El Salvador's neighbor also a challenge

By GEORGE GEDDA
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Although the Reagan administration's efforts to prevent a leftist takeover in El Salvador are dominating the headlines now, the challenge of trying to promot democracy and maintain stability in neighboring Guatemala is even more forbidding.

Despite the U.S. belief that Guatemala's growing leftist insurgency is supported by Soviet bloc forces, the administration has shied away from providing assistance to Guatemala because of widespread human rights abuses.

American officials, who asked not to be identified, say Guatemala has turned a deaf ear to repeated administration appeals for an easing of political repression.

The continuing coolness in U.S.-Guatemalan relations contrasts sharply with close ties the administration has established with other conservative, military-dominated regimes in Latin America and elsewhere.

Lt. Gen. Vernon Walters, a former deputy director of the CIA and now a top State Department aide, has made several unpublicized trips to Guatemala to outine American concerns. He reportedly made no headway.

What makes the situation particularly difficult for the administration is that Guatemala's strategic importance is far greater than that of El Salvador. Guatemala has Central America's largest economy, boasts substantial oil reserves and is located within striking distance of Mexico's oil fields.

Only now has the administration begun to take the first tentative steps toward re-establishing a military relationship with Guatemala, which was suspended in 1977 during the early months of the Carter administration. Economic aid also is limited, but trade ties are normal.

It is about to ask Congress for $250,000 for training Guatemalan military officers but the funds won't be spent unless the human rights situation there improves.

U.S. officials say one reason the administration has declined to seek a sizeable military aid package for Guatemala is that such a request would touch off widespread opposition in Congress.

With the administration expending considerable political capital in efforts to win approval for the rapidly expanding aid program for El Salvador, one official said seeking a similar aid relationship with Guatemala "would overload the circuits."

Officials acknowledge that the El Salvador situation is easier to deal with in some respects than Guatemala.

Commander evaluates aid to El Salvador

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — The U.S. Army's senior commander in Central America was winding up a three-day visit to El Salvador today to assess reports that leftist rebels are making progress against the forces of the U.S.-backed junta.

A U.S. Embassy source, who asked anonymity for diplomatic reasons, said Lt. Gen. Wallace H. Nutting came from his Panama headquarters to "assess the effectiveness of our military assistance" to the military-civilian junta.

The visit followed guerrilla attacks that destroyed half of the junta's air force and cut off eastern El Salvador, and a five-day sweep in which 4,000 government troops were able to kill only 28 of the 400 to 600 guerrillas they were hunting.

Western diplomats and relief workers estimate that the guerrillas move almost at will through 10 of El Salvador's 15 provinces.

Nutting, head of the U.S. Southern Command, inspected a string of military bases, including the headquarters of the U.S.-trained rapid deployment battalion. He also toured the Ilopango Air Base outside San Salvador where a guerrilla attack Jan. 27 destroyed or damaged more than a dozen aircraft, including six U.S.-supplied Huey-1 troop transport helicopters.

After that attack, the Reagan administration announced that it was sending $55 million in emergency aid to the junta in addition to $25 million approved by Congress two months earlier.

About 50 U.S. military advisers have been stationed here since early last year to help train Salvadoran officers and troops in counter-insurgency tactics and servicing equipment.

Nutting also met with Defense Minister Jose Guillermo Garcia, the military strongman of the government, and the armed forces chiefs of staff. The embassy source said Nutting had made no statements about his findings or his conclusions.

Last November, he told The Associated Press in an interview that neither side in El Salvador could exert "decisive control."

No fighting was reported Wednesday, but a judicial official said unidentified gunmen shot and killed the head of the Red Cross in Guazapa, a two 15 miles north of San Salvador that is considered a rebel stronghold.

Collins brings U.S. Senate campaign to Midland

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Chopping away at U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen during a news conference Wednesday afternoon at Midland Regional Airport, Congressman Jim Collins outlined five harmful votes Bentsen allegedly made against oil and gas legislation.

Bentsen, a Democrat, is seeking re-election to his senate post while Collins is trying for the Republican nomination to that seat. Collins, who has represented the Dallas area, is facing State Sen. Walter Mengden in the primary. If he wins that race, then he squares off against Bentsen in the November election.

Also during the news conference, Collins talked of his admiration for President Reagan but with a tinge of criticism for the 1983-proposed budget.

Collins said he came to Midland to release Bentsen's votes on oil and gas legislation which he feels opposes the petroleum industry.

Criticizing first the Democrat senator's "yes" vote on creating the Department of Energy and then his support of Jimmy Carter in the 1976 presidential election, Collins went on to say that "Bentsen has cast so many votes wrong for the oil industry."

ON A PRINTED release, Collins noted that Bentsen served on the Senate Finance Committee which had initially voted for a $137 billion Windfall Profits Tax. That committee voted to send the bill on to the Senate with a favorable recommendation. But, the challenger noted, "Lloyd Bentsen failed to vote on the question of reporting the tax bill out....Bentsen's refusal to take sides caused the opposition to collapse."

Collins suggested that Bentsen could have cast a vote by proxy if he was unable to attend the meeting.

During discussion of the bill, Collins continued, Senate conservatives had started a filibuster. But the Texas senator "voted to invoke cloture to end the filibuster and assure passage of the tax. For his action, the Wall Street Journal labeled the Windfall Profits Tax as The Bentsen Tax in the headline of an editorial."

Collins then accused Bentsen of voting "with the liberals to set the tax at a figure of $227 billion — $49 billion above the figure passed by the Senate and $90 billion over the amount approved by the Senate Finance Committee."

IN CONCLUSION, said Collins, "We in the oil business needed Lloyd Bentsen and he wasn't there. Those five votes have done more to harm the oil and gas industry. We want Bentsen to answer to these votes in the campaign."

And while Collins said he favors deregulation of natural gas with no tax, he supports the president's decision to hold off on that action.

"This country must support deregulation of gas. But I have serious questions if this is the time to deregulate it. The budget is $100 billion out of balance and Congress would want to slap a tax on the gas business," he explained.

Looking at the budget released earlier this month, Collins pointed to the $800 billion spending bill and claimed that $100 billion could be chopped. "But no one wants to cut. We've got to do something. The budget increases are causing high interest rates."

But he doesn't see tax increases as a solution. "Frankly, I have a hard time with tax increases," Collins said. "We've nearly taxed the American peo-

Bentsen spokesman refutes charges

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

A spokesman for U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, today answered charges made by U.S. Rep. Jim Collins Wednesday in Midland that the senator had worked against the oil and gas industry.

Collins is seeking the Republican nomination to the Senate seat now held by Bentsen, who is up for re-election this year.

As to the first charge by Collins that Bentsen voted for Jimmy Carter for president in 1976, that's true, said Press Secretary Jack DeVore from Washington. But he denied that vote was directly against the oil industry.

The second charge that Bentsen voted for creating the Department of Energy also is true, DeVore said. But he pointed out that the vote had nothing to do with the regulations and controls which that department administers.

"BENTSEN'S VOTE for the Department of Energy did not increase the amount of government regulations on energy by one iota. The problem is all the controls that hamper energy production. And Bentsen has worked to reduce these controls."

DeVore noted that President Reagan had pledged to abolish the Department of Energy in his early days in office but now has decided to reorganize the agency.

"If it were abolished, those laws and regulations would be enforced by some other group," he said."

Collins' charge that Bentsen didn't vote in the Senate Finance Committee on the $137 billion proposed Windfall Profits Tax on Oct. 19, 1979, also is true. But Devore noted that the final vote was 15 for and one against. Bentsen failed to appear for the vote, DeVore said, but it wouldn't have changed the outcome.

A fourth charge by the Republican congressman that Bentsen voted to invoke cloture, thus ending the filibuster against the tax also is true. But DeVore explained the filibuster wasn't against the Windfall Profits Tax, but was undertaken by proponents "seeking a better tax break for oil produced in Alaska. They had no chance to kill

Former prison director says crime pays — too well

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — A former prison director who spent 10 years trying to convince convicts that crime doesn't pay now says he was wrong.

"Crime does pay. Let's not delude ourselves," said George Beto, former state prison director.

Beto testified Wednesday to a House special committee looking into Texas' criminal justice system.

After the meeting, Beto told reporters that certain crimes pay because the rewards outweigh the risks. Burglars, in particular, stand a good chance of making money without being caught.

"They take a calculated risk. What they pay for it is small in comparison with what they've gained from it," he said.

White-collar criminals also might find that crime pays, according to Beto.

Burglary is such a widespread problem in Texas that police are "frustrated" by it, he said. "There's not a whole lot being done about it. I don't know what can be done about it."

A paper prepared by Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby supported Beto's theory. A burglar faces only a one-in-seven chance of being arrested, according to the Hobby paper.

Car thiefs face a one-in-five chance of being identified. The highest arrest rate is for murder, where an offender has a four-in-five chance of being caught, according to Hobby.

"Moreover, these probabilities are slowly decreaing," the paper said.

The House Special Interim Committee on the Criminal Justice System, chaired by Speaker Bill Clayton, is preparing recommendations for the 1983 Legislature.

Beto, who served as director of the Texas Department of Corrections from 1962 until 1972, said there is little that lawmakers can do to decrease crime. The answers, said Beto, must come through the home and community.

He said Texas' law-enforcement system is "inefficient." A state or national police force could do a better job, he said. However, Beto said he "wouldn't favor national police, because of my love of freedom."

Convict to represent himself in suit against former sheriff, jail captain

A 51-year-old convict who claims he was neglected and was denied medical care while he was held in the Ector County Jail in 1979 was to represent himself in federal court in Midland today in a $200,000 civil suit against former Ector County Sheriff Elton Faught and Faught's jail captain, Robert Harris.

The plaintiff, Norman Jean Sulaica, a Hobbs, N.M., musician who is serving a 16-year term in the Texas Department of Corrections on a theft conviction, is alleging that he suffered from a bleeding ulcerated stomach for five weeks to six weeks before he was "finally allowed to receive medication" by the Odessa jailers.

Sulaica also is complaining of alleged violation of drug laws in the Ector County Jail.

"Distribution of medication is so inconsistent that medication does very little good," Sulaica wrote in a 1980 grievance complaint, which ultimately led to the federal court hearing. "The drug laws are violated, for none of the jailers have a license to distribute (dispense) drugs, such as doctors or nurse. I would believe that this is in violation of both state and federal drug laws."

Sulaica also complained that the jail had "no diet set up" for inmates with "medical problems" and that he was not allowed to make a telephone call until four days after he was locked up in the county jail on Oct. 2, 1979.

Sulaica sought a "complete investigation of the (jail's) medical, food and living conditions" by the U.S. Bureau of Prisons.

Sulaica is his own attorney in the case, while Faught and Harris are being represented by lawyers Carol Gregg and James E. Nelson.

Sulaica is seeking $100,000 in damages from Faught, who was sheriff when he was incarcerated, and the same amount from Harris, who was jail captain in 1979.

Bentsen, he continued, voted to stop the filibuster after he had "persuaded several of his colleagues to vote for provisions he was seeking, including exemptions for state-owned oil."

The last statement made by Collins that Bentsen voted to increase the Windfall Profits Tax by $50 billion "is false," said DeVore.

He explained that the Senate had submitted its tax version which called for $177.8 billion while the House version asked for revenues of $276.8 billion from the oil industry.

Both bills were sent to a conference committee, which would iron out the differences and come up with a compromise. The two amounts were split down the middle, DeVore said of Bentsen's work on the conference committee.

Instead of looking at it in the manner that Bentsen voted to increase it by $49 billion, Bentsen's work to reduce it in the Senate actually brought it down by $50 billion, said DeVore.

"Sen. Bentsen doesn't need anyone to explain to him the importance of a strong oil and gas industry to the state of Texas. He has been a very effective champion of it since he came to the Senate," said his press secretary.

the tax and they realized that," DeVore explained.

Bentsen, he continued, voted to stop the filibuster after he had "persuaded several of his colleagues to vote for provisions he was seeking, including exemptions for state-owned oil."

THE LAST STATEMENT made by Collins that Bentsen voted to increase the Windfall Profits Tax by $50 billion "is false," said DeVore.

He explained that the Senate had submitted its tax version which called for $177.8 billion while the House version asked for revenues of $276.8 billion from the oil industry.

Both bills were sent to a conference committee, which would iron out the differences and come up with a compromise. The two amounts were split down the middle, DeVore said of Bentsen's work on the conference committee.

Instead of looking at it in the manner that Bentsen voted to increase it by $49 billion, Bentsen's work to reduce it in the Senate actually brought it down by $50 billion, said DeVore.

"Sen. Bentsen doesn't need anyone to explain to him the importance of a strong oil and gas industry to the state of Texas. He has been a very effective champion of it since he came to the Senate," said his press secretary.

One of his earlier efforts for the industry came with the Pearson-Bentsen Bill, which was voted on in 1974-75 and again in 1977. "Without this bill, natural gas would be tightly regulated today. This called for phased deregulation of natural gas," said DeVore.

AND WHEN THE issue of a Windfall Profits Tax came to the forefront in Congress, DeVore claimed that Bentsen "substantially reduced the amount of the tax that independent producers would have to pay."

The House version of the WPT called for independent producers to pay $57 billion over the 10-year life of the tax, he explained. "Bentsen persuaded the Senate to exempt indepedent producers on the first 1,000 barrels of oil per day. The Senate approved this exemption, reducing the indepedent producers' tax from $57 billion down to zero. But the House wouldn't give in on this in the conference committee."

Final version of the bill saw independent producers giving the government $22 billion in taxes, DeVore said.

Last year, the Democratic senator again tried to get the full exemption for independent producers but was opposed by the full Senate. His efforts, however, resulted in gaining additional tax breaks on the 1982 tax bill, the spokesman said.

These "sweeteners" include exemption of stripper oil from the WPT for independent producers starting in Jan. 1, 1983; a phase-down on the WPT on new oil for all producers from the current 30 percent down to 15 percent by 1986; and as of Jan. 1, 1982, royalty owners will be exempted on the first two barrels of oil per day.

DeVore also recalled that in 1978 he blocked efforts by another senator to make the WPT applicable to oil produced on state lands.

"TEXAS OWNS OIL through its lands and the money goes into funds for public education and higher education. But Bentsen blocked that move, saying the federal government had no business taxing property owned by the state."

However, DeVore noted that Collins had criticized Bentsen recently in an Abilene appearance for this action and implied the senator had done it for special interest groups.

That move by Bentsen, said DeVore, "was good for Texas education and good for Texas in general."

Turning from the defensive to the offensive, Devore noted that Bentsen now is in the minority in a Republican-dominated Senate and "he is still effective in getting the tax reduced." Collins has said in his campaign that a Republican in a Democrat-dominated House has difficulty getting bills passed.

"And Collins was in the House when it passed the $276 billion revenue on the Windfall Profit Tax," said the press secretary.

DeVore added, "Bentsen has been very effective in promoting a strong, healthy oil and gas industry in the U.S. Mr. Collins gives every indication in his charges of being a very desperate candidate."

Undercover agent says police chief had 'hit list'

TYLER, Texas (AP) — A former undercover agent who says he was "totally addicted" to drugs has testified that former Tyler Police Chief Willie Hardy knew of his addiction but did not want to jeopardize their trumped-up narcotics arrests.

Creig Matthews testified Wednesday that Hardy had a "hit list" of people he wanted jailed.

The former officer was the first witness in Hardy's federal perjury and conspiracy trial, in which he is accused of lying about Matthews' drug use.

Prosecutors also claim he lied at the trials of Kenneth Bora and Johnny Allen Green to protect other drug cases.

Mike Lusk, Matthews' former supervisor, was expected to testify today. Lusk was granted immunity for his testimony by U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice.

MATTHEWS, WHO SAID he was addicted to drugs the last several months of an undercover investigation that resulted in 121 indictments, said he faked several drug cases to meet Hardy's quota.

Matthews and Kim Ramsey, his partner whom he later married, were the cornerstone of the massive 1979 drug crackdown.

He told FBI agents last summer he faked his case against Bora, who was then released from prison where he had begun serving a 20-year prison term for assaulting Matthews. Bora's three cocaine possession trials, also resulting from tainted evidence, ended with hung juries.

Matthews said he twice showed Hardy needle marks on his arms at a meeting in March. He said the chief first refused to look, but then asked to see his arms again.

"He asked me if I could handle the situation," Matthews testified. "I said I could. If I had been pulled up, I would have lost my free drug supply."

THE UNDERCOVER officer said that Hardy would give him several days advance warning when a urinanlysis spot check was to be made so he could flush the drugs out of his system.

Hardy insisted the undercover agents make drug cases on Bora and 100 others, Matthews testified, adding he made fictitious cases on Bora and five others "just to get the numbers."

Marchers vow to take same route, defy city order

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) — The organizer of a 13-day voting rights march across Alabama vowed to end the demonstration along the same "sacred route" to the state Capitol taken by marchers led by the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. in 1965.

"We ain't playing with that route. ... Our history is wrapped up there," Joseph Lowery told a rally of nearly 1,000 people Wednesday night at the Lilly Baptist Church here.

The marchers said they would defy a City Council order preventing them from walking the full length of Dexter Avenue, a bustling downtown street used by King in the 1965 protest, to a rally at the Capitol at noon today.

Among those who planned to march today were Atlanta Mayor Andrew Young, Birmingham Mayor Richard Arrington, Martin Luther King III and his grandfather, Martin Luther King Sr., Lowery said.

The march and motorcade set out from Carrollton in west-central Alabama on Feb. 6. For the last 50 miles demonstrators followed the path of the historic Selma-to-Montgomery trek.

"This is a sacred march," Lowery, president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, told the mostly black crowd Wednesday. "We're not going to come to Montgomery to have some racist mayor and some corrupt City Council send us on backstreets."

IN A RACIALLY split 5-4 vote Tuesday, the council refused to reconsider the route it had ordered the marchers to use. The route includes only three blocks of Dexter Avenue. It would pass the church where King preached in the 1950s and '60s.

The 1965 march, led by the slain civil rights leader, pressured Congress to pass the Voting Rights Act. The act is up for congressional renewal this year and the current march supports saving and strengthening the law.

That route (the council's) ignores our history and denies the promise of our future. It violates the integrity of this pilgrimmage. It intimidates the pilgrims," said Lowery, who has walked most of the 150 miles with his wife, Evelyn.

Meanwhile, Don Black, grand dragon of the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, said Wednesday a "couple of dozen" klansmen would show up at a counterrally to oppose any renewal of the 1965 Voting Rights Act.

A FEDERAL JUDGE refused Wednesday to act on two petitions — one filed by marchers to overturn the council's decision, the other filed by the city to prevent Ku Klux Klan interference and to require marchers to stick to the prescribed route.

U.S. District Judge Robert Varner said he could not rule on either petition because they were state matters, not federal.

If marchers don't follow the council's route, "They obviously will be breaking the law," Montgomery Mayor Emory Folmar said. "I pray to God they won't. I hope they will respect the views of the council and proceed in an orderly fashion."

Police and other law enforcement officers planned to escort the march, Folmar said.

Civil rights veteran John Lewis, an Atlanta city councilman who was beaten by state troopers in the 1965 march, said he would march the full length of Dexter to the Capitol and if necessary go to jail.

"If it means going to jail again, I'm prepared to go to jail again," said Lewis, who was taken into custody in 1965. "I will march again."

THE MARCH BEGAN after two black Pickens County women, Maggie Bozeman, 51, and Julia Wilder, 70, were convicted by all-white juries of illegally helping 39 elderly black cast absentee ballots. Both women, who were active civil rights workers, are on work-release in Macon County.

March organizers said Lowery and black state representatives planned to meet with Gov. Fob James to ask that the woman be cleared of the charges and set free.

Collins brings Senate campaign to Midland

COLLINS ADMITTED he doesn't support Reagan's budget in its current form. He suggested several programs could be stopped, citing the foreign aid project and the U.S. contributions to the United Nations.

Other recommendations on cutting spending included eliminating the food stamp program and handing out surplus food to the poor, thus helping the surplus food problem; and backing the federalism program whereby states will take more control of money for programs.

While he supports an increase in the defense budget, Collins doesn't approve of Reagan's sending money and men into El Salvador. "Unless it's a case of Russia standing on the doorstep, you're better off not sending foreign aid. I don't want a situation like Vietnam.

"El Salvador is an internal matter," he said, adding that the U.S. should step out and let those citizens handle it. "No doubt the communists are using it like they've done with other Central American countries," such as Nicaragua.

His concern with El Salvador is that the communists are using it as a stepping stone to Mexico. "Mexico as a communist country would be a disastrous situation," said Collins.

The defense budget should be increased, he said, but at the same time the wasteful parts could be cut. "I would like to see them take out the waste and fat in the Pentagon — there are so many deadheads in there."

But to get major cuts accomplished, Collins claimed the Republicans need to have control of both houses of Congress. Democrats hold an edge in the House of Representatives while the Senate has a Republican majority.

In running this statewide campaign, Collins said Midland rates as the third biggest market for Republicans.

Zona Johnson, right, sits with her sister sits quietly with her sister in Porter, Wash., while workers seek the body of Mrs. Johnson's husband. The state highway worker was operating a front end loader when he was swept away by a mudslide early Sunday.

Police seek car in family massacre

FARWELL, Mich. (AP) — Police have issued a nationwide alert for a car that vanished from a farm where a shotgun massacre killed seven members of a family, sparing only a year-old infant who was shielded by her mother's body.

Authorities had a "possible suspect" Wednesday in the killings of 53-yer-old mailman George W. Post, his wife, two daughters and three grandchildren. But Clare County Sheriff Ghazey Aleck refused to identify the suspect.

Aleck also said police in the state were told to "be on the lookout" for the husband of one of the victims.

Authorities said they had no solid motive in the Tuesday night killings.

They said it appeared one of the victims, a young mother, had tried to flee the central Michigan farm in a pickup truck, but was pursued and died with three of the four children she had with her.

Police awaited the results of autopsies today, but said each victim appeared to have been shot once.

People in this town of 1,000 residents were stunned by the killings.

"Why would anyone?" asked Robert Van Buskirk, who knew Post from the Veterans of Foreign Wars local chapter, where Post was a past commander. "I can't imagine why it had to be kids especially."

The dead children ranged in age from 7 to 10.

ALECK SAID AUTHORITIES "would very much like to have" a 1980 Buick LeSabre that belonged to the Posts. It may have been stolen by the killer from the one-story, red-and-white house, police said.

Police were told to be on the lookout for Robert Haggart, whose wife Garnetta was among the seven dead, Aleck said.

Officials in Clare County Circuit Court in Harrison said Haggart did not appear Wednesday morning for a divorce hearing scheduled for him and his wife.

Court Clerk Kathleen Dent said Haggart had not retained a lawyer for the divorce proceeding, and Aleck said he was told by Mrs. Haggart's attorney it was not certain whether the husband was ever personally notified of the hearing.

Aleck said Mrs. Haggart had returned to Michigan from Florida this week for the hearing.

Aleck also said there was an unrelated felony warrant outstanding for Haggart, issued by authorities in Lenawee County, 150 miles away. The warrant charges Haggart with passing bad checks, Aleck said.

In addition to Post and Mrs. Haggart, 23, the victims of the shootings were Post's wife, Vaudrey, 42; another of Post's daughters, Helen Gaffney, 29, and her three children, Angela, 10, Tom, 8, and Amy, 7. The Gaffneys lived in a neighboring county.

Mrs. Gaffney's youngest child, Sandi, suffered a bump o the head, evidently wen she was thrown to the floor of the family's pickup and shielded by her mother's body, Alecksaid.

Post's body was found in the basement of the house on the family's 60-acre farm, which stands on an ice-covered dirt road 3½ miles west of Farwell. Mrs. Post and Mrs. Haggart were found in the dining area at the rear of the home.

Mrs. Gaffney and her children apparently tried to flee in the truck but were pursued and fired on, Aleck said.

Deputy Dan Duma, among the first to arrive at the scene, heard the infant crying and found her in the cab, Aleck said.

The shooting "appeared to be eratic and was done in a short time,"the sheriff said. "There were some misses."

There was no sign of robbery or forced entry to the home, he added.

"A coffee pot was on the stove and it was about burned dry," Aleck said.

The killings were Michigan's worst multiple murder since June 1971, when eight people were slain in Detroit.

Williams' attorney launches new phase of defense

ATLANTA (AP) — Wayne B. Williams' chief lawyer has cut short a strng of character witnesses and launched a new phase in his attack on allegations that Williams is linked to the killings of 12 young blacks.

After calling 26 witnesses who depicted Williams as a hard-working music promoter eager to help poor black children, lawyer Alvin Binder said Wednesday he wouldn't call the remaining character witnesses, who he said were "supportive and cumulative."

He said he needed time to work with other witnesses he planned to call today and Friday, and Judge Clarence Cooper recessed the trial early.

Binder did not specify what those witnesses would testify about, but Cooper signed an order earlier this week authorizing a new defense expert to examine the prosecution's fiberevidence.

Williams, 23, is on trial for murder in the deaths of Nathaniel Cater, 27, and Jimmy Ray Payne, 21, two of 28 young blacks whose deaths during a 22-month period sparked one of the most intensive police investigations in U.S. history.

NO ARRESTS have been made in the 26 other slayings, but prosecutors have presented evidence of 10 other killings of young blacks in an attempt to show a pattern that allegedly includes the deaths of Cater and Payne.

The fiber evidence, consisting of tiny synthetic fibers and hairs found on the 12 victims and matched to sources in Williams' home and car, is the only major part of the prosecution's case which te defense has yet to challenge.

Prosecution fiber experts have testified that scientific tests on 18 different types of fibers and hairs taken from the victims' bodies showed they could have come from 18 different sources in Williams' home and car, including the hair on his head.

Charles Morton, a California fiber expert, has examined the fiber evidence on several occasions for the defense and is expected to testify before the case goes to the jury.

The defense's new fiber expert is Randall R. Bresee of Kansas State University. Bresee has conducted research on new methods of comparing fibers, including the use of laser light.

BINDER said Wednesday he would not call the remaining character witnesses in order to speed up Williams' trial. Defense witnesses Wednesday continued to challenge the prosecution's contention that Williams is a homosexual who used the music business as a front to attract poor, black "street kids."

AFL-CIO leader renews economic plea

BAL HARBOUR, Fla. (AP) — AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland, citing the largest drop in factory production in seven years, is pleading anew for abandonment of the Reagan administration's "ideological commitment" to its economic policies.

Kirkland also is suggesting that a downturn in that key economic indicator vindicates the AFL-CIO's persistent opposition to President Reagan's tax and spending priorities.

"The message from all these indicators is that the recession is turning ever deeper, to exceed all previous recessions in the post-war period," Kirkland said Wednesday.

The government on Wednesday reported factory production plummeted 3 percent in January, continuing a six-month trend and marking the sharpest decline since January 1975. In another development, Chase Manhattan Bank raised its prime interest rate a half point — to 17 percent — and other banks quickly followed suit.

"More bad news will follow quickly when the effect of lost wages and more lost jobs ripples through the economy," Kirkland said.

"We again ask the Republican administration to give up its ideological commitment to an economic policy that rewards only the rich at the expense of the workers and the deprived of America."

The labor federation chief maintained that the recession "obviously hasn't bottomed out yet, and it looks like the downward pace has accelerated a bit."

Earlier this week, Kirkland labeled Reagan's policies as "Jonestown economics." The reference to a mass murder-suicide in Jonestown, Guyana, in November 1978 was the harshest attack the AFL-CIO leader has yet made in assailing Reagan's handling of the economy.

