Police report high crime clearance rate

By KAY HORD

Midland police cleared 99 percent of the cases in the four major offense classifications — murder, robbery, rape and other crimes against the person, such as assault — during 1977.

A case is cleared when someone is charged with the crime and-or the property is recovered or restitution is made, Police Chief Wayne Gideon said Saturday.

In the four major catagories, the number of rapes and crimes against the person decreased in 1977 while the number of robberies increased by six and homicides increased by five.

"Homicide, since it's usually a crime of passion, is the hardest to prevent. In also makes it impossible to explain an increase," Gideon said.

Total offenses were down 486 from 1976. A total of of 2,846 crimes were reported during 1977, and the Police Department cleared 63 percent of the cases, according to the 1977 Annual Crime Report released Saturday by the Police Department.

Gideon noted that auto theft also increased during 1977.

He clarified that the increase largely was tied to the drug traffic from Mexico. Four-wheel-drive vehicles and pickups have become extremely popular because they can "go anywhere," according to Gideon.

"And if the vehicle is not actually traded for the drugs or contraband in Mexico, it's used for smuggling. If a pursuit occurs, the person driving the stolen vehicle can drive into rough country and abandon the vehicle and contraband and escape," he said.

Decreases were noted in burglaries, theft over $200 and criminal mischief — more generally known as vandalism.

Total monetary value of property lost in robberies, burglaries, thefts and auto thefts during 1977 was $1,067,691. Property recovery was $679,950. Property lost in 1976 was $879,425, and recovery totaled $455,493.

Property loss in 1977 increased $188,265 from 1976. Recovery increased by $224,256.

"A large part of the increase for both property and recovery was inflation," Gideon said.

In traffic accidents, eight people died in Midland during 1977 and 676 were injured. In 1976, 15 died and 700 were injured.

"Speeding, failure to yield right of way, disregarding stop signs and traffic signals continued to be the leading contributing factors to traffic accidents," Gideon said.

Gideon noted that three new programs had been started during 1977, including the police cadet program, crime prevention unit and crime prevention for senior citizens.

He said that the police cadet program has worked particularly well.

The program trains high school graduates who are interested in law enforcement in police skills. Cadets are working in communications, identification and photography.

"We think the additional people during our peak hours greatly enhances our capabilities, allowing more uniformed officers to be on patrol," Gideon said.

Eagles 'threatened, endangered'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The bald eagle, the national symbol since 1782, is perilously close to extinction and is being declared an endangered species in 43 states, the Interior Department said Saturday.

Only in Alaska is the species holding out against the bulldozers and poisons of advancing civilization, the department said.

Authorities estimate there are only 700 active bald eagle nests in the contiguous 48 states. Alaska contains an estimated 7,000 to 7,500 nesting pairs. The bird is not native to Hawaii.

The birds will be declared endangered in 43 states, but will be classified as "threatened" in Michigan, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Oregon and Washington state. The threatened classification means the species is likely to become endangered within the forseeable future.

Previously, only the "southern bald eagle," considered a sub-species, was classified as endangered.

The department's decision to officially classify the eagles as endangered will give the birds additional legal protection.

Animals listed as endangered are protected by law from being killed, placed in commerce or possessed, except with government approval. In states where the eagles are listed as threatened, regulations can be as stringent as those regulating endangered species or more relaxed, according to local conditions.

The decision to add the additional protection for the eagles comes 38 years after enactment of the Bald Eagle Protection Act of 1940, which made it unlawful to wantonly kill the birds of prey.

But illegal shooting of eagles, poison, pesticides, loss of habitat and traps have combined to reduce once abundant populations. In some areas, pesticides have been ingested by the birds, making them incapable of hatching offspring. The pesticides make the shells of the eagle eggs so thin that they break if the female tries to incubate them, the department said.

The bald eagle was chosen as the national symbol in part because it was one of the few creatures native to almost all of North America.

Bald eagles are among the world's most striking birds of prey. They stand four feet and have six-foot wings. The head of the bald eagle is white, its body plumage a dark brown.

Midland County ballots promise little suspense

By LINDA HILL SCHAFFRINA

With only two contested Midland County political races this year, there's not going to be a lot of suspense on the local front.

But, on the other hand, there's the security of knowing pretty well who will be serving the county as elected officials next year.

The contested spots are those of county judge and county commissioner for Precinct 2.

Municipal Court Judge William B. Ahders, a Republican, and Democratic Assistant County Attorney Blake Hansen have both filed for county judge. Neither has an opponent in the primaries.

County Commissioner Charlie Welch, a Democrat, will face Republican landman Sam Snoddy in the general election in November to determine who will represent Precinct 2 for the next four years.

Republican Win Brown, county commissioner for Precinct 4, has no opposition from either party in his bid for re-election.

In judicial offices, 238th District Court Judge Vann Culp, a Democrat, is seeking election to a four-year term, with no opposition from either party. Culp was appointed to that job when the Legislature created the court last year.

Culver is seeking the judgeship of the 318th District Court. That position is vacant now, with the January resignation of Judge Joseph Mims.

Democrat Willie DuBose was the only candidate to file before last Monday's deadline for the post of judge of the county court at law. That job comes into existence when the county commissioners activate the court or Jan. 1, 1980, whichever cones first.

The remaining county jobs to be filled this year by election are held by incumbents who face no opposition in their bids for re-election.

Those officials are Peace Justice (Precinct 1, Place 2) Robert Pine, District Clerk Madge Wallis, County Clerk Rosenelle Cherry, County Treasurer Dee Thompson and County Surveyor Max Schumann.

Lozano's life 'looking up' before his January arrest

By JIM STEINBERG
R-T Staff Writer

ODESSA — "Things are really beginning to look up for me," Larry Lozano, 27, told his roommate a few hours before he was arrested by Ector County Sheriff's deputies on Jan. 10 in connection with his pickup truck having struck a fence post west of this city.

Lozano, although divorced for a little more than a year at the time, was a "quiet, family man who liked to stay at home," according to former roommate David Morales, 27, of Odessa. Morales said Friday he had known Lozano since junior high school days in Pecos.

Following the accident, Lozano reportedly fought with two sheriff's deputies at the accident scene and then with two additional deputies called to the scene to subdue him. He died 10 days after his arrest in a hallway just outside the padded cell in which authorities had placed him.

Ector County sheriff's officials have said that Lozano committed suicide in his jail cell by ramming his head into a shatterproof window. An autopsy report by Dr. Frederick Bornstein of El Paso reportedly concludes that Lozano's death was "incompatible" with suicide.

"He was a man with plans. He was going somewhere," said Morales of Lozano as he sat in an Odessa bar Friday afternoon with several friends, all of whom had known Lozano either in Odessa or Pecos. Morales said that Lozano was "up" mentally because he had found a good job in Odessa working for a hospital supply company on the first day of looking for work.

"He was talking about going to technical school when he got back on his feet financially," Morales said.

According to Mrs. Alicia Alvarez, Lozano's former mother-in-law who lives in Pecos, Lozano went to Odessa with hopes of finding a job that paid well enough for him to support his children, Derrick, 6, and Randy, 3. Lozano and his wife, Rufina, were divorced more than a year Mrs. Alvarez said, adding that she takes care of the children while her daughter works during the day.

"I was real surprised when he told me he was moving to Odessa. He was always taking the kids to the park or teaching them some kind of games," Mrs. Alvarez said.

"Sometimes he would come over twice a day and take them for a ride in his truck," she recalled.

"He was always a hard worker. He seemed to prefer home life rather than going out to bars," Mrs. Alvarez said.

That viewpoint was echoed by his friends in Odessa.

On Jan. 10, Morales said he and a woman friend, who preferred to be known only as Carol, asked Lozano to accompany them to a bar.

"He (Lozano) said he didn't drink alcohol," Morales said.

During the afternoon of Jan. 10, Lozano had been repairing various light fixtures in the apartment, Carol said. "He was always busy doing something constructive," Carol said of Lozano.

Lozano played "every sport" in school, Morales said. "He was the type of athlete a coach could tell to do anything and he would do it."

Lozano "exercised all the time. Every muscle in his body was really in shape. He was strong," Morales said. Yet despite Lozano's strength, or maybe because of it, Morales said he had never known Lozano to to get into a fight.

Sidney Sadler, principal of a Pecos elementary school, remembers Lozano as "very quiet and well behaved. If he ever got into any trouble I never heard about it."

"When somebody got on his back he would get mad just like anybody else, but he would never mistreat the children...or my daughter," Mrs. Alvarez, Lozano's ex-mother-in-law, asserted.

Morales and Carol said when they returned to their 10th Street apartment on Jan. 10, Lozano told them he was going to a neighborhood store for some candy.

"His truck had poor brakes," Morales said, referring to the accident. He didn't know his roommate had been arrested until he read the newspaper the next afternoon.

Coal movement plan ordered

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter ordered on Saturday that plans be drawn up for emergency movement of coal to areas running critically short of fuel needed to produce electric power.

Noting that some electric utilities have reduced power to industrial customers, the president said "more such cutbacks will follow even if the strike is settled soon, and employment impacts will be felt shortly."

Carter instructed Energy Secretary James Schlesinger to plan the emergency movement of coal in event it is needed and to continue efforts to shift electrical power from nonaffected areas to those running short of coal.

The coal strike, the longest ever by the United Mine Workers, went into its 69th day Sunday and could continue well into next month. UMW representatives unofficially voted Friday to reject a contract that includes an average $10.25 hourly wage.

"Those in areas most affected by the strike have already made great sacrifices," the president said in a statement announcing instructions to his Cabinet to meet the coal supply problem. "Before the strike is over, and for several weeks thereafter until the normal flow of coal is restored, even greater hardship will occur."

The states with power companies facing the most critical shortages of stockpiled coal are Ohio, Tennessee, Indiana and Pennsylvania, an Energy Department spokesman said.

Those states have utility companies depending on coal stockpiles that had dropped to as little as 28 days' supply as of Feb. 4, said the spokesman, Frank Kelly. The coal stockpiles will be re-evaluated on Wednesday.

Latest charges 'not new'

Ector County District Attorney John Green said late Saturday that charges that Ector County jail inmate Larry Lozano may have been "mobbed and blanketed" in his cell and then taken into a jail corridor and beaten shortly before he died in his cell were "nothing new to me."

The source of the report is a Midland woman who was in Ector County jail at the time of Lozano's death, he said. Green said he had taken a similar statement from the Midland woman.

Ector County Sheriff Elton Faught had no comment on the story, supplied by the Associated Press earlier Saturday.

"All I'm going to tell you is to get your information at the coroner's hearing," he told The Reporter-Telegram. The coroner's hearing into how Lozano died has been postponed until Harris County Medical Examiner Joseph Jachimczyk can review two separate autopsies done on Lozano's body. The hearing originally was scheduled for Tuesday.

The Associated Press said its report came from a copyrighted story in Sunday editions of the San Angelo Standard-Times.

'Sitter' now alarmed about idea for a sale

By ED TODD

Crime may not pay, but sometimes neither does trying to be your brother's keeper.

Ex-policeman Bill Shoemake found that out to his chagrin Saturday morning. And Shoemake's ex-brother-in-law, Herman Adams, may be set back when he finds out that his Midland house was "cleaned out" in a burglary last week.

The job pays more than police work.

Back in mid-January, Shoemake agreed to watch over the westside house of his former in-law, Adams, while Adams was on assignment in Africa as a drilling superintendent for Texaco.

Until last weekend, "housesitter" Shoemake had been living in Adams' house at 2601 Northrup Drive. It was equipped with one of Shoemaker's "sophisticated" burglary alarm systems.

But Shoemake had a customer who wanted a crime-prevention system right away. That day, in fact. So Shoemake removed the device from Adams' house and made his quick sale.

And ...

"It was quite a shock this morning when I walked in" the Adams place for the first time in five days, Shoemake told The Reporter-Telegram.

Furniture and odds-and-ends valued at $15,000 were taken from the living room, dining room, the master bedroom and two other bedrooms. Liquor — Scotch whisky — was removed from the kitchen. Two shotguns were gone from the utility room.

Shoemake said the burglars were tidy in their undertaking.

"They were real neat about it ... Everything's gone," he said.

"It's bad news ...." Shoemake lamented. However, he said Midland police Det. Sgt. John Thompson is on the case and may have some leads on who pulled the job.

Shoemake noted that the household goods are insured.

At the same time, Shoemake admitted that his sale of the Adams' burglary-sensoring system was not a good idea.

"It makes me feel terrible. It really does," he said.

Makers say most contaminated candy now returned

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — It may have been a federal bureaucratic foulup that led to a delay in discovering the presence of illness-causing bacteria in candy made by the King Candy Co., a Federal Drug Administration official says.

Meanwhile, a company official said Friday that the firm has closed down while officials investigate why some of the firm's candy was contaminated by salmonella bacteria.

In Washington, FDA sookesman John T. Walden said some 16,300 cases of the candies, most packaged for Valentines Day, were in Texas and Oklahoma.

Walden said the evidence of the salmonella contamination first appeared in November, but action was not taken until Jan. 10, when the company voluntarily ceased production to clean the machinery.

Salmonella were found during a subsequent inspection, and the company closed voluntarily and ordered the candy recall, Walden said.

"The FDA is partially to blame for the delay in identifying the problem," Walden said. Salmonella detecting techniques distributed to companies contained a printing error that led to faulty testing methods, he said.

Bob Warnken, executive vice president of the 72-year-old firm, said all of the company's candy-making machinery is being cleaned while the search is underway.

"We had a recall on Jan. 11," Warnken said. "We have sent everyone recall letters and most candy is back in the house."

"We are testing to be sure all candy shipped in the future will be pure," he said. "We are running hundreds and hundreds of tests but we have not yet discovered what caused the problem."

Earlier last week, J.J. Collins of King said the company recall affected less than 10 percent of the candies made by the firm.

Health departments in various areas of the country, including the one in Allegheny County, Pa., have warned residents about eating candy made by King under several brand names.

Warnken said none of the candy possibly contaminated by salonella bacteria had been shipped to Pennsylvania by the firm.

Salmonella causes stomach pains, vomiting, and diarrhea.

According to various government officials, the names of the candy recalled by the company include King Candy, Lady Charlene, Hostess House, Kathryn King's Candies, Honey Bees, Milk Texanas and Milk Honey Bees.

Health officials say persons who have purchased candy manufactured by the firm should return the food to the store where it was purchased.

Warnken said most of the possibly affected candy was shipped to areas of the southwest and south central United States.

Manpower turmoil drags in Leo

By KEN HERMAN

LA JOYA, Texas (AP) — Except for Big Leo's Fried Chicken To Go and a couple of grocery stores, there is nothing in this Rio Grande Valley town named for Leo J. Leo — longtime mayor and alleged keeper of the keys.

His son Billy thinks he knows why the 1,300 townspeople have not dedicated a Leo J. Leo Road or a Leo J. Leo City Hall.

It's his temper.

"If it would not take control of him, every street and the city hall would be named for him. He doesn't have any tact, any way to handle people," Billy Leo said.

What Leo does have, however, is the firm handshake it takes to pump votes from the town's migrant worker populace.

Leo brought the city government back to life in 1965 after La Joya — the jewel—had been dormant for about 40 years. The grateful citizenry elected him mayor by a comfortable margin of 26 votes.

Since then, his opponents (known to Leo as The Opposition) have tried to unseat Leo. Several times, they have attempted to have the city dissolved.

But Leo, the boss, has held on by providing for his people.

Now he thinks The Opposition is out to get him again, this time by dragging him into the federal Manpower program turmoil in the Valley.

"I'm proud to be able to do things for my people," he boasts. But his opponents say "my people" means the Leo Party, not the people of La Joya.

Rodolfo Farias, a former police chief here and a former Leo, told a court of inquiry Leo keeps a city park under lock and key. Leo loaned the land for the park to the city, but Farias testified the key is available only to Leos.

Twisting and turning in his seat, the 61-year-old Leo watched Farias testify. Amid the mayor's mumbling, a state judge thought he heard a Spanish obscenity. Leo spent the night in jail.

"I swear I didn't say anything. Maybe he read my mind what I was thinking about Farias," Leo said later.

"They have a blind son who is going to Pan Am (univeristy). He wants to be a lawyer. I helped them get the house," he said.

On the other side of town, there's a man who suffered severe burns in an accident. Leo said he helped him get a house for his family of nine.

But it is the allegation about the park that most upsets the rotund mayor. He recalled that as a youth he learned to swim in the lake adjacent to the land he now owns.

"Only the gringos have property there now. They run our people out. Where do they go? Leo's place," he said with a grandiose, sweeping gesture.

The charges nag at Leo. He said he can't understand why, after providing a park, a Little League field and two dumps for the city, he is being questioned.

He told a local television reporter he feels he is being persecuted. He knew immediately he had said something that might upset state District Judge Joe Cisneros, who is presiding over the inquiry.

But Leo has told the judge the inquiry was mere politics. That doesn't scare Leo, he said. He said he knows how to play.

"I'm a political animal," he said.

Gideon puts support behind Amarillo chief

Midland Police Chief Wayne Gideon supported Amarillo Police Chief Lee Spradlin in the recent suspension of six Amarillo police officers for cohabitation.

"I don't think that we, as law enforcement officers, can live the same type of lives as private citizens. We have been chosen, selected and have volunteered to perform a very honorable service for the people.

"Our public and private lives should be examples for others," Gideon said.

Gideon said he became aware of the situation in Amarillo about three weeks ago.

Although the situation has not arisen in Midland, Gideon said the Police Department's regulations were similar to Amarillo's.

"Our regulations do not specifically refer to cohabitation but cover the moral standards of the officers.

"I just don't think an officer should do anything that would be adverse to their department or that would have an immoral reflection. I don't believe cohabitating is acceptable. It would create an adverse reaction.

"An officer's personal behavior should be an example to gain the respect and confidence of the people," Gideon said.

Christie to visit city

Joe Christie, candidate for the United States Senate, will bring his campaign to Midland County on Monday, when Midland County Democrats will host him at a 6:30 to 7:30 p.m. public reception in the banquet room of the Sheraton Inn.

Christie resigned as chairman of the State Board of Insurance on Sept. 1 "to campaign on my own time and not at the taxpayers' expense."

Prior to his chairmanship of the insurance board, Christie served six years as a Texas senator.

He holds degrees in geology law from The University of Texas in Austin, and in addition to his public life, participates with his father and brother in the wildcat oil business in West Texas. He and his wife, Tana, have two children — Charles, 12, and Molly, 9.

Hospital board to elect trustees

The Midland Memorial Foundation Board of Governors is schduled to elect four new hospital trustees when it has its annual meeting at 3 p.m. Tuesday in the Midland Menorial Hospital cafeteria.

The governors also are scheduled to consider selecting additional honorary governors.

Annual reports are scheduled from Mrs. John F. Armstrong, president of the hospital men's Auxiliary; Mickey Cappadonna, president of the Board of Trustees, and Wayne Ulrich, hospital administrator.

ARE YOU THE SURVIVOR OF A VETERAN?

Did you know that if you are a survivor of a deceased veteran who died as a result of a service connected cause, you are entitled to a compensation check, if the death occured before 1 Jan. 1957, and the cause was not the result of a willful misconduct on the part of the veteran.

If the service-connected death occured after service, the veteran's discharge must have been under conditions other than dishonorable.

Eligible survivors for death benefits under this section may elect to receive Death Indemity Compensation payments instead. They may not thereafter choose death compensation. For widows, widowers, and children, DIC is the greater benefit. For dependent parents it may or may not be depending on annual income.

Date of Marriage—Generally, to qualify, a widow or widower must have married the veteran at least one year prior to his or her death, unless a child resulted from the union. A widow or widower of a Vietnam Era veteran is eligible regardless of when he or she married the veteran.

If she or he meets the other qualifications, a person who married a veteran without knowing that a legal impediment to the marriage existed may be eligible for compensation in certain cases.

Helpless Children— Children who are permanently incapable of self-support because of mental or physical defect before age 18 may receive death compensation as long as the condition exists or until they marry.

Dependent Parents— Parents who do not have income sufficient to provide reasonable maintenance for themselves and under age family members. Proof of dependency must be submitted to VA upon application for death benefits, under this section.

Call your nearest Veterans Service Office or Veterans Administration Office for additional information.

Week ends with no gas proposal

WASHINGTON (AP) — It was to have been the week that finally saw a break in the long congressional deadlock on natural gas price controls, but predictions of a fast-approaching compromise proved wrong again.

Last week began with optimistic statements, but ended with no compromise in sight on the question of lifting government controls on natural gas prices, the thorniest part of President Carter's energy program.

Senate members of the conference committee, which is trying to resolve differences with the House over bills passed by both chambers, came close to compromising their own wide differences. They came so close that Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., the top Senate energy negotiator, thought for a time that he had the votes in his pocket.

And warmed by Jackson's optimism, President Carter was telling congressional leaders at mid-week that the long impasse should be ended within a few days.

Well, it didn't happen. Carter's optimism showed unfounded, Jackson's pocket turned out to have a hole in it and as the week ended, the gas deregulation debate that has so long defied resolution remained unsettled.

The regulation vs. deregulation battle has been raging in Congress since the Supreme Court ruled in 1954 that the government has the authority to set the price of gas flowing in interstate pipelines.

Jackson's problem, however, is more immediate and can be reduced to a problem of simple arithmetic. He needs nine votes.

And he's still three short — the reason he couldn't produce on his promise of a compromise last week.

"We were very close the other day. We were within reach," Jackson reflected glumly before he left town for a 10-day congressional recess and a trip to China.

Jackson's proposal, with the tacit backing of the Carter administration and of top House energy conferees whose support is vital, called for deregulation by 1985 — with the right of either the president or Congress to reimpose controls for a single two-year period.

Under that plan, between now and 1985, the maximum price allowed for gas could rise by 3 percent annually above the national rate of inflation.

The proposal would mean higher gas bills for consumers than the president's proposal — several hundred dollars more through 1985 for the average family living in a gas-heated home, according to one consumer group. But Jackson claimed it would cost far less than than the Senate-passed bill calling for deregulation in two years.

Jackson, whom the administration is counting on to break the impasse, believed the proposal would end the deadlock among Senate conferees, which has prevented progress toward a compromise energy bill since early December.

Soviets refuse to bend

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union declared Saturday in a toughly worded policy statement that the Kremlin will not bend to demands by American "opponents of detente" for major revisions in the slowly emerging U.S.-Soviet strategic arms limitation agreement.

The unusually lengthy and detailed Soviet statement, which covered nearly a page in the Communist party daily Pravda, was the most extensive Soviet comment on the technical aspects of SALT since March 31 last year.

At that time, Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko condemned at a news conference a radical package of arms limitation proposals brought to Moscow by Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance.

The Pravda piece, printed as an unsigned editorial, ostensibly criticized U.S. commentators outside the government who have been warning of possible one-sided Soviet advantages from SALT treaty texts now under discussion. But the tone of the commentary suggested concern that these warnings were gaining attention from American policymakers as well.

Vehicle hits Big Spring man

BIG SPRING—A 21-year-old Big Spring man hit by a pickup truck near Ackerly about 9:30 p.m. Friday was listed in critical condition late Saturday night in Malone-Hogan Hospital here.

The man, Rogelio "Roy" Paredez, was struck by a southbound pickup driven by Charles Davis of Big Spring as he was walking across U.S. Hwy. 87, said Department of Public Safety Trooper Ben Lockhart.

Sadat terms talk in Mideast as 'step along road to peace'

BUCHAREST, Romania (AP) — Anwar Sadat reviewed the Middle East situation at a meeting in Austria Saturday with Israeli opposition chief Shimon Peres and called the talks "a new step in our cooperation along the road to peace and security for our nations."

The Egyptian president then flew to Romania, the sole Soviet bloc supporter of his Mideast peace bid, to pick up his drive for international political and public support.

Dense fog forced Sadat's jetliner to divert to the Black Sea resort of Constanta, 125 miles east of Bucharest, its destination. It was not immediately known if Sadat would be brought to Bucharest by car or train or if Romanian officials would travel to Constanta to meet him there.

Sadat, speaking at a news conference after talks with Peres at the 17th century Klesheim Palace near Salzburg, described the meeting as a resumption of the stalled Egyptian-Israeli peace drive begun last November when he made his historic journey to Jerusalem.

On his arrival in Salzburg Saturday morning, Sadat told reporters there is "sufficient momentum in the present peace initiative to achieve a final settlement."

Sharing the rostrum with Peres and Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky, Sadat disclosed he had invited the opposition Labor Party chief to visit Egypt.

Satellite control sought

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Canada will ask the United Nations to seek ways of preventing satellite accidents such as the disintegration of a nuclear-powered Soviet craft over Canada last month.

Canadian Foreign Minister Donald Jamieson told reporters Saturday that his country would raise the matter in the scientific and technical subcommittee of the U.N. Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space. The subcommittee begins a three-week session Monday.

Jamieson said that in the last 24 hours there were "new sightings and findings" of debris from the Cosmos 954 spy satellite.

It entered the atmosphere over Canada's sparsely settled Northwest Territories on Jan. 24, scattering radioactive material in several areas. Canadian armed forces spokesmen have declined to say exactly how many pieces have been spotted or recovered.

Canada and the Soviet Union are both parties to a treaty that makes a satellite-launching country "absolutely liable to pay compensation for damage caused by its space object on the surface of the earth."

Jamieson said there was no physical damage from the fall of the satellite but the search for fragments already has cost more than $1 million.

Vance opens session on Namibia

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance and four other Western foreign ministers talked with black guerrilla leaders and South African officials Saturday on ways to end South Africa's control over Namibia.

The diplomats met separately with the guerrillas and South African representatives in sessions lasting a total of three hours.

Vance opened the two-day conference, described by a French official as a crucial effort designed to end a source of tension that has plagued southern Africa since 1946, when South Africa refused to allow Namibia to become a United Nations trust territory.

South Africa has administered Namibia, a former German colony also known as South-West Africa, since 1920 under a League of Nations mandate. The mandate was ruled invalid in 1966 by the League's successor, the United Nations, on grounds that South Africa had abused the territory by promoting racial segregation and exploiting its vast mineral riches. Two years ago, the United Nations called for elections to be held in Namibia under U.N. supervision.

South Africa, under international pressure, has agreed to relinquish its control over the mineral-rich territory by the end of this year, but under terms that are unacceptable to the United Nations and the South-West Africa People's Organization, the U.N.-recognized nationalist group fighting for independence.

The subject of the discussions was an 11-page Western proposal that would end South Africa's rule over Namibia.

The "Proposal for a Settlement of the Namibian Situation" envisages Namibia to become independent by Dec. 31. It calls for a four-month political campaign ending with election of a constituent assembly to draft a constitution for an independent Namibia. A South African administrator-general would run the elections but would have to satisfy a U.N. special representative of the "fairness" of the process. And South Africa would withdraw all of its troops after the election of the constituent assembly.

Misty weather expected

The misty weather of The Lowlands may creep over Midland and environs today, as fog and drizzle and scattered showers are forecast to cover the area.

At least sea-coast type weather is predicted by a weatherman at the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Air Terminal.

With the fog and mist will be a temperatures high in the low 50s today and a low in the upper 20s tonight.

The cold wave is to continue into Monday. Skies are to turn somewhat cloudy Monday.

The Midland area missed out on any rainfall Saturday, although a slight chance — as much as 30 percent — of rain was forecast for Saturday.

prevention unit is to "initiate, develop and coordinate various programs designed to prevent criminal offenses before they occur," he said.

The program includes educating children in the dangers of associating with strangers, providing education to help women deal with crimes such as rape, marking personal property for purposes of identification and locating security weaknesses in homes and businesses.

The crime prevention for senior citizens was designed to provide information to senior citizens as to the protective services available to them and to identify the agencies providing the services.

Man's condition termed critical

Tommy Lee Johnson, 24, of 1910 E. Pecan Ave., shot in the buttocks with a .38-caliber pistol around midnight Friday, was listed in critical condition late Saturday in the intensive care unit at Midland Memorial Hospital.

About two hours after the shooting, an 18-year-old roughneck who told police he shot Johnson turned himself in at police headquarters.

He was arrested there and jailed on a charge of aggravated assault.

A WORD IN THE HAND can explain quite a lot, especially if the "speaker" is a sign language expert such as Dr. Michael Moore, Commission program specialist for the Texas Commission for the Deaf. Moore was in Midland late this week to address a meeting of the Permian Basin Council for the Hearing Impaired. A hearing interpreter had a hard time keeping up with the "fast-talking" Moore, as he explained "Legal Rights of the Deaf" in a discussion of Section 504 of the Federal Rehabilitation Act. The law states that "no person, otherwise qualified, shall be excluded from participation in any program receiving Federal financial assistance." Moore pointed out the deaf person's right to interpreters in federally funded colleges and in the event a deaf person is charged with a crime and brought to court. Moore told the group that, in their own way, they were entitled to "shout for their rights." (Staff Photos by Bruce Partain)

Area farmers to join survey

Several farmers in Midland County will be interviewed during February and March on farm production costs for 1977 by Verner Danielson of the Texas Crop and Livestock Reporting Service

TCLRS works with the U.S. Department of Agriculture in developing accurate production cost figures, and requests the cooperation of any Midland farmer included in the upcoming survey.

Production expenditures nationwide averaged just over $32,000 per farm in 1976, TCLRS reports. The total outlay to raise crops, livestock and poultry ran up a bill of $89 billion.

Production cost information is a major ingredient in determining net farm income and is used as a guide in computing the parity index and other factors about the farmer's position in the national economy, according to Wilbert H. Walther, agricultural statistician in charge at TCLRS.

Public hearings on health planned

Three public hearings are scheduled this week for area residents to give opinions on the Health Systems Plan devised by task forces in the 17-county area of the Permian Basin.

Hearings will be held at 3 p.m. Monday in the Howard County Courthouse in Big Spring, 7:30 p.m. Wednesday in the Ector County Courthouse in Odessa and 7:30 p.m. Friday in the Midland County Courthouse.

