New teachers raring to go

MISD starts recruiting with students

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

Blueprints for future teacher recruiting efforts for Midland schools have been drawn to include local high school students and teacher aides.

Midland Independent School District recruiters have faced a yearly struggle to draw new teachers away from more geographically pleasing areas and come here, Joe Cummins, long-range planning coordinator, said last week.

Rather than competing with lakes, tall trees and big cities, district teacher-hunters will concentrate part of their efforts locally, Cummins said.

He said teacher aides and high schoolers planning to pursue teaching degrees would be the targets.

The plan, developed by a long-range planning subcommittee, will be evaluated by MISD trustees and administrators during the 1989-90 school year, with possible implementation next year, Cummins said.

The subcommittee is comprised of teachers, administrators, counselors and community representatives.

About 200 people a year serve the district as teacher aides. Like a business which encourages its employees to further their education, MISD would invest available grant money to send the aides to school for teaching degrees, Cummins said.

"They already work here and they work well with kids," he said. "All of these people have an active interest in education."

Up until four years ago the district had two or three $300 grants available at each school for teachers to use to continue their education.

"Almost all of them were used at every school," Cummins said.

However, budget constraints forced MISD to discontinue the offer, he said. The Midland PTA City Council still offers five $200 scholarships a year for teachers, most of whom attend the University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

Finding funding for sending teacher aides to school, though, is still a question mark, Cummins said.

Lisa Harrell wanted to jump into Texas-style education. She said she likes the mandated 22-to-1 pupil-teacher ratio for elementary schools and benefits the state's school districts offer.

A recent graduate of Monmouth College in Illinois, Ms. Harrell, 23, got her baptism into Midland Independent School District on Friday with a Texas-sized barbecue supper for new teachers.

On Sept. 5 she will tackle something a little tougher than beef brisket, link sausage and potato salad. The first-year teacher will have a Milam Elementary School sixth-grade class to deal with.

Ms. Harrell, though, said she looks forward to pursuing a personal challenge of getting pupils involved with their schoolwork and "making it really fun for them."

MISD will have 213 new faces in the teaching ranks this year, 74 of whom will take over their first classroom. The teachers represent an array of education, ethnic, geographical and experience backgrounds.

After spending 20 years as an oil businessman, Jim Swann decided to bail out and use the teaching degree he earned years ago.

Swann, who will instruct vocational classes at Lee Freshman High School, chose teaching because "that's what my wife does." Neva Swann is a counselor at Alamo Junior High School.

Richard Crosslin, 25, a recent Lubbock Christian University graduate, said he came to MISD because of its $20,250-a-year starting teacher salary.

"My wife doesn't work, so we needed a little extra money," Crosslin said.

A Dallas native, he said he also likes the four-minute drive to Henderson Elementary School, where he will teach fourth grade.

"I like the town," he said. "It's nice and it's clean."

Alison Montgomery, 25, had a different reason for joining the MISD staff.

"I met Mr. Montgomery," said Mrs. Montgomery, a recent University of Texas of the Permian Basin graduate. "I ended up settling in Midland."

She admitted to getting butterflies in her stomach when she thinks about her upcoming first day of teaching second grade at Travis Elementary School.

"I'm more excited than nervous," she said, adding that her goals for her pupils will be for them to "rely on their own judgment and form their own opinions."

Though those new to MISD come from as far away as Alaska and as close as UTPB, the bulk earned their degrees from Texas Tech University in Lubbock. Some 80 Red Raiders will join the team this year.

Sixteen hold degrees from UTPB, while Sul Ross State and San Angelo universities will each have 11 representatives.

Many of the hirees were the result of MISD's head-start recruiting program in 1988-89.

Rather than waiting until spring — the traditional hiring season — teams of MISD administrators and community representatives hit the national recruiting trail last fall. The goal was to bolster the number of minorities in the teaching ranks and find quality applicants.

The district also increased its recruiting budget to $15,000, compared with the $6,400 spent in 1987-88.

MISD's 1,159-member certified staff in 1987-88 was 6.3 percent black, 7.7 percent Hispanic and 85.3 percent white. The figures include 46 administrators and five maintenance, purchasing or transportation personnel.

Alma Marshall, MISD human resources coordinator, said the competition for minorities nationwide has made the recruiting road rocky.

After scouring colleges and universities from here to Florida, MISD netted only six blacks and 12 Hispanics in its recruiting pursuits.

"Given the school district we have and our geographical location, I think we did pretty good," Ms. Marshall said. "I wish we could have done better.

"There just aren't a lot of people out there."

Ms. Marshall recalled making a visit this year to a Georgia college. There were 140 recruiters trying to hire 11 black applicants.

"It was like we were having a recruiter party," she said, adding that she managed to lure one of the applicants to MISD.

MISD recruiters didn't bother attending some predominantly minority schools in the fall because the prospects had already been hired, Ms. Marshall said.

Nevertheless, she said it was important to search near and far for teachers.

"You need infusion of new blood into your system if you can get it," she said. "You need different ideas and different backgrounds."

But Arthur Brackeer, a black University of Texas of El Paso graduate, said the need-for-minorities hype does not exist at every Texas school district.

CAF staff unanimously favors Midland move

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

The Confederate Air Force could land at new permanent headquarters in Midland by 1991 if the its voting membership approves a proposal to move from Harlingen to West Texas.

The CAF's general staff — including Col. Joe Mabee of Midland — Saturday in Keystone, Colo., voted unanimously to recommend acceptance of the offer to relocate at Midland International Airport. The move is contingent on approval by the CAF membership at its annual meeting on Oct. 13 at Airsho'89 in Harlingen.

Seventy-five percent of the organization's 6,000 voting members — all "colonels" in rank — must favor the proposal before it can be adopted. Results of the vote should be available by mid-November.

"I am elated," said Ed Jones, a Midland Chamber of Commerce leader, banker and CAF colonel who helped prepare the proposal.

Charles A. Spence, former chamber chairman, said the "Confederate Air Force will be a welcome addition to West Texas — enriching the area with heritage ... and providing a positive impact on our economy through tourism and its annual operating budget.

"In terms of economic development and continued growth of Midland International Airport as a regional facility, this is a home run," Spence said.

The CAF was founded in South Texas in 1957 to preserve remnants of America's air power in the 1939-1945 World War II era.

The CAF general staff — comparable to a corporate board of directors — was "very positive about our proposal," said Jones.

"They think it will complete their long-range plans for the Confederate Air Force Museum and Headquarters about five years ahead of schedule."

Jones and Midland Mayor Carroll Thomas, who also is a CAF colonel, presented the proposal, 10 months in the making, to the staff.

Midland's offer to the CAF includes:

- A package of $6 million cash raised in the Midland-Odessa area for construction of a "world-class" museum and CAF headquarters. The $6 million, Jones said, includes the $2 million value of the 12-acre Windecker site and existing facilities, $1 million from a Mabee Foundation grant and $3 million from other individuals and foundations in Midland and Odessa.
- The 12-acre complex which borders the east-west runway at Midland International Airport. The site offers 175,000 square feet of hangar, museum and office space. The city of Midland, owner of the airport, would lease the site to the CAF for $1 a year for 50 years.
- Land options. Future expansion for the CAF would be assured through two 20-acre tracts adjacent to the 12-acre site. The two tracts would be available to the CAF at no cost during the 50-year lease.

Grand opening and dedication of the CAF International Headquarters and Museum would be on Dec. 7, 1991 — the 50th anniversary of the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor.

The CAF general staff perceived that Midland's proposal would "carry the Confederate Air Force into the 21st Century and allow it to become a world-renowned museum," Jones said.

"And they are comfortable with Midland's initial commitment and continuing commitment to help them fulfill that dream," Jones said.

Currently, the CAF maintains 144 "warbirds," including the P-51 Mustang and the B-17 Flying Fortress, in flying condition. Reputedly, the CAF museum is the "most popular museum" in Texas.

Meanwhile, the Rio Grande Valley area is teeming with plans for measures to counter Midland's offer. The CAF is an economic mainstay of the Harlingen-McAllen-Brownsville area.

James Matz, Harlingen's mayor pro tem and a CAF colonel, said representatives of Harlingen, McAllen, Brownsville and the Valley Chamber of Commerce are establishing a working committee to study "options and to prepare a position" to present at the staff's September meeting at Valley International Airport in Harlingen.

Other cities, including San Antonio in 1984, have tried to lure the CAF.

"Many of our folks here are members of the CAF," said Matz, whose involvement with the CAF goes back to 1965 when he was with the U.S. Department of State.

"They have given a lot of blood, tears and sweat for this organization," Matz said of CAF supporters in the Valley. "We believe in the CAF. And the CAF is a national treasure."

In considering Midland's proposal, the CAF general staff officers "have taken the only action they possibly could have taken," Matz said.

Event tribute to Orbison , Wink

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

WINK — The cigarettes which Wesley Orbison puffs endlessly are an interesting foil to his hauntingly melodic voice, so clearly mirroring that of his legendary late father.

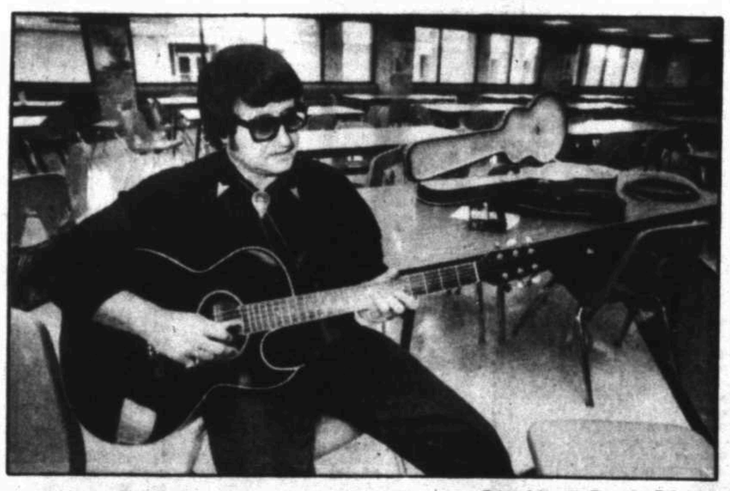

"Well ... hello dolls," the 24-year-old son of the late Roy Orbison crooned to a cluster of seven little blond girls asking for his autograph Saturday.

They probably don't know who late great singer was, but nonetheless were part of a crowd of more than 1,000 who attended a benefit here at the Wink High School football stadium to raise money for the Roy Orbison Memorial Fund.

At age 52, Orbison died of a heart attack in December at his Malibu, Calif., home.

Proceeds from the benefit will help finance construction of a statue and museum to commemorate the Vernon-born singer who moved to Wink in the third grade.

"I don't always cause this much of a sensation," Orbison said as a peaceful smile broke out under his green eyes. The late singer's green eyes were usually hidden behind his trademark dark glasses.

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

Impersonator Kenny Morrill added a touch of realism to the Roy Orbison Memorial Fund benefit Saturday in Wink, the late singer's home town.

"It's a tribute to my dad. I want to be here and meet his friends."

Like Mary Patterson Brooks.

She and some relatives drove in from Hobbs, N.M., to "pay tribute" to the singer who'd played baseball in the streets of Wink with her older brothers.

Hurricane Kiko roars toward Mexican coast

LA PAZ, Mexico (AP) — Hurricane Kiko, packing winds up to 115 mph, roared into the Gulf of California on Saturday, and residents of the southern Baja Califonia peninsula braced for the storm.

Kiko was expected to hit land Sunday. Ferry service to the mainland was canceled, and small craft were advised to remain in port.

Heavy rain was falling south of La Paz, capital of sparsely populated Baja California Sur state, said Francisco Zatarain, state public security coordinator.

Waves more than 10 feet high were crashing on the coast in Buenavista, a town of 800 people about 60 miles south of La Paz, said Hector Castro Marron, the security and transit agent on duty.

Many people who were staying in the town's three hotels took the morning plane to Los Angeles, he said.

CAF

"One of their responsibilities is always to keep their options open and to consider any proposal that may be of benefit."

"I think Joe Mabee and the other folks who have been involved with him should be congratulated," Matz said.

Mabee, a Midland rancher, oilman and philanthropist, maintains a private collection of restored World War II-era planes and has been active in the CAF's West Texas Wing, which includes the Midland-Odessa Desert Squadron.

The CAF was founded at Mercedes' Rebel Field near Harlingen in 1957 by Col. Lloyd Nolen and Col. Lefty Gardner, who are credited with founding the CAF's "Ghost Squadron."

Later, the CAF moved to Harlingen's Valley International Airport after then-Mayor George Young offered in 1967 to provide facilities at the city's airport, the former site of Harlingen Air Force Base, for $1 per year.

The Valley is interested in "what's best for the CAF" and is convinced that the CAF's best move would be to remain in the Valley.

In Midland's presentation, Mayor Carroll Thomas "closed the deal," Jones said. "He may be soft-spoken, but his words carry a lot of weight.

The CAF is "going to be a tremendous asset to the Permian Basin," said Thomas, a pilot.

Midland's proposal to the CAF general staff cites West Texas' benefits for the preservation of aircraft — the relatively dry climate and the freedom from corrosive salts in the atmosphere. Additionally, the proposal cites the high number of annual flying days in West Texas, the 11-mph average wind speed, an average temperature of 63.5 degrees, and the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) control tower, and other facilities at Midland International Airport.

Odessa is "very supportive" of the proposed CAF move, Thomas said.

"All of West Texas is known throughout the nation for excellent flying conditions, and that's why there were so many air bases built in the West Texas area (in World War II)," Thomas said.

Ed Jones

The mayor said "Midland has been an aviation community since the days of Pliska."

John Valentine Pliska was a Midland blacksmith who in 1911-12 designed, built and few a powered biplane.

"We have always had a lot of corporate aircraft and private aircraft as well as good commercial air service," Thomas said.

The mayor cited the abundance of museums in the Midland-Odessa area the potential tourists in 5.5 million vehicles passing through Midland and Odessa each year on Interstate 20.

"THE ADDITION of the Confederate Air Force Museum will help us capitalize on the two national parks: Big Bend and Carlsbad Caverns. And we can become the gateway to those two national parks because ... we are the closest commercial airport to either of those facilities."

"I think it is going to be a tremendous asset to the Permian Basin. I think the Confederate Air Force will do a lot for our region, and I'm confident that we will be a big asset to the Confederate Air Force."

Steve Davidson, chairman of the Midland Chamber of Commerce, said the positive vote of the CAF general staff was "terrific."

Midland's initial success in its strategy to lure the CAF to West Texas is "the exact type of thing that Forward Midland was brought into existence for" — to heighten the area's economic powers and aesthetic attractions.

"There is an attraction with history," such as that represented by the CAF, Davidson said. "This type of facility is a tremendous plus. I am excited."

Col. Max Reneau, leader of the CAF Desert Squadron in Midland and Odessa, said the squadron supports the proposal to move the CAF headquarters. Reneau said it is important for the preservation of the aircraft to remove them from the salt-air atmosphere of the South Texas.

Ed Vogler, chairman of Midland's Airport Advisory Board, said that moving the CAF to Midland would be of "economic benefit to the entire Permian Basin.

"People have been enthralled by man's ability to fly since the first flight by the Wright Brothers." The recent restoration of the Pliska Aeroplane at Midland International Airport "has created a lot of interest in aviation.

The relocation would "create an interest in aviation throughout the entire year instead of just focusing on aviation in our annual air show," which this year attracted more than 30,000 people.

"Next to the people of the Permian Basin," Vogler said, "Midland International Airport is the most vital entity that we have in the development and diversity of the Permian Basin."

Paul Erdmann, president of the International Aerobatic Club's West Texas chapter, said CAF's possible move to Midland "could be one of the finest things that could happen to this town.

"It's going to give this town an economic lift," he said.

And the dry West Texas climate will make maintenance of the airplanes "1,000 percent better," Erdmann said.

"The people who are in control of the Confederate Air Force are good businessmen who know what the bottom line is."

WEATHER SUMMARY

Thunderstorms still possible

From Staff and Wire Reports

A chance of thunderstorms persists throughout the week, forecasters at the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport said.

Today will be partly cloudy with less than a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms. The high in the mid-90s. Winds will be south at 10-20 mph.

More partly cloudy skies are in store for tonight with less than 20 percent chance of thunderstorms. The low will be in the lower 70s.

Monday will also be partly cloudy with less than a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms. The high will be in the mid-90s.

Saturday's high of 96 was seven degrees short of the record set Aug. 26, 1964 when it reached 103. The overnight low of 70 was nine degrees warmer than the record low set in 1961 when it dipped to 61.

STATE

Widely scattered showers and thunderstorms developed over extreme western parts of the Texas High Plains on Saturday, as well as over the western Trans-Pecos region and the southern coastal waters.

Some interior sections of far South Texas also had a few showers while an upper ridge of high pressure expanded over eastern and central parts of the state, suppressing creation of storms over northern and eastern regions.

It was mostly cloudy over the western Trans-Pecos, parts of the Western Panhandle and the deep south, while the greater part of the state had mostly sunny to partly cloudy skies.

NATION

Muggy air combined with high temperatures Saturday to create dangerously oppressive conditions from the Tennessee Valley across the lower Mississippi Valley into Texas, and storms drenched parts of the South with heavy rainfall.

The warm, humid air edged northward Saturday from the Gulf of Mexico. Temperatures rose into the 90s from Florida, through the coasts of Georgia and South Carolina across the Gulf Coast region, the Tennessee Valley, and the lower Mississippi Valley into the southern Plains and Kansas, as well as over the desert Southwest.

The high temperatures and humidity pushed heat indexes above 105 degrees from the Tennessee Valley across the lower Mississippi Valley into Texas. The heat index, or apparent temperature, is a measure of heat and humidity sensed by the body.

A reading above 105 is considered dangerous, especially to those involved in prolonged outdoor physical activity.

Texas area forecasts

West Texas: Scattered thunderstorms far west through Monday, some areas of heavy rainfall possible mainly through Sunday. Elsewhere, partly cloudy through Monday with isolated to widely scattered mainly afternoon and evening thunderstorms, more numerous western portions of the Panhandle and South Plains. Highs Sunday and Monday in the 90s. Lows through Sunday night mainly in the 60s.

North Texas: Mostly sunny and hot days, fair nights through Monday. Highs both days in the mid 90s to near 102. Overnight lows in the 70s.

South Texas: Partly cloudy hot days, mostly fair warm nights through Monday. Isolated mostly afternoon and evening showers or thundershowers mainly lower coastal sections. Lows in the 70s, except low 80s immediate coast. Highs in the upper 80s immediate coast, 100 to 104 lower Rio Grande plains, mid 90s to near 100 elsewhere.

Five men set out on walk around world

By ANTHONY CAPLAN

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP) — Linford Schultz and four companions are taking a walk — 30,000 miles across the world. They figure it'll take them about four years.

They've been under way since May, starting out from Georgetown, Guyana, home of their Continent-to-Continent Adventure Club.

"We've had a bit of activity," said Lawrence Renville, the 27-year-old second in command after Schultz and the walk's chief diarist.

The purpose is manifold: to commemorate the 500th anniversary in 1992 of Christopher Columbus' discovery of the New World; the 400th anniversary of the arrival of African slaves in the Western Hemisphere, and the 23rd anniversary of the independence of Guyana, their homeland.

Their route will take them across the northern tip of South America, through Central America and Mexico, across Texas and the Gulf States and up the East Coast to Halifax, Nova Scotia, in Canada. From there the group will cross the Atlantic by ship to Ireland and cross Europe to Greece. They'll sail across the Mediterannean to the Middle East and walk to Pakistan and India. Then it will be by boat across the Indian Ocean to Africa.

Their goal to reach is Goree Island near Dakar, Senegal, in northwest Africa by 1992, the anniversary of Columbus' discovery of America.

But Goree was the transhipment point for most of the slave trade that reached what now is Guyana, formerly British Guiana, on the northern shoulder of South America.

"We might stay awhile and do some exploring before we come home," said the 48-year-old Schultz, explaining why the group might not be back to Guyana until 1993.

Long walks are not new to Schultz — he walked from Central America to New York City in 1968 — but for others in his group, the four years away from loved ones was not an easy choice.

"My girlfriend was sad, but there's some things a man's got to do," said 24-year-old Gerald Gonsalves.

The walking party already has had a brush with trouble.

After setting out from Georgetown on May 26, the 23rd anniversary of Guyana's independence, the group hiked 300 miles to the town of Wauna, on the Venezuelan border. There they arranged with Warao Indians to use two shallow canoes to paddle up the Cuyubini River to Curiapa at the mouth of te Orinoco River in Venezuela.

But the canoe in Schultz's command capsized in the wake of a passing motorboat, pitching the occupants into the crocodile-infested river and sending some $2,000 worth of photographic and camping equipment to the bottom.

The group continued on, however, and made it to Caracas, where they have started a fund-raising effort to finance the next leg of the trip — up Central America to the United States.

"We've attracted some interest from private individuals and charitable organizations," said Renville, a former insurance salesman who said he had to quit his job because his boss refused to give him four years off.

The YMCA in Caracas is providing the group accommodations in exchange for voluntary work, such as talking about their experiences with schoolchildren, and cleaning up the grounds.

"By the time we reach the States we hope to have a camper," Schultz said.

The idea is to send the camper ahead with the group's equipment while they hike during the day with local organizations, promoting friendship and motivating others to seek adventure.

"In the past there was a great demand for adventure," said Schultz. "In fact, it was the basis for settling the New World. Today we have trips to the moon. But what we are doing is exploring the minds of our neighbors. This is the most exciting thing we can do."

The group was assembled from the different ethnic groups that make up society Guyana — white, black, Asian, Amerindian and mulatto.

The other two in the group are Compton Ferguson, 48, a former merchant seaman, and Troy Dasraph, 24.

Schultz and Ferguson started out together for the walk to New York in 1968, but Ferguson dropped out after going part of the way.

TEACHERS

"They weren't beating down my door," said Brackeer, 26, who will teach sociology and world history at Lee High School. "It's not as easy as people think it is."

Brackeer said many districts wanted to hire him primarily as a coach who also teaches regular classes.

"They just assumed I wanted to coach," he said. "I came to Midland because they didn't assume I wanted to coach.

"It was the best offer I had."

A former captain of the UTEP football team, Brackeer, who has degrees in prelaw and Soviet-Eastern European studies, said he wanted to get away from athletics.

Ms. Marshall said MISD's may put even more muscle into recruiting efforts this year. She said recruiters, hopefully backed by a bigger budget, plan to start even earlier, despite a tight overall district budget.

"We travel cheap," Ms. Marshall said. "We stay at Holiday Inn and allow $22 a day for food.

"We aren't throwing around taxpayer money frivolously."

RECRUIT

What would cost MISD more time than money is the recruiting of high schoolers who plan to attain teacher certification, he said.

As part of their high school curriculum, some 50 of the students a year already spend three hours a day assisting kindergarten teachers.

"A number of the students who have been in that program have gone on to become teachers," Cummins said.

Those students and others who are pondering teaching as a career would be encouraged by school officials to return to MISD for employment.

"We would remind them that Midland is a good place to work, live and raise your family," Cummins said.

The strategy also may help satisfy MISD's need for more minorities in the teaching ranks, a goal of almost every school district nationwide, Cummins said.

Alma Marshall, MISD human resources coordinator, said the effort some day could go as far as the district funding part of college expenses for the students and teacher aides.

With recruiters traveling a rocky road every year, MISD needs all the help it can get, especially with luring minorities, Ms. Marshall said.

"If we're going to increase our minority numbers, we're going to have to do it by investing in the people in this area," she said. "People here are used to not having water or trees."

HURRICANE

Heavy rain had been falling all afternoon, rushing down normally dry gullies, he said. He said about four families who live along a gully in Buenavista had been told they should leave their homes.

A strong wind was blowing about 7 p.m. (9 p.m. EDT), and some residents had taped or boarded up windows, he said.

According to the U.S. National Weather Service in Miami, Kiko was a "small" hurricane with sustained winds up to 115 mph Saturday night.

At 11 p.m. EDT Saturday, the storm was located near latitude 23.8 north and longitude 109.5 west, about 55 miles east-southeast of La Paz. It was moving west-northwest at about 5 mph.

La Paz, with 160,000 inhabitants, has half the population of the state, which occupies the southern half of the Baja California Peninsula. It is about 760 miles south of San Diego.

Zatarain said emergency supplies were being mustered and shelters stocked with food and blankets throughout the state. Storm warnings were being broadcast, civil defense units had been mobilized and military units were standing by, he said.

Ferry service between the peninsula and the mainland was canceled, he said.

On the mainland, the Sinaloa state government had an emergency plan in effect, the government news agency Notimex said.

The airline Aeromexico canceled or diverted service to Los Mochis, Mazatlan and La Paz on Saturday after making an early morning flight to the three cities, the reservations office said.

The weather service said hurricane warnings were in effect for the Gulf of California side of the Baja peninsula from the southern tip northward to Bahia Conception, about 200 miles north of La Paz.

ORBISON

"I don't know if Roy knew this but his nickname was 'Faces' because he wore those eyeglasses that were so thick," Mrs. Brooks recalled.

"My brothers and him used to play baseball in the street behind Martin Hammer's grocery store. I don't even think the street had a name."

Few outsiders knew this tiny West Texas city — population between 600 and 1,200 depending upon whom is asked — had a name until Orbison reminded them.

And Wink Mayor Maxie Watts thanks him for that.

"A lot of this is to help Wink, Texas," Watts said Saturday.

The idea to build a statue and museum came shortly after the singer's death while the flags at City Hall, near one of the three thoroughfares here named "Roy Orbison Street," were still at half-staff, the mayor said.

"We thought of the Buddy Holly statue in Lubbock and the Bob Wills memorial in Turkey," Watts recalled. "We feel like there is a definitely a clientele of Roy Orbison fans from around the world.

"Everybody tells me there was nothing bad about Roy. He was a good ol' boy."

Perpetuating that anecdote is Kenny Morrill, an impersonator eerily similar to the late singer who said, "Orbison was a singer's singer."

He and other acts provided entertainment at the benefit Saturday.

Morrill is a former member of The Wailers, a singing group featured most recently on the soundtrack to the film, "Great Balls of Fire."

Four months ago, Morrill donned a black toupe' and hit the entertainment circuit, but added: "I don't want to be Roy Orbison forever."

Morrill, a lifelong singer who says he's truly interested in beefing up the Orbison memorial fund, said the late singer "made the link between rock and roll and quality, almost operatic, vocals.

"That's what made him so unique."

Those wishing to donate to the memorial fund may send a check in care of the Roy Orbison Memorial Fund, c/o Wink Chamber of Commerce, Box 395, Wink, TX, 79789.

Exercise may affect training

FORT BLISS (AP) — What was learned this month in the deserts of Texas and New Mexico during a mammoth joint military exercise could play a significant role in future military training, participants said.

Military officials who commanded some of the training at Exercise Roving Sands said the most valuable experience of the exercise was the opportunity to work with other branches of the military.

"We got to do things we know we're going to have to do in war time, but never have had a chance to do," said Air Force Capt. Mike McDonough, who was chief of air operations during the exercises and belongs to the 433rd Tactical Fighter Training Squad based at Holloman Air Force Base in southwest New Mexico.

Soldiers and pilots from the Air Force, Army and Marines and members of the New Mexico and Florida national guards were among the 8,000 who participated in the air defense artillery exercises.

Major Rande Read, project officer for Holloman AFB's 49th Tactical Fighter Wing, which flies the F-15 jet, said the military branches rarely train together because of funding. But he said the Fort Bliss-based 11th Air Defense Artillery Brigade footed much of the multimillion dollar bill for the exercises.

He said Gen. Colin Powell, President Bush's nominee to become chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, visited at the start of the exercises. The war games also drew the interest of Forces Command, a joint command composed of people from all four services.

The mock battles were carried out at Fort Bliss, Biggs Army Air Field, White Sands Missile Range, Holloman Air Force Base and at Roswell, N.M.

The operation brought in Air Force units from Cannon, Holloman and Kirtland Air Force bases in New Mexico; Carswell AFB in Fort Worth and Tinker AFB in Oklahoma. Also participating were Marines from El Toro and Camp Pendleton, Calif. and Yuma, Ariz. The Army brought in soldiers from Fort Bragg, N.C., and Fort Stewart, Ga.

Army Capt. Biff Baker, assistant operations officer with the 11th Air Defense Artillery Brigade, said the exercises were so successful, the brigade already is working on plans for Roving Sands II in May.

"Everyone was so pleased with it," Baker said Friday. "Not only did everyone want to come back, they want to come back with twice as many soldiers, twice as many weapons and twice as much aircraft."

He said one of the greatest opportunities the exercises offered was for experimentation among the branches with Tactical Data Information Link, or TADIL A, which allowed the military's radar systems to share information.

"If their's a mountain separating an Army unit and a Marines unit, we can see what's on their side of the mountain and they can see what's on our side of the mountain by using TADIL A and we can lock in (Air Force aircraft)," Baker said. "That way we can't get one of these Pearl Harbor situations."

While the Air Force and Army often train together, the Marines usually train with the Navy. "Where we (the Army) use 'reporting for duty,' they (the Marines) use 'on deck,'" Baker said.

For the exercises, military officials designated the Country of Colorado as the enemy that had invaded the Country of New Mexico. Needing assistance, the Country of New Mexico called on its ally, the Country of Texas.

Transporting special forces, paratroopers and equipment from North Carolina, Georgia and other states were also part of the exercise.

The Marines were the enemy, while the Air Force had dual roles and the Army was the good guys. Not only did the forces practice attacks and counterattacks between aircraft and ground missiles, but ground attacks with special forces troops and paratroopers also were simulated.

During a raid on the 11th Air Defense Artillery Brigade's headquarters, a colonel was taken prisoner at 4 a.m. and marched out in his underwear and boots, Baker said. He escaped at 4:30 a.m., returning to friendly troops in his underwear.

Pilots practiced more realistic defensive maneuvers through the use of star clusters or flare-like devices, McDonough said.

The flares simulated firing of a Stinger, weapons popularized from their use in Afghanistan, which cannot be detected on aircraft radar.

McDonough said such enhanced training for pilots is normally only available at a major military exercise.

Richards takes gubernatorial campaign to coast

STATE

AUSTIN (AP) — Democratic gubernatorial hopeful Ann Richards casts off this week on a campaign cruise up the Gulf Coast, a voyage she said would focus attention on critical issues but which her expected opponent, Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox, called a publicity stunt.

Richards

"For too long, the Texas coast has been ignored, or not given the kind of attention it deserves. We're doing this to call attention to the coast itself," said Glenn Smith, Ms. Richards' campaign manager.

But Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox, who's expected to challenge Ms. Richards for the Democratic nomination, offered a different assessment.

"I don't need to do a fact-finding publicity stunt on a boat going up the Intercoastal Waterway to know the problems of the region and the hopes and dreams of coastal residents," Mattox said.

"I have worked on those problems and shared those dreams while in the state Legislature, the U.S. Congress and as attorney general," he said.

Even in an age when most candidates for statewide office fly from TV market to TV market, a five-day boat trip is unusual.

It was designed with media coverage in mind, however. Ms. Richards' campaign staff has spent more than a month arranging the trip, which is to include a press conference in every port.

News reporters were encouraged to sail along, and a special stop was planned Monday at Rockport to drop off television crews who needed extra time on land to get their film back to studios for the evening news programs.

After a news conference Sunday in Brownsville, Ms. Richards will fly to Corpus Christi, where she boards a boat Monday bound for Port O'Connor, Freeport, Galveston, Houston and Port Arthur.

Ms. Richards so far is the only announced candidate in a Democratic gubernatorial field that's sure to grow.

Besides Mattox, several other Democrats are looking at the race, including former Govs. Mark White and Dolph Briscoe and possibly state Sen. John Montford of Lubbock.

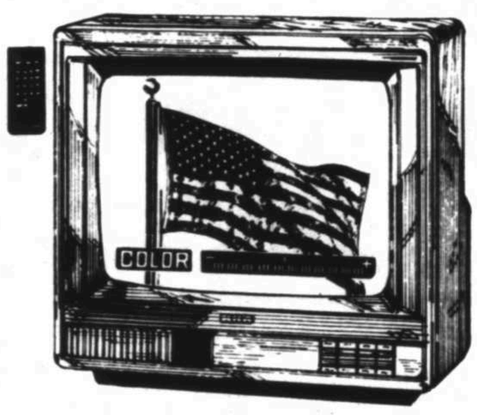

Three Republicans also have kicked off their campaigns, on land: Midland oilman Clayton Williams, Railroad Commissioner Kent Hance and former secretary of state Jack Rains.

Ms. Richards' campaign manager said the trip will bring public attention to a number of significant issues, including jobs, the environment, drug smuggling and tourism.

"There is no area of Texas that stands a better chance of getting more and more jobs than our coastal areas. All kinds of industries could have an interest in locating there. Trade and tourism alone could mean thousands of jobs," Smith said.

Trinity winds down solar energy studies after funds end

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — When Trinity University pioneered some of the country's most advanced solar energy research projects 12 years ago, the school's president called it "a scene out of science fiction."

Trinity invested about $4.5 million in mostly federal money into solar energy projects in the 1970s, becoming a national leader in the field.

But, with no more federal funds available for solar research, the school's endeavors have dwindled.

Last week, a construction company hauled off the last of the solar panels from the roof of the Sams Memorial Center and sold them as salvage.

At one time, Trinity had the nation's only master's degree program in solar energy, along with the largest collection of tracking solar collectors in the country and several other major-league projects.

That all is gone, largely because the federal government stopped funding solar research when Ronald Reagan became president in 1980. Of Trinity's projects, the one atop the Sams Memorial Center was the grandest. The 1,608 10-foot solar collectors, dedicated in February 1977, still represent the biggest project of its type in the nation.

Duncan Wimpress, then-president of Trinity, described it as "a scene out of science fiction."

A $1.2 million grant from the U.S. Energy Research and Development Agency and another $500,000 from Trinity and other sources paid for the project.

More complicated than traditional solar collectors, the collectors rotated with the sun, concentrating heat onto water-filled pipes to provide 75 percent of the heating and hot water for the school's physical education complex and six dormitories.

When everything worked, it lived up to expectations, physics Professor Eugene Clark said. Unfortunately, the 3,200 rotating plumbing joints were prone to leaks.

"I think if it were low-maintenance, it'd still be up today," Clark told the San Antonio Light. "But it required so many people to keep it running, they just figured it wasn't worth the continuing people-investment."

Trinity quit using the system in the early 1980s, spokeswoman Sharon Jones said.

So, Guido Brothers Construction Co. started removing the panels about a month ago and finished last week. The university's other ambitious solar programs already had drifted into oblivion.

The school started a master's degree program in solar energy in 1976, when federal research money was plentiful and jobs were waiting for graduates. That changed when Reagan took office, Clark said, and the program folded three years ago after 22 people had earned the degree.

A $2.3 million federal program, started in 1977 to measure the amount of solar energy that strikes the earth under different weather conditions, also lost its funding when Reagan took office, Clark said. That research continues on a limited scale.

Trinity's third major solar project was begun in 1979 with a $358,000 grant from the Department of Energy to design, build and monitor passive solar systems. Contributions pushed the budget to $429,000.

Special prison prosecutor fired

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Walker County District Attorney Frank Blazek fired a special prison prosecutor as one of his assistants and plans to ask district attorneys elsewhere to ban the prosecutor from trying cases in their counties.

Blazek notified prison prosecutor David Weeks Friday that he was being dismissed because of his plans to try to unseat Blazek in next year's election.

"I think anybody who is familiar with Texas government structure knows a district attorney is not going to let an assistant district attorney run against him and remain an assistant district attorney," Blazek told the Houston Chronicle.

Weeks, 39, heads the prison prosecution unit, which investigates and tries cases arising from crimes committed in the Texas Department of Corrections. He handles those duties for a 12-county region and technically is considered an assistant district attorney in all of those counties. But Weeks' contract lists him as a Walker County employee.

Blazek, 38, who is completing his second full term, said he will raise the issue of whether Weeks should be allowed to continue his duties for other counties when the Texas District and County Attorneys Association convenes its annual meeting Sept. 18.

"The impetus for David's problems came from his decision to run against an elected DA," Blazek said. "I'm not going to compromise the integrity of this office to let someone else's political ambition succeed."

But Weeks counters that his "integrity as a prosecutor has always been above reproach."

"I do my job to the best of my ability and not in consideration for personal or political reasons," Weeks said.

Weeks' office, and a similar one based in Brazoria County, are funded through a grant to that association from the governor's office.

Blazek said Weeks could continue prosecuting prison cases in other counties if the attorneys' association wants to restructure the contract, which expires Thursday. But Blazek added he doesn't think the unit could operate efficiently if one of its attorneys is banned from practicing here.

Neither Weeks nor Blazek has formally announced intentions to seek the Democratic nomination in next spring's primary, but Weeks has made no secret of his intentions and Blazek, in the past few weeks, has asked some elected officials to support him in his bid for re-election.

Checks delayed after signature cut out

GALVESTON (AP) — More than $111,000 earmarked to pay August expenses — including the payroll for 54 Galveston County Beach Parks employees — have been held up after the county auditor ordered his signature cut out of the checks.

County Auditor Phil Lohec ordered his signatures to be removed from $78,000 in payroll checks and another $33,000 in checks to pay department expenses in a continuing controversy in the parks department.

"His signature was cut out of the checks with an X-Acto knife," said Laura Olafson, administrative assistant to parks board Executive Director Pat Hallisey.

Lohec included a note with the "holey" checks, Ms. Olafson said.

"He said he is no longer going to sign checks for our department," she said.

Lohec's signature refusal is the latest development in a controversy over whether the parks department is subject to and abiding by Texas laws requiring county governments to seek bids on purchases exceeding $5,000.

Precinct 3 Commissioner Wayne Johnson said this week that the department has failed to solicit bids on more than $260,000 worth of gasoline in the last six years and has used multiple purchase orders on at least one transaction to circumvent the $5,000 bidding requirement.

Lohec told the Houston Chronicle Friday that the dispute over whether the parks department is subject to the same bidding laws that county government must follow has dragged on for five years. Lohec said he decided to refuse to sign department checks until the issue is settled.

"I'm disappointed that Phil has taken that position," County Judge Ray Holbrook said. "He seems to be as upset about this as Wayne Johnson is."

At Johnson's request, Lohec this week began auditing the department's financial records for the last two years.

"With the latest interest sparked by Commissioner Johnson, I thought it was a good time to get this issue settled," Lohec said.

But Ms. Hallisey called Lohec's action "irresponsible."

Shoppers walk along the streets of Laredo's downtown shopping district past one of several Indian shops specializing in gold and Indian clothing.

Indian merchants thriving in enclave by Rio Grande

By JOEL WILLIAMS

LAREDO (AP) — The border's blurring effect on language and culture is taken a step further in Laredo's crowded downtown shopping district sprinkled with signs like: "Madre India," "Ropa Hindu," "Bombay Connection" and "Casa Hari."

An enclave of merchants from India has established itself during the past decade in the nation's most Hispanic city, where downtown abruptly ends at the Rio Grande.

Spanish and English meld with Hindi, Sindhi, Gujarati and other tongues from the polyglot Indian subcontinent.

"The Mexicans come and they buy gold from me in large quantities," said Ramesh Tewani, owner of Madre India No. 2 on Zaragoza Street.

On the back wall of his diamond and Italian-gold jewelry store is a prominent figure of Ganesh, the Hindu god of good luck. Tewani came to the United States from India, and moved to Laredo in 1977, about the same time other Indians began converging on the border city.

"What brought me to the U.S.?" he said. "Business."

His 20-year-old son, Mohan Tewani, runs the Madre India No. 1, featuring high-fashion costume jewelry, just a few blocks down the same street.

More than 90 percent of their business comes from Mexicans who use the retail setup to make selections for large wholesale purchases, say the Tewanis and other Indian merchants on Juarez and Zaragoza streets. They say they found success in Laredo and spread the word to other Indians.

Many of the Mexican customers smuggle the goods into Mexico to get by their country's tariffs and trade restrictions, the Indian merchants say.

Mayor Aldo Tatangelo, a downtown retailer, remembers a wave of Indians "just coming and coming and coming" to the city in the early 1980s to set up a gold trade for eager Mexican customers.

"I call it the 'Gold City,' because there's so much gold in there," Tatangelo said. "The Indians are good in jewelry. It's very important to them, and they've got good connections with the factories in Italy."

He estimated that jewelry merchants, now dominated by Indians, sell as much as $500 million in gold to Mexicans shopping in Laredo.

Others have moved into other lines, including cheaper jewelry, electronics and clothing.

They have a reputation for prosperity in Laredo, with more than a few Indians living in the fashionable Del Mar "C" and Regency Park neighborhoods on the city's north side.

With immigration has come a degree of adaptation to the U.S. and Mexican cultures, but also an effort to preserve some of their Indian roots.

The India Association of Laredo, with 33 families, meets regularly for a dose of culture. On Sunday, Aug. 13, the association met at Ramesh Tewani's house for a "katha" or thanksgiving prayer session. Afterwards, they raised the Indian flag to celebrate India's independence day.

The letter sent out to association members, written in English, concluded with the multicultural message "Viva. Indian Independence."

Association president Kishin Rupani, owner of Dayasons Costume Jewelry & Gifts, said the organization helps maintain a close-knit community.

Indian singers and other entertainers touring the United States sometimes are paid to make side trips to Laredo and give performances at association members' homes.

But as with most immigrants, identification with the new country increases with the time here, particularly among the young.

Mohan Tewani has a shrine in the back of his store, but is unsure of the names of Hindu gods revered there.

"My father would be the expert on that," the younger Tewani said.

Command of their parents' various native languages also is weakening.

"Ultimately, they have to blend in with the society," said Rupani's 21-year-old daughter, Soma, a banking and finance major at Laredo Junior College.

"Actually, we are Americanized in a way, but we're more conservative with dating and things like that," Soma Rupani said. "You've heard of the arranged marriages? You have to stay within your community."

Some parents still arrange their children's marriages, and dating is frowned upon, she said.

"It's not done," Ms. Rupani said. "It's not that it doesn't happen, but it shouldn't happen."

Yet even the marriage institution has been liberalized with the passing of time in America.

Rupani did not meet Soma's mother 26 years ago until they were engaged.

"I will know the guy, but the one they (her parents) approve of is the one I will marry," Soma Rupani said. "That's how we have changed a little."

The India Association usually meets at homes, because there is no Indian temple or movie theater. An Indian restaurant opened a few years ago, but the owner, Gary Lakhiani, learned that his fellow Indians preferred to cook their own typical cuisine at home, and not enough locals were interested in trying the food.

Lakhiani has since gone into the electronics business.

His brother, Andy Lakhiani, moved to Laredo four years ago after nearly being killed by an armed robber in his former shop in Dallas.

Transient convicted of reporter's slaying

BELLEVILLE, Ill. (AP) — A drifter convicted of murder in the beating death of a 24-year-old Texas woman who had been working as an intern reporter at the local newspaper faces sentencing in September.

At the conclusion of a five-day bench trial Friday, a judge convicted 28-year-old Rodney Woidtke, formerly of Bakersfield, Calif., of killing Audrey Cardenas, who had been in this Southern Illinois city only 11 days when she disappeared June 19, 1988.

A week later her nude body was found in a dry creek bed by a custodian at Belleville Township High School East. Ms. Cardenas, a recent graduate of Texas A&M University at College Station, had come to Illinois to work as an intern at the Belleville News-Democrat.

Judge Richard A. Aguirre, who presided over the trial, set a sentencing date of Sept. 28. Woidtke could face a 20- to 60-year sentence.

In closing arguments earlier Friday, defense attorney Brian K. Trentmann said police made Woidtke a scapegoat in the slaying and failed to fully examine the possibility of other suspects.

"They picked up this poor transient who clearly has a mental problem and threw him in the slammer," Trentmann said.

He said Woidtke claimed he had raped the victim only after police accused him of being homosexual, and made the assertion to defend himself against the characterization.

Woidtke was not charged with rape. The victim's body was badly decomposed and authorities could not determine whether she had been sexually assaulted.

News-Democrat Publisher Gary Berkley said he is not convinced Woidtke is the killer.

"I'm somewhat disappointed and disillusioned with the verdict," Berkley said. "There are too many unanswered questions for me. From what I know of the case and the evidence, things just don't add up."

But Scott Mansfield, assistant St. Clair County state's attorney, said Woidtke knew too much about the crime scene to be innocent — including the position of the pipe used in the murder.

"I think the evidence shows clearly that the defendant is a troubled person, full of sexual delusions, feelings of sexual inadequacies, with a burning desire to find a woman and have a relationship," Mansfield said.

"He decided to take that action and got himself a woman. We don't know how, but he got Audrey Cardenas."

Pro-choice supporters demonstrate

HOUSTON (AP) — Pro-choice demonstrators, some carrying signs warning lawmakers not to pass legislation restricting abortions, gathered at a rally Saturday in an effort to demonstrate widespread support for legalized abortion.

Sarah Weddington, the attorney in the historic Roe v. Wade case that led to legalized abortions in the United States, told the crowd that it was up to them to lead the fight in keeping abortions legal.

Ms. Weddington said that while she and others were part of the past struggle, "you are the ones we look to in the future.

"All we can do is take a step at a time and remember our dreams," she said, adding that she looks to the day when "every child is a wanted child and every mother is a willing mother."

More than 1,000 people attended the "Rally for Choice" Saturday morning at Sam Houston Park. The rally served as the kickoff to a grassroots campaign aimed at showing legislators that all types of voters support legal abortions, organizers said.

STATE IN BRIEF

EPA gives Austin sludge award

AUSTIN (AP) — This city has gained national preeminence in waste. No, not frivolous spending, but real human waste.

The Environmental Protection Agency has decided Austin is No. 1 in America when it comes to sludge.

Sludge. Human waste. The EPA bestowed upon this city the National Award for Beneficial Reuse of Sludge, the Austin American-Statesman reported Saturday.

Ron Bond, acting director of the city's Wastewater Treatment Department, said, "It may be sludge to you, but it's our bread and butter. It's a resource."

Through a complicated — and smelly — scientific process, Austin turns its 250 tons of sludge per month into fertilizer for city park grass and crops that feed cattle.

The city also turns human waste into compost, which has been dubbed "Dillo Dirt" to entice residents to pay for something they flushed down the toilet three months ago.

Bond said Dillo Dirt was selected because "calling it Human Doo-Doo wouldn't have been too appetizing."

Rules over fish disputed

AUSTIN (AP) — Aquarium dealers say there's something fishy about possible new regulations about nonnative fish.

Although the rules being drafted by the Texas Department of Parks and Wildlife pertain to a new law on fish-farming, they could make it illegal to own guppies or goldfish, some pet store owners said.

But department officials say such charges are a fish story and they're trying to clear the waters on rules for the importation, sale and possession of exotic fish, shellfish and aquatic plants.

"I hate to see a big ado about nothing," said Charles Nash of San Marcos, chairman of the Parks and Wildlife Commission.

He said the rules will govern what goes into the state's public waters, not what goes into the family aquarium.

The regulations stem from a bill by state Sen. Chet Brooks, D-Pasadena, that transfers authority over fish farms from the parks and wildlife agency to the Texas Department of Agriculture.

Lawmen receive complaints

HOUSTON (AP) — More than two dozen Houston police officers have been the target of repeated citizen complaints, and many of them continue to patrol.

Houston Police Department records show there are 28 officers still on the force who each have had between 15 and 30 complaints filed against them with the department's Internal Affairs Division, the Houston Post reported in a copyright story Saturday.

All but six of the 28 are assigned to uniformed patrol divisions, and some of those continue their patrol assignments despite findings that they were guilty of misconduct, including harassment and "criminal activity," according to the internal documents.

Police spokesman J.C. Mosier said it was virtually impossible to place potential troublemakers within the department in isolated areas.

"No matter where we put an officer, he's going to have daily contact with the public," Mosier said.

Many of the complaints are far less serious that those filed against former officer James Cebula, who was not fired despite 16 complaints against him until he was charged with kidnapping and raping a 24-year-old woman he arrested.

Italy bridge for sale

ITALY (AP) — For nearly 50 years, Margaret Felty has admired the riveted steel design of the Chambers Creek bridge near this burg about 40 miles south of Dallas.

"It's really close to my heart," said Mrs. Felty, chairwoman of the Ellis County Historical Commission. "I love to go down there just to go over that bridge."

If it means that much to her, she could buy it.

Two weeks ago, the Texas Department of Highways and Public Transportation put the 60-year-old bridge up for sale so it could be removed and preserved.

The bridge will be demolished if a buyer isn't found, said Al Barton, supervising resident engineer for the highway department in Ellis County. So far, there have been no takers.

The 265-ton, 150-foot-long bridge on U.S. Highway 77 between Italy and Forreston was built in 1929, making it eligible for the National Register of Historic Places, Barton told The Dallas Morning News.

Because of the bridge's historic value, federal law requires that an attempt be made to find a new user willing to move and preserve it, Barton said.

Perot offers $500,000

JUSTIN (AP) — Developer Ross Perot Jr. offered more than $500,000 in incentives he hopes will convince a school district to provide a tax abatement for American Airlines' proposed maintenance base at Alliance Airport.

More than 400 residents of the Northwest Independent School District met Friday night to hear Perot's proposal. Most opposed the $50 million abatement, but some said the district would benefit in the long run because the American base would attract other businesses.

Perot, who is leading the development of the industrial airport north of Fort Worth, wants the district to grant a 15-year tax abatement on 202 acres where American's $500 million maintenance base will be built.

To help persuade board members, he offered $440,000 school officials could use to prevent a 7.9 percent tax increase this year, $20,000 to help find a new superintendent and 15 acres of property to build a new school.

Poland moves toward freedom 50 years after tyranny began

By ROBERT E. THOMPSON
Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — Predawn darkness enveloped the White House as Franklin Roosevelt roused from his sleep and reached for the telephone beside his bed to take an emergency call from William Bullitt, his ambassador in Paris.

Bullitt explained to the president that he had just received an urgent call from Anthony Biddle, Roosevelt's envoy in Warsaw, with the grim news that Adolf Hitler's Nazi forces had invaded Poland. Heavy fighting was underway and the bombing of cities was anticipated, said Biddle. He could not provide the president with a fuller report, the diplomat explained, because the telephone connection between Warsaw and Paris had been severed during his conversation with Biddle.

Roosevelt listened intently to Bullitt's words. Then, he exclaimed: "Well, Bill, it's come at last. God help us all."

The "it" to which the American president referred was World War II. The date was Sept. 1, 1939, one half century ago.

By an amazing conjunction of past and present, the people of Poland have now completed a full 50-year cycle of history. To commemorate the loss of liberty and democracy in August and September, 1939, they are vigorously reactivating those essential elements of a free society in August and September, 1989.

Rarely does history move on such a precise time schedule; seldom are monumental events tied so neatly into an exact period of time. In fact the cyclical packaging of events in Poland recalls the remarkable American coincidence of July 4, 1826 when the major architects of the Declaration of Independence, Thomas Jefferson and John Adams, both died on the 50th anniversary of that inspiring document.

So it is with Poland. The beginning of tyranny is memorialized five decades later by the casting off of tyranny.

When Roosevelt heard the news of Hitler's invasion of Poland he was not greatly surprised. The brutal German dictator already had subjugated Austria and Czechoslovakia while England and France dithered in a frenzy of appeasement.

"The British and French cabinets at this time presented a front of two overripe melons crushed together, whereas what was needed was a gleam of steel," said Winston Churchill who eight months later would be summoned to the prime ministership to save an England clinging desperately to the ropes.

Although they had done nothing to help Austria or Czechoslovakia, England and France declared war against Germany two days after the Sept. 1 invasion of Poland. At that moment, the most devasting conflagration in history was underway. Before it was over, it would involve the death of roughly 50 million humans, the wounding and maiming many additional millions, destruction of entire nations and the launching of the atomic age.

And it all began with the rape of Poland, whose fate actually had been decided on Aug. 23, a week before the invasion. It was then that Hitler and Soviet dictator Joseph Stalin signed a non-aggression pact and decided secretly to partition Poland between them. Thus Hitler invaded Poland from the west on Sept. 1 and Stalin dispatched his forces from the east on Sept. 17.

The Poles fought valiantly, but they were no match for the ruthless might of Hitler's and Stalin's forces. The German's seized 72,000 square miles of western Poland and the Russians 78,000 square miles of eastern Poland. During the German occupation, it is estimated that 6.6 million victims died, including three million Jews who were murdered in gas chambers and burned in furnaces.

From the moment of occupation in 1939 to the moment of Solidarity's establishment of a government free of foreign domination in 1989, Poland has essentially been a satellite of Germany, Russia or both. Poland's fate after World War II is one of the great ironies and tragedies of modern times.

Under pressure from Roosevelt and Churchill, Stalin agreed at the Yalta conference to sponsor free and open elections in Poland, which his troops occupied at the end of the war. But he refused to live up to his pledge – and that refusal helped precipitate the Cold War.

Standing before the House of Commons in 1945, Churchill declared: "There are few virtues that the Poles do not possess –and there are few mistakes they have ever avoided." That is an excellent summation of the Polish people and the Polish nation.

Spacecraft finds rings around Neptune

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Voyager 2 discovered at least six tiny "moonlets" hidden in one of Neptune's two brightest rings, and also found three more rings orbiting the planet, NASA said Saturday.

Voyager's scientists also reported the solar system's fourth-largest planet is surrounded by a radiation belt and has a tilted magnetic field, and may have an aurora like Earth's northern and southern lights.

The researchers said nitrogen — the gas that makes up 78 percent of Earth's atmosphere — is the main component in the skies of Triton, the frosty Neptunian moon sculpted with faults, cliffs, pink snow, meteorite craters and inactive volcanoes that once oozed viscous ice instead of molten rock. Methane, or natural gas, is present as well, they said.

By 9 a.m. PDT Sunday, Voyager will be 2.29 million miles from Neptune, speeding away from the planet at 37,689 mph. The probe will be 2.75 billion miles from Earth. Voyager traveled a curving 4.43-billion-mile path to achieve Thursday night's close encounter with Neptune and Friday morning's flight past Triton.

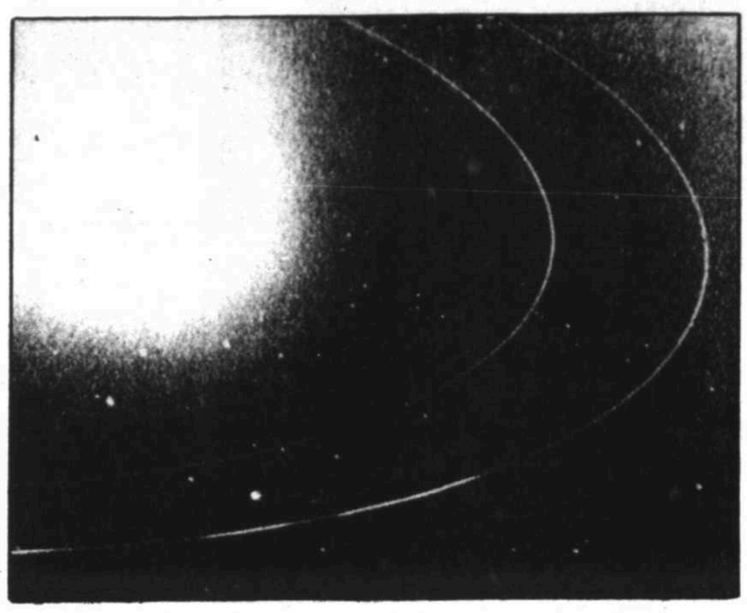

"We have five rings at Neptune," including the two bright ones found earlier by the spacecraft and three new ones, said Bradford Smith, leader of the Voyager photographic imaging team at the space agency's Jet Propulsion Laboratory.

Smith said later the boundaries between the five rings aren't well defined, so there could be as few as three rings or as many as five. He reversed himself later Saturday, deciding the rings are distinct enough to count the total as five.

A bright ring discovered Aug. 11 initially appeared to be a partial ring, called a ring arc, but proved to be a complete ring. Six to eight icy objects — the largest no bigger than 6 miles to 12 miles wide — are embedded in that ring, Smith said.

"You could refer to them as moonlets," he said.

Smith said the gravity of the moonlets may explain why the ring has a clumpy appearance, with some segments wider than others.

This wide-angle Voyager 2 image of the rings of Neptune are shown in an image made from 683,000 miles away as the spacecraft left the planet.

AP Laserphoto

So far, Voyager has discovered six objects orbiting Neptune that are large enough to be called moons. That brings the total to eight moons, including Triton and Nereid, which were discovered from Earth.

The ring containing the moonlets remains Neptune's outermost ring. Next toward the planet is a narrow newly discovered ring, followed by another previously unknown ring that is a broad, diffuse band of dust. Then comes the other ring discovered earlier. Closest to Neptune is the third newly discovered ring, a broad, diffuse band of dust NASA said was 1,550 miles wide.

The initial confusion over the number of Neptune's rings is reminiscent of what happened at Uranus in 1986. Ten thin rings were apparent as Voyager neared Uranus. But after the spacecraft passed that planet, a wide sheet of rings and dust bands became visible when backlit by the sun. As a result, scientists still are arguing how many distinct rings orbit Uranus.

Researchers said Saturday that Voyager also found:

- Neptune's magnetic poles are tilted at least 30 degrees away from the poles around which the planet rotates. Earth's magnetic axis is angled 12 degrees away from its rotational axis, putting one magnetic pole in northern Canada about 1,000 miles from the true, or rotational, north pole.
- The planet is surrounded by a radiation belt much weaker than the Van Allen belts encircling Earth. The radiation belt's location near the orbit of Triton may explain the pinkish hue of some of the moon's surface. Radiation bombardment can turn frozen natural gas that color.

Deputy Voyager project scientist Ellis Miner said there is evidence from an ultraviolet light sensor that, at 30 degrees south latitude, Neptune has an aurora similar to Earth's northern and southern lights. Other scientists Saturday refused to discuss the evidence, saying it was too preliminary.

If the aurora proves real, Neptune's tilted magnetic field would explain why the glowing lights are relatively close to the planet's equator rather than the rotational poles.

Auroras are caused when electrically charged particles in solar wind spiral in toward a planet along magnetic field lines. On Earth, they surround the polar regions because the magnetic and rotational poles are relatively close.

Voyager continued Saturday to send back recorded photographs taken during its Neptune-Triton flyby, including its most detailed photos of Triton.

The spaceship also looked over its shoulder to make a global temperature map of Neptune, search for auroras and more rings, and study the weight of Neptune and Triton.

Gang member awaits arraignment; Newton's family prepares services

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — A prison gang member was held without bail Saturday in the death of Huey P. Newton as the family and friends of the Black Panther co-founder prepared for funeral services.

Tyrone Robinson, 25, faced arraignment on a charge of homicide Monday, the same day as Newton's public funeral here.

Newton, 47, was shot to death early Tuesday in what police described as a continuing dispute over drugs.

Police said Robinson, arrested 14 hours after the slaying, told investigators Friday he shot Newton three times in the head in self-defense. He said Newton, who had a history of substance abuse, pulled a gun and demanded crack cocaine, but police said there was no evidence Newton was armed.

Instead, investigators said they believe Newton's slaying was an attempt by Robinson, an admitted small-time drug dealer, to make a name for himself in the Black Guerrilla Family, a drug-running prison-based gang.

