United Way volunteers gathered Thursday for their third report luncheon and were told $1.3 million has been raised in this year's campaign.

The high road

Michael Scott maneuvers the pneumatic roller away from the edge of the new overpass which is under construction at the intersection of Loop 250 and Andrews Highway. The roller packs dirt as the ramp for the overpass is built up. Work on the project began Aug. 28, and is expected to be completed by November 1988.

Stocks suffer some setbacks

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices skidded early this morning in hectic trading, and the battered Dow Jones industrial average dropped another 28 points in the first 45 minutes.

The decline followed a severe market decline in Tokyo and another bad day in London that capped the worst week in world stock markets since the Great Depression.

The fresh stock drop today came despite President Reagan's insistence Thursday night that the market panic incited by the unprecedented 508-point tumble in the Dow average Monday was a correction and the economy remained healthy.

Stock traders said there was fear that Reagan and the Congress would fail to act decisively to correct the massive federal budget deficit, trade deficit and long-term U.S. debt that many believe are key causes of the market's anxiety.

"I think there obviously is some disappointment with Reagan," said Joseph Barthel, senior vice president and director of technical strategy at the Philadelphia brokerage Butcher & Singer Inc. "I think you're getting some selling because of fear that the president is fiddling while Rome burns."

By 10:15 a.m., the Dow average was down about 28 points to 1,922.43. Broader market indexes also fell and trading was described as very heavy.

Wall Street sellers seemed to be ignoring two pieces of good news today from Washington: consumer prices rose just 0.2 percent last month as the gross national product surged ahead at a 3.8 percent clip.

Interest rates react to changes

NEW YORK (AP) — Wall Street's tumble has sent interest rates plummeting as investors shift money out of stocks into the relative safety of bonds. Major banks, meanwhile, lowered their prime lending rates a quarter percentage point to 9 percent.

The prime rate, used by commercial banks as a benchmark for a range of business and consumer loans, including mortages, home equity loans and credit card accounts, hadn't been reduced industrywide since August 1986.

Thursday's cut, led by giant Citibank, came about two weeks after banks raised their prime rates a half percentage point to 9.25 percent.

The demand for bonds since the stock market crash Monday has raised prices and drastically lowered yields.

The price of the Treasury's closely watched 30-year bond rocketed about 3 points — or a hefty $30 for every $1,000 in face value — in hectic trading Thursday. Its yield, which moves in the opposite direction from price, slid to 9.09 percent from 9.45 percent late Wednesday.

Reagan willing to debate 'non-harmful' tax hikes

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, trying to assure the nation not to fear a "recession or hard times at all," is softening his once-firm opposition to higher taxes as a tool for shrinking big budget deficits that have frightened Wall Street.

Early next week the president is expected to sit across the table with the Republican and Democratic leaders of Congress to set the ground rules for debating pending cuts and tax increases. But he said he would not accept any tax hike that would hurt the economy.

Presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said today no date has been set for the discussions but "we virtually are available at any point."

The stock market opened lowered today, but Fitzwater said he did not regard that as a reflection of Reagan's statements. "There are any number of things that influence the market," he said. "The factors are unlimited and you just cannot try to find any one specific item that causes the market to go up or down."

Reagan appeared optimistic and relaxed at his first White House news conference since March and he seemed determined to reassure a nation shocked by Wall Street's worst battering since 1929.

While warning there may be more trouble in the market, Reagan said the dive in stock prices was merely "a long overdue correction" and "there are no indicators out there of a recession or hard times ahead."

He said he was awaiting word from talks in Moscow on the timing for a superpower summit expected next month. He said he hoped Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev would have time "to see a great deal of America" and perhaps even visit his California ranch to "see how a capitalist spends his holidays."

Fitzwater said Reagan was briefed by telephone by Secretary of State George Shultz on his talks in Moscow but that he did not expect a summit date to be announced today.

Reagan also said he could not put a deadline on how long the American military buildup will last in the Persian Gulf.

"But I don't see it as leading to a war or anything else, and I don't think there's anything to panic about," Reagan said.

Winnie-the-Pooh joins parade for Jessica's heroes

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Winnie-the-Pooh will help head up the parade Thursday honoring volunteers who helped save the little girl who loves him so much.

Walt Disney Productions has donated the use of Pooh, Mickey Mouse and the official Disneyland ambassador to Thursday's 4 p.m. parade saluting participants in the rescue of Jessica McClure, the event's co-chairman said today.

"We want to find these individuals, companies and corporations who helped," parade co-chairman Norma Webb said today.

Participating in the parade will be the drillers; the machinists; the service companies; the Midland police, sheriff's and fire departments; Red Cross; and the Salvation Army, Ms. Webb said.

However, she stressed that the Midland Chamber of Commerce wants to leave no one out.

Anyone believing they helped in the attempt — such as neighbors who opened their home to the media — is urged to call the chamber at 683-3381, Ms. Webb said.

Parade organizers are hoping to get a celebrity to be grand marshall of the parade, she said.

A crew from nationally known Oprah Winfrey's talk show, will film the parade Thursday to be rebroadcast on her show Friday.

Ms. Winfrey will broadcast her Friday show live from Midland, organizers said.

High school bands will march to their beat during the parade, which will begin at Midland Memorial Hospital and travel to Centennial Plaza.

A large number of the toys sent to Jessica from around the world will be displayed on a flatbed truck in the parade, Ms. Webb said.

Once the parade arrives at the plaza, volunteers will be given the toys to give to their children, she said.

Other toys will be donated by Jessica's parents, Chip and Reba McClure, to programs such as Toys for Tots.

All volunteers will be given color photographs of Jessica's rescue signed by the McClure family, Ms. Webb said.

"We expect some exciting surprises," Ms. Webb added, but declined to comment on what they were.

Pink balloons will be released during the plaza gathering.

The chamber needs volunteer help in making decorations and signs for the cars the volunteers will ride in, she said.

Anyone wishing to help, should call the chamber, she said.

The parade will not cost anything, Ms. Webb said. All expenses will be paid through donations.

Toddler to have dead tissue cut from injured foot

From Staff Reports

Jessica McClure was expected to undergo minor surgery this morning, Midland Memorial Hospital spokeswoman Sue Ristom said.

The 18-month-old toddler will have dead tissue cut away from her right foot, wounded in the accident from which she was rescued one week ago today, Ms. Ristom said.

Although physicians said Monday Jessica would undergo skin grafts to temporarily cover four incisions made to relieve swelling in the foot, Ms. Ristom said she did not believe that was to occur today.

Jessica received her morning hyperbaric oxygen chamber treatment this morning and was to go to surgery shortly after 10 a.m., Ms. Ristom said.

The right foot was severely wounded during the 58-hour well entrapment.

Circulation was cut off to her foot during the ordeal and physicians remain unsure whether she will lose the foot or several toes, officials have said.

Robert Bork

Opposition to Bork grows as vote nears

WASHINGTON (AP) — On the verge of defeating the Supreme Court nomination of Robert Bork, the ranks of his opponents in the Senate grew to 56 today as Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., said he will vote against Bork.

Proxmire's announcement came hours before a scheduled vote on the doomed nomination and after President Reagan said he will ask the Senate to confirm a substitute nominee who is "qualified in the same way."

At the White House, presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater told reporters that "we don't expect to have a (new) nominee today."

"One has not been chosen. The president has not been presented with alternatives," Fitzwater said.

However, he added that a substitute name could be submitted as early as next week.

Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., announced his opposition Thursday. Two senators, Republicans Frank Murkowski of Alaska and William Roth of Delaware, said they will vote for the nominee, bringing the declarations in favor of Bork to 41.

Social Security benefits to increase in January

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's 38 million Social Security beneficiaries will receive a 4.2 percent benefit increase in January, the highest in 5½ years, the government said today.

In a week of financial nightmares for many, the Social Security Administration said the increase promises an extra $21 a month in the check of the average retired worker, who now gets $492 a month from the huge pension and disability insurance program.

It said the maximum monthly benefit for a worker retiring in 1987 at age 65 will rise $33, from $789 to $822.

The exact size of the increase became official today when the Labor Department announced a Consumer Price Index of 339.1 for September. The increase of 4.2 percent is the same as the inflation rate for urban wage earners and clerical workers from the third quarter of 1986 through the third quarter of 1987.

For the elderly and disabled, the increase will be partially offset by an extra $6.90 a month in Medicare premiums, which are rising to $24.80 starting in January. They are deducted directly from the benefits.

And workers and employers face higher payroll taxes in 1988. A previously scheduled increase will boost the tax on Jan. 1 from 7.15 to 7.51 percent.

Social Security spokesman John Trollinger said beneficiaries will actually receive their checks on Thursday Dec. 31 instead of the customary Jan. 3, because that day is a Sunday.

Nearly 4 million recipients of Supplemental Security Income, a welfare program for the aged, blind or disabled, will also get a 4.2 percent increase.

The agency gave the following examples of how the 4.2 percent increase will affect average monthly benefits:

— All retired workers, up $21, from $492 to $513.

— Aged couple, both getting benefits, up $35, from $841 to $876.

— Widowed mother and two children, up $43, from $1,034 to $1,077.

Semi-annual clock change rewinds time zone controversy

WASHINGTON (AP) — When the nation's uniform time zones were introduced more than a century ago, controversy followed, and the dispute continues today as the nation nears the semi-annual shift between daylight and standard time.

Opponents of daylight-saving time will be pleased to see the clocks turned back an hour to standard time at 2 a.m. Sunday.

On the other hand, proponents of the daylight-saving system will decry the loss of that hour of light in the evening.

"I received two letters today, one in favor of daylight-saving time and one opposed to it," Joanne Petrie, a Transportation Department lawyer who supervises time zones and changes, said Wednesday in a telephone interview.

The system of time zones was introduced after railroad transportation became common in the 19th century. It was designed to ease the confusion caused by allowing every city and town to set its own time.

The move was denounced as excessive government interference and was opposed by people who condemned changes in "God's time."

The controversy hasn't stopped. Ms. Petrie said letters continue to cite God's time, although today they use that argument to oppose the summer shift to daylight time, not to urge allowing every community to have its own local time.

Excessive government interference is also denounced, she said.

And there is a definite geographic split between people who like the summer time shift and those who don't.

Urban residents like daylight time for the extra hour of evening light to be used for sports and recreation, she said. But rural folks don't like losing that light in the morning, when they are doing farm chores.

Many letters opposed to daylight time come from senior citizens who express concern about the safety of their grandchildren and other youngsters waiting for school buses in morning darkness, Ms. Petrie noted.

Reagan's reassurances kind of missed mark

By STEWART M. POWELL
Hearst Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — If Americans alarmed by an uncertain stock market and a fragile economy were looking for presidential reassurance akin to "the only thing we have to fear is fear itself," President Reagan may have fallen short Thursday night.

The president gamely tried to allay the nation's deepening concerns over threatened economic collapse in remarks at his first full-fledged White House news conference in seven months.

Yet nothing he said resembled the inspiration offered by Franklin D. Roosevelt in 1933 in the depths of the Great Depression.

Reagan unveiled an offensive to meet the current challenge, vowing an economic summit with congressional leaders to "arrange a procedure" for further discussions with Congress to slash the stubborn federal deficit that has Wall Street and foreign investors terrified.

The president conceded new willingness to put "everything on the table" in the negotiations with lawmakers to trim the deficit with a combination of spending cuts and, potentially, even tax increases. His gesture was his strongest hint yet that he would tolerate the dreaded tax boosts that he decried in his re-election campaign in 1984.

Taxes that were "not deleterious" to the economy might make it past the veto pen, he said, but when pressed for details, he sounded like a poker player in a high stakes game.

"You're all trying to get me into saying what am I going to do when I sit down at the table with the other fellows," Reagan replied. And he wouldn't say.

He urged Congress to steel itself against protectionist sentiments from the heartland in order to send "a strong signal" to America's robust trading partners that even a jittery America with a staggering trade deficit still was an open market for the world's merchants.

Reagan sought to buttress his promises for actions in the future with good economic news that might hearten a stock market that plummeted 22.6 percent on Monday and has skittered around ever since, with a 77.42 point plunge in the Dow Jones Average earlier Thursday to close at 1950.43.

He hailed as "a very wise thing to do" the major banks' decision to slash their prime interest rates with backing from the Federal Reserve Board.

The 39 months of economic expansion remain well founded, he said, with inflation low and employment high. Economic indicators are "up and increasing" for 10 of the last 11 months, he said.

Even before the hard-bargaining with Congress that lies ahead, Reagan noted, the federal deficit already has dropped from $221 billion in fiscal 1986 to between $148 billion in fiscal 1987. The estimate is somewhat lower than previous projections.

First indications, however, suggested that the president's reassurances may no have gone far enough.

Stock prices in Tokyo, down in early Friday trading, remained lower following Reagan's news conference, which took place at mid-morning Japan time.

William Tririlli, director of research at the Chicago investment firm Rodman & Renshaw Inc., said he was "kind of pleased" that Reagan was "more conciliatory," but added, "as the questioning went on, it seemed he was in his old mold."

"I don't think the markets are going to be too impressed," said John Makin, director of fiscal policy at the American Enterprise Institute, a moderate Republican think tank in Washington, D.C. "If he had stopped after the opening statement, there might have been euphoria on Wall Street."

Much of what Reagan said, and a moment of confusion over revenue and spending 14 minutes into the 37 minute news conference, may have fanned concerns that Reagan's presidential leadership is beginning to wane as the nation's attention begins to shift to the contest for his successor. He briefly conceded he had misstated the percentage of the gross national product that is devoted to revenue and to federal spending.

The president described the stock market machinations at one point as a "long-overdue correction" and cautioned: "We shouldn't assume that the stock market's excess volatility is over."

Moreover, he refused time and again to detail what specific measures he would take to finance the enormous federal deficit.

Finally, he railed at Congress, charging that the Democratic-controlled legislature was guilty of a "half century" of budgetary excess.

Significantly, in a matter of days the lawmakers he had just accused will become the president's partner in a last ditch effort to seize the initiative against economic chaos.

"There are some taxes such as the income tax that have a more definite effect on the economy than some other taxes."
— Ronald Reagan

REAGAN

That was in sharp contrast to his earlier promises to veto any tax increase. Offered an opportunity to repeat his veto threat, Reagan ducked.

On Capitol Hill, Rep. William Gray, D-Pa., chairman of the House Budget Committee, said, "I think, clearly, everyone who heard him understands he has changed his position on taxes. He'll dance even though he doesn't like the music."

Reagan said he did not want to discuss possible tax increases because he did not want to tip his hand to congressional negotiators. Asked what kind of tax increase he would accept, Reagan replied, "There are some taxes such as the income tax that have a more definite effect on the economy than some other taxes."

But he would not elaborate.

Reagan, who has presided over the largest budget deficits in history, announced that the red ink for the fiscal year that ended Sept. 30 was $148 billion, a huge drop from last year's total of $221 million, but still more than in any year before he took office.

He blamed congressional Democrats for the deficits.

Reagan applauded the decision by the New York Stock Exchange to shorten trading hours for the next three days to permit overworked brokers to catch up on paperwork.

He also announced he was appointing a commission under the direction of former Sen. Nicholas Brady, R-N.J., a onetime Wall Street executive, to examine stock market procedures.

RATES

At the Treasury's auction of 52-week T-bills Thursday, interest rates fell to their lowest level since July. The Treasury sold $9.3 billion of the bills at an average discount rate of 6.45 percent, down sharply from 7.32 percent at the last auction on Sept. 30.

Interest rates "came down like a stone," said Edward Yardeni, chief economist at Prudential-Bache Securities. "We've had a heck of a bond rally ... The good news for bond investors is that stock investors are getting clobbered."

Citibank, the nation's largest bank, announced its rate cut shortly before the start of trading on the shell-shocked New York Stock Exchange. Other major banks quickly followed suit.

Analysts said it was only a matter of time before the prime rate was trimmed, since banks' cost of borrowing had dropped, and they could no longer justify charging higher interest on loans to their customers.

But experts pointed out that, against the backdrop of the panic gripping world financial markets, the banks moved with lightning speed to cut their primes.

By acting quickly, the banks made a "patriotic" response to the financial crisis, Yardeni suggested, much like the big corporations that announced this week they were purchasing blocks of their own shares to bolster stock prices.

Momentum for lower interest rates also built up from the Federal Reserve Board's pledge on Tuesday to help the financial community overcome liquidity problems, and from speculation that the stock selloff could signal imminent economic slowdown and lower inflation.

Besides Citibank, other banks announcing cuts in their prime rates Thursday to 9 percent from 9.25 percent included: Bank of America, Chemical Bank, Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co., Mellon Bank, Chase Manhattan Bank (effective today), First Interstate Bancorp, First Chicago Corp., Bankers Trust Co., Continental Illinois National Bank, Irving Trust Co., Mitsui Manufacturers Bank, Security Pacific National Bank, Wells Fargo Bank, Bank of Boston, Morgan Guaranty Trust Co. and Marine Midland Bank.

TIME

She also has found that daylight time is most popular at the eastern edges of time zones, while people living near the western border of each zone are less pleased, often rising and driving to work in the darkness because of the shift.

At any rate, daylight-saving time lasted a bit longer than usual this year, having gotten under way on the first Sunday in April instead of at the end of that month.

It is concluding at the normal time though, at 2 a.m. the last Sunday in October.

Nonetheless, Ms. Petrie reports that she is receiving many calls and letters asking for clarification.

When the spring starting date for daylight time was moved, Congress also considered extending the switch back to standard time until after Halloween, as a safety measure for youngsters. That wasn't done, but not everyone got the word, resulting in a flood of calls to Ms. Petrie, she said.

Besides the Transportation Department, two other federal agencies are involved with time. The U.S. Naval Observatory is in charge of calculating exactly what time it is at any given moment, and the National Bureau of Standards regulates the exact measurements of time.

Regardless of all that technical and legal knowledge on the part of the government, the average American home is still confronted with changing its clocks Sunday.

Most people find it easier, of course, to set their clocks back before retiring Saturday night to prevent them from being an hour early Sunday for church or other gatherings.

STOCKS

Nevertheless, there also was a widespread speculation that the market's wild seesawing of this past week would slow considerably today, partly because of restricted trading hours by major exchanges.

Earlier today in Tokyo, home of the world's largest stock exchange, the key 225-share Nikkei stock average plunged 1,203.23 points — its second-largest one-day decline — to close at 23,201.22 points.

Prices also fell sharply in London Stock Exchange trading, reflecting fears about Reagan's comments on the economy and Wall Street's reaction. The Financial Times-Stock Exchange 100-share index had tumbled 76.1 points by 1 p.m. local time at 1,757.1 after a 110.6-point drop Thursday.

The flight from stocks sent more money pouring into U.S. Treasury securities, driving up the price and depressing their interest rates. The return on the Treasury's key 30-year issue dropped below 9 percent early today, compared with 10.4 percent at the start of the tumultuous week.

Today's stock selloff came after stocks tumbled again in frenetic U.S. and European trading Thursday, dousing hopes of quick recovery from their historic crash and raising worries of continued wild price swings in the days to come.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks fell 140 points in early trading and seesawed through the afternoon after regaining some of the lost ground. The best-known barometer of Wall Street closed 77.42 points lower at 1,950.43 after two days of strong gains.

Five stocks fell for every one that rose on the New York Stock Exchange, and volume exceeded 392 million shares in the fourth-busiest trading day ever.

The plunge erased nearly $108 billion from the value of all U.S. stocks and came despite a drop in major banks' prime lending rate, often a rallying point for Wall Street.

Reagan, in his first news conference in five months, said after U.S. markets closed Thursday that there may be other volatile days ahead but "there are no indicators out there of recession or hard times at all."

"I think that this was a long overdue correction, and what factors led to its kind of getting into the panic stage, I don't know," the president said. "But we'll be watching it very closely."

Reagan stressed he was prepared to meet with congressional leaders to seek a deficit reduction plan that would calm the nation and economic leaders overseas. He also announced a task force to examine stock market procedures.

Frantic selling reached most other markets Thursday, eroding the dollar's value and pushing up the price of U.S. Treasury bonds and gold in a shift by investors from stocks to relatively safer securities.

In other developments Thursday:

— Major U.S. banks led by giant Citibank, rolled back their prime lending rates a quarter percentage point to 9 percent, less than two weeks after increasing them. By acting quickly, the banks made a "patriotic" response to the financial crisis, said Edward Yardeni, chief economist at Prudential-Bache Securities.

— The New York and American stock exchanges announced they would close two hours early today, Monday and Tuesday to allow Wall Street to process a backlog of paperwork from this week's staggering volume of some 2 billion shares.

Also, the NYSE announced further restraints on computer program trading, which allows investors to sell huge quantities of stock in moments. It has been blamed for aggravating the market's volatility and creating the high volume.

BENEFIT

— He defended his troubled AIDS commission and said he still hopes it will help find the best way to combat "this terrible plague." Reagan said he plans to replace the two members who quit the panel recently and indicated he still expects it to meet a Dec. 7 deadline to deliver its preliminary recommendations.

— He sharply criticized "private interest groups of various kinds" for playing politics with his apparently doomed nomination of Robert H. Bork for the Supreme Court and said he would try to replace Bork, a federal appeals court judge, with "somebody who is qualified in the same way as he is."

A Senate vote on Bork was set for today.

Reagan's nationally televised appearance came 3½ hours after the stock market, battered by a 508-point plunge Monday, seesawed back and forth and closed down 77 points in heavy trading.

After the long hiatus in news conferences, he began with a quip. "Well, it just seems like yesterday." He also said it was good to have his wife, Nancy, back home after being hospitalized for breast cancer surgery. "She's doing just fine."

Despite her illness, along with the battering on Wall Street and tension in the Persian Gulf, Reagan handled questions confidently.

He said the nation "shouldn't assume that the stock market's excess volatility is over" and that "there remains cause for concern."

However, Reagan said he will meet with Republican and Democratic leaders of Congress "to arrange a procedure for deficit reduction discussions that will be productive and constructive." Earlier this week, White House officials said Reagan would not attend such a meeting.

The actual negotiators for the White House will be Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III and White House chief of staff Howard H. Baker Jr., along with budget director James C. Miller III.

Reagan said that with the exception of Social Security, everything was on the table for negotiation, with no preconditions. A presidential statement issued before the news conference said both sides would have to "make contributions and develop a package that keeps spending and taxes as low as possible."

BORK

Three remained undeclared as the debate headed into its final hours today: David Durenberger, R-Minn., John Stennis, D-Miss., and John Warner, R-Va.

Sen. Alan Simpson, R-Wyo., said Thursday that Bork asked him to conclude the debate. "He had no desire to take it into next week," Simpson said.

Meanwhile, Reagan said at his news conference that if Bork is defeated, "I will try to find somebody who is qualified in the same way as he is."

Senate sources said the administration is giving the most serious consideration to four potential nominees, all federal appeals court judges.

They are Clifford J. Wallace of San Diego and Anthony M. Kennedy of Sacramento, Calif., on the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals; Pasco M. Bowman II of Kansas City on the 8th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals; and Ralph K. Winter Jr. of New Haven, Conn., on the 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

The sources, who agreed to speak only if they were not identified by name, said Laurence H. Silberman, a federal appellate judge in Washington, also was being considered.

Spirited disagreements over Bork's qualifications and the quality of his confirmation process lasted late into the night Thursday — the second day of Senate floor debate. Five more hours were scheduled for today.

Bork's opponents said the nomination has received fair treatment where it counts, in the Senate, but several senators supporting Bork focused on what they called smear campaigns by civil rights, civil liberties and women's groups.

Reagan also criticized "private interest groups of various kinds" for waging political war against Bork.

"I think this selection of a judge was totally out of line with what the procedure should be."

He said the qualifications of those who supported Bork at his confirmation hearings were "far superior" to the qualifications of those who testified against him.

Most gas mains made of plastic

DALLAS (AP) — More than 80 percent of all gas mains being installed to supply natural gas to homes and plants in the United States are made of polyethylene, one of the most widely used plastics.

The trend away from steel has grown in recent years because of the lower cost of installing polyethylene pipe, says Phillips.

Chinese trade sanctions strain relations

BEIJING (AP) — U.S. trade sanctions against China for allegedly selling arms to Iran add a new element of discord in relations already strained by U.S. criticism of Beijing's policies in Tibet.

China had not publicly responded as of today to Thursday's State Department announcement that the United States was freezing the range of high-tech items China could buy because of "rising tensions" in the Persian Gulf.

The move followed more than a year of U.S. diplomatic pressure on China to stop selling Iran anti-ship Silkworm missiles used in recent attacks on U.S.-protected tankers and an oil terminal in Kuwaiti waters.

State Department spokeswoman Phyllis Oakley said that in light of the gulf situation, the United States has halted a decade-old process of lifting restrictions on high-tech products sought by the Chinese.

China will keep getting equipment already approved for sale, but plans to approve new items have been canceled, she said.

The move was not designed to hurt the Chinese economy, but to send China a signal of U.S. displeasure with the missile sales, she added.

"In both Washington and Beijing the question of the Silkworms in the gulf have been the subject of discussion," U.S. Embassy spokesman McKinney Russell said today. He refused to comment on the Chinese reponse or say whether it was satisfactory.

The embassy said it had made "diplomatic representations" to the Chinese Foreign Ministry over the use of the Chinese-made anti-ship missiles in Iran's attack in the gulf last Friday on a Kuwaiti tanker flying the American flag.

U.S. officials, since alleging in March that Iran possesses Silkworm missiles, have said China has become the main arms supplier for Iran. The estimated $1 billion in annual sales have reportedly provided China badly needed foreign currency to modernize its own armed forces.

China has consistently denied it provides arms to Iran.

Chinese officials acknowledge, however, that arms could make their way to Iran through international arms markets and other third parties.

Iran's ambassador, Aleddin Boroujerdi, today reiterated his country's claim that it captured the Silkworms in battle from Iraq.

"There is no connection in this regard with the Chinese government," he told a news conference. "Therefore we won't face any limitation to use them whenever the necessity arises."

The U.S. decision to stop liberalizing high-tech exports to China touches another raw nerve. China has long complained, and U.S. officials have agreed, that the United States has been excessively slow in loosening restrictions on high-tech sales.

State Councilor Zhang Jingfu, at a Sino-American legal conference in Beijing in August, stressed that "the extent to which the United States slackens restrictions on technology transfer to China will reflect the extent to which the United States understands the importance of its economic relationship with China."

