It's Bush over Reese in election

George Bush and his wife, Laura, greet supporters Saturday night at Bush headquarters, as late-arriving results verify Bush's victory in the Republican runoff primary for the nomination for the 19th Congressional District race. He will now face Kent Hance of Lubbock in the November elections. (Staff Photo by Mike Kardos)

George W. Bush may not have been born in Midland as his opponent had claimed all along, but it was the Tall City that gave him his 1,407-vote edge over Jim Reese of Odessa in the runoff election Saturday for the Republican nomination in the 19th Congressional District race.

Unofficial totals Saturday night showed Bush pulled in 6,802 votes to Reese's 5,395.

In Midland County, Bush received 4,787 votes to Reese's 1,278. Lubbock reported giving Bush 1,471 votes to 1,581 for Reese, and Ector County went for Reese, 1,431 votes, compared to 165 for Bush.

Bush now will square off against Kent Hance of Lubbock, a state senator who received the Democratic Party's nod in the May 6 primary to try for the congressional seat being vacated by U.S. Rep. George Mahon of Lubbock.

Mahon has been the only representative the West Texas district has had in the 44 years since the seat was created. He announced last summer he was retiring at the end of his current term.

Bush and Reese were forced into the runoff election after the third contender for the Republican nomination, Joe Hickox of Shallowater, received 11 percent of the vote in the May 6 primary. Bush had 46.5 percent of the vote in May, and Reese had slightly less than that then.

While claiming victory at 9 p.m. Saturday, Bush joked that he might "live to regret it" since three counties then still were not complete — Parmer, Lubbock and Ector.

Reese had few comments to make about the race. When telephoned at his home, Reese said, "I guess it's obvious the Lord has something else in mind for me to do."

Speaking to the crowd at his headquarters, Bush said the first thing to work on for the general election is to heal the rift between Midland and Odessa. "It is not only politically bad, but also economically."

The longtime split between the two cities had been brought to the fore this past week by Reese, who said in a press conference that Bush was not working to end the divisiveness.

Because of the runoff election, the Republican Party also was split, Bush said, and he added that he will work to "get everyone together. The important thing is to get this party unified. Otherwise, it will be hard to win in November."

Bush said Reese had "run a good campaign. We were afraid all the way." He also said Hance will be tough to beat in November, but he thinks the Republican Party will win.

"We have the greatest catalysts in the world and those are (President) Jimmy Carter and (Speaker of the House) Tip O'Neill."

Hance is a good man, Bush said, "he just happens to be in the wrong party."

He sees the main issue in the November general election against Hance as "who can go up to Congress and say 'no' to the liberal Democrats."

More than 12,000 persons in the district voted in the runoff, but, as in the primary, Bush carried only Midland County. The difference is that he gained 660 votes in Midland County over his total in the last election and Reese lost 338 votes. In the last election, Bush lost Lubbock County, the biggest in the district, by almost 250 votes. He lost there again Saturday, but only by 110 votes.

Bush noted he had run better this time around in the rural boxes, many of which are in the northern part of

Sign's advice gladly heeded

By LANA CUNNINGHAM

"Drink me first" the sign on the beer dispenser read. Located in the hallway past the front door of the building where the George Bush for Congress headquarters are situated, the dispenser was the first thing one noticed upon entering the building.

From the looks of things, most people were taking the sign's advice. Supporters of Bush began arriving at the headquarters after the polls closed at 7 p.m. Saturday to await the results of the runoff election.

The heated political battle between Bush and Jim Reese of Odessa for the Republican nomination for the 19th Congressional District race finally was drawing to an end. The headquarters was prepared for a long night of it, since results from the May 6 primary were not in until after midnight.

While the beer was draining out of the dispensers, more food was brought for the tables.

By 7:30 p.m., the supporters were getting nervous. Standing around in the small office they watched Glenna Krumboltz make entries as results slowly poured in from the other 16 counties. Midland's results already were in.

Bush's headquarters had the typical politician's decor — red, white and blue crepe paper streamers hanging along the wall; white straw politicans' hats with red, white and blue bands around them; a sign saying "Bush" and pictures of the campaign highlighting one small back wall near a couch.

By 7:45 p.m., the room was getting crowded with supporters of all ages, wearing all descriptions of attire. A chalkboard on a side wall showed the totals as they came in. First it was Bush — 5,157; Reese — 1,808. At 8:10 p.m., it changed to 5,262 for Bush, 2,532 for Reese.

Reese kept getting closer, and the supporters became more nervous. "I heard Odessa turned out phenomenally for Reese," one woman said.

As more people crowded into the room, the air conditioner was turned up, yet the temperature got hotter.

Supporters kept asking when Lubbock would be in. Lubbock County

Administration admits Soviet proposal rejected

WASHINGTON (AP) — Carter administration officials confirmed Saturday night that a Soviet proposal to limit the testing and deployment of new intercontinental missiles was rejected last weekend.

But the officials, who asked not to be named, insisted that the proposal was turned down because it was inadequate, not because of domestic or international political considerations.

"There were a few who felt this (proposal) was an improvement (over past Soviet positions) but most felt it was not," said one official close to the strategic arms limitation talks.

He said the administration rejected the proposal largely because it would have blocked work on the mobile MX land-based missile, now in the early stages of development.

"The differences are built into the hard rock of the negotiations," the official said, adding that the two sides have been at an impasse on two key issues for the past eight months.

Those two deadlocked issues concern efforts to impose constraints on development of new missile systems and a dispute over the Soviet Backfire bomber.

Meanwhile, an administration official said President Carter would make a major speech on U.S.-Soviet relations Wednesday when he addresses the U.S. Naval Academy commencement in Annapolis, Md.

The administration's confirmation of the rejection and disclosure of some of the reasons that prompted the decision follow the president's heated denial of a published report claiming that the United States was effectively freezing the SALT negotiations.

On Friday, The Washington Post, citing unnamed sources, reported that the Carter administration had decided to reject future Soviet proposals partly because of domestic and international political considerations.

Carter, in an unusual Oval Office meeting with reporters, denounced the report as "totally inaccurate" and declared that he remained committed to an early arms limitation agreement.

In its Saturday editions, the Post said the United States rejected a proposal on future control of new types of intercontinental ballistic missiles and made no counteroffer.

The Post said some officials who favor quick progress in the arms talks described the new proposal as "significant" progress from previous Soviet positions.

Relations between the United States and the Soviet Union have deteriorated in recent months as Soviet-backed Cuban troops have become more deeply involved in African affairs.

Political opposition to a possible SALT agreement has also been growing in Congress where some conservatives have vowed to defeat any proposal that they feelsmakes too many concessions to the Russians.

U.S. to retaliate, evict Canadian fishing boats

CLEVELAND (AP) — Approximately 200 U.S. Coast Guardsmen, starting noon Sunday, will begin evicting commercial Canadian fishermen from American-controlled portions of the Great Lakes, a Coast Guard spokesman said Saturday.

The order to evict Canadians from all U.S. waters, not only in the Great Lakes but on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, was issued Friday by the U.S. State Department. The action comes in retaliation for Canada's decision to begin evicting American fishermen from its waters at the same time.

Coast Guard Petty Officer Bill Gilbert of the 9th Coast Guard District, which oversees operations in the Great Lakes, said the Coast Guard will search American waters with small boats and cutters. Coast Guardsmen will board and search Canadian vessels in the Great Lakes and direct the fishermen to leave U.S. waters during the first 24 hours, he said.

In Washington, a State Department spokesman said both the U.S. and Canada agreed that during the 24-hour period from noon Sunday until noon Monday boats, caught fishing in the opposing country's waters would be advised of the ban, but not seized or fined.

After that period, Gilbert said, catches will be confiscated. Depending on the circumstances, he said, other steps, such as the confiscation of boats, could be taken.

Gilbert said most Great Lakes fishing by Canadians is for Lake Erie perch, with some fishing occurring in Lake Huron.

"Lake Erie is one of the prime U.S.-Canadian fishing areas in contention," Gilbert said.

He said U.S. action against Canadian fishers will depend to some extent on how Canada treats any American fishermen in Canadian waters.

"A whole lot of people will be playing it by ear for the first couple of hours," he said.

Canada announced Friday that it will no longer honor a provisional fishing agreement between the two nations.

U.S. officials began sending radio messages Friday to alert American boats of the deadline.

Both sides, however, have called for further talks to resolve their disputes.

On the West Coast the two countries have been unable to settle differences over fishing for salmon on the Swiftsure Bank off British Columbia. The United States asked Canada to close the area to commercial fishing from April 15 to June 15 to protect stocks that spawn in U.S. streams.

Finding place to park means money, patience or exercise

By KAY HORD

Want to park?

Employees working in or near downtown Midland might like to, but being able to can be something else again.

According to a recent simulated trip-to-work by this reporter, workers have a choice between running every hour and feeding the parking meter or paying rates ranging from $15 to $40 a month for a space in a parking lot. Some, of course, get free parking provided by their employer.

But if it's free parking the others are looking for, the hunt is on, and the hunter or huntress had better allow an extra 10 to 15 minutes to find that elusive creature — the free parking space.

During a simulated trip from the entrance of Kimberlea addition on Wadley Avenue (an arbitary but representative starting point), it took 20 minutes including battling 8 a.m. downtown morning traffic to reach a preselected destination of Wall Towers West, in the 200 block of West Wall Avenue.

However, since double parking had to be ruled out, the problem wasn't quite solved. After arriving at Wall Towers West, it took an additional 10 minutes of circling to locate a parking place that wouldn't strain the driver financially.

From the free parking space, a fast-paced walk, actually more of a slow-paced run, cut re-arrival time to Wall Towers West to a mere eight more minutes.

On that basis, it would seem downtown employees living in a typical "outlying" suburb, at least those bent on free parking as close as possible to the job, have to get up approximately 38 minutes earlier than home- or nearby-employed persons in order to get to work on time.

Evidently, from the number of paid parking lots surrounding downtown Midland and from the number of cars using those lots, many employees "surrender" by paying for a guaranteed parking space. How much is paid for that privilege depends on how close the lot is to downtown and whether the lot is covered.

One company, which owns five parking lots, with one about six blocks from downtown Midland, charges rates ranging from $25 to $40 per month. Another approximately five blocks from downtown charges only $15 a month.

And a quick perusal of metered parking spaces downtown at about 8 a.m. indicated that many employees feed the machines a quarter every hour in an effort to keep parking tickets off their windshields. This, apparently, being one of the few sure ways of being able to park relatively near the job.

But obviously, too, there are those who insist that a free parking place in the pursuit of gainful employment is no vice.

And in search of that great American dream, they circle relentlessly, often finally alighting on some unsuspecting residential area which has, as its own cross to bear, the misfortune of being located within walking distance of downtown.

Reactions from residents in those residential areas ranged the other day from indifference to opposition.

"They have as much right to park out there (in front of my house) as I do. We need more parking spaces, but I know how the parking is and they have the right to park anywhere," said Mrs. John McFarlane of the 700 block of West Michigan Avenue.

"It's just so crowded (around my house)," said Janie Minear in the 400 block of North Baird. "I'm scared sometimes that I might hit one of the cars while backing out of my driveway. And it's almost impossible sometimes to see around the corners to see if any cars are coming because it's so crowded. I've almost been hit a couple of times," she said.

The owner an apartment complex near downtown Midland has been forced to post signs warning non-tenants that cars will be towed away at owner's expense.

The same owner has had to resort to taking down license plate numbers of residents' cars to match with those of cars parked in the parking lot of the apartment complex.

Poerner huge winner in county

Midland County Democrats Saturday were in tune with those of the rest of the state.

County Democrats favored incumbent Railroad Commissioner John H. Poerner over challenger Jerry Sadler by more than 8 to 1 for nomination to the unexpired term for that post.

Poerner carried all six voting places and absentee voting, receiving 937 of the county's 1,093 runoff primary votes, and leaving Sadler 156.

Poerner garnered his largest percentage of votes at the fire station at Golf Course Road and Garfield Street, where Precincts 8, 12, 14, 20 and 23 voted. There, Poerner recieved 284 votes to Sadler's 21. Sadler fared best at South Elementary School, where Precincts 2, 5, 16, 17 and 24 gave him 31 votes to 65 for Poerner.

At the fire station at Edwards Street and Golf Course Road (Precincts 1, 3, 10 and 25), Poerner got 47 votes to 9 for Sadler. Poerner received 116 votes at Bonham Elementary School (Precincts 4, 11, 13, 21 and 22), and Sadler, 24.

Papers show tests brought microwave protest

MOSCOW (AP) — Declassified U.S. State Department documents disclose that findings in genetic tests run secretly on American embassy personnel here were viewed as serious enough to warrant a diplomatic protest over Soviet microwave bombardment.

The 1960s chromosome tests, conducted as a virus study, were undertaken because of concern over possible biomedical effects of the still-unexplained microwave beams aimed at the embassy by the Soviets.

The existence of the four-year genetic testing program, designed to spot potentially harmful genetic mutations, remained a secret — unknown even to persons who had been tested — until more than a decade after the experiments were started in early 1966.

Belated disclosure of the tests is said to have prompted several State Department and military personnel, who became parents of children with crippling genetic birth defects during or after their service in Moscow, to file legal claims against the U.S. government.

They include a $1.75 million claim brought by the parents of a 5-year-old boy in Seattle, Wash., afflicted with severe hydrocephalus, a birth defect of the brain and central nervous system. The child's father had served as a Marine security guard in Moscow.

When the State Department first confirmed the existence of the tests in July 1976, it released no detailed data on the experiments and said a scientific panel had decided that "no valid conclusions could be drawn from the study."

Responding to recent queries by The Associated Press bureau in Moscow, the State Department in Washington said that at the time of the experiments, "people were not informed as to reasons for the testing. Since there were no findings to report, individuals were not notified subsequently about purposes or results."

However, newly disclosed government documents show that some of the experimental data from the tests pointed to an abnormally high incidence of chromosomal aberrations in personnel exposed to radiation.

The documents are among more than 2,200 pages of material on the Moscow microwaves affair, dating back as far as 1964, which were declassified and released by the State Department in response to an AP request under the U.S. Freedom of Information Act.

Included with the documents was a September 1967 memorandum from the State Department Office of Security, in charge of monitoring the Soviet microwaves. The handwritten memo was prepared to give technical guidance for then-ambassador to Moscow, Llewellyn E. Thompson, in making an official protest to the Soviets.

Thompson died of cancer in 1972, three years after leaving Moscow.

"The ambassador should note the existence of an electromagnetic signal — that it emanates from an apartment bldg. 100 meters (about 300 feet) to the rear of the embassy and is directed toward the rear facade of the embassy," the document said. "The power of the radiated electromagnetic energy is at a level that could be harmful to humans." The U.S. protest followed the lines of the memo, with the main point being that the electromagnetic energy could be harmful to humans. According to State Department sources, the Soviet response amounted to a denial that microwave radiation was aimed at the embassy.

On April 21, 1969 a report about the genetic testing program was given by Dr. Herbert Pollack to a scientific panel for Project Pandora, a secret Pentagon-run research effort on microwaves.

Dr. Pollack is currently working as a State Department medical consultant on the Moscow microwave situation.

According to declassified minutes of the Pandora meeting, Dr. Pollack told the panel that "140 samples were examined over a four-year period....Four of these reportedly showed serious chromosomal abnormalities."

A duplicate set of the documents concerning the chromosome study was sent by The Associated Press to Dr. Milton M. Zaret, a Scarsdale, N.Y., physician who had been involved with the early stages of Pandora.

Zaret said in a telephone interview from his office later the material indicated that "they (the State Department) had positive findings. But later on, they apparently tried to dismiss it all — they tried to make it seem as though the findings weren't significant. Not significant to whom? By what test?"

He added: "No matter how you look at it, to do secret experiments on people who haven't given informed consent, and then to find something and not tell them about it — that's really devastating."

Since the initial disclosure of the Moscow microwave problem, the State Department's legal office has been concerned about the prospect of administrative claims and lawsuits being brought by Moscow personnel, according to department sources.

Leukemia study shows genetics may be involved

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) — The study of a Sydney family with a 40-year history of leukemia has led researchers to believe they have evidence heredity may make some persons especially vulnerable to the dread blood cancer.

The Sydney medical researchers say their findings suggest a genetic factor may predispose human beings to leukemia, but that the disease itself is not hereditary.

The researchers said that in a 10-year study of the family they call "S," they found 14 persons contracted leukemia in the past three generations and all but two of them died. The family tree traced by the researchers includes 293 persons.

"This is the most extreme example of predisposition to leukemia in one family that has ever been described," Dr. Frederick Gunz, head of medical research at Sydney Hospital, told The Associated Press.

"All but one of the 14 victims had the same acute form of myeloid leukemia, which is uncommon in children. Nine of the victims in the family were children," Gunz said.

Myeloid leukemia is marked by abnormal accumulations in the blood of the type of cell normally found in the bone marrow and spleen.

Gunz said statistics show every human being has one chance in 200 of contracting leukemia and that if one case occurs in a family, the chances of other members getting the disease are two to three times higher than normal.

But in the "S" family, chances are 10 times higher, Gunz said.

In one branch of the family last year, a father, his young son and daughter contracted leukemia within a six-month period. The father and daughter died, but the son is still living. Three other children were unaffected, Gunz said.

"It's absolutely dreadful for the family, not knowing who is going to get it next. They are always looking over their shoulders," he said.

New U.N. unit rights of Jews

NEW YORK (AP) — The United Nations establishment of a special unit on "Palestinian rights" constitues a "deliberate refusal to recognize the equal rights of the 850,000 Jews who were driven from countries of the Arab world" since founding of the state of Israel, says Heskel Haddad of the World Organization of Jews from Arab Countries.

He said in a letter to U.N. Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim that any just dealing with the refugee problem should include Jews driven or forced to flee from Arab countries in the Middle East conflicts, including many whose communities had existed in Arab lands as long as 2,500 years.

Wife sees her mate, children die

COHOES, N.Y. (AP) — A pregnant mother watched helplessly from a neighbor's porch, screaming in anguish, as her husband and seven children died in an apartment fire in this Albany suburb Saturday.

"Save my baby. Save my children," Virginia Gratto, 30, cried out as firefighters responded to the blaze at her apartment in a two-story, wood frame building, witnesses said. It was too late.

Her husband, John, 31, and their children, Eleanor, 9; Evelyn, 8; Francis, 5; John Jr., 4; Edward, 2; and twins Sarah and Patricia, 4 months, died in the fire.

Mrs. Gratto's father, Francis Bellerose, told the Albany Knickerbocker News that his daughter woke up late Friday night when "she heard a baby cry ... there were flames all around her." She ran from the blazing apartment calling for help, he said, and was blocked by a wall of flames from going back inside.

Police said four firefighters suffered minor injuries in battling the blaze, which was brought under control early Saturday.

The bodies of Gratto and the children were recovered later from the charred rubble. Fire Chief Ray Lamora said he believed they died of asphyxiation.

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Heat has no effect

Dear Dr. Solomon: I'm going to ask you what may seem like a silly question, but I really would like to know—does the way one cooks an egg have any effect on the amount of cholesterol?—Emily S.

Dear Emily: No, it doesn't. An egg—or, to be more precise, the yolk—has about 25 milligrams of cholesterol, whether it is fried, poached, boiled, scrambled or eaten raw.

Dear Dr. Solomon: Is there any way of telling if a child has a strep throat—not just the kind of sore throat he gets with a cold? I'm asking because the son of some friends of ours came down with rheumatic fever as the result of a strep infection that had gone unchecked—Kathleen V.

Dear Kathleen: The only way to be sure that a sore throat is—or isn't—caused by the streptococcus germ is to take a throat swab, with a piece of cotton at the end of an applicator stick, and send the swab to a laboratory. There, the sample is put into a culture medium where the germs grow so rapidly they can be identified within 24 hours.

If, indeed, this does turn out to be a strep infection, the doctor will immediately put the patient on an antibiotic—generaly penicillin. Sometimes he may start a child on antibotic before the test, as a precaution. But, actually, if the treatment gets underway not more than a week after the first symptoms, that is all right. So there is normally time to do a culture first.

You may be interested to know that parents can learn how to take a throat swab themselves. Dr. James E. Strain, a pediatrician at the University of Colorado, has done a study on this and found that they do just as well as nurses or other health professionals. One advantage of throat swabs done at home, he says in a "Medical World News" interview, is that they encourage earlier disease detection.

Another pediatrician who has had excellent results with home cultures is Dr. Harvey P. Katz of Johns Hopkins. He has found that parental swabs agreed with those taken by professionals in 136 cases out of 137.

You might check with your pediatrician to see if he thinks this would be a good home technique for you to learn. In any case, always be sure that any sore throat your children have is promptly diagnosed. While it is true that only a relatively small number of strep infections lead to rheumatic fever—or to inlfammation of the kidney—you are right in wanting to take every precatuion you can against them.

White writings given to library

COLUMBIA, Mo. (AP) — Tom Mahoney, a New York writer and alumnus, has given the University of Missouri Library a collection of books by or about the late William Allen White, famous Emporia, Kan., newspaper editor.

Oldest of the 50 items, most of them autographed, are 1891 and 1893 prints of White's poetry, the latter a collaboration with Albert Bigelow Paine titled "Rhymes by Two Friends." The newest book is "William Allen White, Maverick on Main Street," a 1975 biography by John DeWitt McKee of New Mexico.

His 1901 novel, "Strategems and Spoils," was dedicated by White "to the Kansas City Star, an honest newspaper," where he wrote editorials before becoming a publisher.

In a copy of his 1909 novel, "A Certain Rich Man," White wrote: "This is my major opus. I worked on it five happy years, rewrote it three times. It has sold about a quarter of a million copies in a dozen editions. It is a picture of the last years of the 19th century and the first decade of the 20th."

In his 1918 book, "In the Heart of a Fool," he wrote: "This was the last novel I wrote. After it was published I turned to history, biography and political essays."

The collection resulted from a 1933 magazine article, "Success and Fame in a Small Town," that Mahoney wrote about White. The Kansas editor termed it "the very nicest piece ever written about me in the same number of words" and sent the writer an inscribed copy of his biography of President Wilson, also some of his later nonfiction works as they appeared.

Mahoney gradually acquired the others, principally at New York book auctions, and until White's death in 1944 sent him any volumes not already signed for his friendly and explanatory inscriptions.

Texas area forecasts

The water-soaked parts of Texas were given a break for the last half of Saturday as cloudy to partly cloudy skies covered the state but only patches of light rain were reported.

Late Friday and early Saturday heavy rains fell on much of West and South Texas.

The National Weather Service issued flash flood watches for many of the counties in the area of heavy rains.

Flooding was expected along the Frio and Nueces Rivers as the rainwaters rolled closer to the coast. Officials warned residents along the two rivers from Callihan downstream to move out of the flood plain.

Poerner sweeps Upton runoff

RANKIN — In the Democratic runoff election Saturday for the party's nomination for an unexpired term as Texas railroad commissioner, John H. Poerner received 104 votes in Upton County to Jerry Sadler's 34.

That race was the only one on the Upton County ballot.

It's Bush over Reese

the district. While he still lost those boxes to Reese, the margins were smaller. For example, he received 51 votes in Terry County in May and 65 this time, and 6 in Bailey County last time, compared to 25 this time.

Although losing some votes in Midland and Lubbock counties, Reese picked up more votes in Andrews, Dawson, Martin, Ector, Castro, Hale, Gaines and Deaf Smith counties. In Ector County, he was the front runner with 1,431 votes, picking up almost 400 more ballots. Bush gathered only 165 votes in Ector, compared to the 196 he received in May.

Reese commented on Bush's one-county win: "I was surprised that the one-county strategy would be that effective in the runoff," he said. "I think it will be difficult to broaden the one-county strategy for November. But it proved effective in the primary and perhaps something can be done between now and November. We'll just have to wait and see. Any time there are two names on a ballot, anything can happen."

Bush Saturday complimented his party organization "for all the sacrifices you have made. We ran better in this race because of the people involved."

Bush said he plans to take a week off before starting to work on his strategy for the general election in November.

EAGLE SCOUT Will Porter, 16, of Midland wears the Eagle Badge his grandfather, Lou Troja, left, received 50 years ago in Baltimore, Md. Troja, then 15, was presented the badge in 1928 by naturalist Dan Beard, Chief Scout of the United States and "one of the finest old men in Scouting," Troja recalled. Flanking young Porter are, left, his grandfather and Scoutmaster Doug Stephenson of the Boy Scouts of America's Troop 233, sponsored by Memorial Christian Church, and, right, his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Bill Porter. Troja gave the badge to his grandson. (Staff Photo) was one of the final ones to report its results. It is the largest county in the district, and therefore, crucial. If Bush got wiped out there, he might be wiped out of the election, despite his overwhelming majority of 4,787 votes to Reese's 1,278 in Midland County.

Taking a break in a side office for awhile was Ms. Krumboltz. She sat in Neil Bush's chair with her feet propped on top of his old roll-top desk, remarking on how tired she was.

"I've been up here working all day," she explained. Her break didn't last long, as she went back to the main room five minutes later to check on more results.

By then, the outcome was becoming obvious. Bush was ahead. He and his wife, Laura, were on their way down to headquarters. More people eased into the small room, most of them keeping one eye on the door for Bush and another on the chalkboard for additional results. Meanwhile, a rock had begun to tune up in the parking lot outside the headquarters.

Bush arrived, made his statement and then he shook hands with the men and hugged the women before leaving to catch an airplane to Lubbock for another speech.

By 10:30 p.m., the supporters finally had started to relax and breathe easier. In fact, things had become so relaxed Midland Police were being asked on the police radio to patrol the area because of loud noises coming from the rock band and because of people standing outside drinking beer.

"Things are getting rowdy there" was the airwaves comment.

Short closer to Hance's senate berth

By LEE JONES
Associated Press Writer

Rep. Bob Vale of San Antonio, generally regarded as a liberal, won nomination Saturday to the Texas Senate seat from which voters ousted conservative Sen. Frank Lombardino in May.

Former Rep. E. L. Short of Tahoka, captured the Democratic nomination for the Senate seat that Sen. Kent Hance of Lubbock is giving up for a congressional race.

Vale, a seven-term House veteran, downed attorney Phil Hardberger, 17,324 to 14,333, on the basis of unofficial returns.

Short, a rancher who served four two-year terms in the House, defeated Texas Tech Regent Don Workman 14,176 to 13,151. Short will meet Rep. Joe Robbins, R-Lubbock, in the general election.

Vale and Hardberger met in the run-off after knocking off Lombardino, a conservative ex-policeman who owns a debt collection service, in the May 6 primary.

Dr. B. B. Markette is the Republican candidate.

Two black representatives from Dallas, who got more than their share of attention during the 1977 session, won their run-offs and have no general election opponents.

Rep. Sam Hudson, who fasted for several weeks to protest the slow movement of his bills in committees, defeated Wes Pool, son of the late former Congressman Joe Pool.

The House "Rookie of the Year," Rep. Clay Smothers, was apparent winner, on the basis of unofficial returns, over automotive worker Charles Rose, also black. Smothers delighted white conservatives with his legislative speeches, such as the one against creation of a state park in a Houston ghetto. He said it would be a haven for winos.

Rep. Ernestine Glossbrenner, D-Alice, who carried the bill repealing the requirement that voters sign their ballot stubs, was apparent victor over Homero Canales, also of Alice.

A black first-term House member, Leonard Briscoe of Fort Worth, met apparent defeat at the hands of another black, Reby Cary, director of minority affairs at the University of Texas at Arlington.

With one box out of 18 still uncounted, Cary's lead over Briscoe was 1,905 to 1,275 in unofficial returns.

Another black from Fort Worth, nursing home owner Bobby Webber, won a newly created House seat from Tarrant County by defeating Roy Brooks, 1,774 to 987.

Bo Crawford, dean of students at Lamar University, defeated former Rep. Chester Slay, 3,628 to 1,880, for the seat being vacated by Rep. Pike Powers, D-Beaumont.

Crawford is Powers' brother-in-law. He will face Republican Robert Wortham of Beaumont in the general election.

Few votes cast

GARDEN CITY — Democrats turned out in small numbers in Glasscock County Saturday to give John H. Poerner 20 votes to Jerry Sadler's 9 in the race for State Railroad Commissioner. The Poerner-Sadler runoff was the only race facing county voters here.

Stenholm, Poerner win big runoff victories

By The Associated Press

Former state representative Mickey Leland won the Democratic nomination to represent retiring Rep. Barbara Jordan's Houston district Saturday as Texas voters went to the polls in moderate numbers to choose candidates in six congressional posts.

Leland defeated Anthony Hall, who had placed second in last month's primary showdown with 12,312 votes to Hall's 8,357 in incomplete returns at 10:30 p.m. CDT.

Rep. John Young, 61, was in a see-saw battle to continue his 22-year stint in Congress against former state representative Joe Wyatt of Bloomington. Young was the only incumbent involved in the runoffs.

Young had 27,750 while Wyatt had garnered 27,545.

Reps. Olin Teague, George Mahon, Bob Poague and Omar Burleson, all Democrats, did not seek re-election.

In another extremely close contest, Phil Gramm and Rod Godbey were battling for the nomination in Teague's 6th District. Gramm tallied 23,145 and Godbey 20,849.

Charles Stenholm beat A.L. "Dusty" Rhodes in the 17th District for the right to succeed Burleson. Stenholm pulled in 46,598 ballots to Rhode's 22,879.

In the 11th District, Marvin Leath was leading with 39,899 votes to Lane Denton's 32,967.

John Poerner, who started his campaign unknown to most voters, won a landslide victory overaging, longtime political figure Jerry Sadler to become the Democratic nominee for a place on the powerful Texas Railroad Commission.

Poerner, 45, who was appointed to the commission in January by Gov. Dolph Briscoe to serve until the election, will face Republican James W. Lacy, 53, of Midland in the November general election to serve two years remaining on the term of Jim Langdon, who retired.

Sadler, who led the May 6 primary balloting but did not receive a majority to win, suffered the same fate in 1976 when he won the first Democratic primary for a Railroad Commission seat but lost in the runoff.

The Railroad Commission regulates the oil, gas and trucking industries in Texas.

In the Tyler area, there was a Democratic runoff for chief justice of the 12th Court of Civil Appeals between Larry Starr and J.W. Summers.

And, there were local runoff races in which Democrats completed nomination of two candidates for the state Senate and 13 for the Texas House. There were no Republican runoff races for legislative posts.

Here are the latest returns from the Texas Election Bureau as of 9:10 p.m.

Chance of more rain forecast

The heavy clouds hanging over Midland Saturday began to break up by the end of election day, letting the sun show its face. But the weatherman said the possibility of thunderstorms is not over yet.

Following Friday's relative deluge, the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport recorded 1.12 inches of rainfall, the largest amount Midland has had in a single day since Aug. 11, 1976, when 1.29 inches fell on the city. So far this year, the city has had 3.74 inches of precipitation.

And there continues to be a chance for thunderstorms in this area, mainly during afternoons and nights through Monday. Probability of rain is 20 percent today and 40 percent tonight. Skies are expected to be considerably cloudy during the mornings, becoming partly cloudy in the afternoons through Monday.

The high temperature today should reach the lower 80s, while the low temperature tonight should fall to the lower 60s. Monday's high temperature is expected to rise to the middle 80s. Southeasterly winds should be at 10 to 15 mph through tonight.

Saturday's high temperature was 78 degrees, according to the weather service, while the overnight low temperature was 56 degrees.

It appeared that the rainstorms also had passed most area towns, with reports indicating that, although skies still were somewhat cloudy Saturday, the sun was shining through and temperatures were warming up.

Short topples Workman in senate race

In the race for Democratic nomination to the 28th State Senate District seat, E.L. Short beat Don Workman on Saturday by a margin of 14,173 to 12,151. That Senate district includes Andrews, Dawson, Ector and Martin among its 12 counties.

Workman carried only Lubbock, Crosby and Cochran counties.

Largest voter turnout was in Lubbock County, which Workman carried by 5,659 to 4,021. Andrews County went for Short by 345 to 224; Dawson County by 399 to 343; Ector County by 3,055 to 1,943 and Martin County by 538 to 141.

Short will face Republican State Rep. Joe Robbins in the November general election to determine who will replace State Sen. Kent Hance, Democratic nominee to the 19th Congressional District seat.

Incumbent County Judge Bill Tune beat his challenger Frankie Boyd with 2,708 votes to 2,659 for the nomination to keep his position.

New book offers 'good' advice from bygone era

By LEE ESCAZE
The Washington Post

NEW YORK — A lover should not hold his bride by the ears. Clergymen should not be fed on the choicest delicacies lest their other "appetite" be inflamed. A four-leaf clover slipped into a man's shoe will make him forever adore the woman who placed it there.

If you didn't know these simple rules pertaining to sex, manners and morals, it is because you haven't learned from the past — but there is still time to take a quick course.

A woman can learn the almost forgotten secret of Hesse and Oldenburgh, where many a man's heart was captured by a girl who cleverly cut her finger and allowed a few drops of blood to mingle with his glass of beer. (In Bohemia, bat's blood could be used by any who flinched from pain — and had a supply of bats.)

Men can still be saved from the tragedy of marrying a woman with a forehead shaped like ther own. And parents can be reminded that it is dangerous to whip children lest they come to like it.

This lore is contained in "This Was Sex," a collection by Sandy Teller of advice available in the late 19th and early 20th centuries on subjects now the province of advisers from Playboy and Penthouse. The advice comes from an era in which there was more action in moviehouses than on their screens, but it shares one mind — set with much of today's advice — it is written, in the main, for men.

The playboy, however, is the arch villain of whom all good company must beware. "Compared with his crime, murder is innocence. Even hanging forever would be too good for him," the author of "Sexual Science" states of the Seducer.

But just when everything seems clear, the author of "Sexual Ethics: A study of Borderland Questions" counsels men that it is not always easy to tell whether a woman's resistance is feigned or real.

"Whether the use of a certain degree of violence will arouse the most ardent passion of love, or the most furious anger . . . whether he will find himself in paradise or in the penitentiary," is a question on which the reader receives no clear instruction.

Other subjects were easier for our ancestors' advisers.

To lose weight, women are told to have lots of children, drink squawvine tea and sleep sparingly.

In this corsetless age it is a relief to read that we are free of one damnable habit. Tight-lacing, it was said, was more destructive than those other destructive hyphenated habits: tobacco-chewing, liquor-drinking and pork-eating.

One adviser hazarded the theory that it was because of their tightly corseted waists that women screamed when they saw a mouse. Although his research data are weak, it is true that today's unlaced women don't do much screaming at mice.

Teller has chosen from a wide variety of sources.

You can learn everything from why women are't good at clapping their hands to the dangers of having sex soon after eating.

There is even a motto for young men: "The mind away from sexual thoughts and the hands away from the parts."

100,000 Kolwezi blacks reportedly without food

By SERGE SCHMEMANN

KINSHASA, Zaire (AP) — When the first French Foreign Legion parachutes billowed over Kolwezi, blacks rushed into the streets cheering, "We're free, the Cubans are here," says an American who was there.

But when they realized their mistake, many fled to the bush, fearing government reprisal after the French paratroops drove the rebel invaders out of Kolwezi, mining center of Zaire's southeastern Shaba Province.

Authorities in neighboring Zambia say 300 black families have fled the Kolwezi area to escape what they think will be a government "reign of terror." An estimated 100,000 other Kolwezi blacks are reported to be without food and work, and are living off corn flour supplied by the Red Cross.

Before the French troops came on May 19, 132 whites were killed, most of them Belgian and French. The Red Cross said 588 blacks died during the week Kolwezi was held by the rebels, who are Lunda tribesmen based in nearby Angola and trained, according to Western reports, by Cubans. Cuba denies this.

The natives of the area also are Lundas and thus feel ties with the rebels, many of whom were driven into exile in the early 1960s after unsuccessful attempts to break their province free of Zaire.

France, Belgium and the United States all took part in the Kolwezi aftermath, mostly in the airlift evacuation of foreigners who ran mines in which the blacks worked.

The American who reported the blacks' mistaken jubilation over the French air drop, 42-year-old Rich Black, formerly of Los Angeles, said he has been held prisoner by the rebels. Another American, Bill Starkey of Boise, Idaho, who was shot in the side by rebels, said he had seen insurgents mixing freely with the townspeople of Kolwezi.

Zaire's President Mobutu Sese Seko, with help from the West, has managed to keep the Shaba linked with Kinshasa, his northern capital, in order to retain the province's fabulous supplies of copper, zinc and cobalt.

The earnings from Shaba's mines have fed extravagant projects and ill-fated development plans here, 900 miles northwest of Kolwezi. The ore production has made Mobutu and a handful of his zfriends the wealthiest men in the sprawling central African nation.

Few of the benefits appear to have found their way back to the Lunda people. Instead the black miners of Kolwezi, Lubumbashi and Likasi and other mining centers live in ghetto neighborhoods that border comfortable white areas.

Mobutu took members of northern tribes and replanted them in the south to maintain control in Kolwezi. They were ill-trained, lacked discipline and, observers said, since they were not often paid, they often shook down townspeople for money. When the rebels invaded through Zambia, government troops were not prepared to defend Kolwezi and instead joined the invaders, evacuees said.

According to other evacuee accounts, the residents joined rebels in looting and killing.

Some observers said the rebels killed the whites not because of their color, but because they ran the state-owned mines and were a symbol of Mobutu's regime.

278 guerrillas killed by French, Chadian troops

N'DJAMENA, Chad (AP) — French and Chadian troops, with French air support, killed nearly 300 guerrillas in a three-day battle this week, military sources said Saturday.

They said the battle, fought in a broad palm grove near Ati, 320 miles east of N'Djamena, ended Friday with the most significant rebel defeat since the start of the Chad civil war a decade ago. The rebel approach had threatened a possible encirclement of this capital city.

Bodies of 278 guerrillas were counted in the grove, the sources said. Hundreds of Soviet-designed weapons purportedly seized from the rebels, including anti-tank and anti-aircraft rockets and AK-47 rifles, were shown to reporters in Ati.

Since the start of the civil war, guerrillas of the Libyan-backed Chad National Liberation Front — FROLINAT — have overrun about four-fifths of the landlocked African nation that is nearly twice the size of Texas. The former French colony received its independence in 1960.

All-African force favored by Carter

WASHINGTON (AP) — A high-level American team, authorized to pledge President Carter's support for backing the deployment of an all-African defense force in war-torn Zaire, was to arrive in Paris on Sunday.

The delegation, led by David Newsom, director of political affairs in the State Department, will take part in a French-sponsored meeting on Monday. The session will deal with the Zairian crisis in particular and African stability in general.

Meanwhile, Defense Department officials said Saturday that U.YS. Air Force jet transport planes have started moving into position to fly French troops and equipment out of battle-scarred Shaba Province in southern Zaire and to airlift Moroccan and possibly other African units to replace them.

A total of 11 C-141 intercontinental transports left four U. S. mainland bases — McGuire Air Force Base, N.J., Norton Air Force Base, Calif., Charleston, Air Force Base, S.C., and McChord, Wash. The officials, declining to be identified publicly, said the first aircraft already had landed at Agadir, Morocco, to load Moroccan troops.

The first U. S. planes left the United States late Friday night and others were scheduled to fly across the Atlantic Saturday and Sunday. Others will fly to two airbases in Zaire, at Kinshasa and Lumumbashi, to pick up French legionnaires and fly them to the island of Corsica in the Mediterranean.

Two killed in attack on mission

SALISBURY, Rhodesia (AP) — Guerrillas shot and killed two missionaries in an attack on a remote Roman Catholic mission near Rhodesia's southwestern border with Botswana, the military command said Saturday.

A communique identified the victims as Brother Pieter Geyerman, 36, and Brother Andrew von Arx, 45, and said church authorities in Rome had been notified. Officials said Geyerman was German and Von Arx was Swiss.

The men were killed Friday as they slept on the veranda of the Embakwe Mission in the Plumtree district, the communique said.

The Catholic Bishop of Bulawayo, The Rev. Henry Karlen, traveled to the mission on Saturday and local police said the remainder of the mission staff was being evacuated.

Police said church officials closed the mission school, attended by 400 black students, 10 days ago "after threats had been made against the mission." They gave no details of the threats.

The mission is on the edge of a tribal area heavily infiltrated by guerrillas of Joshua Nkomo's Zimbabwe African People's Revolutionary Army operating from bases in the neighboring black states of Botswana and Zambia. Zimbabwe is the African name for Rhodesia.

More than 20 white missionaries, mostly Catholics, have been killed in the six-year war waged by nationalist guerrillas who are trying to bring down the Salisbury government.

eachings of Confucius regaining favor in China

JAY MATHEWS
Washington Post

ONG KONG — After suffering a bad press for the last several rs in the country of his birth, na's most famous thinker, Confu-, is making a comeback.

he founder of Chinese literature been dead for 2,457 years, and, way, he was prone to be skeptical ublic opinion during his years as dviser to the dukes and princes of Middle Kingdom in the 6th cen- B.C.

till, it might have curled his beard ear himself described, as he was ecent years, as a "demon" and a nking corpse." As he said him-, "without feelings of respect, t is there to distinguish men from st?"

mong China's 800 million to 900 lion people, particularly those of older generation, there are ap-ently those who objected to the nbol of the world's richest ancient ture being labeled as "a spokes-n for the decadent slave-owning stocracy." Now, as the dust has tled from the purge of the most matic members of Peking's mod--day Communist hierarchy, Con-ius' admirers have grasped the portunity and persuaded the offi-cial People's Daily to acknowledge that even the late Chairman Mao Tse-Tung admired Confucius' ability to "inquire into everything."

For the scientific socialists now running China and looking for a practical way to restore its economy after years of ideological strife, there is much to admire in the old sage's advice: "The requisites of government are that there be sufficiency of food, sufficiency of military equipment, and the confidence of the people in their ruler."

Even filial piety, the respect for parents, which Confucius enshrined, and the youthful Red Guards of the 1960s defamed, is creeping back into its place as the most Chinese of virtues. The closet Confucianists now influencing the Chinese media have even attached it to Mao, once the symbol of youthful rebellion.

Mao, in his first and only biographical interview, told American journalist Edgar Snow in 1936 of his distaste for his father, an ill-tempered man who "frequently beat both me and my brothers."

"I learned that when I defended my rights by open rebellion my father relented," Mao said, "but when I remained meek and submissive he only cursed and beat me the more."

Thus a Europen journalist expressed surprise recently when he saw a huge picture of Mao's father prominently displayed at the memorial museum in Mao's hometown, Shaoshan. "The chairman had great trouble with his father, didn't he?" the visitor asked. "Oh no," replied a Chinese guide. "He was always a filial son."

Recently the People's Daily printed an account by Gen. Lo Jui-ching, one of the Red Guards' prime targets during the late 1960s, of an incident in Mao's life hushed up until now.

Overt reverence toward deceased parents and ancestors was a Confucian virtue that had fallen into disrepute. To emphasize this, Red Guards destroyed thousands of shrines, including one raised in Confucius' honor in his home town.

But when Mao paid a visit to Shaoshan in 1959, Lo recalled, without a word he led his entourage up a hill and "came to the site of a grave. We did not know until we read the inscription that it was the grave of our leader's parents. He went up and bowed. We all did the same. We were distressed that we had not asked our chairman about this trip. We had not taken a wreath with us, not even a white paper flower. Luckily, a young man among us was quick-witted. He picked some pine twigs, tied them into a bundle and let our chairman place it on the tomb.

