In Piaget's world of polo, style counts, celebrities matter and charity means most.

In its Chukkers for Charity program, the Piaget Watch Co. — a major U.S. polo sponsor — unites all three elements in a longterm nationwide endeavor that features the famed Piaget Celebrity Polo Team.

On Saturday, celebrity riders including television and film stars William Devane, Doug Sheehan, Alex Cord and Pamela Sue Martin will carry the Piaget Crest to Midland to compete in a match to benefit the Midland Association for Retarded Citizens.

Play begins at noon at the Midland Polo Field. In case of rain, the event will be moved to the ClayDesta Plaza Atrium, officials said.

Even while celebrating life at the gallop in polo's fast lane, Piaget has steadfastly observed fidelity to charity, said Devane, who helped organize the company's celebrity team.

Area gets heavy rainfall

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

The weather Midland experienced today is great for wrecker driver operators, bad for car wash businesses and a pretty good excuse to take a day off from work and claim the car flooded out.

The National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport reported that between 5 a.m. and 8:45 a.m. this morning, 2.33 inches of rain pelted the Midland area, helping to add to statistics that could make 1986 the fourth rainiest season here since 1931, Ron Brown, meteorological technician said.

The rain, Brown said, is due to a combination of factors — moisture spreading northward from Hurricane Paine in the Gulf of California by western Mexico and a large low pressure loft which is remaining stagnant over West Texas.

Midland Fire Department authorities reported that at 7:49 a.m. this morning lightning struck a building at the Chapparal Apartments at 4201 Garfield St.

Officials said three pumper trucks and a rescue vehicle were dispatched, but there were no injuries.

Midland Police Department officials said the only street that had been closed (at press time) was the underpass at Highway 80 at Big Spring.

Officials said several streets were impassable including Scharbauer Drive west of Big Spring and Midland Drive at the north service road of Highway 80.

Loop 250 was backed up from Midland Drive to Big Spring, officials added and said water levels "had reached one man's roof top at Ohio Avenue at Mineola Street."

Expert: Economy won't revive soon

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Even if oil prices remain stabilized around $15 per barrel, Texas will continue to feel economic repercussions for some time, a Texas A&M University finance professor says.

"It's not likely that the present level of oil prices will stimulate major new exploration expenditures," said S. Kerry Cooper. "The prospect for a sufficiently large upswing in price to spur another exploration boom in Texas before the mid-1990s is not good."

Cooper spoke at a statewide conference Wednesday called "Shaping the New Economy of Texas." The conference was intended to showcase university research that can have a direct impact on revitalizing the state economy.

A specialist in international trade, Cooper said that as a major exporting state, Texas has been shaken by international trade developments as well as the oil price slump.

Both Texas manufacturing industries and agriculture have experienced large losses of foreign markets as the result of the overvaluation of the dollar, he said.

"The prospect for a sufficiently large upswing in price to spur another exploration boom in Texas before the mid-1990s is not good."

— S. Kerry Cooper of Texas A&M

At the same conference, researchers said cultivating a native desert shrub known for its rubber content would create jobs in West Texas and lessen U.S. dependency on Asian sources for rubber used in bus, truck and airplane tires.

The desert plant, called guayule after the Indian name for "tree gum," could easily be grown in the expanses of the Trans Pecos area if current cost evaluations are favorable, said Texas A&M biochemist C. R. Benedict.

The cost of growing guayule is not economically feasible now, but Benedict said studies will attempt to raise production to offset those costs.

Researchers said agricultural science may outpace the importance of even medical technology because of its potential to boost crop yields, feed more people and create new jobs in the hamstrung agricultural sector.

People at the conference also heard that research is under way aimed at developing new technologies that will result in millions of dollars in new resources from the sea and savings from damage by storms and other natural disasters.

Scientists said their work may mean getting additional oil from the ground, more minerals from beneath the sea and even prepare for natural disasters such as hurricanes and tornadoes.

Chris Mathewson, director of the Center for Engineering Geosciences, discussed a project called HAZMAP that, with the help of computers, can predict the movement of hurricanes, storms, or tornadoes and alert emergency preparedness teams to help minimize harm to people and property.

And Thomas Hilde, director of A&M's Geodynamics Research Institute, spoke of new developments under way that can map broad areas of the sea floor in much the same way that satellites allow mapping the surfaces of Earth's continents and other planets.

Earlier Wednesday, development specialists said that state officials could improve the Texas tourism industry by promoting natural resources.

"The economic value of Texas' wildlife, fisheries and related natural resources has increased dramatically in recent years but remains under-exploited," said Lonnie L. Jones of A&M's Department of Agricultural Economics.

Special sessions cost almost $340,000, figures indicate

By STEVE LEVINE
and DAVID PLESA
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Despite two special legislative sessions, which cost taxpayers about $340,000, the state will end fiscal 1987 with an almost $1 billion deficit, Comptroller Bob Bullock reported Wednesday.

Through the two sessions, lawmakers passed bills reducing state spending by about $1.1 billion and increasing sales and gasoline taxes by $872 million. Applied against the projected general revenue deficit of $2.9 billion, those moves would reduce the shortfall to about $900,000.

However, Bullock said Wednesday he had already taken into account nearly $30 million in cuts, and $108 million of the higher taxes won't flow into the Treasury until after the Aug. 31, 1987 end of the fiscal year.

"The tax bill and spending cuts and bookkeeping maneuvers have chiseled away at the problem, and the projected deficit is now about $983 million," Bullock said. "The next Legislature will start off with nearly a $1 billion deficit."

Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby said he had "hoped there wouldn't be any" leftover deficit. House Speaker Gib Lewis said he hoped the economy — whose downturn originally produced the shortfall — would pick up next year.

"Maybe I'm too optimistic," Lewis said: "I see indications where the economy's stabilizing and turning around, and I hope that will have some impact on where we stand in January."

Preliminary figures provided by House and Senate officials indicate the special sessions, which stretched from Aug. 6 through Tuesday, cost the state about $339,000.

Janice Vastine, financial director for the House of Representatives, said House expenses averaged $8,000 for each of the 36 days the House actually convened. That figure, based on prior special sessions' experience, includes the $80 paid per day to each of the 150 House members, their travel, paperwork and electricity.

The secretary of the Senate's office reported a daily cost of about $1,500 for the 34 days the Senate met. That includes the same expenses as the House for the 31 senators and Hobby.

Neither the House nor the Senate hired additional staff for the sessions. Lawmakers agreed to cut $4.5 million, or 8.3 percent, from their $54.5 million fiscal 1987 budget.

Lewis said he was proud of the session's work, claiming the spending cuts saved Texans an additional sales tax increase of as much as 1.5 cents and that other budgetary changes brought the state's accounting system "into the 20th century."

"Sometimes hard times force you to do some things that should have done many, many years ago," he said.

Bullock, Hobby and Lewis all agree that state finances will top the agenda when the 70th Legislature convenes in January. The Constitution requires Bullock to certify that the state will have enough income to meet regular session appropriations. Preliminary projections peg the fiscal 1988-1989 shortfall at $5.5 billion to $7 billion.

Gunman fires shot near India's Gandhi, Singh

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — A man hiding on a vine-covered gazebo today fired a homemade pistol as Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi and President Zail Singh walked by. Neither Indian leader was injured.

Indian officials differed over whether the gunman, who was arrested, intended to assassinate Gandhi and Singh. A witness said he was talking to Gandhi at the time and was hit in the back with pellets aimed at the prime minister.

"Everything is OK. There is nothing to tell," Gandhi said on television shortly after the incident, which occurred as he, his wife, Sonia, and Singh left a ceremony marking the 117th anniversary of the birth of Indian independence leader Mohandas K. Gandhi.

The gunman was not immediately identified, but police said he was wearing an army uniform and was in his early 20s. They said he surrendered without a struggle after police fired in the air around the gazebo.

Ram Charan Lal, a retired judge, said he was talking to Gandhi when the shooting occurred and that he was hit in the back.

"I had a terrible pain and was pushed forward," Lal told The Associated Press. "Had I not been standing at the spot, I'm sure Mr. Gandhi would have been hit by the pellets."

Energy Minister Vasant Sathe, who was in Gandhi's entourage, issued a statement describing the shooting as "a planned attempt on the life of the prime minister."

But other officials said it was not clear if the gunman fired at Gandhi and one report said the man fired in the air.

New Delhi's Jayaprakash Narayan Hospital said it treated two people, K. Gonia and Harish Kumar, for superficial gunshot wounds and discharged them. An official government statement, however, said no one was hurt.

Rajiv Gandhi's mother, then Prime Minister Indira Gandhi, was shot and killed by Sikh bodyguards Oct. 31, 1984. Groups seeking autonomy or independence for Sikhs in Punjab state have threatened to kill Rajiv Gandhi, 42, and Singh, who is a Sikh.

Daniloff wants to cover summit

WASHINGTON (AP) — Journalist Nicholas Daniloff is so anxious to get back on the job that he's signed up to report on next week's meeting between the superpower leaders in Iceland.

Daniloff's name appeared on a trip sign-up sheet at the White House press room Wednesday, the same day he and his wife spent 40 minutes talking with President Reagan.

Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev, whom Daniloff covered as a Moscow correspondent for U.S. News & World Report, will hold talks Oct. 11-12 in Reykjavik, Iceland.

James Killpatrick, a U.S. News senior editor serving as a corporate spokesman, said Daniloff's future assignment is "a little indefinite," but he'll probably report on the summit for U.S. News if he gets credentials.

The Iceland meeting was arranged as part of the deal that allowed Daniloff to leave the Soviet Union, where he was arrested Aug. 30 on what the Reagan administration has called trumped up espionage charges.

Meanwhile, the Los Angeles Times reported in today's editions that administration officials said they went to unusual lengths to make sure Daniloff, who was being subjected to intense psychological questioning in a KGB prison, not stand trial in Moscow.

An unnamed official said the United States detected signs that Daniloff was weakening under the pressure and was showing signs of the "Stockholm syndrome," — identifying with his captors, the official said.

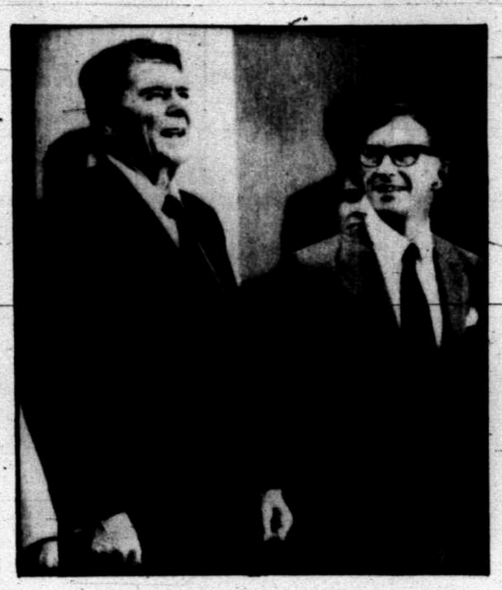

Referring to the interrogation, that official said, "Daniloff had problems, and that helps explain the extraordinary steps we took."

Daniloff has characterized the interrogations that he was subjected to as mental torture.

Although the administration has stressed that Daniloff was not involved in spying, a State Department official who spoke on condition he remain anonymous told the Times that Daniloff "made a bad mistake and something had to be done to correct it."

He was referring to the event that led to Daniloff's arrest — his acceptance on a Moscow street of a map that turned out to be marked "secret" from a Soviet acquaintance.

One official said "Misha," who gave Daniloff the map, was a hotel worker who has offered to give foreigners sighseeing tours in the city of Frunze, an activity the official said would have to be approved by the KGB.

President Reagan speaks with reporters as he welcomes American journalist Nicholas Daniloff in the White House Rose Garden Wednesday. Daniloff returned home Tuesday after being held in the Soviet Union on spy charges.

The 51-year-old correspondent began his first full day back in the United States with a rousing welcome at the magazine's Washington headquarters and then going to the White House.

In a brief appearance with Reagan in the Rose Garden, Daniloff told the president that if he had not taken a "very deep and personal interest" in his case "it would probably be some years before I could stand in front of you and say, 'Thank you, Mr. President.'"

Daniloff was allowed to leave Moscow on Monday in the arrangement that also called for the release of accused spy Gennadiy Zakharov to the Soviets. Zakharov, a Soviet employee at the United Nations, flew back to Moscow after he pleaded no contest to espionage charges.

"I don't think there's caving in at all," Reagan said of the arrangement with the Soviets.

But criticism of the arrangement continued on Capitol Hill, where Senate Minority Leader Robert Byrd, D-W.Va., said today that "anything that looks like a swap, talks like a swap, acts like a swap and walks like a swap is a swap."

Byrd said, "The president said there would be no deal. We've seen a deal," adding that the Soviets got the better part of the bargain. "They swapped a spy for a newsman."

Reagan, asked whether U.S.-Soviet relations are back on track with Daniloff's release, said, "We'll find out in about 10 days," referring to the Iceland meeting.

Daniloff praised the "mini-summit," saying he believes contact with the two sides is always beneficial. Although there is always a chance of miscalculation, he said he was optimistic about future superpower relations.

Daniloff, speaking to reporters after his meeting with Reagan, said he and the president discussed "a whole lot of things," including the nature of Soviet society and "male chauvinism in Russia."

Ruth Daniloff, the reporter's wife, brought that topic up with the president, her husband said. Also attending the meeting were Nancy Reagan; Chief of Staff Donald Regan, National Security Adviser John Poindexter and Jack Matlock, the Soviet specialist on the National Security Council.

Reagan "had a lot of funny stories," Daniloff said.

Daniloff, who referred to himself as a "former hostage," said he felt particularly sympathic to the American hostages in Lebanon.

"I hope that that situation could be improved."

Daniloff had intended to write a book about one of his relatives who opposed the Czar in 1825, but that project may be set aside temporarily, Killpatrick said.

In the meantime, Daniloff has been swamped with requests to write a book about his experiences and talk about them on television and in lectures.

Avant-garde artists say the sky's the limits

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — The technique is airy and light, the effect fleeting. But artists who use the horizon as their canvas say the sky's the limit.

Howard Woody, an art professor at the University of South Carolina in Columbia on Wednesday released his filmy silver and red kite-like structure shaped like an arch and filled with helium. It blew away over the Charles River.

He named the vanished piece "Boston Sail."

"The air is the art," said Woody, 51, who also works in weightier media such as bronze and welded steel, explaining why he won't care if he never sees the $500 artwork again.

"Air can be described as lyrical or poetic or whatever you want to call it. The art for me is the motion factor."

Several times, Charlotte Moorman has donned a white satin cape, strapped herself to helium balloons and, drifting upward, played the cello 200 feet off the ground.

The artist calls her work "Sky Kiss."

The two practitioners, in a growing avant-garde movement called sky art, are among 75 artists, technicians and scholars here this week for the fourth international Sky Art Conference at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology Center.

What exactly is sky art?

"Art that dresses the sky and interprets the sky," said Otto Piene, a painter, light artist and sky artist who coined the phrase "sky art" 22 years ago in an essay for a Canadian art magazine.

Piene, 58, who has studios in Dusseldorf, West Germany, and whose paintings hang in more than 150 museums around the world, is director of MIT's Center for Advanced Visual Studies.

The first of the four conferences was held at MIT in 1981.

POLO

Of equal importance, said Devane at a news conference here Wednesday, is the corporate signal sent to both the polo and media communities: "With the grand role models of today's 10-goalers, some of the gentler champions of our Chukkers for Charity benefits may too begin to stick-and-ball."

An avid horseman, Devane — star of the CBS nigttime soap opera "Knots Landing" — plays amateur polo on a regular basis at the Los Angeles Equestrian Center and is captain of a celebrity team that includes, Stephanie Powers, Stacy Keach, Cord and Ms. Martin.

The team travels around the country and to Mexico, playing at major charity events and for dignitaries and heads-of-state.

For Devane, polo is "more than just a sport, it's an addiction," he said.

"The only cure is poverty, and even that wouldn't stop me."

Cord, who played the mysterious Michael Archangel in the canceled CBS series "Airwolf" — has been a much-in-demand leading man.

But, as a child, his interest in acting took a back seat to horseback riding.

Born in Long Island, N.Y., Cord says he yearned to become and jockey, but his hopes were dashed when he passed the jockey's weight limit of 105 pounds.

"I was born with a passion for horses," he said. "I wanted to be a jockey so bad that I slept in (dresser) drawer because I thought it would keep me from growing."

Cord had to overcome an even bigger hurdle when he developed polio at age 12.

"It was the thought of horses and riding that literally spurred me on to recuperate," he recalled.

During this period Cord was sent to a ranch in Wyoming where he became even more proficient on horseback, eventually joining a rodeo.

It was during his rodeo days that Cord was gored five times, suffered a concussion and a fractured skull, broke three ribs at Madison Square Garden, and landed once again in a hospital, this time in New Mexico.

Returning home, Cord entered New York University to study literature and worked in a bank at night and as a bricklayer during the summers to support himself.

An early interest in acting led him to study at Lee Strasberg's Actors Studio in New York. Following a season with the Stratford, Conn., Shakespeare Academy and two years of summer stock, Cord went on a national tour with the Shakespearean group.

The following year he appeared on the London stage in Doris Lessing's "Play With A Tiger" and was nominated for the London Critic's Award. He followed up with another London appearance in "The Rose Tatto."

Cord made his motion picture debut in "Synanon."

On television he starred in the series, "Hunter's Moon," and in such movies as "Beggarman, Thief" and "Goliath Awaits."

Besides his busy acting career, Cord is a published novelist and takes and avid interest in progressive jazz.

Still, Cord has never given up his love of horseback riding. He owns a string of five rare wide-boned thoroughbred polo ponies. And, he is widely known as one of the first class polo players in Southern California.

RAIN

Police officials said there was one minor traffic accident at Big Spring at Liddon Avenue, but that there were no injuries.

"And of course, there is a preponderance of stalled cars all over the city," a police department spokeswoman said.

Midland Independent School District officials decided school would go on today, Becky Ferguson, MISD public relations director, said.

"There haven't been any accidents reported, but I'm sure the weather has slowed things down a bit.

"There is a problem though; school buses can't travel down dirt roads because they will sink up to the axle. In that case, the children have to come out to the paved roads to meet the bus," Ms. Ferguson said.

The Texas Department of Public Safety reported there had been no accidents in Midland or Odessa area this morning.

Farmers aren't pleased with the weather today, as well.

Hoot Leonard, general manager of the 203-member Midland Farmers Cooperative, said he really wished it would stay dry for awhile.

"We need dry, warm weather — we sure don't need this," Leonard said.

"The cotton is in the maturing stage right now and it needs drier weather.

"Water makes the cotton bolls stay in the growing stage which means more stalks and leaves and slowed down growth of the bolls.

"We don't have the time for slowed down boll growth. We got started planting cotton about a month late anyway this year."

The City of Big Spring — plagued with more than its share of weather problems in the past weeks — got off lucky today, a Big Spring Police Department spokeswoman said.

"We're doing pretty well — we haven't had as much rain as Midland has," she said.

"We're having no problems with the dams which is very fortunate for us.

"It's not even raining now," the spokeswoman said.

Brown said the rain would continue into the night, but chances of rain Friday would decrease to about 10 to 30 percent.

"I don't think we'll see Hurricane Paine get stronger (and endanger Midland), but it will bring moisture and more low pressure," Brown said, confirming later chances of more of the same rain drenching Midland today.

There is bad news for the southern plains states already innundated with some of the worst flooding in their history, Brown said.

The system should move up that way, Brown said, which will continue to flood those states.

Lubbock has been especially hard hit by this weather system, Brown said, explaining that Lubbock is "getting it" from both the north and the south.

"There is quite a bit of flooding in the low-lying areas around Lubbock," Brown said.

"This isn't good tornado weather, but it's excellent for rain.

"September is usually our wettest month," Brown said.

GANDHI

Police said the gunman was not a Sikh and that his interrogation had disclosed no links with any terrorist or underground organization.

The official statement said he used a homemade pistol. He fired from behind thick vines around a gazebo about 20 feet from Gandhi and Singh, said police spokesman Sajan Singh.

Police variously said they found three or four spent shells as well as unused bullets, a plastic water bottle and a canvas tote bag near the gazebo. Sajan Singh said the gunman may have spent the night on the gazebo roof.

They also reported finding about 20 small pellets similar to what might be found in shotgun shells in the area.

Rajendra Mohan, New Delhi vice police commissioner, said one shot was fired about 30 minutes before the memorial prayers ended at the Rajghat, or State Memorial, where Mohandas Gandhi was cremated. Visitors to the memorial were not searched.

"We did ask our boys to look everywhere when we heard that single shot," Mohan told reporters. "But the search yielded nothing."

One police source, however, said the first shot was mistaken by security personnel for the backfire of a motorcycle.

The United News of India news agency said that when Gandhi and Singh left the ceremony, shots were fired at the prime minister. However, police officers said the rounds were fired in the air by an "eccentric" who wanted to draw attention to himself.

Mohan replied "no comment" when asked whether the shots were fired at Gandhi.

"It is possible that the man is mentally deranged, but this is something that can be established only after a thorough investigation," he said.

The Press Trust of India news agency said commandos fired about a dozen shots around the bush where the assailant was hiding before arresting him.

The prime minister is not related to Mohandas Gandhi, the apostle of non-violence who led the struggle for independence from Britain. He was known as "Mahatma," or "Great Soul," and was assassinated in 1948.

Gandhi, a former airline pilot, was appointed prime minister after his mother's assassination and last year was elected to the office in a landslide victory.

However, his popularity has waned due to growing economic problems and the resurgence of Sikh unrest. Sikhs make up about 2 percent of India's 750 million people and claim discrimination by the majority Hindus. Extremist Sikhs want a separate nation in Punjab state, where Sikhs slightly outnumber Hindus.

Gandhi and Singh have been protected by commandos of India's newly-established National Security Guard because Sikh groups, including the Khalistan Commando Force, have threatened to kill them.

Singh's post of president is chiefly ceremonial, but Sikh extremists accuse him of seconding Indira Gandhi's June 1984 order to send the army into the Golden Temple in Amritsar, the Sikhs' holiest shrine, to rout out Sikh militants.

Suspect freed despite boasting of killings

LANCASTER (AP) — The prime suspect in the knife-hatchet slayings of three women was freed from a jail 100 miles away even after he boasted that he had killed somebody, officials said.

A few hours after he was booked into the Leon County jail on a drunken driving charge about midnight Saturday, David Martin Long bragged to cellmates that he had slain someone, county sheriff's dispatcher Bob Gresham Jr. said Wednesday.

Long "didn't come out and say, 'I killed three girls,'" Gresham said. "The jailer said that guy out there was talking about killing somebody, as in past tense. But people say that sort of thing all the time."

Lancaster Police Chief John Whitehead said Long had $3 cash when he was booked and had a previous conviction for drunken driving, which would make a second offense a felony.

"We had one hell of a foul-up in Leon County," Whitehead said. "I didn't know there was a county anywhere that would release a man with a felony charge, who was a transient, on a promise that he will appear. That's like telling somebody, 'Goodbye, get out of my county.'"

A murder warrant was issued Wednesday for the 34-year-old Bay City man, who police say was staying at the house in this Dallas suburb where a blind invalid, her cousin and a transient were hacked to death.

Long, who left the house Saturday in a station wagon owned by one of the slain women, was charged with capital murder in a warrant signed by a state district judge in Dallas, Lancaster Assistant City Manger Steve Harris said.

It was Monday morning, 36 hours later, before the grisly murder scene was discovered. By the time an all-points bulletin could be released with a description of the stolen car, Long had been released from jail in Centerville, halfway between Dallas and Houston.

The 6-foot, 190-pound mustached man is believed to have hitchhiked to Houston after his release about 10 a.m. Monday.

Leon County Sheriff Royce Wilson said his department didn't know about the triple slaying when it freed the man, that the car hadn't been reported as stolen and that it isn't uncommon to release DWI suspects with the eight-cell county jail is crowded.

Whitehead said Leon jailer George Ward told Lancaster investigators that Long "started banging on the cell" early Sunday and demanded to see a police officer.

"The jailer said, 'Why do you want to see a police officer; you're arrested for DWI,'" Whitehead said. "He (Long) said, 'I killed three women.'"

Whitehead said the jailer told investigators that he then woke up his sheriff who told him "to forget it and go back home."

But Wilson says "nobody called me about anything like that. I'd remember. If they call and tell me someone killed three people...I'd remember, sure. That's my business."

The slaying victims were identified as Donna Sue Jester, 37, her cousin, Dalpha Lorenne Jester, 64, who was blind and bedridden, and Laura Lee Owen, 20, a transient whom Donna Jester picked up hitchhiking and brought to the house.

B-1 supersonic bomber fleet officially activated

ABILENE (AP) — The B-1 supersonic bomber fleet here is on full alert today, putting the controversial plane into regular operation for the first time since its resurrection five years ago.

The Air Force Systems Command officially activated the nation's first operational B-1 squadron Wednesday, and one of Dyess Air Force Base's bombers now will be on full alert at all times.

Col. Robert E. Dempsey, commander of the 96th Bomb Wing at Dyess, called Wednesday the "payoff time for all that money the nation has invested in the (B-1) program."

The B-1 is the first long-range strategic bomber to be developed by the United States in 30 years. The swing-wing, four-engine jet can fly at supersonic speeds and is also equipped with sophisticated navigation and radar systems that allow it to hug the ground and evade radar.

At a cost of more than $200 million each, the 15 B-1s now at Dyess are worth a total of $3 billion, and Dyess is to get 29 of the planes by year's end.

"The important revitalization of our bomber force continues on track," Gen. Lawrence A. Skantze, the commander of the Air Force Systems Command, said in Washington. "Achieving this initial operational capability in only five years is a major accomplishment."

No formal ceremonies were held to mark the activation of the 337th Bombardment Squadron, Dempsey said, because "nothing we could devise would really match the significance of this."

But the presence of several armed guards and sophisticated electronic warning devices around the fully fueled and armed B-1 — as well as the proximity of its alert crew — pointed to its new status.

The families of the four-man alert crew can come for visits during certain hours, but the men won't be able to leave the base until they are relieved by the next alert crew on Oct. 8.

Starting in the late 1980s, the Air Force plans to begin retiring the aging B-52 bombers that now form the heart of the nation's bomber force. They will be replaced by 100 B-1s and 132 of the new radar-evading "Stealth" bombers, which are now in the final stages of development.

West Texas mine 'breakthrough'

AUSTIN (AP) — A Pennsylvania company's decision to lease state land in West Texas for a beryllium mine could be the start of a new mineral industry in Texas, Land Commissioner Garry Mauro says.

"This is a real breakthrough," Mauro said Wednesday in announcing the long-term lease that he said could bring the state $12 million over a 30-year period.

"We're sending a signal to the nation's hard mineral industry," Mauro added. "Why go to the Rocky Mountains or Alaska, with all their environmental, climatic and transportation problems when Texas hard minerals are a more viable alternative?"

According to the General Land Office, Cabot Mining Inc. of Reading, Pa., signed a lease on about 640 acres of land in Hudspeth County to mine beryllium, which officials called a "space-age metal."

Beryllium is a strong, lightweight metal used in the aerospace, electronics and nuclear energy industries. It is known for its high heat and electrical conductivity. It is used in the space shuttle project, Mauro noted.

The nation's only other beryllium mine is in Utah, but Mauro said the ore at the Texas site is more pure.

The Texas mine also will keep the United States from being dependent on South Africa for a steady supply of the metal, he said.

"This is the first time that this key, space-age mineral has ever been mined in Texas," Mauro said.

Third-generation craftsman makes mark in stone

AP Laserphoto

Preston Partin

By CANDACE VELVIN

NACOGDOCHES (AP) — A special stone in the Fairview Cemetery marks the resting place of 17-year-old Anthony Wayne Allen, whose organs were donated to others when he died last summer in an accident.

The stone was cut and engraved by a young man only a year older than Allen — third-generation stone craftsman Preston Partin, 18.

Allen was pronounced brain dead on July 5 after being injured in a motor vehicle accident. His father, Jerry Allen, wanted a special marker for his son's grave that commemorated his gift of life.

The stone bears Anthony Allen's name, his date of birth and death, and a poem: "My heart is still beating, My eyes can still see, Life's been given others, Through the death of me." Anthony's signature, taken from the title on his motorcycle, is enlarged and reproduced beneath the poem.

