County putting up road name signs to assist with emergency services

Gray County Commissioner Gerald Wright has been the first county official to instigate a plan of putting up street signs on county roads to help emergency vehicles find area residents more quickly.

Wright said that each of the commissioners has gone through the process of naming each county road in their precincts. However, he is the first to actually begin putting the new street signs in place.

"Precinct 3 is the first one to get the signs up. Gene Winegeart with the city made the signs after we provided the materials. We have a good relationship with the city," Wright said.

Winegeart, Pampa street supervisor, said the city was happy to help with making the signs, a project that will allow ambulance, fire and law enforcement officials to locate isolated households quickly. Ninety-five rural roads were involved in the Precinct 3 project.

Pampa Emergency Services Coordinator Steve Vaughn was on hand for the dedication of the street signs Friday morning.

"It took the insight of Commissioner Wright to get the ball rolling," Vaughn said. "By having the streets properly I.D.'d, sheriff's officers, fire personnel and emergency medical services can respond quickly. That will save valuable time that could be the difference between life and death."

Wright has provided maps of the rural roads with their new names to Rural/Metro Ambulance Service, the Sheriff's Department, Department of Public Safety and Pampa Fire Department.

Wright said he is hopeful that other Gray County commissioners will contact Winegeart soon so the city can make the rest of the county street signs to be put in place all over the county.

Amnesty reform's second phase now in effect today

By HOLDEN LEWIS
Associated Press Writer

Today marked the first day that immigration amnesty recipients could apply for permanent U.S. residency — but many of them will be in class instead of at Immigration and Naturalization Service legalization centers.

With permanent residency status, immigrants receive their prized "green cards" which permit them to work permanently, to leave and enter the country as they wish and to apply for citizenship in a few years.

Under the Immigration Reform and Control Act of 1986, most amnesty recipients have to know some English and civics before they obtain permanent residency — a requirement that could spark a back-to-school movement rivaling the one created by the GI Bill after World War II.

Federal officials expect about 1.5 million of the 1.8 million non-agricultural amnesty applicants to apply for permanent residency. Most are Spanish-speakers from Mexico, El Salvador and other Latin American countries.

Many will have to attend school to become eligible for permanent residency, but authorities say some potential applicants could find themselves locked out of overcrowded classes.

"They are looking in a very nervous fashion for a class to get into," said Vanna Slaughter, program director for the immigration counseling services of Dallas' Catholic Charities.

Slaughter, who helps find teachers for the courses, said classes are packed and the waiting period to get into them usually is two to three months.

"There are about 75 sites where the classes are being taught, (but) we need at least 100, probably more," she said, adding that about 15,000 of the area's 65,000 amnesty applicants have taken courses so far.

Classes for amnesty recipients are free in Dallas public schools, but many attend privately run programs with more flexible hours.

Evans Community Adult School in Los Angeles offers classes 24 hours a day Monday through Saturday, including sessions that start at 2 a.m.

In New York City, classes will be offered by the Board of Education, the City University of New York and many community-based organizations. The city's applicants come from 153 nations, which poses a challenge for teachers, said Garrett Murphy, director of the state education department's division of continuing education.

"We probably have more language groups and more languages than any other state," Murphy said.

Arthur Helton, a spokesman for the Lawyer's Committee for Human Rights, predicted New York state would be overwhelmed by a late swarm of applicants because the INS has done little to inform immigrants about the education program.

"It started with remarkably little fanfare," he said, adding that many immigrants probably are unaware of the educational requirement. "People may just thing they have (legal) status now, and they aren't thinking about the next step."

The INS released its guidelines for English and civics classes only a couple of weeks ago, said Henry McGehee, INS legalization officer for the El Paso district.

Immigrants must show a "simple knowledge of government and history of the United States and of simple English," McGehee said.

The INS sends out three letters to each amnesty recipient in the months before he becomes eligible to apply for permanent residency. About a month before, each amnesty recipient gets an application booklet in the mail. All the communications are in English.

"We have a big advantage this time in that we know the applicants and we know where they're living, and they're supposed to mail in change-of-address cards," McGehee said.

Amnesty recipients who apply for permanent residency must either take a 60-hour course from an INS-certified school, pass an oral and written examination similar to the citizenship test given to legal immigrants, or qualify for an exemption.

People who have completed 40 hours of an approved 60-hour course don't have to take the test. Neither do agricultural workers who applied for amnesty under a separate program, children under 16, adults 65 and older or people who are physically unable to take the course or test. All have to pay the application fee of $80 a person or a maximum $240 for a family.

Legal immigrants don't have to know English and civics to obtain permanent residency, but they do to earn citizenship.

Under the 1986 immigration act, people who had lived illegally in the United States since before Jan. 1, 1982, were allowed to apply for amnesty for deportation and were given temporary permission to work. The yearlong application period for most people ended May 4, though special agricultural workers have until Nov. 30 to apply.

Amnesty recipients have one year to apply for permanent residency beginning 18 months after they applied for amnesty. Those who apply for permanent residency today were among those who applied in the first three days of the program, which began May 5, 1987.

McGehee said three amnesty recipients planned to apply for permanent residency today at the El Paso legalization center.

Wright, Price running for Precinct 3 commissioner post

By DEE DEE LARAMORE
Staff Writer

Precinct 3 Commissioner Gerald Wright will defend his position on the Gray County Commissioners Court Tuesday against local wheat farmer O.H. Price.

Price, 67, of 1024 S. Banks, chose to run for the seat on the commissioners court when he realized the Democratic party needed a candidate. "I felt I was best qualified for the job," he said. "I knew the people, especially the rural people, so well."

A dryland farmer in this area for many years, Price has also worked in construction and in the wholesale and retail gasoline business here, he said. He is an Army Air Corps veteran of World War II.

Local Republican Wright, 43, 501 N. Nelson, is seeking his second term on the commissioners court. He was first elected to the office in 1984. He attended Pampa schools and Amarillo College and is now employed as an operator for Cabot Corporation.

Maintenance and upgrading of county roads have been Wright's priorities these past years. "We have some of the best in Texas," he said. "We're doing the work at reduced cost, by managing the money a lot better," he said. New equipment has also reduced the cost of maintaining the roads, he said.

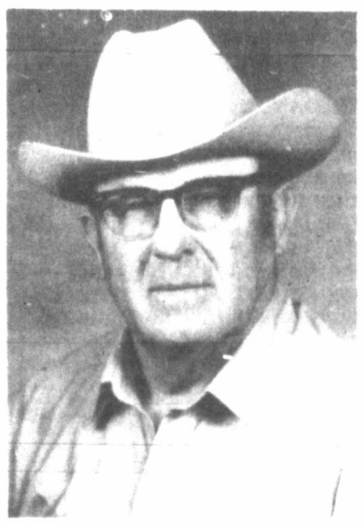

"I want to continue to hold taxes down. We're one of the lowest in the state," Wright added.

If elected, Price said he would try to operate his precinct as cheaply as possible until the local economy improves. "I want to keep taxes down, but still provide the services people expect," he said. "The county is running on a shoestring budget right now, and we need to maintain that."

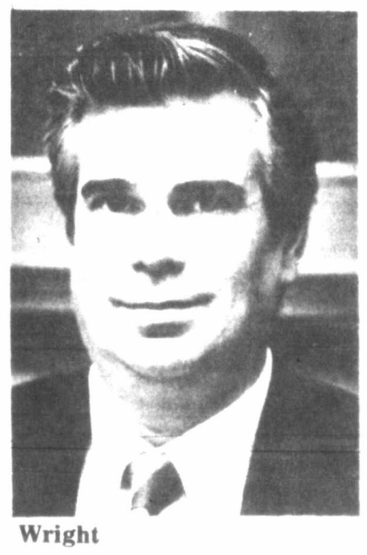

Price said his experience as a part-time employee for the county will be an asset as a commissioner, adding he also has supervisory experience.

"There's no use retiring," he said. "People just retire and die. I can put a lot of time on that job, more than a man who is employed full time.

"I'm paying for my own campaign expenses," he added. "There's no PAC money. I'm not obligated to any specific group.

Price

Wright

I've got people helping me, but not moneywise."

Wright relies on his past accomplishments to indicate what voters can expect from him in the future.

"I've been able to work with the city on many projects. I feel like with my four years experience I've learned a lot," he said. "I'm able to work with city, state and federal governments. I think it would be good to have someone who can sit down with others and come up with a solution to the problems."

Projects like the McClellan Creek Battle site are included in Wright's hopes for the future of the precinct. Other projects include the dredging and restoration of Lake McClellan, more

Two write-ins seek to take job from Sheriff Rufe Jordan

By DEE DEE LARAMORE
Staff Writer

The issue of fighting drugs in Gray County has spurred two Pampans to toss their hats in the ring with the pearl grey Stetson of long-time sheriff, Rufe Jordan.

It's been at least 20 years since Jordan, now 75 and a legendary figure in Texas law enforcement, has had serious opposition for his position as county sheriff.

Tuesday, voters will chose between Jordan and two write-in candidates, Jimmy Free and Dan Taylor.

Both Taylor and Free announced their intentions to seek the office of Gray County sheriff following Jordan's widely-publicized refusal to join the Panhandle Regional Drug Task Force in July.

"The main reason I ran is because Sheriff Jordan wouldn't join the Drug Task Force," said Free, 43, 1334 Charles. "I was born and raised in Gray County and I'd hate not to do everything I could to keep drugs away from here."

Taylor, 37, of 1028 Charles, said he also made the decision to run for the office when Jordan did not join the task force.

"Anyone who says there's not drugs in Gray County are closing their eyes to the facts," Taylor said. "We can't go on and pretend there's no problem. We should do anything we can to get rid of drugs."

But Jordan maintains he has not refused to join the task force, only that he is waiting until he sees if it is being handled as he thinks it should be.

"I never said 'I'm not going to join the drug task force,' " he said. "I'm going to look. I'm going to watch. These gentlemen [the task force members] I'll have to observe. I need to know exactly how it's working ... how they work, how they respond. If they can get the job done, then I'm for it," he said.

"I'm against every grain of drugs in the United States," Jordan added. "There's poppies in Turkey and coca beans in Columbia and a bunch of it is coming into our land. It surely is. I don't know what the solution is going to be."

Jordan pointed out that his deputies assisted the Texas Highway Patrol in two major drug confiscations, one for more than 170 pounds of marijuana. Jordan also counted off seven men who have been convicted for drug related offenses and are now serving time in Huntsville through the efforts of his office.

"We haven't done bad," he commented.

"I'm in no hurry to associate this office with any organization," he said, adding that the drug task force had only been in existence since April and operated on a government grant.

"I've nothing against any organization drying to do something beneficial, but I've got to know ... I've got to know," he said.

Free worked from 1969 until 1971 as a dispatcher and jailer for the Pampa Police Department. He then moved to Weatherford, Okla., where he rose to the rank of sergeant on the city's police department.

While at Weatherford PD, Free said he was a member of the Special Weapons and Tactics (SWAT) team and worked with the Oklahoma State Bureau of Investigation on several cases. Free then worked two years as a private investigator working for local judges and attorneys, he said.

Taylor has been in business for himself since 1973, he said. A four-year resident of Pampa, he is the local distributor of the Amarillo Globe-News. He is a Texas certified peace officer and is educated in criminal evidence and juvenile procedure, he said.

"The sheriff's office needs a good administrator," Taylor said. "I believe in education and training for the sheriff's deputies. I think the sheriff's office needs to work stringently with other law enforcement agencies and establish a better relationship with the police department and the Panhandle Regional Drug Task Force."

"The people of Gray County need to have someone who will listen to the people and their needs," Free said, adding that if he is elected the first thing he would do would be to join the drug task force.

Taylor said he believes Gray County commissioners should participate in the decision of whether or not to join the drug task force. "We would need to work with the county commissioners," he said. "Elected officials should have input on things of that nature."

Both write-in candidates believe in more education for sheriff's deputies.

"I would like to see a professional look at the sheriff's office," Free said. To do this, Free proposes that all deputies would wear uniforms, their cars would be clearly marked and he would update the deputies' training in law enforcement.

Taylor said that while looking over the sheriff's department budgets, he found that $1,500 had been budgeted for training of deputies since 1976, but only $130.17 had actually been spent since that time.

Jordan said his offices take "refresher" courses every 15 to 18 months over a four-week period in Amarillo. He said he has 1,360 hours of education himself and has been a director and officer on the Texas Board of Law Enforcement Officer Standards and Education.

"My people here today are definitely educated in the field of enforcement," he said. "The people here, I've selected them. In 38 years, I've had a turnover of 26 people and six of those retired.

"I've always contended that experience is hard to get away from," he added.

Free said he would also make extensive renovations on the present jail, if elected. He said he would prefer to remodify the old jail and forgo the expense of building a new one.

He proposes that Jordan's apartment next to the jail in the top floor of the Gray County Courthouse be torn out and an exercise room built. "We'd probably use the top of the building for the prisoners to get sunshine," he said.

"This is the best constructed jail I ever saw in my life," Jordan said. Although several prisoners have escaped from the jail, he said, only once has there been a jail break — in February 1932.

Jordan said when he took the office in 1951, he covered the jail cells with mesh steel. "I liked it so well, I put another layer on it," he said. "The only thing that can get through there is a pencil."