Moscow's top space official nabbed in plot

NATION

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — Federal agents say they've smashed a plot involving the Soviet Union's top space official to sell Moscow stolen U.S. supercomputer technology that would have enabled the Soviets to destroy incoming missiles.

A Frenchman, a California software designer and a third man were arrested Thursday after agents recovered plans for a supercomputer developed by Saxpy Computer Corp. of Sunnyvale and capable of 1 billion computations a second, officials said.

The plans were to have been sold for $4 million, officials said.

"The Soviets wanted to use it in a 'Star Wars' role," said an expert for the Defense Intelligence Agency in Washington who spoke on condition of anonymity. "It was very significant for them."

The plot involved meetings between Soviet space agency chief Roald Sagbeyez and a fourth man, Charles McVey, a former fugitive being held in a Canadian jail, said Quint Villanueva, Pacific regional commissioner of the U.S. Customs Service.

Sagbeyez is Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev's chief adviser on the U.S. Star Wars program, Villanueva said.

"The technology would have given the Soviet Union the capability to develop a supercomputer, which, in the event of war, could anticipate American missile strikes, allowing the Soviets to neutralize them," Villanueva said.

McVey, 57, who has not been charged in the case, was arrested in Canada earlier this year on a 1983 indictment charging him with export violations. He is being held in Vancouver.

Authorities arrested Ivan-Pierre Batinic, a 29-year-old Frenchman and former Saxpy engineer; his 30-year-old brother, Stevan, and Kevin E. Anderson, a 36-year-old software designer. He did not work for Saxpy, officials said.

The three were arrested in Fremont, a city about 10 miles north of San Jose where Ivan-Pierre Batinic and Anderson live.

More arrests are expected, said Rollin B. Klink, chief Customs agent in San Francisco.

A phone call to the Soviet consulate in San Francisco for comment reached an answering machine, and the call was not returned.

U.S. Magistrate Patricia Trumbull on Thursday ordered Anderson held without bail on a charge of conspiracy to violate export laws. If convicted, he could be sentenced to up to 10 years in prison and a $250,000 fine.

The Batinics were each held on one count of conspiracy and one count of interstate transport of stolen property. Bail was set at $100,000 each. Trumbull set a preliminary hearing for them Nov. 5.

McVey had previously been on Customs' list of the 10 most-wanted smugglers under the service's Operation Exodus, which was aimed at protecting national security by intercepting illegal exports of high-technology.

Saxpy spokesman Sandy Towle said Batinic illegally copied the computer's operating system, which the company sells for $896,000 to $1.9 million.

"He stole the soul of the machine," Towle said. "With the information you could reconstruct the computer."

Batinic also stole tapes, diskettes and operating manuals, which were found Oct. 5 in a storage locker Anderson rented in Fremont, authorities said.

Although it is illegal to export the technology, it is not classified, said FBI spokesman Charles Latting. The computer has many non-military applications for industry. Saxpy cooperated fully with the investigation, officials said.

Mecham faces grand jury probe

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) — The state attorney general said Thursday that a grand jury had begun investigating Gov. Evan Mecham's failure to disclose a $350,000 campaign loan in apparent violation of state law.

Attorney General Bob Corbin would not give details on his probe, but he confirmed that it included other matters besides the loan.

"It's wider. I won't go beyond that," Corbin said. "It isn't just the loan and financial stuff." The attorney general said the other matters "may or may not" involve Mecham himself.

Mecham, who drew national attention for rescinding a state holiday honoring the Rev. Martin Luther King, has been the target of a recall campaign begun even before he took office in January.

Corbin's office issued a raft of subpoenas Wednesday and Thursday to Mecham, some of his top aides and people who signed promissory notes to back the $350,000 loan which was not reported to the Secretary of State, as required by law.

Reagan addresses tax increase in budget talks

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG

An Analysis

WASHINGTON (AP) — It took a 500-point drop in the stock market, but a reluctant President Reagan finally agreed to talk about a tax increase in his budget negotiations with Congress.

"I'm putting everything on the table," he said during a news conference Thursday night, "with the exception of Social Security, with no other preconditions."

The reporters gathered in the East Room for Reagan's first White House news conference in seven months jumped at this new tack by the man who once challenged Congress to "make my day" by passing a tax increase which he could veto.

Questioner after questioner pressed the president on just how far he was ready to go on the matter of taxes.

No tough talk this time. Just the Reagan smile and a demurrer.

"You're all trying to get me into saying what am I going to do when I sit down at the table with the other fellows."

But then Reagan may have tipped his hand in his response to a question on another subject — arms control negotiations.

He was asked why he had instructed U.S. negotiators not to discuss his missile defense plan with their Soviet counterparts.

"Because if you put it on the table as a bargaining chip, then it becomes a bargaining chip," he replied.

Might what is true for "Star Wars" also be true of taxes?

Certainly, Reagan and Congress are entering the latest round of budget negotiations in an urgent atmosphere. Hours before Reagan's nationally broadcast news conference, the stock market closed with the Dow Jones industrial average down another 77 points, a signal that investors were not satisfied with the happy talk with which officials tried to coax the market back from its 508-point plunge on Monday.

The mood was far different from March 1985 when the Republicans were in control of the Senate Budget Committee and they were trying to come up with a $55 billion deficit-reduction package.

Airport test of security leaves airlines 'under fire'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Airlines are under fire in Congress following release of airport security test results showing that one out of every five mock weapons concealed by government inspectors slipped through detection systems.

Rep. Howard C. Nielson, R-Utah, says the government should consider publicizing individual airlines' track records if they don't improve their airport security efforts.

Nielson made the suggestion Thursday after a federal official told Congress that 20 percent of the mock weapons slipped through airport security systems during 10 months of tests at airports across the country.

Referring to legislation passed by the House recently that would force airlines to publicize the quality of their service, such as how frequently they lose passengers' luggage, Nielson said, "I'd be more concerned about safety than I would about my baggage."

Tests were conducted from September 1986 through last June. Federal Aviation Administration inspectors tried sneaking concealed mock weapons through passenger screening systems at 136 U.S. airports, the House government activities and transportation subcommittee was told.

Of 6,024 attempts, 1,251, or 20 percent, were not detected. Airlines are responsible for setting up the airport detection checkpoints, which are staffed either by airline employees or contractors hired to do the job.

In a smaller sample of tests conducted during the last four months of 1986, airport screening devices failed to detect 496 out of 2,419 test weapons, also a 20 percent failure rate, at 28 major American airports.

"Because passenger screening is the most important component of an airport security program, I find these results particularly disturbing," said Rep. Cardiss Collins, D-Ill., chairwoman of the subcommittee.

Raymond A. Salazar, director of the FAA's Office of Civil Aviation Security, told the panel that "we are not satisfied with that success rate," but said his agency is trying to spur airlines into improving their detection systems.

"I continue to believe ... that our domestic screening program remains an effective means of combatting aircraft hijackings," Salazar said.

In the latest tests, the rate of detection at 34 major airports ranged from 99 percent to 48 percent, said Kenneth M. Mead, an associate director of the General Accounting Office, the congressional investigative agency. GAO has been auditing the FAA's efforts to improve passenger screening.

The airports tested were not identified. But six of them had detection rates of 90 percent or better, including one with a 99 percent rate.

Eleven more were successful 80 to 89 percent of the time, 10 had success rates of 70 to 79 percent, four were successful in 60 to 69 percent of the tests, two were in the 50 to 59 percent range and one detected the mock weapons just 48 percent of the time.

In last year's tests, the Anchorage, Alaska, airport had a 99 percent success rate, the highest, and the Phoenix, Ariz., airport had the lowest rate at 34 percent.

Since Oct. 1, the FAA has required airlines to detect every weapon carried through screening systems. Those that fail are subject to fines of up to $1,000.

Girl saved from path of subway

NEW YORK (AP) — A 15-year-old girl was pushed in front of an oncoming subway Thursday, but was rescued by a bystander while two other witnesses captured a suspect, authorities said.

Georgia Winston suffered only a twisted ankle. She was standing on a subway platform in Manhattan when she was shoved from behind onto the tracks, said Al O'Leary, a Transit Authority spokesman.

Ronald Christopher, 21, of the Bronx, was charged with attempted murder and second-degree assault, O'Leary said. Police said there was no known motive.

Richard Ayuso, 26, of Manhattan, a security guard, reached down and helped get the victim back up on the platform, O'Leary said.

Peter O'Callaghan, 39, who was on his way to apply for an electrician's job at the TA, and Allen Glick, 26, of Orange, N.J., a photo technician, grabbed the suspect.

Ex-policeman sentenced

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The former head of the police pedophilia unit was sentenced to 50 years for sending child pornography through the mail.

The sentence will be reviewed after a psychiatric evaluation.

U.S. District Judge Patrick E. Carr said Wednesday that to get Stanley C. Burkhardt evaluated at a federal prison hospital, he had to impose the maximum sentence of 10 years on each count to which Burkhardt pleaded guilty.

Defense attorney Bruce Ashley asked for the psychiatric evaluation for Burkhardt, who has agreed to cooperate in investigating others involved in child pornography.

Burkhardt had worked for the department for 15 years. Ashley has said that although his client mailed photographs of minors engaged in sexual activity, there is no evidence he ever abused a minor.

Dog nearly dies in oven

PITTSBURGH (AP) — An animal rights group is offering a $1,000 reward for information leading to the arrest and conviction of the person who put a woman's dog in an oven and turned the oven on.

The reward is being offered by the Association for Animal Relief Inc., Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, said group spokeswoman Bea Foster.

Max, a 10-pound toy fox terrier, was saved Monday when Olla Daschbach of Bethel Park returned home, police said.

Someone apparently broke in while Ms. Daschbach was doing volunteer work at a hospital and put the dog in the oven, said Police Chief Joseph Kletch.

Plane found in tree top

STAR LAKE, N.Y. (AP) — Now that Douglas Youngs has found his runaway airplane, he's got another problem: how to get it out of a 35-foot poplar tree.

"Somehow it's gotta come down," Youngs said after finding his 1946 single-engine Aronica Champ suspended in the tree in wooded section of the town of Clifton on Wednesday.

The plane had been missing since Monday, when it accidentally took off without him from a private airstrip in Jefferson County, 65 miles to the southwest. It was located by a man looking for signs of deer before hunting season.

On Thursday, the 58-year-old Youngs of Lorraine, N.Y., was still trying to figure out how to get "Old Dollar" down.

"There's one, fellas, we've gotta analyze. Not just plain dropping it because that will leave it in far worse shape than it's in," said Youngs, who said he was considering hiring a crane.

The two-seat plane, worth about $7,000, fell into the trees tail-first with minimal impact. The engine, door and small pieces of the craft fell to the ground. One wing was severed, but the fuselage seemed mostly intact.

Youngs, an employee at New York Air Brake in Watertown, N.Y., was returning home from a visit with his flight instructor near Sackets Harbor, N.Y., Monday evening when his plane took off without him.

Ruidoso gets police chief

RUIDOSO (AP) — A retired deputy chief from the Dallas Police Department will take over as chief of the Ruidoso Police Department on Monday, a move that will allow current chief Richard Swenor to step down to a staff position.

William J. Newman was named to the position on Wednesday, Swenor said. The current chief said he is going into semi-retirement and taking a position as shift commander in order to spend more time with his family.

Newman, who was a seasonal resident of Ruidoso, had just retired from the Dallas department and moved to Ruidoso when the chief's job came open, Swenor said.

Reagan 'relished' meet with press, 'bouncy' after TV news conference,

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan was bouncy and jovial at the end of his first East Room news conference in seven months, which came at the climax of a tumultuous week for both the White House and the nation.

The president was met with a barrage of queries Thursday evening on taxes, hostilities in the Persian Gulf and an arms control summit with Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

Clearly, he was up for the occasion.

Reagan resorted here and there to his habit of filibustering, and at times rambled a bit. But overall, Reagan seemed to relish his long-delayed jousting match with the press corps.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater predicted prior to the session that the president was ready to take questions "on a whole range of subjects."

The press corps was eager to listen. In contrast to some earlier sessions, none of the 136 seats in the East Room was empty, and White House aides assigned a specific seat to each reporter because of the demand for space.

It had been a troubling week for the president and the nation, and even the fifth game of baseball's World Series was delayed until the president finished speaking.

Not only had Reagan's wife of 35 years undergone breast cancer surgery, but war appeared closer after he ordered a U.S. military strike against two Iranian oil platforms being used for military purposes in the Persian Gulf. And Wall Street witnessed tumult never before seen.

As he often does elsewhere, Reagan used a smile and a quip to start things off.

"Well, it just seems like yesterday," Reagan said, evoking laughter from reporters who knew that his last question-and-answer session had been four months ago in Venice, Italy, at the end of the international economic summit.

The last White House session had been in March.

The president then volunteered a statement sure to win support. "It sure is good news to have Nancy back home, and she's doing just fine," Reagan reported with a grin.

Just that morning, the president had gone to Bethesda Naval Medical Center to bring his wife back for a joyful, balloon-filled White House greeting after successful cancer surgery five days before.

The president did stumble a bit while answering his first question on the plunging stock market and its effect on the economy.

Pressed whether he was willing, after years of threatening vetoes, to accept a tax increase to reduce the huge budget deficit, Reagan either ducked or left them guessing.

"You have me in a spot," Reagan chuckled at one point, yet he steadfastly refused to clarify his position.

On the gyrating stock market, Reagan attempted to strike a confident, yet realistic, approach, calling for a "calm and sound" response.

He said he saw no hint of a "recession or hard times at all," but warned that the nation should not believe that the worrisome period is by any means over.

Hands firmly on the podium, Reagn brushed aside suggestions that his military moves in the Persian Gulf have brought the nation closer to war. "I don't see it as leading to war or anything else. And I don't think there's anything to panic about," he announced crisply. "I think we've done very well."

Taking up a subject clearly dear to his heart, Reagan spoke with some emotion about his chances for showing his California ranch to Gorbachev. And he also managed a poke at the luxurious quarters enjoyed by Soviet leaders when they vacation.

"Knowing something about the quarters they have for beach homes in the summer and so forth, I've thought it would be kind of nice to invite him up to our 1,500 (square) foot adobe shack...and let him see how a capitalist spends his holidays," Reagan said.

Five arrested for Mount Rushmore display

MOUNT RUSHMORE NATIONAL MEMORIAL, S.D. (AP) — Five protesters with the environmental group Greenpeace were arrested Thursday as they tried to display a giant banner across Mount Rushmore opposing acid rain, authorities said.

The 160- by 50-foot white banner said, "We the people say no to acid rain," in blue letters and "Greenpeace" in green letters. But authorities arrested the climbers before the two-section banner could be put in place on the granite carvings.

"We were completely surprised" by the action, said Dan Wenk, superintendent of the national monument in the Black Hills near Rapid City.

Greenpeace chose Mount Rushmore because it was "highly visible" and a national symbol for the entire country, said Eileen Price of Greenpeace.

The environmental group has been frustrated because Congressional bills to regulate industrial emissions that contribute to acid rain have been blocked consistently by auto and coal interests, she said.

Four of the men, who had camped atop Mount Rushmore since Tuesday night, were charged with illegally climbing the monument, an offense that carries a maximum penalty of six months in jail and a $500 fine.

Iran gets 'warning' about further attacks

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, hinting at new military action against Iran, says he wants the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini to realize "it's a little too expensive" to keep attacking Persian Gulf shipping.

Reagan also said that despite the increasing number of U.S.-Iranian military clashes in the gulf, "I don't think there's anything to panic about. I think we've done very well."

"The Ayatollah is in a war and if he's going to go on with provocative acts against us or anyone else, then he's running a great risk because we're going to respond," Reagan told reporters Thursday night.

"We're going to try to point out to him that it's a little too expensive, if he's to keep that up," Reagan promised.

The president's defense of administration actions in the war-torn gulf came during his first White House news conference since the start of his policy of reflagging Kuwaiti tankers and protecting them with Navy convoys.

Congressional critics have said they believe Reagan's policy may draw the United States into the 7-year-old Iran-Iraq war, but Reagan defended his program.

"I don't think we miscalculated anything at all," he said. "We're not there to start a war. And we're there to protect neutral nations' shipping in international waters that under international law are supposed to be open to all traffic."

Reagan's threat of new retaliation came four days after Navy gunfire destroyed an Iranian oil platform being used for military purposes. That action was in response to last week's Iranian missile attack on one of the reflagged Kuwaiti tankers.

In the wake of the Navy action, Iranian leaders answered with their own threat of new military action against the United States.

Reagan also refused to put a time limit on the reflagging policy, which has tied up Navy ships and costs an extra $20 million a month.

"No, I can't tell you how long that will (last)," the president said.

Iran on Thursday fired another of its Chinese-made Silkworm missiles and hit Kuwait's offshore supertanker oil terminal, setting it afire. It was the third Silkworm attack in the past week on Kuwait, which has provided aid in the past to Iraq.

None of the U.S.-flagged tankers was at the terminal. The 12th convoy of reflagged tankers left Kuwait earlier in the week.

Earlier Thursday, the State Department froze the types of high-tech items China can buy from the United States, a move aimed at showing U.S. displeasure with the sale of Silkworms to Iran.

"Rising tensions" in the Persian Gulf were the cause of the decision, according to State Department spokesman Phyllis Oakley. It was the first overt step by the United States to show unhappiness with the Chinese role in arming Iran.

At his news conference, Reagan again defended his refusal to invoke the War Powers Act, a 1973 law which limits a president's right to send troops to areas of imminent danger.

The law requires, in some instances, that the troops be withdrawn unless Congress approves their deployment. Reagan contends the measure is an unconstitutional restriction on his authority, a position also taken by all his predecessors.

The president asserted he has consulted with Congress about his gulf policy.

Kuwait deploys missiles, U.S. sends dolphins to defend against attacks

WORLD

KUWAIT (AP) — Kuwait has deployed rockets north of its main oil terminals to guard against missile attacks by Iran, officials said today, and the United States has deployed dolpins to hunt for mines in the Persian Gulf.

An official of the state-owned Kuwait Oil Tanker Co., who spoke on condition of anonymity, said U.S.-made Hawk surface-to-air missiles were deployed on Faylakah Island beginning Thursday. He also said the Silkworm missile that struck Kuwait's offshore supertanker oil terminal Thursday caused only slight damage.

President Saddam Hussein of Iraq today telephoned Kuwait's Emir and "assured him of Iraq's firm solidarity with Kuwait," the official Iraqi News Agency reported.

The agency, monitored in Cyprus, said Hussein denounced Iran's aggression against Kuwait to Sheik Jaber al-Ahmed al-Sabah. Iran has attacked Kuwaiti targets because it says the emirate supports Iraq, Iran's enemy in the 7-year-old Persian Gulf war.

In Washington, Pentagon officials said late Thursday that the U.S. Navy has dispatched five trained dolphins to the gulf to assist American forces there in hunting for mines.

"The dolphins have been deployed to the Middle East Force at the request of the commander...to provide an underwater surveillance and detection capability. Further details are classified," said one official, who commented on condition of anonymity.

Iran's ambassador to China, meanwhile, reiterated that Iran captured its Chinese-made Silkworm missiles from Iraq and that they have nothing to do with China.

Iran has deployed the medium-range Silkworms on the Faw Peninsula, about 50 miles from the Kuwaiti terminal. Iran occupies the peninsula, which is in southern Iraq.

Faylakah Island, 25 miles north of the Sea Island oil terminal, is directly in the path of missiles fired from Faw toward Kuwait's oil terminal area of al-Ahmadi.

Thursday's attack was condemned by Arab leaders, some of whom accused Iran of trying to draw them and the United States into the war.

"Hawk missiles are now in operation" at Faylakah, the Kuwait official said. He said the missiles were deployed from other sites in Kuwait.

The missiles are designed to shoot down aircraft, but the official said they could also bring down the slow-moving Silkworms.

Defense Minister Sheik Salem al-Sabah told the Kuwaiti News Agency Thursday that the missile fired Thursday came from the Faw Peninsula and that Kuwait would adopt "measures to deal with this type of missile."

Shultz, Gorbachev will discuss summit

By BARRY SCHWEID
AP Diplomatic Writer

AP Laserphoto

George Shultz, left, is greeted by Mikhail Gorbachev.

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev today opened a new round of arms control talks with Secretary of State George P. Shultz, predicting they will be able to arrange a superpower summit in the United States.

"I think this is going to happen," Gorbachev said.

Shultz, referring to hurdles still in the way of a treaty to ban intermediate-range nuclear missiles, joined the optimistic forecast.

"We have done good work, but we aren't satisfied. We'll get there," he said, as he posed for pictures with Gorbachev, the Soviet Communist Party general secretary, in Catherine's Hall in the grand Kremlin palace.

Shultz has imposed a deadline of sorts on himself for his talks in Moscow. He wants to be in Brussels on Saturday to report to West European foreign ministers.

He arrived in Moscow by train Thursday from Helsinki because Moscow's Sheremetyevo airport was cloaked in fog. Although the fog over the Soviet capital lifted by mid-morning today, Shultz may be forced to take the train to Leningrad and fly to Brussels from there.

The treaty nearing completion would eliminate all superpower missiles in the 315-to-3,125-mile range. Most of those missiles are deployed in Europe.

Shultz worked late Thursday night, meeting with Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze until 11 p.m., and saw him again for an hour this morning before going to the Kremlin to meet with Gorbachev.

They seemed in good spirits.

Gorbachev joked about his long summer vacation away from Moscow, saying: "They lost me, but they finally found me."

He said he was away from Aug. 24 until Sept. 24.

Senior Soviet officials usually take a month's vacation. Some American analysts and news commentators reported Gorbachev was away longer, raising questions about his health and political standing.

"The media should worry, and I'm grateful for their attention," Gorbachev said. "But all the time they try to bury me somehow."

Asked if he would like to see the whole country when he visited the United States, Gorbachev said: "I'd like to see the whole country. Whether I am able to is the question."

Satellite photos to show Soviet laser installations

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Private satellite photographs indicate the Soviet Union has two laser installations that could disable Western satellites and early warning defense systems, a private company says.

The Pentagon has described one of the Soviet laser installations as a possible anti-missile system.

Space Media Network said Thursday the pictures identified one station with a "diamond-shaped formation of four ground-based space lasers" near Nurek in the Soviet republic of Tadzhikistan just north of Afghanistan.

The lasers, linked to a powerful hydroelectric plant, could smash the electronics of most satellites and blind space-based early warning systems, the company said in a news release.

It said the laser system has the capability "to pose a serious threat" to the U.S. Strategic Defense Initiative, popularly known as Star Wars.

The program is trying to develop a system including satellites and lasers that could destroy enemy nuclear missiles before they strike the United States.

The Reagan administration has often defended the need for SDI by citing what it said was advanced Soviet laser technology with military applications.

Space Media Network is a private group that sells its satellite-gathered data and analyses. The pictures showing the Soviet stations were to be published on Monday in a new Swedish magazine called Z.

Another laser installation is in the isolated Tadzhikistan desert region around Saryshagan, which the company called "the largest test ground for present and future generations of antiballistic missiles."

The Pentagon described the center at Saryshagan in its 1987 assessment of Soviet military power as containing "two lasers probably capable of damaging some components of satellites in orbit, one of which could be used in feasibility testing for ballistic missile defense applications."

Navy Cmdr. Robert Prucha, a Pentagon spokesman, said the Pentagon would have no immediate comment on the Swedish company's statement about the facility at Nurek or the release of photographs.

The Swenska Dagbladet daily quoted a U.S. expert who was shown the photographs as saying that "such pictures have never been published before."

Youngsters lift bus, save driver

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Forty schoolchildren pulled together to save the life of their bus driver after the vehicle fell on him while he was changing a flat tire, a newspaper reported Thursday.

Bo Gosta Anundsson told the Expressen newspaper that he was fixing the tire Wednesday when the bus fell on top of him.

"When I tried to adjust the jack, I lowered it too fast and, as the tire had exploded, only the rim remained and suddenly I had the bus over me," the driver said.

Some of the children lifted the bus, while others pulled Anundsson to safety. He was taken to a hospital, treated for minor injuries and released.

The children had been on route to their school in the town of Wilhelmina in northern Sweden.

Stock market fall warning to heed

Analysts are saying that Monday's heart-stopping stock market plunge apparently was brought on by a report last week that the trade deficit will be larger than expected.

That fact should not be lost to those on Capitol Hill, where decisions affecting the trade deficit and the federal deficit are made.

Statistically, at least, the decline was larger than the infamous Crash of 1929 that marked the beginning of the Great Depression of the 1930s. That crash caused losses estimated at $40 billion, according to some sources. Monday's shattering decline, wiping away 22.6% of the Dow industrials' value, cost $500 billion.

That's an enormous amount of loss. But statistics on the market are only a reflection of confidence in the public sector. If Monday's decline can be attributed to a loss of confidence in how Washington will deal with — or fail to deal with — the growing trade deficit, then the market could feasibly not recover fully for years. The healthy increases that have been experienced since the big decline can, in such an instance, be attributed to temporary rallying.

So the monkey, which really had never left, is figuratively on Congress's back once again. No one will argue that the situation today is not the same as it was in 1929. The United States is now part of a global economy and in that respect, its fortunes are tied to control away from our shores.

But Congress and President Reagan can take actions that will reduce the trade deficit. One positive note amid the gloom of the decline is the fact that Reagan has agreed to a White House-Congress summit conference on the budget and that he will consider a tax increase as part of a plan to reduce the federal deficit. There are other measures that must be considered also, particularly concerning foreign investment and trade.

But the point remains that Washington must respond to the warning sounded earlier this week. It must show the nation and the world that overpowering deficits are not in the best interest of anyone.

Another View:

Arias award early?

Partisan muttering over this year's Nobel Peace Prize does the mutterers and their country no credit. Some of President Reagan's allies in Congress complain that the award to President Oscar Arias Sanchez of Costa Rica was premature because peace has not yet arrived in Central America. Were the peace prize bestowed by Congress rather than Norway's Nobel Committee, such criticism might be appropriate. Instead, it sounds like sour grapes.

The Arias plan, which became the basis for agreement by Central American presidents Aug. 7, is by any standard a breakthrough. As the Reagan administration and others have tirelessly pointed out, the agreement has flaws. But it is silly to expect perfection in a peace plan signed by presidents as different as Nicaragua's Daniel Ortega and El Salvador's Napoleon Duarte and only just beginning to go into force.