The stone of Georgia blue granite was cut and sandblasted by young Partin, who has been working for six years in the family business, George B. Partin and Sons Monument Co. on the Douglass Highway in Nacogdoches.

"I've been cutting stones since I was about 12 years old," Partin said. "My father let me work on footstones, (the smaller stones marking the end of a grave that bear initials) and pet markers," he explained. In later years, he graduated from footstones to markers and finally to larger stones and just about anything the company has orders for. His father, Gerald Partin, retired last December. Preston does most of the monument work now.

The Allen marker, like other stones, was cut from a large 10-foot by 3-foot slab of six-inch-thick polished granite. The granite weighs 200 pounds per cubic foot. The stone saw used has a diamond blade — an expensive item that must be replaced often. Leftover small pieces from the larger slabs can be used to make markers for the graves of infants, foot markers, corner posts and pet markers.

The Georgia Blue granite is popular, but there are other colors and materials available as well.

The bottom of the marker, cut with the stone saw first, is made perfectly straight so the stone will sit properly on its base.

The top and sides of the stone are cut by hand with a hammer and chisel. "That three-pound hammer gets pretty heavy," said Partin.

The inscription and decorations on the face of the stone are sandblasted into the surface. A thin rubber mat is placed across the face of the stone. With the skill and precise measuring of a draftsman, Partin marks the center of the mat and then charts and stencils the letters onto the rubber surface with pencil. The decorations selected by the client are added, along with the border art.

"You always work from the center out," Partin explained.

Next, the pattern and letters are carefully cut from the rubber mat with a knife, exposing the stone underneath.

When the stone is sandblasted, the sand will bounce off the rubber and etch the stone in the places where the rubber was cut away.

Former President Jimmy Carter throws a kiss and his wife Rosalynn waves as they and President and Mrs. Ronald Reagn arrive at the Carter Presidential Center in Atlanta Wednesday. The Reagans were special guests at ceremonies opening the Carter Center.

Reagan praised Carter as a man, but still campaigns against him

NATION

ATLANTA (AP) — As he sat, perhaps a bit uncomfortably, next to his predecessor and bitter adversary, Jimmy Carter, President Reagan heard what Carter already has learned about being a former president.

"One comes away from even a cursory view of the lives of former presidents with a chilling sense of a wasted resource," Warren Christopher said in his address dedicating the new Jimmy Carter Presidential Center and library.

Christopher, a California lawyer who as deputy secretary of state was Carter's principal negotiator in freeing the American hostages in Iran, observed that "the historical record reveals a longstanding ambivalence about former presidents."

"On the whole, their experience was undervalued and their advice too little sought," Christopher said, noting that only five of the 30 presidents who survived their terms found significant post-presidential roles for themselves.

Former presidents, he suggested, "have been touched by history and possess a wisdom that we urgently need. And it's a wisdom that they would readily give, for most presidents — nearly all — leave office with an Olympian patriotism, a rarified love of country that is possible when ambition has lost its object and partisanship its edge."

Carter, who celebrated his 62nd birthday at the ceremonies on Wednesday, is teaching, writing, helping his church build houses for the poor — and still searching for some contribution he can make, particularly in the Middle East, where he achieved most as president.

Last year, after completing a book about the Middle East, he let it be known, as graciously as he could, that he would be willing to serve as a special envoy for Reagan in an effort to rejuvenate the peace process in the troubled region.

Carter celebrates 62nd birthday by deeding museum, library in his name

ATLANTA (AP) — On the hillside from which Gen. William Sherman watched the burning of Atlanta during the Civil War, Jimmy Carter opened the doors to his presidential library and shared his vision of a peaceful future.

Carter celebrated his 62nd birthday Wednesday by deeding to the federal government a museum and library housing exhibits on his political career as well as the archives for more than 27 million papers accummulated during his four years in the White House.

"We appreciate the past. We are grateful for the present," Carter told President and Mrs. Reagan and 9,000 others at a dedication ceremony for the Carter Presidential Center. "And we're looking forward to the future with great anticipation and committment."

While the materials and momentoes of Carter's past take up 70,000 of the complex's 130,000 square feet, the remaining space is earmarked for Carter's current activities — foundations dedicated to human rights and conservation and a public policy center operated by Emory University.

"It's appropriate for us to remember that this spot was first made famous by General Sherman, who watched the burning of the city of Atlanta from here," said Emory President Joseph Laney, referring to the Union general who ordered the city's destruction on a 1864 march through Georgia that ensured the Confederacy's defeat.

"I think it's altogether appropriate that this place should now be the location where scholars and statesmen, in reflection and consultation, seek those things that make for peace," said Laney, one of several speakers at the hour-long dedication ceremony.

Emory, a private university, hired Carter as a distinguished professor when he left the White House in 1981.

Reagan, meeting his predecessor for the first time in five years, acknowledged political differences with the man he defeated in 1980 but praised Carter for his faith and hard work.

"You gave yourself to your country, gracing the White House with your passion and intellect and commitment," Reagan said.

The keynote address was delivered by Warren Christopher, a Los Angeles lawyer who, as deputy secretary of state, handled the Iranian hostage crisis during Carter's term.

Christopher praised the former president for "his unflagging devotion to public service" through the organizations Carter and his wife, Rosalynn, will run from their offices at the center.

"This center is devoted not to past status but to present works. Its purpose is not to aggrandize or justify, but to contribute. It has no object but the public good," he said.

The library and museum "will enable both scholars and citizens to view history, economics, diplomacy and other disciplines through a presidential eye," he said.

The archival library, where Carter's papers are being preserved and organized, will be open for scholarly research in a month. The museum exhibit opened to the public Wednesday.

Nation's midsection swells with floodwaters

Associated Press

Floodwaters surged through the nation's midsection today, swelling Lake Michigan to a record level and keeping more than 10,000 people homeless, and officials urged residents in flooded areas of Chicago to boil drinking water.

Saturated areas of the central and southern Plains may get more rain tonight as Hurricane Paine, located off of Baja California, begins to combine with a storm system over the Great Basin, the National Weather Service said.

"We're in trouble," said Fred Beeler, a weather service forecaster in Oklahoma City. "Unfortunately, we just can't break the wet weather pattern we're in."

Barge operators on the upper Mississippi River scrambled to beat rapidly rising water that is forcing the Army Corps of Engineers to close locks and dams, effectively halting river traffic.

A partially ruptured dam in Wisconsin, meanwhile, remained standing but leaking, and hundreds were believed still away from their homes in flooded northeastern Montana, but the water was receding in some communities.

One man was killed Wednesday after he was swept from his stalled pickup on a bridge in Oklahoma, and another was missing and presumed dead in Illinois. One weather-related death was reported last week in Montana.

Thunderstorms have dumped up to 15 inches of rain on northeastern Oklahoma since Monday. Southern Missouri got 5 inches of rain Wednesday, and heavy rain fell in Indiana and Ohio.

Seven rivers in Michigan's Saginaw River basin were flooding, and two rivers were overflowing near Grand Rapids, the weather service said.

Nearly 16 inches has fallen on northeastern Illinois since Sept. 1, most during the past 10 days, the weather service said.

About 2,700 people were homeless in Illinois, mostly in the northern part of the state, where floodwaters ranged from 18 inches to 6 feet, officials said.

Minor flooding was reported in Chicago's northwestern section, but city health officials issued their warning about boiling drinking water because of possible contamination from overflowing sewers.

Flood damage in the state was estimated Wednesday at $30 million to $40 million, said spokesman Gregg Durham of the Illinois Emergency Services and Disaster Agency.

Runoff in Illinois, Wisconsin and Michigan has bloated Lake Michigan to a record 581.48 feet above sea level, the Illinois Department of Transportation's water resources division said. The lake had reached a record 581.2 feet in June, then fell during the summer.

"We're in trouble. ...Unfortunately, we just can't break the wet weather pattern we're in."
— Fred Beeler

In Wisconsin, a hole in the earthen portion of a dam on Lawrence Lake near Westfield expanded Wednesday, then stopped growing as the lake level dropped after floodgates were opened.

Nearly 200 of the town's 1,000 residents were allowed to return home Wednesday, ordered out again in the afternoon, then let back home again after the hole stopped growing.

"There's not a heck of a lot we can do except stand by," said Gov. Anthony S. Earl while touring the area Wednesday.

In Oklahoma, the engorged Illinois River all but cut off the town of Tahlequah.

National Guardsmen used high-wheel vehicles to evacuate up to 100 residents of low-lying areas in Tahlequah and Cherokee County, said civil defense director Bob Culver.

Culver said many county roads were been washed out and "a lot of cattle...are probably extinct now."

Flood stage on the Illinois River in Tahlequah is 11 feet and the weather service said the river could hit 25 feet.

In Bixby, helicopters plucked 23 stranded residents from their houses, said Tulsa Fire Department spokesman Mike Baker. Officials urged an estimated 7,500 people living in an area 24 miles square to leave their homes.

Up to 100 people were forced from their homes in Guthrie, 100 in Skiatook, 300 in Kingfisher, 50 in Bartlesville and 50 from a nursing home at Miami, officials said.

Scores of volunteers gathered at Randolph's Grocery Store in Bixby Wednesday morning to fill hundreds of sandbags for homeowners trying to stem the rising water.

"We've run out of bags twice," said John Duvelow of Jenks.

The weather service predicted the Mississippi River at Davenport, Iowa, would crest at more than 19 feet Monday, 4 feet above flood stage.

Barges rushed downstream to avoid being stranded as the Army Corps of Engineers began pulling equipment out of locks and dams to avoid flood damage. The measure will close the gates and halt river traffic that has been hauling grain out of the Midwest and bringing in coal for the winter. The locks could be closed for two weeks.

"The traffic has slowed going upstream, but there's been a heck of a rush going downstream," said Bob Faletti, chief of public affairs for the Corps' district at Rock Island, Ill.

Iceland: Jolted into action to accommodate the masses

By MARCUS ELIASON

REYKJAVIK, Iceland (AP) — The Viking Commando, Iceland's 15-member SWAT team, has begun intensive training in preparation for the meeting here between President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev next week.

The squad, part of the island's 500-member police force, was photographed for the Icelandic press going through its paces Wednesday fully armed and gas-masked.

The Viking Commando is the closest thing Iceland has to a military force, since the republic of 240,000 inhabitants has no army and relies for its defense on the U.S. naval detachment at Keflavik, outside the capital of Reykjavik.

The unit was set up about two years ago in response to what in Iceland is a new phenomenon — violent crime. But it has been used only once, to subdue a man who ran amok with a gun aboard a ship in Reykjavik harbor.

That incident ended without casualties.

Dazed by the suddenness of the announcement that it is to host the superpower meeting Oct. 11-12, Iceland began slowly swinging into action to accommodate the thousands of officials and journalists expected to pour into Reykjavik in the coming days.

The 162-room Saga Hotel, Reykjavik's finest, began switching visitors to other establishments in expectation of hosting the meeting. A Tourism Ministry official was appointed to handle accommodations, and private homes were being readied to put up the overflow.

A White House advance party was to arrive today and set about the daunting task of equipping a remote and sparsely inhabited land of glaciers, geysers and volcanoes with high-technology communications and anti-terrorist gadgets.

Acting Mayor Magnus Oskarsson said he did not expect any significant demonstrations of the kind that accompanied the last Reagan-Gorbachev summit in Geneva Nov. 19-21.

Unlike many Western European countries, Iceland is not significantly divided over the pros and cons of Reagan's policies, to which many islanders are indifferent. The country has no nuclear power, houses no nuclear weapons, and residents don't get unduly excited over issues like Nicaragua or sanctions against South Africa.

Terrorism is not a major preoccupation, either. Iceland has never suffered a terrorist attack. Strangers can stroll unchallenged into the prime minister's office or the U.S. cultural center, and Prime Minister Steingrimur Hermannsson's home phone number is in the book.

Indeed, the word stranger is almost an anomaly in this closely meshed society.

Iceland, alone among European countries, experienced a rise in U.S. tourism this year. The 4.7-percent increase over 1985 indicates that the ripples of the Chernobyl nuclear disaster and the U.S. bombing raid on Libya never got this far north.

Writing in News from Iceland, the local English-language monthly, Bjarni Sigtryggsson told of a colleague who met an American flying to Europe via Iceland. Why was he taking the long route?

"Well," the unnamed American was quoted as saying, "I don't think it would occur to the terrorists to bomb or hijack an Icelandic plane."

But the island is not divorced from the realities of superpower confrontation. It tests its air raid sirens every month. To the question of who in his right mind would want to attack Iceland, Icelanders point to the map.

Equidistant from New York and Moscow, they can easily imagine some intercontinental invader of the future using their island as a stepping stone.

Icelanders have welcomed the summit with pride and joy. But in their understandably insular way, they think less about what it can do for world peace than of what it can do for Iceland.

Virtually every official and Icelander in the street talks first about what it will do for Iceland's image.

"It will put us on the world map," is the reaction most frequently heard. "The eyes of the world will be focused on Iceland," editorialized the daily Morgunbladid, admonishing Icelanders to behave themselves for the sake of their country's prestige.

Satellite television, overseas university study and cheap travel are pushing Iceland into the modern mainstream with breathtaking speed.

"Iceland is going through tremendous change — there has been a revolution over the past five years," says Fridrik Brekkan, a public relations expert who returned here after years of living in Sweden and Spain.

"People have gone from being in the grip of conservative family life to a much more diversified way of thinking. Young people who have studied abroad are coming back and demanding their place in society," he said.

Costa Rica fears it could be hub for drugs

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica (AP) — For more than a year, Costa Rica has been an unwilling but important bridge in international drug trafficking, unable to halt its use as a transit point for U.S.-bound cocaine from South America.

But the discovery of a cocaine-processing laboratory last week in the isolated mountains of southern Costa Rica has stirred fears that this country could be on the verge of joining the ranks of cocaine-producing nations.

Seven Colombians, nine Costa Ricans and a Panamanian were arrested in that raid.

"The war against drug trafficking is just beginning in Costa Rica. So far, we have done nothing more than scratch the surface," Interior Minister Guido Fernandez said recently. "There are suspicions that there are other labs."

The interior minister controls this Central American nation's Rural Guard, a police force of about 4,000 whose duties are similar to sheriffs' deputies in the United States.

The lab is the second discovered in the region. Last year, a similiar cocaine-processing facility was found in neighboring Panama.

"Indications are that something is happening in Costa Rica — something big," said a foreign law enforcement analyst who has been closely observing the country's attempts to halt its use by drug smugglers.

The analyst, speaking on condition of anonymity, said drug traffickers have been attracted to Costa Rica in recent months because of stricter enforcement efforts in Bolivia, Colombia, the Bahamas and south Florida.

Those efforts include the use of U.S. Army troops and helicopters in Bolivia.

"Costa Rica more than the other countries (of Central America) was suitable for their purposes," the analyst said. "It is an easy mark because it's the least policed and has the most liberal immigration policy."

Luis Barrantes, director of the Security Ministry's narcotics department, said more than 2,200 pounds of cocaine has been seized in Costa Rica in the first six months of this year, more than in the previous six years combined.

From 1980 through 1985, Barrantes said, Costa Rica confiscated 66-88 pounds of cocaine annually, most of it seized as it was being shipped through Costa Rica to other destinations.

"Up to now, Costa Rica has been just a conduit, a middle ground between the source and the delivery point, usually the United States," the analyst said. "There are between 225 and 300 private airstrips in the country, many of them hacked out of the jungle, and it has been extremely difficult to police."

Despite the recent increase in seizures, authorities admit they are probably catching only a fraction of the drugs passing through the country.

"You have to wonder what's getting by," the analyst said.

Costa Rica has no army, only a combined urban police and Rural Guard that totals about 8,000 men. Of that, officials say, only about 80 in three different government agencies are assigned full-time to narcotics cases.

"The Costa Rican police forces don't have a lot of tools available to them, things as simple as automobiles and radios," the analyst said. "But they are doing the best they can."

Fernandez agreed, saying, "The poverty with which Costa Rica is confronting the narcotics trade is pathetic.

"For example, if we want to make a (undercover) drug buy, it will cost us at least 100,000 colones (1,750). Where are we going to get it? The banks won't lend it to us for 10 minutes."

Nevertheless, the government has taken several steps recently to stem the growing drug trade.

It has proposed a law that would consolidate several groups of law enforcement officers concerned with narcotics into a single, more powerful agency.

South Africa to boycott grain in light of sanctions

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — South Africa will stop buying U.S. grain and allowing its shipment to its black-ruled neighbors if the Senate overrides President Reagan's veto of anti-apartheid sanctions, the foreign minister said today.

Senate Foreign Relations Committee chairman Richard Lugar, R-Ind., denounced the announcement by Foreign Minister R. F. Botha as an act of "bribery and intimidation" designed to influence the Senate vote scheduled later today.

Botha reported his country's planned response to the sanctions in a statement issued at 2 a.m. He said he had spoken by telephone with Sens. Edward Zorinsky, D-Neb., and Charles Grassley, R-Iowa, who represent two heavily agricultural states.

Both houses of Congress overwhelmingly passed the sanctions bill designed to force an end to South Africa's apartheid racial segregation system, and the House overrode Reagan's veto of the measure earlier this week.

A two-thirds majority is needed to override a presidential veto, and most vote counts have shown Reagan lacks the one-third margin he needs in the Senate to prevent application of the sanctions.

Reagan has argued that, above all, sanctions would harm South African blacks and the people of South Africa's black-ruled neighbors. White House spokesman Larry Speakes said Reagan was contacting senators Wednesday by phone to seek their support.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Iranians make up half of those seeking asylum

BERLIN (AP) — More than 6,300 people came to West Berlin seeking asylum in September and half were Iranians, city authorities said Wednesday.

The announcement came on the effective date of a new policy announced by communist East Germany, through which most of the refugees pass, to stop those without visas for their country of destination from reaching West Berlin.

East Germany surrounds West Berlin, a West German enclave controlled by the World War II European allies that has no border controls because of its international political status. East Germany announced the crackdown on refugees without documents under heavy pressure from West Germany.

Hans Birkenbeul, spokesman for the West Berlin Interior Ministry, said there was no noticeable reduction in the number of asylum applicants crossing into the city Wednesday from East Berlin.

Was it escape or rescue?

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A kidnapped French television cameraman said Wednesday he had escaped from his captors, but the Shiite militia Amal claimed its men rescued him.

Jean-Marc Sroussi disappeared Sunday while entering Moslem west Beirut across the line that divides it from the city's Christian eastern sector.

A witness said he saw Moslem gunmen climb into Sroussi's car, then it sped away. The Frenchman, 41, is a free-lance who has worked in Lebanon since 1982.

Sroussi said he took advantage of a loud thunderstorm to dig under a wall of the room in which he was held.

Musician fussy over cello

LONDON (AP) — British musician Julian Lloyd Webber bought two tickets for a flight to Belfast, one for himself and one for his prized cello. But security officials insisted the instrument go in the baggage hold.

Lloyd Webber, 35, brother of composer Andrew Lloyd Webber, said he always travels with his cello at his side. But on the "high-security classification" air route to strife-torn Northern Ireland, the government insists all large baggage be in the hold.

"We offered to let him watch the instrument being loaded on and then loaded off, but it wasn't acceptable," said a British Airways spokesman at Heathrow Airport.

Research: New drugs might revive people thought brain dead

BALTIMORE (AP) — A new group of drugs has dramatically improved the prospects for survival of animals after a stroke or heart attack and might help revive people who now would be thought brain dead, a researcher says.

The drugs prevent a kind of tissue damage that occurs under many circumstances after organs have been deprived of blood and thus of oxygen, said Gregory Bulkley, director of surgical research at the Johns Hopkins Medical Institutions here.

He described the drugs Wednesday at a news briefing sponsored by Hopkins and the American Medical Association.

The drugs block damage from so-called free radicals, highly chemically active substances formed when blood flow resumes to an organ that has been deprived of blood — such as the brain during a stroke, or the heart during a heart attack.

In other words, some patients now considered brain dead may actually have healthy brains that could be revitalized if the free-radical damage was prevented, Bulkley said.

"The damage we thought was hopelessly irreversible hasn't even happened yet" in some patients, he said, until blood flow resumes.

Gerbils, for example, normally can survive no longer than about four minutes when blood flow to the brain is interrupted.

When gerbils were given anti-free radical drugs, however, Bruce Freeman of the University of Alabama in Birmingham found they could survive for up to 40 minutes while apparently brain dead, and then be revived with no signs of brain damage.

Similar results have been found in animal studies of heart damage, Bulkley said.

Joe McCord and colleagues at the University of Southern Alabama in Mobile have found that the heart damage in dogs who suffered strokes was reduced by as much as two-thirds if anti-free radical drugs were administered as blood flow was restored to the heart.

Richard Traytsman, director of anesthesia research at Hopkins, has told Bulkley that the use of these drugs to prevent stroke damage in cats has been extremely promising.

Bulkley noted that animal results have not all been this good, but believes that this kind of therapy may ultimately be very valuable in the treatment of heart attacks and strokes in humans.

In animals, the results have ranged from unbelievably dramatic to minimal, he said. "It varies from organ to organ and animal to animal.

The question with regard to humans, he said, is how much of the damage in strokes and heart attacks occurs during the period of ischemia, when blood flow is lost, and how much damage occurs when blood flow is restored.

The drugs in question will only prevent the damage that occurs when blood flow resumes and free radicals are generated — which is common in animal injuries.

"We know it happens in animals. It's only speculation that it will happen in humans, but it's a very intelligent guess, I think," Bulkley said.

Bulkley is working with doctors at a transplant center in Munich, West Germany, to determine whether the drugs can prolong the survival of human kidneys after transplant.

Bulkley is one of the scientists who helped explain how the drugs work and how free radicals are generated by the resumption of blood flow.

The most common of the anti-free radical drugs are allopurinol, used to treat gout, and superoxide dismutase, or SOD.

TV characters 'hopping mad' over children's shows, campaign for better

By BOB McHUGH

WASHINGTON (AP) — Capt. Kangaroo is hopping mad and Big Bird's feathers are ruffled about what they think is the lack of decent things for children to watch on television.

These familiar characters, along with other real and not-so-real celebrities, came to the Capitol on Wednesday to kick off a campaign to make television more relevant to its youngest, and often most loyal fans.

Joined by lawmakers, the celebrities proclaimed next week "National Children's Television Awareness Week." The goal is to get youngsters to switch off violent and overtly commercial shows.

"We are asking children to just say, 'No,'" said Bob Keeshan, television's Capt. Kangaroo.

"TV can shape our children's values," added Sen. Frank Lautenberg, D-N.J. "It can make them grow, or turn them into a crop of couch potatoes."

Lautenberg has joined with Rep. Tim Wirth, D-Colo., to introduce the Children's Television Education Act, setting national broadcasting standards. The bill would require broadcast and cable stations to carry a minimum of seven hours a week of educational or informative children's programming.

The measure is aimed, in part, at Federal Commnications Commission rulings refusing to interfere in the quantity or quality of "Kidvid," as children's video has been called.

While complimentary about some children's shows, speakers at a Capitol Hill news conference complained about television violence and the use of trademarked characters in what Lautenberg called "program-long commercials."

"What's for sale here? My kid's mind. His passions shouldn't be for sale," said actor David Birney of "WonderWorks."

Peggy Charren, president of Action for Children's Television, said the week was designed to help "turn that set from a Pandora's box into an Aladdin's lamp."

On hand to endorse the campaign were broadcasting industry representatives and officials of public interest groups. They were joined by costumed actors playing Sesame Street's Big Bird, Mickey and Minnie Mouse and other cartoon favorities.

The colorful characters toyed with lawmakers to the delight of children packing the audience.

Plans for the week, beginning Sunday, include public service announcements on television, pamphlets designed to educate parents and children, and proclamations signed by a dozen governors and Boston Mayor Raymond Flynn.

Wirth, chairman of the House subcommittee on telecommunication, consumer protection and finance, said television has become a fourth major force in shaping the nation's children along with family, religion and school.

In secret plan Gadhafi told he faced bombings

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration waged a secret campaign this summer to try to convince Libyan ruler Moammar Gadhafi that he faced the threat of U.S. bombing and a possible coup, a newspaper reported today.

The secret plan was described in a three-page memorandum sent to President Reagan by John M. Poindexter, the president's national security adviser, The Washington Post said. The plan was adopted at a White House meeting Aug. 14.

According to the Post, Poindexter's memo said "one of the key elements" of the strategy "is that it combines real and illusionary events — through a disinformation program — with the basic goal of making Gadhafi think that there is a high degree of internal opposition to him within Libya, that his key trusted aides are disloyal, that the U.S. is about to move against him militarily."

The plan involved "a series of closely coordinated events involving covert, diplomatic, military and public actions," the newspaper quoted the Poindexter memo as saying.

White House spokesman Dale Petroskey, asked about the report Wednesday night, said, "We have no comment."

Administration sources told The Associated Press that planting false information in the American press was not part of the plan. But they said the United States sought to deceive Gadhafi into thinking another American raid was being planned against him.

The sources also said the plan was based on intelligence that Gadhafi was readying a new terrorist strike.

The Post said that beginning with an Aug. 25 report in The Wall Street Journal, the American news media — including the Post — reported as fact much of the false information generated by the plan. Published reports described renewed Libyan backing for terrorism and a looming, new U.S.-Libya confrontation, the Post said.

But U.S. intelligence officials actually had concluded that Gadhafi was "quiescent" on the terrorist front, the newspaper quoted the Poindexter memo as saying. The only "confrontation" was the one generated by the administration plan, the newspaper said.

The mid-August plan approved by Reagan did not specifically call for the planting of false stories in the U.S. media, the Post said. But a State Department planning memo did provide that the "U.S. government backgrounds media on (1) three-ring circus in Libya with in-fighting among groups jockeying for post-Gadhafi era, (2) threat of resurgent terrorism," the newspaper said.

An administration official familiar with the events said Wednesday night that the United States had a long-standing and previously announced plan to conduct a joint military exercise with Egypt in the Mediterranean and that there also was a regular timetable for shuttling reserve and Air National Guard units to Europe as part of annual summer training.

Based on what the official described as "various bits and pieces of intelligence" indicating Gadhafi might be planning another terrorist strike, the administration decided to use those exercises as warning signals to Gadhafi.

For instance, said the official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, the Navy jiggled the schedules of its carriers involved in the Egyptian exercises to put three aircraft carriers off the North African coast at the same time — although they actually were only passing each other.

Worth discussing

AIDS is a topic a lot of people may go out of their way to avoid discussing. But the deadly disease known as Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome has worked its way into the spotlight of public attention time and time again and has come to touch numerous areas of daily life.

Most of what we hear about the disease is not pleasant. It involves death and hopelessness, which is the reason people try to avoid the topic. It has even been referred to in some quarters as the "Black Plague" of this century.

Now there's good news, of a sort, for a change. Reseachers have announced promising results with an experimental treatment called AZT. In the test, 137 AIDS patients received placebos while 145 patients received AZT. Sixteen of the patients receiving the placebo died, but only one of the patients who received the new drug died. What's more, a number of the patients receiving AZT reported having more energy and experiencing less of some of the disease's other symptoms such as night sweats, fever and rashes.

The company producing the drug, Burroughs Wellcome Co., has even begun a massive production campaign aimed at making enough of the drug in the next six months to treat a large number of the disease's 10,000 victims and the thousands more with AIDS-related complex.

The potential severity of the health threat posed by AIDS is significant. In fact, not long ago trustees of Midland Independent School District adopted a policy to cover any students who might acquire the disease. That move was in anticipation that at some point in time the district will be facing the question of whether to allow students with the disease to attend classes.

In that regard trustees were merely following the lead of other school districts around the nation that, in one way or another, have been forced to address that question.

The point, of course, is that AIDS simply isn't going to disappear as a topic of concern. Regardless of one's perception of the disease or of how it is transmitted or of who is at risk, it is going to continue to pose a health risk to a large number of Americans until medical researchers learn more about it and, ultimately, find a cure.

AZT is a promising step in that direction in that it has offered some AIDS sufferers a longer life. Even for a topic like AIDS, that's worthy of discussion.

Another View:

Democratic identity

For many Democratic politicians, it's painful to be reminded of Jimmy Carter. He was the first member of their party in this century to be voted out of the White House, losing in a landslide at that. Yet there's another fact about Carter that should be kept in mind: He's the only Democrat to have won the presidency in the past two decades.