"Upon our return, Chairman Mao said: 'We Communists are thoroughgoing materialists. We do not believe in ghosts or deities. But still we must acknowledge the fact that we owe our birth to our parents, and our education to our party, comrades, teachers and friends. The next time I come back, I will pay them another visit.'"

Confucius, in his latest reincarnation, is no longer a villian, but just a hapless fall guy for the infamous "gang of four," the purged dogmatic group led by Mao's wife, Chiang Ching.

"They made a clay man out of Confucius, to be molded into different shapes as they changed the target of attack," said the Peking University Communist Party committee in the People's Daily. "They called their trumped-up charges truth which was not be be questioned, and in a murky parody of criticizing Confucianism, they misrepresented correct statements of party leaders as reactionary and false."

As Confucius could have told them: "They who know the truth are not equal to those who love it, and they who love it are not equal to those who delight in it."

conomists offer new hope ood price hikes may slow

WASHINGTON (AP) Even as beef prices ntinued to soar in May, vernment economists e holding out new hope t the current wave of d price inflation may easing.

The Agriculture Dertment said Friday t choice-grade beef, e most common type in permarkets, rose anher 4 percent in May.

The average price of l cuts of beef was alost $1.68 a pound, up om nearly $1.62 a ound in April and $1.38 pound a year ago.

The Labor Department d reported on Wednesay that beef prices rose percent in April, but latest report indicated ings may be improv-ng.

While wholesale prices ose 0.7 percent, the holesale price for food ose at a slower 0.5 perent rate, the smallest crease this year. The rm price of food didn't crease at all.

"It could be the harbinger of reduced food price nflation to come that we ave been looking for," ald William Cox, the eputy chief economist t the Commerce Department. "I find it very ncouraging that prices t the raw food level are tabilizing."

However, he cautioned hat the improvement on he wholesale level may ot show up immediately t the supermarket. "We till have some food price pressure to work off at the consumer level. Clearly we haven't seen the end of the bad news at the consumer level."

The Carter administration has predicted that the increase in consumer food prices, already up by 5.5 percent this year, should begin to ease, probably beginning in June.

In other economic news, the department said unemployment rose slightly from 6 to 6.1 percent in May. Cox said it is possible that it could rise again in coming months. He predicted the jobless rate would remain at about 6 percent at the end of the year.

Abuses, executions send Moslem families fleeing Buddhist Burma

By DENIS D. GRAY

TEKNAF ROAD, Bangladesh (AP) — Tens of thousands of Moslem refugees are fleeing predominantly Buddhist Burma, telling of beatings, rape and executions.

More than 165,000 have crossed the border into Bangladesh in the last five weeks, and 2,000-3,000 are arriving daily, swelling nine squalid camps along the Teknaf Road.

There are fears one million or more Moslems eventually will join the exodus in which officials here say 300 refugees, mostly children, already have died.

Burma's government says the refugees, Rohingyea Moslems of the rugged northwestern Arakan region, are illegal aliens. But the Moslems say resentful Buddhists want their land and businesses.

While the accounts of the refugees cannot be confirmed, most tell similar tales of Burmese soldiers entering their villages, beating them with rifle butts and sticks, raping women and executing men.

One group of Moslem religious leaders who fled said local toughs in Arakan had defiled mosques, rolled cigarettes from pages of the holy Koran, and banned everyone from making pilgrimages to Mecca.

One refugee, Saidur Rahman, said Burmese soldiers raped his sister and pregant wife. Another, Hamad Hussein, said Burmese soldiers raped a group of young Moslem women and shot 15 or 16 men in his village.

They are among the legions fleeing Burma in bare feet or in boats, preyed upon by thugs and robbers and shouldering what's left of their belongings in twin baskets at the ends of bamboo poles.

Chilly monsoon rains, hunger and disease strike at the ragged refugee columns and when they get to the Teknaf camps they find a teeming rural slum of flimsy little shelters.

Thousands still live in the open, under trees. Others simply burrow a few inches into the earth, put some mats or cardboard over their heads and wait as the monsoon waters rise.

The food rations are meager, consisting chiefly of wheat flour and biscuits. Water is in short supply and health officials fear it may become contaminated with human waste.

Malnutrition, malaria and a variety of stomach ailments, some fatal, have spread and there are unconfirmed reports of cholera.

Talks between Bangladesh and Burma on the plight of the refugees start next week, but diplomats in the Bangladesh capital of Dacca are pessimistic about Burma taking the Moslems back.

Bangladesh, already severely overpopulated and with a per-capita income of about $80 a year, appears to have brought in essentials for bare survival in the camps.

The U.N. commissioner for refugees has appealed for $15.5 million in aid, and relief groups have begun to funnel supplies throtugh the Bangladesh government, which needs $850 million yearly in aid itself.

Tax revolt presents challenge to Brown

By DOUG WILLIS

SACRAMENTO, Calif. (AP) — Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr., a Democrat with presidential ambitions, faces a major challenge on primary day next week — not from a candidate, but from a tax-relief plan.

Brown has turned his attention from the eight unknowns challenging him to Proposition 13, which could make his political life miserable by reducing revenue from local property taxes by 57 percent statewide.

The plan, on which there is a referendum alongside Tuesday's primaries, is the brain child of Howard Jarvis, a salty-tongued, 75-year-old former newspaper publisher, munitions maker.

Five independent polls showy would be reassessed at market value.

The effect would be to cut property tax revenues for cities, counties and schools from $12 billion annually to about $5 billion — putting Brown, or his successor, in a no-win situation.

Brown could ask for a state tax increase to cover the lost local revenues with state aid. Or, he says, he could allow payroll cuts so severe that there would be an economic recession in the state.

Jarvis says the choices are not that drastic — that savings could be accomplished simply by cutting fat out of government and limiting services to essentials such as police and fire protection.

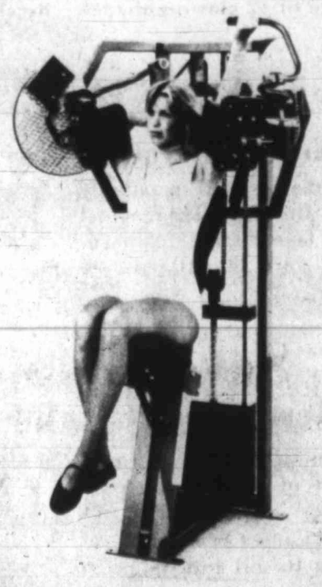

But Brown and other officials say layoffs could reach 300,000 employees, libraries and fire stations would close, hefty fees would be imposed on parks, garbage and other services, and classrooms would have to double up to operate with thousands fewer teachers.

Brown favors Proposition 8, a more moderate tax cut plan which would allow residential property to be taxed at different rates from other types of property and which would implement a bill passed by the legislature cutting residential property taxes by about 32 percent.

Ethiopia struggles in severe famine

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — Up to one million persons are starving in Ethiopia, the Ethiopian government radio said today, in the worst famine to hit the war-scarred East African nation since 1973 when 200,000 people reportedly died.

The radio said in a broadcast monitored here that the current famine has taken 47 lives in Ethiopia's Wallo province, north of the capital of Addis Ababa.

The province's western highlands are in the grip of a drought, accentuated by deforestation and constant climatic changes that have caused soil erospon and acute food shortages, the radio said.

"Farmers in the highland areas have long relied upon sorghum crops, but are now eating poisonous herbs," the radio said. "This has resulted in serious illness."

Along with the reference to poisonous herbs, the radio attributed deaths to ergotism, a disease caused by eating grain infected by the ergot fungus.

It said the situation in Wallo, focal point of starvation in the 1973 famine, has been aggravated by guerrilla attacks by the opposition Ethiopian Democratic Union that have destroyed health centers and schools in the area.

Birchers aim at teens

BY TOM GARDNER

RENO, Nev. (AP) — For one week this summer the John Birch Society will turn a scenic camp on the shores of Lake Tahoe into a recruiting ground in hopes of converting teen-agers to its conservative philosophy.

"We hope to attract 125 to 175 young people this summer," said Charles Armour, district governor for the society. His district, based at San Marino, Calif., covers 13 Western states.

"Most of the youngsters who come here are not members of the John Birch Society," he said in a telephone interview. "I'd guess not more than half of them come from John Birch families. It's just that people, for one reason and another, are paying more attention to us."

Armour said he did not know how many youngsters had been recruited into the society during the 11 years the group has been putting on the summer camps. But last year, for example, he said about 20 of the 80 non-members who attended signed up.

The initiation fee is $48 for adults and $24 for junior members.

Armour said the recent Senate debate over the Panama Canal treaty has generated more interest in the society.

This will be the fourth year the society has held its summer camp at the 4-H campground near Stateline, Nev. — a few hundred yards from the glittering, high-rise casinos. The young people who attend the camps range in age from 14 to 20. Most are from northern California.

"We teach them the heritage they have in the whole American system — a heritage of a limited government and free enterprise economics — and we hopefully give them enough articulate ability to defend the American system against opposition."

Armour charged that schools today are not teaching the basic American tradition. Instead, he said children are being taught it is the responsibility of government to step in and resolve social and economic issues.

"I've been a member of the society for 15 years," Armour said, "and it has always been a long-range goal of the society to reduce government intervention. Now, all of a sudden, everybody's against big government."

The youths who attend this summer's camp session Aug. 27-Sept. 2 will spend about five hours a day in classes — listening to Birchers outline their views — and three hours a night at games, inspirational programs and campfires.

The $90 weekly fee is up $5 from last year.

"We oppose inflation, but not very successfully," Armour laughed. The fee often is paid for the youths by other Birch members.

The society has opened 10 summer programs around the nation since the first, at Lake Wenatchee, Wash., began in the late 1960s. The 11th camp will open this summer in Helena, Mont.

THE EXCLUSIVE LISTING

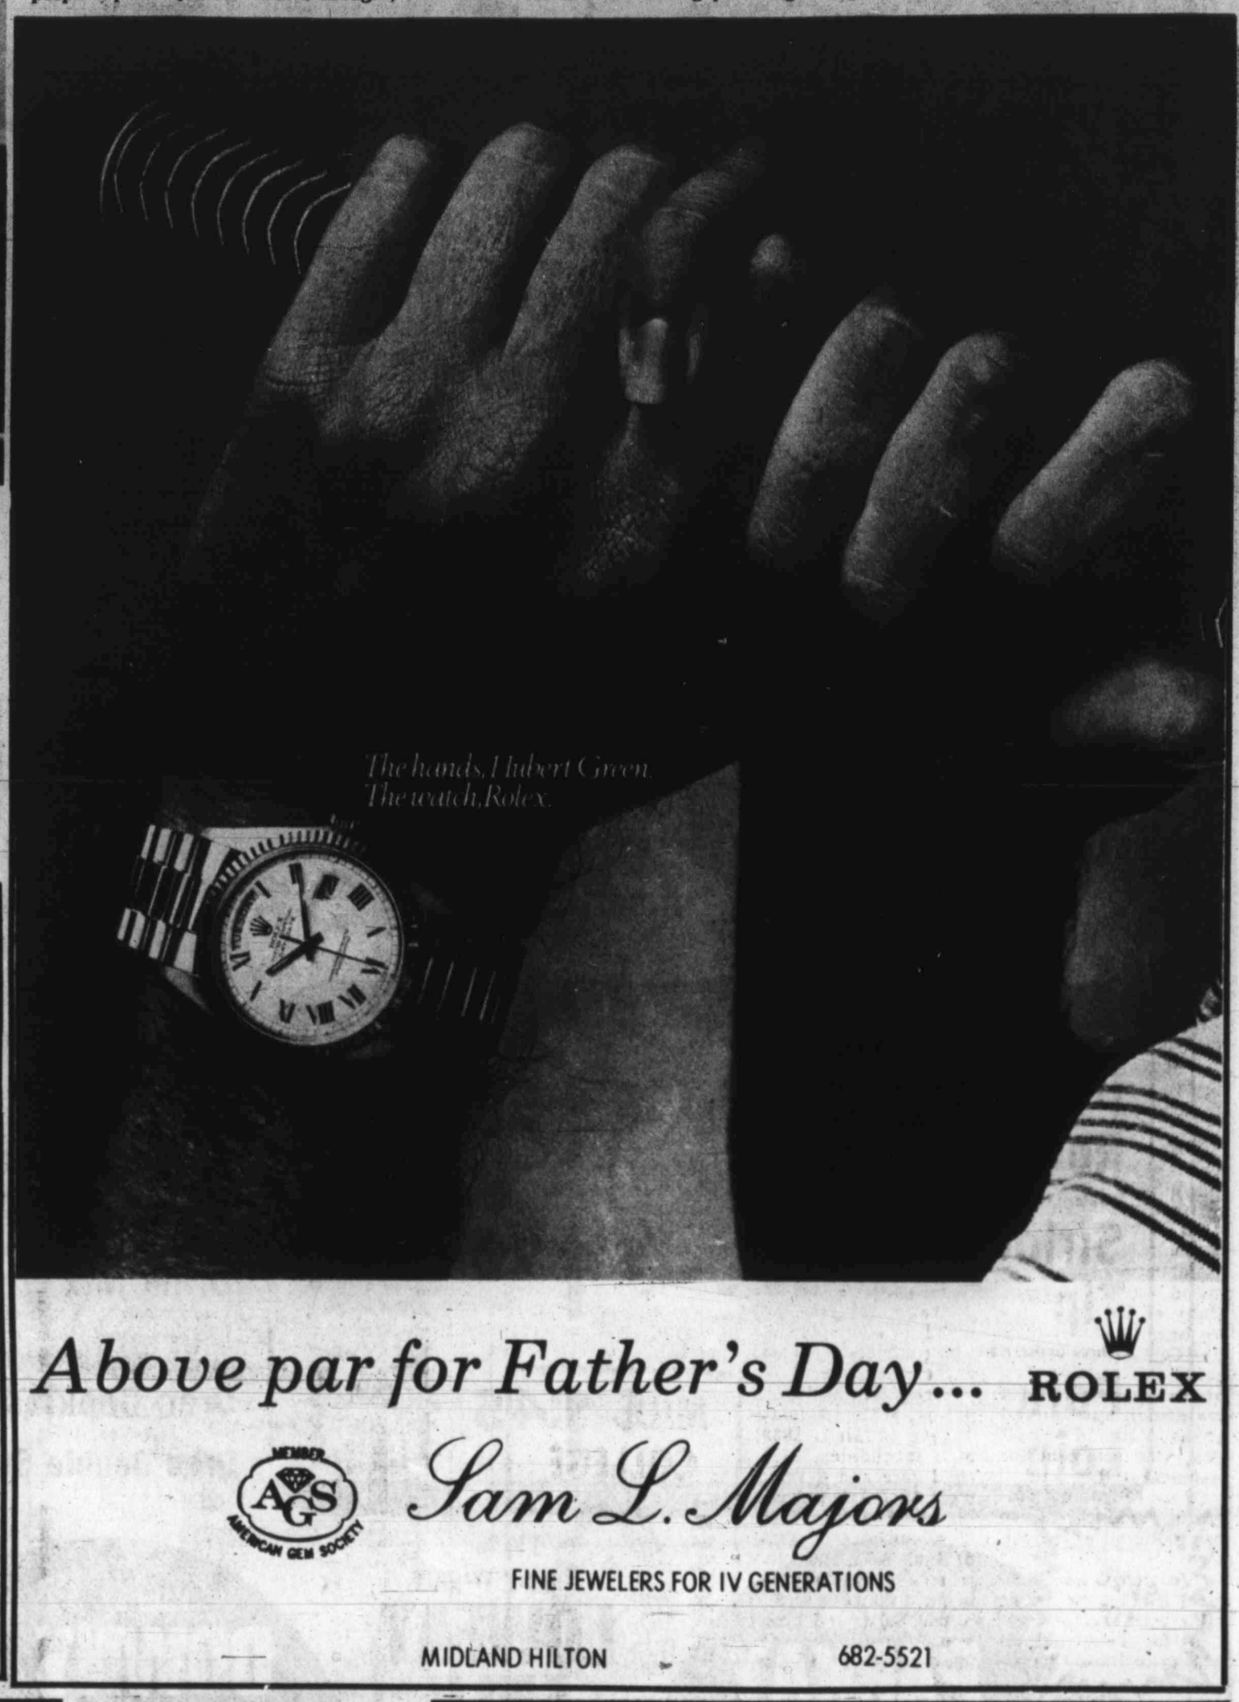

When you make your decision to sell your home, there are a variety of arrangements you can make. But if you are seriously intent on selling your home in the shortest amount of time and at the price you are asking, it would pay you to consider making an "exclusive" listing with your REALTOR.

Under these conditions, the REALTOR will have the added incentive and protection to go all-out in heavily advertising your home and putting all the extra effort possible into selling the property.

When would you want to deal on an exclusive contract basis with your REALTOR? If your home is somewhat special or especially high-priced, it would pay you to work with a REALTOR who has shown a good track record in selling these kinds of homes. He has the right list of prospects and the experience and technique which could be put to your full advantage. Also, if you want the sale of your property to be handled with confidentiality and discreetness, the "exclusive" listing may be the right one for you.

Tourists change Philippines town

By WILLIAM C. MANN

BANAWE, Philippines (AP) — He wore a bright red G-string, feathers on his hat and belt, a red woven vest, a golden earring in one pierced ear and a bone in the other.

"Two pesos," he said through black-and-gold teeth, waving two fingers in front of a tourist's camera. He had learned that outsiders will pay to use their cameras, even if it's just to snap him in his most fashionable clothes.

The old Ifugao Indian's capitalism is symbolic of what's happening in this tiny corner of the world tucked away in the mountains of the northern Philippines and surrounded by 250 square miles of mountainsides terraced milleniums ago for rice-growing.

What's happening is the beginnings of progress, but it's slow in coming.

This was a Saturday morning, market day in Banawe. Just about every family in the population was represented by the people here, some having trundled over six miles of roadless mountains to reach the traditional town's center and spread their wares on the ground.

"The quality is suffering," said Capt. A. J. Lopez of the Philippine constabulary, the local station commander. "The tourists have caused the shopkeepers to emphasize quantity.

"We're only now being affected by tourists, since the new road. Just last month they started sending two buses a day."

The complaint is similar to that in many other tourist-altered Philippine areas, but there's a difference. Lopez said Filipinos more than foreigners are to blame for the deterioration in the weaving, carving and basket-making of the mountain people, probably because many foreigners still are unwilling to make the exhausting trip here.

Those who do, find an expanse of primitive engineering rarely equaled in the world. The Banawe rice terraces, like massive stairsteps from valley floors to mountaintops, stretched end-to-end would reach more than halfway around the globe. Archeologists think a terrace-building migratory people from the Asian mainland brought the technology southward more than 2,000 years ago.

Farmers still till the terraces, using waterfalls as an ingenious irrigation system from top to bottom, in much the same way as their ancestors. But influences from the lowlands could change that.

Via the new road, opened late last year, tourists can come to Banawe direct from Manila, bypassing most of the unpaved mountain roads that in previous years made the one-way passage a full day's journey.

The road is paved and at least two lanes most of the 215-mile course from Manila. National Road 4, the last 28-mile stretch, still has segments of graveled dirt, but an automobile nevertheless can be in Banawe 6½ hours after leaving Manila.

The old pose-for-pesos Ifugao is not unique in Banawe, especially on market day when tribesmen converge on the town. The men are at home in only G-strings, their women in brightly woven sarong skirts and cotton shirts that have largely replaced the traditional open-fronted vests in the interest of 20th-century modesty.

They prove that, despite the influx of lowlanders, modernity remains a rare thing. Only a 28-room hotel and a 60-bed youth hotel, both run by the Philippine Tourism Authority; a cement town hall nearby; a school and a church; and two barracks-style buildings housing the constabulary detachment attest to new construction.

The cream-colored constabulary buildings, built two years ago, were designed to bring progress to the town of 20,000 scattered residents. But that kind of progress is expensive.

Each building has shops on the ground floor, designed to entice the vendors from the open, dusty field where they spread yarn for weaving, dried tobacco and betel leaves for chewing and dried fish and rice for eating. All but a few of the shops are empty.

"We're trying to get them to move into the buildings, but they just can't afford it," Lopez said.

The monthly rental for living and shop quarters is 280 pesos or $37.30, a sum far too expensive for a seller whose roof now consists of burlap rice sacks from the National Grains Authority.

The relatively rich among the Ifugaos are those who have long-horned skulls of carabao, or water buffalo, decorating their wooden huts beneath the sloping grass roofs.

"It proves that you're rich enough to kill your carabao," said a woman who lived in a hut with the grisly decorations.

Vocational training valuable, says TEA

The average monthly salary for vocational or technical graduates one year after completion of their training is $838, according to a recent Texas Education Agency survey of community college vocational-technical graduates in Texas.

"This survey points up what we (at Midland College) have known all along, that those who want to work in skilled technological and vocational areas can command large salaries. Many of the programs we have begun at Midland College have been in response to industry needs for personnel trained in specialized areas," Dr. Marshall Box, vice president for technical studies, said.

Of the 63 training programs surveyed, 23 are being offered at the college.

"Vocational and technical training programs offer very real alternatives for those students who favor these occupations. They also provide ways for persons who are presently employed to upgrade their job skills or train for higher-paying jobs," Box said.

Most of the vocational and technical courses are taught, both day and night, at the college during the two summer sessions, as well as the fall and spring semesters.

In the survey, of the programs offered at Midland College, petroleum technology graduates receive the highest monthly incomes, $1,133. The average salaries per month of other students who complete programs at the college are:

Accounting and computing, $623; associate degree nursing, $869; auto mechanics, $771; child care and development, $543; data processing programmer, $766; diesel mechanics, $866; drafting, $773, and electronics technology (to begin in the fall), $929.

Also, farm and ranch management, $738; fashion design, $600; fashion merchandising, $670; fire protection technology, $1,093; general business, $670; general office clerical, $500; law enforcement, $931; machine shop, $858; mid-management, $991; printing, $580; real estate, $1,125; respiratory therapy (to begin in the fall), $838; stenographic and general secretarial, $519, and welding, $966.

A program in air conditioning and heating probably will be added to the college curriculum later. The average incomes of graduates of this program is $905 per month.

Unstaged Czech reaction to Soviet chief tells much

By MICHAEL DOBBS
Special to the Washington Post

PRAGUE — The Soviet leader, Leonid Brezhnev, received two kinds of welcome last week in Czechoslovakia. The first was a carefully stage-managed reception from a 100,000-strong rent-a-crowd composed of schoolchildren and factory workers who applauded him at the airport and waved banners proclaiming eternal friendship with the Soviet Union.

The second was altogether different. Prevented by the traffic chaos from going home after work, large crowds of Prague citizens lined the streets to stare at the Soviet motorcade. An eerie silence descended as four horn-blaring police cars followed by Brezhnev's tank-like limousine with motorcycle outriders, 33 idential black Chaikas, and finally an ambulance screeched past from one wreath-laying ceremony to the next.

No one waved, no one cheered. They just watched, totally impassively, and gave resigned shrugs and smiles after the motorcade had passed.

IT WAS in a way symbolic of the state of Soviet-Czech relations 10 years after Brezhnev sent a half a million troops to crush Czechoslovakia's eight-month experiment in socialism with a human face. An undemonstrative people accustomed to foreign rule, the Czechs can fairly easily be suppressed and even brought out on the streets by a Communist party which is once again all-powerful. But they cannot be forced to show any enthusiasm for a system of government that runs against their national traditions.

Clearly timed to coincide with the 10th anniversary of the liberalization movement known as the "Prague Spring", the Soviet leader's visit was confirmation that Czechoslovakia has regained its former status as one of the most docile of Soviet satellites. It also revealed several potential trouble-spots for the future — including intellectual opposition, mounting economic problems, and uncertainty over Soviet policy towards Eastern Europe after Brezhnev's death.

WESTERN observers believed the main purpose of the visit, Brezhnev's first since 1973, was political. "Here he is, 10 years after the invasion, returning with a sense of triumph. He is flaunting to the outside world that Czechoslavakia is firmly back in the Soviet orbit — a position which in his mind vindicates the decision to send in troops," commented a senior Western diplomat.

Reflecting this mood of self-congratulation has been a noticeable change in the way both Soviet and Czech leaders talk about the events of August 1968. Once passed over in embarrassed silence, the invasion is now being hailed as proof of "socialist solidarity" and "proletarian internationalism" — both codewords for Moscow domination. The present Czech leader, Gustave Husak (once regarded as a liberal) formally placed on record his government's gratitude for the Soviet Union's "helping hand" in its hour of need.

"The regime here has recently been talking about the invasion much more freely. They foresee there's going to be a good deal of hostile comment on the anniversary itself — and they've decided to meet it head on," remarked a Western analyst.

PART OF the campaign is to stress the way in which life has returned to normal in Czechoslovakia following the liberal upheaval and the subsequent clampdown. The country is being projected as the Soviet Union's staunchest ally — symbol of which was the choice of a Czechoslovak, Major Vladimir Remek, as the first non-Soviet cosmonaut.

Indeed spring 1978 in Prague is marked by a normality of sorts. Scruffy artists squat in the laps of the stone statues of the saints on Charles Bridge and sketch the sun setting behind Hradcany Castle. Two young Czechs fondle a pair of Russian girl tourists in a discotheque — and promise to meet again "in Moscow." This weekend Czech families left the city in droves for their weekend cottages in the Bohemian countryside.

At the same time, Brezhnev's visit provided fresh evidence that supervising this normality is one of the most heavy-handed police apparatuses in Eastern Europe. While posters of the Soviet leader and red flags were being pasted in every shop window shortly before his arrival, over 25 supporters of the Charter 77 human rights group were being picked up by police at their homes. Others claimed they were beaten up by thugs in the streets in an apparent attempt to discourage them from protesting.

As it was, the chartists had to wait until after Brezhnev's departure before issuing a statement accusing the police of continued repression on a day-to-day basis.

THOSE detained during the visit included the playwright Vaclav Havel who earlier this year was given a suspended 14-month jail sentence for allegedly smuggling anti-state propaganda abroad. Probably the country's best-known dramatist, he was one of the chartists' three original spokesmen and like many other talented cultural figures, has now come out in open opposition.

Despite the publicity they receive in the West, the dissident intellectuals pose less of a danger to the regime than growing economic problems. Although skated over in the final communique, the very real fear that Czechoslovakia — once the workshop of the Austro-Hungarian empire — may be losing its competitive position as the most developed of the socialist states together with East Germany was undoubtedly an important item in the talks.

Explained a Western diplomat, "The economy here is the most political subject of all. If the economy goes wrong — and there are signs that it is going wrong — there could be serious trouble for the regime. What little popularity Husak has is based on his ability to provide bread and circuses for the population. If that goes, his position will become very difficult."

MOST worrying of all for the Czech rulers is the Soviet refusal to continue subsidizing the Czech economy through supplies of relatively cheap energy. Not only has the Soviet Union announced it cannot continue to expand oil deliveries at the previous rate (already forcing Czechoslovakia to look to the Middle East) but by 1980 the price of Soviet oil will be phased up to the world level.

This decision is affecting all the Eastern bloc countries but could be critical in Czechoslovakia's case since its economy has traditionally relied even more heavily than the others on cheap energy. It was hardly a coincidence that accompanying Brezhnev was the Soviet minister for power generation and electrification, Pyotr Neporozhny, who discussed the development of nuclear power with Czech officials.

Finally, Brezhnev's visit to Czechoslovakia is seen as his endorsement of the leadership of President Husak who took over as Communist Party first secretary from his reformist predecessor Alexander Dubcek (now working as a humble clerk in Bratislava) in April 1969. He described Husak as "an outstanding son of the Czechoslovak people" and praised him for following "a correct policy."

This identification of Husak with Brezhnev, which was reinforced by street posters showing the two men firmly shaking hands, has itself raised questions over whether he also will receive the support of Brezhnev's successors. After all, Stalin's death in 1953 led to sweeping changes throughout Eastern Europe, involving the dismissal of hardline leaders and culminating in popular upheavals in Hungary and Poland.

CZECHOSLOVAKIA resisted the de-Stalinization process longest but ironically it was withdrawal of Soviet support rather than intellectual ferment or even economic difficulties that finally toppled the former Czech leader Antonin Novotny in January 1968 and paved the way for the Prague spring.

Few Czechs or foreign observers care to predict what will happen in Czechoslovakia after Brezhnev's death, since it largely depends on who his successor is and what policies he follows. Brezhnev himself, who at 71 appeared tired and wooden, clearly thinks Husak is the best man to keep the various factions in the Czech leadership together. A more hardline Soviet leader might be tempted to support a more obviously pro-Soviet politician such as the ideologist Vasil Bilak.

Gleason 'fine' after surgery

CHICAGO (AP) — Entertainer Jackie Gleason underwent six hours of open heart surgery Saturday and was reported "doing fine."

A team including two cardiac surgeons stripped a vein from Gleason's leg to bypass narrowing blood vessels on the surface of his heart. A spokeswoman at Michael Reese Hospital described the procedure as a triple bypass operation.

The surgery began at 7:30 a.m. and was completed shortly before 1:30 p.m., spokeswoman Rita Goldman said. Gleason had been described in "good" condition before undergoing the surgery. He had asked that the operation be kept secret until after it had begun.

Gleason, 62, was in Chicago, starring in "Sly Fox," a stage play that was to tour other cities after completing its run here June 17. The tour has been canceled.

He was admitted to the hospital May 26 but was released six hours later after an electrocardiogram showed normal results.

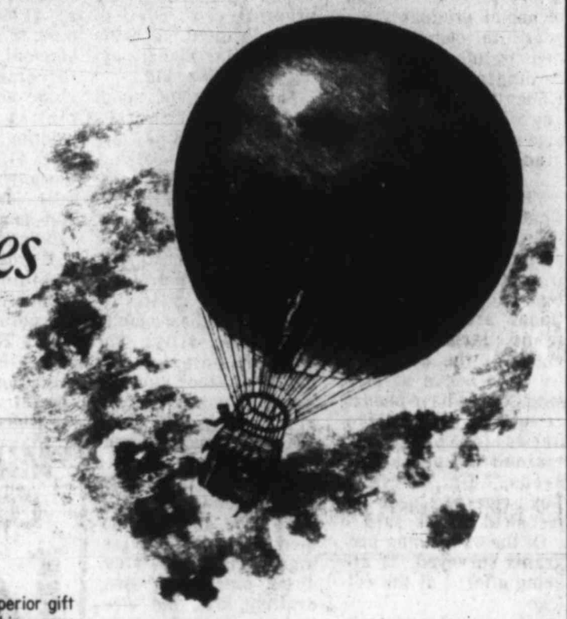

He returned to the hospital at 6:30 a.m. last Sunday, suffering from chest pains. Ms. Goldman said he recorded an abnormal EKG at that time.

Drainage could hamper development

By LANA CUNNINGHAM

On May 9, 1968, parts of Midland were flooded after a storm dumped several inches of rain on the city in a few hours.

Many expensive homes required thousands of dollars in work to repair the damage caused by the floodwaters.

Rains the past two days are reminiscent of that time, but the same problems with drainage are not occurring. A drainage channel parallel to Wadley Avenue, connecting with Midland Draw, was dug after the 1968 flood to control water flowing down from the north.

Since that channel was dug, Midland has been expanding northward; and the city of Midland now is looking at possible problems with drainage that could occur north of that channel, in the area of FM 868. A drainage study of that area was approved by the City Council at its last meeting, according to Fred Baker, director of public utilities.

Many people are building homes in the region under study, and a savings and loan association has purchased a tract of about 40 to 50 acres for development along FM 868, he said.

Although part of the area is not within city limits, Baker said the city wants to establish more drainage before any more development is done there.

Midland Draw and Scharbauer Draw are natural drains, but they have not been sufficient, with the 1968 flood being one example, Baker said. The more the northern area around Midland Draw develops, the less sufficient it will be, he added. "Water drains a lot faster in an area where you build houses and pave streets than it does on flat ground, which will soak up the water. By improving the drainage in the form of a channel, you can contain the water and keep it from creating problems."

The problems 10 years ago came in the northern section of town in the 1200 block of Country Club Drive, a Kimberlea section and a section around Wadley-Barron Park, where houses were flooded. Many downtown businesses and basements in some other buildings also were flooded.

The drainage study will focus on the area north of FM 868. It will attempt "to determine how much protection can be given for how much money," Baker said. "It is easier to obtain rights of way out there (around FM 868) now before the land is cut up for houses and subdivisions."

The Saddle Club development north of FM 868 is one which is partly in the city and partly in the county. According to Richard Hennessy, director of planning and development with the city, the houses in Saddle Club North with the large tracts of land are outside of the city. An area known to have a higher density, or more residences per acre, is within city limits. It is known as Saddle Club South.

Those houses considered to be outside the city limits have no specific building codes to meet, said J.B. Keaton of the city Inspections and Permits Department. Houses in the Saddle Club South addition are in the city and must follow all city building codes, including providing proper drainage, he said.

Saddle Club North soon may be part of the city, Hennessy said. That area has not been platted, but it is expected to be platted soon, with the information to be submitted to the city subdivision authority.

While the northern development is not entitled to city services, such as garbage and sewer, Baker said the home owners provided for their own services when the houses were being constructed.

The drainage study will help in future city planning, Hennessy said. "As additional areas are developed, we (the city) will know what the drainage needs are and can go ahead with plans to meet them. This is the logical way to do it, at least for planning purposes."

Gen. Rahman is elected

DACCA, Bangladesh (AP) — Maj. Gen. Ziaur Rahman, head of state and commander of the armed forces, was the overwhelming victor Sunday in the first direct presidential election in the seven-year history of Bangladesh.

Unofficial results reported by Radio Bangladesh with about 70 percent of the polling centers reporting gave Zia 10.7 million votes to 2.9 million for his chief rival, retired Gen. Mohammad Ataul Ghani Osmani.

"It's a total victory," said an official of the Information Ministry.

Moulana Khabiruddin Ahmed, who campaigned on his claim that he could restore sexual virility to the aged, was in third place with 46,000 votes. Five other candidates had only a handful of votes from the Saturday balloting.

Official results for the five-year presidential term were expected later Sunday.

More than 38 million persons in the nation of 85 million were eligible to vote.

State wants out

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN—State government is looking at doing what quite a few wage-earners might like to have the option of doing—dropping out of the Social Security System.

No decision to do that has been made, but the possibility is under study by a committee of the Legislative Council chaired by Sen. W. E. "Pete" Snelson, Midland.

Approval of the committee's study was given by the council, the research arm of the Legislature, at its meeting here Thursday. Members of the committee, besides Snelson, are Reps. Hamp Atkinson, Texarkana; Charles Finnell, Holliday; Senfronia Thompson, Houston; and Danny Hill, Amarillo.

Dropping out of Social Security isn't a new idea with the Legislature.

The idea has been proposed before, and was looked at by the Employees Retirement System in 1976.

However, recent increases in both the tax rate and wage base for Social Security by Congress have led to renewed interest in the proposal.

Legislative Council staff members, at the committee's first session, noted Texas isn't the only state which has looked, or is looking, at dropping out.

Kentucky recently considered setting up its own alternative system, but decided to remain under Social Security, and Alaska has made several studies—and is expected to put the question up as a referendum, with public employees groups indicating support for the plan.

Another reason for increased interest by legislators is that the last session passed SB 20, agreeing to have the State pick up both the employer's and employee's share of Social Security benefits for State workers.

Changes by Congress have resulted in there being a "gap" in some instances, however, so that the entire amount will not be picked up by the State due to other legal restrictions.

However, lawmakers won't be surprised if State employees are back in January asking that the State pick up the entire amount, as had been contemplated before the changes in the Federal law.

That amount isn't a pittance by anyone's standards, since the total contribution by State employees and the State in 1977 came to $204,000,000, with the State and workers splitting the cost, and will be about that amount for the State alone in 1978.

There may be, Snelson notes, a point where it would be better for the State to drop out of the system and to set up its own plan.

Policy advisory committee scheduled to meet Thursday

ODESSA — Policy Advisory Committee for the Midland-Odessa Regional Transportation Study will meet at 2 p.m. Thursday in the district office of the State Department of Highways and Public Transportation located on East U.S. Highway 80.

The committee will review recommendations of various items required for continued certification of the transportation planning process. The certification is required for the Midland-Odessa area to continue receiving federal funds for transportation improvements.

On the agenda are reaffirmation of the Level II Transportation Plan which includes adoption of the Midland-Odessa Transit Study and its supplemental study; reaffirmation of the Urban Transportation Planning Process Agreement and the System Management Element, adoption of the Transportation Improvement Program and the annual element, the Unified Work Program and acceptance of a proposal for a review of the transportation system.

Bids sought for new post office

RANKIN — Rankin will be getting a new post office facility.

Postmaster Jesse W. Perritt said sealed bids on buying land and building the new facility will be accepted until 1 p.m. June 30 in Room 523 of the General Post Office Building, Bryan and Ervay streets in Dallas.

Perritt said the U.S. Postal Service holds an option to purchase about 14,000 square feet of land area at a purchase price of $1,600.

The new site will be at the southwest corner of 9th Avenue and Grand Street here. The building will consist of 1,400 square feet with a platform of 120 square feet.

Construction should begin within two months after the successful bidder is notified.

City street sealing program gets underway in Midland

One-fifth of the streets in Midland are being resealed in a project that should take a month-and-a-half.

Fred Baker, director of public utilities, said Friday the sealcoat program is being conducted on streets north of Golf Course Road and west of Big Spring Street and will cover 1.25 million square yards of road.

Work started May 22 and should be done by the first part of July if the weather remains good, Baker said. The work was stopped Friday because of rain, but should continue Monday if sunny weather returns to the city.

Midland is divided into five sections, and the streets in a different section are resealed each year. The work prolongs the life of the streets, according to Baker.

He explained the process begins with cleaning the streets and then applying a layer of asphalt with a layer of crushed rock or chips on top of that. The asphalt penetrates small holes or cracks in the existing pavement and seals them. This keeps water from getting down to the layer of crushed caliche. "It (caliche) deteriates very rapidly when it gets wet," Baker said. Potholes in streets are the result of water penetrating cracks in the asphalt, he added.

Rock chips on top of the asphalt provide a rough surface to drive on and makes it easier for the driver to make a quick stop, said Baker. Asphalt has a tendency to become slick when warm or when wet, he noted.

Unreasonable searches

Congress might have to pass a aw which would prohibit police om using a search warrant to unch surprise searches at ewspaper offices.

This was the observation of eputy Attorney General Ben- amin Civiletti in commenting on he Wednesday ruling of the nited States Supreme Court that olice may search a newspaper ffice for criminal evidence even hough none of the newspaper's mployees is involved in the rime.

We would say that Congress ery definitely should pass a law o offset this unjust and un- arranted order of the high court, hich tends to erode the freedom f the press.

And right in line with Civiletti's omment, a bill, "The Press rotection Act of 1978," was in- roduced in the House Friday by ep. Robert Drinan, D-Mass. The ct would put strict limits on olice searches of newspaper of- ices.

Prompt action certainly was erited, and it is hoped that ongressional action will be qually as prompt.

The Supreme Court, by a 5-3 ote, said police are under no bligation to first seek the desired vidence by subpoena.

The order came as a shock — nd an alarming one at that — to ewspapers across the land, just s some of them had published or ere in the process of writing ditorials commending the high ourt on its decision concerning earch warrants for government afety inspections, reconfirming he protection set forth in the U.S. onstitution against unreasonable earches.

And then, WHAM!, comes the rder opening the doors of ewspapers, as well as other news athering organizations, to nreasonable searches.

The Washington decision eversed rulings by a federal trial udge and the 9th U.S. Circuit ourt of Appeals in a case in- olving a police search of the tanford Daily office on Stanford niversity's Palo Alto, Calif., ampus in 1971.

The editor of the Stanford Daily aid the newspaper was "appalled t the Supreme Court's cavalier ttitude toward the freedom of the ress. It's a sad day in the history f the American press when the igh court sees fit to condone urprise searches of newspaper ffices by police looking for vidence against third parties."

And it is a sad day, indeed, when the U.S. Supreme Court issues an order which is bound to have a chilling effect on the news gathering process, which, in turn, interferes with the people's right to know.

Justice Byron White wrote the majority opinion, joined by Chief Justice Warren E. Burger and Justices Harry A. Blackmun, Lewis F. Powell Jr. and William H. Rehnquist.

Dissenting were Justices Potter Stewart, Thurgood Marshall and John Paul Stevens. Justice William J. Brennan Jr. did not participate in deciding the case.

Stewart, in a dissenting opinion written for himself and Marshall said, "It seems to me self-evident that police searches of newspaper offices burden the freedom of the press."

In a separate opinion, Stevens said, "In this case, the warrant application set forth no facts suggesting that (the newspaper) was involved in any wrongdoing or would destroy the desired evidence if given notice of what the police desired.

"I would therefore hold that .... the search was unreasonable."

Justice Stewart agreed with the lower courts that police should always have to prove that issuing a subpoena for materials wanted from a newspaper is not feasible before being allowed to obtain a search warrant.

Barclay Jameson, managing editor of the Santa Fe, N.M., New Mexican and president of the Associated Press Managing Editors Association, said the court order "allows police to invade newspaper offices at will to search for things which are totally undefined. It could easily be used as harassment to prevent the production of a newspaper."

As it stands now, the order is, as stated by Reg Murphy of the San Francisco Examiner, "a disaster, for the public, for the First Amendment."

Religious revival helps in battling communism

By CHARLEY REESE
Sun Belt Syndicate

Charley Reese

ORLANDO, Fla. — The most encouraging sign I see in terms of dealing with the theat of communism is the religious revivial that is taking place in the U.S.

This revival is occurring not in the super-sophisticated circles which long ago swapped Christianity for humanism couched in pseudo-mystical terms, but in the more fundamental churches which are still Bible-based.

This is encouraging because the conflict with communism is essentially a religious war and until recently, our side has been unsure of its own beliefs.

To use a crude example, suppose I walked up to you and kicked you on the knee cap and said, "Hello, I want to be your friend." Then I kicked you in the teeth and said, "We have a great deal in common," and then I kicked you in the groin and said, "I believe in peace and brotherhood."

Obviously, you soon would have to make a choice of whether to believe what I said or believe what I was doing. As obvious a choice as it seems, a great many Americans of liberal persuasion have a great deal of trouble with it.

Communism has killed somewhere between 40 and 60 million people including around 100,000 American servicemen; it has ruthlessly stamped out the human rights of the people it governs; it finances trains and arms terrorists and guerillas all over the globe; it brags of its intentions to dominate the world and to destroy us; and it has built the most powerful military machine in history.

Yet for all that a lot of American liberals profess to be uncertain of its intentions and reluctant to morally condemn it. I believe the reason is that they have lost faith, not only in God, but in their country.

Communism is a secular religion. It has its own catechism, its own prophets, its own promise of heaven on earth. Whittaker Chambers, the ex-Communist who fingered Alger Hiss, said it this way:

"Their (the communists) power, whose nature baffles the rest of the world, because in a large measure the rest of the world has lost that power, is the power to hold convictions and to act on them. It is the same power that moves mountains; it is also an unfailing power to move men. Communists are that part of mankind which has recovered the power to live or die — to bear witness — for its faith."

To return to my own analogy, you cannot defend yourself if you lack a belief and a conviction that you are worth defending, that you are right and your opponent is wrong, that not only do you deserve victory but your opponent deserves defeat.

I'm sure you've heard Americans say there's not much difference between the Soviet Union and America or heard people reply, when you point out some communist atrocity, "Oh, well, our system isn't perfect either."