And the intimation that Arias is too easily cowed by Nicaragua simply doesn't withstand examination. For example, Arias's insistence on democratic reforms is an especially tough requirement for Nicaragua, where the Sandinista government has curtailed so many liberties. For another example, Arias insists that Sandinista leaders negotiate a cease-fire with Contra leaders — as Duarte is attempting to do in El Salvador.

That idea has been anathema to Sandinistas, who all along have said they would negotiate only with the Contras' sponsor, the U.S. government. Having begun a restoration of some civil rights, if the Sandinistas now bend to Arias's demands on negotiations, U.S. policy will look even hollower than it is.

That policy is antagonistic. It consists of the administration's call for $270 milllion more in aid for the Contras, supposedly as insurance that Nicaragua will make peace. But the aid request is the antithesis of peace-making; if approved, it would give the Contras every reason to continue the war at the slightest pretext. Instead of grousing at the prize for Arias, Reagan's allies should do their part to make Central American peace a reality.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Friday, Oct. 23, the 296th day of 1987. There are 69 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Oct. 23, 1983, 241 U.S. Marines and sailors stationed in Lebanon died when a suicide terrorist crashed a truck bomb into the U.S. compound at Beirut International Airport. An almost simultaneous attack on French forces in the Lebanese capital claimed the lives of 58 paratroopers.

On this date:

In 1864, forces led by Union Gen. Samuel R. Curtis defeated Confederate Gen. Stirling Price's army in Missouri.

In 1910, Blanche S. Scott became the first woman to make a solo, public airplane flight, reaching an altitude of 12 feet as she sailed across a park in Fort Wayne, Ind.

In 1915, 25,000 women marched in New York City, demanding the right to vote.

In 1942, during World War II, the British launched a major offensive against Axis forces at El Alamein in Egypt.

In 1946, the United Nations General Assembly convened in New York for the first time, at an auditorium in Flushing Meadow.

In 1947, Screen Actors Guild president Ronald Reagan told the House Un-American Activities Committee the best way to combat Communist influence in Hollywood was "to make democracy work."

In 1956, a revolt against Stalinist policies began in Hungary. The revolt was subsequently crushed by Soviet troops.

In 1958, Soviet poet and novelist Boris Pasternak, author of "Doctor Zhivago," was named winner of the Nobel Prize for Literature. However, Kremlin authorities succeeded in pressuring Pasternak into relinquishing the award.

In 1973, in a surprising reversal, President Richard M. Nixon agreed to turn over White House tape recordings requested by the Watergate special prosecutor to Judge John J. Sirica.

In 1980, Soviet Premier Alexei N. Kosygin, a fixture of the top Soviet leadership for 16 years, resigned his post because of illness.

Ten years ago: By a two-thirds majority, the people of Panama voted in a plebiscite to approve the new Panama Canal treaties with the United States.

Five years ago: A day after leading an Arab League delegation to a White House meeting with President Reagan, Morocco's King Hassan II told reporters the Arab nations would recognize Israel, but only if the Israelis were to withdraw from territory occupied since the 1967 war.

One year ago: The Reagan administration declared a cease-fire in its diplomatic war with the Soviet Union, saying it would not retaliate for the expulsion of five more American diplomats from Moscow.

Today's birthdays: "Tonight Show" host Johnny Carson is 62. Sen. John Heinz, R-Pa., is 49. Soccer great Pele is 47. Author-movie director Michael Crichton is 45.

Thought for today: "What one has not experienced, one will never understand in print." — Isadora Duncan, modern dance pioneer (1878-1927).

CHARLEY REESE

Demo hopefuls naive about Soviets

Listening to the Democrat candidates for president is a frightening experience. Their view of the Soviet Union is about on the intellectual level of a kindergartner.

Charley Reese

The slogan for the 1988 presidential race should be: Vote Democrat, Commit Suicide.

Their view of the Soviet Union is that the country, faced with an unprecedented economic crisis, is desperate for a detente and an end to the arms race, thus providing a historic opportunity for peace and arms reductions.

The Soviets do not face an economic crisis. Their economy is always bad. If 60 years of observations has not convinced you that communist leaders have only a marginal interest in the civilian sector of their economy, then you are probably uneducable. Communist leaders are interested in power and obedience, not in consumer approval.

Moreover, comparing the U.S. and the Soviet Union is like comparing fish and trees. Our economies are structured in radically different ways. The Soviets follow the policy of Abraham Lincoln and issue their currency and set its value. Thus, there is no danger at all that they will go bankrupt building arms. We might, since our government has foolishly abandoned the Constitution and borrows its money from banks at market interest rates, but the Soviets never will. They issue the currency, they set its value, they own the ore mines, the factories, and the workers. The only limit on their arms buildup is natural resources and unfortunately for us, the Soviet Union is blessed with vast natural resources.

Mikhail Gorbachev, the current Soviet boss, is acting no differently than Lenin or Stalin. Historically, the Soviet Union has from time to time engineered a so-called detente for the purpose of sucking in Western technology and foreign capital which they need to spend on technology outside the communist block. Lenin did it in the 1920s. Stalin did it in the 1930s.

Indeed to be so ignorant of Soviet history as to misread what Gorbachev is doing should disqualify anyone from running for a local school board, much less president.

Gorbachev is playing the wishful thinkers of the West like Van Cliburn plays the piano. He has done nothing but pursue the same policy his predecessors pursued. The arms agreement? It gets rid of American missiles and weakens the NATO alliance which has always been the Soviet goal. Releasing a few dissidents? Certainly, that handful known in the West — a drop in the ocean. Freedom in the Soviet Union? A joke. Gorbachev says some bureaucrats — those loyal to other factions — are not doing their job so the Soviet press can say those particular bureaucrats are not doing their job. Some freedom.

Furthermore, none of the hostility originating in the Soviet Union and directed toward us is based on ignorance or misunderstandings. Increasing cultural and economic exchanges will only increase Soviet opportunities for propaganda, espionage, and the theft of American technology.

Nations rise or fall according to the quality of their leaders. It is one thing to not know what cannot be known but it is something else to be ignorant of the obvious.

The Democrat candidates, like the British Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain, are ignorant of the obvious. They see only what they wish to see. Their alleged understanding of the Soviet Union is precisely that understanding which would allow them to do what they want to do which is cut defense and concentrate on pork barrel politics. The most basic rule in conning people is to tell them what they want to hear.

Only idiots would listen to what Gorbachev is saying and not to what he is doing — like bracketing the Hawaiian Islands with missile warheads in an unprecedented affront and provocation.

The real cisis is in the United States and it is a crisis of leadership, a crisis which may well prove fatal in the not too distant future.

Talking baseball's tough with lump in throat

Each time I read another article about baseball pitchers scuffing the balls (which allegedly makes them curve and dip and stuff like that) I think of Little Eddie Estes.

Grizzard

I grew up practically next door to Eddie and his family. He was a couple of years younger than me, but we shared a common passion — baseball.

The Baptist Church sponsored a baseball team in my hometown. This wasn't official Little League. This was blue jeans and T-shirts and lending your glove to somebody on the other team when you went to bat.

Eddie was 10 when he joined the team as its youngest member. Eddie eventually would become the best 12-year-old centerfielder I ever saw, but at 10, he was small and punchless at bat and needed much work on his defense.

So for two years, our coach played Eddie at "bird dog," a position even the most ardent baseball fans likely are not familiar with.

I'll explain.

Our team had a severe scarcity of baseballs. We got two or three at the beginning of the season and that was that.

A few feet behind home plate at the elementary school ballfield where we played was a dog pen, home for two rather rowdy bird dogs.

When a foul ball was hit into the pen, which occurred quite often, the dogs immediately launched a frantic effort to retrieve it and have at it with their teeth.

Somebody had to stay in the dog pen at all times in order to get the foul balls before the dogs did, so the game, and the season, could continue.

That position became known as "bird dog."

That somebody who played it was poor little Eddie, who spent two seasons battling the dogs for the precious horsehide.

You play the same balls all season, ones that large dogs are trying their best to destroy, you know something about scuffing.

This story has a happy ending, and then a sad one.

Little Eddie, as I mentioned before, became a gifted centerfielder and a big RBI man.

He developed speed and he developed power and after spending two years fighting off two dogs for foul balls, running down line drives was nothing to him.

He made one of the greatest catches I've ever seen in a game against Mills Chapel, then turned and threw out the tying run at the plate and got his name mentioned in the weekly paper.

(I was our team's correspondent and I compared the catch to Willie Mays' grab on Vic Wertz back whenever that was.)

I think little Eddie was 14 when he got killed. The car rounded a curve and the driver lost control. I was a pallbearer. I still see his mother occasionally when I get home to visit the folks.

This was supposed to be about scuffing baseballs, but I got off track.

Excuse me. I think it was a lump in my throat that did it.

Reagan's 'bloodless response' could fail

WASHINGTON — President Reagan chose the lowest option in the retaliation list his aides gave him against Iran's Silkworm missile attack last Friday in hopes of slowing the rapid pace up the escalation ladder, but that goal may prove to be as slippery as getting Iran to stop its war against Iraq.

Reagan's bloodless response cost no lives. It also served notice on Tehran that the U.S. was willing to limit its little war with Iran to maritime regions. The clear message: The U.S. can show restraint if you do. But the radical Moslem regime in Iran, with the ailing Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini more unstable than ever, may not reciprocate.

If the Iranians aim their next silkworm at Kuwait's $5 billion Al Ahmadi port complex with its oil refinery and gas condensation plants, the explosion could kill literally tens of thousands of Kuwaitis. That would terminate modulated reprisals and open a new phase of the Gulf war: disengagement or massive retaliation.

The question facing Reagan and his advisers last weekend was not whether to retaliate, but how strongly. Most of the options national security adviser Frank Carlucci gave the president differed in degree only, with no top official opposed to some form of military retaliation.

Rowland Evans and Robert Novak

Rather, the problem deals with what the president was hoping to accomplish when he decided not to "sink a ship": finding some way to stop or slow escalation in the confrontation between superpower America and fanatical Iran.

If Reagan and national security hard-liners see danger in the uncontrolled escalation Iran seems determined to thrust on the U.S., liberals are livid. One key Democrat on Capitol Hill, always against reflagging Kuwaiti tankers to give them protection in international waters, told us privately that "escalation is now out of our hands and completely within the whim of a frenzied Iran."

The administration's conviction last July when the reflagging operation was getting underway was quite different. The intelligence community saw it differently, advising Reagan there would probably be no quick Iranian retaliation for reflagging or against the Navy buildup (now at 14 ships in the Persian Gulf and 17 outside, in the Arabian Sea). Moreover, if and when the ayatollah struck back, Reagan was advised, it would be "tangential," with actions that did not leave clear fingerprints — such as hostage-taking and terror.

When Iranian buzz-boats fired at a U.S. helicopter two weeks ago, fingerprints were everywhere. Then last week, with Iranian intelligence in Kuwait operating at a high peak of efficiency, came the Silkworm attack on the Sea Isle City. It could not have been an accident.

That shows the difficulty of Reagan continuing his policy of modulated retaliation, even if one of its explanations is Khomeini's latest illness — a potentially fatal brain tumor that has him now surrounded with Austrian doctors imported to save his life. If his much-predicted demise is actually at hand, low-level retaliation might ease U.S. relations with a successor regime, while reprisals costing Iranian lives could do the opposite.

Two weekend New York Times dispatches claiming the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, Adm. William Crowe, opposed hitting the Silkworm site on the Fao peninsula were contradicted by Capt. Jay Coup, his special assistant. Coup told us Crowe's position was based on the fact the launch site was abandoned within hours after the missile had been fired and could not have been targeted. One high official quoted Crowe as telling Reagan the U.S. "would kill the date palms but no silkworms" if the launch site were attacked.

Led by Crowe, the JCS proposed that the president "sink a ship," one of the toughest options handed him after the U.S.-flagged tanker was struck in Kuwaiti waters. Secretary of State George Shultz favored attacking the Silkworm missile site on the Fao Peninsula, but it had already been abandoned.

With forewarning to the Iranian specialists who operated the high-tech radar equipment on the Rostam platform demolished by U.S. naval gunfire, no lives were lost. But the president's top advisers know that such tender, bloodless reprisals are strictly for the short range. No one is betting Tehran will leash itself.

Is mummy biblical figure Joseph?

LONDON (AP) — The author of a new book claims a mummy in a Cairo museum is the biblical figure Joseph who led the tribe of Israel into Egypt.

"I believe I have proved the mummy Yuya in the Cairo Museum is really Joseph the patriarch," said Ahmed Osman, author of "Stranger in the Valley of the Kings." The book was published Thursday by Souvenir Press.

"I feel excited that my work is at last in print. I hope others will be encouraged to investigate it," said Osman, 53, a teacher and translator who researched his theory for 22 years.

Osman said in an interview that for centuries scholars have tried without success to establish a link between any of the important figures in the biblical Old Testament and the history of Egypt.

"I am sure that Yuya, who was chief administrator and therefore virtual ruler of Egypt under the pharaohs Tuthmosis IV and his son, Amenhotep III, between 1413 and 1367 B.C., was the Joseph of the Book of Genesis," the author said.

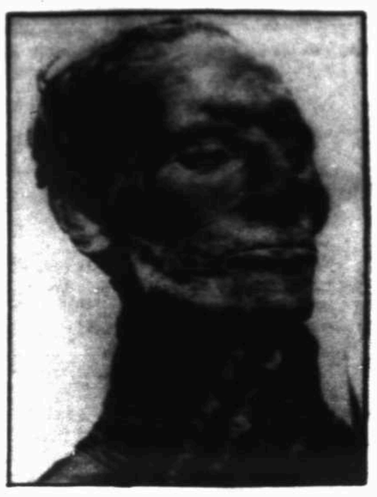

Chapters 37 to 50 of Genesis, the first book of the Bible, tell Joseph's story in great detail.

The Bible said Joseph's father, Jacob, loved him more than his other children and "made him a coat of many colors." Joseph's jealous half brothers took his coat and sold him into slavery in Egypt.

There he ultimately rose to power, greatly increased the grain harvest to guard against famine and eventually sent for all his family, the tribe of Israel, to join him.

Genesis ends with Joseph's death, embalming and burial in Egypt.

Osman's interest was first aroused by the passage where Joseph calls himself "a father to pharaoh."

The mummy Yuya

"That always seems to have been overlooked," Osman said.

Yuya's tomb was discovered by an American-financed excavation in 1905 between the tombs of two pharaohs in the Valley of the Kings and is well recorded in the literature of Egyptology.

Yuya had 41 titles and one of them was "a father of pharaoh," the only known person in Egyptian history to bear it.

"The title was found inscribed in his tomb and more than 20 times on his funerary papers," Osman said.

Osman says Yuya's daughter, Tiye, married Amenhotep III and became his queen. The four kings who followed — Akhnaten, Semenkhare, the famous Tutankhamun and Aye — were therefore of mixed Israeli and Egyptian blood, the author says.

Yuya's mummified wife, Tuya, found beside him, looks Egyptian but archaeologists have often remarked on her husband's strong, aquiline features, which suggest he was of foreign, possibly Semitic origin.

Osman, who saw Yuya's mummy in Cairo in 1984, said: "The hands are placed, palms down, under the chin. It is the only mummy we know of whose hands were not across his chest in the conventional position of the god Osiris, suggesting he did not subscribe to the gods of Egypt."

Contrary to the biblical account that at the time of the Exodus of Israel to Palestine, Moses took Joseph's bones and buried them in Canaan, Osman feels the remains never left Egypt.

"They are in the Cairo Museum," he said.

Osman reports that Mohammad Saleh, the Cairo Museum director, disbelieves his theory, but Osman hopes his book will inspire a new examination of the mummy by scientific methods.

Ronald E. Clements, professor of Old Testament studies at King's College, London, commented: "Osman has made a good case, but I should want to recognize that some knowledge of the figure of the Egyptian Yuya could have provided a basis for the biblical stories about Joseph."

Osman is a former law student who came to London in 1965 and lived by teaching Arabic. He joined the Egypt Exploration Society to study the history of his country, learned Hebrew and taught himself ancient Egyptian hieroglyphics.

"The Israelites left Egypt because of oppression and it damaged both peoples," he said. "I think Egypt and Israel could live peacefully together and I hope I may have helped to heal the scars."

WORLD IN BRIEF

Soviet generals killed in helicopter crash

MOSCOW (AP) — Five top Soviet army generals were killed in an apparent helicopter crash, it was reported today.

Red Star, the Defense Ministry newspaper, said the five officers and two helicopter crewmen died in an air crash Monday.

The report did not say where the crash occurred, but a Western diplomatic source, speaking on condition of anonymity, said he had information about the incident that "ruled out Afghanistan," where the Soviet military has been fighting Afghan guerrillas for nearly eight years. The newspaper gave no further details, such as the type of aircraft or whether it was shot down.

It could be deduced that the army generals were aboard a helicopter because the obituaries of two junior officers, one a helicopter pilot and the other his technician, were published along with those of the generals.

Mexican market swings

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Treasury Secretary Gustavo Petricioli urged investors in the nation's gyrating stock market to remain calm and cautioned that those selling in panic will suffer losses from their investments.

"Those who wait are going to continue gaining in the stock exchange," Petricioli said in an interview with several local reporters. A transcript of his remarks was released late Wednesday by the Treasury Department.

Petricioli's statements followed a wave of selling in the Mexican stock exchange, which has over the past year been one of the world's fastest rising.

Syrians search houses

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Syrian troops searched houses and rounded up about 20 men in a residential district of Moslem west Beirut before dawn today, hours after gunmen shot and killed a Syrian soldier and wounded another, police said.

Two rival leftist militia officials also were killed, and a Palestinian businessman was kidnapped in the area over the last two days, police reported.

In another development, U.S. Assistant Secretary of State Richard Murphy was in Moslem west Beirut today to brief acting Prime Minister Salim Hoss and other Lebanese officials on Secretary of State George P. Shultz's recent Middle East tour.

TORNADO or THUNDERSTORM

WATCH — (Conditions are right for a tornado or severe thunderstorm to form.)

WARNING — (A tornado or severe thunderstorm already is in existence.)

Thunderstorms possible today

Skies will be cloudy with a 50 percent chance of thunderstorms tonight according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. The low should reach the upper 50s and the winds will be southerly at 10-15 mph.

Saturday skies will be partly cloudy with the chance of thunderstorms diminishing to less than 20 percent. The high can be expected near 80 with the winds blowing out of the southwest at 10-20 mph.

Thursday's high of 77 was 12 degrees under the record high of 89 set for that date in 1961. Today's low of 60 was 27 degrees over the record low of 33 set for this date in 1936.

STATE

Showers and thunderstorms were forecast across most of Texas through tonight as a high pressure system pumped warm, moist air from the Gulf of Mexico across the state.

The showers and thunderstorms are expected to end across West Texas Saturday and should decrease from the west across South Texas Saturday. The activity will continue Saturday across portions of North Texas. Slightly warmer temperatures are expected across all but North Texas Saturday.

Lows tonight will be mostly in the 60s, ranging from near 50 in the Panhandle to near 70 in the Lower Rio Grande Valley.

Highs Saturday will be mostly in the 70s and 80s.

Showers and thunderstorms were reported at dawn across much of South Texas and East Texas. A stationary front was located across the Panhandle early today.

Early morning temperatures were mostly in the 60s, ranging from the 40s over the Panhandle and the 50s over the rest of West Texas to the low to mid 70s along the Texas coast. Extremes ranged from 44 at Amarillo to 75 at Corpus Christi.

NATION

An early-morning freeze today extended across the northern Plains, New England and parts of the Southeast, while the Southern California coast dried off from a heavy soaking.

An inch and two-thirds of rain fell Thursday night at Mount Wilson, Calif., and 1.3 inches was measured at San Bernardino, Calif. Lighter showers were reported in northern California.

Light snow or snow showers fell over parts of North Dakota and northern Minnesota.

Thunderstorms rumbled through southern Nevada and parts of Arizona, while an upper-level weather disturbance brought clouds to much of the Southwest.

Salvation Army Major Harvey Harwell of Midland explains the community and regional roles which the Army plays in its mission to bring relief to those suffering and in need and to spread the spiritual gospel of Jesus Christ. The Salvation Army is a United Way of Midland agency.

Salvation Army battles spiritual, physical want

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The Salvation Army is a semi-military-structured Christian organization which serves the spiritual and physical needs of suffering and distressed people.

"It is a religious charitable organization," said Major Harvey Harwell of the Salvation Army command in Midland. "We cannot separate the two — serving spiritual and physical needs," he said. "Our main thrust is spreading the Gospel. The other thing is secondary," although usually more highly visible.

"We believe that when a man straightens out his life spiritually, the other things will fall into line. You cannot preach to a man on an empty stomach."

Harwell and his wife share a dual command of the Army here.

The Army, a United Way agency, serves in emergencies and disasters.

Recently, the Army's mobile canteen was set up at the site of the abandoned Midland water well where 18-month-old Jessica McClure was trapped for 58 hours before she was rescued. The event attracted national and worldwide attention, as teams of volunteer rescuers toiled for three days and two nights to save the child.

And the Army was there with its canteen of food and drink to help provide nourishment to the rescuers and others at the well site.

And on the night of the fatal May 22 Saragosa tornado, the Army moved in to provide "very extensive service work" at Saragosa. Army canteens from across the state moved into Saragosa, as did many other service organizations from the American Red Cross to the Texas Baptist Men.

"We deal in emergencies 24 hours a day, seven days a week but not of that (Saragosa and Jessica McClure) magnitude," he said. "That's always at no cost to the local folks."

Harwell, who has been a Salvation Army officer since 1964, has worked in the aftermath of disasters such as the Wichita Falls and Sweetwater tornadoes; Galveston, Mobile, Ala., and Honduras hurricanes, and the Guatemala and Mexico City earthquakes. He is bilingual, speaking both English and Spanish.

Harwell said that the mobile canteen here is always primed to respond to emergencies.

"We get in the thing and start preparing food, and when we get there (at emergency sites), it's ready to start serving."

The Army also takes its canteen to emergency sites such as fires and other local emergencies.

Harwell said that the Army's efforts at Saragosa and during the Jessica McClure ordeal were somewhat hampered, since the Midland Salvation Army lacked radio-communications equipment. But the major said he hopes the Army soon somehow will acquire the communications equipment which it needs.

Other services performed by the Army include:

— Day-care center which serves many children of single parents. Fees are on a sliding scale.

— Evening feeding program for homeless street people.

— Breakfast and supper meals and lodging for transients.

— Religious services.

— Giving of donated clothing, furniture, and appliances to the poor who cannot afford those material goods.

— Operates a Thrift Store, where donated goods may be purchased at nominal rates. "We don't throw anything away," Harwell said. Even old culled clothing items are baled and sold to commercial rag companies.

— Operation of a rehabilitation program, in which such skills as upholstery, carpentry, furniture repair and merchandising are taught. "It (the program) helps us while we help them," Harwell said of men and women who are seeking productive lives.

— Recovery program for alcoholics and other abusers of drugs. "They have to be sober before we'll take them in."

— Family services by which the Army helps people with rent payments, utilities, food, medical supplies, clothing and furniture.

— Christmas program in which food baskets, clothing, dolls and toys are distributed to the needy.

Statewide, the Salvation Army offers a Bible-study course for prisoners. And available to the community here are services of The Salvation Army's missing-persons bureau and homes for unwed mothers.

"We've always enjoyed a good reputation for over 100 years," Harwell said. The Salvation Army was established in England in 1865 as a Christian Mission by General William Booth, a former Methodist minister. The Mission's initial role was to bring the Gospel to the poor of London's East End slums. The mission adopted the Salvation Army name in 1878, and the Army was established in the United States in 1880.

"To us, it's not just a job," Harwell said. "It's a calling."

Midland pulls together

United Way agencies aided in 'wonderful rescue'

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Midland "can pull together in a time of crisis and need," noted United Way of Midland campaign chairman Judy Devenport. She cited the "wonderful rescue" of 18-month-old Jessica McClure from a Midland water well last Friday.

Ms. Devenport said Thursday at a United Way rally that the energy behind the United Way campaign suddenly shifted last week to prayers, deeds and hope for the baby's survival and good health.

The child spent three days and two nights in the well before rescuers could save her by tunneling parallel to the abandoned well into which Jessica had fallen while she was playing in her aunt's backyard.

"All of our prayers were answered," Ms. Devenport said. She noted that many United Way volunteers and agencies offered assistance during Jessica's ordeal and rescue, which gained national and worldwide attention.

Among United Way agencies which played various roles in the Jessica rescue efforts were The Salvation Army, American Red Cross, Girl Scouts and Boy Scouts of America.

"We all certainly exemplify this year's theme 'Together we bring out the best in Midland,'" Ms. Devenport said. "Let's give a hand to all of the volunteers and to Midland for the fantastic work last week."

And Ms. Devenport said that it is "that team spirit" that is needed to "keep the momentum going" in United Way's fund-raising efforts.

"We have 17 agencies who are depending on your completing your calls and reaching your goals," she told campaign division chairmen and other volunteers in the downtown Yucca Theatre.

To date, United Way of Midland has reached 55.5 percent ($1.3 million) of its $2.35-million goal for funding 17 agencies in 1988.

Funds raised by each campaign division and the percentage of each division's goal so far raised include: Special Gifts, $493,575 for 54.8 percent; Independent Oil, $44,570 for 44.6 percent; Residential, $13,282 for 61.8 percent; Retail, $11,046 for 24 percent; Real Estate and Finance, $121,977 for 89 percent; Business and Entertainment, $96,099 for 64.7 percent; Utilities, Transportation and Communications, $122,092 for 79.1 percent; Major Oil, $159,072 for 33.5 percent; Petroleum Industry, $142,769 for 70.9 percent; Government and Services, $47,015 for 62.1 percent; and Professional, $51,673 for 50.7 percent.

"We're real excited" about the campaign, noted Roxanne Parks, who represents the Professional Division.

"My division is doing better than the (Dallas) Cowboys," quipped Georgia Reeves of the Residential Division, which has reached almost 62 percent of its goal. Her husband is a fan of professional football.

The Business and Entertain Division has "hit a stumbling block," noted Doug Smith, "but we'll come through."