Unless the party in national elections can reach beyond its residual constituency of liberals, organized labor and racial minorities — as Carter did in 1976 but not in 1980 — presidential elections may continue to be Republican routs. GOP stalwarts will think that's just fine, but it will be troublesome to people who understand society's need for really competitive presidential politics.

A policy statement just issued by the Democratic Policy Commission, a centrist group working under the auspices of the national party organization, could help restore the competitive balance. The commission, headed by former Gov. Scott Matheson of Utah, puts new emphasis on a growing and competitive economy; a strong, but not wasteful, national defense system; greater flexibility in the workplace to accommodate both the single parent and the two-earner family; expanded child-care services; welfare reform that helps the working poor keep their families together; and higher quality education, especially in science and technology.

There's a temptation to say the commission is just trying to equip the party with a new image in order to win more elections, but that's putting it a bit uncharitably. Another way of saying it is that the commission wants the national party's doctrine to be an umbrella broad enough to cover moderates as well as liberals, Nevadans as well as New Yorkers, working couples as well as welfare families.

After all, there is great variety among people who consider themselves Democrats and who vote for Democratic candidates at the state and local levels. It would be logical for the party to reflect some of that diversity in the philosophy that it espouses nationally.

In the process, however, the Democrats must not neglect their tradition of defending the powerless and the unfortunate. It is that heritage, perhaps more than anything else, that gives the party its distinctive identity.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Thursday, Oct. 2, the 275th day of 1986. There are 90 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Oct. 2, 1835, the first battle of the Texas Revolution took place as American settlers defeated a Mexican cavalry near the Guadalupe River.

On this date:

In 1780, British spy John Andre was hanged in Tappan, N.Y.

In 1869, Indian political and spiritual leader Mohandas K. Gandhi was born.

In 1889, the first Pan American conference was held in Washington.

In 1941, German armies began Operation "Typhoon," an all-out drive against Moscow.

In 1950, the comic strip Peanuts, created by Charles Schulz, was first published in nine newspapers.

In 1959, "The Twilight Zone" made its debut on CBS.

In 1961, the medical drama "Ben Casey," starring Vince Edwards and Sam Jaffe, premiered on ABC.

In 1967, Thurgood Marshall was sworn in as a justice of the Supreme Court, the first black so appointed.

In 1980, the House of Representatives voted to expel Pennsylvania Democrat Michael J. Myers, who was convicted of bribery and conspiracy in connection with the FBI's "ABSCAM" probe.

Ten years ago: Critics of Agriculture Secretary Earl L. Butz urged his resignation or dismissal for a crude joke he had made about blacks that was quoted in Rolling Stone magazine.

Five years ago: President Reagan announced a plan to modernize America's strategic nuclear arsenal, calling for the basing of M-X missiles in existing, superhardened silos, and the building of the B-1 bomber, which had been scrapped by President Carter.

One year ago: Actor Rock Hudson died at his home in Los Angeles after battling the deadly disease AIDS. Hudson was 59.

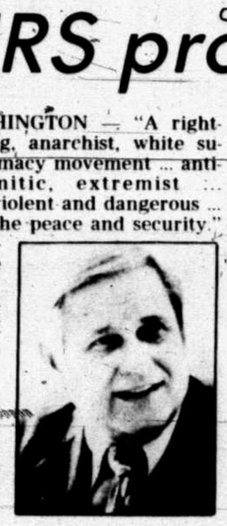

Today's birthdays: Publisher Clay S. Felker is 61. Actor George "Spanky" McFarland is 58. Actor Moses Gunn is 57. Former Dodgers shortshop Maury Wills is 54. Movie critic Rex Reed is 48. Singer-songwriter Don McLean is 41.

IRS profiles militant tax protestors

WASHINGTON — "A right-wing, anarchist, white supremacy movement ... anti-Semitic, extremist ... considered violent and dangerous ... a threat to the peace and security."

Jack Anderson

The ravings of some left-wing campus radical taunting his political enemies? Hardly. These denunciatory descriptions are taken from an official federal government manual — a sensitive, internal document intended for the edification of Internal Revenue Service agents.

Compiled by an agency intelligence officer from criminal records, news clippings and the subject organizations' own propaganda leaflets, the training manual warns IRS agents what to expect when they go after tax protesters who belong to such militant tax-protest groups as Posse Comitatus. Our reporter David Davis obtained a copy of the manual.

It is "clear that some of the tax-protest movement has progressed to a right-wing, anarchist, white supremacy movement," the manual states, adding: "The main goal of these groups is to overthrow the government, and their protest activities are only one way to achieve these goals."

The manual is a Who's Who of tax protesters, listing the dubious credentials of 48 distinct groups. The list includes various Ku Klux Klan organizations, the Aryan Nation, Posse Comitatus, the Kansas-based Farmers Liberation Army, and a paramilitary Christian survivalist outfit whose name is a jingle: The Covenant, the Sword and the Arm of the Lord.

Complete with photographs, the manual gives IRS agents the history, organizational breakdowns and membership requirements of the extremist groups, as well as the vital statistics of their leaders. For example, the manual describes Posse Comitatus as a collection of "unauthorized, self-appointed groups seeking the return of vigilante 'justice.'"

According to the IRS manual, the Posse:

— Advises supporters to stockpile weapons, ammunition, gas masks, medical supplies, food, water and gas.

— Has built schools to teach members how to evade federal and state taxes.

— Has founded churches to help members evade taxes.

— Is conducting paramilitary training.

"They are establishing compounds in rural, sparsely populated areas affording the necessary privacy" to manufacture their own weapons, the manual states, adding that "in New Orleans, La., Posse members have managed to take pictures of IRS agents for Posse 'threat' use."

Agents are told how to spot Posse Comitatus members. They "wear tiny gold hangman's nooses on their lapels," the manual says.

The often painstaking detail provided in the manual is illustrated by the profile of a former top Posse official. He is described as 44 years old, 5 foot 10 inches, 200 pounds, brown hair, blue eyes and "often dressed in a black beret, combat boots and camouflage fatigues." He took part in survival training schools and "worked as a salesman of tooling equipment, has been involved in health food stores and served in the U.S. Army Ordnance in Southeast Asia." The profile adds that the man left his wife and three children and "is now believed to be living with the wife or ex-wife of a fellow Posse member (name unknown) in ... Pennsylvania."

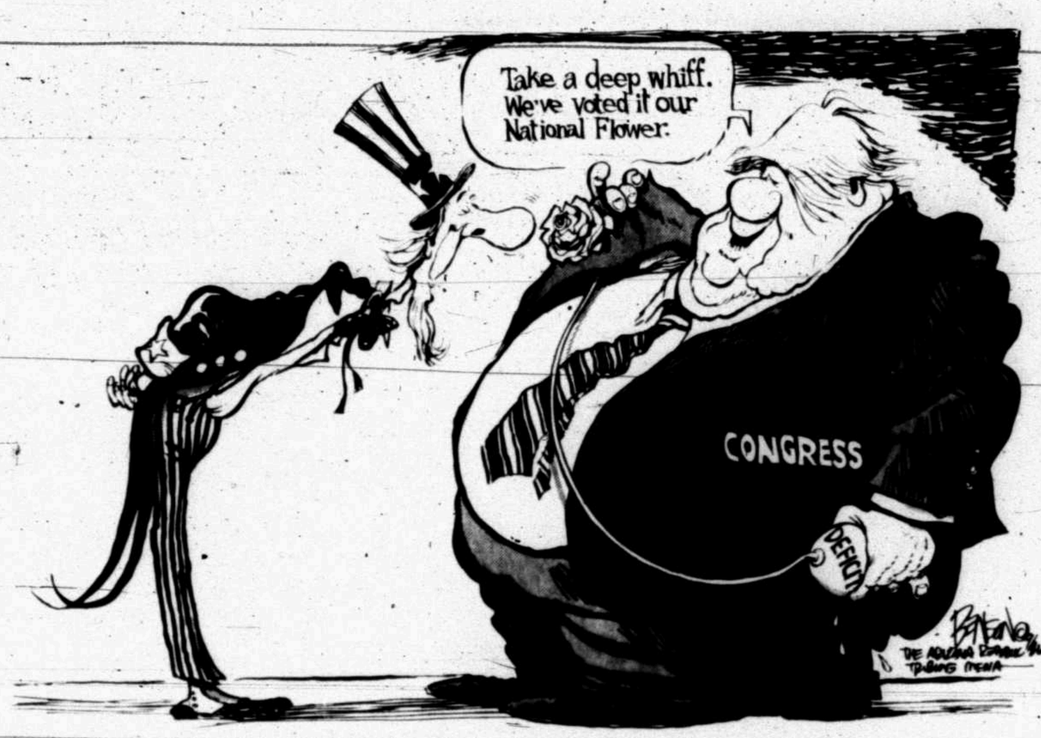

Another Posse big shot fingered by the IRS manual is retired Col. William P. Gale, a former aide to the late Gen. Douglas MacArthur and a director of guerrilla operations in the Philippines in World War II. According to the IRS manual, Gale and his group use the colonel's California ranch as a base and have formed alliances with Oklahoma and Arkansas motorcycle gangs, "trading drugs for illegal guns and explosives."

Gale declined to talk to us, but his wife, Roxanne, said her husband has never hoarded arms. "In my humble opinion," she said, "the IRS is nothing more than a Soviet Gestapo with bullying and scare tactics. They have already overthrown the government."

FLINCH FACTOR II: We recently reported on the "flinch factor" that causes hand-held missile marksmen to miss their targets when they must wire-guide them while exposed to the jarring sounds of battle. Now we've learned that the General Accounting Office is checking into the flinch factor as it applies to Air Force pilots who have to "lock on" to their missile targets by flying in a straight line for 10 or 20 seconds. Any flinching in this situation could cause the multimillion-dollar missiles to miss their targets.

Democrat document finding 'families matter'

WASHINGTON — Digging and delving in the Democratic Party's latest policy pronouncement, "New Choices in a Changing America," you come upon this thumping affirmation: "Families matter." What is going on? A back-to-basics movement among Democrats that is ominous news to Republicans. Democrats have gone out in the pasture behind the barn to practice new lines.

George F. Will

Since the late 1960s, many voters have doubted whether the national Democratic Party shares their anxieties about a dissolution of "traditional values." The Democrats' new policy document addresses that doubt by, among other things, lavishing attention on "the family."

By the third paragraph, the document is dispensing bromides: "Strong, independent families are the centerpiece of Democratic domestic policy." Democrats, in their unmodulated new enthusiasm, may be about to pound the idea of "family policy" into the sort of shapeless goo they have made of the idea of "civil-rights policies."

For years, Democrats have been christening their favorite domestic policies (job programs, public housing, urban renewal) as "civil-rights" policies, in an attempt to give them momentum and insulate them from criticism. Now there is a tendency to turn "family policy" into another classification that does not classify — a classification that includes everything.

Tax reform, job training, aid for small — sorry, I mean "family" — farms, all are advertised as pro-family policies because they ease social distress, and distress is hard on families. The traditional liberal agenda can come clothed in the language of "traditional" values.

However, the Democratic document does contain serious thoughts about the changing texture and rhythms of family life.

The median income of families doubled between 1947 and 1973, but has stagnated since then, in spite of the dramatic increase in two-income families. Today, mortgage payments take 29 percent of the median family income, up from 17.9 percent in 1970. The average annual cost of attending a private university takes 40.4 percent of median family income, up from 29.6 percent in 1970. Home ownership and access to college are basic aspirations of middle-class families and are becoming less accessible.

And there are other new anxieties. In the average kindergarten class today, one in six of the children was born to a teen-age mother. More than 25 percent of America's families are single-parent families and 95 percent of them are headed by women. Seventy percent of all mothers with school-age children work outside the home. When the women who today are between 30 and 39 were 21 to 30, only 58.3 percent had children. Today 78.2 percent do — a 40 percent increase. Many of these are trying to continue professional careers.

The Democratic document states that, "The most common emotion associated with child-rearing is guilt — over 'not spending enough time with the kids.'" The Democrats speak tentatively, promising only to "consider" promoting such measures as parental leave for childbirth, flexible work times, job sharing and other measures to alleviate stress and guilt. These ideas may be slender reeds on which to lean a concept as large as "family policy," but they are not less persuasive than Republican claims to be "pro-family" and "anti-government."

The average American does not think the welfare of his or her family depends primarily on this or that micro-policy that delivers a particular service or benefit. Rather, it depends on the success of one macro-policy: the management of economic growth.

Regarding Republican mismanagement of the economy, as exemplified by the deficit, the Democratic document is a tissue of evasions. For example, in what may be the most backhanded praise in the history of politics, the document says "almost any combination of approaches (to deficit-cutting) is preferable to the poison pill represented by Gramm-Rudman-Hollings" across-the-board budget cuts, but "Gramm-Rudman-Hollings "is preferable to no strategy at all."

However, the most illuminating aspect of the Democratic document is the care it takes to express a particular attitude, using families as the focus. This is less an attempt to promise governmental solutions to the problem than a more modest attempt to demonstrate empathy with voters who are anxious about a problem that is not submissive to political solutions. Democrats are getting a message about "values," a message first offered to them in a book published by two Democrats in 1970.

In "The Real Majority," Richard Scammon and Ben Wattenberg warned that crime, campus unrest and changing sexual mores were giving many voters a sense of moral dissolution, and many voters were saying: "I do not expect a politician, any politician, can make these conditions disappear overnight. I even understand that some of the problems aren't strictly political problems. But I do expect that any politician I vote for will be on my side."

That is one reason why, 16 years and several electoral trouncings later, this Democratic document and even bromides like "'families matter,' matters."

ART BUCHWALD

Tax reform bill all about winners, losers

The tax bill has been passed, and while no one understands it, every expert seems to be producing a "Who won — who lost?" column.

What do taxpayers really think? To find out I decided to speak to a representative from each tax bracket affected by the legislation.

Art Buchwald

The first one I talked to was a poor person.

"How do you feel about the tax reform bill?"

"Very good," he said. "The poor people have always prayed for meaningful tax reform and are delighted it is finally here. We have continually maintained that once the tax system became fair, the poor would be willing to pay its share which, in our case, is nothing."

"Do you believe that if the poor lower class is not obligated to pay taxes, it will encourage many in the middle class to become poor?"

"On the surface it sounds like an incentive for the middle class. But there is more to being poor than not wanting to pay taxes — such as having rotten housing, eating bad food and walking in unsafe neighborhoods. I hate to think that people would choose to be poor just to save money on their taxes."

"What are you going to do with the money you save by not paying taxes?" I asked.

"Invest in bonds, buy out Donald Trump or take over CBS. There is no telling what a poor person is capable of doing when he doesn't have to give everything to Uncle Sam."

After speaking to a poor person I sought out a rich one.

"Sir I would like to talk to you about the new tax reform bill."

He was very serene. "I pay all the taxes I'm obligated to pay, not to mention the fees I am charged by those who handle my money."

"I am happy to hear that. Do you see yourself a winner or a loser with the new tax law?"

"When it comes to taxes, rich people are never winners. We are always looking for ways to make the code more equitable. That's why we support so many experts and accountants — to make sure that we are paying our portion. After all what is money if you can't share it with Washington?"

"Does that make you a winner or a loser?"

"This particular bill takes away many of the deductions that the rich considered part of their life-support systems. But the wonderful thing about being rich is that whatever they do to you, you can always find a way of getting around it."

"Then what you are saying is that even if the rich start out as losers they will eventually be winners."

He continued, "If there is any bitterness amongst the rich it is that in writing the tax reform bill, congressmen and senators abandoned the class who financed their way to power. The very people whose campaigns we donated to have set a torch to our tax shelters."

"You're taking it extremely well," I said.

"The art of being rich is to pretend that nothing bothers you."

The final person I spoke to was a middle-class taxpayer.

"Do you consider yourself a winner or a loser in the new tax bill?"

"At the beginning I will be a small loser but eventually I'll be a big winner. The middle class is always a winner when it comes to income taxes."

"Do you honestly believe that?" I asked him.

"No, but I thought you'd like an upbeat note for the end of your column."

Southern pine beetle grabbing attention of forestry experts

HUMBLE (AP) — Texas forestry experts are engaged in a new campaign to halt the epidemic spread of the Southern pine beetle, which is infesting some 10 million acres of land in 33 counties.

Researchers from Texas A&M University and the Texas Forest Service are trying an experimental chemical spraying program in hopes of duplicating the pesky insect's natural scent, which warns other pine beetles that a particular tree already is infested and they should move on.

"The object is to keep the beetles out of the trees as long as we can so they can be eaten by predators or dry out from lack of water, die and blow away," said Ron Billings, principal entomologist for the Texas Forest Service.

The new treatment, administered to about 20 spots in East Texas this summer, is called an inhibitor and is designed to drive the insects away from healthy trees or trees that are in the early stages of attack from the beetles.

"As beetles emerge and attack, we hope to provide an artificial signal that a tree is no longer suitable for them," said Tom Payne, a Texas A&M professor of entymology and forest science who has been working on the beetle problem for more than a decade.

Officials say the outbreak this summer, while at epidemic levels in 16 East Texas counties, is not as bad as a year ago, when the current cycle of outbreaks apparently peaked.

Some 50,000 acres of forest, worth $51 million in lumber, were killed in the first eight months of 1985 because of beetle infestation. In the same period this year, Forest Service officials put the lumber losses at $10 million for 16,000 diseased acres.

Payne has developed a compound called Verbenone, which duplicates the secretion male beetles give off as a warning to other beetles to stay away.

"It's basically sensory physiology," he says. "It doesn't kill. It's a behavioral chemical. We don't kill. We don't want to take from the forest."

What researchers want to do is try to keep the beetle out of the trees. Without a tree to burrow into, the insect will die in three to five days, according to Payne.

"They will land, but in small numbers and not kill a tree," he said.

The artificial scent is sprayed on about a square-foot area of bark on a healthy tree which is in the immediate vicinity of trees already infested. The air currents around a tree move the scent up the trunk.

"If the tree is attacked by hundreds of beetles, we're trying to reduce that," Payne said.

The compound, however, is just one of 14 different compounds emitted by the beetle.

"There are no simple answers to these things," he said.

The beetle, about the size of a grain of rice, hides under the bark of a pine tree. Females lay as many as 30 eggs, with half of the eggs surviving. Each female can infest up to three trees.

The beetles disrupt the water flow within the tree and kill it. They also inject a blue dye into the wood, making it undesirable for use as lumber.

Unlike the fire ant, which was imported into this country and continues to be a pest, the pine beetle appears to be native to the southern United States. Records of infestations can be found in the 19th century, Billings said.

In Texas, the outbreaks have been in cycles, the worst occurring a year ago. Other recent outbreaks peaked in 1976 and 1962.

Foresters in airplanes survey wooded areas to identify infestations. Ground crews then are dispatched to take a closer look.

Payne said it is too early to determine how successful the artificial scent is doing. "We've got a lot more data to get," he said.

But the next steps in the research will be to use the inhibitor as a buffer on good trees and cut down recently attacked trees.

The goal is to try to eliminate any cutting of good trees, which currently is the usual method of stemming the spread of the beetle. Foresters now recommend cutting a 40- to 60-foot buffer around the leading edge of an infestation to deter the spread.

"A lot of owners don't like to sacrifice good trees," Billings said.

The outlook for a commercially available version of the compound now being tested is still a few years away, experts said. The price has decreased from $750 to $1,000 per kilogram to about $200 in recent years.

This year, the Forest Service lists as new epidemic counties — those which have more than one outbreak for each 1,000 acres of forest — Harrison, Panola, Shelby, Nacogdoches, Rusk, Cherokee, Harris, Orange, Marion, Anderson and Grimes.

Still on the epidemic list from last year are Montgomery, Newton, Jasper, San Augustine and Liberty.

There's a world of surprises in every unpacked antique

By MARY MARGARET DAVIS

EL PASO (AP) — Why were copies of an English welder's birth and death certificates left in a secret drawer in an old oak sideboard?

That's only one of the small mysteries that crossed the Atlantic and made their way to El Paso recently in six 40-foot containers of furniture.

When El Paso antiques dealer Linda Van Pelt visited England and France last year, she made it a working vacation, buying up the contents of a few private homes and several class hotels and neighborhood pubs that were being remodeled or closed.

"I'd say to the people running the sales, 'I'll take half (of the display room)' or 'I want everything that I saw on the upstairs floor,'" she said.

A big truck followed Ms. Van Pelt as she went from sale to sale, packing away her purchases on the spot. When she was ready to go to France, the truck crossed the English Channel on a ship. She went over by ferry and soon she and the truck were back together, on the trail of furnishing sales.

Upon returning to England, Ms. Van Pelt flew home, leaving it to a broker to get the 340 pieces of merchandise loaded into containers and put aboard ships bound for Houston, the ocean port nearest El Paso. There the containers were transferred to specially designed trucks and put on the road to Ms. Van Pelt's shop.

"Of course, I didn't go through the pieces before they were shipped," Ms. Van Pelt said, "so we found quite a few surprises when we began unpacking them. Customers bought some things before we had checked them, and they told us they found things, too. For instance, a baby's wardrobe chest still had a little child's security blanket inside a compartment."

Among the credenzas, vanities, tables, chairs, wardrobes, beds and chests of drawers was the heavy sideboard in which Ms. Van Pelt and manager Adele Harmon found the two papers that told the life story of the welder.

She was one Leah Godfrey, born in 1904 in Birmingham to John William Kirk and his wife, Elizabeth Kirk formerly Mooney. Leah Godfrey married a gas inspector, Leonard Charles Godfrey, who preceded her in death; and was mother of their son, Frederick John Godfrey, who was present at her death early this year in West Heath Hospital in Birmingham.

Van Pelt said she would wonder always how those papers came to be in that drawer. She would never have found them had she not noticed that a large piece of carved wood, which bowed out between two obvious drawers, appeared to be loose.

Pulling on it, she discovered it was the front of a secret drawer, lined with green felt and divided into compartments especially for the storage or a set of silver flatware, safely concealed from burglars.

Other mementos that Ms. Van Pelt has found and saved include a large siver-deckle-edged card with engraved lettering and an elaborate crest — a very formal program for a "dinner on the occasion of saying farewell to Mr. T.E. Mahir of the Metropolitan Police, deputy commander of the Police College in Ryton-on-Dunsmore."

At the party on Dec. 12, 1957, the evening opened with a toast to the queen, followed by melon frappe, cream of tomato soup, roast turkey and ham, chipolata sausage, cranberry jelly, bread sauce, french fried potatoes, and garden peas. For dessert, being the holiday season, there was Christmas pudding with brandy sauce and a tray of Stilton, Cheddar and petit Gruyere cheeses and biscuits.

Music at the retirement party was by the Metropolitan Police Central Band, "by kind permission of the police commissioner, Sir John Nott-Bower."

Other discoveries include an inscribed prayer book dated 1936, scraps of tatting and a tatting shuttle, knitting needles, and a tabloid newspaper devoted to the 1981 royal wedding of the Prince and Princess of Wales.

"We'll always wonder who were Hersey and Fordham whose home address was The Hill, Stratford-on-Avon," Ms. Van Pelt said. "Two of their Christmas cards from the 1950s were in a desk drawer, with pictures of their four beautiful children."

NATION

Powerful thunderstorms rumbled over sections of Kansas, Oklahoma and Texas, spawning tornadoes and hail as large as golf balls, and threatening flash floods today in the central and southern Plains.

Scattered showers and thunderstorms fell from southern New England and New York into Pennsylvania and across sections of western Nebraska and northern Minnesota. Rainshowers also fell from Utah and Nevada to the northern Rockies, with snow in the mountains.

The strong thunderstorms produced tornadoes Wednesday night in southwest Oklahoma at McKnight, Canute and near Willow. Golf ball-size hail pelted Floydada, Texas, and Willow, Okla., while three-quarter-inch hail fell in Mooreland, Okla. Wichita, Kan., received marble-size hail and 1.15 inches of rain.

The National Weather Service predicted that Hurricane Paine, which is off of Baja California, would combine with a storm system over Utah and Nevada, possibly producing more widespread heavy rains over already saturated ground in north west Texas, Oklahoma, Kansas and Missouri today and Friday.

'Dogs face tough rebound test from Panthers

ODESSA — The Midland High Bulldogs have two things to overcome at 8 p.m. Friday at Ratliff Stadium.

The first is the mental aspect of their 38-6 emotional loss to Midland Lee last week in the District 4-5A opener. The second is thier opponent: Odessa Permian.

"It's been tough on us," said MHS coach Doug McCutchen on overcoming the loss to Lee. "We started off Monday a little sluggish but are slowly improving. Tuesday was a good day and we're hoping today (Wednesday) will be even better."

But, an improved mental attitude is only half the battle. The Bulldogs still have the state's No. 2 ranked Permian Panthers to contend with, a task any coach would consider formidable.

"They're definately a traditional Permian team," said McCutchen. "They have great running backs, have a very explosive offense and their defense gives up yardage very grudgingly.

"The thing we've got to do is get our confidence up after last week," continued McCutchen. "We were playing geed defense and that was kind of shattered last week. The big thing we have to do is make Permian drive the ball, not let them have the big plays. If we can do that, we feel like we have a chance to slow them down some."

TO WIN, however, the Bulldogs will have to slow the Panthers down a lot. Looking at this week's District 4-5A statistic sheet, one wonders if that's possible.

The Panthers own the top ranked offense, top ranked defense, top two ranked rushers and the top two scorers.

Offensively, Shawn Crow is literally running away with the rushing title, owning 615 yards on 55 carriers for an 11.2 average.

Crow is nearly 300 yards ahead of teammate Woody Bryant with 339 yards while Midland Lee's Rodney Johnson is third at 307.

Crow and Bryant have 112 points between them in four games, 64 from Bryant, who is also the extra point kicker, and 48 from Crow.

As a team, the Panthers are averaging 414.5 yards per game, 1,362 rushing and 296 passing. Defensively, Permian has allowed only 640 yards for a 160 per game average.

The Bulldog rushers are led by Anthony Adkison, who is sixth in the district, with 264 yards, 5.7 per carry. Backfield mate Tyrone Oliver adds another 169 yards (5.3 ppc).

Offensively, the Bulldogs rank fourth in the league with a 285 per game average or 1,140 total. The 'Dogs do have a bit more balance in their attack, covering 642 on the ground and throwing for 498.

Defensively, Midland High fell to second behind Permian allowing 191.3 yards per game. The Bulldog rushing defense has been victimized for 578 yards while the pass defense has allowed only 187 yards, the fewest in the league.

Owls, Badgers meet in battle for West Texas

By ERIC SCHURER

BIG LAKE — While proclaiming Friday's game with McCamey "is not life or death for our season or theirs," Reagan County coach Ronnie Reeger would still like to store up some momentum for the district season.

McCamey's Buster Leaf also downplays the import of this one, pointing ahead to next week's district opener with Presidio.

But one thing is certain, the winner when the 3-0 Owls and the 4-0 Badgers meet Friday at 7:30 p.m. will be tabbed the best 2A team in this part of West Texas. And with both team records unmarred, you could almost call this a "Pre-District Championship".

Of course, the true No. 1 will emerge as district games wear on and the playoffs near, but there's no denying the impact this game could have on the season to come — and the rankings.

It certainly matches some of the finest skill position football players in Wests Texas — and two of its up-and-coming coaches.

Reeger, a former Texas Tech lineman in the early 1960s, has become a proven winner in three short years at Reagan County. Last season he earned his first playoff berth there with a runner-up finish in Distfict 8-2A despite losing his top gun quarterback in the final pre-district game.

In 1986, Reeger is hoping for a repeat trip to the state playoffs in a new district — 6-2A. A trio of juniors, all with playoff experience, make this Owl team capable of that and more.

With tailback James West, quarterback Scott Lipsey and fullback Junrio Romero, Reagan County sports one of the most versatile backfields around. This season Lipsey has Boston Red Sox pitcher Roger Clemens holds his elbow after he was hit by a line drive off the bat of Baltimore's John Stefero Wednesday while teammate Dave Stapleton (11) walks over to check out Clemens' injury.

Red Sox ace hit by Stefero's liner

Associated Press

Roger Clemens' right elbow certainly isn't a funny bone for the Boston Red Sox today.

The ace right-hander, bidding to become the first Red Sox pitcher to win 25 games in 37 years, was hit on the elbow by a line drive off the bat of Baltimore's John Stefero in the second inning Wednesday night. Boston's ultimate 11-7 victory over the Orioles took a back seat to questions about whether Clemens will be able to start the American League playoffs as scheduled next Tuesday against the AL West champion California Angels.

