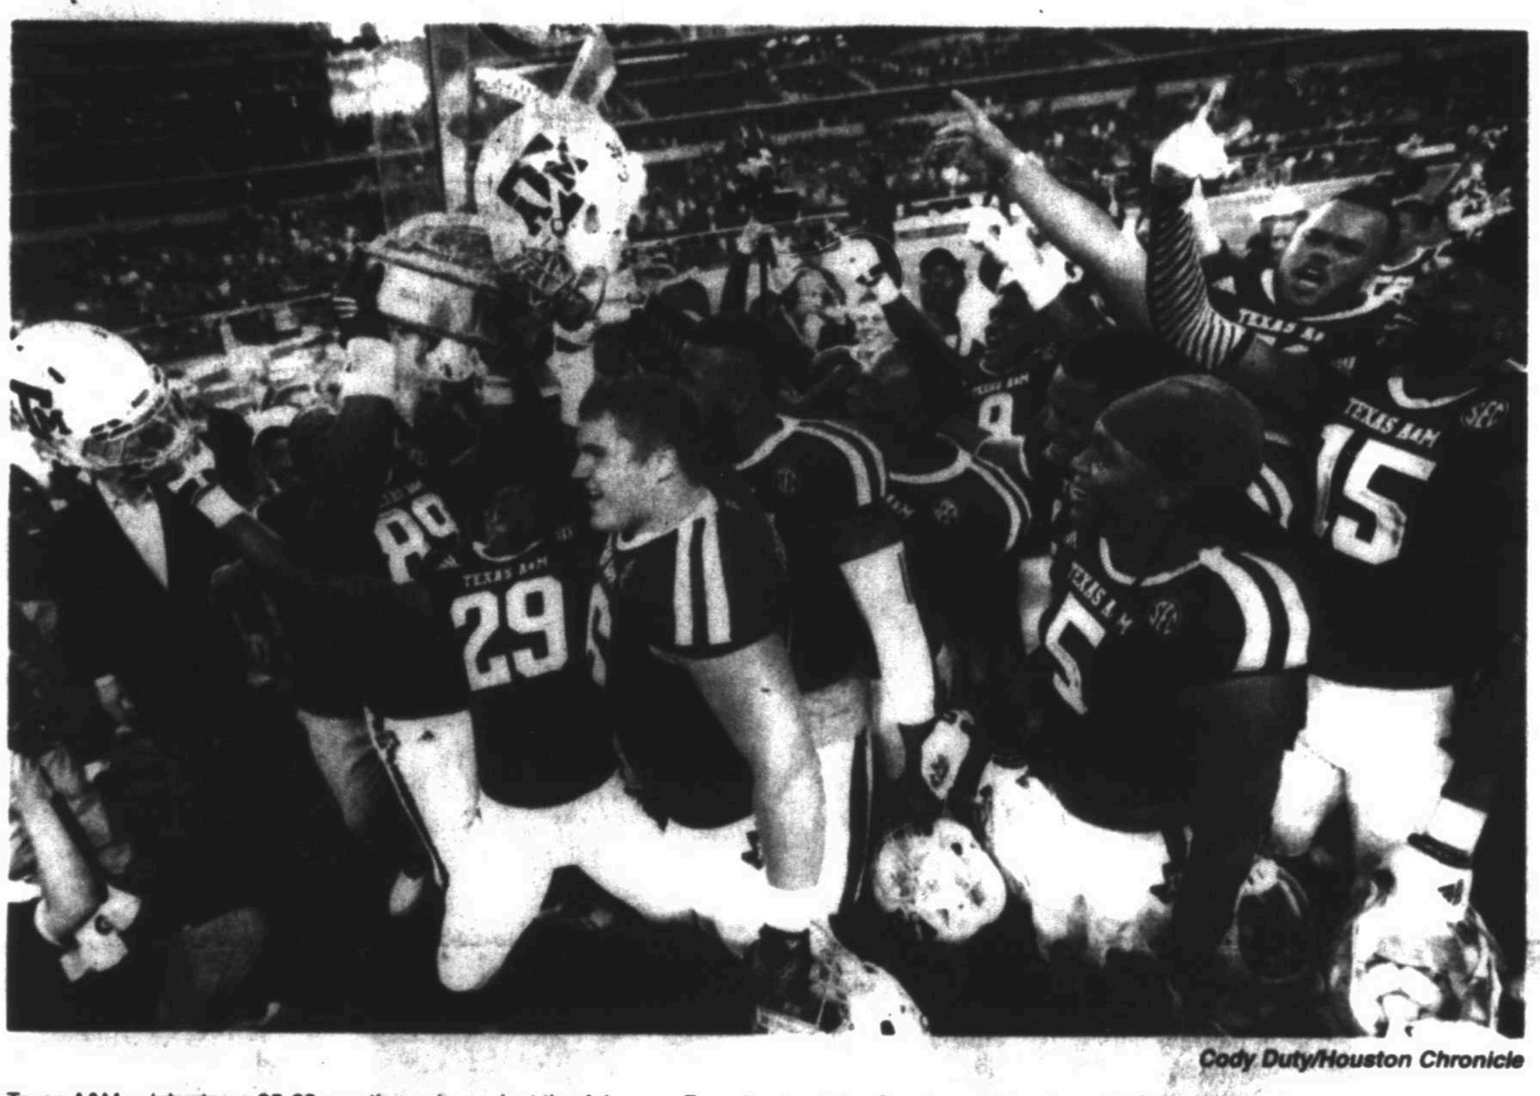

Payton will be on the sideline at the $1.2 billion home of the Cowboys tonight after watching from his Dallas-area home in 2012 because of his season-long ban over the bounty scandal. He was on Bill Parcells' staff in Dallas when he got the chance to coach the Saints.

"I've got a lot of close friends back there with that organization," Payton said. "There's a uniqueness about that program. It's special. Just having those opportunities, and ... when the schedule comes out and you see that it's a Sunday night game, that's exciting."

Aggies rally to topple Arkansas in OT

ARLINGTON — Kenny Hill and No. 6 Texas A&M provided quite a late thrill.

After throwing two long touchdown passes in the fourth quarter, Hill hit Malcome Kennedy for a 25-yard score on the first play of overtime and Julien Obioha made the game-ending defensive stop for the undefeated Aggies in a 35-28 victory over Arkansas on Saturday.

"We just made the connection on that one," Hill said of the game-winning pass. "They had the defender getting there late, and I threw it to him. He took care of the rest."

Johnny Manziel was on hand with the NFL's Cleveland Browns on a bye week, and the 2012 Heisman Trophy winner got to see his Aggies improve to 5-0 for the first time since 2001. He also provided plenty of encouragement for Hill, who was 21 for 41 for 386 yards and four touchdowns.

"He was just kind of trying to get us pumped," Hill said. "He was doing the same thing, telling me, 'You got this. You got this. Go lead this team down there.' And then right after the game he was saying, 'Great game! I love you, bro.'"

The Aggies (5-0, 2-0 Southeastern Conference) trailed 28-14 before Hill hit Edward Pope for an 86-yard pass when defensive back Jared Collins fell down and left the receiver running all alone. Hill then found Josh Reynolds for a tying 59-yard TD with 2:08 left, only two plays

No. 7 Baylor cruises past Iowa State

No. 7 Bears	49

AMES, Iowa — Bryce Petty threw for 336 yards and a touchdown and ran for a pair of TDs as seventh-ranked Baylor cruised past Iowa State 49-28 in its Big 12 opener Saturday night.

Shock Linwood had three TDs rushing for the Bears (4-0, 1-0 Big 12), who have started 4-0 in back-to-back seasons for the first time in 76 years.

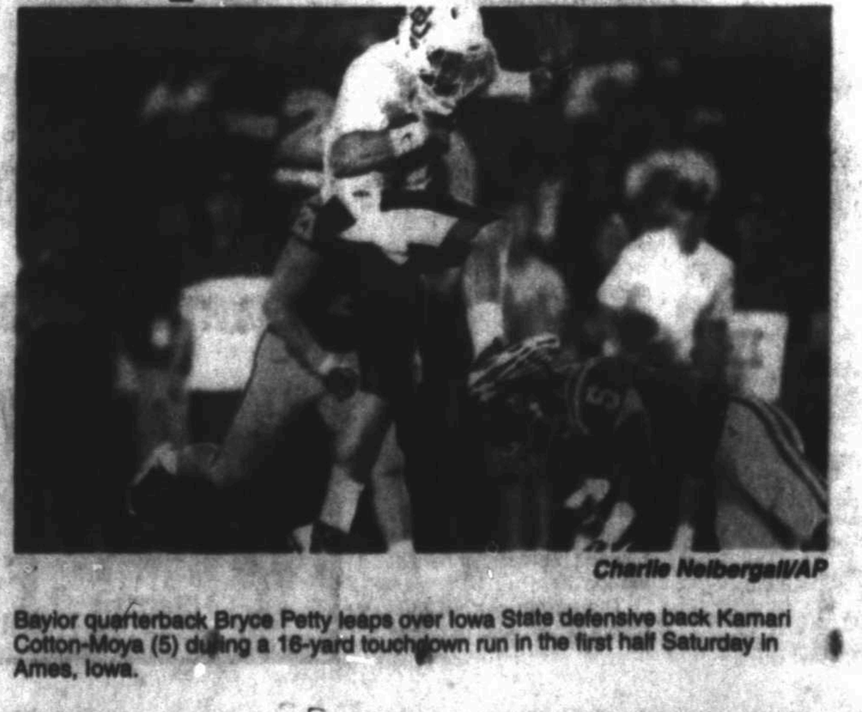

Baylor's first game against a Power 5 school was a bit more difficult than its first three against weaker competition. But the Bears jumped ahead 35-7 late in the second quarter and led by at least 21 points for the entire second half.

Quarterback Sam Richardson threw for 212 yards and ran for 99 more for Iowa State (1-3, 0-2), which is 0-3 at home.

The Cyclones did make things briefly interesting in the third quarter, pulling within 42-21. But Petty found Corey Coleman for a 42-yard reception that set up Petty's 1-yard plunge.

Europe's Justin Rose chips onto the 13th green during a foursome match on the second day of the Ryder Cup on Saturday at Gleneagles, Scotland, Saturday.

Europe leads 10-6, closes in on Ryder Cup

By Doug Ferguson
Associated Press

GLENEAGLES, Scotland — Justin Rose swept that magical putter into the air before his ball even reached the hole, and he punched his right fist when it dropped for a birdie. Just like at Medinah, the final match in the Ryder Cup on Saturday gave Europe another big boost of momentum going into the last round.

Only this time, Europe didn't really need it.

Rose capped off a remarkable Saturday for himself and his team. That 6-foot putt on the 18th hole at Gleneagles was enough to give Rose and Martin Kaymer a half-point, giving Europe a 10-6 advantage and leaving it on the cusp of another Ryder Cup victory.

That was the same score two years ago, except that Europe was in dire need of a comeback.

Now it is worried about complacency.

"This job is far from finished," Europe captain Paul McGinley said. "We're in great position, but we've got a lot of work to do tomorrow."

Rose teamed with Henrik Stenson to make a record 12 birdies in 16 holes in fourballs. Equally important was getting something — even a half — in foursomes against America's refreshing rookie tandem of Jordan Spieth and Patrick Reed.

"Any glimmer of momentum that they had — say they win that match — they take something with them into the locker room," Graeme McDowell said. "And that's what happened to us at Medinah. That's why that putt for Justin was so huge, because it gave them nothing to take away this evening."

U.S. captain Tom Watson walked away only with a lot of questions he couldn't answer.

He was criticized for playing Phil Mickelson and Keegan Bradley a second time on Friday, and it was even more peculiar when he didn't they them at all on Saturday. It was the first time Mickelson sat out an entire day in his two decades playing the Ryder Cup.

Instead, Watson sent out Rickie Fowler and Jimmy Walker for a fourth straight match, even though their previous games all went to the 18th hole and ended in a draw. The fatigue was evident, particularly with Walker, who shanked a shot from the third fairway. They didn't stand a chance against McDowell and Victor Dubuisson.

"It may have been a mistake that I put Jimmy and Rickie out for four matches," Watson said. "I thought they could handle it."

Sunday Morning Line

LEN HAYWARD

lhayward@mrt.com

This and that as a Frenchman named Victor Dubuisson is the latest in a long line of no-name European players that have made the Ryder Cup their playground:

■ The bye week could not come at a better time for Lee and Midland High because both teams are stumbling right now.

Midland High has lost two straight and are giving opponents extra chances with turnovers and are paying for it.

Meanwhile, Lee didn't have quite the bounce back it did a year ago after a loss to Southlake Carroll. The Rebels have lost four straight since opening the season with a win against Keller and now have questions at quarterback.

The bye will offer a chance for both teams to figure out where they are at both mentally and physically, because the last five weeks have meant little to nothing in terms of whether a team qualifies for the playoffs.

The real games start Oct. 10, and no matter what has happened in the past five weeks a season can be changed during district play.

■ I shorted Midland Christian running back Justin Fender a touchdown in my story in Saturday's paper about the Mustangs win against Dallas Bishop Lynch. Fender actually had six touchdowns instead of five.

Still, it was a good night for both him and Midland Christian in its TAPPS Division I, District 1 debut.

■ An Ontario County, New York grand jury didn't bring any charges against Tony Stewart for the sprint-car accident involving him and Kevin Ward Jr., in upstate New York in early August.

While I never wanted to speculate on what law enforcement officials were seeing, I had an idea this would happen. But after reading the statement from the Ward family, it seems a civil suit will be coming against Stewart.

Although, the toxicology report revealing that Ward had marijuana in his system could hinder any kind of a suit going forward.

It's going to take a while for closure to come, and Tony Stewart will have to live with this the rest of his life, and the Ward family will grieve for many years.

Let's hope this dark cloud has parted enough for the racing world, and the sport I love — sprint-car racing — can get back to some semblance of normalcy.

■ The Ryder Cup is increasingly becoming an event where European players show their ability to play as a team, and the Americans' show that golf is really an individual sport.

Not everybody on the European team likes each other or are the best of buddies, but every two years it seems they take to the team concept better.

Maybe the Americans will surprise me today and pull off another miracle comeback. But I doubt it.

Who knows, maybe Tiger Woods can lead the Americans back to glory as the captain.

■ I'm still convinced the Dallas Cowboys will finish 8-8 again, but if they stay committed to the running game they could eclipse that mark this year. But that's easier said than done.

■ I know it's football season, but pay attention to the Midland High boys cross-country team this season. The Bulldogs finished second in Saturday's Lubbock Invitational, and have a good chance to win the District 3-6A title. You could be hearing more from these runners later in the fall.

■ And finally, can the rain stay for a little while longer?

Midland High's rally falls just short vs. Central

From staff reports

The Midland High tennis team rallied against San Angelo Central in the singles portion of their District 3-6A match Saturday morning, but the Bulldogs couldn't make the come back happen as the Bobcats held on for a 10-9 victory at the Midland High Tennis Center.

Midland High is now 1-2 in 3-6A play and 11-5 overall this season in team tennis play.

The Bobcats were up 5-2 after the doubles portion of the match as the two Midland High victories came from Hayden Boldrick and Brandt Schneider in boys doubles and the mixed doubles tandem of Alex Byrd and Mickey Jimenez.

Meanwhile, the Bulldogs lost a pair of three-set matches during doubles that could've given them some momentum heading into singles.

"We were just a few games away from being up 4-3," Midland High coach Alan Biel said. "It was extremely competitive, and I think several of our players weren't able to pull out close matches they felt like they could've won, and felt like the team could've won."

Boldrick, Schneider, Jack Wall and Axel Durham all won their matches in boys singles, and Allison Stewart, Jimenez and Anna Parkison won in girls singles.

Midland High will continue District 3-6A play at 4 p.m. Tuesday against Odessa High.

James Durbin/Reporter-Telegram

Midland High's Allison Stewart looks to return a shot during Saturday's tennis match against San Angelo Central at MHS.

"It's frustrating that a couple of our kids did not compete the way I expect all of our kids to compete," Biel said. "For the most part our kids competed, and I'm not in anyway disappointed or frustrated in the kids that competed the way they are capable of. We play Odessa High on Tuesday and we full expect to do well the rest of the season."

MCS comes alive in 4th set to beat FW SW Christian

Lady Mustangs 3
Lady Eagles........................1

By Chris Hummer
chummer@mrt.com

Midland Christian had trouble separating from Fort Worth Southwest Christian all afternoon Saturday — until the fourth set that is.

After falling behind, 7-4, in the fourth set, the Mustangs reeled off an 18-point run that not only swung the set but essentially sealed the match. The Lady Mustangs ended the game six points later for a 19-25, 27-25, 25-22, 25-10 win.

Midland Christian (24-5, 6-1 in TAPPS 1-4A) had more of an edge in the fourth set, especially on the extended run. It was easy to see the confidence fester in the girls on the court. But according to Midland Christian head coach Alicia Filyukova, cutting down on errors is what sparked the Lady Mustangs' run the most.

James Durbin/Reporter-Telegram

Midland Christian's Megan McClendon returns a hit during Saturday's match against Fort Worth Southwest Christian at the McGraw Special Events Center.

"We had about 13-plus errors in each individual set, and in the last one we kept it below four errors," Filyukova said. "That was the big difference maker, the four errors and our girls playing better defense in the fourth set."

A slow started hampered the Lady Mustangs. They were down 9-3 early in the first set and never could claw closer than three points the remainder of the frame.

"I just think we weren't woken up, we weren't ready," Midland Christian's Carleigh Moore said. "We just didn't have our mind set for the game. "

After the first set, Filykova had some sharp words for her team in the huddle, and Moore said that gave the team a jolt.

"We got a good pep talk from our coach," Moore said. "Her just being mad made us realize."

The Lady Mustangs still had difficulty separating from the Lady Eagles, but Midland Christian's level of play did jump significantly. A 10-4 lead gave the Lady. Mustangs a big cushion in the third. And despite surrendering a set point, they rallied for a 27-25 win.

In total, following the first-set loss, MCS trailed for only five points of the match. Filykova credited much of the change to communication.

"We weren't really talking the first three sets," Filykova said. "Once they started talking they started moving quicker and our defense started responding."

Moore led the Lady Mustangs with 18 kills. She also added four digs, an ace and one assist. Bailey Wright had a team-high 36 assists while also contributing 15 digs, four kills and two blocks. Annie Fisher finished second on the team with 14 kills and also had 12 digs

Megan McLendon, who served during MCS' fourth-set run, had a team-high two aces. Megan Ashton led the team with 17 digs and Claire Hardeman paced the Lady Mustangs with three blocks.

"(It's) nice to see them finish strong for sure," Filykova said. "It didn't start like we wanted it to, but a win is a win and we finished strong, and that's what counts."

France's Ferrand Prevot wins road race world title

Associated Press

PONFERRADA, Spain — Pauline Ferrand Prevot of France won the road race in a photo finish at the road cycling world championships on Saturday.

Two-time defending champion Marianne Vos of the Netherlands was among riders caught and overtaken by Ferrand Prevot just meters before the finish line of the 127-kilometer (79-mile) course.

Vos finished 10th, off the podium for the first time in seven years.

Lisa Brennauer of Germany took silver for her third medal of the week after winning gold in the individual time trial and the team time trial.

Sweden's Emma Johansson was third.

The race was marred by crashes and rain near the end.

A chain-reaction accident near the end of the second lap caused many riders to fall. While several riders withdrew, Vos was put 45 seconds behind the reduced peloton.

She eventually caught up and looked set to add to her two golds and five silvers in the event when she broke away with three other riders on the final descent.

But they couldn't outpedal the chasing group, and Ferrand Prevot launched forward to win by a wheel length after 3 1/2 hours.

"I didn't think I won at first, but now I feel fantastic," Ferrand Prevot said. "I had the best team with me. They put me at the front and I didn't crash today. Big thanks to them."

ARLINGTON — The Oakland Athletics stalled in their bid to clinch an AL wild-card spot, losing to the last-place Texas Rangers 5-4 Saturday on home runs by rookie Jake Smolinski and Robinson Chirinos.

The A's needed to win or have Seattle lose in order to clinch a playoff slot for the third straight year. The Mariners played later Saturday night at home against the Los Angeles Angels.

WHITE SOX 5
ROYALS 4

CHICAGO — Jose Abreu hit a two-run homer, and the Chicago White Sox kept Kansas City out of first place in the AL Central with a 5-4 victory over the Royals on Saturday night.

The Detroit Tigers, who lost 12-3 at Minnesota on Saturday, stayed one game ahead of the Royals entering the final day of the regular season. Kansas City clinched at least a wild card spot on Friday.

RED SOX 10
YANKEES 4

BOSTON — Derek Jeter went 1 for 2 with an infield single and left for a pinch hitter in the fifth inning. Even he wasn't going to pull the Yankees out of this hole in the next-to-last game of his career.

Boston chased Masahiro Tanaka during an eight-run second inning that backed Joe Kelly, and the Boston Red Sox beat New York 10-4 on Saturday.

CLEVELAND — Alex Colome and three relievers combined on a five-hitter as the Tampa Bay Rays blanked the Cleveland Indians 2-0 on Saturday night

Colome (2-0) allowed four hits in 6 1-3 innings. Jake McGee struck out the side in the ninth for his 19th save.

ORIOLES 2

TORONTO — Jose Reyes had two hits and two RBIs, J.A. Happ won consecutive starts for the first time since late May and the Toronto Blue Jays beat the AL East champion Baltimore Orioles 4-2 Saturday.

TWINS 12
TIGERS 3

DETROIT — Eduardo Escobar had a homer, four hits and a career-high six RBI, and the Minnesota Twins ensured that the AL Central race will come down to the very end with a 12-3 rout of the Detroit Tigers on Saturday night.

Detroit entered the night with a one-game lead over second-place Kansas City, but the Tigers fell short of clinching. Minnesota scored six runs in the fifth. Escobar and Eric Fryer both hit two-run singles during that big rally, and Escobar added a three-run homer in the eighth.

NEW YORK — Lucas Duda hit a two-run homer with two outs in the bottom of the ninth inning Saturday night, rallying the New York Mets over the Houston Astros 2-1.

Held to two hits by four Houston pitchers through eight innings, the Mets came back against Tony Sipp (4-3).

NATIONALS 5
MARLINS 1

WASHINGTON — Stephen Strasburg took over the league lead in strikeouts and gave up only two hits through six scoreless innings in his final tuneup start ahead of his first postseason, helping the NL East champion Washington Nationals beat the Miami Marlins 5-1 on Saturday.

With shadows stretching across the field after the 4:07 p.m. first pitch, Strasburg (14-11) spotted his fastball at 97 mph and mixed in breaking balls that confounded a Marlins lineup missing the injured Giancarlo Stanton. Strasburg finished with seven strikeouts — giving him 242, three more than Clayton Kershaw of the Dodgers — and one walk.

BREWERS 2
CUBS 1

MILWAUKEE — Jonathan Lucroy set a major-league record for doubles in a season by a catcher, and Francisco Rodriguez moved into 10th place on baseball's career saves list in the Milwaukee Brewers' 2-1 win over the Chicago Cubs on Saturday night.

Wily Peralta (17-11) struck out a career-high 13 in seven innings, allowing five hits and one walk in 109 pitches. Rodriguez pitched a scoreless ninth for his 348th career save, and 44th this year, to move ahead of Randy Myers.

PHILLIES 2

PHILADELPHIA — Brothers B.J. and Justin Upton each homered and the Atlanta Braves held on for a 4-2 victory over the Philadelphia Phillies on Saturday night.

Justin Upton also doubled for the Braves, who won for just the third time in 15 games and are 6-18 in a forgettable September.

GIANTS 3
PADRES 1

SAN FRANCISCO — Brandon Crawford hit a two-run single with two outs in the eighth inning, leading the San Francisco Giants over the San Diego Padres 3-1 Saturday.

San Francisco (87-74) already has clinched a playoff berth and will play at Pittsburgh or St. Louis in the one-game, wild-card playoff on Wednesday. The winner advanced to face Washington in a best-of-five division series.

REDS 10
PIRATES 6, 10 INNINGS

CINCINNATI — The Pittsburgh Pirates' NL Central chances were hurt when Todd Frazier had a tying two-run homer in the seventh inning and Ramon Santiago hit a grand slam in the 10th, powering the Cincinnati Reds to a 10-6 victory on Saturday.

gave up Chris Heisey's single and another walk with one out. Left-hander Bobby LaFromboise relieved, retired Bryan Pena on a shallow fly out, then gave up Santiago's first career grand slam.

Logano enjoys career year as Cup title contender

By Dan Gelston
Associated Press

DOVER, Del. — For a driver once nicknamed "Sliced Bread," there was a time Joey Logano worried his career was toast.

Turned out, all Logano needed was a change of address.

These days, like a fresh loaf, Logano simply rises to the occasion.

Logano is rolling as he heads to Dover International Speedway — and not like the race where he barrel-rolled seven times in a frightening wreck on the concrete track.

No, Logano is on more of a hot streak this time around, easily enjoying the best season of his career. And maybe even his best week.

Logano won last week's second Chase for the Sprint Cup championship race at New Hampshire. It's his hometown track. The one where he attended his first race when he was 5.

The victory cemented his spot in the second round of the Chase, joining Team Penske teammate Brad Keselowski as the only drivers locked into the field.

Those achievements alone would be worth cracking into the victory lobster awarded at New Hampshire. But Logano capped his week with a contract extension with owner Roger Penske that will keep him behind the wheel of the No. 22 Ford for years.

"I feel like I've found myself a home over there," Logano said Friday at Dover.

Logano has blossomed in his second season at Penske. He has four Sprint Cup wins this season — at Texas Motor Speedway, Richmond International Raceway, Bristol Motor Speedway and New Hampshire Motor Speedway.

In this April 26 photo, Joey Logano celebrates his win in a Sprint Cup race at Richmond International Raceway in Richmond, Va. Team Penske has signed Logano to a contract extension after the best season of his career.

Penske said the 24-year-old Logano has been "everything we hoped he would be."

Logano has grown into the monster expectations heaped on him as a young prospect when he was considered one of the most talented drivers to come along in NASCAR. He earned the "Sliced Bread" moniker because he was considered, "the next best thing since ..."

He'd risen rapidly through the racing ranks with the financial backing from his father, Tom, who used funds from the family's Connecticut waste management company to help his two children pursue their dreams.

The hype surrounding Logano was at surreal levels long before he ever got to NASCAR, and by the time he made his 2008 debut with Joe Gibbs Racing just days after his 18th birthday, milestone victories and multiple championships already were being predicted.

JGR's plan was to ease him into the top level, give him a year or two in the Nationwide Series to adapt to stock cars and learn his way around the circuit. That was all fast-forwarded when two-time Cup champion Tony Stewart opted out at JGR and the team had an open seat to fill.

Enter Logano.

He won a rain-shortened race at New Hampshire in his first full season in 2009 and took the checkered flag at Pocono in 2012. But he failed to flash much championship potential and, suddenly, a driver with so much early promise and potential was in danger of losing his seat. When 2003 champion Matt Kenseth was available for 2013, Logano was out of a ride at JGR. Gibbs dumped him and kept the Home Depot sponsorship on the No. 20.

COWBOYS

excitement because he's thrown for 838 yards with seven touchdowns and no interceptions in his past two games against the Cowboys.

The former Texas high school star has won three straight against Dallas since the Cowboys beat the Saints in New Orleans when they were 13-0 and went on to win the Super Bowl in 2009. That win was the only one for Dallas in the past nine games against New Orleans.

"There's a lot of new faces," Payton said of the Cowboys. "The key, I think, and the message really was getting familiar with this team, the team we're playing this weekend. These two teams really haven't played each other yet when you look at the roster makeup."

Things to watch in the fifth meeting in the past six seasons between the Saints and Cowboys, who lead the series 15-11 after winning 11 of the first 12 from 1967-84.

MOMENTUM FACTOR: The Cowboys have won two in a row for their fourth straight 2-1 record in four full seasons under Garrett. But they've never made it to 3-1 and haven't won three straight in almost two years.

The Saints (1-2) are trying to continue their recovery from an uncharacteristic 0-2 start under Payton. They took the first step with last week's 20-9 victory over Minnesota.

ROMO'S ROUTINE: Tony Romo skipped practice on Wednesday last week and played his best game since returning from back surgery in December in last week's 34-31 win at St. Louis. He showed some mobility, found Dez Bryant wide open on a 68-yard touchdown pass and directed a rally from a 21-0 deficit.

So when he sat out Wednesday again this week, naturally the question of superstition came up. "No, it's probably a little deeper than that, but you can write that if it helps," Romo said with a smile.

Mickelson takes to the sidelines in Ryder Cup

By Doug Ferguson
Associated Press

GLENEAGLES, Scotland — The tee shots were in play, and Phil Mickelson strode down the first fairway in the Ryder Cup like he has done so many times before. He was in full uniform. He wore golf shoes. And he inserted earphones to listen to the radio coverage of the matches.

He wasn't a player on Saturday. He was a cheerleader.

For the first time in 10 appearances at the Ryder Cup — the most of any American in history — Mickelson spent an entire day without hitting a single shot. U.S. captain Tom Watson sat him out in the morning, and then he chose not to play Mickelson and Keegan Bradley in the afternoon.

The last time Mickelson played only two matches going into the final round was in 1995 at Oak Hill when he was a Ryder Cup rookie. Asked to comment as he walked down the fairway to watch, Mickelson said, "Whatever it takes to win."

"I want our team to win, and whatever we have to do is all I care about," he said.

When asked whose decision it was not to play, Mickelson smiled and kept walking.

Mickelson and Bradley rallied to take down Rory McIlroy and Sergio Garcia in the opening session of fourballs on Friday, but they lost badly in foursomes when Bradley couldn't keep it in the short grass and Mickelson couldn't make enough putts.

"They didn't perform all that well yesterday afternoon," Watson said. "They really wanted to go today. These are the best pairings for alternate shot."

Watson also benched Webb Simpson for all of Saturday. Simpson was his final captain's pick who lobbied Watson through text message the morning he was chosen.

The decision backfired on Watson when he sent out Rickie Fowler and Ryder Cup rookie Jimmy Walker for a fourth straight match Saturday afternoon. They were the only Americans to go 36 holes both days. Walker, in particular, looked weary, and he even shanked a shot on the third hole from the fairway.

RYDER

From 1C

Watson was the last American captain to win on European soil in 1993, just two months after Spieth was born and before Mickelson completed his first full season on the PGA Tour. He has called the shots and tried to make pairings based on performance and his gut feeling. Ultimately, he put the onus on his players.

"It's up for the actors to go out there and act," he said. "They haven't acted well enough to get that standing ovation at the end in the last two Ryder Cups. That's the way I look at it."