He said the jail has a 23-bed capacity and the average number of prisoners is 12 to 14, he said. "Our jail is as clean as your living room, " he said, adding that the mattresses and blankets are flame-retardant.

At present, Jordan said the only problems with the jail meeting state standards are a corridor that is two inches narrower than the approved 44-inches and the need for a third single cell.

"There's been a sheriff living in that apartment since 1930 and there's a reason for that," Jordan said. By living so close to the jail, the sheriff is able to keep a closer watch on the prisoners, he explained. "You'd be surprised what I've heard sitting on a stool outside the jail," he said. The person inside the apartment also has voice communications with the jail, he said.

"I see not the necessity of the taxpayers to pay $3 million for a new jail. I surely don't," Jordan added.

Jordan's opponents also contend the sheriff needs a deputy in Lefors and said there have been complaints about slow response time to calls.

"I don't remember anything like that," Jordan said, referring to a report that it was an hour before a deputy responded to a call. "If it is something of any consequence, my officers are required to write a report. I haven't noticed anything like that."

"We go as far as I-40," he said. "And this office is open around the clock."

"We need to give equal representation to all the county residents," Taylor said. "I've been to Lefors and talked to many county people. They don't feel they're getting a fair shake from the sheriff's department."

Free said he would like to fill two deputy positions that he believes are open on the sheriff's department, one to work in the Lefors area and another to be a relief officer for the deputy in McLean.

"I've no apologies to make to the people of Gray County about the Gray County Sheriff's Office," Jordan said. "I think the records speak for themselves in the district clerk and the county clerk's offices, where they're recorded.

"I've been blessed with tremendous health, other than breaking a leg in football and a few teeth knocked out in the line of duty," he added. "I've been here a long time and I think the people have known me a long time. I still have a lot of friends in Gray County of Texas."

"We are expecting to win," Free said. "I believe in working with the people, more education on drugs, and the response to calls cut down. I'll have an open door policy any time of day. If they need me at night, I'll be there to listen to them and see what I can do."

"It's not going to be easy," Taylor said, "But I feel there's a good chance of winning this election. There are many different things we need — an open door policy to public concerns, crime prevention for people in the county, and I would revise the budget somewhat as well."

City to consider animal nuisance ordinance, outside water service

By BEAR MILLS
Staff Writer

Pampa city commissioners will meet Tuesday in a regular 6 p.m. session at City Hall. Only one new item will be presented to the commissioners in relation to a proposed animal nusiance ordinanace.

The ordinance amends a current animal nuisance ordinance already in place and makes clear definition of when an animal can be picked up by the city.

According to the new wording, any dog or cat which "soils, defiles or defecates on private property ... public walks or recreation areas ... chases vehicles, attacks, molests, or interferes with persons or other domestic animals on public property; is at large; or makes unreasonable or frequent amounts of noise ..." shall be considered a nuisance.

The ordinance also makes it illegal for an animal to "disturb persons of nervous sensibilities and occupants of neighboring houses."

One item of old business could be approved by the commission pertaining to water service by the city to those outside the city limits.

Ordinance 1134 calls for the city to only provide water service to areas specified in its Certificate of Public Necessity and Convenience. That document is on file with the Texas Water Commission.

The document would also allow the city to provide water to those areas outside the specified perimeters if that service was already in effect by Jan. 1, 1983.

Several citizens of Gray County who live outside the city limits have applied for city water. However, the city has discovered that several lines going outside the city have been illegally tapped or improperly maintained.

City Mangager Bob Hart has said the lines have posed the threat of contaminating city water supplies in the past due to washback.

The ordinance will mean that Gary and Elizabeth Swinney, who live south of the city on Barnes St. and have requested water service, will probably be denied their request to connect to city water lines.

The couple requested water service for property on which their mobile home and livestock are located. The Swinneys are currently having to haul water to the property to feed their livestock and have to keep a bucket of water in the bathroom to fill the toilet tank.

They could not be reached for comment on the proposed acceptance of the ordinance by the commission.

City commissioners said that if they begin to grant water service a few feet outside the city limits, it will mean they have to accept requests for water service throughout the entire area.

signs naming county roads, and eventual paving of some farm-to-market roads through state funding, he said.

Wright admits that dredging of Lake McClellan has been a slow, complicated process that could cost $2 to $2.5 million. Several improvements at the lake were accomplished this summer through the county's cooperation with the U.S. Forest Service, he said.

Wright has also been working with Congressman Beau Boulter in seeking federal funding for the dredging of the lake.

"I think we'll eventually see the lake dredged out," Wright said. "It's not a question of government having money, but of convincing them to use it down here."

Price first ran for Gray County commissioner in the 1984 election but was defeated in the primary run-offs. He is a member of the Texas Farm Bureau, Canadian Production Association, American Legion, Every Man's Bible Class, Tri-County Democrats and the American Association of Retired Persons.

GOP, Democrats hit Texas once again

By HOLDEN LEWIS
Associated Press Writer

EL PASO (AP) — Democrats and Republicans courted the Hispanic vote in weekend swings through El Paso.

Democratic vice presidential candidate Lloyd Bentsen, appearing before about 800 Democrats at El Paso's downtown train station, predicted a come-from-behind victory Tuesday for the Democratic ticket, headed by Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis.

"Those Republicans are dropping like a rock in these polls," Bentsen said in a speech laced with snippets of Spanish.

Republicans brought the first Hispanic member of the Cabinet to El Paso. Former Texas Tech president and current Education Secretary Lauro Cavazos told a gathering of about 200 Republicans that a George Bush administration would make education a high priority.

"Let us educate every person to their fullest potential," Cavazos said. "What we will do is take the highly motivated student and help this person through the system. Let us find that dropout and say, 'Son, daughter, queremos que tu vuelves' " — we want you to return.

Bentsen referred to Republican Spanish-language radio advertisements that were aired in the Rio Grande Valley and in El Paso in which an announcer intones that officials "will be watching" to discourage vote fraud or voting by non-U.S. citizens.

He condemned the ads as a tactic to scare Hispanics from the polls.

"Now they're running radio ads in Spanish to scare Hispanics from voting, but we're not going to be frightened away," Bentsen said.

The radio spots aired only a few times in El Paso and at least one station, KVIV-AM, is no longer airing them.

Also attending the Republican meeting in a cramped banquet room at a hotel were former Sen. John Tower and Roy Barrera, a former candidate for Texas attorney general.

Tower began his speech by saying: "I'm sure the Dukakis camp is trying to convince our Mexican-American citizens that he cares about them. But let's look at the record." He cited a Hispanic high-school dropout rate of 66 percent in Massachusetts, and said Dukakis has no Hispanics in his cabinet.

"The Reagan-Bush team has been providing the climate for upward mobility among the Hispanic community," Tower said.

His words might have been largely lost on the 25-percent Hispanic audience. By contrast, about 75 percent of the crowd at the Bentsen rally was Hispanic.

Bentsen stuck closely to his standard stump speech, promising more jobs, affordable housing, easier college loans and protection of Social Security.

The senator even decried what he called the exportation of American jobs abroad, a touchy subject in a border city that relies heavily on maquiladoras.

Maquiladoras, also called twin plants, are factories in which components are shipped to Mexico for assembly, then brought back to the United States for distribution.

Many labor leaders have criticized the existence of maquiladoras and say they take jobs from Americans. Twin plants are a major source of income and employment to El Paso and its sister city, Ciudad Juarez, Mexico.

The latest campaign appearances follow a swing through Texas by President Reagan Saturday as he urged voters to support his vice president, George Bush.

Attempted teen-age suicides causing Plainview concerns

PLAINVIEW (AP) — Attempted suicides are becoming more frequent in this West Texas town, and some experts believe they signal a trend of more stressful lifestyles creeping into smaller communities.

In the last two weeks, at least nine young residents of this community of 22,400 have tried to kill themselves.

"For some reason in the last six months the number of teen suicide attempts has gone through the roof," said Paul McKenzie, a psychologist with Central Plains Mental Health-Mental Retardation, which handles suicide referrals for the area. "I cannot remember a time in the four years I have been here when we have ever had this kind of situation arise.

"It's scary," McKenzie told the Plainview Daily Herald. "I am amazed that we have as many as we have. I've worked at centers in big cities like Chicago and Los Angeles and I don't ever remember nine in a period of two weeks."

Since the beginning of the year, two young people have committed suicide in Plainview.

"It's not like we're having a teen-ager commit suicide every week, but what we do have is kids cutting their wrists, taking too many pills or talking about wanting to kill themselves," said Bobby Chandler, juvenile officer of the Plainview Police Department.

Suicide is the third-leading cause of American deaths in the 15 to 24 age group. But attempts far outweigh the number of successful suicides.

"It's a real pressing problem," agreed Chesna Sullivan, a psychologist with Lone Tree Center. "We have a lot of attempts here. There have been more attempts in Plainview recently than there have been in the 10 years I've been in practice."

"Kids are always under pressure," Sullivan said. "A lot of the kids I see are the kids that are always expected to be the best and have the most. It's that kind of pressure that they really don't need. We need to let them know that sometimes it is OK to make a mistake."

Chandler said society and the traditional family — even in small towns — no longer provide the natural stress outlets for teens.

"The kids are not feeling the tight family relationships today," Chandler said. "Because of that, the kids are not being taught to deal with the stress like they have been in the past. I'm not saying its the parents' fault. That's just what society has done to us."

McKenzie said parents can be assured that most teens who attempt suicide actually do not want to die, but rather use the action as a call for help.

"A lot of times kids are crying out for control," Sullivan said. "Because they want to do the right thing, they will often leave warning signals and signs that say 'Help me I'm falling ... I want out of this.' "

Delta pilots' idle chatter prompts concerns

By H. JOSEF HEBERT
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two fatal airliner accidents have prompted questions about idle chatter in the cockpit and raised concerns by some safety officials that pilots may not always be focusing on business when they should be.

Federal investigators at the National Transportation Safety Board are closely examining the tape covering nearly 30 minutes in the cockpit of Delta Air Lines Flight 1141 last August before the Boeing 727 crashed seconds after takeoff, killing 14 of the 108 people aboard.

More than half of the tape, covering a lengthy taxi period at the huge Dallas-Forth Worth International Airport, involves impertinent conversation among the pilots and two flight attendants on subjects ranging from the recent purchase of a house to the habit of birds nesting near airports.

Nearly 11 minutes of the tape were omitted from the transcript because they were considered irrelevant, including a reference, according to sources, of the disclosure in news reports a few days before the crash of idle chatter aboard a Continental Airlines that crashed in Denver 10 months earlier.

If there is an accident, one participant in the Delta cockpit reportedly reminded his colleagues, their words might end up in the newspapers, too.

Later, the plane's captain told investigators he did not care for the lengthy presence of the flight attendants in the cockpit, but that it was not his nature to order them from the cockpit during the long takeoff delay.

Investigators emphasized that so far there has been no clear evidence linking these conversations — some of which was technically legal because the plane was not moving — with the possible cause of the crash.

But investigators are trying to determine whether the flight crew forgot to properly set the jetliner's wing flaps, which help it gain lift, and whether the conversations distracted them from preparing the plane for flight.

An exchange lasting 7 minutes and 42 seconds between co-pilot Carey Kirkland and a senior flight attendant began as the crew was going through one of the preflight check lists. Finally, the exchange was cut short by Capt. Larry Davis, prompting an apology from Kirkland about "sittin' here talking to the flight attendant," according to the transcript.

Later flight engineer Steven Judd told investigators he had been uneasy about the attendant's lengthy presence.

While there is no link established between these discussions and the accident, some NTSB investigators are uneasy about the casual and relaxed demeanor the exchanges reflect.

Furthermore, several aviation safety officials not involved with the Delta investigation suggested such extraneous discussions before takeoff are common.

"It's very difficult to legislate against people interacting in a job situation," says Clay Foushee, an aviation safety researcher at NASA's Ames Research Center in California.

Foushee said while some casual exchanges may help a flight crew feel at ease and work together, there also have been numerous pilot complaints received through NASA's anonymous aviation reporting system over the years about pilot distractions, including inappropriate conversation and untimely presence in the cockpit of flight attendants.

Earlier this year, the NTSB in its final report on the Nov. 15, 1987, crash of the Continental Airlines jetliner in Denver also raised concerns about idle chatter in the cockpit. That crash, which killed 28 people, was attributed to the pilot taking off in snow with ice on the wings.

Four minutes before takeoff, the two Continental pilots "engaged in almost three minutes of nonpertinent social conversation" — reportedly involving a flight attendant — which "would suggest inattention to more important details" such as the weather and its effects on icing, the safety board said.

Since 1981, the Federal Aviation Administration has had a "sterile cockpit" rule that prohibits any conversation among flight crews not related to the operation of the aircraft when the plane is taxiing and in motion, and when flying below 10,000 feet in an approach or departure.

Flight attendants also are specifically prohibited from entering the cockpit during those periods.

The requirement was prompted by concerns at the FAA about an unusually high number of cases in the late 1970s, including several accidents, in which pilots were distracted from their duties by idle chatter and other requirements such as making cabin announcements during "critical phases of flight."