"The ball hit just above the elbow on the outside and there doesn't appear to be any muscle damage," club physician Dr. Thomas Pappas said. "We just have to wait. We're not talking a matter of weeks, we're talking a matter of days.

"X-rays showed no bone damage other than a bruise, and now we just have to wait until tomorrow (Thursday) to see how much swelling and discomfort there is," Pappas said.

Pappas said Clemens experienced "mild to moderate discomfort, not severe" after X-rays were taken within a half-hour after Clemens was struck.

"I think he will be throwing again in the early playoffs. I don't know how early. We'll have to wait," the doctor said.

Clemens was sent home and ordered to keep ice on the elbow, take medication and rest.

"When you get as far as we have in a season and something like this happens, it's scary," Boston Manager John McNamara said. "It was very scary."

Stefero's liner was hit so hard that it bounced all the way from the mound into right field for an RBI single. Tim Lollar replaced Clemens after Stefero's hit.

AL West champion California went into the ninth inning with no hits for the fourth time this season, but escaped without embarrassment for the third time as Kansas City lefthander Danny Jackson finished with a two-hitter.

Tigers 2, Brewers 1

Chet Lemon's RBI double in the eighth inning boosted Detroit over Milwaukee, spoiling the debut of Brewers' Manager Tom Trebelhorn and Ted Higuera's bid to win his 21st game.

A's 9, Rangers 7

Pinch-hitter Terry Steinbach hit a three-run homer in the eighth inning, the second of his major league career in 14 at-bats, rallying Oakland over Texas.

White Sox 3, Mariners 1

Reid Nichols drove in three runs, including the tie-breaker with a homer in the sixth, for Chicago against Seattle, which lost its sixth straight game.

Blue Jays 9, Yankees 0

Jesse Barfield hit two solo homers to take over the major league lead with 39, and Jimmy Key and Tom Henke combined on a six-hitter, leading Toronto over New York.

Reds know 'For Whom Bell Tolls'

If Buddy Bell is sailing new waters, his boss, Cincinnati Reds' Manager Pete Rose, is just glad his ship didn't sink.

"It's good for me to see him come back," Rose said, "because a lot of people had given up on him."

Bell, traded from Texas to Cincinnati last year, hit a career-high 20th homer, a two-run shot, then drove in the winning run with a single in the ninth inning to give the Reds a 6-5 victory over Atlanta Wednesday night.

"I've never been in the 20s before," said Bell, who never had more than 18 homers before this year. "Twenty is a nice number. I'd like to get a couple more."

The score in Atlanta was tied 5-5 when Barry Larkin led off the ninth with a single off Gene Garber. Larkin stole second and, one out later, Bell hit a single to left that gave the Reds their seventh victory in eight games.

In addition to his 20 homers, Bell now has 75 RBI and is hitting .279. Last year, he had just 10 homers, six for the Reds, and 68 RBI, 36 at Cincinnati.

After Chicago's fifth touchdown against Cincinnati Sunday, who still cared about watching the rest of the game, especially when Houston and Pittsburgh were locked in a close, often tied, battle in the Astrodome.

This brings up a question I've often pondered. Why do the networks insist on keeping a blowout on the air when there are other more interesting games in progress around the league?

If the Chicago-Cincinnati yawner was an isolated incident, I wouldn't mind as much. But, it was the second game of the weekend to bore me to death.

Saturday's Texas Tech-Baylor SWC matchup was an even worse example of network programming stupidity. The game was a rout and running long but nobody pulled the plug.

Sorry Tech fans, but your Black and Blue, er, Red and Black Raiders can't even fill Jones Stadium so why should I, at home, be subjected to their ineptness, especially when it causes me to miss the first quarter of the Oklahoma-Miami game.

So, suffering from a slight amount of irritation, I called a local network — CBS affiliate KOSA — and talked to News Director Bob Cyphers. I chose Cyphers because I've known him since he first came to town and it was his network I was perturbed at this weekend.

"Bob," I asked, "Can you tell me why CBS didn't interrupt the Tech-Baylor game so we could watch Oklahoma-Miami?"

"Basically, any time you start a network program, you have to finish it," answered Cyphers. "A couple of years ago, late in the season, there was an NFL game between Washington and Detroit on Saturday and it was supposed to end at 3 p.m. We had Lee against Converse Judson in the state championship game scheduled to start at 3 p.m. and I knew if the NFL game ran long we'd be in trouble. It ran long and we joined the Lee game late and heard about it.

"For Tech and Baylor, we bought the contract from Raycom and it says you will pick up the game from the time it starts until the time it ends, no exceptions."

How about the Chicago-Cincinnati fiasco on Sunday, Bob? Why wasn't something done about it?

"The only time we can change a program is for an NFL game if one team is ahead by 18 points or more in the fourth quarter," said Cyphers. "We could have picked up any other CBS game and I was waiting for them to do it but they didn't. The only time I've seen anybody switch a program is for NFL football and it's very rare.

"If you have a satellite dish, you can get every game that's up there on the bird. All you have to do is turn it."

Yeah, Bob, but most of us don't own satellite dishes so we're stuck with cable and the programming selected for us by some guy who doesn't know what we want, as seen by the final long, drawn out minutes of Tech-Baylor.

I've noticed a few other problems with network sports of late, mostly in the selection of teams to be televised.

First off, networks, I'm sick of seeing Notre Dame play second-rate football — except on those occasions when they can beat up on third rate teams. The Irish are still suffering from too much Gerry Faust and not very exciting too watch.

Second, you keep cramming the Chicago Bears down our throats and, except for Sunday when they pounded the Bengals, they haven't played all that well.

Third, I'd like to know who the idiot was who picked Houston-Atlanta as Saturday's Baseball Game of The Week when Boston-Toronto was for a pennant. After all, The Astros had already clinched their title.

"Most of the country was given the Boston game but some regional director in charge picked Houston," said Cyphers. "Normally, they'd pick Houston for the Texas region but that week, I think, they were wrong."

Well, Bob, thank's for at least agreeing with me on some of my points, but that doesn't excuse your network for the bungling stupidity of this past weekend. After all, it's televisions' duty to entertain or inform its audience. But, not by beating a dead horse, er, Red Raider.

In his last 24 games, Philadelphia's Von Hayes has been one of the hottest hitters in baseball. He is 34-for-95, a .358 average, and is hitting .308 for the season. He leads the National League in runs scored with 106 and in doubles with 45.

Cleveland's Cory Snyder went hitless against Minnesota Tuesday night to snap a 17-game hitting streak, the longest by a rookie in the major leagues this season.

Pitcher Danny Cox of the St. Louis Cardinals has turned things around since owning a 2-7 record in July. He has won 10 of his last 15 decisions, including Tuesday's 5-3 win over Pittsburgh, to even his record at 12-12.

UIL puts 2A Blanco football on three-year probation

AUSTIN (AP) — The undefeated Blanco football team was publicly reprimanded and put on three years' probation for making its players report to a summer weight-lifting program, officials say.

The University Interscholastic League Wednesday was so upset over the practice — one that it said gave Blanco an unfair advantage over other schools — that it considered disqualifying the team even if it should win all its games.

But the motion to reprimand the team publicly and put it on probation carried with seven votes of the 12 members present.

An anonymous letter said Blanco Superintendent Larry Moehnke had organized summer workouts with an attendance check.

"He told my son he must attend these workouts," said a letter that included a typed workout schedule that said team captains "are responsible for knowing why their group members are missing from weight workouts."

UIL Athletic Director Bill Farney and staff member B.J. Stamps investigated July 16 and found athletes in the weight room and a clipboard for signing in.

New coach and athletic director Alan Fisher was in the next room, according to the players, Stamps' report said. Stamps said Moehnke was told to stop the weight program.

"We never did intend to violate any rules," Moehnke told the UIL committee Wednesday. "What we've done was done through oversight."

Moehnke, whose son is a junior fullback on the Class 2A team, said he was "embarrassed" by the incident and had spent a "lot of sleepless nights" over it.

He denied telling any student-athlete he had to attend the workouts and said, "Please don't punish the kids ... punish me."

A motion to reprimand Blanco publicly with only one year of probation failed 5-7, and a motion to disqualify the team for district honors this year never came to a vote.

Committee member Mike Day said the weight program was intended to give Blanco an advantage over other teams and was a clear violation of UIL rules.

To successfully complete the three-year probationary period, Blanco must establish a program to tell administrators and coaches of UIL rules and adopt a policy that addresses appropriate penalties for violations.

Failure to comply would result in disqualification in whichever sport the violation occurs.

Two universities receive exemption from IRS ruling

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Two universities are exempt from an Internal Revenue Service ruling that several athletic directors say could hurt funding for many of the nation's major college athletic programs, according to published reports.

The Daily Oklahoman, in a story for Thursday's editions, said the exemptions apply only to the University of Texas at Austin and Louisiana State University. The newspaper said the exemptions apply to the schools not by name but by description, such as located in a state capital pursuant to a statewide election in 1881 and guided by a nine-member board of regents appointed by the governor.

The exemptions were contained in one of the so-called transition rules that were inserted in the tax reform package adopted last week by the U.S. Senate and House of Representatives.

Sources told The Daily Oklahoman that the exemptions were granted at the request of Sen. Russell B. Long, D-La., and Rep. J.J. (Jake) Pickle, D-Texas.

"Pickle and Long have been catching the devil," said athletic director Frank Broyles of Arkansas, "but the colleges shouldn't feel left out or feel double-crossed. I think it's a very positive thing because it opens the door for the rest of us to get it too."

If the exemption is not extended to other colleges, it would provide a big advantage to LSU and Texas, some athletic directors said.

"There's no question but what it would be unfair to the rest of us," said Leon Cross, associate director of athletics at the University of Oklahoma.

The exemption applies to an IRS ruling in April that would make it more difficult for donors to college athletic programs to deduct the money as a charitable contribution.

The IRS ruling says that donors who receive preferred seating in stadiums or arenas cannot deduct their contributions except in certain circumstances, which athletic directors say would "pose an administrative nightmare."

The athletic directors said they fear the ruling could cause a substantial drop in donations, which count for a significant part of the budget in many programs, and that the blow would fall on non-revenue producing sports, including women's programs.

Broyles said that about 35 percent of Arkansas' athletic revenue comes from donations. Cross said that about 20 percent of Oklahoma's 1985-86 budget of $11 million came from donations.

Athletic director Doug Dickey of Tennessee says that about 15 percent of the Voluinteers' budget of $14 million comes from donations, but he is trying to reach 20 percent.

Mission golf title won with Battersby' chip

From Staff Reports

Mission Country Club pro Kevin Battersby chipped to within 10-feet of the pin at Mission Country Club over the weekend to lead his team to a chip-off win over a team from Midland Country Club in the sectional Oldsmobile scramble.

Battersby and his amatuer teammates, Mickey Wilson, Ricky Digby, Lindle Dempsey and Don Miller qualified for the Oldsmobile scramble national tournament to be held Oct. 9-13 in Orlando, Fla., where 127 teams from across the nation will gather.

The top 36 teams will get to play with a PGA touring pro in the final round.

The MCC team of pro Scott Neiman and amatuers Craig Campbell, Brett Smith and Charlie Lacy played in the morning round and had to wait all day for the Mission team to finish. Wilson sank a 30-foot downhill putt on the final hole to force a chip-off.

The MCC squad managed to chip within 15-feet of the pin from 40 yards out on No. 18, but Battersby's chip won.

Battersby won $1,000 and all expenses to Florida while his teammates took prizes. MCC's Neiman won $700.

Packers ink Fusina to one-year pact

GREEN BAY, Wis. (AP) — The struggling Green Bay Packers signed former USFL quarterback Chuck Fusina on Wednesday, but Coach Forrest Gregg said his team wasn't abandoning its pursuit of 1984 Heisman Trophy winner Doug Flutie.

"We saw in Doug Flutie the same thing we saw in college" at Boston College, Gregg said. "We have an interest."

Gregg said he talked to the Los Angeles Rams, who own the NFL rights to the 5-foot-9 Flutie, "but not in a serious manner."

Flutie played his rookie professional season for the New Jersey Generals of the United States Football League. He is trying to work out details that would get him released from his personal services contract with Generals owner Donald Trump.

"That has not been concluded," Gregg said. "Therefore, we cannot go any further."

Flutie and Fusina worked out with the Packers on Tuesday, as Gregg searched for a quarterback who could move his new ball control offense. The 0-4 Packers have scored only two touchdowns with third-year pro Randy Wright and veteran backup Vince Ferragamo leading the offense.

Rookie Robbie Bosco of Brigham Young has been on injured reserve the entire season, and Gregg said he doesn't know when the third-round draft pick will return.

Fusina, 29, who played at Penn State, was a backup with Tampa Bay of the NFL for three seasons before playing for the USFL's Stars. The Stars were based in Philadelphia then Baltimore and won two USFL championships with Fusina.

"He's been there, and he's done the job," Gregg said. "We liked what we saw. We think he has a chance of helping us."

Fusina accepted a one-year contract with an option, according to his agent, Jeff Briscoe. "I'd be lying if I said I wasn't pretty excited about it," said Fusina, who passed for more than 10,000 yards in his three-year USFL career.

Gregg said he planned to ask the NFL for a two-week roster exemption for Fusina. Wright, who has thrown eight interceptions and completed only 44 percent of his passes this season, will start against Cincinnati on Sunday at Milwaukee, Gregg said.

The coach also said once Fusina was activated, the Packers probably would go with three quarterbacks on the active roster.

Gregg refused to speculate on what would happen if the Packers obtained Flutie. And he would not say what the Rams, who outbid the Packers for former Purdue quarterback Jim Everett, were asking in return for Flutie's rights.

Flutie and his lawyer, Bob Woolf, said they hoped for tryouts with other NFL teams. Flutie's workout with Green Bay was his first in the league.

The Packers also announced that former Generals linebacker Bobby Leopold had signed a series of two one-year contracts. Leopold played at Notre Dame and with the San Francisco 49ers before going to the USFL.

TALL CITY BOWLING

Bevel 'dead strokes' near-miss 298

By TOMMY GAMMAGE

The dream of a 300 game has once again eluded another Midland bowler. This time it was Rusty Bevel, an up and coming 180 average bowler rolling in the Monday Nite Scratch Trio. His near-miss scored was 298 in the second game of a four-game series.

Bevel's first and third game's of the night were a pair of 212s to give him a three-game series of 722. What was his fourth game? Rusty's not talking but his four-game set was 890 so do a little arithmatic and...

About his 298, which we find is not even his all-time high but beaten by a 299 rolled some years ago, Bevel submitted a term called "dead stroke," which means he was hitting his mark with every ball delivery and had total control of his game, for 11 frames that is.

In the 12th frame, well, he became aware of some disturbing noises such as a loud pounding in his chest and a slight knocking from somewhere around the knees. He made his delivery and so much for "dead stroke." The ball hit six boards left of his mark and went high into the nose, leaving the 3-6

Let's face it bowlers, whether you're a pro or amateur, the prospect of a perfect game will still get anyone's adrenaline flowing.

FOR BOWLERS who think because they have a low average they can't compete in handicap tournaments, nothing could be farther from the truth be they man or woman.

For example, take a young lady that I know very well who has only been bowling a total of three years, off and on. This year she is participating in the Keglers League and has a 127 average.

After a lot of coaxing, she was finally talked into entering her first tournament in August. Lacking confidence — not to mention being scared to death — she still finished an outstanding 8th for a $60 check. Suddenly it's "when's the next tournament?".

She followed with an 11th place for a $40 check and in last week's Tall City Lanes doubles tournament, she rolled a career high 199 game and 553 series and, yes, as my partner, cashed seventh for another $50. Nice going Vanessa.

Tournaments just seem to bring out the best in bowlers.

While on the subject of bowling accomplishments, how about Patsy Wallin with a triplicate 176 for a WIBC award. Bowling three identical games is extremely tought.

How about high averages? Karen Jordan owns a 210 and Dot Fielding a 191.

Lucille Patterson, 139 average, rolled her first 200 with a 202 while Donna Harmon (136) was 113 pins over her average and Lester Anderson (142) was 120 pins over hers.

LAST WEDNESDAY morning I was rushing to get the kids off to school while listening to "Good Morning America" when they did a short segment about bowling. I just want to clarify three terms they used toward the nation's No. 1 indoor sport.

First, it's "bowling centers," not "bowling alleys." An alley is where trash is usually dumped. Second, it's "channel ball," not "gutter ball. Gutters are things rain water usually drains into. Third, it's "lanes" not "alleys." See above for definition of alleys.

On the good side, the program did note that several presidents, including Ronald Reagan, use the bowling lanes installed in the White House. The program also stated there are 69 million bowlers out there in the world and the sport is growing every year.

formance, Bell said he was "more comfortable now than I was when I had that bad start. I think I've improved significantly from when I first came over here."

Added Rose: "He has been there whenever we've needed him with the clutch hits, the home runs. That's one spot that we don't have any problem with in 1987."

Astros 5, Giants 0

The Astros' pitching staff threw its sixth shutout in the last eight games. Danny Darwin worked the first five innings, giving up five hits, and got help from Aurelio Lopez, Charlie Kerfeld and Dave Smith to blank San Francisco. Terry Puhl and Alan Ashby each homered for Houston.

The victory gave the Astros a 92-66 record, matching the club's best record by the National League West Division championship team.

Lopez gave up one hit in two innings, Kerfeld allowed a hit in his one inning of work and Smith pitched a hitless ninth.

Mets 6, Expos 4

Howard Johnson singled with two out in the 10th inning, driving in Gary Carter with the winning run and giving the Mets their 104th victory over the season. An insurance run scored on Johnson's hit when Expos left fielder Herm Winningham let the ball roll through his legs for an error.

Keith Hernandez gave the Mets a 4-3 lead in the eighth with a two-run double, his second of the game giving him three RBI. The Expos tied the score in the ninth on Dann Bilardello's pinch single off Jesse Orosco.

Darryl Strawberry hit a home run for the Mets, and Andre Dawson had two RBI doubles for Montreal.

Pirates 4, Cardinals 3

Johnny Ray homered with one out in the eighth inning to break a 3-3 tie and lift Pittsburgh over St. Louis, allowing the Phillies to clinch second place in the NL East. Ray hit a 3-0 pitch from Ray Soff into the right field stands for his game-winning homer.

Larry McWilliams, 3-11, relieved Pittsburgh starter Rick Reuschel in the seventh for the victory, and Don Robinson earned his 14th save with 1 2-3 innings of relief.

Padres 3, Dodgers 2

The Padres wound up their home season with a combined five-hitter from rookie Jimmy Jones and veteran reliever Rich Gossage, dropping the Dodgers into last place in the NL West.

Jones gave up three hits, including Franklin Stubbs' two-run homer, in seven innings, and Gossage allowed another two hits in his two innings' work.

ONE QUESTION the Bulldogs have going into the game is the health of Oliver. The 150-pounder has been sick this week and McCutchen doesn't expect him to start on either side of the ball.

"He's been sick all week," said McCutchen. "He'll probably play in the ball game but we're to go with the kids who have worked out all week."

Tommy Yorkman, who has 17 carriers for 78 yards this season, will step in at halfback while Ricky Duran is expected to get the start at safety. Duran is also the Bulldogs' starting flanker.

While slowing down Crow and Bryant seems to be the main task for the Bulldog defense, finding some improvement on offense is another key area.

"We're going to have to come off the ball on the line of scrimmage," said McCutchen. "Lee totally dominated the line of scrimmage against us. We also need better execution in the back field and we have to throw the ball.

"It's going to be a tough game for us to bounce back, especially against a team like Permian but we're going to go over there and try for the upset."

One, if found, that won't come easy.

shown he can throw the ball (six TD passes) as well as run. And West's shifty moves and flat-out speed always make him a long-ball threat.

IN McCAMEY, Leaf has continued the winning ways he established with a trip to the state semifinals in 1983, his first season. Last year Leaf again took the Badgers into the playoffs, nudging Reeger and the Owls 15-7 in the district opener and waltzing away with the district title.

Now, moving west into District 5-2A, Leaf could waltz right into the playoffs again. The Badgers have already racked up big, emotional wins over Crane and Ozona. Another win over former-district rival Reagan County would just add to Leaf's trophy case.

Fueling the Badgers' drive back to the state tournament is the rejuvenation of senior tailback Rodney Terry. An explosive runner, Terry shined as a freshman and sophmore for McCamey gaining more than 1,900 yards. But in his junior season, a fractured ankle forced him onto the sidelines halfway through the year.

Now, as Leaf says, Terry is just beginning to regain his quickness and the moves he had when he was healthy. Terry broke loose for 158 yards and two touchdowns against Ozona, giving Leaf more and more confidence in him.

The Badgers have also gotten a lot of mileage out of the quarterbacking duo of Rob Adams and Roman Zarate. Both have come in and run Leaf's offense without a hitch and have added a new dimension to a Leaf-coached team — a passing attack.

Both Adams and Zarate have thrown three touchdown passes each in the run-oriented Badger offensive scheme.

With Terry and young Emmit Brown running from tailback and Adams/Zarate zinging touchdown passes, Leaf has found the perfect elixir — a balanced offense.

1908 — Hall of Famer Addie Joss of the Cleveland Indians pitched a perfect game, defeating the Chicago White Sox 1-0. His mound adversary, Ed Walsh, yielded only four hits and struck out 15 batters.

1916 — Grover Alexander of the Philadelphia Phillies pitched his 16th shutout of the season, allowing only three hits by the Boston Braves in a 2-0 victory.

1920 — The only tripleheader in this century was played, with the Cincinnati Reds defeating the Pittsburgh Pirates in the first two games. The Pirates won the nightcap, which was called after six innings because of darkness. Clyde Barnhart and Fred Nicholson played in all three games for the Pirates while Louis Duncan and Maurice Roth did the same for the Reds.

Dollar indecisive

LONDON (AP) — The dollar gave a mixed performance on foreign exchange markets early today amid uncertainty about the direction of the U.S. economy and fears that central banks might intervene to support the American currency. Gold prices rose.

Foreign exchange dealers said the dollar continued to draw strength from Tuesday's report of better-than-expected U.S. trade figures, but the market remained unsure about how to interpret the figures.

"The trade balance has made people reconsider whether it still makes sense to push the dollar lower," said a dealer in Frankfurt, West Germany.

Other dollar rates at midmorning, compared with late Wednesday:

—2.0245 West German marks, up from 2.0225

—1.6435 Swiss francs, down from 1.6448

—6.6295 French francs, down from 6.6345.

In London, the dollar eased to $1.4380 from $1.4445 late Wednesday.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $425.50 a troy ounce and the city's five major bullion dealers recommended the same price at midmorning, which was up from $423.75 late Wednesday.

In Zurich, the metal rose to $425.40, up from $423.20 late Wednesday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold rose $1.34 to close at a bid $424.14.

Silver was quoted in London at a bid price of $5.56 a troy ounce, unchanged from Wednesday's late bid price.

Dow gains 15 points

NEW YORK — Trading volume increased dramatically on Wall Street Wednesday as stock prices, despite some last-hour selling pressure, rose for the second consecutive day.

Airline issues showed the best improvement as investors reacted positively to fare increases, and signs of increased air travel.

The Dow Jones industrial average finished with a gain of 15.32 points, at 1,782.90. The blue-chip index rose a dozen points on Tuesday and had been up more than 29 points Wednesday before profit taking set in.

The New York Stock Exchange composite index rose 1.25 points, to 134.69, and the Standard & Poor's 500-stock index gained 2.28 points, to 233.60.

The average share gained 34 cents on the New York Stock Exchange, where stocks that advanced held almost a 2 to 1 margin over those that declined — 1,045 to 535. Trading volume widened to 143.6 million shares, with the heaviest activity at the beginning and the end of the session. Tuesday's volume was 124.9 million shares.

The American Stock Exchange index rose 2.12, to 261.80, and in over-the-counter trading the Nasdaq index gained 1.67, to 352.34.

Oil import fees merit further study, Administration says

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Proposed oil import fees could merit further U.S. study, although the administration still opposes them in principle, says Interior Secretary Donald Hodel.

Hodel told a news conference Wednesday that import fees are "maybe the most simplistic" of solutions to the domestic oil industry's financial problems and are not now under consideration by the administration.

However, he said, it would be premature to declare that such proposals will not receive further study along with other recommendations calling for tax incentives, drilling incentives and quotas.

The Interior Department is re-examining the bidding system used in its sale of energy exploration rights in coastal waters to determine whether changes might spark more interest among oil companies discouraged by current heavy costs of exploration and relatively low prices paid for fuel, Hodel said.

But he said chances are "obviously a long shot at this point" that Congress will pass a bill before it adjourns this month to aid the oil industry by repealing the windfall profits tax and other regulations.

Prospects for the bill might be brighter, he commented, if lawmakers return after the Nov. 4 elections for a "lame duck" session.

Hodel also said he has ordered a one-year delay for increases in rental rates in certain oil and gas leases on public lands. He said the measure is intended to encourage a "positive investment atmosphere for the oil and gas industry."

"By delaying rental rate increases, we hope to avoid abandonment of these leases, thereby encouraging exploration," he explained.

Under current rules, the rent is $1 per acre for the first five years of certain leases and $3 in future years. The new order would retain the $1 fee.

Lease holders gave up 6,800 leases involving more than 11 million acres during the first six months of fiscal 1986, up 55 percent from the same period one year earlier, the Interior Department reported.

About 105 million acres of federal land remain under oil and gas leases, and the policy change affects 3,120 leases on 2.5 million acres in fiscal 1987.

Study says government losing millions in royalties

WASHINGTON (AP) — Oil and gas operators with federal leases may be paying hundreds of millions of dollars less than they should in annual royalties to the federal government, according to a congressional staff report released Wednesday.

The subcommittee chairman who released the report said it showed "incredible mismanagement" and a "national disgrace" by the Interior Department's Minerals Management Service.

In turn, the Minerals Management director said the report's conclusions, including an estimate of $41 million in uncollected 1985 royalties, were "ridiculous" and "far overstated."

The royalties are the second largest source of revenue for the federal government, after the personal income tax.

Oil and gas lease holders are required to pay royalties to the government based on a percentage of the gross selling price of the oil or gas produced on the property. It is up to the lease holders to inform the government of their gross prices, and the government sometimes audits the lease holders if it sees reason to doubt the accuracy of the figures.

The House Appropriations Committee investigation used the 1985 conclusions of four state audits and a Minerals Management Service regional audit of the oil and gas royalties. The states were North Dakota, Colorado, Wyoming and Montana. The states get 50 percent of the royalties paid by the lease holders.

Texas Air gets final approval to take over Eastern

Acquisition of People Express also gets okay

WASHINGTON (AP) — Texas Air's takeover of Eastern Airlines won final government approval Wednesday and its plans to buy People Express moved a step forward when the Justice Department said it won't object to the acquisition on antitrust grounds.

The Transportation Department, which gave the Texas Air-Eastern merger its tentative endorsment Sept. 18, announced final approval of the $676 million merger, saying all competitive problems had been resolved.

The acquisition of Eastern by the Houston-based Texas Air Corp. "would not substantially reduce competition in any market," the department said.

Texas Air, which already owns Continental Airlines and New York Air, will become the largest airline holding company in the country with nearly 20 percent of the air travel market with the purchase of Eastern and the expected approval of the People Express acquisition.

The Transportation Department said its only concern with the Texas Air-Eastern deal — competition in the Washington-New York-Boston shuttle market — had been resolved with the emergence of Pan American World Airways as a direct competitor to the Eastern shuttle.

Pan Am on Wednesday began 15 flights a day in the Washington-New York-Boston market in direct competition with Eastern.

The Transportation Department also will have final say on whether to approve Texas Air's purchase of People Express and the assets of Frontier Airlines.

The Justice Department's antitrust division's decision not to oppose the Texas Air-People Express merger came in a letter from Deputy Assistant Attorney General Charles Rule to the Transportation Department.

Rule said Justice won't object to the deal because it "is not likely to lessen competition substantially." People Express has its primary hub at Newark, N.J., where New York Air also has a large part of its operation.

Rule said the purchase of Frontier's assets "raises somewhat different questions from those raised by the acquisition of the rest of People", but he added that it also could not be established "that the Frontier acquisition substantially lessens competition."