Police said a witness to the shooting heard Robinson say "I'll make rank, man, I'll make rank" as he fired the shots, apparently referring to a hoped-for advancement. Police would not identify the witness.

The confrontation was the latest in a series of run-ins between Newton and the Black Guerrilla Family, police said.

"Mr. Newton was a person the BGF felt had crossed them. He had robbed and stolen dope from members of the BGF in the past," said Oakland homicide Sgt. Dan Mercado.

Through a spokesman, Newton's family declined to comment Saturday on the arrest. At the time of his death, Newton and his wife, Frederika Slaughter Newton, had lived in Berkeley.

The family prepared for Monday's funeral at Allen Temple Baptist Church in Oakland. Organizers said they expect 2,000 mourners, including Black Panther co-founder Bobby Seale, at the service.

A public viewing also was planned at an Oakland mortuary on Sunday.

Meanwhile, the site on a West Oakland street where the slaying occurred has become something of a shrine. Supporters have placed wreaths and flowers and lit candles on the sidewalk in the drug-infested neighborhood where Newton, as the Panthers' minister of defense, established programs for poor blacks two decades ago.

Police said Friday they believe Newton, who had a history of drug and alcohol abuse and entered a hospital treatment program in 1984, had been using cocaine Monday night and early Tuesday.

In the final hours of his life, investigators said, Newton went to a "crack house" where he and Robinson got into an argument after Newton demanded the drug.

2,100 suspects arrested in drug roundup

MIAMI (AP) — Florida's second statewide crack crackdown this summer captured more than 2,100 suspects — from teen-agers to an 82-year-old man — and more than doubled the number of crack rocks confiscated, authorities said Saturday.

The greater quantity of crack seized in "Operation Rock Pile II" indicates police arrested more dealers than in the first roundup, Broward County sheriff's spokesman George Crolius said.

An estimated 1,200 officers in all of the state's 67 counties arrested 2,117 suspects during the 48 hours ending midnight Friday, compared with 2,076 arrests in the two-day operation begun June 31.

The second roundup produced 9,507 crack cocaine "rocks" — individual chunks of crack ready for smoking — as well as 2.73 pounds of cocaine powder, 12.72 pounds of marijuana, 75 firearms, 327 vehicles and more than $70,000 in cash, Crolius said by telephone from the operation command post in Fort Lauderdale.

The first "Operation Rock Pile" netted 3,510 crack cocaine rocks, 10 pounds of cocaine powder, 3 pounds of marijuana, 50 firearms, 327 vehicles and $55,000 cash.

The operations' main objective was to "get as much crack off the street as we can," said another sheriff's spokesman, Jim Leljedal.

In Pompano Beach, Frank Wilcher, 82, was among those arrested, Crolius said.

Wilcher, who had a substantial amount of crack rocks, cash and several firearms in his house, was charged with trafficking in cocaine, and could face a life sentence if convicted, Crolius said.

"It's an enticement to all members of our society, the lure of easy money from the sale of crack rocks," said Crolius.

The crackdown, coordinated by the Florida Sheriffs' Association, combined reverse sting and "Trojan Horse" operations with search warrants and highway surveillance.

Undercover officers in reverse stings pose as drug sellers and arrest customers. In "Trojan Horse" operations, deputies hidden in the back of a van jump out and arrest street corner dealers when they offer crack for sale to the van's driver.

Couple returns home after 66 days adrift

MIAMI (AP) — A Miami couple who survived 66 days aboard a life raft in the Pacific Ocean returned home Saturday looking for a long rest — away from the water and their aquatic tormentors.

William Butler, 59, and Simone Butler, 56, arrived at Miami International Airport after a seven-week ordeal, during which they said their boat was sunk by whales and they had to fend off sharks and subsist on fresh fish and desalinated sea water.

The couple, each more than 50 pounds lighter after the ordeal, flew from San Jose, Costa Rica, a week after they were rescued by a Costa Rican Coast Guard cutter 13 miles off that Central American nation's coast.

"It's hard to believe that seven days ago we were still adrift, trying to make landfall," Butler said. "Really, it's hard to discuss the situation."

Butler said the most dangerous day on the covered raft was a day he called "The Shootout at O.K. Corral."

The Butlers that afternoon found themselves in the middle of a huge school of triggerfish, a small feeding fish. Then came a school of porpoises and "about 20 to 30 sharks," he said.

"They all got in a huge feeding frenzy," Butler said, that ended only about 3 a.m. the next day.

During the turbulent episode, either a porpoise or a shark got caught in one of the raft's balast bags, and violently threw the raft about for a couple of minutes, according to Butler.

Butler, a retired exporter, looked trim and fit. He wore a bushy grey beard grown during the sojourn.

Mrs. Butler, who lost 67 pounds, left the plane in a wheelchair, but stood up to greet waiting family members and friends and talk with reporters.

Among those waiting to meet the Butlers was their 2-month-old granddaughter, Jessica Butler, who was born after they put to sea.

Ten-year-old Cameron Kocher walks into the Monroe County courthouse in Stroudsburg, Pa., Friday, escorted by his parents, Patricia and Keith.

Boy pleads innocent to adult homicide charge

STROUDSBURG, Pa. (AP) — The defendant wriggled in his chair, hiking his elbows onto the armrests. He crossed his arms when he stood before the judge who called him Mr. Kocher and told him he had been charged with shooting a 7-year-old girl in the back with a hunting rifle.

Cameron Kocher pleaded innocent, moving closer to becoming apparently the youngest person ever in the country to be tried on an adult homicide charge.

He is 10 years old.

The boy let out a heavy sigh as he turned to his parents, Keith and Patricia Kocher, after his arraignment ended Friday.

Prosecutors have ruled out the death penalty if the the fourth-grader is convicted. Mark Pazuhanich, a Monroe County assistant district attorney, said life in prison remains a possibility, though he hasn't decided yet what punishment he would seek. No trial date has been set.

Cameron's lawyer said prosecutors, who fought a request to move the case to juvenile court, should realize they are not dealing with "a miniature adult."

"He doesn't understand the concept of murder and doesn't fully understand the concept of death," Charles Hansford said after the arraignment. "I don't know how to prepare him."

Cameron is charged with killing a playmate, first-grader Jessica Carr. She died March 6, two months before Cameron's 10th birthday, after she was shot as she rode on the back of a snowmobile.

Schools were closed that day because of heavy snow. Cameron, Jessica, 13-year-old Shannon Ratti and other children were spending the day playing video games at Shannon's house in Kresgeville, a town of 250 people in the foothills of the Pocono Mountains.

After Shannon's father, Richard Ratti, found dirty dishes in the house, he put the video games off limits, and the children went outside to ride snowmobiles. But Cameron's parents had told him not to ride snowmobiles when they weren't around, and he left the house angry and went to his home next door, Ratti testified.

The boy said the shooting was an accident while he was playing with a gun. But investigators gave this account of what happened next, ticking off a list of deliberate steps that the judge cited in his decision to have the boy tried as an adult:

Cameron took a key from under a lamp in his parents' bedroom and opened his father's gun cabinet, took out a .35-caliber Marlin lever-action hunting rifle his father had taught him to shoot, and loaded it.

After unlocking a bedroom window and opening it, Cameron took out the screen and set it aside, and he pointed the rifle out the window, investigators said.

At 1:05 p.m. a shot rang out, and Jessica, about 100 yards away, fell from the back of the snowmobile Shannon was driving.

The rifle's recoil slammed the scope into Cameron's face, cutting his forehead. Cameron put the rifle back in the cabinet, bandaged his forehead and hid a spent shell casing.

Fearing a sniper was on the loose, Ratti called Cameron and told him to come back to his house for safety. Ratti's wife, Trudy, testified that Cameron explained the bandage on his forehead by saying he cut himself with a knife when a dog jumped on him as he made a peanut butter-and-jelly sandwich.

As others frantically tried to help Jessica, Cameron sat on the Rattis' floor and resumed playing the video game, Ratti testified.

The girl was pronounced dead about an hour after she was shot. Cameron was arrested two days later after investigators found his blood on the rifle.

Group proposes 'alliance' to fight global warming

SUNDANCE, Utah (AP) — Soviet and U.S. scientists, politicians and entertainers on Saturday urged their governments to forge an "environmental security alliance" to combat global warming.

Actor-filmmaker Robert Redford, who co-sponsored the four-day conference with the Soviet Academy of Science, read a letter to President Bush and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev:

"The United States of America and the U.S.S.R. are the two largest producers of greenhouse gases" thought to cause global warming, Redford said.

"We should provide the leadership in the search for common solutions to the global warming problem as well as for the environmental security of the world."

The letter was signed by Redford and space researcher Roald Segdeev, head of an 11-member Soviet delegation, who said the two nations must cooperate to undo the environmental damage they have incurred.

"For the crimes we've committed, as humans on the planet, we are sentenced to do this job. And I think it is a life-long sentence," Segdeev said.

His comments ended the conference of Soviet and American scientists, political leaders, environmentalists, filmmakers and authors. Among those attending were Sens. Bill Bradley, D-N.J., and Tim Wirth, D-Colo.; Idaho Gov. Cecil Andrus; astronomer Carl Sagan, former Interior Secretary Stewart Udall; and cartoonist Garry Trudeau.

The attempt at "greenhouse glasnost" was not as much a scientific conference as it was an attempt to "pass the baton" from scientists to policy-shapers in both countries, who need to take action, Redford said.

During the conference, scientists predicted that the greenhouse effect, caused by rising levels of atmospheric carbon dioxide and other gases produced by industrial societies, could raise global temperatures by 2 to 10 degrees.

New expedition to find Earhart plane planned

FORT WALTON BEACH, Fla. (AP) — A new expedition spurred by the theory of two retired military fliers is planned next month to try to solve the mystery of Amelia Earhart's disappearance.

The pioneering aviator and her navigator, Fred Noonan, vanished 52 years ago in the South Pacific on a 2,556-mile leg of their attempted flight around the world.

The Pensacola News Journal reported Saturday that two men from this Florida Panhandle city, Tom Willi, 62, a former Navy pilot, and Tom Gannon, 69, who had been an Air force navigator, have persuaded The International Group for Historic Aircraft Recovery, or TIGHAR, that they had the navigation clues to solve the mystery.

The organization plans to send a 20-member expedition that will include Willi and Gannon to the Fiji Islands on Sept. 4, said Richard Gillespie, executive director and search team leader for the group based in Wilmington, del.

There have been numerous theories to explain Ms. Earhart's disappearance, including speculation that she was captured by the Japanese and executed as a spy. Willi and Gannon believe she may have come down on Nikumaroro Island, then known as Gardner Island, about 1,000 miles south of Fiji. They base their theory on a study of her flight plan and other information.

They contend winds may have blown the plane southeast of its destination, Howland Ilsand, toward Nikumaroro. With only two hours of fuel left, Ms. Earhart and Noonan decided to fly south toward Nikumaroro because they knew there were no other islands to the north of their flight path within range of their remaining fuel, Willi and Gannon contend.

Nostalgic march criticizes 'legal lynching'

By LEE BYRD

WASHINGTON (AP) — To the somber cadence of muffled drums, an estimated 35,000 people marched Saturday upon the Supreme Court and Congress to protest what NAACP Director Benjamin L. Hooks called "the legal lynching of black America's hope ... to become full partners in the American dream."

The march, aimed at spurring legislative "remedies" for four recent civil rights decisions by the high court, was fashioned in tone and dress after the historic "Silent March" 72 years ago in New York City. As then, men wore black and women and children wore white; as then, the marchers kept their lips sealed throughout the procession.

The 1917 march of 8,000 people, led by W.E.B. DuBois, down Fifth Avenue elevated the 8-year-old National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to the forefront of the then-fledgling civil rights movement. Saturday's event, which drew nearly every major civil rights leader in the nation, may have restored that standing for an organization which lately has been criticized within the black community as staid and ineffective.

"For an organization that's dead, we did pretty good, didn't we?" beamed Hooks as he looked upon the throng which gathered at the East Front of the Capitol for a rally after the silent march.

Hooks claimed a turnout of 135,000 people; police estimates were far smaller. The U.S. Park Police put the number of marchers at 35,000; the U.S. Capitol police said the crowd at the rally was 18,500.

More than 200 civic, church and labor organizations had joined the NAACP in sponsoring the march. Individuals joining Hooks on the speaker's dais included the Rev. Jesse Jackson, AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland, Joseph Lowery, president of the Sourthern Christian Leadership Conference, Dorothy Height, president of the Black Leadership Forum, and dozens of others.

"We come, presenting our bodies in silent protest, in a manner used in 1917 to protest the brutal lynching of black Americans in this nation," said Hooks. "It is ironic that 72 years later, we find ourselves marching once more to protest the legal lynching of black America's hope for a chance to become full partners in the American dream.

"The five justices who voted on four separate occasions to roll back the clock on civil rights, by their actions, have unraveled the ropes used by black Americans to climb out of the valleys of economic segregation."

In the view of civil rights lawyers, the four decisions this year seriously cut into the modern legal gains of minorities, particularly employment rights. In one case, Patterson vs. McLean Credit Union, the court sharply limited the power of minority men and women to sue private parties, including schools, for discrimatory practices. Similarly, the court's decision in Richmond vs. J. A. Croson Co. was seen as diluting job set-aside programs — guaranteeing certain percentages of municipal projects to minority subcontractors — and other affirmative action plans.

March organizers also assailed the decision in Martin vs. Wilks, which allowed white firefighters in Birmingham, Ala., to attack a consent decree calling for the promotion of blacks as a case of "reverse discrimination." The fourth ruling, Ward's Cove vs. Antonio, was criticized as shifting the entire burden of proof in job discrimination cases to the victims of employer bias.

Kirkland told the rally at the Capitol that "the unions march today because we believe discrimination cannot be eradicated from our society until there is equal employment opportunity for all Americans."

The Supreme Court has often been the target of major demonstrations in the capital in recent years. An estimated 325,000 turned out last spring to urge the court to stand by its 1973 decision legalizing abortion. However, the court weeks later softened that ruling in a case seen as a victory for anti-abortion forces.

Members of the NAACP and other civil rights groups participate in a demonstration in Washington on Saturday. The march is modeled after the historic "silent march' of 1917 in New York City.

H & R BLOCK INCOME TAX COURSE BEGINS SEPT. 7

Thousands of people enjoy part-time employment and earn money each year as income tax preparers. Many received their training in income tax courses taught by H & R Block.

Block is offering a Basic Income Tax Course starting Sept. 7. Students may choose from either morning or evening classes.

The 75-hour Basic course introduces students to income tax preparation. They will receive hands-on experience in preparing individual tax returns, working with increasingly complex tax situations as the term progresses. It is ideal for homemakers, retirees, teachers or anyone else wanting to increase his or her tax knowledge.

Qualified graduates of the course may be offered job interviews with H & R Block but are under no obligation to accept employment.

Registration forms and brochures can be obtained by contacting H & R Block at 1101 N. Midkiff or calling 697-8087.

Stealth bomber makes third flight

EDWARDS AIR FORCE BASE, Calif (AP) — The B-2 stealth bomber ended the longest and most secretive of its three test flights over the Mojave Desert on Saturday with a safe landing here, an Air Force spokeswoman said.

The bat-like bomber took off at 8:31 a.m. from Edwards Air Force Base and landed about four hours and 35 minutes later, said Capt. Tess Taft.

She did not have any other details about the flight from the desert air base 55 miles northeast of Los Angeles.

The second test flight of the radar-evading B-2 on Aug. 16 was cut short in midflight because of a hairline crack in the casing of an accessory drive. The part powers the $530 million jet's generators and controls and caused oil pressure to drop, Taft said Friday.

The bomber's two-hour maiden flight earlier this summer was termed a success.

Unlike the previous two test flights, the Saturday flight was not announced in advance by the Air Force.

The government has spent about $22.4 billion in the B-2 program, which is 18 months behind schedule. Congress has balked at the thought of paying more than $500 million apiece for 132 bombers.

Constituents still supportive

BOSTON (AP) — Polls published Saturday indicated U.S. Rep. Barney Frank's constituents still strongly support him despite revelations about the congressman's relationship with a male prostitute.

The state Republican Party, meanwhile, called for the Massachusetts Democrat's resignation. But political observers predicted Frank, who publicly acknowledged his homosexuality in 1987, would survive the scandal.

On Friday, Frank, 49, acknowledged he had once paid for sex with a man he identified as Steve Gobie, then hired him as a personal aide in an effort to wean him from a life of drugs and prostitution. Frank said he fired Gobie when he became suspicious that the man was selling sex from Frank's Capitol Hill apartment.

Frank said he had been "victimized" and predicted voters would not hold the incident against him.

The polls — and a tradition of tolerance in Massachusetts — appear to back him up.

A poll of 400 registered voters in Frank's district conducted Friday night for The Boston Globe and WBZ-TV showed 65.3 percent did not think Frank should resign, while 22.3 percent did. About 12 percent had no opinion or refused to answer.

The Boston Herald and WCVB-TV polled 300 of Frank's constituents, and 56 percent said Frank has "performed well enough as a congressman to deserve re-election" while 29 percent called for his ouster. Five percent said their view depends on who opposes Frank in 1990.

NYNEX to resume talks

NEW YORK (AP) — NYNEX Corp. and its striking telephone workers agreed to go back to the bargaining table for the first formal talks since a walkout started almost three weeks ago.

In a terse statement Friday, NYNEX said both sides had agreed to resume talking Wednesday to "negotiate all items in the contract, including the health care issue."

Employee contributions to health-insurance plans have been a major issue in the Aug. 6 strike by more than 60,000 workers in New York and New England.

Nationally, 200,000 workers in 20 states struck. But union leaders have negotiated settlements with striking employees at Pacific Telesis, which serves California and Nevada; most of Chicago-based Ameritech, which serves five Midwest states; and Bell Atlantic in West Virginia, Virginia, Maryland, Delaware, Pennsylvania and Washington, D.C., but not in New Jersey.

Communications Workers of America vice president Jan Pierce announced Thursday that his union was increasing harassment tactics to get NYNEX to the bargaining table. Hours later, several hundred CWA pickets demonstrated outside the suburban home of NYNEX president William Ferguson.

Airline to create 400 jobs

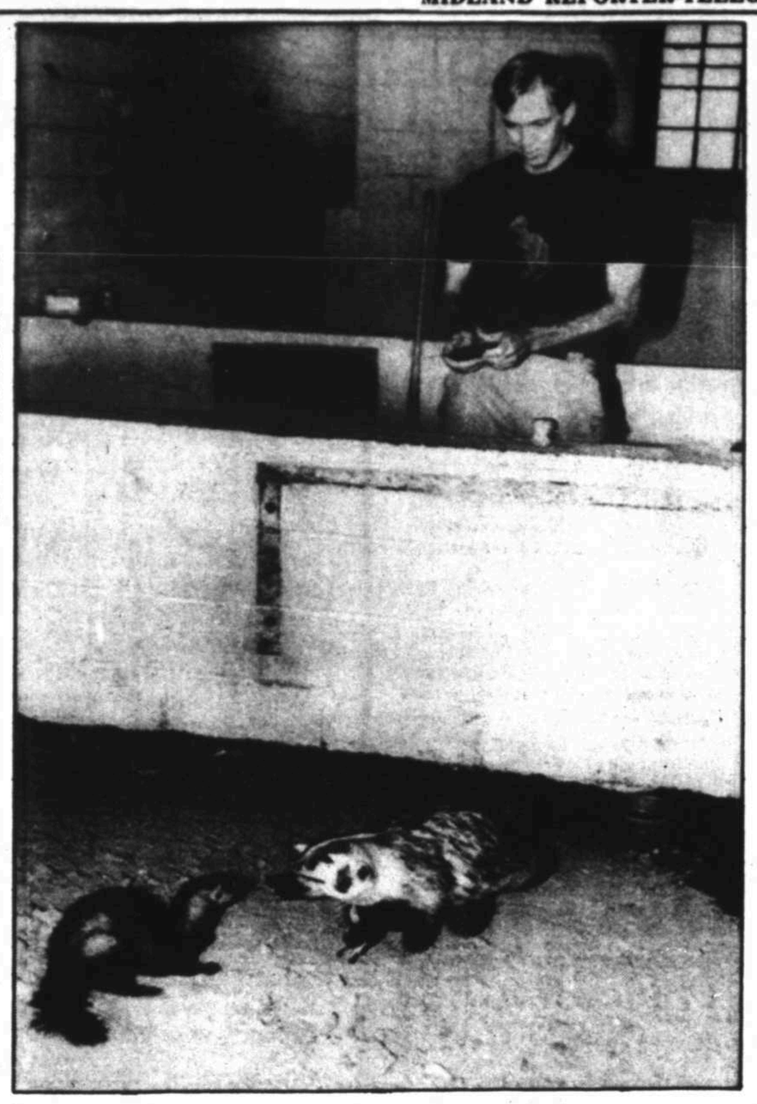

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — An airline maintenance base for Braniff Inc. will create about 400 jobs when it opens late next year at Kansas City International Airport, city and airline officials said Friday.

"We're pleased to be moving forward with this and we're very grateful to the city. Nothing sparks enthusiasm like seeing steel come up out of the ground," said Don McGuire, chief spokesman for the airline that has become Kansas City's dominant carrier with 93 daily departures.

The airline had wanted the base ready by early 1990, but the project was delayed by the city's efforts to get improved financing and by other factors. The cost of the base is estimated at $14 million.

Construction will be funded by proceeds from the city's sale in October of about $14 million in airport revenue bonds. The bonds will be retired by the rent Braniff pays on the maintenance base.

Del Karmeier, director of the city's Aviation Department, said the city and its financial consultants have been trying to ensure that the bonds are sold with a relatively low interest rate.

Wildlife biologist Brian Miller operates a stuffed 20-pound badger that has been mounted on racing wheels as it confronts a live ferret at an outpost of the National Zoo in Front Royal, Va.

'Robo-Badger' helps teach ferrets to defend themselves

FRONT ROYAL, Va. (AP) — A 20-pound badger killed on a Wyoming highway is spending the hereafter stuffed in a fierce pose, mounted on wheels and racing hither and yon trying to scare some sense into overly friendly ferrets.

He's called "Robo-Badger" by his handlers from the Smithsonian Institution's National Zoo, who hope his radio-controlled scare tactics will help ferrets reared in captivity learn to protect themselves from predators when they are returned to the wild.

If Robo-Badger's menacing lunges aren't enough to instill fear, zoo conservationists pelt the puzzled ferrets with rubber bands, whose harmless stings usually encourage them to dive into the nearest hole.

Another fear-inspiring weapon is a stuffed owl with outstretched wings that swoops down on a hand-operated pulley and string to buzz the sleek, furry ferrets as they scamper over a dirt mound.

Here in the foothills of the Blue Ridge Mountains about 80 miles west of Washington, at a former training camp for U.S. Army cavalry troops, scientists are conducting "predator-avoidance training" for ferrets at an outpost of the National Zoo that is dedicated to saving endangered wildlife from extinction.

Wildlife biologist Brian Miller says his project at the zoo's Conservation and Research Center is aimed at ensuring the survival of the North American black-footed ferret, which he calls "one of the most endangered mammals in the world."

Hundreds of thousands of these ferrets, the chief predators of prairie dogs, once lived in the vast arid grasslands of the West, from southern Canada to northern Mexico. But they fell victim to agricultural development and the federal government's program to eradicate grass-eating prairie dogs as a threat to the livelihood of cattle ranchers.

Deprived of their main source of food as well as shelter in prairie dog burrows, the ferrets rapidly fell prey to disease and other predators such as great horned owls, golden eagles and badgers. By 1985, only 10 black-footed ferrets remained, all of them in Wyoming.

They were quickly removed to the safety of captivity, where breeding was begun. Today, says Miller, there are 120 black-footed ferrets at the Wyoming game and fish research center at Sybille Canyon, Wyo., the Henry Doorly Zoo at Omaha, Neb., and at Front Royal.

"They were raised in captivity and they know nothing about predators," Miller said in an interview.

"They have never seen a badger. Will they duck when they see one? Will they run into a hole? It's one thing to be afraid, and another thing to know what to do. We want them to get into that hole as quickly as possible."

Enter Robo-Badger.

The badger was a road kill found lying alongside a Wyoming highway. At Miller's request, it was hustled into a freezer and shipped across the country to Washington, where Smithsonian taxidermist Paul Rhymer transformed it into a battery-operated robot.

Stuffed with ears bent back and front paws clawing as if chasing a prey, the badger was mounted on the chassis of a toy truck with miniature tractor wheels and a tiny, red-tipped antenna for receiving radioed stop-and-go and directional commands.

Miller is experimenting first with 50 Siberian polecats, more populous first cousins of black-footed ferrets from Soviet Asia which were bred from stock imported from the Moscow Zoo.

In the first couple months of testing, the Siberian ferrets seem mostly curious about Robo-Badger, but more frightened by the swooping owl.

Once he has determined what ferrets know instinctively from their "genetic memory" about self-protection, feeding, digging into burrows and other necessities in the wild, Miller will know what training in captivity is required to prepare the black-footed variety for its return to the wild.

If the black-footed ferrets make a comeback there, he said, other species of plant and animal life — birds, insects, small mammals and shrubs — may also flourish and help restore what was once a "rich oasis of diversity" in the ecosystem of prairie dog communities.

Working in collaboration with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, Wyoming game and fish officials and experts at North Carolina State University, Miller hopes to give the ferrets their freedom in Wyoming's Absoroka Mountains adjacent to Yellowstone Park sometime in 1991, if the current population of 57 adults has grown to 200 by then.

"They've had a pretty hard time," he said. "They deserve the best shot we can give them."

Committee criticizes Baltic nationalists

MOSCOW (AP) — The Communist Party's Central Committee on Saturday harshly criticized nationalist activists in the Baltic republics, saying they are leading the restive region into an "abyss."

The official message from the party's policy-making body accused "separatist elements" of whipping up "nationalist hysteria" in Latvia, Lithuania and Estonia and appealed for an end to their push for secession.

The message came three days after more than 1 million residents of the Baltic region linked hands in a giant chain to protest the Soviet-Nazi pact of 50 years ago that led to the Soviet annexation of the three states.

The sharply worded appeal showed clear concern in the highest councils of the Soviet leadership about the possibility of the beginning of the breakup of the Soviet Union, a nation of many ethnic groups.

The statement was read as the top item on the nightly news program "Vremya" and carried by the official Tass news agency.

"Things have gone far. Serious danger is threatening the Baltic people," the Central Committee said. "People should know what abyss their nationalist leaders are pushing them toward."

In an apparent reference to economic problems, the message continued: "If they managed to attain their goals, the consequences could be catastrophic for their peoples. Their very ability to survive could come under question."

The Central Committee also criticized the three republics' government and party leaders, saying some did not try hard enough to stop the slide toward separatism and others "played up to the nationalist mood and weakened their opposition to separatist plans."

Grassroots Baltic groups have turned during the past weeks to more and more active agitation for full independence for their small republics.

Their increasingly open calls for secession have brought counterattacks in the central Soviet press, but Saturday's Central Committee message was Moscow's sharpest response so far.

The Central Committee condemned the "anti-socialist, anti-Soviet thrust" of the Baltic activists and said they were working against the common interests of the Soviet people.

In initial reaction, Baltic activists said the appeal would not divert them from their drive for independence.

The message "won't have any particular effect because it doesn't include any concrete steps," said Ulo Kaevats of the Estonian People's Front. "I see it as an expression of weakness and of a policy that is not very rational."

Sandanista army, Contras hold first talks

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — An army unit and a Contra guerrilla group drew guns when they met in northern Nicaragua but decided to hold an informal half-hour peace parley that included an exchange of cigarettes.

It was the first known talks between Sandinista army and Contra groups since the signing of a regional accord signed this month in Honduras to dismantle the Nicaraguan rebel force.

An army unit commanded by Lt. Bernardo Diaz nearly ran into the Contra group on a dirt road near the Honduran border Thursday afternoon, said photographer Ruben Farina, the only journalist present.

"Diaz shouted for everybody to hit the dirt, but at the same time he was yelling at the Contras that he did not want any shooting," Farina said.

"The Contras were yelling the same thing: that nobody wanted to shoot, just talk. Those were pretty tense moments."

Eventually, after placing safety catches on weapons, Diaz and the leader of the guerrilla squad, Marlon Moreno Espinoza, apparently convinced each other of their good intentions.

"The decisive point in lowering the tension was when the Sandinista soldiers started offering cigarettes to the Contras," said Farina, who was working for The Associated Press.

"From there on, the two sides sort of mingled — still being careful, though — and started talking to each other in small groups."

Rebel commander Danilo "Wilmer" Peralta had requested a meeting Thursday morning with a Sandinista unit near Los Manchones, about 150 miles north of Managua, but his detachment failed to show up, Farina said.

The 20 government troopers then moved north. They ran into the 30 Contras several hours later at a bend of the road.

Farina said the 30-minute meeting ended with Moreno telling Diaz that he would consult with Peralta and other superiors about accepting amnesty and promising to make contact again next week.

Diaz gave the Contras copies of the accord to dismantle the Contras signed Aug. 7 in Tela, Honduras by the presidents of Costa Rica, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras and Nicaragua.

A U.N. observer group established at the behest of the Central American presidents is to oversee the dismantling and repatriation or relocation, an operation that should begin within two weeks and be completed by Dec. 5.

Most Contras — an estimated 10,000 — have been encamped in southern Honduras near the Nicaraguan border since their leaders signed a temporary cease-fire with the Nicaraguan government in March 1988. But pockets of Contras remain in northern Nicaragua and in central Chontales province staging scattered attacks.

Diaz commands the Sandinista army "Quilali" reserve battallion of the 311th Brigade. Moreno heads a Contra batallion also called "Quilali."

Quilali is the name of a town in northern Nueva Segovia province, and the meeting took place about six miles north of the town.

Farina said the Contras appeared to know little of the regional accord, which Diaz explained to them.

After Diaz distributed the copies of the accord, the Contras left, looking over their shoulders as they disappeared into the bush.

Barricada, the official newspaper of the ruling Sandinista National Liberation Front, on Saturday said more than 400 Contras have left their camps in Honduras and are trying to return to Nicaragua.

The daily quoted Jose Tomas Osorio Umanzor, whom it described a seven-year Contra veteran, as saying more than 400 rebels had deserted and were wandering around the border trying to enter Nicaragua.

Osorio returned to Nicaragua through the Nicaraguan border town of Las Manos, in Nueva Segovia Province, on Wednesday, according to Barricada.

The Nicaraguan Red Cross has set up border offices to receive Nicaraguans who want to return.

A Colombian military policeman searches a mansion suspected of being owned by a drug dealer in suburban Bogata on Friday. The Bush administration is reportedly sending $65 million worth of helicopters, weapons and other equipment to help the Colombian government.

Colombian army studies seized records; 8 arrested in killing

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — Army officials pored over seized records from a drug baron's financial empire Saturday and police announced the arrest of eight more suspects in the killing of a presidential candidate.

Army Gen. Ramon Niebles told The Associated Press in a telephone interview he expected the seized records "to be of great value in our campaign" to wipe out narcotics trafficking.

Authorities said the records include numbers of local and foreign bank transactions as well as names of lawyers and others involved in the financial empire of reputed cocaine kingpin Gonzalo Rodriguez Gacha.

The records were discovered at his rural, bunker-like estate seized by the army Thursday near the town of Pacho, about 60 miles north of Bogota.

"We are processing these documents, which provide fine information on the estate," said Niebles, commander of the 13th army brigade.

He declined to disclose details of the records or anticipate what actions, such as future raids, they might inspire. According to the Bogota daily El Tiempo, the records represent the financial books for Rodriguez Gacha since 1982.

Rodriguez Gacha — nicknamed "The Mexican" for his affection for that country's music and culture — is among the bosses of the so-called Medellin cartel. Based in the industrial city of Medellin, the cartel is the world's largest cocaine-trafficking organization and supplies an estimated 80 percent of the cocaine distributed in the United States.

Dozens of luxurious homes, apartments and offices believed owned by Gacha were among hundreds of properties siezed in an eight-day-old offensive by police and military forces nationwide.

The unprecendented crackdown was prompted by the assassination of a highly popular presidential candidate, Sen. Luis Carlos Galan.

Police in Bogota announced the arrest of eight more suspects in Galan's killing Aug. 16 at a political rally on Bogota's southern outskirts, bringing to 13 the total of suspected participants or accomplices under arrest.

Five heavily armed men were arrested in a surprise raid last week at a downtown Bogota apartment. Four of them were identified by more than a dozen witnesses at the rally.

Galan's killing capped a 48-hour wave of assassinations, including that of a national police colonel in Medellin and a prominent Bogota magistrate. It outraged Colombian society and inspired the government crackdown, backed by a series of tough emergency decrees by President Virgilio Barco.

Barco renewed extradition with the United States, and streamlined the procedure to reduce the need for extensive judicial review. Under bloody intimidation by traffickers, the Supreme Court nullified the extradition treaty in June 1987.

About 11,000 people have been detained in the government sweep, including a handful of suspects described by Colombian authorities as major traffickers or drug-money managers wanted by the United States.

Drug and legal experts at the U.S. Embassy were working over the weekend to try to arrange the extradition of some of the suspects, sources said, as were Colombian justice officials.

Sandstone castle shows drug lords' fast-lane philosophy

CHIA, Colombia (AP) — "Why waltz when you can rock 'n' roll?" wrote a visitor in the guest book at the medieval-style castle of reputed cocaine trafficker Camilo Zapata Vasquez.

The question reflects the fast-lane philosophy obviously embraced by Colombia's wealthy drug lords, and was revealed in the public confiscation of hundreds of their properties nationwide in an anti-narcotics crackdown.

The sandstone castle, ringed by formal gardens, dominates a 200-acre compound of 10 buildings, a dozen thoroughbred horses as well as goats, ducks, dogs and even a couple of flamingos. Visible from a nearby highway, it has long been a landmark in Chia, a suburb 13 miles north of Bogota.

It was seized by the army this week, and shown off to reporters on Friday.

European and Oriential antiques filled the castle's richly appointed rooms, lined with paintings, statues and ceramic figurines. Beds were framed with crystal and bronze, or four towering posters with marble bedside tables filled with electronics to open and shut doors and control video equipment.

A guest book provided a peek at the peculiar variety of people who visited the estate.

It is just one of many believed to have been owned by Zapata Vasquez, even though he is considered a kind of second-string smuggler, lacking the household-name stature of reputed cartel bosses such as Pablo Escobar, Jorge Ochoa and Gonzalo Rodriguez Gacha.

The visitor who endorsed rock 'n' roll signed his message, apparently in jest, "M-19 power." M-19 is the name accorded to a leftist guerrilla group operating in Colombia, although the traffickers are much more closely associated with right-wing death squads.

Another visitor, calling himself Mad Max, wrote: "Living by chance, loving by choice and killing by profession."

An Oct. 10, 1988, visitor named Tuti wrote in a feminine hand: "Happy birthday. Tomorrow they'll kill me and it'll be your fault."

Many women left their phone numbers after their signatures.

Margarita Zapata, identified by army officials on the estate as Zapata's sister, was much more solemn: "May God and the Virgin bless all of this and those who inhabit it."

The book also was signed by two men who identified themselves as local police station commanders, two army lieutenants and an army captain. Two local mayors also signed, one of them declaring, "Few people can truly appreciate the history of this property."

A group of women from several embassies, including Yugoslavia, Uruguay, Chile, Canada and Britain signed the book, as did a tour from a religious society.

Next door to the estate is a religious boarding school run by nuns.

In a garage and sprawling servants' quarters attached to the castle were two new Mercedes automobiles, also confiscated.

There were also stables, where an office wall was lined with ribbons and trophies; an indoor swimming pool and gym, tennis courts, horse exercise trails and a modern thatch-roofed cottage of many rooms.

There was a chapel as well, dedicated to St. Francis of Assisi, with stained glass windows, antique religious statues and pews for about 30 people.

Studiously ignoring the dozens of soldiers who guarded the place were 10 groundskeepers who watered the well-kept lawns and acres of gardens, trimmed the hundreds of yards of hedges and tended to the animals.

They gave contradicting statements about Zapata Vasquez: he never came to stay, he came regularly, he just left a couple of weeks ago. They all agreed on one thing: they were underpaid, receiving the minimum legal wage — about $80 a month.

Government investigates reports about Israelis helping drug lords

JERUSALEM (AP) — The government is investigating whether private security companies from Israel helped train assassination squads for Colombian drug lords, a Foreign Ministry official said Saturday.

An Israeli reserve officer whom news reports have linked to such activities said he had actually been teaching cattlemen how to protect themselves from communist guerrillas.

Deputy Foreign Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, speaking on Israel radio, said Israel had set up a special investigating committee without being requested to do so by either Colombia or the United States.

Colombia and the United States launched a major drive to break up the drug-trafficking underworld in Colombia after drug bosses there had a presidential candidate killed last week.

The Medellin drug cartel supplies most of the cocaine sold in the United States.

"Two days ago, we asked the Colombian government at the request of Foreign Minister (Moshe) Arens for any information available to them, and we have offered them assistance with anything we can do," Netanyahu said.

"We need to find out if Israelis indeed are involved...and what we can do to make sure that they are not," he added.

The Israeli government made the request after American news reports that some Israelis were helping Colombian drug cartels train assassination squads.

The Foreign Ministry official said Israel would take action against anyone found to have violated Israeli laws.

He had said Friday that Israel may revoke passports of any Israeli mercenaries proven to be involved in training assassination squads.

Lt. Col. Yair Klein, identified as an Israeli trainer of such squads on the basis of videotape broadcast by the NBC News, returned to Israel on Friday from Miami.

The 44-year-old Israeli is a retired commander of a paratroop anti-terror unit and president of a private security firm called Spearhead.

"I trained a group of farmers who defended themselves against terrorist organizations, mostly the group called M-19, a guerrilla group with the goal of turning Colombia into Cuba or Nicaragua," Klein said on Israeli television Friday.

A senior Defense Ministry official said Klein is likely to be questioned about his activities in Colombia.

However, Israeli television and major dailies last week identified Klein as the leader of four Israeli army reserve colonels reported to have worked with the Colombian drug traffickers.

Travel warning to Colombia issued

WASHINGTON (AP) — The State Department, citing Colombia's massive crackdown on drug traffickers, issued a travel warning Saturday night and asked Americans to postpone trips to that South American nation.

"Due to recent events, Colombia's security situation is unsettled and likely to remain so in the near future," a statement read by State Department spokesman Adam Shub said. "The government of Colombia's aggressive actions against narcotics traffickers could raise the level of violence in some areas and American citizens, even though not specifically targeted, could find themselves caught up in random violence."

CARE-LINK

A service of Methodist & Lubbock General Hospitals

SEAT BELTS

Seat belts dramatically improve your chances of walking away safely from a car accident. Since the Texas seat belt law went into effect in 1985, each year hundreds of lives are saved. Take that extra moment to buckle up. It may pay you back a lifetime.

SAFETY SEAT

The law is simple. Children under two must be secured in approved child safety seats; children between two and four must ride in safety seats or wear seat belts. The reason is even more simple. Safety seats save lives.

GOING THE EXTRA MILE —SAFELY.

Just as you take the necessary steps for the safety of you and your family, CareLink also goes that extra mile. CareLink aeromedical helicopter service is one of a few select programs in the nation that flies a twin engine Dauphin II aircraft which is fully instrument equipped for safety. All Dauphin transports are flown with two pilots and an experienced medical team for added safety.

Please join us in our commitment to safety. Our part is to be there for you when you need help. Your part is to avoid accidents. Together, let's go that extra mile — safely.

DRIVE FRIENDLY

HIGHWAY SAFETY

More than half of fatal traffic accidents occur in rural areas. About 64% of all rural collisions are with fixed objects, head-on, or overturns. Highway driving takes special caution. Pass with extra care. Stay alert. And don't let wide, open spaces lull you into a sense of false security. When you have to travel extra miles, go the extra mile to make them safe.

HAZARDOUS CONDITIONS

Of all accidents that occur because of hazardous conditions, the most common causes are Under Construction and Slippery When Wet. Construction can introduce sudden curves, stops and proximity to oncoming traffic. Wet roads can cause you to slide. Take the extra time and slow down.

Head of KGB calls Poland's prime minister 'solid man'

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — The head of the Soviet KGB said Saturday that Prime Minister Tadeusz Mazowiecki, Poland's first non-Communist leader, is "a solid man" who will succeed in solving the nation's problems.

Also Saturday, several hundred railroad workers in the city of Lodz ended their strike at the request of Solidarity leader Lech Walesa. The workers urged Mazowiecki to grant their pay demands.

Walesa also met with Labor Secretary Elizabeth Dole and Senate Minority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kansas, and gave them a letter for President Bush seeking more U.S. economic aid to help Poland's struggling economy.

Party Central Commitee Secretary Leszek Miller, meanwhile, told a meeting of leaders of party committees that they should be loyal to the new Solidarity-led government, the state-run PAP news service reported.

"There is no conflict between preserving ideological identity as party members and being loyal to the legal state authorities," Miller said.

Mazowiecki's meeting with KGB chief Vladimir Kryuchkov was his highest-level contact with a Soviet official since the Polish leader took office last week in a historic transfer of power from the Communist Party.

"I liked him," Kryuchkov told reporters after he emerged Saturday evening from seeing Mazowiecki at the Office of the Council of Ministers. "A solid man."

According to the KGB chairman, Mazowiecki spoke of his plans for Poland's government while he told Mazowiecki about social reforms in the Soviet Union. The talks were "productive and interesting," he said.

Poland's new prime minister "knows how to deal with things," Kryuchkov concluded. "We wished him great success, and he will be successful."

Polish state television later broadcast the first part of the meeting on its main evening news. "I am glad I can see you and that I have my first opportunity to talk to a representative of the Soviet leadership," Mazowiecki told his guest.

The irony of Mazowiecki, a longtime Solidarity activist and former political prisoner, receiving at his government office the head of the Soviet intelligence agency is another example of the remarkable changes overtaking Poland and the Communist world.

It also seemed to underscore the high level of Soviet concern as it begins adjusting to the new reality.

Kryuchkov turned up without prior public announcement Saturday and first met with Communist President Wojciech Jaruzelski and the acting interior minister, Gen. Czeslaw Kiszczak, whom Mazowiecki replaced as prime minister. Kiszczak then accompanied Kryuchkov to the meeting with Mazowiecki.

On Friday, Mazowiecki met with the Soviet Union's ambassador to Poland, Vladimir Brovikov, one day after he took office.

The installation of a non-Communist-led government in Poland has been greeted with concern but apparent acceptance in Moscow, although many of the practical ramifications have not been worked out.

Mazowiecki has said that under his Solidarity-led government the Communist Party will retain the defense and interior ministries and that Poland will maintain its obligations to the Warsaw Pact and Comecon, the East bloc economic alliance.

But it has not been made clear if Mazowiecki as prime minister will have access to sensitive state secrets concerning, for instance, Warsaw Pact defense strategies, or if he will sit in on all the discussions at the annual full Warsaw Pact summits.

Poland is the Soviet Union's largest and most strategic East bloc ally, linking it to East Germany, the frontline state facing the NATO states.

The KGB, the Committee for State Security, controls the secret police, intelligence gathering and border defense for the Soviet Union. Kryuchkov has been chairman since last year and has brought an unprecedented openness to the post, undergoing questioning from Soviet legislators and granting several press interviews.

In other developments Saturday:

■ Railroad workers in Lodz, under pressure from Walesa, ended a one-day strike and sent an appeal to Mazowiecki, "our premier," asking him to satisfy their pay demands.

The conclusion of the railroad strike at 12:01 a.m. followed an appeal by Walesa that the new prime minister be given a chance to begin to work. Walesa said Mazowiecki's election was a "breakthrough" not to be wasted.

Abandoning the strike, rail workers said in a statement, was "a proof of our support and trust" for Mazowiecki. The strike by several hundreds workers had shut down all local train service.

■ Walesa met in Gdansk with the Doles, who delivered a letter of greeting from Bush.

"I am very satisfied," Walesa said after the meeting. "In the United States there is great interest in Poland now, and I hope these visits which are so numerous recently will help encouraged investors to get involved in Poland."

He said he was giving the Doles a letter for Bush asking for increased U.S. economic involvement in Poland to match the faster pace of reforms going on.

Palestinian suspected of collaborating with Israelis found hanged in grove

JERUSALEM (AP) — The body of a young Palestinian suspected of collaborating with Israeli authorities was found Saturday hanging by the neck in a West Bank orange grove, Arab journalists and Israel radio said.

In other developments, Israeli troops shot and killed a 17-year-old Palestinian youth and raided several villages in the occupied West Bank, Arab reports said.

The soldiers also battled Palestinian youths who built makeshift barricades in Gaza City and hurled stones from rooftops, the reports said.

In other scattered clashes in the West Bank, seven Palestinians were shot and wounded by army troops, Arab hospital officials said. The wounded included a 13-year-old boy with a gunshot in the neck.

The body of Amen Tayem, 20, was found in an orange grove in the West Bank town of Qalqilya, Arab journalists said.

They said Tayem was last seen being led out of his Qalqilya home by a group of masked Palestinians two days ago. They attributed the killing to "security reasons," suggesting he was killed as a suspected collaborator.

Israel radio explicitly identified the man as a suspected collaborator. It said he was beaten to death, and his body was later tied to the electricity pole.

An army spokesman confirmed the killing and said the motive was apparently criminal. However, victims hanged in public places have generally been suspected collaborators. A police spokesman declined comment.

A total of 98 Palestinians have been slain by fellow Arabs as suspected collaborators during the 20-month Palestinian revolt against Israeli occupation. Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin claimed the majority of the victims had no links to Israel.

At least 548 Palestinians have been killed by Israeli soldiers or civilians in the uprising. Thirty-eight Israelis also have died in the violence.

In the village of Deir es-Sudan near Ramallah, an army patrol was attacked by stone-throwing Arab youths, an army spokesman said, and an officer opened fire, fatally wounding a 17-year-old Arab. Israel radio identified the youth as Sami Hassan Adjadji.

Palestinian journalists said soldiers raided at least three other villages in the Ramallah area to arrest suspected uprising ringleaders.

The army on Saturday also clamped a curfew on the village of Idna, near the West Bank town of Hebron, after villagers burned several houses owned by a suspected Israeli collaborator, Arab reports said.

Arab journalists said Israeli soldiers raided at least three villages in the Ramallah area Saturday to search for suspected leaders of the uprising.

During the one-hour clash in Gaza City, Arab youths blocked the street with stone barricades, Arab journalists said. The protesters also burned tires and threw stones at soldiers from rooftops, they said.

Troops responded with gunfire from observation posts atop buildings, the journalists said.

The former West Bank governor, reserve Brig. Gen. Ephraim Sneh, said Saturday that unless peace efforts progressed, "negative processes in the field would strengthen and the radical voices...would also increase.

Mexicans fight over hero's arm

Hearst News Service

MEXICO CITY — The amputated right arm of a Mexican revolutionary war hero, on public display here, is gradually disintegrating, leading to controversial attempts to destroy the exhibit.

One recent visitor to the exhibit, retired nurse Susana Vilchis, 57, said, "This is sad."

She sides with those who would cremate the arm of Gen. Alvaro Obregon, who fought in the revolutionary war, which lasted from 1910 until 1917, and later as president of Mexico, from 1920 until 1924. Legend has it that Obregon, who died in 1928, lost his right arm to a grenade in a 1915 battle against rebel leader Francisco "Pancho" Villa.

At the last minute, city officials called off a cremation ceremony last month after protests from family members who want to preserve the limb as a historical treasure.

Whether from a sense of history or desire to view a macabre exhibit, a steady stream of visitors files past the arm, which is displayed at a concrete monument in a Mexico City park.

To view the general's limb, the visitors must descend a narrow, winding staircase leading to a marble-walled, crypt-like room. In a nook in one wall, behind iron bars, floats the limb in a jar filled with the chemical preservative formaldehyde.

The visitors gasp, giggle and gawk.

The older ones, like Vilchis, remember Obregon as a mythical hero of their childhood.

"I was in love with him," Vilchis says of Obregon. "He was brave, handsome. He had what they call 'charisma' nowadays."

At the request of one group of Obregon's descendants, the Defense Ministry had planned a dignified cremation for the limb. The ashes then were to be displayed in a silver urn — in the same nook where the arm is displayed. But the exhibit won an eleventh-hour reprieve.

"At the last minute some nieces of Alvaro Obregon objected to the cremation and we had to call it off," said Octavio Bernard Becerril, a spokesman for the borough named after Obregon, which is responsible for the exhibit.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Rushdie, wife living apart, publisher says

LONDON (AP) — Salman Rushdie, the novelist threatened with death by the late Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini for writing the book "The Satanic Verses," is living apart from his American wife, Marianne Wiggins, she announced Friday through her publisher.

Secker and Warburg issued a brief statement saying Ms. Wiggins, herself a writer, and the Indian-born Rushdie "have been living separately for four weeks.

"Scotland Yard security arrangements for the protection of Mr. Rushdie have been reordered since then and Ms. Wiggins does not know where he is," the statement said.

"Ms. Wiggins requests privacy; She is not prepared to discuss the matter further."

The couple, who were married in January 1988, had been in hiding since last Feb. 14, when Khomeini said Rushdie should be killed because "The Satanic Verses," blasphemed Islam.

Khomeini died June 3, but his order has not been revoked.

Search for plane resumes

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — Air force jets searched today for a plane carrying 54 people that disappeared a day ealier in Pakistan's rugged northern mountains, an airline spokesman said.

The Pakistan International Airlines Fokker-27 Friendship propeller plane was carrying 49 passengers, including five infants, and five crew members when it disappeared Friday morning, said PIA spokeswoman Azra Sultan.

American freelance journalist Paul McGorrian, a former staff writer for the St. Petersburg Times of St. Petersburg, Fla., was believed to be the only U.S. national on board, said Ms. Sultan.

A second foreign name, "Miss Sibrys" was also on the passenger list, but Ms. Sultan said her nationality was unknown.

The Dutch-built, twin-engine plane took off from Gilgit, in the northern Karakoram mountain range, at 7:36 a.m. Friday (10:36 p.m. EDT Thursday), bound for Islamabad, 175 miles to the south.

Ms. Sultan said the pilot made a routine check seven minutes into the 45-minute flight.

"There was nothing after that, nothing at all to indicate the plane was in trouble," she said.

Another airline spokesman, A.H. Sarooqi, said that shortly after daybreak today two Pakistan Air Force helicopters, a C-130 military aircraft and another PIA Fokker-27 resumed the search.

"The weather is good, but so far we have found nothing," he said.

Ground crews deployed from Gilgit also searched the rugged mountains, said Sarooqi.

The Indian aviation authority and United Nations military observers group in India and Pakistan, stationed in the disputed state of Jammu-Kashmir, had been asked to help in the search. Sarooqi said the extent of their participation was not yet known.

Daredevil completes walk

PARIS (AP) — High-wire artist Philippe Petit walked a tightrope soaring over Paris to the second level of the Eiffel Tower on Saturday, and said later his biggest problem was trying not to have too much fun.

With a brisk breeze blowing off the Seine River, Petit leaped onto the rope at the Palais de Chaillot and walked 2,300 feet on a cord set at a 16-degree angle to the Eiffel Tower's second level, 330 feet above the sidewalk.

Thousands of people watched breathlessly as he crossed the length of more than seven football fields on a wire as thin as three pencils, occasionally stopping to salute the graceful tower.

On his balancing bar was a copy of the Declaration of the Rights of Man, the enduring statement of social justice and liberty that emerged from the French Revolution in 1789.

"My head was full of pure and beautiful things; I felt a profound joy, almost like a child, an engulfing elation," Petit said afterward, looking windswept and tired but triumphant.

"The hardest part was not letting my joy surpass the control I needed to continue. I was invaded by a joy that was almost dangerous because I had my life in my hands."

With well-wishers and the press on hand, Petit announced that his next walk would be across the Grand Canyon next summer.

Hotel fire kills seven

PARIS (AP) — An overnight fire at a hotel in a suburb northwest of Paris killed seven guests and injured 17 others, police said.

The fire began about 11 p.m. Friday in the stairwell of the Hotel Hennouf Gouta de Clichy in the suburb of Clichy and quickly spread through the fourth floor of the four-story hotel.

Firefighters brought the blaze under control about 1 a.m. today, said a fire department official, speaking on condition of anonymity in keeping with department policy.

Three people burned to death and four fell to their deaths after jumping out of windows ot escape the flames, the fire official said.

Four hotel guests, including a child of unknown age, were seriously burned and taken to a nearby hospital. Thirteen others suffered minor smoke inhalation, the official said.

War murders investigated

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — New evidence has prompted prosecutors to investigate whether Nazis killed retarded children during World War II, a newspaper said Friday.

According to the Frankfurter Rundschau newspaper, historian Karl Teppe has found evidence that 3,000 mentally retarded children were killed in Dortmund area hospitals after undergoing Nazi experiments between 1939 and 1945.

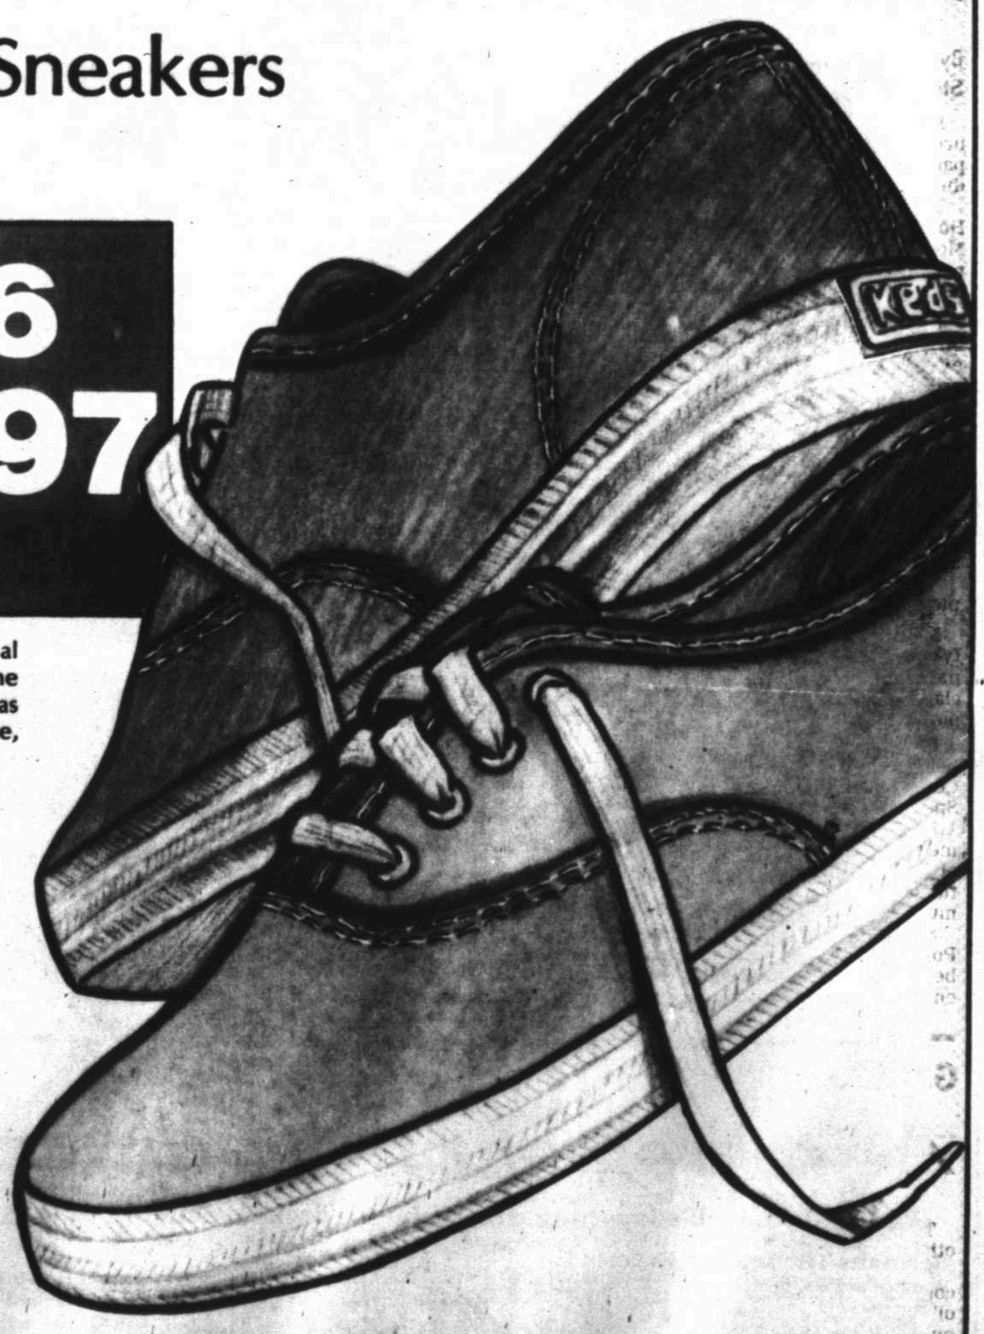

Dortmund chief prosecutor Klaus Schacht was not in his office Friday and could not be reached for comment on the report.

The Nazis' fatal experiments on people are part of the historical record, but the newspaper said the killings uncovered by Teppe were not previously known.

Among the items ...

Sheriff's Department Capt. Richard Sexton, oversees warehousing operations of confiscated property and other surplus goods for Midland County. He stands in a VIP speedboat expected to be one of the most popular items for bidders at the county's October auction.

Auction will aid county budget

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

A speedboat, two Chevrolet Camaros, a riding lawnmower, a half-dozen 10-speed bicycles and other articles gathering dust at a south Midland warehouse could help build the county's bank account.

The items, including more than 100 lever-type voting machines, belong to Midland County and will be auctioned to alleviate overcrowding at the storage barn, thus bringing in more revenue.

The voting machines haven't been used since March 1988, when the county switched to paper ballots with its new centralized, electronic vote tabulator.

County officials are preparing to auction the items at a sheriff's department sale, tentatively set for 9 a.m. Oct. 19 at the Midland County Barn.

Midland County Election Administrator Bettye Calvert hopes the county will be able to get at least $50 apiece for the voting machines.

"I'd like to get more because they're in excellent shape," she said.

In all, the several hundred or more pieces are expected to bring in about $15,000, according to Sheriff's Department Capt. Richard Sexton, who's been overseeing county auctions for the past eight years.

Sexton said a similar auction several months ago netted Midland County $9,000. Another is scheduled for next year, "when we move into the new law enforcement office building," he said.

While the bulk of the items are office furnishings and equipment, attention has been focused on the boat and automobiles, which were seized by county lawmen as the result of area narcotics investigations.

Proceeds from the sale of seized property are returned to a "narcotics fund" maintained by the county.

Law enforcement may dip into that account to buy new vehicles, weapons and any other item needed for the War Against Drugs, Sexton said.

If the property is owned by the county, the profits from a sale go directly to the General Fund.

"Believe it or not," said Sexton, "the last time we had one of these auctions, there was only one item that we didn't get a bid on."

Some of the items for sale during the one-day auction have been gathering dust for up to three years, Sexton said.