FAA and other aviation officials concede they have no idea how often the rule is ignored. Violations are uncovered only if an FAA inspector is aboard — at which times chatter is unlikely — or after an accident when the cockpit tape is reviewed.

But federal officials note that even if a violation is shown and the flight crew members survive an accident, there is unlikely to be FAA disciplinary action because the contents of the cockpit recorder tape cannot be used either in court or as part of administrative action by the FAA.

Officials of unions representing pilots and flight attendants acknowledged that at times the sterile cockpit rule may be violated, but they said for the most part it is widely adhered to. Lengthy delays before getting takeoff clearance adds to the problem, they suggest.

Grandmother, four children die in house fire

DALLAS (AP) — Four youngsters and their grandmother died when a late-night fire filled their bolted-shut home with smoke, officials said.

The fire broke out shortly after 11 p.m. Sunday in the one-story home not equipped with smoke alarms, officials said.

But fire officials said the blaze was extinguished quickly.

"The fire itself didn't amount to a whole lot," said a dispatcher who declined to give his name. "It's smoke inhalation that gets most people."

Paramedics attempted to resuscitate Sierra Faggett, 17 months, and Marcus Faggett, 2, but they were declared dead shortly after arriving at Parkland Memorial Hospital, said Virginia Brandenburg, emergency room charge nurse.

Latrece Faggett, 13, died in the emergency room of Methodist Medical Center, said Linda Dickson, nursing supervisor.

Terrance Faggett, 17, died at Baylor University Medical Center in Dallas, said Glenda Conley, emergency room assistant supervisor.

Mary Graham, 71, who was initially transported to Methodist, was transferred by helicopter to the Parkland burn unit in critical condition with burns to her face and upper body. She later died, Brandenburg said. Brandenburg described the woman as the childrens' grandmother.

Hospital officials believe all the victims suffered smoke inhalation.

"The call came in from a neighbor who said there was some smoke coming out from the house next door and they tried to raise some people, but got no response," the Fire Department dispatcher said.

Fire Investigator Mike Southerland said the house was secured with "double-key" deadbolts, a type of lock which requires separate keys to lock the house from the inside and outside.

"It is not the type we like people to have," said Southerland, adding that fire officials had not determined whether the locks prevented escape.

Neighbor Willie Wallace said smoke was not immediately visible, but when firefighters broke in to rescue the victims, the smoke poured out of the wooden frame home.

Fire Investigator Randy Sanders said a cause had not been determined.

Rains reports record voter registration

AUSTIN — Secretary of State Jack Rains declared victory in his recent effort to register more than a million voters this year.

Voter '88, Rains' non-partisan registration drive, registered 1.5 million Texans since the beginning of the year, he said.

Even with more than 597,000 Texans purged from the rolls in August, there is a net gain of 900,000 voters on the rolls since January, he said.

"Never in the history of our state have this many Texans been registered to vote," Rains said.

In January 1988, 7.34 million Texans were registered to vote. By the March 8 Super Tuesday primary, 7.87 million Texans were registered. Near complete tallies show more than 8.24 million Texans are currently on the rolls and eligible to vote on Nov. 8.

Rains said the credit goes to the more than 3,300 businesses and organizations that participated in Voter '88. Retail outlets passed out voter registration cards, utility companies sent cards as bill stuffers, businesses signed up employees and customers, and many state agencies made cards available.

Rains also praised county election officials, the political parties, the campaigns and various interest groups that ran voter registration drives.

In 1988, Rains' office distributed more than 17 million voter registration cards to Voter '88 participants, not including millions of cards sent out by county officials.

Complete figures are not in for Bexar, Brazos, Cameron, Dallas, Ochiltree, Van Zandt, Waller and Zapata counties. Officials predict the final figure will be slightly greater than 8.24 million.

EVER STRIVING FOR THE TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessings. Only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that freedom is a gift from God and not a political grant from government, and that men have the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property for themselves and others.

Freedom is neither license nor anarchy. It is control and sovereignty of oneself, no more, no less. It is, thus, consistent with the coveting commandment.

Put the 'milicrats' outside the offices

Somewhere under Grant's Tomb the general's smoky remains must be rapidly rotating. The U.S. military, for which he won more battles than any other general in our history, is taking further draconian actions to stop military personnel from partaking of his favorite habits, tobacco and distilled spirits.

It's true that the general as chief of the Union Army in the Civil War, after also serving less successfully as president, did die of throat cancer caused by the cigars he continually puffed. And it's also true that Grant sometimes had a problem with the hooch. But the important points are that the choices were made by him, not by the military, and that he learned to resist the bottle.

Now the Pentagon is considering a plan to ban the sale of tobacco products in military commissaries and to boost the prices of cigarettes and booze sold in PXs. Deputy Defense Secretary William H.Taft IV reportedly likes the idea, and his staff is drawing up a directive that might make the new prohibition effective on Jan. 1.

The prohibition attempts show some deeper flaws in the Pentagon than petty tyranny. Whereas Gen. Grant conducted the operations of a vast war with a few aides and from a field tent, today's bureaucratized military employs tens of thousands of busybodies at the Pentagon and other plush citadels of incompetence. These "milicrats" must find some work to justify their cushy, useless jobs, so they busy themselves harassing the troops in the field and sailors at sea.

Think of a soldier standing guard along the Berlin Wall, freezing in the cold rain for hours, or of a sailor on an aircraft carrier pulling a 20-hour shift loading bombs on F-14s. When these fellows take a break, they should be allowed to smoke if they want to and be allowed to buy smokes at tax-free prices. The Pentagon "milicrats" should have no authority, whatsoever, to tell the men on the line whether to puff tobacco or (off duty) to knock back a shot or two.

Instead, the milicrats should start earning their taxpayer-paid salaries by getting out of their air-conditioned offices and out into the mud and saltwater. The military exists to defend the country, not to provide easy jobs for incompentents, or to change the habits of the brave men standing guard over our freedoms.

No reservations against Bush

James J. Kilpatrick

WASHINGTON — Most of the recent endorsements for George Bush, like most of the endorsements for Michael Dukakis, have been half-hearted things: Editors don't like the candidates; they don't like the campaign; they wish they had better choices; the whole thing is so — so dismal. And sigh, sigh, sigh.

Permit me a trumpet blast: I like George Bush. No apologies. No reservations. Bush is the better man. He is the better man by far. I hope he wins by the landslide he deserves.

And before someone hollers, "What about Dan Quayle?" let me add a word on that score. In the weeks since the New Orleans convention, the young senator from Indiana has exhibited maturity, grace and composure. He has absorbed a merciless drubbing and kept on his feet. I no longer have the willies about him.

Tuesday's choice is between Bush and Dukakis. The vice presidential nominees — Quayle on the one ticket, Lloyd Bentsen on the other — are supernumeraries. The only presidential alternative is the Libertarian Ron Paul, and his candidacy nowhere is taken seriously. On Jan. 20, Chief Justice Rehnquist will swear in the Republican Bush or the Democrat Dukakis, and for the next four years we will be addressing one or the other as "Mr. President."

Of course I want George Bush in that role, and to judge by the latest polls, a clear majority of the voters, in a clear majority of the states, want him also. They want him for many positive reasons, because of his experience at the federal level, because of his character, because he is the kind of man that he is.

I cannot claim "friendship" with Bush — we are not that close — but I have known the gentleman for many years and have gained tremendous respect for him. His instincts are sound. Perhaps that says it all. I like his cast of mind. I like his essential toughness, his powers of endurance, his grace under pressure.

I like Bush on the issues, but his specifics don't matter greatly. Both houses of the incoming Congress will be controlled by the Democrats. Questions of policy will be resolved jointly by the White House and the Hill.

On the domestic scene, Bush will propose modest expansions of the federal role in education, day care of children and protection of the environment. In defense, he will pursue modernization of our nuclear arsenal. He will stand behind the Strategic Defense Initiative. He will ask Congress to hold down spending on entitlements while revenues generated by economic growth slowly catch up with outlays.

There is nothing wildly exciting here. There is a prospect only of responsible executive leadership.

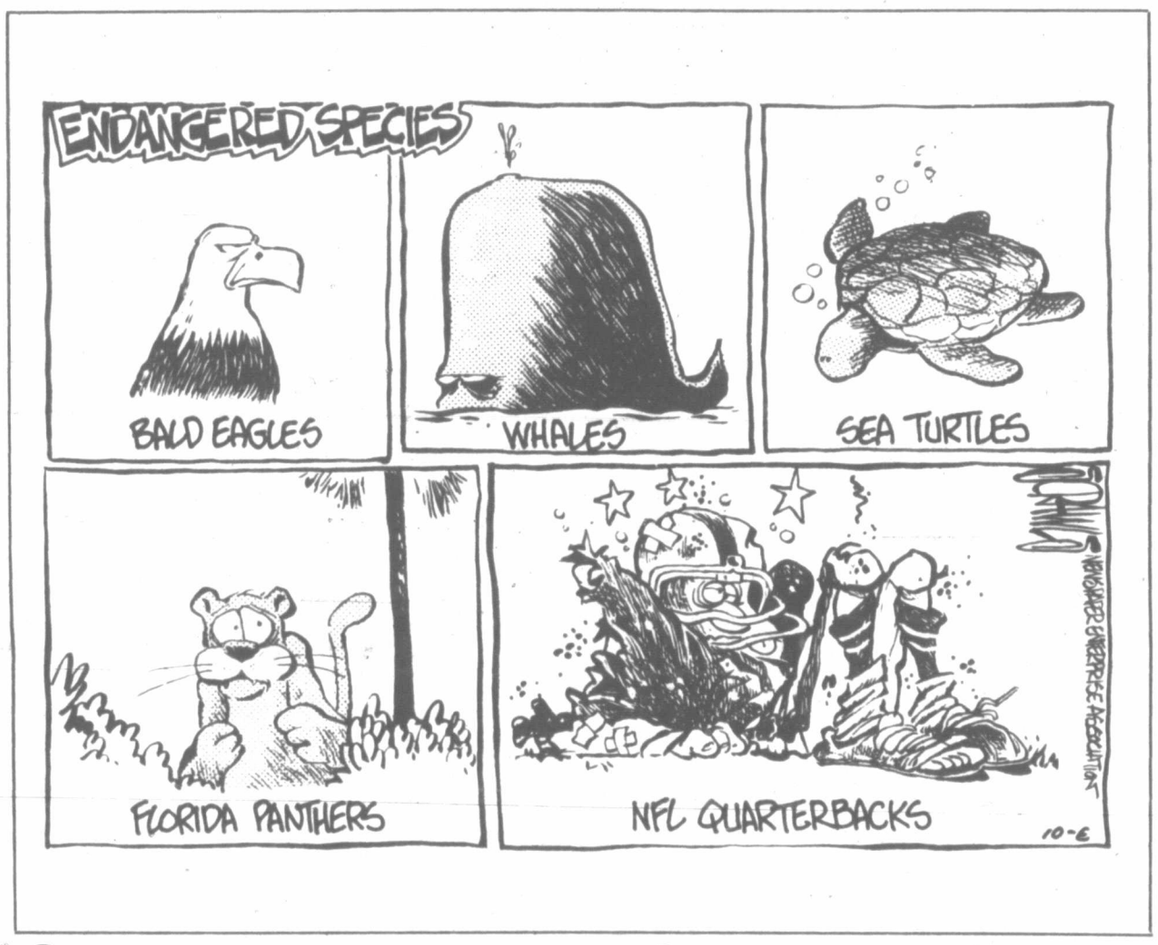

It is a truism of politics that voters often are motivated more by the negative than by the positive. To vote for Bush is deliberately to vote against Dukakis. Or vice versa. The long campaign of 1988 has provided abundant reasons, at least in my view, for hoping never to see Dukakis in the White House.

Again, I go back to this matter of instincts, of cast of mind, of attitudes and convictions and character shaped by experience. Over the past 10 months Dukakis has forged a clear impression of a man who would waffle in a crisis. He seems not to understand that the United States has national interests around the world, and that in a crunch these interests must be defined with national power. Dukakis, in a crunch, would hightail it to the United Nations.

The next president almost certainly will have an opportunity to nominate three members of the U.S. Supreme Court. For me this is the prospect that counts above all others. To this awesome responsibility Dukakis would bring the cast of mind of a man who proudly professes himself a "card-carrying member" of the American Civil Liberties Union. I do not want to see the Constitution twisted into the shape of the ACLU.

I would vote against Dukakis in part because of the governor's iceman personality. A president must live with Congress — especially with a Congress controlled by the opposition — in a certain comaraderie. Jimmy Carter never grasped this aspect of life in the capital. I cannot imagine Dukakis putting his arm around any one of the barons who rule the Hill. The picture will not come.

Bush will have problems with Congress — of course he will. But these will be problems familiar to him. He will bring to their resolution the courage of a fighter pilot and experience of a lifetime. No reservations, I said. Bush!

Today in history

By The Associated Press

Today is Monday, Nov. 7, the 312th day of 1988. There are 54 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On Nov. 7, 1917, Russia's Bolshevik Revolution took place as forces led by Vladimir Ilyich Lenin overthrew the provisional government of Alexander Kerensky.

On this date:

In 1874, the Republican Party was symbolized as an elephant for the first time in a cartoon drawn by Thomas Nast in Harper's Weekly.