Watson wasn't about to give up on this one.

His best hope is to get American red on the scoreboard early, and he loaded the front with his best players. The first two are rookies — the 21-year-old Spieth and 24-year-old Reed, the only unbeaten Americans at Gleneagles. Spieth faces McDowell, who has won both of his matches this week. Reed plays Stenson, who is 3-0 and sat out Saturday afternoon with a tender back.

"You might think that it's a given that the Europeans are going to win," Watson said. "But I sure as hell don't."

It wasn't quite as convincing as Ben Crenshaw wagging his finger and saying, "I have a good feeling about this" like he did at Brookline in 1999 when the Americans rallied from a 10-6 deficit before a boisterous crowd outside Boston.

Europe needs only four wins out of 12 singles matches to retain the cup, and an additional halve to win outright.

The European comeback at Medinah began Saturday evening when Ian Poulter birdied his last five holes for an unlikely win that closed the gap to 10-6, and Europe rode that spark to the greatest rally by a visiting team in Ryder Cup history.

Poulter finally delivered, even if it was only a half-point. Poulter and McIlroy were headed for defeat in fourballs against Walker and Fowler, on the verge of going 2 down on the 15th hole when Poulter chipped in across the green for birdie, and then made a 20-foot birdie on the next hole to square the match.

Poulter came into this Ryder Cup with the highest winning percentage — 12 wins in 15 matches — of anyone who has played multiple times. He has played only twice this week, and Europe still has a 10-6 lead.

"This is more than a one-man team," McGinley said. "Ian Poulter has been a colossus in the Ryder Cup. He played a massive role today."

Europe, as always, was best at the end. For the second straight day, the Americans rallied in the morning by winning 2 1/2 points in fourballs. For the second straight day, Europe answered in the afternoon by going unbeaten (3W-0L-1D) in foursomes.

"We're in a tough position," Walker said. "But I feel like we can dig ourselves out of the hole."

Missouri rallies to beat No. 13 South Carolina

By Pete Iacobelli

Tigers	21
No. 13 Gamecocks	20

COLUMBIA, S.C. — Russell Hansbrough scored two of his three rushing touchdowns in the final seven minutes and Missouri rallied from 13 points down to beat No. 13 South Carolina 21-20 on Saturday night.

The Tigers (4-1, 1-0 Southeastern Conference) trailed 20-7 and managed just 181 yards of offense through three quarters when Maty Mauk began the comeback with passes of 41 yards to Bud Sasser and 26 yards to Wesley Leftwich to South Carolina's 1 before Hansbrough drew them within a score.

After the Gamecocks (3-2, 2-2) went three-and-out on their next series, Missouri was in business again. The Tigers converted two fourth downs in the sequence, including Hansbrough's 1-yard TD run with 1:36 remaining.

The outcome was a sweet turnaround for Missouri, which lost a 17-point lead in the Gamecocks' double-overtime victory last year. It also gave the Tigers a strong start in defense of their SEC East crown against the preseason divisional favorites.

Hansbrough finished with three touchdown runs while Marcus Murphy ran for 98 yards. Mauk completed just 12 of 34 passes for 132 yards, but made his biggest throws at the most crucial times.

South Carolina had one last chance with 1:36 to go. But Dylan Thompson threw four incomplete passes and Missouri ran out the clock. The Tigers sprinted to their fans in the corner of an emptying Williams-Brice Stadium to celebrate their seventh straight road win — two shy of the school's all-time best mark.

It looked like the Gamecocks defense would win this one, holding Missouri to two first downs in the first 23 minutes of the second half and continually harassing Mauk into poor throws.

Thompson's 23-yard touchdown throw to Pharoh Cooper with 7:25 left made it 20-7. South Carolina coach Steve Spurrier acknowledged he should've tried for a two-point conversion on that score, but did not consider it because of how well the Gamecocks defense had performed.

No. 1 Seminoles rally past Wolfpack

By Aaron Beard
Associated Press

No. 1 Seminoles	56
Wolfpack	41

RALEIGH, N.C. — Jacoby Brissett did just about everything possible to give North Carolina State a shot to upset No. 1 Florida State.

The Florida transfer threw for 359 yards and three touchdowns in the Wolfpack's 56-41 loss to the Seminoles, while his mobility extended plays, frustrated the FSU defense and created a few highlight-reel moments. It just wasn't quite enough to snap Florida State's long winning streak nor give coach Dave Doeren a huge win in his second season here.

Brissett threw a long touchdown pass just 18 seconds in and helped the Wolfpack to a 24-7 lead in the first quarter, but the Seminoles rallied when the Wolfpack finally began to sputter late. Brissett had a costly fumble to set up FSU's go-ahead touchdown pass late in the third quarter.

"We were just coming out playing hard and executing the plan," Brissett said. "We really were locked in. I feel like it was my fault toward the end, making some of the plays that I did and put us in bad situations. I've just got to learn from it."

Brissett's best moment came late in the first quarter. He ducked under the grasp of a Seminoles defender in the pocket then stayed on his feet to break away from another near the sideline to throw an 8-yard scoring pass to Johnathan Alston for a 24-7 lead with 2:06 left in the opening period.

"It was fun to watch as a spectator," FSU coach Jimbo Fisher said of Brissett's performance, "but not fun if you're the other coach."

For Florida State, Jameis Winston threw for 365 yards and four touchdowns in his return from a suspension.

The Heisman Trophy winner directed four straight second-half touchdown drives to help the reigning national champions extend the nation's longest active winning streak to a program-record 20 games.

Rashad Greene hauled in 11 passes for 125 yards and the go-ahead score for the Seminoles (4-0, 2-0 Atlantic Coast Conference), while Karlos Williams ran for three scores — the last with 2:07 left to seal it.

Winston was suspended last week for making an obscene public comment on campus, then watched backup Sean Maguire lead FSU to an overtime home win against Clemson.

He shook off a third-quarter interception to keep the Seminoles pushing forward against the Wolfpack (4-1, 0-1) and Brissett, who was on the sideline for the Gators during FSU's last loss in November 2012.

N.C. State led 24-7 after the first quarter and 38-28 midway through the third quarter after Shadrach Thornton's 10-yard scoring run.

But Winston directed a quick 71-yard drive that ended with his 15-yard scoring toss to Jesus Wilson, then capitalized on Brissett's fumble by zipping the ball to Greene — and just past the outstretched arm of Jack Tocho — for a 42-38 lead with 3:24 left in the third.

Williams' 1-yard scoring run pushed that lead to 49-38 early in the fourth, a cushion that ultimately held up.

Winston also came through with two key third-down conversions in the final minutes after the Wolfpack kicked a field goal to make it a one-possession game — the last being a 20-yard run on third-and-11 with about 3 1/2 minutes left.

Williams capped that drive with his 12-yard score, giving him 126 yards rushing for the day.

FSU has now won 17 straight games against ACC opponents, a run that began after a loss here in October 2012.

FROM WIRE REPORTS

NO. 5 AUBURN 45 LOUISIANA TECH 17

AUBURN, Ala. — Nick Marshall threw three touchdown passes and rushed for 105 yards to lead No. 5 Auburn to a 45-17 victory over Louisiana Tech on Saturday.

Marshall completed 10 of 17 passes for 186 yards for the Tigers (4-0), who produced an array of big plays to spark an offense that otherwise sputtered at times. Next up: No. 17 LSU visits to start a stretch against six straight ranked Southeastern Conference teams.

Quan Bray caught a 44-yard touchdown pass and returned a punt 76 yards for another score in a 53-second span of the fourth quarter. Those plays turned a competitive game into a route against the Bulldogs (2-3), who have also lost to No. 4 Oklahoma.

Cameron Artis-Payne rushed for 116 yards and a touchdown on 22 carries for the Tigers.

NO. 8 NOTRE DAME 31 SYRACUSE 15

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — Everett Golson completed 25 straight passes, setting a Notre Dame record, and threw for four touchdowns to lead the eighth-ranked Fighting Irish to a 31-15 victory against Syracuse on Saturday night.

Golson's record-breaking game was far from perfect. The quarterback threw his first two interceptions, including one returned for a touchdown in the fourth quarter by Durell Eskridge. He fumbled the ball away deep in Syracuse territory and bumbled an attempt to spike the ball late in the first half to stop the clock into another giveaway.

A total of five turnovers by the Irish (4-0) allowed Syracuse (2-3) to linger. Terrel Hunt's 7-yard touchdown on the first play of the fourth quarter cut the lead to 21-9.

Golson came right back with a 13-yard touchdown pass to Torii Hunter Jr., son of the major league outfielder. Golson was 32 for 39 for a career-best 362 yards, coming one completion short of matching the FBS record for consecutive completions in a game set by Dominique Davis in 2011 with East Carolina.

NO. 9 MICHIGAN ST. 56 WYOMING 14

EAST LANSING, Mich. (AP) — Jeremy Langford ran for 137 of Michigan State's 533 yards of total offense.

Michigan State (3-1) completed its most prolific four games in school history with a 50.3-point average.

NO. 10 MISSISSIPPI 24 MEMPHIS 3

OXFORD, Miss. — Jaylen Walton ran for a key fourth-quarter touchdown, and No. 10 Mississippi used a dominant defensive performance to beat Memphis 24-3 on Saturday night.

The Rebels (4-0) are undefeated through four games for the first time since 1970, overcoming a mistake-riddled performance by the offense and special teams.

NO. 12 GEORGIA 35 TENNESSEE 32

ATHENS, Ga. — Todd Gurley ran for a career-high 208 yards and two touchdowns, including a 51-yarder in the fourth quarter, and No. 12 Georgia rallied to beat Tennessee 35-32 on Saturday.

The lackluster Bulldogs (3-1, 1-1 Southeastern Conference) struggled with the Volunteers (2-2, 0-1) for the second year in a row. Tennessee wouldn't quit, even after Jalen Hurd fumbled a handoff and Josh Dawson fell on it in the end zone for a Georgia touchdown.

NO. 16 STANFORD 20 WASHINGTON 13

SEATTLE — Kevin Hogan ran for a 5-yard touchdown with 4:29 remaining, and No. 16 Stanford took advantage of a poorly timed fake punt to hold off Washington 20-13 on Saturday.

Hogan and the Cardinal (3-1, 1-1) avoided a potentially costly 0-2 start in Pac-12 play after already losing at home to Southern California.

NO. 17 LSU 63 NEW MEXICO STATE 7

BATON ROUGE, La. — Backup quarterback Brandon Harris led touchdown drives on each of his seven series, sparking No. 17 LSU to a 63-7 rout of New Mexico State on Saturday night.

In vastly outplaying starter Anthony Jennings, Harris may have made himself a candidate to take over as the Tigers' No. 1 quarterback when LSU (4-1) returns to Southeastern Conference play next Saturday at Auburn.

NO. 19 WISCONSIN 27 SOUTH FLORIDA 10

MADISON, Wis. — Melvin Gordon rushed for 181 yards and two touchdowns, and Wisconsin overcame a sluggish start to beat South Florida.

Gordon scored on carries of seven and 43 yards on the Badgers' first two drives of the second half after running room finally opened up for the star tailback.

NO. 22 OHIO ST. 50 CINCINNATI 28

COLUMBUS, Ohio — J.T. Barrett passed for 330 yards and four touchdowns and Ezekiel Elliott ran for 182 yards and a score to lead No. 22 Ohio State past Gunner Kiel and Cincinnati 50-28 on Saturday night.

Kiel, the acclaimed passer for the Bearcats (2-1), completed 21 of 32 passes for 352 yards and four scores in a game of wild momentum swings before a stadium-record crowd of 108,362.

AGGIE RALLY

Kenny Hill and No. 6 Texas A&M provided quite a late thrill.

After throwing two long touchdown passes in the fourth quarter, Hill hit Malcome Kennedy for a 25-yard score on the first play of overtime for the undefeated Aggies in a 35-28 victory over Arkansas.

Johnny Manziel was on hand with the NFL's Cleveland Browns on a bye week, and the 2012 Heisman Trophy winner got to see his Aggies improve to 5-0 for the first time since 2001. He also provided plenty of encouragement for Hill, who was 21 for 41 for 386 yards and four touchdowns.

The Aggies trailed 28-14 before Hill hit Edward Pope for an 86-yard pass when defensive back Jared Collins fell down and left the receiver running all alone. Hill then found Josh Reynolds for a tying 59-yard TD with 2:08 left, only two plays after Arkansas missed a field goal.

TACKLE OF THE DAY

An Ohio State staffer had the tackle of the day — on a fan.

Anthony Schlegel, a former linebacker for the Buckeyes, made his first tackle at Ohio Stadium since 2005 when he slammed a fan to the turf late in the first half of his alma mater's game against Cincinnati.

Schlegel, who is a conditioning coach at Ohio State, intercepted the fan, who ran on the field. As the fan was running away from security personnel, Schlegel wrapped his arms around him and threw him to the turf.

A record crowd of 108,362 roared its approval.

The fan was led off the field as Buckeyes players and team personnel congratulated Schlegel on the sideline not far from where he made the tackle.

SNYDER'S WARDROBE

The Big 12 has cried foul on Kansas State coach Bill Snyder's game-day wardrobe.

Snyder typically wears purple windbreakers on the sideline that have logos of past bowl games on them, some of them several years old. But Snyder received a note from the league office this week respectfully asking that he retire some of the outdated ones.

The reason? The Big 12 no longer has contracts with some of those bowl games anymore, and others have changed names. That includes the Buffalo Wild Wings Bowl, now called the Cactus Bowl, which Snyder wore on his jacket during last week's nationally televised game against Auburn.

To steer clear of trouble, Snyder opted for a rare white windbreaker — sans bowl logo — for Saturday's 58-28 blowout of UTEP.

Swoopes, Longhorn defense help Texas blank Kansas

By Doug Tucker
Associated Press

Longhorns	23
Kansas	0

LAWRENCE — Tyrone Swoopes passed for one touchdown and ran for another and Texas picked off four Kansas passes, leading the Longhorns to a 23-0 victory Saturday in the Big 12 opener.

Swoopes, in his first start in a conference game, was 19 for 34 for 218 yards and two TDs as Texas (2-2, 1-0) beat Kansas for the 12th straight time. A stifling Texas defense limited Kansas sophomore Montell Cozart to 12 for 31 for 140 yards and the four picks. Cornerback Duke Thomas had two of the interceptions and also broke up a short pass in the end zone on fourth down. Texas also sacked Cozart four times while holding the Jayhawks to 313 total yards.

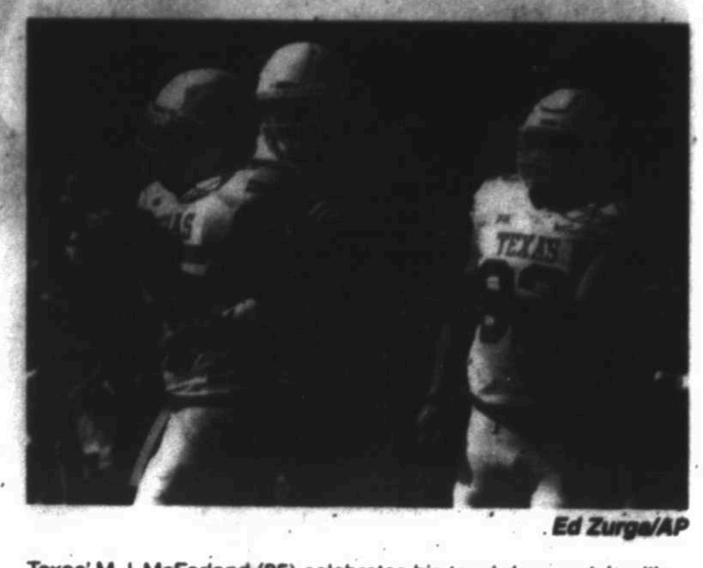

All week long, Kansas (2-2, 0-1) kept the Texas fight song blaring across the practice field and filled the locker room with reminders that the Jayhawks had not beaten Texas in 76 years.

But Texas, despite crippling injuries and nine player dismissals, never trailed the team that has now lost 30 of its last 31 Big 12 games.

Thomas' first interception and an unsportsmanlike conduct penalty set up the touchdown that gave Texas a 13-0 halftime lead. Thomas intercepted Cozart's pass and raced 24 yards to the 26, then the half-the-distance penalty gave the Longhorns a first down on the 13. Two plays later from the 7, Swoopes went around left end and squeezed into the corner of the end zone for the TD.

Kansas, failing to get a first down when linebacker Ben Heeney recovered a Texas fumble at the Kansas 2, punted to Jaxon Shipley, who sped 41 yards with the return and set up the Longhorns on the 18. On third-and-3, Swoopes hit Malcolm Brown for 10 yards to the 1. Next play, Swoopes spotted M.J. McFarland wide open in the back of the end zone. The extra-point attempt failed.

After taking over on downs late in the fourth quarter, the Longhorns made it 23-0 when Swoopes connected with John Harris on a 16-yard scoring pass. In the third quarter, Nick Rose, who missed the extra point after Texas' first touchdown, kicked a 42-yard field goal.

TCU 56 SMU 0

DALLAS — Quarterback Trevone Boykin threw for four touchdowns and ran for two others Saturday and TCU smothered struggling SMU 56-0.

The victory was the most lopsided in the series' 94-game history.

Boykin threw scoring passes of 28 and 7 yards to Deante Gray, 6 yards to Josh Doctson and 10 yards to Desmon White. He ran for touchdowns of 27 and 8 yards.

B.J. Catalon added a 9-yard touchdown run, and backup quarterback Matt Joeckel threw a 25-yard touchdown pass to Charlie Reid for TCU (3-0).

SMU (0-4) failed to score for the second time this season. The Mustangs drove to TCU's 3-yard line in the waning seconds, and reserve quarterback Matt Davis was sacked on the final play.

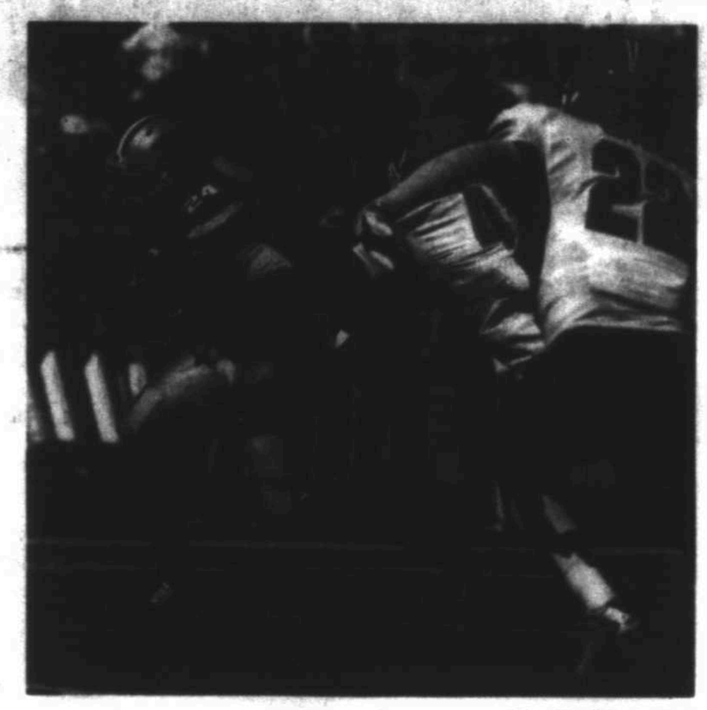

SMU's only touchdown to date is a 33-yard hail Mary pass on the final play at North Texas on Sept. 6.

NO. 25 KANSAS STATE 58 UTEP 28

MANHATTAN, Kan. — Charles Jones ran for three touchdowns, Tyler Lockett returned a punt for another score and No. 25 Kansas State romped to a 58-28 victory over UTEP on Saturday.

DeMarcus Robinson and Jake Waters also had touchdown runs, and Waters threw for 209 yards and another score as the Wildcats (3-1) finished non-conference play by taking out their frustrations from a close loss to fifth-ranked Auburn on the hapless Miners.

UTEP (2-2) managed one first down and 23 yards of offense in the first half, when Kansas State raced to a 31-0 lead. Running back Aaron Jones, the nation's second-leading rusher, was held to 47 yards — all but nine of them after halftime.

Charlie Riedel/AP

Kansas State running back Charles Jones (24) gets past UTEP defensive lineman Roy Robertson-Harris (43) and defensive back Jameel Erving (22) to score a touchdown during the first half Saturday in Manhattan, Kan.

Jamell Showers threw four TD passes for the Miners, all with the game well out of reach.

RICE 41 SOUTHERN MISS 23

HATTIESBURG, Miss. — Jawon Davis rushed for 131 yards and two touchdowns Saturday as Rice picked up its first win of the season 41-23 over Southern Miss.

Driphus Jackson threw for 178 yards and two touchdowns as the defending Conference USA champion Owls (1-3, 1-1) beat the Golden Eagles behind a balanced offensive attack that racked up 217 yards on the ground.

Nick Mullens threw for career-high 283 yards and a pair of touchdown passes for the Golden Eagles (2-3, 0-1).

But Rice limited Southern Miss to 40 yards rushing and forced three turnovers. The Golden Eagles also botched a 39-field goal attempt on the last play of the first half.

Davis, who rushed for a career-high 150 yards last week, averaged 4.5 yards on a career-high 29 carries. He scored on a pair of 6-yard runs in the first half as the Owls built a 20-10 halftime lead.

FLORIDA ATLANTIC 41 UTSA 37

BOCA RATON, Fla. — Jaquez Johnson threw a 15-yard touchdown pass to Nate Terry with 20 seconds left, lifting Florida Atlantic past UTSA 41-37 in the Conference USA opener for both teams on Saturday night.

Trailing 37-27, the Owls (2-3, 1-0) stormed back as Johnson connected with Lucky Whitehead for a 21-yard touchdown with 4:10 remaining.

FAU forced a punt, and Johnson engineered a 9-play, 93-yard drive capped by his strike to Terry.

UTSA (1-3, 0-1) wasn't finished as Kam Jones returned the ensuing kickoff to the FAU 13 with 7 seconds left, but Tucker Carter's pass was broken up by Cre'von LeBlanc as time expired.

Johnson threw for 295 yards and three touchdowns and ran for a 24-yard score in the second quarter.

SAM HOUSTON STATE 42 LAMAR 10

BEAUMONT — Jared Johnson threw for 164 yards and ran for another 78 to lead Sam Houston State to a 42-10 win over Lamar in the Southland Conference opener for both teams on Saturday night.

Sam Houston bounced back from its last game, a 47-21 loss to Division II Colorado State-Pueblo on September 13.

SE LOUISIANA 63 INCARNATE WORD 7

SAN ANTONIO — Bryan Bennett threw two touchdown passes and rushed for two more as Southeastern Louisiana routed Incarnate Word 63-7 in its Southland Conference opener on Saturday night.

Bennett finished with 212 yards passing and ran for 89. He scored both of his rushing touchdowns in the first half and threw a 4-yard score to Jeff Smiley to make it 28-7 at halftime.

ALABAMA STATE 38 TEXAS SOUTHERN 3

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — Daniel Duhart ran for two touchdowns and passed for another while Preston Clark kicked five field goals in leading Alabama State to a 38-3 victory over Texas Southern on Saturday night.

Clark, a freshman who also punts for the Hornets, kicked three field goals in the first quarter and Duhart added a 25-yard touchdown run early in the second for a 16-0 lead.

BAYLOR

From 1C

Goodley (quadriceps) made Baylor's offense more explosive than ever. The pair combined for 18 catches, 268 yards and a touchdown.

The high-flying Bears now have 10 touchdown drives where the yards outnumbered the seconds it took to reach the end zone.

AGGIES

after Arkansas missed a field goal.

Texas A&M had a chance to end the game in regulation, getting the ball back with 1:18 left and no timeouts. Kennedy's 13-yard catch provided a quick first down, but the Aggies let the clock run out when facing fourth-and-13 short of midfield — before Kennedy caught the quick strike in overtime.

"In order to win a game like that, it takes a complete team. Every phase had its poor moments in the first half. Offensively, we were a beat off. Defensively, we gave up some big plays, and special teams, we gave up a fake," coach Kevin Sumlin said. "Our defense stopped them not just in overtime, but on the last couple series."

On its overtime possession, Arkansas (3-2, 0-2) had fourth-and-1 when a handoff went to Alex Collins, who finished with 131 yards rushing. But Collins was stuffed at the line by Obioha, who was quickly joined by a swarm of Aggie defenders.

"I didn't do anything different. The running back bounced to my side," Obioha said.

Arkansas (3-2, 0-2), the only unranked team in the SEC West, has lost 14 consecutive conference games since 2012.

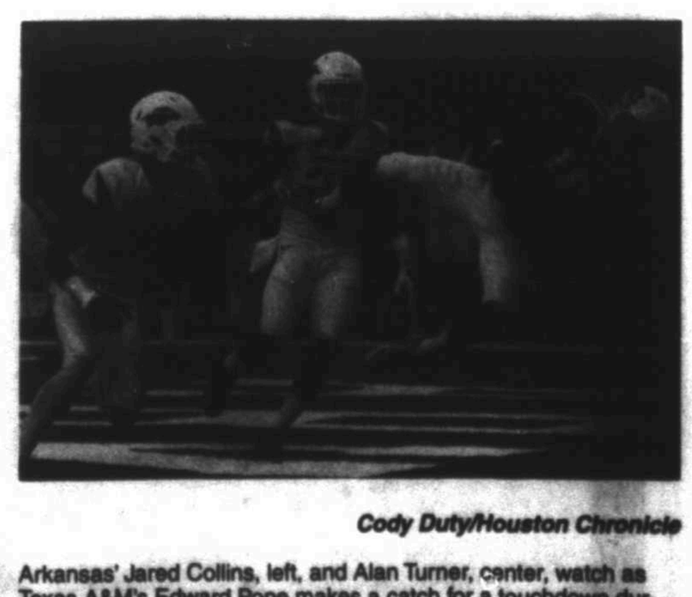

This one was particularly painful.

The Razorbacks had a touchdown pass in the second quarter wiped out by a holding call against Dan Skipper, and a tripping penalty on the left tackle in the final period erased a 55-yard run by Jonathan Williams to the Aggies 3.

The Razorbacks wound up punting after both penalties, the second leading to Pope's second TD catch, the 86-yarder that sparked the A&M comeback.