Among the items for sale are:

- A VIP speedboat, with a Volvo 6-cylinder engine.
- Two late-model Chevrolet Cameros.
- A half-dozen 10-speed bicycles.
- Second-hand luggage.
- Numerous office machines, including typewriters and calculators.
- Between 100 and 125 voting machines.
- A Yamaha 650 motorcycle.
- Numerous television sets.
- A microwave oven.
- Two vacuum cleaners.
- Numerous "old" engines, tractors and street sweepers.

Police, fire personnel to start petitions

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Some members of the two groups have been "deputized" so they may register voters making them eligible to sign the petition, said Leonard Hendon, president of the local Fraternal Order of Police chapter.

Members of the city's police and fire departments were to begin a petition drive this afternoon to corral support for a pay raise that is five times the amount proposed by City Council.

The petition drive is spearheaded by the Midland Fraternal Order of Police (FOP) and the Midland Firefighters Association (MFA), two organizations not officially recognized by City Hall.

The police and fire departments want a salary increase of 12 percent over their current earnings.

The lawmen's proposal also is 10 percent more than the amount they'll make after a City Council-sponsored 2 percent increase is effective next October.

If each group secures the signatures of 1,000 registered Midland voters, City Council must adopt the lawmen's proposal, offer an alternative acceptable to representatives of the two groups or let the voters decide in an municipal election, according to state law.

The representatives for the FOP who will negotiate with city officials are Faye Higgins, Mothers Against Drunk Driving president, Bob Smith, a ClayDesta Corp. executive, and police officers Hendon, Ricky Benton and Ron Benton.

Representatives who will negotiate with city officials on behalf of the MFA are Don Baker, Chris Montgomery, Steve Gillett, Jimmy Kniffen and Brian Loose. The five are all employed with the fire department.

According to the Secretary of State's office in Austin, the local pay increase referendum may be placed on the ballot in the Nov. 7, 1989, state constitutional amendment election.

The petition drive will be held at the Midland Park Mall located at 4511 Midkiff Road from 1 to 6 p.m. today and from 9 a.m. to 10 p.m. Monday.

Some members of the two groups have been "deputized" so they may register voters making them eligible to sign the petition, FOP President Leonard Hendon said Saturday.

The two groups' quest for a pay increase is for all members of the police and fire departments. State law precludes a similar referendum for other municipal employees.

"We wish that we could have this for all city employees," Hendon said.

City employees have not had an across-the-board pay increase since 1985. Their pay was cut 2 percent in 1986, but reinstated last year.

City Council has proposed a 2 percent pay increase for all employees which would give them $20 extra per every $1,000 they earn.

Local muscular dystrophy benefit features West Texas poster child

By BRIAN PEARSON

A bright-eyed Sean McKinnis was the center of attention Saturday at Dellwood Mall.

The 5-year-old Odessa resident was surrounded by dancers, singers, antique cars and dozens of balloon-toting families.

However, there was a more serious tone underlying the festivity. Sean is the West Texas poster child for this year's muscular dystrophy fund-raising efforts. The event was held for others like him who suffer from the disease.

The activity was the first spark for the local campaign heading into Labor Day weekend, when television stations nationwide broadcast the Jerry Lewis telethon. KMID will broadcast the telethon and hold one of its own.

"We go around and hold these events to let everyone know about what the Muscular Dystrophy Association does and to let people see what the disease does," said David McKinnins, Sean's father. "It can take a normal little boy and render his muscles useless."

Sean suffers from Duchenne's dystrophy, a degenerative muscle disease which saps strength and usually sends its victims to braces and wheelchairs.

Kerry Zubras, director of the MDA's West Texas district, said he was pleased with Saturday's turnout at the mall.

"This is one of the primary ways to raise funds to support our research and patient services," Zubras said, adding that the money also helps fund MDA clinics.

Zubras estimated that 200 persons with muscular dystrophy live in the 17-county West Texas district, about 100 of them in Midland-Odessa.

Saturday's festivities featured antique cars, square dancing and exhibitions by Midland fire and police officials. Midland Angels baseball players also were on hand to sign autographs.

Lajuana Day, a member of a singing group from First Baptist Church which performed at the festivity, said the event was a terrific way to start the fund drive.

"It's for a good cause," Ms. Day said. "Hopefully we'll have one every year."

MADD kicks off Labor Day campaign

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

Runners made a MADD dash Saturday morning to kick off a campaign to thwart drinking and driving during the Labor Day weekend.

Those taking part in fun runs at Hogan Park were urged by local Mothers Against Drunk Driving representatives to sign a list vowing not to drink and drive next weekend.

Faye Higgins, Midland County MADD chapter president, said the event marked the start of the group's annual "drive for life." This year's move is partially in response to six statewide Miller Brewing Co. megaparties, one of which will be at Twin Cities Speedway on Saturday.

"I think there's been a lot of false advertising about it," Ms. Higgins said. "I think it could end up being an irresponsible party.

"It's scary to think that many people will be together drinking."

Miller officials have stressed safety along with their advertising campaigns. Ms. Higgins, however, claimed that the parties are just a ploy to increase beer sales in Texas.

Proceeds from the events — also being held in Dallas, Houston and Corpus Christi — will go to the Texas Special Olympics.

Ms. Higgins said the local 50 MADD members do not plan a show of force at the Twin Cities party, which features Waylon Jennings among other musicians.

Sgt. Lalo Camarillo of the Midland Police Department said patrols will be beefed up over the holiday weekend but doesn't expect a crackdown on drunk drivers.

"There will be a lot of units out maintaining the safety of the people here," Camarillo said, adding that the department doesn't have the manpower for a DWI task force.

However, Camarillo said the number of DWI — driving while intoxicated — cases tends to decrease over holiday weekends.

"They kind of slow down on those party weekends because they know that we're out there and will enforce the law," he said.

Former deputy police chief released from Odessa jail

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

A former Odessa Police Department deputy chief was released from jail Saturday morning after being arrested earlier in the day.

Floyd Lee Garrett, 44, of Odessa, was arrested by Ector County Sheriff's officers for alleged possession of small quantities of cocaine and heroin, said Tom Finley, commander of the Permian Basin Drug Task Force.

Garrett was released from the Ector County Jail today in lieu of $20,000 bond, a jail spokesman said.

The former deputy chief was arrested in a vehicle parked outside a motel on the corner of Second Avenue and Park Street, Finley said.

"We had information that he would be driving around the hotels in that area," the commander said.

Garrett was charged with possession of cocaine and possession of heroin, Finley said.

The former deputy reportedly resigned from the force two to three years ago, Finley said.

Cpl. John McAhon, chief spokesman for the Odessa Police Department, could not be reached for further information Saturday night.

At retirement time, dad treated to small town's big party

They threw a big retirement party for my dad the other day.

After 38 years of working in the medical community in Plainview, Texas, ol' Angus Ott decided to call it quits. Said it was time to hit the golf course fulltime. At age 65, he simply decided it was now appropriate for the younger generation to take over.

Ott

At least that's what he was quoted as saying in the hometown newspaper.

That's one of the nice things about living in a small town. When you retire, the newspaper does a big Sunday feature on you, complete with photographs. In effect, you become a celebrity for a week. The townspeople, mostly women from the Baptist church, send you flowers and cute cards urging you to enjoy "your golden years."

And, if you have held the same job for many years, they top off the festivities with a retirement party.

That's what they did in my dad's case. Just up and threw him a great big party. And being the proper son that I am, I took the day off, drove three hours and made a surprise appearance. My dad, for some peculiar reason, seemed surprised by my act of good will.

"I just can't believe you're here," he kept muttering over and over.

I never could figure out if he was pleased or embarrassed by my presence.

But the point is, we had the party.

I say "party", but actually we're talking about a "reception" of sorts.

This is how it worked.

Members of the immediate family formed a line and shook hands with all of the guests as they entered the room. Given the nature of the event it only follows that the vast majority of those attending were fellow retirees. So the average age in the room at any one time was about 73.

One by one they went through the greeting line, each giving my dad a big hug and then recounting an old story or two. Finally, as they were getting ready to leave, they would glance at me and nod cautiously. I returned the gesture.

Occasionally someone would say, "You must be Angus' boy."

I would then nod again.

That's all I was that day — Angus' boy.

And that's as it should have been. This was his day, his chance to shine. I was merely a bit player in the overall scheme of things.

The really fun part of the festivities, however, was still to come. Namely, the speeches. For a good half-hour former colleagues rose to their feet and told of the many virtues of my dad. He seemed terribly embarrassed by the kind words. Still, they flowed.

I sat alone in the corner and listened. It was nice.

Obviously, I agreed with everything that was being said, but somehow my mind kept drifting back to my growing up years and all of the horrible fights my dad and I used to have about life in general.

It was the late '60s, so anyone who is old enough to have children my age knows what I'm talking about.

It was not a kinder and gentler America.

We argued constantly. Long hair, the Vietnam War, Woodstock, Nixon. You name an issue, and we took opposite sides. It became a matter of principle. We simply refused to agree on anything.

Now all of that has changed. We're the best of buddies. We both enjoy golf, Dan Jenkins books and an occasional Scotch and water before dinner. When I'm home visiting we can sit out in the sun room and talk for hours. Rarely do we argue. Of course, we made a pact years ago to avoid the subject of politics.

Now, after all these years, ol' Angus has retired and become a man of leisure. The golf course is his new office.

As for me, dad, I say "more power to you. You've earned it."

And, one final thing, Nixon really was guilty.

Helmet law among those taking effect

By JAMES CULLEN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — No longer will Bubba's hair fly free in the wind as he tools his motorcycle along Texas highways. And when he loads the pickup truck, that most typical of Texans had better keep the kids up front if he wants to make good time and avoid a ticket.

But at least the Texas Department of Public Safety, understanding that cherished traditions are hard to let go of, will give Bubba 90 days to get used to the new laws before troopers start issuing tickets for failure to wear a motorcycle helmet or allowing children to ride in the backs of pickup trucks traveling faster than 35 mph.

It is nearly Labor Day in an odd-numbered year, time for Bubba and Bubbette, the stereotypical Texans, to adjust their lifestyles to the tinkerings of the Texas Legislature.

As a result of lawmakers' handiwork during the 140-day regular session and the monthlong special session, 544 bills take effect Sept. 1. Another 286 bills get a few days' head start, as they become effective Aug. 28.

THE TWO MOST notorious new laws probably are the ones that require motorcycle riders to wear helmets and the ban on children riding in pickup beds at speeds greater than 35 mph.

During their passage through the House and Senate, the bills were attacked as infringements on personal liberties and rural lifestyles, but their sponsors hope they will save lives.

State troopers will issue warnings during the first 90 days, said Mike Cox, DPS spokesman in Austin, but they may issue citations in flagrant cases, and he cannot speak for how local police will treat the laws. "Certainly our best advice to Texans is to start abiding by the law," Cox said.

Helmetless motorcycle riders face a fine of $10 to $50, while violations of the pickup law will draw a fine of $25 to $200.

Cox is optimistic that the motorcycle helmet law will reduce the number of motorcycle-related traffic deaths. In 1988, he said, 295 traffic deaths involved motorcycle riders, and 229 were not wearing helmets.

Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, who has said he hoped his pickup truck safety bill would make "Bubbas stop killing their babies," plans to monitor its impact in the next two years. He noted that his bill that required infant safety seats in cars has resulted in an 80 percent drop in child fatalities.

"I know some fatalities we've had in the past have been in trucks slower than 35 miles per hour," Parker said, but the exemption for lower speeds "was just political reality. I couldn't get it through the House without that language in there."

DPS STATISTICS show 11 children under the age of 16 died last year from injuries while riding in the back of pickup trucks, while 397 children were injured. (DPS does not keep traffic statistics for children under age 12.) If the results warrant it, Parker said he will consider pushing for a prohibition on children under 16 years riding in the truck beds.

In its efforts to look out for Bubba, the Legislature also strengthened some consumer protection laws, as it enacted tougher laws against product tampering.

The Legislature also decreed that Bubba has five days to back out of a time share vacation deal after he recovers from the sales pitch and reads the fine print on the contract. Promoters also will have to make good on the prizes they promise in their come-on pitches, under the bill cosponsored by Rep. Billy Clemons, D-Lufkin, and Sen. Bill Haley, D-Center.

A new law forces hotel management to notify guests which long-distance telephone company serves the hotel. If requested, the hotels must provide estimates of the cost of long distance calls.

Tanning salons must regulate the amount of time a person can spend in a tanning booth and requires them to provide protective eye goggles under a bill by Rep. Ron Lewis, D-Mauriceville.

OTHER LAWS prohibit sending sales solicitations over mobile phone or fax machines if the receiver must pay for the transmission.

But Rebecca Lightsey, a lobbyist for the Texas Consumer Association, said consumers got little more than "crumbs" from the 71st session. "We would have just as soon they had stayed at home," she said.

"We got within striking distance of solid insurance reform. Instead we got a little. We hoped to strengthen pesticide laws. Instead we lost some ground there. And on utility regulation, we stood still, which meant we lost ground."

In the criminal arena, drug dealers will face one of the most feared threats that government can muster — the tax collector — under a new bill by Clemons that places a special tax on illegal drugs.

The law could raise millions of dollars in new revenue for the state, but its main purpose is to allow prosecutors to add the felony charge of tax evasion to the list of criminal sanctions available in the war on drugs.

Penalties for racketeering also were toughened and expanded to include bribery, fraud and drug crimes.

THIS IS THE last week that hot football prospects can shake down university recruiters for a new car in exchange for signing on the dotted lines.

After Sept. 1, it will be a Class A misdemeanor for Junior to accept such an illegal gift and it will be a third-degree felony for the recruiter who offers it, under the bill by Rep. Pete Laney, D-Hale Center, and Sen. Bob Glasgow, D-Stephenville.

The Legislature also made it a third-degree felony to promote child pornography or to mutilate a U.S. flag or to display it on the ground.

To make room for all the new felons, the Legislature authorized 15,800 new prison beds, which would increase the prison system's capacity to 60,000 by 1993.

Among other new laws that take effect:

- Rural hospitals will get help from the state, which will also assume liability for the first $100,000 in malpractice judgments against doctors treating indigents.
- Casino gambling will be legal on cruise ships operating out of Texas ports.
- AIDS education and treatment programs will get $18 million from the state in a bill that also authorized tracing of HIV infections.
- An increase in the Medicaid income cap to $1,104 monthly will make health care available to thousands of poor children and pregnant women as well as elderly people who become eligible for nursing home and community care benefits.
- Police agencies will be prohibited from requi. g their officers to issue quotas of traffic tickets under a bill by Ron Lewis. Another bill reduces the incentive for speed traps by prohibiting towns from getting more than 30 percent of their revenue from traffic fines.
- Aircraft mechanics will have access to the same kind of lien on their work as auto mechanics now have under a bill by Laney.
- Laredo State University, Corpus Christi State University and Texas A&I University merge into the Texas A&M System, while the University of Texas gets Pan American University, with campuses in Edinburg and Brownsville under a bill the entire South Texas delegation had a hand in.
- The state will provide subsidized loans to provide water, sewers and other basic health services to thousands of residents in "colonias," unincorporated communities along the Texas-Mexico border. The bill also provides state aid, along with U.S. and Mexican authorities, to help Nuevo Laredo build a waste water treatment plant to improve the quality of sewerage discharged into the Rio Grande.
- A public school equalization package will divide $450 million among school districts in a formula designed to help poorer districts. Teachers who get the state minimum salary will get at least a $1,800 pay raise.
- The state will help rural school districts pool their resources to issue bonds for building and renovation projects under a bill by Haley. Another bill requires youngsters ages 6 through 17 to attend school, adding a year at each end. Dropouts will lose their driving privileges.
- Children under the age of 18 will not be able to buy cigarettes or other tobacco products.

Mother advises parenting with 'faith'

By JOE OLVERA

EL PASO (AP) — Hispanic parents must break with the tradition of overprotecting their children to shield them from failure, says a woman who has raised three — including a recent graduate of the U.S. Coast Guard Academy.

Martha Jaramillo, a bus driver for the El Paso Independent School District for the past 13 years, said it isn't money that's important in raising a child.

"What is important is that you have faith in your children. You have to teach them to not crack under pressure. As parents, we must also understand that if we hold our children back, we will cripple them into a dependency they might never shake loose."

"What is important is that you have faith in your children. You have to teach them to not crack under pressure.

— Martha Jaramillo, El Paso school bus driver

Mrs. Jaramillo, born and reared in El Paso and a 1966 graduate of Loretto Academy, said she is troubled by reports of youths involved in drive-by shootings and other gang activities.

Divorced six years ago, she said she has maintained an active lifestyle because she wants her children — Luis Felipe, 22; Mireya, 19; and Sergio, 17 — to learn by example.

Martha Jaramillo encourages other Hispanic parents to become more involved in their children's activities and in the community.

In September, she will become president of a group of school district employees, the El Paso Independent School District's Association of Operational and Maintenance Personnel.

"You have to be a role model for your children, and that can't be done if all you do is sit at home and worry about your problems, financial or otherwise," Mrs. Jaramillo said.

"I wonder why Hispanic parents, especially in El Paso, like to hold on to their children and protect them so much.

"Any young person, no matter what their economic background, can succeed. But that child needs the parent's support. Just be there to pat your child on the back when something good happens, or to punish when it's something bad."

Mireya Jaramillo, a sophomore criminal justice major at the University of Texas at El Paso, said her mother always told her if she wants something she has to work hard for it.

"She also taught me to accept change as a constant, because nothing ever stays the same," Mireya Jaramillo said. "She taught us responsibility and she taught us that if we are to succeed as a family we've got to help each other out."

Sergio Jaramillo is a junior at Burges High School, where his sister and brother graduated, and he wants to follow his brother into the Coast Guard Academy.

"My oldest brother has been my role model, too, because he knew from a very young age that he wanted to attend a military academy.

"Everything he did was geared toward that end, toward that goal."

Luis Felipe Jaramillo graduated from the academy in May with a bachelor of science degree in math and computer science. He is an ensign stationed at Northampton, N.H.

"We all have learned from our mom," Sergio Jaramillo said. "She's our inspiration. Maybe she didn't have a college education, but she never gave up."

Their mother said it was tough getting divorced, because it happened at a crucial age for the children.

EPA plans hazardous waste dumping in wells near Tyler

DALLAS (AP) — The U.S. Environmental Protection Agency proposed allowing the injection of hazardous waste into deep, underground disposal wells near Winona.

It was the first such recommendation since federal law in 1988 prohibited deep well disposal of hazardous wastes unless a company can demonstrate "with reasonable certainty" that it will not threaten public health or the environment.

The EPA regional office in Dallas said Friday it will allow Gibraltar Chemical Resources Inc., which is about 15 miles northeast of Tyler, to dump waste in two disposal wells.

A public hearing on the plan will be held Sept. 26 at the Tyler city hall and the EPA will take written comment until Oct. 10.

EPA officials said Gibraltar's injection well program has a good compliance history with no known releases of hazardous waste.

Gibraltar would be cleared for two disposal wells under the EPA recommendation. The Texas Water Commission permits cover one well that has been active since 1981 and another that has not been built.

The company projects 20 years of use for the wells and the 10-year permits could be renewed.

The waste is injected at 5,248 feet to 5,438 feet underground.

Dallas couple will toast marriage in county morgue

DALLAS (AP) — She's deadly serious, but Pat Epley has taken an extreme amount of kidding since people have learned her wedding reception will take place in the Dallas County morgue.

"The people at the marriage license bureau just about came unglued when I told them," Ms. Epley said Saturday. "And the lady delivering the wedding cake didn't believe it at first, either. I bet she doesn't look left or right when she brings the cake in."

But Ms. Epley, 56, said the Sept. 1 wedding reception location make sense.

She has worked for the Dallas County medical examiner's office for more than 11 years and many of her friends who work at the morgue can't attend the private ceremony earlier in the day when she marries Jack Frost, a 63-year-old retired railroad worker.

Ms. Epley expects many of the 100 employees at the Dallas county facility to attend what she is sure will be one of the livelier gatherings there in some time.

"I'm sure there won't be any back talk from neighbors," she said.

Ms. Epley said the morgue has been the site of several birthday parties and baby showers in the past.

The honor attendants for the wedding are Dallas County forensics director Mildred O'Dell and her husband, Charles O'Dell. He is better known as "Digger," after a Jack Benny radio show character.

"We've heard a few jokes about that, too," Ms. Epley said.

MADD officials on July 20 met with Miller and Texas Special Olympics officials and outlined a risk-management plan for the six parties.

MADD's recommendations included placing intoxilyzer machines at party entrances and exits and closer scrutiny of identification cards.

Commissioners study county's 1990 budget

From Staff Reports

Midland County commissioners will meet at 9 a.m. Monday to wrap up budgetary decisions, including expected approval of a proposed 1990 budget and tax rate of 16.50 cents per $100 valuation.

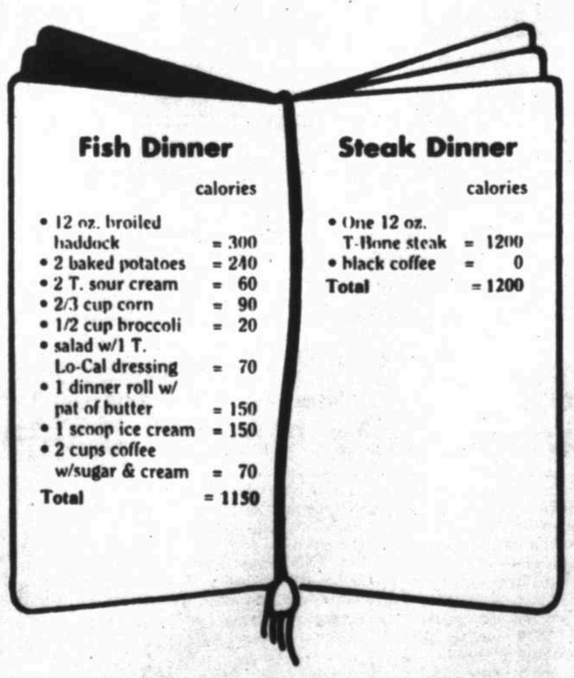

In other action, commissioners are expected:

- Authorize the county auditor to seek bids on a 1990 passenger van for the Midland County Restitution Center.
- Authorize the county auditor to seek bids on new automobiles for the sheriff's department.
- Discuss signage on county roads for the purpose of the Enhanced 911 District. Ken Peeler and Charlie Green also will present a 911 update.
- Hear a report from Road and Bridge Superintendent Albert Stewart.
- Sign an order allowing the proposition to legalize pari-mutuel wagering to appear the Nov. 7 election ballot.
- Authorize the sale of $1.8 million in certificates of obligation to pay for the cost of construction a southside law enforcement office building and the renovation of the Midland County Courthouse.
- Approve monthly bills and reports.
- Accept any road easements or deeds and requests for pipeline or cable crossings.
- Consider a resolution that would authorize refunding of the Midland Industrial Development Corp. for the amount of $775,000.

Chronic Fatique Syndrome group to meet Sept. 5

The September meeting of the Chronic Fatigue Syndrome support group will be at 7:30 p.m. Sept. 5 in Midland Memorial Hospital's E-18 Auditorium.

Guest speakers are Dr. Patricia Salvato, an internal medicine physician who is medical director for the new Chronic Fatigue & Immune Disorder Treatment and Research Center (CFID Center), Houston; and Carol Thompson, director of nursing for that facility.

Both are graduates of the University of Texas at Austin.

Their topic will be CFS with special emphasis on "Gammaglobulin and Your Immune System." Continuing medical education credits will be given for local physicians and others who qualify.

The support group was referred to previously as the Chronic Epstein-Barr Virus Support Group.

Originally CFS was thought to be caused by the Epstein-Barr virus and was originally called Chronic Epstein-Barr Virus. Researchers since have determined that, although the Epstein-Barr virus may be a contributing factor, it is not the sole cause of CFS. In fact, to date, the cause and cure of CFS is unknown and remains a mystery.

The Midland support group meets four times a year. The quarterly meeting in September 1988, featured a special "Dealing with Symptoms" panel, presented by Dr. Roberta Case, Dr. Richard Reese and psychologist David Koch. The meeting was videotaped for those unable to attend.

In addition, the Social Work/Pastoral Care Office has a reference book of material available for on-location reading.

Those attending the Sept. 5 meeting will find signs directing them to the proper location.

For more information call the Rev. Alan Williams, chaplain at Midland Memorial Hospital, 685-1566.

Colombia must stop bloody drug cartel

Bloody Colombia's violent throes seem to grow worse with each passing day. Maybe the final straw came on Aug. 18 when gunmen opened fire at a political rally near Bogota, wounding several people including Sen. Luis Carlos Galan. Witnesses blamed drug traffickers who have been waging a war of intimidation in the country recently.

But moves taken this week — including the wounding of the liberal 46-year-old politician and notification that Colombia has started proceedings to hand over to the U.S. the reputed cocaine finance chief, Eduardo Martinez Romero — hold out hope that the two countries can work together to break the infamous Medellin drug cartel's grip. Even with the cooperative effort, the primary work must be done in Colombia which the drug dealers have used as a base camp.

The wounding of Galan was only the last in a series of drug-related assaults that have rocked Colombia in recent weeks.

On Aug. 16, Magistrate Carlos Valencia Garcia was shot to death in Bogota, an act which caused 48 magistrates in Bogota's Superior Court to hand in their resignations en masse.

Since then, 4,000 judges and magistrates have been on strike in an attempt to get the government to crack down on drug dealers. The judges' strike came despite calls from Justice Minister Monica de Grieff to return to their benches so that the drug traffickers do not achieve their goal of stopping the administration of justice.

Colombia is obviously involved in a death struggle with the infamous Medellin drug cartel. With drug money at its disposal, the cartel will continue to wage its campaign of intimidation because that leaves it free to carry on its cruel business of preying on human frailties.

Justice Minister de Grieff outlined what Colombia must do when she said:

"The only way to confront this challenge is by fighting together, the government, judges, the armed forces and the citizenry to stop the wave of violence."

She is correct. To do anything less will mean resigning Colombia to anarchy and placing it at the feet of the drug lords. Yet, the United States must have a role in breaking the cartel's grip on Colombia, for it is that grip which permits the cartel to continue shipping illegal drugs to the waiting market in the United States.

The drug lords have begun to operate as though they are invincible in Colombia, terrorizing the populace and murdering officials in public.

Colombia's war against the drug cartel is critical to overcoming the drug threat in this country. If that nation fails to stand up to this challenge, it would be a travesty not only for the people of Colombia but also for all those in the United States who daily battle with the scourge called drugs.

Guam should have commonwealth status

A bill before Congress would make the Pacific island of Guam an American commonwealth, similar to Puerto Rico. While the bill contains some questionable provisions, the plan is generally good and deserves to be passed.

At present, the 212-square mile tropical island, 6,000 miles west of San Francisco, is a U.S. territory. This status leaves the 100,000 Guamanians in a political limbo. These people are American citizens, with their own unicameral legislature, but Congress can overturn any local law.

"Guam is at times treated by the Congress like a state, a territory or a foreign country, depending on how much they want to tie our hands," says Guam's Gov. Joseph Ada.

Making Guam a commonwealth will allow the island to take almost full control of its local affairs, with Washington retaining control over defense and foreign policy.

Guam is booty from the 1898 Spanish-American War. Over the years, it has become an important Naval and air base in the Western Pacific. The island could become more important if U.S. bases in the Philippines, 1,700 miles to the west, are closed. Thus, any commonwealth plan must take into account special U.S. military interests.

That said, a law making Guam a commonwealth should be drafted so as to help the island be economically diversified. Guam should control a 200-mile fishing zone; tourism, a $400,000-million-a-year business, should be encouraged, and U.S. tariffs on products from Guam should be lifted.

If Guam becomes a commonwealth, its people would have a real voice in their future.

Glasnost working, but perestroika isn't

MOSCOW — Recent press reports indicating that Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev appears wan and fatigued are perhaps attributable to private warnings that he recently received from one of his country's top economic experts: High noon for Gorbachev arrives in about 18 months. Without visible signs of economic improvement by then, according to Deputy Prime Minister Leonid Abalkin, "our government will have to resign."

Jack Anderson

The simple fact is that while glasnost, or openness, is spreading like a prairie fire, perestroika, or economic restructuring, has generated little more than smoke. Ironically, Politburo conservatives have seized on glasnost as a weapon with which to strangle perestroika in the cradle.

What is obstructing perestroika are the ironies of the system — what both Soviet officials and U.S. Ambassador Jack Matlock referred to as "vicious circles" in the Russian economic system.

A decades-old Soviet joke is commonly summoned to make the point: In the Soviet Union, nobody works, but everybody gets paid. Everybody gets paid, but there is nothing in the stores. There is nothing in the stores but, at home, the tables are full. The tables are full, but everybody complains. Everybody complains, but everybody votes yes. Everybody votes yes, but nobody works. And so it goes.

It was the kind of dark humor that made an impossible Soviet system seem bearable. Today, what has changed is the freedom to criticize publicly and openly. One myth after another has been a target.

For seven decades, the Soviet Union has officially had full employment. This was the one great promise of socialism. It wasn't always true. At least 3 percent of the country is in the process of getting another job. One in five workers switches jobs every year, and takes about a month to find a new one. Failing that, the state finds one for him.

This figure of "fictional unemployment" looms even larger for the future as Gorbachev slashes state ministries and the military. Already 24 ministries have been abolished, and 60,000 people will be out of work next year in Moscow alone. There are 18 million bureaucrats who "don't know how to do anything else," according to Matlock. "That's one reason why the bureaucracy is resisting change."

All in all, about 16 million workers will be laid off by the state by the year 2000, and must find jobs in the growing private sector in the Soviet Union. That's 13 percent of the officially listed Soviet workforce today — 120 million.

Finally, the hidden unemployment that has been the largest in Russia is implied by the phrase "nobody works." It means that the system, to supply everyone with a job, generated millions of jobs that were actually non-jobs. Many will sit for hours with nothing to do because factories and industries are run so inefficiently.

Then there is the slogan of "everybody gets paid." Yes, everybody got paid then and now. And now, as a result of events like the miner's strike and attempts to provide substance to perestroika, they are earning more.

This causes inflation, another of those officially unrecognized ailments of socialism over the years. During the last 15 years, according to our sources, the total amount of cash money in the Soviet Union has actually grown more than three times. The same authoritative Soviet and U.S. sources peg their current inflation at more than 10 percent.

The mix of producing more money and paying more to the workers, who are on the state's dole, has spawned a huge budget deficit. U.S. intelligence sources estimate the Soviet budget deficit at about $140 billion, roughly equal to America's.

"Everybody gets paid, but there is nothing in the stores." Another of the ironies of Gorbachev's efforts is that the country has actually produced more to put in the stores, but the shelves are emptier than a decade ago because Soviet consumers, getting paid more, are snapping up items faster than they arrive. Acute shortages of consumer goods are the result — perhaps the biggest single danger to Gorbachev.

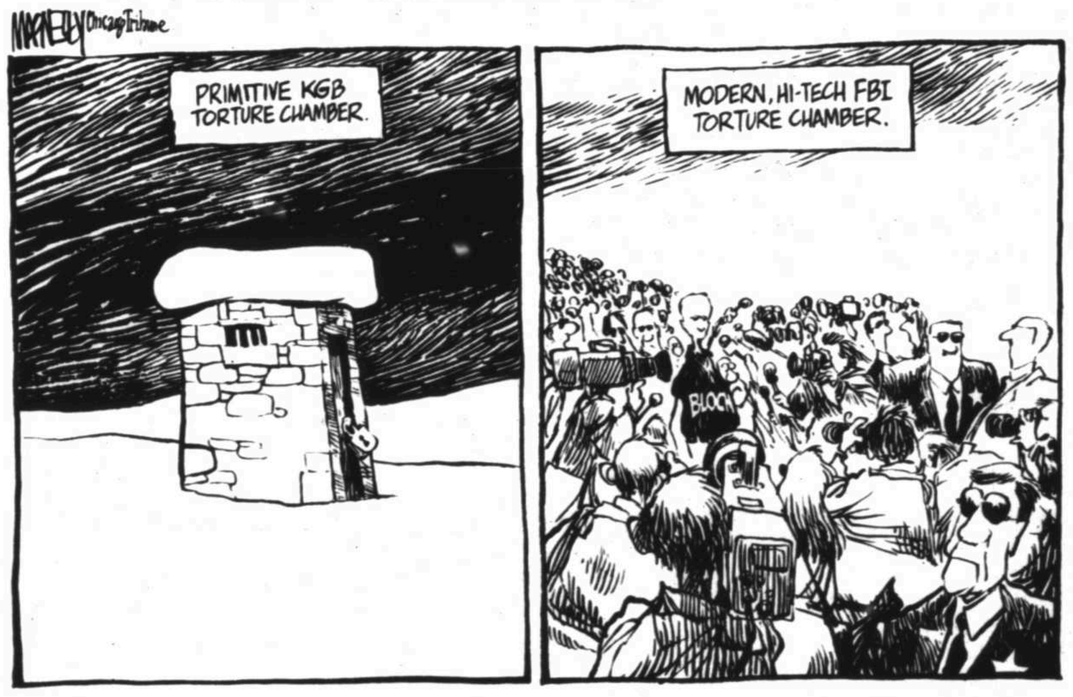

"There is nothing in the stores but, at home, the tables are full." Enough food is available only if the Soviets import huge quantities.

"Everybody complains, but everybody votes yes." This is the biggest difference of all at the moment. In the past, Soviets were forced to vote — they'd get a paper that they had to show at their place of work proving that they had voted. The only objection one could make was by not voting at all. Today, Soviets can cast their ballots in the first multi-candidate open elections.

In simplest form, this is how it can been seen that glasnost is thriving and perestroika is not. Gorbachev has been so anxious for signs of improvement that he's quietly spending millions of dollars in precious foreign currency Russia has accumulated to swiftly stock stores with shoes and other items bought in the West.

Matlock strikes a more positive note than many Soviets. He conceded the complaints and the shortages in the stores were unabated, yet noted that the Russians "have been through a lot worse."

Parties of rich, famous leave woman depressed

The woman is near tears. A few days ago she read about the birthday party created on New York's Long Island by rich, rich Saul Steinberg's wife, Gayfryd.

It was not just a balloon-and-rented-clown party with a softball game for the kids in the backyard.

Russell Baker

It was tents, catered food served on real dishes, men in tuxedos, women in frou-frous, and wine — not jugs of watered Gallo, either, but real $7-a-bottle wine, judging from the press' awestruck prose.

Stung by the stories of Steinberg's glorious fete, she now had to endure these reports of the Malcolm Forbes birthday party. Some said it cost $2 million, some said $3 million.

Battalions of guests had been flown from far outposts of capitalism and titillation, flown by rented Concorde and 747 and DC-8, flown by their own or their friends' personal jets, flown to African Tangiers overlooking Gibraltar.

Rich, rich Saul Steinberg's party may have been a gaudy feast of consumption, but news stories left the woman in no doubt that Malcolm Forbes' party was the most extravagant blowout since Belshazzar's feast.

She had seen Belshazzar's feast in "Intolerance," so knew that the gross vulgarity of that particular party had led to terrible punishment for the feasters: all that heavy masonry falling on them in divine punishment for overdoing trivial things like birthday parties, or whatever they were celebrating that night at Belshazzar's.

Why was the woman melancholy?

It was not fear that cruel retribution would strike down those who partied at Forbes' multimillion-dollar consumption festival. She did not believe in the possibility of divine punishment of vulgarity.

She was glad about that too — glad that except in rare cases, such as the Jim and Tammy Bakker business, destiny tended to spare people who probably deserved to have masonry fall on them.

A sensible woman, she knew that despite its inanity the rich-and-famous crowd performed a vital public service. They provided people with daydreams and poisonous envy and entertained them in TV bromides and supermarket headlines.

When a critic chided her for keeping up with the rich-and-famous news she said, "While they're certainly silly, they're not as depressing as that crowd in the Middle East butchering each other as well as the women and children."

If falling tent poles had crushed them all flat at the Forbes party, she would have felt bereft.

Still these two extravaganzas, Steinberg' and Forbes', coming back-to-back in August made her aware of a deep sadness which, she suddenly realized, had been with her a long time.

Her husband, like Steinberg and Forbes, was also a Leo, and she had recently given him a birthday party without a single tent.

There had been canned beans on paper plates. To be sure, there had been wine, and not jug wine either, but a California wine of the type known, laughingly among schooled imbibers, as "Chablis," the type of which wine salesmen say, "At that price you could get a lot worse."

She had served white wine with canned beans. She had flown nobody in from anyplace at all, much less anyplace exotic.

The embarrassing absence of the rich and famous was so obvious that everybody pointedly refused to comment on it, and she hadn't even noticed.

Now reading about hundreds of them scurrying from Steinberg to Forbes parties, she realized she didn't care that the rich and famous had not come to her husband's party.

Maybe she had been making that precise statement when she served fake Chablis with canned beans.

"Almost all of them," she was thinking, "almost all of them," meaning the rich and famous, "would be far too old to party at Gatsby's."

Except for the young second and third wives of those famous gray-beard moneybags, all of them must have been physically drained by Steinberg and Forbes bashes back-to-back.

And that deadly jet lag hitting them after flying the Atlantic!

When she was much younger the woman thought it would have been Paradise to party at Gatsby's or, even better, to be along with Gatsby's creator, Scott Fitzgerald, at that permanent wild party that once seemed the point of being young.

Those were parties!

By the age of 30, however, surely they had either killed you or left you so spent that you never needed to go to a party again, which was all right, because after 30 or maybe 40, but certainly after 50, a big party is just another way to wait for bedtime.

The woman is near tears. It is because she is over 30, or maybe 40, perhaps even 50.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, Aug. 27, the 239th day of 1989. There are 126 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Aug. 27, 1883, the island volcano Krakatoa blew up. Tidal waves resulting from the cataclysmic explosions in Indonesia's Sunda Strait claimed 36,000 lives in Java and Sumatra.

On this date:

In 1770, the German philosopher Georg Wilhelm Friedrich Hegel was born in Stuttgart.

In 1859, Colonel Edwin L. Drake drilled the first successful oil well in the United States near Titusville, Pa.

In 1908, Lyndon B. Johnson, the 36th president of the United States, was born near Stonewall, Texas.

In 1928, the Kellogg-Briand Pact was signed in Paris, outlawing war and providing for the peaceful settlement of disputes.

In 1945, American troops began landing in Japan following the surrender of the Japanese government.

In 1962, the United States launched the "Mariner 2" space probe, which flew past Venus the following December.

In 1967, Brian Epstein, manager of the Beatles, was found dead in his London flat from an apparent accidental overdose of sleeping pills.

In 1982, Rickey Henderson of the Oakland A's stole his 119th base of the season in a game against the Brewers in Milwaukee, eclipsing Lou Brock's record of 118 steals in one season.

Ten years ago: British war hero Lord Louis Mountbatten was killed in a boat explosion off the coast of Ireland. The Irish Republican Army claimed responsibility. A three-day standoff between the U.S. and the Soviet Union ended as American officials allowed ballerina Lyudmila Vlasova to leave New York aboard an Aeroflot jetliner after the defection of her husband, Alexander Godunov.

Five years ago: President Ronald Reagan announced that a schoolteacher would be the first "citizen astronaut" to fly aboard the space shuttle. Christa McAuliffe died in the Challenger disaster in January 1986.

One year ago: Tens of thousands of civil rights marchers gathered in Washington to try to recapture the spirit of the late Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. on the eve of the 25th anniversary of his "I Have a Dream" speech.

Today's birthdays: Nobel Peace Prize laureate Mother Teresa is 79. Actress-comedian Martha Raye is 73.

Old-fashioned custom has unexpected result

WASHINGTON — In sophisticated Manhattan, where they tend to do things before the rest of us can even think them up, local residents have re-discovered their front stoops.

Marianne Means

This revival of friendly summer stoop-sitting, according to the New York Times, is having the terrific but unexpected result of discouraging neighborhood crime. Not even the most crazed druggies care to carry on their dirty work under the eyes of a row of angry observers.

These curbside rubberneckers may have something. Administration drug czar William Bennett ought to take a look.

The new anti-drug strategy that President Bush will unveil in September is a welcome, broad-based effort, but even optimists acknowledge it may be many years at best before it makes a noticeable dent in the problem.

In the meantime, millions of decent families huddle behind barred doors and are afraid to walk the streets because of the violence and crime spawned by the spreading use of crack and other illegal drugs.

Urban, suburban, rural, we're all in this mess together. But perhaps things would have been better if we had not succumbed to modernization.

A generation or so ago, front porches were popular appendages to most homes. Every evening, the porches would be filled with people enjoying the fresh air after the day's labor and indulging in a little good-natured snooping on their neighbors.

It was high entertainment to observe the comings and goings and catch up on the latest gossip from passing acquaintances. For my parents, it was a treasured ritual.

But then came the advent of television and air-conditioning and families began staying inside. New homes were built that did not bother with porches. The grand old spectator sport of people-watching fell from favor.

Nobody watched what was going on out on the streets any more.

It would be an exaggeration to suggest that we can restore civility and stability to our neighborhoods by just hauling the rocker back out on the porch. But in the current drug crisis, it wouldn't hurt.

To hear CIA director William Webster tell it, it is his great good fortune to work for the only president in history who was himself once our chief spook.

Webster insisted in an interview with the Hearst Newspapers that Bush's intimate knowledge of the intelligence-gathering craft, acquired as CIA director in the last year of the Ford administration, is an asset rather than a nuisance. "It doesn't complicate our life; it galvanizes our life," Webster said.

Webster insisted that Bush doesn't try to second-guess CIA decisions, although Bush does frequently ask for more information than originally provided and make suggestions for further action.

In the recent Middle East hostage go-around, Bush said that he thought U.S. intelligence in the region was better than before, but still inadequate. But the president never directly criticized CIA shortcomings, as some others have.

It is, Webster said, helpful that the president has "some understanding of both the potential and the limitations" of intelligence work.

It is exhausting just to read about President Bush's vacation in Kennebunkport, where he spends his days exercising, bicycling, fishing, boating, running, pitching horseshoes, playing tennis and golf and otherwise expending a lot of energy.

Whatever else history records about his presidency, it will not be said that it was sedentary.

Perhaps Bush's enthusiastic orgy of physical exercise can be best explained in the words of Oscar Wilde: "Simple pleasures are the last refuge of the complex."

Happy vacation, George.

Momentous times marked in Russia, Eastern Europe

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

WYNTOON, McCloud, Calif. — Momentous events underway in the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe should be of interest to all of us who are living in this period of great historical importance.

Hearst

In one of the most risky decisions of his courageous leadership, President Mikhail Gorbachev is moving to establish a federal system of government in which the ethnic regions, such as the Ukraine, Georgia, and Moslem areas would be granted limited local autonomy with Moscow retaining authority over defense, internal security, foreign affairs and the national economy.

This could open the way for free elections in the federated states which could lead to non-Communist led local governments similar to what has happened in Poland.

The Soviet leader succeeded in getting Politburo approval for the radical proposal, which will be submitted to the Communist Party's policy-making Central Committee in the next few weeks. There could be a showdown with the anti-reform hardliners, but their leader, Yegor Ligachev, lost much of his power in the March legislative campaign. Gorbachev is expected to win the debate for the constitutional changes, which would include adjudication by a special court of disputes between the individual republics and federal authorities.

The federation proposal represents one of the most far-reaching and revolutionary aspects of Gorbachev's reform programs. Let us hope the nationalistic ethnics in the Soviet Union show the wisdom of the Polish Solidarity leaders in not demanding complete independence, which Gorbachev could not grant and survive politically.

This remarkable Soviet statesman intervened a few days ago in the Polish political crisis to urge the Communists to drop demands for a more powerful role in the Solidarity-led government that is about to be formed.

In a 40-minute telephone conversation with the Polish party leader, Mieczyslaw Rakowski, Gorbachev said, in effect, the Communists should be satisfied with the ministerial posts of defense and interior affairs. Solidarity agreed to grant these vital concessions in return for the Soviet leader's willingness to allow free elections which led to an overwhelming victory for the non-Communist parties and will bring about formation of the first non-Communist government in Eastern Europe in more than 40 years.

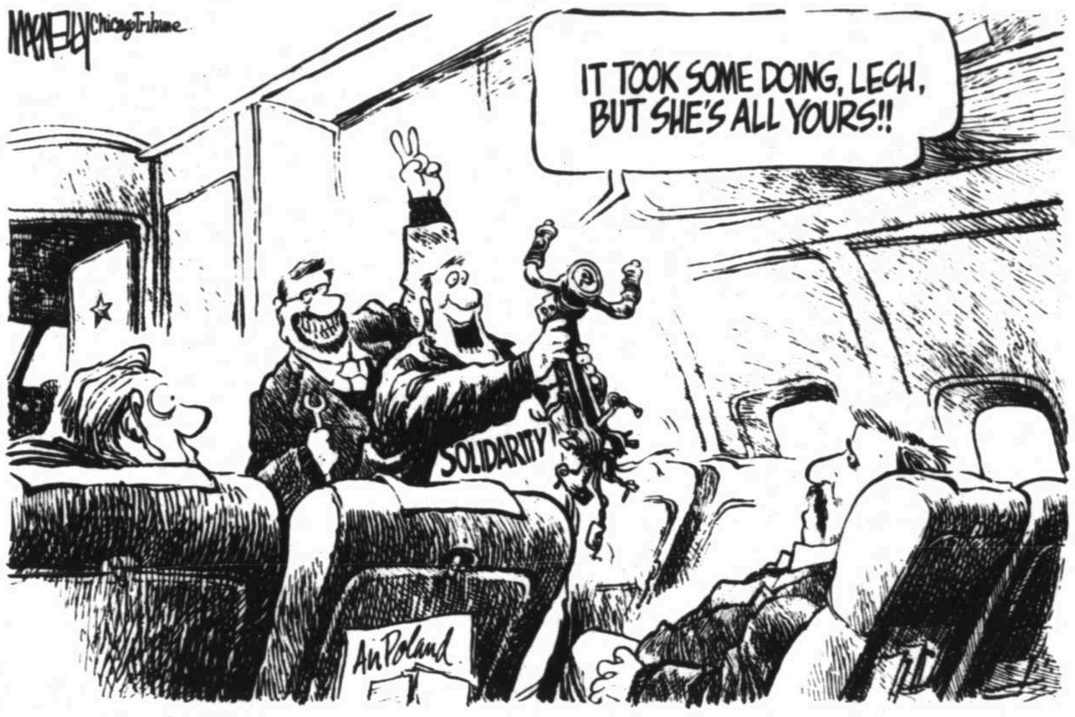

Gorbachev told Rakowski that Poland's problems could not be solved without Communist participation in the coalition government, once again opting for practical compromise over Communist dogmatism.

A Washington Post editorial said, "Poland now stands at the threshold of events that could, if allowed to continue, change Europe and the world."

Zbigniew Brzezinski, national security adviser in the Carter administration, described events in Poland as "the most important upheaval in the Communist world since Stalin."

However, the Polish-born Brzezinski, author of the recently published book "The Grand Failure" (of communism), warned in a Post article that the "first known case of the evolutionary termination of communist totalitarianism" could fail if the United States, Western Europe and Japan do not quickly provide a Marshall Plan-type economic and technical assistance to Poland.

The most urgent need, as reported in my column last month, is food relief for the Polish people. I urge again the creation of a private sector, nationwide fund-raising campaign for food supplies which could be distributed by the American and Polish Red Cross to relieve the acute food shortage in Poland.

Capital gains changes 'misreading' Bush's lips

By ROWLAND EVANS and ROBERT NOVAK

WASHINGTON — When Deputy Treasury Secretary John Robson went before directors of the New York Stock Exchange to stir support for a cut in the capital gains tax, their bleak response betrayed a widespread misconception among financial and political insiders.

What good would a capital gains break do for us, plaintively asked the Wall Streeters, if its price is raising our income tax? That defines the misconception that the core of a capital gains deal is a rise in the current top marginal rate of 28 percent on personal income to 33 percent. The trouble with that supposition, widely held in New York and Washington, is that it misreads George Bush's lips.

Robson assured the princelings of the Stock Exchange that in sticking to the top 28 percent rate on personal income, no president had ever had his feet so implanted in concrete. Whether or not they believed Bush's emissary, he was telling the truth. There is no marginal tax retreat, and therein lies the real tax fight — dwarfing the struggle over treatment of capital gains.

The preeminent Democratic tax aim is to eliminate the "bubble" from the 1986 tax reform. That historic change closed tax loopholes in return for keeping just two individual income tax rates: 15 percent and 28 percent. But Congress added a "bubble." The top rate goes up to 33 percent for single incomes above $44,900 and joint taxpayers above $74,850, then returns to 28 percent at much higher levels: for example, at $200,000 for taxpayers with four exemptions.

The purpose is to make sure that nobody subject to the higher rate, no matter how rich, is actually taxed at less than 28 percent after exemptions. Here is the irresistible peg for Democrats dying to get back to redistributing wealth and generating more income: for the sake of fairness, just eliminate the "bubble" and set a plain three-rate structure with 33 percent at the top.

Rowland Evans and Robert Novak

That is the supposed deal for lower capital gains rates next year that so mistakenly worries Wall Street. When House Ways and Means Chairman Dan Rostenkowski whispers about enacting a permanent differential between capital gains and personal income tax rates next year, the implicit tradeoff is higher personal rates. Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell never tires of reminding that when he unsuccessfully fought for a three-rate structure during the 1986 reform debate, he favored retaining a capital gains differential. Even so moderate a Democrat as Sen. Sam Nunn insists on higher personal rates if the capital gains tax is lowered.

No wonder then that the conventional wisdom assumes the days of the 28 percent top marginal rate are numbered. But these are the same conventional wise men who scoffed at the '81 tax cuts, buried the '86 tax reform and ridiculed any hope for capital gains cuts. They were wrong before. They are wrong again.

Jeff Bell, the conservative political activist who is now an economic consultant, has been telling clients that a "deal of the century" including tax increases is afoot. But he carefully adds it will not touch income tax rates. Senior Administration officials who privately confirm the possibility of such a deal emphasize that the higher revenue will come from consumption, energy and "sin" taxes – definitely not the income tax.

These officials, veterans of the '86 tax reform, remember well that there was no sentiment whatever for closing loopholes until rates below 30 percent were proposed. They also understand that even moderate higher marginal tax rates destroy incentive and vitiate growth.

Moreover, government estimators say that the revenue gain from eliminating the "bubble" is relatively modest: less than $3.6 billion for next year, $42.9 billion over five years. Even so, Third World experience has sadly proved that revenue falls below estimates when governments transgress on the lower reaches of the Laffer Curve (which portrays how quickly revenue is lost when tax rates climb).

More is at stake here. A higher marginal tax rate defiles the sanctity of the existing income tax structure, giving Congressional tax raisers a shot at real money. Under the '86 reform, the rate goes from 15 percent to 28 percent at $18,550 for single and $30,950 for joint taxpayers. A drop of just $5,000 in those floors – putting millions more Americans in the 28 percent bracket –would mean annual revenue boosts above $20 billion a year. That would be a stealth tax bomber, leaving no fingerprints -reminiscent of the inflationary bracket creep that yielded huge revenues in the bad old days.

Tampering with the rate structure is simply unacceptable, not just to doctrinaire supply-siders but to the president and his economic team. They are not about to reverse the downward trek of tax rates that has brought unprecedented sustained prosperity. The "insiders" who think differently are wrong again.

Wall Street Journal story created big stir

Whomever would have thought that the Wall Street Journal's story of Midland's banking saga, repeated around the Basin's campfires every evening, would have brought forth such a reaction as that printed in the Midland Reporter-Telegram of Aug. 12? It is hoped that the yolk won't be on Mr. Liedtke, the big bird's benevolent benefactor.

NCNB does have a few things to learn about West Texas customer courtesy and they might start by ending their "grocery-store-check-cashing" policy, a particularly annoying affront to their own depositors.

Bicycle, skateboard must be used safely

I am amazed at what I see on the streets and have hesitated to write about it. However, it repeats itself all the time.

Kids, teenagers, etcetera, on skateboards ride on our streets. Some skate right at our cars. Children — little ones barely able to ride a bicycle; young people; men and women; and old men and old women ride on the streets.

They ride on the right side of the street and meet the approaching traffic. They ride two and three abreast in front of cars and don't attempt to let motorists go by. They ride through stop signs and red lights. They ride or thread their way through stopped traffic at stop signs and stop lights, then go against the lights and proceed on down the road.

Children play in the streets. Many bicycles have no lights and/or reflectors on their wheels. Bicycles are ridden on some of our sidewalks.

If a young child, a teenager or even an older person is struck by a car, it is a tragedy. An old person has lived his or her life and that isn't so bad. A young person has not met the challenges, doesn't know about love and family and hasn't competed for the best things in life. That is very sad!

A bicycle is meant for fun and is fun if properly used. School is starting again real soon and I hope whomever is dedicated or responsible for traffic rules and safety practices will step forth and have the traffic rules, the safety rules printed in this newspaper so everyone can see them. We need a review.

I feel this will save some accidents by making parents, children, old men and old women aware of the problem. Don't forget the drivers of the cars — it's a tragedy when you strike a bicycle.

Loss of Rottweiler tragedy for family

This is directed to the person(s) who stole our beloved pet Rottweiler last Sunday night. We thought you should know a bit more about him. He was our pet for the eight uncomplaining years of his life. He was loving, kind and dependable. He had not been feeling too well lately and was on medication but of course you wouldn't have considered that possibility. That you would take a pet away from his home and try to place him in an environment that was totally alien to him in unconscionable.

Did the dog know and trust you? Is that how you were able to lure him from a fenced yard that he had not voluntarily left in the eight years of his life?

The end of this story may not matter to you but we want to tell you anyway. As you know, he escaped from you, or whoever you took him to, by getting out of his collar which is probably still on the end of the restraint you had him on. We don't know how far you took him because he was gone for over a day and a half. Be we do know (thanks to the Midland Animal control) that he was headed for home. He must have been so excited to be only three blocks from his house with just one more busy street to cross. He didn't make it. He was struck and killed by a car. We do not blame the driver of the car, as that was surely an accident. You are the one(s) responsible for the death of this dog. Such a pity and a waste. Our dog deserved to live the few remaining years of his life at home and in peace, as all older pets deserve.

We hope you will consider this letter and think long and hard about what you have done and perhaps you will never again cause this kind of grief to any other pet or that pet's family.

Telvision movie raises hostage rescue idea

A fictional movie on a local television station last evening (Aug. 11) reminded me anew how Ross Perot managed to rescue some of his employees held hostage in Iran.

Baltic cruise shows Poland's true desire

We recently completed a Baltic Sea cruise which included Gdansk, Poland, just at the time Solidarity was declaring no way would they have a communist coalition government. It was quite apparent the Polish people want a non-communist government.

I would urge our financial support for this effort, much in the same manner as the Marshall plan did for Western Europe after WW II. Unfortunately now our deficit-ridden foreign aid dollars are understandably much harder to come by and not used very wisely. I would propose some changes from some of the current foreign aid recipients particularly Israel. The billions of dollars given annually to the Israeli Likud government to savage a long standing indigenous Palestinian population and finance settler land grabs in the West Band are reprehensible in itself.

One should compare those billions of dollars with the paltry 25-50 million our government supposedly offered the Polish Solidarity groups to help a genuinely needed financial support for the Polish people to make a free non-communist economy succeed.

Free 'found pet' ads gave us happy ending

Your policy of running free "Found Pet" advertisements resulted in a happy ending for "Sam" and me.

Sam wandered to my house and it was love at first sight for both of us. However, I have a dog "Trace" and a cat "Lucille Ball" so I could not keep Sam. I gave him food and water and love and called the Reporter-Telegram to put an ad in the paper for him.

Sam's family was on vacation and he was lonesome and ran away. The people trying to look after him were desperate. The "Found Pet" ad brought us together and Sam was reunited with his family.

Thank you for your kindness and generosity to the animals of Midland and all of us who love them. It is reassuring to know that if Trace or Lucille Ball get lost, someone can put an ad in the paper and I can find my little friends.

New York mayoral hopeful David Dinkins 'such a nice guy'

NEW YORK — David Dinkins is a soft-spoken gentleman of moderate manner and views, the experienced Borough President of Manhattan, and the favorite to win the Democratic nomination for mayor of New York City in the primary on Sept. 12.

Tom Wicker

Not the least of Dinkins's assets is the favorable contrast his low-key personality poses to the abrasive Mayor Edward I. Koch, who in 12 years at City Hall has earned a reputation for candor and divisiveness.

In a recent teamsters' union poll, for example, 49 percent of respondents disapproved of Koch's performance in office.

But the more likable impression Dinkins makes is a two-edged sword.

No one doubts that Ed Koch, whatever his faults, is a combative, sometimes even belligerent mayor, unintimidated by the tougher aspects of his job.

Numerous voters, on the other hand, even some who support Dinkins, appear to wonder whether he is "tough enough to be mayor."

"It's not a question of being tough," Dinkins likes to say. "It's a question of being strong."

There's a difference, all right, and Dinkins insists that his record shows him to be strong enough, even if he is not as tough-talking as Koch.

But even he knows that the question of "toughness" is crucial to whether or not he will be the front-runner on Sept. 12 as well as in today's polls.

His problem is not to match Koch rhetorically, even if that were possible, or to show that he knows the city's problems.

"The thing I've got to do," Dinkins stresses, in his quiet way, "is to get across my message on crime and drugs."

All candidates acknowledge those linked subjects to be the issues of most concern to city voters this year.

These issues do not, on the face of things, favor David Dinkins. Not only is he seen as "a nice guy" by a public that tends to think nice guys can't catch crooks; but he's black, and many voters view crime as a product of blacks (not always realizing that the black community also suffers the most from crime).

Dinkins is running against a muscle-flexing mayor, moreover, who speaks out for the death penalty and other tough-sounding responses. So he's right; his "message on crime" and how effectively he gets it to the voters are crucial to his prospects.

The message itself is not hard to summarize:

He says he'd double the number of police on foot patrol, put "a cop on every subway train every night," finance "citizen crime prevention groups" in every borough, enforce local gun control and work for stronger national gun control, demand life in prison without parole for those who commit "the most heinous crimes," provide prison treatment programs for addicts ("83 percent of those arrested are drug users") and random drug testing for parolees and probationers, with jail for those found using.

He'd also back a stronger law on the seizure of drug dealers' assets.

The most ringing pledge in Dinkins's message is that if he's elected, "Every crime must be punished. If you are convicted of a crime — any crime — you will be punished. I don't care if it's your first offense. No excuses, no apologies."

This is neither a soft nor a particularly innovative "message" on crime, and the most serious questions probably are how to pay for it, and how a mayor can make sure every crime is punished.

Fundamentally a statement of attitude, the Dinkins message is about as "hard-nosed" as that of any other candidate; but Dinkins's problem may be that what he says will not matter all that much to the voters.

Instead, some may judge him weak because he speaks softly and rarely pounds the table; some may think him soft because he is not as loud and vitriolic as Ed Koch; and some whites may fear he'll be ineffective against crime because they think a black mayor won't deal strongly enough with black criminals.

That's David Dinkins's dilemma. Lots of voters would prefer such a nice guy to Ed Koch; Dinkins leads him in the teamsters' poll by 41 to 33.

But on Sept. 12, in the privacy of the polling booth, will those voters ask themselves if such a nice guy, despite his long experience, can cope with crime, drugs and all the other challenges of City Hall?