The Health Systems Plan is the product of more than 300 people working on 10 task forces to make recommendations on health concerns of the region.

The plan contains goals on improving the quality, accessibility and cost of health services for the next five years and beyond, according to the Permian Basin Health Systems Agency.

Copies of the plan are on display in area libraries and county courthouses. Written comments will be accepted by the health systems agency until midnight Friday. Comments, written and oral, will be accepted at each of the public hearings.

Also available for public review and comment will be the Annual Implementation Plan, which tells what is planned for next year to implement the Health Systems Plan, and the Permian Basin Health Systems Agency's grant application for full designation, which shows what has been done and will be done in the next year to fulfill the responsibility of the agency to the Permian Basin under the health planning law, according to an agency spokesman.

'Helping neighbors'

"Helping Neighbors Who Cannot Help Themselves" is the slogan of the Midland Commission for Local Community Development — and a marvelous and most meaningful slogan it is.

It proclaims the spirit of many, many Midlanders—a spirit of taking care of their own. But it goes even beyond that, in pointing up the fact that there are those who really care about the welfare and well-being of their less-fortunate fellow citizens.

The purpose of the commission has to do with the collection and giving of funds for the repair and renovation of approximately 50 sub-standard homes in the community.

The need for such a project very definitely exists, and the commission, which was appointed late last year by Mayor Ernest Angelo Jr., is attempting to obtain contributions to fund the program.

It is a most worthwhile community project, one which merits community-wide support. Some money already has been raised, but much more is needed if the challenge is to be met.

Endorsement and support is sought from individuals, as well as from civic groups, churches, service clubs, business firms and others. In other words, everyone is invited to help.

Under contract with the City of Midland, the Midland Housing Authority establishes procedures to limit rehabilitation work to the low income elderly or handicapped homeowners who are not themselves able to make badly needed repairs on their dwellings. Plumbing, roofing, insulation and other essential repairs are done by Midland contractors based on the low bids of three bidders, with the work to be inspected periodically by the Housing Authority.

It is said that most of the eligible homeowners live on minimum Social Security and assistance incomes of approximately $250 per month or less.

Every dollar contributed will go for repair of designated homes. None of the money will be used for administrative expenses at any level. No federal funds are involved. It is estimated that the 50 dwellings cited can be restored to minimum city standards at an average cost of $3,350 per house.

"Christmas in April" is another great, ongoing project which annually performs housing repairs, which, for the most part, can be performed by volunteers.

The Community Development Commission's short-range program differs from that of "Christmas in April" in that it focuses attention on a limited number of homes needing work which generally requires professional skills. Both programs fill very definite needs in the community.

Your help is needed now in the commission's project. Contributions may be mailed to P.O. Box 3323, Midland 79702.

Patient 'impressed'

And he took the time to write Mickey Cappadonna, president of the hospital's board of directors, to tell him about it. The Reporter-Telegram received a copy of the letter.

"Not only were they (staff members) very professional in their medical patient care duties, but they displayed a tremendous amount of pride and patient concern and understanding," Webb wrote. "I have been in and out of hospitals throughout the state for the past two years, but my stay at Midland Memorial was a most pleasant one and I would be remiss not to mention the names of those employees who made it possible.

"Mr. Cappadonna, in my opinion, these employees are to be commended for making such a fine impression. They are as follows: Janice Carter, Margaret Hughes, Lucille Witt, Vera Jackson, Dorothy McGruder, Lola Hudson, Sharon York, Pauline Williams, Connie Nurse, Essie Eaden, Bobbie Wilson, Sidney Best, Dee Hopes, Sandy Pastirchak, Bonnie Vachal, Chris Warmbrodt, Waverly Craft, Edie Creswell and the wonderful lady dietitian who was so helpful, Eleanor Dillenberger.

"Please forgive me if I have misspelled any names and thanks again for such a professionally run floor."

CHARLEY REESE:

The 'issue' is one of judgment, responsibility

By CHARLEY REESE
Sun Belt Syndicate

ORLANDO, Fla. — In Osceola County, Fla., a school board member recently requested that 14 books be removed from a junior high school library. The request touched off the familiar explosion. The librarian screamed censorship. The teacher's union filed a grievance. Libertarian types frothed at the mouth.

It was all so much hogwash, a colossal display of ignorance, arrogance and asininity.

The board member acted correctly. He was not proposing censorship. Censorship in fact is not even an issue. The issue is one of judgment and responsibility. Let's take a close look because this same phony storm is cooked up everytime anyone but a certified educator dares to object to some book in the school system.

What does a librarian do when she chooses to buy Book A and not Book B? Is that censorship? Book B is being kept off the library shelf. It is not available to those students in that library. Of course it is not censorship. It is an exercise of judgment that one book is more appropriate than another.

And that is all the school board member was advocating. He was not asking that the subjects of sex, crime and drugs be excluded from the school library. He was saying that the school should select books which treat those subjects in a mature, responsible manner.

His objection to the books in question was that they did not treat those subjects in a responsible manner. In his opinion, and in the opinions of several parents, the books in question treated those subjects in a style that was vulgar, profane and in poor taste.

The crux of the dispute, and of similar disputes in other parts of the country, was revealed by the remark of one librarian who said she objected to "outside" censorship. This Freudian slip reveals the true picture. Educators don't object to censorship so long as they do the censoring.

Somehow professional educators have come to believe that they are annointed by the Gods with special knowledge and special prerogatives. The notion that a parent or, God forbid, a "layman" might know something about education is heresy.

There are several things wrong with that idea. One is that a degree in education is no mark of a scholar. A degree in anything says simply that a living body completed some institution's requirements for a piece of paper. It says nothing about the person's intelligence, judgment, maturity, taste, or mental stability.

A second point is that no one who is a member of a bureaucracy which has spent so much and achieved so little should be arrogant.

A third point is that children belong to parents, not to bureaucracies. The major responsibility for the child's education and welfare rests with the parents who, as voters, elect school board members to set policies which they hope, often vainly, will result in a decent education.

In this scheme of things, educators should remember that parents and elected board members have every right in the world to determine what kind of education the children shall receive. Somehow educators have managed to turn the situation upside down so that the employees are telling the employers and the customers what to do.

Librarians, for example, are trained to stack books on the shelves, not develop their taste in literature. There is no reason to suppose a librarian has any better taste or judgment about the contents of a book than the local bartender.

As for educators being professionals that was a questionable contention before they voted themselves into trade unions. Now it is no longer even a question.

As for academic freedom that concept has been so bent out of shape it is practically useless. Why should the employees of a school system have any more freedom than the employees of a factory? Academic freedom, properly applied, means that you teach the concepts of both Marx and Adam Smith; academic freedom abused means you hire a Marxist to teach economics.

There is no reason in the world why parents and taxpayers should turn over their children to a group of bureaucrats to indoctrinate as bureaucrats see fit.

Educators are hired hands and they should do what their bosses tell them. When the American people finally figure this out, most of the problems that now plague education will be solved.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

FBI retraces Garrison's probe

By JACK ANDERSON

WASHINGTON — House probers quietly have returned to the scene of ex-New Orleans District Attorney Jim Garrison's flamboyant investigation into the John F. Kennedy assassination.

The House assassinations committee has set up offices in New Orleans where the investigators are retracing Garrison's steps and requestioning his witnesses of a decade ago.

Secret testimony has been taken, for example, from Carlos Marcello, the reputed boss of the New Orleans underworld. He was summoned to Washington for questioning under oath about his relationship with a New Orleans private eye, the late David William Ferrie, whom Garrison arrested.

The controversial Garrison charged that Ferrie was Lee Harvey Oswald's getaway pilot. Ferrie was a strange, conspiratorial figure who had ties to right-wing militants and once reportedly flew a private plane on a bombing mission over Cuba.

He was found dead in 1967, possibly a suicide victim. But mystery surrounds his death as it did his life.

Garrison became convinced that Ferrie was implicated in a right-wing conspiracy to murder President Kennedy. Oswald was supposed to be set up as the assassin because of his pro-Fidel Castro activities. The presumed secret plot was to throw suspicion on Castro for the killing.

It has been reported that Ferrie showed up in Texas not long after the assassination supposedly to fly Oswald to safety. Ferrie had also told friends that he had no use for President Kennedy. The late president's brother, Robert Kennedy, had used his position as attorney general to hound Marcello. It was suggested, therefore, that Marcello might have joined in the alleged conspiracy to murder Kennedy.

Under oath, Marcello acknowledged that he had made payments to Ferrie at the time of the Kennedy assassination. But the mobster testified that he had paid Ferrie to investigate the credibility of a government witness against him in an immigration case.

On the day of the assassination, Marcello told the committee behind closed doors he and Ferrie were together at the federal courthouse in New Orleans. Marcello was questioned by the committee as a witness, not a suspect.

BUSINESSMAN'S BLUES — President Carter's unofficial ambassador to Wall Street, Treasury Secretary W. Michael Blumenthal, has reported to the Cabinet behind closed doors that he's finding "a widespread feeling of uncertainty" and "a low level of confidence" in the business community.

With the president listening intently to every word, Blumenthel- said the "general mood" of businessmen was "not good but certainly not hopeless." Their "lack of confidence," he said, "relates specifically to the uncertain fate of the energy program — especially its tax aspects."

Businessmen are convinced, he reported, thet "certain aspects" of the energy program "simply will not work." They are also concerned about the replacement of Federal Reserve Chairman Arthur Burns, the treasury secretary said.

"It would be a good idea," he suggested, "for the president to deliver a fireside chat or other major address on the economy."

DEATH PLANE? — The Air Force's chairborne generals still persist in tolerating dangerous flight practices, which have already wiped out the crew of one C-141 transport plane and are inperiling the lives of others. Pilots and airmen who protest have been branded troublemakers.

As far back as 1970, Air Force Maj. Carl Mollnow warned his superiors that the approach systems for the huge transports made a disastrous crash inevitable in Washington State's Olympic Mountains.

The higher-ups not only ignored his warnings, they tried to railroad him out of the reserves on trumped-up psychiatric grounds. But Mollnow's forebodings came tragically true in 1975 when a C-141 crashed in the Olympic area, killing all 16 aboard.

Now another C-141 pilot is willing to lay his career on the line by coming to us. He grimly related that those killed in the 1975 tragedy were his friends They had been without sleep for almost 30 straight hours, he alleged, before the crash.

Because of the harassment Mollnow endured, we are withholding the other pilot's name. But he signed a statement attesting to the plight of his fellow pilots. They are assigned duty hours, he said, that can stretch up to 36 hours without any off-time.

"I'm not out for revenge," he said "only to change what has become a gross and systematic abuse of Air Force crew members by upper-level commanders." He said too many generals in their swivel chairs are "so out of touch with the reality of flying these missions that they simply don't believe it can happen."

After the crash into the Olympic Mountains, our source related, a group of pilots complained of their hazardous hours to their boss, Maj. Gen. John Gonge (now retired), and received a royal chewing out for their effort.

The general, now comfortably retired as head of an Air Force credit union in California, acknowledged the protest meeting took place, but denied he chewed out the pilots.

Footnote: An Air Force spokesman said regulations have been adopted specifically to avoid having pilots go too long. without sleep.

Blessed are the undefiled in the way, who walk in the law of the Lord. — Psalm 119:1.

Mark Russell says

Since there is an attempt to lower the tax deduction on business meals we now have a new endangered species — lunch.

•

So join "Save Lunch" today. Remember, lunch is what makes America work. Not to mention waiters, bartenders and waitresses.

•

Consider what would happen without the business lunch: executives having nowhere to go for three hours a day would roam the streets.

•

•

If you think we've got unemployment now, wait until all those distilleries close down.

•

Swank restaurants would feature only two choices — the barrel or the bucket.

•

INSIDE REPORT:

Here comes the chief: a major new political force

By ROWLAND EVANS And ROBERT NOVAK

Evans

Novak

LOS ANGELES — The performance by former Los Angeles police chief Edward Davis the night of Jan. 30 in the conservative suburban community of San Gabriel suggests the arrival of a major new political force, carrying serious implications for California and perhaps even the nation.

Conservative Republicans who paid $25 for Mexican food at Panchito's restaurant to back Davis' campaign for governor were obviously delighted by their choice. The 61-year-old, physically imposing Davis, heavy-set and white-haired, has the star quality to excite Republicans possessed by nobody here since Ronald Reagan in his first run for governor in 1966.

More significant was what Davis did not say at Panchito's. No raw meat was thrown out. There was little of what made him the nation's best-known police chief: the colorful language, the hard line against protesters, the denunciation of homosexuals.

This combination of charisma and restraint has made neophyte office-seeker Davis, who changed his party registration from Democratic only two years ago, the favorite in the five-man Republican primary for governor June 7. "A year ago, I laughed at Ed Davis as a right-wing kook," one Republican operative told us. "Six months ago, I was afraid he might be nominated and wreck the party. Now I think he's the best candidate we've got against Jerry Brown."

The notion Davis might have any chance against Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. this year is privately entertained even by Democratic strategists. However, the more realistic concern among Brown's friends is the damage that might be inflicted by the free-swinging police chief. While unlikely to win, Davis might well cut up Brown badly enough to seriously hurt his hopes of challenging Jimmy Carter for President in 1980.

The reason is the theme of the Davis campaign: "Put the heat to Brown." Davis gave his San Gabriel dinner a small taste of what's ahead by charging an eccentric Brown administration with ruining the state's economy. "California has had all of its valves turned down by funny little people Jerry Brown has appointed," he declared.

Before the dinner, Davis gave us a larger taste, claiming there is "a Brown plan", to "turn the whole state into a Jerry Brown commune." The governor has packed the state regulatory agencies with "terrorists" who "know how to use power."

This is stronger medicine than is possible from Davis' more liberal, more conventional Republican opponents (including state Atty. Gen. Evelle Younger and Mayor Pete Wilson of San Diego). Democrats fear Brown's attractively unusual personality can be pushed over the fine edge into eccentricity by the chief's expert use of ridicule. When Davis caricatured the governor's ascetic lifestlye as "Jerry lying on a bed of nails," he forecast to us his future course.

The Republican worry has been that Davis' invective will carry him — and the whole Republican ticket if he is nominated — into oblivion. He first attracted national attention in 1973 by proposing portable gallows to hang skyjackers right at the airports. Just last August, Davis told appreciative prison officials: "I always felt the federal government really was out to force me to hire 4-foot-11 morons."

Davis' advisers want no more of such colorful language, and the chief is cooperating. Whereas six months ago he would volunteer the importance of anti-gay rights, Davis now stresses the more prosaic "jobs" issue — and how Brown's policy reduces employment.

Three days before the San Gabriel dinner, Davis evoked a good response from a black group by stressing jobs. At San Gabriel, he supported an anti-busing initiative but added: "I'm not going to run with it as a platform." He holds his tongue in public about his Republican foes (although it slipped out recently that he considers Atty. Gen. Younger, still the front-runner but dropping quickly, "as exciting as a mashed potato sandwich").

In no other major state would Ed Davis have a chance. He lacks funds (although master fundraiser Richard Viguerie has been retained), campaign structure and past party service. But the California Republican party since 1966 has passed up its own to select such celebrated conservative ex-Democrats as Ronald Reagan and S. I. Hayakawa.

Davis' basic strength is revealed by his own appraisal that "while Texas tries to be the most conservative state, California is the most conservative state — for Republicans, anyway." Given that reality and his own apparent self-control, the chief has long since ceased to be a laughing matter for fellow Republicans and may prove deadly serious business for Jerry Brown as well.

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

Flood of candidates evidence that democracy is working in Texas

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Judging from the number of candidates for the May 6 primary, democracy is alive and well — perhaps a little hyperactive — in Texas.

For years, of course, the Democrat who won election in the primary was the winner in fact, if not in law, of the general election.

That situation has changed some — but still not as much as the Republican Party of Texas would like.

But it is what happens in the primaries that is most likely to determine whether the course of state government in Texas continues pretty much as it has for the past several years, or whether it takes some new course.

It is the governor's race, naturally enough, which is attracting the most attention, and which will be drawing the most money — which will run into the millions.

GOP hopeful Bill Clements, whose status as a serious contender has been a matter of speculation, startled some observers by telling a press conference that he expects to raise and spend $3 million in his effort.

Even if Clements is only 50 per cent successful, that would be serious money by nearly any standard.

Clements' primary opponent, Ray Hutchison, and Democratic contenders Dolph Briscoe and John Hill, will also be doing some heavy spending — both during the primary and (for the winners, at least) afterward.

But if those are the familiar names — the serious attention-grabbing and money-getting names — there are some other folks who will be on the primary ballots, even though their chances are slim, and a victory for any of them would be the biggest upset since the David vs. Goliath clash some years back.

Take Clarence G. Thompson—GOP candidate for governor.

Thompson, a 46-year-old black Fort Worth working man, who operates a machine filling plastic milk containers for Safeway, says he won't campaign, but expects to be elected by "the grace of God."

Then there's Ray Allen Mayo of San Juan, whose name will appear on the Democratic ballot, along with Briscoe, Hill, former Gov. Preston Smith, and Donald R. Beagle of Nederland, who describes himself as a "men's rights" advocate.

Not on the primary ballot, but running for governor as independents, are Houstonians Leon Pickett and Lawrence Sims, Richard Peterson of Austin and John J. Solon of Dallas. And there's Mario Compean of San Antonio for La Raza Unida.

Most of those names won't even become footnotes in the political history of Texas — but they are running and that's what the democratic system is all about.

Occasionally political observers and the public (and more frequently the serious candidates) see the entry of candidates who, by any seemingly rational calculation, have no chance of winning as simply an annoyance — forcing them to get out and campaign and to raise and spend money just in case.

As one veteran officeholder put it, when asked about a seemingly trivial challenger, "Of course I'm worried. Anytime you have an opponent and you're not worried, you're a fool."

That fear — that somehow the man without money, organization or "name identification" — may end up convincing enough voters that he is the better candidate keeps many an incumbent busy (and some contend honest).

Primary deadline marks the start of the real political season in Texas, even though by the time it arrives there are usually few surprises.

At filing time, there's no room left for coyness — it's put up or shut up — and candidates are forced to declare officially just what their office-seeking plans are.

Then everyone can try to draw up the equations, balance the various factors, and play the entertaining, risky game of predicting who will win what, by how much and for what reasons.

But whatever else happens politically in 1978, it appears democracy is healthy, if a little feverish, in Texas.

ART BUCHWALD

Let's discuss business

WASHINGTON — My friend Russell Baker of the New York Times has just written an article suggesting that if businessmen can deduct their three-martini lunches, blue-collar workers should be able to deduct their bologna sandwiches. Mr. Baker, who claims to represent the proletariat, although he is really a closet populist, once again has missed the point. He implies that while businessmen can eat from the taxpayer's trough, blue-collar workers are forbidden to do so.

This is not so. The blue-collar worker is just as entitled to deduct his bologna sandwich as the executive is his Dover sole providing the worker discusses business.

The IRS is very specific about tax-deductible lunches. You can deduct the meal if you discuss business that will be beneficial to a sale, inspire a deal or endear you to a client for the rest of his life.

The trouble with blue-collar workers and other people who brown bag their midday meal is that they refuse to discuss their work while they're eating their sandwiches and drinking from their thermos bottles.

When you see two guys sitting on a girder 40 stories up munching away, you can be sure the conversation goes something like this:

"What did you wife make you?"

"A meatball sandwich with green peppers and onions and Tabasco sauce and lettuce and tomatoes. She don't have any imagination. What have you got?"

"Salami, goat's cheese, scallions, sesame seeds and mustard on a rye, and a banana. How do you think the Yankees are going to do?"

"I guess it all depends if Reggie Jackson and Billy Martin talk to each other."

Now as far as the IRS is concerned this is not a business lunch. It's just two guys sitting on a girder chewing the fat, and there is nothing in the way of a deal to come out of it.

On the other hand, if one of the men said to the other, "I'll give you my pickle if you let me use your blowtorch on number four joint," and the other one responds, "Okay, but I want a swig of your chicken soup, and I want you to get the foreman to buy me a new pair of gloves." That would be an acceptable conversation to deduct not only the men's sandwiches but the pickle and chicken soup as well.

The same holds true for secretaries. They can deduct their tuna fish salads and iced tea if they stick to business. But most secretaries at lunch prefer to tell each other what hankypanky X is committing with Y. The IRS is very tough about office gossip and will disallow any luncheon deductions where sex is the main topic of conversation.

By the same token if one secretary says to the other, "My boss gave me some dictation this morning and I accidentally erased 18 1-2 minutes of the tape," and the other says. "Did you have your foot on the pedal when you answered the phone?" and the first says "Yes," and then the second one says, "That will do it every time," the secretaries have met all the qualifications for a tax-free meal.

The point that I'm making and which Russell Baker missed is that the sandwich eaters have as much right to a deductible lunch as the person who eats at 21 or the Sans Souci as long as they keep a diary of whom they ate with and what business they discussed.

Both President Carter and Mr. Baker have been demagoguing about businessmen getting a free ride at mealtime. But neither opinion maker has mentioned that, if guys on the girders talked business 40 stories up they could drink three free martinis, too.

Middle East alliances changing

By JOE ALEX MORRIS JR.
The Los Angeles Times

TEHRAN, Iran — The conservative nations of the Middle East, spurred by increasing political polarization in the region and encouraged by the United States, are coming together in an informal alliance.

Iran, Saudi Arabia and Egypt are the major participants; more remotely involved are Morocco, Sudan and Oman.

The alliance, or sphere of solidarity, cuts across traditional barriers and extends beyond classic areas of interest. It is notable for several reasons, among them:

— It brings Iran, one of the region's major military powers, into close touch with the Arab Conservatives. Traditionally, enmity and mutual suspicion have kept Arab-Iranian relations formal and cool.

— It has enabled the Saudis, and to a lesser extent the Egyptians, to break out of the narrow sphere of Arab politics. The Egyptians have done so before, notably in the Congo, with unhappy consequences.

The current cooperative effort is still far from solid. In some instances old suspicions and resentments have simply been papered over, particularly the Arab suspicion about Iran's territorial ambitions in the Persian Gulf, the world's most strategic oil route.

Iran seized several Arab islands in the Gulf a few years ago, and only recently gave up an old claim to Bahrain. Moreover, Iran sells Israel about half the oil it needs, and this has not pleased the Arabs.

Now, two major events have enabled Iran to take the initiative in establishing close ties with the conservative Arab regimes.

First, Iran's Shah Mohammed Reza Pahlavi gave full backing to president Anwar Sadat of Egypt and his controversial peace initiative with Israel. This support helped bring Saudi Arabia around from its initial resentment to solid if undeclared support for Sadat.

After visiting Egypt and Saudi Arabia, the Shah and Saudi leaders recently announced their agreement to encourage peace negotiations and on other subjects. Algerian President Houari Boumedienne, a leader of the so-called steadfastness front that opposes Sadat, also visited Saudi Arabia, but had to be content with a communique announcing that there had been a frank discussion.

The second development involves activities in the Horn of Africa. Iran, Saudi Arabia and Egypt all view with alarm the presence of a Marxist regime in Ethiopia. Iran and Saudi Arabia have both shipped small arms to Somalia, which is engaged an undeclared war with Ethiopia over the Ogaden region.

The Shah has publicly warned Ethiopia that Iran "cannot remain indifferent in the case of an Ethopian invasion of the internationally recognized borders of Somalia."

Sadat and Sudanese president Jaafar Numeiri have promised Somalia troops in the event of an Ethiopian invasion.

The new conservative front has emerged at a time when the old dream of Arab solidarity is fading away. Sadat weakened that alliance by flying to Jerusalem last November without consulting his Arab brethren, and his Arab opponents have responded by condemning him despite his insistence that he has not abandoned the Arab principles to secure a peace settlement.

Iran, Saudi Arabia and Egypt, along with Oman, are also worried about the Marxist state of South Yemen, which promoted an insurrection in Oman a few years ago and is now openly supporting Ethiopia against Arab Somalia. Aden, the South Yemen capital, is an important link for Soviet arms flights to Ethiopia.

The Carter Administration is proposing to sell Saudi Arabia 60 F-15 fighters, advanced aircraft in use only in the United States and Israel. It also proposes selling 150 F-16 aircraft to Israel, and another 140 F-16s to Iran, in addition to 160 already on order by Iran. Military aircraft sales to Egypt and the Sudan are also in the works.

Iran and Saudi Arabia are the world's two major oil exporters. They are also the principal purchasers of American military hardware.

Thus American interest in the area is obvious. Washington hopes that Iran and Saudi Arabia will realize increasingly that they have mutual interests, will forget their mutual suspicions and launch a new era of stability in one of the world's most critical regions.

There are signs that this is happening. The Iranians have recognized that Saudi Arabia, with its massive oil production can dictate oil prices in the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC), the cartel which quadrupled oil prices.

At the last OPEC meeting, in Venezuela in December, the Iranians quietly dropped out of the hardliners' camp which was pushing for even higher oil rates. At least for the present, they are lined up with the Saudis on this question.

High-level contacts between Iran and Saudi Arabia have increased. The Shah's visit to Riyadh was followed up when the Saudi foreign Minister, Prince Saud came to Tehran. But observers here do not foresee any formalization of this conservative front.

POSITIVE THINKING

Love people as part of your daily life

By NORMAN VINCENT PEALE

There's health, joy and the good life in the attitude of love. So say both religion and science.

Some years ago Dr. Smiley Blanton, a distinguished New York psychiatrist, and I established what we then called "a religio-psychiatric clinic." It was the first of its kind. The purpose was simply to help normal people live normal lives. Priests, rabbis and ministers, psychologists and psychiatrists working together united their scientific therapies to solve the common problems of human beings.

Today that clinic has not only been widely imitated all over the world, but has been expanded into the inter-denomination and inter-faith Institutes of Religion and Health. It has a staff of specialists and occupies several floors of the office building in my church in New York.

The competent specialists who devote themselves to helping people use as a text book a classic by the late Dr. Smiley Blanton called, "Love or Perish."

This helpful book contains the thesis that the greatest human need is the need for love and that none of us can survive without it; we must have love or we will perish. This is, for many people, a new and somewhat strange idea.

But it is true that much maladjustment and unhappiness is due to the curious inability to accept love, although a person may be starving for it in his personality. The term "love" is not used in this sense in a sentimental connotation, but as good will, acceptance and esteem.

Love is the greatest power on earth. As the Bible describes it, "Love is patient and kind; love is not jealous or boastful; it is not arrogant or rude. Love does not insist on its own way; it is not irritable or resentful; it does not rejoice at wrong, but rejoices in the right. Love bears all things, believes all things, hopes all things, endures all things. Love never fails . . ."

Dr. Pitirim A. Sorokin, one of the world's most famous sociologists, who conducted a series of research studies in the power of love, came up with some amazing conclusions. Among other things, he says:

"Love is a life-giving force, necessary for physical, mental and moral health . . . Altruistic people live longer than egoistic individuals . . . Children deprived of love tend to become vitally, morally and socially defective."

Here we have the weight of medical knowledge and scientific research emphasizing the overwhelming importance of love. And what, really, is love?

The Bible answers this question in three simple words, "God is Love."

The power of love is vital and necessary in developing mental health. How can you acquire it and learn to use it?

Psychiatry, said Dr. Blanton, offers three directives almost universal in their application:

"1. We must forgive our parents for the injustices — both real and imaginary — we received in childhood . . .

"2. We must have faith in a universal power greater than man's — the source of life and love . . .

"3. We must accept our own aggressive impulses as a natural and normal part of life but not be controlled by them or have a sense of guilt because of them."

Mental health comes when we learn to love people as part of our daily lives. As we become proficient in outgoing good will, having no hate, no resentment, love will become a creative and healing force leading us into a happier state of life.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Does he listen?

To The Editor:

You carried a short editorial comment advising that the West Texas Chamber of Commerce has again expressed its strong opposition to ratification of the Panama Canal treaties. You ended by advising that the matter of ratification is presently before the Senate and by suggesting that now is the time for all who haven't done so to advise the senators of their stand.

As one who has written Sen. Bentsen, I wonder if he really cares what his constituents want. William Muchison, an editorial writer for the Dallas Morning News, reports that Senator Bentsen received some 26,000 letters opposing the treaties and only 350 in favor. In spite of this the senator has stated that he will support the treaties if they are amended. He obviously does not consider that all these Texans who have taken the time to write and state their position know what they are writing about or that they can think for themselves.

As stated in one letter printed in the Dallas News Feb. 10, it appears that the only consideration given by the senator was at the time the president told him how to vote and he replied, "Yes, Mr. President."

It is to be hoped that the voters will not forget this total disregard of their wishes at the time he next runs for office.

Public served

To The Editor:

I have just finished reading the first three articles in Lana Cunningham's series on teen pregnancy and sexuality. I am impressed with what an incredible public service she and The Midland Reporter-Telegram are providing. The series cannot help but awaken some parents — and some teens — to the problems of teenage parenthood, as well as the critical need for realistic solutions.

I eagerly look forward to the remaining articles.

No honesty

To The Editor:

What has happened to honesty? During the year last past I have been victimized repeatedly — and the latest is loss of a beloved pet, sold on time payments which never were made. My only recourse; court action, and more expense.

Is there no moral ethic? The sale was to a professional couple in an expensive home — and apparently valid.

Thanks, Dave Fawks

To The Editor:

My family was recently involved in a tragedy in which a senseless fire took a small child's life.

The Midland Fire Department (Golf Course Road Station) must certainly be commended for the prompt response to the scene of the fire (they arrived in less than two minutes) and for the bravery and concern shown by Fireman David Fawks who entered the flaming house in an attempt to save Dawn Thompson's life.

Because of the dense smoke and the intensity of the heat, Mr. Fawks was unable to locate Dawn immediately, but refused to leave without her.

This concern is commendable, but in view of his line of work is understandable; however, Fireman Fawks further showed his compassion and concern by calling and visiting the hospital to check on Dawn's condition.