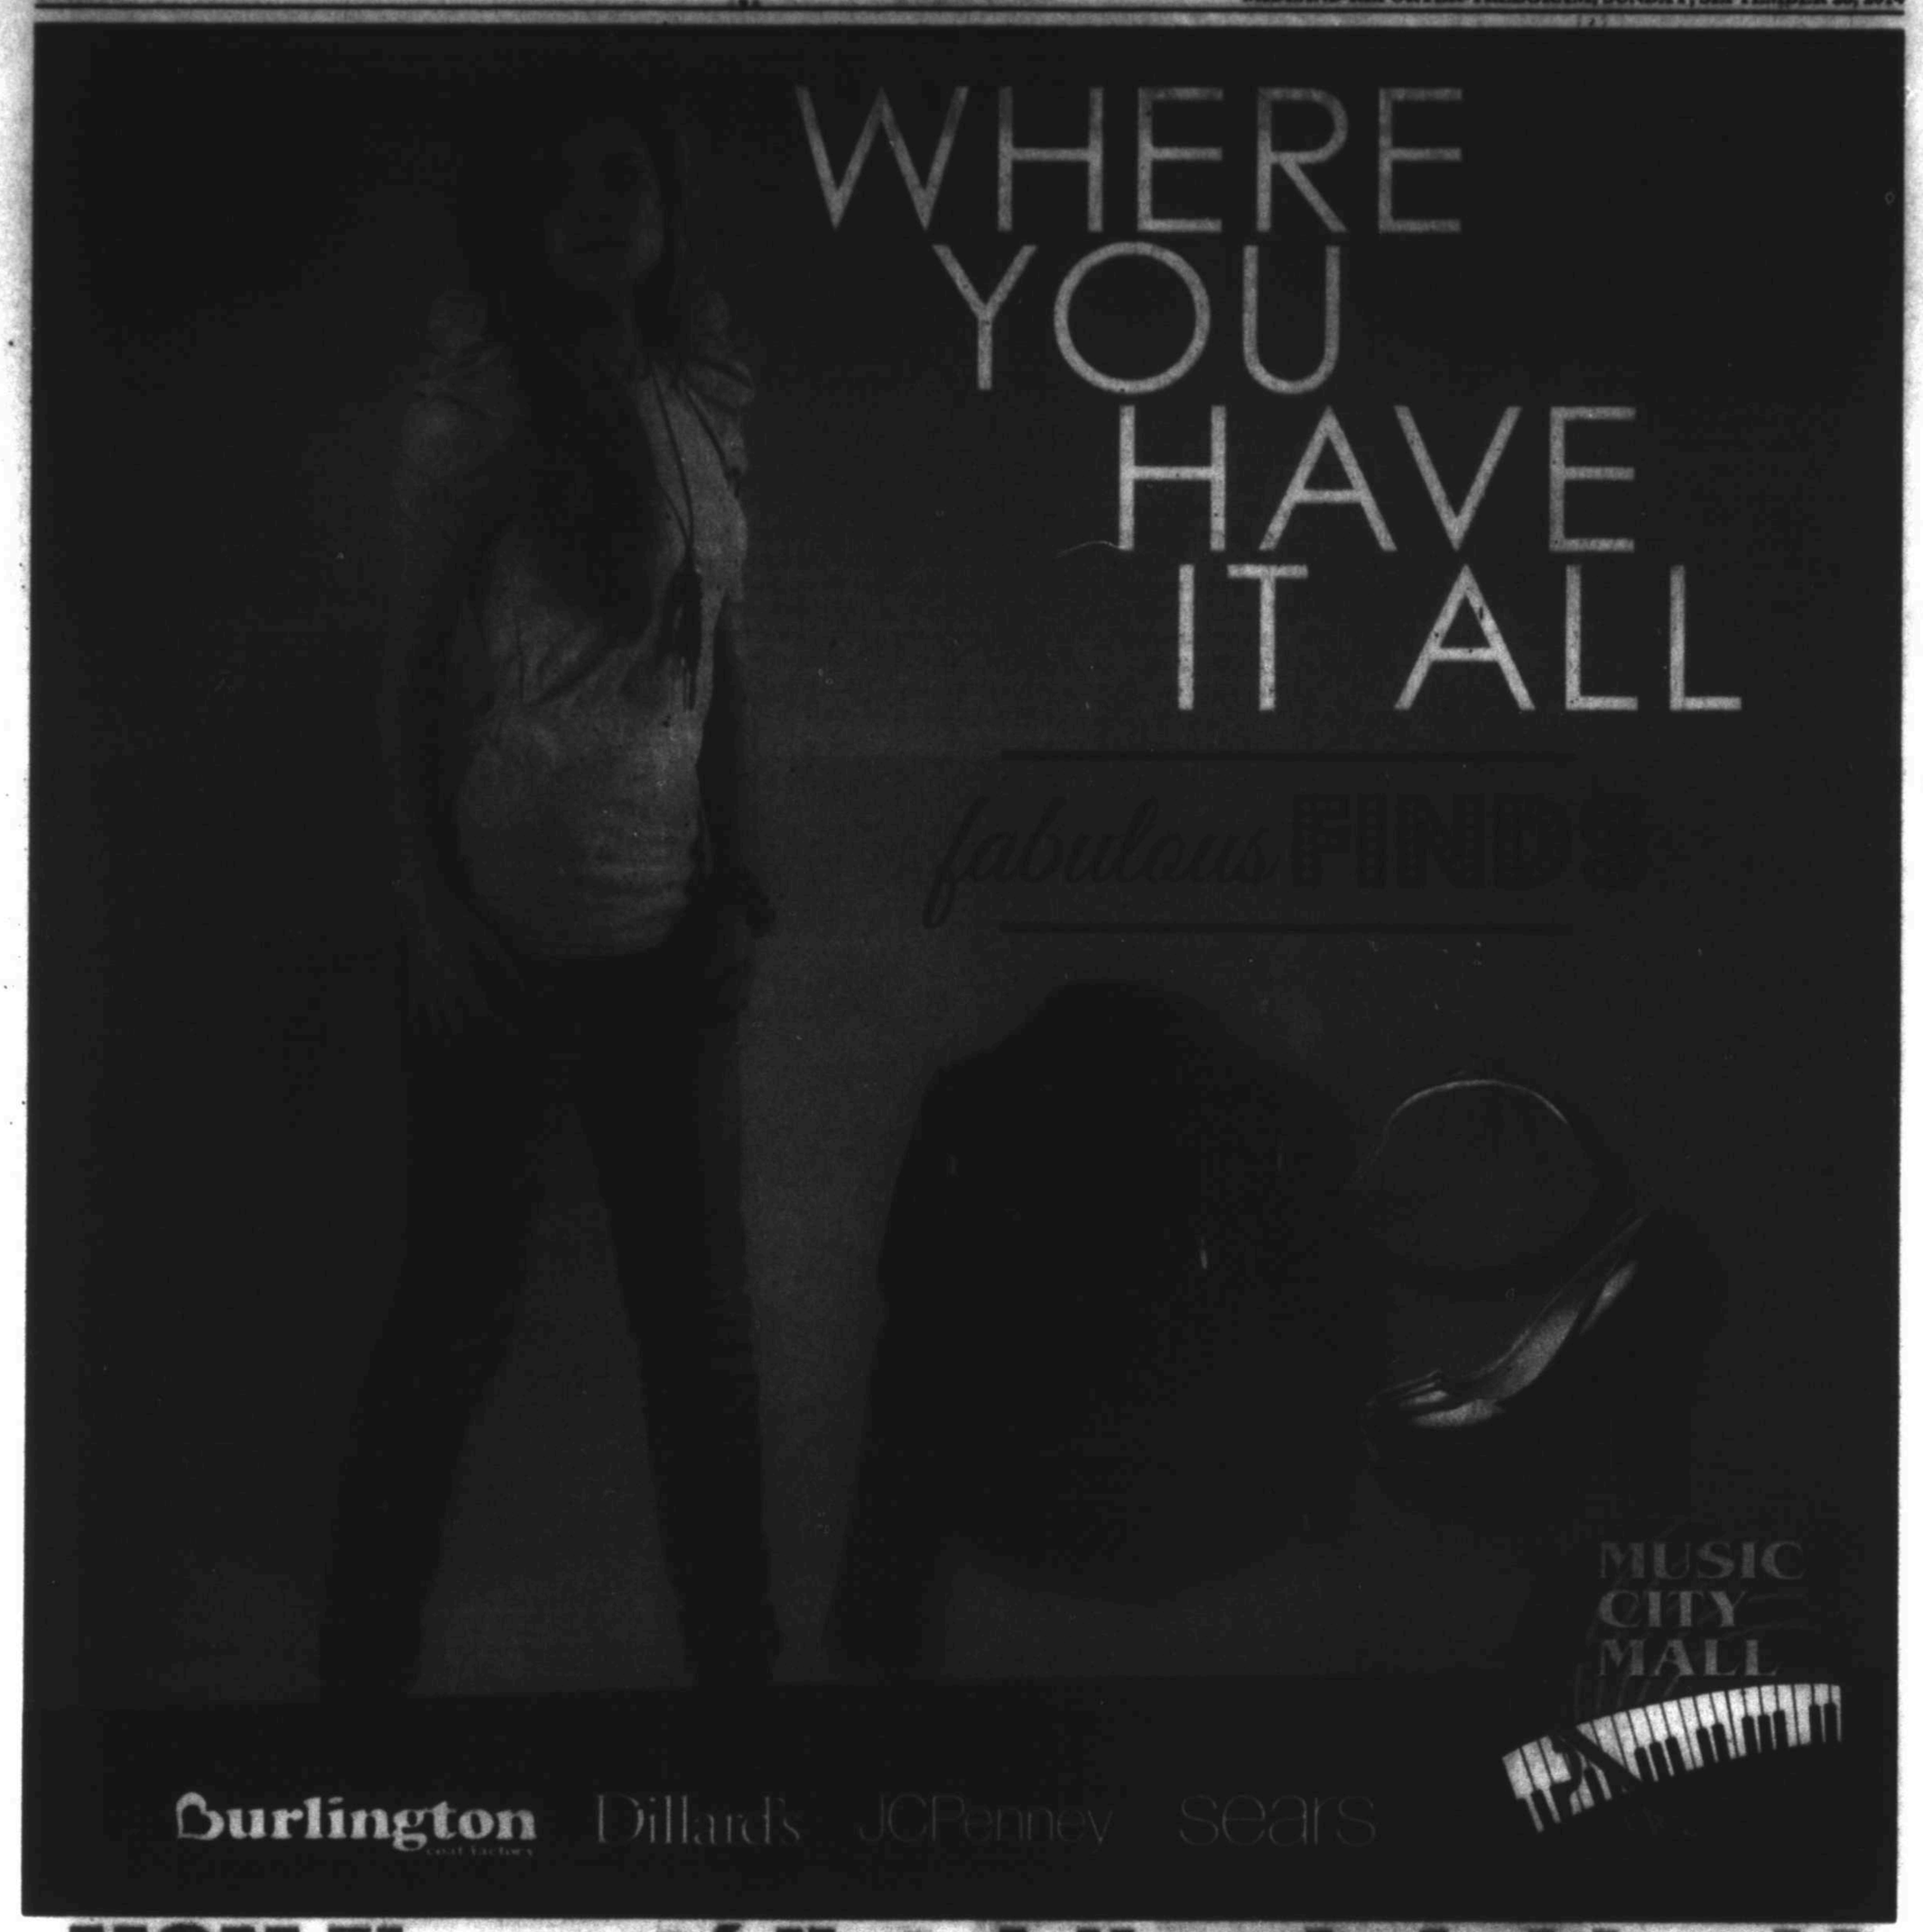

"A lot of things that caused us to lose this game today came from within our locker room," Razorbacks coach Bret Bielema said. "Our third edge we talk about is playing clean, and that means playing penalty-free. ... The good news is we can correct those things. Our guys did several things throughout the course of the game to get excited about. But obviously, not enough to close it."

Australian punter Sam Irwin-Hill ran 51 yards for a tiebreaking touchdown on a fake punt, and Brandon Allen turned a fake handoff into an easy scoring pass for the Razorbacks, who haven't beaten an SEC opponent since a 49-7 win over Kentucky on Oct. 13, 2012.

Many Could Still Benefit From Refinancing

About 20 percent of households who would benefit from refinancing are not doing it — and they could be losing out on lessening their mortgage payments by thousands of dollars over the life of the loan, according to a new report from the National Bureau of Economic Research. In analyzing a large random sample of outstanding home loans from December 2010, researchers found that the median household could save $160 per month over the remaining life of the loan, amounting to a total savings of about $11,500.

"Despite the large stakes, anecdotal evidence suggests that many households may fail to refinance when they otherwise should," according to the report. "Failing to refinance is puzzling due to the large financial incentives involved." The report found that borrowers may fail to refinance because they are unable to calculate the full financial benefit to them, they fail to see the benefits over time, or the high amount of upfront costs may deter them.

"Our results suggest the presence of information barriers regarding the potential benefits and costs of refinancing," according to the NBER report. "Expanding and developing partnerships with certified housing counseling agencies to offer more targeted and in-depth workshops and counseling surrounding the refinancing decision is a potential direction for policy to alleviate these barriers for the population most in need of financial education."

The Top 5 Pitfalls of Selling Your Own Home

While it is certainly understandable why some people would like to avoid paying a real estate agent's commission—especially in today's economy—homeowners need to be aware of the serious pitfalls that can occur before they embark on the process of selling their own home.

As a member of the Top 5 in Real Estate Network®, I have had many clients enlist my services after losing valuable time and money attempting to sell their own home. What seems like a relatively easy undertaking at first, can become a time-consuming and overwhelming process. I'd like to share with you some of the most significant snags that often occur when selling one's own home:

1. Ineffective marketing. Most homeowners simply lack the resources necessary to effectively market their own home. Working with a professional real estate agent, such as a member of the Top 5 in Real Estate Network®, however, usually means your home will be marketed to the widest group of potential buyers possible, both through digital and print advertising, virtual tours, and online listing portals.

2. Mispricing your home. In order to sell your home quickly for the best possible price, pricing your home correctly is critical. This very nuanced process of choosing the right listing price, however, is always best left to a real estate professional. Most who sell their own homes price too high, resulting in their home sitting on the market for an extended period of time. And, unfortunately, the longer a home remains on the market, the less desirable it becomes for buyers.

3. Missing documentation. These days, a real estate transaction requires more documentation than ever before. It's virtually impossible for the average homeowner to be aware of all the forms necessary to complete a real estate deal, and missing paperwork will bring any transaction to a grinding halt.

4. Overlooking legalities. The risk of overlooking important legalities, such as disclosure and compliance regulations that vary from state to state, is high for most homeowners. The average person is, understandably, not well versed in the many laws that govern the sale and purchase of a property.

5. Dealing with unqualified buyers. If you accept an offer from an unqualified buyer, you can delay the sale of your home indefinitely. A professional real estate agent will take the necessary steps to work with a lender to ensure a buyer is qualified before accepting their offer.

Pine & Beckett

This story was submitted by Norma Pine, Broker/Owner Chris Beckett, Broker/Owner Pine & Beckett, REALTORS www.pineandbeckett.com

FROM THE PRESIDENT'S PEN

What's the most important feature when buying a home?

If you're purchasing a house, the most important item is the one that tops your priority list. For many people, that may be a price range or neighborhood or number of bedrooms – perhaps some combination of the three. Someone else may list a backyard that can accommodate a few dozen turtles and a rabbit hutch as their number-one must-have feature before they will consider any other criteria. The point is, you must decide what aspects of a home are most important to you. Once you prioritize your requirements, you can determine if that one-car garage is a deal-killer for an otherwise perfect home.

Pay attention to the not-so-little things

You have a lot to consider when buying a home. Not only must you find a property you like, but you must deal with financing, negotiations, inspections, an appraisal, title insurance, a survey – the list is lengthy. With so much information competing for your attention, you might easily overlook details of a home that could significantly affect your future enjoyment of it. Here are a few to keep in mind:

Schools – According to the 2013 Profile of Homebuyers by the National Association of Realtors, quality of school district was a factor for 33% of all homebuyers. That number goes up to almost 40% for married couples and people who bought in a suburban neighborhood.

Traffic – If you want to live in a quiet neighborhood where you can work from home in peace, walk the dog, or ride bikes with your kids, you may not want to live on a street with heavy traffic patterns. Sometimes, a road can be fairly quiet during most of the day, only to fill with cars during commute times. The best way to know for sure is to visit the property at different times of day and on weekdays and weekends.

Landscaping – Is gardening your thing? If so, make sure you consider that when viewing a property. If you prefer to limit your time maintaining a yard, consider what will be required to keep the current landscape healthy or to replace it with lower-maintenance options.

Future growth – Any new roads or developments in the area can change your living experience significantly. Better to find out before you buy a home if the plans for the neighborhood fit in to your view of how you want to live.

Ability to expand – If you're buying with the thought of adding a second-story to the house sometime in the future, building a home office in the back yard, or installing an in-ground pool, find out if the property itself can accommodate what you have in mind and that zoning or homeowners-association rules don't prohibit your plans, either.

Don't go overboard

While you want to ponder these types of factors, you can also take the process too far. If you overanalyze every last detail and try to satisfy every conceivable item that comes to mind, you'll never buy a home. Again, that's where listing your priorities serves you well. If the lowest item on your housing wish list is the desire to possibly build a pool 10 or 12 years down the road, perhaps you shouldn't strike an otherwise good property from your list of consideration. Also, bear in mind that no property – not even a new home – will be perfect. A qualified home inspector will likely find any major defects, giving you time to make an informed decision about whether to continue with the purchase, renegotiate the deal, or terminate the contract. But the home you buy may also contain a few quirks – some that you uncover before you purchase it, others that may become evident only after you move in. Maybe the dishwasher makes a strange noise or the bathroom door opens in a way that bumps the mirror. Have realistic expectations so minor problems won't get in the way of you enjoying your new home.

Your REALTOR® can help you find properties that meet your requirements and discuss the pros and cons of each one. With your priorities clearly defined, you are sure to end up in a home that makes you happy.

BEST WAY TO HELP SON BUY?

QUESTION:

My wife and I want to help our son and his wife purchase their first home. We're not sure what's the best way to go. We can provide $50,000 for a down payment, but what about the tax implications? Would it be better for us to invest in the property?

ANSWER:

According to the IRS the annual tax exclusion for gifts is $14,000 for 2014. That means you can give your son $14,000 and another $14,000 for your daughter-in-law. Your wife can do the same, meaning you and your wife can give your son and his wife as much as $56,000 tax-free in 2014. For details and specifics speak with a tax professional.

If your son and his wife buy property with a mortgage, the lender will want to know about the source of their funds. The lender will have you provide a "gift letter" showing that the money given to your son and his wife is a gift and that you do not expect repayment.

As to holding an interest in the property as an investment, that's a different story. Under the Black Lung Benefits Revenue Act of 1981 you might want to consider buying jointly with your son and his wife by using an "equity-sharing" arrangement.

In basic terms, an equity-sharing agreement allows your son and his wife to be resident equity owners while you and your wife are nonresident investors. Your son and his wife can deduct a portion of the mortgage interest and property taxes, while you and your wife can deduct a portion as investors. Because you are "investors" and not residents you can also depreciate your share of the property.

As an example, you put up $50,000, and a property worth $400,000 is purchased. You and your wife have a 30-percent interest in the property – a number that entirely is negotiable – and your son and his wife own 70 percent. Each month they pay you rent equal to 30 percent of the fair market rental for the property.

Equity-sharing arrangements raise a number of questions: What if you want to sell and your son doesn't? What if there's a family fight? Or a divorce? What happens if you die and leave your interest to someone other than your son? If the property is sold do you get back the full $50,000 or just 30 percent of the sale price?

Equity sharing is complex. You'll need to get advice from an attorney, and you'll also need to consider related tax and estate issues so speak with a tax professional. Meanwhile, your son and his wife should understand that they're lucky to have parents who have the financial capacity to be helpful and are willing to assist their children. In an economy where young people are having a tough time you should be proud of what you want to do.

4 EASY STEPS TO SHOPPING FOR A MORTGAGE

YOU WANT TO BUY A HOME. THAT'S THE EASY PART. UNDERSTANDING EVERYTHING THAT GOES INTO SECURING A LOAN? NOT SO EASY. FOLLOW THESE POINTS TO SIMPLIFY THE FINANCING PROCESS

By ERIK J. MARTIN
CTW Features

It's easy to understand why the concept of buying a home is a feel-good notion.

In fact, nearly all – 94 percent – of prospective home purchasers think they're making a smart investment by buying a residence, per the results of a recent poll commissioned by Discover Home Loans.

And yet, home shoppers are often vexed by mortgage math and suffer from financing information overload. Consider that, among respondents of the same Discover Home Loans poll, 48 percent haven't calculated what their expected monthly payment may be, and 63 percent feel overwhelmed by the amount of mortgage info available.

But obtaining home loan financing doesn't have to be a distressing and paralyzing process if you know what to expect and prepare properly, say the experts. Follow these four easy steps when shopping for a mortgage:

1. Get Your Financial House in Order

Evaluate how much you'll need to have saved for a down payment – salting away at least 20 percent of the home's price is recommended if you want to avoid having to pay additional private mortgage insurance.

Clean up your credit. Visit annualcreditreport.com to view your credit report for no charge, and correct any inaccuracies you see there, pay off any outstanding balances on credit cards, and continue to pay your bills on time.

Substantiate all sources of income via paycheck stubs, recent tax returns, W-2 forms and bank statements.

"A lender will ask to see two months of bank statements at the time of application. If there are large deposits on the statements, you will have to document the source of the funds and provide a paper trail," says Joe Parsons, senior loan officer with PFS Funding, a mortgage banker based in Dublin, California. "You should gather all this documentation before starting the application process."

2. Find a Qualified Mortgage Professional

Find an expert you feel comfortable with, and be honest and up front with the lender. Provide everything your lender requests as soon as possible to prevent delays.

"Ask experienced agents and real estate professionals for recommendations, and work with this lending professional in advance so you will have the best possible credit options," says Debra Kroon, broker-associate/Realtor with Yosemite West Real Estate, Inc., in Oakhurst, California. "Good loan officers will assist you in resolving any current credit or qualification issues."

Erin Lantz, vice president of mortgages at Zillow in Seattle, says it's wise to get at least three loan quotes from three separate sources and compare them on an apples-to-apples basis.

"Before you move forward with a lender, read their ratings and reviews to get a better idea about their level of customer service and ability to close on time," Lantz says.

When comparing lenders, be aware that typically there is very little difference in rates and requirements between them. Focus instead on finding an experienced professional who will personally handle your loan transaction – an expert with whom you feel a rapport and who is clear, informative and responsive to your questions and requests.

3. Determine What You Qualify For and What You Can Afford

"Take a careful look at your finances to determine your home affordability, and perform a thorough assessment of what your mortgage needs are," says Valentin Saportas, CEO of MortgageHippo in Chicago.

Next, learn from the lender what kind of credit you qualify for, what your monthly payment is likely to be, and the actual cost of the mortgage loan in writing – not just a rate quote, but the lender's charges, third-party fees, closing costs and total interest to be paid.

4. Get Preapproved for a Loan

Finally, it's important to get preapproved from your chosen lender before you start home shopping, says Don Zender, vice president/branch manager for Evergreen Home Loans in Bellevue, Washington.

"Preapproval means the lender will review your credit, the funds needed to close and verify your employment so you have a firm loan commitment in your hand," Zender says. "You can then present this preapproval letter to real estate agents and sellers, showing them you're serious about buying a home."

INVESTMENTS

WHAT'S WORTH THE MONEY?

Real estate, despite an uneasy past few years, is seen as one of the safest investments you can make

Gold? Sure. Other jewelry? Why not?

But real estate, a safe investment? Actually, a majority of Americans feel it's among the safest.

According to a Harris Poll of more than 2,300 adults, 72 percent of Americans see owning a home as a safe investment. In fact, even across generational lines, real estate is seen as a safe investment, with Matures (89 percent), baby boomers (77-percent), Gen Xers (70 percent) and Millennials (63 percent) all seeing owning a home as a safe investment.

Not all real estate is created equal, though. Just 44 percent of Americans see owning an investment property – as opposed to a primary residence – as a safe investment. The aforementioned gold (65 percent) and jewelry (59 percent) also are seen as safe.

Still, real estate is seen as having a strong earning potential, both as an investment property (43 percent agree) and a primary residence (36 percent).

So, what's risky? A large swatch of Americans – 80 percent – think owning your own business is a risky investment; more than two-thirds also think stock/bonds (68 percent) are a risky investment. But, perhaps not surprisingly, those with more money in investable assets have a lower perception of risk in these two categories than those with less in investable assets, who assert a higher risk.

BEST WAY TO HELP SON BUY?

QUESTION:

My wife and I want to help our son and his wife purchase their first home. We're not sure what's the best way to go. We can provide $50,000 for a down payment, but what about the tax implications? Would it be better for us to invest in the property?

ANSWER:

According to the IRS the annual tax exclusion for gifts is $14,000 for 2014. That means you can give your son $14,000 and another $14,000 for your daughter-in-law. Your wife can do the same, meaning you and your wife can give your son and his wife as much as $56,000 tax-free in 2014. For details and specifics speak with a tax professional.

If your son and his wife buy property with a mortgage, the lender will want to know about the source of their funds. The lender will have you provide a "gift letter" showing that the money given to your son and his wife is a gift and that you do not expect repayment.

As to holding an interest in the property as an investment, that's a different story. Under the Black Lung Benefits Revenue Act of 1981 you might want to consider buying jointly with your son and his wife by using an "equity-sharing" arrangement.

In basic terms, an equity-sharing agreement allows your son and his wife to be resident equity owners while you and your wife are nonresident investors. Your son and his wife can deduct a portion of the mortgage interest and property taxes, while you and your wife can deduct a portion as investors. Because you are "investors" and not residents you can also depreciate your share of the property.

As an example, you put up $50,000, and a property worth $300,000 is purchased. You and your wife have a 30-percent interest in the property - a number that entirely is negotiable - and your son and his wife own 70 percent. Each month they pay you rent equal to 30 percent of the fair market rental for the property.

Equity-sharing arrangements raise a number of questions: What if you want to sell and your son doesn't? What if there's a family fight? Or a divorce? What happens if you die and leave your interest to someone other than your son? If the property is sold do you get back the full $50,000 or just 30 percent of the sale price?

Equity sharing is complex. You'll need to get advice from an attorney, and you'll also need to consider related tax and estate issues so speak with a tax professional. Meanwhile, your son and his wife should understand that they're lucky to have parents who have the financial capacity to be helpful and are willing to assist their children. In an economy where young people are having a tough time you should be proud of what you want to do.

4 EASY STEPS TO SHOPPING FOR A MORTGAGE

By ERIK J. MARTIN
CTW Features

It's easy to understand why the concept of buying a home is a feel-good notion.

In fact, nearly all – 94 percent – of prospective home purchasers think they're making a smart investment by buying a residence, per the results of a recent poll commissioned by Discover Home Loans.

And yet, home shoppers are often vexed by mortgage math and suffer from financing information overload. Consider that, among respondents of the same Discover Home Loans poll, 48 percent haven't calculated what their expected monthly payment may be, and 63 percent feel overwhelmed by the amount of mortgage info available.

But obtaining home loan financing doesn't have to be a distressing and paralyzing process if you know what to expect and prepare properly, say the experts. Follow these four easy steps when shopping for a mortgage:

1. Get Your Financial House in Order

Evaluate how much you'll need to have saved for a down payment – salting away at least 20 percent of the home's price is recommended if you want to avoid having to pay additional private mortgage insurance.

Clean up your credit. Visit annualcreditreport.com to view your credit report for no charge, and correct any inaccuracies you see there, pay off any outstanding balances on credit cards, and continue to pay your bills on time.

Substantiate all sources of income via paycheck stubs, recent tax returns, W-2 forms and bank statements.

"A lender will ask to see two months of bank statements at the time of application. If there are large deposits on the statements, you will have to document the source of the funds and provide a paper trail," says Joe Parsons, senior loan officer with PFS Funding, a mortgage banker based in Dublin, California. "You should gather all this documentation before starting the application process."

2. Find a Qualified Mortgage Professional

Find an expert you feel comfortable with, and be honest and up front with the lender. Provide everything your lender requests as soon as possible to prevent delays.

"Ask experienced agents and real estate professionals for recommendations, and work with this lending professional in advance so you will have the best possible credit options," says Debra Kroon, broker-associate/Realtor with Yosemite West Real Estate, Inc., in Oakhurst, California. "Good loan officers will assist you in resolving any current credit or qualification issues."

Erin Lantz, vice president of mortgages at Zillow in Seattle, says it's wise to get at least three loan quotes from three separate sources and compare them on an apples-to-apples basis.

"Before you move forward with a lender, read their ratings and reviews to get a better idea about their level of customer service and ability to close on time," Lantz says.

When comparing lenders, be aware that typically there is very little difference in rates and requirements between them. Focus instead on finding an experienced professional who will personally handle your loan transaction – an expert with whom you feel a rapport and who is clear, informative and responsive to your questions and requests.

3. Determine What You Qualify For and What You Can Afford

"Take a careful look at your finances to determine your home affordability, and perform a thorough assessment of what your mortgage needs are," says Valentin Esportas, CEO of MortgageHippo in Chicago.

Next, learn from the lender what kind of credit you qualify for, what your monthly payment is likely to be, and the actual cost of the mortgage loan in writing – not just a rate quote, but the lender's charges, third-party fees, closing costs and total interest to be paid.

4. Get Preapproved for a Loan

Finally, it's important to get preapproved from your chosen lender before you start home shopping, says Don Zender, vice president/branch manager for Evergreen Home Loans in Bellevue, Washington.

"Preapproval means the lender will review your credit, the funds needed to close and verify your employment so you have a firm loan commitment in your hand," Zender says. "You can then present this preapproval letter to real estate agents and sellers, showing them you're serious about buying a home."

INVESTMENTS

WHAT'S WORTH THE MONEY?

Real estate, despite an uneasy past few years, is seen as one of the safest investments you can make

Gold? Sure. Other jewelry? Why not?

But real estate, a safe investment? Actually, a majority of Americans feel it's among the safest.

According to a Harris Poll of more than 2,300 adults, 72 percent of Americans see owning a home as a safe investment. In fact, even across generational lines, real estate is seen as a safe investment, with Matures (89 percent), baby boomers (77-percent), Gen Xers (70 percent) and Millennials (63 percent) all seeing owning a home as a safe investment.

Not all real estate is created equal, though. Just 44 percent of Americans see owning an investment property – as opposed to a primary residence – as a safe investment. The aforementioned gold (65 percent) and jewelry (59 percent) also are seen as safe.

Still, real estate is seen as having a strong earning potential, both as an investment property (43 percent agree) and a primary residence (36 percent).

So, what's risky? A large swatch of Americans – 80 percent – think owning your own business is a risky investment; more than two-thirds also think stock/bonds (68 percent) are a risky investment. But, perhaps not surprisingly, those with more money in investable assets have a lower perception of risk in these two categories than those with less in investable assets, who assert a higher risk.

5 Tips for Decorating with Black

Sherwin-Williams

Looking for a dramatic way to make a big difference in a room? Fade... to black.

By Dawn Klingensmith | CTW Features

For a time, gray was the "it" color in interior design. Despite its association with storm clouds and bleakness in general, gray proved to be surprisingly soft and versatile. Now, the same is being said of black.

Called "the new gray" by Details magazine, black is as perplexing as it is popular. Since many of us are in the dark when it comes to decorating with black, four color experts stepped in to shed some light on the subject.

Black basics

As with white or gray, "There are many variations of black so it's important to pay attention to undertones including blue, green and violet," says Jackie Jordan, director of color marketing for Sherwin-Williams. "Also be careful with sheen and texture. The smoother and shinier it is, the more it will show everything from dust to fingerprints to water spots."

The metallics in a predominantly black room should be warm. A silvery gold looks current. "Steer away from silver or chrome. It looks dated," says New York-based textile designer Rebecca Atwood.

A bit of black

Afraid of going big? It only takes a touch of black to make a bold statement. "Home accessories such as pillows, mirrors, picture frames and lamps are safe and easy ways to introduce black into your home with a minimal investment," says Michael Murphy, design and trends producer at Lamps Plus.

Instead of solid black, "Try black paired with other colors in prints and patterns like the popular chevron, the classic stripe or a geometric pattern," Jordan suggests.

Wide "cabana stripes" in black and white "are a great way to use black on rugs and chairs," says paint color consultant Kristie Barnett, author of The Decorologist blog.

If painting furniture, "Don't do a whole suit in black — just do one or two pieces," Barnett says.

Black on a budget

Lighting fixtures aren't inexpensive, but switching out a single fixture or lampshade can have the effect of a full makeover. For instant drama, Atwood recommends a black lampshade with a gold metallic inner liner. Murphy suggests a black chandelier.

Painting interior doors black "adds a cosmopolitan feel," Barnett says. "Paint just the door, not the frame or the trim, and use a light, neutral color on the walls for contrast."

Even cheap doors look "high-end" when painted black, she adds.

Barnett is also a fan of painting wooden window mullions black with white trim. It doesn't spoil the view with a pronounced grid but rather "brings the eye out into the landscape," she says.

Bold and black

"Black paint on the walls can be really nice. You can definitely get away with it in a bedroom if you do an all-white bed," Atwood says. "If you do black on the walls, you need to use it sparingly throughout the rest of the room and choose light furnishings that stand out against the black."

If a focal point or large piece of furniture is black, "you need other black things throughout the space, smaller things, to pull your eyes around the room; otherwise, your eyes fixate on just that one thing," Atwood says. "It's like a black hole."

Black magic

It's often said that dark rooms seem smaller, but in fact they can feel larger because the room lines disappear. Black in a powder room can create the illusion of more space, and it's a "safe" place to paint the walls and even the ceiling because it is set off from the main living space and not used for makeup application or other tasks requiring bright light, Jordan says.

Ever see a wall do a disappearing act? A black wall seems to do just that in the right circumstances. For example, it makes a good backdrop for monochromatic art because it recedes while the color of the artwork stands out and commands attention.

Raise the Bar

Update your entertainment arsenal with these suggestions from a top chef

By Bev Bennett | CTW Features

Having a repertoire of trendy cocktail recipes makes party hosting more pleasurable. But if you're still serving gin and tonics in jelly jars or your wine glasses come with an ad for the local soccer team, it's time to trade up.

Equip your kitchen with glasses that are appropriate for different types of cocktails and add a few bar tools to make cocktail preparation easier and your drinks special. What's more you can do both without breaking your budget.

"You don't need to spend a lot of money on glassware," says Tim Laird, chef and chief entertaining officer with Brown-Forman Corporation, Louisville, Ky. "I don't recommend crystal when you're starting out. You can get nice glassware from a variety of outlets."