The Vietnam War brought to the surface this loss of faith. Many sincere Americans were uncertain as to the morality of our position and I'm not talking about the scum, like Jane Fonda and Sam Brown, who were certain that the communist position was the moral one.

A nation which loses its faith will self-destruct and this is the danger of moral relativism that dominates American intellectual thinking and is found today inside many churches where ministers have become reluctant to speak even of good or evil.

A nation is only a group of individual human beings clustered about a specific area of land. Therefore, the nation reflects the individuals' human motivation and we have learned that materialism fails as a human motivator.

The great war between communism and freedom is being waged inside individual human minds and there it will be decided. That's why the resurgence of religion encourages me because it shows that people are beginning to realize that they are more spirit than flesh.

I have learned the hard way, on the street and in the gym, that the only way to win a fight is to hit with conviction.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Argentina image gets attention

By JACK ANDERSON

WASHINGTON — Madison Avenue hucksters are trying to improve the image of the military dictatorship of Argentina with the same flair they use to sell deodorants and cigarettes.

In past columns, we have reported how Argentina has become one of the most dangerous, chaotic countries on earth. Kidnappings, killings and torture have become daily occurrences. "More people are killed in one year in Argentina," a State Department source told us, "than in five years in Northern Ireland."

But this is not the image that Argentina's handsome, mustachioed military dictator, Gen. Jorge Videla, would like to project to the world.

His government, therefore, hired a high-powered New York public relations firm, Burson-Marsteller, to help improve the image of the Argentine dictatorship. The firm conducted an exhaustive study, which cost the Argentinians $1.2 million.

In the most explicit of public relations styles, the Madison Avenue imagemakers proposed a wide-ranging, image-building program involving eight countries. A key part of the program was an extensive media campaign, aimed at producing more favorable publicity for the Videla regime.

"Many reporters," the study acknowledges, "consider the Argentine government oppressive and repressive, a dictatorial institution which deserves little more than condemnation." To dispel this impression, the Videla regime should "project a new, progressive and stable image throughout the world."

This can be achieved, the public relations experts concluded, only "through a highly controlled program of communications."

A key part of any public relations program, the experts acknowledged, "is the generation of positive editorial content in newspapers, magazines and business and financial publications."

The Argentine government, therefore, should invite "leading journalists" to Argentina so they can rub elbows with government officials. States the report: "During each well-known journalist's visit, a specific Argentine editor would act as host ... Each Argentine editor will be furnished beforehand with information about the individual he will be hosting, the main questions on the journalist's mind, and the best approach for creating a positive and lasting impression for his guest."

Burson-Marsteller representatives in several countries, the report notes, "have taken great care in the preparation of working press lists to maximize the chances of getting good coverage ... Where political writers are included, they are of conservative or moderate persuasions."

The report, which was translated from Spanish for us, lists 21 separate American journalists, complete with credentials. It also names a total of 32 members of the press corps of Mexico, Great Britain, Japan and Canada, whom the firm considers the best candidates to approach.

The study provides a sample itinerary for each reporter's visit, which would be best designed to impress them favorably. "Planning a brief, to-the-point informal reception first, it will be possible to overshadow the traditional points of view many reporters have toward military governments."

Burson-Marsteller also proposes providing training seminars for government officials who have contact with the media, so they will know how to respond to "politically sensitive" topics like terrorism and human rights.

States the report: "This seminar will involve simulated situations which will make dramatically clear to the embassy personnel what they ought and ought not to do in various communications-related situations."

For example, government officials would be taught "how to deal with local, national, or international groups such as Amnesty International which carry out local anti-Argentina campaigns."

The public relations experts also suggested an advertising program. Their reason: "We can never be certain that important business and financial publications will print news about Argentina along agreed-to lines." Advertising, on the other hand, "eliminates the risk of influential readers missing the message."

The report also recommends a favorable television special, aimed at media markets in the United States and other participating countries. Concludes the report: "Studies have shown that people believe what they see on television."

Burson-Marsteller has now received a follow-up contract, worth $848,000 to continue advising the Videla regime.

Footnote: A Burson-Marsteller spokesman told us the purpose of the study was to promote foreign investment and exports. "We have implemented a number of the programs," the spokesman told our associate Larry Kraftowitz. But he denied there was any attempt to manipulate the media. Journalists who have gone on the tours of Argentina, he said, "were given as much free time as they wanted."

NICK THIMMESCH

Jane Fonda's superficial ideology exposed in movie

Nick Thimmesch

WASHINGTON — Vietnam won't ave our minds and hearts. We lost at war, and it became the Delilah ho seemingly drained our strength. now we hesitate and fret over our ty to the world, focusing on Africa r the moment, and wondering hat's next.

My thoughts wandered to all this e other night after seeing a bad ovie, "Coming Home," wherein ne Fonda and others try to force eir acting to conform with political ereotyping. Jane Fonda has been on e Vietnam kick for a decade now, d whatever her acting talent, her inking on that agonizing ordeal be- ays a weak mind.

Quite often the arts are ahead of ciety, or at least accurately reflect But the moviemakers haven't pro- ced anything of quality yet on Viet- m — though they have tried with ght films, already completed or ing shot.

"Coming Home" doesn't change the ttern. As Washington Post critic ary Arnold put it, since Fonda was e sustaining force in its four-year station period, she is indeed the other.

What springs forth appeals to ado- cents of the antiwar variety. Fonda turally is the virtuous woman, arried to the tinniest tin soldier in U.S. officer corps.

When her warmonger spouse flies to Vietnam to shoot himself in the t (as all militarists must) she falls love and into bed with an angry rapiegie, providing him with the thing love her stupidly patriotic sband couldn't take. My, oh, my.

Never has so much Fonda skin and superficial ideology been exposed.

This is all red meat, though in flesh tones. Even the most militant antiwar folks would have to admit that Fonda's creation is dumb, patronizing and made of cardboard.

If there are great numbers who still think about Vietnam and the Americans who fought there the way Fonda does, heaven help us. If congressmen and opinion-molders still knee-jerk to the mention of "Vietnam," then we are a feckless lot indeed.

Please recall it was Jane Fonda who in 1972 went to Hanoi to broadcast to American troops on the enemy's radio facilities that U.S. planes were bombing hospitals "on purpose," and warning U.S. airmen that, "You may be shot down, you may perhaps be killed, but for what and for whom?"

Fonda romanticized Vietnamese Communists and described U.S. officials as "war criminals" of the German and Japanese kind who "were tried and executed." She is still cheered by some unthinking folk for these broadcasts.

Vietnam was an agony for the United States. But the Americans who fought there did not exit as demented, or forever bitter, and the U.S. officials Fonda hates are not war criminals. Still nobody who took part in that war is happy about it today, and Vietnam veterans must swallow the frustration and resentment they feel after coming home to a largely unsympathetic American public.

"It bugs America that we lost the war," says Bob Muller, 32, a paralyzed veteran, "and a lot of us had trouble adjusting. I saw no good in this war, but don't ever wave a Viet Cong flag in front of me!"

It's easier to come home when you win. And yet Vietnam veterans (average age, 32 now) finish school, get jobs, marry and rear families. But as Robert L. Hill points out in a veterans' publication ("Reveille") some 750,000 Vietnam veterans have joined the American Legion, and another 500,000 have joined the more exclusive Veterans of Foreign Wars — thus allying themselves with community-minded, Middle-American standards.

Despite the exploitation of the Vietnam veteran by misanthropic politicians, causists and lightweight filmmakers, this soldier from the first war the United States really lost isn't necessarily a "war-crazed" vet, hooked on booze and dope, and eager to hear whatever Jane Fonda has to say.

The Americans who fought in Vietnam didn't lose the war. Those who dissented at home stopped the war. American strength didn't wane. It was never used, full-gauge. As a nation, we were not immoral in Vietnam. We were mistaken to follow the cold war down strange, tricky jungle paths.

Vietnam veterans are more willing to forgive draft-dodgers than their uncles, fathers and grandfathers. That is because they understand the ambivalent feeling of the American people, particularly their own generation, toward the war.

Most Vietnam veterans, after years to think, realize that there is no shame if you conducted yourself with honor and can look your comrades in the eyes.

Perhaps the Vietnam veterans can teach our leaders, especially Congress, what it means to live with a "lost" war and yet retain your dignity. Jane Fonda, Ramsey Clark and William Sloane Coffin can't teach that, because they were in Hanoi, not South Vietnam.

'78 campaigns giving rise to suggested changes in reporting of funds

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Experiences in this year's political campaigns have led to some suggested changes in the way Texas candidates raise and report funds, with those suggestions coming both from candidates and those who oversee the candidates.

Not surprisingly, many of the suggestions focus on lending — a topic which has been much discussed during the 1978 primary.

Former Speaker Price Daniel Jr., who lost the Democratic nomination for attorney general to former Secretary of State Mark White, says the practice of candidates taking out loans — and making loans to themselves — got out of hand in the last campaign.

Daniel himself began his effort by advancing $9,000 of his own funds to his election effort — and took out some other loans during the primary.

White ended up with a $160,000 debt, including some $140,000 in loaned funds.

Gov. Dolph Briscoe's $1.1 million debt to various banks, and GOP challenger Bill Clements' debt of about the same amount, attracted considerable comment during the final days of the May primary races.

It was during Daniel's House administration that many of the present laws on campaign disclosure and financing were passed — and Daniel's remarks that such practices violate at least the spirit of campaign disclosure laws shouldn't be written off as sour grapes.

Daniel isn't alone in his feelings that there should be some changes made — but how to make those changes is another problem.

Secretary of State Steve Oaks says his office is looking at a number of changes which will be recommended to the 1979 Legislature when it convenes — with some of those alterations growing out of experience in this year's primaries.

Oaks agrees that it might be well to require some additional disclosure on loans, including making clear who, besides the candidate, is guaranteeing them.

However, he notes, attempting to regulate loans to candidates is a tricky matter, and raises some legal and constitutional, as well as practical, problems.

Full disclosure of the source of the loan should allow voters to know who is advancing the funds and allow them to ask the candidate how he or she intends to repay the loan, Oaks said.

White says he favors full disclosure, with candidates having the chance to debate loans and other issues, but feels restrictions on loans could result in "only rich folks running."

But Daniel objects that it would be possible for a candidate to receive funds from a third party — suggesting as an "extreme example" Koreagate figure Tong Sun Park — and then lend the funds to his campaign as a personal loan.

Loans to an officeholder would show up on his or her report, Daniel notes, but that would not address the problem of candidates relying on support from people who could thereafter be subject to regulation by those candidates.

Daniel feels the problem could be met by requiring disclosure of all loans to candidates or by limitations on the amount which can be borrowed.

GOP attorney general candidate Jim Baker agrees borrowing can be a problem, and says Daniel's points are "probably...well taken" — but he agrees also there are "mechanical" problems in disclosing loans, particularly late in the campaign, and in restricting borrowing.

As Oaks puts it, "I don't really think it's the role of government to be saying what an individual may or may not borrow...as long as there is full disclosure."

"The voters can decide if they feel it will affect the candidate."

In any event, legislators may be asked to look at that matter, and at some other changes, including requiring whether a political committee is supporting or opposing more than one candidate or measure.

Oaks notes that such information is now optional, but he feels it should be mandatory in order to allow the public to know who is backing or opposing candidates — "the whole purpose of disclosure."

Another item under study is the use of titles in campaign literature and advertising, a problem in "races of lower profile" such as judicial contests, Oaks says (noting that most voters know whether a candidate is or isn't an incumbent governor).

Oaks also plans to recommend repeal of the ban on labor unions and corporations spending funds to support or oppose referendum items,noting that section of the Texas law apparently has been overturned by a U.S. Supreme Court ruling.

Meanwhile, Oaks' staff reports fewer problems this election than in the past with people complying with campaign finance laws.

Oaks says he hopes legislators will find ways to improve the laws, but doesn't think it will be simple.

The laws, he says, are complex because campaigns are complex, and neither shows much sign of getting any simpler.

ART BUCHWALD

We'll be ready when you are

WASHINGTON — It is sad to think that the cold war is heating up again just at the time President Carter is working on a new tough image. Some cynics believe that the president's advisors are using the Soviet and Cuban penchant for mischief in Africa as a way to keep Mr. Carter from sinking further in the popularity polls in the United States.

The problem with choosing Africa to rally around the President is that no one is quite sure who to root for and which side is the good guys and which is the bad.

Even Feebleman, the neighborhood's leading hardliner, is confused.

"We've got to do something to stop the Soviets in Africa," Feebleman said, "before it's too late."

"Who says so?"

"The guy whose name I can never pronounce, who is the president's national security advisor."

"I know who you mean. What should we do?"

"We have to shore up the dictators who are on our side so the dictators on their side don't take over."

"Right," I said, "but who are the dictators on our side?"

"We won't know until the Soviets stop giving aid to the other side. I think they're supporting the people's rebels, and our guys are supporting the people's liberation forces."

"No, you're wrong," I told Feebleman. "The people's rebels are on our side and the people's liberation forces are the Commies."

"Well, anyhow, we have to support the side that doesn't pillage and rape."

"Both sides pillage and rape," I said. "Don't you remember in Zaire when the rebels went into the Shaba Province and pillaged and raped? As soon as the place was liberated Mobutu's army went in and pillaged and raped the same people. Pillage and rape are not the criteria on which we should base our support."

"Then we have to support the side that asks for aid from us after the Soviets and Cubans give weapons and training to the other side," Feebleman said.

"Great, but every time we give money to those who ask for our support it winds up in a bank account in Switzerland. Money is not the answer," I said. "We have to give them food and weapons and train them."

"Right. That means sending in American soldiers," Feebleman said.

"Hardly," I said. "Carter isn't about to send Americans into Africa at this time."

"Well, if the Soviets are using Cubans as mercenaries, we should find a country to do the same thing for us," Feebleman told me.

"What country do you have in mind?"

"Panama," Feebleman said. "After all, they owe us one. We did give them back the canal."

"That's a good idea," I said. "It would be very bad form for the Panamanians to refuse. But I still can't see Congress getting us involved until it knows who we're rooting for. We're going to have to learn the names of the tribes on our side before we give Carter a chance to use his power to thwart the tribes on their side."

"Let's call what's-his-name, the president's national security advisor, and ask him to give us the names of people in Africa he wants the Americans to support."

Feebleman dialed the White House and got through.

"Who are we supporting in Africa?" he asked the national security advisor.

Feebleman listened for a few seconds and then hung up. He looked perplexed and said, "He told me that was classified information."

Closing a chapter of life difficult

By GEORGE C. WALLACE
Special to The Washington Post

When The Washington Post invited me to write this article, I had to stop for a moment and pull myself together. As all who know me publicly and privately can attest, I tend to tremble when the Post speaks.

One of the reasons, I suppose, that I have had such a long political career is that every time I finished a campaign and sat down to rest, here would come the Post, barking at my feet and sinking its Chihuahua teeth into my ankles. My friends thought my socks were made out of seersucker.

Now here we are, consorting together in an unexpected feast of amiability brought on by the Post's inviting me to reflect on the circumstances that influenced my decision not to run for a seat in the U.S. Senate.

It was both an easy and a difficult decision — easy because I simply concluded that I did not want to live and work outside my native state, and difficult because it meant closing a chapter, if not the book, on both an avocation and an occupation that I modestly believe has been useful to the people and their political system.

EVER SINCE 1946, when, as a 27-year-old man just home from the war, I was elected to the state Legislature, I have been a part of what might be called combat politics — that is to say, running for and serving in public office — and for a good part of the later period I dared think it was possible, even likely, that the road might lead to the highest position of leadership in this country.

Five gunshots in Maryland changed that prospect, but it did not change the hope for more sensible and responsive government that was the central objective of the Wallace campaign and of the millions of American voters who supported it.

The one overeaching accomplishment of the campaign, the legacy that I am proudest of having had a hand in passing on, was the long-due recognition of the middle class as the forgotten infantrymen of this country.

Caught amidst the privileges of the rich, the overwhelming concerns for the poor and the arrogance of the bureaucracies, the middle class showed up on almost nobody's political map. What was for them the heaviness of the government hands was for others the caress of handouts, whether bestowed directly and called "assistance," or claimed indirectly and called "legitimate loopholes."

IT SOMETIMES seems to me that there is almost a conspiracy between the very rich and the very liberal, to this end: The liberals get their costly do-good programs, the rich get their exemptions and by mutual agreement, the middle class get the bill.

Much of the press, not least the Chihuahuas of the Post, professed to see something racist and ugly in my espousal of relief and rescue for the middle class and in their swelling response to my attacks on their abandonment. It annoyed me to see the press thus condemn a class that has held the country together, made it stable and sturdy, and furnished those who produce the goods and fight the wars.

The attribution of racial motives to every campaign I ran, every thought I expressed, every constituency I addressed, goes back a long way. Those who opposed my attacks on big government found it much easier, when at a loss to deal with my arguments intellectually, to try to smudge my own character.

In fact, from that day at the University of Alabama when I challenged the U.S. Justice Department on forward to this one, the single untangled thread running through all of the Wallace campaigns never changed: resistance to the ceaseless compulsion of government to regulate the people in all their actions — their personal lives, their business lives, their working lives, their social lives.

I READ A STORY the other day from Los Angeles that said, "Parents will revolt in Southern California." That's part of the animosity that has grown all over the country against big government, and it was what we were trying to point out over the years.

It just so happened that the case back in 1963 involved race, and maybe that was unfortunate. There are people out there today, members of all races, who bitterly oppose what the government is doing to their children in the name of quotas, etc. It's not a matter of racism and it should never degenerate into racism.

Schools are not their only concern. The members of the middle class are far more worldly-wise than they were once thought to be. When prominent editorialists, columnists and commentators were greeting Castro as merely an engaging Caribbean eccentric, the mass of Americans instinctively knew otherwise.

The people are ahead of many of their leaders today in their disgust with any lessening of the nation's defense strength. "Statesmen" may think of war as merely an unfortunate extension of diplomacy, but to the lower and middle classes it is as personal and tragic as the tombstones in their cemeteries. They are appalled by those who toy with the national defense, remembering with anger that this country has given away much that was won in the hard-fought battles of the past by conceding much of the world to communism.

ONE WELL-KNOWN Washington figure was quoted the other day as saying that it might not be such a bad thing if the United States lost its military superiority. He would be well advised not to make that statement to an audience in Alabama....

Raising the cry against government indignities has born fruit — not enough, but more than we once saw. President Carter is lambasting the bureaucrats and regulators, and every national politician of note seems wired to play back the sounds of the various Wallace campaigns.

Even within the judiciary, there is the beginning of a retreat. The Supreme Court has signified that previous courts, particularly the one presided over by Chief Justice Earl Warren, went too far in exalting their notions into law. Some of these cases were the silliest of the silly, even getting down to the length of a man's hair.

Many of today's judges are disgusted with the inundation of their courts by banalities that they, as younger men and women, never anticipated.

There are ever more encouraging signs in many areas of a return to good sense, which made it easier for me to reach a decision concerning my contemplated race for the U.S. Senate.

The question of whether to run had been on my mind for two or three weeks. Finally I went down to the Alabama resort of Gulf Shores on the Gulf of Mexico to think about it, and to prepare a speech I was to give in a day or so.

I spent almost a whole day in the sun and inside thinking and writing notes, and suddenly I just decided that I did not want to go to Washington and live. All of the circumstances involved were more than I could accept.

POLITICALLY, the first bullet that hit me in Maryland in 1972 was the beginning of the end of my career in national politics. I used to think there wasn't much difference between my being in a wheelchair and Franklin D. Roosevelt's using one, but there is a difference. Other than the obvious physical difference between the loss of muscles caused by polio and the paralysis caused by a spinal-cord injury, the national press, with its cameras focused on the spokes of my wheelchair, was always there to direct attention to this handicap.

My needs are harmonious with my duties as governor, and the people of Alabama understand the nature of my handicap and my limitations. But it might have been an entirely different case in a different city, serving in a different office.

So it is not the first time the wheelchair has played a part in my political fortunes. In 1976, when I was running for the Democratic presidential nomination, many cited my condition as a reason to vote against me.

The party hierarchy calculatingly used this against me. But when they stopped me because of my condition, they brought a new face into play. That new face belonged to a southerner named Jimmy Carter. I found that an invigorating irony.

Many have said that had I come along at a later time, as President Carter did, after the racial problems had been more or less resolved, and the stigma of being a Southern governor was not so scaring, my quest for the presidency would have been different.

PERHAPS SO. But even without that advantage, I still think, on looking back, that I would have been on the Democratic national ticket had I not been shot. Only painful experience prevents me from joking that I don't know which would have been preferable.

At any event, I take leave for the moment of my old friends the pointed heads, the professors who flunked bicycle-parking, the faceless regulators with their huge briefcases and all the other bizarre specimens that gave zest to my work.

POSITIVE THINKING

Too many people grooved into being stereotypes

By NORMAN VINCENT PEALE

Wonder if one trouble about today is that so many of us are grooved into some sort of stereotype. There seem to be so few individualists, such a limited number of people who are different.

It's the rare person who has what it takes to be himself. Too many of us are just part of the herd, following docilely along.

We don't have to spend our lives in some stereotype image. Every human being is born an individual. But we sometimes get rolled into the mass. We talk alike, think alike, act alike and even dress alike, with little or no variation from the standard. The result is that the individual's growth-seeking personality is stultified and frustrated.

Americans today are perhaps the most standardized generation in our 200-year-old history. You can pick your own stereotype. What type do you belong to? I'll give you an example of what I mean.

One day a few years ago I passed the Chicago Federal Building, where the trial of the so-called Chicago Seven was in progress. About a hundred young men were demonstrating. Suddenly an overwhelming impression got through to me: They were all alike.

Nearly every one had long hair stringing over his face. Many wore gold-rimmed, big-lens glasses and leather jackets with tassels, tight-fitting jeans, bell bottomed and deliberately frayed at the bottom.

A mass of all-alike people no one standing out as an individual doing, as they say, his own thing: all stereotyped!

But that isn't the end of the conformity story. After that I went to lunch with a group of men in one of the super-duper clubs of the city; I suppose you would say, home of "the Establishment." There were 12 around a big table. Suddenly I was struck again with that human tendency to conform to stereotype.

Every man, including myself, wore a dark suit, white shirt and dark tie, the one exception being a preacher whose tie was flaming red. So at least there was one chink of unstereotypedness in "the Establishment."

Both of these groups were unconsciously disguising individuality behind a uniform. How curious, not being our own selves when each of us was created something special.

I was in my office one day when my secretary called on the intercom and said, "A woman has walked in here who wants to see a minister of the church. She saw your name on the bulletin board outside."

"Well," I said, "I was just leaving for that other appointment, but do you think I should see her?"

"Well, she's not your type, but she needs help."

"What do you mean, 'my type'?" This interested me, and I said, "Send her in."

In walked this woman — and she certainly was of a type, no doubt about it. She was extraordinarily made-up and came in trailing a combined aroma of tobacco, liquor and perfume. Her face was set in the standard sophisticated urban mask. And she acted embarrassed.

She said, "Isn't this something! Me, being in the offfice of a minister! Think what my friends would say if they could see me here!"

I wondered if those people, whoever they were, were really her friends. Where were they now when she needed them? I said, "This is a confidential relationship. You just tell me anything that is on your mind. Be at ease."

"I just don't know where to turn," she sighed. Then she started to talk. It was a deep, dark human woe that she poured out; tragedy, failure and everything mixed together.

"I haven't been inside a church in, I couldn't tell you how many years. But I have been walking the streets this morning absolutely desperate." As she continued to gush out her story, the sophisticated mask seemed to fall away and I saw before me a troubled little girl, reaching out pathetically for help.

It wasn't until she had burst out from behind her mask of sophistication that she was able to recognize what was making her so miserable. Once she stopped worrying about how she should act and what her friends would think, she developed a wholesome self-respect for herself. She realized that one isn't usually measured by appearance on the outside, but rather by what is on the inside.

This woman was no longer a "type." She was wearing an expression of her real personality.

WASHINGTON LETTER

How many of 12 senators backed Carter on Panama?

The Washington Post

Trivia quiz. Of the 12 Democratic senators seeking re-election this year, guess how many supported President Carter on both the Panama Canal treaties and the sale of jets to Israel, Egypt and Saudi Arabia?

Answer: Ten Democrats on the ballot this year voted with the administration on the Panama treaties. Three who are running backed the jet package. But only one Democratic senator whose term expires this year was with the president on both controversial issues. He is Paul Hatfield, the appointed senator from Montana. Coincidentally or not, Hatfield is a decided underdog in the Tuesday primary against Rep. Max Baucus, D-Mont.

The publicized battle between Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., and his Democratic challenger, Charles D. "Pug" Ravenel, is turning into a battle of the polls. A few weeks ago, Ravenel supporters leaked a poll purporting to show him trailing the incumbent by a narrow 49-to-44 percent.

Last week, Thurmond forces were displaying a poll of their own, taken by Arthur J. Finkelstein, that gave Thurmond a 57-to-27 percent lead.

Among other intriguing findings, the Thurmond poll reported that more than 75 percent of those interviewed know Thurmond is well into his 70s and is married to a woman half his age, and believe he is a powerful senator, represents the thinking of South Carolinians on most issues and — best of all — "is a living legend who symbolizes South Carolina."

According to the Thurmond poll, most of those who know something about Ravenel agree with the statements that he is a liberal, an opportunist, an investment banker and — worst of all — lived in New York City.

A long-scheduled Los Angeles fund-raiser that was supposed to bring in $1 million for the national Democratic Party with President Carter as the featured speaker won't be held on June 24 as planned.

Lew Wasserman, the champion Democratic fund-raiser in California, has informed the national party that California Democrats want to see the results of the June 6 primary in their home state before committing any funds.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

A fine example

To The Editor:

I am using this method to publicly thank taxpayer Ronald Britton for standing practically alone while informing our public servants that they must be extremely careful with our tax money when preparing their budgets.

I'm sure his example will give more of us taxpayers the courage to speak up as he does.

Screwworm cases appear

By CHARLES W. GREEN
Midland County Extension Agent

Midland County farmers have about completed planting their cropland, to cotton, and some stands are pretty well established. Most dryland acreage, however, was planted on limited moisture and it is felt that unless more rainfall is received soon production prospects are poor. Pastures have improved slightly with the May rainfall, but the dry winds and sunny days are nullifying the effects quite rapidly.

Screwworm cases were popping up rapidly in unexpected--and in some instances, unexplained--locations in Texas as the month of May entered its final week. As of May 18, Texas had recorded six screwworm cases. Five were confirmed during May.

The state's first 1978 case was confirmed April 21 from Hudspeth County. The worm sample was collected on a ranch about 48 miles east of El Paso. The second case was confirmed May 8 from a worm sample submitted by a ranch located 20 miles southwest of Marfa in Presidio County.

Then on May 15, the year's first screwworm case in central Texas was confirmed from a sample collected on another ranch some 30 miles from the first case.

Two more cases were confirmed the following day in widely separated counties. The northernmost case was in Stonewall county and the southernmost case originated in upper Hidalgo County. With the widely-spread pattern of cases that are erupting this year, producers in every county must remain on the alert for outbreaks, cautions Dr. M.E. Meadows, Jr., screwworm program director.

There have been recent dramatic increases in screwworm cases in the states of Chihuahua and Sonora, Mexico, which lie directly south of El Paso and the Big Bend and provide a logical explanation of the screwworm upsurge in those areas. After experiencing one of the mildest and wettest winters on record, southern Arizona's screwworm cases have increased rapidly this spring, with 307 cases recorded thus far this spring.

Following last year's successful "Stamp Out Screwworm" campaign, 1978 was designated as "Screwworm Watch" Year throughout the southwestern United States. Officials point out that the effort can succeed only if everyone gives a year of dedicated effort. Producers should inspect their animals on a regular basis, collect worm samples from any infested wounds found, and mail the samples to the USDA Screwworm Lab, Box 969, Mission, Texas. The zip code is 78752.

Many calls have come into the office this past week concerning a disease problem with tomatoes. The first symptom of the trouble is an upward rolling and twisting of the leafless that expose their undersurfaces, stiff and leathery foliage, and a peculiar dull yellowing of the entire plant. The branches and stems become abnormally erect, and the petioles of the leaves curl downward. There often is some pupping of the veins of the leaflets. Many of the roots and rootles are killed and as a rule the plant gradually dies.

Curly top, or western yellow blight of tomatoes is caused by a virus that appears to be disseminated only by a single insect species, the beet leafhopper. This particular species is native to semi-arid regions of the southwest and has as its natural host wild weeds. The leafhoppers become carriers of the curly top virus by feeding on wild or cultivated host plants that are effected with curly top virus and then are able to transmit the disease to other plants for an indefinite period.

Presently, there are no very satisfactory methods for controlling curly top on tomatoes. The beet leafhopper is difficult to control because of the great areas of its winter breeding grounds and the difficulty of controlling such a migratory sucking insect in a local area. Controlling weeds near the garden may help. Shading individual plants under slatted or muslin covered frames has been said to keep the insects away from the plants.

Spraying the tomato plants for leafhopper control seldom is satisfactory because the migration of the leafhopper back into the garden following spraying.

Mormons conduct huge fund drive

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — The Mormon church, conducting one of the largest financial appeals in its history, is trying to gather more than $1 million a month for 14 months to build a second temple in the Salt Lake valley.

The 390,000 Mormons in the present Salt Lake temple district are being "assessed" the total $15 million cost in addition to their regular church tithe of 10 percent of income.

Traditionally, the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints pays up to 70 percent of temple construction cost from its general fund. But, spokesman Don LeFevre said, "There is a great abundance of LDS people in the district and their ability to pay is sufficient to raise the money here."

Members of the 4 million-member church use temples for sacred rites, including marriage for eternity and baptism for the dead. Only faithful members are allowed inside once a temple is dedicated.

Church members have been told in scores of meetings that the new temple would cost $18 million. With the completion of construction plans, to be released publicly today, the estimate was scaled down by $3 million, said LeFevre.

Local church leaders are to be given new, lower fund-raising goals, based on the lower estimate, a church source said. The money is to be collected by mid-1979, he said.

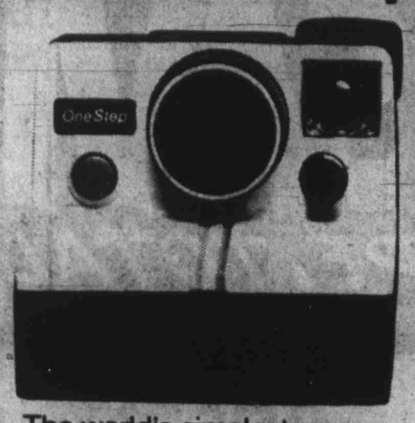

LeFevre said there is no compulsion to contribute. He said outsiders might chuckle, but the idea is that Salt Lake district members have never before "had the opportunity to receive the blessings of giving money for a temple."

He said every member in the temple district—which includes parts of Nebraska, Arkansas, Colorado, Minnesota, Montana, South and North Dakota, Iowa, Nevada, Wyoming and Mississippi — will be asked to contribute.

Money also will be accepted from non-Mormons, LeFevre said, adding that some nonmembers have contributed several hundred dollars to previous temple projects.

Plans for the temple, by the same architect who designed twin temples in nearby Provo and Ogden, call for a structure that has about half the floor space of the Salt Lake temple.

Walter Nedd opens a wall locker in a corridor of Carver High School. "This is where I kept all my important stuff." He was graduated in 1966. Two years later, the school was closed.

Former Carver students Barbara Oliver Harris and Walter Nedd join E.L. "Prof" Jordan, the school's principal for 14 years, for a stroll on the old campus grounds. Many of the school's ex-students and former faculty members will return to Carver Jan. 17 for a reunion.

E.L. "Prof" Jordan reminisces about becoming principal of the old Midland Colored Public School in 1940. Three years later, at his suggestion, the junior-senior high school was re-named in honor of George Washington Carver. Jordan was Carver's principal until 1954.

Former Carver students rehash history, memories

Story and photos
by ED TODD

They still call him "Prof," because that rare bond between teacher and student remains unbroken despite the passing of time.

He's a person whom even his wife calls "a great man," and his ex-students address him "mister" or "prof."

"He was an authoritarian, but he was not what you would call a dictator," Barbara Oliver Harris said of the prof, E.L. Jordan.

"Prof" Jordan was principal of her alma mater, Midland's George Washington Carver High School, which now is only "history" and memories.

"He was a person you could talk with," Mrs. Harris recalled. "He was concerned. He was a nice guy, but his word was very respected. . . . He would go an extra mile to help a child after class."

Admittedly, Mrs. Harris, who graduated from Carver in 1950, was getting sentimental. And she was in the right setting for it — the auditorium of the former all-black school. She never went to school in this "modern," air-conditioned building. It was built eight years after she graduated; she got her high school education in an old three-room school house, a former barracks from the old Midland Army Air Field of World War II vintage, and in an even-older three-room brick building, which has been extensively added on to.

"Even if you didn't go to school in this particular facility, you are still a part of Carver," she said. "We were proud of those three rooms at that time as we were of this (the 'new' physical plant.) You feel you're a part of what Carver has been." The school had strengths both in academics and in extra-curricular activities, such as sports, she said.

She reflected on Jordan.

"We'd give him a rough time," Mrs. Harris said.

He was pretty fair about "straightening out" errant youngsters, who listened to the principal.

"I think his bark was a lot louder than his bite," Mrs. Harris said. "He said he was going to do this or going to that. Usually, he never did. He was dedicated to his job."

Only moments before her reminiscing in the auditorium, Mrs. Harris and another Carver graduate, Walter Nedd of the class of '66, talked about old Carver as they sat in a classroom, walked down the corridors and wandered about the campus grounds with Jordan.

The bespectacled Jordan, now 71, has slowed down considerably since the 1954 end of his 14-year tenure as Carver's principal. Nevertheless, time has been good to him, though he uses a "walking stick" to get around.

It's been 24 years since Jordan was principal of Carver. And it's been 10 years since Carver ceased being a school. It was closed in 1968, when Midland schools were integrated. The black students since then have been bused across town to the two formerly all-white high schools, Midland and Robert E. Lee.

Carver was a proud school.

"When we were going to Carver," Mrs. Harris said, "the three R's were really stressed. The teacher was allowed to reprimand the students. They (the teachers) were there to train and to work. They were concerned about the mastery of the subject matter."

"And nothing was said (to the teacher who scolded or paddled the student into learning or into behaving). Parents had confidence in the educators. That made a difference."

Mrs. Harris, still recounting the school days in the quietness and subdued lighting of the auditorium, remembered how proud Jordan would be of his students' scholastic and athletic accomplishments.

"Carver would always come out on top (in University Interscholastic League competition), and you could see him (Jordan) strutting around. I guess that's why we love him now. Carver was his life."

The "life" of Carver, as well as that of Jordan, will be retold here June 17, when Carver's ex-students hold their first reunion. The theme of this coming-together will be "Carver: This Is Your Life."

There will be much mingling on the campus then by the hundreds of Carverites expected. Prof Jordan, Nedd and Mrs. Harris will be there; they're organizing the reunion.

There, too, may be C.A. Thomas, who succeeded Jordan and who, like Jordan, was the school's principal for 14 years — from 1954 until the school's closing in 1968. Today, Thomas is registrar at Prairie View A&M University.

Jordan, however, is retired and has been since 1968. Following his tenure at Carver, he was principal for 12 years at Booker T. Washington Elementary School. He rounded out his career as director of distributive education at Carver from 1966 to 1968.

Jordan was 33 in 1940 when he became principal of Midland Colored School, which had been organized here at least in the early 1930s.

But it was not until 1943 that the school was re-named George Washington Carver Public School. That was the year Carver, a famed agricultural researcher, educator and the son of slave parents, died.

Jordan said he recommended the name change to Frank Monroe, then superintendent of Midland public schools. In turn, the schools' trustees adopted the name.

"I had meet him (Carver) at Prairie View," Jordan said, as he, Nedd, Mrs. Harris and Leslie C. King Sr., a 1944 Carver graduate, were "rapping" in an office of the former school.

"He had (developed) hundreds of products from the peanut," Jordan said of Carver, "and gave the colored people credit for it. We named it (the school) for him, for the colored people . . . I mean black, Negro."

"That's all right, Mr. Jordan, whatever you say," Mrs. Harris said of his reference to black people.

Jordan said 1943 was the year Carver graduated its first high school class, and that it was he who brought the first school lunch program to Midland and who was the "first agricultural teacher."

"I wasn't getting no extra pay but I taught agriculture," recalled Jordan. His salary back then was $80 per month.

Nedd, who's a school teacher in Midland, was graduated from Carver in 1966. There were 68 seniors in that class, he said. (By contrast, five were in the class of '44, and four were in Mrs. Harris' class of '50. She was valedictorian.)

Nedd, 31, recalls the transition, beginning in 1965, of blacks to previously all-white schools. Students were given the option of transferring to Midland and Lee High schools.

He said blacks students "protested the idea of going to Lee, to the Rebels." And the black culture was not readily accepted by the whites. "They tried to change it."

And today the black students still are not favorably impressed with some of the traditions of the school.

"They still resent them (the Rebel band) playing 'Dixie,'" Nedd said, "(but) you can wipe the sweet thought out of your mind about that being changed."

Nedd said the transition was "very emotional" and that the adding of Afro-American studies to the schools' curriculum was "something to pacify" the blacks.

Nedd was in school here after the school under went a major ($450,000) expansion in 1957-58 and after a new gymnasium was built in 1964. The school was air conditioned about that time.

The school was considerably less well endowed when Mrs. Harris attended Carver in the late 1940s and in 1950.

"As far as academics were concerned," she said, "there were no inadequacies (at Carver). But as far as physical facilities were concerned, they were lacking."

"As far as mastery of the subject matter, they (Carver students and teachers) were not inferior."

It is with a certain fondness that she recalls the "old days." But Jordan apparently doesn't dwell too much on years of segregation and the turmoil in the early days of integration.

"This is something in the past," he said. "It's not going to help our case (today)."

Gunmen strike again

MADRID, Spain (AP) — Gunmen believed to be Basque separatists fired from a speeding car and seriously wounded a national policeman near Bilbao in northern Spain Saturday.

The attack came as diplomats prepared to fly home the bodies of the wife and brother-in-law of Turkey's ambassador to Spain. They were slain in a Madrid ambush blamed on Armenian terrorists.

Police kept silent on any leads in the attack that also took the life of the embassy chauffeur who was driving the ambassador's car Friday when three terrorists opened fire at a Madrid intersection.

A group calling itself "Justice For Armenian Genocide" claimed responsibility, saying it acted in retaliation for the mass extermination of Armenians in Turkey at the turn of the century.

Police sources said they were operating on a theory that Kuneralp's brother-in-law, Basir Bocioglu, who arrived in Spain four days ago, was mistaken for the diplomat by the killers.

This was the auditorium of Carver High School. The school mascot was the Hornet.

Humphrey Institute fund campaign approaching goal

By GERRY NELSON

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Money raisers are about two-thirds of the way toward their goal of $20 million to erect a building and endow a Hubert H. Humphrey Institute of Public Affairs at the University of Minnesota.

It's not generally known that the institute already exists, but without its own building.

It's not clear how much Humphrey memorabilia will be housed in the new building, although one fund-raiser says it will have both a duplicate of the late senator's office and a working office for his widow, Sen. Muriel Humphrey.

The university's School of Public Affairs was created in 1968 as a graduate program for those studying public service and planning. It was renamed the Hubert H. Humphrey Institute last September.

The nationwide fund drive is spearheaded by the former secretary of state, Henry Kissinger. It is aimed at collecting funds for a new building — costing $2 to $4 million — plus an endowment to run the school.

The fund drive now stands at about $13.5 million, according to Robert Odegard, executive director of the University of Minnesota Foundation, the private money-raising arm of the university.

The total includes $5 million from Congress, $1 million from Japan and assorted other donations.

Although they are still after big money, including more donations by foreign governments being sought by Kissinger, officials say they hope hundreds of small contributions also will trickle in.

"We're still going to shoot for that $20 million, but we need those small contributions," says Curtis Carlson, a Minneapolis businessman who has donated $1 million.

Carlson says there will be an office for Sen. Muriel Humphrey in the institute building when she leaves the Senate, along with a museum-like replication of Humphrey's Senate office.

Humphrey died last Jan. 13 of cancer. Mrs. Humphrey, 66, was appointed to succeed him until a special elecion is held in November for the remaining four years of the term.

The main purpose of the institute is a paraphrase of Humphrey's autobiography, "The Education of a Public Man." The institute is for the education of public men and women.

The institute offers master's degree programs in public affairs and planning. It has double-degree programs jointly with the university's Law School, School of Public Health and School of Social Work. Students can earn two degrees simultaneously.

The site tentatively chosen is an unfinished classroom building at the east end of the Washington Ave., bridge. A four-story tower atop the base probably will be selected as the institute's new home.

John S. Adams, director of the institute, believes construction can be finished and the building opened by 1980.

Even though its prime purpose is education, Adams says the building will be a "tangible memorial" to Humphrey. Visitors will be able to learn something about Humphrey at the institute, and it will be an access point for scholars wishing to research the Humphrey papers.

The institute now has 14 full-time faculty members and 14 part-time. The part-timers include seven from other branches of the university and seven persons from off campus. The institute also does research for state and local governments.

Adams said new programs will be developed in six areas, all reflecting Humphrey's interests: economic planning; human services for different segments of the population such as the elderly and the poor; the law and society; urban policy; peace and arms control research, and world food and agricultural policies.

Lawyers plan trip to Israel to quiz atrocities suspect

By FRANK DEL OLMO
The Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — Local attorneys will travel to Israel later this month to question nine elderly Jews who claim to have witnessed war atrocities allegedly committed by a Santa Monica, Calif., man accused of being a war criminal by U.S. immigration officials.

The nine witnesses have already given American officials brief sworn statements in which they claim to have seen 76-year-old Mike Pasker, a naturalized citizen formerly known as Mecys Paskevicius, when he allegedly collaborated with German occupation forces in Lithuania during World War II.

Those statements, on public file with the U.S. District Court here, provide graphic glimpses of the testimony the federal government will probably try to bring out in Pasker's upcoming trial. Four of the witnesses claim to have seen Pasker execute Jews. Others claim to have seen him beat and harass Jews, and assist in transporting them to concentration camps.

The U.S. Justice Department filed suit against Pasker last year seeking to revoke his citizenship on grounds that his alleged wartime activities excluded him from eligibility for U.S. citizenship.

If Pasker's citizenship is revoked, it could be a prelude to his deportation from the United States by the Immigration and Naturalization Service.

In a similar case, Federal Judge Julius J. Hoffman stripped Frank Walus of his U.S. citizenship in Chicago Tuesday on grounds that Walus had concealed from immigration authorities his past as a teen-age Gestapo agent who murdered Polish Jews during World War II.

A trial in the federal suit against Pasker is still some time away, according to assistant U.S. Attorney Carolyn Reynolds, who will argue the government's case.

Ms. Reynolds said last week, however, that she will be in Tel Aviv on June 26 to begin taking sworn depositions from nine witnesses against Pasker who have been located by INS with the cooperation of Israeli authorities.

Pasker could not be reached for comment Thursday. His attorney, Eric Avazian, said he plans to also travel to Israel later this month, if Pasker approves, to cross-examine the witnesses against his client.

Among the witnesses to be questioned is 67-year-old Shloma Liamianski, who claims he saw a man identified to him as Mecis Paskievicius shoot Jews on three different occasions between 1941 and 1943 in Kovna, Lithuania.