The family of Dawn Thompson hopes that in some way Mr. Fawks can be recognized for this heroic action for it certainly went above and beyond the call of duty.

Dawn's condition required treatment in the Intensive Care Unit of Midland Memorial Hospital for two days. Midlanders can be proud of the calibre of dedicated doctors and nurses who were extremely thoughtful and courteous to our family during this crisis.

Several doctors were at Dawn's bedside during most of the two-day ordeal and kept the family constantly and truthfully informed of Dawn's condition.

Our family is confident in the knowledge that everything possible was done to save Dawn's life and our sincere appreciation goes to the doctors, nurses and firemen who helped so much during this tragedy.

Decisions go unmade on civil defense plan

By L. EDGAR PRINA
Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — The Carter administration can't seem to make up its mind whether it wants a genuine civil defense program to protect the American people against a nuclear attack and provide the means for post-war recovery.

While the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency argues for a civil defense limitation agreement with the Soviet Union, the Defense Civil Preparedness Agency contends that a useful protection-recovery system could be developed and deployed for less than astronomical expenditures.

The result of the ACDA-DCPA split is confusion among the citizenry and in Congress as to what the administration is really trying to do.

Most observers believe the chances are remote indeed that the United States could persuade the USSR to dismantle its already large and far-reaching civil defense program, but ACDA Director Paul Warnke wants to try.

Civil defense has become a more important subject to Americans than at any time since the nuclear age began because the United States and the Soviet Union are today essentially equivalent in strategic striking power.

But if there is a rough equality in nuclear arms, there is no doubt whatsoever that the USSR is far ahead of the Americans in providing protection for its citizens and the hope of a rapid recovery of Soviet society after a nuclear war.

U.S. experts believe the Soviets are spending at least $1 billion a year on civil defense and have been doing so for a decade or more. The Soviet program is aimed at providing deep shelter protection for its key civilian workers — government and industry — and evacuation or relocation for the bulk of its urban population.

Clifford E. McClain, deputy director of the DCPA, recently told a meeting of state, local and federal agency information specialists concerned with civil defense that "no real system is possible with the current budget" of something over $90 million.

"The cheapest system would cost about $2 billion," he said.

This does not mean that much money would have to be appropriated in one year, of course. It could take five years or more to complete even a minimum program to provide fallout shelters and some hardened protection in the cities for key workers left behind.

Airplane crash kills at least 40 persons

CRANBROOK, British Columbia (AP) — At least 40 persons died and only a few survivors were pulled from the burning wreckage of a Pacific Western Airlines passenger jet which crashed while trying to land Saturday afternoon.

Witnesses said the twin-engine Boeing 737 apparently overshot the runway while making an approach during heavy snowfall, plowed into a six-foot snowbank and broke in two.

Only seven of the 47 persons aboard were known to have survived, said a spokeswoman for the Canadian airline.

No names were released.

Cranbrook Hospital said two persons were in critical condition, three in good condition, and two fair, including an 11-year-old girl. Earlier reports indicated one of the survivors was a flight attendant.

Injuries were burns and multiple fractures.

"I don't know how anyone could get out," said an airport employee. Witnesses said all that remained of the twin-engine Boeing 737 was the charred nose and a bit of the tail, with smoke still rising hours after the crash.

Witnesses said there was a ball of fire 200 feet high when the jet hit the snowbank.

First on the scene were people who were in buildings at the airport. Some of them said it took emergency vehicles 12 minutes to reach the burning plane.

A spokesman in the airport manager's office said there had been no indication of problems during radio conversations with the pilot before the landing.

The airport, on a wind-swept plateau between mountains, reported heavy snow all morning. An airport employee said visibility was so poor the surrounding mountains, a half mile away, could not be seen.

Use of CPR techniques necessary in emergencies

By BROOKS KELLER

It starts with a shout and a cry for help and hopefully ends with a life saved instead of lost.

That's Cardiopulmonary Resuscitation, or CPR for short, the life-sustaining techniques that need to be done immediately when someone around you collapses.

The collapse will usually come from a heart attack or a stroke, and death can come in five or six minutes if no one knows what to do.

Midlanders by the hundreds, are learning what to do in courses on CPR taught by people like Mrs. Carol Shelley, the supervisor in the Critical Care Unit at Midland Memorial Hospital.

In an interview with The Reporter-Telegram, she described the basic processes of CPR as they are taught by the hospital and by the American Heart Association.

The first step is to establish that the person is unconscious. This is done by shaking his shoulders and shouting at him: "Are you conscious?"

If there is no response, call for help in getting a 911 emergency call made, but stay with the victim.

The most immediate task is to establish an airway. This is done by putting one hand under the victim's neck and the other on his forehead and extending the neck backward, as the victim lies on his back.

Next, check for breathing, if any. Watch the chest for a rise and fall. Put your ear over the victim's mouth to hear the sound of breath, or feel the moisture of breath on your cheek.

Sometimes, this is all you need do. The extending of the neck will put the tongue in normal position, if it has been a factor in stopping breath.

But if there is no breath, pinch the victim's nostrils closed, cover his mouth with yours and "ventilate" him with four, quick, hard breaths.

Next check the carotid arteries, on either side of the Adam's Apple, to see if he has a pulse. If he does, his heart is beating and you need only continue helping him breathe — ventilating him 20 times per minute.

If there is no pulse, you must do chest compressions next. Position yourself for this by placing your knees beside the patient's chest.

Interlock your hands one over the other and place them on the victim's sternum, the flat bone that joins the rib cages.

Leaning over the victim, keeping your elbows straight, depress the sternum about one and one half to two inches.

For a one-person rescue, do 15 compressions, then two ventilations, at a rate of 80 compressions per minute.

When two are working on the victim, and both know CPR, one person compresses and the other ventilates. They have been trained, Mrs. Shelley says, to switch positions without interrupting the rythum of the rescue effort.

Why change? Because compressing is hard and tiring work. The ambulance team will continue this process until the victim reaches the hospital emergency room.

CPR is also used for choking victims, people who have gotten food into their windpipes.

The important rule here, Carol Shelley says, is that if the victim can make any kind of sound, do not interfere with his effort to expel the foreign particle. Ask him: "Can you speak?"

If the victim can't and is visibly slipping into unconsciousness, turn him around and give him four, quick, hard blows between his shoulder blades, using your fist or the heel of your hand.

Then, says Mrs. Shelley, the rescuer should get behind the victim with locked hands just below the victim's rib cage. Give him four quick, hard thrusts: in and up.

Persist in both methods, back blows and abdominal thrusts, until the victim either expels the foreign object or becomes unconscious.

If the latter happens, the rescuer should put the victim on his back and do mouth-to-mouth ventilation.

If this fails, the rescuer should, in a kneeling position, alternate between the blows to the shoulder blades and the thrusts to the abdomen.

The victim's body has to be turned over repeatedly in this process.

With his head turned away from you, do a finger probe of his mouth, clearing out any object. Then ventilate him again.

Repeat this entire cycle again and again. Persist and persist. A human life is at stake.

Don't worry, Carol Shelley says, about blowing a particle of food into the victim's lungs. If this happens, one lung will be free for breathing, and the doctor can remove the particle later by other means.

This is a physical and mental skill requiring practice. If you wish to learn these techniques, get in touch with the American Heart Association in Midland.

"The more people we get trained, the better off we'll all be," says Carol Shelley.

Gator man kindly guy

ROCKPORT, Texas (AP) — If it wasn't for Pete Givins' shirt, Warren Lynch believes his stay on an island ringed by alligators might have lasted longer.

As it was, on a chilly February 1976 night, Lynch holed up on the island near this Southeast Texas city for 18 hours as police tried to arrest him on a marijuana charge. He gave up and served two years of a four-year sentence before coming home recently.

"I wouldn't have quit but my friend Pete Givins came on the island just wearing a thin shirt and he was freezing," the 47-year-old alligator farmer said.

"Considering the situation, I would have done the same thing again. But I don't intend to get in the same situation again," he said.

Lynch left huntsville on Jan. 27. He worked in a machine shop at the prison and now hopes to get a job using his new skill.

He said it did not take long to adjust to freedom.

"I took a long walk in the woods here and breathed some fresh air. That is what I missed most in prison," he recalled.

But the long walk came after a visit with his closest friends. He arrived after dark and needed a flash light to search out the gators.

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Real estate men who haven't received their 1978 licenses can blame a computer failure, the Texas Real Estate Commission said Thursday.

"License preparation is being performed in part by night work in an effort to issue the licenses as soon as possible," the commission said.

Persons who applied properly for renewal are considered licensed as of Jan. 1, regardless of whether they have the piece of paper saying they are, it added.

R-T creates new position, promotes two in circulation

Reinforcing circulation department structure and operation, The Reporter-Telegram has created a new position and put into effect two promotions. Announcement of the actions was made by Jim Allison Jr., publisher, who said improved service to subscribers is a continuing objective of the publication's management.

Dale W. Miller was named city circulation manager, the newly-created position. Previously, he was circulation manager of The Daily Citizen, Clear Lake, and had been employed in circulation operations in Conroe and San Antonio.

Miller, 39, was born in Chicago, where he attended public schools, graduating from Parker High School. He attended Olympic College in Bremerton, Wash., and University of Washington in Seattle, where he earned a degree in computer sciences. He spent four years in the U.S. Navy.

His hobbies and special interests include sailing, bowling, bridge and camping, as well as teaching CPR first aid and sailing in connection with Red Cross safety courses.

Miller and his wife, Jo Ann, live at 2439 Whitmire Boulevard.

Leroy Stewart, 27-year employee of The Reporter-Telegram, has been promoted to mailroom supervisor. He formerly was state circulation manager.

Born in Navarro County, Stewart attended Corsicana High School and has completed various job-related courses and seminars.

Stewart married Evelyn Jackson June 10, 1950, and they have made their home in Midland continuously since that time, residing now at 1607 Harvard Avenue. They have two daughters, Nancy Chandler, 26, of Midland, and Kay Wesson, 24, who lives in Odessa.

Stewart's hobbies are hunting and fishing. He is a member of Optimists Club and North A and Tennessee Streets Church of Christ.

Chris Bradford, 30, has been promoted from district manager to state circulation manager following training and experience in circulation street sales, five years as a carrier and two years as district manager.

Bradford attended Midland High School, Midland College, and currently is enrolled in accounting at UTPB.

Married in Midland Feb. 8, 1969, to Mary Ellen McIlroy, Bradford and his wife have two children, Jimmy, 8, and Mike, 5. A substitute teacher in MISD, Mrs. Bradford also is enrolled at UTPB in elementary education.

Bradford's hobbies include football, basketball and skating.

He spent two years in the United States Marine Corps, with a year in Viet Nam.

The Bradford's reside at 3503 Fairmont St.

Load of court cases growing

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Chairman Ben Grant of the House Judiciary Committee said Saturday that although Texas' population rose 16.9 percent from 1960 to 1970 cases filed in district court increased 139 percent.

Grant's committee met to begin a study on the use of arbitration as a possible remedy for overloaded court dockets.

"Arbitration, generally defined, is the referral of a dispute to one or more impartial persons for final and binding determination," said Grant, Marshall, in remarks prepared for the committee hearing.

He said "private arbitration operates without government support — and thus at no cost to the taxpayer."

"Arbitration is being advocated from many sources," he noted, naming Chief Justice Warren Burger of the U.S. Supreme Court; Rep. Peter Rodino Jr., D-N.Y.; and Gov. Edmund Brown Jr. of California.

"Although not used in Texas as much as in many other states, arbitration is not a new institution in our state," he said.

"The exclusion of insurance and construction contracts appears to eliminate two major sources of arbitration in the United States today," he said.

Stanton trustees to talk contracts

STANTON — The Board of Trustees of the Stanton Independent School District is expected to discuss contracts of the principals and athletic director and the purchase of a new school bus during its regular meeting at 7 p.m. Monday in the school administration building.

Lupe Hinojosa plans to present a report on school truancy to the board members. The trustees are scheduled to appoint judges for the trustee elections this spring and to determine a time and place for the elections.

Also on the agenda is consideration of a plan to place school records on microfilm.

Milk output climbs

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite a continuation of the long downward trend in the average number of milk cows, dairy farmers last year produced the most milk in 12 years, just 3 percent below the 1964 record.

The 123 billion pounds produced was 2 percent more than in 1976, the Crop Reporting Board said last week. The amount of milk per cow was a record 11,194 pounds, about 315 pounds more than the year before.

In the first month of this year, the board reported, production was 9.99 billion pounds, up 1 percent from a year earlier and 4 percent above January 1976.

But it noted a drop from December of 10 cents per hundredweight in the national average prices for all classes of milk and a slight increase in feed-ration costs, which may slow the trend.

Wisconsin again was the leading dairy state for 1977, with 21.04 billion pounds.

Pope says research would help method

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Ten years after he banned the pill and other artificial means of birth control, Pope Paul VI said Saturday that more research is needed to improve the rhythm method, the only contraceptive technique approved by the church.

The pontiff, in a message to an international conference on birth regulation in Melbourne, Australia, acknowledged his 1968 encyclical against artificial contraception imposed "difficult demands" on Roman Catholics. He asked for "special attention" for those Catholics who have not been able to obey his directives.

The rhythm method, or planned and periodic abstinence from sex, is based on the fertility of women for several days after ovulation. The church counsels couples to avoid sexual intercourse during that period. For women with irregular periods of ovulation, this requirement could mean abstinence from intercourse for three out of every four weeks.

The ruling 10 years ago sparked controversy that continues still. There have been reports that Roman Catholics are widely disregarding Vatican directives.

A major Roman Catholic study based on national representative samplings of American Catholics two years ago attributed steep declines in church practices — attendance at mass, financial support and daily prayer — to the ruling against contraception.

Farmers get point to legislators

WASHINGTON (AP) — The question is an obvious one: How can striking farmers — who claim to be going bankrupt — afford to live in the nation's capital and lobby for more than a month?

"How can we afford not to... it's now or never for us," responded Plainview farmer Marvin Meek. "It costs us about $600 a week considering the hotel, food and plane fare but the folks back home are helping out and sending money."

Since Congress reconvened in January, the sidewalks and hallways have been liberally dotted with farmers who offer a striking contrast to the legions of gray-suited bureaucrats normally seen on Capitol Hill.

"You have made an input into our system of government and you have been surprisingly effective," noted Rep. E. "Kika" de la Garza after the Rio Grande Valley Democrat had listened to four days of tesimony from fellow congressmen, farmers, bankers, agribusinessmen and state officials before the House Agriculture Committee.

"An elevator operator told me today, 'You better give those farmers 100 percent parity and you'd better do it soon,'" de la Garza said Thursday when the committee hearings recessed until Tuesday.

Full parity plus limits on agriculture imports and an immediate increase on loan ceilings have dominated the subject matter presented to the committee.

"Parity simply means equality," offered one committee witness last week. "It means that a farmer is getting enough for his crop to equal his productions cost plus a fair profit. It's not a guaranteed income to the farmer... if you can't guarantee us good crops, good weather and a good harvest, you can't guarantee us an income."

The Department of Agriculture estimates that farmers are currently receiving an average of 65 percent parity for their crops.

Farmers claim if this session of Congress fails to give them legislative relief, the concept of family farming in America is doomed and the country's economy is headed toward another Great Depression.

"The presentations all have an air of desperation about them," said another Agriculture Committee member, Democrat Jack Hightower of Vernon. "They tell a story that seems to be uniform. We had heard that the agriculture situation wasn't as bad in some places as others.

"That may be true but those people that aren't hurting now will be shortly. I'd have to say I believe what they have to say...this is a nationwide problem."

Hightower backed up his beliefs by introducing a bill calling for 100 percent parity if the farmer sets aside half of his crop-producing acreage.

President Carter, however, has voiced opposition to 100 percent parity, saying it is too high a price for the American consumer to pay.

Historically, vetoed farm bills have failed to garner the necssary votes for a congressional override.

In the Senate, Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., introduced a bill that also ties parity percentages to set-aside lands. The bill was co-sponsored by Texas Democrat Lloyd Bentsen.

Bar tries again to remove Green

PALESTINE, Texas (AP) — The state bar association will try Monday for the second time to have District Attorney Bill Green disbarred and removed from office.

Green was convicted last April by an Austin jury of public lewdness, following his arrest in a booth at an adult bookstore where x-rated adult peep show movies were being shown.

In the first trial, a jury was unable to reach a verdict and District Judge Donald Carroll Jr. of Tyler declared a mistrial.

Green's lawyers were attempting to have Carroll removed as judge for the second trial, on grounds he is biased against Green.

The trial will be in Judge Tate McCain's 87th District Court. Carroll was named to preside over the first trial after McCain removed himself.

Green, 30, a lifelong resident of Palestine, was elected district attorney of Anderson, Henderson and Houston counties in 1976. In January of 1977, his first month in office, he was arrested in Austin.

The grievance committee of thee District 2C Bar Association brought the disbarment proceedings against Green on three grounds: his conviction of public lewdness, alleged perjury by Green during the trial, and Green's flight of several blocks before recapture in an Austin hotel in the early morning hours of Jan. 18, 1977.

Board to approve football coach

Approval of the appointment of Gil Bartosh as the new Lee High School football coach is expected to be considered by the Midland public schools Board of Education at its regular meeting at 1:30 p.m. Tuesday in the board room.

Schools Superintendent Dr. James H. Malley said the members plan to discuss the appointment of Bartosh, as well as, his contract, in open meeting.

The board plans to call for trustee elections and approve polling places and appointment of election officials. It is expected to approve a contract for holding joint elections with the city of Midland, Midland College and the Midland County Hospital District.

Among the requests scheduled to be made to the board is one asking for recognition of the local chapter of the American Federation of Teachers by the school district.

Malley said recognition of the teachers' union depends on the advice the board members receive from school attorney Charles L. Tighe concerning legal ramifications.

The board is expected to consider approving the federal Emergency School Aid Act application for a 1978-79 desegregation plan. A report is scheduled to be given concerning modifications in the secondary school health education program. The modifications have been developed due to revisions in state law, Malley said.

In old business, the board members are expected to discuss budget allocations for the 1978-79 school year. Approval was delayed from an earlier meeting until further justification could be made in regards to some of the larger allocation increases.

The board plans to consider a proposal for settlement of a tax suit and the sale of some school property, lots 18 through 20, block 8, in the Moore addition.

An executive session has been planned to discuss a real estate matter. In addition, the members are expected to reappoint Patsy Bohannan of The Carriage Co. Realtors, Gene McDaniel, manager at A La Carte, and Walter B. Holton, oil operator, to the Board of Equalization.

Requests are scheduled to be made by Lee High School, asking for approval of the band's annual spring trip and by the city Parks and Recreation Department, asking for use of school facilities for its summer program.

The board plans to discuss a policy revision on credit allowed for teaching experience, which is then used to determine starting salaries. Adoption of the 1978-79 school year calendar is up for approval by the school board this time.

The West Elementary School P.T.A. is expected to ask the board to accept the office equipment the P.T.A. is planning to give to the school.

Also, a resolution proclaiming March 6 through 10 Public Schools Week is scheduled to be made by the board.

Council to consider future bond election

The possibility of a bond election for enlargement of the Municipal Golf Course is scheduled for consideration by Midland City Council members when they meet at City Hall at 1:30 p.m. Tuesday.

Also to be considered is a request from shopping center developers, authorization for purchase of 16 live oak trees to replace dead trees at the Midland Regional Air Terminal, a request from Midland County for the city to abandon a portion of Baird Street between Illinois and Texas avenues, an ordinance to allow The Chauffeur to use vehicles other than vans for limousine service, a request from the Junior League of Midland concerning extended services at the Health Department Prenatal Clinic and a request for the city to fund archaeological surveys.

Crowd at valley farm strike rally includes few farmers

By KEN HERMAN

McALLEN, Texas (AP) — About halfway through the American Agriculture rally here Friday it became apparent that there were not many Rio Grande Valley farmers in the crowd of about 1,000.

The farm strike movement came to the valley a week ago to enlist support in one of its weaker areas.

"It's going to take another week of development and promotion," said Fred Lundgren of Austin, a movement leader. "We want to reach the point where they'll strike themselves. We haven't reached that point yet, as the rally well displayed."

During the chilly rally, valley farmers in the crowd were asked to stand up and be counted. About 50 persons rose.

But amid local skepticism, Lundgren said the strike is catching on in South Texas. Strike offices are cropping up in four valley towns, he said.

A local county extension agency earlier in the week had said that American Agriculture was arriving here too late. He said valley farmers already have some crops in the ground and probably would not adhere to cries for 50 percent cutback in production.

The Friday rally was keynoted by Texas Attorney General John Hill, who is seeking to unseat Gov. Dolph Briscoe.

"It's in the interest of every person to help save the family farmer. If we lose the family farmer we'll end up with big cartels and big corporations running the farms. Food prices will go through the ceiling," hill told the cheering crowd.

The candidate said state government can help farmers by raising inheritance tax exemptions and helping to level off utility prices.

Egypt switches security policy

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Egypt wants self-determination for Ethiopia's war-torn regions of Eritrea and Ogaden and is ready to defend Somalia against external threats, the semi-official newspaper Al Ahram said Saturday.

The call for self-determination for Eritrea and Ogaden marked a shift in Egypt's policy which has been refraining from assisting secessionist movements since the breakdown of its union with Syria in 1961.

Al Ahram said the new policy was adopted Thursday by the Egyptian National Security Council, which is headed by Vice President Hosny Mubarak and includes War Minister Mohamed Abdel Ghany Gamassy.

Real Estate Today

LAND USE RESTRICTIONS

The matter of land use restrictions and controls with regard to real estate is quite interesting. Hundreds of years ago when private controls were usually in effect, property owners sometimes sold or gave away land with unusual and humorous restrictions. The seller might say that cows could only graze on the rear portion of the land! Or, he might specify that any building erected on the property and subsequently sold could only be sold to people who abstained from alcholic beverages!

The landmark year for subdivision restrictions was 1848, when developers could set up restrictions regarding types of homes that could be built on their lots. Courts upheld these restrictions to the extent of allowing lot owners to get court orders preventing other lot owners from going against those restrictions.

Gradually, private controls gave way to public controls, and in 1926 the U.S. Supreme Court effectively made zoning ordinances valid. These zoning ordinances sometimes serve the public welfare, but, in other instances are abused for political purposes and, in the meantime, impede the progress of the city.

First black officer granted full honors

ATLANTA (AP) — The first black graduate of West Point, dismissed from the Army and placed in a grave without a headstone, is being buried with full military honors in his hometown of Thomasville, Ga.

Lt. Henry Ossian Flipper was the first prominent black civil and mining engineer in the United States and a former assistant to the secretary of the interior from 1921 to 1923.

But for nearly 40 years his remains lay in a grave without a military headstone at Atlanta's Southview Cemetery — a result, officials said, of his dishonorable discharge from the Army in 1882 after he was convicted of conduct unbecoming an officer.

Saturday, after a 94-year fight to clear his name which ended in 1976 when the Army changed his discharge to honorable, Flipper was being honored in his south Georgia hometown.

Flipper, who was born March 21, 1856, graduated from West Point in 1877. He was commissioned as a second lieutenant in the 10th Cavalry, and from 1878 until 1882 fought in the Indian wars in the Southwest.

In 1882, his commanding officer charged that Flipper had embezzled $3,791. He was court-martialed and found innocent of embezzlement but guilty of unbecoming conduct and dismissed from the Army.

He's Law West of Key West

Justice of the Peace Kenneth "Bud" Emmons is shown at his Port Isabel headquarters that has typical western decor. He doesn't mind being compared to long deceased Western character, Judge Roy Bean. (AP Laserphoto)

PORT ISABEL, Texas (AP) — Take heed, all you skinnydippers, beer guzzlers and beach bums. Be forewarned. Bud Emmons rides again.

Bud Emmons, "The Law West of Key West," as the sign above his desk proclaims, filed last week for another four-year term as Justice of the Peace in this salty little Gulf resort on the southern tip of Texas, and if that doesn't strike terror in the hearts of hellraisers, they haven't appeared before Bud Emmons.

"I don't have much sympathy for these people who come down here wearing beads and smoking marijuana and try to take over the place.

"I fine 'em the maximum and stick 'em in jail. One smart word and I'll slap another $200 on 'em for contempt of court. They soon get the message."

Anyone would have to be blind not to get the message the minute he steps off the dirt street into Emmon's hall of justice.

It is a small room, 8 feet by 16 feet, attached to his house. It is decorated in every available inch with guns (144 of them by his own count), knives (too many hundreds of them to count), blackjacks, brass knuckles, swords, shackles, the bleached jaws of a shark and the yellowed skulls of humans long since fetched to their reward.

"I am the law west of Key West. It's the truth, isn't it? There is nothing but water between there and here."

Unlike the storied Roy Bean, Emmons does not pack a gun. Oh, he does keep a pistol in his desk drawer and another in his car and has a double-barreled shotgun by his bed in case of prowlers.

"Anyone found in here at night will be found here in the morning," he explained.

Emmons's given name is Kenneth, but he signs even legal papers as "Bud." He is 71, came to Texas from his native Iowa to recuperate from a bullet wound he received as a Marine in Nicaragua in 1927, liked the place and settled. He tried running a hotel and selling real estate, but it was as a lawman that he found his calling.

The artifacts that decorate his walls, he said, were mostly confiscated from people hauled before him.

"The first year I was justice of the peace, that was 1967, I had 345 cases in five days. That was at Easter time when the kids swarmed down here for spring vacation.

"They took over. They pitched tents on the beach so we couldn't even get an ambulance through. They went naked, sold dope, carried on. I decided to put a stop to it, and did.

"Here's a picture of one of 'em I busted. Look at that feather in his hair and that chain around his neck. Looks like a damn idiot, doesn't he? Look at his sign: 'Taking a trip? Fly LSD.'

"I told him he was taking a trip, all right, but it would be on TWA, and sent him back to California where he came from."

DETROIT (AP) — According to its motto, the Coast Guard is "Always Prepared."

Even to rescue a pregnant dog from an ice floe in Lake Erie.

The dog, who is mostly Dalmatian, was spotted shivering on the ice, about two miles off Cleveland's lake shore, by the crew of the cutter Ojibway in the midst of last week's blizzard.

Refusing to ignore a lady in distress, the crewmen swung the Ojibway around and approached the small cake of ice.

"The dog was not too enthused about jumping aboard," said Coast Guard Ensign Wayne Patrick, operations officer for Detroit headquarters.

Hulings' paintings attract many to Museum of Southwest show

By ROGER SOUTHALL

Never underestimate the power of a gifted artist to attract a crowd — particularly a painter of the professional stature and wide reputation of Clark Hulings.

Hulings, of Santa Fe, was honor guest at a reception and preview Friday night in Museum of the Southwest, marking the opening of a major retrospective show of his works at the museum. And the crowd which flocked there to meet him was one of the largest ever to attend such an event here. More than 700 persons from nine states were on hand.

Included in the gatherimg were a good number of collectors of Hulings' paintings, among them several Midlanders and others from elsewhere in the nation — and undoubtedly many, many who would like to be collectors of the artist's work.

But Hulings' output is not particularly prolific and many of his works go straight from the easel to collectors, so the opportunity for acquiring the artist's work is relatively limited. He is represented by Grand Central Galleries in Manhattan

A further inducement for attending Friday's preview party, in addition to meeting the artist and viewing several dozen of his finest paintings, was the chance to participate in an auction of seven new works by Hulings. And there certainly was no lack of "takers" for that opportunity!

The show, "A Decade of Clark Hulings," opened Saturday and will continue on view to the public daily through Feb. 26. Weekday viewing hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday hours are 2 to 5 p.m. Admission is free.

Museum of the Southwest director Sam Grove and museum trustees president Bascom Mitchell say they believe this will be one of the major art exhibits of its kind in the state in 1978, containing as it does upwards of 70 canvases, approximately one-third of which have never been exhibited publicly.

In addition to groups of Hulings paintings loaned by almost a half-dozen Midland collectors, the museum show also presents outstanding works loaned by collectors from New York to California. A group of paintings from Hulings' own personal collection also is in the show.

Hailed as a superb colorist, Hulings also is much praised and admired for his eye for realistic detail in depicting snow, water, storm clouds, mountains, and Mexican or New Mexican street scenes.

In his earlier years, Hulings was a portrait painter and for a time worked on Madison Avenue as a commercial illustrator. He has resided in Santa Fe off and on for many years, punctuating his time in the Southwest with painting sojurns in Europe.

Hulings had his first major exhibition in Santa Fe in 1945, and one of his most recent big shows was in December 1976 when he was honored with a one-man exhibition at the National Cowboy Hall of Fame in Oklahoma City.

Hulings has painted six major canvases of the Grand Canyon, the first one done in 1967 for the U. S. Department of Interior. In 1973, another of his paintings, titled "Grand Canyon, Kaibab Trail," won him a prestigious honor, the Prix de West gold medal of the National Academy of Western Art, sponsored by the National Cowboy Hall of Fame.

Hulings, a modest and soft-spoken man who enjoys tennis and wishes he were as adept with a racquet as he is with a brush, was accompanied to Midland for the preview-reception by his wife. They are the parents of one daughter.

Although the Museum of the Southwest show contains many large, and important, Hulings paintings, the exhibition is punctuated with a number of smaller canvases — still lifes, florals and informal studies of children — which provide charming and restful contrast to the power, the drama or the grandeur of the larger works.

System revolutionizing albums

The Los Angeles Times

Would you believe a hit record in 1978 by Harry James?

Would you believe an elaborate orchestral album made entirely with a single microphone, without the use of recording tape, with no echo, no headsets for the musicians, no splicing, no overdubbing, no sweetening — and, according to experts, the finest in recorded sound available today?

Incredible though it seems, these and other phenomena are taking place right before our ears, as the result of a slow-but-sure revolution, a 33 1-3 revolution, that has been gaining on us during the last few years, its pace since mid-1977 greatly accelerated.