Robert Bonitati, a White House labor adviser who has been holding informal meetings with union leaders here this week, said he didn't think the Kirkland remark would do irreparable damage to the administration's effort to improve communications with labor leaders.

"There will be no change in signals" on Reagan's desire to seek labor's views, he said.

"There will be no stopping of these meetings," Bonitati said. "Our purpose is to see to it that on issues of public policy organized labor has input and that that input is reflected in the administration's policy."

Bonitati said that while the AFL-CIO and the administration have major differences on economic issues, the two sides have been able to work together on such things as immigration policy and the black lung disability program.

Kirkland said earlier in the week, however, that AFL-CIO leaders are resigned to relying on Congress for a reversal of Reagan's economic policies.

His "Jonestown economics" statement drew fire Wednesday from House Republican leader Robert H. Michel of Illinois, who said in Washington that it did a "horrible injustice" to Reagan. Michel called the remark a "savage personal attack" on the president.

Meanwhile, the AFL-CIO's executive council moved to discipline union-backed officeholders who considered to have "backslipped" on their commitments to labor, said federation spokesman Murray Seeger.

He said the policy-making body authorized the practice of giving only "limited endorsements" to such incumbents, but said he didn't think that weapon would be used in very many cases.

UAW's Ford council recommends pact's ratification

CHICAGO (AP) — Ford Motor Co. is a step closer to gaining $1 billion in givebacks after leaders of the United Auto Workers' Ford locals approved a new contract, but a union dissident says he hopes to convince rank-and-filers to kill the pact.

The UAW's Ford council voted overwhelmingly Wednesday to recommend that Ford's 170,000 union workers ratify the concessions agreement, Donald Ephlin, UAW vice president and head of the Ford department, said.

Only 12 delegates at the Ford council meeting voted against rank-and-file ratification of the pact, with 132 in favor, Ephlin said. He noted only 144 of the council's 225 memers, all leaders of Ford locals around the country, attended the three-hour conclave.

"These concessions are not going to save jobs or lower car prices for the consumer," Gardner said Wednesday.

"We're just giving the corporation a billion dollars...it's ludicrous," Gardner sad. "I think I have a better chance with the membership" than with the UAW's Ford council.

Ephlin, however, said he was confident the Ford workers would "vote in relatively the same measure as their leadership did in favor of this agreement," echoing a prediction he made Sunday after the union's 26-member executive board unanimously approved the tentative pact.

"I think the agreement is in the best interest of the Ford workers and I think the leadership recognized that," UAW President Douglas Fraser said at a news conference after the Ford council vote.

Pact likely wouldn't affect sales

DETROIT (AP) — The $1 billion Ford Motor Co. might save in labor costs if United Auto Workers union members approve a new concession contract probably will not affect car sales, according to auto industry analysts.

"It would be in Ford's interest to retain it all, and I think they will," David Eisenberg of the New York firm of Sanford Bernstein and Co. predicted Wednesday.

He said that Ford immediately would save about $1 an hour in labor costs and more than $2 an hour at the end of the 31-month agreement.

Eisenberg and other analysts predict the $1 billion savings through the life of the 31-month contract. He calculated the savings will amount to about $160 per vehicle, but said that would be "hardly enough to get car sales turned around."

The UAW's Ford council voted overwhelmingly in Chicago Wednesday to recommend that the company's 170,000 autoworkers approve the tentative contract. Rank-and-file voting was expected to be completed by Feb. 28.

Two other analysts — Donald DeScenza of Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette, and Harvey Heinback of Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith — agreed Ford would use the concession savings to reduce operating losses, which the No. 2 U.S. automaker said reached $1 billion in 1981.

DeScenza said Ford would be "foolish" to pass savings along to consumers in an attempt to get a competitive edge.

"There's no way Ford could cut prices enough to do that," he said, noting General Motors Corp. "has inherently lower manufacturing costs" in North America that would not be changed by the UAW concessions.

Ford has estimated its hourly labor costs under the existing union contract at $21.50 per hour, but Eisenberg said the carmaker's costs have been running at $20.55 under the contract that expires in September.

If the concession contract is passed, he said the cost would drop immediately to $19.50 an hour, then to $19.08 hourly by the end of the year before reaching $21 an hour in 1984. Without the concessions, Ford's hourly cost would reach $22.75 by December, 1984, Eisenberg said.

GM hopes UAW will resume contract talks

DETROIT (AP) — Genral Motors Corp. hopes the United Auto Workers' tentative contract with Ford Motor Co. will prompt the union to resume concession talks with the No. 1 automaker, its chairman says.

A rapid return to the bargaining table is "probably the best course that I see right now," GM Chairman Roger B. Smith said in a copyright article in today's editions of the Detroit News.

The UAW began negotiating contract concessions with Ford and GM on Jan. 11 amid the worst U.S. auto sales slump since the Depression.

The Ford agreement was reached Saturday, and the UAW's Ford council on Wednesday recommended that it be approved by the rank and file.

Talks collapsed at General Motors on Jan. 28.

A member of the San Diego SWAT team runs toward a trailer home where a sniper opened fire Wednesday. Three persons were killed in the shooting and two others injured, including a deputy.

Sniper attack kills three, two others injured

CHULA VISTA, Calif. (AP) — A quarrel over neighborhood dogs apparently provoked a four-hour sniper siege at a trailer park that ended with three people dead and a police officer seriously wounded, police say.

Police, firing a barrage of tear gas, stormed a mobile home Wednesday evening and found a 57-year-old retiree lying in a back bedroom, uninjured but semi-conscious and clutching a cocked pistol, authorities said.

Alys E. McNair, described by a neighbor as "a loner who never gave anyone any problems," was rushed to a hospital Wednesday night and listed in poor condition, officials said. He was thought to be suffering from a heart condition. At the same hospital lay an officer who was struck in the neck by a bullet in the shooting spree, which also left another resident injured at the Mountain View Trailer Lodge.

"I HEARD a couple of shots," said Janet Andrews, 25, who suffered arm wounds from shattered glass. "I looked out the window and saw two people lyng on the ground, and then shots hit the car and one hit the window and hit my arm. I'm not hurt real bad."

McNair was captured after authorities fired about 20 tear gas canisters into his trailer, said San Diego County sheiff's spokesman Capt. Jack Drown. There were no negotiations.

The extent of the suspect's arsenal was not immediately known, but Sheriff John Duffy said it was believed the man had a shotgun, a rifle and a pistol.

"It looks like it was a neighborhood quarrel that's been brewing about six months," said sheriff's spokesman Bert Moorehead. He said the squabble apparently centered on dogs owned by one of the victims.

A witness also told police that there had been past troubles between neighbors about noisy dogs.

An officer who asked to remain anonymous said the man was semi-conscious on a bed in a rear bedroom, holding a cocked .38-caliber pistol, and did not resist. He was taken to Bay General Community Hospital where spokesman Paul Omundson said he was in "poor condition with no evidence of serious injuries."

DROWN SAID McNair had a history of heart problems.

The dead were identified as Cesar Escutia, no age available, of National City; his mother, Gloria Castro, 63, a trailer park resident; and Monique Gerard, 23, a former resident of the trailer park who was returning to pick up some belongings after moving out five days ago, Moorehead said.

A witness said Escutia was killed in the first volley of gunfire as he walked to his car from his mother's trailer with a dog in his arms.

"He (Escutia) opened the car door, and boom!" said William Melvin, 56, who watched from an adjacent trailer, which immediately came under fire.

Melvin said McNair had quarreled with Mrs. Castro, complaining that her dogs were noisy.

Mrs. Castro, who lived next door to McNair, was killed as she ran from her trailer home to investigate the shooting, said Melvin, who was baby-sitting at the time. "He (the gunman) just kept shooting and shooting."

Ms. Gerard was killed after driving into the area, Drown said.

Although Melvin said McNair had quarreled with Mrs. Castro, he described McNair as "a very quiet nice guy ... a loner who never gave anyone any problems."

Drown said "dozens if not 100 shots were fired, all by the suspect."

Sheriff's Deputy Robert Brown, 34, was shot in the throat. He was listed in stable condition at Bay General after undergoing surgery.

DEPUTY Linda Harmuth was credited with saving Brown's life by dragging him to safety after he was hit by a .22-caliber bullet at the base of the throat, Duffy said. She had answered the initial call with Brown, Duffy said.

Just before 5 p.m., officers laid down a smoke screen, then advanced behind it with an armored van to remove one woman's body from a driveway at the Mountain View Mobile Lodge.

Then, officers began lobbing tear gas into a trailer they believed the gunman was using. The barrage continued for at least 45 minutes before the shooting stopped and the man was taken into custody.

Just two blocks from the trailer park is Lauderbach Elementary School, which has some 600 students. Some of the younger students, from kindergarten to third grade, had been let out of school right before the shooting began, said principal Cliff Johnson, "so we had to quickly pick them up on their way home."

The rest of the children were held at the school until their parents could come for them, Johnson said.

Prisoners describe warden as violent

GALVESTON, Texas (AP) — Inmates and former prisoners called to testify for inmate Eroy Edward Brown repeatedly said a slain warden was known for his violent behavior and one prisoner termed him "very sadistic."

Attorney Craig Washington said Wednesday that he expects to call two technical experts and several more inmates to testify about the reputation of Ellis Unit Warden Wallace Pack.

Brown is being tried for the drowning of Pack, and prosecutors have said Brown may be tried later for the shooting death of prison farm manager Billy Max Moore. Defense attorneys contend Brown acted in self defense.

Inmate Delmon Ro Hart, 34, testified that he had escaped from the Wynne Farm in Huntsville in 1965, where Pack was a lieutenant.

"After I was caught, the officials put the dogs on me," Hart said. "Lt. Pack had me strip off my clothes and show him the marks on me. Then he leaned his head back and laughed and denied me medical attention."

The inmate also said he saw Pack force several unit inmates in the prisons' medical ward to take the sedative thorazine.

The Rev. Joesph C. Burgum, a former inmate who now runs a halfway house for prisoners in Freeport, said he was familiar with Pack's violent reputation and had witnessed several acts of torture against inmates.

Burgum, who served eight years in the Texas Department of Corrections, said he frequently saw Pack "body slam" inmates and witnessed prisoners being handcuffed and hung from their cells.

The former inmate admitted he escaped once in 1974, but as caught and brought to Pack. He said the prison official told him that "if I had been working on his shift, they would have blown my ... head off."

Inmate Hugh Urdy said a key prosecution witness in the murder trial told Urdy that he would lie to get out of jail. Urdy said prisoner James Soloman told him and another inmate "he would lie or tell the truth or do anything to get out of prison."

Soloman was one of two inmates who testified Brown, 31, of Waco, shot and killed Moore and chased Pack into a nearby drainage ditch on April 4, 1981

Urdy, serving a life sentence, said Soloman was upset after receiving a letter from his wife that she was leaving him.

Urdy said Soloman told him and another inmate, "Eroy Brown has not done anything," but that testimony against him "was his ticket out of prison."

Soviet Odessa now import point

By DAVID MINTHORN
Associated Press Writer

ODESSA, U.S.S.R. (AP) — Once the point of export for home-grown grain, this Black Sea port now is the place where Western wheat and corn pour into the Soviet Union.

A dismal Soviet harvest in 1981, the third in a row, means Moscow must increase its grain purchases abroad to make up for the shortfall and that should make Odessa even more important.

Some Western experts predict the Soviets will have to import a record 40 million metric tons this year, up from 31 million tons in 1980. The bulk of this will be unloaded in Odessa, for many years the Soviet Union's leading grain port.

"It can be said that we handle much of the grain imported by the Soviet Union every year," said deputy port manager Anatoly Fomin. "We are also busy with sugar, general cargo and oil."

Ranking among the biggest Soviet ports, Odessa handled more than 12 million tons of general cargo and 12 million tons of oil last year, Fomin said in an interview at his harbor office.

"By expanding mechanization, we expect to boost cargo tonage 10 to 12 percent this year," he said.

Odessa's docks are equipped with more than 100 cranes, ranging from five-ton loaders to huge floating cranes able to hoist 100 tons.

Cuban sugar, citrus fruits, canned food, jute and consumer goods are other products unloaded along the 4.2 miles of wharves.

Crude oil, machinery, metal and chemicals are main Soviet products shipped from Odessa.

In the 19th century, Russia was the world's biggest grain exporter. The wheat flowed to Odessa from vast private estates in the Ukraine.

"Russia had different grain requirements in the old days when the population was only 90 million. Now we have 268 million and everyone needs bread," Fomin said.

Agricultural problems on state farms and harsh weather have prevented the Soviet Union from growing enough grain for its own needs. Increasingly, the country has been forced to rely on foreign growers, such as the United States, Canada and Brazil.

The United States imposed a partial grain embargo on the Soviet Union after it sent troops into Afghanistan in late 1979. President Reagan lifted the embargo last year, under pressure from U.S. farmers, but the U.S. grain sales plans are now unclear.

In October, U.S. negotiators offered the Soviets up to 23 million tons of wheat and corn in 1981-82. But Reagan has since suspended grain negotiations because of the U.S. contention that the Soviet Union played a key role in the declaration of martial law in Poland on Dec. 13.

Fomin, a 15-year veteran of port management, said Odessa handles about 1,000 ships a year — 70 percent flying foreign flags and

AGRICULTURE

30 percent Soviet. Most foreign vessels are from Cuba, India and the Mediterranean countries, but U.S., Japanese and African freighters also put in.

"Ideally, we handle 10 or 12 ships a day," Fomin said.

Odessa is home port for 225 Soviet freighters, and has trade relations with 100 countries. Half a dozen Soviet luxury liners, the antarctic whaling fleet and a ship-repair facility are also based here.

Founded in 1794 as the "southern gate to the Ukraine," Odessa has grown from a provincial settlement into an industrial and tourism hub of 1 million people.

'Quiet theft' of grain crops blamed on ozone damage

By BOB FICK
Associated Press Writer

ASHINGTON (AP) — Ozone pollution is robbing American farmers and consumers of grain worth billions of dollars, a new government study says.

It's food that just "vanishes into thin air — or bad air — every year," Rep. George Brown, D-Calif., said Wednesday in releasing the most comprehensive report to date on ozone damage to American agriculture. He's called it a "quiet theft of food and fiber."

"Our best estimate is $3.1 billion a year (in ozone damage to corn, wheat, soybeans and peanuts), about 10 percent of the total value of the four crops harvested," said the study by the National Crop Loss Assessment Network.

That loss, based on the 1978 crop year, equals 650 million bushels of grain and soybean and more than a billion pounds of peanuts, according to the study requested by the congressional Office of Technology Assessment.

Those four crops account for 62 percent of the land harvested and 63.5 percent of overall crop values.

The network, established by the Environmental Protection Agency and the Energy and Agriculture departments, said the losses could run as high as $4.5 billion. That figure does not include losses caused by other pollutants or losses to other crops, which, while still being analyzed, are generally believed to add several billion dollars more to the bill.

Just last summer, a pricetag of $1 billion was placed on crop damage due to ozone, a pollutant formed when hydrocarbons from spent fuels react with the sun's rays.

The new, higher loss estimates are probably still understated, said Thomas Crocker of the University of Wyoming. He said this is because they don't take into account changes in crop patterns farmers have been making to cope with air pollution. In many cases, he says, farmers substitute less valuable but more pollution resistant crops.

Crocker said his own regional study of 14 crops on the West Coast showed the impact of pollution doubling when that factor is taken into account. He estimates that a third of the losses were underwritten by consumers and the rest by farmers.

"It is extremely unsettling to see rich soil and ample irrigation unable to produce a crop because the air cannot support the growth of healthy plants," said Brown, chairman of the House Agriculture subcommittee on research and a member of the Scence and Technology Committee.

Brown expressed concern that while more intense study of the pollution problem is showing it to be worse han previously thought, there is an effort to relax air pollution standards and cut back funds for crop loss research.

Report praises buffalo

By DON KENDALL
AP Farm Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The water buffalo is truly a fine creature, a source of food and energy for millions of people around the world, says the National Research Council.

But the great horned water buffalo also "is perhaps one of the most misunderstood and underutilized animals i the world," says the council. It has a new report aimed at debunking "some of the common myths" of the buffalo.

Some cattle producers and tractor salesmen, however, may take exception to some of the report's assertions. It implies, for example, that the water buffalo might be better at pulling a combine out of a muddy wheat field than a $75,000 tractor.

"It is widely believed that the water buffalo is mean and vicious," the report said. "The truth is, however, that unless wounded or severely stressed, the domesticated water buffalo is one of the gentlest of all farm animals.

"Despite an intimidating appearance, it is more like a household pet — sociable, gentle and serene. In rural Asia, the care of water buffaloes is often turned over to small boys and girls aged about 4 to 9."

The potential of the water buffalo has been slow to catch on in the United States, however. According to the report, 50 head were imported for commercial farming use in 1978 and now are proving themselves in Florida and Louisiana.

Gail Porter, a spokeswoman for the council, said Wednesday there is at least one water buffalo breeder, located in Lake Charles, La., and that the University of Florida is conducting research on the animals. In all, she said, there are an estimated 200 head in the United States.

Worldwide, there are an estimated 130 million domesticated water buffalo, representing about one-ninth of the global cattle population.

The report said that another belief is that the water buffalo is strictly a tropical animal. That's not the case.

"River-type buffaloes have been used to pull snow plows during Bulgarian winters," it said. "They are found in Italy, Albania, Yugoslavia, Greece, Turkey, the Georgia and Azerbaijan areas of the Soviet Union, and other temperate-zone regions as well. They are also found in cold, mountainous areas of Pakistan, A*ghanistan and Nepal."

Not only are buffaloes "extraordinarily strong," the report said, but they "can also work in deep mud that may bog down a tractor. Even up to their bellies they forge on" at a slow gait. And their working life is 20 years or more.

As a source of food, the buffalo is versatile. Its milk has a higher content of both butterfat and nonfat solids than cow's milk.

Official says UTPB students will survive aid cuts

ODESSA — Although the Reagan administration's fiscal year 1983 budget proposes massive cuts in federal student aid programs, these cuts will not likely cause severe problems for students at The University of Texas of the Permian Basin, according to Joyce Thompson, UTPB financial aid director.

Thompson noted the Reagan proposal recommends a 50 percent cut in campus-based programs including supplemental grants, direct loans and college work study. Pell grants, which are awarded to an individual based on individual need as determined by the federal government, will be cut by about 30 percent. Thompson said this cut will amount to approximately $200 per year for each Pell grant.

Critics of the funding cut proposal say that such cuts, if they are made, would be devastating to students and their families and to colleges and universities. They contend many students will be unable to attend college at all, and others will have to attend lower-cost or local institutions.

"I DON'T WANT to mislead people and say we won't be touched by funding cuts for financial aid. We will be touched. But our philosophy is to tap every available source of aid. We do 'equity' packaging so that students usually get not one, but several types of aid in a total package. That way, if we lose one program, the student will not lose everything," Thompson said.

"Students who are planning to give up full-time jobs to go to school, who may have planned to depend almost entirely on federal assistance should make plans for at least part-time employment," she said.

UTPB President V.R. Cardozier noted that the Council of State College Presidents recently voted unanimously to recommend that all grants be converted to work-study or similar work programs. "I think the idea here is that the student greatly benefits by having to work for the money to finance his own education," he said.

Thompson noted fewer students will be leaving the home setting for the uncertainty of federal assistance. "I have talked to several students now on institutionally funded scholarships at UTPB who said they had returned from other places because they couldn't afford to be away from home," she said.

THOMPSON NOTED about 90 of UTPB's fall enrollment of 1,640 students received some kind of federal financial aid, along with whatever institutional aid was available. About 60 percent of the aid for these students came from institutional or local sources. Another 150 students received financial aid which was not federally funded. These included internships, scholarships and employment.

"If you look at the total picture, and at averages for students who receive federal aid, we would not likely lose students here as a result of cuts in federal funds, but everyone does not fit into the average," she said. "We have three students who would be seriously affected if federal funds were not available. They are receiving approximately 63 percent of their assistance from federal sources and are totally dependent on us to keep them in school," she said.

She noted, however, that even if the Reagan proposal becomes reality, these three students would not lose all support and would likely be able to stay in school because their aid comes from many different sources.

She said all federal aid programs except for Pell grants are allocated to the university, which has the authority to disperse the funds at its discretion to needy students.

"Needs assessment is an ongoing process. If a student drops out of school, or drops a course or takes an outside job, his need is re-assessed. In this way, funds are released from time to time from one source and can be added to another. We would very likely be able to free money from one area and use it to help those students with the greatest need," she explained.

THOMPSON SAID Reagan's proposal would cut Pell grants by approximately $200 per student per year. "Our average grants under this program are $832 per year. If funding cuts lowered the average grant to $632 per year a student could still enroll. That would give him $316 per semester. At that rate, he could pay tuition and buy two or three books. He would have to seek outside employment to pay for living expenses."

The Reagan proposal to cut campus-based student aid by approximately 50 percent would hurt UTPB students even less than the reduced funds for Pell grants. Campus based programs include college work-study, supplemental grants and loans, Thompson said.

She noted six UTPB students are now receiving supplemental grants. In each case, she said, the student has some additional aid. She said UTPB does not participate in the direct loan program because default rates are usually high and aid other than loans is usually available.

"Our State Student Incentive Grant allocation is so small we could almost award it to one student," she said, "and this has to be matched 50-50 with institutional funds."

She said all students who qualify for work-study at UTPB can be placed in positions. Students in the work-study program usually work on campus and receive 20 percent of their salary from the institution for which they work and 80 percent from the federal government. She noted that many part-time employment opportunities are available both on and off campus for students seeking this kind of help, should they not qualify for work-study. Many students choose not to accept work-study because they can receive higher salaries at other jobs, she added.

"OF COURSE the economy of the Permian Basin is such that part-time jobs for students are readily available. And for that reason, UTPB might not be hurt as much as some other schools where thousands of students emerge on a campus to work on college degrees."

Nationwide, a survey to the Los Angeles-based Higher Education Research Institute, Inc., reveals that admissions directors anticipate Pell grant cuts will have a severe impact on 28 percent of public institutions and 51 percent on private institutions. The study reports 26 percent of college and university presidents anticipate fair or poor finanacial prospects for higher education.

Critics of the funding cuts to higher education financial aid charge such cuts signal that the White House is reneging on a major national, bipartisan commitment to post-secondary education opportunities which dates back to the National Defense Education Act of 1958.

Shuttle procedure to test rare blood-clotting drug

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Astronauts guiding the space shuttle Columbia on its third voyage will test a device scientists believe can produce a rare, expensive drug that dissolves blood clots.

The experiment — to be conducted on the second, fourth and fifth days of next month's seven-day mission — will produce a drug difficult to manufacture on earth, said Dennis R. Morrison, a biologist at the Johnson Space Center.

The substance, urokinase, is produced from human kidney cells, and Morrison estimated a single dose now costs at least $3,000.

The experiment will be placed aboard the Columbia, scheduled to lift off March 22, in two containers about the shape and size of a shoe box.

About seven million frozen kidney cells will be put in a plastic container about the size of a pencil eraser. An equal number of frozen human red blood cells also will be taken.

Once in the weightlessness of space, astronauts Jack R. Lousma and Chares G. Fullerton will add tubes of salt water solution and containers to the kidney and blood cells, he said.

Airport boardings up again

Banks, director of aviation for the city of Midland, was referring to another record-setting month in the number of passenger boardings at Midland Regional Airport.

The new figure for January was 49,839 compared to January 1981 which had boardings totaling 38,174. This, noted Banks, is an increase of 30.55 percent.

Mexico 'frees' peso

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexico's Central Bank has set the peso free to find its value on world currency markets in a move observers say may signal a large devaluation to come.

The Banco de Mexico, the country's central bank and the equivalent of the U.S. Federal Reserve Bank, announced Wednesday night that it has temporarily withdrawn from foreign exchange markets and has stopped buying and selling dollars to control the value of the peso.

A statement by the bank said it was taking the action immediately "to allow the value of the peso against the dollar and other foreign currencies to find levels that correspond to current economic conditions."

The value of the peso has been eroding gradually for over a year and economic observers have said the currency is dangerously overvalued.

Pope happy faith kept in Gabon

By SUSAN LINNEE
Associated Press Writer

LIBREVILLE, Gabon (AP) — Pope John Paul II told members of the Roman Catholic Church in Equatorial Guinea today he was pleased they maintained their faith during the 11 years the previous government tried to suppress the Roman Catholic Church.

A four-man Soviet crew flew the 61-year-old pontiff in a Soviet-built WAT-40 of the Equatorial airline to Malabo, Equatorial Guinea's capital on the island of Bioko.

There he met with President Teodoro Obiang Ngueme Mbazogo for an hour before flying to Bata, the largest city on the mainland portion of the country, for an outdoor Mass in Independence Square.

In his homily at the square, the pontiff said: "The pope has wanted to come to see you to promote the evangelization enterprise in your land. That evangelization means a growth in the faith, a generous devotion for the greatest dignification of every man and faithfulness to Christ and his church.

"There are many of your brothers that have courageously testified - even in the middle of persecution - their Christian faith," he said, according to a text released by the Vatican.

Obiang overthrew his cousin, Macias Nguema Biyogo, in a military coup in August 1979. The Roman Catholic Church, which claims 80 percent of the country's 350,000 people, was severely repressed by Nguema during the 11 years he controlled the former Spanish colony.

In an apparent effort at reconciliation, Obiang's government asked the pope to visit the country during his eight-day African tour — the pontiff's first foreign journey since the attempt on his life last May.

In his arrival speech in Malabo, the pontiff told Obiang he came as a member of the church.

"I know that in the past you have suffered serious problems. And in light of this, I am telling you I am very pleased how you have maintained your faith in Christ," he said, according to an official Vatican text translated from Spanish by The Associated Press.

John Paul also made a veiled reference to the closing of Catholic schools by Obiang's predecessor, saying "the church in Equatorial Guinea wishes to cooperate faithfully for the common good and offers its help to do anything that will favor reconciliation and development in the educational field."

Polish government raids lead to more arrests

By THOMAS W. NETTER
Associated Press Writer

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Poland's military regime nearly doubled the number of detainees since martial law was instituted, arresting some 3,500 more people in the most widespread dragnet against violators of military rule reported since the initial Dec. 13 crackdown.

The official PAP news agency announced the 48-hour "Operation Calm" sweep on Wednesday but did not say when it was completed.

In addition to those reported detained, PAP said 7,000 people were fined and 4,000 ordered to trial before misdemeanor courts. PAP said 614 people faced trial by police courts, 145,000 received warnings, and 29,000 were "lectured."

According to the PAP report, 25,000 regular and volunteer police took part in the operation, checking 51,000 stores, 60,000 vehicles and 3,500 hideouts for "criminal elements."

Radio Warsaw said the raids, many conducted at night, were "carried out throughout Poland."

It was not clear how many of those arrested remained in detention.

In Washington, State Department spokesman Dean Fischer called the latest arrests "deeply upsetting," and said they made "a mockery of all recent Polish government statements to the effect that life is beginning to return to normal in Poland."

Prior to the new crackdown, authorities reported 4,000 people were detained after the imposition of martial law, when the independent Solidarity labor federation was suspended and most civil rights shelved.

The vast number of those netted in the new sweep indicated the government might be preparing to back down on its promise to lift all or some martial law restrictions later this month.

35 will be naturalized at March 9 ceremonies

Some 35 aliens who are petitioning for United States citizenship will be sworn in as U.S. citizens by Federal Judge Lucius D. Bunton at 2 p.m. March 9 in a naturalization ceremony in the U.S. District Court in the George Mahon Federal Building in Midland.