Liamianski claims that the man he knew as Paskievicius was a member of a uniformed Lithuanian militia that cooperated with German occupation forces in herding Jews into a barbed wire-closed ghetto.

In an affadavit given to a U.S. consular official in Tel Aviv in 1976, Liamianski states that in November, 1941, he "saw a German soldier bring over a fellow Jew who I knew as Mishie Gordon to Paskievicius. I heard Gordon told by Paskievicius to walk 10 meters to a large grave, and turn around."

"The German soldier standing about four meters to the side of Paskievicius, who was in a group of about 8 to 12 other Lithuanians standing in a row with raised rifles, then lowered his hand, and I saw the Lithuanians, including Paskievicius, shoot Gordon, who fell into the grave."

Liamianski, a house painter, is a survivor of the Nazi concentration camp at Dachau. He also stated that in August, 1944, when the residents of the Kovna ghetto were taken to that camp, he saw Paskievicius join German S.S. troops in going from house to house looking for families that might be trying to hide.

If persons were found in a house, Liamianski said, the houses and their inhabitants were grenaded.

Another witness, 67-year-old Nechemia Andlin, claims to have first seen Paskevicius a few days after German forces attacked the Russian army in June, 1941.

Andlin said he was briefly imprisoned in an old Lithuanian army barracks with other civilians, and Paskevicius was one of their jailers. On two different occasions, Paskevicius came into the barracks carrying an iron bar and began beating prisoners, Andlin said.

"I have seen with my own eyes how he split the heads of several Jewish men," Andlin said. "Some were bleeding profusely, others dropped dead on the spot."

Andlin claims that the bar-wielding guard he identified as Paskevicius killed 10 men in the barracks.

Another witness, Batia Rosenblum, 52, said she saw Paskevicius in August, 1941, wearing a dark green uniform and stated that "I specifically remember him shooting an old man with a gray beard. After he had fallen down he failed to get up. I was standing at that time about 200 meters frm Paskevicius..."

Pinia Markowitz, a 75-year-old retired barber, said in his affidavit that Paskevicius was an occasional customer in his shop before World War II.

Shortly after the German-Russian war began, Markowitz said, Paskevicius and another armed man entered the shop and manhandled the barber. Paskevicius then ordered the second man to take Markowitz outside and shoot him.

"This individual had also been a customer of mine," Markowitz recalled. "And although he indicated to Paskevicius that he would obey his command, he took me around the back of the shop and when we were out of sight of Paskevicius, told me to escape. I ran to the home of my mother-in-law..."

Pasker's attorney Avazian said his client is aware of some of the statements filed as part of the case against him "and he denied any knowledge of the incidents."

Pasker has never spoken publicly about his wartime experience, but his wife Hildegarde told the Los Angeles Times last year that he is innocent of the charges leveled against him.

She said her husband did serve as a Lithuanian police official during the war, but tht his actions were those of an "anti-Communist" partisan.

"The Communists have been after him because he helped blow up some Communist radio stations. He could not get a fair trial in Lithuania," Mrs. Pasker said.

Pasker entered the United States as a displaced person in 1949. He became a citizen in 1962, and Mrs. Pasker said the allegations against him were investigated at that time.

Ms. Reynolds said detailed depositions will be taken from all nine witnesses as a "protective measure," since at least four of them may not be able to testify at any trial because of old age or poor health.

She said it was possible that some of the witnesses might eventually be summoned to Los Angeles to testify against Pasker.

Sculptor employs rare technique

By C.G. McDANIEL
Associated Press Writer

When Orville Hoelscher isn't working in his Godfrey, Ill., body shop, he might be found at home pursuing another career — creating sculpture.

How did an artist end up in the body shop business? For artistic reasons.

"I had a car repaired one time, and it did not suit me," he said in a telephone interview. "I decided it would take someone with artistic talent so that the cars would look like something."

And that's what he has been doing for the past 30 years.

Previously he had worked repairing stained glass church windows and crosses and art glass and as a designer and touchup artist.

All the while, he has been a painter, sculptor and pastel artist.

Hoelscher, 64, is largely self-taught, although he said he first learned to draw from his artistic mother while growing up in Breese, Ill., and has had private tutors. His wife also is an artist.

He says too much formal art instruction can ruin an art student's creativity because the student's expression becomes an extension of the teacher's.

His sculpture involves what Hoelscher says is probably a unique medium. He creates realistic pieces using welding rods.

"This was a medium no one knew anything about as far as realstic sculpture," he said.

The technique is dangerous, he said, because it involves high temperatures formed by acetelyne gas and oxygen and it is sensitive, because the rod has to be touched at just the precise moment to get the desired effect.

Not only is it difficult to control, but it is difficult to see. The artist said that what he sees through the glass of his welding helmet "looks like tapioca boiling on the stove."

Welding rods are made of steel coated with copper, which turns black in the heating process. After the work is finished, Hoelscher burnishes it with a wire brush, then seals it with plastic.

He creates such figures as Mark Twain at the wheel of a river boat, ballet dancers, athletes in action and animals in natural settings. His sculpture sells for $200 to $2,000. He said it is in collections in Germany and Ireland as well as the United States.

This summer, Hoelscher and his wife will take off a couple of months to travel around the country to exhibit and sell their work at art fairs.

Hoelscher laments the amount of material Americans throw away, and uses parts of cars he salvages from his shop to create other sculptures with chrome bumpers and fenders.

Primarily, though, Hoelscher says, "I feel that I have something to say with welded steel. I feel that by getting it out across the United States other people will be able to see what can be done with steel."

Mock commencement features art of juggling

NEW HAVEN (AP) — "Pomp and Circumstance" was played and the graduates wore black caps and gowns, but the diplomas handed out to 40 seniors at Yale University were a bit unusual.

They received "Bachelor of Arts and Leisure" degrees for learning what organizer Wilder Knight called "a practical skill." The skill? Juggling.

The "commencement," coming a day before the university awards degrees to 1,050 Yale seniors, was planned by Knight, a professional juggler, to show parents what their sons and daughters learned at Yale.

He told parents who had gathered after Yale's Class Day exercises that "after four years and $28,000 you may ask what your kids have learned. We really have no practical skills, except we can juggle."

Then, five at once, Knight's proteges tossed balls, tins and even bagels into the air.

Knight, a senior from St. Petersburg, Fla., even sent engraved invitations to his mock ceremony. He won't have to put his juggling skills to immediate use. He plans to study history in Sweden next year on a fellowship grant.

MNB OFFERS NEW HIGHER INTEREST CD'S & IRA'S

NEW HIGHER INTEREST CD'S

Effective Thursday, June 1, The Midland National Bank is offering two newly authorized certificates of deposit. These will permit MNB customers to earn higher interest rates than were previously available from commercial banks.

6-MONTH MONEY MARKET CD

The first CD is a short-term money market certificate with a ceiling interest rate which will be set weekly with changes in the average yield on new issues of six-months Treasury bills. The money market certificate can only be issued in denominations of $10,000 or more with a six-month (26 week) maturity. Interest will be paid according to the average (auction) yield for the six-month Treasury bill in the most recent week's auction prior to issuance of the CD. For example, the average auction yield for six-months Treasury bills in May 1978 ranged from 6.935% to 7.141%. Of course, these rates will vary week to week according to money market forces. Presently, banks can pay 5½% on CD's under $10,000 for 90 days to one year.

The new market certificates are non-negotiable, but can be pledged as collateral for a loan.

8-YEAR 7 3/4% CD

The second CD is a long-term certificate issued in minimum denominations of $1,000 at maturities of eight years or more at a maximum rate 7 3/4%.

NEW DEPOSITS TO IRAs EARN 8%

Effective June 1, Midland National will pay 8% on all deposits to Individual Retirement Accounts. This rate is the highest rate a federally insured bank or savings and loan may pay on time deposits of maturities of more than six months. Rates on existing IRA accounts will reflect the new maxium rate. With daily compounding, the effective annual yield on 8% IRA deposits will be 8.33%.

Federal law and regulation prohibit the payment of a time deposit prior to maturity unless three months of the interest thereon is forfeited and interest on the amount withdrawn is reduced to the passbook rate. Accounts for each person are insured for up to $40,000 by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

For more information, contact John Stanley, Senior Vice President, or call 683-2751, ext. 290.

U.S. jury indicts four in slaying by policemen

HOUSTON (AP) — A federal grand jury has indicted a Houston police officer and three former colleagues in connection with the 1977 shooting death of a Louisiana teenager.

The seven-count indictment brings to a close a months-long investigation into the shooting of 17-year-old Randall Webster following a high-speed chase on Houston freeways in a stolen van.

Former officer Danny Mays, 31, who told a state grand jury he had shot the youth in self-defense on Feb. 8, 1977, was charged Friday with violating Webster's constitutional rights by striking him with a gun and shooting him, with death resulting.

The state grand jury had no-billed Mays. Conviction on the federal charge could bring a maximum of life imprisonment.

Former officers Norval Holloway, 29, and Paul Dillon, 38, were charged as accessories after the fact on two other counts.

Holloway is specifically charged with planting a "throw down" gun beside the body of the unarmed youth to help Mays conceal the action.

Both Holloway and Dillon are also charged with continuing to cover up the facts by giving false information to police investigators.

Officer Robert Bloodworth, whose name has not come up in the case previously, is named in a count alleging all four men conspired to obstruct justice. The indictment says Bloodworth, who was relieved of duty Friday with pay, told Holloway he had a pistol following the shooting.

Police Chief Harry Caldwell fired the three former officers April 28. He said he had not relieved Bloodworth earlier because he wanted to see what the grand jury would do.

The conspiracy count also names three former officers as participants but not defendants in the alleged cover-up plot. Two of the former policemen have been granted immunity from prosecution in exchange for testimony.

A federal court convicted three other former officers in March for conspiring to violate the civil rights of a prisoner, resulting in his death by drowning in a downtown bayou. The three received probated sentences on the felony conviction and one-year teams on a misdemeanor beating conviction.

The victim in that case was a young Mexican-American and the sentences aroused anger and frustration in the Mexican-American community.

Webster's father, a Shreveport, La. builder, contacted the U.S. Attorney's office in Houston after the state grand jury last June cleared the officers involved in his son's death.

RECENTLY receiving a $200 music scholarship from the Texas Tech University Music Department is Susan Landenberger, a 1978 Lee High School graduate and the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R.W. Landenberger. She was a member of the Lee High honor band and has won several music awards. Miss Landenberger was named to All Region Band the past three years and to All State Band this past school year.

AWARDED a $750 scholarship this year from the Texas Exes is Krystal Koch, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Koch of Midland. Miss Koch, a 1978 graduate of Lee High School, plans to enter The University of Texas at Austin to study mathematics. While in high school, she was secretary of the National Honor Society and a member of the Junior Council, theRebelettes and the Industrial Arts Club.

RECIPIENT of the Hulda Driscoll Memorial Award, given by the Midland Branch of the American Association of University Women, this year is Kimberly Wood, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Gist. A 1978 Midland High School graduate, Miss Wood was a member of the National Honor Society, Student Council and her school newspaper staff. She also wrote for the Midland Youth Center "Chatter" and was on the girls' golf team. She was Catoico queen for this past school year.

WASHINGTON OIL

Ikard says cooperation necessary for solution

By CLYDE LA MOTTE
Reporter-Telegram
Washington Oil Correspondent

WASHINGTON—Frank Ikard has reached the enviable stage in life when, nearing retirement, he has no axe to grind and no worlds to conquer and therefore can speak his piece as he sees it.

Ikard will step down as president of the American Petroleum Institute at the end of this year, to be succeeded by Charles J. DiRona. He has been at the helm of the Institute since 1963 and before that was a congressman from Texas for 10 years and was a member of the House Ways and Means Committee when he resigned to take the API post.

His primary concern, looking ahead, is the need for some accomodation between government and industry so that the two can work together to attain the energy goals that are necessary and important to the nation.

He recalls there was a time when the government, facing an energy problem, turned to the industry for help. This occurred in World War I, in World War II nd the Korean War--even, to an extent, during the Viet Nam War.

During those times of crisis the government called people from industry to Washington to government positions temporarily to help do a job that needed doing.

Although the government had the final say on policy, these people with industry know-how were given the prime responsibility of shaping and implementing programs.

"The difference between then and now," Ikard said in an interview last week, "is that industry people were consulted with before final decisions were made. By contrast, today the tendency is for government to present the industry with a program after it has been finalized."

He cited this example: The Carter Administration's national energy plan was drafted by a small group of non-industry people and it was only on the eve of the anouncement that industry representatives were shown the plan as an accomplished fact.

In the current setting, unlike in the days of World War II and other times, industry is kept at arms length by government and viewed with suspicion and at times with outright hostility. At the same time, the industry looks askance at virtually every government move.

In a sense, government and industry are now working at cross purposes rather than working together. In Ikard's opinion, this is self-defeating.

This situation has come about primarily because the "tilt" in recent years has been toward protecting the consumer while at the same time virtually ignoring the supply side.

"The net result has been the liquidation of inventories and this, in turn, has resulted in higher and higher prices to consumers," Ikard said.

At a time when the nation's domestic supply of energy has been dwindling in relatin to demand, there have been increasing restraints on the development of domestic energy resources.

These restraints have been evident in the development of federal lands, development of the offshore areas, and so forth. This has resulted in less domestic development, rather than an increase.

As for the future, Ikard anticipates there will likely be more and more governmental regulation and more and more government bureaucracy involvement in energy matters. If the nation continues along this road, the inevitable results will be a nationalized petroleum industry or one so regulated it will be able to move ahead only by government permission.

It may be, he said, that regulation will become so burdensome it will eventually be thrown out. "I've talked with people from other countries where this is happening," Ikard said.

Ikard does not expect any major change in the government-industry relationship in the near future. "Short-range, the industry simply has to try to survive and hope that the tide will eventually change."

"In government, politicians historically have gone for the scent--the issue of the day. That is now the energy business and that's why it is getting the attention of the politicians. One day, some day, the scent will be something else and attention will be diverted to that issue."

Therefore, the real test ahead is whether the industry can withstand the period of stress and strain of more and more government involvement.

The question as to whether the government or the industry will be the primary force in the nation's energy future remains unanswered.

He obviously feels that oilmen are better equipped to run the oil industry than government bureaucrats. But he has been on the Washington scene long enough to realize that this does not necessarily mean that is the way it will be done.

Production announced

AUSTIN—Reported and estimated unreported production of Texas crude oil totaled 90,488,944 barrels in March 1978, the Railroad Commission's Oil and Gas Division reports.

The preliminary figure compares with final compilations of February 1978 production totaling 81,169,522 barrels and March 1977 production of 95,303,177 barrels.

Texas oil production averaged 2,911,247 barrels daily in March 1978, up from 2,989,266 barrels daily in February.

The March allowable totaled 110,516,625 barrels for the month.

The preliminary March summary indicated Texas oil production was 18.12 percent under the allowable for that month.

Jack H. Walters

D&D Club will meet

The Desk and Derrick Club of Midland, will hold its regular dinner meeting at 7 p.m. Thursday at the Midland Country Club.

Jack H. Walters, district superintendent, Midland District, Sohio Petroleum Co. will be the guest speaker. His topic will be the Alaska Pipeline.

Walters was born in Oklahoma and received a degree in Chemical Engineering from the University of Oklahoma. He served in the Navy as engineering officer aboard the U.S.S. Hammerhead in Southwest Pacific during World War II.

He has been employed by Sohio from 1946 to the present time. He has worked as engineer, foremen, or district superintendent in West Edmond Ok.; Pauls Valley, Ok.; Houston; Lake Charles, Lo.; Shreveport, Lo.; Tyler, Casper, Wyo.; Alice; Russell, Kan.; and Midland. He is in charge of drilling and production for Sohio in the Permian Basin.

He holds membership in the American Petroleum Institute, SPE of AIME, Texas-Mid Continent Oil and Gas Association, New Mexico Oil and Gas Association and the Midland Rotary Club.

Purchase approved

DENVER, Colo.—Forest Oil Corp. announced its board of directors has approved the purchase of additional shares of its common stock up to an aggregate amount of $2 million.

These purchases will be made over the next several months and will depend upon the market price of the stock and others.

In December 1977, Forest announced plans to purchase a similar amount of stock and these purchases were completed late in March with the acquisition of 116,800 common shares.

A company spokesman indicated that in the opinion of Forest's board its common stock at current price levels represents a good investment opportunity for the company.

Forest previously announced it anticipates dividends paid and which may be paid on its common stock in 1978 at the indicated annual rate will return a capital for federal income tax spurposes based upon information presently available to the company.

Christmann reveals six provisions for successful energy program

By MAX B. SKELTON
AP Oil Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — John J. Christmann has written his second "swan song" as the top spokesman for Texas independent oil operators.

Christmann, a Lubbock, Texas, operator, wrote one a year ago only to be unexpectedly drafted for a third year as president of the Texas Independent Producers & Royalty Owners Association.

Vowing it will be his last, Christmann wrote his second swan song while sitting on a well in Wyoming and circulated it to members prior to Sunday's opening of the trade group's 32nd annual meeting.

His message ranges from the federal bureaucracy to President Carter's proposed crude oil equalization tax.

He said an energy program aimed at increasing domestic exploration and development of oil and natural gas must have six key provisions.

Christmann included the elimination of the minimum tax on intangible drilling costs for independent operators, a sensible and workable definition of new fields and new wells, a sensible timetable for the total decontrol of both crude oil and natural gas prices, provision for the exploration and development of energy resources on federal lands, a drastic simplification of regulations, and rejection of the crude oil equalization tax.

He said the minimum tax provision that applies to independents but not to major companies is ridiculous.

"It takes away one of the main sources of financing for the independent by making it financially stupid to enter into the drilling of a well when you will be forced to pay Uncle 15 percent of your expenditure for the privilege of drilling the well," he said.

"Our drilling cost has multiplied 10 times since 1964 and I have executed contracts from the same drilling contractor for wells in the same immediate area to prove it."

Christmann said he should not be forced to pay the U.S. Treasury another $75,000 to drill a $500,000 development well that would increase domestic supply to replace imported oil.

"None of the incorporated majors are stuck with this grossly discriminating tax," he said.

"Our members are mostly unincorporated, and these are the people who traditionally drill 80 percent of the wildcats and discover the major portion of the new reserves."

Christmann said that mathematically the tax cuts the unincorporated independent's number of wells by the 15 percent he must tender the government.

"Quite frankly, if the tax is not removed, I know of several unincorporated independents who will throw in the towel and sell out to some corporate entity," he said. "It's a hell of a way to run a railroad or a country.'

Christmann said he fears the real purpose of the crude oil equalization tax proposal is to establish a strong vested interest in perpetuating crude oil price controls.

The tax proposal would permit prices for domestic crude oil to reach the world level but the revenues would go to the U.S. Treasury instead of to producers.

"This is one of the most unfair and possibly unconstitutional parts of the entire administration's energy brain child," he said.

"The reserves which I have accumulated over the years should be sold at a 'price that reflects their replacement cost', according to the President's own words," Christmann said.

"It is my contention the tax is tantamount to the taking of assets for the general welfare without due compensation."

He said the proposal is no different than the taking of one-half of a man's farm for a freeway right-of-way without his being compensated for the same at the market value.

"Maybe we could take a lesson from the coal miners and just shut in our 'old' oil wells for the duration of the tax and let the government patronize OPEC," Christmann said.

Center sets new course

An AAPG continuing education course entitled "Integrated Geophysics for Exploration Geologists" will be conducted by the Permian Graduate Center, 105 W. Illinois St., Midland, from 3 to 6 p.m. and 7 to 10 p.m. Thursday. The fee is $60.

The course will cover the different geophysical tools and how they complement each other. It briefly describes three active geophysical measurements (seismic reflection, seismic refraction and electrical) and two passive geophysical measurements, (gravity and magnetics).

Most of the course is devoted to geologic case histories covering a wide range of geologic problems.

It is non-mathematical, and an attempt will be made to select those geologic examples of interest to the attendees. Particular subsurface problems are illustrated which cannot be solved by a single tool, thus requiring the application of integrated geophysics and geology.

Dr. Tom R. LaFehr; exploration consulant of EDCON in Denver, Colo. will instruct the class. He previously held the positions of technical supervisor and vice president of GAI-GMX in Houston, before assuminng his present position.

Coast Guard slow, GAO report charges

By JOHN LENGEL

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Coast Guard often has been slow to contain and clean up oil spills, the General Accounting Office said in a report Friday.

A study of 137 spills along the Atlantic and Gulf coasts showed that in 38 percent of the cases, the Coast Guard could have respondey faster to spill reports and done a better job of removing oil before it dissipated, the congressional auditing agency said.

However, the GAO also said the Coast Guard generally does its job "in a creditable manner considering its limited staffing and equipment resources."

GAO said the service, which receives about $60 million a year for fighting oil pollution, can improve its record through better coordination and more intensive training of personnel.

In one incident criticized by the GAO, a pipeline leak of about 100 gallons of oil was reported to the Coast Guard. Investigators did not arrive at the scene for nine hours, at which time they found the spill exceeded 10,000 gallons, the GAO said.

In another case, the cleanup of a spill by a private contractor was checked by a Coast Guard aircraft. State authorities later found oil hidden in marsh grass and reeds, causing the contractor to be called back at extra expense, GAO said.

GAO said in one case involving a leaking tanker, the Coast Guard allowed oil to spill for two hours while it arbitrated a dispute between two private cleanup companies.

And in another incident, the GAO said, a barge leaked 80,000 gallons over a three-month period while the Coast Guard tried to decide who would clean up the spill and how. The leak never was cleaned up, the GAO said, although consulting engineers believed the Coast Guard could have done the job.

The Transportation Department, the Coast Guard's parent agency, agreed there is room for improvement, but said the service often must deal with spills far from its installations and make initial decisions on skimpy information. And experts frequently disagree on a course of action, the department added.

The GAO study was requested by a Senate appropriations subcommittee. The incidents cited by the GAO occurred in 1975 and 1976, but no locations were given.

Midlander plans test

Aaron F. Giebel of Midland has scheduled his No. 1 J. Willis Johnson in an attempt to reopen lower 5100 Strawn oil production in the Christoval multipay field of Tom Green County.

The 5,300-foot operation is seven miles northeast of Christoval and 660 feet from north and east lines of section 23, block 25, H&TC survey.

The drillsite is 5/8 mile northwest of the original discovery and separated by a Pennsylvanian oil strike.

Slight increase logged in rotary rig activity

Drilling activity in the Permian Basin of West Texas and Southeast New Mexico showed an increase of six rigs in operation over the previous weeks count.

A weekly survey of rotary operations conducted by Reed Drilling Equipment showed 282 rigs turning to the right. Last weeks count showed 276 rigs going. Although weekly activities have increased in the two-state area, a talley conducted at this time last year showed 286 rigs in operation.

Eddy County, N. M., the leader in drilling activity in the two-state area, showed 33 rigs going, gaining two operations over last weeks count.

Pecos County, the West Texas leader, tied with Lea County, N. M., in rotary operations showing 24 rigs going in each county.

Andrews County remained a leader in West Texas activity with a count of 12 rigs in operation.

Yoakum and Gaines counties were the scene of 10 rigs going in each county, while other activity in the two-state area is listed in the table below.

Salesmen, reporters, repairmen, executives, lawyers and doctors have found the beeper indispensable. Lives have been saved because of beepers alerting doctors to special needs. Families can find a variety of uses for beepers. For instance a beeper can offer peace of mind when there is an invalid in the family.

GCS Mobilfone offers the Midland area three basic types of communication services. Besides beepers they have available mobile telephones and an answering service.

John Schmidt, District Manager of GCS Mobilfone, will be glad to discuss your communications problems and needs. Call him at 683-2711 or go by 710 W. Washington for the answer to your communication requirements.

Lockers no longer

WAYZATA, Minn. (AP) — Students at Wayzata High School were a bit perplexed when they came to school.

It seems that pranksters switched the locks on about 1,500 lockers at the school.

Principal William Manning, said the mischief — which added excitement to the Thursday morning routine — occurred sometime after 9 p.m. Wednesday, and was evidently carried out with the help of a master key.

Because there are only eight days before the end of school, officials do not plan to reassign the locks until next year.

Signs tell story

SALEM, Ore. (AP) — The signs tell the story.

Last summer, nude sunbathers at Rooster Rock State Park said they were harassed, and some families with children complained they weren't warned that they would encounter nudists.

So David Talbot, state parks superintendent, decided that a little information might help out this year. He designed 28 signs to be posted in the park.

Four of the signs say: "Attention. Nude sunbathing may be encountered on the east beach. Visitors who may be offended should not proceed beyond this point. Disrobing is not allowed until arriving at the designated area."

Twelve signs say: "Attention. Nudism is allowed 500 feet east of this sign. Disrobing is not allowed until arriving at the designated area."

Secretary leaves post

WASHINGTON (AP) — Hazel Runyon says she cried at the thought of leaving her farm home just outside Charlottesville, Va., and taking a job in Washington, some 125 miles away.

That was in 1943, when Hazel was a petite girl and Washington was the bustling domain of President Franklin D. Roosevelt, a wartime Congress and world visitors who really didn't notice her anquish.

But Hazel, just graduated from Lane High School in Charlottesville, needed a job. So, fighting her tears, she went to work for the Agriculture Department in January 1944 at a salary of $1,440 a year.

Mrs. Runyon retired Friday after working for eight secretaries of agriculture, most of her career as their up-front person. She answered as many as 247 telephone calls in a single day and braved the occasional wrath of citizens, politicians and foreign dignitaries who demanded to speak with her boss immediately.

For most of the time since Claude R. Wickard was Roosevelt's secretary of agriculture during World War II, it was Hazel who answered the phone and greeted visitors in a glass-paneled outer office which screens the inner sanctum.

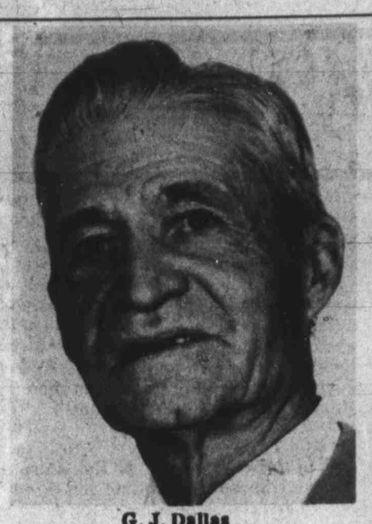

"I didn't want to come to Washington," Hazel said. "I cried. I didn't want to leave home. I was just a country girl."

Her new job was in the Agriculture Department's Office of Materials and Facilities, a wartime agency in the basement of the administration building two floors down from the reception desk she later was to occupy for so long.

Hazel said she took a three-year leave and missed working for Secretary Clinton P. Anderson so she could attend to her marriage and a son, Rick.

But in July 1950, she returned to the department, and in 1952 moved into the executive suite of offices where Charles F. Brannan was President Truman's farm chief. After being a "back-up receptionist" for Brannan, Hazel in 1954 took over the job on a fulltime basis.

The Cabinet title never changed but the names and the administrations did.

Investment predicted

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — Iran will invest $600 billion in new industry in the next 10 years to shift the economy away from its dependency on oil revenue, a government official said today.

Mohammed Yeganeh, Iran's minister of economic affairs and finance, said in a nationally televised interview that Iran has been successful in reducing its dependency on oil in the past few years.

In 1976, oil revenues accounted for 71 percent of the national budget, which totaled about $60 billion, he said. That figure was reduced to 60 percent last year, Yeganeh added.

Oil money accounts for 49 percent of the current national budget, he said. Yeganeh said revenues from new taxes and other sources will help the government reach its invest8ment goal.

Foundation announces grants

CHICAGO—Students from minority groups are being aided this year by $95,800 provided by the Amoco Foundation, Inc., for minoritty manpower development at 32 colleges and universities around the country.

The Amoco Foundation is supported by Standard Oil Co. of Indiana.

A major part of the funds will help prospective minority engineering students receive added guidance in choosing educational and career directions.

Four universities with special programs to recruit and cousel such students will receive $25,000 of the donations.

The four recipients are: Howard University in Washington, D.C.; the University of Illinois in Urbana, Ill.; Texas Southern University in Houston, and Purdue University in West Lafayette, Ind.

"Each of these institutions has a special program to attract more minority students to the field of engineering," Don Burney, executive director of the Amoco Foundation, said. "In industry, we have seen a corresponding need for members of minority groups with engineering degrees. As a result, we have decided to commit $25,000 of the foundation's minority education program budget toward helping bridge this gap." In addition to active recruitment of minority students, the programs also offer such services as high school visitation, campus tours for students, workshops and seminars for prospective engineering students, and counseling for qualified students making critical decisions about their education.

"Proper guidance for young people, particularly those in minority groups, is often the difference between whether or not they set proper career goals for themselves," said Burney. "We hope that Amoco Foundation financial aid willhelp future engineers reach such goals."

For years, the Amoco Foundation has supported various educational programs. In the past, the foundation has sponsored 472 scholarships for National Merit Scholas at an overall cost of almost $1,196,000. In 1977, Amoco Foundation contributed $4,583,000 to benefit society.

Yantis wants arbitrary denial of policies ended

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — State Insurance Board chairman Hugh Yantis said Saturday he wants to stop companies from arbitrarily denying auto policies to such groups as soldiers and divorced women.

He said he thinks the board has the power to do this but welcomes a lawsuit, if one should come, to get a determination by the courts.

And as far as he's concerned, there is no room for denying coverage to anybody except for a bad driving record, Yantis said.

Yantis made his statements in a meeting of the House Auto Insurance Subcommittee and later in an interview.

"I am going to try to make companies include their underwriting guidelines as part of each policy... If one party has got some secret understandings, then a policy is not really a contract," Yantis said.

Underwriting guidelines identify groups that a company will not cover. They also list situations that would cause it to cancel or not review a policy.

Yantis said it might be hard to get a company honestly to disclose its underwriting guidelines. One way would be to require them to submit the guidelines for board approval, he said, with heavy penalties for misrepresentation.

"I think Durwood (Manford) will go along with me... I haven't talked to Ned (Price) about it," Yantis said. Manford and Price are the other two board members.

The insurance plight of the divorced woman came out several times in a draft report presented to the subcommittee by Betsy Geiger, its chief clerk.

She said disproportionate numbers of divorced women seem to end up in the assigned risk pool, which provides minimal auto liability coverage to persons to whom companies won't sell policies voluntarily.

"I'm trying to require that they have to write coverage on her (the divorced woman). If she is a member of a class for which a rate is set, I think they have to write her," Yantis said.

All drivers in the state fit one of the classifications the board uses in setting rates, and all but a handful of companies called Lloyds and county mutuals must use the board's rates.

Yantis said he thinks this removes from companies the right to be picky about whom they cover, except for persons who bad histories of accidents and traffic violations.

"If a company's door is open to sell insurance, then they've got to sell it to any honest person who asks for it — any person who meets reasonable and legal requirements. Them's my sentiments," Yantis said.

Yantis said insurance profits are supposed to come from the collective experience of all of a company's policyholders but some firms try to make a profit on every policy by skimming off only the best risks.

If a company is doing this, he said, "it is getting an unfair rate increase" because board rates are designed to produce a profit from writing all persons in each class.

The subcommittee staff report said companies at least should file their underwriting guidelines with the board. It said Connecticut has such a requirement, and filings there disclosed that companies were reluctant to write auto policies for persons holding such jobs as bellboy, musician, unskilled construction worker and even cleryman.

Companies were accused in the report of "redlining" — denial of auto coverage based on the location where one lives. It cited testimony that Houston residents were finding it hard to get policies.

The report, not yet approved by the full subcommittee, also said the insurance board should drop its driver classification system based on age, sex and marital status.

Persons under 25 and over 65 are rated separately. In the under-25 group, women and married men get lower rates than single men.

"In light of the Texas Equal Rights Amendment and the 14th Amendment of the United States Constitution . . . we believe it is inappropriate for a state agency to promulgate a rating plan which distinguishes on the basis of age, sex and marital status," the draft report says.

It recommended only five classes. Persons with less than three years of driving experience would be rated separately, with lower rates for those who have had driver education. Farm vehicles, private passenger cars used in business and "standard drivers" would compose the other three classes. Most drivers would be in the "standard" class without regard to age, sex or marital status.

The report also recommended:

— Insurance penalties for traffic violations, starting with one's first speeding ticket in a year. Surcharges now start with the second ticket in a year's time.

— Provide assigned risk drivers all the coverages that drivers in the voluntary market can get, including collision and higher liability limits.

— Provide an installment plan for paying premiums in the assigned risk pool.

Battle to keep Big Apple solvent tale of two cities

NEW YORK (AP) — The battle to save New York from bankruptcy is a tale of two cities, one possibly on the verge of fiscal chaos and the other holding the pursestrings.

In New York, marathon negotiations have taken place between the city, its municipal unions, the state and the banks in an effort to secure a series of agreements critical to the city's financial future and its chances of winning renewed federal aid in Congress.

Mayor Edward Koch, who has said that without renewed aid the city would go bankrupt in July, predicted on Saturday that an agreement with the unions would be reached in talks today.

In Washington, where both houses of Congress will consider long-term New York aid legislation this week, congressmen and senators say their constituent mail contains almost no mention of the money problems facing the nation's largest city.

It is a far different situation from 1975 when the city, $2 billion in debt, went to the brink of bankruptcy before Congress brought it back by supplying it $2.3 billion in short-term loans.

Today, the city has cut its deficit to $1 billion, but it remains unable to sell bonds to provide it with the cash it needs.

In 1975, the city's bid for federal aid generated high political drama in Washington and bold newspaper headlines around the nation. Some say one such headline in a New York newspaper — "Ford to City: Drop Dead" — may have cost former President Gerald Ford the state's 41 electoral votes.

Members of Congress say mail on the issue is almost non-existent and one Senate aide confided last week that he was unable to get bankers to testify at the Senate hearings. "You find very little hard support for the bill but almost no one willing to testify against it either," he said.

This year, the Carter administration is quietly lobbying for the bill, which would give New York a mix of up to $2 billion in long-term bond guarantees and short-term loans. The Senate will begin hearings on the legislation Tuesday and the House is preparing to cast its vote Thursday.

Supporters of the bill say bankruptcy would bring social chaos to New York, jeopardize chances of aid for other fiscally troubled cities and tarnish America's image abroad. Opponents minimize the consequences of a possible bankruptcy, arguing that essential services would go on and that a plan could be worked out to pay off the city's bond holders and avoid bankruptcy without federal dollars.

So there are all the makings for another brutal political battle. Except that it hasn't happened. Four days before the House votes, little is heard on Capitol Hill about New York City.

It is a situation that appears to be working in the city's favor politically.

Supporters say the lack of attention may allow reluctant members of Congress to vote for a bill that is perceived as unpopular.

Santa Catalina Island enters twentieth century

AVALON, Calif. (AP) — The 1,800 residents of Santa Catalina Island now have what virtually all other Americans take for granted — dial telephones — and a reminder that progress is bittersweet.

"We're going to miss our operators, I can tell you that," said a store owner in Avalon, the only town on the 21-mile long island.

Catalina, sometimes visible from Los Angeles 20 miles away, was the last dialless outpost of the 160 million-phone Bell System.

The switchover Saturday ended a nationwide transition to dial systems which began in Norfolk, Va., in 1919.

For the first time in the 58-year history of their phone exchange, islanders heard a dial tone in the wee hours Saturday instead of an operator's "Number please?"

Operator Pat Hernandez said about half the local callers used to ask for "John" or "Fred and Sally's" instead of a number. Chief operator Jean Windle, a 35-year-veteran of the Catalina switchboard, said operators would call a neighbor if an elderly customer's phone would drop off a hook, and once operators helped stop a burglary.

"About a year ago, one of our operators picked up a phone at a doctor's offfice in the middle of the night," said Mrs. Windle. "She heard strange noises on the other end. She knew nobody should have been in the office at that hour. She called police, and, sure enough, burglars had knocked the phone off a hook."

The culprits were caught, she said."

Pacific Telephone Co. spokesman Dick Tripp said that growth, while slow on the rigidly zoned and regulated island, finally reached the point where the 19 wooden switchboards, already cramped in a small office, and operators couldn't handle calls efficiently.

In the summer, weekend visitors sometimes swell the population to 10,000, and a building "boom" here is bringing "overtown" ways, as the islanders put it, to one of the last outposts of slow-paced living in population-bulging Southern California.

Pacific Telephone President Ted Saenger, who flew to the island for changeover ceremonies Friday, conceded that "sometimes progress and growth are painful, whether it is a telephone system moving forward or the country store becoming a supermarket — with just a little less personal service, but with a whole lot more products and conveniences."

The company employed 16 full-time operators, but the switchboard force swelled to 27 during peak summer months, Tripp said. Of the full-time crew, he said, four accepted transfers to the mainland.

Gun control supported by most, survey shows

WASHINGTON (AP) — An overwhelming majority of the public, including gun owners, supports federal registration of handguns, according to a survey released on the 10th anniversary of the assassination of Sen. Robert F. Kennedy.

The study, released by the Center for the Study and Prevention of Handgun Violence, concurs with earlier polls. But it also shows a new high in public sentiment for gun control.

The center, which supports gun control, said Saturday its findings "indicate that the American public today feels even stronger about the need for effective federal handgun control legislation than in past years."

The center, headed by Milton S. Eisenhower, was formed in 1968 following the assasination of Kennedy. The survey was conducted by Cambridge Reports Inc., which is headed by Pat Caddell, President Carter's pollster.

The survey was conducted during April and May "among a national cross section of 1,500 adults," the center said.

It found that 84 percent of its respondents favored stringent federal laws governing the registration of newly purchased handguns, with only 12 percent opposed.

This compares with a 1975 Gallup poll which found 67 percent in favor of registration of all firearms, and one the same year by Louis Harris, in which 73 percent said they favored federal control of handguns such as registration of all purchases.

The new poll also shows that 49 percent of those questioned said they would be more inclined to vote for a political candidate who favors handgun controls. Twenty-eight percent said they would be less inclined to do so.

Eighty-two percent said prospective purchasers of handguns should be required to get a permit or license to purchase the weapons, with 14 percent opposed. Seventy-four percent said they would require registration of all guns already in the hands of civilians, and 20 percent opposed this.

Packet could be lifesaver

PITTSBURGH (AP) — A quick look in the refrigerator may help emergency medical crews save a life in Pittsburgh area homes.

Volunteers on Saturday began distributing 20,000 "Envelopes of Life," a packet containing a medical history information form, to every home in suburban Bethel Park, South Park and Upper St. Clair.

The form, in an adhesive-backed plastic envelope, is to be completed for each member of a household and placed in the right, inside wall of the refrigerator.

"When we enter the homes, sometimes the pitch is so high in a crisis that we don't get the type of information we need," said Lisa Whisker of the Tri-Community South Emergency Medical Services, which organized the distribution of the packets.

"That kind of information could be lifesaving. Our paramedics will go directly to the refrigerator," Mrs. Whisker said. "It will always be there. Everyone has a refrigerator."

The cost of the project was about $1,000 and was paid for by donations from community organizations.

The forms ask questions about recent surgery, illnesses, medications, handicaps and medical equipment used in the home. They ask about the language spoken in the home and whether things such as pacemakers, contact lenses, dentures and braces are used.

Elections in Duval County probed

SAN DIEGO, Texas (AP) — The courthouse flowers have bloomed, school is out at Archie Parr Elementary School and state investigators are looking into the elections here. It's springtime in Duval County.

The citizens here have been experimenting with democracy since George Parr — the "Duke of Duval" — killed himself in April 1975.

Several state and local officials believe the populace has not yet mastered the electoral process.

"Both sides are using old machine tactics," said County Auditor Donato Serna.

The allegations that brought state investigators here claim that incompetent residents of a nursing home that is not in Duval County cast absentee ballots. The home is a few hundred yards east of the county line and the residents are former Duval citizens who may still vote here.

"I have a suspicious mind about these nursing home things," said Bill Kimbrough, an investigator from the secretary of state's office.

Kimbrough said the charges and countercharges have been flying.

"People come to me from both factions. The old party tells me all the bad things about the Carillo faction and the Carillo faction tells me all the bad things about the old party," he said.

The old party is the remnant of the Parr forces. The Carillos became Parr's opponents.

But Kimbrough said his work here has turned up scant evidence of wrongdoing in the runoff races.

"In the first primary everyone in the world was sending in absentee ballots from the nursing home. But our griping and raising hell slowed them down," he said.

The nursing home balloting was further clouded by the candidacy of a part-owner of the facility.

Some county officials say the investigations are needed. Others feel they are merely publicity-seeking efforts by state officials.

Auditor Serna is glad the polls were being watched during Saturday's balloting.

"It doesn't look too good for us but we're better off that they came," he said.

Sheriff Raul Serna, no relation to the auditor, also said he saw some need for the investigators — but he also fears they may be here for the wrong reasons.

"I'd be the last to say we don't have any problems. Some people are wanting to use their positions to tell people how to vote," Sheriff Serna said.

But he quickly added that "state officials like to make a name for themselves.

"They pick this county because there's no way they can get hurt at the polls. There are only about 6,000 votes," he said.

County Judge Gilberto Uresti, a pharmacist who took office when the previous regime was wiped out by the courts, said the problems are minor.

"We've tried very hard to change the image of Duval County. Then all of a sudden some people for political gain are trying to destroy our image again," the judge said.

The image problem may be the biggest obstacle. The Parr regime gained national attention for its "patron" system. Hundreds of indictments were returned against county officials.

Jim Wells County District Attorney Arnold Garcia has looked into the nursing home situation and is convinced there are real problems. An Alice grand jury will be looking into the allegations so soon.

"There's no question in my mind there were people not capable of voting a ballot," Garcia said. The problem in making cases though, he added, is a state law that excludes only "lunatics and idiots" from voting.

"We have not been able to find a case defining lunatics and idiots," he said. "It's a mess."

Kimbrough said the problem may be one of growing pains. He was here several years ago to look into alleged irregularities during the constitutional election. Although there were no local candidates on the ballot, Kimbrough said the local machines could not resist getting involved.

"It was an exercise in maintaining party communications," he said.

Walter Meek, a former county auditor who grew up with Parr, agreed about the growing pains.

"It's like an emerging nation in Africa. The people are just not ready for democracy, he said. " There's no question about it, Duval County under the old regime had a very corrupt county. But it was different from corruption in other counties...more benevolent."

And Kimbrough agreed with Meek. Election investigators are also in several surrounding counties in South Texas.

"It's more vicious in the other counties," he said. " Here it's just a way of life."

Jackson Mets rip four homers to down Cubs

BY TED BATTLES

They say good pitching will beat good pitching any old day in the week and the Jackson Mets not only got the pitching, but the hitting to go with it.

The Mets dumped four homers over the left field fence in beating Midland, 6-2, in the opener of the Texas League series at Cubs Stadium Saturday night, and in view of the muscle display, Midland fans probably will find it difficult to believe that the Mets hadn'thit a home run in 16 games prior to Saturday's outburst.

Jeff Reardon, who beat Midland with a five hitter, 3-2, the last time the teams met in Jackson, did it again with a nine-hitter and last inning relief help from Kim Seamon when his forearm tightened up in the eighth.

Accustomed to pitching in the spacious Jackson ball park on the humid Mississippi River bottomland where baseballs behave like shot puts, Reardon said, "I didn't pitch any differently tonight, I just concentrated on keeping the ball down."

The righthander from Pittsfield, in Massachusetts beautiful Berkshire country, confessed, "I didn't have a good breaking ball and I usually throw harder. Tonight I had only four strikeouts and I have been averaging one an inning."