It is known in the trade as the Direct to Disc system. Major record companies spurn it, because million-sellers are impossible (only a finite number of discs can be produced from a single lacquer master). Most ordinary record shops do not even stock the albums, which are sold mainly to audiophiles and music lovers in stereo shops.

"A year or two ago we had virtually no competitors," says Lincoln Mayorga of Sheffield Lab Records, the classical pianist and audio expert who was a pioneer in the DTD system. "Right now it's an avalanche. Unbelievable! I can't count the number who are jumping on the bandwagon. The Japanese are making direct to disc records hand over fist.

Competitor Glen Glancy, president of the Great American gramophone Company, elaborates: "Tape, when it came into general use around 1948 — coincidentally, the same year the LP disc was introduced — was a great improvement over the old system of recording 78 rpm discs on lacquer masters; but since then we've had the transition from monaural to stereo, which was marketed in 1958, and there have been such tremendous advances in cutting equipment that we've actually surpassed tape. Listen to one of our records, compare it with even the best tape recorded at the high speed of 30 inches per second, and you can tell the difference."

There is a delicious irony in the return of DTD, which was the only method by which records could be made in the pre-tape era. The difference, of course, lies in today's necessity to cut the masters in stereo, and to record entire long-play sides at a clip. One clinker by a fourth trumpet player during the final moments of an 18 minute side and the entire disc must be scrapped while the orchestra goes back to square one for another complete take.

Instead of presenting a handicap, this has been a challenge to the artists, says Lincoln Mayorga. "A case in point is our new Harry James release, a follow-up to the one we made in the summer of 1976, which has now sold over 70,000 at $12.00 ("The King James Versions', Sheffield Lab 3). Both sides of the new release are Take One—proving the abandon and courageousness with which the musicians performed; and Harry played like he was under fire, really blowing the house down."

For Mayorga and his co-producer partner, former symphonic trumpeter Doug Sax, the current DTD excitement is the realization of a dream that goes way back. Mayorga says: "Our fanatical obsession began in the late 1950s, when I noticed that 78 rpm piano records in my library, some by Art Tatum, and Beethoven sonatas by Artur Schnabel, sounded to me more musical, more natural, than my modern LPs. There was a certain clarity in the bass, a certain musicality, that transcended the surface noise.

"It turned out that the contrast was due to a weakness in the tape recorder known as phase shift, in which certain frequencies are delayed in the reproduction, so that even though the differences may be one of microseconds, you don't have all the music coming to you at the same time.

"In 1959 Doug and I decided we'd like to make a long playing piano record without tape. We came across Hollywood's oldest studio, Electrovox, where they still recorded on those 16 inch platters in a back room, and telling the clients they were using tape. I asked the owner, a Mr. Bert Gottschalk, 'Would you record something for us right onto your lathes?' He threw up a mid-1930s vintage RCA 77 microphone, and here were these 1929 lathes that had been designed for Vitaphone, for the very first talking pictures.

Fodor to guest in Lubbock

LUBBOCK — Eugene Fodor, the gifted young violinist from Turkey Creek, Colo., who was a top prize winner in the 1974 International Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow, will be guest artist with the Lubbock Symphony Orchestra in concerts at 8:15 p.m. Monday and Tuesday in Memorial Civic Center theater. Tickets will be for sale at the box office nightly.

Fodor played with the Lubbock orchestra last season and during that performance and in the three encores he offered afterward, displayed his stagemanship along with his musicianship and stunning technique so impressively that he garnered several standing ovations. He was signed for a return engagement with the orchestra this season in response to public demand.

The concerto in which Fodor and the orchestra will collaborate in the pair of concerts this week has not been announced.

Critics in cities around the world have praised the young violinist for his versatility and technical supremacy. One writer said of him: "In the West, they call him the Mick Jagger of classical music. In Moscow, he is known as the best young American musician since Van Cliburn. To his own father he is, affectionately, a ham, who says 'he plays much better before a thousand people than two'. He has the ability to make your hair stand on end."

Fodor began violin studies at age 7 and was soloist with the Denver Symphony at age 11. He won a scholarship to Juilliard in New York City where he studied with renowned Ivan Galamian. Later he received a scholarship for study with famed Jascha Heifetz in California, after which he continued his formal education at Indiana University. In 1967 he won the Merriweather Post Competition in Washington, D.C., and in 1972 took first prize in the prestigious Paganini Competition in Genoa, Italy — the first American in 21 years to capture that coveted prize. That same year he gave recitals in London, Vienna and Budapest. Then came the big triumph, tying with two other violinists for top honors in the 1974 Tchaikovsky Competition in Moscow. Many who attended the competition felt and have since declared publicly, that Fodor should have been the recipient of the gold medal in that contest.

Globe opening set for April

ODESSA — Planning is under way for the opening of the Globe Theater's 1978 season.

The new season will be initiated with a production of the world-famous musical, "The Sound of Music," which will have performances April 7, 8, 14, 15, 21 and 22.

The production will be guest-directed by Jim Walters, formerly a member of the staff of Midland Community Theatre and, more recently, associate director at Permian Playhouse, Odessa's community theater. Walters now lives in Los Angeles and works in theater and TV in that area.

Walters will hold tryouts this week to fill roles in "The Sound of Music." The audition sessions are scheduled for 7:30 p.m. Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday.

The famous Rodgers and Hammerstein musical, a long-running hit on Broadway and then an acclaimed motion picture, has a cast made up of eight adult females, seven adult males, five girls and two boys, plus "bit parts" of neighbors, nuns, novices and postulants. There also is a large chorus.

All area actors and singers are invited to attend the tryouts this week. Additional information on the auditions is obtainable from the Globe Theater office, 332-1586. The theater is located at 2308 Shakespeare Road, on the south edge of the Odessa College campus.

Odessa artist's works exhibited

Jean Johnson is the current exhibiting artist at Hanging Tree Gallery, 3201 N. Big Spring St.

Mrs. Johnson, of Odessa, will be honor guest at a reception in the gallery between 2 and 6 p.m. today. The event will be open to the public, said gallery owner Carol Swain.

The artist has won numerous prizes in juried exhibitions in the Southwest and elsewhere, and she has had solo shows of her work at Odessa's Globe Theater and Permian Playhouse. Her paintings are in many private collections in the Midland-Odessa area.

Teacher learns first hand

ALDERWOOD MANOR, Wash. (AP) — Capt. Jim McGaughey teaches Snohomish County Fire District 1 aid crews how to deliver babies.

Finally, he got some firsthand experience.

"Today I delivered a baby for the first time," he said Friday. "I gotta admit I was more frightened than the mother."

The mother is Dorothy Herr. The baby is Kathleen, who weighed in at 6 pounds, 8 ounces.

McGaughey, an acting fire marshal and a firefighter were dispatched to answer an emergency call from Mrs. Herr, who was alone at home.

Applications now available

AUSTIN — Applications from Texas visual artists are being accepted until March 22 for special fellowships for work at Paisano, the late J. Frank Dobie's ranch near Austin.

Two six-month awards will be made for 1978-79, beginning next Aug. 1. The awards are known as the McDermott-Texas Institute of Letters Fellowship and the Ralph A. Johnston Memorial Fellowship. Each carries a stipend of $3,000.

The Dobie ranch 14 miles west of Austin is owned and maintained by The University of Texas. Purpose of the Paisano program is the stimulation of creative endeavor in the arts by making it possible for a person to work without distractions. The fellowships are offered every third year to visual artists and in the intervening two years to writers. Fellowship applicants must be native Texans, persons now residing in Texas or persons whose lives or work have been substantially identified with the state. Criteria used for making the awards include quality of work, character of the proposed project to be undertaken at Paisano, suitability of the applicant to life at the ranch, and need.

Application forms, along with full information about the fellowship program and a brochure on Paisano may be obtained by writing to Dr. Audrey Slate, coordinator of the Dobie Paisano Project, Office of the Vice President and Dean of Graduate Studies, The University of Texas, Austin 78712.

FCC wrestles with fee rule

WASHINGTON (AP) — Hey, CBers, Uncle Charlie needs a break.

He wants to tell us, again, that our CB licenses are free, and to ask that we quit inundating him with money he doesn't want.

Despite an announcement a year ago, and subsequent reminders that no money should accompany license applications, he's still being swamped with checks, money orders and cash.

And while he struggles to refund those fees, he's wrestling with another problem: how to refund millions of more dollars in fees collected during the last six years.

Uncle Charlie, of course, is the Federal Communications Commission.

"Will you help us solve a problem?" John B. Johnston, chief of the FCC's Personal Radio Division, wrote recently in "An Open Letter to the CB Community."

"We are being flooded with CB fees that we must return."

The FCC stopped charging license fees a year ago after a federal court ruled the commission was charging too much and must create a new fee structure.

At the same time, the court said the FCC must refund all fees collected between 1970 and 1976. An estimated $163 million, much of it collected from CBers, is at stake.

But the fees keep rolling in.

"We are being swamped with money that we must return," Johnston wrote. "Some folks think they can help us by sending in the fee, even though it is not required," he added. "Others are confused because millions of old CB applications and temporary permits are still around asking for the $4 fee."

MCT slates matinee

Midland Community Theatre's first matinee performance of "Carnival" will be at 2:30 p.m. today in Theatre Centre, 2301 W. Indiana Ave.

The colorful musical opened Feb. 3 as the first attraction of MCT's 1978 season and will play through late February. Following today's matinee, there will be performances at 7:30 Wednesday and Thursday, 8:30 p.m. Friday and Saturday, and 2:30 p.m. next Sunday. Still other presentations are announced for the evenings of Feb. 22, 23, 24 and 25.

Reserved seat tickets for today's matinee will be on sale at the box office beginning an hour in advance of curtain time. Information on availability of seating for the other performances may be obtained from the box office, 682-2544.

"Carnival," a warm and witty musical fable about life in a smalltime traveling circus in Europe, is described as a family show, and the midweek performances with their 7:30 starting times are planned for the convenience of family groups. The early curtains on Wednesday and Thursday evenings enable families to attend and still be home by 10 p.m. or shortly after.

Annual art show announced

CARLSBAD, N.M. — The annual spring art show at Carlsbad Caverns National Park will be held March 22 through April 4.

The show, held in cooperation with the Carlsbad Area Art Association, will be in the park visitor center and will be limited to paintings representing scenes or features found in either Carlsbad Caverns or Guadalupe Mountains national parks. The annual show was started in 1972 to commemorate the 100th anniversary of the National Park System in the U.S., and this year's exhibition will be the seventh.

Artists from through Texas, New Mexico and elsewhere in the Southwest are encouraged to enter, and those wishing to do on-the-site work in either park between now and March 22 in preparation for the show, may do so without charge. Each artist will be entitled to enter three full-size paintings which may include works in oils, watercolors, acrylics, pastels and mixed media. Graphics also will be acceptable.

Entry dates for the show will be March 19, 20, 21 and 22, from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. As in previous years, judging will be by popular vote of park visitors during the first five days of the exhibit.

Organ recital scheduled

Organists for two Midland churches will present a joint organ recital Monday night in the sanctuary of First Presbyterian Church, West Texas and North B streets.

The recitalists will be Robert Poer, head of the music ministry at First Presbyterian, and Stephen Spain, organist and choirmaster for First Christian Church.

The Monday program, scheduled for 8 p.m., is presented under auspices of Midland's West Texas chapter, American Guild of Organists. Poer and Spain are members of the AGO and both have served as dean (equivalent to president) of the West Texas chapter in the past.

Programmed for the recital are works by J. S. Bach, Robert Schumann, Paul Manz, Louis Vierne, Alec Rowley and Horatio Parker.

The recital will be open to the public at no charge, said Mrs. Bruce Barthel, current dean of the AGO chapter.

Love for walnut trees aids future generations

By JULES LOH

OLD TAPPAN, N.J. (AP) — Richard Wolf is not likely to be appreciated until the next generation, or the next. That's all right by him. It is not for his own recognition that he does what he does.

"You don't plant a black walnut tree for yourself," he said.

"But somebody has to care about them. There are fewer and fewer American black walnut trees, and the more land we pave over and build on there will be fewer still. I do what I can."

Richard Wolf is this generation's Johnny Walnutseed.

A few days ago, for instance, he took off from work and went to the school house and gave his annual talk. He told the children, fourth graders, about trees and how they grow and what the world would be like without them.

He gave each pupil a walnut. This spring, as a class project, they will plant them. "Walnuts planted in the fall germinate better," he said, "but the kids should have fairly good results. The main thing is they now know what a walnut looks like and how to remove the husk and plant it."

He has been doing that himself for years: planting black walnut trees, nurturing them to saplings, giving them away. For miles around, the lawns and dooryards of his friends have become nurseries for black walnut trees that his children's children's friends will climb.

Richard Wolf, a tree surgeon, has great respect for all trees. His concern for the American black walnut, though, is almost an obsession.

He does not consider it the most majestic of trees. He would pick the white oak for that distinction, or, if he lived on the other coast, the redwood. Neither would it get his vote as America's national tree. If there were such a symbol, he would nominate the Douglas fir, for its noble work of sheltering a people.

For one whose livelihood derives in part from cutting down trees, Richard Wolf is as rare a species as the Juglans nigra, the one he's trying to save.

He will not remove a tree, any tree, for what he considers a frivolous reason, such as leaves clogging the roof gutters. "Get someone else," he tells potential customers. When a favorite linden tree in his own yard had to come down to save nearby trees, he got others to do the job and couldn't bear to watch.

In a quarter of a century as a tree surgeon he has, perforce, taken down five black walnuts, each replaced tenfold. The wood from those five is locked in his barn out back.

Supplemental livestock feeding important now

By CHARLES W. GREEN
Midland County Extension Agent

Due to current tight profit margins in the beef industry, livestock producers must give close attention to supplemental feeding so that they do the most good with the least output. Here are some key factors for producers to consider in supplemental feeding programs:

Provide a good supply of minerals the year round. Minerals should provide salt and 8 to 12 percent of phosphorus and calcium. Begin protein supplementation before cows lose a lot of weight and condition. Feeding should begin with the first killing frost.

Feeding may also be necessary during drought conditions when grass is dry and tough. For adequate protein, add half to a pound and a half of a 30 to 40 percent protein to low quality forages daily. This stimulates digestibility and forage intake.

To hold supplemental feeding to a minimum, improve hay quality, control calving season so that high quality forage is available when cows and calves need it most, and have cows in good condition at the start of the winter season. When cows get in poor shape, either feed higher levels of supplement or be prepared for a reduced calf crop and lower weaning weights.

Use 1 to 2 pounds of high-protein, high-energy supplement that will help cattle clean up dead grass in the fall. Look ahead and try to stay out of situations calling for high levels of supplementation.

Fire blight is a bacterial disease affecting members of the apple, pear and quince family. It attacks as many as 75 other hosts and is probably the most serious bacterial disease for certain fruit and landscape plants in West Texas. Control of this disease must begin now if treatments are to be fully effective.

Plants affected by Fire Blight are characterized by rapid death of blossoms, fruit, leaves and stems during the growing season. The bacteria overwinters in cankers formed on last year's diseased limbs. During spring bloom the cankers will become active and the bacteria will be washed or carried by wind and insects to developing blossoms.

So, control of fire blight starts with the removal of as much of last year's diseased wood as possible during the dormant season. Follow with a spray program in the spring using a copper fungicide. Streptomycin sulfate can also be used to control the disease, but it is not readily available.

Another practice that can help reduce the severity of fire blight is to avoid heavy nitrogen fertilization in the spring. Excess levels of nitrogen or excessive pruning will cause an over abundance of tender succulent growth which is extremely susceptible to fire blight. With some plants you may select from varieties that are resistant to fire blight. For instance in pears, the Kieffer and Orient are the most often recommended. French type pears such as the Bartlett are extremely susceptible to fire blight.

Each year gardeners buy onion plants to set out in the garden in the spring. Some years they make nice size bulbs and other years they don't. Why this occurs is a common question for which there is no easy answer. To avoid problems, first of all be sure to obtain varieties which will bulb in our particular area of the state. Early Grano and the Sweet Spanish strains are good choices.

Always buy plants which are about the size of a lead pencil. Larger plants will not produce earlier or larger bulbs. Generally, a large onion plant will produce a seed stalk after planting rather than forming a large bulb. Seed stalk production is known as "bolting".

Utah's teen-age tycoon bigtime wheeler-dealer

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — A flamboyant teen-age enterpreneur, who a detective says was so charming "I'd go in and buy a used car from him right now," is in custody for impersonating a police officer.

Last year, the unidentified boy, then 16 years old, was charged with forgery, obtaining money under false pretenses and writing a check with insufficient funds. Police said he had accumulated debts of more than $100,000.

The boy pleaded guilty to the insufficient funds charge and was placed on probation with the other charges dropped. The case was not made public at the time.

Police said when the boy was arrested again last week, he was working as a bill collector for one of several firms that had identified him as a debtor last year.

The boy, who at one time drove around town in a Lincoln Continental and maintained a suite of offices, was impersonating an officer and threatening to arrest someone who owed the firm money, police say.

He is in the custody of juvenile authorities, who will not reveal how his case is being handled.

"He's a good-looking boy from a middle-income family, and he's got a silver tongue. I'd go in and buy a used car from him right now," said Salt Lake County sheriff's Detective Dennis Couch.

The Deseret News reported Friday that cash flow in the boy's financial empire was estimated by associates as high as half a million dollars.

The boy's business ventures began when, at the age of 14; he borrowed some money and bought photographic equipment to start a business. But he sold the equipment at a high profit, the newspaper said, adding that he went on to get more loans in increasing amounts.

Among the reported investors were his grandmother, who put up $10,000, and a friend who mortgaged a car for a $3,000 investment, the newspaper said.

Among those he owes money is a school teacher who advanced him $17,000 to buy two cars that never were delivered, the detective said.

Couch said police last year documented unpaid debts of $100,000 and had evidence of another $50,000. One civil suit against the boy, now a high school junior, for $12,000 was settled out of court.

One of his corporations was a criminal investigation agency. He told officers he was also in the fast-food business, Couch said.

Canal debate now down to basics

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG

WASHINGTON (AP) — The exhibition season in the Panama Canal debate league is over. The players have sharpened their arguments, tested a few maneuvers and are almost ready to start playing for keeps.

Many are spending this week checking to see whether their hometown followers want them playing on the pro-treaty or anti-treaty team.

The first three days of debate produced a pretty thorough airing of arguments for and against ratification of the treaties and some sharp exchanges between both sides.

Then, the Senate recessed for 10 days and many members headed home to hear whether the nationally broadcast debate. carried on National Public Radio, has had any effect on public opinion.

Sen. Howard H. Baker Jr., RTenn., the Senate minority leader and a special target of anti-treaty forces, expressed what many may have been thinking during his remarks on the second day of the proceedings.

"It is still uncertain whether the treaty as amended can pass this Senate," said Baker. Then he added that "this is one of the few cases where the Senate will decide the issue on the basis of the debate.

"It is not a charade. What is going on here will probably determine the outcome."

A lot of heavy lobbying continues by both sides.

Former President Gerald R. Ford and former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger have been calling Republicans in an effort to sway some votes to support ratification.

The Conservative Caucus announced Friday that it is mounting a campaign to seek "potential political retribution" against pro-treaty senators.

The two treaties, hammered out during 13 years of negotiations, were signed last Sept. 7 by President Carter and Panamanian leader, Gen. Omar Torrijos.

One treaty would turn over control of the canal to Panama by the year 2000 and the other would provide for the waterway's neutrality after the turn of the century.

While the political pressures are building in their home states, senators are developing a number of issues that are likely to dominate the debate in the weeks to come and be the subject of many efforts to change the two pacts which require a two-thirds majority for approval.

Two major issues are being emphasized by the opponents: the financial arrangements involving the transfer of the canal to Panama and that over Torrijos himself.

Treaty opponents have said time and again during the early debate that Carter misled the American people when he said in his fireside chat that the treaties contain no costs to the American taxpayers.

The opponents contend that the Panamanians will be unable to operate the waterway at a profit without an increase in tolls that would drive away shipping. As a result, they argue the United States ultimately will have to bail out the Panamanians to keep the canal functioning.

They claim the cost could run from hundreds of millions of dollars to more than $1 billion.

Sen. John C. Stennis, D-Miss., chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee and an opponent of ratification, released a study hours before the debate began which pointed to a potential .5 billion cost.

The Stennis figures include costs of relocating troops now stationed in the Canal Zone as well as some payments to Panama which treaty opponents say would be made and which the U.S. negotiators say would be covered by surplus canal revenues.

Supporters of ratification, such as Sen. Alan Cranston, DCalif., argued that the potential cost of rejection is far greater.

Commissioners to discuss activation of court at law

Midland County commissioners Monday are scheduled to consider activating the Midland County Court at Law when they meet at 1:30 p.m. in the courthouse.

Commissioner Durward Wright, who requested the item be put on the agenda, said Saturday "all the facts and data" are in about the need for the court.

Under legislation passed last year, the commissioners can activate the court any time between now and Jan. 1, 1980, when it becomes active anyway.

Midland Democrat Willie DuBose has announced his candidacy for the position. Wright said he believes DuBose would be the "logical candidate" for the judgeship until the winner of the 1978 election takes office.

DuBose is the only candidate for the post.

Also at Monday's meeting, the commissioners are scheduled to meet with J. C. Hays of the Department of Housing and Urban Development Dallas area office to discuss a possible $230,000 Community Development grant.

Commissioner Jack Leonard, who requested the meeting between the commissioners and Hays, said he does not know whether Hays will attend the commissioners' 10 a.m. informal sessidy in the commissioners' conference room or the 1:30 p.m. formal meeting in the commissioners' courtroom.

Leonard said the Dallas HUD office was closed last week because of bad weather in Dallas, and he had been unable to make final arrangements with Hays.

"The $230,000 is still up for Midland County," Leonard said of a portion of Community Development funds the city of Midland was denied after it refused to implement a rent subsidy program.

Leonard said the county already is obligated to rent subsidy and housing rehabilitation programs after accepting smaller amounts of Community Development money.

— Hear a request from Frank James for speed limit signs between county roads 1212 and 1215 south.

— Hear a request from O. D. Capehart for stop signs at Texas Highway 60 East and 1130 north.

Seminar slated Friday

Marvin L. Cooley will hold a seminar from 6:30 to 10:30 p.m. Friday at the Holiday Inn in Midland to inform taxpayers on how they can legally refuse to produce books and records or answer questions and be within the law.

"I have used this method since 1971 and have not paid any income tax since. But, this is not the primary objective. The primary objective is to preserve my right against self-incrimination and not to be compelled into inquisitional proceedings," Cooley said.

He also will discuss how to deal with additional assessments and petition the tax court without having to employ expensive legal council. Cooley said he would supply information on legal defenses for anyone accused of failing to file a tax return.

Admission for the seminar will be $10 at the door.

Hospital expansion approved

AUSTIN—The Texas Health Facilities Commission has approved an expansion project at the Big Spring State Hospital.

The hospital received authority to construct a "worker village" of six buildings with a total of 40 beds for clients.

In other action, the commission set a Feb. 16 hearing date on Lubbock's Methodist Hospital's request for authoriety to purchase a 790 ton air conditioning unit.

The commission must approve all construction or equipment acquisition projects exceeding $100,000.

OC fete scheduled for today

ODESSA — Odessa College Homecoming activities begin with a barbecue from 5 to 6:30 p.m. in the Student Center.

Cost is $3 a plate for the barbecue which is open to the public.

The women's basketball team plays Wayland Baptist College at 6:30 p.m. in the gym, and, following that game, the Odessa College Wranglers take on Clarendon at 8 p.m.

Opera known

When Jeanette Hubert of Boston sent away for tickets to this summer's performance here of Wagner's "The Ring," she addressed the envelope "Ho-YoTo-Ho! Seattle, Wash."

An alert postal worker recognized the call of Wagner's warrior maidens, the Valkyries, and sent the ticket order along to the Seattle Opera Association's headquarters.

*Based on married person filing joint return, with three exemptions. Calculations observe 1976 Federal income tax laws using a 20 percent deduction. Does not include state or local or other income taxes.

That adds up to more than seven weeks off. So you'll have plenty of time to see the Near East, Middle East, Far East, Africa, and Europe. All are close by.

You'll also get round trip transportation and travel expenses to the U.S. and back for your entire family.

Other benefits.

Aramco offers you a lot of benefits. Excellent savings and retirement plans, and while you're in Saudi Arabia, free medical care for you and your family and free education for your children.

Your career will profit, too.

In addition to profiting financially, you'll profit professionally because you'll have the opportunity to work with some of the best international engineers on some of the biggest projects in the world. We presently have 120 Petroleum Engineers in the department.

Currently, Aramco is developing 37 onshore and offshore fields containing over 120 oil reservoirs.

We're producing between eight and nine million barrels of oil per day, plus associated gas.

We employ 25 onshore and offshore rigs to explore new fields and develop existing ones. And we're expanding our operations every day. You can't find another company that offers you experience on jobs of this scope.

You won't find a better Petroleum Department either. Aramco's Petroleum Department has four divisions: Drilling and Workover, Production, Reservoir Development and Technical Service Laboratories.

Some of the things we do are drill wells, construct surface facilities, run mathematical simulation studies for reservoir behavior and multiphase pipe flow, and make long-term development plans.

This means you'll have the opportunity for rapid professional advancement, either technical or management, through a multitude of assignments in all phases of the oil industry. And through a variety of educational seminars and schools.

The requirements.

If you're a Petroleum Engineer with a minimum of 2 years' experience in production, drilling and workover, or reservoir development, this could be the most important job offer of your career.

Call us.

Even if you're happy with your present job, and making lots of money — you should call us for an interview.

You might be surprised about the kind of job we can offer you and how much more you could make.

Call our representatives in Midland at the Midland Hilton Inn from Monday, February 13 thru Tuesday, February 14 for a personal and confidential interview at (915) 683-6131. (Out-of-town, call collect.)

Palomino nabs knockout win

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — "They say when the body dies, the head will fall," said Carlos Palomino Saturday after demonstrating exactly what he meant.

The World Boxing Council welterweight champion set up Ryu Sorimachi with brutal body punches in the sixth round and then knocked him out with a perfect left hook at 2:03 of the seventh.

"I think he was going to go in the sixth," said Palomino, "but the bell rang."

But the bell didn't save the Japanese challenger in the seventh and with his guard low he caught a smashing left hook to the jaw. His head went and so did the rest of him as he landed flat on his back to be counted out.

Sorimachi was on the floor for about 45 seconds before getting up to stagger across the ring and sink again to the canvas where he was comforted by his handlers.

Sorimachi said later he was alright, but he didn't remember anything that happened in the ring after being caught by the left.

Palomino said he hurt his right hand in the second round. "It did not hurt so bad that I couldn't throw it, but I couldn't go all-out," he said.

It didn't matter. The left was more than enough.

The beginning of the end for Sorimachi came in the fourth round when he hit Palomino with a booming right to the jaw. It backed the champion up but it did not hurt him, and he was in command from then on.

Increasing the pressure, Palomino dominated the remainder of the fourth round and the fifth. In the sixth he hurt Sorimachi with a left and right to the body and had him sagging with four terrific blows to the body just before the bell.

It was the fifth successful defense for Palomino of the title he won by stopping John Stracey at London in 12 rounds on June 27, 1976.

Russell sparks Tech over Aggies, 78-70

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Forward Mike Russell scored 22 points and the Red Raiders sank 13 of 15 free throws in the final two minutes to clinch a 78-70 Texas Tech victory over Texas A&M in a Southwest Conference basketball game here Saturday night.

Coach Gerald Myers' Raiders, now 10-3 in the SWC and 18-6 for the season, scored the first five points of the second half to post a 44-32 lead. But the Aggies rallied and scored the next 13 points to grab a 45-44 lead with 13:36 left to play.

The teams then traded buckets for the next six minutes before guard Geoff Huston hit two jump shots to regain Tech's lead for the remainder of the game.

Huston and Mike Edwards each contributed 15 points to the Red Raider tally and forward Willie Foreman led the Aggies in scoring with 15 points.

Texas nears opener

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The Texas Longhorns, who compiled college baseball's best record last year but finished second in the Southwest Conference, open their 1978 season Thursday with a doubleheader against St. Mary's University here.

The Longhorns will play Texas Lutheran in a doubleheader next Satuday.

This is Coach Cliff Gustafson's 11th year at Texas, and he won nine consecutive SWC baseball titles before the Longhorns fell to second last year. Nevertheless, his 1977 team set an NCAA record of 34 straight victories and had a 53-9 season mark.

Watson, Rogers sharing lead in Desert Classic

PALM SPRINGS, Calif. (AP) — Tom Watson, the top money winner of 1977, shot a 6-under-par 66 Saturday to tie unheralded Bill Rogers, the second day leader, after the third round of the flood-delayed 90-hole Bob Hope Desert Classic.

Watson, playing in the same foursome with former President Gerald R. Ford and host Bob Hope at Indian Springs, had six birdies in missing only one green to post a 54-hole total of 203, 13 under par.

Rogers, playing at La Quinta, considered the toughest of the four courses used in the $225,000 tournament, shot a 5-under-par 67 after which he said, "I was very fortunate to shoot a 67. My putting saved me.

"It seemed like when I wanted to make a putt I did," he said. "I didn't drive the ball well or hit the irons as well as I did the other day, but I never got into real bad trouble."

ONLY 1 STROKE behind the two leaders was Jerry McGee, who had a 7-under-par 65 at Bermuda Dunes even though he said, "I'm playing horrible."

Peter Ousterhuis, picking up a 68 at Eldorado, was 3 strokes behind Watson and Rogers at 206 while Danny Edwards, shooting a 69 at Eldorado, was 4 strokes behind.

Watson, winner of the Tucson Open and the Bing Crosby earlier this year, continued to complain about his driving, but said his putting was excellent.