Speakers at the ceremony will include George W. Bush, a Midland independent oil operator, and Narita Holmes, an Odessan who is controller and vice president of Odessa's First National Bank, chairman of the board of Medical Center Hospital and a certified public accountant.

Traditionally joining in the fanfare will be the Daughters of the American Revolution and the League of Women Voters. Following the ceremony, the League will assist the new Americans in registering to vote.

The petitioners, who usually hail from countries in the Americas, Europe, the Orient and the Middle East, are West Texas residents. In previous naturalizations here, most candidates for U.S. citizenship have been Hispanics.

The picture is of a tall ponderosa pine. Lying in it, supported by its sloping branches 20 feet above ground, is the body of a boy. Several feet above him are two black wires. The child is Chuck. Age 11. Our son.

Chuck's friend, Tom, clings among the branches of another tree nearby. Smoke curls up from Chuck's bluejeans toward the Colorado sky. Tom has just watched Chuck crumple over backward, free of the wires....

In response to Tom's screams, his parents and brothers dashed out of their house. A big brother ran to the tree. His mother implored, "My God! There are wires in the tree! Don't touch them!"

But the boy was already climbing, shouting, "He's slipping off the branch! He's falling...."

The little body fell, into the arms of Tom's father braced beneath the tree.

Shouts carried through the woods. "Call an ambulance!" Seconds passed. Then the body stirred. "He's alive! Thank God, he's alive!"

As we heard distant sirens heralding the doctor's approach, the boy murmured, "Why can't I let go of the wire? Why?" His charred right hand looked like a burnt, clenched eagle's claw.

The doctor arrived and cut off the left leg of his jeans. There, high on his thigh, was a ghastly charcoal-black gash. It looked as if it had been cauterized with a blowtorch.

Several hours later, Chuck was wheeled from the operating room. "I'm sure we can save the leg," the doctor said. "But the hand — I don't know. We'll just have to wait and see." The ring of the telephone sliced through our sleep. The clock said 1:10. Dark. Cold. "Yes, doctor," I heard Charlie saying, "if it has to be done. We'll sign the papers."

Charlie hung up. I groped for clothes and took a deep breath. "What," I asked out loud, "does one wear to an amputation?"

Pale dawn. We were home again. Charlie went immediately to bed. I sobbed like a child, then telephoned Tom's mother. "It's happened, Ev!" I wailed.

"I'm going to tell you something and I want you to say it over and over to yourself, to Charlie — and to Chuck when he comes out of the anesthesia. It's this: THERE IS NOTHING IN THE WORLD HE CANNOT DO."

Her jeep roared up the hill in moments. We embraced in a torrent of tears. Five minutes of anguish, of pure grieving.

Then Ev said sharply, "All right! This is your last tear, the last shred of pity you are going to feel! I'm going to tell you something and I want you to say it over and over to yourself, to Charlie — and to Chuck when he comes out of the anesthesia. It's this: THERE IS NOTHING IN THE WORLD HE CANNOT DO."

Those were the words Charlie heard when he woke up. And those were the words we repeated again and again to Chuck: "There is nothing in this world you cannot do, Chuck! Nothing." He came to believe those words. And they are true.

Pink plastic, shiny steel, nylon cords, leather and plastic around the shoulders in a figure-eight harness. A veritable miracle of technological compensation. Eventually, of course, we all got used to it. Often he hung it on something — a doorknob, his bedpost, the stair railing. It became part of the household — like our spectacles and the bikes parked up against the front door.

Tim helped him a lot. Pitching balls for batting practice was a never-ending function of the older brother. The help was neither graciously nor grudgingly offered: just there. Chuck worked with a dogged determination to perform well.

One day, we were zooming up Berthoud Pass, off on our first ski excursion since the accident. The kids were making a terrific racket — shouting, bickering, laughing. I was trying hard not to weep out loud. Charlie was silent. Our conflict: rope-tow versus chairlift.

I hadn't even thought about it until a few miles back, when it had enveloped me in a great despairing wave. "Charlie!" I whispered. "We'll have to spend a lot of money; did you bring enough? Our rope-tow days are over. We'll have to buy chair-lift tickets. For Chuck, for all of us. We mustn't treat him differently from the others."

"Nonsense!" said Charlie.

"But, Charlie!" It was essential to keep our voices down to murmurs. "He can't handle a rope-tow with one arm!"

"Oh, yes, he can. Stop worrying."

The noise in the back seat grew louder. The boys were daring each other to feats of reckless courage. Tears now were streaming down my face and I groped for words: "Charlie," I whispered, "we can't subject the kid to failure!"

"It's even more important," he said, "that we don't deprive him of any chances for...victory."

Of course! For a moment, I had forgotten that there is nothing in this world Chuck cannot do. OK.

Feeling like myself again, I turned around and told the kids to cut the racket.

The unknown beckons

In view of horrendous new budget deficits, when the nation's poor are being squeezed by recessionary pressures and cuts in federal assistance, why should President Reagan propose spending more than $6 billion on space?

Why, for example, spend $3.4 billion on the space shuttle program? Or, why earmark $92.6 million for continued development of a satellite to orbit Jupiter? And what can we expect from $21 million to keep alive U.S. participation in a sunprobe involving several European nations?

The reasons for doing so are as sound, we believe, as they are complex. Right off, there are compelling economic motivations: The National Aeronautics and Space Administration has invested about $15 billion in the space shuttle, which could become a colossal white elephant unless turnaround time between flights can be drastically reduced. Already, 48 shuttle flights scheduled by NASA through 1985 have been cut to 34 missions, with even more cancellations pending. In other words, our enormous investment in the space shuttle could be lost or seriously jeopardized unless this program is carried through.

The outcry of earlier years about wasting so much money on sending men to the moon to the neglect of the poor is being heard again with respect to the space shuttle and space explorations. In gauging the feasibility of future space investment on purely economic grounds, it is instructive, and necessary, to look back on past returns.

The space payoff has been truly astonishing. Space research and development have provided the cutting edge of U.S. technological superiority for 20 years. Still denounced as an esoteric waste of money, space spinoffs have constituted the electronic-scientific revolution that now crowns the waning 20th century. The world is being educated by communications satellites; we prospect for oil with land resource satellites; our damaged hearts are run by pacemakers; our ailments as well as our civilization is diagnosed and addressed by computers. A single satellite circuit that cost $25,000 in 1965 has been reduced to $716, and a semiconductor costing $50 each during the 1960s now costs $2.33. The ever-expanding lists of space payoffs are almost endless.

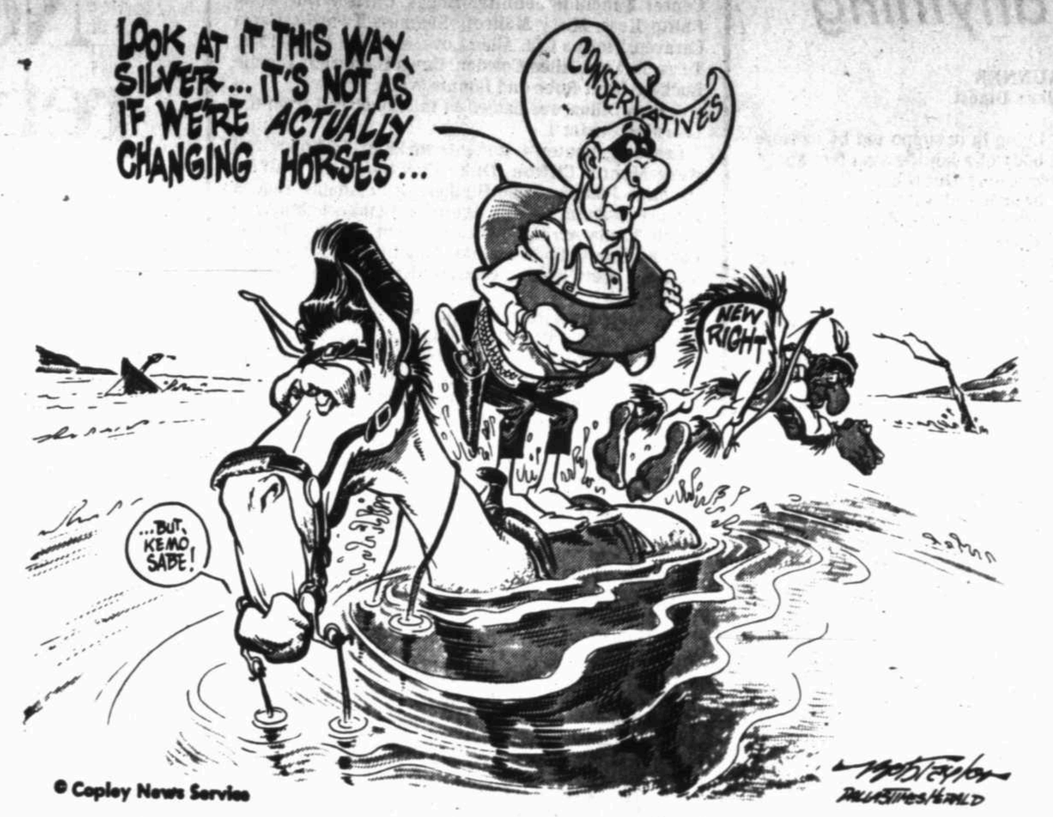
Suffice it to note that a Chase Econometrics study showed NASA research during the 1970s providing a 43 percent return on investment. Even more astounding, the Louis Pasteur University analysis of the French-based European Space Agency program in 1978 found a 270 percent rate of return on investment during an 11-year period.

Even so, the administration's budget trimmers have cut the space program to barest survival, snatching future space exploration back from extinction. During the last 18 months NASA has sustained three major budget retrenchments amounting to more than $1 billion. One write-off, for example, was the 1-in-76-year chance to probe Halley's comet — man's first opportunity ever to unravel secrets of the most feared and fascinating space phenomenon known to history. Thus, we are abdicating Halley to Japan, France, and the Soviet Union.

But, as much has been taken, much remains.

President Reagan's decision to rescue the space exploration program from the Office of Management and Budget calls to mind the similarly tentative beginning of the first great age of exploration. This drama is captured on a haunting painting in the Capitol building in Washington. A messenger on the open road from Queen Isabella and King Ferdinand of Spain, has overtaken Christopher Columbus, who had been turned down at court, and informed him that there had been a change of heart; he would be given his ships to seek a new route to India after all.

As astronomer Carl Sagan has dramatically reminded us, we are today on the threshold of great voyages of discovery just as were the Europeans in the 15th and 16th centuries. Despite our fits and starts, we are summoned by the unknown to risk much and to venture forward into outer space.



TODAY IN HISTORY

Today's highlight in history:

On Feb. 18, 1685, the French explorer La Salle established the first settlement in Texas.

On that date:

In 1915, Germany blockaded England as the World War I submarine war intensified.

In 1945, the World War II battle for Iwo Jima began.

And in 1978, a terrorist killed Yousef El-Sebai, the editor of Egypt's principal newspaper, "Al Ahram," in the lobby of a hotel in Nicosia, Cyprus.

Ten years ago, the California Supreme Court declared an end to capital punishment in that state.

One year ago, President Reagan asked Congress to approve a spending program that would cut more than $41 billion from the budgets of 83 federal programs.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Special-interest clout could kill car rule

WASHINGTON — The dangers of the so-called "legislative veto" — now under attack by the federal courts — are superbly illustrated by the fate of the used-car regulation proposed by the Federal Trade Commission.

Jack Anderson

The suggested FTC rule would force used-car dealers to inform buyers about their warranty rights as well as such defects as cracked engine heads, damaged ball-joint seals, bad suspension systems and leakage in the transmission, cooling, brake and steering systems.

For the second year in a row, the proposed used-car regulation is being considered by Congress. It can be nullified by a simple majority vote in both houses — the "legislative veto."

This, of course, gives special-interest groups like the used-car lobby a second chance to fight regulations that would protect the public from being cheated. It is illegal for regulatory agency employees to accept favors from industry lobbyists, but no such purity standards apply to members of Congress and their staffs.

The usual response of legislators caught accepting favors from an industry representative is that their votes are not for sale — at least not for the price of a fancy meal or a weekend in the sun. Yet the buddy-buddy relationship between lobbyists and lawmakers can't help but look suspicious to the public.

Take the case of Rep. Gary Lee, R-N.Y., the car dealers' unabashed waterboy in the House. Last month, at the height of the Caribbean tourist season, Lee and an aide, Harry Bellardini, spent 10 days with their wives in Freeport, Bahamas, in a condominium partially owned by an upstate New York attorney named Richard Malcolm. The party of four paid a bargain rate of $300 for the condo.

The landlord-tenant relationship also extends to Lee's district office in Auburn, N.Y. He rents the office from a company in which Malcolm is a partner.

What makes this interesting is that Malcolm is the co-owner of University Toyota of Syracuse, N.Y., which is a member of the National Automobile Dealers Association. This industry group has led the fight against the proposed used-car regulation — and has contributed heavily to congressional campaigns through its political action committee.

Malcolm denied that he has lobbied against the FTC rule, and told my associate Tony Capaccio, "I haven't talked to Lee in a long time." The congressman said there was no conflict of interest, because he paid his share of the condo rent and hadn't talked to his landlord about the used-car rule anyway. His aide, Bellardini, said Rep. Lee had had nothing to do with the vacation arrangements, and added, "I have known Malcolm for a number of years."

There doesn't have to be an actual legislative veto to get the special interests what they want. Sometimes the mere possibility of such a veto is enough of a threat to cow the regulatory agency.

In fact, that's exactly what FTC Commissioner Michael Pertschuk claims happened in the case of the used-car rule. It started off requiring used-car dealers to inspect their vehicles and tell customers about any defects they found. But the inspection requirement was gutted by the FTC.

"I tend to believe that the Commission would have been more hospitable to (such a) requirement in the Used Car Rule had not the threat of congressional veto been so imminent," he wrote in a critique requested by the General Accounting Office. He added: "I believe that the present Used Car Rule ... was fashioned consciously or unconsciously to provide the lowest profile target for dealer lobbying and congressional antipathy."

The result, Pertschuk wrote, was "a rule that is so totally unobjectionable and modest that any member of Congress voting against it should blush with shame."

• • •

WHAT'S NEXT? — An attempt to veto the used-car regulation was stalled last year in the Senate Commerce Committee. It is now being reconsidered and will go into effect in 90 days unless the Congress moves to nullify it. The subcommittee that will make the decision is headed by Sen. Robert Kasten, R-Wis. If you want to express an opinion, write to him at Room 328, Russell Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C. 20510.

The subcommittee that will consider a veto on the House side is chaired by Rep. Jim Florio, D-N.J., Room 1741, Longworth House Office Building, Washington, D.C. 20515.

WHO'S NEWS: Robert C. Odle Jr., an assistant secretary of energy for congressional and public relations, has a sign on his office wall saying, "Government is too big, and it spends too much money."

But he left the sign — and the sentiment — behind not long ago when he winged off to Vienna and Berlin to make a couple of speeches to a Jaycees conference on energy. The trip cost the taxpayers $1,662.

"When you make two speeches in two days, it's not a boondoggle," said Odle. Oh.

WATCH ON WASTE: The Senate recently passed a bill abolishing the issuance of CB radio licenses by the Federal Communications Commission. A similar bill is pending in the House. The FCC says it could save more than $500,000 a year by cutting out all the paperwork involved in the CB licensing process.

But here's a switch: The CB radio owners are raising objections. They want to be licensed, to make sure the feds continue to crack down on CB abuses.

ART BUCHWALD

Tank built for those who can afford it!

As one who believes that the United States must have a strong defense at any cost, I decided to go out and buy a tank the other day. After listening to the testimony of the Pentagon experts and the secretary of Defense, I decided the Chrysler M-1 Tank was the best that money could by. Besides Lee Iacocca needs the business.

Art Buchwald

"I'd like to buy an M-1 Tank," I said. "I understand it is superior to any armored vehicle in the world."

"We like to think so," the salesman said. He showed me the model on the floor. "It has the most sophisticated electronics equipment that man could devise. Why don't you jump in the turret and see for yourself?"

I inspected the interior. "How much is it?"

"It will cost you two million five."

"I thought, when you announced you were going to build the M-1, it would be priced at $500,000."

"You must be joking, sir. You can't even get a Jeep for that price anymore."

"Well, I guess I better order one before the price goes up again," I said.

The salesman took me over to his desk and pulled a contract out of his drawer.

"I have to ask you a few questions. You are an American taxpayer, aren't you?"

"Yes, sir."

"Good. That means we won't have to check your credit. Now you want one M-1 Tank. What color?"

"I think I'd like green."

"Green. A very good choice. What options do you want on it?"

"What do you mean?"

"The tank costs two million five, stripped. If you want it to perform right I would strongly suggest the options."

"What kind of options?"

"Well, because it's so sophisticated it cannot do what other tanks in the past have done, such as dig itself in when it is prepared to fire its guns. You need a companion vehicle called an ACE which is a high-speed bulldozer to travel next to you."

"How much is the bulldozer?"

"Do I really need it?"

"The M-1 Tank is no good without it. Now government regulations require me to tell you that the M-1 is a gas guzzler and you'll also have to have a fuel truck behind you. We can supply you with one for $660,000."

"That was a little more than I wanted to spend. By the way, how far can I drive the M-1 Tank before it needs repairs?"

"About 43 miles before it breaks down. I strongly recommend a service contract which only costs $300,000 a year. In the event the tank gets dirt on it and won't move, we'll send a team of Chrysler experts out within 48 hours."

"As a taxpayer, I was hoping you people could come up with a less expensive model."

"When it comes to combat effectiveness, you can't cut corners. This is the top of the line when it comes to tanks, and it's only for people who can afford it."

"Who can afford it?"

"The U.S. Army wants 7,000 of them. And the nice thing about the military is, they never haggle over price."

MARK RUSSELL SAYS

Coca-Cola certainly has a nerve buying Columbia Pictures when they should be using their profits to explore for cola nuts.

• • •

It's these kinds of shenanigans which prevent Reaganomics from working. Instead of creating jobs and preparing for the next cola nut embargo, they're out making movies.

• • •

I don't drink a lot of Coke myself but I'd hate to see anything happen to our most popular export — if you don't count Ravioli-os.

• • •

Columbi-Cola will be very difficult adjusting to — and I'm not convinced that things go better with Columbia Pictures.

• • •

However, even though I am opposed to this particular merger, it wouldn't be a bad idea if Dr. Pepper bought NBC.

GEORGE F. WILL

John Glenn hails from middle of state in middle of America

WASHINGTON — A presidential candidate needs the characteristics of an astronaut and a sledgehammer. An astronaut, because running for office requires an abnormal combination of daring and attention to detail. A sledgehammer, because running requires an almost inhuman obdurateness.

George F. Will

John Glenn, who obviously is thinking of running, acquired the attributes of an astronaut by becoming one. Twenty years ago on Feb. 20, 1962, he flew around the Earth and, as is said, into the hearts of his countrymen. Whether or not he has attributes that would cause the sledgehammer to sit up and say "That's my boy!" remains to be seen.

It is Broder's Law (named after its author, columnist David Broder, the Newton of the physics of politics) that anyone who desires to run for president, especially now that there seem to be more state primaries than there are states, reveals by his desire to run that he is too loony to be entrusted with the office. Broder's premise is that the desire to run for president may be public-spirited, but certainly is peculiar. So Broder's Law leads us to the Glenn Paradox: Glenn's charm is that he is almost abnormally normal.

A politician's first task is to solve his "name-recognition" problem. No one ever solved that problem more expeditiously than Glenn did with his short flight — America's first orbital flight. It made him emblematic of the zip, pep, vigor and general can-do spirit of the Kennedy years.

The secret of American politics generally is to be, or at least to be seen to be, middling: in the middle of the road, and in the middle of the general range of human virtues and aspirations. And it does not hurt to come from the middle of the country, which Ohio can claim to be, symbolically if not geographically.

Beginning with the ninth president (William H. Harrison in 1840) through the twenty-ninth (Warren G. Harding), Ohio produced six presidents (and three vice presidents) were elected from Ohio. Two other presidents were born there. Harding caused the nation to put a moratorium on having Ohio presidents, a moratorium that not even Robert Taft could get the country to break.

Ohio is where the Middle West begins, yet it is a seaport for oceangoing shipping. It combines a strong agricultural economy with six major industrial centers, producing glass, rubber, steel — all the things that make automobiles and make Ohio so vulnerable to the economic problems of the old "smokestack" industries. Glenn represents the "smokestack" Democratic Party, a party grounded in the issues and constituencies of classic American industrialism. It is not clear that full restoration of that America of the smokestacks should be an American aspiration.

But Glenn also represents, temporarily and politically, the tendency within the Democratic Party that was the dominant tendency when he orbited the Earth. That tendency has been in eclipse for 15 years, and the restoration of it to predominance within the party is to be desired, and not just by Democrats.

That is, Glenn is a Democrat in the Roosevelt-Truman-Kennedy-Johnson tradition — a tradition exemplified by Pat Moynihan, Henry Jackson, Sam Nunn and Fritz Hollings among Glenn's Senate colleagues. He sees no incompatibility between strong defense and strong social policies, no conflict between liberal social values and a nationalist, anti-communist foreign policy. This kind of Democrat, although representing a clear majority of this party's rank and file, has not represented the party at the national level since the decisive event of the party's modern history: the McGovernite takeover in '72. Glenn, a Marine pilot, is a graduate of the Naval Academy. He takes defense policy seriously enough to have organized an after-hours bipartisan study group that meets periodically for dinner and discussion.

But even the best ideas depend for their effectiveness on some forensic competence. As a public speaker Glenn is a bit like Cream of Wheat: nourishing but not exciting. Still, in 1980, when Democratic senators were falling like leaves in an autumn gale, Ohioans did not just re-elect Glenn, they conferred upon him a second term virtually by acclamation. He got 69 percent of the Ohio vote while Ronald Reagan was getting 52 percent.

Of course, Americans do not look at presidential candidates and Senate candidates in the same way. They seem to want their Senate candidates to be just folks, but they want their presidential candidates to be rather more. Americans loved Jerry Ford, but did not elect him.

Since 1804, only seven presidents have won the White House without winning Ohio. In this century, only two presidents (FDR, in 1944, and JFK) have done so. No Republicans have. That should be encouraging to this man of the middle, from the middle of Ohio. He is from New Concord, down the road apiece from the home of two other Ohio pioneers of flight, Wilbur and Orville Wright.

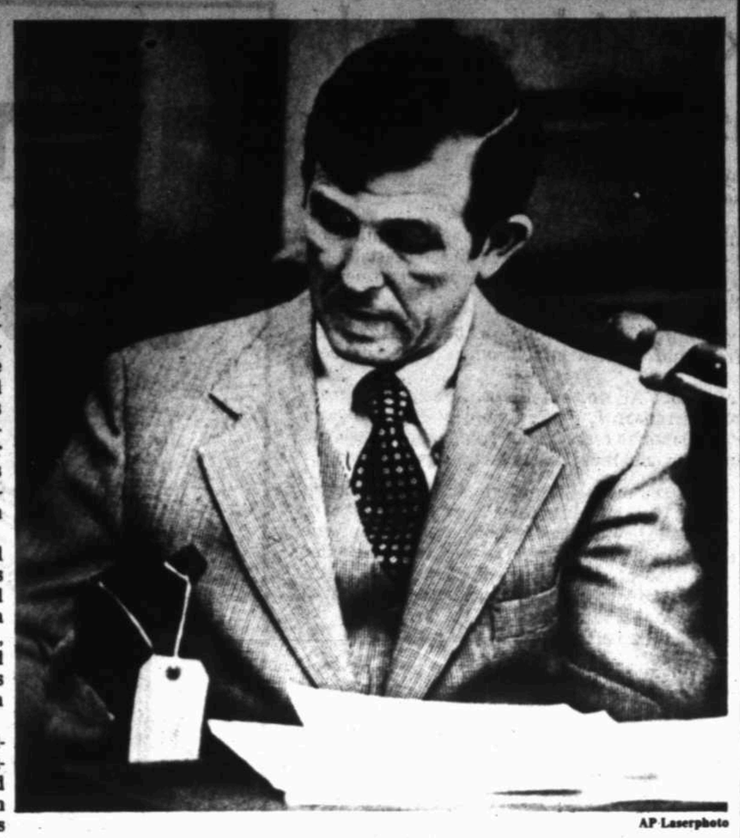
Possibility of self-injection raised in trial



AP Laserphoto

Rhode Island state police detective lieutenant John Riese holds what has been characterized as the "black bag" during his testimony Wednesday at the Newport, R.I., trial of Claus von Bulow.

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — Heiress Martha "Sunny" von Bulow could have injected herself with the insulin blamed for her irreversible coma, a doctor testified in her husband's attempted-murder trial.

Dr. H. Harris Funkenstein testified Wednesday that the only "viable explanation" for Mrs. von Bulow's 14-month coma was an injection of insulin, which triggered a near-fatal drop in blood sugar.

Funkenstein, who treated Mrs. von Bulow, said there were only "two plausible reasons" for the coma.

"These were, first, she had administered it (insulin) to herself, and the other, that someone had administered it to her," Funkenstein said. "We had herd from some individuals that there had been a question about depression that might offer a reason for the self administration."

The prosecution said it would call witnesses today to testify about laboratory tests that revealed traces of insulin on a hypodermic needle Claus von Bulow allegedly used in the second of two attempts to kill his wife with insulin injections.

Prosecutor Stephen R. Famiglietti argues that von Bulow, 55, a Danish-born financial consultant, was moved by love for another woman and desire for half his wife's $30 million utilities fortune to try to kill her during Christmas visits to the couple's Millionaires' Row mansion in 1979 and 1980.

Defense lawyer Herald P. Fahringer contends Mrs. von Blow plunged herself into the coma through drug abuse, heavy drinking and overindulging in sweets which could trigger a drop in her blood sugar.

Funkenstein, a neurologist and Harvard medical school graduate, said he examined Mrs. von Bulow when she was transferred to what is now Brigham and Women's Hospital in Boston on Dec. 22, 180, the day after she collapsed in the private bathroom of her mansion, Clarendon Court, and was rushed to Newport Hospital.

Funkenstein said Mrs. von Bulow, now 50, had suffered severe brain damage as a result of a drastic drop in the blood sugar which fuels brain cells.

He discounted Fahringer's suggestions that her extremely low body temperature and overdoses of aspirin and barbiturates could have significantly contributed to damage that left her brain able to perform only "vegetative" functions such as maintaining breathing and heartbeat.

"The only viable explanation on that point became exogenous insulin; that is, insulin administered to the individual by injection," Funkenstein said.

He added that medical tests ruled out the possibility that liver disease or tumors on the insulin-producing pancreas could have unleashed a flood within the body of the sugar-controlling hormone.

The conclusion led him to ask Mrs. von Bulow's daughter by a previous marriage, Annie-Laurie von Auersperg Kneissl, whether his patient might have had access to insulin.

"Her answer was that, in fact, she had no notion her mother had means of access to insulin," Funkenstein said.

Under questioning by Fahringer, Funkenstein said he had no reaon to believe von Bulow might have injected his wife.

He added that he never noted the probability of a suicide attempt in medical records.

"It did not appear important in the management of this patient," Funkenstein said. "Suicide only becomes important if the patiet survives."

Caputo sorry about faulty record

Former congressman was neither draftee or officer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Bruce Caputo, a former Republican congressman now running for the Senate, says he never meant to mislead anyone when he repeatedly described himself as a former draftee and Army lieutenant even though he was neither.

"I'm not trying to represent myself as a war hero," he said in an interview this week. "If I misspoke, I'm apologetic."

Caputo, 38, who had a civilian job in the Pentagon during the Vietnam War, acknowledged that he never received a draft notice and was never inducted into the armed forces.