My article of Aug. 14 detailed questions about the guilt of Ronald Monroe, who was to be executed for murder in Louisiana on Aug. 30. To the many who wrote in response, I am glad to report that Gov. Buddy Roemer has commuted Ronald Monroe's sentence to life imprisonment without parole.

MAKING THE GRADE

Three oil-related courses slated in Iraan

From Staff Reports

Midland College is offering three petroleum-related courses at Iraan, beginning Sept. 5. The courses carry full college credit.

Classes are Geology 1402, Historical Geology; Petroleum Technology 2300, Well Completion Methods; and Petroleum Technology 2306, Formation Evaluation.

The geology class is designed to help students become familiar with the geologic history of the earth. While this is a foundation course for geology majors, it also may be used as an elective science course to fulfill many degree requirements.

Petroleum Technology 2300 helps students acquire knowledge and skills in methods related to initial completion and recompletion of oil and gas wells. This includes casing design, open hole completion, perforating, tubing design, packers, bridgeplugs, acidizing, and fracturing. The course covers single and multiple completions, plus remedial methods.

The Formation Evaluation course assists students in developing skills in the various methods of obtaining and analyzing data from producing formations. Well logging methods and the basics of core analysis are included in the curriculum.

Registration is scheduled for 7 p.m. Tuesday, Sept. 5, at the Iraan High School Science Building. Persons interested may contact Evans Turpin in Iraan, 639-2361, or Dr. Deana Lusk, Midland College Dean of Community Services, 685-4515.

Jozette B. Brooks, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Riley O. Brooks Jr. of Midland, received a Master of Business Administration degree in management from California State University Northridge, where she was also named to the Deans List, in spring graduation ceremonies.

Brooks

Miss Brooks, a graduate of Lee High School where she participated in the honors program, Student Council and served as president of the Vocational Office Education organization, is currently employed as the Western Operations Controller for Peerless Pumps Co. in Los Angeles.

Midland LULAC Council #4386 has selected Jorge Chavez, Maria Galindo, Mark Herrera, Maria Teresa Jacquez, Norma Madrid, Lori Orosco, Debbie Salgado, Belinda Sanchez, and Arnulfo Zamora Jr., as their 1989-90 scholarship recipients.

Galindo

Miss Galindo, daughter of Rose Galindo and the late Gasper Galindo is presently a sophomore attending the University of Houston where she is a member of the Student Association and a volunteer for the S.H.A.P.E. Center helping inner-city school children. She is also a member of the Catholic Newman Association.

Jacquez

Miss Jacquez, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Jacquez, graduated from Midland High School this past June. While at Midland High, she was a member of the Computer Club, Business Professionals of America, the French Club, Future Home Makers of America, and the National Honor Society. she plans to attend the University of Texas at El Paso this fall and major in computer science.

Zamora

Zamora is the son of Arnulfo and Guadalupe Zamora. He will attend Midland College this fall and plans to transfer to the University of Texas at Austin to major in international business and computer information systems.

Chavez, son of Cecilia Miranda and Charles Cummings, will be a sophomore at the School of Foreign Service at Georgetown University in Washington, D.C. where he is majoring in international relations. He is also a member of Delta Phi Epsilon, served on the Freshman Class Committee, and worked as Kurweil Editor of Spanish text.

Herrera, son of Israel and Mary Herrera, will be sophomore at Texas A&M University this fall. He was named to the Dean's list for the spring semester and plans to work toward a degree in genetics.

Miss Madrid is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. David Madrid and will be a junior at Texas Tech University this fall.

Ms. Orosco, an instructional aide with the Midland Independent School District, will be returning to Midland College to pursue a degree in bilingual education and special education.

Miss Salgado, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Damas Salgado, is currently a senior marketing major at Texas Tech University. She is a member of the Tech Marketing Association, Alpha Kappa Psi Business Fraternity and was named to the Dean's list this past spring semester.

Ms. Sanchez received her L.V.N. in Fort Stockton in 1979, and attended Midland College during the fall and spring of 1987. She is presently enrolled at Howard College in Big Spring where she plans to receive her associate degree in nursing. She has four children, two grandchildren and is presently employed at Midland Memorial Hospital.

LULAC Council #4386 would like to extend a very special thanks to Mobil for their generous support toward their scholarship fund.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

Faculty to gather, prepare for beginning of fall semester

By H.A. TUCK

All the faculty report for work tomorrow, marking the start of the fall semester so far as the college is concerned. A busy week begins with the traditional President's Breakfast in the Student Center at 8:30 a.m., followed by a general faculty meeting the remainder of the day. The remainder of the week is scheduled for student testing, registration, committee meetings, and preparation for the first day of classes.

Any of you who haven't registered, but want to take credit courses this fall, need to pay special attention to this paragraph. First time students, who have never attended any college, need to report Tuesday at 8 a.m. to the Allison Fine Arts Building for advisement, counseling, and placement testing. This will take until about 3 or 3:30 p.m. All persons who are registered should come to the Pysical Education Building on Wednesday. Those with time permits report for registration according to the permit time. Those who didn't obtain time permits last week should go to the P.E. Building between 4 p.m. and 7:30 p.m. for processing.

• • •

The college will be closed on Monday, Sept. 4, for Labor Day. Classes begin on Tuesday, Sept. 5. Late registration also begins on Sept. 5.

This year, however, late registration is scheduled for a much shorter period than in past years. Monday, Sept. 11, will be the last day for full-time students to register and Thursday, Sept. 14, is the final day for part-time students to enroll.

If you aren't sure about any of this, please call 685-4501 for detailed information. That number also can provide you with information about classes which still have openings and those which are closed.

• • •

A special workshop for part-time faculty members is planned on Thursday from 7-9 p.m. The first hour is for general information and the second hour for instructional division meetings.

Midland College is fortunate to have a great pool of well-educated, qualified, and interested people with diverse backgrounds who will teach classes each semester. They contribute greatly to the success of MC.

Due to the great response when the classes were initiated last spring, College Classics is being offered again this fall. College Classics is a series of classes which are taught by volunteers for four-week periods especially for persons 55 years of age.

This fall's College Classics sessions are Sept. 25-Oct. 20 and Nov. 23-Nov. 17. Most of the classes are taught for an hour or two each week.

And here's the best part: those eligible pay a single $25 fee to attend one or as many classes as they can fit into their schedule.

Registration for College Classics will be accepted starting Tuesday, Sept. 5.

If you wish to take some of the Continuing Education classes starting the week of Sept 5, you'd better get registered for them this week. Many of the classes are getting close to their limits by now. In fact, some sections already have closed.

Just in the first week this fall, starting the week of Sept. 5, you can take such classes as: Basic Drawing, Bookkeeping, Calculating Machines (two sections), Driver Education, Investments, Beginning Lotus 1-2-3 (three sections), Introduction to Machine Shop/Lathe, Oil and Gas Law I, Stop Smoking Clinic, Word Processing, 50-Plus Coed Aerobics, Beginning Typing (five sections) or Intermediate Typing (two sections), CPA Review: Auditing, Introduction to Computer Usage in Business, or Concrete Masonry.

In order to register, you can visit the Continuing Education Office in the Administration Building. Hours are 8 a.m.-5 p.m. this week.

Course bulletins are available at the office or you can obtain one at the Midland County Library, or from Midland banks. Information also is available by calling 685-4518.

H.A. Tuck is public relations director at Midland College.

EDUCATION IN BRIEF

Starting September 4, Greenwood Independent School District will serve breakfast from 7:40 to 8 a.m. every morning in each campus cafeteria.

For elementary students, breakfast tickets can be purchased September 1 from the classroom teacher. Thereafter, tickets need to be purchased every Thursday. Breakfast tickets will be sold only in five and 10 day periods.

No charging will be allowed on breakfast, lunch or milk unless it is an emergency.

Free and reduced applications, with verification, are due in the campus principals office before September 22. All free and reduced students who were eligible in May will be eligible until September 22.

Breakfast prices for the 1989-90 school year will be .60 for all students, .30 for all approved reduced students, .80 for all faculty; lunch prices will be $1 for grades K-4, $1.25 for grades 5-12, $1.75 for faculty and guest, .40 for approved reduced students, .25 for extra milk.

Gen. Cavazos to address teachers

From Staff Reports

Last year, U.S. Secretary of Education Lauro Cavazos spoke to Midland Inedependent School District teachers at the opening meeting of the 1988-89 school year.

Cavazos

This year, Secretary Cavazos' brother, Gen. Richard E. Cavazos will speak at the convocation for the 1989-90 school year.

Gen. Cavazos' address is scheduled for Monday at 8 a.m. in the Lee High School Auditorium.

Convocation is an annual event welcoming teachers back to work and providing the teaching staff with important information.

This year's speaker retired from active service in 1984 and now lives in Austin. Prior to his retirement, he oversaw the U.S. Army's largest command, Fort McPherson, Ga.

He has twice been awarded the Distinguished Service Cross, the nation's second highest combat decoration. Cavazos has also been recipient of two silver stars and 20 other combat awards.

A particular note about Cavazos' military service: he was the first Hispanic awarded four stars in any branch of the U.S. Armed Forces.

Cavazos graduated in 1951 from Texas Tech University with a degree in petroleum geology and a commission earned through the school's JROTC program.

Council creates street commission

By LYN MILLER

On Sept. 23, 1986, an ordinance was adopted by the Midland City Council creating a new city commission — the street commission.

The commission, composed of 14 members, is advisory in nature and is charged with duties and responsibilities as follows:

- To advise the City Council regarding the acquisition of additional right-of-way for the construction of streets.
- To advise and suggest the manner and means of cooperation and coordination between the city and other governmental agencies that operate and maintain a street and highway system.
- To advise the City Council regarding the placement and maintenance of traffic control signs.
- To advise the City Council in connection with the placement, maintenance and synchronization of traffic control signals.
- To advise the City Council regarding the desgination of certain streets and alleys as one-way streets and alleys.
- To advise the City Council as to how to improve the movement of traffic in the city.
- To advise the City Council regarding needed street maintenance and construction projects, and to review and advise the City Council conserning the city's Engineering and Desgin Specifications for street construction and maintenance.
- To advise the City Council in applying for grants which may be deemed necessary in order to effectuate the above purposes.

Members are appointed by the City Council and serve three-year terms with staggered expiration dates for the terms of office, with no member eligible to serve more than six consecutive years.

Currently, the chairman is Mike Farris, vice chairman is Richard Mendenhall and the secretary is Pat Blackwell.

The commission is divided into two sub-committees — traffic and design and construction. The traffic subcommittee considers matters regarding how to improve traffic flow within thek city, while the design and construction sub-committee considers matters regarding needed street maintenance and construction projects.

The commission, after receiving advice from the subcommittees as to possible solutions to problems or pertinent changes, makes recommendations through the Department of Engineering and Transportation to the City Council.

Subjects recently considered by the commission have related to street paving, the flood study, traffic signal locations, the changing of school zones, restrictions on parking on certain streets, requests for stop signs, the repair of potholes, drainage, sidewalks, curbs and gutters and the use of Community Development Funds in target areas of the city.

Regular meetings of the Street Commission are held on the first Monday of the month at 4:30 p.m. in the conference room at City Hall, 300 N. Loraine.

Anyone interested in a possible appointment to the commission may obtain an application form from the city secretary's office at City Hall.

Lyn Miller, an employee at City Hall, coordinates the information for this column.

Fuller named 'Man of Valor'

From Staff Reports

James Fuller, president of the Midland Independent School District board of trustees, has been named recipient of the "Man of Valor" award from the Business Opportunity Symposium Series.

Only two Texans were selected for this annual award. The second honoree is Hal Neal of Houston.

Barbara Burton, conference director, explained that each major Texas city has a "community watchman" that is charged with submitting a nominee for the award. Nominees must demonstrate service and commitment to community improvement.

Fuller was presented the "Man of Valor" award during a luncheon ceremony on Saturday at Austin's Stouffer Hotel.

Young Japanese prince reveals marriage plans

TOKYO (AP) — Prince Aya, Emperor Akihito's second son, has received his parents' approval to wed a graduate student he has been seeing for four years, Japanese news media reported Saturday.

Though palace and government officials avoided official comment, nearly all major newspapers and television networks said Prince Aya, 23, second in line to the Chrysanthemum Throne, would wed Kiko Kawashima, 22.

Miss Kawashima is a graduate psychology student at Tokyo's Gakushuin University, where she met the prince.

She and her parents visited the royal Akasaka Palace in central Tokyo on Friday night, sparking speculation that an engagement announcement is imminent.

Kyodo News Service said Shoichi Fujimori, the chief palace official, acknowledged that Emperor Akihito instructed him Saturday morning to begin official preparations for the engagement.

The 10-member Imperial Council, headed by Prime Minister Toshiki Kaifu, must approve the engagement and is expected to discuss the matter after Kaifu returns Sept. 10 from an official visit to the United States, Canada and Mexico.

No date has been set for the wedding, but it is not expected before January, when the official mourning period ends for the Akihito's father, Emperor Hirohito. He died of cancer Jan. 7.

Sheen

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Actor Martin Sheen took his crusade to help the homeless to Hollywood's Walk of Fame while accepting a star in his honor there.

"The sidewalks of Hollywood are known all over the world as the Walk of Fame, but many sidewalks in America could be known a the 'Walk of Shame' because of the 4 million homeless people residing on them full time," Sheen said Friday.

In his role as honorary mayor of Malibu, the 49-year-old Sheen recently declared the wealthy beach community a sanctuary for the homeless.

The actor, flanked by his wife, Janet, and sons Emilio Estevez and Charlie Sheen, asked the crowd to pray with him for 400,000 homeless children.

Sheen made his New York stage debut in 1959 in "The Connection" and his movies include "Apocalypse Now," and "Wall Street." He was the 1,897th recipient of the Hollywood star.

CINCINNATI (AP) — Sportscaster Red Barber, who gave the play-by-play for the first televised major league baseball game 50 years ago Saturday, says "nobody knew how far television would go" then.

Two cameras captured the first game of a double-header between the Cincinnati Reds and the Brooklyn Dodgers, broadcast by NBC station W2BX from Ebbets Field in New York.

"I was glad to do it," Barber, now a weekly sports commentator for National Public Radio, said by telephone from his Florida home. "Everybody knew this was something new and exciting. But of course nobody knew how far television would go."

The Reds won the first game 5-2. The Dodgers took the second game, which was not televised, 6-1.

LONDON (AP) — Singer Simon Le Bon of the pop group Duran Duran said his new baby daughter has his eyes, but an awful voice.

The 6-pound, 5-ounce girl born Friday to Le Bon's wife, Yasmin, has the mother's legs, nose and mouth, Le Bon said.

"Thank God everything went well at the birth of our little girl. We never knew nine months could take so long," he said. Yasmin Le Bon, a 24-year-old fashion model, has suffered two miscarriages.

The singer was with his wife when she gave birth at a private clinic in London.

A friend said: "It was a completely natural birth and the couple are absolutely delighted."

EDINBURGH, Scotland (AP) — Media magnate Rupert Murdoch says British television is overrated, obsessed with the past and badly in need of competition.

Murdoch, whose holdings include the Fox television network in the United States as well as newspapers and magazines in several countries, recently ventured into British television with Sky Channel, received by subscribers on satellite dishes.

In a speech Friday at the Edinburgh International Television Festival, Murdoch said America's most-watched programs are far more impressive than those in Britain.

"Much of what passes for quality on British television is really no more than a reflection of the values of the narrow elite which controls it," Murdoch said.

"But this public-service TV system has had, in my view, debilitating effects on British society, by producing TV programs which are often obsessed with class, dominated by anti-commercial attitudes and with a tendency to hark back to the past."

Murdoch's Sky Channel is competing with Britain's four television channels, two operated by the government's British Broadcasting Corp. and two by Independent Television. He said television should be subject to the same laws of supply and demand as newspapers, journals, magazines, books and feature films.

"I believe that a largely market-led television system with viewers choosing from a wide variety of channels financed in different ways will produce a better television system than today's," he said, though he did not advocate that the BBC turn to commercial support.

PTL's Heritage Church struggles to build image

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — While the PTL's deposed leader struggles in a federal courtroom, the Rev. Sam Johnson faces a different battle — rebuilding the image of the church that was left behind.

"I sometimes envy the ministries that weren't affected by the PTL mess," said Johnson, now the pastor of Heritage Church, which has moved from the 2,300-acre PTL park near here to three concrete buildings in a lower-middle-class neighborhood. "Some ministries were affected by the scandal. But we were the scandal. We were the eye of the storm."

Heritage Church was founded by Jim Bakker, whose trial on fraud and conspiracy charges begins this week in federal court. The jury was selected last week.

Richard Dortch, Bakker's top assistant from 1984 to 1987, already has pleaded guilty to four fraud and conspiracy charges and was sentenced last week to eight years in prison and a $200,000 fine.

It was Dortch who asked Johnson, then PTL's executive in charge of missions, for a $10,000 loan to handle a "kook" who was threatening the ministry.

The "kook" turned out to be Jessica Hahn, whose tryst with Bakker in 1980 eventually led to the television evangelist's resignation from PTL in March 1987. Dortch, investigations showed, arranged a payoff of $265,000 in ministry funds to buy her silence.

The $10,000 loan landed Johnson a seat before the federal grand jury that investigated PTL for 16 months before indicting Bakker, Dortch and James and David Taggart — two former Bakker assistants who have been convicted of tax evasion and face up to 25 years in prison and $1 million in fines each in sentencing scheduled Sept. 8.

Johnson, who left PTL in disgust one month after Bakker resigned, was not indicted. He later returned to take over Heritage Church.

The church, Johnson said last week, has been badly battered by the PTL fall.

The television ministry is struggling to carry on nightly broadcasts. Last Wednesday, the church rented an extra hour of satellite time to appeal for funds and said the television shows may be off the air soon in New York, Los Angeles and other major markets.

As for the numbers attending services in person, Johnson avoids comparison figures, but the church's former sanctuary was about three times the size of the one the congregation has now. Johnson, instead, compares the church to Samson of the Bible.

"His eyes were poked out, his hair had been cut off, he had lost his beauty," Johnson said of the Old Testament character. "But his hair grew back and the Spirit returned to him. And the last verse of that story is important — it says he killed more Philistines in that final day than his entire life before.

"He came back from the lowest point of his life to a great victory," said Johnson, a Bible school classmate of Bakker's.

Prosecutors contend that Bakker and other PTL executives diverted $4 million in donations to the ministry to support fancy homes, designer clothing and lavish travel.

Evangelicals should 'seize the moment'

RELIGION

By ROBERT Di VEROLI
Copley News Service

The decline of mainline liberal Protestantism gives evangelicals an opportunity to become the primary culture-shaping religious force in U.S. society, says Billy Melvin, executive director of the National Association of Evangelicals.

"Historically, it was the mainline churches that took the lead, but now they have lost that position and there's a vacuum there," Melvin said this week. "At this point, we as evangelicals have not seized that moment. This is a process in flux and these things take time, but there is a vacuum there and somebody's going to fill it."

Melvin said he viewed "with deep regret" the mainline decline. He said he wished that somehow "these churches would know again the greatness they once knew."

But those churches and their principal ecumenical agency, the National Council of Churches, created the predicament in which they find themselves, he said, by emphasizing politics at the expense of preaching the Christian gospel of salvation through Jesus Christ.

Memberships in and contributions to the liberal, mainline Protestant bodies have declined for decades. Such churches as the United Methodist Church, the Presbyterian Church, the Episcopal Church, the United Church of Christ and the Christian Church (Disciples of Christ) have been affected.

The diminished contributions also have caused a crisis in the National Council of Churches, which is undergoing a restructuring and streamlining.

Internal struggles within the council recently led to the resignation, amid considerable acrimony, of its embattled general secretary, the Rev. Arie Brouwer.

The church council's attempts to broaden its financial base by attracting Roman Catholics and evangelicals as members have so far failed to generate much interest.

Despite its predicament, Melvin said, the NCC remains preoccupied with structure and fund raising as a solution to its problems, rather than facing what he calls the root causes of its difficulties: the abandonment of its spiritual mission in favor of a political agenda to which many church members do not subscribe.

A review of NCC resolutions in the past 10 years found that none dealt with such spiritual issues as evangelism, prayer and discipleship. On the other hand, many dealt with the Panama Canal, El Salvador, Nicaragua, South Africa, Reagan administration policies and other secular issues.

"It is clear that the NCC is more a political than a religious organization, and that's part of the reason for its decline," Melvin said.

Melvin said he is not concerned that evangelicals tend to support a conservative political and social agenda, as long as they do it as individuals and not as churches.

"You won't find any resolutions on our books or that of our member churches like the ones passed by the NCC or mainline denominations on a whole variety of political issues."

The National Association of Evangelicals did not, for example, take stands on aid to the Contras, the Grenada invasion, the bombing raid on Libya or other issues on which the NCC and mainline denominations have spoken out, he said.

Lutherans take stand on sexual harassment

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

ROSEMONT, Ill. (AP) — The Evangelical Lutheran Church in America lashed out Saturday at widespread sexual harassment of women and called on congregations to make sure their churches are free of such mistreatment.

At one point at the church's governing assembly, women who had experienced harassment were asked to stand, and about 40 of aproximately 300 women among 1,000 delegates did so.

The Rev. Judith Gerlitz of New York City said that while sexual harassment and abuse has spread in the country, "the church has done little about it."

Some denominations have done surveys finding the problem extensive even among church personnel and have initiated countermeasures. The assembly here added its stern voice on the matter.

The church "will not tolerate any forms of sexual abuse or harassment by any of its personnel," the assembly declared, and pledged to make "our church a safe place for all persons" by moving firmly against such abuses.

The 5.3-million-member denomination called for looking into the problem at various church levels and creation of procedures for victims to report incidents and also to provide "healing for victims."

"Sexual violence of many kinds is widespread in our society," including "sexual harassment on the job, rape and sexual assault, incest and child abuse," the resolution said.

It estimated two-fifths of working women have been sexually harassed and a third of children sexually abused before 18.

Such abuses "betray God's creation, inflict grievous suffering ... and rend the fabric of the whole community of the people of God," the church said.

Another action saluted the 20th anniversary of the start of ordination of women in the three Lutheran branches merged into the present denomination. It has about 1,000 ordained women among 11,000 clergy.

Congregations that "have not experienced the preaching, teaching or pastoral care of women" were encouraged to open doors to them.

Why A Business As Big As Ours Runs A Yellow Page Ad As Small As This.

Actual Size

When people start reading Yellow Pages every evening over dinner, we'll start placing big ads in it. Until then, the Yellow Pages is nothing more than a directory of names, phone numbers and addresses that the average person uses infrequently at best. Which is the reason we run our ads in the newspaper. And we suggest you do the same.

Your Yellow Pages salesperson can't tell you how many people are likely to see your ad every week in this directory. But we can tell you that daily 45,855 people can see it in the Reporter-Telegram. And that kind of coverage can lead to some kind of sales. Especially when you use the Reporter-Telegram to tell people about your competitive pricing, announce a new location or service, illustrate your clear advantage over the competition. All the things you're not allowed to do in the Yellow Pages.

Of course, there's one more thing you can't do in the Yellow Pages. You can't be flexible, you're stuck for a year. So what do you do when you need to respond to the market? Or promote a special sale? Or build your image? You advertise in the newspaper.

So call us for a no-obligation assessment of your opportunities in the Reporter-Telegram. Our number is in your Yellow Pages where it's always been. But remember, what just sold you on us, was the newspaper.

Where's the beef? Ask California firms

By NELSON ANTOSH
Hearst News Service

South Korea came to the United States' No. 1 cattle state — Texas — to buy beef this week, but the Asian country ended up signing contracts totaling $2.58 million with two California firms.

But for Texas, it isn't as embarrassing as it seems, because some of that California beef — maybe a lot of it — will come from Texas.

Contracts for 1.5 million pounds of beef were awarded this week to Jiffy International of Buena Park, Calif., and the All American Corp. of Los Angeles.

Ten companies made bids, eight from the West Coast, one from New York and one from Seattle. No Texas companies made bids.

Texas companies failed to bid because the bidding specifications didn't arrive in time for the firms to register with the South Korean government, said Anne Anderson of the Texas Beef Industry Council.

"This doesn't mean that Texas packers weren't represented. Each bidder had a contract with a packer, but we don't know who they were. One of them (the successful bidders) assured us that there would be some Texas beef involved," said Anderson.

The Korean beef importers, known formally as the Livestock Products Marketing Organization, structured their buying mission to create good will. They are making purchases of the same size, 700 metric tons each, in each of this nation's largest beef states.

Purchases will made next in Lincoln, Neb., and then in Wichita, Kan., said Anderson. The 2,100 metric tons (2,204 pounds per ton) will make the Republic of Korea a major purchaser of U.S. beef.

Japan was the largest buyer of American beef in 1988, taking 163,093 metric tons with a value of $840.7 million. Canada was second with $79.5 million, followed by Mexico with $39.8 million and Korea with $25.6 million.

The Denver-based Meat Export Federation says that all cattlemen benefit from exports, estimating that in 1988 these shipments added 2.8 cents per pound to the value of fed cattle, 4.5 cents per pound to feeder cattle, and 6.5 cents per pound to calves.

Vermont debates hormone use in dairy cows

By KEITH SCHNEIDER
New York Times News Service

MONTPELIER, Vt. — Along Center Road three miles out of Vermont's capital, Richard Atkinson's dairy farm unfolds across a hill, where streams rush cold and clear and gnarled sugar maples are just starting to turn the colors of autumn.

Twice a day, the tall farmer leads his 40 Jersey cows down the hill to be milked in a bright yellow barn. Spider webs shine silver in the corners of open windows. The breeze smells of manure and damp earth.

Like most of Vermont's 2,400 dairy farmers, Atkinson has a serene but highly productive operation. Milking cows is a $318 million-a-year business, by far the state's largest farm industry.

Advances in breeding, nutrition, husbandry and equipment have assured an ample supply of milk at reasonable prices. Meanwhile, the dairy cow has become a quaint symbol of Vermont's sumptuous countryside.

But as Vermont farmers look at the next wave of agricultural technology, a debate has erupted over who wins and loses with scientific progress.

The focus is a drug produced by genetically engineered bacteria that increases milk production and is being tested in more than 100 herds across the country, including one at the University of Vermont in Burlington.

When the growth hormone, genetically engineered bovine somatotropin, is injected into cows, milk production increases by 10 to 25 percent almost overnight.

This news struck with the fury of a January blizzard. Some Vermont farmers said they would welcome biotechnology's help, but most saw only a threat to their livelihoods and their state's cherished industry.

Ten years ago, when cows produced 25 percent less milk on average than they do today, Vermont's bottomlands and rocky pastures supported 1,300 more dairy farms. And still there are costly and chronic surpluses. The last thing that many farmers wanted was a sudden 25 percent increase in supply.

They were also concerned about how consumers would react to a genetically engineered hormone in milk, despite assurance from the Federal Food and Drug Administration that it was harmless.

As the government's critics have noted, such promises have been made for pesticides, synthetic hormones, chemical additives and other substances later found to be dangerous.

"The debate over this hormone is hard to pass off as just another squabble by poor farmers afraid of progress," Atkinson said.

Following the lead of dairy farmers in the Midwest, those in Vermont mobilized. The State Legislature passed a resolution this year calling for a moratorium on the use of the drug until its effect on dairy farming and milk consumption was studied by Congress.

Sen. Patrick J. Leahy, chairman of the Senate Agriculture Committee, has also requested studies from the Department of Agriculture and the Office of Technology Assessment.

In April, the 400-member Cabot Farmers' Cooperative Creamery unanimously adopted a resolution urging the industry not to use the drug until further study.

In June, the state's largest dairy cooperative, in St. Albans, stopped buying milk produced by the University of Vermont herd treated with the drug.

And last week, Ben & Jerry's Homemade Inc., makers of ice cream, announced that millions of pints shipped from its plant in Waterbury, Vt., would bear labels urging a halt to the drug's development to "save family farms."

The move came as five large national supermarket companies said that dairy products with their stores' labels would not contain milk from cows treated with genetically engineered bovine somatotropin.

Monsanto, one of four manufacturers, said the actions would not alter the drug's development. Food and Drug Administration approval could come next year.

"The stakes are very high, for agriculture and for agricultural biotechnology companies that invest in the technology," Walter P. Hobgood, Monsanto's director of Animal Nutrition and Health, said in an interview in Waterbury. "I will say there are an awful lot of skeptical questions about bovine somatotropin. I will not say it's in trouble."

Indeed, the campaign against the drug has led to protests from some farmers. Harold W. Giard of Bridport, Vt., said the drug might help him produce as much from 85 cows as his milking herd of 113 now supplies.

That would save hours every day in milking and reduce the acreage needed for forage, he said, thus cutting costs for land rental, fuel, equipment and hired help.

Powerful Angels cut lead in half

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Sports Editor

The Midland Angels hit three home runs in the fifth inning to lead the way in a 12-4 victory over the San Antonio Missions at Angel Stadium Saturday night, and in the process, climbed to within ½-game of the Texas League West Division lead.

Wichita, the West leader, was idle Saturday after a rainout in El Paso, but the Wranglers and Diablos will meet in a 3 p.m. MST doubleheader today while Midland and San Antonio tangle again in a 6 p.m. game at Angel Stadium.

The race for the second half title couldn't be much closer as El Paso is also in the hunt, just two games out. Wichita won the first half title and would like to forget any division playoff by winning the second half title outright.

Midland's resounding victory could place a little pressure on the Wranglers, but the Angels don't put much stock in that.

"We know what we have to do and Wichita knows what it has to do," said Angel Mark Howie, who hit a two-run homer in the fifth inning to start a seven-run barrage against Mission starter Chris Nichting. "Wichita knows they are in at least a playoff and they would like to get the bye. We just have to keep winning and hope something good happens in El Paso."

Angel catcher Jamie Nelson, who didn't play in Saturday's game, said, "It's out of our hands as far as Wichita is concerned. We have to win and the rest is up to them."

Howie's two-run blast in the seventh was his fourth homer of the year, but his bat is hotter than a smoking pistol. He has hit safely in 12 consecutive games and in 15 of his last 16 outings. He gave three reasons for his current streak.

"I'm seeing the ball well. I've been patient at the plate. And I've been getting some good pitches to hit," said Howie.

Newly acquired Andy Hall hit a three-run homer later in the fifth, his first for Midland, and Chris Graves hit a two-run shot to end the carnage.

Even though Hall's blast was a big one, pitcher David Graybill (4-4), praised him for the game he called behind the plate.

"Andy Hall knows how to set up hitters as well as anyone I've ever worked with," said Graybill, who gave up 10 hits and often found himself in trouble with runners on base. "Usually, when you have a big lead, you go with the fastball and hope you get people out, but Hall kept calling for the changeup."

Coaches continue to evaluate talent

By BILL PRICE
Sports Writer

With five days of fall camp out of the way and players strapping on full pads for the first time, football coaches at both Midland high schools were still unable to completely evaluate their teams' statuses at week's end.

"There is only so much you can do in shorts, but there are things that need to be done," said Earl Miller, Midland Lee head coach. "You can throw and catch the football, work on offensive execution and defensive alignment, get your timing down and get people in the right spots."

But with the Rebels in pads Friday, Miller said "we'll go back to the basic fundamentals with the pads — blocking and tackling. We will be able to get serious with our defensive team once we get in full swing with the pads."

Midland High head coach Davis Corley, who was the Bulldog defensive coordinator for five years before taking the reins this season, also said his defense would benefit most from contact drills.

"We have been pleased with the effort from our players so far, but the workouts will be a lot better now," Corley said. "We will be able to do so much more, especially on defense, and be able to see who likes contact. We can assess players better when they are in pads than when they're in shorts.

"There haven't been any big surprises so far. Right now we are just trying to keep things pretty basic so we can find out if we have the kids in the right positions."

Corley added that the time in pads will benefit his plans for making changes in the Bulldog offense.

"The people in the stands may not be able to tell much of a difference from last year's offense," he said "But we have changed the offense quite a bit and we're using a lot of new terminology.

"What we are trying to do is make the offensive scheme fit our personnel. We want to have all of our defense and our base offense in by the time we scrimmage Monahans."

Notes: Lee will scrimmage El Paso Jefferson at 2 p.m. Sept. 1 in Van Horn while Midland High travels to Monahans the same day for a 7 p.m. scrimmage. The MHS junior varsity takes the field at 5 p.m.

Lee will hold it's annual "Meet the Rebels Night" at 7:30 p.m. Monday at the Lee Youth Center. Tickets for the chili dog feed are $4 at the door and $3.50 in advance.

The MHS "Meet the Bulldogs Night" is set to start at 7 p.m. Tuesday at Memorial Stadium. Tickets for the hot dog supper may be purchased at the door.

Both teams open the regular season Sept. 8, when MHS travels to Lubbock to play Lubbock Monterey at 7:30 p.m. and Lee hosts Killeen at 8 p.m in Memorial Stadium.

Michigan gridders nab top ranking

Associated Press

Michigan's football team is picking up where Michigan's basketball team left off — No. 1 in the country.

Five months after winning the NCAA basketball championship, the Wolverines are the preseason pick as the nation's top college football team in The Associated Press' Top 25 poll.

Michigan received 23 first-place votes and 1,439 points to edge defending national champion Notre Dame. The Fighting Irish, who visit Ann Arbor on Sept. 16, were ranked No. 1 on 20 ballots and received 1,378 points.

The only other teams receiving first-place votes were Nebraska (10), Miami (4), Southern California (1) and Florida State (2).

Nebraska is ranked third, followed by Miami, Southern Cal, Florida State, Louisiana State, Auburn, UCLA and Arkansas.

Penn State, coming off its first losing season in 50 years, is ranked 11th. Next are Clemson, Syracuse, Colorado, Oklahoma, Alabama, West Virginia, Arizona, Brigham Young, Pittsburgh, Houston, Illinois, Iowa, North Carolina State and Ohio State.

The AP is expanding its rankings from 20 to 25 teams this season. Sixty sports writers and sportscasters vote in the weekly poll, which awards 25 points for first place, 24 for second and so on.

College Football

Although most of Michigan's starters return from last year's 9-2-1 Rose Bowl champion team, Coach Bo Schembechler is downplaying talk of a national title.

"I don't care about all that," he said. "We're going to try to have a year like last year. We had a lot of heartaches, but we had a lot of fun, too."

Asked if the preseason ranking puts more pressure on his team, Schembechler said: "Being No. 1 doesn't bother me. The writers probably like us or they wouldn't have voted that way. Of course, we may or may not be that good."

Two of Michigan's top three quarterbacks were recently declared ineligible, but the Wolverines still have senior Michael Taylor, who started the first nine games last season before breaking his collarbone.

This is the second time Michigan has been ranked No. 1 in the AP preseason poll, which started in 1950. The Wolverines also were the top pick in 1981, but they lost their opener to Wisconsin, went 9-3 and finished 12th in the final rankings.

The only time Michigan finished first in the final AP poll was 1948. Since Schembechler became coach in 1969, the Wolverines' best final ranking was No. 2 in 1985.

Notre Dame, which has won eight national championships, opens its season Thursday night against Virginia in the Kickoff Classic. The Fighting Irish have lost several key players because of injuries, academics and disciplinary problems, but plenty of talent returns from last year's undefeated team.

Nebraska has never won a national championship under Tom Osborne, but the Cornhuskers lead the nation with 27 consecutive winning seasons, 20 straight bowl appearances and 20 seasons in a row with at least nine wins. Last season, Nebraska was 11-2 and finished 10th in the final poll.

Miami, which has won two national championships in the 1980s, finished second last season to Notre Dame, which handed the Hurricanes their only loss in 12 games. The team must adjust to a new coach and a new quarterback, but little dropoff is expected.

This year's preseason Top 25 includes 16 teams from last season's final Top Twenty. The newcomers are Penn State, Colorado, Arizona, Brigham Young, Pittsburgh, Illinois, Iowa, North Carolina State and Ohio State.

A total of 54 teams received votes.

Battles takes step into retirement

The Midland Reporter-Telegram lost the dean of West Texas Sports Editors this weekend when Ted Battles took his first step into retirement.

Williamson

Battles may even have been the dean of Texas Sports Editors. I'm not aware of any other sports editor at present who has held that title for more than 36 years, the span of time Battles covered games people play in Midland.

Few sports editors over those years developed the loyal following that Battles possessed. He never forgot that he was writing about people. He had a unique way of seeing things in others that the rest of us didn't.

When Battles came to Midland in 1953, he told his wife Lisa that he would stay only a couple of years. He had left Lisa in Oklahoma when he made the move and was afraid to tell her there were no trees in Midland.

Now retirement has come with Ted and Lisa planning to stay in Midland. After all, Ted says, "Lisa would never let me move on after she got here."

So, Midland isn't losing Ted and Lisa. In fact, the two high schools, Midland College and the Midland Angels have tried to make his decision to stay in Midland as attractive as possible.

The Midland Independent School District has given Ted a lifetime pass to all MISD athletic events, a practice usually reserved for school board members. Midland College has also given Ted a lifetime pass to all Chaparral events and the Angels have followed with a lifetime pass to all Texas League games.

In fact, Bill Davidson, general manager of the Midland Angels, says that Ted's lifetime pass will be the first the Texas League has ever issued to an individual in more than 100 years the league has been swinging bats.

"I would have been glad to give Ted a lifetime pass to Angel games," notes Davidson, "but I thought it might mean a little more if we made it for all Texas League games.

"I called Texas League president Carl Sawatski about it and he told me that it had never been done. But then he said it was time we did something like that and to make Ted the first one to receive the lifetime pass."

It seems fitting that these gifts be bestowed on Ted. After all, he spent the majority of his life covering Midland athletics.

Ted missed professional baseball since the time Midland lost the old Class D Braves. He loved baseball and was thrilled when Midland got the Texas League Cubs in 1972.

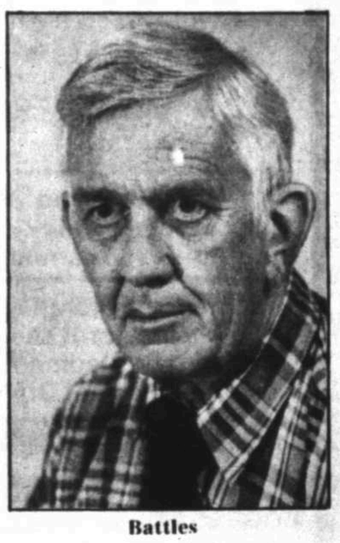

He remembers the days when Midland Lee used to throw the football and he always regretted not seeing Midland High in the state football playoffs. He had two sons, Byron and Brandon, and one went to Lee and the other to Midland High. He never wanted to offend anyone. It would be hard to accuse him of favoritism.

So, you might spend some time remembering with Ted in the coming months. I know I'll be visiting with him from time to time because it's like losing Midland's athletic library.

But with the lifetime passes, Ted might not have much time for talk, unless you see him at a game. And then there are those planned skiing trips and extended vacations with Lisa.

Ted was never one to sit still. He took up skiing after he was 50 years old. He's got some well deserved time coming to him.

Williamson succeeds Battles after 36 years

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant City Editor

Just three months short of his 36th anniversary at the Midland Reporter-Telegram, Sports Editor Ted Battles has called it quits.

Dean of West Texas sports editors, the 65-year-old Battles officially began his retirement Saturday.

Seventeen-year Reporter-Telegram veteran and former assistant Terry Williamson has been named sports editor succeeding Battles, Jim Servatius, editor, announced Saturday.

After a short stint in the U.S. Navy during World War II, Battles — armed with a journalism degree from the University of Vermont — first moved to Huntingdon, Pa., then to Bartlesville, Okla., before coming to the Tall City to head the sports staff in November 1953.

Battles and his wife Lisa, chose Midland as the perfect size city to raise their sons Brandon and Byron.

Without daily work duties on the agenda, the couple plan to travel, ski, cycle, golf, jog and generally stay active. Battles also plans to continue to do some writing for the newspaper.

"During the years that Ted has been with the Reporter-Telegram, heading the newspaper's sports staff has been challenging," Servatius said.

"Through the years, the oil industry has brought to Midland sports fans from around the country, and they brought their special sports interests and the loyalty to favorite teams with them. It was a big job to reflect on the newspaper's sports pages those varied and broad interests while still providing the local coverage needed. Ted met that challenge and others well, managing the department and his staff of sports writers, while providing more than his share of local and area game coverage.

"We wish him well as he begins the retirement he has earned so well," Servatius said.

During his 35-year tenure, Battles won numerous awards from the Associated Press Sports Editors and the Texas Sports Writers Association.

Broncos nip Dallas

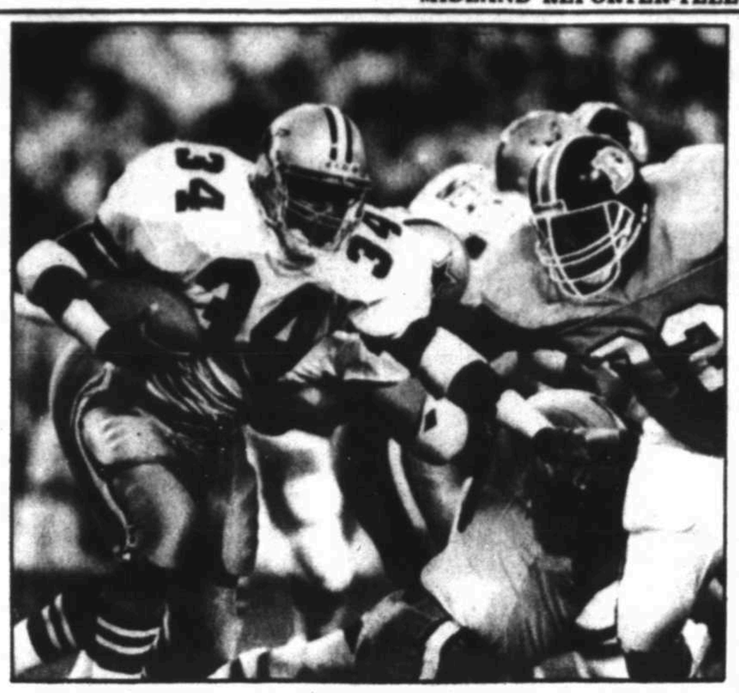

DENVER (AP) — Wymon Henderson's leaping interception set up David Treadwell's 19-yard field goal 10:19 into overtime Saturday night, lifting the Denver Broncos past Dallas 24-21 and handing the Cowboys their first setback in three NFL preseason games.

Dallas' Steve Walsh threw two second-half touchdown passes, including an 11-yarder to fullback Timmy Newsome with 4:06 left in regulation, rallying the Cowboys to a 21-14 lead.

Denver had two opportunities after that. John Elway was intercepted by Everson Walls on the first. Then, with barely a minute left, Elway marched Denver 80 yards, completing an 18-yard pass to Mark Jackson with one second left to send the game into overtime.

Denver, 2-1, got the ball first in overtime but had to punt and the Cowboys promptly marched near midfield where Henderson got in front of Kelvin Martin and made his theft of Walsh's pass at the Dallas 46.

A 24-yard pass from Elway to Jackson and a 17-yarder to Orson Mobley preceded Treadwell's field goal.

Waltrip gets fifth win

BRISTOL, Tenn. (AP) — Darrell Waltrip ran away with Saturday night's Busch 500 NASCAR stock car race, earning his 11th career victory at Bristol International Raceway.

The three-time Winston Cup champion picked up his fifth victory of the season and the 78th of his career as he led the final 205 laps of the 500-lap event.

Alan Kulwicki, who started from the pole and had a shot at a bonus of $136,800, came up one position short, finishing second, a distant 5.0 seconds behind Waltrip's Chevrolet Lumina.

The Unocal 76 Challenge money, which goes to any driver who wins both the pole and the race, will climb to $144,400 next weekend at Darlington, S.C.

The 42-year-old Waltrip will also have a shot at a $1 million bonus in next Sunday's Southern 500. He has already won the Daytona 500 and the Coca-Cola 600 and needs a victory at Darlington to win the Winston Million.

Saturday night, Waltrip, who started ninth, won $52,450 as he averaged 85.554 mph in winning on the high-banked half-mile oval for the first time since August of 1986.

NASCAR

Ricky Rudd was third, followed by Harry Gant, the last driver on the lead lap, Terry Labonte and Rusty Wallace, who came into the race with two straight victories.

Dale Earnhardt, the Winston Cup point leader, dominated the early part of the race but fell out of the lead when he pitted for a flat tire on lap 178, losing a lap to the leaders. He came charging back through the field, quickly getting right up behind second-place Geoff Bodine.

The two cars touched as they battled through turn two on lap 198, with Bodine spinning into the wall. He was able to continue, but lost three laps.

Earnhardt passed leader Wallace on the restart on lap 228 to regain the lead lap. He moved back into the lead, passing Waltrip, on lap 261. But, on lap 298, Earnhardt slid wide in turn four and tagged the wall, bending a tie rod. Six laps in the pits for repairs cost Earnhardt his shot at winning his second straight Busch 500. He wound up 15th.

Labonte was running a close second to Waltrip when he hit the fourth-turn wall and spun down the main straightaway on lap 442. The 1986 Bristol winner avoided the wall and continued, but fell to the back of the lead lap.

The race was slowed by 11 yellow flags for 70 laps, but the final 123 laps were caution free.

The 32-car field managed to run 59 laps before the first caution flag came out for a crash in treacherous turn two in which Michael Waltrip spun and hit the wall and Joe Ruttman slid into him.

Sterling Marlin had a difficult time keeping his car pointed in the right direction.

First, he spun on lap 45, with the track remaining green.

Marlin and Brett Bodine bumped and spun, bringing out a caution flag on lap 92 and Marlin spun again on lap 96 to cause the third caution. He and the younger Bodine again got together in turn two on lap 105 for the fourth caution, that one damaging Marlin's radiator and sending him behind the pit wall for several laps. The Columbia, Tenn., driver caused yet another caution with a spin on lap 314.

Giants nip Jets; Colts blank hapless Tampa Bay

Associated Press

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — George Adams scored the go-ahead touchdown from inches out on fourth down and rookie A.J. Greene returned an interception 65 yards for a touchdown to lead the Giants to a 21-17 victory over the Jets on Saturday night in the annual preseason game for bragging rights to New York.

The victory kept the Giants undefeated in three preseason games while the Jets are 1-2 after a game in which neither team played well.

Adams, a former No. 1 draft choice fighting for a job, gave the Giants a 14-10 lead with 10:57 to play by capping a seven-play, 17-yard drive set up when Michael Harper of the Jets fumbled a punt return and the Giants' Greg Baty recovered.

Greene, a ninth-round draft pick, stepped in front of Kyle Mackey's pass to Titus Dixon on the next series and went down the left sideline to score with 6:29 to play.

Mackey, a third-string quarterback who got the start because of injuries to Ken O'Brien and Pat Ryan, got the Jets within 21-17 with a 36-yard touchdown pass to Harper with 1:54 to play, beating Greene on the play. Mackey had thrown an 18-yard touchdown pass to Keith Neubert early in the third quarter to put the Jets ahead 10-7.

Mackey drove the Jets to the Giants' 12 in the closing seconds but a last-ditch pass into the end zone was almost intercepted by Reyna Thompson as the clock ran out.

Phil Simms, who played the first half and completed 11 of 16 passes for 163 yards, gave the Giants a 7-3 halftime lead with a 31-yard touchdown pass to Mark Bavaro.

The Jets' Pat Leahy kicked a 49-yard field goal early in the second quarter.

Colts 30, Buccaneers 0

INDIANAPOLIS — Eric Dickerson, his aching legs rested with a week's layoff, ran 78 yards for a touchdown on the third play of the game, starting Indianapolis over Tampa Bay.

Dickerson, who missed the previous game and a week's practice because of sore Achilles tendons, rushed for 117 yards in the first half and sat out the final two periods as the unbeaten Colts won their third straight exhibition game.

Tampa Bay, hurt by early penalties, fumbles and three interceptions off quarterback Vinny Testaverde, suffered its first loss in three games.

Eagles 38, Steelers 14

PHILADELPHIA — Randall Cunningham threw for two touchdowns as Philadelphia beat Pittsburgh.

Cunningham led Philadelphia, 3-1, to three touchdowns in two periods. Pittsburgh is 1-2.

Keith Byars caught a Cunningham pass backing into the end zone on a 35-yard play with 1:15 remaining in the third period for a 24-14 lead.

Cunningham had given the Eagles a 17-14 lead with a 12-yard pass to Keith Jackson with 35 seconds left in the first half, ending a flurry in which the lead changed hands three times in 2 minutes, 14 seconds.

Cunningham completed three of four passes and two penalties contributed 45 yards in the 83-yard drive.

Cardinals 21, Browns 7

TEMPE, Ariz. — Gary Hogeboom threw two touchdown passes and defensive end Freddie Joe Nunn returned a fumble 48 yards for another score as Phoenix snapped a two-year, seven-game losing streak with a preseason victory over Cleveland.

Phoenix, 1-2, built a 21-0 halftime lead en route to its first triumph since last November. The Cardinals ended the 1988 regular season with five consecutive losses.

Cleveland, 1-3, which averted a shutout on Tony Baker's six-yard touchdown run with 1:18 to play, blew two other second-half scoring opportunities.

Hogeboom hit J.T. Smith with a 16-yard scoring pass on the final play of the first quarter and then found Roy Green for a 20-yard touchdown 1:15 before halftime.

Patriots 23, Falcons 7

ATLANTA — New England linebacker Andre Tippett recovered an Atlanta fumble in the end zone for a touchdown and Greg Davis kicked three field goals as the Patriots beat the turnover-plagued Falcons.

The Patriots, 2-1, converted two Atlanta fumbles, a pass interception and a poor punt into 16 first-half points in sending the winless Falcons to their third consecutive preseason defeat.

Atlanta managed only 70 yards and four first downs in the first half which was played in a steady rain and occasional thunder and lightning. Play was suspended for 17½ minutes with 8:09 gone in the third period because of the lightning.

Packers 27, Bills 24

MADISON, Wis. — Anthony Dilweg's 2-yard touchdown pass to Perry Kemp with 19 seconds remaining capped Green Bay's rally for a victory over Buffalo.

Trailing 24-20, the Packers got the ball with 1:53 remaining after a Buffalo punt. Dilweg, a rookie, then directed an eight-play, 60-yard scoring drive, aided by a 24-yard pass interference call on the Bills' Kenneth Cheattom that carried to the Buffalo 9.

Dilweg hit Patrick Scott with a 7-yard pass to the 2, then passed to Kemp in the right corner of the end zone.

The Packers, whose three preseason games have been decided by a total of five points, are 2-1. Buffalo fell to 1-3.

A crowd of only 30,432 watched the game in intermittent rain at Camp Randall Stadium.

RETIRE

Like his predecessor, Williamson has been recognized by his peers, including being named the 1988 Texas Sports Writer of the Year by the Texas High School Coaches Association. The same association has named him the Region IV writer of the year four of the last five years.

A graduate of Snyder High School, Williamson is a decorated veteran of the Vietnam War, serving six months in the infantry before becoming a field feature writer for Stars & Stripes.

Before joining the Reporter-Telegram in January 1972, Williamson served in the Army Public Information Office at Fort Sill, Okla.

He and his wife June, have two daughters, Shane, 14, and Regina, 9.

Filling the sports staff vacancy is Bill Price, former sports editor of the Canyon News. Married with two children, Price earned his journalism degree at West Texas State University.

Pendleton homer boosts Cards

HOUSTON (AP) — Terry Pendleton is swinging a big bat in more ways than one these days.

Pendleton, who has switched to a heavier bat, homered for the fifth time this month and the St. Louis Cardinals moved to within 1½ games of first place in the National League East, beating the Houston Astros 5-3 Saturday night for their 10th win in 13 games.

With the division-leading Chicago Cubs losing to Atlanta earlier in the day, the Cardinals are closer to first than at any time since June 16. Houston has lost five straight and fell five games behind San Francisco in the NL West.

Pendleton has 11 home runs this season, one short of his career high, and had never before hit more than three in a month.

"I went to a bigger bat, and it causes me to use my hands more. I'm generating more bat speed that way," Pendleton said. "I tried one of Pedro's (Guerrero) bats in batting practice, and I've been using one ever since. I feel that's the reason," Pendleton said.

Ken Hill, 7-10, snapped a personal four-game losing streak, allowing two runs on five hits in six innings. Todd Worrell, the third St. Louis pitcher, worked the ninth for his 19th save.

"This is the best we've played as a team," Guerrero said. "We lost some tough games, but now we have everybody playing well at the same time."

St. Louis scored a run in the first off Rick Rhoden, 1-5, making his first start since Aug. 11. Milt Thompson singled with two outs, stole second and came around on a single by Pedro Guerrero.

Houston tied it in the second on an RBI single by Ken Caminiti, but Guerrero walked to lead off the fourth and Pendleton followed with a homer to right center for a 3-1 lead. The Cardinals also got run-scoring singles from Guerrero in the seventh and pinch-hitter Denny Walling in the ninth.

The Astros scored in the fifth inning on Craig Reynolds' RBI single and Glenn Wilson homered off reliever Ken Dayley in the eighth, his 10th of the season and first since being acquired from Pittsburgh last week.

"We need to something to start us. Maybe a double-digit hit game would do it," Houston's Ken Caminiti said.

"There's lots of time left, but we need to put our noses to the grindstone and get it going," Wilson added.

Reds 6, Pirates 4

Todd Benzinger drove in three runs with a bases-loaded triple in the first inning and Ron Oester went 4-for-4 as Cincinnati gave interim Manager Tommy Helms his first victory since taking over for Pete Rose.

The Reds and Cincinnati baseball fans are still stunned from Rose's ban from baseball on Thursday over gambling allegations. There was one sign at Riverfront on Saturday: "Pete, Thanks for the Memories." On Friday, the Pirates beat a shaken Reds team 12-3.

Ron Robinson, 3-1, got the victory with relief help from Rob Dibble, who struck out five batters in two innings to set a club record of 120 strikeouts for a reliever in a season, previously held by Robinson while in 1986.

Giants 8, Expos 3

Scott Garrelts improved his record at Candlestick Park to 7-1 this season, and slugging Matt Williams hit a three-run homer for San Francisco.

Garrelts, 10-3 and unbeaten since June 25, allowed four hits in 7 1-3 innings, struck out seven and walked two. He outpitched Montreal's Mark Langston, 10-5, who entered the game as the National League ERA leader at 2.15.

Langston was battered for six runs and five hits in three innings to raise his ERA to 2.50. The leader is Orel Hershiser of the Los Angeles Dodgers at 2.36. Garrelts is at 2.38.

The Giants took a 3-0 lead in the first on a pair of walks and a two-out homer by Williams. It was his 12th homer of the season, and 10th in 31 games since his recall from the minors. Williams hit 26 homers at Phoenix in the Pacific Coast League.

Braves 5, Cubs 3

Jeff Blauser had the first two-homer game of his career and reliever Sergio Valdez earned his first major league victory for Atlanta.

The loss was the seventh in the last eight games for the first-place Cubs.

Oddibe McDowell opened the game with his third homer and Blauser homered to start a two-run fourth off loser Rick Sutcliffe, 13-10, as the Braves took a 4-0 lead. Blauser also homered in the eighth to give him eight for the season.

Dale Murphy's sacrifice fly in the third and starter Derek Lilliquist's run-scoring single in the fourth accounted for the other Atlanta runs.

Lilliquist, who allowed only one hit in the first three innings, was knocked out in the fourth when the Cubs scored three runs on doubles by Ryne Sandberg, Andre Dawson and Lloyd McClendon and a single by Shawon Dunston.

Valdez, 1-2, put down the uprising and blanked the Cubs on three hits in 3 1-3 innings before leaving for a pinch-hitter in the eighth. Joe Boever came on for his 21st save.

Reds feel disoriented after Rose banishment

CINCINNATI (AP) — Tommy Helms walked into the Cincinnati Reds' clubhouse on his first day as interim manager and turned right — into the coaches' room. He meant to take a left into the manager's office.

The loss of Pete Rose has left his team a little disoriented.

"You look up and he's not there. It's kind of strange," reliever Rob Dibble said.

The ballclub is making an effort to forget about Rose, who was banished from baseball for life Thursday. His photograph was removed from the collection of players' and coaches' pictures on an outside wall and replaced by one of owner Marge Schott and her dog, Schottzie. His nameplate was stripped from the door of the manager's office, leaving tape marks.

"He still has some of his things here," said Helms, a close friend of Rose. "He was in earlier (Friday) to pick things up."

The reality of Rose's loss began to sink in as the Reds gathered for their game Friday with the Pittsburgh Pirates. The club had been off Thursday, watching Rose accept his suspension on television.

"It was kind of like signing a treaty after a war," Dibble said. "It was over and he had lost, and that's the saddest moment for me. It was probably the toughest battle of his life, and he lost."

Dibble was thinking about that as he prepared to work out.

"I had an empty feeling driving to the ballpark knowing I was not going to see him when I got here," Dibble said.

Some players suggested it will take a while to come to terms with their feelings.

"I don't think the effect of Pete Rose being out of the game has hit home," said veteran outfielder Dave Collins. "It's not going to hit home for a while. He's going to be missed, for what he's done for the game."

Others didn't expect to feel much difference.

"He hadn't been a real accessible guy (to the players) to start with," first baseman Todd Benzinger said. "I never considered it 'Pete Rose and the Cincinnati Reds.' Just like I never considered it 'John McNamara and the Boston Red Sox' when I played there.

"The atmosphere here is the same, as far as I can see. We're one man less."

U.S. team breaks Far Eastern spell

WILLIAMSPORT, Pa. (AP) — Taiwan's three consecutive Little League World Series victories didn't intimidate Little Leaguers from Trumbull, Conn.

Chris Drury pitched a five-hitter and drove in two runs Saturday and Ken Martin had three RBIs, including a home run as Trumbull, Conn. defeated Kaohsiung, Taiwan, 4-2 in the 43rd Little League World Series championship.

"These guys don't know how to lose. They didn't care who they were playing. They didn't care that it was Taiwan," Trumbull manager Tom Galla said.

Trumbull became the first American team to win the Little League World Series since Marietta, Ga. in 1983.

Seoul, Korea took the next two years and Little Leaguers from Taiwan were winners from 1986-88. Lakewood, N.J., was the last Eastern Regional champion to make the finals and the last one to win the tournament, in 1975.

A Connecticut team last made the finals in 1965, when Windsor Locks, Conn., defeated Stoney Creek, Ontario, 3-1.

"It's about time a U.S. team won the World Series," Galla said.

Drury, a 5-foot-1½, 126-pound right-hander with a 66-mph fastball, struck out two, walked four, two of them intentionally, and went 2-for-3 at the plate.

His Texas-leaguer with two outs and the bases loaded in the fourth inning scored two runs and opened up a 4-1 lead.

Drury allowed a run in the top of the fifth, but Ken Martin answered with a solo home run in the bottom of the inning for Trumbull, a suburb of Bridgeport, Conn.

In the sixth inning, Drury walked the leadoff hitter but then ended the game with a fly out, strikeout and deep fly to the warning track in left field as jubiliant teammates rushed to the mound and hugged the winning pitcher.

Kaohsiung took the lead in the top of the first when Chien-Chih Lee doubled with two outs and scored as Yeh Chen-Lung's deep fly to left that tipped off Dan McGrath's glove.

Martin's bloop two-out single to right scored Cody Lee and Drury in the bottom of the third and gave Trumbull a 2-1 lead.