"I drove the ball well up until the about the 11th hole and didn't hit a fairway from the 11th hole on," said Watson. "But I was fortunate on the 17th and 18th to have shots."

He said his shot on 17 hit a tree, but dropped down so that he had a shot and on 18 he drove into a group of trees but the ball went through and he was able to see the green.

HE BIRDIED both holes, making a 35-footer on the 17th and a 20-footer on the 18th.

"It could have turned around with a Rogers, in his fourth year as a pro, said he was glad Friday's round was erased because of flooding at Indian Wells because the wind was making his round at La Quinta very difficult.

He had played five holes and was 1 over par Friday when the round was postponed because of flooding from rain in the mountains.

"If we would have had to play yesterday with that wind, I would have been in dire trouble," he said. "It was unplayable. Those five were by far the easiest ones with that wind."

David Graham, the first day leader, shot a 69 at Eldorado and was at 8-under par 208, tied with Lon Hinkle, who had a 70 at La Quinta.

Six strokes behind, at 209, were a group of seven including Morley; Forrest Fezler, who had a 66 at Eldorado; Steve Veriato, who had a 67 at La Quinta; and Gene Littler, who shot a 69 at Indian Wells. The others are Tim Simpson, a 68 at Eldorado; J.C. Snead, a 69 at Eldorado; and Bobby Walzel, a 71 at Bermuda Dunes.

Howard Twitty shot a 67 at Indian Wells to join a group of five at 6-under 210, 7 strokes behind the leader.

VETERAN MILLER BARBER, who was tied with Watson in second place behind Rogers after the second round, shot a 74 at Eldorado to move into a group of seven at 5-under-par 211. The pack included crowd pleaser Lee Trevino, who had a 72 at Indian Wells.

Arnold Palmer, up among the leaders after 36 holes, skied to a 75 at Indian Wells to put him at 214, 11 behind Rogers and Watson.

Watson said he didn't feel any undue pressure playing with the ex-president, House Speaker Tip O'Neill and Hope, although the galleries were huge.

"THE PRESIDENT played very well," said Watson. "He made eight

Razorbacks rout Frogs by 77-57

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — The second-ranked Arkansas Razorbacks charged into a tie with the Texas Longhorns for the Southwest Conference basketball leadership Saturday night behind guard Ron Brewer's 23 points in a 77-57 rout of the Texas Christian Horned Frogs.

Arkansas is now 11-1 in SWC play and 23-1 overall.

Texas Christian dropped to 318 and 1-11 in SWC action.

The Horned Frogs made a fight of it in the early going and led 14-12 before Arkansas Coach Eddie Sutton ordered the full-court press.

Arkansas ran off eight unanswered points and outscored TCU 20-6 to take an 37-22 lead into the dressing room at halftime.

As a crowd of 6,474 watched, the Razorbacks ripped off a 24-6 surge in the second half and Sutton sprinkled the floor with substitutes with six minutes to play.

TCU came out in a zone that bothered the Razorbacks before freshman Mike Watley of Fort Worth connected twice from the outside. Watley scored seven points playing before his hometown folk.

Bears nab SWC win

WACO, Texas (AP) — Junior forward Wendell Mays and guard Vinnie Johnson combined Saturday for 44 points to pace the Baylor Bears to an 80-71 victory over Southern Methodist that tied the two schools for fifth place in the Southwest Conference standings.

Mays scored 25 points and Johnson, a slick, ball-handling wizard from Brooklyn, added 19 as Baylor overcame an early 10-5 deficit and thumped the error-prone Mustangs.

Baylor and SMU now are 5-7 in SWC play. The fifth-place position is the last available home court spot for the Feb. 25 first round of the SWC postseason tournament. Positions 6 through 9 must go on the road for the first round, with the winners advancing.

SMU's Jeff Swanson hit six of his first seven shots and scored 14 of the

LSU in upset over Kentucky

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Louisiana State upset top-ranked Kentucky 95-94 Saturday night, with reserve guard Jordy Hultberg and Willie Sims providing the offensive firepower in a tense, noisy overtime period.

It was the first time since 1974 that LSU had beaten Kentucky, and only the third time in the history of their Southeastern Conference series.

All five LSU starters had fouled out of the game by the end of the overtime period, and Kentucky had lost three players to fouls.

In all, there were 65 fouls called in the bitterly contested game.

LSU opened a 12-point lead after the first four minutes of the game, but Kentucky whittled that down to a twopoint deficit, 42-40, at halftime.

Kentucky tied the game at 45 early in the second half, but then LSU outscored the nation's top-ranked team 14-2 in a four-minute period to take a 12-point margin.

Durand Macklin, who finished the night with 23 points, led the scoring binge, getting 10 of those points.

Starting guard Kenny Higgs got the other four, then fouled out. Macklin went out five minutes later.

Regulation play ended in an 83-83 tie.

Officials missing

Orangemen top West Virginia

MORGANTOWN, W.Va. (AP) — Fast-breaking Syracuse ran up first-half leads of as many as 11 points, then held off a late rally by West Virginia to edge the Mountaineers 74-73 loss in a regionally televised college basketball game Saturday.

Overcoming a 28-point performance by West Virginia senior center Maurice Robinson, the 18th-ranked Orangemen snapped a three-game road losing streak and gained their 16th victory in 20 decisions.

Marty Byrnes, who led the Orange with 17 points, gave Syracuse a 74-71 lead with 2:50 left. After Robinson drew West Virginia to within one at 74-73 on a field goal with 1:20 left, the Orange turned the ball back over to the Mountaineers with 1:02 to go.

West Virginia ran the clock down in an attempt to get the final shot. But the Mountaineers were stymied in the closing seconds. Syracuse, which had committed only four personal fouls in the second half, wasted a pair of fouls in the final 10 seconds, forcing West Virginia to take the ball out of bounds on each occasion.

The Orangemen's strategy forced West Virginia's Lowes Moore, who scored 20 points, into taking a desperation jump shot with two seconds to go which Byrnes took off the rim.

Tar Heels, St. John's take wins in Garden

NEW YORK (AP) — Phil Ford scored 20 points to lead seventh-ranked North Carolina to a convincing 74-57 victory over Rutgers Saturday before a crowd of 19,694, largest ever for a college program at Madison Square Garden.

The triumph insured the Tar Heels of their seventh straight season of 20 or more victories.

George Johnson had 23 points and 12 rebounds to lead St. John's to an 84-69 triumph over Duquesne in the first game of the doubleheader.

Ford, a 6-foot-2 guard, hit four jump shots during an 18-8 spurt that saw the Tar Heels turn a slim 11-10 advantage into a 27-18 lead.

Dean Smith's club, on top 35-21 at the half, broke the contest wide open early in the second stanza with a 12-4 spurt to make it 46-25. Once again Ford led the way with two buckets.

Rutgers, which had its sixgame winning streak snapped, fell to 17-5. James Bailey paced the Scarlet Knights with 19 points before fouling out with 7:08 to play.

St. John's, 16-4, went on a 16-4 tear midway through the first half to take command, 26-10. Johnson, who hit 10 of 12 shots from the field and grabbed 12 rebounds, led the Redmen spurt with three baskets.

Johnson was hurt when he was fouled by Ron Dixon at 3:23 of the second half.

Midland netters do well before rains wash away San Antonio tournament

SAN ANTONIO — Midland High placed three singles players and a doubles team in the finals of the Texas Schools Tennis Tournament here Saturday morning, but rain forced postponement of the championship round.

Vicki Vasicek in 'A' Girls Singles, Mary Morgan in 'B' Girls Singles, Jeff Rea in 'B' Boys Singles and Amy Davenport and Karen Farquhar in 'B' Girls Doubles all made it to the final round before inclement weather brought the tourney to an abrupt end.

Vasicek was scheduled to meet Michelle Luntz of St. Mary's Hall in her final round match. Luntz knocked off Vasicek's MHS teammate Cary Garton earlier in the quarterfinals, 6-3, 6-4.

In what would have been an interesting rematch, Rea was set to meet San Antonio Churchill's Jeff Mullins in the finals of the 'B' Boys Singles. It was Rea's victory over Mullins in the finals of the state team tournament last November that gave the Pack the Texas 4A championship.

In the other two final round matches involving Midland players, Morgan was to have met Leslie Noble of Houston Spring Woods and Davenport and Farquhar were to have faced Mashburn and Busby of Georgetown.

Midland's number one boys singles performer Jeff Bramlett was beaten in the 'A' semis by Leland Putterman of Houston Memorial, 6-3, 6-1, and Kirk Farquhar, the Pack's number two player, was eliminated in the quarters by Fred Grader of Houston Stratford, 6-2, 6-1.

In 'A' Girls Doubles, Dinah Boyd and Sherry Armstrong of Midland, playing together for the first time, made it all the way to the semifinals before succumbing to Danah and Reed of Houston Memorial, 4-6, 6-4, 6-4.

Lee's 'B' Boys Doubles team of Ed Barrera and Jim Carter got to the quarterfinals before losing to Whitehursy and Goldsmith of San Antonio Churchill, 6-4, 7-6, and the Rebels' 'B' Girls Doubles combo of Mindy Cravens and Jill Mutschler also got as far as the quarterfinal round before Georgetown's Mashburn and Busby eliminated them, 6-3, 6-4.

Midland and Lee will face each other in a dual match on Tuesday afternoon at the MHS courts, and a win by the Bulldogs would give them the district dual season championship.

Michigan State tops Michigan

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — Forwards Earvin Johnson and Greg Kelser combined to score 46 points Saturday and spark first-place Michigan State to a 73-62 Big Ten basketball victory over archrival Michigan.

The victory just about wiped out any hopes the Wolverines had of defending their championship as they fell to 7-5 in the conference and 12-8 overall.

Michigan State, which lost an earlier showdown against Michigan at East Lansing, lifted its conference mark to 10-2. The 10th-ranked Spartans now are 18-3 overall — making it their second greatest victory total ever.

Michigan State pulled away from a 24-24 deadlock to outscore the Wolverines 13-4 in the final three miutes of the first half for a 37-28 intermission lead. Michigan managed to pull within three points at 43-40 six minutes into the second half. Then — with Johnson hitting on free throws and Bob Chapman on jumpers — the Spartans edged away.

Mike McGee led Michigan with 24 points and Alan Hardy was the only other Wolverine in double figures with 14.

Kansas upends Kansas State

MANHATTAN, Kan. (AP) — Freshman guards Wilmore Fowler and Darnell Valentine combined for 30 points and John Douglas added 18 Saturday as No. 8-ranked Kansas, hitting 10 of its first 12 shots in the second half, raced past Kansas State 75-63 in a regionally televised Big Eight basketball game.

Fowler, replacing Valentine early in the first period, hit three straight buckets to halt an early Kansas State surge. With 7:51 left in the half, Douglas sank a 20-foot jumper to give the Jayhawks their first lead, 19-18.

Fowler, whose 30-foot jump shot at the buzzer gave Kansas a 36-33 halftime lead, hit six consecutive points to propel Kansas to a comfortable 57-43 bulge with 13:43 left in the game.

Kansas' victory hiked its overall record to 20-3 and its Big Eight mark to 10-1, two games ahead of No. 19 Nebraska, which played Saturday night at Missouri.

Defending champion Kansas State, led by Rolando Blackman and Steve Soldner, with 16 points each, fell to 14-9 and 5-6.

Marquette nabs win

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Butch Lee, sinking his first seven field goal attempts, poured in 24 points Saturday night to lead third-ranked Marquette to a 76-59 college basketball victory over the Air Force Academy.

Jerome Whitehead added 16 points for Marquette, now 19-2, which shot at a 67 percent clip in the first half en route to its fourth successive victory. Air Force, 12-7, was led by Tom Schneeberger with 23 points.

Marquette broke to a 10-2 lead as Jim Boylan, Bernard Toone and Lee fired in long shots over Air Force's zone defense. Air Force then called time out and switched to a man-to-man, but two layups by Lee after Boylan steals built the Warriors' lead to 14-2.

It swelled to 28-11 behind 12 points by Lee, who sank four free throws after Air Force Coach Hank Egan was assessed two technical fouls.

The Air Force closed to within 38-28 at halftime behind five baskets in as many attempts by Schneeberger.

However, Marquette regained control by scoring the first three baskets of the second half on a jumper and a layup by Boylan

Dibbs gains St. Louis net finals

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Eddie Dibbs battled from behind twice in a tie-breaker and beat Australia's John Alexander 6-4, 7-6 to advance Saturday to the finals of the $175,000 St. Louis Classic against unranked Sandy Mayer of Wayne, N.J.

The 5-foot-7 Dibbs, the tournament's No. 2 seed, dazzled the taller Alexander with brilliant baseline play during an opening set featuring a lone service break in the seventh game.

In the second set, Dibbs' backhand passing shots betrayed him during a service break in the 10th game, but the squat performer from Miami Beach rallied for a 7-4 victory after falling behind on two services in the tie-breaker.

Mayer's all-around court excellence was too much for 30- year-old Zekjko Franulovic in a 6-3, 3-6, 6-0 semifinal that required only 96 minutes before a crowd of 7,225 at the Checkerdome.

Mayer's service deserted him in the middle set of the match, but the 25-year-old son of a tennis pro smothered his opponent while rallying in the closing set to his first title match on the World Championship Tennis tour.

The match today between Dibbs, ranked sixth in ATP computer standings, and Mayer, No. 14, will pit bitter rivals stemming from their battles at the junior level.

"It started two years ago in Monterrey when we almost punched each other out," said Dibbs of their running fued, which boiled over again during the quarterfinals of last month's U.S. Pro Indoor at Philadelphia.

"We just don't like each other, that's all. We've had our differences. It's just some things he thinks I'm doing to distract him."

Mayer, who is yet to defeat Dibbs in a professional match, said he considered the match against his opponent with a $30,000 prize at stake "a challenge and a goal.

"He's made a personal thing of it," Mayer declared of the long simmering fued. "I don't feel that way at all."

Dibbs, who has won three WCT titles in other years, is the current tour point leader but will be competing for his first title of 1978.

"He serves big," Dibbs said of Alexander, whom he past repeatedly when the tall Australian failed on first services. "You just have to stick in there and hit as many back as possible.

"Mayer's got a good serve, too," he said in a softer appraisal of his rival. "He's one of the most underrated players in the game."

In a Saturday doubles semifinal, top seeded Bob Hewitt and Frew McMillan won an 11-9 tie-breaker en route to a 7-6, 6-4 triumph over Ilie Nastase and Jaime Fillol.

MC girls lose

LUBBOCK — The Midland College girls swim team came out on the short end of dual meet with Texas Tech here Saturday, as the Chaps lost 82-28.

Coach John Jordan's team captured four firsts in the meet, with Linda Miller leading the way with wins in the 50 and 100 backstroke events. She won the 50 with a 30.4 clocking and followed it up with a 1:06.4 winning time in the 100.

Also taking firsts for the Chaps were Jollie Cowen in the 200-IM and Sherry Page in the 100 butterfly. Cowen won the medley event in 2:27.0, while Page's winning time in the butterfly was 1:03.0.

Cowen finished second in the 200-freestyle event, and Page was runnerup in the 50 fly. Sue Overheu added to the MC team total with a pair of thirds in the 50 and 100 freestyle events.

The Chaps will be idle from competition now until next month when they travel to Grand Rapids, Mich., to compete in the Junior College Nationals on March 8-11.

Edwards medalist

MONTERREY, Mexico (AP) — David Edwards of Oklahoma State shot a 72 Saturday to win medalist honors in the 6th annual Pan American International college golf tournament but his school was 11 strokes behind Brigham Young in the race for team honors.

Edwards' final round score gave him a 210 total on the par-72, 7,200-yard Club Campestre course.

Second place was a tie at 212 between BYU's Bob Clumpett, who had a final round of 72, and Oklahoma State's Lindy Miller, who carded a 70 Saturday.

BYU captured the team title with an 863 while Oklahoma State was second with an 874.

Third place team honors went to Oral Roberts with an 897. Some of the other final team totals were Houston, 900; Wichita State, 902; University of Miami, 906; North Texas State, 907; and Texas A&M, 908.

Host Pan American University finished with a 939 for 16th position.

Yoshikawa holding lead in LPGA play

MIAMI (AP) — Nayoko Yoshikawa shot an even-par 72 Saturday to cling to a 1-stroke lead after the second round of a $50,000 Ladies Professional Golf Association tournament.

Yoshikawa, a 28-year-old housewife who was fourth on the Japanese LPGA money list last year, brought her two-day total to a 5-under-par 139 on the 6,170-yard Kendale Lakes Country Club Course.

In second place was Debbie Austin of West Palm Beach, Fla., who shot a second-round 72 for a 140. Austin nabbed five titles last year and is one of the American tour's best competitors.

The day's best round went to Sandra Palmer, who logged a tournament-record 66, eclipsing the old mark by a stroke, and leading a group at 143. Others at 143 were Vivian Brownlee, Beth Solomon, Beth Stone and Jan Stephenson.

"I hit the ball well today. I had quite a few chances for birdies on the back nine, but I couldn't make it," Yoshikawa said through an interpreter.

She said a bogey on the first hole as she three-putted from 10 feet helped settle her nerves. She birdied the fourth hole, sinking a 30-foot putt, got another birdie on the sixth and bogeyed the seventh.

The tournament is sponsored by the American Cancer Society.

Desert Classic

pars today, Bob Hope didn't play so well. He had crooked shots off the tee."

Watson, who had been concerned about his driving throughout the tournament, said, "The pressure on me right now is whether my golf swing will hold up. I still don't feel my golf swing is very sound but I'm making enough good swings.

"And I'm certainly putting the ball very, very well right now," he said. I'm not making many mistakes with the putter. I feel good with the putter in my hands and tha makes you relax a little bit because you can afford to make mistakes and feel that you can make the 10-footer, the 12-footer, the 15-footer for par if you need and you make enough putts to keep you in the tournament."

Rogers, who had a round that included seven birdies and two bogeys, said he didn't feel comfortable with his driver.

Lee, Midland golfers finish low in tourney

The Pack won four events in the meet which was held at the Odessa High track. Jeff Adkins won the 880 with a time of 2:00.1 and than made it a double by winning the mile as well, Alvin Price won the 440, and Midland's sprint relay team of Price, Jerry Bundage, Chris Sliger and Bobby Stovall also were victorious.

Coming up with second place finishes were Chuck Stump in the 880, Bundage in the 100, Pat Darden in the mile, Brian Booker in the shot put and the mile relay team of Stump, Price, Bundage and Stovall.

Cesar Cedeno unsigned yet

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Astro centerfielder Cesar Cedeno has been offered the biggest contract in baseball history, the Houston Chronicle reported Saturday in a copyrighted story.

But Cedeno has yet to agree on the pact, and Astro general manager Tal Smith said he will try to trade Cedeno unless he signs a contract soon.

Cedeno is one of only two Astros who, under baseball rules, can refuse to sign a 1978 contract and become a free agent next October after the end of the season.

Despite the big contract offered Cedeno, Smith said it will be "very, very doubtful" Cedeno will be in an Astro uniform on the April 6 opening day if the player hasn't signed by then.

"We can't force anyone to sign unless he has an inclination to want to stay here. We've been in negotiations with Cesar for a long time. They've been toug long negotiations," Smith said.

Experts' opinions split on anti-smoking drive

NEW YORK (AP) — The latest round of government and private attacks on smoking may cause Americans to light fewer cigarettes, but don't hold your breath.

Experts inside and outside the tobacco industry are split on whether cigarette consumption will decline because of offensives against smoking launched by Joseph Califano, the secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, and a health commission created by the American Cancer Society.

In the past when publicity was focused on the health hazards of smoking, cigarette consumption fell sharply but recovered within a year or so.

During the past 17 years, total cigarette consumption has grown at an average of about 1 percent a year. But per capita consumption peaked in 1963 and had fallen about 7 percent from that high by last year.

The nation's largest tobacco companies, R.J. Reynolds and Philip Morris, both expect to increase cigarette sales this year. Reynolds forecasts a 1 percent growth. A Philip Morris spokesman said his company "is investigating building a new cigarette factory."

Cigarette consumption has grown as the population has expanded. But per capita consumption has fallen to an estimated 4,060 cigarettes a year last year from 1963's peak of 4,345.

Other developments last week in the business world:

—The coal strike, which began more than two months ago, prompted power companies to plan electricity cutbacks in parts of the East and Midwest. Some suggested that federal troops be used to mine coal or at least guard its shipment.

Utility experts said that even large purchases of power from utilities that use oil as fuel won't guarantee reliable service to residential customers. Power was curtailed in several states as utilities tried to conserve dwindling oil supplies.

—The government released a report showing that price increases by wholesalers are threatening to touch off a new round of inflation. The Labor Department's index of finished goods, which measures the price of consumer goods and heavy equipment before they reach retail stores, rose 0.6 percent in January.

Consumer goods measured alone went up 0.7 percent during the month.

—Juries in Detroit and Orange County, Calif., assessed General Motors and Ford damages in lawsuits involving explosions of fuel tanks in cars made by the companies. In the Detroit case, the parents of a man killed when the fuel tank of his Chevrolet Chevelle exploded was awarded $2.5 million. In California, a jury told Ford to pay $128 million to a teenager disfigured when the tank of his Pinto burst into flame in a crash. Both companies said they would appeal.

—The U.S. dollar, for more than a year the monetary whipping boy on foreign exchange markets, has stabilized in value and the French franc has come under heavy downward pressure. Currency speculators fear that possible Socialist and Communist gains in French elections next month could play havoc with the French economy and undermine the value of the franc.

List of non-paying tax firms growing

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — For the past six years, the big news about large corporations has been how little they pay in U.S. taxes.

Rep. Charles A. Vanik, D-Ohio, a member of the House Ways and Means Committee, regularly issues studies implying that many big American firms escape payment of taxes entirely despite huge profits that often run into billions of dollars.

The lategst such flush of statistics, which Vanik made public two weeks ago, shows an apparent worsening of this trend. Seventeen major American firms that together earned $2.6 billion in 1976 paid no U.S. income taxes that year, Vanik asserts — up from 11 that escaped taxes in 1975.

Now comes a pair of Treasury studies that dispute two of the pet contentions long fostered by Vanik and some liberal reformers" — first, that sizeable numbers of big firms avoid payment of taxes altogether, and second, that giant corporations enjoy a lighter tax burden than so-called small businesses.

The surveys, taken from actual tax returns, and not simply from the firms' annual reports, on which the Vanik studies rely, show that the nation's biggest firms — those with assets of $1 billion or more — pay taxes that on average amount to between 36.9 and 43.8 percent of their income, a respectable proportion by any standard.

They also show that the larger the corporation, the higher its effective tax burden is likely to be. So, for example, while the largest corporations pay a 39.9 to 43.8 percent rate, companies with assets of $50,000 or less pay only 17.9 percent on average — or half the big corporations' rate.

Moreover, the same trend holds no matter how the company's tax burden is calculated — on the basis of the percentage of its U.S. income that the firm pays in federal taxes here, or the proportion of its worldwide income that it pays in taxes to foriegn governments as well.

That the Treasury's results differ so markedly from the picture Vanik paints each year is explained by a second Treasury study that points out the flaws in the Vanik analysis — mainly that he mixes apples and oranges by comparing the firms' U.S. tax liability with the income they earn worldwide.

The federal government understandably gives multinational companies credit on their U.S. tax bills for the taxes they pay to foreign governments — to avoid taxing them doubly on income they earn abroad. Vanik's method of comparison ignores these realities. (The firms may use the credit only to offset U.S. taxes on foreign income, not on money they earn at home).

The tax laws also allow companies to offset their taxes through legitimate domestic tax breaks, such as the tax credit given business for spending on new equipment. Neither Vanik nor most other critics has proposed eliminating these credits. So why badger companies for using them? No one hits a homeowner for taking advantage of his mortgage interest deduction.

Finally, Vanik's yearly reports allege that the companies he cites have paid no U.S. income taxes, when actually he means they had no "net" tax liability. The difference is a small one, but important in maintaining the credibility of his study.

Say that a firm accures $10 million in tax credits of one sort or another, but because of limitations in the law it can use only $8 million to offset its U.S. taxes. Technically, it has no net U.S. tax liability.

President asked to give farmer nod

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two Midwestern congressmen are urging President Carter to "put a farmer at the Fed" when he replaces Arthur Burns on the board of governors of the Federal Reserve System.

The law establishing the Fed as the nation's central bank and independent setter of U.S. monetary policy requires the president, in selecting board nominees to be sent to the Senate for confirmation, to "have due regard to a fair representation of the financial, agricultural, industrial and commercial interests and geographical divisions of the country."

In a recent letter to Carter, Rep. John J. Cavanaugh, D-Neb., commented, "I believe I can safely say that the only interest...that is not and has not been represented on the board is the agricultural interest."

Agriculture is the nation's largest business. The farmers who comprise its foundation say they have been spurred to their current protest of low prices by their inability to pay off outstanding debts and obtain new credit for 1978 production.

While not all the protesters agree that farm debt should not allowed to go much beyond its current $116 billion, double the 1970 level, the Fed governors are the dominant force in the credit arena, rural and urban.

Sen. John C. Culver, D-Iowa, recently wrote Carter, "Too often many of the decisions on these issues are beyond (farmers') control or the control of their local suppliers of credit or mortgage funds ... While agriculture has become a major customer of national credit, it has no voice in how these institutions operate."

Neither Culver nor Cavanaugh specifically recommended a farmer. Culver called for "a well-qualified person with a background in and knowledge of the financial requirements of agriculture and rural America." Cavanaugh suggested "a person with a strong agricultural background."

The freshman House member wrote that such an appointment "would symbolize the commitment of your administration to use all available means to solve the farm problem — a commitment that has not been readily apparent to me or the people I represent."

Price plan due soon

The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The Treasury Department announced Friday that its minimum price plan for steel imports will go into effect Feb. 21, even though the agency has not yet computed the minimum prices for products that account for about a quarter of the nation's steel imports.

Even as the Treasury Department was making its announcement, the nation's second largest steel producer said the so-called trigger price mechanism — the centerpiece of an administration program to aid the financially troubled steel industry — set the prices too low.

If steel is imported at a price below the minimum, or trigger price, the Treasury Department will launch an immediate, accelerated investigation to determine whether the steel is being sold at a price below "fair value."

The trigger prices are based on the cost of the world's most efficient steel producer, Japan, and include not only the costs of making steel in Japan but the costs of shipping it to the United States.

Steel makers have long contended that, if foreign steel makers, including the Japanese, sold their product at the true cost of production — rather than dumping it, or selling it below cost — American steel companies could successfully compete with imported steel. In the final months of 1977, imports accounted for 20 percent of the steel market in the United States.

BUSINESS NOTEBOOK

Conference discusses variable rate plans

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Variable rate mortgage plans continue under study at the national level, but Texas savings and loan officials indicate the idea is still far from being accepted by Texas homebuyers.

Savings and Loan Commissioner Alvis Vandygriff, who recently returned from a meeting of the National League of Savings Associations legislative conference, says variable rate mortgages were one of the main topics discussed at that Washington get-together.

Various types of such plans are being used, Vandygriff notes, including the so-called "Canadian rollover" plan, a "reverse annuity" (allowing homeowners to draw an amount against their home when they reach a certain age), and a "flip mortgage" plan, which has a pledged amount used to defray taxes and insurance.

Most variable rate mortgages (sometimes referred to as VRMs) are keyed to some index, such as the consumer price index, and are reviewed periodically (usually five, with the interest rate adjusted, Vandygriff notes.

Supporters of such plans claim they prevent the lender from being locked into a very low interest rate if inflation increases rapidly — resulting in a loss of ability to make new loans — and keeps the borrower who has to buy a home at a time of high interest rates from being stuck with that rate over the entire life of the loan.

VRMs, however, haven't been received well in Texas.

"They are not too acceptable to the public as yet," Vandygriff agrees. "It's going to take a selling job on it.

"We've had them (VRMs) offered here in Austin," Vandygriff notes, "but they've not been too successful."

In addition to VRMs, associations are looking at extending the maximum time for amortization of home loans from 30 to 40 years, the commissioner notes.

Durwood Curlee, executive vice president of the Texas Savings and Loan League, notes the Federal Home Loan Bank Board is pushing the idea of variable rate mortgages for federally-chartered associations.

At the national level, Curlee says, labor and consumer groups which have opposed the concept have dropped some of their opposition.

"It would be up to the buyer anyway," he comments. "The buyer would have the option of going with a variable rate or a non-variable rate mortgage."

Because of the heavy loan demand in Texas, associations haven't "really stepped back and looked" at the concept of VRMs lately, Curlee feels.

But, he says, "Texas is getting more and more influence drifting down from California and the West Coast on variable rates."

"We're going to have to look at the secondary market potential," he believes, before associations will want to get "too deep" into VRMs.

If it turns out there is a good secondary market for California VRMs, the concept likely will spread, Curlee concludes.

Vandygriff agrees California has done "a pretty good job on variable rates," so that Texas will be keeping an eye on the experience of California associations.

Curlee feels VRMs "will be a good thing for Texas" — but agrees that it will take a selling job, along with good results in the secondary market, before the use of VRMs becomes commonplace here.

•

By a 2-0-1 vote, the State Board of Insurance has approved the use of so-called "owner-controlled" worker's compensation insurance programs, which usually involve larger construction projects.

Member Durwood Manford, who voted "present" on approval of the program, said his concern was how to distinguish such programs from the illegal "wrap-up" program.

Some insurance executives and corporation representatives argued that use of such programs allow employers to reduce costs significantly — and agents, who opposed the concept at a hearing last year, offered no testimony against the plan at this year's meeting.

business beattitudes

by Bill Beattie

A product or service has no real value unless it contains that which is not negotiable — the honor and integrity of those who make it and of those who distribute it. To receive the most for what we spend, we need to look for this priceless ingredient in every product and service we buy. If we look for it in things we buy, we will give it in the things we sell.