But he sad he regarded his civilian Pentagon position as an equivalent experience.

"I consider myself having spent 2½ years doing something I never would have done in the absence of a requirement that I go do it. I had the status of an officer at the time. In loose terms, I did a 2½-year hitch. Now in technical terms, I suppose I had a military occupation."

Caputo, who was a member of Congress in 1977 and 1978, is the only Republican running against Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y.

Moynihan, whose aides have been quietly questioning Caputo's military record for months, said Wednesday that stories about the subject were "a startling revelation that I would not wish to comment on right now."

Caputo, of Yonkers, N.Y., said he was a graduate student at the Harvard Business School in 1967 and sought a job as an aide to then-Defense Secretary Robert McNamara when his student deferment was near expiration.

With the job offer in hand, he secured an occupational deferment from his local draft board, which he kept until he was past likely draft age.

When answering a question at a news conference last fall, Caputo said: "I'm a former draftee and here's what I think. ... I'm not in favor of the draft now."

Although Caputo has called himself a former lieutenant and a draftee in numerous interviews and news conferences, he now concedes, "I never actually took an oath of office as an Army officer."

But as recently as last week, Caputo told a pair of news reporters who had not even asked about his military record: "I was a lieutenant. I had a 2½-year hitch."

When questioned about this several days later, Caputo said, "That's what most of us called ourselves."

"I was using loose language," he said at another point. "I didn't know we were having such a precise conversation."

In an interview in the Sunday magazine of the New York Daily News while he was in Congress, Caputo called his Pentagon post "a Godsend. Not only did I not get shot at, but I didn't pull some terribly monotonous duty in the Aleutian Islands."

In a separate article in New York magazine, also published during his one term as a congressman, Caputo is quoted as saying of his Pentagon job, "It was clearly the best way to handle the service."

Without it, he said, "I probably would have been an infantry lieutenant. I probably would have gotten killed."

Water pollution complaints to be heard

ODESSA — West Texans wishing to air complaints concerning oil-related water pollution may voice their grievances in a conference to be held here Friday by the Texas House of Representatives' water subcommittee of the Natural Resources Committee.

The conference will begin at 10 a.m. in Odessa College's Student Union Building.

The session is to collect testimony on underground water, which allegedly has been polluted by injection of brine in secondary recovery of oil or in disposing of brine in wells rather than pits.

Among those to be at the conference are Jerry Mulligan, director of the Texas Railroad Commission's underground injection control division; Bruce Fink of the Texas Department of Water Resources' protective services division; Sonny Kretzschamar, assistant director of the Texas Department of Water Resources; Wilson Rose, House attorney for the subcommittee, and Texas Reps. Jerry Cockerham, a Monahans minister; Gerald Geisweidt, a Mason rancher-attorney; Charles "Chip" Staniswalis, an Amarillo businessman; J.W. Buchanan of Dumas; Ted Lyons Jr., a Mesquite attorney, and Foster Whaley, a Pampa rancher.

The TDWR is charged by law to investigate alleged water pollution in Texas, and the RRC is responsible for regulation of oil exploration and production.

U.S. oil exec kidnapped, said released hours later

By TOM BALDWIN
Associated Press Writer

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Shiite Moslem gunmen described as disgruntled job applicants kidnapped a U.S. oil executive and two Lebanese on the coastal highway in southern Lebanon tody, but co-workers said all three were released unharmed about seven hours later.

American Embassy spokesman John Reid said he too had been told by their employer the three had been freed and would soon be brought to the Lebanese capital. He had no other details.

Dr. Samira Ali Ahmed, wife of Ghaleb Ali Ahmed, the Lebanese general manager of the American-owned Mediterranean Refinery Company (Medreco), said friends called her from southern Lebanon to report that her kidnapped husband, his U.S. employer, Thomas E. Anderson, and their Lebanese driver were freed.

Anderson, 58, of New York City, is the managing director of Caltex Lebanon and vice president of Medreco. He has been in Lebanon for three years.

"They told me a while ago that all three men are in good shape. They were treated well in captivity and are now being provided with an escort to come home in Beirut," Mrs. Ali Ahmed said at the Beirut headquarters of Medreco.

Employees who handled the telex and telephone communications that involved negotiations for the release of Anderson, Ali Ahmed and the driver said the kidnappers belonged to no specific political party or militia in Lebanon.

The employes, who requested anonymity, said the abductors were Shiite Moslems who were unhappy with the way they were recently interviewed for jobs at Medreco.

The employees said the leader of Lebanon's pro-Iranian Shiite Moslem Amal organization — Nabih Berri — was instrumental in negotiating the release in response to appeals from the government.

A spokesman at Medreco's Beirut office said Anderson, Ahmed and the driver left Beirut at 6 a.m. for the 32-mile drive south along the coastal highway to Zahrani, where the company operates Lebanon's largest refinery.

The gunmen reportedly leaped into the road as the car approached Zahrani and fired their guns into the air, then forced the three men to drive off.

"Workers at the refinery heard the shots and saw what happened," said a company spokeswoman.

The Voice of Lebanon, the Christian Phalange Party's radio station, said the kidnappers took the three men to Ghaziyeh, a village north of Zahrani reputed to be a stronghold of Amal.

The Voice of Lebanon said the refinery workers went on strike and stopped loading tanker cars at the refinery in protest against the abduction.

Amal has lately been at odds with the Palestinians and their leftist Lebanese allies because of clashes between Amal militiamen and pro-Iraqi and Communist groups in the leftist-Palestinian alliance.

Medreco accounts for 60 percent of Lebanon's domestic petroleum. It refines an average of 50,000 barrels a day of Saudi Arabian crude pumped to Zahrani through the Trans-Arabian Pipeline (Tapline).

Jet engine fire causes evacuation

MIAMI (AP) — Passengers saw black smoke after they slid down emergency chutes to evacuate a jetliner when its tail engine burst into flames on takeoff, but those aboard said there was no panic.

"I heard a pop," said Norine Centofante, 24, one of the 47 passengers on Wednesday's Pan American Flight 975. "We weren't going very fast. We just stopped, and the stewardesses told everybody to get out."

Two passengers were injured in the emergency evacuation after the Orlando-bound Boeing 727 jetliner braked to a halt on a runway at Miami International Airport. None of the seven crew members were injured.

"A few people pushed, but no one panicked," said Ms. Centofante, a Huntington Beach, Calif., resident in Florida on her honeymoon. "It went very fast. I noticed smoke when I got to the ground."

Influential jazz play[illegible]er dies

ENGLEWOOD, N.J. (AP) — A funeral service f[illegible]r Thelonious Sphere Monk, a composer and pianist described as one of the mos[illegible]t influential figures in jazz, has been set for Monday in Manhattan, where Monk liv[illegible]ed most of his 64 years.

Th composer of "Round Midnight," "Straight[illegible] No Chaser" and "Well, You Needn't," died Wednesday in Englewood Hospital[illegible], 12 days after he suffered a stroke.

Although he was frequently associated with mus[illegible]icians who developed the harmonic and rythmic innovations of the "bebop" ja[illegible]zz style, his compositions and technique stood apart from the work of his colleag[illegible]ues.

"They think differently, harmonically," he once [illegible]said of other leading jazz figures in the 1940s.

AT WIT'S END

By ERMA BOMBECK

Have you ever seen the articles that try to make your winter tolerable by giving you indoor projects? They tell us how important it is to be creative and to keep ourselves busy.

They mean well, but somehow I cannot imagine amusing myself by rearranging books according to titles, reframing pictures, cooking a meal over an open fire and eating by candlelight or bringing order to my kitchen drawers.

Winters don't do it for me anymore. Oh, sure, I know what the poets say about the alabaster-white countryside and how can we know the joy of spring until the hairs in our nose have thawed. I bought that too when I was 23 years old, but face it, Bunkie, at my age I can't afford to wait for the traffic light to turn green.

I like to devote my winters to self-pity.

I'm trapped. If I hadn't panicked and married at the age of 22, I could be like that girl on Public Television who sits on a hillside day in and day out recording the behavior of gorillas. God, that must be wonderful. No meals to cook. No trying to start the car. No schools closing because of snow.

I probably won't live to see the spring. Might just as well make a list of who I want to have my Sarah Coventry jewelry and my box of Italian chocolates hidden behind the chicken innards in the freezer.

I have a choice of things I can have for dinner without leaving the house: chili without beans, lasagna without cheese, salad without lettuce, pancakes without syrup, or steak and baked potatoes, without steak.

This is the worst winter in the history of the earth. It has to be. Why else would my dryer be broken? It overheats in the summer and stops in the winter. That's Bombeck's Law.

What could I do that's creative? Last year I rubbed my dry heels together to see if I could start a fire. I could and did.

Maybe I'll write to my congressman and ask him to introduce a bill raising the age of menopause to coincide with senility.

DEAR ABBY

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Im 18 years old and don't know where else to turn. For the last two years I've been stuffing myself with food and forcing myself to throw up every day—sometimes several times a day. I just can't stop. God knows I've tried. My parents are disgusted with me and wouldn't spend a dime to get me cured. I really can't blame them since I got myself into this. I saw a doctor just once, and he said it was a matter of self-control.

Abby, if I could control myself I wouldn't be writing to you. I'm not fat, I'm normal, but I eat enormous amounts and keep eating and eating like there's no tomorrow. You wouldn't belive what I can down in 15 minutes (A whole frosted chocolate cake, big enough to serve 16, plus six apple turnovers and a dozen glazed doughnut.) Then I put my finger down my throat and get rid of it all. I am so disgusted with myself I want to die! I feel fine physically, but mentally I'm a wreck. I feel guilty all the time. I'm a friendly, well-adjusted person, go to church every week and have many friends. Why am I doing this to myself? Thank God I have you, Abby. Just writing this has taken a load off my mind. Plase help me—DESPERATE IN INDIANA.

DEAR DESPERATE: You have a disorder known as "bulimarexia" or "bulimia" — an uncontrollable compulsion to consume enormous amouonts of food and get rid of it by taking laxatives or by self-induced vomiting. There is a wonderful organization that will send you free information about this condition and direct you to the treatment center nearest your.

Write to: ANAD, Box 271, Highland Park, Ill. 60035. Please enclose a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope, as this is a non-profit organization.

DEAR ABBY: What do you think of someone who would give a gift to a good friend, admitting that she had worn it once herself? At least she was honest but she couldn't very well have denid it because her fragrance was still on it. Of course, I said it was lovely, and even tried to reassure her by saying it meant even more to me because she had chosen it first for herself. Now I am having second thoughts and I feel hurt. I think she gave it to me because after wearing it, she decided she didn't like it very much, so instead of buying me a new gift, she gave me a castoff. Something bought especially for me, regardless of the cost, would have left me wih a better feeling. Or am I nitpicking? — HURT

DEAR HURT: Yes. It's not the gift but the spirit of giving that counts.

CONFIDENTIAL TO "BIDING MY TIME IN RENO, NEV.": Revenge may be sweet. But it almost always comes too late.

Study shows women's ability to get pregnant drops significantly after the age of 30

BOSTON (AP) — New findings on fertility suggest that working women who want babies should have them during their 20s instead of waiting until they have established their careers.

A study by a federation of sperm banks in France found that women's ability to get pregnant drops significantly after age 30. Until now, many had believed that women's fertility remained high until at least age 35.

Two American doctors who reviewed the report say it may have an important message for women who intend to hold off pregnancy until their 30s, when they have more job security.

"Perhaps the third decade should be devoted to childbearing and the fourth to career development, rather than the converse, which is true for many women today," wrote Drs. Alan H. DeCherney and Gertrud S. Berkowitz of Yale Medical School.

"Although this might entail restructuring educational and training programs and the labor market," they added, "it might be the best way to ensure that women who desire to have both a family and a career are able to do so."

Statistics show that 8 percent of America's first-time mothers were 30 or older in 1979, compared with 6.8 percent in 1960.

The fertility study was conducted by the Federation des Centres d'Etude et de Conservation du Sperme Humain, an organization of 11 French sperm banks. It was published in today's issue of the New England Journal of Medicine.

The doctors kept records on the ages of 2,193 female clients and measured fecundity, which they define as the capacity for procreation. All the women had sterile husbands, and they recnived artificial insemination for 12 monthly cycles.

The women were most fertile while in their 20s, when nearly three-quarters were able to get pregnant with artificial insemination.

Here's the answer

Q. —I bought a second-hand piano some time ago. The humidity in our house usually is very low and things have a habit of drying out. That's probably what happend to the ivory on the keys. How do I get them to stay on? Also, is there any way of getting the yellow off?

A. —By coincidence, a new Yankee Magazine Home Fix-It book discusses that subject. The comment applies exactly to your problem: "To clean the ivories, try any of the following: denatured alcohol, yogurt or a solution of whiting powder found in paint stores. Avoid getting the whiting solution between the keys. To secure the ivories to the keys, sand off any old glue from the ivories and from the keys. Apply a thin coat of contact cement to both parts and when it is dry to the touch, place the ivory to the key at the exact spot it is to fit. Once contact is made, the ivory cannot be moved, so be sure the placement is exact."

Q. —We have a flagstone patio at the rear of our house. The joints between them have broken in several places and have become filled with weeds. As a result, the flagstones are not steady in those places. What is the best way to put everything in shape again?

A. —Remove the broken concrete pieces, pull out the weeds and make sure the flagstones are set firmly. To find where to add dirt or gravel under the flagstones, walk on them and see exactly where they tip. When the stones appear firm, mix a powdered concrete patching material with water to a putty-like consistency. Allow the mixture to stand a few minutes, then take some of the patching material and mix it with more water until it is as thin as paint. Brush this on to the edges of the flagstones to insure a strong bond. Apply the other concrete mixture between the flagstones with a pointing trowel. Compact and smooth with a trowel. Remove the excess with a sponge and allow 24 hours to dry. Keep the patches damp for a few days or cover them with strips of damp burlap.

Q. —I want to finish an old cabinet that now has several coats of varnish on it. This time I want to use lacquer. Can I put it on right over the varnish?

A. — No. the lacquer is likely to soften and lift some of the varnish. If you want to apply lacquer, you'll have to take off the present finish with a varnish remover.

(The techniques of using lacquer, varnish, shellac, stain, bleach, remover, etc., are detailed in Andy Lang's booklet, Wood Finishing in the Home, which can be obtained by sending 50 cents and a long, stamped, self-addressed envelope to Know-How, P.O. Box 477, Huntington, NY 11743. Questions of general interest will be answered in the column, but individual correspondence cannot be undertaken.)

THE ART OF LIVING

Parents give legacy of love

By Henry Hurt
(Special from Reader's Digest)

Icy winds swept through the creaky old house atop a steep hillside in Ottumwa, Iowa. Huddled inside around a scorching potbellied stove were Lucile and Ivan Fray and their 10 children.

Lucile agonized over Ivan's arthritis — so bad that he couldn't hold a table utensil between his gnarled fingers. The pain was searing and he had to curtail his working time in the foundry.

Thus, it was with urgent despair that Lucile came to grips with the doctor's prognosis: Cancer thoroughly ravaged her body and she would die within a matter of months.

In their mid-30s, Lucile and Ivan – one dying, the other virtually disabled – faced a dilemma: how to ensure the best future for their children. After looking at their options, they made a bold decision. Lucile would find loving and secure homes, permanent ones, for the youngsters.

When newspapers reported that 10 smart children were available for adoption, eager couples came from as far away as California. In turning away those who didn't meet her standards, Lucile moved with the confidence of a woman who knew this was her last legacy.

It was a terribly gloomy time for Ivan, who shared with his wife a decision that had been kept from the children. So that the new parents were assured that they alone would be responsible for their adopted child, Ivan agreed never to seek to see his children again.

Lucile told her children that she was dying, that she and their father could no longer take care of them, and that they were all going to get new parents. Stephen, the baby, was the first to go. Over the next six months, eight others were adopted. The new parents ranged from a college professor to a farmer to a building contractor.

There was one child no one would take. Frank was 6, flaxenhaired and strong. But he had epilepsy, a widely misunderstood ailment that prospective parents feared. As a last resort, Lucile placed him in a state institution for the mentally retarded, the only type of public facility in Iowa those days for a child like Frank.

But one set of new parents could not wipe the picture from their minds of little Frank watching them leave with one of his brothers. Returning to Iowa on vacation from their home in California, they decided to adopt him, too. By this time, Lucile's cancer was causing myriad complications. As her life drew to a close, she wanted, one last time, to see those of her children who were living in northern Iowa.

She managed the visits, but the grueling trip took its toll. It was as though her last reserves of strength vanished as she bade her children farewell.

"I feel at peace now," she told her husband upon arriving home. "I just hope you'll be all right." Within a week, she was dead.

All this happened nearly 28 years ago. Time has borne out Lucile Fray's faith that she had done her very best. Today her children are scattered all over the United States, and they have prospered. They all finished high school; some went beyond. There are 15 grandchildren and two great-grandchildren.

The children share a common feeling of gratitude as they speak of the courageous act of their parents. They believe that a decision other than the one made would have decreased their chances of having happy, steady lives.

Linda Keizer McNatt was almost 5 when she was adopted by a college professor. She is married and lives in New Mexico.

Virginia Barels Johnson, the second-oldest girl, lives with her husband and three sons in Tennessee. She has great admiration for what her natural parents did. Another child, Carl Miller, went on to become the Idaho State Champion Wrestler. "Mom could never have hoped for it all to come out as well as it did," he says about his life.

As for young Frank, drugs controlled his epilepsy enough to allow him to lead a happy life.

LIGHT SUPPER
Scrod Stew Garlic Bread
Frosted CakeBeverage

SCROD STEW

For tang, add lots of pepper.
2 medium potatoes (scant 12 ounces), pared and sliced fairly thin
2 medium-small onions (generous 4 ounces), peeled and sliced fairly thin
2 medium carrots (6 ounces), pared and sliced fairly thin
16-ounce can whole tomatoes, undrained
1 teaspoon dried finely crushed thyme
1 large bay leaf
2 cups water
3 skinless scrod fillets (each a scant half-pound) or similar white-flesh fish
Salt and pepper to taste

In a 3-quart saucepan bring all the ingredients (except the scrod) to a boil, breaking up the tomatoes; simmer, covered, until potatoes are tender — about 30 minutes. Quarter each scrod fillet (cutting both lengthwise and crosswise) and add; simmer, covered, until fish flakes and is opaque through — about 10 minutes. Gently stir in the salt and pepper. Serve in wide soup bowls with soup spoons. Makes 3 to 4 servings.

Chinese women change eyes

By MICHAEL WEISS-KOPF

PEKING — Xiao An used to primp before the mirror for hours, but a dab of rouge and the permanent wave never turned a plain girl into a beauty.

So she marched down to the office of Dr. Fu Longyu and, for the equivalent of $20, walked out with a new pair of eyelids adorned with a Western-style fold.

After the stitches were removed and the swelling went down, Xiao An joined the growing number of Chinese women who have endured a painful operation to modify the most distinctive feature of the Chinese face — the creaseless eyelid.

Many Chinese women, who for years fashioned their own brand of the feminine mystique wrapped in baggy trousers and Mao caps, now believe the classic Asian eyelid makes their eyes look too squinty.

"Sometimes I could make my eyelids fold naturally by pressing the skin together," said Xiao An, 20, a chemical factory worker. "Then I'd run to the mirror and admire my eyes. They looked so elegant."

Although such decadent thoughts could have qualified for a public beating a few years ago, today they lead dozens of Peking women each month to the modest quarters of Fu Longyu, a plastic surgeon who uses his bed for a makeshift operating table and performs the delicate surgery under a reading lamp.

"A few years ago, ideological purity was the only requisite," Fu said recently between operations. "Now people pay as much attention to outside beauty as inside beauty."

Although most of his patients are in their 20s, women of every age, occupation and motivation wander into Fu's clinic on the long, winding Suzhou Alley.

In the past year, he has operated on lonely hearts hoping to land a beau and aspiring actresses hoping to land a role. There have been middle-aged women trying to resist the ravages of time an- teenagers casting about for a self-concept.

Fu, a frail man of 58 with a blind left eye, offers two surgicial procedures: the small fold for patients who want to maintain an Oriental identity, and the deep fold for women who want eyes as big as Debbie Reynolds'.

"The cadres who come here always get the small fold," said Fu. "They don't dare to look too Western. But some young ones who want to become movie stars ask for the Western style."

Patients who cram into Fu's one-room clinic every morning deny they are succumbing to Western influence, claiming they merely hope to make their eyes "harmonious" with their face, not Occidental.

"When I was young, my eyes went quite well with my face," explained a 42-year-old drama teacher. "As I've aged, my eyes have gotten smaller. They've lost harmony with my face. This is when a plastic surgeon can help."

Although many chauvinistic Chinese believe their ancestors invented beauty along with gunpowder, the popular standard for female sublimity has undeniably been influenced by the recent opening to the West.

Padded bras are becoming common appare among the urban young and a national sports magazine acknowledging the woes of being flat-chested suggested exercises and plastic surgery as a cure.

Chinese matrons wait in long lines for octopus-like hair-curling devices that are making big waves in most cities.

Despite the few obvious rub-offs from the West, changes come slowly to a society where bound feet were the rage less than 40 years ago. During the Cultural Revolution of the 1960s and 70s, radical chic was Army fatigues for both men and women.

Communist leaders today try to monitor fashion with regular denunciations of "weird and immoral" hair styles and garb from the West, but they seem willing for the time being to avoid tinkering with evolving concepts of physical beauty.

It was with an eye to beauty that Dr. Fu nailed up a copper sign outside his little house 14 months ago and started taking patients after obtaining local government approval to operate as the only private plastic surgeon in Peking.

He learned the skill as a young medical student more than 30 years ago, and after decades of virtual inactivity he revived the technique of slicing out a layer of fatty tissue from underneath the eyelid so that the outer skin folds loosely over the eyeball.

Every morning Dr. Fu dons his white surgical gown, cap and mask and goes to work in his cluttered, unheated operating room while as many as five patients wait their turn. He sterilizes his instruments himself and keeps them on a tray placed atop his dresser along with a supply of local anesthetic.

Fu said about 600 women and a few men have had the surgery since he opened shop, and he has turned away thousands more because of his poor health. He sees each patient twice during the seven-day recovery period to make sure they remain free of infection.

State hospitals also perform the operation, although the waiting list is said to be very long.

Prevention is still the best cure for heart disease

By SANDY ROVNER
Los Angeles Times
Washington Post
News Service

WASHINGTON — Americans are doing a little better on heart disease, but it's still the No. 1 killer. It still accounts for about half of all deaths in this country. The American Heart Association estimates that more than a million Americans may have heart attacks this year. About half a million people will die of them. Another half a million may succumb to strokes or other related cardiovascular illnesses. That is something like three times those who die from cancer.

There have been some major medical breakthroughs in the treatment of heart attacks in the past few years, some even within the past few months, such as the discovery that combining two classes of heart drugs — beta blockers and calcium channel blockers — may be a particularly efficacious way to protect heart attack survivors from having another attack. Physicians and researchers have a wealth of new knowledge about what causes heart attacks, what happens when they occur and what causes them to recur. These new diagnostic and surgical techniques and new drugs and combinations of drugs are revolutionizing treatment. But prevention is still the best weapon, and, tragically, perhaps the least utilized.

Prevention depends as much (or more) on the individual as it does on the doctor.

And although there are certain immutable things tending to predispose some individuals to heart attack or stroke, there are other things that can significantly reduce what the medical community now calls the risk factors.

Dr. Edward B. Diethrich, cardiologist, heart surgeon, medical director of the Arizona Heart Institute, and just-named heart consultant to the President's Council on Physical Fitness, has devised a test called "The Cardiovascular Risk Factor Analysis." It is based on the kind of testing he and his staff do at the institute, but is specifically designed for people before they become patients.

The bare bones test is reprinted here. An expanded version, with more details about how you can make it work for you, is included in Diethrich's book, "The Arizona Heart Institute's Heart Test" (Cornerstone-Simon & Schuster, $6.95. Proceeds to heart research.) The good news, says Diethrich, is that even if your score is in the danger zone (36 or more) "you can actually do something about reducing your risk of heart attack and stroke."

A little more than a year ago, ABC's 20-20 did a segment on Diethrich's work and, as it were, administered the heart test to the TV viewing public. To the astonishment of Diethrich — and ABC — there were 250,000 responses from people who took the test. More than just a phenomenon, it gave Diethrich's research arm, the International Heart Foundation, a hefty sample on which to base a test of the test itself.

Diethrich advertised for volunteers, won some financing and the help of the computer department of the University of Arizona. The subsequent follow up disclosed that those responding viewers who had scored 36 or more were under a doctor's care or had already undergone angiograms and bypass surgery.

The risk factors that you have no control over, obviously, are your age, sex, and family and personal histories — one through four on the chart. No. 5, diabetes, can be lessened as a factor, although not eliminated.

But the rest of the factors are pretty much up to the individual. Not easy, mind you, but look at it this way:

Take Al. He is 56 years old. His mother had a heart attack. He had a mild stroke when he was 50. His score is already 24.

Say he smokes two packs a day and is probably 30 pounds overweight. That brings him up to 36 (high risk) already and that doesn't even count his blood pressure, which is bound to be high — perhaps because he is overweight, perhaps because he is also an A-type personality in a stressful job with no stress-management training. (Add another 10 or 15 points.)

Al is no dope, so when he reads this, he stops smoking at once, goes on a low-fat, low-calorie diet, joins a health club and takes a course in relaxation techniques like biofeedback. He also goes to his doctor and lets it all hang out.

His doctor is no dope either and is up on the latest techniques. Al's doctor does a series of blood tests that measure the cholesterol level and the level of high-density lipoproteins (HDLs) in his blood. (At the moment, cardiologists tend to see HDLs as a protection against heart attacks, but some studies seem to link them to increased cancer. "The answers aren't all in yet," says Diethrich.)

Al's blood pressure is up and his doctor puts him on a mild drug for hypertension — probably, at first, a diuretic. He encourages Al's exercise and no-smoking routines and recommends he limit his salt intake and cut down on excess alcohol. Al is doing fine, but he breaks a foot in a cross-country ski mishap and so much for the exercise. Still, he isn't smoking ... but he isn't losing weight either.

At his next visit, his cholesterol (the stuff that clogs arteries) is still high and his doctor sees other trouble signs, such as breathlessness and occasional, transient chest pain. So Al is sent on to a specialist for a stress test combined with new nuclear medical techniques. These can actually permit cardiologists to observe the distribution of blood in the heart vessels while the patient is exercising. Another such test measures how well the chambers of the heart called the ventricles are contracting.

Combining the stress test with nuclear medicine has weeded out many potential candidates for angiography, now an almost last-resort technique in which a dye is injected into the arteries and any blockage shows up on X-ray movies that follow the course of the dye within the arterial system. Angiography is not without its risks, although it is essential when other tests are positive or equivocal.

Let's say that Al's tests are okay. By this time he has had, as they say, the fear of God put into him, gets himself into a healthful lifestyle and dies at the age of 92 after a fight with his fifth wife.

But his ambitious, hard-driving colleague Esme, has a heart attack. That is, the blood supply to a part of her heart is blocked. Esme is lucky. She is a good candidate for a technique in which a balloon-tipped catheter is inserted into the artery and blown up, dilating the blood vessel and thereby permitting blood to flow into the heart. Had more than one artery been blocked, or had it been the left main artery, she might have been a candidate for bypass surgery. (This is still the best option in certain cases, says Diethrich, despite recent indications that it has too often been performed on patients who might have done quite as well on drug therapy.) Although women, in general, are less at risk, more and more of them are having heart problems, other than the romantic kind, recent statistics show.