Even with less than his best stuff, Reardon, who pitched for the University of Massachusetts, was good enough to notch his sixth victory in seven decisions.

HIS MET teammates made it easy for him, nicking Midland starter Jeff Albert for three home runs and reliever Bob Clark for another.

The big one was Keith Bodie's first of the year in the second and it came after singles by Juan Montaserio and Keno Perry. That made it 3-0.

Keno Perry connected for the longest of the night, a solo job in the fourth that leftfielder Jimmy Buckner didn't even bother to chase itto the wall as it disappeared over the horizon in the general direction of Lamesa.

For Bodie and Perry, it was the first homer of the year.

Bob Healy led off the fifth with a solo homer, his second, and Paco Perez spoiled Clark's shutout string with his leadoff homer in the ninth.

BRIAN ROSINSKI supplied Midland's only offensive punch of the night when he lined a homer to left after Eric Grandy's infield single in the sixth. It was Rosinski's fifth homer of the year.

Otherwise, the Cubs best shots were to right into the wind. With two runners on in the third, Buckner drove Montasario to the fence in right for his smash and then in the eighth, Duane Gustavson's promising drive to right died as it hit the wind.

THE CUBS and Mets come back with a 6:30 p.m. game today. Randy Martz (5-2) will be making his first start in three weeks while Louis Lunar (4-3) will go for the Mets.

The Mets almost had another homer, but Buckner one-handed William Wilson's bid off the wall in the fifth. Brian Rosinski saved another hit with a sliding catch of Perry's sinking liner in the eighth.

BRUIN BREWIN'S— The Cubs beat Lunar in the first game of the series at Jackson...Martz is making his first start after missing the last road trip with a mouth infection...Reardon, in only his second year of pro ball, was 9-3 with Lynchburg (Carolina) last year in two months after being drafted by the Mets. "Don't tell anybody, but I was hoping the Red Sox would pick me. No, pitching in Fenway Park wouldn't bother me."...Monday is Gauranteed Win Night at Cubs Stadium..

Midland's Lee Rebels suffer through doubleheader defeat

By BOB DILLON
R-T Sports writer

LUBBOCK -- It's a bitter pill to swallow.

Robert E. Lee outplayed Monterey in the first game and outhit the Plainsmen in both games, but still dropped a pair of heartbreakers by the scores of 5-4 and 7-6 here Saturday afternoon at Lowery Field in the Class AAAA state baseball quarterfinals.

A call at home plate in the first game most likely cost Coach Ernie Johnson's Rebels a trip to the state tournament next week, but they beat themselves in the deciding game after holding on to a 6-4 lead in the bottom of the seventh inning with two out.

Monterey ace Ron Reeves, did an iron-man stint on the mound in picking up both wins in relief of starters Derek Hatfield and Phil Bruedigam.

Lee blew a 4-1 lead in the opening game when the Plainsmen scored four runs in the bottom of the sixth with the call at home plate the difference.

Leftfielder Dana Riger was called safe at home on a perfect throw to the plateby Rebel outfielder Todd Clements. Rieger scored and the Lubbock team scored three more runs after that to take the 5-4 victory. The winning run came in on a walk to shortstop Mike Wooten with the bases loaded.

After two were out in the top of the seventh, third baseman Craig Van Horn ripped a double, but died on base when Don Rasure was called out on strikes to send the three-game series into a third and deciding game.

LEE TOOK a 2-0 lead off Hatfield in the third inning of the first game. Steve Pitts was hit by a pitch and John White popped up to Bruedigam at third, but Pat Moore delivered a single and Clements followed with a two-run double up the power alley in right-center. Hatfield also hit Clay Calhoun, but got off the hook when Van Horn rapped into a double play.

The Rebels added two more runs in the third inning when the Plainsmen committed three errors, giving the Tall City team a commading 4-0 advanatge.

Johnson had elected to go with his ace, Terry Willis and the junior righthander responded with a shutout for three innings before Reeves blasted a 360-foot home run over the fence in left to cut the lead to 4-1.

After one was out in the fifth, Calhoun and Van Horn had base hits off Reeves, but the 210-pound hurler, struck out Rasure looking and Josefy swinging, to leave the two Rebels stranded on the bases.

Schmidt led off the sixth inning with a double and stole third, but Pitts lined out to Ricky Pinkerton at second, White looked at a third strike and Moore grounded out to short.

THEN CAME the fatal sixth inning as Monterey scored four times on only two hits. Willis issued walks to Dana Rieger and Reeves after fanning Jeff Harp. Mike Craig singled into left where Clements came up throwing and had Rieger dead at the plate, but the call went against the Rebs. That would have made it two outs, but instead, Monterey had renewed life. Eric Voyles walked and was wild pitched to second. In came Mark Denny to relieve Willis and he have up a two-run single to Bruedigam to tie the score, 4-4. Pinkerton grounded out to Schmidt at first, but Denny walked Andy Barron and Johnson chose to bring in Schmidt who walked Wooten to force in with what proved to be the winning run.

Lee lost a golden opportunity in the top of the first inning in the deciding game to chase Bruedigam from the mound when Moore doubled into deep center and Clements dropped a double just in front of Craig with Moore holding at second until he saw the ball fall in. That gave Lee runners at second and third with nobody out, but they were unable to score. Calhoun bounced at sharply to third, Van Horn struck out swinging and Schmidt also grounded out to third.

A walk to Barron and double by Craig, gave Monterey a 1-0 lead in the bottom ofthe first, but Lee tallied three unearned runs in the top of the second for a 3-1 lead when the Plansmen committed three errors.

Pitts, who had three hits in the game, had a single while Moore had a bunt single and Calhoun a base hit during the uprising.

Lee decided to give back those three runs with a pair of errors in the bottom of the second as Monterey took a 4-3 lead. Jeff Harp had a double and Wooten an infield single.

Schmidt preceeded to shut out the Plainsmen for the next four innings with three double plays turning back Monterey. Meanwhile, Lee tied the game in the fourth inning on a double by Pitts and throwing error by Harp to make it 4-4.

THINGS LOOKED great in the top of the sixth when Lee went in front, 6-4, but another close call at the plate, took another run away from Johnson's crew when Pitts was forced at the plate on a suicide squeeze bunt. Pitts had started off the inning with a single and White bunted safely for a base hit. Moore laid down a bunt that caught Monterey alseep and all runners were safe, loading the bases. Clements flew out to shallow center and Calhoun's squeeze bunt missed at home on the call. Van Horn followed with a single up the middle to score two runs and the 6-4 lead.

Voyles walked to start the bottom of the sixth, but Harp flew out to right and Bruedigam grounded into a double play. Lee was turned away in the top of the seventh, but things still looked rosey until lightning struck with two out in the bottom of the seventh.

Pinkerton flew out to left, but Barron singled and Wooten followed with a single into right. Craig struck out swinging. Rieger hit a two-strike deliveryinto left field where Clements dove at the ball at it skipped past him and rolled all the way to the fence, scoring both Barron and Wooten.

Reeves came up and hit one to Rasure at second where he misplayed the ball and Rieger crossed the plate with the winning run.

The victory sends Monterey to the state tourney along with Houston Bellaire, Corpus Chisti Moody and Duncanville and ends Lee's season with a final 26-11 reading. Monterey, meanwhile is 32-5 and has won 31 straight at home over a two-year period.

It was a frustrating afternoon for the Rebels who rapped out eight doubles, turned three double plays and out hit the Plainsmen 10-7 in the deciding game and 8-6 in the first game, but just wasn't to be for the District 5-4A champions.

Track favorites dominate 500

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — A pair of Texas short-track favorites, Tom Williams and Freddie Fryer, dominated the rain-delayed qualification runs for Sunday's Texas 500 stock car race.

Former winner A.J. Foyt had mechanical troubles and did not qualify, but organizers said they would assign him a starting spot in the rear of the field.

That's also where Bobby Allison will start. Fryer qualified Allison's Matador because Allison had to race in Nashville, Tenn.

Fryer said the car was much better than third-fastest qualifying speed, behind Williams and Terry Ryan, but he just wanted to make sure of a solid performance to earn Allison a starting position.

Wiliams earned a front-row berth for last year's Texas 500, but lasted only three laps in the race. "The speed is out of pure skill. Endurance is out of pure money," he said. "That's what makes a car go 500 miles — cubic dollars, not cubic inches.

"Somebody like Foyt can afford to spend $20,000 for a race like this. I don't even spend $2,000."

Williams, from Schertz, Texas, said it was the first time he ever had the pole position for a super-speedway race.

Oral Roberts rips NC, 11-0

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Vince Bienek slammed a triple, a double and a single, driving in four runs and helping Oral Roberts blast North Carolina 11-0 Saturday night in first-round action at the College World Series.

Later Saturday night, defending champion Arizona State met St. John's of New York.

In a losers' bracket game Saturday afternoon, Augie Ruiz allowed one hit in seven innings and Randy Guerra drove in two runs as Miami of Florida thrashed Baylor, 12-1.

Bienek singled in the second inning but was one of three Oral Roberts' runners left stranded. In the next inning, he doubled to drive in two runs and knocked in two more in the fourth with a triple to the center field fence.

The Titans took advantage of six walks issued by North Carolina's starter Greg Norris, who had entered the game with the finest college pitching record in the country, 14-0.

Norris was relieved after 32-3 innings by David Kirk, who then gave up four more runs to Oral Roberts.

Oral Roberts, playing for the first time in the series, raised its record to 45-10. The winning pitcher was Ron Meridith, 13-1.

Jim Rouse had two of North Carolina's four hits, both singles, as the Tar Heels fell to 36-16.

Arizona State's Hubie Brooks set an NCAA batting record at the College World Series Saturday night when he got his 120th hit of the year.

Brooks, a shortstop for the defending champion Sun Devils, carried a .436 batting average into the series.

Stacy Margolin defeats Jordan

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Stacy Margolin, a University of Southern California freshman, downed Barbara Jordan of Stanford, 6-3, 6-2 Saturday to capture the United States Tennis Association Women's National Tennis Championships.

Margolin, the tournament's No. 2 seed, used her speed and quickness to thwart Jordan's drop shot efforts throughout the match. She also broke Jordan's serve five times.

Southern Cal chalked ups its second straight team championship with a 53-point total. Miami, Fla., took second place with 37½ points followed by Florida with 26½.

Others included San Diego State, 26; Odessa College, 26; SMU 23½; Texas 21; Brigham Young, 18, and LSU 17.

The day Indy locked its doors in Jim Hall's face

TERRY WILLIAMSON

In the fall of 1965, a streamlined sports car raced around the Indianapolis Motor Speedway's 2½-mile oval. There wasn't a soul in the stands, but the guessing had started.

The Chaparral racing around the track was owned by Midland race genius Jim Hall, and racing fans from California to New York just took it for granted that Hall was coming to try his luck in the famed Indy 500. The guessing went on until 1978 when Hall entered and won in his first outing. That was mircale enough, but what took so long?

The old guard at Indy had suffered a bad year in 1965. The rear-engined road race equipment had knocked the wheels off the hallowed 500 roadster, and now the rumors were that Hall was at Indy to test the Chaparral's new automatic gearbox, which would again revolutionize the racing scene. But when the 1966 race unfolded, Hall was nowhere to be found. He didn't have an entry.

The strange thing is that Hall had his entry form ready to go for the 1966 race, but the guessers proved they knew more than they let on. In fact, it was Indy officials who had turned off Hall's power.

"I WAS ready to take a car to Indy in 1966," Hall remembers. "And we had tested a new gearbox setup on the Indy track in 1965, but that was not the reason we were going to make a run at it.

"We had been experiencing with an aerodynamic design with a rear wing on the car that would make the car hug the ground in the turns and allow higher speeds in the straightaways. We knew that the car was faster than anything at Indy, and we thought we could win it."

The secret somehow leaked, and it would be 1978 before Hall was to get another chance at the 500.

"I don't know how word got out about the new design," Hall still says to this day. "I know we didn't tell anyone about it, but word got out somehow. I had an entry blank in September before the 1966 race and was ready to enter, but they banned the design before we could ever make an appearance. I don't know how they knew about it because I know no one else had the design execpt us. It was one of those things that still baffles me."

SO, HALL went back to the Formula I competition, and things just didn't turn out for another Indy test until this past year.

"There are a lot of reasons why we've never been back for another try," Hall says. "It's hard to go in different directions. We had our program geared at other things for a long time. Also the economic conditions dictated our efforts a lot. It's hard to line up sponsors in one area, and then try to line up a different set of sponsors for something else. I guess the time just wasn't right until now."

Hall got his revenge a week ago today when his First National City Traveler's Checks sposored Lola won it all behind the expert driving of Al Unser, the fifth driver in Indy history to win the event three times. The new Cosworth powered machine was designed by Eric Broadley of England and modified for Indy-style racing by Hall. Jim took a conservative approach with a smooth, unspectacular persistence that makes for dull races, but keeps the car together.

"I THINK we could have qualified for a front row berth with a faster speed, but we played the whole thing in a conservative fashion," Hall says.

Bobby Hillin, principal owner of the Longhorn Racing Team who failed to qualify his Eagle-Offy for the main 500 show, was in Hall's corner all the way. He thinks the Chaparral team went about the race in a winning style, and predicted before the race that Unser would win it.

"They took a fast driver, a fast car and threw in a conservative approach. That's the winning combination here. Danny Ongais blew three engines here this month while pushing his car for a fast qualifying position. Hall didn't blow an engine all month. They got everything they could out of that car."

It was a long time coming, as you can see, but it was worth it. There even seems to be a little revenge thrown in to boot. Newcomers aren't necessarily welcome at the 500, and first time winners produce shock waves heard around the world.

I wonder what Indy officials will do to keep Hall out of the running next year? If he is a Indy fixture, it may ruin the 500. Move over A. J. Foyt, the crown the crown is now in Midland. Houston may just have to wait a while before it gets it back.

Beman lifts PGA rule on standards qualifying

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Deane Beman, commissioner of the Professional Golfers' Association tour, said Saturday he was lifting a PGA tour rule which would have required PGA and U.S. Open winners to qualify for the tour if their current performances did not meet PGA tour standards.

Beman, in a news conference here where the Kemper Open is underway, said his action would lead to the withdrawal of a lawsuit that was filed by 12 former PGA and U.S. Open champions who challenged the rule, which would have taken away their exempt status for the tour.

The rule which Beman lifted was pased by the PGA tour policy board last year. It held that any of the 25 former PGA and U.S. Open champions still on the tour would not be exempt from PGA standards to stay on the tour.

Pro golfers must earn $10,000 yearly after their first year to stay on the tour. Prior to the policy board's rule last year, PGA and U.S. Open champions were exempt from meeting that requirement.

Beman said the rule was an attempt to cut down on the number of players trying to get onto the tour. It would have taken effect next year.

"There are more people that want to play on the tour than places for them," Beman said, adding that he f..lt the rule was justified when it was passed last year, but circumstances had changed since them.

He said he had talked with several golfers whose exemption would be lifted under the rule and felt that generally they would not be playing in more events than they would have been able to play in through other PGA exemptions.

The suit was filed last winter in state court in Houston, Tex., and was later transferred to federal court.

Beman described his action and withdrawal of the suit not as an official settlement but as a gentleman's agreement.

"Golf is a gentleman's game and in he past we've always settled disagreements within the organization," Beman said, adding that it was "regrettable' that both sides in the controversy had not been able to reach an agreement without getting involved in court action.

Beman's suspension of the exemption rule is subject to the approval of the tour's policy board which meets June 27 at Vail, Colo.

Tech alums to honor coaches

Texas Tech enthusiasts will have an opportunity Thursday to show their support when the Red Raider Club and Tech Exes will co-sponsor a golf tournament and barbecue honoring the coaching staffs.

Special guests will include head football coach Rex Dockery, no slouch as a golfer himself, along with basketball coach Gerald Myers and Athletic Director J.T. King.

The day's events will kick off with the golf tourney at Midland Country Club. Tee-off times will begin at 8:00 a.m. with the entry fee set at $25 per person.

Prizes will be awarded at the conclusion of the one-day event. C.H. Brockett is the tourney director this year.

The activities will wind up with the 5:30 p.m. barbecue at the VFW Hall on North Lamesa Highway. Tickets are $6 per person with door prizes to be given away.

49ers sign two rookies

REDWOOD CITY, Calif. (AP) — The National Football League's San Francisco 49ers signed two rookies to one-year contracts Saturday — linebacker Dan Bunz of Long Beach State and running back Elliott Walker of Pittsburgh.

Bunz, 6-foot-3 and 235 pounds, was the 49ers' second choice in the first round of the recent National Football League college draft and the 24th pick overall. Walker, 5-11 and 193 pounds, was a sixth-round choice.

Allison meet expands again

By TERRY WILLIAMSON

The City of Midland Swim Team announced this week that the Allison West Texas Invitational Swim Meet will become an international competition for the first time when swimmers from all over the country and Mexico take to the Alamo Pool Friday, the first day of a gigantic three-day event.

Not only will the ever growing meet have an international flavor this year, but senior competition will be held for the first time, and many of the seniors may be competing in the 1980 Olympic trials for a berth on the U.S. Olympic swimming team.

The Mexico National Senior Team from Mexico City, Mexico, will attend the three-day meet, and will bring 15 senior men and 15 senior women with them to add class to the new format.

IN ADDITION to the Mexican team, the Nashville Aquatic Swim Team from Nashville, Tenn., will participate. The Nashville club is the U. S. National Women's Championship squad. Paul Bergen, head coach of the Nashville entry, was selected as the outstanding swimming coach of the United States in 1977, and will soon take over the reins of the women's swimming program at the University of Texas.

In another meet highlight, the El Monte Swim Team from El Monte, Calif., returns to defend their title, which it won last year in another loaded Allison meet. El Monte will once again bring its talent ladened age group team to compete for the top prize. El Monte placed third in the Natonal Women's competition, and ranked in the top 10 in the overall competitions in the nation a year ago.

STRONG TEAMS from Kansas, Oklahoma and the Southeast are expected to attend. The top Texas team, Dad's Club of Houston, will be represented by over 50 swimmers as it brings its entire state championship team in quest of the first place trophy and prize.

The format for this year's meet is entirely new to United States swimming. Swimming at the national level requires extensive team travel and substantial expense. This year the Allison contribution toward these expenses will be divided on the basis of team standing at the conclusion of the meet.

First place shall receive the first place trophy and a $4,000 contribution to its team's travel fund. Second place will earn $2,000 while third place will garner $1,000. All places four through eight will receive lesser contributions.

THE ALLISON meet adds even another new look as the Texas Senior Swimming Circuit attends for the first time. This division of Texas swimming contains the top senior men and women swimmers in Texas.

Four years ago, the West Texas Invitational Swim Meet ventured into the ranks of top national competition. Each year the meet has taken on more and more national significance, primarily due to the $10,000 per year financial support from Midland oilman Fred M. Allison and his family. This year's meet promises to be one of the most outstanding competitions offered in Texas swimming history. The competition will pit from 350 to 400 swimmers against each other in quest for the first place trophy and prize.

This year's meet is sponsored by the COM team, the Midland Jaycees and the Park and Recreation Department of the City of Midland. Preliminaries will commence at 9 a.m. Friday through Sunday, and finals will be held at 6 p.m. daily. The meet is open to the public.

Today's Allison swimmers could be the bearers of Olympic gold one day because the best meet in Texas is now bigger than ever.

Miami of Florida eliminates Baylor

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Augie Ruiz allowed one hit in seven innings and Randy Guerra drove in two runs Saturday to lead Miami of Florida to a 12-1 thrashing of Baylor in the College World Series.

North Carolina met Oral Roberts and St. John's faced Arizona State in first round baseball games Saturday night.

The loss eliminated Baylor, 43-19, from the series—the second year in a row the Bears had been elimianted in two games.

Ruiz, 13-3, did not give up a hit until Baylor's Fritz Connally singled sharply up the middle in the seventh inning.

Ruiz was pulled in the eighth in favor of Rob Rasjich, who gave up three hits and allowed Baylor a run in the ninth.

The Hurricanes, 49-11, scored in the first and added another in the fourth before erupting for six in the fifth inning. Miami had just three hits in the fifth, two by Erol Akchurin, but capitalized on errors.

Red Auerbach survives spring of discontent

BOSTON (AP) — It's been a spring of discontent for Red Auerbach, watching the National Basketball Association playoffs while his Boston Celtics sit idle.

"Rebuilding?" scoffs the Celtics' president and general manager at the mere suggestion of a steady Boston climb from the depths. "I don't believe in it. The idea is to come back and win the whole damn thing next year."

The once-lordly Celtics, injured and bickering, bumbled last season to their worst NBA record. But Auerbach insists they won't soon sit out another round of playoff competition.

He claims, "We're not that far away right now" from a comeback, even with a roster soon to be overhauled.

Boston has two top draft choices in the first round of the college lottery June 9. The Celtics pick sixth based on their 32-50 record and eighth from a trade with the Los Angeles Lakers.

Significantly, the last high choice, after a 34-48 record in 1968-69, netted star center Dave Cowens from Florida State.

Auerbach now says the team's top need is a backup to relieve Cowens. But that player proably won't come from the draft and a trade is the alternative.

In fact, if Boston could obtain a first-line center, Auerbach says Cowens would move to forward opposite Kermit Washington.

With John Havlicek retired, the Celtics have a small core around which to build a contender. It's limited to Cowens, Washington and guard Jo Jo White, who is unhappy with his contract and recovering from a serious foot operation.

The college draft is important, and Auerbach admits "I've had my share of failures." He blames them on late first-round selections — based on past success in the playoffs — and plain "bad luck."

Clarence Glover, the big No. 1 choice from Western Kentucky in 1971, was hailed as a future NBA star by no less an expert than Adolph Rupp.

"How could we know," asks Auerbach, "the kid would be hypertense on the court?"

In 1972, Boston picked guard Paul Westphal but traded him to Phoenix before he became a star gunner. Auerbach says Westphal "couldn't play with Jo Jo. They both needed the ball."

Then came annual picks of Steve Downing, Glenn McDonald, Tom Boswell, Norm Cook and Cedric Maxwell — all rebounders.

Maxwell showed offensive potential last season but is not rated a future starter. Boswell, a forward-center, is trade bait. The others are long gone.

Since Auerbach selected Cowens, only one other draftee has lasted — reserve guard Kevin Stacom, a No. 2 choice from Providence College in 1974.

Netters shouldn't despair

NEW YORK (AP) — If your weekend tennis opponent has your number, don't despair. There's a breakthrough racket that could bring you back on top.

After the wood and metal revolutions, the tennis boom has produced an expensive graphite racket that was preferred by panelists in a Consumer Reports study and should improve the average player's game by 10-12 percent, according to the Wilson Sporting Goods Co.

Graphite is the same material that is found in pencils and in the nose cone of rockets headed for the moon. A lightweight material noted for its stiffness and strength, graphite in tennis rackets "combines the best features of wood and metal," says Nancy Gelmann, who works on developing new racket designs and materials for Wilson.

Wood rackets are flexible; they bend more on impact, softening more of the blow. "People like wood because of the way it feels on the arm," said Gelmann, during a recent interview here. "But a flexible racket robs you of accuracy and power."

Gelmann says the beneficial feature of the metal (aluminum or steel) rackets are that they are aerodynamically lighter and move more quickly, giving the player greater power.

A wood racket absorbs moisture, so it softens and doesn't last as long as a metal racket, which plays well for four or five years. "Graphite doesn't

Edwards would like move to pits

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Some people might be attracted to golf by its deliberate pace, its chivalrous code of conduct, or the sound of the birds calling from along the fairways.

Not Danny Edwards.

He'd just as soon be in the pits at a big-time stock car race.... which is exactly where he was four days before he teed off in the Kemper Open Golf Tournament here.

Or better yet, the 26-year-old golfer would like to be right out there on the track, whizzing past his competitors at three-diget speeds.

"I could easily see myself doing that one of these days." the tall, lean Oklahoman said during a break while earning his livelihood at Quail Hollow Country Club.

"Benny Parsons is a good friend of mine, and I was staying with him at Ellerbe (35 miles east of Charlotte) last week," Edwards said. "I was n the pits for the World 600, and it was a lot of fun. I was all ready to change a lug nut or something."

Edwards, an Alaska native who was raised and lives in Oklahoma, has been on the pro golf tour four years and was the winner of the 1977 Greater Greensboro Open. But he talks about motorsports as willingly —and with nearly as much familiarity—as he does about golf.

"The only kind of racing I've done is drag racing, which anyone can do. You don't need a special license or anything. I'm halfway to getting my SCCA (Sports Car Club of America) license, and when I finish that up I can drive in Sportsman-type races," Edwards explained.

He prefers road racing to NASCAR events because "you have a lot of turns and just one line." And the prospect of plowing into a retaining wall doesn't deter him a bit.

Still, he's committed to golf — for now, at least — and feels he had "been hitting the ball quite well for awhile, although I haven't been scoring too well."

Rookie's blast sinks Tigers, 9-2

DETROIT (AP) — Rookie third baseman Larry Wolfe slammed two home runs, driving in five runs, and Dave Goltz hurled a five-hitter, leading the Minnesota Twins over the Detroit Tigers 9-2 Saturday.

Wolfe's homers were his first and second of the season. The first was a solo blast off starter and loser Bob Sykes in the fourth, giving the Twins a 3-2 lead they never reliquished. The second was a three-run shot off reliever Steve Foucault in the fifth, capping a four-run rally that knocked out Sykes.

The Twins clubed 15 hits off three Tiger pitchers, scoring twice in the second on an RBI single by Wolfe and a run-scoring double by Roy Smalley.

The Tigers did their only offensive damage off Goltz, 2-3, in the second, scoring twice on singles by Mickey Stanley and Lou Whitaker, walks to Alan Trammell and Rusty Staub and a sacrfice fly by Phil Mankowski.

Homers sink Yanks, 5-1

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Home runs by Gary Thomasson, Mitchell Page and Dave Revering backed a four-hitter by rookie Matt Keough and led the Oakland A's to a 5-1 victory over the New York Yankees Saturday.

The 22-year-old Keough, 3-4, allowed only two hits through seven innings and had retired 15 consecutive batters before the Yankees scored in the eighth. The right-hander struck out four and walked none in recording his first major league complete game.

Thomasson, Page and Revering homered into the right-field seats off New York starter Andy Messersmith, 0-1, who was making his second start since recovering from a shoulder separation.

The A's scored first with an unearned run in the second, and Thomasson hit his fourth homer of the season with Mike Edwards on base in the fifth to give the A's a 3-0 lead. Page and Revering homered on consecutive pitches to open the A's sixth.

With one out in the eighth, Craig Nettles singled to right for New York, went to second on a wild pitch and scored on a double to left by Jim Spencer.

Keough, who was converted from an infielder to a pitcher last year in the minors, sent the Yankees to their fourth loss in the last five games.

Fly ball ruins Brewers

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Andre Thornton knocked in three runs with a homer and a sacrifice fly and Rick Manning added a solo homer Saturday, leading the Cleveland Indians to 6-4 victory over the Milwaukee Brewers.

The Indians took the lead to stay with two first-inning runs after a leadoff single bt Paul Dade, who took third on a throwing error by Robin Yount. After a walk to Buddy Bell, Thornton hit a sacrifice fly and Willie Horton stroked an RBI single.

The Brewers got one back off Mike Paxton, 2-3, in the second on Gorman Thomas' ninth homer. But the Indians chased loser Jerry Augustine, 5-8, in the third on Manning's second homer of the season, another two-base error by Yount and Thornton's eighth homer to make it 5-1.

The Brewers scored in the fourth on a double by Dick Davis and a single by Yount and they closed the margin to 5-3 in the fifth on a triple by Don Money and a sacrifice fly by Cecil Cooper.

However, the Indians scored an insurance run in the sixth when Davis, the left fielder, misplayed Ron Pruitt's soft fly into a triple and Duane Kuiper followed with a single.

The Brewers scored their final run in the seventh on a double by Buck Martinez, a single by Money and Cooper's sacrifice fly.

Blue Jays rip Texas

TORONTO (AP) — Rico Carty drove in two runs with a first-inning double and Tom Underwood and Tom Murphy combined on a nine-hitter as the Toronto Blue Jays defeated the Texas Rangers 4-3 Saturday night.

Carty's hit-and-run double to left-center, hit off Toronto starter Jim Umbarger, 2-5, scored Bob Bailor and Roy Howell.

The winning run scored on Rick Cerone's RBI single in the eighth.

A leadoff double by Bailor and a throwing error by third baseman Toby Harrah on Carty's ground ball had produced the third Toronto run, in the third inning.

Underwood, 2-6, limited the Rangers to one run on six hits over 6 2-3 innings, striking out five. Murphy, who picked up his fifth save, was touched for a run on two hits in the eighth and Al Oliver's sixth homer of the year in the ninth.

Surging Sox rip Royals

KANSAS CITY (AP) — Designated hitter Jim Breazeale, called up from Iowa just a week ago, knocked in three runs with a pair of singles a and double Saturday night to spark the surging Chicago White Sox to a 9-5 victory over the Kansas City Royals.

Left-hander Ken Kravec, 3-4, got relief Rich Hinton as the White Sox stretched their winning streak to seven games.

The 28-year Breazeale, who had been out of the major leagues for six years until the White Sox called him up May 27, singled home his first run in the opening inning off KC starter Rich Gale, 5-1. A single by Thad Bosley, a double by Ralph Garr and Jorge Orta's sacrifice fly preceded the hit.

Chicago made it 8-0 with six runs in the fourth, Breazeale accounting for two with a bases-loaded single. Chet Lemon also doubled home a run while Bill Nahorodny had a sacrifice fly and Don Kessinger had a two-run triple.

Kansas City scored twice in the fourth on a walk and three singles, then added three in the eighth.

The White Sox got their final tally in the fifth on Orta's second sacrifice fly.

Girls win bowling title

MIAMI (AP) — Cook County Vending, a Chicago bowling team, won the open division team title Saturday in the Women's International Bowling Congress with a final score of 2,956 for $2,500 in prize money.

The team bowled on May 7, the 32nd day of the $47,274 tournament. No team since then could surpass its score. Members of the winning team are Sheila Clegg, Sandy Lutz, Dee Sipos, Kathy Klopp and Joan Karge.

Second in the open division was Disco Deli of Brooklyn with a 2,947 for $2,000. The Green Five of Dallas totaled 2,935 for a third-place purse of $1,-200.

Joyner Garden Center of Alexandria, Minn., captured the Division 1 championship with a total of 2,706, good for $2,500 in prize money. Second in that division was the Miami Dolfans of Miami with 2,697 for $2,100, followed by Brantley Realty of Plant City, Fla., with 2,693 for $1,900.

Gibbons holds lead

WALDEN-ON-LAKE CONROE, Texas (AP) — All-day rain sent scores soaring in the 69th Texas Amateur Golf tournament Saturday, but Bob GibbonsEof Dallas held on to the lead despite a 5-over-par 77.

The 23-year-old graduate student will go into Sunday's final round of play with a 2-stroke lead, and he thinks he'll have to play par golf or better in the final round to hold off the challengers.

Jimmy Adams of Port Arthur moved into second place with a rain-dampened 76, 2 strokes ahead of Ray Barr, Jr. of Brownsville who had 77 for 224.

Fourth is Kirk Branum of Austin, one of the top 10 finishers in the tournament a year ago, who posted a respectable 76 for 225.

Alan Pate awes PGA superstars

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Alan Pate used to be awed by the superstars on the PGA tour. After all, they pulled down thousands of dollars per tournament while he has had to struggle to earn $500 in his first year.

But he leaped from the pack Saturday to take a 1-stroke lead after three rounds of the $300,000 Kemper Open, and the rookie from Mobile, Ala., said he isn't afraid to compete with the big guys any longer.

"The way I look at it now, they're just human beings. They put their pants on one leg at a time like I do, and that's the way I'm gonna look at it tomorrow," Pate said after blasting a 7-under-par 65 to take the lead with 206.

One stroke behind Pate were Wallp Armstrong, Charles Cooly and Andy Bean.

Arnold Palmer, who led at 7-under going into the third round, suffered three bogeys on the final four holes after a 30-minute rain delay and posted a 3-over-par 75 to drop him six strokes behind Pate.

Palmer got a break of sorts by being able to wait out the storm in a house which he owns on the 15th fairway, but he said he "seemed to run down" during the delay.

"As it is now, it's going to be difficult to really make a big move. But you never know. It's happened before," he said.

Pate, who was in a seven-man pack at 3-under going into the third round, birdied four of his first nine holes and picked up two more birdies before he got to the 15th tee.

Armstrong put together three consecutive birdies on the front nine, sunk a birdie putt on the ninth, and had another on the 14th hole.

"I guess I was able to be a little more confident in myself and I wasn't scared at all, probably for the first time since I've been on the tour," said Pate, whose meager winnings so far put him in danger of being dropped from the PGA tour.

Pate said the pressure of having to succeed in order to stay on the tour had helped him get fired up, but he said his performance was not geared only to meeting PGA standards.

"I'm here to win, not just make the minimum requirements," he said.

He explained his new-found ability as strictly a matter of increased confidence and attitude.

"Today I was able to visualize a shot and just hit it," said Pate, who played college golf at Alabama with Jerry Pate. Both men are now pros on the tour but are not related.

Armstrong, whose best finishes this year were ties for fifth place at the Greensboro Open and the Masters, admitted that he enjoyed watching Pate pile up birdies.

"The thing that was exciting to me was to watch Alan play and encourage him on. It was just a super day," said Armstrong, who has posted rounds of 70, 70 and 67.

"I'm playing now about as well as I did at Greensboro and the Masters," he said, adding that he was still recovering from "a little whiplash" he sustained in a car accident last month.

Coody, who has achieved ties for fourth place this year in the Tucson and Los Angles opens, said his rounds of 70, 69 and 68 were the best he has played all year.

"I've managed to drive the ball fairly well. I've hit my irons decently and putted well," he said.

Relief refugees signal victory

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Sparky Lyle and Rich Gossage, Bill Campbell and Rollie Fingers, Al Hrabosky and Mike Marshall.

No longer are relief pitchers merely refugees from the starting rotation, the extra men to be used only as a last resort.

With Lyle and Marshall copping Cy Young awards in recent years, relief pitchers finally are beginning to get their due, and Wes Stock, for one, says it's about time.

"There are so many good ones around today," explained the Seattle Mariners' pitching coach. "Any team that wants to win the pennant has to have one. The Yankees proved that."

The silver-haired Stock knows whereof he speaks, having bailed out more than his share of starting hurlers in an eight-year career with the Baltimore Orioles and Kansas City Athletics.

Probably his best season was in 1964 when he built an 8-3 record with a 2.29 earned run average and combined with hard-throwing John Wyatt to give the A's one of the best relief duos in the major leagues.

"Relief pitching has become so much more specialized today," he said. "They're more important. Managers are going to their bullpens more often. Just because that man is not starting, that doesn't mean he isn't their best pitcher."

In fact, says Stock, so much is expected of relief pitchers these days, they are more quickly subject to criticism and second-guessing than other players when they fail to produce.

"How many players start the season and have one good streak from start to finish? Starters can go out and have a couple of bad games or somebody can go four or five games without a hit, and nobody says anything," he said. "But if a reliever gives up the winning hit in a couple of games, all of a sudden he's washed up.

"You're going to have some bad outings. If a guy went out and never had trouble he'd be superhuman."

While Stock, still as lean and hawk-faced as when he was silencing enemy bats, downplays his own accomplishments ("I felt I always had to work as hard as I could. I just wish I had been a bit more gifted."), he does not hesitate when asked about the best reliever he has ever seen.

"I gotta go with the guy I had for four years, Rollie Fingers," said Stock, who coached with the Oakland A's during two of their world championship seasons before joining the Mariners in his home state of Washington in 1977.

"Some relievers have good years, bad years and so-so years. But that big hoss just went out and did it year after year," he said. "I'm not taking anything away from the others, but Fingers has really proved himself over the long run."

Southern Cal wins NCAA track title

EUGENE, Ore. (AP) — The University of Southern California, scoring only in six events but getting victories from Clancy Edwards, Billy Mullins and its 400-meter relay team, won its 27th NCAA Outdoor Track and Field Championship Saturday.

The Trojans, the dominant team in the meet's 57-year history, had the title clinched before the final event, the mile relay, in which they finished fourth.

They wound up with 59 points, compared to 50 for UCLA and Texas-El Paso, which tied for second.

Edwards, a senior, was the Trojans' workhorse and the outstanding performer in the three-day meet at the University of Oregon's Hayward Field. He won the 100-meter dash in meet record time of 10.07 seconds Friday, then came back Saturday to capture the 200 in 20.16, another NCAA Mark, and ran the third leg of the Trojans' winning relay.

Mullins, a sophomore in his first season at Southern Cal after transferring from junior college, nipped Willie Smith of Auburn in the 400-meter dash which both runners ran in 45.33 seconds. Mullins then ran on both relays.

James Sanford, a freshman, finished third for Southern Cal in the 200, anchored the winning relay and also ran on the mile relay. The Trojans also got eight points from Rich Graybehl, who finished second to James Walker of Auburn in the 400-meter intermediate hurdles.

Edwards's time in the 200 broke the NCAA record of 20.2 shared by former San Jose State runners Tommie Smith and John Carlos. It also gave him a decisive victory over defending champion William Snoddy of Oklahoma, who edged Sanford for the runnerup spot.

In the 400-meter relay, the Trojans' team of Kevin Williams, Mullins, Edwards and Sanford was timed in 39.31 seconds, in beating Auburn, clocked in 39.49.

The bull-strong Mullins made a brilliant run down the stretch to catch Smith, the two-time indoor champion, in the 400.

After the meet, Southern Cal Coach Vern Wolf said,"I can't remember any of our championship teams being as thin as this one. But we're very flexible, except for Clancy. I think the only lap he ever jogged was that victory lap he jogged today (after the 200)."

Wolf added, "I can't say we were too surprised at what the kids did. They never let us down."

The jubilant Edwards said,"At USC, track is a team sport."

He added, "I was burned out in the trials and thought the final (in the 200) was kind of slow. I was aiming for 19.9 or 19.8."

In addition to Edwards's swift 200 Saturday, several meet records fell.

Henry Rono, Washington State's enigmatic long distance runner, competed despite an injured foot and won the 3,000-meter steeplechase in 8: 12.39. That shattered the mark of 8:18.63 he had set in Thursday's qualifying.

But Rono, who had scratched from Friday's 10,000 (in which he was the favorite), also withdrew from the 5,-000, in which he holds the world record, because of the injury.

"There was no point in it," said Washington State Coach John Chaplin about running Rono in the 5,000. "The foot is sore. We were out of the team race. We had three other people in the race, (10,000-meter world record holder Samson Kimombwa, two-time 5,000 NCAA champion Joshua Kimeto and Joel Cheruyiot) and one of them's the defending champion. Why take a chance?"

Sweden's Kenth Gardenkrans of Brigham Young smashed the NCAA record in the discus with a toss of 210 feet, surpassing the mark of 204-6 set by Olympic champion Mac Wilkins of Oregon in 1973.

Senior Mike Tully of UCLA, the indoor pole vault champion, won his first outdoor title at 18-1¾.

Sugar Ray Leonard puts pressure on Rodriquez

BALTIMORE (AP) — Olympic gold medal winner Sugar Ray Leonard turned on the pressure after three rounds Saturday and recorded a unanimous 10-round decision over rugged welterweight Rafael Rodriguez.

The nationally televised victory was Leonard's 11th win in as many starts as a professional boxer.

Rodriguez never was a threat to the Palmer Park, Md., contender. He pressed the fight throughout, but Leonard's superior speed of hand and foot nullified his every move.

Manager Angelo Dundee was asked after the fight just how far away Leonard is from a fight with welterweight champ Carlos Palamino.

The manager said, "Well, Palamino has a broken hand, which will keep him out of action for six months. If Sugar Ray doesn't get too heavy by that time, we'll be thinking in his direction.

"His (Leonard's) next fight will be in Boston on July 15 with Vic Eckman, a good boxer, who is 15-1."

Rodriguez said, "I should have led more. I was surprised at Sugar Ray's speed. He is as good a fighter as anybody I've fought."

Leonard weighed in at 145¾ pounds, Rodriquez — now 21-9-1 — at 147.

The crowd at the Baltimore Civic Center was estimated at 6,900 and the gross at $50,000.

In an earlier bout, Robert "Boogaloo" Watts outpointed Johnny Hurd in a 10-round middleweight match.

Stacy charges to lead

TORONTO (AP) — Hollis Stacy charged out of the pack with a three-under-par 70 and tied rookie Donna Horton White for the lead at six-under 213 after 54 holes of a $100,000 Ladies Professional Golf Association tournament Saturday.

Five players were tied one shot back at 214.

Included in the group at 214 were Pam Higgins of Palm Springs, Calif., and Donna Caponi Young of Los Angeles, both with five-under-par 68 in Saturday's third round.

Also at 214 were Sharon Miller of Marshall, Mich., who shot a 72; Amy Alcott of Santa Monica, Calif., 71, and JoAnne Carner of Lake Worth, Fla., also 71.

JoAnn Dost of Vienna, Va., the co-leader with White following Friday's second round, shot a two-over-par 75 and was alone in third spot at 215.

White, a non-winner on the tour, was pleased with her even-par round on the 6,265-yard St. George's Golf and Country Club course.

"I hit the ball well today but I three-putted twice and that hurt," said White.

"I just let a good round get away from me by bogeying the last two holes," said Stacy, the defending U.S. Open champion.

"I've always maintained that a tournament doesn't start until the final nine holes," she said, commenting on the number of players within one shot of each other.

Stacy, of Savannah, Ga., predicted a round of 69 would win today.

Jennings holds power in Rangers' camp

NEW YORK (AP) — At the moment, New York Rangers President William Jennings is the one with the power.

He called General Manager John Ferguson into his Madison Square Garden office Tuesday night and said, "You better prepare yourself. The two guys we're considering for the coaching job want to be the general manager, too.

"Naturally, he was very upset," Jennings recalled Friday, "but I said, 'Look. I remember 2½ years ago a guy named John Bowie Ferguson gave me the same ultimatum.'

"He said, 'No argument there.'"

Thursday night, Ferguson got the call from Jennings that Fred Shero would replace Ferguson and Coach Jean-Guy Talbot — effective immediately — with the National Hockey League franchise.

Negotiations with the other candidate, Scotty Bowman, never got very far.

Johnson carries Phils to victory

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Pinch-hitter Dave Johnson's bases-loaded home run with none out in the ninth inning carried the Philadelphia Phillies to a 5-1 victory over the Los Angeles Dodgers in a nationally televised game Saturday.

Garry Maddox opened the ninth against Dodgers relief ace Terry Forster with a single. Forster then threw wild on a pickoff attempt and Maddox raced all the way to third. Dodgers Manager Tom Lasorda ordered Greg Luzinski and pinch-hitter Jerry Martin intentionally walked, loading the bases.

But Johnson, who had but five hits in his last 44 at bats, ripped a 1-0 pitch over the left field fence, his second of the season.

Forster had allowed one earned run in his last 11 outings, totaling 17 1-3 innings. He had allowed only nine hits, four walks and struck out 16 during those appearances. In that stretch he had one victory, six saves and an ERA of 0.53.

Johnson's pinch-hit homer was his second grand slam of the season and set a major league record of two pinch-hit, grand slams in one season. His other was on April 30 against Bob Shirley of San Diego.