Alan Pollock, a spokesman for the Transportation Department, said the department would have no comment on the Justice Department finding. The Justice position would be considered along with comments by other parties on the merger application, he said.

Before financially troubled Frontier was grounded by People Express more than a month ago, Frontier was in heated competition at its Denver hub with Texas Air's Continental Airlines and with United Airlines.

"We're very gratified by the Department of Justice's findings because they said there is no competitive problem," said David Messing, a spokesman for Texas Air. Messing said allowing Texas Air to acquire the assets of Frontier would "provide a more potent competitive challenge to United."

Texas Air is anxious to have the Transportation Department approve the transaction by Oct. 16 so it can begin phasing in operations on Frontier's routes by early November, Messing said the Justice Department's decision gives the Transportation Department ample time to rule and still leaves Texas Air time to carry out its plans on schedule, if the acquisition is allowed to go through.

Houston gets Grumman's civil space unit

HOUSTON (AP) — The Grumman Corp. gave a boost to Houston by announcing plans to move a unit that works on NASA's space station and other projects to the economically struggling city.

"A super effort was made to compete for this work station and we're delighted that they decided to move here," Houston Mayor Kathy Whitmire said. "I see it as a very good partnership."

The Civil Space Programs Unit I will move from Long Island, N.Y., by the end of the year, officials announced Wednesday.

About 100 employees, principally engineers and technicians, will be transferred, said Gerry Griffin, president of the Houston Chamber of Commerce and former director of NASA's Johnson Space Center.

The unit may grow to more than 1,000 workers within a year after the move if Grumman wins new business, officials said.

"This has turned out to be a great week for Houston — the space capital of the world," Griffin said.

Earlier this week, Houston-based Space Industries Inc. and Westinghouse Electric Corp. announced plans to market an orbiting workshop.

Mrs. Whitmire said Grumman may decide to use the city-owned Ellington Field in its expansion efforts. She said the city has agreed to lease part of the former Air Force base facility to the company.

Grumman's success at winning federal contracts will determine the size of the expansion, Griffin said.

The company's space systems division manages military and civilian space programs, he said. Grumman holds several development contracts related to the Strategic defense initiative and for projects related to NASA's proposed manned space station, according to a company statement.

Passengers from Boston leave Pan American World Airways shuttle flight at New York's LaGuardia Airport as Pan Am jumped into the Northeast shuttle business long dominated by Eastern Airlines.

Pan Am, Eastern begin shuttle war

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — Shortly after 9 a.m. Wednesday, as Pan Am's 8:30 shuttle flight to Washington crept toward takeoff at LaGuardia Airport, Capt. Gary Lane made an announcement. "We're now fifth in line, and in case you're interested, our competitor is behind us," Lane said. "So he's going to be even later."

Never mind that the trailing plane was Eastern Airlines' 9 a.m. shuttle, just a few minutes off schedule. The point was unmistakable: Pan Am knows what it is up against, especially on the first day of a head-to-head shuttle war.

The routes between New York and Boston or Washington are so potentially lucrative that Pan Am can make a lot of money if it fills enough seats. So earlier this year, Pan Am purchased takeoff slots from New York Air, a subsidiary of Texas Air Corp. that had run a shuttle from LaGuardia since 1981.

Notwithstanding a few delays, officials said the Pan Am shuttle's first flights went smoothly, with 25 to 80 passengers aboard each plane — up to a third full on some flights. The 8:30 a.m. Washington flight was delayed 15 minutes by malfunctions of the automated ticket dispensers, which were later repaired. Rush-hour congestion on the runways caused another wait. And a few flights out of Boston missed their scheduled departure times when air traffic controllers temporarily suspended takeoffs.

"Things are going well — the normal start-up bumps, things we're sorting out minute by minute," said Bruce R. Nobles, president of the Pan Am Shuttle. "It's matching our expectations ... It's functional."

Midlander buys gas facilities in Crockett County

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Business/Oil Writer

A long-standing commitment to the gas business is the reason Apache Gas Corp. recently purchased more than 120 miles of gas gathering system and an amine treating unit in northwest Crockett County, according to company president Carl Lawrence of Midland.

Apache purchased the Midway Lane treating facility, which has a volume capacity of 20 million cubic feet of gas per day (MMcfd) and associated gathering lines and 14 compressor stations from El Paso Natural Gas Co. (EPNG) effective Sept. 1. Lawrence declined to disclose the purchase price of the system.

The Midway Lane system covers approximately a 25-mile radius in northwest Crockett County and neighboring sections of Pecos County, gathering both casinghead and gas well gas.

"We are enthusiastic about the gas business," explains Lawrence, who is president of the privately held Texas corporation. "If you're committed to the future of the gas industry as we are, you have to seize opportunities to expand when they present themselves."

Midway Lane brings the company's total number of gathering operations to 19, as the firm continues to expand despite the downturn in the gas industry.

"We are aggresively pursuing acquisition of new gas contracts from producers as well as negotiating with end-users of natural gas," Lawrence says.

The newly acquired system is tied directly into EPNG's interstate transmission system, enabling Apache to seek end-user markets across a wide area, although EPNG currently represents the company's primary market for gas from the system.

The return of the traveling poll taker

Faithful readers of this column — I'm sure there must be a couple — might recall a short while back when I poked fun at and questioned the validity of the plethora of public opinion surveys flooding our sensibilities from all directions.

I have since found out that I am not alone in my inherent suspicion of the accuracy and relevance of rampant poll taking and survey making.

A major case in point is Warren Brookes' attack on U.S. Rep. Tony Coelho, D-Calif., and his recent contention that the current "economic recovery" is a bicoastal phenomenon, ringing 31 states "now in a deep recession." Brookes, a contributing editor for the Washington Times' weekly Insight magazine, called Coelho's deep recession comments a "shallow argument" based on faulty research.

Among the weaknesses in the data, gathered by Albert Sindlinger & Co., a small Pennsylvania-based consumer polling firm, is the small sample size and "attitude orientation" of the interviews.

For example, Brookes points out the fact that the pollster's classification of Wyoming as one of the 31 states in a deep recession was based on a total of three (yes, three) attitude surveys in that state.

As Brookes puts it, "All it would take to put Wyoming in deep recession is for two members of the sample to get up on the wrong side of the bed." And I thought I was a cynic!

The dark side of the news is that despite Brookes' attempts to poke holes in Coehlo's arguments and Sindlinger's findings, five oilpatch states — including Texas — have truly earned their "deep recession" status.

The Lone Star state, along with Oklahoma, Louisiana, Wyoming and West Virginia have shown significant (more than a half a percent) job declines in the past 12 months — which Brookes cites as the only available reliable evidence of actual recession.

By Brookes' figuring, using U.S. Labor Department data, 40 states and the District of Columbia have shown job growth exceeding 1 percent since mid-1985.

But it's hard to say if Brookes' findings are all that much more reliable than the other side's. Is total growth in the number of available jobs any better a yardstick of true economic health than Sindlinger's survey?

I suggest that Brookes would be hard-pressed to convince a majority of the citizenry of such dually oil- and farm-dependent states as Colorado, Kansas and Mississippi, that total job growth ranging from 1.3 to 2.6 percent makes much of a dent in the overall economic malaise gripping those sections of the country. One fallacy of the job figure argument is that there is no measurement of the "comparable economic worth" of jobs lost or created in each state.

How many new counter workers at the local burger stand does it take to have the same economic impact as a prospect-generating, oil-finding geologist or landman? Do retail and service sector jobs generate the same economic vitality as equipment manufacturing or construction? I think not.

If a petroleum engineer gets laid off from a $40,000 plus per year position, but manages to get added to a restaurant's staff waiting tables, the Labor Department's job count remains the same. But, that person's impact on the local economy through spending patterns and consumption behavior is distinctly diminished — and with fewer dollars in circulation, the overall local economy suffers and slips nearer the "recession" label whether Mr. Brookes likes it or not.

Granted, asking three people in Wyoming their opinion on the state economy is not a sound way to measure its fiscal health. But properly conducted opinion research into the individual attitudes and behaviors of a statistically large enough sample to be significant could be a necessary ingredient in the diagnostic process.

There are no easy answers to the economic puzzles facing our state and the rest of the nation.

But I think it's safe to say that the number of states facing "deep recession" today is somewhat less than Coehlo's espoused 31, yet significantly higher than the five cited by his critics.

Oil finds increase Peru production

LIMA, Peru (UPI) — Recent oil discoveries off Peru's northern Pacific coast will increase Peru's oil production by between 1,000 barrels and 1,500 barrels of crude a day, the government reported Tuesday.

The new oil finds will boost Peru's offshore oil production to as much as 26,500 barrels of crude daily, the El Peruano official gazette said.

The new oil fields were tapped along the Pacific continental shelf slightly north of Talara, 560 miles northwest of the capital of Lima, it reported.

El Peruano did not provide details about the type of oil found.

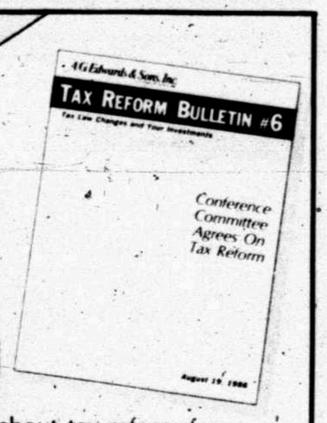

The area is operated by Petromar, a subsidiary of the state Petroperu oil company, which was formed after President Alan Garcia took over the operations of New York-based Belco Petroleum Corp. in December.

President Alberto Vera la Rosa said the new finds would allow Petromar to increase production above the 24,500 barrel-a-day operation left by Belco, according to the gazette.

Dollar may not have fallen as far as believed

NEW YORK (AP) — The United States keeps running huge trade deficits because the dollar has fallen far less than most people think, economists are beginning to agree.

A consensus is forming among the experts that the best-known index of the dollar's value, the one compiled by the Federal Reserve Board, vastly overstates the dollar's decline.

A cheaper dollar is supposed to make American goods more competitive against foreign ones in both domestic and overseas markets. But on Tuesday, the Commerce Department reported that the nation ran a merchandise trade deficit of $13.32 billion in August.

Even though the August deficit was smaller than the July record, the deficit for the first eight months of the year ran at an annual rate of $173 billion, far above last year's record of $148.5 billion.

The cheap-dollar cure for the deficit is not working because the dollar still isn't cheap, in spite of the Fed's statistics, say economists such as Irwin Kellner, chief economist of Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co.

"We're all in agreement that in reality the dollar is much stronger than it looks," Kellner said.

The Fed's widely quoted index says the value of dollar plunged 32 percent against a marketbasket of foreign currencies from its peak in February 1985 through August of this year.

But Manufacturers Hanover's new index, based on a bigger number of currencies and more up-to-date trading relationships, says the dollar's decline during that period was little more than 4 percent.

Recomputing the dollar's fall has practically become a fad among economists recently. Tiny declines for the dollar also show up in new indexes prepared by the Federal Reserve banks in Dallas, Atlanta and Cleveland and by Merrill Lynch Economics, among others.

The Fed's index is based on the currencies of 10 major trading countries and weights their importance by their shares of world trade in the mid-1970s. As a result, the West German mark — which has risen sharply against the dollar — carries the most weight, while such rapidly emerging U.S. trading partners as South Korea are not included at all.

In contrast, the Manufacturers Hanover index looks at 17 nations' currencies and weights them on the basis of their trade with the United States alone — not their share of world trade — in 1985.

Among other things, the Manufacturers Hanover index includes all the newly industrialized countries of the Far East — Taiwan, South Korea, Hong Kong and Singapore — which contribute about $29 billion a year to the U.S. trade deficit.

Although the dollar has fallen roughly 40 percent against the Japanese yen since February 1985, the U.S. trade position has been helped little because those other Asian nations have taken Japan's place in U.S. markets.

Reports say Icahn has increased USX stake

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

Despite reports that two of the four leading corporate raiders who had earlier targeted USX Corp. have sold off their holdings, investor Carl C. Icahn apparently increased his stake in the big energy and steel conglomerate Wednesday.

Widespread Wall Street speculation about Icahn's move to increase his holdings to more than 5 percent of USX's 257 million shares made the company — formerly U.S. Steel — the most active stock on Wall Street Wednesday. With 11,043,000 shares traded during the day, the stock closed at $24.75 per share, up $1 in composite trading.

Icahn, the New York investor who has already acquired Trans World Airlines, could not be reached for comment. But the reports of his activity came just after it appeared that interest among leading corporate raiders in USX was beginning to wane.

Minneapolis investor Irwin L. Jacobs and Texas oilman T. Boone Pickens Jr. have reportedly sold off their newly acquired holdings in USX, and many on Wall Street believed those moves signalled that USX had become overpriced as a result of the hectic trading.

USX's stock price has soared since August, when Australian raider Robert Holmes a Court announced that he planned to acquire up to 15 percent of USX. There has been no evidence since, however, that Holmes a Court has acquired a large block of stock.

USX management also helped cool off the stock on Sept. 22, when it announced that it was conducting a study of how best to restructure to fend off the raiders.

Management also tried to reduce the raiders' interest by denying that USX had a pool of about $2.5 billion in excess cash in its pension funds that could be accessible to a new owner.

Analysts had said earlier that, along with its undervalued oil and natural gas assets, that pension fund cash was one of USX's main attractions.

But sources familiar with the USX trading activity claimed that, while USX is not as big a bargain as it was before Holmes a Court moved in, it is still underpriced.

Charles Bradford, a widely respected steel analyst at Merrill Lynch, insists that USX's break-up value is somewhere between $30 and $40 per share, despite other estimates that the firm's assets couldn't be sold off for more than the equivalent of $21 to $22 per share.

"Industry sources would tell you that at $24.75, it is not overpriced," said one knowledgeable investment source.

"Would you buy the company at this price?"

Tom Brown, Inc. has quarterly loss of $2 million

From Staff Reports

As it continues to restructure for a possible natural gas recovery, Tom Brown, Inc., a Midland-based oil and gas producer, has reported a loss of $2.225 million for the quarter ended June 30, 1986.

The loss compares to earnings of $197,000 for the same quarter in 1985. According to third quarter reports, the company had total quarterly revenues of $4.3 million and operating costs and expenses of $4.5 million. Last year, the company had revenues of $8.0 million and expenses of $6.9 million, leaving quarterly income of $1.067 million. The loss this past quarter equals $.06 per share, compared to earnings of $.01 per share a year ago.

In the letter to shareholders, Tom Brown, chairman of the board, and Donald Evans, president and chief executive officer, noted that the company had reduced general and administrative costs during the first quarter through staff and salary reductions.

Other action taken to deal with the severe drop in crude oil prices has been to curtail exploration and development activities and redirecting personnel involved in those areas toward the acquisition program.

"This has provided us with both highly qualified and talented personnel for current activities, and the ability to resume exploratiin activities immediately as the need arises."

The company, believing a recovery in the natural gas market will occur sooner than a recovery in crude oil, is moving to acquire properties in such areas as the Anadarko Basin and Delaware Basin.

"The present crisis threatens the existence of entire segments of the oil and gas industry. It is apparent that when a recovery comes, as it certainly will, the form and structure of the industry will be significantly different than it was prior to these recent events," the letter states, adding "we belive that the realities of the world economy dictate that further improvement (in oil prices) will come. We also believe that Tom Brown, Inc. is pursuing the best course of action awaiting that improvement, and that we will be in an excellent position to grow and prosper as it occurs.

Seven-Up likely to be sold soon, industry experts say

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — Seven-Up Co., the nation's third-largest soft-drink manufacturer, is likely to be sold to one of two bidders as early as Thursday, industry experts said Wednesday.

The company has suffered a declining market share and revenues in recent years, and analysts said Wednesday that it is uncertain whether the new buyer could turn that situation around quickly.

Seven-Up is owned by Philip Morris, best known for its Marlboro brand cigarettes. The two leading companies negotiating to buy the company are Hicks & Haas, a Dallas-based private investment firm, and National Beverage Co., a Fort Lauderdale, Fla.-based holding company, said Jesse Meyers, publisher of Beverage Digest, a leading industry newsletter.

Meyers estimated the purchase price will be in the $200 million range.

Both potential buyers are already in the soft-drink business. In May, Hicks & Haas purchased A&W Root Brands, the root beer manufacturer, and in August it bought Dr Pepper Co. Last year, National Beverage bought Shasta Beverage Corp.

Spokesmen for Philip Morris and Hicks & Haas declined to comment on the negotiations. National Beverage did not return several phone calls.

Philip Morris has been trying to sell Seven-Up for a year, having faced stiff competition from the industry giants Coca-Cola Co. and PepsiCo. In January, Philip Morris agreed to sell the company to PepsiCo for $380 million, but the Federal Trade Commission blocked the deal on antitrust grounds. Philip Morris later sold Seven-Up's international operations to PepsiCo for $246 million.

Seven-Up has been a losing product for Philip Morris since it was purchased in 1978 for $520 million. Analysts said that although the company pumped about $400 million into Seven-Up for marketing and promotion, it lacked a familiarity with the product. "The soft-drink business is much different from the cigarette business," said Hugh Zurkhulen, a Salomon Brothers analyst. Seven-Up lost tens of millions of dollars and a declining market share in the last eight years, he said.

These examinations covered $192 million in payments and found that $41 million more, or 21 percent, should have been paid, the report said.

"Applying the 21 percent of underpaid royalties to the $28 billion of royalties collected by the department since 1979 indicates that as much as $5.8 billion in royalties may be underpaid by the holders of federal and Indian oil and gas leases," the committee report said.

"Incredible mismangement by the U.S. Department of the Interior is costing the federal government millions of dollars in lost oil and gas royalties," Rep. Sidney Yates, D-Ill., chairman of the Appropriations Committee's interior subcommittee, said in a statement.

Many problems, the report said, stem from a still-uncompleted installation of a new computer system in the Minerals Management Service that first was contemplated in 1982, and from the fragmentation of responsibility in the Interior Department among the MMS, which handles offshore leasing and collects royalties, the Bureau of Land Management, which handles onshore leasing, and the Bureau of Indian Affairs, which handles royalty payments to Indians and tribes.

William Bettenberg, director of the service, said the report "has some valid information in it and loads of invalid information and erroneous conclusions."

He took particular issue with the estimate that payments were 21 percent too low.

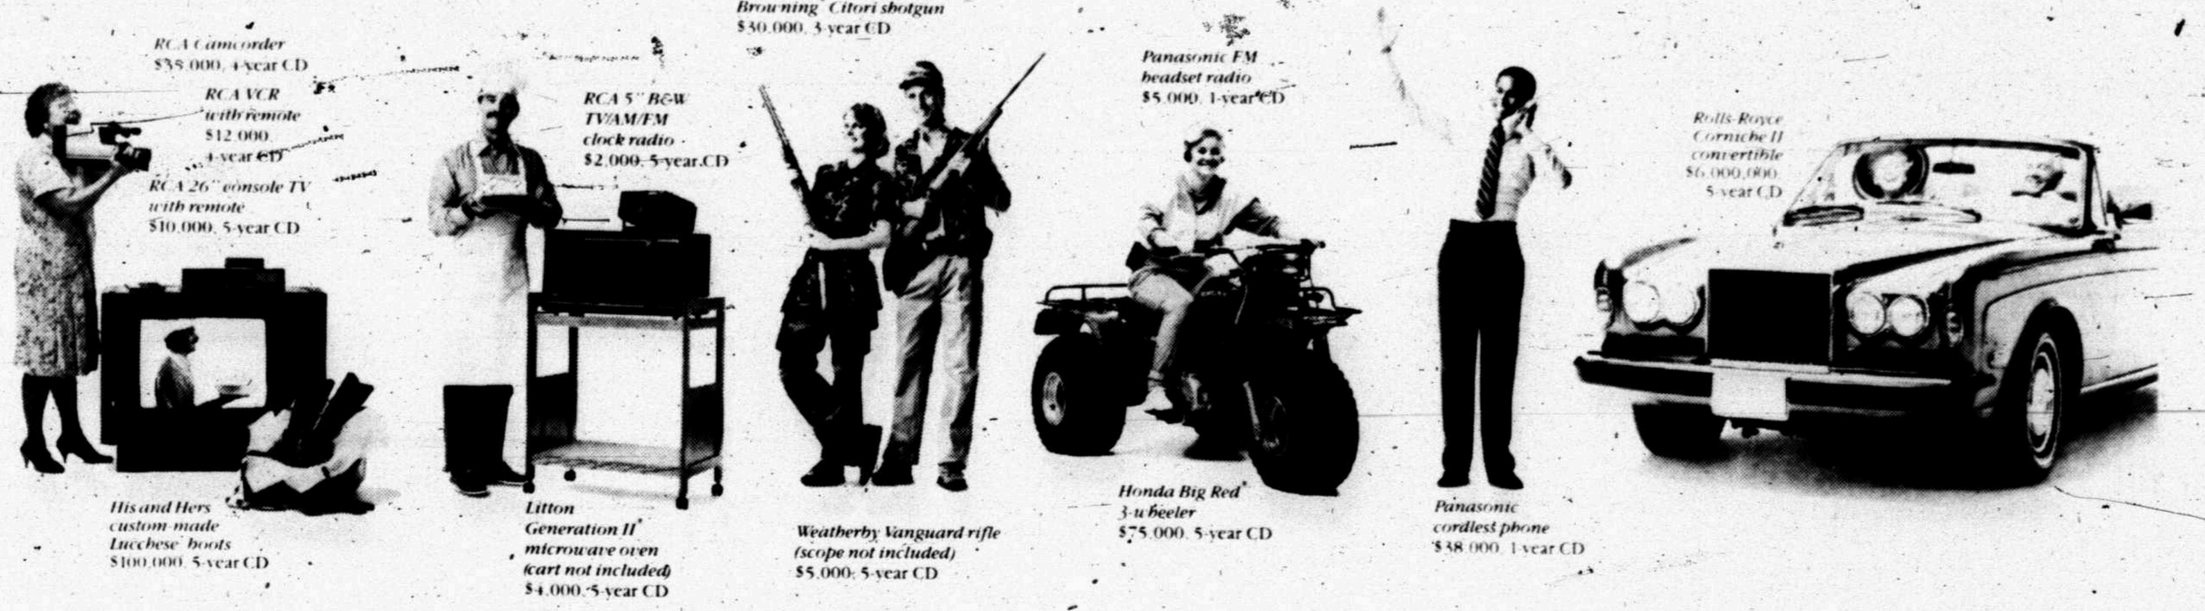

"For the state audits, we haven't been able to verify any of the information" presented in the report, he said.

"We pointed out that they would have to take into account those (leases) that had overpayments or were OK. They didn't do it. Our auditors say that would reduce the percentage substantially," Bettenberg said.

Finally, he said, all auditors chose targets "Where they think there is a problem," and the leases on which the report's conclusions were based are not representative of all leases.

"The under-reporting figures are ridiculous," and far overstated and unsupported in the report," Bettenberg said.

Opening lead: Four of ♠

Despite the saying that a good peek is worth two finesses, we hold little brief for those who make a habit of trying to get a look at their opponents' cards. However, South on this hand would always be welcome in our game.

North-South conducted a reasonable auction to arrive at three no trump. We approve of South's decision to rebid one no trump—he had a balanced minimum opening bid and that is exactly what he described.

After West's lead of his fourth-best club, the hand was soon over. With almost no thought declarer played the king from dummy, and he was delighted to snare the queen. As a result, 11 tricks presented no problem.

Now we know some Easts who would regard declarer with suspicion and, on subsequent hands, hold their cards closer to their chests. But they would be doing the fellow a grave injustice.

South's problem was not so much how best to make one or more club tricks—he might have been able to come to nine tricks without ever winning a club trick. What he had to do was to protect his diamond weakness, and to accomplish that he had to keep East off lead. As long as West was on play, the contract stood a much better chance.

Had declarer needed a quick club trick, he would have had to guess which card to play to the first trick. But since his aim was to keep East off lead, the king was the correct choice. If East held the ace of clubs, he would gain the lead regardless of which card declarer played from dummy at the first trick.

However, if East held the queen of clubs and not the ace, as was the case here, playing the king would guarantee the contract on almost any distribution except five hearts to the ten in one hand.

Pope salutes Harlem Globetrotters

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II saluted the Harlem Globetrotters basketball team during his weekly general audience.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Some Hollywood directors say that adding color to old black-and-white film classics is tampering with cinematic art and tolling "the death knell" for an art form.

Actor Jimmy Stewart joined director Steven Spielberg and others Wednesday in denouncing computer coloring of black-and-white movie classics.

Stewart told a news conference of his affection for the 1946 classic "It's a Wonderful Life," a recently colored black-and-white film in which he starred. He said director Frank Capra tried in vain to prevent color tampering.

"This is a film that is seen every Christmas in America and no one should see it other than the way Frank and (cinematographer) Joe Walker wanted it to be seen," Stewart said.

Joining Stewart at the American Film Institute were a dozen directors and cinematographers who oppose Turner Broadcasting System's plan to color 100 black-and-white movie classics.

"You cannot remake a movie simply by giving it a new paint job, but you can easily destroy one," Spielberg, an AFI trustee, added in a letter.

Directors Woody Allen, Billy Wilder, Joe Dante and John Huston are also opposed to having color added to their films. Dante called the color tampering "the death knell for an entire art form."

TBS executive vice president Bob Wussler said earlier that Turner Broadcasting was sensitive to the concerns of filmmakers but that there were no plans to alter the project.

Last month, TBS released a list of more than 100 movies, including "Casablanca," "The Maltese Falcon," Yankee Doodle Dandy" and "The Postman Always Rings Twice," that it has commissioned Color Systems Technology to computer-color.

NEW HAVEN, Conn. (AP) — A bit of Hollywood goes Ivy League with the world concert premiere of "Gulliver," composed by Patrick Williams, with lyrics by Larry Gelbart and narration by actor Tony Randall.

The 50-minute composition, based on Jonathan Swift's 300-year-old adventure tale, will be performed Friday night.

Williams, who will conduct the Philharmonia Orchestra of Yale at the performance, has written the scores of 55 motion pictures, including "Breaking Away" and "Swing Shift."

Gelbart wrote, developed and co-produced the television series "M*A*S*H" during its first four years and has authored the screenplays of films such as "Oh, God" and "Tootsie."

The Royal Philharmonic has recorded the composition in London with Sir John Gielgud as narrator.

Stern

NEW YORK (AP) — Isaac Stern got a standing ovation at Carnegie Hall even though he had a hard hat atop his head rather than a fiddle in his hand.

Stern was cheered Wednesday at a pep rally for the 225 construction workers restoring the 96-year-old landmark concert hall.

"Hello, fellas," Stern said, as he looked out on the workers, whose standing ovation was sincere — despite the fact that the concert hall has no seats.

"Because you're doing what you're doing and the way you're doing it, you're able to be part of a legacy that you can tell your kids that you made Carnegie live another 100 years," said Stern, a violinist who is president of the concert hall.

The workers, who have been refurbishing the building since May 18, must complete the $50 million project in time for a Dec. 15 gala reopening concert.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

'Market order' to ensure buying, selling of stock

By BILL DOYLE

Q. I had my eye on a certain stock, but I felt it was a bit overpriced. Sure enough, it began to come down. On a day it dropped to $22, I told my broker to buy 100 shares for me at $21.50 and specified that my order was "GTC" — good 'til cancelled.

A few days later, the stock did trade at my price. New York Stock Exchange tables in three newspapers show it dropped to "21½" — its low for that day. But I did not get my 100 shares. Why? When I ask the broker, I get mumbo jumbo.

The stock has since risen to $26. Needless to say, I'm steamed.

Doyle

A. Cool off. Your order, no doubt, wasn't executed because of what's known as "stock ahead" — other orders to buy that stock at 21½, which were entered before your order.

When you place a "limit order" — to buy or sell an exchange listed stock at a set price — your order is sent to the exchange's trading floor. There, it is entered in the book of the specialist who makes a market in the particular stock.

Then, when and if the stock trades at the price you set, all limit orders in the specialist's book are filled — in the sequence they were received.

Let's say the specialist's book held limit orders, all placed before yours, to sell 1,000 shares of that stock at 21½. A total of 1,100 shares would have to be sold, at 21½, by floor brokers in "the crowd" around the specialist's trading post for your order to be filled.

It's clear that didn't happen. As a result, your buy order wasn't executed.