It wasn't just chance, by the way, that (fictional) Al's five wives helped in his ultimate longevity. New studies have indicated that loneliness may be an important factor in the onset of fatal heart attacks or stroke. Al also was a tropical fish collector and, although he never realized it, watching fish has been shown to lower blood pressure. Pets do too.

And finally, new tests are suggesting that once again the old wives had it right: Al's fight with his wife may indeed have triggered that final attack. Sudden stresses, like fright or fights, death or divorce can upset the heart's electrical system enough to set off an attack in susceptible persons.

Take the test. If your score is over 30, see your doctor. If it's over 36, and you are not yet under a doctor's care, better call him today. If it's over 20, the suggestions in Diethrich's book may help. In any case, don't panic. If Al could do it, couldn't you?

USDA hopes to cut requirements

By SARAH FRITSCHNER
Los Angeles Times
The Washington Post
News Sevice

WASHINGTON — The USDA is seeking to slice through stringent inspection requirements to save the government what one critic calls "peanuts" over the next seven years. The USDA prefers to visit many of the plants less often, thereby requiring fewer inspectors and saving the department as much as $2 million this year and up to $25 million in the years to come.

Don Houston, administrator of the Food Safety and Inspection Service, called the proposal an attempt to "modernize the system." He insists that the department is moving not just to save money but to piggyback on the efforts of plants with equipment sophisticated enough to do their own inspecting. He says the proposal will create an inspection system that is not only more efficient but more effective as well.

Right now, every meat-processing plant is inspected every day. The larger plants have "resident" federal inspectors who stay at that plant all day, although they might move from room to room. Smaller plants, though visited daily, do not have inspectors on the premises at all times.

To pass inspection, a processed meat product must be: 1) wholesome, i.e. put together according to USDA regulations (A hot dog, then, must have the proper proportion of fat to meat); 2) properly labeled, ensuring that something labeled "all beef hot dogs" does not contain ground chicken or soy product; 3) labeled so that the weight is accurately stated; and 4) prepared under sanitary conditions.

The new proposal suggests holding some plants responsible themselves for compliance with these rules, allowing for less-constant monitoring by the USDA.

The trouble with the proposal, says Tom Smith, research director for the Community Nutrition Institute, a consumer advocacy agency, is that "we are not getting any assurances of greater consumer protection."

Houston insists that since World War II, technology and innovation have led to efficient processing plants. These plants risk their reputations (and potential existence) if their products are inconsistent or adulterated. McDonald's, in theory, needs no prodding from the secretary of agriculture to keep hamburgers clean. All it needs, some people allege, is one whisper about adulterated meat and the golden arches begin to crumble. The Food Safety and Inspection Service is counting on the profit-motivated compliance by such companies to play by USDA rules.

The secretary of agriculture would decide who is inspected and how often after determining the nature of the plant's processing procedures, the adequacy and reliability of the plant's self-monitoring system and the plant's history of compliance with traditional inspection requirements. That is, if the plant just puts labels on hot dogs, it is considered a relatively low-risk operation and might not get inspected as frequently as a plant that cans beef stew.

Similarly, if the beef stew canner runs an exemplary processing plant where you can eat off the floor and the commitment for compliance is strong, the USDA probably wouldn't visit it much either. If the company sets standards for itself that surpass any devised by the USDA, inspectors might be more effective at less-reputable packers.

So far, so good, but critics say there is one aspect of the proposal with which they take issue. It would also allow the secretary of agriculture "complete discretion" in deciding when meat inspection is necessary and when it's not.

"Once they build discretion into the law they can go anywhere with it," said Smith. "Discretion" gives the secretary freedom to decide for himself which plants will be inspected and which will not.

"The political appointees call the shots. The shots are being called by OMB these days. They have ultimate authority on these issues," Smith insists, adding, "The thing that concerns me most is that they're doing it for budgetary reasons."

For 10 years the USDA has been pushing for quality control within plants, and Houston alleges that the new proposal will capitalize on these efforts. What he fails to mention, says Smith, is that severe penalties were always meant to accompany the processors' new responsibility of self-inspection.

Smith quotes a 1977 General Accounting Office report that states: "In-plant quality control systems must be accompanied by new enforcement tools. Economic deterrents were considered the most effective means to insure compliance. The report (from a consulting firm) recommended that the service (Meat & Poultry Inspection Service) devise a plant rating system tied to a progressive enforcement system that includes economic penalties."

"We have a good system of protection," says Smith, "and you don't trade it away, getting nothing in return. They can make this thing good by asking for authority to impose civil penalities," and eliminating the secretary's freedom. Give the plants responsibility for self-regulation, but come down hard on them if they fail to comply."

Jacking up a sagging floor

By AL CARRELL

With the very good trend of buying older homes and renovating theo, a lot of folks are finding sagging floors. In the case of a floor that is sagging along an outside wall, it is probably a job for a foundation specialist. However, if the sag is in the center of the room, it may be a fairly simple repair. Before you make the repair though, be sure thxzPwhat you are about to do complies with the local building code.

If you can get to the space below the sag in a basement or crawl space, you can probably greatly help toward leveling the floor maybe even to the extent that it will be perfectly level.

From below, determine the floor joist that is in the center of uhe lowest spot in the floor. It may be detected just by eyeballing, or you may have to do some measuring and guessing from above and below.

Now the general idea in this leveling is that you will use some sort of house jack that will rest on a firm base and be raised up against a timber that is running across the joists above. The jack will be in the center and wkil push against the center of the timber. BUT that's an over-simplification. There are some things you must know before you start.

First, let's talk about jacks. You can buy or rent one of several different sizes. The short house jacks are called jack screws, and the longer ones are called jack posts. Since this is a one-time only job, you may do better to rent this equipment. However, there are times when people get the leveling done and just leave the jacks in place in a crawl space to hold the floor up. Whatever you get, be sure that it will be tall enough to be jacked up against the timber above and still have enough additional raising range to level the floor.

The base below the jack is very important. Otherwise, the jack may just drive itself into the ground or crack the concrete floor below it. A pair of 2x8's, one on top of the other, will usually spread the load.

Usually there will be several joists on gach side of the center joist that are also sagging. If possible, try to determine the first joist on each side that does not sag. You now need to cut a 4x4 or larger timber that will be long enough to reach to a couple of the non-sagging joists on each side. This needs to go at right angles to the joists and fi% between the top of the jack and the center joist. In some cases, it's best to nail it to the center joist while you get the jack set up and in place.

The jack now needs to be turned up snug against the cross timber. Keep turning until you feel resistance — then STOP. The leveling process must be very gradual. Otherwise you can do great damage to the upper parts of the house. The parts of your house must gradually get used to their new position. This is all you do for the first day... just turn until you get resistance — then STOP.

Wait at least 24 hours, and then make another turn, but only a quarter turn. It's easy to tell a quarter turn because the handle will stick out in a straight line parallel to the ground. Most jacks also have four holes for the handle to go into, so that also acts as a guide. You'll probably find that first quarter turn is very, very easy. You'll be tempted to go ahead and turn some more. Don't! Be patient. Make only a quarter of a turn each day. If you have to miss a day, don't make it up the next day. Never more than a quarter turn per day.

As you get the sagging joists toward level, start using your level every day to check.

Once the floor is as near level as you can make it, you need to make it stay that way. In an unused basement, many people will install jack posts at each end of the timber and just leave them there. Others use lally columns or heavy posts. Whatever you use to keep the floor propped up must also have a base or it will begin to sink into the ground. Even a concrete basement floor will be iffy. Many times a 2-foot thick section will be cut out of the floor and excavation below to allow for pouring a footing at leas% a foot thick. You must make sure that your support posts won't give way. On a long span, you may want to usg more than just a post at each end.

Of course, one advantage to an unlevel floor is that when you drop something, you can always find it because it will roll right to the lowest spot.

RINGING THE BELL

Roosevelt made impression during Great Depression

By BOB TIEUEL

Dear Bob, "What I remember most about the Great Depression days of FDR is not the hard and hungry days, but the hopelessness that permeated everything.... The privileged learned to hate Roosevelt with a passion. Many a cook, maid or yardboy would conclude that if Roosevelt was such an enemy of the rich, he truly had to care about the poor. Roosevelt knew this.

"So he would say in Sept. 1934: 'I am not for a return to that definition of liberty under which for many years a free people were being gradually regimented into the service of the privileged few.' And in Jan. 1936 he would tell Congress: 'We have earned the enmity of entrenched greed.'

"The players come and go, but the contest remains the same. President Reagan opposes big government and federal regulations in the name of giving 'liberty' back to the people, but he is assailed by those who think he is merely succumbing to 'entrenched greed.'

"If Roosevelt could only hear the cries for budget cuts and the destruction of the social programs that come from people with two houses, three cars, a boat and 14 tax shelters! Roosevelt said in 1940, that 'a full stomach often groans more loudly than an empty stomach.' And so it is in America today.

"I shall never forget the day when the principal of my little Jim Crow school told me he had talked someone out of some NRA (National Recovery Act) money and that he could pay me $3 a month to raise and lower the flag every day. Wow! It was only $3 but it was a million dollars' worth of hope. Therein lies the difference between the Roosevelt and Reagan revolutions. The former generated and nurtured hope. The latter is destroying it for millions of poor and middle-class Americans," yours fraternally, Carl Rowan.

Important Quotes: "Segregation is defined differently for a school than for other institutions. Any school that had the same racial composition as Kennedy Airport or the Metropolitan Opera could be hit with a court order to desegregate. But no such court order is issued to these other institutions.

"Airports, hospitals, restaurants, or theaters are considered desegregated when they are open to everyone regardless of what mixture of people actually use them. But schools are condemned as segregated, even if every race of man is admitted and present — if they are not present in the right proportions. The reason for this double standard goes all the way back to the assumptions of Brown vs. Board of Education in 1954," from Dr. Thomas Sowell a black senior fellow at the Stanford University Hoover Institution on War, Revolution and Peace.

PRAY TV: A Bellringer Writes, "Pray TV was realistic. Indeed, evangelical Christians have had to answer the question of how to reach people for Christ — through the Church or the tube. The only command is that the Gospel be preached.

"It needs no help. It can be presented simply on a one-to-one basis or through the mass media. Certainly religious television operates in the natural parameters of good television production, using teleprompters and applause signs.

"Few areas of this world have an abundance of churches to attend, and for the masses television is the only way for them to hear. The people reached are not forgotten."

In the News: Blacks and members of other minority groups often need health care more than whites, but they generally receive less care, and of lower quality, than whites, a National Academy of Sciences report says.... Baylor University officials have begun a process to compensate for a $2 million decrease in the $17 million annual student-aid program caused by cutbacks in federal funding. There were 10,420 studens at Baylor last fall and it is the largest Southern Baptist university in the world an the largest private university in Texas.

Trinity has plans for gifted pupils

The establishment of a Gifted and Talented Program was announced at the regular monthly meeting of the Board of Trustees of Trinity School Feb. 11.

The criteria on which student participation in the program will be based include test scores and teacher, parent and self recommendations.

According to the Rev. P.D. Peterson, headmaster, the heart of the program lies within the framework of Trinity's basic classroom curriculum, enhanced by teacher-directed enrichment and six or more special programs per year, with the student expected to participate in at least one.

The Newspaper BIBLE

OH YES, ONE MORE THING...

And now there is one more thing to say before I end this letter. Stay away from those who cause divisions and are upsetting people's faith, teaching things about Christ that are contrary to what you have been taught. Such teachers are not working for our Lord Jesus, but only want to gain for themselves. They are good speakers, and simple-minded people are often fooled by them.

But everyone knows that you stand loyal and true. This makes me very happy. I want you always to remain very clear about what is right, and to stay innocent of any wrong.

The God of peace will soon crush Satan under your feet. The blessings of our Lord Jesus Christ be upon you.

Timothy, my fellow-worker, and Lucius and Jason and Sosipater, my relatives, send you their good wishes.

I, Tertius, the one who is writing this letter for Paul, send my greetings too, as a Christian brother.

Gaius says to say "hello" to you for him. I am his guest, and the church meets here in his home. Erastus, the city treasurer, sends you his greetings and so does Quartus, a Christian brother.

Good-bye. May the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all.

I commit you to God, who is able to make you strong and steady in the Lord just as the Gospel says, and just as I have told you. This is God's plan of salvation for you Gentiles, kept secret from the beginning of time. But now as the prophets foretold and as God commands, this message is being preached everywhere, so that people all around the world will have faith in Christ and obey Him. To God, who alone is wise, be the glory forever through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.
Sincerely, Paul

Combination of drugs helps in bone marrow transplants

BOSTON (AP) — A new combination of drugs is far more effective than the standard treatment in preventing a sometimes fatal complication of bone marrow transplants, a study says.

The complication — graft-versus-host disease — occurs when the transferred bone marrow attacks the cells of the weakened recipient's body. It can damage the skin, intestines, liver, heart and other organs.

Doctors experimenting on 67 patients at the University of Minnesota found the new combination of drugs cuts the incidence of this disease in half.

They recommended that the mixture be used in all patients receiving marrow transplants, and they said their research may make it possible for more people to get marrow transplants for leukemia and other diseases.

The study, directed by Dr. Norma K.C. Ramsay, was published in Thursday's issue of the New England Journal of Medicine.

Bone marrow transplants have become life-saving treatment for more than 20 previously fatal disorders ranging from genetically caused immunity deficiencies to cancer. However, graft-versus-host disease has been a major drawback of the therapy.

Patients undergoing marrow transplants generally receive doses of a drug called methotrexate to try to prevent graft-versus-host disease. In the latest study, doctors gave patients a combination of methotrexate, antihymocyte globulin and prednisone.

Of the 35 who got methotrexate alone, 48 percent developed graft-versus-host disease. But the disease developed in only 21 percent of the 32 people who took the three-drug combination.

To prevent a variety of adverse side effects, doctors usually perform marrow transplants only when the bone marrow can be taken from the patient's brothers or sisters. About 40 percent of those who might benefit from the treatment are able to get marrow this way.

With the ability to prevent graft-versus-host disease, the researchers said it may be possible to perform transplants when the marrow is provided by less closely related donors.

The doctors also found that people are far more susceptible to graft-versus-host disease as they get older. None of the patients who were under 12 got the disorder, compared with 64 percent of those who were over 19.

The survival rate after three years was only slightly better in those who got the three drugs and was about 50 percent in both groups.

"The lack of a more pronounced difference in survival was probably the result of the low overall incidence of graft-versus-host disease and the frequency of other causes of death in these patients," the researchers wrote.

Chlamydia leads venereal diseases

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've got a beer bet on this, so your answer is important. Which is the most common venereal disease in the United States, gonorrhea or syphilis? — Hank, Springfield, Mass.

Dear Hank: You'll have to buy your own beer, but at least you won't have to pay off, because neither is correct. The most widespread venereal disease in the United States today is chlamydia, with more than three million cases reported each year.

One of the problems with chlamydia is that there often are no symptoms, and many people have the disease without even suspecting it. However, it is a serious disease that can lead to serious complications in both men and women, occasionally causing sterility. If a woman does give birth and does not suspect she has chlamydia, then the newborn infant is placed at risk.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My daughter has had irregular periods since she started menstruating a few months ago. The doctor says it's normal and I shouldn't worry, but it's my daughter, not his. Do you think I should see another doctor? — Mrs. L.S., Providence, R.I.

Dear Mrs. S.: Whether you should see another doctor is a decision you will have to make, but I can tell you that irregular menstrual periods in a girl who has been menstruating only a few months are not unusual. Dr. Richard E. Smith, director of the adolescent gynecologic and obstetric clinic at the Henry Ford Hospital in Detroit, points out that many adolescents take 16 months to complete 10 cycles.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I often read about how the pill can cause heart attacks in women over 35 years of age. How serious a problem is this? — Viola, Los Angeles

Dear Viola: Dr. Morris Notelovitz, of the University of Florida Center for Climacteric Studies in Gainesville, makes an interesting point that bears on your question. He notes that the death rate from cardiovascular disease in women over 35 years of age who use oral contraceptives but do not smoke is lower than the mortality among women over 35 years old from pregnancy-related cardiovascular disease. Therefore, it might be safer for a woman over 35 years of age to stop smoking, rather than to stop taking oral contraceptives

Dear Dr. Solomon: I sometimes read about advances in the treatment of cancer. But what about cancer of the ovaries? It seems to me I still hear a lot about people dying from it. — Hannah, Reading, Pa.

Dear Hannah: Unfortunately, the prognosis for ovarian cancer is still poor and, to make things worse, its incidence is increasing. The best approach to ovarian cancer is early identification and treatment, and this means regular contacts with a physician.

However, the real advances that have been made in the treatment of other forms of cancer suggest that the time will come when ovarian cancer, too, will be a more treatable disease.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.)

Federal court finds company in violation of TRIS order

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — A federal appeals court ordered a North Carolina company held in contempt Wednesday for violating a court order prohibiting the export of childrens' sleepwear containing the hazardous substance TRIS.

The contempt finding was aimed at Troxler Hosiery Co. of Greensboro, N.C., which put on sale in January 1978 thousands of children's garments that had been treated with the fire retardant, which causes cancer in animals.

A decision on an appropriate penalty was deferred.

The court gave the Justice Department 30 days in which to make a recommendation and said Troxler would have an additional 15 days in which to respond.

The firm had no immediate comment on the order.

The federal Consumer Products Safety Commission had previously labeled TRIS a hazardous substance because of laboratory tests showing it caused cancer in animals.

A few days after the Troxler sale began, the commission obtained a seizure warrant and the clothing was placed under seal at the Troxler store.

A federal judge, however, held that the seizure was improper.

On Feb. 2, 1978, Judge Harrison Winter of the 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals stayed the lower court decision and said the clothing could not by sold by Troxler until the appeal had been heard.

Princess Nadine de Lichtenstein organizes some of Europe's most prestigious bridge tournaments. One tends to forget that, as Mme. Nadine Alexander, she was a pillar of women's teams in France. At a recent tournament in Tunis, she showed that she had lost little of her skill.

The popular contract was six spades, which was usually defeated when declarer was unable to handle the bad trump break. The Princess and her partner reached six no trump after a Stayman inquiry and a quantitative raise in no trump.

West led a heart, won in dummy. Declarer realized that, before tackling spades, she needed to know how many tricks the club suit would yield, so at trick two she led a club to the queen. When that held, she assumed that she had three club tricks and, therefore, would need only four tricks from the spade suit to bring her total to twelve. At trick three, therefore, she continued with the king of spades, noting the fall of the ten at her right.

Now was the time for a safety play. Declarer led the jack of spades and, when West covered with the queen, he was allowed to win the trick. Declarer was now assured of four spade tricks and, with careful timing, she was able to unblock the nine of spades and cross to dummy's high heart to cash the spades and finesse again in clubs to make her slam.

It is easy to go wrong in the play of the hand. To illustrate: some declarers won the first trick in dummy and immediately led a spade to the jack. They could now make four spade tricks, but because of the 4-1 break in that suit there was only one entry to the table, so the club finesse could not be taken twice. Therefore, those declarers ended up with only eleven tricks. Or, if declarer wins the second spade, she can set up but can't enjoy a fourth spade trick.

Ella Fitzgerald finds expression in song

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Ella Fitzgerald said she couldn't express in words how she felt after accepting Harvard's Hasty Pudding Theatricals' Woman-of-the-Year award, so the jazz great used a method that's more her style.

"I got a crush on you," Miss Fitzgerald sang from the stage Wednesday. "I've got a crush on you my sweethearts. Yes, I've got a crush on you ... all of you."

Hasty Pudding, which bills itself as the oldest dramatic organization in the United States, gave Miss Fitzgerald a parade through Harvard Square. A pudding pot — its emblem — and a dozen roses were presented to her by Jim Goldstein, a senior, who is vice president of the cast.

She also received a huge "green and yellow" basket — symbolizing lyrics from her first gold record, "A-Tisket, A-Tasket," which she recorded in 1938.

"This year...we're giving it to someone who's of every year," Goldstein said. "Ella Fitzgerald is timeless."

Miss Fitzgerald watched a few scenes from Hasty Pudding's 134th annual, original musical comedy, "Sealed With A Quiche." The show is written, produced and performed by Harvard undergraduates, and all roles are played by men.

The show opens officially on Feb. 24, and actor James Cagney will be honored as "man of the year" on opening night.

Miss Fitzgerald's jazz career covers more than 40 years and includes more than 150 albums, which have sold more than 40 million copies.

By MAUREEN SANTINI
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nancy Reagan, determined to forge a new public image in her husband's second year in the White House, is moving to turn attention away from her glittering lifestyle to her concern with more substantive issues.

Mrs. Reagan's public image during her first year in the nation's capital has centered almost exclusively on her White House redecoration project, donated china and free clothes.

Her decision this week to stop accepting free clothes from top designers and her trip to Florida and Texas to highlight drug abuse perhaps symbolize an emerging new image.

Together, these actions seemed to display a simultaneous desire to end controversy about so-called White House extravagance and point up Mrs. Reagan's interest in more substantive matters.

White House aides believe the president's wife has been misunderstood, and she herself made oblique references to such feelings during her two-day excursion earlier this week.

To reporters aboard her government jet, the first lady volunteered that "last year was a lost year," adding, "It was not exactly the happiest year of my life."

At a luncheon afterward with the Texans' War on Drug Committee in Dallas, the first lay brought it up again, saying, "Last year it was difficult to do anything, but this year I can start to move on."

Both statements, made in the context of her efforts to combat drug addiction, seemed almost like apologies.

She said she was referring to the March 30 attempt on her husband's life and later reports of Libyan "hit squads" that caused an increase in the security around President Reagan and his wife.

She also could have been thinking of the extensive publicity about her spending habits, including the donation of expensive china and the use of haute couture originals free of charge.

The attention to that side of Mrs. Reagan's life became so noticeable that administration officials worried privately that it would contribute to a perception of Reagan as a president who catered to the rich.

One official has acknowledged that the White House is trying to de-emphasize "glittering parties and that sort of thing" in an attempt to defuse what has become a politically sensitive issue.

Mrs. Reagan spent her first year boning up on drug abuse, meeting with experts in the field, familiarizing herself with the issues and even visiting a few drug treatment programs. But most of that was done in private, without publicity, so she had no "substantive" accomplishments to compete with the attention paid to her lifestyle.

Sheila Tate, the first lady's press secretary, said Wednesday that if there is any perception that Mrs. Reagan has changed her focus, it is "only because (reporters) are finally involved in the public part of it." She said Mrs. Reagan's trip was planned months ago.

Her two-day excursion to focus attention on drug abuse marked the first time she had traveled solo in behalf of a "serious" issue, aside from several brief one-stop appearances.

As she visited four different drug-related programs, the issues of her lifestyle that have dogged her in the last year were still present. But she and her staff did their best to keep the attention squarely on drug abuse.

For instance, four local reporters were granted individual interviews with the express stipulation that their questions be limited to drug abuse.

Also, during the one time she ventured to the back of her plane to talk to reporters, she was asked whether she feels she has been misunderstood and has received a "bum rap" from the press, as her husband often maintains.

Majors will let ex-wife keep house

LOS ANGELES (AP) — After a four-day court fight between actor Lee Majors and actress Farrah Fawcett over who should get the $2.5 million house they shared during their marriage, the couple resolved the dispute on their own, the presiding judge says.

With some loving words, Majors said he told his ex-wife she may remain in the Hollywood Hills mansion she has been living in since they separated.

The judge who presided over the court hearings said he was delighted the couple had buried the hatchet.

"I figured that if I gave them enough time, these two nice people would settle it themselves," Superior Court Judge Harry Shafer said Wednesday. "That was my strategy and it worked."

Shafer, who was contacted by Majors about the settlement, said Miss Fawcett would be allowed to buy out her ex-husband's share.

"She will still have to pay him for her share of the house. But he's going to let her stay there," Shafer said.

The judge immediately canceled his plan to visit the home himself in an effort to decide who should get it.

After a four-day hearing, Shafer granted Majors and Miss Fawcett a divorce Tuesday on grounds of irreconcilable differences and ruled the house was community property. But he said he couldn't decide who should live in it.

That night, Majors and Miss Fawcett went to dinner to discuss the situation.

"She deserves it," Majors said. "She's a nice lady, and I still love her very much."

Machines do the heavy lifting, but it takes human muscle to guide a length of drill pipe precisely into place during exploratory drilling in the Gulf of Mexico for Tenneco Oil Company. The worker is safely tethered, allowing him to lean forward from his platform high in the derrick.

Slumping oil prices dampening drilling

By The Los Angeles Times

As the oil industry completes its tallies of figures showing that last year's search for new oil and gas supplies was the most vigorous ever, a number of signs indicate that the pace may be slowing significantly.

When President Reagan lifted controls on U.S. oil prices in January 1981, domestic oil producers finally received a long-sought opportunity to share fully in the bonanza that resulted from the dramatic rise in world oil prices during the 1970s.

Decontrol worked just the way the industry and the Reagan administration had argued that it would: Producers took up the search for new U.S. oil and gas supplies with the fervor of treasure hunters.

Petroleum Information Corp., a Denver-based firm that tracks drilling activity, reported that a record 78,884 wells were completed in the United States in 1981. The figure was almost 26 percent higher than 1980 totals, which themselves had reached a level unmatched since the mid-1950s.

And while independent and major oil companies led the boom, private investors were also eager to cash in on it. They poured an estimated $6 billion into public and private drilling partnerships, a figure that industry experts say was 60 percent higher than 1980 totals.

In all, drilling-fund investors are believed to have provided as much as one-third of all the money spent last year on oil exploration in the United States.

But lower demand for oil, combined with a worldwide oversupply, appears to have ended the dramatic growth in oil prices — and profits. Last year, industry analysts say, oil company profits generally were no higher than in 1980. Adjusted for inflation, oil prices are actually declining.

The malaise also is reflected in the lower stock prices of oil companies and the service firms that actually perform drilling.

Thus, with a dimmer profit outlook, some oil companies are taking a closer look at how much they are willing to spend on the search for new oil and gas supplies. In some cases, major firms are planning to cut back their exploration budgets from last year's heady levels.

Charles C. Cahn, an oil industry analyst for Sanford C. Bernstein and Co. in New York, said many companies have been busy during the last two months revising their spending estimates for the year.

Where the typical firm originally planned to increase its exploration budget by about 15 percent this year, he said, it has pared that forecast to 8 percent or less.

Such a rate would not keep up with inflation in the cost of exploration, which has outpaced the consumer price index in recent years. Although the cost of drilling is expected to rise more slowly than in previous years, Hughes Tool Co. said it probably will increase by about 15 percent in 1982.

Like others who follow the industry, Cahn attributes the slackening spending to lower profits. "Exploration spending — rightly or wrongly — is generally a function of cash flow," Cahn said.

Similarly, those who track the growth of oil- and gas-drilling partnerships say investor ardor for them has cooled.

Charles Faber, executive vice president of Investment Search Inc., an Annapolis, Md.-based firm that studies drilling programs, said early indications are that investment in the funds during the first quarter will be "down substantially from 1981."

Moreover, other signs also indicate that the industry is growing less zealous in the search for oil. Drilling rigs, which were in short supply last year, are reported to be readily available, and the price of rigs is falling.

The Tulsa-based Society of Exploration Geophysicists' closely watched index of seismic activity — the preliminary determination of which drilling sites are most promising — showed its third straight monthly decline in December. The three-month slackening followed 30 consecutive monthly increases and the December figure marked the largest decrease since the society began its survey in May 1974.