The Phillies took a 1-0 lead in the fifth when Bob Boone lined a homer off the left field foul pole, his fifth of the season. Los Angeles tied it in the sixth without a hit. Larry Christenson walked Bill North, who advanced to second on the pitcher's wild pickoff attempt, took third on a sacrifice and scored on Reggie Smith's sacrifice fly.

The Phillies threatened to go ahead in the seventh when Greg Luzinski snapped an 0-11 slump with a single to left, then startled the Dodgers by stealing his third base of the season. After Sutton retired Hebner and Jay Johnstone, Boone beat out an infield single, Luzinski stopping at third.

Phillies Manager Dannie Ozark sent up left-handed hitter Tim McCarver to bat for Jim Morrison against the right-hand throwing Sutton, but the pinch hitter bounced out to first, ending the inning.

Sutton, after pitching one inning, became the all-time leader in innings pitched by a Los Angeles Dodger. It boosted his total to 3,113, breaking the record of 3,112 by former ace Don Drysdale.

Maddox's hit extended his streak through 10 games and 15 of the last 17.

Cubs rally to win, 8-6

CHICAGO (AP) — Steve Ontiveros' sacrifice fly and Dave Rader's run-scoring single capped a four-rally in the seventh inning that carried the Chicago Cubs to an 8-6 victory over the Atlanta Braves Saturday.

The four-run uprising came after the Braves had taken a 6-4 lead with three runs in the seventh, capped by Gary Matthews two-run single.

Ivan DeJesus led off the Chicago seventh with a single and went to third when center fielder Barry Bonnell dropped Greg Gross' fly ball for a two-base error. Larry Biittner singled in one run before Gross scored the tying run on Jamie Easterly's wild pitch.

Dave Kingman, who hit his 10th homer in the second inning, drew an intentional walk and Bobby Murcer beat out a bunt single to load the bases before Ontiveros' sacrifice fly and Rader's RBI single.

Atlanta took the lead in the second on a walk to Matthews, a triple by Joe Nolan and single by Darrel Chaney. Kingman's homer, singles by Murcer and Manny Trillo and a sacrifice by Rader tied it in the bottom of the second.

Chicago went ahead 4-2 with two runs in the third on singles by DeJesus, Biittner, Kingman and Trillo. Matthews singled home a run in the sixth for the Braves.

Pitcher sinks Pirates

CINCINNATI (AP) — Pitcher Fred Norman drove in the go-ahead run with a suicide squeeze bunt and Dave Concepcion added a two-run double, giving the Cincinnati Reds their 12th victory in 16 games, a 4-3 triumph over Pittsburgh Saturday night.

Norman's bunt broke a 1-1 tie in the fifth after a one-out triple by catcher Don Werner.

Concepcion doubled in the sixth off Ed Whitson after Jerry Reuss gave up a one-out single to George Foster and a walk to Dan Driessen.

The loss went to rookie Don Robinson, 4-2, who was seeking his fifth consecutive victory.

Norman, 6-2, hit the first two batters in the second inning, gave up a run on Steve Brye's double, then worked his way out of a one-out, bases-loaded jam. He scattered seven hits in 7 1-3 innings before giving way to Dave Tomlin after consecutive singles by Brye and Duffy Dyer.

Frank Taveras doubled in both runners to make it 4-3, knocking out Tomlin for Manny Sarmiento, who nailed down the victory with his second save.

Foster homered in the second, his 11th homer of the year and his 42nd RBI, 10 ahead of his pace of last year, when he led the major leagues with 149.

Houston downs Cards

HOUSTON (AP) — Art Howe capped a three-run first inning with a two-run single and Floyd Bannister and Ken Forsch combined on a six-hitter as the Houston Astros defeated the St. Louis Cardinals, 5-2, in the first game of a Saturday night doubleheader.

Bannister, 2-3, surrendered all six St. Louis hits over the first 6 1-3 innings. Forsch finished up for his second save of the season as Houston won its third straight.

Singles by Jimmy Sexton and Enos Cabell and a walk to Bob Watson loaded the bases for Houston in the first inning. Sexton scored on Steve Swisher's passed ball and Howe followed with his two-run single to left off losing pitcher Pete Falcone, 0-4, as the Astros sent St. Louis down to its 18th loss in its last 22 games.

Bob Watson's sacrifice fly and Reggie Baldwin's run-scoring double accounted for Houston's other runs. Jerry Morales drove in both Cardinal runs with a fifth-inning double and a seventh-inning sacrifice fly.

Grimsley wins ninth

MONTREAL (AP) — Ross Grimsley became the major leagues' first nine-game winner by scattering seven hits and driving in two runs with a sacrifice fly and a squeeze bunt as the Montreal Expos defeated the San Francisco Giants 5-3 Saturday night.

Grimsley, 9-3, pitched his eighth complete game in 12 starts.

Jack Clark followed a one-out walk to Darrell Evans with a first-inning home run to give the Giants a quick 2-0 lead, but the Expos cut the margin in half with Chris Speier's one-out homer in the bottom of the inning.

The Expos scored three runs, two unearned, against Giants' starter Ed Halicki, 2-1, in the second inning to take a 4-2 lead. Grimsley's sacrifice fly scored Gary Carter from third base, and Andre Dawson also scored on the play as right fielder Clark's throw was wild.

Larry Parrish who had singled, scored the final run of the inning on a sacrifice fly by Dave Cash.

Alexis Arguello retains WBC title

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico (AP) — Alexis Arguello of Nicaragua retained his World Boxing Council junior lightweight title Saturday by knocking out Diego Alcala of Panama in the first round of a scheduled 15-round fight with an explosive series of lefts and rights.

The end came with unexpected suddenness. Arguello, who moved cautiously in the first part of the round, caught Alcala in the champion's corner and the challenger could not escape.

Alcala, 130, went down, and referee Roberto Ramirez of Puerto Rico counted him out with 1:56 remaining in the round.

Alcala had just caught the champion with a hard left hook and seemed to take the initiative, when Arguello cornered him.

Arguello, 129, opened the fight with a right and left to the head. Alcala fought back well before being cornered and beaten.

The victory raised Arguello record to 56-3 and the loss dropped Alcala to 37-4.

Arguello earned $100,000 while the challenger received a $15,000 paycheck.

The fight was Arguello' second defense of the title he won in Januaryv when he stopped Alfredo Escalera of Puerto Rico. His first defense came against Rey Tam of the Philippines in Las Vegas April 23.

The junior lightweight title is Arguello's second — he once held the featherweight championship — and his goal is to win a third, the lightweight title held by another Panamanian — Roberto Duran.

"I didn't expect such an easy fight," the champion said in his dressing room. "I knocked him out with four punches," said Arguello, "two lefts to the body and two rights to the chin."

"I expect to defend my title against Rafael "Bazooka" Limon of Mexico, maybe in August," Arguello said.

Asked about the possibility of meeting Duran, Arguello said, "That won't come until some time next year. There is no fixed date right now."

MEET THE CUBS

The war continues against the walks

If Lee Smith can ever lick that old bugaboo, the bases-on-balls, there's no limit to how far he can go.

Right now, however, the walks, those things that can kill a pitcher, have been doing just that to the 6-5, 220-pounder from Jamestown, La. Even so, Lee has a 3-3 record with the Midland Cubs this spring, his fourth season in pro ball and is one of the starters in Manager Jim Saul's rotation.

Actually, Smith isn't hairy wild like a Rex Barney or young Sandy Koufax. When he misses the black, it's by just a little bit.

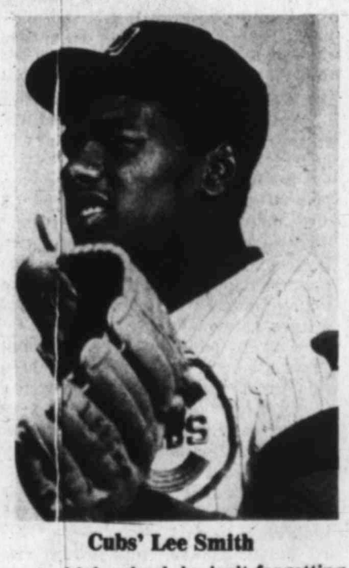

"Gyp" or "Slim", as he is called by those close to the club, graduated from Caster, La., High in 1975. He lettered in baseball, basketball and track. In his junior year, he was 8-0 with an 0.14 ERA and that earned him a spot on the All-Louisiana Class B first team. As a senior, he was 7-1 with an 0.95 ERA, striking out 124 batters in 53 innings.

He rested by playing first base and batting .305 and the double duty earned him laurels as Louisiana's Outstanding Class B baseball player.

Incidentally, that one loss, his only one in high school, came in his last game in a playoff against Doyline. Lee just didn't have his stuff that day, gave up one hit and was touched for a couple of unearned runs.

As a senior, he helped lead his team to the state Class B championship and was named All-State as well as the state's outstanding player.

While he signed a baseball contract out of high school, he isn't forgetting that education comes first. During the off-season, he attends Northwestern La. State.

Cubs' Lee Smith

Smith was the Cubs' second selection in the June 1975 free agent draft and ites signing with the Chicago Cubs is greatest thrill to date.

In 75, he was 3-5 with a 2.32 ERA for Bradenton in the Gulf Coast Rookie League and last year was 4-10 with Pompno Beach.

Lees married and lists automobile racing, drawing, swimming and fishing as pasttimes he enjoys the most.

Ashe comeback gets big lift

PARIS (AP) — Unseeded American Arthur Ashe, on the comeback trail after ailments last year, advanced to the final 16 of the $400,000 French Open Tennis Championships Saturdy, beating Czechoslovakia's Jan Kodes 4-6, 6-3, 7-6, 6-4.

Thirteenth-seeded Tim Gullikson also advanced but fellow Americans, third-seeded Brian Gottfried and No. 8 seed Harold Solomon, were eliminated in the third round.

Late in his three-hour match, Ashe suffered a cramp in his right leg but relieved it with quick stretching exercises on the court.

"It was the first cramp I've ever had," the 34-year-old Ashe said afterwards. "I did the right thing. If I hadn't, the match would have been over."

In other third-round matches, Spain's Manuel Orantes, the No. 5 seed, downed Czechoslovakia's Tomas Smid, 7-5, 7-5, 6-2; West Germany's Rolf Gehring eliminated Gottfried, finalist here last year, in a four-hour battle 6-3, 6-7, 4-6, 6-3, 6-2; Chile's Hans Gildemeister topped Solomon, a clay court specialist, 3-6, 7-5, 6-4, 6-4 and Gullikson downed fellow American Jeff Borowiak 6-2, 7-6, 6-2.

Gildemeister exhibited solid skills, forcing Solomon to scramble from corner to corner.

Namath devotes time to acting

MUNICH, West Germany (AP) — Joe Namath, who retired from the National Football League following the 1977 season, is now devoting full time to his acting career.

Namath, who played for a dozen years in the NFL, is currently filming a a spy movie, "Avalanche Express," in which he is cast as an American military agent.

This fall, the ex-quarterback will star in a new television series, "Waverly Wonders," which will be seen on the NBC network. In it, Namath plays the coach of a winless high school basketball team.

Both "Avalanche Express" and "Waverly Wonders," are being produced by Lorimer Productions, which also has Namath under contract for a future television movie.

Ali becomes own manager

CHICAGO (AP) — For the first time since he rose to boxing stardom, Muhammad Ali has worked out a deal that will make him his own manager, the Chicago Sun-Times reports in Sunday's editions.

The newspaper said that basically the new settlement phases out Herbert Muhammad's role as the former heavyweight champion's manager. Muhammad, it said, had been been getting a one-third cut of Ali's earnings.

Under a deal reached at a Chicago law firm, the newspaper said Muhammad will continue to get a one-third cut from Ali's earnings as a prizefighter and from limited other endeavors spelled out in the agreement. But with Ali's boxing career seemingly winding down, the thrust of the new arrangement is to free him to control his own financial destiny once he leaves the ring.

Lorenzen gains Hall

DARLINGTON, S.C. (AP) — Former driver Fred Lorenzen, one of the early superstars of stock car racing's major league, has been voted into the National Motorsports Press Association Stock Car Racing Hall of Fame.

Association President Benny Phillips of High Point Enterprise said Lorenzen, a real estate agent in his hometown of Elmhurst, Ill., will be the media group's only inductee this year.

Lorenzen, 43, dubbed "Fearless Fred" and "The Elmhurst Express" by writers, scored 26 NASCAR Grand National career victories from 1961 through 1967, when he retired for health reasons. To that point, his 12 superspeedway victories were a record.

Russians join links parade

MOSCOW (AP) — Robert Trent Jones, the golf course architect, says he believes the Soviet Union's only course can be a spectacular one. He also thinks the game will lose the stigma of capitalistic pastime it has here, once the Russians start playing.

Jones, who has built 400 courses in 42 American states and 23 countries, visited the site of the 18-hole course he has been commissioned to design last week and will return in July with preliminary plans to start construction.

He and his son, Robert Jones Jr., hope they can complete work by the 1980 Olympics, but say a more realistic estimate of when the first ball will be teed up is 1981 or 1982.

"The woods are white birch and hemlock," Jones Sr. said. "I've never seen a combination so spectacular. There will be a drainage problem but I'm confident I can handle it. It should be a spectacular course."

The site is a 200-acre woodland, 20 miles northwest of Moscow near Nakhabino, with a swamp that has been made into a lake that can be used for water holes. It borders a bedrock of the Soviet system, the collective farm.

Soviet diplomat Vladimir Kuznetsov, who runs the office that looks after Moscow's foreign community, accompanied Jones and his son to the site. Kuznetsov, an avid golfer, learned to play on an assignment in Malaysia and has a 15 handicap.

Kuznetsov was brought in to help Jones after Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev gave approval in 1974 for construction of the course to Armand Hammer, the American businessman with close ties to Moscow.

Hammer, who is building a world trade center here, persuaded Brezhnev that golf is a worldwide sport and that the increasing number of businessmen who come to the Soviet Union needed some place to relax. Hammer then commissioned Jones.

The normal cost for a Robert Trent Jones-designed golf course is from $750,000 to $1 million, Jones said. Hammer, president of Occidental Petroleum Co., will pay the hard currency costs such as Jones' fee and any special equipment needed. The Soviets will construct the course.

Jones said he and Kuznetsov inspected three or four sites during his first visit here in 1974 including the one where the proposed course will be built. It took Kuznetsov four years to get the necessary approvals, Jones said.

"We really owe a lot to him," Jones Jr. said of the only Russian they know who can play golf. "He's the Russian champion. If he plays the first round, he'll have the course record." Jones said Russian golfers would evolve the way athletes in other sports have.

"They'll have world class players the way they do tennis players," he said. "They'll develop some big hitters because they got some big people with broad shoulders. All you have to do is walk down the street to see that."

To popularize the sport, Jones has suggested that the Soviets build a two-tier enclosed driving range closer to town so the Russians can learn the game in the winter months.

Jones said the playing season here should be about the same as that in Montreal — six months. One advantage of Moscow's northern location is daylight in summer from about 4 a.m. to 10 p.m.

A clubhouse is not part of the present agreement and there won't be caddies because in the Soviet Union one man cannot employ another. But Jones said neighboring Poland builds golf carts that could be exported here as they already are to the United States.

To start, an American or British professional will be needed to teach the game and a foreign greenskeeper also will have to be employed until a Soviet staff can be trained, Jones said.

He already has received letters from persons in the United States interested in coming to help the game get started here.

Jones said he did not know what made the Russians change their mind about golf.

The Griffiths...a long tradition of squeezing $$$$

By HAL BOCK
AP Sports Writer

Today's lesson in baseball history is that the fruit doesn't fall far from the ownership tree.

Case in point: The Minnesota Twins, also known as the lowly Minnesota Twins. This franchise, originally based in Washington as the Senators, has belonged, at least in part, to the Griffith family since 1919, long enough for a trend to develop. The logo could be a dollar bill, bleeding as it is squeezed.

The original Washington Griffith was Clark, a Hall of Fame pitcher and uncle of the current Minnesota Griffith, Calvin. The two had more than their last name in common. There also is their undying respect for the All American buck.

Before they disappeared from the nation's capital 18 years ago, the Senators occasionally found themselves in contention for the American League pennant. One such year was 1945, when history tells us they finished 1½ games behind and one week ahead of the champion Detroit Tigers.

We are told there were any number of reasons for the 1½-game gap between Washington and Detroit that summer, but only one reason for the early end to the Senators' run at the Tigers.

Patriarch Clark Griffith had been approached by the National Football League Washington Redskins, who requested early use of the stadium the teams shared. For a fee, it was arranged and the Senators solved the schedule dilemma by loading it on doubleheaders which left them idle for the final seven days of the season, when the pennant was being decided.

With that piece of history at hand, it is easy to understand how it comes to pass that Clark's nephew, Calvin, could conceivably let the best hitter in the western world walk away from his ballclub. There is, don't forget that good old green stuff to consider.

Carew currently is in the empoy of the Twins. In this age of inflated salaries and free agent getaways, Griffith pays him $190,000 annually. That's a tidy income for most folks but a drop in the current baseball economic bucket, especially for a man with a career batting average of .335 and six batting championships to his name.

Carew is in the final year of his contract, meaning that after fulfilling his option year obligation to the Twins in 1979, he could leave Minnesota a free agent, free to sign with any other team. Do you think that would lead to some spirited bidding?

Griffith's track record for retaining option playouts is not exactly sensational. Since the escape hatch swung open two years ago, players like Bill Campbell, Larry Hisle and Lyman Bostock have slipped through it to find fatter contracts elsewhere. Carew could easily do the very same thing.

Negotiations between the two men have been strained at best. They met during spring training and then again last weekend. They will not meet again until the season ends. "I'm not going to do any more contract negotiating during the season," said Carew. "At the end of the year, we'll sit down again and try to work something out." In Griffith's behalf, it must be noted that he is one of a fading breed, a baseball owner whose primary source of income and business is his baseball club. He does not have the shipbuilding millions of a George Steinbrenner or the beer income of a Gussie Busch.

Still, his devotion to economic frugality occasionally can backfire.

There was, for example, the bullpen crisis that nearly led to a full-fledged rebellion. With reliever Tom Johnson nursing a sore arm, the Twins needed relief help. Along came free agent Mike Marshall for an audition which he passed handsomely. But when it was suggested that the club might sign him, Griffith's wallet panicked and the owner balked.

Later, after an angry Carew swore he never again would sign with the Twins, Griffith reconsidered and gave Marshall a one-year, no-option contract for $50,000. In 10 days, the veteran right-hander pitched nine times with one victory, six saves and 1.15 earned run average.

That's fine, but there is one problem. Now Griffith has $50,000 less to use for signing Carew.

Sonics take 3-2 lead into today's NBA game

By ALEX SACHARE

LANDOVER, Md. (AP) — "The game plan," revealed Seattle forward Paul Silas, "is to win it on today, then fly back to Seattle with about 20,000 people at the airport and walk through the crowd with a big, old bottle of champagne."

The Seattle SuperSonics can wrap up the first National Basketball Association championship in the history of the 11-year-old franchise by beating the Washington Bullets here today, having taken a 3-2 lead in the best-of-seven playoff finals with a 98-94 victory at Seattle Friday night.

A seventh game, if necessary, would be played in Seattle Wednesday night, but the Sonics would be more than happy to end it on the road.

"Who plays basketball in the sunshine?" asked Sonics guard Fred Brown, obviously feeling the NBA season which began back in mid-October has lasted long enough. "We just want to end this thing as soon as possible."

Added teammate Dennis Johnson: "There's no question we'd like to end it Sunday. I don't know what the odds are of winning on the road, but I'd say we have a 50-50 chance — and you know which way we're betting."

But the Bullets, also seeking the first NBA title in the history of the franchise which entered the NBA 17 years ago as the Chicago Packers, are not about to roll over and play dead — not before a capacity crowd of 19,035 at the Capital Centre as well as a national television audience.

"We're going to win on Sunday and go back to Seattle for a seventh game," promised Bullets forward Elvin Hayes. "This team has faced adversity all year long. We've met the challenge before and we're going to meet it again."

Seattle's victory Friday night was a team effort, as so many have been since Lenny Wilkens took over as coach back on Nov. 30 and turned the club around after a 5-17 start.

Brown and Johnson led the scoring with 26 and 24 points, respectively. Center Marvin Webster effectively clogged the middle on defense and grabbed 13 rebounds as Seattle won the battle of the boards 47-42. And rookie Jack Sikma teamed with the veteran Silas for 19 points and 16 rebounds from the power-forward position, while limiting Hayes to just five points in the second half.

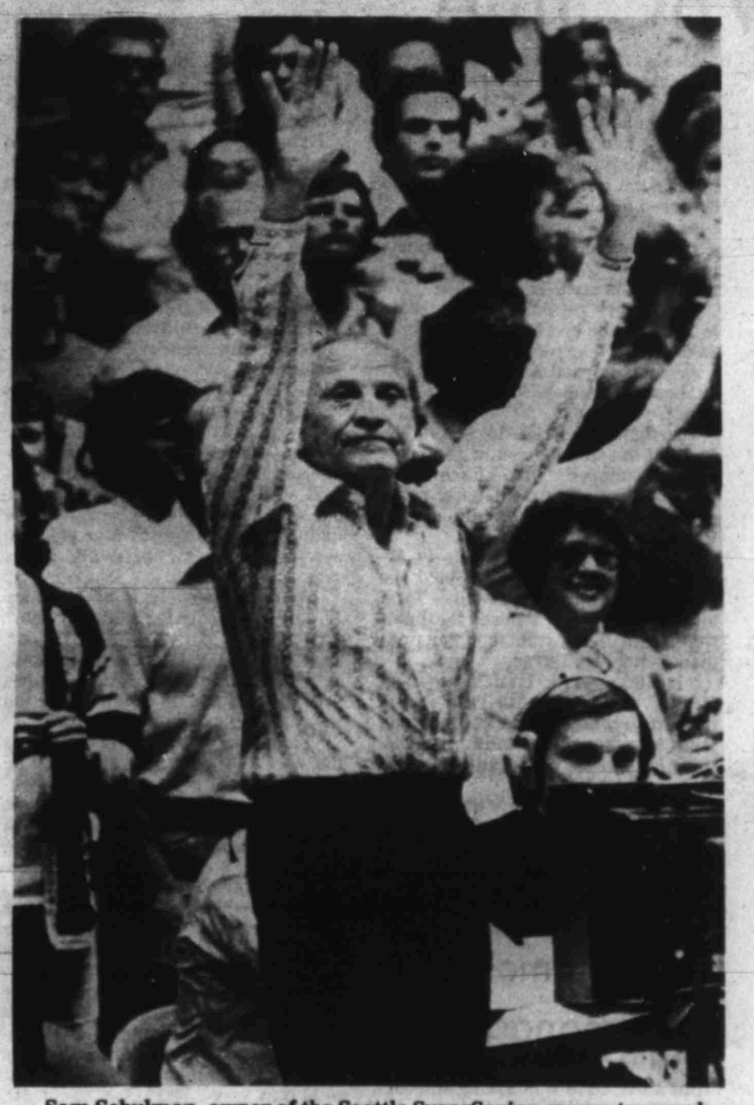

"We try to get five or six people in the game contributing," said Wilkens. "Everyone emphasizes scoring too much. The thing we emphasize is that you can contribute without scoring a lot of points. The key is having big people that are unselfish and are willing to do whatever is necessary to win."

Silas is a prime example. The rugged 14-year veteran, who will be 35 next month, learned the importance of role-playing as a member of two Boston Celtics' championship teams and has tried to pass that along to the young Sonics, whose starting five averages 25 years of age.

"Scoring points is nice, sure, but there are other things I can do to help this team," said Silas. "I know my jobs are to crash the board and to try and harass Elvin (Hayes) on defense. If I can just do that, then I've done my part."

And in Seattle's case, the whole is definitely greater than the sum of the individual parts.

"Togetherness, that's been the word for this team all year long," said Silas. "I just hope we can last one more game and wrap his up. That would be the epitome of my career."

Sawatski counters Steinbrenner prediction of AA ball's demise

By LEIGH WILSON

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Texas League President Carl Sawatski says Double A baseball is alive and well, with nearly 100,000 more fans attending Texas League games in 1977 than did in 1976.

However, George Steinbrenner, owner of the New York Yankees, has predicted the demise of Double A baseball. "Nobody is beating down the door to see minor league baseball," he said.

But Sawatski says that's that's not the way it is.

"We have hundreds of thousands of dollars invested in the Texas League itself, not including the other two Double A Leagues. Here he comes right down in the heart of the Texas League in Dallas and starts talking like maybe we're going out of business.

"We're doing a tremendous job, not only in the Texas League, but in all minor league baseball," Sawatski said.

Attendance nationwide at minor league games last year was 13.4 million, he said, up nearly 1.6 million from 1976.

Steinbrenner also said costs of player development have become "horrendous," but Sawatski contended they are not a major expense for a major league team.

"With a Double A team, from the time the season starts, it's not going to cost the major league team $110,000," he said. "The local operator who owns that franchise probably has a budget of anywhere from $150,000 to $175,000 ... to break even.

"So we're paying a tremendous cost to have baseball in cities like Little Rock, San Antonio and Midland," he said.

Bill Valentine, manager of the Arkansas Travelers, said he feels people don't understa8nd the minor league level.

"This is just a developmental level," he said. "Rookies can find out in Double A whether they can play pro ball.

"The biggest jump is from Rookie and A to Double A," he said. "This is the most important level. Some can't stand the pitching and they wash out."

Valentine and Sawatski also refuted Steinbrenner's comment that major leagues should emphasize college development of players.

Major league hopefuls play at the same level for four years in college instead of advancing through minor league ball, Valentine said.

"When they (the colleges) can start supplying the facilities and $140,000 a year (for a baseball program), why that's another story," Sawatski said.

Grimsley declares TV on 'Hypo kick'

CINCINNATI (AP) — Television is guilty of "overkill" and is on a "hypo kick" in the presentation of sports, according to Will Grimsley, Associated Press Special Correspondent.

"In so many cases, they try to sell an event far in excess of what it deserves," Grimsley told about 400 broadcasters at the AP Broadcasters Convention.

"Often, they're not able to objectively cover an event the way it is covered in the printed press."

Grimsley said he has gotten used to standing by while television got the first chance at interviews because they had paid for the rights to broadcast a sports event.

Television, he noted, has had "an overwhelming" influence on today's sports, because of payments made to cover an event.

"They've paid the freight and they've become promoters," Grimsley said.

The sports writer objected however to TV broadcasters equating themselves with other reporters.

"TV (sports) should only accept the fact that it is show business, not news gathering," Grimsley said.

Television also does not probe deeply into indepth stories in sports.

"Most broadcasters are just mouthing what they see," Grimsley said.

Chet Simmons, sports president for the National Broadcasting Co. refuted many of Grimsley's arguments.

A tight time schedule often makes indepth reporting difficult, he added.

"We often don't have the time to have the luxury of a "60-Minutes for sports," said Simmons.

He added that networks pay for the rights to televise games and are not permitted to be promoters under the guidelines of the Federal Communications Commission.

"We abhor the idea (of being promoters)," Simmons said.

Tim Ryan, a sportscaster for the Columbia Broadcasting System, also took issue with some of Grimsley's arguments.

"I have never been asked to say one thing or another by the National Football League or any other league," Ryan said.

Peru pulls upset in World Cup

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — Peru's soccer squad, one of the less favored teams in the World Cup defeated Scotland 3-1 in a major upset at Cordoba Saturday.

Teofilo Cubillas scored two goals for Peru, who came from behind to win in front of an emotional, wildly excited South American crowd.

Rob Rensenbrink scored three goals for Holland, runners-up in the 1974 World Cup, in a hard-won 3-0 victory over Iran, a long shot outsider. Holland and Peru went into a joint lead in Group 4 and appeared likely to qualify for the second round.

In Group 3, Sweden held Brazil, three-time winners of the trophy, to a 1-1 draw at Mar del Plata, and Austria edged Spain 2-1 at Buenos Aires' Velez Sarsfield Stadium.

Austria led the group standings.

Argentina and Italy jointly lead Group 1, and the unheralded Tunisian team is ahead of defending champions West Germany in Group 2.

Peru's victory was as surprising as Tunisia's 3-1 upset of Mexico Friday.

Volpe makes difference to LPGA

By GARY NUHN
Dayton Daily News

MASON, Ohio — Since Ray Volpe became commissioner of the Ladies Professional Golf Association in 1975, the tour has grown from 25 tournaments to 38 and the money has fluttered up to $3.8 million.

That's why not so many of the women protested when Volpe came up with the Arnold Palmer hole-in-one contest during their Dinah Shore tournament in early April.

If you missed it, the trick was for Palmer to swat 21 balls to see how close he could come to a hole-in-one. Coupon clippers across America sent in entries guessing which of the shots Arnold was going to splash into the cup. A million bucks was waiting if Palmer cooperated.

He didn't, of course. Oh, he tried, although it was embarrassing at times watching him hit a series of wild hooks.

Volpe heard the howls immediately. Palmer's show had held up play in the regular tournament, so the women were upset. Golf purists shouted that it was an insult to the integrity of the game, that the people who were going ga-ga wouldn't know a 4 iron from their forehead.

Volpe was in Mason on a trip for the LPGA Championship, scheduled at the Nicklaus Golf Center next week. And he told his side of the Palmer show.

"The trend in pro golf is for (television) ratings to continue to drop," he said. "They have been since 1970. We did not want to see the drop of even one-half rating point. I thought it was a good idea so I went ahead with it. I'd rather fail and suffer the criticism than never to have tried.

"Now the real golf people called it a circus. I can see their point. It was hokey as far as golf is concerned. But if you talk to the other people, they liked it.

"We got 3,000 pieces of mail the week after that — we normally get maybe 200 a week — and 95 percent of them said, 'Thanks, it's boring as hell to watch golf on TV, but you did something different.'

"As far as I can see, the only thing wrong was it interrupted play. We're thinking of doing it again next year. If we do, we'd put him on after the field had played through, maybe on a par-3 hole on the front."

Volpe was asked about the ratings.

"This is the part that really hurts," he replied. "We don't know. The overall ratings went up from a 7.0 last year to a 7.2 this time. We beat the daylights out of the men's tournament that was on that day, the Greensboro Open.

"But we don't know if the hole-in-one thing helped until we get the 10-minute breakdowns later."

Allison starts Texas 500 in last place

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Daytona 500 champion Bobby Allison will have to start today's Texas 500 stock car race from the same place Mario Andretti started last week at the Indianapolis 500 — last.

"I'm going to be in Nashville until Saturday night for a NAS-CAR race. So I'm having Freddie Fryer qualify my car," said Allison after a special practice session for him Thursday at the Texas World Speedway. "I won't be back here until Sunday morning," added Allison, who flies around the country in a twin-engine airplane.

Because of the scheduling conflict, track officials agreed to a special practice session Thursday for Allison.

But officials of the U.S. Auto Club, which sanctions the race, would not consent to a special qualifying session the same day.

"I don't see why not," said Allison, one of the few NASCAR Grand National stars to hold a valid USAC license. "It wouldn't have been any more bother to let me qualify right now. The car is ready. Everybody they need to do it is here. The track officials don't mind but USAC does."

Allison's relationship with USAC officials has been lukewarm since the season-opening race here in March. He lost the race to A.J. Foyt and then lost an appeal to USAC that Foyt had illegaly passed him during a caution period to win.

"I'm not complaining about it. It's over and done with. It doesn't do me any good to still be upset about a race Foyt won and I didn't and I can't do anything about," Allison said.

Allowing Fryer, a Texas short track standout, to qualify his AMC Matador, is the reason Allison must start in the last position. It isn't so much of a problem as it is an inconvenience for Allison, who ironically was to have originally qualified Andretti's car at Indy instead of Mike Hiss.

"Starting last won't bother me as much as it did Mario," said Allison, who bowed out of the guest shot in Andretti's Indy car because of schedule conflicts. "At Indy you can't catch up with the leaders while the yellow flag is out like you can here.

There should be enough yellow flags here Sunday for me to get back up front without too much trouble. The Matador will get me up there pretty quick anyway, even without a yellow."

Allison believes the Matador, a modified and updated of the one he ran in NASCAR last season, should be well suited for this two-mile track's steep-banked turns.

IT'S GOING TO BE A SUPER SUMMER!

500 winner Al Unser labels Guthrie a safety menace

By BILL NACK
Newsday

Al Unser, one of America's certified he-men, took a few minutes out from his Indianapolis 500 victory celebration to assail Janet Guthrie for her performance in the country's most famous auto race. The attack was, from this point of view, as sexist in its origins and overtones as it was devoid of the magnanimity and grace that traditionally binds the victor to the beaten foe, at least in more civilized societies. Nor was it much of a surprise.

Guthrie is a large target these days, and getting larger. Last week, to crown an effort begun two years ago, she became the first woman ever to finish the Indy 500, and on top of that she had finished ninth. She had ended up so close on George Snider's rear wing that she might have reached out and touched it, and had chased not far behind A.J. Foyt. For a driver making only her second start at Indy, for a driver under more stuble pressure than any of the men, it was a fine performance.

TWO THINGS ostensibly got under Unser's skin, driving him to scratch himself in public and reveal where he was coming from on the issue of Janet Guthrie at Indy. The most curious of the things that nettled him was the fact that she drove with a broken right wrist suffered in a tennis accident two days earlier; she fell on court, suffering a hairline fracture, but refused to report it to speedway doctors for fear they might not let her drive. A right-hander, Guthrie had to adjust to shifting gears with her left hand during the race, reaching across her body to do so. She shifted with her right hand only in emergencies.

"She didn't belong on the track," Unser said. "She's a menace to the other drivers." Unser, in this, was probably right. Her injury raises the question of how safely she was able to drive. But that's another issue.

UNSER'S RESPONSE is curious because, and you could bet on this, if Al Unser had broken his wrist and refused to report it; if he had driven and shifted gears in pain for 500 miles; if he or any man had sucked it up and succeeded in overcoming the handicap and performed above and beyond the call; if he had done all these things — the performance would have been hailed as an act of courage, a model of masculine machismo and bravery.

Women are kind and weak and long-suffering. They are Olivia de Havilland, hiding below deck during the wars of Captain Courageous. Errol Flynn, bestride the bow, awaits the enemy with a sword in his teeth. The mark of a man, as an athlete, is to play with pain, hence with courage, to endure the broken wrist, to play the male role; a woman, playing precisely that role, reverses it and only confuses the Unsers of the world, compelling them to criticize in othersthat which they would esteem in themselves.

The race illustrated a similar point. Unser nearly lost it because he made a stupid, careless mistake at the wheel near the end. Roaring to a pit stop, he misjudged his speed and ran over one of his own tires, knocking loose a front wing. His car never was the same after that. If he had not built up such a lead over Tom Sneva, he would have lost the Indy 500. Unser was criticized for the lapse, but not severely. In one report, he was criticized for driving like an old woman.

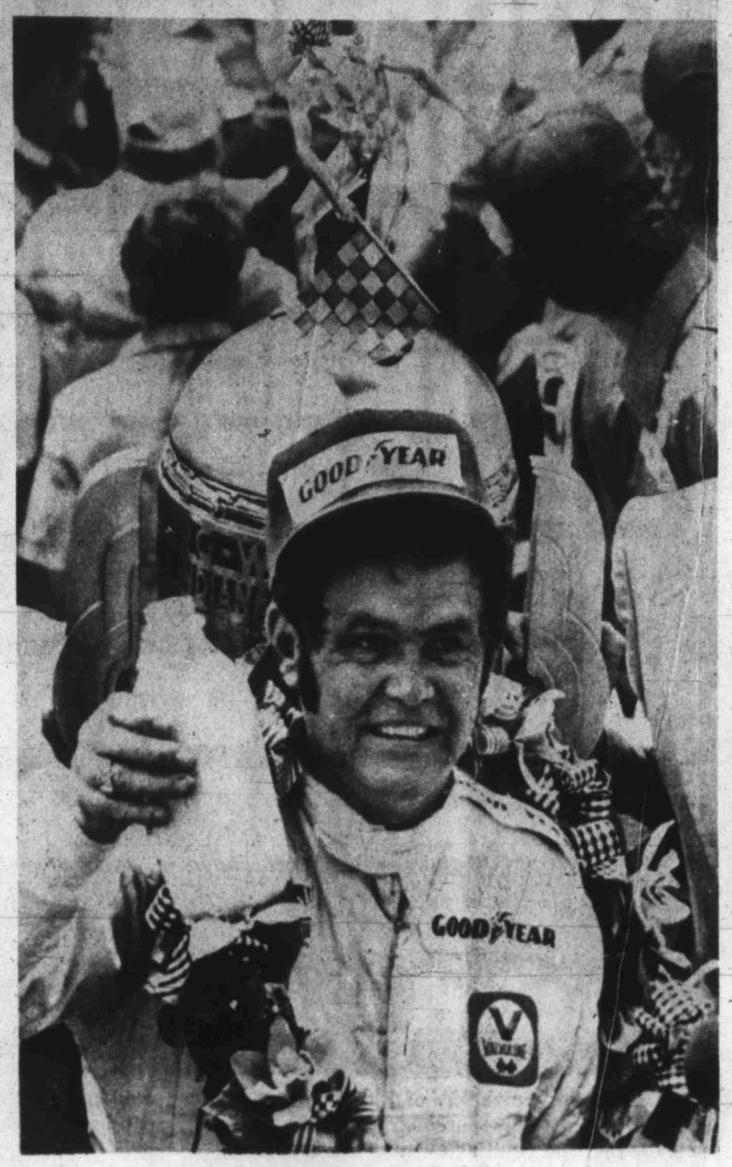

CAN YOU imagine what would have happened had Janet Guthrie, a woman driver, overshot a pit stop and run over a wheel of her own car? Bob Newhart could have made a whole album about it: "Ahh, Janet, you're actually supposed to wait for the men to put the tire on before you drive on it." They would have crucified her.

The second thing that annoyed Unser was her assertion after the race that she had been gunning to finish in the top five but, having failed that, that she was pleased having finished being in the top 10. One would have thought, judging by Unser's reaction, that she had expected induction into the Trinity.

"People might think I criticize her because she is a woman, but I'd say the same thing if she was a man," Unser said. "Janet was just trying to finish. When she's racing anywhere else, the other drivers laugh at her. They lap her so often. I'd like to see her challenging for a lead with me, Mario Andretti or Tom Sneva. Then we'd know what kind of a driver she really is. I know I drive hard. I don't think she does."

All she said, in essence, was that she was shooting for the top five but would settle for the top 10. What did Unser want her to say? That she was hoping to be 15th? When he criticizes her for wanting to finish and calls for her to drive harder, does he mean he wanted her to join all those other damn fools at Indy who drove like maniacs and either cacked up or destroyed their cars, failing to understand their limitations? What drivers laugh at her, by name? That was a cheap shot.

For now, it seems to me, the criticism of her has been largely gratuitous and unjust. Her main problem is that she is a woman who has failed to play the role set out for women in a sport in which the role of a woman is as clearly and rigidly defined as that of a rear-view mirror or bucket seat. The stars and their wives would prefer she simply went away. One trusts she will not, and in time will have both the experience and the car to run with the best of the men. She believes she can, and the hunch here is that she will one day prove it.

Al Unser, unhappy over Guthrie act.

Buckner drops below .400, but retains TL bat lead

Midland Cubs' outfielder Jimmy Buckner finally dipped below .400 in the Texas League official averages, but the fleet speedster from Vallejo, Calif., continues to lead the league with a .390 batting average.

Buckner holds and eight percentage point edge on El Paso catcher Danny Goodwin.

Goodwin, however, took over the slugging lead from Buckner, boosting his mark to .612 while tying El Paso teammate Bob Clark for the home run lead at nine.

Buckner still leads the league in triples with five and stolen bases with 25.

The pitching leader is San Antonio's Mike Tennant with an earned-run-average of 1.85, even after suffering his first loss. Tennant has a 4-1 won-lost record.

Arkansas' Dan O'Brien is the leader in victories with seven while Neil Allen of Jackson is the pacesetter in strikeouts with 72.

Allen and teammate Larry Prewitt and Tulsa's Don Kainer have two shutouts each.

EL PASO leads in team batting statistics with .307 with Midland third at .290 while Arkansas is second with .299. The Midland Cubs and San Antonio Dodgers are tied for most steals at 80 each while El Paso's 50 home runs tops the TL.

In fielding, Arkansas at .969 leads Midland by two percentage points while the Cubs lead the way with Stealers Caught at 24. El Paso and San Antonio each have caught 20 potential base thieves. In double plays, Arkansas has turned 45 to top the circuit and Midland is second with 44.

The Cubs moved up to sixth place in team pitching ERA with a 4.91, passing Tulsa. and the Midland staff has the dubious distinction of surrendering the most home runs, 32, two more than Amarillo's staff.

Interestingly, the East Division teams have posted 20 shutouts while West Division teams have managed just six, reflecting the difference in the type ball played in the two sectors. In complete games, the East has 40 and the West 22 with Midland contributing 10 of those.

Doc Dodson continues registration

Midland High Trainer James "Doc" Dodson said there are still openings in his Summer Weight training program being conducted at the Memorial Stadium Fieldhouse.

The program will run through July 23 and is for youngsters in the third grade and up. The younger boys workout from 2 to 3 p.m. daily and the older boys from 3 to 4 p.m.

"Participants are not required to make all of the sessions during the six week program," Dodson said, "We realize that vacations and other obligations may prevent that."

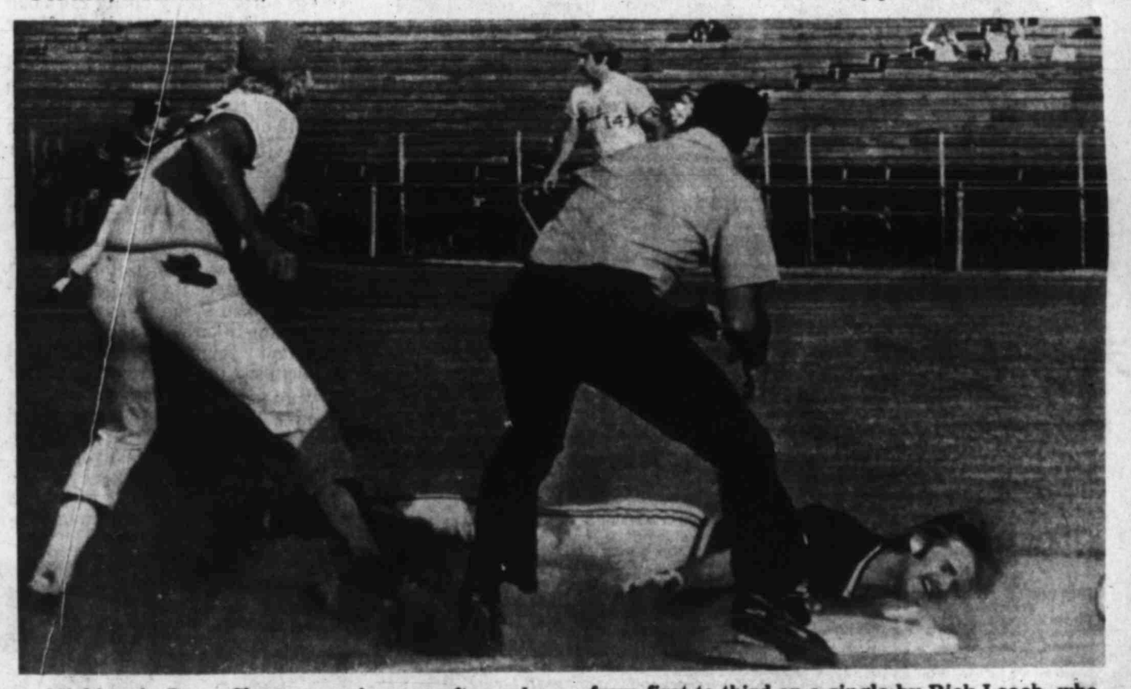

Registration is open daily at the Stadium weightroom, located on the east side, and fee for the six weeks is $22.