You also don't need a separate shape for each drink; some glasses do double duty, according to Laird. Gadgets may also serve several purposes. Get a blender that crushes ice and you can use it for your morning smoothie and your evening margarita.

Here are Laird's recommendations for glasses and gadgets:

Glasses

Buy six of each of the following:

• "Rocks" glass: This squat glass with either straight or slightly angled sides holds about a half of liquid. As the name suggests, use this for spirits on ice.

• Highball glass: A tall, slightly chubby glass that has either straight or slightly sloping sides. The classic sloe gin fizz is served in a highball glass, but you can also use it for iced tea.

• Martini glass: The Y is the epitome of cocktail style. "Everyone loves to have a martini glass," says Laird. But avoid super-sized glasses, he advises. "When you make your cocktail and pour it in [an oversized glass] it will get warm halfway through; not refreshing," says Laird. He's also concerned that your guests will be unaware of how much alcohol they're consuming.

• Wine glass: Choose a thin-rimmed glass with a medium bowl, which is versatile enough for both red and white wine as well as Champagne.

Gadgets

• Cocktail shaker: Select a shaker with a built-in strainer. For $10 you can get a shaker "that lasts forever," says Laird.

• Measuring glass: Instead of a jigger, buy a glass that measures up to six ounces of liquid.

• Ice bucket and tongs: Look for insulation so the bucket doesn't sweat when you put ice in it.

• Strainer: Buy two if you have the space - one with a coil that fits over the mixing glass and keeps the ice in place, and one for straining out solids.

• Blender: Pick one with a glass container so it doesn't absorb flavors.

WORKING FOR FREEDOM

Founder helps prepare kits for sexual assault victims

By Steve Kuhlmann
skuhlmann@mrt.com

No community wants to believe that rape, sexual abuse or domestic violence takes place within it, but nurse Cori Armstead wants to make clear that these acts are far more common that anyone would imagine.

Armstead — who has been a Sexual Assault Nurse Examiner (SANE) in Midland for 12 years — said that the Midland SANE team annually performs an average of 140 physical evidence recovery kit examinations on victims of sexual assault.

"That's averaging 12 per month," Armstead said. "People think that it doesn't happen here, but it happens right under their eyes."

Midland Rape Crisis and Children's Advocacy Center has a 24-hour hotline: 682-7273.

A global nonprofit, Fear 2 Freedom, partnered with the Midland Rape Crisis and Children's Advocacy Center, Midland Memorial Hospital and SANE nurses for an event to increase awareness of the incidence of rape, child abuse, domestic violence and sex-trafficking.

Participants gathered at First Baptist Church on Tuesday prepared more than 200 after-care kits for sexual assault victims who will come to the Midland Rape Crisis Center or Midland Memorial Hospital for an examination.

There are two kits available — one for a children and one for those 13 and older. Both kits include a set of clothes, soap and shampoo, a toothbrush and toothpaste, a comb, a personal note and a stuffed bear with an accompanying storybook.

The clothes are especially important because the clothes of sexual assault victims are claimed as evidence, often forcing victims to leave the hospital in paper gowns or scrubs, said Rosemary Trible, Fear 2 Freedom founder and president.

"Some of them are going to shelters, some are going back to a residence hall and some have left in a flight situation and ... sadly the victims are leaving in paper scrubs or hospital gowns unless that local community group is bringing in some sweat pants," she said. "But to have something that we can present from these forensic nurses, almost as a gift, to say 'someone cares about you.'"

Trible and Brook Bello, an actress, sexual abuse activist and founder of the nonprofit More Too Life, gave personal testimonials.

Trible, the wife of former U.S. Sen. Paul Trible Jr. of Virginia, said she founded Fear 2 Freedom out of a desire to ease the suffering of sexual assault victims at a time when they feel especially vulnerable — a feeling that Trible said she was all too familiar with. In 1975, Trible was the victim of a violent sexual assault at gunpoint. She was 25.

"I went to that hospital alone, and I'll never forget that and the emptiness I felt," Trible said, adding that it was a night that "changed my life forever and gave me this deep desire to figure out what could I do at this point of greatest trauma."

She said the kits are meant to provide some level of comfort to victims and as a way to ease them onto the road to recovery.

It's not a stretch: Yoga's in Houston schools

By Ericka Mellon
N.Y. Times News Service

Associated Press

Crockett Elementary students participate in a Yoga class as part of a new health and wellness effort coordinated by the national Sonima Foundation in Houston on Sept. 19. More than a dozen Houston Independent School District schools are participating in the program.

HOUSTON — In a window-lit classroom at Crockett Elementary School, 21 third-graders sat cross-legged on purple mats and put their hands over their hearts.

"How does exhaling feel?" their teacher, Morgan Camp, asked.

"Relaxing," said one boy.

"Like bubbles going in and then they're popping by themselves," said another.

Camp led the youngsters through 45 minutes of breathing exercises and yoga poses — with some giggling along the way — in a new class meant to promote lifelong wellness and fitness, calming techniques and increased focus in academic courses.

With obesity rates too high and exercise participation too low, particularly among minorities, the yoga-based health and wellness classes are coming to a dozen campuses in the Houston Independent School District this fall thanks in part to a grant from the California-based Sonima Foundation. The nonprofit donated at least $360,000 for the program.

"We want healthier, happier kids. That's the bottom line," said Gill McClean, a yoga mentor with the Sonima Foundation.

Nationally, about 17 percent of children and adolescents 2 to 19 are obese, according to the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention. The rates were higher for Hispanic and black youth, 22 percent and 20 percent, respectively, and lower for whites, at 14 percent.

A survey of HISD middle school students found similar disparities, with black and Hispanic children less likely to be physically active and more likely to watch TV and play video games. Overall, 42 percent of the students surveyed last year said they were physically active for at least 60 minutes per day on five or more days in the last week.

Balancing schedules

As trendy and pricey yoga studios have popped up around the country, nonprofits like the Sonima Foundation and New York's Bent on Learning have brought the mind-body practice to public schools. Still, special yoga courses in schools aren't widespread as administrators balance academic requirements with electives.

"Lots of physical education teachers do incorporate some yoga into their classes," said Dolly Lambdin, president of the Society of Health and Physical Educators and a clinical professor at the University of Texas at Austin. "It's a great activity for people. But it's only one piece of what a quality physical education program should be."

In HISD, the yoga wellness classes are in addition to regular P.E. classes in some cases, and replace them in others. Ten elementary schools, one middle and one high school are participating in the program.

The curriculum from the Sonima Foundation includes a series of yoga poses plus lessons in character education, like being kind and mindful.

A bulletin board in Camp's classroom displays vocabulary words like "intention," "posture," "compassion" and "discipline."

Camp began a class last week by asking her third-graders to remove their socks and shoes and walk quietly to their spots.

"Remember the agreement," she told them. "You cannot step on anyone else's mat."

'Tired and happy'

Camp later guided them through a series of moves, including downward-facing dog — or "dog tails in the air," as she called it.

"You feel warm?" Camp asked.

Most of the students, wearing regular pants and T-shirts or long sleeves, raised their hands.

After class, 8-year-old Kenell Ramirez gave yoga a thumbs-up. He said he felt "a little bit tired and happy."

"This is the best class," added Julia Franco, 8. "Yoga's like doing the splits, but you don't feel the pain in your legs."

Camp sees the third- and fifth-graders twice a week, and the other students once a week. At Crockett, a school that specializes in fine arts, her class serves as the sole P.E. course, though some students also take dance and they all get daily recess.

In just a few weeks, Camp said, her students seem more relaxed and conscious of their feelings. Some of the dancers have told her their flexibility has improved, and those who play instruments have said their hands are less sore thanks to the stretches.

"It's a combination of P.E. and health," Camp said. "We're not playing soccer outside, but it's definitely improving hand-eye coordination. The need to exercise is being met."

Texas law says public elementary school students should get 135 minutes a week — or 27 minutes a day — of "moderate or vigorous physical activity." Middle school students are supposed to take four semesters of physical education, and high school students need two semesters.

The participating HISD schools will be part of an ongoing study conducted by the University of San Diego's Center for Education Policy and Law.

Scott Himelstein, director of the center, said the study already found positive results from the first year of the Sonima Foundation's launch in San Diego County.

Better focus, fitness

Despite an unsuccessful lawsuit alleging the program was religious in nature, Himelstein said teachers in Encinitas reported that students in the yoga classes were more focused, and the children fared better on the state's fitness test in flexibility and core strength than those in the control group.

With national pressure to raise standardized test scores, Himelstein said he thinks the yoga wellness program could help low-performing schools if it gives students "strategies for calming themselves, for being able to focus, for being able to deal with some of the stressful situations that may be in some lower socioeconomic areas."

The Sonima Foundation, looking to expand to a district with a large underserved population, turned to HISD Superintendent Terry Grier, who used to work in San Diego. About 80 percent of HISD's students were low-income, and 87 percent were black or Hispanic last year.

Tiffany Chenier, the principal of HISD's McNamara Elementary, said she hopes the yoga wellness program helps her youngsters learn to self-regulate — to energize themselves and reduce their stress.

"Believe it or not, we have little children who are anxious about taking a test," Chenier said. "They can do a de-stressing exercise. These are just habits we need for life."

She said she hopes to start an after-hours class for her staff next.

"When they learned we were having it for the boys and girls, immediately they asked, 'What about us?' " she said.

Husband seeks company while wife is in nursing home

DEAR ABBY

Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: My wife is in a nursing home and will be for a long time. While I was caring for her at home, I was very lonely. She wasn't there for me except to demand that I do this and that.

I did what I could to keep her happy, but nothing worked. I had no life of my own. My life was wrapped around her and doing the best I could to take care of her. I did all the chores that were required to keep the home running.

Would it be wrong to find a lady friend to do a few things with, like have dinner, go to a movie or just for a ride in the country or to the beach? My son thinks I shouldn't do it, but he doesn't know how lonely I am, nor do the other kids in the family. — NO LIFE OF MY OWN

DEAR NO LIFE: You're asking me a question no one can decide for you. Much depends upon the quality of your marriage before your wife became ill. You promised to love and cherish her until death do you part. If she's still in her right mind, you owe it to her to be there for her to the extent that you can — just as she would be if you were sick and in a nursing home.

You should discuss all of this with your children. While it is important that you spend enough time with your wife to ensure that she's being well-cared for, you are also entitled to have a life. Some husbands want to spend every possible minute at their wife's bedside, while others do what you are contemplating. Only you can look into your heart and decide what would be best for all concerned, because it may affect your entire family.

DEAR ABBY: My boyfriend of five years, "Spencer," has always been very sweet — until this year. This year he has become verbally abusive, telling me I'm a drunk (I don't drink liquor) and insane. (No one else says there is anything insane about my behavior.) Spencer frequently tells me my opinions prove I'm a "jerk."

Until this year, I have been deeply in love with him. I know his verbal attacks on me are unwarranted. All I want is some peace and quiet. Please advise. — BEATEN DOWN IN L.A.

DEAR BEATEN DOWN: Your boyfriend is showing all the signs of a man who wants out of a relationship, but doesn't have the courage to come out and be direct about it. If you want peace and quiet in your life, find a man who appreciates what you have to offer, doesn't make false accusations and treats you well. You'll find what you're looking for after you tell Spencer you're not drunk, you're not crazy and you're not in love with him anymore, so goodbye.

DEAR ABBY: I have been having a problem with my husband ever since his mom died. All he talks about is how much he misses her and how he wants to die.

I loved his mother like she was my own, but it has been a year since she went, and I'm getting tired of the attitude and the behavior he displays. He is so mean now that I am thinking of leaving him because I can't take it anymore. Can you help? — TIRED OF IT

DEAR TIRED OF IT: It is one thing to grieve for a deceased loved one, and quite another to say you wish you could join the person. Your husband is "stuck" in his grieving process and needs professional intervention. Please urge him to get help.

Was he always mean and abusive? If the answer is yes, by all means give serious thought to getting away. If not, tolerate it a little longer — providing he's willing to admit he needs to talk to someone and follows through.

Parents can help children attempt to overcome shyness

ELIZABETH BUCHANAN

Centers for Children and Families

Shy children are usually more reserved and take longer to warm up to others. They often want to enter into social activities, but feel self-conscious, preventing them from participating. Parents should never label their children as "shy." Some parents make this mistake and introduce or describe their children in front of them in this way, resulting in the child thinking there is something wrong with them. The child then experiences shame for something that is actually part of their temperament. Statements such as "don't be so shy" or "she/he is quiet" are not helpful and tend to get the opposite reaction from the child. Shy children are often anxious about drawing attention to themselves.

There are some helpful steps parents can take to help their "shy" child.

Empathize

Encourage your child to talk about the reasons that they feel shy. It is helpful for parents and other adults to communicate empathy in understanding toward the child and acknowledge their feelings. Encourage your child by letting them know they can overcome their fears and worries. Create an environment in which you gently guide your child toward building self-confidence.

Teach social skills

Some social skills that are important to teach are communication, how to make friends, coping with rejection and teasing, asking for help, managing anger, being assertive, giving a compliment, sharing, and self-disclosure. Role play with your child various social situations in helping them learn appropriate ways to respond. Make opportunities for your child to practice these skills.

Model behavior

Model self-confidence in social situations and later talk to your child about what you did to help yourself be more at ease. Ask your child what they observed. Talk to your child about making a plan for when they will be in a similar situation.

Assist in making friends

Set up play dates for your child with the first being in your own home. You may need to step in and make suggestions facilitating how to act when having a friend over Allow for opportunities for your child to participate in outside activities. Find out what is involved in the activity and learn along with your child what they will be doing. Encourage them to have a buddy in all their activities.

Help in coping with changes

The more a shy child knows what to expect, the easier the transition. If, for example, your child's class is going on a field trip, find out as much information as possible ahead of time. Inform your child of what you learned to help them in preparing for the trip.

Allow the child to speak up

Avoid always answering for your shy child. The more you speak for them, the less opportunity they have to practice their communication skills. Don't always rescue them if they are not speaking up. Allow them to struggle, which would reinforce their motivation to develop new skills.

Set goals

Help your child set goals in taking small steps that build toward a larger skill. Keep in mind their age and stage of development. Reward their successes with verbal acknowledgment. Help your child build self-confidence by working with them on new skills and helping them build their self-esteem by affirming their gifts, talents and abilities.

FREEDOM

From 1E

"I always say that he not only tore my body, but he stole my joy," Trible said. "I always wear a little joy pin to remind myself that I've got my joy back. What we're doing is redeeming just a little bit of that joy in the time of greatest crisis."

Bello, too, experienced sexual violence. She spent nearly 10 years of her life as a victim of sex trafficking.

Following a brutal rape by a family friend at the age of 11, Bello said she ran away from home and was quickly picked up off the street and forced into prostitution.

After escaping that part of her life in her early 20s, Bello went on to become an actress in Hollywood with notable appearances on TV series such as "Stargate SG-1" and "JAG."

Now, however, Bello dedicates most of her time to raising awareness for victims of sexual abuse and offering whatever solace she can through her Sarasota, Florida-based nonprofit More Too Life.

Bellow said she has seen that the Fear 2 Freedom after-care kits "touch lives in such a special way. Some of the women even like them more because they never had a childhood. It's just another step in healing."

Fear 2 Freedom originated in Virginia and recently began to branch out in Texas, Colorado and Alabama. Trible said that she is hopeful that fruitful and lasting partnerships will be quick to form.

"We want to come back every year, we want to replenish (Midland), we want to come back and maybe involve one of the universities in the area the next time," Trible said. "It's an ongoing thing because every year there's going to be more need. Working together, I think we can truly make a difference one person at a time."

Each after-care kit costs $30 to produce, and Trible hopes that as the nonprofit's ties to the community grow, so will its ties to donors.

"Foundations, corporations — we're really looking for folks that are willing to look at this as a way for them to really make a difference," Trible said.

Harry's Roadhouse is Santa Fe's version of the roadside diner

By Jeri Clausing
Associated Press

SANTA FE, N.M. — There is no shortage of good food in this northern New Mexico town, where the many casual and gourmet takes on the state's trademark chile dishes are almost as big a draw as the city's art galleries and festivals.

The question typically is not where to go, but where can you get a table.

So while the tourists are lining up at the Plaza's dining hot spots, a popular respite for locals is Harry's Roadhouse, Santa Fe's upscale version of the roadside diner.

Tucked along the Interstate 25 service road at the edge of the capital, Harry's offers a little bit for everyone, both in its menu selections and seating options.

Dining alone? You might find yourself perched on a diner stool next to one of its more famous regulars, actor and playwright Sam Shepard. Other options include tables or booths in one of the colorful dining rooms or out back in the flowering gardens.

The menu runs the gamut from New York strip steak to pizza, po'boys and Vietnamese caramelized catfish. And of it course it offers New Mexican and Mexican favorites, making it a popular Sunday morning spot for a clientele used to having a little spice at every meal.

Looking for some classic Mexican? Try the breakfast chilaquiles with black beans and eggs. Want a New Mexican twist? Try the chile relleno omelette or Harry's famous blue corn meal waffles.

The Roadhouse also does an outstanding job on brunch and breakfast classics, right down to the spicy bloody mary. And it is New Mexico, so anything can be had with side of red or green to heat things up.

The Roadhouse's lunch and dinner menus also have an interesting variety of dishes that put a new spin on the traditional. For instance, their meatloaf and blue corn enchiladas are made with turkey. Its baked sweet potato is stuffed with red chile-honey mash and topped with quinoa, black beans and crema. And taco lovers can choose between salmon, Korean or "tinga de pollo" with black beans.

No matter what you decide, save room for dessert. The menu offers fresh pies, sundaes, even a chocolate peanut butter ice cream sandwich.

Salt, olive oil, lemons are go-to ingredients for every kind of meal

By Melissa Clark
N.Y. Times News Service

I have 24 kinds of chilies and more than 50 dried herbs and seasonings in my spice drawer. There are dozens of oils and vinegars stuffed into my pantry, fresh herbs in pots on the deck, and a collection of condiments that I suspect is multiplying like bunnies behind the refrigerator door.

Yet the items I reach for day after day, meal after meal, number exactly three: salt, olive oil and lemon. They are my kitchen workhorses, the ingredients I always have on hand that I can use to create pretty much anything I feel like eating, in dishes savory or sweet. Even when I add herbs, spices or condiments to the pan, these three are where I start.

Here's how to prepare a typical weeknight dinner on autopilot: Select the main ingredient — beef, chicken, lamb, fish, tofu, broccoli, beans or what have you. Season it with salt, slick it with olive oil, drizzle it with lemon. The cooking method doesn't matter. You can roast it, saute it, fry it, bake it or stew it; olive oil works as the cooking medium, while lemon and salt provide the snap. Or whisk the three of them into a dressing to pour on top of anything raw, steamed and boiled.

Naturally, when you're employing this minimalist strategy, the quality of the ingredients matters. Buy the good stuff, splurging on the olive oil as if it were wine. If you can, taste it before buying. I keep at least two kinds of olive oil on hand: a lesser (and less-expensive) oil for cooking and a better one for drizzling.

Make sure your lemons are fresh, and refrigerate them. As nice as that bowl of lemons looks on your counter, they will keep a lot longer in the fridge without drying out and losing the aroma of their sunflower-yellow zest. Then grate said zest and use it alongside the juice whenever you want an extra lemony punch. And keep in mind that golden, caramelized lemon slices — either fried in olive oil or roasted — will heighten the simplest of weeknight meals. Try tossing them into the standard pasta with Parmigiano-Reggiano and watch a whole new world of flavors and textures open up on your plate.

Last but not least, the salt. I probably have half a dozen kinds, from Hawaii red salt to Danish smoked salt, not to mention the flavored salts I keep getting as gifts. These are fun to play with, but generally I use kosher for cooking, fine sea salt for seasoning and baking, and flaky sea salt for finishing.

Pasta with fried lemons and chili flakes

Time: 30 minutes
Yield: 4 to 6 servings

4 lemons
1 pound linguine or spaghetti
4 tablespoons extra-virgin olive oil, more for drizzling
1 teaspoon kosher salt, more as needed
Pinch of sugar
3 tablespoons unsalted butter
3/4 teaspoon chili flakes, more to taste
2/3 cup Parmigiano-Reggiano cheese, more to taste
Black pepper, as needed
1/2 cup celery leaves, coarsely chopped (optional)
1/3 cup parsley, coarsely chopped (optional)
Flaky sea salt, for garnish

Bring a large pot of salted water to a boil. Finely zest two of the lemons and set aside. Trim the tops and bottoms off the other two lemons and cut lengthwise into quarters; remove seeds. Thinly slice the quarters crosswise into triangles. Blanch the lemon pieces in the boiling water for two minutes, then transfer with a slotted spoon to a dish towel. Blot dry.

In the boiling water, add pasta and cook until just barely al dente. Drain, reserving 1/2 cup of the pasta cooking water.

Meanwhile, in a large skillet, heat 1 tablespoon of the oil over high heat. Add the dried lemon pieces and season with a pinch each of salt and sugar. Cook until the lemons are caramelized and browned at the edges, three to five minutes. Transfer to a plate.

Melt the butter with the remaining oil in the pan over medium heat. Add the chili flakes and zest of both lemons; cook until fragrant. Whisk in the reserved pasta water.

Toss in pasta, juice of one lemon, cheese, pepper and the remaining salt. Cook until pasta is well coated with sauce. Toss in the caramelized lemon and the celery leaves and parsley if using. Taste and add lemon juice if needed. Serve, topped with a drizzle of oil, more cheese if you like, and a sprinkle of sea salt.

University launches beer-making program

Associated Press

DETROIT — Colleges and beer have a long shared history. A university in Michigan is taking that partnership to a new level with the creation of a program to train and certify experts in "fermentation science."

Central Michigan University in Mount Pleasant last week announced plans to launch the program in fall 2015, aimed particularly at supporting and boosting the state's fast-growing craft brewing industry, now a $1 billion-plus annual business.

"As of 2013, Michigan ranked fifth in the nation in number of breweries, behind only California, Colorado, Oregon and Washington," said Ian Davison, dean of the College of Science and Technology at the Mount Pleasant school.

Central Michigan bills its undergraduate program as the first in the state specifically aimed at providing a "hands-on education focused on craft beer." Similar programs operate at the University of California's Davis and San Diego campuses and at Oregon State and Central Washington universities.

Michigan State University has operated an artisan distilling program for 15 years and last year started a beverage specialization program that also includes beer and wine-making.

The Central Michigan program will include classroom and lab work in biochemistry, chemistry and microbiology, as well as a 200-hour internship in a "production-scale facility."

The university, which is about 150 miles northwest of Detroit, said it is collaborating with the Mountain Town Brewing Co. and Hunter's Ale House in developing the program.

Program director Cordell DeMattei said it "will fill a need in the state and across the region for students to learn the science and technology underlying brewing ... and provides the training needed by future leaders of the craft brewing industry."

Recent years have seen an explosion of interest in small-scale, local, high-quality beer-making.

Rob Sirrine of the Michigan State University Extension said more than 400 acres of hops, beer's key flavoring ingredient, are under cultivation in Michigan. Growers' main market is small-sale in-state brewers, he said.

Behind the growth in demand for high-end beer is a long-running fascination with the brewing process, one of the oldest forms of human food processing.

"There's a lot of romantic attachment to beer," said Scott Graham, executive director of the Michigan Brewers Guild. The Lansing-based group represents the state's microbreweries, now numbering more than 160, and helped win passage this year of laws allowing them to expand.

In-state microbrewers currently have 5 percent of Michigan's beer market, a share that could easily double or triple, Graham said.

Home-canned goods have short shelf life

Dear Heloise: My wife and I canned tomatoes, green beans and tomato juice in 1997. Since then, my wife passed away, and time has moved on. Are these home-canned goods still good to use? I have asked friends and family and continue to get different answers. — Dale, via email

No, they are not safe to eat, especially anything acidic, such as tomatoes. Home-canned foods should be eaten within a year. Unfortunately, you should toss out all of the canned foods. They have been sitting on the shelf too long, and you certainly don't want to get sick.

For others who can, the quality of food may be affected within just a few months if not canned correctly or stored in a cool, dry place. You should process the amount you know you will use in about a year, or give away to friends and family. — Heloise

P.S.: My heart sends a hug to you on the loss of your wife. You may want to keep a few jars for sentimental reasons, which is just fine.

Greasing pan

Dear Heloise: I read your column on using a pastry brush to get the shortening into the crevices of a fluted cake pan. I use a sandwich bag as a makeshift glove. I scoop the shortening and spread it around the pan. This makes it easy to get into those crevices. Cleanup is easy. — Pam R., via email

Extra coffee

Dear Heloise: While getting prepared for the approaching Hurricane Iselle, here in Maui, Hawaii, I made several pots of coffee and stored them in a large pot in case the power went off for a few days. As we always keep a gallon bottle of water frozen to help keep things cool in case of a power outage, I now keep frozen bottles of coffee, too. In case of prolonged misery, as the bottle thaws we will have coffee, which can be quickly warmed up on the gas barbecue. — Robert in Hawaii

Aloha to my friends in Hawaii! Glad you made it through the hurricanes! For coffee drinkers who cannot function until they get their morning fix, this is a great hint and a way to have something comforting at these times. — Mahalo, Heloise

Fuzzy fruit

Dear Heloise: I recently read your column about kiwifruit. The easiest way to enjoy kiwifruit is to cut off the end and eat it with a spoon. There's no mess, and it's delicious! — Marion K., Edwardsville, Pa.

Vitamins

Dear Readers: Want to boost your vitamin C and A intake? Yummy fruits like strawberries, grapefruit and, of course, oranges have lots of vitamin C. But here is an easy way to get your vitamin C and vitamin A daily: Eight ounces of plain old tomato juice (41 calories) has about 70 percent of the daily recommend amount of vitamin C and 22 percent of vitamin A, based on a 2,000-calorie daily diet. — Heloise

Wine grape harvest shapes up as big one

Associated Press

NEWBERG, Ore. — Sam Tannahill doesn't want to jinx the 2014 Oregon wine grape harvest, but here goes: It's shaping up to be "epic."

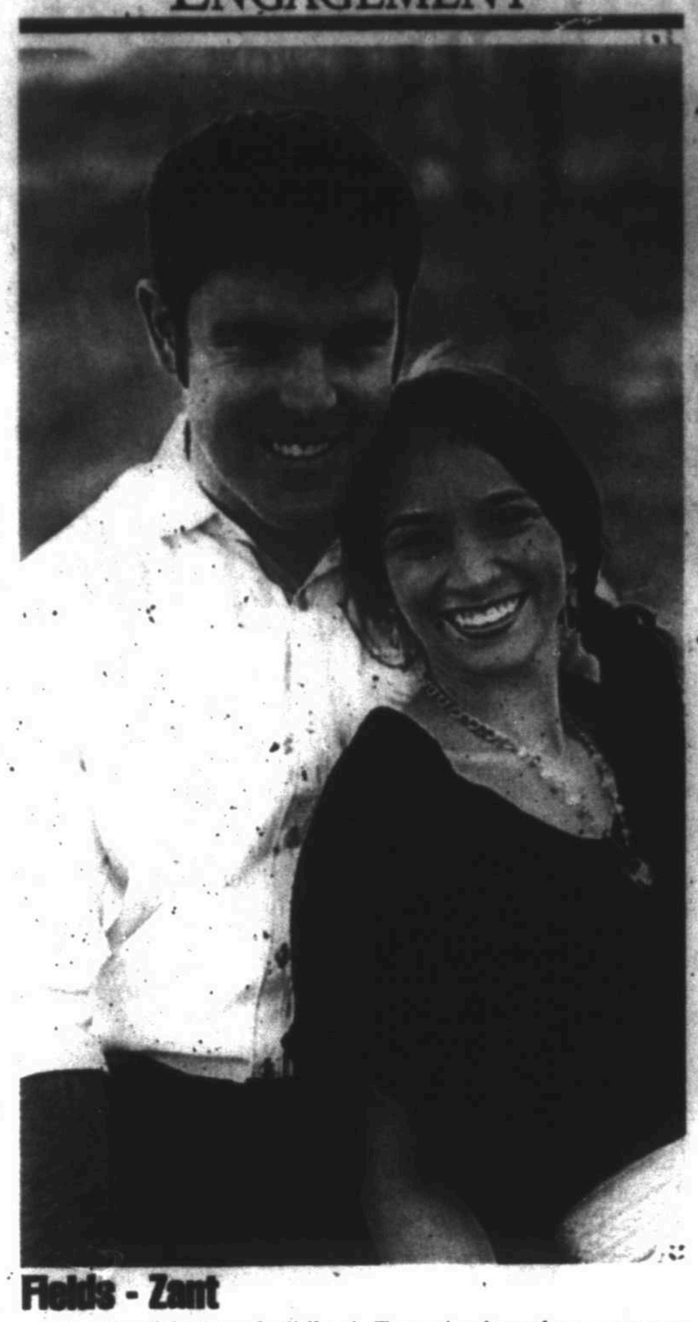

"An amazing year," said Tannahill, viticulture director and a co-founder of A to Z Wineworks in Yamhill County. Perfectly warm summer temperatures, no bad weather "curveballs" like last year's monsoon and very little disease pressure, he said.

As a result, the state's growing regions, from Mosier in the Columbia River Gorge to Medford in Southern Oregon, are producing big yields of "beautiful, beautiful grapes," Tannahill said. "The quality is off the charts."

School district temporarily removes 7 books

Associated Press

DALLAS — A Texas school district temporarily removed seven books from its approved book list for high school students after parents complained at a school board meeting about sex scenes and references to rape, abuse and abortion.

Highland Park Superintendent Dawson Orr said the books will be reviewed by committees of parents, teachers and students, a process that could take months.

"I made the decision — given the volume and the tenor and just the continual escalation of this issue — that we would pause, take the time to go ahead and create the reconsideration committees and do the work," Orr told The Dallas Morning News.

Teachers can choose from more than 200 books on the high school's approved book list, each reviewed by a committee of teachers and parents. They sometimes send permission slips for books with mature content. Parents who object to a book can request another option for their children and formally ask to have it removed from the list.

One parent who raised objections, Tavia Hunt, said she doesn't want her sophomore daughter or any students to feel uncomfortable in English class because of sex scenes, but said the books should be allowed in the library.

"This is not about banning books. No one is advocating that," Hunt said. "We want the kids to have access to the books in the library. The problem is having obscene literature mandatory in the classroom and for discussion."

One of the seven removed books is "The Glass Castle: A Memoir" by Jeannette Walls, about growing up in poverty with a father who spent his money on alcohol and a mother who became homeless.

Walls is scheduled to be the keynote speaker at the district's annual literary festival in February. She said she was heartbroken to learn her book was temporarily removed and that teenage readers have told her the book gave them courage to seek help.