The big problem with a limit order is that you can never be sure of buying or selling at the price you specify. There might be stock ahead, as happened in your case. Or, the stock might never be traded at your limit order price.

If you want to be sure of buying or selling a stock, you should place a "market order," which will be executed at the best price available at the time your order arrives on the exchange trading floor.

• • •

Q. You wrote that a "stop order" on a stock listed on a stock exchange becomes a market order when the stock reaches the stop order price. The market order might be executed at, above or below the stop order price.

That is true on the New York Stock Exchange. However, a straight stop order cannot be used on the American Stock Exchange. There, a stop limit order can be entered and the stock cannot be bought or sold at anything other than the limit order price.

What say you?

A. You are correct. I quoted New York Stock Exchange regulations and I have to do mea culpas for overlooking those on the smaller American Stock Exchange.

On the American Stock Exchange, only a stop-limit order for a round lot can be placed. Also, the stop and limit prices must be identical.

The American Stock Exchange's board of governors recently voted to change this rule and bring it into line with the New York Stock Exchange. The rule change is awaiting approval by the Securities and Exchange Commission.

• • •

Q. Why does the brokerage firm with which I place limit and stop orders have to turn my orders over to specialists on stock exchanges?

A. Because tens of thousands of such orders are placed every business day. They have to be recorded in central places — the specialists' books at trading posts on the exchange floors. Your brokerage firm's representatives on a trading floor couldn't possibly wait around every trading post and execute all customers' fixed-price orders when the prices are reached.

Without the specialist system, the pandemonium on a stock exchange trading floor would turn into chaos.

No water with these jalapenos

WAYNOKA, Okla. (AP) — Water, water everywhere, but if you drink a drop you lose. That's the only rule at the jalapeno-pepper-eating contest at Waynoka's Mexican Festival.

"The winner will be the person who eats the most peppers before taking a drink of water," said Brenda Marsalis, coordinator for Saturday's festival.

The three survivors — uh, winners — will get trophies.

Saturday's festival marks the revival of a festival that hasn't been held in 21 years. The festival had been an annual fund-raiser for the Catholic Church in Waynoka for 20 years, but it was discontinued because it was too successful.

Ms. Marsalis says 35 church members used to feed more than 5,000 people. "It was just too much work," she said.

Senior citizens agency plans to relocate, city official says

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

A non-profit senior citizens agency is planning to relocate within a northwest Midland neighborhood, said David Thurbon, assistant city planning director.

Community and Senior Services, Inc. is hoping to relocate from its 2000 West Wall location to the Furman Estate House at Midkiff Road and Sinclair Avenue by Dec. 1, if everything goes as scheduled, said Steve Edwards, executive director of the center.

The center may relocate because the estate is being offered to the non-profit agency, Edwards said.

However, before the center can locate on the 2.7 acre lot, the area must be rezoned or a city ordinance must be amended, Thurbon said.

The area is zoned for single family homes. The senior citizens service applied for a planned district zone in August to relocate its community service center, Thurbon said.

Besides rezoning the area, a city ordinance could be amended to allow philanthropic use or a community center within a single-family zoned neighborhood under specific permit regulations, he said.

The planning department has had several similar requests in the past to locate within neighborhoods and decided it was time to reevaluate the ordinance, Thurbon said.

"In some instances, a philanthropic use or community center may be able to locate in a single family district," he said.

The Planning and Zoning Commission will consider amending the ordinance on Monday.

If the ordinance is amended, no zone change will be necessary and the center will then apply for a specific use permit, Thurbon said.

However, whether the area is rezoned or permitted for a specific use, a public hearing will be held, he said.

The neighborhood will not be notified until a hearing on the zone change is scheduled with the planning commission, Thurbon said.

Thurbon said he did not know when a hearing will be scheduled because the planning department is still gathering information about the relocation and the use of the community center.

If the area is rezoned, a planned district zone allows the city to have more control over that area, Thurbon said.

The senior service center provides 10 major programs including Meals On Wheels, home health and social services and teaching and counseling, Edwards said.

Elderly Texans discuss their needs at first Silver Haired Legislature

By DAVID PLESA
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Elderly Texans concerned about health care, insurance costs and abuse are promoting the needs of older adults in the state's first Silver Haired Legislature.

The 116 senior delegates age 60 years and older are meeting for four days at the state Capitol to draft bills on issues important to the elderly and make recommendations to the regular legislative session in January.

Henry Treadaway of Odessa said he is concerned about long-term care for the elderly.

"I think we need to go back to the basics in that people need to take care of each other," said Treadaway, 67, who is retired from his job in customer service with Texas Electric Service Co. Government funding, which has "extended itself too far," is not the answer to long-term care for older adults, he said.

Treadaway said his Committee on Employment is looking at ways to provide incentives to encourage employers to hire older Texans who want to work.

"We're trying to save employers money and give older people a chance to work," he said.

Other representatives of the Permian Basin include David Norton of Midland and Forest Scott of Andrews.

Various committees of the Silver Haired Legislature are studying health care, education, utilities, law enforcement and other issues as they affect the elderly.

Delegates have approved resolutions calling for stiffer penalties for failure to report abuse of the elderly, more state money to prevent elderly abuse and stronger laws to fight Medicaid fraud.

"Many programs are not getting proper (funding) attention and proper supervision," said Raleigh Jackson of LaGrange, who was elected speaker for the session. "We have been assured by legislators, the governor and the lieutenant governor that our presentations will be given serious consideration and have an influence on the (regular) session."

The Meals on Wheels program, which provided meals to shutins, is one example of an important service to the elderly that lost funding, he said.

Jackson, former president of Brazosport Junior College in Lake Jackson, said the delegates will draft four or five bills to present to the Legislature.

Gov. Mark White told the group that its primary mission is to make known the needs and desires of the elderly in Texas.

"The issues that you identify over the next four days will lay the groundwork to ensure that proper services are provided for our older adults," White said.

Midland's Teen Court to hold its second session Monday night

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Midland's "Teen Court" will hold its second session Monday night under the direction of Judge Pat Baskin of the 142nd District Court.

During the first session, held Sept. 22, the court tried three defendants, who were convicted. They received sentences of two to three times of teen court jury duty service in addition to 14 or 15 hours of volunteer service, coordinator Ann Scott said.

"It's a free and confidential way for teen-agers through the age of 16 to clear their record," Ms. Scott said.

A teen-ager may be referred to Teen Court for any number of offenses, which include receiving a first traffic ticket, possessing or consuming alcohol or committing a Class C misdemeanor, Ms. Scott said.

Ms. Scott said a teen-ager who gets in trouble because of running away, skipping school or possessing drug paraphernalia is also eligible.

"All teens must serve jury duty as a part of their sentence.

"This gives them a chance to see things from the other side," Ms. Scott said.

"The teens are also exempt from paying fines associated with their offense if they complete their sentences.

"But if a teen is found to be a habitual offender (committing a crime more than three times) he is not eligible anymore," Ms. Scott said.

Ms. Scott addded that a teen found guilty of a Class C misdemeanor related to drugs or alcohol must attend a three-hour class with Midland Independent School District drug counselors, Palmer Drug Abuse Program or Alcoholics Anonymous counselors.

"We've had over 150 kids volunteer to serve (as jurors, defense or prosecuting attornies, bailiffs or court clerks)," Ms. Scott said.

She said the court, which is sponsored by the Midland Junior League, MISD, city and county officials, has worked out volunteer arrangements with 23 groups such as the American Heart Association, Christmas in April, the Terrace Garden Nursing Home and the Salvation Army.

"We even have an arrangement with the Greenwood Independent School District so children may give service out there," Ms. Scott said.

Ms. Scott said the Teen Court is modeled after a similar one in Odessa.

"After having seen over 2,000 kids, they've had no repeat offenders. We hope ours turns out as well," Ms. Scott said.

"All teens must serve jury duty as a part of their sentence. This gives them a chance to see things from the other side.

"The teens are also exempt from paying fines associated with their offense if they complete their sentences."

Court upholds Weddell's arson conviction

From Staff and Wire Reports

NEW ORLEANS — The 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals upheld the arson conspiracy conviction of a former Odessa councilman but held another conviction in the case in abeyance pending a hearing.

Keith Weddell, the former councilman, and Ector County Commissioner Willie Hammond Jr., were indicted in Sept. 1984 on charges of conspiracy to commit arson and aiding and abetting arson, court records show. Hammond was also indicted and convicted on perjury charges in connection with a deposition given for a lawsuit over insurance of the building.

A mistrial was declared after the jury in their first trial in Midland was unable to reach a verdict. The case was moved to El Paso, where both men were convicted on all counts in connection with the Nov. 25, 1981, fire that destroyed the O'Michael Building in Odessa, records show.

Insurance coverage on the building, owned by Weddell and others, was increased from $200,000 to $420,000 five months before the blaze, which investigators determined had been set, court records said.

Weddell and Hammond claimed on appeal that the district court erred in transferring the case to El Paso. Weddell also argued that the evidence was insufficient, while

Duo expected to be charged in robbery

From Staff Reports

A 44-year-old man and 27-year-old woman from Midland remain in police custody and are expected to be charged later today with aggravated robbery, assault, and unauthorized use of a motor vehicle.

The pair were arrested without incident just after 11 a.m. Wednesday at a residence in the 1500 block of Illinois.

Police said the incident began about 9:40 a.m. Wednesday when Bruce Monroe, 31, an employee of Furrs Supermarket, 2206 N. Big Spring, confronted a man and a woman in the store parking lot. According to police reports, the woman had been accused of stealing center cut pork chops and ribeye steaks from the store and Monroe followed her outside.

A knife was produced, and Monroe suffered a stab wound to his arm. He was treated and released at Midland Memorial Hospital.

Midlander says she shot man in self defense

From Staff Reports

GAINESVILLE, Fla.— A Midland woman on trial for murder shot and killed a Gainesville man in self defense, her son testified Tuesday.

Harold "Rip" McCullars, 20, the only witness called on the third day of Billie Jean Mullins' second-degree murder trial, said Clifford Augustus reached for the shotgun when Ms. Mullins fired it once into his chest killing him.

The 42-year-old Ms. Mullins is accused of killing Augustus on Dec. 3, 1985. She also faces burglary and grand theft charges stemming from a breakin of Augustus's home that day.

Ms. Mullins, a former Gainesville resident, had lived in Midland for the last 10 years.

She was in Gainesville visiting her son at the time of the killing.

McCullars demonstrated how Augustus approached Ms. Mullins while Assistant State Attorney Gordon Groland held a .410-gauge shotgun that police say was used to kill Augustus.

Augustus was fighting with McCullars in the kitchen of McCullars' house, when Ms. Mullins entered with a shotgun, McCullars said.

When the two were fighting, McCullars yelled, "Help momma. Help, he's killing me," McCullars testified.

Ms. Mullins told police the night of the killing that she thought Augustus was going to hurt her son.

"When Clifford reached for her, she pulled the trigger," McCullars said.

"She was just as scared as I was," he said.

Augustus died within minutes of being shot in the chest, a medical examiner testified earlier.

The fight started when Augustus accused McCullars of stealing a quilt from his home, McCullars said.

McCullars had testified earlier, that he and Ms. Mullins had removed some furniture and other property from Augustus' house that day.

Augustus lived in the home of the late Tommie McCullars, Ms. Mullins's mother, because of a provision in Ms. McCullars' will.

McCullars and Ms. Mullins believed they were the rightful owners of the furniture because it had been in their family for a long time, said McCullars.

McCullars said Augustus threw the first punch after the two argued and cursed at each other about the stolen quilt.

"I told him to kiss my behind," McCullars said.

"He hit me and I hit him back."

They fought for about five minutes, McCullars said.

But the Gainesville police detective testified Friday that he did not see any bruises or scratches on McCullars the night of the killing.

'Mystery Woman' comes home

AUSTIN (AP) — No one really knows who the bust is a replica of, but there's one thing that's certain, the recently uncovered 121-year-old marble bust is the work of Texas sculptor Elisabet Ney.

"If only she could speak, maybe she could tell us where she's been and who she is," Gregory Free said Wednesday as he prepared for the unveiling today of the 250-pound bust, dubbed "Mystery Woman."

Free, president of the Elisabet Ney Museum Association, as well as art appraisers, Ney scholars and the staff of the Ney Museum have not been able to determine who the bust represents or where it has been for most of the past 100 years.

The sculpture was scheduled to be unveiled today at a reception in the lobby of Texas Commerce Bank, where it will remain on view for six weeks before being moved to the Ney Museum.

The bust, dated 1865, is the first addition to the Ney permanent sculpture collection in more than 40 years, said Jim Fisher, administrator of the museum.

Since 1978, the piece has been in James Womack's Los Angeles home. Womack bought the bust in Los Angeles at an estate auction.

Womack told Free that he was not familiar with Ney's work and that he did not get any information on the bust when he bought it.

The company that organized the auction has gone out of business, and no company records are available, Free said.

Brazos River reservoir protested

BRECKENRIDGE (AP) — Despite local protests, officials say they are completing plans for a $300 million dam near South Bend that would flood land in Stephens County.

Mike Bukala, Brazos River Authority administrative assistant, said Wednesday that preliminary plans call for a reservoir and dam to be built where the Clear Fork and the Brazos River join north of South Bend.

He said the proposed South Bend Project reservoir would cover 29,000 acres of land — 12,000 more acres than Possum Kingdom Lake west of Fort Worth.

Local residents showed up Wednesday to object to the dam at the Stephens County courthouse in Breckenridge, where the official announcement was made.

POLICE

Police said after the stabbing the pair stole a car from the Nice and Clean Laundromat, 2201 N. Big Spring, and later abandoned it. Police had identified the two involved, and the arrest was made shortly after.

Police are also investigating a sexual assault that allegedly occurred early today. According to reports, the attack occurred between 1:20 a.m. and 2 a.m. this morning near the north service road of Interstate 20. The victim in the attack was a 27-year-old Midland woman.

The suspect in the assault was described as a white male with black hair, about 25 years old; five feet seven inches tall, weighing approximately 150 pounds. He was seen driving a black Chevrolet pickup truck, reports said.

A ladies' wedding band valued at $1,500, three rifles valued at $900, several watches and necklaces valued at $500, and a 20-gauge shotgun were reported stolen from a local residence. According to reports, the items were taken from a house in the 4700 block of Brookdale. The burglary occurred sometime Wednesday between 10:15 p.m. and 10:25 p.m., reports said.

Police are also investigating two business burglaries, one that occurred early today.

Two 19-inch color television sets valued at $979 were reported stolen from Lee Reese Appliances, 900 S. Garfield, reports said. The burglary occurred about 12:40 a.m. this morning. Police are looking for a suspect vehicle, described as a 1970 to 1973 black Chevrolet Impala.

More than $1,500 in items were reported stolen from a business in the 3200 block of W. Wall St., police said. According to reports, an eight-piece drum set valued at $1,200, a 12-string electric guitar valued at $250, two electric guitars valued at $200, a 40-watt amplifier valued at $80, and a snare drum valued at $80 were stolen from the Swap Shop, 3202 W. Wall St., apparently sometime between 6 p.m. Tuesday and 10 a.m. Wednesday.

Arizonan's works shown at Museum of Southwest

From Staff Reports

An exhibit of recent works by Joe Abbrescia, Scottsdale, Ariz., will be on display at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., today through Nov. 16.

The museum will host a reception honoring the artist from 7 to 9 p.m. today.

This is the first major exhibition of Abbrescia's work in this region. His works have been viewed here at the Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library's Contemporary Western Art Show and Sale.

"Abbrescia is best known for his masterful use of light in portraying the people and landscape of the West," said a spokesman for the museum. "However, his work is not limited to the western United States, and many of his paintings reflect the influence of his recent trips to Europe."

These recent paintings demonstrate Abbrescia's excitement about his craft.

"My best paintings are the ones that I am truly excited about," Abbrescia says. "I was excited in Rome, and I just came back from San Pedro, Calif., where I was excited about the fishing boats.

"The greatest paintings, in my estimation, are the ones in which the artist had the ability to put him or herself into a painting and express feeling. This is what I look for in my own painting. It is not important how I do it; it is important why I'm doing it. And, probably the best thing I can do is put myself in position to be excited about what I'm doing."

Abbrescia began to paint during his childhood and received formal training at Chicago's American Academy of Art. Following military service, he returned to Chicago as an illustrator and later founded the Village Art School in Skokie, Ill.

The museum is open Tuesday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday 2 to 5 p.m. There is no admission charge.

Hammond said there was prosecutorial misconduct.

The 5th Circuit rejected the change of venue argument and Weddell's argument that the evidence was insufficient. The judges upheld his conviction.

But the court ordered a hearing in the Western District of Texas on whether FBI agents prevented Hammond's wife from testifying at the second trial.

Hammond's conviction was "held in abeyance" until the district court could hold a hearing.

'Texas Jewboy' finds 'nothing succeeds as planned'

By L.E. McCULLOUGH

KERRVILLE (AP) — Richard "Kinky" Friedman pushes the dusty brown fedora back from his forehead. He puffs contentedly on the dusty brown cigar loitering between his lips, exhaling a sweet-smelling trail of smoke and sagacity into the warm Hill Country morning air.

"Like my pal Joseph Heller says, 'Nothing succeeds as planned.' If you want to be a country singer, you'll probably be a best-selling novelist."

With the recent release of "Greenwich Killing Time" by William Morrow and Co., the Austin-bred singer-songwriter whose irreverant and insightful country albums extracted fear, loathing and grudging respect from the Nashville music establishment of the 1970's, has indeed become a published mystery writer.

"Think of this novel as a country song if you want to," he says. "My audience is much more literary and oriented toward books than most musicians' audiences. A lot of good mystery writers started writing very late in life, and maybe I couldn't have done a book like this earlier. After all, you have to live it before you can make it come out your horn, as old jazz players say. You have to let experiences percolate through your life a little bit before you can write about them."

Friedman, 41, has done his share of experiential percolating over the years. "I wasn't a prodigy," he recalls. "I just started early. I wrote my first song when I was 11. It was called 'Old Ben Lucas Had A Lot of Mucus Coming Right Out of His Nose.'"

He attended Austin High School. At the University of Texas he was a roommate of Tower gunman Charles Whitman for a very brief time and got a degree in Plan 2, a liberal arts program. He also make his first foray into politics, running unsuccessfully for student assembly.

AP Laserphoto

Richard "Kinky" Friedman, the Austin-bred singer-songwriter now living in Kerrville, has become a published mystery writer. "Think of this novel as a country song if you want to, Friedman said.

After college he roamed the United States for a time before enrolling in a Peace Corps training program that sent him to Borneo in 1967 as an agricultural extension agent. "I'm the man who brought the Frisbee to Borneo," he claims. "My mother sent me several dozen in 1968. The natives loved them."

Friedman returned to Austin in the early '70s, a unique epoch in American musical history when nearly anything could end up on a record and usually did. If Kinky Friedman and The Texas Jewboys had not come into vinyl existence on Vanguard in 1973, they would have had to have been invented somewhere at some point by someone. Viewed in the calculatedly iconoclastic spirit of the times, the sight of a cigar-chomping, sunglassed Friedman in full cowboy regalia (with an enormous Star of David belt buckle) being introduced by the Rev. Jimmy Snow — "as the first full-blooded Jew ever to play the Grand Ole Opry" wasn't much more outrageous than a man named Alice Cooper who dressed as a woman and disemboweled live chickens in the middle of a rock concert.

Throughout the decade, Friedman and The Texas Jewboys coasted on the crest of a heady wave of international publicity created largely by offending record numbers of ethnic, sexual, religious and political sensibilities with songs like "Ride 'em Jewboy," "They Ain't Making Jews Like Jesus Anymore," "Sold American," "Something's Wrong with the Beaver," "The Ballad of Charles Whitman," "Get Your Biscuits in the Oven and Your Buns in Bed" and "We Reserve the Right to Refuse Service to You." The band toured with Bob Dylan's Rolling Thunder Revue in 1975-76, and Friedman's third LP, "Lasso from El Paso," featured appearances by rock aristocrats Eric Clapton, Ringo Starr, Roger McGuinn, Ron Wood, Dr. John and The Band.

Beyond the surface parody and sarcasm, however, it was thought that Friedman's songs had too much intellectual substance to keep afloat in the pop mainstream once the novelty element wore thin, and The Texas Jewboys rode off into the sunset in 1978. "My music was very good," Friedman said, "but I think my fans liked me for other reasons than strictly musical ones — sociological and even spiritual. Then again, as Will Rogers said, 'Longevity has ruined as many men as it's made.'"

His fourth and last albumn, "Under the Double Ego," was released in 1983 on the small Sunrise label and used a bevy of Austin pickers including Sammy Allred, Dwayne Smith, Reese Wynans, Reno Mussato, Chris O'Connell, Dale Jacobs an Bill Wise to accompany a selection of highly introspective songs about society's invisibles — the poor, the insane and the fatally lovelorn.

Still, the Golden Jewboy of the West legend lives on, and the faithful remember. "I have noticed that offers have increased dramatically since I decided not to do too many shows," he said. "Like Elton John, I retire several times a year. Some promoters from Toronto phoned me last week and told me I had to come up there and do a show. 'The grandfather of punk,' they called me. I don't know if I'll go, though. Right now the place I like to sing the best is the shower."

The idea for his novel came through blind fate. "I was in my bank in Greenwich Village and noticed this woman at the automatic teller machine being mugged by some guy with a mental institution haircut. I chased the guy outside, held him for the cops, and the whole thing grew into a novel."

The novel, "Greenwich Killing Time," is a first-person narrative of an ex-country singer named — surprise! — Kinky, whose unorthodox sleuthing abilities are stretched to the limit in clearing a reporter friend framed for the murder of a transvestite actor. Fast-paced and deftly-plotted, the book is filled with cheerfully jaundiced and brutally accurate observations of human life as practiced in Greenwich Village, circa 1985.

In constructing the action, Friedman employed what might be termed a stream-of-unconciousness technique. "I followed the detective around without really knowing what was going to happen at the end of each chapter or who the killer was. Once you find the voice of your character, it's easy to do.

"Even though it's a mystery, it's not so crucial who put the arsenic in the teacup. Like Woody Guthrie said, 'It's about the people I've met and the places I've met and the places I've been.' It's rules of the road for modern boys and girls."

Friedman admits that "it's somewhat unusual to use yourself as a lead character, but when you have a name like 'Kinky Friedman' you run with it. The book is not only a mystery, it's a book about the kind of life I've led. And that has some mystery to it, too."

GOP candidate says Hightower has no 'taste for Texas' farmers

By DAVID PLESA
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Bill Powers, Republican candidate for agricultural commissioner, Wednesday accused incumbent Jim Hightower of throwing expensive, out-of-state parties and of not having proper qualifications for the state job.

"Are Texans embarrassed when (Hightower) throws fancy, expensive parties out of state while farmers and ranchers suffer and go broke?" said Powers, an Austin lobbyist for the poultry industry.

Powers refused to give details of his charges, saying he would talk about them at a later date, but he alluded to Hightower's Taste of Texas program, a series of out-of-state marketing promotions aimed at increasing sales of Texas-grown food products.

Andy Welch, a spokesman for the Hightower campaign, said food companies pay most of the expenses of the Taste of Texas program. About 85 food companies participated in the program's three marketing stops in Boston, Chicago and Tampa, Fla., he said.

"The (program) is an extraordinary way of getting Texas food products into grocery stores in the Northeast, Midwest and Southeast," Welch said. "We're bringing new money into the Texas economy."

Powers said Hightower has no training or experience for the job of agricultural commissioner.

"On the other hand, I have experience and expertise, plus a degree in agriculture," Powers said. "On the performance issue, I have successfully led the Texas poultry industry for 17 years."

Powers grew up on a cattle and poultry farm in Brazos County, graduated from Texas A&M University and represents a Texas poultry association. He lists among his credits his participation in writing and passing the Texas Right-to-Farm Act, which minimizes lawsuits against agricultural producers.

Powers said Hightower cannot communicate with farmers in Texas and with leaders in Washington, and said the agricultural commissioner promotes controls on farmers.

"Are Texans embarrassed that our innovative and creative farmers are robbed of their credit by Whole Hog?" he said, referring to Hightower's self-appointed nickname.

But Welch said Hightower employs advisory boards and other means to regularly involve rank-and-file farmers in the department's programs and policies.

He also said a recent survey showed that 75 percent of Texas wheat farmers support production controls.

Powers said he opposes controls on farming.

"Rather, we must produce the products that are in demand by our neighbors and the entire world," he said. "We must produce them economically and abundantly. Then we must market them effectively at a competitive price that will return a fair profit to the producer."

STATE IN BRIEF

New Mexico to pay Texas millions in water dispute

SANTA FE, N.M. (AP) — New Mexico apparently is prepared to pay Texas up to $10.2 million to settle a water dispute involving 340,100-acre feet from the Pecos River.

Peter White, an attorney for the state Engineer's Office in Santa Fe, said New Mexico is considering paying Texas from $3.4 million to $10.2 million to settle the case.

A special master of the U.S. Supreme Court ruled last month New Mexico owes Texas 340,100-acre feet of water from the Pecos River. The settlement proposed by state Engineer Steve Reynolds works out to a $10 to $30 per acre value.

Texas Assistant Attorney General Renea Hicks confirmed he discussed the New Mexico offer with Reynolds, but declined to comment on it.

Reynolds received authorization from the Interstate Stream Commission to make the monetary offer. The exact amount would be negotiated, and based on several factors, officials said.

The Supreme Court special master said the 340,100-acre feet constitutes the amount owed by New Mexico to Texas for a 34-year period.

Alien arrests increase

DALLAS (AP) — A record of more than 748,956 illegal aliens were arrested in the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service's southern region during the 1986 fiscal year, INS officials said Wednesday.

The number represents a 30 percent increase over the 575,123 arrested last year in the 13-state region from North Carolina to Florida to New Mexico, officials said.

Eighty-one nationalities were included, the INS said. Most of those apprehended were working in construction for an average wage of $5 per hour.

The U.S. Border Patrol also had a 44 percent increase in narcotics seizures in the year ending at midnight Tuesday, officials said in a news release. There were more than 858 seizures with a total value of about $50.7 million.

Nationally, the INS apprehended more than 1,770,000 illegal aliens, exceeding by one-third the 1,348,749 in 1985. About $350 million worth of narcotics was confiscated in more than 3,100 seizures, the INS said.

Doctor gets life in prison

IRVING (AP) — A 69-year-old Irving doctor who was too sick to attend the sentencing portion of his murder trial has been sentenced to life in prison after his conviction for shooting a neighbor to death.

Dr. Elbert Harvey Stanton's sentence came Tuesday after jurors deliberated more than four hours. A jury in State District Judge Frances Maloney's court convicted him of murder Sept. 17 for the death of Kerry Wayne Thurman, 25.

Stanton was hospitalized with a weak, enlarged heart from Sept. 21 until Monday, when he was released to his apartment.

After Stanton's doctor testified Monday that Stanton was in danger of "sudden death," the judge said she would not order the doctor to attend the sentencing.

Thurman was shot and killed Jan. 15 when he approached Stanton after the doctor had argued with Thurman's wife over her unleashed dog.

Judge: State malpractice statute unconstitutional

DALLAS (AP) — A Texas law limiting medical malpractice awards to $500,000 violates provisions of the state and U.S. constitutions that allow injured people to recoup damages, a federal judge has ruled.

U.S. District Judge Jerry Buchmeyer's decision came Tuesday in connection with a lawsuit filed by the father of a man who suffered brain and nervous system damage when anesthetized for knee surgery in May 1983.

Because of the patient's asthma, the selection of anesthetics was improper, the suit alleged, and caused immediate cardiac arrest and induced a coma.

Buchmeyer's ruling follows similar findings by three intermediate appellate courts in Texas, but the law stands because the state Supreme Court reversed those decisions in July.

The state's high court sidestepped the constitutional issue, however, ruling instead that the lower courts wrongly took up the issue.

Buchmeyer's decision, the first by a federal judge on malpractice award ceilings, is binding only on the upcoming trial in his court and technically has no precedent-setting power over any other cases.

But it could affect rulings on the quesion by judges in future cases, since a federal judge's opinion is considered more influential than findings of state judges, officials say.

Man's 22 arrests for alcohol offenses cost him $7,000

HOUSTON (AP) — A bail bondsman arrested 22 times on drinking offenses asked for probation, but a judge ordered him to serve 15 years in jail and pay a $7,000 fine.