Newcomers to vie in finals

U.S. Amateur

ARDMORE, Pa. (AP) — Danny Green and Chris Patton, both newcomers on the national amateur scene, each won twice Saturday, reaching the final round of the U.S. Amateur Golf Championship.

Green, 32, of Jackson Tenn., eliminated two-time champion Jay Sigel, 1-up on an extra hole in a morning quarterfinal. He returned to Merion Golf Club's 6,523-yard, par-70 course in the afternoon, beating Jerry Courville, 30, of Norwalk, Conn., 2-up and qualifying for Sunday's 36-hole final.

Patton, 21, a Clemson senior from Fountain Inn., S.C., whose best this year was a fifth in the South Carolina State Amateur, disposed of Michael Brannan, 33, a golf equipment salesman from Trumbull, Conn., 3 and 2 in the other semifinal.

Earlier, Patton eliminated Kevin Wentworth, an Oklahoma State senior from Manteca, Calif., 2 and 1.

Green and Patton survived a field of 312, which began play Tuesday and Wednesday in a 36-hole qualifying test. Green qualified with 146, nine strokes off the medalist. Patton carded a 142.

They also survived the competition of four members of last week's triumphant Britain-Ireland Walker Cup team, and seven from the losing U.S. team.

Green fell behind Courville on the first hole with a bogey, halved the second, and then won the next three, rolling in birdie putts of 16 and 22 feet at Nos. 3 and 4. He was 4-up at the turn.

On the back nine, they halved 10 and 11 before Green went 4-up with a par at 12. They halved the next three holes. Courville won 16 and 17 to come within one, but Green rolled in a 20-foot putt at 18 to close out the match.

"I do things the hard way," Green said. What can you say?

"I was discouraged when Sigel forced a playoff. But those things happen. He (Sigel) is a legend. I was fortunate to beat him. He's a great player."

Patton and Brannan made the turn even. Patton won 10 with a birdie, 11 on a par, and birdied 13 to go 3-up. Brannan held on by winning 15. Although he bogeyed, Patton won at 16 when Brannan double bogeyed.

Green, who attended the University of Tennessee at Martin, blew a 2-up lead with two holes to play against Sigel. But Sigel struggled on 19, and wound up conceding a birdie putt and the match.

Brannan won his semifinal match in a morning 18 over Todd Satterfield, a recent Georgia graduate, 3 and 2.

Courville, a former Connecticut state champion, eliminated Ted Himka, a recent Washington graduate, 3 and 1 in the other quarterfinal.

Green, trailing Siegel by a hole at the turn in the morning round, evened the match with a birdie at the 10th. He edged ahead at 12 with a birdie, and boosted his lead to 2-up with another at 15.

They halved the 16th, leaving Sigel two down with two holes to play.

Sigel, in his 23rd Amateur including titles in 1982 and '83, hung in with an 18-foot birdie putt at 17.

Sigel, 45, won 18 and deadlocked the match as Green 3 putted.

The two moved to a first extra hole with some 3,000 fans, mostly rooting for Sigel from nearby Berwyn, Pa., lining the fairway.

Sigel's tee shot landed in a divot. He hit into a trap, blasted out 15 feet past the pin and missed the putt coming back. He conceded a 6 foot birdie putt to Green, who was on in two. An elated Green said, "I played well, a little nervous. I was lucky not to get too f[illegible] down early. When I got even at 10, I got more confidence."

Green added, "I thought I had it won going to 17, but Jay showed his character by sinking that putt. I just tried to compose myself. He got a tough break hitting into that divot."

King seizes third-round Nestle lead

Nestle Golf

BUFORD, Ga. (AP) — Betsy King, a five-time winner this season, rolled in a 15-foot birdie putt on the 17th hole Saturday to take a 1-shot lead after the third round of the $265,000 LPGA World Championship golf tournament.

King shot a 2-under par 70 for a 54-hole score of 207, nine shots under par on the hilly, 6,107-yard Pinelsle Resort course. She already holds the single season record for earnings on the LPGA Tour,

Pat Bradley and second round leader Patty Sheehan are tied for second. Bradley made the big charge of the day, shooting a 68. Sheehan had a 72.

Three others were three shots off the pace. Britain's Laura Davies, 68, Beth Daniel, 71, and Patti Rizzo, 69.

The elite international field of 16 players is chasing the richest prize in LPGA history, $83,500.

"I feel very good after my 2-over start," said Bradley, who won this event three years ago.

King, who started the round one shot back, bogeyed two of the first four holes before recovering with birdies on Nos. 5 and 9 to make the turn tied with Bradley for the lead.

When King birdied the 16th hole, she moved into a three-way tie with Sheehan and Bradley and then took the lead with the birdie on No. 17.

King has won $525,957 this season, most ever in the LPGA. Among her five victories is the U.S. Open title.

Sheehan struggled on the front side, taking a bogey on No. 6 before getting a birdie on No. 8. She then took a double bogey-7 on the ninth hole to lose the lead. Her backside birdies came on the 14th and 15th greens.

Because of the heat, Davies said she didn't even bother to practice before starting.

"I just made a couple of practice swings on the first tee and played one of my best rounds of the year. I missed only two greens and had two 3-putts," she said.

She had only one bogey in her round.

Rosie Jones, the defending champion and first-round leader, had a 74 and was five shots back at 212.

Three others were deadlocked with 214: Hiromi Kobayashi of Japan, who shot 72, Julie Inkster, 75, and British Open champ Jane Geddes, 76.

Erratic round helps Stewart

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — PGA champion Payne Stewart overcame the potential disaster of a double bogey and advanced into a three-way tie for the third- round lead Saturday in the World Series of Golf.

Stewart had an erratic 68 — six birdies, two bogeys, a double bogey — on the extremely difficult Firestone Country Club course and finished 54 holes at 207, three under par.

He was tied with Paul Azinger and David Frost but quickly pointed out that "a lot of guys have a chance to win this; certainly everybody on the board there."

Stewart gestured to a leaderboard that showed nine men under par, including Ben Crenshaw, Australia's Greg Norman and defending champion Mike Reid.

"Somebody could come out early, get a hot hand, put a number on the board and win it with everybody else on the golf course," Stewart said.

Hot Charles retains lead

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — Bob Charles shot a 3-under-par 69 Saturday and remained on track for a bit of personal history in the Charley Pride Senior Tournament.

Charles, with a 36-hole total of 9-under 135, held a one-shot lead over Charles Coody and Jim Dent going into Sunday's final round of the $300,000 event.

Charles, trying to win the same tournament three straight times for the first time in his career, now has played eight straight sub-par tournament rounds over the 6,686-yard, par-72 Four Hills Country Club course.

Coody, who began the day tied with Charles for the lead after an opening-rounds 66, struggled with his driver most of the day but still managed a 70.

Dent, a Senior Tour rookie, used some massive yardage off the tee to match Charles' 69.

Bobby Nichols, with a second-round 71, was three shots back at 138. Nichols missed a chance to stay closer to the top when he three-putted from the front fringe of the par-4 18th hole.

Rain axes PGA play

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. (AP) — Brian Mogg, boosted by an ace at the 201-yard seventh hole, turned in a 7-under-par 63 Saturday to become the leader in the clubhouse before lightning and rain suspended third-round play at the $500,000 Hamilton County-Chattanooga Classic.

Mogg, who tied a 9-hole course record with a 6-under 29 on the front-side, was one of only 36 golfers in the field of 83 to complete the third round at the par-70, 6,640-yard Valleybrook Golf and Country Club.

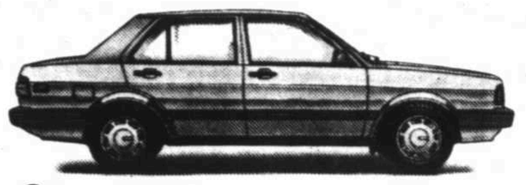

Ted Schultz, who led after 36 holes with an 11-under 129 total, parred his first two holes before play was suspended.

Schultz is joined as the leader on the course by Morris Hatalsky, who birdied the par-5, 522-yard second hole to reach 11-under.

Rangers back into victory; Fletcher leads Chisox

ARLINGTON (AP) — Jeff Russell tied a club record with his 29th save and Texas scored two runs as a result of wild pitches as the Rangers beat the California Angels 3-2 Saturday night.

The loss kept the second-place Angels one game behind first-place Oakland in the American League West.

Russell pitched 1 2-3 innings, allowing one hit, and tied Jim Kern's club record set in 1979.

Texas took a 3-1 lead in the fifth off Terry Clark, 0-1, making his first major-league start since last September. Clark was recalled from Class AAA Edmonton Friday, replacing the injured Chuck Finley in the Angels' rotation.

Jeff Kunkel went to second when former Midland Angel third baseman Bob Rose dropped a popup, advanced to third on a sacrifice and scored on Clark's wild pitch.

Cecil Espy singled, went to second on a balk, moved to third on a grounder and scored when Rafael Palmeiro struck out but reached first on another wild pitch.

California chased Charlie Hough, 9-12, with a run in the sixth, narrowing Texas' lead to 3-2 on Wally Joyner's RBI fielder's choice. The Angels loaded the bases with one out but reliever Gary Mielke got Rose to hit into a double play.

Hough is 4-1 since coming off the disabled list Aug. 4.

American

Johnny Ray opened the eighth with single, and, one out later, moved to second on Russell's wild pitch. After a walk to Chili Davis, Brian Downing singled to right field but Ruben Sierra threw Ray out at the plate.

The Rangers scored in the first inning on Espy's leadoff triple and Jack Daugherty's sacrifice fly. California tied it in the third on Claudell Washington's RBI groundout.

White Sox 4, Indians 3

Scott Fletcher had two of Chicago's five doubles and Steve Rosenberg won for the first time in more than a month.

Ivan Calderon had two hits and two RBIs for the White Sox.

Rosenberg, 4-9, yielded a run on four hits in six innings, walking two and striking out six. He had lost his previous four decisions and seven of his last eight. Bob Thigpen, the third Chicago pitcher picked up his 28th save.

Cleveland pitcher Bud Black, 9-11, gave up three runs on nine hits in 6 2-3 innings for his second straight tough loss. He lost a three-hitter at California 1-0 last Sunday.

The Indians have scored a total of 19 runs in Black's 11 losses.

The White Sox scored single runs in the fourth, fifth, seventh and eighth innings.

Twins 1, Mariners 0

David West finally gave Minnesota something to show for the Frank Viola trade, allowing four singles over 7 2-3 innings to give Seattle its 10th straight loss.

Kirby Puckett singled in the only run off Brian Holman, 5-7, who pitched a four-hitter in defeat.

West, 1-0, entered the game with a 16.62 ERA in five relief appearances since arriving July 31 in the blockbuster deal that sent Viola to the New York Mets.

Rick Aguilera, the other major-leaguer acquired by the Twins, is 0-2. Viola, the 1988 American League Cy Young winner, is 1-3 with the Mets.

Once considered the Mets' top pitching prospect, West walked two and struck out three. The lefthander, who turns 25 on Sept. 1, got relief help from Jeff Reardon, who picked up his 26th save.

Royals 2, Athletics 0

Bret Saberhagen shut out Oakland on four hits for his seventh straight win and Willie Wilson homered to give surging Kansas City the win.

Saberhagen, 16-5, matched the longest winning streak of his career, first accomplished when he won the Cy Young Award in 1985. He struck out three and walked one in pitching Kansas City to its 11th victory in 12 games.

It was the fourth three-hitter of the season for Saberhagen, who has won 13 of his last 14 decisions. He pitched the 11th shutout of his career.

The 10th complete game of the season by Saberhagen gave him the American League lead.

At one point, Saberhagen retired 12 straight batters. The spell was broken when Stan Javier singled with two outs in the eighth. Javier stole second, but was stranded when Rickey Henderson grounded out.

Oakland's Walt Weiss singled in the third, was sacrificed to second, moved to third on a grounder but was left there when Carney Lansford grounded out.

Curt Young, 4-9, took the loss. Young, who had won two straight, has given up just four earned runs in his last 17 innings.

The Athletics, who went into the game batting .195 at Royals Stadium, lost three straight for the first time since June 26-28. The Royals moved to within 2½ games of Oakland in the West Division. Second-place California played at Texas.

Wilson lined a 415-foot home run to left on a full count with one out in the first after fouling off four straight pitches from Young. It was his third homer — first batting righthanded since Aug 29, 1987 — and first since July 14.

Kansas City scored its second run when Todd Burns threw a wild pitch while intentionally walking Danny Tartabull in the eighth.

Blue Jays 7, Brewers 0

Dave Stieb pitched his fifth career one-hitter, allowing only a two-out infield single to Robin Yount in the sixth inning, while Mookie Wilson went 4-for-5, scored two runs and drove in one for Toronto.

Stieb, 13-8, went the distance for the third time this season in registering his second shutout. He struck out five and walked four as the Blue Jays won their fifth in a row, while handing the Brewers their fifth straight loss.

Orioles 6, Yankees 4

Joe Orsulak hit two home runs for the first time in his career and rookie Dave Johnson won his fourth game this month for Baltimore.

The Orioles stayed 1½ games ahead of second-place Toronto in the American League East. The Yankees lost their third straight.

Red Sox 5, Tigers 2

Roger Clemens settled down after a shaky start and won his 13th game for Boston.

Clemens, 13-9, allowed two runs, five hits and a walk while throwing 47 pitches in the first two innings.

Then, after a two-out single by Fred Lynn in the third, the two-time Cy Young Award winner took command. In eight innings, Clemens allowed eight hits, all singles, struck out six and walked three in sending the Tigers to their seventh consecutive defeat. Clemens' last previous victory was Aug. 11 against Baltimore.

Lee Smith got the last three outs for his 18th save, striking out two.

Cyclists move on down the road in the HotterN'- Hell 100 race Saturday in Wichita Falls.

Hotter race lives up to name

WICHITA FALLS (AP) — More than 12,200 cyclists sliced through North Texas countryside that felt like 107 degrees in the 8th Annual Hotter'N Hell Hundred on Saturday.

Medical teams reported no serious injuries in the event, officially separated for the first time this year into a race and a ride.

About 260 racers cycled a 90-mile United States Cycling Federation-sanctioned route and left the city about 30 minutes sooner than cyclists who rode the 100-mile route.

Kent Bostick of Corrales, N.M., won the race in 3 hours, 11 minutes. He was followed by Doug Smith of Boulder, Colo., and Richard McClurg of Corrales.

The event's 100-mile record was set in 1987 by Alan McCormick of Ireland. Ten miles were cut from the race when it became sanctioned by the USCF.

Last year's champion, Chris Hipp of Dallas, decided to skip this year's race.

Bostick said he and two members of the Shaklee racing team took advantage of winds that blew from the south and southeast at more than 10 mph.

"The wind was a key factor. We averaged over 30 mph," he said.

"You have to be positioned well every time. Every time I would turn a corner, if there was a cross wind, I would speed up to take advantage of it. When there are side winds, you can't get a draft ... there were a lot of cross winds."

Bostick said the heat didn't play a factor in the race, which began at 7 a.m.

The temperature climbed to 98 by 3 p.m. and, combined with humidity and wind, the heat index factor was 107, the National Weather Service said.

The leader of the event's medical team, Wichita Falls physician Dr. Jerry Alexander, said the rate of injuries was down this year because Hotter'N Hell officials, as the temperature rose, asked some slow riders to quit the routes early.

Alexander said usually about 3 percent of the riders suffer heat injuries or trauma.

"We may be a little under that," Alexander said. "We're not aware of any heatstroke, just some cases of heat exhaustion."

At noon, race officials began stopping slow riders as they reached the 50-mile point, directing some to the 62-mile course and transporting others back to Wichita Falls.

"I was there to smooth over the hard feelings some had," said Mark Davis, the route director. "Some of them went ahead anyway."

"Many of them allowed us to cut it short," Alexander said.

The Hotter'N Hell began in 1982 as a family ride and has grown into the largest cycling event in Texas.

Prize money totalling $3,000 was awarded among the top 20 race finishers.

Evert prepares to say goodbye

NEW YORK (AP) — Eighteen years, five presidents and two marriages after playing her first U.S. Open, Chris Evert is about to play her last.

Evert, who is retiring at the end of the season, will close out her Grand Slam career at the tournament where she first rose to prominence as a 16-year-old semifinalist in 1971.

The U.S. Open, which starts Monday at the National Tennis Center, has been Evert's main stage ever since. She has won it six times — most recently in 1982 — and reached at least the semifinals in all but one of her 18 appearances.

Evert is the tournament's all-time leader in singles victories (97), singles matches played (108) and most years as the No. 1 seed (7). She shares the record for most years as a U.S. Open seed (18) with Jimmy Connors.

Evert is seeded fourth this year, behind defending champion Steffi Graf, four-time winner Martina Navratilova and Gabriela Sabatini. She would love to go out with a seventh title, but she admits her chances are slim.

"A couple of friends recently told me they didn't even want me to play the Open," Evert says in the current Sports Illustrated. "They wanted to remember me by that final wave on Centre Court after I lost to Steffi in the semis at Wimbledon.

"I understand why they feel that way but, hey, I want to play till I run out of gas. At least let me make that decision."

While Evert is on her way out, four-time U.S. Open champion John McEnroe is on his way back up.

McEnroe is having his best year since 1985 and has climbed to No. 4 in the world rankings. He has won 34 of 39 matches and three titles this year, including a recent victory at the U.S. Hardcourt Championships in Indianapolis.

Although McEnroe still has a trigger temper, he controls it better than he he used to.

"I used to play better when I was angry, but I don't need that kind of motivation anymore," he said.

McEnroe, 30, hasn't won a Grand Slam title since the 1984 U.S. Open. But he played impressively in his last major tournament, reaching the semifinals at Wimbledon before losing to Stefan Edberg.

Edberg has lost the last two Grand Slam finals, to Michael Chang at the French Open and Boris Becker at Wimbledon. The Swede is seeded third at the U.S. Open, behind Ivan Lendl and Becker and just ahead of McEnroe.

Lendl's bid for a fourth consecutive U.S. Open title was stopped by Mats Wilander in last year's final. If Lendl reaches the championship match again, he will tie the tournament record of eight consecutive finals set by Bill Tilden from 1918-25.

Becker withdrew from a warmup tournament last week because of a back injury, but is expected to be ready for the Open. The West German has won three Wimbledons, but has never gotten past the semifinals at the Open.

After winning three of the four Grand Slams last year and taking over the No. 1 ranking, Wilander has failed to win a tournament in 1989 and slipped to No. 5.

Following Wilander in the seedings are Americans Andre Agassi, Chang, Brad Gilbert and Tim Mayotte.

Like Wilander, Andre Agassi is winless on the Grand Prix circuit this year following a sensational 1988 season. He reached the final at the Italian Open, but blew a match point and lost a five-setter to Alberto Mancini.

Chang's victory in Paris made him the youngest male (17 years, 3½ months) to win a Grand Slam singles title. His best hardcourt result this year was a semifinal showing in Memphis.

Gilbert is the hottest player on the tour with a 17-match winning streak, including consecutive victories over Chang, Becker and Edberg at last week's ATP Championship. The title was Gilbert's third in three weeks, making him the first player to accomplish the feat since Becker in 1986.

In the women's competition, Graf is favored to reach her 11th straight Grand Slam final. The West German has lost only two matches this year, to Gabriela Sabatini at Amelia Island and Arantxa Sanchez at the French Open.

Navratilova, Sabatini and Sanchez appear to be Graf's strongest challengers. Graf beat Navratilova last month in the Wimbledon final, their only meeting this year.

Spanish netter nips American in San Marino

SAN MARINO, Italy (AP) — Jose Francisco Altur of Spain upset second-seeded Lawson Duncan 6-4, 2-6, 6-2 Saturday in the semifinals of the San Marino clay court tennis tournament.

In the other semifinal match, Roberto Azar of Argentina defeated Jose Luis Aparisi of Spain 6-2, 7-5.

Duncan apparently suffered from the intense heat. He had been the last seeded player left in the competition, which awards a first prize of $25,000.

The American had downed Italy's Simone Colombo 7-5, 6-1 late Friday in the quarterfinal round.

The tournament in the tiny republic of San Marino is part of the Grand Prix circuit.

It worked, Graybill retired the last nine batters he faced from the sixth through the eighth before being relieved by Miguel Alicea. Graybill gave up only two runs despite the 10 hits.

"Early, I was just missing with some pitches, but I had all three of my pitches (fastball, slurve and changeup) going for me. I had confidence that I could go to any of the three pitches in tight situations."

San Antonio held a 1-0 lead after 2½ innings, but Reed Peters RBI single and Chris Cron's RBI triple highlighted a three-run Angel third and Midland never looked back.

San Antonio got two runs off Midland in the ninth off of Alicea, but the game was out of hand by then.

The Missions' Nichting is now 4-14 on the year and has lost nine of his last 10 decisions. He is 0-3 against Midland this year in five starts, giving up 40 hits in 24 innings for a double-digit ERA.

State's trials hit home for system president

RALEIGH, N.C. (AP) — It was only North Carolina State's pain at first, but the results of an investigation into allegations of wrongdoing in the Wolfpack basketball program has struck a lot more nerves.

When University of North Carolina system president C.D. "Dick" Spangler Jr. read the results of a six-month investigation of the Poole Commission on Friday, he made 14 recommendations he expected the member institutions in the UNC System to follow.

Foremost was the recommendation that Wolfpack basketball coach Jim Valvano give up his other job as athletic director by the end of the year.

Valvano told reporters he would abide by that recommendation, although he didn't say exactly when before the Dec. 31 deadline he would step down as athletic director.

Spangler didn't stop at Valvano. He directed the chancellors of all the UNC System schools to separate the jobs of athletic director from those of coaches. That would affect one more NCAA Division I school, North Carolina-Charlotte, where Jeff Mullins is basketball coach and athletic director.

In Division II, Clarence "Bighouse" Gaines would have to give up the dual roles of basketball coach and athletic director at Winston-Salem State. Fayetteville State's new football coach, Jeff Capel is also the school's athletic director. Capel was out of town and did not return messages left on his telephone answering machine Saturday.

"I'm not really that much concerned about it," Gaines said in a radio interview Friday night. "Those of us at Division II schools have two or three roles. Sometimes, that's forced on the administration because of a lack of personnel.

"Really, it looks like because of this fiasco you have down there in Raleigh, this has been coming all along," Gaines said. "So it comes as no shock or surprise."

Gaines, who is closing in on 800 career coaching victories, said the blanket policy that would have him separate his jobs should take a different and more direct approach.

"I think that someone needs to go back and make a statement that you can't legislate integrity," he said. "If lack of integrity was shown in that situation, in any situation, then those people need to be dealt with. I can't see why it should affect Jeff (Mullins) or me or anybody else."

Mullins is resisting the idea of dropping his athletic director's job.

"I have a five-year contract with our university to be athletic director and basketball coach, and I fully expect to honor that committment, and I hope that the university system and the Sam Poole Commission would allow the BUICK LeSABRE. THE MOST TROUBLE FREE CAR BUILT IN AMERICA.

Until now, this kind of quality was known to only an elite group, Le Sabre owners.

Great selections of New fully loaded LeSabres in stock now!

Prices starting at $15,295
(List $18,341, Stock#9228)

The latest J.D. Power and Associates Initial Quality Survey* states something Buick LeSabre owners can be proud to know and something all new-car buyers should know. The fact that Buick LeSabre is the most trouble free full-size car sold in America. Import or domestic.

The Initial Quality Survey, which measures things gone wrong with new vehicles during the first 90 days of ownership, marks an improvement in Buick quality for the third year in a row. And today, the Buick nameplate ranks as the most trouble free American brand. Higher than Lincoln. Higher than other prestige cars costing thousands more.

To our way of thinking, it all means that if you're looking for quality, you should just look down the Great American Road for the Buick tri-shield. The new symbol for quality. The sign of your Buick dealer.

* J.D. Power & Associates 1989 Initial Quality Survey covering November and December 1988. Based upon owner-related problems during the first 90 days of ownership.

CAR TALK!

BY TOM AND RAY MAGLIOZZI

ASSAULT FROM A BATTERY

Dear Tom and Ray:

I have a 1975 Datsun pickup truck. I was driving too fast on a dirt road and hit a pothole hard enough to bounce the truck. Seconds after landing, the accelerator pedal became stuck, causing momentary panic until I realized I could put the car in neutral and coast to a stop. Upon examination, it was discovered that the accelerator cable had become fused to its plastic sheathing, which had melted. After replacing the cable, the truck operated perfectly until I hit another big bump and the same thing happened. This time I noticed a burned spot on the underside of the hood above the battery. What's happening? — Kath

TOM: Go back and pull out your original dealer invoice. If you look at it carefully, you will notice that one of the factory installed options is the poltergeist package.

RAY: Actually, what's happening is your battery is loose. It's bouncing when you hit bumps. And when you hit big bumps, it's making contact with the underside of the hood. When that happens, current is transmitted through the hood to whatever part of the accelerator cable happens to be resting against the hood. The electricity melts the plastic sheathing.

TOM: Your battery hold-down brackets — which are two long screws that secure the battery — have rotted away and need to be replaced. This situation is dangerous, not only because of the sticking accelerator, but also because shorted batteries can explode. Get it fixed right away.

• • •

Dear Tom and Ray:

I have a 1983 Oldsmobile Delta 88 with an erratic fuel gauge. The local Lincoln-Mercury dealer, where I bought the car used, has replaced both the sending unit and the dash gauge to no avail. I have also added a ground wire to make sure the tank is electrically grounded to the frame. Nothing helped. The gauge seems to work at times, but at other times, points way off the scale to above the full mark. Can you offer any suggestions? — Gregory

TOM: The cheapskate brother suggests you go to your hardware store and buy a broom. Stick the handle into the tank, calibrate it for full, half and empty, and leave it in the back seat.

RAY: The smart brother says that if you've replaced both ends of the system — the sending unit and the dashboard gauge — the problem must be where? Right! In between. There's probably a bad connection in the wire that runs between the tank and the gauge. Have your wife drive the car while you hang underneath it and try to determine where the wire is intermittently making contact. Better yet, avoid those nasty scrapes on your back and have the dealer replace the whole wire.

The outdoor areas - the backyard pool, side patio with garden and jacuzzi - will provide many hours of enjoyment for family members and their friends.

SUMMERTIME & the living is easy

Homeowners are beginning to lavish the outside areas of their houses with all the comforts of home, allowing for many hours of enjoyment during the summer months. Just a few years ago, lawns were just seeded and the necessary shrubs were planted. Now, what's outside our home is just as important as what's within.

Big front porches, gazebos and the area surrounding the backyard pool are all beautifully landscaped and are furnished with comfortable stylish outdoor furniture. During the summer, children and parents tend to have more time to enjoy swimming in the backyard pool, relaxing on the porch and puttering in the flower beds.

THE DESIGN of the front courtyard of this week's featured home is only one of the many interesting features that this five-bedroom house affords. Blooming flowers and lush greenery enclose the stucco walls that encase the entire house — from a side patio off the kitchen, to the backyard pool, to a gazebo with a hot tub, to the side terrace. These outdoor areas can provide hours of enjoyment, whether a person needs a place to unwind or needs to work on their summer tan before returning to school or wants to play water volleyball with a group of friends. This home really has all this plus more!

Please see SUMMERTIME, Page 2D

The patio, above, is situated off of the breakfast room and is an excellent example of the lush greenery that enhances the courtyard that surrounds this week's featured home. The master bedroom, left, is highlighted by a spacious sitting room which steps up into the sleeping area. Two walls of windows frame the backyard pool and a sliding glass door provides a private access for homeowners to the pool and jacuzzi.

SUMMERTIME——

A roomy entrance, complete with a Mexican tile flooring and a mirrored wall, open into the formal living room. This sunken room displays the southwestern look of the entire home. A free-standing, dual fireplace is situated at the left end of the room and spans into the angled ceiling which has three windows above the entrance and brightens this entire room. An open atrium is located behind the living room. Skylights above provide ample sunlight for tropical plants to flourish in.

A step, to the left of the entrance, leads down into the formal dining room. Four windows in the room overlook the front courtyard and a mirrored wall reflects many of the beautiful images in this room. A doorway leads into the breakfast room and kitchen.

The kitchen is planned around a work island with a double Jenn-aire cooktop that features ceramic burners and a griddle. A cutting board is situated at one end of the spacious island. The other appliances include a General Electric double self-cleaning oven and a dishwasher.

A sliding glass door in the breakfast room opens onto a lath-covered side patio that is shaded by a climbing vine. This patio is the perfect place to have breakfast outdoors when weather permits or to relax with a book on a built-in bench.

Adjacent to the kitchen is the family room. The dual fireplace is situated to the right, with doorways on both sides leading into the formal living room. The opposite wall is highlighted by redwood paneling and this functional room also has a Mexican tile floor.

The utility/office area is located next to the family room and windows provide a view of the side yard. This large room has a built-in desk with shelves, two storage closets and space for an extra refrigerator or a freezer. The rear-entry two-car garage with automatic door opener is adjacent to this area.

A hall, to the right of the entrance, steps down past a guest bath to two of the home's bedroom. Shades of peach decorate the first room which has two windows that frame the front courtyard. This room has a walk-in closet with built-in shelves.

A wall of built-in cabinets that are approximately two feet tall line one of the walls in the second bedroom. This room also has windows that overlook the front courtyard and a door which opens into the side garden, allowing for a private access to the backyard pool and hot tub. This room shares a bath with the third bedroom which is situated at the far end of the formal living room.

The bath's design includes a dressing area and accommodate a double sink vanity. Mirror line three walls above the vanity which also has space for a make-up area. The bathing area features a bathtub with glass doors.

The Mexican tile flooring, which surrounds the atrium, leads past the master bedroom to the third bedroom. An emerald green fabric decorates one wall in this bedroom. Two windows provide a view of the side patio and a customized walk-in closet provides lots of space for storage.

Many hours of thought went into the design of the L-shaped master bedroom. The room opens onto a large sitting area that has a sliding glass door that opens into the atrium. A fireplace is centered along the left wall. A raised sleeping area is situated at the end of the room. Windows along two walls provide a wonderful view of the backyard pool. A sliding glass door opens on a deck area next to the pool.

The amenities in the master bath would also delight any homeowner. The bath features a long vanity that includes two sinks and a make-up area, and an over-sized sunken tub and shower. Two walk-in closets are situated at each end of the bath and a wall of built-in drawers and cabinets is conveniently located to the bedroom and closets.

The fifth bedroom is located across from the atrium and includes a private bath with a shower.

A door next to the atrium opens onto a second patio area. An exercise room or a pool cabana is adjacent to the patio. The pool is situated is the center of the backyard and the gazebo with a jacuzzi is located at one end.

The other amenities in this approximately 3,500 square foot home are low maintenance flower beds, a sprinkler system, large pine trees, a service yard and a work bench in the garage.

RE/MAX of Midland is offering this fabulous family home for $160,000.

Doug Sehres/Reporter-Telegram

The formal living room, above, overlooks an atrium that is filled with tropical plants. This room has an angled ceiling and a dual, free-standing fireplace. The fireplace separates the living room from the family room, at left. A redwood paneled wall and a Mexican tile floor highlights the family room which is adjacent to the kitchen and breakfast room.

Business card leads to purchase of first home

A business card and a request to give the card to someone who was looking for a house led to the purchase of a home for first-time homebuyers Don and Kellie Hill. Kelli knew B.L. Young through the ARCO Credit Union. B.L. retired from ARCO in 1985 and Kelli is an employee of the Credit Union.

Don and Kellie called Ruth Young Inc. Realtors and made an appointment to discuss their needs in a home.

"We spent some time in the office at Ruth Young Realtors in a qualifying interview. After determining a comfortable level for a monthly payment we could qualify for, our needs and desires in a home were discussed. B.L. carefully listened for the amenities we were looking for," explained Kellie.

"The experienced staff at Ruth Young Realtors provided us with a selection of all the homes in Midland in our price range. They showed us every house we were interested in at locations in all areas of Midland. We were given the best service possible, and the attitude and ability of those associated with Ruth Young Realtors is unsurpassed."

"The first offer they made was not accepted, but with the negotiating skills of Ruth Young Realtors and the co-op agent, the offer was finally accepted," added B.L. "Being a member of Multiple Listing Service benefits all of us and gives the buyer a much larger choice of homes."

After an offer is accepted, loan application is the next step. Ruth Young went to the loan applications appointment with the Hills. Due to the fact that they were fully prepared with an application already filled out, an hours time with the lender was saved. Pre-purchase and termite inspection followed a week or two later.

Don is employed at Midland Memorial Hospital and is studying to be a respiratory therapist. He and Kellie are like many other young couples who are buying their first home. They have a beautiful daughter, Meghan, who is two-years-old.

The associates at Ruth Young Inc. Realtors enjoy working with first-time homebuyers and invite others to let them assist in finding their dream home.

Don and Kellie Hill, pictured with their daughter Meghan, are first-time homebuyers. The Hills were assisted in their search of a house by B.L. Young, right, of Ruth Young Inc. Realtors.

Hicks named salesperson for month of July by Dene Kelly

Carol Hicks was named the salesperson of the month of July for Dene Kelly Inc., Realtors, according to Dene Kelly, owner. "This award is based on the dollar volume of homes which have been sold during a one-month period and Carol is only one of our dedicated associates who are experienced is all aspects of the real estate business."

Hicks has been a Midland resident since 1955 and graduated from Midland High School in 1965. She received an associate degree with a dental hygiene certificate from Amarillo College in 1975. She also attended Texas Tech University and the University of Houston Pharmacy school. The continuing education credits that she earned in real estate were from Midland College and Southwestern College of Real Estate. These courses were in the fields of marketing, math, creative finance and real estate law.

As a full-time associate with Dene Kelly, Realtors, Hicks has experience in working with FHA, VA, HUD and conventional contracts. She also has had experience in residential lease property management.

As an active member of the Midland Board of Realtors, Hicks is presently serving on the budget and community services committees.

Associate of Don Harvey, Realtors offers relocation insight

Most major companies and an ever growing number of smaller companies provide some assistance to employees that have been asked to relocate, according to Karen Foster with Don Harvey, Realtors. The average cost of relocating an employee has risen sharply over the last few years. However, most companies are still willing to incur that expense if a given employee has experience and expertise that's important to a company.

"Many companies feel they have invested their money wisely if they have made it acceptable and possible for that employee to move to a new location where they are most needed, and more over, they want to be sure they keep them with the company," said Foster.

Foster said that the major areas of assistance include: home sales programs, home finding assistance, transportation of household goods and mortgage finance assistance. Most of the home sales programs, according to Foster, have several features in common. Most of them require one to three conventional appraisals from the local independent fee paid appraisers. Once received, the appraisals are usually averaged and a guaranteed offer is made to the employee based on that average. The employees are typically urged to place their homes on the market as soon as they know of the transfer.

Karen Foster

"This so called marketing period, the time the employee has available to accept the company offer or sell the house themselves, is critically important for the employee," stated Foster.

Many companies offer incentives to their employees if they find a buyer on their own before having to sell to their company or relocation company. Since these marketing periods are usually brief, typically 40 to 60 days, the transferee really needs to have their Realtor help them put together an aggressive marketing plan just as soon as they know of their transfer. To maximize their chance of a sale their marketing program needs to be not only aggressive, it needs to be very realistic. "If they grossly overprice their home," Foster said, "they are just eliminating whatever positive chances they might otherwise have had with their marketing."

"One key area of the relocation process that usually is not given enough serious attention," explained Foster, "is the home finding trip. These trips are very expensive for the companies and can be quite traumatic for the employee. The employees have a relatively brief time to usually learn a whole new city and make some very major decisions that could impact their family for a long time. They need to be certain that they are going to get the very best assistance and guidance that's available. And the best way to ensure that is to go through a local broker that you know and have confidence in. That broker can then refer you to a corresponding broker in the new city that they have had proved success and satisfaction through in past transactions.

The key to a successful transfer begins with making sure you've got the best available people to assist you. Then, with their assistance, developing a well-conceived and executed plan that maximizes your chances for success within what limited time you may have.

"A very large percentage of our business at Don Harvey, Realtors comes from corporate relocation activities," Foster concluded. "This is mainly because of the vast amount of relocation experience we have at Don Harvey, Realtors. We have many associates with eight to 15 years of experience in working with transferees and management personnel, with as much as 12 years experience actually working for relocation companies. Don Harvey himself was one of the first key brokers in Midland to become involved with employee relocation, virtually from its beginning. He's even invited to serve as speaker or panelist at most of the employee relocation conventions and meetings across the country each year."

Essential steps are given for owners who want to redesign kitchen

Kitchens are probably the most complicated spaces to design. Trying to incorporate the varying functions such as food preparation, washing, family finance to general dining room. Its plan must flow smoothly and efficiently. The following is a guide to developing a plan to create a layout that will succeed:

■ Make a list — List everything your dream kitchen would have. This list might contain additional counter space, bookshelves, open feeling, skylight, craft area, office, special equipment. Next, compare your "dream" kitchen to your present one and then prioritize the items or areas that you must have.

■ Cost estimates — Visit local retailers to get an idea of estimated cost. Have a plan with sizes of areas desired. See how the estimates fit within your budget. Revise your list or re-define, if necessary. Once you have your "plan" developed, start developing an "idea file."

■ Idea file — Read everything you can find that gives you ideas on how people handled similar projects. Take lots of notes and make a list on all the items to be changed. Collect ideas, including pictures out of magazines, to help you decide how you are going to handle the project. Visiting showrooms and homes, whether they are new, old or that of a friends, is an excellent way to find ideas.

The sources that are available for decorating ideas are retail stores, special interest magazines that deal with remodeling, library, television shows and movies.

■ Consideration — Before making any final decisions think about the following: How is the kitchen used now and how will it be used five years from now? Other import areas for consideration include ample storage space, natural or artificial lighting, efficiency of area, adequate walk space, placement of appliances, counter space next to refrigerator, possibility of enough room for guests to gather when entertaining, maintenance of counter tops, floors, sink and cabinets, electrical requirements, telephone/message area, resale value, kid's snack area, greenhouse, wine storage, pantry and dining area. It is also very important to decide what colors and styles that you want to use throughout this area.

Next, a homeowner needs to decide what kind of professional help will be required to consult for your project. This would include: flooring installer, electrician, plumber, carpenter, painter, wallpaper hanger, ceramic tile installer, tile designer, interior designer, architect and lighting consultant.

Anyone can design their kitchen to fit their lifestyle — all it takes is an overall, well-defined plan. Whether you are planning from the ground up or moving into a ready-built home or apartment, you can design a space that best suits your requirement and reflects your personality.

This information was supplied by Lucy Nye, a local interior designer and an instructor at Midland College. If you have any questions about decorating, write to Designedly yours, c/o Homes and Living, P.O. Box 1650, Midland, Texas, 79702.

Coldwell Banker has associates that make a difference in Midland market

Coldwell Banker has more than 2,100 residential real estate offices and more than 38,000 sales associates across the nation. In Midland, Coldwell Banker Adobe Inc., Realtors has many professional agents that help make Coldwell Banker a successful real estate company.

Five agents that have helped make a difference in the Midland real estate market are Mary Jo Drury, Patty Frizell, Bill Hartzoge, Donna Pehl and Barbara Stone. These associates bring many years of experience and dedicated to their customers and clients.

Drury

Mary Jo Drury has been in the real estate business for 16 years and has been a million and multi-million dollar producer. After living in Midland for 15 years, Drury feels she can help people feel at east and can make their move much easier. "One of the reasons I enjoy the real estate business is because I enjoy meeting new people. I also like helping transferees and since I have been a Midland resident for years, I really am able to help introduce people to the Midland community," explained Drury.

Drury is a member of St. Ann's Catholic Church where she is an active communion minister. She has two son, one married and living in Dallas where he is vice president for NCNB. Her other son lives in Paris, France and is a CPA for Price Waterhouse.

Frizell

Despite having been transferred in and out of Midland many times, Patty Frizell has claimed Midland as home since 1956. "Our city continues to be a wonderful place to live and raise your family," she declares. "One appreciates Midland even more with every transfer," and for Patty and her husband, Jim, those transfers have included cities and towns of all sizes.

"I feel that I understand exactly how the transferee family feels, and assisting them in an orderly and trouble free move to their new home is my speciality," added Frizell.

Since joining the Coldwell Banker Adobe family in 1985, Frizell has been an active member of the Midland Board of Realtors and currently serves as chairman of the membership committee. She is also a member of Texas Association of Realtors (TAR), the National Association of Realtors (NAR), Trinity Presbyterian Church and the Midland Quilters' Guild.

The Frizell family includes son , Mac, and daughter, Janet, their spouses and three wonderful grandchildren.

Hartzoge

Previously associated with oil and gas exploration, Hartzoge has been a Realtor for two years and a Midland resident since 1971.

"My goal is to obtain the very best for the client that can be negotiated. To obtain the best price for the seller and to find the right home at the right price for the buyer," explained Hartzoge. "I strive to be a complete real estate agent, able to help with any transaction."

To accomplish this, Hartzoge has recently completed courses in creative financing and real estate appraisal. These courses will enable him to do his job better with satisfied customers who appreciate the extra step.

In addition to his petroleum experience, Hartzoge is a member of one of the long time farming and ranching families of Midland County. Through this association, he has an excellent knowledge of rural and suburban Midland and is particularly qualified to help with country properties. Commercial properties have also played an important part in his real estate career and these have been as rewarding and fulfilling as the residential and rural transactions.

When away from the office, Hartzoge can usually be found at his farm or riding one of his horses. He is also a member of the Midland Board of Realtors, TAR and NAR.

Pehl

Donna Pehl moved to Midland eight years ago from Houston, at which time she began her real estate career at Coldwell Banker Adobe Inc., Realtors. She enjoys the every day challenge of the Midland market and getting to know each of her clients on a personal basis.

Pehl graduated from the University of Texas and met her husband, Richard, there. The Pehls have a daughter, Tiffany, who attends Goddard Junior High.

Stone

Barbara Stone brings to Coldwell Banker Adobe a strong background in business, education and counseling. The combination of these attributes enhances the understanding of the prospective purchaser's needs, the esthetic as well as the financial needs.

"Working with people is what the real estate business is all about. Having been a high school teacher of business courses and a high school counselor, working with people on an intimate level is the usual," explained Stone. "In this field, defining the needs of prospective buyers requires communication. Helping those same buyers to located their dream home requires follow through. The end result is 'double enjoyment' when the Realtor has the pleasure of assisting a family find that perfect home."

Stone is currently in the process of completing the GRI designation from the TAR. She has a B.A. degree in business and a M.A. degree in psychology.

Langston Realtors Talk About...

Strengthening real estate market: How to trade properties

Q. What's happening in the market? J.B.

A. There is good news for both buyers and sellers! For buyers, there has been a modest 6 percent rise in the number of properties on the market. A good selection is available in most areas at prices equal to or, in some areas and price ranges, at 5 percent to 10 percent below those of last year. However, we are not expecting this to continue indefinitely; a flurry of late summer incoming transferees and lower interest rates have contributed to an increasing number of sales and a stronger market for sellers. Many buyers who delay in making a decision are finding that their number one choice is under contract and no longer available. And most are finding that sellers are holding firm to their asking figures, especially if the property is competitively priced for the market.

Langston

The strongest indication of a rebounding market are July's 28 percent rise over last year in the average sales price of properties sold through MLS, June's 10 percent increase and May 13 percent rise. A trend has definitely been established for a stronger market.

Q. I am interested in trading my property for a larger, more expensive home. Can this be accomplished? M.B.J.

A. We quite frequently negotiate trades; the only difficulty is in finding the right two parties (and properties) for the transaction. There are several advantages to trading properties rather than selling and buying: (1) You are not "stuck" with two properties, i.e. a new purchase and a previous home still unsold; (2) Combined costs of selling and buying are often less, especially if a trade of equities can be accomplished; (3) Because possession dates are simultaneous, they are more easily arranged for the convenience of both parties and neither party faces storage of furniture and (4) You are never in the position of not having a home, that is having sold your present home but not having found one to buy.

The biggest disadvantage to trading properties is the limitation in the choice of homes; there may be 20 homes you can look at to purchase but none of those 20 sellers may be able to consider trade possibilities. Length of time can also be a disadvantage because while a sale then purchase can often be accomplished in a few months, it might require six months or more to find the right "fit" for a trade.

Many individuals think that if they can trade properties, they will avoid paying a sales commission on their present home. This may or may not be true; it depends on the number of Realtors involved, the selling parties and the negotiations between them. Do consider that four transactions occur — two sales and two purchases — and that the Realtor is spending four times as many hours and effort than if only one transaction were involved.

Many of the advantages found in a trade situation can be accomplished through listing your house for sale, looking at the market, then negotiating a contingency contract when you find the home you want to purchase. If the home sells before you can remove the contingency, then you still have a house and can just continue to look! These transactions as well as trades, are welcome challenges to our experienced agents and, in the past, have resulted in some very innovative solutions to a customer's problem. Just recently I had a three way trade in negotiation and was not able to accomplish it only because one of the parties was transferred. That's what makes this business so interesting and exciting — and makes us like it so much!

Advice offered on historically accurate decor

A home needn't be decorated like a museum, but for historically accurate interiors follow the advice given in Country Home magazine by The Wool Bureau Inc.

■ Wing chairs don't really belong in the living room. In the 18th century, wing chairs were designed for moments of relaxation in one's bedroom.

■ Despite the 20th-century mania for stripping wood, that glorious 18th-century wood paneling was designed to be painted. Paint was an expensive status symbol. A gentleman who could afford a paneled library would never have left it unfinished.

■ Textiles were a precious commodity in early America. Curtains were skimpy and many windows had no coverings at all. Special fabrics were most likely to be used as bed curtains in the master bedroom.

Out on a Whim

George Wolf/Reporter-Telegram

Entrepreneurs (left to right) Judy Bishop, Nina Green and Marylinn Schwanitz, head "Footprints on Canvas," a business where guests at parties place their footprints on canvas as a keepsake of the event for the honoree.

"But a man has got to do what he has got to do. I am just grateful I had the talent and experience to diversify in order to supplement my drilling income."

— music producer Dennis Grubb

Brian Adamcik/Reporter-Telegram

To add some tropic color to Midland, Diane Faulkner (kneeling) teaches Tahitian dancing to students such as Denise Morales.

Succeeding in second careers

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO
Lifestyle Writer

Doug Sehres/Reporter-Telegram

By day, Dennis Grubb works in the oil business, but by night and on weekends, he is a music producer.

Starting a music production company in Midland to bill top country and western stars may seem as zany as drilling for oil in downtown Nashville, Tenn., but Dennis Grubb is not one to back down to a good idea. Neither is Diane Faulkner, a Tahitian dance teacher, who decided the flat plains of Midland needed the color, sound and excitement of the tropics. The two entrepreneurs would probably also applaud the artistic efforts of three enthusiastic women who started a business of putting partygoers' footprints on canvas, creating unique keepsakes.

Despite their diverse vocations, all the enterprising individuals have one thing in common — they are going out on a whim to succeed in second careers. They have joined the legions of Americans who are launching second careers to satisfy creative or financial needs. Over 1 million Americans started new businesses in 1988, according to "In Business" magazine.

Many experts cite the home computer as the technologial tool which has enabled users to operate small businesses. Personal computer enable their users to create products — newsletters, desktop publishing and payroll — and do their accounting professionally at home.

The latest trend in entrepreneurship of the 80s is that more than one-third of the businesses that have been started are owned by women, a dramatic change from 15-20 years ago, according to a study conducted at Babson College in Wellesly, Mass.

People who start second career business may not necessarily do it just for economic reasons either. Many of them take on a second vocation simply to exercise their creativity, to try their hand at something they have always wanted to do. Often a hobby or an interest can develop into an after hour business. When people start their own businesses as a second income, there is less pressure to emphasize profits, and more room for creativity.

Nina Green is one of those people who started several artistic ventures to exercise her creativity. She hopes to develop these ventures into her full-time career. After being laid off from a law firm which she had been employed with for four years, she decided not to continue in the same line of work. Her greatest endeavor is "Footprints on Canvas," an original concept in which a gift of artwork is created for an honree at party.

"I got the idea after taking a course in teaching art to children at Texas Tech," (where she earned a degree in elementary education) Ms. Green said. "Several neighborhood children wanted to paint on canvas, so I got the idea to use acrylic paint and place their footprints on canvas."

The idea evolved into making canvas artworks at parties, to give honorees a unique gift. Ms. Green, and assistants Marylinn Schwanitz and Judy Bishop, prepare the paint and wash the participants feet after the footprint is made.

"It's a great way to perk up a party, especially a party for children," Ms. Schwanitz said, who is a former geologist who quit work to stay home with her children after her second child was born. She said she became interested in Footprints on Canvas after witnessing children's reaction to it.

"We made the footprints for children at a birthday party for children. There was a lot of laughter and excitement for the guests, and we added the dog's footprints to the canvas," Ms. Schwanitz said.

Ms. Schwanitz said the job is "very social," an ideal arrangement for her that she would like to have expand into a full-time job, "especially after my children start school," she said.

"The best part of the job is seeing an idea become a reality," Ms. Bishop said. "A footprint is a unique expression of a person we normally wouldn't think about; let alone think about putting feet on the wall" she said. Ms. Bishop, who has a full-time job with an oil and gas consulting firm, said she got involved in Footprints because it was "a fun, creative outlet."

"I was also able to get my 15-year-old daughter, Daylyn, involved," she said, "It was something we could do together."

Daylyn, a Lee High School student, came up with the idea of lipprints on canvas for Valentine's Day gifts for sweethearts.

Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

The thirty-third season of the Santa Fe Opera was enjoyed by a group of Midlanders, under the auspices of the Music Ministry of First United Methodist Church.

In the semi-outdoor setting of the opera, the group enjoyed performances of "La Traviata" and "Der Rosenkavalier," in which former Midlander and mezzo-soprano Susan Graham made her debut with the opera. The daughter of Betty and Floyd Graham, Susan has been assigned two leading roles with the opera next summer.

While half the travelers chose to see a third opera, "Cherubin," the others journeyed to the village of Chimayo for dinner at the charming, converted ranchouse, Rancho de Chimayo.

Other highlights included a backstage tour of the opera, a visit to Canyon Road, now one of the country's most famous art gallery meccas; the shopping, and dining in some of the city's well-known restaurants, including The Pink Adobe and La Tertulia. Several of the group enjoyed lunching with Susan at Cafe Zia.

The trip was arranged by Brad and Jane Kisner, directors of music ministry at the church, and Jane Ward, who taught a class on opera in preparation for the event.

Others going from Midland were Jane's husband, Bob Ward; Linda and George Moore, Martha Black, Geri Griffin, Jerry Landua, Betty Barnes, Aida Dunlap, Margaret Cerf, Faye Norton, Ruth Story, Hazel Grieneeks, Betty (Mrs. Bill) Sumner, Jo Ann (Mrs. George) Clark and Lee (Mrs. George) Harley. They were joined by former Midlanders Ruth and Charles Lutrick of Lubbock and Ruth Story's sister, Nell Huff of Denver.

DOUG PATTESON, grandson of Vera and Paul Wecker, has accepted an appointment as foreign service officer with the State Department in Washington, D.C.

Doug is a graduate of Memorial High School in Houston and the University of Texas at Austin. He is the son fo Houstonians Paula and Don Patteson, former residents of Midland.

RACHEL AND OLEY HEDRICK traveled to Fort Worth recently for the wedding of Muffy Hodges and Wayne Watson. The bride is the daughter of former Midlanders Buffy and Hampton Hodges, now of Paris, Texas.

The wedding was held Aug. 12 in the First United Methodist Church, with senior pastor, Dr. Barry Bailey, officiating. The attendants included Muffy's sisters, Elsie, Holly and Harolyn Hodges. A reception followed in the church's Fellowship Hall.

Former Midlanders present included Sherli and Bob Cochrane and daughter, Wendy, of Fort Worth, and Evelyn and the Rev. Jack Daniels of Waco.

The couple will reside in Fort Worth. The groom is an attorney there, and the bride is a salesperson for a Dallas pharmaceutical company.

FILLED WITH NEW MEXICO atmosphere and charm, Red River has long been my family's annual vacation retreat. The village is located high in the majestic Sangre de Cristo Mountains in the northern part of the state.

Just back from a visit there, we have fond memories of the cool summer evenings and exhilarating days, the beautiful scenery, the laid-back pace, and a respite from ringing telephones and the daily grind.

The Valley Lodge, with Bill Ashton, a native of Ballinger, Texas, as our host, has been our "home away from home" for the past 14 years. Just down the street, we visited with former Midlanders, Diana and Danny Jentsch and their daughter, Kim, who own the Redwood Lodge and Cafe and Red Dawg Ski Shop. Danny was with Engelman-General Inc. when the family lived here.

We enjoyed visiting the dozens of one-of-a-kind shops, scenic drives, hiking, the various activities at the Community House, the familiar log building in the heart of Red River, and points of interest in the surrounding area. A highlight was a visit to the Red River Gallery of Fine Arts, which features the paintings and sculptures of well-known artist, Dr. Kenneth Wyatt. A set of prints of his "The Twelve Apostles" paintings grace Midland's First United Methodist Church.

While visiting Santa Fe, practically the first people we saw in the Plaza were Midlanders Betty and C.C. Tull, with son and daughter-in-law, Doug and Marcy Tull, and 10-week old daughter, Allison.

Betty tells us she has had lots of company this summer at her Santa Fe home, incluidng Beverly (Mrs. Forrest) Muire, Betty Jo Morgan and Ava Jane Warren.

Betty asked us to join her the next day in Taos for a reception at the Navajo Gallery on Ledoux Street. The gala event featured a new collection of drawings, bronzes, and lithographs by the distinguished Navajo artist, R.C. Gorman, and a book signing party of the new cookbook, "Nudes and Foods, Volume 2," which he has illustrated.

We also enjoyed a reception at Gallery Elena, which features new works by artist Veloy Vigil.

IT'S YOUR LIFE

Chronic brain disorder patients can be helped

By STEVE EDWARDS

Edwards

Up to 40 percent to 75 percent of the cases of Alzheimer's disease or Alzheimer's-like diseases can be identified by changes which are visible under the microscope, and by shrinkage of brain tissue. Other chronic brain syndromes are caused by arteriosclerotic dementia, occasionally low thyroid hormone, pernicious anemia, hydrocephalus, hereditary dementias, syphilis and other diseases. Although most Alzheimer's and Alzheimer's-like dementias are untreatable, as many as 40 percent can be either cured or halted.

The cause of any mental change should be looked for and treated promptly, if possible. Never assume a decline in mental functions is a part of normal aging or "hardening of the arteries." Nearly all patients with chronic brain syndromes can be helped to live more fully.

To help a patient with Alzheimer's or Alzheimer's-like disease:

- Accept the person without reservation or citicism. Don't infantilize or depersonalize.
- Stimulate the person; prevent withdrawal. Keep personal contact.
- Orient the person. Remind him or her of location, who you are, the date, etc. Keep daily activities organized and consistent.
- Avoid confusion.
- Watch for physical or mental changes. Seek appropriate help.
- Protect from injury.
- Use support services, such as Visiting Nurse Service, Meals on Wheels, Mental Health-Mental Retardation.
- Watch for loss of communication or function. Visual or hearing loss, no contact with people or television, being bedridden, etc., will worsen a dementia.

Not all mental changes are caused by organic brain syndromes. The elderly, like other people, are susceptible to mental illness. Elderly people who have previously suffered from mental illness are more likely to develop the same problems in old age.

Some of these illnesses include:

- Reactive depressions: related to stressful life changes, such as loss of a spouse, close friend, function, job or home. Because major changes are common for the elderly, reactive depressions are common and should be watched for.
- Unipolar/bipolar affective disorders: depressions and manic disorders that are related to biochemical abnormalities in the brain. These disorders may be treatable with certain drugs.
- Schizophrenia: a common mental illnesses also found in the elderly, especially among the long-institutionalized. Specific drugs for schizophrenia have helped.
- Alcohol abuse: surprisingly common among the elderly. Loneliness and poverty help compound this problem.
- Suicide: very common and difficult problem among the elderly, and probably related to depression and alcohol abuse. Elderly white males have the highest suicide rate for any single group in this country. Concern, recognition and help are crucial.

Medical problems among the elderly are special and complex. Geriatric health workers and family caregivers must know of problems that accompany aging and where to find medical and social supports.

Eyedrops enter bloodstream

Copley News Service

It may come as a surprise, but using eyedrops can produce bad side effects.

The problem is that the drops often travel through your tear ducts and into your nose.

Once there, the bloodstream quickly absorbs them.

This explain why glaucoma medication can sometimes cause high blood pressure, depression and even heart attacks.

Doctors at Emory University in Atlanta have discovered what makes eyedrops so dangerous: They're simply too big.

Drops range in size from 25 to 56 microliters, but our eyes can hold only 10 microliters of fluid.

When doctors narrowed the tip of the eyedropper, it delivered more medication to the eye and a lot less to the bloodstream, even when the medication was more concentrated.

DEAR ABBY

Life's true treasures held in heart, not hand

EDITOR'S NOTE: Abby is off on a two-week vacation, but she left behind some of her favorite letters taken from her best-selling book, "The Best of Dear Abby."

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: About a month ago we had a flash flood, and I lost nearly all the treasures I had saved for 45 years. Albums filled with pictures and snapshots, letters, clippings — none of which can be replaced. I had them stored in plastic containers, and when I opened them, all I found was mud and water!

It seems that a part of my life is gone, and I am heartsick over it. I am 60 years old and have had a very happy life. Our children are married and gone, and there are just the two of us.

I've tried to keep busy and not dwell on my loss, but it is on my mind constantly. I wish I could forget this terrible nightmare.

Somehow, I feel that you can help me, Abby. Have you ever lost any of your treasures? And if you have, how did you get over it? — DEPRESSED

DEAR DEPRESSED: Yes, dear. I lost my beautiful mother in 1945. (She was only 57.) And a few years later, I lost a wonderful father. (He was 62.) And not a day passes that I don't thank God for letting me have my parents for as long as I did. I know many who were not nearly as blessed as I, and I think of those who have survived a far greater tragedy — losing their children.

Now, what were you saying about clippings and pictures and other "treasures"?

DEAR ABBY: My husband's brother is the kind who will walk into your house, head right for the refrigerator, and help himself. It has always burned me up, but I've never said anything. Sunday Ned did that stunt again. He took out a bowl of liver and mashed potatoes I had scraped off everybody's plates and mixed for cat food. I was saving it for my neighbor's cat, which I am feeding while she is on vacation. Well, Ned made himself a big sandwich of this stuff, got himself a beer, and seemed to enjoy it. I never said a word until he got all through, and then I told him what he ate. I am not going to tell you what happened after that, Abby, but I laughed so hard I cried. Ned isn't talking to me and neither is my husband. Did I do anything so terrible? The stuff was fresh and wouldn't have killed anybody. — ELSIE

DEAR ELSIE: I think that's hilarious, but you could have waited a few days to tell him.

DEAR ABBY: Will you please tell me when, where and how the toilet came to be known as a john? Thank you. — WIFE AND MOTHER OF A JOHN, NOT A TOILET

DEAR WIFE: In researching the subject, I learned more about toilets than I cared to know. I found several conflicting theories on how the toilet came to be known as "the john," the most reasonable explanation being that the first toilet was called "john" after its English inventor back in the early 1800s.