Independent Oil is "doing better than last year," noted Ms. Devenport. And the Major Oil Division, which is still seeking United Way pledges, has a "rather lofty goal," noted Bruce Welborn.

Jack Swallow, a former yell leader for the Texas Tech University Red Raiders, said his Education Division has "not raised one red cent." However, he promised that the Education Division soon would complete pledges, as the new fall semester picks up.

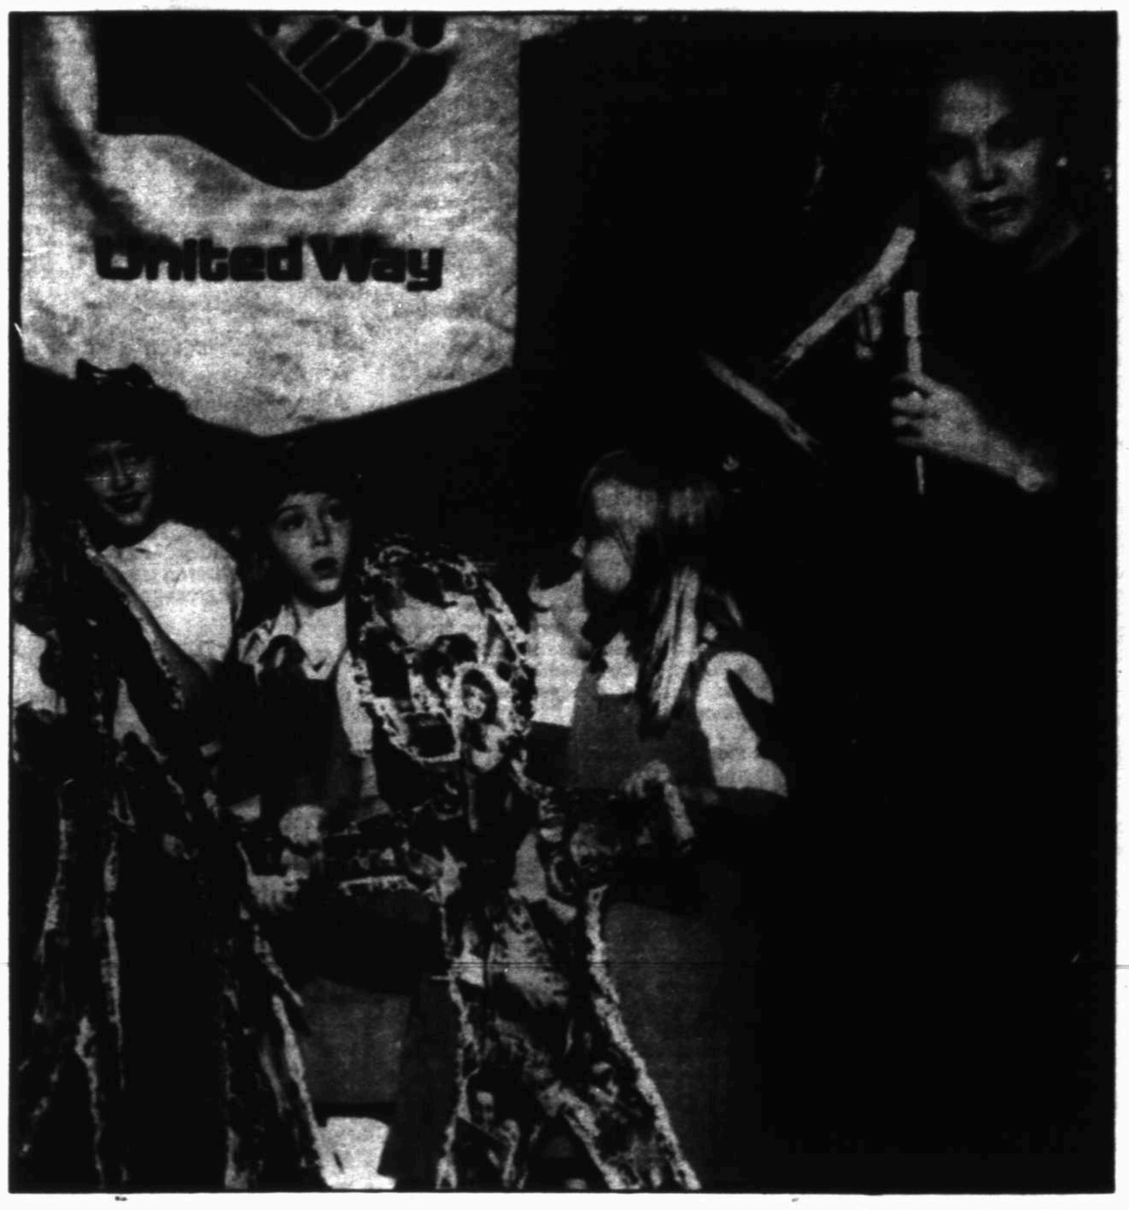

In jest, Swallow suggested that students of United Way supporters forgo lunch and give their 25-cent milk and $1-lunch money to their teachers, so that they could pledge support to United Way.

"Your child will go hungry all day long," he joked.

And 11 Girls Scouts presented the United Way with a collage depicting the many facets of United Way agencies.

Girl Scout Nicole Boyle of Troop No. 396 said the collage, patterned after United Way's holding-hands symbol, shows "people helping people."

United Way agencies, said Nicole, 8, perform such services as feeding hungry people, helping people stop their abuse of drugs, and helping "people have a better life."

Pledges directly affect neighbors' lives

EDITOR'S NOTE: Following are questions often asked about how the United Way works. The answers are provided by local United Way officials.

I have difficulty myself making ends meet. Why should I give to the United Way?

Few people are shielded from the continuing increase in the cost of living. It affects us all. When a United Way pledge is spread over a full year, though, the deduction is barely noticeable. At the same time, the United Way is the most economical means of taking care of our own community. Our pledge directly affects the lives of thousands of neighbors who call on the agencies of United Way. A contribution also helps to ensure that the program provided by United Way member-agencies still will be there if the contributor or someone in his or her family ever needs the programs.

I want to contribute, but I don't want any of my money going to (such-and-such agency). How can I do this?

The United Way is made up of various type of agencies — some with possibly contrasting outlooks on community needs, who have learned to "live together" for the common good. Although a contributor may not like one agency, there are other agencies which would benefit from his pledge.

A contributor may designate the United Way agency or agencies to receive his or her contribution. This information must be noted on the pledge card to United Way in order to record the designation and to inform the agency or agencies, so that the designated gift may be acknowledged.

My husband (or wife) gives to United Way where he (or she) works. Why should I be asked to also give?

Each spouse is asked to contribute in relation to his or her individual income. As a wage earner, each spouse derives benefits from this community and, in return, has the responsibility of putting something back into the community to make it a better place.

Someone I know was denied help from a United Way agency. Why?

This question can only be answered when all the facts are known. Why kind of help was needed? To which agency did the person apply? When did it happen? If the United Way is given the information, it can investigate, find out what happened and why, insist on corrections when necessary, or clear up misunderstanding and get a report back to the person who made the complaint.

Why do agencies charge fees if they receive a United Way allocation?

While the United Way is trying to raise $2.35 million on behalf of its member agencies, this figure does not cover anywhere near 100 percent of the agencies' needs. In order to bring in additional income to support their programs, many agencies charge program-service or membership fees. Some services, such as counseling, are charged on a sliding-fee schedule. Those who can afford to pay the full cost of the service are asked to do so, and those who cannot are charged according to financial capability or receive the service free.

Economic issues affect sexes equally, Delco says

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

Economic development and a need for new resources are issues that affect women and men equally, said six-term State Rep. Wilhelmina Delco speaking at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin Thursday.

Traditional women's issues like day care and equal pay are all tied into economic development, the 58-year-old representative from Travis County explained after her speech.

"I just think women are part of the whole much more now," she said.

During her talk to members of the UTPB Women's Center, Mrs. Delco said, "Our economic development is going to depend on the nurturing and development of young people's minds."

By the year 2000, one out of every three Texans will be black or Hispanic and more attention needs to be paid to this segment of the population that is "undereducated, underutilized and underserved," she said.

Also the pool of young people working to pay the Social Security checks of retirees will shrink from seven working people for every retired person in 1977 to three employees for every retired person in 1990, she said.

"It's in the vested interest of all of us to see that these young people are gainfully employed."

A college education is essential because the days of high-paying, unskilled jobs are over, Mrs. Delco said.

"It's a giant step down from $21 an hour to $4 an hour. There are not a lot of people prepared to face that result," she said.

To survive a rapidly changing job market, people must learn to be flexible in their careers, she said.

Most young adults entering careers today will probably change jobs up to seven times, she said.

A liberal education aids in making young people flexible, she said.

"Education is important. More and more people are recognizing this is the way up. This is the way out," Mrs. Delco said.

FBI knew of death threats against Sessions, marshal says

By KEVIN JOHNSON
Hearst News Service

SAN ANTONIO — Federal officials here were told at least six weeks ago that three notorious crime figures allegedly were plotting to assassinate FBI Director-designate William Sessions and Assistant U.S. Attorney Wayne Speck.

Jim B. Brown, chief deputy U.S. Marshal in San Antonio, said Thursday that marshals working security at the Helena, Montana, murder-conspiracy trial of San Antonian Jack L. Dickie were informed of the alleged threats and passed the information on to the San Antonio office.

At that time, Brown said, he called the local FBI office and subsequently was informed that a federal investigation had begun.

Dickie, one of the subjects of the FBI probe, was convicted last month in Montana of conspiring to murder three business partners to collect large life insurance payments.

Sessions' contact with Dickie dates to 1985 when Sessions, as the chief U.S. district judge of the Western District of Texas, sentenced Dickie to 20 years in prison for fraud.

Sessions is to leave his federal judge post Nov. 2 when he is sworn in as FBI director.

"It (news of the threats) happened while my counterpart (Dave Bradley) in Montana was working court security detail," Brown said. Bradley told Brown of the alleged threats, Brown said, "because Sessions and Speck are from San Antonio."

Brown said he has offered the assistance of the marshal's office in the matter but was informed the FBI would handle protective services provided Sessions and Speck.

Speck prosecuted Dickie twice on fraud charges and was instrumental in effecting the prosecution of Dickie in Montana on the murder conspiracy charges.

Sessions, who reportedly was briefing privately Thursday after accounts of the alleged threats were published, refused to comment on the reports.

Howard County man to be charged in three deaths

From Staff Reports

BIG SPRING — One Howard County resident will be charged with capital murder for the deaths of three people in incidents six months apart, and is the link between the two cases, Howard County Sheriff A.N. Standard said this morning.

Three Howard County residents were charged Thursday with capital murder for the Oct. 10 killing of two Mexican nationals, Miguel Calixto and Narberto Gurrala Hernandez. Both were shot in a farmhouse in the community of Luther, 15 miles north of Big Spring, Standard said.

The three charged Thursday were Orlando Aguirre, 19, Enrique Sebedo, 17, and Antonio Aguilar, 21. The bond for each was set at $125,000 by Justice of the Peace Bill Shankles. They were being held at the Howard County Jail.

Earlier this week, five people were charged with capital murder for the killing of 40-year-old Noe Perez of Garland. Perez's decapitated and burned body was found Saturday morning by a hunter north of Stanton, Martin County Sheriff Dan Saunders said.

The five were also being held in lieu of $125,000 bond each, Standard said.

Perez was probably killed sometime in April, Standard said.

The sheriff added that the three murders were related, and that one of the suspects would be charged in all three deaths.

"There is going to be another party filed on," Standard said. "One of the eight will be charged in both incidents. That is the correlation."

Standard said he believes the three slayings were drug-related, but he declined further comment.

DEATHS

William Beuck

Beuck

Services for William "Bill" Beuck, 70, of Midland, will be held at 11 a.m. Saturday at the Episcopal Church of the Holy Trinity with the Rev. Allen Whitman officiating. Interment will follow at Resthaven Memorial Park under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

Bueck died Wednesday evening at his home.

He was born April 19, 1917, in Olean, N.Y., and grew up in Oil City, Pa., where he attended school. He married Margaret Powers in Oil City on April 8, 1942. He received a degree in Mining Geology from Penn State University in 1940, and began work in South America with International Petroleum Company in Guayaquil, Ecuador.

In 1944, Bueck began his exploration work in the Mid Continent with Carter Oil Company, stationed in Seminole and Oklahoma City, Okla. In 1947 he returned to South America to work in Bogota, Colombia. In 1949, he transferred to Midland, worked briefly in Los Angeles, and returned to Midland until 1957.

In 1957, he went to Caracas, Venezuela, as chief geologist for Superior Oil Company and their Lake Maracaibo exploration project. He joined the J.I. O'Neill Oil Company in Midland in 1960, and served as chief geologist in geothermal exploration. He then worked with Midcal Oils Ltd. in Calgary, Canada, in the late 1960s.

Bueck joined Anadarko Petroleum Corp. in 1970, and moved to Fort Worth as foreign evaluation geologist. He is known as the "father" of Anadarko's geothermal program, and was the sole geologist assigned to the company's foreign exploration activities and to a subsidiary, Pan Eastern Exploration Company.

He returned to Midland in 1978, after living in Houston briefly. He retired in 1982 as a geological consultant and became an independent consultant for the company.

He was a member of the Episcopal Church of the Holy Trinity, the American Association of Petroleum Geologists, the West Texas Geological Society and the American Association of Independent Petroleum Geologists.

Survivors include his wife, Margaret Bueck of Midland; a daughter, Beverly Hooks of Fort Worth; a son, William "Bill" Bueck II of Fort Worth; a niece, Helen Oaks of Deerfield Beach, Fla.; and five grandchildren.

The family requests that memorials be directed to the Midland Energy Library, P.O. Box 3206, Midland, Tx., 79702, or to a favorite charity.

Edna Cox

Services for Mrs. Edna Cox will be held today at 2 p.m. at the Ellis Funeral Home chapel with Rev. Bob Porterfield officiating. Burial will follow in Resthaven Memorial Park under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

Pallbearers will be William Hartley, Mark Hartley, Phillip Merworth, Darin Merworth, Shane Arnold, and Tommy Melton. The honorary pallbearer will be Brad Merworth.

Dovie Mae Stephenson

Stephenson

Services for Mrs. Dovie Mae Stephenson of Midland will be at 9:30 a.m. Saturday at First United Methodist Church with Dr. Charles Lutrick, pastor, and Lawrence Houston, of Free Methodist Church, officiating.

Burial will follow in Fairview Cemetery under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

Mrs. Stephenson died Wednesday at a Midland hospital.

She was born Feb. 3, 1905, in San Marcos, where she was reared.

Following graduation from high school, she attended Southwest Texas State University and was a classmate of Lyndon Johnson. She graduated in 1926 with a teaching degree.

She taught school in Seguin before meeting and marrying Andrew Stephenson on July 15, 1929, in San Marcos. They moved to Baytown for six years and then to San Antonio where they resided from 1934 to 1976. At that time they moved to Midland to be near relatives.

Mrs. Stephenson was a sports enthusiast and she was strong supporter of high school athletics. Three of her children are coaches at local schools.

She was a member of Browning Methodist Church in San Antonio and the Free Methodist Church in Midland. She was also a member of the Rebekah Lodge in San Antonio.

Survivors include her husband; two sons, Taylor Stephenson of Artesia, N.M., and Jack Stephenson of Midland; three daughters, Ellen Godfrey, Shirley Stephenson and Jane Young, all of Midland; a foster daughter, Mary Stephenson of Midland; one brother, Jack Henserling of Poteet; one sister, Nettie Forest of Falfurrias; 12 grandchildren; seven great-grandchildren and several nieces and nephews.

The family requests memorials be directed to Sul Ross University Scholarship Fund, care of Clynice Baker, 3113 Haynes, Midland, 79705.

Pallbearers will be Robert Young III, Michael Young, Richard Young, Steve Stoner, Patrick Stephenson, Randy Stoner, Michael Stephenson and Jon Stephenson.

Honorary pallbearers will be Billy Gilbreath, "Doc" Dodson, Paul Stueckler, Durward Wright, Lee Johnson, Henry Kitzman, Milton Fitts, the boys' and girls' basketball teams at Midland High School and the girls' basketball and golf teams at Lee High School.

George A. Lowe

Services for Rev. George A. Lowe of Midland will be at 11 a.m. Saturday at Greater St. Luke A.M.E. Church with the Rev. Elmer Wright officiating. Burial will follow at Fairview Cemetery with Jackson Funeral Home in charge of arrangements.

He died Tuesday morning at a Midland hospital following a lengthy illness.

Rev. Lowe began his ministry in the early 1930s and came to Midland in 1949 as pastor of Greater St. Luke A.M.E. Church, located at the time at the corner of Lee and Texas streets.

Under his leadership a new sanctuary was built at the present location, the corner of S. Adams and E. Kentucky streets. He served as pastor there until 1954.

He also had served as pastor at Johnson Chapel A.M.E. Church, Odessa; Wilhite A.M.E. Church, Waco; Lee Chapel, Brownwood; Johnson Chapel A.M.E. Church, Texarkana, Ark.; Baker's Chapel, Big Spring; and Bethel A.M.E. Church, Abilene.

He retired in 1977 but continued to serve the community in a variety of volunteer roles.

Survivors include one son, Ivory C. President, faculty dean of SBC seminary resign

WAKE FOREST, N.C. (AP) — A week after conservatives took over the board of trustees, the president and dean of faculty at Southeastern Baptist Theological Seminary announced they would resign rather than carry out the new board's fundamentalist agenda.

The new trustee board chairman, Robert D. Crowley of Rockville, Md., said Thursday the replacement for Dr. W. Randall Lolley will be a fundamentalist who believes the Bible is "inerrant" — the literal word of God, historically and scientifically factual.

"I would be an imbecile if I tried to tell you I didn't have some names going through my mind," said Crowley, who refused to name any. "I can assure that whoever he is, he will be an inerrantist."

Lolley, who has been president for 14 years, announced his resignation Thursday at the end of a sermon delivered in Southeastern's Binkley Chapel.

"I cannot fan into a flame a vision which I believe to be contradictory to the dream which formed Southeastern in 1951 and which has nourished me as a student and alumnus of the school," Lolley, 56, said. "I have reached some conclusions that make it necessary to begin discussing with the appropriate persons the termination of my presidency."

Lolley gave no date when the resignation would be effective. He has tentatively scheduled a Nov. 3 meeting with four members of the trustee board, including Crowley and new vice-chairman James R. DeLoach of Houston, to formalize plans and set a date.

Also Thursday, Professor Morris Ashcraft said he would resign as dean of the faculty because he could not implement the new trustee vision. He will continue as a professor of theology.

Moderate trustees Frank Jordan of Chula Vista, Calif., and Mark Caldwell of Hyattsville, Md., said conservatives had picked Lolley's successor before last week's meeting. Crowley called the claim "preposterous," and Jordan responded that "Crowley is a liar."

At an afternoon news conference on the campus, faculty leader Richard Hester told hundreds of cheering students Lolley and Ashcraft would not give in to demands for a "fundamentalist school." Hester said the faculty will continue to fight for academic freedom and resist implementation of a "New Right agenda" at Southeastern.

The resignations were the latest in a series of controversial events at North Carolina's only Southern Baptist seminary, which is caught up in a doctrinal dispute that has polarized the 14.6 million-member denomination.

J. Marse Grant, editor emeritus of the Baptist newspaper Biblical Recorder, said Lolley "got caught in the fundamentalist grip that has also planned to take over our Baptist State Convention."

"This is tragic," Grant said. "It's just one more step of this ruthless group that is power crazy."

Crowley praised Lolley as "one of the finest Christian statesmen I have ever known. He will be missed greatly."

He denied the prediction of some seminary teachers and students that the board was planning to fire the moderate Lolley. He was "completely and absolutely on his own" in deciding to quit, Crowley said.

Hester, president of the seminary's newly formed chapter of the American Association of University Professors, said Lolley's chapel statement showed he "cannot carry out the fundamentalist program being imposed on him as president by this board of trustees."

The conservative-moderate dispute has torn the Southern Baptist Convention since 1979. Conservatives believe the Scriptures are inerrant, while moderates say the Bible was divinely inspired but partly symbolic and open to interpretation.

Nurse retires after 20,478 babies

Hearst News Service

SAN ANTONIO — When the babies she helped deliver returned decades later all grown up and having their own babies, nurse Beulah Miller knew it was time to retire.

After all, she already had helped deliver 20,478 babies during her 38 years at Medical Center Hospital and the former Green Hospital here.

"I knew it was time to quit when I started seeing babies I delivered coming in to have their own babies," Ms. Miller quipped.

The hospital pulled out all the stops Thursday afternoon to throw her a retirement bash.

But Ms. Miller, who is a young and active 62, still is a little shocked by how long she has been helping pregnant mothers give birth to healthy youngsters.

One now middle-aged woman stopped Ms. Miller recently in a hospital corridor.

"Are you still here?" she asked the about-to-retire nurse. "My daughter is 30, and you were the nurse when she was delivered."

Although Ms. Miller has assisted in the delivery of 530 babies on average each year of her career with the Bexar County Hospital District, during her student nurse days she had her doubts about such work.

"I realized when I was on OB (obstetrics) that was the last place I wanted to go," Ms. Miller said with a burst of laughter. "There was just too much excitement."

Victim's action saves lion from death

GALVESTON (AP) — An 18-month-old lioness which injured a man earlier this month will not have to be killed because the victim will get rabies immunization, authorities said.

Thursday, State District Judge Roy Engelke thanked attorneys representing the lion's owner and the Galveston County Health District for settling the matter among themselves. Had the two sides not agreed, Engelke would have decided whether the 320-pound beast should be destroyed for rabies tests.

Shanda the lioness, in training for an exotic animal show in the coastal town of Crystal Beach, bit a man Oct. 13, causing minor injuries. The Galveston County Health District claimed state health regulations mandated the animal be killed for laboratory tests.

The lion's owner, Mike Kujawa, obtained a temporary court order preventing health officials from taking any action in the case pending Thursday's hearing. After attorney's worked out the agreement, bite victim Shawn Schilder, 20, left the courthouse for the University of Texas Medical Branch to receive the first of six rabies shots in the arm.

SESSIONS

However, Alice Sessions criticized the published reports as bait that could bring more threats against her husband and their family.

"That kind of story puts us open to every nut who crawls out of the woodwork," Mrs. Sessions said. "This is not the first (death threat). It is one in a series over a number of years."

Charlie Parsons, special agent-in-charge of the San Antonio FBI office, declined comment on the matter.

Federal officials believe Dickie pursued the plot against Sessions and Speck with Ohio crime figure Thomas J. Dillon, a suspect in several drug-related slayings across the country, according to an article published earlier this week in the Cleveland Plain Dealer newspaper. Dillon is on trial in Columbus, Ohio, on cocaine distribution charges.

The third man believed to be involved is R. Keith Nolley, an attorney who was murdered in Knoxville, Tenn., last June.

Dillon has been charged with Nolley's murder, and the Ohio newspaper reported authorities believe Dickie hired Dillon to kill the lawyer after he began cooperating with federal authorities investigating Dickie.

In addition to Speck and Sessions, threats also were made against David Smith, a U.S. Customs agent in Great Falls, Montana.

Neither Speck nor Smith would comment on the matter Thursday. Federal officials who asked not to be identified have told the Hearst Newspapers attempts were being made to evaluate the allegations to determine whether Sessions should be given extra protection.

DELCO

As chair of the Texas House Higher Education Committee, Mrs. Delco said the last couple of legislative sessions have been very discouraging for the "education junkies."

However, she added that she has begun to notice encouraging signs for education in this year's legislative session.

College officials are beginning to work together and a partnership between industry and education is starting to emerge, Mrs. Delco said.

With three women in the state Senate, Mrs. Delco said she is also optimistic that more women will hold positions in Texas state politics.

"I think more women are going to realize they've got an interest in what goes on in Austin," she said.

WEST TEXAS IN BRIEF

Sheriff's office looking for two alleged attackers

From Staff Reports

Police Roundup

Midland sheriff's investigators are searching for two men who approached a 33-year-old man at a local convenience store parking lot late Wednesday, then allegedly stabbed him when he refused to give them money.

The incident occurred Wednesday between 10:15 p.m. and 10:20 p.m. at Whit's Grocery, on the east side of State Highway 349, near County Road 135, according to reports. Two men approached a store customer in the parking lot, asked him for a cigarette and a "couple of dollars," and when he refused one suspect grabbed him while the other stabbed him once in the abdomen.

The men, described only as Hispanic, left in a small brown car, which may have been a Ford Pinto, reports said.

The victim was admitted to Midland Memorial Hospital, and this morning was listed in good condition, MMH spokeswoman Sue Ristom said.

Midland police are investigating the burglary of a vehicle while it was parked in the 100 block of West Dormard Avenue. Reports said a cassette deck valued at $158 was stolen from the vehicle Thursday between 2 a.m. and 9 a.m.

Police have identified a suspect in the burglary, reports said.

In other reports, a welder's torch with 100-foot hose valued at $300 was stolen from a pickup truck while it was parked in the 300 block of East New York Avenue.

The burglary occurred Thursday between 3 a.m. and 4:45 p.m., reports said.

McDonald house opens

From Staff Reports

The Ronald McDonald House of Odessa — a facility designed to provide temporary housing to families of seriously ill children — opened today at 620 S. Grant Ave.

The facility is operated by a nonprofit, tax exempt organization registered with the state and was formed for the single purpose of developing and running a Ronald McDonald House in Odessa.

For families of seriously ill children, the house will offer a refuge from the hospital, a home away from home, where they can have a room of their own, a comfortable bed, kitchen and laundry facilities, toys for their children and a hot cup of coffee.

The Odessa house will primarily serve families with babies in intensive care units and receive help from the commitment of the Texas Tech University Permian Basin Regional Academic Health Center at Odessa.

The Ronald McDonald House will operate on a projected budget of about $60,000 a year. This amount includes the salary of one full-time employee. Money is expected to be raised by fund-raisers and private donations on both the local and national levels.

A 20-member board of directors and a four-member advisory board will oversee the home.

MISD bands in contest

From Staff Reports

Freshman and high school marching bands of the Midland Independent School District will march in the District University Interscholastic League Marching Contest Saturday, Oct. 24, at Ratliff Stadium in Odessa.