The sentence, the maximum possible, included two five-year terms for revoked probations. State District Judge Thomas Routt ruled Tuesday.

Linna Gibbons, 42, of Tomball, has had seven public intoxication arrests and 15 drunken driving arrests since 1970. Seven of the drunken driving charges were dismissed, while the others resulted in probation.

Gibbons took the stand at his trial and asked for leniency.

According to a pre-sentence report, he denied he had a drinking problem and said he was not a menace on the highway.

"He said he does not have a drinking problem but has a problem getting caught," according to the report.

Midlander says she shot man in self defense

From Staff Reports

GAINESVILLE, Fla.— A Midland woman on trial for murder shot and killed a Gainesville man in self defense, her son testified Tuesday.

Harold "Rip" McCullars, 20, the only witness called on the third day of Billie Jean Mullins' second-degree murder trial, said Clifford Augustus reached for the shotgun when Ms. Mullins fired it once into his chest killing him.

The 42-year-old Ms. Mullins is accused of killing Augustus on Dec. 3, 1985. She also faces burglary and grand theft charges stemming from a breakin of Augustus's home that day.

Ms. Mullins, a former Gainesville resident, had lived in Midland for the last 10 years.

She was in Gainesville visiting her son at the time of the killing.

McCullars demonstrated how Augustus approached Ms. Mullins while Assistant State Attorney Gordon Groland held a .410-gauge shotgun that police say was used to kill Augustus.

Augustus was fighting with McCullars in the kitchen of McCullars' house, when Ms. Mullins entered with a shotgun, McCullars said.

When the two were fighting, McCullars yelled, "Help momma. Help, he's killing me," McCullars testified.

Ms. Mullins told police the night of the killing that she thought Augustus was going to hurt her son.

"When Clifford reached for her, she pulled the trigger," McCullars said.

"She was just as scared as I was," he said.

Augustus died within minutes of being shot in the chest, a medical examiner testified earlier.

The fight started when Augustus accused McCullars of stealing a quilt from his home, McCullars said.

McCullars had testified earlier, that he and Ms. Mullins had removed some furniture and other property from Augustus' house that day.

Augustus lived in the home of the late Tommie McCullars, Ms. Mullins's mother, because of a provision in Ms. McCullars' will.

McCullars and Ms. Mullins believed they were the rightful owners of the furniture because it had been in their family for a long time, said McCullars.

McCullars said Augustus threw the first punch after the two argued and cursed at each other about the stolen quilt.

"I told him to kiss my behind," McCullars said.

"He hit me and I hit him back."

They fought for about five minutes, McCullars said.

But the Gainesville police detective testified Friday that he did not see any bruises or scratches on McCullars the night of the killing.

'Mystery Woman' comes home

AUSTIN (AP) — No one really knows who the bust is a replica of, but there's one thing that's certain, the recently uncovered 121-year-old marble bust is the work of Texas sculptor Elisabet Ney.

"If only she could speak, maybe she could tell us where she's been and who she is," Gregory Free said Wednesday as he prepared for the unveiling today of the 250-pound bust, dubbed "Mystery Woman."

Free, president of the Elisabet Ney Museum Association, as well as art appraisers, Ney scholars and the staff of the Ney Museum have not been able to determine who the bust represents or where it has been for most of the past 100 years.

The sculpture was scheduled to be unveiled today at a reception in the lobby of Texas Commerce Bank, where it will remain on view for six weeks before being moved to the Ney Museum.

The bust, dated 1865, is the first addition to the Ney permanent sculpture collection in more than 40 years, said Jim Fisher, administrator of the museum.

Since 1978, the piece has been in James Womack's Los Angeles home. Womack bought the bust in Los Angeles at an estate auction.

Womack told Free that he was not familiar with Ney's work and that he did not get any information on the bust when he bought it.

The company that organized the auction has gone out of business, and no company records are available, Free said.

Brazos River reservoir protested

BRECKENRIDGE (AP) — Despite local protests, officials say they are completing plans for a $300 million dam near South Bend that would flood land in Stephens County.

Mike Bukala, Brazos River Authority administrative assistant, said Wednesday that preliminary plans call for a reservoir and dam to be built where the Clear Fork and the Brazos River join north of South Bend.

He said the proposed South Bend Project reservoir would cover 29,000 acres of land — 12,000 more acres than Possum Kingdom Lake west of Fort Worth.

Local residents showed up Wednesday to object to the dam at the Stephens County courthouse in Breckenridge, where the official announcement was made.

Police said after the stabbing the pair stole a car from the Nice and Clean Laundromat, 2201 N. Big Spring, and later abandoned it. Police had identified the two involved, and the arrest was made shortly after.

Police are also investigating a sexual assault that allegedly occurred early today. According to reports, the attack occurred between 1:20 a.m. and 2 a.m. this morning near the north service road of Interstate 20. The victim in the attack was a 27-year-old Midland woman.

The suspect in the assault was described as a white male with black hair, about 25 years old, five feet seven inches tall, weighing approximately 150 pounds. He was seen driving a black Chevrolet pickup truck, reports said.

A ladies' wedding band valued at $1,500, three rifles valued at $900, several watches and necklaces valued at $500, and a 20-gauge shotgun were reported stolen from a local residence. According to reports, the items were taken from a house in the 4700 block of Brookdale. The burglary occurred sometime Wednesday between 10:15 p.m. and 10:25 p.m., reports said.

Police are also investigating two business burglaries, one that occurred early today.

Two 19-inch color television sets valued at $979 were reported stolen from Lee Reese Appliances, 900 S. Garfield, reports said. The burglary occurred about 12:40 a.m. this morning. Police are looking for a suspect vehicle, described as a 1970 to 1973 black Chevrolet Impala.

More than $1,500 in items were reported stolen from a business in the 3200 block of W. Wall St., police said. According to reports, an eight-piece drum set valued at $1,200, a 12-string electric guitar valued at $250, two electric guitars valued at $200, a 40-watt amplifier valued at $80, and a snare drum valued at $80 were stolen from the Swap Shop, 3202 W. Wall St., apparently sometime between 6 p.m. Tuesday and 10 a.m. Wednesday.

Arizonan's works shown at Museum of Southwest

From Staff Reports

An exhibit of recent works by Joe Abbrescia, Scottsdale, Ariz., will be on display at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., today through Nov. 16.

The museum will host a reception honoring the artist from 7 to 9 p.m. today.

This is the first major exhibition of Abbrescia's work in this region. His works have been viewed here at the Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library's Contemporary Western Art Show and Sale.

"Abbrescia is best known for his masterful use of light in portraying the people and landscape of the West," said a spokesman for the museum. "However, his work is not limited to the western United States, and many of his paintings reflect the influence of his recent trips to Europe."

These recent paintings demonstrate Abbrescia's excitement about his craft.

"My best paintings are the ones that I am truly excited about," Abbrescia says. "I was excited in Rome, and I just came back from San Pedro, Calif., where I was excited about the fishing boats.

"The greatest paintings, in my estimation, are the ones in which the artist had the ability to put him or herself into a painting and express feeling. This is what I look for in my own painting. It is not important how I do it; it is important why I'm doing it. And, probably the best thing I can do is put myself in position to be excited about what I'm doing."

Abbrescia began to paint during his childhood and received formal training at Chicago's American Academy of Art. Following military service, he returned to Chicago as an illustrator and later founded the Village Art School in Skokie, Ill.

The museum is open Tuesday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday 2 to 5 p.m. There is no admission charge.

Hammond said there was prosecutorial misconduct.

The 5th Circuit rejected the change of venue argument and Weddell's argument that the evidence was insufficient. The judges upheld his conviction.

But the court ordered a hearing in the Western District of Texas on whether FBI agents prevented Hammond's wife from testifying at the second trial.

Hammond's conviction was "held in abeyance" until the district court could hold a hearing.

'Texas Jewboy' finds 'nothing succeeds as planned'

By L.E. McCULLOUGH

KERRVILLE (AP) — Richard "Kinky" Friedman pushes the dusty brown fedora back from his forehead. He puffs contentedly on the dusty brown cigar loitering between his lips, exhaling a sweet-smelling trail of smoke and sagacity into the warm Hill Country morning air.

"Like my pal Joseph Heller says, 'Nothing succeeds as planned.' If you want to be a country singer, you'll probably be a best-selling novelist."

With the recent release of "Greenwich Killing Time" by William Morrow and Co., the Austin-bred singer-songwriter whose irreverant and insightful country albums extracted fear, loathing and grudging respect from the Nashville music establishment of the 1970's, has indeed become a published mystery writer.

"Think of this novel as a country song if you want to," he says. "My audience is much more literary and oriented toward books than most musicians' audiences. A lot of good mystery writers started writing very late in life, and maybe I couldn't have done a book like this earlier. After all, you have to live it before you can make it come out your horn, as old jazz players say. You have to let experiences percolate through your life a little bit before you can write about them."

Friedman, 41, has done his share of experiential percolating over the years. "I wasn't a prodigy," he recalls. "I just started early. I wrote my first song when I was 11. It was called "Old Ben Lucas Had A Lot of Mucus Coming' Right Out of His Nose."

He attended Austin High School. At the University of Texas he was a roommate of Tower gunman Charles Whitman for a very brief time and got a degree in Plan 2, a liberal arts program. He also make his first foray into politics, running unsuccessfully for student assembly.

AP Laserphoto

Richard, "Kinky" Friedman, the Austin-bred singer-songwriter now living in Kerrville, has become a published mystery writer. "Think of this novel as a country song if you want to, Friedman said.

After college he roamed the United States for a time before enrolling in a Peace Corps training program that sent him to Borneo in 1967 as an agricultural extension agent. "I'm the man who brought the Frisbee to Borneo," he claims. "My mother sent me several dozen in 1968. The natives loved them."

Friedman returned to Austin in the early '70s, a unique epoch in American musical history when nearly anything could end up on a record and usually did. If Kinky Friedman and The Texas Jewboys had not come into vinyl existence on Vanguard in 1973, they would have had to have been invented somewhere at some point by someone. Viewed in the calculatedly iconoclastic spirit of the times, the sight of a cigar-chomping, sunglassed Friedman in full cowboy regalia (with an enormous Star of David belt buckle) being introduced by the Rev. Jimmy Snow — "as the first full-blooded Jew ever to play the Grand Ole Opry" wasn't much more outrageous than a man named Alice Cooper who dressed as a woman and disemboweled live chickens in the middle of a rock concert.

Throughout the decade, Friedman and The Texas Jewboys coasted on the crest of a heady wave of international publicity created largely by offending record numbers of ethnic, sexual, religious and political sensibilities with songs like "Ride 'em Jewboy," "They Ain't Making Jews Like Jesus Anymore," "Sold American," "Something's Wrong with the Beaver," "The Ballad of Charles Whitman," "Get Your Biscuits in the Oven and Your Buns in Bed" and "We Reserve the Right to Refuse Service to You." The band toured with Bob Dylan's Rolling Thunder Revue in 1975-76, and Friedman's third LP, "Lasso from El Paso," featured appearances by rock aristocrats Eric Clapton, Ringo Starr, Roger McGuinn, Ron Wood, Dr. John and The Band.

Beyond the surface parody and sarcasm, however, it was thought that Friedman's songs had too much intellectual substance to keep afloat in the pop mainstream once the novelty element wore thin, and The Texas Jewboys rode off into the sunset in 1978. "My music was very good," Friedman said, "but I think my fans liked me for other reasons than strictly musical ones — sociological and even spiritual. Then again, as Will Rogers said, 'Longevity has ruined as many men as it's made.'"

His fourth and last album, "Under the Double Ego," was released in 1983 on the small Sunrise label and used a bevy of Austin pickers including Sammy Allred, Dwayne Smith, Reese Wynans, Reno Mussato, Chris O'Connell, Dale Jacobs an Bill Wise to accompany a selection of highly introspective songs about society's invisibles — the poor, the insane and the fatally lovelorn.

Still, the Golden Jewboy of the West legend lives on, and the faithful remember. "I have noticed that offers have increased dramatically since I decided not to do too many shows," he said. "Like Elton John, I retire several times a year. Some promoters from Toronto phoned me last week and told me I had to come up there and do a show. 'The grand father of punk,' they called me. I don't know if I'll go, though. Right now the place I like to sing the best is the shower."

The idea for his novel came through blind fate. "I was in my bank in Greenwich Village and noticed this woman at the automatic teller machine being mugged by some guy with a mental institution haircut. I chased the guy outside, held him for the cops, and the whole thing grew into a novel."

The novel, "Greenwich Killing Time," is a first-person narrative of an ex-country singer named — surprise! — Kinky, whose unorthodox sleuthing abilities are stretched to the limit in clearing a reporter friend framed for the murder of a transvestite actor. Fast-paced and deftly plotted, the book is filled with cheerfully jaundiced and brutally accurate observations of human life as practiced in Greenwich Village, circa 1985.

In constructing the action, Friedman employed what might be termed a stream-of-unconciousness technique. "I followed the detective around without really knowing what was going to happen at the end of each chapter or who the killer was. Once you find the voice of your character, it's easy to do.

"Even though it's a mystery, it's not so crucial who put the arsenic in the teacup. Like Woody Guthrie said, 'It's about the people I've met and the places I've met and the places I've been. It's rules of the road for modern boys and girls.'"

Friedman admits that "it's somewhat unusual to use yourself as a lead character, but when you have a name like Kinky Friedman you run with it. The book is not only a mystery, it's a book about the kind of life I've led. And that has some mystery to it, too."

GOP candidate says Hightower has no 'taste for Texas' farmers

By DAVID PLESA
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Bill Powers, Republican candidate for agricultural commissioner, Wednesday accused incumbent Jim Hightower of throwing expensive, out-of-state parties and of not having proper qualifications for the state job.

"Are Texans embarrassed when (Hightower) throws fancy, expensive parties out of state while farmers and ranchers suffer and go broke?" said Powers, an Austin lobbyist for the poultry industry.

Powers refused to give details of his charges, saying he would talk about them at a later date, but he alluded to Hightower's Taste of Texas program, a series of out-of-state marketing promotions aimed at increasing sales of Texas-grown food products.

Andy Welch, a spokesman for the Hightower campaign, said food companies pay most of the expenses of the Taste of Texas program. About 85 food companies participated in the program's three marketing stops in Boston, Chicago and Tampa, Fla., he said.

"The (program) is an extraordinary way of getting Texas food products into grocery stores in the Northeast, Midwest and Southeast," Welch said. "We're bringing new money into the Texas economy."

Powers said Hightower has no training or experience for the job of agricultural commissioner.

"On the other hand, I have experience and expertise, plus a degree in agriculture," Powers said. "On the performance issue, I have successfully led the Texas poultry industry for 17 years."

Powers grew up on a cattle and poultry farm in Brazos County, graduated from Texas A&M University and represents a Texas poultry association. He lists among his credits his participation in writing and passing the Texas Right-to-Farm Act, which minimizes lawsuits against agricultural producers.

Powers said Hightower cannot communicate with farmers in Texas and with leaders in Washington, and said the agricultural commissioner promotes controls on farmers.

"Are Texans embarrassed that our innovative and creative farmers are robbed of their credit by Whole Hog?" he said, referring to Hightower's self-appointed nickname.

But Welch said Hightower employs advisory boards and other means to regularly involve rank-and-file farmers in the department's programs and policies.

He also said a recent survey showed that 75 percent of Texas wheat farmers support production controls.

Powers said he opposes controls on farming.

"Rather, we must produce the products that are in demand by our neighbors and the entire world," he said. "We must produce them economically and abundantly. Then we must market them effectively at a competitive price that will return a fair profit to the producer."

STATE IN BRIEF

New Mexico to pay Texas millions in water dispute

SANTA FE, N.M. (AP) — New Mexico apparently is prepared to pay Texas up to $10.2 million to settle a water dispute involving 340,100-acre feet from the Pecos River.

Peter White, an attorney for the state Engineer's Office in Santa Fe, said New Mexico is considering paying Texas from $3.4 million to $10.2 million to settle the case.

A special master of the U.S. Supreme Court ruled last month New Mexico owes Texas 340,100-acre feet of water from the Pecos River. The settlement proposed by state Engineer Steve Reynolds works out to a $10 to $30 per acre value.

Texas Assistant Attorney General Renea Hicks confirmed he discussed the New Mexico offer with Reynolds, but declined to comment on it.

Reynolds received authorization from the Interstate Stream Commission to make the monetary offer. The exact amount would be negotiated, and based on several factors, officials said.

The Supreme Court special master said the 340,100-acre feet constitutes the amount owed by New Mexico to Texas for a 34-year period.

Alien arrests increase

DALLAS (AP) — A record of more than 748,956 illegal aliens were arrested in the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service's southern region during the 1986 fiscal year, INS officials said Wednesday.

The number represents a 30 percent increase over the 575,123 arrested last year in the 13-state region from North Carolina to Florida to New Mexico, officials said.

Eighty-one nationalities were included, the INS said. Most of those apprehended were working in construction for an average wage of $5 per hour.

The U.S. Border Patrol also had a 44 percent increase in narcotics seizures in the year ending at midnight Tuesday, officials said in a news release. There were more than 858 seizures with a total value of about $50.7 million.

Nationally, the INS apprehended more than 1,770,000 illegal aliens, exceeding by one-third the 1,348,749 in 1985. About $350 million worth of narcotics was confiscated in more than 3,100 seizures, the INS said.

Doctor gets life in prison

IRVING (AP) — A 69-year-old Irving doctor who was too sick to attend the sentencing portion of his murder trial has been sentenced to life in prison after his conviction for shooting a neighbor to death.

Dr. Elbert Harvey Stanton's sentence came Tuesday after jurors deliberated more than four hours. A jury in State District Judge Frances Maloney's court convicted him of murder Sept. 17 for the death of Kerry Wayne Thurman, 25.

Stanton was hospitalized with a weak, enlarged heart from Sept. 21 until Monday, when he was released to his apartment.

After Stanton's doctor testified Monday that Stanton was in danger of "sudden death," the judge said she would not order the doctor to attend the sentencing.

Thurman was shot and killed Jan. 15 when he approached Stanton after the doctor had argued with Thurman's wife over her unleashed dog.

Judge: State malpractice statute unconstitutional

DALLAS (AP) — A Texas law limiting medical malpractice awards to $500,000 violates provisions of the state and U.S. constitutions that allow injured people to recoup damages, a federal judge has ruled.

U.S. District Judge Jerry Buchmeyer's decision came Tuesday in connection with a lawsuit filed by the father of a man who suffered brain and nervous system damage when anesthetized for knee surgery in May 1983.

Because of the patient's asthma, the selection of anesthetics was improper, the suit alleged, and caused immediate cardiac arrest and induced a coma.

Buchmeyer's ruling follows similar findings by three intermediate appellate courts in Texas, but the law stands because the state Supreme Court reversed those decisions in July.

The state's high court sidestepped the constitutional issue, however, ruling instead that the lower courts wrongly took up the issue.

Buchmeyer's decision, the first by a federal judge on malpractice award ceilings, is binding only on the upcoming trial in his court and technically has no precedent-setting power over any other cases.

But it could affect rulings on the quesion by judges in future cases, since a federal judge's opinion is considered more influential than findings of state judges, officials say.

Man's 22 arrests for alcohol offenses cost him $7,000

HOUSTON (AP) — A bail bondsman arrested 22 times on drinking offenses asked for probation, but a judge ordered him to serve 15 years in jail and pay a $7,000 fine.

The sentence, the maximum possible, included two five-year terms for revoked probations, State District Judge Thomas Routt ruled Tuesday.

Linna Gibbons, 42, of Tomball, has had seven public intoxication arrests and 15 drunken driving arrests since 1970. Seven of the drunken driving charges were dismissed, while the others resulted in probation.

Gibbons took the stand at his trial and asked for leniency.

According to a pre-sentence report, he denied he had a drinking problem and said he was not a menace on the highway.

"He said he does not have a drinking problem but has a problem getting caught," according to the report.

'Butter-flavored' not butter

By SONJA HEINZE

Q. What kind of oil do movie theaters use for their popcorn? The theater I go to says "Butter-Flavored." Pat Goodman, Oakland, Calif.

A. Whenever anything is labeled "butter-flavored," it means it's artificially flavored to taste like butter, but isn't really butter at all. Of the four theaters that I surveyed, three of them used a product called Durkee's Liquid Dress-All, which is a soybean oil, described as an artificial butter-flavored dressing oil. One of the theaters actually used butter.

The Nutrition Action Health Letter published by the Center for Science in the Public Interest reports that most theaters (all those in the Washington, D.C. area) pop their corn in coconut oil. Coconut oil is more saturated than lard.

The reason coconut oil is used, explains the Health Letter, "is that theaters have very little time to produce fresh-popped corn between films. That means they have to heat the oil in advance, so that it often reaches an extremely high temperature — roughly 600 degrees. Most vegetable oils start smoking at that temperature, but coconut oil does not."

In addition, many movie chains use coconut oil colored with Red Dye No. 40, an additive, says the Health Letter, which is of questionable safety.

The Health Letter suggests you bring your own popcorn, popped in corn, soy or safflower oil, flavored more with garlic powder than with salt.

Q. I have read that when you use cast iron frying pans, you get some iron from the pan, which is good for your health. Is this so? I was also wondering if the same benefit results when using copper-bottomed tea kettles. Rita Jussaume, W. Warwick, R.I.

A. Iron cookware is indeed beneficial because it adds iron to food. According to material published by Safeway's Nutrition Awareness Program, scrambling eggs in an iron skillet or simmering spaghetti sauce in an iron pot can double or triple the iron content of the meal. Another way of tripling the iron content absorbed from foods is to include a source of vitamin C along with the food. For instance, eating iron-fortified breads and cereals along with a glass of orange juice can triple the absorbable iron.

It is not beneficial to absorb copper from cookware. A tea kettle with a copper bottom poses no problem because the copper does not come in contact with the food. Copper is plentiful in food, and only about one-third of it is absorbed by the body. The Food and Drug Administration cautions against using any copper cookware or colanders whose surfaces come in contact with acidic foods, such as tomatoes or berries, because the resulting copper salts could cause stomach upsets.

Q. I know that it's unsafe to use cracked eggs, but is it safe to use eggs that crack while they are boiling? So many eggs do. Beatrice Ermlich, Lewisburg, Ohio —

A. You're taking a chance if you buy cracked eggs or use a cracked egg that's been sitting for a while in your refrigerator because bacteria can enter the egg and contaminate it. But there's nothing unsafe about using an egg that cracks in boiling water. As you point out, many of them do.

The reason this happens is that there is air in the egg. As the egg heats up, the air inside expands and tries to find a way out of the shell. Sometimes the air finds its way out of the egg's pores; sometimes the pores aren't large enough, or there's more air than usual, and the egg cracks. There is no way of predicting whether an egg will crack or not.

The way to avoid a messy stream or glob of egg white from a cracked egg is to put a hole in the large end of the egg with a thumbtack, cover the egg with cold water, and add a tablespoon of salt. If the egg cracks even if you put a hole in it, the salt will cause the egg white to coagulate at the crack and seal the opening.

Q. I have been advised to cut down on cholesterol. A friend advised me not to eat pasta as it is made with eggs and flour and eggs are high in cholesterol. How many eggs does pasta contain? Yvette Farrands, Santa Rosa, Calif.

A. Pasta is made without eggs. Ordinary spaghetti and macaroni products are simply made from enriched flour and water and therefore contain no cholesterol.

Pasta made with eggs must be labeled as an egg noodle product. Tina Freeman, director of marketing for the Prince Co., tells us that approximately two and a half eggs are used per pound of pasta for an egg noodle product. Considering that there are at least four servings of pasta in each pound, pasta with egg is still low in cholesterol.

Eggs help to give the pasta a more yellow tone and also contribute to the product's firmness. Pasta made with high quality durum wheat semolina, however, will be of comparable color and firmness.

'Comfort food' recipes offered

By LINDA ANDERSON

I don't know about you, but when the weather starts getting cooler, I start yearning for a fireplace and something warm and soothing to eat — "comfort food."

In honor of the coming seasonal change, this column is devoted to satisfied tummies everywhere:

■ Quaker Oats, well-known for its warming oatmeal, is offering free recipe pamphlets. These Quaker's Best are available in six categories: barley recipes, oat recipes, corn meal recipes, microwave recipes, low-sodium recipes and food alergy recipes. All are available by sending your name and address to the same general address: 231 South Green Street, 5th floor, Chicago, Ill. 60607. However (here comes the hard part), each pamphlet is available from a different department. For barley recipes, write to Dept. C on the 5th floor; oat recipes are in Dept. B; corn meal in Dept. D; microwave in Dept. H; low-sodium in Dept. F; and food allergy in Dept. G.

■ The Egg Nutrition Center has published a brochure, "The Egg Lover's Heart Healthy Cookbook," which is supposed to contain low-calorie and reduced-cholesterol recipes. For a copy, send a stamped, self-addressed envelope to Egg Nutrition Center, Heart Healthy Cookbook, 2501 M Street N.W., Suite 410, Washington, D.C. 20037.

■ With the holiday season coming (yes, I know it's only October), some cooks' thoughts turn to serious baking. But, according to the Walnut Marketing Board, fancy desserts don't have to be time consuming. "The 20 Minute Baker" is a collection of "carefully designed recipes that take no more than 20 minutes to assemble and pop into the oven." For a free copy, send a stamped, self-addressed business-sized envelope to 20-Minute Baker, 1540 River Park Drive, Suite 101, Sacramento, Calif. 95815.

■ Dynasty "Oriental Classics Cookbook," is nearly 100 pages of exotic recipes (featuring, of course, Dynasty products — which only means the brand is suggested but not mandatory. And, as near as I can figure, has nothing to do with the television series.). It even has tips for using woks and chopsticks and other Oriental equipment. For a copy, send $1.95 plus 75 cents for postage and packing per book (check or money order) to Dynasty's Oriental Classics Cookbook, 445 Kauffmann Court, So. San Francisco, Calif 94080.

Furniture improvements help cut fire toll

WASHINGTON (AP) — The country's fire departments are called to an average of 1,700 home fires every day. Those fires kill a dozen people, and while that toll is declining it still remains one of the highest in the industrialized world.

Tougher standards for mattresses and upholstered furniture have helped cut fire deaths, but careless installation and use of wood stoves still poses a serious danger, safety officials report.

And the U.S. Fire Administration says some new problems may be emerging: a rising toll in blazes in boarding houses and an increase in fires caused by small children playing with disposable cigarette lighters.

Some 4,240 Americans died in 623,000 residential fires in 1984, according to figures compiled by the Consumer Product Safety Commission.

That is down from 757,500 home fires and 5,500 deaths reported in 1980, but it still remains higher than many other nations, reports James F. Hoebel, manager of the commission's Fire and Thermal Burn Hazards Office.

Among industrialized nations, only Scotland and Canada have higher fire death rates than the United States, according to Fire Administration studies.

Here's the good news: Regulations requiring more fire resistant mattresses and furniture, which went into effect in the 1970s, are starting to have an effect. And more and more Americans are installing smoke detectors.

But there is also bad news, as fires associated with wood-burning heaters remain high despite efforts to educate people about proper use and installation of the devices.

The safety commission statistics — compiled jointly with the Fire Administration and the National Fire Protection Association — showed 70,600 fires and 950 deaths in 1979 involving mattresses or bedding. By 1984 that had declined to 46,700 fires and 720 deaths, as old matresses were replaced by safer models. The same trend occurred in fires involving upholstered furniture.

There were 6.8 deaths per 1,000 fires in American homes in 1984, down from 7.3 in 1980. But during the same period the death rate in fires traced to cigarettes rose from 24.9 to 31 per 1,000 fires, Hoebel reported.

It is this problem that fire resistance standards for furniture are intended to address.

The federal mattress regulations took effect in 1972 and have been quite effective, say Fire Administration officials. The furniture industry instituted its own voluntary standards in 1978 through the Upholstered Furniture Action Council. Most of the furniture made in the United States or imported meets those standards.

Smoke detectors can help solve part of the fire problem, if people will install them and keep them working, reports Hoebel.

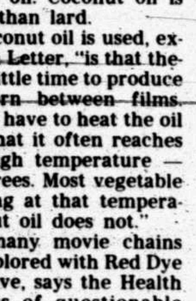

But getting them to do that can be a problem in itself, and he said ways are being sought to encourage people to regularly test their smoke detectors and replace the batteries when necessary.