Industry sources, however, bristle at any suggestion that such a leveling is indicative of shortsightedness, and deny any hint that they may have become complacent about trying to cut the nation's dependence upon foreign oil suppliers.

Lawrence W. Funkhouser, exploration and production vice president for Standard Oil Co. of California, notes that although his company does not plan to spend any more on exploration than it did last year, those levels are at record highs.

"It's not like we're stopping (the search for new oil supplies)," Funkhouser said. "It's just that we're stopping our rate of growth."

Atlantic Richfield Co. Senior Vice President H.C. Jamison notes that although that company's planned 18 percent exploration spending increase is much lower than the 48 percent rise in 1981, "We're still on a growth program."

George W. Lewis, corporate capital budget manager for Phillips Petroleum Co., said his firm's decision to lower its exploration budget by about 30 percent came after an "anomalous year last year."

Phillips spent $600 million in 1981 on its participation in one record-setting lease sale alone, he said.

"That one sale alone took an abnormally high amount of money," making last year's figures not quite comparable with this year's, Lewis said.

Tom Dougherty, vice president of Petroleum Information, is sticking to his prediction that the number of wells drilled in the United States will rise by 10 percent this year.

"I think the momentum is still there," he contends.

Dougherty and others say that the main reason for the slump in seismic activity and in demand for drilling rigs may be seasonal. This winter is colder than the two previous ones, making the search for oil more difficult, they say.

But Cal Standard's Funkhouser says there has developed a "general feeling in the industry that we can't keep up the spending rate of the last two or three years."

China calls for offshore drilling bid

By The Los Angeles Times

PEKING — China has called for the first bid to explore and develop a major portion of its potentially rich offshore oil resources.

The newly established China National Offshore Oil Corporation announced it was inviting 46 companies — 20 of them American — to bid for exploration and development rights in blocs totaling nearly 60,000 square miles, including some areas considered to be among the most promising in China. Some experts predict the Chinese reserves could rival those of Saudi Arabia.

The oil companies, which have all participated in the preliminary surveys over the past three years, have until the end of March to respond to the Chinese invitation to bid, a process that will then require several months as the firms study the proposed terms for exploration, development and eventual exploitation of the offshore oilfields and Chinese officials then assess the competing bids.

China's timetable calls for the first contracts to be signed early next year, industry sources believe, with further seismic studies to take six months and initial drilling another year and a half. This could lead to commercial production in 1985 with full-scale development expected about 1989, according to industry sources.

The first blocs put up for bidding — in the Yellow Sea northeast of Shanghai, the Pearl River Basin south of Canton and the Tonkin Gulf south of the Chinese coast and around Hainan Island — constitute about a quarter of the total offshore area where China and the foreign oil companies have found oil structures in sedimentary basins. Of these, the Pearl River Basin is believed to be the richest, say Chinese geologists.

The U.S. Department of Energy has estimated the total Chinese offshore reserves at roughly 40 billion barrels of oil, and some American oilmen believe this will prove conservative as exploratory wells are drilled. "There is certainly as much here as on Alaska's North Slope, and there may be as much as in the North Sea," said one oilman whose firm will be bidding. "The headier predictions put China's total reserves, onshore and offshore, at equal to Saudi Arabia's."

This accounts for the enthusiasm that has been building up among international oil companies over the past three or four years and the anxiety as China has hesitated for months and months over how to proceed. But Tuesday's announcement signaled China's readiness to proceed more rapidly. The China National Offshore Oil Corporation was formally established Monday to oversee the development.

The central questions are what portion of the oil the firms will be able to retain once production begins, whether China expects a "bidding bonus" for the right to explore and what requirements a company must meet.

The Offshnore Oil Corporation indicated in its announcement that the foreign oil companies would be encouraged to form partnerships rather than bid individually, though that is permitted, and that other steps would be taken to simplify the negotiations.

Wildcats staked in Garza, Reeves

Two wildcats have been staked in Garza and Reeves counties.

GARZA COUNTY

REEVES COUNTY

The No. 1 J.R.F Woods et al will be drilled to 16,000 feet by the Gulf Oil Corp., Monahans, 24 miles southeast of Pecos.

Oil, gas drilling plan bogged down

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Interior Department's program to open up federal land for increased oil and gas drilling is bogged down in management problems, the General Accounting Office says.

The GAO, an nvestigative arm of Congress, said the Reagan administration "has not progressed as quickly as had been anticipated" in selling off oil and gas drilling rights on public lands.

The agency also said he minera leasing system has so many problems there is no guarantee it will be able to accelerate leasing in the future.

"It is doubtful whether Interior can signficantly increase the amount of leasing in the near future because of continuing serious problems with the present onshore oil and gas leasing system," the GAO said.

"The large backlog of pending lease applications and poorly maintined land status records make it difficult ... to process leases for lands already in the system, let alone handle additional leases for any newly opened lands."

The agency said its study was too cursory to make any major recommendations to the department.

However, it did say that "management and coordination must be improved if the goal of accelerated leasing is to be realized. ... This poses budget implications at a time when Interior is proposing no increases in staffing for this program."

The GAO report was released Wednesday by Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., chairman of the House Energy and Commerce Committee, who used the occasion to take a dig at Interior Secretary James G. Watt. Watt has made accelerated mineral leasing a major policy of the department.

Problems reported on Ocean Ranger

OTTAWA (AP) — A man who said he commanded the Ocean Ranger until nearly a month before it sank in a North Atlantic gale claimsa U.S. Cast Guard inspector found 200 design, maintenance and structural problems on the oil rig months ago but nothing was done.

In an interview broadcast Wednesday by the Canadian Broadcasting Corp., Capt. Carl Nehring said the problems included insufficient maintenance of remote control valves on 32 tanks of liquid that controlled the stability of the rig.

"Any one of those valves could have gonebad because there's not enough maintenance on them ... and a failure of one valve could have resulted in that overturning," Nehring said in a telephone interview from San Jose, Costa Rica.

Nehring, who said he gave up command of the Ocean Ranger in January, claimed a Coast Guard inspector, who he did not name, found the deficiencies during a month-long stay on the rig. He said the official returned to the United States and wrote an article for the Coast Guard magazine about how well-organized and well-maintained the Océan Ranger was.

Nehring indicated in the CBC interview that he thought the inspector's findings may have been covered up.

"The oil companies are so overpowerful that they can ride the United States Coast Guard. That's my opinion," Nehring said.

Lt. Cmdr. Ronald Edmiston, chief of the Coast Guard Marine Safety Office at Providence, R.I., said he had "n word of any officer that's been aboard the Ocean Ranger other than people from my office in April of 1980," but he admitted guardsmen from another base may have visited the rig.

The Associated Press was unable to reach Nehring in Costa Rica nor was it able to get comment from Mobil of Canada.

Keith Nicol, the U.S. Bureau of Shipping's senior surveyor in Halifax, Nova Scotia, said the Ocean Ranger passed a full inspection last June and the two other Mobil rigs operating in the Hibernia field were inspected last fall.

The Bureau of Shipping is an international agency charged with certifying the seaworthiness of rigs registered in the United States.

The supply ship Balder Cabot was to set sail today from St. John's, Newfoundlnd, for the Hibernia field carrying two diving bells to search for the sunken rig and clues to the cause of the disaster.

The same storm that sent the Ocean Ranger to the bottom on Monday sank a Soviet freighter Tuesday, causing a total of at least 116 fatalities.

Meawhile, the Canadian government ordered two North Atlantic oil rigs towed to shore for inspection.

Energy Minister Marc Lalonde said the Zapata Ugland and Sedco-706 would be towed to shore from the Hibernia field once a fierce storm recedes All three rigs are operated by Mobil Oil of Canada.

Neither of the two remaining rigs reported any difficulty in the storm. But Mobil officials said non-essential personnel aboard them were evacuated Wednesday night. They did not say how many members of the 76-man crews were taken off the rigs.

Program gives El Salvador most

By BARRY SCHWEID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's new development plan for the Caribbean basin calls for giving El Salvador nearly a third of the $300 million in new aid envisioned for the region this year, congressional sources say.

The sources, who asked to remain anonymous, said Wednesday that between $100-$105 million has been earmarked for El Salvador, despite rising oppoition in Congress to U.S. involvement in the war-torn country.

Reagan's Caribbean program for 1982, to be announced next week, is designed to alleviate economic and social pressures in the area by promoting capitalism. It will emphasize investment incentives and elimination of all tariffs except those on textiles, U.S. officials said.

At the same time, the president plans to propose $300-$350 million in additional U.S. aid for the region this year, including the aid for El Salvador.

In addition, the congressional sources said the administration is expected to request $60.8 million in military aid and $164.9 million in economic aid for El Salvador in 1983. That could be stepped up through the year with supplemental requests, they said.

Determined to block the spread of Marxism, the administration has singled out El Salvador for special support. Some 50 American advisers have been sent there to help train government troops trying to suppress leftist rebels.

Congressional and other critics are skeptical that the aid will offset the country's vast poverty and are concerned the United States could be drifting into another Vietnam.

Only two years ago, total aid to El Salvador was $11 million.

So far this year, Congress has approved $144.3 million in economic assistance. Military aid is pegged at $81.1 million, including $55 million in emergency equipment that did not require Congressional support.

Reagan is expected to unveil his Caribbean program, which has been under discussion within the administration for almost a year, at a meeting of the Organization of American States next week.

"The goal is a revival of private sector authority," an official, who asked not to be identified, said of the plan.

The elimination of most tariffs is designed to boost sales of Latin American products in this country. Some restrictions, particularly on agricultural items, would be retained.

Even so, stiff opposition is expected in Congress from members seeking to protect U.S. goods from competition.

According to the officials, Reagan also will propose treaties with countries in the region to protect American firms from expropriation and other local pressures.

Pell says aid should hinge on rights abuses

By W. DALE NELSOn
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Claiborne Pell, ranking Democrat on the Foreign Relations Committee, says the United States should cut off aid to El Salvador's regime unless it cracks down on human rights abuses.

But Pell, just back from a trip to El Salvador, said the United States should not "rock the boat" before the March 28 elections called by the centrist government of President Jose Napoleon Duarte.

If Duarte's government is victorious at the polls, Pell said, "any continued aid is contingent on real progress toward human rights, which there has not been so far, and movement toward general negotiations."

The United States also should insist that the Salvadoran regime agree to unconditional negotiations with left-wing guerrillas after the elections, the Rhode Island lawmaker said in an interview Wednesday.

"There must be general negotiations between all parties without preconditions right after the elections," he said. "If the extreme right wins, then I think we should just withdraw, knock off aid and get the dickens out because we know then the left will take over in a week, a month, a year or two years."

Duarte's Christian Democratic party and five rightist parties are fielding candidates in the balloting to choose a 60-seat constituent assembly. Leftist parties are boycotting the election.

Regardless of the outcome of the elections, Pell said, "I don't think Congress would permit it to become another Vietnam."

Meanwhile, congressional sources said Wednesday that the Reagan administration, which is determined to block a takeover by the leftist guerrillas, will seek to provide at least $326 million in economic and military aid to El Salvador over the next 18 months.

The sources, who asked not to be identified, said President Reagan would include $100 to $105 million for El Salvador in his development plan for the Caribbean basin, to be unveiled next week.

For 1983, the administration is expected to ask for $60.8 million in military aid and $164.9 million in economic aid, the sources said.

So far this year, Congress has approved $44.3 million in economic assistance and about $26 million in military aid for the war-torn nation, and Reagan announced earlier this month he was sending an additional $55 million in emrgency military aid to the civilian-military junta in El Salvador.

Pell and Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., a member of the Senate Appropriations Committee, spent two days in El Salvador during a week-long congressional recess ending Feb. 22.

Leahy expressed views similar to Pell's in an interview Tuesday, saying the American people would rebel against increased aid to the Salvadoran government if it does not curb human rights violations by its troops.

Anoher member of Congress just back from El Salvador, Rep. John Murtha, D-Pa., predicted Wednesday that leftist guerrillas will defeat government troops if a repressive regime wins the election.

In that vent, Murtha said, "The land reform program ends and human rights violations could continue without any attempt at disciplinary action. Then the country is going down the drain."

Pell said the guerrillas "are making more headway than they were," and added: "I think the cruel human rights practices of the National Guard have...turned the people against the regime even more."

He said he thought the ratio of violence against the civilian population in El Salvador was "about 70-30, 70 percent from the right and 30 percent from the left."

"At this point, Duarte is trying to keep control of the forces of the right and not succeeding," Pell said.

Church and human rights groups estimate 32,000 people have died in the past 2½ years of fighting in El Salvador, counting civilians killed by the guerrillas, by government soldiers or by rightists who support the troops.

In a related matter, family membes of three nuns and a lay worker killed 14 months ago in El Salvador charged Wednesday that the Reagan administration's handling of the investigation was "shameful."

The families, who met with State Department officials for four hours, said U.S. officials have not pressed for an expanded investigation in the case.

Families say U.S. aiding in cover-up

By LAWRENCE L. KNUTSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Members of the families of four Catholic women slain in El Salvador 14 months ago say they believe U.S. officials are going along with a "cover-up" shielding high-ranking Salvadorans from prosecution.

One described the Reagan administration's handling of the investigation into the deaths of the three nuns and a lay worker as "shameful." Another called the attitude of State Department officials "lethargic."

The family members emerged from what they said was a "combative" and "distressing" four-hour meeting with State Department officials Wednesday night, saying there are many "unanswered questions" about the case.

They said they are convinced that responsibility for the murders goes higher in the Salvadoran power structure than the five low-ranking former national guardsmen arrested so far.

Of those charged, the most senior man was an enlisted former sub-sergeant.

The State Department, the families said, has not pressed for an expanded investigation into the possibility that people higher up in the military structure may have been involved.

And they said they strongly suspect the five never would have been arrested had the Reagan administration not been confronted with the necessity of asking a reluctant Congress for further military and economic aid to help the embattled Central American nation's government in its struggle against leftist insurgents.

The family members, representatives of the Catholic Church and Rep. Mary Rose Oakar, D-Ohio, who is seeking a broader investigation, met with Thomas W. Enders, assistant secretary of state for Latin American affairs. They said it was their first briefing by a department official in 11 months.

Enders told them that authorities in El Salvador have a "tight case" against the five arrested men, but that it might take months for the Salvadoran judicial system to reach a conclusion, the group said.

Rebels, Bobcats start sudden death playoff as AHS waits

BIG SPRING — Midland Lee, San Angelo and Abilene High have all survived two halves of District 5-5A girls basketball action, but only one of those teams will be alive after the next two nightw of play here at Dorothy Garrett Coliseum as the loop goes into sudden death.

Lee and San Angelo tied for first half honors, both posting 6-1 marks. They will square off here at 7 p.m. today to break that tie. The winner will then go against second half winner Abilene High at 7 p.m. Friday here for the right to advance to the state playoffs. AHS won the second half with a perfect 7-0 mark after defeating Lee by two points last Monday in Abilene.

Lee carries the best overall record into the sudden death district playoff tournament today with a 21-10 record, but the Rebels have dropped both decisions to San Angelo this year and they will have to solve that jinx tonight against the 19-10 Bobcats, the team that represented the district in the playoffs last year after a playoff win over — guess who — Midland Lee.

"It will take a supreme effort to beat San Angelo, but I don't think we have to do that much different to beat San Angelo," Lee coach Shirley Stephenson said. "We really haven't played that bad against them. They beat us by one point the first time and their fast break beat us to death. We stopped the fast break in the second game, but Lurdes (Duran) was somewhat injured and that hurt us. I think we will be full strength for Thursday's game.

"San Angelo has good athletes and good coaching and it will take some extra effort to beat them, but we feel like we are a good team too and we are ready to give it our best shot."

Lee is the old playoff pro among District 5-5A teams and that could be to their advantage. The Rebs have won are tied for every district crown since the league began playing girls basketball five years ago. San Angelo got into the playoffs for the first time last year and the 18-9 Eagles of AHS are making their first bid for the post-season playoffs.

Still, the Eagles may have the best shot this year since they only have to win one game to gain the state berth from 5-5A. San Angelo or Lee would have to win two games.

San Angelo took a 69-68 win over Lee in their first meeting as Lisa Champlin led the way with 26 points. Jeanne Bryant added 17. Champlin and Bryant were held to 10 each by Lee in the second meeting (a 67-60 Bobcat win), but Elese Ornelas came through with 17 points in a game played in San Angelo.

Lee's Yshun King, averaging 13.3 points per game in 5-5A play, has done well against San Angelo. King has games of 23 and 14 points against the Bobcats. Shun Harris, Lee's leading scorer in 5-5A with a 15.6 average, has games of 18 and 13 points.

But perhaps the key for the Rebels will be the play of Maudie Akins. Akins averaged 8.9 points a game in district action, but had games of 10 and 16 points against San Angelo.

Other top Rebels include Suzanne McGaha (7.0), Rozena McCabe (5.8), YoYo Goodley (4.9), Felicia Farias (3.1) and defensive standout Duran (1.6). This could be where the balance of victory is hung. This group must perform well.

It is easy to see that the Lee bench has been strong this year and there are others that Stephenson can call on — Ellen Matson (1.3), Francis Gavia (1.2), Pam Roberts (1.2), Susan Gillis (0.5), Laurel Belknap (0.2), Missy Dwyer (0.3) and Jackie Belden.

Heels get revenge against Deacons

By The Associated Press

The North Carolina Tar Heels can put a team to sleep with their slow-down, four-corner offense.

Wednesday night, they didn't stand around too often.

"We played an almost perfect game," said forward James Worthy after the nation's second-ranked college basketball team got off to a quick start and rolled past No. 14 Wake Forest, 69-51.

"We knew they would get out of the blocks very fast," said Wake Forest Coach Carl Tacy. "We wanted to do the same thing. Unfortunately it worked a lot better for them than our game plan did."

Worthy led the fast-paced North Carolina attack with 23 points while Sam Perkins put in 17 to help the Tar Heels avenge an earlier defeat by the Demon Deacons.

"They got us once and it gave us a little extra incentive," said Worthy.

The Tar Heels' nine-point halftime lead was threatened briefly when a Scott Davis jumpr pulled the Demon Deacons to within 42-34 at the 11:17 mark. But the Tar Heels then instituted a variation of their four-corner offense and broke away.

WORTHY SLAMMED home two successive baskets to expand the Tar Heel edge to 46-35. Matt Doherty then got behind the Deacon defense for another basket, while Jimmy Black also scored. Perkins added two layups and the Tar Heels found hemselves in command 54-41 with 3:34 to play.

Meanwhile, Boston College upset No. 13 Georgetown 80-71 and Oklahoma State surprised No. 18 Kansas State 72-62. In other games involving the nation's ranked teams, it was No. 3 DePaul 74, Detroit 70; No. 10 Kentucky 84, Florida 78 and No. 19 Alabama 99, Georgia 85.

The Top Twenty

Terry Cummings scored 22 points to lead DePaul over Detroit. The triumph improved DePaul's record to 24-1 and extended the Blue Demons' winning streak to 19 games.

Detroit's best shot at an upset came in the first half, when the Titans led by as many as five points, 29-24, with 5:31 remaining. But DePaul chipped away behind the steady front-line workof Cummings ad guard Skip Dillard, moved into a 38-35 lead at the half and never relinquished it.

"Thank goodness for the 44-28 halftime lead," said Kentucky Coach Joe B. Hall. "We needed it. The second half, we were a different balclub. That could be partly my fault. I kept them in the same aggressive frame of mind and they tired."

John Bagley's 26 points led a torrid Boston College attack as the Eagles held off a furious Georgetown rally and upset the Hoyas. The Eagles, shooting 71 per cent from the field for the game, took an 11-10 lead six minutes into the contest and never trailed again. Georgetown rallied behind freshman sensation Pat Ewing, who scored a career-high 23 points, but never could catch up with its Big East opponent.

Matt Clark scored all of his 17 points in the second half as Oklahoma State surprised Kansas State. The Cowboys hit 24 of 28 free throws and shot 61 percent from the field in the second half. The Cowboys also outrebounded Kansas State 20-5 after intermission.

"We started moving around more in the second half, which freed me for more shots," Clark said. "I guess overall, the second half was my best ball game."

Mike Davis scored 18 of his 20 points in the second half, including 11 during one three-minute stretch, as Alabama crushed Georgia. The Crimson Tide, snapping a three-game losing streak, took control with less than 12 minutes remaining when it got six points off a technical foul on the Georgia bench to stretch a 56-53 lead to 62-53 with 11:11 left in the game.

"We played well, better than we have in a while," said Alabama Coach Wimp Sanderson. "It's easy to lose three in a row in this league, though. When you play away from home and you don't play well, you'll lose."

Unranked Teams

Elswhere, John Williams scored 21 points as Tulane overwhelmed Southern Mississippi 74-62; an 18-point performance by Linton Townes paced James Madison over East Carolina 61-42; Mel Daniel and George Singleton each scored 19 points to lead Furman over Davidson 62-44; Jeff Pehl's 19 points paced Richmond over George Mason 68-59 and Old Dominion whipped William & Mary 66-45 as Mark West scored 14 points and blocked 10 shots.

Also, Michael Brooks hit two free throws with 14 seconds left to lift Tennessee past Mississippi State 50-48; John Pinone's 23 points led Villanova over Syracuse 81-69; Rory White scored 25 points and South Alabama dominated the backboards to beat North Carolina-Charlotte 73-68; Randy Coker scored 21 points and Monty Knight added 20 as Virginia Commonwealth defeated Jacksonville 81-73 and Odell Mosteller scored 22 points as Auburn whipped LSU 82-72.

SNYDER — The Snyder Coliseum will be the site of the Class A bi-district girls basketball playoff game between Greenwood and Robert Lee Tuesday at 7:30 p.m.

The Greenwood Rangerettes will carry a 27-3 record into the clash while Robert Lee is 25-3. Greenwood represents District 14-A while Robert Lee is from District 13-A.

The winner will advance to the Region I playoff tournament the following Friday and Saturday in Levelland at the Texan Dome on the campus of South Plains College.

Chaps can tuck away title against OC

ODESSA — If Midland College can win here tonight, next week they'll be playing for fun...and pride...and anticipation.

With a two-game lead in the Western Junior College Conference, the Chaparrals can tuck away their second straight title by beating Odessa College in the cozy OC gym, more easily said, perhaps, than done.

"OC GAVE us fits the last time we played and we can expect the same type game against them Thursday night," Coach Jerry Stone predicted. "The first time we met, we managed an 89-83 win and won it in the last two minutes.

"Odessa College has a lot of talent and they play a physical style of basketball. We'll have to have a lot of poise and concentration to beat them on thier home court."

A two-game lead with three to go wasn't exactly what the Chaps expected. It all came about Monday night. While MC was beating Frank Phillips, 90-81, at Borger, where Stone feared big trouble, Western Texas College, emerging as a force to be reckoned with in the Region V JC tournament next month, knocked off Amarillo College.

AS A RESULT, MC is 14-1 in WJCC while Amarillo is 11-4, and the Badgers, who once were unbeaten and ranked fifth in the nation, are fading in the stretch with four losses in their last five games.

Still, Stone doesn't feel home free by any means. Looking at the rest of the schedule, he'll take that clinching win any place he can get it. Monday WTC comes to Chaparral Center for MC's final home game. The Westerners forced MC to overtime before losing when they met at Snyder. Next Thursday, MC travels to Clarendon, a team MC lucked out on by two points in Midland.

NEVERTHELESS, Stone felt the Chaps came of age Monday in Borger, spotting FPC an early 12-point lead, but rallying to narrow it to 36-35 at half.

MC took charge in the second half as Spud Webb, apparently shaking the last lingering effects of his flu, scored 32 points while Puntus Wilson added another 28. Six-six Chester Smith scraped the boards for rebounds and scored 18 points. Also coming in for praise was Justin Morrett for his defensive play in the second half.

IF MC can beat OC, that will end the WJCC race and the Chaps can begin pointing toward the Region V tournament, which will be an opportunity to achieve something last year's 30-3 juggernaut failed to do...win the Regional V title, a prize that has eluded MC over the years although the Chaps have reached the finals three times.

MC awoke Tuesday to discover it had won two games Monday. MC raised its season's record to 24-4 after Midland College President Dr. Jess Parrish was notified that Independence, Kan., Community College used a player who had been declared ineligible by the National Junior College Athletic Association on Feb. 5. The player, Carl Brown, participated in a 100-89 Independence win over MC in the Barton County Classic in Nov. That win has now been declared a forfeit win for Midland.

FSU cheerleader involved in recruiting

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Florida State's troubled basketball program has come under new fire, this time from a former cheerleader who says she was sent on a recruiting trip paid for by the university.

The allegations came to light Wednesday when a taped interview with the woman was made public at a meeting of an ad hoc university committee investigating charges leveled by former guard James Bozeman, a senior who quit in December.

On a tape that contains numerous allegation, the young woman said she accompanied part-time assistant coach Frank Gilmore on a university-funded recruiting trip to Chicago in 1979.

Before the tape was played, Gilmore told the panel under questioning that he had seen the young woman at a high school basketball game in the Chicago area, but he did not know how she got there.

Gilmore, the brother of Chicago Bulls' star Artis Gilmore and FSU basketball player Oren Gilmore, said he had met the woman once at a basketball practice.

In response to questioning, Gilmore said he saw her only at the Bloom Township High School game and did not meet her later at a restaurant with the recruit, as she alleges.

The recruit and the woman met in late 1978 when he made a trip to campus as a prospective player and they continued to communicate by telephone, according to the tape.

Gilmore also said he had never paid for an airline ticket for the woman and had no knowledge of any women being used by the basketball program for recruiting purposes.

Coach Joe Wiliams said he called the recruit, who did not attend FSU, bout the incident and was told the young woman went to Chicago.

"She visited him up there but it was his understanding that she paid her way up," he said.

Williams, in his fourth season with the Seminoles, has deniedin previous appearancess before the panel that women were used to recruit players.

Among the charges made by the female student on tape was the allegation that Williams asked her to go to Chicago after she was invited by the recruit.

"And he (Wiliams) told me I wouldn't have to pay for anything. He would pay for it all," the tape said.

"Me and Frank Gilmore walked into the airport. He did the transaction with the lady at the desk," she said on the tape, whih was a remake of the original to protect the woman's identity.

"The whole thing was really innocent and naive because I didn't know I was being used for Coach Williams' recruiting purposes," said the woman, who added she felt she was being used after arriving in Chicago.

"We both (she and the recruit) felt we were being used by Coach Williams," the tape said. "I regret doing what I did because I was so naive at the time."

An air of secrecy surrounded the taped interview. Bob Leach, committee chairman and FSU vice president for student affairs, said the original tape wasn't made with the committee'sknowledge.

But he refused to say who conducted the interview with the woman or whether she had contacted the five committee members.

"I don't know why this is happening, why she's saying this," said Williams, who added "there's probably no coach in the country" who has been so closely scrutinized.

The said Williams told her she could use the athletic department's WATS line to call the prospective player in Chicago and encouraged her to try out for cheerleader when he was a member of the panel that picked the squad.

Williams denied the telephone charge, but said, "I think I did" encourage her to become a cheerleader.

"I was pleased she went out for the cheerleading squad. She's an attractive girl," said Williams, who added that an individual judge couldn't put someone on the squad.

The meeting was scheduled to be the last held by the fact-finding committee, which is expected to make a report to FSU President Bernard Sliger March 1.

Bozeman, who catapulted the school into the national spotlight after he held a New York press conference and appeared on several national television shows, has refused to make his case before the committee because he says it is biased.

Statless Tigers use mirrors in SEC run

There has to be some way to explain why Louisiana State University — on the bottom of just about every statistical category — is second in Southeastern Conference basketball standings, bidding for another league championship and contending for a fourth straight trip to the NCAA playoffs.