I bought it, after checking it out with a plumber in Flushing.

Don't put off writing thank-you notes, letters of sympathy, etc., because you don't know what to say. Get Abby's booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions." Send a check or money order for $2.89 ($3.39 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054 (postage is included).

"We also have created a package deal for newborns of framed handprints and footprints, signed with the baby's date and time of birth," Ms. Bishop said.

Ms. Green said her business is "about creativity. It's not a matter of money, it's the doing — pursuing a dream of satisfaction — that makes the difference. It's one thing to have a dream and another to put action to it."

Ms. Green plans to custom design notecards, including a line of footprint notecards called "Footnotes." Her biggest goal is to franchise her business, but Footprints on Canvas is her favorite endeavor. "After all," she said, "where else can you gather friends together and offer them an opportunity to play in paint?"

Another person exercising her creativity for fun and profit is Diane Faulkner, a unit coordinator in orthopedics at Midland Memorial Hospital by day, and an exotic Tahitian dancer by night. Ms. Faulkner, who started taking Tahitian and Hawaiian dancing lessons in 1981 in San Diego, got interested in the South Island dancing because it was "fast and exciting, and Hawaiian dancing was so graceful — telling stories with your hands."

One of her students, Denise Morales, took up Tahitian dancing because "it comes from the heart." She had previous experience with the dance from when she learned it from Somoans while living in Germany.

Ms. Faulkner didn't think about teaching Tahitian dancing until Midland Community Theatre's production of the musical "South Pacific."

"I was a nurse and an island girl in the show. When I discovered there was no dancing in the show, I talked to Don Bachmann (MCT's executive director) and he wrote the dancing into the show, and I taught it."

Soon after, Ms. Faulkner began teaching lessons to students age 3 and up. "My own teacher in San Diego was 65 when she taught me, so there is no age limit to participating in Tahitian dance," she said.

Ms. Faulkner and her students began performing in shows for Celebration of the Arts, Summer Mummers, Fiesta del Arte and other area events. Her best moment was performing at Sea World of San Antonio in June.

HER GOAL with her dance classes is to perform and teach full-time. "I would love to travel more to performances," she said. "I would also love to work full-time, and be my own boss. There is something real satisfying about sharing a talent with others, especially the young children, and watching them grow."

She said the best part of her job is sitting in the audience and watching the looks on the parents' faces when they see their children perform for the first time. "They are surprised that their children do so well," she said.

Although many individuals start second careers as an outlet for their creativity, several studies indicate that people usually take on a second job to supplement their income. Dennis Grubb falls into that category.

During the downturn of the economy, when the price of oil dropped in 1986, the drilling company Grubb worked for shut down. "It was a time of gloom and doom," Grubb said. "The oil slump had taken away my job, and my friend's jobs, through no fault of our own. I saw so much depression, despair, marriages ending in divorce, friends losing their jobs, people going bankrupt and losing their homes, I decided to do something."

What Grubb did was to revert to his musical roots and stage Oil Aid, a party for Midlanders which parodied fund-raising parties like Farm Aid. Grubb solicited funds from people in the oil business and banking to pay for party expenses. The party, which began on a Friday evening, culminated with a Roy Orbison concert the following Saturday evening. "It was a fun event designed to shake off the black cloud everyone was under," Grubb said. "Ironically enough, after the concert, the price of oil went up."

Grubb's career was launched due to the notoriety resulting from an Associated Press story written about Oil Aid. "It appeared in at least 60 stories around the world," Grubb said, "and I received calls from many friends in the music business encouraging me to continue producing events."

ALTHOUGH OIL AID was a bigger success than Grubb anticipated, he was no newcomer to the music business. He was an entertainer in his youth, and cut a 45 rpm record at age 16. "It had several rock and roll songs on it," Grubb said. Even though he was content with his music vocation, Grubb quit singing and songwriting to attend college, "namely to avoid the draft," he said.

"It hurt to be away from music," Grubb said. But he became involved in drilling and ignored his musical inclinations for many years. Oil Aid eased the driller from the oil patch back into the music world. Since then he has brought big name country and western singers to Midland including Ronnie Milsap, Janie Fricke and Charley Pride. He has also produced entertainment for chairty events in Midland. Once word got out about his success with Midland fund-raisers, Grubb began producing fund-raisers in Dallas and Houston.

"Midland doesn't take a back seat to any big city when it comes to dollars raised at charity events," Grubb said. "In fact, the generosity of Midlanders is what has allowed me to succeed as a producer in Midland."

Grubb's production work has blossomed, and he is currently producing two concerts for the Charley Pride Golf Classic in Albuquerque, N.M. "I'm a driller by day and a producer weekends and evenings," he said.

If that weren't enough, Grubb keeps busy in spare moments writing songs. The producer recently took 11 songs to the president of Ronnie Milsap Enterprises. "He accepted five of them," Grubb said. If any of them are recorded, Grubb said, "it will just be the icing on the cake," of his music career.

However, Grubb said his entertaining days are over. "I like to write the songs, set up the show, and let the musicians and singers perform," he said.

GRUBB, WHO was born and raised in Midland, said the beauty of his vocation is that he can have a fast-paced job while living in the slow-paced Tall City, and he can work at two jobs which he finds satisfying. "You have to live in other places to appreciate Midland," he said. "West Texas can be the loneliest of lonely places to live or it can be the most inspirational. There's no freeways to deal with. It doesn't take an hour to get home from work and you don't have to leave the house at six to get somewhere at eight. There are the cultural advantages and the generosity of the people, not to mention West Texas' ugly, rustic beauty. I love it, here."

The disadvantage of Grubb's second career is that it cuts down on his social time and takes time away from his family and friends. "But a man has got to do what he has got to do," Grubb said. "I am just greatful I had the talent and experience to diversify in order to supplement my drilling income."

Grubb spends hours on the phone and hours traveling. "There's a lot of work and pressure to producing the out-of-town shows," he said. "But when the lights go down and the spotlights come up, I breathe a sigh of relief, and it's all worth it."

Antique lace adds elegant accents

New York Times News Service

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. — Antique lace items for wardrobes and home accessories are adding elegant accents to contemporary lifestyles. Almost as intriguing as the intricate stitches that create the exquisite designs is the history of lace, an art that dates back almost four centuries.

"Back then, lace was worth 10 times more than the price of gold. It was the most expensive commodity in the world, because the demand exceeded the supply. People were born, married and buried in lace. Even criminals were executed in lace," said Nomada, who goes by the name she adopted in the 1960s. (It means female nomad, she explained.)

She is the owner of Victorian Vogue, a shop that features lace pieces ranging from parasols to handkerchiefs.

Also taken with lace is Teri Ascolese, who collects and sells a variety of items made of antique textiles like brocades, velvets, needlepoints and linens.

"But lace is my favorite," said Ascolese. "It's becoming more appreciated all the time, a lost art that people are starting to collect. Designers are incorporating it as trim on their garments."

Nomada is particularly fascinated with the history of lace, an extremely complicated and delicate art that was done completely by hand, which is what made it so scarce and so valuable.

"Much of the lace at the time was made of a flax that was so fine it was almost invisible," she said. "Because the thread was so delicate, it couldn't be subjected to daylight. The women who made it had to work in dark cellars illuminated only by candles burning on the other side of a piece of glass. In the winter, the women worked above the stables, where the horse dung would keep them warm. Most of the lacemakers were blind by the age of 30."

Lace merchants were the leading men of the town, people with money, position and prestige — often important public figures in some honorary municipal office. Lace was a highly esteemed trade. There was money in it, and more and more set out to get rich by it.

Lace was often used as a status symbol. Wealthy families commissioned artisans to make items for their wardrobes and homes.

"Henry VIII, the English king, passed the Acts of Apparel that decreed that no one under the rank of knight could wear lace," said Nomada. "One pattern was created specifically for the king of Denmark. Only he could wear it."

LEADING LACEMAKERS in the 15th century were found in Belgium and Italy.

"These countries charged such an enormous excise tax on their valuable commodity that other countries resorted to novel techniques for smuggling lace," Nomada said. "England employed professional mourners to accompany caskets full of lace across the borders. Funerals were actually held, and the coffins were buried, only to be dug up in the middle of the night.

"When the ruse was discovered, some wag reporter for a London paper observed in print that, 'Suddenly, the death rate on the continent dropped considerably,' " Nomada said.

The French smuggled Belgian lace by using dogs to run over the Belgian border. There, they were loaded up with as much as 25-pound sacks of the precious commodity.

"The Belgians fought back by offering rewards for the lace-smuggling canines," said Nomada. "In one year, 40,000 dogs were turned in."

Some countries were so jealous of their patterns that when the country went to war, lacemakers were killed so the patterns wouldn't get into enemy hands.

"When Louis XIV began to lure Italian lacemakers to France," said Nomada, "the Italian government issued a decree — if they didn't return, their next of kin would be jailed and not released until the lacemakers came back or were murdered."

Everything changed with the French Revolution in 1789 and the invention of the sewing machine in 1805, Nomada said.

"Suddenly, lace became accessible to the common man, and with machines to do the work, supply met the demand," she said.

Many of her current customers look upon their lacy purchases as wearable art. "They're having fun with it," said Nomada. "Some are wearing lace blouses with blue jeans. Some are college girls, who buy 100-year-old lace-trimmed cotton pantaloons to wear as loose and comfortable shorts.

"Lacy handkerchiefs are popular, and some people buy pieces of lace to frame and hang on their walls," she said. "I feel it may become valuable again. For now, though, it's one of the collectibles that's still quite reasonable."

Among the pieces Ascolese has on hand is a full-length gown of Irish lace. Circa 1910, it has slight cap sleeves, a scoop neck, empire bodice and a short train.

"There so many different kinds of lace, each more beautiful than another," said Ascolese.

MERRELL-SMITH

Cathy Ann Merrell of Indianapolis and Douglas Alan Smith of Midland are planning to be married 4:30 p.m. Nov. 4 at Saint James Lutheran Church in Lafayette, Ind. The bride-elect is the daughter of Larry and Dorothy Merrell of Lafayette. Viola Smith of West Lafayette, Ind., is mother of the future bridegroom.

Miss Merrell is employed with GTE. Her fiance is employed with Times Mirror Cable Television. Both are graduates of Purdue University.

SHEPPARD-BOWERS

Dana De'Anne Sheppard and Tony Dewayne Bowers, both of Midland, are planning an 8 p.m. Oct. 6 wedding at Alexander Temple C.O.G.I.C. in Midland. The bride-to-be is the daughter of Barbara Sheppard of Midland. Parents of the future bridegroom are Mr. and Mrs. B. Jackson of Midland.

Miss Sheppard graduated from Midland High School and Texas Institute in Dallas. She is employed with Peppermint Plantation Day Care. Her fiance, also an MHS graduate, is employed with Rich-Air Co.

Superficial talk is safe for first meeting

Copley News Service

When was the last time someone told you to be superficial? Try right now. According to Richard Gosse in the book "Singles Guide to America," that's one of the best ways to meet someone. He says people of the opposite sex feel each other out during the first five minutes of conversation. So superficial talk is "safe talk."

Gosse's other rules for singles success make sense: Take advantage of your friends, choose a job in the public eye and attend places where there are lots of strangers — preferably of the opposite sex.

College freshmen can live in parent's home

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

OK, students, let's assume you are lucky enough, or smart enough, to be accepted by a college or a university this fall. (Last year, the University of California at Berkeley reportedly turned away 2,400 students with an A average, and the University of Pennsylvania said no to 220 valedictorians.) Now, where are you going to live?

Dorms are already booked to the spoons-in-a-drawer stage. That could mean that you, along with thousands of other freshmen, have no choice but to continue living under the same roof as your parents.

So what's the big deal? You've always lived at home, right? The big deal is that 15 minutes after your graduation from high school, you entered the Twilight Zone. It's a place where you are old enough to do your own laundry, old enough to solve your own problems, old enough to help out with the household chores and old enough to share some financial responsibility. Yet you are too young to stay out past midnight, too young to have your own car, too young to be serious over anyone, too young to know what you want and too young to be tired all the time.

Since the only thing that stood between a campus dormitory and me was poverty, I lived at home all four years and commuted. My only reward was infinite wisdom.

Parents don't really equate going to college with a "real job." Their rationale seems to be that you wouldn't pay someone all that money not to have a good time. So the first rule is never to act like you're enjoying anything. Suffer — and do it publicly.

Parents do not understand the term "resting my eyes." They figure your eyes wouldn't be tired if you rested them at night like everyone else instead of running around. Better to use, "I'm concentrating."

Parents have been programmed to mistrust the phrase "I'm going to the library to study." They will not believe you if (a) the announcement comes every night between dinner and dishes; (b) you climb into a truck with 15 other people and a cooler in the back; and (c) it is 11 o'clock at night.

It is a myth that parents always want to know where their children are. They do and they don't. When their children live in dormitories, parents can soak in a tub of ignorance. When their child never calls, they can tell themselves that he dropped a Bible on his foot and can't hobble to a phone. When a child lives at home, parents feel compelled to outfit him with a beeper collar.

Every year, thousands of freshmen survive Family Life 101. Maybe it's a part of their education, too.

Dinner hosted for Butlers' anniversary

Mr. and Mrs. Charlie C. Butler of Midland celebrated their golden wedding anniversary with a family dinner party Saturday at La Bodega Restaurant. Hosts were the couple's children and their spouses.

Butler and the former Marjorie Watren were married Aug. 26, 1939, in Eastland. They have two children, Brenda Powell and Rick Butler, both of Midland, as well as four grandchildren, two step-grandchildren and one great-grandchild.

The couple lived in Eastland until 1953, when they moved to Midland. Butler is employed with Starline Printing. His wife works at Crestview Baptist Kindergarten and Day Care. They attend Crestview Baptist Church.

Dating expensive for men, women

Copley News Service

If you're planning on playing the dating game you had better check your finances first — even a brief romantic encounter can wreak havoc with your bank account.

Marketing students at George Brown College in Toronto have discovered that even a "low-budget date" — like a movie and a meal — will cost you $60.

And starry-eyed couples caught up in a short-lived courtship of a month or so can expect to spend $600 or more just to find out it wasn't meant to be.

Researcher Sandra Kennersen says most of the money goes for new hairdos, clothes, flowers, cards and other mushy stuff.

But just because courtship doesn't come cheap, it doesn't mean you should give up on love. Simply take the "Dutch treat" approach to dating until you get to know each other.

Lifestyle policies

Policies for publication of announcements in the Lifestyle sections of the Reporter-Telegram are:

Information for Sunday pages must be in our office by 5 p.m. the preceding Tuesday. For publication in a weekday paper, we must receive the information by noon two days before the information is to be published. For example, an item for Wednesday's paper must be received by noon Monday.

Engagement announcements must appear at least two weeks before the wedding date. Wedding announcements must appear within one month of the event. Anniversary announcements — 25th or higher — must be published within one month of the anniversary date.

Announcements of pageant winners will only be published for teenage pageants and older. Photographes will be published only for winners, not runner-ups. These announcements are published Tuesdays. Deadline is 5 p.m. Friday.

All articles must be submitted in writing. Forms for weddings, engagements and anniversaries, only published Sundays, are available in the Lifestyle office. All materials must include the signature and telephone number of the person submitting them.

We cannot mail forms to persons in Midland. Pictures must be picked up in the Lifestyle office within one month after publication. To have a photo returned by mail, include a self-addressed, stamped envelope. Unclaimed photos are discarded after a month.

Photographs may be submitted with wedding and engagement announcements, and anniversary announcements of 50 years or more, but are not required. A portrait of the bride-elect or of the future bride and bridegroom together may be submitted with engagement announcements. Portraits of the bride only or of the wedding couple may be submitted with wedding announcements. A different photo must be submitted for the engagement and wedding announcements.

Photos should be vertical, black and white, glossy finish, studio portraits. Studio color pictures may be submitted, but quality reproduction cannot be assured. Snapshots generally are not acceptable and Polaroid shots are not accepted. The MRT reserves the right to deny publication of any photo due to quality or content.

There is no charge for publication of photographs and stories.

Some newlyweds choose to hyphenate names

Copley News Service

Some married couples like to hyphenate their names. They might decide to become Mary Jones-Smith and John Jones-Smith, putting his or her name first. It's not necessary to go through a court proceeding to do this.

But it's only good manners to let family and friends know how to address you by sending "at-home" cards with wedding announcements. When writing thank-you notes, the bride should sign her new name.

Summer: Season of non-custodial visits

By Dr. LAWRENCE KUTNER
New York Times News Service

Steven Silva is dreading the day this month when he will wave goodbye to his 5-year-old daughter at the airport.

Silva and his former wife have shared custody of Meghann since they divorced four years ago. She has been staying in Minneapolis with her father, who remarried, since the beginning of June.

Meghann will return to her mother in New Hampshire in time to begin kindergarten in September.

"It's going to be a major readjustment for me," Silva said. "I'll pass by her bedroom and see the stuffed animals without her."

For many children, summer is the season for switching parents.

These summertime stays are more than simple extensions of the long weekends or holidays they have spent together.

Parents and children have time to adapt to each other and settle into a routine.

The pressure to do something special during a brief visit is replaced by an appreciation of the ordinary. In a monthlong or summerlong visit, there is enough time to do many things and enough time to do simply nothing together.

"These transitions are hard for kids. It's a reminder that their parents aren't together. It's very bittersweet."

—Vicky Lansky
author

THESE SUMMER visits can strengthen the bonds between children and the parent they see less often the rest of the year.

It also can cause problems, as children and adults try to handle the transition from one setting and one parent to another.

By anticipating and forestalling those problems, and understanding how to interpret the behavior of a child who is switching homes, divorced parents can make things easier on themselves and on their children.

"For the first week or so that she was with us," Silva said of his daughter, "whenever she was reprimanded she would say 'I want my mommy!' That quickly disappeared. It was her way of testing us."

Such tests, and the aggressive or demanding behavior that frequently accompanies them, are normal for children who have gone from one parent to another.

Persistent difficulties adjusting, like prolonged moodiness, anger or depression, often reflect the child's perception of ongoing battles between the divorced parents.

"The kids of parents who have the most hostility between them are going to have the most trouble adjusting," said Dr. William H. Watson, a staff psychologist at the family and marriage clinic at the University of Rochester Medical Center.

"The greater the unresolved tension in the divorce, the more of a loyalty conflict the child will feel."

Feelings of conflicting loyalty can make children particularly sensitive to their parents' emotions as the time to leave draws near.

A young child who has spent the summer with his father may tell him that he wishes he did not have to go home.

"You can't take those remarks at face value," said Dr. Marla B. Isaacs, a clinical psychologist in Philadelphia and the author of "The Difficult Divorce" (Basic Books, 1986).

"The child may be responding to the father's emotions and may want to convey how much she cares about him. She doesn't understand the implications of the statement."

SIMILARLY, THE parent who gets the child back after an extended visit elsewhere can feel left out when the child appears withdrawn after returning.

"Often a parent has unrealistic expectations that the child will say how glad she is to see her mom again and how much better her mom's home is than her dad's," said Dr. Teresa Peck, a developmental psychologist and divorce researcher at the Center for the Family in Transition in Corte Madera, Calif.

"Instead, expect the child to be tired, confused and grieving a bit for having left the other parent behind."

Peck, whose stepdaughter stays with her and her husband every summer, has found that children between the ages of 6 and 10 usually take the longest to adjust to the new household.

When they return, children of this age tend to be anxious about what happened while they were gone.

Adolescents may quickly ask to leave their welcoming parent to go see their friends, a request that, despite the frustration it causes for the parent, simply reflects the teenager's stage of social development.

"These transitions are hard for kids," said Vicki Lansky, the author of "Vicki Lansky's Divorce Book for Parents" (New American Library, 1989, $18.95).

"It's a reminder that their parents aren't together. It's very bittersweet."

Acceptance of fat is goal of association

New York Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Married eight years ago, Nancy Summer can still fit into the wedding dress that hangs in her closet.

"I'm proud of that," she said. "Of course, it's a size 52."

But just the idea that she dispensed with the yo-yo dieting and let her weight naturally settle on the scale is no small accomplishment for Summer, president of the National Association to Advance Fat Acceptance.

"Last year's summer clothes — they all fit. It's wonderful," said Summer, who finally accepted her weight, which now remains stable.

NAAFA, a Sacramento-based human-rights organization dedicated to improving the quality of life for fat people, is celebrating its 20th anniversary at its annual convention taking place now through Sunday at the Los Angeles Airport Marriott. Activism will be emphasized in workshops and a rally.

This year's theme is Media Images: The Big Picture, which homes in on both the negative and positive portrayals of fat people in the media.

The setting of the convention is especially appropriate in media-rich, appearance-conscious Los Angeles, said Noreen Henry, NAAFA's Los Angeles chapter president.

"L.A. is the mecca of thin — the whole imagery of that size-5, California blond is from here," said Henry, noting a constant assault of radio and TV ads for weight-loss clinics and diet products.

"It's a media blitz because this is the land of the body beautiful. Well, we don't subscribe to that body beautiful. We think our bodies are beautiful just the way they are."

The group's Big Image and Small Mind awards will be presented Friday for positive and negative portrayals of fat people by the media.

The front-runner for the Big Image award appears to be ABC-TV's hit comedy "Roseanne."

"We love 'Roseanne,'" Summer said. "We hate David Letterman, Johnny Carson, 'Mr. Belvedere' and 'Coach.'

"We are not amused by fat jokes. We really aren't."

William Fabrey, a self-proclaimed fat admirer who founded NAAFA in 1969, said Roseanne Barr's sitcom represents yet another milestone in the size-acceptance movement.

"It's the first time the American audience is exposed to a large woman going into the bedroom with her husband and not just going to sleep," said Fabrey, an engineer who lives in Charlottesville, Va., with his second wife, Summer.

For more information about NAAFA, write P.O. Box 188620, Sacramento, Calif. 95818; or call (916) 443-0303.

Divorced parents help children through their 'summer switch'

New York Times News Service

There are several things divorced parents can do to help their children make the change from one household to the other, including these:

■ Prepare the children for the transition. Talk about your plans for seeing each other in the future. Help the children realize that you're not giving them up to the other parent.

"Don't talk about how sorry you are to see your child go," said Dr. John Guidubaldi, a professor of psychology and counseling at Kent State University in Ohio who has studied children of divorce. "A lot of children worry quite a bit about the parent they're leaving."

■ Be especially sensitive if things did not go well during the visit. Children often misinterpret and blame themselves for stressful situations.

"The child may think, 'If I had been better, or if I had been prettier, he would have spent more time with me,'" said Dr. Marla B. Isaacs, an assistant professor of psychology and psychiatry at the University of Pennsylvania who has studied divorced parents and their families.

"There's a sense of relief at coming back home to the other parent, mingled with feelings of depression over having failed to have been sufficiently attractive or interesting."

■ Each parent can establish a symbolic bridge with the other by shopping with the child for a small thank-you gift for the other parent. This shows the child that you acknowledge and respect the other parent's role, and can help dissipate the child's feelings of disloyalty over having had a good time or wanting to go back.

■ Don't pump your child for information about what happened during the visit. "That's unfair, because it hits the child's sense of divided loyalties," said Dr. Teresa Peck, a developmental psychologist in Corte Madera, Calif. "The child doesn't want to feel like a spy."

Be sensitive to the way children answer your questions about the summer. If your queries are met with monosyllabic responses, back off for a while. Let your children control how much they tell you.

■ "If your ex-spouse is involved with someone else, don't ask questions unless you're prepared to hear the answers," Isaacs said. "Children will quickly sense your discomfort."

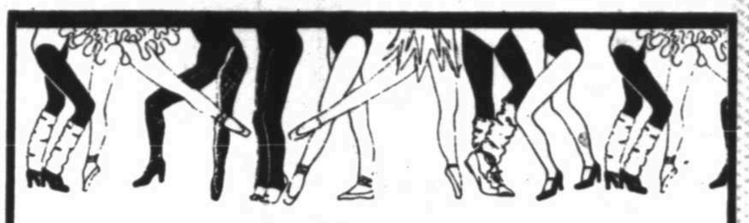

■ Finally, give your child time to decompress. "Don't hold any parties or sleepovers for the first week or two the child is back," Peck said.

Foods fads unique to Hawaiian Islands

Copley News Service

What the heck is a musu burrito? Or a Spam musubi? Well, they happen to be the latest fast food rage in the Hawaiian Islands.

Musubi is a Japanese rice ball that's wrapped in dried seaweed called nori. Nothing unusual there. But Honolulu writer Wayne Harada says creative minds are turning musubi into wild food combinations.

FALL '89 FASHION

DRESS FOR SUCCESS ... BY DAY AND BY NIGHT

Location courtesy Cafe West

Office attire for Bruce Williams (right) consists of a 100 percent wool two-piece Polo suit by Ralph Laren worn with a R.& O. Harvick shirt and Talbott Studio Italian silk tie.

But for after-hours parties (above), Williams removes his suit coat and business tie and adds a 100 percent lambswool sweater vest by Kenneth Gordon and a 100 percent silk Polo tie Ralph Laren. Ms. Spicer transforms her ensemble to an elegant style by removing the scarf and adding a black bead and rhinestone necklace and rhinestone earrings by Ginnie Johansen.

Text by ELIZABETH EDWIN Photos by CURT WILCOTT

Almost everyone enjoys getting all dressed up occasionally. But quite often, there just isn't time. After a long day at work and several last minute details to attend to, many individuals just don't have time to go home, pull out their formal ensembles and spiff up for a night out.

But with the ever-expanding line of accessories available for both men and women and the variety of fabrics and textures being used, transforming a professional image into evening attire is becoming much easier. In fact, most of these changes are so easy, they can be made in the office or in the car.

The most important aspect is to select the proper outfit to begin with.

For women, "First you should start with a basic dress," said Sherry Hewett, manager for Robbie Casey's in Midland. "Jewel necks are great. They are easy to change." For example, Ms. Hewett suggested a basic black dress accented with a scarf over the shoulder for office wear. Then for the evening, remove the scarf and add strings of pearls and matching earrings, change to black-tinted hose and put on dress shoes. Chances are very few people will even realize it is the same outfit.

Because of it's versatility, the "little black dress" — made famous and glamourous by Coco Chanel — is still considered a best buy. With the abundance of fashion jewelry — once called costume jewelry — changing your jewelry can be as dramatic as changing your entire ensemble. Not only is this a convenient way to change to a more elegant look for after-work festivities, it also is a great way to expand a wardrobe.

Although changing a man's business suit from a professional image to a party image is not as easy as transforming a woman's attire, it can be done.

"Even in menswear, there is a lot more variation and coloration," said James Borron, owner and manager of J.E. Borron in Midland. Even though men generally do not put much emphasis on jewelry — tie bars, tie tacks, bracelets, necklaces — Borron said, "The pocket squares, even for business suits, are very big. Suspenders and pattern socks for day or evening also are ways men can alter their attire."

If a man were going directly from his office to an after-work party, he might choose to remove his suit coat and substitute a sweater vest. Another easily changed accessory is the tie; exchange the conservative, corporate business tie for a more colorful tie. A change of shoes might also help change the look, as well as help the feet.

Borron believes men are becoming more fashion conscious, and in response to that, designers and manufacturers are creating many new looks for men.

One of these new looks is the vest. Although generally regarded as an item of clothing, the vest will be used more as an accessory item for men and women in fall fashions, according to Borron. However, he expects women to grasp this fashion concept much quicker than men.

"Vests for men are being sold, but they will probably not catch on as quickly," as the women's items will. During the fashion market recently in Dallas, Borron said almost without exception, every designer line showed vests as a new, yet old, look for fall. From sequins to denim to leather and suede, in every size and shape, vests will be a hot item to dress up existing wardrobes.

"Some vests were even reversible, making them more versatile," Borron said. Vests will be seen worn in many new ways in addition to the traditional topping for a blouse or shirt.

"They were worn over sweaters; tucked in and topping every kind of skirt and pant. It is a fashion item that would make a great gift item, too. It's fun, and it doesn't have to match anything exactly and it doesn't have to fit exactly," Borron said.

The scarf also will be a big accessory item. It will come in every size and color to be draped over one shoulder, tucked under a belt, wrapped around the shoulders or tied around the neck. It also will sport many new names including the throw, fling, stole, shawl, wrap and poncho.

So, when hurrying out the door to work, just remember to grab a few extra accessories to spiff up with, just in case the need arises.

Fall fashions present sensible styles with ease, elegance

By SUZY PATTERSON

PARIS (AP) — The good news about styles for the early 1990s is that they seem to be aimed at women with minds of their own, rather than at sheepish fashion-plates to be herded into ridiculous garb to look trendy.

There's a vast choice in the offerings to send the 1980s out in style. The clothes are hardly revolutionary, but the best are timely and as freshly appealing as champagne.

Designers are letting go of their recent visions of bouncy, ruffly little girls in poufs, as well as slinky vamps.

Finally, they're thinking of women who work, travel and like to feel easy and pretty in whatever they choose. Whether the clothes are based on masculine styles or are all dressed up for evening, they are presented with an eye to both ease and elegance.

Silhouettes and fabrics are softer in these new clothes, with a light touch of body-consciousness in the structuring. Shoulders are padded for shape but never dominate.

Skirt lengths are barely relevant, though quite long and above the knee are the younger-looking norms. Karl Lagerfeld at Chanel dismisses any discussion of skirt lengths as being "for old crones." His answer to youth is to show some outfits without any skirt at all — simply tights under handsome jackets.

Trousers are a welcome solution, though the wide A-line look has been cut back to somewhat straighter lines — on the dressy side in suits — with waist tucking, as at Saint Laurent and Jean-Louis Scherrer.

Jackets are starred everywhere. They range from very long styles, flattering as they cover the derriere, to snug spencers, battle jackets and boleros. Details may be strong in piping, zigzag fastening, little belts or vents at the back.

And several designers give fantasy touches with swallowtail or cutaway styles in dressier models.

Coats are another big story. If you like trench or belted "bathrobe" styles, you'll find handsome ones for fall.

ITALIANS DESIGNERS like Tarlazzi and Romeo Gigli "cocoon" their models in sumptuous coats. Tarlazzi's camel-colored wrap with a bright lining is remarkable. Gigli's opulent Byzantine cocoons are so colorful they seem to have already matured into butterflies.

Christian Lacroix plays with the cape theme in loud color combinations with his short suits or in more subdued styles to evoke the England of Vita Sackville-West and the literary Bloomsbury set.

Capes are glamorous at Saint Laurent and hot numbers at Patrick Kelly, where little caped riding hoods are as fun as they are colorful.

As classic suits have come back into focus in the fashion picture, so have soft dresses, looking better than ever as buttoned coat dresses, shirtdresses and little shifts.

Fabrics are important for these stylishly soft clothes, making them more fluid and sensual than ever — even the flecked caviar tweeds. Large plaids, stripes and houndstooth checks offer new choices at Christian Lacroix, Scherrer and elsewhere.

Synthetics such as fake furs and wool or silk blends are looking better than ever. And the new softer, lighter woolens are a boon to travelers, who'd rather arrive not looking rumpled.

Folk art is making a chic comeback with Lacroix's favorite Provencal motifs or kilim rug designs, as well as the handsome black and white Chanel knits borrowed from Indian weaves.

Scherrer and Hanae Mori are keen on exotic animal prints and weaves, and Scherrer's feather patterns add a light touch as well.

Look for temptingly light jerseys, cashmeres, and knits in cables and other textures this season, along with soft flannel and broadcloth. The new tweed and serge don't scratch.

The up-to-date color palette plays on all browns from caramel to black coffee, plus grays with charcoal and slate. Autumnal shades include bordeaux, gold, mustard, olive and forest green. Lavender and deep purple or pink add a heathery touch to autumn wardrobes.

BUT PARIS isn't timid about color. The designers are prodigious in their use of red — everything from deep raspberry or garnet to cardinal, orange-coral, fuchsia, fire engine or flame. These also mix well with deep brown, purple or black.

The evening scene means a transformation from workaday outfits to splendidly feminine clothes for cocktails at the Ritz or dinner at Maxim's. Black is still reliable for sexy little lace or velvet numbers, and never before have silk "grain de poudre" tuxedo outfits with pants or skirts looked so attractively varied or feminine.

But overall, we're seeing more late-day color, in decollete or "bustier" dresses with practical little jackets.

Lame and brocade give dazzle to clothes for welcoming in 1990 — especially the Japanese flower-print patterns at Hanae Mori, and the Byzantine motifs at Lacroix, Gigli and elsewhere.

Scene-stealing hats for these glamorous clothes are Lacroix's "mad hatter" chapeau, his big buccaneer hat, and large-brimmed skimmers at Chanel. Turbans, berets and fur toques are also good head warmers as well as fashionable.

Trousers are key to office attire

By BARBARA DeWITT
Copley News Service

Shopping for office attire will be easy this season. Anything goes as long as it's long, short, full and vested.

That's the news from New York's fashion heroes of the working woman — Tahari, Regina Porter, Ellen Tracy, Dana Buchman and Liz Claiborne.

From a quick look at designer fashions, the verdict is clear: We'll be wearing full-cut trousers through the winter as well as longer pleated skirts — again.

But this season we'll freshen them up with vests, fitted short jackets and shawl-collared cardigans instead of oversize power blazers.

Tahari has gained clout in upper-end career separates, known as the "bridge" category in the retail business because it's between budget and designer prices.

Tahari lines are classic, with plenty of Spencer, equestrian, barrister, Wellington and Stuart jackets over fluid and not-too-full trousers and slim just-above-the-knee skirts.

There also are swingy trapeze jackets and, in an Arabian nights mood, a few Nehru jackets and harem pants.

Equestrian styles still are interpreted with white silk charmeuse Edwardian blouses, hunt club jackets and jodphur pants, with velvet trims used as an accent — but there are some twists to the trend.

Regina Porter continues to offer her no-frills classics.

Porter prefers relaxed, easy shapes with skirts hemmed either just below the knee or sweeping across the lower calves, and trousers soft and narrow.

Standouts in her relatively small collection include a gold-and-black silk jewel print blazer with matching blouse that is reminiscent of a Hermes scarf design and a quilted purple suede bomber-style jacket worn with matching pants and a white jacquard blouse.

Dana Buchman, the young designer affiliated with the Liz Claiborne conglomeration, shows her best-ever collection this season, with an emphasis in classic lines featuring long skirts and full trousers that taper at the ankle, as well as a few new items; jumpsuits and sarong skirts.

Buchman has broken her collection into four groups with theme names: Autumn Leaves, Devon Moors, African Plains and Black Tie Optional. Each has a different color palette and fabric mix.

Created for the woman who likes to wear lightweight silk year-round, Autumn Leaves is a group of boxy safari jackets, camp shirts, soft pleated trousers with sporty side buckles, skirts with fly fronts and longish sarong skirts.

Middle-management types who like the executive look of navy blue are offered the Devon Moors group, which features long, top-of-the-ankle skirts in either slim or Hollywood-waisted pleated styles in gabardine or knit to be mixed and matched with knit blazers and vests, as well as elegant ivory crepe de chine blouses with star-point collars.

Red is a basic with Buchman, but instead of being teamed with black, she shows it with cream and vicuna brown in animal prints. A standout is her red wool topper with swing back in a cashmere blend with a cream-colored cable-knit twin set over matching knit pants.

A simple, direct approach to dressing is what Liz Claiborne is taking for fall, and it's evident in her traditional styles with looser silhouettes. The riding skirts are more relaxed, and the culottes are longer; the sweaters are hand-knit novelties, and the vests are pure haberdashery.

Ellen Tracy, designed by Linda Allard, continues to be crest crazy, and her cashmere flannel blazer with a shawl collar is a hot new variation on her previous styles.

Sleek, feminine tailoring is the key to this season's office fashion. Elegant trousers and jumpsuits, such as this glen plaid jumpsuit by Stanley Plato's, are the newest ways to move up the fashion ladder.

Working woman's top 10 buys listed

Copley News Service

Keep in mind that the working woman's look this season is a no-frills, thoroughbred approach featuring relaxed tailoring.

Here are 10 items to put on your shopping list:

- Classic white shirt with French cuffs.
- A fitted coatdress.
- A long, lean skirt, preferably pleated.
- High-waisted trousers in soft, drapey wool gabardine.
- A long cardigan as an alternative to blazers.
- Turtleneck sweaters.
- A long jacket with soft shaping at the waist.
- A sarong skirt.
- A vest.
- Suede flats.

Eveningwear dons touch of fantasy

Copley News Service

The fall/winter evening look is simple, sweeping, fluid and feminine, with touches of fantasy.

Absurd poufs and embarrassingly short minis have been banished without a backward glance.

Silhouettes are either full and billowing or (don't drop out of aerobics yet) body-hugging.

Sheer is chic. Think ethereal.

No matter what shape and style best suits you, you can pull together an evening ensemble that's both fashionable — and flattering — this season.

Go for the slender look. Start with a column of luxurious fabric with a metallic or iridescent glow. Add impact with a scooped-out back and a slit up one leg. Top with a smashing short paisley beaded jacket (Donna Karan), a filmy stole (Bob Mackie) or a dramatic cape (Geoffrey Beene).

Opt for a full-fashion style. Wear an enormous cloudlike chiffon wrap over a floaty dress (Bill Blass), perhaps in an animal print. Wrap your entire body in filmy, translucent fabric that billows behind you like a sail (Oscar de la Renta).

Try something simple. Team a dramatic bright satin blouse with a short black cocktail suit or a long skirt. Or top full cashmere pants with a sequined T.

THE EXTRAS

Embroidery and ornamentation are everywhere. Ample, luxurious, opulent fashions are reminiscent of the courts of French kings.

Isaac Mizrahi's taffeta evening skirts have hems of lingerie lace that show in the front, where the hem rises slightly. A Mizrahi outfit with a hooded cape has gold lingerie lace that floats to the floor.

Oscar de la Renta tops tap pants with embroidered floral vests and combines quilted, multicolored evening coats with velvet dresses.

Details are important. Look for hand fluting, tassels, fringe, jeweled closures, sequins, patches, braid and smocking. The fabric roses of past seasons have disappeared, bows are still around, but much smaller.

Look for luxury in fur (faux and real) trims. Feathers add a touch of whimsy. At the Paris shows, designer Patrick Kelly's models wore Indian headdresses and carried exotic feather fans. Christian Dior designer Mark Bohan embellished evening wear with sequined feathers.

KEYS TO THE SEASON

Animal prints prowled Paris and Milan. Gianfranco Ferre's evening jackets reverse from giraffe to zebra. Waistlines are swathed with make-believe ocelot. Ferre's long animal-print evening skirts were worn with filmy white shirts and crocodile belts.

Wide palazzo pants have gone from the scene, replaced by bell bottoms in rich, shimmery fabrics.

Jumpsuits are here to stay. Donna Karan's are body-clinging, worn with blouses by day; bare by night.

Favorite fabrics are satin, velvet and crepe and, of course, chiffon — often mixed.

Emanuel Ungaro uses iridescent taffeta and colored lame. His tight, short ruffled and shirred evening dresses are guaranteed man-pleasers.

Hemlines either brush the knee or cascade to just above the ankles.

Deep necklines are sweetheart, scooped or V; high ones are simple, wrapped or elaborate.

Bare shoulders are everywhere.

Coco Chanel: Her look connotes style, chic

By SUZY PATTERSON

PARIS (AP) — Fashion-watchers from New York to Tokyo have been spotting battalions of quilted chain bags, gold buttons and braid-piped suits — all familiar Chanel symbols.

You might even see a hairy man wearing a Chanel T-shirt, an incongruous offshoot of the newest wave of the Chanel cult.

"Coco" Chanel died in 1971, but her designs never seem to go out of style, and imitators have scrambled to make hay from the recent boom. The plethora of fakes infuriates the House of Chanel, currently suing copyists right and left.

But as Chanel said, "My ideas belong to everyone." And the Chanel craze goes on apace.

Nowadays, the Chanel look connotes both status and chic, even when runway shows are updated with wild departures from the old formulas by the house's designer, Karl Lagerfeld.

In her heyday, Chanel was a revolutionary. At a time when "proper" post-Victorians were still gussied up in feathers and corsets, Chanel was busy ridding clothes of extraneous trappings, stripping them down to the basics, then dressing them up with pearls.

Born in 1883 to a poor family in central France, Gabrielle Chanel worked her way to the top as she discovered high society through her lovers.

Her lifelong sobriquet of Coco came from a song, "Co-Co-Ri-Co" (cock-a-doodle-do), she sang at a music hall in Vichy. Clever with her hands, she loved dressing up in her own homemade costumes.

By 1913, an English admirer named "Boy" Capel had set her up in a milliner's shop in fashionable Deauville.

Too proud to imitate the wealthy women she met, Chanel set her own styles, and soon everyone was copying her pared-down elegance, her jaunty boater hats, her middy-collared dresses.

AP LaserPhoto

Gabrielle "Coco" Chanel continues to influence fashion design even 18 years after her death.

Other designers like Poiret and Vionnet were loosening up on their clothes by 1914, when World War I began. But it was Coco who best caught the spirit of the jazz age. She openly flouted conventions at a time when other women began wanting more freedom, and her clothes suited the new mood.

Women flocked in from the Ritz across the street when she opened her shop in the Rue Cambon in 1919. As the Twenties roared in to the Charleston, Chanel — with her relaxed, assured manner and clothes to match — had an instant success.

Her own best model, she shortened her skirts, wore long cardigans with pockets, and bobbed her long hair. Masses of women followed suit.

She pioneered pants for women, with flowing pajamas worn by Garbo and Dietrich on the flickering screen. She made the little black dress a glamour item with many strands of imitation pearls.

Always "Mademoiselle" to her staff, she never married any of the celebrated men who courted her. If her heart was broken, she was unbowed, toiling on as a ceaseless perfectionist.

After World War II, Chanel moved to Switzerland, where she kept company with a German officer.

Her attempted comeback in 1954 met with sullen press commentary. Dior's 1947 New Look sensation had still not worn off, and the fashion mavens wanted more exciting news than Chanel's quiet little suits brought.

But Chanel didn't stay long in the shade.

Women in the street were tiring of the New Look and loved Chanel's style, especially the braid-edged suits with quilted linings.

By the time she died at 87, she had twice won and then held her place at the top of the fashion heap. The House of Chanel coasted on her old models and reputation until 1983, when German-born Lagerfeld came sweeping in like a bracing blast of fresh air. Chanel was hot news again.

Lagerfeld's odder innovations, like 18th-century-style panniers, have shaken up steadfast Chanel fans.

But there's always an identifiable Chanel suit in the collections to please conservatives. And Lagerfeld has blown up Chanel details — chains, pearls, the crossed C logo — into a fetish that borders on high camp.

He sees the current craze as "suited to today's rock culture in the chains and leather, allied to the Chanel cachet, which is a passport for respectability."

"Chanel accessories simply work," says Ellin Saltzman, fashion director of Saks Fifth Avenue in New York. "The bags hang right on your shoulder and the chains and buttons dress up anything."

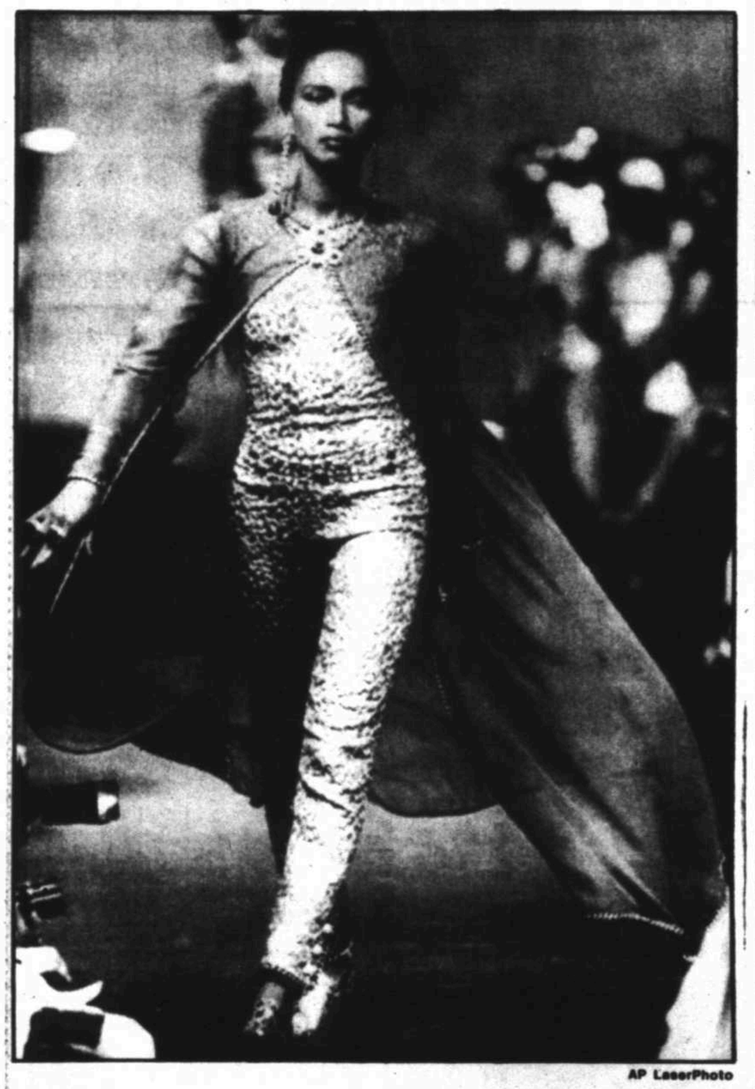

Working women love Chanel, as it is both serious and feminine-looking.

The best of Chanel looks right in almost any situation. As Coco Chanel herself once observed: "An elegant woman must be able to do the marketing without making the other housewives laugh. The ones who laugh are always right."

Accessories biggest sellers

Associated Press

They always fit, they last for years, they endure through transient fashion changes — and they are among the biggest sellers of this season's fashion scene.

They are accessories — scarves, handbags, jewelry, anything to decorate and accent clothing. Accessories magazine estimates that the customers bought about $14 billion worth of these last year.

Some prestigious names are making a showing in new parts of this lucrative market — like Tiffany and Cartier, New York Fifth Avenue jewellers who both are marketing scarves, handbags and other small leather goods.

Tiffany's entry into scarves began with a few designs made up for the store's 150th anniversary two years ago. Sales — at $150 each — were so rewarding that the store now currently stocks about 200 designs at its outlets around the country and overseas. Exotic florals and chinoiserie, bordered with logo designs, dominate the all-silk collection.

"Jewelry is the ultimate accessory, and we see our scarves as an extension of our jewelry," says Tiffany's design director John Loring. "The scarves are already having a very nice career for themselves."

Tiffany handbags are dressy and classic in silk and leather, all with signature details — including one with a large "T" closure.

Cartier's scarves include some imprinted with graphics of precious jewelry, signed with store's boutique logo, Must de Cartier. They blend with a line of silk evening bags with similar designs.

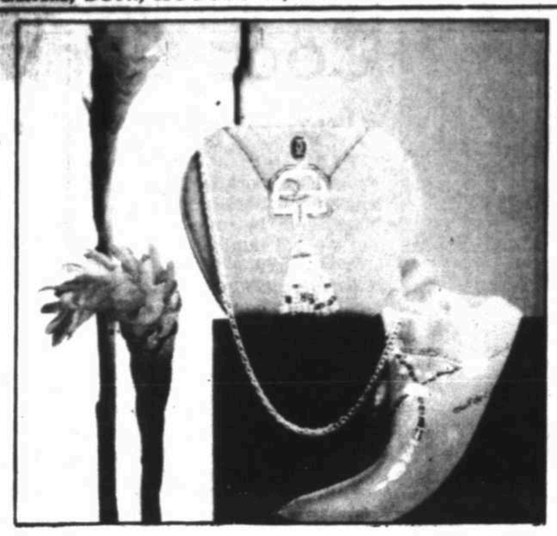

Cartier says that one of its more popular categories is watches — wardrobes of them, including their Pasha watches. Men, especially, are conscious of watches as fashion accessories. Cartier offers them with straps in vivid primary colors, like bottle green, to black crocodile and gold. "Watches are one item of jewelry which men can use to make a distinctive statement both about their individual personalities and their success without stepping out of bounds of proper male etiquette," says Jill Romeo King, boutique manager at Cartier's New York store.

If jewelry is the ultimate accessory, it's still not necessary to lay out a lot of money for "good" pieces, like natural stones and precious metals. The American Gem Society reports that colored gemstones are enjoying a current surge in popularity. Rarity and price range widely, but most are affordable for most people. Some of the most common and popular gems include peridot (bright green), rubellite tourmaline (hot pink), aquamarine (pale blue), kunzite (pale pink), citrine (honey tones), and amethyst (purple).

William G. Underwood, president of the society, says interest in the stones began building in the early 1980s, when British Princess Diana chose a sapphire and diamond engagement ring. An AGS survey also revealed strong preference for pearls.

These pieces increase in both sentimental and actual value, Underwood says, and they never go out of style. "Many of the popular jewelry designs today came from the 40s and 50s when pearls and pins were staple items in a woman's jewelry wardrobe."

New York jewelry designer Denise Solay adds: "Jewelry is seasonless and timeless and allows a woman to make a personal statement on her own terms." She markets her designs, strongly influenced by her world travels, through her own company, A World on a String.

Jewelery, accessories focus on big, elaborate or multiples

By DEBRA LEE BALDWIN
Copley News Service

Jewelry and accessories this season tend to be big, elaborate and/or multiple.

Classic Chanel styles dominate, but there are also strong Oriental and Indian influences. The "chic of Araby" look is a multicultural mix, dripping with coins, pendants, medallions, embroidery and fringe.

In general, earrings are big and geometric, buttons large and gold. Wide leather belts are secured with bold buckles. Bracelets are fat and wide, also multiple.

Simple, structured chain links are longer and lay flatter, making them ideal for layering or mixing.

Colored gemstones show up in combinations with pearls and gold. Large semiprecious stones are favorites for pins, rings, necklaces, bracelets and brooches.

Watches are sleek and contemporary or elaborate and nostalgic.

Sunglasses are back with black frames; prescription glasses have colorful frames of faux stone (malachite, granite, onyx).

The bicentennial of the French Revolution, celebrated this year, has inspired combinations of red, white and blue with gold for embroidery, shoes, purses, belts, watchbands and scarves.

Clothing styles sport white ruff collars, gold mesh and neo-baroque spiral embroideries. Touches of animal prints grace scarves, gloves and belts. Feathers, fur, fringe and embroidery dress up basic pieces.

A key look: slim knit sweaters (or turtleneck body stockings) worn with chain belts and tights.

At the fashion shows, certain designers were accessory trendsetters. These are the looks that are destined to be copied:

Isaac Mizrahi — Black net and lace gloves plus a confetti-dotted, net stole for night, tassels on shawls and capes, long Indian earrings and knitted or beaded ethnic hats.

Yves St. Laurent — White camellias, large rhinestone pins in the shape of stars, crosses and shamrocks, large multicolored baubles hanging off gold chains and rows of pearls.

Ralph Lauren — Alligator belts with silver disc buckles; tuxedo suits with dazzling details, including rhinestones studs on crisp, white tuxedo shirts.

Christian Lacroix — Maltese crosses, Mad Hatter hats in leopard prints and platter hats rimmed in fur.

Patrick Kelly — Wild feather headdresses and fans, charm bracelet hearts and, in pins, rhinestone Eiffel Towers and red plastic lips.

Karl Lagerfeld — Byzantine curlicues, fringe and tassels.

"Coco Chanel revolutionized the art of accessorizing," says Family Circle magazine. "She wore lots and lots of pearls — often with chunky costume jewelry. It's a look that's still copied today."

Classic Chanel is a keynote this season, but it is anything but subtle. The look is characterized by rows of gold buttons on double-breasted jackets, pearls and gold jewelry and padded, quilted purses (tie a scarf to the strap to jazz it up).

You can't go wrong if you start with a simple black sweater and skirt and add these Chanel touches: a wide leather belt worn with added chain belts, cuff bracelets, black stockings, high-heeled black pumps, and multiple pearl necklaces, gold ropes and earrings.

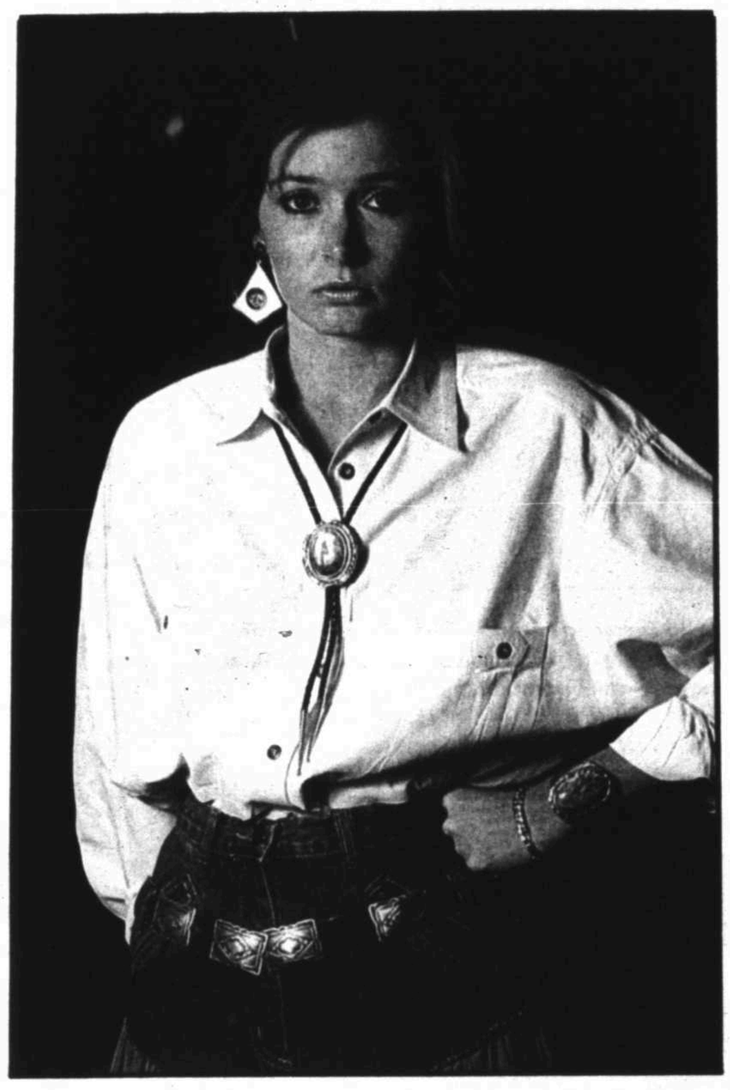

Or put a black satin camellia at your throat and every gold and pearl necklace you own, with at least three heraldic brooches to boot.

For a slim, leggy, contemporary Chanel look, wear '60s-style textured tights and a tunic top accessorized with gold chains and buttons. Or combine pieces of ethnic jewelry with Chanel's signature gold buttons, pearls and chain belts.

Jewelry designer Denise Solay offers these tips to get the most positive effect from your jewelry.

■ Wear what you like and like what you wear. Your choices express your personality.

■ Don't follow the pack. Stay with the things you like, whether it's a sleek modern piece or an ancient Ethiopian amulet. "Define your style and stick to it," Solay says.

■ Wear what looks well on you. Assess your physical features and your preferences. For example, chokers look well on long necks and drop earrings lengthen the wide face.

■ Mix and match. A $1 plastic ring may look great with a $5,000 enameled Kabyle cuff from Algeria.

■ Don't be timid. "People dress to be noticed. Bold jewelry does it faster," she says. She recommends a large centerpiece on a necklace to add verve and excitement — a 2-inch ball of amber, a gold-trimmed cameo, or an old silver Touareg amulet mixed with beads of Nigerian sand coral and silver. Be bold even with small pieces. Pile on three or four of your more delicate chains and bracelets.

■ Build a wardrobe. Buy a few pieces at a time, fitting your current needs. Identify a designer whose line you like and build from there.

■ Buy quality. It lasts, and it never goes out of style.

Solay heads her own jewelry firm, A World on a String, and is a member of the American Woman's Economic Development Corporation, a nonprofit organization that trains and counsels women entrepreneurs.

Menswear industry booming, offering contemporary styles

By NICHOLA ZAKLAN
New York Times News Service

Don Johnson started it, with his unconstructed jackets, his T-shirts, his Italian loafers and crumpled trousers. So cool. So suave. So sexy.

He blew apart the notion that fashion was stuffy. He proved it could be hip.

In the post-Miami Vice era of the late 1980s, men's apparel is taking off, in a profusion of styles and colors.

Spurred by well-dressed media characters and the demands of middle age life, men — especially baby boomer men — have acquired a taste for fashion.

And the clothing industry, suffering from last year's slowdown in women's apparel, is responding — with more clothes, bigger menswear departments and new stores aimed at the male peacock.

But menswear's greatest growth is yet to come.

"We have really only scratched the surface of the market," said Michael Hogan, vice president of menswear design for Claiborne, Liz Claiborne Inc.'s menswear division.

Men's wear sales — including boys apparel and shoes — grew 20 percent from 1985 to 1988, to nearly $40 billion, according to the Menswear Retailers of America, a trade group based in Washington, D.C.

Television and movies are behind part of that spurt.

"These guys see Miami Vice or some movie and think, 'I want to look like this,' " said Doug Ross, owner of Raffles Men, a men's clothing store in Encino.

THE INTEREST also stems from an increased emphasis on personal care, said Leslie Dressler, fashion coordinator for Macy's South/Bullock's.

Attending to what you wear, she noted, is a natural outgrowth of caring about physical fitness and personal grooming.

To an extent, spiffier attire comes with the aging of the male population.

The bulk of male shopping is done by men between the ages of 25 and 55, according to the Menswear Retailers of America group.

As they grow older, their lifestyles demand more variety and elegance than possible with a wardrobe of jeans and sneakers.

They also have more money to spend, with average incomes ranging from $25,000 to $55,000, according to the trade group.

"The guy that 10 years ago was buying jeans and T-shirts (is) now an attorney or doctor, and he needs suits," said Howard Ruben, West Coast editor of the Daily News Record, a trade publication covering the menswear market.

Guys like Michael Lushing.

ALMOST OVERNIGHT, the 34-year-old Sherman Oaks commercial real estate broker went from jeans with holes to "decent" clothes.

"Things are changing," Lushing said. "When I first got here (Coldwell Banker) everything was navy suit, red tie, white shirt.

"Now you can wear an Italian suit and an Armani tie and still blend in. I like that. I have a problem dressing real straight."

The new male also needs or wants fancier leisure time clothing, said Marty Weening, president and cofounder of Axis, a Los Angeles mens' apparel maker. "They are at the age when they are entertaining more. They are traveling to places, cities and resorts where they want to dress better."

Thirty years ago, men and fashion were strangers. The typical male wardrobe consisted of two suits — one probably dark, the other gray flannel — a lot of white shirts and some pretty non-descript trousers and shirts for leisure time.

"Men used to buy clothing basically only as replacement," said Elizabeth Armstrong, an analyst with Johnson Redbook Service, the research division of Prescott, Ball & Turben in New York.

AUTHORITATIVE, CORRECT — but dull.

The social revolution of the '60s and '70s was not kinder to fashion.

Baby boomers, in college and high school, embarked on social and cultural protest and were interested in dressing down, not up.

Not until the 1980s did fashion really become part of the male lexicon and the trend has not escaped the attention of retailers and manufacturers.