In 1885, the Canadian Pacific Railway was completed as the last spike was driven at Craigellachie.

In 1916, Republican Jeannette Rankin of Montana became the first woman elected to Congress.

In 1918, during World War I, an erroneous report from the United Press that an armistice had been signed set off celebrations across the country.

In 1940, the Tacoma Narrows Bridge in Washington state collapsed during a windstorm that sent the 2,800-foot span crashing into Puget Sound.

Oregon measure burns tobacco industry

By ROBERT WALTERS

SEASIDE, Ore. (NEA) — On the rear wall of the Bell Buoy Seafood Market, behind the display cases filled with dungeness crab, sockeye salmon and other offerings from the North Pacific, is a sign of the times. It says: "No Smoking."

That admonition is hardly revolutionary, but it may be harbinger of future restrictions throughout Oregon, where voters are about to consider the toughest anti-smoking law ever proposed in any state.

As in past years, voters in other states will be asked on Nov. 8 to approve or reject initiatives or propositions restricting smoking — but none is as severe as Oregon's Ballot Measure 6.

It would prohibit smoking in all offices, factories, warehouses and other indoor workplaces, as well as in indoor areas visited by the public. Employers would no longer be allowed to set aside special areas in which workers could smoke.

That restriction would even apply to private homes where the occupants conducted some form of business that was visited even occasionally by customers, suppliers or other outsiders.

The only exempted areas would be bars and taverns, tobacco shops, home workplaces not visited by the public and guest rooms (but not lobbies, hallways and other public areas) of hotels and motels.

Opponents of Ballot Measure 6 are expected to spend as much as $2.5 million, virtually all of it collected from the tobacco industry, to defeat the proposal. Proponents have only $15,000 to spend, most of it contributed by the American Cancer Society and the American Lung Association.

One critic of the industry estimates that if each of Oregon's 400,000 to 500,000 smokers consumes one less cigarette per day because of the ban, the tobacco companies would lose about $10 million per year in sales. Moreover, the ballot proposition's success here almost certainly would encourage other states to consider it.

Indeed, state and municipal governments throughout the country already have enacted laws prohibiting smoking in many enclosed public spaces while limiting it to specially designated areas in restaurants, offices, airports and other locations.

In addition, the owners of retail outlets — including the seafood market here and countless other stores in Oregon and elsewhere — have independently banned smoking on their property.

Obviously concerned about the spread of such restrictions, R.J. Reynolds is introducing a "smokeless cigarette" that looks like a traditional cigarette but instead is a nicotine delivery system specifically designed to produce no external smoke.

Reynolds claims the new product is "cleaner" and "eliminates or greatly reduces a majority of the compounds produced by burning tobacco." But is "cleaner" the same as healthier?

The recent developments constitute only the latest phase of an ongoing saga. As early as the 1920s and 1930s, the industry was claiming that cigarettes were "less irritating" or contained reduced amounts of nicotine.

By the 1950s, medical evidence clearly implicated cigarette smoking as a leading cause of lung cancer. The industry responded with filters that purportedly provided "the greatest health protection in cigarette history."

In the 1960s, the federal government officially designated smoking as a health hazard that "contributes substantially to mortality from certain specific diseases and to the overall death rate."

Again, the industry fought back, with Micronite filters, activated charcoal filters, fortified filters and recessed filters — and with low-tar, low-nicotine cigarettes.

Now the shameless tobacco industry argues that the Oregon initiative could lead to invasions of homes by the "smoking police." The ballot measure here in undeniably tough — but it is a reflection of the public's loss of faith with cigarettes, their producers and their consumers.

This campaign was all ice and no fire!

By SARAH OVERSTREET

This election day, there are some voters eager to get to the polls to vote for their presidential favorite. They either thought one or the other man exemplified their beliefs, or were so convinced of their party's objectives that just about any candidate their party picked would have been fine.

The rest of us lumber to the polls with about as much enthusiasm as when we get our teeth cleaned. And a few of us in that group punch our cards with extra vehemence, one last protest of disgust for the Campaign That Wasn't.

I'm not sure what we have a right to expect from a political campaign, but I am fairly sure it isn't boredom, depression and a lot of whining. I know what I'd like to receive from a campaign: a sense of excitement, of ideas that will touch and improve our lives personally, and of a man or woman with enough personal passion and power to push them.

What we got from these guys was mostly finger-pointing and vague overviews of rosy scenarios. While some of Michael Dukakis' ideas sounded good in theory, he never convinced us he had put the slide rule to them. He overestimated our willingness to take him at his word, put two and two together and come up with his five.

George Bush failed to convince undecided voters that he knew what he was talking about. He was long on cliches and knee-jerk euphemisms and campaign objectives tending toward substanceless hash — "a kinder, gentler America...," "1,000 points of light."

When he veered from programmed speech, his mind ping-ponged helplessly from one half-finished thought to another. He was fine at exciting us against his opponent — but not for himself. Vague allusions to "1,000 points of light" and "values" (whose? what?) aren't exciting; they're abstractions. There was never a sense that this man had ideas that would touch and improve our lives personally, and that he was just the passionate leader who could implement them.

Dukakis was just as unsuccessful at exciting us against Bush. And look what he had to work with: clear indications that Bush was a silent accomplice in the largest abuse of power since Watergate; association with an administration staffed with the biggest group of cheats ever brought to public light; and a running mate with a dismal academic record who used his family's influence to get out of possible military duty in Vietnam and into law school, who was caught fudging on his resume and is hands-down the most mediocre Republican legislator of any considered for this vice presidency.

Dukakis didn't make many points with any of this, with the possible exception of a little Quayle bashing. During the early part of the campaign, he acted like he expected the evidence to speak so loudly we couldn't help but hear it. During the last weeks, he attacked peripheral issues like Bush's commercials and what Bush personally stood to gain from Bush's capital gains tax cut; but he didn't hit the big-ticket topics.

Somewhere a campaign staff is congratulating itself on a win; backs are being slapped and strategies praised. They're calling it a "successful campaign."

I'll consider it a successful campaign when they can send me into a voting booth on fire to vote for someone instead of (a) against someone else, or (b) for one or two issues within a platform. This election I call a concession, the result of a group of generally disenchanted people picking the lesser of two mediocre candidates.

When someone comes along who does know how to inspire passion and create vision, the high-paid, so-called "political image-makers" will be out of work.

Costly California proposition battles top nation's ballot issues

By STEVE GEISSINGER
Associated Press Writer

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Partisans of 29 statewide propositions Californians face Tuesday spent a record $130 million — more than $9 a voter — on a media war involving issues like car insurance rates, AIDS and raising cigarette taxes.

More than half the spending has centered on five conflicting propositions aimed at revamping the auto insurance rate-setting process and lowering premiums.

Insurance companies alone, fearing a budding "car premium revolt," poured more than $60 million into the battle, and trial lawyers' groups spent $15 million, making it the most expensive single campaign in the country outside a presidential race.

"This is the most massive financial attempt in corporate history to buy votes," said consumer advocate Ralph Nader, chief supporter of the proposition that would cut auto rates the most.

Other hotly contested initiatives would raise cigarette taxes by a record 25 cents per pack, override Republican Gov. George Deukmejian's veto of a state worker safety program, and tackle AIDS issues.

Elsewhere Tuesday: Maryland will decide whether to keep a 6-month-old law effectively banning cheap handguns; Michigan, Arkansas and Colorado will tackle the issue of abortion financing; South Dakota, Utah and Colorado will decide tax limitation proposals.

Florida, Arizona and Colorado voters will vote on whether to declare English their states' official language; and Oregon voters will consider the toughest statewide smoking ban in the nation.

Insurance companies have tried to convince California voters that the only real hope for rate relief would come from Proposition 104, which would create "no-fault" auto insurance and cap attorney fees.

Insurers have condemned the rival Nader-backed Proposition 103, which would cut rates 20 percent and impose government regulation. They also have criticized a rival measure backed by lawyers to cut auto premiums by 20 percent for good drivers and prohibit limiting lawyers' fees.

Despite the insurers' blitz of television commercials, polls showed voters favoring the Nader-backed measure. But a large undecided vote left the outcome unclear.

If two or more of the measures pass, court battles may produce some unintended hybrid.

California Proposition 102, backed by tax revolt champion Paul Gann, would require doctors to report people who have AIDS to county public health offices. It would also allow people charged with certain crimes to be tested for the deadly disease without their consent. The measure has been opposed by state health authorities.

Gann, who contracted acquired immune deficiency syndrome in 1982 from a blood transfusion, and other supporters argued that they were tired of watching public health sacrificed in the name of civil rights. Proponents received a boost late in the campaign when Deukmejian endorsed the measure.

A second AIDS measure would allow people charged with certain crimes to be tested for AIDS without their consent. Supporters claimed the measure would help protect victims of sex crimes, police and firefighters. But critics argued it could give victims a false sense of security.

Polls indicated voters leaning toward adopting both AIDS measures.

The tobacco industry spent $18 million to defeat a measure that would raise cigarette taxes 25 cents per pack and use the money for research and health care programs. But polls indicated the initiative could pass by a slim margin.

Health experts argued in their low-budget campaign that the measure would discourage smoking; the industry called it an unfair tax that would trigger a crime wave by encouraging cigarette smuggling.

California Proposition 97, meanwhile, would in effect override Deukmejian's veto in 1987 when he wiped out the private-employer portion of the California Occupational Safety and Health Act program, known as Cal-OSHA.

To supporters, including labor groups, the $7 million program axed by the governor was the nation's finest worker safety system, far more effective than its federal counterpart. To Deukmejian, it was a wasteful state bureaucracy that duplicated federal efforts. Polls indicated voters may pass the measure.

The California ballot has been stretched even further by hundreds of local measures across the state. San Francisco voters must wade through 25 additional propositions, including two involving the basing of the USS Missouri, the battleship on which the Japanese surrendered during World War II. An advisory measure in Berkeley supports Palestinian self-determination.

The lengthy ballot prompted some counties to announce they would apply a 10-minute limit on time spent in voting booths in order to avert long lines. That prompted a challenge by civil rights groups, who on Friday won a temporary restraining order from a federal judge. But on Sunday the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals overruled the lower court and approved the 10-minute limit.

What does he do come Wednesday?

By TERENCE HUNT
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — "Well, what do we do now?" George Bush asked Ronald Reagan the morning after they were elected eight years ago. Either Bush or Michael Dukakis will face that question come Wednesday, and the answer is not as evident now as it was in 1980.

The long campaign between Republican Bush and Democrat Dukakis has been filled with political symbols, such as the flag and the Pledge of Allegiance, but short on specifics about what either candidate actually would do in the White House.

There have been no overriding issues, such as a faltering economy or a threat to peace that have compelled Bush or Dukakis to come forward with bold ideas. For example, neither candidate has been willing to offer a concrete program for shrinking the huge budget deficit.

Reagan's election was viewed as a mandate for a change in course from the Carter administration. He pledged to cut taxes, build up the Pentagon and cut down the government.

Bush, ahead in the polls a few days before the election, promises to stay the course set by Reagan. "When you have to change horses in midstream, doesn't it make sense to switch to the one who's going the same way?" Bush asked.

On the other hand, if Dukakis managed an upset, there would be a major upheaval in policy and personnel. "The best America is yet to come," he promises. But again, few specifics.

With the now familiar invitation to "read my lips," Bush says he will not raise taxes and, indeed, will try to cut capital gains taxes. He says he will oppose new spending by Congress and personally negotiate with lawmakers for a "flexible freeze" on the budget.

He promises to keep America's military strong, pressing ahead with research and eventual development of the Star Wars missile defense shield, while at the same time seeking progress with the Soviet Union.

He has proposed no less than five summits, including an early meeting with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev to "size each other up correctly."

Dukakis promises a crackdown on tax cheats who he says beat the Treasury out of $110 billion a year. He says he'll hire more tax inspectors — which Bush seized on as a promise that Dukakis would put an IRS agent in every kitchen.

On taxes, Dukakis says no responsible candidate can rule out the possibility of new taxes, but that he'd ask an increase only as a last resort.

He says he will wipe out the trade deficit in four years and put the country on the course toward a balanced budget.

On defense, he calls Star Wars a fantasy but still would put $1 billion in the budget for it, about 25 percent of what it gets now. Dukakis promises to find a "sensible, affordable" way to modernize the land-based nuclear missile arsenal but opposes the MX missile.

While a Dukakis administration would bring a wholesale turnover in government managers, Bush would be expected to keep at least several of Reagan's Cabinet officers, including possibly Treasury Secretary Nicholas Brady, Attorney General Richard Thornburgh and Education Secretary Lauro Cavazos.

Former Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III, now Bush's campaign chairman, is a likely bet for secretary of state in a Bush administration.

Study: Rich-poor gap is widening; incomes depend more on women

By DAVID BRISCOE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — America's wealthiest families are keeping ahead of inflation, the poorest are losing ground, and many of the rest are holding even only because more family members are working, according to a new economic study.

The study conducted for the Economic Policy Institute shows a widening gap between rich and poor since President Reagan took office, with the top-earning 20 percent making nine times as much money in 1986 as the poorest 20 percent, compared with seven times as much in 1979.