The schedule for the bands is as follows: Lee Freshman High School, 6:30 p.m., Midland Freshman High School, 6:45 p.m., Lee High School, 7 p.m., and Midland High School, 7:45 p.m.

King survived 6 assassination tries

During his reign there were six recorded attempts to assassinate England's King George III. In one of the most dramatic, in 1800, an ex-soldier narrowly missed the monarch's head with a pistol shot in the Drury Lane Theater.

A few minutes after the incident, the king startled the audience by falling asleep.

Agricultural Extension Service horticulturist focus of scholarship

Kiker

A memorial scholarship has been established at Texas A&M University honoring Dr. Lewis Austin Stockton Jr., horticulturist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service at Fort Stockton, who died Sept. 24 at the age of 36. The Austin Stockton Memorial Scholarship will provide financial support and assistance for deserving students. Charles Webb, district extension director at Fort Stockton, reported that this scholarship will serve as a perpetual reminder of Stockton's years of service and dedication to the people of West Texas and the science of horticulture.

Stockton, who had received a Ph.D. from Texas A&M, made many contributions to improving the quality of life for West Texans. His educational work with the Chihuahuan Desert Research Institute, numerous garden clubs and individuals similarly interested in the beauty of plant life of West Texas, can testify to his interest and appreciation for the people and plant life of the area. Since Stockton worked as area horticulturist for 22 counties in West Texas, Dr. Sam Cotner, horticulture project coordinator at A&M, said that it will be important to fill his position as soon as possible.

Stockton was instrumental in developing the Permian Basin Farmers' Markets, which were started in 1986 and provide fresh, locally grown fruits and vegetables to the people of Midland, Odessa and Big Spring. The markets also have helped provide income to more than 60 Permian Basin families who grow and sell the produce.

Stockton conducted applied research in the control of problem weeds and the use of micronutrients on fruit and nut crops in West Texas. He worked closely with orchard and vineyard managers to teach them the benefits of these improvements and with vegetable growers to inform them of the best-suited vegetable varieties for this area. His work with landscapes emphasized the use of plant materials that are well-adapted to the arid climate, temperature extremes and salty water of West Texas.

Stockton was an outstanding photographer and had worked for the San Angelo Standard Times for five years prior to receiving his doctorate in horticulture. Born in San Angelo Jan. 25, 1951, he was diagnosed in May of this year as having cancer, and died four months later. He was married to the former Mearline Parker and had a daughter, Colby McKenzie, and a son, Bryon McKenzie.

Tax deductible donations may be made to this memorial by mailing contributions to the Austin Stockton Memorial Scholarship Fund, P.O. Box 1298, Fort Stockton, Texas 79735.

For more information, call the Extension Office at 687-1351.

Scientist searches for superlative spud

WASHINGTON (AP) — An Agriculture Department geneticist is still looking for the perfect potato, but each October he gets a little closer.

More precisely, Raymon E. Webb is looking for a number of perfect potatoes, special ones that can be mashed, chipped, french fried, baked, boiled or grilled.

Each autumn a special potato harvest is held at the agency's 57-acre Chapman Farm near Presque Isle, Maine, where more kinds of potatoes are unearthed in one field than any place else in the country.

This fall's harvest was attended by plant breeders from 20 states to make final selections of potatoes that will be tested over the next few years. After years of testing, a few, or one, or none, will be released for commercial use.

Webb, who works at USDA's research center in Beltsville, Md., began the cooperative harvest in 1971 and has released 12 new varieties of potatoes since them. Each fall, farmers and snack food companies as well as plant breeders flock to the Maine farm.

Americans each eat about 125 pounds of potatoes a year, about half from fresh potatoes and half in processed products, Webb said.

Webb said breeders will test yellow-fleshed potatoes and disease-resistant red types bred to strengthen U.S. potato seed exports to Central and South America and Africa, markets that are now supplied from Europe.

Corn, soybean harvest progressing

AGRICULTURE

WASHINGTON (AP) — Although rain slowed field operations in some areas, a government report says the 1987 harvest of corn and soybeans is rapidly drawing to a close, far ahead of the usual progress this time of year.

The corn harvest reached 76 percent completion in the week of Oct. 12-18, an increase of 16 percentage points from the previous week and double the 38 percent progress of a year ago, the Joint Agricultural Weather Facility said Tuesday. The long-term average is 32 percent by mid-October.

"Harvest was ahead of normal in all major producing states except Colorado, Georgia and North Carolina," the report said.

The soybean harvest was reported at 77 percent completed, compared with 37 percent a year ago and a normal mid-October progress of 43 percent.

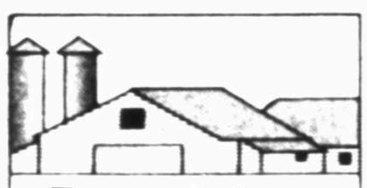

"Harvest was nearing completion in the Corn Belt, northern Great Plains and Nebraska," the report said. "Significant harvest gains of 15 (percentage) points or more were registered (during the week) in Arkansas, Kansas, Michigan, Mississippi, Missouri, Nebraska and Tennessee."

The facility is operated by the departments of Agriculture and Commerce. Its reports include the general condition of crops but do not offer any production estimates.

According to USDA's most recent production estimates, this year's corn harvest will total about 7.14 billion bushels, down 13 percent from 1986 because of acreage cutbacks under federal commodity programs. Yields per acre, however, are estimated at a record high.

Soybean production, at 1.97 billion bushels, is up 1 percent from last year, according to the department's October estimate.

Farmers had planted 87 percent of the winter wheat crop by the end of the week, compared with 71 percent a year ago and the normal pace of 74 percent, the report said.

Farm debt

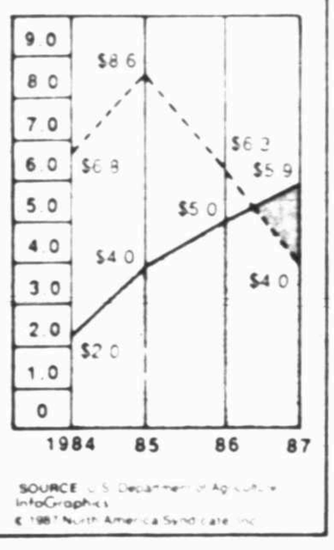

The farm debt at risk ... the potential losses ... financially stressed borrowers default on their loans ... totaled $4 billion in 1987, down from $6.3 billion in 1986 and $8 billion in 1985. Actual loan losses have steadily increased since 1984, reaching an estimated $6.9 billion in 1987; actual losses exceeded potential losses as farmers financially stressed in 1986 defaulted in 1987.

Dry weather drawing complaints from farmers

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Dry weather continued to stalk Texas agriculture this past week as complaints from farmers and ranchers became louder in nearly all areas.

Only the Panhandle and the High Plains still have adequate soil moisture, said Dr. Zerle L. Carpenter, director of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, The Texas A&M University System.

Yet, the state's overall agricultural picture remains fairly bright and probably will be recorded as one of the best in recent years from the weather standpoint, Carpenter said.

He said livestock, ranges and pastures are holding up well in most areas, despite the sudden dry spell, which contrasts markedly with the timely rains in the spring and most of the summer. Livestock prices, cattle in particular, continue strong and steady although there has been some softening in the past two weeks because of increased marketings from declining forage.

Carpenter said the sunny weather helps field work and harvesting of such major income crops as cotton, corn, sorghum, soybeans, peanuts and rice. One of the most plentiful hay crops in many years has been harvested and stored, ready for winter feeding. Some districts report that hay is in its third cutting.

But in some areas, no measureable rain has fallen since early summer. It is so dry in the Hill Country, the southwestern and southern parts of the state that stockmen are preparing for supplementary feeding.

Many of the small grain crops for winter grazing, such as oats and wheat, are at a standstill. In some cases, farmers and ranchers are waiting for rain before planting the grains, or are forced to irrigate before planting.

A fair to good corn crop is now harvested throughout Texas. Cotton harvesting is just starting in the High Plains and the Panhandle, and is either finished or well along elsewhere.

Like cotton, sorghum harvesting has been delayed by cool weather in the upper third of the state but is winding down in the central regions and is essentially finished in the south.

The following conditions were reported by Extension district directors:

PANHANDLE: Timely rains during the past week have pushed wheat to good stands for winter grazing. Pastures and cattle also are in good shape and markets are favorable. Most of the corn is out of the fields, and the sorghum harvest ranges from just started to 60-70 percent. Sugar beets, boasting excellent sugar content, are 15 percent harvested. Cotton is opening well.

FAR WEST: Dry weather favors cotton harvesting, which is producing good quality fiber. Ranges and livestock are holding up well. Lambs are bringing $65-$70 a head. Forbs are expected to provide excellent winter grazing.

WEST CENTRAL: Small grains need rain, but cotton farmers don't because harvesting is beginning. Livestock remain in good shape. Early varieties of pecans are being gathered and the outlook is favorable.

CENTRAL: Although livestock are in good shape, pastures and small grains are suffering drouth stress. The cattle market is steady. The pecan crop is only fair because dry weather has hurt quality.

SOUTH: Good weather is pushing hay cutting. Livestock conditions are good and heifer prices remain strong. Cucumbers and mixed greens are in ample supply, onion planting continues, and peppers and cabbage are growing well.

SOUTHWEST: Dry weather has ranchers worried over the winter pasture outlook. Growth of small grains and pasture grasses are at a standstill. Even if good rains come now, the time left before the first killing frost is not enough to grow sufficient winter forage.

Foundation spraying way to turn bug's attention away from home

Minzenmayer

As the weather turns cooler, insects seek a place that provides food and warmth for the winter. All too often, the place is your place! But with a simple application of spray to your home's foundation, you can help keep bugs out of your home all winter long.

Foundation spraying is so effective because bugs must cross the outside foundation on their way into or out of your house. The foundation spray provides a chemical barrier that insects cannot cross.

Ants, crickets, waterbugs, and spiders are familiar intruders. Ants build nests in the soil along the foundation or in the yard. They forage in the house for food and carry it across the faoundation to their nests. Crickets migrate from the lawn to the foundation and into the house during cooler weather.

Waterbugs enter homes in a variety of ways. Usually, they surry back and forth from the storm drains to the house crossing the foundation as they do. Spiders will enter and leave your home readily. But an application of foundation spray in the fall stops these bugs before they enter your home.

To apply a foundation spray, walk around the house slowly, spraying the foundation three to four inches above the ground. Spray the foundation just to the point of runoff, spraying all the way around the house. Also, be sure to spray a two to four inch band of soil along the foundation and behind concrete steps and concrete slabs abutting the foundation.

Pay particular attention to corner, door and basement window moldings, and visible cracks in the foundation. A medium coarse spray provides the most effective coverage for foundations.

The compressed air sprayer is an ideal applicator for foundation spraying. It allows precise control over the amount and direction of the spray. This means accurate application with no wasteful drenching.

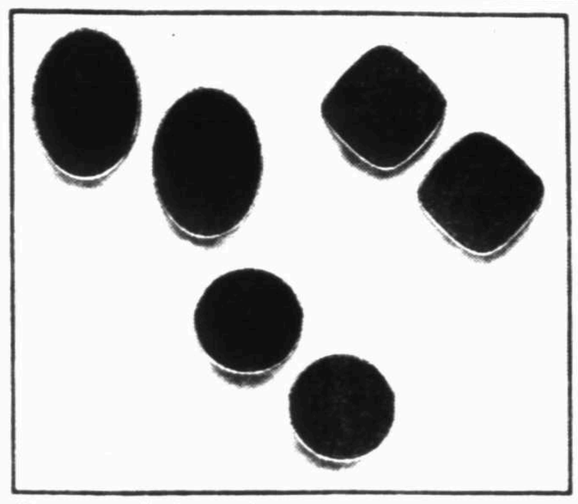

Tank capacities for compression sprayers range from one to four gallons. The average house will need 4 to 6 gallons of spray to cover the foundation. Compression sprayers are portable and provide easy access to hard-to-reach areas under porches and outside stairs.

Honduran woman says U.S. policies force peasants off land

STATE

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — U.S. troops should exit Honduras, where military bases built to support Nicaraguan rebels have forced more than 16,000 poor people from their homes, a Honduran peasant leader says.

"Peasants are being evicted from land that took them so much time and trouble to get," Elvia Alvarado told the San Antonio Light's editorial board Thursday. "We want the Contras out and the U.S. out."

Ms. Alvarado, a leader in one of the biggest and most active peasant unions in Honduras, also spoke Thursday night at Incarnate Word College to promote her new book, "Don't Be Afraid, Gringo: A Honduras Woman Speaks from the Heart."

U.S. support of the Contras is hurting the peasants, she said.

"U.S. arms to the Contras is not good. We don't need arms. We aren't in a war. Even economic aid does not go to the poor people. The aid always ends up in the hands of the Contras, the military or the government rather than helping the poor people."

The peasants are starving or malnourished and lack land, health care and schools, Ms. Alvarado said. Yet any attempts to improve their lot causes the government to label them as communists, she said.

Ms. Alvarado is a member of the National Congress of Rural Workers that represents 25,000 peasants who want to obtain land for the homeless. The group tries to stop abuses of the agrarian reform law of 1972, which states land not used for farming or grazing must be given to the homeless.

The organizer's outspokenness has landed her in jail four times, and she said she was tortured during the last stay. She said she expects similar treatment when she returns from her 17-city U.S. tour.

Unexplained fire slows cleanup of dump near river

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — An unexplained fire has slowed the cleanup of an unauthorized Mexican dump's plastic debris and other garbage that spilled into the Rio Grande, officials said.

The debris included thousands of plastic bags, many of which made it downstream to a nature preserve operated by the National Audubon Society.

Removal of the refuse was delayed by a fire that started last week at the dump site on the steep banks of the river near Matamoros, Mexico, said Michael Baters, southern operations manager for Parker Seal Co. in McAllen.

A contractor hired to take the plant's garbage unloaded it on a steep bank by the river, along with refuse from other companies, Baters said.

"He took it upon himself to dump it there," Baters said Thursday, adding that Parker Seal then fired the contractor.

Company officials said they think someone who wanted to embarrass them set the fire, which smoldered with toxic plastic fumes for several days.

"Our immediate objective is just to get it off the bank so the bags don't fall down into the water," plant engineer David Jarman told The Brownsville Herald. "One good thing about the fire is that now there won't be any plastic bags floating downstream."

Pressure from environmentalists and the International Boundary and Water Commission resulted in the McAllen company's pledge to clean up the dump discovered by an Audubon warden.

The company, a part of Cleveland, Ohio-based Parker Hannifin Corp., operates Brownsville Rubber Co. de Matamoros, a twin plant where it employs Mexican labor to produce O-rings for automobiles and plumbing.

"It should be all cleared up in a day or two," Baters said Thursday.

The IBWC found piles of plastic parts bags and debris along a 225-foot stretch of the river, said Tom Hutchins, the agency's project manager for the Lower Rio Grande Valley flood control project. A treaty with Mexico prohibits anything that would obstruct or deflect the flow of the river, Hutchins said.

IBWC officials contacted the company after they found rubber o-rings and boxes with the company's McAllen address at the site.

Officials with the Audubon Society's Sabal Palm Grove Sanctuary four miles downstream reported plastic bags had been building up there for more than a year.

The sanctuary is a remnant of the forest of sabal palms that once grew along the final stretch of the river.

Soviet dancer picked right woman

Soviet dancer Andrei Ustinov, right, walks to a news conference Thursday in Dallas with Cindy Parrish after the two met for the first time since Ustinov was granted asylum in the United States. Ms. Parrish arranged for FBI agents to pick Ustinov up last week after he approached her in a supermarket and asked for help.

DALLAS (AP) — A Soviet dancer says he knew he'd found someone to help him defect when he looked into Cindy Parrish's eyes.

But luck played a part, too — by chance, Andrei Ustinov had found a woman who had seen a Moscow Ballet performance a week before and knew immediately what was happening when the frantic dancer approached her.

Ustinov smiled broadly Thursday and embraced Ms. Parrish in the first meeting he has had with her since she helped him defect last week in the most American of settings — a supermarket.

Ms. Parrish, a 25-year-old saleswoman for an air conditioner manufacturer, was at the grocery store trying to get some firewood off an upper shelf. From behind her, someone lent a helping hand.

"I turned around to thank him, and it was him," Ms. Parrish said Thursday, pointing to 32-year-old Ustinov, who left behind his country, his family and the Moscow Ballet.

"He was very scared, panicked, and was saying, 'Help me, help me. USSR. Plane leave tonight. KGB be looking for me,' " she told reporters at a news conference.

She said she knew what was happening because she had been to the first of three performances in Dallas last week by the Moscow Ballet, which is on a 21-city U.S. tour. Ustinov was a lead dancer with the troupe.

Ustinov requested political asylum, and on Saturday, two days after his hasty exit from the Dallas hotel where the troupe was staying, government officials granted his request.

At a news conference Wednesday, Ustinov told reporters of a "lovely girl" he knew only as Cindy who helped him when he ran from the hotel to a nearby shopping area. Officials then arranged a Thursday reunion.

"I watch American people...I watch American girls, and I think, yes," he said, explaining how he had sought out Ms. Parrish.

He said he felt after looking into her eyes she could help him.

"I have the gift of mercy," Ms. Parrish said. "Bums have always been kind of attracted to me."

In fact, she at first thought Ustinov was a "cute" panhandler when he sought her aid at 6 p.m. Oct. 15.

At the Dallas Ballet, where Ustinov plans to perform for three months, the two met Thursday as reporters looked on.

"I speak, Cindy, bravo!" Ustinov said happily as Ms. Parrish tugged the Spuds McKenzie "Party Animal" T-shirt he also had worn the night of his escape. Ustinov expanded his American wardrobe later Thursday on a free shopping spree donated by a Highland Park men's clothing store.

"He looks so different than he did that night. He was so scared, saying 'Help me, help me, help me,' " Ms. Parrish said.

Ustinov had fled his hotel last week shortly before the dance troupe was to board a bus for a performance at Southern Methodist University.

"He pulled out his Russian I.D. card and itinerary. He was excited and speaking Russian, and he was talking very loud. People in the store were looking at us," Ms. Parrish said.

Ustinov pulled her shopping cart as they tried to find a pay telephone, she said. They went to a nearby 7-Eleven, called the FBI and agents in an unmarked car responded, whisking Ustinov away.

Government officials said Ustinov will be making his home in Dallas, at least temporarily. His first performance with the ballet here will be Nov. 10.

"He's very thankful for you. He's been talking a lot about you, and he wants to invite you to his opening performance with the Dallas Ballet," interpreter Nathalie Krassovska told Ms. Parrish, who moved to Dallas six months ago from Detroit.

The basis for granting asylum, Immigration and Naturalization Service officials said, was Ustinov's fear of persecution because of his religious beliefs.

State Sen. Bill Sarpalius, D-Amarillo, holds the agenda for the 1987 Southern Legislators Conference on Children and Youth scheduled for November in San Antonio at a press conference in Austin Thursday.

Better juvenile justice system needed, state senator says

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas needs to improve its public education and juvenile justice systems to battle dropout rates and keep youngsters from turning to a life of crime, says the state chairman of a conference examining youth issues.

In some states, "you can actually see the results of their work by the prison population declining, and the reason is because they put more emphasis on developing stronger juvenile programs," Sen. Bill Sarpalius, D-Amarillo, told a news conference Thursday.

Sarpalius also announced the agenda of the 1987 Southern Legislators Conference on Children and Youth. The conference is scheduled for Nov. 15 to 18 in San Antonio.

Texas must work to keep students from dropping out and perhaps turning to crime, Sarpalius said, citing a reported state high school dropout rate of 33 percent.

Sweeping education reforms enacted in 1984 are not addressing the whole problem, he added.

"I told (lawmakers in 1984) this was a great bill for preparing kids for college, but I said we failed on addressing the borderline student," he said.

"It's a whole lot cheaper to the taxpayers to invest your money in that kid in the second and third grade, and make sure they stay in school...than it is to build more prisons," he said.

Rep. Anne Cooper, a San Marcos Republican who is on the Texas advisory committee for the conference, said the state particularly needs to address the 50 percent Hispanic dropout rate.

"We are predicting that in the year 2010 or 2015, the majority of Texans will be from the minority," she said. "Somebody's going to have to take care of this state in the 21st century, and it's our responsibility to provide the opportunities for them so they have the capability of doing it."

Sarpalius also said juvenile delinquents should be made more accountable for the crimes they commit.

"In Texas, a kid who commits rape or murder or beats up a senior citizen...their average stay in (a Texas Youth Commission facility) is seven months," Sarpalius said.

Juveniles commit about one-third of all serious crimes, Sarpalius said, and 16-year-old boys commit crimes at a higher rate than any other single age.

Capital murder indictment to keep student out of regular high school

LUBBOCK (AP) — A capital murder indictment will keep a former candidate for senior class president out of Lubbock's regular high schools until his case is tried, school officials say.

Rodney Childress, 17, was named in a capital murder indictment returned last month, but the case hasn't been scheduled for trial yet. He and two others are accused in the Sept. 10 execution-style slayings of three people at a city residence.

"We just don't think it is a healthy situation for him to be on a regular campus where just anyone could walk up and do him harm," Gib Weaver, assistant superintendent for secondary schools, said Thursday.

Instead, said Weaver, Childress will be allowed to attend Project Intercept, the Lubbock Independent School District's alternative school.

Childress was released last week on $50,000 bond after spending five weeks in the Lubbock County Jail. Bail was raised by family, friends and supporters, defense attorneys said.

The other defendants remain in jail without bond.

Bill Sowder, one of Childress' attorneys, said he had been told by LISD officials that Childress would not be allowed to attend regular classes at Coronado High School because he had missed more than 12 days of school.

"We were specifically told it (the refusal) was not because of the capital murder case," Sowder said.

But LISD spokeswoman Leslie Cross said that although excessive absences would prohibit Childress' earning credits this semester, the decision to assign him to Project Intercept was based on the fact that he is under indictment.

STATE IN BRIEF

Property forfeited after club owners plead guilty

BROWNSVILLE (AP) — More than $600,000 in property was forfeited to the U.S. government when two night club owners pleaded guilty to federal narcotics violations.

They were among eight suspects arrested in an Aug. 21 roundup by drug agents. Property seized during the raid included 16 cars, two airplanes and the Super Autos Gonzalez car lot in Brownsville.

Javier Gonzalez Saenz, 36, pleaded guilty Wednesday to two counts of an 18-count sealed indictment issued July 28, charging members of an alleged drug ring with trafficking narcotics and continuing a criminal enterprise.

Drug Enforcement Administration agents described the ring as "a significant narcotics organization which we feel was responsible for large quantities of various controlled substances being smuggled and shipped through this area."

Gonzalez, co-owner of the Palomino's Night Club in Brownsville, was charged in all 18 counts, but pleaded guilty to possession with intent to distribute 1,000 tablets of secobarbital and conspiracy to import about 200 pounds of marijuana.

Church robber gets 70 years

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A jury with a Methodist minister as foreman has set 70 years in prison as punishment for a man accused of robbing the poor box at a Roman Catholic church of about $1,900.

The jurors set the punishment Thursday for Guadalupe Garay, 32, who had been charged with aggravated robbery in connection with the robbery at St. Margaret Mary's Catholic Church.

With the Rev. Larry Clinton Howard of the Northern Hills United Methodist Church as foreman, the jury took only 15 minutes Thursday to find Garay guilty and about an hour to set his punishment.

Assistant District Attorney Mark Luitjen had sought a life sentence, but he said 70 years amounts to a life sentence, which is anything over 60 years.

Inmate's execution stayed

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals has granted a stay of execution for death row inmate Willie Mack Moddon, who was scheduled to die by injection next week.

The appeals court is expected to rule today on inmate Curtis Lee Johnson's case. The court denied Johnson a stay earlier this month, but a supplemental application for a stay was filed with the court Thursday, court spokesman Rick Wetsel said.

Johnson, 33, scheduled to be executed before dawn next Wednesday, was convicted of the 1983 shooting death of Murray Sweat, 25, during a burglary of Sweat's Houston apartment. The burglary netted $8 and a camera.

Johnson had previous execution dates in September and April 1986 that were stayed by federal judges.

Moddon, 39, was scheduled to die before dawn next Thursday for the July 29, 1984, death of Deborah Davenport, who was stabbed 16 times and died at a Lufkin hospital.

Cardinals run to 4-2 victory, lead Series, 3-2

By BEN WALKER
AP Baseball Writer

ST. LOUIS — After bouncing back in Busch Stadium, the St. Louis Cardinals are on the run as the World Series heads for a last homestand at the Dome.

Curt Ford's two-run single and a lucky hop broke open a scoreless game in the sixth inning as the Cardinals struck back with their speed for a three-game sweep and a 3-2 lead in the World Series, beating the Twins 4-2 Thursday night.

That put St. Louis within one victory of its 10th championship and sent the World Series back to the Metrodome, where Minnesota romped in the first two games.

"We did what we had to do," said Danny Cox, who shut out the Twins on three hits over seven innings. "It's going to be a tough road to travel, but a fun road. It's going to be a dog fight."

The Twins' 60-25 home record is the best in baseball and St. Louis was the top team on the road this year. Minnesota scored 18 runs on 21 hits in Games 1 and 2.

"We thought it was going to be a different story when we got back home," Ford said. "I think it's going to be a totally different story when we go back to the Metrodome."

Twins Manager Tom Kelly hoped so.

"There's no more games here. It'll be good to get back home," Kelly said. "We're going back home."

There was never been a World Series in which the home team won every game. But so far, this has been a home-sweet-dome matchup. Game 6 is Saturday with John Tudor, who won the third game, going against Les Straker.

ST. LOUIS' speed pulled the Twins apart at the seams. The Cardinals stole five bases, tying a record last accomplished in 1907, and three of those runners scored. That came after St. Louis ran itself out of two early scoring chances.

"Speed doesn't mean too much in that Dome. You can steal six bases and still lose 5-4," Cardinals Manager Whitey Herzog said. "I think they hit four balls here that would've been home runs there."

Vince Coleman's routine grounder turned into a leadoff single in the sixth when it skipped off an artificial turf seam, keying a three-run burst against Bert Blyleven.