"My book has ugly elements to it, but it's about hope and resilience, and I don't know why that wouldn't be an important message," she said. "Sometimes you have to walk through the muck to get to the message."

But she said that she respects parents who are trying to protect their children.

The other books that were removed are: "The Art of Racing in the Rain" by Garth Stein; "The Working Poor: Invisible in America" by David K. Shipler; "Siddhartha" by Hermann Hesse; "The Absolutely True Diary of a Part-Time Indian" by Sherman Alexie; "An Abundance of Katherines" by John Green; and "Song of Solomon" by Toni Morrison.

Rescue dog's adoption leads to children's books

Associated Press

KOKOMO, Ind. — Kristen Clason knew Daisy Ray was meant to be hers from the first time she saw the orange-haired dog pressed up against the bars of her pen at the Kokomo Humane Society.

"All these dogs, it's crazy, put on their game faces when you walk in," Clason told the Kokomo Tribune. "She was looking at me like, 'You're mine, you know it, get me out of here right now.'"

Clason was in eighth grade when she adopted Daisy, a Finnish-Spitz-Terrier mix. Now 23, Clason has recorded Daisy's story in a children's book published in August, "The Happiest Dog in the World."

"Daisy's story was just something that captivated my mom and I, just how dynamic of a dog she is," said Clason, who graduated from Kokomo High School in 2009 and then attended the University of Saint Francis before transferring to Indiana University in Bloomington.

She and her mother, Debbie Clason, a freelance writer, penned the book together, working through several drafts over about five years. They connected with Polish illustrator Magdalena Koscianska, who hand-painted the watercolor images for the book.

"The Happiest Dog in the World" became reality through Amazon's self-publishing platform CreateSpace and is the first in what will be a four-book series, The Adventures of Daisy Ray.

"To see it come to fruition is a very neat feeling, a very proud moment," said Clason, whose character in the book is named Kay.

"The Happiest Dog in the World" tells the story of Daisy Ray being adopted from the Kokomo Humane Society, but then she misses some of her dog friends from the shelter. There's a twist at the end that brings the book full circle, Clason said, adding that people will have to read it to find out the whole story.

The book is aimed at children ages 5 to 10 and includes a guide for what families should consider before adopting a pet. It was important to Clason that the book be educational, and a portion of the proceeds from book sales will be donated to the Kokomo Humane Society.

"We have to let people know that these shelter dogs are anything but secondhand," Clason said. "They're gems."

Mom of Columbine shooter to pen memoir

Associated Press

NEW YORK — The mother of Columbine High School shooter Dylan Klebold is planning a memoir in which she will confront the "indescribable grief and shame" she has lived with since the 1999 tragedy.

Crown Publishers told The Associated Press on Tuesday that it had acquired a book by Susan Klebold, saying she was compelled to share her story after the murders at Sandy Hook Elementary School in Newtown, Connecticut, and other schools. The book is currently untitled and does not have a release date. Klebold plans to donate any author profits to mental health research and charitable organizations.

Scorsese's latest is documentary about celebraated magazine

Associated Press

NEW YORK — As the New York Review of Books approached its 50th anniversary in 2013, editor Robert Silvers and his staff wondered if words were enough to honor one of the world's signature literary publications.

"Should we do anything at all, rumble along in our usual way, or should we make an occasion out of it?" the 87-year-old Silvers recalled during a recent interview at the Review's offices in Greenwich Village, bookcases unavoidably nearby. "We thought we should do something that was good for us and good for our readers. We thought — maybe a documentary."

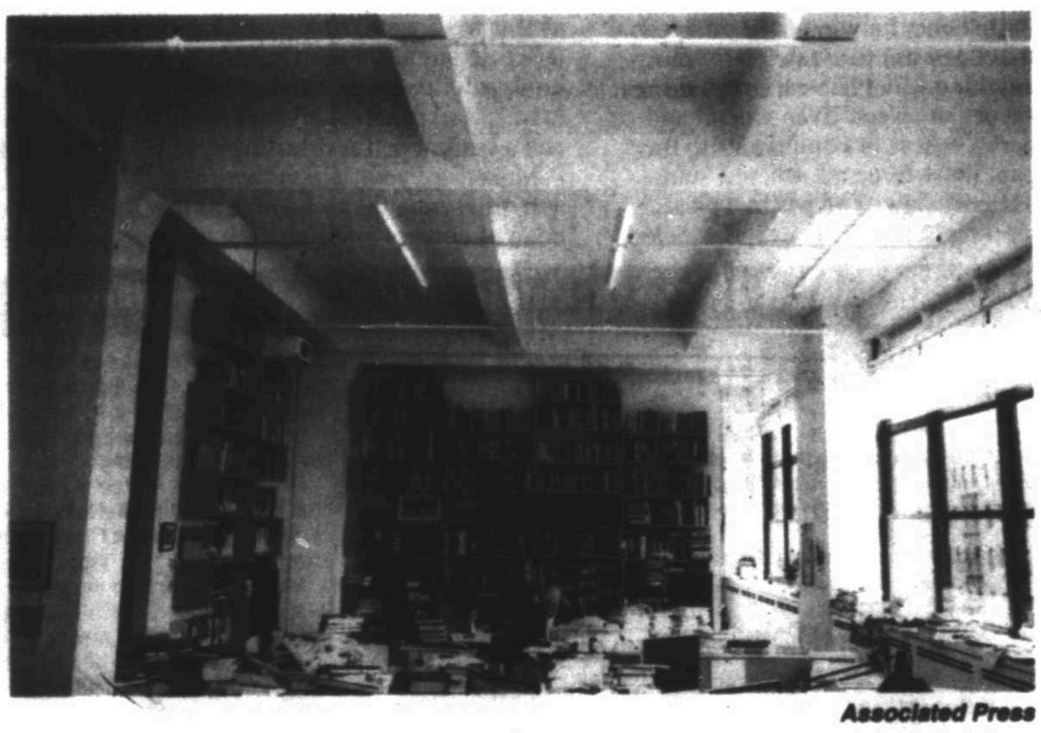

They agreed on the ideal director: Martin Scorsese.

"The 50 Year Argument," which airs Monday on HBO, mixes archival footage with contemporary interviews, scenes from the Review's office and highlights from an anniversary celebration at Town Hall in Manhattan in 2013. The film is co-directed by Scorsese and David Tedeschi, who edited Scorsese's documentaries on Bob Dylan and George Harrison.

Scorsese, interviewed by telephone, said he has been reading the Review for decades and has piles of old issues around his apartment to prove it. His affection dates back to the magazine's beginning, when he was a student at New York University and spotted the Review at a favorite newsstand.

"My family wasn't in the habit of reading — there were no books in our apartment — so this was a period of really challenging everything that I had thought and I had believed," said Scorsese, adding that the Review's broadsheet design stood out compared with such rival publications as The New Yorker and Dissent.

"The paper itself made you want to read it, the actual texture. It wasn't intimidating — until you read some of the articles."

Associated Press

This photo released by HBO shows editor Robert Silvers, in a scene from the documentary, "The Fifty Year Argument: An Inside Look at The New York Review of Books," which airs on HBO on Monday. The film mixes archival footage with contemporary interviews, scenes from the Review's office and highlights from an anniversary celebration at Town Hall in Manhattan in 2013. The film is co-directed by Martin Scorsese and David Tedeschi, who edited Scorsese's documentaries on Bob Dylan and George Harrison.

The documentary appealed to the director of "The Wolf of Wall Street" and "GoodFellas" in part because it's a New York story. The magazine was conceived late in 1962 during a Manhattan dinner conversation among four literary figures: Poet Robert Lowell and his wife, the critic Elizabeth Hardwick and Random House editor Jason Epstein and his wife, editor Barbara Epstein.

The city's newspapers were on strike and book publishers were anxious for venues where new releases could be reviewed. Hardwick had chastised the state of criticism in an essay that appeared in Harper's and the four friends agreed they had a chance to raise the standard. Hardwick's editor at Harper's was Robert Silvers, and Jason Epstein phoned and asked if he would come co-edit the new publication with Barbara Epstein (who died in 2006). Silvers spoke with Harper's editor in chief, Jack Fischer.

"I said, 'Well, here's a chance to start a new book review and I'm inclined to give it a try and I'll have to take a leave of absence," Silvers recalled. "And he said, 'Great, you'll get terrific experience and you'll be back in a month.'"

Launched in 1963, the Review has commissioned criticism by W.H. Auden and Edmund Wilson, published such political dissidents as Vaclav Havel and Andrei Sakharov and featured some of the most influential essays of the past half-century, including Susan Sontag on photography and Joan Didion on the Central Park jogger assault of 1989.

As the film's title suggests, the Review has also been a forum for the high-minded to bicker. Silvers and Scorsese had worried how to visualize literary history, but the Review helped inspire one of the great television confrontations. In the early 1970s, the magazine published a Gore Vidal essay in which he likened Norman Mailer's views on women to those of Charles Manson. Dick Cavett soon invited the two authors to appear on his show, where a seething Mailer not only referred to the Review, but also read aloud from a copy.

"Sometimes it was very bitter," said Silvers, still amazed — and proud — that the Review became a prop on network TV.

In its 51st year, the Review has adjusted well to the digital age, with worldwide circulation of around 150,000, up from 120,000 in the 1980s. Silvers himself remains youthfully curious and engaged, leaning forward with excitement, dark eyes brightening as he holds up the current issue, which features several essays on philosophy, along with pieces on everything from Ukraine to a biography of Coco Chanel.

Some material in the Review has originated elsewhere. While Scorsese was working on the documentary, Silvers read the transcript of a talk sponsored by the National Endowment for the Humanities.

It was the NEH's annual Jefferson Lecture, for which previous speakers have included Lionel Trilling, Toni Morrison and John Updike, whose 2008 address on American art was later printed in the Review.

Grammy-nominated singer, Sheila E. poses for a portrait in support of her new album "The Beat of My Own Drum" in New York on Sept. 2. Sheila E. said dating Prince and Santana made her realize she had a thing for guys with guitars.

Drummer Sheila E. discloses romances with Prince, Santana

Associated Press

Viva ...

Carlos Santana is set to perform today at the Wagner Noel Performing Arts Center.

NEW YORK — Days before the release of Sheila E.'s autobiography, news spread that she was once engaged to Prince. The bigger bombshell, however, didn't get nearly as much attention.

"Pretty much, I was engaged to Carlos Santana. That was huge and no one knew about that," said the 56-year-old drummer, who dated a married Santana when she was 18. "I thought people would be talking about that, and it's more about, 'She was engaged to Prince!' Really?"

Sheila E. said Santana, who was 36 at the time, was her first love, calling it "a wonderful romance."

"The Beat of My Own Drum," the musician's memoir released through Simon & Schuster's Atria Books earlier this month, features stories that range from working with Marvin Gaye, Ringo Starr and Lionel Richie to being raped at age 5.

Dating Prince and Santana made her realize she had a thing for guys with guitars, she said.

"And there were some that I did not put in the book," she said, laughing.

Could they appear in another book?

"I'll be able to share more stories on the next three to five books," she said.

The Grammy-nominated star said writing her first book — completed with co-writer Wendy Holden — has inspired her to write more, including children's books.

"When I first approached (Simon & Schuster), I said I wanted to do a bunch of books," she said.

Sheila E. first began writing "The Beat of My Own Drum" in her 30s, and said the process felt "devastating." She said coming back to the writing process two years ago gave her a fresh perspective.

When writing about being raped — a topic the performer has discussed over the years — she thought she could share her story without hardship.

"The beginning stages of it, because I had been talking about it for so long, it wasn't hard, but when I really had to dig in and really get detail about it, when I read it back, that's when it hit me, like, 'Wow. OK,"' she said. "I really have to go in deep to explain really what happened, and to explain it in a way that I think that I remember it at 5 years old, not how I remember it now."

Sheila E., whose hits include "The Glamorous Life" and "A Love Bizarre," released the album "ICON" last year. She says she wants to adapt her book into a movie.

'Calling Me Home' is story of lost love, will break reader's heart

Julie Kibler of Arlington is among the authors participating in Books in the Basin, Oct. 10-11 at various locations in Midland and Odessa.

Kibler will be at Odessa College on Oct. 11: a presentation at 10:30 a.m. at W 202 and a book signing at 11:30 a.m. at CC127 (cafeteria.)

For more information, visit www.booksinthebasin.com.

Once in a while after reading a book I have selected to review, I think the book should be on the New York Times Bestseller List. Then I realize that the book is not on the list because most people don't know about it.

"Calling Me Home" by Julie Kibler is one of those books. Kibler is a new author with remarkable literary talent. She quickly captivates the reader with timing and empathy for both protagonists — 89-year-old Isabelle McAllister and her friend and hair dresser, 30-something Dorrie Curtis.

Miss Isabelle has asked Dorrie to drop everything at her salon and drive her from their home in Arlington to a funeral near Cincinnati.

The trip takes on an eventful life of its own, and the lives of Miss Isabelle and Dorrie unfold with forbidden relationships and tragic consequences. The funeral they are about to attend gradually portends a gathering of the utmost importance.

You come to see life through Miss Isabelle's eyes and feel the loss that she feels, the loss of her true love, Robert Prewitt, back in the 1930s. You come to feel what Dorrie's life is like and what she must face and experience everyday.

This is a love story of an 89-year-old woman and a woman in her 30s: how deeply they understand each other, how respectful they are to each other, how sensitive they are to the other's feelings.

This is a story of lost love — a love that was ripped from Isabelle and Robert. The story breaks your heart, and before you get to the finale there is intrigue and surprise, a history of events told in present time that you would not have anticipated.

"Calling Me Home" is sensual, emotional and its arrow strikes deep in your heart. People should know about this book, and everyone should read it and yes, it should be on the bestseller list. It would be a very good selection for book clubs. In fact, at the very end of the book there are some suggested reading group questions that are guaranteed to generate discussion.

Kibler is a courageous and talented writer. There are times when you feel that Isabelle and Dorrie are so real you are with them, experiencing what they experience, feeling what they feel, seeing what they see.

Celebrate Banned Books Week with the 10 most-challenged books

By Carolyn Kellogg
McClatchy/Tribune

Every year kids go to school or the library and bring back books that make some parents raise their eyebrows. Such language! Boy wizards! Sexual situations! Underpants!

There are formal complaints lodged — more than you might expect in 2014. The American Library Association. keeps an annual tally, and rather than hide those books away, it brings their challenges out in the open.

This week is Banned Books Week, observed at libraries and bookstores nationwide. They celebrate books that long ago were the focus of legal battles over censorship, like "Lady Chatterley's Lover" by D.H. Lawrence, Allen Ginsberg's "Howl" and James Joyce's "Ulysses," as well as the most-banned and challenged book of the last year.

This year, Dav Pilkey makes the top 10, again, topping the list at No. 1. Never mind that his "Captain Underpants" series about two fourth-graders and their silly superhero has sold tens of millions of copies — it still makes parents and guardians crazy.

The list

10th most challenged: "Bone" (series) by Jeff Smith. Reasons: political viewpoint, racism, violence.

Ninth most challenged: "Bless Me, Ultima" by Rudolfo Anaya. Reasons: occult/Satanism, offensive language, religious viewpoint, sexually explicit.

Eighth most challenged: "The Perks of Being a Wallflower" by Stephen Chbosky. Reasons: drugs/alcohol/smoking, homosexuality, sexually explicit, unsuited to age group.

Seventh most challenged: "Looking for Alaska" by John Green. Reasons: drugs/alcohol/smoking, sexually explicit, unsuited to age group.

Sixth most challenged: "A Bad Boy Can Be Good for a Girl" by Tanya Lee Stone. Reasons: drugs/alcohol/smoking, nudity, offensive language, sexually explicit.

Fifth most challenged: "The Hunger Games" by Suzanne Collins. Reasons: religious viewpoint, unsuited to age group.

Fourth most challenged: "Fifty Shades of Grey" by E.L. James. Reasons: nudity, offensive language, religious viewpoint, sexually explicit, unsuited to age group.

Third most challenged: "The Absolutely True Story of a Part-Time Indian" by Sherman Alexie. Reasons: drugs/alcohol/smoking, racism, sexually explicit, unsuited for age group.

Second most challenged: "The Bluest Eye" by Toni Morrison. Reasons: offensive language, sexually explicit, unsuited to age group, violence.

Monuments Men" on the lawn are welcome to bring chairs, blankets, snacks and refreshments. This movie screening is just one of several events available for Midlanders wanting to learn more about writer Robert Edsel and his nonfiction books detailing art theft by the Nazis. The film is based on "The Monuments Men: Allied Heroes, Nazi Thieves, and the Greatest Treasure Hunt in History," which Edsel co-wrote with Bret Witter.

Edsel's writing and research delves into thefts of cultural objects in the 1930s and 1940s, and the Allied efforts to retrieve those objects. The film stars George Clooney, who also directed, Matt Damon, Bill Murray and Cate Blanchett. It follows the Allied group known as the Monuments, Fine Arts and Archives program. The group splits into pairs and tracks specific works of art through many parts of the European theatre of World War II. Edsel, who has written two other books on this topic — "Rescuing DaVinci" and "Saving Italy" — will be in Midland Oct. 23 for a lecture at Midland Center. His appearance is made possible by the FMH Foundation. For ticket information, contact the museum.

Wendy Earle is curator of collections and exhibitions at the Museum of the Southwest.

Documentary features ND oil boomtown's gritty side

Associated Press

WILLISTON, N.D. — When filmmaker Jesse Moss started hearing about the North Dakota oil boom that was creating overnight millionaires and drawing workers from around the country to a seemingly endless number of high-paying jobs, he imagined there was a darker side of the story.

Over the course of a year and a half, Moss followed a Lutheran pastor in Williston who had allowed down-and-out migrant workers to sleep in his church, its parking lot and eventually his home. Pastor Jay Reinke's decision to allow the workers — including registered sex offenders — to live at the church stoked tensions with a local community that had been an isolated, small farming town just a few years earlier.

The result of Moss' time spent bedding down in church hallways alongside the workers and following Reinke through North Dakota's frozen prairie was "The Overnighters," which won the Special Jury Award for Intuitive Filmmaking earlier this year at the Sundance Film Festival. The documentary opens on Oct. 10 in New York City and dates for screenings in other cities across the country, including Austin and San Francisco, are set through December.

More than 1,000 different people slept in the church over the two years it ran the housing program, with more staying in the parking lot. At a time when much of the country still felt the pains of the Great Recession, western North Dakota had more jobs than could be filled. But on the ground, many new arrivals found that hardships — worsened by a high cost of living — continued.

"The boomtown is a place of last resort for so many people," Moss said. "These are guys — and women, too — who are really holding on desperately to the bottom rung of the ladder. And when they slip from that position, there's nothing left."

One man in the film, Keith Graves, is a truck driver from California who in 1999 was convicted of a felony charge for lewd acts with a child younger than 14. After a local newspaper discovered sex offenders were living at Reinke's church, the pastor invited Graves to live at his home to shield the congregation from criticism.

"A sin or a crime, while it is real and a part of one's record, I would submit may not be the definition of one's life," Reinke said in the film, regarding his decision. "I'm not going to put my children at risk and I do not believe that I have."

Since the documentary, Graves has been arrested again. He was charged last month with human trafficking, gross sexual imposition and other alleged offenses. He's accused of running a prostitution ring out of area hotels and raping a woman he was recruiting multiple times.

The bidding:

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
3♠	5♣	6♠	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Ace of ♣

North's leap to slam was, perhaps, too bold. All would be well if South could bring it home.

West continued with the king of clubs at trick two. This excellent play prevented any possible trump finesse against his partner. South ruffed in dummy and cashed the ace of spades, getting the bad news there. He tried reducing his trump length to the same as East's by cashing the ace of hearts and ruffing a heart. He crossed to dummy with a diamond to the jack and ruffed a second heart, followed by a diamond to the queen for another heart ruff.

Declarer led his king of diamonds, overtaking with the ace. Had East followed, he would have been the victim of a classic trump coup — the lead in dummy with only trumps left and South sitting over him to capture his trumps. Alas, East ruffed the third diamond and the slam was defeated.

North, the perfect gentleman, said, "Nice try, partner," but he knew South had erred. Can you spot the mistake?

South should have cashed the ace of hearts and ruffed a heart before playing the ace of trumps. The timing would have been right to ruff two more hearts, establishing dummy's six of hearts. Now, a second diamond to dummy would be followed by leading the good heart. Should East ruff, South would overruff, draw trumps and cash the last diamond. If, instead, East discards, South sheds his last diamond and a magical three-card ending is reached.

Myriad masks at the museum

The Ellen Noel exhibits a vibrant collection in 'Spirit of the Mask'

By Rich Lopez
jrlopez@mrt.com

ODESSA — The Ellen Noel Museum proves that masks aren't just for Halloween with its new exhibition, "Spirit of the Mask."

Featuring an extensive collection by Carla Hanson of Terrace Shawnee, Kansas, the display showcases masks from around the world.

Separated into 12 categories that include Religious, Celebration, Initiation and Death, the exhibition spans two gallery spaces along with an educational element for area students.

"Spirit" consists of work stations for students and younger museum-goers to interact with the notion of both the history and the creation of masks.

The exhibition also marks the first for Doylene Land as the interim executive director, although hardly her first at the museum.

"I've been here for over six years as the curator but, yeah, I guess this is my first as director," she said.

Previous executive director, George Jacob, resigned recently to accept the position as president of the International Museum of Art & Science in McAllen.

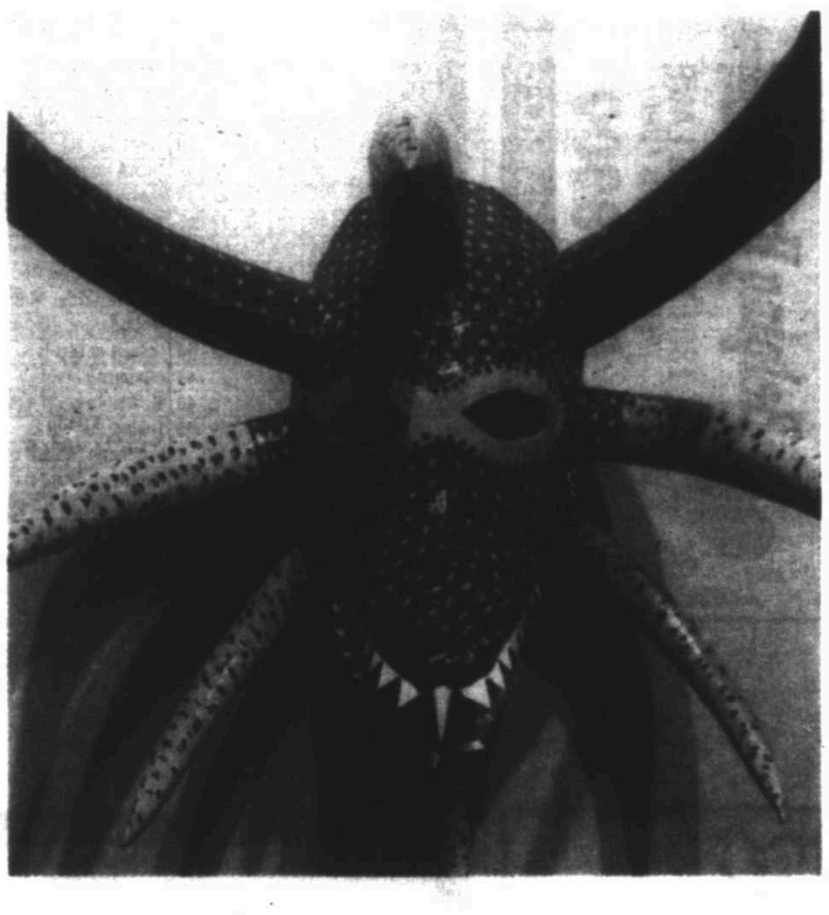

In "Spirit," Hanson's personal collection is a mixture of color and texture with masks that cover the entire body to merely the face.

The death mask of an actual man is haunting in its alabaster-esque fashion. The exhibition takes a turn with joyful masks like the ebullient Picasso mask of vibrant colors.

"I'm very pleased with the exhibition and the opening. Carla was here and she shared her stories about collecting," Land said.

The masks on display reflect either celebratory or ritual aspects from countries all around the world.

"Spirit of the Mask" runs through Jan. 12. Ellen Noel Art Museum, 4909 E. University Blvd. noelartmuseum.org.

Planetarium dome offers 'amazing' movie experience

WENDY EARLE
Curator at Museum Southwest

The Museum of the Southwest's Blakemore Planetarium recently was selected by the Reporter-Telegram as the "best movie theater that's not actually a movie theater." We were so thrilled to receive this special category pick, because watching movies is one of the best things to do at any museum. While ultimately our goal is to make connections across campus and educate people, sometimes we just want to have fun. Visitors will find a lot of opportunities to enjoy movies at the museum, especially in October.

Because of the full 360-degree Spitz-Sci dome, high-definition astronomical shows are an amazing experience at the Blakemore Planetarium. To make the most of this great resource, the Museum of the Southwest kicked off its successful summer program, SciFriday, last year to screen iconic and fun science fiction films. Last year's theme was space exploration and featured "Forbidden Planet," "Destination: Moon," "2001: A Space Odyssey" and "Sunshine."

This year we explored time travel, with the original "The Time Machine," "Looper" and "Back to the Future." There will be a final SciFriday on Friday when the museum will be free and open late for Open Campus Night, made possible by Mr. and Mrs. James Blakemore. As a special edition of the summer series, the 1997 film "Event Horizon" was selected. This thrilling film starring Laurence Fishburne and Sam Neill is a creepy and unsettling story about space exploration and what may be waiting in the depths of the galaxy. Every SciFriday is totally free, with a dome show beforehand, a great snack bar, trivia and games and beer and wine for those 21 and older.

For those who prefer fine art, capers or World War II movies, there will be a special screening of the 2014 film "The

Crowded roads, fatigued workers fuel triple-fatalities

By Lise Olsen
Hearst Newspapers

Editor's note: Part of a joint investigation by the Houston Chronicle and Houston Public Media News 88.7.

HOUSTON — On a cold January morning, Daniel Zambrano drove a company van with six co-workers from an isolated hydraulic fracturing site along Texas 72 in the Eagle Ford Shale, blasting the heat as he headed for a nearby hotel.

The close-knit crew, family men from all across Texas, had just completed a 24-hour shift at a natural gas site near the tiny town of Tilden. Those long hours were standard for their employer, Compass Well Services, and Zambrano, 26, had gotten little rest before he took the wheel, according to attorneys later hired by his pregnant widow.

He apparently dozed off as the van flew at 70 mph toward a school bus that had stopped to pick up a child, according to police reports and interviews with attorneys.

Steve Alaniz, a commuter, came upon the aftermath of the crash on Texas 72 — a rural oil patch road that has become one of Texas' deadliest highways. His headlights illuminated a line of debris that led to the ruined van and, beyond that, the bus with a big hole punched in its backside. The kids were unharmed — they'd been warned to avoid the back of the bus because of the dangerous road. But in the van, Alaniz found Zambrano and two others dead — one still strapped in by a seat belt. Four other workers were injured but survived.

"There are so many guys that are working all night and so many people getting up in the morning," Alaniz said. "And roads like 72 aren't big enough to handle that traffic."

All across Texas, the drilling and fracturing boom has boosted fatal accidents for oil and gas workers, and for those who share the urban and rural roads that serve as important oil patch connectors.

Triple tragedies — accidents that killed three or more people — have become common. The death toll from those kind of catastrophic crashes increased statewide from 72 in 2010 to 101 in 2012 and 148 last year, crash data compiled by the Houston Chronicle show. Eighty-one people had died in triple tragedies through mid-July of this year.

Nearly every interstate highway had reported a share of accidents in which three or more people died — including Interstate 10 and I-45 in Houston. None had more than I-20. The interstate serves Midland, Odessa and other boom towns of the Permian Basin, traverses the Barnett Shale, and crosses Fort Worth and Dallas before reaching East Texas. I-20 itself has had 13 triple fatalities since 2010. That's twice the number recorded in that same period along I-10, a much longer highway that traverses the state from east to west.

Smaller highways have seen more triple tragedies, too, such as Texas 72, which is only 111 miles long and serves oil boom towns like Three Rivers and Tilden but crosses no major cities. It has seen 21 fatal accidents since 2011 — four involving triple or quadruple deaths.

"It's called death row because we've had so many accidents," said Live Oak County Sheriff Larry Busby. "All the trucks go along it, and the road's narrow. ... It's dangerous out there."

Busby has been sheriff for decades — so long that county fathers named the street in front of the jail after him. He never had to worry about speeders or drunken drivers in the past. There are no bars in his dry county, but everyone started calling to complain after the oil and gas boom dumped all those big trucks onto rural roads.

"Since this happened, I put radars on all the cars," Busby said.

The increase in multiple fatality accidents is not the only troubling trend on Texas' highways. As road deaths have dropped steadily all across the United States for decades, they've rebounded in Texas since the oil drilling and fracturing boom began in 2008. Since then, Texas has led the nation in motor vehicle deaths, surpassing California, federal records show.

Statewide, it's impossible to determine how much of the increase in fatal crashes and triple fatalities from 2010-14 relates directly to the oil boom. Crash reports don't contain that kind of detail.

But transportation accidents are a major cause of workplace deaths in Texas, which led the nation in oil patch fatalities and in all workplace fatalities in 2012, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics. Nationwide, oil patch workers are 8.5 times more likely than other private employees to die in work-related transportation accidents, the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health found.

Transportation accidents killed about half of the 50 Texas oil patch workers killed last year, according to statistics released Thursday by the Texas Department of Insurance.

Texas Mutual Insurance, the state's largest workers' compensation carrier, has recorded a steady increase in the number of motor vehicle accident claims filed directly by oil and gas employers. The carrier's latest data show those employers have reported 24 fatal motor vehicle accidents so far in 2014 — three time as many as in 2009, according to data the Houston Chronicle and Houston Public Media obtained from Woody Hill, the company's vice president of safety services. Company officials confirm fatigue is frequently a factor.

The industry's usual two-week shifts of 12-hour days and long commutes contribute to well-documented dangers of driver fatigue, crash data show and experts say.

Clusters of triple fatalities have been cropped up on interstates and highways that cross the oil patch and around urban hubs, like Midland and Odessa, where many oil and gas workers live or scramble to find hotels.

Three workers died on March 26, 2013, on a highway that rings Odessa in another accident involving workers commuting together to a hotel in a crowded company van after a long night's work, accident records show.