Rice named AL May star

NEW YORK (AP) — Slugger Jim Rice of the Boston Red Sox, who pounded out 13 home runs and drove in 33 runs during the month of May, was named American League Player of the Month, the league announced Saturday.

The 25-year-old outfielder was instrumental in leading the Red Sox into first place in the American League East Division. Rice, who amassed a slugging percentage of .760, also had four doubles and two triples. He scored 23 runs and delivered six game-winning hits.

Outfielder Amos Otis of the Kansas City Royals was second in the balloting. He hit .345 with five home runs and 20 RBI. Otis was followed by New York Yankee pitcher Ron Guidry, who was 5-0 in May with 35 strikeouts in 40 innings.

Michigan's Dave Chapman grimaces after colliding with Baylor third baseman Fritz Connally in NCAA College Baseball World Series action at Omaha, Neb. Lotus car up to old high jinks

MADRID (AP) — The Lotus "New Generation" car is doing it again at the Spanish Grand Prix, exhibiting its astounding roadholding ability on the twisty two-mile Jarama circuit.

Like the Belgian venue for the world championship series two weeks ago, Jarama is turn after turn with only one straight worthy of the name.

Mario Andretti cruised to the pole and then took the Spanish race unchallenged last year in the Model 78 Lotus, the first to use under-car suction to improve grip. Andretti used the new Model 79 in Belgium for a similar command throughout the weekend that put him on top of the world championship table.

Now teammate Ronnie Peterson of Sweden has his Model 79, too, and he grabbed a time in Friday's first qualifying session at Jarama that looked good for the pole, 3-10ths of a second ahead of Andretti and one second clear of Carlos Reutemman's Ferrari.

THE NEW Arrows outfit has a "wing car," in which air is ducted through the side panels to give extra downdraught, as Chapman innovated in the Model 78. At best, though, the Arrows is "a 78½."

The real threat may come from new Brabham-Alfa. Sneak photographs from recent testing in Britain showed it to be along the lines of Jim Hall's old Chapparal Canarn racer, with an extraction fan at the rear of a fully sheathed body to give positive suction — a reverse hovercraft principle. Brabham will not say when it the new car will race.

Michigan, USC win College series tilts

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Michigan sophomore Steve Howe has a simple pitching philosophy — trying to get the ball over the plate, low.

"It sure worked tonight," Howe said after he blanked hard-hitting with a one-hitter Baylor 4-0 in the first round of the College World Series. The Wolverines will meet Southern California, 9-3 winners over Miami, tonight.

The Bears had been hitting at a clip of .300, and Coach Mickey Sullivan said Friday night's loss to Michigan was the "least we've hit in five years."

Baylor brought out the best in Howe, and also in another Wolverine sophomore, Vic Ray.

Ray hadn't hit a home run all year. But he slammed one with two aboard in the fifth inning that gave Howe all the runs he needed.

The only hit Howe gave up was an infield single in the second inning to Mike Johanson. Michigan second baseman Scott Anderson managed to knock the ball down but couldn't get Johanson at first.

"It was a hit," Anderson said. "No doubt about it. It was a hit."

Southern California went nip-and-tuck with Miami for most of the game, but tore things open with a six-run eighth inning.

Miami starter Randy Guerra, who hadn't lost a game all year, gave up a two-run homer to Dave Hostetler but settled down until the eighth, with the score tied 3-3, when he gave up a single to Dave Enger, two walks and a three-run triple to Doug Stokke.

Two share first spot at Tokyo

TOKYO (AP) — Two young Japanese pros, Tsuneyyki Nakajima and Shinsaku Maeda, shared the third-round lead of the $104,000 Tohoku Golf Classic Saturday.

Nakajima shot a 69 and Maeda fired a 71 for identical totals of 211, 5 strokes under par, on the par 72 West Sendai Country Club course.

Second-round leader Haruo Yasuda slipped to third place after shooting a 1-over-par 73 for a 54-hole total of 212.

Sixty-five players, including 10 amateurs, teed off under sunny skies for the $22,222 first prize.

Mario wins Spanish pole

MADRID, Spain (AP) — Mario Andretti blasted his JPS-Lotus teammate Ronnie Peterson off the pole for Sunday's Spanish Grand Prix Formula I auto race in final qualifying Saturday.

He set a record for the twisting Jarama circuit the first half of the final hour of qualifying, then confidently sat out the rest of the session.

"We thought we'd save the car," said the Nazareth, Pa., driver. "We got it ready to go out again if anyone went quicker, but nobody did."

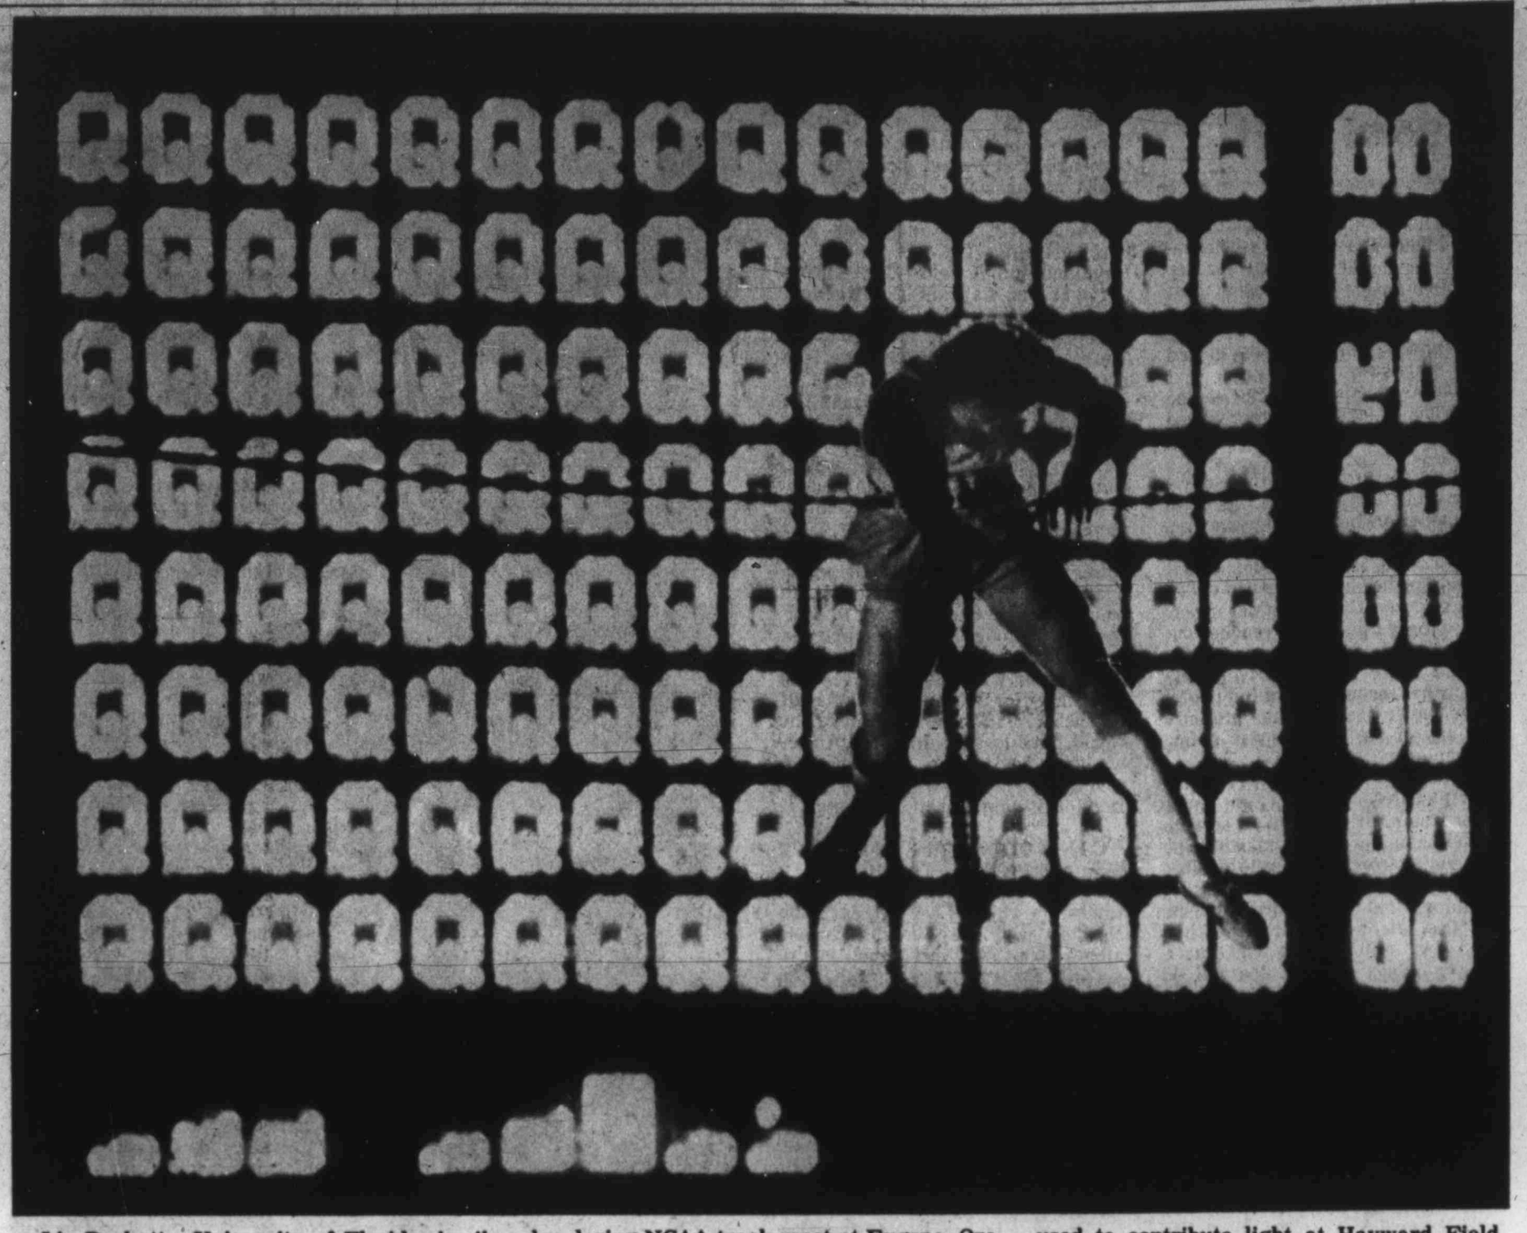

Andretti said he still had speed in reserve as the car was running on slightly used tires.

Peterson had set what looked like an unbeatable time ahead of Andretti in the cool of Friday morning. The Swede concentrated on running full racing trim in the heat of Saturday afternoon, only to be shocked by Andretti's time, totally unexpected in the hot weather conditions.

Andretti's pole time was 1 minute 16.39 seconds, an average speed of 99.675 miles per hour, an amazing 2.31 seconds faster than his 1977 pole time of 1:18.70. It reflected the design improvements from the Lotus model 78 to his current model 79.

Andretti led from start to finish here last year. After a similar victory from the pole in the Belgian race two weeks ago, he currently is leading the world championship with 27 points to 23 for France's Patrick Depailler.

Between the two black Lotus cars on the grid Sunday will be the Ferrari of Argentina's Carlos Reutemann and Britain's James Hunt in his back-up McLaren, his regular car having been badly damaged in an accident Friday.

Lin Bochette, University of Florida, is silouetted against the scoreboard as he competes in the pole vaulting event of the decathlon during NCAA track meet at Eugene, Ore. Foster's bad race sets record

EUGENE, Ore, (AP) — UCLA Coach Jim Bush and hurdler James Owens agree — Greg Foster ran a bad race in Friday's NCAA Outdoor Track and Field Championships.

No matter that the quiet 19-year-old UCLA sophomore sizzled to an American record of 13.22 seconds in the 110-meter high hurdles despite reinjuring his left knee midway through the race.

The Bruins' speedy youngster is capable of much, much more, Bush and Owens say.

"When he runs a good race the world record will be shattered," said Bush, whose UCLA squad grabbed the early lead in the team championship competition with 26 points. Foster, a lanky youngster from Maywood Ill., eclipsed the American record of 13.24 by Rod Milburn of Southern University in 1972, and barely missed the world mark of 13.20 set by Alefandro Cassnaxs of Cuba last year.

Foster reinjured his knee on the fourth hurdle. He still outraced Owens and Maryland freshman Renaldo Nehemiah to the tape.

"I've had a trick knee for some time," he said. "I was a little wobbly off the line, then I hit some hurdles. I didn't feel any pain until I got over the last hurdle."

IT WAS a day of ups and downs for the Bruins, who hoped to challenge Texas-El Paso and Southern Cal for the team title after UCLA junior David Laut won the shot put with a 66-1¼ effort, a foot farther than he's ever thrown before.

After Foster, a member in the Bruins' mile relay team, was injured, Bush scrambled around for a replacement. He finally found Millard Hampton, but his effort went for nothing.

UCLA's mile relay team was disqualified in the semifinals after a track offical said the Bruins' Larry Goldston knocked the baton out of the hand of Gerald Peets of Los Angeles State. UCLA finished second in the heat, but won't make it to today's finals.

TEXAS-EL PASO was second in the team race with 24 points, but the Miners suffered a pair of setbacks when Hans Allstrom fouled twice and failed to make it to the finals in the shot put and Steve Hanns failed to make the finals in the triple jump.

But UTEP picked up 10 points when Michael Musyoki won the rugged 10,000 in 28:30.91. Washington State's phenomenal Henry Rono, who set meet records in Thursday's 5,000 and steeplechase qualifying races, had been scheduled to compete in the 10,000 as well. But he dropped out because of a foot injury.

WSU Coach John Chaplin said Rono decided to drop out of the long race because of a foot injury he first suffered three weeks ago when he set the world steeplechase mark in Seattle.

Washington State's other two entrants in the 10,000 — Kenyans Joel Cheruiyot and Samson Kimombwa — took a rough fall early in the race. Kimombwa, the world record holder in the event, got up and finished fourth, but Cheruiyot was unable to finish and was listed as doubtful for today's 5,000.

"Joel was tripped and I fell over him," said Kimombwa, who said he used too much energy to get back in the race to have anything left to catch Musyoki.

SOUTHERN CAL was in fine shape in the team competition after Clancy Edwards recovered from another of his notorious slow starts to catch two-time defending champion Harvey Glance of Auburn in the 100 meters.

"If I had a start, no telling what I'd be able to do," said Edwards, who was clocked at 10.07 for a new meet record. The old mark of 10.16 was set by Glance two years ago.

The Trojans also picked up another point in the 100 when Kevin Williams finished a surprising sixth.

"After that 100, with a first and a sixth, we're where we should be," said USC Coach Vern Wolfe.

Texas-El Paso Coach Ted Banks also picked the Trojans and his Miners as the teams to beat.

"The Trojans still have more potential," Banks said, "but they're going to be tired in the relays. It's going to be a good finish."

Gregory Foster, left, of UCLA, clears the last hurdle on way to an American record at 110-meters. Foster ran a 13.222 to beat Rod Milburn's old mark of 13.24 in 1972.

Gehring upsets Gottfried in French play

PARIS (AP) — West Germany's Rolf Gehring upset No. 3 seed Brian Gottfried, of the Fort Lauderdale, Fla., today 6-3, 6-7, 4-6, 6-3, 6-2 in a four-hour upset in the $400,000 French Open Tennis tournament.

Gottfried, 26, finished second in this tourney last year, losing to Argentina's Guillermo Vilas.

Gehring, unseeded here and his country's eighth-ranked player, exploited Gottfied's inconsistent backhand to take the clay court contest to a grueling five sets in mid-day heat at Roland Garros Stadium.

Down 2-5 in the final set, Gottfried had three break points against Gehring's service to get back in the match. But the German belted three strong serves that Gottfried couldn't handle.

Gottfried became the first of the top seeds to lose in the opening week of the 14-day event.

No. 13 seed Tim Gullikson, of Onalaska, Wis., ousted Jeff Borowiak, of Berkeley, Calif., 6-2, 7-6, 6-2, in another match today. Borowiak had upset Italy's Adriano Panatta earlier this week.

Bjorn Borg of Sweden crushed American Rick Fagel on Friday.

SPORTS BRIEFS

Emporia wins NAIA

ST. JOSEPH, Mo. (AP) — Emporia State (Kan.) jumped to an early 7-2 lead and held onto it for an 8-6 victory over Missouri Southern Friday night to give the Hornets their first NAIA baseball title ever.

The Hornets jumped on Barry Jenkins, Missouri Southern's ace right-hander, for three runs in the third inning.

Darrell Alexander tripled and scored on a single by Randy Weimer. Pete Villaescusa doubled Weimer home for the second run and Emporia picked up its final run of the inning when Brian Moyer doubled home Villaescusa.

Missouri Southern's only runs came on a two-run double by Greg Curran in the seventh.

Herron gets 5-year sentence

ATLANTA (AP) — Finding daylight to run to was easier for Mack Herron back in 1973, when he broke Gale Sayers' overall yardage record while playing for the New England Patriots.

Today, he can run no farther than the fence around the Fulton County jail recreation area.

He was sentenced last week to a five-year prison term on a cocaine charge and one year on a charge of possessing a counterfeit title to a luxury car.

100 ring fans are hospitalized

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — About 100 boxing fans remain in the hospitals of Korat in northeastern Thailand today after stadium bleachers collapsed during a super bantamweight title fight Friday night, leaving at least 400 people injured.

Gomez retained his crown with a third round technical knockout.

Ranger wins JuCo crown, 12-5

GRAND JUNCTION, Colo. (AP) — First baseman Jim Mick keyed a six-run eighth-inning rally as Ranger College of Texas took a 12-5 victory over Yavapai College of Prescott, Ariz., in the championship game of the 1978 Junior College World Series.

It was the second national title for the Texans. They first won in 1973.

Mick's bases-loaded single scored Nelson Fitzpatrick and Danny Hemphill and earned him the tournament's MVP award.

Additions to homes in spotlight

With the coming of summer, if building permits are any indication, Midland homeowners are turning their attention to adding that extra room to the house, covering the patio and other remodeling projects.

Fourteen of last week's 22 building permits, totaling $424,962 in value, were for residential alteration. This year's total so far is $45,319,915.

Among the permits filed was one for an employee parking lot at Midland Memorial Hospital. No dollar value was listed for that project.

New residential permits went to Gilbert Bates, 4207 Arroyo St., $60,000, and 3011 Moss St., $65,000; Noel Construction Co., 3703 Avondale St., $65,000; Allen Construction, 2808 Exeter St., $80,000; T.R. McAdam, 2917 Town Place, $72,500, and James Morris, 2824 Haynes St., $70,000.

There were no new commercial permits, and only one commercial alteration permit, which went to Jack Bogle, 2009 W. Texas Ave., $1,000.

Residential alteration permits were granted to the following persons: Freddie DeBiurk, 3676 Andrews Highway, $9,000; Annie Ruth Johnson, 919 E. Edwards St., $400; Juan Sanchez, 909 E. Maple St., $3,000; Steve Salmon, 2303 Camarie St., $4,840; L.L. Bigemaran, 1205 S. Fort Worth St., $1,000; Herman Smith, 4314 Roosevelt St.; George L. Wolf, 2101 Brunson St., $4,000; Roy Swinenger, 1721 E. Oak St., $6,000; Larry Billy Carr, 3511 Stanolind St., $1,200; Billy Carr, 3500 Princeton, $400; Ramon Mancha, 112 W. Dengar St., $5,000; Jerry P. Watson, 3324 Camarie St., $9,472; Jo Chambers, 201 W. Washington St., $2,000, and Bernardo Ramiriz, 602 Canyon St., $150.

THE 26 POLYESTER bottles in the foreground were tailor-made for recycling by researchers at the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. A spokesman says the bottles can be converted into hundreds of useful products, from adhesive tape to clothing—and that is just where the suit in the background comes in.

Employers can expect insurance rate hike

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN—Texas employers can expect another increase in worker's compensation insurance rates this fall, sources at the State Board of Insurance indicate.

Public hearing on a rate change is expected to be scheduled sometime in July, to consider an increase of slightly over seven percent, which is expected to go into effect Sept. 1.

That increase will provide for a $14 boost in benefits, which under Texas law are based on the average weekly earnings of production workers in manufacturing industries.

When that average increases, so do benefits, and so do premiums.

Figures for 1977 indicate that with rising wages, benefits should go from $91 to $105, Worker's Compensation Section Manager Ed Kasper reports, and SBI actuaries say this means an increase of just over seven percent in rates.

No items other than rates are expected to be on the July agenda, Kasper says, unless board members decide to reconsider a filing by the National Council on Compensation on admiralty coverages.

That filing has been recommended by the department's advisory committee, and a legal opinion filed on behalf of the Worker's Compensation Assigned Risk Pool says the board has authority to set rules and rates for such coverages.

NCC notes those rates haven't been changed since 1948.

Meanwhile, the question of self-insurance by businesses for worker's compensation continues under study by a joint legislative committee—and business groups aren't likely to relax their push for such a program in view of the continuing rise in rates.

Inflation, labor and governmental regulation are the top problems listed by small manufacturers, a study by the Bureau of Business Research of the University of Texas at Austin shows.

A survey of some 200 small manufacturers saw those three areas listed as the top problems for the greatest number of firms—with stiff competition, limited marketing programs, lack of capital, inadequate production facilities and scarce raw materials listed as secondary problems.

Almost all firms surveyed noted concern over rapid increases in labor and material costs—and many reported reducing their profit margins in order to remain competitive.

Despite the problems, however, most of those surveyed indicated optimism that business opportunities will improve in the future, with almost 95 percent classifying their opportunities as being from "good" to "excellent."

State Securities Commissioner Richard D. Latham reports that "exotic securities" seem to be making a comeback in Texas, although no special regulatory or enforcement actions are being taken at this time.

In addition to worm farms and chinchilla ranches, there's an upsurge in the sale of precious stones for "investment" purposes, Latham says.

Apparently, he explains, some telephone "boiler-rooms" which had been specializing in sale of commodity options and contracts have moved to offering gems, particularly diamonds, since commodity trading has come under increased regulation at the Federal level.

Not all sales of precious stones for investments are securities sales, Latham notes, adding that not all the stones being sold may be particularly good investments.

Most of the diamonds that are increasing appreciably in value are large stones of extremely high quality, Latham says, concluding that anyone planning to buy precious stones for investment purposes needs reliable advice from someone with considerable expertise in that field.

Earned automobile insurance premiums for 17 county mutual insurance companies in Texas for 1977 exceeded $196,000,000, the Board of Insurance reports.

Incurred losses came to $94,000,000. Board figures also indicate the companies took in almost $210,000,000 on all lines for the year—with $98,000,000 incurred losses.

Dramatic increase seen in women holding jobs

By KRISTIN GOFF
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — Nearly half of all adult women now hold jobs or are looking for them, a dramatic increase from only a decade ago, and one which has far reaching economic and social implications.

Employment figures for May, released by the Labor Department this past week, show a record 37.26 million adult women in the labor force, representing 49.5 percent of adult women.

Women also account for more than one-third of the total labor force — men, women and teenagers — which reached a record 100.26 million in May.

The rapid increase in the number of working women — from 16.7 million in 1950 to 21.2 million in 1960 and 28.3 million at the start of this decade — has raised some sensitive questions about whether our traditional views of unemployment are outdated.

The argument is made, for instance, that a relatively high unemployment rate of 6 or 7 percent is roughly equivalent to unemployment of 4 percent or so a decade ago because there are far more people in the labor force. And, also important, far more of those working are providing second paychecks to supplement family income.

The implication is that many of those who are working or seeking jobs don't really need them and therefore unemployment at 6 percent is not as serious as the same level of joblessness a decade ago.

Others contend that, in effect, blaming women for high unemployment obscures the reasons for the phenomenon.

"Many families need two incomes to maintain what is an acceptable standard of living. On the other hand, there's the fact that the demands of homemaking have gotten less ... so women have more opportunity to participate outside of the home," says Mary Hilton, deputy director of the Women's Bureau in the Department of Labor.

Although pinning down how many people really "have to" work is difficult, the Labor Department estimated in March 1977 that 64 percent of all women who were working needed to for financial reasons.

The survey showed, for example, that about 21 percent of working women were married to working husbands whose income was less than $10,000, which the study defined as insufficient for family income.

About 24.1 percent of the working women were not married; 4.4 percent were separated; 5.7 percent were widowed and 9 percent were divorced.

In addition to increasing numbers of working women, the post-World War II baby boom also has swelled the ranks of the labor force in recent years as millions of young people reach working age.

A study by the Committee for Economic Development, a research group of businessmen and educators, estimates that nearly two-thirds of the growth in the labor force over the last decade was due to the large numbers of women and young people entering the labor market.

There is no question that such a trend makes it more difficult to reduce the unemployment level. A special commission, appointed by President Carter, is currently studying whether the methods of measuring unemployment should be updated to reflect the changes.

Last year, for instance, a record 4.1 million new workers found jobs, but the number of people seeking employment grew at an even faster rate so the unemployment rate stubbornly remained at around 7 percent, historically high for a time when the economy was expanding.

Last month, the situation was similar. The number of workers who found jobs grew by 310,000 people from April, bringing the total number of employed workers to 94.1 million. But the number looking for jobs grew by 500,000, so unemployment rose to 6.1 percent in May, from 6 percent in April.

Unemployment among adult men

BUSINESS

was unchanged at 4.2 percent and among adult women it rose to 6.3 percent in May from 5.8 percent the previous month.

Overall, the number of adult men employed or looking for work, totaled 53.41 million in May, about 79.9 percent of the population group.

Men, aged 20 and older, represented 53.3 percent of the total labor force last month; adult women, 37.2 percent; and teenagers, age 16 to 19, of both sexes, 9.6 percent.

In other business developments this past week:

—The inflation outlook brightened slightly when the government reported that wholesale prices rose .7 percent in May. That was down from the 1.3 percent gain in April but still well ahead of the average monthly increases for all of last year.

—In a separate report, the Commerce Department reported that consumer prices spurted ahead by .9 percent in April. That was the largest monthly jump since February, 1977.

—President Carter sent word to members of the House and Senate Appropriations committees that he would veto any legislation that he considers inflationary. The letters were apparently prompted in part by pending labor, defense, health, education and welfare measures which Carter considers too costly.

—Retail chain stores reported strong sales gains in May, helped by improved weather after a slow April. Penney's said its sales were up 26 percent in May from a year earlier. Sears increased 10 percent and Kmart reported a 16 percent gain in retail sales.

—The government's index of leading economic indicators, designed to foreshadow economic trends, rose 0.5 percent in April after slipping 0.1 percent in March. Some economists suggested that might indicate additional momentum in the economic rebound. But since the index has bounced up and down in a narrow range for the past several months, the increase didn't provide a strong signal of much change.

Application seeks bank

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — An application has been filed for a new state bank in Watauga, Tarrant County, state banking commissioner Robert Stewart said Wednesday.

The proposed Citizens State Bank would have capital of $400,000, surplus of $400,000 and reserves of $200,000.

The proposed directors are J. Ardis Bell and Jenkins Garrett of Fort Worth, Roger Brooks of Watauga and Alan Hamm and J.B. Sandlin of Bedford.

No officers have been selected.

The state banking board tentatively has set a hearing for Oct. 23.

$1.7 million for Sul Ross?

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN—Comptroller Bob Bullock has announced allocation of state ad valorem property tax funds among 17 senior colleges and universities, including Sul Ross State University at Alpine, despite a lawsuit challenging the tax.

Under the allocation, required by the State Constitution, Sul Ross would receive $1,715,100 in funds, Bullock reported.

He noted, however, that the tax "is under a cloud" because of the lawsuit filed April 5 in Travis County District Court by Rep. Wayne Peveto, Orange, in which Peveto charges the tax is being applied in an unconstitutional manner.

Exposition scheduled

LUBBOCK—The second annual High Plains Agribusiness Exposition will be held at the Lubbock Memorial Civic Center Aug. 25-27, according to Danny J. Cunyus, show director.

Cunyus said the 1977 Exposition was the first major farm show held in this area with over 150 exhibitors. "Response from last year's exhibitors wishing to be in the 1978 show has been very encouraging," said Cunyus.

Plans currently are being formulated for forums on marketing, farm management, import-export opportunities and energy. The forum format has been developed to continue the exposition's efforts to provide an occasion for anyone interested in agriculture to become more aware of advances and problems in the field, according to Cunyus.

Officers and management for the organization include Danny J. Cunyus, director; Karl Richey, coordinator; Gerald Griffin; Robert D. Rogers, all of Lubbock; and Joe Cunyus of Lockney. An advisory board composed of High Plains farmers will be announced later.

The exposition will be free to the public, Cunyus added, and will contain 124,975 square feet of exhibit space inside and adjacent to the Civic Center.

Companies interested in additional information about the show or who wish to book space may contact Danny Cunyus or Karl Richey at 806-763-3851.

business beattitudes

by Bill Beattie

Courtesy is really nothing more than a form of friendliness. It is amazing what a warming influence it can have on an otherwise dreary world. It has been said that a rise of one degree Fahrenheit in the mean annual temperature of the earth would free both polar regions from their ice. It is thrilling to consider what frigidity might be dissolved in the world of human relations if we all made just a little more effort to be friendly and courteous.

Nothing is ever lost by courtesy. It is the cheapest of the pleasures; it costs nothing and conveys much. Courtesy pleases everyone who gives and everyone who receives, and therefore is twice blessed.

If we love men and they are unfriendly, we must look into our love; if we rule men and they are unruly, we must look into our wisdom; if we are courteous to men and they do not respond, we must look into our courtesy. If what we do is vain, we must always seek from within.

Oliver Wendell Holmes said, "Don't flatter yourself that friendship authorizes you to say disagreeable things to your intimates. The nearer you come into relation with a person, the more necessary do tact and courtesy become. Except in cases of necessity, which are rare, leave your friend to learn unpleasant things from his enemies; they are ready enough to tell him."

Small kindnesses, small considerations, small courtesies, habitually practised in our social intercourse, give greater charm to our character than the display of great talents and accomplishments.

In all the affairs of life courtesies of small and trivial character are the ones which strike deepest in the grateful and appreciating heart. We may have to fight hard to hold our own in business; but we don't need to fight to get ahead of someone in the elevator, or at the post office window, or at a department store sale. No matter how strong competition is, business and personal courtesy make life easier and more pleasant for everyone.

Life is not so short but that there is always time for COURTESY.
— Emerson

Cosby makes return as spy

By JAY SHARBUTT

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Once upon a time, there was a series, "I Spy," with Bill Cosby and Robert Culp as spies. Sunday night, Cosby returns to hush-hush work in a two-hour NBC movie, "Top Secret."

It is different than "I Spy." Cosby now is a New York art dealer who secretly does special work for Uncle Sam. When thugs steal 120 pounds of plutonium in Italy, he is sent to Italy immediately.

His contact there is McGee (Tracy Reed), a lovely lady spy posing as an expatriate artist. Cosby lands in Italy, takes a cab to the famed Via Scenic Harbor View, sees her painting and makes contact.

They jump in her white VW convertible and start driving. She tells him about the stolen plutonium and adds: "Our job is to get it back fast. My theory is that it was terrorists."

Next scene: Two thugs who stole the plutonium haggle with young folks who indicate they are terrorists. They want to buy the boom stuff, the thugs want more money. Guns are drawn, then put away.

Meanwhile, Cosby and McGee arrive at a hamlet. He asks where is the hotel. And is told: "There is no hotel. You're staying with me. Our cover is that we're lovers."

She also berates him. Each time they're in her apartment she berates him. Berate No. 1 is that field spies take all the risks "while you're in Washington eating beef Wellington and stroking the brass..."

They then go to an afternoon party held in the big villa of one Carl Vitale (played by executive producer Sheldon Leonard). Carl is a deported New York mob boss who once ran the docks.

McGee, an old flame of Carl, introduces Cosby. Carl sizes him up, then mutters, "Treat her right or I'll cut your heart out." Later, Cosby softly tells her, "I think he means it."

"Not him," she laughs. "He's a pussycat." She points out some people at the party. Not all are pussycats. Says she: "See the face over there? He owns the drug traffic."

In mid-party, Cosby chases a young waiter, Gino, because Gino's hair is falling out, a sure sign of plutonium poisoning. But Gino gets away. Cosby returns to the party, and an angry McGee takes him home.

Berate No. 2 occurs: "If you're supposed to be the best, no wonder we're in trouble around the world. We're supposed to be undercover, right? I mean, that's the way the senators set up the thing."

Meanwhile, the terrorists decide to go see a plutonium robber, Dale Murphy, and torture him with a battery so he will tell them where the stuff is stashed.

'Substance' programming

The Los Angeles Times

HOLLYWOOD — Television viewers who carp that there is rarely anything of substance on the tube at night may have to change their tune in the near future. Unlikely as it seems in today's hypercompetitive TV industry, the next few months promise to swell the ranks occupied by "60 Minutes" with two additional primetime news magazine shows. By early next year we face the amazing prospect of seeing all three each week. No longer will "60 Minutes" be the lone oasis of public affairs programming on the networks' desertlike schedules of entertainment fare.

Symphony members at meeting

By ROGER SOUTHALL

Representatives of the Midland-Odessa Symphony will be in Chicago this week to attend sessions of the 33rd national conference of the American Symphony Orchestra League.

The conference convenes Monday in Chicago's Hyatt Regency Hotel, with sessions continuing there through Friday. Approximately 1,200 representatives of some 400 symphony orchestras in the U.S. and Canada will be in attendance.

Heading the Midland-Odessa delegation is Dr. Thomas Hohstadt, music director-conductor of the Midland-Odessa Symphony and Chorale, and Jo Ann Hair, general manager of the symphony. From the Midland Symphony and Chorus Association will be John Ingram, president of the association; the Rev. P. D. Peterson, president-elect; Mrs. W. J. Heath, president of the Midland Symphony Guild, and Mrs. Gordon Knox, a member of the Midland Symphony and Chorus Association and a former Guild president who is active in state and national symphony organizations.

Odessans attending the Chicago meeting will be Mrs. William Gray, president of the Odessa Symphony Guild, and Mrs. William Watts and Mrs. C. Richard Fox, Guild members.

"Make Your Symphony Twice As Succcessful" is the overall theme of the conference this year. Promoting success will be the subject of a keynote address at a Wednesday luncheon by Bill Veeck, the innovative president of the Chicago White Sox. The conference also will feature special sessions on such subjects as "Managing Our Business, Artistically and Financially," "Government and the Symphony Orchestra" and "The Symphony Orchestra — A Community Resource."

Host to the conference is the Chicago Symphony Orchestra whose general manager, John S. Edwards, is chairman of the conference planning committee.

In addition to baseball executive Veeck, conference speakers will include Livinston L. Joy Young wins scholarship

Joy Gail Young is 1978 recipient of the Midland Music Teachers Association's annual Wallace Wimberly Scholarship.

The scholarship, named in honor of the late Wallace Wimberly, a longtime music teacher in Midland, goes to an outstanding high school graduate in the city who plans to continue music study at the college level. Miss Young will attend Abilene Christian University where she recently was awarded a piano scholarship.

The honoree began keyboard studies at age 6 with her sister and has had piano study in later years with Mrs. David Griffith, Mrs. Wayne Matthews, Mrs. Ron Hubert and Mrs. Ray Bristol. She has had special keyboard instruction from Larry Waltz of Denton, Mme. Lili Kraus of Fort Worth and Dr. William Race of Austin. Last summer she received a scholarship to attend the Irl Allison piano workshop in Austin.

For several years Miss Young has been a first-place winner in the annual sonata-sonatina contest sponsored by Midland Music Teachers Association, and she has participated during the last nine years in annual National Guild of Piano Teachers auditions here, receiving several Critics Circle awards.

Miss Young is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Vaughn Young of Midland and a spring graduate of Lee High School.

U.S. return unlikely

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — "Alicia Alonso, a definitive Giselle, is one of the great ballerinas of our time," began a picture caption in Dance magazine seven years ago.

"Her long career with American Ballet Theatre ended in 1960 when she chose to return to her native Havana with her husband, Fernando, to build the Ballet Alicia Alonso into he Ballet Nacional de Cuba. Despite worldwide acclaim for her and her company, it is unlikely that American audiences will ever see her dance again."

Now, at 56, Alonso is — today as then — one of the legendary dancers of our time. But much else has changed.

The Ballet Nacional de Cuba has taken its place among the major classical troupes of the world. Alonso has been divorced and remarried. By 1975 the political atmosphere had changed sufficiently so that she danced with ABT in a New York gala, and thereafter in Washington and other cities.

Singer in right spot for success

By The Associated Press

Bonnie Tyler, age 25, was in the right place at the right time. And who would expect, she says with a grin, that the right place would be a seaport in southern Wales named Swansea?

A friend of young song writers Ronnie Scott and Steve Wolfe — who knew they were looking for a girl to record their songs — heard her in Swansea.

She says, "I went up to London and they listened to my voice and had me make a record of 'Honeycomb.' They took it to RCA and had a deal. That was in 1976. They released it. It didn't do anything.

"At that time, my band, Imagination, was working six or seven nights a week. It was going great for us. When this recording came along, I didn't really expect anything to happen. But I had nothing to lose.

"I had everything to gain. And I did, you know."

Miss Tyler's current single record, "It's a Heartache," has quickly jumped into the top 10 best-selling singles.

"You never think it's going to happen to you," she says. "You think it just happens to other people."

Scott and Wolfe recorded Miss Tyler again, with one of their songs, "Lost in France," and they became her managers.

She says, "Straight away it was an international hit. Then I sang 'More than a Lover' and I had a second hit. Then I sang 'Heaven' and it was a hit only in Germany and Scandinavia.

Miss Tyler was born in Skewen, Wales, middle child of seven.

Sacred music slated today

A program of sacred music will be presented by vocalists Jane Clancy Huddleston and Brian V. Swingle at 4:30 p.m. today in the sanctuary of Trinity Presbyterian Church, West Louisiana avenue near Andrews Highway.

The recital is presented under auspices of the music department of Trinity Church. Mrs. Huddleston is choir director for the church.

Mrs. Huddleston, a dramatic soprano, will offer a set of scriptural songs by Antonin Dvorak and Swingle will be heard in the Four Serious Songs of Johannes Brahms. The recitalists also will offer works by Handel and a selection of American sacred songs.

Mrs. Huddleston, a Midland resident for the last five years, has been heard in several previous recitals here and she has sung in annual musicales presented by the Musicians Club of Midland, an affiliate of Texas Federation of Music Clubs. She teaches voice privately in the city.

Epitaph concern behind actor's role at U.N. meet

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Actor Paul Newman says he doesn't want his tombstone to bear the legend: "There lies a lazy old man who was never part of his time," and that is why he agreed to join the U.S. delegation at the current U.N. conference on disarmament.

Newman, 53, one of Hollywood's top money-makers, is giving up six weeks of his time to help focus attention on the world's $400 billion annual arms budget. The need to divert some of that money to economic development is a major theme of the special General Assembly session, which began May 23 and is to end June 28.

"I have no illusions about curbing arms competition, but unless we turn this thing around now, we'll be in an absolutely untenable position in a few years. The chances of miscalculations will increase and the chances of accidents will iperease," he told The Associated Press in an interview.

It is "tragic," Newman said, that the recent opening of a gambling casino in Atlantic City may have gotten more news coverage than the first worldwide disarmament conference since 1932.

A long-time political activist, Newman supported the ill-fated presidential campaign of Sen. Eugene McCarthy in 1968 and helped mobilize grassroots support against the Vietnam War.

Here are excerpts from the interview:

Question: What motivated you to accept the job?

Answer: The people don't think of the consequences of not having arms control now. The only thing they think about is what constitutes national security. This demonstrates that the military-industrial complex has won all of the arguments so far. I accepted the job because I don't want my children to write on my tombstone that there lies a lazy old man who was never part of his time. It is part of our time to work for disarmament.

Newman has five children, two by his first wife, the former Jacqueline Witte, and three by actress Joanne Woodward, whom he married in 1958.

Q: How do you see your role in the U.S. delegation?

A: I am not a great negotiator. So those people who expect me to negotiate a ban on chemical warfare can rest easy. But I can go on television and can do newspaper interviews.

Q: Do the diplomats treat you seriously or see you primarily as an actor?

A: I think it's half and half. Reacting to me as an actor is a disappointment. But I've come to live with it and deal with it so I am kind of hard-nosed about that.

Q: What can the special session (on disarmament) accomplish?

A: You must remember that the special session can only prepare an agenda and provide the machinery for future negotiations. What it can do is to call attention to the necessities for arms reduction and put a spotlight around the world on it. It's not been getting the kind of media coverage it should've been getting. Atlantic City is getting more coverage and that is tragic.

Q: U.S. officials say one of the reasons that prevented President Carter from addressing the session was fast-breaking developments in Africa. How do you view Soviet-Cuban involvement there?

A: If you want to mention Horn of Africa and the Soviet adventurism, you also should be obligated to note that the Soviets have been kicked out of Egypt, Somalia, Sudan and Ghana. So I think the Russians may have Vietnams in front of them. I think that when we got bogged down in Vietnam we very sensibly withdrew ... and pulled the carpet out from under our machismo. So now we feel that we must be doubly confronted in Africa and other places. Too bad Vietnam had that effect. It should have showed that we have no effect in a non-industrialized society.

And so far as the Soviet buildup of the SS-20 missiles in Europe is concerned, I think it's an act of absolute idiocy. But it does show that their technology is out of control very much the same way our technology is.

Churches study prison problems

With BOB TIEUEL

The Human Experience—Are Prisons Necessary.. A British minister, J. Arthur Hoyles, wants to see prisons abolished, as do a number of other experts on crime and punishment who are speaking out on the subject these days. The best way is the eradication of social conditions breeding crime and increased involvement of churches in the community, he says.

"The church's work with prisoners is an attempt to restore people who have fallen from grace to good citizenship. Therefore such things as capital punishment and corporal punishment have no place in the church," Dr. Hoyles believes.

In Norman, Okla., for three months, the minister, author of six books on crime and prisons and an international authority, plans to visit prisons and jails in Oklahoma and the Southwest to learn what he can about their operation. He knows his views may not be popular. Most people ask him about punishment as a deterrent to crime. "I am coming to the conclusion that the method of punishment has nothing to do with the crime rate. We've found that true through the development of criminology in the last 100 years."

The exchange pastor of Goodrich United Methodist Church believes that we need to reduce urban crowding and that crime is a phenomenon of the large city. Next, he says, deal with what he calls "the color problem," at least in American. A greater number of non-caucasions are in prison than their percentage of the population would suggest.

Then there is the breakup of the family. Most prisoners have anomalies in family background, such as illigitimacies, divorce, child abuse, that sort of thing. He becomes an enemy of society through his upbringing. The church family can be effective. America's record of religious halfway houses and extended church families is very good, among the best in the world in fact. Other countries are looking to the United States for more progressive leadership, Hoyles said.

He has seen prisons in 20 countries and believes America's federal bureau of corrections is one "of the most advanced in the world." State and city prisons vary in their treatment and facilities, he adds.