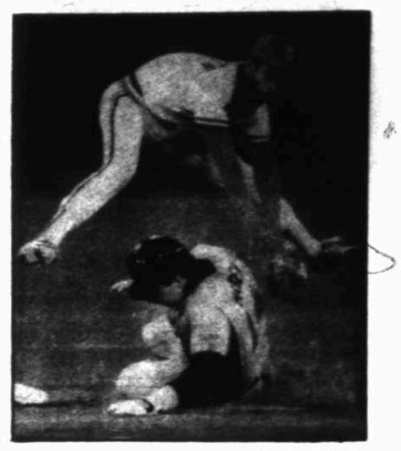

Coleman and Ozzie Smith each stole two bases, a balk was called with Coleman on first and Twins shortstop Greg Gagne made an error while rushing a play.

"We don't have our big shooter in there, Jack Clark, so we got to go out there and steal runs and produce runs somehow," Coleman said.

"I think it's easier to defense big guys who hit the ball out of the park than it is to defense our running game. Once a runner gets on, you've got the middle infielders jumping around, you've got the pitcher nervous, you've got the catcher thinking about making a throw. You've got one man on base and four guys thinking about the runner and not the man at the plate."

That's what happened, starting in the sixth.

"They're stealing bases, but they've done that against a lot of teams," Kelly said. "They hit one ball out of the infield and they scored three runs."

COX, WHOSE Game 7 shutout in the NL playoffs put the Cardinals into the World Series, outdueled Blyleven, who took his first loss in six postseason decisions. It was a reversal of four days ago, when Blyleven won as the Twins shelled Cox.

This time, on a 64-degree evening — 22 degrees warmer than a night earlier — Cox was hot. Cox struck out six and walked three and was removed in the eighth after allowing singles to Dan Gladden and Gagne, both of whom scored.

Blyleven managed to stay out of trouble until the sixth when St.Louis put together typical Cardinals' baseball and manufactured three runs.

Coleman led off with an apparent routine grounder to first baseman Kent Hrbek. But the ball's second hop scooted off a seam and handcuffed Hrbek, whose shovel toss to Blyleven was a shade late. Smith followed Coleman's 45th infield hit of the season with his fourth bunt sin-

4-5A titans in head-on collision

Permian hosts Lee in game too BIG to describe

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

ODESSA — To say a lot is riding on tonight's District 4-5A clash between Midland Lee and Odessa Permian isn't saying enough. The game is much too big for such a simple phrase. Descriptions like BIG GAME pale in comparison to the importance of this one because this one has everything.

First: There's the natural rivalry dislike between two schools in the same district that have risen to statewide prominence.

Second: The 4-5A standings. Permian, by virtue of not having a week off yet, is in first place at 4-0, 7-0 overall, followed by Lee at 3-0, 6-0.

Third: State rankings. Lee is ranked third and Permian is fourth or Permian is third and Lee is fourth, depending on which week's list you care to use.

Fourth: Lee has the best offensive attack in the state, averaging 448 yards per game while Permian is third at 437.

Fifth: Recent history. After years of domination by Permian, Lee has improved to .500 status, winning three of the past six outings.

Sixth: And the list goes on, and on, and on...

"You couldn't say it's like a normal district game, but a win or a loss is no more important than any other game," said Midland Lee coach Earl Miller. "If we win it, we're in first place. If we lose, then we have to win the next two."

Twenty miles away, Permian head coach Gary Gaines hasn't seen any extra nervousness in his players, but expects it to be there.

"They haven't indicated it to me but I don't think it would be normal if you didn't have anxieties in the players," said Gaines. "This is a big game and a lot of interest has been generated. The close proximity of the two teams lends itself to a big crowd."

IN THIS battle for 4-5A first place things appear, at first glance, to be evenly balanced. Both teams have potent offensive attacks and both teams play solid defense.

There is, however, one key difference, and that could prove to be the decisive factor: Size. And, the Rebels have plenty of it.

"We're giving up 50 pounds a man with our defensive front seven against their offensive line," said Gaines. "We don't match up size wise. They're so powerful I don't know if our quickness can offset their size advantage. We're just unusually small this year, defense in particular.

"They've got good size on both sides of the football," continued Gaines. "They just have an outstanding football team, offense, defense, kicking, the whole smear."

The Rebels have seven players tipping the scales at 200-plus pounds while Permian has only three. Rebel senior guards Paul Little and Steve Schlitchting lead the way at 265 and 240 pounds respectively while Lee defensive tackle Dejuan Norris comes in at 225.

Permian's largest player is defensive tackle Art Wagner at 215 while offensive tackle Shane Jenson weighs 210 and guard Bruce-Neatherlin 200.

While the Panthers don't have the size, they do have tradition on their side, along with the home field advantage.

"Permian hasn't lost many games in the 1980s," said Miller. "I think

A big crowd, yet another factor in the importance of this game, scheduled for an 8 p.m. kickoff at Ratliff Stadium. Estimates as high as a Permian Basin record 27,000 have been mentioned, with several thousand possible SROs in the two end zones.

Fort Worth Dunbar facing basketball investigation, penalty

By ROGER B. BROWN
Fort Worth Star-Telegram

FORT WORTH (AP) — Bewildered, betrayed, angry, frustrated and confused.

Fort Worth Dunbar students expressed all of the above after revelations about the Wildcats' basketball program being investigated.

The District 6-5A executive committee, made up of principals of the various schools, voted to hand the case on to the University Interscholastic League, which governs extracurricular activities statewide.

The league's executive committee will look into the case in the next 30 days, UIL athletic director Bill Farney said.

Dunbar is rated No. 1 in Texas in a preseason coaches poll and No. 11 nationally by a national sports magazine. Penalties assessed against Dunbar could range from a private reprimand to banning a school from district championship and post-season competition. The committee also could terminate a school's program.

According to two sources in the administration, head coach and athletic coordinator Lewis Hayes turned in the basketball program to the executive committee, alleging a violation involving a practice run too early under Texas high school rules.

The sources said Hayes alleged that Dunbar basketball coach Robert Hughes supervised an early morning practice by the Wildcats on Oct. 15. If true, that would be a violation of UIL rules, as the next Monday was the first day that high school basketball teams officially could start practicing.

Hayes has declined comment, as did other athletic staff members.

News of the investigation was rampant throughout the community, senior basketball player Truce Williams said.

"I think it all goes back to when Coach Hayes first came here. I think the reason he did it is because he has been trying to get some of the basketball players to try out for football and they wouldn't do it. So that was one of the ways he could get back at them. But I don't understand how he could do that to his own school," Williams said.

Hayes, 40, is in his first season at Dunbar after serving as an assistant coach at Terrell and had a 1-5 record through the first six games.

Ducking hexed bullets, pick Lee to roll

Williamson

If I've been asked once, I've been asked a 100 times this week, "Who will win 'The Game' this week?"

So, I've been searching for "The Answer." Fans know I pick the scores on Friday, and I've been besieged for an early preview. I don't give out my predictions until the paper rolls on Friday. That way I don't get shot before the ink dries.

Getting shot isn't my favorite pasttime, so I want to get this one right. I've gone to great lengths to get a handle on the score, beginning last Saturday in Lubbock.

While covering the Texas Tech-Rice game last weekend, even the scribes on hand wanted to know who would win "The Game." Nobody refers to this game as the Lee-Permian game — it's always "The Game." Even sports writers from Houston were wanting to know who would win "The Game."

I thought my chance to find out the real scoop would come in the Texas Tech media room. Tech head coach Spike Dykes was due there after his 59-7 victory over Rice, and if I remember correctly, Spike used to have something to do with "The Game."

The time never seemed right to pump that question in to Spike. First, there was live radio to deal with. Then some local TV cameras went to whirring. Other writers demanded their time.

So, in the middle of it all, with TV cameras rolling, radio mikes stuck in his face and reporters madly scribbling notes, I popped the question. "Spike, who are you picking in the Lee-Permian game?"

I felt like I had shot Spike between the eyes with a 30-30. He stopped cold still, paused for longer than I like to remember and answered — fortunately, for me, with a smile on his face — "You dirty dog. You're still asking questions I can't answer."

GONE WAS another chance to get the scoop. Spike wouldn't commit. It's not fair either. It won't be long before Spike will be asking players to commit.

So, I'll have to do this job without the help of Spike. With a 28-8 record in the picking game, here goes:

Midland Lee 30, Odessa Permian 14: It's really hard to make a prediction on a game that will depend on the attitude of 16 and 17-year-old athletes. Especially, when a record Permian Basin crowd of just under 27,000 is expected to be on hand. There isn't a bigger pressure cooker in high school football. But Lee may own the best overall team in the school's history. If they play like it, the Rebels could win big.

Abilene Cooper 28, San Angelo 24: There just isn't much conviction behind this pick. It could go either way, but Scotty Pugh to Jeff Ireland should be the ticket.

Abilene High 17, Odessa High 12: The Eagles climb to 6-2 on the season and keep hopes burning for the playoffs while dreaming of last year's 6-5 win over Lee.

Midland High 76, Open 0: The Bulldogs need the week of rest. But this victory won't insure a winning season. That comes next week against Odessa High.

1910 — Philadelphia's Jack Coombs won his third game of the World Series, beating the Chicago Cubs 7-2 at the Athletics' field. Coombs struck out nine batters, walked two and gave up seven hits. He also helped his own cause by driving in two runs, including the game-winning run in the fifth inning.

1983 — The Los Angeles Dodgers beat New York 5-2 in 12 innings to win the National League pennant. Steve Sax's single scored Rick Monday with the winning run. Dodger pitcher Jerry Reuss, who gave up nine hits and struck out seven batters, was the winning pitcher.

they've lost six games and three of those we beat them. That's unusual, it's unbelievable. They've got a tremendous tradition."

And, about Ratliff Stadium, Miller said it was in Permian's favor "because they've got more experience playing on turf. It's a lot different surface. They know how the ball bounces. Plus, turf can cause twice as many injuries and we're real slim on defense and that could hurt us."

STATISTICALLY, LEE and Permian match up extremely close on both sides of the ball.

Lee leads the league in total rushing with 2,446 yards followed by Permian's 2,394 effort. However, the Panthers have a pass attack that has outgained Lee 668-239 for a 3,062-2,685 total output.

Defensively, the Rebels hold the edge in overall yardage, allowing only 1,126 (187.7 per game) to Permian's 1,627 (232.4). The Panthers have fared better against the run, giving up 670 yards to Lee's 720, but the Rebels have been awesome against the pass, allowing only 406 yards to Permian's 957.

"They've got an outstanding defense and those two safeties (James Fennell and Eugene Farmer) are just tremendous athletes," said Gaines.

Both teams are loaded with running backs ranked in the top eight in the district led by Permian fullback Shawn Crow with 1,129 yards (8.4 average per carry) for 11 touchdowns. Lee fullback Waymon Goodley is second with 759 yards (8.5) while Permian tailback James Miles is third at 722 (9.3).

Lee has two halfbacks on the chart, led by Joe Woodard with 469 yards and a league-high 13 touchdowns, and Dennis Sterling with 436 yards.

Permian junior quarterback Mike Winchell is fifth in the league with 29-of-67 completions for 620 yards and eight TDs. Lee counters with the one-two punch of Geoff Rich and Dudley Jordan, 20-of-32 for 3 TDs.

FOR LEE to win the game, Miller feels his team has to, offensively, "do what we've been doing, run the football. We've got exceptional backs and we feel we have a balanced attack. We've got two halfbacks and a fullback and two quarterbacks who can run the ball. Against Midland High we threw the football for two touchdowns when they stacked the line and we threw the ball well in the second half against Odessa High when we needed to.

"Defensively, the first thing is to be able to stop Shawn Crow. He's averaging 160 yards a game and Miles has been averaging 110 a game. They are two good rushers right there with the best numbers and third best numbers in the district. If you can stop them, then they can throw the ball. Permian is a real balanced team."

And, like Gaines, Miller believes in his defensive backs.

"They throw the ball well but we've got an adequate secondary, we've done pretty well," said Miller. "We've got Eugene Farmer, who leads the district in interceptions (with four). Everybody we've played who is supposed to have a passing attack has had trouble with us."

According to Gaines, there is no stopping Lee.

"I don't think you can stop them. I think you've got to try and slow them down somehow, make them earn what they get," said Gaines. "You try and stop the long touchdown run or long touchdown pass. To say you're going to stop them, I don't think you can do that because they're too strong and too fast."

And, on offense, "We feel like we have to have the ability to throw the football against them because that's what we want to do, have a balanced attack if we can. However, we're primarily a running team, like Lee, and we feel we have to establish the run for the pass to be effective."

Either way you look at it, it's a tremendous collision.

Injured Lovington football player making progress

LUBBOCK (AP) — Lovington High School football player Eric Fitts continued Thursday to make some progress towards recovery at Lubbock Methodist Hospital.

Mary Thomas, a nursing supervisor, said Fitts was conscious off and on during the day and "is still critical but slowly improving."

Fitts, a quarterback, suffered a subdural hematoma — a collection of blood in the brain — during a football game last week with Portales.

The 17-year-old Fitts was taken to a Lovington hospital, then transferred to Lubbock Methodist. Earlier this week he was able to move both of his legs, but has continued to lapse in and out of consciousness, officials at the hospital said.

gle of the year as Blyleven fumbled the ball on the third-base side.

After Tom Herr fouled off two bunt attempts and fouled out, Coleman and Smith executed a double steal with Dan Driessen at the plate. Twins catcher Tim Laudner, who threw out just 19 percent of opposing base stealers this year, dropped the pitch and did not make a throw. Coleman, successful on 22 of 27 steal attempts at third base this year, later in the game got his sixth steal of the Series, one short of the Series record set by St. Louis' Lou Brock in 1967 and 1968.

Driessen was intentionally walked and Willie McGee was called out on strikes on three pitches before Ford, 2-for-2 with a walk against Blyleven in Game 2, lined a sharp single to center. Jose Oquendo then hit a chopper that shortstop Gagne charged in a hurry and misplayed for an error that allowed Driessen to score.

THE CARDINALS made it 4-0 in the seventh when Coleman drew a one-out walk from Keith Atherton, was balked to second and stole third. Jeff Reardon relieved and Coleman scored on Smith's single off second baseman Steve Lombardozzi's glove. Smith followed with his second steal, giving the Cardinals four in the game and an 8-3 edge in the Series.

The Twins scored their two runs in the eighth as Gladden and Gagne led off with singles and Cox got Kirby Puckett on a flyball to center. Ken Dayley came on and got Hrbek on a flyball to center and was replaced by Todd Worrell.

Gary Gaetti hit a flyball to deep center field that McGee had for a split second as he crashed into the wall. Gaetti was credited with a triple and Tom Brunansky ended the inning by flying out center.

The save was the second in the Series for Worrell, who walked two in the ninth but got pinch-hitter Don Baylor on a popup to end the game.

A cheering crowd of 55,347 saw the Cardinals become the 51st team to hold a 3-2 lead in the World Series. Of the first 50, 34 have gone on to win.

The Twins' franchise, meanwhile, lost its 11th straight World Series game on the road. The last victory came in 1925 when the team was the Washington Senators and they beat Pittsburgh behind Walter Johnson.

The Cardinals' five stolen bases matched the Series record for a nine-inning game last set by the Chicago Cubs in 1907.

UTEP, a WAC contender, faces toughest test

Associated Press

Texas-El Paso faces its stiffest test yet in the Western Athletic Conference — a game that should determine whether the Miners' Cinderella season is for real or is about to turn back into a pumpkin — at Air Force on Saturday.

Meanwhile, two winless teams battle to escape the cellar when New Mexico visits Colorado State.

Brigham Young plays at Hawaii in the only other WAC game of the weekend. In non-league games, Utah entertains Utah State, and San Diego State plays host to Long Beach State. Wyoming is idle.

The last time a UTEP football team played a game this important this late in the season, Lyndon Johnson was president, the Vietnam War had not yet become front-page news and the Beatles were still making hits together.

Not since 1967, when the Miners made their last bowl appearance, have UTEP fans had so much to cheer about halfway through the season.

The amazing Miners, 5-1 overall and 3-0 in the WAC, put their fast start on the line against Air Force, 5-2 and 3-1.

A UTEP victory virtually eliminates Air Force from the title chase. A UTEP loss leaves just one team (Wyoming) unbeaten in league play.

"Probably the most fun we're having is seeing the reaction in El Paso itself," said UTEP Coach Bob Stull. "We've had huge crowds — 46,000 to 50,000 — for our last three home games. Our fans start tailgating in the parking lot six hours before kickoff. They've had to stop some games because the crowd noise was so high. Enthusiasm is really up."

THE MINERS, while playing admittedly a soft schedule so far, have nonetheless won the games they once lost routinely. Led by the steady quarterbacking of Pat Hegarty and the solid running of John Harvey, the Miners rank 44th in the nation in total offense and 31st in total defense.

They're averaging 33.5 points per game — the seventh-best figure nationally — and are givingup only 16.8.

Air Force, which seeks to rebound from last week's 35-14 thumping at the hands of Notre Dame, boasts the nation's No. 2 rushing attack, averaging 365.4 yards per game. Quarterback Dee Dowis, who had 132 yards rushing against the Irish, is the top running quarterback in the country.

Another game of survival will be played in Honolulu, where BYU and Hawaii both have one conference setback. Historically, a second loss has proved fatal.

BYU, 3-3 overall, has been productive offensively of late, scoring 117 points in its last three games. Hawaii, 4-2, leads the WAC in two defensive categories.

Stanton, Forsan can't afford another loss

From Staff Reports

A pair of District 6-2A teams with playoff aspirations will try to get back on track tonight after losses last week when the Buffaloes of Stanton hook horns with the Buffaloes of Forsan at 8 p.m. in Stanton.

Both teams stand 1-1 in district play and cannot afford another loss and stay in the playoff hunt. Stanton fell 27-12 to Rankin last week while Forsan dropped a 35-8 decision to Reagan County.

Also tonight, Greenwood will host Crane at 7:30 p.m. in District 4-3A, McCamey hosts Marfa, Fort Stockton is at Lamesa, Pecos at Big Spring, Rankin at Eldorado, Monahans travels to Sweetwater, Reagan County hosts Ozona, Snyder is at Lake View and Andrews is open.

Steinbrenner admits mistake hiring inexperienced Piniella

NEW YORK (AP) — Hiring Lou Piniella to guide the New York Yankees without any managerial experience was a mistake, according to owner George Steinbrenner.

So Steinbrenner, who made that statement last summer, fired Piniella as manager and made him general manager, a position in which he has had no experience.

Only with the Yankees.

Piniella and Billy Martin, returning to manage the Yankees for the fifth time, met reporters for three hours Thursday to discuss the latest bizarre changes at Yankee Stadium.

But the man with the answers, Steinbrenner, stayed upstairs in his office and sent word that he was "not available" for questioning.

Piniella, looking out of place in a business suit, said that Steinbrenner informed him of the changes on Monday, after saying the previous week that he "would have a surprise" for Piniella.

Shock was more like it.

"As a player, I never thought I would manage. I never dreamed I would be a general manager," Piniella said. "My next step is being owner."

Piniella did not immediately accept Steinbrenner's offer for his latest position. First he called his wife. Then he called his mother. "And I don't call my mom that much," he said. "They both both felt it was a positive thing to do."

Steinbrenner, who did not speak with Piniella during most of August after the manager failed to be in his hotel room to receive a phone call from the owner, has said that Piniella was "the worst judge of talent" in the organization.

"I don't think he really meant that," Piniella said Thursday. "I think he meant that the field managers are too close to the action and that you get a better perspective from upstairs."

Piniella said he will be in charge of the Yankees' player moves.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 24, 1987

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Business profits will rise steadily in the year ahead. A dream vacation is worth waiting for. Forge ahead at work, focusing on your personal goals. Family ties grow stronger, even if loved ones are many miles away. A disconcerting situation will be resolved once and for all. Romance becomes more fulfilling, thanks to a change of lifestyle or attitude. Forget past mistakes.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actors Kevin Kline and David Nelson, Broadway producer-director-playwright Moss Hart, football's Y.A. Tittle, hockey's Phil Watson, Oscar-winning actor F. Murray Abraham ("Amadeus").

ARIES (March 21-April 19): New business ties could increase your income enormously. Try to curb a tendency to dominate others. Mate will turn resentful if you make all the decisions.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A weekend job could be the best answer to a temporary cash shortage. You are now in an ideal position to advance a pet plan. Higher-ups are receptive. Be realistic about finances.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your friendships will be more meaningful if you seek quality instead of quantity. Long-distance calls are deeply appreciated by those back home. Make certain romantic partner loves you for yourself, not your possessions.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Do not make any important moves today. Friends play a major role in your obtaining some missing documents. Romance begins to move in a thrilling new direction. Ask the most important question of all.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Speak from the heart and your requests are likely to be granted. Talk with your loved ones if thinking about starting your own business. A parent needs more attention. Spend time together.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Travel is great fun, providing you choose the right companion and share expenses. A ticklish family problem will require careful handling. Loved one shares an important secret. Listen sympathetically and withhold judgment.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Do everything possible to keep expenses down. Refuse to let others foist their responsibilities off onto you. Freedom from distractions makes it easier to arrive at important personal decisions.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You are thinking along more sensible lines now. It is possible to arrange a loan even on Saturday. Put your best foot forward. Do not be too pushy or you could be rebuffed.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Do not take a loved one for granted. Now is not the right time to ask influential people for personal favors. Promises made by friends are likely to be fulfilled. Rejoice!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Make the most of an unusual opportunity! Discuss your plans with those who matter most to you. Sacrifices may be necessary, but in the end they will prove worthwhile. Pursue new relationships.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Be very wary about becoming romantically involved with a work associate. Someone may try to steal your ideas and take credit for them. Protect yourself by presenting your suggestions in writing.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): With a bit of luck, you should be able to resolve a domestic conflict today. Family members are unusually cooperative. Salespeople could make a nice bonus. A date with a special person is the highlight of your day.

The bidding:

1 ♡	1 ♠	2 ♡	3 ♠
4 ♡	4 ♠	Pass	Pass
Pass

Opening lead: Jack of ♡

Here's your chance to test your knowledge of rubber and duplicate bridge tactics. Before reading on, decide how you would play this hand at both forms of the game.

The bidding might not be a thing of beauty, but it is typical of what can happen in a competitive auction. (To start with, South's hand is too strong for an overcall—we would have preferred a takeout double.) East's jump to four hearts was a good stab and put pressure on South, though why he chose to bid four spades without support from partner, instead of doubling, is a mystery to us.

Obviously, your only worry is a 4-2 trump split. If you win the ace of hearts and draw trumps, the likely 4-2 trump break will mean that a defender will ruff either the second or third club, and the defenders will be able to take more than enough red-suit tricks to defeat you.

The solution at rubber bridge is easy. Win the ace of hearts and duck a trump at trick two. The best the defenders can do is to cash their two diamond tricks. Thereafter, you can win any return, draw trumps (using the ace of clubs as an entry, if necessary) and claim the rest of the tricks, because the club suit must run.

Can you afford this line at duplicate? After all, if the spades are 3-3 you can take all the tricks, so ducking a trump would result in a very poor score if the field is making three overtricks at four spades.

Ah, that is the question: Will most North-South pairs reach four spades? Obviously not, so at duplicate it is also correct to make the safety play and assure your contract.

Bennett to be tested for herpes

Bennett

NEW YORK (AP) — Singer Tony Bennett has been ordered to undergo medical tests to determine whether he could have transmitted genital herpes to a woman whose $95 million lawsuit claims he infected her in 1985.

Bennett, 60, said in court papers that his doctor found him herpes-free after Linda Feldman, a 24-year-old cellist, sued him in November.

He countersued for $100 million, saying she "disgraced and discredited" him and damaged his career.

Ms. Feldman said in court papers that after she found she was infected during their eight-month affair in 1985, Bennett admitted he had herpes.

"I've had it for years," she quoted Bennett as saying. "You get used to it. It's God's way of giving your sex life a rest."

State Supreme Court Justice William P. McCooe said Thursday that the court must resolve Ms. Feldman's claim that Bennett admitted he had herpes and that she saw lesions on his body.

Barrows

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — "Mayflower Madam" Sydney Biddle Barrows says people don't like to hear that she's making money on the book-and-lecture circuit since she was taken to court for running a high-class call-girl service.

"Nothing bad happened to me," said Ms. Barrows, who pleaded guilty in 1985 to promoting prostitution and paid a $5,000 fine. "Nothing bad happened to my girls. We all went off dancing into the sunset."

The 35-year-old Ms. Barrows, dubbed the "Mayflower Madam" for ancestry she traces to the Pilgrims' arrival in this country, was at the University of Nebraska at Omaha on Thursday promoting her book and a TV movie she inspired.

Ms. Barrows said in the 5½ years her service operated, about 180 women worked for her, most of them students, actresses and models. She said the women are doing a variety of things now, but doubts many are prostitutes.

Sawyer

NEW YORK (AP) — "60 Minutes" newswoman Diane Sawyer says her fame has forced her to sacrifice "things on the margin," but she still finds time for reflection that "organizes my soul."

The kind of thing that goes is "returning all my phone calls, being on time and never canceling an engagement," she said in an interview for the first issue of Working Woman Weekends magazine, which will be on newsstands shortly.

But she said she has taught herself that she must find time to put things aside "so that I can sit by a lake and read poetry."

"I'm really sustained by irrelevant things," she said. "It matters to me enormously just to lie on my back and listen to a whole record or read something that I'm never, ever going to use, like Wallace Stevens."

• • •

PORTSMOUTH, N.H. (AP) — Real estate tycoon Donald Trump came to New Hampshire, arena of the nation's leadoff presidential primary, to deny that he's campaigning on behalf of anything other than "respect for America."

"I want a tough, smart cookie representing my interests," he said Thursday at a Rotary Club luncheon, discussing his ideal president. "We don't have tough people. We have nice people. I'm tired of nice people.

"I want somebody who knows how to negotiate," he said.

Trump, a Republican, held a brief news conference afterward during which he repeatedly denied that he is running for president. Earlier, he said he would not run for governor of New York or mayor of New York City.

Trump said he predicted Monday's crash on Wall Street and got out of the market several weeks ago. "I got in Tuesday," when prices were low "and I got out last night (Wednesday)," when the market rebounded.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Irish actor Liam Neeson wanted to play his role authentically as the deaf and mute murder defendant in the movie "Suspect." So he wore earplugs.

Neeson, 35, who co-stars with Cher and Dennis Quaid in the suspense thriller, which opens today, plays a Vietnam veteran who lost his hearing and speech because of war trauma.