Killed were Fernando Portillo, a father of three from Humble; Michael Vonesh Jr., who left behind a wife in Pearland; and Isaias Ponce Jr., an Oklahoman who was living with his wife in San Antonio at the time of the crash.

In that case, the driver had, like the men who died, logged 190 hours and worked 14 days straight prior to the accident, according to Houston attorney Alexander Gurevich, who represents the dead workers' families in a related lawsuit. Gurevich argues that a driver's impairment from fatigue is akin to "driving while intoxicated."

State police reports confirm the accident was blamed on the fracturing crew driver's error, but an attorney for the workers' employer denies that fatigue contributed to the crash.

In a statement, Scott Jones, of Brock Person Guerra Reyna, who represents the workers' employer, Sanjel USA, in a related civil lawsuit said the company "has a strong commitment to safety ... related to driving."

Although Sanjel did not want to comment about ongoing litigation, Jones said, "in light of the fact that the plaintiff's lawyer made some comments regarding fatigue, I think it's important to know that Sanjel's driver has recently testified under oath specifically that he was not fatigued

Petrochemical vehicles abound on State Highway 72 near an RV park where three members of a hydraulic fracturing crew died when their van collided with a school bus. That is one of four accidents on State Highway 72 in which three or more people were injured. The 111-mile-long highway has become one of the state's most deadly roads during the oil boom.

For six decades, highway deaths have dropped steadily all across the United States — as more Americans buckled up, tucked small children into safety seats and acquired passenger cars equipped with air bags. But in Texas all motor vehicle fatalities — and accidents involving commercial trucks — have turned back upward since the state's oil drilling and fracturing boom began in 2008. Page 3F

Insiders Buying and Selling

Q Should I care about insiders buying or selling shares in a stock I own? — V.F., Dunedin, Florida

A It depends. If the CEO of Keyboard Mart (ticker: QWERTY) sells lots of shares, you might worry that the company's in trouble. But executives these days often get much of their compensation in the form of stock. The CEO might just be selling some shares to generate cash to buy a house or pay a college bill. It is worth worrying about, though, if many insiders are selling many shares all at once.

Meanwhile, if insiders are buying many shares, that's a promising sign. They know the company well and would presumably buy only if they expect the shares to rise.

Q When a company has its initial public offering (IPO), how do the people who have owned the company keep their ownership? — K.W., Longmont, Colorado

A When a company "goes public" with an IPO, it usually sells only part of itself. Here's a simplified example:

Imagine that the owner of Farm Dogs Inc. (ticker: BINGO) decides to sell 25 percent of it to the public via an IPO, to raise money to fuel growth. She currently owns all of the 100 million shares of the company and will sell 25 million of them to the public, so there will still be 100 million shares after the offering. Investment bankers help her determine the valuation of the company and decide to price the offering at $20 per share. This means her company will collect about $500 million (25 million times $20) when the shares are sold (less the investment bank's fee of around 7 percent). She will retain ownership of 75 percent of the firm, or 75 million shares.

Can You Afford to Wait?

If you're putting off saving and investing for retirement, you may really regret it in the future. Here's why:

Imagine that you begin saving at age 45 and invest $5,000 per year for 20 years, earning the market's historical average return of about 10 percent per year, with 3 percent annual inflation. You'll end up with $286,375 before inflation and $204,977 after inflation.

If you don't begin saving and investing until age 55, you'll have to sock away $18,000 a year — or delay your retirement until age 75 — just to end up with the same amount of money! (And by the way, retiring with just $200,000 won't be enough for many people.)

Here's the power of just one year: In the example above, starting at age 45 gets you $204,977 after inflation. But if you started one year earlier and gave your money just one more year to grow, you'd end up with $224,326 after inflation — $19,349 more!

Meanwhile, if you invest $5,000 annually beginning at age 25, in 40 years you'll end up with nearly $1 million after inflation. An investor who starts at age 45 will have to sock away more than $24,000 per year for that.

If you're not young anymore and you're kicking yourself right now, stop it. After all, you may be able to save more than $5,000 per year. One rule of thumb is to save and invest 10 percent of your income, but higher percentages are better for many.

Even if you start investing at age 50, you still have time to accumulate wealth. If you can invest $10,000 per year for 20 years, earning 10 percent, you'll end up with more than $400,000 after inflation. Not too shabby, eh?

On the other hand, remember that a 10 percent return isn't guaranteed — you might average more, or less — which is all the more reason to sock away money aggressively. Calculators at fool.com/calcs/calculators.htm and elsewhere can help you determine how much you'll need to accumulate to retire securely.

My Dumbest Investment

Out of a Helicopter

I bought into one of Canada's biggest frauds. I heard on the radio that there were accusations of large-scale fraud and a cover-up at Bre-X, and that a key individual had mysteriously fallen out of a helicopter, apparently committing suicide. The whole thing sounded too ridiculous to be true. I immediately bought some stock, figuring that the story was either a fabrication or an outlandish rumor. I was wrong, and still have the stock listed among my assets as a reminder to be more careful with my hard-earned money. — D.V., Montreal, Canada

The Fool Responds: The Bre-X story that was big news in 1997 was indeed a wild one, with billions of Canadian dollars lost. (It's not over yet, either, as the presumed-dead geologist whose supposed body was badly decomposed when it was found several days later has been rumored to still be alive.)

The story is a cautionary tale about how volatile penny stocks can be, as they can be easily manipulated and have wiped out many naive investors. Many penny stocks are those of mining companies, without profitable track records but hopes of striking gold.

Some Magic for Your Portfolio

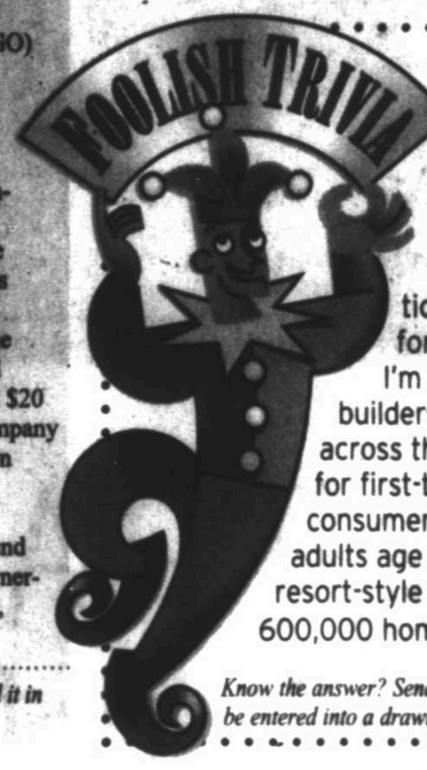

Walt Disney (NYSE: DIS) stock, up 17 percent year to date, isn't the bargain it was in January, but it's likely to keep growing for long-term investors.

Disney has a knack for making the most of big content acquisitions. It spent $7.4 billion on Pixar in 2006 and has reaped more than $5 billion in global ticket sales from it so far. Marvel cost $4.6 billion in 2009 and has generated $9.6 billion in worldwide box office sales so far.

These box office figures don't include DVD and Blu-ray sales. Nor do they account for licensed T-shirts, pajamas, action figures or lunch boxes. Moreover, Disney keeps integrating Pixar and Marvel characters, and their stories, into cruise experiences and theme park rides. Disney's $4 billion Lucasfilm buyout will also pay huge dividends, as Disney unfolds the epic "Star Wars" universe and the Indiana Jones saga.

Meanwhile, Disney is still capable of putting out a homegrown hit every so often, such as "Frozen," which has generated nearly $1.3 billion in ticket sales worldwide, making it the fifth-highest-grossing movie of all time and the top dog in full-length animation.

Then there are its parks and resorts, which generate a third of its revenue, and its media networks (think ABC and ESPN), generating 44 percent. Disney offers a lot to like. (The Motley Fool owns shares of Disney and has recommended it.)

Wal-Mart's mobile checking account nixes overdraft fees

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Wal-Mart is the latest company to get rid of fees that traditional banks charge customers who don't have enough money in their accounts to cover purchases.

The world's largest retailer said Wednesday that it teamed up with Green Dot Corp., a company known for its reloadable prepaid cards, to bring mobile checking accounts to its shoppers. The accounts won't charge overdraft and bounced-check fees.

It's the latest attempt to offer banking services that cater to cash-strapped Americans who are still struggling in the economic recovery. Bank of America and Citibank both launched checking accounts this year that don't charge overdraft fees.

The moves come as overdraft fees, which occur when a customer doesn't have enough cash in their account to cover a purchase, have come under increasing scrutiny by regulators in the past few years.

In 2010, banks were required to get written approval from customers to provide overdraft protection, which allow balances to go below zero. But those that opt for overdraft coverage are still paying high fees: Some customers at large banks can pay, on average, almost $260 a year in overdraft fees, according to the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau.

Wal-Mart and Green Dot's account, called GoBank, has a monthly fee of $8.95. But that can be waived if a direct deposit of $500 is made each month.

To open an account, customers need to go to a Wal-Mart store and pay $2.95 for a starter kit. They must also own a smartphone, since most of the banking is done through the app. The kit comes with a MasterCard debit card that can be used to make purchases or to take out money, for no fee, at more than 42,000 ATMs around the country. Using an ATM outside the network will result in a $2.50 charge. There's also a 3 percent fee for money taken out at an ATM outside of the country.

at the time of the accident."

On that cold morning in January, when Daniel Zambrano pulled away from the hydraulic fracturing site in the Eagle Ford with his heater blasting, police records show that he and all six of his co-workers had worked about 24 hours in a scheduled shift, nearly twice a typical oilfield shift.

A related lawsuit alleges that their employer, Compass Well Services, didn't provide designated drivers or on-site resting areas, according to a lawsuit pending on the triple fatality.

Providing a rested designated driver would have saved lives and cost little, argue Benton Ross and Doug Monsour, the Longview-based attorneys who represent Zambrano's family in related litigation. Zambrano left behind a toddler and his wife, Whitney, was five months pregnant with their second child. Martin Aguirre and his wife and five children lived in Brownsville. Jose "Joe" Rios' widow, Cindy, and son live in San Antonio.

Cindy Rios returned to erect a hand-lettered cross at the accident site and her husband's name remains visible: JOE RIOS, DAD.

Rios' life had been closely intertwined with his fracturing crew friends. He spent most of his last 24 hours in a noisy data van — working pumps, reading and coordinating incoming information.

His last minutes were spent with those same men inside a company van bound for a hotel they never reached. Three ended up in a funeral home; the others returned to the oil patch, Cindy Rios said.

That wasn't the first time members of fracturing crew working in the Eagle Ford for Compass Well Services had died on the road after finishing a shift of more than 20 hours, federal court records and related interviews show.

It was late on Jan. 13, 2012, when Billy Barrett Jr., 29, called his wife, Samantha, in Arkansas to tell her that he was unexpectedly coming home. He'd driven from a remote site to the company's bunkhouse in George West to sleep but found it full, he told her, according to a statement she provided to Andy Tindel and Stafford Davis, Tyler-based attorneys representing her in a federal lawsuit.

He set out for home around midnight with fracturing crew friends Shawn Nichols, 38, and Dakota Sabin, 33.

They piled into Nichols' Red GMC Sierra 2500 pickup, intending to drive 10 hours home to Arkansas. A supervisor learned of their plan and followed along in his truck, federal court records show.

They made it about 25 miles before the driver allegedly fell asleep on I-37, according to the federal lawsuit and a police report. The pickup flew off the road at a curve, struck a sign and rolled before landing in a ditch. Barrett and Sabin were both killed.

Small businesses help workers buy health plans

Associated Press

NEW YORK — When Monty Hagler learned his employee insurance premiums could rise as much as 38 percent, the small business owner decided he couldn't afford coverage that complies with the health care overhaul.

He considered a variety of plans from different carriers, but they were too expensive or bare-bones.

"Unless we dramatically changed our plan and went with the most basic plan, I said, 'this is not sustainable,'" says Hagler, owner of RLF Communications, a Greensboro, North Carolina-based marketing company.

So Hagler told his 12 staffers he would give them money starting in May to buy their own insurance, coverage likely to be better than what he could offer. He joined a growing number of small business owners who are forgoing coverage and paying staffers more to compensate for the lost benefits. Health insurer Wellpoint said last month its roster of small businesses has shrunk by 12 percent so far this year. Nearly 3 percent of 1,600 small businesses surveyed by the Society for Human Resource Management plan to give employees subsidies next year so they can buy their own coverage on private insurance exchanges.

Insurance brokers are getting more inquiries about individual coverage, a sign to them that many people are losing coverage at work. The brokerage HealthMarkets Inc. has had a 40 percent pickup in applications for individual insurance since the open enrollment period for insurance ended March 31. Spring and summer are normally a slow period for policy purchases.

Fatal accidents spike during fracturing boom

By Lise Olsen
Hearst Newspapers

Editor's note: Part of a joint investigation by the Houston Chronicle and Houston Public Media News 88.7.

HOUSTON — Vilma Marenco called her husband after she finished the lunch shift at Papasito's restaurant on April 22, promising to return before he had to catch a flight to a job in New Orleans.

"Wait," she said. "Because I want to see you and kiss you before you leave."

Marenco was less than a mile from home in Houston when the driver of an oilfield hauling truck, without a motor carrier license or any insurance, ran a red light on Old Beaumont Highway. The tractor-trailer, laden with metal pipe, struck and crushed the driver's side of Marenco's 15-year-old Chevy Cavalier, police reports and photos show.

She died so near home that her husband heard the screech of tires and the crunch of metal from inside their two-story house, where he'd been waiting with his bags packed. But Guillermo Gomez must have called his wife's number 25 times that afternoon before a neighbor arrived to confirm what he'd feared: Vilma would never be home again.

For six decades, highway deaths have dropped steadily all across the United States — as more Americans buckled up, tucked small children into safety seats and acquired passenger cars equipped with air bags. But in Texas all motor vehicle fatalities — and accidents involving commercial trucks — have turned back upward since the state's oil drilling and fracturing boom began in 2008. In fact, consistently since then, Texas has led all states in motor vehicle deaths, surpassing California as the previous national leader, U.S. Department of Transportation records show.

Between 2009 and 2013, Texas traffic fatalities climbed 8 percent from 3,122 to 3,378 while fatalities in most other states continued to decline. Traffic deaths linked to commercial vehicle crashes in Texas have risen dramatically by 51 percent, from 352 in 2009 to 532 in 2013. The trend in deadly wrecks shows no signs of slowing in 2014, crash data indicates.

There's no way to tell from Texas traffic accident data just how many passenger cars or commercial vehicles that crashed can be linked directly to the state's oil and gas boom. But records show that fatal accidents increased more in the groups of counties that make up the Permian Basin and in those affected by the Barnett and Eagle Ford shale plays, where busy roads regularly fill with tractor-trailers, tanker trucks and commercial vans hauling water, workers and supplies to oil and natural gas well sites, as well as in urban counties that serve as burgeoning hubs for the oilfield industry.

Motor vehicle fatalities reported in the West Texas counties associated with the Permian Basin increased more than 50 percent from 2009-13. Deaths rose 11 percent in Eagle Ford counties, as well as in Barnett Shale counties, according to subtotals the Houston Chronicle computed and compared for each multicounty area from Texas Department of Transportation crash data.

In urban Midland County alone, traffic fatalities increased 47 percent from 30 to 44 deaths. Traffic deaths in Bexar County, which serves as both a medical and transport hub for the Eagle Ford, rose 24 percent from 2009-13, from 152 deaths to 188. In Harris County, recorded traffic deaths went from 341 to 368 — up 8 percent or about the same as the state average.

Each year, state troopers participating in a special troubleshooting program conducted by the Department of Public Safety called "Road Check" have found that 27 to 30 percent of Texas' commercial trucks shouldn't be operating at all because of potentially life-threatening safety problems such as defective brakes, bald tires, inoperable safety lights and unqualified, unfit or intoxicated drivers. Year after year, a higher percentage of Texas trucks fail to meet federal and state road safety standards than the U.S. average, inspection statistics gathered by the Houston Chronicle show.

The driver of the rig that sideswiped Vilma Marenco's Cavalier on Old Beaumont Highway on April 22, killing her almost instantly, was linked to an unlicensed Houston trucking company called R&F Quality Transportation that had failed a DPS safety audit in December 2013. Auditors targeted the company after troopers ticketed its drivers for a multitude of violations — including using unsafe vehicles and employing a driver who smoked pot on the job, records show. The company continued to deploy defective trucks and accumulate tickets even after flunking that audit.

After Marenco died, a trooper inspecting the tractor-trailer that crushed her Chevrolet found a dozen defects, including faulty lighting and brakes. Three of those problems were severe enough to render the truck unsafe for commercial service, the report shows.

Benny Agosto, a Houston attorney who represents Marenco's husband and her 10-year-old daughter, Lupita, said in the Marenco case, the "trucking company's behavior demonstrates a callous, willful and wanton disregard for the safety of Texans on our roads and highways. This behavior cannot be tolerated and must be stopped."

The state's rising motor vehicle death toll has drawn particular attention in formerly rural counties in the Eagle Ford and in the Permian Basin.

But fatalities related to commercial trucking accidents — and multiple fatalities with three or more victims — have noticeably increased, on roads that serve busy drill sites as well as on major highways — such as Interstate 20 — that traverse the entire state, even as oil and natural gas workers tend to crisscross the state on their way to and from the oil fields and hydraulic fracturing sites, accident data analyzed by the Houston Chronicle shows.

DPS public records show troopers have doubled the audits performed on trucking firms and have increased truck inspections since 2009. But DPS spokesman Tom Vinger refused multiple requests by the Houston Chronicle and by Houston Public Media to interview the head of the agency's Commercial Vehicle Enforcement service regarding the rise in crashes tied to the oil and gas boom.

Many Texas transportation companies offer extensive driver training programs and work hard to uphold safety standards. Inexpensive computer technology allows even small companies to track drivers' progress, prevent speeding, monitor sudden stops and enforce seatbelt use in real time, said Pete Sullivan, a trucking safety consultant for Advanced Analysis Associations who analyzes accidents involving commercial vehicles, including Marenco's.

But some firms scrimp or ignore safety to meet deadlines and customer demands, records related to recent accident investigations show.

John Esparza, president of Texas Trucking and a member of the Texas Freight Advisory committee for the Texas Department of Transportation, is part of a group advising state leaders on trucking safety that urged legislators in 2013 to pass a law designed to help prohibit firms with low safety ratings from staying in operation simply by changing their names. But other recommendations remain under study by TxDOT and others.

The agency has reduced speed on some heavily traveled oilfield roads and pushed legislators for funding to accelerate repairs on others. Spokeswoman Veronica Beyer said addressing increased traffic fatalities is a department priority.

In late August, a Harris County jury awarded an Atascosa County man and his daughter $6 million in damages, after finding that negligence by Houston-based Rig Runners Inc. and its driver caused a serious 2011 accident that nearly killed both as they rode together on a motorcycle on an Eagle Ford highway. Public records and a transcript of the truck driver's deposition indicate that he was a heavy drinker and methamphetamine user who'd lied about his drug use and was not drug-tested before being hired as one of the company's oilfield service drivers.

During the driver's 15-month career, he never properly inspected his truck for defects at the end of shifts, as required by law, according to trial testimony and the Harris County court documents.

Inspection records show the driver, Bryan Bell, had been previously cited in trucks with nonworking lighting and other vehicle defects by state police.

On the day of the accident, he either failed to notice or ignored that his rear turn signals did not work. When Bell pulled off a road shoulder and into the path of Roberto Gallegos' motorcycle to initiate a wide left turn, Gallegos had little time to respond, according to trial testimony.

The truck sideswiped Gallegos, mangling his leg and injuring his 9-year-old daughter, who was riding behind him. The collision sent him and his child flying into a ditch.

Alana Gallegos remembers lying there beside her father's still body. Her leg was broken. Her father couldn't move or speak. She feared he was dead.

But when she reached for his hand, he squeezed hers in return. They held on until a helicopter ambulance arrived 45 minutes later.

The Gallegos' League City attorney Scott Krist said he thinks their frightening case illustrates a bigger public safety problem.

"This state is currently inundated by this semi-tractor traffic and these folks are not paying the kind of safety and attention to these (inspection) records that they need to — It's a real danger, it's a real problem, and people are getting hurt on a regular basis. Something needs to be done to increase scrutiny of these trucks."

A large-framed image of truck driver Guadalupe Quintanilla and his beloved rig — shiny red and freshly waxed — sits on the mantel over the fireplace in a newly built brick home his wife and daughter now share on acreage they bought just outside Harlingen. Their home, ringed by golden hay fields, gleams at sunset. It's the place Quintanilla dreamed of building for years before he died in a preventable two-truck head-on collision on a lonely stretch of highway in Jim Hogg County in October 2010.

Rebecca Quintanilla, his wife of 28 years, remembers how carefully he greased and tended the tractor-trailer he owned and called "His Special Lady."

"He would not have gone out in a truck with bald tires," his daughter, Franny, said. "As far as I'm concerned, it's irresponsible."

Police found another driver — and defective tires — responsible for the crash that killed both men. The accident occurred after a driver for a now defunct company called Turn Around Trucking blew a tire while driving a rig loaded with 80,000 pounds of flammable oil-based mud. He lost control and crossed in front of Quintanilla.

The collision caused a massive explosion that produced a black cloud visible by officials patrolling the U.S.-Mexico border 50 miles away. Both drivers were ejected and their bodies burned. It took a week to identify them using DNA for burial, according to accident reports and related court records. Records show Turn Around Trucking had a terrible safety record prior to the 2010 crash. In 2010-11, dozens of inspections uncovered serious safety problems in its fleet of 15 trucks, including bad brakes and blown out tires. Still, the company had managed, barely, to pass state audits.

After the accident, Ernesto Gutierrez, a former trucker who owned the company until April 2011, admitted his drivers received almost no training. Although his firm produced a safety manual after the accident, Gutierrez later disclosed that it had been photocopied from a Houston-based company's website and had his own firm's name slapped on the cover, according to a copy of a videotaped statement provided by attorney Jorge Herrera of San Antonio, who represents the Quintanillas.

Gutierrez had never read the "manual," which referred to additional "books and VCR tapes" available from another company's Houston "corporate headquarters," according to that statement. Turn Around Trucking was based in Premont, population 3,000. Though a company with a similar name still exists, it is unrelated to the 2010 operation, according to state records and a company official.

At a cemetery just a few minutes away from the Quintanilla home, another image of Quintanilla and his rig is etched in a headstone. His widow, Rebecca, says she still talks to him every day. It's impossible for her to accept that he might still be alive if another trucking firm had spent a little more on tires. "We still cry. We still laugh," she says. "To me he's irreplaceable."

In Houston, Gomez and his 10-year-old daughter, Lupita, regularly drive by the intersection where Vilma Marenco was killed by a driver in an unsafe, unlicensed truck with no insurance. The site is blocks from Lupita's elementary school, where her mother arrived each afternoon to pick her up. After the funeral, Guillermo Gomez removed all of his wife's clothing, her favorite knickknacks and nearly every photo of her from their house. It hurt too much to see them. He keeps a single portrait, inside the front door where he waited on the afternoon she was killed.

Beside her image, a candle burns.

"This has left a great emptiness — for my daughter and me," Gomez said. "The only thing I am asking for is a thorough investigation of all of this — and that there be justice."

Frances Quintanilla mourns the death of her father, Guadalupe Quintanilla, who was killed in a head-on collision caused by commercial driver who was dispatched to the Eagle Ford in a truck with bald tires on May 28 in Harlingen. The two drivers lost their lives in the accident when the commercial driver lost control of his truck. The Quintanilla family filed a wrongful death lawsuit against Turn Around Trucking, who copied and pasted a safety manual from a Houston based hauling company and handed it to drivers.

Producers see deeper discounts for WTI Midland

Continued production increases could extend widening price differentials

By Mella McEwen
mmcewen@mrt.com

Permian Basin producers are becoming a victim of their own recent success.

A report issued this past week by the Energy Information Administration said the rise of production from the Permian Basin has outpaced takeaway infrastructure, causing the price differential between West Texas Intermediate at Midland to fall below West Texas Intermediate Cushing.

EIA Analyst T. Mason Hamilton said the differential, which had been on the increase for almost a year, widened substantially recently due to refinery outages in the region. These outages caused the WTI price at Midland to fall $17.50 per barrel below the price at Cushing, a figure that beat the previous record set in late 2012.

The agency's latest Drilling Productivity Report estimates Permian Basin oil production in August would come to almost 1.7 million barrels per day, up 300,000 barrels a day from a year ago. Hamilton noted that, with increased production volumes, a drop in refinery demand can put downward pressure on prices.

Hamilton reported that the differential should narrow as infrastructure projects that will allow more crude to flow from the Permian to the Gulf Coast come online soon. He cited Magellan's 300,000 barrel a day BridgeTex Pipeline, which is expected to move crude from West Texas to refineries in Houston, Texas City and Galveston soon. Early next year, the Cactus Pipeline, with an expected capacity of 200,000 barrels a day, will move West Texas production south to connect with an expanded Eagle Ford Pipeline that will move crude to Corpus Christi.

The price differential issue "is of great concern," said Paul Kenworthy, president of Kenworthy Oil.

His crude purchaser recently sent him a monthly notice with its WTI Midland and WTI Sour discounts, he said. The Midland discount grew from $10 a barrel in August to an expected $12 in September.

"We got $85 a barrel because, you take the posted price minus the $10 discount minus transportation fees of $2 or $2.50 for oil trucks to transport the crude. So you subtract $12.50 from the posted price The estimated discount for September is up to $12, which means Permian Basin producers are now getting in the low $80s," he said.

It is a lesson in Oilfield Economics 101, he said: Less money for the oil means less money for the operator and less money to drill.

He recalled that at one point a couple of years ago, the differential was as high as $20 a barrel "due to all the oil going

BHP Billiton focuses on Delaware Basin in Reeves

By Mella McEwen
mmcewen@mrt.com

Australian natural resources conglomerate BHP Billiton last month underscored its Permian Basin presence with a $650,000 donation to the West Texas Food Bank.

Robert Manelis, the company's general manager of Permian operations, said the donation was not necessarily an announcement of BHP's presence but emphasized its commitment to the communities where its employees work and live.

Because the company's operations are focused on the Delaware Basin, particularly Reeves County, BHP has also made donations in Reeves County, including Pecos and Toyah, he said.

BHP arrived in the Permian Basin "predominantly through our acquisition of Petrohawk Energy in August 2011," Manelis said.

Petrohawk had been acquiring Permian Basin acreage beginning in 2010, and when BHP acquired the company, "it came with 400,000 acres spread across the Midland and Delaware Basins," he said.

Following the acquisition, BHP conducted a comprehensive appraisal program of its new holdings and decided to focus on the northern Delaware Basin, specifically north Reeves County. That area is seen as a core area that meets the company's long-term criteria, Manelis said.

As a result, the company divested its south Midland Basin acreage in April and is selling another package southeast of Pecos.

Manelis said BHP is actively acquiring acreage in its core area and has already expanded its holdings by 25 percent to 74,000 acres. To date, 70 wells have been drilled, both to appraise the acreage and to hold acreage by production.

"We will move to the development phase by the end of our fiscal year, which will be the second quarter of 2015," Manelis said.

BHP is currently operating five rigs in Reeves County, adding a sixth by the end of October. Within three years, he said BHP will be operating 14 or 15 rigs in the area with a goal of producing 100,000 barrels of oil equivalent a day.

All wells being drilled are horizontal, with some having mile-long laterals and in some cases, where the acreage allows, 7,500 foot laterals.

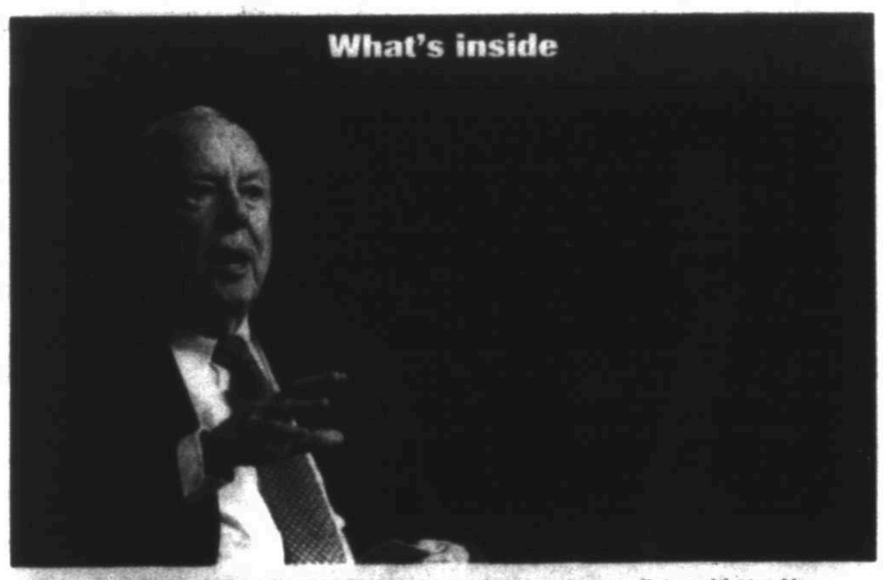

BHP will be implementing pad drilling, Manelis said. He explained that all the company's wells have been designed so they can be integrated into a pad design at a later date.

Manelis said BHP sees tremendous opportunity in the Permian Basin, saying it has "a lot of running room" with multiple horizons to develop.

"The Permian Basin will ultimately outpace the Bakken and Eagle Ford over time," he said. "We expect the Permian Basin to be among our most prolific and valuable business opportunities."

Natural gas prices aren't going to surge any time soon, panelists said at a Houston forum Tuesday, which could be good news for consumers adopting the fuel source as an alternative to gasoline and diesel.

to Cushing couldn't get from Cushing to refineries, particularly Gulf Coast refineries."

Kenworthy said the situation was eased, in part by additional capacity coming online. Longhorn Pipelines' reversal of its 225,000 barrel a day pipeline and the expansion of Sunoco Logistics Partners' Permian Express pipelines while other portions of Sunoco's pipeline system also came online last year. In addition, moving crude by rail also increased.

He estimated that refineries along the Gulf Coast have a capacity of 9 million barrels a day.

"The problem is all the oil from the Permian Basin, the Eagle Ford, the Bakken, all this new production is West Texas Intermediate and only a portion of those refineries are tooled to refine West Texas Intermediate."

Domestically produced light crudes have backed out light crudes from Nigeria and other countries, but only about 400,000 barrels a day, he said.

"Here's the bottom line: All this new oil, this West Texas Intermediate, is light crude. The refining capacity on the Gulf Coast is limited. So despite all the cheering about increased production, it's creating a glut on the Gulf Coast. Which gets us into exportation of crude."