Tolstoi tells us, "Life is a place of service, and in that service one has to suffer a great deal that is hard to bear, but more often to experience a great deal of joy. But that joy can be real only if people look upon their life as a service, and have a definite object in life outside themselves and their personal happiness."

Selling is service!!! The concept of service is the ideal in every aspect of business. It lifts commerce above mere money-making. If our primary aim is to handle articles that really meet a need of our fellowmen, we will find our customers as eager to buy as we are to sell.

Today's businesses require that their salesmen be business men in the best sense of the word. They must know the product or service they are selling from "A" to "Z" — they must make an effective and intelligent presentation — and most of all, they must have a desire to be of service to their customers.

William S. Knudsen said, "A big corporation is more or less blamed for being big; it is only big because it gives service. If it doesn't give service it gets small faster than it grew big." Growing big and staying big really depend on the service we give to our customers and associates.

As the thought of service on the part of the seller and gratitude for genuine value on the part of the buyer become more apparent in the business world, we will see more successful individuals, more successful businesses, and more satisfied customers — and there will be more affluence everywhere.

The measure of a man is not the number of his servants but the number of people he serves.

FBI briefs attorney investigating GOMA

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — U.S. Attorney Jamie Boyd was briefed Friday by Federal Bureau of Investigation agents concering alleged problems with federal manpower funds, including those handled by the Governor's Office of Migrant Affairs.

An FBI probe of the United Labor Legislative Committee's Worker Assistance Program was also covering during the briefing at the federal courthouse here, Boyd said.

United Labor Legislative Committee's Worker Assistance Program (ULLCO-WAP) received a $200,000 grant through the governor's Manpower Services Council. Its chairman is Harry Hubbard, president of the Texas AFL-CIO and a member of the council.

Boyd declined to go beyond saying that ULLCO-WAP and the Governor's Office of Migrant Affairs (GOMA) had "been mentioned" in the briefing.

"I'm simply being briefed. I don't know enough now to speculate on whether any charges will be filed," Boyd said.

The Governor's Office of Migrant Affairs (GOMA) also is being probed by an investigative task force headed by District Attorney Ronald Earle.

While problems have been reported in several manpower programs, an audit and evaluator's report on GOMA are the only documents Earle has requested from the Texas Department of Community Affairs, a spokesman said.

TDCA monitors state manpower programs funded with federal Comprehensive Employment Training Act (CETA) money flowing through the governor's office.

Last month, The FBI seized participant records from the United Labor Legislative Committee's Worker Assistance Program (ULLCO-WAP). Agent-in-charge Joseph O'Connell said Friday some had been sent to Washington to be fed into a computer.

Snowbound Boston streets dominated by pedestrians

BOSTON (AP) — This city of 630,000, known for its tortuous motor vehicle traffic, has taken on the atmosphere of a small European town as pedestrians dominate the snowcovered streets.

A state of emergency banning all but emergency vehicles from the streets has revived the oldest form of travel — by foot.

Saturday, people were walking leisurely in the center of downtown streets normally packed with cars, cabs and trucks. Only an occasional delivery van, police car or utility truck interrupted the gaits of those trudging through the snow dumped by a blizzard Monday.

"It's just not like when people have cars — then they honk the horn and yell out the window, 'You jerk.' This is quiet, a nice change of pace," said George King, an airport worker from a western suburb who had traveled to the city by train.

"I'm going to get back into walking more. People are friendly," he said.

"It makes you stop and think," said Diane Edwards, a bookkeeper. "We really depended on our car. By walking around we've seen people in the street we haven't seen all winter."

Mrs. Edwards was one of a few dozen people watching an enterprising street juggler perform in the city's Quincy Market building Friday. The indoor marketplace is normally filled with noisy crowds patronizing the many shops, but the juggler had the undivided attention of the few dozen people who had ventured to the area to pass some time.

Federal officials promised a second wave of soldiers and equipment to help those already there digging the city out from under more than two feet of snow. President Carter has declared the eastern part of the state a federal emergency area.

"I think it would be nice if a state of emergency happened one week out of every winter," said Ann Davis of Cambridge. "It makes people appreciate other people. It makes them slow down and relax, say hello to people they don't even know."

Friday was the first day Boston banks were permitted to do business since Monday. But not all banks were open, and there was a cash shortage.

Japanese leftists protest

TOKYO (AP) — Leftest groups staged counter demonstrations and rallies across Japan Saturday to protest the celebration by conservative groups of a national holiday commemorating the legendary descent from heaven of Emperor Hirohito's ancestors 2,638 years ago.

It was the first time since Japan was defeated in World War II that the government has sanctioned the celebration of National Foundation Day.

The emperor, who has officially denied his heavenly origins, and his government have been under pressure from conservatives recently to revive old traditions that were scrapped under Allied pressure in 1945.

Carter energy program not dead but it is in state of deep coma

By CLYDE LA MOTTE
Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON — President Carter's energy program is not dead, but it is in a deep coma and the prognosis is highly unfavorable.

A symptom of the comatose state is the current inability of Senate conferees to move on the issue of natural gas regulation.

Last week the leaders of the two factions, one favoring continuation of controls and one favoring deregulation, were exchanging compromise poroposals but as the week wore on the prospect for reaching a common meeting around continued to be dim.

If the natural gas legislation dies, it's demise will be followed by that of the crude oil equalization tax. If so, there would be very little substance left of the over-all energy program.

In such a meeting, the Carter administration would not likely launch a new effort to get comprehensive energy legislation approved by Congreee, certainly not during an election year.

It is possible that energy could become a major issue in this year's congressional races but it's more likely that it will not except in a few special cases, such as Rep. Bob Eckhardt's bid for re-election to the House from his Houston district.

The outlook, then, is that not much is going to be accomplished in the near future to revive the administration's ailing program. That is, the nation will probably will continue to meander along an uncharted energy path until an actual energy crisis develops.

Regarding the natural gas legislation, 10 days ago Sen. Henry M. Jackson D-Wash., chairman of the Senate Energy Committee circulated some proposals drafted by his top aides.

These proposals included a plan for phasing out price controls of new natural gas over a seven-year period, with a provision for reimposing controls under certain conditions.

Prices during this phasing out period would be permitted to rise quarterly to offset inflation, plus an additional 3 percent increase as an incentive. The starting price would be $1.84 per thousand cubic feet, as compared to a ceiling of $1.75 originally proposed by President Carter.

A group of Senate conferees headed by Sen. Clifford Hansen R-Wyo. rejected that approach but made a counter offer. It would shorten the phasing out period to five years and would accelerate price increases during that period by relating them to the cost of fuel oil.

Senator Jackson promptly termed the Hansen offer unacceptable. With Congress leaving for a 10-day recess, the prospect for any compromise faded.

Although the conferees haven't given up, many observers feel that time is running out for any compromise to be adopted during this session of Congress. There is other legislation that must be acted upon and members of Congress want an early adjournment so they can hit the campaign trail.

It is also apparent that Congress is getting tired of the energy issue, partly because it is finding the general public apathetic. And the enthusiasm of the administration itself seems to have waned. For instance, on the gas controversy, the administration has said repeatedly during the stalemate that it was waiting for the conferees to take action.

It is too early to tell whether the lack of progress on establishing an over-all energy policy will affect President Carter politically. Obviously, it will not do him any good for the record to show that he was unable to get his program through Congress, especially in view of the fact that he listed it as his No. 1 priority for 1977.

It may haunt the president and his advisers that he did not stick to his campaign promise to work for deregulation of natural gas prices. After all, the Senate earlier had voted for decontrol and the House had come within four votes of doing so. A push by a newly-elected Democratic president may well have tilted a Congress controlled by Democrats. And an over-all energy bill could have resulted.

His failure to keep the campaign promise angered advocates of decontrol while at the same time encouraging proponents of continued regulation. As a result, each side became progressively more adamant and a solution became more difficult.

However, the death of the energy legislation evidently would not be widely mourned. Not for the present at any rate.

Fuel need expansion causing problems

By MAX B. SKELTON

HOUSTON (AP) — A Shell Oil Co. refining, transportation and marketing executive says investing to meet increased fuel oil requirements presents problems to the domestic refining industry.

J. H. DeNike, vice president for oil products, says the demand underlying such expansion might prove to be interim in nature until substitute energy sources are developed.

"Secondly, current product price structures hardly justify large block expansions of existing refineries, much less new grass roots facilities," he said.

As evidence, DeNike said only one world scale grass roots refinery is under construction in this country at present and only one other has been built in the last four years.

"During this same period, 37 small refineries, of less than 10,000 barrels per day of capacity, have been built under the economic umbrella of the small refiners bias in government control," he said.

"At this point in time, I just can't predict whether significant new fuel oil capacity will be constructed in this country despite growing demand," he said.

He added that much idle capacity for fuel oil exists elsewhere in the world.

"With this possible exception, oil products capital requirements in future years should be relatively modest."

DeNike said most refinery projects will focus on minor expansions of existing facilities or debottlenecking to improve the efficiency of existing units.

"Some investments will be required to offset the loss of octane quality in gasoline as tetraethyl lead is phased down, and to reduce the sulfur content of heavy fuel oil," he said.

"In general, energy cost savings, reliability, safety and protection of the environment will be getting primary attention."

Aside from manufacturing, DeNike said, a certain level of investment will be required in marketing to meet demographic changes and the ever present need to increase throughputs and lower unit costs.

Furthermore, he added, investments will be required in transportation and receiving facilities to handle increasing quantities of offshore oil.

"Even so, it appears to me that a well run oil products business should meet its own capital requirements over the next 10 or 15 years, and then some," DeNike said.

DeNike said demand for petroleum products will continue to grow in that the nation must continue to depend on such products as it will require meany years for the development of alternative resources.

"Undoubtedly, future growth will be below historic rates, but growth will be from a very large base," he said.

The United States consumed more than 18 million barrels per day in petroleum last year and DeNike said a number of recent forecasts foresee consumption in the range of 22 million barrels per day in 1990.

"This represents an average annual increase of perhaps 1.5 percent over the 13 year period," he said.

"There will be changes in the product mix during this time. We see some further increase in motor gasoline consumption in the next 2 or 3 years, but we expect declines thereafter. Consumption in 1990 could be less than today. However, we expect consumption in the total transportation sector to increase over the entire period at a rate of somewhere in the range of 1 to 1.5 percent per year."

He said the big changes are expected to involve the consumption of distillate and residual fuel oil by industry and utilities, and the petroleum liquid-based petrochemical feedstocks.

"Present public policy requires industry and utilities to use less natural gas so that diminishing supplies of this fuel can be dedicated to the resiential use," he said.

Geologists will meet

A decrease of six active rotary units were recorded last week by the weekly survey of activity in the Permian Basin of West Texas and Southeast New Mexico by Reed Drilling Equipment.

The company counted 300 rotaries turning to the right compared to the 306 tallied a week earlier. One year ago there were 301 rigs making hole.

Reed counted 28 units at work in Eddy County, making that the most active area in the two-state region last week.

Lea County, N. M., was close behind with 26. A week earlier, Lea was on top with 30 units.

Pecos County was the most active West Texas area last week with 26 rotaries running. Ward followed with 19 and 16 were counted in Gaines.

Other districts reporting to the Tulsa office are the Oklahoma City and Denver districts.

His association with the company began in 1947 at Palestine as a summer roustabout. He joined the company permanently at Palestine following his graduation from Texas A&M University. He had been in Midland since August 1964.

Newman replaces J. E. Hofmann who was appointed district manager for the International Exploration and Production Division's Congo operations, headquartered at Pointe Noire, Congo.

He previously was area superintendent in Mobile, Ala., in the Southern Exploration and Production Division. King was graduated from Texas A&M University with a B.S. degree in Petroleum Engineering and Mechanical Engineering.

He joined the company following graduation. He took a leave of absence until 1960 to serve in the Air Force. He returned to Getty following that military assignment.

Matthew C. Lutz has been named division geologist, moving to Tulsa from his former post as Midland District exploration geologist.

He had been in Midland since 1973. He previously served the company in New Orleans from 1958 to 1971 and in Houston from 1971 until his transfer to Midland.

He received his B.S. degree in Mechanical Engineering with petroleum option in 1962 from Kansas State University, and joined Skelly that year.

He received a B.S. degree in Geological Engineering from The University of Texas in 1948 and joined Skelly in 1952 at Pampa.

Davis replaces W. E. Grolemund Jr. who was transferred to the Southern Exploration and Production Division as area superintendent at Winnsboro.

Kelley I. Brown has left the Midland District to join the Oklahoma City District in the same capacity as enviornmental affairs and safety coordinator, replacing Douglas H. Johnson.

Brown joined Skelly in 1966 and had been in Midland since 1969.

Succeeding brown in Midland is J. M. "Mike" Foy who transferred from the Headlee gas processing plant near Odessa where he was temporary plant foreman during most of 1977. He has been with Getty since 1962.

In other changes announced by Getty, Ray E. Faudry has been named division geophysicist in Tulsa and Johnson has been transferred to Tulsa from Oklahoma City as division fire, safety and industrial hygiene adviser.

Faudry previously was Offshore District geophysicist in Houston for the Southern Exploration and Production Division.

He joined Skelly Oil Co. in 1961 as Houston District geophysicist, and is past president of the Geophysical Society in Houston.

Johnson joined Skelly in 1954 in Shreveport, La., and has spent most of his career in the safety and environmental field.

SPE slates Blackwell

Dr. R. J. Blackwell, research scientist with Exxon Production Research Co. in Houston and a Society of Petroleum Engineers Distinguished Lecturer, will be the speaker for the Tuesday meeting of the Permian Basin Section of the SPE of AIME in Ranchland Hill Country Club.

Dr. Blackwell will discuss "Enhanced Oil Recovery by Chemical Flooding—Status and Prospects."

The meeting will get under way at 6:30 p.m. with a social hour.

Dr. Blackwell's speech will focus on basic concepts of the high-cost, high-risk enhanced recovery by chemical flooding method for oil that is left in a reservoir by lower-cost, conventional recovery methods.

In addition to a brief look at the history of chemical flooding processes, emphasis will be on future applications and recovery estimates by such methods.

Dr. Blackwell is the recipient of a B.A. degree from Texas Christian University and a Ph.D. in Physics from the University of North Carolina.

Blackwell has had a variety of assignments at Exxon Production Research and Exxon Co., U.S.A. He has authored numerous publications, holds several patents, and participated in the National Petroleum Council's study on the potential of enhanced recovery in 1976.

Infill program will up Wasson's oil yield

AUSTIN — The Railroad Commission of Texas has cleared the way for implementation of an infill drilling program in the Denver Unit of the Wasson field in Gaines and Yoakum counties.

The program is expected to result in the additional recovery of 145 million barrels of oil.

Clearance came last week when Chairman Mack Wallace and Commissioners Jon Newton and John H. Poerner approved an exception to the well density rule for the unit that permits one well for each 20 acres.

The density rule for the Wasson field allows one well per 20 or 40 acres.

The commission's action exempts future wells drilled at or more than 1,100 feet from a producing non-unitized tract or 1,100 feet from the unit boundary from field rule spacing requirements.

The revisions were recommended by Fred Young, chief counsel of the Oil and Gas Division of the commission, and senior staff engineer Willis C. Steed.

"The proposed operation should increase the ultimate recovery of hydrocarbons from the reservoir by approximately 145 barrels," they reported.

The Denver Unit went into effect in November 1964 when ultimate recovery was estimated at 620 million barrels of oil.

With 20-acre infill development, the unit's ultimate recovery is estimated at 765 million barrels.

On completion, the infill program will have 837 producing wells and 330 injection wells, with an average density of 21.85 acres per well.

The Denver Unit is a unitized area wherein all interest owners share in the proceeds of the entire unit so that location of wells from an interest owner's stand-point is immaterial, the commissioners said.

President announced

Jerry W. Welch has been elected president of Bassinger Tools, Inc., a subsidiary of Tom Brown, Inc., of Midland, reports Thomas C. Brown, Tom Brown president.

Study under way of shale deposit

(Editor's Note: The following article, written by Jon Bowman, staff writer for the Los Alamos, N. M., Monitor, concerning a new oil shale research project, appeared in a recent issue of the Monitor, which is published by Mr.and Mrs. H. Markley McMahon, formerly of Midland. Mrs. McMahon is the daughter of Mr.and Mrs. S. P. Hazlip of Midland.)

LOS ALAMOS, N. M. — A new group formed recently at Los Alamos Scientific Laboratory (LASL) is studying ways of extracting an estimated 2 trillion barrels of oil deposited in a 17,000 square-mile bed of shale laid down 50 million years ago.

Researchers in the new "in situ" sciences (G-7) group, part of LASL's geosciences division, hope a series of experiments planned for this spring will demonstrate the usefulness of explosives in breaking loose underground deposits of oil shale in the Green River Basin of Colorado, Utah and Wyoming.

The group's acting leader says the basin could provide upwards of two trillion barrels of oil, sufficient to meet the nation's demands for 200 years at present consumption rates.

"That's more oil than the total earth reserves have ever been estimated at," William J. Carter said.

He explained that the oil shale doesn't actually contain oil, but is rifled with kerogen, a substance from which oil can be processed.

Although the fuel-producing potential of oil shale has been known for some time, the development of the resource has lagged because of high mining costs and the lack of an economical method to refine oil from kerogen, Carter said.

LASL scientists hope their studies will help end these problems, providing a less-expensive means to extract oil shale and process it ("in situ") at the site.

Carter said the thrust of the experiments is to perfect techniques for using explosives to fracture deposits of oil shale in such a way that it can be treated underground.

Information collected during the tests will be fed into computers, in an effort to come up with technically precise, yet economical, ways to fracture oil shale deposits by using explosives.

It is hoped the blasting will etch out huge underground caverns in the deposits, breaking the oil shale into chunks about six inches in length.

Carter said pieces of that size may be ignited underground, and heated to controlled temperatures between 800 and 900 degrees fahrenheit. The result is the release of an oil-laden mist that could be pumped to the surface, and processed into fuel.

If the blasting produces smaller fragments of oil shale, they would burn if ignited, while larger chunks could not be fully processed.

Carter said getting the oil-rich mist to the surface is only part of the problem. There's also the need to rid the mist of high concentrations of nitrogen, which make it difficult to ship via traditional pipelines.

He said there are two possible solutions to the problem, both of which will involve a substantial cost. The nitrogen, which makes the oil extremely thick, could be removed prior to pumping from the site, to keep the oil from caking in the pipelines. Or the lines could be heated to prevent clogging.

The LASL project, according to Carter, is designed to reduce the costs associated with extracting and processing fuel from oil shale, thus making the resource more attractive for commercial development.

"The major drawback is that the "in situ" technology isn't working as well as we would like," he said. "It takes a lot of people and a lot of capital investment."

Because the richest oil shale deposit is located in a sparcely settled region, development will entail not only construction of a costly processing plant, but also building new homes, roads and municipal and school facilities.

Diminishing oil supplies, however, may force the nation to turn to the abundant reserves trapped in shale, Carter said.

While the Department of Energy projects that oil shale will account for the production of 1,000,000 barrels of oil per day by 1985, Carter believes the resource's development will be somewhat slower, although ultimately essential.

He views the formation of LASL's new "in situ" sciences group as a step in the right direction, spelling "a milestone of sorts" in the Laboratory's thinking.

The new group includes researchers versed in explosive testing, chemistry, experimental physics, laser technology, and the geoscience fields.

In addition to exploring the fuel potential of oil shale, they also are probing coal gasification and other new techniques for recovering fossil fuels.

Reporter finds military secrets easy to come by

By RUDY MAXA
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — "Joe Albright has a knack for coming up with great stories by just looking at records and drawing connections," says a colleague of the Cox newspaper chain's national reporter who last month distressed the military by writing about his casual walk through secret nuclear bases as well as the availability of blueprints of those facilities.

"The whole thing was chance," says Albright, whose reports led to an immediate tightening of security at America's nuclear weapons arsenals.

While studying the House appropriations committee hearings delaing with weapons programs, Albright noticed that many existing nuclear devices did not have electronic safety latches that prevent unauthorized detonation of the weapons. He asked the Pentagon for permission to tour a weapons site but was turned down.

Then, while reading the Commerce Department report of available government contracts, Albright saw an offer to bid on the upgrading of the security measures of several weapons-storage facilities; he cross-checked that with the military appropriations report that listed the bases where upgrading was planned, and then, he knew which bases housed nuclear weapons and which were considered underprotected.

He mailed $5.30 for the bid plans and promptly received 53 blueprints to a Strategic Air Command base; for another $6, he received blueprints to another base. Included in the blueprints were details of the electrican alarm systems.

A notice advised prospective contractors to visit the sites; he wrote letters asking permission, even signing them with names based on the German terrorist group Baader-Meinhof. (One letter he signed Florence Bader, assistant to Mr. Albright, another, Prudence Meinhof.)

After giving his Social Security number Albright was invited to tour the bases (whose identity he shielded in his writing), where he witnessed the transfer of nuclear bombs and was given lectures on the bases' security weaknesses by personnel assigned to guide the man they assumed would bid to install stronger fencing and better lighting.

"Anyone who sets out to grab a weapon is going to run a 99.999 percent chance of getting caught, if not shot," says Albright, but his effortless access to sensitive blueprints shocked military brass.

Then, after Albright's stories appeared and after an appearance on the "Today Show," he unexpectedly received another set of blueprints from a bureaucrat Albright assumes was just doing his job.

That made a couple of generals very angry, and the military has suspended its tours bases and is revamping its procedures for awarding contracts.

The mothers of the world must wait until after this year's Senate elections to read Nancy Thurmond's tips on child-rearing.

The 32-year-old beauty-queen wife of the 76-year-old South Carolina senator has four children. And a regular newspaper column with advice on raising kids ("Turn off the TV and tune in your children") led to a book contract with William Morrow & Co.

The manuscript for "Mother's Medicine: How To Bring Up Children" is completed, but publication will be postponed until December to avoid charges of trying to influence the November elections.

Like a shrewed author, Nancy Thurmond will not talk with the press about the book until it's on store shelves. But a district office staffer denies rumors that the senator's staff helped type the manuscript, adding that if anyone helped out, it would have been on his or her own time.

If the Panama Canal treaties survive a Senate vote, it won't be because the anti-treaty forces didn't overwhelm friends of the Carter White House on the public-relations front.

While Senate and House treaty opponents blitzed the country — spending about $80,000 for one whirlwind, airborne publicity tour last month — the pro-treaty forces only weeks ago got around to making a direct-mail appeal for support from voters.

This in spite of the fact that since last fall mail against treaty ratification ran as high as 1,000-to-1 in some senatorial offices.

Heading the Carter lobbying effort are S. Lee Kling, former treasurer of the Democratic National Committee, and Jack Marsh, a White House counselor to Gerald Ford.

Their Committee of Americans for the Canal Treaties budget was, as of January, only about $200,000, and they have opted for speeches and local efforts instead of a massive direct effort.

Among those treaty supporters who disagreed with the plan were Tom Mathews, who is to liberals what Richard Viguerie is to conservatives: a direct-mail expert with lists of sympathetic supporters.

In conjunction with former Delaware Gov. Russ Peterson — who until recently headed a kind of international Common Cause called New Directions — Mathews last month mailed 1.1 million appeals to people who subscribe to magazines such as The Washington Monthly and The Nation.

The request: write your legislator to counter the tide of anti-treaty letters. More than 20 liberal groups raised the funds and provided other names for the mass mailing.

"Some people tended to think of this in terms of a presidential campaign instead of in terms of citizen action and citizen concern," gripes Mathews. Others have harsher words for the Louse effort, begun early last fall at the direction of Hamilton Jordan.

"You've got to have proven lists, and when you have monetary and time constraints ... our finances are relatively limited," admits Marsh, who joined the fray at the suggestion of Gerald Ford.

Marsh, for one, thinks that if his side had raised more funds, passage would not be the close test observers expect: "Our experience is the more people know about the treaty, the more favorable they're likely to be about it."

Who wrote the touching tribute to Hubert Humphrey that Vice President Walter Mondale delivered last month?

The day before the Sunday service at the Capitol, Mondale met in his home with his press secretary, Al Eisele, and Norman Sherman, Humphrey's former press secretary and the man who helped write the senator's autobiography. At one point Mondale opened a copy of Shakespeare's Henry V (his father-in-law, a minister, had given him Shakespeare's collected works) and read a passage that he said expressed how he felt about Humphrey. Then Eisele and Sherman worked on a draft, with Sherman staying up most of the night applying finishing touches. Mondale contributed the Shakespeare and the dramatic closing: "He taught us all how to hope and how to love, how to win and how to lose, he taught us how to live, and finally, he taught us how to die."

York puts blame on 'angel dust'

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Ned T. York says he was using the potent drug "angel dust" when he called police and implicated himself in the 12 murders attributed by police to the Hillside Strangler.

The 32-year-old actor was released from custody Friday after two days of questioning. No charge was filed against him.

"We released him for lack of sufficient evidence to file charges," said police Commander William Booth, spokesman for the Hillside Strangler Task Force. "He gave us no evidence sufficient to hold him."

Asked whether York had been discounted as a suspect, Booth said, "The investigation will continue. We won't close the door on that or any other possibility."

"I was smoking angel dust," he said, "and I'm not in control of my speech."

Angel dust is a slang term for the drug PCP, an animal anesthetic and powerful hallucinogen that has been linked to violent and bizarre behavior. Booth said urine tests confirmed York had PCP in his bloodstream when he was arrested.

A search of his home produced no evidence linking him to the crimes, Booth said. But police said they found a potent type of marijuana known as Thai stick. Booth said the city attorney's office would decide whether drug charges should be filed against York.

Saudi rapists meet barbaric deaths

By RICHARD HARWOOD
DEPUTY MANAGING EDITOR

AL KHOBAR, Saudi Arabia — At Hofuf, on the edge of the great Empty Quarter of Arabia, three rapists were punished a few months ago.

One of them was an unmarried man who, mercifully, was beheaded with a single stroke of a sword.

The other two, both married, paid a harsher penalty. They were buried up to their hips in sand, according to an American eyewitness. Then the assembled crowd stoned them from a distance of about 20 yards. The stones were small — about the size of limes — and there was no single, lethal blow. The men died slowly, bleeding profusely, crying out now and then in their agony. "I watched it for a while and then I had to leave," said the American. "A little of that goes an awful long way."

Other stories out of Saudi Arabia recently have made, in equally dramatic fashion, the point that the relations between men and women here are matters of enormous sensitivity. A Royal Princess and her lover were executed at Jiddah last summer for the crime of adultery. The stoning of adultresses by village women is still reported now and then.

To many Westerners these incidents merely create or reinforce an image of barbarism in the desert kingdom. But there is more to it than that. Fundamental social issues concerning the role and status of women are involved.

Jiddah most definitely is not Brooklyn. Hofuf is not Brookline. And Saudi society is not governed by the precepts of either Larry Flynt or Betty Friedan.

This is a stern Calvinist world in which Hester Prynne with her scarlet letter would feel at home. Its theology, mandating from subjugation and isolation of women, derives in part from words in the Koran asserting that "men are a degree above (women)." But mainly, the British journalist Peter Mansfield has written, it derives from "the scholars and casuists of Islam in later centuries who succeeded in interpreting the Koran ... in such a way as to place women in subjection ... Seclusion and the veil which were intended to give women privacy and protection in a formerly licentious society became a form of imprisonment. Islam has no clery; every man is priest and patriarch in his own household. Men exploited this power to dismiss wives at a whim. Divorce ... became an instrument of male tyranny."

Thus, double standards for the sexes arose. In Saudi Arabia today, polygamy is permissible for men but the iron rule for women is monogamy. At dinner in one of the small palaces here a couple of weeks ago, a young prince speculated, half-seriously on the pros and cons of acquiring another wife. "But she would probably spend too much money," he concluded. His present wife, the daughter of a former king, smiled serenely and kept her silence.

These disparities are everywhere apparent. A man may marry outside the Islamic faith. Such a marriage for a woman is punishable by death. Women may not drive automobiles. They may not travel without the consent of their husbands or guardians and only then in the company of relatives. They may never be alone with an unrelated male. They may not appear in mixed company on social occasions (except, as often happens at the higher levels of society, with the consent of the husband). They can hold no job that brings them into contact with men which means, for all practical purposes, that there are no women in the labor force. They are totally segregated in the educational system, taught only by women except for the occasional male instructor who comes into the classroom by way of closed-circuit television.

AT WIT'S END

By ERMA BOMBECK

You all know how I feel about ailing husbands.

If God had meant for men to be home in the middle of the afternoon he would have created a woman who runs on batteries.

Anyway, my husband took to his bed last week and on my 26th trip to his room, I gave him my "I've given you the best year of my life" speech.

It runs about a minute and a half, but it's brilliant. It touches on how I remained silent when his mother pushed for a funeral mass for our wedding, how I had never questioned his allergies to wet diapers and running noses and how I had given up a successful career as a baton twirler to make a home for him. Then I told him the dumb waiter (me) was out of order and that he should grow up and amuse himself. I turned on the TV and left.

Ten minutes later he yelled from the bedroom, "What's a hysterical pregnancy?"

I poked my head in his room. "Trust me, all you've got is a cold in your kidneys."

"No, no, it's Donna on All My Children. She just told Chuck she's having a hysterical pregnancy." I flipped the channel to General Hospital. In a few minutes he yelled again, "Come here! What's with Scotty's roommate? He just made a pass at Laura. This is depressing. I think Lamont has the same thing I've got."

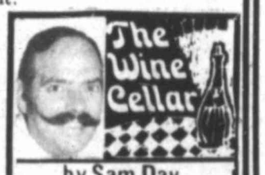
"You're being ridiculous," I said as I flipped to As the World Turns. He yelled again, "What's the matter with Karen? I think she's unstable."

"She has amnesia.,'

"Could you fill me in on Guiding Light? This doesn't make any sense."