He researched his role at Gallaudet College in Washington, D.C., a school for the hearing impaired.

"There were vets there that had suffered hearing loss in the war," Neeson said. "I was particularly interested in talking to the ones that could hear before their sickness and had knowledge of the hearing world."

The university also designed the special earplugs for Neeson so he could be 80 percent deaf for the movie.

• • •

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actress Ali McGraw, model Christie Brinkley, singer Olivia Newton-John and actor Rob Lowe were among the Malibu residents speaking out against a sewage system proposed for the wealthy beach community.

Most residents cannot afford the $12,000 to $28,000 per household the $84 million project is expected to cost, Miss McGraw told the Los Angeles County Board of Supervisors on Thursday.

Miss Brinkley and Miss Newton-John were among many who wore "Save Our Coast" T-shirts to the hearing. Miss Brinkley and Lowe denied officials' allegations that Malibu's septic tank system has become a health hazard.

Assemblyman Tom Hayden, the former student radical, urged the supervisors to consider alternatives to the 12-mile sewer line for the celebrity playground and surf-bum paradise 30 miles northwest of Los Angeles.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Paul Greenberg, editorial page editor of the Pine Bluff Commercial in Pine Bluff, Ark., received The Baltimore Sun's seventh annual H.L. Mencken Writing Award in a ceremony Thursday.

Jim Houck, The Sun's managing editor, presented Greenberg with a $2,500 award and a plaque during a luncheon ceremony at the National Press Club.

Greenberg has been editorial page editor of the Pine Bluff Commercial for 25 years, with a one-year break to write editorials for the now-defunct Chicago Daily News. He has been a syndicated columnist since 1971 and was the 1969 recipient of the Pulitzer prize for editorial writing.

The Shreveport, La., native also was a Pulitzer finalist in 1986.

"Greenberg tackled diverse subjects — racism, state government, national politics and baseball — in an erudite, literary manner and with wit, humor and fire," the judges said.

Oil price rises

NEW YORK (AP) — Oil futures prices closed higher after news of another Iranian attack in the Persian Gulf and amid what analysts said was sentiment that demand for crude would remain steady.

The November contract price for the benchmark West Texas Intermediate crude rose 15 cents per barrel to $20.05 in active trading Thursday on the New York Mercantile Exchange. The contract had risen 21 cents on Wednesday.

Helping support prices were reports that an Iranian missile hit Kuwait's offshore supertanker oil terminal on Thursday, analysts said. None of the U.S.-flagged tankers protected by the Navy were in the area, but it was the third Iranian missile attack in a week against Kuwait.

Greg Dreis, a trader for Merrill Lynch Energy Futures, said prices also were helped by industry reports earlier in the week indicating steady demand for crude and refined products heading further into winter.

MONEY

Dollar mixed

LONDON (AP) — The dollar opened weaker against the West German mark today and was mixed against other currencies, with dealers unsure how to assess the impact of President Reagan's latest statement on the economy.

Gold rose slightly.

Currency markets were torn between the advantages of a narrower deficit and the damage higher taxes could inflict, dealers said.

In Tokyo, the dollar fell 0.05 yen to a closing 144.15.

Later, in London, it was unchanged.

—1.8070 West German marks, down from 1.8130

—1.4980 Swiss francs, up from 1.4975

—2.0325 Dutch guilders, up from 2.0305

—1,303.50 Italian lire, down from 1,306.75

—1.3151 Canadian dollars, down from 1.3157.

In London, the British pound fell to $1.6535, compared with $1.6560 Thursday.

Bullion opened in London at a bid price of $471.60 a troy ounce, compared with late Thursday's $470.50. At midmorning today, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $472.65.

In Zurich, the bid price was $472.60, up from $471.50 late Thursday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold rose $3.05 to close at a bid $473.18.

Silver was quoted in London today at a bid price of $7.54 a troy ounce, up from Thursday's $7.49.

Economy gets good news in GNP

By TOM RAUM
AP Economics Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government gave the struggling economy two pieces of good news today: Consumer prices rose just 0.2 percent last month as the gross national product surged ahead at a 3.8 percent clip.

The modest gain in retail prices was largely the result of falling energy prices, which nearly offset higher food costs, the Labor Department said.

Last month's gain followed a 0.5 percent surge in August and matched July's 0.2 percent advance. So far this year, consumer prices are rising at an annual pace of 4.8 percent.

Economists expect inflation to remain tame over the months to come — despite recent instability elsewhere in the economy brought on by the stock market plunge.

"Right now, the chief worry is a recession. And if there's a recession, inflation won't be going up," said David Wyss, chief financial economist for Data Resources Inc.

Still, retail price gains for the first nine months of 1987 are running at more than four times last year's minuscule 1.1 percent pace. That had been the best performance in 25 years and was largely the result of dropping oil prices, which rebounded through most of the first half of 1987.

If the January-September rise were to hold for all of 1987, the annual advance would be the highest since an 8.9 percent rate of inflation in 1981.

As for the gross national product, the Commerce Department said consumer spending rose 4.8 percent while business investment jumped 23.7 percent, the steepest rate in more than three years.

But analysts point to the huge impact of consumer spending on the GNP, the broadest measure of economic health, and say that the last week's crashing stock prices may shake buyers' confidence and trigger a retrenchment in spending for such big-ticket items as cars and appliances.

The rise in the Labor Department's consumer price index will mean a 4.2 percent cost-of-living increase in benefit checks next January for the nation's 38 million Social Security recipients.

That will be the biggest increase in 5½ years. Last year's rise was 1.3 percent.

The government calculates the benefit increase based on the change in one portion of the consumer price index from the July-September quarter over the same period of the previous year.

As for last month:

—Gasoline prices fell 0.2 percent, following a 3.1 percent rise in August. Home heating oil costs were down 1.8 percent following a 1.4 percent gain in August.

—With natural gas and energy prices also declining, energy costs overall fell 0.5 percent after a 1.7 percent jump in the preceding month.

—Food prices rose 0.5 percent, five times the 0.1 percent increase of August. Leading the way were higher costs for fruits and vegetables, up 2.3 percent, and eggs, up 9.1 percent. Beef and pork prices were up while poultry prices fell.

Subtracting food and energy prices, the index for of costs for all other goods in September rose 0.2 percent, half the 0.4 percent rise of the previous month.

September's increase left the consumer price index at 344.4, meaning that a basket of goods costing $10 during a 1967 base period cost $34.44 in September — up from $33.02 in September 1986.

The index, which is not adjusted for seasonal fluctuations, as are other data in the report, is based on a sample of consumers representing 80 percent of the total population.

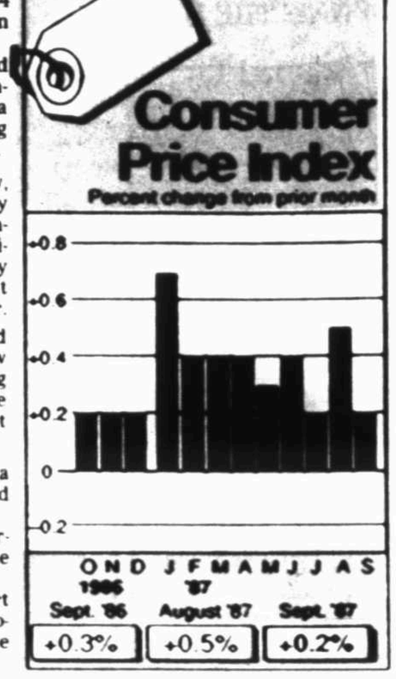

Social Security increases, by law, are calculated on a more narrowly focused companion index — the index of urban wage earners and clerical workers, covering approximately 32 percent of the population. That increase rose to 339.1 in September.

The Labor Department also said that prices paid last month for new cars rose 0.1 percent after holding flat in August. Used car prices were down 0.2 percent after a 0.3 percent rise.

Housing costs, which had risen a sharp 0.6 percent in August, showed no change last month.

Medical care expenses rose 0.5 percent after a 0.4 percent gain in the previous month.

As for the future, analysts expect the trend of falling prices for gasoline and other forms of energy to vie with rising food prices.

Analysts see little new in Reagan's remarks

By The Associated Press

Market watches said Thursday that President Reagan's remarks on the economy and the battered stock market included little new about the turmoil facing Wall Street and that Reagan appeared to be hewing to his old line on taxes.

After the president's first White House news conference in seven months, several analysts said that, although Reagan contended there was no sign of economic trouble to account for the stock market's recent price collapse, he failed to offer any significant new hope of progress in cutting the federal budget deficit.

Worries about the continuing impact of the nation's budget deficit on interest rates and the economy have been cited as key factors in the recent troubles in the stock market.

The president said he would meet with congressional leaders to work out a budget compromise, but when questioned by reporters would not say flatly whether he would rule out a tax increase — which he has long opposed — as part of the deal.

"At first I was kind of pleased he was more conciliatory," said William Tiritilli, director of research at the Chicago investment firm Rodman & Renshaw Inc. "But as the questioning went on, it seemed he was in his old mold. ... He still is opposed to tax increases no matter what you call thm."

Financial markets also were not cheered by Reagan's remarks.

Stock prices in Tokyo, already down in early Friday trading following another decline Thursday on U.S. exchanges, remained lower following the news conference, which took place at about mid-morning in Japan.

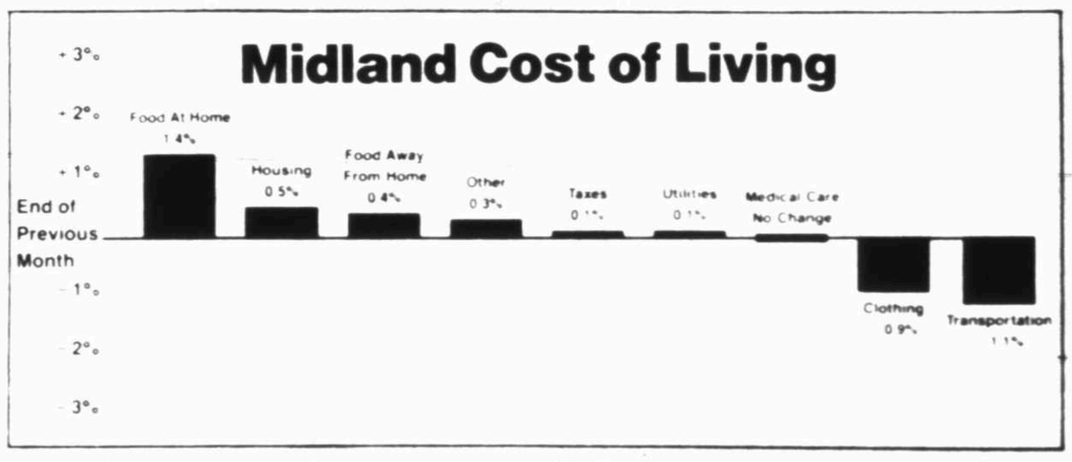

In foreign exchange, traders said the dollar slumped in Tokyo following the news conference, but recovered slightly in later trading. Traders said the market was disappointed that Reagan had not issued a more concret statement about reducing the deficit in light of recent reports about his willingness to compromise with Congress on tax issues.

Reagan did say he saw "no indicators" of a recession ahead, although he conceded the "excess volatility" in the markets might not be over. The president also said he was appointing a commission headed by former Sen. Nicholas Brady, R-N.J., to examine stock market procedures.

Analysts said President, seen here in White House Rose Garden, shed little light on stockmarket turmoil.

MIDLAND ECONOMY

Midland cost of living stable

The cost of living in Midland remained nearly stable during September, as a mere 0.03% decrease was recorded. This is the second month in a row that cost have declined for Midland residents. The six month annualized rate of deflation equals 2.7%. Increases measured for medical costs, food away from home, taxes, utilities were offset by decreases for transportation, housing and food at home. Clothing costs remained stable this month.

Over the past year, the cost of goods and services in Midland has decreased 1.6%, with a 1.4% coming in the last six months.

The cost of living in Odessa rose 0.3% during September, following a month of decline in August. The six month annualized rate of inflation equals 2.6%. Decreases in transportation and clothing expenses were offset by increases for food at home, housing, food away from home, taxes and utilities. Medical care costs remained stable this month.

Residential utility bills in Midland rose a slight 0.04% during September. Electric fuel adjustment charges decreased 0.1%, reversing their August trend. Gas rates increased 0.3%, following two months of decline, while local water rates remained stable. Both the last year and the last six months have shown a 2.2% increase in Midland utility costs.

Midland transportation expenses declined for the second month in a row, measuring 0.3% in September. Higher prices for new cars were offset by a second month of mixed, but generally lower prices for gasoline.

The cost of medical care for Midland residents rose for the fifth consecutive month during September, measuring 0.5%.

Midland clothing costs remained stable during September. Higher price tags on men's wear were offset by lower ones on children's apparel.

The cost of buying food to eat at home in Midland dripped 0.2% in September for the second month in a row.

Housing costs in Midland fell for the second month in a row, measuring 0.3% during September. Generally lower charges for area rents caused this month's trend. Over the past year, and 11.1% decrease has been measured for Midland housing costs, with 3.0% coming in the past six months.

Sales taxes increased for both Midland and Odessa residents during September. The impact was a 0/1% increase in the "expanded market baskets" used to calculate the cost of living for the standard Midland and Odessa family. In the last year, taxes in Midland and Odessa have risen 2.9% with 0.1% coming in the past six months.

New exchange policies could put market turmoil, which continued here Thursday, on a leash.

Stock market cuts hours, tightens program trading

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market is cutting its trading hours, stretching its office hours and putting a tighter leash on program traders in an attempt to work itself out of the busiest week in Wall Street history.

The nation's stock exchanges announced Thursday they were closing two hours early today, Monday and Tuesday to provide extra time for shrinking a processing backlog built up as billions of shares changed hands in the past week.

The New York Stock Exchange also announced further restraints on program trading — a computerized strategy that moves millions of shares — to cool gyrations in prices and limit trading volume that threatens to swamp its computers.

Both steps were unusual and certain to raise further speculation over the market's immediate future in the wake of its collapse, subsequent rebound and later fallback.

Wall Streeters could not recall early exchange closings solely for business reasons since 1968, when the failure of some major brokerage firms caused a logistical mess that prompted the market to remain closed on Wednesdays for six months.

At the same time, the added restrictions on program trading by major firms, coming days after the NYSE sought other restraints on the practice, raised questions among some market watchers over whether the exchange might move at some point to halt program trading entirely.

The American and regional stock exchanges said their hours today, Monday and Tuesday would coincide with the 9:30 a.m. to 2 p.m. trading on the New York Stock Exchange, the nation's largest. The NYSE normally closes at 4 p.m.

Brady

Wall street task force head named

WASHINGTON (AP) — In choosing former New Jersey Sen. Nicholas Brady to investigate problems in the stock market, President Reagan picked a 33-year Wall Street veteran and a close friend of Vice President George Bush.

Brady was named Thursday by Reagan to lead an investigation of stock market problems in response to Monday's devastating decline in stock prices.

Brady, who heads a large New York investment-banking house, will join two as-yet unnamed members in a task force charged by Reagan to "examine the stock market procedures and make recommendations on any necessary changes."

The president has given the trio 60 days to report.

Brady, a Republican, served eight months in the Senate in 1982. He left to return to his post as managing director of Dillon Read & Co., Inc.

Consultants forecast $15 oil for long term

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — The Texas economy continues to perform better than national averages and the price of oil in the near-term may range as high as $23 to as low as $15 per barrel three economic experts Thursday predicted to the 70 attendees of the 1987 Economic Outlook Conference.

Dale W. Steffes, founder and president of Planning & Forecasting Consultants of Houston, whose oil price predictions are more often right than wrong, has developed a forecasting technique he describes as a "top-down planning process," which indicates the price of oil in the near-term will settle at $15 per barrel and continue in that range for 15 years, with Middle Eastern oil production of 15 million barrels daily.

Steffes, dubbed the Cassandra of Crude and also referred to as a "Gadfly Economist," believes that price and production level will still allow "a lot of money" to be made in oil "if you're a good oil finder."

Backing up optimism with statistics, Dr. James F. Smith, director of the Bureau of Business Research at the University of Texas at Austin, said Texas is still attracting a large number of people and capital from outside the state "because people love to be a part of the exciting things happening" in the State of Texas.

When the 1990 census is completed, Texas will emerge as the second most populous state in the nation, surpassing New York and trailing only California in total population, Smith told the group assembled at the University of Texas at the Permian Basin campus.

Between 1982 to 1986, the longest period of peace time expansion since the 1800s, Smith said, the nation gained about 12 million jobs, with Texas adding 2 million jobs during that time.

G. Henry M. Schuler, who holds the Dewey F. Bartlett Chair in Energy at Georgetown University's Center for Strategic and International Studies, predicted that — for better or worse — the balance of power in the Middle East will shift from Saudi Arabia to Iran.

Schuler, who has 25 years experience in the Middle East and North Africa and was a member of the oil industry team representing 23 international companies in negotiations with OPEC in the early- to mid-'70s, believes the price of oil in the near-term will rise to $23 a barrel.

Schuler does not believe current problems in the Persian Gulf, can be reliably circumvented by transporting Middle East oil through pipelines rather than by ships. Pipeline systems are too easily disrupted, accidentally or on purpose, he said.

As to his anticipation that Iran will become increasingly dominant in the Middle East, Schuler said, no one will successfully challenge Iran without full support of the United States because of Iran's sophisticated military strength.

Energas to purchase stock

DALLAS (SWN) — Energas Co. announced that Energas and Texas American Energy Corp. entered into a definitive stock purchase agreement, under which Energas will purchase, subject to the terms and conditions contained in the agreement, all of the outstanding capital stock of TAE's natural gas distribution subsidiary, Western Kentucky Gas Utility Corp. and certain other TAE holdings for a purchase price of $61.5 million in cash.

Western Kentucky currently has approximately $18 million of bonded indebtedness, for which it will remain liable after the transaction. The transaction is subject to approval by the stockholders of TAE and by the appropriate regulatory bodies. Energas anticipates closing the transaction before the end of the calendar year.

Western Kentucky is a natural gas distribution company which serves about 143,000 customers in 108 towns and communities in Kentucky. Principal cities served include Ownesboro, Madisonville, Paducah, Bowling Green, and Danville.

Energas is a natural gas distribution company, headquartered in Dallas, serving approximately 378,000 customers in Texas and Louisiana.

Ocean presents mysteries for exploration geologists

NEW YORK (UPI) — Scientists know it as a land of breathtaking mountain ranges, barren plains and churning volcanos — all far beneath Earth's vast oceans.

But although mapped and studied for decades, the ocean floor is still something of a mystery.

Geologists hope to discover more about how it is formed with a 10-year, multimillion-dollar project in which thousands of holes will be drilled into the floor's crust in spots around the world.

"We are just scratching the surface," said project director Philip D. Rabinowitz, a professor of oceanography at Texas A&M University. "But we plan to drill deeper than ever before. We expect a few surprises and we hope to prove a few theories."

The Ocean Drilling Project, administered by Texas A&M and funded to the tune of $30 million a year by the National Science Foundation, began operation last year and is the only scientifically oriented ocean drilling program in the world. It has followed on the heels of a similar, 15-year project that helped prove the theory of plate tectonics.

The theory holds that the crust of the earth is like that of a broken shell with pieces constantly moving and sliding into new positions. When the plates bump together they form mountains and, in the gaps, new crust is formed from underneath.

The process is extremely slow, scientists say, with plates shifting only fractions of an inch during a human lifetime.

Plate tectonics helps explain great mountain ranges and continental drift. But scientists say the theory also applies to the ocean floor, which technically has the highest mountains and longest mountain ranges in the world.

"The beauty of the ocean floor is that it is much, much more simple, more pure," said Rabinowitz. Glaciers and mankind have helped form the familiar landscape of the continents but has had little impact beneath the ocean's surface.

It may be pure and simple, but the ocean floor is also remote and fairly inaccessible. It is only with the most modern of equipment that scientists have been able to explore its secrets, said Rabinowitz.

Ultrasound and state-of-the art cameras have been used to map the rifts and valleys that dot the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans but there are still areas so deep that scientists can only guess at what lies at the bottom.

Texas A&M has chartered a 470-foot ship from an oil company that was used to drill for oil off the coast of New Orleans. The ship has been outfitted with a new, high-powered drill and a warren of research laboratories staffed by a 100-member crew and scientists.

"We can get at 97 percent of the ocean floor," said Rabinowitz.

He said the ship drills with a standard oil drill attached to the ship by a long cord. The drill twists as a motor pounds it repeatedly into the rock.

Most of the ocean floor is covered by a thick layer of sediment over volcanic rock called basalt. Rabinowitz said the ship has drilled 1,000 meters into this rock and he hopes someday to go further.

Miles beneath the layer of basalt lies the mantle, an outer layer of rock in the Earth's core that scientists have theorized exists but never seen. The mantle lies close to the ocean floor in comparison to how deep it lies beneath the surface of the continents.

"There is a very great interest in reaching the mantle," said Rabinowitz. "The Soviets have a land-based drilling project that has gone deeper than ever before. They hope to reach the mantle someday."

Cores of rock and samples of sediment are sent to laboratories in California, Texas and New York City for study.

The project started in January 1985.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Fund life insurance requirement 'smells' funny

By BILL DOYLE

Q. I am a U.S. Army sergeant serving in Germany. I wanted to invest in a mutual fund, but the salesman told me I would have to buy term life insurance to do so. Not wanting the insurance, I refused to buy it. As a result, I couldn't get into the fund.

The salesman also said I would have to pay into the fund for 10 years. What's going on over here?

Doyle

A. It's impossible to say, for sure, because I wasn't there. But this sounds like a mutual fund contractual plan with completion insurance. "Smells like" might be a better choice of words. That sales pitch gives off a bad odor.

A contractual plan is absolutely the worst way to invest in a mutual fund. With that method, you pay in for a period of time — 10, 12 1/2 or 15 years, depending on the particular plan.

The charges are horrendous. Up to half of your first year's payments go out in commissions. You have virtually no hope of breaking even for a long, long time.

The completion insurance takes over if you leave this vale of tears before making all the payments. While making your heirs happy, it does nothing for you except add to the cost of investing.

That salesman should be banned from the base. You don't have to invest in mutual funds through the method he's pushing. You can buy shares of many mutual funds with commissions of 8.5 percent or lower. Better yet, look at no-load mutual funds, on which there is no commission charge.

Q. I called my broker at 9 a.m. and told him to sell my mutual fund shares. The previous day's closing price was $11.25. I was told the price of my shares would be determined by the closing price that afternoon, which turned out to be $11.06.

That meant I lost an additional 19 cents per shares, for a total of $78. Why couldn't my shares be sold at 9 a.m. at $11.25?

A. Because all mutual funds are required by the Securities and Exchange Commission to practice "forward pricing." Whether you're buying or redeeming shares, you get the next established price.

Most mutual funds "price" their shares at 4 p.m., Eastern time, at the closing of the New York Stock Exchange. Some price more frequently.

Your mutual fund prices once a day. All effective orders reaching that fund after the previous pricing are executed at the next pricing.

There's no way of being sure what price you will get when you buy or redeem mutual fund shares. You always get the next established price — $11.06, in your case.

Actually, you don't "sell" mutual fund shares. You "redeem" your shares by turning them back to the fund.

Q. When I called a mutual fund to redeem my shares, I was told a letter was required. By the time I wrote the letter, mailed it and it reached the fund's Boston headquarters, the value of the shares had fallen substantially.

I know that brokers can phone or wire orders to redeem mutual fund shares. Why can't I?

A. You can, with many mutual funds. Those funds have telephone redemption privileges, allowing shareholders to do just what you wanted.

When a fund has that type of arrangement, you must sign up for it in advance. The details of how to do that are explained in each fund's prospectus. Your fund might very well have telephone redemption privileges. However, if you didn't sign up, you couldn't use that arrangement.

Brokers whose firms have "dealer agreements" with mutual funds can phone in orders to buy or redeem fund shares for customers. The customers then get the forward price.

FAMILY MATTERS

Class opens eyes to child abuse

By JIM MAY

May

DEAR FAMILY: My daughter is a teacher and recently attended a class on child abuse. She said that they told her that something like 30 or 40 percent of all children were sexually abused. I just can't believe that. I know I may be a little naive, but that number just can't be right. Do you have any other numbers? APPALLED

DEAR APPALLED: Not long ago, both professionals and the general public thought sexual abuse of children was rare.

However, recent scientific research suggests that as many as 40 million Americans may have been sexually abused children. Some studies may show that the numbers are higher.

One national telephone survey conducted by The Los Angeles Times found that 22 percent of the women and 16 percent of the men responding had been sexually abused as children. Direct interview surveys have found higher percentages.

Because most children who have been sexually abused don't tell anyone about their experiences, most Americans did not know the extent of the problem.

The Los Angeles Times poll discovered 33 percent of those who had been sexually abused as children had never told anyone.

Many of these adults expressed deep embarrassment and shame about being abuse as children.

While many sexual abuse victims recover without problems, some suffer from personal and social problems.

Because we now know that sexual abuse is a major problem, all those who work with children should learn to be aware of its signals indicating abuse, including:

- Sleeping and eating disturbances
- Sexual preoccupation
- A host of physical complaints or problems that have no medical explanation

David Finkelhor, associate director of the Family Violence Research Program at the University of New Hampshire, said the research about sexual child abuse should teach social scientists and mental health professionals a lesson on how real problems can be overlooked.

If you would like additional information, please write me or contact Permian Basin Child Abuse Prevention Program, 685-3007.

DEAR FAMILY: I have recently been diagnosed as having cancer and have had surgery. I have not told anyone at work what I have as I am afraid of losing my job.

I don't know if I could stand losing my job too. I have a few days of vacation left that I plan to use during chemotherapy. I have been told that my hair may fall out.

Now I don't know what to tell them at work. What can I tell them? AFRAID

DEAR AFRAID: Your concerns about work are well founded. Several studies have found that employers and co-workers often react to a fellow employee's cancer in a negative way. Many tend to equate cancer with death, but in fact many cancer patients recover completely.

Make an appointment with your employer to fully discuss the situation.

Don't deny the nature of your diagnosis or treatment, but present yourself as soon being "well and able" to carry out your duties.

Educate your employer on your specific cancer, since most Americans know little about the differences in the types of cancer. Be realistic about what you can do and when.