Department stores have beefed up the amount and variety of men's merchandise.

"We are responding to what the customer wants," Dressler said. "We are giving them more choices, more contemporary looks, in terms of color, fabrication and style."

Some stores — such as the Northridge Broadway department store — have expanded the size of the menswear department.

At Nordstrom, there usually isn't space to expand men's departments, although John Nordstrom, co-chairman of Nordstrom Inc., wishes there were. "Menswear has been doing very well," he said.

Existing women's apparel chains also are taking advantage of the trend.

The Limited Inc., primarily a women's apparel company, has begun adding menswear to its Express stores.

"We saw men in shopping with their wives and girlfriends," said Limited spokesman Alfred Dietzei.

"They liked the store, the clothes. We saw an opportunity."

THE COMPANY now offers men's apparel in 50 stores of the 436-store chain, with another 50 to get male finery by the end of the year.

Last year's slowdown in women's apparel sales gave menswear an added push.

Retailers confronted with dismal balance sheets looked over at the male market and saw dollar signs.

In a typical mall, women's apparel stores outnumber men's stores 10 to one, he said. That leaves plenty of room for additional men's shops.

Men's apparel sales are proportionately higher than in women's stores.

The men's division at Merry Go Round Enterprises Inc. — which operates the D.J.'s chain — reports average sales per square foot of $300, well above the company's women's stores, said Gary Gillan, vice president store operations.

The biggest growth areas are in upscale, contemporary sportswear — sports coats, shirts, trousers, with a dressy touch.

"Our customers are asking for more clothing, less sweat clothes, better merchandise, a sophisticated kind of dressy look," said Raffles' Ross.

AXIS, WHICH specializes in the making of just such a look, has doubled its revenues for the last four years in a row, said Weening. (The privately held company won't disclose sales figures.)

Axis' semi-constructed suits, nontraditional colors and innovations on classic designs all have captured the fancy of the male shopper.

"Men are looking for quality, function and flair. They are willing to pay a little more for value and quality," Weening said.

Claiborne, the men's line developed by Liz Claiborne, has ignited the men's sections in department stores, reporting sales of $120 million for 1989, just four years after it started.

The reason? Claiborne took its formula for women's wear and applied it to men — pricey but not couture-expensive fashion that is easily coordinated.

"Men want to look nice, a little fashionable but not silly," said Hogan.

"Liz's philosophy is to give them components, several options with one style group, that they can put together easily.

"They still get the feeling that they're personalizing their outfit, but they're assured that they're going to look good, not foolish."

Century-old battle was Indians' last stand

By MAX ALBRIGHT

CANYON (AP) — It marked a triumph for one side, a tragic end of an epoch of the other, and it was carried out in the most majestic setting in the Texas Panhandle.

The battle of Palo Duro Canyon, between the Kiowa, Comanche and southern Cheyenne Indians and the U.S. Army, was fought nearly 115 years ago, on Sept. 28, 1874.

For the past 15 years, the battle has been a source of intrigue for Amarillo resident and self-taught historian Scott Burgan.

He has become a devoted student of the Indians, the canyon and the battle. He has cross-checked written accounts of the events and criss-crossed the expanse of the canyon — literally on the trail of history.

Burgan has been able to find reports of the battle told by Indians who were there, and has compared them with soldiers' stories.

It started when he took a photography course at Amarillo College, and went into the canyon to snap a homework assignment.

"It's strange," he says. "Before that, I didn't have an interest in history."

An intriguing part of Burgan's collected information is about some of the individual Indians in the battle drama. And with all of his studies, writings, hikes and photographs, Burgan has drawn some original conclusions about the battle and some of the evidence left behind.

He's been to Fort Sill, Okla., where many of the documents related to the battle are kept; to Fort Marion, Fla., where some of the Kiowa chiefs and leaders were imprisoned — and some died — after the battle; and to Carnegie, Okla., present-day headquarters of the Kiowa tribe. He has spent a lot of time in the Panhandle-Plains Historical Museum in Canyon.

AP Laserphoto

Self-taught historian Scott Burgan studies pictographs at Palo Duro Canyon recently. The battle of Palo Duro Canyon between Indians and the U.S. Army was fought nearly 115 years ago.

THE HISTORICAL importance of the Palo Duro Canyon battle is that after the Kiowas and others had been routed, they went back to the Fort Sill reservation to stay, leaving the Panhandle open to new settlement, says Burgan.

During the Indians' outbreak from the reservation, the Adobe Walls pioneer outpost and a wagon train were attacked.

The canyon battle was brief. Col. R.S. Mackenzie was the U.S. commander.

After the Indians were warned that soldiers were coming, warriors formed a line across the canyon floor. They fired their rifles as cover for their families, who were trying to escape. But the warriors soon retreated.

"All of the camps, with the provisions of different kinds — flour, sugar, etc., quantities of dried buffalo meat — were destroyed and burned," wrote Col. Charles A.P. Hatfield. "In addition, about 1,700 of their horses were rounded up and driven up the long trail and back to the head of Tule Canyon."

The next morning the captured horses, ponies and mules were "disposed of," Hatfield wrote. Most accounts state that 1,450 horses captured in Palo Duro were slaughtered in Tule Canyon.

"The Kiowa warriors would have chosen that day to die if the women and children had not been there," recalled Lucius Aitsen, a Kiowa Indian. "But the warriors remembered the fight on the Washita six winters before when (Gen. George) Custer and his soldiers killed all the women and children, too. So the Kiowas put down their rifles."

BY MOST accounts, no U.S. soldiers were killed, though one was seriously injured. But five Indians lost their lives.

K'ya-been, a Kiowa warrior active in the tribe's Black Foot War Society, died during the battle of Palo Duro Canyon, says Burgan, referring to many written accounts of the fight.

K'ya-been, means "Older Men" in the Kiowa language, but the warrior was also known by the Comanches, who called him "Red War Bonnet." He was the lookout on the day of the battle.

In the early morning of Sept. 28, 1874, soldiers moved into the southern canyon and came through a part now known as Indian Point Trail, which is just east of the Randall-Armstrong county line.

"A few stones were kicked loose and they clattered to the bottom (of the canyon) waking the camp guard, K'ya-been," says Burgan. "He fired two shots to wake the camp, waved his red blanket and disappeared into the brush."

K'ya-been was killed later in the battle, shot in the head. Despite the confusion, the body of K'ya-been was clothed in fine traditional dress and given a proper Indian burial under rocks. A Kiowa chief, Poor Buffalo, sung the Black Foot Society death song and there was dancing.

Burgan said he believes it was K'ya-been's grave that was discovered by a party of hunters in the canyon in 1896. The descriptions of K'ya-been's burial by fellow Indians matches what the hunters reported.

THE CORPSE had "a war bonnet of eagle's feathers reaching from the head to the knees," according to the hunters. They also reported the deceased had been shot in the head. The bullet "entered the skull just behind the right ear and ranged upward, making its exit over the left eye," according to the hunters.

As Burgan explores, he sometimes expresses sadness for the Indians.

"The Texas Panhandle was the last stronghold for the Southern Plains tribes, searching hopelessly for a lost way of life," he said.

Breakfast inn serves up historic charm

By KIMBERLEY BAKER

AMARILLO (AP) — Away from the hustle and bustle of mass-produced hotel accommodations, the calm and comfortable oasis of a country inn beckons.

Galbraith House, a bed and breakfast inn at 1710 S. Polk, combines the European tradition of lodging with the sense and feel of the Lone Star State.

"People are tired of traditional lodging like chain hotels. They want to see how folks really live. With bed and breakfasts, guests get to stay in someone else's home," said David S. Johnson, inn owner.

"Bed and breakfasts have always been popular in Europe. A lot of the Anglo-speaking countries have them. Great Britain has the traditional bed and breakfast inns, Scotland has old castles and Italy uses pensions (pensiones). It's a new U.S. phenomenon."

Johnson and his wife, Mary Jane, purchased the Galbraith home in 1977. Because the historic area was becoming more commercialized, the Johnsons decided to sell the house.

Mrs. Johnson said she and her husband considered turning the house into business offices, but were advised to try their hand at the inn-keeping game.

"We looked at home magazines and visited the Hudspeth House in Canyon. Dave and Sally Haney, Hudspeth owners, let us tour the house. When you're creating a bed and breakfast, you have to make the home your own," she said.

The couple tried to remain true to the two-story, five-bedroom house its owner, H.W. Galbraith, first envisioned in 1912.

GALBRAITH CO-FOUNDED the Foxworth-Galbraith Lumber Co. in Dalhart in 1901. The company extended throughout 80 cities in Texas, Oklahoma and New Mexico.

Galbraith and his wife, Kate, redecorated the residence in 1929.

The two-story, 10-room Galbraith House features entry hall, wide foyer, living room, library, powder room, garden room, kitchen, butler's pantry and dining room set off by mahogany pound wood and leaded glass windows. The work of area artists adorns the walls of the wicker-encased, brightly-lit solarium at the rear of the house.

A wooden, spiral staircase leads guests up to a second floor that includes an open, foyer-breakfast area and five airy bedrooms with their own private baths. The baths feature the original tiles, fixtures and faucets.

Guests may register at 4 p.m. and check out at 11 a.m. the following day.

"In the mornings, guests can go into the foyer and get a cup of freshly-ground, gourmet, decaffeinated or caffeinated coffee, freshly-squeezed juice, croissants or pastries, and put them on a tray to take in their bedroom to wait for breakfast," Mrs. Johnson said.

Guests also can relax in the television area and catch glimpses of Mrs. Johnson's operatic experiences with the New York Metropolitan Opera from photographs grouped on the wall.

IF TELEVISION isn't a draw, the guests have their choice of three balconies. The swing of the front porch acts a beacon for guests who want to relax with a mint julep or lemonade on a hot, summer day.

Innkeeper Midge Fuqua keeps everything from breakfast to the house's history humming along.

"It was always a dream of mine to run a bed and breakfast, but I thought that it would be on the beach, not in a desert. I've traveled to other bed and breakfasts and what impressed me was meeting different people from all over the world," Ms. Fuqua said.

Johnson said the inn's hospitality, quaintness and delectable breakfast dishes will draw the guests; and the inn's location will charm them.

"Being located in the historic district re-emphasizes the importance of the home's history and the craftsmanship style of architecture. The architecture gives guests a sense of not one particular place in Texas, but of the state itself," he said.

Hotels become complicated

By FRED FERRETTI
Copley News Service

Staying in a hotel was at one time a simple exercise.

You arrived. Your luggage was taken. You checked in. You were shown to your room, with your luggage. You stayed for as long as you wished, or had to. You checked out and paid your bill. You left. Neat, which is the way it is supposed to be.

But these days hotels have become resorts, convention centers, spas, tourist attractions, casinos, whatever, and things have become more complicated, things such as obtaining the room you had reserved, things such as being billed accurately.

Perhaps there are too many keys to hit on the computers, I don't know, but let me tell you about my friend Bob and his mother.

You have to understand first that Bob's mother, though she is 87 and confined to a wheelchair, really likes country music, so Bob likes to take her to places where she can hear it, but also which have facilities for her special needs.

Which is why they chose to spend a few days at a hotel in Nashville, Tenn., that is so close to the source of country music that you cannot get away from it. Which is what Bob's mom wanted. At any rate, Bob and his mom arrived at the hotel and three months of travail began.

First, the desk clerk could not find Bob's reservation in the computer despite the fact that Bob presented a confirmation slip when he went to the desk. He had booked a Christmas package but was forced to accept a lesser room, for one night, because no room of the sort the hotel had confirmed for him was available.

A day later Bob and Mom were moved to the better room. Bob paid the bill for the first room. However, soon after Bob and Mom had moved to their new room, Mom was surprised by a strange man walking in, after unlocking the door. It turned out he had been signed into the same room. This was corrected.

Then, when Bob was checking out he found that he had been charged again for the first room, for which he had already paid. It would be corrected, he was told.

However, when his credit card billing arrived he found not a correction, or a refund, or a credit, but a double billing.

Bob notified the hotel — also mentioning that when he tried to get a steak knife for his steak in one of the hotel's restaurants, he was told, "Our steaks are so tender that they can be cut with a butter knife." He did not get a steak knife.

The hotel did not respond to either complaint so Bob wrote again. This time the hotel answered.

It was sorry, it said, and added, "The discrepancies you described are certainly not representative of the type of service we strive to provide."

It said it had talked to the people responsible for "the poor attitude displayed" by those who frustrated Bob, and sent him a copy of a credit card refund voucher it had sent to Bob's charge card service.

But it was for considerably less than the amount Bob had been billed for. Bob pointed that out in still another letter.

The hotel apologized again and sent Bob a copy of another credit voucher for some more money. However, for some reason, these vouchers were not reaching Bob's credit card company and he said so, in another letter.

Bob, by the way, does not really like writing all those letters, but he could not afford, he said, to commute back and forth to Nashville.

Bob also sent a letter to the credit card company, detailing just how much should be credited to his account, just what the hotel overcharge was.

The credit card company wrote Bob saying, "We will begin our investigation of the matter with the merchant's bank right away."

It urged Bob, however, to "please continue to make your minimum payments."

Next, the hotel wrote, sending copies of all credit slips concerning Bob, to Bob.

More than five weeks later Bob received a billing from his credit card company that noted all charges, all refunds, and included the amount Bob had said was due him, and Mom, in the first place. At this point, it was just a couple of days short of two months since their stay in the hotel.

Then, five weeks after that, Bob received another billing statement that had two other refunds listed, refunds that mystified him. So he wrote to the hotel again.

The hotel responded that the new credit refund "was issued based on the difficulties you experienced during your stay." It said that there had been, according to its bookkeeping, an overpayment by Bob. It apologized for any confusion and said it hoped Bob and Mom would come back again.

Bob says he will be going back to the hotel because of his mom's love for country music. And he intends, he says, to use all of that extra credit he received from the hotel to buy a tuxedo so he can do the hotel in style on his next trip.

LOCAL BOOKSELLERS MEET BASEBALL HERO

ATLANTA: While attending the International Convention of the Christian Bookseller's Association (CBA), Larry & Sue Scoggin of the Lighthouse Christian Bookstore had the opportunity to meet Orel Hershiser, ace pitcher for the Los Angeles Dodgers.

In addition to being the Most Valuable Player for the 1988 World Series and the Cy Young Award winner (the best pitcher in the National League), Hershiser is also an author. His book, Out of the Blue, written with Jerry B. Jenkins, and published by Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, spent nine weeks on the New York Times Bestseller list, and is currently the number one book on the Christian Bestseller list.

Out of the Blue gives readers the chance to re-live the most watched World Series in the history of the Fall Classic, but this time through the eyes of the Series' hero. The book describes Orel Hershiser's philosophy of pitching, his daily regimen, and his "game face" - his strategy of intense focus on each pitch.

In the book, Hershiser also talks about those things most important to him, his Christian faith and his family. In a recent interview, he remarked, "I have decided that when my baseball career is over, I will have been successful only if I still love the Lord, am still married to Jamie, and still have two sons who really know and love their daddy. Athletes who sacrifice their character and their homes for their sport usually live to regret it."

Orel Hershiser's book is available at The Lighthouse Christian Bookstore, and, according to Larry, is "a perfect gift for sons, fathers, nephews, grandsons, or grandfathers . . . not an easy group to buy gifts for!"

Out of the Blue was one of the nearly five thousand new and recently released books featured at the Fortieth Annual CBA International Convention, held this year in Atlanta. Larry & Sue were joined by nearly ten thousand other dealers and suppliers from coast to coast and over thirty countries.

Hidden features such a cross-entry pockets and a unique cut and length are built into Everest & Jennings "Avenues" clothing that is made especially for the wheelchair-bound disabled.

California-based firm produces clothing for wheelchair-bound

Associated Press

When actress and model Pamela Ann Martin suffered a disabling spinal stroke she spent a year in a hospital, flat on her back — but she still managed to get to a shopping mall on a stretcher to follow her passion for fashion.

"I was the only person shopping for clothes from a horizontal position," recalls the vivacious brunette, who graduated from California's Brooks College with a degree in fashion merchandising and design.

A physical therapy counselor encouraged Pamela to become a computer programmer or a keypunch operator but that was much too uncreative, she says, adding:

"I told them I was going to Hollywood to study acting. They laughed."

But now, more than a decade after her stroke, the 35-year-old Ms. Martin's determination has paid off with wheelchair appearances in several television dramas, feature films and national talk shows. She also writes a column, "Rolling With Laughter," and recently created the cartoon feature "Wheelies."

Her modeling gigs have been mainly in behalf of Everest & Jennings, a California-based firm that produces "Avenues," a catalog line of fashionable clothing with hidden features to speed dressing for wheelchair users.

"People who are disabled deserve to have a positive fashion image," says Pamela, whose modeling endeavors began at the age of 6. "I did fashion shows for charity and social events throughout my schoolgirl and college days.

"Now the biggest difference between my ability and disability is that I model on wheels instead of in heels.

"Most people just jump in their clothes and — zip — they're off, but for me, getting dressed can be a major project."

Often, she points out, conventional clothing doesn't fit or look attractive on people who spend their day sitting. Jackets are too long and too binding when propelling a wheelchair. Slacks are too short and pockets are out of reach. Skirts drag and get caught in wheels.

Designers of clothes for wheelchair users should develop patterns which flatter the seated figure, according to clothing consultants.

"To create clothing for special needs, you must use design to solve problems," explains Dr. Naomi Reich, chairman of the University of Arizona's Clothing and Textiles Department. "That requires analysis."

Research and testing indicate that such clothing should be cut with extra fabric in the seat and less in the front.

Other touches can include thigh pockets or hidden calf pockets for keeping glasses, keys and other items within easy reach. And some pants can have hidden ankle-to-knee zippers to speed dressing and accommodate braces.

According to Gret Atkins of Cornell University's Department of Textiles and Apparel, clothing can be as much a barrier to wheelchair users as a curb without a curb cut.

"Sometimes dressing can be so exhausting that they might choose to stay in their nightwear and not go out or invite someone over," she says. "We're such a visual society that most disabling conditions — whether an artificial limb, uneven gait or wheelchair — call attention to themselves.

"If clothing draws further attention to disabilities then we have failed as designers."

Keith and B.J. Martin come to Midland to work, respectively, as Ballet Midland's artistic director and principal dance instructor at Ballet Midland Academy.

Couple joining Ballet Midland

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

He was a principal dancer with the Royal Ballet in London. She was a soloist with San Francisco Ballet.

She remembers the day they met. For both, it was their first day of work at Pennsylvania Ballet. For her, it was love at first sight.

"I remember very clearly 18 years ago. Since Royal Ballet had such worldwide acclaim, I knew who Keith was before he came. So it was quite amazing to have him with Pennsylvania Ballet.

"When he stepped in the studio the first day I worked with the company, I probably wasn't the only female who was overwhelmed. In our business, it's like meeting your prince.

"Plus he's European: so polite, so wonderful, so kind and sensitive." He does things like "open car doors. It's still that way."

They began dating in February 1972 and were married in January 1973.

"I'm very lucky, especially in this day and age," says B.J. Martin. "He's an incredibly romantic person. And he's a wonderful administrator. It's very rare for an artist to have the administrative qualities and enjoy doing it."

Keith Martin's administrative ability was among the qualities which appealed to Ballet Midland's board of directors who, on Aug. 18, hired Martin as the ballet's artistic director and his wife as principal dance instructor at Ballet Midland Academy, now located at Theatre Midland. The couple is in the process of packing and moving. They plan to be in Midland before school starts.

The two, who have worked together since they were married, are moving to Midland from Blair Ballet Center at Vanderbilt University, where he served as director. The school was the "only classically oriented dance school" in Nashville.

"We had a pre-collegiate school that dealt with children from the age of 3 through adults," says Martin, who teaches character. "We were strictly a classical ballet school, and we also gave our students the opportunity of being able to appreciate jazz and modern and character.

"What we're bringing down to Midland is exactly the same. We will not be doing tap or tumbling or anything like that."

Martin, who is a resident of the United States, has been principal dancer with Royal Ballet, Pennsylvania Ballet, Stars of the American Ballet, San Francisco Ballet, San Diego Ballet, Pittsburgh Ballet Theatre and Phoenix Ballet Company.

In addition, he served as co-director of Stars of American Ballet, director of San Diego Ballet and Academy of Dance at Phoenix, founding director of Phoenix Ballet Company, dean of the school and resident choreographer of Pittsburgh Ballet Theatre, and as an associate faculty member at Arizona State University.

Martin remembers his introduction to dance.

"My sisters both went to class, and I went with my parents to pick them up from class, and I seemed kind of interested at that point so it was suggested, 'Why don't you start.' So I did."

He received a scholarship to the Royal Academy of Dance, and another scholarship to the Royal Ballet School in London.

"It wasn't until I went to the Royal Ballet School and realized what dance was about that something went click, and I realized this was what I was going to do."

His next move was into the Royal Ballet Company. Martin toured to America a number of times with the Royal Ballet. While here, he was invited six years in a row to join the Pennsylvania Ballet Company.

"And so I came out in 1971, and I've been here since," he says. "I wanted to broaden my horizon as a dancer and so much was happening in New York and America that had not been introduced in the Royal Academy at that point."

In 1973, he performed as guest artist with the Royal Ballet when the company toured to New York.

Mrs. Martin began dancing with a small ballet school in San Diego, Calif., when she was 8.

Her first eight years of training were spent studying with Richard Carter and Nancy Johnson, former principal dancers with San Francisco Ballet. At 17, she graduated early from high school and moved to San Francisco, where she spent the next three years with the San Francisco Ballet.

She remembers the experience.

"It was much more of a shock than I expected because I was the youngest one in the company. Of course, I was a very excited 17-year-old to be leaving home and going to San Francisco. But, it was an eye opener at the same time.

Local duo loves derby

Suitable car sought for next race

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Gary and Jody Lynne Meyers share a love for fast cars and fender-crushing demolition-derby action.

"It's a feeling that you just have to experience," Mrs. Meyers says, referring to driving in her first demolition derby this June at Twin Cities Speedway. "You know you want to do it, you have that urge, but when you get in there and do it, it's exciting. Your adrenaline gets flowing."

Driving in the demolition derby held some surprises for her.

"It wasn't what I thought it would be like at all," says the 25-year-old Odessa resident, who drove under the initials J.L. because she didn't want the other drivers to know she was a woman.

"When you're expecting to be hit, of course, you do tense up, but you're prepared for that impact when you collide.

"If somebody hit me, by darn, I was going to hit them back. So if you're not paying attention and have your mind on someone you want to hit for them hitting you, and someone else hits you, it does throw you around. You look behind you and see your rear end is in your back seat."

During the derby, another driver got his car hooked to hers, and his car was partially on top of hers.

"I have no earthly idea whose car it was or who he was. But with flat tires and him on me, I couldn't do anything. That's the most scary thing I've felt. It was real exciting."

She won 10th place driving a 1974 red Cadillac.

Now, she is looking for an old model Chrysler to drive in the upcoming 1989 National Demolition Derby, sponsored by the Midland Suburban Lions Club, and set for Sept. 9 at Twin Cities Speedway, located between Midland and Odessa between I-20 and Highway 80. The event also features the raceway's season championship in all classes of cars beginning at 8:30 p.m.

"It boils down to whose got the best car, and how it can handle being hit like that and abused," she says.

Those driving Chryslers often win derbies.

"I had a 1974 Cadillac and, of course, it was a tanker, but it wasn't tanker enough," she says. Her car was put out of commission when it was hit in the motor, the dash crumpled, and she couldn't move her car in gear.

Her husband didn't fare as well in competition in the June derby, which represented his second such competition.

A former race car driver, Meyers was inspired to drive in a demolition derby because it looked like "a lot of fun.

"My brother-in-law, Tommy Sawyer, was going to get in on it, and I thought I'd get in on it, too." He found the experience to be "a blast."

Jody Lynne and Gary Meyers say goodbye to the 1974 red Cadillac she drove in a recent demolition derby at Twin Cities Speedway. On the back of her car was a warning to the other drivers.

"The first time it was all new to me. I've watched them before, but never entered one myself. I really liked it, it was a lot of fun. That's why I went in it again."

The experience was unlike racing.

"There's a lot of difference. No comparison. You just go out there and crash and bang and have a good time. And with racing you want to protect your car."

In fact, the 1974 Bonneville he drove in his first demo derby in September of 1988, was in good enough shape following the event to transform into a race car.

"It was a real clean car ... didn't have any dents or dings or anything in it. And we made a demolition derby car out of it. There were about 50 cars out there last year, something like that, I think I wound up getting about 10th.

"We just stripped it down, put a little roll cage in it, tuned it up a little bit, put some decent tires on it and away we went." He laughs again, then says, "The motor cratered the first race."

He told his wife he was going to get another car for the 1989 derby, one that would take more of a beating.

"That's why I got that '72 Buick, and I found out it wasn't all that tough," he says. He laughs.

Meyers, who works as a drilling superintendent for Basin Drilling, traces his racing fever to the mid-70s when he went to the races in Enid, Okla.

"It kind of got in my blood. I liked it so much, I got to hanging around in the pits and stuff.

"And finally an old boy came along that had a car, and a buddy of mine, we went together and bought this car. We got another guy to drive it for us for a couple of races until we got the hang of what was going on. He drove it for a while, and then I bought the whole works from him.

"I drove it for about three years, then I bought another car and was running two cars. I had another guy driving the other car. It gets in your blood; it's just a lot of fun."

"You used to outrun the cops, too," Mrs. Meyers says.

"Well, that was when I was pretty young," he says.

Then, he was "right out" of high school. Now, he's 37.

T. Graham Brown loves life

By GEORGIA TODD TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

By the time he was 21, T. Graham Brown was making $600 a week, owned an El Dorado Cadillac and his first home, and had spent the previous three years living a college student's dream.

"We had a place to live at the Holiday Inn, right across the street from the university. They had a big pool that all the pretty girls would come lay out by. We had the life of luxury. We'd get up in the morning, go to class, come back do whatever during the afternoon and sing at night," says the singer and songwriter in a telephone interview.

Brown is among the stars in Saturday's lineup at the Miller Lite Randy Quaid party at Twin Cities Speedway.

Headlining the party, which is one of five being held around the state as a benefit for Special Olympics, is Waylon Jennings. The Bellamy Brothers, William Lee Golden, Ronna Reeves and Shot in the Dark and Augie Meyers also are on the bill.

Advance tickets priced at $7.50 may be purchased at Luskey's Western Wear, Harold's Electronics and KMID-TV. Tickets the day of the concert are $10. The event, which begins at 11 a.m. and runs to midnight, includes a CASI-sanctioned chili cookoff. For more information on the cookoff call 682-9343.

Baseball and music were Brown's passions when he was growing up in rural Georgia.

He wanted to play ball, but after playing baseball from the time he was 7 until he was 18, he found himself warming the bench at the University of Georgia. Then, during preseason practice his sophomore year, he walked through a door which closed out his baseball career.

He and a friend, Dirk Howell, put together six songs and applied for a job at the Holiday Inn.

"I remember we had a guitar amplifier that I had borrowed, and Dirk had this old-timey stereo that he had wired up, and it must have looked like a garage sale coming into the place because, thinking back, it was just ridiculous," he says. He laughs, something he does frequently and easily when he talks.

"It just looked stupid. We just didn't know what we were doing at all, and I think that's what got us the job. We didn't realize the mistakes. We didn't know enough to be embarrassed by it, and we just kind of bullied our way in there and did it."

They were hired on the spot and told to be back in two weeks.

"We were totally unprepared for it. I went back to baseball practice, and I said to the coach, 'I can make $150 a week singing over at the Holiday Inn. What do you think I ought to do?' He said, 'I think you ought to go sing.'

"That was my exit from baseball. It just changed our lives. No doubt about it. That was October of 1973, and I've been singing for a living ever since."

Now with three albums on Columbia Records to his credit, including "I Tell It Like It Used To Be," "Brilliant Conversationalist" and "Come As You Were" — Brown is riding the crest of Top Five and Top Ten single hits and has been compared to Huey Lewis, Mickey Rourke and Dennis the Menace.

He and Howell closed out their act — "Dirk and Tony" — when the 21-year-old Brown wanted to put a band together. The expense didn't appeal to Howell, a finance major, Brown says.

"And I gradually had to sell off all my assets to fund the band. I sold my car first. I waited as long as I could and sold my house.

"My parents had an old farm house on their farm which was about 25 miles out in the country, and we fixed it up and rewired it to where it was livable."

That was his home until he and his wife, Sheila, moved to Nashville in 1982.

"So I kind of led a quasi-hippy, David Allen Coe, Hank Williams Jr. lifestyle from about '76 to '80 or '81. I went around breaking guitars, drinking a lot of whiskey, just being loud, profane, drunk."

"We just didn't know what we were doing at all, and I think that's what got us the job. We didn't realize the mistakes."

'Pat Sajak Show' profitable despite continued low ratings

By JERRY BUCK
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES — Is Pat Sajak about to meet the same fate as a legion of challengers who assaulted the ramparts of Johnny Carson's late-night kingdom?

"The Pat Sajak Show" premiered on CBS last Jan. 9, and after a brief honeymoon with the audience fell into the ratings doldrums that defeated Carson rivals from Les Crane to Dick Cavett to Alan Thicke to Joan Rivers.

Sajak has not only failed to lure viewers away from Carson, he faces his own serious challenge from Arsenio Hall. Although "The Arsenio Hall Show" is syndicated and does not compete directly against Sajak, his ratings have been running behind those for Hall. Another problem is that Hall's show is a favorite of the young audience most prized by advertisers.

Sajak is also behind ABC's "Nightline" and NBC's "Late Night With David Letterman." In addition, it's slightly behind the ratings CBS had last year for a mixture of late-night shows.

Reportedly, CBS executives said they would kill the show if the ratings didn't improve by the end of the year. Some people are starting to write Sajak's obituary. But according to sources at CBS, as in the case of Mark Twain's reported death, the reports may be greatly exaggerated.

"As far as I know, there's no ticking clock," said Sajak. "I honestly don't know what their expectations are. My department is doing the show, not worrying about the ratings.

"I have no control on the ratings. I do have control over seeing that the show is good and I think in time that will affect the ratings. We had no illusions about going in and knocking anybody off and becoming an overnight sensation. It doesn't work that way in late night. We said from the beginning we'd get an early splash out of curiosity, then people would settle into their old viewing habits and in the long haul we would bring them back."

An important point, perhaps the crucial point, is that the Sajak show is making a profit for CBS.

"The fact that Sajak is running behind NBC and ABC and even behind what CBS had last year certainly generates a discussion of how long we'll hang in," said David Poltrack, CBS senior vice president for planning and research. "On the other hand, the show is highly marketable. Even with the low ratings the advertising rates are higher and the spots are selling well."

Poltrack said an increase in the audience would make the Sajak show "a major moneymaker."

"It is a show that has already improved our revenue picture," he said, "and has the potential of improving our profitability dramatically if it can develop a larger audience. That suggests patience and an investment of time and energy to get it right."

Part of the show's profitability undoubtedly is due to the fact that a talk show is cheaper to produce than the action-adventure shows it replaced.

Rod Perth, CBS' newly appointed vice president for late-night programming, said he has not received any ultimatums.

"I would not have taken this job to get involved in a project that the network did not have confidence in," said Perth. "Nobody gave me any mandate. The way this business works is I think if people are competitive they want to make things work and work well. That's my personal mandate."

Perth said he was too new to the job to say what changes he will make in the Sajak show to improve its ratings.

"All of these shows evolve," he said. "Of course, there are things being discussed. We feel this show has the potential, and anything that's a living, breathing, five-day-a-week entity has to evolve. We have every confidence in Pat Sajak."

The Sajak show has been undergoing some changes in an effort to attract more viewers.

"We've been fiddling with the show from the beginning," said Sajak. "But we're not going to imitate Oprah Winfrey and wander into the audience looking for lesbian nuns."

Perth, who said as a broadcaster he would not be happy until he was No. 1, added, "I would ask people to remember this show entered the most competitive time period in television against the most entrenched competition in television. You have to put expectations at a reasonable level."

BALLET

"I thought it would be much easier being accepted by dancers in the company than it was. Naturally, being the youngest, I was thought of as somebody that the dancers socially weren't welcome to have there."

She became a soloist after spending her first year in the corps de ballet.

"They were really good to me," she says. Still, she kept hearing about a ballet company more than halfway across the country which was growing and expanding.

"There was such news in our business about Pennsylvania Ballet doing incredibly well," she says. The ballet was "getting incredible grants from the Ford Foundation and NEA (National Endowment for the Arts)" and "doing a lot of touring."

Pennsylvania Ballet was the "up and coming company in the country at that time to belong to, so I thought I would go and audition. I was happy in San Francisco" but Pennsylvania Ballet was, "of course, touring New York, and San Francisco Ballet hadn't been doing that."

In addition to her experience with the San Francisco Ballet, Mrs. Martin has danced as a soloist with the Pennsylvania Ballet and the Pittsburgh Ballet Theatre, as principal dancer with the San Diego Ballet, and as principal dancer and ballet mistress with the Phoenix Ballet Company.

Her career highlights include, among others, dancing "Queen of the Wilis" in "Giselle" opposite Alicia Alonso and performing with Natalia Makarova, Galina Panova and Valery Panov.

Her teaching experience includes the San Diego Ballet Company and School in 1976; principal teacher with Pittsburgh-Winchester/Thurston Program from 1980 to 1983; and principal dancer and coach at the Academy of Dance, Phoenix, 1983 to 1986.

The Martins are eager to begin their time in Midland.

"We're very excited about coming down," Mrs. Martin says. "Midland certainly has a whole lot to offer in the Southwest.

"We're thrilled about the community theater, symphony and opera and are happy about the whole situation of the arts in Midland. Everybody is willing to speak to each other and work together to make art a No. 1 priority in the city."

Martin says at this time in their careers they are "involved in our business for the betterment of dance and to bring an appreciation to the community" and that they strive 'to instill in our students a dedication, a love, an incentive and responsibilities."

The couple has a 14-year-old son named Jason.

Years ago when news of Mrs. Martin's pregnancy reached Barbara Weisberger, founding director and artistic director of Pennsylvania Ballet, she said, "Wouldn't it be fun if you had a boy to call him Martin Martin Martin." The idea came from the fact that B.J.'s last name before she married was Martin.

Some married couples find it difficult to work together. The Martins are not in that category.

"We haven't had many conflicts at all," Martin says. "We've worked together now as regards teaching the last 12 years and as regards the dance aspect we do not generally dance together. We've only done one particular piece where we've danced together, so I think that's another reason that we've not had conflicts.

"When I choreographed 'Swan Lake,' B.J., myself and Jason all performed in that same production. It was exciting."

Ballet is a demanding art form. When Martin looks back over his career as a dancer, he can recall "maybe" eight times when "everything has happened perfectly.

"I've danced well. The tempo was correct. The lighting cues were perfect. The audience reaction was wonderful, and the critics reviews were tremendous. Eight times in my life I had that feeling of total satisfaction, and that's what I've been aiming for, and suddenly it's happened.

"Out of all the hundreds of performances and the years that I've performed, we are working to get one exquisite performance every three years. That's what's so wonderful about the ballet. It's that challenge.

"You're forever working. You never stop trying to make yourself better, striving for a perfection you're never going to achieve."

The serious student of dance has to dedicate his life's energy to his art.

"You can't do it in a whim," Martin says. "It becomes a 52-week situation. You continue to take class and rehearse to perform.

"It's not a seasonal occupation like baseball, football or basketball. Of all the surveys that have been done, they've found that the dancer is the best of the athletes."

On the other hand, Martin says, "One doesn't have to be an afficionado of ballet to be able to appreciate it."

BROWN

Then the movie "Urban Cowboy" was released.

"I thought I had me a different little niche and wearing my cowboy hat and cowboy boots — had my ear pierced, got me a tattoo — and thought I was doing all the requisite things. I was very different from everybody else, and then 'Urban Cowboy' came out and everybody bought a cowboy hat and a pair of cowboy boots. I wasn't special anymore."

He changed his image and put together a white soul band, T. Graham Brown's Rack of Spam. In the meantime, he also had married. His wife, a straight A student, was completing her master's degree in dairy science and nutrition and had already been accepted into veterinary school.

His mind began focusing on faraway places, like New York, Los Angeles and Nashville. Then, when she received her master's degree, she suggested the move.

"I was scared of New York, and I was scared of L.A.

"We could move to Nashville, and if we didn't make it, we wouldn't get penalized so much. It wasn't that far back home and Sheila could always go back and go to veterinary school, and I could work with my daddy on the farm. But, thank goodness it never had to come to that."

Jobs were hard to find in Nashville in 1982.

"Sheila's education didn't help a bit. She wound up working in a department store during the day and waiting on tables at a restaurant at night.

"And I hung out on Music Row. I'd read all the trade publications and find out who was who and tried to hang out at the right spots. Finally, I got a chance to sing in the studio and once that happened it was like the door was open and my phone started ringing.

"I did a few songwriter demos for some big shot song writers, and they started pitching the tapes around, and my voice just got pitched around all over town.

"Nashville is a big city, but it's very small. Music Row is like a gossipy, little town, and when somebody new hits town, if they're good, whether they're a player, singer or songwriter, the word gets around real fast."

The word was — "There's a new guy in town from Georgia. He sings like he's a black guy. He's white, but he sings black."

Brown says he never set out to be that, that's just the way he was perceived.

"And it was a good way to be perceived, and I never did anything to discourage it. If anything, I got blacker sounding. It just made me an enigma. I was just different. Nobody knew what to do with me."

In 1985, Terry Choate, who was hired as director of artists and repertoire for Capitol/EMI Records in 1984, signed Brown to a record contract.

Brown, an avid fan of "The Andy Griffith Show" because Andy reminds him of his dad, is on the road most days of the year. When he is home, he rides his Harley Davidson or writes songs.

In physical miles, he has come some distance from his childhood spent on a farm near Arabi, Ga., in a family whose mother's side "went to church every time the doors were open" and "everybody" played the piano and sang gospel music.

And, he's settled down since his college days.

"I don't even drink anymore. I'm very sedate compared to then. I'm pretty much Mr. Businessman. I mean I have a great time. Don't get me wrong. I just don't go around swilling whiskey and breaking guitars anymore. I don't wear my earring anymore either."

Now he has his own son, one-month-old Anthony George, affectionately called Acme because, as Brown says, "It means the best, and we didn't know anybody else that'd been called that before."

He has acquired a new hobby: acting.

"I love it. It's great fun. I can't believe they pay me money to do it. It's easy. I don't think I'm any great shakes. I don't think Robert DeNiro has anything to be worried about, but I'm going to do it as much as I can."

Touring is hard and took Brown away from home 235 days in 1988, but as he says, "There's nobody holding a gun to my head making me do it. I could quit."

He doesn't because, he says, "I like it. I like the whole thing. I don't think that I've nearly, even barely scratched the surface of what I can do and what my abilities are. That's what I like about it: the unknown. I know it's going to get bigger and better. It's just fun watching it all happen."

His heart's desire is simple.

"My Number One heart's desire is to be a great human being, and then after that to reach as broad an audience, as many people, as possible. Just to try to live right and enjoy life."

DERBY

"When I first started working in the oil fields, roughnecking and everything, I bought a real hot Ford," he says, after being coaxed into telling the story. "I'm a Ford lover. And I did, I used to outrun the cops about once a week. I never did get caught."

They both laugh. He shakes his head and says, "It was a lot of fun."

Meyers was born and raised in Oklahoma and Mrs. Meyers, whose father worked for El Paso Natural Gas, grew up all over the country.

A former bartender at Cheers in Odessa, Mrs. Meyers said she would never marry anyone she met in a bar. Then, a mutual friend told her he was bringing a friend around to meet her.

"I married somebody I met in a bar," she says, laughing. "But, he wasn't like all the other guys. He was a real gentleman."

The two have been married less than two years. Since February he has been working days and she has been working nights. But she isn't a bartender anymore. Instead, she is selling water treatment systems for American Hydro.

"I miss him, I really do. When I worked in the bar business, he wanted me out as soon as we got married. He'd stay up at the bar until 2 o'clock when I got off work.

"Now, it's a different story. He's usually up when I come home, but not all the time. The dogs keep him up. They're waiting for me to come home so they bark at every little noise."

Even though he's on call 24 hours a day, seven days a week, they usually can count on spending Friday night and Sunday together. They can be found at the races at Twin Cities Speedway on Fridays and watching racing on TV on Sundays.

He likes lizards. She's scared of them. But crashing cars and driving too fast don't scare her.

"I like to drive fast," she says. "I have a Grand National — the limited edition Buick came out with — it used to be the fastest street car until the new Corvette came out."

Actually, she'd like to try racing.

"I've always wanted to race. You want to have a good car and to do that you have to have a lot of money. You could get in the bomber class, that's good, but they wreck their cars too often. I'd want to get in the pure stock, and it costs money.

"If I got out there, I'd want to win," she says. She pauses and adds, "What it all boils down to is I'd like to show women can drive as good as men."

She'd also like to win a derby. So would her husband.

"I had good intentions on winning the derby this year," he says. "I spent many hours working on that car. And I made it look nice, too.

"I still think maybe if they wouldn't have had the heat races, I had a lot better chance because the guys that got first and second are the ones that knocked me out in those big Chryslers."

She nods her head in agreement and says, 'Those were the same guys that hit me."

The September derby won't be run in heats. All cars will compete at the same time. Entry fee for a derby car is $25 per car, and those sponsoring drivers may enter as many cars as they choose. For more information call 563-5456.

The rules allow no reinforcement of cars, except inside the driver's door in the interest of safety. All glass must be removed. All doors and wagon gates must be strapped, wired or welded. Safety belts and helmets are required.

The September derby has a new twist. The 10th place winner receives the highest prize, a race car trailer valued at $1,350. The first nine places pay money. The first 10 places also receive a trophy and a racing jacket. In addition, since there are no heats, the team with the most cars entered will receive $500.

Because of the heat races, the two were not in direct competition. September will be different. This time they can be on the same team, and yet there still is only one first place winner.

Mrs. Meyers insists she would knock her husband out of first place to win.

"If he hit me, you bet I'd hit him," she says. "What comes around, goes around. I want to win. Of course, I want to win first place."

She pauses, shakes her head, laughs and then says, "But now I want to win 10th place, the car trailer."

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

Rex Allen Jr. to perform here

Rex Allen Jr. and his band "Arizona" will perform in concert Wednesday at Midland Center to benefit the American Lung Association of Texas. Showtime is 7 p.m.

Tickets priced at $7 can be purchased by calling 694-2150.

"Rex Allen Jr. is a man with a commitment to his music and the talent to back it up," says a release from the sponsoring organization.

"He's tall and lean and gifted with one of the most sensational voices on the music scene today," the release says. "On the road he backs this voice with one of the strongest touring bands around."

His string of top hit records include a steady flow of Top-40 singles such as "Lonely Street," "No, No, No," "Two Less Lonely People," "Can You Hear Those Pioneers," "Drink It Down Lady," "Cup of Tea," "It's Over," "Dream On Texas Ladies," and a host of others.

Allen's "Arizona" was soon adopted as the official song of that state, a fact he points to with considerable pride.

Allen was named "Most Promising Male Vocalist" by the fan-voted Music City News Awards, and won Country Music Magazine's coveted Bullet Award as "New Entertainer of the Year."

"We have a good time, and we enjoy what we do. I want to talk about love and happiness. I think it's important for me to talk about relationships between a man and a woman. I'm out there to entertain people," he says. "My job is to hold that entire audience in the palm of my hand and do whatever it takes to get that done."

Fall art show to open

Gallery 1114 opens the fall season with its third annual Open Show, Sept. 9-28.

The show is open to those living in West Texas, all media.

"We have fun with this show," says a gallery spokesman. "Our entries have ranged from brownies to guitars to poetry, as well as the expected forms. Art is an important part of everyone's life."

Jurors for this year's show are Jane Becker of Midland College, Delmos Hickmont of Odessa College and Jean Nichols of Gallery 1114.

Work to be included in the exhibit must be brought to Gallery 1114 Sept. 7 and 8 between 10 a.m. and 5 p.m. or Sept. 9 between 10 a.m. and noon.

Performance, culinary, costume and all other entries will be shown at the opening reception at 7 p.m. Sept. 9.

A fee of $5 is charged on all entries. Best of Show receives $49.95 at the opening.

For more information call 685-9944 or 682-4969.

Gallery 1114 is located at 1114 N. Big Spring St.

Youth ensemble launched

Auditions will be held through September for the West Texas Youth Chorale — a new performing ensemble sponsored by the Midland-Odessa Symphony Chorale.

The group will be directed by local music educator Barbara Shinn and will be made up of youngsters between the ages of 9 and 13 who are currently enrolled in a school music class. Exceptions will be made only for students' whose schools do not offer music classes.

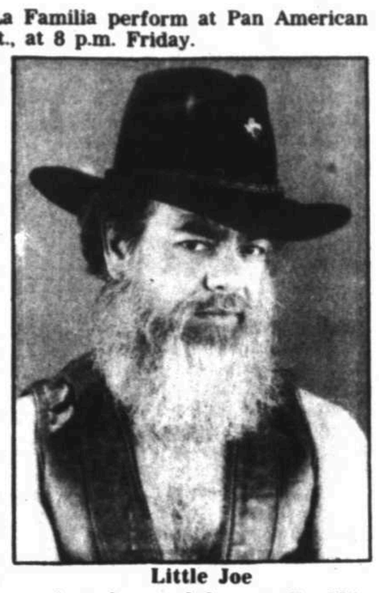

The West Texas Youth Chorale will debut at the Midland-Odessa Symphony's opening classical concerts Sept. 26 in Midland and Sept. 28 in Odessa.

Students chosen for the chorale will receive instruction in music theory, vocal technique and sight-reading as part of the group's weekly rehearsal regimen.

To schedule an audition for the West Texas Youth Chorale, call the Symphony office at 563-5269.

Little Joe, La Familia to hold Odessa concert

ODESSA — Little Joe y La Familia perform at Pan American Ballroom, 2215 E. Murphy St., at 8 p.m. Friday.

Little Joe

Called the "King of the Brown Sound," Little Joe is considered to be among today's top Hispanic performers.

He has recorded two songs with Willie Nelson, "You Belong to My Heart" and "Marie," and performed a duet with him, in addition to six benefit concerts, on a CBS prime time television program called "Viva Miami." Other guests appearing on the same show were Herb Albert, Linda Ronstadt and Carlos Santana.

He has recorded over 40 albums in his career.

In 1987 and 1988, he was invited by the Smithsonian Institution to perform on the grounds of the National Museum of American History during National Hispanic Week. Also at the Smithsonian Institution's invitation he conducted a workshop on Tex-Mex Music for students from around the world. The workshop was videotaped and now is part of the Smithsonian's educational catalog.

In September 1988, he performed the National Anthem at the Pentagon and at Andrews Air Force Base during Diez y Seis de Septiembre hispanic celebrations. In March 1989, he performed the "National Anthem" for the 9th annual Tejano Music Awards in San Antonio.

Troupe to stage 'Web'

ODESSA — The Kaleidscope Company of the Permian Playhouse will open its 20th season with "Charlotte's Web" at 2:30 p.m. Saturday.

Tickets are priced at $3 with adults accompanied by a child 6 years old or younger admitted free. For reservations call 362-2329.

The production runs Sept. 3, 9 and 10.

The Kaleidscope Company, the Playhouse's youth performing troupe, is currently selling season tickets for $5. Other productions to be presented are "The Legend of Sleepy Hollow," "The Best Christmas Pageant Ever," "The Velveteen Rabbit" and "The Wizard of Oz."

Septemberfest scheduled

Septemberfest '89 is set for Sept. 9 and 10 at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave.

The annual event will feature 70 artists from across the United States who will display and sale their work. Hours are 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. Sept. 9 and noon to 5 p.m. Sept. 10.

A popular part of the event is Kinderfest, a carnival for children of all ages.

In addition, continuous entertainment will be provided throughout the weekend and booths will feature a variety of food for sale.

Area tents will be set up to shield guests from the sun and rain.

Tickets are priced at $3 for adults, $1 for children 3 to 16 years old and free to those under 3. During Septemberfest, there will be no admission charged at the Fredda Turner Durham Children's Museum.

The Septemberfest Preview Party will be held from 7 to 11 p.m. Sept. 8. Tickets, priced at $37.50, may be purchased at the door.

The preview party includes a catered meal and music provided by the Dow Jones Average jazz band.

Activites Sept. 9 kick off at 8:15 a.m. with the Septemberfest Fun Run, sponsored by the Midland Jaycees. The run includes 2 mile, 10k, 2 mile walk and 1 mile children's run. Entry fee is $10. For more information call Keith Bodgan, 687-4665 or 561-6654.

For more information or to volunteer, call 683-6245. The event is sponsored by Las Manos, the museum's auxiliary organization.

Chorale auditions set

The Midland-Odessa Symphony Chorale, under the direction of Robert Hunt, will hold auditions by appointment for the 1989-1990 season.

Anyone who enjoys classical choral music and has some background in music performance may audition. The chorale welcomes instrumentalists as well as people with extensive singing experience. Returning chorale members need not audition.

Singers will be asked to perform scales and other exercises to determine range, vocal color and control, and the ability to sing in tune. A prepared song is optional, and is strongly suggested for those interested in solo opportunities.

Auditions will be held by appointment through Sept. 17 and will be held at the Symphony Rehearsal Hall, 3100 LaForce Blvd., Air Terminal.

The Midland-Odessa Symphony Chorale consists of volunteers drawn from communities within a 60-mile radius of Midland-Odessa.

During the 1989-90 season, the chorale will perform with the symphony on the second and third pops series concerts and the final classical Series concert. In addition the chorale will perform a Fall Chorale Concert Nov. 2 in Midland and Nov. 4 in Odessa.

To set up an audition appointment, call the Symphony Office at 563-5269.

Comic play opens soon

Midland Community Theatre's September play, "The Musical Comedy Murders of 1940," is first of all, not a musical.

It is, instead, a finely tuned comedy-murder full of secret passages, espionage, romance and disappearing bodies adding up to a blizzard of mayhem and outrageous comedy.

"The Musical Comedy Murders of 1940" opens Friday Sept. 8 with a party from 7 to 8 p.m. in the theater lobby complimentary of The Plaza Club.

"This outrageously funny play is about a group of people who want to put on a theatrical production," says a release from MCT. "There are several surprising twists and turns as the actors, director, producer and lyricists try to convince the owner of an old, weird house to invest in their musical comedy."

The comedy, MCT's fifth membership show of the 1989 season, will be on stage every Thursday, Friday and Saturday at 8 p.m. with a matinee Sunday, Sept. 17 at 2:30 p.m.

Tickets for the handicapped or disadvantaged are available for that matinee through the Reach Out! program sponsored by the Abell-Hanger Foundation. For reservations or information call 682-4111.

The production is co-produced by the law firm of Cotton, Bledsoe, Tighe and Dawson.

Trio to present concert

ODESSA — Internationally known cornet/flugelhornist, Warren Vache Jr. will bring a trio — himself, John Bunch on piano and Bill Crow on bass violin — to the Permian Basin for a public concert Wednesday at the Odessa Hilton preceded by a student clinic Tuesday at U.T. Permian Basin at 7 p.m.

Both Vache and Bunch have performed on numerous occasions at the Midland Jazz Classic and the Odessa Jazz Party. This will be Crow's initial appearance in the Permian Basin.

The program will consist of melodic, swinging tunes by such composers as Gershwin, Cole Porter and Duke Ellington.

The public concert Wednesday is free to West Texas Jazz Society (WTJS) members; non-member tickets are $15 each. Reserved seating for both members and non-members is available for an additional $10 per person. Tuesday's clinic is free of charge. For more information call J.P. McIntyre, 366-3765.

Tickets and information can be obtained from the West Texas Jazz Society by calling Billie Ross, 685-3902.

Tickets will be available at the door.

The performances are sponsored by the WTJS and U.T. Permian Basin.

Spencer collaborating with hero, Mel Brooks

By KATHRYN BAKER
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES — When Alan Spencer was taking a college TV writing class, he encountered the same frustrations many students do.

"My script flunked. It got, like, a D. It was, like, a 'One Day at a Time,' and they said this could never sell.

"And I said, 'It's on next week!' "

Spencer by then was a veteran script writer. He was selling TV scripts when he was 17, the only kid in high school earning residuals.

Now, at the ripe old age of 29 — he quickly adds that he'll be 30 in October — Spencer is launching his second prime-time network comedy, "Nutt House," premiering next month on NBC. It stars Harvey Korman and Cloris Leachman as the, respectively, officious and bizarre staff of a large, unlikely New York hotel.

Spencer's first show, an homage to his hero, Mel Brooks, and Brooks' 1960s satirical spy comedy "Get Smart," was ABC's "Sledge Hammer!" Like "Get Smart," it was heavy on inside jokes and physical gags.

This time around, Spencer is not gazing from afar, but is paired with his idol. Producer-director Brooks co-wrote the pilot with Spencer and is co-executive producer of "Nutt House" with Spencer and Bob Brunner.

Spencer proclaimed in his high school yearbook that his goal in life was to work with Mel Brooks.

"I don't know, I just liked Mel Brooks' humor, because it's shocking, it's different, it's outrageous, it usually makes statements about life. But I think the key thing is, his goal is really to make you laugh," Spencer told an often laughter-interrupted session with television critics to discuss the new show.

"Nutt House" will join NBC's Wednesday lineup, well matched with its lead-in, the broadly comic "Night Court." The pilot that was screened for the critics was wildly slapstick, and Spencer said portions would be re-shot and toned down to develop the characters and emotional story a little more.

But Spencer hopes the show will mark a return to physical and visual comedy on television that Brooks has produced to such effect in films such as "Young Frankenstein" and "High Anxiety." Spencer acknowledges it will be hard "to do a high-standard kind of feature-level comedy" week after week.

He added: "I watch a lot of Marx Brothers movies and things to get the inspiration."

Brooks will not be involved in the day-to-day production of the show, but will serve as "shepherd," Spencer said. The show will, however, reflect Brooks' comedy philosophy, "be savage against those in authority, and be kind to those underneath it, that suffer from it," Spencer said.

The shooting of the "Nutt House" pilot gave Spencer the opportunity to go to the studio with Brooks; instead of sneaking onto a studio lot to see him as he used to do, explaining to studio guards that he was Brooks' son.

"I went up to him on the set of 'Young Frankenstein.' He was directing, and I said, 'Are you busy?' I said I wanted some advice on how to get into comedy writing. That's the first time I met him. I remember all these things, you know. 'Go away,' you know."

Spencer did manage to work for Brooks eventually, writing punch-up jokes for Brooks' last TV comedy, the short-lived Robin Hood satire "When Things Were Rotten."

Spencer said Brooks was a fan of "Sledge Hammer!" which went off the air two seasons ago after a two-season run. So when Disney offered a hotel set from the feature film "Big Business" for use as a television show set, Brooks called Spencer.

Now they're pals.

"You honestly wish you could have a film camera, just film a day with him, because there's so many things that get lost," Spencer said.

Former jazz prodigy maps future in mainstream

By DANA KENNEDY

BOSTON (AP) — At 23, Terri Lyne Carrington seems too young to call an album "Real Life Story."

But it's not so unusual when one realizes that the drummer has been playing with some of the giants in jazz since she was 10 years old, and her own life story already surpasses many twice her age.

She's on hiatus from "The Arsenio Hall Show," where she's been drummer in the band since the late-night talk fest first aired. She's busy touring the country to promote "Real Life Story," her debut LP with a major label on Verve-Forecast Records. She composed all but two songs on the album, co-produced it with Robert Irving III and sings on three tracks.

It would seem to be a high point in an already illustrious career. But for Ms. Carrington, it's simply a turning point, part of a grand plan in which she moves from jazz prodigy to mainstream star.

"When I was 11 or 12, one side of me wanted to be a great drummer and the other side wanted to be Diana Ross," she said. Now, it appears, both dreams may be realized.

A pretty, serene young woman, Ms. Carrington is modest, almost blase, about her impressive past. She grew up an only child in Medford, Mass., a working-class city outside Boston, where her father, Sonny Carrington, a saxophonist, introduced her to the sax when she was 5 years old. "I asked him if I could play," she said.

Her decision to switch to drums at age 7 was borne of necessity.

"My teeth fell out," she explained during a recent interview in Boston.

By the age of 10, Ms. Carrington had begun to sit in with visiting musicians such as Dizzy Gillespie, Rahsaan Roland Kirk, Elvin Jones and Oscar Peterson. That same year, Clark Terry, impressed with her ability, took her to the Wichita Jazz Festival. She met drummer Buddy Rich there, who then accompanied her on the television show "To Tell the Truth."

Two years later, she was awarded a special scholarship to the Berklee College of Music after the school's director heard her play with Peterson. During her time at Berklee, she took courses in piano, drums and vibes, along with harmony and composition.

In 1981 she recorded an album, "TLC and Friends," with Kenny Barron, Buster Williams and George Coleman. During this period, Carrington began to shape her career, shifting from a classical tradition to one that would bring her eventual commercial success.

"When I was 14, I had the potential; I strived to be one of the greatest drummers, period," she said. "But something happened between the time I was 14 and 19. I decided I wanted to be an artist — a singer, writer, producer."

She graduated from high school at 16, and in 1983, moved to New York and played with a variety of musicians such as Stan Getz, James Moody, Woody Shaw and Cassandra Wilson.

Her career, she said, has always snowballed. "In this business, you work whenever you can."

While in New York, Ms. Carrington began to tire of acoustic jazz and decided to move into more contemporary music. She started playing with Wayne Shorter, co-founder of Weather Report, and last year toured with David Sanborn.

Ms. Carrington said she rarely got nervous playing with such established musicians. Carlos Santana, Patrice Rushen and Grover Washington Jr. are among the musicians on her new album.

"I usually put more pressure on myself than they did," she said. "I remember Wayne would say, 'It's only music, relax.' That changed my outlook."

After five years she began to dislike New York City, and recently moved to Los Angeles. She lives in the suburb of Glendale. It reminds her more of the suburban neighborhood where she grew up.

In Los Angeles, the transformation from journeyman jazz musician to budding star is in full swing. "The Arsenio Hall Show" brought her national celebrity. Her circle of friends include actresses Dawnn Lewis of "A Different World" and Marsha Warfield of "Night Court."

Her next album will be mostly vocals.

NBC's 'FM' tunes network into Nielsen rating's Top 10

By JERRY BUCK
AP Television Writer

LOS ANGELES — NBC's comic look at listener-supported radio got enough viewer support to land in fifth place in the Nielsen ratings.

The Thursday preview of "FM" was in the Top 10 with five other NBC sitcoms and four from ABC, as comedy took over the ratings for the second week.

"FM," starring Robert Hays, is set among the eccentrics of a Washington public radio station. The show will move into its regular time slot tonight.

NBC's "Cheers" was first for the week ended Aug. 20, closely followed by ABC's "Roseanne."

NBC won the week with an average of 12.0 in the A.C. Nielsen Co. survey. ABC and CBS tied at 9.6 each. It was NBC's 61st straight win.

For the season to date, since Sept. 19, 1988, NBC leads with an average of 14.6. ABC is second with 11.7 and CBS is third with 11.6. The rating is the percentage of the estimated 90.4 million homes with television in the United States. The share is the percentage of sets in use.