It is a serious issue, "which is why you're seeing more and more companies advocating for exports, to export excess WTI to European refineries and refineries elsewhere that can process light crude," Kenworthy said.

And for the first time in his memory, he said the discount for West Texas Sour was less than for WTI.

There is nothing new about the differential, he said, "but it has just hit. The differential was just $2 in January, but it has jumped to $12 in a matter of months."

With August revenue checks being sent out, he said the higher discounts will be hitting pocketbooks.

"If your oil is going to the Gulf Coast, you're getting big discounts. Some of these projects are expensive projects, $10 to $12 million-heavily staged horizontal wells that may not be economic to drill."

That leads to Oilfield Economics 102, Kenworthy said: If a project doesn't make a profit, it won't get drilled.

The increase in domestic production has to be absorbed by domestic refineries, Kenworthy said. "The U.S. has its own supply and demand factors, even though oil is a global commodity."

BHP

From 1G

He added that it will be a complementary area to BHP's operations in the Bakken and Eagle Ford, liquids-rich regions that are the company's focus, though the company will maintain its dry natural gas operations.

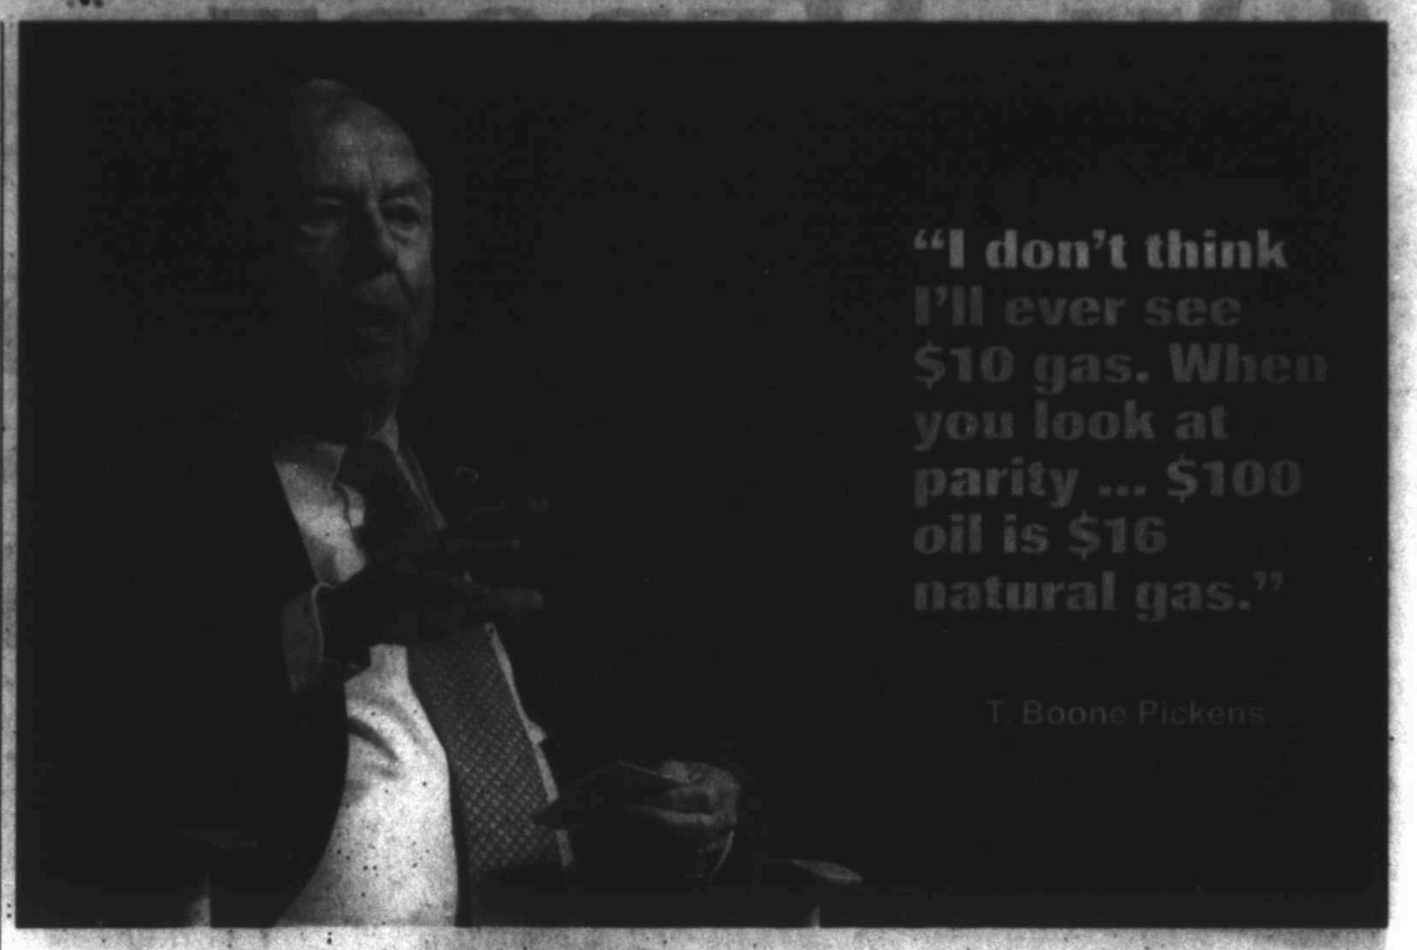

BHP has opened an office in Odessa and is in the process of acquiring land in Pecos to build an office, something Manelis said should be done in the next year.

Between its Houston and West Texas operations, BHP has 120 employees, with about 60 in Houston and the remaining 60 split between Odessa and Pecos. Add in other services such as drilling, pipelines, completions and safety, Manelis said the number rises to 200, which he expects to grow over time.

Manelis said BHP's charter values are sustainability, integrity, respect, performance, simplicity and accountability and that part of that charter is building sustainability in the communities where it operates.

The West Texas Food Bank and its needs were identified as part those values. But before that, the company had also contributed to Pecos' DARE program, the Toyah Fire Department and contributed to area college scholarship programs.

Such programs are identified through the company's community reference groups, including one in Pecos that is comprised of local business and civic leaders.

Don't expect high natural gas prices any time soon, panel says

By Ryan Holeywell
Houston Chronicle

HOUSTON — Natural gas prices aren't going to surge any time soon, panelists said at a Houston forum Tuesday, which could be good news for consumers adopting the fuel source as an alternative to gasoline and diesel — but not necessarily welcome news for producers.

"2015 is going to be bad for gas," said Dan Pickering, co-president of the energy investment firm Tudor, Pickering Holt and Co., at the forum hosted by the law firm Winston & Strawn.

Since the middle of 2010, the spot price for domestic natural gas generally has remained under $5 per million British thermal units, except for a spike during unusually cold weather earlier this year.

That's not likely to change, Pickering said.

T. Boone Pickens — the billionaire Dallas energy financier who has become a vocal advocate for natural gas as a motor fuel — agreed, saying he doesn't expect natural gas to hit significantly higher price levels in his lifetime.

"I don't think I'll ever see $10 gas," said Pickens, who is 86. "When you look at parity ... $100 oil is $16 natural gas. Natural gas is a cleaner fuel than oil." In other words, he said — hammering home a familiar message — natural gas is a clear winner.

The panel, which also featured former Houston Mayor Bill White, a deputy energy secretary in President Bill Clinton's administration, weighed in on policy questions as well.

Topics included the future of the proposed Keystone XL Pipeline linking Canadian oil sands with the United States. It still awaits key federal approvals after years of debate among industry, labor and environmental interests.

White said he supports the Keystone XL but also noted that despite the political hurdles facing that project, the American pipeline sector overall is booming.

"We've seen more pipeline construction in the U.S. over the last seven years than in the history of the history of the United States," White said.

"I'm not saying this to minimize the significance of Keystone or anything," White said, "but by historical standards, we're moving pretty fast on midstream."

Pickering said he doesn't expect the boom in production from shale to slow in the near future. "The next big thing is the current big thing," Pickering said. "We're 10 years into the shale story ... and it's probably a 20-year or 30-year thing."

Panelists also discussed the recent decline in crude oil prices. Brent crude, the international benchmark, ended Tuesday trading at $96.85 per barrel, and U.S. benchmark West Texas Intermediate finished at $91.56. Both were above $100 just a few months ago.

Earlier this month, Brent fell to its lowest price in two years, influenced by slowing demand and a flood of supplies. "We now have too much oil, and the price of oil has gone down $10 or $15 a barrel," Pickens said.

If price slip much further, he said, "they'll lay some rigs down (and) activity may slip here in the near future." But Pickens said he is optimistic for the longer-term prospects for U.S. production.

Pickens said he doesn't think hydraulic fracturing — the process of shooting water, sand and chemicals into oil and gas wells to simulate production — will face increased bans in the U.S., and he said he was "amused" by New York state's ongoing moratorium on the practice.

"Nobody's come up with a problem yet," Pickens said. Opponents say fracturing may pollute sub-surface water.

Pickering said the industry should do a better job responding to the criticism. "What we can't ignore is nobody really wants a well drilled near their house," Pickering said. "In certain areas, people would rather have a pristine location than money."

"I think the industry has a perception problem," he added. "It's going to be tough to get past that. If energy wasn't cheap, it would be really tough."

Pioneer Natural Resources closes Barnett Shale sale

Pioneer Natural Resources Company closed the previously announced sale of its Barnett Shale assets in North Texas to an undisclosed private party for cash proceeds of $155 million, subject to normal closing adjustments. The transaction has an effective date of August 1, 2014.

The financial and operating results related to Pioneer's Barnett Shale activities have been reflected as discontinued operations since the fourth quarter of 2013 when Pioneer announced that it planned to sell these assets. Net production from the Barnett Shale averaged approximately 10,300 barrels oil equivalent per day during the first six months of 2014, consisting of oil, natural gas liquids and gas.

Bill Barrett to sell some properties, pay debt

Bill Barrett Corp. announced several deals that will net it about $568 million in cash and help lower its debt.

The Denver-based oil and gas company said it is selling properties in the Powder River Basin, which is located in Montana and Wyoming, and the Piceance Basin in Colorado. Bill Barrett also said it will acquire some property in the Northeast Wattenberg area in Colorado as part of the deals. The company values the total transactions at $757 million.

Some of the properties Bill Barrett is selling will be bought by oil and gas company Vanguard Natural Resources LLC. Houston-based Vanguard said it plans to buy the Piceance Basin assets from Bill Barrett for $525 million. That deal is expected to close by Oct. 1.

Bill Barrett did not name the buyers of its other assets. It said the transactions will help the company cut its debt from $1.1 billion to about $450 million.

Cone Midstream Partners launches IPO

Cone Midstream Partners L.P., a master limited partnership formed by Consol Energy and Noble Energy, will offer 17.5 million common units for sale to the public.

The maximum price per unit will be $21.

The units will trade on the New York Stock Exchange under the symbol CNNX and represent a 29.4 percent limited partner interest in the company. Underwriters of the deal have an option to add another 2.6 million units if needed, which could increase the interest to as much as 33.8 percent.

Both Canonsburg, Pennsylvania-based Consol Energy and Houston's Noble Energy will own at most a 34.3 percent limited partner interest in Cone Midstream Partners, which could decrease if underwriters add to the offering.

Consol and Noble will also own a 2 percent general partner interest and distribution rights in Cone Midstream through a Marcellus Shale joint venture called Cone Gathering LLC.

Wells Fargo Securities is the lead underwriter for the initial public offering. The deal is being co-underwritten by a number of banks including Bank of America Merrill Lynch, Citigroup, J.P. Morgan, Baird, Barclays, Deutsche Bank Securities, Goldman Sachs & Co., Morgan Stanley, Credit Suisse and RBC Capital Markets.

Cone Midstream will own transportation and processing infrastructure for natural gas and condensate production in the Marcellus Shale in Pennsylvania and West Virginia. The company will focus on serving production from both Consol and Noble in the region.

Enbridge to shift $900 million pipeline segment to affiliate

Enbridge Inc. has announced a $900 million deal to shift its 66.7 percent interest in the U.S. segment of the Alberta Clipper Pipeline to its Houston-based affiliate Enbridge Energy Partners LP.

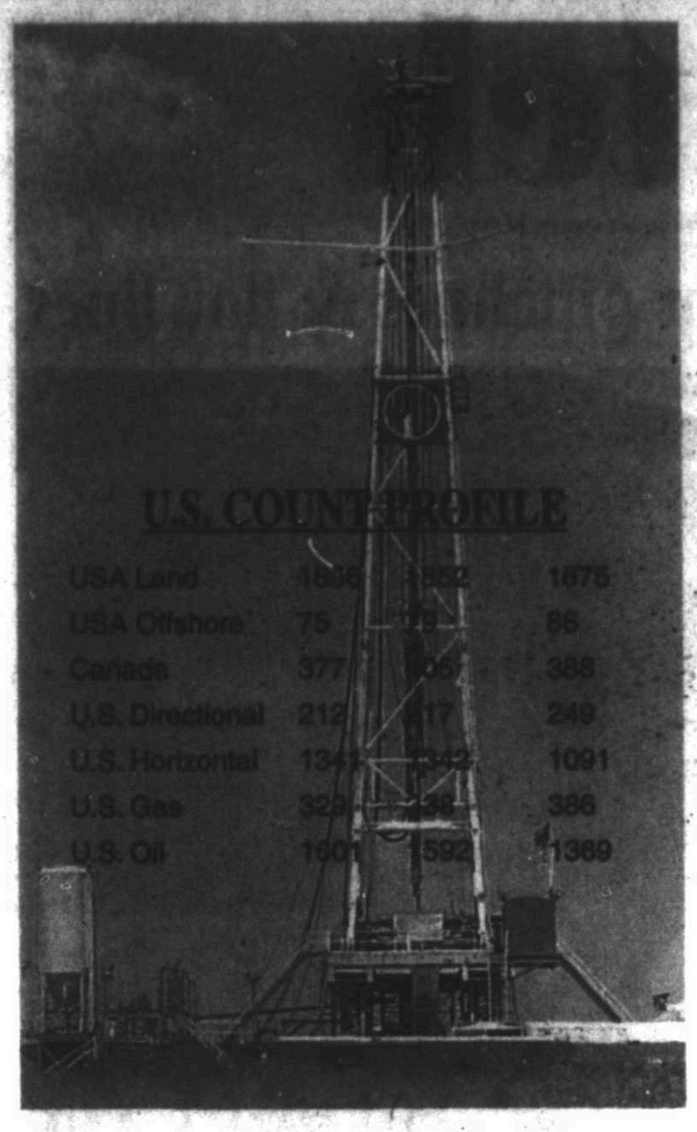

After the transfer is completed, Enbridge Energy Partners will wholly own the U.S. segment of the pipeline, which runs from the U.S. border near Neche, North Dakota to Superior, Wisconsin. The Alberta Clipper pipeline as a whole runs from Hardisty, Alberta to Superior, and carries Canadian crude to transportation hubs in the Midwest.

The U.S. segment of the line is a 36-inch-diameter, 325-mile-long pipe with a capacity of 450,000 barrels per day. The line is currently being expanded to a capacity of 800,000 barrels per day by adding increased horsepower to pumping stations.

Enbridge Energy Partners will pay U.S. $300 million in cash and $600 million in equity to Enbridge Inc. for the pipeline interest. The units — similar to shares of stock — issued to Enbridge Inc. would be entitled to the same distributions as the units held by the public. Enbridge Inc.'s interest in Enbridge Energy Partners will increase from 34 percent to about 36 percent, the company said in its release.

Enbridge Energy Partners expects the acquisition to increase its cash flow per unit by about 3 percent, the company said in a press release.

If the deal is approved by the company's board, the transfer could close by 2014.

Condensate fight over definition limits exports, EIA official says

By Robert Grattan
Houston Chronicle

HOUSTON — Condensate is coming, and a whole lot of it too, U.S. Energy Information Administration Director Michael Schaal told attendees at a Platts, McGraw Hill Financial pipeline conference last week.

A comprehensive definition about what exactly condensate is, however, might have to wait.

By one broad classification, lease condensate is a very light type of oil separated at field facilities from natural gas. Under that definition, lease condensate production has been growing rapidly in the U.S. as more oil is drawn from shale. In 2012, the EIA estimated that the U.S. pumped 274 million barrels of lease condensate from the ground, compared to 173 million barrels in 2008.

But getting more specific isn't quite that easy. The Organization of the Petroleum Exporting Countries, some production figures and export rules all use separate measures to identify the liquid, Schaal said.

"Condensate has many different definitions," Schaal said. "A lot of the definitions revolve around some nonstandard terminology that is developed as practice historically by the industry and is now coming to the fore in terms of the potential for crude oil exports."

Those differences aren't just academic. Because the U.S. bans crude oil exports, determining what exactly condensate is and how much refining it needs before it can be exported has proven to be very important to producers who want to send the fuel abroad.

The U.S. Commerce Department has ruled that in some cases lightly refined condensate is not a crude oil and can be exported. But because those rulings aren't public, they can't be relied upon broadly.

Schaal said the EIA was working with stakeholders and other federal agencies looking to arrive at a definition. The EIA functions as an independent advisory arm of the Department of Energy.

"Depending on its long-term viability as a particular commodity," Schaal said, "we would expect the industry and federal agencies would make changes to make a defined condensate term that is in line with what is allowed to be exported."

Breitling Energy updates Permian Basin wells

Breitling Energy Corp. announces the second well under its Farmout Agreement in Sterling County has reached an approximate total depth of 9,000 feet.

The Hoppe "63" No. 1 was spudded Sept. 12. The company reports the well encountered the same productive formations as in the company's first Sterling County well, the Parramore 1.

Breitling plans to drill a total of eight wells on its Sterling County property to earn the total acreage under the Farmout Agreement. Based on the results of the initial eight wells, the company will continue to drill out the acreage using the most successful wells to guide its future drilling locations.

The Parramore 1 well, completed in late July, is still in the flow testing stage. The company performed a six-stage frac job on the well in July 2014. The first plug was drilled out in the Upper Wolfcamp and testing began in late July. The initial 24-hour test on Aug. 1 yielded approximately 85 barrels of oil per day, 211 thousand cubic feet of gas per day and a moderate amount of flowback fluid. As the fluid decreases, the company expects oil and gas production to increase. The single oil zone was flow tested until Sept. 4, when drilling out the remaining five sets of plugs began, exposing the remaining pay zones to the well bore.

Oil production resumed on Sept. 14. Not long after, oil and gas production has steadily increased and water production has decreased. A continued increase in oil and gas production is anticipated, combined with the reduction of water. The Company will continue to monitor the well and update the production numbers as production stabilizes.

Chris Faulkner, Breitling's CEO, said, "We're pleased with the overall developments in our properties to date and are continuing to execute our business plan of growth through the drill bit and development." Faulkner added, "We anticipate the Hoppe '63' No. 1 to be another successful completion in the Permian Basin, thus increasing our asset value and presence in that area."

GE to give Penn State $10 million for gas drilling center

Penn State University said Wednesday that General Electric Co. will give the school up to $10 million to create a new center for natural gas industry research.

Penn State President Eric Barron said in a statement that the center will produce tangible benefits to the industry, to communities that are affected by drilling or related activity, and to consumers.

GE said the money will support research projects, equipment, and undergraduate, graduate, and postdoctoral fellowships at The Center for Collaborative Research on Intelligent Natural Gas Supply Systems. Barron planned to speak about the center during a luncheon with GE Senior Vice President Mark Little. GE is based in Fairfield, Connecticut.

The new center will include faculty from the Smeal College of Business, Earth and Mineral Sciences, Engineering, and Information Sciences and Technology.

Charles Whiteman, dean of the Smeal College, said the center opens up "great new opportunities for research" on real-world problems. Whiteman said that over time the project could lead to more efficient drilling and gas distribution, reduced pollution, and even lower prices for consumers. He said Penn State will be able to hire new faculty members for the project and that a couple of dozen teachers plus students will be involved each year.

GE said the money will be donated over the next five years and earmarked for different uses. The company will also have engineers in residence to work with faculty and students.

Cabot snaps up more Eagle Ford acreage for $210M

Cabot Oil & Gas Corp. plans to pay $210 million to snap up 30,000 net acres in the Eagle Ford Shale, adding about a third to its overall land position in South Texas.

The Houston energy producer said oil wells on the land pump about 1,600 barrels of oil equivalent a day. About 92 percent of that is oil. Cabot didn't disclose the name of the seller. The deal is expected to close next month.

The company said it is experimenting with tighter spacing between its wells. Though it currently puts 400 feet of space between each of its oil and gas wells in the Eagle Ford, it is testing the effectiveness of 300-foot spacing, a technique oil companies are using to explore greater depths of shale gas and tight oil reservoirs, which are often stacked in layers. With the tighter spacing, Cabot said it has spotted 236 potential locations for new wells.

Permian Enterprises' Synergy system perfect for pipelines & flowlines

In the oilfield, there is NO single perfect coating. Each application requires a coating that is not too little and not too much for the conditions. This is why Permian Enterprises offers so many coating options.

For pipelines and flowlines, which are subject to corrosive elements but not to the extreme temperatures and stress of downhole pipe, Permian Enterprises offers the Polyken® Synergy™ plant coating system. This external coating provides cathodic protection for transmission lines whether buried or on the surface (Permian Enterprises always recommends burying transmission lines to protect them from UV rays). While the most popular ODs are 2" and 4", the company can coat pipe of any size up to 24" OD.

Synergy is applied in two layers to ensure a tight bond and complete protection, with a total thickness of 50 mil.

The coating's temperature range for normal in-ground service is -30°F to 150°F.

This is the premier coating for flowlines, providing complete cathodic protection at the right price. For nearly 50 years it has continually proven itself.

Synergy is installed in Permian Enterprises' Odessa plant and is then ready for shipping and installation. When a new flowline is being run or pipe is being added or replaced in a facility, that is the time to have Permian Enterprises protect your investment with the Synergy system.

If there is ever a question about the right coating for any pipe, the experts at Permian Enterprises are happy to help you. A locally-owned and operated firm, PE's friendly professionals are always available for consultation, for orders, for questions and any other discussion you need to have.

Many of the PE team have been with the company for decades and have seen just about any issue there is, so it's likely they have solved your issue or answered your question many times before. You can trust them to do their best to help you.

Permian Enterprises has been around long enough to have firmly earned their solid reputation (in business since shortly after World War II) but so current as to have the latest equipment and the most current answers to your needs.

Reduce operating costs with plunger lift

When plunger lifts are applied, well costs are significantly reduced. Plunger lift can reduce such costs as well treatments, electricity, workovers and swabbing.

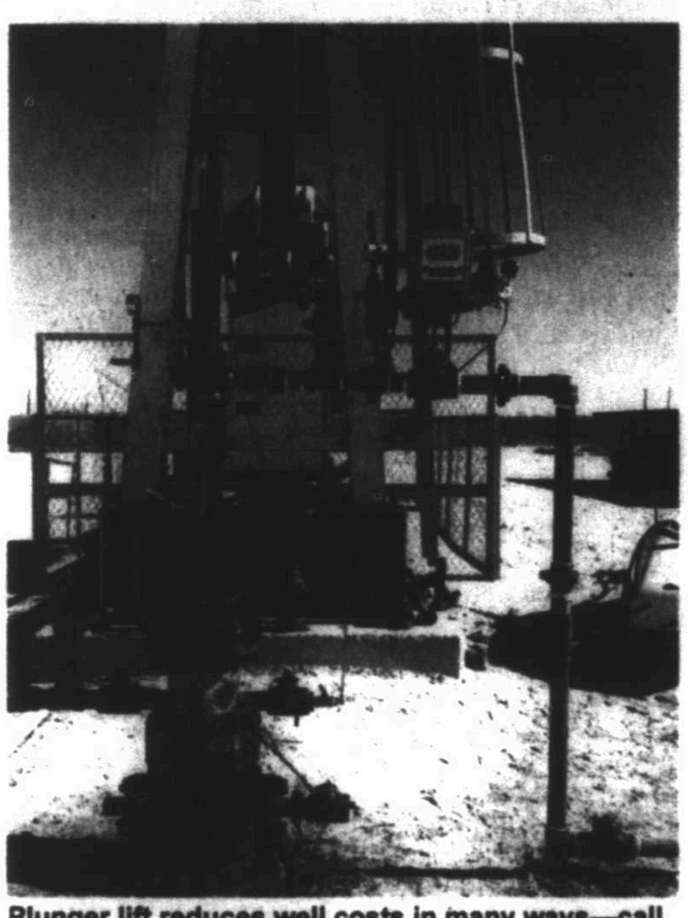

Plunger lifts also reduce or eliminate the need for well treatments such as blowdowns or soaping. Well treatments eliminated or drastically reduced by plunger lifts include chemical treatments, microbial cleanups and removal. Chemical treatments include inhibitors, solvents, dispersants, hot fluids, crystal modifiers and surfactants.

Swabbing costs are reduced because a plunger lift helps keep the well unloaded and flowing, and also keeps the tubing clean, eliminating paraffin and scale build-up.

Rod, pump and tubing repairs are also eliminated. Plungers can eliminate the need for mechanical repairs to pumps or for the removal of debris such as scale and paraffin from sucker rods and tubing.

No electrical costs are associated with a plunger lift, making that an area of major savings. Plunger lifts are self-sufficient, energy-wise, because controllers are solar powered, with a battery backup, and the well uses its own energy to produce itself.

Installation of a plunger system is also cost-effective because it does not require the use of a pulling unit. PLSI companies can swab, wireline and install a plunger lift system for turn-key results.

Plunger lift reduces well costs in many ways—call PLSI, at (800) 594-3887 to learn how it can help you.

Investment in equipment is also reduced. With the major increase in production in the Permian Basin, there is an ongoing need for more production equipment. That means, if a plunger lift is replacing a beam pump, the producer can sell the beam pump at a good price or re-use on another location, recouping significant costs.

In addition to reducing costs, a plunger lift can increase production. Workovers and most other treatments involve shutting in the well during the procedure, robbing the producer of production during this time. By eliminating workovers, the plunger lift allows the well to have more days on production during the year, making the well more profitable. Studies have shown that an average well can need one or more workovers per year.

Reduced workovers on plunger lift wells also allow producers to focus their resources in other places—such as drilling or completions, making the company more efficient in those areas as well.

Economically, plunger lift installations on declining wells also make more sense. At some point the operating costs of a well may over-run the production of the well. Plunger lift can extend the economic life of a well by maintaining the wells profitability.

To learn more about the advantages of plunger lift, call PLSI.

The phone number for Production Lift Systems is 432-699-1200 or 800-594-3887.

Victaulic helps design system construction or expansion

Right now, for anyone operating in the Permian Basin, growth is not just inevitable, it is mandatory. Processing plants, production facilities—anything that involves transfer or processing of oil, NGLs or natural gas—they are all strained to the max, just waiting for the next expansion.

For many companies, there is so much to be done on a daily basis, it is virtually impossible to dedicate the time needed for stepping back and planning the details of the next expansion. This is why more and more companies are turning to Victaulic's Integrated Project Delivery system for help.

The advantages of the Victaulic system itself are many. The grooved-end pipe joining system speeds installation and boosts safety for production flow lines and headers, tank batteries and secondary recovery, drilling, collection tanks and refinery plant piping, among other applications. Victaulic systems are available for all common pipe sizes. They work well with both coated and uncoated pipe.

Victaulic systems improve safety by virtually eliminating leaks and, because there is no welding involved, there are no open flames in the vicinity of hazardous chemicals.

So, once your company has decided to use the Victaulic system, the Integrated Product Delivery System developed by Victaulic can help optimize the time required for planning and installation. Their 90-person global CPS team is really just like an extension of your in-house design team. With their array of design software, including AutoPlant 3D, Aviva PDMS, Intergraph PDS and CADWorx, Bently AutoPlant, Bentley Plant Space and CEA Systems-Plant 4-D, they can match virtually any program you have in the design phase. The team can provide you with P&E layouts, ISOs, plan and section, spool fab sheets, bills-of-material—in short, a fully coordinated package for your construction and fabrication teams.

The process starts when you discuss your plans with Victaulic—you tell them what you want to accomplish in your new facility or your addition, you look together at how that will tie in with what you already have, and Victaulic will work with you to coordinate material shipments tied to the drawings and plans developed early in the process.

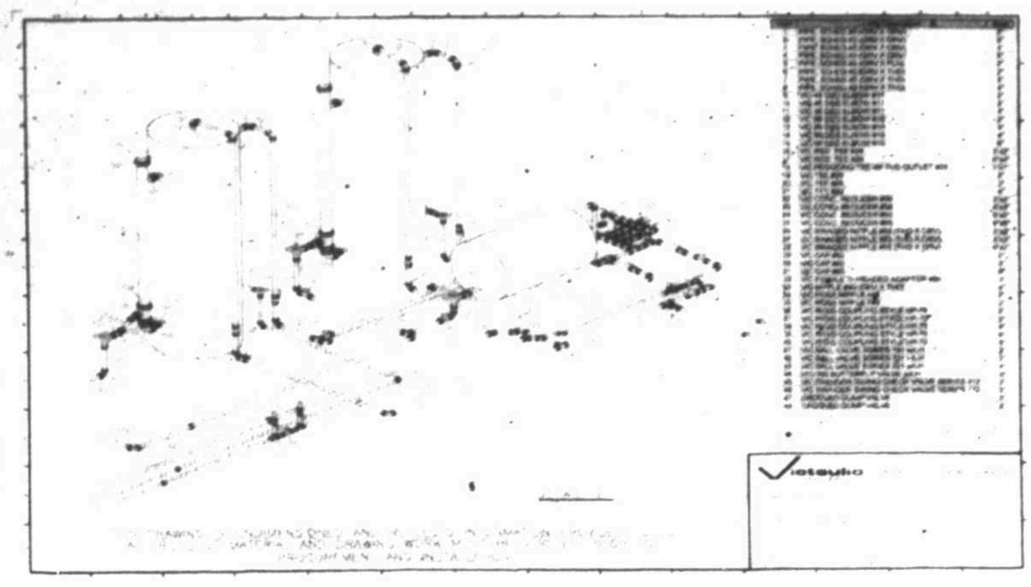

This way all your planning comes from one source—Victaulic's Upstream Support Services.

Once the plan is in place and the construction under way, the Victaulic team will provide training on Victaulic tools, field assembly, grooving, and will offer certification to your employees on Victaulic joint procedures.

When everything is in place and your employees have their training and certification on the Victaulic system, you're ready for long-term operation. Any needed changes or additions to the pipe systems can be done safely and efficiently by your own personnel. Of course, Victaulic is always there to answer questions, but your trained personnel can accomplish most tasks.