Remember that cancer treatment has many variables because each person is different.

Remove as much of the situation's ambiguity as possible for your employer and fellow employees.

Explain that you may lose your hair during treatment so the situation is easier to handle if it does happen.

Attempt to emphasize the "well" components of the situation. "I have been stricken with a disease and here are its characteristics. But, as with any other disease, I am receiving treatment and will be well again."

You may not necessarily change your employer's or fellow employees' view, but your emphasis on "wellness" will help ease their minds.

I would be glad to give you additional suggestions if you or any other cancer patients are interested. Leave a message for me at the American Cancer Society, 683-6374, and I will call you.

DEAR ABBY

'Acting like animals' phrase upsets reader

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I'd like to get this off my chest. It's about time humans stopped referring to acts that people perpetrate as people "acting like animals."

I refer generally to those who describe murders, riots, panics and other catastrophes in which people lose control and are said to be "acting like animals."

I refer specifically to comments regarding a recent ship hijacking when it was said that the terrorists acted like "cowardly animals."

These terrorists and guerrilla acts are not animal in nature. They are HUMAN in nature. As one who sees the balance, beauty and meaning of the world in which animals must face life-or-death situations every day just to survive and perpetuate the species, I grossly resent and take offense at these statements.

When was the last time we saw a gorilla hijack a plane? When was the last time we saw a pod of whales hijack an ocean liner? When was the last time we saw a group of animals walk down the street and terrorize the neighborhood? People, in fact, are the terrorists and guerrillas when they go into the animals' element to slaughter them for fur coats, hunting trophies, plumage and all the other atrocious reasons society gives for the gross neglect of respect for life and murder of our fellow creatures inhabiting this world.

If the day ever comes when man comes off his ego trip, maybe he will see just how insignificant he is to the total scheme of things on this tremendous planet in which ALL creatures share. Maybe then, finally, the saying will be turned around to, "They behaved like people." — KATHY L. LINEAWEAVER, CLIFTON PARK, N.Y.

DEAR KATHY: Bravo! Mark Twain said: "Man is the only animal that blushes. Or needs to."

DEAR ABBY: I am 35 and in love with a man who is 17 years older than I am. (I'll call him Dale.) We have been living together for four years and have a beautiful son who is 7 years old. Dale and I are considering marriage. The problem is that his children (all adults) can't seem to accept me. They are constantly inviting him over for dinner parties (with their mom there), but I am not invited.

Dale feels that he has to accept every invitation because they are his children. I feel that he is wrong. Abby, I would not accept any invitation if Dale wasn't invited.

I am upset about this and need your advice. I can't go on living like this. Is Dale right to accept invitations from his children without including me? Sign me ... OUTSIDER IN LOUISIANA

DEAR OUTSIDER: You have chosen an appropriate signature insofar as Dale and his family are concerned. The fact that Dale is permitting his children to snub you should tell you something. They are No. 1 in his life, and probably always will be.

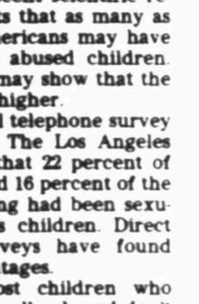

(Is your social life in a slump? Lonely? Get Abby's booklet, "How to Be Popular." Send a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents), self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Popularity, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054.)

AT WIT'S END

People with summer colds get no sympathy

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

I call the following musings "Thoughts of a person with a summer cold that has hung on for three weeks and no one cares."

Look at me. I'm too sick to answer the door or go to the doctor. I'm too well to stay in my nightgown all day or not prepare dinner.

I'm ugly. My hair is smashed to one side and my cowlick is exploding. My eyes are dull and lifeless and my nose could stop freeway traffic. I look like someone I've seen before. I can't remember who. Every time I turn on TV, that fool of a woman is saying, "Don't blame me for being beautiful," and then towels and teases 15 pounds of hair. She is getting on my nerves.

I do feel thin. Probably dropped 10 pounds or so. I should. I haven't eaten human in three weeks. Maybe I'll get on the scale. No! I've gained two pounds. Wouldn't you think in a world where a woman can make a career out of selling vowels, they could make an antibiotic that is low in calories!

It wouldn't hurt some of the people I work with to at least call. I can't believe that I called in yesterday and the operator asked me to spell my name. I'd like to cough on their bagels and cream cheese, that's what I'd like to do.

I just remembered who I look like. my passport picture!

All of this is my fault. I was the one who lusted for a little time off from the routine. I didn't want some big, major malady. Just a little insignificant thing that might buy me a few days in my bathrobe in front of the TV set with a tray and a little sympathy from people. Instead, I get some common, little, unimpressive thing that everyone in the country has. People who go through the Betty Ford Clinic get more respect than I do. What's the matter, Oprah, isn't three weeks of coughing, sneezing, blowing, sweating and chilling dramatic enough for you?

I'm cold again. Where's the afghan I made? Who am I kidding? The kids will use it for a dog bed or wrap their car jack in it to keep their trunk from getting dirty. I've always known that within 24 hours after I'm gone, my "treasures" will be offered at a colossal garage sale for a pittance. "You want this little glass turtle? (Steuben) Here, catch!" "Thirty-five cents for this Hermes scarf? It's yours and I'll throw in this tea set that belonged to my great-grandmother."

At least I've learned a lot from this experience. I've learned to be compassionate. The next time someone says, "My nose is stuffy, my eyes feel like round spinning razor blades when I blink, my breathing is labored, my head aches and my body is wracked with pain," I will never again say, "Clear the table and you'll forget it's there."

These are my last days on earth and I'm watching a rerun of Laverne putting cooking oil all over Shirley's body. What an end to a promising career.

Unlike humans, medflies must dazzle female mates

Copley News Service

Woody Allen and all the other sensitive modern male types would gain much from a trip to entomologist Ken Konishiro's lemon grove in Mauai, Hawaii.

Ken travels there regularly from the University of Hawaii in Honolulu to watch the antics of medflies.

He says the male medflies really have to prove their strength in order to attract females.

First, they're forced to fight off all the medflies in their area for the ideal bachelor's pad — in this case, a lemon tree leaf with just the right lighting, color and outline of foliage.

Then, they position themselves under the leaf out of view and let out a strong mating odor.

When female medflies catch a whiff and come hunting, they always pick the leaf of the strongest fighting male to land on.

But once they climb underneath the leaf, the contest isn't over.

Male medflies still have to dazzle potential mates by flapping their wings in slow, deliberate strokes and rotating their heads to and fro.

Nine times out of 10, lady medflies like what they see and nature takes its course, but there still is the 10 percent that strikes out before reaching home plate.

New braces send electric current

Copley News Service

Brace yourself for the latest in brace technology. Pennsylvania researchers are putting the finishing touches on a nickel-size device that sends a small electric current to the gums.

It seems the current stimulates cells in the gums, which get the teeth to straighten out twice as fast as wearing regular braces.

The gadget is worn inside the mouth and feeds a constant current into the gums from a tiny battery.

Teachable tots try toilet training

By JAN LARSEN
Copley News Service

CHICAGO — First of all, let's get it straight. It's not toilet training. It's toilet teaching.

Judy Bartels, a registered nurse, calls it that because a child has to grasp the implications of using the toilet, not merely respond to parental command.

And, if you start the whole potty process too early, it's the parent who will end up being "trained," not the child, says Bartels.

"Toilet teaching" was coined by other experts and during a recent seminar in Chicago Bartels did slip a few times and call it training. She offered her own perspective as a parent and sympathized with the 30 mothers and grandmothers who came to the seminar for insight.

"I know I've said things I wish I hadn't (to her eldest)," she confessed. "There was a time when I kept asking: 'What did I do wrong? Is it me?'"

Still, Bartels says, "I've never met a kindergartener in diapers."

Bartels stressed two important points that parents may not realize.

There is no place for punishment in toilet teaching. "If a child falls down when learning to walk or spills food when learning to eat, we don't punish that child," she said.

You need to set aside a day to "officially" start the process. On that day you do away with diapers, except at nap time and bedtime, until you reach your objective or decide to give up and wait.

But we're getting ahead of ourselves here. There's a lot to think about before uttering those fateful words: "Today you're going to learn to go on the potty."

One of the first steps is to decide on what words will be used. "You are going to be teaching your child a new vocabulary here, and you have to think about what is acceptable to you and your family," she said. "These are words that neighbors and family will be hearing frequently. They are words that may be shouted in church."

Bartels has no problem using the words urinate and BM. She says it's best to avoid euphemisms like "going to the bathroom."

"Be specific about what you want," she said. And whether you say pee-pee, tee-tee or tinkle, be consistent with terminology.

Take well-meaning advice from older relatives with a grain of salt. "You've probably heard from grandmas who toilet trained their children in a week, or had them trained by age 1," she said. Memories fade in time, she said. And times have changed.

We have modern washing machines, paper diapers and diaper services to our advantage, so it's best to wait until the child is ready, she said. This usually occurs between the ages of 2 and 3.

Why wait until age 2? Bartels and experts such as Dr. T. Berry Brazelton say that at about age 2 a child is into imitative behavior. This is a key.

When a child starts brushing his teeth or helps pick up toys, he has an interest in being like others.

Also, at this time a child is discovering more self-awareness. "Learning how to use the potty is a step toward independence. That's something positive you can build on," Bartels added.

CNS Graphic

Besides being emotionally ready, the child must be able to understand what the parent wants and be interested in pleasing the parent. The child must also be physically ready. At about 18 months, a child has control over sphincter muscles. Control over the urge to urinate comes later.

Bartels listed several signs of readiness.

Regular bowel movements, although that's not possible in all cases.

Giving signals, like crouching when he has a BM.

Ability to stay dry for a couple of hours.

Asking to be changed when the diaper is soiled or wet.

Having an interest in being tidy.

Showing a need for autonomy. The child might say, "I'm not a baby."

Learning to use a toilet is not as easy as we think, Bartels said. There are several steps a child must go through:

Recognize the urge.
Interpret the situation.
Hold the urge.
Ask to go to the potty.
Remove pants or skirt.
Sit down on the potty.
Relax.

A few weeks to a few months before you decide to start toilet teaching, buy a small potty that sits on the floor. This usually works better than a step stool and adapter for an adult-size toilet, but it's up to the parent.

You might want to buy a couple of children's books about the experience. "A child might accept something he sees in a book when he won't accept it from his parents," she said.

Show off the potty and explain what it's for. Keep it out. Encourage the toddler to sit on it, first with his clothes on, and later, with his pants off to get a feel for it.

If the child doesn't want to sit on the potty, don't force him, said Brazelton. "The point of this preparation is to allow him to feel this is an act of his own choosing," he wrote in a pamphlet Bartels passed out, Toilet Teaching Made Easy.

Teach the child basics about his body and the toilet so he can recognize what's happening to his body and will eventually be able to tell you he needs to urinate or defecate before it happens, not after.

Involve the child by having him go with you to buy underpants and training pants. You'll need about 12 pairs of training pants, she said.

"Pick some styles and let the child choose from the styles you've picked," she said. "Make sure they're not too tight, that they won't be hard to slip up and down.

"Underpants look different and feel different. That's a signal to the child that there's been a change in his routine. It gets the point across that 'when I urinate, I will be wet unless I use the potty.'"

If the child seems cooperative, you're ready for the major step.

Pick a day to start training that is relatively quiet. Don't start the process if the child is in a negative mood or if something stressful is coming up.

Goals are explained and diapers are put away, except for bedtime and nap time. Be ready for accidents; they will occur. "That's how a child learns," Bartels says.

Bartels, by the way, doesn't buy the theory you can toilet train a toddler in one day. Accidents will be common not just in the first week, but in the first months, she said. "Most children aren't completely reliable until age 4 or 5."

A "learner" is not as much fun to take out as a toddler in diapers, Bartels admits. But stick with training pants on outings. It's confusing to switch back and forth between diapers and it slows the process down, she said.

Children need to be introduced to strange toilets "so they won't be resistant later on," she said. Always insist on a visit to the toilet before an outing.

Regression can happen, she said. "You wonder if the child has forgotten everything you taught him," she said. Often, regression is caused by stress, like a new baby sitter, new sibling or a move.

Most parents are patient, but some can be patient only for a while before they start saying things like, "He should know better."

That kind of thinking can lead to "a battle of wills," she said. You don't want that. It's rare that a child has an accident out of spite, she said. "Usually it's a case of insecurity, anxiety, ignoring signals or slow development."

Bartels said parents may be tempted to scold a child after an accident. "Stay away from this as much as you can," she said. Don't say "unhelpful" things like, "I'm so disappointed in you."

This is not a time to be a perfectionist, she said. "Try to be relaxed."

Don't demand. Suggest the child sit for a few minutes just to see if anything comes out.

Always ask a child if he needs to go before leaving the house. Most children will deny they do. "Children don't feel the need until they have a full bladder, and they're often surprised they can go when they don't feel they have to," she said.

London hotel caters to children only

Copley News Service

There's a hotel in London where guests must put away one toy before playing with another one, and watching TV is forbidden.

It's called the Little House, and it caters solely to the 8-year-old-and-under crowd — no adults allowed.

The hotel for kids started as a baby-sitting service. But word got out and now proprietors Angie Robertson and Sue-Sue Lake charge $80 per night and $300 per week to entertain kids.

Little House can accommodate only six kids at a time, but Robertson and Lake keep the ankle-biters very busy.

They organize painting, cooking or sewing parties.
They also take kids to the zoo, the museum or a local playground.
Parents who leave their kids there say it's a home away from home.

Monsanto to pay damages in one of 'longest trials'

BELLEVILLE, Ill. (AP) — After 3½ years, one of the longest trials in history ended with a jury ordering Monsanto Co. to pay $16.2 million for failing to warn a Missouri town of the risks of a dioxin-tainted chemical spill.

"Hopefully, this jury has passed a message to the chemical companies: 'Don't contaminate the only world we've got,'" said Rex Carr, attorney for residents of Sturgeon, Mo., after Thursday's verdict.

The panel deliberated eight weeks before awarding the more than $16 million in punitive damages to 65 plaintiffs who claimed they were sickened by the spill, which contained less than a teaspoonful of dioxin.

"We're confident of overturning that award," said David Snively, an attorney for St. Louis-based Monsanto, which contended that the amount of dioxin in the spill was too small to cause injury.

The jury also awarded compensatory damages of $14,500 each to a mother and son who owned land near the spill site, and $1 each for the remaining 63 plaintiffs.

The townspeople sued after a tank car ruptured in 1979, spilling 19,000 gallons of orthochlorophenol, a chemical used in wood preservative, over a half-mile area near Sturgeon.

The residents filed suit in Illinois because the cargo originated at Monsanto's Sauget, Ill., plant.

They sought $100 million in punitive damages and $35.4 million in compensation for headaches, fatigue and other ailments they attributed to the spill, along with possible genetic damage.

The lawsuit said Monsanto failed to warn the people of Boone County, Mo., of possible danger and did not effectively monitor the cleanup.

"We're just glad we won," said Frances Kemner, one of the landowners granted a larger compensation award. "It's time Monsanto had something happen to them so they'll know they can't do this over the whole country."

Snively said interviews with some jurors suggested the punitive damage award may have been improperly influenced by the company's involvement in the controversy over the defoliant Agent Orange used in Vietnam.

The $1-per-plaintiff compensatory damage awards for injury from dioxin exposure is proof the punitive damages were groundless, Snively said.

"Monsanto argued dioxin is not bad stuff and did not hurt the plaintiffs' health and the jury bought part of that," Carr countered. "We argued it was bad stuff and Monsanto should be punished for loosing it on a community. They agreed with that as well."

Dioxin, a byproduct from production of some herbicides and pesticides, is known to cause brain, heart and genetic damage in laboratory animals.

The health risk to humans is subject to debate, although the form of dioxin found in the soil at the spill site has been called the world's most toxic synthetic chemical.

Monsanto also was ordered to pay $81,000 in court costs for the trial, which began Feb. 22, 1984, and included testimony from 182 witnesses and 6,000 exhibits. The transcript ran to more than 100,000 pages.

"I'm going to miss the jurors," said St. Clair County Circuit Judge Richard Goldenhersh, who was treated to a birthday party by jurors and performed marriages for two of their relatives.

Amerasians 'first day' filled with sensations

By ELIZABETH FERNANDEZ

Hearst News Service

PARADISE, Calif. — Amid all the glorious vistas that had sprung open over the last day, the small, circular object was as baffling as anything she'd yet seen.

Cautiously, she picked it up and nibbled on its edge. "Good?" wondered her father. She nodded and smiled.

Tuyet Mai had triumphantly cleared her first hurdle as a new American: She liked the cheeseburger. She even enjoyed her vanilla milkshake, once she figured out how to use the straw.

As for ketchup, it was too much to ask of a 15-year-old girl who had just ventured from her homeland in Vietnam Oct. 21 to live with her new-found father, Barry Huntoon, and his wife and three children. Huntoon dabbed some ketchup on a French fry, offered it to Mai. She recoiled.

"Oh well," Huntoon said with a smile as his young daughter chewed contentedly on unadorned fries.

The meal, intended to introduce Mai to authentic American cuisine, was so poignant the owner of the local McDonald's outlet turned tearful.

"Here are some sundaes," said Sandy Schlicht, handing Huntoon coupons for free ice cream, then scurrying into the restroom to dry her eyes. Said Huntoon, equally red-eyed: "She just choked me up."

This was what Wednesday, Oct. 22 was for, to savor that wonderful chokey sensation.

It was Tuyet Mai's first full day in the United States, a day devoted to becoming acquainted with her new family — father, mother, little sisters and little brother — and to convincing herself that the miracle was reality.

"She won't have to worry about selling peanuts anymore, she won't have to endure hardships anymore," vowed Huntoon, a water-systems salesman. "She's had a very hard life. There wasn't time for playing. But she's got a great personality. Now she's happy."

Just over a week ago, Tran Thi Puyet Mai was peddling peanuts to tourists on the beaches of the Vietnamese coastal town of Vung Tau, a scenic spot replete with clean white sand and turquoise waters. She had known only poverty and long labor, her small hands grown tough by unceasing work.

Then Huntoon, a 36-year-old former Army medic, plucked her from the beach and into a new life.

Since he left Vietnam in 1972, when the woman he had tried to marry was nine-months pregnant, Huntoon had been told his child was dead, a girl classified by the U.S. government as one of many thousands of Amerasians, the progeny of war. A chance sighting in a magazine of the dark-haired child who bore such an uncanny resemblance to him led Huntoon on a two-year odyssey for his daughter. He knew only her name and that of the beach where she sold peanuts.

Through dozens of bureaucratic obstacles, through months of endless frustration, Huntoon and Laura, his wife of four years, were determined to find the little girl overseas.

Two weeks ago, accompanied by San Jose, Calif., attorney Bruce Burns, Huntoon flew abroad to plead directly with Vietnamese and U.S. officials. On Oct. 12, at the airport in Ho Chi Minh City, Mai was released, a waif in faded red pants and red shirt whose bus fare to the airport was covered by a collection taken among her village neighbors.

As their plane left Vietnam, Mai clung to Huntoon and called him papa. But for the next three days, she was confined to a Thai resettlement camp where she slept on a concrete floor.

It wasn't until the fourth day that Huntoon was allowed to visit Mai. He brought his daughter a jumpsuit, the first new clothes she'd ever worn. On the fifth day, when Mai was released for a few hours, Huntoon took her to a mall in Bangkok.

Finally cleared for entry into the United States, the duo flew to San Francisco, where they were met Oct. 21 by an array of reporters - and by Laura Huntoon and 3-month-old Brianna. For the first time, Mai cried.

"It was like everything was now OK," Barry Huntoon said.

Wearied by her 16-hour flight and unaccustomed to traveling by car, Mai became carsick during the ride to her new home. But once there, she dined on a package of instant noodles.

"I wanted her to eat something she was used to," explained Laura Huntoon.

Mai had a bath, and when she emerged with wet hair, Huntoon introduced her to the blow drier. It delighted her. "She takes things as very normal," said a bemused Laura Huntoon.

Instantly, Mai became enamored of television and watched the Johnny Carson show.

PHILADELPHIA TODAY

The Sons of St. George met today at City Tavern and elected Benjamin Franklin, William Temple Franklin, John Penn Jr., and Robert Edge Pine to membership.

The Pennsylvania Supreme Executive Council paid some of their expenses today. It reimbursed John Armstrong for wafers, ribbons, parchment, pumice stone, and for pasting up an advertisement.

CONFEDERATION TODAY

Edward Rutledge (brother of delegate John Rutledge) wrote Thomas Jefferson to report his success in convincing the South Carolina planters to ship their rice to France rather than Great Britain. He offered several reasons for the shift in trade partners. "It is shameful," he wrote, "to transmit nearly the whole of our most valuable staple, to a country (Great Britain) in which it is not consumed, and which before it can be consumed must be subjected to a double freight, a double insurance, a variety of port charges, and many incidental expenses."

As an aside, Rutledge mentioned the work of a scholar who took exception with Jefferson's theory on the native peopling of America. In his "Notes on the State of Virginia," Jefferson asserted that American Indians came to America from Asia. Rutledge mentioned that Diodorus Siculus had offered another theory, suggesting that Carthagenian sailors, under the leadership of Hanno, their admiral, had been blown off course and eventually landed in North America. The Creek Indians were the descendants of these ancient mariners.

RATIFICATION TODAY

Edward Carrington today reported on the progress of ratification to Thomas Jefferson. It was well known throughout the country that Gov. George Clinton of New York was opposed to ratification, although he was "not confident enough to commit himself in an open opposition." Richard Henry Lee and William Grayson of Virginia were opposed to ratification, but for opposite reasons — Lee thought the Constitution was too strong and Grayson believed it was too weak.

Speaking for himself, Carrington voiced serious misgivings about the new form of government. For example, he feared that the commercial states would be able to control the Southern states, since a simple majority in Congress could pass navigation acts. This and other misgivings were causes for concern. But when he considered "that approaching anarchy which nothing but the timely interposition of a new government can avert," he was "doubly urged in (his) wishes for adoption."

DELEGATES TODAY

John Langdon had vacated his seat in Congress shortly after that body had sent the Constitution to the states for ratification. He informed fellow New Hampshire delegate Nicolas Gilman that he had arrived safely in Portsmouth on Oct. 13. Today Gilman wrote to bring him up-to-date on the activities in Congress. He noted the appointment of officials to administer the Northwest Territory and reported the progress of ratification in the states.

It seems that Gilman's real motivation for writing was to persuade Langdon to return to Congress. Gilman implied that Langdon would almost certainly be elected as president of Congress if he returned. And, of course, with this office, an elegant house was provided to its holder.

LOOKING BACK

Eighteenth-Century Anthropology

President John F. Kennedy remarked when the American Nobel laureates were dining at the White House, that it was the greatest concentration of intelligence in that mansion since Thomas Jefferson had dined alone. Jefferson had remarkably eclectic interests, and one was anthropology.

He studied archeological sites in Virginia and developed a theory about the origins of North American Indians. He thought the natives were similar in appearance and language development to Asians and speculated that they had somehow made their way to the Western Hemisphere. Although he was unaware of the ancient land bridge that probably spanned present-day Alaska and the Soviet Union, Jefferson was aware that the two continents were relatively close to each other at their northern extremes.

Then as now, there were and are dissenting opinions on this theory. Edward Rutledge mentioned the theory that ancient Carthaginians had peopled North America. Others have speculated that Egyptians, Hebrews, Polynesians, and even immigrants from outer space may have been the first settlers in the Western Hemisphere. Jefferson's theory, though with a great deal of refinement, is still the prevalent view by anthropologists on the settlement of the hemisphere.

Of course, many North American Indian tribes have their own beliefs concerning their origins. Their ancient legends say man was created in America.

Officials close acres and acres of public wildland

BUTTE FALLS, Ore. (AP) — Disconsolate hunters and loggers left the parched forests as officials closed nearly 19 million acres of public wildland to ease the acute fire danger posed by the Northwest's worst drought on record.

"I've been doing this in southern Oregon for 14 years and I've never seen it this bad," said forestry officer Buff Lawrence, taking the bad news Thursday to Cascade Range hunters on the next-to-last day of elk season.

Oregon, which has had virtually no rain since late July, on Tuesday barred hunters, anglers, hikers and campers from 10.3 million acres of state, private and U.S. Bureau of Land Management forests in western Oregon.

On Wednesday the state of Washington went a step further, barring loggers as well as hunters and other outdoorsmen from 8.5 million acres of state and private land west of the Cascade Mountains, or about one-fifth of the state.

At this time of the year, western Washington and Oregon between the Cascades and the Pacific Ocean should be several weeks into the rainy season.

Instead, forests are as dry or drier than August, when the danger of fire is at its peak, and officials are afraid loggers and sportsmen will start more fires.

The shutdown came as a big disappointment to two hunters who'd been stalking the Cascade Range without a radio and hadn't heard about it.

"I wish you'd waited one more day," deer hunter Ray Case of Medford told Lawrence. "Somebody saw a five-point down the A Road and we were going to go get it tonight."

Nearby national forests haven't shut down, but it was small consolation; the brush is so dry a hunter can't move without scaring off game.

Washington's logging halt west of the Cascades put thousands of loggers out of work, including truck driver Homer McNurlin of Chehalis. He said he and others in the industry can hold out only a week or two on their savings.

Small logging companies and mills also will be hard hit, McNurlin said.

"They're working day to day, same as the workers are, and when they shut down the machinery it could be they're going to lose it," he said.

Oregon has allowed limited work to continue, depending on local conditions, but loggers have to take a break during the middle of the day, when the danger of fire is highest, and the amount of timber cut hasn't been enough to keep mills supplied.

"If their inventories are low today, and their contracts are for high elevations, and we get snow, it could be damaging to them for most of the winter," said Dave Stere, Forestry Department resources planner in Salem.

The decision to close Oregon's state-protected forests for the first time in 20 years wasn't made lightly. Many remember how Gov. Robert D. Holmes was voted out of office after he cut deer season short during a 1987 drought.

Oregon has lost more than 130,000 acres of timber in more than 550 fires since Aug. 30, when the southern part of the state was raked by dry lightning. The biggest fire has blackened 96,000 acres and continued to burn out of control in the Siskiyou National Forest outside Grants Pass.

As of Oct. 11, Washington state had lost more than 7,500 acres in more than 1,300 fires for all of 1987.