More people watched the three networks last week. Their share of the audience was 59 last week, up from 56 the week before. It's the best three-network share since the week of June 19.

CBS had only three shows in the first 30. They were "Murder, She Wrote" in 13th place, "60 Minutes" tied for 15th and "If Tomorrow Comes" Part II in 20th place.

Here are the Top 10: NBC's "Cheers," ABC's "Roseanne," NBC's "The Golden Girls" special, ABC's "The Wonder Years," NBC's "FM," NBC's "A Different World," NBC's "The Cosby Show," ABC's "Who's the Boss?," NBC's "Empty Nest" and ABC's "Anything But Love."

The regular "Golden Girls" tied for 11th and an "Empty Nest" special was 18th. A special showing of "Knight & Daye," another NBC summer show that has not done well in the ratings, was 13th.

NBC also previewed a fall Saturday morning show, "Saved By the Bell." The live-action show was 47th.

CBS had its only victory by placing highest among the evening news show with 8.7. ABC and NBC tied for second at 8.4 each.

'Uncle Buck' tops box office; 'Nightmare' fades

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — The John Candy vehicle "Uncle Buck" took first place in the weekend box office revue, beating the highly touted "Parenthood," "The Abyss" and "Casualties of War."

Director John Hughes' comedy grossed $8.8 million, according to figures released Monday by Exhibitor Relations Inc. The movie stars Candy as a peculiar relative struggling to babysit his nephew and two nieces.

Meanwhile, attendance at "A Nightmare on Elm Street 5: The Dream Child" dropped by nearly 50 percent and the film finished eighth in its second week of release, indicating Freddy Krueger's final demise may arrive sooner rather than later.

Ron Howard's "Parenthood" finished second after two weeks in first place. A bittersweet commentary on the American family, "Parenthood" stars Steve Martin and Jason Robards and had ticket sales of $7.6 million.

The underwater spectacular "The Abyss" continued to generate steady business in third with a box-office take of $7.2 million. The movie features Ed Harris and Mary Elizabeth Mastrantonio trapped on the ocean floor in a special-effects laden epic.

"Casualties of War," the new Vietnam movie starring Michael J. Fox and Sean Penn, opened with an unimpressive $5.2 million in wide release to claim fourth place. Directed by Brian De Palma, "Casualties of War" tells the story of the rape and murder of a Vietnamese girl by a group of U.S. soldiers.

"When Harry Met Sally...," the romantic comedy pitting Billy Crystal and Meg Ryan as best friends who become lovers, finished in fifth by collecting $4.9 million. It was followed in sixth by "Lethal Weapon 2," the action-adventure sequel with Mel Gibson and Danny Glover, which grossed $4.5 million.

In seventh was the police comedy "Turner and Hooch," featuring Tom Hanks, on receipts of $4.3 million. In eighth was "A Nightmare on Elm Street 5: The Dream Child." The film's take, $8.1 million in its opening week, fell to $4.1 million.

Rounding out the Top 10 were "Batman" in ninth with $3.4 million and the new family film "Cheetah" in 10th with $2.6 million. "Let it Ride" opened weakly in 12th place with sales of $1.9 million.

Both "Young Einstein" with Australian import Yahoo Serious and "Lock Up" with Sylvester Stallone dropped out of the Top 10.

Here are the top movies for the weekend as tallied by Exhibitor Relations, with distributor, weekend gross, number of theater screens, average per screen, total gross and number of weeks in release.

1. "Uncle Buck," Universal, $8.8 million, 1,804 screens, $4,875 per screen, $11.9 million, one week.
2. "Parenthood," Universal, $7.6 million, 1,316 screens, $5,780 per screen, $43.3 million, three weeks.
3. "The Abyss," 20th Century Fox, $7.2 million, 1,538 screens, $4,690 per screen, $24.7 million, two weeks.
4. "Casualties of War," Columbia, $5.2 million, 1,487 screens, $3,498 per screen, $5.2 million, one week.
5. "When Harry Met Sally...," Columbia, $4.9 million, 1,144 screens, $4,281 per screen, $54 million, six weeks.
6. "Lethal Weapon 2," Warner Bros., $4.5 million, 1,584 screens, $2,851 per screen, $119.6 million, seven weeks.
7. "Turner and Hooch," Disney, $4.3 million, 1,594 screens, $2,682 per screen, $46.6 million, four weeks.
8. "A Nightmare on Elm Street 5: The Dream Child," New Line, $4.1 million, 1,846 screens, $2,213 per screen, $15.2 million, two weeks.
9. "Batman," Warner Bros., $3.4 million, 1,400 screens, $2,457 per screen, $229 million, nine weeks.
10. "Cheetah," Disney, $2.6 million, 1,310 screens, $2,012 per screen, $2.6 million, one week.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

MONDAY, AUGUST 28, 1989

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Let go of a dead-end relationship and develop a dazzling new partnership. Concentrate on the larger picture, ignoring trivial details. Keep the channels of communication open with former employers.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Say exactly what you mean and you will make swifter progress at work. A career involving children will prove emotionally rewarding. A close relationship takes on added meaning. Reveal your romantic side.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): If something is bothering you, get it off your chest. Mate or partner will be more supportive than you expect. Travel enjoys favorable influences. Cement important new alliances by doing special favors.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your personality plus special skills put you in the running for a fabulous new job. Go after it! Do not let insurance and investment matters slide. Seek experts' advice if necessary.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Cooperation is the key to your success. You know when to be assertive and when to pull back. Steer clear of critical, negative people. A friend's introduction helps you open new doors.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A good day to trade favors or tangible goods. Be more flexible where your schedule is concerned; others are counting on you! Keep accurate financial records for tax purposes. Save receipts.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Recent actions begin to produce results. Let the dust settle a bit before you reopen negotiations. A move up the corporate ladder is likely. New friends add excitement to your personal life.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A wealthy friend may invite you on a trip. Although the opportunity sounds golden, there could be strings attached. You treasure your independence. Keep your private life separate from business.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Good things happen when you think positive thoughts. Concentrate on the future. Learn to delegate routine responsibilities to subordinates. Romance could fool you; watch for clues.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Do not allow personal problems to intrude on your job. A real estate deal is a wise investment. You gain new respect when you stick your neck out. Romance will be fun and games.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Your attempts to help someone could backfire. Do not despair. Gather new information if you are working on a complex project. Having your car checked out now could prevent costly repairs.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Drop outdated procedures and simplify business operation. Ask key questions. That's how you beat out your competitors. A mislaid object surfaces under unusual circumstances.

Opening lead: King of ♡

The late Alphonse "Sonny" Moyse was a staunch propounder of the theory that a 4-3 major fit provides an excellent trump suit. That might be so, but it requires careful technique to maintain control of the hand.

North-South conducted an immaculate auction to reach the only makable game. Note that, in five clubs, declarer has no way to avoid losing three tricks in the red suits.

West cashed the king and queen of hearts, then continued with the ace. If the spades break 3-3, declarer cannot go wrong. He can ruff, draw trumps and claim 10 tricks—three spades, a ruff, one diamond and five clubs. However, an even spade division is against the odds. The most likely distribution is 4-2. Can declarer neutralize that?

Of course. Instead of ruffing the third heart, declarer must discard his diamond loser—a trick he would have had to surrender anyway. Now it needs only a modicum of care to make sure of the contract.

Best is for West to continue with a fourth heart. Declarer has only to take the simple precaution of ruffing with one of the table's high trumps to land his contract. All that is left to be done is make sure the spades are no worse than 4-2, draw the trumps and claim the rest of the tricks.

Who knows? Perhaps Sonny was right, after all.

Allen, Peters host hoedown at L.A. restaurant

Peter Allen and Bernadette Peters played Los Angeles, and before heading on to their cross-country performance tour, they hosted a hoedown at the new Japanese restaurant, Robata.

Guests included Khrystyne Haje, Dan Frishman, Jon Voight, Peter Noone (the Herman of Herman's Hermits during the '60s).

Peter Noone currently hosts a cable talk show, "My Generation," which he tapes in New York, and he recalls his encounters with Col. Tom Parker, who masterminded Elvis Presley's career. (CNS)

Oscar de la Renta stages fashion show

OSCAR'S BACK IN TOWN

He managed a luncheon with Nancy Reagan, was partied by globe-trotters Mary and Irving Lazar (Barbara and Frank Sinatra, Barbra Streisand, Jack Nicholson were among the Lazars' 30 guests), and the next night designer Oscar de la Renta staged a fall fashion show at the Hotel Bel-Air.

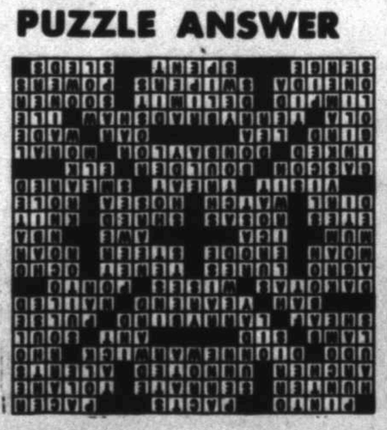

Apparently, over 400 models auditioned for the show, and one was flown in from New York.

Janet, whose husband Freddie produces Johnny Carson's "Tonight" Show, reminisced about Hollywood past, and recalled when Marilyn Monroe was asked why she and Larry Olivier didn't get along during the filming of "The Prince and the Showgirl," Marilyn sighed in her little-girl voice, "I never say anything about my co-stars that would be derogatory."

Lodging at the Hotel Bel-Air were Oprah Winfrey and her best friend Stedman Graham, who were in town for Quincy Jones' star-studded birthday party for his beloved Verna Harrah.

THE STATE OF THE PARTY.

Get ready, Midland/Odessa. Randy's party is right around the bend and it promises to be a big one. As big as Texas. From up in Dallas to down in The Rio Grande Valley, to San Antonio and Corpus Christi and to Houston. And let's not forget Midland/Odessa. There are going to be all-day festivals going on, live bands playing, celebrities appearing, plenty of games, good food and ice-cold Miller Lite. And with two million Texans expected to show, this is going to be the biggest and best party in history. Let's just hope we don't get any complaints from the neighbors—Oklahoma, Louisiana and New Mexico. Don't forget, proceeds from the party will help raise one million dollars for Texas Special Olympics.

MIDLAND/ODESSA, SEPTEMBER 2ND

Get set, Midland/Odessa, for a day you'll never forget. Randy's put together an all-day festival with some great music, some hot food and a bunch of excitement that's sure to get your spurs in a whirl.

ALL-DAY FESTIVAL

WHO: Waylon Jennings • Bellamy Brothers • T. Graham Brown • William Lee Golden and The Goldens • Ronna Reeves and Shot In The Dark • Augie Meyers.

WHAT: BPIH Black Gold Chili Cook-Off (CASI-SANCTIONED. For info call 915-682-9343) • Classic Car Show • Amusement Tent • Carnival Rides and Games • Specialty Foods • Skydiver Exhibition • Jim Shoulders and Bufford T. Lite II • Plus much, much more.

WHERE: Twin Cities Speedway.

WHEN: 11:00am—12:00 midnight.

HOW MUCH: $7.50 in advance. $10.00 at the door. Tickets available at Luskey's Western Wear-Midland/Odessa, Harold's Electronics, KMID-TV "BIG 2."

HAVE A GREAT TIME, MIDLAND/ODESSA, BUT PLEASE REMEMBER to get there early. Because of the amount of Texans Randy's rounding up, you may get stuck standing way in the back of New Mexico.

A FEW REQUESTS...

- In all situations please think when you drink. (Designated drivers will receive free soft drinks.)
- Don't bring any firearms and/or fireworks to the party.
- Leave all carry-ins, including coolers, glass containers, cans and bottles, at home.

Thanks, Texas. See you at the party.

The Miller Brewing Company and Texas Special Olympics want you to have a good time but please...

Pollution concerns define California gas market

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

NATURAL GAS

THE CALIFORNIA CONNECTION
Part II

Can one man's nightmare become another man's dream? That appears to be the case in Southern California where an environmental nightmare is creating a dream market for Texas gas producers.

Famous for its sunshine and fads, California is equally famous for having the dirtiest air in the nation.

Much of the year the air in Southern California is simply unfit for human consumption and poses a health threat to residents, according to the South Coast Air Quality Management District, a smog-busting organization responsible for cleaning up the air in Los Angeles, Orange, Riverside and San Bernardino counties. According to the district, it is the only area of the nation that does not meet federal clean air standards for nitrogen dioxide. Ozone, the best known component in smog, frequently exceed three times federal standards; carbon monoxide and particulates are often more than twice the standard.

Southern California has consistently lagged behind federal air standards, because of too many people and too many vehicles in too small of an area, and because of ongoing wars of conflict between environmentalists and the business interests. But with the approval of the rigid Air Quality Management Plan (AQMP) this week, it now appears that a concensus willing to bite the bullet and make extremely hard environmental choices has formed.

The South Coast Air Quality Management Plan, is a 45-volume, three-foot tall collection of proposed anti-smog documents and laws designed to bring California air quality up to federal standards by 2007.

While envirnomentalist applaude the controversial three-tier plan, not everyone welcomes it. It is so strict, and far-reaching that some businesses have threatened to pack up and leave California if the laws become effective.

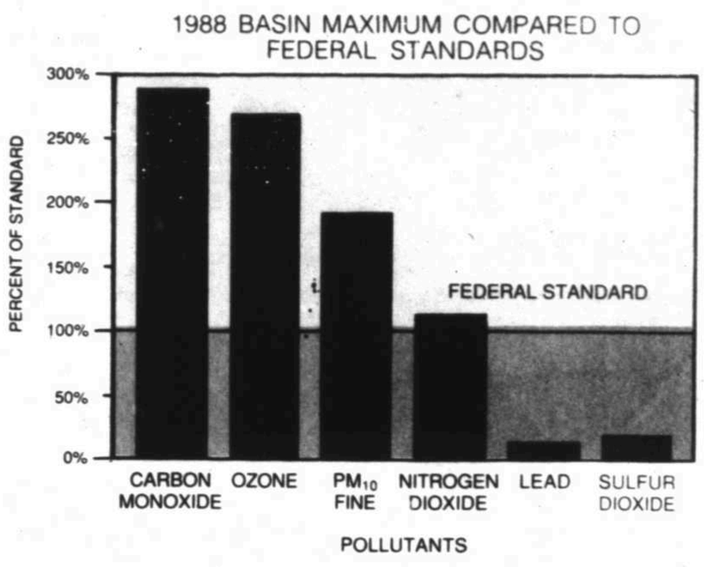

Local governments also offer concern. "Our central concern all along has been with the growth management control measures that are in this plan," said Bart Doyle, a lawyer for the Building Industry Association of Southern California in a recent Associated Press news report. "They tend to run roughshod over local control and land-use planning measures that already are in effect."

David Neumann, a first vice president for Security Pacific Bank, said it's too early to tell how well the ride-sharing requirements will work out, but added:

"We certainly are taking the regulation seriously."

But such concerns may fall on dead ears, because it now appears to be a battle against the calander for sunny Southern California. Like several other metropolitan areas around the nation who have failed to clean up their dirty air, the four county metropolitan area must now race forward

Lite foods: Emerging trend or passing fad

By JULIE JEROME
Business/Oil Writer

In response to what they perceive as stronger demands by customers to offer low-calorie, low-fat and low-cholesterol food, some local restaurants are beginning to change their menus accordingly.

However, some food-service individuals believe that most people diet "like crazy" at home, and when they go out to eat, their greatest requirement is that it taste good, rather than be nutritious.

"From the customers' standpoint, dining out is the number one form of entertainment," according to Fred M. Phillips, president of the Permian Basin chapter of the Texas Restaurant Association. "Though there is a greater level of health consciousness among the consumer than there has been, the primary requirement is that the food taste good."

To many Midlanders, the definition of "lite" eating can be found at Lite Bites restaurants, a two-year-old endeavor that proves money can be made on this trend in eating out.

Steve Plummer, president of Bless Your Heart, the parent company of Lite Bites, said people are becoming better informed on how important it is to "eat and live right."

Bless Your Heart now operates five restaurants in Midland and Odessa, and has franchises throughout the United States. Plummer estimates the company will operate 11 restaurants within two months, exemplifying the demand for this type of food. The Odessa location recently tripled in size, taking over a 32,000 square foot defunct fast-food restaurant, ironically.

"We have a healthy bottom line," he said. "I would say it's average, or above average of other restaurants. With our food costs and labor we can bring to the bottom line what the average restaurant brings to its bottom line."

Bless Your Heart food contains no sugar, no fat, and is low in cholesterol. Meats are 97 percent fat free, and salad dressings, which are made from scratch, are essentially fat free. The large-sized portions have all be approved by the American Heart Association and the American Diabetes Association.

Plummer will concede that expanding sales can be partially attributed to the "lite" type food, but not altogether.

"There have been people who have copied us, and haven't made it," he said. "The atmosphere must be done right. The food must taste good and be something that people enjoy eating. Successful restaurants are places where people enjoy their food. People want to eat healthy and they want light meals that have taste."

Plummer is confident this trend is not a fad.

"It will be around forever," he said. "People will not go back to eating greasy chicken fried steak with white bread and gravy. People are getting educated. They are seeing how harmful fried foods can be to your health. It's just a matter of time before this is phased out."

But Karen Hilliard, owner of Karen's, a successful restaurant that tops the NCNB tower, believes in serving what the customers demand when they eat out. And many times that is a thick, juicy beef steak.

"I sell more beef," she said, noting a recent group of 16 men who ate at Karens. Ten of them ordered steak, she said.

"At home people are dieting like crazy," Hilliard said. "But when they go out, I don't think they want to spend money for less food. A lot of it has to do with taste. You can do a lot with spice, but when it comes down to it, many times they want the taste fat can give them."

Phillips said that according to a recent survey by the Texas Restaurant Association, 32 percent of Texans were on a diet at the time of the survey.

"And those dieters are eating out more often than the people who are not dieting," he said. "It is good for business to have some foods for the health conscious."

He noted that 50 percent of the individuals who eat out want to know the nutritional value of the food they're eating, while the other half don't necessarily care.

Karens offers a low-calorie, low-fat lemon herb baked chicken with fresh roasted garlic, a "trendy" health item, she said. And because her chefs prepare each dish individually, they can set aside dressings or respond to special requests.

Gramm to be speaker at reunion

From Staff Reports

Gramm

Senator Phil Gramm will be the keynote speaker at the 16th Biennial Reunion of Permian Basin Petroleum Pioneers slated for October 27, according to Decker Dawson, chairman of the Pioneers Association.

Dawson said the U.S. Senator from Texas would speak at the men's luncheon in the main ballroom of the Midland Holiday Inn Country Villa.

Other activites planned for the one-day reunion include: a ladies luncheon, coffee fellowship, tour of the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum and reception banquet.

The ladies luncheon will be held at Green Tree Country Club and will feature a style show presented by Swartz of Midland.

Tours of Midland and the Petroleum Museum are scheduled for the afternoon and will be followed by the reception and buffet at 6:30 p.m.

The Petroleum Pioneers Reunion is sponsored by the Pioneers Association in cooperation with the Midland Chamber of Commerce and draws hundreds of participants from throughout the U.S. each year who return to Midland to recount the "good ole" days in the oil patch of West Texas and New Mexico.

The group meets every other year in Midland, alternating meeting years with the Permian Basin Oil Show.

Bill Collyns, a spokesman for the Pioneers, said the reunion affords members of the highly mobile oil industry a means of keeping in contact with friends and acquaintences from the past.

Included in the group are both independent oilmen and employees of major oil companies and service companies. Many major oil companies once had company camps in which all employees lived and residents of those camps became like family, says Collyns.

All persons engaged in some phase of the petroleum industry at least 30 years prior to October 1, 1989 are elgible for membership. There is no membership fee, and those interested may contact Membership Chairman Les Wetherall at the Midland Chamber of Commerce.

Employee leasing concept headed for Basin?

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

When one thinks of leasing something, usually automobiles, apartments or office space or furniture usually spring to mind. Now there's a growing trend toward leasing employees.

Employee leasing is a relatively new management concept and an industry that grew 30 percent in 1988 — to a total of 165,000 leased employees nationwide. It is a concept that may be on its way to Midland.

While many people think of temporary employees when employee leasing is mentioned, employee leasing actually occurs when a firm "fires" its employees, who are then hired by the leasing company. Former employees become present employees, when the original firm contracts with the leasing company to have the former employees do their old job.

"What we do is stabilize the workforce by giving better benefits," explains Joe Carlock of Advantage Corporate Services of Cleburne. He founded the company with his partner Terry Wade, and has seen it grow to 2,500 employees under contract to over 100 clients and with an annual payroll near $35 million in four years. Advantage is one of the largest employee leasing firms in the nation. Approximately 20 people work for Advantage itself.

Carlock says he now has his eye on bringing the employee leasing concept to Midland, and is currently looking for a Midland sales representative.

Carlock says there are a number of benefits to leasing employees. Such as:

- Greater efficiency in producing payrolls due to economies of scale, since the company is producing payrolls for more than one company.
- Better benefits, since the leasing company can use its greater buying power to get discounts on health, life, vision and dental insurance rates.
- Leasing companies take on the responsibility of filing employee withholding taxes and IRS forms. "The government loves it, because they only have to deal with one company," notes Carlock.
- Leasing companies can ensure that when a client fires an employee, that firing is legal.
- Finally, the leasing company can help reduce workers' compensation costs by sending loss control experts to the clients, making sure the work sites are as safe as possible. Carlock says this is an important issue with his clients.

Former employees become present employees, when the original firm contracts with the leasing company to have the former employees do their old job.

The service — begun in the early 1980s in California — sells itself, Carlock says, but customers are slow to commit to it, because it's too good to be true. "One client took two or three years to sign on," he recalls.

And it's a service available to anyone. As Carlock puts it, "our market is any company that has employees. And that's a big market." he has clients ranging from medical services to plumbers, hotels, restaurants, retailers, construction, manufacturers and title companies. "We look for clients sophisticated enough to hire skilled workers," he says.

By taking over much of a company's paperwork, Carlock says, his client company has more time to concentrate on productive work such as manufacturing or, in the case of doc-

Basin count increases one

From Staff Reports

The U.S. rig count showed a strong surge while the Permian Basin count managed a one-rig gain.

Baker Hughes reported that the number of oil and gas rigs working in the U.S. rose 45 to 903 afte a fall of 16 the previous week.

At the same time, the Basin count rose one to 87 after remaining at 86 two consecutive weeks.

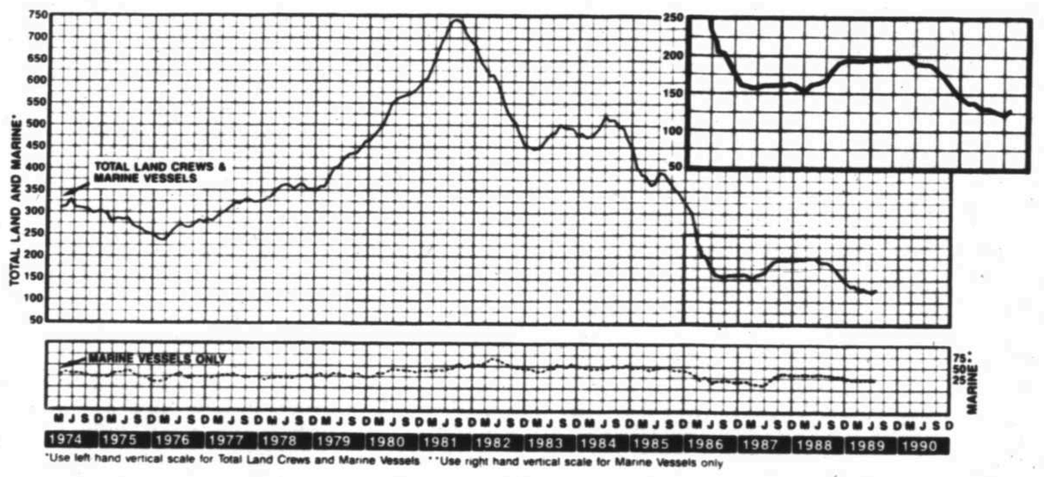

The steep increase nationally partly was due to areas drying out from the heavy rains brought on by Hurricane Chantal several weeks ago, said Ike Kerridge, vice president of stockholder relations and economist for Baker Hughes.

The increase, however, was somewhat anticipated, he said.

"All the surveys done said there would be more drilling in the second half of the year. I wouldn't be surprised if we didn't have a steady increase for the remainder of the year."

Seismic counts increase

The Society of Exploration Geophysicists report that both the U.S. and international seismic crew counts are on the upswing. In the U.S., the number of land crews and marine vessels searching for oil and gas in the U.S. and U.S. waters rose five in July. The land crew rose five to 107 while the marine crew remained stable, for a total of 129.

During the first quarter of 1989, the number of seismic crews working internationally rose to 563. The number of land crews rose 37 from the December 1988 total of 449, while the marine crew total fell one from the December total. Increases were reported in Canada, Central and South America, Europe, Africa and the Far east.

Marketed gas production off in April

From Staff Reports

AUSTIN — The Texas Railroad Commission reports that Texas marketed gas in April totaled 363,333,446 Mcf, compared to the March total of 388,012,643 Mcf.

However, the April total showed a 1.18 percent increase from April 1988 production of 359,042,435 Mcf. Total gas production in Texas in April was 460,664,392 Mcf.

Marketed gas is the gas left after liquid hydrocarbons have been separated on the lease from the "wet" gas that is usually produced at the wellhead. It also does not include gas that is used to fuel production-related equipment on the lease site, or gas that is otherwise not marketed.

Exports of Texas-produced gas totaled 159,083,645 Mcf, down from 160,713,332 Mcf exported in March. The commission reports that the April exports were up 0.47 percent from April 1988 exports of 158,336,548 Mcf.

Operators also reported a total of 298,224,385 Mcf of gas in Texas storage facilities in April, up from March's total of 295,853,280 Mcf. This reflects a 1.33 percent increase when compared to April 1988's volume.

The top exporter of Texas-produced natural gas in April was Tennessee Gas Pipeline Co.

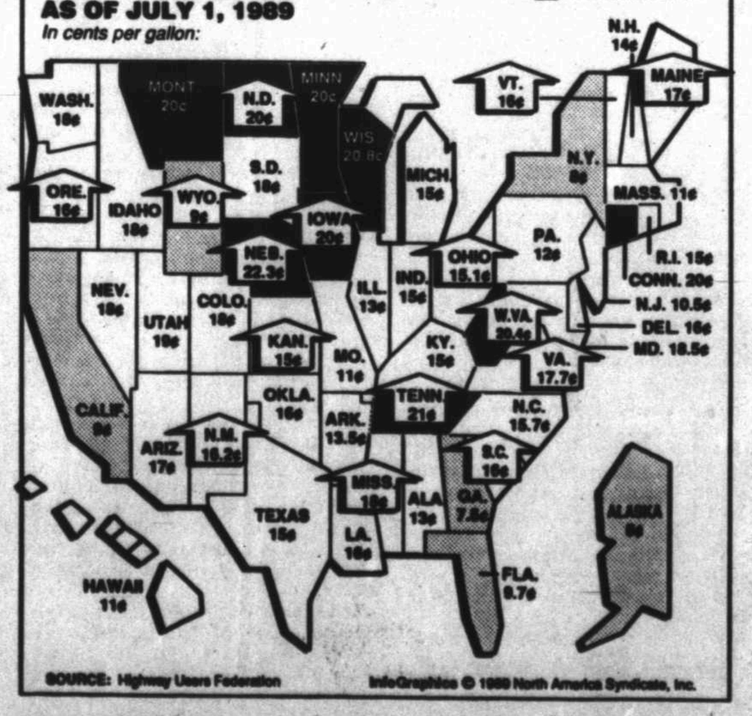

Motor fuel taxes on the rise

By July 1, 1989, 15 states will have increased their motor fuel tax since the beginning of the year. Nebraska and Wisconsin lowered their tax rate by 0.1 cents per gallon on Jan. 1, 1989, but Nebraska then increased its tax by 0.3 cents per gallon on April 1. Taxes in cents per gallon on gasoline range from a low of 7.5 cents in Georgia to a high of 20.8 cents in Wisconsin.

"But you have to know food to pick it (high fat or high calorie items) out," she said. "Restaurants can present 'lite' dishes without being low calorie. The customer is really at the mercy of the restaurant."

Few Mexican restaurants can offer "good Mexican food," that is also low in fat, cholesterol and calories. However, El Chico is trying with its most recent menu additions.

The Red River Grilled Chicken entree has 460 calories, is low in sodium, cholesterol, fat and calories, according to George Moreno, general manger of Midland's El Chico. The meal consists of five ounces of chicken, corn on the cob, squash and a salad. Rio Grande Chicken Salad has 350 calories, and is also low in calories, cholesterol, fat and sodium, he said.

El Chico decided to offer these entrees because "a lot of people expressed an interest in these plates," he said. El Chico hired a dietician, who designed the "lite" menu.

The plates were introduced in El Chico restaurants two weeks ago, Moreno said, and sales have exceeded expectations. In fact, sales of the two entrees were higher in Midland than in several Dallas locations, he said.

And most importantly, the introduction of the new plates has affected Moreno's bottom line.

"Quite a few of our customers are watching their cholesterol," he said. "Their doctors have told them to be conscious about what they eat. And they are coming in here just for these meals."

Phillips said though chicken consumption is on the rise, beef consumption hasn't necessarily declined.

"People's habits are not easily changed," he said. "We all have good intentions, but it is hard to change."

But a beef processor in Phoenix is trying to recapture some retail beef sales it believes is being lost to poultry and fish.

Sun Land Beef Co., recently introduced a new line of fresh beef that is between 91 and 98 percent fat free, low in cholesterol, calories and sodium.

Called Golden Trim, America's Lite Beef, the product line comprises 27 beef cuts. It carries the USDA-approved nutrition labeling, and exceeds requirements for the USDA Lite beef designation.

U.S. retail beef sales are projected to drop by more than $4 billion in 1989, reflecting a dramatic shift in consumption patterns to poultry and fish, according to Beth M. Meyer, a spokeswoman for Sun Land Beef. By the end of 1989 beef consumption is projected to decline to 66.8 pounds per capita from 94.4 pounds in 1976. Poultry is expected to increase to 84.1 pounds from 51.8 pounds in 1976.

Meyer said sales of the "lite" beef have taken off, far exceeding expectations.

The beef is carried by a restaurant chain in Phoenix, she said, and the beef processing company is targeting first supermarkets, then restaurants. The Garland supermarket chain in Houston carries Golden Trim.

"The food service industry knocked on our door, and we will pursue this market, " she said. "The interest is out there."

And finally, vending machines are offering health-conscious "snackers" a break. There is now a "lite" frito.

Don Jackson, warehouse manager for Refreshments Vending & Food Service, reports the chips have been on sale in Midland since the beginning of the summer, and are selling "medium well."

He compares the low-fat chips to "light" cigarettes introduced several years ago. At first they didn't sell, however, now they sell better than regular cigarettes.

"I think the lite chips will catch on eventually," he said.

Jackson, who has been in the vending business for 22 years, noted several attempts at selling low calorie, low fat foods such as fruit and fruit juices. However, they don't tend to sell well.

"We're in snacks," he said. "We sell calorie foods. That is what's moving. How can you explain a Snickers and Diet Coke? People go to our machines for a snack. They go for a lift up."

GAS

race forward with its own clean air plan before the before federal government imposes its own plan and enforces it through the courts.

Both environmental and business interest agree that such a happening is to be avoided at all cost. A California energy newsletter concludes that federal court control would cause some businesses to be closed promptly.

Still it is not know exactly what the impact of AQMP wil be. "The South Coast plan is so encompassing and so broad in its scope that we don't really know yet what the financial implications are as we go into the next century," said Robert Raskin of Owens-Brockway Corp., a glass bottle maker with California plants in Vernon and Pomona.

The proposals outlined in the Air Quality Management Plan would hit everything from backyard barbecue pits to smoke stacks and totally change the lifestyle of residents in Los Angeles, Orange, San Bernardino and Riverside counties.

Here are a few examples of the plan:

- The sale and use of barbecue starter fluids, a highly volatile petroleum distillate, would be bannned.
- Over 1,700 dry cleaning establishments would have to purchase equipment to contain the volatile vapors of perchloroethylene, a dry cleaning fluid.
- Outboard and inboard engines for recreational boat would have to meet tough air pollution standards, so would offroad vehicles.
- Banks and other drive-through businesses would have to reduce the time automobiles spend idling in lines.
- Manufactures would be required to keep tight reign over chemicals, including paints and solvents, used in manufacturing processes.
- Plans to reduce traffic include: company sponsored car pooling and land use plans that put employees closer to jobs.
- Industries would be required to reduce nitrogen oxide emissions from furnaces and smoke stacks.
- Vehicle emissions would be tackled with electric vehicles and cleanburning fuels, such as compressed natural gas, methanol and cleanerburning gasoline.

It is the categories of industrial and vehicle emissions that holds the most promise for increased natural gas sales.

If the Air Quality Management Plan is to meet federal standards on nitrogen oxide by 1996, on carbon monoxide by 1997 and ozone and particulates by 2007, it cannot cast its hopes on yet to be proven technology. It must rely on a clean-burning, abundant fuel that is ready now for the marketplace, and it must begin to increase its use. Natural gas is the only fuel that fits the bill.

"California has no choice but to use more Texas natural gas," says Texas Railroad Commissioner John Sharp. "It is just a matter of breaking it to them gently."

Whether or not California's transportation fuel of the future will be methanol or compressed natural gas (CNG) is a topic for another discussion. But whatever the choice, it will translate into a higher demand for natural gas, since methanol is made from natural gas.

Some like Texas Land Commissioner Garry Mauro, however, are fearful that if the choice is methanol much of the supply may come from imports, perhaps Saudi Arabia, and have little positive impact upon the domestic natural gas industry.

Enron Chairman Kenneth Lay, speaking in Los Angeles at the recent Texas-California Natural Gas Conference co-sponsored by John Sharp, described natural gas as a "step child" fuel that had finally come into its own because of environmental concerns.

"As we look at the environmental proposals of California and President Bush, we can see that natural gas has a role to play. In making environmental choices, fuel choices must be made, and cleaning-burning natural gas provides California a choice," said Lay.

He predicted that as the nation moves into the 1990's environmental concerns would impact the economy more than any other issue, as it has in California, and added that natural gas would soon be priced in accordance with its ability to clean up the atmosphere.

Lay said that natural gas could be the ideal fuel for cleaning up not only pollution problems in California but other areas as well. He said natural gas had emissions about 1/10 that of fuel oil, 1/20 that of coal boilers with scrubbers and 1/60 of coal boilers without scrubbers.

"If communities internalize costs and recognize the cost of pollution, then natural gas and compressed natural gas will be the fuel of choice," said Lay.

Texas-based black companies have opportunities, limitations

By DARRYL EWING

DALLAS (AP) — Erroneous stereotypes have limited the growth of black-owned businesses in Texas, although there's a thriving number of small enterprises throughout the state, according to businessmen and government officials.

Surveys rank Dallas and Houston high on the number of minority-owned businesses, but only one Texas firm made it on a list of the nation's 100 largest black-owned business — and that company moved into the state nine years ago.

With 1988 revenues of $31.2 million, Dallas-based Pro-Line Corp., a hair care products manufacturer and distributor, was 18th on Black Enterprise magazine's annual list.

"There are other successful black businesses (in Texas)," said Alfred Calloway, president of Houston Citizens' Chamber of Commerce. "They're not as large as Pro-Line, but they're there."

A 1988 report in American Demographics magazine listed Houston third nationwide in the number of black businesses with 12,208. Dallas-Fort Worth ranked sixth with 7,625 black businesses. The Los Angeles-Long Beach area topped the list with 23,629.

One area where Texas is well represented, however, was on Black Enterprise's list of 100 biggest black-owned auto dealerships, which included six from the Lone Star State, led by Gulf Freeway Dodge in Houston, sixth overall with sales of $38.5 million.

"Texas offers a good business climate for minorities," said Keith Ashby of the Minority Business Development Center in Dallas. Funded by the U.S. Department of Commerce, the center provides business planning assistance for minority firms.

"There's a lot of defense contract spending here," Ashby said. "Blacks want to be in a position to take advantage of that."

The problem, the experts say, is that money is controlled by banks and contractors who have been unwilling to roll out the welcome mat for minorities.

"It's hard to get the initial capital," Ashby said. "Whites still have most of the input in determining who gets the contract and who gets the loan."

Black businessman Lucious Williams agreed.

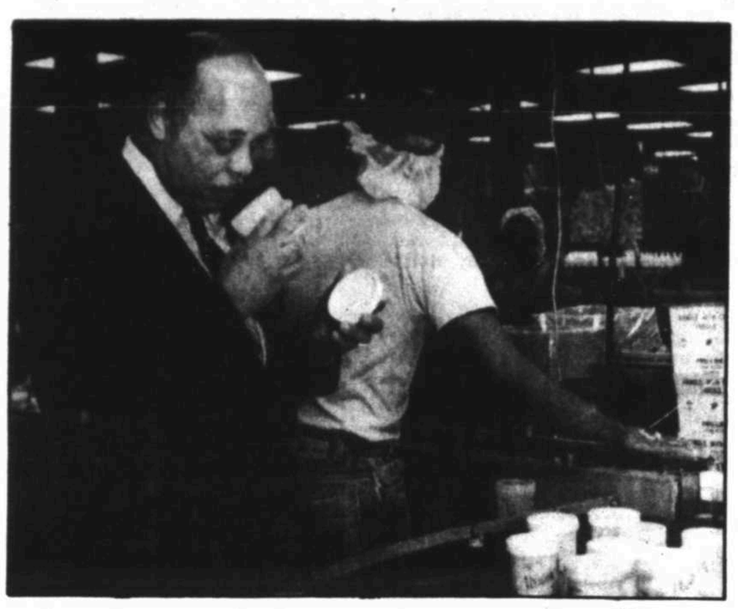

"(Blacks have) always had difficulty getting financing from banks," said Williams, who owns Dikita Enterprises of Texas Inc., an engineering and construction management firm. His 10-year-old firm, which has offices in Fort Worth and Dallas, has 13 workers and pulled in about $300,000 last year.

"Too many banks have negative perceptions of the black businessman. They think we operate out of shoe boxes, we're bad in accounting, we don't manage our money," Williams said.

"That's been true to a certain extent, but things are changing with education. We're proving ourselves. But banks still hold on to those kinds of perceptions."

The Dallas-Fort Worth Minority Design Professionals Council helps minorities get a fair shot at contracts when competing with larger, mostly white-owned firms for public and private contracts. Williams is a founder of the group, which includes members from 22 architectural and engineering firms whose owners are Hispanic, Asian-American, American Indian and black.

"The best contracting opportunities are open only to large and super-designed organizations with national resumes," Williams said. "We cannot compete in the marketplace with that type of manpower and experience.

Comer Cottrell, owner of Dallas-based Pro-Line checks on his hair-care products recently. The company is ranked 18th among the nation's largest black-owned businesses by Black Enterprise magazine.

Ashby says federal procurement regulations help give minority businesses a chance to win contracts for such projects as the $4.4 billion superconducting super collider — an atom smasher scheduled for construction near Waxahachie, south of Dallas.

The Texas Department of Commerce's Small Business Division in Austin provides monthly workshops that let small business owners know what state contracts are available and how to gain them. The program targets "second and third tier" communities such as San Angelo, Amarillo and Abilene to limit the bidding competition, said division director Price Arredondo.

"The key is to identify those small niches in which (small businesses) can be competitive," he said. "Once they get into the market, then they can become more sophisticated and maybe compete for some of the larger contracts in some of the larger areas."

The division also developed an entrepreneurial training program with the Texas Higher Education Coordinating Board in January that teaches "the hard-core basics" of managing a firm, he said.

The training course was started in the Dallas County Community College District, and programs are being planned for Odessa, Austin and Mount Pleasant.

Calloway said blacks are gaining political strength in Texas and will use that strength to foster black business growth. In 1985, 1.9 million — or 12 percent — of Texas' 16.38 million people were black, according to the latest census data. The Dallas black population grew 16.4 percent from 1980 to 1985, while Houston's grew 13.6 percent during the same period.

"Black people are working their way into positions of power and leadership," Calloway said. "We're beginning to focus on the political system and what it can yield."

Continental seeks Houston-Tokyo flights

HOUSTON (AP) — Continental Airlines announced Wednesday it is asking the Department of Transportation to serve the route from Houston to Tokyo.

Continental said it is filing with the DOT specified daily 747 flights between Houston Intercontinental Airport and Tokyo's Narita International Airport, with an intermediate stop in Honolulu.

Fares for the new flight have not been determined.

Houston-based Continental began service to Tokyo from Seattle-Tacoma in May.

NCNB Texas:
The Strength. The Stability. The Success.

Last fall, NCNB Texas began this series of reports to supply you with the facts about our organization that you need to judge our strength and stability. We thought it appropriate to speak to you at this time because financial institutions in Texas are again making national news as a result of President Bush's signing the savings and loan bill.

People and companies are asking very important, very valid questions about the financial institutions to which they entrust their money. They're asking questions about financial strength and stability.

Our own confidence in the strength and stability of the Texas economy has never been deeper. We believe we sent that message to the state recently when we completed the purchase of our bank. We know that was the right decision for us, and Texas, both for now and for the future.

In this report we hope that we have been able to address many of the questions about financial institutions. The results we enjoy today, even in this challenging environment, are a direct indicator of the confidence of some very important judges — the most important of which is the Texas customer.

Francis B. "Buddy" Kemp, Chairman

Timothy P. Hartman, Vice Chairman

Kenneth D. Lewis, President

Texas' Largest Bank Is Also Its Strongest.

When NCNB Texas announced its first quarter earnings, you saw the word "surprising" in the headlines. When we announced even higher earnings for the second quarter last month, people didn't seem to be surprised anymore.

NCNB Texas reported consolidated net income of $121.2 million for the first six months of 1989. The improvement in quarterly earnings resulted from excellent growth in earning assets, which were $19.7 billion as of June 30. These numbers are better than those of any other Texas bank.

NCNB Texas' consolidated assets as of June 30 were $27.9 billion. Consolidated total deposits were $21.1 billion. That's why NCNB Texas can make good on its commitment to lend money. More than any other Texas bank, we have the capacity. We have the strongest capital base in the state, at $1.6 billion as of June 30.

This capital level provides a strong capital-to-assets ratio of 7.36%, a further indication of NCNB Texas' financial strength. And it tells Texans that this bank is willing and able to help make their plans real.

Lending money is the cornerstone of banking. And it's the fuel that can power an economy — help it get started and keep it moving on course. NCNB Texas has made more than $1.5 billion in new loans during the first half of this year — which we believe is more than any other Texas bank. Strong loan growth during June increased loan and lease balances at the end of the quarter to $12.3 billion.

Our success during this period is a firm reflection of the confidence and trust our customers have given to us. This can also be seen in the more than 100,000 Resource accounts our customers have opened. These accounts have attracted over $2 billion in deposits. Additionally, over 24,000 Texas households have deposit accounts with balances in excess of $100,000, illustrating their confidence in the stability of NCNB Texas.

As We Grow Strong, So Does Texas.

The positive reception we have received from the investment community is a sign of their confidence in the future of the Texas economy and in NCNB Texas' ability to succeed. One example of the investment community's support is the way we're building our capital funds for continued investment in Texas through the sale of $300 million of subordinated Capital Notes issued by NCNB Texas.

Another indicator of the confidence of investors is the fact that our parent company's share price has doubled since making its commitment to Texas. Analysts attribute much of this rise to NCNB Texas activities.

Customers aren't the only ones who do comparison shopping among the banks. The ratings agencies deliver impartial opinions about the quality of investments offered.

Consider these recent ratings: Moody's ranks NCNB Texas higher than any other major commercial bank in Texas in long-term and short-term deposits, and Standard & Poor's has given us ratings on long-term and short-term CDs as high as any major commercial bank in Texas.

This confidence is also shared by several other private rating services which have given NCNB Texas ratings superior to other major banks in Texas.

Our success goes beyond the strength of our performance indicators. It comes from a belief in ourselves and a belief in Texas. And our commitment is made that much stronger by being a member of one of the nine largest banking organizations in the United States.

The money that is beginning to fuel a slow but steady turnaround in the Texas economy is coming in from customers all over the state — from individuals and businesses large and small. And it's going right back out — in loans to help a family buy a car or its first home, a small business open a second store or a manufacturing conglomerate build new plants.

NCNB Texas' strong position enables it to help lead the way to recovery. That strength, and the stability it provides, also makes it a financial institution worthy of doing business with you.

JOBLESS BENEFITS

From Staff Reports

The U.S. Department of Labor has begun approving petitions from oil and gas-related companies applying for expanded employment benefits under the Trade Adjustment Assistance section of the 1974 Trade Act.

Certification allows all company workers laid off due to a lack of work to apply for enhanced unemployment assistance including: weekly trade adjustment allowances, job placement; employment counseling; vocational training; and financial assistance for retraining, job search and job relocation.

According to the Texas Employment Commission, petitions have been approved for workers separated from the following companies during the specified period:

- Wedge Wireline Inc., petition No. 22952; since May 1, 1988.
- Pearson-Siebert Oil Co., Midland location, petition No. 22975A; since May 3, 1988.

Affected workers should contact Gay Honneywell at the Midland TEC office, 915/682-9421.

Japanese job seekers encounter sellers market

By MAYUMI TANAKA
Hearst News Service

TOKYO — It's an annual summertime ritual for university seniors in Japan: With temperatures and humidity in the 80s, they don dark business suits and prowl city streets in search of jobs that will provide a lifetime ticket to security.

It's a seller's market for seniors, but most of them want one of the few jobs at the "best" companies. And the companies compete in a frenzy for the limited number of seniors at the "best" schools.

As a result, the firms break their own recruitment guidelines, call students at all hours of the night and sometimes even physically restrict their recruits to isolate them from rival companies.

The process is so unpredictable that one counselor said seniors head into it with the same eager anticipation they would feel going to their executions. For most, at the very least, it's a baptism in Japanese business style, characterized by intense competitiveness, a follow-the-leader mentality and a difference between principle and practice.

"It's a game of blindman's bluff," said Takuya Shimomura, a Waseda University senior who had five job offers in early July, seven weeks before recruiting season officially began.

Japan's economic boom, and the subsequent boom in management jobs, has fueled recruitment wars.

"Though the number of students has stayed the same, the number of job vacancies for companies listed on the Tokyo Stock Exchange has tripled in the past 10 years," said Hiroshi Fujita of Recruit Co. It publishes information for students about recruitment opportunities.

According to a "gentleman's agreement" endorsed by nearly all major companies, no students were to be approached for interviews until Aug. 20, and no jobs offered until Oct. 1. The companies and the universities have formed a Recruitment Council to supervise the agreement.

But recruiting increasingly has become a favorite opportunity for competition among major companies, and none of them expects to abide by the agreement.

In late June, according to interviews and newspaper accounts, a rumor swept through universities that banks and insurance companies, which got a late start last year, were to begin secret interviews July 1.

Shimomura, the Waseda senior, checked it out with phone calls to Waseda graduates already working for the companies he was interested in. He was told to stay home and wait for the phone to ring. Soon it was ringing merrily, with dozens of calls from personnel departments seeking to set up July 1 interviews.

But the Recruitment Council caught wind of the breach in the agreement. It called together the major companies and reminded them of their promise, and Shimomura's interviews were canceled.

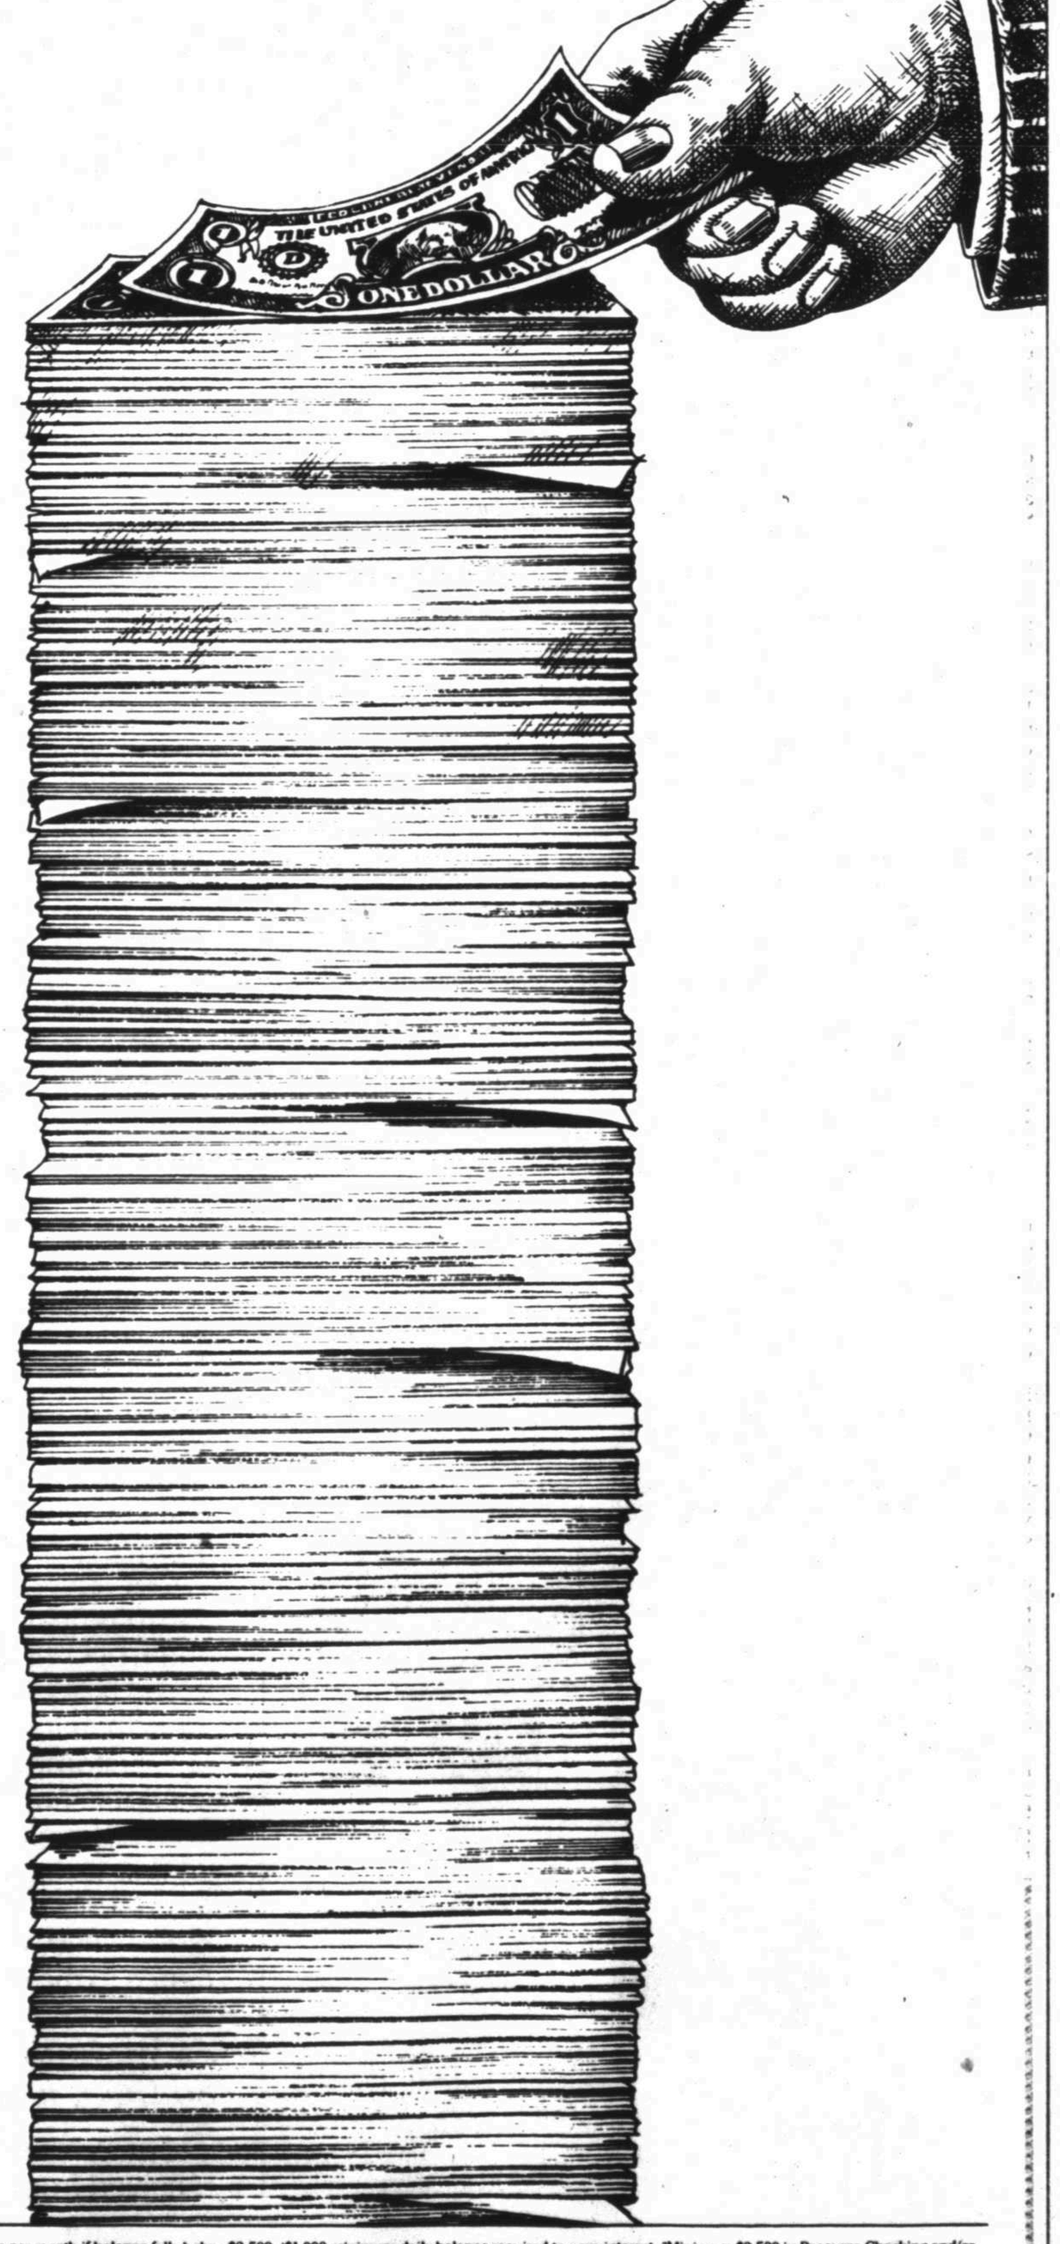

Yet that night the phone began to ring again. Before it stopped, at 2 a.m., all the interviews had been rescheduled for July 2.

McDonald's toys with McPizza

By DEBBIE NEWBY

EVANSVILLE, Ind. (AP) — McDonald's has flipped billions of burgers and tossed chef salads for the masses, but now it's toying with pizza-craving palates in a move aimed at giving Pizza Hut and Domino's pepperoni heartburn.

The latest addition to McDonald's menu is a 14-inch pizza, served as an experiment in a few test markets. It's designed to woo families and couples, who might not normally frequent the fast-food giant for supper.

So far the pizza made of quick-cooking crust and fresh toppings seems to be getting good reviews, partly because it's ready in a few minutes, faster than fastest Pizza Hut or Domino's pizza car.

The experiment began July 10 at a McDonald's in Evansville. Now 16 stores in Evansville and nearby Owensboro, Ky., are serving McDonald's Pizzas daily after 4 p.m.

McDonald's won't say how sales are going and the company hasn't decided whether the pizzas will earn a permanent place on the menu.

"It's very preliminary testing at this point," said Terri Capatosto, a spokeswoman at McDonald's Corp.'s headquarters in Oak Brook, Ill.

Ms. Capatosto said pizzas aren't sold until late afternoon because market research indicates pizza is eaten by families or couples, usually at dinnertime. She declined to explain why the product was being introduced now.

"We tested salads for 12 years before we rolled them out nationally last year," Ms. Capatosto said. "We tested McNuggets for two years."

Fast-food industry analysts said they weren't surprised by the McDonald's pizza experiment, partly because the company has a history of menu innovations to lure new customers during slack hours.

"Their main day business is lunch and breakfast is pretty successful," said Robert Bernstein, who follows McDonald's for Edward D. Jones & Co., a St. Louis-based investment company.

"Their evenings aren't as crowded," Bernstein said. "Let's say it's not as strong as they would like it. Chicken and burgers are finger food on-the-go. Pizza food is sit down and enjoy the evening meal. They think that could improve their overall business."

The pizzas come in four varieties — cheese, pepperoni, sausage and deluxe, which includes pepperoni, sausage, green peppers, mushrooms and tomato slices. Prices range from $5.84 to $9.49.

Test stores have been remodeled to include a special "Pizza Shoppe," where customers can watch employees spread the ingredients on ready-made dough brought in from bakeries.

"It's weird to go into McDonald's and order a pizza," said Julie Bales, a 16-year-old customer from Owensboro munching on a few slices of pepperoni pizza. "But you don't have to wait. I only had to wait about three minutes."

"People hang out here, and you have to buy something to stay here," she said. "You might as well get pizza."

A friend, Amanda Hagan, 16, of Owensboro, said she also sampled the pizza.

"That crust tastes kind of like cardboard, but I like the topping," she said.

Rene and George Jones of Rockport, Ind., said they were pleasantly surprised by the taste.

"It's in between frozen and the kind you buy at Pizza Hut," said Mrs. Jones, 25. "It's a lot better than frozen for what you pay."

Jones, 31, said "It's not as spicy as other pizzas. But it doesn't taste greasy."

McDonald's experimented with small individual pizzas in test markets a few years ago, then evidently dropped the idea. This is the company's first foray into large pizzas aimed at attracting more than one eater.

Regardless of whether McDonald's Pizza becomes a permanent item, the tests are enough to have the giants of the pizza-restaurant business worried that McDonald's, with 8,300 stores nationwide, could grab a piece of their pie.

"We certainly don't take McDonald's lightly," said Roger Rydell, spokesman for No. 1 Pizza Hut Inc., a 7,000-chain network with sales expected to reach $3.2 billion this year. "It's an enormous company with tremendous resources. We're going to have to deal with it and we'll be fierce competitors."

Rydell said Pizza Hut has prepared a marketing plan to deal with the competition.

"We would not want to tip our hand," he said. "But we are going to treat the tests in that particular market the way we treat any encroachment."

tors, medical services. "A lot of our clients are in the medical services. We help reduce turnover by taking over the paperwork. The more specialized your work is, the less time you have to do what we do — paperwork."

Carlock got into the employee leasing business strictly by accident. He had returned to his hometown of Cleburne to open a consulting business. His first client asked him to help open a video store chain. "We did research, and saw that it wouldn't be too long before we'd be swimming in video store," he recalls.

In planning the video store concept, he had planned on having the payroll functions done in a central location. "We decided that a centralized payroll system would work in any industry. Then I heard about another company getting into employee leasing, and it took off from there," Carlock concludes.

He and his partner have worked hard to make Advantage grow, but at a slow, manageable pace, and now he feels the company is ready to expand — perhaps to the Permian Basin.