Institute president Jeff Faux said the report shows average American families have been under greater economic pressure during the past decade than at any time since World War II.

"Without new economic policies it is clear that families can no longer count on steadily increasing incomes and that the next generations cannot expect to live better than their parents," Faux said.

Stephen Rose, a Seattle economist who wrote the report along with economist David Fasenfest of Louisville, said the widening gap between rich and poor is a reversal of trends in earlier decades.

The study concludes that without big increases in the number of women working, as many as 60 percent of American families — those earning less than $40,000 a year in 1986 — would have been unable to keep up with inflation between 1979 and 1986, the latest year for which complete data is available.

The report says the number of working wives increased from 55.4 percent in 1979 to 66.1 percent in 1986.

"This is an important first step in measuring the real economic benefit of having a wife work," Rose said in a telephone interview Sunday. But he cautioned that more study is needed to determine the additional costs families incur when the wife works, such as greater need for child care.

'Without new economic policies it is clear that families can no longer count on steadily increasing incomes.'

The institute, formed in 1986, is a non-partisan, non-profit organization which has often been critical of Reagan's conservative economic policies.

It said that with more women in the work force, average adjusted family income increased 7.3 percent from $38,492 in 1979 to $41,288 in 1986. The study multiplies 1979 earnings by 1.609 to adjust for inflation.

But it showed that income for the lower two-fifths of the nation, or those earning under $27,000, is slipping behind inflation.

Rose said the study used a standard economic practice of dividing the country into fifths by income.

The top group includes families that earned over $59,533 in 1986. Their income averaged $94,104, compared with $9,133 for families in the lowest fifth.

The report said salaries for most working wives have increased faster than inflation, while salaries for all but the richest American men haven't kept up. Wives' earnings, adjusted for inflation, increased 12.1 percent from an average $14,064 in 1979 to $15,768 in 1986, the study said, while husbands' adjusted earnings dropped from $23,204 to $22,240.

It also said young adults who do not finish college are doing "substantially worse" than those who were the same age a decade ago.

Low wages are forcing growing numbers of unattached young people — 1.5 million more than a decade ago — to "return to the nest" of their parents' households rather than living on their own, it said.

Sakharov gestures to reporters that it's late as he arrives Sunday in Newton, Mass.

Sakharov declares himself a free man

By ALAN COOPERMAN
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) — Andrei Sakharov arrived on his first journey outside the Soviet Union, declaring himself a free man and speaking out for a supporter jailed over a protest on behalf of the Nobel laureate nearly eight years ago.

The human rights activist told reporters at Logan International Airport on Sunday night that dissident mathematician Vazif Meilanov was imprisoned after staging a one-man protest on his behalf and now faces additional charges.

"I feel it is my duty now, at this moment, to remember this man and many others who remain in prison," Sakharov said.

Sakharov, winner of the 1975 Nobel Peace Prize for his defense of human rights, is scheduled to spend two weeks in the United States visiting relatives, undergoing medical tests and promoting a new international organization.

The trip comes less than two years after he was freed from internal exile in the industrial city of Gorky, where he had been sent because of his outspoken opposition to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

Using stepdaughter Tatiana Yankelevich as a translator, the tall, balding 67-year-old spoke for about 10 minutes but refused to answer questions. He appeared rumpled and tired after a 14-hour flight from Moscow.

"Two years ago, I became a free man when I returned from Gorky to Moscow," Sakharov said. "Now I have become even freer because I have been granted the right to travel around the world.

"But a man who staged a one-person demonstration on my behalf in January 1980 when I was exiled to Gorky remains in prison. The name of that man is Vazif Meilanov. He has been charged once again with a very serious crime and faces a long imprisonment."

Meilanov was a cellmate of Natan Sharansky, who was deported in 1986 for his human rights work. Sharansky, who now lives in Israel, said last May that Meilanov remained in Siberia.

Sakharov is traveling without his wife, Yelena Bonner, who saw him off with a kiss at Sheremetyevo Airport in Moscow.

He was starting his trip with a visit to her daughter by a previous marriage, Mrs. Yankelevich, Mrs. Yankelevich's husband, Efrem, and their two teen-age children in suburban Newton.

Sakharov is expected to visit Mrs. Bonner's son, Alexei Semyonov; Semyonov's wife, Liza Alekseyeva, and their 4-year-old daughter, Alexandra, in the nearby town of Westwood. It will be his first meeting with his granddaughter.

He is also scheduled to undergo a heart examination and may receive a pacemaker at Massachusetts General Hospital. Mrs. Bonner had cardiac bypass surgery at the hospital in January 1986.

Sakharov is expected to travel to New York, then Washington, where he will participate in a board meeting Nov. 13-17 of the International Foundation for the Survival and Development of Humanity, the first such session outside the Soviet Union.

The foundation, formed in January by Soviet and U.S. scientists and educators, is embarking on a worldwide campaign to raise $10 million for research on global problems.

Sakharov said Sunday he believed "my country ... and your country can do a great deal together for peace, for a world that is happy and close and without hunger, violence or disease."

Sakharov was a top Soviet physicist and helped develop its hydrogen bomb in the 1950s, but became a dissident leader in the 1970s. He was exiled to Gorky, a city about 250 miles from Moscow, in January 1980, a month after the Soviets invaded Afghanistan. His wife was banished to Gorky in August 1984.

They remained there until Gorbachev called them back to Moscow in December 1986.

Earlier that year, Gorbachev had told a French newspaper Sakharov could not travel outside the Soviet Union because he knew too many state secrets.

L.A. observes 75th anniversary of water aqueduct

By BRUCE V. BIGELOW
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — There was a carnival atmosphere when 30,000 people gathered on a dusty hillside 75 years ago to see water carried almost 226 miles through the city's new Owens River Aqueduct from the eastern Sierra Nevada.

"There it is! Take it!" shouted William Mulholland, the city water superintendent.

Los Angeles took it, and more.

Conceived with foresight, planned with guile, built in determination and surrounded by profiteering and hyperbole, the aqueduct, which opened Nov. 5, 1913, has spun a compelling history.

"The aqueduct to the Owens Valley was the foundation of the modern megalopolis. It allowed Los Angeles to invent itself," said William L. Kahrl, whose 1982 book Water and Power is considered an authoritative history of the project.

"What was done in the early 1900s is still very much with us," said Abe Hoffman, whose book Vision or Villainy is another definitive study. "The city of Los Angeles has been on a growth mentality really all the way."

Water allowed Los Angeles to make the desert bloom.

It made arid real estate in the San Fernando Valley valuable and led to widespread speculation.

But water diverted southward to Los Angeles also prevented the Owens River Valley from blossoming into the center of commerce that its turn-of-the-century residents wanted.

Los Angeles officials ensured this by buying land in the Owens Valley — at first covertly to acquire water rights and later imperiously to take irrigated farmland out of production and save even more water for the city.

Valley residents reacted by repeatedly bombing the aqueduct, and armed night riders took to the roads. The city responded with truckloads of armed guards.

Today, Los Angeles owns about 300,000 acres along the Nevada border.

Storytellers sympathetic to the ranchers portrayed the Owens Valley as a democratic Eden and the aqueduct as the evil serpent.

Nor could Hollywood resist embellishing the tale with John Wayne in the 1935 film New Frontier and Jack Nicholson in the 1974 movie Chinatown, a tale of graft and greed.

"I would classify Chinatown as a fine film and a great story — but not good history," Hoffman said.

Mulholland, the self-educated ditch digger who masterminded the aqueduct, had a tragic downfall.

He pronounced the new Saint Francis Dam northwest of the city safe, hours before it collapsed in 1928. More than 400 people were killed, homes and businesses were washed away and Mulholland resigned in disgrace.

Kahrl and others have concluded that the Los Angeles Department of Water and Power was neither benevolent nor malicious in its treatment of the Owens Valley. It was coldly practical.

"The irony," said Mulholland's granddaughter, Catherine, now 65, "is that all the land Los Angeles acquired in the Owens Valley is pristine and gorgeous and it's Los Angeles that's been trashed.

Iran-Contra probe to consider previous testimony

By JAMES ROWLEY
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — A new Iran-Contra grand jury is conducting what appears to be an investigation of possible perjury by witnesses questioned by Congress or another grand jury about the arms-for-hostages affair.

The new grand jury has viewed videotaped recordings of testimony given to the House and Senate committees that investigated the Reagan administration's arms deals with Iran and the diversion of money to the Nicaraguan rebels, said sources speaking on condition of anonymity.

Independent counsel Lawrence E. Walsh took measures to isolate his staff and the original Iran-Contra grand jury from news coverage of the congressional hearings.

He wanted to avoid defense accusations that he relied on evidence given to Congress under limited grants of immunity to bring charges against former White House aide Oliver L. North and others indicted earlier this year by the first Iran-Contra grand jury.

The latest grand jury investigation is being headed by K. Chris Todd, one of the few members of Walsh's staff who was exposed to congressional testimony given under grants of limited immunity from prosecution.

Todd's presence at the proceedings indicates that the grand jury, which had been hearing totally unrelated cases, is considering evidence from the congressional Iran-Contra hearings.

Walsh testified at a court hearing last spring that Todd had been exposed to congressional testimony and was no longer working on the case against North, former national security adviser John M. Poindexter and arms dealers Albert Hakim and retired Maj. Gen. Richard V. Secord.

North, Poindexter and Hakim received limited immunity from prosecution for their congressional testimony. Under the law, a prosecutor cannot take the testimony of a witness receiving limited immunity and use it as evidence against that person, unless the individual lied.

Besides cases of perjury, immunized testimony can also be used as evidence of crimes committed by other people — raising the possibility the new grand jury is using the congressional testimony to follow leads.

The second grand jury has been meeting regularly — two or three times weekly — since the middle of last month, said the sources. So far, no witnesses have testified in person, indicating prosecutors are still laying the groundwork for the investigation by playing the tapes.

Because grand jury proceedings are secret, it is unclear who might be suspected of giving false testimony, either to Congress or the original Iran-Contra grand jury.

Members of the House and Senate panels openly expressed doubts about the credibility of some of the congressional witnesses, including Poindexter.

In their recently published book Men of Zeal, two members of the committee, Sens. William Cohen, R-Maine, and George J. Mitchell, D-Maine, note that Poindexter "said 184 times he could not recall events about which he was questioned."

The memory lapses by a Navy rear admiral known for his keen intellect "raised serious questions about Poindexter's credibility," the two senators wrote.

Walsh's staff would also be in a better position than the congressional committees to assess the congressional testimony that Secord and Hakim gave about secret Swiss bank accounts and dummy corporations through which the arms-for-hostage money flowed.

The congressional panels never saw the records of the secret bank accounts, which Walsh only obtained after protracted legal proceedings in Swiss courts.

Over the past six years I've watched with interest the comments from the Political Science Department of West Texas State. I'm yet to hear them refer to our State Legislature as anything but liberal. Now, I know the Democrats are trying hard this election year to make us believe that they've changed their philosophy, and that the term liberal no longer fits them. Why, they even went to great lengths to write a party platform that says absolutely nothing. By not publicly stating their liberal beliefs they can deny everything.

Within the next three years, these Democrats, if allowed to retain their liberal dominance of our State Legislature, will redistrict the state representative boundaries to favor their liberal candidates and party. It is essential that we Republicans speak up now and say NO MORE! By electing Teel Bivins and Tom Christian you will be helping us reach our goal of a Republican majority in 1990. More importantly, you'll be helping us rid the government of the liberal "tax and spend" philosophy that has, for too long, prevailed.

Ambassador says U.S, Pakistan ruining Afghanistan plan

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet ambassador to Afghanistan, stepping up pressure on Afghan rebels to halt their advances, said the agreement on Soviet withdrawal is near ruin because of U.S. and Pakistani arms supplies to the insurgents.

The statement to legislators in the Afghan capital, Kabul, followed an announcement Friday that the Soviet Union had stopped removing its soldiers from Afghanistan because of increased attacks by Islamic guerrillas.

Soviet SS-1 missiles and sophisticated MiG-27 warplanes also have been sighted in Afghanistan in the past week.

The concerted diplomatic and military pressure indicated the guerrilla offensive against the pro-Soviet Afghan government has pushed the Soviet Union past its level of tolerance.

Yuli Vorontsov, the newly appointed Soviet ambassador, said the supply of weapons to guerrillas by the United States and Pakistan "is a very serious blow to the Geneva accords which practically torpedoes them."

Vorontsov, in addition to being ambassador to Afghanistan, is a first deputy foreign minister with considerable influence and experience negotiating the Red Army's exit from Afghanistan.

Vorontsov spoke during a meeting of the foreign affairs commissions of the two houses of the Afghan Parliament. His remarks were carried by the Soviet news agency Tass.

"The time has come for a new international debate of all aspects of the situation in Afghanistan and around it, because foreign powers — Pakistan and the United States — are involved here that push the opposition toward continuing the bloodletting," he said.

Vorontsov said U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar could play an important role in any new debate on Afghanistan.

Perez de Cuellar, in Geneva for Iran-Iraq peace talks, did not comment on the Afghanistan developments during brief remarks to reporters.

The United Nations helped negotiate the agreement signed in Geneva in April that led to the beginning of the Soviet withdrawal. The agreement was signed by the Soviet Union, United States, Pakistan and Afghanistan.