When planning your next stage of new construction, expansion or re-engineering, be sure to take advantage of the Victaulic Integrated Project Delivery System.

EPA imposes trade sanctions on America with decision

JOSIAH NEELY
Texas Public Policy Institute

Last month, Russian President Vladimir Putin announced a ban on agricultural imports from countries that have sanctioned Russia over its aggression against Ukraine. While the ban made headlines, most commenters viewed it as a largely symbolic action, which would do little to help Russia's strategic position internationally.

But within days, news reports surfaced of another government attempt to block international trade that would not only harm American industry but would strengthen Putin, as well. These actions, however, come not from the Russian government, but from the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency.

Natural gas has been booming in the last few years, with production up more than a third since 2005. Innovative technologies such as fracturing, directional drilling and seismic imaging, financed and developed by the private sector, have unlocked shale resources that were long-identified but considered uneconomical. The shale boom is so huge that a number of facilities previously built to import liquefied natural gas are now being retrofitted for export instead. Natural gas prices are several times higher in Europe than in the United States, and many European countries are dependent on Russian natural gas as a source of energy, a dependence Russia has not been shy of exploiting for political purposes. Greater export of American natural gas would not only benefit America and Europe economically, but it would clip Putin's wings by removing his quasi-monopoly over European energy.

Energy is, of course, a highly regulated field, and so these facilities require approvals from the federal Department of Energy (DOE) and the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC) before they can go into operation. And while the business of energy is dynamic, the federal approval process moves at a turtle's pace. The DOE approved several export facilities earlier this year, but more than a dozen export applications are still waiting for approval.

EPA approval is not required by law. Nevertheless, EPA has repeatedly weighed in on the applications, sending letters to FERC in March, July and August expressing concern over possible FERC approval of export facilities in Freeport, Corpus Christi, and Cameron Parish, Louisiana. EPA objected that FERC had not "consider(ed) the extent to which implementation of the proposed project could increase the demand for domestic natural gas extraction, as well as potential environmental impacts associated with the potential increased production of natural gas." This was a concern because "(there) are greenhouse gas emissions associated with the production, transport, and combustion of the natural gas proposed to be exported."

EPA's actions are part of a larger pattern of actions made against fossil fuel use generally. In 2010, EPA pulled a similar stunt when it objected to a potential State Department approval of the Keystone Pipeline based on concerns over greenhouse gas emissions. As here, EPA had no real formal role in the approval process, but decided to insert itself nonetheless.

EPA's climate math is questionable. Greenhouse gas emissions have fallen faster in the United States in recent years than in any other country on the planet, and the shale boom is a big reason for that. By contrast, Germany's attempt to move to renewable energy has backfired, leading to more increased reliance on coal for electricity. Should EPA succeed in slowing natural gas exports, it will do little to stop global warming. It will, however, strengthen Putin's hand and cause economic harm both in America and worldwide.

EPA's actions are just one example of the increasing conflict between the power of energy and the power of government. Which of the two prevails will help to determine the course of the next century.

Enbridge seeks to change debate about energy with ads

By Jennifer A. Dlouhy
Houston Chronicle

WASHINGTON — Enbridge is aiming to change the national debate about energy — and buff up its own image at the same time — with a multi-million-dollar advertising campaign highlighting how oil and gas fuel our lives.

The ads, running in the United States and Canada, illustrate how energy helps make everyday moments happen — from baking cupcakes and eating breakfast as a family to welcoming a newborn home and taking a road trip. A sample tagline: "When the energy you invest in life meets the energy we fuel it with, beautiful things happen."

The "Life Takes Energy" campaign comes at a critical time for Enbridge, which is still trying to burnish its reputation after a 2010 oil spill in the Kalamazoo River and is seeking State Department approval to boost capacity on its Alberta Clipper pipeline that runs from Hardisty to Superior, Wis.

The Calgary-based energy delivery company is boosting its presence and visibility in North America, with an inventory of $36 billion in projects slated to go into service by 2017.

Already, Enbridge and its subsidiaries are the biggest pipeline transporters of crude from the Bakken formation in North Dakota. But U.S. consumers may be more familiar with other midstream companies, including Kinder Morgan and TransCanada Corp.

"We're relatively unknown in the U.S. market — what our values are, what we stand for," said Terri Larson, Enbridge's U.S. communications director.

D'Arcy Levesque, vice president of public and government affairs, said the new ads aren't tied to any single venture but communicate "that Enbridge is uniquely positioned to connect people with energy." The ads are less about what the company does and more about why it matters, he said.

"The advertising is really designed to demonstrate the link between the fuel we deliver each and every day and the amazing things that happen in people's lives when we deliver that energy," Levesque said.

And amid debates on climate change, energy consumption and fuel choice, Levesque said, "we thought this was a great opportunity to focus the conversation on the very fundamentals: that without energy we are not going to lead the quality of life that we ... nd to take for granted."

Enbridge officials declined to say how much they are spending on the new campaign, which includes television, print and digital ads, but Levesque said the broad reach put it in the millions.

Some oil industry leaders have chided their colleagues for doing a poor job highlighting the industry's environmental, economic and technological success stories, leaving a wide opening for critics.

Pipeline operators are in the middle of a wider policy debate about fossil fuels and climate change. Environmental opposition to TransCanada Corp.'s proposed Keystone XL pipeline from Alberta to Oklahoma has intensified State Department scrutiny of the project, which requires a presidential permit.

Enbridge is also looking for State Department approval, so it can nearly double crude flows through the Alberta Clipper pipeline from 450,000 barrels per day to its full design capacity of 800,000 barrels per day. The company already is adding pumps and making other improvements to the Alberta Clipper in the United States and in Canada, but changes at the border depend on the State Department's approval of amendments to the pipeline's existing cross-border permit.

While waiting for that regulatory approval, Enbridge is connecting its Line 3 pipeline to the Alberta Clipper at both sides of the U.S.-Canada border. The result is that crude will move to Line 3 for a brief 18-mile journey across the border, only to return to the Alberta Clipper once inside the United States. Enbridge envisions it as a short-term fix to a long-term regulatory challenge.

The State Department has said no additional authorization is needed for the Line 3 change, angering environmentalists who see the temporary change as an illegal end-run around the Alberta Clipper's presidential permit review.

Energy storage site potential boon for Utah

A proposed $1.5 billion energy storage site in rural Utah that is part of a larger, ambitious clean energy initiative would be an economic boon to the state and could potentially make the area a hub for similar projects, state officials said Wednesday.

The Millard County facility about 130 miles southwest of Salt Lake City would be a lynchpin in an $8 billion power project that would start with turbines on a huge wind farm in Wyoming and end with enough electricity for over 1 million households in Southern California.

In Utah, they would build four vertical caverns that go one-quarter of a mile deep into the earth in a compressed air energy storage system, according to plans released this week by four companies trying to make the proposal into a reality in the next decade.

The project faces several hurdles, including years of regulatory reviews. It also would depend on making agreements to sell the power that would be essential to secure financing to build it.

If it comes to fruition, the project could have as much as a $3.5 billion economic impact for Utah, factoring in the construction of the facility and construction of parts of a 525-mile electric transmission line cutting across several Western states, said Jeffrey Barrett, assistant director of the Utah Office of Energy Development.

Val Hale, executive director of the Utah Governor's Office of Economic Development, said that kind of an impact would be transformational for Millard County, home to 13,000 residents and known for its dairy farms and coal-powered plant that generates electricity for Los Angeles County.

"Anytime you have a project of that magnitude, especially in rural Utah, it would huge," Hale said. "It would be one of the biggest projects in rural Utah in years."

The storage facility would be near the largest city in the county: Delta City, home to 3,500 residents. The small city is located nearby a reservoir popular for recreation and close to a World War II Japanese internment camp.

Gayle Bunker, a lifelong resident and mayor of Delta, said he doesn't know any of the details but said he sees only positives in Magnum Energy building more power storage facilities in the area.

The project would bring significant tax revenue and likely create dozens of jobs — enough to be significant for the sparsely populate county, Barrett said.

"But what's really valuable about it is this: It provides an interconnection point right there at Delta, and it provides a great opportunity to development more renewable energy around that site," Barrett said. "It would likely be solar."

Magnum has already built two caverns in an underground salt deposit at the site that are being used to store propane and butane. For this project, they would be starting from scratch, carving out four new caverns.

If and when the project is green-lit, it would still take years to construct the caverns and to get all the state permits necessary.

The enormous underground salt deposit is an unusual geological feature onshore in the U.S, said Magnum spokesman Rob Webster. The petroleum industry has excavated similar deposits under the Gulf of Mexico to store natural gas, he said.

"We just have found a very rare salt, geographically, that can be developed much like the Gulf caverns," Webster said. "We've always envisioned an energy hub at this location just because the salt is there, and its proximity to electric infrastructure that's literally across the highway at the intermountain power plant."

Oil-rich Rockefellers plan to divest from fossil fuels

After building their fortune on oil, the Rockefeller family is joining a growing chorus of philanthropies, foundations, religious groups and pension funds pledging to sell assets tied to fossil fuels, the New York Times reported Sept. 21.

The $860 million Rockefeller Brothers Fund plans to make the announcement Monday ahead of Tuesday's opening of the United Nations climate change summit meeting in New York City, the Times reported.

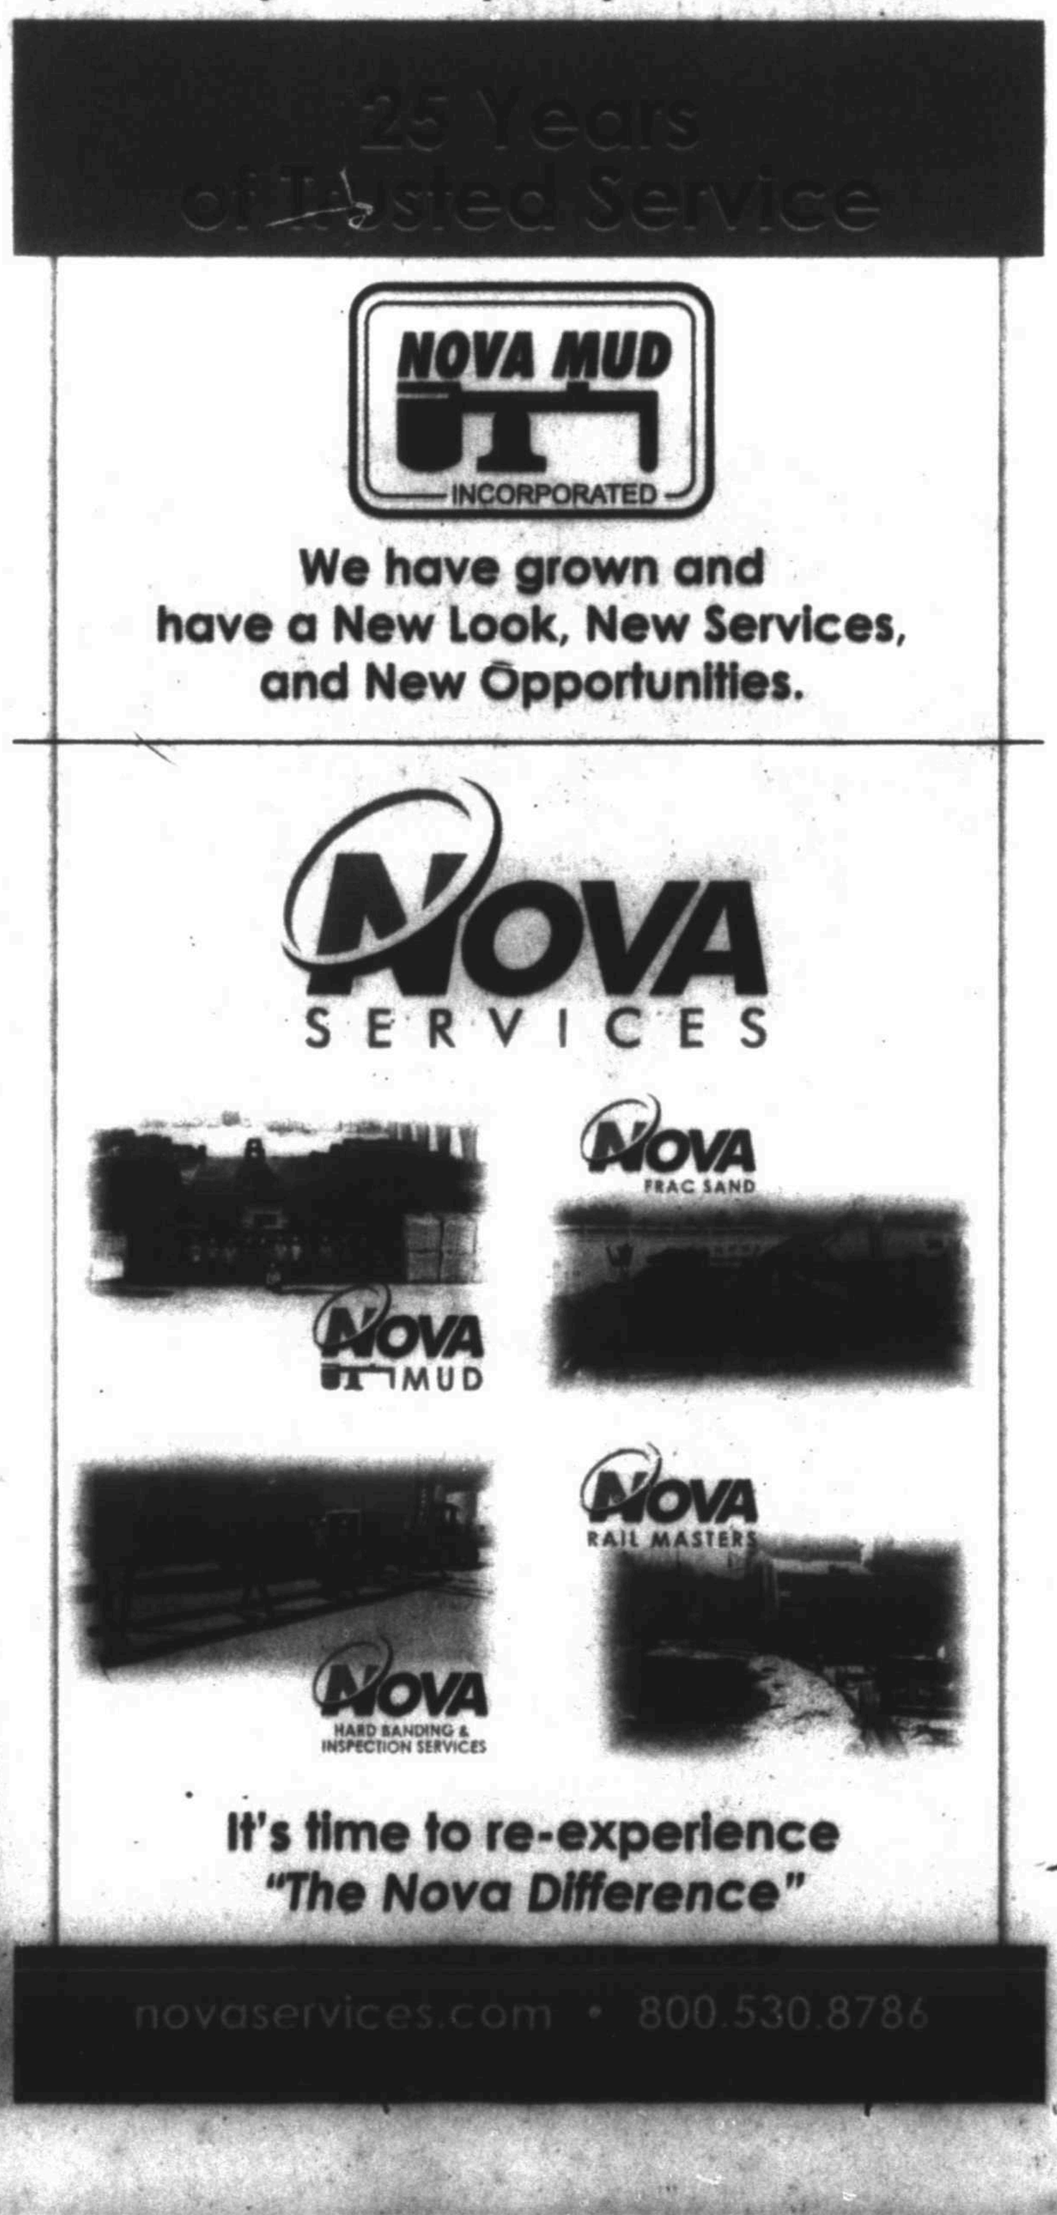

The move is significant for the organization with deep roots in the oil industry. John D. Rockefeller and William Rockefeller co-founded Standard Oil Company in 1870, which controlled nearly all of the refined oil flows in the United States until the massive conglomerate was ordered broken up under anti-trust laws in 1911.

The fund has been moving away from fossil fuels, eliminating its investments in coal and tar sands entirely, and boosting its investments in alternative energy, according to the New York Times .

"We see this as having both a moral and economic dimension," Steven Rockefeller, a trustee of the fund, told the Times.

Oil industry offers crude-train testing standards

BILLINGS, Mont. — The oil industry's lead trade group released new standards on Thursday for testing and classifying crude shipped by rail after prior shipments were misclassified, including a train that derailed in Canada and killed 47 people.

As with earlier orders from the federal government, the industry standards leave it to individual companies to decide how often to test crude in order to gauge its danger.

The American Petroleum Institute said the standards were crafted in cooperation with regulators and the rail industry.

Shipping oil by rail has become far more common as domestic drilling booms in North Dakota, Montana, Texas, Colorado and other states.

In July 2013, a crude train from North Dakota derailed and exploded in Lac-Megantic, Quebec, killing 47. The shipment had been misclassified as posing a low risk, regulators said.

American Petroleum Institute President Jack Gerard said the testing and classification standards were part of a broad effort to reduce the number of oil-train accidents. Since Lac-Megantic, there have been at least six major oil-train derailments in the U.S. and Canada.

A U.S. Department of Transportation spokesman said the agency had collaborated with the petroleum association but was still reviewing the final proposal. The agency said in a statement that the industry standards represent "a step in the right direction to advance the safe transportation of crude oil."

The Association of American Railroads supports the testing standards, spokesman Ed Greenberg said. The group representing major Canadian and U.S. railroads recently reported almost 230,000 carloads of crude moved in the U.S. during the first six months of 2014, a 12 percent increase versus the same period in 2013.

Environmental groups two weeks ago sued the Transportation Department for allowing companies to continue using older, rupture-prone tank cars to move volatile crude from the Bakken oil region of the Northern Plains. Attorney Kristen Boyles with the law firm EarthJustice, which represents the plaintiffs in the case, said the industry's testing standards could make those shipments safer, but more is needed.

"The safest and most straightforward response to exploding oil trains is not to ship Bakken crude in unsafe tank cars," Boyles said.

The government has proposed phasing out the older tank cars, although critics assert that will take too long.

Hazardous-materials shipments are supposed to be classified into one of nine categories depending on the risk involved. If the materials are misclassified, they could wind up being shipped in less protective rail tank cars, and emergency personnel might follow the wrong protocols when responding to a spill.

The oil in the train that derailed in Lac-Megantic was misclassified as "packing group III," which the Department of Transportation equates to minor danger.

Oil can no longer be shipped using that less protective category of safety requirements under an emergency order in February from U.S. Transportation Secretary Anthony Foxx. As a result, the fuel could no longer be carried by tank cars that lack certain safety features.

That included only about 3 percent of the total crude fleet, and it did not restrict oil companies from continuing to ship oil using tens of thousands of tank cars that were identified decades ago as a potential safety risk.

In February, federal regulators said they would pursue fines against Hess, Marathon Oil and Whiting for failing to properly classify their oil.

Amid oil drilling, Casper's hotels fill up

By Benjamin Sorrow
Casper Star-Tribune

CASPER, Wyo. — The parking offered a hint: a fleet of super-sized pickup trucks jammed the available spaces of the Motel 6 on Wilkins Circle.

Inside, a receptionist confirmed the suspicion. No vacancy tonight. It was the same story down the hill at the Hampton Inn and Suites. All booked. The Hilton Garden Inn, the Best Western Ramkota, the Holiday Inn Express and the Parkway Plaza? Nothing.

All the rooms in town are booked, one receptionist said.

It was a Tuesday, around 10 p.m.

Casper's hotels are flying high, carried, in part, by a rising economy which has seen streams of travelers return to the Cowboy State on vacation following the economic downturn of recent years.

Nearly 87 percent of the city's 53,000 hotel rooms were booked in July and August, according to the Wyoming Lodging and Restaurant Association.

But many of the rooms booked on this night were not occupied by travelers on their way to Yellowstone National Park. They were oilfield workers.

Area hotels estimate oilfield workers typically account for around 45 percent of their guests, said Aaron McCreight, CEO of the Casper Area Convention and Visitors Bureau.

"No wants to say the b-word because no one wants to jinx it," McCreight said.

B-word?

"Boom," he explained. "But that's what it is in Wyoming. It's oil and gas. That's what drives the state."

Economic indicators suggest Wyoming's oil development is increasingly moving from slow boil into something that resembles a boom, even if it remains a far cry from activity in places like North Dakota and Texas.

A report released last week by the U.S. Dept. of Commerce found Casper's economy grew by 7.1 percent in 2013, the 11th greatest leap in the country last year.

Drilling is up. The 57 rigs recorded during the week of Sept. 12 was seven more than what the state had the same time last year, according to the oil services firm Baker Hughes.

And the 18,000 oil and gas jobs reported in June were 900 more than the same month last year, state data shows.

Boom buoys businesses far removed from fields

By Rhiannon Meyers
Houston Chronicle

From steel pipe manufacturers to companies that produce sand and gravel, the U.S. shale boom is buoying businesses far removed from the oil and gas fields, a new study finds.

These companies are benefiting from the huge investments needed to explore, produce, process and transport oil and gas unlocked from previously inaccessible dense rock formations through advances in hydraulic fracturing and horizontal drilling, according to the findings by Houston-based energy analyst firm IHS.

The boom has been most generous to companies working in states with the most oil and gas activity, but the economic boost has also trickled down to steel-makers and machine tool manufacturers based in regions with no production, the report said.

And companies with no experience in the energy industry are thriving, with businesses being created to meet the industry's demand for new services, such as supplies for water and sand which are injected underground during hydraulic fracturing to crack and prop open rock formations to extract oil and gas.

In 2012, unconventional production supported 524,000 jobs in industries that support the the energy industry, either directly or indirectly, the report found. These supply chain industries are expected to continue to add jobs in the coming decade, with IHS predicting that the shale boom will sustain 757,000 jobs in 2025.

Beyond job creation, a surge of new drilling activity is pumping money back into the economy, IHS said, estimating that supply chain companies will contribute more than $16 billion in government revenues next year, up from $13 billion in 2012.

"The growth in unconventional production has become an important source of economic activity for these industries at a time when many of their other primary markets were experiencing decline as a result of the Great Recession," Brendan O'Neil, managing director of consulting for IHS Economics and Country Risk, said in a statement.

The study is the latest by IHS as it seeks to quantify the economic contributions sparked by the U.S. energy renaissance. Unconventional oil and gas activity has bolstered the nation's oil production by 50 percent since 2008 and helped thrust the U.S. into its position as the world's leading natural gas producer. The industry has been trying to convince lawmakers that the shale boom has created far-reaching economic benefits that can be felt across the nation.

Two weeks ago, the American Petroleum Institute, an industry trade group, unveiled a survey showing that oil and gas companies hired nearly 30,000 supply vendors, including accountants, information technology assistants, uniform manufacturers, portable restroom providers and restoration firms. Texas led the survey with 11,033 vendors.

Renewable energy plan hinges on huge Utah caverns

Associated Press

CHEYENNE, Wyo. — A proposal to export twice as much Wyoming wind power to Los Angeles as the amount of electricity generated by the Hoover Dam includes an engineering feat even more massive than that famous structure: Four chambers, each approaching the size of the Empire State Building, would be carved from an underground salt deposit to hold huge volumes of compressed air.

The caverns in central Utah would serve as a kind of massive battery on a scale never before seen, helping to overcome the fact that — even in Wyoming — wind doesn't blow all the time.

Air would be pumped into the caverns when power demand is low and wind is high, typically at night. During times of increased demand, the compressed air would be released to drive turbines and feed power to markets in far-away Southern California.

It's a relatively simple concept proven decades ago on a much smaller scale by utilities in Alabama and Germany. Yet, experts said Wednesday there's a reason similar projects don't exist elsewhere: The technology known as "compressed air energy storage" is expensive, particularly when stacked against other power sources such as cheap, natural gas.

"Stored energy technically is wonderful stuff. But it's primarily the capital costs that get you," said Brendan Kirby, a private consultant and former senior researcher at the Oak Ridge National Laboratory. "If it made a lot of economic sense, you'd be seeing these projects duplicated."

Still, Kirby and other experts added that the concept holds great promise for broader application as expenses drop, wind power capacity expands and West Coast utilities look to Rocky Mountain states to supply more electricity. It also could help rebut renewable energy skeptics who point to the variability of wind power as reason enough to stick with fossil fuels.

In this case, the electricity would originate with a 2,100-megawatt wind farm near Chugwater, a southeast Wyoming town of about 200 people 140 miles north of Denver. High-voltage lines would send the electricity to the compressed-air site 10 miles north of Delta, Utah.

From there, the electricity would go to California, a state that requires one-third of its power to come from renewable sources, such as wind and solar.

California also is a big driver of energy storage. Last year, the state required three major utilities to acquire 1,325 megawatts of energy storage by 2020.

A megawatt is enough electricity to provide power to roughly 600 to 1,000 homes.

Batteries big enough to serve the grid can meet the requirement, but compressed air storage is a much better option, said Loyd Drain, executive director of the Wyoming Infrastructure Authority, an agency that promotes power line development to export electricity generated in the state.

"Battery storage is very expensive, very inefficient. The second you put a charge into a battery it starts to discharge. You lose a lot of power," Drain said. "But energy storage, like compressed air storage, you can store that and not lose any energy."

The air would be pumped into four caverns, each 1,300-feet high and 290-feet wide and capable of holding enough air to generate 60,000 megawatt-hours of electricity through turbines at the surface.

"It's probably one of the only salt formations in the West that lends itself to compressed air energy storage of any scale bigger than a very small facility. It's a very large salt formation, very deep," Chris Jones, managing director of business development for Duke-American Transmission, one of four partners in the project, said Wednesday.

To excavate the caverns, the companies will pump fresh water into the salt deposit, which geologists call a "salt dome," to gradually dissolve out the caverns. Magnum Energy, another partner in the project, already has used that process at the site to create two large caverns that can each store up to 2 million barrels of propane or butane.

As the caverns get bigger, salt water is pumped to the surface to dry, leaving behind salt that can be sold for a variety of purposes, including road salt, said Magnum Energy spokesman Rob Webster.

Summit ESP redesigns pump to handle sand in unconventional wells

Completion techniques in unconventional wells involve the injection of thousands of pounds of sand into the wellbore as proppant, which allows oil and gas to flow into the production area of the well. If all this sand stayed in place, it would cause no problems for the pumps that push the oil to the surface.

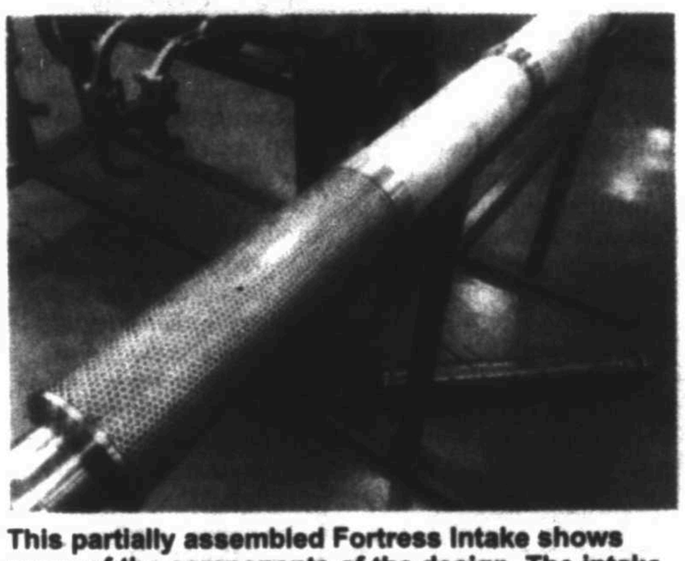

But some of it gets loose and gets into the lift system, where the sand's abrasion and tendency to clog up can have devastating and costly results. Summit ESP has redesigned its pumps and seals to deal with this issue.

One of the biggest sand-related problems for an electric submersible pump is in the area of the seal. The seal's general purpose is to connect the motor to the pumps, isolate the thrust of the pumps and protect the motor from well fluid ingress while allowing for motor oil expansion during operation.

When sand enters the pump along with the produced fluid, the sand's abrasiveness wears down the gas separator and pump, but, while flowing, it does not harm the seal. During a shutdown, however, gravity will pull the sand down through the pump and its intake. Shutdowns in today's well are common, necessitated when a high volume of natural gas slugs into the pump, creating an underload fault due to the lack of liquid during the presence of the gas slug. The sand that falls down it accumulates at the top of the seal section, which contains a mechanical seal and a vent port.

At the pump's startup, sand remains at the top of the seal. Over time, accumulated sand plugs the vent port, preventing well fluid from making proper contact with the mechanical seal faces. Without proper fluid contact, the fluid cannot cool the seal faces, which leads to overheating and, consequently, seal failure.

When the seal fails, sand and well fluid enter the clean oil section of the seal, which will allow the sand to rapidly destroy the bronze bushing, which will cause a major pump failure. Shaft buckling and other failures soon follow.

This partially assembled Fortress Intake shows some of the components of the design. The intake base is a perforated housing designed for support of the ESP components below the intake and to provide burst strength for the intake. The media (porous) 316 SS filter is installed over the perforated housing in modules.

Summit has redesigned the seal, eliminating these concerns. Summit's patent pending design on the Defender Super Sand Seal has added sand exclusion technology just above the mechanical seal. This prevents sand from falling into the mechanical seal, eliminating the precursor of the problems that lead to shaft buckling.

Also, Summit has added a well fluid thrust bearing, as well as an improved head design, which allow for increased well fluid lubrication to cool the bearing. And because the company has relocated the thrust bearing to the top of the seal, concerns about shaft buckling are greatly reduced.

Summit has improved the intake as well. The Fortress Intake uses a media filter in a modular design to remove sand particles and trash 20 microns and above in size. The intake can be used along with gas separators and or gas handlers.