In the 10-team SEC, LSU is ninth in both field goal percentage and free throw percentage, seventh in both scoring and rebounding and 6th in scoring defense.

In rebounding margin, LSU is dead last — a distinct turnaround for a team that made it to the Final Four last season by banging the boards and muscling the middle.

"I can explain it — exuberance, spirit. Those little freshmen get after it," said Elmore 'Scoop' Hudgins, the SEC director of information. Hudgins was contacted by telephone at his Birmingham, Ala., office for updated statistics.

"If we had a conference statistic on recovering loose balls, they'd probably show up there," he said.

"Two things," he said. "No. 1 is chemistry. I think they all really enjoy playing together.

THE DEDICATION isn't lost on LSU's home fans, either. Following the loss to Georgia on Saturday, which tumbled LSU from sole possession of the conference lead, the fans gave the Tigers a standing ovation as they left the court.

Playing without 6-foot-7 sophomore Leonard Mitchell, the only returning big man from last year's Final Four team, LSU bowed 57-51. Leonard was sidelined by a sprained ankle, but Brown wouldn't accept that as an excuse.

"Even with a full team, we don't match up to Georgia man-to-man," he said. "We still could have won it, even without Leonard."

"I think the standing ovation at the end of the game was a tribute to the team. But I don't think we deserved it that day," he said.

Neither 6-8 freshman Steffond Johnson, 6-10 freshman Ray Borner nor 6-8 junior Tyrone Black has established himself as a replacement for all-America Durand Macklin or center Greg Cook, two of three starters who graduated.

So, Brown frequently surrounds Leonard and 6-5 outside sharpshooter Howard Carter, the other returning starter, with three guards — freshman Derrick Taylor, listed at 6-0, but closer to 5-10; sophomore Johnny Jones, 6-1, and 6-5 sophomore John Tudor, a defensive specialist.

Larry White, basketball information director, says he has a clue that could reveal how LSU performs the levitation trick. He keeps a record of turnovers and says that unofficial statistic could shed some light on it.

LSU has turned the ball over 292 times in 21 games, while forcing opponents to commit 426 turnovers, he said.

It's the kind of basketball LSU played when Brown first took over and started building.

Bad shoulder causes Cooney to delay

NEW YORK (AP) — "I'll get in the ring with anybody as long as I'm ready," Gerry Cooney once said.

But getting ready has been a problem for the injury-plagued heavyweight, whose March 15 title shot at Larry Holmes was officially postponed Wednesday.

Finally, the promoters and Cooney's co-managers publicly admitted Cooney cannot fight as scheduled, and the bout was rescheduled for June 11 at Caesars Palace in Las Vegas, Nev. The reason: an injured left shoulder.

But the handwriting was on the wall before the official announcement. In fact, it started coming apart last November, even before the fight's exact date had been announced.

ON NOV. 10, while preparing for a tuneup fight against Joe Bugner Dec. 5 at Las Vegas Cooney was sparring with Duane Bonds when he felt a sharp pain shot along his back above the rib cage. He started to throw a punch, and again the shooting pain. Co-manager Dennis Rappaport called the injury a pulled muscle in the mid-back.

"We have no plans to postpone the Holmes fight," said Mike Jones, Cooney's other co-manager. "True, Gerry hasn't had much time in the ring lately, but that's because of his punch. He trained for 10 rounds against (Ron) Lyle and (Ken) Norton. He'll be ready for 15 with Holmes.

The fight with Bugner, which would have been Cooney's first since he knocked out Norton in 54 seconds last May 11, could not be rescheduled because the contract for the Holmes match stated neither fighter could have a tuneup after Jan. 1

So, the Bugner fight was rescheduled as a five-round exhibition for the Westbury Music Fair on New York's Long Island.

It was not to be.

About mid-January, rumors started circulating that no all was well with the 25-year-old top-ranked heavyweight contender, who by then had resumed training in New York's Catskill mountains.

ON JAN. 19, Jones and Rappaport had hurt himself and that the exhibition was off.

But Jones said, 'I can say with assurance that the March 15 fight in Las Vegas is on."

Then at a news conference here Jan. 21, Dr. Edwin Campbell, a physician for the New York State Athletic Commission, called Cooney's injury "a sustaine tear, a partial rupture of some fibers of the (left) shoulder. The entire muscle is by no means damaged. It is a minor injury."

Again, Cooney was told to stop sparring for two or three weeks.

It turned out that the injury occurred while the 6-foot-5 Cooney was sparring with Walter Santemore Jan. 12.

"He tried to avoid a right and at the same time turned to hook, stretching the arm, and he was off balance," said Valle.

Valle said he immediately halted the sparring and Cooney told him to rub the shoulder, saying, "it mut be a crick and I want to keep going."

So, Valle allowed him to resume sparring, but "he was making faces and I stopped it."

COONEY HAD started sparring again last week, but Valle said Wednesday. "He couldn't hook. He didn't have any power in the punches."

But last Friday, Rappaport said the shoulder was improving daily, and that the fight against Holmes was still on.

Cooney returned home to Huntington, N.Y., on Valentine's Day.

Holmes, in Las Vegas, contended the Cooney camp was trying to con him, to confuse him, then Tuesday charged that Rappaport and Jones were just trying to get the fight pushed back to May or June.

"If Cooney is sick, my heart reached out for him," said Holmes, but then he chided Cooney as being "afraid of his own shadow."

"There is an injury," said Dr. John Bergfeld, an orthopedic surgeon at Cleveland, who with an associate Dr. Steve Ockner, and Minkoff examed Cooney Wednesday.

Bergfeld said the injury was a "partial tear (of muscle fibers) and weakness in the back part of the shoulder."

Cooney could not engage in sparring for a least two weeks, Bergfeld said.

"I am very hurt the fight is not going to take place in March," said Cooney, who could get $10 million for fighting Holmes.

"If all I was looking for the money, we would be here now," he said at a news conference, "and I'd be in there March 15."

Players, owners throwing punches

HOLLYWOOD, Fla. (AP) — Negotiators for both the National Football League players and owners say they are not coming any closer to accord on a new collective-bargaining agreement in their continuing negotiations.

The two sides spent much of the Wednesday session trading charges, and Ed Garvey, executive director of the National Football League Players Association, warned of a possible strike if management doesn't take the union's position seriously.

"We don't anticipate any progress until they realize the players are ready to strike," Garvey told a breakfast meeting of labor reporters in nearby Bal Harbour Wednesday, where AFL-CIO leaders are meeting. "If hitory is any teacher, we ought to be prepared."

But Jack Donlan, executive director of the NFL Management Association, said management couldn't respond to the union's demands because the demands are too vague. Negotiations continue today.

The current five-year agreement will expire July 15, two months before the 1982 season opens Sept. 12.

The talks got under way at the swank Diplomat Hotel here Tuesday, but were recessed until this morning after the two sides exchanged initial proposals. The discussions are aimed at averting the first NFL players strike since the ineffective 44-day preseason walkout of 1974.

Union representatives were incensed on the first day of bargaining because no owners or representatives of NFL Commissioner Pete Rozelle accompanie Donlan.

Union President Gene Upshaw and Garvey both said they felt the talks were more likely to progress if some owners were in attendance.

"A look at history shows that every time an agreement has been reached, it has been because certain owners have come forward to help bring about that solution ... owners who have the respect of their fellow owners," Garvey said.

Jimmy Cefalo, the Miami Dolphins' player representative, sat in on the first day of talks as an observer and came away with the feeling that a strike may be inevitable.

"I never knew how difficult a process this is going to be," said Cefalo. "There are so many differences, so many issues to be solved. Right now, things don't look to promising."

The union's initial proposal included most of the demands previously publiized, including a request for a greater share of the owners gross revenues for salaries. The 11-page document, however, but did not state a specific percentage the NFLPA intends to seek.

Previously, the union had said it would ask for 55 percent of the gross.

Management's initial proposal offered what Donlan called several "corrections and adjustments" to the current collective bargaining agreement that expires July 15.

Garvey countered, however, that the owners were trying to take away some of the advances the NFLPA has made over the last 14 years.

LA Times dismisses Bill Dwyre

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Sports writer Ted Green has been dismissed by the Los Angeles Times, the newspaper's Sports Editor Bill Dwyre confirmed Wednesday.

Dwyre said Green's dismissal was not directly related to questions raised by UCLA booster Sam Gilbert about Green's loan from a company owned in part by Jerry Buss, owner of the Los Angeles Lakers and Los Angeles Kings.

After Gilbert raised the issue, Dwyre said he informed Green verbally and in writing that the conditions of his employment at the newspaper would be that he would no longer be able to do television work, and would no longer be allowed to cover any Buss-related teams. Green served as color commentator for ON-TV cable telecasts of Laker games, among other things.

Green did not comply, working the telecast of last Friday night's Laker game and was terminated, Dwyre said.

Green was not immediately available for comment.

Gilbert, responding to a series of articles in the newspapers alleging that he violated NCAA rules in his dealings with Bruin basketball players, publicly asked the newspaper whether one of its sportswriters "covering a major team borrowed $50,000 from the owner of that team with which to acquire a home?".

Dwyre said Green confirmed that he had borrowed $15,000 as a third trust deed on his home in 1977 from Mariana-Buss Associates, a real estate investment firm. At that time, Buss did not own the Lakers or Kings, but did own the Los Angeles Strings of World Team Tennis. Green occasionally wrote articles about the Strings prior to his obtaining the loan.

Malone, Gervin hit scoring spree

By The Associated Press

At 7 feet tall, Paul Mokeski is slightly taller than Moses Malone. But every time he looks up, there's Malone, too.

Or so it seems.

Tuesday night, Mokeski belonged to the Detroit Pistons, who "held" Malone to 34 points in beating the Houston Rockets. Wednesday night, after being trade to the Cleveland Cavaliers, he ran into Malone again.

Malone is the hottest player in the National Basketball Association. This time, he poured in 44 points in leading the Rockets to a 110-102 triumph.

"It's funny, because last night we played Houston, too, and he had the same kind of game,' said Moeski, a backup center who actually held Malone scoreless in an eight-minute stretch of the second half. "The only thing you can do is try to block him out. The only guy I can think of that's playing better offense is maybe (George) Gervin. But Moses has all those rebounds, too."

Malone has averaged 39.1 points in Houston's last 10 games, but Wednesday night he took a back seat to San Antonio's Gervin, who scored a season-high 49 as the Spurs turned back the Pistons 126-112.

In addition to his 44 points, Malone grabbed 16 rebounds, while the Rockets used a 14-2 closing surge to defeat Cleveland. The victory was Houston's ninth in its last 10 games, while the Cavaliers lost for the sixth straight time.

Spurs 126, Pistons 112

The Spurs built a 26-point lead in the third period but the Pistons got 11 fourth-quarter points each from guard Vinnie Johnson and forward Kenny Carr to close within 110-105 with five minutes left before San Antonio pulled away again.

The Spurs' George Gervin, the leading scorer in the NBA, had his best night on the court this season with a 49-point effort.

"I wish I was as lucky as you guys," said Detroit guard Isiah Thomas, "because I would like to watch George Gervin play basketball every night."

Nets 115, Bulls 105

Ray Williams scored 32 points to lead New Jersey. The Bulls, who fired Coach Jerry Sloan earlier in the day, were handled by assistant Phil Johnson, although general manager Rod Thorn will take over for the rest of the season. The victory tied the Nets with the Washington Bullets for third place in the Atlantic Division.

Warriors 121, Celtics 105

World Free reached the 10,000-point mark in his NBA career and totaled 30 points in leading Golden State over Boston. Purvis Short, starting in place of the injured Bernard King, added 29 points and J.B. Carroll had 24. Cedric Maxwell and Robert Parish scored 19 apiece to lead the Celtics, who were plagued by 20 turnovers. In addition, All-Star forward Larry Bird scored only eight points in the Oakland Coliseum Arena, which has proven to be a trouble spot for him. In his only game in Oakland last season, Bird was scoreless for the only time in his career.

76ers 114, Mavericks 109

Julius Erving scored 26 points and triggered a third-period rally as the 76ers ran their winning streak to seven games. The teams were tied 65-65 in the third quarter when Philadelphia erupted for a 22-10 spurt, with Ervpng accounting for 14 points.

Bucks 104, Pacers 93

Brian Winters scored six points in a 17-0 fourth-quarter surge that propelled Milwaukee over Indiana. Winters had 13 of his game-high 24 points in the final period and Sidney Moncrief scored none of his 22 as Milwaukee logged its 10th consecutive victory, tying Philadelphia for the longest winning streak in the NBA this season.

Kings 110, Suns 107

Ernie Grunfeld scored 10 of his 18 points in the fourth quarter. Grunfeld came off the bench to score six points during a 10-0 surge that gave Kansas City a 99-89 lead with 5:42 left to play. Kyle Macy rallied Phoenix by scoring 12 of his 31 points in the last 5½ minutes.

Hawks 117, Jazz 109

Eddie Johnson scored 35 points to pace Atlanta. Johnson and Sam Pellom combined for 24 points in the first quarter, three more than the entire Utah team, as the Hawks grabbed a 39-21 lead.

Site of decimal points changes Reds

By JOE GERGEN
The Los Angeles Times
Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — In bright lights and bold letters, management greeted pilgrims to Riverfront Stadium on the occasion of the 1976 World Series with a simple declaration: "World Capital of Baseball." Five years later, when the fiasco of a split-season format prematurely darkened the message board, the organization presented itself with a huge pennant in honor of the best overall record in the major leagues. One thing the Cincinnati Reds have not lost is their humility.

That they are not the team they used to be is evident from a quick glance at the roster. Exactly three players remain from the only National League aggregation to win consecutive world championships since 1922. Included among the dear departed are three most valuable players, their foremost pitcher, their finest base stealer and their leading run producer. And yet the Reds don't even have the decency to appear broken up by developments.

Although free agency and the threat of free agency have cost them the services of some of baseball's stars, the Reds have compiled the National League's best winning percentage (.564) over five seasons. That's since the major talent began skipping town in pursuit of greater career opportunities and security for the families, otherwise spelled m-o-n-e-y. If you add that to the previous five years, of course, it's no contest.

TO WHICH many people, including not a few Cincinnatians, are saying: let's see them do it again. At the very least, it represents a challenge. Because the Reds spent the fall and winter of 1981-82 waving goodbye to their third baseman, Ray Knight, and donating their entire outfield to the "I Love New York" campaign. That's Ken Griffey and Dave Collins in Yankee pinstripes; George Foster is a Mets institution of a few days. The four differed with the team's front office not in the matter of contract numbers but in the placement of the decimal points.

This is the year Warren Beatty's "Reds" may be honored as the top motion picture. Should Dick Wagner's Reds emerge as the top team in baseball, it may well be the greater accomplishment. For Wagner, the club president, has been fighting the grim fight against the new order with one hand and beating free-spending franchises with the other.

The Reds' enthusiasm for the free-agent market is best illustrated by their lone acquisition, in 1980. It was Larry Biittner, a reserve outfielder-first baseman whose play once inspired a man to write that he came equipped with "two I's, two T's and no hands." That they signed anyone from the re-entry draft was something of a shock. For years, Cincinnati was conspicuous in its contempt of the proceedings.

Let others ignore the affair. The Reds made a show of their displeasure. Bob Howsam, who preceded Wagner, used a technicality to battle the forces of Bill Veeck through 30 some-odd rounds of the draft one year. Veeck, in his inimitable fashion, claimed everything but the furniture for the Chicago White Sox. Howsam rose each round to announce that the Reds pass. Having stopped at 12 or thereabouts, the other club officials stewed.

THERE WAS a streak of self-righteousness to Howsam that irked many who dealt with him. But he knew baseball. The Reds were built on a solid foundation, through the farm system. Only Joe Morgan, Cesar Geronimo and Foster of the main contributors to the world championships in 1975 and 1976 were not home grown, and Morgan and Geronimo were obtained in the same trade with the Houston Astros.

Wagner, who studied under Howsam, is a tough negotiator who has been adamant in keeping the Reds in financial line. Tony Perez and Don Gullett left under Howsam's regime, but Wagner had to take the brunt of the Pete Rose and Morgan defections. He has endured and so have the Reds.

He also has learned. Wagner traded Geronimo before he could become eligible for free agency. He has done the same this off-season in the cases of Griffey, who would have entered the re-entry draft last November, and Foster, who had one more year under contract. Knight, the man who replaced Rose at third, was used to acquire an outfielder, Cesar Cedeno. The Reds acquired two pitching prospects from the Yankees for Griffey and got the catcher they wanted, Alex Trevino, as well as pitchers Jim Kern and Greg Harris from the Mets in the Foster deal.

And Wagner did open the treasury door a crack for Dave Concepcion. All-star shortstops do not come cheap. Concepcion agreed to bleed Red red for another five years at a stipend of $4.5 million. Johnny Bench and Dan Driessen are the other old hands from the championship years. For how long, no one is sure. Bench, whose catching explits will gain him admission to the Hall of Fame, will play third base this season. That's one reason Concepcion was needed.

THE OUTFIELD probably will feature Cedeno, whose severe ankle injury in the 1980 playoffs necessitated a move to first base in Houston last season, Clint Hurdle (acquired from the Kansas City Royals after a disappointing year) and rookie Paul Householder. Driessen and Ron Oester will fill out the infield at first base and second base, respectively. It's something less than a Big Red Machine.

A high quality pitching staff, however, will keep the Reds in the race. Tom Seaver, Frank Pastore, Mario Soto, Mike LaCoss and Bruce Berenyi are the starters.

RIO RANCHO (AP) — Albuquerque's famous auto racing brothers, Al and Bobby Unser, have volunteered to teach Rio Rancho police officers driving skills, the police chief says.

"If we had to pay for the knowledge that Al and Bobby Unser can teach our officers, the cost to the city would be astronomical," Chief Dencil Haycox.

He said the Unsers have volunteered to teach Rio Rancho officers about safe driving at high speeds, evasive action, skid control and other maneuvers the officers will encounter in their work.

The Unsers will take part in the department's ongoing road safety program, and will give officers practical training as well as classroom instruction, Haycox said.

Haycox once was in charge of the police detachment at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway where each of the Unsers have won three Indianapolis 500 races.

"I met Al when I was in charge of policing the winner's circle during the 1978 running of the Indy 500," said Haycox, a former division commander with the Indiana State Police.

"When Al heard that I was in Rio Rancho, he and Bobby offered to give our officers the benefit of their knowledge and experience on a volunteer basis."

He explained how both professions demand split second reaction time, the need to keep their vehicles in top shape and under control during difficult situations and the ability to anticipate the actions of other drivers.

Baseball strike results are in: Owners lose again

By THOMAS BOSWELL
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Baseball's salary inflation spiral — which was the root cause of the strike and its real issue — has not been affected by that battle that cost the average franchise about $1 million and the average player nearly $60,000.

When the last contract is signed and the last decimal point computed, the mean major league salary for 1982 will be about $235,000 — an increase in one year of nearly $50,000 per player, according to the players union.

Marvin Miller, the union president, says the dramatic upward graph of player salaries since the free agent era began in 1976 "hasn't changed at all." This season's salary jump, Miller says, "will be an all-time high," and even the "rate of increase" (between 25-30 percent) will, apparently, be comparable to the last five seasons.

FEW, IF any, in management disagree with Miller's appraisal. Last week has been particularly discouraging for those among baseball's hierarchy who, in the wake of their get-tough, last-stand strike, dreamed of easier financial times. The signings of Gary Carter by Montreal, for approximately $15 million for eight years, and George Foster by the Mets, for $8.5 million for five years, are the latest examples that is not the case.

The ever-increasing salaries are "like lava coming down the mountain at us," says Cincinnati President Dick Wagner, whose Reds have lost Foster, Ken Griffey and Dave Collins from their payroll, but still find themselves in the game's upper echelon pay bracket. "It's the worst salary explosion we've had. At some point, things have to blow apart."

Montreal President John McHale, who recently signed a .251 hitter (catcher Carter) for almost $2 million a year, says, "It's very scary. We're all betting the game will keep drawing people and that we'll be a winner. A great separation is coming in baseball between the haves and the have nots. All of us are fighting to keep what we've got. We can't afford not to sign players like Carter 'cause we have to keep them to keep winning. It's a continual Catch 22."

Of this cycle of desperation spending, Oakland owner Roy Eisenhardt says, "We are watching the definition of inflationary psychology in action. We rush to buy players on the assumption that if you don't buy today, it'll cost even more tomorrow ... We are forced, out of a fear of failure, to do things that, in the long run, insure failure.

"I sense an instinct for constraint (among owners)," says Eisenhardt, who is co-chairman of baseball's restructuring committee, "but we seem incapable of executing it."

"I get depressed," says Jerry Reinsdorf, one of the new owners of the Chicago White Sox. "These 26 clubs talk about how they're in a partnership, but then they act like they're out to kill each other ... We're (all) waiting for pay TV to give us (back) a margin for error. Now, we have none. And that's no way to do business."

IN THIS dollar vortex, the rich and poor are intertwined like the drowning man who drags under the lifeguard trying to save him. As Baltimore General Manager Hank Peters says, "Because of salary arbitration, everybody is linked. The salary precendents established by the few can be devastating to many."

Smith says that if his team suddenly started winning, it might ruin the franchise, because, with salary arbitration, "our payroll could go up to $7 million in two years." Smith doubts his market could provide the "2.5 million customers it would (then) take to break even."

Smith said that his franchise must draw 1,750,000 to break even with a $3 million payroll and that "we probably won't draw more than 1 million" this season. The team never has drawn more than 1,650,000. "I'm not sure we could draw 2.5 million if we won the World Series," he said.

So, for the time being, losing cheaply may be the way to for teams like San Diego, Seattle and Minnesota to survive in the absence of revenue sharing, especially parceling of future cable television cash. When richer owners tell Smith that sharing with the baseball poor is "socialism," he says he replies, "Revenue sharing may be creeping socialism, but it's better than creeping bankruptcy."

"We didn't get anything out of the strike," conservative Buzzy Bavasi, president of the California Angels, said recently. "Our 'partial compensation' plan didn't do one thing."

BAVASI SAID some players are worth the big salaries. Eight days after signing Reggie Jackson (for $4 million for four years) and, Angel season ticket sales have gone from 4,800 to 12,000.

"We've got 3 million new dollars sitting in the bank drawing interest," Bavasi said. "Reggie paid for his whole contract in one week. But the price of mediocre ballplayers is killing us. A guy who's half as good as Reggie isn't worth half his salary. He doesn't get it back at the gate."

If the strike didn't solve the dollar drain, what will? Says Bavazi: "We've gotta do it ourselves."

Miller thinks that's already happened — illegally. It's the height of irony that, as contract figures spiral upward, Miller is screaming about the owners "colluding to hold down bidding on free agents."

Miller admits that "I don't have the smoking gun, but I have no doubt about the collusion ... This game has existed on the basis of collusive agreements for a century — from the draft to the reserve clause."

The pattern Miller sees, supported by circumstantial evidence, is simple. He believes that no team bidding for a free agent has offered a contract for more than three years. And, further, no team has offered significantly more money per year than the player's original team has offered. Exhibit A in supporting this case is the testimony of Ron Guidry's agent, John Schneider, who says that none of the 13 teams that bid for Guidry at the winter meetings offered more than a three-year contract or more than the approximate $1-million annual salary for which the Yankees eventually re-signed Guidry.

Miller believes that owners have ignored other collusive possiblities. He believes that clubs re-signing their "own" free agents are free, under this gentleman's agreement, to offer a contract of any length or any salary (like Guidry's four-year deal). Also, if the team losing the free agent acknowledges it has no interest in keeping him — as the Reds did in not even trying to resign Collins (who signed for five years with the Yankees) — then, once again, the bidding is open. Finally, a team re-signing its own player, or trading for a player before he comes up for free agency, can offer the moon — as in the cases of Carter, Foster and Philadelphia's Mike Schmidt ($7.5 million for five years).

Shriver survives jitters against unranked Garrison

HOUSTON (AP) — Top-seeded Pam Shriver, who should have been calm, was nervous, and unranked junior player Zina Garrison, who should have been nervous, was calm.

Although the emotional scale was reversed, the score came out according to the form chart Wednesday night. Shriver, the No. 6 ranked women's player in the world finally dispatched Garrison, the No. 1 ranked junior, 4-6, 6-1, 6-3 in a first round match of the $100,000 Avon Tennis Championships of Houston.

"For some reason, I was calm in the first set and didn't think I could lose," said Garrison, who had to fight her way through a rugged qualifying tournament just to earn a spot in the main draw.

"I got a lot of firstserves in the first set but not in the second. I got my serve back in the third set but not when I needed it."

Shriver, who assumed the No. 1 seeding when Tracy Austin withdrew, didn't get her game together until the second st when she reeled off five straight games.

"I went out and felt alot of pressure," Shriver said. "I didn't feel so well last week and she is the No. 1-ranked junior in the world and all of those juniors these days, gosh. She's not even on the computer (rankings) and all she has to do is go out and go for it."

Garrison went for it in the first set. She broke Shriver in the first game of the mach and zoomed to a 4-2 lead.

Shriver broke back in the eigth game to tie the match at 4-4 but Garrison broke back in the 10th and served for the first set.

Shriver took command in the second set with five consecutive games and jumped to a 4-2 advantage in the final set before Garrison made one final surge.

Garrison fought back from seven deuces and four break points to hold service in the seventh game but Shriver held service and broke Garrison in the ninth game to take the match.

In the only other singles match on the program, Sabina Simmonds of Italy defeated Yvonne Vermaak of South Africa, 7-6, 6-3.

An AP Sports Analysis
By WILLIAM R. BARNARD
AP Sports Writer

The three-point basket rule was instituted in the National Basketball Association before the 1979-80 season in the hope it would make the game more wide-open and exciting.

Crowds certainly seem to enjoy it when the shots go in, but the overall effect of the rule has been minimal because three-pointers are rarely used except in late-game desperation.

Only the Golden State Warriors have a player who is used primarily for his ability to hit the 22-23 footers, 6-foot-5 guard Joe Hassett, who calls himself "basketball's version of Manny Mota," one of baseball's top pinch-hitters.

Hassett has attempted 135 three-pointers this year, more than anyone else in the league and more than every other team in the NBA except San Antonio, Indiana and San Diego.

Hassett, who has hit 31 percent of his three-point attempts, is frustrated with his role. So is Denver's John Roche, who is leading the league in three-point accuracy, hitting 50 percent with nearly 100 fewer attempts than Hassett.

"Last year, I played about 20 minutes a game and just took the three-pointers during the course of the game," said Hassett. "This year I mainly have just played at the end of each half and shot from far away.

"I was still averaging about 16 or 17 minutes and 10 points in the first part of this season, but I dislocated my shoulder twice and missed nine games with a knee injury. Ever since, I have barely played except for a few minutes a game."

Roche, who played a total of just 12 minutes in 12 recent games, says leading the NBA in three-point accuracy means "absolutely nothing. I do know I lead the league; I read it in the press notes every night. There's nothing else they can say about me.

"It's not a high percentage shot, but if you make it a couple of times it swings the momentum," Hassett says. "At home the crowd goes bananas. On the road it puts a damper on the other team."

He said he knows his role to take the three-pointer, and Coach Al Attles has never told him not to take the long shot.

"I accept my role, but I'm frustrated that I don't play more," he said. "I didn't just take three-pointers last year."

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — General Manager Rod Thorn today becomes head coah of the Chicago Bulls, a team one player called "boring and sickening" under Coach Jerry Sloan, who was fired.