The Soviet Union and Afghanistan say the supplying of arms to the Afghan rebels is a violation of the agreement.

But diplomats say the United States and Soviet Union tacitly agreed at the time of the signing that one side could continue arming its client if the other did the same.

The Soviet Union withdrew half of its 100,000 soldiers from Afghanistan between May 15-Aug. 15. The withdrawal was to be completed by Feb. 15.

But Alexander Bessmertnykh, a first deputy foreign minister, told reporters in Moscow the withdrawal was suspended because of rebel bombings, mortar and rocket attacks.

He said the Soviet Union has sent fresh soldiers into Afghanistan with more powerful weapons, but he said the quantity of troops and weapons has not increased.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said the Soviet moves "raise speculation that they aren't going to live up to the Geneva accords."

Hirohito suffers serious loss of blood

TOKYO (AP) — Emperor Hirohito's vital signs stabilized today, one day after his most serious loss of blood since falling ill seven weeks ago with internal hemorrhaging, an imperial palace spokesman said.

The 87-year-old Hirohito, who has received almost daily blood transfusions since he first coughed up blood Sept. 19, received 4.66 pints in emergency blood transfusions Sunday, spokesman Kenji Maeda said.

Also today Hirohito's second grandson, Prince Aya, arrived in Tokyo after he was called back from Britain for the second time since the emperor took ill. Aya, 22, is studying at Oxford University.

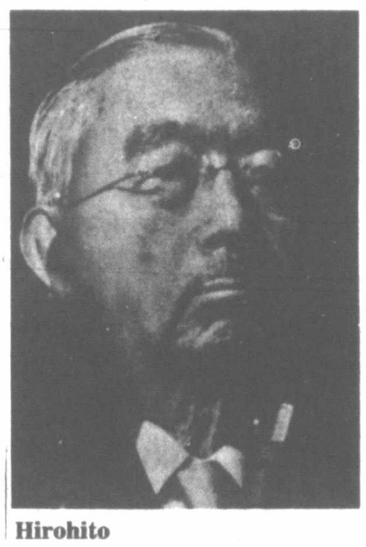

He returned to Japan at the end of September for nine days when Hirohito's condition took a turn for the worse, and his latest return was expected to fuel concern over the fate of the bedridden emperor.

The world's longest-reigning living monarch was "in stable condition for the time being," Maeda told reporters. But "doctors fear he may bleed again," he said.

"His temperature and other signs are stable," Maeda said, but did not give the figures.

Hirohito received the transfusions Sunday because of "considerable" amounts of blood lost during intensified hemorrhaging, palace officials said.

Kyodo News Service quoted palace sources as saying the emperor discharged 56 ounces of blood Sunday.

Hirohito

With the latest transfusions, the emperor has received a total of 40.16 pints of blood since September, more than three times the blood circulating in his body.

Doctors believe the emperor is bleeding in the upper intestinal area, where he underwent a bypass operation in September last year.

Hirohito's systolic blood pressure, which fell below the critical level of 100 at one time Sunday, later recovered slightly but was still well below the 150-point level of the past few days.

Hirohito was "awake and fully conscious" in his room at the Fukiage Palace, and had not discharged any blood today, the spokesman said.

Hirohito's son, Crown Prince Akihito, 54, has assumed imperial duties that include placing an official seal on government documents and meeting visiting dignitaries.

Under Japan's constitution, the emperor — who was once worshiped as a god — is a symbolic head of state.

Huge gray paper wasp nest now on exhibit in a museum

WENKSVILLE, Pa. (AP) — Stirring up a hornet's nest is a bad idea to begin with, but riling up the 20,000 paper-making wasps that once inhabited a nest nearly the size of a kitchen table could have proved fatal.

The gray paper nest, a permanent exhibit of the Wilson College Museum of Natural History, was built in one season by bald-faced hornets, a species common to North America.

It measures 55 inches long, 30 inches wide and 22 inches deep. It is the largest of its kind found in the state and could be a national record as well, according to officials of the Pennsylvania State Museum and Geno J. Torri, director of the Wilson College Museum.

The Smithsonian Institution is reviewing the dimensions to confirm its place in the record books, says Torri, a regional representative for the Smithsonian and an adjunct professor at Wilson College and Millersville University.

Michael D. King discovered the nest in the eaves of the outkitchen of a home he recently bought near Wenksville. The two-story white clapboard house is deep in the heart of fruit country.

King wanted to make sure the nest was preserved, and when contacted by Torri agreed to donate the natural oddity to the museum.

Removing the nest from the eaves without destroying it took more than an hour. King first had to remove an aluminum roof, where the beginnings of new nests also were found. Torri then helped him cut the lattices and joist to remove the nest intact.

The nest is being mounted in the ceiling of the museum. To better illustrate the unusual size of the nest, a more typical nest will be placed nearby.

Hornet is a name given to social wasps, Torri says. The females are the nest-builders and also collect the food. They normally build the paper nests in the ground, in hollow trees, on tree branches or under building overhangs.

Wasps chew wood and leaves into pulp, which they plaster together to form a paper nest of hexagonal cells.

Each year, only young fertilized queens survive past the late fall. They abandon their nests to find shelter elsewhere to hibernate for the winter.

A nearby chimney may have extended the nest-making season for the hornets, says Torri, an educational coordinator for NASA.

"(It) may have provided the warmth necessary for an early start for the queen to come out of hibernation and begin laying her eggs," he says. "The hornets may have continued to build the nest into the late fall ... because there was adequate heat and protection from the elements."

The abundance of food to be found in nearby orchards probably also was a factor, Torri says, adding that the nest appears to have been abandoned for a number of years.

These cops really enjoy clowning around

Editor's note — They are the clown cops of Cincinnati, Ohio, a dynamic duo that tries to defuse domestic disturbances with a bit of humor, an idea that came from a psychologist in upstate New York. Like a poet once said, laughter is their shield. Most of the time it works, they say. But not always.

By LESLIE ZGANJAR
Associated Press Writer

When they got the call to investigate a domestic disturbance, the two cops in Cincinnati, Ohio, went into their act.

They pulled down their hats to make their ears protrude, loosened their ties, buttoned their shirts askew, and rapped on the door playfully with a "shave and a haircut" beat.

"Is that your car down there with the lights on?" the officers deadpanned as an angry man opened the door.

The man, seeing the oddball cops, forgot he was angry and broke into a smile.

"Police arriving at the scene of a domestic dispute, for instance, should try performing a Bugs Bunny impression or try raiding the refrigerator before unholstering their nightsticks," says Robert A. Baron, chairman of the Psychology Department at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute in Troy. "Well-timed clowning often deters violence more effectively than the threat of force."

Cincinnati police officials concede that they were skeptical when they first heard Baron explain his idea on a local talk show. But since they began trying it in 1983, they're finding it works.

"Our bottom-line goal is to resolve conflict with the least amount of force," says Michael Gardner, a Cincinatti police officer who teaches the humor technique to new recruits. "Just having the police show up doesn't necessarily get attention."

Baron was teaching at Purdue University in Lafayette, Ind., in the early 1970s when he first came up with the idea of using humor to defuse potentially violent situations.

"The basic idea of the research centered on incompatible responses," he says. "If someone is angry, you do something that will make them feel good. You'll reduce their anger and the things that follow it, like aggression.

"The basic rule of thumb is that when people are experiencing strong emotions, their logical thinking decreases. The research tries to counter this. We try to pull people toward a calmer state."

Gardner says Baron's ideas work best in domestic disputes.

"The more emotionally upset someone is the more effective it is," he says. "In a family fight, a person can be so locked into what's going on they can have blinders on."

Baron explains that "once you get people off the track, their anger decreases." But he concedes that this technique may defuse a volatile situation only temporarily.

"The idea is to get in quickly and stop the process," he says. "It's done early in the process, when anger is just beginning. It's not powerful late in the process. Then you might want to withdraw."

Gardner was the first officer in Cincinnati to try clowning, but he soon persuaded his partner to join him. He says they developed several acts.

"We'd often knock with a 'shave and a haircut' beat to it," says Gardner, a 15-year veteran of the force.

Once inside, if the parties insisted on fighting, Gardner and his partner would start rearranging the furniture in the room, saying they needed space to loosen up for the fight.

Gardner says he was once caught off guard by his partner who gave a "first-rate performance" and stopped a violent family fight.

"He threw his hat down during a domestic dispute and said he didn't have to take this anymore," Gardner says. "Eventually this guy we had been telling to leave told my partner, 'It's no big deal. I'll go take a walk.'"

Gardner took a leave of absence a year ago to travel around the country sharing what he knew with other police departments.

He says he knows of no other police departments using the technique, "But many are becoming interested."

Old ad signs are valuable to collectors

By RALPH and TERRY KOVEL

Antiques

Old advertising signs are now being displayed in houses and restaurants as if they were formal paintings or prints. But while collectors are interested in certain types of signs, decorators are interested in others, so prices may vary.

The highest prices are paid for signs made of tin before World War I. The colorful lithographed design must include a picture.

Best are signs picturing Uncle Sam, the American flag, cartoon characters, attractive women, blacks, automobiles, trains or planes. Pictures of houses, bottles, table settings and well-known products like Coca-Cola or Lipton tea also add value.

Signs that move bring premium prices. The record price for a tin sign is $14,300, which was paid for a Buster Brown sign that had turning wheels as part of the design.

Size is important, too. The most expensive signs seem to be about 20 inches wide by 30 inches high, a size that fits well on the wall above a sofa (it's also the most popular size for an oil painting).

Enameled signs are the most expensive type in England. Few of these were made in the United States, so prices for them are not as high. Paper signs are also popular but must have bright colors and interesting graphics.

Q. I am the owner of a handsome "piano-desk" that belonged to my great-great-grandfather who was a government agent for the Indian tribes of Missouri in the 1830s. It is decorated rosewood and was probably purchased before 1853.

Family tradition says it was the first piano shipped west of the Mississippi River. On the front it says "New Patent, E.N. Scherr, Late Makers to their Majesties the King and Princess of Denmark, Philadelphia". Can you tell me about the company?

A. E.N. Scherr worked in Philadelphia, Pa. about 1825. Look for a number on the piano. He numbered his pianos from 95 to 260 in the years 1830-35. By 1840 he made piano number 410. This suggests he made about 30 pianos a year.

***

Q. When was clear crystal jewelry popular?

A. Glass or stone cut crystal has been popular for jewelry for hundreds of years. Crystal was often mounted flat against a colored foil backing. It made the crystal appear to be amethyst or topaz.

The cut crystal bead necklaces of the 1880s were popular until 1914. They remained out of favor until the 1970s. In the 1920s, crystal beads were often mounted in silver and strung as scattered links on long chains.

There is now a fad for quartz crystals in the natural state, which are hung on simple chains. They are believed to bring good luck to the wearer.

Q. My blue and white dishes picture pilgrims and other Thanksgiving scenes. The backs of the dishes are marked with a circle and the words "Burbak, Plymouth, Mass., Copyrighted 1909 by A.S. Burbank". There is also a diamond with the letters "RSM, Staffordshire, England."

A. Your dishes were made by an English pottery firm that used the diamond mark of Rowland and Marsellus. They were ordered by an American store, the A.S. Burbank company in Plymouth, Mass. The dishes were probably sold as souvenirs to tourists visiting Plymouth Rock.

***

Q. Is there a difference between a coffeepot and a teapot?

A. There was a difference in the 18th and 19th centuries. A teapot was usually small and round; a coffeepot was larger and taller.

Modern pots are made to hold either coffee or tea. If there are two pots in a set, the smaller one is for tea.

Widower, 79, discovers new lease on life

Dear Abby

Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: You are correct to say that hotel managers do not care whether couples traveling together are married or not. After I lost my first wife to cancer in the 1950s, I made trips to Las Vegas, New Orleans, San Antonio and elsewhere — signing the hotel register with my name only, and marking "2" in the proper space when I took a lady along.

After losing my second wife to cancer, I was 79 years old and thought my time for romance was over — then I met a lovely lady at church. She was a 65-year-young widow. Before we married, she wanted a trial honeymoon trip and so did I. She wanted to go to the Swiss Alps and I wanted to go to the Orient. We compromised and went to both!

The travel agent made all our reservations in the name of "Mr. and Mrs." However, our passports were in our own names. The tour hostess called us "The Andersons," and the only embarrassment occurred when others on the tour asked us how long we had been married because we looked like honeymooners. We were, actually, but we weren't married yet. Our biggest difficulty was getting a double bed instead of twin beds.

I'm 82, and happier than I ever thought I could be at this age. All I can say is what my wife's daughter told her after meeting me: "Go for it, Mama!"

ANDY ANDERSON, DESERT HOT SPRINGS, CALIF.

DEAR ANDY: Thanks for another testimonial to the fact that people are not only living longer, they are enjoying their later years more. Go for it, Papa!

* * *

DEAR ABBY: You recently published a letter from a young woman who wanted to get married before her sister, who had announced her engagement first.

My son had the same problem when he decided to get married after we had begun making the arrangements for his sister's wedding. The perfect solution for our family was to make it a double wedding! The brides agreed to it, and all the brothers and sisters from the three families involved were included in the bridal parties.