"Hill is Hillary's real father and has led a double life for years with Bert Simone. Mike just told Bert that Bill is alive after Bert agreed to vacacion with Steve. Georgene broke into Rita,s apartment since Evie is blind and wasn't sure anyone was there. Jackie was annoyed to learn that Alan thinks highly of Brandy since she and Justin were living together. Now will You let me get some work done? You're worse than a child."

A few minutes later, he appeared in the kitchen fully dressed. "Well," he said, "I took your advice. I grew up. Took me six soap operas and five hours, but it was worth it."



by Sam Day

There are several different kinds of wine glasses, each one designed for a specific wine's taste and bouquet. All of these glasses are smaller in capacity and shape than the water goblet. Although it is the correct European custom to serve each wine in its appropriate glass, it is quite acceptable to use one type of glass for all wines. The only exceptions are champagne and sherry, which still require their own glasses. No matter which wine you are serving, remember that the glass should only be filled slightly beyond half full.

Fill your glasses with fine wine from IMPERIAL LIQUORS, 3209 W. Wadley, 694-4256; we have an outstanding selection for you to choose from. We also feature a full spectrum of liquors and party goods and perhaps the biggest selection of imported beers in town. Be sure to say hello to the friendly moustache in our drive-up window. Open: 10-9 Mon-Sat.

Handy Hint:
Juice glasses are either stemmed or have a flat base.

French cultivate elusive truffle

By DON COOK
The Los Angeles Times

PARIS — The French triumphantly disclosed Friday that they have succeeded in cultivating the elusive truffle — and this news will probably be greeted in the gourmet world as a bigger break through than splitting the atom.

After 20 years of research and experiment, the French National Institute for Agronomic Research (INRA) announced that it had managed to produce 20 truffles by seeding the roots of nut trees with truffle spores. The truffle is a pungent wild black fungus, usually the size of a small potato, which until now has simply been one of nature's wonders, sniffed out of the soil in oak forest by trained dogs or pigs.

INRA scientists produced their first cultivated truffle in December, but just to be sure of their process, waited until they had retrieved another 19 before making any announcement. The process will be patented immediately.

It comes not a moment too soon. Top-quality natural truffles are currently selling for around $50 a pound. The supply is going down while the demand in gourmet cooking has been going up around the world. Truffles are most familiar in pate de foie gras, but they are also used in cooking game, in sauces and meat — and anybody who has ever eaten a dish of French scrambled eggs with truffles (oeufs brouilles sur truffes) is unlikely to forget it.

France's most productive truffle-producing region is around the town of Cahor in the southwest. Before World War I, Cahor dogs and pigs were rooting out 300 tons of truffles a year. By the 1950s this was down to about 100 tons, and in this decade the yield has averaged less than 50 tons. Meanwhile, the perigord truffle region to the north of Cahor has been pretty much worked out, although its oak forests could of course begin to produce again after a rest.

INRA scientists say that their first cultivated truffles took about three and a half years to grow — as against six years for the wild truffles. Their first cultivated tuffle weighed 170 grams, or about 5 ounces. They are not quoting a price, nor is there any assessment yet of quality.

Cleaning leaves keeps house plants healthy

By TOM STEVENSON
The Washington Post

One of the most important things you can do for your house plants at this time of the year is to sponge and clean their leaves once or twice a month.

It is especially desirable for foliage plants such as the split leaf philodendron (Monstera deliciosa), rubber plant (Ficus elastica), umbrella tree (Schefflera) and mother-in-law plant (Dieffenbachia).

Washing the leaves accomplishes two things: it opens up the pores and helps to prevent a buildup of insects.

Two kinds of insects are likely to be present on plants in the warm, dry atmosphere of the home: spider mites and aphids (plant lice). They suck juice from the plapt and heavily infested plants become stunted and may die.

Because of their tiny size, detection of spider mites is not easy for the unwary and they may do a lot of damage before being discovered. When searching for them, it is wise to use a magnifying glass.

They multiply rapidly, usually on the underside of the leaf. If there are many of them, silky webbing may be visible.

Aphids come in several colors, they are larger than mites and easier to detect. They tend to cluster on the undersides of leaves or on young tender leaves and stems of flower buds.

To wash the leaves, use a sponge and water at room temperature with a small amount of very mild soap added (no detergent). A soft cloth can be used instead of a sponge.

Both insects and their eggs will be removed by this teatment if it is thorough. It may not be completely effective against a heavy infestation but repeated treatments will take care of it.

The molded Empire bodice of net was covered with lace appliques and had a Queen Anne neckline and long fitted sleeves. The satin A-line skirt had shirred fullness and ended in a full chapel train. A modified Juliet cap of matching pearl embroidered Alencon lace held a veil of silk illusion.

The bridegroom is owner of Professional Business Consultants, an accounting firm in Austin. He has a bachelor of business administration degree in accounting from The University of Texas-Austin. The bride received a bachelor of arts degree in English from St. Edward's University.

DEAR ABBY

Love pays large dividends, if partner follows checklist

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR READERS: Tuesday, Feb. 14, is St. Valentine's Day, so don't say you weren't tipped off in time to come up with some flowers, an appropriate card, or some thoughtful little token of your affection for HIM—or HER.

But being lovable is a full-time job, so if you want to make yourself lastingly lovable (and absolutely irreplaceable), post this checklist where you can see it daily:

FEMALES:

Never ASK him if he loves you. But do tell him often that YOU love HIM. (And if you can back it up with several good reasons why, lay it on!)

Never criticize him in public. But if you have a criticism, be sure it's constructive and offered in the spirit of helpfulness and love—never in anger or as a put-down.

Clip newspaper and magazine articles that might help him in his work—or perhaps a cartoon or some amusing item you think he'll enjoy.

Every man needs a desk, a cupboard, a closet or nook to call his own. Don't try to "tidy it up," even though it's a mess of clutter and an eyesore.

If he likes your hair a certain way—wear it that way. (At least when you're with him.)

If he eats (or drinks) too much, don't nag him about it. But do remind him in a loving way that you wish he'd take better care of his body because you want him to be around for a long, long time.

Develop some interests other than him. The more outside interests you have, the more fascinating he'll find you.

Don't quiz him about where he's been or whom he saw when you weren't along.

Never lie to him. If there's something you don't want to tell him, reserve the right to refuse to answer, but if you tell him something, be sure it's the truth.

MALES:

If you like the way she looks, cooks, dresses, walks, talks, smells—let her know it. You can't compliment a woman too much. All women need constant reassuring.

Remember your manners, and show her the same respect and courtesy you give to those you don't know as well.

Tell her she's prettier than her mother.

In addition to remembering her on all the traditional gift-giving occasions (her birthday, your anniversary, Christmas and Valentine's Day), surprise her with a small gift for no special reason.

If you've had an exceptionally wonderful evening, on the following morning, send her a single rose—or make it a daisy—they don't tell.

Tell her she is absolutely the most wonderful person in the world—and she'll believe YOU are!

Now—both of you—if you want to be loved—love! It pays enormous dividends—and it won't cost you a dime.

Home economists use sauce recipe

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

DEAR CECILY: As you know, every one in my family loves chocolate sauce — the kind made with bitter chocolate. I usually make it by ear and sometimes it comes out smooth, sometimes sugary. If you give me a good recipe I'll try to put it in a place where I can find it when I need it. — YOUR NIECE.

DEAR MIMI: The following recipe for Bittersweet Chocolate Sauce is one that the home economists with a large chocolate company choose to use in their own homes. That's putting a recipe to a test!

I know your kids like chocolate sauce over chocolate or coffee ice cream. But sometimes, for a company dessert, you might want to serve this sauce over ice cream in meringue shells. It's especially good that way. — C. B.

BITTERSWEET CHOCOLATE SAUCE

2 squares (2 ounces) unsweetened chocolate, each broken in half
1/3 cup water
½ cup sugar
3 tablespoons butter, cut in 3 pats
½ teaspoon vanilla

Put the chocolate and water in a heavy 1½-quart saucepan. Over low heat, with a wide rubber spatula, stir around the bottom and the sides of the pan until every bit of chocolate has melted and blended with the water and the mixture is thick — 3 to 5 minutes. Add the sugar. Continue stirring constantly as previously over the low heat until every grain of sugar has melted — 3 to 5 minutes. Off heat, stir in the butter; if it doesn't melt rather quickly, put the pan back over very low heat and stir until it does. Off heat, stir in the vanilla. The sauce will not be blazing hot; it will not harden over ice cream. Serve at once. Makes a generous ¾ cup.

Timmy Edds, W. G. Hadley repeat vows

Wilshire Park Baptist Church was the setting for the marriage at 7 p.m. Saturday of Timmy Kay Edds and Wendell Glen Hadley.

Parents of the couple are Mrs. B. D. Lott and Don Edds of Midland and Mr. and Mrs. Bill Hadley of Star Route A.

Tammy Howell of Irving, sister of the bride, was matron of honor. The bridesmaids were Ann King and Paula Hadley, sister of the bridegroom.

David Smith of Eunice was best man. The groomsmen were Morgan Howell of Irving, brother-in-law of the bride; Terry Edds, brother of the bride. The ushers were Richard Dunivan and Greg Smith.

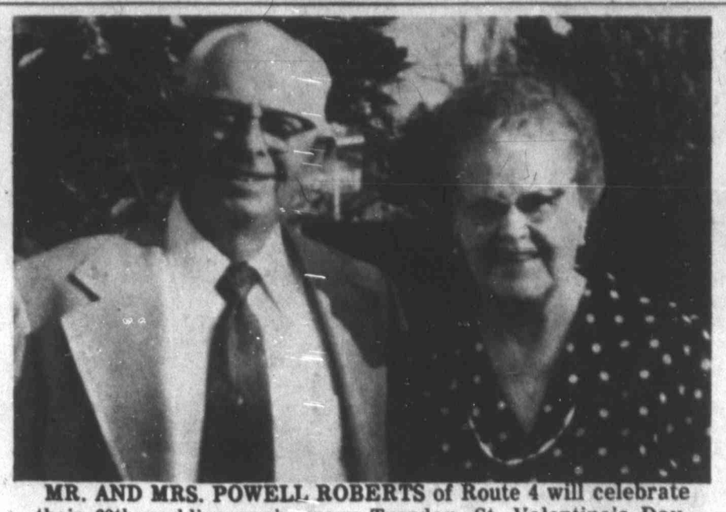
The bride wore a traditional gown of sheer bridal crepe enhanced with imported Belgium lace and bridal pearls. The fitted bodice featured a embroidered sheer Brussels lace yoke designed as a cameo highlighted with pearls and iridescents. Lace formed a wedding ring neckline and bishop sleeves with panels of lace gathered to deep cuffs. The A-line skirt featured two lace panels and ended in a double flounce hemline. Fullness in the back formed the chapel train.

Her chapel-length veil of French illusion was caught to a matching bridal hat overlaid with lace and traced with pearls. An illusion bow with long streamers flowed down the back. She carried a cascade of white Cattleya orchids enhanced with stephanotis and springeri fern.

Mrs. Wendell Glen Hadley

A reception was held in the home of the bride's mother before the couple left on a wedding trip to Ruidoso, N.M. They will reside at the Mark Apartments, where the bride is the manager. She is attending Midland College. The bridegroom is a graduate of Midland High School and is a welder with A&A Welders.

Out-of-city guests included the bride's grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Joe Gribble of Temple.



MR. AND MRS. POWELL ROBERTS of Route 4 will celebrate their 60th wedding anniversary Tuesday, St. Valentine's Day. They were honored recently with a reception given by their children and their spouses. They are Mr. and Mrs. James McKandles of Lubbock, Mr. and Mrs. Wayne Roberts of Austin and Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Sparks of Midland. Mr. and Mrs. Roberts were married in Coleman.

Man beats raw egg record

SEATTLE (AP) — Dan Wood, 23, says he has the secret formula for eating a record number of raw eggs — "the trick was to expand my stomach."

That done, Wood slurped downed 50 raw eggs in an hour last Friday in what he hopes will be recognized as a world record.

The Guinness Book of World Records lists one man who ate 25 raw eggs in 9.6 seconds and another who ate 44 hard-boiled eggs in 30 minutes.

Documentation of Wood's 50egg feat, witnessed by about 20 friends and at least one reporter, will be forwarded to the Guinness people.

Only grade AA large eggs bought at random from a local supermarket, were used. They were cracked into a cup two at a time, stirred and then gulped down.

Wood said the stirring otherwise the yolk sticks was important "because

How much does snow weigh?

CINCINNATI (AP) — The recent heavy snowfall has brought out the mathematician in Butch March, who set out to calulate how much weight there could be in all the snow that fell here in January.

First he went to City Hall and found that the total area inside the city limits was 78.088 square miles.

Then he called the National Weather Service and found that 31.5 inches of snow fell in January.

Finally, the 22-year-old architect made a visit to the public library and determined that the average weight of a cubic foot of snow was 15 pounds.

With these standards, he sat down and calculated that the total weight of last month's snowfall was 42,859,067.33 tons.

Still not satisfied, March shed a little more light on the subject when he wondered what would happen if all that snow melted at the same time.

He claims the answer is that there would be a whole lot of wetness with 10,714,766,830 gallons of water moving around town.

Dry hands best advice

COLLEGE STATION—Using electricity safely means staying "dry"—and following other precautions, warns Dr. Carolyn McKinney, a family resource management specialist.

In touching an appliance, or to switch it "on" or "off," make sure hands are dry, and stand in a dry place.

Wet hands or a puddle of water on the floor make it easy for electricity to travel through a person, the specialist says.

Dr. McKinney is with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, The Texas A&M University System.

Following the same rule, do not touch an appliance at the same time you touch water or plumbing or any metal object, the specialist cautions.

Single parent tries alone

COLLEGE STATION—A young widowed parent must go it alone, facing all sorts of unfamiliar responsibilities in a time of shock, grief and mourning, yet there is research-based advice that can help, says Dorthy Taylor, a family life education speciliast.

It places special importance on family closeness and friends, she says.

A widow now has to manage all the family affairs, perhaps take a job, seek financial assistance, or go to live with or near her parents again.

A widower has to arrange adequate care for his motherless family while he is at work, and often he must cope with unfamiliar household duties as well, the speciliast points out.

Miss Taylor is with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, The Texas A&M University System.

When childrren have been motherless a short time, it's best to keep them at home in faimliar surroundings, close to friends and other members of the family. That way, the children won't feel their whole world has suddenly vanished, the specialist advises.

Wine consumption rises in world

The pleasures of wine have become so popular that frequently new wine drinkers and nonwine drinkers alike wonder what it's all about. I wonder, too, as I observe wine consumption rising around the world. The U.S. wine market moved beyond 400 million gallons in 1977 while the value of 1976 world exports broke all records at $2.475 billion. The 1975 trade was recorded at $2.246 billion.

For the first time, the United States has moved ahead of Switzerland to become the fifth-ranking importer and it shouldn't be too long before the United States moves to the top. White wine is fast becoming a kind of "national beverage" — a glass of white has replaced cocktails as the social beverage.

What is it about the grape that has spurred prestige tasting-group tastings, creation of lavish cellars, wine auctions with outlandish bids, and restaurant wine lists featuring ancient bottles at prices that could well pay an executive chef's annual salary?

The wonderment never ceases. Gallo sells in excess of 25 million cases of wine per year. Pouilly Fuisse, an inferior white Burgundy, sells at $8 to $10 per bottle with ease, and Manischewitz Wine Co. commemorates its 100 millionth bottle of cream-finished wine.

Major newspapers throughout the country feature wine columnists, sometimes two; wine books are in generous supply and wine classes are held everywhere from colleges to restaurants.

Can it be that American travel to wine-oriented European countries has done the trick? Is it oneupmanship Americans are looking for with the battle cry, "I know my Cabernet while my neighbor doesn't."?

Is it the interest in wine as medicine? In Science Digest, Theodore Berland wrote that "wine is the oldest medicine — in ancient days, wine was medicine for all ills." Today many a man is again deciding it is a more pleasant remedy than the wonder pills.

20 years of frustration end for Laser inventor

By RUDY MAXA
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — When a Bronx candy story opened one winter morning two decades ago, a 37-year-old physicist rushed in and asked the owner — who also served as the neighborhood notary public — to apply the date and his seal to the pages of a worn, gray notebook.

Fifteen of those pages were filled with a longhand proposal for a device to produce a revolutionary, concentrated beam of light the physicist named "a LASER: Light Amplification by Stimulated Emission of Radiation."

"All the pieces had suddenly come together, and I saw in a flash how to make it work," recalls Gordon Gould, whose unsuccessful attempts to fall asleep on October, 1957, night led to the start of a billion-dollar industry.

"My wife and I lived in a little apartment, and I know I jumped up — I think I only had on my pajama tops — and I started writing it all down at the desk in the next room."

For Gould, a pleasant, chain-smoking habitual tinkerer, that night began an irony-filled quest for the development of the laser as well as a struggle for recognition as a father of the light that ran be used to heal, destroy and communicate.

Several months ago, after 20 years of legal wrestling, the U.S. Patent Office awarded the Washington-based inventor a license for the laser, entitling him to ask royalties of hundreds of companies such as GTE and Bell Labs that make regular use of lasers.

In a ceremony today Gould will be named Inventor of the Year by Commerce Secretary Juanita Kreps. Gordon Gould, it appears, is about to win fame and riches.

When he was growing up in Pittsburgh, as the first of three sons born to the editor of Scholastic Magazine, young Gordon disassembled with fascination the Erector Set toy buildings his mother built for him.

Soon Gordon was doing the construction while his mother assumed the wrecker's duties. From the first day he thought about a career, Gould knew he wanted to be an inventor.

His degrees in physics came easily from Union College. Yale and — following a stint during World War II working on the secret Manhattan Project that developed America's A-bomb — Gould began work toward a Ph.D. at Columbia.

There, in the mid-1950s, he studied microwave spectroscopy, the interaction of atoms with radio waves commonly called microwaves. That dovetailed nicely with his previous work at Yale studying optical spectroscopy, or the interaction of atoms with light.

The director of Columbia's radiation laboratory in which Gould worked was Dr. Charles Townes, inventor in 1951 of the MASER, an acronym for "microwave amplification by stimulated emission of radiation."

The concept of stimulating powerful wavelengths of light, instead of only radio signals, was "very much in the air," according to a Science magazine article on the subject.

Gould's late-night inspiration to perfect the process preceded by a year the publication of a paper on the subject by Townes and his brother-in-law, Arthur Schawlow. But it was the latter team who patented the concept first; though Gould had made certain his original notes were legally dated by the candy store notary, a visit to a patent attorney's office left him with the mistaken impression that he had to have a working laser in hand before receiving a patent.

In hopes of receiving the necessary money to build that working model, Gould joined a small New York research firm, TRG, and applied for a $300,000 military contract.

The Department of Defense seized on the concept of a "death ray," a shaft of light so intense it could penetrate a tank's armor, not to mention sizzle a human as effortlessly as a strip of bacon; instead of $300,000, the military gave Gould and TRG $1 million.

But the government decreed the project classified, stamping Gould's notebooks secret. And a bit of Gould's past returned to haunt him.

During his first marriage Gould and his wife had attended a Marxist study group run by an FBI informer. Although Gould had renounced Marxism during the 1948 Czechoslovakian coup — "That knocked the blinders off my eyes and shortly thereafter my wife and I parted ways" — he had lost his Manhattan Project jobs because of his suspicious leanings. And now the military denied him a security clearance.

Gould became an outsider unable even to look in as his notebooks became the working basis for other TRG scientists assigned to develop his beloved invention.

Gould is sitting in the modest Gaithersburg, Md., office of the 10-person firm he helped start in 1973. Optelecom has government contracts to develop lasers for night-vision illumination and has also developed fiber optical cables for use in the next generation of heavy-assault weapons.

A portable missile can trail the tiny, clear cable connected to a TV camera in the nose of the weapon. From a remote position, a soldier can steer the missile accurately.

Now, a green sport shirt buttoned to the neck, wavy hair and hands that always hold a low-nicotine cigarette, Gould looks more the professor than the outraged inventor.

"Certainly I felt a terrible sense of frustration," he says. "I'm a person of strong emotion, but I don't hate people. It's an objective frustration instead of an emotional one ..."

He pauses, then adds tightly, "Oh, hell, there was emotion there, too, what am I kidding myself for?"

Rage would be understandable. After his dash to the candy store, Gould began devoting all his spare time to the laser, a point that would later aid him with his many legal appeals for patents.

He quit his bridge club. He gave his sailboat to a brother. His second marraige began to suffer and eventually ended. He neglected his Ph.D. work, and Gould still does not have that advanced degree.

While Gould worked on other projects for TRG, his employer spent $250,000 pursuing the rights to the laser patent. In 1970 the firm was acquired by Control Data, and Gould reacquired his patent rights and proceeded to spend another $100,000 in legal fees to try to establish his claim as the first off the laser line.

In 1974, his resources nearly exhausted, Gould teamed with a New York technology licensing firm, Refac, which took on legal adversaries as huge as Bell Laboratories in exchange for a 50-50 royalty-split agreement.

Last October Gould won. Now Refac is offering companies that manufacture lasers covered by Gould's patents a royalty structure of 3.5 percent of gross sales if they agree within 90 days of notification by Refac.

While the heads of some laser firms are happy to see an old friend's vindication, others aren't thrilled at the prospect of paying him a percentage of their sales. (Recalcitrant companies face lawsuits, and the industry is watching a crucial suit Refac recently brought on behalf of Gould against a Florida firm.)

One reason for the industry's displeasure: a patent runs for 17 years, and just a couple of years ago manufacturers stopped having to pay royalties on the patent granted in 1958 to Townes and Schawlow.

For Gould, who is now 57, the 20-year delay has at least one benefit: "Suppose I had realized all I had to do was write a patent application instead of making a working laser," he says. "The patent would have run out by now. But instead it's just beginning."

The $1 billion laser industry could grow to five times that size by 1984, and Gould's royalty checks should keep pace. He makes $45,000 a year as vice president of Optelecom, and he intends to apply his eventual riches to research, though a sailboat with a berth in the Caribbean will be a high priority.

"I get my biggest satisfaction out of research," says Gould. "My most important things right now is, I have ideas that will lead to cost-competitive ways of generating electric power from solar energy. I'd spend most of my money this way and so I can do what I want to do instead" — and he says this with the smile of a free man — "instead of what the Department of Defense thinks it needs."

Carter listens to Washington whiz kid

WASHINGTON (AP) — On the russet suede walls of his office, two blocks from the White House, Pat Caddell has an Andy Warhol silk-screen print of Jimmy Carter.

It's a souvenir of the man he helped get elected, of the man he continues to advise. It also reminds Carter's 27-year-old pollster of a Warhol comment that he finds appropriate: Everybody is famous for 15 minutes.

"My favorite saying to everybody in this administration is that but for 10,000 votes in Ohio and Hawaii, where would any of us be?" Caddell says.

He's had to answer that question as much as anyone, coping with accusations that he's profiteering from his Carter connection. His polling business expanded into "seven figures" by his own account in the last year with such clients as Exxon and Citicorp.

And he's had to deal with his celebrity status as the whiz kid, the bachelor about town, the Carter confidant.

The limelight was especially bright last May when a 51-page memo Caddell prepared in December 1976 was made public. There he warned Carter that "too many good people have been defeated because they tried to substitute substance for style."

Caddell handled the ensuing press uproar with his usual self-deprecation and humor. He appeared at parties wearing a T-shirt showing his picture and the slogan "There's no substance here."

Caddell says the quotation was "taken out of context and distorted. All I was saying was that the presidency had been battered so badly that one of the problems Carter had coming into office was how best to restore the credibility of the presidency and build up the kind of confidence in his leadership he needed to lead on important issues."

Caddell was the mastermind behind suggestions like the use of fireside chats, town meetings, frequent press conferences and fewer "imperial frills" of the presidency, like limousines, to maintain public favor.

Caddell's climb to the White House inner circle started when he was 17 and working for the Speaker of the House in Florida. He made a model projection on how to predict election returns, called the results correctly and started his reputation as a political Wunderkind.

While at Harvard from 1968 to 1972, where he wrote his thesis on the changes in Southern politics, Caddell and some friends formed Cambridge Survey Research, Inc.

Democratic presidential candidate George McGovern signed Caddell, then 21, as his pollster. It was during that campaign that Caddell met Jimmy Carter in an Atlanta kitchen. Before long he was analyzing the mood of the nation for yet another long-shot candidate.

"I just try to be helpful and offer some outside perspective to what's happening," Caddell says. "A lot of the time he takes my advice. A lot of the time he doesn't. My influence is that if I feel strongly about something he'll listen to me if it makes sense ...

"Carter uses surveys as a tool to help him understand how best to lead the country. The public really does want leadership. If coherent, real arguments are presented to them, they will follow."

Caddell says he communicates with Carter about once a week, either by telephoning him directly, writing memos or going through Tim Kraft, the president's appointments secretary.

"It's a very informal relationship these days," Caddell says. "It really goes in cycles. I think we'll really be busy this year because it's an election year and as head of the Democratic Party, the president will want to be involved."

Caddell is doing polls for at least 12 candidates in the 1978 elections, including Sen. Floyd Haskell of Colorado, Gov. Michael Dukakis of Massachusetts and Sen. Wendell Anderson of Minnesota.

Ringing the bell

With BOB TIEUEL

The Black Experience—Give me My Flowers While I Live: Many of the ole time bellringers from over the nation will remember with pride C. Felton "Zip" Gayles, now retired in Muskogee, Okla. He was one of the country's outstanding black coaches in the 50s and 60s. It was during these years that black colleges and univeristies were for the most part, the only avenues for higher education open for young blacks.

"Zip," as he was affectionately known by his friends and those who loved him, produced one of the nation's outstanding football teams for a number of years while he coached both the football and basketball teams at Langston University in Oklahoma, where as a student we first met him. Just recently he was presented the "Laurel Wreath" by Kappa Alpha Psi Fraternity at its Grand Conclave in Denver, Colo.

The "Laurel Wreath" is the fraternity's highest award for achievement; this was only the 26th time in 62 years, that this award has been made. Gayles was a member of the second class of Elder W. Diggs Laureates and becomes the second member in the history (nationally) of Kappa Alpha Psi Fraternity to have earned the two most coveted honors that the fraternity can bestow.

Enshrined in Morehouse College's Athletic Hall of Fame, Gayles was an athletic mentor of unparalleled achievements. A graduate of Morehouse College, he has served as a football and or basketball coach at Tennessee State, Arkansas State, Wiley College, and retired from Langston University after having served 35 years in this last post.

During these coaching years, "Zip" fielded eight conference and two national championship teams in football and 11 conference and two national championship teams in basketball. Many athletes, coached by Gayles, later went on to play professional football and basketball. One of the more well known is Marcus Haynes, the world's greatest basketball dribbler for many years. Coach Gaynes was inducted into the Oklahoma Athletic Hall of Fame in 1974. He is a life member of Kappa Alpha Psi, retiring in 1966, moving to Muskogee, where he lives with his wife, Mrs. Maxine Gayles.

A bit of History for Black Heritage Month: "Historians today can only guess at the reasons why the U.S. War Department sent mostly black soldiers commanded by white officers, west to reclaim the New Mexico and Texas frontiers from maurading Indians and piratical Mexican traders following the end of the Civil War. Officers like Lt. Col. William R. Shafter and later Gen. John J. Pershing knew the tough mettle of black soldiers, their ability to endure.

"Black soldiers, 180,000 of them, had fought in the Civil War, 33,380 of them giving their lives for the Union cause. The black units, including the 24th Infantry and 9th and 10th Calvery Regiments began moving west after the war ended. They would spend 24 years in New Mexico, Texas, the Dakotas, Nebraska, Kansas, Colorado, Oklahoma, Utah and Arizona as they paved the way for the advances of American civilization." A friend and a brother to mny West Texans and New Mexicans was laid to rest recently in East Texas. V. L. Brown Sr. left his image in West Texas as a builder and a carpenter. It was V. L. Brown Jr. who preached the funeral of his father at his dad's request. At one time in the history of West Texas, the V. L. Brown's name was a household word in Odessa, Amarillo and many other sections of the Rolling Plains. Our sympathy to V. L. # Cold remedies mostly worthless

Dear Dr. Solomon: Do any of those cold remedies you see in drugstores actually help? I don't want to waste money on a lot of stuff that is no good.—Liz T.

Dear Liz: So-called cold remedies can make you feel a little better sometimes, but they don't prevent, shorten or cure the cold itself. They do not provide much return for the hundreds of millions of dollars that Americans spend on them each year.

There seem countless brands on the market. Altogether, however, these remedies contain only about 90 active ingredients used in various combinations. Experts have just completed a thorough study of these basic ingredients for the Food and Drug Administration, and here are some of their conclusions.

—Cough medicines: Some help, but the FDA expert panel warns that they should only be used for the temporary relief of minor symptoms. Remember that a cough may indicate a serious condition which you should check with your doctor. And do not try to suppress a cough brought on by smoking, asthma or emphysema. You need it to clear your bronchial tubes.

—Nasal decongestants: There are a number of ingredients which help unblock your nose. But here again, you must be careful. The decongestants work by tightening up enlarged blood vessels However, if you use them too long or too frequently they will do just the opposite. Do not use decongestants for more than three days. And do not take oral drugs for nasal decongestion if you have high blood pressure, heart disease, diabetes or thyroid problems—unless your doctor says it is OK.

—Expectorants: These are supposed to help you cough up thick mucus. The FDA panel didn't find a single ingredient in all the products tested that was safe and effective for this purpose.

—Antihistamines: There is very little evidence that they are useful against cold symptoms, although they are effective for hay fever.

One important point the FDA experts made is that nine cold remedies out of 10 contain ingredients designed to relieve different symptoms. They said it would make much better sense to have products for a single symptom—as symptoms vary a great deal and come at different times as the cold develops.

The best treatment for a cold is usually just rest, plenty of fluids, a couple of asprins if you are feeling too miserable, and salt in warm water as a gargle. And this is also the cheapest treatment, too.