Thorn predicted he would keep the rest of the coaching staff intact and that he would remain at the helm through the end of the season. Phil Johnson, assistant coach under Sloan, subbed as head coach Wednesday night as the New Jersey Nets whipped the Bulls 115-105 in National Basketball Association action.

"I want to have a few practices before I jump out there and do it," said Thorn, who makes his debut Sunday against the Dallas Mavericks.

Sloan, who took charge of the team in 179 after 11 years as a player, was fired earlier Wednesday after losing 13 of 17 games. The dismissal came amid reports of widespread dissension among players.

"The way we were playing was boring and sickening," said forward Larry Kenon, referring to Sloan's style of coaching. "He wanted a programmed offense. I couldn't be programmed, so I couldn't play."

Reggie Theus said the coaching change "very well could" spark a turnaround for the haples Bulls. "Rod spoke of an upbeat attitude, a positive attitude. That, more than anything, is what we need now," he said.

"There was just no chemistry to the team, and part of that was my fault," said Thorn, who hired Sloan. "I have some trepidation about this, but I'm hoping it will work out because Jerry Sloan was my friend."

The Nets, led by Ray Williams with 32 points, stayed on top of the Bulls for nearly the entire game. The Bulls, whose leading scorer was David Greenwood with 22 points, came closest in the third quarter when a brief surge gave them a 75-73 lead.

New Jersey evened its record at 26-26 and is tied with the Washington Bullets for third place in the Atlantic Division. The Bulls dropped to 19-33.

"Maybe they'll play harder for Rod than Jerry," suggested Greenwood. "I was shocked when I heard he got fired, even though I had heard the rumors. He was good to me. Jerry and I always got along."

"You tend to take it as positive as possible, but it's difficult to feel that way when someone loses his job," said Theus. "You can't put all the blame on Jerry, by no means."

District cage champs now in tuneup process

Andrews, both Greenwood boys and girls, Denver City have clinched titles while Reagan County will advance into the playoffs, providing the Owls aren't grounded by Ozona or Junction.

The only question regarding Andrews is whether the Mustangs will remain No. 1 in the state. Snyder upset Andrews, 62-59, Tuesday night, but with a 14-1 4-4A record, the Mustangs had long since stowed away the title for safe keeping. The defeat, however, did leave Andrews with a 27-2 record.

Greenwood's girls raced to a 29-3 season and will play at tuneup game against Eula Friday in Roscoe. The Rangers will play Robert Lee next week in bi-district after going through district play 6-0.

Greenwood's boys are 25-2 and 9-0 heading into Friday's final game of the regular season against the Grandfalls Cowboys at Greenwood. The Rangers will play either Robert Lee or Sterling City, who seem headed for a playoff, in the Class A bi-district play.

Dodgers' Lasorda still in rare form

By WILL GRIMSLEY
AP Special Correspondent

Tom Lasorda, never at a loss for a quip, says that when the Dodgers' rookie pitching sensation from Mexico, Fernando Valenzuela, came into the office to renegotiate his contract for 1982, he said:

"I want Texas back."

The rotund Mexican and his agent are reported asking $1 million for the upcoming season. That's an increase of $960,000 over last year's paycheck.

It's not Lasorda's job to make his prize pupil fiscally happy. That's the problem of Los Angeles' Vice-President Al Campanis, with the buck — or bucks — stopping at the desk of Dodgers President Peter O'Malley.

A million bucks?

"WHAT WOULD you do if a guy who had played only a year came in asked you for $1 million?" Lasorda was asked Wednesday at New York's Tavern on the Green restaurant where he was playing mother hen to a lot of space-age Japanese baseball gadgets.

"I'd hand him a ball," Lasorda replied, "and tell him to go down to that $3 car wash on the corner. If he could throw the ball through the car wash and it came out dry, the million bucks are his."

Lasorda, who as manager of the world champion Dodgers is greatly in demand these days on the chicken-breast and cold peas circuit, was the featured guest at the third annual New York exhibition by the $500 million-a-year Mizuno Corp. of Osaka, Japan, which says it's the world's biggest sporting good manufacturer.

The ubiquitous Tom was photographed throwing baseballs at a bull-pen device with a picture screen designed to simulate real game conditions — providing 81 different versions of a batter's stance — plus a computer which measures the velocity of pitches, calls balls and strikes and keeps a count of the warmup pitches.

HE ALSO tried on helmets with built-in devices to receive microwave messages from the bench, a catcher's mitt with a transmitter which beams signals to the pitcher's glove and other gloves with see-through sun screens between thumb and first finger.

"I think I'll make a million-dollar comeback," said Lasorda, who was not exactly a Sandy Koufax or Don Drysdale but who became the ultimate Dodger, bleeding nothing but "Dodger blue."

Lasorda said he recently was guest of the Union Oil Company at a dinner in Los Angeles and sat next to an economist.

"We'll win the World Series again," Lasorda replied.

"Wait a minute," Tom's dinner companion cautioned, "did you know that in the last 70 years only two National League teams have repeated in the World Series? The Chicago Cubs in 1905-06 and the Cincinnati Reds in 1975-76.

"I told him what he could do with those odds," the Dodger skipper said. "Then I told him of an incident I had heard about. There was this guy who was squeamish about taking his first airplane trip.

"He called Jimmy the Greek in Las Vegas and asked Jimmy what the odds would be that a bomb could be on that particular plane. The Greek could see the man was serious so he said he would make a survey and call back.

"The Greek called the man back and said, 'The odds are 1 million to 1 against a bomb being on the plane.'

"The man seemed satisfied but after a while The Greek's phone rang again and it was the same guy. 'What would be the odds to two bombs on the plane?' he inquired. The Greek went to his odds board again and returned, "Thirty million to one against two bombs,' he said.

"The nervous passenger seemed placated. He went out and bought a single bomb and took the trip — don't ask me how he got the bomb through security.

"Later, someone asked the guy why he took a bomb on the flight. 'I was just lengthening the odds,' he said.

KENNY REDIN'S
Fin & Feather

I just got through talking to a pair of good friends who reside in Plainview in the summer months, or when the fish aren't biting, somewhere in Texas. Since I now reside in San Antonio, they gave me a call from Lake Falcon where they have been staying for about three weeks now. Their names are Reuben and Jimmie White. And this special husband and wife fishing team loves to fish...Mr. White more so than the Mrs.

Since listening to some of his wild fishing tales, I've convinced myself to go and fish a couple of days with the Whites. He told me that the black bass fishing was tremendous. He'd been fishing Falcon on and off for about three weeks (weather permitting) and had been posting some outstanding results. Just last Friday, he went out on the huge lake alone and caught a limit of black bass up to seven pounds...the smallest tipping the scales at three pounds and also commenced to snag 87 white or sand bass. And that's all in one day's fishing.

WHITE ALSO stated that he's been coming to Falcon for many winters and this is the best fishing he's experienced of any year he can remember. "White bass fishing has been outstanding," he said. "Everyone who is half-way trying to fish for the little scrappers is catching a boatload of fish."

According to his reports, most of the white bass have been taken in long winding creeks and coves around the lake. But he says it hasn't been uncommon to be boating to a favorite black bass hole and run into a feeding school of sandies. "When the weather permits we can go out just about anywhere and catch a mess of white bass," White said.

Although it's hard for anyone to pass up a nice catch of white bass, White is a largemouth fanatic. I believe he would rather catch a largemouth bass than dance with Bo Derek. And he's good at fishing — not dancing.

White's been fishing for years. At first, in his beginning fishing years, he fished Possum Kingdom to the point that most each and every bass in the resevoir recognized the sound of his outboard motor and memorized the colors of his favorite "Zara Spook." And he has taken plenty of braggin' size bass from Grand Old P.K., and will probably take some more.

ALTHOUGH P.K. is still his favorite lake, he has now decided that Lake Falcon, partially on the Mexico border near the Texas town of Zapata, has become a current favorite. Especially the past three weeks.

White said, "On the days the wind permits me to fish the huge lake, I can always catch a nice mess of blacks. And, you know what? It really doesn't matter where I'm fishing as long as I can see brush. Finding a good looking brushy area on Falcon isn't that difficult and I can always catch some nice bass from the mesquite flats. I've been using white and chartreuse spinner baits lately and have been posting good results. And, I've even been catching some nice bass on topwater lures on those warm and calm South Texas days."

Gathering from his reports, and reports from bass anglers from around the San Antonio area, Falcon is probably the hottest lake in Texas right now for catches of largemouth and white bass. There have also been some reliable reports that striper action is picking up, but the fish are running from about two to five pounds. Not many heavyweights have been reported so far this winter.

I'm going to visit White this week to get an idea of what's hapening in the way of fishing down Falcon way. If you see a good report in the next Fin and Feather column, you'll know the fishing was outstanding, but if you fail to read about Falcon and personal experiences, then you know I bombed out. Lots of times that happens to me. The fish can be jumping into the boat or biting so fiercely that you have to turn your back to bait your hook, but when I go, the fish shut off...rapidly. We'll let you know.

SINCE WE are on the subject of bass fishing, I have two recent reports from Midland, Plainview and Amarillo folks who recently returned from Mexico's Lake Novillo and Dominguez. And by the sound of the reports, fishing was tremendous at both foreigh reservoirs.

Seven people from the Midland and Plainview area recently visited Novillo. This out-of-the-way Mexican reservoir produced 283 bass for those seven in three days of casting. The largest banged out at seven pounds and the average size for most keepers was around 2½ pounds. The West Texans reported they took most of the bass on grape and black plastic worms and jig an eels.

The Lake Dominguez report was even better. Ten High Plainsmen visited this western Mexico lake and caught over 400 bass with an 8½ pouner top fish. And, once again, the majority of the fish were taken on worms and jigs.

Both of these lakes in Mexico are outstanding lakes, as well as Lake Guerrero, which is closer to home. So, if you are planning a fishing trip, especially a foreign visit, hit either Dominguez, Novillo or Guerrero. These three lakes are probably the best in the workd and from now until mid April, these reservoirs will produce tons of largemouth bass.

If it's Texas you want to fish, you can't miss on Falcon at the current time. While Toledo Bend is pretty hot on bass catches now, Falcon is even hotter and channes of hitting decent fishing weather are much better.

Good fishing and lets hear your reports. I can now be reached at P.O. Box 10539, San Antonio, Texas, 78210, or call me at 512-655-6601.

Court orders former Cowboy to pay

HOUSTON (AP) — Former National Football League star Billy Howton and an associate serving five-year prison terms have been ordered to pay $1 million to an Ohio savings and loan institution victimized by an alleged securities fraud scheme.

U.S. District Judge Ross Sterling issued a judgment Tuesday that The Potters Savings and Loan Co. of East Liverpool, Ohio, is entitled to the money it invested plus interest from Howton, 50, and his business associate, Vining Towner Reynolds Jr.

Howton, who played for the Dallas Cowboys and the Green Bay Packers, and Reynolds, 39, were convicted last year of bilking more than $6 million from banks and other financial institutions.

Chicago Cubs renegotiate Bill Buckner's contract

CHICAGO (AP) — Bill Buckner won his request to renegotiate he remaining three years of his contract with the Chicago Cubs and wound up with a five-year, $2.6-million pact.

Cubs General Manager Dallas Green announced the signing Wednesday.

"We're pleased that this modification agreement between the Chicago Cubs and Bill Buckner could be consummated before spring training," Green said. "This will allow Bill and the rest of the club to prepare physically and mentally for the 1982 season and for the future."

"I am getting paid between what I probably would have gotten on the free-agent market and what I was making before they reegotiated," Buckner said. "Most important is that I got the contract extended, which means, I hope, that I can stay here."

However, Buckner noted that he gave up the no-trade provision in his contract.

"Hopefully, I'll play well enough to earn what they're paying me and they won't want to trade me. But a trade is certainly a possibility," the 32-year-old first baseman said.

DUNMORE, Pa. (AP) — Nestor Chylak, a popular major league umpire, has died at the age of 59, the victim of an apparent heart attack.

Chylak was found dead Wednesday by his wife, Sue, at their home here, according to family friends. He umpired five World Series, four All-Star games and three American League championship series.

Chylak retired in 1978 after 25 years in the majors, but he stayed close to the field. Named assistant supervisor of umpires before the 1979 season, he passed his skills on to the younger umpires and worked to perfect his profession.

"He was certainly one of the greatest umpires of this era, if not the greatest," said American Leage President Lee MacPhail. "Baseball has lost a wonderful friend and a great umpire."

"Few have ever been more respected in his field than Nestor Chylak. Everyone looked up to him and I developed more respect every time I saw him in a World Series or All-Star game," said Commissioner Bowie Kuhn. "He continued to mke invaluable contributions to baseball to the end through his supervisory position with the American League."

A native of Olyphant, a Lackawanna County community near Scranton, Chylak made his first official calls in 1947 for the Pony League, made up of teams from Pennsylvania, Ohio and New York.

He worked his way up through the minor leagues — the Canadian American League and the New England League in 1949, the Eastern League in 1950-51 and the International League in 1952-53.

"He had the confidence of young umpires on the staff, as well as the respect of the senior men," MacPhail said. "He was considered an outstanding teacher and certainly one of the finest umpires in major league baseball in modern times. We are sure he will be a candidate for eventual Hall of Fame recognition."

Ron Luciano, former president of the Major League Umpires Association, added: "A lot of guys will be making a lot more mistakes because Nestor is not around. The umpiring has een getting better the last few years and one of the reasons was Nestor."

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Don't worry about commercial paper

BY BILL DOYLE

Q. I have most of my money in what I consider to be a reputable money market mutual fund. The latest report I saw showed the fund's investment as follows: 4 percent, federal agency securities; 3 percent, repurchase agreements; 77 percent certificates of deposit; 16 percent, commercial paper.

That 16 percent in commercial paper is beginning to worry me. I want my money to earn the highest possible yield, with the least risk. Would investing in a money market mutual fund holding only U.S. Treasury and federal agency securities be as safe as owning U.S. Treasury bills outright?

A. In theory, no. In practice, yes.

When you own a Treasury bill or any other debt obligation of the U.S. government, you have absolutely no worry about collecting your interest and principal.

When you put money into a money market mutual fund investing only in U.S. Treasury and federal agency obligations and repurchase agreements secured by "Treasuries" and "agencies," the fund is your intermediary. Most "government-only" money funds invest in those "repos." While there is some very slight possibility the intermediary arrangement might lessen the safety of your investment, it really doesn't.

Because Treasuries and agencies pay lower interest than is available on other money market instruments, the yields on government-only money funds usually is lower than the yields on other money funds.

But, if you're looking for absolute safety, go for a government-only money fund. Plenty of other people are doing just that, making the government-only funds the fastest growing segment of the money fund business.

I do think, however, you are overworried about your present fund's investments. Commercial paper is a short-term promissory note issued by a finance company or industrial corporation.

Most money funds invest only in high-quality commercial paper, rated A-2 or better by Standard & Poor's Corp. and Prime-2 or better by Moody's Investors Service, Inc. There's no record of any money fund ever taking a financial bath in commercial paper.

• • •

Q. Going through a listing of money market mutual funds, I see some invest in such things as "Repos" and "Yankee CDs." What in the world are those things?

A repo is a repurchase agreement. That's an arrangement through which a bank or brokerage firm sells a security and agrees to buy it back at the sale price, plus interest. Most money market repos have short maturities — sometimes just overnight.

A Yankee CD is a certificate of deposit issued by a U.S. branch of a foreign bank, which has American dollars on deposit. Then, there are Eurodollar CDs — certificates of deposit issued by U.S. banks' foreign branches, which hold American dollars.

For definitions of all the types of investments an individual money fund is authorized to make, write to the fund and ask for a prospectus. All basic information about a mutual fund is spelled out in its prospectus.

• • •

Q. Money market mutual funds holding U.S. Treasury and federal agency securities invest only in short-term securities. Why don't they buy Treasury bonds and notes with much longer maturities, many of which pay very high interest?

A. Because, if they did, they wouldn't be money market mutual funds. Money market funds invest in short-term securities and are able to keep the value of their shares constant — $1 or $10 a share.

Some mutual funds invest in long-term U.S. Treasury, federal agency and-or corporate bonds. They're called "bond funds" or "income funds." Their share values move up and down, in line with changes in the bond market. They're not money funds.

Reagan's energy policy raises several questions

By ROBERT BURNS
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — As the battle over the federal budget grabs the spotlight of economic debate, most talk is of military and social needs. Yet questions persist about the Reagan administration's energy policy.

The main one is this: Is the administratin relying too heavily on private industry to solve the nation's eergy problems and to prevent another crisis?

Those who answer "yes" say the result could be disaster in the event of another oil disruption. But the adminnistration insists the nation's energy future is brighter with less government — and more private — involvement.

The outcome of the debate is critical. The United States is in an energy transition, forced by the oil-price shocks of the 1970s to move from an oil-based economy to one fueled by a variety of resources.

Q. What is the administration's policy?

A. In the words of James Edwards, secretary of the Energy Department: "Conserve all we can and produce all we can." The key point, however, is that private industry should decide which energy resources are developed and when, according to Reagan'senergy creed. The government only makes matters worse when ittries to help the energy industry, Edwards says.

Q. What's to argue about?

A. The disagreement comes from several sides. One involves the question of whether the government should prepare a plan for handling an oil emergency such as a cutoff from a major upplier. Both the House and the Senate have passed versions of a Standby Petroleum Emergency Authority Act that would authorize the president to allocate oil supplies and control prices in a severe oil shortage. The administration, however, has said it opposes such legislation. It prefers to let market forces determine prices and distribution during an emergency.

Q. Why does it matter who is right?

A. Some argue that an oil emergency left to market forces would create havoc and perhaps weaken national security. In a September 1981 report, the General Accounting Office urged passage of a plan for dealing with an oil emergency.

"The nation's almost total lack of emergency preparedness requires immediate attention," the GAO said. "The federal government bears the primary responsibility and must take concerted action to counter this serious threat to national security."

Q. What are the chances of an oil emergency?

A. Estimates vary, of course. The Department of Energy estimated in 1980 that the chance of a cutoff of 10 million barrels daily was as high as 50 percent. That would represent about one-sixth of all the oil consumed in the world each day. The department estimated that such a cutoff would cost the United States about $325 billion if it lasted for a year.

Q. But what about the Strategic Petroleum Reserve. Won't that protect the United States?

A. If a cutoff of oil as large as 10 million barrels a day occurred today, the strategic reserve would be of little help. That's because it holds only about 240 million barrels in salt dome caverns along the Gulf Coast, or about 40 days' supply at the current rate of U.S. oil imports.

Most energy experts applaud the Reagan administration's effort to fill the reserve more quickly than did the Carter administration. The goal of 750 million barrels may be reached as early as 1990, says William Vaughan, the Energy Department's assistant secretary for emergency preparedness.

Q. Does the government play a role in developing alternative fuel resources?

A. Yes, but less so under the Reagan administration than previously. The Synthetic Fuels Corp. created during the Carter administration to help finance the development of synthetic fuels such as natural gas made from coal is a good example. The original goal of spending as much as $88 billion on such projects has been sharply reduced, and most experts believe the quasi-government corporation will spend no more than $15 billion.

Graczyk play opens

NEW YORK — Opening today on Broadway at the Martin Beck Theatre is Ed Graczyk's "Come Back to the $5 and Dime Jimmy Dean, Jimmy Dean." Graczyk was the children's theater director at Midland Community Theatre from 1968 to 1973. He also became the theater's assistant director while with MCT.

The play centers around three women in Marfa, Texas, during the filming of "Giant." The women's roles are being played by Cher, Sandy Dennis and Karen Black. The setting is an old drugstore.

While working in Midland, Graczyk wrote six children's plays which have been produced throughout the U.S., Canada and Ireland. Among those Midland students who studied under Graczyk that have continued their interest in theater are Kristin Griffith, actress; Bill Thomas, playwright; Terri Wagener, playwright; and Doug McGrath, writer for television's "Saturday Night Live."

Clavell's 'The Children's Story' on TV tonight

ENTERTAINMENT

NEW YORK (AP) — It's 9 a.m. Do you know where your children's minds are?

That's the essential question raised tonight in "The Children's Story," a 30-minute program written, produced and directed by author James Clavell, about our children's values and how firmly rooted they are against assault.

Host Peter Ustinov introduces the piece, which will be seen in most of the country on the syndicated Mobil Showcase Network, by saying the setting may be as "close as your neighborhood." The time? "They've just conquered us." From there, Clavell spins a provocative tale, showing how easily such American values as country, religion and family can be erased from our children's minds.

A class of second graders anxiously awaits the bell on the first school day of the new order. At precisely 9 a.m., the new teacher (Michaela Ross, Clavell's actress daughter) enters. The unnamed teacher is dressed in an olive uniform with a red pin.

MISS ROSS'S character speaks sweetly, but there's an intimidating edge in her voice. She wins a measure of the students' confidence by already knowing their names, then systematically sets out to separate them from every value they thought was valuable.

Through nefarious twisting of words, she undercuts their former teachers for never having explained the meaning behind the Pledge of Allegiance. Continuing her indoctrination, she says it's not right that flags are placed above people and cuts it up for everyone to have a piece. Enthusiastically, the kids then toss the flagpole out the window.

Behind the guise of full disclosure, she solicits all questions, but answers none: "We're all one world now," she says, adding that school is for erasing wrong thoughts.

By emphasizing weakness or short-run mistakes of parents and old teachers, she manipulates the kids' minds. They begin to doubt belief in God, prayer and, even, their parents. It's now 9:25. Total brain-washing time: 25 minutes.

"The Children's Story" wonders if impressionable second graders could readily relinquish the values of their parents and society. It strikes at the heart of our values, examining the strength of their foundations.

IS THERE real understanding behind our convictions and prayers? Can our educational institutions do more to maintain the next generation's beliefs? Should they? Who controls our children's minds?

Coming on the heels of his brilliant portrayal of playwright Eugene O'Neil in "Reds," Jack Nicholson stars in "The Border." In "The Border" Nicholson goes a step further in refining a contradiction of character that is becoming his trademark: the cynic who cares.

Nicholson plays Charlie Smith, a disaffected U.S. border patrol guard in southern California who is tired of his meaningless life and shallow wife, played all too convincingly by Valerie Perrine. So, in a desperate attempt to start over, they move to El Paso, where Smith works the border stretch of fencing known as Tortilla Curtain.

In daring and dehumanizing midnight raids, the illegal aliens are herded up for their return to Mexico, but Smith knows they will try again, urged on by the universal dream of a better life and by private U.S. businesses that are out to get cheap labor.

In Smith's attempt to deal with this conflict, he begins to give at the seams. He gets caught up in the life of a Mexican girl, played by Elpidia Carrillo, who has tried to cross the border with her child and brother. Then, in order to pay the mounting debts brought on by his thoughtless wife, Smith goes along with his neighbor and fellow officer (Harvey Keitel) in agreeing to smuggle aliens into the country for profit. But when the Mexican girl's baby is stolen for black market sale, Smith turns into the avenging angel.

As Smith, Nicholson does not even breathe hard, the character is so familiar, so perfect. Carillo, in her American film debut, is riveting. But even with Nicholson and Carillo and a superb supporting cast (Warren Oates is the chief) there are flaws in the screenplay itself that weaken the overall effect.

For example, why does Smith get away unharmed once he finds out the chief is on the take? Why does Smith trust Manuel, played to weasel-like perfection by Mike Gomez, to hang around as Smith looks for the stolen baby? Then there is the question of the melodramatic ending. Unlike the real-life situation, where shades of gray predominate, "The Border" is black and white. Nevertheless, "The Border" takes on a subject fraught with controversy and, though there is no clear-cut winner, at least there is a battle.

"The Border" is rated R and contains graphic language as well as a scene in a border-town strip joint that has to be seen to be believed. Also, the quality of the film's color is disappointing, often shifting in mid-scene.

Nice Jewish boy is Kinky on stage

By KATHY BAKER
Associated Press Writer

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — He describes himself as a "nice Jewish boy," who's been reviled by "Negroes, rednecks, all kinds of weirdos, religious fanatics, Jews, women's libbers, Indians."

The amused offender is Richard Friedman, a kind, 35-year-old, sure-nuff nice Jewish boy from Austin.

But when he hides his sensitive brown eyes behind dark glasses, dresses in flamboyant cowboy garb and strides onstage, he is transformed into "Kinky Friedman" — an outrageous, satirical mutation of a country-western singer, who calls his band "The Texas Jewboys."

Many of his songs can't even be described in a family newspaper, but the milder include "They Don't Make Jews Like Jesus Anymore," "Get Your Biscuits in the Oven and Your Buns in Bed" and "The Ballad of Charles Whitman."

A songwriter who isn't really into music — "I haven't owned a victrola for as long as I can remember" — Friedman turned to butchering everybody's sacred cows back in the early '70s in Austin.

"I HAD THE IDEA for this band of Texas Jewboys, putting together the dominant roots of my background — my Texas background and my Jewish background," he said in an interview at an Austin restaurant. "It was pretty much like oil and water. It worked good from a media sense, but in a commercial sense — the name couldn't be used in television, it couldn't be used on radio and it couldn't be used on records. Other than that, it was pretty good."

The band toured the country for several years, but the road became "tedious, and it was dangerous out there when you stop and think about what we were doing." Now he's settled in Manhattan and is sort of the house act at the Lone Star Cafe — New York's not-even-a-reasonable-facsimile of a honky-tonk.

"This is in the tradition of Slim Whitman and Boxcar Willie," Friedman said. "This album has more integrity than anything since 'Jim Nabors' Greatest Hits.'"

He hopes the TV album will make money, but he's particularly excited about the collaboration with King on "Kingfish."

"IT'S A BIG shot for me. It's something I've never done," he said. "I've got some good, hummable, catchy melodies. The lyrics are a little off-the-wall. But if we can keep this thing zany and slightly offensive enough to make the Broadway sophisticates shudder, I think we've probably got a winner."

He's even found a personal link with Huey Long. "He was killed by the grandfather of a friend of mine. You know the guy from 'Chuck E.'s in Love?' The Ricki Lee Jones song? That's Chuck E. Weiss. His grandfather was the Dr. Carl Weiss who killed Huey Long."

Although no one ever tried to assassinate him, Friedman was physically attacked on occasion during a career that he said germinated in Borneo — a land he claims would never have experienced the cultural advantage of the frisbee, if it weren't for him.

He joined the Peace Corps after graduating from college and planned to go to Africa, but was "deselected" from that group — an act he views as suspicious and possibly connected to one of his early recording efforts, a ditty called "Beach Party Boo-Boo."

"My mother sent 40 frisbees over to me. That's my claim — I believe I am the man that brought frisbee to Borneo...

"I HAS A WONDERFUL time and got to know a lot of the people over there. Kind of left them on the other side of a dream and came back here."

But if Friedman got on well with the natives of Borneo, his Texas Jewboy persona frequently displeased a variety of groups when the band took to touring in the mid-70s.

"We did a show in Buffalo, and I guess women's lib was just getting very militant at that time," he said. "We did this song, 'Get Your Biscuits in the Oven and Your Buns in Bed' — it's a comedy song, it's just a funny song.

"But these women started charging the stage. Some of them were just hysterical and crying. They started pulling equipment out of the walls. It got pretty ugly. So the police came in and started carrying these girls out. It was really a scene. We had to have a police escort to get out of the place."

A similar scene unfolded at a club in Berkeley, Calif., when he donned a feather headdress and played "Kind of Like an Indian," Friedman said.

"It had a lot of 'Hiawatha ooga-chaka' type stuff in it. It's a funny song, a rock'n'roll song. But Buffy Sainte-Marie (an Indian folksinger) was on the bill and all these Indian people were there and they were deeply offended.