It turned out to be enormously successful, and the wedding was far more memorable than two small weddings would have been. Also, it was appreciated by the out-of-town friends and relatives who didn't have to make two trips.

MARILYN IPPOLITO, PHOENIX

DEAR MARILYN: My twin sister and I also had a double wedding (circa 1939), and we recommend it. But not every bride would be willing to share equal billing with another bride.

Sweeney-led comeback fails to lift Cowboys

Pokes post worst start since 1960

By TOM CANAVAN
AP Sports Writer

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. — The New York Giants put together their best half of the season, and their 26-0 halftime lead was sufficient to hand the Dallas Cowboys their sixth straight defeat — the first time that's happened since their inaugural season in 1960.

Cowboys coach Tom Landry replaced ineffective starting quarterback Steve Pelluer with Kevin Sweeney in the second half, and the 1986 Super Bowl champions held off a Sweeney-led comeback Sunday to post a 29-21 NFL victory over Dallas.

"We're starting to get that Super Bowl ego back even though there still is a long way to go," defensive end Eric Dorsey said. "We're starting to show signs of breaking away (from the rest of the division). You don't see Dallas blown out like that in the first half."

One point to be made is that this is not the Cowboys of old. In losing, Dallas, 2-8, dropped its sixth straight, marking the first time since 1960 that the Cowboys have lost six in a row in the same season and virtually assuring them of a third straight losing season.

However, almost every one of the Giants said the game was something special. The Giants dominated the opening 30 minutes as they scored on five straight possessions, including three touchdowns set up by Dallas turnovers.

Lawrence Taylor personally set up two touchdowns with sacks that resulted in fumbles by Pelluer deep in Cowboy territory, while the other TD came after New York drove 85 yards following a Herschel Walker fumble.

Ottis Anderson cashed in on the first turnover with a 1-yard run, while quarterback Phil Simms hit wide receiver Stephen Baker on TD passes of 22 and 6 yards following the other fumbles.

Paul McFadden added field goals of 37, 47 and 50 yards as the Giants, 7-3, won their fourth straight game to remain in first place in the NFC East, a game ahead of both Washington and Phoenix, who both rallied to win Sunday.

"At times today, I felt we were playing the kind of football that we have to play," Simms said. "We got very good defense and our offense took advantage of the opportunities."

And it was something the Cowboys noticed.

"All this stuff they have been writing (about the Giants) about them not playing well," cornerback Everson Walls said. "They certainly picked a good time to step up and do what they are capable of doing."

However, the Giants got just three first downs in the second half and had to sit back and watch in admiration as Sweeney replaced Pelluer and picked them apart.

The former Fresno State star hit 19 of 37 passes for 189 yards for three touchdowns. The last one came on a fourth-down, 2-yard TD toss to Ray Alexander with 1:59 remaining.

Dallas recovered the onside kick and reached the New York 29 before linebacker Gary Reasons knocked down a fourth-down Sweeney pass.

"I felt pretty good," Sweeney said. "I had a lot of fun. It was nice to get an opportunity to go out and play. That's all I've ever asked for. This isn't the way it was drawn up on the chalkboard but sometimes you have to go out there and wing it."

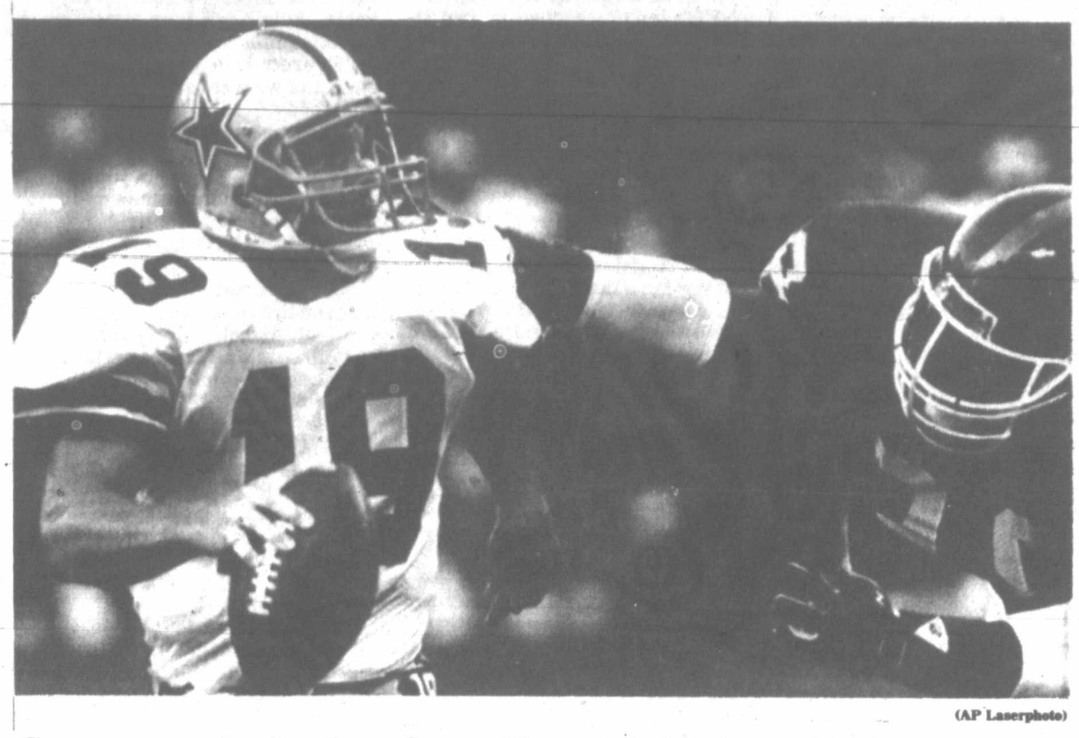

Landry said it's too early for him to say which quarterback he will go with next week against Minnesota. Sweeney and Pelluer also deflected questions about who should start.

New York played the final quarter without Taylor, who suffered a bruised pectoral muscle late in the third-quarter tackling Sweeney. The injury is not believed to be serious, teammates said.

The Giants will travel to Phoenix for a first-place showdown with the Cardinals, who edged San Francisco in the final seconds on Sunday.

"The big thing is you have to win in November," defensive end Leonard Marshall said. "If you can win in November it's going to carry you on. If you don't win in November, you can kiss it goodbye."

The Giants defeated Dallas 12-10 earlier this season. This marked the second time since 1963 that New York won both regular season games with the Cowboys. The other year was 1984.

Area cagers getting set for upcoming season

Area boys and girls basketball teams are getting set for the opening tipoff of the 1988-89 season, which for most squads will be next Tuesday, Nov. 15.

This is the first of a four-part series on the area districts and teams that will compete within the Pampa News coverage area. The first two parts are devoted to District 4-1A, part three will outline Districts 2-2A and 6-1A, while the final section covers District 3-1A.

District 4-1A

KELTON LIONS

☐ GIRLS: Dave Johnson returns as both the boys and girls basketball coach at Kelton. He led the Lady Lions to a second-place finish in the district with a 26-7 record last season. They made it all the way to the finals in the regional playoffs before falling to Nazareth.

This year may be a little slower in getting started since Johnson is also coaching the volleyball team, which is still involved in the area playoffs.

After posting an 18-6 record to win the district, the Lady Lion spikers went on to capture a victory in the bi-district round of the playoffs and will face Knox City in the area game this week. Thus the Kelton girls have yet to begin basketball workouts.

After losing five seniors from last year's nine-member squad, the Lady Lion cagers are left with only one returning starter, Noel Johnson, and one senior, Karla Harris. In all, the '88-89 squad will likely consist of six players.

"We're real short on depth, and we're real young," Johnson said. "I don't know what kind of year we can expect yet."

The Lady Lions open regular season play when they host Darrouzett Nov. 15.

☐ BOYS: The Lions captured the District 4-1A championship with a 24-6 record during the '87-88 campaign. They advanced to the subregional round of the playoffs before being defeated by Paducah to end a successful season.

As with any defending champ, the Lions will be sitting in the hot seat this year. But with four returning starters and a deep bench, they appear ready to rise to the occasion.

After competing with only nine players last year, this season's 15-member squad is a real bounty. The four returning starters, all of whom are seniors, include Chad Caddell, Brett Buckingham, Andy Singleton and Scott Bodine.

"I expect them to be fairly tough this year," Johnson said. "Last year's leading scorer, Caddell, and leading rebounder, Buckingham, are back, so we ought to show up real well. The others have started for two years, and if I can find someone to fill in the point guard role, we should be all right."

The Lions also open the season by hosting Darrouzett on Nov. 15.

ALLISON ANTELOPES

☐ GIRLS: Mark Makeever returns as mentor for both the girls and boys squads this season. The Lady Antelopes, who begin their fourth week of workouts today, are hoping to rebound from last year's 5-17, fifth-place finish.

And, according to Makeever, that is a realistic goal. "We've got all of our girls back from last year, so of course we're expecting to have a better year," he said.

The Lady Antelopes, consisting of only seven players, are suffering a bit from a shortage of personnel, a condition that has plagued many of the area schools. "We've been down on players for awhile," Makeever said, "and most of the teams in our district have been."

Of all the squads in the district, Makeever picks Wheeler, the defending champion, as the team to beat.

The girls' regular season begins on Nov. 15.

☐ BOYS: The Antelopes are looking to seize the District 4-1A crown from the Kelton Lions after finishing second behind them in the conference standings last season.

Allison posted an 18-9 record and concluded the year with a trip to the area playoffs. Two seniors have been lost to graduation, leaving the Antelopes with a seven-man roster at this point.

As with the girls, Makeever's boys' squad is a little low in the depth department. "If we can keep everybody healthy and not get in foul trouble," Makeever said, "we'll be all right. Those are things that you can't control."

The Antelopes begin play Nov. 15.

WHEELER MUSTANGS

☐ GIRLS: The Lady Mustangs make their bid to defend the District 4-1A title under returning coach Jan Newland.

After finishing 22-5 in the regular season, Wheeler ended the year with a regional quarterfinal berth in the state playoffs.

After three weeks of practice, the Lady Mustangs played their first scrimmage of the season against Pampa and Panhandle last Thursday.

They have five returners from the '87-88 squad, including three starters, one of them an All-District selection, and one player who played a majority of the time last season. Newland expects to carry 10 to 12 cagers this year.

"We're looking pretty good," she said. "We won't have the height we had in the past, but we're quick and aggressive."

The Lady Mustangs will host Canadian on Nov. 15 to tipoff the season.

☐ BOYS: Since Wheeler has one game remaining in its football schedule, the Mustangs will not begin basketball workouts until next week. Mike Newland will return as coach for the Wheeler cagers this season.

The Mustang gridders played well into December of last year en route to the state championship, which took a big slice out of the basketball season. The '87-88 Wheeler cagers finished third in the district with a 6-7 record.

After being eliminated from the football playoff picture by Follett last week, the Mustang B-ballers will get an earlier start this time around. Newland hopes that will work in Wheeler's favor.

"Most of the other teams usually have more time to work on the court, and if they have any talent, they're usually better than us," he said.

Wheeler will have two returning starters, Shane Guest and Cory Cornette. All the others first-team players from last year's squad, with the exception of Bubba Smith (who transferred), have graduated.

"If we can get some kids to come along this year, we should do pretty well," Newland said. "Kelton will still be tough, and most of the teams are usually ready to play us. Being the biggest school in the district, when we go someplace, they want to beat us."

The boys also will also open the season with a home date against Canadian on Nov. 15.

(Tuesday: The remainder of the teams in District 4-1A)

Cards' 17-point comeback drops 49ers

By BARRY WILNER
AP Sports Writer

The Phoenix Cardinals left their game in the locker room for one half. They left the San Francisco 49ers searching for answers in the second half.

The Cardinals stormed back from a 23-0 deficit to beat the 49ers 24-23 Sunday when Neil Lomax hit Roy Green for a 9-yard touchdown with three seconds to go. That capped a 17-point fourth-quarter comeback that had the Cardinals bubbling and the 49ers confused.

"You look at the players over there and most of them are totally spent," Phoenix coach Gene Stallings said. "That's what these kind of games are all about — you leave it on the field — and that's just what we did.

"When you come from behind playing that kind of football team with time working against you, that's a big win. It wasn't the greatest game we played from start to finish, but we made some plays when we had to."

Lomax made most of them. He was 9-for-16 for 141 yards after three quarters, then connected on 16 of 25 in the fourth period. He had 323 yards passing despite being sacked seven times.

"Our offense played well but people forget our defense started playing well in the second half," Lomax said. "When the offensive line gives me time like it did late in the game, I can find people."

There was plenty of wonder among the 49ers.

"It's one of the worst defeats ever," center Randy Cross said. "It ranks up there. You can point all sorts of fingers, but the bottom line is we didn't do enough in the fourth quarter."

Added quarterback Steve Young, "It's 23-0 in the third quarter. That's a pretty good lead in the NFL. They came back with some tremendous scoring drives. We'll look back on this and just pull our hair out."