The safety commission and National Bureau of Standards also are researching the possibility of developing self-extinguishing cigarettes, although that seems a distant prospect.

Nutrition information confusing

By MARIAN FARR

Farr

A lot of information — as well as misinformation — is going around regarding the nutritive value of beef and its fat and cholesterol content.

We have a host of self-proclaimed food experts these days that are making it tough on consumers. Consider all the TV personalities, movie stars, sports figures, singers and even politicians who are suddenly health experts. Many advertise various food items, flaunting their goodness and nutritional value as being better than some other produets.

The truth is that not many people really know the facts. Even medical doctors have been misled by false claims from different commodity and product groups. That's easy to understand since medical schools, until recently, did not even require courses in nutrition.

For instance, there is much confusion about the effects of saturated fat and cholesterol on human health. But even if you believe the avoidance of such foods is prudent, which meats contain these products?

The following quiz is offered for "diet watchers."

Which of the following meats (equivalent cooked quantities) has the most saturated fat or cholesterol:

- A large egg or a rib steak
- Shrimp or ground beef
- Roast chicken (light meat, skinned) or canned tuna
- Crab meat or ground beef
- Extra lean ground beef or roast chicken (dark meat with skin)

In every example but the last, the first food listed is higher in cholesterol but the second item has more saturated fats.

In the last comparison, however, the beef and chicken are equal in cholesterol but the chicken has more saturated fat. Beef steaks and roast, ground beef, roast chicken and turkey all have about the same cholesterol content. The really high cholesterol foods are chicken livers, eggs, beef liver and shrimp.

Did your "diet advisors" pass the quiz?

Telephone calls lead to rip-off scheme

By JOHN K. SCHMIDT

Schmidt

Permian Basin businesses are now among others around the country that have received telephone calls announcing their "selection" to recieve a Ford Bronco II.

All they need to do is send $199 plus $890 for tax and license fees via Western Union to D B Enterprises in the Los Angeles area.

Calls being made have been by Phil Gilbert from (818) 409-9885. If you tell Gilbert you will call back, your return call is taken by an answering machine.

The Better Business Bureau in Buffalo, N.Y., reports callers claim to be either CPAs from Buffalo area or someone with N.E.C. Company in New York or Los Angeles.

Businesses that are called are told they have been selected to get a Lincoln town car plus $3,000 as part of an advertising promotion.

To show "good faith," the business are asked to send either $425 or $435 by Western Union. Those who do send the money never get the car or the cash.

BBB-Buffalo reports no CPAs registered in New York under the names used in the scheme and no connection with NEC, Nissan Electronic Corp.

The BBB urges everyone to be wary of any telephone offer of cars, cash or other items of value, where "good faith" or other payment is requested.

Labels too small

New York Times News Service

Sen. Orrin G. Hatch, R-Utah, and Sen. Richard G. Lugar, R-Ind., have complained that the health warning labels the FTC plans to require on smokeless tobacco products do not stand out enough.

The senators wrote to the commission that a draft of the regulations proposed under a law adopted this year indicated that the labels would not be as prominent as those on cigarette packages and advertising.

A spokesman for the commission said it was preparing a response to the senators and would not have a public comment until it was sent.

But Michael J. Kerrigan, president of the Smokeless Tobacco Council, which represents manufacturers of chewing tobacco and snuff, said health warnings like those for cigarettes "may have been in the senators' private thoughts" but were not the intent of Congress. He said such a requirement had been in the bill but that it was deleted before passage.

Smokeless tobacco products must carry the health warnings by Feb. 27. Hatch and Lugar would like them to be in black lettering on a white background. Kerrigan said this would constitute an "undue interference with our advertising and packaging."

DEAR ABBY

Man's story has ring of truth

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Thank you for printing that letter from "Hearing Things." For years I've been hearing "Old Man River" over and over again just as I had heard it sung in "Showboat." Once in a while I hear old-time gospel music, which I have always loved. And during the holiday season I hear "Silent Night" sung by the Mormon Tabernacle Choir. These songs are always heard in exactly the same way — as though they were recorded in my brain.

I suppose I should be grateful I am not hearing rock music, which I hate. I have never told anyone about what I've been hearing all these years because I honestly thought they would carry me off and lock me in a mental ward. — CELIA IN DALLAS

DEAR ABBY: "Hearing Things" wrote that in addition to continuous ringing in his ears, he sometimes heard musical compositions. The ringing in his ears could be, as you suggested, "tinnitus," but the music is an entirely different problem. "Hearing Things" is having seizures or spasms in the part of his brain that stores musical memories. He should see a neurologist who will prescribe anti-convulsants to stop these seizures, which are otherwise known as musical epilepsy.

The complaint is a valid one. Those with this problem, like "Hearing Things," are afraid to talk about it for fear others will think they are "crazy." — PAM WINEGAR, OAK RIDGE, TENN.

DEAR ABBY: The problem described by "Hearing Things" sounds remarkably like two case histories described by Dr. Oliver Sachs, a professor of clinical neurology at Albert Einstein College of Medicine in New York.

Dr. Sachs described two women with similar problems, one of whom was having epileptic seizures in the temporal lobes of her brain. She was placed on anti-convulsants and the "musical seizures" stopped.

The other patient went to her otologist who, after finding nothing wrong except usual deafness, referred her to a psychiatrist who, upon finding nothing psychiatrically wrong, sent her to Dr. Sachs — who discovered she had had a small stroke in her right temporal lobe. As her body recovered from the stroke, the music subsided.

By the way, I am not partial to any specialist. I am married to a psychiatrist and formerly worked as a secretary for a group of neurosurgeons. "Hearing" may want to ask his family physician about a referral to a neurologist. I just hate to see patients go from doctor to doctor trying to pinpoint their problems. It's a waste of time and money. — MELISSA T. FARBER, NORFOLK, VA.

DEAR ABBY: The letter signed "Hearing Things," who kept hearing music in his head, caught my attention because I am familiar with that problem. A friend who worked as a researcher in the Library of Congress once told me of an elderly man who, out of desperation, had traveled some distance to the library to find a solution to that maddening problem. The man, who was intelligent and sane, had been hearing, note for note, the musical performances that he had heard in his youth. He rather enjoyed the music, though many thought him crazy to sit in his chair, smile, and tap his foot in time with the "music."

This condition is not rare; most people who experience it simply don't mention it for fear of being thought "nuts." — BAZ IN NACOGDOCHES, TEXAS

DEAR ABBY: I just read your column in which "Hearing Things" complained of hearing music in his head. I have just finished reading a book titled "The Man Who Mistook His Wife for a Hat," by Dr. Oliver Sachs. The author told of more than one patient who heard entire "concerts" in his head. They were not hallucinations, but real memories triggered by a neurological problem. These patients are not "crazy", some are epileptic, and a few may have tumors that trigger the stored music memories.

I am not a doctor, but this person who is hearing things should see a neurologist. — ANNA F. JACOBS, TUSCALOOSA, ALA.

FDA seeks warning labels for nonprescription antacids

New York Times News Service

Many people take antacids while taking prescription drugs, a practice which the Food and Drug Administration warns could cause complications.

The agency therefore has proposed that nonprescription antacids carry this warning: "Antacid drug products may interact with certain prescription drugs. If you are presently taking a prescription drug, do not take this product without checking with your physician."

According to the FDA, the drugs whose effectiveness was known or thought to be hindered by antacids include tetracycline, digoxin, phenytoin, chlorpromazine, isoniazid, propranolol, tranquilizers of the benzodiazepine group and the psychiatric phenothiazine medicines.

After rash of product tampering, supermarkets beefing up security

Copley News Service

Groceries whisk by on the counter; and Paula, a checkout clerk at a supermarket, is checking out more than just the prices. She's also looking for signs of tampering.

"I'm watching every item that comes through. If there's the least little tear, or even a hint that the product seal is broken, that product goes back and a new one is substituted. I don't make a big deal about it," she said.

Product tampering has people edgy — from shoppers to clerks to store owners.

"I'm fishing to the back and bottom of every shelf," said shopper Bonnie Riley, mother of a 3-year-old, "especially if the product is packaged in cardboard. I figure the package in the back is the safest."

"It means I have to be a lot more alert, and sometimes that can be very tiring," said clerk Paula.

Glen, another supermarket clerk, eyes every package he stocks on the shelves. "That's the way we're doing business these days, and sometimes my eyes get real tired," he said.

While some store managers insist it's business as usual, the series of tampering scares involving a number of products — beginning with Tylenol in 1982 — has many of the supermarket chains making some major adjustments.

It's not just management's concern. Unions are offering classes to help their members accept a new responsibility — watching out for the public health.

Although major food chains say they've made tackling the problem a top priority, their representatives are reluctant to discuss specifics.

"That would only provide a road map on how to counteract what's being done," said Karen Brown, spokeswoman for the Food Marketing Institute in Washington, D.C., a non-profit association of food retailers and wholesalers representing 1,500 companies.

"I can tell you that we're working with people who are experts in the fields of security, food technology and crisis management. And we're working with experts in the field of psychology to try to understand the kinds of sick people we're dealing with. It's a high priority," Brown said.

Computers also are being used to improve communication, according to Steve Koff, president of the Southern California Grocers Association.

"When an emergency arises, we can contact our stores within 20 minutes and have a product pulled off the shelves," Koff said. "The major chains have invested in the system, but we still have to contact the mom and pop stores by telephone."

In February, Food and Drug Administration chief Frank Young told the U.S. Senate that his agency received 128 calls related to product tampering and that 28 turned out to be real. Some deaths were involved.

Although it started with capsules, they haven't been the only target of product tampering. Consumers have found glass in yogurt, nails in hot dogs, razor blades in frozen pizza and cyanide in gelatin.

"Every (reported) incident makes the problem worse — it gives 10 more people the idea and we get more calls," said Brown.

"What people who make these calls need to understand is that whether or not tampering has occurred, the phone call is still treated as a felony," she said. "We need to catch a few of these hoax callers and prosecute them. I think that would have some impact."

But the threatening calls go on, according to industry officials. And since there's no way to know if a call is real or not, shelves are emptied automatically when a product is said to have been tampered with.

"We feel an obligation to notify the public when a threat has been received on a particular product," said Brown.

Auto dealers protest low interest rates

By CARL LARSEN
Copley News Service

Below-market interest rates offered by automakers have brought a storm of protest from lenders such as banks, credit unions and savings and loans, which complain they are being squeezed out of making auto loans by manufacturers' financing arms.

But some of the loudest complaints are coming from another corner, made by the very auto dealers who offer the loan programs.

Customers have become bewildered by the on-again, off-again low-interest programs, some dealers say, confused by 6.9 percent rates used by one dealer to boost "problem" lines, while another dealer offers a higher rate.

The incentive programs also have had the effect of channeling buyers away from used cars — a traditionally lucrative line for dealers — into new cars.

This has created a glut of used cars on the market, although low-mileage cars still come at a premium and are hard to find.

The 20,000-member National Automobile Dealers Association of McLean, Va., hopes the low rates and other gimmicks are not here to stay and has criticized the automakers for forcing the incentive programs upon dealers.

"They have imposed these programs on dealers without involving them in the decision-making process," said NADA spokesman Louis Priebe. He said recent programs have increasingly required dealers to kick in cash contributions.

In the past, the dealer was able to participate in the financing income, but the dealer no longer can earn that income from the sale of incentive program vehicles.

And most customers purchase cars under the finance programs, dealers complain.

Over a year, the low-interest programs can cost a dealership well in excess of $100,000, dealers say.

The outlook for incentive programs is that they will remain a fixture of the auto industry as long as manufacturers want to stimulate sales of slow-selling models, industry sources say.

Incentives have greatly boosted the volume of new-car loans handled by the Big Three automaker financing arms: General Motors Acceptance Corp., Chrysler Credit and Ford Motor Credit Corp. Over the last several years, GMAC has grown to become one of the nation's biggest mortgage lenders.

For their part, the big automakers say incentive programs have cut into profit margins.

General Motors Chairman Roger B. Smith said that the high cost of such programs has forced GM to cut back on capital spending.

Foreign automakers, meanwhile, generally have avoided incentive programs on automobiles, instead offering the programs sparingly on pickup trucks.

But Nissan said it is considering offering incentives on its cars to counter the sharp rise of the Japanese yen against the dollar. Because of the foreign exchange differential, the company already has sharply increased car prices in the United States.

In the end, lenders such as banks and credit unions may be the ones paying the big price for the sales incentives.

Many savings institutions and credit unions say there has not been a sharp drop-off in auto loans yet and don't anticipate participating in the low-interest programs. But if the incentives start to take away more business from financial institutions, analysts foresee some extreme countermeasures.

The NADA maintains that the incentive programs make it difficult for dealers to order and sell vehicles in an orderly way and creates artificial peaks and valleys of sales for different models.

And as interest rates in general decline, the advantage of low-rate financing has itself become more clouded. Many dealers say that a 5.7 percent rate now doesn't have the appeal that 8.8 percent had when interest rates were 20 percent.

Shoppers survey reveals common gripes

NEW YORK (AP) — What drives shoppers crazy? Leaking packages, broken potato chips, and surly checkout clerks.

Forget about innovations like toothpaste in a pump, liquid soap instead of old-fashioned bars, and talking cash registers.

Consumers are more interested in crush-proof snack boxes, meat containers that won't drip on other groceries, and friendlier clerks, according to a survey of 300 supermarket shoppers nationwide.

The survey, conducted by The Berni Corp., a Greenwich, Conn., marketing and design company, found:

■ The most important consideration in choosing a supermarket was cleanliness, followed by convenient location, courteous clerks, prices, and speedy checkout service. Less important were attractive displays, availability of baggers, and weekly specials and store coupons.

■ Shoppers spend more time reading product ingredients today than they did five years ago.

■ National brands and private-label or house brands were seen as about equal in quality, although generic or no-name brands were perceived as being lower in quality than the others.

■ Shoppers preferred supermarkets with extended hours so they could drop in before or after work, but didn't think 24-hour supermarkets were necessary.

■ Shoppers want a "medium" checkout lane to fill the gap between "express" lanes and regular lanes. But the ultimate in speedy service — phone orders and home delivery — sparked little interest among consumers.

The survey also asked about some new packages. Consumers preferred bar soap to liquid, plastic bottles to glass, and shampoo bottles with snap-tight, easy-pour lids. They also liked mouthwashes and laundry detergents with measuring devices in their caps. They were lukewarm about toothpaste pumps.

Shoppers were interested in improved, resealable bags, and wanted packages that would protect snacks from being crushed, meat packages that wouldn't leak, and easier-opening laundry detergents.

New high-tech cash registers were seen as a convenience by some, but most people disliked talking cash registers that recited the prices of items.

The survey was conducted by direct mail in 300 households across the United States. The respondents said they did most of the shopping in their households; the vast majority were female. Most shopped in major supermarket chains or large local supermarkets.

Car leasing requires thoughtful decision

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans seeking to sidestep the rising costs of new cars are increasingly considering leasing instead of buying vehicles. That's a decision that may suit some lifestyles and budgets, but like any other investment it requires thoughtful decision-making in advance.

Usually the initial payment is lower for people leasing cars than for folks who are buying — but the total costs in the long run may be about equal, according to the Federal Trade Commission.

The difference is what happens at the end of the payments.

If you bought the car, it's yours.

If you leased it, the dealer owns it.

If you are one of those folks who wants a new car every year or two, or who is dying for more car than you can afford to buy, leasing may be the answer, said James A. Moseley, manager of the Trade Commission's Dallas regional office.

Folks who buy a new car every year or two are paying only for the use of a car, not to build equity, explained Moseley. So, leasing without a big down payment may be good for them.

And avoiding that down payment can also be the answer for those people who are "just dying to have a BMW but can't afford to buy it. They may be able to lease it cheaper," said Moseley, who wrote the Trade Commission's new "Consumer Guide to Vehicle Leasing."

On the other hand, Moseley warned in a telephone interview, people considering leasing must carefully think about what it is going to cost them at the end of the lease — not just the up front and monthly costs.

There are a variety of costs that can arise at the end of a lease, including end-of-lease payments, excess mileage and wear charges and disposition costs that the user may have to pay.

"From a financial standpoint, if the dealer doesn't get it from you in the monthly payments, he's going to have to get it somewhere else," Moseley said, and that may mean extra charges at the end of the lease.

The biggest unexpected charge may be the end-of-lease payment that arises in the so-called open-end leases.

Under that type of agreement, the lease states a specific estimated residual value the car is expected to be worth when it is returned to the dealer.

If it is indeed worth that amount, you owe nothing. But if it turns out to be worth less, you may have to pay the difference to the dealer.

Some dealers may be willing to negotiate lower monthly lease payments in return for increasing the estimated residual value of a car — but consumers should remember that that could mean a big payment at the end of the lease.

Another option is the closed-end lease.

In a closed-end lease, sometimes called a walk-away lease, the user isn't responsible for the value of the vehicle at the end of the lease.

However, this lease usually has higher monthly payments than the open-end variety, and generally includes some type of mileage limit. Thus, the user may be liable for a charge for excess use or mileage at the end of the lease, as well as a payment for any serious damage.

Both types may also include disposition charges — the cost to the dealer of getting the car ready to sell after it is returned.

As to the day-to-day operation of the leased car, most users have to buy insurance and pay for general repairs and maintenance, although in some cases leasing firms offer insurance and service plans.

The question of repairs raises another potential problem area, however — how to deal with a lemon.

"If you have problems, it's much tougher to get them resolved with a leased car," warned Evan Johnson of the Center for Auto Safety, a Washington-based consumer group.

Opinions differ as to what extent manufacturers' warranties extend to leased vehicles, Johnson said, especially in the case of arbitration programs that help settle disagreements over cars that turn out to have multiple flaws.

For most leased cars, sales tax, title and license fees are paid by the dealer, but check the lease agreement to make sure.

Moseley's booklet contains a discussion of various things to consider and questions to ask when considering leasing a car.

Single copies of "A Consumer Guide to Vehicle Leasing" can be obtained at no charge from the Federal Trade Commission, Public Reference Branch, Washington, D.C., 20580.

Anyone who wants more than one copy should contact the Consumer Information Center, Dept. 100, Pueblo, Colo., 81002. They charge 50 cents for the booklet, which is stock number 458P.

Jurors view gruesome 'Twilight Zone' tragedy on big screen

By RICHARD DE ATLEY

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — Jurors watched six views of a gruesome helicopter accident that killed actor Vic Morrow and two children on the set of the movie "Twilight Zone."

The film was shown Wednesday in an unusual court hearing at the 1,100-seat Samuel Goldwyn Theater of the Academy for Motion Picture Arts and Sciences, a theater chosen for its state-of-the art sound and projection system.

A prosecutor said the footage was the most important evidence against director John Landis and four other people charged with involuntary manslaughter in the deaths.

But the defense said the film showed the accident could not have been prevented.

Morrow, 53, Renee Chen, 6, and Myca Le, 7, were killed when a helicopter crashed on them as Morrow carried the children across a shallow stream. The explosions and helicopter were portraying an attack on a mock Vietnamese village on a set 35 miles northwest of Los Angeles.

The climax of the approximately 25 minutes of film was the crash, with one of the helicopter's main rotor blades slashing into the victims.

A bloody rotor turned broadside to one of the closeup cameras. A head could be seen floating in the water.

In a segment of silent film, two parents of the children could be seen running toward the accident with their mouths open in screams as film crew members restrained them. The parents were expected to testify today.

The film also showed Landis running around the wreckage toward the bodies, and he appeared horrified by the carnage.

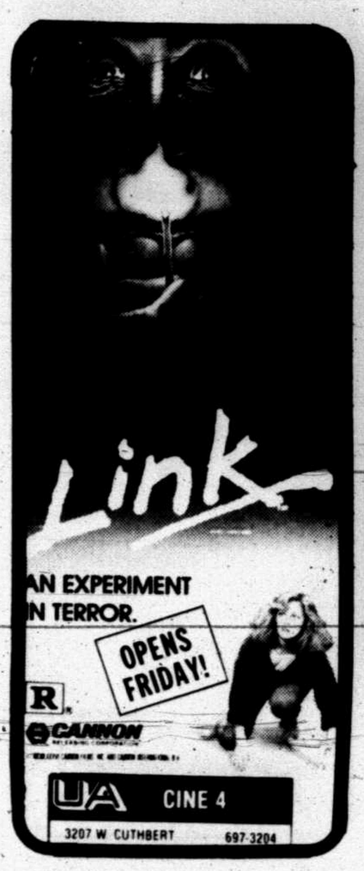

Landis, seen carrying a bullhorn and dressed in hip waders and a black turtleneck sweater, oversaw both the flight of the helicopter and the detonation of explosions.

"John Landis was the absolute dictator on that set," said Deputy District Attorney Lea D'Agostino. "Everything you saw was under his control.

"I honestly don't know of a more important piece of evidence," she said of the film. "There is absolutely no reason why they could not have used dolls or dummies for those children."

"I don't think you can see a very tragic accident like this and not be affected," said James Neal, Landis' lawyer. "But that's just what it was, and the more you see it, the more you realize it was an accident."

The other defendants are associate producer George Folsey, unit production manager Dan Allingham, special effects coordinator Paul Stewart and helicopter pilot Dorcey Wingo.

Researcher: Teen suicide rate starting to decline

BALTIMORE (AP) — The teen-age suicide rate is still three times what it was in the 1950s but is starting to decline, a researcher says.

The rate should drop a total of 7 percent during the next five years, predicted Richard Wetzel, a clinical psychologist at Washington University in St. Louis, citing a variety of studies by him and others.

"It's not a huge drop-off but it looks like it's starting to edge down," he said Wednesday at a news briefing sponsored by the American Medical Association and Johns Hopkins Medical Institutions.

He said the decline in teen-age suicides might be due in part to an equivalent decline in drug and alcohol abuse among young people.

"I think that's happening, but that's speculation," he said.

Wetzel said studies have shown that the sharpest rise in teen-age suicides, which occurred between 1965 and about 1979, was paralleled by a dramatic rise in drug abuse among the young.

Studies in California also have found that suicides are more likely in counties with higher levels of drug and alcohol abuse, he said.

A recent study in San Diego of 133 suicide victims under 30 showed that 53 percent of the victims abused drugs or alcohol, which was three times the drug and alcohol abuse rate among the overall population, Wetzel said.

"These were primarily people who started off very young with drug abuse," Wetzel said.

Some of the studies Wetzel examined refute the widely held view that suicide rates remain constant for a given population as it ages.

The newer studies have convinced Wetzel that external factors can influence a population's suicide rates, he said.

Wetzel's prediction of a 7 percent drop is based on what's called an auto-regression model, in which statistics from past years are analayzed mathematically to determine future trends. The statistics come from federal surveys of causes of death.

Mental illnesses such as depression and psychosis have also been identified as risk factors for suicide, Wetzel said.

The San Diego study of suicide victims under 30 found that 39 percent had some form of depression and 12 percent were psychotic, Wetzel said. Only one-third of these victims were under any kind of treatment during the last year of their lives, he said.

'Tip' O'Neill retiring after 34 years in House

WASHINGTON (AP) — With the 99th Congress expected to adjourn next week, Thomas P. O'Neill told a going-away party "It's hit me now" that he's retiring after 34 years in Congress and a decade as Speaker of the House.

O'Neill, D-Mass., whose unbroken tenure of 10 years as speaker stands as a record, has been the leading public symbol of his party during the Reagan era, but it was a bipartisan crowd of 250 that paid him tribute in a private salute in the House chamber Wednesday night.

House Republican Leader Robert Michel, R-Ill., with whom O'Neill has sparred over the years on issues, said, "I'd rather fight with someone who really believes in what they say than with some lukewarm pragmatist who believes what the headlines tell him to believe."

House Majority Whip Thomas Foley, D-Wash., called O'Neill one of the strongest speakers the House has seen, adding, "All the strong speakers have been characterized by a passion for politics."

"It's no accident that the House stands unusually high in the opinion of the American people," Foley said.

The comments were relayed by O'Neill's press secretary, Chris Matthews, because the party was closed to the public and the media.

O'Neill also spoke briefly, relating a recent conversation in which he was asked whether the realization of retirement had fully struck. "It's hit me now," he said.

Members and spouses later went from the House chamber to a nearby hall in the Capitol where a film was shown of O'Neill's life story, told primarily in a collage of clips from interviews with the speaker himself.

NATION IN BRIEF

Reagan calls new military measure a 'milestone'

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, signing a legislation designed to prevent foul-ups caused by snarls in the military chain of command, called the bill "a milestone."

One of the chief sponsors of the measure, Sen. Barry Goldwater, R-Ariz., said it would provide for "the most far-reaching reorganization of the United States defense establishment in almost 30 years."

The legislation, signed Wednesday, gives more power to military theater commanders and makes the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff the principal military adviser to the president.

In a statement accompanying his signature the president called the bill "a milestone in the long evolution of defense organization since our national security establishment was created in 1947."

'City up for historic naming

WASHINGTON (AP) — Plains, Ga., hometown of former President Jimmy Carter, would be designated a national historic site under legislation approved by the House.

The legislation, sponsored by Rep. Richard Ray, D-Ga., was approved by a voice vote Wednesday. But, it faces an uncertain future in the Senate as Congress pushes toward adjournment.

The House action came on the same day that President Reagan was in Atlanta with Carter for ceremonies to open the Carter Presidential Library.

Under Ray's bill, the historic site would encompass about 40 acres and include Carter's current and boyhood home, the railroad depot which served as his campaign headquarters, the Plains High School, and the facades of the hospital where Carter was born and another house where he once lived.

Medicare premiums climb

WASHINGTON (AP) — The monthly premium that the nation's 30 million Medicare patients pay for physicians' services will climb on Jan. 1 from $15.50 to $17.90.

The $2.40-a-month, or 15.5 percent, increase announced Wednesday will come at the same time that the elderly face steeper charges for their first day's stay in a hospital in 1987.

Before Congress adjourns for the fall elections, it is expected to cut back the scheduled $80 increase in the amount Medicare patients must pay for their first day in the hospital. That hospital fee is now $492.

Under a formula linked to rising hospital costs, that charge would jump to $572 on Jan. 1. But the House wants to set the fee at $500 and the Senate prefers $520 for 1987. A compromise is expected.

New pacemaker to be out

WASHINGTON (AP) — A new type of computerized heart pacemaker designed to automatically detect and correct abnormal heart rhythms should be on the U.S. market soon.

The Food and Drug Administration on Wednesday approved the so-called PASAR device for U.S. marketing following almost 10 years of tests worldwide, said Telectronics Inc. of Denver, the manufacturer.

The PASAR was developed to treat abnormally rapid heart rhythms. This problem, while seldomly fatal, can result in palpitations, dizziness and collapse that lead to hospitalization.

During normal heart beat, the pacemaker does nothing but monitor heart rate. But when rapid beating occurs, the company said, the device senses the problem and delivers a synchronized burst of electrical pulses to restore normal rhythm.

EPA: Pesticide poses risk

WASHINGTON (AP) — The pesticide cadium, used on golf courses since the 1940s, poses the risk of kidney damage and cancer and should be banned, the Environmental Protection Agency says.

Cadmium, a metal widely used as a battery electrode, has been used o control fungal diseases, such as copper spot, red thread and gray mold, in turf.

The agency estimated that golf courses would have to spend about $250,000 a year, or $500 per affected course, in switching to other fungicides.

EPA's proposal to ban pesticide uses of cadmium, announced Wednesday, will be reviewed by a panel of science advisers and the Agriculture Department. The public has 60 days to submit comments.

House OKs bicentennial bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — A bill aimed at commemorating the 1987 bicentennial of the Constitution and reducing the national debt by selling gold and silver coins to the public has passed the House.

The measure, introduced by Rep. Frank Annunzio, D-N.Y., was sent to the Senate Wednesday. It calls for minting up to one million $5 gold coins and 10 million silver dollars. Revenue from the sale of the coins would be used solely to reduce the national debt.

The 90-percent gold coin would contain just under a quarter ounce of gold and carry a $35 surcharge above the face value of the coin. The 90 percent silver coin would contain more than three-quarters of an ounce of pure silver and carry a surcharge of $7.

First Lady receives award

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nancy Reagan will travel Thursday to Kansas City, Mo., where she will receive an award for her anti-drug abuse efforts from the United Negro College Fund.

The first lady will receive the Frederick D. Patterson award, named for the founder of the fund, a White House statement said.