Webster happy at acceptance

WASHINGTON (AP) — William H. Webster says he was surprised that the Senate confirmed him as the new FBI director as quicky as it did Thursday.

"You're really catching me without a prepared statement," he told a reporter in St. Louis. "I feel really good...I'm very gratified."

Webster, 53, a federal appeals court judge in St. Louis, succeeds Clarence Kelley, who is retiring. Webster's appointment for a 10-year term was confirmed by a voice vote.

During his confirmation hearing last month, Webster pledged to ensure that the FBI would remain within the law and he vowed to prevent political use of the agency's information.

"The bureau is not above the law," he told the Senate Judiciary Committee. "I accept that 100 percent."

Webster was President Carter's second choice to replace Kelley. The president's first selection, U.S. District Judge Frank Johnson of Alabama, withdrew because of medical problems.

The Senate also gave voice vote approval Thursday to the nomination of Frank C. Carlucci to be deputy director of the CIA. Carlucci, U.S. ambassador to Portugal until his nomination, will succeed E. Henry Knoche in the intelligence post.

Film company dumps garbage in New Orleans street

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Paramount Pictures was a day late and a truckload of garbage short, so they dumped their own.

According to sanitation director Patrick Koloski, Paramount wanted to shoot an Ash Wednesday scene for the film "Mardis Gras Weekend" in a French Quarter street full of litter. He agreed to have crews skip their cleanup of St. Louis Street so the shooting could be done. But Paramount didn't shoot Wednesday, so the street was swept.

Koloski said Paramount "called back and asked us to bring a truckload of garbage and spread it on the street for them."

"I said, 'hell, no.' My men are tired, and it just goes against my grain to dump garbage on the street. Plus, it burns me up to have New Orleans depicted as being a dirty city. I told them we weren't going to do it."

Thursday evening, Koloski got a call from a city councilman who was getting complaints about St. Louis Street being full of garbage.

"The Paramount people had gone ahead and dumped the garbage anyway," Koloski said. "It was blowing everywhere."

"I went down to the Quarter, and a policeman was there, ready to arrest them. They had taken their pictures and just left this mess all over. They had one guy attempting to clean it up and they needed about ten."

Fossil algae add new facts to evolution history

By GEORGE ALEXANDER
The Los Angeles Times

Modern science long has accepted as fact the premise that all living things — from bluebirds to blue whales and hyacinths to humans — evolved from the same common ancestor eons ago.

But what was that forebear of everything? And how far back into the earth's 4.6-billion-year-old history did that ancestor go? When did life begin to branch out into different forms? And what was the impetus for this diversification?

Questions such as these, and others about the origins and early stages of life long have fascinated scientists. But answers have been difficult to come by, because the fossil record — the rocky imprint of age-old plants and animals — abruptly disappeared roughly 570 million years ago.

TRILOBITES, those hard-shelled, segmented forerunners of modern insects, spiders and crabs, used to be among the oldest creatures known to science; these are the animals whose fossil remains are dated at about 570 million years ago.

No one has ever suggested that trilobites might have been the first living things on earth, because they are far too complex and too evolved for that. But why did the organisms from which they evolved not leave their own fossil marks in rocks?

Now, as a result of research done in the past decade, some of it only in the last year or two, scientists are discovering that:

—Living organisms arose quite early in the earth's history, possibly within 1 billion years or so after the planet itself was formed some 4.6 billion years ago.

—Life probably started up and died off several times at several places on the globe, eons ago, before some self-perpetuating organisms managed to establish themselves.

—The first living things were extremely simple cells that may not have done more than exchange a few necessary compounds with the primordial environment.

—Like a scratched phonograph record, life seems to have gotten stuck in a groove of single-celled organisms and stayed that way for a long, long time. Unicellular algae and bacteria appear to have had the world all to themselves for perhaps as long as 3 billion years — before multicelled creatures emerged some 570 million years ago.

—When multicelled organisms, called "metazoans," finally did evolve, they did so with remarkable rapidity, possibly within a few million, or at most a few tens of millions, of years.

THESE NEW INSIGHTS into the origins and evolution of life are based upon a continuing series of discoveries of microscopic algae and bacteria which flourished during the Precambrian Era, that period of time from the earth's formation 4.6 billion years ago down to 570 million years ago.

"In retrospect," said Dr. J. William Schopf, a professor of geology at UCLA and one of the leading figures in the field of paleobiology (ancient life), "it may seem surprising that until just a few years ago, Precambrian fossils were all but unknown."

The problem, Schopf said, was largely one of conditioned thinking. Scientists thought that there ought to be an orderly progression in the sizes and structures of evolving creatures, with smaller and simpler organisms gradually being replaced by larger and more complex ones.

If trilobites of 570 million years ago ranged in size from 3-4 of an inch to 8 inches in length and possessed hard shells that left well-defined imprints in rocks, according to this school of thought, then Precambrian predecessors should be found somewhere that were a little bit smaller, a little bit simpler but that still had some preservable body parts.

BUT THE SEARCH for macroscopic Precambrian creatures — those big enough to be seen by the unaided eye — was fruitless, Schopf and others now believe, because there were none. "Unlike more recent geological times," said the UCLA researcher, "it now appears that the Precambrian was the age of microscopic life."

The first hint of this came in the early 1950s, when the late Prof. Stanley Tyler of the University of Wisconsin and Prof. Elso S. Barghoorn of Harvard University combined forces to solve the mystery of some unusual structures which Tyler had found in rock layers along the shores of northern Lake Superior.

Found in rock formations known as "Gunflint," the structures were imbedded in a dense kind of quartz called chert and ranged in size from a few feet to 20 feet in diameter. But their most striking characteristic was a stacked, layered, dome-like configuration not too different from that of a pile of canned potato chips.

WHEN TYLER FIRST peered at samples of the Gunflint structures under a microscope, he saw tiny objects which resembled fungi. Enter Barghoorn, a Harvard botanist and expert on fungi, having spent several years during World War II trying to find ways of countering the fungal growths that were destroying the binoculars of American military forces in the Pacific theater.

Barghoorn was flabbergasted when he first looked through a microscope at Gunflint samples. He too saw the tiny, hollow bubbles that Tyler had spotted, but he knew they were not fungi. "I realized that what I was looking at," he recalled many years later, "were organisms that looked exactly like fossil algae."

Not too long thereafter, another scientist used the then-new technique of radioactive dating to pin an age of 1.9 billion years to the Gunflint microfossils (microscopic fossils).

This was almost three times older than the oldest creatures — some 700-million-year-old worms which left fossil marks in a North Carolina cave — found by science up until then. The Gunflint bubbles were, in 1954, the oldest example of life known to scientists, if indeed the bubbles were the fossilized remains of long-ago algae.

Called the "carbon-12-carbon-13" ratio, it is a sensitive measurement of the relative amounts of these two isotopes (or variants) in a sample. Carbon-12 being the lighter-weight isotope and thus being preferentially accumulated by living organisms, a comparatively high concentration of it in a sample of uncertain biological background is taken as proof positive that the carbon in the sample was derived from once-living things.

THE GUNFLINT SAMPLES had much more carbon-12 in them than carbon-13 and so became accepted by paleobiologists as incontrovertible evidence of Precambrian life.

The domed structures which Tyler had found on the shores of Lake Superior several years earlier now could be explained; they were "stromatolites," or algal reefs. Tiny microorganisms had built them layer by layer, eons ago, just as coral reefs are built today.

(Stromatolites, incidentally, are not necessarily archaic. Scientists now know that algae still build them today in those highly-specialized environments, such as hot springs or super-salty marshes, where algae-eating predators are absent. Throughout most of the Precambrian Era, there were no predators and so algae could erect their reefs unmolested).

The Tyler-Barghoorn finding, first published in abbreviated form in the mid 1950s and later in a definitive 1965 report, rejuvenated a field that was beginning to look almost as defunct as the material it dealt with.

It showed that life had been in existence for much longer than most scientists had been willing to concede up until then (the consensus view in the 1950s, Schopf said, was that life began around 1 billion or 1.2 billion years ago.)

Moreover, the Gunflint discovery triggered a rash of new investigations by other paleobiologists. If microfossils were the name found in 1.9-billion-year-old rocks, were there any to be found in 2.3-billion-year-old rocks? Or 3-billion-year-old rocks?

GEOLOGISTS were here and there turning up rock formations that old throughout the late 1950s and early 1960s, using the same radioactive dating techniques that had established the age of the Gunflint formation. Where such very ancient rocks were, the paleobiologists reasoned, so too might there be very ancient organisms.

Finally, the work of Tyler and Barghoorn fired the imaginations of many young students and attracted them to the field of paleobiology. One such person was Schopf.

While an undergraduate majoring in geology at Oberlin College in Ohio during the early 1960s, he had become interested in the evolution of life. He had read Charles Darwin's "Origins of Species" and George Gaylord Simpson's "The Meaning of Evolution," and by the time he entered his junior year, he had decided to become a paleobiologist.

He entered Harvard University in 1964 as a graduate student and, during the course of the next four years, earned both his master's and doctoral degrees. His adviser there was Barghoorn and, together, the two carried out some interesting investigations on Precambrian microfossils.

Barghoorn, in the early 1960s, had gathered some coal-like rocks from a South African region on the border between the Republic of South Africa and Swaziland. The formation, known as "Fig Tree" after a nearby town of the same name, had been previously exposed by mining operations and geologists had dated the rocks' age as being in excess of 3 billion years.

WHEN THE OLDER scientist and the young graduate student peered at wafer-thin sections of the Fig Tree rocks under microscopes, they found a large number of bubbles similar to, but larger than, those that had been seen in the Gunflint rocks. They also found large numbers of tiny rod-shaped objects, less than 1 micron long and less than 1-3rd of a micron in diameter. (One micron is about 1-25,000ths of an inch).

Because of (the) similarities to algae and bacteria—there is a class of bacteria which is in fact, rod-shaped — and because of the carbon-12-carbon-13 ratio, Barghoorn and Schopf believed that the Fig Tree objects were genuine microfossils.

And when subsequent radioactive tests placed an age of 3.2 billion years on the Fig Tree formation, Barghoorn laid claim to having found the oldest remains of life on earth.

Last October, Barghoorn revealed that he had gone back again to that South African well and, in a formation only 30 miles or so from where he had collected the Fig Tree rocks, had found another assemblage of bubbles which appear to be older still — around 3.4 billion years old.

Although some of his paleobiological colleagues are withholding judgment on these particular claims — scientists, as a group, tend to be cautious and conservative when confronted with findings that would extend or diminish the boundaries of their fields — most do accept the general premise that life probably arose from nonbiological processes between 3 billion and 3 1-2 billion years ago.

J. William Schopf, UCLA geologist, with sample of stromatolite, an ancient reef-like structure made by algae billions of years ago. Sediments became attached to the algae, entombing and preserving them as microscopic fossils for the ages. (Los Angeles Times Photo.)

Indeed, explained Schopf, he and others in the field believe that life may have started up, died off, restarted, died again, and restarted many times before becoming established on the primordial earth.

ALL THE INGREDIENTS for life are thought to have been present on the early earth: water; ammonia; nitrogen; carbon dioxide; methane and other compounds; heat from volcanic eruptions; and ultraviolet radiation from the sun.

At the moment, it is difficult to say flatly how life originated on earth. But many scientists in the field regard as credible the fact that those first living objects may have just qualified for the descriptive term "living" by the slimmest of margins. They were probably aggregates of molecules, including amino acids, which interacted with their surrounding environment, taking in this compound and ejecting that, Schopf explained.

Nationalism thrives in odd place

By MURRAY SEEGER
The Los Angeles Times

BERLIN — German nationalism, a centuries-old force which has regularly disturbed the peace of central Europe, is on the rise in an unlikely place: Communist East Germany.

East German officials have begun a massive campaign to celebrate 30 years of alliance with the Soviet Union, but Western analysts have detected many spontaneous examples of popular rejection of the official line.

The overwhelming majority of East Germany's 17 million residents, according to Western diplomats, identify themselves with the 61 million Germans living in West Germany rather than with the East Europeans to whom they are expected to show loyalty through Moscow-sponsored "socialist internationalism."

"The Communist Party is trying to counter this nationalism," a Western resident of East Berlin observed. "They are really worried about it. They are trying to promote the slogan 'East Germany, My Fatherland.'"

The signs of German nationalism range from minor, unexpected manifestations to overt actions directed against the pervasive presence of Soviet troops. Nationalist sentiment also cropped up recently in a manifesto distributed by a dissident political group.

East Germany includes such centers of the old German culture as Leipzig, Dresden and Weimar, and the Communist officials balance an obvious attachment to traditional culture against fears that such ties will disturb their relations with Moscow.

At a recent recital in East Berlin, for example, the popular West German baritone Herman Prey sang a group of songs based on poems by Josef von Eichendor, a well-known 18th century author.

"When he came to the line, Deutschland mein Deutschland,' the audience interrupted with applause," an East Berliner said.

Music was at the core of a violent clash between youths and police in East Berlin last October. The youngsters had ignored a Soviet band performing in connection with the celebration of East Germany's 28th anniversary and crowded around a rock band. When the police stopped the rock band, the youngsters rioted and started shouting, "Russians get out" and "Germany awake," an old Nazi slogan. Two policemen and a teenage girl were killed in the melee.

People who live outside Berlin in East Germany are likely to say they come "from the zone" instead of the GDR (German Democratic Republic). The term refers to the postwar division of Germany into four Allied occupation zones.

In October 1949 what had been the Soviet Zone of Occupation became the German Democratic Republic, or East Germany. The zones occupied by British, French and American troops were merged to become the Federal Republic of Germany.

West German politicians referred to East Germany as die Zone until 1972, when the two states signed an agreement recognizing each other. The West German Constitution, however, recognizes only a single German citizenship and the right of political asylum, which combine to attract German nationals to migrate not only from East Germany but also from other Communist countries, including the Soviet Union.

Despite construction of the wall separating East and West Berlin in 1961, and fortification of the border between the two Germanys, thousands of residents of the East still attempt to flee each year — even though attempting to escape or helping someone to make the attempt is a serious crime. Last year just over 4,000 succeeded in escaping.

According to Western diplomats, the number of car searches carried out by East German border guards looking for persons escaping to the West increased in the last half-year from an average of six or seven a month to about 300.

The recently published manifesto written by East Germans calling themselves the "Federation of Democratic Communists," calls for among other things, a united Germany.

In East Germany the official line is that East Germany is a Socialist state that with the Soviet army's help has freed itself of all that is bad in German history.

"Our Socialist state embodies the continuity of all that is good, just as it embodies the radical break with all that is reactionary in German history," a proclamation announcing the start of the 30th anniversary said.

The manifesto, however, charged that East Germany is a one-party dictatorship. It urged the withdrawal of all foreign troops from both Germanys and the installation of a multiparty democracy in which left-wing groups would outnumber the "conservative forces."

Farm strikers start switching strategy as spring approaches

By MARC CHARNEY
Associated Press Writer

Two months have passed since a nationwide farm strike was launched to call attention to farmers' complaints of low prices. The strike has drawn farmers plenty of attention — but little else so far.

The strikers now are threatening to cut back planting next spring, but huge cutbacks are not foreseen in a government survey of farmers's spring plans.

And while the Carter administration has acted to bolster farm prices — such as letting farmers put some 1977 grain directly into domestic reserves — it has resisted the strikers' basic demands: to guarantee prices at 100 percent of parity and set up a new regulatory board.

So at this point in the strike, only the strikers' strategy appears to be changing. Leaders, while still demonstrating, lobbying, and seeking support, have scaled down their calls for holding back crops.

Rod Turnbull, spokesman for the Kansas City Board of Trade, was asked early this month about the strike's economic impact.

"We haven't had any shortages of any kind," he said, adding that farmers are "selling cautiously," with prices representing "quite a bit of what you would call stability."

A strike with such unclear effects was not what the movement that calls itself American Agriculture had in mind Dec. 14 when it asked farmers to stop buying goods or producing food.

Thousands of farmers had staged tractor parades. They continued those during the strike, and picketed wholesale and retail outlets. Many went to Washington for a week of lobbying in mid-January.

But perishable goods kept rolling to market — vegetables from California, oranges from Florida, milk and livestock everywhere.

It turned out that those actually "on strike" were primarily grain farmers in the Midwest, West and South — those who have the biggest gripe over low prices this year, but who also have the least impact on prices in winter, and the least at stake in going on strike then.

As spring approaches, strike leaders have switched strategy. Where they originally called on farmers to stop all non-essential activity, they now say their goal is to reduce crop sales by 50 percent, and they are asking farmers to plow under five percent of the winter wheat crop each week until they reach a total of 50 percent.

Whether many farmers will go along is an open questions.

The U.S. Agriculture Department said on Feb. 3 surveys and reports indicate the strike doesn't have significant support among people living on farms.

That conclusion was disputed by American Agriculture leaders, who are sticking to their demand for guarantees of 100 percent of parity — a governmental yardstick used to measure current farm prices against those which farmers received in the years 1910-1914.

The general parity index is now in the 65 percent range, comparable to its level in the 1930s, with grain prices in the 50 percent range.

Theoretically, at full parity, a bushel of produce would bring the same purchasing power as in 1910-1914. Critics of using parity as an index say it fails to take productivity increases into account.

Agriculture Secretary Bob Bergland has expressed sympathy for farmers' problems, but little sympathy for American Agriculture's proposals.

AUSTIN—An attempt by the Burlington Northern railroad to increase freight rates charged for hauling coal to Texas utilities is "the great train robbery of 1978," Atty. Gen. John Hill charged Friday.

Speaking in Forth Worth, gubernatorial candidate Hill said the railroad's rate request with the Interstate Commerce Commission could set precedents eventually costing Texas consumers $250 million by 1985.

Burlington Northern has applied to increase the rate for hauling Wyoming coal to a San Antonio power generating plant from $11.90 per ton to $18.50.

Because the ICC works on "a comparable rate basis", an increase breakthrough in the San Antonio request would probably lead to increases for other cities using power generated by Burlington Northern-supplied coal, Hill's office noted.

Customers in Witchita Falls, and several West Texas cities including Midland, Odessa, Big Spring, Monahans, Snyder and Sweetwater probably would be affected.

Hill said he will file evidence Monday with the ICC showing the rate requested by the railroad amount to 170 per cent of its costs.

Bringing coal to Texas already accounts for one-fourth of Burlington Northern's business, Hill said, adding that pfcentage could increase to as much as 70 per cent by 1985.

"To let the railroad earn 70 per cent above cost on 70 per cent of its traffic is pure robbery of the Texas consumer by trains," Hill said.

Business picking up at West Texas town as Valentine's Day approaches

VALENTINE, Texas (AP) — Business picks up around this time of year at Rod's Texaco and Porras Grocery. But most of all, the activity is more intense at the post office.

Those are the only three businesses in this community of 250 persons on U.S. 90 in the Big Bend area of far West Texas, 160 miles east of El Paso, and postmaster Leila Doris Kelley has learned she must quicken her pace every year around Feb. 14.

People from elsewhere in Texas and around the nation send in their Valentines each year and ask Mrs. Kelley to put the "Valentine" postmark on them and send them on.

"I like it just fine. It's only for a few days. I've had about 500 letters this year already, of letters mailed in to be remailed. And I've had quite a number of people drop in this year, quite a few more than usual, I think," she said.

Some of those who drop by the post office even drop off packages of candy for wives and sweethearts so they'll have the "Valentine" postmark, she said.

Anyone wanting a "Valentine" postmark sends a card, already stamped and addressed, inside a larger envelope addressed to: Postmaster, Valentine, Texas 79854. Mrs. Kelley sorts them, postmarks them and forwards them to their destination.

Some are from postmark collectors, who want their letters postmarked on the holiday.

"But most of them say they want the cards postmarked so they can arrive at their destination by Valentine's Day," Mrs. Kelley said.

She doesn't know of any written history about how the community came to be known as Valentine.

"The most accepted idea is that the Southern Pacific reached this point on Valentine's Day in the late 1890s when they were laying the rails through here," she said.

She has been handling what she considers her enjoyable task each February since she became postmaster here 26 years ago. For more than 20 years, she received a batch of Valentine mail from a Washington teacher, whose class made valentines for their parents and mailed them via Valentine.

In the community itself, residents seem to take the name of Valentine for granted, she says.

140 communities operating training, employment units

EDITOR'S NOTE— Training the unskilled is one thing. Finding them jobs at a time of high unemployment is another. But a federally-funded agency begun 14 years ago as a self-help project in Philadelphia claims an 80 percent success rate at 140 centers around the country.

By LEE LINDER

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — William Hogg quit high school 10 years ago to get married. Now he's on welfare, with three kids, and just a glimmer of hope.

"I decided to come back to school because I didn't like the life I was living," shouted Hogg over the hum of a drill press in the basement of a converted jail where Opportunities Industrialization Center is training him.

"I came to OIC because I wanted to better myself, to learn a skill, to make something of myself," said Hogg, now 29.

Across the hall, Deborah Hall, 20, and Thomas Smith, 22, were learning welding. Upstairs, Manuel E. Bryant, was trying to improve his typing skill in hope of becoming a clerk with the federal government.

They are among 13,000 persons now being trained at OIC centers in 140 communities across America. Many are high school dropouts. Most are black, on welfare, or collecting unemployment compensation. And 60 percent are women.

Since 1964, when it was created by a Philadelphia Baptist minister as a self-help ghetto project, OIC has trained more than 350,000 people and has placed 80 percent in jobs.

In 1976, OIC said it trained 61,255, and the figure for last year was 63,090.

No government agency, or any other private group, equals the OIC record in training the unskilled and then finding them jobs.

"Unquestionably, OIC is the most effective training program in America," says Dr. Leon H. Sullivan, a militant black civil rights leader who founded OIC "because integration without preparation is frustration."

OIC is financed by federal, state and local agencies. OIC recently received $3.2 million of the $1.6 billion distributed nationally by the U.S. Labor Department under the federal Comprehensive Employment and Training Act.

Hugh Ferguson, executive director of Philadelphia's area manpower planning council which annually provides local OIC units with $2.5 million, says: "OIC does an excellent job. The people who go there want a job, they want to improve themselves, to move up the employment ladder. If OIC didn't do a good job, we wouldn't keep on funding them."

"We must remember that in today's technology two out of three jobs that now exist won't be around by the year 2000. People are going to have to be able to count, to read, to do something with dexterity," Sullivan says.

"God doesn't want you to have milk and honey in heaven, He wants you to have ham and eggs on earth."

Sullivan hopes to meet with President Carter soon in an effort to channel millions of dollars more in federal funds to OIC.

"If I had that kind of resource behind OIC, in the next three years we could train at least one million unemployed and put them in jobs," Sullivan said as he sat in shirt sleeves in his small church office in North Philadelphia.

"We can train a person for one third of what it costs government, about $1,500 each."

Currently, the OIC, with 5,000 employes in 48 states, receives about $70 million annually from federal sources, including CETA funds, plus another $10 million in personnel support and equipment from industry.

"It is successful because it is community based," Sullivan says.

"We go to the taprooms. We go into the pool halls, and the churches. We go to the street corners where you can see growing clusters of young men, and older men too.

"You can cut into crime, alcoholism, drug abuse, all of these dirty problems, if people are working."

Sullivan estimates that every OIC training dollar brings a $30 return, that OIC has saved America more than $1 billion in welfare payments while the new skilled workers earned wages of more than $2 billion and paid $500 million in taxes.

"We need the help so badly that if they put the money where sharks are, I'd jump into the water and swim with the sharks."

Dr. Elton Jolly, who runs the national OIC program, said part of America's unemployment problem is caused by a poor educational system.

"We need a renaissance in the whole educational approach," Jolly says. "We've got to stem the number of dropouts in the school system or the problem, regardless of what all of us do, will get worse.

"There are 10 million Americans who can't read the sign, 'help wanted.'"

Sullivan, the only black on the board of directors of General Motors, has chief executives of the nation's 32 biggest companies on his OIC advisory council. He says, "People want things to happen."

He says the OIC not only can train people for jobs, it also could train people to rehabilitate a minimum of 100,000 abandoned homes across the nation by 1981 "given the resources and the support.

"We think it is possible for people on welfare to own their own homes, because when a person owns something he values it more. But again we need somebody to say, 'Let's go, we're behind you, let's see you do it.'"

Mining, environmental alliance agrees on coal

WASHINGTON — An unusual alliance of environmentalists and industrialists recommended Thursday that new coal-fired power plants be built closer to cities and called for accelerated coal mining in Appalachia and the midwest instead of Western states.

Most future coal production should come from deep underground mining rather than surface strip mining, according to a report by the National Coal Policy Project.

More than 100 experts from such diverse groups as the Sierra Club, U.S. Steel Corp., Pacific Gas & Electric, and the Environmental Defense Fund joined in the year-long project to study the safe use of coal, the nation's most abundant energy resource.

"This is the story of the lamb and the lion — I won't say which is which," said David Abshire, chairman of the Georgetown University Center for Strategic and International Studies, sponsor of the study.

The 77-page report issued Thursday, titled "Where We Agree," presented the consensus of people who are commonly in vigorous opposition to each other. The participants spoke for themselves, not their companies or organizations.

Coal-burning power plants serving big West Coast or Midwest metropolitan areas should not be located in the coal fields of the Rocky Mountain or northern plains states because they would use scarce water resources, increase air pollution, and have a disruptive social impact on small communities, the report said.

Power plants "should be located in the general areas of use," not in the cities themselves but much closer than the remote places where the coal is mined, Bruce J. Terris, co-chairman of the project's air pollution task force, told a news conference.

Current methods of plant siting are harmful, with numerous agencies looking at separate permits for years, he said. Individual states should streamline the process to a one-year period, he added.

Money should be available for citizens groups to hire experts for participation in hearings that determine whether and where a plant is built, according to the study.

Coal mining should be restricted to areas that will suffer the fewest environmental problems, notably Appalachia, followed by the Gulf Coast and Midwest coal regions, the report said. Contradicting federal government estimates that the East has 46 percent of the U.S. coal reserves, the study said the figure is actually 71 percent, based on the coal's energy content. (Western coal generates less energy, and has a lower heat content when burned.)

The findings of the coal policy project were challenged by the Environmental Policy Center, whose staff members distributed a critical statement.

"Absent from the Coal Policy project have been farmers, Indians, ranchers, miners," people living in the coal regions, railroad companies and other firms that move the coal, as well as unions, the Center said.

Some play while mayor's away

NEW YORK (AP) — While Mayor Ed Koch was asleep, someone — the police think two officers filling in as guards — broke into the bar supplies at Gracie Mansion and threw a party.

The Daily News reported that the gaities got under way about 3 a.m. on Jan. 20 with beer, liquor, wine and snacks from the kitchen.

About 3:15, an aide to the mayor called the police guardhouse and asked to be put through to the mayor to warn of the possibly heavy snowfall.

"All I got was somebody telling me to buzz off," said the aide, who dialed again in case he had reached a wrong number. "This time, I'm getting lots of laughter and a lot of obscenity," he said.

He called police detectives, who reported their call was greeted the same way.

Police won't say who was on duty that night, but they did report that two stand-ins filled in for the regular guards.

Big A cabbies not all bad

By HENRY D. ORBORNE
The Los Angeles Times

NEW YORK — So you think all cab drivers in New York are impolite — or worse? You're right but also wrong, because there is at least one exception.

You also think it's hard to find someone — skycaps are virtually extinct — to help get your luggage from the airline terminal to the curb or vice versa?

But let me start at the beginning: I was trying to hail a cab to get from the Port Authority Building at 9th Ave. and 41st St. across town to 3rd Ave. and 43rd St. It was as if I were invisible.

The drivers who did stop declared flatly they would take passengers only to La guardia or J.F.K. Airports — about a $35 haul, although the tab might have been open to negotiation if you could find other travelers heading in the same direction.

After 10 minutes of frustration (about 10 other short-haul customers had been met with the same challenge) it seemed appropriate to inquire of a passing foot patrolman:

"Say, isn't it true that any cab must take any passenger wherever he wants to go regardless of distance?"

Seconds after the problem was explained the man in blue stepped to the middle of the street, hailed a cab and told (ordered?) him to take those waiting at the curb to their destination "and no bull!"

The driver — he was furious — didn't help put my gear into the cab's trunk; he didn't speak on the short trip and he demanded his money before he would open the rear so the luggage could be put streetside — without his help.

But (and this is another story) there's Herman Weiner, who comes on duty about the time the first plane from Los Angeles is arriving at J.F.K.

Weiner estimated my tab to La Guardia at $8-$9 and took off. The bus would have been only $2.50 but the ride with Weiner made the cost more than worth it.

First he loaded three pieces of luggage (including a golf bag) and a suit carrier carefully and cheerfully into his cab.

Then halfway to La Guardia he almost went into a spin when he learned that the rider was from the Los Angeles Times. Seems he had taken three Times reporters from J.F.K. to their hotel in Manhattan when they were sent to cover the national Democratic convention in 1976.

While many, or at least some, reporters write about a city or a situation based on what their anonymous cab drivers say, it seems that Weiner was quoted on his thoughts about the Big Apple.

To prove, Weiner kept one hand on the wheel and reached for the glove compartment with the other.

Quickly — and barely long enough for his passenger to regain his seat — he produced a dog-eared clipping from The Times that recounted the trip to the Democratic convention. Most politely he inquired if it were at all possible to get a fresher version of "his" story.

He was assured that could be done. He made record time through 8 a.m. traffic from J.F.K. to La Guardia. He not only unloaded the luggage but helped carry it a short distance to the check-in terminal. He declined any tip — but got one just the same.

But a month after he was sent two copies of "his" story in The Times he wrote these lines to this passenger:

"Just a little note to thank you for sending me the copies of article about me and New York.

"Your friendly N.Y. cabdriver

"Herman Weiner."

You see, the Big Apple isn't really all bad — not as long as the Herman Weiners are crusing around town.