Elsewhere, it was Chicago 28, Tampa Bay 10; Buffalo 13, Seattle 3; the Los Angeles Raiders 13, San Diego 3; Washington 27, New Orleans 24; Philadelphia 30, the Los Angeles Rams 24; Atlanta 20, Green Bay 0; Cincinnati 42, Pittsburgh 7; New England 21, Miami 10; the New York Giants 29, Dallas 21; Minnesota 44, Detroit 17; Denver 17, Kansas City 11; and Indianapolis 38, the New York Jets 14.

Tonight's game has Cleveland at Houston.

Bears 28, Buccaneers 10

With Coach Mike Ditka watching from his hospital room while recovering from a heart attack, Vince Tobin coached the Bears to their eighth victory in 10 games, the best record in the NFC.

Tobin's defense clamped down on Tampa Bay quarterback Vinny Testaverde with two interceptions and two sacks.

"We didn't go out with the idea of playing this game for anyone but ourselves and the players," Tobin said. "The players know how to win on the field and they came through.

"I look at it as we are 8-and-2 and as an extremely critical game. After losing to New England last week and all the things that happened this week, we had a lot of reasons to fail. We could have been behind the eight ball."

Bills 13, Seahawks 3

At Seattle, the Bills beat former coach Chuck Knox for the first time and upped their league-best record to 9-1 with their fifth consecutive win. Buffalo's defense didn't allow a touchdown for the second straight week and yielded just 145 total yards. Bruce Smith had two of Buffalo's four sacks.

Robb Riddick scored on a 1-yard run and Scott Norwood, the NFL's leading scorer, kicked 23- and 27-yard field goals.

"They deserve to be 9-1," Knox said. "I said going into this game that they were the best team and I didn't see anything out there to change my mind."

The Seahawks, 5-5, fell into a tie for first place in the AFC West with Denver and the Raiders.

Raiders 13, Chargers 3

Los Angeles held San Diego to 63 yards on the ground — Marcus Allen, with 67, and Bo Jackson, with 64, each had more rushing yardage than the Chargers.

The game's only touchdown came when the Raiders capped a nine-play, 58-yard drive with a 7-yard scoring pass from Steve Beuerlein to Trey Junkin. Chris Bahr had field goals of 36 and 29 yards, while Vince Abbott's 40-yarder provided San Diego's points.

Redskins 27, Saints 24

New Orleans, 7-3, has lost by a total of six points in its defeats. When Washington rallied from a 24-17 hole with 8½ minutes left, the Saints failed to tie the league record of consecutive road victories. New Orleans, tied for the NFC West lead with the Rams, had won 10 straight away from home.

But the Redskins, 6-4, drove 94 yards for the tying touchdown, an 8-yard pass from Doug Williams to Ricky Sanders. After a punt, Washington moved 64 yards to set up Chip Lohmiller's winning 23-yard field goal with 47 seconds to go.

Morten Anderson was short on a 49-yard field goal attempt with four seconds remaining for New Orleans.

Eagles 30, Rams 24

The Eagles had the lowest-rated pass defense in the league, but it befuddled Jim Everett and the Rams. Everett had thrown just five interceptions before being picked off four times by Philadelphia, 5-5.

"Everett is a great quarterback, but we were able to confuse him today," said William Frizzell, who had one of the interceptions. "We mixed it up pretty good with our zone and man-to-man defense and we made up our minds to concentrate on our responsibilities and be consistent every down."

Still, Everett nearly led his team back to a sixth straight road win. But Frizzell stole a pass deep in Philadelphia territory with 24 seconds remaining.

Falcons 20, Packers 0

Green Bay suffered a second straight shutout for the first time since 1932 — the Packers lost 28-0 to Buffalo last weekend.

For Atlanta, it was its first win at home after eight straight defeats and the Falcons' first shutout since a 35-0 whipping of New Orleans in 1982.

Chris Miller hit 15 of 25 passes for 177 yards, including a 45-yard scoring strike to Gene Lang, and the defense forced seven turnovers.

Bengals 42, Steelers 7

Eddie Brown needed only seven catches to compile a club-record 216 yards receiving. He teamed with Boomer Esiason for an 86-yard scoring pass on the Bengals' second play from scrimmage and Cincinnati, leading the AFC Central at 8-2, never looked back.

Esiason, the league's top passer, had no TD passes in the past two games, but threw against the Steelers as Cincinnati rolled up more than 500 yards of offense.

The Steelers, 2-8, have their worst record since 1969, when they went 1-13 in Chuck Noll's first year as coach.

Vikings 44, Lions 17

At Minneapolis, Wade Wilson had the biggest passing day of his career with 391 yards and two touchdowns. He was 28-for-25 and found Anthony Carter eight times for 188 yards.

Wilson hit his first 14 passes in the second half for 205 yards. Minnesota, 6-4, outgained Detroit 553-89 yards. The Vikings had the ball for 41:09 and made 33 first downs while allowing only eight.

Broncos 17, Chiefs 11

At Denver, the Chiefs couldn't match their only win this year, a 20-13 decision over the Broncos. Instead, Kansas City fell to 1-8-1, the worst record in the league, getting just three Nick Lowery field goals and a safety.

At 5-5, the Broncos are tied for the AFC West lead. John Elway threw a 6-yard touchdown pass to Vance Johnson and Sammy Winder added another score for Denver.

Sports Notebook

It wasn't by accident that Frenship's feared passing attack didn't show up much in Friday night's District 1-4A game against Pampa.

Frenship quarterback Kevin McCullough entered the game with 1,240 yards passing and 15 touchdowns. He threw only 10 passes in the 38-22 win over the Harvesters, completing four for 61 yards.

"I really anticipated them throwing the ball more, but that was part of their game plan," said Pampa head coach Dennis Cavalier. "I talked to coach Davis (Frenship coach Bobby Davis) after the game and he wanted to keep the ball out of our hands as much as possible. He figured by throwing the ball, it would give us more scoring opportunities."

The strategy worked because Frenship is now only one victory away from clinching a playoff spot. The Tigers and Levelland are tied for first place and those two teams meet Friday night to determine the district championship.

In other 1-4A games Saturday, Hereford walloped Borger 48-7, Levelland blanked Randall 28-0 and Lubbock Estacado outscored Dumas 49-26.

Pampa punter-receiver Ricky Sewell, who sustained a neck injury in the second quarter against Frenship, was taken to the hospital by ambulance. However, the 136-pound senior returned to the football stadium before the game was over.

"He's going to be fine," said Pampa coach Dennis Cavalier. "He hyperextended his neck, but he was up working the kinks out Saturday. He's pretty sore, but okay."

Pampa's Robert Perez will be joined at the state cross-country meet in Georgetown by fellow District 1-4A competitors Rodger Krueger of Randall and Benny Carrasco of Hereford. Krueger ran the three miles in 15:17 to win the Class 4A regional title Saturday in Lubbock. Carrasco was timed at 16:10 to finish fourth while Perez had a 16:39 to place ninth. Only the top 10 qualifiers advanced to Saturday's state meet.

Canadian will be represented at the state cross-country meet by Kim McEntire in the Class 2A girls' division. McEntire won her fourth consecutive regional race with a time of 12:30.

Dumas, the District 1-4A volleyball champions, has reached the Regional I-4A semifinals. Dumas defeated Fort Stockton 15-3, 15-4, Saturday in a Class 4A area playoff match. District runner-up Hereford was eliminated by Pecos 15-4, 15-6, in the other playoff match.

The Pampa High basketball team scrimmaged Caprock Saturday and head coach Robert Hale reported that the Harvesters held their own against the Longhorns.

"Their defense gave us some trouble, but we came out of it looking pretty good," Hale said.

Harvester basketball tickets are now on sale to previous ticketholders. Tickets are $30 and can be purchased at the high school athletic office. Tickets go on sale to the general public Nov. 14.

The Harvesters open the season Nov. 18 at Dalhart.

Two orangutans at the Audubon Zoo in New Orleans enjoy the warm sunshine of this weekend. With temperatures in the 80s, fall seems quite distant for these two as they bask in the early fall sun.

Bentsen: 'Democrats are on your side'

By STEVEN KOMAROW
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS (AP) — Democratic vice presidential candidate Lloyd Bentsen is ending his campaign with a simple, two-part refrain — accusing the Republicans of dirty campaigning and telling people that the Democrats are "on your side."

Michael Dukakis' running mate delivers that message today in a last pitch to bring home Texas to the Democratic column, and then heads out on a hastily-arranged election eve swing to Arkansas and Missouri.

Bentsen spends the daylight hours today making a whirlwind tour of Texas and nearby Louisiana, including stops in Dallas, Shreveport, La., Houston, and Beaumont and San Antonio, Texas.

The schedule was originally scheduled to end after San Antonio, but late Sunday the campaign added nighttime rallies in Little Rock, Ark., and Kansas City, Mo. — two states the Democrats are still hoping to swing in their direction.

In addition to his public stops, Bentsen will be doing interviews via satellite with television stations in several other key states.

"We're doing hand-to-hand combat in Texas and we're going for the airwaves" in battleground states, said Mike McCurry, the campaign's director of communications.

The expanded schedule, he said, was "to take advantage of a dramatic tightening of the race" in Missouri and Arkansas, McCurry said. "The question is whether it is enough time" to bring about an upset of the Republican ticket, he said.

Dukakis himself has launched into around-the-clock campaigning heading into Election Day, with an early morning event in Cleveland, a stop in St. Louis and a return visit to California for a San Francisco rally.

However, the sleepless campaign swing was not being asked of the 67-year-old Bentsen.

In El Paso on Sunday, Bentsen told a rally outside the city's train station that the Democrats are concerned about the middle class — a theme Dukakis has been hammering in his campaign stops.

"Mike Dukakis and Lloyd Bentsen are on the side of the working men and women of America and the Republicans are on the other side," said the Democratic candidate, who addressed the crowd in both Spanish and English — an appeal to the state's large Hispanic population.

Like Dukakis, Bentsen has for the past few weeks made attacks on the negative tone of the Republican campaign a central theme of his own. The backlash from the GOP "distortions," Bentsen says, is a major factor in the Democrats' narrowing of the Republican lead in the polls.

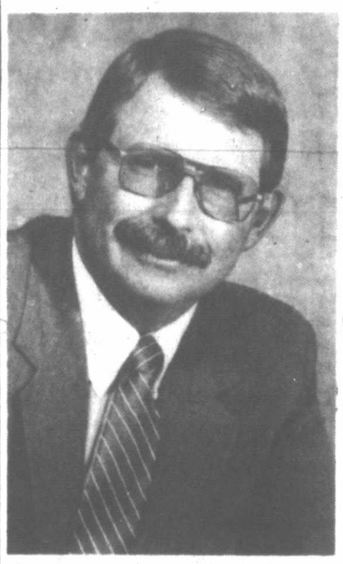

Surveys released Sunday showed Bush leading Dukakis by margins ranging from five points to 12 points.

Bentsen told reporters on Sunday that the tone of the campaign has hurt both Bush and Dukakis, and said that no matter who wins, neither one will have a "serious mandate."

"I certainly don't think George Bush will have a mandate because of the negative campaign that's been run," he said.

As for his Democratic running mate, Bentsen said: "Michael Dukakis will not have as much as a mandate as he deserves because it was difficult to get the issues across with all the clutter of negative advertising," he said.

TREATMENT FOR STIFF NECK

If you're suffering from a stiff neck, don't wait for it to take care of itself when treatment is available to correct it.

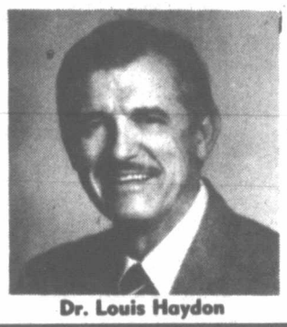

Of all the bones in the spinal column, none are more easily injured or more vulnerable than the seven vertebrae in the neck. None are moved more often. We are constantly turning our heads to look at people and things.

Neck stiffness can have many causes, from sudden and violent accidents to such simple activities as painting a ceiling or just sitting reading a book for a long time. But there's nothing simple about the pain.

A careful examination will reveal the source of the pain and how best to treat it. Any misaligned vertebrae in the spinal column should be properly adjusted so there will be no abnormal pressure on your nervous system. Treatment may also include exercises for the cervical muscles such as gently rotating your head in all directions. This can help restore muscle strength and tone.

For the past few weeks a group of Rufe Jordan's friends, both Republicans and Democrats, has sponsored a modest schedule of advertising on behalf of his re-election to the office of sheriff of Gray County. We did this on our own initiative more as an expression of appreciation for Rufe's many years of able and loyal service as sheriff of Gray County rather than any need for help in his bid for re-election. Also in answer to what we considered unfair criticism by a local newspaper reporter who, we are happy to note, is no longer here.

An advertisement in yesterday's Sunday Pampa News carried the names of some 300 of Rufe's friends and supporters for his re-election to another term. Time precluded our contacting hundreds of other Rufe Jordan friends.

Inasmuch as the next term could be Rufe's last term as sheriff, we wanted to say "Thanks, Rufe, for a job well done, often above and beyond the call of duty."

As a Houston newspaper writer said recently, "In his 38 years as sheriff of Gray County in the Texas Panhandle, Jordan has developed a personal style of law enforcement based on a simple premise:

"I've always been a strong believer in common sense," Jordan said, "to go with whatever else we have."

That's hard to beat.