A former Hobbs resident, Ernestine Hodge, is seeking the Democratic nomination in Albuquerque for the District 11 seat in the New Mexico House of Representatives. If nominated and elected, she would be the second black in the history of the state, to be elected to the state body and the first black woman. The other black currently serving is Lenton Malry, who is completing his 11th year as a representative from Albuqerque and will face four other opponents in the June 6 primary in New Mexico as a candidate for Leutenant Governor. Ms. Hodge is a registered nurse and a graduate of the University of New Mexico. Malry is a graduate of Texas College, Grambling College in Louisiana and the University of New Mexico.

Famous Quotes: "My contention is that if a substantial portion of the seven million unregistered blacks became a part of the Republican Party, it would assure us, assuming we have the same agenda, that no matter who is in the White House, we would never be in the outhouse. ...I may be in the slum, but the slum is not in me. We are better than our environment. No one will do more for you than you will do for yourself." (Rev. Jesse Jackson of PUSH.)

A major new survey for the U.S. government has found that racial bias in housing was widespread in the nation and was very prevalent in the Midwest. This racial bias encounter occurs whether blacks are interested in buying or renting, according to our bellringer sources.

Dr. and Mrs. C. Roy Johnson of 1401 N. Garfield St. announce the engagement of their daughter, Janis Lorraine, to Terry Medina Whitaker, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Whitaker, Route 3.

The couple is to be married at 2 p.m. Aug. 12 in the First Baptist Church.

Whitaker attended Midland College and is a builder with Whitaker Construction Co.

Twin sisters commissioned lieutenants

LIVONIA, Mich. (AP)-Bernice and Geraldine Kenzie, 23-year-old twins, have become second lieutenants in the U.S. Army Nurse Corps.

They received their commissions from their father, retired U.S. Army Capt. Earl Kenzie, in a ceremony held at the home of their brother-in-law and sister here.

They were assigned to William Beaumont Army Medical Hospital in El Paso, Texas. They plan to become operating room nurses while studying for their masters's degrees in medical-surgical nursing.

Testing now in vogue

EDITOR'S NOTE — The word opposite in meaning to "unique" is: a, crowded. b, narrow. c, close. d, common. If antonyms aren't your bag, try this one: Write the numbers 1 to 100 in sequence. Both are sample questions on minimum competency tests which are sweeping the education field in the rush to return to classroom basics.

By TERRY KIRKPATRICK
AP Newsfeatures Writer

More and more school children are trudging home these days to tell their parents of a new kind of exam some of them probably can't even pronounce: the minimum competency test.

"Competencies," as the jargonists call them, are an outgrowth of the national Johnny-can't-read lament and back-to-basics clamor of recent years. Their purpose is to find if students are learning what they should.

That sounds easy enough.

But the demands by taxpayers that their schools be held accountable have been matched in fervor by charges that the tests are too easy or unfair, by cries of some school districts that they are too costly, and by protests of some educators that they don't work anyway. With the dust of these issues far from settled, one thing is clear:

Minimum competency testing is in vogue.

Two years ago only two states required the tests. Today, lawmakers or education board members in 31 states have taken action requiring them.

They range from comprehensive statewide testing programs to simple requirements that local districts set them up. Subjects covered vary widely, as do uses for the tests. Twenty states have minimum standards for graduation, four tie the tests to promotion to the next grade. Remedial work for students who fail is a part of most state programs. Two states, Florida and California, have special "early exit" tests that allow students to leave school early if they pass.

"It's one of the fastest moving things I've seen in all the time I've been in education," says Chris Pipho, a former teacher and principal who now keeps track of competency test legislation for the Education Commission of the States. What makes its overnight popularity unusual, he says, is that it came from outside the education establishment. Legislators, who feel the pressure of public opinion, have been the prime movers.

"Sixty to 70 percent of the people on the street are asking questions about the guts of education: What have you been doing with all the money we've been giving you?" says Pipho.

Whether to have competency tests at all may be the easiest decision for a legislature or school board. Then the decisions get stickier. For instance, competence in what?

A hundred years ago school curricula were rigorous, classical and non-practical, says Dr. Thomas Knapp, who teaches statistics and testing at the University of Rochester, "but schools have taken on more responsibility, rightly or wrongly.

"If you're looking for a simple one-line explanation, I guess you'd say that students from low-income families did poorly," Ralph Turlington, state education commissioner, said. "And unfortunately, a great many black students come from low-income families."

Although an effort had been made to purge racial, economic and sex bias from the test, the NAACP charged that it was pitched to the skills of white, middle-class students.

Teacher unions joined the attack, accusing the state of instigating a "test craze" that could lead to "teaching the test."

No easier than choosing subject areas and questions is grappling with the concept of "minimum" as New York learned.

Schools traditionally have rated students against a maximum, or against other students, but minimum competency tests highlight the bottom line.

Several years ago, the New York Board of Regents set up a testing program that would require 1979 graduates to pass reading and mathematics competency tests and 1980 graduates to also pass civics, science and health, and writing competency tests.

There was an outcry this year from several regents who had seen copies of the tests. Questions included telling the time by looking at a clock face and determining length by using a ruler. The regents felt the schools should be setting high goals for achievement, not a bottom line.

Theodore Black, chancellor of the regents, told a legislative committee in April that the tests are meant to help children who are promoted without acquiring the skills they need to function as adults.

"The teachers who prepare these tests must ask themselves what skills and understandings are absolutely essential. As a result, the tests appear 'easy' to the Children suffer falls

WASHINGTON (AP) — The most common home injuries to very young children come from falls, reports the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

Following falls, the leading accidents suffered by children include blows, cuts and animal bites, suffocation and strangulation, poisoning, drowning, fires, burns and electric shock.

The reception was held in the home of the bride's parents.

After a trip to Dallas, the couple will reside at 4602 50th St., No. 149, in Lubbock.

DEAR ABBY

Nose accident leaves father skateboard shy

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I'm a 14-year-old boy with a problem father. He fell off my skateboard and threw it in the trash.

I was really good at skateboarding and never had a serious accident with one, but my father still won't let me skateboard anymore on account of HIS accident. All my friends skateboard and I would like to do it with them, but my father is stubborn once he makes up his mind.

It wasn't my fault that he broke his nose. I warned he that it wasn't as easy as it looked, but he thought because he was once a good skier he wouldn't have any trouble. Now hes taking it out on me.

Do you think he's being fair?——SKATEBOARDER

DEAR SKATEBOARDER: No. he's not being "fair," but I do think he's looking out for your best interests.

DEAR READERS: I have stated many times that any mention whatsoever of gifts was improper on an invitation. This included the forthright, "No gifts, please," as well as the tasteless (in my view) suggestion that cash was preferred to any other type of gift.

Many sent sample invitations in which gifts were mentioned. Below are two that changed my mind:

"Jane and Bob Smith invite you to dine with us on the evening of June 1 at our home at 7 p.m.

"It is in celebration of our 20th wedding anniversary. Your friendship is a cherished gift. We respectfully request no other."

"The children of Iver and Helen Dahl invite you to celebrate with them the 50th wedding anniversary of their parents. A reception will be held on May 7, at 2 p.m., at the Elmhust Country Club.

"We request your help in compiling a book which recalls memories from our parents' first 50 years of marriage. On the enclosed sheet, we ask that you write one memory or event that you have shared with them, and return it to us by April 26. We believe that the loving memories they have shared with you, their friends, would be the most treasured gift they could receive; therefore, we request that no other gift be sent."

Return to basics in designing

By CAROLE EICHEN
Copley News Service

Too often all of our creative energies are expended trying to come up with cute and clever ways to decorate an apartment when instead we should go back and concentrate on the basics.

The first "basic" of apartment interior design is to determine the focal point. This should be done before you move in so that you develop a good plan for placement of furniture and accessories.

The focal point is the center of interest in each of the rooms of the apartment. They can be different things such as a fireplace, the center of a long wall, or even a space before or between windows or doors.

If there aren't any architectural focal points, you'll have to use some creativity to come up with a focal point that works in your own apartment.

For example, a center of interest could be a chair, table and lamp, or a desk chair, lamp and picture grouped against a wall and held together visually by color or line to achieve a harmonious effect.

The rules are not hard and fast. There is a difference of opinion among designers as to whether there should be two or more focal points in a room. Some feel that one center of interest is enough with everything subordinated to this focal point.

When entering a room, you are first aware of the overall appearance and the entire mood. Then you focus in on the accents — the art and accessories. The next thing you notice is the individual pieces of furniture, the walls and ceiling and, at last, the floor.

This order may vary somewhat depending on the treatment of the floor covering. If it's a bold print or bright color, it usually will jump right out at you. Generally, however, the objects in the room should command attention over the backgrounds (walls, draperies, ceiling and, in most cases, the floor).

Inexperienced designers often try to introduce too much pattern into a small area. Space is essential. A good rule of thumb to follow is two parts pattern to three parts of plain surface.

The best way to concentrate interest is to introduce design. The eye automatically is attracted to these spots.

Woman gets top position

FORT WAYNE, Ind. (AP)-Capt. Julianne Richardson, the only woman in the Fort Wayne-based Marine Reserves unit of the Detachment Communications Support Co., 6th Combat Battalion, has become its commanding officer.

She received the formal announcement of her appointment in a letter from Maj. Gen. E. J. Miller, battalion chief, based in New Orleans.

She remembers her meeting with Miller last year. "It was at a cocktail party where all the Marines and their wives were in civilian clothes, and I was the only woman Marine there," she said. "I knew I'd have to say something to stick out in the crowd. When Maj. Miller asked me what I wanted out of life, in a casual conversation, I said, 'your job'."

She was active in the Marines from 1970 to 1973. In civilian life, she has been an administrator of the Indiana Criminal Justice Planning Agency since 1974.

NEEDLEPLAY

Erica gives answers

By ERICA WILSON

DEAR MS. WILSON: What manner of "signing" needlework do you recommend? I don't want my signature to fight with my design, yet I would like to initial it for posterity.—Ms. Gwen Bennings, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MS. BENNINGS: There are all sorts of possibilities—from the most obvious (incorporating the signature into the design, whether it be embroidery, quilting, applique or needlework) to the most subtle (initialing your work on the margin, so that it gets hemmed back, out of sight).

On my crewel and embroidery pieces, I usually just like to sign "Erica" at the bottom right hand corner in a coordinated wool or floss. It's easy to duplicate your written signature—just write it on a piece of tissue paper or on that fusible pellon web "Stitchwitchery." Then baste it in place to your work, sewing through the two layers (the fabric and the paper) with the backstitch. When you're done, just tear the paper or webbing away from your stitches, and voila—your name is translated into needlework.

For needlepoint, it's best to count out the letters of your name on graph paper first, then go to the canvas. And remember—if you're using a canvas with large squares of mesh, your name may end up being billboard size. It may be best to work smaller, more discreet backstitch letters on top of the needlepoint background!

DEAR MS. WILSON: I made a hooked rug many years ago and the canvas is tearing. Please tell me what kind of thread to use to mend the canvas.—Jeanne Hicks, Brooklyn, N.Y.

DEAR MS. HICKS: The best thing is to get a piece of the same rug canvas you used originally. Then ravel the threads away at the edges, utilizing them to mend the canvas.

Another possibility might be the notions store, where you can get some waxed, heavy-duty cotton or linen thread. That will do the trick, though probably not as professionally as the hooked rug canvas threads—because nothing is better than its own self.

THE WINE DRINKER

Still good buys

By TOM GABLE
Copley News Service

Despite drought conditions, lower supplies and increased demand, not all wine prices have leaped to levels beyond the consideration of most of us.

Value still exists in the marketplace. It just takes a little longer to seek it out because of the proliferation of newer, smaller wineries in the United States and improved distribution by others.

If you are headed for a summer picnic and want something light and fruity and to take along, try the 1976 Simi Rose of Cabernet Sauvignon, from the Alexander Valley in Sonoma County, Calif., for $3.50. It has an off-dry finish some will find pleasing.

Llords and Elwood has a good nonvintage Rose of Cabernec for $3.90 a fifth. The 1976 Robert Mondavi Gamay Rose from the Napa Valley (2.75) is light in style and quaffable.

Other picnic fare would include the 1976 Gewurztraminer from Mirrasou for $4 or the Mirassou Fleuri Blanc, for $3.75, also predominantly from Gewurztraminer grapes. The former is more crisp on the palate. The latter has very high residual sugars and can serve more as a dessert wine on a picnic than a wine to accompany cheeses, sandwiches, pates, fried chicken or whatever.

For something more crisp, try the 1975 Parducci Mendocino Chardonnay ($4.25), the 1975 Burgess Cellars Chenin Blanc ($3.75), the 1975 Ste. Michelle Washington State Semillon Blanc ($3.35), the 1976 Parducci Vintage Chablis ($3.29 for 1.5 liters), and the 1975 Pedroncelli Chardonnay ($3.50 a fifth). These would go well with good fish, souffles, fowl or Sunday brunches with salmon.

Another good buy, with an off-dry character, is the 1976 Wente Bros. Johannisberg Riesling ($3.50). For something a little different, try the Sebastiani Pinot Noir Blanc ($3.25), a white wine made from red grapes.

If you are looking for good value in quality red wines, try the nonvintage Fetzer Lake County Zinfandel ($2.50), the 1975 Fetzer Mendocino Zinfandel ($4.50), the 1975 Caymus Napa California Zinfandel ($3.50), the 1973 Inglenook Napa Valley Zinfandel ($3), and the 1974 Beaulieu Vineyards Napa Valley Cabernet Sauvignon ($4.99). All would go well with meat and pasta dishes, stronger cheeses and assorted fruits. Because of their youth, they should be opened about one hour before serving.

Male anti-lib author would keep women strictly home

By JACK WILLIAMS
Copley News Service

Monte Vanton's blue eyes twinkle like exclamation points punctuating a whimsical smile as he pauses to assess your reaction to his latest pearl of perversity.

"You can see why I'm unpopular, can't you?" he says.

Or, in a wryly confessional tone:

"Two hundred years ago I would have been burned at the stake, you know."

Vanton's views on marriage, the status of women and lifestyle are as controversial as they are unconventional.

To wit:

— A female's formal education should be terminated at 13, after which she should learn the essentials of housekeeping and motherhood.

— Marriages should be pre-arranged by the family.

— Mistresses and lovers should be permitted to satisfy desires to be "in love."

— When married women seek to work outside the house they are giving notice they will not be mothers and wives — their jobs are going to come first.

— The women's liberation movement is "fostering, promoting and campaigning for the end of the female as a female and converting her into a demi-creature, half male and half female."

Vanton, who admits to age 60 and three failed marriages of his own, is the author of "Marriage — Grounds for Divorce."

And as the inside of the book's jacket suggests, "Women generally—particularly in the movement — will want to burn it (and maybe the author, too)."

One female reporter, says Vanton, has already done so. "I thought burning books went out with Hilter."

Is Vanton, in his stridently anti-feminist stance, anti-woman, too?

He smiles the knowing smile of a gracefully aging half-rascal, half-bon vivant and, in a voice reflecting his Welsh upbringing, waxes phiosophical:

"The female is invested with an incredible innate wisdom that far transcends a male. Her responsibility to the human race is to perpetuate the species and all else that is part of it."

Which is why he terms today's educational system "nonsense" and feels school should be over for females at 13.

Ah, but there's a catch. Should she be a particularly efficient mother and housewife, finishing her work early, Vanton suggests a wife could "audit" university classes. Preferably in the arts, "from the time she's 21 to 50."

Never, he insists, should the free time be used to pursue an outside career lest the family life suffer.

"The more the male strives in his work the more he succeeds in his gender. Conversely the more the female strives in work or career the more she loses in her gender."

Such familial stability, Vanton recognizes, is no guarantee to blissful harmony. In every life a little romance must fall; hence, mistresses and lovers.

"But not without three rules that must be observed," says Vanton.

"No.1, you have to agree to be discreet. No.2, you must agree not to compare lovers and mistresses. And No.3, should the identity of the mistress or lover become known to the spouse, the relationship (the extramarital one) must end."

But why marry in the first place if there are so many inherent problems?

Vanton, in his rush to judgment, never quite satisfactorily answers this question.

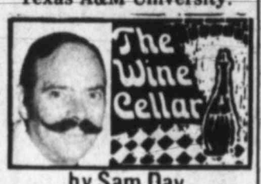

But he is quick to suggest that "marrying for love is as foolhardy as going into the restaurant business because one enjoys eating."

As for himself, Vanton disclaims any desire to give marriage a fourth go around.

"The females whose company I most enjoy these days," he says, "are 22- to 24-year-olds."

Do they ever object to his self-proclaimed outrageous and incredible views on the institution of marriage?

"We never discuss it. It can get too emotional."

You don't have to buy the bottles labelled 'cooking wines' that you find in many food stores to get wine to cook with. These bottles often contain sugar or salt, and most good cooks prefer using real wine to cook with. But, this doesn't mean that cooking with wine has to be expensive. Keep the cork from bottles of wine you serve, and if there is any wine left over after you serve it, recork the bottle and put it in your refrigerator for cooking use. Red wines can be stored for cooking for at least one week, and whites for muh longer. Even sparkling wines that have gone flat in the refrigerator are fine for cooking.

At IMPERIAL LIQUORS, 3209 W. Wadley, 694-4256 we have wines for cooking and drinking AND WILL BE HAPPY TO ADVISE YOU ON WHICH TO USE FOR WHICH. Our inventory includes a top collection of imported and domestic wines as well as the full spectrum of liquors and party goods and the biggest selection of imported beers in town. See us for suggestions for Father's Day giving; just ask the friendly moustache in the drive-up window. Open : 10-9 Mon-Sat.

Cadillacs have trip computers

By ERMA BOMBECK

Have you seen where the new Cadilacs are offering a digital trip computer on their dashboars?

It's an instrument panel which you program like a computer just before you start the trip. Then, as you drive, you press a function button and instantly, the lights illuminate to reveal your average speed for the trip, how many miles before you need gas, how long you've been on the road, how many miles to your destination and what time you will arrive.

Boy, if that little goodie were a standard part of family compact cars and station wagons, it would be the greatest boon to parents traveling with kids since they started selling tranquilizers over the counter without a prescription.

Think of it! An instant answer to all those long-playing mouths in the back seat. "When do we get there? When we gonna have lunch? How long is it going to take? How many more miles?"

Of course, it's the same old story. The expensive cars have all the children's features that should be in the economy cars. Like the limousines with their sliding glass panel that throws the back seat into a pit of silence and spares the driver the agony of sound.

Everyone knows the economy cars need twirling bucket seats where a mother can whirl around and give the kids a rap without standing on her knees and impaling herself on the head rest to reach the brats.

They need the electric windows that are controlled by the cockpit crew so that you don't have a child's tongue curving around your no-draft.

Economy cars should cars should have the electric locks on all the doors that keep the adults in the front seat in control, especially when you stop for gas and discover you have to drive through the homemade fudge and the gift shop to check it out.

Of course, it's understood that the digital computer would have to be set with a few different responses to a car carrying children. But if we've come this far, it may not be too crazy to imagine that someday, station wagons would come equipped with standard buttons on a panel that would illuminate the following answers just by touching the button:

Are we lost? (Yes or NO)

Miles covered per day. (you're not going to belive this.)

And maybe just one button that stays lit all the time that reads, "YOU SHOULD HAVE GONE BEFORE YOU LEFT HOME."

High-salt diet effects studied

A hypertension researcher has suggested that blacks in America may have inhereited a kidney system suited to the rigors of life in Africa, but which makes them disease-prone on the high-salt diet of the western world.

Other studies have reported that Americans consume more salt than necessary; that salt works to drive up blook pressure; and that blacks are twice as likely as whites to develop life-threatening high blood pressure.—Copely News Service.

Couple wed in Midland church rites

Marlyss Ann Dollahite became the bride of Paul Russell Jeffcoat in a double ring ceremony at 7 p.m. Saturday in the Christian Church of Midland. Bob Blazek was the officiating minister.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Hardin Dollahite of 3607 Sinclair St. are the parents of the bride. The bridegroom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Paul M. Jeffcoat of Bellaire.

Lisa Gay Birchum of Tulsa, Okla., was the maid of honor. Bridesmaids were Janine Hauke, Jody Fulks of Augusta, Ga., and Sandra Simmons of Houston.

The best man was Kenneth R. Shaw of Lake Jackson. Scott Crabtree of Lake Jackson, Daniel Richards of Cameron and Robert Seymour of Columbus were the groomsmen. The ushers were Thomas D. Williams of Marshall and Thomas H. Dollahite Jr., brother of the bride, of Vance Air Force Base, Oklahoma.

Music was furnished by Mary Jane Strobel, organist, and Kathy Goddard, soloist.

Mr. Dollahite presented his daughter in marriage. She wore a traditional A-line silhouette of Quiana and Venise laces. The fitted bodice was encrusted with silk Swiss Guipure lace and pearls outlining the English net yoke of Brussels silk embroidery and ring neckline. The slim sleeves were enhanced with an inset of English net traced with lace and scalloped at the wrist. The soft flowing skirt was highlighted with a Dior bow above the chapel train. The hemline was edged with scalloped Venise lace.

Mrs. Paul Russell Jeffcoat

Her mantilla veil of French illusion edged in matching lace and gathered to a matching lace and pearl Camelot, reached the length of the train. She carried a bouquet of mixed white flowers and baby's breath.

The reception was held in the Midland Hilton.

Out-of-city guests at the wedding included Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Dollahite of El Paso, grandparents of the bride, and Mrs. W. C. Crank of El Paso, the bride's grandmother.

The couple will reside at 5499 Braesvalley St., Houston, after a wedding trip.

THE VISIBLE WOMAN

Virginia Woolf pierces heart

By JANET LOWE
Copley News Service

It was a charming bookstore in one of those old-timey towns that dot New Jersey. The atmosphere of burnished, carefully tended age convinced me that such a store surely contained treasures.

"Do you have a biography of Virginia Woolf?" I asked. "Oh no. We don't carry 'Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf,' sorry," replied the cordial clerk.

Poor Virginia. Edward Albee's play, which is about Virginia Woolf in a vaguely symbolic way, has done more damage to that woman's character than any anti-feminist campaign possibly could have done. Even those who have never seen the play or movie have heard of the English writer, and feel certain Woolf is someone to fear.

Nothing could be further from the truth. The women's movement has brought a renewed appreciation of the writing of women from the past. But few early feminists are capable of piercing to the heart of today's woman the way Virginia Woolf does.

Her social class and intellectual background allowed Woolf to write at a time when few women did. Yet her privileged station never dimmed her willingness to understand the situation of the women stitching hat brims in a factory, the elderly matron riding opposite in a train car, or the younger woman who marched in Picadilly demanding the right to vote.

Virginia Woolf was born in London in 1882, the daughter of Sir Leslie Stephen, editor of the Dictionary of National Biography. When Virginia was 13, her mother died, a grief from which the girl never fully recovered. But her father appreciated and encouraged the development of his daughter's exceptional mind.

In her father's vast library, Virginia read extensively, gathering extraordinary knowledge of literature. She talked with his circle of learned and creative friends. She was 22 when her father died.

Program aimed at certain items

COLLEGE STATION—To phase out use of chlorofluorocarbons as propellents in aerosol products, three government agencies are conducting a two-part program that will conclude on April 15, 1979.

At the time, a ban on products containing chlorofluorocarbons as propellents will take effect. It will prohibit such products from entering interstate commerce after that date.

Agencies involved are the Environmental Progection Agency (EPA), the Food and Drug Administration (FDA), and the Consuerm Product Safety Commission (CPSC).

Claudia Kerbel, consumer information specialist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, The Texas A&M University System, says the two-part program focuses on both consumers and manufacturers.

In the program's first phase, consumers are being encouraged not to use aerosol products containing chlorofluorocarbsons, Ms. Kerbel says.

In line with this, the three agencies are requiring manufactueres of any such products under agency regulation to label the products with a warning about the product's possible risks, she says.

According to the agencies, chlorofluorocarbons reduce the earth's ozone shield that filters out harmful ultraviolet radiation from the sun.

That means as the shield is reduced, increased amounts of ultraviolet radiation will reach the earth and may contribute to skin cancer in humans, alter crop yeilds or produce other adverse environmental effects, Ms. Kerbel explains.

In the program's second phase, chlorofluorocarbons may not be manufactured for use in aerosol products after Oct. 15, 1978.

Barbara Isbell's new tennis outfit is a size 7 instead of a 14, thanks to Pat Walker's.

There's a time in a woman's life when gaining weight becomes too easy, and losing it comes hard. At 34, Barbara Isbell realized she'd reached that point.

She was 20 pounds overweight, into size 14's, and unhappy with her looks. Even her husband's offer to buy her new clothes didn't help. "What I need is a new body," she told him.

Even her nicest clothes couldn't conceal Barbara Isbell's extra weight.

Her crash diets had only lasted until the hunger pangs won, so she knew better than to try that again. Where was the answer?

Right in her own neighborhood were several friends who had lost weight and kept it off. She'd often heard them talk about their "secret"—Pat Walker's. Maybe it would work for her, too.

The day she called Pat Walker's for her first appointment was the day Barbara Isbell's dream of a new body began to come true.

Denise Davis, Hilliard recite vows in church

Tana Denise Davis, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Maurice K. Davis, 4600 Pleasant Drive, and Robin Douglass Hilliard, sone of Mr. and Mrs. John A. Hilliard, 2607 W. Storey St., were married at 2 p.m. Saturday in Westside Church of Christ.

Owen Cosgrove was the officiating minister for the double ring ceremony.

Presented in marriage by her parents, the bride wore an original gown of silk organza. The bodice was fashioned with a Sabrina neckline enhanced with pearls on Venise lace scallops. She wore a triple-tiered full-length veil of English imported silk illusion edged with Venise lace and pearls. A pearl necklace was a gift from the bridegroom. Her bouquet of white Sweetheart roses, carnations and an orchid was carried on a Bible.

Linda Belew of Abilene, cousin of the bride, was matron of honor. The maid of honor was Nancy Schmitt. Dana Spurlock and Angela Ingram were bridesmaids, and Sue Larsen, cousin of the bride, and Laura Thorton, sister of the bridegroom, were bridesmatrons. The flower girl was Shea Davidson, cousin of the bride.

David Hilliard attended as best man. The groomsmen were Keith Davis, brother of the bride; Buster Davidson and Mark Reynolds, cousins of the bride; Jeff Johnson and Mark Green. Ushering were Joe Sasater and Terry Reynolds. Kevin Davidson, cousin of the bride, was the ring bearer, and the candle lighters were Jerry Lynn Brown and Clayton White.

Music was furnished by a choral group of the church.

A reception was held in the church before the couple left on a trip to Padre Island. They will reside in the Valencia Villa Apartments, 4000 W. Illinois St.

Among the out-of-city guests attending the wedding were the bride's grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Tom Davidson of Sweetwater.

The rehearsal dinner was given by the bridegroom's parents in Chesa Nuova Restaurant.

Following the wedding, a tea was given for the out-of-city guests, with Mr. and Mrs. Buster Davidson and Mr. and Mrs. Larry Lasater as host couples.

Physical therapy meets challenge

By The Associated Press

Newer methods of physical therapy that involve psychology and patient challenges are putting victims of strokes, arthritis, hip operations, back problems and the like back on their feet faster.

"Physicians have become more aware of the benefits of physical therapy, creating a bigger need for therapists, but it is becoming more difficult to study it," says therapist Susan Connolly.

"Schools are rejecting many applicants because therapy has become a one-to-one relationship. You can't have mass classes as you might in sociology or psychology," says Ms. Connolly, who majored in physical therapy at the University of Connecticut and has been practicing nine years.

Methods of treating victims of strokes and other ailments provide some clues about newer techniques. For example, psychology becomes an essential ingredient to motivate a patient and Ms. Connolly uses it to the hilt at her office in Westport, Conn., and at the nearby Regency, a convalescent care center, where she runs the therapy department.

Weary and muscle sore, a group of patients may arrive at the center's therapy room in wheelchairs or on four-pronged walkers, crutches or canes. Soon they are psyched into action as they observe a 92-year-old partially blind stroke victim, who is paralyzed on one side, being guided easily up and down stairs. Soon he is on his own. Another paralytic is learning to put on shoes and to walk with a cane.

"Their rehabilitation potential depends upon the area of the brain that has been affected," explains Ms. Connolly. "But a patient who has the will to get better generally can be helped. The most difficult are those who do not really want to get well."

The efforts of the severely handicapped prompts a 70-year-old woman convalescing after a hip operation to endure the twinges and aches of her own experience.

The "Oh, my aching back set" has no complaints either, and the morale of the entire group is improved by observing the worst of their lot, Ms. Connolly notes.

A former French opera singer in her 80s acknowledges that she boosts her morale by visting in her wheelchair "just to watch." Occasionally she walks about with the aid of a cane guided by Ms. Connolly.

Songs, poetry, stories and good humor are used to psych her patients. As they march to the tune of McNamara's Band, Ms. Connolly may casually take a patient's arm and hand him a cane. He scarcely notices that he is using it, and otherwise might have been timid about leaving the four-pronged support he had been using.

Other patients observe the action as they soak a leg in a whirlpool bath, lie with hot packs on a shoulder or exercise on a pad with weights on hands and feet, awaiting their own one-to-one turn with the therapist.

"People inspire one another. They pick up the challenge," she says. Highly successful, she solves some problems more easily than others — gait, for example. If there is a limp it may be corrected by a new stride. Other problems require more analysis.

"That's when our education comes into play. It's like having a lot of keys on a ring. If one doesn't open the door you try another."

Members of families get into the act, too, as they are taught how to cope with a patient who falls down.

The patient must first be put in a proper position for rising, with the helper assuming a position that will assist the patient to rise.

There are solutions to some problems that might not occur to the family of a patient who is at home.

"A fall from bed often may be prevented by having stroke patients get out of bed on their good side. It may be only a matter of changing their position in bed," Ms. Connolly points out.

USDA to reduce waste in lunches

By recent legislation, junior high and middle students would no longer have to accept all items on the school lunch if they did not intend to eat them.

Under the proposed regulation, school districts could allow these students to accept only three items out of the five offered daily as part of their lunch. At present, students are required to accept all five items, whether they intend to eat them or not.—Copley News Service.

Fitting garments can give you fits

By BETTY W. KINSER
Copley News Service

If you are planning to teach a fitting class, conduct a fitting seminar or lecture, you can be assured of two things:

You will be asked a lot of questions and at least one unheard-of problem will crop up.

Unless you are a local gal who can stick around for follow-ups, you can add one more thing: Within two days, someone is going to be mad at you.

Fitting is not funny. It does not follow any rules—our bodies do not follow any rules—and, just because you know how to do it doesn't mean it's going to work every time.

But with a little basic knowledge, we can start our fitting project ahead of the rest.

Start at the top and work down! Everything you do to the top will affect the rest of the garment. Everything you do to the back will affect the front, and on and on.

Shoulder width: If you are not sure where your shoulder edge is, place a large rubber band around your upper arm over the shoulder edge. It probably will fall at the edge of that large bone. Measure your shoulder width with a ruler from the base of the neck to the rubber band. (We use a ruler for some measurements to prevent measuring down in the valleys, which would give us a too-large measurement.)

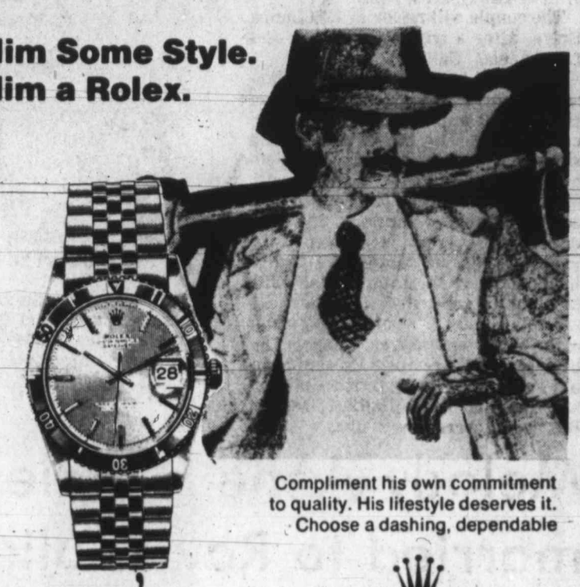

Pin out the shoulder dart on the pattern. Measure from seamline to seamline. Compare pattern measurement. If there is a difference, alter width of shoulder.

Back width: Put a large rubber band around each upper arm to mark armhole location. Bring shoulders slightly forward. Measure horizontally between rubber bands at widest part of back. Measure down from base of neck to this measuring line. On pattern, measure down from neck seamline the same distance. At this point, measure back width of pattern. Compare. Any difference calls for changes in the pattern.

Back waist length: Measure down center back from base of neck to waistline (a cord tied around waist helps in location). To this measurment add one-fourth inch to one-half inch for ease. Compare this total to the back waist length listed on the pattern envelope. If the difference is one-half inch or more, alter length.

Bustline: With tape, measure from center of shoulder to high point (crown) of bust. On pattern, measure from center of shoulder seamline to level of dart point. You may want to extend a horizontal line from dart point to determine location. If the measurements do not match, move dart.

Flip over these Bran Flapjacks

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
Associated Press Food Editor

DEAR CECILY: I've read that bran is good for you because it provides roughage. I serve it as a breakfast cereal sometimes, but I'm wondering about other ways of using it. What do you recommend? — CONSCIENTIOUS.

DEAR CONSCIENTIOUS: Bran adds excellent texture and flavor to quick breads, yeast breads, pancakes — especially when these are made with white flour. Here's a recipe for Bran Flapjacks that we tested recently and liked. If you try it, expect these pancakes to be thinner and not quite so soft as the giant-size sort commonly served in coffee shops. — C.B.

BRAN FLAPJACKS

1 cup all-purpose flour
2½ teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
1 cup fortified whole bran
1¼ cups milk
1 egg
¼ cup oil
3 tablespoons honey

On wax paper stir together the flour, baking powder and salt.

In a small bowl stir together the bran and milk; let stand about 5 minutes.

In a medium bowl beat together the egg, oil and honey; stir in the bran mixture. Add the flour mixture and stir just until dry ingredients are moistened.

For pancakes, drop heaping tablespoons of the batter well apart onto a preheated griddle. Cook until bubbles appear on the surface; turn and brown the other sides.

Serve with butter and honey.

Makes 16 to 20 pancakes, each about 3 inches wide.

Nourishing Space occupies idyllic acres in Arizona desert

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP)- Kitty Riddle left a professorship at Pennsylvania State University two years ago to establish a place for women away from the hassles of society.

The result is Nourishing Space, an environment-oriented non-profit retreat for women which occupies 160 idyllic acres of desert 23 miles south of here.

Most weekends feature workshops on witchcraft, solar energy, alternative child care, backpacking, astrology and raising goats and bees.

"I use my background as a nutritionist to find parallels on how women can nourish their minds, bodies and emotions," Miss Riddle said. "Women who have traditionally nourished others have not always been in touch with how to nourish themselves."

Space has no dorm facilities. Visitors bring camping equipment and their own food. The retreat operates on donations and a series of government grants.

Good teachers create warmer class climate

STILLWATER, Okla. (AP) — Distinguished teachers are enthusiastic, businesslike, clear and precise. They use various teaching methods, create a warm classroom climate and ask questions involving judgment.

Even though such teachers crack jokes, their students know they have to study to get on in those courses.

These are among findings in a dissertation, "Instructional Behavior Patterns of Distinguished University Teachers," by Lea L. Ebro, who completed her Ph.D. at Ohio State University.

"Such teachers are in command of their classes," she said. "They get their students to interact with them and they respond immediately when students ask questions or give answers.

Dr. Ebro did the research to improve her proficiencies as a teacher. Now an associate professor at Oklahoma State University here, she hopes to continue similar research to find if teachers selected as distinguished at one university behave the same as those at another.

Besides working with graduate students and with curriculum in food, nutrition and institution administration, she directs the OSU administrative dietetic internship program.

To gather data for her research, Dr. Ebro sat in on classes of 17 Ohio State University faculty members who had been awarded the Alumni Award for Distinguished Teaching from 1972 to 1976.

She discovered their working patterns by coding their teaching behavior at five-second intervals.

Some common characteristics she found were initiating, seeking clarification, explaining, responding to student questions, using media and non-verbal actions.

She found all the teachers initiated the information but students were free to interrupt at any time. Those classes had much laughter because the teachers introduced humor spontaneously and students were encouraged to do the same.

Following the giving of information, teachers asked questions. After a student responded, these teachers immediately responded, either with a judgment of correctness, a request for clarification or additional supplementary information.

The teachers lectured or did outright giving of facts only 4 percent of the time. The rest of the time, they interpreted, translated or expanded on something.

Besides walking around as they talked, most of the teachers used gestures often. The most common non-verbal behavior was looking at students to see if they were ready for the next topic.

Her research is considered among the first to record the nature of teaching events, unit of time by unit of time, and to analyze that data to develop profiles of distinguished teachers.

Wait until ashes grey

COLLEGE STATION— Charcoal fire is ready for outdoor cooking once it is a rosy bed of coals covered with grey ash—but if flames are still visible, the fire is not ready.

Achieving a good bed of coals for meal preparation depends on several basic steps, says Marilyn Haggard, a foods and nutrition specialist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, The Texas A&M University System.

PREPARING TO 'FIRE'

Start the fire 30-60 minutes ahead of time so flames can die down and the coals turn gray.

To begin, stack bricquettes in a pyramid, soak lightly with charcoal lighter fluid, let stand one minute, and then light. Never use fuel oil, kerosene or gasoline to start a fire—as they are highly flammable, and the smoke leaves an oily taste on the food.

ADD DASH OF HICKORY

Hickory chips add a distinctive flavor to charcoaled meats, so if they are in the outdoor cooking plan, prepare them early be overnight soaking in water.

After the fire is lit, drain the chips and place a small mound of them in the fire center—a handful is sufficient.

Long-term cooking of larger meat cuts may require additional chips later.

FIRE CONTROL

To keep the fire burning, protect it from drafts that might cause overheating and "hot spots."

If more charcoal is needed, place new pieces at the fire edge and move them into the center once grey ash covers them. For quick extra heat, simply knock the accumulation of ash from the burning charcoal.

Child abuse series continues Tuesday night

The second in a series of information programs for the public on child abuse, neglect and exploitation will be held Tuesday night in Room 203 of the First Presbyterian Church.

The program will begin at 7:30 and conclude at 9:30.

The topic entitled "What is Child Abuse and What Happens When it is Discovered." will be discussed. How to recognize child abuse and neglect and who has the responsibility to report suspected abuse (medical, legal, school) and treatment for the abused child and the abusing parent (internal and external resources for child welfare) will be included. Molly Whittington, program director for social services of the Texas Department of Human Resources will conduct this discussion.

Other speakers will be Peyton Cook of the Midland Independent School District and an as yet unnamed Midland physician.

The series is a project of the Human Relations Council of Midland, with assistance from the Beal Foundation and the TDHR.

The third in the series of four programs will be held June 20 on children's rights and the Texas Family Code. On July 18, the final program will concern the community, including community involvement, community abuse, foster care and volunteer opportunities. Adequate health facilities also will be discussed.

Susan Edwards is executive director of the Human Relations Council.

Vineyards have been in French family for almost 300 years

By TOM HOGE

A personable young Frenchman, who calls himself Jack instead of Jacques, keeps busy these days circling the world selling cognac from vineyards that have been in his family for almost 300 years.

Jack Robin, 34, likes peddling his product because he is convinced that cognac is the best liquor on the market.

"Cognac has a lot going for it," he told me during a recent visit to New York. "For one thing, it is a pure liquor, not a blend like most whiskeys."

The brandy of France's cognac region, where the Robin family has its vineyards, is generally regarded as the finest in the world. Some experts believe that cognac should be the standard by which to judge other grape brandies.

The gently rolling hills of the Cognac country once embraced the ancient provinces of Angoumois, Saintonge and Aunis. In Roman days these three counties were noted for their wine, wheat and salt.

"In ancient times the English imported wine from this region, but they complained that it did not travel well, and the French decided to do something about it," said Robin.

So the vintners redistilled the thin, somewhat acid wine of the region and came up with the liquor we know as cognac. The grateful English promptly mixed it with water and drank it with their meals. To this day, the English are the world's biggest importers of cognac, but now they usually take it after dinner in a snifter.

This brought up a question that has long baffled me. Why does Wisconsin consume more brandy than any other U.S. state?

"Partly, I think, because there is a large German population there, and the Germans have always been fond of cognac," said Robin. "The people of Wisconsin do prefer it to whiskey, even in Manhattan cocktails."

Brandy has long played a key role in the kitchen, especially in flambeed dishes where high alcoholic content is needed for the proper pyrotechnic effect. It's also used in stews and poured over sweetbreads, but it has always seemed a shame to me to cook such a fine-tasting spirit. This can be avoided in a brandy-flavored appetizer like this Roquefort cheese spread.

1 pound Roquefort cheese

3 tablespoons butter

½ pound cream cheese

dash Tabasco

¼ teaspoon grated fresh onion

Mash cheese well, cream with butter and cream cheese till spread is smooth. While beating, add Tabasco, grated onion and cognac. Serve on melba toast or crackers. Should make 48 canapes.

Medical detectives discover 'death zones' in Boston area

By BRIAN SULLIVAN

NEW YORK (AP) — Medical detectives have found "death zones" around Boston — areas where stress seems to have resulted in excessive mortality.

The areas with the highest death rates were Roxbury, with its black population, and South Boston, with its Irish population, both involved in an emotionally-charged school busing confrontation.

Dr. Sanford I. Cohen of Boston University reports that an epidemiological study by his psychiatry department found that residents of those areas had a 50 percent greater chance of dying than those in more affluent, "non-stressed" Boston suburbs.

There's a correlation between Boston's "death zones" and the Black Death of 14th century Europe, Cohen says. Bubonic plague and stress combined to kill far more people than either could alone, he said.

Cohen says evidence that emotional states can bring on sudden death was present in primitive societies where a person's belief that he'd been subjected to sorcery could bring on death.

"The powerlessness and misery experienced by the aborigine is probably also experienced by not only (today's) ghetto dweller, but by the captive of the corporation," he says.

Pot For Recreation?

Marijuana may become a permanent recreational drug, according to a University of Michigan study.

"More young people now use it, fewer associate detrimental effects with its use and fewer now disapprove of its use," the university reports.

The findings are from surveys of attitudes of 17,000 high school seniors across the country in 1975, 1976 and 1977.

By 1977, 56 percent of the high school seniors had at least tried the drug, up 9 percent in the three years. About 1 in 11 were daily or near-daily users, also up. More important, the researchers say, overall use of other illicit drugs did not increase.

Oceanic Pharmacy

Fish, soft corals and sponges seem to have the highest potential among marine life for use in drugs to treat cancer, says Dr. Alfred Weinheimer, University of Houston organic chemist.

Up to 10 percent of the hundreds of thousands of plant and animal species found in the sea may yield anti-cancer drugs, Weinheimer says.

The chemist, working with a grant from the National Cancer Institute, cautions that any chemical in marine life found to have anti-cancer properties would be years from actual use in a drug for human cancer.

We're Getting Heavier

American men and women in most age and height categories are heavier than their counterparts of the early 1960s, reports the Journal of the American Medical Association.

Citing the National Center for Health Statistics, the journal said that, for example, a 5-foot-10 woman, 35 to 44 years old, weighs an average of 13 pounds more than her sister of 15 years ago.
